Animals: Suffer heat exhaustion, death if not monitored

even that's not enough during a 100-degree day.

"Many people air condition their doghouses," said Teresa Hedger, office manager of the Muscogee County Humane Society.

Here's how it works: Fill a gallon jug of water and put it in the freezer. Once it's frozen, place it inside the doghouse.

"It's instant air-conditioning. It cools down really fast," Hedger said.

"Dogs can even lick the water off the jug," Thorsen said.

After water, shade and shelter are taken care of, it is important to still watch the dog's behavior and habits for signs of heat exhaustion.

Although dogs cannot speak English to their owners to tell when they are overheating, they give other signs that are just as clear as if they said, "Help! It's hot, and I don't feel so good!"

Some of the telltale signs of heat exhaustion are:

- Rapid panting and heartbeat
- Dry nose
- Lethargy
- Tongue out to side and excessive "foamy" slobber on sides of mouth.

If the pet is experiencing any combination of these symptoms, it needs to have its body temperature lowered and taken to a vet immediately for treatment.

If heat exhaustion goes untreated, pets can suffer brain damage or even death.

To lower a pet's body temperature apply ice packs or cold towels to the head, neck or chest and give the pet ice cubes or small amounts of water.

Every dog acclimates to the heat differently, and therefore its time outside and its amount of exercise should be monitored. Sometimes longer-haired dogs such as chows or sheep dogs require a "summer haircut" to further help alleviate the heat.

"Dogs can tolerate ranges of (temperature) discomfort the same as we can," Thorsen said.

This is important to keep in mind when dealing with exercising or traveling with a pet. For example if a 30-minute run in the afternoon is stifled because of the heat, chances are it would be for the dog, too. If getting into the hot car before a road trip is unbearable, it is probably the same for the dog.

When traveling with a pet, either by plane or car, take the following precautions to ensure it arrives safely and healthy:

- Check with the vet for any paperwork needed for travel.
- Pets should wear two ID tags, one with a home address and one with a destination address.
- Carry pet medical records in case of problems.

Karen Taylor

Australian shepherds, Ben and Striker, cool off in a hole they dug near the base of their house.

- Check airlines or hotels ahead of time to ensure they take pets.
- Use appropriate airline-certified pet carrier (for cats) or crate (for dogs) for transporting pets.

For comfort and safety a pet should be able to stand up and turn around in its crate.

These crates are not only required for airlines, but also recommended for vehicular travel so the pet is not jumping around in the car or even thrown from it in an accident.

Carrying a pet in the back of a pickup without a crate is not recommended, Thorsen said.

A big travel "no-no" is leaving a pet inside a parked car unattended — crate or no crate. According to the U.S. Humane Society, the temperature in a parked car can reach 120 degrees in a matter of minutes, even with the car windows partially open.

A pet can quickly suffer brain damage or die from heatstroke or suffocation when trapped in high temperatures.

"It only takes a few minutes," Zwicker said.

This also applies to crated pets in parked pickups.

The crate gets hot when left baking in the sun and can cause injury or death to the pet if left unattended.

Thorsen said it is not recommended to sedate pets anymore during car or airline trips because of the health and safety risks.

In hot temperatures dogs and cats have to pant to keep cool and cannot if sedated. Also, sedation affects its balance and the pet can roll around in its traveling crate and get hurt.

"We used to do it, but it has been falling by the wayside in the last 10 to 15 years," he said.

Conditions warranting the sedation of a pet would be incessant howling or constant rattling of the cage.

Even in that kind of situation, it is only to quiet the dog during a car ride so the driver can concentrate on the road, he said.

Cat owners, however, are not likely to have this problem.

"Cats travel very well. They ball up in the corner (of the crate) and stare at everything. They're pretty peaceful," Thorsen said.

A CLOSER LOOK

Some of the telltale signs of heat exhaustion are:

- Rapid panting and heartbeat
- Dry nose
- Lethargy
- Tongue out to side and excessive "foamy" slobber on sides of mouth.

"Dogs can tolerate ranges of (temperature) discomfort the same as we can," said Dr. Jim Thorsen.

Every dog acclimates to the heat differently, and therefore its time outside and its amount of exercise should be monitored.

Although a doghouse provides shade and shelter for the dog, it can still get very hot during the summer.

To air condition a doghouse: Fill a gallon jug with water and put it in the freezer. Once it is frozen, place it inside the doghouse.

If a dog gets too hot, place cold towels or ice packs to its head, neck and chest to lower its body temperature. Also give small amounts of water.

Moves: Can take longer than expected during peak season

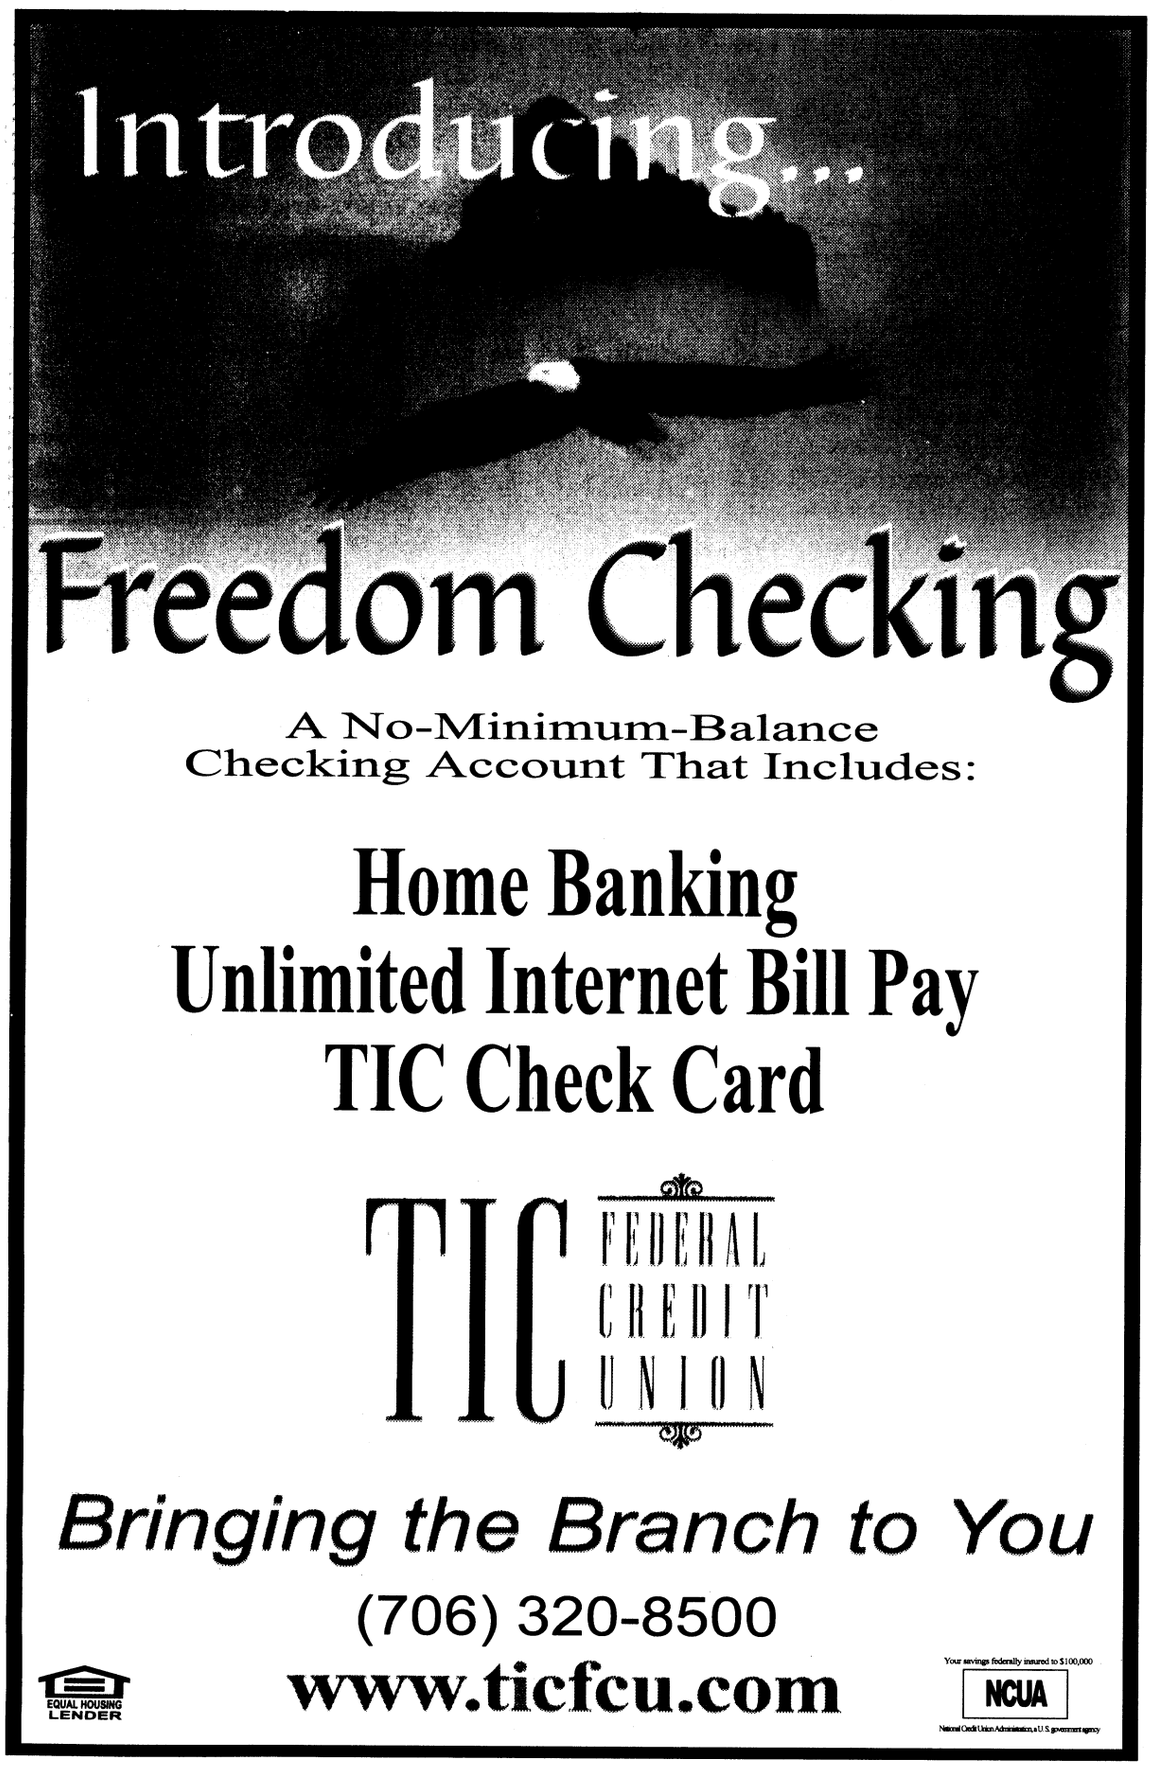
There are 32 names on the senior NCO list, and they can expect to wait about three months. Company grade officers, with 124 families waiting, are getting on-post quarters in about eight months. The field grade list has 74 names, and the waiting time is running about 16 months.

Fort Benning Schools will allow children to enroll if the family will be in military housing within 90 school days.

"Once we have a firm projection on quarters and can tell a Soldier when the family can move in, we can issue a school slip that will allow them to enroll their children in on-post schools," Smith said.

With all the comings and goings, Guest Housing is running at capacity.



"Every summer is busy with families rotating," said Terry Walls, manager of Fort Benning Lodging.

Incoming personnel may stay up to 30 days in Gavin Hall and on Richardson Circle. Outgoing families may stay up to seven days.

Walls encouraged families moving to call the Guest House for reservations.

"If guest housing is unavailable, we have contract hotels in Columbus that meet the Army Lodging Standards," she said. "When booking reservations through the Guest House, guests will receive the contract rate."

To make a reservation call 689-0067, extension 1142.

Program provides intense training for chaplains

CSU classes, counseling, part of training

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Six chaplains, 3,000 counseling hours, 4,700 visits, in 15 months.

It's all part of training for the chaplains in the U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain Training program.

Army counseling services cover everything from crisis to family wellness.

The role of the Family Life Chaplain on an Army post is to teach family wellness training programs to unit chaplains and take on advanced counseling situations, such as a couple with serious marital problems or a survivor of child sexual abuse.

"Our counseling specializes more in pastoral marriage counseling and family counseling," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) George Onstad, director of the U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain program.

Onstad explains, however, counselors do not have all the answers, and their role is not to make decisions for the family.

"We don't fix a marriage. What we are is a consultant, and we form a team with the people who come in. We all work together on it," he said. "If we had all the answers, we'd all be very, very rich."

"It (the program) better equips us to understand underlying issues couples and families face. It provides us with the theory and techniques to provide positive intervention," said Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop, Family Life Chaplain class of 2000.

"It's the best thing the Army's ever done for me. I was honored to be selected. It was the greatest honor that has been bestowed on us," he said.

Koop is assigned to Fort Benning after graduation and will be the post's Family Life Chaplain starting Sept. 1.

The U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain Training Program works in partnership with the Department of the Army's Chief of Chaplains program, Columbus State University, Pastoral Institute, and U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain Training Center.

> "We don't fix a marriage. What we are is a consultant, and we form a team with the people who come in. We all work together on it."
> — Chaplain (Lt. Col.) George Onstad
> U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain program

"They are doing a two to three-year program in 15 months. It's very intensive," Onstad said.

Fort Benning is one of only two sites in the entire Army that have this kind of program. The other is Fort Hood, Texas.

"They come here and start right away and go steady for 15 months," he said.

The Family Life Chaplain Training Program has been at Fort Benning with classes at Columbus State University since 1994 after its move from Kansas State University. Onstad is the third director of the program.

Chaplains are selected for the program through a Department of the Army competitive board. Requirements for selection include each chaplain is either a major or captain promotable, complete the Graduate Record Exam and the Chaplain Career Course.

The primary mission of the program is to train chaplains in advanced counseling skills.

Classes at CSU cover the secular side of counseling, while workshops at the Pastoral Institute cover the pastoral side.

In addition the chaplains spend counseling hours at the training center. There are six counseling rooms equipped with video cameras and microphones.

Many of the rooms also have two-way mirrors to observe sessions. All families are informed of this equipment prior to a session.

These are all tools to help the family fix the problem brought to counseling and confidentiality is a priority at the center.

"All staff are dedicated to protect the confidentiality of those whom we serve," Onstad said.

"This is a very high-speed, high-tech training center.

"It would cost on the outside $80-150 per hour for the kind of counseling we do here," he said.

Each session is also supervised.

Onstad, who has credentials from the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy and American Association of Pastoral Counselors, provides the counseling supervision for the chaplains.

"Our education is always updated and that's why it helps it to be such a good program and so good for families," Onstad said.

Chaplains graduate from the program with a master's degree in counseling from CSU. Between Fort Hood, Texas and Fort Benning, 12 Family Life Chaplains graduate every 15 months and are assigned to any of the various Army posts worldwide as the post's sole Family Life Chaplain, whose services are in high demand.

"When I was in Fort Bragg, N.C., I had a three-month waiting list for people to come in and see me. People can't wait three months for marriage counseling," Onstad said.

He would have to refer the people to other counselors outside of the Army until he was available for an appointment.

There are no waiting lists at the U.S. Army Family Life Chaplain Training Center, however, for appointments at the center because of the six chaplains in the program.

The 2000 class will graduate at 10 a.m. Aug. 4 at the Main Post Chapel. Soldiers, family members and DA civilians who wish to receive counseling at the center, call 545-1760 to make an appointment. The center is located in Building 2606 on Dixie Road.

ask the judge

1st Lt. Aimee Hobby
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I bought a car a few months ago, and now the monthly payments are more than I can afford. I got the loan from the dealership to buy the car.

One of the guys in my platoon told me all I have to do is bring the car back to the dealership and I'll be off the hook for the rest of the loan. Is this true?

A: This is absolutely not true! It's a common misconception. Once you sign a contract to borrow money to buy a car you are required to pay back all of that money back. Simply returning the car to the dealership does not satisfy the debt.

When you surrender your car to the loan company it is called a voluntary repossession. The loan company then takes possession, cleans up the vehicle and sells it to a new buyer.

The proceeds from this second sale are credited to the amount you owe on the original loan. Repossessed cars are typically sold at auction, and bought by other dealerships at low prices.

The proceeds from the sale usually do not fully pay off the car loan. You, as the original owner, are responsible for payment of the outstanding loan balance, even though you no longer have the vehicle.

For example, you buy a car for $20,000 and make a few payments on the loan. You then realize you can't keep it up, so you surrender the car to the loan company. When you surrender the car you still owe $18,000 on the loan.

The loan company then sells the car at auction to a dealership for $10,000. That is subtracted from the amount you owed when you surrendered the car.

You, the original owner, must still pay the remaining $8,000, even though the car is no longer in your possession.

If you fail to pay the outstanding balance, the loan company can file a lawsuit against you and place the default on your credit report.

Once the loan company obtains a court order from the lawsuit, it can seek enforcement of the judgment through your chain of command or garnish your paycheck.

Even if you do pay, the voluntary repossession still goes on your credit report and you will have a negative impact on your credit worthiness.

If you are unable to make the loan payments you do have a few options.

One option is to sell the car to someone else. It is very important this new buyer get his own car loan so you can pay off your loan.

Occasionally the original owner is desperate to sell quickly so he transfers the car to the buyer with the "understanding" the buyer will make the payments each month on the original owner's loan.

Unfortunately, if the buyer misses a payment or two, and they often do, the original owner is still responsible for the loan.

The loan company will still expect each payment from the original owner even though he gave possession of the vehicle to the new buyer.

A second option is to contact your loan company and explain the financial difficulties you are experiencing. Depending on the circumstances, some companies will let you refinance the loan or restructure your payments.

This will allow you and the loan company to come up with another plan, one that you can afford.

Many companies are willing to work with borrowers to avoid a default on the loan, other loan companies will not do this.

It all depends on who the lender is and how willing they are to work with you. The only way to determine your lender's policy is to ask.

The bottom line is you should give a contract serious thought before you sign it. If you are unsure as to whether you can afford to make the payments, walk away from the car.

Chances are it will still be there if you decide you can afford it, and you want to buy it.

The time to ask questions about financing is before you sign the contract to buy the car.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to meet with an attorney.

Be sure to bring all of the loan paperwork with you for your scheduled appointment.

Healthy perspective helps control concerns

Chaplain (Capt.) Timothy Smith
2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment

reflections

There's tremendous Biblical truth in Dr. Richard Carlson's idea and books Don't Sweat the Small Stuff.

This counselor has helped thousands of people in their quest to determine what is not worth worrying about.

In my counseling with Soldiers on Kelley Hill, I have found that Soldiers carry burdens and concerns they were never meant to carry.

My perception of life and all it holds has a profound acknowledgment of God and his direct involvement in my life. And, God has his hand in Soldiers' lives. What I try to show my Soldiers is they can only worry about those things they have control over and a healthy concern must have boundaries in itself.

There are situations you must keep a hand on, and others you must let go.

When one has an excessive concern for a situation or a challenge, and when that concern stretches over a prolonged segment of time, many physical, mental and emotional feelings can begin to affect that person.

The Lord has commanded Christians to place their trust in God, especially in time of trouble. I Peter 5:7 says: "Cast all your cares on him for he cares for you." In Psalm 56:3, the Psalmist writes, "What time I am afraid, I will trust in thee."

We put our trust in God through prayer and we continue to trust by believing that God has our best interest at heart.

The writer of Corinthians states this wonderfully in I Corinthians 10:13.

Over concern for our situation or trial negatively alters a person's attitude for the present or future.

I feel sorry for people who do not have the Lord in their lives, having only themselves or others to turn to. I have experienced a calm in the midst of a storm, and I have seen others with that same calm or resolve.

Yet on the other hand, I have seen people who are totally engulfed in their own personal conflicts, whether small or large, and this problem or these problems, eventually consumed them.

Don't get me wrong, there are times when challenges of the present are so great or serious, that 100 percent attention must be given to them. For the most part though, we should not be managing 90 percent of life's challenges in the emergency mode.

Not everything is an emergency. If a person operates his life continually by crisis, it won't be long until he is physically, mentally and emotionally burned out.

Then the simple pleasures of living and the joy of life will leave him. When it comes right down to it, it's a choice — a choice to worry or not to worry.

We need to determine which problems need our undivided attention, and which ones need less attention. One cannot worry about everything all the time. Whether the problem is great or small, the Lord wants our dependence on him; for he delights in hearing and answering our prayers.

It is also the Lord's desire for his children to experience peace and joy, no matter what life may throw at us.

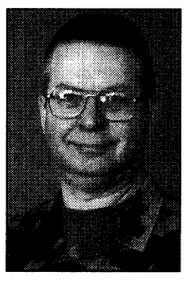
Discipline gives children security

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Chaplain Family Life Training Program



The purpose of discipline is not to punish, but to discipline. A disciplined child is able to do the right thing for the right reasons even when you are not present.

Here are some guidelines to help you discipline your child.

First, help your child know the difference between right and wrong. Your child relies on you to understand what is acceptable and what is not.

Be consistent in what you say and what you do to your child, and be an example for your child to follow. Help your child learn to make good decisions.

Second, understand what may be causing your child's misbehavior. Your child may not know that the behavior is unacceptable. Your child may be teasing you rather than testing your limits. Or, your child may be tired, sick, hungry or bored, rather than angry or defiant.

Koop

Third, help your child stay safe. Never discipline your child in anger. Step in when necessary to protect your child. As your child grows older, teach your child to obey the law and to engage in non-risky behaviors.

Fourth, help your child develop important values and qualities that last a lifetime. Some of these are self-control and self-discipline; confidence and self-esteem; self-respect and respect for others; duty, commitment and responsibility; honor and integrity; loyalty and commitment; and selfless service, candor and competence.

In addition, don't limit your responses to your child's misbehavior. By saying, "If you do that one more time, I will have to discipline you," you are able to choose from a variety of options rather than resort to physical punishment when your child misbehaves. Finally, help your child feel loved and secure. This involves providing routines and structure, consistent parental role models, as well as safe and stable surroundings.

Furthermore, it means to avoid shaming your child. Yelling, insults and name-calling vent your anger and make your child feel bad, but they don't teach better self-discipline. Focus on the behavior and not the child. For example, tell your child that hitting is wrong, rather than say that your child is a bad girl or bad boy.

Soldier lifts weights, strives for best

Karen Taylor

Scott Norem moves the weights into position as he prepares to lift 100 kilograms.

Oral surgeon trains for Saturday's national competition

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Like clockwork he comes in to Audie Murphy Gym at 4 p.m., changes and heads to a room where he trains for two hours, four days a week.

It's nothing fancy. The converted storage room has enough space for his homemade platform and his equipment.

On hot days he just opens the side doors to the basketball court and catches the breeze.

He even covers the platform with a tarp overnight to prevent the dripping air conditioner from warping the wood.

He appreciates the room — though it's not like training in the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs — because in there, he's been doing something he's been hooked on for a long time — weightlifting.

Scott Norem is an oral surgeon at Salomon Dental Center. He stands just slightly under 5-feet 8-inches and weighs in at about 84 kilograms, or 185 pounds, is a national-caliber weightlifter.

He competes in a sport where people peak at about 27 years old, but he's far from past his prime at 40.

Formerly a cross-country runner in high school competing in the mile and two-mile events, he started doing the lifting sports and "got hooked."

He started powerlifting when he was 21.

"It's a strength sport, but it's not the same (as weightlifting)," he said.

Powerlifting events are the squat, the bench and the dead-lift, all static movements requiring raw strength.

Weightlifting events are the snatch and the clean-and-jerk, both overhead lifts that require balance, strength, speed, flexibility and timing.

It's a sport where many women gymnasts have transitioned into because of the similar techniques.

The snatch especially is a gymnastic-type movement, he said.

In competition the weightlifter gets three tries at the snatch and clean-and-jerk, and the most lifted in each are totaled for a score, or total weight.

Weightlifting uses the metric system and weights are measured in kilograms — one kilogram is equal to 2.2 pounds.

Noren's switch from powerlifting to weightlifting came soon after 1994, when he saw the U.S. Weightlifting Nationals in Kansas City.

Shooters gather for match

Tactical competition attracts many

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

More than 35 people gathered Sunday at English Range for the monthly tactical rifle match.

In addition to the normal three-stage match, two side matches were held.

The first was a timed competition where shooters needed to hit multiple paper targets and knock over bowling pins set at 200 and 300 yards.

Then the shooter had to turn a card over, look at a picture on the back of it, and shoot the corresponding target.

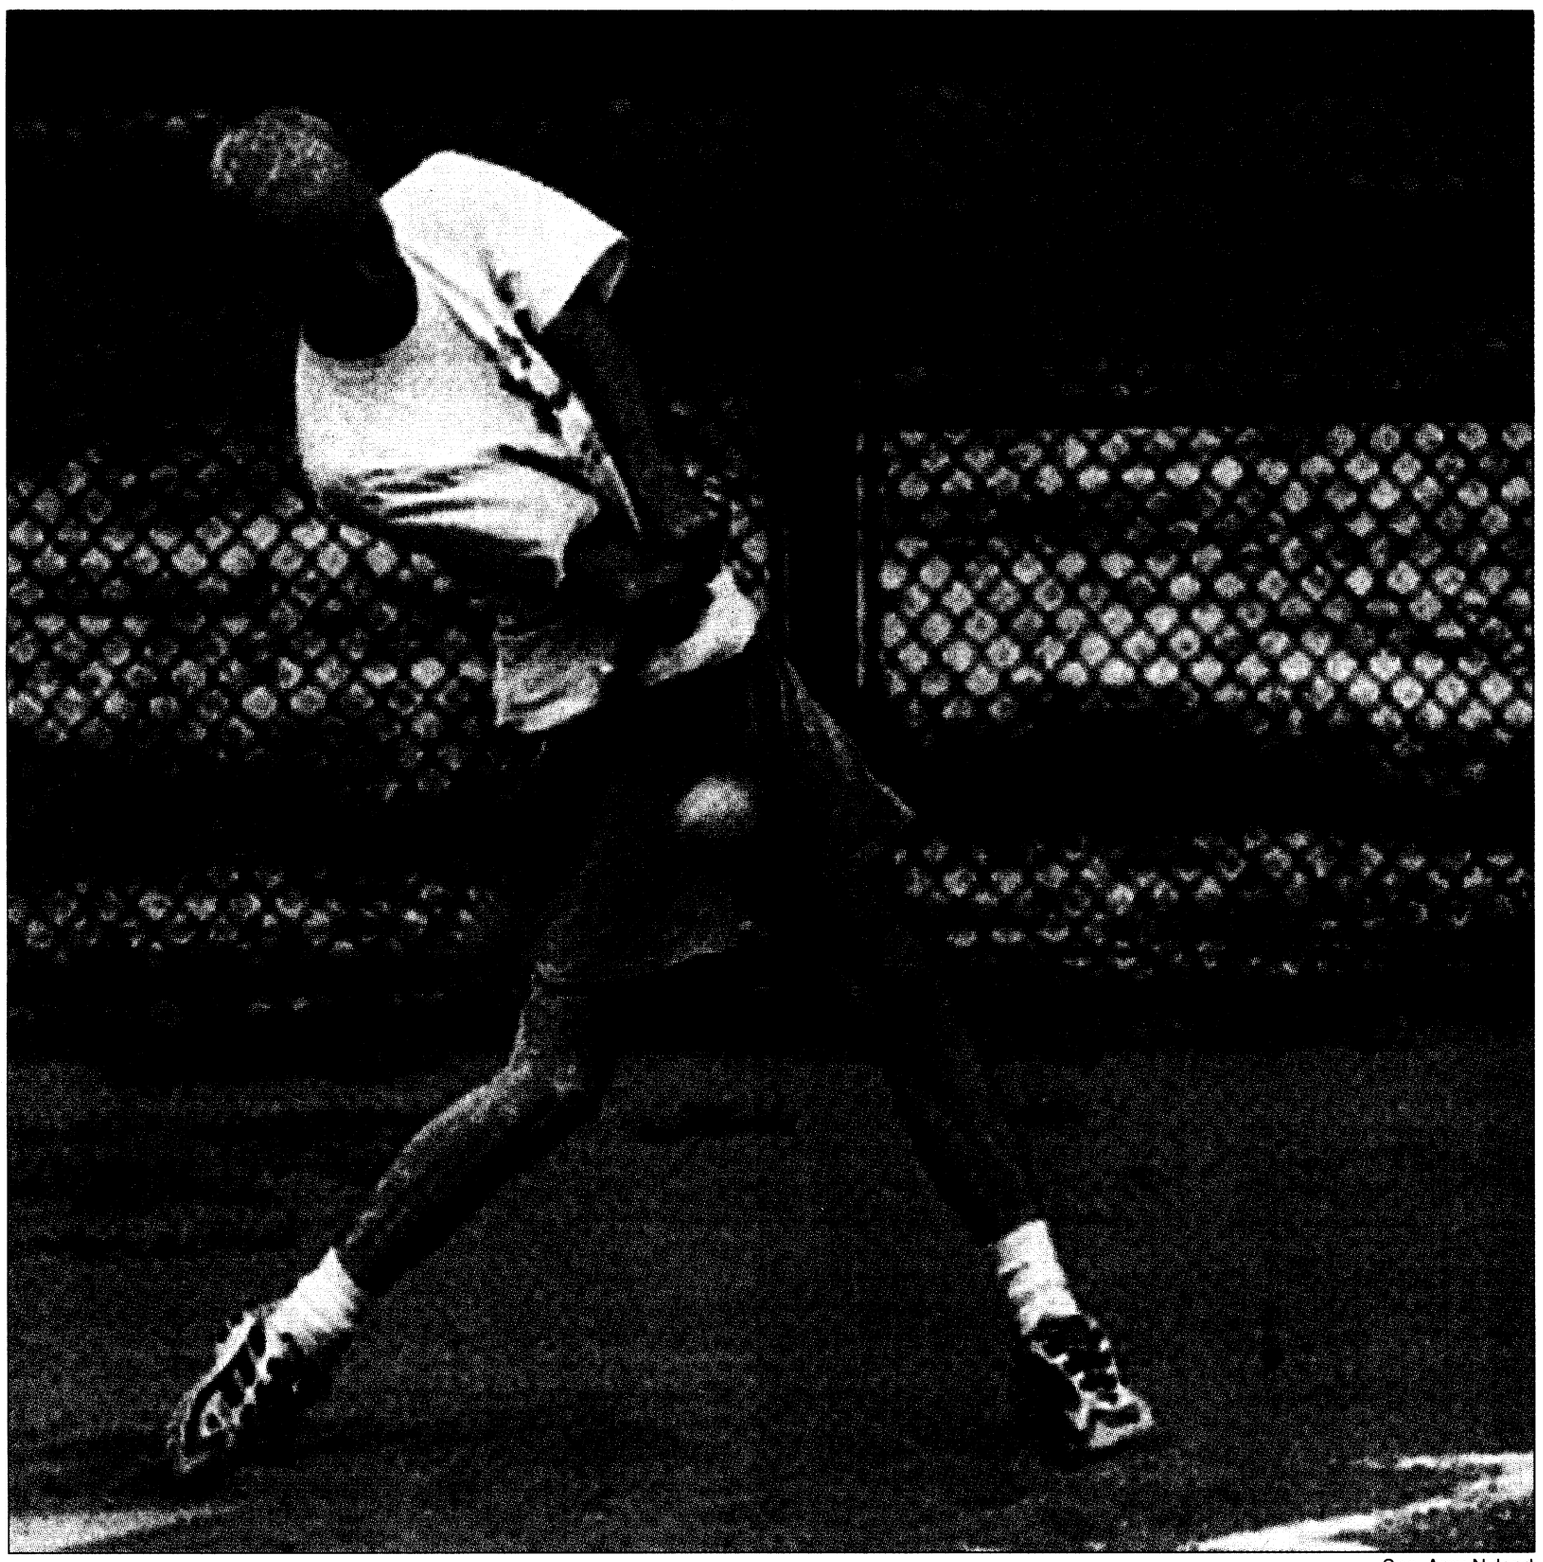
The second side match was for .22-caliber shooters only. Targets were placed at 50 and 100 yards and required 10 shots placed in each of the two targets.

Rusty Rossey, a competitor in the first side match, said the course of fire was an excellent challenge.

"It is a great course," he said. "It really makes you think, and you definitely have to know your equipment.

"It is great for tactical shooters, because the course required good shape identification and knowledge scope settings."

A regular to the shoots, Diana Waldon, said the near 100 degree temperatures hurt her shooting some.



"I really didn't shoot as well as I wanted to do," she said. "I did pretty well at the 100 and 200 yard targets, but lost it at 300 yards. The heat really affected me personally, and the wind affected the dope (the settings of the scope) on my rifle."

Although some competitors were affected by the heat and wind, not everyone was. Several of the competitors shot near perfect scores.

In the competitor bolt action class, Shawn Wadkins walked away with the win and was followed by T.W. Fuller and Henry Wadkins.

In the bolt action precision class, Eric Brown won, Karl Tuthill received second place and Michael Hood shot a third place score.

In the professional class, the semi-auto precision class and the all others class, the winners were Bill Huskey, Chuck Cobb and Stephen Waligora.

Marne's A Co. take home win

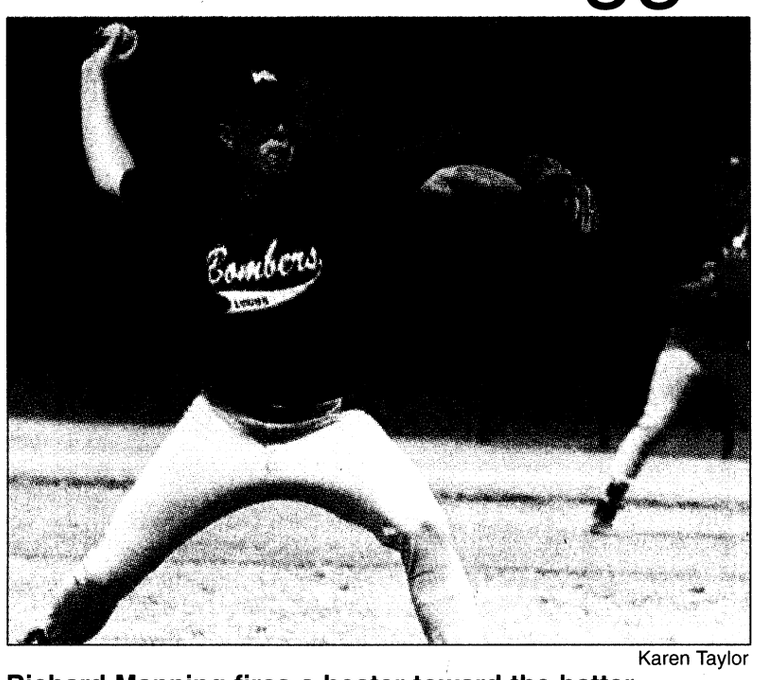
In a heated battle to the finish, 3rd Brigade's A Company managed to squeak by Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 9-8, by driving home two players in the last minutes of the game.

With HHB, 10th Field Artillery, leading by one at the bottom of the seventh, A Co., 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment's right fielder, Gregory Polk drove the ball down the center to bring in the tying run, and catcher Kevin Brown's single brought in another runner to secure the win.



Things started out slowly for HHB when they were only able to score one run to A Co.'s three in the first inning.

It wasn't until second baseman Jason Cook and pitcher Kenneth Whitehead scored singles that HHB was able to bring in two runs to level the score 3-3 at the bottom of the third.

The teams remained neck and neck until A Co.'s left fielder Wilfredo Gonzalez stifled any chance of play for HHB by ousting the first three players at bat — all who hit fly outs. HHB stepped up the heat when left fielder Cerry Murray smacked a homer to bring himself and another player in at the bottom of the fifth taking the score to 5-3. With no significant leads made in the sixth inning, the teams advanced to the seventh where the pressure was put on HHB to answer

Bombers struggle in weekend doubleheader

Team struggles in first game, again in second

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

After losing the first game of a doubleheader 11-1, many teams would lack the momentum for a competitive second game.

But the Bombers did quite the opposite and kept the second game within reach before finally surrendering it to the Rangers, 11-8.

"Don't ever quit ... whether your down 15-0, or 3-2," said Bombers' catcher James Pippin, 3rd Battalion 75th Ranger Regiment.

Pippin should know, he consistently played hard and aggressive ball even when the team was suffering a 7-0 deficit by the third inning of the first game. By hustling around the bases, he took advantage of Ranger mistakes and turned what should have been a ground-out into a place on first base and finished a usual single standing on third.

During the second game, his energy-shifting play brought life back to the Bombers and the fans. Pippin dove for a high pop up behind the plate and caught the third out that halted the Rangers' third-inning rally.

"We were in it. We were in it in the first game except for the first inning," said Matthew Dillon, B Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., Bombers' coach.

The first game's disastrously deflating first inning opened with the Bombers batting first, and they were retired one-two-three, all strikeouts. By the inning's end, the Rangers had a commanding 4-0 lead, which included a three-run homer by Chris Holland.

The Bombers played a decent defensive game, but were stymied in the batter's box. The Bombers' only run came from a solo homer hit by shortstop Chuck McGarry, Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., which also stole the shutout from Ranger pitcher Jason Kreisler.

The second game, however, proved to be a whole new ball game.

"The second game is more the way I know we can play ball," Dillon said.

The Rangers took a 3-0 lead at the Riverwalk offers history, exercise, accessibility

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff

outdoor corner

When I first got to Fort Benning, I was convinced "The grass was only green on the other side."

I couldn't wait to hit the open road and find a new and interesting place to explore. It wasn't until I was forced to graze in my own pasture I found the greenest grass doesn't always have to be on the "other side."

While the Chattahoochee Riverwalk remains a staple of Columbus culture, it is often overlooked and taken for granted. But just as sure as the Georgia humidity, the Riverwalk is always there providing an avenue of entertainment for those who want, or have to stay close to home. I found this out firsthand recently when I hurt my shoulder and had to trade in my mountain biking trails for something a little less injury-inducing.

The Riverwalk ended up being the perfect place for me to get some exercise and pass the time. Not only is it scenic and easily traversable, it's also completely free of cars — one thing I know everyone can enjoy. And although it isn't exactly outside the city, you still get the feeling you've escaped the city once you are rolling along.

The Riverwalk offers 12-miles of paved walkway that starts in downtown Columbus and ends up at Fort Benning.

Besides being a great place to ride bikes, roller blade, run or walk, you can find a wealth of historical and cultural information just waiting to be unearthed along the entire stretch of walkway.

History buffs can delve into Columbus' past by taking time to explore historical markers and monuments, such as Dillingham Street Bridge and the cotton warehouses.

A pit stop at the Civil War Naval Museum allows visitors a glimpse of two rare and historical gun boats used by the Confederacy.

An authentic 1880s paddlewheel riverboat called the Chattahoochee Princess Riverboat provides relaxing cruises down the river and embarks at a popular meeting place called the Riverwalk Pavilion.

If you're looking for some educational fun you can explore space technology at the Coca-Cola Space Science Center or learn all about wildlife at the Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center.

You can also enjoy some super sporting action at the Columbus Softball Complex, Golden Park or at Rigdon Park.

Virtually the entire stretch of Riverwalk is inhabited by something worth doing or seeing and I am always amazed to discover something new each time I go out.

Of course, it doesn't always have to be about getting exercise or having a thrill-filled time. Sometimes it's nice just to sit back on one of the many benches and watch out over the river as birds, fish and a host of other wildlife go about their business.

It's also neat to watch moms and dads out with their children enjoying family time, or fishermen crowding the banks patiently waiting for the big catch.

No matter what your fancy is you will no doubt find a way to tickle it exploring the Riverwalk.

For more information about the Riverwalk, call the Columbus Convention and Visitors Bureau at 322-1613.

Cannons' aggressive defense key to doubleheader victory

Baseball club wins in back-to-back weekend victories

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The Cannons looked cool, calm and collected last Saturday as they defeated team Sally in a doubleheader, 7-1 and 16-5.

"We're settling down into a rhythm and making fewer mental mistakes," said Allan Preizer, 3rd Battalion, OCS, 11th Infantry Regiment, acting Cannons coach. "We're playing better together as a team."

The Cannons appeared to have the chemistry of a veteran team on the field Saturday. Infielders sealed the diamond by scooping grounders headed for pasture.

Outfielders robbed team Sally of a few deep fly balls that held promise of turning extra bases.

Fielding, however, wasn't the Cannons' only weapon on Saturday.

Although Vega-Torres' pitching surprised Sally, his teammates were expecting it knowing his past.

Vega-Torres played professional baseball from 1992 to 1995 in the minor leagues with the California Angels.

Unfortunately his baseball career came to an early end because of a hurt shoulder, but he has since healed and he is back in the game.

"I wanted to play baseball again and I'm glad there is a team in the Army," he said. "It feels great to be back playing baseball."

Vega-Torres struck out five and walked six in the five innings he pitched. But more important than the stats is the timing. He stifled Sally's momentum in the early innings, with two strikeouts in the first, and forced them to leave men on base with a strikeout in the fourth that ended the inning.

The left-hander Steve Bielak, family member, came in to relieve Vega-Torres in the sixth inning to close the game.

Vega-Torres not only pitched his way out of a few innings, but also went 2 for 2 that game, a single and a double, with two RBIs.

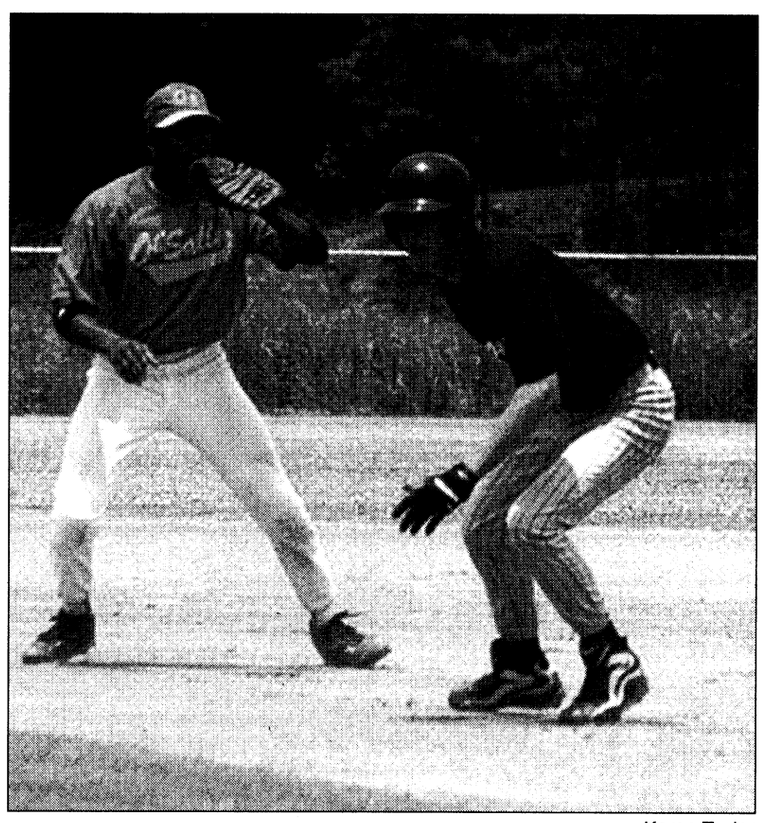
The Cannons' put the bat on the ball from the start of the first game. They quickly took a three-run lead in the first inning and added one more run in the third.

But it wasn't until their fifth-inning rally that Sally was silenced.

Bats came alive for the Cannons as they put three more runs on the board.

Sally's breaking point came, however, when the Cannons had two outs. Sally thought they were almost out of the inning when Brian Baker, 1st Bn. 10th Field Artillery Regt., hit a two-run homer over the right-field fence.

After the fifth the total came to 7-1 and stayed that way for the remainder of the game.



The Cannons carried their momentum to the second game with Bielak on the mound as they continued to pound team Sally.

Preizer attributed the team's second win to Bielak's solid performance as well as aggressive base-running.

The most notable offensive play was a dramatic steel home by Anthony Ferraioli, 3rd Bn. 75th Ranger Regt., which ended in a cloud of dust and a Cannons' run.

"He totally surprised them," Preizer said.

The Cannons hope to continue their winning streak tomorrow in a doubleheader against the Bombers starting 1 p.m. Saturday at Spencer High School.

Weightlifter: Balances training, work meeting some of the competitors at nationals, he decided he would like to try it.

"Once I started doing the Olympic-style weightlifting, I absolutely got hooked," he said.

It wasn't until 1997, however, that he got a weightlifting coach in Overland Park, Kan., and he entered his first competition.

Noren said his departure from powerlifting was due to the drug use among athletes and lack of a central governing body in the United States to enforce one set of rules and regulations.

"In weightlifting there's one, it's USA Weightlifting. Not all the people agree with them all the time, but they make up the rules and the bylaws.

"I think it's a much fairer sport, the rules are all international rules and they're always the same wherever you go," he said.

Although Noren's youthful stature belies his years, he has felt its burden during his weightlifting career.

"It kind of went in a couple cycles. There was a point at which I felt, maybe I'm just too old. At that point I think I was 38," he said.

He was lifting with his last coach out of Norman, Okla., and trained with Shane Hamman, a super heavy weight destined for the Olympics in Sydney.

"It was exciting lifting up there ... I progressed up to a point, and then it kind of stagnated. I thought to myself 'well this is maybe as far as I'm going to get,'" Noren said.

He switched coaches looking to improve, and since 1998 he has been training with Dr. Lon Kilgore, a regional Olympic coach and a physiology professor at Midwestern State University in Witchita Falls, Texas.

"My lifts just exploded. After training with him, everything just took off," he said.

"So instead of giving up and deciding 'hey I'm too old for this,' I stuck with it and now I'm competing on a national level," Noren said.

His first national-level competition was in December 1999 at the American Open, one of the two national meets.

The other, Nationals, requires lifting a total of 255 kg to qualify.

"In the past I actually missed qualifying for the American Open the first couple times I tried, but now, that total is easily achievable for me," he said.

Noren's current best total lift is 235 kg, and the total lift needed to qualify for American Open is 215 kg.

He has currently been training for the Georgia State Meet in Newnan, Ga., Saturday, where he hopes to meet or surpass his total score of 235 kg.

His training regiments are slightly unconventional because his coach is still in Texas. He gets his routines via e-mail, and he sends Kilgore videotapes of workouts and talks with him the phone.

"It's difficult, because it's the kind of sport where you really need somebody right there and that's the best way to do it," he said.

But long-distance coaching was the least of his worries when he knew he was coming to Fort Benning this year. He had to find a place to train here.

The sports director at Fort Sill, Bruce Burgamy called Andrew Snoddy, chief, Community Recreation Division at Fort Benning, a year in advance to see if there was a facility available for Noren to train in.

"We asked ourselves, 'How could we support this Soldier?'" Snoddy said.

All he needed was a 8-by-8-foot area.

"I called Fred Wood, facility manager of Audie Murphy Gym and he said, 'Yeah, we can support him,'" he said.

The storage closet off the basketball court was converted to a place for Noren to practice.

"We just rearranged some stuff in the room, we didn't have to do anything extravagant," Snoddy said.

The room was ready when Noren arrived in May. He continues to devoutly train at Audie Murphy Gym without the critical eye of a coach and on borrowed time between work and family.

"It's difficult, because I have a family, (wife and four children). Between that, my work and studying for the (oral surgeon) boards, coming up in February, it's difficult," he said.

Noren plans to continue weightlifting for at least another three or four years. "That's when I'm going to reach my peak, sometime in the next three, four years," he said.

Weightlifters usually peak after six or seven years of serious training, he said. For now he looks to the meet on Saturday and hopes to qualify for the 2001 Nationals.

Army shooters take top spots in matches

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit scored some major victories recently. The following results are some of their accomplishments:

In the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team Selection Matches, held June 22 to July 1 in Atlanta, international pistol shooter Daryl L. Szarenski won a Free Pistol Olympic slot and Lance D. Dement took an Olympic Running Target slot.

International rifle shooters Jason A. Parker and Kenneth A. Johnson won the Air Rifle Olympic slots, Glenn A. Dubis and Thomas A. Tamas got the Free Rifle Prone slots and Dubis and Michael E. Anti won the Free Rifle Three Position slots. Shotgun shooters Todd Graves and Michael E. Schmidt Jr. took the two Skeet Olympic slots and William H. Keever got an Olympic slot in Double Trap.

At the USA Shooting National Championships, held June 22 to July 1 in Atlanta, Szarenski won the National Free Pistol Championship and Parker won the National Air Rifle Championship. International rifle shooter Eric A. Uptagrafft won the National Free Rifle Prone Championship and Dubis won the National Free Rifle Three Position Championship.

During the Ohio State Highpower Championships, June 24-25 in Camp Perry, Ohio, Service rifle shooter Dwayne Lewis won the National Match Course and Emil Praslick, III took second place. Erik A. Burge won the 1,000-Yard Individual Service Rifle Championship and William R. Cale was third.

Norman L. Anderson won the 1,000-Yard Individual Match Rifle Championship, followed by Grant L. Singley in second place.

Game: Lasts until final inning runs

the two point deficit.

The outcome looked promising for the team when first baseman Robert Garcia knocked a double and was brought in later by a pop fly. With the bases loaded, Cook stepped up to the plate and nabbed a spot on first while bringing in two more runs.

HHB headed into the bottom of the seventh with a one point lead, but wasn't able to stop A Co.'s offense.

"We had good fielding and some really strong batters, but as a whole team we really need to watch the ball," said HHB coach Scott Spangler. "But for going to the field a lot we have a pretty good team."

A Co.'s coach Rick Robak said he is proud of his team and contributed the win to their base hits, lack of errors and good outfielding.

"It was a great game," he said. "The only way to win softball is by base hits and that's what I felt won our game for us. The entire outfield also did a great job of keeping the ball in front of them."

Bombers: Lose twice to Rangers top of the first, but by the bottom of the first, it was tied.

Lead-off batter T.G. Taylor, B Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., got on first due to a Ranger error, followed by Walter Edwards, C Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., who walloped a home-run in left-center — quickly bringing the Bombers back to a one-run game.

Pippin capitalized on Ranger error and got to third. Then center fielder Troy McBride, E. Co., 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., hit a sacrifice fly to bring Pippin home to tie it up.

The Rangers had a lead of as much as five and as little as one during the game.

The end result was three-run lead over the Bombers, 11-8, and Ranger coach Matt Young cheered in relief after the strikeout that ended the game.

The Bombers, however, were just getting started and could only wonder "what if" to the prospect of having a few more innings.

"We were coming back," Dillon said.

Recent losses aside, the Bombers look to redeem their record as they take on their fellow Soldiers and rivals, the Cannons at 1 p.m. Saturday at Spencer High School

EDI Professionals... come to SILICORN VALLEY?

Interested in a fast-paced, pre-IPO, e-commerce firm located in Dublin, Ohio (home of " Cornhenge")? FORSIGHT Corp. is the developer of TradeSite™ - the hot b2b web platform used by world-class companies like Dell Computer. In fact, our great products are enjoyed by over 3000 users worldwide. We recently raised venture capital funding to accelerate our investment into TradeSite™ - opening up some great opportunities for you:

Software Engineers

Primarily responsible for assisting in the enhancement and maintenance of our product. Requires a strong background in software development, experience in developing functional specifications, analysis and design involving emerging technologies. We are seeking a developer with strong C/C++ and knowledge of SQL, and Perl programming experience, OR 2+ years experience in a Windows GUI programming environment utilizing C++ with Microsoft Foundation Classes or equivalent. Knowledge of XML is a plus.

Implementation Specialists

Primarily responsible for assisting our customers with installation and implementation, provide technical assistance to customers, provide product support, help customers isolate and solve problems, and work with sales team to create project proposals. Requires strong EDI knowledge including mapping experience, solid interpersonal skills, familiarity with the web, enthusiasm to interact with the customer, and a drive for customer satisfaction.

Support Specialists

Primarily responsible for providing product support, assisting customers in isolating and recreating problems, generating problem reports, responding to customer inquiries regarding product usage, and participating in new release testing. Requires previous customer service experience in an EDI environment and user level experience with Windows NT and/or Unix. We also offer exciting opportunities to support our direct sales force acting as a liaison between technical and non-technical personnel, and demonstrating our products at the customer's site.

Quality Assurance Specialist

Primarily responsible for the overall quality of the TradeSite™ product. You will develop and execute product test plans, build and test software releases, track all problem reports, and manage our source code archives. Requires experience within a structured testing environment, Windows NT and Unix, good organizational and interpersonal skills, and knowledge of source code management principles. Knowledge of C, Perl, and the web are helpful.

If you are looking for an opportunity for outstanding earning potential, great benefits including stock options, and an exciting work environment, send your resume to: kzhr@foresightcorp.com OR Fax to: KZ-HR at 614-791-1609.

CANCER BIOTHERAPY RESEARCH GROUP

Did You Know

• Cancer Biotherapy Research Group (CBRG) is unique because it focuses on the use of biotherapy in the treatment of cancer.

• Biotherapy in the treatment of cancer means using (chemicals) substances naturally produced by the human body which assist the body's immune system in killing cancer cells.

• Biotherapy is one of the four major treatments used to fight and kill cancer.

• Biotherapy is usually the LAST HOPE when surgery, radiation and chemotherapy do not work.

• Often biotherapy can provide a person with extra years of quality life.

To learn more about biotherapy for cancer, call Cancer Biotherapy Research Group at 1-888-791-6393.

You don't pay tax on a Roth IRA

This is the big attraction of a Roth IRA—you don't pay tax when you make a qualified withdrawal, not even on the earnings and gains that build up.

You must follow certain rules, such as holding the Roth IRA for 5 years and reaching age 59½.

What's more, you can convert many traditional IRA accounts to a Roth IRA. And you can contribute to a Roth IRA after the age of 70½.

You need to meet the guidelines, compare, and examine which choice is best for you.

Other IRA options also offer tax advantages. For example, you can withdraw up to $10,000 from most IRA accounts without paying early-withdrawal tax, if you use the funds to buy a first home or pay for higher education.

For all the facts on Roth and other IRA benefits, see your 1999 tax booklet. Or check our Web site: www.irs.gov

Defense budget nears approval

Soldiers may see 3.7 percent pay raise in '01

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

More money, additional housing allowances, better education opportunities and an overhaul of the U.S. Army School of the Americas could be on the way thanks to a vote by Congress July 13.

The Defense Authorization Act could net the Department of Defense a $310 billion purse in 2001 if it can clear a final House-Senate conference later this month.

The July 13 vote came after a brief meeting between the House and Senate as the two versions of the bills met for the first time. But the combination of the two drew little debate as both House and Senate leaders found little controversy in the proposed defense spending plans.

The plan gives service members a 3.7 percent pay raise across the board, a figure Congress claims to be .5 percent more than inflation.

Service members will also see a boost in housing allowances under the new plan.

Congress hopes to eliminate the required 15 percent out-of-pocket expenses a service member must pay now if living off a military installation.

The move comes after the DoD proposed to reduce average out-of-pocket expenditures from the current level of 18.9 percent to zero by 2005.

Service members trying to decide whether to continue serving Uncle Sam could have an additional enticement to stay in uniform.

The plan allows those serving 10 years or more to transfer G.I. Bill benefits to their dependents. The final move to transfer the benefits however will be left to the service's secretary.

Under the new plan, both active-duty and reserve members will also be allowed to participate in the federal Thrift Savings Plan.

Medical benefits for active-duty families will also see a boost under the plan.

The plan eliminates the co-payments for active-duty family members on Tricare and expands Tricare Prime Remote to include active-duty family members.

"Our men and women in uniform are big winners in this legislation," said Sen. Max Cleland. "Quality of life consideration for our service personnel are my highest priority. The 3.7 percent pay raise is a significant step in the right direction toward properly compensating our people in the military.

"With declining retention in the services posing a severe threat to our overall readiness, addressing quality of life measures has never been more critical to our national security,"

Training turns real

Columbus Paramedic Art Simmons Jr. and Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins perform CPR on a simulated drowning victim Wednesday at Victory Pond. Jenkins and Staff Sgt. Robert Knaggs, rear, both members of Fort Benning's Special Reaction Team and search and rescue dive team, helped save a Columbus man Tuesday after he leaped from a bridge on Columbus' northwest side.

Training dive gets scrapped to save life

Shortly after 1:30 Tuesday afternoon Staff Sgt.s Kyle Jenkins and Robert Knaggs are busy preparing a boat for a training dive with Columbus' Emergency Medical Services dive team.

Little did they or the other five dive students know the training exercise they were about to embark on would be scrapped only minutes later for a real rescue mission.

Jenkins and Knaggs are military police who pull double duty as Special Reaction Team members and members of the search and rescue dive team who have been training for months with the Columbus EMS.

Tuesday morning, the two had only three days of training left until they were certified public safety divers.

But as the emergency radio began to wail at 1:45 with details of a jumper on the nearby J.R. Allen Parkway Bridge, Robert Futrell, the instructor of the dive course and Columbus' assistant chief of EMS, told the team of trainees to scrap the training mission and to load the gear and get ready to move to the scene.

"I didn't even think of this as being our first real dive call," Jenkins said Tuesday. "All I could think about was to get there and get in the water."

As police negotiators attempted to talk the man out of leaping off the bridge high above the Chattahoochee River, the students along with the Columbus dive team, moved into position only minutes after receiving the initial call.

"We put Jenkins and Knaggs under the bridge as swimmers in case the man decided to jump to an area we couldn't reach in the boat," Futrell said. "Then we took another student with us just south of the bridge and waited."

Combat Team to attend course

Leaders will look at tactical issues for IBCT

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The Interim Brigade Combat Team from Fort Lewis, Wash., will attend the Senior Leader Course next week to study the Infantry.

"Most of the people coming are not Infantry," said Col. Paul Melody, director of Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate. "Our focus is to give an Infantry perspective on the brigade. They're here to get how Fort Benning and the Infantry fits in and how the rest of the brigade works with the Infantry."

There are 65 of brigade's senior leaders attending the course, including the two Infantry battalion commanders, the brigade commander and staff, and the brigade support battalion commander and staff, said Capt. Michael Schaefer CATD operations officer.

The five-day course begins Monday with a briefing of military operations in urban terrain followed by a demonstration by the 75th Ranger Regiment on how platoons fight in cities.

The IBCT will then have a chance to conduct reconnaissance missions in the uptown Columbus area and Lawson Army Airfield as a part of a training exercise without troops.

Other aspects of the course include a collaborative planning exercise focusing on what was learned the first day of training and another TEWT at McKenna MOUT.

Drought brings un'bear'able problem to area

No rain causes wildlife to come closer to home

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

There are some visitors that are just not welcome in the neighborhood.

A black bear would be one of them.

"It's usually young male bears dispersing out from their original birthplace," said Pete Swiderek, chief Conservation Branch, Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Public Works, on which bears are most likely to enter a neighborhood.

"It's a natural occurrence that it's looking for its own territory and the drought may exacerbate the situation. Whether it's natural dispersal or exaggerated by conditions, it's hard to say," he said.

Although black bear sightings in residential areas are rare, there have been three sightings in the last year.

One was a year ago on Fort Benning that Swiderek verified by its foot prints; the second was last month, but Swiderek couldn't find evidence of its presence and, the most recent sighting was two weeks ago in a North Columbus neighborhood.

Black bear populations are in three surrounding areas, north in the Georgia mountains, south of Macon along the Ocmulgee River and southeast in and around the Okeefenokee National Wildlife Refuge.

The black bears that come into the Columbus area are coming from the mountains or the Macon populations, Swiderek said.

"Severe weather changes — dryness or wetness — change patterns of movement," said Jim Trostle, coordinator of wildlife, trails and grounds, Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center.

It is logical to assume that if food or water supply diminishes in an area, an animal will travel to where the food and water are more plentiful.

Swiderek has not seen anything unusual regarding the amount of wildlife nuisance complaints or sightings during the continued drought conditions, which would indicate a change in wildlife travel patterns.

Why then do these creatures wander into a residential area?

"With wildlife it's difficult to determine why they do something," Swiderek said.

Contributing factors that might tempt wildlife to roam into a residential area are the combination of the drought, and lawn-watering, unkempt yards and unsecured, outside trash.

The most common wildlife seen around residential areas are

Challenge makes for great story

Sgt. 1st Class Pamela Smith
USASOC PAO

commentary

"I don't know, but I think I might, jump from an airplane while in flight." You can hear this cadence most mornings during physical training at Fort Bragg, N.C., where more than half of the Soldiers are on jump status.

I sang this song for three weeks during my recent training at Fort Benning's Airborne School.

As a sergeant first class with 14 years in the service, I was asked constantly, "Why are you here?" Believe me, I asked myself that question daily as I woke at 4 a.m. for a dose of training in "The Pit," a training bay filled with sawdust.

So what makes a seemingly otherwise sane person want to jump from a "perfectly good airplane?"

Perhaps it's dedication to the Army or the esprit de corps that comes from belonging to a proud and glorious team. Or maybe it's the thrill of flying through the air. Then there's also the money.

And of course, there are the stories Airborne Soldiers earn with every jump. Those tales of twists in suspension lines, of landing in the trees and of blood on the risers. These anecdotes get more interesting as time goes by.

A story about how an Airborne Soldier missed the drop zone and landed hard, soon becomes, "My main chute didn't open, then my reserve didn't open, so I assumed a good landing position, did a perfect parachute landing fall and double-timed it back to the turn-in point."

For me, as a journalist, I've often had the chance to view all the "cool" training, but never participate. So when the opportunity to attend Airborne training came around, I jumped at it (literally). Plus I knew I would no longer have to feel guilty about wearing the beret without wings on my chest.

I started training months before my school date. As others in my company heard about it, I was privy to everyone's "Airborne stories." Some were amusing, others were downright terrifying.

I arrived at Fort Benning as ready as I'd ever be. Of the more than 300 students, only 18 were female. That number would dwindle to eight before our three weeks were up.

We were welcomed by our sergeants Airborne and given numbers. I was no longer Sgt. 1st Class Smith, but November 13.

Ground week flew by and I felt good I'd made it through with just a few bruises and a little hurt pride after being told that my parachute landing falls looked like "doo doo."

I decided after day three that I never wanted to run in boots again. I thought I'd never get all of the mole skin off my feet.

Our instructors continued to encourage us saying, "Speed it up, you're moving like pond water." They challenged us to "Move like lightning and sound like thunder." The eight-count pushup was the "reward" for not achieving this goal.

Tower week loomed before us as we prepared to face the 250-foot towers. But first we had to complete the Swing Landing Trainer; a device used to teach proper landings, but looks more like a torture device used in a medieval dungeon.

We all started getting a little cocky after making it through tower week. We had the weekend to recover from the Swing Landing Trainer and to ponder what lay ahead in jump week.

Finally, Monday morning of jump week arrived and we ran to the airport, nearly a mile away. Spirits were high as we lined up for parachute issue.

Tensions started to rise as we neared flight and jump time. We all marched anxiously into the C-130 airplane and buckled in.

Some people slept during the short flight to the drop zone, while others nervously rubbed their Saint Michael (the paratrooper's patron saint) medallion.

The 10-minute warning was issued. Then the jumpmasters called the order for all outgoing personnel to stand up. This was it. We were going to do our first jump.

I kept saying, "This is so cool," but my legs, which were shaking uncontrollably, were about to give away how I really felt.

The next thing I knew we had hooked up our static lines and checked our equipment. I barely heard the jumpmaster's call of, "Stand by," to the first person at the door.

Suddenly I was next, my heart was in my throat and then my body was swept out and away as I stepped into nothingness.

I remember thinking, "Wow, I did it." Then I looked up to see the perfectly round canopy on my T-10 parachute. Believe me that was a beautiful site.

I landed without incident and double-timed it back to the rally point. We all stood around telling the amazing stories of our first jump.

There was number 115, who landed in the creek. And November 213, who missed the drop zone and landed, "like a sack of potatoes," in the field. Just four more jumps to go until graduation.

Our lives had changed in that moment it took to step from the plane and put our feet and knees in the breeze.

We would no longer be "legs" or "NAPs" (non-Airborne personnel). We were now "Super Duper Paratroopers." We would proudly wear silver wings upon our chest.

So why would anyone want to jump from a perfectly good airplane? The answer isn't that simple.

Indeed it might be the camaraderie you feel once you become a member of the Airborne corps. And it certainly is a rush and a thrill throwing your body into space with only a thin piece of silk to protect you.

Also, there's the money. Plus you can now wear the beret with pride, knowing you earned it.

But whatever the reason — esprit de corps, thrill seeking or the money, most super duper paratroopers would agree, it's unlike anything you'll ever experience, and you'll have some pretty good jump stories to share when you're through.

Squirrels conjure up big trouble

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs

commentary

I was almost 11 when I met my first squirrel. Up until then, the closest things to squirrels I had encountered were mongoose.

For those of you whose only encounters with mongoose are Rikki-Tiki-Tavi or mountain bikes, real mongoose are neither as outgoing as Rikki or ridden on backwoods trails.

That's probably why the chubby little squirrel begging for peanuts in Golden Gate Park was so appealing. He was far from furtive, and he certainly had "it" going for him in the cute department.

All of that changed when we moved here. Now I see the little critters for what they really are — rats with fluffy tails (probably fake) and good P.R.

I didn't mind when they methodically plucked all of the plums out of our tree, especially since they weren't very good plums. Although I didn't think much of their technique ... taking one bite, throwing the rest down and then reaching for another. I did take exception when they moved to our blackberries, picking the ripe fruit while we were at work and leaving us half-ripe berries to survey every afternoon.

I was mildly amused when they learned to pull up our bird feeders so they could snack on sunflower seed from one end while the rest poured to the ground from the other side. One of them decided that was too much like work, so he graduated to biting through the cable holding the bird feeder.

When the feeder hit the ground he and his buddies reveled in a rodent equivalent of a frat party, minus the togas.

Then two of the little rodents started a campaign to drive one of our dogs to the brink of a nervous breakdown, teasing him mercilessly and enticing him to spend hours staring into a tree while they merrily ran down the other side. Often, before they escaped and evaded to the next yard, they would shower him with acorns or pine cones or whatever else they could lay their grubby little paws on.

Fruit theft, bird feeder raiding and dog harassment were innocent enough, but it seems to me they're escalating their efforts.

Take, for example, the little forest denizens along the Riverwalk, who have adopted a more direct approach. At first, when I saw one quivering on the side of the bike path waiting to dash across as close to my front wheel as he dared I thought he was playing "chicken."

The first time it happened, I missed the little beggar by less than two feet. Once the screaming and brake squealing was over, my biking buddies and I thought it was pretty funny. It stayed funny until our resident bicycling guru, Snively, pointed out small animals like squirrels and cats can't see the spokes when the wheels are turning, and think they can run through, then. With my vivid imagination and low pain threshold, this did not conjure up a very pretty picture ... not to mention what the squirrel might end up looking like.

Snively proceeded to recount a horror story about how a squirrel (probably related to the ones haunting the Riverwalk) ended the start of a bicycle race when he tried to run through the front wheel of the lead cyclist. When the leader went down, the rest of the pack went down too, posthumously earning the squirrel a place in the Rats with Good P.R. Hall of Fame.

And they're still throwing their puny bodies in harm's way. Just last week, one got so close I could count his eyelashes. I missed him by centimeters only because when I saw him on the side of the bike path setting up his ambush, I slowed down and disrupted his carefully planned timing sequence.

Not to be outdone, their suburban cousins are stepping up the pace too.

No longer content with harmless pranks aimed at individuals, their homes and their pets, they have set their sights on bigger targets.

In my neighborhood alone, several squirrels have sacrificed themselves on suicide missions, causing power blackouts by hurling themselves on the right combination of power lines and into transformers in their attempts to inconvenience their human neighbors.

They only do it during the summer, when no electricity means no air conditioning. On several occasions the closest theater's lobby has looked like a block party, courtesy of a kamikaze rodent.

As I type this, dangling from an overhead power line just up the street from my home, a small, desiccated corpse flutters in the breeze. For nearly a month now he has been providing mute testimony to the lengths his species will go to drive us from our homes.

How he managed to sink his teeth into the upper wire while planting his feet on the lower to complete the circuit, I will never know. Let's just say that he has given the phrase "death grip" a whole new meaning.

Now that I think about it, didn't the new Rocky the Flying Squirrel and Bullwinkle movie just open? As usual, the moose (a larger and much more powerful animal than a squirrel) has only second billing.

Is it just me, or does anyone else see a pattern developing?

Irishman trades shamrock green for Army green

Former Irish soldier fulfills dream in U.S.

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Some people just seem to have it in their blood — the desire to train, march, drill and lead the regimented life of a Soldier. When the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, "turns green" during a ceremonial transition to Soldiers, Aug. 11, one graduate will stand out among the rest — his blood runs greener than most.

Pvt. Bernard Shevlin is fulfilling a lifelong dream of becoming a Soldier in the U.S. Army. At the age of 32, he's an anomaly — the oldest basic trainee in the split-option program at Sand Hill. But it hasn't always been so.

Ironically, at one time Shevlin was the youngest Soldier in his unit. That was in 1982, when he dropped out of high school to enlist in the Irish army at the age of 14.

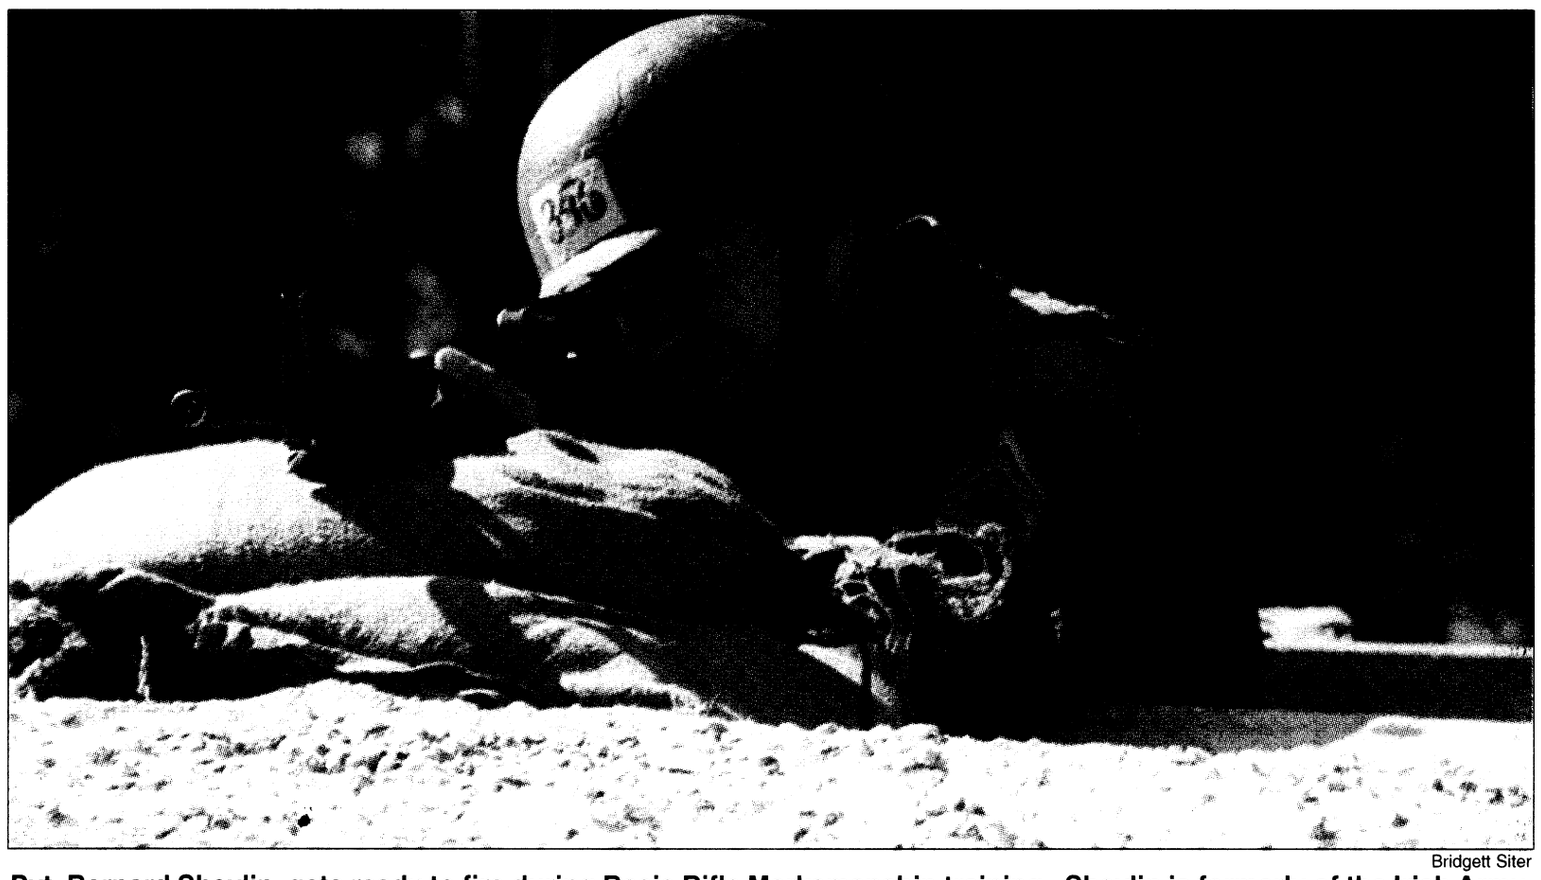
Shevlin hails from Castleblayney, in County Monaghan on the northeastern border of Ireland, an area noted for its beautiful lakes and lush green vistas. It's also an area known for its turbulent history — centuries of civil unrest and violent opposition to British dominion. As a child Shevlin grew accustomed to the sounds of bombs and gunfire in the streets of Castleblayney.

The second of eight children, he watched as his father struggled to feed his growing family on a construction worker's salary. When his grandmother died, his mother's younger siblings also joined the Shevlin household.

"At one time there were 17 of us living in the house with no electricity and no running water. Times was hard, but we were a very close family," he said, with a thick Irish accent. "My father could barely keep food on the table. It was a tough life, but we didn't know any different. My dad never missed a day of work in his life, and he never complained. I always admired him for doing what he had to do and not grumbling about it."

Surrounded by violence and poverty and eager to ease his father's burden, Shevlin joined the army after his freshman year in high school. But after more than four years, he saw "no advancement, no future" in his chosen career, so he saved enough money for a one-way airfare to the U.S. At the age of 19, with only $100 in his pocket, he said good-bye to his homeland and headed to New York City.

"That was the first time I ever saw my father cry," Shevlin said. "I guess it's in the Irish nature to immigrate. I thought the streets here were paved with gold. All I knew about America was what I'd seen on the TV shows."



With no friends or family in New York and no place to stay, Shevlin wandered into an Irish pub. There he made friends with an Irishman who offered him a place to stay and a job doing construction — a job he kept for more than six years.

"It was pretty tough," he laughed. "New York looked better on TV. I got mugged the second week I was there. But the money was very good and there was enough to send a little back home."

On Saint Patrick's Day, ten years ago, a stroke of Irish luck landed Shevlin in a sushi bar — "It was just too crowded in the Irish pubs." — where he met his future wife, Kathleen, the granddaughter of Irish immigrants. After their marriage two years ago in Ireland, they moved to East Longmeadow, Mass., where Shevlin works as a correctional officer at a county correctional facility.

"She's the driving force behind me. She supports everything that I do," Shevlin said.

It was Kathleen who encouraged him to get his GED, and Kathleen who lauds his decision to go back to school next fall to pursue a degree in criminal justice.

Bridgett Siter

Pvt. Bernard Shevlin, gets ready to fire during Basic Rifle Marksmanship training. Shevlin is formerly of the Irish Army.

"Bernard's a courageous person," Kathleen said, during a telephone interview. "He jumps in with both feet and gives 100 percent. He's never been afraid to take risks and take on more responsibility to better himself. He's just an incredible man."

Though Shevlin says life in America "has been nothing but good," it hasn't been without sorrow. His father died five years ago, having seen his son only once since he moved to the U.S, and his mother died two years later.

Like his father before him, Shevlin finds himself raising his own sibling, John, who was only 4 years old when his brother left Ireland.

"He really didn't even know me. He spent the first few weeks crying his eyes out," Shevlin said. "But there was nowhere else for him to go. He had been through too much with losing both my parents at such a young age, and he'd seen too much violence in Ireland. It was best to get him out of there. Now he's in the best country in the world and he loves it. He's a great kid."

Shevlin and his wife are still trying to complete the lengthy adoption process that began nearly two years ago.

In the meantime, their family continues to grow. Kathleen gave birth to Grace Ann Margaret six months ago.

In June Shevlin once again left his family behind, temporarily, to join the Army — this time the Massachusetts Army National Guard.

"The hardest part is missing my family," he said. "But my wife is behind me 100 percent. She knows I always wanted to join the U.S. Army — the best force in the world. I've always been fascinated with it, and this was my chance to give something back to this country. That's why I joined."

Shevlin will return to Massachusetts in August, where he will continue working as a correctional officer and report monthly to his local Guard unit.

Next summer, he will return to Fort Benning for advanced individual training, phase two of the split-option program.

Though his employer and family support his endeavor, Shevlin said he had second thoughts when he first arrived at basic training in June.

"I was surrounded by 17- and 18-year-olds. I thought, 'What in the world am I doing here?'" he chuckled. "But I'm like a father to the whole platoon. They're a great bunch of lads. They tell me their problems, and I try to put myself in their shoes."

Staff Sgt. Frank Colleado said Shevlin's age and experience makes him a natural leader for the young Soldiers, mostly high school seniors, who opt to split their basic training and AIT into two summer phases.

"We made him the platoon guide because he's got a good idea about what a leader should be," Colleado, a drill sergeant, said. "He's motivated, and he motivates the others. They look up to him because he's the 'old guy.' They call him Moses."

What does Shevlin tell the young Soldiers who look to him for advice and solace?

"I tell them to take a deep breath when they get up each morning and drive on. That's what I do," he said.

In fact mornings are the favorite part of Shevlin's day at Sand Hill.

"Breakfast is incredible," he laughed. "The food is all excellent, but breakfast is the best part of the day. In the Irish Army you couldn't even eat the food. Here it's incredible, but that's the U.S. and God bless it."

Army freshens up PT uniforms

Soldiers to see new, improved workout gear

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The days of soggy, pit-stained, dirty-bottomed PT uniforms will soon be over.

New PT uniforms will hit the racks of the Clothing and Sales Aug. 15.

"Everything about them is head and shoulders above what we had," said Sgt. Maj. Butch Hancock, TRADOC System Manager-Soldier sergeant major.

"The new design was developed primarily to bring Soldier uniforms into the 21st century," said Dr. Louis Tomasi, research physiologist at the Physical Fitness School.

The new uniform is a five-piece ensemble comprised of two shirts: a long-sleeve, turtle-neck and a short-sleeve T-shirt, shorts, pants and a jacket.

"The jacket is something we have needed for a long time," Hancock said.

The shorts and pants are black, the shirts are light gray and the jacket is dark gray.

The reason the pants and shorts are black is to not show the dirt that frequently stains a Soldier's posterior while doing sit-ups on the dew-covered ground, Tomasi said.

The black letters on the shirts, front and back, are reflective and the jacket and pants are made of a luminous material that will glow in the dark, Hancock said.

Despite the uniform's luminary properties, however, it's still recommended to wear a reflective belt during PT, he said.

For the materials used for PTs, the Army traded cotton for CoolMax and Supplex to create a more durable, comfortable and versatile uniform for Soldiers.

CoolMax is a soft, lightweight breathable material used for the shirts and the shorts-liner. Supplex is a nylon-based material used for the shorts, pants and jacket.

"It's the same materials that high-level amateur and professional athletes are wearing," said Sgt. 1st Class Richard Holladay, Physical Fitness School.

The materials provide the Soldier with maximum comfort during exercise because both CoolMax and Supplex resist the soggy, stay-wet properties that are typical of cotton.

"When the body perspires, CoolMax moves moisture out and air moves in through the fabric producing a cooling, drying effect," Tomasi said.

Of course Soldiers cannot expect to end a run in mid-August with a dry uniform, but the CoolMax will eliminate the post-workout chills when they enter their air-conditioned room, which also is a common trait to cotton.

"If the shirt is wet, just hang it and in 15 to 20 minutes it's dry," Tomasi said.

In addition, the CoolMax shirts are designed to be easily washed in a sink and to not retain body odor.

Supplex, used for the pants and shorts, also is a quick-dry material that enables the shorts, which are 3-inches longer than its cotton counterpart, to double as a swimsuit.

Not only is the uniform made of more durable and comfortable materials, but it's also more stylish and professional-looking than its predecessor.

Some of the features include: pit-zips and reinforced elbows in the jacket, an ID-card-size Velcro side-pocket on the lower part of the shorts and side-zippers up to the knee in the pants.

In these uniforms, there's a reason for placing every pocket, seam and zipper. For example, the short's side-pocket was placed on the lower part of the short so it would not interfere with sit-ups. Also, the pants' side-zippers allow easy removal without taking off the shoes.

The uniform's extensive feature list was determined after years of research and testing. Research for the new uniforms started in the early '90s but it wasn't until 1996 the Army started working with companies. The Physical Fitness School and TSM-Soldier participated in the preliminary research and Project Manager-Soldier out of Fort Belvoir, Va., did all the testing.

The uniform was tested by Soldiers in various posts from Fort Hood to Alaska during spring, summer and winter.

The primary designer of the uniform is American Player from Fall River, Mass., and UNICOR, a trade name for Federal Prison Industries, provided the manual labor to help sew the uniforms.

The Army will begin issuing new uniforms, except for the pants and jackets, to basic trainees between Aug. 15 and Sept. 1. During basic training, the Soldier will have a pair of sweat pants and a sweat shirt instead of the Supplex version.

"We don't want them to rip their jacket or trousers," Hancock said.

Unlike typical PT, basic training entails more activities for Soldiers, such as obstacle courses.

"They are rougher on it (the uniform) in basic training," Hancock said.

Soldiers will receive the new pants and jackets during Phase II of basic combat training.

The cost of the uniform is $108.75 and Soldiers must have the complete ensemble by October 2003.

Soldiers are reminded not to mix and match the present and new uniforms in accordance with Army regulation AR 670-1.

A CLOSER LOOK

The Army will make the new Army Physical Fitness Uniform available Aug. 15 to Soldiers. The uniform will be available at all Clothing Sales stores.

Here are the details.

- The new uniform is a 5-piece ensemble comprised of a long-sleeve shirt, a turtle neck, a short-sleeve shirt, shorts, pants and a jacket.
- The complete set will cost Soldiers $108.75.
- Mandatory possession date of the new uniform is October 2003.
- Trainees will begin being issued the new uniform in mid-August.
- The new uniform replaces the cotton uniforms with the high-tech materials CoolMax and Supplex.
- Army officials say the new materials make the uniforms more durable, comfortable and versatile than the present PFU.
- The addition of the new materials will also make the new uniform breathable ending the days of soggy, stay-wet PT sessions.
- The new uniforms are lettered with reflective print making it easier to see runners both during the night at times of low light.
- The uniform is similar to those worn by professional athletes making it a more professional looking uniform, officials say.
- The uniform is made by a Massachusetts-based company and by federal prisoners.

"(In terms of) hygiene, cleanliness, comfort and durability, it's a much better uniform," Tomasi said.

"There's no comparison on how you're going to look and feel," Hancock said.

Soldier faces felony charges

Man accused of stealing Army explosives

A Fort Benning Soldier faces eight felony charges after a search of his Americus home revealed he stole explosives from the Army.

Sgt. 1st Class Kevin M. Stevens, 32, A Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, is charged with three counts of felony possession of a destructive device, five felony counts of theft by taking and one count of disorderly conduct, said Danny Jackson, assistant special agent-in-charge of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation's Americus field office.

GBI investigators, bomb technicians from the Georgia State Patrol and ordnance experts from Fort Benning searched Stevens' home in Americus July 13 after neighbors told police the Soldier was detonating explosives behind his mobile home.

The search of his residence revealed blasting caps; booby trap, artillery and projectile simulators; and fuses, Jackson said Wednesday.

The explosives were stolen from the Army, he said, and are believed to have came from Fort Benning.

"This is probably not the first time a Soldier has taken these things home," Jackson said. "But what some Soldiers don't realize is just having the explosives in their possession off the installation is a felony offense."

Stevens was released from the Sumpter County Jail July 14 on $35,000 bond.

Team: Visits post

Technology will play a role in the training as the IBCT will use a command post, which will replicate future tactical capabilities such as video teleconferencing, whiteboard capability and tactical Internet.

"No matter how technical it (the Infantry) is, it's a pretty rough business," Melody said.

Information technology is one of the key capabilities of this brigade, Melody said.

This technology will enable the brigade to plan faster and maneuver more independently than in the past.

Tools such as the tactical Internet will allow the IBCT to quickly obtain information about the enemy from other brigades that are miles away.

"The future is the brigade (will be) doing multiple things without a lot of help," he said.

The Senior Leader Course also addresses issues regarding combat with today's ambiguous adaptive enemy, similar to the Kosovo or Chechenya environment, Melody said.

This stop is the second to last stop on an extensive tour of military posts the IBCT is taking to train for its new duties at Fort Lewis, Wash.

The IBCT previously visited Fort Lee, Va., Fort Huachuca, Ariz., and Fort Knox, Ky., and will go to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., at the end of August for its final training.

The new plan also answers the calls of military retirees for increased medical care.

The plan allows retirees to participate in a comprehensive retail and national mail-order pharmacy programs.

The plan also reforms the U.S. Army School of the Americas here with a name change and revamping the curriculum.

Under the proposed plan the school would adopt the new name: Western Hemisphere Institute for Professional Education and Training. It would also be required to install a board of visitors that include members of Congress and human rights organizations.

The plan would require students at the school to take classes in a series of topics focusing on maintaining human rights.

It would also increase the recruiting of civilian staff and students.

The bill should make it to a House-Senate conference later this month.

"We expect to see its passage sometime in September," said Patricia Murphy, a spokesperson for Cleland. "The bill will more than likely see some streamlining in the medical benefits, but as far as monetary amounts, I don't think we'll see any major changes."

If approved the proposed authorization provides the DoD with a $20 million boost over last year's funding and nearly $4 million more than the president's proposed plan.

The wait proved short for divers as the man who had been flirting with the notion of jumping for more than an hour asked police negotiators a question then jumped.

He asked police negotiators something to the fact that, 'Do you want to hear a joke?' Futrell said. They acknowledged, and the jumper said, 'Reach for my hand.' When the negotiator reached out for him, the man on the bridge jumped, Futrell said.

The water below was rocky, in some parts only 3 to 4 feet deep, Futrell said, but the man who told police throughout the entire situation he was "just having a bad day" fell into some luck when he leapt from the bridge.

He narrowly missed the rocks below landing in an area of the rocky river that was not only rock-free but more than 3 feet deep.

The man landed in an area Futrell estimates was at least 8 feet deep, a depth he said saved the jumper's life and caused only minor bruises.

"As soon as we saw him jump, we began to move in with the boat to pick him up," Futrell said.

Jenkins and Knaggs also swam to the jumper to assist the boat team in getting him in the boat and moving him to nearby ambulances.

"We were lucky," Jenkins said. "He didn't try fight or combat us at all. All he wanted to do was to was get in the boat."

Ironically, it was only the day before, the team had trained on what to do when a person jumps and is combative upon landing.

"It really hit us after the whole thing was over," Jenkins said. "This was a real-life situation, and this is what we have been training to do.

"Everything kicked in, and we proved we could do it," Jenkins said. "It was just great to be part of the operation."

"It went off without a hitch," Knaggs said. "It was one of the most professional operations I have seen in my military career."

The Columbus EMS dive certification program is one of only 12 programs of its kind across the country that trains police and fire personnel in public safety diving.

The incident Tuesday marks the first time a training class has been called to assist in a real rescue mission.

"These guys are all proficient divers, and I didn't feel uncomfortable at all about putting them out there on a real call," Futrell said. "They are all level-headed, physically fit guys very capable of the mission they had."

Jenkins and Knaggs complete the 120-hour diver certification course today.

"This combined rescue reflects well on not only the military, but it shows how well we work as a composite team when called upon to do so with our partners in peace in the tri-community," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, law enforcement. "Staff Sergeants Jenkins and Knaggs are super guys who did a super job."

Bears: Come closer to more homes

raccoons, deer, foxes, skunks, opossums, bobcats, snakes, armadillos and coyotes.

Lawn-watering, for example, can attract armadillos because they dig for food. The moist soil of a well-watered lawn presents a convenient feeding ground as opposed to the hard, dry soil found elsewhere.

Also, deer like to eat anything that's growing on the lawn as well as flowerbeds and shrubs.

"You can't fence off a deer. It can easily clear a 10-foot fence," Trostle said.

Some wildlife has learned to live around humans such as coyotes and raccoons.

Here are some ways to deter wildlife from wandering into the yard.

• Secure trash cans with a latch or rope.

• Keep yard clean of debris and mow grass short.

• Don't keep pet food outside.

Many of these animals such as raccoons, opossums, foxes, skunks or armadillos feed at night and do not pose a direct threat to residents if left alone.

More dangerous situations involving nocturnal animals are if they are feeding in the daytime or showing signs of erratic behavior, tiredness or fatigue.

These are signs that the animal is sick.

If wildlife is sighted in a residential area call the military police at 545-5222.

If a black bear is sighted, however, call the Natural Resource Branch at 545-7319.

One animal directly affected by the current drought is the alligator. The plummeting water levels have forced them to go elsewhere for food, water and shelter.

But it's unlikely that an alligator will wander into a residential area.

Soldiers learn cornerstone of Army standard

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

This is the fourth story of a six-part series, which takes an in-depth look at basic training.

Since the first day of basic training, the Soldiers of D Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, have had seven words pounded into their heads.

The seven words are said to be the cornerstone of what today's Army is all about — the seven Army values.

Loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage — although these are just words to some, the trainees are finding out exactly what they mean to the Army first hand.

"I think we all had values on the outside, but once we got here, the values became a much larger part of our life," Pvt. Jimmie Lake said.

During the first seven weeks of basic training, trainees faced a barrage of tasks that bring out the Soldiers' values.

"The values training has run throughout all their training," Capt. Bill Burley, D Co. commander said. "Everything we do is dependent on values, whether it is crawling under live fire on Young Range, which shows personal courage, or having integrity when they do something wrong and needed to tell the drill sergeant, or displaying honor and doing the training right on the obstacle course."

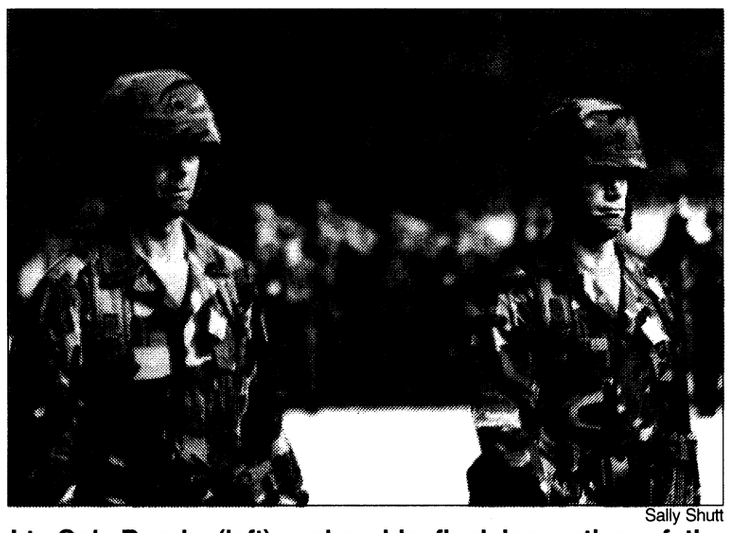
Although the values were integrated with all of the training, including a formal block of instruction on each value, it wasn't until basic training was well under way the trainees began to apply them to their everyday life.

"It wasn't until we were two or three weeks into training that we finally understood what the values meant and began to apply them," said Pvt. Jason Achzigir. "Plus when we apply values, life is much easier on us."

"By serving there is one value — duty," Sgt. 1st Class Jeffery Todd said. "When they walk to the mall with their greens on and they strut around with their chests stuck out, they are proud of being part of the Army — there they are displaying another value —honor. Many times they didn't realize they had values before the Army, but I sit down with them and try to tie in their past experiences and how they relate to the Army values," he said.

All the Soldiers now realize the values and their importance, Burley said.

"Before I came in, I only cared for myself and only a few of my friends and no one else," Lake said. "The Army has changed me for the better. Now I have learned to care for others."



"They all have the Army values," Burley said. "The ones who made it this far without values are either not here or they are on their way out," he said.

The Soldiers will put all their knowledge and the values learned to the test Monday when they begin their field training exercise which will be their last blocks of instruction.

Lt. Col. Dennis Bundy relinquished command of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, to Lt. Col. Michael Hanley at Sand Hill's Kannel Field July 12.

Bundy now moves to brigade headquarters to serve as the ITB deputy commander.

One unique aspect of Bundy's two-year command has been a working relationship with the 84th Division (Institutional Training), which sends reservists to work as drill sergeants and in other positions within E Company, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

Reservists from the 84th Div. (IT) joined the battalion's cadre in formation on the parade field, along with troops who have been training with the unit from one month to one week.

In his farewell comments, Bundy noted during his command there had been 46 company commanders — 16 from the active component and 30 from the reserve component.

"The professional working relationship between the ITB and the 84th Division is a real success story," Bundy said.

"Dennis Bundy is a man of principle, a man of character. He is truly a selfless commander who has led this unit to an absolutely amazing performance record," said Col. Rusty Schorsch, ITB commander.

Bundy and his wife, Carol, have two children, Dennis and Dena.

Hanley's most recent assignment was as the chief of the Forced Entry Battle Lab, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab.

Hanley was commissioned through Officer Candidate School in 1983 following four years of enlisted service with the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C. After his commissioning, Hanley returned to the 82nd Airborne Div. He commanded B Company, 6th Ranger Training Battalion, and A Company, 1st Battalion, 187th Infantry Regiment, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault). Other assignments include Korea, Fort Benning and Fort Polk, La.

Hanley and his wife, Emmy, have two children, Margaret and Alexander.

Airborne welcomes commander

The 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, welcomed a new commander July 13 during a change of command ceremony on York Field.

Lt. Col. Jeffrey W. Terhune assumed command of the Airborne School from Lt. Col. Brian P. Stephenson, whose next assignment will be as the deputy commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Members of the original Airborne test platoon, who were the first men to train as paratroopers at Fort Benning 60 years ago, and of the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion, the first black parachute battalion, attended the ceremony.

Col. Michael Ferriter, commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment, recognized the Airborne pioneers and called them a "living representation of the 'Greatest Generation.'"

"The paratrooper's place in history was paved by the blood of our Airborne forefathers, many of whom are sitting here today. It lives today in the paratroopers, Rangers and Special Forces who serve throughout our armed forces, and it will be perpetuated by these courageous students before you on the parade field," Stephenson said.

A year ago the battalion adopted a nickname — "Every paratrooper's regiment."

"That's because we train Soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines. And, even though they fill positions throughout the Department of Defense, if you want to become a paratrooper, you have to come here and join the 507th," Stephenson said.

During Stephenson's command, 23,105 paratroopers graduated from Airborne School.

"That means 105,525 safe jumps, no deaths and no serious injuries," Ferriter said.

Sally Shutt

Lt. Col. Jeffrey W. Terhune (left) accepts the colors from Col. Michael Ferriter during a change of command ceremony.

Stephenson and his wife, Victoria, have three daughters, Lauren, Kristen and Jennifer.

Terhune's most recent assignment was at Fort Benning as the chief, Office of Infantry Proponency.

"I am honored and humbled to command such an outstanding organization as the 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry Regiment, and the Airborne School," Terhune said.

A 1982 graduate of the U.S. Military Academy, Terhune holds a master's degree in leader development from West Point.

His awards and decorations include the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal with Arrowhead, and Master Parachutist Badge with combat star.

He commanded A Company and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C., and served as the operations and executive officer of the 1st Battalion, 187th Infantry, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky.

A native of Kentucky, Terhune and his wife, Marty, have four children, Mary, William, Jeffrey and Danielle.

The ceremony started with eyes turned skyward as the Fort Benning Command Exhibition Parachute Team, the Silver Wings, performed for the last time. Nine members of the team jumped from 12,500 feet in a free fall demonstration.

Once on the ground, the unit presented Stephenson with one of two batons carried during the final jump in appreciation for his support.

The other baton will go to the Airborne School battalion headquarters as a memento of the Silver Wings' last demonstration.

Formed in 1959, the team was deactivated because of budget constraints.

Jake Holladay, 6, came to the ceremony because he wanted to see the Silver Wings.

"It was great. They all landed on the target," he said.

MP Activity passes colors

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

In what was by far the coolest change of command ceremony at Fort Benning this summer, the Military Police Activity passed its colors in the air-conditioned comfort of the Officers' Club July 14.

Lt. Col. Donald Salo relinquished command of the MPA to Col. Graves T. Myers IV.

Myers takes over not only as the leader of the MPA, but also as the director of Public Safety, which includes the fire fighting and safety branches of the Infantry Center.

Salo's next assignment will be to attend the Air War College at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.

Salo's wife, Stacy, is a personnel management specialist with the Fort Benning Civilian Personnel Advisory Center. The Salos have three daughters, Lindsey, Ashley and Katlin. The family will continue to live in Columbus while Salo commutes to the Air War College in Montgomery, Ala.

Myers was commissioned a Military Police Corps officer in 1975. He holds a bachelor's degree in psychology from North Georgia College and a master's degree in forensic science from George Washington University.

His assignments include several tours at Fort Bragg, N.C., where he commanded Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 16th Military Police Group, served as the provost marshal of the 82nd Airborne Division and commanded the 10th Military Police Battalion (Airborne) (CID).

Myers was the division plans officer, 3rd U.S. Army, Fort McPherson, Ga., and commanded the 3rd Military Police Group (CID) prior to moving to Fort Benning.

He and his wife, Susan, have two children, Trent and Elizabeth.

'Can Do' battalion welcomes Smith to Kelley Hill

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Hot weather is nothing new to the Soldiers of the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

During the last two years, the battalion, under the command of Lt. Col. Robert Pricone, has deployed to the deserts of Kuwait and southern California.

So it seemed appropriate the battalion said farewell to Pricone and welcomed a new commander in the sweltering Georgia heat at Kelley Hill's Essebagger Field July 14.

Lt. Col. Dennis Smith assumed command of the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. — the "Can Do" battalion.

In his farewell comments, Pricone thanked the leaders and Soldiers of the battalion.

"I could not have hand-picked a better team to lead Soldiers anywhere in the Army."

Calling the Soldiers the best in the Army, he added, "Thank you for your unyielding support, professionalism, self-discipline and dedication. My deepest respect goes out to each of you."

Pricone's next assignment is with the U.S. Infantry Center as the chief of Tactics. He and his wife, Dawn, have two children, Joey and Catherine.

The newest caretaker of the "Can Do" legacy, Smith has "an Armywide reputation for mental and physical toughness," Cucolo said. "And he knows deployment cold."

Smith comes to Fort Benning from Hawaii, where he served as the Chief of the Information Warfare Division, U.S. Army Element, Joint Intelligence Center, Pacific Command.

A graduate from Stone Hill College, Smith was commissioned a second lieutenant and began his career with the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Fort Stewart, Ga.

Other assignments include the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment; 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division (Light); Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La.; and 3rd Brigade, 25th Infantry Division (Light), Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

STOP

Before watering lawns on Fort Benning, remember the post is under water restrictions. The following restrictions are now in effect:

- All outdoor watering is limited to 30 minutes or less between 6 p.m. and 10 p.m.
- Residents living in even-numbered address can only water on Mondays and Fridays.
- Residents living in odd-numbered addresses can only water on Tuesdays and Saturdays.
- The measures will remain in effect until the post officials declare the drought conditions over.

State mandates chicken pox vaccine

Students need immunization before school

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

School days missed due to chicken pox may soon be history thanks to a little shot in the arm.

Georgia has changed its immunization requirements, and now all children entering child care or school facilities in the state for the first time this year, regardless of age, will be required to receive the varicella, or chicken pox vaccine — or provide proof they are immune.

Parents moving to Fort Benning who think their children are up-to-date on their immunizations are encouraged to check out the state's new Certificate of Immunization, Form 3231, because the varicella requirement is one of several changes. Hepatitis B shots, for example, are now mandated for all new students, not just those born after January 1992. This vaccine is given in a three-shot series.

The state immunization forms are available at Martin Army Community Hospital's primary care clinics.

Fort Benning Schools follow the state's requirements for all immunizations. Parents can pick up an information sheet on immunizations in their child's registration packet. Faith Middle School is registering students now, and the post's elementary schools will begin Aug. 1. Post schools start Aug. 17.

Parents have 30 days to comply with the requirements and officials will be closely checking records this year and sending out notices if students' records are not up-to-date, said Tommye Woods, director of student services for Fort Benning Schools.

The changes adopted by the state follow the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices, the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Academy of Family Physicians, said Maj. Bryan Alsip, chief of Preventive Medicine, Martin Army Community Hospital.

With Fort Benning and Muscogee County Schools opening in about a month, parents are encouraged not to wait until the last minute to bring their children to the hospital's primary care clinics for shots, unless they are willing to wait in long lines.

The varicella vaccine requirement may be waived with a physician's diagnosis of the disease or a health care provider's interpretation that a parent's description of the child's chickenpox disease history indicates a past infection, according to the Georgia Department of Human Resources.

Although blood tests can be given to prove immunity, they are expensive and will only be given to students 13 years of age or older, and then primarily to females because of the possibility of pregnancy, said Robert Knight, a licensed practical nurse with Martin Army's Pediatric Clinic.

DoD eyes laser surgery

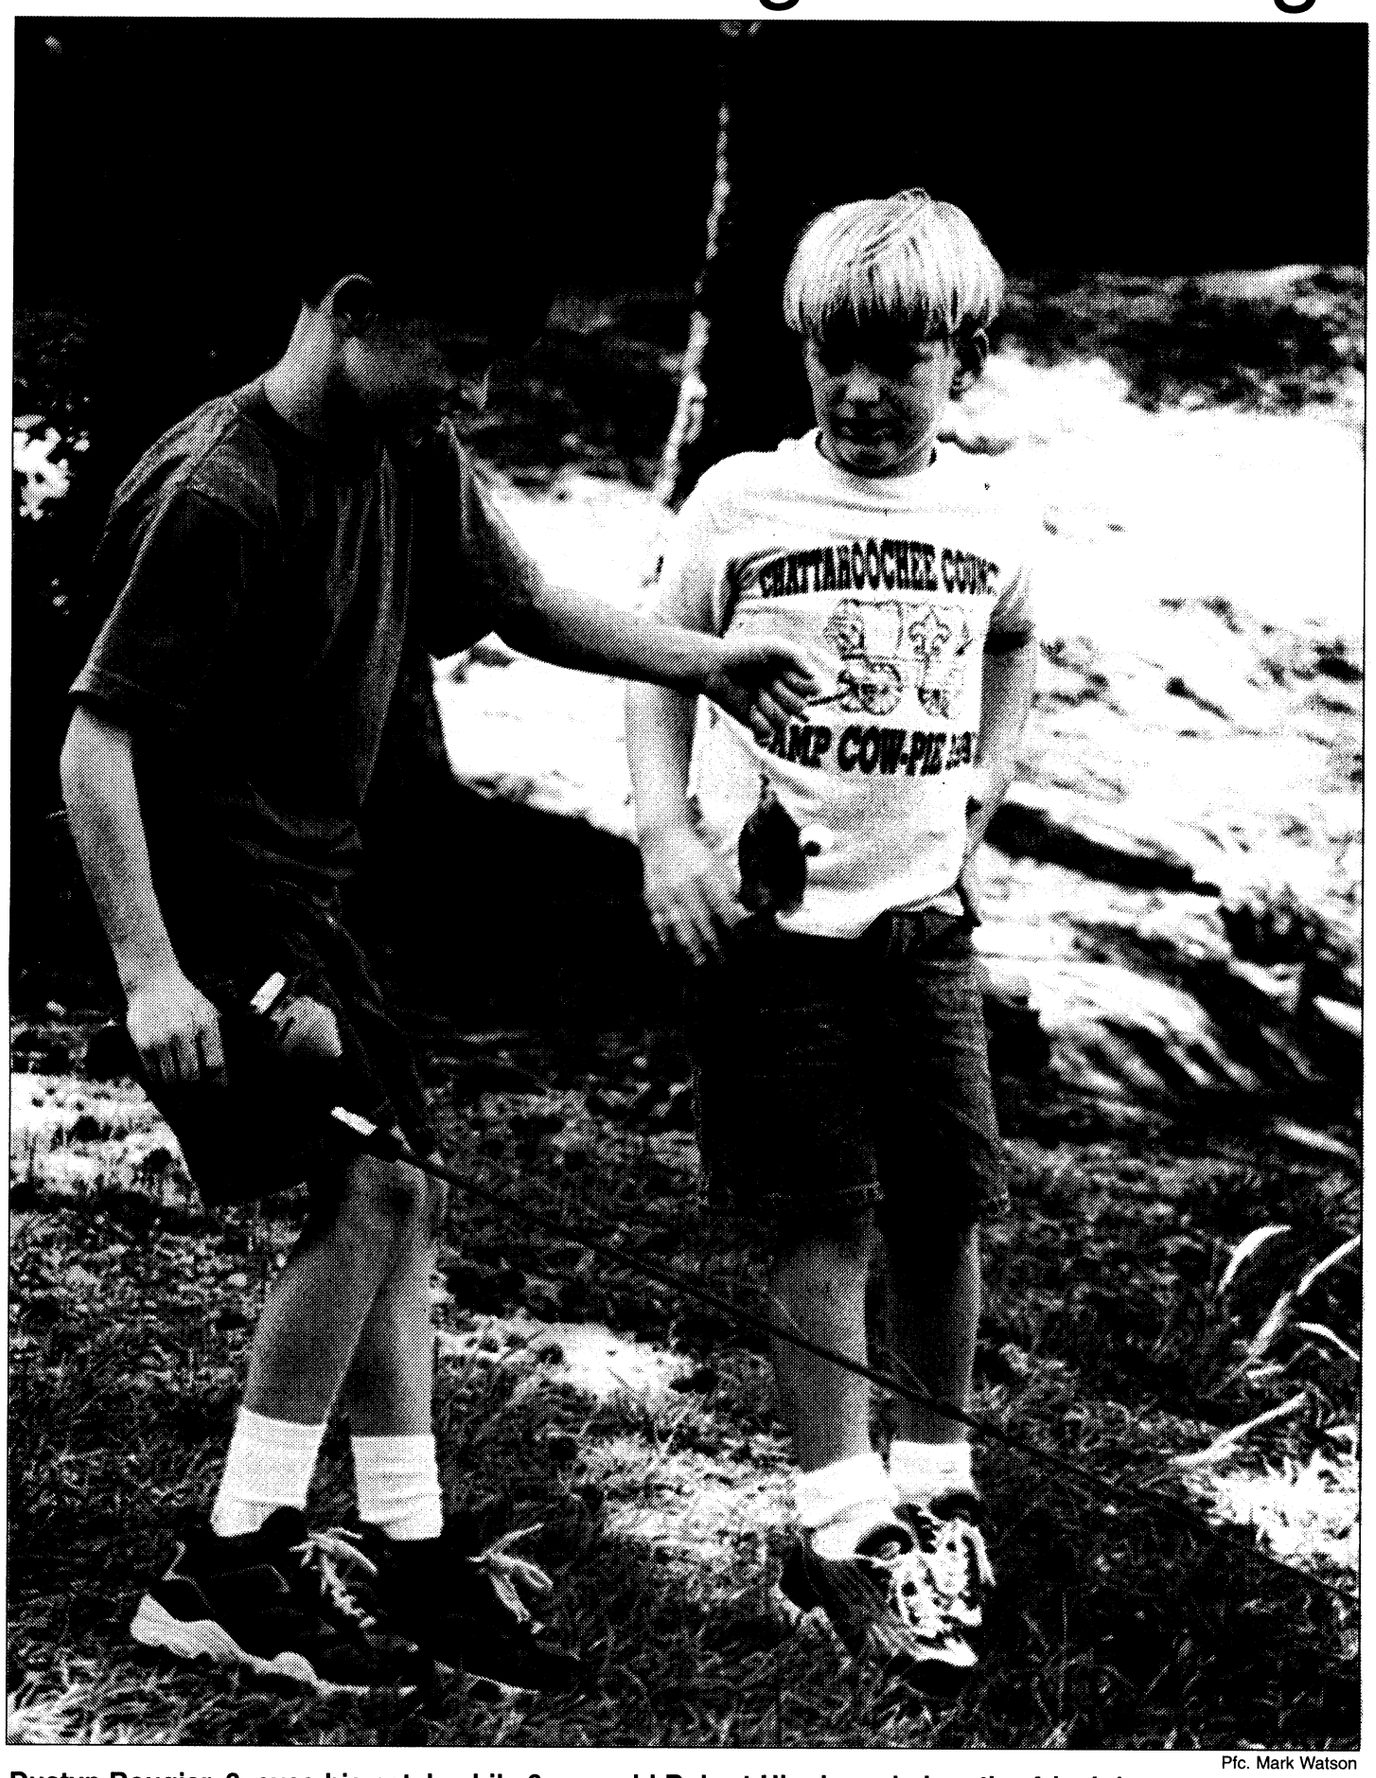
Army may offer vision correction to dependents

Staff Sgt. Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — DoD officials are looking into the possibility of offering laser eye surgery to military beneficiaries.

Several studies are under way to determine if laser vision correction stands up to the rigors of military life, said Dr. John Mazzuchi, deputy assistant secretary of defense (health affairs) for clinical and program policy.

"Our first concern is for the active-duty force," Mazzuchi said. "If this method works for them, the eye is stable over time, and the military environment doesn't harm them, then I think this is something we will do for them as a readiness issue."



He said officials will probably relook the issue in two to three years, when preliminary data are available from ongoing studies. New DoD policy allows individuals who have had laser vision surgery to obtain a medical waiver before joining the military; previously they were barred altogether.

Providing the service to family members is a different ball game. While laser eye surgery might become a readiness issue for the active duty force, Mazzuchi said, it would be elective cosmetic surgery for others.

Laser eye surgery might be beneficial, but doing purely cosmetic procedures means having

Scouts reel in 'big one' during fishing derby

Cub Scouts from Pack 54 of the Fort Benning Scouting district gathered Saturday morning to try their luck at fishing in Russ Pond for the annual Boy Scout Fishing Derby.

While the Georgia heat and other summer activities kept most Scouts away, Troop 41's Scoutmaster, Charles Ingram, who was also the derby's coordinator, was able to gather seven fishermen with a wide range of experience for the derby.

Dustyn Rougier, 8, Columbus, said he was confident that he would win the tournament with his knowledge and experience.

"I have a few things that will trick the fish," he said as he pulled out his tackle box to show fellow Cub Scout Braddrick Sanders his assortment of lures.

Although not as confident as Rougier, Sanders thought he would catch his fair share with a pole four times his height.

After a brief discussion of their strategies, the two went their separate ways to try to hook into the "big one."

The derby was held for the Scouts in the Fort Benning district, but only one Scout pack showed, Ingram said.

"We get all the units together to see who is the best fisherman," he said. "The idea is to teach them how to fish, how to bait their hooks and how to take the fish off.

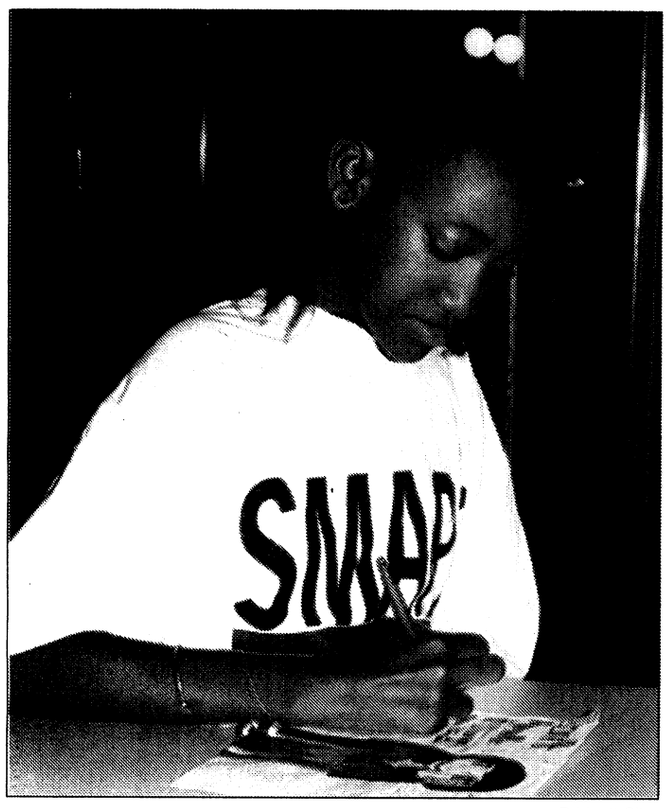
"They really have a good time when they are fishing," he said.

More than teaching the Scouts how to fish, Dan Menefee, the district chairman, said the Scouts learn patience and discipline.

"It is great for them to come out and interact with the parent volunteers and with each other," Menefee said. "It gives them a chance to be outdoors instead of watching TV or playing video games. They have the opportunity to work in harmony and that is what Scouting is all about.

"More than that this gives them something they can pass along," he said.

Although most of the Scouts had never fished before, the adults were able to give the youths help.



"For a lot of the Scouts, this is the first time they have ever fished," he said. "Like James (Rose). He was catching the trees, but I worked with him for a little bit, and then he caught a fish."

The fish Rose pulled out of the pond was a 15-ounce catfish, which earned him second place in the big fish category.

Another newcomer to the sport was 6-year-old Robert Higgins.

"I hope I get him," he said as the bobber attached to his line began to move away from the bank and then back again. "I hope he is as big as a shark," he

Clubs unite to teach students SMART moves

Program helps keep youth off drugs, alcohol

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Boys' and Girls' Clubs of Columbus and Phenix City have united with Fort Benning's Youth Services to teach middle schoolers some SMART moves this summer.

Fifteen Fort Benning youths between the ages of 11 and 15 are participating in a nationally acclaimed awareness and prevention program called SMART Moves — Skills Mastery And Resistance Training. The program, sponsored by Boys' and Girls' Clubs nationwide, is designed to help young people avoid five of the most immediate threats to their well-being: alcohol, tobacco, other drugs, teen pregnancy, HIV and AIDS.

Based on research and best practices from prevention specialist across the nation, the SMART Moves curriculum has been used in schools and youth organizations throughout the country for more than a decade, but this is the first time it has been offered on Fort Benning.

Betty King, community service coordinator for the Boys' and Girls' Clubs of Columbus and Phenix City, calls the program a "nontraditional, thematic approach to teaching drug prevention and abstinence."

The theme of this summer's 10-week program is "Fun with a purpose," and King said it is the fun that helps the program accomplish its real purpose.

"The whole idea is to get them to come to the meetings because they're fun. That's their motivation," she said. "Then we have the opportunity to expose them to our comprehensive curriculum about drugs, alcohol and early teen pregnancy."

> "If someone tries to persuade me to do something I shouldn't, I'll just tell them 'I'm not down with that, man, I don't have time to go to jail, I don't want to be addicted, and I don't want to die over drugs.'"

The fun started in June when King began meeting with participants every Tuesday for one hour. At first, she said, only a handful of YS members attended, but as the word spread, more and more youth responded to the program.

"We have refreshments and guest speakers and field trips, but at first it was all about getting acquainted and feeling comfortable with each other so we could share ideas and information about these topics," King said. "It took us a while, but now we've got a great group involved, and we've formed a good relationship."

King said the informal structure and relaxed atmosphere of the program allows the participants to talk about problems or ask questions they might

Q: There was a note on the bottom of my last LES that said I may be entitled to a refund if I bought an insurance policy from American Fidelity Life Insurance. Can you tell me what this is all about?

A: In 1997 the Florida Department of Insurance began receiving complaints from service members who had been doing business with American Fidelity Life Insurance Company and Trans World Assurance Company.

These insurance companies were targeting military personnel in a life insurance sales scheme. They were selling life insurance policies as savings plans.

The Florida Attorney General and Insurance Commissioner conducted an investigation and finally reached settlements with two companies Feb. 17.

These settlements entitled service members who purchased one of these insurance policies to file a claim for compensation (a refund).

If you are a Florida resident who purchased a "Flexible Dollar Builder" life insurance policy from American Fidelity Life Insurance or Trans World Assurance Company between 1980 and 1999, you are entitled to a refund.

It does not require you to have been stationed in Florida, or to have lived there when the policy was bought. It simply means that your LES must have stated that Florida was your resident state at the time you purchased your policy.

To receive your refund, you must write a letter to the appropriate insurance company stating that the agent who sold you the policy misrepresented the policy as a savings plan. In the letter you should request a claims form packet. The letter should be sent to one of the addresses below (depending on which insurer you used):

• Trans World Assurance Co., 885 South El Camino Rea, San Mateo, CA 94402, (605) 348-2300

• American Fidelity Life Insurance Co., Attention: Vicky Webb, 4060 Barrancas Avenue, Pensacola, FL 32507, (850) 456-7401

It should take three to four weeks for you to receive the claims form packet. Once you receive the packet, you must fill out the enclosed forms and submit them to the appropriate insurance company before Feb. 19, 2001.

The refund will be mailed to you once the claims form has been processed.

For more information about the scheme or settlements, you can call the State of Florida's insurance hotline at (800) 342-2762. They will need to record the date of purchase, as well as your policy number, so make sure you have the policy with you when you call.

If you need assistance filling out the claims form, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and make an appointment to meet with an attorney. Be sure to bring all of the paperwork with you for your scheduled appointment.

not feel comfortable addressing in a classroom setting.

"They have a lot of input and make a lot of decisions about what activities we'll do. Some of them have displayed genuine leadership qualities right off the bat," she said. "These are the ones we call 'peer leaders.' They've shown themselves to be responsible and reliable, and they're getting the word out to other kids."

With King's guidance, the peer leaders often initiate discussions about the various issues teens face. She offers viable solutions to help them deal with peer pressure and avoid unhealthy behavior as well as information about personal hygiene and etiquette.

"It's about their self-confidence. If they feel good about themselves and know how to behave properly in a social setting, they're more confident in themselves, feel more self-worth and are better able to resist the pressures they face," she said.

Cameron Murdoch said the program has given him the confidence to resist peer pressure.

"I know I don't want to do anything that will harm my body," the 12-year-old said. "If someone tries to persuade me to do something I shouldn't, I'll just tell them, 'I'm not down with that, man. I don't have time to go to jail. I don't want to be addicted, and I don't want to die over drugs.'"

All SMART Moves participants were required to take a pre-test before beginning the program to determine how much they knew about each subject addressed during the program. At the end of the summer, they will again be tested to evaluate the success of the program.

"We're very excited about being here on Fort Benning and we want to make this program work, not only for these kids, but so we'll be invited back again to reach more and more kids," King said.

Restrictions: Fort Benning is still under water restrictions. All outdoor watering must be done by hand and on the post-mandated days. Sprinklers are prohibited.

Many residents are unaware of the existence of the Cooperative Extension Office, let alone the benefits and services the office supplies.

The Cooperative Extension Service covers the Muscogee and Chattahoochee Counties. Fort Benning is included in the area serviced by the office.

The objective of the extension service is to educate the community on environmental and horticulture issues. There are numerous pamphlets and materials available at the extension office on a variety of subjects concerning your lawn and garden.

The office provides various services to the community as well as educational material. These services include soil testing, disease and pest analysis and plant identification. The office also provides recommendations for horticulture chemicals and plant selection.

In addition to the above mentioned services, the extension office offers seminars and programs. One time seminars concerning subjects such as lawn care or crop maintenance are available, as are more extensive programs like the Master Gardener program.

Although not every resident or employee on Fort Benning may need the services offered, any concerns for the environment can be addressed to the extension office.

Any questions involving horticulture, including ornamental or agricultural, can be answered at the office.

Karl Pearson is the Columbus Extension Agent.

He has a bachelor's degree in agriculture science and a masters of education degree in agriculture extension in international development.

The Columbus Cooperative Extension Office is located on the ground floor of the Columbus Government Center.

The office hours are from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. The phone number is 653-4200.

Editor's note: Jennifer White is a student at Columbus State University and enrolled in the Columbus Cooperative Extension Service's Master Gardner Program.

Community LIfe Mayors' Program

The hot issue right now is speeding in the housing areas. School's out and drivers need to slow down. Children are busy playing and not looking for cars.

Also, as a reminder, post regulation prohibits children who are younger than 6 years old to be outside without parental supervision.

Residents who have an outside dog need to make sure their pet has shade and water.

Dogs get hot, thirsty and hungry just like humans and can also suffer from such things as heat stroke. If anyone sees a case of neglect or abuse, they should call their community life NCO.

During the recent storms a number of tree branches fell.

If anyone has a branch that is too large to remove, call the Directorate of Public Works and they will remove it.

The Community Life Mayors' Program is going strong and better than ever.

However, there are still two empty spots — one for a vice mayor for West Main Post and vice mayor for Custer Terrace.

If interested, call Jodie Bowers at 685-0030.

Vaccine: Becomes necessary for school-aged children

"You don't want to give the vaccine if there is a chance of pregnancy," Knight said.

The varicella shots cost the hospital about $30 a dose; blood tests can run twice that because they must be sent to a lab in Texas, Knight said.

It is important for parents to take good care of their children's shot records so shots will not have to be repeated, a process that can be painful for the child and expensive for the medical system, Knight said.

It costs Martin Army Hospital and other military treatment facilities about $218 a person for a complete series of immunizations, Knight said.

"That is the military cost, not what it would be in the civilian sector," he said.

"The Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices looks at chicken pox as a preventable disease, with a safe and effective vaccine," Alsip said.

For any dual working couple, there is the economic benefit of not having to miss work to stay home with a sick child.

At Fort Benning, there is also the issue of readiness if one parent has to stay home with a child who can not go to school or child care, said Capt. James Boxmeyer, administrator of the Department of Family Practice and Community Medicine.

Individuals entering the Army who can not prove immunity are given the varicella vaccine and less than 3 percent require the shot at Fort Benning, Boxmeyer said.

Students already enrolled in Georgia schools are OK for now. " But by the fall 2001, they are going to have to provide proof of immunity or get the vaccine," Alsip said.

Other immunization changes may be enacted by states across the country on the advice of the national health organizations.

"The Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices has recently recommended to include young children in their recommendations for the pneumococcal vaccine, commonly known as the pneumonia shot," Alsip said.

"The idea is not necessarily to simply prevent pneumonia in children, but also to prevent one of the most common causes of bacterial meningitis in infants and children. The thought is to prevent what could be a life-threatening disease."

The increasing number of vaccines being recommended has raised questions the medical community will have to address, Alsip said.

"What is going to be the limit and how are the immunizations going to be delivered?" he said. "The thought is to try to combine more and reduce the number of injections.

"Immunization has been the single greatest factor in reducing deaths due to infectious disease — more than any other major medical development," Alsip said.

Knight encourages parents to bring children's shot and medical records to the clinics and to prepare older children by discussing what will happen.

"It's not a good idea to surprise them," he said.

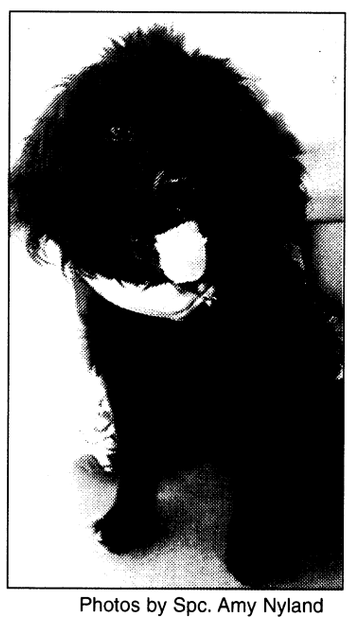
to take care of all medical necessities first, he said. "For the near future, at least, I think this is not going to become a covered benefit."

The military healthcare system already has to struggle to operate within its budget, he explained. However, he added, that doesn't necessarily mean these laser procedures would be out of reach of military beneficiaries.

Under current regulations, outpatient surgical procedures would cost about $270 per day in military medical treatment facilities, he said. So, that would be the cost of a 15-minute laser operation — considerably cheaper than the $4,000 to $6,000 charged by civilian providers.

"We don't want to deny a new medical breakthrough to our beneficiaries, but when it's purely cosmetic and not medically necessary, we can't make it available at no cost," he said.

Mazzuchi said the military keeps tabs on emerging medical technologies for several reasons. For one, it's the best thing to do for DoD beneficiaries. For another, an exciting atmosphere helps attract quality medical professionals.



"We want to attract and retain the best-quality medical people the country has to offer. One of the best ways to do that is with really good training programs and with exciting medicine," Mazzuchi said. "Cutting-edge medicine attracts the best and keeps the best."

He said whether or not DoD is interested in a certain procedure or technology depends somewhat on the readiness implications of the procedure. "One of the reasons laser eye surgery is so important to us is that it may free us from having to rely on glasses," Mazzuchi said. "That has tremendous implications for military operations."

However, the desire for cutting-edge techniques has to be balanced with ever-present fiscal constraints. "The taxpayers expect us to spend their money wisely," he said.

But the main driving force behind exploring new medical breakthroughs is to provide quality medical care for DoD beneficiaries. "We believe the people who serve their country ought to have top-quality medical care," Mazzuchi said. "We want our healthcare system to be the best healthcare system there is anywhere."

exclaimed then he gave his fishing pole a tug only to have the line raise out of the water with his hook empty.

Although Higgins "missed catching the fish, his persistence and determination paid off when he finally landed a small bream.

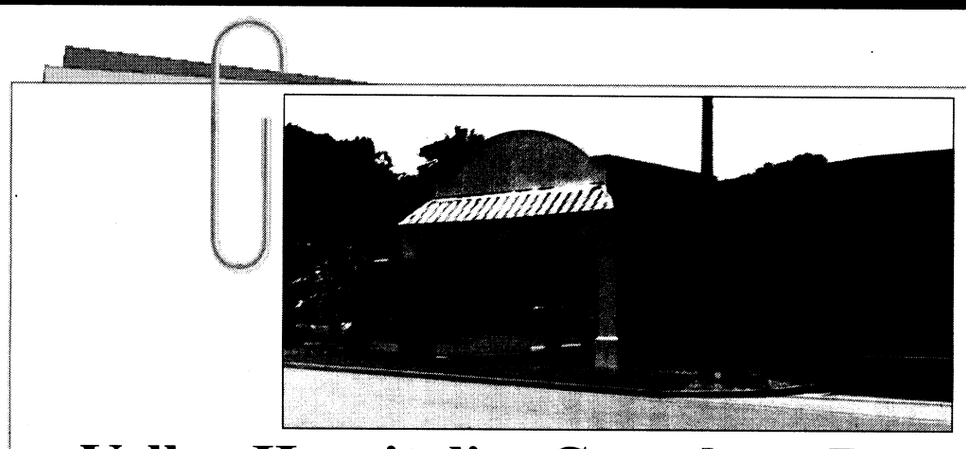
"It was so exciting watching the bobber go around, and then when it went totally under it was real exciting," Higgins said.

With only 15 minutes left until the derby ended, the confident Rougier still had to catch a fish.

The only thing he had caught were some weeds and one small turtle, but as his bobber was pulled under, he began to reel in his only fish of the day — a small bream.

As the derby ended and the fish were tallied, Sanders had pulled out the most fish — five — along with the biggest, a one-pound catfish.

Rose caught the second biggest fish, a 15-ounce catfish. The smallest fish of the day was taken by surprise.



After losing his bait, 10-year-old Marcus Anglin was getting another worm. In the meantime a one-inch-long fish nibbled at the hook and was caught to the surprise of Anglin.

"It is great watching the surprise in their face. The fish they catch make their day and even their week," Menefee said.

Valley Hospitality Completes Renovation of Columbus and Fort Benning Area Econo Lodge Hotel

Columbus, GA, July 10, 2000 - Valley Hospitality Hotel and Food Services Company today announced that it has completed the renovation of the Columbus Econo Lodge at 4483 Victory Drive in Columbus, Ga.

As part of the renovation, improvements were made to the exterior of the 80-room hotel, including the facade of the building, parking area driveway, grounds, and paint color. In addition, the hotel made enhancements to the property's common areas, such as deluxe continental breakfast area added, lobby re-designed to be more spacious and comfortable, meeting room with full kitchen and bathroom, fitness room, guest laundry facility and pool area.

The guest rooms now have new bedding, vanities, bathtubs, carpet, drapery, walls resurfaced, new armoires, credenzas, televisions, pay per view movies, microwaves and refrigerators, pictures and new bedspreads. The Columbus hotel, which was purchased by Valley Hospitality October 16th, 1999, completed the renovation in June.

Brian Plemmons, President of Valley Hospitality expressed that, "With these improvements to the property that it would offer the best and most convenient hotel to Fort Benning. It is our goal to be the best Hotel offered to the many visitors to Fort Benning. We are also proud to be a part of the renovation process of Victory Drive and South Columbus, We are confident that each guest will receive an excellent experience at the Fort Benning Econo Lodge."

YOU CAN

Trust in God, live in faith in midst of fears

Chaplain (Capt.) Stan Vaughan
3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

reflections

There is an old saying that goes something like this: "Left-handed people are the only ones in their right mind."

Physiological science confirms this notion. God, in his wisdom, placed the function of the left hand in the right hemisphere of the brain. That is, the right side of the brain controls any motor skill on the left side of the body.

Depending on your geographical location on this globe, left-handed people seem to be a minority. I write this based on experience and observation more than on the most recent census. Okay, humor me for the sake of this article.

Suppose that, in fact, left handers are the only ones in their right mind. And those in their right mind are the ones who are mentally healthy. And, those who are mentally healthy exercise good judgment.

It follows that if one exercises good judgment, then he does what is right. Hence, left-handed people do what is right and that places them in the minority. (I realize this is rough, but stay with me.)

In the Scripture, in I Kings 18 and 19, we read of God's prophet Elijah.

Elijah was sent by God to confront Ahab, the King of Israel. During this encounter, Elijah did exactly as the Lord instructed him. He witnessed the miraculous and awesome power of God.

As a result of Elijah's faithful obedience, Jezebel put a price on his head and promised to kill him. The prophet went from faithful to fearful in a matter of moments. He ran and hid. God continued to take care of Elijah even in his flight.

When asked by God about his location, Elijah reminds God of his past faithful service, and that he is "the only one left" and about to be killed as well (I Kings 19:4). In his mind, Elijah had done what was right, which made him "left" (NIV).

Doing what is right, and I will call that doing God's will, may put us in the position of being "left."

That is a lonely place to be. The comfort we find in admitting our fears to God is to be reminded that God's resources and scope are much greater than our limited perspective. God is far greater than our fears, our imperfections and shortcomings and our sometimes-weakened faith.

In the animated movie, The Lion King, Mufasa encourages young Simba to overcome his fear by remembering who he is, rightful heir to the throne, Mufasa's son.

As children of God, we read these words of promise to a persecuted community of faith, a group of left-handers, "Never will I leave you; never will I forsake you." So we can say with confidence, "the Lord is my helper; I will not be afraid. What can man do to me?" (Hebrews 13:5)

Our calling by God is to trust him in all of life, both when we are faithful and when we are fearful. Living by faith is going the right thing.

Doing the right thing flows from sound judgment. To execute sound judgment is to be in our right mind. And to be in your right mind makes you left-handed.

Tips offer comfort during ordeals

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Chaplain Family Life Training Program

When a person experiences the death of a loved one through illness, accident or miscarriage, many people do not know what to say or how to comfort those who are grieving.

Here are some practical tips for comforting those who mourn.

• Be a listener. Your very presence is therapeutic. Don't be afraid of silence.

• Empower the mourner. Let them make as many decisions as possible, but don't demand an immediate response.

Don't assume that they should be left out of the decision-making process. Otherwise, they may resent you for making the decisions for them.

• Let them express their emotions. Crying is cleansing to the body.

Koop

Anger is a normal response. Don't say things like, "You've got to pull yourself together," "Men don't cry," or "The funeral's over, and you've got to get on with your life."

• Help them focus on what they need to do rather than why the death occurred.

There are no satisfying answers to death. Refrain from platitudes such as, "It was her time to die," "Every cloud has a silver lining" or "God needed him in heaven."

• Encourage them to talk about their loved one. Tell them what you admired about the deceased. If you didn't know the deceased well, say something like, "I didn't get the opportunity to know your loved one. What do you admire most about him or her? How did you two first meet?"

• Offer your services. If you are one of the first to comfort the bereaved, make a list of those who called on the phone or visited and make a list of those who offered to help.

Most people offer help, but only generally. Lawns need to be mowed and raked, cars need to be washed, food needs to be purchased and prepared, lodging is needed for out-of-town relatives, the house needs to be cleaned, the dog needs to be walked, thank-yous need to be written and the list goes on.

Yet remember to let the mourner select from the offers who will do what.

Help with the grieving process is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Training Program at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Soldiers shoot for Olympic dreams

Marksmanship Unit boasts shooters on way to gold

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

A promise to a dying grandfather that one day he would make it to the Olympics is about to come true for Bill Keever as he, along with nine other Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, prepares to represent the United States and the Army at the 2000 Olympic games Sept. 23-Oct. 1 in Sydney, Australia.

The other Soldiers who earned slots on the team are: Glenn Dubis, a three-time Olympian; James Graves, a two-time Olympian; former Olympian Michael Anti; former Olympian Thomas Tamas; former Olympian Kenneth Johnson; Lance Dement; Jason Parker Michael Schmidt and Daryl Szarenski.

Graves, Keever and Schmidt, the shotgunners, are continuing their training here while the rifle and pistol shooters of the Olympic team are competing at the World Military Shooting Championships in Ankara, Turkey, which is competition for rifle and pistol shooters only.

"It has always been a dream of mine to compete in the Olympics," Keever said. "It is probably one of the most important things that has ever happened to my life," he said.

Keever's Olympic opportunity began at the final Olympic Selection Match in Atlanta where he competed in the double trap event June 21-July 1.

"Going into the last round I was four targets behind, and I needed to get five to make the team," he said. "When I got done everyone knew I made the team," he said. "I didn't keep track of my score, but when I turned around Sergeant Graves was running toward me with his arms open. He hugged me along with the rest of the team and told me I made the team.

"It was really overwhelming," he said. "In fact I was wondering if they were playing a joke on me," but it was no joke, Keever beat the fourth place shooter by only four or five targets, he said.

Although he has been to the Olympics before Graves said he was still in awe.

Having the opportunity to compete in the Olympics is a great feeling, he said.

"It is the greatest feeling to represent the country and the Army," Graves said. "It still hasn't hit me that I made the team again.

"It is a great feeling to make the team, said Graves, the two-time skeet Olympian."

"The feeling hasn't changed since the first time I made it to the Olympics," he said. "I still get pumped up. Not to many people have the opportunity to say they've competed in the Olympics, especially not three times."

As a child Graves said he watched the Olympics on TV but never thought he would participate.

"It is incredibly exhilarating to make the team. You really don't realize (the magnitude of it) until you walk into the stadium. All your emotions take over and it is very exciting," Graves said.

Both Keever and Graves, who compete in shotgun events, were taught to shoot by their dads and said they honed their skills as they grew up shooting.

"The funny thing is, is that I was scared of guns when I was a child, but I finally wanted to try and found out I was pretty good at shooting," Keever said.

Now he has received recognition as a four-time All-American and winner of 13 Grand American trophies. He was also a member of the the Junior Olympics team.

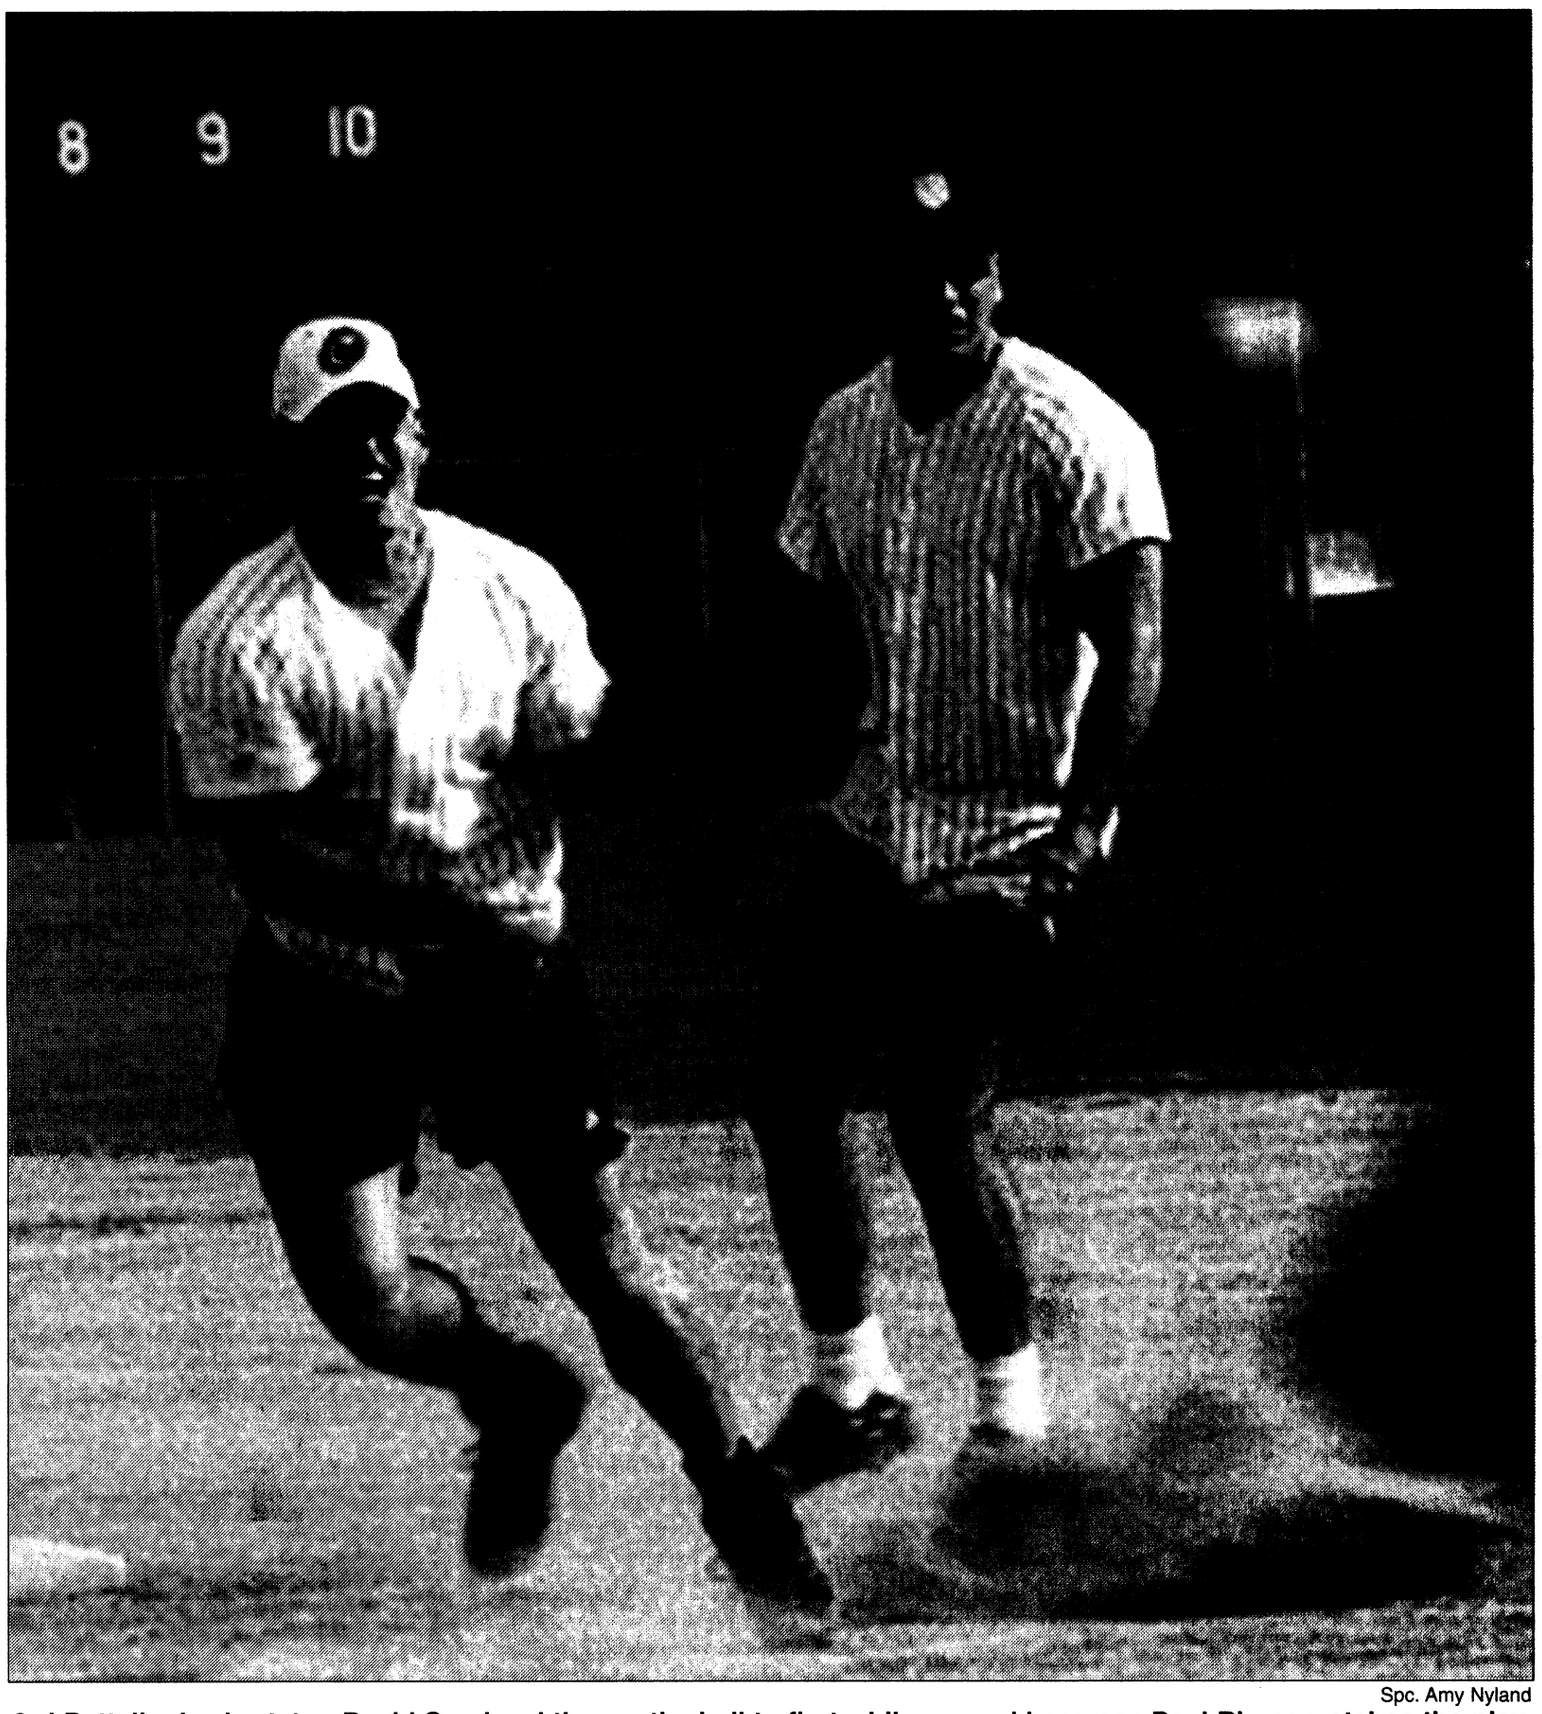
Shooters travel to Worlds

Sharpshooters compete in Turkey

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters from around the military who won slots on the 2000 Shooting Team left July 14 to compete at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire Shooting Championships in Ankara, Turkey. CISM, the World Military Shooting Championships, consists of men's and women's rifle and pistol competitions and was held July 17-Wednesday. Approximately 50 countries send about 650 shooters to compete for the World Military Shooting Championship Trophy.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit hosted the U.S. CISM Team Selection Matches in May and 16 shooters won a slot on the U.S. CISM Shooting Team, which is made up of five male and three female rifle shooters and five male and three female pistol shooters.



USAMU rifle shooters were the only competitors at the men's rifle trials thus taking every slot on the team. The CISM male rifle shooters are Stephen C. Goff, Robert E. Harbison, Glenn A. Dubis, Eric A. Uptagrafft and Troy A. Bassham. The CISM rifle shooters will compete in 300-meter, three-position competitions with standard rifles shooting both rapid- and slow-fire matches. Michael E. Anti and Thomas A. Tamas both made the CISM Team but will not be competing because they are training for the Olympics. Dubis, a four-time Olympian, is the only 2000 Olympian shooting in CISM this year.

"Dubis has won the CISM Rifle Championship more times than everyone else in the world combined," Harbison said, the U.S. CISM Team captain. "They call the championship trophy the 'Dubis Trophy' because his name is on it so many times."

The female rifle shooters are Kimberly N. Howe, U.S. Air Force's Deena Wigger, who trains with USAMU, and the U.S. Military Academy's Kimberly Pienkowski. They will compete in the Sport Rifle Championships, an Olympic-style three-position match, as well as the English match, shot in the prone position.

The men's CISM Pistol Team is made up of Steven M. King and Carl W. Trompeter II, the Air Force's David Vondrak, and the Marine's Brian Poe and Dexter Conrad. Daryl L. Szarenski, who made the team, will not compete at CISM as he is training as a member of the 2000 U.S. Olympic Team in Free Pistol. The men's pistol team

3rd Bn. defeats Agents

Errors and confusion were the name of the game for the "Free Agents" of the 29th Infantry Regiment when they were blasted away by the 11th Infantry Regiment, 18-8, during softball play on Gowdy Field Monday.

After going four innings without a single run, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Inf. Regt., managed to step up the heat in the last two innings, but still couldn't even the score against the 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt.'s weighty lead.

The Free Agents immediately set the stage for the rest of the game during the first inning after a succession of infield errors allowed the 3rd Bn. to nail a five run lead their first turn at bat.

It looked as though the Free Agents might answer back with a tough offense when the first two batters secured a place on base with a double and a single hit. However, an out on third and two pop flies stifled any chance of an early come back and put the score at 5-0 in the bottom of the first inning.

The second and third innings proved to be uneventful as both teams went back and forth with shallow infield hits and base outs. 3rd Bn. managed to keep the lead strong with a score of 6-0 at the bottom of the third.

Before the stagnant play had a chance to get too foul, the 3rd Bn. spiced up the game by sending its shortstop David Sandoval to the

'76ers beat Bulls in YS play

Youth hoopsters hit hardwood, battle out second game of season

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

The hard driving and sure shooting of '76ers' forward Bradley Taylor was the key to their 6-2 victory over the Bulls in the Youth Services' 6- to 7-year-old basketball game Tuesday at the YS gym.

Using a hard-hitting defense and the fast break to their advantage, the '76ers were able to keep the Bulls from scoring until the last quarter.

The game started off with a bang as Taylor stole the ball and drove to his basket. Although he missed the shot, his breakaway started a frenzy in both his team and the crowd.

Several drives later Taylor was able to sink the first basket of the game.

After the second quarter started, the ball was kept on the Bulls' side of the court as the '76ers dominated the game and created many turnovers.

Another basket was made when Taylor drove down the court all by himself giving his team a 4-0 lead at halftime.

With the second half under way the Bulls turned over a new leaf — one of a stronger defense.

The Bulls kept better control of the ball and during one of their drives, guard Deivan Washington, was able to sink his team's only basket and stopping the possible shutout.

A short while later, Taylor answered with the last basket of the game.

After the game both coaches said their teams played very well.

"Our team did a great job," said Bulls coach. "Everyone really did a good job."

Our team is coming along very well too, Charlie Conners, the Bulls coach said.

"They are now understanding and beginning to pass well," Conners said. "We had a few key players missing, but Taylor and Charlie Conner really were playing well tonight.

"We still need to work on getting more of the player involved and then we'll be doing real well," Conners said.

Another game was played Tuesday. It was between the Lakers and the Guess.

The Lakers dominated the game and emerged victorious 12-0, with Andontis Shelto scoring six points.

The next YS basketball game will be at 5 p.m. Tuesday in the YS gym.

Plains offers taste of South

Bridgett Siter

outdoor corner

There's just something about small-town living that appeals to the country gal in me.

When I leave the bright lights and big city behind, even for a day, I get reconnected to the soul within me that enjoys the slower pace and simple tastes of small-town folk.

Plains, Ga., is just that, the epitome of all that's wholesome and simple in the deep South — a town that reminds you of the forgotten pleasures of front porches, rocking chairs and ice-cold sweet tea.

On a recent visit to Sayers Memorial Library, my daughter picked up a copy of The Life of Jimmy Carter, which introduced her to our nation's 39th president and the little community where he grew up about 40 miles southeast of here.

Always on the lookout for an inexpensive place to entertain and educate the kids, I decided Plains was a great place to spend a afternoon on a hot July day. Our first stop was the town welcome center where we picked up a map and an information packet to aid us on our self-guided tour. And though the tour encompassed no more than eight miles, there was plenty to see and do that interested the whole family.

Since fast food hasn't come to Plains yet, we stopped at Scarlett's, a family-owned restaurant on the town's Main Street and enjoyed hot sandwiches served with a side order of chips and a genuine Southern hospitality.

Then we went next door to the Peanut Emporium and sampled some of Plains' finest — peanuts — roasted, toasted, salted, boiled, brittled and baked.

You name it — they've got it, as long as it's made from peanuts. We left with a bag full of assorted peanuts and drove just down the street to Plains High School. Built in 1921, the school where Jimmy and Rosalynn Carter spent their entire academic careers, from first grade to graduation, still stands as a tribute to fine architecture and strong Southern education.

It's now a museum, and the kids enjoyed touring the classrooms and speculating about the students who once haunted it's hallowed halls, particularly the young man who would one day be president. After learning a little about Jimmy Carter, the scholar, we headed over to the Plains Railroad Depot to learn about Jimmy Carter, the politician.The only available public building with an indoor toilet in 1976, the depot was the logical choice for locating Carter's hometown headquarters during the presidential campaign.

It's charmingly primitive and a tribute to the home-grown resourcefulness that took a small-town peanut farmer from rural Georgia to Washington, D.C. There were 27 sites on the self-guided tour and plenty of photo opportunities.

The kids especially liked the haunted house, built in 1850 and rented by the Carters in 1955. Just down the road is the boyhood home where a very young Jimmy first learned to plant and farm.

Not much older than Amy, the young daughter who skipped along Pennsylvania Avenue with her mom and dad on inauguration day, 1977, I still remember the headlines, the jokes and the general hysteria that surrounded the campaign and subsequent election of a "nobody from nowhere" who won world favor with his Lincoln-like persona and Southern democratic values.

I enjoyed visiting the area and learning about the people who have influenced Carter's life for more than 70 years. And I was pleasantly surprised this simple Southern town made the living history lesson fun for the kids, who made one "simple" request as we headed back north toward the Fort Benning — "Can we come back again sometime, Mom?"

Soldiers baseball teams meet: Bombers lose

Capt. Ed Gawlik
3rd Battalion, (OCS) 11th Infantry Regiment

The first game of Saturday's doubleheader came down to the wire in the first meeting this season between the two Soldier's Baseball Association teams, the Cannons and the Bombers, and ended in a Cannons win, 4-3.

Down two runs early in the game, the Cannons came back to win the first game behind the pitching of starter Jason Holmes, C Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, and reliever Robert Carlisle, 1st Battalion, (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment.

The Cannons' coupled clutch hitting with aggressive base-running to produce two runs in the bottom of the sixth to go ahead of the Bombers.

In the top of the seventh inning, the Bombers staged a late rally but were only able to produce one run against the Cannons' Carlisle, who got the save.

The starters, Holmes (Cannons) and Jeremy Cook (Bombers) each gave up only four hits and struck-out eight by changing speeds and working the ball inside and out on the batters.

In the second game it became a little one-sided as the Cannons took an early lead and continued to build upon it throughout the game.

The starter for the Cannons in the second game was Orlando Vega-Torres B Co., 203rd Forward Support Bn., 3rd Brigade, who pitched four scoreless, no-hit innings while striking out five.

Ed Perez, 29th Inf. Regt., came in the top of the fifth to pitch, closing out the side on no hits and one strike.

The final score of the second game was 17-0.

Several players on the Cannons had multiple hits and RBIs in their win over the Bombers. The next time the two will face each other will be the final game of the season before the playoffs begin. The game will be played at 1 p.m. Aug. 19 at Spencer High School.

Olympians: Make most of hidden talent

In 1999 Keever was the Zone 3 Double Trap Champion as well as the Illinois State Double Trap Champion, and in 1997 he was the Ohio State Double Trap Champion.

Graves said hidden talents are in everybody, and all it takes is finding what that talent is.

"Don't ever give up," he said. "Once you find that talent, hold onto it and don't ever give it up." That is how Olympians are made, he said.

Graves said his talent was discovered by the Army, and he was recruited solely on the intent to join the marksmanship unit.

"I really owe my success to the Army and the marksmanship unit," he said. "I don't think I could have ever made it without them."

Now he has several titles under his belt including the 1998 World Championships Bronze Medal, 1997 Army Male Athlete of the year and USA Shooting Male Shooter of the year. In 1997 he was the World Championship Skeet gold medalist and in the same year he won the silver medal at the World Cup Finals.

Shooters: Face strong competition will shoot in the Center Fire and Military Rapid Fire Championships.

On the women's CISM Pistol Team are Rhonda L. Bright and Rene D. Ayala of the USAMU and Sandra Utasy.

They will compete in the Sport Pistol Championships, shooting .22-caliber pistols at targets 25 meters away.

"We have the strongest team that we've fielded in several years," Harbison said. "Several of the services are well represented in this Department of Defense wide Team."

Game: Brings out best in players

bag with two outs and bases loaded. Sandoval didn't succumb to the pressure and cracked the ball to far right field netting himself a grand slam and bringing the score to 10-0 at the top of the third.

The errors kept coming for the Free Agents when third baseman Spencer Yerxa hit a prospective homerun but failed to tag second and was outed.

The next two batters also failed to make any progress and play was once again turned over to the 3rd Bn. After pitcher Eric Hare and first baseman Chuck McGarry secured their spots on base, catcher Jose Boria was able to bring both runners in with his single hit and widen the gap between the scoreless Free Agents

Finally, the Free Agents managed to put a mark on the board when right fielder Michael McMillian sacrificed himself to bring in a runner for a score of 12-1 at the bottom of the fifth.

Sandoval proved to be the game's VIP when he once again stepped up to the plate with bases loaded and delivered a second grand slam bringing his game total to eight points.

The chasm of points between the two teams didn't slow the Free Agents down, and the sixth inning proved to be a turning point after first baseman Enrique Acevedo cracked the ball to right field and brought in three runners.

A double by right center James Dinville secured Acevedo's run and another player was brought in by second baseman John Oakley.

The Free Agents headed into the last inning 10 points behind 3rd Bn. and was able to match the two points scored. However, it didn't prove to be enough and the game ended with a score of 18-8.

Coach for the Free Agents Manny Rodriguez said the team fell short mostly because of bad judgement by the outfielders and not a lot of team cohesion.

He said hopefully the team, which is now 3-3, will be able to make a come back on Wednesday when they play their next game.

Sandoval, 3rd Bn.'s star of the game, chalked the win to nothing more than teamwork

"Teamwork was our strategy of the game, that's why we played so well," he said. "We have positive attitudes and just have fun getting out and hitting the ball."

FAMILY PROGRAM EXCELLENCE...

Army Community Service (ACS) will celebrate its 35th birthday on July 25th, 2000. Fort Benning's excellent community service programs are designed to assist commanders in providing family support services to Soldiers and their families. The following represent some of the Fort Benning ACS accomplishments during the 1999-2000 fiscal year.

Family Advocacy Program (FAP)

The FAP focuses on child and spouse abuse prevention and education. The "First Steps" program has expanded, reaching more than 1200 family members, primarily assisted by 14 trained volunteers. The FAP serviced more than 3,000 Soldiers and family members during 19 pre-deployment briefings. The FAP sponsored the second Domestic Violence Conference in March 1999 for local tri-community (Fort Benning, Columbus, and Phenix City) professionals. The FAP staff now includes a training specialist and Victim Advocate.

Army Emergency Relief (AER)

Army Emergency Relief provides emergency financial assistance in the form of grants and loans to members of the Armed Forces and family members. AER provided $654,147 in loans to 799 clients and $86,738 in grants to 103 clients to assist Soldiers (active duty and retired) and widows of the community. The 1999 Annual AER Campaign received contributions in excess of $178,295.

Family Member Employment Assistance Program (FMEAP)

The FMEAP offers assistance to family members who are seeking employment. It is provided through employment information that includes private sector job bank, personal training development workshops, individual job search assistance, and counseling for skill identification and employment options. In the FY 99 time frame, 667 Soldiers and family members placed in jobs, which resulted in $6.87 million in additional income for military families.

Consumer Affairs/Financial Assistance Program (CAFAP)

The CAFAP ~ offers information, education, and individual counseling, and assistance in consumer issues, financial planning, family budgeting, and debt management matters. During the FY99 period, 1,584 individuals received training in 121 classes. The CAFAP also sponsors consumer workshops, such as the quarterly car-buying seminar. Soldiers/families returned a total of $130,259 to creditors in debt liquidation programs.

Utility Coordination Center (UCC)

The UCC allows newly arriving Soldiers to obtain utility services (water, power, gas, and telephone) at a single location. The UCC in/out processed 6,563 Soldiers and returned $122,054 to the participating utility companies in FY99. The UCC provides the convenience of one-stop utility connections and disconnections. Soldiers with good credit standings are not required to pay deposit to have their utility service initiated.

Relocation Assistance Program (RAP)

During the FY99 time frame, RAP provided relocation information to 5,533 Soldiers; assisted 25 family members in completing citizenship classes; provided Lending Locker assistance to 125 Soldiers and their families; and conducted Newcomer/Spouse Orientations for 375 Soldiers and spouses.

Emergency Food Locker

The ACS Food Locker assisted 224 clients with a two-day supply of emergency food during FY99.
During the holiday season, turkeys were provided to needy Soldiers and military retired families. Food Locker items are made available through the generosity of private organizations, food drives, commissary vendors, and local businesses.

Army Family Team Building (AFTB)

Designed as a survivor course for Army spouses, AFTB is targeted toward new people in the Army, leaders in the community, or anyone interested in updating personal skills or basic knowledge. AFTB, a total volunteer program under the auspices of ACS, celebrated its fifth birthday on December 16, 1999. All AFTB courses and materials are available and free to Soldiers, family members, and DA civilians. During the FY99 time frame, 1,544 individuals participated in AFTB training at Fort Benning.

School Age Services (SAS)

During the summer FY99, the SAS program offered various educational/recreational activities for children. This was at no extra cost to the parents. The SAS Computer Lab instructor designed, implemented and trained staff (CDC, FCC, SAS) on basic computer skills to help meet training requirements. Effective 1 October, the program added the USDA Food Program. This allows for a nutritious breakfast and snack to be served to all children enrolled in the program. A bowling league was implemented in the fall of FY99. Demand increased from one league to two. An ACS Food Drive was set up within the SAS program to donate canned goods to ACS. In FY00, SAS children will volunteer to Christmas Carol around the installation and provide a "Tree of Giving" to give items to the needy. In FY00 the engineers are expected to have completed designs to install an air conditioning unit at Patch Hall.

These types of programs help to improve the quality of life and the well being of Fort
Benning's community.

IDENTIFYING AND REWARDING EXCELLENCE...

Soldiers, family members, and dedicated employees are our reason for existence. MWR stays in touch with patrons' needs, wants, and desires with the aid of the Mystery Shopper Program, comment cards, a new website addition, formal and informal research, and direct interaction.

Mystery Shopper Program

Facilities are shopped anonymously by use of telephone and in-person visits. Customer service elements such as store appearance, courtesy of employees, and quality of product and services are evaluated. The Fort Benning MWR Mystery Shopper Program measures excellence, drives the training program, and provides incentives to employees who deliver superb customer service.

Employee Recognition

Employees demonstrating excellent customer service receive a DA Certificate of Commendation and monetary award, recognition as superb employees of the month, quarter, and year, quarterly CG Breakfast recognition, and recognition at the retreat ceremonies.

Comment Cards

Comment cards are one of the older methods of gathering data; yet still one of the most effective. In FY99 we received over 5,821 comment cards from patrons. The cards are analyzed and many suggestions are implemented into the MWR system. Recently, a Customer Service Report Card was designed to display customer comment ratings for each activity with specific comments to employees shown on the Report Card. The document has proven to be a very beneficial tool for employee feedback (an area identified as weak in our DCA Climate Survey)

Fort Benning MWR Website

Our patrons can now access the Fort Benning MWR from around the globe at http\:www.benningmwr.com. This site provides a world of information, both of a local and national scope, and will serve to gather patrons' feedback from around the world. This site currently receives over 50,000 visits per year.

Marketing Research

The Fort Benning MWR has led the way within Department of Army MWR operations in listening to, and acting upon feedback from Soldiers and their family members. DCA uses a variety of formal and informal research methods to determine objective and scientific based needs of our patrons. The Fort Benning MWR performed its first triennial survey in 1988. Following the 1988 survey, there have been four Triennial Needs Assessments performed and include the 1991, 1994, 1996, 1999 surveys. The 1994 and 1996 assessments were both administered by the Department of the Army Community and Family Support Center while the 1991 and 1999 were performed locally. Historical five-year planning and execution data, coupled with financial results and customer utilization rates, clearly show the wisdom of using formal research in making business based investment decisions.

"Standards of Excellence"

"Standards of Excellence" are written goals for each facility. Each "Standard of Excellence" is placed in common areas for viewing by patrons. "Standards of Excellence" are not limited to just MWR locations, but have been implemented post-side. MWR's "Standards of Excellence" vision is that all customers who visit our facilities leave with assurance that we are friendly, helpful, and appreciative of their business.

Your feedback is essential to the continued excellence of the MWR Program. We sincerely value your comments, and ask that you continue to tell us how we are doing so that we may better serve you.

Responsible Parties With As Little As A Dollar Bill Needed To Make Payments On Over 300 Bank Repossessions, Trades, Lease Terminations And New Vehicles!

Local Auto Dealer Offers "Crazy Money" For Trade-Ins. Lucky Buyers Get Up To 40% Over Book Value!

Due to tremendous storage facility saturation, Bill Heard Chevrolet, has announced a huge $1 Acquisition Sale this week. Jim Franklin, General Sales Manger of Bill Heard Chevrolet says that, "Record repo rates and early lease termination of expensive luxury type vehicles have our banks' storage lots jammed with hot selling sport utilities, vans pickup trucks, Honda, Toyota, Cadillac, Ford, Chevy, Acura inventory. They are quite frankly in a panic sell mode. We think we can help relieve this saturation this weekend. Plus a continued awesome demand for fresh trades by local consumers who can't afford new cars has allowed our buyers to offer "Crazy Money" for trade ins on new or used vehicles."

So,management at Bill Heard Chevrolet, made a decision to pay more for trade-ins during the five day only, $1 Acquisition Sale. During this five day event, Bill Heard Chevrolet, will utilize any and all factory incentives and bank assistance to not only sell cars in inventory but acquire quality trade-ins to keep up with surging used car demand.

Hundreds of vehicles will be on hand for this sale. "Over $5 million worth of inventory will be available during this Acquisition Sale," says Franklin, "including lease returns, program cars, special event vehicles and rental turn-ins, repossessions and the south's largest supply of new Chevys.

How do you take advantage? Simple, bring your dollar and your trade and take on a payment directly from the bank. You get up to 40% more than the current book value for your old car and the dollar makes the transaction legal. Assumptions require no back payment catch up, storage fees or extra charges. You simply plunk down your dollar, take on a new bank contract and drive away.

Franklin emphasizes that every available customer assistance program as well as drastic vehicle pricing will be utilized to induce customers to include trade-ins on their purchases.

> In addition to the "Crazy Money" being offered for trades this weekend, one-time only discounts are being made on every new vehicle in stock including hot selling Silverados, Tahoes and Suburbans!

"Some new vehicles will qualify for huge factory incentives and low, low interest rates," explains Franklin. Some customers will take advantage of creative bank financing including no first payment for 90 days. Franklin stressed that drastic vehicle pricing will also characterize this special Acquisition Sale. "I will have some used cars under $595," stated Franklin, "as well as unheard of discounts on new vehicles, such as $10,000 off on a 2000 Tahoe Limited Z71. 3 to choose. Expect rates as low as 0.9% APR even on hot Malibu's and Venture Family Vans. Even Regular and Extended Cab Silverado pick-ups offer 3.9% APR. Special finance and credit analysts will be on hand so that everyone can get pre-qualified for the sale.

"Even if you've had credit problems in the past, we will have some of the most liberal lenders available for this sale," assured Franklin. Just bring in a current payroll stub and a valid driver's license.

Trade-ins will be accepted at full cash value. "Even if your trade has a pay off," says Franklin, "when we make a deal we will pay it off no matter what you owe." You are encouraged to bring your payment book and the title to expedite your purchase.

Franklin reminds prospective buyers to act quickly if they want to take advantage of this special sale event. "I can't stress enough that this is a five day only sales event. Then, it's back to business as usual. It's also first come, first served, so it's critical to come early to have the best chance of getting the best selection."

Franklin states that this sale "represents a great opportunity for our customers to get a fantastic deal on a new or used car or truck as well as get more for their trade-in than ever before."

Study says attrition highest ever

More first-term troops aren't finishing tour

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

More Soldiers are leaving the ranks of the military during their first term of enlistment than ever before, according to a bipartisan government study released last month.

The study, published by the Government Accounting Office, indicates that first-term attrition reached an all-time high for enlistees with nearly four out of every 10 enlistees failing to finish their first stint of service.

Across the Department of Defense the attrition rate rose from 29.6 percent in 1985 to 36.8 in 1995.

During that time the Army suffered the greatest exodus of first-term Soldiers, reporting at least 2 percent more than the DoD annual average every year.

The Army isn't alone in its battle against attrition, though.

Both the Navy and the Air Force have had trouble keeping first-termers in uniform.

Only the Marine Corps was able to lower its attrition rate during the past decade.

Although the DoD recognized and is working on growing Soldier attrition, the study said the services are not developing tools needed to measure the long-term success of their efforts.

Those efforts aimed at reducing attrition rates for Soldiers in training were just recently implemented by the services.

But the report said it is too early to see if the programs are going to prove effective.

"We have to put in place tools for measuring the long-term success of the services' attempts to reduce attrition by confirming the services' short-term remedial efforts are not simply delaying attrition to later points in enlistees' first terms," wrote Norman J. Rabkin, the study's author and director of National Security Preparedness Issues.

A study from the Defense Manpower Data Center on enlistee attrition rates prove that goal of lessening the wash-out rate has yet to be achieved.

The analysis of servicewide attrition data on enlistees who entered the services in 1994 and 1995 indicates service efforts initiated before to reduce training attrition are not yet successful.

Training attrition is the biggest culprit of claiming Soldiers to first-term attrition, prompting the services to focus many of their initiatives to reduce attrition on activities that occur during an enlistee's first six months of service, according to the report.

All services introduced new remedial programs designed to provide extra attention to recruits struggling with behavioral, physical training or academic problems during those crucial

Soldiers from A Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, demonstrate tactics and techniques of fighting in urban terrain to senior leaders of the IBCT Monday at McKenna MOUT site.

Brigade team takes shape

New force aimed at rapid response

The senior leaders of the Initial Brigade Combat Team out of Fort Lewis, Wash., observed Rangers from the 3rd Brigade, 75th Ranger Regiment, demonstrating military operations in urban terrain tactics at McKenna MOUT Monday.

The demonstration was a way to introduce the senior leaders of the IBCT to the Infantry during a five-day Senior Leader Course.

During the week, the course introduced tactics and techniques of the Infantry and took the senior leaders of the IBCT through reconnaissance missions in the uptown Columbus area and Lawson Army Airfield, and a collaborative planning exercise.

At the end of the week, the IBCT returned to McKenna MOUT to strategize a similar exercise.

The MOUT demonstration addressed combat in urban terrain issues such as how to achieve 360-degree security and transitions from opposed to unopposed movements.

"Fighting is stop and go. You fight in a streak, from opposed fighting to unopposed to opposed. It tends to eat up Infantry quickly and cause a lot of casualties," said Lt. Col. Craig Nixon, commander, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

During the exercise the Rangers moved through the "town" at McKenna MOUT, took care of casualties and were constantly aware of possible enemy fire from the buildings lining the street.

"Moving down the street we're out in the open and have to rely on another squad. We're constantly looking back and forth," said Cpl. Sean Reynolds, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

"We have to move with a sense of urgency," said Spc. Kevin Jones, A Co., 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

Although not part of this demonstration, another aspect of combat in urban terrain is dealing with civilians who could be potentially hostile. "We have to ascertain what they're doing," Reynolds said.

"We're expecting it to be hostile, we're prepared for the Drought continues to plague Southeast

Restrictions still in effect as water levels fall

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Despite the recent rainfall in the Southeast, residents of Georgia and Alabama are still under severe drought conditions, and post officials are continuing to keep all water restrictions in place.

While post residents welcomed the benefits of sporadic rainfall earlier this week, Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works, said the brief rainshowers weren't enough to prompt the post to lessen any water restrictions.

"Current flow rates on Fort Benning's water supply, Upatoi Creek, have seen a slight upturn in flow volume," Stelzer said. "However, the sustained effects have not yet risen sufficiently above 60 million gallons a day, the threshold level that has driven us to the current restrictive usage measures."

The following restrictions are still in effect for Fort Benning residents:

- Residents in even-numbered addresses can only water outdoors on Mondays and Fridays between the hours of 6 p.m. and 10 p.m.
- Residents in odd-numbered addresses can only water outdoors on Tuesdays and Saturdays between the hours of 6 p.m. and 10 p.m.
- All watering must be done by hand and kept to 30 minutes or less.
- The use of sprinklers is prohibited.
- Residents are prohibited from washing automobiles outdoors except at the post car wash.

Army needs more 'don't ask, don't tell' training

Soldier's death prompting revamped policy

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army's Inspector General has recommended more training on the "don't ask, don't tell" policy after investigating the death of a Fort Campbell Soldier.

The IG investigation into alleged violations of the DoD homosexual policy at Fort Campbell, Ky., found isolated incidents of harassment occurred. But the IG report said that when those incidents did occur, the chain of command generally responded appropriately.

However, the IG reported many Soldiers at Fort Campbell and elsewhere still do not have a clear understanding of the DoD policy.

The IG investigation was sparked by the murder of Pfc. Barry Winchell last July and involved an IG team of 27 inspectors visiting Fort Campbell earlier this year. The team interviewed 568 Soldiers in 68 sensing sessions, questioned 47 unit commanders and administered 1,385 command climate surveys.

The results of the IG investigation were announced by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki July 21 at a Pentagon press conference.

"The death of a Soldier, any Soldier — either in combat or in peacetime — is a great loss to the Army, a loss that's most keenly felt in that Soldier's unit," Shinseki said. He called Winchell's murder a "senseless and brutal crime," adding that two soldiers have since been convicted and are both serving lengthy prison sentences.

Pvt. Calvin Glover of the 101st Airborne Division was sentenced in December to life in prison when found guilty of murdering Winchell with a baseball bat. Spc. Justin Fisher, Winchell's roommate, was found guilty in January of acting as a principal to premeditated murder and sent to prison for 12.5 years.

Glover, Fisher and Winchell were all members of D Company, 2nd Battalion, 502nd Infantry regiment at Campbell. The IG report found that the command climate in that company — unlike the rest of Fort Campbell — was poor. The investigation attributed the poor command climate to underage drinking in the barracks, personnel shortages and the presence of an abusive NCO in a leadership position in that unit.

The verbally-abusive NCO was appropriately counseled by the company commander at the time, according to the IG report, and the NCO was eventually

commentary

Everybody wants 15 minutes of fame. I've had this fact driven home to me repeatedly since I started working here at The Bayonet, and it happened again Friday night at a going away party for Pete, a young Soldier leaving for Korea after three years at Fort Benning.

"So now that I'm leaving, are you going to do a story on me, Bridgett?" he asked, half-way seriously.

"What's there to write about, Pete?" I replied. "Tell me about yourself."

Now any journalist with an ounce of ink in his blood knows there's a potential story in everyone. If you ask the right questions and listen long enough, you're bound to discover what it is that makes an individual unique — that elusive 15 minutes of fame factor.

But try as I might, I couldn't find anything newsworthy about Pete. Nothing to separate him from every other Soldier. Nothing, not a thing, zilch.

Time and time again throughout the evening he approached me and asked the same question, growing more and more serious each time. And each time I tried, I really tried, to find the story in Pete. I asked about his family. I asked about his childhood. I even asked if he'd ever experienced any really good traumas in his relatively short life — all to no avail. Pete's just your average Pete.

Well, I rationalized, it had to happen sometime. Feeling like a bit of a failure, I admitted defeat, shook his hand, and bid him adieu, good luck, Godspeed and all the best wishes on his journey.

"Oh, I'll probably see you in a few months when I come back to Ranger School again," Pete said nonchalantly.

"Again?" I asked.

"Yeah," he smirked. "I've been five times actually, but I know I'll make it next time."

FIVE TIMES he said! Five times, and he's coming back for number six. Talk about stubborn. Talk about determined. This guy put the "Pete" in "repeat."

"There's your claim to fame buddy. That's got to be some sort of record," I laughed. "They should build a revolving door in your honor."

Pete looked extremely pleased with himself, and I was relieved that I'd discovered something special about him. My mission was almost complete.

It's all well and good I discovered Pete's fame factor, but it's my job to share it with inquiring minds everywhere.

I figure if you read this really slowly and pause here and there to reflect on the irony of Pete's defining achievement, he'll get his 15 minutes in the spotlight, and you'll be a better person for knowing this bit of Benning trivia.

So here's to you Pete. Like the song says, "If you can't be good, son, be good at it."

Journalists experience all of Army

commentary

I usually get two reactions from people when I tell them what I do — they either laugh at me or they act surprised.

I'm guessing the reason people have such a strong reaction toward me being a journalist is because when you think of the Army, you don't necessarily picture someone packing a pencil and rucking a camera. In most minds, it's about the rifles, tanks and getting dirty.

My job is certainly unique. I like to think of it as the job of all jobs. Not necessarily because it's the best in the Army, but, because I get to experience so much of the Army.

Just when I think I have it rough or I make a generalization about a person and his job, I get the chance to find out the reality of things by tagging along for a story.

A perfect example of this was when I was with the Rangers. It was so easy to complain about how stressful my job is and the long hours until I had the privilege of spending two weeks with the Rangers of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, up at Fort Pickett,Va., on a training mission.

I ended up swallowing a large dose of reality about what long hours and getting down to the nitty gritty really meant. Between having to camo-up, trek through the woods and eat MREs, it was the closest field experience I ever had.

My time with the Rangers was enriching to say the least. Not only did I get to see a world I had never seen before, I actually got to participate in their world. If they weren't dressing me up in MOUT gear, they were forsaking their own safety by allowing me to fire their weapons and ride in their vehicles.

It was a rigorous two weeks, but I came back to Fort Benning with a greater appreciation for the Rangers, and for my job giving me the opportunity to experience what I did.

Every day I'm allowed to peek into the lives of Soldiers, just like I did with the Rangers. I am fortunate enough to meet people with all different personalities, in all different fields of work, doing all kinds of different things.

Whether I'm talking to a basic trainee in the foxhole, an Infantryman in his Bradley or a legal clerk in her office, I learn about what it is that makes the Army run.

I know my job doesn't exactly fit the mold of how a typical Soldier should be, but that's fine with me.

I am lucky enough to be able to straddle both sides of the fence and see just how delicately everything comes together. I can guarantee there is no other job in the Army I would rather have.

Breast-feeding has number of advantages

Capt. Sonja Foots
Martin Army Community Hospital

commentary

Editor's note: Tuesday through Aug. 7 is World Breast-feeding Week.

Breast milk is the best source of nutrition for babies.

No formula can be made that duplicates the perfect nutrition of breast milk. The American Academy of Pediatrics recommends breast-feeding for the first year of life.

Children continue to benefit if breast-feeding is continued beyond the first year.

A mother is encouraged to breast-feed as long as it is good for her and the baby.

Research indicates that breast-feeding provides health, nutritional, immunologic, developmental, psychological, social and economical advantages for babies that is unmatched by formula feeding.

The benefits are not only for the infant.

Employers also benefit because healthier infants mean less absences and lower health costs.

In addition, research indicates that breast-feeding can reduce a mother's risk of serious medical conditions such as osteoporosis, ovarian cancer and premenopausal breast cancer.

In order to encourage mothers to breast-feed, we must foster a positive environment where they can feel comfortable. Many women stop breast-feeding when they return to work outside the home.

Because of this, not enough babies in this country are breast-fed and few breast-feed for the recommended year.

Active-duty female Soldiers can stay with their babies for four months after delivery with little fear of being separated.

Once the Soldier returns to duty from convalescence leave it can be challenging to continue breast-feeding.

Commanders and supervisors should support all employees who breast-feed.

The Bayonet reviews deadlines

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Coverage of events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include battalion-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough people to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the brigade level, check presentations and group photos.

Deadlines

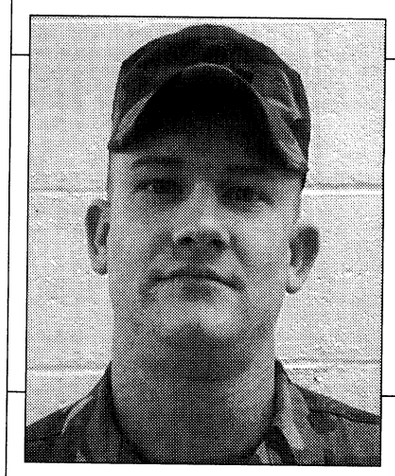
Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Copy must be typed and doubled-spaced, except for letters to the editor which may be handwritten. Everything else must be typed. Typed copy is easier for us to edit, easier for our typesetter and results in fewer errors.

Be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

If you submit an announcement for post briefs or community briefs, check it to see if it appears in The Bayonet. Then, if you must resubmit it at a later date, submit it as it ran in the paper.

You may fax briefs or announcements only. However, we need the original typewritten copy of stories (anything longer than one page).



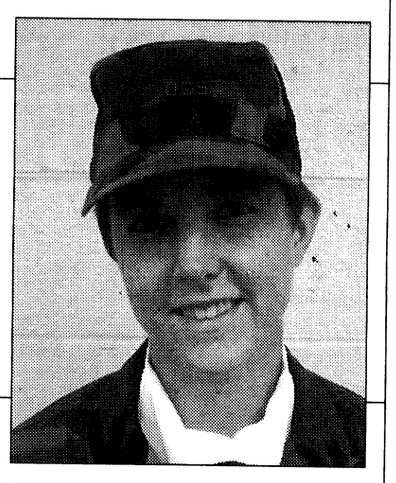
Stringers

Stringers are people belonging to various units who write about and take photos of unit activities for The Bayonet.

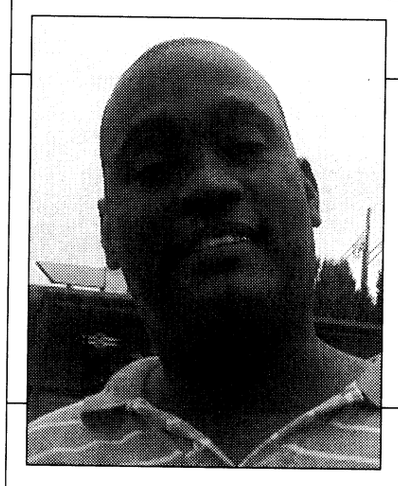
Without stringers, our coverage of unit activities would be decreased. Unit commanders who would like to arrange for a stringer should call The Bayonet's editor at 545-4622.

VARIOUS VOICES

If you could have 15 minutes of fame would you take it or leave it and why?



Spc. Brian Gibens, 4th Ranger Training Battalion — "I'd probably take it because not that many people are fortunate enough to actually get famous. You only live once, so why not."



Deborah Thompson, family member — "I'd leave it, because I like my privacy."

Maj. Paul Humphreys, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 4th RTBn — "I would not take it because I wouldn't want to look back and think that was the highlight of my life. There's more important things such as being a good father and being successful."

Officer Candidate Stephanie Parks, A Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment — "I'd probably leave it because I enjoy the simple things in life and it would probably be harder to enjoy those simple things if I were famous."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Moses Claiborne, Columbus — "I'd take it because it's only for a short while and I wouldn't be bothered with it forever. I would be able to lead a normal life afterwards."

Tammy Humphreys, family member — "I guess depending on what it is. If it's something like I've done a good job with my kids then I would definitely take it. But if it was tons of money there would be lots of people looking for me and I would rather leave it."

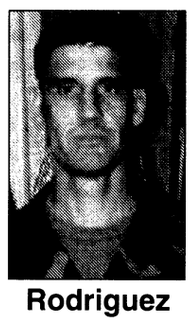
Post's second in charge takes job with IBCT

Brig. Gen. Eaton will become team's deputy commander



Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

One of Fort Benning's own will soon be an integral part of the Initial Brigade Combat Team at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, deputy commanding general and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School, will soon join the IBCT as the deputy commanding general for transformation, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command in Fort Lewis, Wash.

"The most exciting aspect is getting in on the ground floor on a great initiative and working with some of the greatest commanders," he said.

Eaton

Rodriguez

The IBCT is an evolving brigade that blends heavy and light capabilities, but will remain "Infantry-centric" with advanced tactical and strategic agility.

In addition, technology will give the IBCT increased situational awareness and the ability to understand the enemy a lot more clearly and faster than in the past.

"I have a background in the Infantry that covers everything from the lightest to the heaviest," Eaton said.

Eaton's experience ranges from assignments as division operations officer, 10th Mountain Div. (Light), Fort Drum, N.Y., during Operation Restore Hope, Somalia; to assistant division commander, 1st Armored Div., Hanau, Germany.

Eaton also is familiar with Fort Lewis, Wash., having served as executive officer, 2nd Bn., 23rd Inf., 9th Inf. Div. (Motorized); secretary to general staff I Corps and battalion executive officer, 1st Bde., 9th Inf. Div. (Motorized).

His command experience includes C Company, 2nd Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized), U.S. Army Europe and Seventh Army, Germany, and 3rd Battalion, 14th Inf., 10th Mountain Division (Light) Fort Drum, N.Y.

Eaton graduated from the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College and U.S. Army War College.

He also has a master's degree in French political science from Middlebury College in Paris, France.

Eaton's awards and decorations include the Defense Superior Service Medal, Legion of Merit, Expert Infantryman Badge, Parachutist Badge and the Ranger Tab.

Col. David Rodriguez, assistant chief of staff at 18th Airborne Corps, Fort Bragg, N.C., will take Eaton's place as deputy commanding general, assistant commandant at the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School.

"I look forward to coming back to the Home of the Infantry and hope to have a positive impact on the Infantry force of the future," Rodriguez said.

Rodriguez has a broad background in types of Infantry units including Ranger, Airborne and Air Assault.

"I've been in four of the five types of Infantry units," he said.

He is well acquainted with Fort Benning, serving as assistant operations officer, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.; and company commander of B Co., 3rd Ranger Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

He was also assigned as joint exercise officer for U.S. forces Korea and attended the Joint Professional Military Education Course in Norfolk, Va.

Rodriguez graduated from the Naval War College in 1997, earning a master's degree in strategic studies and national security affairs.

His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, Combat Infantryman Badge, Expert Infantryman Badge, Ranger Tab, Master Parachutist Badge and the Air Assault Badge.

The report dates for Eaton and Rodriguez are still to be determined, but could be as soon as the fall.

Team: Demonstrates new quicker force for Army leaders worst, but trained to react," said Pfc. James Little, A Co., 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

At the end of the exercise the 65 senior leaders of the IBCT were able to ask questions and examine equipment.

"About 45 percent are Infantry. This is all pretty new to them," said Col. Paul Melody, director of Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

"We need the Infantry aspect and we will build it into our own SOPs. We will take the training and combat and integrate it into our brigade," said Col. Steven Bailey, IBCT commander.

The IBCT is something the Army's Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki thought the Army needed in order to combat an enemy that is not as clear-cut as in the past.

Also, the environment in which a unit will be deployed will more likely be an urban setting evidenced by the recent situations in Kosovo or Bosnia.

This reiterates the words of Gen. John Hendrix, commanding general of U.S. Army Forces Command at Fort McPherson in Atlanta, who spoke at an Association of the U. S. Army dinner at Fort Benning, April 18, about the future of the Infantry.

"We are here to fight these wars and defeat the enemy, but the enemy is not quite so clear anymore and contingency operations are here to stay," Hendrix said.

He also projected that eight to 10 years from now the Army will have an Infantry force that will be more lethal, more rapidly deployable and more tactically mobile than today.

"Our goal is to be able to respond faster and respond with combat power when it hits the ground.

"We want to be able to get there and deter a war from occurring. If not successful in deterring, then we can rapidly fight it," Hendrix said.

The IBCT is the first step in the process of creating such a combat force, which blends the boundaries of heavy and light Infantry.

"We'll learn from the Initial Brigade Combat Team to create the Interim Brigade Combat Team, and it will lead us to the objective force," said Capt. Kevin Poates, training initiative officer for U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command.

Two brigades at Fort Lewis, Wash., will transition to IBCT, and eventually the Interim Brigade Combat Team, or interim solution, will grow to five brigades.

Technology will play a role in the training of IBCT as it will be an integral part of their capabilities. This technology spans from videoconferencing and tactical Internet to the vehicles used for combat.

The vehicle, to be purchased as soon as the end of this summer, will be much lighter and smaller than a Bradley to increase mobility while still providing protection for the Infantrymen, Bailey said.

"We want to bring power to the Soldier so it (the mission) happens successfully. A vehicle is only a way to get there," he said.

"We want to get there much faster than a heavy force could and after the 82nd Airborne or Rangers," Bailey said.

The IBCT's senior leaders have already trained at Fort Lee, Va., in logistics; Fort Huachuaca, Ariz., in intelligence and sensor systems; and Fort Knox, Ky., in reconnaissance and target acquisition.

The senior leaders of the IBCT are headed to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., for a capstone exercise, using everything learned from each of the other four posts.

Bailey said by December 2001 the brigade should be ready for training at one of the combat training centers and full technological capabilities by 2015.

Study: Says more Soldiers than ever aren't finishing tour first six months of initial entry training.

At Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade, Soldiers attend classroom instruction on human relations intermixed with adventure training in hopes of not only combating boredom in the classroom, but, perhaps more importantly, axing attrition.

"We do everything we can to keep these guys in the Army," said Lt. Col. Dennis Bundy, deputy commander of the training brigade. "We introduce them to rappelling and marksmanship while giving these classes, so they can get an early start on what they signed up to do.

"It gets them more involved and gives them a reason to stick with the training," he said.

While Bundy said the brigade has no specific program designed to keep young Soldiers in the Army, he said the brigade's leadership is responsible for taking care of struggling Soldiers.

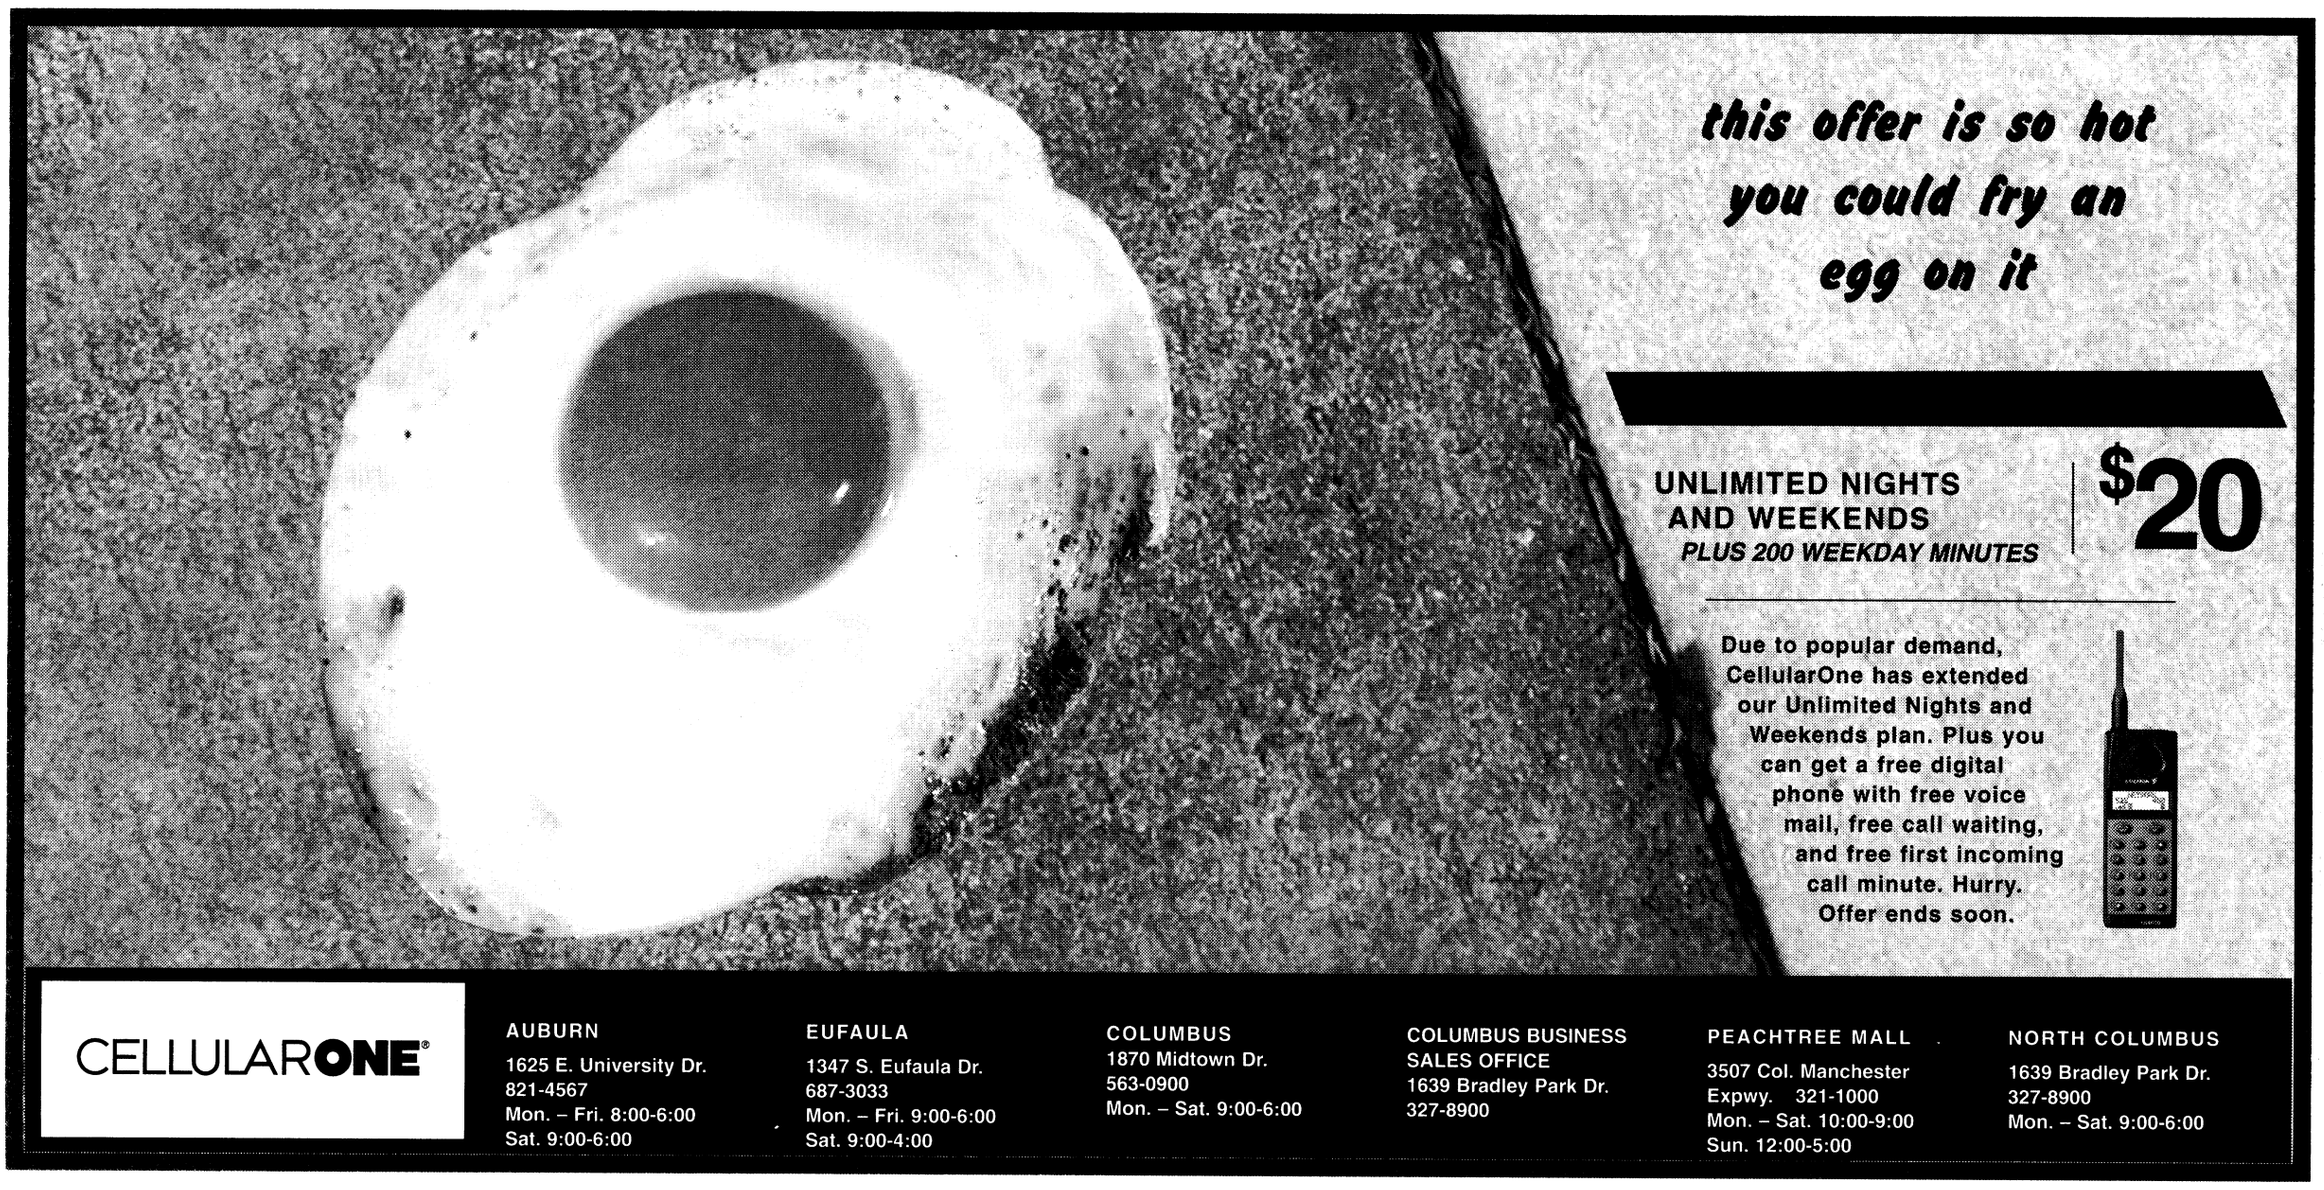
"The drill sergeants train these guys with an understanding they are there to make the Soldier successful, not be an obstacle that the Soldier has to get through," Bundy said.

The ITB trains more than 17,000 troops annually with an attrition rate of 12 percent, a figure 3.2 percent lower than the Army's Training and Doctrine Command average in 1999 of 15.2 percent.

Those Soldiers tally more than 2,000 trainees every year who fail to finish initial entry Infantry training at ITB.

The Basic Combat Training Brigade, also located on Sand Hill, reported a 7 percent attrition rate in 1999, the lowest in the Army's Training and Doctrine Command.

They, like the ITB, have no formulated or written plan in place to keep Soldiers in the Army.



In 1998, 34 percent of Soldiers leaving the service during their first six months were a result of performance problems, 26 percent medical and physical problems, 23 percent stemmed from filing fraudulent enlistments and 17 percent were a result of problems deemed as "other," according to the GAO report.

1st Sgt. Thadeus Maholick, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, said while he hasn't had any first-term Soldiers who want to leave his garrison unit on Main Post since taking his position only a few months ago, he said he dealt with first-term attrition on a daily basis during his 22-month stint as a first sergeant at ITB.

"We have people with four-year degrees working at Wal-Mart, and when a lot of these Soldiers want to get out because they think life is better on the outside, I remind them of that," said Maholick, a 23-year Infantry veteran. "I used that philosophy at Sand Hill, and I do the same here at 1st of the 11th.

"There is no other job in the world where you can get your house, food and medical insurance paid for and still get a check," he said. "It just doesn't happen."

The GAO study estimates the early separation of a new recruit costs tax payers almost $38,000 in recruiting and training expenses.

Group says post terrorist threat level low

Terrorist activity still possibility for local area

2nd Lt. Franklin Buloski
Directorate of Threat and Security

The current terrorist threat to Fort Benning is low. However, this threat has the potential to change rapidly, based on perceived vulnerability and hostile intent.

Lowering the installation THREATCON to "normal" requires increased individual awareness to continue to combat terrorism.

The physical security measures that were in place during THREATCON Alpha (roadblocks, vehicle checks, etc.) are no longer routine measures. The installation has returned to THREATCON "normal."

Each individual must assume a greater responsibility in the overall protection of themselves, family members and facilities.

Individuals must become increasingly aware of their surroundings, remain alert for anything suspicious or out of place and keep a low profile by not attracting attention to themselves. It is necessary to remind the entire Fort Benning community that the threat is real (regardless of THREATCON) and will continue in the future.

Terrorists attack weak targets, regardless of location and without warning, and education is one of the best tools to combat terrorism.

Terrorist attacks against DoD have claimed more than 300 lives and wounded more than 600 people in the last 20 years. The most common form of attack was a bomb.

The summer months mark a time of historically symbolic dates that may invite some form of terrorist attack. Fort Benning is currently in this window of heightened terrorist activity, from both domestic and international groups. Terrorist attacks ranging from the Khobar Towers bombing in June 1996 to the Kenya and Tanzania embassy bombings in August 1998 have occurred during the summer months.

Although many of these incidents transpired overseas, Fort Benning is not immune to such acts. Fort Benning is host to several prominent figures, including our international students that visit for military training.

The July 1996 Centennial Park bombing is a grim reminder that domestic acts of terrorism hit home.

Let us not forget Osama Bin Laden's (the world's most wanted terrorist) words, "All Americans are our enemies. Not just the ones who fight us directly, but also the ones that pay their taxes."

With the anniversary of the Olympic, Kenya and Tanzania bombings approaching, it is important to emphasize that terrorist groups often time their acts of violence on a significant historical date. Some significant approaching dates are:

• July 27, 1996 — the Centennial Park bombing at the Atlanta Summer Games.

• July 3, 1986 — USS Vincennes shot down Iran Air Flight 655.

• Aug. 2, 1990 — Iraq invades Kuwait.

• Aug. 7, 1998 — Kenya and Tanzania embassy bombings.

• Aug. 19, 1969 — first hijacking of a U.S. airliner by Palestinians.

This list is just a short example of the many dates that may be important to certain groups or individuals.

Fort Benning represents the power of the nation, an immense source of Soldiers, if valuable equipment. With the status as Best Installation in the World it can be considered a potential target that would add to a terrorist's reputation.

A CLOSER LOOK

Terrorists sometimes inflict their acts of violence on historical dates.

Some of the dates which may be important to certain groups or individuals are:

- July 3, 1986 — the USS Vincennes shot down Iran Air Flight 555.
- Aug. 2, 1990 — Iraq invades Kuwait.
- Aug 7. 1998 — Kenya and Tanzania embassy bombings.
- July 27, 1996 — the Centennial Park bombing at the Atlanta Summer Games.
- Aug. 19, 1969 — first hijacking of a U.S. airliner by Palestinians.

Central Georgia running out of phone numbers for area

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff

Residents of central and southwest Georgia will be getting a new area code Aug. 1, 2001.

After more than 45 years of service, the 912 area code is running out of numbers and must be divided into three area codes, said Bill Carver, manager of public affairs for Bell South of Georgia.

Those areas in central and east Georgia including Dublin, Macon, Milledgeville, Swainsboro and Warner Robins will go to a 478 area code. A 229 code will be given to southwest Georgia, and includes the areas of Albany, Americus, Cordele, Tifton, Thomasville and Valdosta. Areas in southeast Georgia, including Brunswick, Savannah, Soperton, Vidalia and Waycross will keep the 912 area code.

Beginning Aug. 1 a one-year permissive or transitional period will begin where customers can be reached using either the new or old area code, Carver said. However, on Aug. 1, 2001 people will be required to use the new area codes to reach those who are in the change areas.

He said the new area codes will not affect local dialing or change what is considered long distance and what isn't.

Paul Yates, chief of the Directorate of Information Management, said this new change should not affect Fort Benning.

The biggest concern for people on Fort Benning will be having to remember the new area code or change their speed dialers, Yates said.

While Fort Benning is not directly impacted by the change, Carver said there are civilian employees and Soldiers who live in the areas that will be.

He said Bell South is asking everyone to start thinking about the change early and make adjustments as soon as possible so there will be a seamless transition next year.

Some of the adjustments include changing automatic, and programmed phone dialing features. Those with home security systems need to make sure the company handling the system is also informed of the change.

If someone has a home or business where the telephone systems needs to be reprogrammed, they should contact their telephone equipment vendor immediately.

"The main thing is getting the word out to friends, relatives or business associates about the change, so those people around the country and around the world can make the transition with them," Carver said.

"This is the first change in the 912 code in about 45 years and we want to get the word out early," he said.

"Because we have customers who have literally lived their entire life with the same area code it's going to take time to get used to. We want people to know right away so there won't be a problem."

Soldiers attend international conference

USARSA leaders visit Chilean summit

Col. Patricio Haro Ayerve
U.S. Army School of the Americas

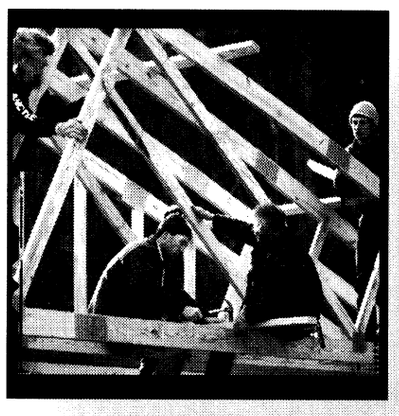
"Andes 2000," a Peace Operations Seminar organized by the Chilean Army and sponsored by the U.S. Southern Command took place in the City of Santiago de Chile June 26-30.

The goal of the seminar was to promote multinational and regional cooperation and to exchange professional experiences among the armed forces of South America by those who have participated in these types of operations throughout the world.

The U.S. Army School of the Americas was a key participant during this seminar as it is during any other seminar organized or sponsored by the SOUTHCOM, school officials said.

The Critique and Evaluation Cell for the Chilean operations conference were staffed by a team of leaders from the school's Division of Civil-Military Studies of USARSA's Department of Joint and Combined Operations.

The division chief presented a professional conference dealing with the planning techniques for these types of international peace operations, the goal of which was to uniform the methods for planning peace operations.



The participation of USARSA's team of leaders during this seminar was acclaimed for its professionalism and dedication by the organizers of this event.

This motivated the members to accomplish the task they have been assigned, according to a report released by the school.

29th Inf. Regt. nets 12th excellence award for DoD, Army

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Members of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, received runner-up for the 1999 Army Award for Maintenance Excellence July 12 in Washington, D.C.

This year's award is the 12th time that 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., has placed first or second in the competition.

"Winning the award means we are doing good things in maintenance," Chief Warrant Officer Bill Neuendorf, 1st Bn.'s maintenance technician, said. "We are able to maintain our mission readiness and combat readiness, which is far above Army standards."

Eighty Soldiers and civilians work hand-in-hand to maintain the unit's 99 Bradleys, Neuendorf said.

The mechanics are responsible for maintaining the Bradleys used to train Soldiers coming directly out of basic training, Bradley Leaders Course, BNCOC and the Ranger battalion, Neuendorf said.

Members of 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., are working at three times the tempo and on twice the number of vehicles that regular units have, he said.

"Normally one person will work on six to eight vehicles at a time. Here one person works on 10 to 12," Neuendorf said. "Since we use the vehicles in support of all the training, we put a lot more mileage on the vehicles and a lot more wear and tear on them, especially since they are driven by trainees."

So how do the mechanics make it happen on a daily basis? Sam Harvel, general foreman of 1st Bn.'s maintenance division, said it is because amazing things are done by amazing people every day at the maintenance shop.

The award is given to units deserving the title only after an extensive examination has been completed, Harvel said.

A maintenance book is submitted to the Training and Doctrine Command in October, Harvel said.

If approved, TRADOC will send a team to the site to evaluate the maintenance shop's performance first hand.

After the on-site inspection, they review the units' performances and make their decision from the collected data.

If the TRADOC teams approve the shop's maintenance book, the will forward the book to the Department of Defense where it will be considered for the DoD competition.

By winning at the TRADOC level and receiving runner up at the DoD level, Lt. Col. Keith George, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.'s, commander, said the maintenance division is an example of the great things, which happen in the 29th Inf. Regt. as well as Fort Benning.

> "It is a close race between first and second. It may be as little as a drop of oil under one vehicle and not another."
> Sam Harvel
> Maintenance foreman
> 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"They set the standard of how it is to be done," he said. "Receiving the award is significant especially with the limited amount of people and resources they have to work with.

"They maintain a brigade's worth of equipment with a battalion's strength."

"It is a close race between first and second," Harvel said. "It may be as little as a drop of oil under one vehicle and not another.

"It takes a team effort to win. No one person could win this. It takes everybody."

IG: Reports more training needed for 'don't ask, don't tell' removed from his leadership position and reassigned. Shinseki said since this corrective action was taken, morale in the company has "improved dramatically."

Some reporters repeatedly asked Shinseki if charges would be brought against the abusive NCO or if the chain of command would be held responsible. Shinseki said the matter of charges against the NCO would be up to the commanding general of Fort Campbell, Maj. Gen. Bob Clark.

The Army's Inspector General, Maj. Gen. Mike Ackerman, later explained that IG reports are not supposed to be used as the sole basis for disciplinary action.

The IG report, however, found that many Soldiers at Campbell and elsewhere did not clearly understand the "don't ask, don't tell, don't harass" policy and their responsibilities under it. Shinseki said the policy is the "law of the land" and there's a need for more training on it.

"What you will see is an increase in both the frequency of training for Soldiers and leaders," Shinseki said. "You'll find that the inspector general will, on a recurring basis, go to the field as part of the normal inspection process to check in to see the quality of the training, whether or not the policy is better understood, and the degree to which the chain of command is, in fact, implementing that policy fully."

The IG report found some shortfalls with the Army's chain-teaching briefing on the DoD homosexual policy, which all Soldiers were required to attend earlier this year. It said the briefing needed more specific guidance on how and where to report harassment. It claimed some of the terms in the briefing were misunderstood, especially by junior Soldiers, and recommended that training be tailored to specific audiences based on rank.

Shinseki issued a directive July 21 to implement recommendations of the IG report. The directive said that "commanders will ensure that all Soldiers are treated with dignity and respect and that harassment of or threats to Soldiers for any reason are not tolerated." It said those who engage in, ignore, or condone harassment or threats will be held accountable.

The directive said that all Soldiers must be trained to standard on DoD and Army policies of consideration of others, dignity and respect, harassment prevention, and equal opportunity.

The directive also addressed filling unit shortages, especially leadership positions; reviewing policies on alcohol consumption and barracks life; and funding well-being initiatives.

In addition, the directive said the commanding general of the Training and Doctrine Command and the Army's deputy chief of staff for personnel will review current training materials on the DoD homosexual policy and target them to different audiences.

Shinseki's directive was in keeping with a 13-point DoD plan to eliminate harassment in the military also released July 21. Under the plan, DoD adopted an "overarching principle" that emphasizes that harassment for any reason undermines good order and discipline and has no place in the armed forces.

Korea ... the forgotten war remembered

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

Gen. Douglas MacArthur confers with Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, 8th Army commander, in Korea.

It was his second visit since the war began.

He tells the U.N. forces "will have new heartaches and new setbacks," but "I was never more confident of victory."

July 29, 1950

Gen. Walker orders 8th Army forces to "stand and fight." He adds they must make an "Alamo" stand until U.N. forces are strong enough to counterattack. He vows there will not be a "Corregidor" surrender.

July 30, 1950

Maj. Gen. John H. Church becomes the new commander of the 24th Infantry Division, replacing Maj. Gen. William F. Dean who is missing in action.

July 30-Aug. 1, 1950

A 1st Marine Division regimental combat team, about 6,000 men, comes ashore at Pusan July 30. They have M-26 tanks, heavy weapons and flamethrowers. Marine air units also accompany them.

The Army's 5th Regimental Combat Team arrives from Hawaii July 31. Elements of the 2nd Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash., lands on Aug. 1

July 31, 1950

N.Y. Herald Tribune reporter Homer Bigart interprets Gen. Walker's "stand and fight" order to mean American units must make fighting withdrawals rather than running "like scared rabbits," which some green, untested troops have done.

There are more retreats after that but American and South Korean forces say that in the process they are inflicting heavy casualties on the North Koreans.

July 31-Aug. 1, 1950

MacArthur meets with Chiang Kai-shek on Taiwan to coordinate defense of the island against a communist China invasion. He told Chiang when he left for Tokyo, "Keep your chin up. We're going to win."

July 31- Aug. 2, 1950

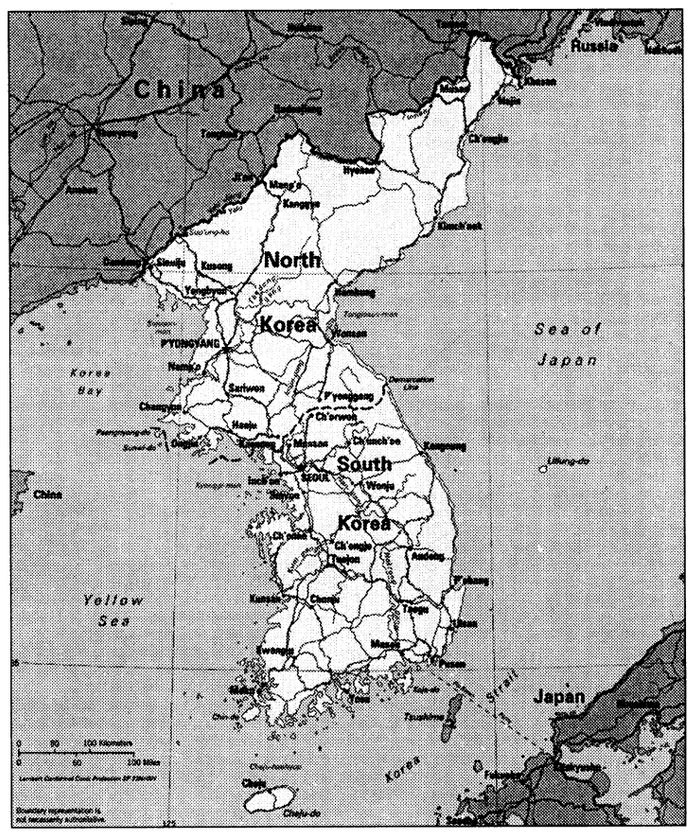
On the northern front, six divisions of North Koreans drive American and South Korean Soldiers out of Yechong and Andong in fighting July 31 and Aug. 1. On the east coast, South Korean units recapture Yongdok.

Aug. 1, 1950

The 24th Infantry Division, with new troops from Okinawa, makes the first American tank-led assault of the war between Masan and Chinju 30 miles west of Pusan. They drive the enemy back 10 miles.

Aug. 1-2, 1950

Russia, whose boycott of the U.N. allowed the Security Council to back South Korea, now returns to the world body. Deputy Foreign Minister Jacob A. Malik assumes the chairmanship.



He tries to make up for lost time with moves designed to stall deliberations on the Korean War. On Aug. 1 he rules communist China will replace Taiwan in the U.N. The U.S. ambassador objects, saying a chairman cannot make rulings without a Security Council vote.

Membership for communist China is defeated 8-3 following a debate. The U.S. also leads a defeat of Malik's insistence on settling the question of mainland China's membership Aug. 2.

Aug. 2, 1950

The 1st Cavalry Division burns Kamchon as it retreats after a weeklong battle. Kamchon is 30 miles northwest of Taegu, the new seat of South Korea's government.

The 1st Cav. falls back to defenses prepared on the east bank of the Naktong River, about eight miles from Taegu.

Army Emergency Relief helps Soldiers, family members in need

Al Deane
Army Emergency Relief

Army Emergency Relief is a nonprofit organization incorporated in 1942 by the secretary of war and the Army chief of staff. AER's mission is to provide financial assistance to Soldiers in a time of need.

Here are some frequently asked questions and answers:

Who does AER help?

AER helps active duty Soldiers, single or married and their family members. It also helps National Guard and Reserve Soldiers and their family members, retired Soldiers and their family members and surviving spouses and orphans of Soldiers who died while on active duty or after they retired.

What can AER do?

AER can help with emergency financial needs for such things as food; rent or utilities; emergency transportation and vehicle repair; funeral expenses (active duty family members only); medical and dental expenses; and funds when pay is lost, stolen or not received.

It also provides undergraduate-level education scholarships based on financial need to children of Soldiers active duty or retired.

What can't AER do?

AER cannot pay for nonessentials; finance ordinary leave or vacation; pay fines or legal expenses; help liquidate or consolidate debt; assist with house purchase or home improvements; help purchase, rent or lease a vehicle, cover bad checks; or pay credit card bills.

What kind of assistance can I expect?

AER provides interest free loans, grants if a repayment of a loan will cause undue financial hardship or part loan, part grant.

Where do I go for AER?

Personnel assigned to the 3rd Brigade need to see their battalion financial specialist.

Everyone else can visit the installation AER office in building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza for a copy of the AER application along with a comprehensive checklist.

Can spouses get help?

Spouses can receive help if their husband or wife is deployed or PCSing.

Where does AER get its funds?

AER gets funds from voluntary contributions from active and retired Soldiers and Army civilians. Funds are also received through repayment of interest-free loans, investment income and unsolicited contributions.

Is there a dollar limit on AER help?

AER assistance will meet a person's emergency need regardless of dollar amount.

However, the regulation prohibits continuous assistance or repeated request for the same category.

Do I have to contribute to get help?

If someone is eligible for AER assistance and has a valid emergency, AER will help.

What portion of a contribution goes to help?

Ninety-five cent of every dollar goes to help Soldiers. AER administrative expenses cost only five cents.

What is AER's record of assistance?

Since it was established in 1942, AER has helped more than 2.7 million Army people with more than $720 million.

Technology keeps Transformation on track

Tracks could get swapped for wheels

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Army will have the technological breakthroughs needed to create an objective force very nearly within the target 2008-2012 time frame, according to the Army's chief scientist.

"By the end of '05, early '06, we will have a future combat systems demonstration," said Dr. Mike Andrews. "We're not having to create new technologies out of thin air."

The FCS is envisioned as a replacement for the 70-ton Abrams with all the lethality and crew survivability, but 50 tons lighter.

Andrews was among the speakers at a news conference held at the Pentagon July 10, focusing on the status of the Army's Transformation Campaign.

The news conference featured experts who gave updates on aspects of the campaign from building the first Initial Brigade Combat Team (IBCT) at Fort Lewis, Wash., to funding the process.

Transformation began last October when Gen. Eric K. Shinseki, Army chief of staff, announced a new Army vision. He stated a requirement to quickly build forces that were lethal enough but also light enough to deploy within 96 hours to anywhere in the world for contingencies ranging from peacekeeping to combat.

IBCTs are those new forces. They will become the interim force, a bridge to the objective force still expected to be stood up within the 2008-2012 period. The objective force will be able to respond worldwide nearly as quickly as an IBCT.

Two IBCTs are being created at Fort Lewis by reorganizing the 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division first and then the 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division. Eventually, there will be at least six IBCTs, with at least one in the reserve component.

"We think we can resource up to six brigades in the current solution, but we're still working with the Department of Defense to see if that's the right solution," said Maj. Gen. Bob St. Onge, who just completed a tour as the Army director of Strategy, Plans and Policy.

The FCS is critical to creating the objective force. Army leaders are relying on scientists and technologists to find solutions by 2003.

He said there has been a demonstration "in some levels" of a gun smaller than the 105 mm that has the lethality of the Abrams main gun, but that "we have to take it to the next level."

Active protection systems are seen as the best measures to help ensure crew survivability. There have been advances in that area, as well.

"We've done a lot in the world of active protection systems," Andrews said. "We should have full active protection systems by the '06 time period that could give us protection against both chemical and kinetic energy."

Scientific and technological breakthroughs are just one part of the campaign, according to Maj. Gen. Jim Dubik, Training and Doctrine Command deputy commanding general for Transformation. "But the human side — the doctrine, the organization, the leader development, the training, the Soldier aspect — that part we need to get as well."

He said that TRADOC schools are producing new doctrine and training techniques for IBCT Soldiers. Some training will consist of virtual and constructive simulation delivered through the Army's distance learning system.

Tactical leader training is underway for brigade-level leaders and below. There is also a new NCO training program.

"Everything so far ... is on time and on schedule," Dubik said. "We are prepared to continue this until the initial operational capability at the end of next year."

The IBCT is training with armored vehicles borrowed from Canada and other countries until it is outfitted with interim armored vehicles.

Source selection for the IAV is underway at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., where an unspecified number of companies have entered candidate vehicles for performance evaluation.

Since Shinseki talked last October about wheeled armored vehicles possibly serving as IAVs, there has been speculation in the news media that the Army is biased against tracked IAV candidates.

"A lot of the questions we've received about 'is its wheels or is it tracks', are, in my view, more emotion-based than fact-based," said Col. Don Schenk, IAV program manager at the Tank Automotive and Armament Command, Dearborn, Mich.

"In our solicitation, we made no mention of tracks or wheels. We described a desired performance, and the performance dealt with cross country mobility, speed, maneuverability."

Schenk said 99 percent of the performance evaluation has been completed at Aberdeen. The Army will announce its choice by the end of summer, he said.

"We have not seen huge differences between a wheeled vehicle or a tracked land vehicle. Each has its own merits," Schenk said.

IAV selection will help the Army define the cost for building an IBCT, which now is estimated at more than $800 million, according to Dr. Craig College, of the Army's Program, Evaluation and Analysis Division.

"We're still waiting to see what's going to happen this summer so we know what the final cost is for those IAVs," College said.

He also said the final bill will also include other equipment and Soldier training.

Soldiers face realities of first field exercise

Basic trainees get glimpse of war during live-fire obstacle course

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

This is the fifth story of a six-part series, which takes an in-depth look at basic training.

Soldiers from Fort Benning were called into harm's way Monday night when they were tasked to secure an enemy stronghold made up of four M-60 machine guns.

As the sun sank below the horizon and darkness blanketed the earth, the Soldiers moved though a shallow ravine to a staging area.

When the word was given, the Soldiers crawled over a wall and immediately came under fire.

Worming their way forward, they crawled around obstacles and under barbed wire.

Nearing the first line of barbed wire, flares were shot into the air bathing the Soldiers in an eerie glow and forcing them to freeze in place to not to give away their position.

The Soldiers continued to crawl forward as the flare burnt itself out.

The enemy machine guns opened fire again as soon as the flare went out, sending lead and tracers above the heads of the Soldiers.

Moving forward as fast and low as possible, they were illuminated again by another flare.

As the flare died out, the Soldiers crawled under the last wire where they were able to pass the guns once they ran out of ammunition.

After they reached a small berm, the Soldiers took a count of how many people made it through the barrage — everyone made it — not a single casualty was taken.

It was as if the guns were intentionally fired above the Soldiers.

After the attack, the Soldiers regrouped and talked about what they had just done.

"This time it was training. Next time it may be the real thing," said Staff Sgt. Raymond Laverenz, a D Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade drill sergeant.

The exercise, which was held on the first day of the field training exercise, is said to be the most dangerous training the trainees of D Co., 3rd Bn., 47th Inf, Regt., will face during their basic training.

Although there is a possibility of a trainee getting injured during the exercise, the exercise is safe, because the guns are set to fire more than four feet above the highest obstacle, said Staff Sgt. Kevin Gray.

The Soldiers are tracked from the time they put on their flak jackets to when they are in position and throughout the fire and maneuver course to the final position, Gray said.

The range cadre use night vision devices to make sure all the Soldiers are off the course.

The cadre members inch their way through the course alongside the trainees to maintain more control over the exercise.

After the infiltration was over, the trainees and drill sergeants talked about the mission and how it could have been better.

"Put the slower people in the back," said one trainee. "Make sure we don't get tangled up with each other," said another.

Although the trainees did make a few mistakes, Staff Sgt. Stanley Mitchell said he was pleased with their performance.

"They did get tangled a few times, but they did a good job of getting untangled." Mitchell said. "After they untangled themselves, they spread out and did a good job on the rest of the course."

Pvt. Marion Smith said he felt confident about the exercise too.

"It was challenging," Smith said. "It was great training.

"It helped us overcome our fears, and gave us a taste of war," he said. "It tied in everything that we have learned throughout basic — everything from our PT to movement.

The Soldiers wrapped up their FTX Thursday morning with a Cold Steel ceremony and will graduate Aug. 3.

Ranger wives experience husbands' jobs first-hand

Spouses find fun in Swamp in Walk 2000

They emerged from the clearing tired and sweating from the sweltering 110-degree heat index. Their camouflaged faces shone against the hot Florida sun where they look up to see where their squad leader was leading them.

They are the few, the proud — the Army Rangers' wives.

Ninety-two women participated in the 6th Ranger Training Battalion's annual Ranger Wives Swamp Walk at Camp James E. Rudder on June 15.

The all-day event was created to give the Rangers' wives and friends an opportunity to get together, enjoy the experience of the Florida phase of Ranger school and build camaraderie and friendship, said Lt. Col. Mark A. Johnstone, 6th RTBn commander.

During the Swamp Walk, participants attended a reptile education class, and learned about the snakes found in the southeastern United States.

They also visited a pool located next to the reptile house where they learned about the three alligators that lived there.

Afterward, the group divided into four squads and rotated through weapons familiarization and rappelling classes.

Command Sgt. Maj. Gail Ernst, 6th RTBn Ranger instructor, said the rappelling class is one of the most popular events at the Swamp Walk.

"We get a lot of positive feedback from the wives," Ernst said. "Some of the participants who rappelled said they didn't think they'd do anything like that.

"But they got the courage to do so and were very proud of it," he said

After lunch at the Gator Lounge, the squads departed by truck to the Prisoners' Pond, where, under the supervision of Ranger instructors, they crossed a stream using one-rope, hiked through the wooded, mud-bogged swamps and competed in a Zodiac boat race.

"After listening to other wives talk about it, I thought, 'I want to be part of that,'" said Joni Ernst, wife of Gail. "Now I can tell stories to other new wives."

She said the Swamp Walk gave her a tiny grain of what Rangers go through, and now she has gained a greater understanding of her husband's job.

"Now I understand why my husband is so tired when he comes home."

Registration for 2000-2001 begins Tuesday

Verifications will start Tuesday-Friday

Gail Wilson
Fort Benning Schools

Registration for the 2000-2001 school year will take place Tuesday-Aug. 11 at all Fort Benning Schools. Aug. 17 is the first day of school.

Parents can register their children from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

All registrations and verifications will take place at the children's assigned or neighborhood schools.

Parents must register at each child's school if they have children in more than one of the Fort Benning Schools.

If children attended a Fort Benning school last school year, it is necessary for parents to verify registration data for the next school year by visiting the schools.

If children did not attend any Fort Benning Schools last year, it will be necessary to complete a registration packet, which is available at the schools.

Bus schedules will be provided at registration and will be published in The Bayonet.

Bus schedules for any specialized transportation needs will be provided prior to Aug. 17.

Applications for free and reduced price breakfast and lunch are available at each school and at the Fort Benning Schools' Administrative Center Child Nutrition Office, Room 21, located on Custer Road.

New registration requires the child's Social Security number and proof of on-post residence. Registration for pre-K and kindergarten requires the child's original birth certificate.

Parents of pre-K and kindergarten students will be given information regarding the procedure for securing a Georgia Eye, Ear, Dental and Immunization Certificate at registration.

Parents of students in grades one through eight must bring current shot records, which will be recorded on Fort Benning School's health forms.

Verification will include: updating basic registration data (i.e. address, phone number, contact information), health and immunization updates; medications, etc.

All registrations and verifications require sponsor or spouse to provide a current military ID card.

Additional registration and verification information is available on the Fort Benning Schools' website at benning-w1.odedodea.edu or by calling 545-7276.

'Summer Blowouts' add to YS program

Fort Benning's Youth Services hosted a "Summer Blowout" for 66 guests from the Columbus area Boys' and Girls' Clubs July 21.

Two busloads of party-goers arrived shortly before 1 p.m. for three hours of fun, fellowship and friendly competition at the first of three blowouts scheduled this summer.

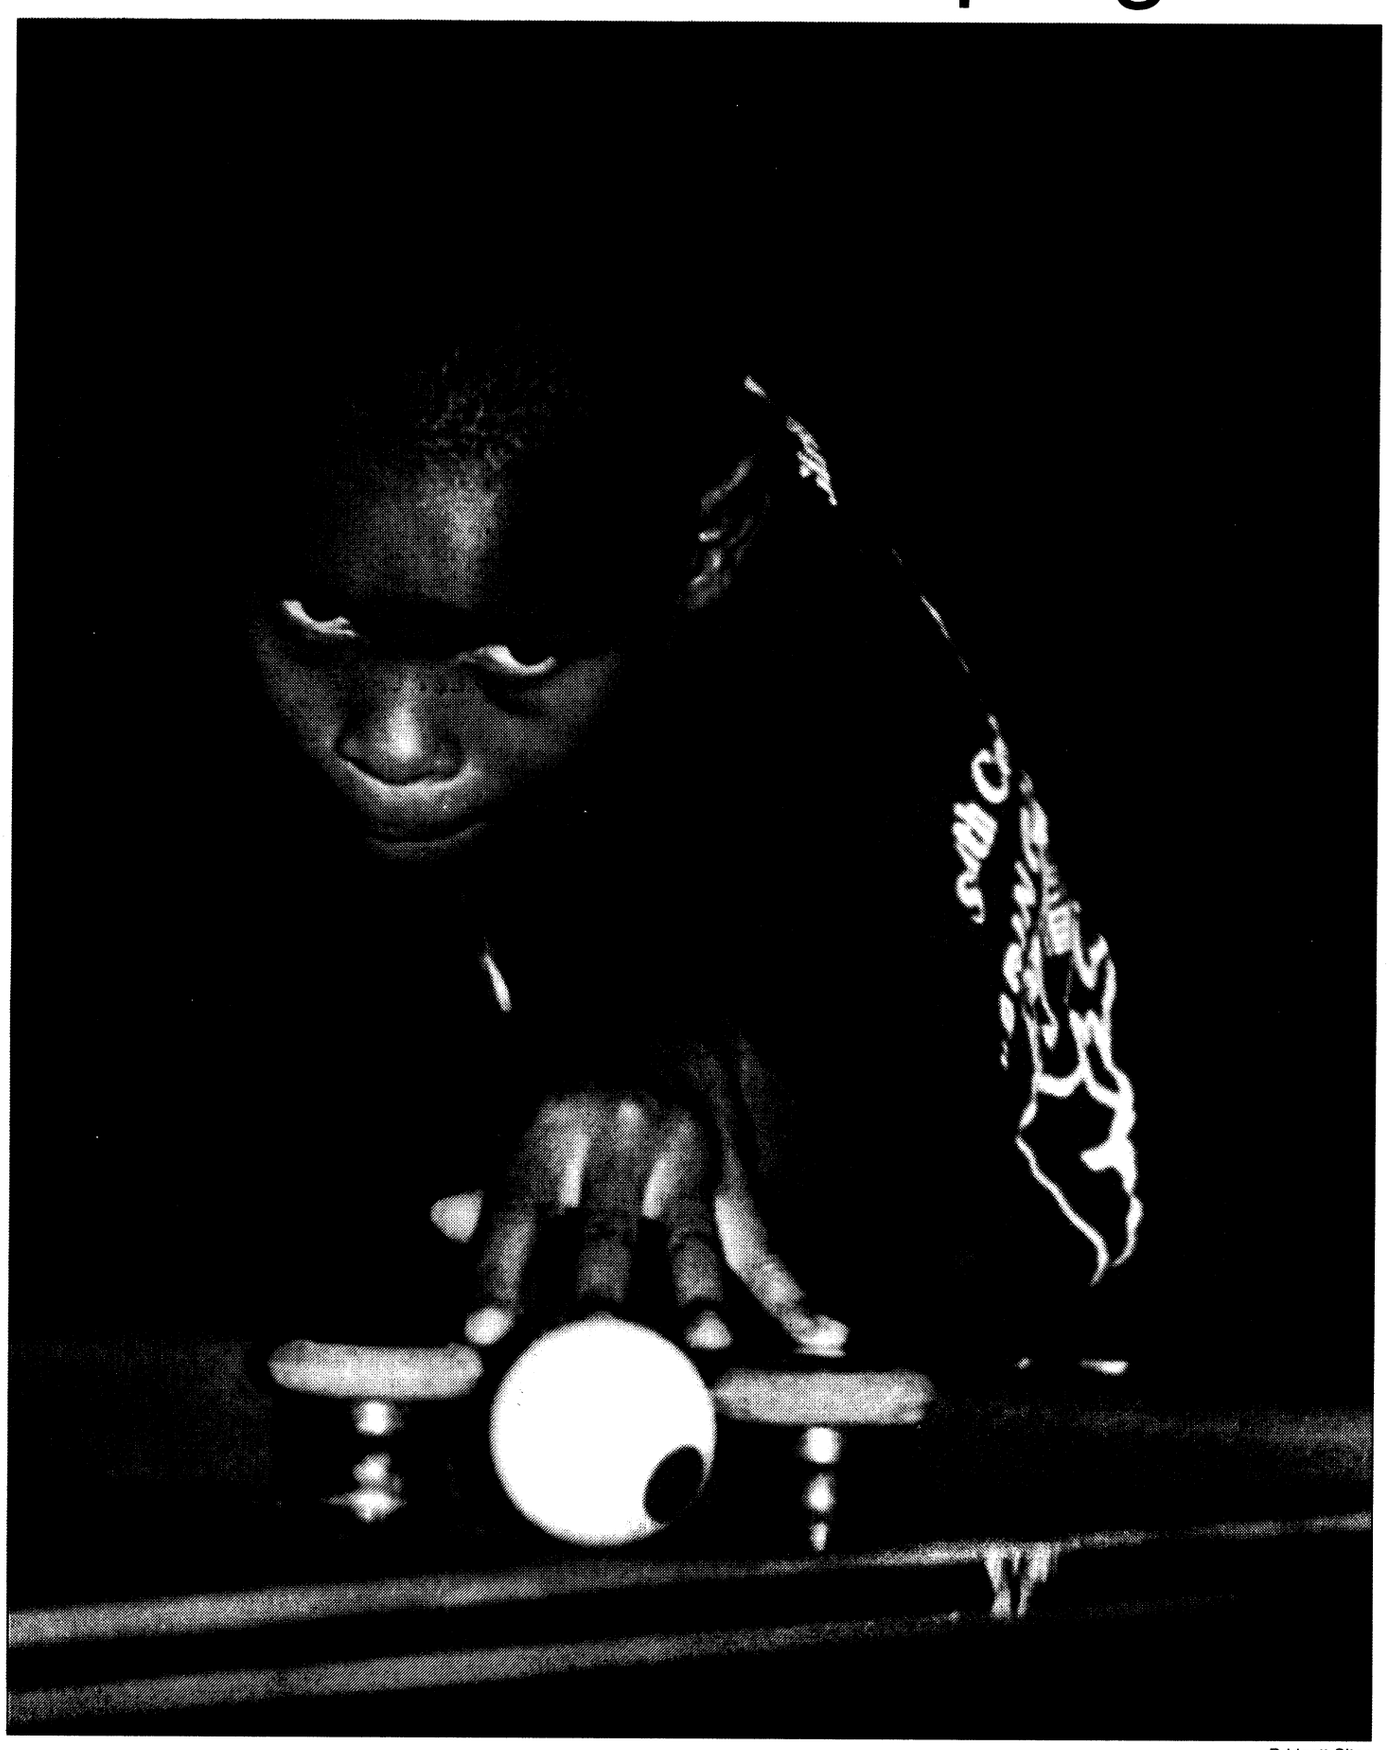
Tonnette McLendon, YS youth program assistant, said the blowout was a joint effort between the Boys' and Girls' Clubs and YS.

"We've formed a partnership with the Clubs this summer, and we thought the children would enjoy visiting Fort Benning and making new friends outside their own communities," she said.

While participants vied for the title of champion in bumper pool, fooseball, ping pong, nine-ball and air hockey tournaments, others took advantage of the center's snack bar and craft corner.

Alyssa Willis, a 13-year-old member of the East Columbus Boys' and Girls' Club, said visiting the YS center was a nice change of pace.

"They have bigger facilities here, and they have a snack bar, something we don't have. It's good to see a different place and new faces," she said.



Deedee Lopez-Myers is serving as the Boys' and Girls' Club director at Fort Benning's YS center. She said the partnership between Fort Benning and the Boys' and Girls' Clubs is designed to provide activities and programs that are mutually beneficial to both organizations.

"Our theme this summer is 'Fun with a Purpose,' and our purpose is to get these kids out to make new friends and see what other clubs are doing throughout the area," Lopez-Myers said. "We're pleased there is such a great turnout, and you can tell the kids are having a lot of fun."

E.J. Hibbler, a 9-year-old member of the South Columbus Boys' and Girls' Club, said the event was indeed fun — with a purpose.

"I'm making new friends, having fun and playing safe," he said. "I plan to come back again."

The Boys' and Girls' Clubs of Phenix City and North Columbus will be visiting the YS center today, from 1-3 p.m. The final blowout is scheduled for Aug. 4. All YS members between the ages of 11 and 16 are invited to attend.

Nursing mothers discuss benefits

Hospital plans Breast-feeding Week Aug.1-7

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The saying may be "Don't cry over spilt milk," but you can't convince a breast-feeding mom of that.

Spc. Charmaine Lawery recalled her reaction when husband Quincy accidentally spilled some of the breast milk she had expressed for the couple's 5-month-old daughter, Reagan.

"I almost cried. He had no idea what I had gone through to get that milk," she said.

"Breast milk is known as liquid gold around our house."

It's that gold standard that will be recognized Tuesday through Aug. 7 during World Breast-feeding Week. Martin Army Community Hospital staff members plan to wear gold ribbons during the week to promote breast-feeding.

"The ribbons represent that breast-feeding is the gold standard," said Capt. Sonja Foots, community health nurse.

Foots, the mother of two, breast-fed her children.

"I know, based on the medical evidence, she will be a healthier baby because I'm breast-feeding," Foots said of her 10-month-old daughter.

Foots expresses milk during the day at her office in Soldiers' Plaza and stores the milk in a refrigerator.

"Just because I am a Soldier, I should not have to sacrifice my child's health, if it is not necessary," Foots said.

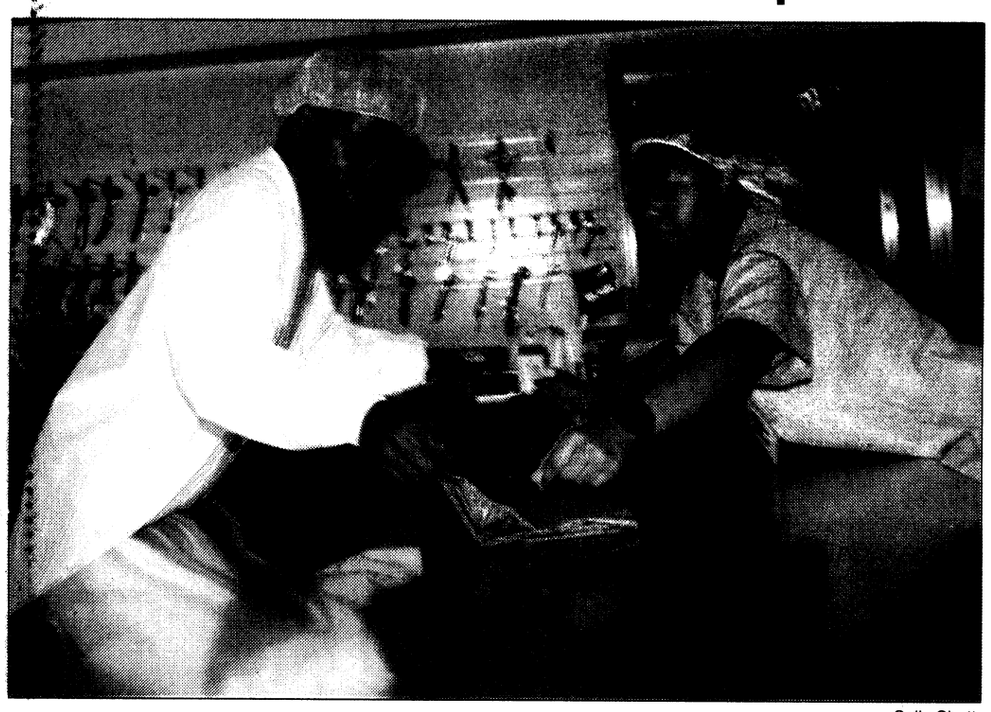
But there have been times when other people attempted to make her feel as though she was trying to get out of work, she said.

"At a previous duty assignment, I felt stress from my co-workers because I had to stop and express," she said. "It was a type of criticism that was not reflected to people who took time for smoke breaks."

Staff Sgt. Tamiko Keeler, Telecommunications Center NCOIC, Directorate of Information Management, has no doubts about the medical benefits of breast milk. Her son, Demetrius, was born prematurely at 24 weeks.

"I saw that the breast milk kept him alive, and I was determined to breast-feed my daughter," she said. "But it's hard."

Keeler drives to the Main Post Child Development Center to nurse her 7-month-old daughter, DeAsijah, at lunch.



"There's really not an area where I can express at work," she said.

For the times she cannot get away and go to the center, she has built up a supply of frozen expressed milk, pumped at home.

Teens working through Red Cross lend helping hand

Special to the Bayonet©

Teen-agers volunteering at Martin Army Community Hospital this summer can name several perks that come with their work.

Most teens say helping others and getting out of the house are at the top of their list. But there's one unique aspect of his job as a volunteer that appeals to 14-year-old Christopher Herold — the chance to observe surgery.

Herold, the son of Lt. Col. E.J. and Catherine Herold, has worked this summer in the recovery room doing mostly clerical chores.

On three occasions he has been given the opportunity to observe operations. Just last week he watched a two-hour orthoscopic procedure on a shoulder.

"Being a volunteer gets me involved in the hospital and lets me see how it works and observe what the doctors do and how they do it," Herold said.

The freshman at Columbus High School plans to become a neurosurgeon and calls the opportunity to see surgery firsthand "an advantage most other students wouldn't have," he said.

Herold worked as an American Red Cross summer youth volunteer last year, and this summer has joined 110 other young people at Fort Benning in the program, which started June 26 and will run through Aug. 4.

Like Herold, most are assigned to the hospital working in 15 different locations from the pharmacy and information desks on the first floor to patient clinics and wards throughout the facility.

Other volunteers are assigned to the Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program on Main Post, and others are swim aids at the O'Club assisting the lifeguards.

Fort Benning's resident artist drew on his own talents to help Faith Middle School students continue to enjoy their "Artist in Residence" program.

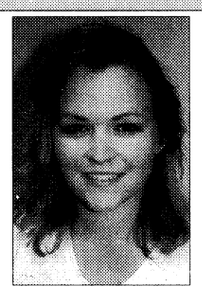
Capt. Michael P. Solovey, who graduated from the Infantry Captains' Career Course Thursday, contributed the proceeds from the auction of an original pen and ink creation to the cultural arts program at the middle school.

On behalf of B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Solovey and Capt. Leonard Kergosien, company commander, presented Faith's PTO treasurer, Diane Ermi, with a check for $250 and an artist's proof of Solovey's rendering titled "Follow Me."

The print, which shows various aspects of the Infantry branch, was signed and dedicated to "the young artists at Faith Middle School from the ICCC class 02-00."

"Junior high is where I got my start in art," Solovey said. "My middle school art teacher made a big difference in my life, and I thought it would be nice if I could make a difference here at Faith."

Assistant principal Rose Brooks was on hand to thank Solovey and Kergosien for their support.



"Since the money was donated for the purpose of promoting the cultural arts, it will go directly into the fund that supports bringing arts to the students," Brooks said.

"We have an 'Artist in Residence' program each year, which provides our students with the opportunity to actually see an artist at work."

Solovey said this is the first time he has donated money from the sale of his work, but it's certainly not the first time he has received recognition for his talent. Articles about his work have appeared in The Stars and Stripes and The Talon, the 1st Armored Division's magazine. The demand for his work, which he calls military art, led him to create The Solovey Art Collection, which can be found at www.arthangups.com.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Special to the Bayonet

Almost every gardening book refers to plant hardiness zones.

But new gardeners, or gardeners new to this area, may be wondering what climate zones are or which zone Fort Benning is in.

Horticulturist and botanists have gathered weather records from across the United States to construct a map that reflects the coldest average temperatures in a given area.

Once the average was found those with similar averages were placed in a specific zone. These zones were colored onto the map referred to as the USDA hardiness zone map. The current map in circulation was released in 1990. This map reflects the weather records for the years between 1974 and 1986.

There are 11 zones on the USDA map. The coldest being Zone 1 with coldest average temperatures ranging below -50 degrees. And Zone 11 being the hottest with the average lowest temperatures being above 40 degrees.

Fort Benning falls in Zone 8 with the average lowest temperatures falling between 10 and 20 degrees.

Although it is important to know the zone a particular area falls in, it isn't a guarantee that a plant suited for that region is going to survive in the garden.

There are many factors in the garden that contribute to a plants ability to thrive. These factors include soil type, rainfall, amount of sunlight, wind, humidity, and in this area, heat. So a zone shouldn't be the only consideration when choosing plants for a garden here at Fort Benning.

ask the judge

Carolyn E. Moller
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q: I heard that I can get out of my apartment lease using the Soldier's and Sailor's Civil Relief Act. Is this true?

A: Maybe. If you are trying to terminate a pre-service lease agreement, then the SSCRA applies to that lease. If the lease was entered into after the service member entered into the military, then the SSCRA does not apply; however, Georgia law provides for an early termination of lease agreements under certain situations if the service member has to move pursuant to military orders.

In order to terminate a pre-service lease agreement, the service member must meet two requirements: the lease must have been entered into prior to military service and the premises must be occupied by the service member or his dependents.

If the foregoing requirements are satisfied, then on a month to month lease the service member can terminate the lease upon providing a 30-day written notice to the landlord. Oral communication of your intent to terminate the lease is not sufficient, you must provide a written notice in order for the SSCRA provision to apply to the early termination of a lease agreement.

The date the landlord receives the written notice determines when the 30-day period starts to run. On a month to month lease, the 30-day written notice does not start to run until the next date the rent is due.

For example, if you provided written notice to the landlord on July 25, the 30-day notice would start running on Aug. 1 because that is the next date the rent is due, and the effective termination date would be Aug. 30.

However, if the written notice was mailed to the landlord on Aug. 1, the next rent due date is Sept. 1, therefore, the effective lease termination date would not be until Sept. 30.

As shown in these examples, timing can be everything when it comes to invoking the early termination provision because the SSCRA does not provide for pro-rating the rent. It starts to run on the first date the rent is due, which in most instances is on the first day of the month.

For those service members already on active duty, Georgia law provides early termination clause for military members receiving change of duty orders.

Under O.C.G.A. 44-7-37, a service member can terminate a housing lease upon providing a 30-day written notice together with a copy of the change of duty orders.

Note, however, this provision only applies when a service member receives a permanent change of duty station or has temporary change of duty orders that place him out of the immediate area.

In order to invoke this provision using temporary duty change orders, the orders must exceed three months. Further, this provision does not apply to service members who sign a lease, then receive post housing.

Finally, under either provision, the SSCRA or the Georgia statute, the service member will be responsible for damages, repairs, cleaning costs and other items of this nature. These provisions only allow a service member to terminate a lease, and do not prevent the landlord from pursuing all avenues of collecting monies associated with foregoing items.

If you need more information on this topic, call the Legal Assistance Office. The phone numbers are 545-3282 or 545-3281 or come by Building 5 on Friday mornings to make an appointment for the following week. Be sure to bring a copy of your lease agreement to your appointment.

Boy Scouts pay last respects to old 'friend'

Troop retires flag, honors national tradition

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 130 Boy Scouts gathered July 12 to pay their last respects to an old friend — a Soldier of sorts — during their annual summer camping trip at Camp Lumpkin in LaGrange, Ga.

Troop 777 took a break from its week-long schedule of swimming, fishing, canoeing and archery to conduct a ceremonial flag retirement before a host of Scouts, leaders, family and community members who assembled to witness the sacred rite.

The field of stars had faded to a pale blue on the aged flag that Troop 777 unfurled and held aloft as the crowd stood silently at attention.

Tony Beard, assistant Scoutmaster, cut the field from the stripes as Scoutmaster Ken Caruthers, a staff sergeant with Headquarter and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, explained the symbolic representation of the separation of the 50 states and the 13 original colonies. A bugler played Taps as each section was tightly rolled and bound with twine to burn.

When a flag becomes faded, damaged or worn and is no longer fitting to look upon as a presentable emblem of display, it should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning, according to the U.S. Code, Chapter 4, Title 4, Paragraph 176.

> "When you retire the colors you know you're doing a service for your community and your country. It just makes you feel good inside."
> Robert Steward
> Eagle Scout

"The flag of the United States of America deserves the same dignity in its disposal as it does during its life," said Caruthers.

"The U.S. Code says it should be treated with the same respect you would give a Soldier, so we gather here to retire this warrior and bid it farewell because it has served its country well."

The Boy Scouts of America have traditionally been called upon to retire and destroy U.S. flags that are no longer serviceable. Caruthers said his troop has a backlog of flags from the VFW, the American Legion, the forestry service and various businesses that "pass them along to us (Scouts) to take care of."

Because each flag is retired individually in a ceremony that takes about 15 minutes, only a small number of flags can be retired at one time. Caruthers said he tries to perform at least one ceremony every time his troop "has an audience and a campfire."

Heavy rains made it impossible to light a campfire during this ceremony, so Caruthers deviated from his usual routine and led the crowd in God Bless America as a parade of Scouts carried the flag from the ceremony and placed it in storage where it remained until Friday, when Troop 777 completed the requisite burning in private.

Caruthers said the U.S. Code does not define who should conduct a ceremony or exactly how one should be conducted, only that it should always remain solemn and reverent.

"Each troop determines exactly how and when they want to conduct it," Caruthers said. "But we all want to handle it in a dignified, tasteful manner. We take the time to explain to our younger Scouts that we're not desecrating the flag, but treating it with the proper respect it deserves."

Robert Stewart, a 15-year-old Eagle Scout from Smiths, Ala., stood solemnly at attention throughout the entire ceremony.

"I've done a lot of these (ceremonies), and it always gives me a warm, patriotic feeling," he said.

"When you retire the colors you know you're doing a service for your community and your country. It just makes you feel good inside."

Booster seats protect children

Patrice Cathright
Community Health Nursing, MACH

Sunday has been declared National Parents Day. What better to celebrate the joy of parenthood than educating yourself and becoming familiar with the various issues that apply to your child's safety.

There are two issues of concern — traffic crashes and child restraint usage.

Traffic crashes are the leading cause of death for children ages 6 to 14 years old. This is in part due to the fact that most kids are unbuckled or improperly restrained in vehicles.

From birth to 1 year old, restraint use is 97 percent. From ages 5 to 15 years, restraint use falls to 68.7 percent, and over 47 percent of fatally injured children ages 4 to 7 years old are completely unrestrained.

A National Highway Traffic Safety Administration study showed only 6.1 percent of booster-aged children were restrained in booster seats.

The NHTSA recommends all children 12 and younger ride in the back seat, properly restrained at all times. Child safety seats including boosters, are very effective in keeping children safe.

Parents should use booster seats for children once they have outgrown forward-facing child safety seats. They should continue to use a booster seat until they are 4 feet, 9 inches tall.

Parents should have child safety seats inspected by one of a number of certified and trained technicians in their community to make sure they are installed correctly.

For more information, call (800) 424-9393 or on the Internet go to www.nhtsa.com.

Committee meeting reviews more than 22 issues affecting military

Harriet Rice
Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Eliminating Tricare Prime emergency room co-payments for active duty family members, phasing to 100 percent reimbursement of basic allowance for housing, audio and visual surveillance for Army child care centers, and military-friendly provisions of various state laws were some of the 22 issues reviewed at the semi-annual Army Family Action Plan General Officer Steering Committee meeting in May.

Regarding medical issue No. 469 Tricare Co-payment for Emergency Room Services, Brig. Gen. Kevin Kiley, Office of the Surgeon General, informed the committee that both the House and Senate Armed Services Committees versions of the year 2001 National Defense Authorization Act include language to eliminate all Tricare Prime co-payments for active duty family members.

When the bill passes, managed care support contracts will be modified to reflect the change, Kiley reported.

In the entitlements arena, issue No. 448 Basic Allowance for Housing Appropriate and Data Collection came a step closer to completion when Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel Lt. Gen. David Ohle reported that on Jan. 1, BAH rates will be at 85 percent reimbursement and 100 percent reimbursement is budgeted for gradual implementation through calendar year 2005.

Weight allowance table for enlisted personnel (No. 457) generated a great deal of discussion.

The issue recommends an increase in enlisted weight allowance to match officers' allowances more closely.

While less than 3 percent of household goods moves of married Soldiers are over the authorized weight allowance, data shows that E-1s to E-3s exceed their weight allowance up to 9 percent more than other ranks.

Committee members made the point that the weight allowance tables are antiquated; more junior enlisted Soldiers are married than when the original tables were written — at a time when the vast majority of conscripted Soldiers were single.

Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics Maj. Gen. Charles C. Cannon, Jr. proposed that as the Army worked a larger increase for all enlisted ranks, it increase the administrative allowance for outside the continental U.S.

"Sure, we can do that," said Vice Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. John Keane. At the same time requesting another look at "why we have the huge weight allowance disparities between ranks when responsibility and authority are not the issue."

A 1999 AFAP issue, No. 447 Audio and Video Surveillance for Child Development Centers, recommended the Army purchase and install audio and video equipment in all Army CDCs.

"We determined that 70 percent of our CDCs need video surveillance equipment," reported Whelden.

"These systems will also provide line of sight supervision for staff who are in the process of having their national agency check completed."

The purchase and installation cost of $6.3 million is expected to pay for itself in 18 months and generate an out-year cost avoidance of $5.7 million annually, said Whelden. The issue, which has the full support of both the chief of staff and the vice chief of staff, remains active as funding requirements are being worked.

"This has been a productive afternoon for me. I hope it's been for you," Keene said in closing remarks. "We don't take it lightly when we assemble a group like this with the entire leadership of the Army backed up by command sergeant majors."

To track these and other AFAP issues, visit the Army MWR Web site at www.armymwr.com.

Initiative: Will make Martin Army 'Baby-Friendly Hospital'

Department Activity, and expresses during the day using a $200 electric pump — an expense not covered by Tricare, she said.

"I have received good support from my supervisors and they allow me time to pump," she said. "I think I am lucky because I know a lot of Soldiers who don't have the support from their supervisors like I have."

Lawery took a lactation counselor's course at the hospital in June and will teach a two-part class starting Monday at 6 a.m. in the Baugh Conference Room at Martin Army for military women assigned to the Military on the Move, or MOM's, program for pregnant and postpartum Soldiers.

Topics will include breast versus bottle feeding, expressing at work and different types of breast pumps.

Martin Army has signed a letter of intent and is working to meet the criteria to become a "Baby-Friendly Hospital."

The Baby-Friendly Hospital Initiative is a worldwide project of UNICEF and the World Health Organization.

"It's a program to highlight hospitals that promote breast-feeding as the best feeding choice for infants," Foots said.

About 70 percent of women who deliver babies at Martin Army attempt breast-feeding, which is above the national average, Foots said.

"Our goal is to increase our initiation rate and our rate of duration," she said.

Only one Department of Defense hospital, Weed Army Community Hospital at Fort Irwin, Calif., has received the program's accreditation.

Martin Army will have to follow 10 steps to reach Baby-Friendly status including training all health care staff in skills necessary to implement a written breast-feeding policy.

Other steps include helping mothers initiate breast-feeding within an hour of birth and giving newborns no food or drink other than breast milk, unless medically indicated.

"Our biggest hurdle is to make sure the staff is trained," Foots said.

Toward that end, she is coordinating lactation counseling classes for staff members.

Volunteers: Find value in helping hospital, community week, 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., most opt for three days a week — all without pay.

"The youths are given T-shirts to identify them in the hospital letting people know that the American Red Cross is there to help. Also the youths, by volunteering, receive valuable experience that will help them later on in life," Jenny Piccione, youth volunteer chairman, said.

The young people must be between 13 and 19 years of age and have a family member affiliated with Fort Benning, Piccione said.

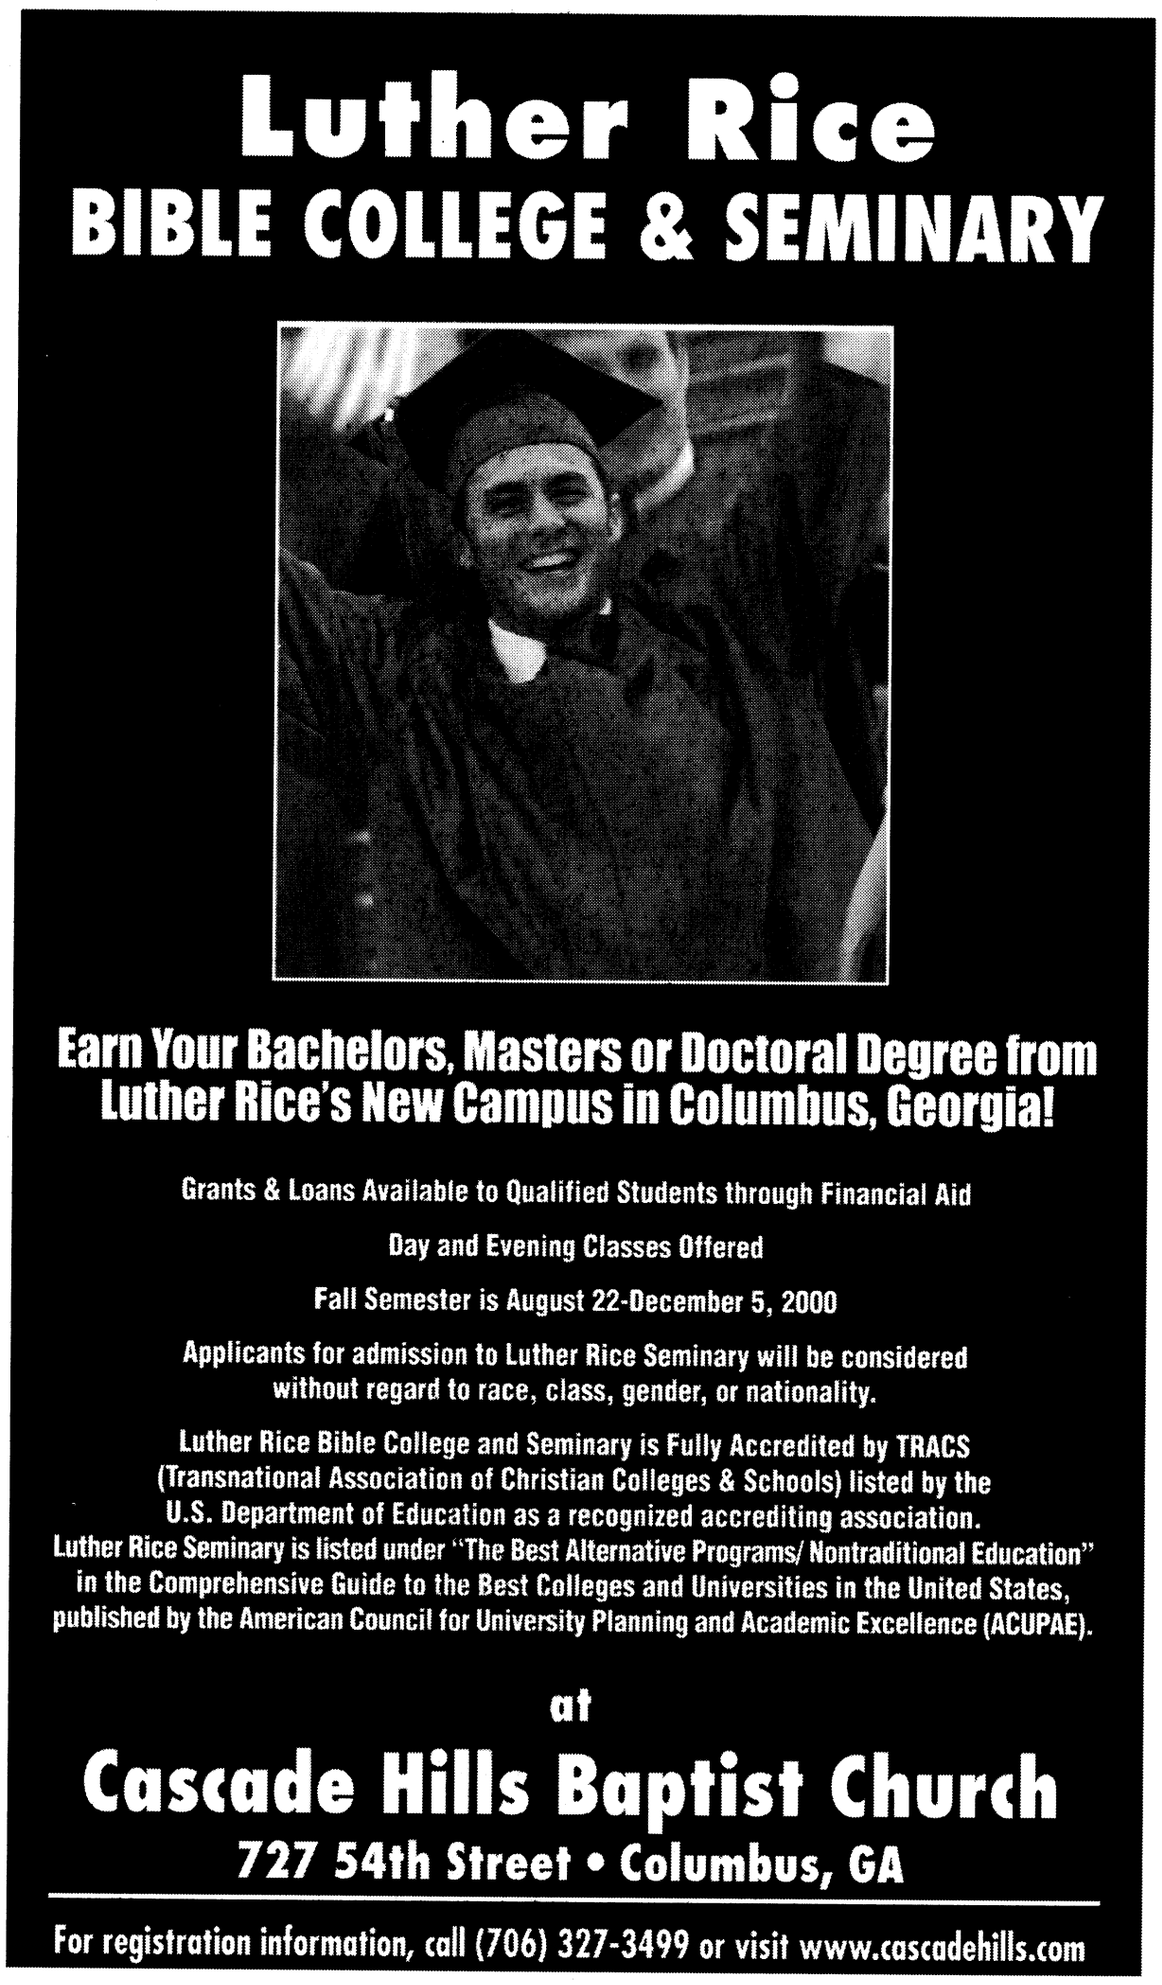
"I like to help people and I'm not old enough to get a real job," 14-year-old Bracha Williams said. "And it's more enjoyable to do this than to sit at home."

Williams, the daughter of retired Sgt. 1st Class Annie Williams, works in the Central Materiel Section at the hospital packaging instruments in sterile bags, folding drapes used in the operating room and preparing other supplies.

"It's a burden off of us to have them work here this summer, especially when we are short staffed," said Gladys Johnson, medical supply technician.

Brandon Williams, 15, has volunteered all summer with Bracha in the materiel section. The two are not related, but Brandon runs into plenty of relatives during his workday. His mother, Capt. Sarah Williams-Brown, is the head nurse for the ambulatory procedures and post anesthesia units, and his 17-year-old sister, Shameka, volunteers in the Pediatric Clinic.

"You never know what interests working here might spark in them for the future," Williams-Brown said, before pointing out another benefit. "I can keep an eye on them during the summer," she said.



Norali Negron, 14, described her duties on the hospital's sixth floor as "being a temporary friend for the patients while they are up here."

Negron, the daughter of Maj. Jose and Li Negron, also plans to go into the medical field, either as a pediatrician or a medical technologist, her mother's profession.

As a Red Cross volunteer, her duties include escorting patients throughout the hospital, taking patients' temperatures and answering phone calls on the ward.

"I've learned not to judge people based on how they look, and I'm not afraid of seeing and being around sick people anymore. I've really enjoyed getting to know the patients," she said.

Balance helps prevent stress, burnout

Chaplain (Capt.) David J. Arredondo
1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, ITB

reflections

Do you ever feel like you are caught in a black hole? Astronomers theorize that black holes happen when some space body collapses in upon itself, creating so much gravitational pull that everything in its vicinity is sucked in.

Have you ever felt all the pain and stress of the world somehow seems to be attracted to you, like the effect of a black hole? If we're honest, all of us have felt that way at times. If this describes you, there is bad news and good news.

First, the bad news is that some specialists estimate stress (and we have plenty of it) contributes to 90 percent of all disease. High stress levels can lead to increased rates of drug and alcohol use, severe stress, anguish, worry, depression, alienation, etc.

With such high-stress levels, there are many individual reasons that lead to a "burnout" level. Among those reasons that apply to a wide cross-section of professions are disparity between expectations and reality, lack of closure (work is never done), workaholism, perceived role conflicts and work overload.

It is good to be energetic, conscientious, determined and dynamic pacesetters; however, without any balance, any boundary-settings, it's a recipe for burnout. But there is good news, too.

The good news is that classic interventions help break the cycle of over-extension and eventual burnout.

There are ways to live a more balanced life. Those with a proven track record include: finding peace of mind through a relationship with Jesus Christ; taking time off regularly (without feeling guilty); increasing physical stamina through exercise; good nutrition and rest; learning to relax; smart planning; learning to accept support from others; finding ways to re-frame difficult situations; and learning how to experience wholesome pleasurable activities.

All of this may sound great, but what is the bottom line? The bottom line is that stress and burnout are nearly always connected with boundary issues. When we think of our personal and family lives, the boundary gets blurred — where does one end and the other begin? Here are some helpful suggestions:

• You are only human and must learn to accept your limitations. Learn to say, "I've done enough and need some rest and balance."

• You have your own personal needs. Ask yourself, "When do I say, yes, no or delegate?" If there is an imbalance, correct it in your favor.

• Do some self-exploration of your professional identity as compared to your personal, family life. Do you allow sufficient time to care for yourself and your family?

Seek to bring a greater balance and ease the tension between the boundaries in our lives. The balance will probably make us even more effective in our work.

Look again at the list of classic interventions and consider how some of them might be integrated into your life now. Begin with a trusting relationship with God, then find ways to care for your family and yourself, along with your work. You'll be a better spouse and parent and a more balanced person.

Get out of debt with simple tips

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Chaplain Family Life Training Program

Most Americans are in debt. Many Americans are living from paycheck to paycheck with no savings accumulated to provide for emergencies.

Personal credit card debt continues to climb. More and more Americans are unwilling to wait to buy the things they want rather than the things that they need. As a result, many Americans are burdened by the stress of high interest rates, bounced checks, repossessions and financial security.

Credit cards, bank loans, debt consolidation, second mortgages, title loans and pawnshops are a few of the means that some people use to "get out of debt." Such tactics actually result in increased debt. Here are some ways to get out of debt.

Koop

First, never spend in a month more than what you make in a month. You will never get into debt if you follow this maxim.

Second, cut up all your credit cards and mail them back to the company.

Arrange with each company to pay off your debts at a rate you can afford even if this is less than the minimum amount. Most companies are willing to work with people as long as they pay an agreed upon amount each month.

Third, never buy on impulse. Buy only the things that you need, rather than the things that you want. Wait three days before you purchase. A sale is not a sale and a bargain is not a bargain if you don't need it and you can't afford it.

Fourth, buy unprocessed foods. Ten pounds of potatoes cost about the same as a pound of potato chips. You don't have to be a college graduate to know which is the better buy and which is better for you.

Fifth, set aside some money each month for savings to pay for emergencies. Do this even though you are working to get out of debt. You will want to work at increasing your savings to 10 percent of your earnings.

Bombers win, lose in doubleheader

Karen Taylor

Rockies pitcher Walter Rivera slides into home plate but is tagged by Bombers pitcher Jeremy Cook, while Rockies coach Robert Abeyta catches the action.

Bombers' baseball club dominates first game, falls apart in second

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The Bombers' chemistry was of sound bonding Saturday as they overtook the Rockies 7-1 in the first game of a doubleheader.

The winning ingredients for the Bombers ball club were strong pitching by Jeremy Cook, a tenaciously tight infield and the clinch catches and backup by the outfield.

"We looked like a totally different team," said Chuck McGarry, A Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Cook, a fellow student at Columbus State University of Eric Hare, Student Detachment, and member of the CSU baseball team, is a welcomed addition to the Bombers.

He worked the Rockies over in the batter's box and tallied seven strikeouts.

"When they started falling behind on the fast ball, I started calling the curve and the changeup," said Bombers catcher Chris Burgess, B Co., 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

But it was the Bombers infield that stifled the Rockies scoring chances, catching their base-runners in several squeeze plays.

The pinball action between the Bombers' infielders prohibited the Rockies from taking extra bases, which eventually cost them the game.

Burgess strong-armed the Rockies' runners, trying to steal second by rocketing throws with pinpoint accuracy to the bag — base-stealers didn't have a chance.

The Rockies offense remained undaunted by the catcher's arm and continued to try and capitalize on Bomber errors.

Reality hit in the top of the fifth when Rockies' Walt Rivera tried to steal home on a wild pitch.

Burgess seemed nonchalant in retrieving the ball behind the plate but quickly snapped it to Cook in time to tag Rivera out at home.

"I had him in the corner of my eye, and once I saw he was going, I knew we had him by a long shot," Burgess said.

The strength of the Bombers defense was needed to seize the win because the Rockies fought all the way to the last inning.

Taking an early lead 1-0, the Rockies were ready to defend their lead with Rivera on the mound, whose pinpoint accuracy tallied him 12 strikeouts.

Unfortunately the Rockies' defense came up short, literally.

With only eight men on the field and unable to recover from fielding errors, the Rockies allowed the Bombers to run away with the lead.

"It was a well-played game. We put extra base hits together in the end to break open the game up by a couple of runs," McGarry said.

Despite the number of strikeouts, Bomber batters had heads-up base-running and the back-to-back hits needed to tally runs.

Final quarter decides YS game

The towering defense and the sharp shooting of Michael Eberhart Jr. gave the No Limit Ballers an edge over the '76ers in the 10- to 12-year-old age division of Youth Services basketball action July 20 at the YS Gym.

The game was up for grabs until the final minutes of the fourth quarter when the No Limit Ballers targeted the tiring '76ers defense.

The game started with a bang as No Limit Ballers' Taylor Osborne received the ball from the tip-off and drove in for the score.

The teams traded baskets and steals throughout the first quarter, and it ended with the No Limit Ballers in the lead, 6-4.

The '76ers dominated the second quarter and forced a shutout.

Terrance Jones, a center for the '76ers, drove to the basket several times and played a tough defense.

Although he didn't score, Eberhart, center for the No Limit Ballers, was able to force multiple turnovers, and while standing a few inches taller than the rest of the players, he made key rebounds, which kept the '76ers from scoring. The first half ended with the '76ers

Ruggers receive go from Army

'Rough' game added as new military sport

Marcia L. Klein
Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Soldiers have been playing rugby for years on their own, but now the rough-and-tumble sport has been added to the Army and Armed Forces Sports calendars.

Aug. 8 is the deadline to apply for the first-ever All-Army Rugby team. The trial camp will be held Sept. 27-Oct. 7 at Fort Indiantown Gap, Pa.

"This is the first year rugby is recognized as an official armed forces championship," said Maj. Suba Saty, the Armed Forces Sports chief.

Active-duty Soldiers on permanent duty status are eligible to apply, as are members of the Army Reserve and National Guard.

Application forms, DA forms 4762-R and 4763-R, are available at installation sports offices and require the signature of the Soldier's commander.

Applications can also be downloaded from the Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation Web site, www.armymwr.com. Click on Army Sports, under the Sports listing on the home page, then click on the "athlete application and info" button.

'Stars of Tomorrow' shine at post bowling center

Disabled youths shoot for kingpin, find summer fun

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

When the alley lights dim every Saturday afternoon at Fort Benning's Main Post Bowling Center, the "Stars of Tomorrow" come out by the dozen. They shine brightly, as if they've found their haven — if not their heaven — surrounded by kindred spirits and compassionate friends.

Like most bowling leagues, the "Stars of Tomorrow" meet once a week for three hours, but what sets them apart from other bowlers is the common link they share with each other. They all have disabilities of some kind that may limit their speed and precision but never their enthusiasm.

"Stars of Tomorrow" is the brainchild of J. David Crouse, a Columbus resident who retired from the Army in April. He started the league last summer for children with disabilities, like his 14-year-old son Doug, who has Down syndrome.

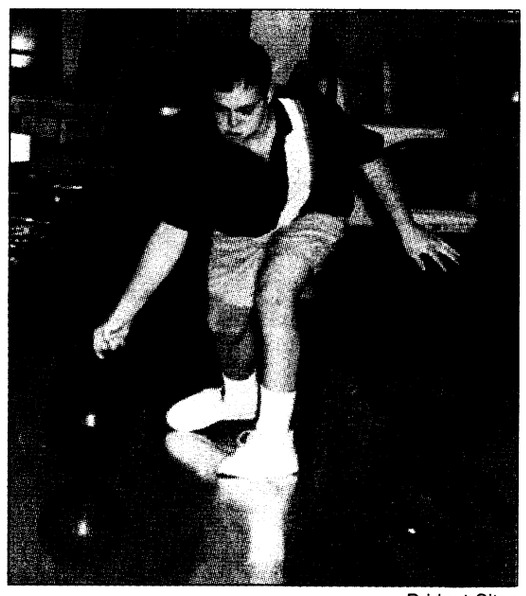
Although Doug and his friends play softball each Spring in the Challenger Division, sponsored by the Southern Little League, there were no other activities designed specifically for children with handicaps.

"When softball was over, there was nothing for these kids to do," Crouse said. "They needed something to do during the summer besides sit around the house and wait for school to start again. Bowling was the answer."

Their disabilities range from mild to severe, some physical, some mental. Some are confined to wheelchairs and require a ball ramp to bowl. Others have learning disorders, such as attention deficit disorder.

Whatever their disability or its severity, they've found a place where they fit in at the bowling alley — a place where the only handicap they notice is the one on their score sheet — the one that evens the odds and gives everyone a fair shot at winning the game.

"Some are pretty good bowlers," Crouse said. "Some are not, but it doesn't matter because we score them with handicaps and use lane bumpers, which gives them all a chance at winning."



It's hard to imagine, when watching the "Stars" bowl, that it matters at all who's declared winner. They cheer, they applaud, they encourage and they high-five. They even tease, but always with an underlying current of affection and pride.

"They always stay motivated. They're never discouraged for long," Crouse said. "It's hilarious, and it's fulfilling. You just don't see this kind of excitement on the ball field.

"Here they're working together as a team, but accomplishing a lot as individuals. It builds their confidence in themselves, but in the end, they always ask, 'How did we do?'"

Eleven-year-old T.Z. Canterberry has cerebral palsy. He said he looks forward to spending Saturday afternoon at the bowling alley.

Bulls blast engineers, 38-4

30th Inf. Regt. breaks 317th defense, scores on multiple homeruns

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff

Spc. Amy Nyland

Engineers' shortstop Jeffrey Palmiter fires the ball to first base in the July 20 game on Knappenberger Field.

It was no holds barred for the 3rd Brigade "Bulls" of B Company when they took to Knappenberger field and blew Headquarters and Headquarters Company out of the water with a score of 38-4 in post softball action July 20.

Heading into the game with only eight players, HHC, 317th Engineer Battalion wasn't able to make up for the lack of strength and ultimately ended up skunked by B Co., 1st Bn., 30th Infantry Regiment, when the game was called at the bottom of the fifth.

The Bulls went to the plate with mighty bats and preyed on HHC's weakened outfield early in the game. Doubles, triples and homeruns had the Bulls streaking across homeplate one after the other, and by the time they turned over play they had already reeled in 10 runs.

HHC wasn't deterred by the deficit and managed to load the bases, only to be shut down by a double play.

The second inning looked just as promising for the Bulls when left center Mark Shufford and extra hitter Rich Zubeck both nailed homeruns. Singles became a mainstay and allowed the Bulls to advance three more runners into home.

When HHC headed to bat they were immediately shut down by the Bulls with two catches and a strike out, leaving them at 0-15 at the bottom of the second. It was almost as if the Bulls copied and pasted play from the second inning into the third when single after single, and help from a grand slam by Zuebeck put five more points on the board for the team.

Determined not to end the game without any points, HHC's second baseman Chris Decastro knocked a strong double to bring in one runner and put a mark on the board. The team headed out of the inning with the score 20-1.

Lackluster play by the Bulls during the fourth produced only one run and it seemed HHC might make a turn about when they managed to knock a succession of singles adding two more points to their total. However, they were ousted by a series of catches by Bull's infielders.

When the fifth rolled around the Bulls once again stepped up the intensity and made the possibility of a comeback impossible. Homeruns by right center Steven Lesko, second baseman Alan Leutele and first baseman Michael Johnson contributed to a score of 17 for the inning.

Knowing it was their last try at bat, HHC gave their all and managed to fill the bases with a string of singles.

A knock by Jeffrey Palmiter helped bring in one runner, but the team would see no more points after three consecutive outs.

Coach for HHC, David Minott said it was his unit's first day back from the field, which contributed to a lack of participation and ultimately the team's loss.

"Our main concern was to just go out and play with some heart," Minott said. "The only thing worse than losing is forfeiting and we weren't going to let that happen. There's no shame in losing a game if you tried."

Left fielder for the Bulls Quentilis McDowell said it was his team's defense that really nailed the game. He also said they are definite contenders for the post championship.

"We have the best defense of anyone on post and when our hitting is on we'll toast them all," McDowell said. "I think we are definitely going to be the team to beat for the post championship."

NLB: Score big in last-quarter victory

in the lead 10-6.

The No Limit Ballers came alive during the second half starting a scoring frenzy and allowing only four points.

Forward Arthur Scott took the ball down the court and was able to drive past several No Limit Ballers defenders to get a jump shot off before he was covered again.

Eberhart did most of the scoring in the third quarter, but Jarelle Woodhouse was able to get a basket added to his stats.

The No Limit Ballers regained their lead, 17-14 as time expired in the third quarter.

The '76ers began to show fatigue as the ball was inbounded for the first time in the fourth quarter.

Damias Lyles a '76ers guard, was fouled while shooting and was able to add another point for his team at the foul line bringing the game to within two points.

Woodhouse and Osborne began to work outside and were successful in their long-range shooting several times.

Eberhart sunk the game ending shot giving the No Limit Ballers their third victory.

After the game Michael Eberhart Sr. said he was very pleased with his team's performance.

"Everyone did a great job," he said. He said his son did a great job of rebounding and shooting, as well as Osborne too.

"We work down low, and key in on getting the ball there," he said.

Although his team lost, Arthur Scott Sr. said the game was one of the best.

"It was a really great game," he said. "They were a tough team, but I think we did outstanding.

"The whole team got involved, but it seemed like they tired out in the second half," he said. "I think it was partly because of the heat," which was into the high 90s.

Both teams will play again Thursday at the YS Gym.

Bombers: Turn tables on Rockies

The score remained 1-1 until the bottom of the fourth when Cook's solid hit landed him on second. McGarry then hit a double scoring Cook. Before the next batter, Josh Kronyak, B Co., 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., was walked, McGarry stole third and then took home on a wild pitch. A single by Ronnie Preston, 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt., drove Kronyak to third, and on a ground out to short he came home to make it 4-1.

The Bombers scored three more in the bottom of the sixth to close the game, 7-1.

To make the win happen was a definite morale booster to the team after their 4-3 surrender to their rivals, the Cannons, July 15.

"After last weekend we knew we could play with anybody," said Bombers coach Matthew Dillon, B Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

The Bombers' strengthened confidence and chemistry came together for them as they put the past behind them — the double loss of their first meeting against the Rockies June 18 — and came up with a win. Unfortunately the heat took its toll on the players of both teams in the second game. Although they had enthusiasm, the first-game sparks were gone.

The only place heat wasn't present was on the mound for the Bombers. They played musical pitchers trying to find someone to put it over the plate but it was too late by the time they found Kronyak to consistently finish out the rest of the innings.

The Rockies, after borrowing a player from the Bombers to finish out their squad, relied on a one-man show, Jeffrey McCalister, for the majority of their runs. McCalister effortlessly walloped three home runs for a total of nine runs in the first two innings.

By the end of the third inning, Rockies' coach Robert Abeyta succumbed to leg cramps and that was evidence enough that both teams were spent. The game was finally called, much to the relief of both teams, in the fifth with a score of 16-3, Rockies.

Stars: Receive help, entertainment

"Coming here is my favorite part of Saturday. It's fun and I'm getting good at bowling," he said.

T.Z.'s mom said the improvement in her son's bowling skills is secondary to the real benefit of "Stars of Tomorrow."

"The social interaction is the most important thing," Sonja Canterberry said. "He loves to get together with his friends, and it's good for him."

The total cost of an afternoon of bowling, rental shoes and balls included, is only $2 — a special rate for the "Stars of Tomorrow" and a real bargain in Canterberry's opinion.

"This is the cheapest form of entertainment in town," she said. "There's no place else we can take the kids for three hours and have such a good time. This bowling alley has been great to us."

Family members, both adult and children, serve as "bowling buddies," helping the bowlers who have difficulty handling the balls. They also keep scores, tie shoes and pass out hugs, free for the asking and in generous quantities.

The familial lines blur, and to the onlooker, its hard to know who belongs to who.

Amanda Wagner, 11, comes every Saturday to help her younger brother and cousins. She prefers being a "bowling buddy" to being on a league of her own.

"I help whoever needs it. I get to bowl, and I get to hang out with my friends," she said. "It's a lot of fun and it makes me feel very good inside."

Crouse estimates there are more than 180 children with disabilities registered in the school systems of Fort Benning, Chattahoochee and Muscogee Counties. Twelve bowlers have registered for "Stars of Tomorrow," which started June 24 and runs through Aug. 26.

Originally Crouse intended to offer the opportunity to children between the ages of 5 and 18. However, he has since altered the registration to accommodate all ages.

"Anyone is welcome here," he said. "We have a 4-year-old, and last week we got a call from a 24-year-old who's interested. That's great. We have room for everyone."

Almost All Your Investments Are In Equities. You Need Some Liquid Investments. Great, Another 2,000 Choices To Consider, Right?

There are plenty of investment choices out there. And it certainly can get confusing, even when choosing liquid investments. So we'd like you to consider Series I Bonds. They're backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. Treasury, so every cent of your investment is protected. They're guaranteed to stay ahead of inflation for up to 30 years, and their interest is fully exempt from state and local income taxes. What's more, you can get started with as little as $50. And you can purchase them where you work, bank, or through the new U.S. Savings Bonds EasySaver℠ Plan. To find out more about I Bonds, point your browser to www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to I Bond Investor's Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. I Bonds. They're one easy, and safe choice to consider.

- Opened the landscape to provide a more aesthetic view

CONUS Replacement Center
- Provided games, computers, pool table, books. TVs, movies
- Established and operate a recreation center for Soldiers being in or out processed for contingency operations
- Excess equipment from Building 4 fitness Center

FAMILY PROGRAM EXCELLENCE...

Army Community Service (ACS) will celebrate its 35th birthday on July 25th, 2000. Fort Benning's excellent community service programs are designed to assist commanders in providing family support services to Soldiers and their families. The following represent some of the Fort Benning ACS accomplishments during the 1999-2000 fiscal year.

Family Advocacy Program (FAP)

The FAP focuses on child and spouse abuse prevention and education. The "First Steps" program has expanded, reaching more than 1200 family members, primarily assisted by 14 trained volunteers. The FAP serviced more than 3,000 Soldiers and family members during 19 pre-deployment briefings. The FAP sponsored the second Domestic Violence Conference in March 1999 for local tri-community (Fort Benning, Columbus, and Phenix City) professionals. The FAP staff now includes a training specialist and Victim Advocate.

Army Emergency Relief (AER)

Army Emergency Relief provides emergency financial assistance in the form of grants and loans to members of the Armed Forces and family members. AER provided $654,147 in loans to 799 clients and $86,738 in grants to 103 clients to assist Soldiers (active duty and retired) and widows of the community. The 1999 Annual AER Campaign received contributions in excess of $178,295.

Family Member Employment Assistance Program (FMEAP)

The FMEAP offers assistance to family members who are seeking employment. It is provided through employment information that includes private sector job bank, personal training development workshops, individual job search assistance, and counseling for skill identification and employment options. In the FY 99 time frame, 667 Soldiers and family members placed in jobs, which resulted in $6.87 million in additional income for military families.

Consumer Affairs/Financial Assistance Program (CAFAP)

The CAFAP ~ offers information, education, and individual counseling, and assistance in consumer issues, financial planning, family budgeting, and debt management matters. During the FY99 period, 1,584 individuals received training in 121 classes. The CAFAP also sponsors consumer workshops, such as the quarterly car-buying seminar.
Soldiers/families returned a total of $130,259 to creditors in debt liquidation programs.

Utility Coordination Center (UCC)

The UCC allows newly arriving Soldiers to obtain utility services (water, power, gas, and telephone) at a single location. The UCC in/out processed 6,563 Soldiers and returned $122,054 to the participating utility companies in FY99.

The UCC provides the convenience of one-stop utility connections and disconnections. Soldiers with good credit standings are not required to pay deposit to have their utility service initiated.

Relocation Assistance Program (RAP)

During the FY99 time frame, RAP provided relocation information to 5,533 Soldiers; assisted 25 family members in completing citizenship classes; provided Lending Locker assistance to 125 Soldiers and their families; and conducted Newcomer/Spouse Orientations for 375 Soldiers and spouses.

Emergency Food Locker

The ACS Food Locker assisted 224 clients with a two-day supply of emergency food during FY99.
During the holiday season, turkeys were provided to needy Soldiers and military retired families. Food Locker items are made available through the generosity of private organizations, food drives, commissary vendors, and local businesses.

Army Family Team Building (AFTB)

Designed as a survivor course for Army spouses, AFTB is targeted toward new people in the Army, leaders in the community, or anyone interested in updating personal skills or basic knowledge. AFTB, a total volunteer program under the auspices of ACS, celebrated its fifth birthday on December 16, 1999. All AFTB courses and materials are available and free to Soldiers, family members, and DA civilians. During the FY99 time frame, 1,544 individuals participated in AFTB training at Fort Benning.

School Age Services (SAS)

During the summer FY99, the SAS program offered various educational/recreational activities for children. This was at no extra cost to the parents. The SAS Computer Lab instructor designed, implemented and trained staff (CDC, FCC, SAS) on basic computer skills to help meet training requirements. Effective 1 October, the program added the USDA Food Program. This allows for a nutritious breakfast and snack to be served to all children enrolled in the program. A bowling league was implemented in the fall of FY99. Demand increased from one league to two. An ACS Food Drive was set up within the SAS program to donate canned goods to ACS. In FY00, SAS children will volunteer to Christmas Carol around the installation and provide a "Tree of Giving" to give items to the needy. In FY00 the engineers are expected to have completed designs to install an air conditioning unit at Patch Hall.

These types of programs help to improve the quality of life and the well being of Fort
Benning's community.

IDENTIFYING AND REWARDING EXCELLENCE...

Soldiers, family members, and dedicated employees are our reason for existence. MWR stays in touch with patrons' needs, wants, and desires with the aid of the Mystery Shopper Program, comment cards, a new website addition, formal and informal research, and direct interaction.

Mystery Shopper Program

Facilities are shopped anonymously by use of telephone and in-person visits. Customer service elements such as store appearance, courtesy of employees, and quality of product and services are evaluated. The Fort Benning MWR Mystery Shopper Program measures excellence, drives the training program, and provides incentives to employees who deliver superb customer service.

Employee Recognition

Employees demonstrating excellent customer service receive a DA Certificate of Commendation and monetary award, recognition as superb employees of the month, quarter, and year, quarterly CG Breakfast recognition, and recognition at the retreat ceremonies.

Comment Cards

Comment cards are one of the older methods of gathering data; yet still one of the most effective. In FY99 we received over 5,821 comment cards from patrons. The cards are analyzed and many suggestions are implemented into the MWR system. Recently, a Customer Service Report Card was designed to display customer comment ratings for each activity with specific comments to employees shown on the Report Card. The document has proven to be a very beneficial tool for employee feedback (an area identified as weak in our DCA Climate Survey)

Fort Benning MWR Website

Our patrons can now access the Fort Benning MWR from around the globe at http\:www.benningmwr.com. This site provides a world of information, both of a local and national scope, and will serve to gather patrons' feedback from around the world. This site currently receives over 50,000 visits per year.

Marketing Research

The Fort Benning MWR has led the way within Department of Army MWR operations in listening to, and acting upon feedback from Soldiers and their family members. DCA uses a variety of formal and informal research methods to determine objective and scientific based needs of our patrons. The Fort Benning MWR performed its first triennial survey in 1988. Following the 1988 survey, there have been four Triennial Needs Assessments performed and include the 1991, 1994, 1996, 1999 surveys. The 1994 and 1996 assessments were both administered by the Department of the Army Community and Family Support Center while the 1991 and 1999 were performed locally. Historical five-year planning and execution data, coupled with financial results and customer utilization rates, clearly show the wisdom of using formal research in making business based investment decisions.

"Standards of Excellence"

"Standards of Excellence" are written goals for each facility. Each "Standard of Excellence" is placed in common areas for viewing by patrons. "Standards of Excellence" are not limited to just MWR locations, but have been implemented post-side. MWR's "Standards of Excellence" vision is that all customers who visit our facilities leave with assurance that we are friendly, helpful, and appreciative of their business.

Your feedback is essential to the continued excellence of the MWR Program. We sincerely value your comments, and ask that you continue to tell us how we are doing so that we may better serve you.

Officials to meet for land swap

Tribal leaders to discuss cultural heritage

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning officials have invited representatives from 11 American Indian tribes to the post for a consultation Tuesday and Wednesday concerning a proposed land exchange between the military and the city of Columbus.

The tribal leaders have also been asked to stay two additional days after the land swap consultation to discuss the post's natural and cultural resources — as well as future plans for development on the installation.

"There are 11 federally recognized tribes who have historical ties to the land we now call Fort Benning," said Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander.

"We will discuss with them and listen to their concerns about any development of, or activity on, land in which they have a cultural or historic interest. This is much bigger than the proposed land exchange."

In negotiation for more than a decade, the land exchange will be the focus Tuesday morning when Mitchell represents the post at the consultation table set up in Room 642 of Infantry Hall.

A representative from each individual tribe has been invited to join him at the table, as well as one from the city, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation and the Georgia Department of Natural Resources' Historic Preservation Division.

Col. Robert Swann, an Army judge from Fort Campbell, Ky., will act as the moderator for the discussion of the proposed land exchange.

"He will serve as a moderator, not a mediator, not a negotiator, not a judge," Mitchell said. "He will help all of us stay on point and move the process forward."

All federal agencies are required by law to consult with American Indian tribes on a government-to-government basis when issues affecting their cultural heritage are involved.

Each tribe is recognized as a sovereign nation. The 11 tribal governments invited to the consultation are the Alabama-Coushatta Tribe of Texas, Alabama-Quassarte Muscogean Governments Town, Chickasaw Nation, Coushatta Tribe of Louisiana, Kialegee Muscogean Governments Town, Miccosukee Tribe, Muscogee (Creek) Nation of Oklahoma, Poarch Band of Creek Indians, Seminole Nation of Oklahoma, Seminole Tribe of Florida and the Tholpthlocco Muscogean Governments Town.

The land exchange proposal calls for the post to deed 2,200

Leaders learn MOUT tactics

Initial Brigade Combat Team studies Infantry

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The senior leaders of the Initial Brigade Combat Team from Fort Lewis, Wash., left Fort Benning last week with military operations in urban terrain on their minds.

For five days the IBCT's senior leaders studied Infantry tactics and techniques of MOUT during the Senior Leader Course.

"I think the most valuable part was the work we did in small, simulated command posts using electronic equipment, which represented the systems we will have in the brigade," said Col. Steven Bailey, IBCT commander.

Col. Paul Melody, director of Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, and his staff transformed three classrooms in Infantry Hall into "command posts" that the IBCT used for training Tuesday and Thursday.

"It was a lot of hard work by Directorate of Information Management, my signal officer and my automation officer. It was a real team effort," Melody said. "All this was done in our spare time."

The rooms simulated the technologically advanced command posts that the IBCT plans to be using by 2015, which includes such capabilities as tactical Internet and videoconferencing.

For this exercise, however, the rooms were equipped with networked computers that had special software and sound capabilities, as well as large terrain maps of the Fort Benning and Columbus area. The IBCT used these materials in an exercise where they developed their own tactics and techniques for operating in urban terrain.

"The most valued aspect that came out of the Senior Leader Course is the continued cohesion and understanding within the group," said Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, deputy commanding general and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School.

The commander and staff had to work together and work the methodology out during the various exercises during the week.

The IBCT's senior leaders had the opportunity to convert doctrine and theory to practice on the ground, Eaton said.

Holy bats in the attic, Batman!

Mammals roost in Fort Benning buildings

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Most times when a person hears the word "bat" they immediately think of Dracula — the biggest bloodsucker of them all.

Fortunately, Fort Benning residents don't have to worry about getting their veins tapped in the night by a fluttering mammal.

"We do not have vampire bats," said Pete Swiderek, chief Conservation Branch, Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Public Works.

There are eight species of bats that exist in the Fort Benning area and all of them eat insects.

"Bats are useful creatures," Swiderek said. "They help balance out the ecosystem."

One thing they do that should be applauded by humans is they eat mosquitoes.

That's not to say they don't become a nuisance, because bats have a tendency to find shelter in places like attics and inside walls.

The three most common bat hang-outs on post are in Bouton Heights' two-story duplexes; the quartels, and the two-story officer quarters in the Iron Triangle area.

With bats in attics or in walls, it can get quite unpleasant, mainly because of bat excrement.

"The biggest problem with them being inside is that they defecate all over the ground. The smell of bat waste, that's the big problem," said Jim Trostle, coordinator of wildlife and trails at the Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center.

One known bat hang-out — mainly because the smell gives it away — is located down the hall from the Special Forces Recruiting Office, in Room 408 of Building 75.

"I can smell it from the parking lot," said Capt. Nate Prussian, who is temporarily working at the SF recruiting office.

Some of the odor also comes from the bats decomposing.

Drought causes wildlife to roam

A sign warns of the presence of alligators at Kings Pond.

Alligator makes rare appearance at Uchee Creek

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

While a group was pulling a boat out at the Uchee Creek marina recently, they realized they were being watched.

"I saw its eyeballs on top of the water," said Patti Hails, manager's assistant at Uchee Creek.

It was an alligator.

Making a rare and uncharacteristic appearance at the marina, alligators seem to be moving there because of the recent drought conditions, said Pete Swiderek, chief of the Conservation Branch, Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Public Works.

The decline in water levels in rivers and swamps where alligators live have forced the animals to go elsewhere for food, water and shelter.

In this case they wandered to the Uchee Creek marina.

The alligator that Hails saw is estimated to be about 3 to 4 feet long and is hanging around the area, but

Basic training teaches fundamentals

Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Have you ever noticed how people who did something before you, always had it tougher?

When you ask for a ride to school, your parents point out that when they were kids they walked six miles to school barefoot through snow, uphill both ways.

Anyone who's been to basic at least one cycle before you really had it tough. Now basic is a wimp course.

I remember my basic at Fort Jackson, S.C. And as tough as that was, it was nothing compared to the reception station.

First, they sent four of us from California to Fort Gordon, Ga. We went there in the middle of the night on a Friday prior to a three-day weekend. Since Fort Gordon didn't have a reception station, they had to bunk us with trainees who were in their fourth week of training.

We woke up in the morning with guys standing over us with bunk adapters in their hands. I guess they thought we were drunks who'd stumbled into the place by mistake.

And since this was a three-day weekend, we didn't get to leave for Fort Jackson until Tuesday because there was no one around to amend our orders and get us bus tickets to Columbia. If I'd known how close it was, I would have walked.

The bad news is we'd followed the orders of the Induction Center NCOs to a tee. We came with the clothes on our backs, shaving kits and one change of underwear.

We were really glad to get to the reception station so we could get our uniforms and fresh underwear.

But things didn't happen that fast. First there was a lot of inprocessing and it was another day before we got our uniforms.

Then we were told to put our civilian clothes into our little gym bags and ship them home via Railroad Express. My mother opened my bag, was floored by the aroma and deposited it immediately into the trash. "But Mom, that was my favorite sweater," I told her months later upon learning of the demise of "my AWOL" bag and its contents.

The reception station was where I first learned of pecking orders. Those with haircuts lorded over those without.

Those with haircuts and uniforms came down on the haircut guys. Those who'd actually been there three days and had learned the difference between "at ease," and "parade rest," were kings of the roost.

You worked your way up the pecking order and just when you reached the top, bam, you went to basic and had to start over. Since we'd missed the company we were assigned to, we had to hang around a week waiting for the next fill.

Here we had holdovers bossing us around, telling us where we could and couldn't go. I mean like these were guys who didn't make it through, yet they made us believe they were next to God and the drill sergeants.

Finally, basic started and the first thing we were asked was if anyone could type. My dad told me never to volunteer, so I kept my yap shut, but one of my California buddies volunteered that "Snively used to work for a newspaper, I bet he can type." So there I was, getting up an hour earlier to type the morning report for the first sergeant.

Fort Jackson in the summer is no different than Fort Benning in the summer. If it got too hot, things were supposed to slow down. But our top drill sergeant didn't recognize that pettiness.

He'd take us out to the range and yell at us to stop running "or the colonel will get me," but to keep up with him and his six-foot long legs, we had no choice but to run.

Yeah, basic was tough when I went through, but I doubt if I came out any better than any other Soldier.

Let's face it, basic teaches you drill and ceremony and some other stuff that will help keep you alive.

The main thing is it gets you into condition to handle the physical training that you'll get in your unit, but most of all it instills discipline and Army values.

Then it's up to the units to take it from there. That's where the real training comes in.

Riverwalk causes temporary insanity

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

It can get pretty boring bicycling up and down the Riverwalk.

"What do you think about out there?" a non-cyclist asked me one day.

Most of the time I'm either conducting an interrogation ... "You couldn't think of some excuse to wimp out today?" "I wonder if Mr. Mileage will notice if I drop back and turn around?" or giving myself a pep talk ...

"It's going to cool off once you get past the tree line. It's probably a nice, frosty 97 degrees back there."

Then there are the little mind games. Maybe it's the line of work I'm in, but more than once, I've distracted myself by composing news leads, the opening paragraphs of a news story.

Police are still searching for a woman last seen bicycling away from the Fort Benning welcome center Monday afternoon.

Witnesses have said that she was wearing black biking shorts and a yellow jersey.

"Yeah, I saw her taking off around 5:30," said Bubba Lee Jones. "Couldn't miss her ... looked like a big bumblebee, except for missing some stripes.

"She was hollering something about headwinds making you strong."

Lately I've been using the front half of my rides to contemplate what, exactly, I'm doing out there. (The back half is reserved for willing myself back to my car). When it's 100 degrees in the shade, it really doesn't matter how much water and sports drink you're packing. It's hot.

The unidentified female bicyclist found wandering aimlessly on the Riverwalk last week has been identified as Fort Benning employee Elsie Jackson.

When questioned, her family expressed dismay and regret that they had not reported her missing sooner.

"She said she was going on a longer ride than usual," said "Oil Can Harry" Jackson, her husband. "She had her Camelbak with her and at the speed she bikes, when she didn't come home after two days I just figured she was trying to ride the whole Riverwalk again. The last time she tried it, it was a week before we heard from her.

"We just figured she would call, asking us to pick her up at South Commons like last time. That hill always gets her. Got to give her credit for trying, though.

"No, we weren't worried. We still had some groceries we hadn't finished off yet."

I was riding next to LaughingLori's daughter one morning when a squirrel made a mad dash across the bikepath inches from our front wheels.

You can't have a news story without a headline:

RODENT BLAMED FOR 2 DEATHS — Bicyclists urged to use caution.

The last time I indulged in a mind game, I branched out and "wrote" a sports story in tribute to the Tour de Lance — I mean, France.

I'll never rack up the average speeds the U.S. Postal Service team turned in, but a record from the other end of the stopwatch might be within reach.

BIKE PATH RECORD BROKEN — A Columbus woman shattered the Riverwalk record Friday when she inched a year-old Raleigh bicycle over the course with a time of 7 hours, 21 minutes, five seconds.

"I think I could have broken 7:30," she said. "But the hills got me."

Local cycling buffs were stunned. "7:21:05? Incredible! I've never done it in more than 1:15," reported one local cyclist. "Was there a stiff headwind?"

School can't start soon enough for mom

commentary

I can't wait for Aug. 17 and I know that I am not alone. Since Tuesday my daughter and I have been doing the back-to-school countdown ... 13 more days.

Don't get me wrong — I love summer. And I loved summer vacation when I was a kid, until the middle of July. By then I was bored.

Bored with my siblings, bored with the summer activities that come with living on a farm miles from the nearest neighbor, and bored with my mother's suggestion for alleviating my boredom — cleaning.

I was always ready for school to begin. I couldn't wait for back-to-school shopping for clothes and supplies. (This was the one thing my mom always dreaded — there were five kids to get ready.)

I am so excited for school to begin I started shopping for my daughter's back-to-school clothes in June. Most of the supplies were purchased last weekend — before I received the third-grade school supply list. I'll be shopping again this weekend.

Nuts don't fall far from the tree and my daughter was ready for school to begin July 14 — the day she returned from two weeks in Savannah where she went to the beach every other day.

Boredom and cleaning aren't the only reasons why she wants school to start.

She loves school. She can't wait to get back to Dexter Elementary, which she believes is the best school in the world.

I think that belief is an integral reason why she does well in school. She believes in the teachers and the school.

Parents whose children are attending Fort Benning schools for the first time need to know Fort Benning Schools work with the parents and children to provide the best education possible.

I know several parents who homeschooled their children until moving to Fort Benning. Here, they send the children to one of the six elementary schools and to the one middle school.

One mom told me she homeschooled because she wanted the best education possible for her children. Now her children are enrolled in post schools and her values haven't changed — providing the best education for her children.

I registered my daughter for school Wednesday. One of my coworkers told me parents were standing in line out the door at Stowers Elementary Tuesday. Those parents are obviously excited for school to start.

There wasn't a line when I registered my third-grader. Parents have until Aug. 11 to register their children for school. Registration is from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. If the student is new to any of the Fort Benning schools, a complete registration packet will need to be filled out. These are available at the school. Things to bring when registering a child for the first time are the child's Social Security number, proof of on-post housing and a current military ID.

When registering a child for pre-K or kindergarten, the child's original birth certificate is also needed. Parents of pre-K and kindergarten students will also be given information about the Georgia Eye, Ear, Dental and Immunization Certificate. VARIOUS VOICES

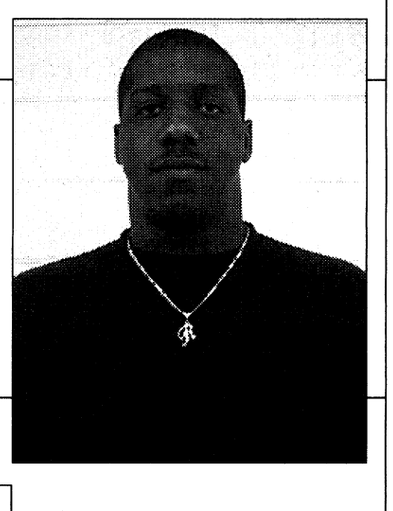
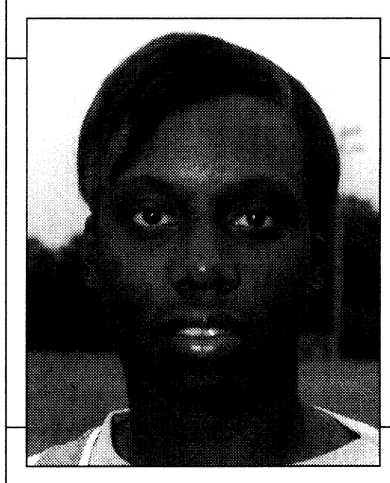
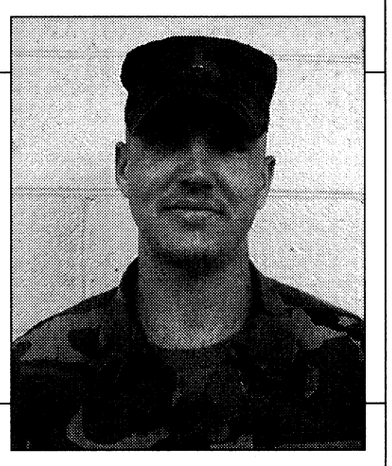
Do you think Soldiers leaving basic training are prepared for their mission?



2nd Lt. Brad Waite, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think they are overall. However, I really think they should do more MOUT training. With all the missions it should be emphasized more."



Staff Sgt. Brenda Brown, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th Corps Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group— "No, they are not prepared. They are coming to the units not able to hang on the runs, pass their PT test or fire a weapon, and then it falls on the NCOs to push them, something they should have gotten in basic training."



Sgt. 1st Class Charles Cowan, Advanced Noncommissioned Officers Course — "Absolutely not. Basic training is just a necessary stepping stone and they benefit from it, but they are never completely prepared. It isn't until they get to their unit and are part of a team that they are prepared."

Spc. Richard Robins, 988th Military Police Company — "I was ready when I left and I think most basic trainees are. However it really depends on the drill sergeants."

Sgt. Angela Jackson, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 13th Corps Support Bn., 36th Engineer Group — "No, because we get a lot of Soldiers coming to the unit undisciplined. The basic principles of the Army need to be instilled before they leave basic training."

1st Lt. Scott Stagner, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "No, because we are concentrating too much on sensitivity and political correctness and we are making our Soldiers too dependent on technology."

Field chow brightens up Soldiers' day

Pfc. Mark Watson

People say the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. Soldiers from 3rd Brigade's consolidated team of cooks know this all too well.

The team is competing for this year's Training and Doctrine Command Commanding General's Best Dining Facility award and were judged July 28.

Being evaluated on their performance, setup, sanitation and food preparation, the team of eight cooks and 10 Soldiers helping the cooks, prepared to win the best field site Armywide since May 6.

"It is a lot of hard work and long hours," said Staff Sgt. Michael Eberhart.

"We are working 12 to 14 hour days and in 90 degree plus heat with all our gear on (kevlar, LBE and other items that Soldiers in the field need). It isn't an easy job."

As the aroma of teriyaki steak, grilled chicken, buttered peas and seasoned corn filled the air, Sgt. Maj. Frederick Jackson, the evaluator for the competition, from Fort Monroe, Va., roamed the site.

"The site looks very good," Jackson said. "The setup is very impressive, the Soldiers are very knowledgeable and things are well above standards."

Jackson, who has participated in the event since 1975, said being nominated to be in the competition is a huge honor and to win requires what few can give.

"To win the Soldiers need vigorous training, attention to detail, the utmost dedication, selfless service and the desire and will to win," he said. "Fort Benning has performed admirably in all those areas."

Although the results of the competition won't be in for several weeks, Eberhart said he is confident his team will win and continue to serve good nutritious food with a friendly face.

> "I remember when I was in basic while out in the field ... a hot meal was the best thing in the world. Hot meals keep spirits high and who wouldn't like a nice steak rather than a little folded up MRE."
> Pfc. Dimitrios Minadakis
> Cook with 3rd Brigade's consolidated team

"Our job has so many moving parts which can deadline a unit," Jackson said. "Improper preparation, handling or sanitation can be detrimental to a unit within two hours.

"The Army travels on its stomach," he said. "We have to ensure it is ready for the trip."

Pfc. Dimitrios Minadakis, a cook on the team, said he feels that hot food in the field is nearly worth its weight in gold.

"I remember when I was in basic while out in the field a hot meal was the best thing in the world," Minadakis said.

"Hot meals keep spirits high and who wouldn't like a nice steak rather than a little folded up MRE."

Although the Army cooks don't often get thanked for their labors, they do get satisfaction in a little different way, said Chief Warrant Officer Georgene Pipkins, the brigade's food advisor.

"Our Soldiers can't go to war with all their weapons without energy, and they get that energy from food," said Pipkins. "When we win we know we won for what we did."

Public Works director retires after 29 years of service

Buck leaves job, 3 loves: DPW, Schools, LEAD

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Col. Randy Buck said good-bye to active duty after 29 years in uniform during a retirement ceremony in front of Infantry Hall Monday.

Serving as a post engineer had always been a goal of Buck's and he described his four years as the director of Public Works at Fort Benning as "Nirvana."

"I was able to do engineer things and at the same time interact daily with units and Soldiers," Buck said.

Buck's dream job involved overseeing as many as 500 employees and managing a budget in excess of $50 million a year.

DPW's responsibilities include maintaining the post's roads, water treatment and sewer facilities, electrical and natural gas distribution, Lawson Army Airfield, dozens of ranges and training facilities, as well as 20 million square feet of facilities on the installation — including barracks and family housing.

"To describe this position as challenging is an understatement," Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander, said.

"Randy Buck has carried this load for more than four years — quietly, professionally and without complaining. He has accomplished miracles with limited resources," Mitchell said.

"There was a new adventure everyday," Buck said referring to the post's infrastructure, which features buildings and underground systems first built in the 1920s.

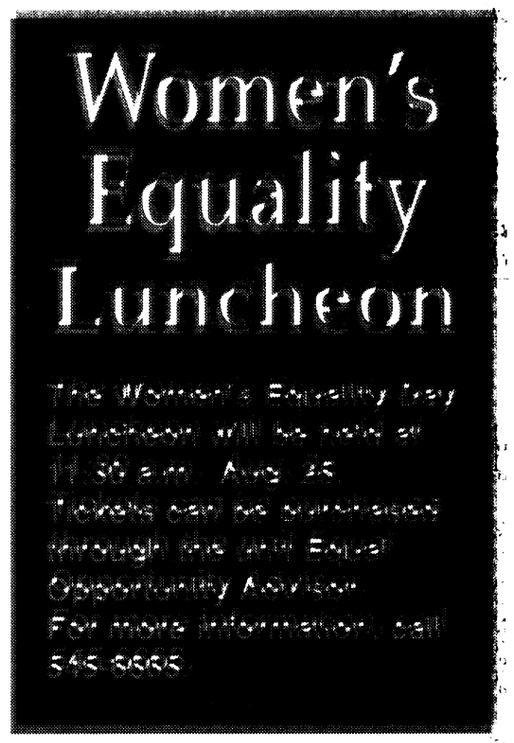
And then there were the occasional instances of bats roosting in tile roofs and alligators threatening dogs along the post's ponds.

"Yeah, those types of things would crop up," he said.

Buck cited numerous reasons why his last tour has been so special, and three earned the label "professional loves."

The first was the chance to serve as DPW and work with a staff who were "under-manned and under-resourced, but not out-gunned," he said.

Buck then highlighted his second "professional love" — the Fort Benning Schools. He served as a member one year and then as the president of the Fort Benning School Board for the past two years.



"In spite of having one of the busiest jobs on the post, Col. Buck always found time to write a teacher a note for a job well-done, to stop and chat with a principal to see how he might help, or to call me late in the afternoon just to see how things were going," said Dr. Dell McMullen, school superintendent.

"He will truly be missed," she said.

Buck's final "love" was working with the Leadership Education and Development Program as a facilitator.

"The one-week course is intended for all new supervisors, but is a great review for experienced leaders," Buck said, urging all leaders to make use of this important force multiplier.

Buck, his wife, Kellie, and daughter, Robin, 12, will remain in the Columbus area.

Terrorism comes in different forms

Soldiers should remain alert for suspicious parcel

Sherry Wade
Directorate of Threat and Security

When someone mentions antiterrorism, do you think of foreign terrorism, bombings, kidnappings or even hijackings of aircraft in far away places?

Because of the increase in domestic terrorism such as the Oklahoma City and Olympic games bombing, it is important for all of us to be alert to all forms of terrorism.

Terrorism can take many forms, including manmade explosive devices or other hazards in letters or packages.

Awareness of this form of terrorism requires active support from everyone to protect our Soldiers, civilians, and family members.

The first line of defense is education and detection of certain indicators on mail that may alert you as being suspicious.

In 1997 eight letters containing explosive devices were sent through the U.S. Postal Service to the National Press Building in Washington, D.C., and to the Federal Penitentiary in Leavenworth, Kansas.

One letter was partially opened by an employee who observed wires inside the letter. The letter was immediately turned over to the authorities and was determined it contained a bomb.

The other letters were intercepted before they were opened. Inside the envelopes were musical holiday cards that contained a letter bomb, which, if detonated, could have caused severe bodily injury to the recipient.

The envelopes carried a postmark from Alexandria, Egypt, with no return address. The cards were enclosed in plain white envelopes, 5 inches by 6 inches in size, with computer generated addresses on the front of the envelopes.

It is very important for military and civilian personnel, and their dependents, to remain alert for suspicious parcels.

In 1991 in Dumfries, Va., a letter carrier identified a suspect parcel in a collection box.

The parcel contained a bomb. By acting quickly, the carrier may have saved lives.

Becoming familiar with the characteristics of suspect parcels could help avert a tragedy. It is important to know the type of mail your organization or your home receives.

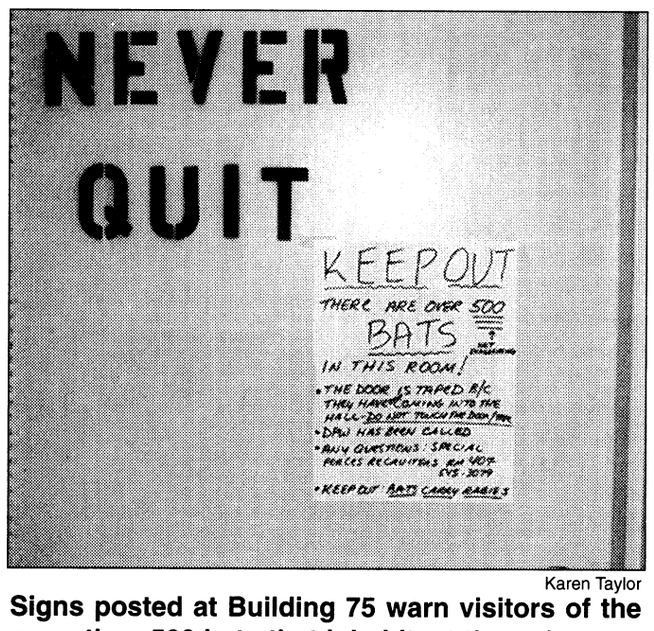
If you become suspicious of a letter or package and are unable to verify the contents don't open the article. Isolate the suspect parcel and evacuate the immediate area. Don't put it in water or a confined space, such as a desk drawer or cabinet.

If possible, open windows in the immediate area to assist in venting potentially explosive gases. Make sure family members or clerical staff know to refuse all unexpected mail at home or the office.

Don't worry about possible embarrassment if the item turns out to be innocent. Instead, contact your supervisor, the Military Police or your local police department.

It is important to be alert for suspicious parcels.

Remember that the item does not have to be delivered by a professional carrier. A designated "runner," a secretary, mail handling personnel, or even a family member could make the delivery or bring it into the home.



When in doubt, remember the steps previously mentioned.

A CLOSER LOOK

Individuals should be aware of the following to protect themselves.

- Improper spelling of common names, places or titles
- Generic or incorrect titles
- Leaks, stains or protruding wires, string, tape, etc.
- Strange odor
- No return address or nonsensical return address
- Any foreign writing, addresses or postage.
- Excess postage on small packages or letters indicates that the object was not weighted by the Post Office. Normally, a bomber does not want to mail a parcel over the counter and have to deal face-to-face with a window clerk.
- Packages wrapped in string are automatically suspicious, as modern packaging materials have eliminated the need for twine or string.
- Handwritten addresses or labels from companies. Check to see if the company exists and if they sent a package or letter to you.
- Inspect for lumps, bulges or protrusions without applying pressure.
- Check if lopsided or heavy sided.
- No postage or non-canceled postage.
- Handwritten notes, such as: "To Be Opened in the Privacy of," "CONFIDENTIAL," "Your Lucky Day is Here," "Prize Enclosed".
- Hand delivered or "dropped off for a friend" packages or letters.
- Any letters or packages arriving before or after a phone call from an unknown person asking if the item was received.

Bats: Create ruckus in buildings all over Fort Benning

Karen Taylor

Signs posted at Building 75 warn visitors of the more than 500 bats that inhabitant the attic.

"Some get in places where they can't get out, like stuck in the door jam," he said.

There are two rooms down the hallway that have an estimated 500 bats in each and not only make a stink, but make a racket, too.

"I remember my first day and I said 'What is that squeaking?'" Prussian said.

The bats make squeaking noises almost every time someone opens the double doors to go down the hallway or footsteps are nearby.

"It's like a horror movie, with the long empty hallway," he said.

Each door has towels stuffed under the opening and tape around the bottom and the door knob to prevent the bats from getting out into the hall.

The occasional bat that has made it out of the room usually finds its way out of the building.

If a bat does make it into a building or home, it is important to call the Conservation Branch at 544-7319 during business hours or the military police at 545-5222 during evenings and weekends.

Currently, DPW is working on removing the bats from the fourth floor of the quartel, but in the meantime the bats are not harming anyone.

"You don't want to hit them with tennis racquets," Trostle said. "Besides the fact that it is very hard to do, there's no reason to kill the bat."

Aside from its ecological benefits, all bats are protected and will therefore not be exterminated.

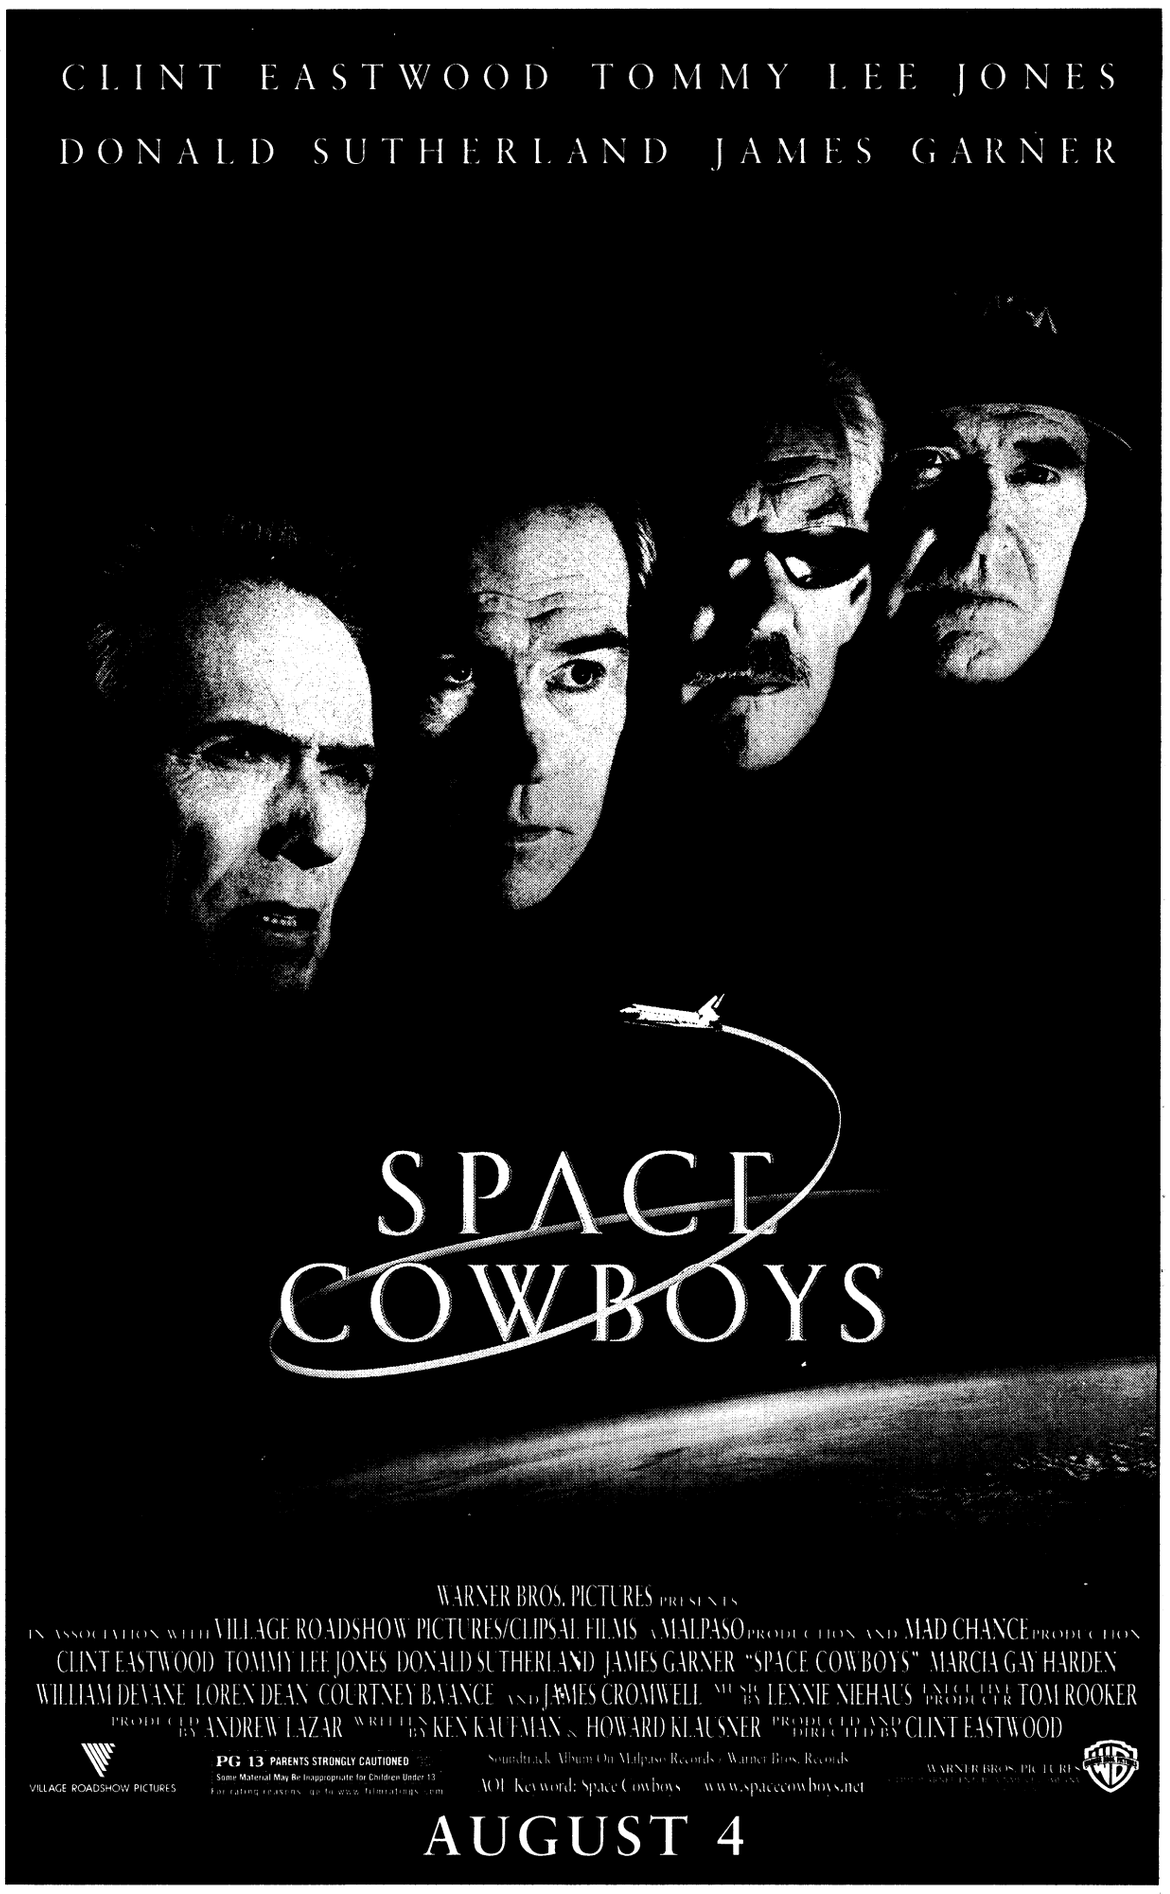
"Due to habitat loss and pesticide use, there's been a decline (in bats)," Trostle said.

The Conservation Branch works closely with housing and Environmental Health among others to safely remove the bats out of the building.

The worst case scenario regarding a bat problem would be removing the residents, tearing the walls down and cleaning them out to remove the bats and their feces, but that is a rare occurrence.

Most times require the installation of netting or a plastic funnel on the opening to allow the bats to exit but not return, forcing them to find another home.

"We're trying for a win-win situation for the residents and the bats," Swiderek said.



Although rabies is a concern with most wildlife, there is a very small chance that a bat would be a carrier.

"The chances are less than 1/10th of 1 percent," he said.

Obvious signs of a bat with rabies would be seeing it in the daytime. "It's like any other animal that's acting strangely. If a person finds a bat lying on the ground during the day, there's something wrong with it. Don't pick it up," Trostle said.

To learn more about bats, the Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center will be holding a program on bats at 2 p.m. Aug. 13. The program will feature guest speaker Dr. Art Cleveland, dean of the science department at Columbus State University. For more information, call 687-4090.

Leaders: Learn strategy from McKenna MOUT demonstration

"It was the first time that they had a chance to act like a battalion and brigade staff and practice with the equipment and they said that alone was worth the trip," Melody said. "The other posts didn't force them to act as a brigade like we did."

The senior leaders of the IBCT have trained at Fort Lee, Va., in logistics, Fort Huachuaca, Ariz., in intelligence and sensor systems and Fort Knox, Ky., in reconnaissance and target acquisition.

The next stop for IBCT is Fort Leavenworth, Kan., for a capstone exercise that will include all training aspects of the past five weeks.

Fort Benning's contribution to the IBCT training began with a demonstration by A Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, at McKenna MOUT.

Then the leaders used what they learned in the demonstration and various briefings and exercises to develop their own strategy for operating in urban terrain.

One of the exercises was a reconnaissance mission in uptown Columbus to gather information about the area.

The IBCT's senior leaders walked the uptown area looking at the terrain from the ground and from atop the 12-story Government Center Tower for a better view.

"We were able to put together our vision of the entire city," said Maj. Doug Fields, operations officer, 1st Bn., 32nd Armor Regt.

This regiment will soon be renamed the Reconnaissance, Surveillance and Target Acquisition squadron of IBCT.

From the government building they noted the locations of key elements within the urban environment such as waterways, road networks and communication stations.

They also talked with the local population as a part of the exercise.

"We decided to just try it," said Lt. Col. Pittard, commander, 1st Bn.., 32nd Armor Regt.

In the past, reconnaissance missions focused mainly on terrain, but now the local population is a major component because of the nature of the battlefield.

In urban environments, similar to Kosovo or Bosnia, Soldiers now seek multidimensional situational awareness, which incorporates terrain, people, political structure, culture and architecture, just to name a few.

The IBCT's senior leaders were looking for such elements in uptown Columbus during the exercise.

"What we hadn't had in the past was real civilians (to work with)," said Capt. Vinnie Bellisario, effects coordinator, 1st Bn., 32nd Armor Regt.

The group spoke with a variety of people from construction workers to the city manager, Carmen Cavezza.

"We found out he was a former commander at Fort Lewis and that was kind of neat," Pittard said.

Soldiers asked a variety of questions such as how people felt about crime in the area and the history of the buildings.

Most people were very friendly and not intimidated by being approached by a Soldier in BDUs, Bellisario said.

But there was a reason for that.

Because the people of Columbus are used to seeing Soldiers in uniform, it wasn't as difficult to obtain information, said Capt. Tod Langley, surveillance troop commander, RSTA squadron.

"What we took 10 minutes to get out of a conversation would take a long time in a foreign country, probably 30 to 40 minutes," Langley said.

Language and cultural differences would quickly add time to information gathering.

Other challenges the Soldiers face during this type of exercise is the ability to filter biases, personalities and pre-judgements out of conversations.

The situation dictates how many people the Soldiers talk to in order to make an accurate analysis and assessment on the area.

"You're painting the picture. Once you paint the picture and you think that's correct, then you report it," Bellisario said.

By the end of the exercise, the team was able to get a real-life perspective on the complexity of an operation in a confusing urban environment.

"People don't realize that it's not from a Saving Private Ryan point of view, where buildings are empty and you can go in and set up camp. You'll have traffic jams and civilians on the battlefield, things like that to deal with," Langley said.

Many of the IBCT's senior leaders found this exercise helpful and enlightening and looked forward to repeating it after returning to Fort Lewis, Wash.

"We could do a general application of this (exercise) in a larger-sized city or town that we could be operating in and talking through it," Fields said.

A CLOSER LOOK

- The IBCT, although built around the Infantry, is a combined arms brigade comprised of cavalry, artillery, engineering, military intelligence, signal and basic support branches that, with the help of technology, will become a faster, lighter force operating in an urban environment.
- One unique aspect of the brigade is branches such as military intelligence and field artillery, which used to be attached to a unit, are a permanent part of the unit and train with them 24-hours a day.
- "We have never had this much intelligence-gathering capability," Pittard said.
- Currently, there are two of these "Infantry-centric" brigades at Fort Lewis, Wash., one is based upon a heavy unit, 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division and the other is based upon a light unit, 1st Bde., 26th Inf. Div.
- Each of these brigades are referred to as medium because they blend the boundaries between light and heavy Infantry.
- The Initial Brigade Combat Team is the heavy brigade, 3rd Bde., 2nd Inf. Div., that, after the Senior Leader Course, will train the rest of the brigade on tactics and techniques learned in Fort Lewis, Wash.
- The new Infantry vehicle that will be the primary means of transport for brigade — still to be determined as to its type or kind — has a fielding date of March 16.
- The second brigade, based upon a light Infantry unit, will follow the same line of training as the IBCT starting with its leaders in a Senior Leader Course. Training is set to start next summer.
- Eventually there will be five brigades, two out of Fort Lewis, Wash., and the location of other three have yet to be determined. These five will make up the Interim Brigade Combat Team.
- The next step after forming the Interim Brigade Combat Team is creating the objective force, which will be the brigade fielding all the latest technology.

Exchange: Raises issues over cultural, historical artifacts acres, the North Tract, east of Schatulga Road to the city in return for 2,156 acres, the South Tract, in Chattahoochee County.

The city plans to use the land it acquires for industrial development, parks and recreation facilities; the post will use its acquisition for training.

In April tribal representatives met with post and city officials at Fort Benning and expressed concern over the protection of more than 60 archaeological sites identified on the land the post would turn over to the city under the proposal.

"They have some very deep-seated objections to the transfer of any federal lands out of federal control," Mitchell said.

"The fundamental issue for them — when lands are transferred out of federal control to a municipality or state agency — is that the protections under federal law might not be observed.

"It's a threat to their cultural resources and sacred sites," he said.

"We are counting on the representatives to help us construct the language in the written agreement with the city that addresses their concerns and gives them the assurance they seek that any cultural resources or human remains found on the land will be treated with the appropriate respect," he said.

After the land exchange consultation, the representatives have been asked to stay an additional two days to discuss the post's Integrated Natural Resource Management Plan, the Integrated Cultural Resource Management Plan and other projects being proposed at the post.

Army regulations mandate that all military installations develop these plans.

"You can see why both of these plans would require consultation with Native Americans," Mitchell said.

"They have interests in the natural resources — for example, some tribes use certain plant life in religious ceremonies — and in the cultural resources, physical evidence of earlier residents and their cultures."

Discussion of projects planned at Lawson Army Airfield will be on the agenda also.

"Lawson Army Airfield sits squarely on an important cultural site — the archaeological site of Kasita, one of the main towns for the Creek Indians prior to their removal to Oklahoma," said Chris Hamilton, cultural resource manager and coordinator of Native American Affairs, Directorate of Public Works.

"It's the site from which the town of Cusseta is named after," he said.

Post officials have talked with groups from other installations who have worked with American Indian tribes on similar issues, Hamilton said.

"We are learning lessons from their work and they are learning from ours," he said. "Actually Fort Benning is on the cutting edge of a lot of this, particularly since there is no previous example for the proposed land exchange.

"That's a new thing for the Army," he said.

The city is covering travel and lodging expenses for the American Indian representatives during the two-day land exchange consultation.

The post will pick up lodging for the visitors during the follow-on meeting, Mitchell said.

The representatives will arrive Monday and stay at the Hilton Hotel in Columbus. After visiting the National Infantry Museum, they will attend a dinner at the O'Club.

The consultation begins at 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Water exercise gives Soldiers added confidence

In the second to last task before graduation soon-to-be Infantrymen floated a raft downstream to deliver ammunition to their allies July 28.

Along the way the "enemy" was sighted and the trainees of A Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, portaged the raft to avoid an ambush.

Soldiers dragged the 300 pound boat from the water, up a steep bank and across rough terrain before they were able to find a suitable area to launch the boat again.

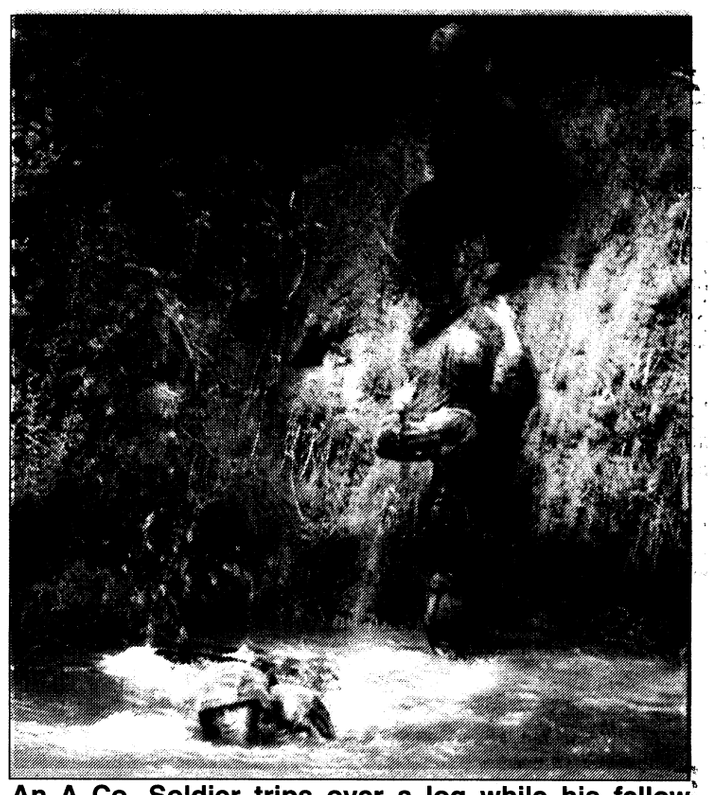
While doing this the platoon received several casualties. Now the Soldiers needed to carry their "dead and wounded" along with the boat.

The river movement was based on the movie Northwest Passage where the explorers had to take their boats out of the river to avoid contact with the French outposts, said Lt. Col. Doug McCallum, 1st Battalion's commander.

This was the first time the battalion took part in this type of training.

"The company has the opportunity to create a water scenario," said 1st Sgt. Randall Allen.

"No mater what the scenario, we try to pull out a value. On this exercise it was loyalty. They learned they needed loyalty to help each other haul the boat across the land."



"We all needed to work together to get the job done," said Pvt. Thomas Geary. "This smoked us. This is by far the hardest thing we have done."

"The water felt really good for the first 20 minutes or so, but then we got tired, especially when we started taking casualties," he said.

Tired and sore from being awake and working on the field training exercise for nearly 24 hours, the Soldiers finally reached the shore. With one more task ahead of them, they said they had motivation to continue with the Bayonet, the name of the field training exercise.

"Everyone is really motivated to get the crossed rifles," said Pvt. Yair Oaxaca. "We are hurting, but we still are driving on."

Units help Fort Benning beat summer heat with shade

Maj. J.F. Lightner
2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers at Fort Benning are getting relief from the summer sun this year thanks to the efforts of the 29th Infantry Regiment and Infantry Training Brigade.

Starting in late May NCOs of the 2nd Battalion, 29th Inf. Regt., and ITB Soldiers started constructing shade at several of the most heavily used ranges on post.

Leaders have long noted the requirements for some sort of relief for Soldiers at Fort Benning from the oppressive heat. In the past, many steps have been taken to include the use of ice, changes in the wear of the uniform and strict guidelines for the amount of time that Soldier can be trained to lessen the likelihood of heat injury.

Despite these many actions by the Fort Benning leadership, this post has consistently been the top installation in the Army for heat related injuries. With the bulk of these injuries occurring within the ITB and BCTB units.

The original plan called for the construction of wood and metal carport type structures. The total proposed cost for these structures was more than $200,000 and would have taken months to build.

The 29th Regiment developed a plan to accomplish the task with minimal funds. The 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. S-4 shop planned and resourced the project using standard camouflage nets, poles and locally purchased hardware.

The first range to have the shade constructed on was the Mortar Training Area at Sand Hill. In addition to the need for shade at this range, it was also used as a testing area to see the feasibility of installing the shade at other ranges.

After a small amount of "tweaking" it was found to be useful. The decision to build the shade at key ranges was made and fully supported by both the 29th and ITB.

Currently the ranges that have shade are the M-16 zero and qualification ranges and McAndrews range.

The total cost of the project was about $6,000 dollars and took 10-weeks to construct.

More important than the money saved, will be a reduction in heat injuries this summer.

Basic training molds future Soldiers

Cold Steel Ceremony celebrates finish of nine-week training

This is the final story of a six-part series, which takes an in-depth look at basic training.

Before daybreak Soldiers from D Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, were awake and ready to make their final trek to become full-fledged Soldiers.

With the 72-hour field training exercise completed, the final task was to march nine and one-half miles back to the Cold Steel Ceremony

Before they rounded the final corner, many of the new Soldiers limped or their faces showed pain. But when they could hear the music playing and see the light from the fire barrel, as if by magic, all the pain left their bodies — they knew they had made it, said Capt. Bill Burley, D Co.'s commander.

The Soldiers gathered around the fire where they were greeted by Lt. Col. Edward B. Daly, the battalion commander.

"This is the circle of honor and only Soldiers have stood here," Daly said addressing the Army's newest Soldiers.

During the ceremony Daly pulled a white-hot bar of steel from the flames and took it to an anvil. He told the Soldiers how when they first came to basic training they were all individuals but the drill sergeants began to mold them into Soldiers, then pounded on the steel.

He retrieved another bar of steel from the fire and pounded it with the hammer.

They went through many hours of training, doing PT and learning the Army values still being formed, he told the Soldiers.

And after many hard weeks of training they were formed into an instrument of war, he said as he pulled a saber from its sheath and held it above his head.

Finally after weeks of hard training, the trainees were now full fledged Soldiers. The drill sergeants walked through the ranks pinning the U.S. insignia in the Soldiers collars. Several of the Soldiers shed tears of joy while many others choked back those tears.

"It was the hardest but most worthwhile nine weeks I have ever spent," said Pvt. Stephen Clark. "During the ceremony everything came together and I really had to hold back the tears."

Pvt. Clyde Tincher said that he has changed a lot since he joined.

"I really have upped my standards," he said. "Everything that has changed in me has been for the better."

The Cold Steel Ceremony, finished the Soldiers' FTX, which tested them on everything they learned during their training.

They worked on individual fighting positions, two-man fighting positions and crew served positions, said Staff Sgt. Stanley Mitchell.

They reinforced their individual tactical training, set up day and night defensive positions and it was their first introduction to sleep deprivation.

Not only did they have to worry about the mission, but they had to do it with a lack of sleep," Mitchell said. "Also for the first time we filmed the Soldiers in the field and then took a TV and VCR out to let them watch themselves in action and to critique the mission."

All the tasks they learned throughout their training came to a head at the ceremony, said 1st Sgt. James Luze.

"When they received the insignia, it became a whole lot more to them than just a piece of brass," he said.

During the training they marched more than 100 miles, conducted more than 80 hours of organized PT and worked 100 hours with weapons.

The Soldiers of D Co., 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., BCTB, graduated Thursday. More than 60 percent of the Soldiers will go home to finish high school as they opted to forego their summer vacations to become Soldiers.

The others will spread out across the country where they will attend their advanced individual training.

Although the Soldiers were in basic training for a short time, the memories they received will last forever.

"I actually became a Soldier tonight," Pvt. Daniel Robinson said after the Cold Steel Ceremony. "I am glad it is over with, but I sure had a lot of fun along the way."

Army Combatives manual gets make-over

Soldiers receive new training in hand-to-hand

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff

Super kicks, exotic flips and potent punches are fine and dandy on the big screen and in professional competition, but when it comes down to raw, one-on-one sparring there is no room for fancy fighting.

This is especially true in combat, which is why the Army is giving its combatives manual, FM 21-150, a make over.

For as long as there has been an Army, Soldiers have received training in some form of combatives. However, this training hasn't always proved to be a foundation of realism for hand-to-hand fighting, said Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larsen, NCOIC of Army combatives, C Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

Larsen, who is involved in rewriting the manual, said the process of looking for an improved way to train Soldiers in hand-to-hand came a few years back when it was realized the current program wasn't "cutting it."

"We have had hand-to-hand programs all along, but no one actually thinks our guys are proficient hand-to-hand fighters," Larsen said. "So we started searching the world to see what was out there and who had effective programs."

One program that caught their eye was Russian Sambo, a form of fighting based almost entirely on ground grappling.

Because it is easy to teach and doesn't require a lot of natural ability, Larsen said it became a good starting point for the kind of program they wanted to develop.

"We decided to come up with something that had those (Sambo) strengths, but develop it around the realities of a military unit."

After searching the world over, Larsen said they began to look in the U.S. for other programs and ideas — what they found was Brazilian jujitsu.

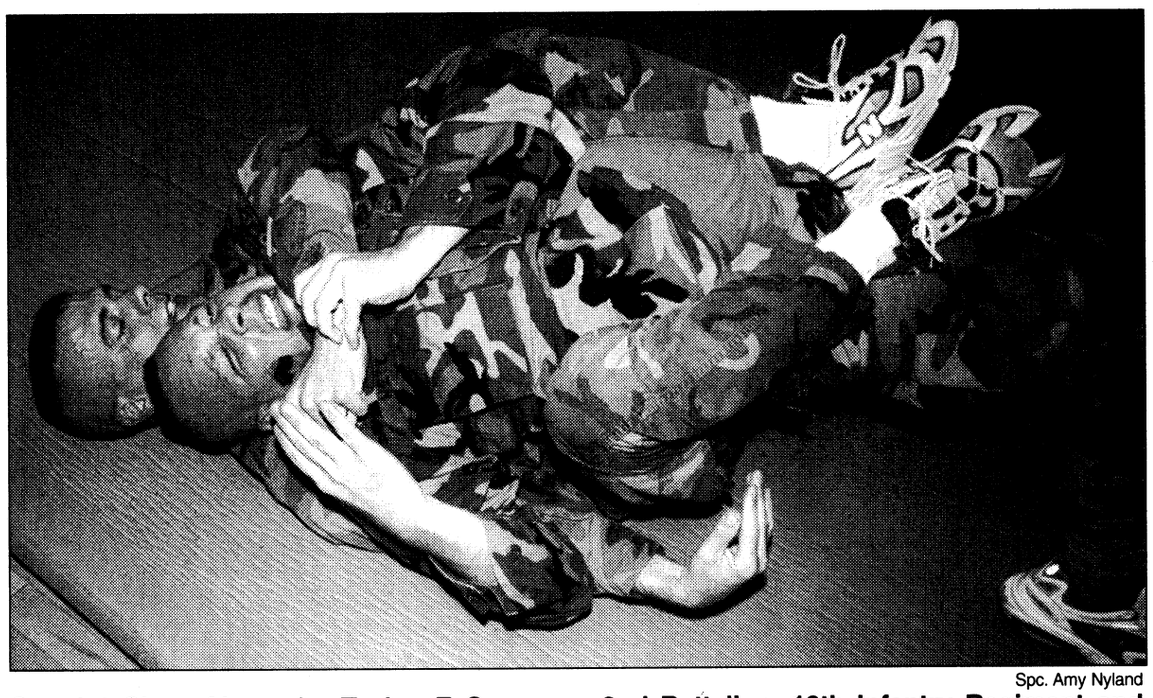
He said Brazilian jujitsu "fit the bill" and ended up becoming a base for the current program. However, there were still a number of weaknesses that had to be fixed so the training would better suit the Army's needs.

With a little molding the final product became a combatives program unique to the Army that is easy to teach and easy to learn, but also effective enough to produce proficient fighters in a matter of hours, Larsen said.

Currently the program is being taught in a number of schools on Fort Benning including the Officer Candidate School, Infantry Officer Basic Course, Ranger Indoctrination Program and the Infantry Captains' Career Course.

Eventually this training will be taught all over Fort Benning with the hopes of it trickling over into the rest of the Army, Larsen said.

Col. Michael Ferriter, 11th Infantry Regiment commander, said more than 2,500 Soldiers in schools and directorates within the 11th Regt. have received the training with zero injuries.



Besides being fun, Ferriter said it is a total body work out that instills warrior ethos.

"It's always a great workout and always exciting," Ferriter said. "And females like it as much as the males because it gives them a set of skills and confidence they can use."

He also said the progressive nature of the training makes it safe and doesn't push Soldiers past their abilities.

Larsen agreed, saying the program was designed with a graduated set of rules and techniques, so each step builds upon the last to make a Soldier that much better fighter.

However, the program isn't about just teaching Soldiers to beat up the enemy, he said.

Spc. Amy Nyland

Sgt. 1st Class Alexander Taylor, E Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment and Capt. Wayne Metz, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment bout for submission as part of the "train the trainer" program at the 11th Inf. Regt.

"It's about attitude," Larsen said. "The main thing for the Army is not that we become great hand-to-hand fighters, because in the long run what difference does it make? What really matters is we have a warrior culture and the mental toughness to drive on.

"Being a warrior is not just a set of skills you are required to learn, it's more about the way you think and that's really the main benefit of this."

1st Sgt. Frank McConnell, C Co., 4th RTBn, said the skills and confidence gained from jujitsu helps smaller Soldiers defeat the size advantage. He also commented that teaching ground fighting is one of the program's greatest strengths.

"The old stuff never addressed fights on the ground and that's where they end up," McConnell said.

"With modern combatives the focus is defeating a guy on the ground, which is one of its best aspects."

"We are in reaching distance of having an Army of proficient hand-to-hand fighters, which is really a first time ever," said Larsen.

Alligators: Become nuisance when fed by humans not causing a problem.

The presence of alligators was evidenced in the marina area by the pushed down grass along the bank, Swiderek said. Although he said he hasn't seen it yet.

"This is the first time to my knowledge," Hails said of the alligator sighting. "It's very rare. I hadn't seen anything since."

One other sighting at the marina, reported July 16, involved a man and his Labrador retriever.

The dog was swimming in the water in the early afternoon and he saw an alligator moving toward it, Hails said.

The man and his dog left the scene unscathed, but it should be a caution to dog owners about allowing their pets to swim in the marina area or in lakes or ponds around Fort Benning.

"Alligators will eat a dog," Swiderek said.

It is recommended to be alert for alligators, but not just in the Uchee Creek marina. This applies to any lake, pond or swamp, at least until the drought subsides.

If an alligator is seen, rule No. 1 is to stay away from it.

Signs will be posted in the marina and lake areas at Uchee Creek to warn people about the possible presence of alligators and to not feed them, or they will be fined $200, Swiderek said.

"The worst thing anybody here can do is feed the alligator," said Jim Trostle, coordinator of wildlife and trails at the Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center.

"If you feed them they become habituated to people and the alligators will associate people with food."

There was an incident a few years ago that required a Georgia Department of Natural Resources Alligator agent to kill a 12-foot alligator in Weems Pond because the alligator was hand-fed by humans and becoming a nuisance.

Currently, Swiderek and others from the Conservation Branch are performing a survey of the alligator population as well as checking on the alligators in the area.

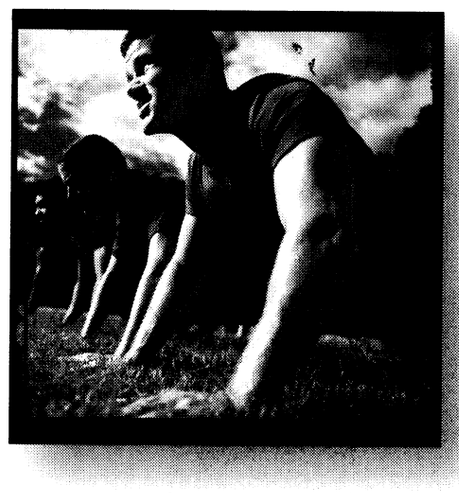
"I have been checking on the 4.5 and 6-foot gators at Twilight Pond. They are not in the main pond, but in an adjacent 1-acre swamp pond. They are not causing any problems that I can detect," he said.

"Actually seeing an alligator is not a problem," Swiderek said. "It's typical to see them there sunning themselves."

"People see alligators all the time at Riverbend," Hails said.

Alligators, by nature, keep to themselves and will not attack humans.

"Gators are not man-eaters," Swiderek said. People commonly confuse alligators with crocodiles, which will attack humans. Crocodiles are not native to the United States except for the extreme southern tip of Florida.



"Alligator bites are extremely rare," he said.

If an alligator is seen where it not normally should be, such as in the marina at Uchee Creek, report it to the Conservation Branch at 544-7319.

Operation Schoolhouse tests readiness

Mock crisis gets schools ready for year

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning schools passed a major test July 28.

The second annual Operation Schoolhouse training and response exercise was conducted at Stowers Elementary School, and all participating factions received an A-plus from principal Glenn Hughes.

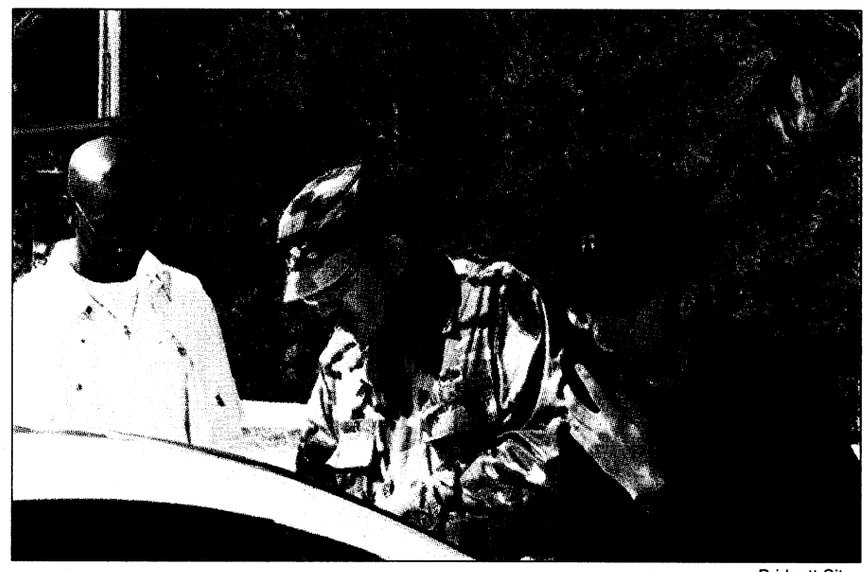
Hughes and several staff members got a first-hand look at how Fort Benning's finest would react to an emergency situation at a post school during a mock hostage crisis.

"I feel confident, very, very confident, we're in good hands," Hughes said.

Fort Benning has a detailed plan of action for a myriad of possible school emergencies, as does the school system itself. The two come together once a year to test their logistical and tactical coherency in what has become known as Operation Schoolhouse.

"This is one of the times we can dust off and refine every detail of our plan, with the focus on protecting our children from any of a number of possible threats to their safety," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement Division. "Their well-being is always our first concern."

Kelley said Operation Schoolhouse is designed to gauge the time it takes all key personal to respond and disseminate information in an emergency situation, ranging from something as common as adverse weather conditions to the opposite end of the spectrum, a hostage crisis.



To an onlooker, last week's training and response exercise would have appeared frighteningly realistic. Capt. Andrew Sullivan, plans and operations officer, scripted the scenario, and Staff Sgt. Kevin Sparks role-played an enraged parent who entered the building with a gun and barricaded himself in a classroom with three hostages. A staff member and Sparks' two children played the part of hostages.

School staff, though aware of the exercise in progress, reacted as they would in a real situation.

At the first hint of danger they activated the Safe Schools Plan and called 911. Within minutes military police surrounded the building — step one of Operation Schoolhouse.

"It was quite a scenario," said Donna Ford, support services supervisor for Fort Benning Schools. "Unless you've actually been through this, you have no real understanding of the time line involved in a situation like this."

Seniors suffering from cataracts get relief at hospital

In about 15 minutes, Maj. Scott Barnes can make clouds disappear — not those found in the sky, rather the ones seen by older adults suffering from cataracts.

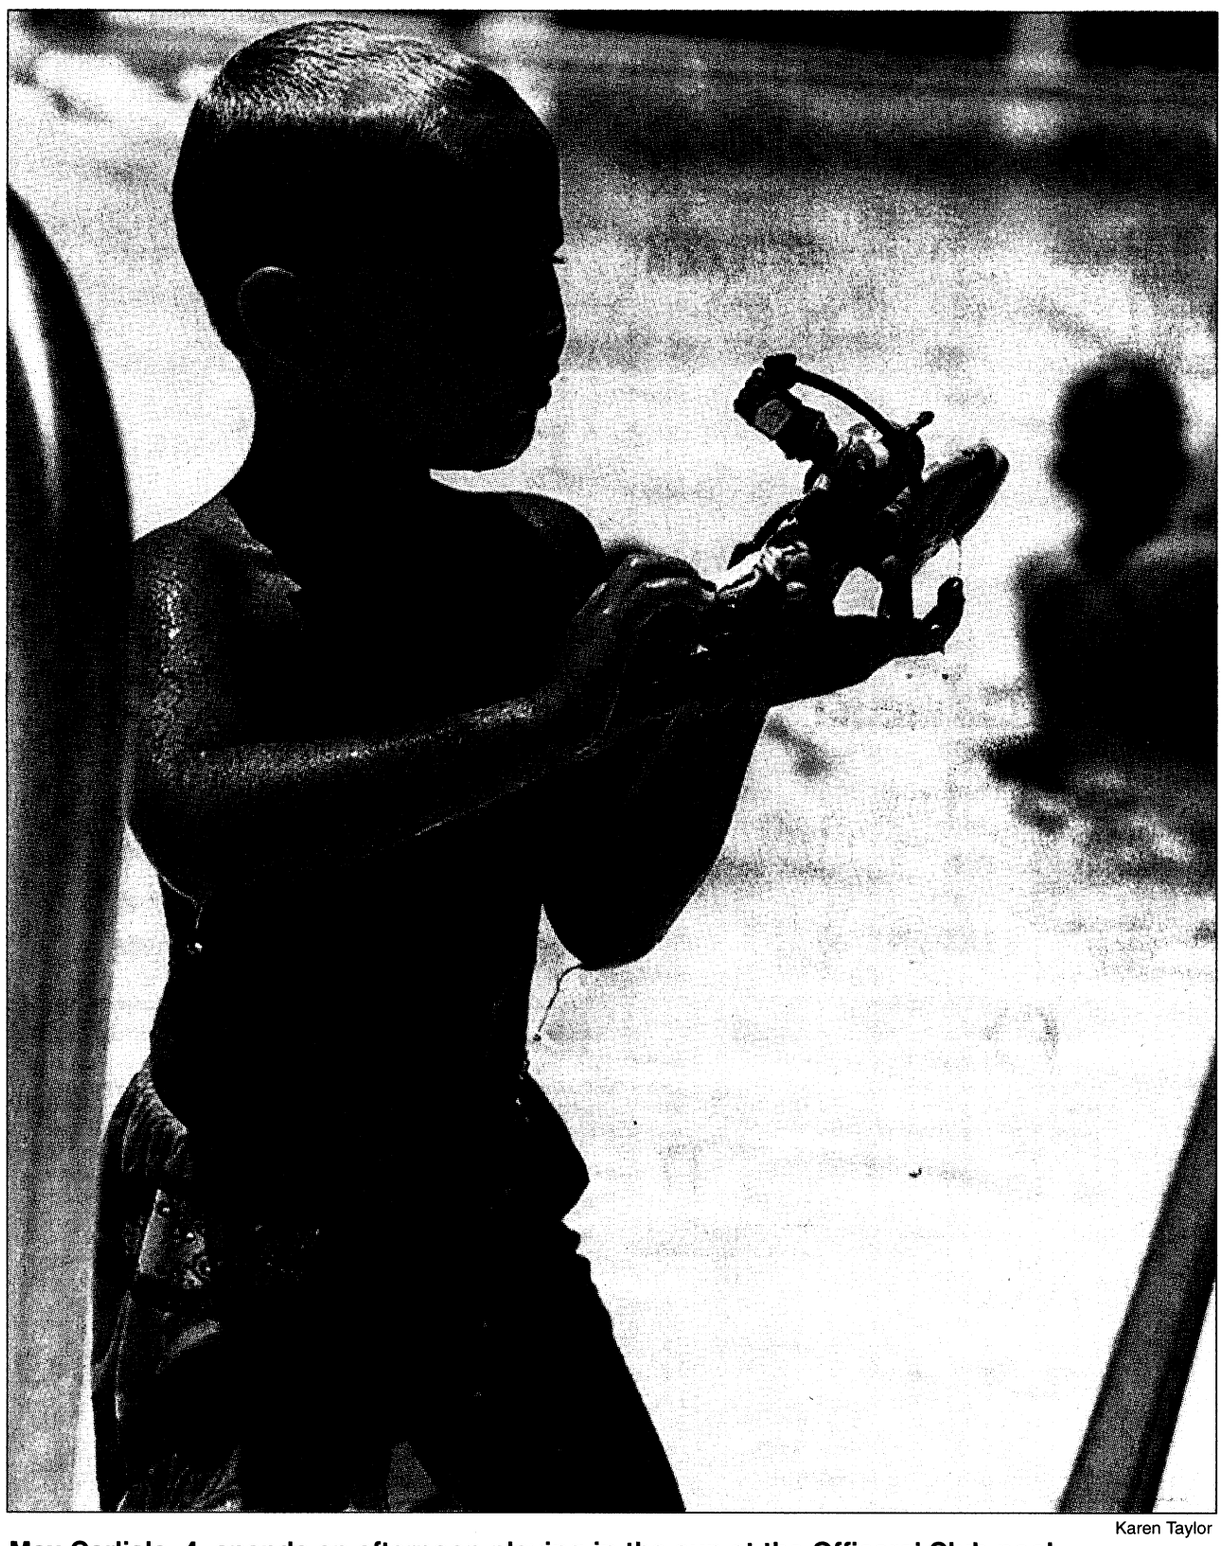
Barnes has looked into the faces of happy patients during the past two years as a staff ophthalmologist at Martin Army Community Hospital.

But, more importantly, the patients have been able to clearly see his face without the cloudiness associated with cataracts.

"I couldn't see red lights anymore and couldn't drive," said 57-year-old Joseph Gagnon. "I went to Dr. Barnes and he told me when I was ready to see better, to come back."

After having cataract surgery on both eyes, Gagnon's vision improved from 20/160 in one and 20/100 in the other, to 20/20 in both eyes.

"I could see almost immediately," Gagnon said. "Thank God for Dr. Barnes."



Making an incision only 3.2 mm wide, Barnes can remove a damaged lens and replace it with a clear artificial version.

"I have done the procedure in 11 minutes, but I usually average 15," Barnes said from his office in the hospital's basement. "However, speed is not the issue, quality of care is the issue."

Overexposure to sun can cause scarring, possibility of cancer

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

As the human body's largest organ, the skin sometimes doesn't get the respect it deserves.

It gets cut, bruised, banged-up, dried-out and peeled off, without a second thought.

So give the epidermis some TLC this summer and shield it from the sun's ultraviolet rays. Unlike a scab turning into a scar, a sunburn can leave a more serious, lasting impression — premature wrinkles and even worse, skin cancer.

"We see a fair amount of skin cancer and premature aging of the skin," said Maj. Brian Sandler, OIC of Dermatology Service, Martin Army Community Hospital. "Most of the skin cancer we see is from sunburns before a person is 18 years old.

"It's especially important for children to go out with sunscreen with more than SPF 30, a hat and sunglasses," he said.

If a person has from two to 10 sunburns before the age of 18, the chances of skin cancer significantly increase, Sandler said.

"There's evidence to show that one severe sunburn at a very young age can increase chances of skin cancer," said Capt. Bryan Alsip, chief, Preventive Medicine, Martin Army Community Hospital.

To prevent sunburns the most recommended types of sunscreens are those with titanium or zinc-oxide, which are the blocking agents, within the lotion.

Parents should not apply sunscreen to babies less than 6 months old with PABA in it. The skin of a baby is thin at that age and PABA, which is easily absorbed, can cause illness.

Babies 6 months or younger should be kept out of the sun entirely and when outside they should be well-shaded with bonnets, clothing and umbrellas.

Peak sun hours, where the ultraviolet rays are strongest, are from 10 a.m. to 3 or 4 p.m. and either should be avoided or extra attention paid to sunscreen application.

Sunscreen should be applied about 15 to 20 minutes before going to the pool, beach, or even if

Parents keep watchful eye over children's Internet surfing habits

Pornographic sites, chat rooms create Web danger zone

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

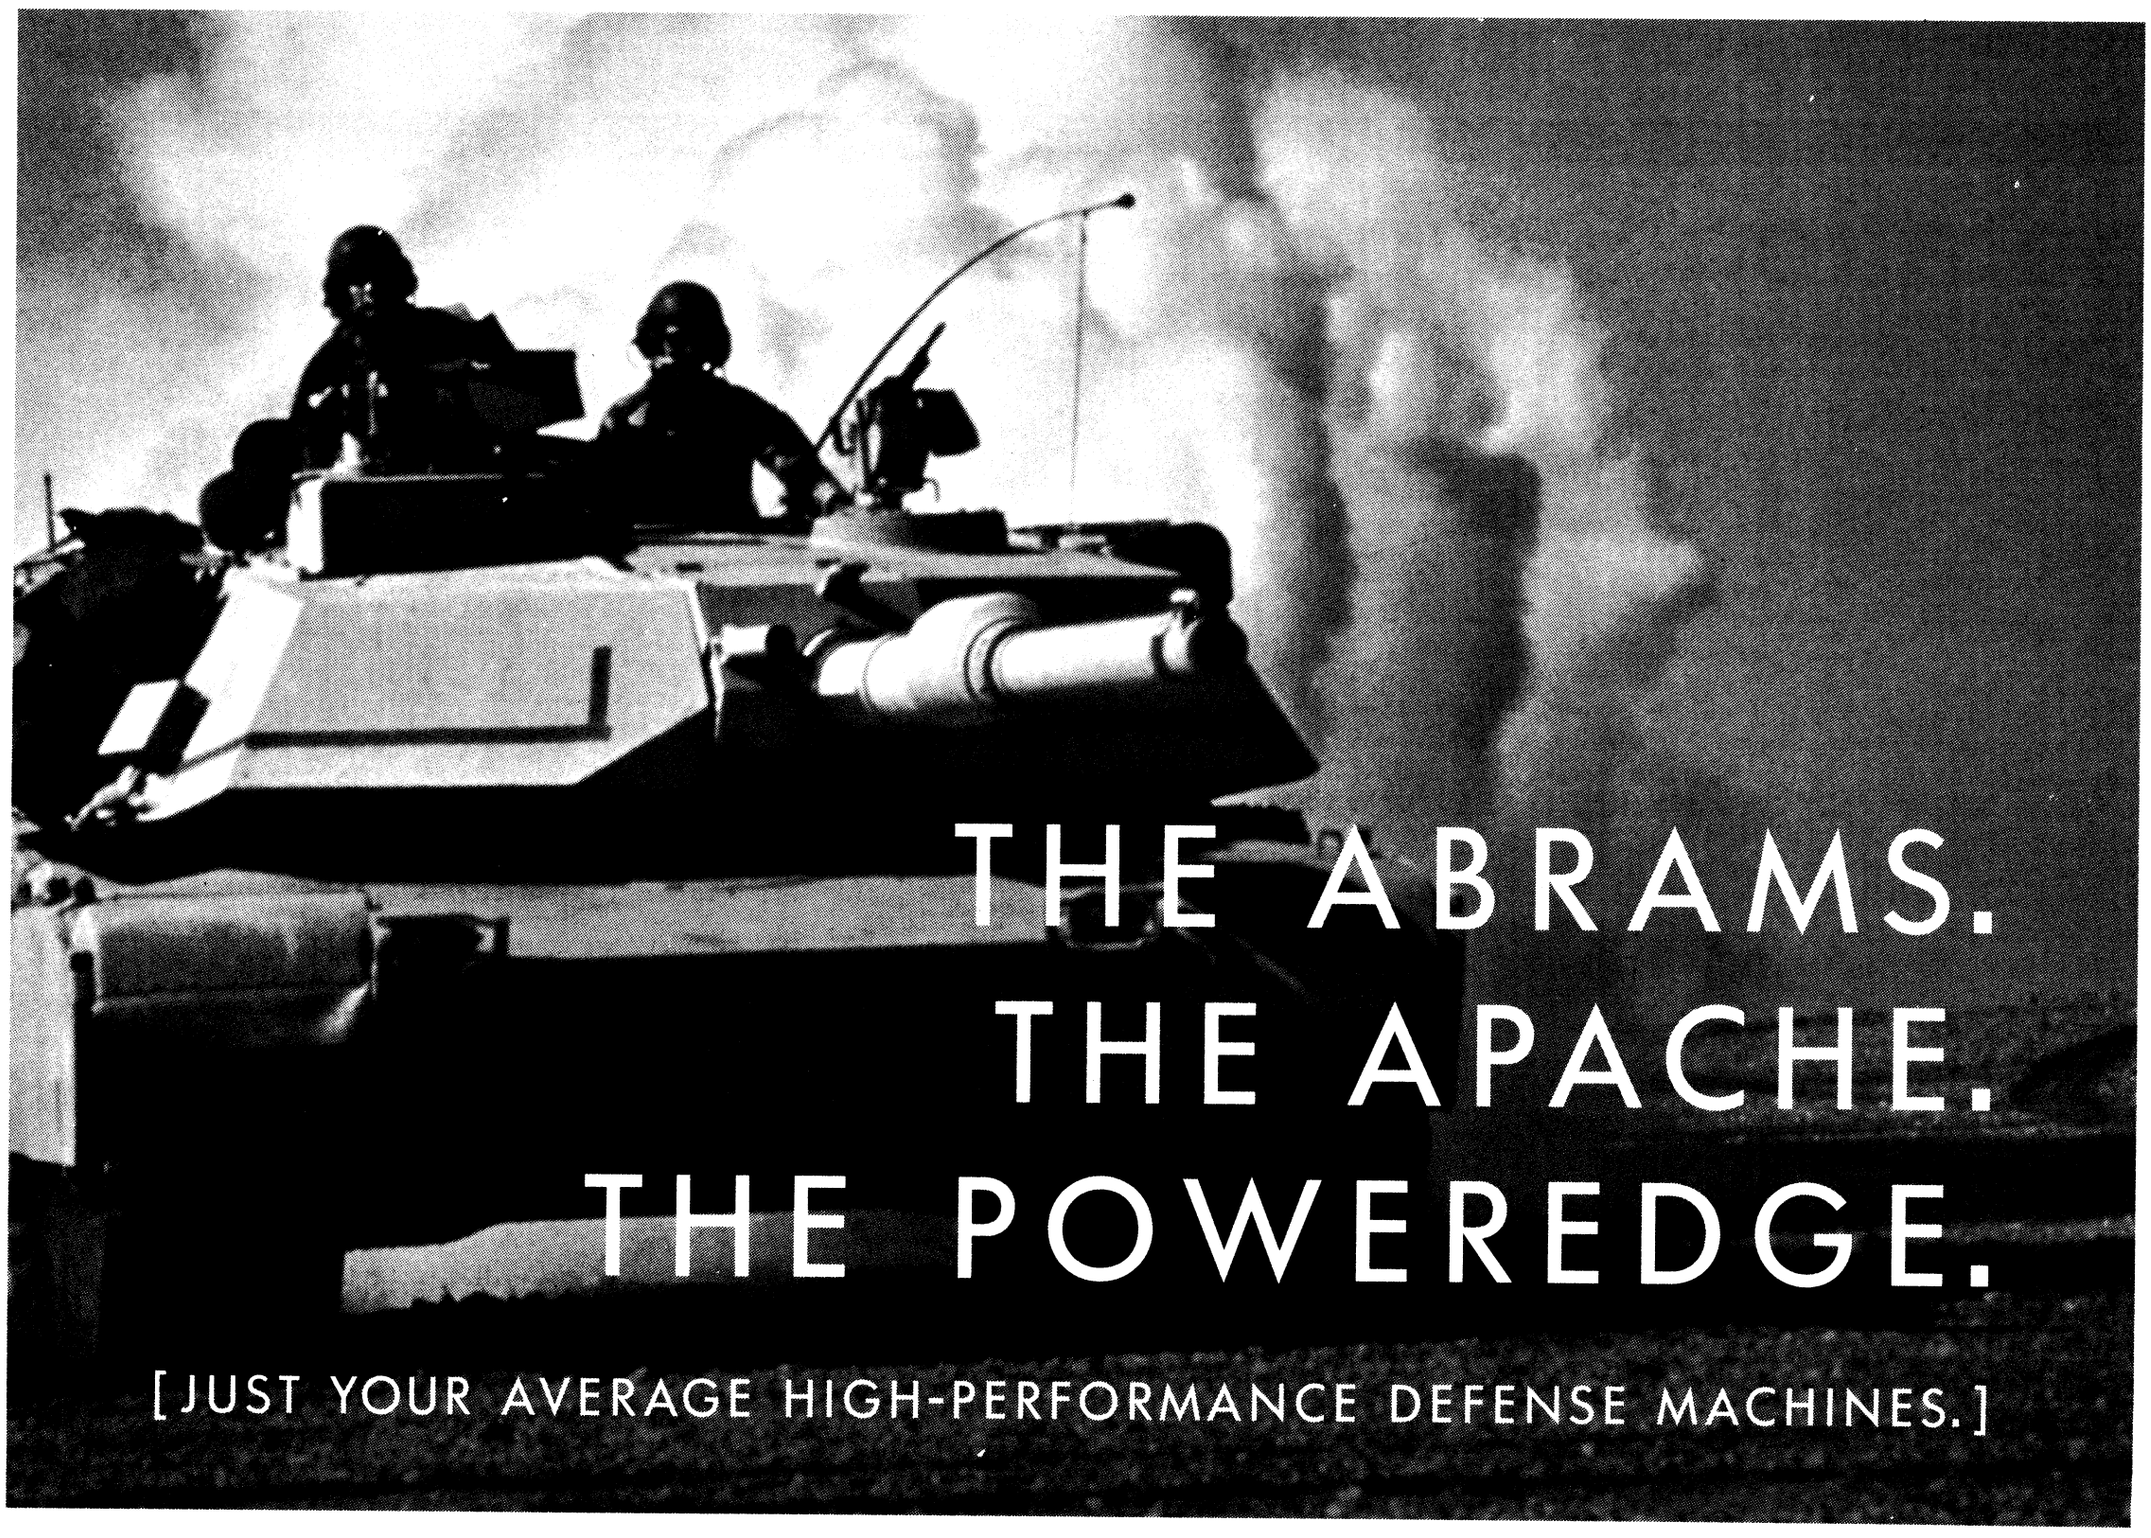
In today's high-tech society, most parents feel a home computer is essential to a good education. Unfortunately, if Mom and Dad aren't watching when the kids are surfing the Net, they may get the kind of "education" their parents aren't prepared for.

When Jeremy W. discovered he could visit a pornographic playground half-way around the world with just a few key strokes and his telephone number, his parents found themselves faced with several hundred dollars in telephone charges.

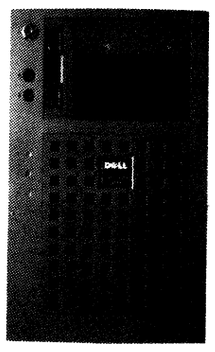
"I didn't even know it was possible to charge something to your telephone on the computer," Jeremy's mom said. "I was furious he was able to do this and sickened he had actually been able to spend hours looking at this trash without us knowing it."

According to National Public Radio, nearly a third of kids between 10 and 17 from households with computers say they have seen pornographic web sites.

"There's an abundance of this kind of stuff out there," said Paul Yates, Fort Benning's director of Information Management. "You don't even have to go looking for it. You turn on the computer and it's offered to you. Kids are curious, and they just have to punch a few keys and see just about anything you can imagine, legal or not."



Dozens of sites have been established for the very purpose of combating this problem and alerting parents to the dangers of web porn. Some advertise software filters that can be downloaded, usually for a fee, to screen potentially harmful sites, including, but not limited to pornography, hate group and occult sites. They come with names like Net Nanny, Safe Surf or Cyber Patrol, and they're designed to prohibit viewers from entering sites they've established to be inappropriate according to their specified standards.



Janet Tartaglia uses a blocker that rates sites, much like movie ratings, and requires a password to enter anything above a G rating.

"It works good — sometimes too good," Tartaglia said. "My son was blocked from entering an educational site, The Magic School Bus, because it showed the human anatomy. The blocker considered it a PG-13 site and he's not permitted to go to anything above a G. But that's OK, better safe than sorry. At least we know it's working."

Like Tartaglia, the American Library Association says that Internet filters often work too well. The ALA says they "block out an average of 21 percent, or one out of every five sites containing legal, useful information."

Parents: Monitor Internet use

But any computer-savvy surfer knows there are ways to circumvent blockers and access any site with a minimum of computer knowledge. So while filters won't really hamper a user's access to "legal, useful information," they won't prevent minors from being exposed to cyber-sin either.

"These filters can't block out everybody," Yates said. "They're good but they're not infallible. They're useless if they're not correctly installed, and even then they have to be continually updated to keep up with the new sites that pop up every day.

"Even if you keep it updated, the kids are probably smarter than the filter, and they'll find a way around it if they really want to."

Yates offered a solution to parents who wonder if there is anything they can do to minimize the risk of exposure to pornography.

"The only sure way to make sure they never see it is to lock them in their room," Yates laughed.

"But the real issue is monitoring their use. Don't be afraid of the computer. It's not going to bite you. There are ways of tracking where they've been on the web if you know how to do it. If you want to find out if there is a problem, find out where they've been."

Yates said parents can track sites their children have been visiting by opening temporary files and periodically checking the user history on the Internet Explorer.

"It's never really deleted. When you visit a site on the worldwide web, it temporarily downloads to your PC. It stays there for a little while until the browser cleans it out. There's always a trace of it somewhere," Yates said.

"If you go into New Internet Explorer history and find 'xxx.com,' you know where they've been. They may hate you for it, but it's a matter of what you're comfortable with."

Eighth-grader Katie Morris has her own web site, dedicated to her interest in computer animation. She spends a lot of time checking message boards and chatting with friends. But she's always aware that her dad keeps tabs of everywhere she's been.

"I'd be in major trouble if I went to one of 'those' sites," she said. "Dad's got a software program that reviews every web site I visit, so I know he can tell what I've been up to."

Yates said "the normal stuff parents are worried about," like pornography, doesn't concern him nearly as much as what he calls the Internet's greatest threat, chat rooms.

Yates advises parents to carefully monitor any time their children spend in chat rooms, and "never, under any circumstances, let them use their real name or an acronym for their name."

"They're spooky. When you're dealing with real people on the Net, you're dealing with real danger — significant danger," he said. "I'd worry much more about chat rooms than I would pornography. The biggest danger on the Net is e-mail relationships that form through chat rooms."

Thirteen-year-old Morris spends a great deal of time in her web site chat room visiting with her best friends who live in different states. She said she's occasionally encountered objectionable conversation and offers from unwelcome visitors.

"I keep things clean in my site, and I'm strictly against porn. I delete anything nasty and my server helps me ban anyone I don't want in."

Morris said she's never formed a relationship via the Internet, and she's careful not give personal information about herself to strangers.

"No I don't do the cyber-romance thing. At my age I don't even do the real-life romance thing. I just use my chat room to visit with my friends because phone bills are so expensive."

Not all teens take such a pragmatic approach to the Internet.

Yates recommends parents err on the side of caution until they're assured their children are not yielding to technological temptation.

"Snoop. I tell my kids there's no such thing as privacy while they're living in my house," he said.

"There's no silver bullet for this problem — nothing magical about the solution. Just monitor where they're going."

garden tips

Special to the Bayonet

It is time to plan for fall crops. One of the benefits of living in the South is the opportunity for a second sowing of vegetables.

If there is no prepared bed, there is still time for that too. It only takes a day to prepare a bed. Simply take off the top inch of soil, then dig down six to eight inches. If possible, add compost or manure and turn over the soil to mix.

Some of the crop choices for fall and the planting dates are as follows:

- bush beans — Blue Lake 274 by Aug. 15.
- pole beans — Kentucky Wonder by Aug. 15.
- broccoli — Southern Comet by Sept. 1
- cabbage — Rio Verde by Sept. 1.
- cauliflower — Super Snowball by Aug. 15.
- cucumbers —Marketmore 76 by Aug. 15.
- collard greens — Blue Max by Sept. 1.
- kale greens — Dwarf Siberian by Sept. 1.
- mustard greens — Southern Giant Curled by Sept. 1.
- lettuce — Bibb by October.
- bell pepper — Carnival Mix by Aug. 15.
- indeterminate tomato — Better Boy by Aug. 1.
- determinate tomato — Celebrity by Aug. 1.

Some crops take up more space than others so choose vegetables the bed will accommodate.

A layer of pine straw for mulch will help retain moisture and reduce weeds.

Remember to water regularly and fertilize every seven to 14 days.

For a more complete list of crops to plant, visit the Cooperative Extension office.

REMEMBER:

Fort Benning is still under water restrictions:
- All outdoor watering must be done by hand. All sprinklers are prohibited.
- Even-numbered addresses can only water on Mondays and Fridays; all odd-numbered addresses on Tuesdays and Saturdays.

Legal Assistance Attorney

Q: You previously ran an article on refunds on life insurance policies from American Fidelity Life Insurance Company. Can you give me some pointers about purchasing life insurance so that I won't fall prey to a scam or buy a policy that I don't need?

A: Here are six quick tips for shopping for life insurance. Remember: buying insurance is like any other product you purchase. The salesperson's or insurance agent's mission is to make a sale. That means persuading you as much as possible to buy his product.

- Determine if you need insurance. Are you single or married? If you are married and have children, what would happen to your family financially if you were to die prematurely? How would they be able to pay bills? To make monthly house or rent payments? Car payments?
- Estimate the amount of life insurance needed. Is $200,000 from your SGLI enough for your spouse and four children? Might you need supplemental insurance from a private company?

You must carefully evaluate the cost of your family's expenses, thinking about current bills, a mortgage, child care costs, college tuition and your family's current living standard. A general rule of thumb is life insurance that is equal to five to seven times your gross annual income.

- Decide on the best type of life insurance. There are several types of policies available, depending on your financial needs.

Typically, if your need is temporary then you might consider term insurance. Term insurance is relatively inexpensive at first and is designed for coverage for a specific period of time, renewable for some period of time. On the other hand, permanent life insurance is designed for lifelong protection and includes numerous variations, known as ordinary life, universal life or variable life.

These types of policies have a set premium, which may be cost prohibitive on a tight budget. However, these policies, if payments are made faithfully and continuously, will accumulate a "cash value" that can be surrendered in total or part for cash or converted into an annuity. Term insurance has no "cash value."

- Consider the financial strength of the insurance company. In other words, do your homework on the company that will insure you.

A number of private organizations rate insurance companies, evaluating their financial strength. For example, these companies are rated based upon their amount of capital and surplus, legal reserves, quality of investments, past profitability, competency of management and other factors. A.M. Best, Standard & Poor's and Duffy & Phelps all rate insurance companies. Go to your local library in the reference section or jump on the Internet (www.ambest.com or www.standardandpoors.com).

- Deal with a competent agent. Like any other salesperson, there is pressure on a life insurance agent to "make a sale." How much experience has the agent actually had?
- Don't sign any contract until at least 48 hours has passed. Give yourself some time to think about the consequences of entering any contract.

Be wary of insurance agents that provide you with a Voluntary Allotment Form for you to sign on the spot — it is illegal for an agent to have these forms to present to you.

The insurance agent should provide you with the allottee information and then direct you to your Personnel Administration Center to initiate the allotment.

Consult with people you trust or stop by the Legal Assistance Office before you sign any contract. You can make an appointment to meet with a Legal Assistance Attorney by calling the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Vision: Receives boost with help of Martin Army doctors

Sally Shutt

Peggy Dunn gets a check-up from Maj. Scott Barnes. She had cataract surgery last year. Her vision is now 20/40.

passing through the lens and focusing clearing on the retina.

Peggie Dunn, a retired nurse from Lee County, Ala., is well acquainted with the cloudiness.

Last May, Barnes performed Dunn's cataract surgery, and she was in his office last week for a follow-up exam. Dunn also suffers from retina problems associated with her diabetes.

"I've received excellent care for cataracts and retinopathy," said Dunn, whose vision improved from 20/80 to 20/40.

The visit gave Dunn the chance to bid Barnes farewell before he leaves Fort Benning for Fort Bragg, N.C., where he will serve as the deputy surgeon for the Special Operations Command.

Dunn lavished glowing comments on Barnes, who handles the praise in stride.

"While I try to have a pleasant bedside manner, the patients are so excited to see well that they would probably still write nice comment cards even if I was a real jerk. It's an easy field as far as patient satisfaction," he said.

Cataracts usually are associated with aging, and most patients adjust their corrective prescription as the condition worsens.

Rarely is there ever a medical reason a cataract has to be removed, Barnes said.

"The main reason patients seek surgery is they are bothered by poor vision and their lifestyles are affected — their driving or ability to read — and they can't function as well.

"I tell patients, 'when it's cold you know when to put on a coat. You will know when you need surgery,'" he said.

When an optometrist can no longer prescribe corrective lenses to help with the problem, patients can seek a referral from their primary care manager to be seen in the Ophthalmology Clinic.

"In the past two years we have not turned down a cataract patient, regardless of Tricare status," Barnes said.

In addition to examining patients and conducting glaucoma, cataract, trauma, muscle and lid surgeries, the doctor has conducted cost-saving research in his field and been recognized by his peers.

Barnes and former Martin Army ophthalmologist, Maj. David Zumbro, worked on a research project using topical anesthetic drops for cataract surgery versus using intravenous medication and local injection.

"Specifically it raised the question of using higher-skilled, but more expensive, anesthesia providers to monitor the case compared to the less costly nurses or licensed practical nurses. The potential cost saving associated with this could be tremendous," Barnes said.

The work was presented last fall at the American Academy of Ophthalmology's annual meeting and is being reviewed for publication in Ophthalmology.

Barnes was also recognized for his research comparing a new pressure lowering medication, brimonidine, to the "gold standard," apraclonidine, for preventing painful pressure elevations associated with laser surgery for glaucoma.

"This was a previously unstudied use of brimonidine and resulted in a 97 percent cost savings compared to the expensive 'gold standard,'" Barnes said. "It was 13 cents versus $5 per surgery."

"We showed that there was no difference, that they worked the same," he said.

Barnes was the first military ophthalmologist to be selected to present his work in the Pan American Association of Ophthalmology's Free Paper Competition and his paper was published in Ophthalmology in October.

In addition to his duties with the Special Forces Command at Fort Bragg, Barnes will spend half of his time at Womack Army Medical Center's new Refractive Surgery Clinic performing refractive surgery on Soldiers.

Fort Bragg is the only Army installation offering the laser surgery to Soldiers at this time, Barnes said.

Exercise: Tests post schools' safety plan

While first respondents assessed the situation and took immediate steps to secure the building, emergency response forces, including the military police, fire department, hostage negotiators and emergency medical services, established a command post near the school.

Kelley was on hand to observe and relay information to the incident command center on Main Post, where representatives from each directorate met to discuss their roles in a crisis situation.

Fort Benning's Special Reaction Team waited for the opportunity to "practice" their role in the scenario. Shortly before noon they entered the building from a side door and quickly disarmed the perpetrator.

"It was awesome," said Victoria Burns, who acted as a hostage. "They were on him so fast it took us all by surprise. It was very real and very scary."

Ford said the success of the operation was due to the combined efforts of everyone involved.

"I've been so impressed by all the support we've received from the entire installation," Ford said. "All the related departments worked together to coordinate all their efforts into a very detailed, fine-tuned plan.

This is a 'walk through' of that plan, and all the key players have responded as if it were a real crisis."

Kelley said he feels confident Fort Benning will not experience a crisis of this nature, but parents and teachers can rest assured post schools and response teams are prepared for any kind of emergency.

"We always want to be prepared for the worst-case scenario, and it's important that we exercise our plan," he said. "

At Fort Benning our emphasis has always been on school safety. There's nothing more important than our children."

Sunscreen: Keeps sun-goers from burning going outside for more than 30 minutes.

"It gives time for the active ingredients to penetrate the skin," Alsip said.

Also, sunscreen should be reapplied every three hours, especially if sweating heavily or swimming for 30 minutes.

But sunscreen is not just for the pool or beach, it should be applied every day for protection, even cloudy days.

The ultraviolet rays of the sun penetrate the cloud layer and are still present even though the sun is not visible.

"Overcast days give you a false sense of security," Alsip said.

Also, 30 percent of the sun's rays can penetrate most T-shirt fabrics, making even covered skin at risk for sunburn.

If people are running errands all-day, sunscreen is necessary because car windows, thought to be safe from the sun's rays, actually allow some UV penetration.

"You could get a fair amount of sun exposure through the windshield of a car," Sandler said.

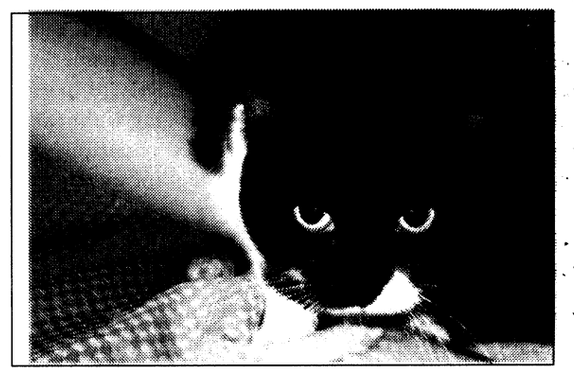
Some sun-block alternatives for everyday use are a daily moisturizer with sunscreen added or a spray-on sunscreen.

The thought that tanning beds are safer than the sun is a myth and actually poses more danger than sunlight, Sandler said.

It doesn't mean people have to go without a healthy glow from the sun this summer.

Sunscreen allows for some gradual color from the sun that's safe for your skin, he said.

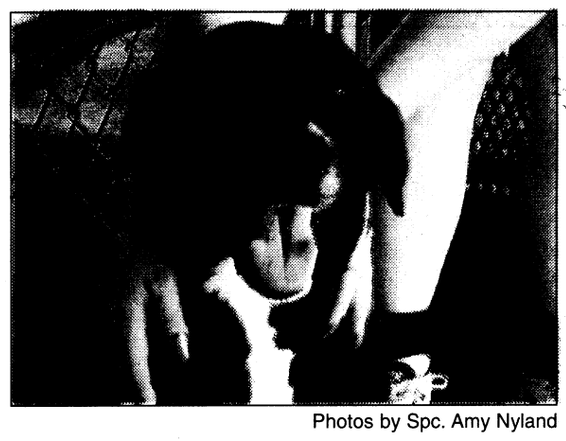
Also, for people who want quicker results, there are suntan products that help the tan along that will produce a brown tan rather than the much feared orange-color of the '80s, Sandler said.



Even with conscientious application of sun block, there's still a chance to get burned.

For treating sunburn use a 1 percent cortizone cream or a special product for burn victims that has aloe vera.

Taking ibuprofen or aspirin is recommended to relieve pain and inflammation.



For extreme sunburn cases, where there is extensive blistering and fluid coming out of the burn accompanied with a high degree of pain, then it is best to see a doctor for a prescription of an oral corticosteroid.

Golden rule takes aggravation out of life

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Training Program

When both the husband and wife work outside the home, their lives can be quite hectic.

If children are present, the many activities of Scouting, athletics, music lessons and church can have them running ragged in no time.

Choosing to simplify life will help make things easier, but being considerate of one another will also make things better. Here are some practical ways to reduce irritations by applying the Golden Rule to your lives. Applying these common courtesies in your families can reduce your aggravation and make your homes run smoother.

Koop

• If you open it, close it. If you unlock it, lock it when you are done. If you turn it on, turn it off.

• If you don't know how to operate it, leave it alone. If its not broke, don't fix it. If you break it, repair it. If you can't fix it, call someone who can.

• If it belongs to somebody else and you want to use it, get permission first. If you use it, take care of it. If you borrow it, return it as soon as you are finished with it.

• If you make a mess, clean it up.

• If you move it, put it back. If you take it from the refrigerator, put it back in the refrigerator unless it's empty.

• If its trash, put it in the trash can.

• If you put the lid of the toilet seat up, put the lid of the toilet seat down when you are finished.

• When you take off your shoes or clothes, put them or hang them in the closet. If your clothes are dirty, put them in the clothes hamper.

• If it doesn't concern you, don't mess with it.

God lights way in darkness

Chaplain (Maj.) Sherman Baker
36th Engineer Group

reflections

No one knows how long a light bulb will last. Many of us have had the experience of installing several light bulbs at the same time and discovering that some burn out before others.

The average light bulb lasts from 750 to 1,000 hours. A notable exception to this is a light bulb in the fire department at Livermore, Calif., that is said to have burned continuously since 1901.

Certainly it is frustrating when a light bulb burns out, forcing us to walk in darkness until it can be replaced.

In the spiritual world, the light from God never stops showing us the way.

If we walk in darkness, it is because we choose to walk in darkness.

When one thinks how easy it is to stumble in the dark, and how dangerous it is in the dark, one wonders why anyone would choose darkness over light.

The light of God's wisdom and holiness shines brightly, and when we walk in that light we walk safely and with a real sense of security.

No one can ever turn out his light, but anyone can choose to ignore it and stumble through life. To do so is more than foolish; we all must walk in God's light.

"Blessed is he who considers the poor."
— Psalm 41:1

Local man brings home Gold medals

Fort Benning swimmer wins four events in Georgia games

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

There isn't an athlete in this country who doesn't dream of "bringing home the Gold" from a competition.

Swimmer Chuck Gantner has been bringing home the gold for a long time now, since he was in high school.

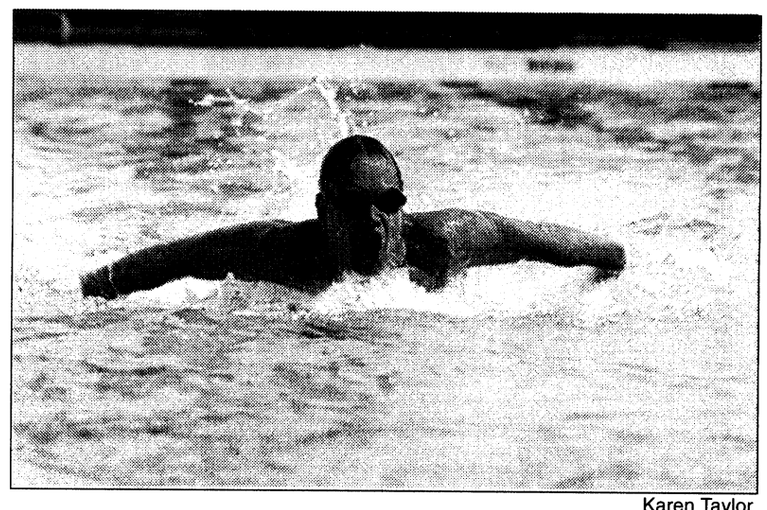
His most recent wins were at the 2000 Georgia Games in the Master's events, 55-59 age group, July 23 at Georgia Tech in Atlanta. He won all four of his events, the 50-meter backstroke in 34 seconds, the 100-meter backstroke in 1:19, the 50-meter freestyle in 29.2 seconds and the 50-meter butterfly in 32 seconds, all meet records in his age group.

This brought the tally to more than 20 Gold medals during his seven competitions at the Georgia Games since 1991.

"He's 55 years old and most people 25 won't be able to keep up with him," said Dr. Lloyd Sampson, a local dermatologist and good friend and fellow athlete of Gantner. "He's a monster in the pool. He's very modest, but when he gets in the pool he just crushes everybody."

If the playing field was adjusted for age, he is one of the world's top swimmers, Sampson said. "I mean, look at his times."

The times that he won his events at the 2000 Georgia Games are in close competition with a swimmer in his 20s.



But his resume, riddled with world records and recognition, spans much farther back than nine years ago.

Since he was 11, the Piscataway, N.J., native swam competitively but it was in high school where he began to make his mark.

His strongest event was in the individual medley, which entails swimming all four strokes, butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke and freestyle, in that order.

"I was always good in backstroke and in butterfly, but putting it together was always what my strength was," he said. "When I was in age-group swimming and in college swimming, it was

Cannons duel with Rockies

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

A duel between the Rockies' and the Cannons' defense left both teams standing at the end of Saturday's doubleheader at Spencer High School.

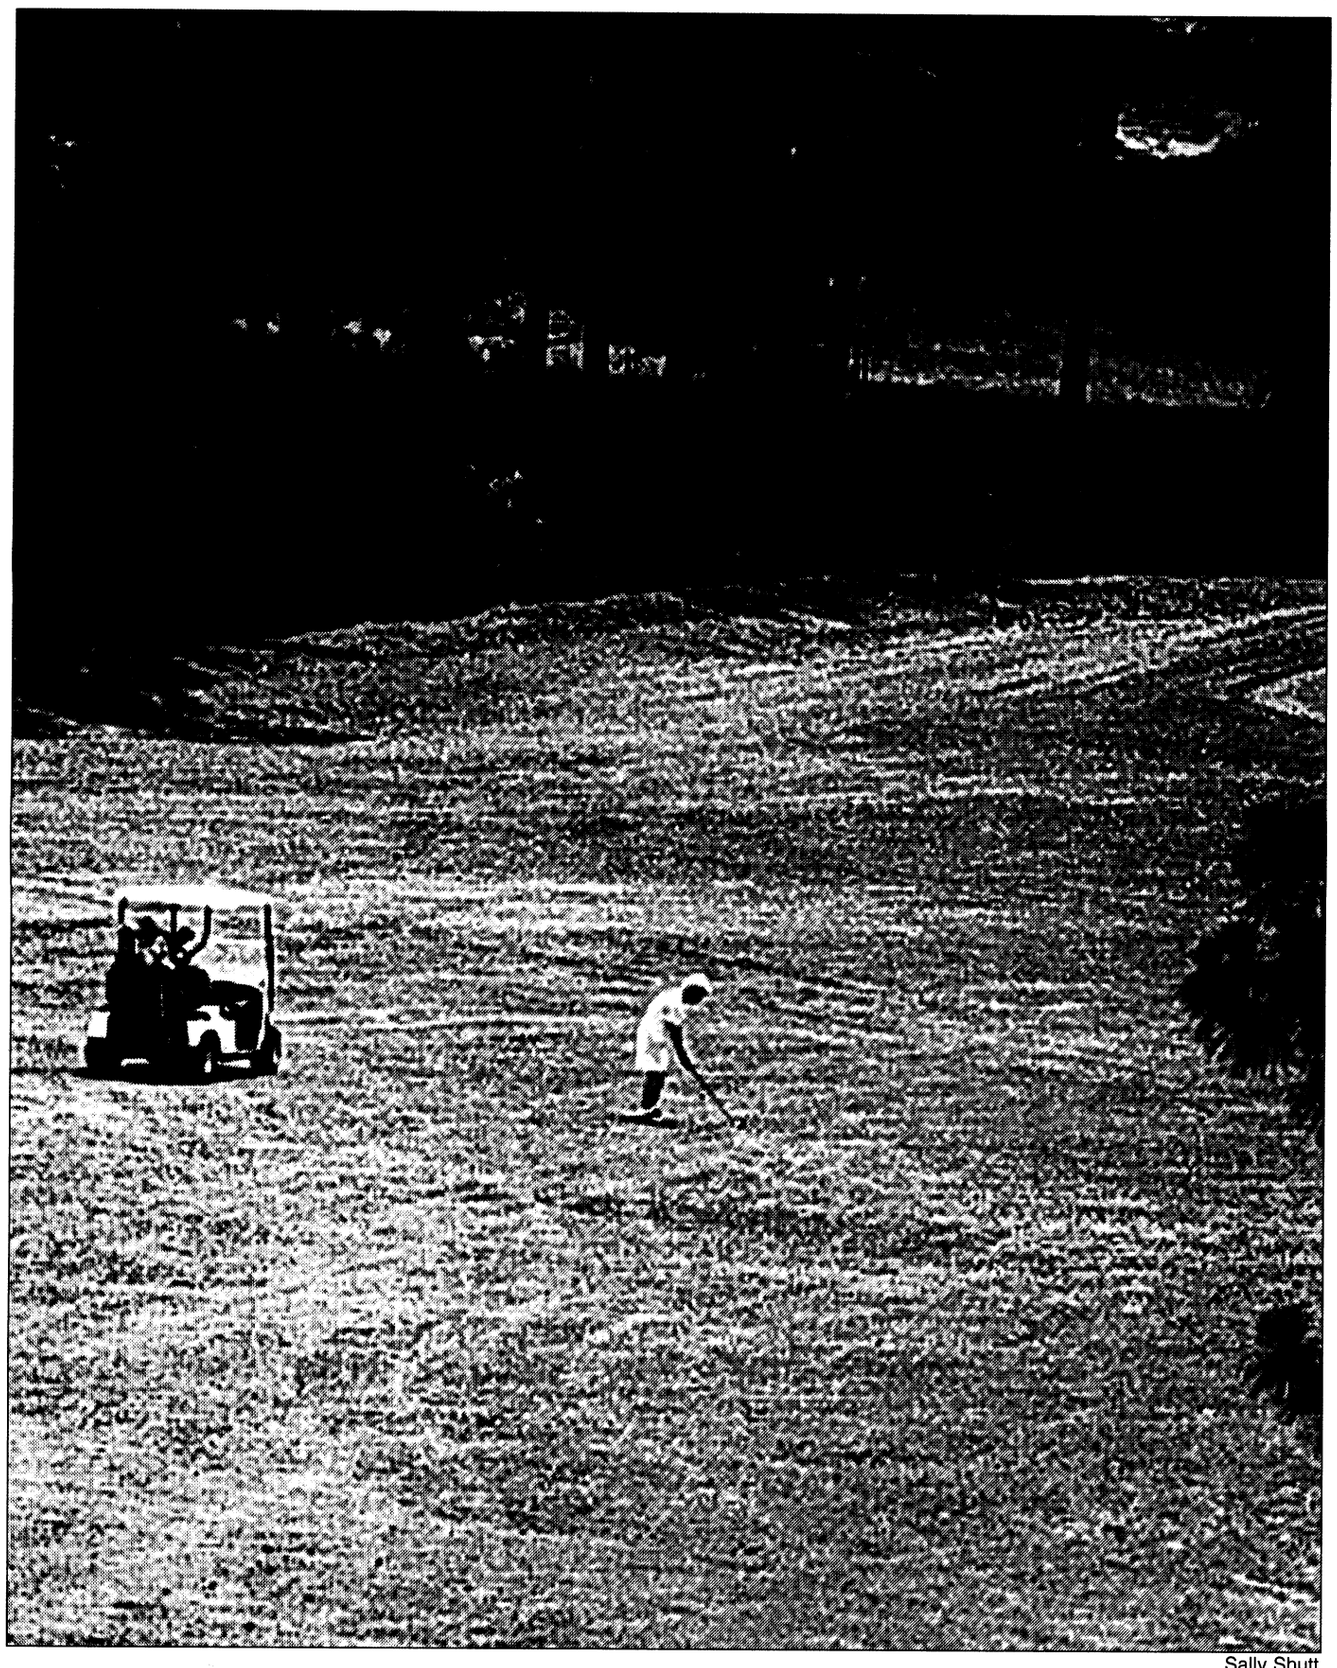
The Rockies were able to squeeze out a last-inning run to steal the first game from the Cannons 3-2, but the Cannons robbed the Rockies of a second win, edging them out by the same score, 3-2.

Both teams were banking on their big guns throughout both games — their pitching.

Orlando Vega-Torres, B Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, pitched a stellar first game for the Cannons: tallying six strikeouts with five of them ending innings for the Rockies.

"The fast ball was most effective, but for the top of the order we went with the off-speed stuff to throw them off," said Cannons' catcher, Matt Quiroz, C Co., 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt.

To counter Vega-Torres, the Rockies had pitcher Brennan Knight, who totaled five strikeouts, throwing some heat.



When hitters were able to make contact with the ball, the fielders of both teams gave their pitchers first-rate backup. Fly balls rarely hit the outfield grass; and grounders seldom got past the dirt of the diamond, which put a premium on scoring opportunities.

For most of the game each side was retired with a waltz's rhythm, 1-2-3, 1-2-3.

The game was scoreless until the top of the third inning when the Cannons managed to put two runs on the board.

Golf course receives much needed facelift

Fort Benning course under repair to bring golfers back to links

Fort Benning's Follow Me Golf Course is considered the best bargain around for area golfers, but being a bargain is just not enough.

"Golfers are looking for a balance between quality and price," Roger Garrity, the course's general manager, said.

"There's too much competition out there. If a course is not to their liking, golfers will not come back. Golf is a word of mouth game, and we have to get our reputation back," he said.

Garrity is determined to attract more golfers to the Fort Benning course and new greens are part of his plan.

Two new greens were constructed last week, replacing two trouble spots — Holes 10 and 12 — on the Pineside course.

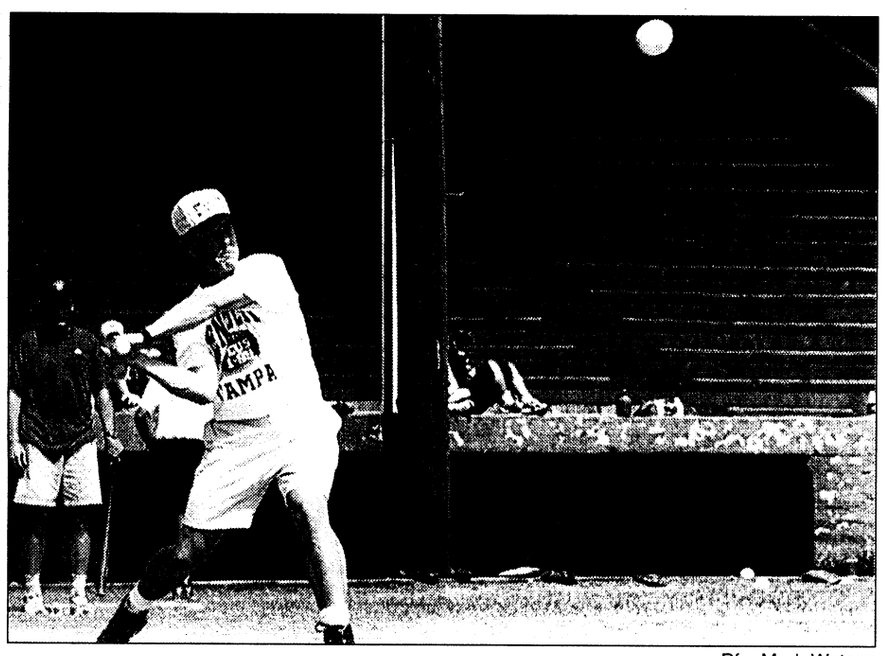
"Quality grass would not grow on these two locations," Garrity said.

The troublesome greens, where bare sandy spots and moss stood in place of lush grass, had continually stumped Pat O'Brien, a turf expert from the U.S. Golf Association, during his annual consultation visits.

The newly constructed greens were sprigged with the state-of-the-art TifEagle grass from Tifton, Ga., the center of turf management for golf courses and lawns in the Southeast, Garrity said.

"It was developed to take a lower mowing height and gives you a more consistent and truer ball roll," he said.

The project's goal is to improve playability on the Pineside course and eventually attract golfers, who have several other course options, including Oxbow Meadows, located just off post, and Maple Ridge, which reopened late last month after a major facelift.



"Competition is tough," Garrity said. "This course was constructed in 1923 and is one of the oldest in the area."

Garrity, golf course superintendent Ray Meredith and other personnel have been doing the work and the greens will be ready for play in about six weeks.

Last year nine fairways on the Lakeside course were re-sprigged with 419 Bermuda grass, which is the top of the line grass for fairways, and

Officers, NCOs battle at Gowdy Field: NCOs victorious 10-5

NCOs win in final innings scoring frenzy

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

With rain promising to fall at a moment's notice, the NCOs of the 11th Infantry Regiment faced the officers of the 11th Inf. Regt. at Gowdy Field to see who was the best of the best. The NCOs emerged victorious July 28, 10-5.

While the Soldiers warmed up, game talk was thrown around as well as the softballs.

Starting off the game the officers were able to shut out the first three NCOs using a defense that would make major league teams proud.

In the bottom of the first inning, the officers' left-center fielder Dana Foley smacked the ball for a double and then was driven in by shortstop David Osborne who also hit a double. He rounded the bases when third baseman Douglas Moriarty tapped the ball out on the infield for a single.

Determined to regain the two runs, NCOs' shortstop John Johnson and short fielder Darron Johnson both singled and were pushed around the horn when right fielder Edmond Lasanta and first baseman Ed Crivello drove them home.

The game would remain the same score until the bottom of the third inning when second baseman Jeffrey Terhune, Osborne and Moriarty scored in consecutive plays outfield to score Terhune who singled and gave the officers the lead, 5-2.

The officers pounced on the balls hit by the NCOs to keep them scoreless in the fourth inning.

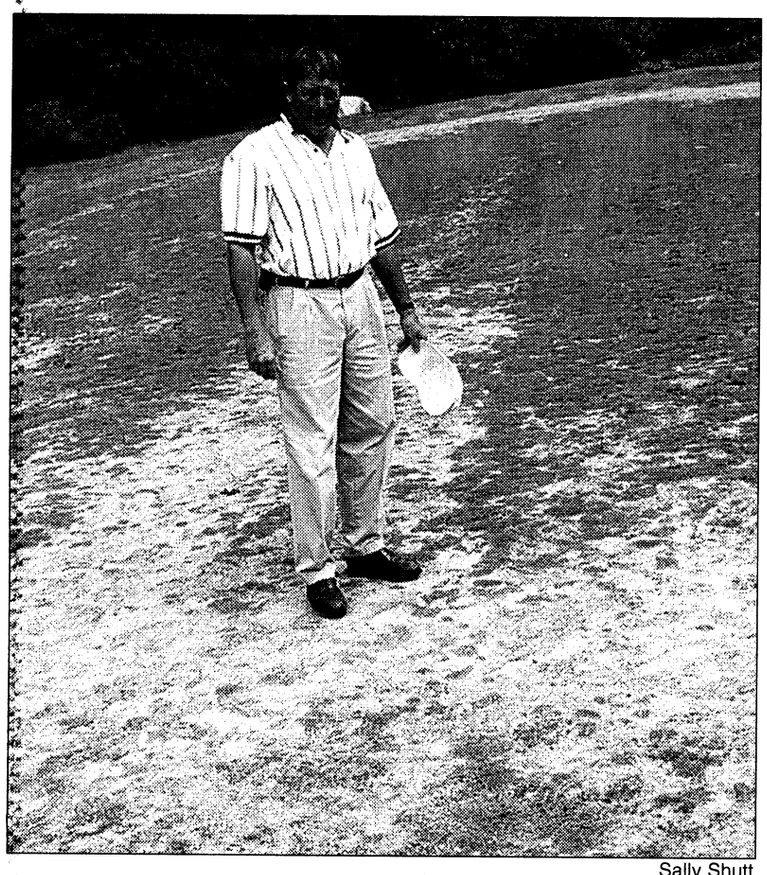
The officers had the same luck in the fourth inning when two runners were left stranded in scoring position.

The fifth inning was well underway when NCOs' catcher Frank Kabaum tapped the ball out of the infield to score Crivelo bringing the game within two, 5-3.

After their final out of the inning, the NCOs took to the field and sent all three officers that showed packing.

At the top of the sixth, the NCOs made it apparent they would not lose as long as they had a say in the matter.

Single after single drove in five runs during the inning. The NCOs whole lineup made it through the gauntlet of officer defense. Even when caught in a double pickle, both D. Johnson and J. Johnson kept their heads, allowing J. Johnson to score.



Finally after 10 batters showed themselves, a grounder was to be the final out, but only after the NCOs scored five runs and took the lead, 8-5.

Although the officers tried to get on the boards once again, their momentum was shut down and they would score no more runs.

The NCOs, however, were not

Course: Seeks $10 million for major repairs, renovations

Meredith said they are looking great. The Pineside course also features 419 Bermuda on its fairways.

A master plan was developed with the help of the turf consultant, and golfers are noticing the changes.

Sandy Casey plays at Maple Ridge and Fort Benning. July 25 she was on the Follow Me Course with the ladies' golf group she plays with three days a week on post.

"I've seen great improvements," Casey said. "This could be a showplace again."

Mozelle Dunn, another member of the ladies' group, has seen major changes.

"There have been overall major improvements in the past 12 to 16 months. Considering the weather we've had, the course is in excellent condition," she said.

One of those improvements has been the clearing of brush from around the lake. While offering golfers an enhanced view of the water, the project's main goal was to increase air flow and allow morning sun to shine on the greens — important keys to growing lush fairways.

"I've been around golf my entire life and I know what avid and casual golfers enjoy and what qualities on a golf course they look for when they play," Garrity said.

Col. Arch Arnold is the president of the 20-member Follow Me Golf Council. Course conditions and profitability hit a low point two years ago, Arnold said, but he has seen great improvements in the last 18 months.

"We have turned the corner," he said. "I have been here for 36 months and the golf course has gone from being threadbare, worn-out and poorly conditioned to being very healthy, green and lush."

Arnold credits the management's "investment in fertilizer and state-of-the-art turf management techniques that have given us better playing conditions," he said.

"I'm optimistic that the word of mouth reputation of what the golfing experience is like at Fort Benning is getting better each day."

Arnold thinks Fort Benning's golf course should be consistent with the post's reputation as the world's best installation.

"People expect on a world-class post to find a world-class golf course for our customers — the Soldiers, family members and retirees who play here," Arnold said.

Along that line the course is seeking more than $10 million in funding from the Department of Army to finance a major renovation project at the Follow Me course, including a new clubhouse and catering facility, Arnold said.

If funding is approved, it would mean in the next couple of years a complete overhaul for the two courses, which have 36 holes. The master plan calls for closing nine holes, or "mothballing them," Garrity said.

"The remaining 27 holes, tees, greens and irrigation system will be upgraded," he said.

"Based on our overall membership and the play we are getting, 27 holes is enough," Garrity said.

Other plans include construction of a two-story combined clubhouse, banquet and convention center for catered events, said John Bush, chief Community Operations Division, Directorate of Community Affairs.

The lower level will be devoted to the golfing community and feature parking for the club's 105 golf carts, a pro shop and golfers' lounge.

The upstairs will be a banquet and convention center with four banquet rooms, which can be combined to handle more than 700 people for catered events, and an Officers' Club lounge capable of entertaining 100 people, Bush said.

The design is similar to one at Fort McPherson, Ga. Founded as a nine-hole course, the Follow Me will celebrate its 77th anniversary in December with a tournament, Larry Cruise, head professional, said.

Shirts sporting a Fort Benning emblem are available in the pro shop, which has undergone a few improvements of its own, Cruise said, including carrying a "pro line" of golf equipment and new shoe and clothing lines as well as offering custom club fittings. Swimmer: Misses Olympics to serve country in Vietnam always the individual medley."

During the '60s, U.S. teen-agers were at the top of the swimming world, where they would sweep events at international competition.

"There were a lot of kids at that time that were really doing well from New Jersey," Gantner said.

Despite the stiff competition among teen-age swimmers during the '60s, Gantner's performances made a lasting impression.

He was selected in February as the New Jersey High School Swimmer of the Century. It marked a pinnacle in his career.

"I was really taken aback, there were so many good swimmers, who have done so well," he said.

"When I think about the perspective and awards I've received over the years in sports and academics, Swimmer of the Century is the greatest and most humbling," he said.

It was something his wife, Lisa, and children were ecstatic about.

"We're all really proud of him," Lisa said. "They (the children) think it's terrific.

Sampson felt the honor holds true as to what Gantner was capable of in the pool then and is capable of now and, more specifically, his swimming speaks for itself.

"Swimmer of the Century, well, it tells you something, doesn't it?" Sampson said.

Two clinching factors that got Gantner the title was the fact that he won every state championship since his freshman year, which to this day has never been done. Also, he was ranked No. 5 in the world in men's swimming as a high school swimmer for the 400 I.M.

During his junior year, 1962, he was a member of the U.S. world record-breaking 400-meter freestyle relay team and he also was a member of the U.S. National Team in 1962.

Although he swam at a variety of national and international competitions during his high-school years, his grades didn't falter. He was consistently on the honor roll; was a member of the honor society; and graduated in the top five percent of his class.

"It really made me focus and concentrate on my studies so there was no goofing around," he said.

After graduating from high school in 1963, Gantner went on to swim at the United States Military Academy as an All-American swimmer and finished his studies and college swimming career at North Carolina State University in 1968.

Gantner had Olympic dreams, but he didn't make the team in 1964 and he missed making the team in 1968 because he was in Vietnam.

"There were opportunities but there were a lot of things going on in my life, there was a war," he said.

After returning from Vietnam in 1970, he was stationed at Fort Benning and has remained here since 1974, where he now works as the chief of Personnel Proponency Division, Office of Infantry Proponency.

> "There were opportunities but there were a lot of things going on in my life, there was a war."
> Chuck Gantner
> 2000 Georgia Games Gold medalist

But in 1974, swimming was on the backburner.

After college, he took a 15-year break because there wasn't a venue, besides the Olympics, to compete.

It wasn't until 1983 that he decided to start swimming again.

"I just wanted to get back into shape, and it was relaxing," he said.

He trains during his lunch break outdoors at Carey Pool or the indoor pool at Briant Wells Gym, swimming about 1 mile, 32 lengths of the 50-meter pool.

If lunch time is booked, then he swims in the morning, at 6 a.m.

"I try to make it a daily habit," he said. "I feel better when I do. It's more than the competition now. It's more just a healthy lifestyle kind of thing."

By 1985 he was competing again when the first Master Games came to Toronto, Canada.

"When they had the first Master World Games, I said this is something to shoot for, you know, there's a goal and I can place out there, I can start organizing a schedule personally. I didn't have a coach or anything I just did it myself," he said.

His decision was a winning one.

He won four events in Toronto: 50, 100 and 200-meter backstroke and 50-meter butterfly — including breaking the world record in the 100-meter backstroke with a time of 1:07.31 — a record which stood for more than 10 years.

In 1986 he competed at the Master's World Swimming Championships in Tokyo, where he broke the world record in the 200-meter backstroke with a time of 2:30.56.

That meet was especially memorable because he had a chance to compete in the 1964 Olympic swim stadium, a place he missed getting to decades earlier.

Now, Gantner looks to still keeping in shape and competing, but he has other priorities, his family.

"I have an 8-year-old and an 11-year-old and a lot of those priorities are properly placed with family," he said.

Gantner enjoys sharing his wins with his children and his nieces and nephews by giving them his medals.

"He gives them to everybody," Lisa said. "I think he likes to encourage kids to do sports."

Although his children, 11-year-old Glenn and 8-year-old Alyssa are involved in other sports, Gantner himself has followed in his father's footsteps.

"My dad was a world record holder in, well, they called it breaststroke, but it evolved into the butterfly," he said.

Gantner's father was a member of the 1944 Olympic Team, a team that never saw the Olympic stadium because of World War II.

"In '44 he was fighting the Japanese in the Pacific," he said.

Another connection he shares through swimming is with his wife.

After meeting her twice before, it was in the pool at the YMCA on Warms Springs Road where he finally mustered up the courage to ask her on a date.

"I met her when I was at the swimming pool where she looked different, with goggles and stuff like that, I said this is strike three, I better ... wake up," he said.

"I was swimming my laps at the 'Y' and he was there," Lisa said. "We decided we had too many things in common and had to go out."

A year-and-a-half later they were married.

Lisa, a family practice physician, also swam in Tokyo at the Master World Championships in 1986.

Gantner plans to continue competing on a master level, but views competition differently than in the past.

"A lot of the competitiveness at the master's level is competitiveness with oneself and improvement and that's how I look at it.

"I would love to do the times I did way back when and maybe I can get there, if I put my nose to the grindstone, but that is hard right now.

"To really get to that level, it hurts. You really have to feel pain, you can't get away from it," he said.

Although Gantner downplays his abilities to achieve the times of yesteryear, Sampson is confident that Gantner could beat any one his age any day of the week, even former Olympians.

As much as he's kept up with swimming, he would beat the Gold medalists from the 1964 Games today, he's that good, Sampson said.

For now, Gantner enjoys the physical and psychological benefits of swimming laps while savoring the friendships he's made with fellow swimmers and athletes such as Sampson.

"I've made friends from all over the world," he said. "It's nice."

Cannons: Split doubleheader

It started with a walk, putting Quiroz on first. A bunt by Vega-Torres, which was overthrown to first, landed him on second and Quiroz on third. Chris Folk, A Co., 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., then hit a sacrifice grounder that moved Vega-Torres to third and scored Quiroz for the first run of the game.

Brian Baker, 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regt., followed with a sacrifice fly, scoring Vega-Torres and the Cannons led 2-0.

The score remained 2-0 until the bottom of the fifth when Jeffrey McCalister hit a solo home run putting the Rockies on the board. But they still trailed 2-1.

It wasn't until the bottom of the seventh that the Rockies managed to make a comeback. Vega-Torres walked the first batter, Alvin Mitchell, for the Rockies. Mitchell stole second, which put him in scoring position. Eddy Jamieson then hit a double to score Mitchell and tie up the game.

Vega-Torres was showing signs of fatigue as he walked two more to load up the bases. Nervous energy resonated throughout the ball field as Will Peoples, stepped up to bat for the Rockies. Peoples was 0 for 2 on the day, including a strikeout.

Vega-Torres, trying to work the corners, threw a pitch in the dirt that went by the catcher and Jamieson stole home, putting the Rockies up on the Cannons by one.

"The outside pitch was low and I didn't get out to block it quick enough, and the rest was history," Quiroz said.

The Cannons, however, still had another game to play.

"I just tell them to forget about it," said Cannons' coach Ed Gawlik, 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt., after a most frustrating loss. "I give them a minute to feel sorry for themselves and 15 to get ready for the next game."

Gawlik made some position changes, moving Baker from second to third base, bringing in Joseph Mann, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt., to second and playing Allen at center field. Gawlik also put left-hander, Steve Bielak, a family member, on the mound for the second game.

Pitchers for both teams maintained their big-gun status in the second game. Bielak had seven strikeouts, with three that clinched the game in the last inning.

Will Peoples, on the mound for the Rockies, only had one strikeout, but again, the fielders kept the Cannons' batters at bay.

The Rockies were on the board early making it 1-0 at the end of the first inning.

The Cannons countered with a run at the top of the second, tying it up 1-1.

The Cannons got ahead 2-1 in the third with a few extra-base hits but were only matched by the Rockies as they fought back to tie it up again, 2-2.

It wasn't until the top of the sixth that the Cannons scored a go-ahead run that would stick.

Baker started the inning with a single. He stole second and got to third on an overthrow. Still no outs, Peoples walked the next batter.

Then Chris Allen, B Co., 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., hit an infield grounder that scored the go-ahead run. Luciano Lucuanos, shortstop for the Rockies, didn't have enough time to catch Baker sprinting home and had to settle for an out at second base.

The Rockies threatened in the sixth to no avail and were put away by Bielak in the seventh with three consecutive strikeouts.

"We were trying to mix it up, in and out and throwing the fastball, curveball and change-up," Bielak said.

"He was hitting on everything at the end, everything was working for him," said Cannons' catcher Jacob Stimson, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

The Cannons and the Rockies will duel again 1 p.m. Saturday at Spencer High School, where Gawlik hopes to have the right combination of fielders anchored by his strong pitching staff to take both games.

Game: Attracts officers, NCOs for tournament

done with throwing their weight around.

With two out in the final inning, third baseman William Lendof stepped up to the plate and with one mighty swing of the bat, crushed the ball to the fence, driving in one run and rounding the bases himself to score the last run of the game taking the score to 10-5.

Although the officers made a valiant attempt to score in their last at bat, their efforts were unrewarded and the game ended.

After the game Lasanta said everything went according to their plan.

"The game was great," Lasanta said. "We had only three practices, but the game was nearly flawless. We only made a few errors and we were hitting well. Both teams played great games."

Herman Kirsch, the officers coach, said the game was a great time and both teams played their hearts out.

"We couldn't have lost to a better group of guys," he said.

Although this was the first meeting of the officers and NCOs, they are already planning another game and possibly making the regimental slugging fest an annual event.

Free Classifieds Rules

The Bayonet is proud to offer free classifieds to our military readers and their families, Fort Benning employees, DoD and Civil Service employees. To submit your free ad, email it to bayonet1@mindspring.com, fax it to (706) 682-3268, or come by our office at 1819 S. Lumpkin Rd. BUT FIRST...please note that some restrictions apply. Due to contract regulations, the Bayonet cannot run free ads for ANY profit making venture, including childcare, AVON sales, pets for sale, or real estate sales and rentals. Active and retired military can run ONE free house-for-sale ad per year, and all those who qualify for free ads are limited to ONE car-for-sale ad per year. IF YOU ARE SELLING ANIMALS, the following restrictions apply: Army regulations prohibit selling animals on post, so we will not accept pets-for-sale ads with post numbers or addresses. You can sell animals off post, but they must be paid for. Paid classifieds are $6.50 for the first ten words, then .50¢ for each word after ten. Ads must be paid in advance. The Bayonet accepts Visa, Mastercard, American Express, checks and cash. THE CLASSIFIEDS DEADLINE IS TUESDAYS AT 5:00 P.M. THE WEEK YOU WANT THE AD TO RUN. If you have any questions or need more information, please call our office at (706) 682-3346.

Leaders meet for land swap talks

Post hopes to trade land with Columbus

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Representatives from six American Indian tribes visited Fort Benning this week, consulting with post officials on a proposed land exchange between the installation and the city of Columbus.

The commanding general invited leaders from 11 federally recognized tribes who have historical and cultural ties to Fort Benning to the meeting Tuesday and Wednesday. It was a chance to voice their concerns about protecting cultural sites and to review the wording, line by line, used in two documents related to the swap.

Allen Harjo, a tribal administrator with the Thlopthlocco Tribal Town, traveled from Oklahoma to attend the consultation. Harjo's tribe was forced to leave the area now known as Fort Benning and move to Oklahoma in the 1830s.

"We are interested in preserving the cultural sites when the land is transferred from Fort Benning — and federal protection — to the city of Columbus," Harjo said.

Under the proposal the post would deed 2,124 acres, the North Tract, east of Schatulga Road to the city in exchange for 2,156 acres in Chattahoochee County, the South Tract, and $3.8 million. The city plans to use the North Tract for parks and economic development. The post will train on the South Tract property.

The tribal representatives want to make sure the language in the two documents addresses the protection of cultural sites and procedures for handling artifacts and American Indian remains that may be found on the land.

The documents are a memorandum of agreement and restrictive preservation covenants included with the deed.

Federal law requires federal agencies to consult with tribes on a government-to-government basis on issues that affect their cultural heritage. The tribes are considered separate government entities and Fort Benning must specifically consult with each tribe that has a historical interest.

The six tribes represented were the Muskogee (Creek) Nation of Oklahoma, Poarch Band of Creek Indians, Seminole Tribe of Florida, Thlopthlocco Tribal Town, Alabama-Coushata Tribe of Texas and the Chickasaw Nation.

Post officials talked and corresponded with representatives from the other five tribes. All 11 American Indian nations received copies of the documents discussed before the meeting and feedback was requested, said Dr. Chris Hamilton, cultural resource manager at Fort Benning.

City and military officials first started talking about swapping about 3,000 acres each in 1988; however, an environmental study later found that part of the city's land was home to the endangered red-cockaded woodpecker. Revisions in the proposal dropped the acreage to around 2,000.

Now the post is working to meet federal legal guidelines that require consultation with the Soldiers test new technology

Land Warrior system aims to give troops high-tech advantage

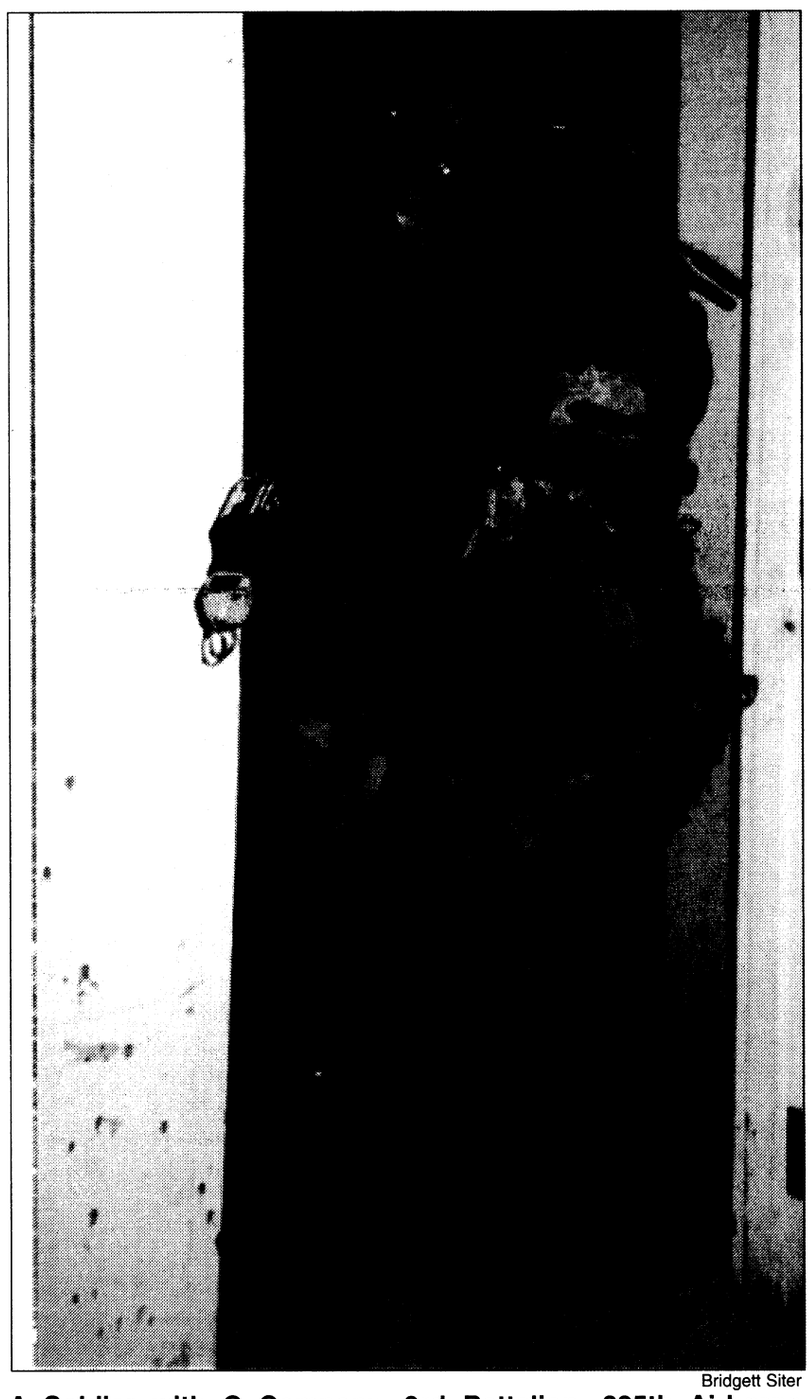
Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A platoon of Soldiers from Fort Bragg, N.C., spent two weeks at Fort Benning testing a leaner, meaner prototype of the Army's modernized warfighting equipment, the Land Warrior.

Nearly 45 Soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division began training at the McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain site July 31. They'll wrap up operations today, ending the Army's first unit-level training exercise using the latest version of the high-tech Land Warrior system.

The exercise was designed to give the Soldiers the opportunity to evaluate the new system's tactical and logistical efficiency in various urban battle scenarios.

"They're outfitted with Land Warrior prototypes, and they'll be telling us what they like and don't like about the system," said Lt. Col. Scott Crizer, Land Warrior product manager.



The idea for the Land Warrior was first introduced in 1991 after an Army Science Board Study recommended the service look at the Soldier as a complete weapon system. It then fell to the Training and Doctrine Command Systems Manager-Soldier at Fort Benning to develop a totally integrated fighting system primarily for use in close combat situations.

Raytheon produced early models, which weighed about 40 pounds and often proved too bulky to be practical in the field.

In 1998, the Army hired Exponent to redesign the Land Warrior with an eye on functionality as well as lethality. Crizer said contracting production to a smaller commercial industry reduced costs significantly and ultimately resulted in a smaller, more efficient model.

Drought's effects lessening

Water situation no longer 'critical' on post

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Recent rains and "climatic factors" prompted post officials to reduce water restrictions for post starting today.

Residents will now be allowed to resume the three-day-a-week outdoor watering schedule started in June, said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works.

"The recent rains and climatic factors that contribute to the flow of our water supply of Upatoi Creek achieved a sustained level of flow above the levels of deep concern we were experiencing when we tightened the restrictions last month," Stelzer said.

The entire state of Georgia was called upon earlier this summer to reduce water usage as the South continued to battle drought conditions for the third consecutive year.

Since that call for restrictions was issued, Fort Benning reduction efforts decreased water usage here by nearly 2 million gallons a day, Stelzer said.

"The post did extremely well in conserving water," he said. "But by decreasing the restrictions, this does not mean we are no longer concerned about water conservation efforts."

The post will continue to limit all

Sex-crime victims could see additional help

Study gives Army planners assistance in revamping policy

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army is working to improve how it investigates and prosecutes sexual misconduct crimes, and will expand victim services, as it adopts the recommendations of a recent study.

The study was completed earlier this year by a process action team made up of both military and civilian experts from fields such as medicine and psychiatry, law, social services, criminal investigation and automation. At the direction of Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera, the team examined how the Army handles sexual misconduct cases, from sexual harassment to rape.

The team recently finished its report titled "Improving the Investigation, Prosecution, and Victim Services Concerning Sexual Offenses."

The report recommends increased training and communication among medical, law enforcement, and legal personnel. It states the Army should assign and train more forensic investigative experts, as well as expand physician training relating to physical examination, documentation, handling of victims, and treating post-traumatic stress disorder.

The report also recommends the Army implement a number of other victim services such as hire full-time regional-level victim coordinators, hold regional training conferences, and expand the Victim Information and Notification Everyday program called VINE.

"The Army is committed to treating everyone with dignity and respect," said Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki. "We must treat every case seriously and do right for our Soldiers, civilians and families."

"This report reviewed our programs and identified areas needing improvement. The Army will aggressively implement improvements to our system," Shinseki said.

The team of experts recommended various ways the Army can improve the processing of these cases from offense reporting through trial.

Gregory Maggs, a professor at George Washington Law School and team consultant, said, "The Army does an excellent job investigating and prosecuting sexual offenses; however, improvement is still possible, particularly in the area of specialized training."

The study recommends using automation to improve distance learning and communication, as well as more frequent coordination for all involved, including commanders, medical personnel, investigators, prosecutors, and victim assistance liaisons.

"Enhanced training will ensure that a fundamentally solid system becomes even better," Maggs said. "The potential for gaps in case processing will be filled and mistakes will be avoided."

Joseph Tauber, an attorney from Baltimore and consultant to the Process Action Team, lauded the work the Army had done in sexual misconduct cases. But he said the Army can further improve by drawing from civilian expertise and attending specialized civilian training programs.

The Army has already taken the next step toward implementing these initiatives, officials said, by funding them at $1.3 million for the first year, and a total of more than $5 million over five years.

School proves good choice

commentary

I'm pro-choice. Now that I have your attention, let me explain.

I think parents should have the right to decide where their children will attend high school. I'm glad we have that option here on Fort Benning.

If your child, like mine, is entering the eighth grade, it's time to start thinking about where he'll be attending school a year from now. And if, like me, you've heard a lot of negative talk about the closest and most obvious choice, Spencer High School, here's something to chew on while you're considering your options.

James Tanksley, Spencer's assistant principal, said the school experiences fewer disciplinary problems than any other high school in Muscogee County.

I suspect that might be true, because "the Tank," as he's respectfully referred to by Spencer students, looks like he'd be a pretty effective deterrent for any budding criminal. And he and his colleague, Assistant Principal Dom Manio are both retired from the Army with combat experience, a real plus if you're going to work with 1,100 teenagers.

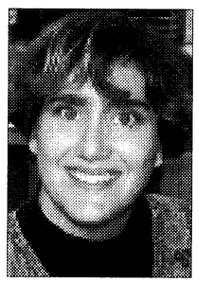
Tanksley said he credits "that military mentality" with keeping the hallowed halls of Spencer High safe and secure for Fort Benning's Army brats.

He still thinks like a Soldier, always keeping an eye out for potential problems and taking a proactive approach to safety and prevention. It's good to know one of our own is minding the kids.

As the new school year kicks off, you'll be reading a lot more about Spencer High School in The Bayonet.

With more than 80 percent of its student population living on Fort Benning, and the school itself within rock-throwing distance, there's really no denying that Spencer is Fort Benning's high school. Therefore we feel it's our responsibility to include Spencer coverage in Fort Benning's paper.

Spencer will have an open house for students and parents 7 p.m. Sept. 19. If you haven't made up your mind where your eighth-grader will be attending high school, take this opportunity to visit Spencer and get to know principal Olivia Rutledge and her staff.



Ask lots of questions — they're not afraid to answer.

As Kimberly Brown-Boynton — a third-generation Spencer graduate, and now a teacher at Spencer — put it, "We believe in Spencer. It's the best kept secret in Columbus."

Post parking warps sane minds

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

commentary

It simply amazes me how something so inconsequential can become such a major problem for people.

I am talking about cars and parking lots.

We have a lot of parking lots on Fort Benning; Infantry Hall is surrounded by so may parking possibilities it boggles the mind.

Of course with so many choices it is sometimes hard to make a choice. I witnessed this very fiasco the other day.

As I pulled into a parking row, a car was reversing out of the parking spot. I stopped and waited for the driver to pull forward. I waited. And I waited.

Now I wondered why this person didn't pull forward but I saw some people walking in the parking lot in our general direction so I figured the driver was waiting for passengers. The people walked by the car, got in their own and drove away. I was still waiting for the driver to pull forward.

After about five minutes, I got out of my car and walked to the silver-tinted window. I knocked on the window and the driver put it down and said, "I am waiting for you to back up."

"Why are you waiting for me to back up?" I asked.

"I want to park in that spot," she said gesturing to an empty spot on the other side of the row.

I looked where she was pointing and there was an empty spot, a car in the next spot and then three more empty spots. And she had reversed out of another spot.

Too many parking choices continues to boggle the minds of other drivers, too.

At School Age Services, parents drop off their children in the morning and then return for them in the afternoon.

There are plenty of parking spots along the fence but many parents choose to drive up to the steps or park along the side of the parking lot when dropping off or collecting their children.

So young children are now walking in an area where drivers are reversing into to leave the parking lot. This bothers me because often many parents are running late. (OK, so it's only me who's running late.)

When drivers park along the side of the parking lot, they block the drivers who've parked in the spaces. So now those rushed parents are now prevented from leaving the parking space.

Combat parking is what a coworker called the parking mentality for some people at Fort Benning. She said she's seen some people reverse into a diagonal parking spot at Infantry Hall. We've surmised the reason was for making a quick getaway.

I think people have watched the television commercial where the two women in sport utility vehicles race each other to a parking spot too many times. It's warped their ability to park sanely.

Reality of getting older strikes again

commentary

I looked in the mirror earlier this year and was shocked to see my mother.

This was suspicious because I knew for a fact that my mother was several thousand miles away.

Then, when I took my daughter to Honolulu for a visit in June, I almost mistook my mother for my grandmother, who crossed the great divide years ago.

As I do not indulge in, shall we say, "recreational pharmaceuticals," I had to face the facts ... time and gravity were trying to catch up.

Yep. At 70-plus, poor mom could be aging better.

At least mom has a lot of company. While we were visiting, we went to a graduation party that my cousin threw for her son.

My dad, whose hearing isn't what it used to be, speaks more quietly than he once did to avoid speaking way too loudly.

This did nothing for his brother and sisters, who pump up the volume when they talk because they don't hear very well either, but refuse to admit it.

Caught in the middle, I found myself alternating between leaning in to hear Dad and leaning back to avoid an eardrum rupture.

Still suffering from jet lag, I thought I was stuck in a time warp continuum when parts of the conversation kept going into instant replay, with variations, every few minutes.

Take this conversation between my uncle and one of his sisters.

"Ann! How's your leg?"

"My head's OK, but my leg is a little stiff."

"I didn't ask about your head, I asked about your leg."

"No, Margaret only gave Elsie a lei because she's visiting."

"You need to start wearing your hearing aid! I didn't ask about a lei, I asked about your leg!"

"If you have a hearing aid, you should use it. My leg is OK, thanks for asking. Did you have to go to the doctor for your head?"

Another sibling joined in. "What are you guys talking about?"

"Ann's leg."

That's when Dad chimed in with "What's wrong with her head?"

It went on (and on) from there.

To top it off, I found myself swiping at my face with a napkin almost nonstop because everyone else at the table kept staring at my mouth.

It finally occurred to me that lip-reading must take more practice, or better bifocals, than I once thought.

The last time my high school alumni newsletter arrived, I took off my bifocals to get a better look at a photo of some of my classmates. Those women had better start taking better care of themselves.

Except for having the same hair color we had in high school (only our, I mean, their hairdressers know for sure) they're starting to look middle-aged.

I'm not sure what happened to them.

When I look in a mirror, I see someone who pretty much looks the same as she did in Algebra II.

Actually, I look better ... much less stressed. Algebra was not my forte.

It's got to be something in the water back there. It's the only thing my former classmates, my mom, dad and his siblings would have in common.

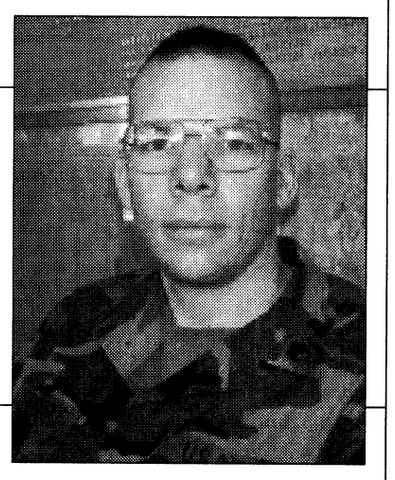
What I don't understand is how the water here has a reverse effect, making the junior enlisted and second lieutenants look like high schoolers. At least, they used to look like high schoolers.

Lately, they've started looking like middle schoolers.

It's the career course captains who look like they're in high school now. Just last week I saw one that looked like he shaved twice a week, whether he needed to or not.

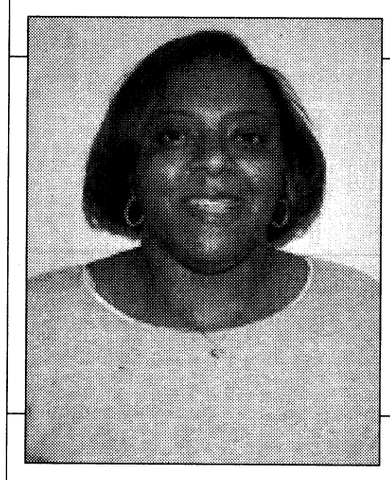
My friend Sandra's mom has a sampler hanging prominently in their home.

It's not as funny now as the first time I saw it 20 years ago:

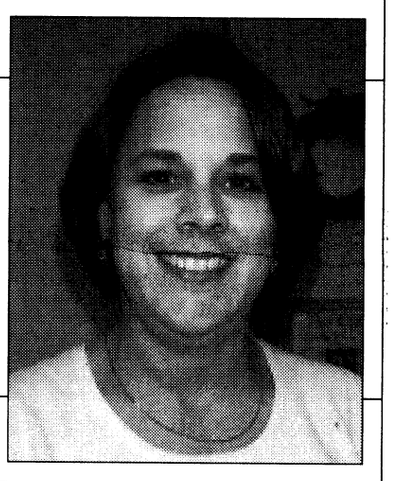


I like my new bifocals,
My hearing aid works just fine.
My false teeth fit me perfectly,
But Lord how I miss my mind.

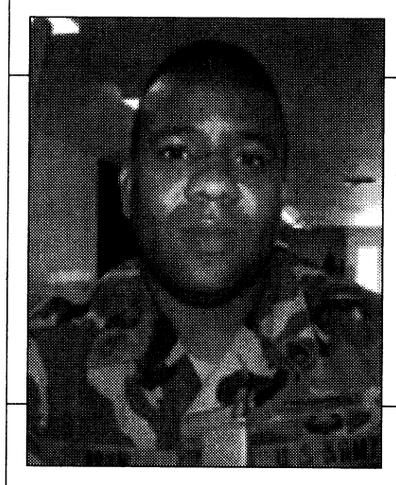
VARIOUS VOICES



What are the advantages to on-post schools versus off-post?



Laura Rakow, family member — "I think the DoDEA school system is much better than the public school system. I just feel safer having my children go to a school on post rather than off."



Staff Sgt. Michael Treglazoff, A Company , 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I believe it's a safer environment, it's convenient and the schools on post have better quality teachers. It also looks like the facilities are much nicer."

Winnie Wimberly, family member — "When my kids were going to post schools I really liked the diverse culture they were exposed to. And the teachers were unique in that they could understand my children and the special circumstances of the military."

Beth Roberts, secretary, Dexter Elementary School — "I believe there's more understanding of the Soldier's child and their needs in post schools. There is more compassion for the situations that come up such as deployments and PCSs."

Staff Sgt. Roberto Aron, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, NCO Academy — "I feel safer having my kids in on post schools because I can tell the difference between the on and off post environments."

Tawanna Tyler, family member — "There is just so much more culture in post schools. They get a chance to learn from children who come from all over the world as opposed to just being exposed to one culture in an off post school."

Former POW dedicates memorial today

Soldiers receive thanks 55 years after liberation

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Tales of Ranger exploits have spread throughout the world, but few know of the Rangers who successfully pulled off a daring rescue during World War II.

For former prisoner of war John M. Cook, the rescue gave him a second chance at life.

Now he is dedicating a memorial in honor of the Rangers, Alamo Scouts and aviators who risked their lives to save him along with 511 other POWs held at Camp Cabanatuan, in the Philippines.

The dedication is slated for 1 p.m. today at the Ranger Training Brigade and will honor the men who pulled off the virtually flawless mission

"The dedication is long overdue," Master Sgt. John Farley, Ranger Training Battalion's civil affairs officer, said. "The mission they pulled off is only one piece of Ranger history, but it is a classic example and a teaching point of a well-executed raid."

The raid began after only two days of preparation.

As the Rangers, Alamo Scouts and Philippine guerrillas infiltrated 30 miles behind enemy lines, airmen from the 547th Night Fighter Squadron flew over the camp as a diversion.

One particular airplane gave the raiders the opportunity to crawl more than 1/2 mile across an open rice patty when its pilot, much to the surprise of the plane's navigator, pretended to stall the plane directly above the camp attracting the full attention of the Japanese guards.

As the plane neared the altitude that was in range of the guards' rifles, the pilot took full control of the plane and flew away from the camp, allowing the raiders to start the attack undetected.

"The attack began at 7:30 in the evening," Cook said. "A friend and I had just got done with our work for the evening and were sharing a cigarette butt, tobacco was in very short supply. Thirty minutes after the attack began, the camp was cleared of all the prisoners except for one man who was in the latrine.

"He was hard of hearing and didn't know the camp was cleared," Cook said. "After he got done, he went back into the barracks and went to sleep.

"In the morning he realized he was all alone, but some of the raiders went back in and brought him out the next day," he said.

All 512 prisoners were taken out of the camp unscathed, but one man died of a heart attack along the 30-mile trek back to the American lines, Cook said.

Two of the raiders were killed and 10 were wounded in the liberation, which took the lives of all 270 guards in the camp.

"We marched all night and arrived at the American lines at 8 a.m., in Gimba 30 miles from the camp," Cook said. "We were checked out by doctors, then shipped to the states. I gained a pound a day by eating the great Navy food, then we arrived at the states. It was great to be home!"

"It has been 55 years since we were liberated," Cook said. "I think it is about time their story was told. They gave me a second chance at life."

Cook will unveil the memorial — a bronze plaque engraved with the names of the rescuers.

MEPS receives up-close look at new Soldiers

Station's workers witness turnout of their labors

The Atlanta Military Entrance Processing Station closed its office Aug. 4 and 43 of its personnel boarded a bus to Fort Benning for the chance to see firsthand what the young men who depart from their station experience in their first 24 hours — and beyond — at Sand Hill.

One of 65 MEPS in the country, the Atlanta station "ships out" nearly 6,000 troops each year to 10 training centers all across the different branches of the military, said Maj. Robert Larsen, commander of the Atlanta MEPS.

The Army has five centers — including the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), 29th Infantry Regiment, that processes Soldiers entering training at the Infantry Training Brigade and the Basic Combat Training Brigade.

"We wanted all our employees to come down and see what happens during the first few days after they leave us," Larsen said.

It's a direct handoff from the MEPS to the reception battalion, and communication between the two agencies is important, he said.

The U.S. Military Entrance Processing Command evaluates and processes applicants for enlistment, and then ships the accepted applicants to the appropriate training reception centers.

The trip included touring the 30th AG Bn. (Reception), observing training at the BCTB and attending an ITB graduation ceremony on Kannel Field.

"The snapshot glimpses of all this training will give them a better appreciation of what will happen next as they are processing the applicants," Larsen said.

Maj. Mike Matthews, executive officer for the reception battalion, conducted an orientation tour of Johnston Hall, and the group ate lunch in the dining facility.

Earlier this spring, a group from the 30th AG Bn. (Reception) visited the Atlanta MEPS where applicants are tested for their skills, examined by a staff physician and given background screenings to ensure enlistees are suitable for military service.

"In this day and age, with the recruiting challenges we face, it's important that all parts of the recruiting and reception process work together," Matthews said.

The Atlanta station works as the liaison between the reception battalion and MEPCOM, Larson said.

"Any problems that arise here with applicants are communicated to us, and we work to resolve them," he said.

Active-duty members from each branch of the service make up half of the "purple suit organization," Larsen said.

The other staff members are civilians like Betty Battle, who is a systems administrator.

"I wanted to see what the troops do when they come to basic training," Battle said.

Edward McFadden, a military processing clerk, enjoys his job at the station.

"I like meeting people, and although I have to ask the same questions over and over every day, it's always a different person," McFadden, who retired from the Air Force after 20 years, said.

After eight years on the job, McFadden said he has only once encountered an applicant he processed after she left the station.

"We were in a grocery store and she recognized me. She said, 'Look, there's the man who took my fingerprints,'" he said.

During the short visit at the reception battalion, Larsen admitted he was tempted numerous times to ask some of the newly arrived troops if they had been in Atlanta the day before, he said.

Restrictions: Get break thanks to recent rainfall outdoor watering to between the hours of 6 p.m. and 10 p.m. and require all watering to be done by hand.

"We want to be as helpful to our water users as the conditions of the Upatoi will allow," Stelzer said. "Adding this additional day will provide as much relief as we can afford under the current conditions."

The now effective watering schedule will allow for residents living in even-numbered addresses to water outdoors on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and residents living at odd-numbered addresses will be allowed to water on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Although local water conditions have seen some gain over the past few weeks, the Fort Benning area is still at a deficit of 14 inches of rainfall, according to the National Weather Service.

So far this year, Fort Benning has measured 19.48 inches of rainfall, a number that is nearly 58 percent less than the average rainfall for the area for this time of year.

"It would be a dangerous assumption to misread these modified restrictions as an end to our problems," Stelzer said. "The drought is not over, but for the time being, the intensity seems to have diminished for the watershed area that feeds the Upatoi Creek."

While Stelzer sees the intensity diminishing, it could very easily be prone to change.

According to the latest report from the National Weather Service, drier than normal conditions are on the way for the Fort Benning area for the next 90 days.

While Stelzer said he didn't want to make a prediction on the weather, he said he has reviewed the last four years of data on the flow rates of the Upatoi. If history repeats itself, the flow rates should take a significant upswing sometime in mid- to late-September.

Talks: Give tribal leaders voice in proposed land exchange

American Indians — eventually clearing the way for the exchange to finally be completed.

"The city and Fort Benning are eager to see this long-standing effort brought to a conclusion," Col. John Mitchell, post garrison commander, said.

Mitchell represented Fort Benning at the consultation table. His goal for the two-day meeting was "to produce documents that address the concerns of the tribes and still permit the city reasonable use of the land," he said.

"We are deeply committed to addressing the legitimate concerns of the tribes for the preservation of their cultural resources," Mitchell said.

Fort Benning agreed to set aside one acre to be used as a cemetery for any remains found.

Mayor Bobby Peters represented the city during the meeting. City officials said they want to complete the swap by the end of the year.

The National Historic Preservation Act mandates federal agencies consult with American Indians and other groups to resolve cultural heritage issues involving historical properties, said Don Klima of the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation.

"We are participating in the discussion in hopes that the issues can be resolved and a memorandum of agreement reached. That agreement would be the Army's evidence that it satisfied the requirements of Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act," Klima said.

The agreement would be signed by the Army, the State Historic Preservation Office and the Advisory Council.

The city and tribal leaders are acting as consulting agents for the memorandum and will also be invited to concur, or not concur, with the agreement.

"The state's role is to serve as a technical adviser to the city, the tribes and the Army," said David Crass who represented the state's historic preservation office in the talks.

But he pointed out that it was really a government to government meeting between the federal government and the tribal nations.

"This is a very unique process that the fort is going through. From the state's perspective, Fort Benning, the city of Columbus and the tribes negotiated openly and in good faith," he said.

Most of the tribal delegates remained on post Thursday and today to discuss the post's Integrated Natural Resource Plan, Integrated Cultural Resource Plan and future developments on the installation including projects at Lawson Army Airfield.

Test: Puts high-tech fighting equipment in Soldiers' hands commercial-off-the-shelf technology," Crizer said. "We drew from some of the technology that was already available in the private sector at a cost less prohibitive, and reduced some of what the Soldier had to carry to increase functionality."

The new Land Warrior Version 0.6 integrates small arms and high-speed digitized equipment into a light-weight wearable package that replaces the earlier version that was heavier and bulkier.

Though designed to be used primarily in urban surroundings, the new Land Warrior system can be used for navigational purposes in any environment.

Crizer said the Army expects to field 34,000 of the new systems by 2003, at a cost of nearly $10,000 per unit.

Each unit of the system weighs a mere 14 pounds and is comprised of five subsystems: the weapon, integrated helmet assembly, computer-radio system, software, and protective clothing and equipment.

Each subsystem is designed to increase the Soldier's margin of survivability by enhancing his ability to navigate, communicate, relay real-time intelligence data and observe the enemy with minimal exposure to gunfire.

"We're just bringing 21st century technology to the 21st century Soldier," Crizer said.

The weapon system is built around the M-4 modular carbine. It has a laser range finder, daylight video camera, laser aiming light and thermal sight device — all attached to the weapon and a body-armored vest.

The integrated helmet assembly has a computer and sensor display mounted on a light-weight assault helmet, which relays images from the M-4's camera, thereby allowing the Soldier to peek around corners without exposing himself to enemy fire.

The integrated helmet system also boasts a night sensor and panel display, laser detection, ballistic-laser eye protection, headset and microphone.

The protective clothing and equipment system incorporates interceptor body armor designed to withstand the impact from 9 mm fire and interchangeable armored plates that can stop point-blank small arms fire.

The armor is 17 pounds lighter than armor currently being used by Infantry Soldiers throughout the ranks of the Army.

A global positioning system locator, computer and radio are housed in the modular, load-bearing pack, making the 0.6 version more compact and lighter than previous versions.

"This feels pretty comfortable compared to commonly used load carrying equipment," said Sgt. Ryan Recktenwald, who demonstrated the system's purpose and capabilities. "It's not as apt to bounce around when you're running because it's closer to the body and fitted more tightly."

> "We're just bringing 21st century technology to the 21st century Soldier."
> Lt. Col. Scott Crizer
> Land Warrior Product Manager

The Land Warrior derives its functionality from its software system, which enables the Soldier to capture, display and relay video images.

It also provides multiple map displays and voice and digital communications.

A light-weight battery pack provides more than 20 hours of power to the hi-tech system and replaces earlier more cumbersome, short-life packs.

"This system has the potential to be revolutionary," Crizer said. "We want to stress that this is a prototype, not the finished product. We're still gathering feedback and making adjustments that will make this system better serve the Soldiers who will be using it."

Pfc. Damien Robinson, C Company, 3rd Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, was one of the Soldiers putting the Land Warrior system through the rigorous testing at the MOUT site earlier this week.

He had nothing but praise for the system.

"It took me three or four times to feel comfortable using it," he said, as he demonstrated by extending his gun around a corner and viewing his target on the helmet-mounted miniature screen. "Now I think it's easier to fire indirectly than directly."

The two-week train-up exercise prepared the unit for the Joint Contingency Force Advanced Warfighting Experiment in September at Fort Polk, La., where Soldiers will test the Land Warrior system during the large-scale battle operations.

Fort Benning troops take Land Warrior worldwide

Bridgett Siter

The old adage, "Don't believe everything you see," has traditionally applied to the big screen science-fiction movies Hollywood turns out on a regular basis. But one Fort Benning Soldier says the movie industry's futuristic fantasies are becoming Army realities.

His name is Sgt. Ryan Recktenwald, but when he's outfitted in the Land Warrior Version 0.6 prototype, he answers to various Hollywood handles like "Robo-cop," "Universal Soldier" and "Starship Trooper." At first glance he looks more like a Schwarzenegger stunt double than a plausible picture of today's Army Soldier.

"I get a lot of comments comparing me to movie characters," Recktenwald said. "But I respond by saying with today's advanced technology, the things we're seeing out of Hollywood are now becoming reality."

Recktenwald has been demonstrating the Land Warrior since May. He's one of only two Army demonstrators who spend about four days each week traveling the country, and sometimes the globe, giving head-to-toe demonstrations of the functions and capabilities of the Army's newest integrated weapons system.

Recktenwald was present for the Times Square celebration of the Army's 100th birthday June 14, and he's appeared on CNN and ABC. He just returned from a four-day stint at the Republican National Convention where he modeled the system for senators and congressmen. As part of a bipartisan agreement, his colleague, Sgt. Robert Benedict, will appear at the Democratic National Convention.

"I love the travel," Recktenwald said. "I consider myself a liaison between the Army and the general public who's often misinformed about the Army's direction. I'm like a walking advertisement for advanced technology and the Army's holistic approach to the total Soldier."

The 27-year-old Almond, N.Y., native said it didn't take long to feel comfortable handling the Land Warrior system.

"It took me about a week to be able to handle it proficiently," he said. "It's user friendly, and anyone with just a little computer knowledge will feel comfortable with it."

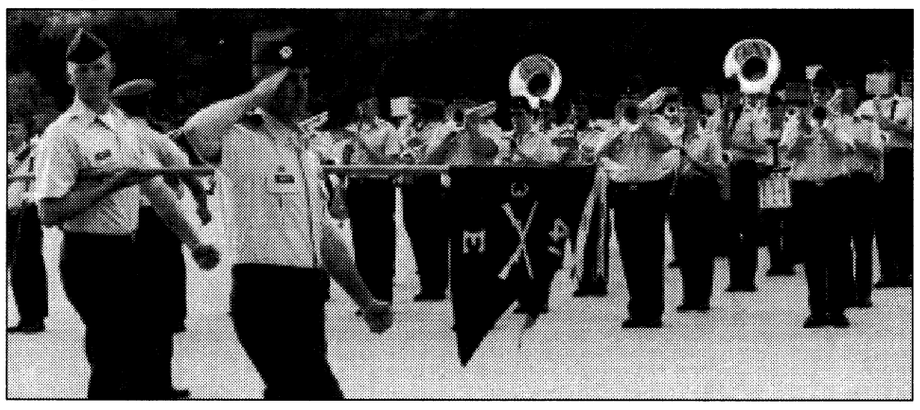
Soldiers go from basic training to band



Trainees graduate, return to field to play in ceremony

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A week after standing on Pomeroy Field at Sand Hill and graduating from basic training, six Soldiers returned to march in another graduation ceremony on the same field — this time as members of the band.

Likewise, six men who graduated during that Aug. 3 ceremony for D and E Companies, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, joined the band this week for a month of rehearsal and performances.

Fort Benning's 283rd Infantry Band has increased its numbers considerably in the last few weeks thanks to the reserve and National Guard musicians graduating from the BCTB and moving across post for their advanced individual training.

Sally Shutt

The 283rd Infantry Band performs at a graduation ceremony on post.

Their numbers have also been bolstered by elements from two reserve bands — the 84th Division Band from Milwaukee, Wis., and the 85th Division Band from Chicago. The reservists are conducting their annual training on post and performing at graduations and other functions, along with the Soldiers in AIT and permanent-party band members.

Active-duty musicians complete their AIT at the Army's School of Music in Norfolk, Va. Guardsmen and reservists complete their four-week AIT with active-duty bands.

"Their training is actually performing, and we are preparing them to perform," said Sgt. 1st Class Mark Eister, the Infantry Center Band's first sergeant.

"Our job is to make sure they look, march and play up to standard," he said.

And there are plenty of opportunities get a chance to perform during the summer at Fort Benning.

In addition to graduations every Thursday and Friday morning at Sand Hill, there are all the other schools on post conducting graduation ceremonies, as well as battalion and brigade changes of command and other functions.

"It's been a typical summer. We just plan on not having a life at home during June, July and August," said Chief Warrant Officer Paul Clark, the bandmaster and company commander.

Pulling a calendar from his pocket, Clark showed during the week of July 10-15, the band performed 13 jobs in addition to a TDY trip to Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

Pfc. Brandon D'Acquisto, 20, of Jacksonville, Ala., completed basic training two weeks ago and had already performed at a retirement and three graduation ceremonies.

"I've had to learn to march the Army way. It's a totally different style from high school," said the reservist who plays the saxophone.

The age range for the AIT students is 18 to 25. All but Spc. Timothy Storly, a high school band director from Oneida, S.D., are enrolled in college and five are music majors.

From Utah to New York and Vermont to Louisiana, the musicians all agreed one of the hardest aspects of basic training was not being able to play their instruments or listen to music for nine weeks.

Once assigned to the Infantry Band, the Soldiers were provided with instruments to play during their training.

3rd Brigade 'Mechwarriors' battle it out in squad competition

Competition measures endurance

2nd Lt. Peter Bikos
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

For the average Soldier the week of July 24-28 was just another work week, but to the Infantry Squads of 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade "Battle Boars" it was their biggest test since the last three deployments.

During the Infantry Squad Competition these "Mechwarriors" competed against each other in various events that measure physical and mental endurance as well as Infantry skills at the squad level.

A point score was kept on each event to determine the winner, but every member of every squad was keeping score in their head.

The week started out with an APFT test in the morning, with Soldiers grunting to push out the last repetition that might make the difference for their squad.

Photos by 1st Lt. Michael J. Fortenberry

Members of 1st Squad, 2nd Platoon, A Company, race to finish the litter carry event of the unit's Infantry Squad Competition held July 24-28.

Later under a blazing Georgia sun Soldiers engaged moving pop-up targets with deadly accuracy on the advanced rifle marksmanship range.

To add even more technical events and challenges to the first day, a quarter of the required Expert Infantry Badge were completed.

The second day the squads raced from point to point on the day land navigation course, completed five more EIB tasks before going back to find more points in the pitch-black during the night land navigation course.

It was during the confidence and obstacle courses and the litter carry. that every point made the difference.

Some Soldiers considered the litter carry the most difficult event because it came after the confidence and obstacle course, and the litters were filled to capacity with sandbags.

"The litter carry was sheer pain and a serious gut check," said Pvt. Matthew Gadalinski.

After wrenching through the tasks, the squads moved to Sand Hill to negotiate the bayonet assault course.

With bayonets fixed, the "Battle Boar" squads screamed their way through the course slashing and butt-stroking everything in their way.

The scores before the final event, a timed six-mile road march were so close; it would prove to be the event that would decide the winner of the Infantry Squad Competition.

Knowing the scores were close, the squads did their best racing against the clock and each other to win.

After the road march everyone was completely exhausted from their week-long ordeal and it was 2nd Squad, 3rd Platoon, A Company that took home the win.

"Consistency helped us win. Everybody gave 110 percent all the way through," said Sgt. Richard Robak, squad leader of the winning squad.

The squad members were Sgt. Carl Black, Sgt. Mark Miller and Spc. Julian Campbell, Spc. Michael Dawson, Spc. Shawn Wilson, Pvt. Michael Bayles, Pvt. David Floyd and Pvt. Matthew Gadalinski.

Specialist shares musical talent

Zenobia becomes one of four viola players in Army

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

In less than a week, a graduate from the Basic Combat Training Brigade was promoted from specialist to staff sergeant.

Spc. Tim Zenobia graduated from E Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, BCTB, Aug. 3. Four days later, he became a staff sergeant at Fort Myer, Va.

One of four viola players in the Army, Zenobia is assigned to the U.S. Army Strings, an ensemble of the U.S. Army Band, or "Pershing's Own." As part of the "Strolling Strings," the 23-year-old will perform regularly at the White House for the president and other dignitaries.

"He has a great job ahead of him," Chief Warrant Officer Paul Clark, bandmaster of Fort Benning's Infantry Band, said.

"There are only four slots for the viola and in order to get in, you must have a master's degree in performance. He will become a staff sergeant on Monday because of his civilian skills," Clark said.

Those skills were honed at the Juilliard School of Music for four years and the Eastman School of Music in New York. Zenobia earned his master's degree in viola performance from the Cleveland School of Music.

Zenobia

After graduation he auditioned with various symphony orchestras around the country.

"Typically they would have 200 people trying out for one slot," Zenobia said.

He met another musician who was considering auditioning for the Army band, and Zenobia decided to pursue a spot with the Army's premiere musical organization — Pershing's Own.

He completed four rounds of interviews and auditions before being offered a chair with the elite orchestra. But he still had to complete basic training.

"I knew when they offered me the job what the repercussions would be," he said referring to the gas chamber, road marches and not being allowed to listen to or play music during nine weeks of basic training.

During his final week at Sand Hill, the musician was allowed to share his talent with his fellow trainees on two occasions.

The Sunday before graduation he played six different hymn arrangements on a rented viola during the Protestant Worship Service at the Regimental Chapel at Sand Hill.

Weeks before he had approached Chaplain (Capt.) Stan Vaughan asking to assist with the worship services, but neither Vaughan nor the chapel had a viola to offer him.

"He mentioned that he went to the Juilliard School of Music. It's kind of rare to get someone of that caliber, and I had an idea of how we could use his talent as part of the worship service. He wasn't giving a performance, but acting as a musical worship leader," said Vaughan, 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., chaplain.

"He wanted to contribute to the service and to his fellow Soldiers," Vaughan said.

The chaplain found a student-grade viola at a local music store and rented it for Zenobia to use.

"The men were in awe," Vaughan said. "They didn't know they had someone of that talent in their own ranks."

The day before graduation Zenobia performed again in the Regimental Chapel, this time using his own viola and playing classical pieces. His parents, John and Grace, brought his instrument from their Hollidaysburg, Pa., home. The instrument is valued at $25,000 and the bow at $3,500, Zenobia said.

"We wanted to allow others from across post to hear the newest addition to Pershing's Own Band, and he was willing to give up part of his Family Day to play," Vaughan said.

Zenobia started playing the piano at age 8 and at 15 he transitioned to the viola when his high school orchestra needed a viola player. "I loved it," he said.

His long-term goal is to teach viola and work with a national symphony, he said.

Engineers clear path for pond project

Walking trails connect Russ Pond to Riverwalk

Spc. Amy Nyland
Bayonet staff

In a matter of one, two, three, Russ Pond will be the place to go on Fort Benning.

The pond, which has been undergoing a transformation, is currently in phase two of a three-phase make-over that began in September.

Phase one, which was primarily a clean-up phase, converted the pond from a dingy swamp into a manageable recreation area, said Capt. Ken Law, civil engineer for the project, 36th Engineer Group.

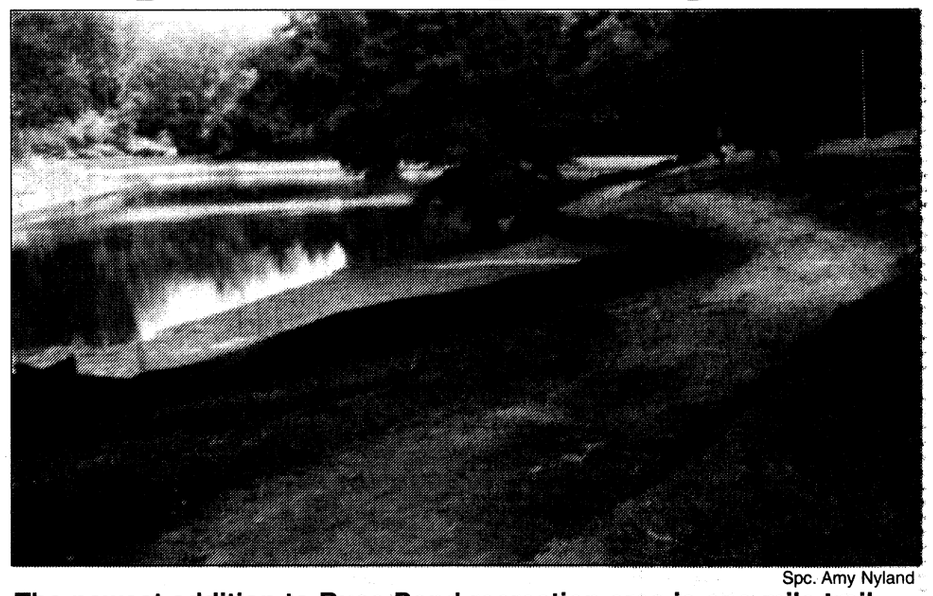
Phase two is in the process of creating a one mile walking trail that circles the upper and lower pond and connects to the Riverwalk, Law said.

Since early July, crews from the 63rd Engineer Company (Combat Support Equipment), 36th Engineer Group, have been hard at work creating the 6-foot wide path, said 2nd Lt. Endia Cook, officer in charge of the project.

Using smaller scale equipment to minimize the destruction of habitat, Cook said the company cleared a path through the woods around the pond. Besides digging out the path and laying it with a gravel mix, the company created a culvert and reinforced areas of the trail with sand bags.

Although the company is used to larger scale jobs such as building roads, phase two hasn't been a piece of cake, Cook said.

"This is a change of pace for us, but it is still a challenge," she said. "We have to keep up with what's going on in the motorpool along with the job. I think the Soldiers like it ... it's a good experience for them."



Law said the Soldiers are also cross training on different equipment as well as different skills. One of these skills is bridge building.

Along with everything else, the Soldiers are building and refurbishing four bridges — something that is not in their MOS, he said.

"These Soldiers are equipment operators by trade, so this is a good opportunity for them to broaden their horizons."

Marine remembers Guadalcanal

58th anniversary of island battle still in Marine's mind

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

At 78, John Sanders doesn't hesitate to admit there are days when he cries, and Monday proved to be one. It was a day that evoked emotional memories dating back 58 years for the former Marine and Purple Heart recipient.

Aug. 7, 1942, was the day Sanders and thousands of other Marines landed on Guadalcanal in the Solomon Islands. The invasion surprised the Japanese and was the starting point of a six-month battle for the island, one of the most vicious campaigns of World War II.

Eight months earlier when the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, Sanders was living in the small town of Cordele, Ga.

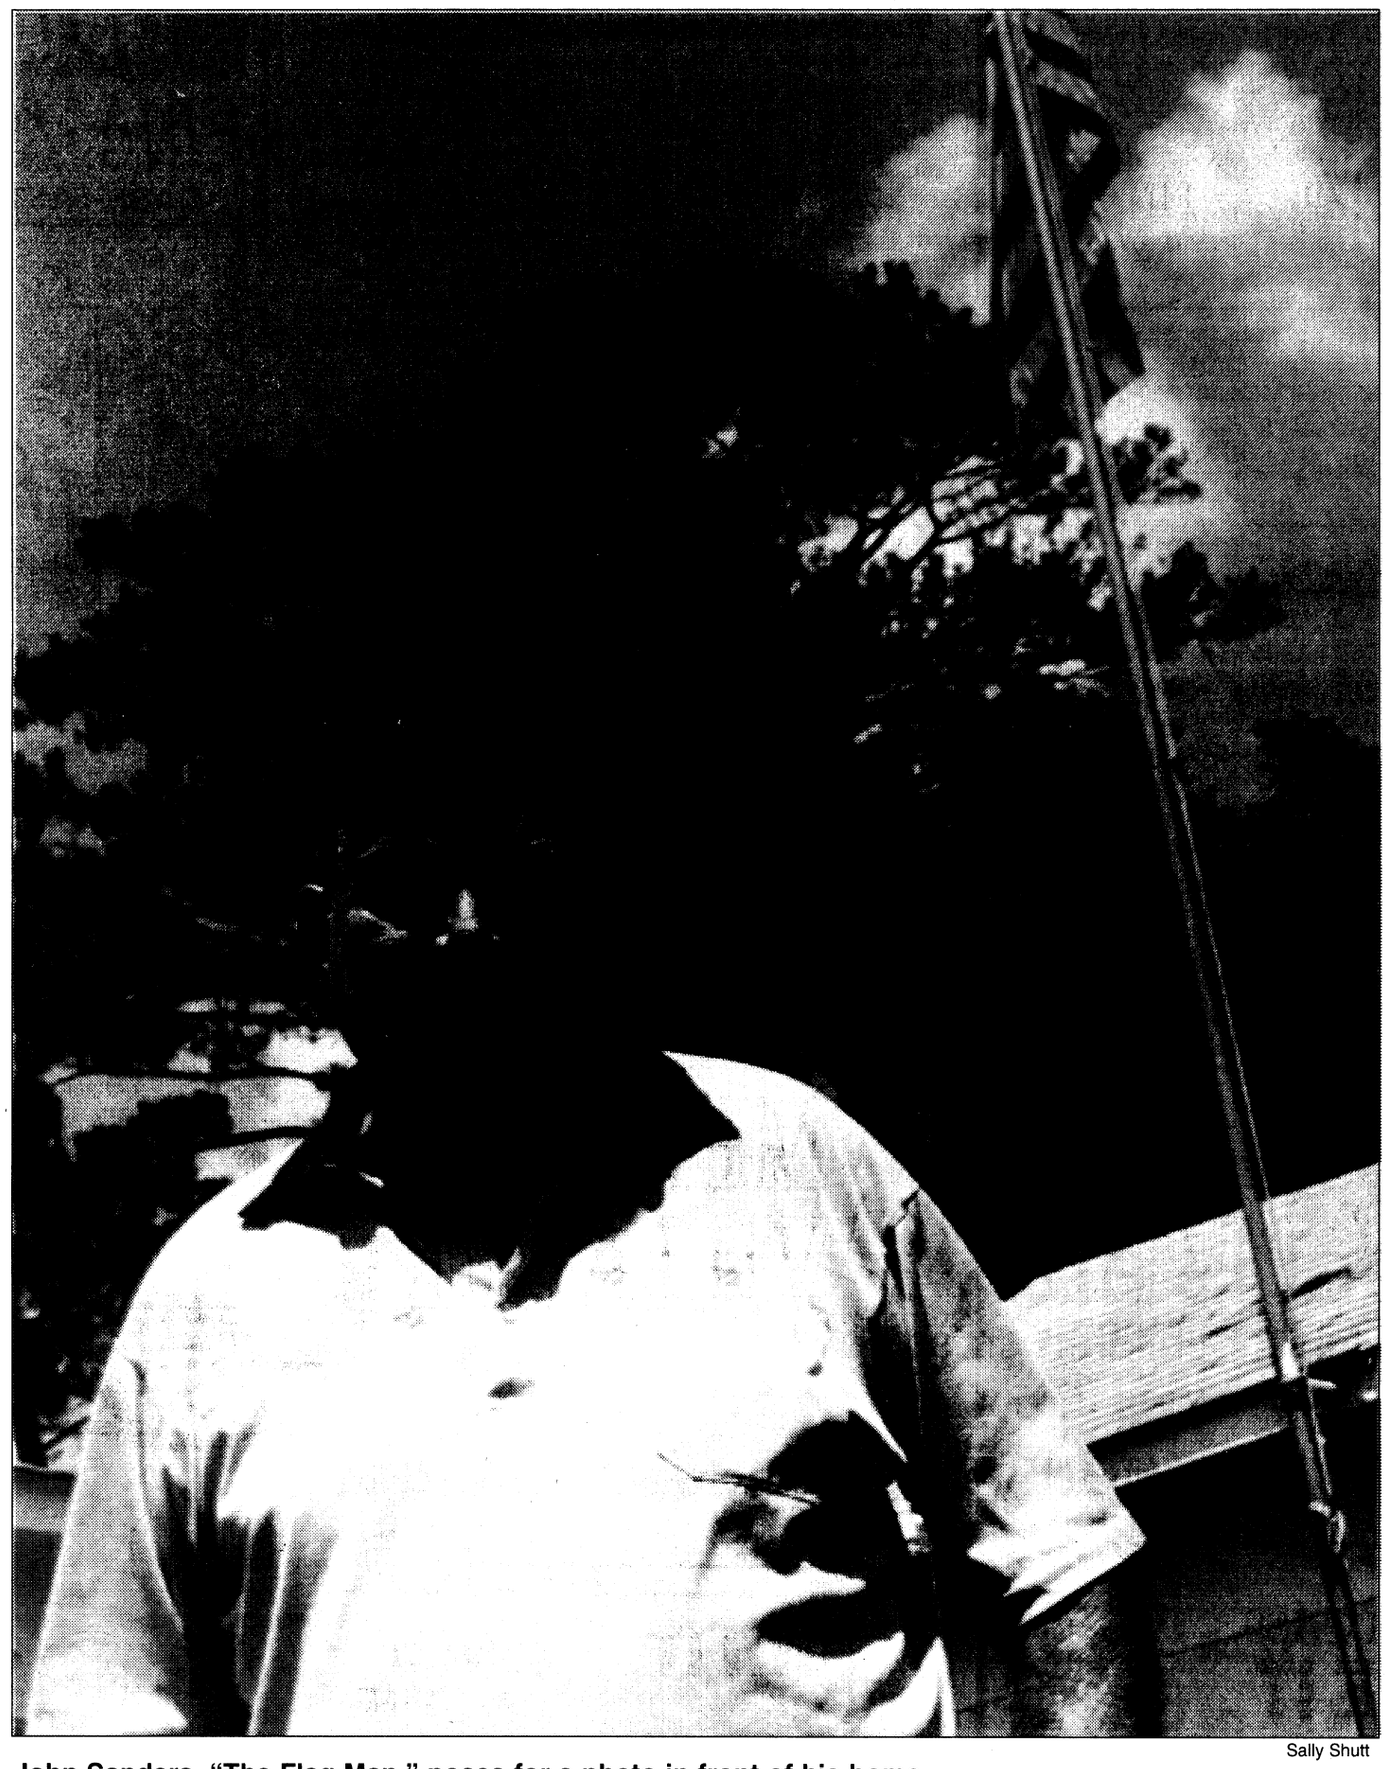
"I knew nothing about the military or rifles," he said.

He enlisted a month later, choosing the Marines on the advice of a cousin serving in the Corps.

"He told me that if I would do, or try to do, everything that the instructors told me I would make it through boot camp.

I did and I learned discipline that has helped me through life," Sanders said from the kitchen of his Columbus home.

After basic training at Parris island, S.C., the 19-year-old was assigned to I Company, 3rd Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, and within a few months shipped to New Zealand and then to Guadalcanal for the Aug. 7 invasion.



Sanders recalled the constant shelling from Japanese ships and gunfire from ground troops, as well as eating worm-infested rice.

"One day we would call it ham, the next chicken and the next pork. I didn't care whether I lived or died, I was just so tired and hungry," he said.

"I can remember seeing many Marines getting killed, but the one I will never forget is the first one," he said. "He was my buddy from the same squad."

Exactly two months after the invasion, on Oct. 7, Sanders was shot in the chest.

'Hooch to get cleanup

Post volunteers needed for trash pickup

Special to the Bayonet©

The banks of the Chattahoochee River require some tidying up, and need volunteers to do it.

Fort Benning needs volunteers to participate in the Help the Hooch project. Working in conjunction with the Keep Columbus Beautiful's Help the Hooch project, the post effort will work on cleaning up the Fort Benning portion of the Chattahoochee River.

The event will be from 9 a.m. to noon on Oct. 13, and volunteers can register by calling 545-1007. The last day of registration is Sept. 22.

"It will be a structured event and everyone will have a job to do," said Chief Warrant Officer Ken Shuler, coordinator of the event and chief of operations for the Environmental Management Branch, Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Public Works.

The different jobs for the volunteers include working concession stands during lunch, collecting trash from the banks of the Chattahoochee River and consolidating trash.

"We collected 7.25 tons of trash last year," Shuler said.

Some of the items found during last year's Help the Hooch project were two washing machines, 19 car parts and a variety of other items from bike helmets to beer bottles.

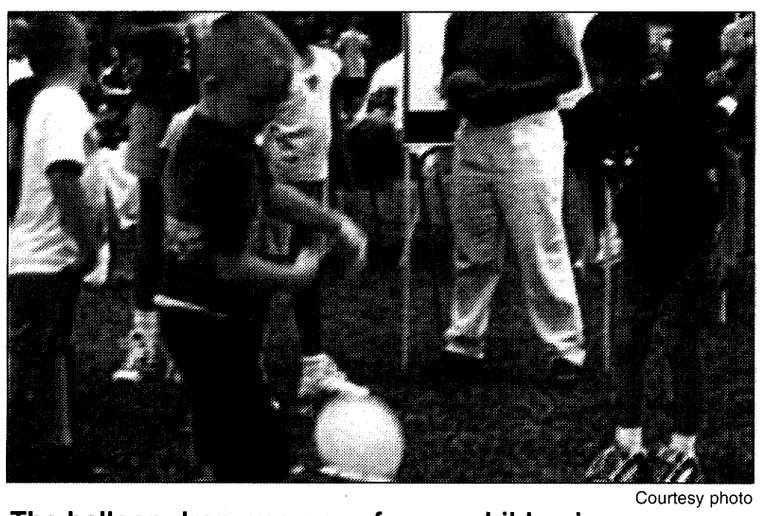
In addition, recycling and disposal of the trash was done at Fort Benning and will be done here again this year.

"We have the resources to weigh it, categorize it and dispose of it," Shuler said.

Keep Columbus Beautiful will supply all trash bags and gloves for the Fort Benning Help the Hooch.

The Fort Benning event will be on a Friday to encourage the work force to participate.

"We don't want to take family time away, but we want to give everyone a chance to participate," he said.



Families will have the chance to participate in the Fort Benning Help the Hooch project on Oct. 14 when many schools will be conducting their own clean ups.

Dexter Elementary school, home of the Earthwatchers, GreenThumbs and eClub, plan to participate in the Help the Hooch effort this year.

2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

With overcast skies and thunderstorms in the forecast, the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry conducted their annual family day at Uchee Creek Campgroud.

The activities started with Chaplain (Capt.) Mickey Jett giving the invocation followed by the master of ceremonies, Staff Sgt. Anthony Babilonia, D Company, briefing everyone of the activities to be conducted.

The weather cooperated and the activities began with BJ's Dance Studio, a local girls' group located in Columbus.

The BJ Dancers collected $172 in donations from Pioneer members and families for their trip to perform in the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade.

Fun was the menu for the day. Adults participated in different activities such as basketball, volleyball, horseshoes and tug of war.

Kids ran free within the park, enjoyed the trolley ride, and an abundance of games and activities consisting of face painting, air bubble trampoline, cotton candy, snow cones and games and prizes.

Approximately 500 people feasted on an array of foods prepared by the cooks of D Co. The menu included 55 slabs of barbecue ribs, 50 lbs of potato salad, 500 pieces of barbecue chicken, 300 hamburgers, 250 hotdogs and six large cans of baked beans.

Compost improves soil quality

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

A gardeners best asset is compost. No matter how nutrient rich your soil is compost can always make it better. But what exactly is compost?

Compost is the loamy mixture produced from decomposed organic materials.

Often referred to as "black gold" by gardeners, compost is the perfect additive to garden beds or containers.

Compost improves soil quality by increasing the soils ability to retain water without being soggy. Although compost only has an average of 1 percent of nitrogen, it does provide nutrients for plants in small doses.

In clay soils, like here at Fort Benning, compost added to the soil makes it more friable and reduces the risk of root rot. The more friable soil also enables plant roots to extend out easily. The composts ability to retain water without being soggy reduces the risk of root rot. Root rot can be a serious problem in clay soils.

When compost is dug into a bed of clay soil the clay breaks apart and smaller pieces stick to the compost. The soil then retains the texture of the smaller pieces of clay rather than the larger pieces. The more compost that is put in, the better the texture of the soil.

In sandy soils compost enables the soil to retain moisture and keeps nutrients from leaching out. The compost makes the sandy soil thicker trapping moisture around thirsty plant roots.

Container gardens need good drainage but also dry out faster than garden beds. Compost used in containers keeps the soil moist for longer periods of time. At the same time, it allows for drainage so not to cause root rot from roots sitting in water.

Compost is great for the environment as well. It adds to the loamy portion of soil that makes it nutrient rich. Unlike fertilizer and chemical garden agents there is nothing harmful about compost. So pile it on without any worries.

Compost is readily available and inexpensive. It has qualities that are unbeatable by any other source of soil amendments. Gardeners of any level expertise should utilize this natural tool.

Tricare benefit covers most immunizations

Preventive Services benefit also covers physical examination

Tricare

Those lazy, hazy, summer days are flying by, and school will be starting again before you know it.

Now is the time to begin preparations for the children's return to school, and that includes planning for student immunizations and physical examinations.

Each year, school children entering specified grades are required to have immunizations before the start of the school year.

While immunization requirements may vary slightly from state to state, most of these immunizations will be covered by Tricare under the Clinical Preventive Services benefit.

Covered immunizations include inoculations for diphtheria, pertussis and tetanus (DPT), measles, mumps, chicken pox, rubella, polio vaccine and hepatitis B.

As a Tricare Clinical Preventive Services benefit, these immunizations are available to all Tricare beneficiaries in age-appropriate doses and at specified age intervals.

Comprehensive physical examinations are also covered under the Clinical Preventive Services benefit at specified age intervals.

One comprehensive disease prevention exam is covered in each of the following age ranges: 2-4; 5-11; 12-17; 18-39; 40-64.

Tricare prime beneficiaries

The following guidelines apply for immunizations given as part of the Tricare Prime Clinical Preventive Services benefit:

- They are available to all Prime enrollees.
- They do not require an authorization.
- If performed by a network provider, they do not require a referral.
- If performed by a non-network provider, a referral is required.
- The immunizations must be administered in a physician's office.
- If the patient goes to the doctor for the immunizations only, no copayment will be required at the time of service.
- One copayment may be required if the immunizations are given along with a comprehensive disease prevention exam for which the age and frequency guidelines have been exceeded.

For Tricare extra and standard beneficiaries

- There is no prior authorization required.
- There may be cost shares associated with individual Tricare services.

Your child's school should be notifying you soon if your child is due to have immunizations.

If you are notified, make an appointment right away with your child's doctor for the required immunizations, plus any other preventive services due under the Clinical Preventive Services benefit.

For more information about the Tricare Clinical Preventive Service, call the Beneficiary Service Line, 800-444-5445.

Recommended ages for immunizations

The following chart gives the recommended ages for inoculations covered by the Tricare Clinical Preventive Services Benefit.

- Tetanus, diphtheria, pertussis — 2 months, 4 months, 6 months, 15 months, 18 months, 4-6 years; Tetanus and diphtheria, once 11-16 years
- Polio — 2 months, 4 months, 6 months, 4-6 years
- Mumps, measles, rubella — 12-15 months, 4-6 years, 11-12 years; adults born after 1956 without written documentation of immunization on or after first birthday; HIV-infected persons; persons entering college
- Influenza — Adults any age with chronic cardiovascular or pulmonary disorders, including asthma; adults with chronic diseases (diabetes), renal dysfunction, anemia, immunosuppresion disorders
- Hemophilus Influenza Type B — 2 months, 4 months, 6 months, 12-18 months
- Pneumococcal disease — Adults with significant chronic cardiovascular disease or pulmonary disorders, including asthma; adults with splenic dysfunction, asplenia, Hodgkins disease
- Hepatitis A, Hepatitis B — birth-2 months, 1-4 months, 6-18 months, should complete series by 11-12 years
- Rotovirus — 2 months, 4 months, 6 months
- Lyme disease — Adults and children age 15 and older
- Varicella (chicken pox) — After first birthday, or at 11-12 year visit if no history of chicken pox; adults with no history of chicken pox; nonpregnant women of childbearing age.

Jodie Bowers
Community LIfe Mayors' Program

Lately there have been some issues concerning children shooting their BB guns in the housing areas.

Not only is this extremely unsafe, but post regulation states that shooting BB guns in post housing areas is strictly prohibited. Already, three people have been warned. Parents are asked to make sure this does not become a problem.

Once again a reminder that post regulation prohibits children who are younger than 6 years old to be outside without parental supervision.

Also, residents who have an outside dog need to make sure their pet has shade and water.

Dogs get hot, thirsty and hungry and can also suffer from such things as heat stroke.

If anyone sees a case of neglect or abuse, they should call their community life NCO.

For more information about the Community Life Mayors program, call Jodie Bowers at 685-0030.

rails along sections of the trail and hand rails on all the bridges. Also, he said the bridges have been redesigned for handicap accessibility.

In the past there were safety concerns with snakes and other creatures near the pond, but with a specific trail, there should be less of a chance visitors will encounter dangerous wildlife, Law said.

"The wildlife has to live here with us also, so we don't want to get rid of the wildlife ... but we want to make sure people can enjoy the wildlife without getting hurt by it," Law said. "With a defined walking trail they will be able to tell if there's danger."

If all goes well and the weather remains dry, phase two should be completed today, he said.

"We want to complete it as soon as possible so we can get people out here walking the trail and enjoying this area once again," Law said.

In phase three of the project, the Directorate of Public Works will take over the work and will continue to upgrade the Russ Pond area and to such things as playground areas and the pavilion.

students. Earthwatchers are third-graders, GreenThumbs are fifth graders and eClub members are kindergarten and first-grade students.

"We participate in an environmental project each month to keep awareness up all year," said Terri Bond, third-grade teacher and sponsor of Earthwatchers at Dexter Elementary. October will be Help the Hooch.

"We've found that the little kids are just as energetic about cleaning up the river," said Earnestine Ezekiel, kindergarten teacher and sponsor of the eClub.

"It's important that we help to preserve and protect the environment because it holds our most important resources," Ezekiel said.

Last year volunteers helped the elementary school's environmental clubs clean up the stream that runs in front of Infantry Hall.

The children then attended a festival in Columbus that followed the Help the Hooch project, where the eClub sang a song about the Chattahoochee River.

The three clubs plan to meet in the next few weeks, after school begins, to determine an itinerary of their participation in the project.

Keep Columbus Beautiful will also hold its own Help the Hooch that will incorporate the Chattahoochee River as well as lakes, streams, parks and some of the main roadways within the tricommunity area from 9 to 11 a.m. Oct. 14. Following the event there will be a kick-off celebration at noon at Golden Park.

"We're asking all our schools to conduct cleanup on campus on Friday and the groups and individuals to come out on Saturday," said Gloria Weston-Smart, executive director for Keep Columbus Beautiful.

There is no age limit and children are welcome to participate, but must be accompanied by an adult.

To register for Help the Hooch on Oct. 14, call Keep Columbus Beautiful at 653-4008 by Oct. 5.

"If there's an area that a person would like to clean up, just let us know," she said.

Weston-Smart said many times people have a certain area in mind they want to pick up, and Keep Columbus Beautiful would be happy to put it on the list and supply them with trash bags and gloves.

Jobs for the event include site captains that distribute supplies to volunteers and people to clean up the area.

Also at the festival volunteers will be needed to help with concessions and different booths that are either learning stations about water projects, or rides and games.

For more information about Help the Hooch at Fort Benning, call 545-1007 or in the tri-community area, call 653-4008.

Marine: Marks anniversary of bloody World War II battle

His right lung was punctured and a rib shattered. Two Marines carried him 300 feet behind the front line to the field ambulance, which transported him to an underground operating room where a surgeon removed part of the bullet.

"Part of it he had to leave in me," he said.

"The doctor told me, 'If you trust in me and trust in the Lord, I will pull you out of this mess,' and he did," Sanders said.

Two days later he was transported to a naval hospital in New Caledonia and eventually sent to the states to recover. He received a Purple Heart in 1944.

Sanders left the Marine Corps in September 1944 and went to work at Fort Benning. He retired from civil service after 21 years, and his final job was as a supervisor of the air conditioning section of the Directorate of Public Works.

During the last 12 years, Sanders has earned the name "The Flag Man" throughout the region in recognition of his flag-bearing Buick, which often appears in parades. Saturday Sanders drove his car in the Old Soldiers' Day Parade in Alpharetta, Ga., and he plans to participate in Veterans Day events in November.

He came up with the idea of the car after he could no longer walk in parades due to problems with gout. He mounts 15 flags on the vehicle, five representing each branch of the military.

Sanders has traveled as far away as Indiana, Florida and Tennessee to participate in parades, something he does at no charge.

"I do this because I love my country and I love the men and women who serve today to protect our freedom," he said.

"My only ambition is to try to remind people of what our men have done over the last 225 years."

Family day: Provides fun

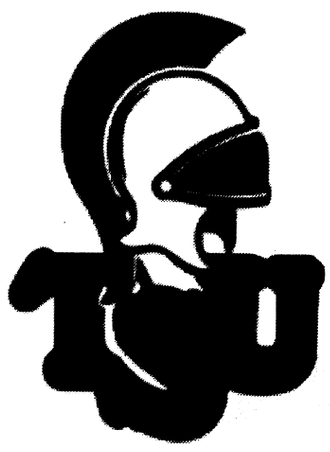
29th Infantry Regiment's Honorary Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Plass presented the awards to the companies participating in the events.



The main objective was to concentrate on the kids' activities. D Co. 1st Sgt. Joshua Simmons, and his dream team staff's hard work paid off.

Taking a pontoon boat ride was popular.

This and more were provided to all families and guests free of charge.

"My wife and children said the family day celebration was enjoyable and worth attending," said Sgt. Richard Funke, B Co. "The activities for the children were pleasurable and they had a good time.

"Food was great and well planned, and the serving of the food was well thought out. Past family days ... couldn't even compare."

Worship has many different meanings

Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

The word "worship," like many English words has multiple meanings. Our modern word comes from an earlier root which means simply "to acknowledge the worth or value of something."

A man who, for example, gives flowers in affection for his wife is "worshipping" her. "Worship" is used in other ways also. In British tradition a person would address a bishop as "My Worship," something akin to our modern "Reverend."

It meant simply "respected one."

Most of the time today however, when we use the word "worship" we mean the practice of putting something at the heart and center of our life. The Scriptures teach us that the only worship that truly rewards us is the worship of God.

Indeed the worship of something or someone else is fruitless and even sinful (e.g. the worship of idols). Worship of idols is wrong because it leads us down a dead end road for no false god can answer our prayers.

Catholics are perceived by many other Christians as worshipping Mary.

This misconception comes often from observing the devotion of some Catholics whose cultural style is given to an emotional and outward expression of feelings.

Hispanic persons, for example, might be found praying or placing flowers before a statue of Mary. They are not praying to the statue, but only using it as a reminder, much as any person might gaze at a picture of a loved one.

I recently visited my mother's grave, knelt at the grave stone and found tears welling in my eyes.

Was I worshipping that stone? No! It merely brought thoughts of Mom into my heart. For a moment she felt very close as I viewed her stone in the cemetery.

People of Germanic and English heritage are much more reserved in their interpersonal and religious expressions.

Very often, because of cultural differences, people misunderstand each other. Germanic and Hispanic persons, for example, have widely divergent concepts of time and affection. What is normal to one appears strange to the other.

Catholics do indeed have a great love and respect for Mary and often express that emotionally, and that is appropriate. Jesus, who all Christians respect as one who perfectly observed God's law, followed the Fourth Commandment, "Honor thy father and mother."

He held his mother in the deepest respect and affection.

She held the same respect for her son and was one of the few who remained at the foot of his cross till the end. Catholics also follow the Christian practice of imitating Jesus, and so we try to respect his mother as he did.

Catholics do not look upon God as someone stern and distant, but as a kindly father who would send his own son to be a human being like us, a man born of a humble woman, Mary.

We unabashedly love and cherish that woman, but we reserve formal worship to her son, Jesus, to the Father, and to the Spirit.

Emotions can rise, fall, flood lives

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Chaplain Family Life Training Program

Emotions flood our lives with pleasure and pain.

During our lives we will experience anger, jealously, pride, grief, love, peace and joy.

Sometimes we may feel our lives are a roller coaster of emotions. To be human is to experience emotions.

Are emotions bad or good? Most likely it's not the emotion that is good or bad, but how we respond to that emotion that results in negative or positive results.

When a person encounters injustice in this world, anger is a natural feeling. We can respond through legal and moral means to redress the injustice (good) or we can take the law into our own hands to inflict revenge (bad).

Koop

An example of a positive response to anger is the formation of Mothers Against Drunk Drivers.

A mother, whose loved ones were killed by a driver under the influence of alcohol, resolved to reduce the number of human fatalities caused by drivers driving drunk.

Do emotions control us or do we control our emotions? One of the qualities that separate us from lower animals is our ability to control our responses to our emotions.

As we respond to emotions, our responses become a pattern, a habit and then part of our character.

The choice is ours to make. If we respond poorly to our emotions, we may develop outbursts of hostility, risky behaviors and addictions. If we learn to respond well to our emotions, we will demonstrate patience, kindness, goodness, faithfulness and self-control within us and toward others.

For information on getting control over your responses to your emotions contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, the Chaplain Family Life Training Program at 545-1760 or email me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Post sends two teams to Army 10-Miler

Fort Benning's best runners stride for win Oct. 15

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

In a few months a select group of Fort Benning personnel will be ready to go the distance — 10 miles.

Not more, not less, just 10.

Oct. 15 marks the Army 10-Miler, where Fort Benning's best runners will compete against other posts from all over the world in Washington, D.C., for the Commander's Cup.

"It's one of the biggest races in the country as far as big races go," said Todd Bearden, 75th Ranger Regiment public affairs officer and Ranger team captain.

Both Fort Benning and the 75th Ranger Regiment are sending teams to the 2000 10-Miler presented by the Association of the U. S. Army to compete and hopefully fill four categories: military men's open, military women's open, military masters men's open (age 40 and older) and military mixed team.

Team times are determined by the cumulative times of the first four runner to finish the race.

Teams can have from four to eight members, but the more members, the better.

"You never know what can happen. You have to account for injuries," said Andrew Snoddy, chief community recreation division.

The 75th Ranger Regiment is sending four teams of eight: one for each of the three battalions and one regimental team.

Currently the Ranger regiment's top runners are John Detro, physician's assistant, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.; Tom Spahr, regimental intelligence officer, Brian Eifler, operations officer, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.; and Chris Hallows, regimental reconnaissance detachment.

Last year the Ranger Regiment placed eighth in the military men's open category, with the battalion teams placing 17th, 19th and 20th.

"Our goal is a top five finish in the regimental team," Bearden said.

The Fort Benning teams will be determined after the third and final qualifier Aug. 19.

The final qualifier will start at 7 a.m. Aug. 19 in front of Santiago Gym to determine the final teams and its members.

Registration is from 6 to 6:45 a.m. and to be eligible for participation, runners must be active duty personnel assigned to Fort Benning.

"The 10-Miler qualifier will determine who would give Fort Benning the best opportunity for success," Snoddy said.

"Based on the times, we will send up teams that are competitive to win the Gold," he said.

After the final qualifier, the best times will be compared to the times of last year's 10-Miler finishers in each team category in order to determine if a team will be competitive.

Individuals who make the team will have transportation to and from Washington, D.C., lodging, meals and uniforms provided for them and will be on TDY status for the event, Snoddy said.

Last year Fort Benning sent two teams, the military mixed team — comprised of two men and two women — which placed second with a time of 3 hours, 50 minutes, 8.5 seconds and a military master men's team.

Another Fort Benning team accolade includes winning the Commander's Cup in 1991 in the military men's open category. Team Follow Me, which included Lloyd McDonald, Infantry Training Brigade supply officer and this year's Fort Benning team captain, set a course record with a time of 3 hours, 25 minutes that still stands.

McDonald said the goal this year would be to win, but if not, to finish in the top five.

"In order for the (men's) team to be competitive, we must have some of the runners break the 55-minute barrier," Bearden said. "If you come in under 55 minutes, you're smoking."

Spahr developed a training calendar for the Rangers team, which includes everything from interval training to the long, easy run.

"Workouts won't get easier just because you made the team," McDonald said.

For women, a time of 1 hour, 5 minutes, to 1 hour, 10 minutes, is competitive, said Kerryn Davidson, Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., who currently is the top women's runner for the Fort Benning team as of the July 29 qualifier.

P.K. Keen, commander, 75th Ranger Regt., who has supported the team's participation in the event, as well as donations by Mike Kostiw of Texaco and Jim Tully of Orion International to The Ranger Regiment Association Fund made the trip possible for the Ranger runners.

It also afforded them uniforms, which will include CoolMax running shorts and top, a warm-up suit and a Ranger T-shirt.

"It's a competition that for all the hard work and running, they get a trip to D.C.," Bearden said.

This year the participants will be able to do some sight-seeing during the race as well as in their spare time.

The race course travels past the Arlington Cemetery, Kennedy Center as well as past the Lincoln, Jefferson and FDR memorials and the Washington Monument.

"It's a great experience," Snoddy said.

YS action continues

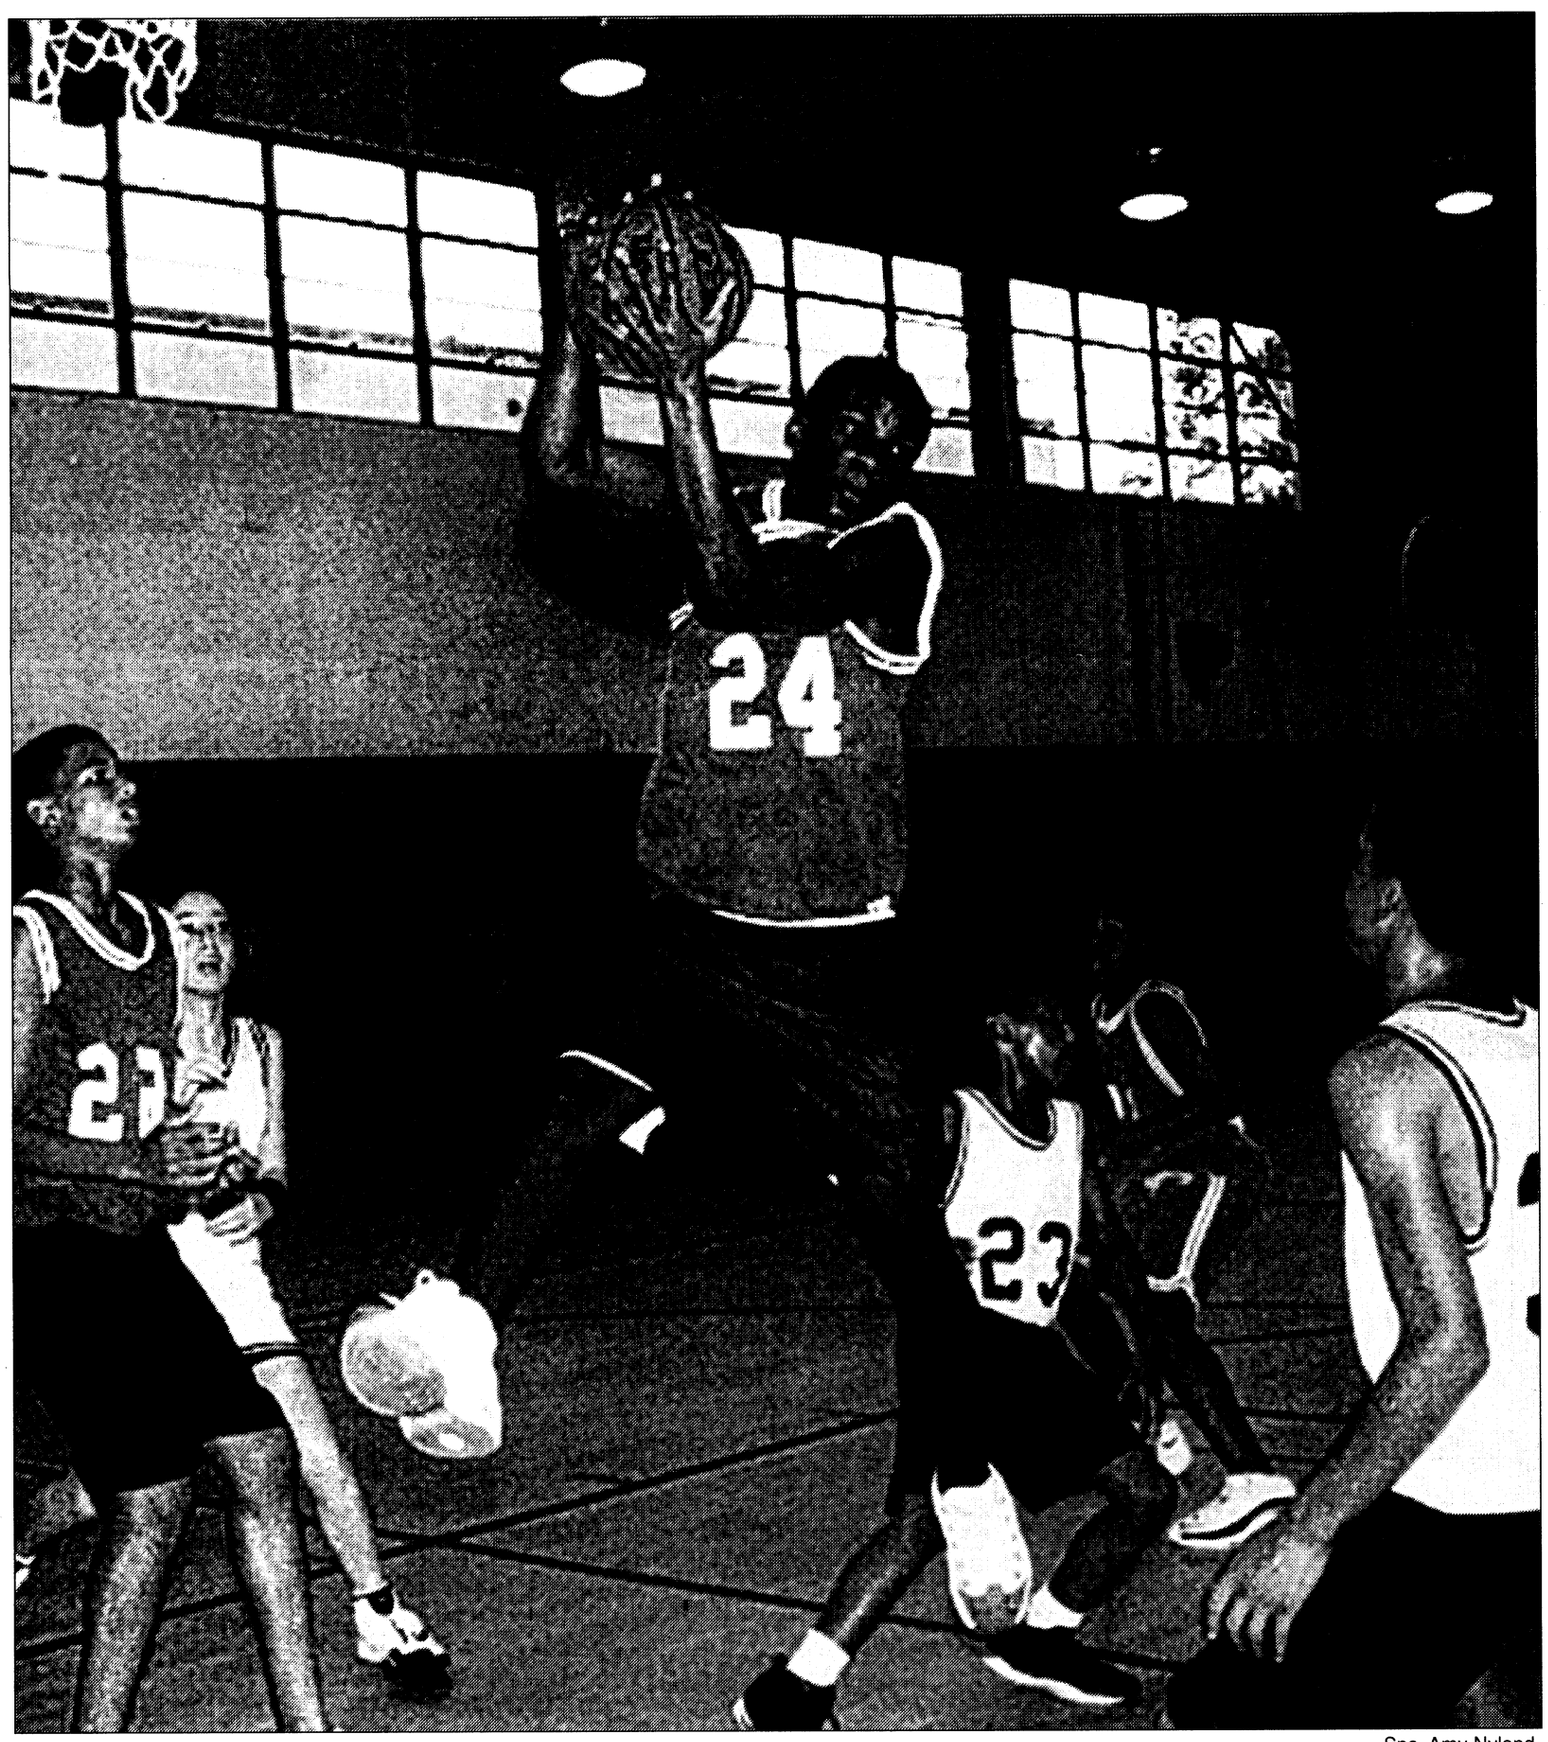
Something was a bit foul at the Youth Services Gym as the Ballers tore up the hardwood and defeated the Spurs, 54-19, in the 12- to 15-year-old age division of YS basketball Aug. 3.

With barely two minutes on the clock, the teams were already lining up at the free throw line to begin their endless succession of foul shots. The Ballers' steady hands gave them a considerable advantage as they sunk nearly all of the freebies.

The Ballers started the game strong with guard Dominic Whitley driving to the hoop for the first two points of the game. The Spurs couldn't keep their fouls under control and center Roberto Celestine found himself handling the ball more at the free throw line than on the court.



Whitley's aggressive play and Celestine's foul shots gave the Ballers a significant lead, and by the end of the first quarter the score was sitting at 16-4.

It didn't appear the fouls would slow any in the second quarter when, after just moments of play, both the Ballers and the Spurs were going back and forth to the worn out free throw line.

Spurs' guard Tony Toliver made headway for his team by forcing the Ballers downcourt and ultimately allowing a few more baskets for his team, while contributing 2 points himself.

However, it wasn't enough to keep the Ballers from dominating the hoop, and the second quarter ended with the Spurs hanging on 27-10.

Getting their limbs under control, the teams headed into the third-quarter with a little more grace and a

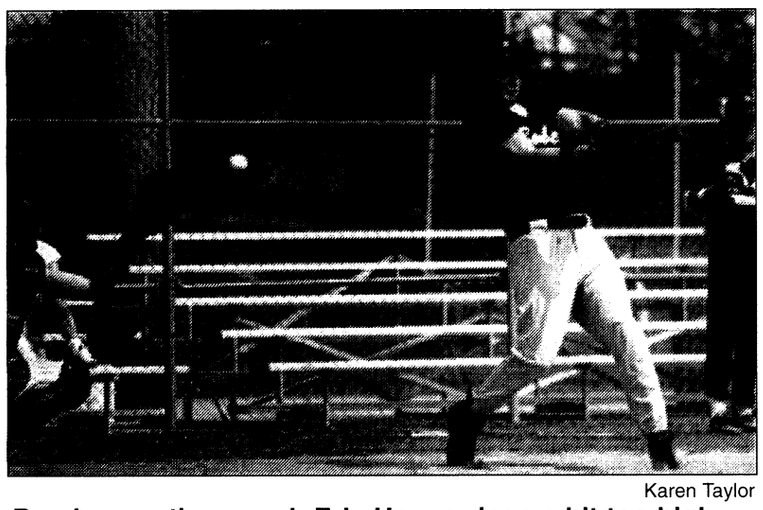
Local hunting season nears

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Directorate of Community Activities

As we approach fall and the sportsman's focus changes from fishing to hunting, the first thing many deer hunters think of is bow season.

Hughes



Bow season, which offers some of the finest hunting in the area, begins Sept. 16 in Georgia and Oct. 14 in Alabama.

Good hunters know the key to success is preseason scouting, a good map and preparation. Scouting, however, can be the cause of some hunting controversy because many hunters believe scouting is a continuous process throughout the year — not just done during the preseason. Continuous scouting is relatively impossible for most of the Fort Benning community because of rigorous schedules. But all is not lost. The continuous scout often finds that the wily white tail is generally a creature of habit. Deer tend to do and eat the same things year after year.

During the summer months the deer separate after the winter rut; the does, yearlings and younger bucks in one group and the large, mature bucks form bachelor groups. The does are more apt to stay in areas that support their gestation period, seeking legumes,

Bombers lead the way, dominate games in weekend doubleheader

Karen Taylor

Bombers acting coach Eric Hare swings a bit too high.

Baseball club defeats Rangers back-to-back

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The Rangers might have had an easier time climbing the Rock of Gibraltar than trying to beat the Bombers in Sunday's doubleheader at Britt David Park in Columbus.

The Bombers asserted a lead that never faltered, from their first at bat to the final inning of the second game. They sealed the first game 11-3, and even though the second game was called after three innings, the Bombers left the field on top 4-0.

"We just had good hitting," said Eric Hare, student detachment, and acting coach for the Bombers. "Everyone was making contact."

In the first game, the Bombers quickly posted five runs on the board after the first inning.

After capitalizing on Ranger errors to bring the first run home, Chuck McGarry, A Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, hit a single deep to center, which scored the second run of the game.

Jeremy Cook, a Columbus University student and ball player, followed McGarry with a single to deep left center.

McGarry stole third and with runners on first and third, Walter Edwards, C Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., hit a blooper to shallow left field for a double, bringing the score to 3-0.

Jeff Zimmerman, Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 36th Eng. Group, brought two more home with a solid hit between first and second for the notorious 5-0 lead.

Although the Bombers' bats were silent for the next few innings, it didn't take long for them to get cracking again.

After the Rangers threatened at the top of the third by scoring two runs and brought the game within three at 5-2, the Bombers countered with two more. Derrick Denny, student detachment, hit a RBI double. Denny stole third and then home on a wild pitch boosting their lead to 7-2.

The Rangers managed to put one more run on the board but couldn't counter the bats of the Bombers as they tallied 11 by game's end for an 11-3 final.

The word sultry never had any significant meaning to me until I took my first trip to Savannah, Ga. There I experienced the true meaning of a sizzling southern summer.

Kissed by salt from the ocean, the air contains a humid sweetness that keeps you breathing deep and makes you appreciate the beauty of the Deep South.

At just about every turn it's like taking a step back in time to an earlier era — with plantation-style houses lining the streets and spanish moss hanging from the tree canopy.

Savannah is no doubt a tourist mecca. With just about everything to see and do, it provides a perfect getaway for anyone and everyone.

During my two visits to Savannah, I experienced two very distinct sides to the city.

On my first adventure I got on the road with no plan, no map and no idea where I was going. All I knew was I wanted to find some sand and some salt water.

Where I finally ended up was Tybee Island — a miniature version of Panama City about 15 minutes from the city limit. Bright with neon-signs advertising hotels, restaurants and every kind of beach store, Tybee Island provides a haven for beach bums looking for some fun.

With the ocean only a few short blocks from the actual main street, you can finish off your day in the sun with a little shopping and some fresh seafood.

While it can get quite crowded, nothing beats the beauty of the rolling ocean and the crisp white sand.

My recommendation is to end your stay at Tybee with a midnight trip to the beach. After dark, the temperature falls and the wind provides a soothing relief to the early day temperatures.

With a brilliant moon reflecting off the water and waves lapping out a gentle melody it's easy to find yourself wanting to stay forever.

Tybee Island is definitely a modern twist to an old-fashioned city.

On my second trip I experienced the "real" Savannah I had heard so much about — River Street.

The cobblestone lined street is indicative of all that is old and beautiful. Located in the downtown historic district, River Street runs along the water and gives you that feeling you've just stepped back in time.

Tons of stores, shops, restaurants and galleries are located in the old buildings that line the street and tour trolleys pass like clockwork with guides reviewing the history that makes Savannah famous.

No matter what your tastes are you can find something to explore on the street. From collectible shops featuring kites and chimes to old fashioned candy stores where you can watch chunks of fudge and taffy pour off the assembly line, the adult in you is temporarily put on hold.

I have to admit it is Savannah's atmosphere that makes it so alluring. Even getting lost isn't all that bad because you are constantly finding something worth looking at.

It was kind of neat seeing two different sides to the same city.

I'm already looking forward to my next visit, because there is still so much more to see and do.

I'll admit, it's hard not to find a little place in your heart for the kind of beauty Savannah provides.

Scouting: Helps hunters find deer grasses and water for their young.

The bachelor groups often retreat to secluded areas, lose their antlers and wait for the antlers to reappear and the onset of prerut.

The hunter who scouts year-round has the ability to locate and stay with a large buck until hunting season starts.

After six years of very successful hunting on Fort Benning, I believe scouts who start in mid to late August will still be successful because that is when the deer's pattern switches from summer to fall and prerut characteristics.

So let's get down to the nitty-gritty. Starting in August, I concentrate on scouting the deer's prerut habitat, where the deer eat, bed and water.

Muscadines

If it's a doe I'm looking for I concentrate on grassy areas and low-lying bottoms that harbor muscadines, also known as scuppernongs. Muscadines are large green or purple grapes that can be found in the bottoms.

A hunter's success is usually limited to the first couple of weeks of bow season in these areas due to the muscadines ripening and falling. Chances for a large buck fresh out of velvet are possible but not likely unless hunting deep in the thickest, coolest areas. Muscadines grow there as well.

Persimmons

After the muscadines drop, the persimmon crop begins to ripen. This is one of my favorite times to hunt for several reasons. Deer love persimmons and the areas where they grow are easy to hunt. There is enough time to hunt after work and get to the deer stand without rushing. And the prerut is beginning to take place.

Persimmons grow around the edges of fields and are plentiful on post. As the fruit ripens it begins to turn dark orange. Resembling a small tomato, it eventually falls to the ground. Many animals love the fruit — deer, raccoons and even coyote. It is not uncommon to see all three animals while hunting during the persimmon season. Deer especially love persimmons and I have seen as many as 20 does in a herd followed by some really nice bucks. Usually the deer are less wary because of the long summer break from hunters. This provides the bow hunter with a somewhat relaxed situation. Remember this is on the Georgia side of Fort Benning. Alabama hunting season doesn't begin until Oct. 14.

Acorns

The persimmon season lasts for two to four weeks, then almost overnight, the white tails' favorite food above all begins to fall — the acorns.

Many things begin to happen in the woods now at this time of year. First the acorns fall from the pin or water oaks, then the post oaks, next the white and red oaks.

The rut begins, Georgia's rifle season starts, the Alabama side opens and hunters invade the woods.

With all this commotion in the woods on the Georgia side, the deer begin to turn nocturnal until the rut. This is when I take my bow and head to Alabama.

Note: Fort Benning has one of the finest archery ranges and 3-D tournament programs in the area headed up by Dewayne Mosher and Donny Kinard.

The Directorate of Community Activities Outdoor Recreation runs the ranges. For more information, call 545-7978.

YS Action: Wraps up summer season

lot less fouls. The teams kept each other in check driving up and down the court and forcing turnover after turnover. But the Ballers were able to keep a tighter reign on the ball and with the help of Whitley's four points finished with 10 points at the end of the quarter.

Spurs' center JaCee Lawary and Jerome Bussey were both able to tip one for their team to bring the score to 37-14.All grace gained from the third quarter magically disappeared in the fourth when fouls were once again the name of the game. Both teams matched each other in fouls, but it was the Ballers who kept the lead strong by sinking at least one each time. Spurs' guard Christina Mudayh gained 3 points at the free throw line.

Deciding to permanently seal the victory, the Ballers stepped up the heat and put up a succession of three baskets in the last minutes of play, shutting down the Spurs, 54-19.

"I think we had a really good team effort," said Ballers' coach Carl James. "Everyone got in the rotation and played well. Overall we stuck together, played as a team and had fun doing it.

"They did a good job of rebounding and getting on the fast break, but they also had great man-to-man coverage," James said.

In other team action that night, the 10- to 11-year-old No Limit Ballers beat the Celtics, 41-36. The Georgia Heat went head-to-head with the '76ers nixing them, 22-18.

Bombers: Pull off back-to-back wins said.

The Bombers' batters were definitely in the zone, but their hitting was just half the story.

Cook kept the Rangers at bay in the batter's box during the first game with five strikeouts and allowing only six hits on the game.

Cook, who joined the team mid-season with his CSU coach's permission, has anchored the Bombers from the mound ever since and Sunday was no exception.

"I was just trying to throw strikes keeping it in the outside corners," he said. "I was throwing some sliders but mostly fastballs to try to keep them off balance and hopefully the defense plays well for you, and they did today."

The Bombers defense was indestructible as they not only made the outs the old-fashioned way but also consistently caught runners away from the bag throughout the first and second games.

"We had a solid defense," Hare said.

In this case the word "solid" had a literal meaning as Bombers' first baseman Joe Schwankhaus, student detachment, fielded a bad hop in the first game's fifth inning with his shoulder, picked up the ball and got to the bag in time for the out.

Hare, however, emphasized the consistency of the pitching staff during the doubleheader enabled the Bombers to extend their lead.

"If you've got good pitching you can stay in every game," Hare said.

The Bombers did more than just "stay in it" in the second game with Josh Kronyak, B Co., 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., on the mound.

Although the game was called after three innings due to the heat and an injury to the Rangers' sole second-game pitcher, Mike Govar, Kronyak was on his way to pitching a shutout and already tallied three strikeouts.

Kronyak, who joined the team only two weeks ago, has proved to be a solid addition to the Bombers pitching staff. His first pitching performance was as a reliever July 22 against the Rockies, where he single handedly got the game going after the Bombers struggled to find their rhythm on the mound.

By the end of the third, and last inning Sunday, the Bombers were up 4-0 and the last time the Rangers saw one of their players come home was the fourth inning of the first game.

THIS IS NOT THE FLOOR PLAN OF A HOUSE.

IT'S A TREASURE MAP.

Your home could be hiding some valuable treasure. More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you a nice bundle of Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. And even though your old Series E Bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value.

So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US BOND. Begin searching your memory, then start searching your house. Because old Savings Bonds are a treasure worth digging for.

Anthrax vaccines under new limits

Dwindling supply prompts DoD slowdown

Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — DoD's dwindling supply of anthrax vaccine has forced a temporary slowdown in inoculations, except to those personnel serving or about to serve in high-threat areas of Southwest Asia and South Korea, defense officials said during Pentagon press conference last month.

Marine Corps Maj. Gen. Randy L. West, senior adviser to the deputy secretary of defense for chemical and biological protection, told reporters DoD has only about 160,000 doses of the vaccine on hand. He said DoD is trying to avoid suspending or shutting down the anthrax inoculation program.

What's left of the vaccine is being largely reserved for the 10,000 DoD people "with boots on the ground" in Southwest Asia and 37,000 in South Korea, said Dr. J. Jarrett Clinton, first assistant to the assistant secretary of defense for health affairs.

For the time being, most personnel in those areas who have begun the six-shot series will stop the inoculations if they rotate out. West said DoD guidance allows for local commanders' discretion, so, for instance, rotating Soldiers might still get shots because the 10-dose vaccine vials can only be used or discarded once opened.

So far, 455,378 people have started vaccinations and have received a total of about 1.8 million shots. Some 56,725 have received all six shots, West said. During the slowdown, dosing will fall from about 75,000 vaccinations monthly to around 14,000. At that rate, DoD has enough vaccine to last up to 10 months, he estimated.

The mandatory six shots provide full protection as required by the FDA, West noted. He pointed out that receiving fewer than six shots causes no damage or harm to individuals, but does mean they lack the additional immunity protection provided by the complete series.

Clinton said the first three shots are given in two-week intervals and the last three, six months apart. An annual booster shot keeps troops fully protected. Although a person gains some protection by the second or third shot, it takes the full six for full, sustained immunity, he said.

Persons who have started the series but not finished will only need to pick up where they left off once their vaccinations resume, Clinton said. That's the guidance, he said, of the Centers for Disease Control's expert Advisory Committee for Immunization Practices.

West attributed the slowdown to the inability of the sole contractor, Bioport of Lansing, Mich., to gain Food and Drug Administration approval for its production facility. He said immunizations will resume at full speed when the FDA approves and certifies a sufficient supply of vaccine as safe and effective, but he emphasized Bioport's own timetable doesn't call for its new vaccine to be available before the end of the year.

Heavy load

File photo

Army leaders met this week at Infantry Hall to begin the process of reducing the loads Soldiers carry into combat. Presently Soldiers like the one pictured above carry up to 130 pounds during wartime.

Too much weight tops talks

Conference aims to lessen Soldier's load

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

After the government has put millions of dollars into researching and developing a lighter, faster, more mobile Army, Soldiers serving on the front lines are still having trouble making that goal reality.

The problem — too much gear that is too heavy to carry, and more of it on its way from Washington planners.

In hopes of stymieing the back-breaking problem, the Army's lead agency on the Soldier of tomorrow, the TRADOC System Manager-Soldier, located here, invited senior enlisted Soldiers, officers and research and development firms for a three-day conference aimed at breaking the present too-heavy trend Tuesday.

"What we are looking for is some feedback on how units are dealing with managing loads," said Maj. John Matlock, the officer spearheading the conference and the lessening load initiative for TSM. "We are seeing increasing technology bringing the Soldier more lightweight equipment, but that begins to add up and cause a problem for the Soldier."

Former POW honors liberators

Man's thanks will stand as reminder at RTB

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

During a tear-filled ceremony, former prisoner of war John Cook thanked his liberators for giving him a second chance at life and unveiled a memorial for the Rangers, Alamo Scouts and airmen who were involved in his release.

During the dedication ceremony, Cook told of his experiences in the camp and the night of his liberation.

Cook was taken prisoner by the Japanese and held in the Cabanatuan Prison Camp in the Philippines for 34 months before a group of men would change his life forever.

Rangers and Alamo Scouts were within 1/2 mile of the camp, on the evening of Jan. 31, 1945. Planes of the 547th Night Fighter Squadron flew over as a diversion.

The pilots attracted the full attention of the Japanese guards while the raiders crawled over an open rice paddy to get into their final positions.

One pilot cut his engine as if he stalled and circled toward the camp until he was almost in the range of the guards' weapons.

The pilot turned and flew just

Geese could keep planes grounded

Airfield officials' battle with birds over temporarily

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

In 1995 a military plane crashed after hitting a goose on takeoff in Alaska killing 22 people.

Now Fort Benning has to worry about the same thing happening here.

A flock of 75 Canada geese flew into Lawson Army Airfield Aug. 1

"They normally aren't here," said Roger Sigmon, the supervisor of Lawson Army Airfield's base operations. "As soon as we saw them on the field in the morning we chased them with our vehicles harassing them and made them leave.

"They showed up again the next morning so we chased them off again," Sigmon said.

Since then the geese have showed only several times. They were chased off each time by people checking the runways.

The geese, like all other large birds are a hazard to all aircraft.

"They could penetrate the planes if they hit head on," Sigmon said. "Bird strikes have brought down airplanes before," he said.

"We have had strikes with smaller birds like doves and sparrows," he said. "Once a vulture hit a C-141 and punctured a hole in the wing, but nothing bad happened."

Pilots have notices posted that tell them of the immediate dangers surrounding particular airfields. Chief Warrant Officer Ricardo Martinez said bird strikes are nothing to take lightly.

"On takeoff or landing if a bird is ingested into the engine, it could lead to engine failure and then a catastrophe," said Martinez, C Company, 1st Battalion, 171st Aviation Regiment, a Georgia National Guard unit.

"When a pilot is landing he has a split second decision to make whether to land or to fly over the runway," he said. Martinez himself recently had a bird strike while flying his Blackhawk, but no damage was caused.

There are ways of avoiding the birds, he said. "It starts in the pre-mission preparations," he said. You just need to pay attention to notices."

The airfield is working hand-in-hand with Fort Benning's conservation branch.

"Right now we are just driving around and honking the horns to scare them away," said Pete Swiderek, chief of the conservation branch. "We also have shell crackers that we can use." Shell crackers are fired from a shotgun and will travel about 100 feet before they explode. They only make noise and are harmless to the birds.

> "It is a serious issue ... Birds have caused crashes before and we are taking precautions not to have that happen here."
> Pete Swiderek
> Conservation Branch chief

"It is a serious issue to have birds on the airfield," he said. "Birds have caused crashes before and we are taking precautions not to have that happen here."

Swiderek said the geese are local and are attracted to the airfield as a resting stop as they fly along the Chattahoochee River.

commentary

To win in any campaign you have to find the biggest group of people and cater to their needs. If you can get these special interest groups to favor you and your campaign, you're set.

It's a simple ploy. I think the first time I learned about it was in junior high school when I ran for student council. While everyone else was busy putting up their posterboard election signs, I was busy handing out candy and promising the world to the basketball team, cheerleaders and home-ec club.

OK, so I probably didn't pioneer this method of legal bribery, but it did work, and the bureaucrats in DC are still using it today.

I heard on the radio on the way in to work last week a candidate who earned his way into politics thanks to his daddy (not to name names or anything). He said the military needs help in getting ready to go to wars. He said there weren't enough people to fight or enough equipment to win. But he, like any good politician, said he had a way to resolve the problems that plague today's fighting force.

Now really, how many times have we heard this story before? Kind of sounds like the young aspiring politician who handed out candy to the "popular" kids promising them the world to get their vote, huh?

The military has more people associated with it than any other organization in the country. Why wouldn't he say he is going to be the one to cure the warfighting woes we have seen in the past decade thanks to downsizing and cutbacks?

While he didn't say how he would resolve the problems of what he called the military's inability to deploy quickly, it made me think what America could do to make the military a quick deploying organization with its ranks filled to capacity.

Mandatory times of service for all men and women at the age of 18 is a certain way to solve short staffing problems and give America's youth a strong footing before starting their lives.

While the plan has come under fire, it certainly has not been completely eliminated from the government's lists of possibilities. Young men are still required to sign up with selective service as soon as they turn 18, keeping the possibility of drafting teens into service a viable option.

Perhaps it is the thought of bringing people into the ranks who aren't willing gives many a dislike of the plan, but consider what recruiting command is doing presently.

Within the last year, the Army has decided to bring in recruits with GEDs. Are these people really willing to come in or is this their last hope?

A new plan was introduced just this summer to bring college-bound kids in, promising them a job with a Fortune 500 company upon completing four years of service.

Are these kids really wanting to be all they can be, or are they just tolerating life in green to make green when they depart after their first tour?

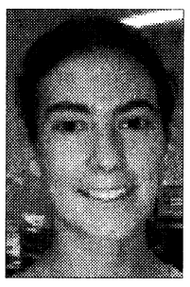
We are doing these kids favors just to fill the ranks of war fighting units.

We cannot keep giving millions of dollars out in bonuses a year and spending money on failing recruiting plans. Save the money. Invest it in finding new ways to train more troops. Then re-implement the draft.

We will in turn bring in a new culture to the service. One that will put banker's children alongside those who have grown up in tar-paper shacks.

They will learn from each other, become better more well-rounded people and citizens, and America will no longer have to worry about being able to fight and win on the modern battlefield because all the services will be staffed beyond 100 percent.

In turn the service will produce youth who have discipline, leadership and, even more importantly a job skill.



We can keep spending money on social programs to help young, economically challenged people find a job, on failed recruiting campaigns or reinstate the draft.

The choice is clear.

Competition teaches sportsmanship

commentary

There's an unspoken element in sports that goes beyond strength, endurance and coordination.

It's the key to character development.

It's the reason athletics are so important for young people.

It's called sportsmanship.

Sportsmanship is something that children may find hard to understand during the heat of an athletic competition.

I remember playing softball as a child and after a game one of the girls from the opposing team said to me, "Hey, good game." I replied with a simple "Thanks," thinking that was a sufficient response.

My mom then turned to me and said "You know you should tell her 'good game' too," and I said, "But why? They lost?"

It wasn't until I started swimming competitively I truly understood the meaning of good sportsmanship.

Every summer there is a league meet where all the teams from the league compete in a variety of events. One of the events I was swimming that day was the 50-meter butterfly. I was 13 years old and very nervous because I knew the other girls swimming in this event were good. One girl in particular, Megan Beeler, was known to be a phenomenal swimmer and was virtually unbeatable in this event.

Without ever actually having a conversation with her, I immediately assumed she was a ferocious competitor who would do anything to win. I was intimidated.

Just my luck, as we stepped up to the blocks, I was in Lane 3, she was in the lane next to me, Lane 4. "Great," I thought, "I'll get to gulp down her waves as she swims past."

On the blocks I'm just trying to keep myself in a steady crouch, waiting for the official's gun.

Swimmers take your mark ... BANG!

All six of us were off into pool. I surfaced and just started stroking.

I came to the wall at 25 meters: two-hands, touch, turn, push off, pull, kick, pull, kick.

I was almost at the finish, and for a split second I noticed out of the corners of my eyes there was no one next to me. I touched the wall and looked to my left and then to my right and realized I won the race.

I was dizzy from the effort and the euphoria I felt because it was the first time I had won this event.

But before I had a chance to yell for joy, I was confronted by one of the lane judges who informed me that my turn at the far side of the pool wasn't a regulation two-hand turn and I was disqualified.

My yell for joy quickly turned into a cry of anguish. I couldn't believe it. I remembered my hand slipping on the wall, but I know I touched with two hands. I've never been DQ-ed in my life!

My body sagged as I returned to where my mom was and we got ready to leave, that was my last event for the day.

My coach and teammates quickly gathered round and tried to console me, but the shock only gave way to intense frustration. I kept rehashing the event over and over and my turn, over and over, but the official's word was final.

While my team and I were huddled together, a girl broke through the crowd and handed a medal to me.

I looked up at her, it was Megan Beeler. She finished second in the race but because I was disqualified she got the Gold and she gave it to me.

Everyone went silent.

As Beeler walked away, I went after her, thanked her and tried to return it to her, telling her she won it fair and square.

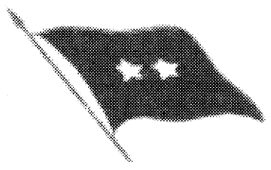
She refused the medal and said "It's yours, you earned it, you finished first."

To me, that day, Beeler finished an immortal first.

She opened my eyes to what good sportsmanship is — a selfless act that demonstrates the pure love of competition, not just winning, but appreciating and respecting others who win, even if it meant they did it by beating you.

I now saw competition in a whole new light: that it's possible to be competitors, even rivals, and still be friends.

19th Amendment gives women right to vote



This year, Women's Equality Day celebrates the 80th anniversary of the 19th Amendment. The right to vote is a precious privilege, which should not be taken lightly. Men and women who cast their votes enhance the entire governmental process.

Women's Equality Day is an excellent opportunity to acknowledge our responsibility to vote and to recognize equality for all Americans.

From its beginning in 1848, during the Women's Rights Convention in Seneca Falls, N.Y., the suffrage movement was a long uphill battle for courageous women like Elizabeth Cady Stanton who drafted the Declaration of Sentiments. The declaration listed the legal disadvantages of women who became the catalyst for future Suffrage Conventions.

From 1870 to 1920, there were 480 attempts across the nation to pass legislation, resulting in 27 state votes, of which only two were successful.

On Aug. 26, 1920, the 19th Amendment became a reality and provided women the constitutional right to vote.

It wasn't until Aug. 26, 1973, that the President of the United States designated Women's Equality Day, denoting the ratification of the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution reminding us of women's continuing efforts toward equality in all arenas of our society.

The 19th Amendment provides everyone a chance to honor the work of Stanton and others who worked so hard to gain the right to vote. By observing this celebration and casting our vote, we ensure equality for all.

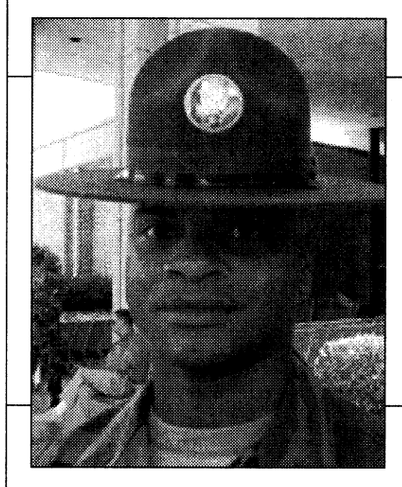
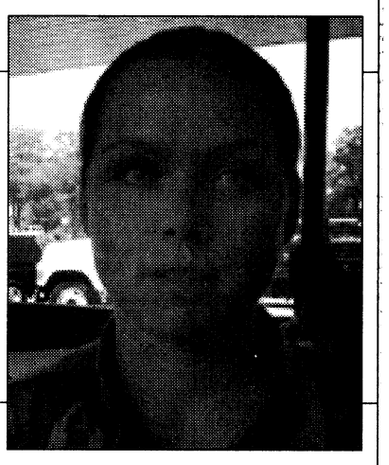
VARIOUS VOICES

Do you think the U.S. should have mandatory military service and why?

John McGhee, independent contractor — "Yes, because the country's defense is very important to our freedom. It is the essence of it."



Staff Sgt. Sherry Ingraham, Defense Military Pay Office — "No, I think we are doing fine with an all-volunteer force. A mandatory service should only be considered if the current force can't survive with what we have."



Pvt. Jamie Yates, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Yes, because people need to learn leadership and discipline. In the Army they learn how to face problems without a great deal of conflict. The Army provides good training — physically and mentally."

Spc. Bryan Bates, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group — "Yes, because mandatory service gives the citizens of the country discipline and pride in their country."

Staff Sgt. Chris Turner, E Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment — "Yes, mandatory service would cut down on recruiting problems. Everyone from 17 to 19 should serve their country. It gives them the opportunity to mature."

Spc. Shelly Ring, 988th Military Police Company — "No, there shouldn't be mandatory military service unless there is a time of crisis."

Couple's marriage makes Army family affair

Officer-enlisted duo takes love across rank lines

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

When a person joins the military he expects to answer to the chain of command.

For Lisa Wills and Walter Edwards, however, work is not the only place where someone's outranked.

Wills, a second lieutenant, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group, and Edwards, a sergeant, C Co., 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, are husband and wife.

Although Lt. Wills is on the nameplate of their Perkins Place home she hasn't always worn the bar on her collar.

She joined the Army at age 29 as a private, assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 7th Inf. Division. While stationed at Fort Ord, Calif., she met Spc. Walter Edwards, A Co., U.S. Army Garrison, in the dining facility.

After dating for three years they were married at Fort Hood, Texas in 1996.

During the three years they dated, Edwards left the active Army and joined the National Guard. He was promoted to the rank of sergeant during his five years in the National Guard, but when he decided to rejoin the Army ranks in 1998, he had to re-enter as a specialist.

At this point Wills was a sergeant and the next year she was accepted to Officer Candidate School and eventually became an officer.

But after the lieutenant bar was pinned on her uniform, Edwards, now a sergeant, said the two are not affected by the difference in rank at home.

Although rank remains a non-issue around the house, Edwards admits he gets teased at work on occasion.

"At work they say, 'Do you salute your wife?' 'Come on, you've got to tell us, do you salute her a lot?'" he said.

In all seriousness, however, Edwards does salute his wife not only because it's protocol, but also because it's respectful.

By not sharing the same name a salute becomes even more important because it is not as obvious that they are husband and wife.

Wills kept her name because she had established herself in her career as a Soldier with it and wanted to keep that identity within the military.

Wills and Edwards are not the only ones in the family that are in the military. Their son, Jonathan Vick enlisted in June.

Although it may seem like a natural progression for a child of theirs to enter the military, it came as a total shock to Wills and Edwards.

"He first came to us and said 'There's no way I will ever join the military,'" Edwards said.

It wasn't until Vick lived on his own and got a taste of the real world he realized the military might be a good choice after all, they said.

He went back to Wills' hometown of Montgomery, Ala., for a while to stay with family and it was from there the couple got the call saying he enlisted.

Vick joined the field artillery branch and is a multiple launch rocket system crew member currently in basic training in Fort Sill, Okla.

The family "chain of command," however, doesn't stop there. Wills' brother, Eric Nard, followed his sister's lead and joined the Army in 1998. Now a specialist, he works as a meteorologist in a field artillery unit also at Fort Sill.

With a private, specialist, sergeant and lieutenant at the table during family gatherings, its bound to get interesting.

"Well, Mom outranks everybody," Wills said.

Karen Taylor

2nd Lt. Lisa Wills and Sgt. Walter Edwards married after dating while both were assigned to different units at Fort Ord, Calif., as enlisted Soldiers. After the two were married, Wills earned her commission at Officer Candidate School.

But Edwards gets to push his share of the weight around.

"I tell her brother to get down and give me pushups," Edwards said.

The private in the family, Vick, however, has learned more than how to take a little teasing from parents who outrank him.

"He has learned more respect for what rank I'm actually at ... what I did to achieve that rank and what respect comes from it. He didn't know that before going in," Wills said. "Now being in and learning the rank structure and what comes with it, Jon had a little bit more respect."

"It enlightens the family to have three different ranks within one household," said Capt. Antoinette Gant, adjutant, 64rd Eng. Co., 36th Eng., Group.

Wills and Edwards, who both went through basic training many years ago, can see what's changed through their son.

In addition, having four ranks within one family, each has a better understanding of the other's job.

Both Edwards and Wills use their military experience to guide Vick and Nard on ways to succeed in the Army.

They encourage them to go to the boards, pursue their education and take military correspondence courses to gain promotion points.

Sometimes the encouragement turns into competition. Wills admits she competes with her brother on the PT test.

> "At work they say, 'Do you salute your wife?' 'Come on, you've got to tell us, do you salute her a lot?'"
> Sgt. Walter Edwards
> Husband

The most rewarding aspect of having family members in the military, no matter what the rank, for Wills and Edwards is to be able to talk the lingo together.

The military experience has cultivated a strong sense of family among them.

"My brother and I have been all over the world, and we still find ways to drive to the other one's place," she said.

Wills and Edwards continue to build on the chain of command they've established within the family.

Edwards plans to put in his own OCS packet and hopes to start classes next year.

Vaccine: Could now face slow down thanks to short supply

"We're disappointed because we wish we were vaccinating the whole force now. We're running about a year behind our planned schedule in this program," West said.

"When we began the program, there was an existing supply and there was one company that had a license," he noted. "In retrospect, I wish that we would have immediately advertised for a second source. We did not. We recently have."

BioPort will cooperate with that second-source contractor, he said.

The FDA says that company could earn certification sometime within the next two to four years.

He said Britain and Russia have anthrax vaccines, but neither has FDA approval.

The British vaccine is similar to the U.S. vaccine, but also in limited supply, and DoD has no interest in the Russians' live-bacteria vaccine, West noted.

The number of people who are refusing shots and the number of adverse reactions have declined, West noted.

"We've had 351 people that have refused to take the shot and have remained adamant enough about that to receive disciplinary action or be discharged or released from service," he said.

"There have been 848 Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System forms reviewed as of last month. That's out of 1.8 million-plus shots."

He said 163 people have missed a day of work because of adverse reaction to the shots and 38 have been hospitalized since the shots began being administered.

He said intelligence reports indicate the threat of biological warfare has increased since the anthrax vaccination program started in 1998.

"There has also been an increase in the number of both state actors and nonstate actors that have done things that have prompted our intelligence committee to believe they are trying to obtain the capability (for biological weapons)."

But, West emphasized, "We're less at risk than we were in 1998, because we have more than 455,000 people that have some protection and 56,725 are fully protected. But we're less protected than we want to be."

Dedication: Gives former POW chance to honor liberators over the tops of the trees out of gun range and then the attack ensued.

"We had just gotten done with work for the evening. While sitting outside the barracks smoking a cigarette a crazy guy came running up. He had the craziest look on his face and he told us to get the hell out the front gate," Cook said during the dedication. "We asked who he was 'We're Yanks,' the man in the crazy uniform said. I told him that no Yank would wear anything so ugly.

"He told us again to get out the front gate along with the rest of the prisoners. I said 'Yes sir,' and we were free."

At 8 p.m. the raid was over.

All 512 prisoners were taken out of the camp unscathed, but one man died of a heart attack along the 30-mile trek back to the American lines, Cook said.

The raid cost the lives of two Rangers, Capt. James Fisher and Cpl. Roy Sweezy and 10 men were wounded.

The Cabanatuan raid is still used today as a textbook example of how to conduct a proper raid to Ranger students.

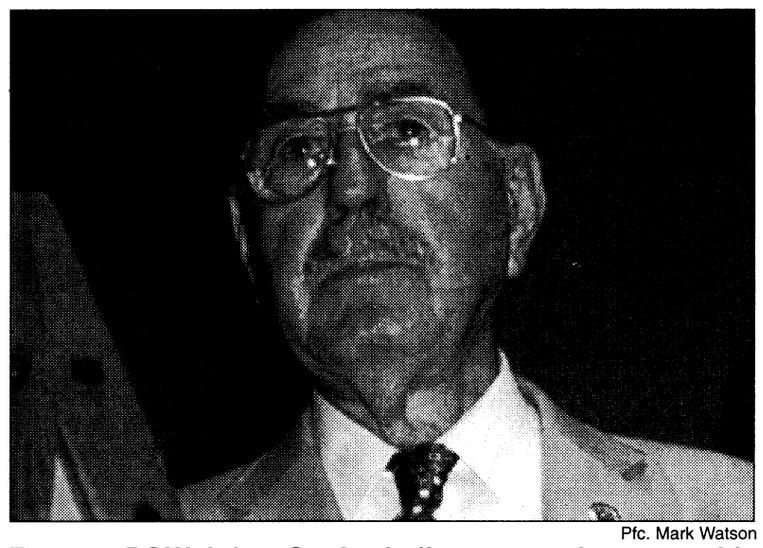
"Day after day and night after night I thank God for the training that the men took to save us," Cook said. "And now I am so happy to have met and be able to associate with them."

Several of the members of the raid were able to attend the dedication.

Retired Maj. Robert Prince, who led the raid for C Company, 6th Ranger Regiment, was among the speakers.

"This dedication is for one event which saved lives," Prince said. "I am honored and proud to have participated. It honors all who participated in the raid."

Another member of the raid, Retired 1st Sgt. Robert Anderson said the memorial dedication meant a tremendous amount to him as well as serving as a reunion of sorts for he and his old buddies.



"I haven't seen some of these guys in 55 years," Anderson said. "It is nice to get the recognition, but we all had to volunteer to go and no one turned it down. It is a miracle the raid went like it did."

The men who were involved in the raid are what heroes are made of, said Col. Hazen Baron, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade.

"The men of the Cabanatuan raid and the prisoners epitomize the Ranger creed."

The memorial will become a permanent part of the Ranger training community.

The plaque, which will be placed on a 2,500 piece of granite, will be located in front of the Ranger Training Brigades' headquarter located at Camp Rogers near Harmony Church.

Conference: Hopes to find ways to lighten load for troops information from senior enlisted officials from the field reveal the average Infantryman carries between 75 to 80 pounds into combat, a weight spectrum Matlock said is way above Army standard.

"For a Soldier to really be effective, we need to bring that weight down to about 35 or 40 pounds," he said. "And while I don't think that is possible by the end of the conference, these sergeants major and first sergeants will have hopefully traded enough ideas they can go back and refine what they are doing now to cut some of the weight the Soldiers are carrying.

"This is just the beginning of tackling this problem," he said.

The too-heavy technical problem that has plagued the Infantry since its inception seems to stem from the inability of the ground warrior to tailor a combat load to a mission rather than rely solely up upon a packing list, Matlock said.

"We have got to get away from the days of treating a packing list as gospel," he said. "Units have got to tailor a combat load to the mission if they want to see a lessened load."

Many of the Army's high-tech programs to save the Soldier from carrying more weight into combat are yet to be fielded to units worldwide, but Matlock said introducing new technologies isn't the answer to thwarting the too-heavy trend.

"We may be able to give the Soldier a Kevlar that is more functional and can stop a 9 mm round, but it may weigh the same as the present one," he said. "So even while the new model increases survivability and lethality, the weight issue is still a problem."

> "For a Soldier to really be effective, we need to bring that weight down to about 35 or 40 pounds ... these sergeants major and first sergeants will have hopefully traded enough ideas they can go back and refine what they are doing now to cut some of the weight."
> Maj. John Matlock
> TSM officer spearheading lessening Soldier's load

Army planners hope to reduce the weight Soldiers carry into combat to one third of the Soldier's body weight. That would a mean an average Soldier, weighing 180 pounds would only carry a maximum combat load of 60 pounds.

"We are a ways from that now," said Capt. Christopher Nicolaus, a recent graduate of the Infantry Captains' Career Course assigned to assist Matlock in combating the weight issue. "But it can be done."

Nicolaus said the key to bringing weight to an acceptable standard starts with teaching squad leaders and team leaders how to properly pack and tailor the Soldier's load to the mission profile.

"If we are going to do an attack in a mountainous environment, we know we'll need rope and cold weather gear, but we can forget the mosquito net and hot weather gear because of the environment we are going into," he said. "If we can teach small unit leaders how to manage loads and put loads together like this, we'll be headed in the right direction."

While it is unclear if units in the field will see any substantial changes resulting from this week's conference, Matlock said the effort to battle the weight woes is just getting started.

"We knew we weren't going to end the week with an approved packing list or a simple solution to the problem," Matlock said. "It's going to take a long time."

There is no word on if a similar conference is in the future for Matlock or TSM, but he said a review of the feedback from attendees should steer the planner's decisions on whether an additional conference is necessary.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

Be alert and slow down in housing areas and school zones

More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school this fall:

- Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.
- Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.
- Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

Buddies help ease battle of basic training

Recruiters hope buddy program brings in troops

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Basic training is no picnic, but it might be a little easier with a friend.

That's what U.S. Army Recruiting Command had in mind with the "buddy team" recruiting method. In order to reduce first-unit attrition and improve morale, the buddy team assignment allows two friends to enlist together, go through basic training together and be stationed together.

"Basic was a lot easier going with someone you know," said Pvt. John Finn IV, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

Finn said no matter what the activity or challenge basic training presented having a buddy with him always lowered the stress level as well as built confidence knowing there was a friend nearby.

"You knew you always had someone there that you know," he said.

During basic training each Soldier was assigned a battle buddy. While other Soldiers were paired with perfect strangers, which added a level of stress, Finn was able to pair up with a friend.

Finn enlisted with his "buddy" Eric Esler and started basic training Feb. 28.

"I've known him for 10 years," he said.

Finn and Esler grew up in the same town, Milwaukee, Ore., and went to high school together.

Both are 11M, a Bradley Infantryman, but Esler suffered a stress fracture in his foot during the five-mile Eagle Run three weeks ago and is currently on convalescent leave, which means he will not graduate with Finn.

But Finn knows he'll see Esler again soon.

"I think the buddy team is still in action, and he'll still go to the same place, he'll just catch up later," he said.

Finn said his contract included basic training, 11M training and a guarantee of spending their first year together at their duty station, which if Esler wasn't hurt, would bring them to a full two years spent together in the Army.

Although buddy team assignments offer many benefits to Soldiers, Sgt. 1st Class Phillip Mays, station commander of the North Columbus Army Recruiting Station, said it's difficult to find two people who qualify for the same job.

The program has been used within the Army for a long time, although has been dormant in the past few years, Mays said.

About one-and-a-half years ago the program was put back in motion, but he said hasn't been able to sign up two friends to the same assignment.

"If someone comes in with a buddy then we would suggest that (buddy team assignment), but sometimes both people don't qualify for the testing," Mays said.

"The enlistment process is a multistep process," said Doug Smith, a Recruiting Command spokesman from Fort Knox, Ky.

When a person decides to enlist in the Army, after the talking with the recruiter and going through a screening process, the person goes to a military entrance processing station where he takes an Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery.

"It measures aptitude and determines what military occupation a person would be eligible for," Smith said.

The person then meets with an Army guidance counselor to determine a military occupation that's most compatible with the individual's skills and the Army's needs.

A person would start training based on what classes are available.

Smith said some training could only be offered once a year or once every six months.

"It's like making an airline reservation. Depending on what job you want in the military, if the training seat is available in the next week or so, then you would go," Smith said.

Although the efforts to place buddy team assignments haven't come to fruition as of yet with the local recruiting office, recruiting numbers are up, which will increase chances of the program's success, Mays said.

Recruiting Command is well on its way to reaching its goal of 80,000 recruits by the end of the fiscal year.

"We had a very good recruiting month in July. Things are looking good," Smith said.

Cash cards get permanent status at training installations

Troops may see cards replace cash on deployments

David Rion and Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army has granted permanent status to an experiment that gives new Soldiers a new way to pay for items at post exchanges.

The Army "stored-value card" began as a pilot program for basic trainees in 1997 at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. The following year, trainees began using a similar card at Fort Knox, Ky., and Fort Sill, Okla. Last year, the remaining basic training sites joined the pilot program, and even Air Force trainees at Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, are using the card.

Now the prototype cards at different sites are being replaced with a standard EZPay card. Trainees at Fort Jackson, S.C., began using the new card in July. Other Army and Air Force initial-entry training sites — Forts Benning, Knox, Leonard Wood, Sill and Lackland — will all begin using the new card by the end of October, officials said.

When basic trainees arrive on post, they receive their advance pay of $200 to $300 on an EZPay card. The card has a computer chip that keeps track of how much money is on it.

Trainees use the card as they wish to pay for haircuts, snacks, recreational activities and purchases at the PX. Any value remaining on the card after it expires is returned to the trainee's military pay.

The cards provide a better quality of life for trainees, said Ernest Gregory, deputy assistant secretary of the Army for financial operations. He said the cards eliminate the threat of cash theft in barracks and speed purchases at the exchange.

Gregory said the cards also save $125,000 of Soldiers' money a year, because they eliminate the need to purchase money orders. "Now Soldiers aren't paying to get paid," he said.

Since 1997, the cards have been used to buy $53 million worth of goods and services at training installations.

Now a version of the card is being tested for deployed Soldiers in Bosnia and Hungary.

In December, Stabilization Force Soldiers began using the "EagleCash" card in camp exchanges.

Since then the card has reduced U.S. currency disbursements in Bosnia and Hungary by $1 million, said Juan De Jesus, value card project manager.

"Cash is expensive to carry, manage and service," Gregory said.

Sending one plane of currency and coins to Germany for onward movement to Bosnia costs about $100,000 in freight charges, De Jesus said.

Korea ... 'the forgotten war' remembered

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Fifty years ago, South Korean government officials moved the temporary capital from Taegu to Pusan as massive, North Korean forces threaten the city.

Aug. 17, 1950 — Three Americans, who were captured in fighting around Waegwan and then escaped, bring new atrocity charges against the communists.

They witnessed North Koreans gunning down 26 captured Americans. A North Korean major and two other enemy soldiers in charge of the killings reportedly have been captured themselves.

Aug. 17-18 — The North Korean Peoples Army attacks in force where U.S.-South Korean lines join at the Taegu perimeter.

The ROK First Division and the U.S. Army 27th Regiment repel the assault.

On Aug. 18 refugees return to the city, even though fighting continues around it. A city of 300,000 people before the war, refugees raise Taegu's population to more than 800,000.

Aug. 17-22 — U.S. Marines climb a 1,000-foot hill overlooking an NKPA bridgehead over the Naktong River near Changnyong. With the Marines firing down on the enemy, Soldiers of the 24th ID attack the communist positions. Marine and Air Force aircrews provide heavy and effective support.

About 1,500 soldiers of the NKPA 4th Division are killed in three days and the rest are driven back across the river.

With the crossing secured, UN Soldiers begin moving upstream on Aug. 22 to another bridgehead held by about 6,000 enemy troops at Hyonpung.

Aug. 18 — The 1st Cavalry Division recaptures a hill and finds the bodies of 36 Americans who had been bound and shot.

Aug. 18-22 — U.S. warships fire on military targets between Hamhung and Changjin on North Korea's east coast.

Both cities are bombed by B-29s on Aug. 19. The bombers revisit Hamhung Aug. 21 and Changjin Aug. 22.

Aug. 19 — At Fort Monroe, Va., Gen. Mark Clark, commander of Army Field Forces, announces that basic training will be cut from 14 to six weeks and toughened up. The recent policy of using "gentlemanly" NCOs to train recruits is scrapped in favor of using tough, old-line sergeants.

Troops finish two-week training cycle

Completion sends Soldiers home as officers

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Two weeks ago Mike Brethorst was elbow deep in building plans, permits and conceptual drawings at his central Minnesota office.

Brethorst, a city planner, constantly searches for the best plan for the best price. Its his job, and now its his life.

He is one of 540 reserve-duty officer candidates taking part in the Army's 15-month reserve officer candidate school, a money-saving program designed to turn Soldiers into officers at their home state, rather than at the Army's only Officer Candidate School here, eliminating the costly 10-weeks or more of temporary duty pay.

The program began in 1998 when the Army decided to ditch the 10-week accelerated reserve officer candidate school it was presently using and opted to put the power of training young officers into the hands of each individual state under the guidance of the Fort Benning Officer Candidate School.

"It eliminated the problem many candidates had in trying to get permission from their civilian employer in trying to get off for 10 weeks to come to the school," said Lt. Col. David Osborne, commander 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment.

The program begins with an initial two-week active-duty stint that introduces enlisted Soldiers who hope to be officers to officer leadership.

The days are long and sometimes grueling during the initial training, Brethorst said. "It's designed to weed out the weak candidates who aren't officer material or who just don't want to be there."

During the active duty training, the officer-hopefuls learn basic leadership skills, land navigation and common combat tasks before returning to their home units where they will continue to hone the skills.

For the next 14 months, the candidates will pore over countless training manuals, be immersed in numerous leadership scenarios and try to learn all the intricacies that come along with officership, all while trying to juggle their civilian career as well.

"During the training cycle at home, it was tough," Brethorst said. "While we only met during our drill time for two days each month, our work wasn't confined to just that time. There was a lot of homework, and that made it tough trying to juggle the work and a career."

That juggling act ended for Brethorst and the other officer candidates as they returned to active-duty once again to finish up their 15 months of training last week.

"This active-duty training is intense," Brethorst said. "This brings together everything we have learned, and finally puts an end to the more than a year of training."

Spc. Mitch Frazier

Officer Candidates Gordon Campbell and Todd Orland practice radio techniques during the final days of training at Fort Benning. The two graduate National Guard Phase II OCS today and will be commissioned in their home states Saturday.

While Brethorst and the other officer candidates will graduate from OCS later today after spending only four weeks on active duty, Osborne said he believes the officers are competent and worthy of being commissioned in the U.S. Army.

"There is no difference from one of these officers than the ones that come out of the active Army school here," Osborne said. "Whether they earn their commission here, through ROTC or through the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, they all do the same things, learn the same skills and follow the same POI."

Since the program's inception in 1998 the National Guard Phase III program has trained nearly 1,600 new lieutenants.

Brethorst along with the other graduates of the course will graduate today and be commissioned in their home states Saturday.

Trainee's quick action saves battle buddy's life

Lunch leaves one trainee recovering from choking

1st Lt. Matthew W. Hauck
2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

Trainees witnessed an example of how Soldiers accomplish great things in the face of danger July 24.

Pvt. Stephen Brousseau, 4th platoon, D Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, was sitting against a tree finishing his lunch on the Malone 1 training site when he saw a Soldier across from him in trouble.

Pvt. Emmanuel Kim started to panic when a piece of food stuck in his throat and he was unable to breathe.

"I stood up and put my hands around my throat, and told him to do it," Kim said.

One Soldier did not hesitate.

Before a drill sergeant could rush to the area to help, Pvt. Stephen Brousseau was already administering the Heimlich maneuver to dislodge the food, saving his fellow Soldiers' life.

"I did it three times, you know, thrusting with my hands like we were taught," Brousseau said.

Sgt. 1st Class Guy Harris, the first platoon senior drill sergeant, was the first cadre member to see the Soldiers.

"Before I could see the Soldier choking, I heard all the others yelling out and saw them pointing. I saw Private Brousseau doing the Heimlich maneuver on him."

Harris later said, "I was glad to see a Soldier do that, we put forth all we can to make sure these Soldiers are well trained, and to see that Soldier not hesitate to help out, just jump up and save that Soldier was very rewarding to me."

> "I did it three times, you know, thrusting with my hands like we were taught."
> Pvt. Stephen Brousseau
> Soldier who saved another Soldier's life

Brousseau, a native of Pensacola, Fla., received the Army Commendation Medal for his efforts.

The Soldiers graduated from Basic Training Thursday.

Initial Entry troops takes dive into world of leadership

Reserve drills take trainees to leader course

1st Lt. Vylius Leskys
1st Battalion, 333rd Infantry Regiment

In one of the first times of incorporating the Leaders Reactionary Course in One Station Unit Training, E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, leads the way in setting the example of teamwork and unit cohesion.

At one of the LRC lanes, 10 Initial Entry Training privates found themselves located in a Prisoner of War compound where the Soldiers must escape or face being "shot." Their only escape route to safety was to cross a moat and go over a wall.

However, they were told an alarm would activate if there was any movement of the moat's water occurred, and that a guard patrol was posted in front of the wall who could hear any loud talking or noises.

Using a ladder and two lengths of rope that had been left by the guards, the privates negotiated the obstacle and successfully evaded the patrols to get to safety.

This was only one of the eight LRC obstacle lanes that IET privates participated in last week during their Infantry OSUT training. Throughout the course, privates used their analytical skills to develop sound plans, emerge as leaders to bring unity of effort, and, most of all, work as a team to succeed at each obstacle.

"The purpose of the LRC course is to build teamwork, squad cohesion, and esprit de corps," said Staff Sgt. Jimmy Garcia, a drill sergeant from 1st Battalion, 333rd Regiment, 84th Division in Flint, Mich. "It boosted motivation of the privates and helped increase their appreciation for teamwork."

"We couldn't complete the lanes by ourselves," said Pfc. Jonathan Alvarez. "We had to put all of our heads together instead of acting as individuals to get the job done."

Much like the privates honing their skills in teamwork and unit cohesion, E Co., 1st Btn., 19th Regt., leads by example in these skills through its joint active-reserve force efforts. Year-round, the cadre of E Co., 1st Btn., 19th Regt., are comprised of eight active-duty drill sergeants, augmented by four reserve drill sergeants that change over every two weeks. These civilian Soldiers train up throughout the year to prepare for their OSUT training missions.

"Not only do they come prepared and ready to train, but they bring a whole new dynamic to OSUT training," said Staff Sgt. Chris Jackson, a drill of the 1st Battalion, 19th Regiment. "The way in which they interact with the privates is a little different then the way active drills do. From their primarily civilian lifestyles, the reserve drills easily relate to the transitioning IET privates on that level and are well suited to take the private from where he is at to their development into a Soldier."

Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Eric Shinseki's one Army concept suggests that the Army should take advantage of training assets dispersed throughout the active Army, National Guard and Reserves that benefit each other in mission preparation, said Maj. Carlton Allen, 1st Battalion, 333rd Regiment's commander.

"The 1st Battalion, 333rd Infantry Regiment hopes to lead the way in embracing Shinseki's concept," he added.

As a joint effort, Soldiers of the 1st Bn., 333rd Regt., 84th Div. (IT), trained more than 200 IET Soldiers while augmenting the staff of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment at Sand Hill.

Tire giant recalls product, government vehicles effected

Firestone recalls millions of tires found on SUVs

Army Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — The Army and Air Force Exchange Service has some answers regarding the Bridgestone/Firestone tire recall.

Bridgestone/Firestone officials announced recently the voluntary recall and free replacement of an estimated 6.5 million ATX, ATX II and Wilderness AT all-terrain tires, AAFES is issuing the following guidelines to ensure customers take full advantage with minimal inconvenience.

AAFES will take back any eligible customer's tires that meet the Firestone recall criteria, regardless of the original purchase location.

Military customers at any Autopride Car Care facility are authorized credit equal to the AAFES retail price of a recalled tire. This may be applied to a new Firestone tire of their choice or any other brand.

Any difference between the credited amount and the sale price of the replacement tire, or tires, will be the responsibility of the customer.

Likewise, if the customer selects a tire with a sale price less than that of their recalled tire, AAFES will refund the difference on the spot and seek reimbursement from Firestone, rather than leaving it to the customer.

The replacement tires will be the same size, type, load range and tread design. Mounting and balancing will be provided at no charge and transfer of an AAFES road hazard warranty to recall replaced tires is free.

Customers not sure if their tires are subject to recall and those that suspect they have defective tires not subject to recall can bring them by any AAFES Autopride service facility for a free inspection and possible replacement or pro-rated exchange if warranted.

Customers with questions best addressed by the manufacturer are encouraged to contact Firestone at (800) 465-1904 or www.bridgestone-firestone.com.

AAFES, which stopped selling the problem tires even before Firestone's announcement, is now taking steps to ensure the recalled tires are completely removed from its inventory.

The decision to recall the tires came after a meeting between the officials of Bridgestone Corp., the Japanese owner of Firestone; Ford Motor Co. — whose best-selling Explorer is equipped with the tires — and the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Overall, about 47 million of the tires have been sold.

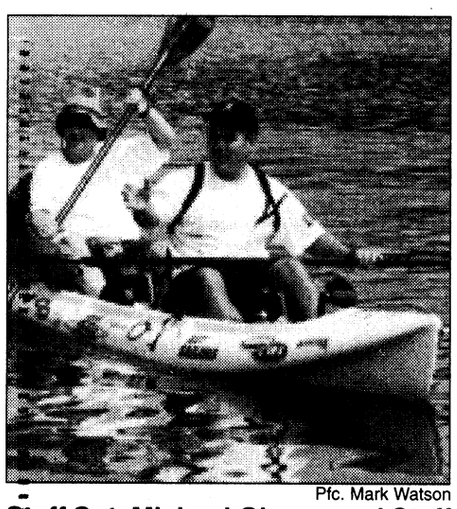
The ATX models have been on the market for more than a decade and the Wilderness model since 1996.

The voluntary recall is limited to one size of three styles sold by AAFES. Right now, no other Bridgestone/Firestone tires are eligible for automatic adjustment or replacement by Firestone or AAFES under this recall.

A CLOSER LOOK

Bridgestone/Firestone officials announced recently the voluntary recall and free replacement of an estimated 6.5 million ATX, ATX II and Wilderness AT all-terrain tires, AAFES is issuing the following guidelines to ensure customers take full advantage with minimal inconvenience.

■ The following are the size and style restrictions concerning the tires being recalled by Firestone.



- P235/75R15, Firestone Radial ATX, all DOT codes.
- P235/75R15, Firestone Radial ATX II, all DOT codes.

- P235/75R15, Wilderness AT, Only codes beginning with "VD."
- P235/75R15 XL Wilderness AT, Only codes beginning with "VD."

■ Reference recall of Firestone Radial ATX and Radial ATX II tires in size P235/75R15, and Wilderness AT tires in size P235/75R15 produced at the Decatur, Ill., plant.

■ Firestone has provided vehicle models equipped with Firestone Wilderness tires NOT involved in the recall. The vehicle models are:

- Chevrolet Silverado and GMC Sierra pickup trucks.
- Chevrolet Tahoe and Suburban sport utility vehicles.
- Ford Expedition sport utility vehicles.
- Ford Escape sport utility vehicles.
- GMC Yukon and Yukon XL sport utility vehicles.
- Mazda Tribute sport utility vehicles.
- Nissan Frontier pickup trucks.

Soldiers embark on 500-mile adventure

Pfc. Mark Watson

Staff Sgt. Michael Glancy and Staff Sgt. Shane Jernigan will kayak their way to Florida raising money for the World War II Memorial.

Rangers attempt to raise money for WWII memorial

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Like Mark Twain's Huckleberry Finn and Jim, two men are on a journey down another of the South's mighty rivers.

The men, who are Ranger instructors at the 6th Ranger Training Battalion in Florida, are paddling down the Chattahoochee River to the Apalachicola River and into the Gulf of Mexico.

The duo will then travel along the inner coast and bays to get to Fort Walton Beach, Fla., and then will road march to Camp Rudder, home of the 6th RTBn.

The reason for the trip is to raise money for the National World War II Memorial in Washington D.C.

"We decided in January we were going to do the trip," Staff Sgt. Shane Jernigan said. "At first we wanted to start in June, hitting all three of the Ranger camps," but the amount of leave and the level of the water didn't permit the trip to happen then.

"We decided since we were making the trip anyway we should try to raise some money for a charity," Jernigan said.

The two decided they should do the trip for charity after watching the movie Saving Private Ryan.

"After the movie when Tom Hanks was talking about the World War II memorial, it brought it to our attention, and we both decided on that memorial," Staff Sgt. Michael Glancy.

Now the team had a charity, but they still needed the kayak and other equipment to make the 500-mile water adventure.

"About a month ago we found a place that donated the boat for us to use. We got some other sponsors and in the end, the whole thing cost us only $150," Jernigan said. "So far we have raised about $3,000 for the memorial and will stop along the way to distribute flyers and collect money for the memorial."

The two loaded their kayak into a pickup and drove to Rotary Park in Columbus where they made the final preparations before launching the kayak from the boat ramp.

"We are going to try to go 50 miles per day," Glancy said. "I don't know if we'll make that, but we are going to try for that."

The two said they are planning to take about 10 days and no more than 12. The two only have 12 days of leave they can take.

With their kayak loaded with food, water and a few other necessities, the Rangers shoved off into the slow moving current of the Chattahoochee River and began their journey at 3 p.m. Friday.

"The memorial for the World War II vets is long overdue," Jernigan said. "More than 55 years later, every major war this century has a memorial except for World War II."

Contributions for the memorial can be sent to National World War II Memorial Fund, c/o SSG Michael W. Glancy, B Company 6th Ranger Training Battalion, Eglin Air Force Base, FL, 32542-7000.

Award: Soldier of the Cycle
What made you join the Army? I have always respected the military. I feel the greatest honor is to serve your country
Why were you chosen as honor graduate? I feel I pushed myself and the others in my company to be the best Soldiers at this phase of their military career. I always feel that a person should strive to be a leader.

Pfc. Nathan D.Wilbanks
Hillsboro, Wisc.,
A Co., 2nd Battalion 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade
Award: Soldier of the Cycle
What made you join the Army: I joined the Army to serve my country and aid in preserving the freedom past Soldiers have earned for me.

Why were you chosen as honor graduate: First, I was chosen by my squad leader to represent fourth squad as an honor graduate candidate. The drill sergeants in our platoon held a small competition between the representatives chosen from each squad.

They asked questions on basic military knowledge. Based on my performance, my drill sergeants chose me to represent third platoon.

Finally, I appeared before a board consisting of the company first sergeant and the four senior drill sergeants.

Out of the four platoon honor graduates, one from each platoon, I was picked as the company honor graduate.

Staff Sgt. Eugene A. Viernes
Waimea, Hawaii,
A Co., 2nd Battalion 19 Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade
Award: Drill Sergeant of the Cycle
Define your leadership style: It depends on the situation, I use the combination of all three styles.
What gives you satisfaction from being a drill sergeant: I get satisfaction from knowing I have an influence in the future of the Army. Seeing them walk across the parade field on graduation day and remembering the first couple weeks when they couldn't even stay in step. Turning them from a civilian into a Soldier, I think, is my greatest satisfaction as a drill sergeant.

Sgt. First Class Stephen Williams
C Company, 6th Ranger Training Battalion
Award: Instructor of the Cycle

What was your greatest challenge as a Ranger instructor: I think the biggest and most challenging aspect of being a Ranger instructor is having to teach the students basic Soldier skills they should already know.

I understand it is our responsibility to give the students an understanding of how to conduct operations while operating in a coastal and swamp environment but not to teach them how to conduct basic missions that they have already performed for 50 days.

If we adhered to the prerequisite standards of entering the school, our focus could change from being in a role as a drill sergeant to one more of the Ranger instructor (teach, coach and mentor).

As a senior NCO, I enjoy the challenge of teaching new Soldiers in a TO&E unit and look forward to getting back to it.

As Ranger instructors we should be a level above that point and concentrate on producing leaders, not basic Soldiers.

Local woman's death helps deaf children

Bridgett Siter

A Columbus family is seeking solace after their daughter's untimely death by reaching out to disabled children.

Katie Elizabeth Turner died April 21, one month shy of her 24th birthday and just six days after being diagnosed with Burkitt's lymphoma, a rare form of cancer that strikes less than 100 people in the U.S. each year.

At the time of her death, Katie was pursuing a master's degree in pediatric audiology at the University of Georgia in Athens. She developed an interest in working with hearing-impaired children after serving as a swim instructor for disabled children during high school.

Katie Elizabeth Turner

Linda Turner described her daughter as vivacious, full of life and hard working. She led an active social life, but worked diligently to maintain her grades. She was awarded the HOPE scholarship four times.

"She loved life," Linda said, who teaches first grade at Dexter Elementary School. "One of her professors called her a shining star. I thought that said it best. She was really a shining star."

For Linda and her husband Dave, who retired from the Army in 1993, the sudden loss of their youngest daughter was incomprehensible, but the support of family and friends turned this tragic time into one of hope and possibilities.

"People were just wonderful," Linda said. "You think this is the worst thing in the world, but people surround you and encourage you. Her friends from school and the instructors at the college were there every day. It was uplifting."

Nearly a month after Katie's death, professors from the Department of Communications Sciences and Disorders at UGA contacted the Turners and suggested they establish an endowment in Katie's honor.

The Katie Elizabeth Turner Endowment would provide financial support for families of infants and children who need hearing aids and other assistive devices.

"We talked about trying to make something positive out of this," Linda said. "We could sit back and let it destroy us, or we could make something good come out of her death.

Soldiers lend helping hand at MDA camp

BOSS program provides youth counselors

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers team up with children with muscular dystrophy last week at the MDA camp at Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga. Thirty-three Soldiers participated as counselors in the camp to help MD patients enjoy a variety of activities.

More than 200,000 children in the U.S. are afflicted with some form of muscular dystrophy.

It has claimed more victims than the the Vietnam and Korean wars combined.

No wonder Fort Benning Soldiers are joining the battle to find a cure and make life a little more pleasant for the children who suffer from MD.

Thirty three Fort Benning Soldiers spent a week at Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga., Aug. 5-11, serving as counselors for children stricken with muscular dystrophy.

The camp, which is located 30 minutes east of Atlanta, is specially designed and equipped for handicapped campers.

Since the 1950s it has hosted week-long camps throughout the year for children who suffer from diseases such as cancer, AIDs and MD.

There are more than 90 camps in the U.S. designed for children with muscular dystrophy. Camp Twin Lakes is the only one of its kind in Georgia, and with more than 100 campers each year, it's the second largest in the U.S.

The term muscular dystrophy refers to a group of genetic diseases marked by progressive weakness and degeneration of the skeletal muscles, which control movement.

The muscles of the heart and other involuntary muscles are also affected in some forms of MD, and a few forms involve other organs as well.

The progression of MD often confines sufferers to wheelchairs, thereby limiting their ability to function independently. Though in most cases the disease does not affect the brain, those with progressive MD usually require assistance to perform the most basic tasks, such as bathing and eating.

Camp Twin Lakes gives children between the ages of 6 and 21 who suffer from MD the opportunity to participate in activities normally beyond their abilities.

Ideally each counselor is assigned to one camper, though a counselor shortage sometimes means one adult takes care of two campers.

Each counselor devotes the entire week to meeting the needs of his "camp buddy." They go swimming, fishing and dancing together. They make crafts and learn archery. And more often than not, the counselor also helps his buddy bathe, dress and eat.

"It's hard work. By the end of the week I was exhausted," said Sgt. Robert Brown, president of Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers. "It was tough meeting their every need physically but staying focused on their emotional need to forget about their disability for one week and just have a good time.

"Spiritually it was great, but it wore me out."

Brown learned about the camp from Joanie Rosenbaum, the camp director, who visits Fort Benning each year to recruit counselors. Rosenbaum said Fort Benning Soldiers have been attending the muscular dystrophy camp for 10 years.

"These guys are serving their country, and this is another way to do that," Rosenbaum said. "We've got phenomenal support from Fort Benning."

Rosenbaum encourages Soldiers and family members to contact the BOSS office at 545-6800 for information about serving as a counselor. She said Fort Benning's Soldiers, both men and women, bring physical and mental muscle to the camp program.

"They have the physical strength to do whatever they need to do to take care of these kids. That's important," she said. "But they've also been trained to stay focused on the task. That's just as important when you're talking about spending a whole week caring for children with disabilities."

Sgt. 1st Class Cheryl Woodhouse is a busy working mother with two children of her own. This was her second year serving as a camp counselor, and though she'll be moving to Fort Jackson, S.C., soon, she hopes to return to Camp Twin Lakes again

CSU, Callaway team up for stars

Astronomy unveils beauty of night skies

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Cardinal Bellarmino who told Galileo Galilei in 1616 that he could not defend Copernican astronomy — which placed the sun at the center of the universe — because it went against the doctrine of the Roman Catholic church, was short-sighted to say the least.

In a time where the Earth was considered the center of all life, Galileo's celestial observations through a telescope not only displaced that theory, but also opened the gateway to the universe.

"When people think about the world, they just think about the Earth itself, but it's important to know about the universe that we live in. We're actually a tiny speck of dust," said Dr. Shawn Cruzen, director of the Mead Observatory at the Columbus State University Coca-Cola Space and Science Center and assistant professor of astronomy at CSU.

Cruzen was part of the staff from the CSU Coca-Cola Space and Science Center that taught the Monday night series "Oh My Stars" astronomy classes at the Callaway Gardens' Overlook Pavilion.

"It's important to know your way around the sky," Cruzen said.

Aside from the bedazzling properties of stars, they have been used as a navigational tool for centuries.

For example, the North Star, the sole stationary celestial body in the sky, is used to tell latitude. Although navigational equipment is much more sophisticated, the stars provide a sure-footed way to get around on a night hike, or for those Soldiers out on a night navigational exercise — unless it's cloudy.

Getting to know the universe better doesn't take the Hubble Space Telescope, just the desire to star gaze.

"The most important thing to look for first is the constellations," said Anthony Brand, Georgia Tech student and a staff member of the CSU Coca-Cola Space and Science Center. "That's your road map to the stars.

"Once you take a map and learn them, then you can find the ring nebulae, horseshoe nebulae, things like that," he said.

If the back yard isn't dark enough Craven suggests places like FDR State Park or Callaway Gardens to find a patch of unlit sky.

"This is a great place to view the sky because it's not around city lights," said Patricia Collins, director of education at Callaway Gardens.

But constellations are not the only

Dr. Brooks Coleman entertains the teachers Wednesday at Stowers.

State legislator inspires 'heroes and sheroes'

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

The walls of Stowers Elementary School cafeteria shook Wednesday as people laughed, cried, oooohed, aaaahed, hooted, howled and even a few "Amens" were shouted from the crowd.

In a place where stomachs do the rumbling, the faculty and staff of Fort Benning Schools were the ones making all the noise during a back to school celebration, thanks to the uproarious keynote speaker Dr. Brooks Coleman.

Coleman, a state representative in the Georgia legislature and retired superintendent from Gwinnet County, dynamically presented his speech titled "Heroes and Sheroes ... Changing the Lives of Children."

Coleman, an animated speaker, freely walked through the main aisle, pacing, running and jumping while he riddled his speech with personal stories that brought people to tears. They were laughing so hard, several people were dabbing their eyes with tissues.

But each story had a serious message about what makes a hero. The heart of the speech contained 10 elements that Coleman deemed important to success not only as a teacher, but as a human being.

- Always maintain a positive attitude.
- Believe in what you are doing.
- Show commitment and make a contribution.
- Keep your word, never disgrace your name.
- Take pride in what you do.
- Do quality work.
- Learn and embrace technology.
- Follow the Golden Rule.
- Never give up.
- Make your dreams come true.

Coleman emphasized how quickly the world is changing mainly because

Computers can catch consumers in 'web' of confusion

Jeff Skinner
NetSystems Incorporated

It's back-to-school time, and many of your kids are heading off to college.

In the past all they needed were new clothes, some books, pens, pencils and paper. Of course we cannot forget the signed check from mom and dad to pay tuition. The highest tech tool they needed was a scientific calculator for physics and advanced math courses.

Today college dorms have a network connection and the students are encouraged to get connected. Virtually every professor will communicate via e-mail and will expect their students to do the same.

Thus begins the journey to purchase the new personal computer. On this journey you will discover many terms you thought you knew the meaning of, now have a completely different meaning. Ram was a goat, now it's random access memory.

Think of this as your short-term memory in your brain. You can remember a phone number and a street address for a short period of time, but the chances are as you go through out your day and encounter new experiences you will replace that phone number with something else in short term memory. This is the function of RAM.

A hard drive is not that long drive home from training exercises in the field after being up for three days; it is permanent storage in a computer. Windows is now an operating system that makes the PC easy to use, and the most confusing of all ... the Web, in the context of PCs, refers to the Internet and does not belong to a spider.

There are many choices out there when it comes to the purchase of a new PC.

The good news is the prices are better than ever. The bad news is, the computers you buy today will no longer last five years or longer.

Murphy's law states technology will double every 18 months. Murphy's law is out of date. Technology is increasing at an exponential rate. So do not try and buy something thinking you will hedge against obsolescence. It is impossible.

Here are a few rules that will aid you in buying your new PC.

Avoid mail order unless you know exactly what you are buying. You will want support if you are a new user and mail order is not going to give that to you. In addition you may not always get what you think you are getting.

Name brand doesn't necessarily mean better. Most of your name brand PCs are proprietary. If you buy a Gateway, most of the components are built on to the motherboard (the backbone of the PC) if one component fails it generally means you have to replace the entire thing.

The small guy generally will be the most helpful, the most knowledgeable and will be most competitive in price. The folks earn their living through the education of the consumer and must survive on a smaller profit margin, which means he is very dependent on keeping a good reputation.

Check around and be sure of the reputation of the small guy. If they have changed names three times in the last six years and have the same owners it is generally a warning sign.

Buy based on your needs not on fear of obsolescence. If you try to keep up with technology and hedge against obsolescence you will fight a losing battle.

If all you need is word processing and Internet connectivity a Celeron will meet your needs. If on the other hand you plan on playing some of the newest games on the market, you need to consider a higher end PC such as an AMD Athlon, or Intel PIII.

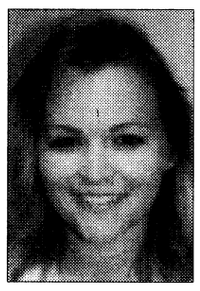
Cheaper is not always better. A good rule of thumb that applies more so in the PC industry than in any other industry I have ever worked in, is you get what you pay for. If you buy a $500 E-machine from an office super store chances are you will be buying a new one this time next year.

E-machines are built from some of the cheapest components available in the industry and have very little room for expansion.

"Ninety days same as cash" is a good thing. If you're a specialist or higher and have decent credit, almost any finance company will work with your retailer to give you 90 days same as cash.

Cheap printers are not always the best buy. If you plan on doing a lot of printing you will be better of with a laser printer than a cheap inkjet. You will get approximately 250 printed sheets of paper from an inkjet cartridge that will cost you $30-$40 for a refill. You will get approximately 5,000 printed sheets from a laser printer and will pay about $80-$100 for a toner refill. It doesn't take rocket science to figure out which one is cheaper in the long run. On the other hand if you want color, then an inkjet is your best choice.

Ask about Windows ME. This is the newest version of windows from Microsoft due to hit the market very soon. See if you can go ahead and purchase the upgrade ahead of time. Windows Millennium Edition has many new features such as an Internet connection sharing wizard that are worth the upgrade.



Keep all of your documentation related to warranties etc. and get a list of the brand name of each component in the computer. If for some reason the little guy goes out of business or you move away, the manufacturer of the components still provide a warranty on the parts inside the PC.

If you know for example the modem is a U.S. Robotics (BTW avoid win modems) and it dies and you have since moved from the area, 3Com (the manufacturer of USR modems) provides a five-year warranty on their modems. All you have to pay is the labor for someone to install it.

Editor's note: Jeff Skinner is president of NetSystems Incorporated and is a Microsoft certified professional. He hosts a call-in show Thursdays on AM 1420 from 11:05 to 11:30 a.m. where people call in to ask technology related questions.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

Most gardeners know the benefits of compost. Many are unaware that they can make compost for themselves.

Here are some simple steps to making compost.

The first step is to decide on the type of bin to use. No bin is actually required if you have an offset unused part of your yard. If a bin is desired there are a number of options ranging from expensive to inexpensive.

Some of these options are: a purchased compost container, an old rubber trash can with several quarter sized holes punched into the sides, a three sided box made from wooden pallets or a cylindrical shaped chicken wire basket. Next determine where to place the pile. A sunny location is best because heat is a major concern with composting. Keep in mind the accessibility of the pile as well.

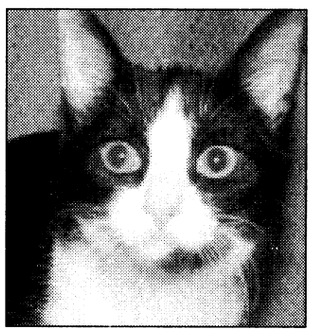
Begin by collecting compostable material. Lawn clippings, manure and vegetable scraps constitute the nitrogenous source of the pile. Dried leaves and newspaper shredding constitute the carbonaceous part of the pile.

The proportion of nitrogen and carbon should be one-third to two-thirds. So begin the pile with a thick layer of nitrogen source. Then pile a layer of dirt on top of that. The dirt contains microorganisms that assist in the break down of the material. Then add a layer of carbon. Alternating nitrogen, dirt and carbon layers until the pile has reached at least three feet in height.

Sprinkle the pile with a small amount of water. Just enough to wet the top layer. Sufficient rainfall eliminates the watering step for most gardeners. For the pile to turn into a useful source of nutrients it has to be aerated. Oxygen aids in the breaking down process and turning pile so the pile should be turned very often, as often as three times a day.

Because gardeners don't need an added chore in the garden, not all of them turn their piles often. But the more the pile is turned, the quicker the compost becomes available for use.

The pile should start to get hot. The heat comes from the decomposing of the material within the pile. If the pile is cold, add some more nitrogen rich sources. If the pile is wet and smelly, add some carbon rich sources. Make sure to turn the pile everyday.



The time it takes to have useful compost varies. The availability is increased with more attention to the pile. A hot pile will be faster. A more aerated pile will be faster. The availability of compost is a factor that the gardener controls.

RedStixx: Helps to raise money for Katie Turner endowment

"When the college called us with this idea, we knew it was the perfect way to celebrate Katie's memory."

Katie's sister Kristen called the collaboration between the Turners and the college "the perfect match."

"Katie's dream was to help hearing impaired infants and children, and this endowment would ensure her wishes were fulfilled," she wrote in a fundraising letter July 28. "The cancer might have taken my sister from us, but we're not going to let it destroy her dreams."

While Department of Communications Sciences and Disorders representatives contact corporations and health industries, the Turners have begun raising funds locally. They need at least $10,000 to establish the endowment through the college. To date they've raised more than $2,500.

"We will get the money. We won't give up," Linda said. "We can't let her go and not do something to make sense of it."

The Turners both spend evenings and weekends at the RedStixx ticket booth at Golden Park in Columbus.

When team officials learned about the endowment, they offered to sponsor a fund-raiser.

> "Unfortunately many people will never experience Katie's warmth and humor and compassion. But this endowment will ensure my little sister will continue to touch many lives."
> Kristen Turner
> sister

A portion of ticket sales from Saturday's game against Delmarva will be donated to the fund.

The Columbus-based band No Promises will perform before the game and Cottonmouth players will sign autographs. The game starts at 7:15 p.m.

Linda's coworker, PE teacher Pam Koon, will perform the national anthem in sign language before the game, and a group of Dexter students will sing and sign "Take me Out to the Ballgame" during the seventh inning.

"We've had a lot of support," Linda said. "People on Fort Benning have just been absolutely wonderful. The Army has always been our family."

Kristen said support of the Katie Elizabeth Turner Endowment will help keep her sister's memory and dream alive.

"Unfortunately many people will never experience Katie's warmth and humor and compassion," she said. "But this endowment will ensure my little sister will continue to touch many lives."

Donations to the Katie Elizabeth Turner Endowment can be made to Dr. Albert De Chicchis at (706) 542-4582, or make checks out to the UGA Foundation, IT Discretionary Fund Acct. #50-R-4780 Katie.

Send checks to the Department of Communications Sciences and Disorders, University of Georgia, 516 Aderhold Hall, Athens, Ga., 30602-7152.

Tickets for Saturday's ballgame can be purchased at the gate or in advance at 571-8866.

Camp: Provides fun activities for children

next year.

"Just seeing the smiles on those kids' faces makes it all worthwhile," she said. "That week means the world to them. It's like Disney World to us. Saying goodbye at the end of the week was heartbreaking."

Woodhouse said giving up a week of her time required little effort on her part.

"At 38, I've still got a lot of kid in me," she laughed. "I got to do everything they did and we had fun together. But at the end of the week when you see their parents drive up in these vans with all the special equipment they need, you realize what they have to go through day in and day out — every day of the year. It makes you realize how blessed you are to have healthy children."

Liz Persaud is a 14-year veteran of Camp Twin Lakes. The 21-year-old was diagnosed with MD when she was 9-months-old.

"I have a great family and they're here to help me with anything I need," she said. "But camp is my one chance out of the year to be on my own for a little while. I know I'll always be taken care of because the counselors are great."

Persaud said her favorite camp activity is swimming.

"Being in the water is so freeing. It's great for able-bodied people. Imagine what it's like for someone who's stuck in a wheelchair all day long," the Alpharetta, Ga., resident said.

The Muscular Dystrophy Association funds the MDA camps across the U.S. Fund-raisers like the Jerry Lewis Labor Day Telethon not only raise millions of dollars each year to search for a cure, but also provide the $450 required for each child to attend camp.

Since the association was founded in 1950, scientists have identified the genes that cause several types of MD. Research teams have even identified the crucial protein which, when missing or deficient, causes the disease.

Persaud believes a cure for MD will soon be found. Little by little, she said, the pieces of the puzzle are starting to fall into place. One day she hopes to be able to walk on her own, something she's only experienced vicariously so far.

"When I was little I was stronger. My dad used to get me out of bed each morning. I'd wrap my arms around his neck and he'd place my feet on top of his," she said. "He'd take little steps backwards so I could feel what it was like to walk."

Pep rally: Gears up teachers for post's first day of school technology, and as teachers, they need to be ready to use it and pass it along to their students.

"We've got to help children to get ready," he said.

Coleman not only urged teachers to be heroes to their students, but also to look to their own heroes for inspiration.

He then showed the audience memorabilia of his own hero, Roy Rogers, which included lunch box, coffee cup and a life-sized cardboard cut-out.

Coleman appropriately concluded his speech with the Roy Rogers theme song "Happy Trails" that had everybody singing.

But Coleman wasn't the only person who got the audience singing, Cy Dietrich, Fort Benning Schools teacher of 1999-2000 wrote and performed two songs during the celebration, Touch a Child and It Takes a Teacher, the Fort Benning Schools theme song.

The program also featured the introduction of new faculty members at the various Fort Benning schools as well as greetings from the unions and a greeting speech from Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander.

Mitchell reflected upon his time in school, how he attended five schools in seven years as a part of a military family and how hard it is to make that transition.

> "The greatest thing we can give our Soldiers, as heroes and sheroes, is to give them their children the best we got."
> Dr. Dell McMullen
> Fort Benning Schools superintendent

"I know you are world class in welcoming new people and dealing with that transition," Mitchell said.

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Stowers Elementary School, said the faculty and staff is committed to excellence and looks forward to serving the Fort Benning community.

"We strive to honor every family we serve," she said. "The greatest thing we can give our Soldiers, as heroes and sheroes, is to give them their children the best we got," McMullen said.

Many teachers expressed their excitement Wednesday about the upcoming school year, which started Thursday.

"I'm looking forward to the children coming, we are all fixing our rooms, decorating our boards," said Julie Pelletier, media specialist at Stowers.

"I'm looking forward to the new schedule for students," said Gloria Loar, art teacher at Faith Middle School.

The schedule adjustments at Faith Middle School included shortening the length of time between classes, meaning less hall time for students to linger and the order in which students attend classes.

"I'm excited about the new curriculum this year," said Faye Lewis Strong, music teacher at Faith Middle School.

She said the new curriculum includes new materials and technology that will enable students to be creative with more than their singing voices, such as simulating radio broadcasts and making music videos.

"What we're most excited about is that we're moving into a new building this year," said Vicki Rogers, principal of Dexter Elementary.

Dexter has been teaching classes out of portable classrooms awaiting the new building.

"It's a new beginning, a new year and a new group of children that we will touch," McMullen said.

Astronomy: Gives universe to star gazers

celestial bodies that can be seen with the naked eye. There are satellites constantly passing overhead.

Satellites are the fast-moving, glowing dots seen scooting across the sky and sometimes are only visible for 30 seconds before retreating behind the tree tops.

"One night we were able to see the Mir Space Station. It was fun to see that," she said.

The Web site heavens-above.com gives details such as day, time and direction of path, of orbiting satellites.

One item in the sky taken for granted is the moon.

"A lot of times when people look at the moon, they don't know what they're looking at," Cruzen said.

The moon has been distinctively mapped out by astronomers.

Many areas on the moon's surface were named for seas because the dark patches lead astronomers to believe it was a body of water.

One notable spot on the moon is the Mare Tranquillitatis, or sea of tranquility, which was where Neil Armstrong and Buzz Aldrin, first landed.

The nighttime sky always has a story to tell.

There's always something different in the sky — every day there's something different; every season the constellations change, Craven said.

The summer triange, pointed out during the program by Alisha Herrington, a senior at Hardaway High School in Columbus and staff member of the CSU Coca-Cola Space and Science Center, is an example of seasonal star sightings. This is a triangle, comprised of stars Vega, Deneb and Altair, are among the first stars seen in a summer sky at dusk because of their brightness.

During the class Herrington used a telescope to show star-gazers M13, the oldest star cluster made up of more than 100,000 stars and is 20 light years away. The M13, invisible to the naked eye, is in the constellation Hercules and resembles a cloud of dust when viewed through the telescope.

Herrington said she took astronomy class in school but accompanied her studies of the stars with mythology.

"It made it 20 times more interesting because of the stories of why and how the constellations got their names," she said.

For example, according to Greek myth, Centaurus, half-man, half-horse, was the one who first grouped the stars into constellations and taught humans how to read the sky.

He placed a picture of himself in the sky to guide the Argonauts on their search for the Golden Fleece.

Although Monday was the final night of the Oh My Stars summer series, the CSU Coca-Cola Space and Science Center offers an observation night once a month, throughout the year.

In addition to teaching beginners what the sky has to offer, Craven said these nights are an ideal opportunity for people to bring their own telescopes and become proficient using them.

"We will help get them oriented and show them around the sky."

For more information about upcoming observing nights with the staff at the CSU Coca-Cola Space and Science Center, call 649-1470 or log onto www.CCSSC.org.

So technologically advanced, it even wins the battle against obsolescence.

Imagine an armored vehicle that not only has all the requisite capabilities of present-day ICVs, but already contains the new technologies to meet the requirements established for 2012. An ICV that accommodates full technological insertions as well as state-of-the-art armor add-on capabilities. With advanced hydro-pneumatic suspension that produces the smoothest rides over the roughest terrain—delivering troops more ready to fight.

Here's what they'll be fighting with:

- State-of-the-art technology, not decades-old like other ICVs.
- Latest stabilized remote firing system.
- Advanced track technology goes where wheels and older tracks can't.
- Modular design in protection allows critical future armor enhancements.
- Exceeds needs of today's interim force—easily deployed via C-130.
- Most powerful engine in its class with 360-degree turning radius.
- Titanium-enhanced technology.

Americans are used to fighting, and winning, with the best technologies. Responsiveness, Deployability, Agility, Versatility, Lethality, Survivability — that's Bionix. The American-made Bionix is a fly light, fight heavy ICV that utilizes the most advanced technologies available. After all, a lighter Army shouldn't be lightly armored.

Bionix - Fly Light, Fight Heavy.

God's light gives mankind chance to shine

Chaplain (Capt.) Kip McKee
11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

We are set apart by God to be holy. Jesus commands us to be the salt and the light for him.

We are blessed to share the good news of Jesus with a lost and dying world!

"You are the Salt of the earth ... You are The Light of the world ... let your light shine before men, that they may see your good deeds and praise your Father in Heaven." (Matthew 5:13a, 14a and 16 (NIV))

We are to be God's light to the world. When God's light shines, people have a chance to respond to God in a positive or negative manner.

Many people will be attracted to the light and will accept Jesus as Lord and savior. However, other people will shade their eyes and flee from the light.

They will not like to be around a true believer of Christ because each time they interact with us, God's light convicts them of their sin.

We are not to judge others. Our Christian duty is to witness to the lost and minister where God leads. We don't need to be "liked" or "popular." All we need to do is to serve God with our best effort.

Christians are to stand up for Jesus in all situations. To be the salt and the light of God means that we will not blend in with the crowd. We should be different.

Peter and John stood for Jesus despite opposition from the leaders of their day.

"They saw the boldness of Peter and John and realized that they were unschooled ordinary men, they were astonished and they realized that they had been with Jesus." Acts 4:13 (NIV)

Do your family members, friends and co-workers know that you are a Christian?

If yes, then great. Keep up the good work. If no, then why are you keeping your faith in Jesus hidden?

God did not call us to be his secret police. No, we are to be clearly identified as a follower of Jesus. That means that in all situations you will strive to act as a Christian and let others know where you stand and who you belong to.

God wants to use you to make a difference for him today. Here are a few ways to share your faith daily:

• Let others know that you are a Christian through your words and deeds.

• Be a positive person with everyone. Christians need to be positive people!

• Pray before each meal and throughout the day when appropriate.

• Praise God (verbally) for each blessing you receive — remember, God gives us every good gift.

• Control your spirit. Don't let Satan take you off course through lust, anger or anything else.

• Don't hang around with people who use foul language and let them know that you do not appreciate their use of profanity. Witness to them, be their friend, but don't corrupt yourself by listening to their foul language.

• Go to church often. We need to be in God's house. Don't make excuses why no to go — just go. You will be blessed.

• Read God's Holy Bible

Keep up the good fight. Christians win in the end. Remember God loves you.

Love needs more than physical attraction

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Chaplain Family Life Training Program

Love has always been a part of human history. Anthropologists, socialists and psychologists have only recently studied loves as a scientific endeavor. Here are some of their conclusions.

Love involves all four domains of personhood: body, soul, mind and will.

Body

Our physical senses of sight, sound, taste and touch arouse our passions and initially draw us toward another. We are physically and sexually (eros) attracted.

This attraction fuels our feelings of romance. But physical love and passion alone are not enough to keep us in love, for we will stay together as long as that person gratifies us. Physical love alone may lead to game playing and casual and transitory relationships.

Soul

The soul, or psyche, is the seat bed of emotions. Our feelings bond or attach us to others in intimacy. Our feelings of warmth, sharing and emotional closeness form the basis for lasting, caring and helping friendships (philia and storage).

We stay together as long as that person makes us happy. The relationship lasts as long as we like being with that person or doing for that person.

Mind

The mind is the rational and pragmatic center for love. We seek relationships with people who meet certain criteria and who share mutual interests. We stay together as long as we share common interests and goals. Cognitive love alone, however, is altruistic and devoid of passion and feeling.

Will

The will is the center of commitment. We make conscious decisions to love another and maintain a relationship over time in spite of difficulties that may arise. Commitment is the essential ingredient to lasting love. We stay together no matter what. Yet, commitment alone is empty love.

True love (agape) involves the physical, emotional, mental and volitional aspects of personhood. It balances infatuation, altruism, friendship, companionship, romance and sex to produce consummate love.

If your love life is less than consummate love, free counseling is available to help improve your love life and interpersonal relationships. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or email me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Raptors soar above Hawks in last game

Raptors emerge victorious, 19-9; Youth Service season ends

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

A suffocating defense and good use of fast breaks gave the Raptors the chance to soar above the Hawks in the 8- to 9-year-old Youth Services basketball game Aug. 9.

Forcing the Hawks' ball handlers away from their teammates, the Raptors would double and triple team the lone Hawk, leading to the 19-9 Raptor victory.

The scoring action started slowly with both teams searching for a way to exploit each other's weaknesses.

After several minutes of running up and down the court, Raptors' center Robert Judkins scored the first basket of the game.

Making the most of several steals and the fast break, the Raptors drove to their basket and scored again.

On one of the breakaways, shortly before the first quarter ended, Judkins was fouled while shooting.

He stepped to the free-throw line and sunk both of the shots, giving the Raptors a six point advantage over the Hawks.

In the second quarter both teams couldn't score and fouled frequently. One basket for each team was sunk from a place other than the free throw line.

More than 10 players for both teams were fouled while shooting giving them the opportunity to add to their teams' score with no defense. Several of the foul shots paid off for the shooters.

One of the Hawks players, Natasha Yarbo, a guard, was able to draw three consecutive fouls and sink one basket for each time she stepped to the foul line.

Of the many free-throw shots, only six fell through the hoop all belonging to the Hawks, bringing the score to 9-8.

At the buzzer the Raptors lead by one point with the second half still ahead of them.

The Raptors owned the third quarter clipping the Hawks' wings and shutting them out.

They used an in-your-face defense, led by Shaquille Shaw, which totally overran the Hawks' offense.

With the tight defense, the Raptors repeatedly stole the ball leading to scoring opportunities, which devastated the Hawks.

The Raptors didn't have problems with scoring, and Judkins scored two of the three baskets.

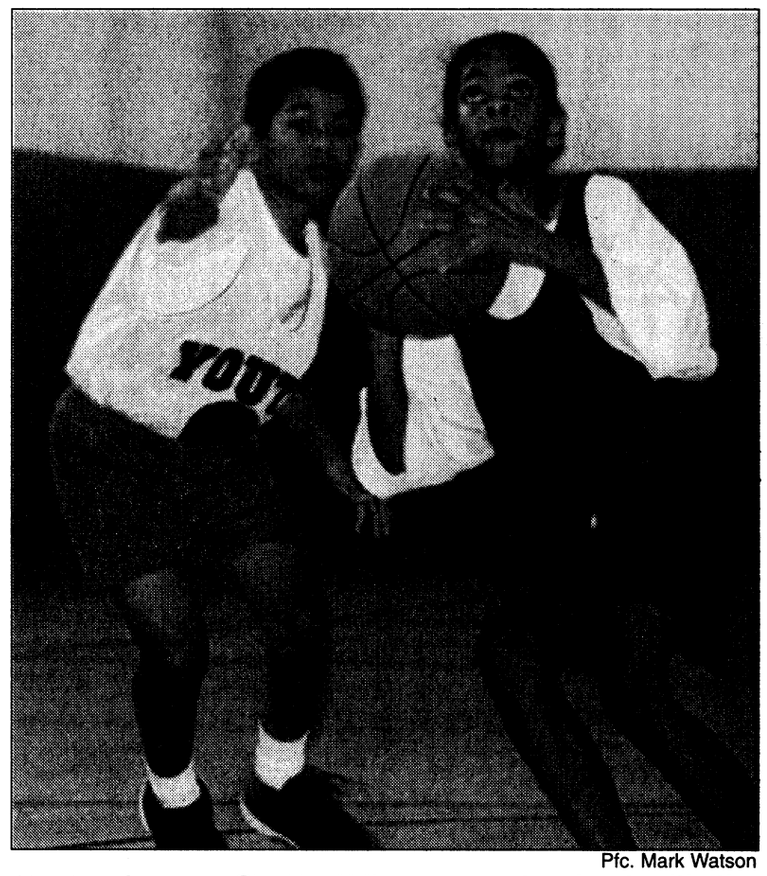
Raptor forward Shaw scored the other basket, and his tough defense caused many turnovers and began to get the Hawks frustrated.

At the end of the third quarter the Raptors were in the lead, 15-9, and their momentum looked like it would carry them higher still for the final quarter.

Keene Ingraham, a Raptors' forward scored in the final quarter and was followed by guard Jeffery Sykes.

Sykes was fouled twice, and at the line he was able to sink two baskets giving his team the win for their last game of the season and a winning record.

Both coaches said their were more than pleased with their teams' performances and said everyone played great games.



"We won by using great teamwork," said Raptors' coach Gary Hart Sr. "Everyone got involved and we all played as a team."

The team, which lost only two games throughout the season, played their hearts out, he said.

"Everyone played really well and we just had a fun year."

The Hawks coach, Richard Hite said the season was a learning experience for them.

"We only had three of four players who had ever played before," Hite said. "We really learned a lot throughout the season. From the beginning to now the team made a big improvement," he said.

Hunters find tools for every situation

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Directorate of Community Activities

Billions of dollars are spent each year by hunters and outdoor enthusiasts. For each sport there is a plethora of gadgets and gismos available; from archery to rifle hunting the sporting industry has developed something for every situation.

It is always interesting to observe the variety of gear different hunters have.

Last year several devoted Fort Benning hunters got together to compare our "necessary" gear. I was truly amazed at the amount of stuff some hunters drag into the woods and the money spent to ensure they had every situation covered.

I along with many others have fallen victim to the gear syndrome but continually strive to cut the Lady Green Waves defeated in season opener

Spencer Green Waves' right fielder Tasha Sullivan connects with the ball during Monday's game against the Pacelli Vikings. The Green Waves lost 13-3. Their next game is today at 5 p.m. on Upson Lee Field in Thomaston, Ga.

Spencer girls lose to Vikings in first game

Pfc. Mark Watson

In their first game of the year the Spencer Lady Green Waves fast pitch softball team traveled to Pacelli High School Monday evening.

The Green Waves were left in the wake as the Pacelli Lady Vikings chipped away at the Green Waves defense scoring off singles and walks to end the game at 13-3.

As the Green Waves took to the plate the Vikings settled into a three count rhythm three up and three down, leaving the Green Waves hitless in the first.With the Vikings up to bat they needed no help but got it from Green Waves pitcher Katesha Hammonds who had trouble throwing into the strike zone.

Ball after ball was called with the count many times in favor of the Vikings. Five batters were walked and five hit singles before the inning was over.

Although the shaky first inning was over, the damage

Cannons show good sportsmanship, demolish Rangers

Baseball club shuts out Rangers in Saturday's game

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

It was the Rangers who came up short in Sunday's game against the Cannons even before the first pitch was thrown.

During pregame warm-ups Rangers' coach Mike Young informed Cannons' coach Ed Gawlik, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, he only had seven players. Although technically the Rangers could still field a team and make the game official, Young explained the team was missing its most integral players, a pitcher and a catcher.

Gawlik, in a gesture of good sportsmanship, "lent" three of his players to the Rangers: Rick Johanningsmeir, C Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.; Jimmy Brownlee, B Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.; and Josh Kroynak, B Co., 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., in order to get a game going.

Brownlee remained catcher for all six innings of Sunday's game and both Kroynak and Johanningsmeir had their chance on the mound for the Rangers as well as played infield positions.

Orlando Vega-Torres, B Co., 203rd Forward Support Bn., took the mound for the Cannons for the first three innings but not before he tallied six strikeouts.

Kronyak, who got two at-bats against Vega-Torres thanks to the temporary swap, said, "He's the best pitcher that I've seen in the league."

Kronyak said it was the fastball that he had to adjust to in the batter's box because it was faster than any other pitcher he's seen in the league.

"That's what's messing everyone up, he throws faster than anyone in this league," he said.

Vega-Torres isn't keeping his heat a secret.

"I use the fastball all the time," he said.

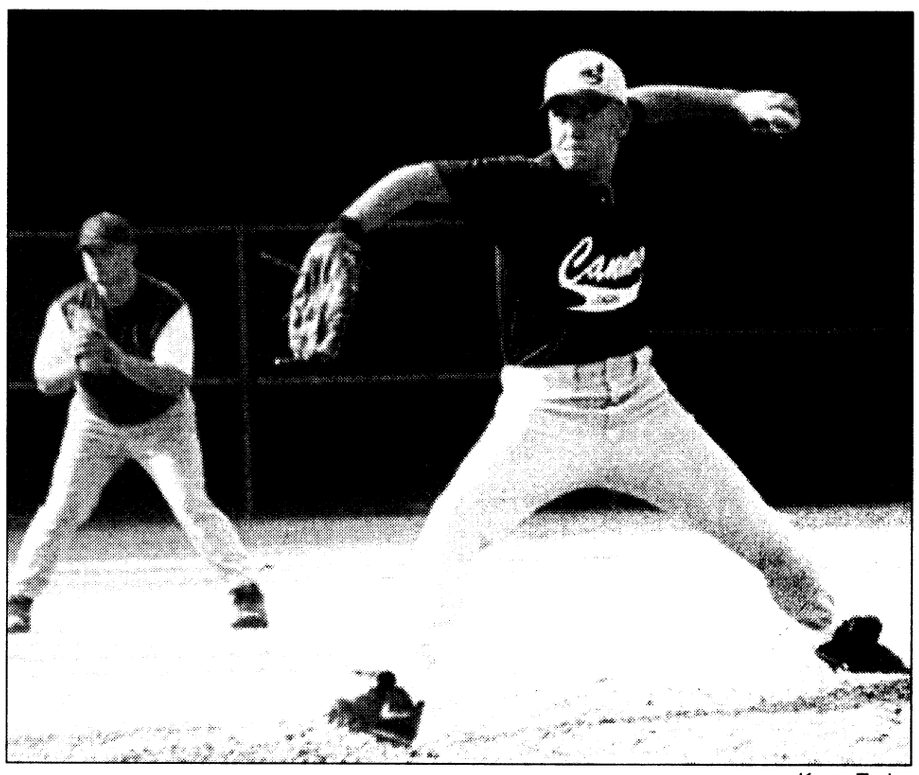
"Just about every pitch," said catcher Matt Quiroz, C Co., 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt.

Vega-Torres said his fastball is his most effective pitch but when he finds himself behind in the count he tries to take some speed off it and work in the curveball.

"The curveball is pretty effective, too," said Quiroz, who witnessed it from the batter's box.

Quiroz fell victim to the curveball and subsequently was retired by Vega-Torres, who pitched for the Rangers in the fourth inning.

Gawlik moved Vega-Torres to the Rangers "so they (the Cannons) can see some heat," he said.



Johanningsmeir was then thrown into the mix on the mound and finished the game for the Rangers.

Left-hander Robert Carlisle, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt., pitched fourth and fifth innings for the Cannons. Carlisle's solid performance from the mound tallied two strikeouts and he gave up no hits in the six batters he faced.

Steve Bielak, a family member, finished off the game for the Cannons in style with three strikeouts.

Although the game was officially on the was done. The Vikings scored five runs.

The top of the second inning was another disaster for the Green Waves.

After a pop fly was caught, Vikings' pitcher Freddie Spivey added back-to-back strike outs to her stats ending the top of the second inning.

With the Vikings up to bat again, catcher Mandy Rowell was walked. She stole second base on a wild pitch thrown by Hammonds.

As fellow Viking Blair Hart hit a single, Rowell tried to reach third, but third baseman Sharla Sudial was able to stop the play when she made the easy tag.

The Green Waves ended the inning three batters later.

Although their defense was improving, the Green Waves offense still struggled. Second baseman San Bryant connected with the ball but was thrown out before she made it to base. The Vikings continued to throw heat and blew the ball past the next two batters for easy strike outs.

The Vikings continued to break down the Green Waves defense in the bottom of the third inning.

After the first batter was walked, Spivey made a hit and reached second on a throwing error advancing second baseman Mary Helen Peacock to third.

Shortstop Brooke Bucholtz stepped to the plate and hit the ball for a single scoring Peacock. Left fielder Christina Holder followed suit hitting a single to drive in Spivey

The inning ended in favor of the Vikings 7-0 when Hammonds grabbed the ball and threw out the runner.

In the top of the fourth, Hammonds scored the first hit of the game for the Green Waves and then stole second base on the next pitch.

With two outs against the Green Waves, shortstop Dee Taylor knocked the ball out of the infield for a single driving in Hammonds and giving the Green Waves their first run of the game.

They scored again on the next play when Sudial drove in Taylor who reached third base on back-to-back steals.

Although their momentum was increasing, they were finally put out, leaving two runners in scoring position.

The Vikings seemed to have a little more trouble in getting on base in the bottom of the fourth.

Vikings' first baseman Katie Gordon finally was driven in by left fielder Christina Holder who made it to first on an error four plays later.

At the end of the fourth inning, the Vikings' led 9-2.

At the start of the fifth, Bryant hit a single and then stole second. She was followed by center fielder Latesha Jackson who was walked. In an attempt to reach third base, Bryant was tagged out, but Jackson reached second.

Hammonds stepped up to the plate again and smacked another single scoring Jackson, giving the Green Waves their final run of the game.

Both teams were hitless in their next at bats, and the game was finally called in the bottom of the sixth when a double from Hart scored two runners who had reached base in the plays before. Hart rounded the bases when a throwing error turned a tipple into a homerun.

With the 10 run rule in effect the Vikings won their first game of the year, 13-3.

After the game Vikings' coach, David Dodd, said he was pleased with his team's performance.

"Our pitcher was really strong today," Dodd said. "We had great hitting and great fielding. I am just as pleased as can be.

"I think winning like this means we can compete with anyone," he said. "Our team has a lot of spirit and spunk. Everyone played real well today."

Taking the loss with a grain of salt, Green Waves coach Mike Blackwell said his team is doing better with every practice.

"We made a lot of good plays, but we made a lot of errors too," Blackwell said. "We will do a lot better next time if they commit to working really hard."

With only a handful of returning players, Blackwell said the team was left short-handed.

"I kind of expected the game to go like it did because we have so many new players, but we will get better," he said.

The Green Waves will play two games today. One will be at 5 and the other at 8:15 p.m. at Upson Lee Field in Thomaston, Ga.

They will play again on Saturday at 10:45 a.m. and 2 p.m. also at Upson Lee Field. The Green Waves will get a chance to avenge Monday's loss to the Vikings at 4:15 p.m. Aug. 23 at home.

Items: To carry for safety, survival load. One hunter at our gathering even had a self-inflated tent for emergency situations. Not to say he may never need it, but is all that stuff really necessary?

After 30 years of hunting from Alaska to Georgia and spending an amazing amount of money, I finally have eliminated some "just-in-case" gear and curtailed my load to what I really need. Of course there are several things you must take into consideration; some of which are geographical location, the season, and what you are hunting for.

Since the subject is so vast and it would take volumes of encyclopedias to cover everything. Let's concentrate on the Fort Benning archery and gun deer season.

Many items can be used for both seasons and carried in a small daypack.

Also, this year the equipment at outdoor recreation is specifically ordered, and based on hunter and Soldier input. They have a variety of gear at excellent prices.

Back to the pack, I prefer a fleece daypack (because it is one of the quietest packs on the market) to carry my precious items. (Some even have a waterproof lining for rainy days.)

The contents include the following.

Knives
An extra knife is nice to have; both of medium size, to use for processing the animal.

Extra safety strap
An extra safety strap is one of the most important items. Quite often hunters will forget this item and climbing a stand without one could be fatal.

Spare map and compass
A spare map and compass is always a good idea and the extra map will come in handy when you lose the one in your pocket.

The Fort Benning hunting map which has hunting areas clearly defined can be purchased at Outdoor Recreation. Furthermore, you must be in an area that is open to hunt.

30 foot length of 5/50 cord
Thirty feet of 5/50 cord can be used for many different things while in the woods as Soldiers know. But its primary purpose in your pack is to hoist your weapon and gear. It is very dangerous to attempt to climb your stand carrying your gun or bow.

Emergency blanket, candle and waterproof matches
An emergency blanket, candle and matches are your true emergency gear and could save your life in a true emergency situation.

Unscented insect repellent
Unscented insect repellent should only be used when you just can't stand the bugs anymore. Despite its lack of scent to us the deer often can smell it a hundred yards or more.

Box of cateyes
Reflective tape at the head of a tack makes a cateye. They are used to mark a trail at night but can also be seen during the day.

Roll of orange marking tape
Orange marking tape can be used to mark the trail to your stand as can the cateyes.

The tape can also be used to assist in tracking an animal's blood trail. This is done using a 30 to 50 foot length of tape and moving as you locate the blood.

Often the tape will indicate the animal's general direction of movement when the trail is looking grim.

Flashlight and extra batteries
A flashlight with extra batteries will always come in handy; some hunters carry two or three especially during archery season.

Quart water
A quart of water for those all night tracking experiences

15 foot length of rope for animal drag
The 15 feet of rope is necessary if you are by yourself and your drag is farther than 150 yards.

All of these items can neatly fit in your pack and weigh between 5 to 7 pounds.

These are just a few items from the billion-dollar industry and I am sure you will find many other items to fill up your pack.

But whether experienced or beginner these items should keep your load to a minimum, your costs down, and provide everything you might need while hunting.

Or you could always risk your inflatable tent blowing up in your stand.

Cannons: Prevail in weekend game books as a forfeit, the Cannons and the Rangers still kept score. After taking a 4-0, first-inning lead, the Cannons proceeded to leave the Rangers in the dust scoring a grand total of 15 runs by game's end for a final score of 15-0.

Gawlik, however, viewed the game as an ideal way to practice, especially in the batter's box and on the mound, which was the reason for the various pitching changes.

"This is a practice for next weekend and for the fall," Gawlik said Sunday.

Saturday marks the season finale with a doubleheader against their rivals, the Bombers, starting at 1 p.m. at Spencer High School.

The game will also serve as a means to encourage people to give blood for the Columbus American Red Cross Blood Drive Saturday at the Peachtree Mall. In addition to helping fill the Red Cross' depleted blood bank, the Soldiers' Baseball Association is asking people to help out the Columbus Adult Baseball League's president, Mike Curry's son, Kyle, who is 11 months old and because of a defective liver needs blood on a regular basis. Kyle is A-positive.

The Blood Drive will be at the Peachtree Mall in a vacant business site within the mall across from KayBee Toys, all day Saturday.

Also, Gawlik has plans in the works for a Soldiers' Baseball Association team to play during the fall season in the Chattahoochee Men's Fall Baseball League as well as scrimmage on Saturdays against Georgia colleges from September through November.

There is a final registration day on Aug. 26 for the fall league at Golden Park from 10 a.m to 1 p.m. The cost is $100 — which pays for uniform top, hat, field rental of Darnell and Golden parks, umpire fees, baseballs, helmets and at least 12 games plus a double-elimination tournament — but Gawlik is planning to obtain sponsorship from local businesses to offset the cost to players. Players interested in the fall team can call Ed Gawlik at 685-4903 for more information.

Army will release cost study today

DPW, DOL get news at 1 p.m. in Infantry Hall

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

The fate of 1,077 positions at the post's Directorates of Public Works and Logistics will be released today giving employees their first chance to learn if the bid submitted by the Army will keep their jobs in civil service or if the functions will be transferred to a private contractor.

Employees will be told in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium the outcome of the Commercial Activities Study that evaluated the two organizations cost-effectiveness at 1 p.m. today.

The study began nearly three years ago when the Army, directed by the Department of Defense, started its assessment to determine the most cost-effective method of providing services. At issue is whether the government can provide the services cheaper than private industry.

"These positions being studied are just that — positions, not people," said Rich McDowell, post public affairs officer. "There are some positions that don't have people in them. They haven't been filled in years."

The 900 civilian employees who work for the two directorates provide vehicle and equipment maintenance, transportation, roads, grounds and utility support to the post.

While it is still unclear how many of these employees would be affected if the private industry's bid is accepted, Col. John Mitchell, the post's garrison commander, said if the contract does go to private industry, Fort Benning will do all it can to keep employees employed.

"We are keeping faith with our civilian work force," Mitchell said. "Either outcome will mean change for these employees and for our institution.

"We are committed to helping our workers sort through their options as we learn how changes to these organizations affect each individual," he said.

Once the bid comparison is released, unions or contractors who responded to the solicitation can appeal the decision, but must cite costing issues and reference specific noncompliance with the Office of Management and Budget Circular, A-76 before Sept. 26.

If those appeals are denied and the decision is upheld, the contract would be awarded, McDowell said.

If appeals are upheld, the decision would be reversed and the government would keep the functions, but the organization will still be smaller than it is today.

If a private firm is awarded the contract, affected employees will receive priority placement with the new contractor.

"We have demonstrated our concern for our work force and no matter which way the bid goes, we'll continue to assist them," Mitchell said.

The study stems from a Bureau of Management and Budget policy letter issued in 1955 that told government agencies to rely on the private sector for goods and services whenever proper and economical.

Since then many revisions of the letter have been drafted, the latest requiring the private contractor's bid to be at least 10

Members of the Fort Benning Military Police Special Reaction Team observe SRT candidates while they negotiate the obstacle course during the first day of SRT tryouts Tuesday.

Soldiers battle for SRT slots

Two-day test names seven new members to team

It's tough, dirty, demanding and draining, and those are the nice things they said about it.

It's a test that can quickly transform from a battery of mind-numbing grass drills that send side-splitting pain racing through a candidate's body to a small group techniques class that requires absolute focus despite the hours of intense physical exertion just completed in the hot summer sun.

Normally these tasks would be easy to handle on an individual basis.

But today is anything but normal.

Today is the first day of a selection process that hand picks the brightest, most talented military police Soldiers and prepares them for life as one of the elite — a member of the military police Special Reaction Team, known in the civilian community as SWAT.

It was shortly before 4 a.m. when SRT candidate Spc. Shelly Ring awoke to what she will soon come to know as one of the longest days in of her life.

Still trying to shake off the night's short sleep, she arrived at the military police motor pool where she, along with 14 other anxious young MPs, stood waiting and anticipating what the next two days would have in store.

From the shadows appeared a team of men and one woman.

All were trim, and all were ready to find out who of this group of 15 candidates really wanted to Schools' start prompts slowdown

Post police to crack down in school zones

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Every morning families across America send their children to school with the idea their sons and daughters will be safe.

That idea, however, may be just a hope according to a recent study by the National Highway Safety Administration that reports nearly 800 school-aged children were injured while traveling to and from school during the 1997-1998 school year.

Eighteen of the students involved in those accidents died during their commute.

"I've seen one child killed while trying to cross the street here, and I never want to witness another," said Lt. Col Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement.

The accident Kelley spoke of occurred last July when a 15-year-old Fort Benning girl was struck by a motorist on Victory Drive.

"It's tough to handle," Kelley said. "That is why the safety of our children has to be paramount."

Kelley, who spearheads the post's effort on keeping speeds slow in school zones, said the post maintains a zero tolerance on heavy-footed drivers around post schools.

"There is nothing worth the injury

Policy clarifies officer-enlisted relations

DoD restricts fraternizing between Soldiers

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Three Soldiers — two enlisted, one officer — plan to go out together on a Saturday night.

Little do they know going out together in this situation is actually a violation of the fraternization policy.

As of March 1, 1999, fraternizing between officers, to include commissioned and warrant officers, and enlisted in most nonwork-related situations is a violation.

This policy is to maintain good order and discipline, said Capt. Carla Simmons, a Combined Arms Leadership Division legal instructor.

"The fraternization policy is important, because it governs people's relationships in a unit where there are close and continuous relationships between those people," said Col. Ron Greene, Inspector General of Fort Benning. "It helps focus the energy and attention toward the common good."

"We believe in unit cohesion and fraternization, but there's a limit to everything," Simmons said.

The previous policy permitted relationships and socializing between officers and enlisted personnel as long as it didn't:

• Compromise or appear to compromise the chain-of-command authority.

• Cause actual or perceived partiality or unfairness.

• Involve or appear to involve use of rank for personal gain.

• Be exploitative in nature or give that appearance.

• Create an actual or clearly predictable adverse impact on discipline, morale and authority.

In 1998, a year after the highly-publicized case involving a B-52 bomber pilot who was court-martialed for committing adultery with an enlisted person's spouse, the Secretary of Defense William Cohen examined the fraternization policy across all the services to establish some consistency between the branches. At that time other branches prohibited the fraternization between enlisted and officers, but the Army still allowed the practice as long as it avoided those five factors.

Cohen then issued a new policy prohibiting fraternization between officers and enlisted personnel, active or reserve, which applies to all military branches.

For example, if an officer in the Army wanted to date an enlisted person in the Air Force, he couldn't because it's a violation.

"Now all the branches are on the same sheet of music," Simmons said.

Greene said there haven't been any incidents at Fort Benning regarding violation of the fraternization policy known to the Inspector General since the policy change.

The new policy covers four factors: personal relationships, which includes dating, sexual intercourse and shared living quarters; ongoing business relationships, which includes everything from Amway to Mary Kay; social and family relationships; and gambling.

Would you want to live in a country where you could not vote or hold a political office?

For women in the 1840s this was reality. Changing social conditions during the early 1800s, combined with the ideal of equality, led to the birth of the woman suffrage movement.

In 1848 a convention to discuss the social, civil and religious conditions and rights of women was held in the Wesleyan Chapel at Seneca Falls, N.Y., July 19-20. This convention was the spark that started the women's rights movement.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton and

Susan B. Anthony were known as the "Ladies of Seneca Falls."

Their purpose was to convince the American citizens, men and women, of the inequality of women's current position in the American society.

The Seneca Falls Convention of 1848 was an outgrowth of almost 20 years of female activity in social reform.

Every year thereafter women's rights conventions were held to work for political, legal and social equality.

After years of persistent lobbying, states passed property laws more favorable to women and altered divorce laws to allow women to retain custody of children.

Job opportunities started opening up to women, such as teaching positions in higher education. Women gained the right to vote in some states, beginning with Wyoming Territory in 1869.

In 1920, 72 years after universal woman suffrage was first proposed, the 19th Amendment of the Constitution was passed guaranteeing women's right to vote.

Since the adoption of the 19th Amendment, as more and more legal attitudes change, women have entered positions of leadership and responsibility in virtually every field of endeavor.

For example, today women are not only providing support for our nation's military personnel, but also are serving in key military positions throughout the country's armed forces.

The anniversary of the ratification of the 19th Amendment reminds us of our obligation to ensure that every individual has the opportunity to participate fully in the social, political, and economic life of our country.

It also underscores the importance of having the right to vote and to faithfully exercise that right, so that this nation might always be true to the ideals enshrined on our Constitution and Declaration of Independence.

Neighbor relations sometimes have bite

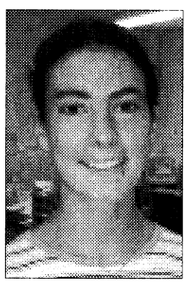
According to the U.S. Censuses of Population and Housing, New Jersey is the most densely populated state in the United States with approximately 1,042 people per square mile.

Perhaps that explains why people from New Jersey are fiercely protective of their space and property and also do not take kindly to a little neighborly advice.



I learned this lesson the hard way while I was growing up in North Jersey.

If my parents had a problem or concern involving a neighbor they would either call or go over and have a talk.

This was a mistake.

My parents decided to take on our next-door neighbors, who affectionately called each other "snake lips."

What they expected was a gracious "We're really sorry and we won't throw beer cans in your yard anymore."

Not a chance.

My dad, thinking a face-to-face discussion was a sound solution to any disagreement with a neighbor, always left their doorstep with a sense of accomplishment.

I found out later from the snake-lips' gabby children (miraculously we all got along OK), their dad used a string of expletives to describe my father after he left.

Over the years my brother and I were banned from the neighborhood carpool to school; our house was egged; and we were called names — all because of my dad's approach to neighbor negotiations.

But my dad continued to use the direct, let's-discuss-our-problems method and snake-lips kept using the profanity-behind-your-back-and-keep-annoying-you method — this went on for years.

Even after I moved away and the couple divorced, thus ending the snake-lips dynasty, the family leftovers living there still carry on the tradition.

With this type of scarring, how was I to follow protocol in my Fort Benning neighborhood?

In a Fort Benning neighborhood, you are encouraged by the community mayors to talk it out, discuss any concerns with your fellow man rather than reach for the phone and speed-dial the MPs — unless it is a serious crime, then dial-away.

For example, if a neighbor is violating the water-restriction regulations such as watering all night or watering at high noon, the first action to take as a community-conscious citizen is to politely talk to that neighbor and explain the post is under water restriction right now and they can only water during nighttime hours, from 6 to 10 p.m., on certain days of the week for no more than 30 minutes.

People with even-numbered addresses may water outside Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays; and people in odd-numbered addresses may water outside Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Several Fort Benning community mayors said talking to a neighbor works and many neighbors are OK with a polite reminder of the rules. In most cases, they didn't know about certain regulations and are happy to oblige.

Of course there are the occasional "snake-lips" and that is the time to call the mayor in your community, who will handle the situation through the proper channels.

For more information, questions about neighborhood regulations, including water restriction, call Master Sgt. Don Blackman, NCOIC of community life program, at 545-3069.

Every now and then, when I think I've gotten a little too big for my hometown roots, they reach across the miles, wrap themselves around my heart and give a little tug. That's when it's time to go home.

I took the kids home to Indiana last week. It had been way too long since I'd been there.

There was a wonderful cool breeze the day we arrived, and the cornfields bowed and waved a friendly welcome. Somewhere around Indianapolis, while the sun was still shining, the sky burst open and shed tears of joy. Indiana was glad to see us too.

I left there long ago to seek my fortune in the great big exciting world that waited for me on the other side of those cornfields. It didn't take me long to realize how fortunate I was to be surrounded by the people I love in that tiny town.

A few weeks ago a coworker and I discovered we're from the same hometown.

We joked a lot about the silly little things that make our little town unique — the things that made us want to shake the Indiana dust off our shoes in the first place. Distance and time have sure made those things a lot more appealing.

There's a great big tree stump enshrined in the middle of Highland Park. Don't ask me where it came from — it was trucked in from somewhere. Legend has it that it once served as a telephone booth.

The tree trunk stands right next to Old Ben, who was once noted to be the world's largest steer — and that's no bull. (That's an Indiana joke. I think I learned it in kindergarten.)

There's Cone Palace, which serves the best tenderloin sandwiches in the world, and Ray's Drive In, where you can still park and have a smiling waitress bring a rootbeer to your window. And Mr. Gabe still makes the very best pizzas and strombolis in the entire Midwest — believe me I've tried them all.

The greatest travesty of justice in Hoosier history was the day the school board voted to consolidate the two big hometown rivals. I was in high school and I thought it was the end of life as I knew it. Shortly thereafter I left town in a huff. No one came begging for me to return and the town survived the merger just fine.

And now here I am, 16 years later, wondering exactly what it was about that little town that made me want to leave. I can't say I really regret it. Life's been wonderful, but it sure is good to get back home every now and then.

The Army's a grand adventure. I'm grateful for all the places we've been and the people we've met along the way. But there's really no place like home. I highly recommend it.

Former POW thanks Fort Benning for support

I would like to take the time to say thank you all for the wonderful friendship and courtesy we received during the week of Aug. 8-12 when World War II veterans and their families visited the post for the unveiling of a memorial plaque in the Ranger Hall of Fame Aug. 11.

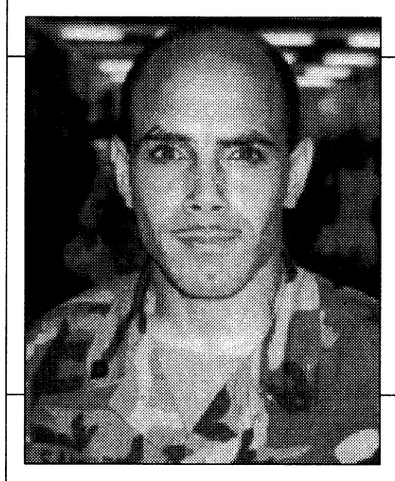
I would like to thank Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, Col. Hazen L. Baron, Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, Master Sgt. John Farley, Sgt. Justin Gingrich and, last but not least, Monica Manganaro also Elsie Jackson for their help and guidance during the past 12 months.

Without the above mentioned people and their support, I could not have accomplished the project that started to formulate in my mind during Maj. Robert Prince's induction to the Ranger Hall of Fame last year.

It was with great pleasure to have been there Aug. 11 for the unveiling of the beautiful memorial plaque for those brave men who went beyond the call of duty during WWII to infiltrate the enemy for 30 miles and release the 512 POWs held for 34 months in the Cabanatuan Prison Camp in the Philippines.

I would like to also thank all of the wives who attended the banquet Aug. 12.

It was a pleasure and an honor to have been in your company. Many thanks for all of the support.



If I am ever in your area I will surely stop by or call to say hello to all my new friends. It has been the highlight of my life to date. A dream come true.

A big thanks to all again for your support!

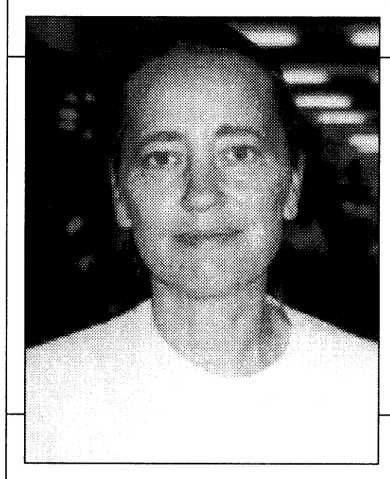
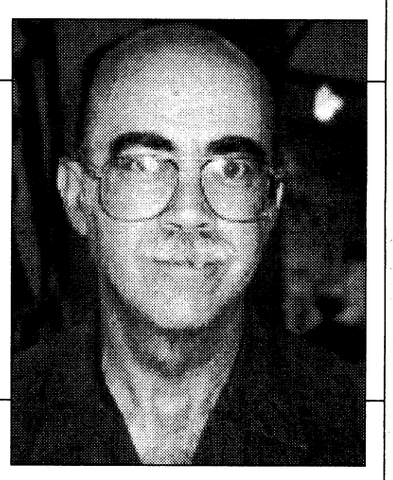
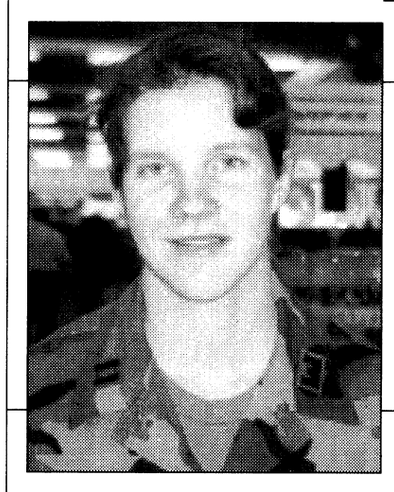
VARIOUS VOICES



Do you think women have achieved equality in today's Army and why?



Spc. Edwin Santana, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "Yes, I think they have achieved equality in the past 10 years. More women are in different fields of the military now."



Sgt. Phillip Lee, C Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Some women have and some women haven't. It's still a male dominated military all the way around, Army, Marines, Air Force and Navy."

Marion Tiemeyer, family member — "It looks pretty good for women in the Army. Things are getting better all the time."

Retired Staff Sgt. Thomas Britt, Columbus resident — "They've made tremendous steps forward since 1979 (when I retired), but no, I don't think women would ever get the same benefits that men do, not in this country, anyway."

Capt. Jen Loutzenheiser, Headquarters and Headquarters Company 317th Engineer Battalion— "Yes, I've never had any problems ... women are expected to know their job and if they do know their job then they'll be treated as equally as males."

Pvt. Patrice Spencer, B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry — "Sometimes we're looked down upon because we're female and people think we can't do the job."

Re-enactment brings Civil War to life

Group gives public chance to see past

Pfc. Mark Watson

> "The reenactment is a recruiting tool and a training aid for us too. About half of our company is made up of prior service, people from all branches of the military. And about half have never participated in a live fire."
> Sgt. 1st Class Charles Timm
> re-enactor

Deep in the heart of Dixie a company of Yankees is lurking about.

Just like in the war, which brought brother against brother and father against son, men from both sides of the Mason-Dixon Line joined the 21st Ohio Volunteer Infantry for one reason or another.

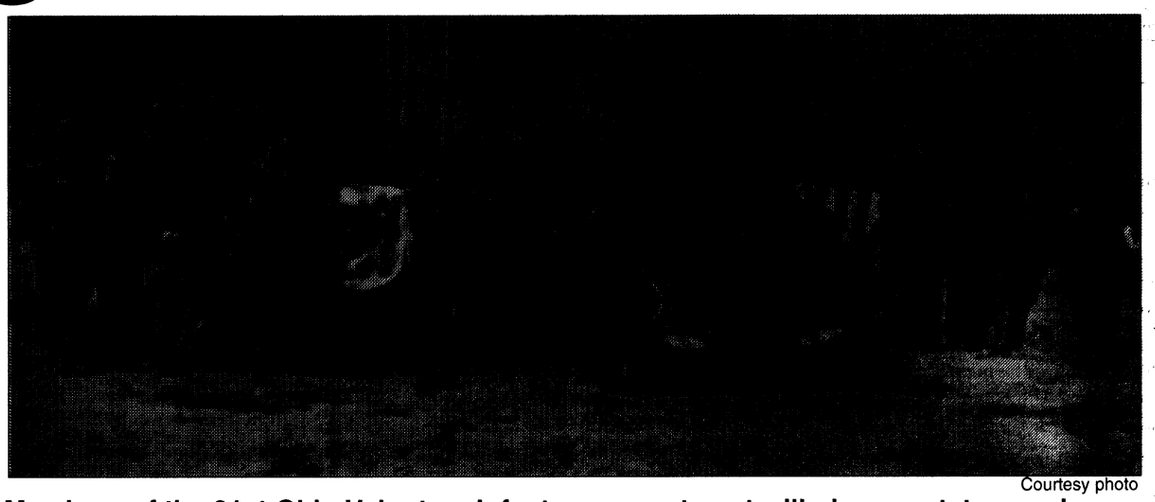
Although the men of today's 21st aren't facing the war and hardships of yesteryear, they are still using the weapons and equipment of the Civil War era.

From 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday, the public will have a chance to see the men in action at Maertens Range.

"We will have a live fire, blank firing, company and individual drill," said Sgt. 1st Class Charles Temm, who plays Pvt. or Cpl. Temm during the re-enactments. "We will have about 30 people participating in the re-enactment. There should be 20 people who will be shooting and the rest are musicians, the company commander and the first sergeant."

Starting the re-enactment will be a parade and inspection. Then there will be a drill and the beginning of the living history followed by weapons practice and the live fire.

The day will end with more living history and drill.



Sunday's schedule is the same as Saturday's.

The two-day re-enactment will host a variety of events, which would be seen in a federal camp during the war to include drilling, music and a surgeon's tent of living conditions. The men of the 21st try to make the event as authentic as possible, Temm said.

"The reenactment is a recruiting tool and a training aid for us too," Temm said. "About half of our company is made up of prior service, people from all branches of the military.

And about half have never participated in a live fire.

"They will be taught in the same way as the Soldiers from the era were taught," Temm said.

Members of the 21st Ohio Volunteer Infantry re-enactment will give spectators a chance to see a Civil War Battle from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday at Maertens Range.

Like Temm, who uses his own 1863 Springfield .58 caliber black powder rifle, the weapons and equipment used in the re-enactment are all privately owned by the men of the 21st.

"We don't use tents. Everything we use we carry on our backs," he said. "We try to keep things as authentic as possible."

The 21st was activated in the late months of 1861 and fought its first battle in early 1862.

They fought throughout the entire war and were part of the march to the sea.

They faced the Confederacy in Chickamunga, Atlanta and during the rest of the Southern Civil War campaign.

Board names new sergeants major

Eligible Soldiers need to review promotion packets by Oct. 17

> Janie Seldon
> Personnel branch chief

The deadline for the command sergeant major and sergeant major board is rapidly approaching, and post officials are encouraging Soldiers to review personnel packets now.

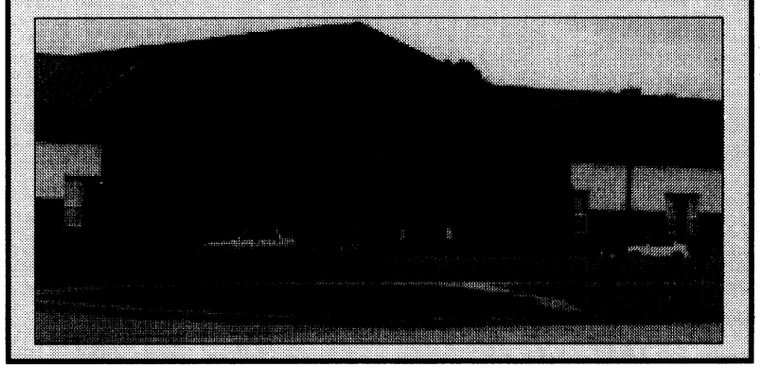
The board is Oct. 17, and all eligible packets must be reviewed by Oct. 3.

"It is necessary to review their packets to make sure they are accurate and as current as possible," Janie Seldon, chief of personnel branch, said. "It is their career and their promotion."

Soldiers who are promotable master sergeants and higher are eligible to submit packets for the board, Seldon said.

"Some people update their packet every time they get something. Other people wait until the very end," she said. "On average it only takes a half hour to review and update a packet."

People who choose not to review their packet have the possibility of jeopardizing their promotion, she said.



"I've seen one Soldier who didn't review his packet. He had his date of rank wrong and was considered ineligible for the board," said Sgt. Maj. David E. Lawson, the Adjutant General sergeant major. "It is also really important to review the Enlisted Records brief and the Official Military Personnel file to make sure they are correct."

All Soldiers eligible for the board must have a current Department of the Army photo as well as an NCO Evaluation Reports.

To request a copy of OMPFs, call DSN 221-3732.

For more information on eligibility and how to update records, call the AG Personnel and Service Division at 545-2872 or 545-8861.

Policy: Outlines relationships

Although there are exceptions to the rules, there are three elements strictly prohibited: gambling, which includes the office pool during the Superbowl; ongoing business relationships and relationships between permanent party personnel and initial entry trainees outside the training mission as well as relationships between recruiters and prospects, applicants, members of the delayed entry program or delayed training program outside the recruiting mission.

For personal relationships, the new policy gave everyone involved in a relationship prior to March 1, 1999 a one-year grace period to either get married, get out of the Army or break up before March 1.

The new policy also brought to light a situation regarding Soldiers attending Officer Candidate School. If two enlisted Soldiers were dating and one decided to go OCS, the options for the couple would be to get married, break up or the one not attending OCS would have get out of the Army before the candidate graduated from the school.

If the couple was married already prior to OCS, then there would be no violation.

Soldiers with ongoing business relationships also had the one-year grace period. Their choices include one buying the other out, closing the business or have one or both of them get out of the Army by the March 1 deadline.

Exceptions to the policy are one-time business transactions such as selling a house or car; landlord-tenant relationships and Army Reserve National Guard or U.S. Army Reserve business relationships that exist due to their civilian occupation or employment.

Social and family relationships include a variety of exceptions such as religion, unit organizations, athletics and family gatherings.

The hail and farewell is OK, but an officer going out afterward for a drink with an enlisted Soldier is not, Simmons said.

An officer who goes out with an enlisted person after work or outside a unit-, community-, athletic- or religious-based function is in violation of the policy.

Exceptions would be a situation like two brothers going out, one officer and one enlisted, or an officer maintaining a relationship with his son, who is a basic trainee.

These family members, however, are expected to maintain traditional respect and decorum that accompanies their official relationship while either is on duty or in uniform.

Although the new policy may seem to complicate relationships there is a good reason for it.

"The officer is in a position to affect a Soldier's career by writing an NCOER and every aspect of a Soldier's life. If a relationship becomes too familiar, it puts the enlisted Soldier in a position where he's vulnerable," Simmons said.

It also interferes with a subordinate's understanding of the authority of the commanding officer.

In many instances Soldiers are not aware of the policy and, although not meaning to, interfere with the chain of command are actually in violation and could face punishment.

"It's very important for the commander to step in, hear the facts and make a determination for cause of action," Simmons said.

The commander has a variety of options regarding punishment, including issuing an order for the couple to terminate their relationship, order counseling, issuing a letter of reprimand or other nonjudicial punishment.

If the fraternization violation goes beyond a minor misconduct, it is punishable by the Uniform Code of Military Justice as a violation of a lawful general regulation, and a Soldier can be brought to trial.

Trials dealing with fraternization offenses are not as clear cut as one might think depending on the situation.

The fraternization policy applies to Soldiers. When family members get involved it becomes an even grayer area of the law, Simmons said.

The fraternization policy is outlined in Army Regulation 600-20 paragraphs 4-14, 4-15 and 4-16.

Police: Work to slow speeds

of a child," Kelley said. "We always have and always will keep Fort Benning School zones safe for our kids."

That safety effort not only comes in the form of increased police patrols of the school zones during school hours, but comes with the entire support of post residents, he said.

"It is all of our jobs to keep school zones safe and accident free," he said. "We, as drivers, have the responsibility to maintain the posted speed limits and be ready to react to children who may be in the area during school hours."

Those who decide to not follow Kelley's advice could find themselves paying hefty fines.

Speeders who travel up to 10 miles an hour over the posted speed limit will face a $50 fine; up to 20 mph over, a $100 fine and those who decide to drive up to 30 mph over the posted limit will find themselves forking out $200 in fines, according to Georgia law.

Those feeling exceptionally rushed and caught driving more than 30 mph over the speed limit must appear before a federal magistrate judge, Kelley said.

While excessive speed poses a problem to school safety, Kelley said the threat of youth injury doesn't stop in the school zone. It could be anywhere on post where a school bus stops.

That is why Kelley has teamed up with local bus drivers and is asking for the assistance of post residents to report drivers who speed around stopped school buses, disregarding the buses' stop arm.

To report a motorist disregarding the buses' stop arms, Kelley suggests residents call the MP desk at 545-5222 with a description of the vehicle, a license plate number and a description of the driver.

Police will also need the location and time of the violation.

If caught, the violator could receive a $100 fine for passing the bus, he said.

Although Kelley listed the financial burden these violations place on a speeder, he was quick to dispel any ideas the fines paid for the offenses may somehow return to Fort Benning's police activity or its assigned personnel.

"By making traffic stops on these or any other offenses, we aren't trying to make Fort Benning any money or somehow fill a quota," he said. "All the revenue from the tickets goes to the U.S. Treasury Department for use as it sees fit.

"The bottom line here is the safety and welfare of our children," Kelley said. "As you drive our streets and highways this school year remember to take the time to treat the children in the same way you hope someone would treat you."

Study: Puts positions for bid

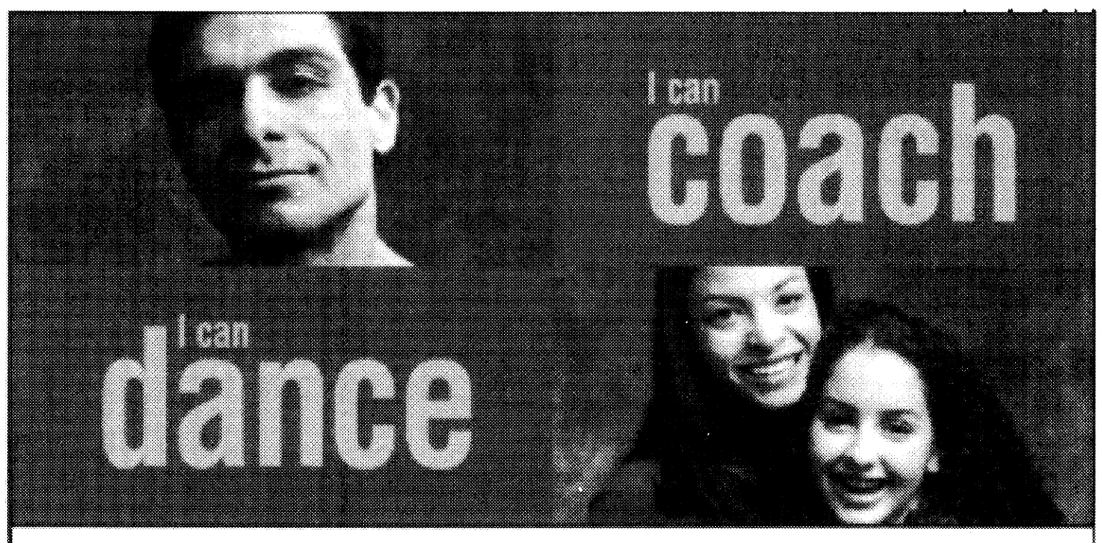
percent less than the government's before consideration.

"We are doing our best to keep those who want to stay in civil service," Mitchell said. "Employees can increase their chances of remaining in government service by being willing to relocated or by learning new skills."

In 1998 the Army reduced 11,000 positions as a result of similar studies. Only 476 of those personnel involved were separated through a reduction in force.



The cut-back issue isn't over though for Fort Benning.

The post will continue to get returns from additional A-76 studies in the near future as the Directorate of Information Management, Adjutant General and the Training Support Center are all undergoing their second year of the study.

Results of those studies should be released within the next two years, McDowell said.

"If there is a contractor "win," many of our employees will be offered jobs with the contractor," Mitchell said. "Others, who are retirement eligible, may chose to exercise that option.

"The important point to understand is that all personnel affected by the decision will have options," Mitchell said.

Patriot battalion's top officer leaves for Pentagon

School's deputy chief of staff takes new job at ITB

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Patriot Battalion changed commanders Aug. 16 when Lt. Col. Jay Chambers Jr. handed the battalion colors to Lt. Col. Don Sando.

Chambers took command of 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, to train mechanized, mortar and antitank Infantrymen two years ago.

During that time more than 12,000 mechanized and 6,000 one station unit training Soldiers were shipped to Infantry units around the world.

During the final ITB battalion change of command this summer, Col. Rusty Schorsch, ITB commander, told the audience of meeting Chambers at Fort Jackson, S.C., in a precommand course and how they shared a common problem, getting their BDU sleeves over their biceps. Schorsch said much of his weight had shifted but Chambers' hadn't.

Schorsch also remembered a discussion about the characteristics Infantry Soldiers should possess. The Infantry Soldier had to shoot better, be more physically fit, fit into a squad and he had to have the warrior spirit.

"Chambers took that picture — that vision and drove these men on the field in front of you by sheer force of will," Schorsch said.

In his farewell comments, Chambers told the Patriot Battalion they had always met and then exceeded every expectation.

"What you do is important; your selfless service directly impacts the Infantry and the United States Army.

"You put your thumbprint on every one of our Army divisions. You truly are my heroes, and I am and will forever be humbled to be able to stand in your ranks," Chambers said.

Chambers' next job is at the Pentagon for the deputy chief of staff for operations and planning. He and his wife, Caryl, have four sons, Jay, Brandon, Joshua, Zachary and a daughter, Taylor.

Lt. Col. Don Sando, Maj. James Reeves and Lt. Col. Jay Chambers troop the line during the change of command ceremony for the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

"I am proud to join the Patriot Battalion today as we prepare America's sons to stand ready as United States Infantrymen."

Sando graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1981. His most recent assignment was as deputy chief of staff of the U.S. Army Infantry Center.

He and his wife, Paula, have two children.

Basic training brigade gets new battalion commander

Commander will take position at TRADOC

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Lt. Col. Kenneth Strickland relinquished command of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, to Lt. Col. Michael Culpepper during a change of command ceremony Tuesday morning on Pomeroy Field.

Strickland will move to Training and Doctrine Command Headquarters in Fort Monroe, Va.

The ceremony marked the first battalion change of command for the BCTB.

Strickland took command of the battalion in September 1998, while it was part of the Infantry Training Brigade. Four months later, the 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., moved from the ITB to become the cornerstone battalion of the BCTB, which was activated in January 1999. Two other battalions — 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, and 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, — were activated soon after.

"Lieutenant Colonel Ken Strickland took command of his battalion and was immediately faced with the challenge of coming into the Basic Combat Training Brigade and doing a mission somewhat different from the one he had during the first months of his command," Col. Nolen Bivens, BCTB commander, said.

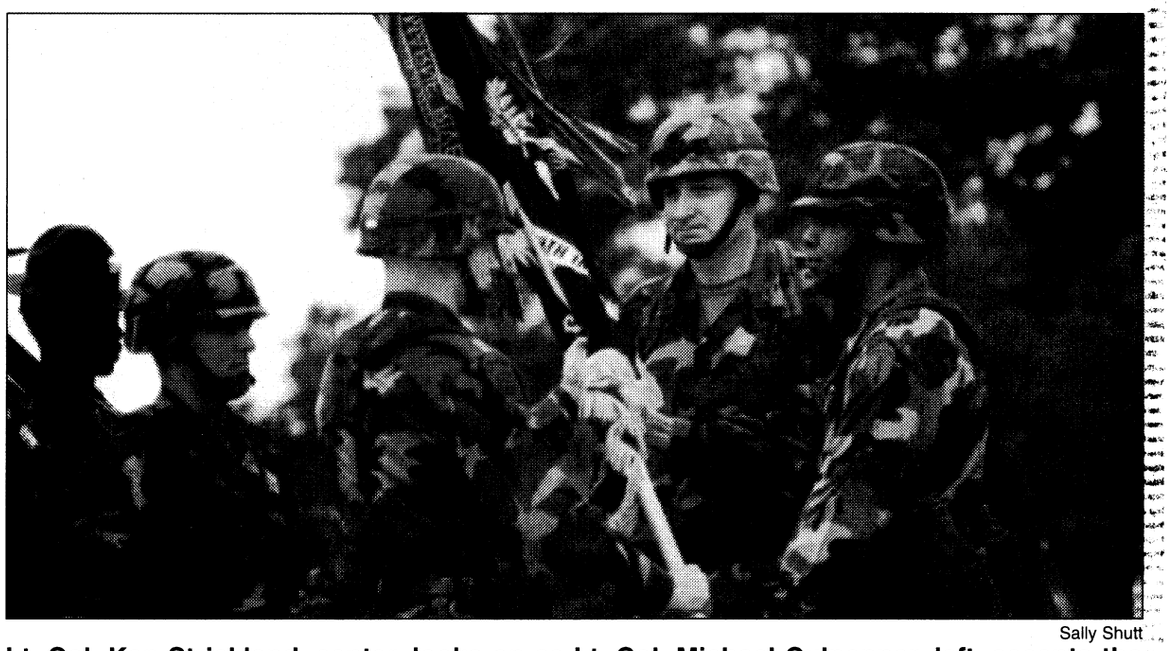
"As a result, he became the spearhead, and what I've come to call in the brigade the cornerstone of everything we've been able to do."

During Strickland's tenure as commander, the battalion trained more than 4,000 Soldiers, consistently received five-star excellence awards from the installation for its dining facility and undertook extensive renovation of its barracks, Bivens said.

"He is an innovative leader who looks for ways to improve and leverage the things around him, to get the max out of them, for the improvement of the quality of life for his Soldiers and trainees," Bivens said.

Strickland jokingly said he was being fired again — a common occurrence since he has never been able to hold a job in the Army for longer than two years.

The former commander told the battalion's officers, NCOs and Soldiers he felt privileged to be a part of their team.



"It has been an honor to be with you each and every day, as well as an honor to call you my friends," Strickland said.

"They have all performed at a level that can only be defined as truly 'squared away.' They have set the standard for Sand Hill, and it has been my honor to call myself their commander," Strickland said.

In his comments, Strickland thanked his wife, Sherri, and their son, Christopher, and daughter, Ashley, for their support.

Culpepper's most recent assignment was as the executive officer for the 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division (Light), at Fort Lewis, Wash.

The 'Rock of the Marne' battalion has a rich and colorful past,

Culpepper said.

"It has a history of excellence on the battlefield and in training, and it is very humbling to be joining the ranks of a unit with such a fine lineage," he said.

Commissioned in 1982, Culpepper graduated from Henderson State University and holds a master's degree from the Naval Postgraduate School.

Culpepper commanded C Company, 1st Battalion, 17th Infantry Regiment, 6th Infantry Division (Light), in Alaska. He served twice in the 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., the first time as a lieutenant and later as the executive officer for the 2nd Battalion, 325th Infantry Regiment, and executive officer of the 2nd Brigade.

Culpepper and his wife, Chiyuki, have a daughter, Julia.

Team: Pushes candidates to test ability under stress become members of the Fort Benning SRT.

"How many of you want to be SRT?" questioned Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins, one of the team members who would serve as the master trainer and evaluator for the two-day quest.

The candidates replied with a grunt. It was too early for anything else.

"Can you handle hours on call, long call-outs and an intense training schedule?"

Again the reply was the same from the candidates, "Hooah!"

"Let's see," Jenkins said as a smile crept onto his face. He knew nearly half of these Soldiers would not become SRT members by the end of the two day try-out.

The team only needed nine new team members, and with a group of 15, he also knew he and his 13 SRT cohorts would get an opportunity to select the best members for the elite team.

"We are only looking for the best," he said. "These are the people we are going to trust with our lives when we go on a call.

"We demand the best, and we only take the best."

The first challenge for the candidates was an Army physical fitness test, but the standards were upped.

It took a score of 250, only 50 points shy of the test's maximum score, just to pass onto the day's training.

One Soldier failed to meet the standard, and now there were only 14 candidates left to battle for one of the coveted slots on the team.

A quick run to the obstacle course would be the second test of the day for the aspiring team members.

Little did they know this would be the second, third and even fourth challenge of the day. It was muddy and as the times through the obstacles continued to tally, the Georgia heat began to rally, pushing temperatures into the high '80s.

By 11:30 a.m. another Soldier dropped out of the running. A pulled muscle pulled him out of the competition, bringing the total eligible for the team to 13.

A dip in the pool gave the candidates a chance to beat the Georgia heat, but this was no leisurely swim. It was a 200-meter swim followed by a 20-minute test of treading water and retrieving a 10-pound weight from the pool's floor.

After almost inhaling an MRE, the candidates would get a chance to prove their ability to show proficiency under even more stress, but this time it didn't require muscle, just know how.

It was a test of marksmanship on the sniper rifle and the M-4 aimed at proving the candidates ability to shoot under stress that would give the candidates their midday obstacle.

The remaining 13 candidates finished the range, but their day was far from over.

It was time to do what SRT does — enter buildings in a hostile environment.

"We are the Soldiers who are the last line of defense," said Capt. Darrell Sides, the team's officer in charge. "When everything else fails, that's when we come in."

And come in is exactly what the candidates did to a building taken over by "hostile persons."

They were supposed to follow the training they received only minutes before, but fatigue had begun to set in.

"This is where you can really tell who wants it, and who is a team player," Jenkins told the candidates. "You are tired, hungry and sore, but stay focused and you'll get through."

The day concluded with another sweep of the building. There are still 13 candidates eligible for the team at the end of the first day. Tomorrow they will find out who will wear the black BDUs and call themselves SRT.

It's another early morning for the candidates as they slowly assemble one-by-one to the same starting area they did the day before. Only today there are two less people in formation.

"You've made it through one day," Jenkins told the remaining 13. "Let's see if you can make it through another."

Another run started the day, but this time it was shorter than the PT test the candidates faced yesterday. Today it was a short jaunt to a nearby football field where team members awaited their arrival. Each corner of the field was a different exercise, and for the next two hours, the candidates would push their tired bodies to complete every last push-up.

"This is the real thing," Ring said. "I did this for a challenge, and now I am getting it."

That challenge continued to grow throughout the day as the candidates tried their hands at water operations aboard the team's two boats and practiced clearing rooms in a vacant home.

The only thing left was an interview by the team members and Sides. It all came down to this — a simple interview based on the past 32-hours of training.

"We're looking for team members," Jenkins told the candidates. "There are no individuals in SRT."

Minutes ticked by like hours as the group of 13 remaining candidates waited to find out who would be the newest members of SRT.

No one was bragging.

No one was alone.

These MP Soldiers had undergone an intense training cycle, and they knew they couldn't have done it without each other.

They were a team now, whether or not they earned the right to be a member of SRT.

Only time would tell which members of the tired team of candidates would make the final cut.

Only seven of the 13 MPs who completed the course were selected by the present members of the SRT to become the newest members of the post's most elite law enforcement entity.

They will now be part of a team that is unlike any they have ever been a part of before.

They too will wear the black BDUs with Special Reaction Team stenciled in yellow across the back.

They too will get the chance they wanted. They too are members of one of the best.

They are members of SRT, but their training has just begun.

Within the next year, they will train with the present members of the team before going to the Army SRT school at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Red Cross needs volunteers for team

Disaster action team responds to house fires

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

It takes more than a slogan to be a humanitarian.

Denise Clark, Fort Benning's assistant station manager at the American Red Cross, should know.

She's been to nine national disasters and knows first-hand what the Red Cross and its volunteers do to help others in a time of crisis.

"We're in the business of helping people," Clark said.

One particular group of the Red Cross that needs volunteers is the disaster action team. This team of local people respond to single-family fires within the community, and the Red Cross is looking to strengthen their forces in the area.

These teams, comprised of two to four people, do everything from handing out food to damage assessment.

The DAT talks with the fire department and works with the family to assess the family's immediate needs.

"Our goal is to get (the family) on a path to their own self-recovery," said Gwen Baer, emergency services director of the American Red Cross, West Central Georgia Chapter.

When a family experiences a disaster such as a home fire, the insurance company is sometimes delayed in processing a claim and providing relief. It's the DAT that gets to the scene right away to help out.

"Sometimes the insurance company cannot be there at 0300, but the Red Cross can be there at 0300," Clark said.

The Red Cross also coordinates with other local agencies such as the police and emergency management teams in order to expedite care and relief to disaster victims.

"It's a well choreographed event," Clark said.

The Red Cross provides all training for DAT volunteers and some of the basic courses include introduction to disaster services, sheltering and damage assessment.

In the case of a home fire, a beginner DAT member will receive a call from a manager about the fire, which will include information such as location, how many people and dwellings are involved and whether there are any injuries or fatalities as a result.

The Red Cross has mental health services dispatched by a DAT manager to the scene to help in trauma situations.

One thing the DAT doesn't do is get in the heat of battle.

"We're not fighting the fire, we're there backing up firefighters," Clark said. This includes giving firefighters refreshments to keep their energy up and prevent dehydration or other heat-related injuries.

"We don't expect (the team) to go into dangerous areas. They're very well protected," she said.

More importantly, no one person goes into a situation alone, everyone works as a team.

"We're always there to support each other. We're never alone — all the way up to the National Headquarters in Washington, D.C.," Clark said.

Baer said volunteers are from all walks of life, including people with disabilities, and range from teen-agers to senior citizens.

Volunteering with the Red Cross also presents career as well as Children learn lessons at home

Home schooling offers military kids stability

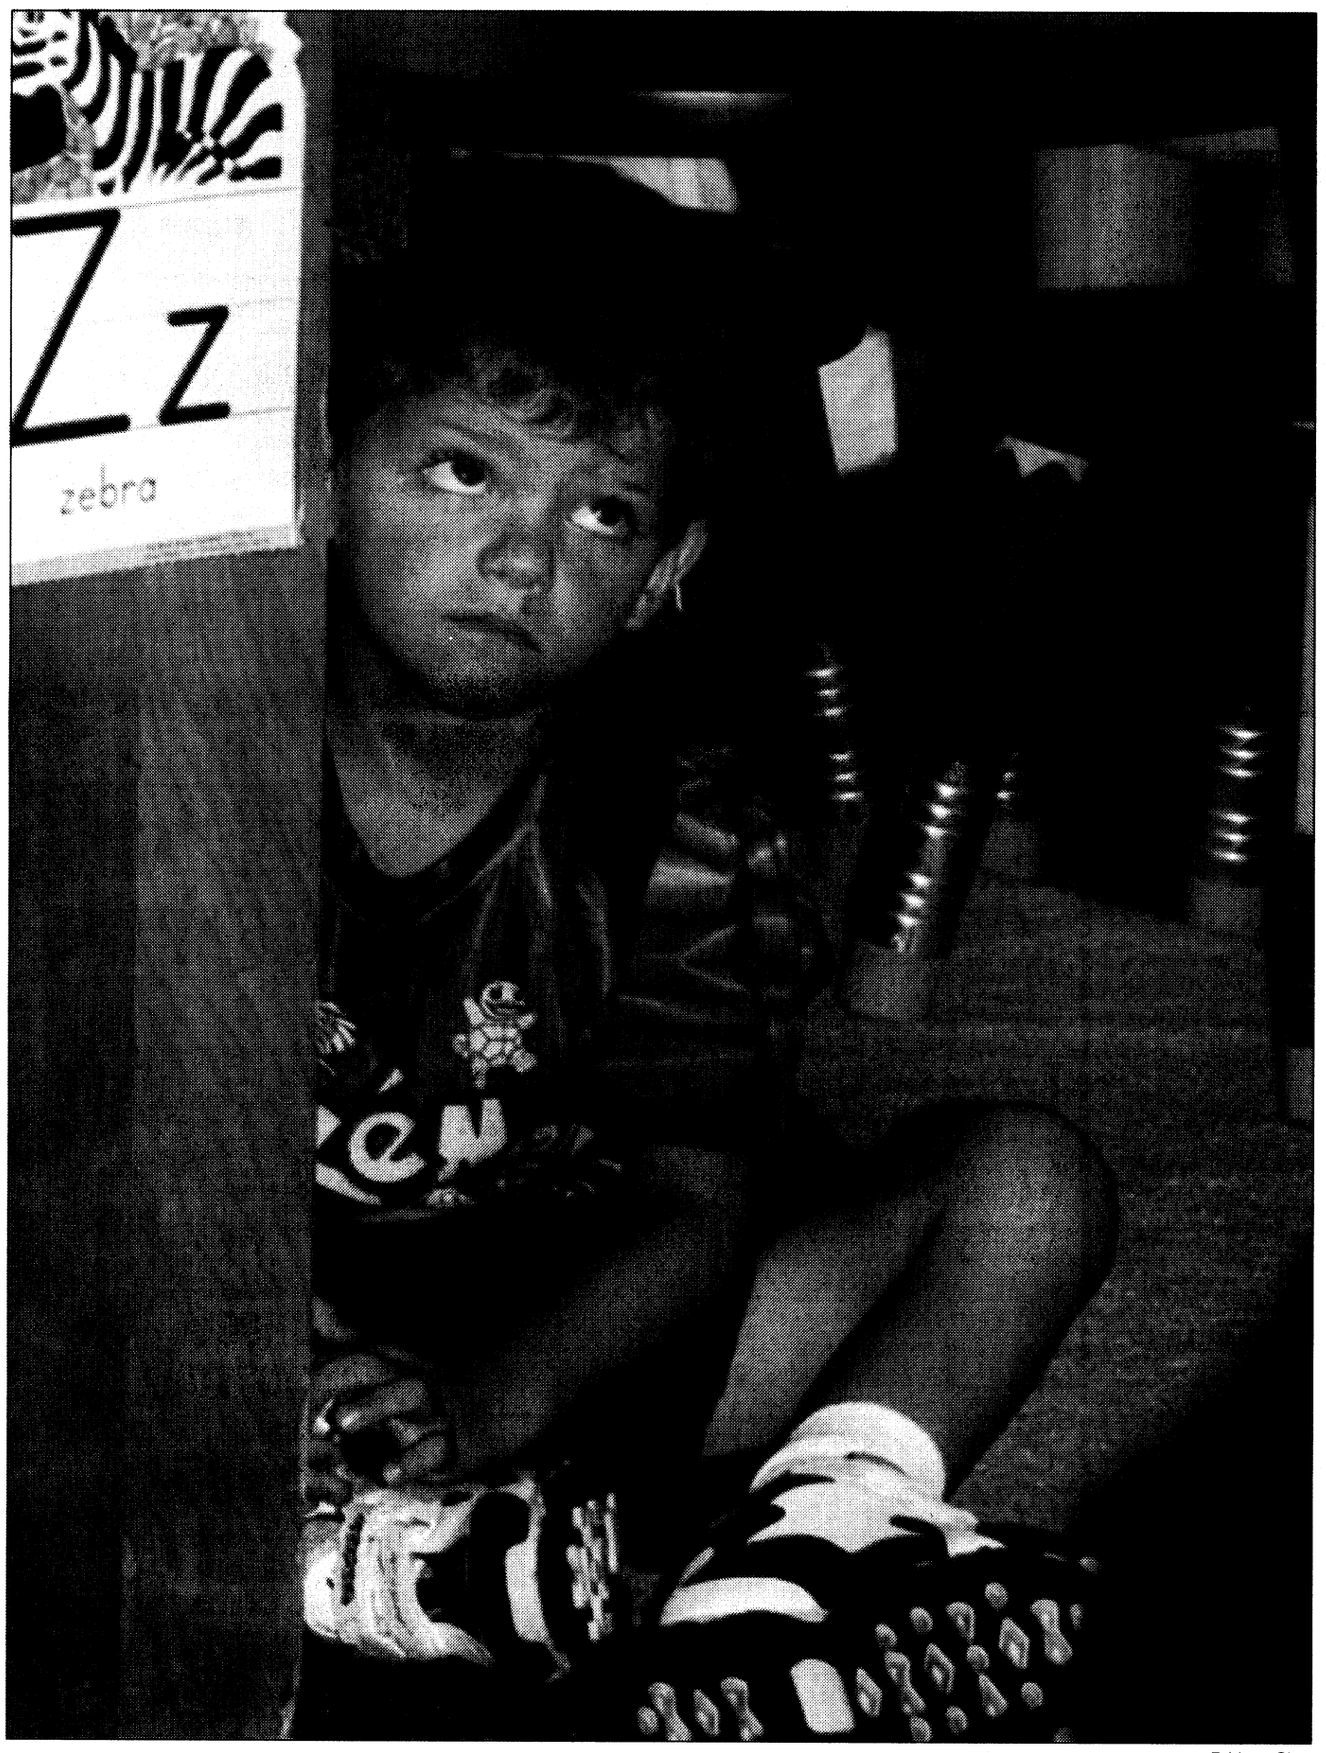
Kathi Durse is a classroom veteran. As a certified teacher for more than 10 years, she's taught everything from reading and writing to reproduction. She knows what it means to struggle with a crowded classroom and public school policies.

But these days Durse enjoys a much smaller class and a more relaxed atmosphere. Most days she brings her 13-month-old daughter to work. She occasionally has to step across a sleeping dog in the classroom, and she doesn't bat an eye if her students show up in their bare feet. That's the beauty of home schooling.



Durse's three oldest children — 9-year-old Megan, 6-year-old Matthew and 4-year-old James — are among an estimated 1.23 million American children being taught at home.

There are currently more home-schooled students nationwide than there are public school students in Wyoming, Vermont, Delaware, North and South Dakota, Alaska, Rhode Island, Montana and Hawaii — combined. In fact, America's home schoolers collectively outnumber the individual statewide public school enrollments in each of 41 states.

But home schooling is still a relatively new phenomenon in the U.S. In the early 1980s, the general public had never heard of home schooling. Today, after many hard-fought court battles, home schooling is legal in all 50 states, and almost everyone's heard about

No back-to-school blues for majority of post students

Only 173 days left in the school year, but who's counting? Certainly not Fort Benning students, who were anxious — even jubilant — to start school Aug. 17.

"Hallelujah, summer's over," said Lauren O'Neill, a sixth-grade student at Faith Middle School.

No first day jitters for O'Neill and her classmates, who were too busy enjoying the perks of middle school to experience any serious anxiety.

"It's so cool here," O'Neill said. "The lockers are the best part. I know I'll probably get lost, but it's cool anyway."

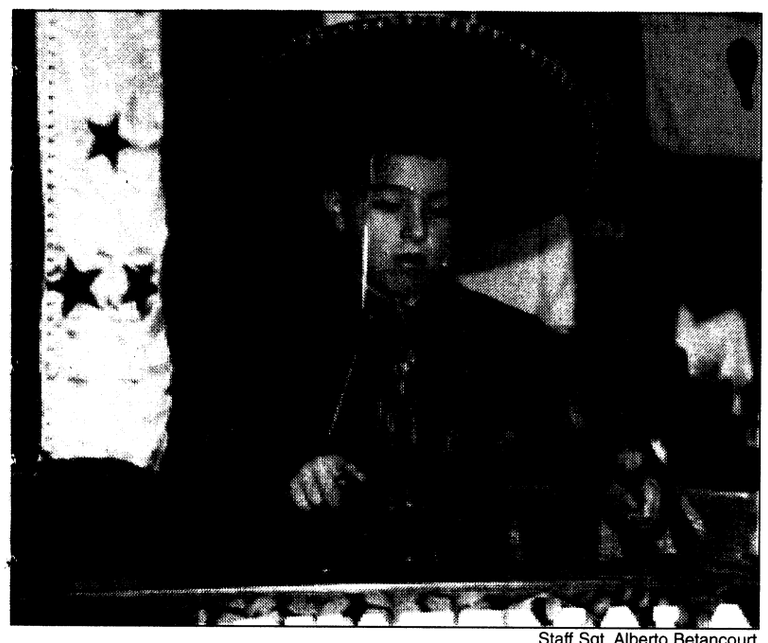
Rose Brooks, Faith's assistant principal, said the majority of students appeared to be eager to start the new school year.

"They're fired up and ready to get back to work," Brooks said. "It's going to be a great year."

Not everything was ready to work Thursday morning. Faith's new computerized scheduling program developed a few minor glitches, but all problems were worked out by the end of the day.

Brooks said the school has also adopted a few other changes.

Students will no longer depend on bells to dismiss each period. Teachers will simply tell students when to change classes, a practice Brooks believes will be less disruptive and more flexible.



Rotating schedules are a thing of the past, as are the five minute breaks between periods. Students will be given three minutes to switch classes, a move principal Dr. Tom Dignan feels will be more efficient now each grade is located primarily in one hall.

Fort Benning's elementary schools experienced few problems on the first day of school, except for minor confusion over lunchroom protocol and a few tearful goodbyes from pre-k students.

"Everything's going smoothly here. No problems," said Phyllis Parker, principal at Wilson Elementary School. "We're off to a good start and excited to be back."

Dexter Elementary students resumed classes in temporary facilities as work continues on school renovations. The media center and multi-purpose room were completed in time for school Aug. 17.

More than 3,050 students registered at Fort Benning schools.

Hundreds attend festival at Civic Center

International festival displays customs

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
U.S. Army School of the Americas

The Columbus Civic Center became a vessel for transportation around the world at the fifth annual International Festival Aug. 13.

From Central to South America, to Africa, to the Far East and back to the Pacific Islands, hundreds of people enjoyed the traditions and customs presented by each nation's representative.

"The purpose of this festival was to bring together, under one roof, the various cultures representative of our community," said Roxann Campbell, chairperson of the Mayor's Commission on Diversity.

"We were striving to redefine our responsibility to each other. Tolerance is not what we hoped to achieve. We hope that as a result of people attending this festival, they will have the desire to acknowledge, accept and respect our differences. Each of us, in our own way, is unique. When we come together as a community, we are spectacular!"

Campbell wasn't inaccurate when she said "spectacular," as more than 20 cultures, each with their own colorful uniqueness, entertained the crowd through music and displays.

Among the sharing cultures of the festival were 11 countries represented at the U.S. Army School of the Americas.

"This was a great opportunity for our students, guest instructors and family members to share with other cultures in the community during a great event like the International Festival," said Cecilia Alexander, USARSA's international military student officer. "A festival like this is great for the USARSA family. It bonds them closer to our community."

Maj. Salvador Ibarra, a Mexican student attending USARSA's Command and General Staff Officer Course, accompanied by his wife, Sandra, and two sons, Jose and Luis Alberto, represented their country with a beautiful colorful booth filled with numerous artifacts and rich history.

"This is a wonderful event," said Ibarra. "My wife and I are sharing our culture with so many people. We are also learning a whole lot about all the different cultures in this community. This was definitely worth it for my family and me."

Mayor Bobby Peters said he was proud of the diversity and the unity that exists in Columbus.

"The many cultures represented in our city provide a wonderful pool of human resources, and we want all of these great resources to be involved in the advancement of our community," he said.

Windows ME features offer advantages

Jeff Skinner
NetSystems Incorporated

I have been in the technology industry for almost nine years. One of the most commonly asked questions is, "What's the difference between the operating systems?"

Since Microsoft has just released Windows M.E. (Millennium Edition), I figured it would be a good time to explain a few of the differences between some of the previous operating systems released by Microsoft.

Windows 95, aptly named for the year in which it was released, was Microsoft's biggest leap in technology. It represented a true departure from the old DOS platform, which had powered PCs almost since they began shipping in mass quantities.

Windows 95 marked the inception of Plug-n-Play Technology for the PC platform. It was a 32bit operating system (better performance) and supported long file names. (In M.S.DOS your file names were limited to 8 characters, which often resulted in cryptic, hard to remember, file names.)

It offered feature rich multimedia, easy application installation and provided an uninstall wizard. It also provided backwards compatibility for "most" older DOS programs and Windows 3.1 Programs.

Finally after being delayed for over a year, Windows 98 was released. The biggest advance in Windows 98 was the 32-bit file system.

This allowed users to make better use of their hard drive space. It also marked the beginning of tighter integration of Internet Explorer and the Windows Operating System, a feature which was ironic since Bill Gates had stated a few years earlier that the "Internet was a fad that provided nothing more than a little entertainment for children and had no real content."

It provided multitasking (although not symmetrical multiprocessing). Users could run multiple programs simultaneously, and once again Microsoft raised the bar for graphics and multimedia with Direct X Technology.

Direct X allowed the software and operating system to directly interact with the video and audio devices, which gave them the ability to pump power into those peripherals.

This gave birth to more 3D audio and video games.

Not to be caught resting on its laurels, Microsoft Introduced Windows ME, which is so far the best of the operating systems targeted for the home market.

It not only integrates the web, it also accents the current trend in the Internet which is to mesh TV and the WEB into a single medium of information and entertainment.

With 25 percent of the public using high-speed connections to the Internet, sites with streaming media are popping up everywhere. ME capitalizes on this trend with a new piece of technology called Windows Movie Maker.

This technology allows people to easily create, edit, and share movies over the Internet using content from sources such as camcorders, videotape, and digital still cameras.

Users can view this entertainment with Media Player 7, which allows them to download favorite music from the Internet or record music from CDs they already own.

The user can create custom play lists, transfer music to portable devices, and listen to Internet radio stations.

It includes the next generation of imaging device support. It lets users obtain pictures from cameras and scanners, and perform simple operations on those pictures without additional software.

The System Restore Utility allows people to get their computer exactly the way they want it and to back it up. This eliminates some of the need for expensive technicians who specialize in fixing windows.

The System File Protection protects important system files by disabling the ability to accidentally delete them. This feature allows parents to sleep better at night knowing they no longer have to fear that their child will delete important system files while they were playing on the computer.

Users can remain up-to-date with the new and improved Windows Update Utility. Smart Menus eliminate clutter on the desktop and file menus by only displaying those programs which one accesses on a regular basis and hiding the programs that were rarely used.

Windows ME has built-in home networking so users can share the Internet using a single Internet connection in addition to sharing files and printers.

Best of all for those who are running Windows 98 SE, it only costs $59.95 for the new version. Those people whom have not yet purchased Windows 98 must pay $109.95.

It is my opinion that if given the opportunity to purchase a new PC, I would make sure it had Windows Millennium Edition installed on it, or at least has a coupon that allows you to get the free upgrade.

If you have a computer that is less than a year old, it would be worth looking into upgrading.

Go to Microsoft's site and be sure all of your hardware is compatible. www.microsoft.com/hcl.

If you have an older PC I would do triple checks before purchasing an upgrade to be sure your system is compatible.

Linux is getting lots of play these days, and there are also the other MS operating systems that are targeted for the work place: NT 4.0 workstation, NT 4.0 Server, Enterprise Server, Windows 2000 Workstation, Windows 2000 Server, and Advanced Server.

I will do an overview of the differences in those in future articles.

Red Cross: Operates 24-7 to help disaster victims worldwide character-building opportunities.

Both Baer and Clark started with the Red Cross as volunteers and now have paid positions.

The Red Cross even sent Clark back to school to the University of California, Berkley, for a degree in disaster planning management.

Although the volunteers are the foundation for the Red Cross, Baer said the support from their families is also important.

"The volunteer base would never be as large as it is (without family support)," she said. "Sometimes you have 24 hours to get everything in order, and you're gone for three weeks."

Clark recalls when she was called to Florida to help out after Hurricane Andrew hit in 1992, and because of the short notice, she was unable to purchase her daughter back-to-school clothes. Rather than begrudging her mother because she had to wear summer clothes to school, she understood what her mother was doing was important and empathized with the people in Florida who didn't even have a school to go to at the time.

"I was so proud of her," Clark said.

Although the Red Cross operates on a local level, this organization spans farther than the reaches of the local community with agencies worldwide.

"It takes everyone's assistance to manage a disaster and help people," Clark said. "We're there from the beginning, and we're there at the end."

Baer said Red Cross volunteers are still in Oklahoma City helping with long-term needs such as rebuilding, physical rehabilitation and emotional counseling. "We're there until the last need is met," she said.

"They're still supported by Red Cross 24-hours a day, seven days a week," Clark said.

The Red Cross' newest project is its involvement with the school violence drills. "Unfortunately we have to get involved in something like that," Baer said.

The Red Cross' mission is to prevent, prepare and respond to disasters. There are several pamphlets available at the Red Cross, Building 2626 in Soldiers' Plaza, that help families put together a disaster supply kit or design a family disaster plan.

For more information about the disaster action team or to volunteer, call Fort Benning Red Cross station at 545-5194 or Columbus Red Cross station at 323-5614.

Students: Learn academics while at home

the trend toward home-based education.

Durse and her husband Scott, a family practice physician at Martin Army Community Hospital, decided to home school nearly two years ago after adopting baby Sarah.

"The more we talked about it the more we became excited about home schooling," Durse said. "After the adoption we knew we couldn't afford to put them all in a private school, and they wanted to be home with Sarah, so this was the most logical solution."

The most logical, but not always the most convenient.

Durse admits teaching three youngsters at home, with a toddler in tow, presents unique challenges. She often misses the adult conversation and socialization she enjoyed as a public school teacher, and planning and supervising lessons for three children in different grades leaves little time for housework and extracurricular activities.

"Organization is probably my greatest challenge. At first, having taught in a traditional school environment, I fought the idea that home school doesn't always just have to be school at home," she said. "It can't be as structured, and with a newborn it was definitely unpredictable."

Like most home schoolers, the Durses find home instruction is a joint effort, though typically Durse serves as the primary teacher. Scott, who calls home schooling a 'labor of love,' tackles much of the grocery shopping, helps with lessons in the evenings, assists with house work and makes sure she has the opportunity to visit with her adult friends.

"When we first started with Megan, I found out that books and curriculum are only a small part of it," Durse said. "I battled with the question of socialization and worried that Megan was missing out on something."

Time and experience relieved Durse and her husband of any nagging doubts.

The children are active in church activities and play soccer on a city league in Columbus.

They meet with other home school families regularly for educational and recreational activities such as skating and bowling.

"What we're finding is these kids can socialize better with children of all ages, and they comfortably communicate with adults because they're interacting with all ages in their homes and outside activities," Durse said.

The unpredictability that once frustrated Durse is now the flexibility she says makes home schooling 'do-able' for her family.

"When we were studying early American history, we took the kids to Jamestown for a visit," she said. "What a wonderful opportunity for them to see first hand the things they've learned in school. It just works for us. We've learned to turn every opportunity into a learning experience."

Durse said she and her husband will continue to home school on a year-by-year basis.

They haven't ruled out other alternatives entirely.

"I know some home schoolers who believe it's the only way," she said. "I'm just happy we have a choice. There are wonderful public and private schools out there, but for now we're loving it. They're only young for a season. They're a gift from God, and while they're young and they need us, we want to be here for them, instructing them in our faith and raising them to be all God wants them to be."

Like Durse, Fort Benning residents Carol and Tim Cummings center their home school around their faith.

Georgia state law requires home schoolers to file a letter of intent with the local school board and submit monthly attendance records.

The Cummings family is one of three families registered with the Fort Benning School System.

Cummings instructs her children in the subjects required by state law — reading, language arts, math, social studies and science. And like many home schoolers, she's elected to incorporate Bible lessons and music into her daily routine.

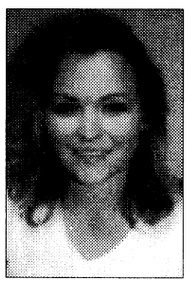
She draws from various sources for lesson plans.

Unlike Durse, Cummings is not a certified teacher, a fact she believes has no bearing on her children's education. A recent study conducted by Dr. Brian Ray, president of the National Home Education Research Institute, supports her claim.

The study concludes home schooled children of noncertified parents score as well as children of certified teachers, and statistically better than the average public school student on national standardized tests. Georgia state law requires home schoolers to take such tests every three years, starting in the third grade.

But all the proof the Cummings family needs is evident in their own children's performances. At 8 years old, Stephen is reading fluently and spends much of his school day studying independently. Five-year-old Elizabeth is doing first-grade work, and 3-year-old David is already showing a penchant for math.

"I wouldn't want to stay at school all day long," Stephen said. "I get my work done in about four or five hours. Then after lunch I have free time to swim or play."



Carol said Stephen would have attended five different schools if they hadn't opted to teach him at home.

"Home schooling offers military families the added benefit of stability," she said. "We don't have to interrupt their education every time we move, and if I want to go visit my family when my husband is away, I just pack up our school work and go."

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

Composting is the breaking down of organic materials into a loamy substance.

This process happens in nature but is replicated to produce garden compost.

There are two essential ingredients of composting. Nitrogenous and carbonaceous sources. Simply put, these are materials either rich in nitrogen or rich in carbon.

Sources of nitrogen that are readily available include; manure, grass clippings and vegetable scraps.

There are stronger sources of nitrogen available but must be purchased and are not easy to obtain. They include dried blood, fish emulsion and fish meal.

Sources of carbon that are readily available include: dried leaves, shredded newspaper, brown grocery bags and straw. With the availability of carbon sources there is rarely a need to purchase this source.

When mixed together along with dirt, these materials begin to break down.

The decomposition occurs from micro-organisms in the dirt. The decomposing process needs oxygen to be effective.

The organisms performing the decomposing need oxygen to survive.

The energy released from the decomposing process is emitted in the form of heat. The heat of a pile is a good indicator of how well the decomposition is occurring.

Often referred to as a "hot pile," a successful compost pile will be reaching temperatures between 140 and 160 degrees.

The pile also needs moisture. The moisture encourages the growth of more microorganisms that perform the decomposing. The more organisms there are the quicker the break down will occur.

In nature all of this occurs on the forest floor. Animal droppings and vegetation mix to form the loamy surface of the soil found there. Man has been able to replicate this at a faster rate.

Open house welcomes families to new year

Teachers, students ready for first day

Vicki Rogers
Dexter Elementary School

The eve of the first day of school has always held a flavor of excitement for me, and this year was no exception.

With thermometers soaring into the hundreds, parents and students poured into Dexter's portable village for Open House Aug. 16. And, what did they find awaiting them?

Smiling faces, lots of hugs, and colorful, inviting classrooms, welcoming them to 2000-2001 school year.

"Older students were hurrying to read the class lists and find out who their teacher would be," said parent Kyle Straits, "while shy little ones reluctantly held back, with a look on their faces that said I'm not sure about this — maybe you should go first, Mom and Dad!"

There was no reluctance, however, on the part of Josh and Tyler Straits because they know all about the process.

After all, older brother Josh has done this for five consecutive years at Dexter School.

"We can't imagine being anywhere else but Dexter. This is home for us!" Straits said.

The Eagle PTO braved the Georgia heat and humidity to welcome new families and greet returning ones.

Enthusiastic board members set up a welcome center under a striped tent, offering lemonade, signing up volunteers for upcoming events, and giving directions to teachers' classrooms via the colorful "sidewalk" street signs placed around the school.

And inside the brightly decorated classrooms, it was apparent that children are what these teachers are about.

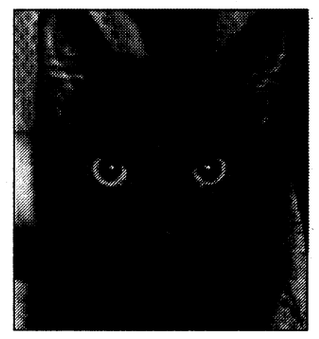
Teachers oriented their students and parents to a new grade level, new classroom, and new curriculum — all designed to increase student achievement and teach our children to be critical thinkers and problem solvers.

James Bezner

Students walk around Dexter Elementary School during the open house. "I really, really am ready to come back to school," said Anna Bell. "And I am so excited."

It was indeed an afternoon filled with warmth and love.

For nothing does a principal's heart more good than seeing the eager, bright smiles of children from his school ready to kick off a brand new school year.



And I wonder why I can't sleep the night before school starts!

Cafeteria ready for lunch bell

Construction continues into February

Dexter Elementary School

Students arrived at Dexter on the first day of school to discover a new multipurpose room, frequently referred to as the cafetorium.

"The contractor worked fast and furiously to complete the renovation of the multipurpose room, the Library Media Center, and the computer and discourse labs after the students left for the summer break," said Vicki Rogers, Dexter principal.

"This task involved quite a few structural changes such as the addition of walls, cutting new door openings, and creating an additional classroom by the start of school."

A black tile stage for musicals and other performances and a uniquely designed tile floor with red and blue accents, were among the many surprises.

Other additions include a PE office and equipment room for the school's PE teacher Pam Koon, and the relocation of the cafeteria serving line in the kitchen.

"I love the new floor!" said Verdell Prather who works in the cafeteria. "The new light fixtures make the cafeteria seem much lighter and brighter."

"And I have a real office and equipment room," Koon said with a smile, as she and some of her students passed by laden with hula hoops, jump ropes, aerobic steps.

"It's the day before school starts, but these students are anxious to help me get set up for tomorrow," Koon said, as she directed another group of students into the equipment room.

The new library media center opens this week, along with the computer lab and discourse lab.

Roger Ingram, the media specialist, has been working diligently to have the library ready to open this week.

"We've made a lot of progress unpacking," Ingram said. "It's a really neat environment. I think the teachers, students, and parents are going to like it.

Leader follows Jesus' example, shows the way

Chaplain (Capt.) Dave Baum
Ranger Training Brigade

reflections

Recently I attended a change of command ceremony for a company in the 4th Ranger Training Battalion. The event included the passing of the guidon, flowers for the loved ones and a finger-food reception.

The high-ranking officers had seats reserved, the civilians sat in the shade under a tent, and the dirty uniformed Ranger students were kept away from the starched staff officers. Everything was done exactly like predicted, to standard, and in accordance with the traditions of the Army.

After the ceremony and away from the glitz and glamour that follow the senior officers like bad smells clinging to Ranger students, the NCOs of the company with great sincerity gave a couple of gifts to their commander.

Since I was only there because they needed someone to take a group picture I felt like I was an uninvited stranger at an important family gathering.

It has been a while since I witnessed the level of respect they showed their former commander. Their words made it clear they were glad they had served with him.

Those men believed their former leader was competent. He knew the art of war and was skilled at leading men.

Those men also respected his mental and physical toughness. He had endured long days with them and shouldered more than his fair share of the demanding physical tasks.

He was an example for others to follow by living in a way that encouraged men to follow a creed that acknowledges that character and integrity are won by courage and commitment.

Their leader led the way in emphasizing that a failure to live the Ranger creed might cost lives someday.

That commander reminded me of Jesus.

Jesus is a powerful leader worthy of our respect. At times thousands of people followed him in hope that he would meet their need to know God and find peace in this broken world.

When he was intensely angry over the misuse of religion in his day whole crowds were completely intimated by his command presence.

The Bible says that the next time we see him he will lead a great army to a victory over evil here on this earth.

The creed Jesus offers is a simple one and can be summarized as follows,

"We love because he first loved us." Jesus shed blood on the cross to free us from enslavement to sin and we can now love as he loved us.

Instead of a framed guidon like we give at ceremonies we honor our greatest leader, Jesus, by treating others as he has treated us.

Many suffer with depression

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Chaplain Family Life Training Program

Emotional depression is probably the most common symptom in our country today. It has been called the social disease of our times.

One out of eight Americans can be expected to require treatment for depression in his or her lifetime.

At some time in our lives depression affects each of us.

No one is immune, not even the religious or godly. Jewish and Greek writers easily described the symptoms of depression and referred to it as melancholia.

Depression affects everyone — both sexes, people of all ages, the rich and the poor. People who are successful, people who are promoted and people who are in the spotlight are not protected from the possibility of depression.

In fact when depression hits, the whole world seems to know about it.

People who are most successful may be hardest hit by the effects of depression when it does come.

When a person is depressed he feels hopelessness, despair, sadness, gloom and apathy.

He loses perspective on life and work. There is a loss of self-esteem and a withdrawal from friendships.

People with depression seek to escape from problems and they have difficulty in handling their feelings.

In some cases depression is the healthiest response to what a person is experiencing in his life. Depression is a form of coping with difficult situations. Successful treatment is available for depression if people are willing to receive it.

If you are experiencing depression, free counseling is available to help improve your outlook on life.

For more information on depression, call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or email me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Bombers, Cannons play final game of summer season

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

In the immortal words of Yogi Berra, "It ain't over, 'til it's over."

It was over for the Bombers, however, after they let the lead slip away in the last innings of Saturday's game at Spencer High School, which gave the Cannons a 7-4 victory.

"We had good defense until the last inning," said Eric Hare, student detachment, who was the acting Bombers' coach.

The score see-sawed throughout the game — until the sixth inning.

The Cannons took an early 1-0 lead in the bottom of the first when Chris Folk, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, singled followed by Chris Allen, B Co., 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., who hit a high line drive over the second baseman's head to drive Folk home.

The Bombers countered at the top of the second. Chuck McGarry, A Co., 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt., hit a sharp grounder that slipped by the third baseman and landed McGarry on second. Two walks later, the bases were loaded and Jose Manzano, Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 3rd Bde., 3rd Inf. Div., smashed a single to score two and put the Bombers ahead 2-1.

Bombers' pitcher James Stephenson, a 15-year-old family member playing with his father's permission, kept the Cannons at bay striking out two in the bottom of the second.

At the top of the third, it looked as if the Bombers were going to run away with the win, scoring two more on Cannon errors. With two outs and men on second and third, a grounder to the pitcher should have ended the inning, but the first baseman dropped the ball on the play, which gave the Bombers another run and men were on first and third. Derrick Denny, student detachment, followed up with a single to score one more and gave the Bombers a 4-1 lead.

As the Bombers' offense gained momentum, its defense bobbled a bit at the bottom of the third. Walter Edwards, C Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., replaced Stephenson, pitched to three batters — one for a ground out and then two walks — and gave up the ball to McGarry who closed the game.

McGarry walked the next batter, which put the Bombers in dangerous territory — bases loaded and one out.

But the Cannons choked as Allen lined out to the first baseman, who then stepped on the bag for a double play and the Bombers were out of the inning.

"Mental errors are killing us right now," said Cannons' coach Ed Gawlik, 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt.

Not for long.

Cannons' pitcher Steve Bielak, a family member, took control from the mound. Bielak, who was playing catch-up with the count in the early innings, was now putting the batters on the defensive. He retired the Bombers 1-2-3.

"It's important for me to have a nice rhythm. I am very much a rhythm pitcher," Bielak said.

He said in the early innings, before he was able to settle, his pitches were high, especially the curveball, which resulted in many of the Bombers' back-to-back hits.

"After finding my rhythm a little bit I felt like I controlled my curveball," he said.

Cannons' catcher Allan Preizer, 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt., agreed Beilak's fastball was lower and his curveball more controlled for the last half of the game.

Bielak's new-found groove on the mound determined how the last half of the game played for both teams.

The Cannons closed in on the Bombers' lead at the bottom of the fourth. With two men on, a hit by family member Mike Young, dropped in shallow left-center field

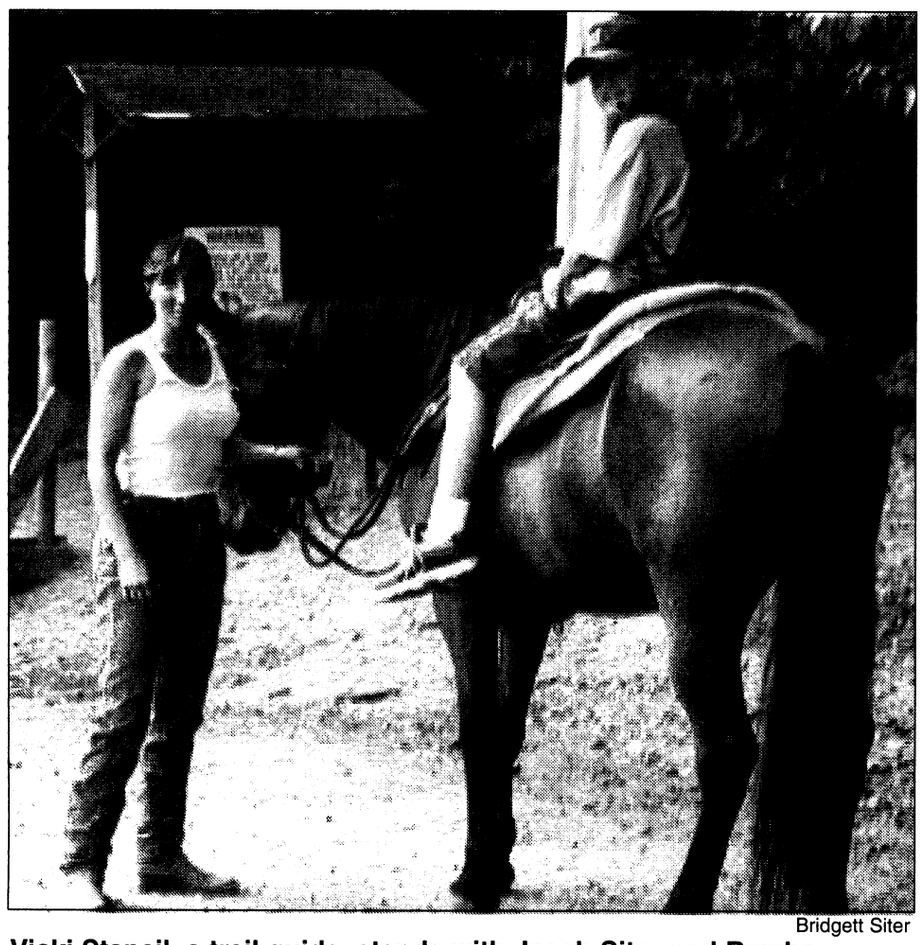
Rangers beat Avengers

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

An exceptionally tight defense and superb hitting led the Rangers to victory over the Avengers in the post softball tournament, 13-5.

Although the Avengers, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, put up a good fight, it was the teamwork which won the game for B Co., 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt.

The game started off with the Avengers' third baseman Andy Easton hitting a hard line drive along the third base line only for the Ranger's third baseman, Tony Ferrioli, to make a diving catch.



Avengers' short stop Brian Smith reached second and first baseman, Durvin Smith followed with a single.

Smith was driven home by Guadalupe Gonzales when he hit a sacrifice fly to deep right-center field.

The inning ended when right fielder Michael Fisher hit the ball to

Pine Mountain horse trails lead family on scenic adventure

Horse rides can be educational fun for kids of all ages

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Before Saturday, the sum total of all my equestrian knowledge could be scribbled on a matchbook cover — with plenty of space left over. Everything I knew I learned watching Mr. Ed reruns.

Of course I knew the correct way to mount — hold on to the helm and swing your right leg over the starboard side. Wait, maybe that's boating terminology. I used to watch Gilligan's Island too.

Anyway, it had been five years since I last set foot — er, tail — on a horse. And after one too many Survivor episodes I was ready for a real challenge, something outdoorsy and physical — but not involving alfresco dining and rats on skewers. That's just not my taste, if you'll pardon the pun.

When my sons were younger, and we were on a very limited budget, we often enjoyed half-hour trail rides, for lack of a better term, around sandy, sun-scorched horse farms in Florida.

Still on a limited budget, but willing to sacrifice for the occasion, we treated ourselves to a two-hour trail ride at Roosevelt State Park in Pine Mountain, Ga. We opted for the Mountain Lake Trail Ride, one of 20 trails to choose from, and for $50 each, it was the best riding experience I have ever had — limited though that may be.

At 13, Thomas has more cowboy experience than I. Jacob has less. Maybe that's why our trail guide, Nelda Parkel, a real life rodeo-er and horse racer — and the Roosevelt Stables manager, put Jacob on the first horse, a 7-year-old gelding named Rambo, who never quite lived up to his name.

Rambo plodded along like an old work mule, which was exactly what I wanted to see my 11-year-old riding. But what he lacked in aggressiveness, he made up for in personality. Every time Jacob tugged on his rein, Rambo dropped a little smelly present on the trail. Pretty funny horse, unless you happened to be riding directly behind him, which I was. I thought Rambo might have been more aptly named Nugget, which was incidentally, my horse's name.

Nugget was a beautiful Tennessee Walker like the others. He was perfect. It didn't take me long to get the hang of riding again. It's a lot like riding a bike, literally. Lean forward up hill, and lean back with your feet out going down hill — just like coasting on a bike. Gently pull the reins to the right or left to turn. Too easy.

Thomas brought up the rear on Chief, a gorgeous sable gelding with a white stripe running down the length of his face. When we weren't paying attention, Thomas would hang back long enough to put some distance between us. Then he'd break into a trot till he caught up with the rest of us. I guess he was looking for a bit more excitement.

As for me, I found the trail quite exciting enough, thank you very much. We went up steep hills and down steep hills, through pine forest and around beautiful Lake Franklin and a huge ravine, constantly changing scenery. It was a veritable horse-lovers heaven and the perfect place for a novice cowgirl like me.

The brochure called it "scenic." I found it incredibly beautiful, and surprisingly comfortable. Though the temperature edged toward 100, there was a constant cool breeze.

We got an extra bang for our buck — a painless lesson in ecology and earth science as Nelda offered informative tidbits about

Hunters bring home bacon

Staff Sgt. Carlie Bridgers
Ranger Training Brigade

"Long, long ago, a big ol' truck carrying wild Russian boar turned over close to Fort Benning."

I hear this from old timers when I ask how Russian boar got to the Fort Benning area.

Whatever the story, they're here ravaging the river and swamp bottoms. I consider the pigs a threat to the ecological balance of this area. They root through the ground like a garden tiller, eating everything in their path. They need to be hunted to control the population.

The wild boars are nomadic animals that don't really have a set pattern. They can be found in any swampy area, and there are thousands around the Chattahoochee River.

Boars have a year-round breeding cycle, and multiply quickly. I feel if they are not controlled, they will eat the resources needed by deer and other animals indigenous to this area.

I hunt wild boar with a buddy of mine, Bill Yates. He and I have a pretty good "honey hole," which we hunt regularly outside of deer season.

Pigs can be hunted by tree stand or by ground. They have a super sense of smell, but you can also usually smell them coming a mile away.

But covering the human scent is key when hunting them. Pig hunting is fun, and it is good practice for deer season.

When you hunt pig, you really don't have to concentrate a lot on your camouflage pattern. Pigs can't see well enough to tell whether you are wearing a regular woodland, or Realtree camouflage.

My buddy and I usually hunt boar with our bow and arrow. We usually hunt together so that one of us can film the other with the old home video camera.

I really only go with him for back-up when he misses the shot!

We went hunting the other day, got into the woods just before dawn, and parked about 1,000 meters away. As we walked down our normal ridgeline to the "Bottom of the Boar" we heard pig close to our stand.

Stalking slowly, we figured that we could get close enough to take a shot. As we got closer, you could smell the stench from the herd. Normally, if you were deer hunting, you wouldn't want to spook the animal, because it would not return. That's not the case with the boar! They have a very short memory. We knew that if we spooked them that they would come back to their favorite mudhole sooner or later. Well anyway, you guessed it. We weren't quiet enough to sneak up on them, and they scurried away into the thick swampy vegetation. That wasn't going to ruin the hunt — they'd be back later.

We climbed up into our stands, which were on adjacent trees about three meters away from each other. Trees are hard to come by in the swampy areas of Fort Benning, so we had to find a tree big enough to support our body weight and equipment. If you could imagine a black mudhole the size of a small pond with two trees at the edge of it, you're following the story.

We sat right on the rim of their wallowing hole, which is nothing more than a hole they use to cool off and to keep insects off of them. Sitting quietly for about an hour, we heard boar grunting in front of us. There was only one place on their mind, and I was sitting right in it! I had the video camera that morning, so I turned it on and got it ready for action.

The herd gathered at the edge of the hole and started rooting.

There were two black and one almost reddish brown. The red one was the biggest of the herd, about 150 pounds. He was standing closest to us.

I didn't see Bill shoot, but the sound of a bow in the quiet woods is almost as loud as a gun. He hit the red pig between the shoulder blades. The arrow went to the other side. The boar ran back the same way he came into the mudhole. Running out of sight, we heard a cough, then nothing.

Bill and I got down out of the stand and started tracking the animal. At first, I thought it would be pretty easy to find him considering the good shot Bill took.

His trail led us through grass about four feet tall. The pigs have trail networks under the surface of this tall grass. So, you can imagine two grown men crawling around on our hands and knees, through grass tunnels looking for a 150 pound hog.

I wasn't too fond of the idea, being that I didn't shoot the thing. We looked for about four hours for the pig but couldn't find blood to track. (Bill and I always carry a bottle of peroxide in a spray bottle for tracking blood, but couldn't get the faint trail to bubble up.)

An old timer once told me hogs can seal their own wounds with the mud.

I don't know if that's true, but we never found this one.

Rangers: Win second game in tourney

the fence only to have it caught.

The Rangers got off to a sizzling start when second baseman Corey Boukowsky drove the ball past Gonzales for an easy single.

Fisher hustled around the diamond and tied the score when left-center fielder Robert Gabel put the ball along the third baseline into the outfield for an easy double.

Three batters later, right-center fielder Terry Gates smacked a single, scoring Gabel and Jacob Stimson, who hit a double.

First baseman Billy Delong drove in Stimson for the last run of the inning when he drove a shot over left fielder Brown Burns.

In the top of the second, the Avengers began to chip away at the Rangers when both Angel Miranda and Burns hit singles right off the bat.

Miranda was driven home by designated hitter Tod Bair who hit a double right-center fielder Terry Gates hit a sacrifice fly to drive in Burns.

As Burns rounded third and headed for home, Bair tried for third, but was caught in the middle and tagged out to end the Avengers at bat that was nearly unstopable.

The Avengers snuffed any scoring chance for the Rangers in the bottom of the second with defense.

The Rangers kept the Avengers scoreless in the top of the third.

Taking the plate again, the Rangers began to force errors.

Gabel was walked, and left fielder, Jacob Stimson reached first on a throwing error from Miranda. Right fielder Jimmy Pera drove in Boukowsky, who singled earlier.

Gabel scored from third base when right-center fielder John Buckley hit a sacrifice fly.

Delong tapped the ball out of the infield to score Stimson. Ferrioli drove in Delong, and catcher James Gibson rounded the bases off of an error from Easton. The inning ended with the Rangers pulling away 9-3.

The Avengers began to get frustrated, and it showed in their playing and the bats they threw in the dugouts.

Back-to-back batters popped out, and Burns drove the ball to the fence for a stand up triple.

He scored when Bair drove the ball past Ferrioli for an easy single.

The Rangers had the opportunity to earn the run back with their at bat.

Boukowsky drove the ball into deep center field, and the ball rolled under the fence causing a ground-rule double. He scored when Gabel hit another single.

The Avengers ended the inning with a double play before more damage could be inflicted.

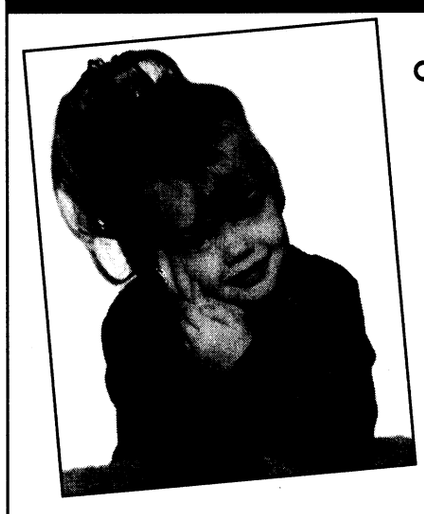
The Rangers continued to work over the Avengers in the bottom of the fifth starting with Pera, who hit the ball into deep left field. Pera scored and Delong reached second when Easton made a bad throw.

Easton then scored when Gray grounded out and then first baseman Durvin Smith made a bad throw trying to keep Easton on third bringing the score to 12-4.

Gonzalez made the first hit of the sixth inning for the Avengers. he rounded the horn when Miranda hit a sacrifice fly bringing in the final run of the game for the Avengers.

Boukowsky added one more for the Rangers when he hit a drive to the fence and rounded the bases for an infield homerun giving the Rangers a 13-5 win.

After the game Miranda said the Avengers played the worst they have ever played since March.



"We made a lot of mental mistakes," Miranda said. "We didn't hit the ball well and just made some mistakes.

"They made some outstanding plays in the outfield and had good hitting and defense," he said.

The Avengers now have a 1-1 record in the tournament, but already have several championship titles under their belt. They won the spring tournament as well as the Military Appreciation Week tournament.

Now with a 2-0 record, Ferrusi said his team played a great game.

"We made plays when they were crucial to make and played good defense," Ferrusi said. "I think our whole team played real well. There aren't any superstars out here we just work well as a team."

Game: Ends season with Cannon win

to drive both home. It was now a one-run game, 4-3.

Bielak, whose new-found rhythm proved to be a three-count, again retired the Bombers 1-2-3.

McGarry followed suit and retired the Cannons 1-2-3.

The remaining two innings would have gone down the same way but the Bombers' defense began to crumble and the Cannons took advantage.

At the bottom of the sixth, Edwin Perez, 29th Inf. Regt., lead off with a high fly to center that was dropped, which landed him on second. Jason Holmes, C Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., hit a double to score Perez and tie the game 4-4. Two more proceeded to get on base — one hit with a pitch, the other singled — thus loading the bases.

A wild pitch enabled Holmes to steal home for the go-ahead run. Like a broken record on the turntable, this play kept repeating and the Cannons were now ahead, 7-4. This maniacal twist of fate also managed to clear the bases.

The Bombers were unable to turn the game around and came up empty at their last at-bat for a 7-4 final.

"It was a good game on both sides," Hare said.

As the final game of the season, it had all the ingredients to make it a dramatic one and there wasn't much room for error on either side.

"Even the smallest mistake can prove to be a decisive one," McGarry said.

Although this was the final game for the season, there will be more baseball to come during the fall. Gawlik plans to have a team ready for the fall league games that start after Labor Day.

"We've built a very strong base of competitive players. We've built a good foundation for a strong team," Gawlik said.

the Pine Mountain flora and wildlife in Mother Nature's classroom.

We learned a little about history and conservation as we passed what remains of a water conduit system constructed under the direction of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, for whom the lake and park are named.

We learned a lot about horses and a bit about beavers, turtles and snakes — though we didn't see one I'm glad to say. We met Petunia, a huge pig who makes her home in the muddy banks of a trickling creek that runs through Roosevelt Stables, and Peanut, a 3-month-old fawn, who was found orphaned and bloodied several weeks ago. The staff nursed her back to health and recently released her back into the wild, but Peanut still comes calling from time to time, and we had the pleasure of being present for one such visit. We even helped bottle-feed the little beauty. What a treat.

The folks at Roosevelt Stables seem to have a real love for animals of all kinds, and four-legged friends from the Pine Mountain Wild Animal Park often find temporary lodging at the stables. They even keep a slew of kittens on hand at all times, provided by the Morning Star Animal Shelter in Hamilton, Ga. These little darlings are always ready to adopt an owner, and they're free to good homes.

The staff of Roosevelt Stables is just as friendly and warm as they can be. They were all patient and willing to answer every question we threw their way. They offered lots of good advice too.

Though it's hard to imagine it could get any better, Nelda says spring and fall are the very best times to ride the park trails. That's when nature puts on the most colorful show and the wildlife ventures out to play.

She also recommended the two-hour moonlight ride around Lake Franklin. If you like, you can stop along the way for fresh apple pie, baked over a camp fire, and a cup of coffee or cider. I'm already making plans for that one, and I'll be sure to tell you all about it.

Or better yet, give Nelda and her staff a call at 628-7463 and make reservations for your own trail ride. Take some friends along. They'll accommodate groups of 12, and they have 25 gorgeous geldings to chose from. I guarantee they'll go out of their way to make this experience memorable, pleasant and easy. Easy as, say, falling off a... oh never mind. You had to see that one coming.

Shooters: Score wins at rifle nationals having the highest Army aggregate in both the National Trophy Individual and National Trophy Team matches.

Tippie also placed fourth in the President's Rifle Match and nine other USAMU service rifle shooters were awarded the President's Hundred Tab.

The USAMU Service Rifle Team Head Coach Richard M. Remily said, overall, the USAMU Service Rifle National Trophy Group placed in the top five slots in 38 of the 46 matches.

Bill nets Soldiers pay raise for '01

3.7 percent boost on way for troops

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The 2001 Defense Appropriations Act, signed by President Clinton last month includes funding to equip two Interim Brigade Combat Teams and a 3.7-percent military pay raise.

Army leaders had requested $537 million to stand up a single IBCT in 2001. Congress provided the requested amount and an additional $100 million for that first interim brigade.

It also funded $500 million to equip a second in the coming year.

"In this bill, funding is provided to procure the first two brigade sets of equipment for the new transformation force," said Alaska Sen. Ted Stevens in moving the Defense appropriations bill through committee in July. "We are determined that this new force be equipped as rapidly as possible, and intend to maintain this pace of funding in fiscal years 2002 and 2003."

Last October, Army leadership established a new vision for the Army — a more mobile, lethal and flexible force for the 21st century. The process to get there is called the Army transformation.

Department of Defense leaders requested $118 million in next year's Army budget for research and development for testing, integration and development of an Interim Armored Vehicle. The new Defense Act supports a more aggressive timeline with $268 million for that effort.

The current Army transformation plan eventually calls for six IBCTs: four in the active force, one in the Army Reserve and one in the National Guard.

"This is the strongest plus-up budget the Army has received from Congress in years," said Gen. John M. Keane, Army vice chief of staff. "Both the proposed Department of Defense and President budgets supported the buildup of a single Interim Brigade Combat Team over the next year. The congressional appropriations budget adds another brigade which demonstrates Congress' solid support to move the Army Transformation quickly along."

The 2001 budget also supports quality of life programs with more funding. In addition to the 3.7-percent pay raise, Congress added $159 million more than the Army asked for to its real property maintenance account, which pays bills for family housing and barracks maintenance and renovations.

The Army's reserve component also benefits with the approved Department of Defense budget.

Congress shifted monies for two of the new Black Hawk helicopters the Army had requested for the active component and gave them to the

Not forgotten

A monument, on Honor Field near the U.S. Army School of the Americas, serves as a reminder for those servicemen and women who were prisoners of war and missing in action during past wars. The country will rally to remember those POWs and MIAs during the National POW-MIA Day Sept. 15.

DUI blitz takes 13 off roads

Police keep post fatality free during holiday

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

It was shortly after 2 a.m. Sunday when Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins activated the blue lights of his patrol car and stopped a driver who showed all the signs of driving while under the influence of alcohol.

The driver was speeding — 70 mph in 45 mph — and was having trouble keeping his car in one of the three lanes of the roadway.

As Jenkins began to talk to the man, the driver insisted he was not intoxicated.

"I'm not drunk," the man said as Jenkins tested the driver's statement with a field sobriety test. "I just had one beer."

Jenkins knew he was being lied to, and he knew the Intoxilizer 5000 at the Provost Marshal Office would prove the driver really was too intoxicated to drive.

The man's blood alcohol concentration was .084, a concentration .004 over the Georgia state limit.

He was driving under the influence of alcohol — legally the man was too drunk to drive.

"It's the same story we get every time," Jenkins said after processing the drunken driver for excessive speed and driving under the influence. "Everybody has only had one beer, and everybody is not too drunk to drive."

Jenkins comments may seem harsh, even jaded, but they are true.

Of the 250 traffic stops the post's DUI task force made during the 96-hour Labor Day holiday DUI blitz, that excuse came up 13 times.

All 13 were found to be legally intoxicated.

Campaign aims to help those who help others

Federal fund-raiser will begin collecting money Sept. 22

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

Even with the most devoted adherence to the Boy Scout motto "be prepared" there are some things that no one is prepared to handle — losing everything in a house fire, getting cancer or suffering a disabling injury in a car accident.

Luckily there are local, national and international organizations such as the Army Community Service, Columbus Hospice, American Cancer Society and the Red Cross to help in these unexpected situations.

The goal of the Combined Federal Campaign, starting Sept. 22, is to raise money to help these organizations become more prepared to handle the needs of Soldiers and the community alike. The Fort Benning effort will include working closely with the Columbus chapter of the United Way to achieve this year's fund-raising goal of $550,000 between Sept. 22 and Nov. 3.

"This money is used in good places," said Cindy Cain, CFC coordinator.

Cain should know. After her son's accident that left him paralyzed, she contacted Easter Seals of West Georgia to arrange day care twice a week. Easter Seals is a therapeutic center that provides more than conventional day care for disabled children and adults. Unfortunately she never got to use the Easter Seals' services because her son died a few months later; she then called upon the services of Columbus Hospice for support.

"Having touched our lives, it's made a mark," Cain said. "That has touched home."

Easter Seals is just one of the many local charities under the code 9000 designation in the CFC catalog, which lists more than 800 charities covering the gamut of organizations.

Easter Seals currently cares for 60 patients but has a waiting list of 130 people, who have been waiting four years, and counting, to receive care. But with a new facility soon to be built, the wait will hopefully be over.

"These children need special care, you can't take them to a regular day care," said Cain.

Easter Seals is the only place in the area that would be able to properly take care of a child with a disability.

The money given to CFC not only helps organizations that provide aid in grim situations, but also encourages people to experience the fun that life has to offer such as with the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and youth activities.

Grandparents key to future

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

When I look in the mirror, I see my history.

I see the pallor of the snow-capped Alps in Germany and olive tinges of the sands in the Middle East.

But my history's more than skin deep.

It's in my genetic coding — elements buried deep within my roots that melded and morphed through generations to surface within me.

The most distant link who I've stood face-to-face with for a closer look was only two-generations away — my grandparents.

Most people don't live to see much farther back than their grandparents I know that was the case with me. My great-grandparents on my mother's side died before I could talk and my great-grandparents on my father's side were long gone before I got here.

Unfortunately, I only had 25 years to get to know my two sets of grandparents.

During those 25 years I heard and saw only pieces of the puzzle to create a disjointed memory of them and an even more haphazard history of myself.

It's not to say I don't savor the memories I do have, because I have a white-knuckled grip around them and it's enough to figure out where I fit.

Here's what I do know.

I know on my mother's and father's side I am the third generation born in the United States. My father's grandparents came from Germany and settled in Astoria, Long Island, N.Y., where his parents were born. His parents eventually moved to Williston Park, Long Island, N.Y., where he was raised.

It wasn't until my grandmother's death in 1998 (the last of the four grandparents) that my dad discovered that she had ancestors in Austria, but that's as far as we know.

On my mother's side, her grandparents came from Syria and Lebanon. A story circulated within the family tells how her dad's mom journeyed to the United States to meet her husband only to be denied at Ellis Island because of her bloodshot eyes, thought to be conjunctivitis. Eventually entering through Mexico, she met up with her husband and settled in Patterson, N.J.

I heard stories of how my great-grandfather (on my mother's father's side) owned a silk mill in Patterson. The Baskinger name became somewhat famous in the Clifton and Patterson areas because of my grandfather's TV and hardware business as well as a catering business by other relations, which is still in business today.

Unfortunately my mother's grandparents did not pass Arabic on to their children because the Americanization process had begun a long time ago and my grandmother was not as fluent as my grandfather in the language. By this time they were a generation in to their new name, Baskinger — which was changed from "Baskungee" thanks to a typo at Ellis Island (this commonly happened to many immigrants who could not read, write or speak, English).

I remember my mother telling me how her father wanted me and my brother to call him "giddu," which means grandfather in Arabic, but my mother wouldn't allow it because she didn't want us to be made fun of and draw attention to our heritage — even though my generation's Middle-Eastern blood already has thinned.

My dad's parents also encountered cultural obstacles, especially during World War II. I remember my grandmother still whispering to us even though it was in her own home years later that she wouldn't dare say she was German during that time for fear of persecution.

I know my mother's father was the New Jersey State four-wall handball champion in the late '30s. I know her mother loved to travel and had been to Spain, France and even traveled back to her homeland of Lebanon. I know my father's father ruled his household with an iron fist. I know my father's mother was an excellent baker and loved to watch JAG on television mainly because she loved a man in uniform.

Grandparents are more than the people who spoil you on holidays or those crazy people who insist on discussing dentures, varicose veins and funeral plots — they're your history, and hold keys to your heritage.

Although I wish I had a chance to find out more about my grandparents, I know my affinity for athletics, my fate in the Army and my stubborn personality are all a part of this genetic mish-mosh.

Saturday is Grandparents' Day and an ideal time to take a look inside your past and start to get to know your ancestors. If your grandparents are deceased like mine are, then ask your parents or a relative about them. You never know what you might find out but it's worth the second glance in the looking glass.

Training helps prevent suicide

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Douglas and I grew up across the street from each other. He had sandy brown hair, blue eyes and a crooked grin.

Douglas loved to hunt and his stuffed trophies lined the walls of his family's home. If you talked with him for any length of time the subject always turned to deer, doves and other game animals.

I was three years older than Douglas, so he was usually my younger brother's playmate after school, until they were old enough to go fishing and hunting together. Then the two grew to be friends, the kind who talked about life and its mysteries.

Almost a decade after taking his own life, Douglas is one of those mysteries. He left behind grieving family and friends who, like my brother, wonder if they could have prevented the suicide — if the signs were there and no one noticed.

There were 65 confirmed suicides and 12 suspected ones in the Army in 1999 — one of the highest rates among the services and an increase for the second consecutive year. In the last decade, suicides have been the second leading cause of death, after accidents, in the military.

During the first five days of 2000, the Army had four suspected suicides.

These statistics were released earlier this spring when Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki announced a suicide prevention program.

"We have a serious problem with suicides in the Army," he said in a message to Army leaders.

"It is our responsibility to help our Soldiers and civilians understand how to identify at-risk individuals, recognize warning signs and know how to take direct action," Shinseki said.

Fort Benning will offer Gatekeeper Training on the signs of suicide Sept. 26 and again Oct. 24 from 1:15 to 4 p.m. at the Officers' Club. Iris Bolton, an author and grief counselor, is the scheduled speaker.

"Gatekeepers open the gate to help for Soldiers and civilians. The idea is to reduce the rate of suicide gestures and attempts, and we are hoping to do that through educating our leaders," said Yvonne Wilbanks, an alcohol and drug control officer and the post's suicide prevention manager.

First sergeants, company commanders, squad leaders, family support group representatives, chaplains and civilian supervisors are among those invited to attend the training.

"We want to reach people who play influential roles in the lives of Soldiers and civilians," Wilbanks said.

Depression, alcohol and drug use will be some of the risk factors discussed, and one of the goals of the program — sponsored by the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program — is to reduce the stigma surrounding mental health counseling.

"We want to show that seeking help is a sign of effectively dealing with problems, not a sign of weakness," Wilbanks said.

The training will deal with the signs of suicide and the misconceptions surrounding it. For example, past suicide prevention programs targeted younger, junior enlisted Soldiers, but statistics show in 1999 the average age of Soldiers who committed suicide was 30 — four were field-grade officers. Senior NCOs, which make up 10 percent of the overall Army population, accounted for 23 percent of the total suicides last year.

Soldiers are at increased risk when they are suffering from depression or substance abuse, Wilbanks said. Other risks include previous suicide attempts and the recent breakup of a marriage or significant personal relationship.

These risk factors are all spelled out on suicide prevention cards available from ADAPCP for distribution to Soldiers. In addition to the danger signs, the cards list the emergency telephone numbers to call for help.

I encourage unit leaders to register for the Gatekeeper Training by calling 545-1138 or 545-4415. The general public is also invited to participate in the free training, if space is available, Wilbanks said.

It could prevent you and members of your unit from having to struggle with the questions left unanswered after a suicide.

No one needs to be haunted by a mystery like Douglas.

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: Caller said he was informed by the staff at Santiago Gym that the sauna would be operational by July, but it is still not back in operation.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The caller was told that when the sauna was delivered to Santiago Fitness Center some parts were damaged in the shipment and will have to be replaced. Replacement parts have been requested and upon delivery, installation of the sauna will begin.

Call: Caller expressed concern about a pack of wild dogs in and around the housing area.

Directorate of Public Safety response: It was explained to the caller that Law Enforcement Operations has been coordinating with Vet Services and with Natural Resources about the capture and containment of this particular pack of domestic dogs abandoned by their owners. Caller was asked to notify DPS whenever he sees these dogs.

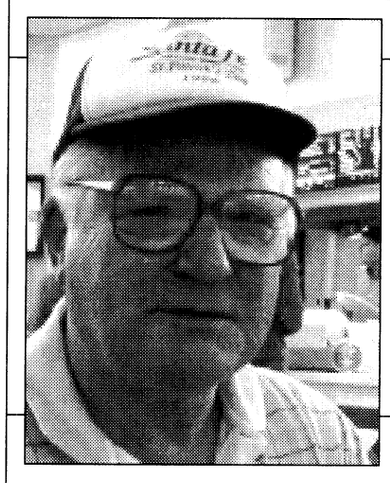
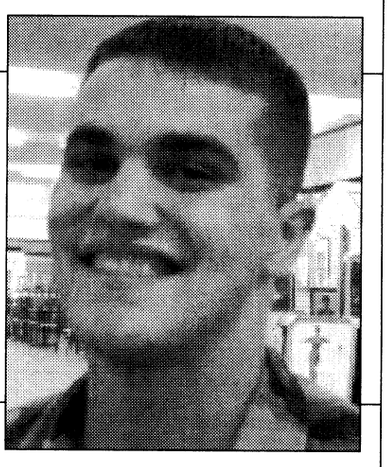
VARIOUS VOICES



How do you maintain a relationship with your grandparents or grandchildren?

Richard Rowe, seventh-grader at Faith Middle School — "My grandparents live in Iowa and Florida, but we visit them as much as possible. We also use dialpad on the computer."

Pvt. Josephine Elder, 690th Medical Company, 36th Engineer Group — "We have a really close relationship. My grandma writes to me every week, and I call her at least once a week."



Otto Blankle, Pine Mountain, Ga. — "We have five grandsons in St. Petersburg, Fla. We've been there seven times this year, and we're trying to sell our house in Pine Mountain so we can move down there."

Jermany James, eighth-grader at Faith Middle School — "My grandparents are in South Carolina. I get to see them for the holidays, and they come here every Thanksgiving. I call there about three times a week and send pictures."

Jane Carter, family member — "My husband's parents live in Macon, Ga. It's very important that we stay in touch, so wherever we're stationed we make sure we get home once a year. We e-mail all the time."

Pvt. Matt Badour, C Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne) 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment — "My great-grandma is 86. I've already sent her a card for Grandparents Day. I send postcards all the time."

Former drill sergeant writes Hooah book

Local Soldier publishes book about schools

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

During his three years as a drill sergeant, Staff Sgt. Robert S. Bertrand heard the same questions over and over again.

What do I have to do to get into Airborne School? What is Ranger School like?

After answering those questions repeatedly, Bertrand developed an "answer book" for his platoon at the Infantry Training Brigade. And what started out as a few pages turned into a 300-page reference book covering the prerequisites for the Army's Special Operations courses and units.

Bertrand and two partners published The Hooah Schools in August.

"Soldiers would come to me with questions about how to qualify for certain schools, and after a year of that I got the idea to put something together as a reference on the prerequisites," said Bertrand, a 33-year-old native of Louisiana.

"Everyone wants to tell stories about how hard it is, and I wanted to dispel the rumors out there so Soldiers can have the chance to make informed decisions and get what they want out of the military. Soldiers can look at this and see what options are within the Army and take advantage of those opportunities," he said.

"This is not for the guy with 15 years in, and it's not for a company commander. They know what direction their careers are going in. It's for initial and midterm Soldiers who are choosing what to do."

Bertrand was a drill sergeant at the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, ITB, and later at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), 29th Infantry Regiment, where he now works in Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

Bertrand accepts credit only for the research and compilation of the information contained in the book.

He is the first to admit the information is available to anyone in the general public willing to spend time researching technical manuals, field manuals, pamphlets and other government publications — many available on the Internet — concerning Army schools and regulations.

"We consolidated information that was already out there, but that's hard to do when you are new to the Army," he said.

Most sections on the various schools and units include a history, overview, regulations, prerequisites and preparations. Some include training schedules and packing lists.

A chance meeting about two years ago with Timothy Dunnigan, a former Soldier and author of several books about the military, inspired Bertrand to see the project through.

Bertrand often scours the books at the Military Clothing Sales Store and noticed Dunnigan's name on several titles, including several on cadences and How to Write NCOERs. One day he was in a post bank and approached a lieutenant wearing a drill sergeant patch. He asked Dunnigan if he was the author.

"He invited me to his home. Tim really inspired me and told me it (the book) was a good idea. He had nothing to gain, but to help another Soldier," Bertrand said.

The two worked together on a book, Running to Modern Military Cadences, giving Bertrand the chance to see the ins and outs of computer publishing programs and putting his name on a book cover.

Bertrand's fiancee, Jacqueline Pearlman, and William Peterson, a friend and former Soldier, joined the project, and along with Bertrand they formed Pearlman Publishing Company earlier this year.

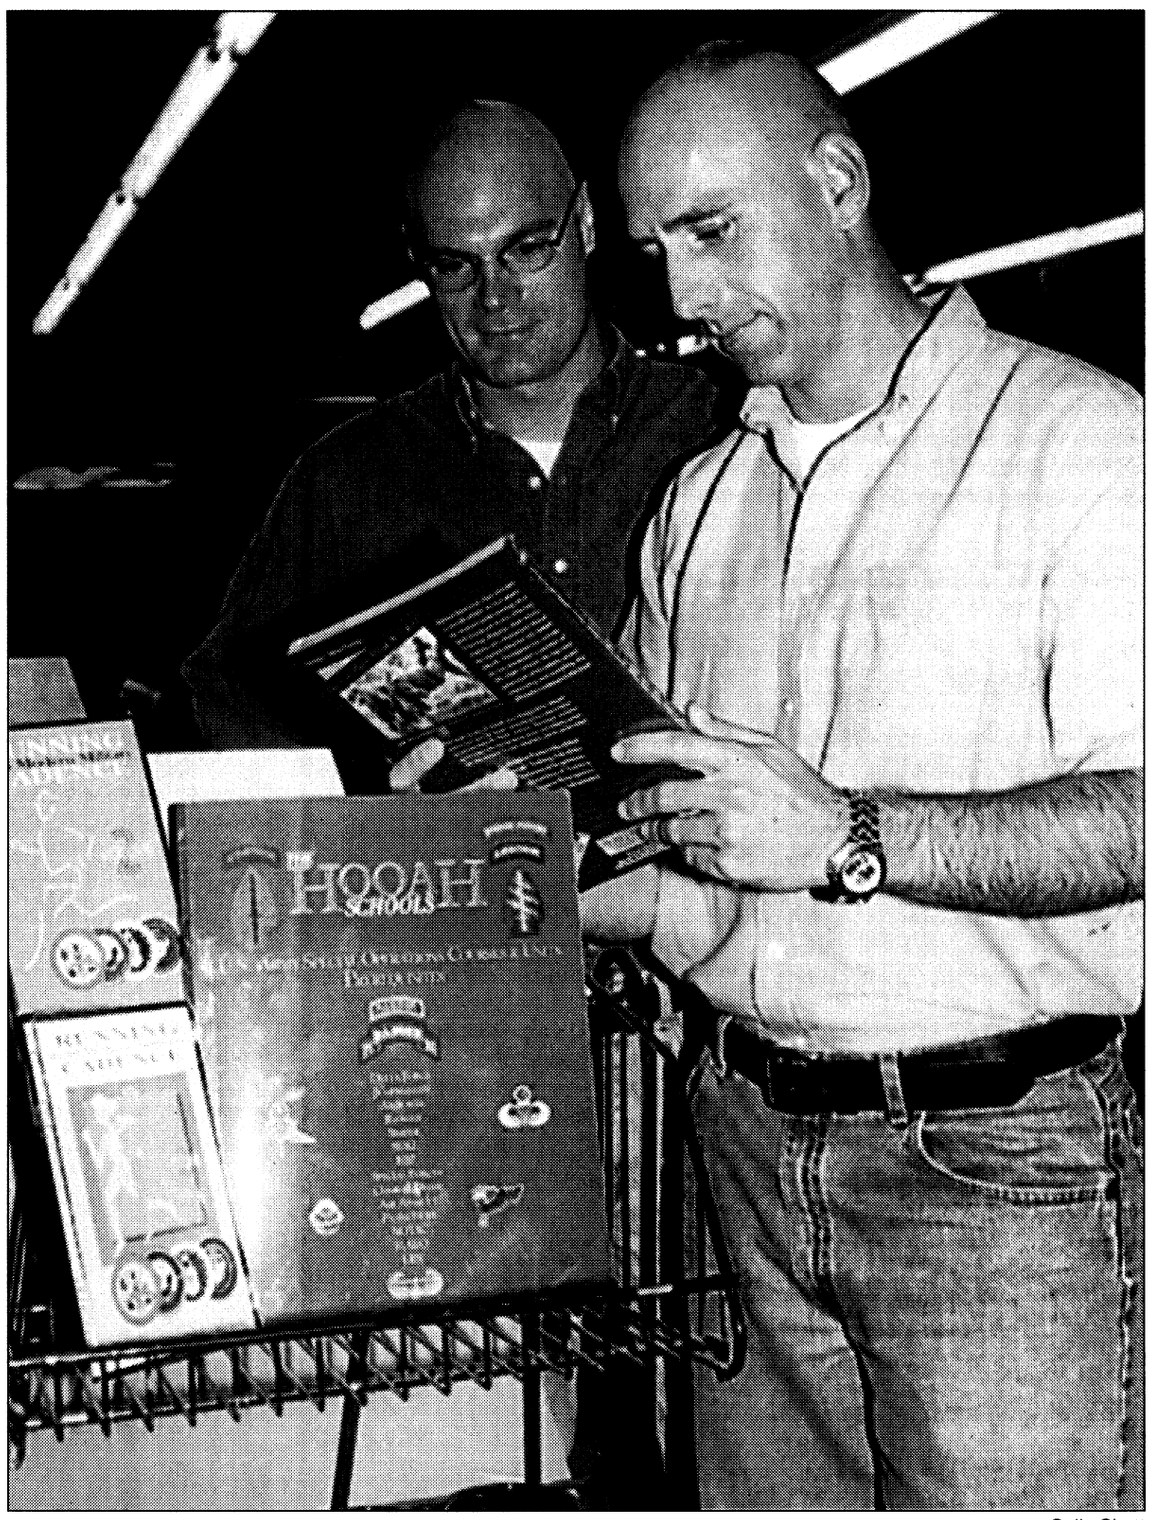
Peterson comes from a family in the newspaper business in North Carolina and never dreamed he would end up in the publishing field.

"I was so turned off by it and said I would never go into publishing," Peterson said.

During the last six months Peterson and Pearlman worked 14-hour days on the project while Bertrand was on duty at the reception battalion. The "subject matter expert" would return to his Fort Mitchell, Ala., home at the end of the day, edit their work and provide insight.

"We went through a lot of wastebaskets full of paper and Office Depot got rich off of us buying printing cartridges," Peterson said.

"I didn't want to put out a product that would be laughed out of town. The Army is a hard crowd, and your peers will let you know if you aren't meeting the standards," Bertrand said.



That's especially true on a post that houses several of the schools covered in the book, including Airborne, Ranger, Long Range Surveillance Leaders Course, Pathfinder and Sniper schools. Bertrand goes beyond Special Forces and includes information on Officer Candidate School and Warrant Officer Candidate School.

Recalling how some of his peers laughed at him for investing his own money in the publishing venture, Bertrand said, "After I showed them the finished book, they said, 'Wow.'"

The book retails for $24.95 and is available at Ranger Joe's, Thaddeus P. Toad Book Store downtown and Books-a-Million on Macon Road, where Bertrand will be conducting a book signing Saturday from 1 to 3 p.m. and 6 to 9 p.m.

Bertrand and Peterson are seeking a worldwide contract with the Army and Air Force Exchange Service.

"That's our goal, to get the information out to all the servicemen in the world," Peterson said.

Sally Shutt

William Peterson, left, and Robert Bertrand published The Hooah Schools, designed to help Soldiers thinking about attending various Army schools, in August.

Other professional development projects are in the works for the publishers, and they plan to update The Hooah Schools each year so the information will be as accurate as possible.

Southern pine beetle problem plagues post

Insect infestation topples trees, destroys pines

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning is at war with an enemy so keen at camouflage they can't even be seen by the naked eye.

These millions of tree toppling troops are not part of any foreign army or rebel force, but rather hordes of Southern pine beetles who are eating through the post pine forest like a hot knife through butter.

"The beetle problem is at an epidemic level," said Bob Larimore, chief of the post's Land Management Branch. "There are some places on post where they have destroyed 10 acres of pine forest."

The beetles, Larimore said, topple pine trees by burrowing deep into the tree's bark in search of a safe place to lay their eggs. That search, however, cuts off the transportation system of the tree that circulates nutrients leaving the tree to literally starve itself to death.

Once the tree dies, the beetles are then left to find another tree to inhabit and ultimately kill.

"The beetles feed on the cambium layer of the tree and then lay their eggs in the tree before leaving it to die," he said. "What we are trying to do is stop that movement by harvesting the trees they have infected."

Larimore and his team of tree technicians are the front-line force in marking the trees that are infected by the beatles, but the search for the scarred trees is far from easy, Larimore said.

He and his teams walk the acres of woods as well as use aerial surveillance to find the dead or dying trees in hopes of thwarting the spread of the beetles.

"We look for a red tree surrounded by strips of yellow trees that are dying, jutting out from the red tree," he said.

So far this year Larimore and his team have earmarked 28.5 acres of land for harvesting to try to stop the spread of the beetles, but only 6.5 acres have been harvested to date.

"We are working with a civilian logging operation to remove the trees that have been infected by the beetles they can still use for lumber," he said. "All the others we are pushing down with our heavy equipment and burning."

Most of the areas battling the beetle bite are on Main Post near Custer Terrace and Battle Park.

There are also a few spotted locations on the Sand Hill cantonment area.

The beetle problem is nothing new to Fort Benning.

Larimore said the beetle population is one that is active on post year-round, but usually comes in waves.

"We usually see a high population during one year then we'll see a year or two of lesser populations," he said. "This is a epidemic year, but we've had bigger."

In the past, Larimore said, the area effected by the beetle population has risen to up to 400 spots across post.

"We are going to continue to harvest the trees that are infected, and we'll probably go back up in the air to see how we are doing by the end of the month," he said. "Once the weather starts cooling off, the beetle activity should slow."

Post residents will soon have a new Pizza! Pizza! option

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning residents will soon have another option in pizza restaurants when Little Caesars opens a franchise later this month next door to Bradley's at the Officers' Club.

The pizza restaurant is taking over 1,200 square feet that once housed a barber and beauty shop under the Supper Club.

Mike Osman, the franchise's owner, sees the endeavor as "a win-win situation for the Fort Benning community and for me," he said.

Osman has a contract with Morale Welfare and Recreation and will turn over between 6 and 14 percent of his gross sales, depending on how well he does, to the post, he said.

"We will be married for the next couple of years," Osman said of his relationship with the MWR. "The more the store does, the more money goes back to the community."

Osman is not new to the food industry; he owns two Subway stores in Columbus and Phenix City. Tuesday he was talking with job applicants and consulting with workmen who were hanging wallpaper and putting the finishing touches on the facility, which will feature a seating area for about 15 diners and an oven that can bake 210 pizzas in an hour.

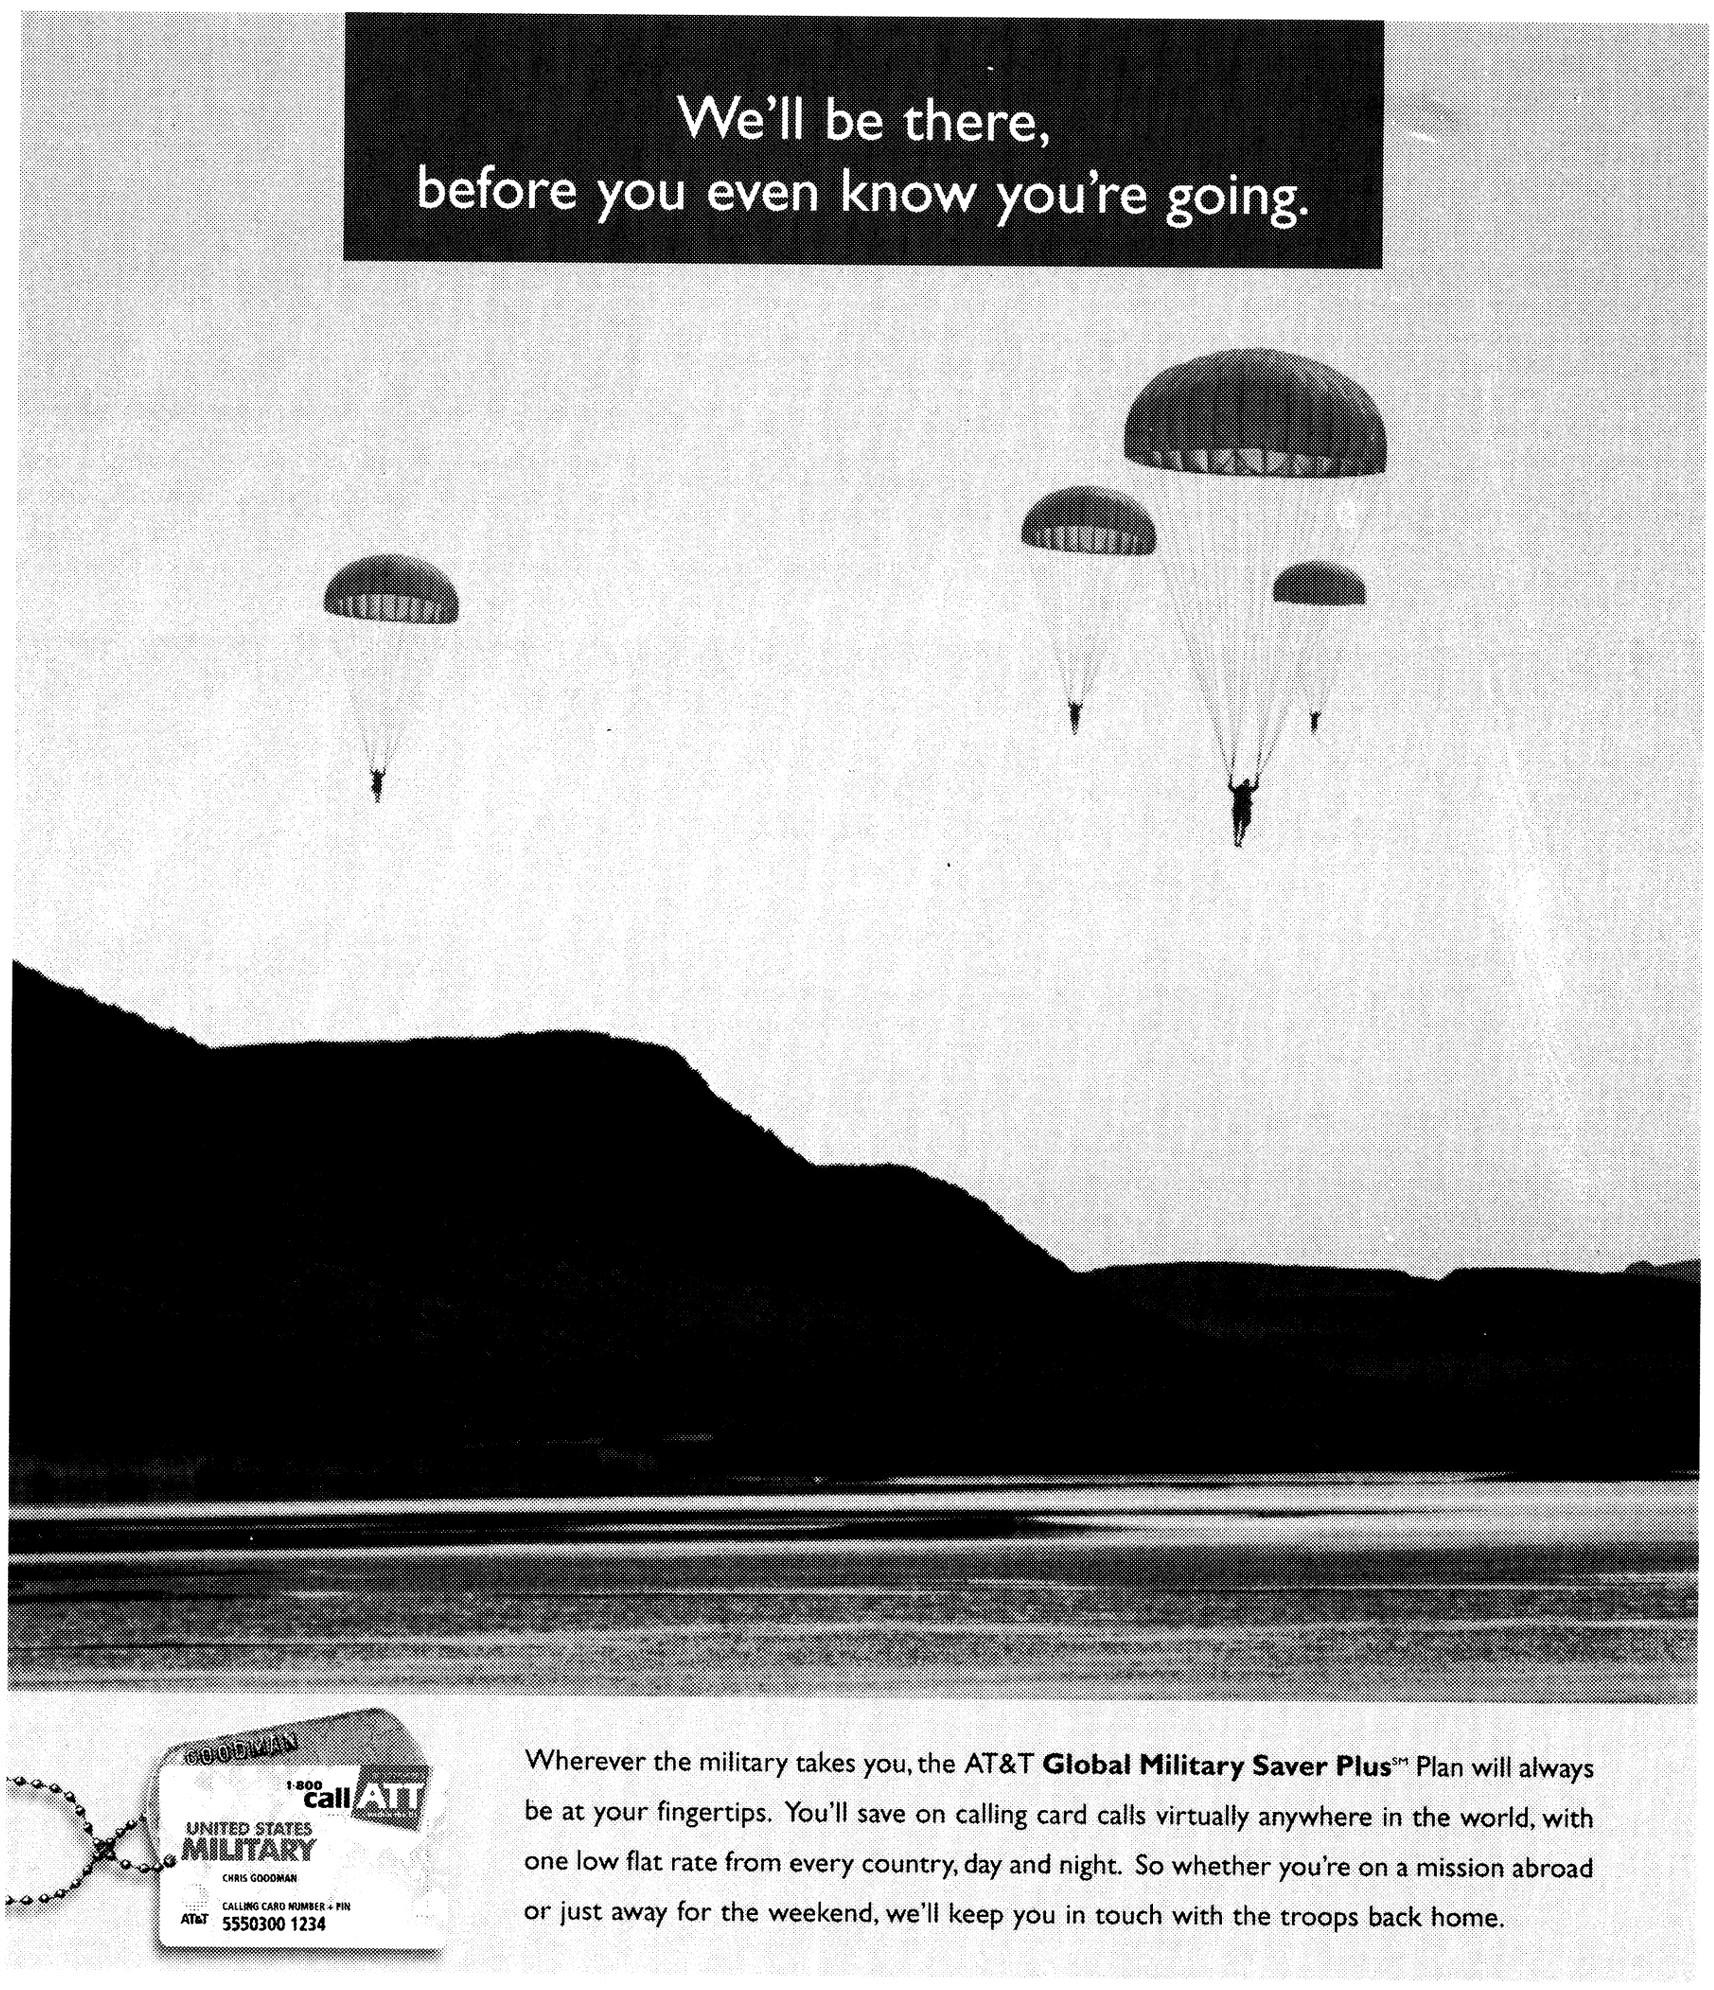
The post restaurant will be the only stand-alone Little Caesars in the area, Osman said. Local Kmarts feature Little Caesars cafes in their stores, but they do not deliver.

"At first, we are only planning to deliver to post residents," Osman said.

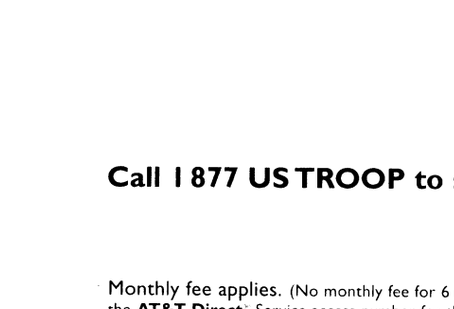
Since the restaurant will fall under the MWR umbrella, diners will be allowed to take their pizzas into the adjoining Bradley's, which can seat 100 and offers a big-screen television and eight other smaller sets for individual viewing.

The opening is tentatively set for Sept. 18, but that could change so watch for advertisements in The Bayonet and on the electronic billboards, Osman said.

Partnering with local franchises has proven successful for the post's clubs, said John Bush, the chief of the Community Operations Division, Directorate of Community Activities. Pizza Hut and Subway were the first to set up restaurants.



"There is no substitute for brand-name recognition," Bush said. "With the transient community we serve, people want to know what the product is. They don't spend all that money on advertising for nothing. Everyone has heard 'Pizza!Pizza!'"



Water Restrictions

Fort Benning is still under water restrictions.

- Limit outdoor water usage to 30 minutes.
- Be sure all outdoor watering is on the appropriate day and during the times of 6 to 10 p.m.
- All watering must be done by hand. Sprinklers are prohibited.
- Watering restrictions do not apply to new sod.

Campaign: Hopes to raise money for needy local charities

"All types of needs are met by people sharing just a little bit of their money," said Sharon Borger, executive director, Easter Seals of West Georgia.

The Fort Benning charities that will benefit from the CFC include a code 9001 designation Soldier Family Support Activity, which includes Army Community Service, Youth Activities, Volunteer Resources, Santa's Castle and Patch Pre-School just to name a few.

The importance of donating money to the local community is in the needed services these organizations provide to its residents, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

Army Community Service, for example, helps needy families in crisis situations such as providing food for three days from its food locker and supplying families coming from overseas assignments awaiting delivery of their household goods, with basic items such as linens and dishes as well as play pens for toddlers.

ACS provides other services such as the free income tax assistance and also gives out turkeys on Thanksgiving and Christmas to families who cannot afford a turkey on the table during the holiday season.

Santa's Castle also brings holiday cheer to post families with its supply of new toys and games for children.

These organizations are able to keep on providing these charitable services because of community contributions.

Cain said she has noticed in past campaigns how many basic trainees, who don't have much money, give large amounts to the CFC.

"We appreciate it so much as young people open up their hearts and give generously," Cain said.

"They may not need it now, they're young, but someday they'll be married and have families and the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts come into play," she said.

Other services that benefit from the CFC include the USO that has a lounge area at the Hartsfield International Airport in Atlanta for Soldiers to relax and have a snack while waiting for their flight.

"Hopefully (Soldiers and their families) won't ever need some of the other (organizations)," she said.

Although no one wants to think about this one, the Alliance for Battered Women is a service that is important because there is no shelter on post, Walls said.

Fort Benning's Family Advocacy Program provides a safety net for these women, but the FAP often refers them to the Alliance for Battered Women for shelter, among other organizations that can help them.

"Many times women are abused and don't have any place to go," Walls said.

The CFC, Cain said, is also a call to arms for the civilian work force to help take pride in their community and give back to it.

Because the CFC catalog covers such a wide variety of charitable organizations from crisis pregnancy centers to feeding people in third world countries, people can literally shop for a charity whether it is local, national or international — or pick one that hits home.

If someone has lost a loved one or has a relative with a rare disease like lupus they may feel a special bond to one charity, Walls said.

Walls will conduct the first CFC training session for project officers and key personnel at 9:30 a.m. Sept. 18 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 4 and 9:30 a.m. Sept. 19 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 6.

Sessions should last from 30 to 45 minutes and Walls said he will be available to answer any and all questions after each session.

For more information call Walls at 545-1500.

Police: Keep post roads fatality free over holiday weekend

"It's the same story we get from everybody we stop for DUI," Jenkins said. "It just gets old."

The weekend's surge in DUI detainments tallied a total that was nearly a quarter of the apprehensions made during the entire month of September last year.

"It's a high number of DUIs for a four day period, especially for the Army," said Staff Sgt. Kevin Sparks, the post's top traffic investigator. "With the Army's zero tolerance policy on DUI, one is too many."

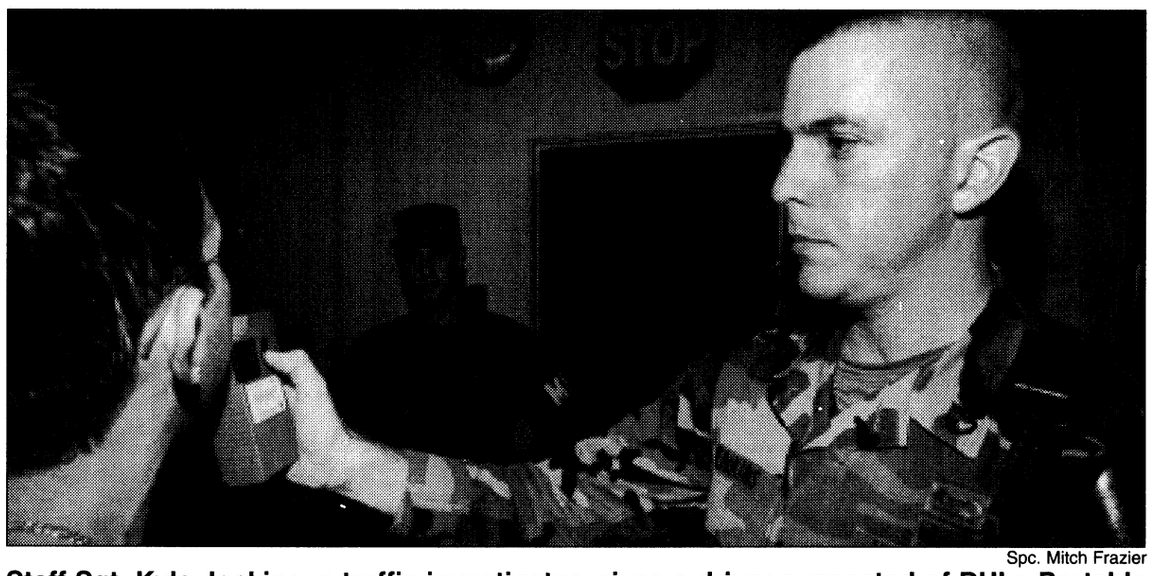
Motorists claiming to be sober weren't the only problem police battled this weekend.

Many drivers who identified themselves to police as the designated driver were found to have alcohol in their systems.

"Being the designated driver means not drinking," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, the post's chief of Law Enforcement. "You decide who is going to be the designated driver before you go out, and adhere to that.

"If you don't, it could cost you quite a bit of money, or possibly even your life," he said.

Motorists who drive intoxicated on Fort Benning could face fines up to $1,000 and land themselves in jail for up to 1 year, and also lose all driving privileges on the installation.



Civilians who drive drunk on post also receive an ejection letter barring them from driving on the installation.

Four Fort Benning Soldiers learned just how how costly a DUI accident can be Aug. 16 after they spent an evening of drinking and decided to race down Highway 26 at speeds greater than 100 mph.

When the driver of the vehicle saw the stop sign at the intersection of Highway 27, he had no time to react and his automobile slammed into an embankment injuring all four Soldiers.

One of those Soldiers spent days in the Intensive Care Unit of Martin Army Community Hospital before being released three weeks after the crash.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reported more than 16,000 fatal traffic accidents in 1998. None of those DUI related deaths were logged on post.

reserves.

It also provides an addition $125 million for 12 more reserve Black Hawks. Eight will go to the U.S. Army Reserve and six to the National Guard.

The budget includes $41 million more than the Army's programmed request for more reservists serving as fulltime support technicians.

However, the new Defense Act does not fully fund or raise the ante for all Army programs. Some programs that will have shortfalls compared to their budget requests are:

• Javelin Missile — Congress cut $51 million from the requested budget. The amount taken is equal to the excess, due to program delays, of this year's program budget.

• Army Claims Activities — Congress cut $40 million from the requested budget. The reasoning is that the Army has not fully used budgeted funds since 1996.

• Chemical Demilitarization — Congress cut $24 million from the requested budget. This is due to program delays and excessive costs for advisory assistance and contract services in the past year.

In total the 2001 Defense Appropriations Act gave the Army approximately $3.2 billion more than it had requested.

Father, son, 313th Hospital deploy to Kosovo

Unit takes over as first reserve medical center

A father and son left Fort Benning Thursday for a six-month tour in Kosovo and Macedonia as part of the first reserve medical unit to deploy there.

Maj. Richard Carpenter, 54, a psychologist; his son, Staff Sgt. Christopher Carpenter, a technician and medic; and other members of the 313th Hospital Unit Surgical from Springfield, Mo., processed through the CONUS Replacement Center and received additional training at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Back home in Burlington Junction, Mo., the Carpenters serve in different reserve units, but they have been united as part of the 313th HUS for this deployment, Christopher, 24, said.

Richard, the operations officer for the 313th HUS, will be in Kosovo, while Christopher will be stationed in Macedonia during the mission.

"We always knew it was a possibility we could be deployed at the same time," Christopher said.

Richard's wife and Christopher's mother, Eloise, good-naturedly accepted the fact both her son and husband would be gone during the holidays.

"My wife's comment was it was easier for her to have both of us going, than to have one left behind who did not get to go," Richard, a Vietnam veteran, said.

"She is very active in the family readiness group, and well aware of the extreme importance of family readiness programs and the support they provide to the family members," he said.

Soldiers from 15 different units in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa make up the 313th HUS.

"We pulled 133 Soldiers from all over the Midwest, the heartland of America," said Lt. Col. Joan Brown, deploying hospital commander of Task Force MED Falcon 3, which will run a 52-bed health care facility treating American and NATO Soldiers and civilians. Twenty-two Soldiers from the 437th Ground Ambulance Company, Riverside, Calif., are also part of the task force.

For the majority of the Soldiers, their civilian jobs replicate what they do in the military. The unit includes physicians, pharmacists, nurses, therapists, technicians, medics and support personnel.

"We are taking a great group of health care providers who are highly trained, motivated and very honored to be in this position," Brown said.

A registered nurse in Joplin, Mo., Brown is one of six employees from the Freeman Health Care System hospital deployed with the unit.

"In a small town, that's a big cut out of the staff," she said.

Her husband, Alan, is the coordinator for the family readiness group.

"They have been preparing just as we have. Soldiers have to know everything is going well back home," Brown said.

After completing their theater specific individual readiness training, the unit received four days of additional medical instruction at Fort Benning provided by the 30th Medical Brigade, with headquarters in Heidelberg, Germany.

"Our mission here is to ensure they are trained and ready — from an individual and collective standpoint — to perform their medical mission in Kosovo and Macedonia," said Lt. Col. Glenn Iacovetta, chief of the six-member 30th Med. Bde. transition team.

Classes included topics such as the theater of operations, IV therapy, pre-hospital training life support, CPR, the military's medical computer system (the Composite Health Care System) and medevac procedures — with the help of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction.)

"The training we've received at Fort Benning will help us seamlessly bridge from reserve status to active status so we can hit the ground running in Kosovo," Brown said.

From Georgia, the Soldiers traveled to Germany for a weeklong mission rehearsal exercise.

"It will replicate scenarios of events that have actually taken place in Macedonia and Kosovo so when a real situation happens things will run smoothly," Iacovetta said.

After the exercise in Germany, the unit flies to Kosovo where Soldiers will overlap with their counterparts for 10 days.

"We see this as a great opportunity, a gift, to be selected as the first reserve medical team to go in," Brown said.

Father, grandfather pin wings on third-generation paratrooper

Airborne graduation means homecoming for retirees

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

In his opening remarks at the Aug. 31 graduation of A Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, Capt. Paul Davison, company commander, welcomed "new blood into the fraternity of the Airborne." Ironically, third-generation Airborne blood runs thick through the veins of one graduate, whose father and grandfather were on hand to pin on his jump wings.

The graduation was a homecoming of sorts for Spc. Ted Mataxis III, his father, retired Lt. Col. Ted Mataxis Jr., and grandfather, retired Brig. Gen. Ted Mataxis. The youngest Mataxis was born when his father was stationed at Fort Benning as a Ranger instructor in 1977.

Ted Jr. remembers living on Rainbow Avenue when his own father was stationed here in the '50s.

"This is like coming home," said Ted Jr., who retired from the Army in 1992 and now serves as the director of workplace development for Moore County Schools in Pinehurst, N.C. "This was one of our favorite places to live, and we're proud to be here to see our son carry on the tradition."

The "tradition" started in 1953, when at the age of 38, the eldest Mataxis earned his jump wings after serving in World War II and Korea.

"I was older than the rest, but I was in really good shape," Mataxis said, in his address to the 313 graduates of Airborne school. "The first two days were all right, no problem. The rest of the three weeks were unmitigated hell.

"But take this from a great-great grandfather who has looked at this business for a very long time: it was all designed to make us disciplined Soldiers, to prepare us to do whatever we had to to keep our country ready for any mission.

"Don't ever forget that's the reason you're here."

Mataxis pinned his own wings on his son 10 years later in 1963, when Ted Jr. was a private with the Special Forces Reserves. He was commissioned in 1969 and spent 30 years with the Rangers, Special Forces and Special Operations.

The retired brigadier general said presenting his original jump wings to a third generation was one of the greatest things that ever happened to him.

"I have a great, warm fuzzy feeling," said Mataxis, who retired as the chief of Military Missions in Cambodia in 1972 and now teaches graduate courses at the American Military University in Pinehurst.

"At the age of 83, I don't need any recognition. I'm here to focus on my grandson and support him in his endeavor to carry on this proud family tradition. Airborne all the way!"

Spc. Mataxis is a graduate of the University of North Carolina, Greensboro. He plans to attend graduate school to study clinical psychology and eventually enlist full time in the Army.

He said the decision to "go Airborne" was the natural progression of events.

"I've been around it all my life. I guess I knew I'd do it when I was a kid," he said, smiling indulgently as his father straightened the vintage wings on his chest. "They're a little bit crusty I guess, but it gives me a tingly feeling to be wearing the ones they wore."

Perhaps proudest of all was Spc. Mataxis' mother, Kirby, who discreetly wiped tears as her husband and father-in-law pinned the wings upon her son's uniform.

"It was his decision, his choice." she said. "He's wanted to do this since he was 17 years old, but I encouraged him to wait till he finished college.

"He still just wanted to serve his country.

U.S. Army School of the Americas hosts Latin American conference

Worldwide leaders gather for summit

U.S. Army School of the America's

The U.S. Army School of the America's Latin American Conference engaged issues affecting the western hemisphere.

"Superstars from academia, the Latin American security forces, and hemispheric diplomatic community made the 10th and last Latin American Conference at the U.S. Army School of the Americas the best of its kind ever attempted," said Dr. Russ Ramsey, conference director, and USARSA's visiting professor from Troy State University. "I directed five conferences of this type for the U.S. Air Force at the Air Command & Staff College, during the tumultuous 1980s, and seven of the ten held at the School of the Americas since 1989.

"This one was a significant hemispheric event in itself, comparable in scope to the Miami Economic Summit and the Williamsburg Defense Ministerial Conferences in 1994," he said.

Twenty-four speakers each presented a brief summary of their ideas in clusters of three, followed by a question-and-answer round table lasting an hour.

Following an arduous nine-hours-a-day schedule, the annual Command and General Staff College Class, the students for whom this Conference is conducted, plus faculty and visitors from the Fort Benning community, subjected the speakers to an arduous cross-examination of their ideas.

Father Dennis St. Marie of the Cleveland, Ohio, Diocese was a missionary in El Salvador during the bloody civil war of the 1980s.

He supported the idea of human rights training as an antidote to the human rights violations he personally witnessed in that era. Professor Lawrence Clayton, Director of Latin American Studies and Chairman of History at the University of Alabama, outlined the origins of Latin America's long and substantial human rights tradition.

Gen. Jose Serrano, the recently retired Commanding General of the Colombian National Police, described efforts by his force to control the violence of the FARC guerrillas who are allied with the narco-traffickers in Colombia, pointing out that the National Police are the front line of public order but lack the military power to defeat FARC units in battle.

Peter DeShazo, U.S. State Department, explained how the United States is funding increased military assistance under Plan Colombia, but that the primary effort must still be reducing demand in the drug consuming countries, and excess militarization would not solve the drug problem.

Dr. James Ondracek, Professor of Economics at Minot University in North Dakota, described the social value of economic privatization now occurring in Latin America.

Dr. Steve Rozman of Mississippi's Tougaloo College made the case for continuing efforts to limit the gap between rich and poor via government coercion. Dr. Hal Kearsley of Troy State University showed how European economic investment in Latin America is important within the region, but marginally important in Europe itself. Todd Williams of Emory University stated that Chinese economic policy in Latin America is not ultimately to gain military advantage, but rather to develop economic markets.

Retired Gen. Paco Moncayo of Ecuador is the recently elected Mayor of Quito, the capital city, and he pointed out the importance of civilian control of the military. Professor Alex Hybel of Connecticut College approached this from a different angle, suggesting that several Latin American countries are true democracies, and several are only partial democracies at best. USARSA Commandant Col. Glenn Weidner showed the legal dimensions of the Chilean initiative to try ex-President Augusto Pinochet for human rights violations while in office.

"The variety and toughness of themes examined was amazing," said Yves Gisse, a French economist who just retired from a career with the International Monetary Fund. "The students came well prepared, and the array of speaker talent was totally remarkable."

Under present plans, USARSA closes its doors in mid-December 2000 and re-opens in January 2001 under an enlarged posture with a broader mission.

"This Conference," Ramsey said, "was fitting tribute to the thousands of faculty and students who have served U.S. regional policy and hemispheric freedom well here since 1946. The new school opening to replace this one must certainly retain the annual Conference tradition and seek to equal this one."

excellence in training

Spc. Gregory S. Pryer
Denver, Colo.
A Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade

What made you join the Army?
It has always been a dream of mine to serve my country as a Soldier.

Why were you chosen as the distinguished honor graduate?
I was chosen because I exhibit the seven Army values. I always accept responsibility and challenges, and I always followed the examples set by my drill sergeants.

Staff Sgt. Robert Shearer
A Co., 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., ITB

Define you leadership style.
I use a combination of all three leadership styles as the task and experience of a Soldier dictates. I believe that one leadership style limits your ability to train or lead Soldiers.

What is your biggest challenge as a drill sergeant?
Determining the correct approach to facilitate the optimum learning process for all Soldiers.
Each Soldier is different, but they all must reach the same goal.

TRADOC takes battle test to online viewers

Army's digitizing experiments now can be seen on Web

TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Without leaving the office or living room, interested service members and community members can witness the Army's latest dynamic experiment with technology and digitization of its light forces.

A new Army Training and Doctrine Command website features near-live coverage of the Joint Contingency Force Advanced Warfighting Experiment today through Sept. 20 at the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La.

AWE events include an 18th Airborne Infantry airfield assault, a Land Warrior live-fire attack, and a large-scale, round-the-clock light Infantry raid on urban terrain.

"What can we do with our technological enablers for our light forces to make them lethal and survivable?" is how Lt. Gen. Randall Rigby, TRADOC Deputy Commanding General - Futures and exercise director, phrased the goal of the JCF AWE for the Army.

To answer that question, the Army will use about 4,000 Soldiers and a company of Marines in combat scenarios against JRTC's "world class" opposing force.

Participating Soldiers have been flown in from around the world. They are from the 1st Brigade, 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., 3rd Battalion, 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment, Fort Bragg, N.C., and an armored company team from the 4th Infantry Division, Fort Hood, Texas.

The Marines taking part in the experiments are from K Company, 3rd Battalion, 6th Marines, Camp Lejeune, N.C.

"What's exciting about the website is the opportunity to witness key AWE events in near-real time and from just about anywhere in the world," said Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Buffett, website administrator and newspaper program manager for TRADOC's Office of the Chief of Public Affairs, Fort Monroe, Va.

"This is also an important step for Army Public Affairs," Buffett said. "Using the power of multimedia and the internet, we can do an even better job of keeping base communities and their neighbors informed of activities involving deployed troops from their area."

The JCF AWE website already contains preliminary stories explaining the goal behind the warfighting experiment, and what key participants have done to prepare for this historic event.

Additional coverage of the AWE begins within hours of the opening operation — the Airborne Infantry assault — planned for mid-evening tonight.

Throughout the exercise, stories will continue to be posted, usually within six to 12 hours of the actual event.

The near live coverage of the tests and all related stories on the Advanced Warfighting experiments can be found by logging onto the new Website that will begin coverage of the tests today. The address for the site is www.tradoc.army.mil/pao/AWE/AWEIndex.html.

Korea ... the 'forgotten war'

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Fifty years ago this week, the U.N. Security Council vetoed, 9-2, a Russian resolution to condemn the allies "inhuman" bombing of North Korea and communist-held areas of the South. U.S. delegate Ernest J. Gross told the United Nations that extreme measures were taken to warn civilians of impending attacks.

Sept. 7, 1950 — The 1st Provisional Marine Brigade is withdrawn from the Naktong River Perimeter back to Pusan to reassemble for a landing at Inchon.

Sept. 8 — U.N. Secretary General Trygve Lie said in Chicago that driving the communists back across the 38th Parallel "will not be enough." The war must result in a "unified and independent" Korea with citizens "able freely to select a government of their own choosing." He said world peace will not be possible without an agreement between the U.S. and Russia. "It is getting very late, indeed," for negotiations between the two countries to prevent a third world war.

Sept. 9 — President Truman announces before a meeting of the "Western Big Three" foreign ministers to discuss Germany and European security that the U.S. will make a "substantial" increase in troops in Europe.

He said the Joint Chiefs of Staff and secretaries of defense and state recommended the move.

Sept. 10 — Dr. Ralph Bunche tells a New York meeting of the AFL Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters that "realities of Korea" would end racial segregation in the Army. Thousands of Negroes are fighting to give Koreans "that freedom and equality which these same Negro GIs have never experienced in full at home."

Sept. 12 — In the United Nations, Russia vetoes a U.S. resolution for a U.N. on-the-spot investigation of locations in Manchuria which Russia claims have been attacked by U.S. pilots.

Sept. 12-13 — President Truman selects retired Gen. of the Army George C. Marshall as the next secretary of defense Sept. 12 with the resignation of Arthur Johnson. The next day legislation is introduced in Congress to waive that part of the National Security (Unification) Act of 1947 that prohibits officers from serving as defense secretary within 10 years of leaving active duty.

Sept. 13 — Lt. Gen. Walton H. Walker, 8th Army commander, visits Soldiers near Pohang after they've repelled North Korean attacks. He said the enemy is showing signs of weakening all along the front. A coming U.N. offensive will soon drive the North Korea People's Army from South Korea.

Community needs weekend tutors

Program helps students in all subjects

Karen Taylor

As the school year progresses and coursework picks up speed, there are some students who might find it hard to keep in step with their studies.

The Combined Communities of Southeastern Columbus provides a tutorial program free to students who need help in all subjects from language arts to math — but the program is in need of volunteers.

"We are totally made up of volunteers," said Daisy Honor, principal of tutorial sessions.

In its 17th year, the CCSC school year tutorial program has tutored more than 16,500 students in grades first through eighth.

"The program helps students keep pace with their classes," Honor said. "Many students need one-on-one instruction."

"When a teacher has a classroom of 20 or 30 students, it's difficult to reach all of them," said Lonnie Jackson, CCSC chairman.

Especially if a child is shy, he might not get the help he needs to understand the coursework.

Also, the program helps military families who travel around a great deal and do not have a person to help tutor their child.

The program thrives on volunteers from the community to helping students in need of a tutor to have one-on-one time with a "teacher" free of charge to the parents.

Many of the volunteers in the past have come from Fort Benning, including the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, Martin Army Community Hospital, office of the Staff Judge Advocate along with other Fort Benning units, Jackson said.

Other volunteers, who have participated are from fraternities and sororities, Troy State University and the National Honor Society, just to name a few.

"It's a tricommunity operation," Jackson said.

Jackson said some of the students have a hard time getting motivated and enthused about their schoolwork and that's why the volunteers are so important.

The sessions are about learning as well as helping invoke an excitement in students about school and their classes.

Jackson said he emphasizes to the children the following mantra during each session to help build student confidence: "I can be anything and I can do anything if I put my mind to it."

The CCSC school year tutorial program starts Saturday and sessions will continue every Saturday until the end of the school year.

Tutoring sessions are from 10 a.m. to noon at Eddy Middle School, 2100 S. Lumpkin Road and Rothschild Middle School, 1136 Hunt Ave.

There is no registration required, volunteers can show up on location that day and they are free to attend as many Saturday sessions as desired at any of the three locations. For more information, call Lonnie Jackson 687-5357 or Daisy Honor 687-8808.

Postwide yard sale set for Sept. 23

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

In two weeks there's only one thing that will be spreading faster than the wildfires of the Western United States — yard-sale fever.

Put a star next to Sept. 23 on the calendar, and be ready at 8 a.m. sharp to either unload household goods or sniff out the bargain of a lifetime.

In its fourth year, the postwide yard sale is held in the spring and the fall. The spring sale helped people who were ready to PCS to sell off a few things before the big move. The fall sale provides newcomers an opportunity to assess their possessions after the move here and maybe shed some extra stuff.

"We've found it works very well," said Chuck Walls garrison manager. "It's a chance to unclutter the house."

While that may be the case for some, others are out to buy things for a bargain.

"Furniture is always a big seller," Walls said. "Appliances are fast movers."

Other popular items are tools, baby clothes and children's toys.

Nancy Carlisle, volunteer vice mayor of East Main Post and yard-sale shopper, said she bought a new Fisher Price Castle that was still in the box for $15. This find would cost about $40 in stores.

She also said the fall yard sale is a good place to find school clothes for children as well as gifts for those hard-to-shop-for people such as antiques, collectibles or books.

"We've all lived in foreign countries and brought back things from there," she said.

Pottery and china are among the items brought back from a station overseas that wind up in the sale.

Many times the joy of the yard sale is finding the unexpected — at a good price.

"It's what you stumble upon, that's the fun of it," she said.

There's no fee to participate. All post residents have to do is set up their sale items in their yard by 8 a.m.

Carlisle suggests that shoppers park their cars near an area with a high sale-density and walk from sale to sale.

During the spring, she said, the Iron Triangle was very crowded with cars and there weren't many places to park, making bargain-hunting by foot the most efficient way to shop.

"That's one good thing about (the yard sale), you don't have to drive around," she said.

In addition, many neighborhood children sell coffee, donuts among various other snacks during the sale.

Carlisle said her daughter is out selling snacks to keep the sale-goers energized while making a little pocket change.

The shopping will come to an end at 2 p.m., but at the end of the day people with leftovers they just don't want to haul back in the house can donate them to the Thrift Shop, 229 Ingersoll Ave.

The Thrift Shop will take donations from 2 to 4 p.m. Sept. 23. Items should be brought to the loading dock located at the back of the store.

First-graders have party for shooter

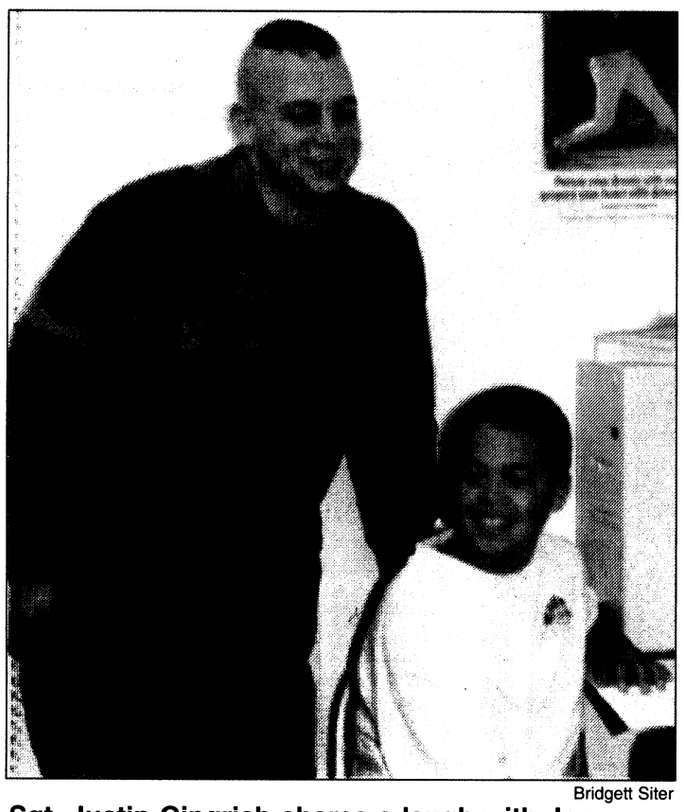
The Soldiers of the Olympics-bound U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit single-mindedly aim to bring home the gold this month when they compete in Sydney, Australia.

But one Fort Benning member had another target in mind when he visited White Elementary School Sept. 1.

Though preparing to leave for Sydney on Wednesday, Maj. Mike Anti made time to attend a "good luck" party given by more than 40 of his son's first-grade classmates.

He took the opportunity to introduce his sport to the students and teach the fundamentals of gun safety.

"I always enjoy talking to young people about my sport," Anti said. "It doesn't get a lot of coverage on TV, so anything I can do to educate young kids about competitive shooting benefits my sport and teaches (them) about gun safety and responsibility."



Anti's wife Anne teaches first grade at White, and his 6-year-old son, Matthew, is in Ann Lucas' neighboring class.

The two collaborated on the party and prepared for the event by learning about the Olympics and Australia.

The students presented Anti with a cake and a signed ball cap declaring "White first-

Ranger proves to be positive role model for youths

Soldier's past helps local youths stay on right path

One Fort Benning Soldier's own troubled childhood inspired his dedication to the partnership between the Ranger Training Brigade and the Carpenter's Way Ranch.

Sgt. Justin Gingrich, a 26-year-old Ranger with the RTB, first visited the ranch two years ago when he moved to Columbus. The boys he met there reminded him of himself as a child. Their stories of abandonment and abuse reminded him of his own struggle to overcome the legacy of alcohol abuse and neglect.

"I grew up in the same kind of environment as most of those boys," Gingrich said. "My parents were both alcoholics, and my father was in prison for eight years. I can relate to what they're feeling and what they're going through. When I was their age I made a conscious decision not to allow that (alcohol abuse) to happen to me, and I sure don't want to see it happen to any of them," he said.

Gingrich's first visit was in his official capacity as a representative of the brigade's partnership in education. Since then he's fostered a relationship with the young residents of the ranch that goes far beyond the call of duty.

Gingrich visits the ranch on a regular basis. When he's not teaching land navigation and map reading skills, he joins them for an occasional fishing trip or ball game. Mostly he just enjoys "hanging out" with the boys.

"He does lots of stuff with us, like hiking and fishing," said one young resident. "I learned all about the Rangers from him. I think I might want to join the Army some day."

Each month Gingrich presents a Ranger coin and framed certificate to the "Student of the Month," who is selected by his teachers for outstanding

Partnership benefits Rangers, community

Two years ago Fort Benning's Ranger Training Brigade led the way in the fledgling "Partners in Education" program developed by the Columbus Chamber of Commerce. The Rangers seized the opportunity to partner with the Carpenter's Way Ranch in Fortson, Ga.

The 33-acre ranch is a residential community for boys between the ages of 6 and 18, mostly "social orphans" — victims of abuse or abandonment who have been removed from their homes by the Division of Family and Children's Services.

Since 1998, the Rangers have developed a mutually beneficial relationship with the staff and residents of the ranch, sponsoring regular outings for the boys, including trips to Rangers In Action demonstrations, and assisting in various ways in and out of the classroom.

The new brigade commander, Col. Hazen Baron, and a team of representatives from the brigade visited the facilities Aug. 29 to get a first-hand look at the daily operations of the ranch and renew their commitment to the partnership.

They toured the ranch's two residential buildings, on-site middle school and outdoor recreation facilities.

"They have incredible facilities here — beautiful buildings and acres and acres of prime wooded

Families celebrate Grandparents Day Sunday

Military challenges include long-distance relationships

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

In 1970 a West Virginia housewife named Marian Herndon initiated a national campaign to designate a special day each year to celebrate grandparents. Her efforts were finally rewarded in 1978, when President Jimmy Carter proclaimed National Grandparents Day would be celebrated each year on the first Sunday after Labor Day.

But for military families all over the world, Grandparents Day is celebrated every time they have the chance to visit the grandparents or grandchildren they've left behind. It comes not one day a year, but as often as possible, in five- or seven-day increments, and it starts with a leave slip.

Aubrey Coovrey, 11, splits her vacation time between grandparents in two states. She keeps up with "Grandpa Don" by e-mailing him regularly and sending pictures and artwork via the internet and postal service.

"I get to talk to him a lot, but it's not as good as seeing him," said Coovrey, who's a sixth-grader at Faith Middle School. "My mom takes pictures of me, and we just put a stamp on the back and turn them into postcards so he can see everything I'm doing. I'm making him a scrapbook for Christmas."

"Grandpa Don" is retired Navy officer Don Coovrey who lives in Bonita, Calif. A week away from retirement, he drove more than 600 miles to be at his daughter's side when his first grandchild was born in 1989.

"When my daughter was little and we were stationed overseas, correspondence was primarily by mail and phone calls," Don said. "Phone calls were a treat due to cost and time differences. My wife would talk about the grandparents all the time and go over photo albums, slides and old 8 millimeter movies to keep the grandparents fresh in (the kids') minds.

"Now I send packages and e-mail all the time, but it's still not enough. It's never enough. Nothing can replace actually being able to hold them, look them in the eyes and tell them you love them."

Don said the military helps compensate for the separation of family.

"Active duty and retired military don't like separation, but they seem to have adapted or adjusted. We find ways to cope. The military family often fills that void by connecting with other military families."

Fort Benning resident Denise Sharp said she's fostered a relationship with friends in the military community who have become surrogate grandparents to her children.

"They're nearly old enough to be our parents, and they have grandchildren of their own far away," she said. "It's a relationship we all benefit from. Nothing or no one can replace family, but the kids don't make the distinction between blood relatives and military family.

"We've known each other for five years, and we've developed a bond that's very important to us all."

Ruby Mixon, the activity coordinator for Oak Manor Nursing Home in Columbus, said some military families take part in their "Adopt a Grandparent" program to help children develop relationships with elderly residents.

"It works good both ways," Mixon said. "The children are away from their grandparents and missing the benefits of that important relationship. The nursing home residents are often lonely and separated from family too. It fulfills both sides."

Like Coovrey, Master Sgt. Jim and Sherri Alexander have experienced the separation of grandparents from both sides of the coin.

When their own children were young, they often lived hours away from grandparents.

Now, just a few years from retirement, the Alexanders are stationed at Fort Benning and separated from their own grandchildren. Sherri fills notebooks with anecdotes and pictures her daughter sends as her grandchildren grow.

"I just love looking at the world through their eyes," she said. "Being a grandparent is getting the opportunity to experience the joys of parenting all over again. Distance doesn't diminish the joy when we're together."

Q: I have received several phone calls from a collection company that says I owe them money for a past due balance on my credit card. These guys are harassing me like crazy! The last guy to call said he's going to contact my chain of command if I don't pay it all off this week. There's no way I can afford to pay off the debt. Can he really call my commander and if so, what can my commander do about it?

A: Before I answer your question it's important to clarify the status of the person who is contacting you. There is a huge difference in the legal status of a creditor, the person you originally owed the money, and a professional debt collector, the person who has been hired to collect the debt.

It sounds like the person who's calling you works for a professional debt collection company hired by your credit card company. According to federal law, pursuant to the Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, Title 15, USC 1692, a debt collector cannot contact your chain of command unless you authorize the contact in writing or the company obtains a court order that allows such contact.

The next time the debt collector calls, make him aware that he is unable to contact your commander and if he does you are able to sue his company for damages. Please note that you do have the law on your side here, but the debt collector has the power to injure your credit report, so you may want to hold your tongue when he makes you mad.

If the person who is calling actually works for your credit card company, he is considered a creditor. A creditor can contact your chain of command, but he has to follow the Army's rules before he does so.

AR 600-15 sets forth the standards which creditors must meet when processing applications for collection assistance. A phone call to your company commander does not satisfy the regulation.

In most cases, the creditor will have to provide your commander with a copy of the original contract and all related documentation, along with a certificate swearing that the creditor has fully complied with all applicable laws.

If the creditor fails to comply with Army requirements, your commander should not take any action against you regarding the debt.

If the creditor does comply with the Army requirements your commander may interview you about the debt.

If the creditor has not obtained a judgment against you and you deny that the debt exists, or you dispute the amount of the debt, your commander still cannot take any action against you and the Army's role in the matter ends. The creditor must resolve the debt through the civil court system.

If the creditor has obtained a judgment against you, or you admit the debt exists and confirm its amount, your commander may then order you to pay the debt. At that point, if you fail to pay the debt your commander may take action against you.

Possible actions include: written counseling, a note in your permanent file, a bar to your re-enlistment, an administrative separation or UCMJ action against you.

In any case, the Legal Assistance Division can assist you with debt issues in several ways. First, a Legal Assistance attorney can inform the creditor that you are represented by counsel. This will require the creditor to stop those harassing phone calls.

Once the creditor receives this notice he must then deal with your attorney regarding the debt, not you. Second, your attorney can try to negotiate a new payment plan or a settlement of the debt.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division and make an appointment with a Legal Assistance attorney. The number is 545-3281 and appointments are scheduled Friday morning for the following week. When you come in for your appointment, be sure to bring all paperwork regarding the debt.

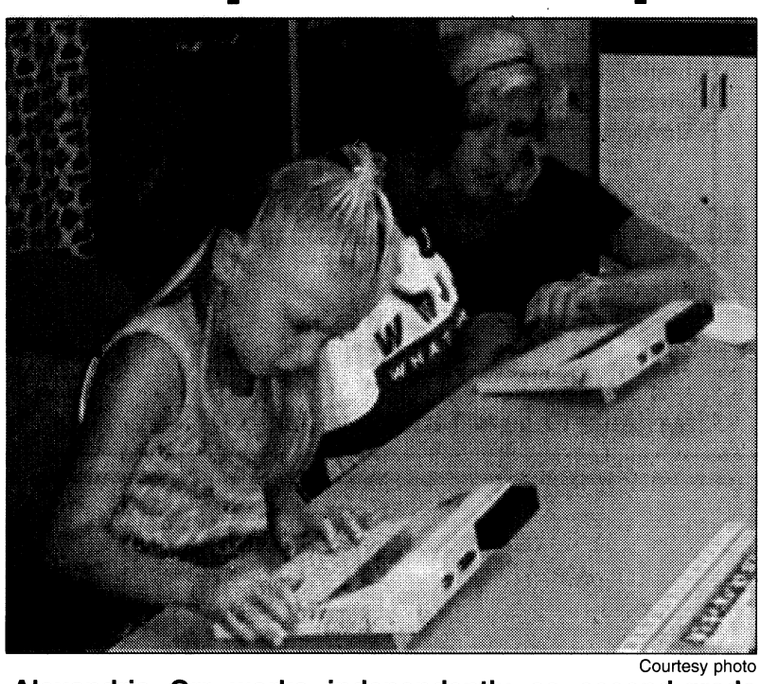
Discourse Lab promotes participation

Technology helps teachers present lessons



McBride Elementary School

Imagine a classroom where technology is integrated into the curriculum by connecting the teacher with every student in the classroom.

Imagine lessons that have 100 percent participation with immediate teacher feedback. For 20 McBride second-graders, this is a reality.

Second-graders in Penny Wilson's class call the Discourse Lab their classroom. Discourse Technologies, a company based in Wisconsin, developed a combination of hardware and software that allows teachers to engage all students in lessons and assess learning as it occurs.

Students use low-profile desktop terminals, known as Studycoms, to communicate with the teacher. At the teacher prompt, students use the keyboard to enter their answers.

Courtesy photo

Alexandria Orr works independently as second-grade teacher Penny Wilson works with Alicia Spearman.

Using the computer at the teacher station, the answers of the students are monitored.

It is immediately known which students are following and understand the lesson. The teacher can adjust the lesson plans at that moment, if necessary, to accommodate the pace of the learning in the class.

This technology provides a way to engage all students in learning.

It also builds self-esteem because students can respond to questions without fear of embarrassment.

"I'm not afraid if I have the answer wrong," said Collin Monfee. "I think that's neat."

Another component of the Discourse Lab is the ability to display students' answers on a large television screen.

This information can be displayed anonymously, or with student names, offering the opportunity for knowledge to be shared throughout the classroom.

Kenna Carillo likes to see her answers displayed. "It gives everyone a chance to learn," she said.

Discourse can be used for whole-class instruction. It is a teaching tool that provides insight into how the students are progressing.

In the Discourse classroom, each student is heard, and everyone is a participant in the lesson.

Students can't catch Gingerbread Man

Character helps kindergartners tour school

Velinda Hickey

McBride Elementary School

The kindergarten children at McBride Elementary School were able to tour their school while in hot pursuit of the small, yet famous, runaway Gingerbread Man.

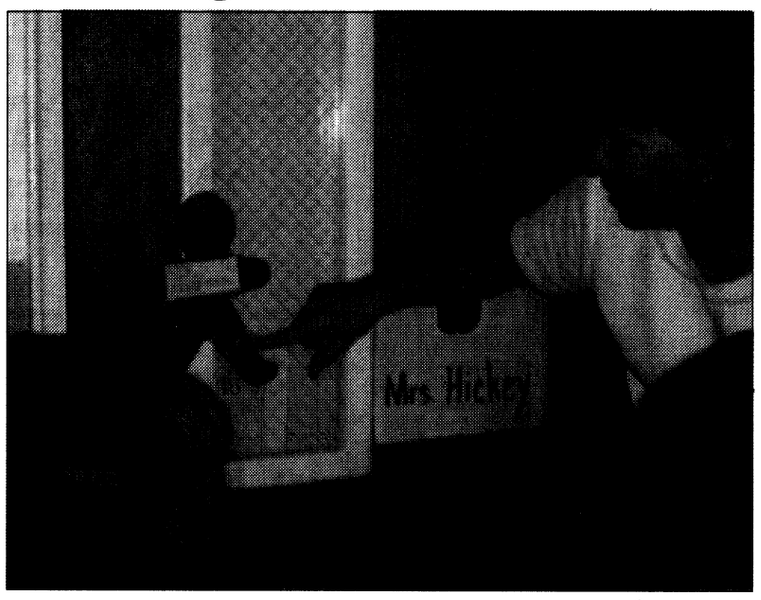
Several adults in the building reportedly saw the small running cookie and tried to help the students find him, but the children, with all of their effort, were unable to catch up with the fast cookie.

However, the Gingerbread Man did leave each child a gingerbread cookie at the end of the search, which they enjoyed eating during class.

The kindergarten teachers use the Gingerbread Man Story at the beginning of the school year to help teach the students about their school.

Each teacher takes her class on a tour of the building while searching for clues left behind by the Gingerbread Man.

While searching for the runaway cookie, the teachers are able to point out different places in the school.



The children get a chance to see where the various rooms are located in a fun and very exciting way.

The children get a chance to go all around the school and become more comfortable with their environment.

When asked what they liked the most about the school tour, the following comments were made:

"I liked the notes the Gingerbread Man left in the library and other places," said Emily O'Berry.

"I liked being really quiet in the halls looking for him," said Courtney Suter.

Courtesy photo

Velinda Hickey reads a clue to find the Gingerbread Man to kindergartners on the first day of school.

"I liked eating the cookie he left me," Quinlin Plaut said.

"I liked talking to the nurse about him," said Ashley Long.

"I liked looking for him in the library.

"I saw books that looked like they wanted to be read," said Kristen Kopp.

McBride Elementary ready for school

McBride Elementary School

The teachers and students at McBride Elementary School have started the school year in full force. From pre-K to third grade to special areas, each class has been busy learning and having a lot of fun. The faculty and staff have set the tone for a successful school year.

The pre-K children have been getting to know one another, sharing, listening, and learning how to follow directions.

They are enjoying singing and learning finger plays.

All of these skills will help ensure these students will be ready for success in school.

The kindergarten classes are beginning to work on pre-reading skills.

The first-graders have been learning how to supply information for PowerPoint slides on the computer.

Each child had his own slide, which included his picture, signature and dictated sentences that was shown to parents during McBride's Open House.

The second-graders are enthusiastic about graphing. Each class has discussed ways to graph information and has completed graphs for display.

They have also created biographical sketches and have shared them with each other. In the computer lab each child is learning keyboarding skills to enhance the use of technology throughout the year.

The third-graders have been studying the various types of graphs on the computer.

The program the students are using to set up and design graphs is called Graph Club. This program works well with the new math series that the Fort Benning schools are using this year.

"Doing graphs on the computer is fun because we get to print in color," said Kiara Quarles.

The McBride students also are benefiting from instruction in guidance, PE, art and music.

James Rutland's guidance program stresses the importance of proper school behavior both to the individual and to one's classmates.

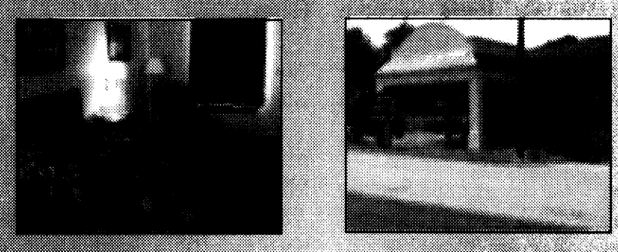
Rutland said that each lesson is designed to help children understand themselves and others. Positive social-emotional behaviors and attitudes are taught to benefit them throughout life.

His program uses the school's motto, "I can and I will do my very best!"

In PE the students are getting into shape by learning soccer skills. Coach Ken Stettes said, "Soccer is a great sport to begin the school year because it uses gross motor skills and has good conditioning drills."

Stettes likes to use soccer because it meets the needs of the advanced players as well as the beginners. This allows all students to feel confident to ensure a successful PE program.

In Peggy Ander's music classes the students at each grade level are focusing on skills that are appropriate for their particular level.



The kindergarten children are learning solo and group parts with emphasis on slow, fast, loud, and soft. The first-graders began the school year with musical notes while the second-graders are learning to read music using lines and spaces.

Third-grade students are using percussion instruments and will later learn about other instruments.

All of the classes will use these skills to build new skills for school year.

Walter Blanks began his art program with a review of basic drawing skills for each grade level. Artwork is displayed throughout the building to support the students' use of these skills and to promote art as an exciting part of each day.

academic and social performance.

"That's their favorite part," he said. "It's turned into this major competition to see who can get it the most. It's amazing how much that recognition means to them."

Though Gingrich enjoys watching the boys progress physically and academically, he said the greatest thrill is watching them develop a new sense of trust and self-confidence.

"Sometimes you find one that has a particularly hard time adjusting here," he said. "It's most rewarding when you see him open up and learn to trust again."

Unfortunately not all residents make a successful transition to life in group housing. Last year Gingrich and his wife Jennifer shared their Christmas with one young resident who had no place to go for the holiday. The boy was recently removed from the ranch after failing to conform to house rules.

"It's hard," Gingrich said. "He was my little buddy. It was hard to watch him go through that and not be able to adapt. A few months ago we had three boys adopted in one month.

"That's a major victory. Then something like this happens and it's really hard to let go."

For the most part Carpenter's Way experiences very few discipline problems, Gingrich said.

"It's a misconception that boys in these kinds of places are delinquents. In fact, it's just the opposite. They're good kids whose parents are abusive or negligent or in prison. They need positive role models."

As a Ranger, Gingrich embodies the qualities Carpenter's Way staff strive to teach their young residents, including a strong work ethic and a desire to learn.

"We really appreciate all that he does for these boys," said Karen Johnson, Carpenter's Way development director. "He's setting an example we would be proud to see them emulate. We believe God works all things out for the good of those who love him.

"One day these boys will look back at the trials in their lives and, like sergeant Gingrich, see how God has used them to shape their lives and make them into better people."

land. Materially there's everything here a boy could dream of," Baron said. "But the one thing they need the most is the one thing they're missing — family. That's where we come in. If we can fill that void in some small way, it would be incredibly gratifying to us, and we may never know the far-reaching impact it will have on these young men.

"Perhaps the greatest resource we can offer is our time."

Karen Johnson, Carpenter's Way development director, said the boys have a lot in common with the Rangers, which makes the partnership an ideal match for both organizations.

"They've got all men. We've got all boys. They're on the move, always doing cool stuff. Our boys love that," she said. "The Rangers are used to moving and leaving the people they've come to know and love. Unfortunately, our boys have experienced that trauma at a very early age.

"The boys need someone to look up to, and who better to lead the way than the Rangers? It's a win-win situation."

Philip Tisdale, executive director of the ranch, said the Rangers are continuing a partnership tradition that has been strongly enhanced by the contributions of a few dedicated Soldiers.

Over the past two years, several Soldiers have spent many off-duty hours with the boys, including one Soldier who recently adopted a resident.

"The Partners in Education is a very important component of our program here," Tisdale said. "It means a lot to the boys to know that someone cares enough to give of their time on a continual basis. It helps them feel accepted. We appreciate that."

Johnson said the residents look forward to visits from the Soldiers from the training brigade because they feel comfortable with them.

"We work a lot on social skills here," she said. "Most of the boys do not feel comfortable around adults because it was adults that hurt them. It's wonderful to see them talk freely and trust the friends they've made at the Ranger Brigade."

graders are on target with Major Anti."

Matthew said his classmates have been asking him about his father's sport.

"They want to know what kind of rifle he shoots, and if he's really good at it," he said. "I tell them he is very good at it, and I'm proud of him. I hope he brings home a Gold medal."

Anti, who also competed in the '92 Olympics, brought along his gun and shooting equipment, including shooting glasses and targets.

He briefly explained the purpose and use of each piece of equipment and allowed 6-year-old Mark Yanoschik to model his shooting apparel.

"It was so cool," Yanoschik said. "It was really heavy and goofy looking, but it was cool."

Anti presented each student with an autographed Olympic sports card and elicited a promise they'd be watching for him on television competing for the Gold.

SINCE 1979. MEETING THE NEEDS OF CHILDREN IN AMERICA AND AROUND THE WORLD

Feed The C

Founder and President Larry Jones

It takes more than food to give a child self respect and hope. It takes the compassionate hands of love providing both food for the body and food for the inner spirit. For over 2 decades we have been committed to one mission..... .....feeding children with help and hope. It's the kind of feeding we do best!

Last year we distributed more than 90 million pounds of food and other essential commodities. Supplemented over 670,000 meals daily.

With over 90% of every dollar going directly to program services.

By designating your CFC contribution to Feed The Children you'll be investing in the future of our society ..... our children.

Religious education doesn't end with childhood

Bill Putnam
USAIC Chaplains' Office

reflections

How old is too old when we talk about education? There's barely a minimum age for education.

We're told that babies are able to establish attitudes and personalities before they are born, based on their prenatal environment. Good music and a quiet, pleasant environment are supposed to contribute to their future. Then we are supposed to read to babies and talk to them from their earliest beginnings, to help make them eager and able to learn.

Often we read in the newspaper about someone who has received a high-school diploma or a college degree when he or she was 90 years old or older.

Very well then, if individuals do not get too old to learn in secular settings, why do we feel that once a child has been to Sunday School for a few years, and possibly "joined the church," he has had a sufficient amount of religious education to last him for the rest of his life?

At best, many adults feel that a little "self-directed Bible study" is the most they could ever need or want.

The month of September is observed in the U.S. Army as Religious Education Month. That's why I am taking this space to talk about some religious education opportunities at Fort Benning. Often, when religious education is spoken of, people immediately think of Sunday School, CCD and Torah study. Well, we have those at Fort Benning.

The Main Post Sunday School is located in Edward A. White School on First Division Road, and is every Sunday from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m. There are classes for all age groups from 3 years through adults. Custer Terrace Chapel also conducts its own Sunday School at the Chapel.

CCD operates from September through May, for ages 4 through high school, and this year will be at 10:10 a.m. at Wilson School.

A Torah study is each Sunday morning at 9 a.m. at Soldiers' Chapel.

Additionally, there are women's groups, Bible study groups that meet in homes and some that are lead by chaplains in unit areas, and there are youth groups.

A program that just began at Fort Benning this year is Club Beyond. It is for youths and there are separate programs for junior high, middle school and for senior high school students. A professional director is contracted to lead this program. Meeting times and places are: Junior high, middle school, at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Sundays and senior high at Custer Terrace Chapel from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Thursdays.

All Fort Benning youths are invited and encouraged to attend Club Beyond.

Programs include fellowship, Bible study, recreation and refreshments.

There are various outings, retreats, camps and other activities planned during the year.

For more information concerning meeting times and places of religious education activities, refer to the schedule on the Spiritual page in The Bayonet, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715, ask your unit chaplain or call the chapel that sponsors the event.

Protestant Women of the Chapel meet every Thursday morning at Custer Terrace Chapel from 9:30 to 11:45 a.m. for Bible study, fellowship, prayer and praise.

The Military Council of Catholic Women meets on Friday mornings at 10 a.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel for the Rosary and Bible study.

You are never too old to participate in religious education. You are always invited. As we begin a new school year, I encourage you to participate in religious education.

chapel notes

Protestant Women of the Chapel meet — The Protestant Women of the Chapel meet from 9:30 to 11:45 a.m. Thursdays in the Custer Terrace Chapel.

The program includes prayer, praise, Bible study and fellowship.

All women are invited to attend. Child care is provided at the chapel.

Fall Bible studies begin Sept. 14 with the theme "Proclaim the Blessed Hope." Studies to choose from include "Integrity, Living the Truth" and "Building Better Relationships." For more information, call Susan Parks, 682-6551 or Lisa Truitt, 689-5050.

Military Council of Catholic Women — The Military Council of Catholic Women meets Fridays at 10 a.m. at the Main Post Catholic Chapel. The program will begin with the rosary followed by a Bible study.

Child care will be provided. Refreshments will be served after the program. For more information, call Marty Terhune at 682-0308 or Marge Connelly at 682-2754.

Club Beyond — The junior high and middle school youths meets from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Sundays in the Infantry Center Chapel Annex. The senior high group meets from 6:30 until 8 p.m. Thursdays at the Custer Terrace Chapel.

For more information, call 545-2359.

Pre-marriage class — The next pre-marriage class will be Sept. 17 at 10 a.m. at the Fort Benning Golf Club House. To register call the Main Post Catholic Chapel at 545-1452.

Anyone planning to marry in the Catholic Church between now and the end of the year should plan to attend.

Teens test selves through parents

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Family Life Ministries Program

Forming their own values is one of the developmental tasks of a teenager. During this process, teens frequently challenge the rules and values of their parents. This process can cause extreme heartache to parents.

When a teen goes against the family's value system, it not only affects the prodigal, but also the marriage relationship, and the rest of the family.

This is especially true if the parents are not in agreement on how to deal with this situation.

On the other hand, the actions of the wayward teen may be simply a reflection of a dysfunction in the marriage or the family.

Parents should recognize this time of turmoil as the beginning process of their child becoming an adult. This allows parents and children to express concerns, reaffirm common values and negotiate differences.

In addition, it helps parents to re-examine again the reasons for holding the values that they have held. If we insist on forcing our values on teens, by imposing greater restrictions and pronouncing increased demands on them, we often become unjust and exasperate our children.

Frequently parents of wayward adolescents experience a sense of failure as a parent. They are often more concerned about what their neighbors will think of them as parents than what is best for their teenager.

Perfect parenting does not guarantee perfect behavior in children.

Rather than focus on the negative behaviors and values of their teenager, parents should accentuate the positive actions of their adolescent.

Emphasize positive behaviors that they had prior to going their own way. Ask their teachers, pastor and relatives to indicate positive traits or behaviors that they see in your son or daughter.

In addition parents of prodigals should look for ways to encourage their teens and to believe in them. By saying, "I may not agree with what you are doing, but I believe in you, and I love you and I value you." This puts internal pressure on the prodigal and allows them to respect you.

Wayward teens need not wreak havoc on you, your marriage or your family.

If you would like help in handling a prodigal, free counseling is available.

Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or email me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Range gives hunters place to practice

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Bayonet correspondent

With less than one week from the start of archery season the bow hunters in Georgia are in the thick of things. There is much preparation involved in having a safe, successful archery season. Scouting, practice, tuning equipment, clothing and scent preparation and more practice.

At this point in the game (did you guess) practice is probably one of the most important things. Fort Benning has one of the finest archery ranges in the state. The range is in its third season, located in the Harmony Church area near the Sniper School.

Hughes

There is a map located at Outdoor Recreation for specific directions if you're not sure of the location. The range has a 17-yard indoor range and clubhouse. The roomy indoor zero range has targets from 10 to 60 yards. There also is a 2200-meter walking range with burlap targets. Most of the burlap targets have animal silhouettes for simulated hunting practice. One week prior to season start Sept. 16, an experienced archer from Directorate of Community Activities will be present to assist with any problems.

The range is open to all archers; civilians will be required to sign a waiver of liability before shooting.

Also for interested archers there will be a 3-D competition and novelty broad head shoot from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sunday. The broad head shoot should be interesting and informative, as one of the most difficult tasks is to achieve accurate broad head flight. The 3-D shoots cater to all ages from youth to adult. Archers younger than the age of 18 must be accompanied by an adult.

The success of any program is due to the people who run and support it — Dewayne Mosher, Tim Lokker, Donnie Conard, Steve Skotsky and Frank Bue.

Many thanks go to these dedicated archers for running a great program, also Shooters of Columbus and Bass and Buck for their donations and time. The range is truly a culmination of a group effort and is run by volunteers with help from DCA.

Without volunteers the range will cease to exist; so if you have any spare time please inquire, your help will definitely be appreciated.

For more information, call Cliff Hughes, Outdoor Rec. at 545-7978 or Dewayne Mosher at 989-0156.

Pistol shooters compete in match

Competitors face weather, new stages

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

More than 30 shooters faced shooting in the rain to compete during the September tactical pistol match at English Range Saturday.

The shooters blazed away at the two paper and the 12 steel targets to see who was the best of the best.

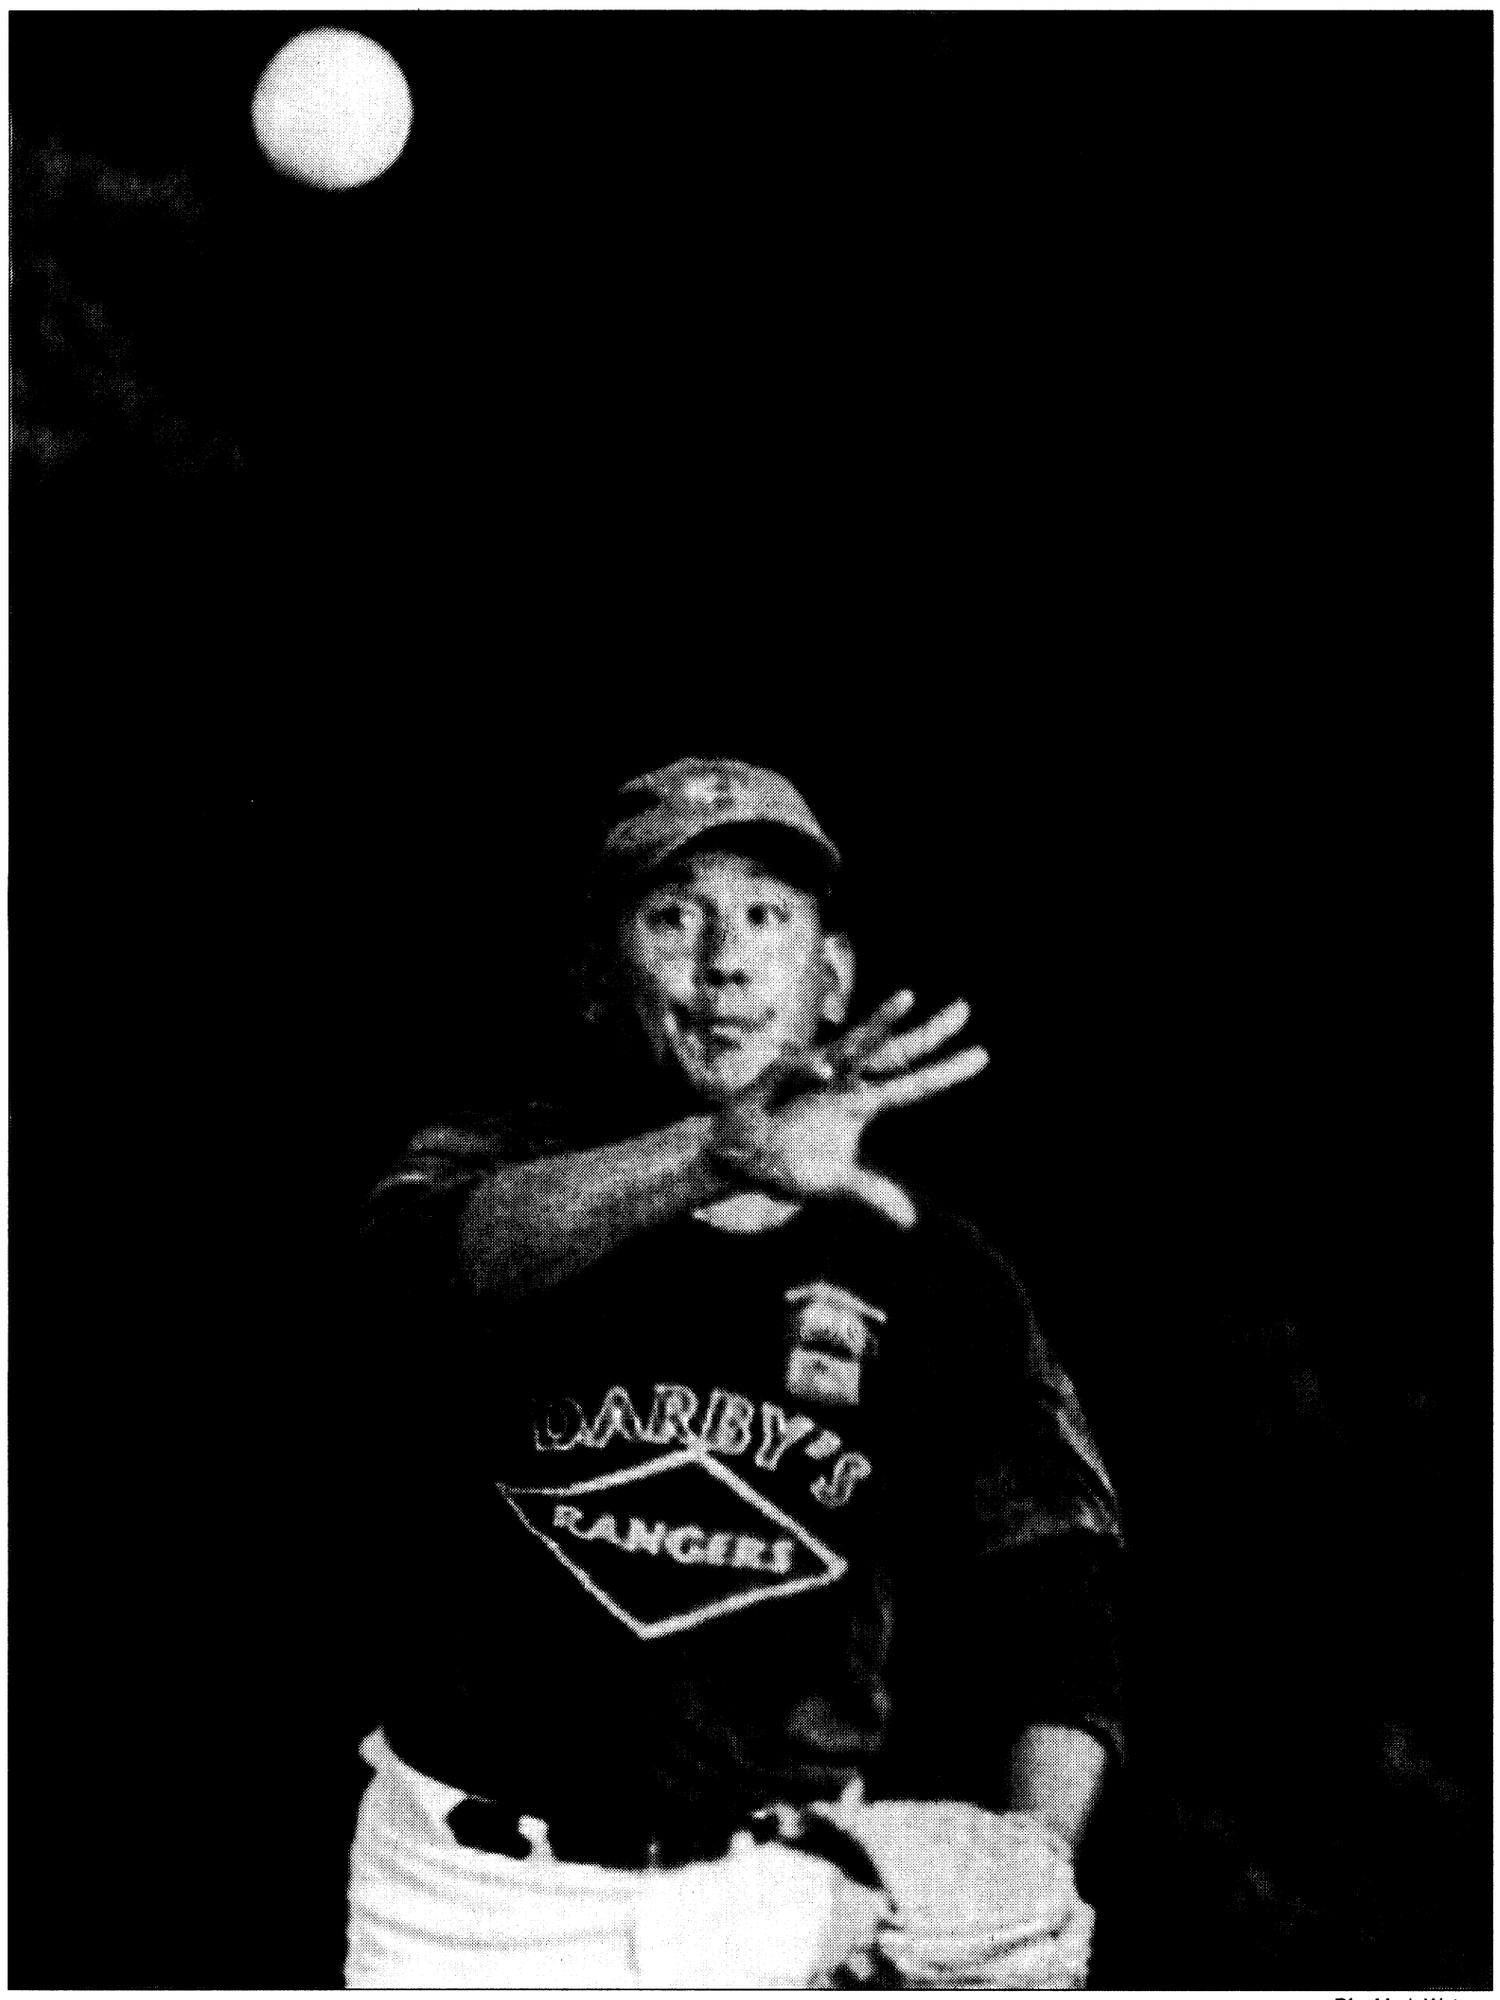
The shoot was shortened because of the weather, said Jim Graham, assistant manager of the Rifle and Pistol Club.

Shooters were required to hit the paper targets three times, two shots in the body and one in the head of the silhouette target, and then knock down the steel targets.

The winner of the stock service class was Randall Banks followed by Don Schleicher and Al Edwards. In the enhanced service and custom service classes, Edwards took the top spots and in the custom service class, he was followed by Frank Russo and Clayton Meals.

David Tutherow took top honors in the service revolver class and Frank Russon won the back-up auto class.

The Rifle and Pistol Club has both tactical rifle and pistol shoots each month. The pistol shoots are usually on the first Saturday of the month and the rifle shoots are the second Sunday of the month.



The Rifle and Pistol Club, along with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit and The Muscogee Longrifles are hosting the annual Deer Hunters Zero from 8 a.m. to noon Oct. 1 and 14 at English Range.

The Deer Hunters Zero offers a chance, for people who are eligible to hunt on Fort Benning, to zero in and practice with their firearms without being a member of the Rifle and Pistol Club. For more information, call 689-3371.

Rangers blast Rock, win post championship

4th RTB wins post softball tournament

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Pfc. Mark Watson

Rangers' shortstop K.K. Chinn guns the ball to first to make an easy out. The Rangers beat the Rock in both games of the doubleheader coming from behind, winning the post intramural softball tournament.

In the final games of the post intramural softball tournament Aug. 30, Fort Benning's only undefeated team, the Rock, faced the Darby Rangers to see who would walk away with the championship trophy and who would just walk away.

With a record of 12-0, the Rock from C Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, were ahead of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's Rangers by only one game in the double elimination tournament.

But at the end of the evening the Rangers were ahead by one game and earned their bragging rights.

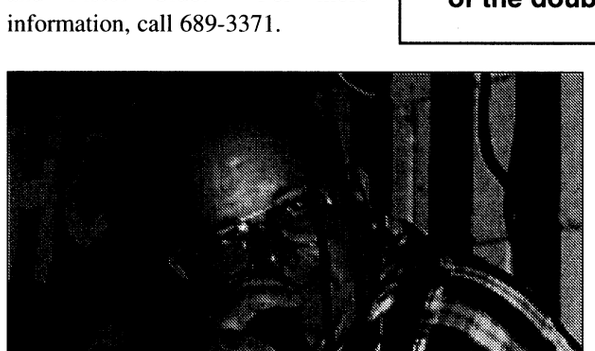
The game began with the Rock stepping up to the plate, and getting shut down before they could build momentum.

Things started off better for the Rangers when their catcher hit a single, which turned into a double on an overthrow by the Rock's shortstop James Lacey.

With the next two batters grounding out, it looked as if Lacey would be stranded on second until left fielder Tom Siter, the Rangers' big gun, drove him home off of a hit into the outfield.

Second baseman Fred Canan hit a single moving Siter into scoring position.

First baseman Pete Villalobos drove Siter around the horn to give the Rangers a 2-0 lead in the first.



Both teams played strong defense and kept each other scoreless in the second, but in the top of the third, the Rock scored.

After hitting a double, extra hitter Duane Young rounded the bases to score after right-center fielder Richard Bettis followed it up with another double.

The Rangers nearly kept the Rock hitless using teamwork.

On a line drive from the Rock's right fielder, Jose Marichal, the ball went off Rangers' pitcher Joe Hughes'

Mike Boswell calls out bids at the Possum Trot Auction every Friday in Seale, Ala.

Possum Trot auction offers good deal of fun

East Alabama offers down-home good times

Bridgett Siter

outdoor corner

It was definitely a girls' night out — a chance to kick up our heels, paint the town red, party till dawn — you know the drill.

So we left the guys with the kids and take-out pizza, donned our best overalls and pointed the minivan toward Seale, Ala., and the Possum Trot Auction.

Now I'm thinking you're thinking exactly what I was thinking before I experienced Possum Trot (which incidentally is French for "dueling banjoes.") The very name evokes visions of backwoods hillbilly hick, and if that's your idea of Friday night fare, it's everything you ever dreamed of and more.

Located less than 30 miles south of Fort Benning on Highway 431, the Possum Trot Auction is housed in a rather primitive looking wood and block-framed building adjacent to Martin's Barbecue Restaurant, which is a great place to grab a quick bite before the auction.

A sign at the door says, "Ain't no place like this place anywhere near this place, so this must be the place," and on any given Friday night in Seale, this is obviously The Place to be. Though the festivities begin at 7:30 p.m., the crowd starts arriving about 6:30 to preview the items going up for auction — everything from tools and appliances to antique furniture and genuine junk.

The interior of the Possum Trot is as eclectic as the merchandise they offer. The walls are covered in folk-art signs that advertise exotic dancers and hot goobers, and an odd assortment of paraphernalia hangs from the rafters: wigs and boots and kitchen utensils and straw hats. There's even a real stuffed possum mounted by the front door to greet you as you enter the building.

Be sure to get there before the Fort Benning offers waterfowl hunting

Staff Sgt. Carl R. Sandy
Headquarters, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

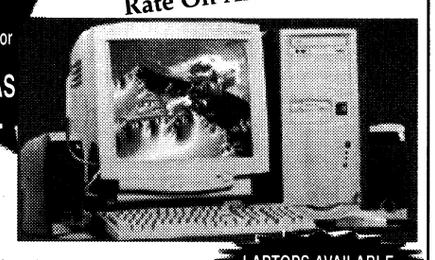
Fort Benning has numerous ponds, creeks and a river running through it. Unfortunately, Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties are not in the path of a major flyway. This doesn't mean waterfowl don't pass through or winter here.

If you're not expecting to experience something from Cabela's Under Wild Skies then you can have a great time afield.

Wood ducks are a sure bet. With a little scouting, and I mean a little, you can locate these birds.

Most of the birds are local, but a good many are out of towners. Wood ducks love slow water and spend most of their time in backwater, sloughs and ponds.

Other ducks you can expect to see are teal and shovelers early in the season. As the season progresses you will start seeing ducks such as bluebill and mallards. The bluebills seem to like the ponds better than rivers and creeks. As for the mallard and geese, you will probably do better on the river.



Remember that most of these birds are well versed in decoy spreads and barrel movement, so patience is key when trying to get them in close. As for hitting them, most ducks appear to be flying slower than they are because of their size.

This causes a lot of hunters to shoot behind them.

When you miss, and you will, blame it on the steel shot. I do.

Fort Benning offers the waterfowler a lot of opportunity. Ensure you follow all federal, state and post regulations.

Be aware of and courteous to other hunters. Be safe when traveling by boat and when wearing chest waders and this waterfowl season will be hooah!

Rangers: Topple undefeated Rock

glove. Shortstop K.K. Chinn scrambled to catch the ball making the out.

Making the final hit for the Rock, third baseman Lemar Willis hit a double bringing in Bettis.

The game continued to get better for the Rangers as they pounded the Rock's defense into near submission.

Chinn hit a single and then was driven home by right-center fielder Preston Smith who reached third because of the Rock's errors.

The ever dangerous Siter stepped up to the plate again and this time he solidly connected with the ball sending it over the left field fence. Smith went home, which added one more homer to Siter's record of 24 homeruns giving the Rangers the lead, 5-2.

Both teams were scoreless in the fourth and fifth innings, but with the Rangers up to bat again in the sixth, right fielder Jamie Kirby hit a ground rule double and then scored off of a single by Hughes.

Hughes scored when extra hitter Jerald Polson hit a double deep into the outfield.

Bryant stepped up to the plate again and hit a deep shot to the fence scoring Polson and Bridgers giving the Rangers a 9-2 lead.

The Rock needed to score eight runs in the seventh inning to win the tournament, but were unsuccessful.

With two men on base, left fielder Damon Sharp hit a drive over the right field fence to give the Rock three more runs.

Although the Rock began a rally, it was short lived giving the Rangers the victory, 9-5, with one more game to decide the title.

After a 30-minute break, the Rock took to the batter's box again.

Marichal hit a triple and then second baseman Jody Shouse hit a single driving in Marichal.

The Rangers' Bryant and Chinn both hit doubles and right-center fielder Preston Smith hit a sacrifice fly to center field scoring Bryant.

Siter took his turn at bat again and pounded the ball over the fence for his second homer of the night.

Hughes hit a single and Kirby hit a single driving in the final Ranger run of the inning to give the Rangers a 4-1 lead.

Robert Linschoten, the Rock's left-center fielder, hit a double. Shortstop James Lacey singled to drive Linschoten in bringing the game within two.

The Rock kept the Rangers hitless in the bottom of the second and the Rangers kept the Rock hitless in the third.

With two men out in the bottom of the third, the Rock pitcher Frankie George told Siter to take the base with no challenge. Hughes and Canan hit back-to-back doubles, Canan scoring Hughes and Siter.

Left-center fielder Wade Kirkpatrick hit a single to score Canan and gave the Rangers the lead, 7-2.

Rock's extra hitter Young hit a double and Marichal, who hit a double, drove Young home.

Shouse hit an infield homerun off of an error from Kirkpatrick scoring another run and bringing the game within two.

The Rock's defense kept the Rangers scoreless in the fourth.

In the top of the fifth, George and Sharp connected with the ball and then Lacey doubled, bringing George and Sharp home, which tied the game at 7 runs apiece.

Chinn hit a single for the Rangers followed by Canan.

Kirkpatrick redeemed himself as he drove in Chinn and then Canan scored off of a sacrifice fly from Kirby giving the Rangers the lead once again 9-7.

The Rangers kept the Rock hitless in the sixth and then scored one run of their own expanding their lead, 10-7.

The top of the seventh was do or die for the Rock, and they knew it. They began to chip away at the Rangers hitting a single here and a double there to score four runs to tie the game.

The crowd was on its feet as Rangers' right-center fielder Preston Smith hit a single and put the game-winning run on first.

Siter was intentionally walked and then third baseman Carlie Bridgers hit a grounder past Lacey's glove, which gave the Rangers the victory 11-10 and the championship title.

Rangers' coach Richard Lopez said it's great to be the champions.

"The game got pretty rough and tight, but we were able to pull it out," Lopez said.

"We had good bats and that's what pulled us out. Our team really came together."

Lopez said when Siter was walked, it gave them the win.

"They were afraid he would hit it over the fence again, so they walked him," he said. "It cost them. They advanced Smith and they lost the game."

Batting was the key to the Rock's loss, first baseman Ken Bosier said.

"Our sticks just never came alive," Bosier said.

"We came into the game (thinking we had already won) and never woke up.

"I hate to end the season on two losses, but we really had a great season."

Possum Trot: Hosts weekly auction

"congregation" and grab a comfortable spot on one of the padded church pews. Once the auction starts it's standing room only, unless you count the assortment of mismatched chairs and benches that line the walls. But don't get too comfortable if you chose to sit there — when the bidding starts you're likely to lose your seat. Everything that isn't nailed down eventually finds it's way to the auction block. So if you like that chair you're sitting on, plan on making the highest bid.

Now I suspect the good folks at the Possum Trot Auction lay it on a little thick for us newcomers, but there's a curious dichotomy at work here. It seems the Possum Trot has recently made headlines all over Alabama and Georgia, and the media feeding-frenzy has drawn hordes of first-timers to the auction. The regulars don't necessarily think that's a good thing.

Be that as it may, they sure did treat us like home folk. They offered insider secrets to the art of auctioning — "Don't grab the first bid, the price will drop," — and their best theories on auction etiquette — "Friends before the auction, friends after the auction, every man for himself in between." The auction regulars were just as friendly and down to earth as you'd expect at a place called the Possum Trot.

Auctioneer Mike Boswell runs a rowdy show — lots of cheering and hand clapping throughout the evening.

Bidders showed as much enthusiasm for the grass hula skirt as they did the vintage crystal and genuine McCoy vases.

There's something for everyone at the Possum Trot — go see for yourself. Just don't tell them I sent you.

Retention woes bring team to post

Spouses may hold key to staying in

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

In an effort to determine reasons why officers, especially those with less than 10 years of service, are leaving the Army, a team from Fort Leavenworth, Kan., will visit Fort Benning Tuesday and Wednesday to talk with people who would know — the spouses.

Spouses whose sponsors have five, 10 or 18 years in service, plus or minus two years, are invited to attend the two-hour focus group sessions, said Deborah Holton, installation volunteer coordinator.

"They want to get the view of the spouses and ask why, as a family, they are wanting to leave the military," Holton said.

"The Soldier's family impacts greatly on what the Soldier decides to do in terms of his or her career," Holton said.

Sessions will be held each day from 9 to 11 a.m., 1 to 3 p.m., and 6 to 8 p.m. at the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359, on Ingersoll Avenue.

Child care and refreshments will be provided.

Spouses are asked to call Holton at 545-3016 to sign up for their preferred session time and to reserve child care.

"Call as soon as possible, and tell your friends and neighbors," Holton said.

Three installations were selected for the visits — Fort Leavenworth, Fort Sill, Okla., and Fort Benning.

"One of the reasons they chose to come to Fort Benning is to reach the spouses of officers who are at the five-year and 10-year point of their careers," Holton said.

The review sessions are part of a follow-up to interviews conducted with officers earlier this summer by a team from Fort Leavenworth.

"The decision to stay or leave the Army is almost always a family decision," said Lt. Col. Mark Fields, chief of the Office of Infantry Proponency.

"Infantry Proponency, Training and Doctrine Command and the Army have been looking closely at the reasons our captains are choosing to get out," Fields said.

The attrition rate for captains is on the rise, and Fields said the reasons cited often deal with family issues.

Armywide the captain attrition rate is more than 10 percent.

"Every 3 percent represents 400 lost captains across the Army," Fields said.

"In that context, these focus sessions are very important," he said.

Food fantasy

Spc. Mitch Frazier

Pvt. Jeff Wilson, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, enjoys a surprise visit from his mother, Linda, Saturday. The visit and the home-cooked meal were Linda's food 'fantasy' and the premise for a show that will be featured on the Food Network.

TV show gives mother chance to surprise her son

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

When 19-year-old Jeff Wilson left his Paige, Ariz., home more than 14 weeks ago, he left behind his wife of one week, a child and the person he calls the most important person in his life, his mother.

He left it all behind for a new life, one he hoped would make a better living for him and his family.

He was joining the ranks of the U.S. Army, but becoming part of the green team wouldn't come without a price for the family.

His mother, Linda, is a single parent, and the two had been the other's confidant and best friend since his birth.

But now he was forced to cut those apron strings and move on with his life. He was now a Soldier in the U.S. Army.

Like any mother, Linda was devastated when her "little boy" left. She began to count down the days until she could see her son once again, but she couldn't help but feel guilty about the circumstances surrounding his departure.

"We were so busy with his wedding and getting things wrapped up with that, I just forgot," Linda said. "Ever since that day he left, I have thought about what I could have done to make it different."

It wasn't a forgotten "I love you" or Country honors missing veterans

Cohen calls POW-MIA readiness issue

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Last year in an observance marking POW-MIA Recognition Day, Secretary of Defense William Cohen dedicated a new inscription on the Tomb of the Unknowns at Arlington, Va., to reflect that the Tomb no longer contains the remains of an unknown Soldier from the Vietnam War.

The remains of 1st Lt. Michael Blassie, an Air Force pilot shot down over An Loc in 1972, were positively identified with DNA testing and his family buried him in St. Louis in July 1998.

Today, the third Friday in September, is the day set aside as the national POW-MIA Recognition Day.

The issue of POW-MIAs is a readiness issue for today's military, said Deputy Secretary of Defense Rudy de Leon in a speech to the National League of Families of POW/MIA in Southeast Asia June 22 in Washington, D.C.

"Even today, from the dangerous divide of the Korean Peninsula to our peacekeeping operations in Kosovo … our country, the United States, has a solemn compact with each and every Soldier, sailor, airman, Marine, and Coast Guardsman in the service; a commitment that we will do all in our power to find them and bring them home if they are captured, missing in action, or fall on the field of battle," de Leon said.

"So in a sense, the accounting for those who are still missing from past

Astronaut rockets campaign into full swing

Federal fund-raiser will begin collecting here Sept. 22

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Former astronaut Norman E. Thagard is a man of many accomplishments, and he admits he had help along the way.

A medical doctor and Vietnam veteran, he holds a degree in engineering and was the first American astronaut on the Russian space station Mir in 1995.

Thagard visited Columbus Sept. 7 to help the city kick off its United Way campaign — "Blasting off into the 21st Century." He took the chance to share anecdotes on how he had been helped through the years, by teachers and others, and to encourage individuals to give back to their community.

"Various Americans have helped me succeed. No one can do all these things through their own efforts," he said.

More than 1,100 people attended the kick-off luncheon including representatives from Fort Benning. The Brass Quintet of the Infantry Center Band provided music during the event at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center.

The United Way of the Chattahoochee Valley serves eight counties and hopes to raise $6 million this year, said retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White, the organization's president.

Organizations that receive funding from the United Way include the American Red Cross, Big Brothers-Big Sisters, Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women.

Last year Fort Benning Soldiers and civilian employees contributed $609,000 to the Combined Federal Campaign, and of that total, $90,000 stayed in the local community to fund United Way agencies and Fort Benning Soldier Family Support Activities, Chuck Walls, deputy garrison commander, said after the lunch.

The CFC will kick off its fund-raising drive Sept. 22. Its goal is to raise $550,000 in the Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City area by Nov. 3.

During the CFC, individuals are encouraged to give to the charity of their choice and more than 900 agencies are listed, including international, national and local organizations such as the United Way. There is no limit on the number of charities a person can designate.

"While our primary objective is to encourage everyone to give to the CFC effort, we are putting special emphasis on supporting our 'local' programs — both on post and in the Chattahoochee Valley

Family still remembers MIA

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

Even as children, my cousins and I knew not to question Sam's mother about him. I only know what I know by piecing together secondhand accounts from other family members.

Sam is one of more than 8,000 POW-MIA servicemen who served during the Korean War. He was declared "dead, body not recovered" years ago.

I don't know if he was drafted or if he volunteered, only that in 1951 he was a corporal with the 5th Regimental Combat Team in Korea.

Barely 20, Sam went out to pull a shift on a listening post. The Soldier sent out to relieve him never found him.

Later, Soldiers who had been held in the same POW camp as Sam eventually came home to Honolulu. They were shocked to learn they had seen him last. They reported that their camp had been evacuated, and the prisoners force marched to other locations. At some point during the march Sam, who was already ill, became sicker and was ordered to wait on the side of the road for a vehicle that was picking up stragglers.

The other POWs marched on, were split up and sent to different camps.

When Sam didn't arrive at their camp, they assumed he had been sent to another. No one saw him again.

For years, the Korean War was referred to as a "conflict" and as a "police action." Sam's mom scoffed at this.

The government and the Army could call it whatever they wanted. It was a war and it had cost her a son.

In a corner of her apartment his mother displayed his medals and a neatly folded flag. She looked forward to the day that the flag would be taken from its display case, unfurled, and flown freely to welcome Sam home.

For years she openly maintained that he was still alive. It was a hope rekindled with every rumor that Korean POWs were taken to some far-flung corner of the world and had been seen working in a prison camp there and with every "report" that some POWs had been left behind instead of repatriated.

Nearly two years ago, Sam's aunt read an article asking family members of Korean War MIAs to come forward to give DNA samples in the event that unidentified remains were recovered.

She and his younger brother agreed that it was their only chance to ever identify Sam's remains. They called the toll-free number and a "very nice lady" in Washington D.C. thanked them for calling and encouraged them to submit samples.

With DNA from his mother and a full sibling, they would be able to make a positive identification if his body was ever found.

But the family worried that the anxiety it would cause his mother would jeopardize her fragile health, even after more than 50 years, and her doctor agreed.

They considered having her doctor take the samples and telling her that it was part of a routine office visit, but the samples had to be taken at "the Army hospital." In the end, she was gently told about the identification program. She had her surviving son take her to Tripler Army Medical Center where they submitted DNA samples.

Sam's aunt said that the "nice lady" said she didn't want to get the family's hopes up.

That while the identification program was a good thing, they would have to be very patient because it could still take years, many years, to identify any remains that are found and then match the tissue samples.

Sam's mom has waited more than 50 years.

She has patience, a lot of patience. It's time that she's running out of.

Uncle's life saved on Hamburger Hill

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

On a trip home to Indiana, I had the opportunity to sit down with my uncle Will and talk about Vietnam.

First I asked him if it would bother him to talk about it. He answered unequivocally.

"Not at all. This was the way I saw it," he said. "It was a terrible job, but I didn't have a choice in the matter. When it was over, I figured the job was done and there was no sense in bringing it home with me."

Uncle Will's a strong man. Not physically — since he had open heart surgery he's had to hire help around the farm. But mentally and spiritually, he's a powerhouse.

I've always known Uncle Will served in Vietnam, but I never knew he was in that first assault on Hamburger Hill.

I knew he'd sustained several injuries in his short time "over there." I didn't know he'd been shot three times and pierced by shrapnel in half a dozen places, including his head.

I knew he was eventually discharged honorably. That broke his heart. Even after the hell he'd seen in the war he had hoped to make the Army a career.

Uncle Will recently visited the traveling Vietnam Memorial Wall. He said he went there to see just one name — the name of the young man who took his place 32 years ago.

Spc. John Franklin Kahler joined my uncle's unit a short time before the assault on Hill 994 — Hamburger Hill.

He came from a family of 11, like my uncle, and the two quickly became good friends. Uncle Will — Spc. Bolton back then — nicknamed his new friend JFK. They were in Sgt. Rocko's platoon.

The night of April 23, 1968, Sgt. Rocko warned Bolton and Kahler to expect the worst fighting they'd ever seen the next day.

Things were going to be rough, he said.

He also told them one change had been made on the flight manifest — Bolton would be moved from chopper one to chopper two. Kahler would take his place in the first chopper.

"I followed him out of the tent and asked him why. I was always on the first chopper with Rocko," Uncle Will said. "I asked him if I'd done something wrong, but he just said he'd made the change and that was all there was to it. He didn't want to hear another word about it."

Well the rest, as they say, is history. The first chopper was shot down during the assault on Hamburger Hill.

There were no survivors.

"It didn't register for several days, the significance of that change in the flight plan. It was the only change in the entire operation," he said flatly.

"A few days later I was detailed to pick up the bodies. I realized that it could have been me. That's when it dawned on me."

Somewhere I'm sure a family still grieves for John Franklin Kahler.

I don't know if it would comfort them to know what kind of a man my uncle turned out to be, but I wish I could tell them.

Uncle Will stayed in Vietnam nine months. He was injured repeatedly and kept going back for more. When it was all over, he "put the job behind him" and resumed his military career in the states. Ironically — after being awarded the purple heart four times and an Air Medal — he was discharged after it was discovered he was color blind.

He raised a little hell of his own when he came home, but quite a few years ago he turned his life around — a politically correct way of saying he decided to live his life for Christ, who took his place on the cross long before Kahler took his place on that helicopter.

Uncle Will's a good man by anyone's standards. He's been a farmer ever since the mill shut down. He has four children — one's a preacher now — and a beautiful grandbaby boy.

He looks much younger than his 50 plus years, and though he's not a very big man, he's a giant in my eyes.

I don't know why things happened the way they did all those years ago, but I'm grateful for the life my uncle was given.

And I'm thankful for Spc. Kahler who gave his life, in my uncle's place, for our country.

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

Call: A 19-year-old Soldier said she was not allowed in the NCO club for Bosses' Night.

Directorate of Community Activities response: The Soldier was told it has been the policy not to admit underage Soldiers, regardless of rank, to Bosses' Night.

The Enlisted Club was organized to accommodate a mixed group of underage and drinking age customers. As an underage Soldier the Afterhours is the facility this Soldier should use.

'How to' information

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Coverage of events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the battalion level, check presentations and group photos.

Army Regulation 360-81, which governs the production and content of Army newspapers, states covering such events is not a function of the post newspaper or the Public Affairs Office.

If you need a photographer to record events for official purposes, call the Training and Audiovisual Support Center's photo lab at 545-4417.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

Copy must be typed and doubled-spaced, except for letters to the editor which may be handwritten. Everything else must be typed. Typed copy is easier for us to edit, easier for our typesetter and results in fewer errors.

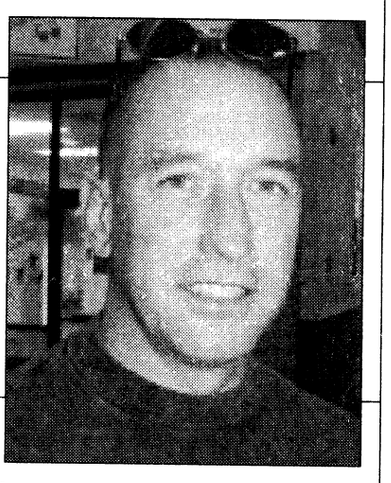
Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

If you submit an announcement for publication, check it when it appears in The Bayonet. Then, if you must resubmit it at a later date, submit it as it ran in the paper. You may fax briefs or announcements only. The fax number is 682-0095.

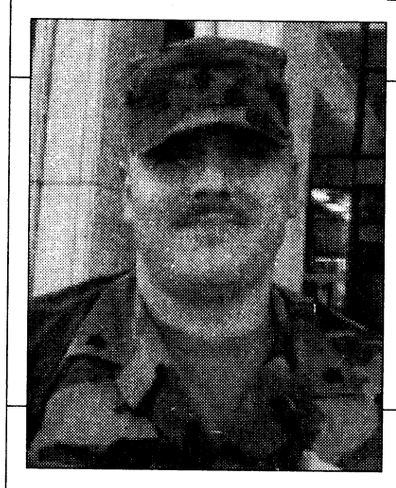
Stories submitted for publication must be typewritten.

VARIOUS VOICES

What can we do to live up to the POW-MIA Day motto — "you are not forgotten?"



Retired Staff Sgt. Fred Norris, Fortson, Ga. — "Keep up aggressive remains recovery. Let your politicians know this is an item of concern. There are a lot who still haven't been found. Also make them a focus during the remembrance ceremonies on Memorial and Veterans Days."



Sgt. Guinevere Pedigo, U.S. Army Medical Detachment — "There are many families here who have loved ones missing. Recognize the families who still have POW-MIAs. We need to make sure we don't forget them."

Bee Graves, Retention Office — "We should never forget there are POW-MIAs. We should support all fund-raising efforts. We need to always remember."

Master Sgt. Bill Maus, 786th Security Forces Squadron, Sembach, Germany — "We should use everything at our disposal — intel and government sources — to clear up the mystery."

Spc. Michael St. Clair, U.S. Army Medical Detachment Activity — "We should have an organized remembrance at the monument on Honor Field."

Terry Beckwith, Martin Army Community Hospital — "We should continue to support efforts to search for our lost POW-MIAs."

Army eyes overhaul for physical training

Fitness School spearheads revamp effort

Dr. Ed Thomas
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

Current Army Physical Readiness Training doctrine is due for a tune-up, and the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School is using the past to shape the future.

Army Magazine signaled a major PRT paradigm shift 20 years ago in a February 1982 article called The 'Daily Dozen' Just Won't Do It. The new doctrine emerged after PRT proponency was transferred from the Infantry School at Fort Benning to the Soldier Support Center at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind.

"The SSC drew heavily from the aerobic-based model Dr. Ken Cooper developed for the Air Force," said Frank Palkoska, USAPFS assistant commandant "Lessons learned from previous Army PRT have much to offer as we reshape the doctrine for future missions."

Proponency for PRT returned to the Infantry in 1992 when the school returned to Fort Benning. "We were aware in the late 1980s, that our doctrine was leaning toward scientific foundations at the expense of practical application," said Palkoska. "A few years ago, at the direction of U.S. Army Infantry School Commandant Maj. Gen. Carl Ernst, we began reshaping PRT doctrine for the reality of 21st century missions.

"We started an extensive review of military PRT history in 1997," said Palkoska. "Predictably, post-WWII and post-Korean War manuals were strong, but the late-1800s also produced surprisingly effective doctrine."

"We were pleased to learn that many forgotten concepts developed in past PRT doctrine are now considered cutting edge," said Lt. Col. William Rieger, USAPFS commandant. "Current doctrine still has much to offer, and we can make it even more powerful by holding it up to history's mirror."

As a reality check, the USAPFS consulted numerous experts outside the Army. "The Army Fitness School vision is on target," said Al Vermeil, the Chicago Bulls Strength and Conditioning coach. "Precise calisthenics are an unbeatable base. Inexpensive training tools like medicine balls, dumbbells and war clubs offer almost unlimited functional exercises ranging from the simple to the complex."

U.S. Navy SEALS physical training advisor Jeremy Levine has also been following the evolution of Army PRT.

"We have already implemented drills similar to those the Army is considering," he said. "And we have also benefited from researching past military PRT doctrine."

Palkoska explained World War II Army and Navy PRT doctrines were based upon highly structured systems that European immigrants brought to the United States in the 1800s. These systems were built upon principles used as far back as the ancient Greeks.

"The foundations of effective military PRT appear throughout history. We need only adapt them to modern conditions," Palkoska said.

Past Army PRT doctrine at its best, explained Rieger, is characterized by rational progression, variety and precision.

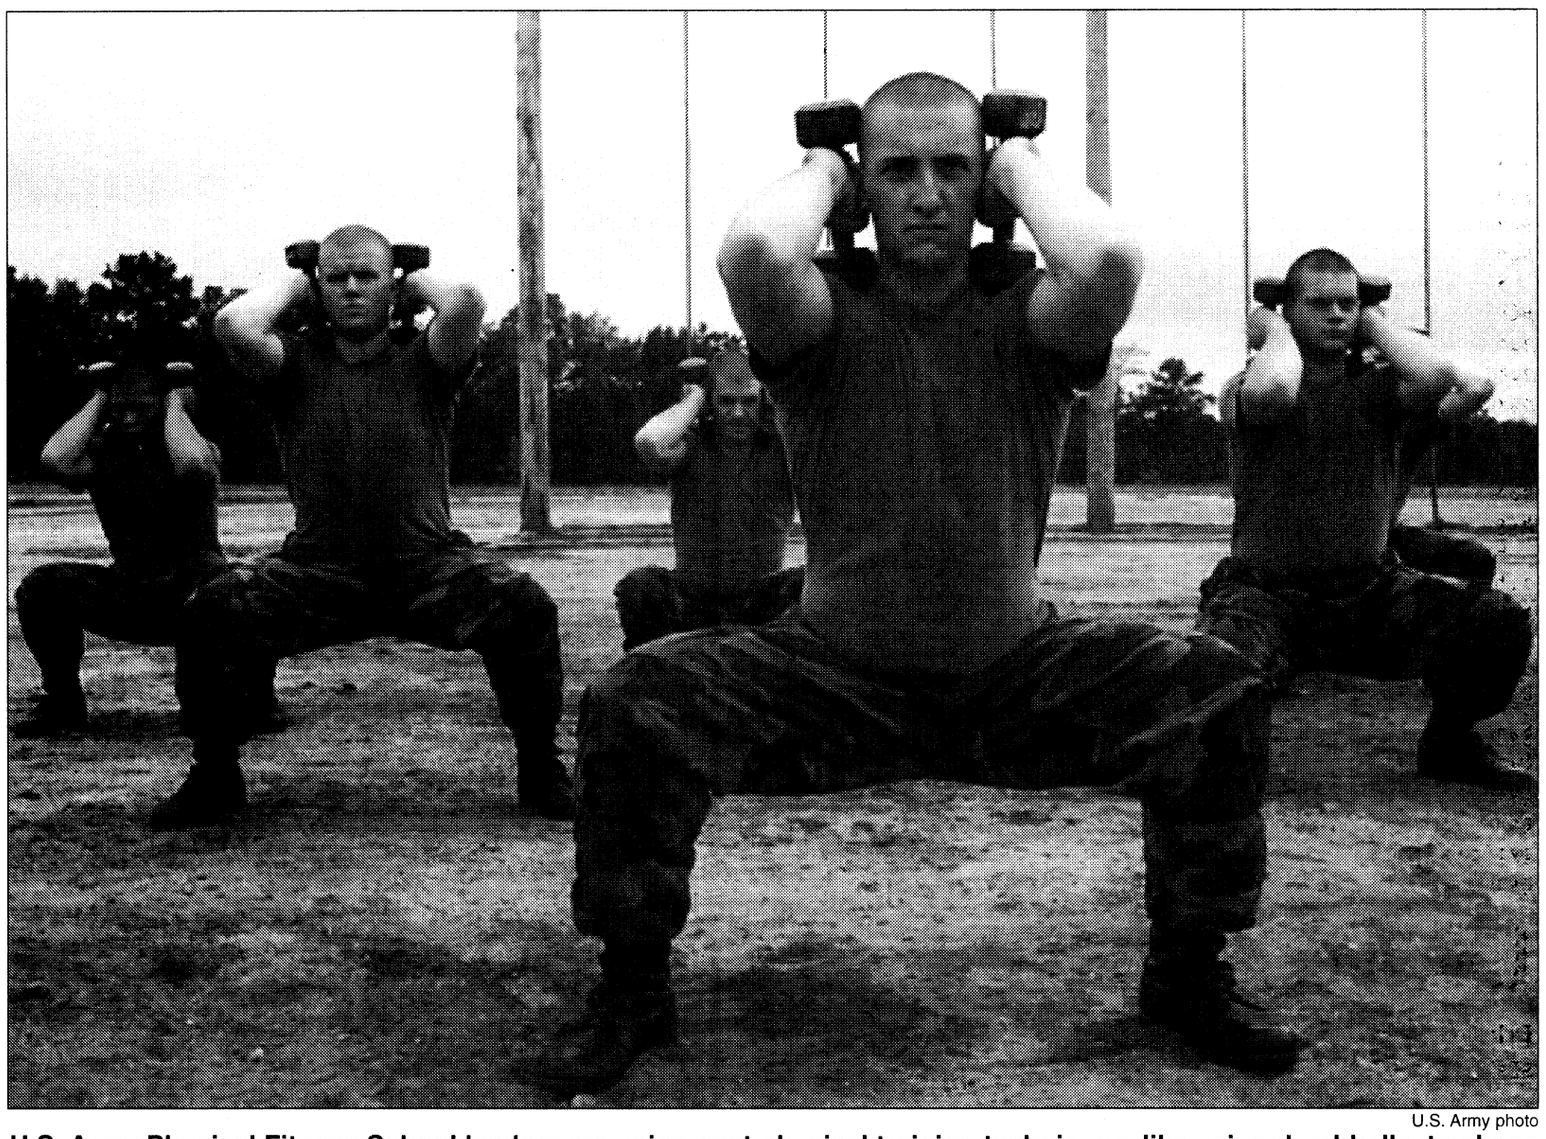
"The right combination of these three elements adds the essential learning effect to the more familiar training effect," he said.

Classical military PRT can be divided into three categories:

- On-the-ground training includes mass drills executed to a specific standard. Calisthenics are done without equipment. Warriors throughout the centuries have also employed four hand-held items, each with a unique purpose. Dumbbell drills develop muscular endurance, flexibility, and general mobility. Medicine balls develop explosive power. The wand or walking stick is used for flexibility, and war clubs develop speed and neural-muscular control. Spotters are often employed in mastering these skills.
- Off-the-ground training teaches tumbling, leaping, vaulting, climbing, and general spatial orientation. Spotting skills prepare Soldiers to safely learn combatives.
- Combatives skills are the ultimate goal. Soldiers must be prepared to fight with and without weapons. The Ranger Training Brigade is the Army combatives proponent, and the doctrine is currently being revised.

"The emerging PRT doctrine will make it much easier and safer for Soldiers to master the combatives skills we are developing," said Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larson, RTB combatives expert. "Army PRT and combatives doctrines have not been coordinated since World War II."

Soldiers need a simple training formula that will provide all-around physical conditioning without compromising Army Physical Fitness Test scores, Rieger said. "It must be flexible enough to apply to all Soldiers. "



Elements of the emerging doctrine have been introduced in the Master Fitness Trainer Course, and reports from the field are positive. An Infantry Training Brigade platoon recently integrated improved calisthenics, dumbbell drills and more progressive running into their PRT.

The Army Times reported that of the 48 Soldiers trained, 36 "maxed" their last APFT test with scores of 300.

Fort Jackson recently launched a larger study funded by a grant from the Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventative Medicine. "This effort is geared toward injury reduction, but we are also interested in APFT score changes," Rieger said.

"By combining historical lessons learned with current doctrine, we can employ technology to educate every Soldier in the Army," Palkoska said.

"And today's professional Soldier is ready and fully able to learn."

Shirlonda Lewis was only 15 years old when she became pregnant, "unmarried, uneducated and clueless," in her words. She said the hardest part of facing her mistake was seeing the disappointment on her parents' faces.

"My dad's a minister, and I was brought up in the church," she said. "Everybody in town knew my family. They were devastated. My mom cried, and my dad yelled for a while. I was so ashamed."

Despite their initial shock and anger, Lewis's parents supported her decision to raise her son, Jervelous, and continue high school.

"My mom said, 'I love you, and we'll get through this together,'" Lewis said. "It was that love that got me through."

Shirley Chambliss said she knew her daughter had the determination to overcome what she called a minor setback.

"I'm proud of her," Chambliss said. "So many girls would give up on their dreams under those circumstances. Not Shirlonda. She lived up to her responsibility as a parent and she had to work harder, but she never gave up."

Lewis graduated with her classmates in 1992, an accomplishment she credits to her family's support and her own determination, which she said, was born out of shame.

"I'll never forget how everybody stereotyped me at that point," Lewis said. "There was one teacher who called me to her classroom to tell me how ashamed she was. She said I'd ruined my life, and that 'girls like me' made it hard for all African-American girls to overcome society's stereotypes. She said the most horrible things to me, and I just listened.

"When she was finished I couldn't get to the bathroom fast enough. I stayed there and cried and cried and cried, until I reached a decision. I could've walked out of there and never gone back, but I decided to stay and prove her wrong instead."

Lewis attended junior college after graduation and married "the most wonderful man who adores my son." Her husband, Henry, joined the Army shortly after their marriage, and the family moved to Fort Hood, Tx., in 1993.

"At that time, Jervelous was 4 years old, and naturally he'd become a very important part of my parents' life," Lewis said. "When we left for Texas, Mom wanted me to leave him with her. She thought it would be easier for us, as newlyweds, to get started.

"However, I felt we had to make it work as a family, and my husband was very supportive. When I made that decision, I felt like a real grown up for the first time. I knew we'd make it."

After marriage Lewis resumed her education, pursuing a degree in business management. In 1998, she gave birth to a daughter, Jelicia.

"God blessed me beyond my expectations," said Lewis, of her growing family and venture into the world of dot.com enterprises.

As her family prepared to move to Fort Benning last year, Lewis faced another desperation, of sorts, while trying to locate a new hairdresser in a new town.

"I'm not interested in 'doing' hair," Lewis laughed. "I'm not a hairdresser, but this is my hair we're talking about, and I needed a new stylist I could trust. What I really wanted was to see their work before I put myself in their hands."

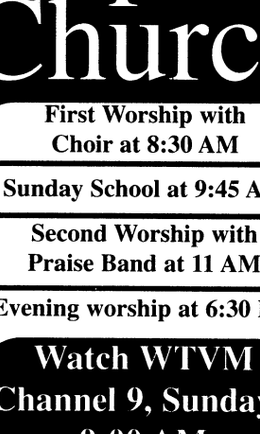
And with that desire a new concept in advertising was born.

Lewis launched J&J Hair Exclusives May 15. The dot.com stylist directory allows potential clients to locate stylists in their area and preview their work before visiting a salon.

Lewis hopes to turn a profit next year on the business she funded with last year's tax return.

"I'm not in the least bit surprised," Chambliss said. "Shirlonda always had the attitude that she wanted to do something important with her life. I knew she had what it took to make her life a success despite the early setbacks."

With her business showing early success, and her family settling happily into life at Fort Benning, Lewis is eyeing another goal she hopes to pursue in the coming years.



"I have done several local commercials and talk shows to promote the business," she said. "During one of those shows, a local teacher from a teen-parent center asked me to speak at her school about what happened to me as a teen, and how I've overcome."

The idea of reaching unwed teen mothers appeals to one who has experienced the same desperation.

"I've been asked, and I'm seriously considering some sort of public speaking format," she said. "If I could reach kids who have made the same mistake, or any mistake for that matter, and tell them it doesn't have to ruin their lives, I would love to do that. I'm living proof that you don't have to ever give up your dreams and aspirations."

Day: Set aside for POW-MIA

wars is more than a question of justice and the payment of a debt come due. It is also a matter of readiness of today's military forces. Our men and women in uniform will only have faith in us if we keep faith with those who went before."

Keeping the faith for those who went before is the purpose of the National League of Families of POW/MIA in Southeast Asia.

"By keeping this issue alive against all odds, we have seen increased accountability for the Korean War, WWII and the cold War losses," wrote Jo Anne Shirley in a letter to Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander. "Our work is far from over." Shirley is the chairman for the board of directors of the National League of Families of POW/MIA in Southeast Asia.

National POW-MIA Day helps to focus on what still must be done to achieve the fullest possible accounting, Shirley wrote. As part of a National League of POW/MIA Families delegation, Shirley has traveled to Southeast Asia twice.

The purpose of the trips was to convince government officials in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos to help account for missing Americans and for increased access to the known grave sites and crash sites.

When Cohen visited the Vietnamese village of Don Phu March 13, he told reporters that the United States has "an absolute, sacred obligation to do whatever we can to look for our missing in action." At the site, 20 members of Joint Task Force Full Accounting and 260 Vietnamese workers searched for the remains of Navy Cmdr. Richard Rich's plane. Rich was an F-4B Phantom pilot who is still unaccounted for.

Diplomatic efforts will continue to be used to discover the truth about those last seen alive and in captivity, de Leon said.

During his speech de Leon told the audience that both he and Cohen "consider it a priority to account for all the missing Vietnam veterans as well as those who preceded them in the Cold War, the Korean War and the Second World War.

"We must never forget — the nation, the Department of Defense, everyone who wears the uniform today," de Leon said. "And we will not waiver in our efforts to bring them home."

Dream: Comes true for mom

failing to pack Jeff's favorite wool socks that had his mother so upset about the departure of her son. Linda never got to make Jeff his favorite meal — chicken enchiladas — before the newlywed left for basic training.

So after countless days of trying to find a way to ease her guilt-stricken predicament, Linda saw a television program she thought might help her solve the no food-serving situation.

"I was watching the Food Network, and I saw the show Food Fantasy," Linda said. "I had seen it before, but when I thought of me not making Jeff his enchiladas before he left, I decided to write in and tell them about it."

Her request was one of thousands producers of the show receive on a daily basis.

But host of the TV cooking show, Robin Dorian, said there was something special about Linda's fantasy.

"It has all the elements of a great story," Dorian said. "For mom this means a chance for her to see her son for the first time in 14 weeks and get a chance to make him his favorite meal.

"For the son it means getting a real home-cooked meal for the first time in weeks.

"But this goes beyond just food," she said. "Food is a way for people to remember strong emotions, and that holds true here with Jeff and his mom."

It was that bond that sparked show producers to pick up the phone and call Linda to tell her that her culinary dream was nearing reality.

"I was so surprised when they called, and said they had arranged for me to come here to cook for Jeff," Linda said. "I thought they would shoot it down immediately with him still being in training and all, but to my surprise when the producer called and said we were going to do it today, I started to cry."

The saga of Linda's favorite chicken enchiladas began when Jeff was just a small boy growing up in Arizona, Linda said. "I had to alter the recipe several times until I got it down to just these four easy ingredients so he would like it."

But when Linda arrived to Fort Benning Sept. 9 surrounded by television cameras for the Food Network, little did she know the enchiladas Jeff had grown to love would actually steer the trainee away from her surprise supper.

The plan producers had worked was to send Jeff through the chow line and switch the main course served to the other Soldiers with his mother's enchiladas hoping he would chose his favorite meal.

But the plan backfired on Dorian and the Food Fantasy folks when Jeff placed his order.

"Oh look, chicken enchiladas," Jeff said as he went through the chow line. "But I could never eat anybody's but my mom's."

But producers had a backup plan just in case this very situation occurred.

"We had mom ready with a plate of the enchiladas just in case," Dorian said.

And as Jeff sat down to dine on fine Army cuisine, Linda was right behind with a plate of her son's favorite food.

"It was unbelievable," said Jeff, a private assigned to B Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade. "When I first saw her come out of the kitchen, it took me a second until I finally realized who it really was.

"It was awesome to see her again," he said. "She and I have been close, her being a single parent and all, so just seeing her was the real treat.

"The enchiladas just made it better," Jeff said. "And they were just as good as I remember."

While the recipe for the enchiladas was kept clandestine, cooks can get a glimpse of the preparation process and a complete recipe by watching the Food Fantasy.

Producers were unable to say when the episode featuring Mrs. Wilson's Basic Training Enchiladas would hit local airwaves.

Task force works to improve personnel management

Warrant officer, enlisted system comes under fire

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Nine months after standing up, the Army Development System XXI task force is preparing to present its final recommendations on how to improve the current Enlisted and Warrant Officer Personnel Management systems.

Chief among its recommendations to Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki will be the concept of a "multi-skilled Soldier" as the underpinning for future Military Occupational Specialty and force structure considerations.

"The environment in which our Soldiers serve today can be characterized as one of rapid and continuous change," said Col. Dave Cutler, ADS XXI director. "There is no one clear enemy and our traditional roles keep expanding. Equipment modernization and changes to our doctrine and structure must be anticipated to keep pace. The Enlisted and Warrant Officer Personnel Management System studies and their recommendations should help the Army keep current with the many changes it faces."

Culter explained how the Army currently relies on institutional training to prepare Soldiers for their assigned jobs, the equipment they use and the missions they receive.

"Change in the operational environment occurs faster than we can react with institutional training programs, and we may not be able to accurately quantify with an MOS all things Soldiers may be required to do," he said. "Soldiers repeatedly demonstrate the ability to adapt to new environments and learn new skills."

Recognizing Soldiers are adaptable, the task force is recommending institutional training be more focused on the core job competencies that comprise a Soldier's MOS as opposed to all of the separate tasks.

As a result of the momentum created by the ADS XXI study, Army branch proponents have independently initiated actions that may reduce a burdensome 241 MOS's currently in the Army inventory, to a more manageable and broader figure of around 200, Cutler said.

This potentially creates larger pools of Soldiers from which commanders can draw in the future to meet Shinseki's guidance to keep warfighting units manned at 100 percent.

ADS XXI also advocates providing NCOs with published, approved career development plans. This may include placing greater emphasis on directed self-development beyond the required institutional Army schools and providing the proper resources for that development.

A rewritten Department of the Army Pamphlet 600-25 will lay out the training and operational assignments required for development along specific career paths.

Other enlisted personnel management recommendations include: restrict garrison and other non-warfighting organizational manning requirement changes and require Department of the Army approval for those changes; develop a web-based automated personnel management system; and improve unit readiness reporting with a system that better captures Soldiers' deployment histories.

Task force warrant officer recommendations include:

"From the very beginning, our measure of success for any recommendation has been that it must be good for the Soldier, the Army and the nation," Cutler said. "I believe we are meeting that standard."

The task force will make its final recommendations to Shinseki sometime in early October.

Gatekeeper program aims to stifle rising suicide rates

Prevention training slated to begin Sept. 26 at O'Club

Special to the Bayonet©

The Army is fighting back against a rising suicide rate by offering its leaders training in prevention tactics.

Fort Benning will hold Gatekeeper Training Sept. 26 from 1:15 to 4 p.m. at the Officers' Club.

"Gatekeeper training is designed for those on the frontlines with the Soldiers day in and out," said Yvonne Wilbanks, an alcohol and drug control officer and Fort Benning's suicide prevention manager.

"Squad leaders, platoon leaders, first sergeants and company commanders are in a position to observe and help our Soldiers. Their role in suicide prevention cannot be overemphasized," she said.

Effective leaders are those who protect the men and women under their command, Wilbanks said.

"This workshop will give Army leaders specific training on how to protect their Soldiers, identify those at risk and emphasize the importance of getting them help," she said.

The guest speaker will be Iris Bolton, an author and grief counselor from Atlanta, Ga.

Bolton lost a son to suicide in 1977 and later wrote My Son...My Son, a Guide to Healing After Death, Loss or Suicide. She is the executive director of The Link Counseling Center, a non-profit family counseling facility that is home to the National Resource Center for Suicide Prevention and Aftercare.

A graduate of Columbia University, Bolton travels extensively speaking to groups about suicide. She visited Fort McPherson, Ga., earlier this year.

"She is a very motivational speaker and interacts with the audience," said Ginny Sparrow, program manager for The Link Counseling Center.

"Don't expect to just sit there and have statistics thrown at you," Sparrow said. "Iris loves to role play, and it's wonderful to see this 69-year-old transform herself into a teen-ager."

Suicide risk factors and warning signs will be discussed, as well as "the importance of seeking help and not taking it all in on yourself out of loyalty to a friend," she said.

Doreen Schultz, a therapist at The Link, will be assisting Bolton during the session and in break-out groups.

"This training is so important because we are naive to believe suicide can't touch us," Sparrow said.

"What you learn in an afternoon, could save someone's life," she said.

To accommodate busy schedules in units, the training will again be offered on Oct. 24. To register, call Willbanks at 545-1138 or 545-4415.

In conjunction with the Gatekeeper Training and National Depression Screening Day on Oct. 5, the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program will establish 10 sites across post that day where Soldiers, family members and civilians can complete a screening test and talk with mental health professionals.

region," said Col. John Mitchell, garrison commander.

"If you want your donation to stay on Fort Benning, consider giving to 9001, Soldier Family Support Activity. If you want to donate to local charities supporting Soldiers and families, consider giving to 9000, United Way or to one of the 41 local charities shown on page four of the CFC listing," Mitchell said.

"People give to the agencies they want to because of personal reasons," Walls said. "I would just ask them to set aside some portion of their total donation for the local community."

In addition to supporting United Way, Thagard is also an advocate for science education and he donated his honorarium to the Challenger Learning Center in Tallahassee, Fla.

A professor in the College of Engineering at Florida State University, he is the director of the learning center which is set to open in March 2002.

"American kids aren't getting into engineering and science. I want to turn them on to engineering," he said.

"Our goal with the Challenger Learning Centers is to reach middle school students. I know from experience that one significant event can change a person's course," he said.

For Thagard that event occurred the day he checked out a book from the school library that taught him how to build a radio. He completed the project, and from that point on, he was hooked on engineering.

A Marine pilot, he flew 163 combat missions during the Vietnam War. After leaving the Corps in 1971, he enrolled in medical school and seven years later he was among 35 new astronauts in the U.S. space program. He has logged more than 140 days in space.

"There is a moment or two of doubt before each launch, but one needs to continue the mission," Thagard said.

"Just as each part of the shuttle has to work in order for liftoff, so people need to work together to help each other," he said.

School battalion welcomes new commander

Battalion's top officer will take job as 11th DCO

Fort Benning's Infantry band and assorted post support staff were introduced to a new commander Tuesday when Lt. Col Gary N. Daniel Jr. relinquished command to Lt. Col. Daniel P. Dillon in a ceremony on York Field.

Daniel had served as the battalion's top officer for the past 11 months. He and his wife, Kimberly, and three children will continue to reside on post as he assumes a position as the deputy commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment.

"You are taking over a battalion that has 1,400 personnel assigned to it in 27 directorates," Daniel told Dillon in his final address as the battalion's top officer. "These are the unsung heroes of the post who make this school function on a daily basis.

"Just be aware there are 23 officers who outrank you under your command," Daniel said with a smile as he said his final farewell to the troops.

Dillon, a native of Great Falls, Va., comes to Fort Benning after serving in Europe as an operations staff officer for the U.S. Army element, office of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Other past assignments include stints with the 101st Airborne Division at Fort Campbell, Ky. There he served as a rifle platoon leader, an anti-tank platoon leader and company executive officer.

His next tour took him to Illesheim, Germany, where he served as assistant operations officer, adjutant and company commander of the both B and Headquarters and Headquarters Companies, 1st Battalion, 6th Infantry Regiment.

He returned to Fort Benning in 1991 to serve as a small group instructor in the tactics division of the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, and later took a position at the Pentagon as a staff officer in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff Operations and as an assistant executive officer in the same office.

In 1995, Dillon moved to Fort Lewis, Wash., to become the battalion operations officer for the 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry Division.

He is a graduate of Virginia Commonwealth University.

Dillon's awards include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal with one oak leaf cluster, the Joint Service Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, the Army Commendation Medal with one oak leaf cluster, the Joint Meritorious Unit award with one oak leaf cluster, the National Defense Service Medal, the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Medal, the Expert Infantryman's Badge, the Ranger Tab, Parachutist Badge, Pathfinder Badge, Air Assault Badge, the Army Staff Identification Badge and the Joint Chiefs of Staff Identification Badge.

"I thank you for your performance on the field today," Dillon told the troops after he accepted command of the battalion. "Your outstanding performance serves as a tribute to all those who have served before you in peace and in war."

Dillon brings with him his wife, Patricia, and his four children Michael, Brian, Rory and Jamie.

Pioneer Challenge names top troops during competition

Four-day event tests Soldier's Infantry skills

Spc. Mitch Frazier
Bayonet staff

When Staff Sgt. Bryan Jeilleux goes to work everyday, he doesn't apply camouflage to his face. He doesn't draw a weapon, and he doesn't put on a rucksack to go negotiate a land navigation course.

But these are the things this Infantryman signed up to do in the Army.

He, like thousands of other Infantry Soldiers throughout the Army, are assigned to staff and support jobs that take them away from what they originally signed up to do.

Jeilleux is a squad leader assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. But his duties aren't to lead Soldiers to the front of the battle to close with and destroy the enemy.

Right now his duties are ensuring students in the Bradley Leaders Course are sufficiently supplied with the equipment they need to learn how to be a leader.

"It's tough," Jeilleux said. "We have new privates coming in here straight from basic, and they don't get a chance everyday to be an Infantrymen. They are on police call or are moving equipment around.

"So we as leaders are challenged to find a way to keep their combat skills up as well as hone our leadership skills while we still continue to support the Infantry School," he said.

That way came in the form of this quarter's Pioneer Challenge — a four-day test of true Infantry skills that paired company against company in a challenge that tested everything from physical fitness to the Soldiers' abilities to navigate in both day and night conditions.

The Challenge began Sept. 5 at 6 a.m. when three squads from each of the battalion's three companies tested their physical endurance and fitness with a modified Army Physical Fitness Test.

"It wasn't your typical PT test," Jeilleux said. "It was continuous. As soon as they got finished with one event it was right on to the next. There were no breaks or rest periods."

The fast-paced start of the day repeated itself for the next 96 hours for the 81 Infantrymen involved in the competition that, at the end, would name the battalion's best troops.

A test of knowledge and skill were next on the list as the Soldiers were tested in assembling and disassembling the Squad Automatic Weapon, the M-240B machine gun and the M-16 A-2 rifle.

Once completed with the smaller personal weapons, it was on to the real "big guns" of the competition.

Soldiers had to load and unload different varieties ammunition onto the Bradley Fighting Vehicle.

Again, speed was important. The fastest time scored the most points and earned the lead.

At the end of the first day C Co. had the title of first, but B Co. trailed by only four points. A Co. rounded out the first day finish down four more at 36.

"At that point we were doing pretty well," said Staff Sgt. Dennis Webb, last quarter's defending champion from B Co. "We were short of people during the PT test, so that hurt us, but we rebounded and did great in the Infantry skills portion of the day."

Aching muscles didn't get a chance to recover before Day 2 started with a 12K foot march before the sun came up.

Rain began to fall once the event began and the march took a toll on some of the competitors.

"They were tired already," Jeilleux said. "The distance plus the ruck and the rain didn't help."

The day was sealed with a trip to the marksmanship range to shoot 20 rounds at a 100 meter target and 20 rounds at a 200 meter target.

A Co. continued to hold the lead throughout the day as B Co. struggled to pursue the Soldiers in the lead. Both finished with 18 points on the day. C Co. continue to fall behind, netting only 12 points during day two of the event.

"I could really tell the Soldiers were getting tired," Webb said. "The aching muscles began to be a problem by the end of the day, but we held on."

Day 3 was where that hold would tighten for Webb and his fellow second-place B Co. cohorts.

A test of both day and night land navigation for the weary warriors scored B Co. first place on the day, and brought the point difference between the two companies to only two points going into the final day of the competition.

C Co. fell short again at the end of the day tallying another third place finish and securing a last place finish in the competition.

"We did great on land nav, and we were within striking distance going into Day 4," Webb said. "Even though the guys were sore and tired going into the last day, they were all positive and I really thought we had a chance of winning it again for B Co."

After a five-mile squad run that welcomed the competitors to the final day of the Challenge, Webb's forecast for a possible win was looking like it could become reality.

The company's squads finished together and logged another top spot in the competition, but it wouldn't be enough to put them over the top. A Co. rallied for another first in the final event, a marksmanship test coupled with an NBC attack, to narrowly hold the lead and take home the Pioneer Challenge trophy.

> "What we are doing here is not in any of our battalion mission statements or not mandated by any means. We are giving Soldiers a chance to do what they came into the Army to do — be an Infantryman"

> 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

"What we are doing here is not in any of our battalion mission statements or not mandated by any means," said Lt. Col. Keith George, commander, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. "We are giving Soldiers a chance to do what they came into the Army to do — be an Infantryman.

"These Soldiers don't get a chance to do that on a daily basis because of taskings and duties," he said. "I am trying to show them there is more to the Army than post clean up detail, funeral detail and the motor pool."

The nine Soldiers from C Co. will be honored today at 3 p.m. during a ceremony at the battalion headquarters.

Museum brings Airborne history to life

Some Benning artifacts featured in collection

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

FAYETTEVILLE, N.C. — A restored World War II glider, many of its parts discovered on a farm near Atlanta seven years ago, has found a home at the newly opened Airborne and Special Operations Museum in downtown Fayetteville.

Frank Hanner, curator of the National Infantry Museum, and other staff members from the Fort Benning museum collected glider parts from a farmer's field in 1993. The parts were stored until the Center of Military History could fund a restoration project.

The glider, which stands in tribute to the brave men who flew and boarded such vessels during World War II, is just one part of the Airborne and Special Operations story presented at the museum.

As visitors walk into the five-story high lobby their eyes turn upward to a fully deployed T-5 parachute attached to a World War II paratrooper.

From there, visitors walk back in time to the summer of 1940 when 48 volunteers formed the original U.S. Army Test Platoon at Fort Benning and introduced a new form of attack — the Airborne assault.

Cobblestone streets and bombed-out European buildings lend realism to World War II artifacts, which include jump boots worn at Anzio in early 1944 that are still covered in Italian mud.

Sound effects duplicate the drone of piston engines passing above. Overhead a C-47 hangs from the ceiling with a paratrooper taking the door position as anti-aircraft spotlights travel past.

To add to the realism, the life-size figures aren't run-of-the-mill plastic mannequins like those at the local mall wearing the latest fall fashions.

The museum commissioned Dorfman Museum Figures Inc. to create the Special Operations Soldiers on display. One even sports razor stubble.

"They help bring the story to life," said John Aarsen, the museum's curator.

From the battlefields of Europe and the islands of the Pacific, the story continues with exhibits from Korea, Vietnam and Desert Storm.

The museum opened Aug. 16, the 60th anniversary of the first jump by the Test Platoon at Fort Benning. The grand opening featured speeches by Gen. Henry Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and Ross Perot, who donated $1 million to the project.

In its first three weeks the museum has attracted more than 26,000 visitors, Aarsen said. Close to 5,000 were expected to walk through the doors last weekend as members of the 503rd Parachute Infantry Regiment Association descended on Fayetteville and Fort Bragg for a reunion.

The Airborne Command was established at Fort Bragg in 1942, and today the post is the home of the 18th Airborne Corps, the 82nd Airborne Division and the U.S. Army Special Operations Command.

Feedback from visitors to the museum has been positive, Aarsen said.

"I've even had a person who is against war write that she liked the way it is laid out and that it told the story well," he said.

Bob Schneider, a retired sergeant major, drove from Ashland, Ohio, to see the museum.

"I think it's great, and I'm going to come back and bring the friends I served with with me," he said.

The museum is part of the U.S. Army Museum System and functions in partnership with a non-profit foundation. It is the first partnership of its kind.

The museum is accessible from Interstate 95, and admission is free.

Hours are Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday noon to 5 p.m.

Airborne Rangers to return for 50th anniversary

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Bob Black arrived at Fort Benning in 1950 to undergo training and become one of America's first Airborne Rangers during the early days of the Korean War.

The experience had a profound impact on his life, the 71-year-old veteran said from his home in Carlisle, Pa.

"It taught you to believe in yourself," he said.

Black and other members of the Association of the Ranger Infantry Companies (Airborne) of the Korean War invite all Rangers from the past and present to join them Oct. 4-7 to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the Korean War and the birth of the Airborne Rangers.

"This is a family celebration for all generations of Rangers," Black said. "It's a party, a gathering of the brotherhood."

The celebration is set to coincide with the Ranger Hall of Fame induction ceremony hosted by the Ranger Training Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment's Ranger Rendezvous 2000.

"This way our members won't have to attend two or three separate events this year," Black said.

The Ranger Hall of Fame ceremony is set for 4 p.m. Oct. 4 at the Ranger Memorial. It will be followed at 7:30 p.m. by a barbeque at Hanger 2492 at Lawson Army Airfield for veterans. The cost for the meal is $12.

Ranger and Airborne demonstrations, including a HALO team from Special Operations Command, will take place beginning at 9:30 a.m. Oct. 5 at Airborne Walk.

At 5 p.m. a platoon of Korean War Rangers will march in the pass and review with their colors during a retreat ceremony on York Field in front of Infantry Hall with Rangers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Rangers, Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment and the 75th Ranger Regimental Staff.

Military artist James Dietz will unveil a print dedicated to Korean War Rangers at Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall Oct. 6 at 6 p.m. At 8 p.m. a memorial service is scheduled at the Ranger Memorial.

"The Korean Community of Columbus will present two memorial stones as a gesture of appreciation for two Rangers who were killed in action during the war and who didn't have stones," said Black, who has written several books on Ranger history.

"There were 750 Airborne Rangers who fought in Korea, and in 1951 they served in the front of every Army division. Of those 750, one of every nine died there," he said.

Black has designated Oct. 7 as a day of rest for the veterans because the evening will be packed with a banquet at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center. About 800 people — including 240 Rangers from across the regiment who will be the guests of the various Ranger associations — are expected to fill the North Hall. They will view historical films and listen to the 82nd Airborne Chorus and the Atlanta Corps Vets Drum and Bugle Corps.

Cost for the banquet is $25, and today is the last day to register because of limited seating.

For more information and to download a registration form go online to the Ranger Regiment Association Web site at TRRAUSA.com and navigate to the 50th Anniversary of the Korean War Reunion link. The registration forms can then be faxed to Jim Hebert at (703) 323-1411 by the end of the day.

Hospital to screen for prostate cancer

Prostate cancer affects one in nine men in America

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

As part of Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, Martin Army Community Hospital will conduct prostate cancer screenings Tuesday in its Urology Clinic.

Military beneficiaries, regardless of Tricare status, are asked to call the clinic at 545-2292 prior to Tuesday to make an appointment for the screening, which will include a prostate-specific antigen blood test, also known as a PSA test, and a digital rectal examination.

"Last year we had a good response from the community and through the screenings we did diagnose a few cases of prostate cancer," Maj. Stephen Lee, urologist, said.

Prostate cancer affects one in nine men, making it the second most common cancer among men, according to the American Cancer Society. Skin cancer is the first.

The Cancer Society also reports that prostate cancer is the second-leading cause of cancer death in men. Lung cancer is the number one killer.

"Prostate cancer is highly treatable when detected early. However, it is most often silent in its early stages. That is why it is vital to screen for the cancer through the use of PSA and digital rectal exam," said Maj. Francis Schanne, urologist at Martin Army.

Blacks have the highest incidence of prostate cancer in the world, and their death rate from the disease is twice that of white men, according to the American Cancer Society.

"All men 50 years of age and older should have an annual screening. If you have a family history of prostate cancer or are African American, then you should begin your annual screenings at age 40," Lee said.

Increased media coverage in recent years, especially surrounding high-profile survivors such as Bob Dole and Harry Belafonte, has generated greater public awareness, said Alfreta Gibson, supervisor of the Health Promotion Center, Preventive Medicine, MACH.

Static displays will be set up at various gyms, the Main Post Exchange and Veterans of Foreign Wars and American Legion posts. Schanne will appear today at noon on WTVM to discuss the disease and to answer viewers' questions. Monday at 8 a.m. listeners can hear him on FOXY 105-FM.

For more information, call 545-1987. To make an appointment for Tuesday's screening, call 545-2292.

After Tuesday, patients must receive a referral from their primary care manager to be seen in the Urology Clinic.

A CLOSER LOOK

Did you know?

Prostate cancer is the most common form of cancer in men. It is the second leading cause of cancer death in men, exceeded only by lung cancer.

An estimated 180,400 new cases of prostate cancer will be diagnosed in 2000.

The incidence of prostate cancer increases with age; more than 75 percent of all cases are diagnosed in men over the age of 65.

Black Americans have a greater risk of developing prostate cancer.

Convoy of Hope reaches hungry

35,000 bags of groceries to be distributed

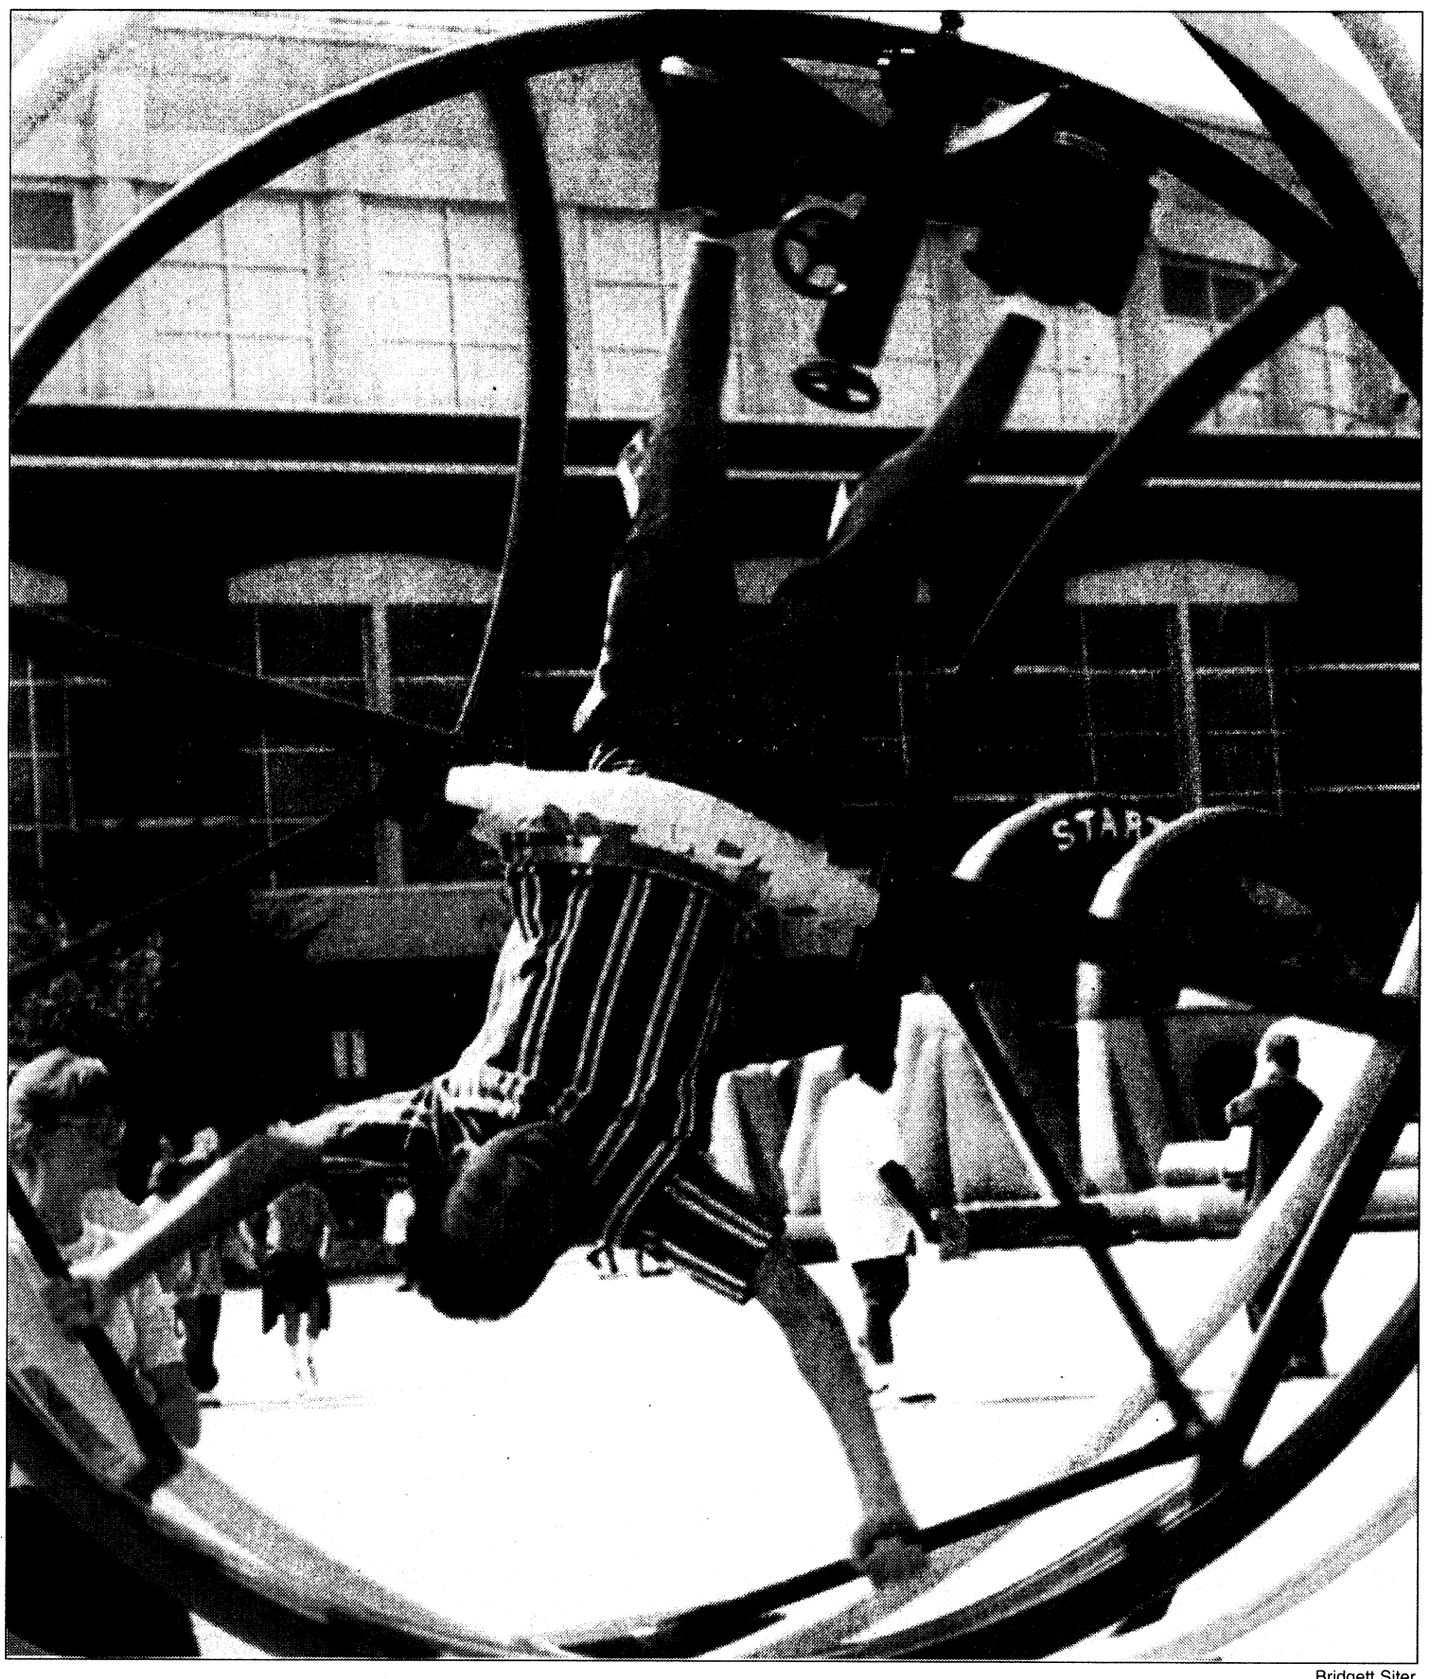
More than five million children in the U.S. live below the national poverty level.

Across America and around the world, local churches, businesses and community organizations are partnering with Convoy of Hope to reach these hurting children, working poor families and disaster victims with free groceries and health services.

Convoy of Hope is a trans-denominational ministry that conducts outreaches in 40 major cities across America, including Columbus. At least 5,000 local families are expected to attend Saturday's event at the Alexander Field and Pop Austin Gym on Veteran's Parkway.



Alton Russell, the local coordinator for Convoy of Hope, said their goal is to offer groceries and medical services without asking for proof of income or identification.

"We treat everyone that comes as an honored guest," Russell said. "Fort Benning has always been involved as an active part of our community, and many on post have the same needs as those off post. That's why the free groceries and services are available for everyone, including single and married military men and women."

Russell said the Convoy staff and volunteers expect to distribute 35,000 bags of groceries, two per family, on a first-come, first-serve basis. In addition, sandwiches and

Columbine youths give Bold 2000 dose of reality

More than 6,500 Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City residents rallied Wednesday night to end school violence and encourage faith and fellowship among America's youth.

Bold 2000 began with a block party shortly after 3 p.m. By 5 o'clock the parking lot surrounding the Columbus Civic Center was jam-packed with partyers — teens and toddlers; preachers, peddlers and performers; even a leather-clad motorcycle gang called "Bikers for Jesus."

Hordes of adults and teens enjoyed free pizza and listened to local alternative and Christian rock bands. Carnival games, like the dunking booth and an inflatable obstacle course, were available for the younger kids.

The real deal took place inside the Civic Center auditorium when the doors were opened to the public shortly after 6 p.m. "Seven Dayz Straight," a regional alternative Christian band, and Dove award winner "Sonicflood" worked the crowd into a frenzy with popular contemporary praise and worship songs. Teens filled the aisles, some dancing and swaying to the rock-music beat, while others stood motionless, arms raised toward heaven, as tears streamed down their faces.

A hush fell over the auditorium when guest speakers from Columbine, Colo., and Paducah, Ky., took the stage to share their personal testimonies of triumph over tragedy. Heidi Johnson and Lauren Beyers talked about finding strength in Christ after last year's shooting at Columbine High School claimed the lives of their friends and classmates.

Jason Hudson and Ben Strong shared their stories of horror and healing in the aftermath of another killing spree at Heath High School in Paducah. This time the gunman's rage was directed at

Stowers' Harris earns title as Benning's best teacher

Stowers Elementary School's enrichment teacher has been named Fort Benning's Teacher of the Year. Millie Harris, a 22-year teaching veteran and published author, will represent Fort Benning in the Department of Defense Education Activity Teacher of the Year competition later this month.

"I can't say that I'm surprised," said Principal Glenn Hughes. "Mrs. Harris is an incredible educator who obviously loves what she does and gives her best everyday for her students and co-workers. She does an excellent job and she exemplifies the art of teaching."

Harris

One of Harris's former students said having her for a teacher changed his life forever.

Matthew Gillum was a third-grader at Fort McClellan Elementary School in Alabama when he met Harris, then a teacher in the Talented and Gifted program.

"I would meet Mrs. Harris every morning outside her room knowing that for the next few hours, I was the most important thing," Gillum wrote in a letter to the DoDEA Teacher of the Year committee. "I learned many things that had nothing to do with school, and I think that was her point. I was taught never to suppress my imagination, and to appreciate not only my creativity, but the creativity of others."

Gillum, now a student at the University of Louisville, visited Harris during Spring Break of his senior year in high school.

"(Fort McClellan) was closing, and I needed to see some people before this happened," he said. "My first priority was going to the school

Hidden 'treasures' await bargain hunters during sale

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

For yard sale shoppers it's heaven on earth, for yard sale sellers it's a godsend.

It's the postwide yard sale and it starts at 8 a.m. Sept. 23.

In its fourth year, the sale has earned the reputation of a treasure-hunter's paradise.

"We're going to keep up the tradition," Chuck Walls, garrison manager said.

"There's always something out there that will make it worthwhile," said Jodie Bowers, president of the Community Life Mayor's Association.

Bowers has found her share of treasures, most recently a Tom Clark Gnome collectible. "I got it for a dollar," she said. "I was tickled to death."

For people who do not collect "gnomes" Bowers said this particular piece normally costs about $60. She said the gnomes in the Clark collection range from $35 to $150.

The postwide yard sale occurs twice a year: spring and fall. The fall sale is ideal for people who have just arrived; unpacked; realized they have too much stuff and need to unload some things, Walls said.

Although an avid shopper, Bowers has been on the other side of the yard as a seller.

She advises sellers to stand firm with yard-sale hagglers who make offers that are just too low.

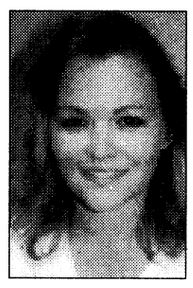
"Stand your ground and say no," she said.

There's no fee to participate. Sellers can display signs at intersections or on the street corner as long as they make sure to take down the sign by 2 p.m.

After the sale people can bring leftovers they just don't want to haul back in the house to the loading dock of the OWC Thrift Shop (located around back) as a donation. The Thrift Shop will be taking donations from 2 to 4 p.m.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent



To get good results from your garden or lawn it is important to know how to use fertilizer.

Fertilizer acts as food for plants. All the nutrition a plant needs is in the soil but in very small quantities.

Most varieties of plants you buy or plant from seed have been cultivated to give a desired appearance or performance. To meet that goal growers intended gardeners to use fertilizer.

Fertilizers can be complicated but not if you know what to look for. On every bag of fertilizer there is a N-P-K ratio.

The N stands for nitrogen, the P stands for phosphorus, and the K stands for potassium. These are the three most important nutrients for any plant.

The nitrogen in fertilizer is for development of leaves and stems. It also helps give leaves their green color. Too much nitrogen burns the leaves giving it yellow splotches.

The phosphorus has two very important functions. One is for root development and the other is for flowering, including production of vegetables or fruit. Too little phosphorus and a plant lacks root strength to survive or has very little production.

The potassium aids in a plant's overall health. It also helps to ward off diseases.

Its primary function is to produce sugar and starches in the plant that help increase the size of the fruits.

Though each plant variety has its own recommendations for fertilizer, gardeners like to keep it simple.

A feeding every 7 to14 days with a balanced fertilizer based on need.

A good balanced fertilizer has equal portions of each of the nutrients, such as 10-10-10 or 20-20-20.

But when trying to get a good yield from crops or flowers an increase in the phosphorous content is best, such as 10-60-10.

For house plants, where green lush foliage is desired, choose a fertilizer with a ratio of 5-1-1.

For lawns a good nitrogen source as well as a phosphorous source, for root development, is best.

Some other key terms used when referring to fertilizer are: time-release, organic and granular. Time released fertilizers are designed to release the nutrients a little at a time. When using these, one distribution will last for 3 to 6 months.

Organic fertilizers refer to those that are made from the byproduct of living organisms.

Some common types are: fish emulsion, bat guano, manure and bone meal. Organic fertilizers are better for the environment and deliver small amounts of nutrients in a single feeding.

Granular fertilizer refers to the consistency.

Granular fertilizers are spread directly onto the soil. Some fertilizers can be poured into hose-end attachments and used as liquid. Others come in liquid form ready to use.

The best way to use fertilizer is to decide what you need it for and develop a practice of feeding regularly.

Q: I was at home babysitting the kids while my wife was at a movie with friends. This guy called and said that I had won a sweepstakes.

He asked me for some identifying information like a credit card number but the baby threw dinner all over the floor and I had to hang up. He said he would call back soon. Am I about to be wealthy or is this guy trying to rip me off?

A: That sounds like the typical introduction for a telemarketing scam. Without warning you receive a call from a company you never heard of about a sweepstakes or contest that you also never heard of.

They get you fired up thinking about all the cash, investments or prizes you are going to receive.

The caller may talk about monthly payments of thousands of dollars that you will receive. Then the caller mentions a small fee to be charged to transfer the assets or register investments in your name.

The caller may ask for your age, your Social Security number and a credit card number with expiration date to cover these small fees. The request seems innocent enough. However, this information will allow the caller access to your credit account. You can expect large unauthorized charges on your credit card.

Schemes involving investment fraud, fake charities and phony sweepstakes cost Americans an estimated $40 billion each year, according to the American Association for Retired Persons.

You can protect yourself from telemarketers by using your common sense.

If a deal sounds too good to be true, it probably is. If you've never heard of the company or the contest or sweepstakes, you should immediately be suspicious about how you ended up the "big winner."

The AARP recommends the following actions:

• Ask the telemarketer for the company's name and address and a clear explanation of the offer being made.

• Never give your credit card number to anyone unless you made the call and are making a purchase.

• Never give a caller your bank account number, unless you are authorizing a payment to be deducted.

• Ask the caller to send you written materials to study before you make a purchase.

• Get advice from your family and friends or the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division before you make any large purchase or investment.

• Ask that your phone number be removed from telemarketing lists if you don't want to be called again.

• Don't pay to get a prize, unless the item is of high quality and is at a price you are willing to pay. But then, if you have to pay, it really isn't a prize, is it?

• Don't allow a caller to intimidate or bully you into buying something "right now."

• Ask about the company's refund policy.

• Call your state attorney general's office, the Better Business Bureau or local consumer protection agency where the company is located. Ask about any complaints.

If you have been a victim of telemarketing fraud, you should call the Federal Trade Commission's Consumer Response Center at (877) 382-4357, the National Fraud Information Center at (800) 876-7060 or your state's attorney general.

Should you have any additional questions regarding telemarketing fraud, you can make an appointment to meet with an attorney.

The number for the Legal Assistance Division is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Columbine survivors speak to local students

Faith Middle School hears of tragedy to deter teen violence

Beyers

Johnson

It may seem like a far cry from wielding joysticks to packing guns, but Heidi Johnson believes that's how it all started. And she should know. She knew the gunmen, and she knew their victims.

Johnson and Lauren Beyers were students at Columbine High School when two gunmen ravaged their school last year. Monday they spoke to students at Fort Benning's Faith Middle School.

"I heard they liked to play Doom," said Johnson, referring to a violent video game said to be a favorite of Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris. "That's how it starts — something small and seemingly inconsequential, but it grew and grew and grew into the evil that we saw that day."

Johnson did see evil April 20, 1999. In fact, for a brief moment she stared it in the face.

"I was hiding under a table in the library, the deadliest place in the school. Five people were killed in the area surrounding my table," she said. "I was praying. I was asking for God's favor at that time, and I believe he gave it to me.

"From where I sat I could see casings flying all around me. The boy next to me was shot as I watched. I had this sinking feeling, 'What if I'm next?' Then Dylan leaned over and looked right in my eyes. He asked me a question, but I don't know what it was. I was praying. He turned around and walked away."

"Why?" asked one student.

Johnson smiled. This was the question she'd been hoping for.

"Dylan didn't spare my life that day. God did. He saved me for this reason, that I can travel around and talk to young people about my faith. I have the unique opportunity to tell people about God's grace and that through him this generation can change the world and end this kind of violence."

More than 700 students listened raptly as Johnson and Beyers told of watching their classmates die around them and escaping with their own lives amidst the mayhem of gunfire and explosives. They weren't the only ones listening.

Manufacturers and marketers around the nation are listening to anti-violence proponents who say the kind of violence two students wreaked in Columbine often starts as fun and games. Major distributors like Walmart and K-Mart recently announced they'll discontinue the sale of video games deemed too violent for young children.

Anti-violence watch groups claim video games labeled for mature audiences are actually geared toward children as young as 12. Like Johnson, they believe children are being exposed, and ultimately desensitized, to the kind of violence depicted on these games.

"I believe it was just like a game to them," Johnson said. "You know, you just push the replay button and start all over again. Only those who died that day don't get to start all over again. I realized then that I am not guaranteed any tomorrows in this life, and my actions not only affect my future but the future of everyone around me.

"The violence has to end. We have to make a change and it starts right here and now, with this generation."

Faith students responded to Johnson's message with applause and shouts of agreement.

"She's right," said sixth-grader Jorge Castro. "It's important for students to hear about the dangers of anger and violence. We need to know that what we do and say affects everyone around us."

Teacher: Takes honors here, will compete for national title and finding Mrs. Harris. I always thought I was her favorite, and our bond was an unusual one for both of us.

"But when I spotted her in the computer lab with her class, I realized that she was like that with every student. I watched her work with them and treat them all as creative individuals. I hadn't seen her in six years, but the bond hadn't changed at all. I could look at her and see all the possibilities in my life."

Shortly after that visit, Gillum decided to pursue a career in education.

He said Harris was the main influence in his decision, and he hopes to follow her example as a teacher.

"I hope to make her proud by showing the same passion (for education)," he said. "She is truly a shining example of how one teacher can change many lives."

After Fort McClellan closed, Harris transferred to Fort Benning where she began teaching in 1999. For more than a year now, she has commuted weekly from her Anniston, Ala., home to her job at Stowers Elementary.

"From the moment she arrived at Fort Benning, she's been an active, involved teacher with insightful input at all levels," said Mike Starrett, Stowers assistant principal. "Her love of teaching shows in everything she does. She truly deserves this award."

Harris calls herself "a lifetime learner," with a real love for this "grand adventure called education." But her love of learning didn't always translate to the classroom.

"I was a classic underachiever. I dropped out of college after I married because I found school monotonous and irrelevant at that point," she said. "It didn't take me long to realize what I'd given up."

After the births of her son and daughter and a series of unsatisfying clerical jobs, Harris returned to college and earned a teaching degree at the age of 28.

In 1981 she completed her master's degree in special education, talented and gifted, at the University of Alabama.

"Now I work to make school more exciting and pertinent to students' lives than was my initial experience," she said. "However, I do stress to youngsters that in the real world people have to do many things they may not enjoy, but they should always do their best and keep a positive attitude.

"We're doing kids a disservice if we make them feel they should always be entertained. That's not what school is all about."

Harris said her greatest responsibility as a teacher is to focus on the "whole child."

"Our success with students is measured more and more by test scores," she said. "Tests can not measure all there is to know about a child. What is most important is their character.

"We can have a world where every child is knowledgeable and competent, but if they don't treat their fellow human beings with respect, it won't be a world worth living in."

Harris said her teaching philosophies are best defined in The Seven Habits of Highly Effective People, by Stephen Covey. Last year she led a teacher's study group based on the principles outlined in the book.

"Teaching is all about attitudes, principles and priorities," she said. "Those who make the decision to teach must realize they will always come second.

"The people we serve must be our number one priority, and being an effective teacher means putting first things first all the time. It's all in your attitude.

"A good attitude is contagious and it will counter negativity every time. All in all, teaching is a fulfilling, wonderful career with amazing rewards and possibilities, but it all hinges on attitude."

drinks will be served throughout the day, and guests will be offered free hair cuts, smoke detectors and health and dental screenings.

A special "Kidz Zone" will be set up with games, rides, balloons, face painting, jumping gyms and pony rides. Local musicians and entertainers will perform throughout the day, and a family ministry tent will be available for prayer and special attention.

"We expect many people to become aware of our God and the love he has for all of them," Russell said. "Our mission is to show that love by being kind and offering them free food and services."

Russell said the success of the event will be determined by the number of guests and volunteers on hand Saturday. At least 1,500 volunteers are needed.

"Anyone can be a part of the Convoy effort by volunteering. Again everyone is welcome," he said. "We need help setting up Friday, and distributing groceries and serving as greeters and ushers Saturday.

"Everyone involved is just 'plain old folks' who want to help the needy. No one gets paid money or has anything to gain by being involved. We're all just volunteers. Our motto is, 'it's amazing what can be accomplished when no one cares who gets the credit.'"

Bruce Mulford, Fort Benning's director of youth ministries, said members of Club Beyond will volunteer at the event. Anyone interested in participating can reach Mulford at 545-2359.

The event starts at 10:30 am, rain or shine. For more information, call 323-1876.

a student prayer group gathered one Monday morning in 1997.

"I believe God cried that day," said Hudson, now a senior at Heath. "But he took what was meant for evil and turned it into good.

That tragedy has opened the doors for people like me to share our love of Jesus with people like you who can stop the violence in America."

Throngs gathered around the auditorium for a time of prayer and worship as the clock neared 9 p.m.

Despite the hour, no one seemed in a hurry to leave — the best was yet to come.

Rich Gallagher, who coordinated the event with the help of the corporate sponsors CB&T, Synovis, Total Systems and One Accord, held aloft a set of keys to a 2000 Ford Mustang.

Alexandra Winchester, 15, of Columbus won the car.

Attention all Tricare eligible families...

Make The Right Choice For Prime, Extra, Or Standard Supplemental Protection

The AMRA Tricare Supplement works today. And tomorrow.

Whether TRICARE is effective in your service area, the AMRA Tricare Supplement has an option designed to pay deductibles, your cost share, and 100% of covered excess charges over the Tricare Standard allowed amount.

You'll also benefit from these valuable features:

• Choose the coverage you want, based on your own medical care preferences and budget.

• Switch from Extra or Standard Supplement to Tricare Prime Supplement with full credit for pre-existing condition waiting period.

• No need to reapply when changing supplement options, regardless of changes in your health.

Guaranteed acceptance and guaranteed satisfaction, too

There are no health questions to answer, and YOU CAN'T BE TURNED DOWN for the AMRA plan, although a pre-existing condition may initially limit the extent of your coverage.

You can examine your certificate of insurance for 30 days risk-free. Just return it for a full refund if you're not completely satisfied.

An example of critical thinking skills.

Talents Unlimited program teaches kids critical skills

Millie Harris
Stowers Elementary School

Children need to learn how to think critically, as well as creatively.

Talents Unlimited is a model for teaching both. Dr. Carol L. Schlichter at the University of Alabama developed this innovative educational program under a Title III Elementary and Secondary Education Act grant in Mobile, Ala. in 1971.

Instructional support and enrichment teachers at Fort Benning received training this summer on this highly effective, research-proven strategy for students' development of higher order thinking skills.

The Talents Unlimited approach helps teachers identify and nurture children's academic, productive thinking, communication, decision-making, planning and thinking skills.

Academic talent helps students acquire knowledge in a variety of subjects, while the other skills help students in processing or using the knowledge to create new solutions to problems.

When youngsters are engaged in productive thinking, they are asked to name many, varied and unusual ideas or solutions and to add detail to the ideas to improve them or to make them more interesting.

An example of how Talents Unlimited would be used is by (productive thinking) beginning with singing "Where oh where has my little dog gone?"

Students are then given time to think of many, varied, unusual places their little dog might have gone.

Next students are given a sheet of paper to draw the most unusual place their little dog may have gone. This is a second grade task.

"The critical thinking component is the biggest thing involved with this," Dixon said.

Teachers hope to stimulate the different talents that students possess by giving them the opportunities to let their minds wander "outside the doghouse."

The students are excited about coming to the lab where they are encouraged to "charge their brains" using the Talents Unlimited model.

Decision making involves generating solutions to a problem, weighing these solutions, making a final judgment and defending a decision on the many alternatives to a problem.

An example of decision-making could be students who are preparing to assist in a snack bar for the fall festival making final decisions about the type foods to offer by weighing alternatives with such criteria as cost, children's preferences, availability of the particular snacks, and profit.

Students use planning to design a strategy for implementing an idea by describing what is to be done, identifying the materials needed, listing the steps to take in sequence, and analyzing possible problems in their plan.

Some examples of planning talent are youngsters making plans for a science fair project, a class party, lesson for younger students or a field trip.

Forecasting is making predictions about the possible causes and effects of various phenomena.

A possible example of this skill would be students who are studying about possible reasons for the disappearance of the dinosaurs being encouraged to generate their own predictions about possible causes for the dinosaurs' demise.

Communication is using and interpreting both verbal and nonverbal forms of communication to express ideas, feelings, and needs to others.

A case in point would be fifth-graders studying the Civil War role-play reactions of both Union and Confederate Soldiers as they hear the reading of the Emancipation Proclamation.

Academic talent is developing a base of knowledge and skills about a topic or issue through attainment of information and concepts. It precedes the other thinking skills.

Children need a foundation on which to build. A student reading from a variety of resources to research information about the presidential election and then sharing the information in a discussion of the political candidates illustrates academic talent.

Implementation of the Talents Unlimited model is enhancing identification of students with high potential in a wide range of abilities and is providing the basis for enrichment of all students talent strengths at Stowers Elementary.

The instructional support teachers are infusing Talents Unlimited in the regular classrooms through co-teaching, in small group, and in whole group instruction. The enrichment teacher is integrating Talents lessons in the enrichment program and in co-teaching.

The students at Stowers will become better thinkers because of this program's implementation.

Children work on artwork with an Australian theme.

Work features Australia

Sharon Del Gobbo
Stowers Elementary School

The Olympics are coming! And the art classes at Stowers Elementary School are learning all about Australia, its inhabitants, animals and artwork.

Kangaroos, koalas and coral reefs abound in the art room. The students are very excited about aboriginal artwork in particular.

The third- and fifth-graders are making drawings and paintings in the style of these native Australians.

Fifth-grade students are making bark paintings on simulated bark (brown paper bags) and fourth-grade students studied three-dimensional artwork by making a coral reef. We feel strongly that experiences in art should not be limited to making cute little crafts, but are a study of artists, techniques and world cultures.

The world is full of wonderful artwork. Come to Stowers and see.

God's love puts 'Yes' on faces

Chaplain (Maj.) Ruben Colon
U.S. Army School of the Americas

reflections

There is the story of a woman who, early one morning, made a mad dash out of the house when she heard the garbage truck pulling away.

She was still in her bathrobe. Her hair was wrapped in big curlers. Her face was covered with sticky cream. She was wearing a chin-strap and a beat up old pair of slippers. In short, she was a rightful picture.

When she reached the sidewalk, she called out, "Am I too late for the garbage?" "No, hop right in," came the reply.

The beautiful thing about God is that he keeps on loving us even when our life becomes so frightful we're ready to hop into the garbage.

"Out of the depths I cry to you, O Lord," cried the psalmist (Psalms 130:1). "Behold, I make all things new" comes the reply (Rev. 21:5). This is the time of fulfillment. "The Reign of God is at hand! Reform your lives and believe in the Gospel" (Mark 1:15). In Mark's Gospel, these are the first words spoken by Jesus.

Believe in the gospel of God's love and you will reform. It will change your way of living. It will become "second nature," so to speak, to forgive those who have hurt you, to pray for those who mistreat you, to bless those who hate you, to comfort those who need you, to appreciate those you take for granted.

Never are we fully equal to these responsibilities.

None of us is perfect, after all. We are sinners all in one way or another. And so the call to change is a continuing one. It is a continuing need in our life. The important thing is the direction in which we are moving.

There is a story about Thomas Jefferson in which the president and several friends were riding cross-country on horseback.

They came to a swollen river which they had to ford. Standing at the water's edge was a man who was traveling on foot. After several men in the president's party had crossed the river, the traveler asked Jefferson to help him across. Jefferson took the man on his horse and carried him to the other side.

Whereupon, one of the president's men asked the traveler, "Why did you select the President to ask for this favor?"

The traveler replied, "I didn't realize he was the president. I just know that in some faces is written the answer "No!" and in others the answer "Yes!" His was a 'Yes!' face."

New life begins when you read the unconditional "Yes!" in the face of God and accept his invitation to carry you safely through life's journey.

And you will know for certain that you are moving in the right direction when your fellow travelers begin to see the word "Yes!" written in your face.

"Reform your lives. The Reign of God is at hand!" Get your "No!" face ready for the garbage and put on your "Yes!" face as a sign of God's love.

Secrets often result in lies of omission

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

How much of our past we keep secret from people and how much we disclose to others is not a simple decision.

Typical things we keep secret are previous criminal activity, sexual impropriety or moral indiscretion. In part our decision to reveal or not to reveal a secret is based on several factors.

First, how close is our relationship with that person?

What we disclose to a person who is our neighbor, friend, relative, colleague, supervisor or employer might be different than what we disclose to our chaplain, counselor, attorney, fiance or spouse.

Second, is the past indiscretion over or is it ongoing?

A person who has served his time in prison is more willing to reveal his past than a person who is still wanted by the law.

Third, will revealing the secret cause additional harm to another?

Revealing to a person that you had an intimate relationship with their spouse will frequently cause further heartache.

But keeping a current affair that you are having with another secret from your spouse is probably done more to protect you than to protect your spouse.

Unfortunately keeping secrets often results in the need to tell lies of omission, half-truths or bold face lies in order to maintain the secret.

Lying not only attempts to deceive others, but it also attempts to deceive ourselves.

Considerable mental and emotional effort is needed to maintain secrets and uphold lies. Unfortunately all this effort is wasted since most lies eventually become known.

People who reveal their secrets often experience tremendous relief and spiritual cleansing.

This is important since longstanding secrets and lies that are revealed by others produce greater grief and shame than when a person readily admits or confesses the secret and lies.

Telling your fiance your secret is less harmful than having her hear the same secret from someone else five or 10 years after you are married.

Secrets need not wreak havoc on you, your marriage or your family.

If you would like help in considering your options, free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at ChiefFamLifeMin@aol.com.

Soldiers head to Gold medal dreams

Shooters on way to Sydney Olympic games

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Most people never get to live out their wildest dreams, but 10 Soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are fulfilling their dreams in the land down under.

The Army shooters who made the U.S. Olympic Team headed to Sydney, Australia, this week to prepare for their Olympic Shooting Competition, Saturday to Sept. 23.

The Olympic shooters are: Michael E. Anti and Glenn A. Dubis, free rifle three position; Dubis and Thomas A. Tamas, free rifle prone; Lance D. Dement, running target; James Todd Graves and Michael E. Schmidt Jr., skeet; Daryl L. Szarenski, free pistol; Kenneth A. Johnson and Jason A. Parker, air rifle; and William H. Keever, double trap.

"I've devoted 17 years to winning at the Olympics," said Johnson, a 1996 Olympic air rifle alternate, whose wife, Nancy, also made the 1996 and 2000 Olympic Teams in Women's Air Rifle. "I witnessed the energy of the Olympics in 1996; it can pick you up and carry you away.

"I'll get to compete this time," said Johnson, a 31-year-old from Marshfield, Mass., continued. "I wanted to be an Olympian because I want to do one thing right, perfectly right, when it counts."

Johnson said he and his air rifle teammate, Parker, will strive to bring home the Gold and Silver for the United States; they said it does not matter who wins which medal, as long as the Army gets them.

"I always wanted to be an Olympian since I was a kid, so it felt good to be named to the team," Parker said. "I came into the Army to serve my country, and the Army has made me into the best shooter I can be.

"The USAMU has given me every advantage; we have the best gunsmiths, ranges, coaches and training."

Parker, 26, from Omaha, Neb., echoed the sentiments of his rifle teammates by attributing much of his success to USAMU International Rifle Team Coach William E. Krilling, 73, who is also at the Sydney Games as a shooting official and juror.

"My success as a shooter is due mainly to Bill Krilling," said four-time Olympian Dubis. "He has coached me since 1982; he has a special talent for working with people and helping them with the technical aspects of shooting."

Dubis, 41, who is the current Military World Rifle Champion, said he had to give up many of his other goals to pursue his Olympic dream.

"You have to pursue your dreams," the Bethel Park, Pa., native said. "That way you won't have to look back on your life and wonder 'what if.'"

Anti, 36, of Winterville, N.C., a 1992 Olympian, said winning Olympic Gold has been his goal since he was 13.

"The 1992 Olympics were very exciting," Anti said. "The opening ceremony and competing in the prone rifle event was the highlight, and the low point was finishing 15th and not winning a medal.

"This time, I will be better prepared mentally."

Tamas, who was a 1992 Olympic alternate, said his number one goal is to compete and win in the Olympic Games.

"To be on the Olympic Shooting Team is an accomplishment in itself; it's a very good feeling to be among the best," said Tamas, 35, a native of Columbus.

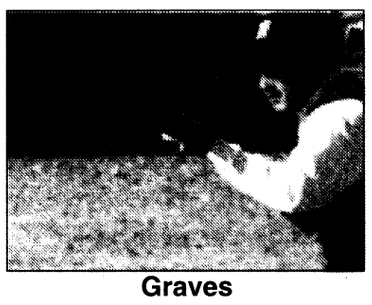
Tamas, who shot with the Fort Benning Junior Rifle Team and the Kendrick High School ROTC Shooting Team, said he joined the Army to serve his country and to compete and win in shooting competitions.

"Most of my life was spent in Columbus," Tamas said. "My father was in the Army, so I'm an Army brat. My father was a shooter, and it looked fun, so I started."

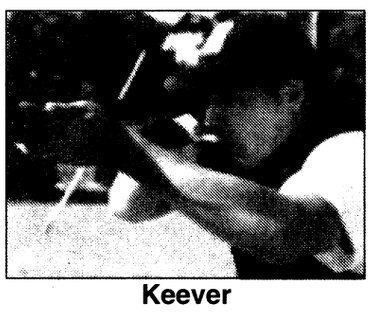
Another Army "brat," Dement, the son of an Airborne colonel, is an Airborne Ranger himself and is an Expert Infantry Badge recipient. He is also one of an elite group of shooters who are "triple distinguished" — having been awarded the Distinguished Pistol Shot Badge, Distinguished Rifleman Badge and Distinguished International Shooter Badge — as well as possessing the President's Hundred Tab.

"Being a member of the 2000 Olympic Team is one of the greatest honors of my life," said Dement, who will turn 32 the day before he competes in Sydney.

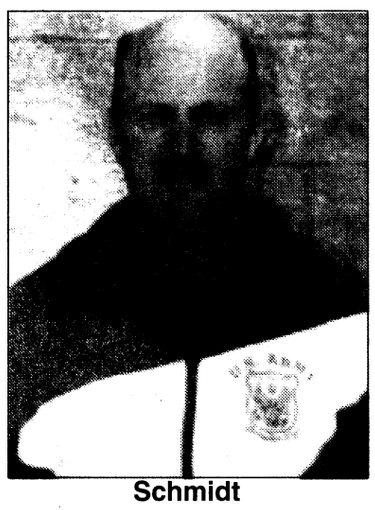
"I joined the Army after high school to get out on my own and earn some money for college. I believe that all my Army experiences have made me a better person."



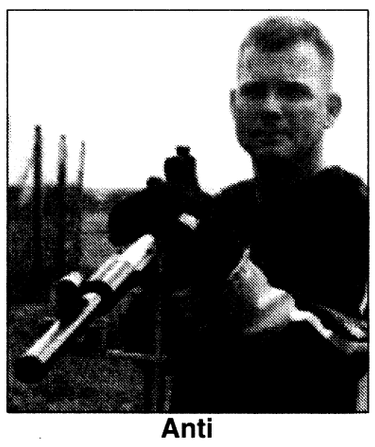
Szarenski, 32, of Saginaw, Mich., said becoming an Olympian accomplished one of his many shooting goals, and that the Army helped him achieve that goal by training him effectively.



"I attribute my success as a shooter to all of the people who have taught me anything about shooting, and to me for executing what was taught," Szarenski said.



Szarenski attended Tennessee Technological University on a four-year scholarship to shoot on the school's ROTC rifle team and was an All-American in rifle and both air and free pistol before joining the Army.



"My Dad got me interested in shooting. The best advice I ever got was from my Dad who said, "It's never over until all of the shots are down range.'"

Graves started shooting with his parents when he was growing up in Laurel, Miss.

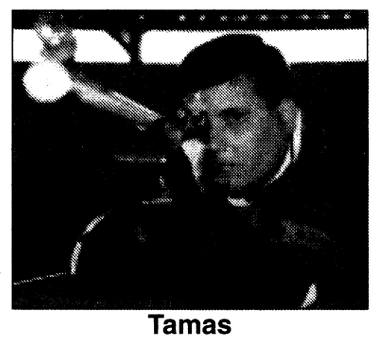
When he was 10 years old, he and his father saw a group of people shooting a trap tournament in a field near their home.

Graves' father let him shoot in the match, and when he took third place, little did he know it would start him in a career that would make him a three-time Olympian.

"Being an Olympian has been my lifelong dream; it's one of the greatest feelings in the world," Graves said, adding that he attributes his success to the Army. "If it weren't for the Army, I'd probably be watching the Olympics on TV at home instead of competing.



"My family and my coach, Burl Branham, never gave up on me and always stood by my side," the 37-year-old added. "They always said, 'Don't ever give up; keep working hard.'"

Schmidt, a Reservist who got assigned to the USAMU under the World Class Athlete Program, is also competing in the Olympic Skeet Competition with Graves.

Schmidt, 42, said he credits the training he received at the Army Marksmanship Unit for his being selected to the U.S. Olympic Shooting Team and declares that he will win a medal in Sydney.

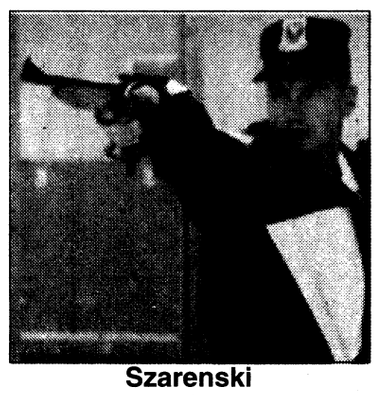
Keever, 24, of Rutherfordton, N.C., said being an Olympian had always been his dream since he was a child.

"The moment I found out I was on the team, I was overcome with emotion; it was the best feeling I have ever had," Keever said.



Keever said he thanks God for giving him his talent, his parents for their long hours, financial support and unselfishness, his wife for putting up with his busy schedule, and his brother, former USAMU shotgun shooter Walter B. Keever, for pushing him to be a better shooter.

"The Army was the means to which I obtained my goal," Keever added. "The Army afforded me the time and training it took to be a world-class shooter.

"Without the Army, I could have never done it."

Brewers squeak by Indians in season opener

Soldiers' Baseball Association wins first game, 6-5

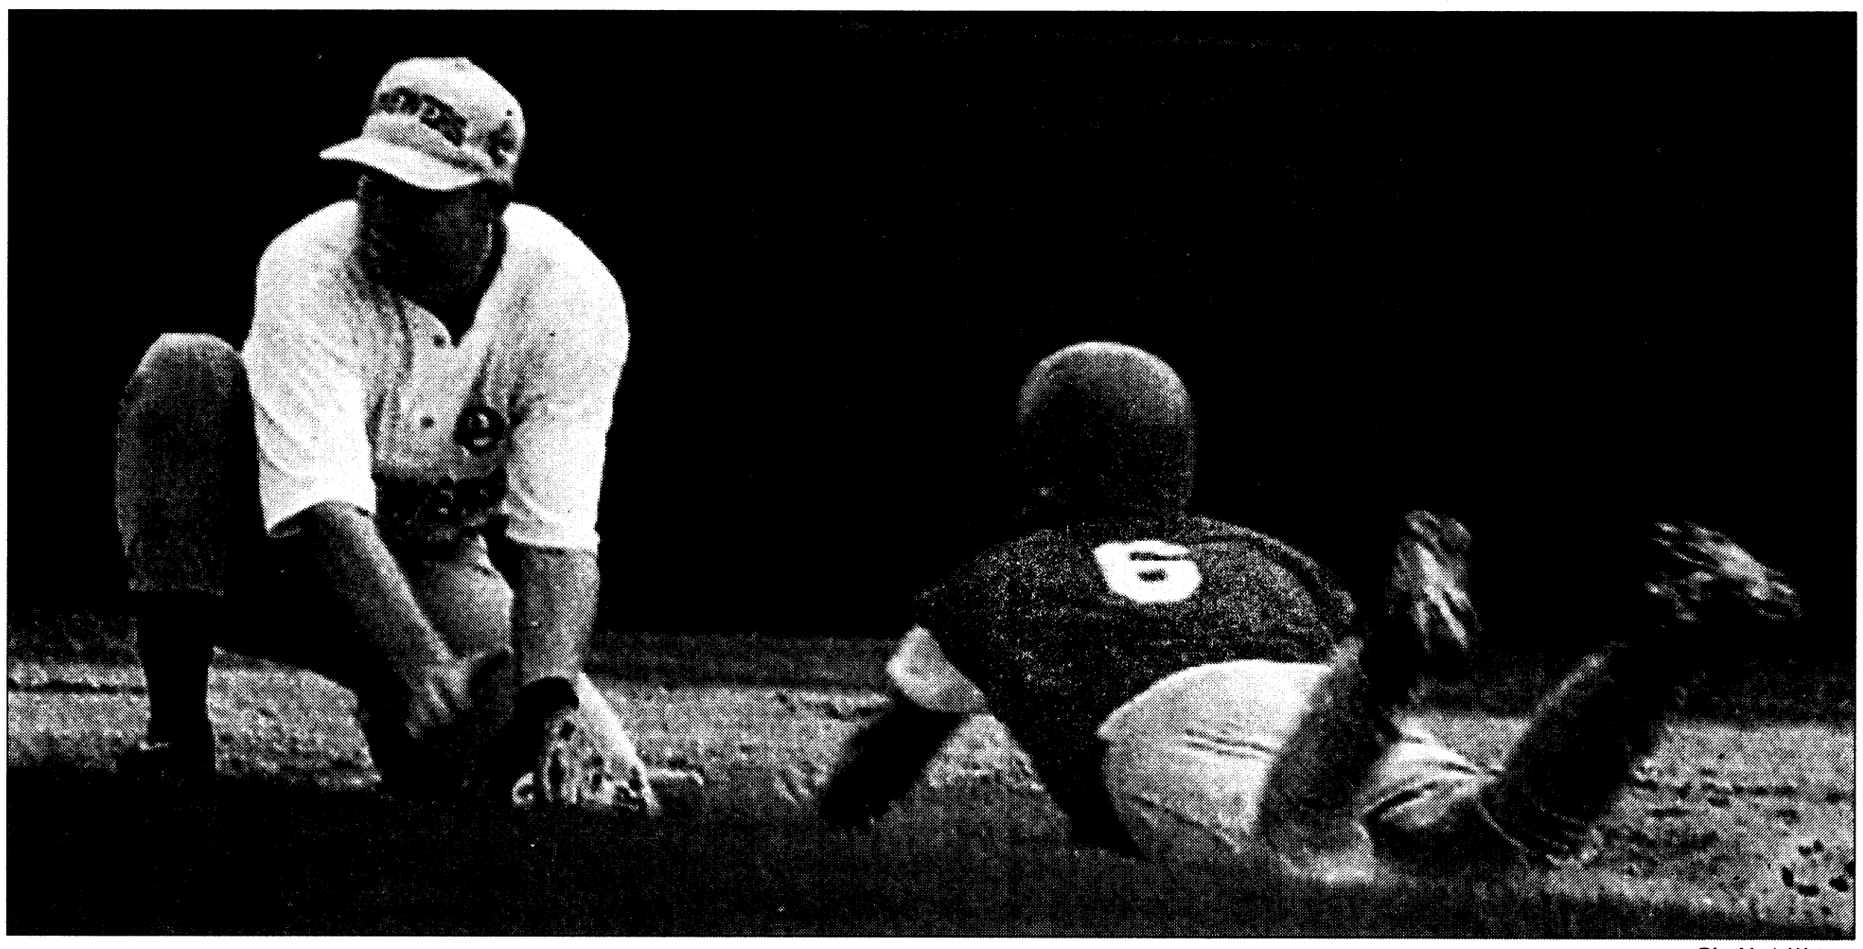
Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

The Brewers brought out their mighty bats to beat the Indians Sunday at Darnell Field in Phenix City in the first game of the fall baseball season, 6-5.

The Brewers, of the Soldiers' Baseball Association outplayed the Indians to win the first game of the season.

The game started with a bang for the Indians when Root Pierce, the second baseman, hit a solo shot over the center field fence scoring the only hit for the Indians in the first.

The Brewers' second baseman Chris Folk, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and shortstop Anthony Ferraioli, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., hit back-to-back singles.



On a wild pitch, Folk scored and Ferraioli advanced to second.

As Ferraioli took his lead off of second, Indian's pitcher Will Peoples gunned the ball toward second to make the pick off and end the inning.

The Brewers kept the Indians scoreless in the second and scored one more when catcher Chris Burgess, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., who hit a double, stole home courtesy another wild Indian pitch.

Both teams were hitless in the third leaving the Brewers in the lead, 2-1.

In the top of the fourth, Indian's catcher Shane Parrish hit a hard drive over the right field fence for the Indian's only hit of the inning.

Brewers shortstop Anthony Ferraioli prepares for a collision as he tags Indians shortstop Joe Stansen sliding into second base. The Brewers won the game, 6-5, which marked the season opener for them.

Brewers center fielder Eric Hare, U.S. Army Student Detachment, walked and then stole second to move himself into scoring position.

Burgess knocked the ball deep into the outfield scoring Hare. Left fielder Korey Brown, B Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt, hit a blistering shot scoring Burgess for a two run inning, giving the Brewers a 4-2 lead.

The Brewers kept the Indians nearly hitless, but the Indians managed to get one hit advancing third baseman Mark Snyder. When Snyder stole third, Burgess tried to make the throw, but the throw went high into the outfield and Snyder scored.

With the Brewers back on the offense, Rick Johanninsmier, C Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., who came into the game as a substitute, doubled.

Edwin Perez, who also subbed into the game, followed suit and drove the ball deep into the outfield bringing Johanninsmier in and the game to 5-3.

Both teams played solid defense in the sixth and neither team allowed a hit.

Ferraioli said throughout the game both teams played defense real well.

With the Indians back up, Peoples hit a single scoring Snyder and bringing the game within one run.

Soldier's child takes top honors

Golfer, 7, birdies to take third in world competition

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

He is only 7, but he has accomplished more than most people twice or even three times his age. And now he is considered one of the best in the world.

Johnathan Howard, the son of Yong and Timothy Howard, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, competed in the U.S. Kids World Golf Championships Aug. 12 - 14 at Jekyll Island, Ga.

Matched up against more than 30 other 7-year-olds, he bested all of them in the long drive competition and played well enough to receive third place during the two days of nine holes.

"The first day was just a skills competition," Howard said. "There were contests on driving, chipping and putting. He won the long drive contest," driving the ball 126 yards in flight. "The other kids hit, about 105, was a good drive."

In the second and third day of the competition, the youngsters played two nine-hole rounds and Johnathan emerged in third place. He placed only one stroke behind second place and five behind first.

After the first round of the tournament, where Johnathan scored a 36, he was near the top of the leaders board with nine holes left in the second round.

With two holes remaining in the tournament, an official told him he was tied for fifth.

"That gave him a bolt of energy," Howard said. "He tried like I've never seen him try before. He birdied the last two holes ,which gave him third place," he said. "On 18, he didn't know it, but he was tied and the birdy which was about a 15- or 18-foot putt, put him over the top."

"It was a long putt and a hard one," Johnathan said. "But it wasn't my longest one." The youth recently sank a putt which was more than 25 feet.

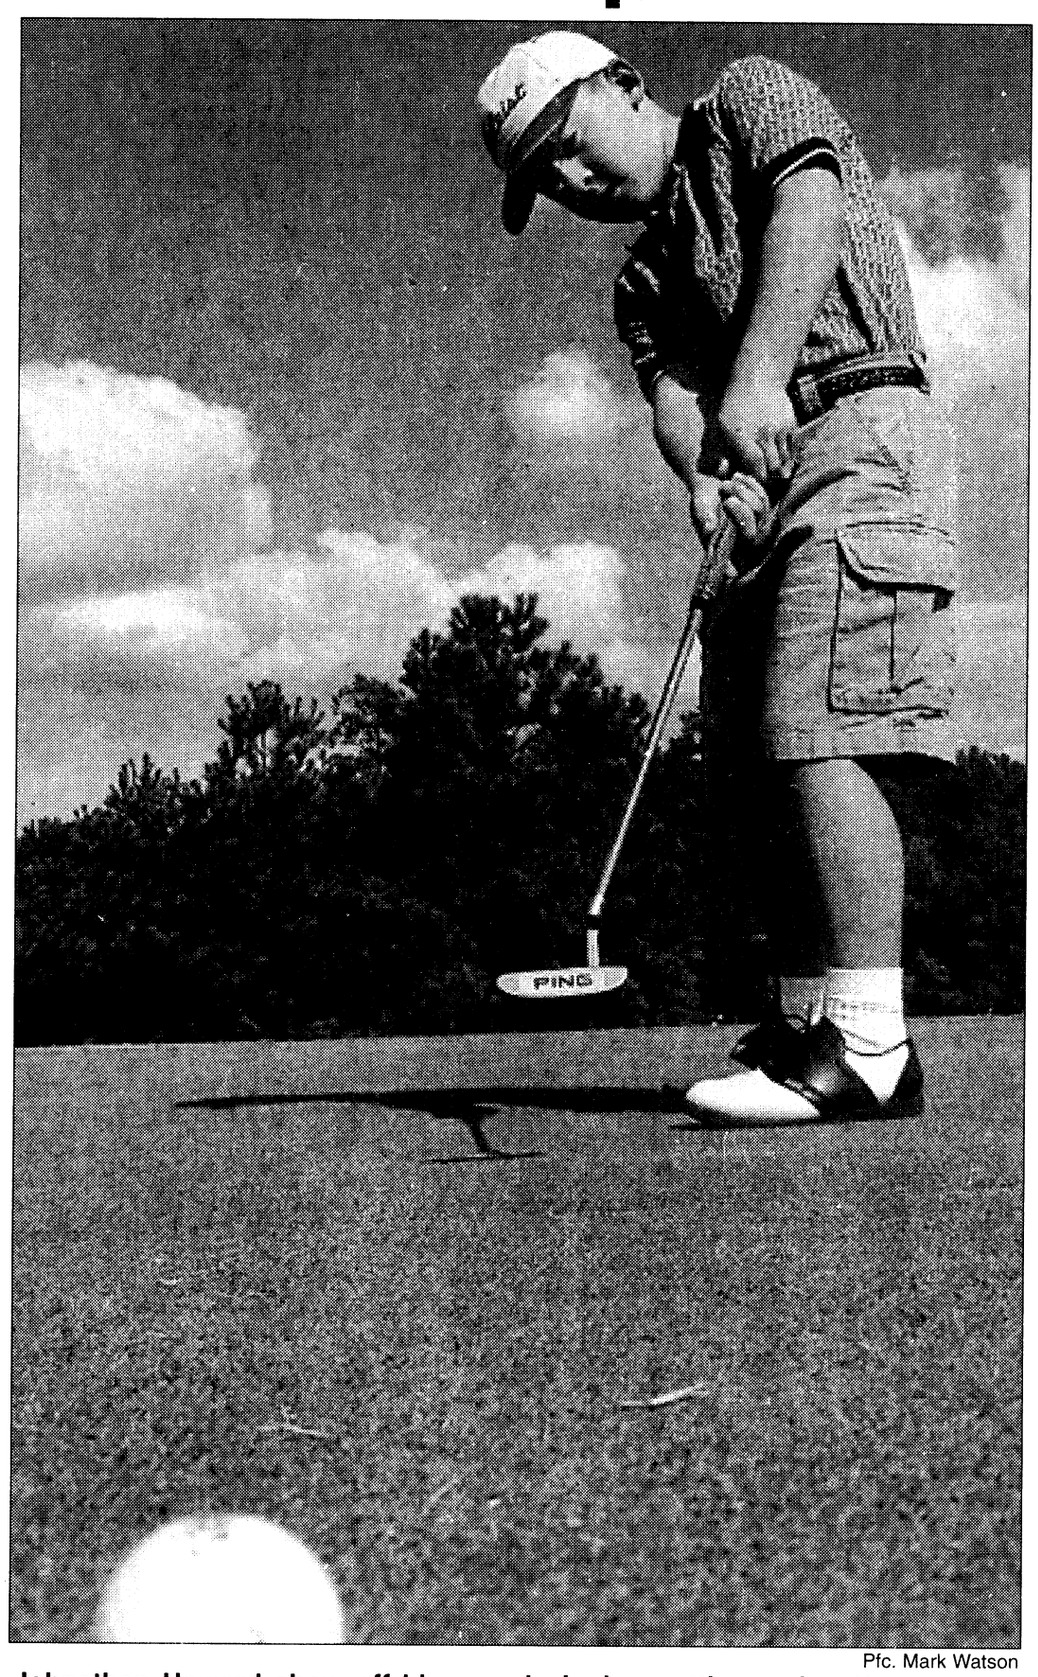
"Johnathan picked up his first club when he was 2, Howard said.

"We were in Washington state where it rained a lot so I was bringing my clubs inside," Howard said. "He started copying me at 2 and one half. He couldn't swing a club because it was too heavy so I got him a yardstick and he had a good swing. He caught on real quick."

Now, five years later, Johnathan has his own clubs, which his father partially built, and a smooth swing.

"I really like driving the best," Johnathan said. His driving is his strong point, Howard said.

For next year's tournament, Johnathan will be hitting 100 yards for a par 3, 200 yards for a par 4 and 300 for a par 5.



"This year everybody was real close," he said. "With it moved back double, I think next year he will really shine."

"Physically he's got it," he said. "He needs to stay mentally focused. Sometimes it is hard for him to keep his cool under pressure, but I tell him try to focus and take things one shot at a time.

"I tell him every stroke is important and never to give up," he said.

"It really is fun to be able to teach him," Howard said. "We encourage him to play, but we won't force him. "He also plays football and baseball, so we'll just see where things go from here."

Johnathan said he is looking forward to next years' tournament and then with his putter and a ball, he moved to the putting green to practice alongside one of his youth golfing companions.

Brewers: Steal win in season opener

The Brewers took to the plate again hoping to finish the game.

The Indians changed pitchers bringing Pierce to the mound and Bielak to second.

Pierce walked the first batter and then hit two more. One was drilled in the back and the other in the legs loading the bases.

On a wild pitch Burgess scored from third taking the score to 6-4.

Extra hitter Derrick Dotson stepped up to the plate for the Indians and was hit by the ball. Rick Jacobson hit the ball directly to Bielak, but with one bounce left the ball took a bad hop over Bielak's glove and into the outfield which scored Dotson.

"I need to work with the pitchers a little more," Burgess said. "I am not too familiar with them, what they can throw, what their capabilities are."

He said by working with the pitchers and knowing their capabilities will benefit the team.

Although the run brought the game within one, it wasn't enough and the Brewers managed to pull off the win, 6-5.

"We played OK for the first time out," Indians' first baseman Kevin Favant said. "We were a bit rusty but we'll come along. It really was a good game."

Ed Gawlik, the Brewers coach, said the game was great.

"These close games are rough," Gawlik said. "We really played a fundamentally sound game. There were a few problems, but overall it was a good game. The game was really competitive and both played great."

The Brewers will play again at 1 p.m. Sunday at Darnell Field.

Theater tumbles to ground

Soldier Show sent to Civic Center Sunday

About 7,000 trainees from Sand Hill will ride buses to the Columbus Civic Center Sunday to see the Soldier Show.

This is the first year the performance will be held off post, and the new location will almost triple the number of Soldiers and community members who can attend the free 90-minute program.

In the past, the show was held in the Sand Hill Theater No. 3, but that facility is no longer standing. A casualty of the infrastructure war, it was demolished in late September.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne decided in March to tear down the theater.

"The roof had severe leaks and was deemed uneconomical to repair," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works.

"The demolition will save a great deal of operations and maintenance dollars that would have been poured into the 30-year-old structure. It was neither energy efficient nor waterproof and was laden with asbestos insulation and lead-based paint," Stelzer said.

"Unless you take down the older, inefficient structures, you will never get the funding necessary to build what you need," said Col. John Latimer, former chief of staff.

Built in 1970, the theater needed a new roof, which Latimer estimated would have cost more than $400,000.

"We would spend between $15- to $20,000 each year just to make it presentable for the Soldier Show," Latimer said.

The theater could seat about 1,000, so three performances of the show were held each year, allowing only about 3,000 trainees to be entertained. The civic center can seat 9,000.

"In the past we would invite members of the Columbus community to come out to the show, but very few attended because of limited capacity," said Al Stewart,

MPs return from Honduras

Deployment comes to end for 988th MP Co.

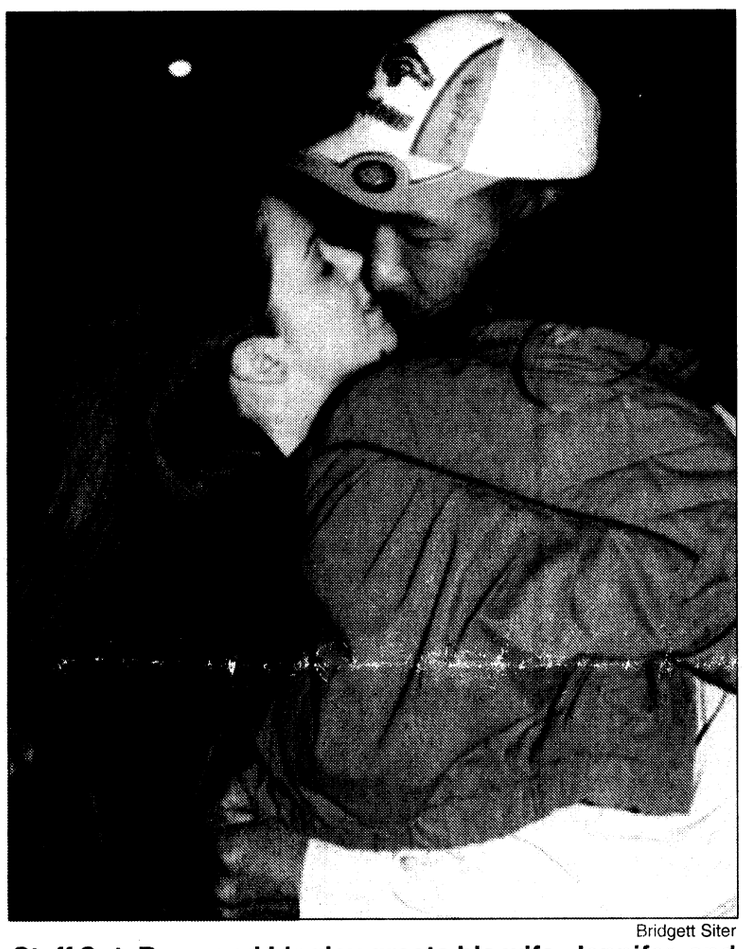
Soldiers from the 988th Military Police Company's 3rd Platoon returned from Honduras Oct. 7.

A host of family and friends braved Saturday's plunging temperatures to greet 31 Soldiers returning from nearly five months at the Soto Cano Air Base where they participated in Joint Task Force Bravo.

Jason Elmore, 13-year-old son of Staff Sgt. Brett Elmore, said he's been anxious for his dad's return since the day he left.



"It's hard not having a dad around. I'm going to hug him and tell him how much I missed him," Jason said, as he waited anxiously for the bus carrying his dad.

The returning Soldiers were greeted with a police escort at the entrance to Fort Benning and a rousing fanfare of flags, flowers, balloons, hugs and cheers as "The Stars and Stripes Forever" blared from a loud speaker.

"They've been gone a long time. I know they're exhausted and excited to be home. They deserve a hero's welcome," said Cheryl Suber, family support group president.

Soldiers from the 988th and families of the 10 married Soldiers began preparing for the homecoming more than a month ago. The company's executive officer, 1st Lt. Rosalyn Reese, said they cleaned barracks and provided the single Soldiers with the necessary toiletries to make their homecoming comfortable.

"They're going to come in tired and ready to sleep. We wanted them to have everything they need to be as comfortable as possible and to have a real smooth transition," Reese said.

Staff Sgt. Raymond Lingley greets his wife, Jennifer, and daughter, Allison, Saturday night.

Last week family members painted banners and erected signs to welcome home their Soldiers. Papa John's and Little Caesars donated pizza for the event.

"It's good to be home," said Pvt. Bo Williams. "All I want to do is have some pizza and get some sleep."

Spc. Larry Fowler said he was looking forward to some rest and quiet time with his wife and six children, including his 6-month-old daughter Sha'neece.

"She was just a tiny thing when I left," he said. "Now she's crawling and saying da da. I've missed a lot. I'm glad to be back."

Fowler said he appreciated his wife's ability to manage the family in his absence.

"I'm so proud of her," he said. "She had her hands full, but she handled everything wonderfully. It's good to know everything's OK at home if you have to be away."

Sgt. 1st Class Chris Cox lost one family member and gained a new one while he was away. He was greeted by his wife, Michelle, and Zipper, a Jack Russell puppy.

"Our dog passed away while Chris was gone," Michelle said. "He's coming home to a little bit of sadness and a little bit of joy. I'm hoping Zipper will make him feel better."

While in Honduras, the Soldiers served on the Joint Security Force, which was tasked to provide law enforcement and security for the JTF-Bravo personnel, facilities and equipment and act as liaison to Honduran law enforcement.

There will be a new face in the assistant commandant's office come Monday.

Col. David Rodriguez is the new deputy commanding general of the U.S. Army Infantry Center and the assistant commandant of the Infantry School.

"I look forward to coming back to the Home of the Infantry and hope to have a positive impact on the Infantry force of the future," Rodriguez said.

In Rodriguez's latest assignment he served as the assistant chief of staff at the 18th Airborne Corps, Fort Bragg, N.C., and brings broad Infantry experience to his new position.

"I've been in four of the five types of Infantry units," Rodriguez said. This includes Ranger, Airborne, Air Assault and mechanized Infantry units.

Rodriguez replaces Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, who has been the deputy commanding general and assistant commandant of the USAIC since Aug. 9, 1999.

Eaton's next assignment is in Fort Lewis, Wash., where he will be the deputy commanding general for transformation, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command.

There he will be working with the Initial Brigade Combat Team and the Interim Brigade Combat Team, Infantry-centric units that blend heavy and light capabilities for advanced tactical and strategic agility.

"I look forward to continuing the great work started by Maj. Gen. James Dubik and his Dog handlers gather in remembrance

War Dog Memorial unveiled Sunday

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A 3,000-pound bronze monument and a memorial service on a field named Sacrifice brought tears to John McCollett's eyes Sunday.

McCollett served in the Marines as a dog handler during the Vietnam War. He drove 25 hours straight from New Hampshire to attend the unveiling of the War Dog Memorial at Fort Benning and to pay tribute to one dog in particular — a German shepherd named Colonel.

"I think today is helping me with closure," McCollett said almost 30 years after leaving Southeast Asia. He still carries a photograph taken in Vietnam of the dog.

McCollett and Colonel trained with Fort Benning's 26th Scout Dog Platoon in 1967 before departing for Vietnam in January 1968.

McCollett returned to the states a year later, and Colonel was assigned

Superstitions surface on 13th

commentary

"Mom, you don't turn here to go home. Where are we going?" asked my daughter several years ago when I detoured from the normal route.

"Umm, around the block."

"Why?"

"No reason."

"Mom did you turn because of the black cat that was in front of us?"

Busted! Me? Superstitious? Not at all.

So why was I taking an alternate route home?

I didn't want the black cat to cross my path, not because I am superstitious, but for the same reason I don't walk under ladders. I can go around.

For people who are superstitious, Friday the 13th is considered to be an extremely unlucky day.

When I was younger (read: attending college), my usual custom was to sleep through Friday the 13th unless, of course, there was a full moon. Then, for educational purposes, I would observe the locals performing ritual customs at favorite watering holes.

Now that I no longer observe ritual customs and can no longer stay indoors all day, I wonder why all the fuss over Friday the 13th? So I did a little online research.

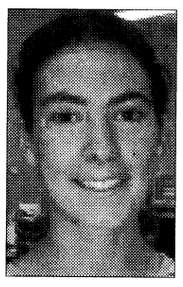
I found out that some folk believe both Friday and the number 13 are unlucky so Friday the 13th is a double whammy of bad luck.

Friday is considered unlucky because it was the day Adam ate the apple and we all know what happened after that.

Another significant Friday occurrence is Christ being crucified by the Romans.

One reason the number 13 is considered unlucky because the 13th guest at the Last Supper was Judas.

Some Scandinavians believe the number 13 is unlucky because of a mythological story where 12 demigods, were joined by a 13th demigod, Loki, an evil cruel one, who brought upon humans great misfortune.



I don't know why black cats are considered unlucky but I do know Vet Services stops all black cat adoptions until after Halloween. It's to protect the cats and it does.

And tonight there is a full moon on Friday the 13th. If you go out, don't step on any cracks.

History of hooah clarifies meaning

Karen Taylor
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

My first reaction to the hooah word was not a pleasant one. It was about five years ago, my husband and I were just married and I was definitely a newbie to the Army life and more specifically, Infantry life.

Someone from his unit called for him while he wasn't home. The conversation was going OK until he said:

"Hooah!"

"Huh?" I said.

"Hooah ma'am."

"What'd you call me? Can I take a message?"

It only got worse from there.

I later told my husband that some guy from his unit called and kept grunting at me. At first my husband was upset. "What do you mean?" he asked. "What did he say?"

I then explained that the guy sounded like he was saying "Hoouuw," or "Huuaa," or something like that in the middle of conversation.

All my husband could do at this point was burst out laughing. When he finally gained his composure he explained the person was saying "Hooah."

"It's an Army expression," he said.

Well, it didn't take me long to catch on to the meaning of the word.

Today it means everything from yes to you've got to be kidding. There is much creative license used with the word and it can mean just about anything — anything except "no."

Although "hooah" is a distinct part of Army, especially Infantry, culture, the word came from the Seminole Indians.

In 1841 a meeting between the Second Dragoons and Seminole Indian Chief Coacoochee in Florida was arranged as an attempt to end the war with the Seminoles.

The Dragoon Regiment was a special military force authorized by Congress in March 1833. It was to be an elite unit composed of Soldiers who would fight either on horse or foot, functioning as calvary without the name.

A celebratory banquet followed the meeting between the Second Dragoons and the Seminoles, where officers of the garrison made a variety of toasts including "here's to luck" and "new beginnings."

Chief Coacoochee asked an interpreter what they were saying. The interpreter explained the toasts meant "How d'ye do."

The Chief then lifted his cup and returned the toast with a deep guttural "Hough!" to which his warriors followed, "Hough!"

The Soldiers then looked at one another and toasted back with a resounding "Hooah!"

The Army expression was born.

Although the word was adopted to mean good job, yes or can do, it has been used by a person who doesn't completely understand something to mean "I haven't the vaguest idea," or "I don't know what that means, but am too embarrassed to ask for clarification."

The word has also been used as a way to politely tell someone to shut up. Instead of saying "That's enough of your dribble, sit down!" or "stop sniveling," a simple "Hooah" would do the trick.

Hooah also is perfectly acceptable to use when one has a loss for words.

For example, when told the paperwork piled 4 feet high must be filed before you leave that night. "Hooah" might be appropriate.

I guess it's even possible to be hooah-ed to death the same way a person can be yes-ed to death. But not likely because hooah has its endearing qualities.

My mind is quick to translate its meaning now, but I can't help smiling to myself, remembering how offended I was the first time I heard it because I didn't know what it meant.

You know?

"Hooah."

commentary

My daughter is an only child and for a long time, she was sure her parents were psychic.

She couldn't get away with much of anything. She got an "A" for effort, but never managed to convince us that the cat was responsible for stuff like opening the pantry, tearing open a bag of jellybeans, changing her mind about eating them and passing them on to her best friend, our daughter.

She tried, but we never fell for the one about the dog taking the cap off the toothpaste to leave a minty fresh blue swirl along the edge of the sink. It wasn't until I witnessed the dog opening the sliding screen door that I conceded our daughter hadn't left it open.

During one memorable period I kept finding little caches of candy (to include candy canes lifted from the Christmas tree), packages of cold cuts, boxes of raisins and other foodstuffs behind the drapes and under the sofa cushions.

"Maybe she's heard about an upcoming famine," I told her dad. We called in the usual suspect who tried to "finger" the tall dog.

"She's the only one smart enough to open the pantry and fridge doors. Mom, it was her."

"True," I conceded. "But she's also a walking stomach. She would never save food for later. Who really did it?"

She's asked for a baby brother several times, mostly I think, to have someone to share the blame.

The only thing that saves her from being blamed for "everything" that happens is that there are three dogs and a cat at home too. We outnumbered adults know their "Modi Operandi," especially if there is food involved.

Take the cat (please)! If my daughter wants to sneak a bite from a bag or container left on a counter, she'll open it and snag a piece, leaving small, telltale finger swipes throughout, and then almost manage to close the container again.

The cat uses a more direct approach. Eat through the paper, plastic or styrofoam to get to what you want. Maybe they won't notice the gaping holes. Plan B? If they notice the holes, be somewhere else.

If it was edible and the container is still on the counter intact, look for the short dog.

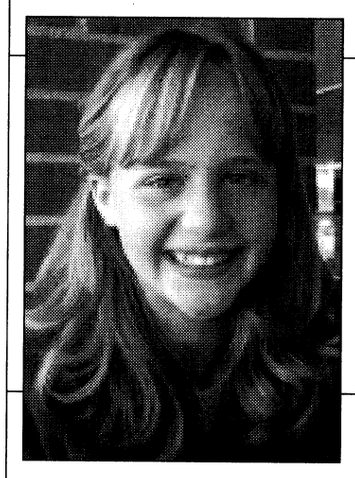
He knows how to walk across furniture to where it's a short sneak to whatever he wants. (This MO hasn't been used much since the guilty party was banned, for obvious reasons, from parts of the house.)

If it was edible and the container is on the floor, look for the tall dog lurking guiltily in the corner trying her best to look innocent. She's the only one who could reach it.

Our middle-sized dog is still a puppy and hasn't learned about being sneaky yet. Like everything else she does, she takes a direct approach, especially where food is concerned. I've already caught her standing in the middle of the kitchen table. Give her time; subterfuge is, after all, an art. Apprenticed to our resident masters of the craft, I'm sure she'll learn it, and learn it well.

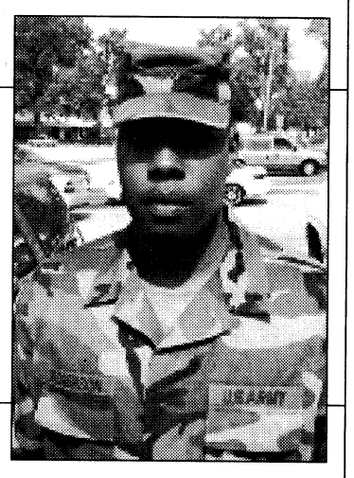
The short dog's aunt, who is no longer with us, was the worst.

I once heard the sound of crackling paper. Unfortunately for her case, there weren't many crackers left in that box and she had gotten in way over her head. Literally. When she heard me coming, she had the presence of mind to sit innocently on the floor as if nothing was going on.



I might have fallen for the charade, but that Triscuit box she was wearing down to her shoulders was a dead giveaway.

Sun Tzu may not have been writing about kids and pets when he wrote "Know your enemy as you know yourself," but I'll bet he had both. The tactic can certainly be applied.

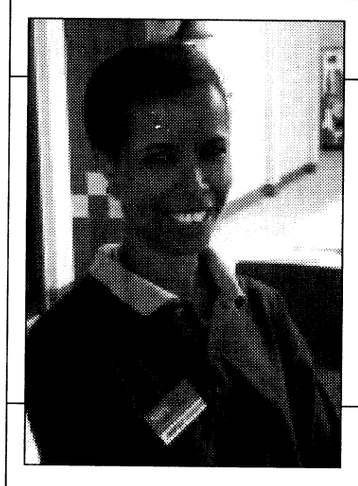


And had he been writing about parenting and pet ownership instead of the art of war, he could have simply written, "Don't put anything past 'em." He would have had it right, too.

VARIOUS VOICES

What are you superstitious about?

Amber Hansen, family member — "I am not superstitious because nothing really bad has ever happened to me before."



Sgt. Darren Roberson, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade — "I am superstitious about black cats that run across the road. I really try to avoid them."

Pfc. Candy J. Fowler, 206th Transportation Company — "I am superstitious about black cats. I have had some bad experiences with them. One time I crossed the path of one and got into a wreck shortly after."

Sgt. Robert Petersen, B Company, 203 Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade — "I believe when you give, you get back more than you have given, like in church offerings."

Nasi Davis, AAFES employee — "I am superstitious about Friday the 13th, but nothing bad has ever happened to me."

Stephanie Powell, Fort Benning kennel manager — "I really am not superstitious about anything. I love black cats and I do believe in luck."

Vaccine shortage delays flu shots

Hospital officials plan to vaccinate Rangers first

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Flu season is here, but the influenza vaccine is not.

The season runs from October until March, but a delay in the availability of the vaccine nationwide has health-care professionals holding empty syringes.

The Food and Drug Administration and Centers for Disease Control started warning health-care providers this summer of the delay. They cited two factors — a slow-growing component of this year's vaccine formulation and production problems at two of the four pharmaceutical companies that produce the vaccine.

This week Martin Army Community Hospital is expected to receive only 4 percent of what has been requested for the year, said Maj. Bryan Alsip, chief, Preventive Medicine.

The remaining doses are expected to arrive sometime in the next two months.

The vaccine will be distributed based on a prioritization plan developed by the Department of Defense and announced Sept. 21.

According to the DoD plan, current available supplies will be administered first to operational military personnel, including those on 24-hour alert status. At Fort Benning, that would include units such as the 75th Ranger Regiment and the Immediate Ready Company of the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, Alsip said.

Health-care workers — including civilian employees and volunteers — with direct patient contact are next because of the risk of spreading the virus to high-risk individuals.

"Assuming we get enough doses in the first shipment, we should be able to cover all the 24-hour alert personnel on post and to start vaccinating the health-care workers with direct patient contact," Alsip said.

Of the health-care workers, Soldiers deploying with the 14th Field Hospital to the Joint Readiness Training Center, La., at the end of the month will have priority, Alsip said.

DEERS enrollees with high-risk medical conditions will be the next. This category includes individuals older than 65 who are assigned a primary care manager at Martin Army; adults and children with chronic pulmonary or cardiovascular disorders, including asthma; and women who will be in the second or third trimester of pregnancy during the flu season.

Children and teen-agers who are receiving long-term aspirin therapy and therefore might be at risk for developing Reye syndrome after an influenza infection are also included, as well as individuals who required regular medical follow-up or hospitalization during the past year because of chronic metabolic disease, kidney dysfunction, blood disorders or immunosuppression.

The post's trainee population will come next, and Alsip hopes to have enough vaccine to provide shots to both the high-risk population and the trainees simultaneously, he said.

"But that will depend greatly on the supply of the vaccine," he said.

Preventive Medicine is particularly concerned about how the delay will affect the trainee population.

"We will get the alert-status folks right off, as well as the health-care workers. And when the bulk of the vaccine comes in, we'll get the high-risk population. But as for the trainees, they live in close quarters and are susceptible to respiratory illness already," Alsip said.

"If we aren't able to get them the vaccine in significant quantities early enough, we could have a very high rate of respiratory disease among them," Alsip said.

"We are actively working on a contingency plan should that occur," he said.

Next in order of priority will be people in close contact with high-risk individuals, all other military members in priority for deployment (but not on alert status), other active-duty service members and mission-critical DoD civilians stationed overseas, followed by all other beneficiaries.

By this time last year, clinics at Martin Army were announcing hours for patients to come in for their flu shots.

This year, a widespread campaign will be delayed until at least mid-November, pending the arrival of additional doses, Alsip said.

The amount of influenza vaccine supplies distributed this year should be approximately equal to what was distributed last year, but a substantial amount will reach providers later than usual across the country, according to the CDC.

Martin Army usually receives 37,000 doses of the vaccine a year.

"That's usually enough to cover all the major categories and most everyone else who wants a shot, as well as enough to vaccinate the trainees year-round," he said.

"I requested more this season, and we should get it all, we just don't know when," he said.

Martin Army will provide an update when more information is available.

A CLOSER LOOK

Health-care professionals will vaccinate the community in this order:

- Rapid deployment Soldiers.
- Health-care workers, including civilians and volunteers, with direct patient contact.
- DEERS enrollees with high-risk medical conditions.
- Post trainee population.
- People in close contact with high-risk individuals, all other military members in priority for deployment.
- Active-duty service members and mission-critical DoD civilians stationed overseas.
- All other beneficiaries.

Show: Moves to Civic Center director of Community Activities.

"Moving it to the Civic Center will be good for Fort Benning and Columbus," Stewart said. "And for the trainees who will get a break from rigorous training to see a show and have access to the concessions."

Fort Carson, Colo., is the only other Army installation that holds the Soldier Show off post, where it draws about 4,000 people, said Brian Smith, chief, Marketing Division, DCA.

"Our show should be the biggest and the best," he said. Jumbo television screens will be installed in the Civic Center allowing better viewing for the crowd.

Originally a movie theater, the Sand Hill structure stopped showing films when the Wynnsong 10 Cinema opened on Main Post in 1996.

The Basic Combat Training Brigade had conducted graduation ceremonies in the Sand Hill Theater during bad weather. Two options now being considered for inclement weather events include the Regimental Chapel and the breezeways of the starship buildings, said Maj. Hugh Mueller, the brigade's operations officer.

Battalions at the Infantry Training Brigade also conduct graduation ceremonies under the breezeways of their starship buildings during rainy weather, said Maj. Brian Whalen, ITB operations officer.

"Some battalions may even choose to use the Santiago Gym," Whalen said.

A grassy lot will replace the theater debris, which is still being removed from the site by the contractor.

A proposal to add a "general purpose" auditorium at Sand Hill to the installation's "2018 Plan" will be presented to the Permanent Installation Planning Board Wednesday, said Kenneth Holloway, installation master planner.

If the board approves the "multipurpose" facility, which could seat 1,000, the proposal would go before the commanding general for his approval, Holloway said.

superb staff. I look forward to building upon that effort and continue to produce results for the chief of staff of the Army initiative to transform our Army," Eaton said.

Both IBCTs will also use technology to increase situational awareness during military operations in urban terrain such as Kosovo or Chechnya.

"My intent is to succeed at fielding a fully capable force by December 2001, prepared for employment anywhere in the world in 96 hours," Eaton said.

"The recent preparation here at Fort Benning has added considerably to my depth of understanding the IBCT concept and operational and organizational details.

"Finally, recent deployments to the Balkans and earlier work in Somalia give some understanding of the dynamics of small scale contingencies, one of the key missions the IBCT could be asked to execute from to full spectrum of potential force deployment."

Snake strikes Ranger student

Soldier's quick thinking helps another after bite

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

When one Ranger student fell prey to a venomous snake bite Oct. 3, another came to his rescue and "led the way" to safety.

Sgt. Christopher Lawson was in the first phase of Ranger school, participating in a terrain association exercise in a heavily wooded area on Fort Benning, when he took a short break that ultimately ended his first shot at a Ranger tab.

"My sock was slipping into my boot. I knew if I didn't pull it up, I was going to have blisters," Lawson said. "I sat down on a log and pulled up my BDU pant leg. That's when it got me, right on the calf."

"It" was a venomous snake, probably a copperhead — "a very large snake," said Sgt. 1st Class Mark Rasdall, the senior medic for the 4th Ranger Training Battalion. "The penetration points were two centimeters apart. That's a significant size snake. Lawson described it as big, fat and brown. Our best guess is it was a copperhead, since there was no rattle and that terrain was not consistent for a moccasin."

Lawson said his chest began to hurt immediately and his vision blurred. He panicked and ran in the direction he hoped would lead him to the nearest road.

"I heard him yelling," said Pfc. Kevin Snyder. "He was headed in the wrong direction, zigzagging, and when I got to him, he was confused and obviously distressed. I turned him around and we headed for the road."

By the time Lawson and Snyder got to the road — just a matter of minutes — Lawson was vomiting and could no longer walk. At that point Snyder did what Rasdall called "the smartest thing he could've done at that point."

"Nine times out of 10, a Ranger student will panic and leave his buddy in the woods by a tree to go get help," Rasdall said. "Snyder moved him to a known point, a land navigation marker on a boundary road, and told him to sit there and not move while he ran for help."

Snyder ran nearly a mile to where Rasdall was talking with other medics.

"There's the irony in the whole thing. When Snyder ran up to us, we were discussing the Sawyer Extraction Kit and the proper way to use it for a snake bite. We jumped in the truck with the kit and headed out."

By the time the medics found Lawson, he was going into respiratory arrest and experiencing involuntary muscular contractions, slight incoherency and an elevated heart rate. Rasdall radioed for an air medevac and transported Lawson to the Medical Center in Columbus, where he was treated and released three days later.

"They said I may have tissue damage," Lawson said, as he was preparing to return to Fort Polk. "It's still pretty bruised and it hurts a lot, but I'm able to walk on it a little. It would've been a lot worse if (Snyder) hadn't kept his head and got me out of there."

Rasdall agreed Snyder's quick thinking and level-headed reaction probably saved Lawson from worse injuries.

A CLOSER LOOK

Immediately following a snake bite:

- Safely identify snake if possible.
- Allow bite to bleed freely 15-30 seconds.
- Remove jewelry or tight fitting clothes.
- Tie a light constricting band above and below the bite area.
- Elevate bitten extremity to heart level. Have victim sit, not lie.
- Keep victim warm and immobile.
- If victim must move to safety, help him walk, not run.

"Most people don't die from snake bites, but they do get violently sick," he said. "Lawson could have experienced long-term complications or permanent damage if (Snyder) had not reacted the way he did."

Although more than 7,000 venomous snake bites are reported annually in the United States, only 15 of those cause fatalities. Nearly 85 percent of reported snake bites are below the knee.

"It's hard to say how you would react to a snake bite," Rasdall said. "It's just wise to take precautions to never find yourself in that situation."

Rasdall said snakes are "on the move" this time of year, hiding under leaves and logs or searching for a sunny rock to stay warm. Hunters, campers or anyone in wooded, brushy terrain should take extra precautions, including traveling with a partner, carrying a whistle to signal for help and keeping a snake bite kit in their backpack or automobile.

Dogs: Remembered with monument to another Marine handler, Ray Heminover, who drove from Oklahoma to attend the ceremony.

But Colonel — like hundreds of other military dogs — didn't make it back after the war.

Although the dogs that served in World War II and Korea were shipped back home, the majority of Vietnam War dogs were classified as surplus equipment and either euthanized or turned over to the Vietnamese.

McCollett learned of Colonel's fate years later.

"I like to say he is missing in action," he said.

"John wouldn't have missed this for the world," McCollett's wife, Kathy, said. "In a way, this is the funeral Colonel never had."

The ceremony attracted members of the Vietnam Dog Handlers Association and others from across the country who wished to honor "America's forgotten heroes" — all dogs that served in battle, regardless of war, and their handlers.

"This is one of the largest crowds to ever witness the unveiling of a monument on Sacrifice Field," Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum, said.

Nearly 30,000 dogs served with American servicemen in 20th century wars. Of the 4,000 dogs that served in Vietnam, 303 died in the line of duty and 294 handlers were killed, according to the VDHA.

Richard Humphrey brought an 8 by 10 inch framed photograph of Shep.

"I'm here for him," Humphrey said of his scout dog.

"He was one of less than 25 percent who could work off the leash. I was always bragging that he had a real good nose. I had a lot of faith in him, and he proved me right when he would alert," Humphrey said.

Like other scout dogs, Shep could hear wind over trip wires, smell enemy clothing, detect enemy movement and mortar rounds.

"It's obvious they were good at their job, or the enemy wouldn't have put a bounty on them or the handlers," said Gene Foster, a handler from Mississippi.

"This tribute was a long time coming, the dogs and their handlers made a tremendous sacrifice," Foster said.

"War dogs have always been a part of our history," said author and historian Stephen Ambrose in his keynote address. "During World War II, they parachuted into Normandy with the 101st and 82nd Airborne Divisions. They were in the snows of Belgium and Luxembourg, finding the wounded during the Battle of the Bulge."

Created by artist Thomas Schomberg, the 18-foot-tall work depicts a handler and his dog emerging from a wall of security into an environment of combat.

It is the result of fund-raising by the War Dog Memorial Fund. Jeffrey Bennett, founder of Nature's Recipe Pet Foods, spearheaded the effort, which received tremendous support after the documentary War Dogs aired last year on the Discovery Channel.

This is the second memorial built by the fund. The first was dedicated in February at March Field Air Museum in Riverside, Calif.

After the unveiling, handlers lined the sidewalk leading to the statue to wait their turn to lay flowers at the monument and touch the face of the dog.

Members of Fort Benning's Military Working Dogs Platoon provided a demonstration on the field behind the monument.

"This is one of the proudest days I've ever had," Staff Sgt. John Lang, the platoon's kennel master, said.

"This not only gives the dogs of the past the recognition they deserve, but also the dogs of the present and the future."

Jackie McIntyre and her husband drove from Minnesota to see the monument and visit with the handlers. McIntyre has a special fondness for the Vietnam handlers and their dogs that dates back three decades.

She and her German Shepherd Dog Club adopted the 42nd Scout Dog Platoon during the war. They routinely sent care packages with letters and other goodies to the dog teams.

"I still have all the letters they sent to me," McIntyre said. "I just love them all, they were like my boys."

The Internet and the VDHA have helped McIntyre track down the handlers she befriended during the war, and she plans to give the letters and other items to the National Infantry Museum to add to its War Dog exhibit, which opened last year.

"It makes me feel good the handlers and dogs who made the supreme sacrifice are finally being honored," McIntyre said.

Korean War Airborne Rangers meet

Sally Shutt

Korean War Airborne Rangers pass in review Oct. 5 on York Field. The veterans returned to Fort Benning to celebrate the 50th anniversary of the war and to participate in the annual Ranger Rendezvous and Hall of Fame events. The men marched ahead of troops from the 75th Ranger Regiment.

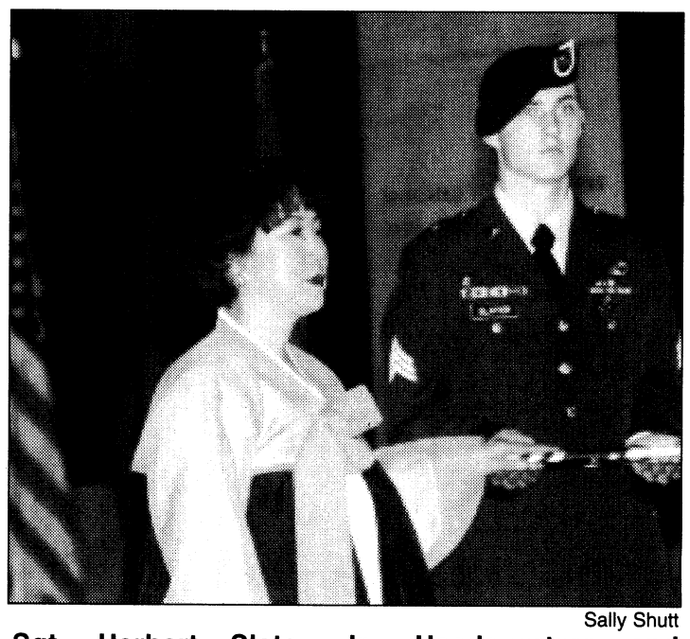
A retreat ceremony on York Field Oct. 5 looked like most at Fort Benning. The Infantry Center Band played, and the 75th Ranger Regiment provided the precision marching expected for such an event.

But, it was the not-so-precise marching of men who no longer stand as straight as they did years ago that pulled at the emotions.

About 80 of America's original Airborne Rangers, the first to wear the black and gold tab, marched ahead of the present-day Rangers during the pass in review.

Members of the Ranger Infantry Companies (Airborne) of the Korean War returned to Fort Benning to mark the 50th anniversary of the war.



Many of the former Soldiers in the formation and their family members in the audience had tears streaming down their faces as the men marched, a half century after volunteering to become the first Airborne Rangers.

"These veterans, who 50 years ago in the springtime of their lives, fought so bravely in a forgotten war in a distant land, have returned home to the birthplace of the American Airborne Ranger," said Col. Ken Keen, 75th Ranger Regt., commander.

"Today we acknowledge the debt America owes these Soldiers," he said.

Sonny Costin carried the colors of the 15th Ranger Infantry Company (Airborne).

"It felt awesome. There's nothing like it," he said after the ceremony. "I haven't been back to Fort Benning in 49 years. What an honor to be here."

Sally Shutt

Sgt. Herbert Slater Jr., Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment, holds a stone presented by Kija Kim Humphus, president of the Columbus Korean Association at the Ranger Memorial.

Costin brought his grandson, Brandon Wroten, with him from Cape Charles, Va.

The two came for the four-day Ranger Rendezvous honoring the Korean War Rangers.

"I didn't realize what being a Ranger meant to him until we got here," Wroten said.

"I know how happy he was to be out there today, but I can't say it made me any prouder of him, because I've always been proud of him."

Bob Black, one of the organizers of the RICA reunion, worked three years planning the various events designed to honor the Korean veterans.

"We wanted to have a pass in review in honor of the Korean War Rangers who never got a parade when they came home," he said.

"I had tears in my eyes even before we started marching," said Bill Georgia, who retired from the Army in 1973 as a colonel. He had marched on York Field numerous times before, but this time was very special.

"It was a highlight," he said.

Black and the other Korean veterans returned to post the next evening for a memorial service at the Ranger Memorial.

"This is a time to remember the cost of freedom and those who paid it," Black said.

The 82nd Airborne Chorus from Fort Bragg, N.C., and the U.S. Air Force Reserve Pipe Band from Robins Air Force Base, Warner Robins, Ga., performed.

Kija Kim Humphus, president of the Columbus Korean Association, presented two stones engraved with the names of two Korean War Rangers who died in action during the conflict. They will be added to the memorial.

"We wanted to show our appreciation for the people who died for us in the Korean War," Humphus said.

The association has more than 3,000 members.

Ranger Hall-of-Fame inductees remember wars

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Twelve veterans of World War II, Korea, Vietnam and Desert Storm were inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame Oct. 4.

The inductees included retired Gen. Colin Powell, former chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Powell did not attend the ceremony.

Each inductee was presented with a bronze medallion, suspended from a red, white and blue ribbon.

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, commanding general, accepted the medallion on behalf of Powell.

"In his very quiet, very professional way, General Powell always led the way," Le Moyne said.

Mike Kirshfield accepted the medallion awarded his father, Sgt. William Kirshfield, who died during the Korean War providing cover fire for his fellow Rangers.

Sgt. Kirshfield was one of the original members of the 5th Ranger Infantry Company (Airborne).

"I stood in for my father once before, when I was four years old and he was awarded the Silver Star.

"At the time I didn't think it was a fair trade — a living, breathing father for a medal," Kirshfield said.

"My understanding of my father came from my mother, and the pride I have for him, comes from her," he said.

Kirshfield also thanked members of the Ranger Infantry Companies (Airborne) of the Korean War for helping him learn more about his father and the events leading up to his death.

About 100 Korean War Rangers participated in the four-day Ranger Rendezvous, which celebrated the 50th anniversary of the war and the birth of the Airborne Rangers.

Retired Master Sgt. William Butler accepted his medallion from Col. Hazen Barron, commander of the Ranger Training Brigade. But it was his son, Chief Warrant Officer William E. Butler Jr. who spoke for the elder Butler, a stroke victim.

Master Sgt. Butler served 43 years as a Ranger, performing his last jump at the age of 59. He fought in Korea and Vietnam and was awarded two Silver Stars.

"When people say 'Airborne Ranger' to my father, to him it means brotherhood," Butler, a Ranger, said.

"There's an unmistakable bond between all the different Soldiers who have a Ranger tab," said 2nd Lt. William Marm.

"It really is a brotherhood."

Marm flew 17 hours from Korea and the 2nd Infantry Division to see his father, retired Col. Walter Marm Jr., inducted into the Hall of Fame.

"I wouldn't have missed this for the world," Marm said.

The elder Marm, a Medal of Honor recipient, fought in the Ia Drang campaign in Vietnam.

He charged 30 meters across open ground and hurled grenades into enemy positions, killing some of the eight insurgents.

Although severely wounded, and with no more grenades, he continued his assault armed only with a rifle and killed the remainder of the enemy.

The other inductees were:

Albert Clement, who helped rescue 239 missionaries and doctors in the Congo in 1960.

Emmett E. Fike Jr., a Korean War Ranger and driving force behind the establishment of the Ranger Memorial on Ranger Field.

Julius Gates, a former sergeant major of the Army.

Warner Katz, a lead scout for Merrill's Marauders.

Ronald Lesley, who served two tours in Vietnam.

William Spies, who developed the Desert Phase of Ranger School.

Robert "Tex" Turner, a former Ranger School commander.

Humbert Versace, who displayed valor as a prisoner of war in Vietnam.

Darby Dome gets new name

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The 4th Ranger Training Battalion dedicated their "Darby Dome" to the memory of Col. Roy A. Murray, the first and only commander of the 4th Ranger Battalion during World War II.

Murray's son, retired Lt. Col. Roy A. Murray Jr., also a former Ranger, was on hand Oct. 6, to represent the Murray family and assist in the unveiling of a sign proclaiming what was formerly known as the "Darby Dome" the new Murray Hall.

"He would have appreciated that his name was chosen to grace this building here at Camp Darby where all new Rangers get their start," Murray Jr., said. "He was there at the beginning, and he'll be there at the beginning for each new Ranger as they pass through these doors."

Guest speaker Col. William Ivey, a former 4th RTBn commander, said Murray, who died in 1998, got a "late start in the Ranger business." At the age of 30, he was chosen by Col. William Darby to command F Company, 1st Ranger Battalion in 1942.

Under Murray's command the Rangers took part in the British raid on Dieppe, Ireland and the North African assault landings at Arzew and Sened Station, for which he received the Silver Star from Maj. Gen. George Patton.

While still a captain, Murray was selected to command the newly activated 4th Ranger Battalion in 1943, a position he held until the battalion was deactivated in 1944. The 4th Battalion participated in the Sicilian invasion at Gela, an amphibious assault at Maori-Salerno and several gallant, though unsuccessful, attempts to break the heavily reinforced enemy positions surrounding his fellow Rangers.

Murray later served as commander of the 32nd Infantry Regiment in Korea, I Corps Deputy Chief of Staff and commandant of the Combat Surveillance School.

Besides the Silver Star, he was awarded the Purple Heart, the Bronze Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Legion of Merit, the Combat Infantryman's Badge and the Chief Emperor Minilik II Medal.

Murray was named honorary commander of the 4th RTB in 1993, a position he used to "coach, mentor, teach and provide continuity to the Ranger community," Ivey said.

Ivey spearheaded the campaign to dedicate the tactical operation center at Camp Darby in 1995 while stationed at Fort Benning as the commander of the 4th RTB.

"We're here to dedicate this building to the memory of a man who was the flesh embodiment of the words, 'Never shall I fail my comrades,'" Ivey said. "What can I say about Colonel Murray? These words come to mind — Ranger, dedicated, hard — mentally and physically, professional, loved his Soldiers and loved his family."

Work begins on HQ

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The 75th Ranger Regiment celebrated the start of construction on its new regimental headquarters, Ranger Hall, with a groundbreaking ceremony Oct. 5.

The state-of-the-art two-story facility is expected to be complete in 2001, said Maj. Todd Ratliff, regimental engineer.

It will also house the Regimental Reconnaissance Detachment, Regimental Signal Detachment, and property book office.

The building is the third phase of a four-phase $54 million project started in 1998 with the construction of Keneally Hall, the headquarters for the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt., and Dawson Barracks, named in memory of Bull Dawson, a World War II Ranger who fought on Omaha Beach.

Soldiers from the 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., are expected to move from their existing barracks into the newly completed housing next week.

A dedication ceremony was held earlier in the day for Dawson Barracks and Keneally Hall, named in memory of Col. John T. Keneally, the commander of the 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., who was killed in a training exercise in 1992.

Representatives from both the Dawson and Keneally families attended the ceremony.

Phil Piazza, president of the Merrill's Marauders Association, Inc., participated in the groundbreaking ceremony.

The 83-year-old suggested "Ranger Hall" to a committee assigned to name the building.

"I thought it represented all Rangers — past, present and future," Piazza said.

"Ranger Hall is simple and direct at the same time, reminding all Rangers and Soldiers alike of the sacrifices our fallen comrades have made," Capt. Todd Bearden, Public Affairs officer, 75th Ranger Regt., said.

Construction on the final phase of the project will start in 2002, Ratliff said.

It will house the Regimental Training Detachment classroom and serve as a working facility for the Regimental Headquarters and Headquarters Company's maintenance and communications sections.

LOCAL CORPORATION IN OUTRAGE

- Columbus, GA

Audit of local corporation finds local dealer selling cars below book value. Keith Ingram, president of Kip's Cars, found in the 2000 Audit of Kip's Cars, Inc. that nearly half of every vehicle purchased at the dealership was sold below book value. Keith Ingram, president of Kip's Cars, noted, "How can a small dealer sell vehicles better than the big dealers? We've had customers purchase vehicles with $0 down and several with rates as low as 7.9%."

Kip Hammitt, vice president and General Manager of Kip's Cars, defending his position, stated, "Our custoemrs enjoy doing business with us because 'It's Easy!' We pass the savings back to our customers. We have the same warranties, service plans, and the same financing, if not better, than the big car dealerships. We know a vehicle can't be worth three times the value, so we don't do that type of advertising. We earn our busniness with a simple handshake and a smile."

Nation, post focus on family violence

Domestic violence awareness month examines tragedy

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The statistics are a national tragedy:

• Every day, 5,000 women are abused or beaten at home.

• A woman is assaulted by her husband or boyfriend every 15 seconds.

• One woman in four will be the victim of domestic violence at least once in her lifetime.

• One-third of all women killed in the U.S. die at the hands of a husband or boyfriend.

• Last year approximately 1,500 women were killed by their husband or boyfriend, making the home the most dangerous place for a woman in America.

October is National Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and Fort Benning's Family Advocacy Program is teaming with local agencies to spread the message: domestic violence is a crime that has a traumatic, long-lasting effect on everyone it touches.

The Domestic Violence Roundtable is a coalition of local agencies and citizens, including Fort Benning's FAP, who have established a public forum to address the problem of domestic violence locally.

Since 1997, the roundtable has established various training programs for law enforcement and service providers. Twenty organizations sponsor representatives who attend monthly roundtable sessions to "discuss and take action against the crisis of domestic violence," said Shawna Hartley, DVR spokesperson.

"It's time for us to take the domestic violence crisis out from behind closed doors and examine it closely," Hartley said. "It's a time for us to honor those who have survived, and to take a stand against the kind of violence that has claimed the lives of four victims in Muscogee County so far this year."

Hartley said domestic violence crosses all social, cultural and economic boundaries. On the surface, abusers may appear good providers, loving partners and law abiding citizens, but one-third of men counseled for battering are professionals, well-respected in their jobs and communities.

According to Domestic Violence: The Facts, a handbook for battered women, physical, mental and emotional abuse is about power and control. Battering is the establishment of control and fear in a relationship through violence and other forms of abuse, including intimidation, threats, psychological abuse, coercion and isolation.

The book points out that abuse may happen sporadically, but it remains a constant, terrorizing factor, a fact Hartley says undermines the victims' self-esteem.

"It's not always a sudden change of behavior," Hartley said. "Sometimes it's a constant string of put-downs and lies that the victim eventually starts to believe.

"Abusers are really good liars and really good at convincing their victims

Students learn about area high schools

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Representatives from area high schools converged on Fort Benning Oct. 5 for Faith Middle School's annual "High School Expo Night."

Eighth-grade students and their parents met with administrators and students from six Muscogee County high schools for what Principal Dr. Tom Dignan called "an opportunity to learn about the various and unique educational opportunities local high schools offer our students."

Robyn Hughey, Faith Middle School's counselor for eighth-graders, said the event also gave students the chance to learn what would be expected of them as students at any of the area magnet schools.

Fort Benning high school students are zoned to attend Spencer High School, located just off post on Victory Drive. However, students who opt to attend Carver or Columbus high schools, can apply for acceptance into either school's magnet program. Bus transportation is provided from Fort Benning to Spencer, Carver and Columbus High Schools.

Spencer High School boasts a student population of 1,000, more than 80 percent whom live on Fort Benning. Spencer offers college preparatory, technical and vocational curriculums. For more information on Spencer, call 685-7652.

Carver High School is an integrated math, science and technology magnet. Students qualify for entrance into the program based on a combination of the following criteria: successful completion of Algebra I, a cumulative average of 3.0 or above in all science and math courses, a letter of recommendation from a science and mathematics teacher, an interview with the principal and acceptable scores on standardized tests. For more information about Carver, call 649-0931 or 649-0870.

Columbus High School is a liberal arts magnet and offers advanced placement courses. Students qualify for entrance into the program based on teacher recommendation, an entrance exam and school records. Each of the school's 1,200 students are required to perform 20 hours of community

Three Olympic athletes who are Soldiers in the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit visited with first-graders at Wilson Elementary School Oct. 4.

Sgt. 1st Class Lance D. Dement, Sgt. Jason A. Parker and Spc. William H. Keever talked with nearly 100 students about their trip to Australia to compete in the 2000 Olympics. Dement participated in the running target competition, Parker shot the air rifle competition, and Keever was a double trap competitor.

Keever talked about going to San Diego to in-process and get his Olympic uniforms, and then about his trip to Sydney.

"We flew on an airplane for 14 hours — that's like the whole time you're awake in a day — and went to Australia, which is on the other side of the world," Keever said.

He told the children how the seasons are the opposite in Australia and it was early spring there. He added that it was great being in the Olympic Village where he got to meet other Olympic athletes.

"The opening ceremony was the most exciting thing I ever experienced," he said. "I had a really great time."

Dement then explained to the youngsters that the Olympics are games and sports and the most important thing

'Hooch to get clean up

Bass Club helps to clean waterway

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Some post organizations are getting the jump on helping the 'Hooch today when they use the morning to clean up part of the Chattahoochee River that runs through Fort Benning.

Nearly 85 volunteers from the Directorate of Public Works, Adjutant General, Directorate of Intelligence and Security, formerly the Directorate of Threat and Security, members of the Bass Club of Fort Benning and other organizations plan to pick up several tons of garbage from the river.

Chief Warrant Officer Ken Shuler, who scouted the five areas along the river where the volunteers will clean, said he hoped with the addition of the Bass Club's 15 boats that today's clean up efforts will surpass last year's when more than 7 tons of trash were removed from the river's banks.

"While scouting the areas, I saw a sofa, a washing machine and a lot of floating debris," Shuler said. "This year the Directorate of Community Activities has loaned us the pool skimmers so we'll be able to pick up the debris from the safety of the boats."

Last year three boats were used to ferry participants and trash from point to point. This year they'll shuttle up and down the river reaching the hard to get to areas.

Six green recycling bins have been placed at the five sites to ease the transportation woes, Shuler said. The litter will be sorted and disposed of onsite.

The volunteers will meet at 8:30 a.m. at an Uchee Creek pavilion for a safety briefing and then be taken to one of the five sites along the river.

After a morning of clearing and cleaning, the volunteers will rendezvous once again at the pavilion for a pizza party provided by Little Caesar's and distribution of Help the 'Hooch T-shirts.

Today's clean up activities are an extension of the Keep Columbus Beautiful Saturday event that unites Boy and Girl Scouts, environmental clubs and school classes along with families to beautify the river banks, said Gloria Weston-Smart, executive director for Keep Columbus Beautiful.

The clean up efforts have grown to include parks and

Soldier Show cast to seize Civic Center

Shannon Walsh
Bayonet correspondent

As the Soldier Show cast and crew perform on stage Sunday, some audience members may wonder what it takes to become a part of this traveling tour.

The show will be held at the Columbus Civic Center for the first time this year. The theme is "Carpe Diem: Seize the Day." This is the 16th year the tour has stopped here to entertain military personnel and their families at Fort Benning.

The show begins at 2 p.m. and is free of charge to the community. There will be reserved seating for military trainees and VIP guests.

"Every year it's a joy and a privilege to support the Soldiers. It's standing room only wherever they go," Harriet Rice, Public Affairs officer for the Army's Community and Family Support Center.

The first Army Soldier Show debuted in 1918. The performance didn't become an annual event until 1983. Currently, the tour makes more than 50 stops and gives more than 100 performances across the U.S. and overseas each season.

Now in its 17th year, the show provides Soldiers with a chance to showcase talents they have in addition to military skills. However, military traits like "precision and attention to details" do play a part in the show, Rice said.

"These performers bring their military discipline to the stage," Rice said.

Hopeful applicants submit videos, biographies, photographs and letters of recommendation from their commanders. A panel of judges narrow down the entries and final auditions are held the spring of each year, prior to the tour.

In addition to "musicality, movement, stage presence and versatility," potential cast members must have an outstanding record of military performance. "They have to be tops in their unit to be selected. It's not a picnic," Rice said.

Out of more than 60 applications, only 25 finalists made it to the final auditions last April at Fort Belvoir, Va.

Cast member Spc. Brian Dosch said, "Before I came into the military, I was a professional actor. I'd been away from (performing) for three years and just wanted to get back into it."

During their time on the road, Soldiers are expected to adhere to military physical fitness and appearance requirements. Show members put in an average 14-hour day for 6 months straight.

After each performance, the stars will mingle with the audience, meeting people and signing autographs. The entire cast and crew also sets up and breaks down more than 15 tons of stage equipment for each show.

The Soldier Show is an Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation activity.

Application packets for next year's show are due by Dec. 31. For more details on becoming a part of the Soldier Show, go to www.armymwr.com.

they deserve it, or they provoked it.

They convince them they're stupid, helpless, worthless, ugly, crazy...It's their way of maintaining power and control."

For this reason, Hartley said it often takes third-party involvement to end the cycle of abuse.

"It's a very complex issue," she said. "Women stay for lots of reasons. They've been convinced no one will believe them or nobody will help. They don't know that there are financial resources and shelters out there just for them."

Though Hartley acknowledged it's often hard to gain a victim's confidence, there are ways of "getting involved without revealing your suspicions.

"Of course if you hear it or see it, you should call 911 immediately," she said. "But if you've seen bruises or become suspicious for some reason and are afraid to confront either party, call 211. You don't have to give your name. It's so easy — 911 or 211."

Though the term domestic abuse conjures images of quarreling lovers, Hartley said 95 percent of abuse cases actually involve more than one victim. "Domestic abuse" is an umbrella label for a myriad of abuse scenarios, including child abuse, and studies show 50 percent of the men who abuse their wives also frequently abuse their children.

"Most child abuse cases revolve around domestic violence," Hartley said. "Even if the child is not injured physically, he's permanently scarred if he's had to witness mom being battered."

In most cases, Hartley said, abuse is a learned behavior, and children exposed to domestic violence often become abusers themselves. Boys who witness violence at home are three times more likely to become abusers than children on non-violent parents.

"Maybe they begin to show violence towards others at an early age, or they get big enough to try to defend their mother. For whatever reason, they're following a pattern they've learned at home," she said.

Many times the children of abusers show symptoms of Post-Traumatic Stress Syndrome, including, but not limited to, stuttering, sleeplessness, poor grades, outbursts of anger and weight loss.

"As adults we are often the only voice these children have. You can take the attitude that it's not your problem, and you shouldn't get involved," Hartley said. "But you need to know it's often not just the woman who is suffering but the children too.

"Domestic violence is a crime, not just a personal issue. You can't look the other way when you're aware of abuse any more than you would ignore a crime you witness on the street. You have to get involved."

The Domestic Violence Rountable will sponsor a candlelight vigil to honor survivors and victims Oct. 24 at 7 p.m. on the plaza level of the Government Center on 4th Avenue in Columbus. Refreshments will be served. For more information, call Hartley at 653-4580.

service each year. Last year's graduates averaged 1,115 on college entrance SATs, 100 points above the national average. For more information about the Columbus Liberal Arts Magnet call 649-0701.

Hughey said students who wish to attend a school other than Spencer, Carver or Columbus are responsible for their own transportation and tuition.

"What our eighth-graders need to realize is they are assigned to Spencer High School," Hughey said. "If they chose to go elsewhere their only options are one of the two magnet schools in our zone or private schools where they pay tuition."

Representatives from Pacelli, Christian Heritage and Brookstone, all private high schools, were also on hand to supply information about tuition and admission requirements.

Although Pacelli High School is a Catholic, college preparatory school owned and operated by St. Anne Church, it has a diverse student population (60 percent Catholic and 40 percent non-Catholic) and is open to students of all religions and cultures.

Students are accepted on the basis of an entrance exam, school records, personal interview and teacher recommendation. Entrance test dates are scheduled for Jan. 20 and 27.

Tuition for Catholic students is $4,975 per year, $5,975 for non-Catholics. Financial aid is awarded on a need basis in April for the coming year. To find out more about Pacelli High School, call 561-5233.

Christian Heritage Academy is a Christian, co-educational school with an enrollment of approximately 200 students. It is a member of the Southern Baptist Association of Christian Schools and the high school program is accredited by the Georgia Accrediting Commission. The school offers a college preparatory curriculum, and more than 90 percent of its graduates attend a four-year college.

Christian Heritage Academy is a ministry of Edgewood Baptist Church. Tuition is $3,500 per year for non-church members and $3,000 for members, with discounts for subsequent family member enrollment. For more information, call 568-1251.

Brookstone School is an independent college preparatory institution with an "upper" or high school population of 261 and a teacher - student ratio of one to 14. Brookstone is accredited with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, and 99 percent of its graduates attend a four-year college. Admission is based on an entrance application and test, teacher recommendation, classroom visit and personal interview. Tuition is $7,945, with financial aid scholarships available. For more information, call 324-1392.

Hughey said students who wish to attend any public school not within the Fort Benning jurisdiction, such as Shaw, Hardaway or Kendrick high schools, must submit an application to the Columbus Roberts Center Board of Appeals. Exceptions to the policy are granted on an individual basis.

is to have fun and be a good sportsman.

"When you play a sport or a game, you have to appreciate everyone who comes to play—not just the winners," Dement said.

Parker told the group about the animals in Australia and how he got to pet and feed a kangaroo at the zoo in Sydney.

"I got to see some koalas too and was surprised to find out that they sleep 20 hours a day, and the rest of the time they're looking for food," Parker said.

Parker also told the children that he climbed the 400-foot Sydney Harbor Bridge during his stay Down Under.

To remind the students of their visit, the Olympians gave the first-graders their trading cards, which the teachers and principal wanted too.

Wilson Principal Phyllis Parker said, "I'm going to hold on to this. It might be worth a lot of money someday."

school campuses, Weston-Smart said.

"Last year the Girl Scouts had a rally at Lakebottom Park the same day, but they really wanted to contribute so they picked up the park."

This year more than 8,000 volunteers have registered to help pick up the tricommunity areas, and the clean up is spreading into neighboring Harris county.

A schoolwide cleanup is in store for the White Elementary School campus today, and the River Kids, a fifth-grade environmental club, will clean up the Oxbow Meadows area Saturday.

Dexter Elementary School also organizes volunteers for the clean up effort.

Last year members of the school's environmental clubs and their families picked up the campus, and then walked to the stream between Edwards Road and Infantry Hall to pick up the litter that accumulates in the marshy stream.

First-grade teacher, Linda Turner, has organized the school's participation in the cleaning of the river since the clean up efforts began six years ago.

"I think it is really important for everyone to be responsible for their environment," Turner said.

gardening tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet corespondent

Fall is an important time to clean up the lawn. It is time to remove debris and take care of tasks overlooked in the summer.

The prevailing late summer heat tends to keep gardeners from doing chores and end of season maintenance. With the onset of cooler temperatures it is time to get back in the garden.

First, pull up summer annuals that are fading away. And pull up any vegetable plants that are finished as well. Put the disease-free plants in the compost pile.

Start a regimen of raking and removing the falling leaves. Leaves that remain on the ground unattended can invite disease into the garden. They get compacted on the lawn and smother the grass and roots beneath, creating a bare spot in the spring.

Use the leaves to replenish the carbon in the compost pile. Bag up the rest in a paper lawn bag and keep near the pile for replenishing later or shred them with your lawn mower and use them for mulch.

Do not use leaves to amend the soil. Adding leaves to the soil can take away nitrogen from plant roots. Decaying leaves in the soil actually steal the nitrogen to aid in their decomposing. So don't bury the leaves in the garden beds.

Clean and oil all the garden tools. Oiling the tools keeps them from rusting over the winter when most tools aren't needed. This is a good time of year to do the maintenance on mowers and gas-powered equipment.

Mow the lawn, removing one-third of the grass blade, and rake the grass clippings if you are planning to overseed the lawn.

Till up the vegetable beds now. Disrupting the soil disturbs possible bacteria and disease living in the garden. Exposing these diseases to the air will kill them and aid in preventing them from coming back in the spring. If possible, till again during the winter before a final tilling for planting in the spring.

There is enough maintenance to do in the garden to keep busy for a weekend.

Now is a good time to reflect on the things that were good in the garden this year and plan for new things in the spring. Remember to take time to enjoy the leaves before taking them away.

Perspectives change often

Ricky Elsey
Spencer High School

As people change over the years, so does their perspective of others. In this case, I would like to change the perception of my school. I am a senior at Spencer High School and have attended since I was a freshman. Since then, my perception has changed now that I know what goes on in everyday student life.

Many parents believe that Spencer is a nonproductive school. To the teachers, administrators, parents and students it is not that easy. In the past three years of my life as a Spencerian, I finally realized how hard the teachers at Spencer work. Most students do not realize all the material they have been taught until they graduate, others do not know until they begin their careers.

The overall atmosphere at Spencer is well-behaved. Teachers maintain strict and quiet classrooms, which leaves a great learning environment. As the bar for higher education rises, ours rises a bit higher.

Since 1997, the year I came to Spencer, a lot has changed, not only the teachers and students, but the atmosphere inside the building as well. Once known as a scary place to learn, it is now safe for anybody to attend.

Spencer offers great education

Cassandra Conrad
Spencer High School

Spencer High School is an excellent learning facility for students. Our counselors are very experienced and educated. They help students with personal and school-related issues. The athletic department here at Spencer is very advanced and provides the students with a wide variety of extracurricular activities. The students show a lot of enthusiasm and spirit when it comes time to participate in school activities. We have activities such as student council, basketball, football, softball, soccer, baseball, track, golf, tennis and a wide variety of academic clubs. All around, the learning experience for a Spencerian would be extraordinary.

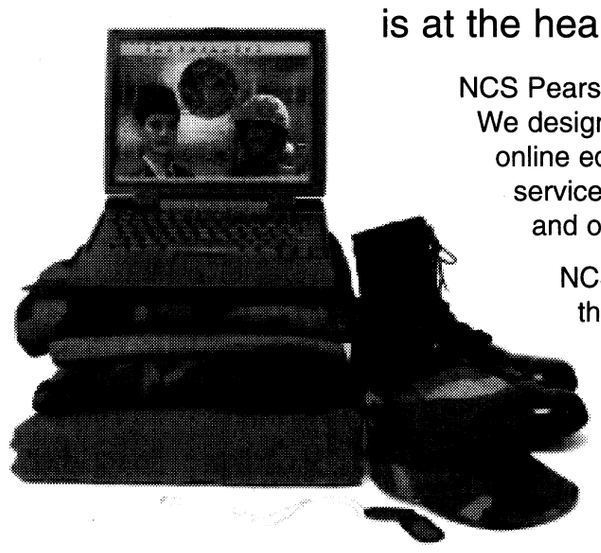
Spencer under constant change

Krista Gorman
Spencer High School

Since my first day here in 1998, I noticed how Spencer has changed. My impression and image of Spencer was negative: all the students were not bright, the teachers were apathetic about the students learning and the school had nothing going for it. But I was very wrong. The students are willing to learn and excel in their studies and the teachers go to great lengths to make sure that the students are learning. The organizations have increased over the past three years and more spirit and enthusiasm were expressed when they have their pep rallies to cheer on the Greenwaves. Even the environment has changed. The students are very friendly, the teachers are willing to help and the counselors help you in time of need.

Over here, we're all like family, willing to care and help each other and making a difference here at Spencer and beyond.

Student recommends Spencer High School



Montrel Woodhouse
Spencer High School

Eighth graders, at the end of their middle school career, are faced with a decision on which high school to attend. As a sophomore this year who has been here since my freshman year, I recommend Spencer High School. People give Spencer a bad reputation by saying Spencer is full of students who misbehave and who are bad influences; violence, drugs and that Spencer isn't academically challenging enough and there are no scholarship opportunities.

All of these accusations are false. First of all, in every school there are a few students that have behavioral problems and influence others in the wrong way. Violence is all around, whether exposed or camouflaged. Spencer has strict rules against misbehavior with effective penalties to those who break the set rules. Drugs are very scarce at Spencer just as they are at every school. Lastly, Spencer is one of the most academically challenging schools in Muscogee County. Several scholarships are granted to students who strive for excellence. Spencer — what more can I say? I highly recommend Spencer High School as a choice to spend your high school years.

Sukkot is time for giving thanks among Jews

Chaplain (Capt.) David J. Arredondo
1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade

reflections

In late October of this year, Jews worldwide celebrate the holiday of Sukkot. In ancient times, Sukkot was a time for thanksgiving as the final harvest was gathered.

The American holiday of Thanksgiving had its origin in Sukkot.

Sukkot was also the third of three pilgrimage festivals (Passover, Shavuot and Sukkot) in which adult Jews from all over the land of Israel would come to Jerusalem. They also built huts or small booths called the Sukkah.

The Sukkah, originally a shelter in the harvest fields, became a symbol of God's divine protection, even when living as wanderers or nomads.

The Sukkah must be built in the open air, under the sky.

It consists of four walls and a removable covering of materials that grow from the soil.

Sukkot is observed for seven days, beginning after Yom Kippur.

Coming after Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur, Sukkot is a joyous celebration after a long, spiritual journey. God's blessings are celebrated.

Sukkot concludes with two special days. On Shhemini Atseret, the Jewish people prayed for rain for a bountiful harvest. On Simchat Torah, we celebrate God's giving of the Torah to the world.

Traditionally, Psalms of Thanksgiving are recited and a four-produce bouquet consisting of the citron, the palm branches, myrtles and willows is brought to the synagogue. The bouquet is seen as a symbol of humanity itself, with its essential variety of distinct characteristics, all of which make up a framework in which no one is expendable.

The bouquet is symbolically pointed in the direction of the four points of the compass and above and below expressing that God is found in all directions of the universe. The six directions represent the sources of divine blessing and humankind the seventh point, who must gather them to make good use of them.

During the exodus of the Israelites, while wandering in the desert, the Israelites had nothing with them except what they could carry.

They had manna and fowl to eat and other signs of God's special care until they reached the land they were to settle. Once settled, they planted, harvested and built houses. The Sukka they lived in for a week once a year, served as a reminder of their deliverance from Egypt and the solidification of the Jews as a people during the time of wandering in the Sinai.

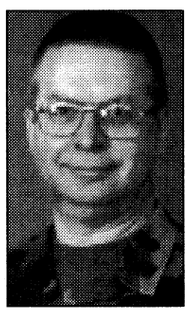
The Bible stresses Sukkot's historical aspect, "You shall live in booths seven days ... In order that future generations may know that I made the Israelite people live in booths when I brought them out of the land of Egypt." (Leviticus 23:29)

This reminder, not only to those of the Jewish faith, teaches us that all we have — relationships, possessions, spirituality and health comes to us because the Lord has given it to us. Shelter and rest are found in God's "Sukkah" for humankind.

The Sukkot holiday also serves as a reminder to take care of creation and to trust in God's provision of a beautiful environment in which we live.

Getting outdoors and enjoying the natural world around us serves to protect us from the tendency to take our environment and seasons for granted. We may very well come to realize that Sukkot reminds us to sleep under the stars and look for a glimpse of beauty in the heavens.

Be joyful about God's care for humankind.



Everyone can leave a positive legacy

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond C. Koop
Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center

Many people are just living from day to day trying to survive. Tragically some people will leave a legacy of criminal activity. Luckily some people will achieve fame and fortune.

Few of us, however, will accumulate wealth or possessions or be moguls of business and industry. Few of us will be elected president of the United States or be promoted to general in the Army. Few of us will earn an Olympic medal or become a professional athlete.

Wealth and possessions do not satisfy. Fame is fleeting. Merely attaining office or rank leaves a hollow legacy. The athletic records made today will soon be broken.

Nevertheless, I am convinced that each of us can leave a positive legacy. Here are some examples: coming up with an original idea; living a moral life; having a positive influence on others; and being a part of something greater than ourselves.

For parents, our legacy is our children and the values we instill in them. For teachers, it's their students. For military leaders, it's the Soldiers they mentor and train. For all of us, our legacy is our example and the character we set for others to follow.

The legacy we leave is rooted in the values we live, the relationships we build and our creativity. At the very least, all of us can be a part of something great by working together for the betterment of mankind.

If you would like more information of leaving a positive legacy, free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760, stop by building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza or e-mail at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Soldier putts with the pros in pro-am

BOSS president tees off with PGA members in tourney

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Finding a Soldier to fill the post commander's shoes isn't easy — unless they are golf shoes.

Because Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne isn't a golfer, Sgt. Robert Brown was given the opportunity to rub shoulders and compare golf swings with the professional golfers who played in the Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens.

Sgt. Robert Brown, the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, and three amateur golfers played 18 holes with professional golfer Rob Sabbatini during the Buick Challenge's Pro-Am tournament Sept. 27.

Sabbatini, a 24-year-old who turned pro in 1998, is 29th on the money list for the PGA tour and has earned more than $1.24 million.

Brown, who had a 1 p.m. tee time, arrived early enough to practice chip shots next to David Duval, who is the tournament's champion.

"These guys are so unbelievably good it is just shocking," Brown said. "While practicing they would hit the ball with one hand, it would spin twice and land next to the hole."

The course was designed to make it hard for the pros: the rough was a foot deep, the fairways were tightly mown and the greens were very fast, Brown said.

"The fairways were like hitting off carpet," he said.

Brown's group started play on the back nine and he made an eagle on the par 5 11th hole.

"He helped his team with that hole," said Maj. Mark Felderman, who watched Brown golf on the front nine. Felderman, special assistant to the commanding general, Army National Guard, has golfed with Brown at the Follow Me Golf Course.

"Brown hit the ball well and was the low handicapper for his group," Felderman said.

One of the amateurs playing with Brown was Buick chief executive officer, Bob Colletta, and Bruce Kemp who was the director of the tournament.

"They had quite the following," Brown said. "It was nerve wracking to play with the gallery there watching you."

Brown found the rough more than he wanted to on the front nine, but his game settled down on the back nine, he said.

"I was nervous on the front and hit into the rough more than I wanted," Brown said. "The rough was tough to avoid."

Brown said he finally relaxed on the last nine holes and ended his game shooting a 39 for the back nine.

After the tournament, Brown and the other golfers received a plaque with the golfers' photos, a sweater vest and shirt, a 12-pack of balls, a top-of-the line wedge and new golf shoes.

"This was an unbelievable opportunity," Brown said. "I really appreciate General Le Moyne and Colonel (John) Latimer for picking me to represent the post at the tournament."

Brewers hurl heat past Rockies

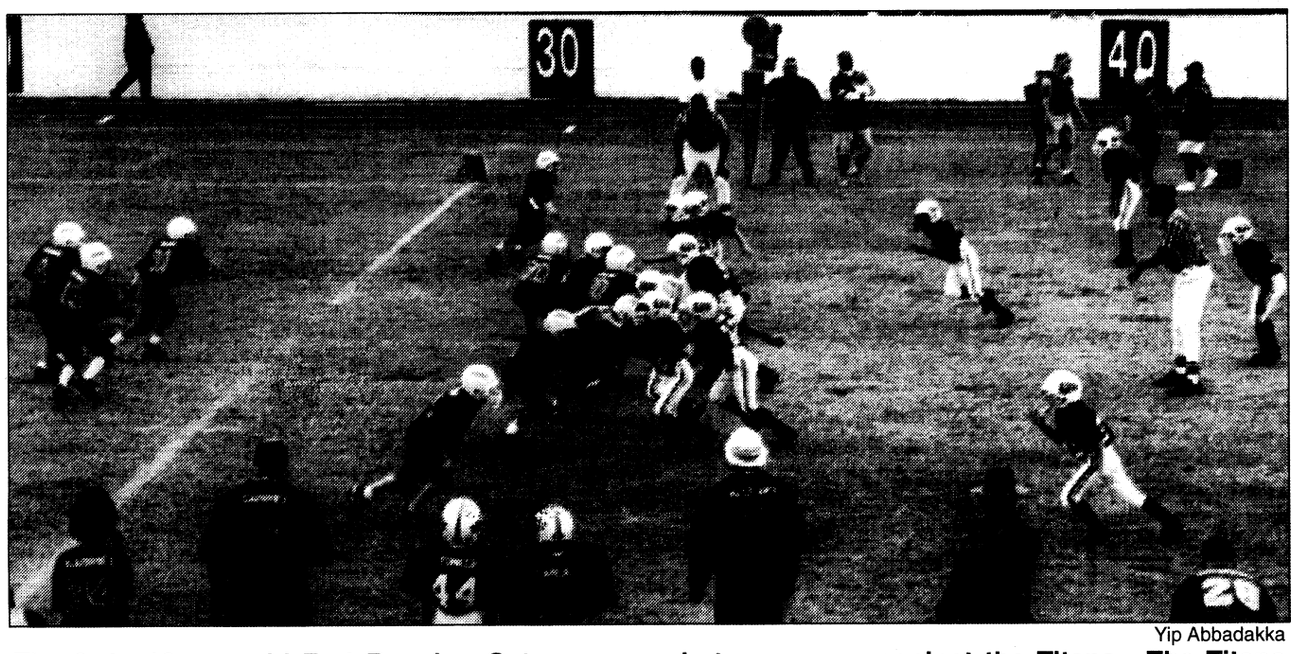
How does a pitcher shut a team's offense down? With a K of course.

A strikeout steals the batter's chance to hear the crack of the bat and run to first base. Instead, it's back to the bench.

Many of the hitters from the Brewers and the Rockies were introduced to that path from the plate during the Oct. 3 game at Golden Park, where the Brewers beat the Rockies, 3-1.

Rockies' pitcher Clay Little had eight strikeouts in the 33 batters he faced. But it was Steve Bielak, family member, who out-pitched Little with 12 strikeouts in the 30 batters he faced.

"Every time Steve pitches, he keeps getting stronger. His stuff is getting better and better," said Brewers' catcher Chris Baglio, 1st Battery, 10th Field Artillery Regiment.



Bielak was on his way to a 3-0 shutout until the bottom of the eighth when the Rockies managed to put one run on the board for a 3-1 final.

The game was scoreless until the third inning when the Brewers put a run on the board. Chris Allen, B Co. 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., got on base with an error and stole second. Then Bielak followed with a single to drive him in for a 1-0 lead.

Bielak said he likes to hit fastballs and felt comfortable enough to wait for one to hit,

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

More than 300 members, past and present, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, gathered last weekend to celebrate the USAMU's 44th Reunion.

The reunion included inducting three Sydney Olympians into the International Rifle Hall of Fame, the rededication of Hook Range and induction of three former unit members into the USAMU Hall of Fame.

"The Military Marksmanship Association Reunion honored the shooters, gunsmiths and staff who made the USAMU great, and provided an opportunity for the shooters of the past to meet the shooters of the present," USAMU deputy commander Robert Aylward said.

Three USAMU Olympians who competed in Sydney last month, Michael E. Anti, Kenneth A. Johnson and Jason A. Parker, were inducted into the USAMU International Rifle Hall of Fame 9 a.m. Oct. 7 at Pool International Shooting Complex.

"It's a real honor for me to be inducted in the Hall of Fame," Parker said. "I want to thank my coach, Mr. Bill Krilling;

Fort Benning hunter offers ideas for delicious wild game

Proper game care puts tasty meal on table

Cliff Hughes
Bayonet correspondent

At this point in the hunting season, we are looking at rifle season starting soon and bow season coming to a close on the Georgia side. Many bow hunters will venture toward the Alabama side of Fort Benning for superb hunting.

Some practiced bow hunters were lucky enough to take a deer or two; a few may even have shot a buck nice enough to mount. But once you've harvested the deer, it's essential to handle it properly.

It is extremely important in the early season to get the animal to a cooler of some sort. For a brief period I worked with a processor in Richland on weekends and was truly amazed at some of the deer hunters brought in and were actually going to consume.

It is essential to care for the animal properly. Most processors can recognize the signs of a deer not fit to consume but to leave it to someone else is taking a chance. It is a good rule of thumb to have the deer skinned and either on ice or in a cooler within an hour, not more than two hours.

Many hunters, especially bow hunters, may not be able to find their animal for several hours depending on where it was hit.

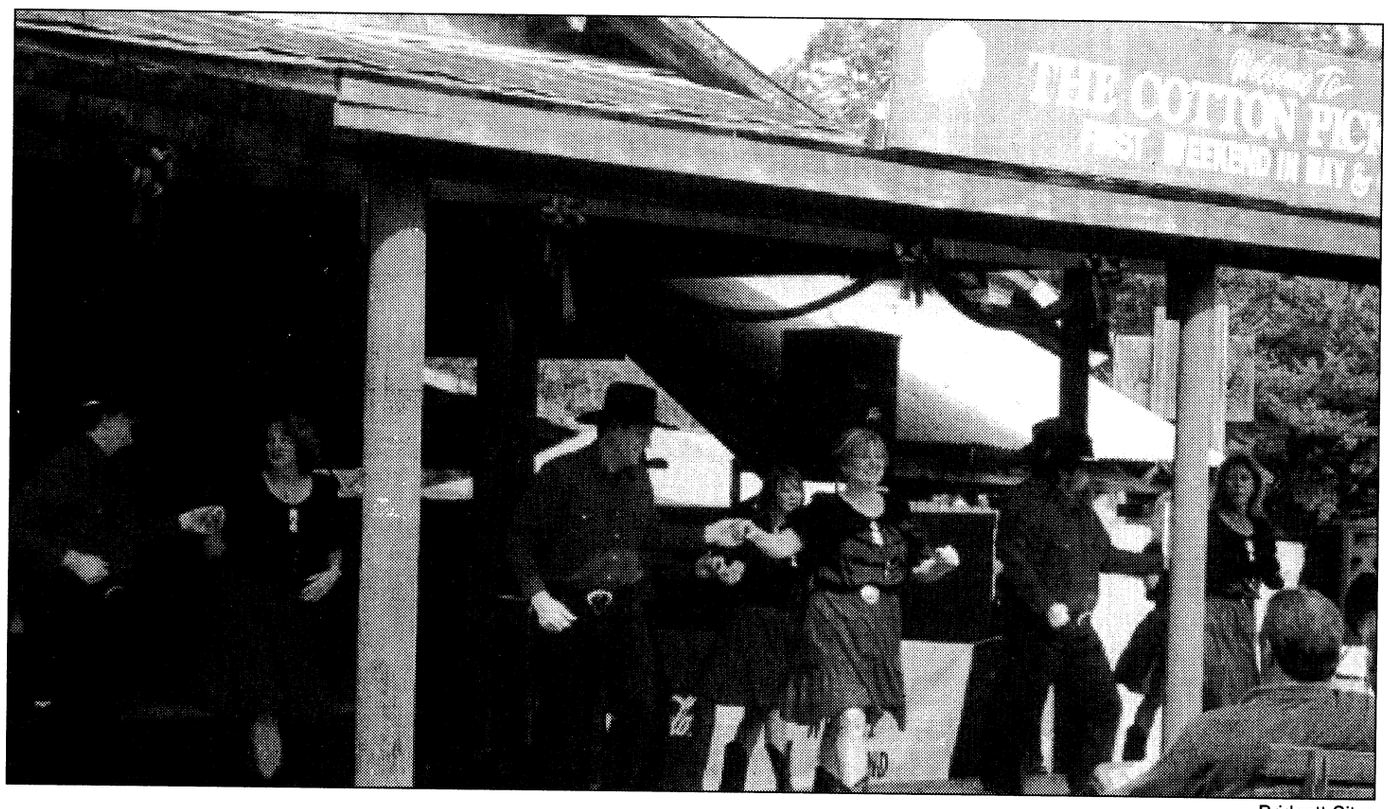
If rigor mortis has set in and the animal is warm to the touch and bloated (swollen), it is probably not a good idea to eat it. Perhaps the rack and fur are still salvageable or portions of the legs and hooves for a gun rack.

If all goes well and your deer is cared for properly, cleaned and cooled, and not dragged in the dirt for miles, you should have some tasty venison to look forward to.

There are many excellent ways to prepare venison; these are just a few tasty ideas:

- Back strap marinated in soy sauce and wrapped in bacon, then grilled to perfection
- Venison stew
- Chili, using ground venison
- In the crock pot cooked as a roast
- Venison fondue
- Venison kabobs
- Venison jerky
- Smoked venison

Also, many Asian recipes like Korean bulgogi work very well with venison.



It's always fun to experiment with recipes. One time my wife tried a new recipe. The finished product was quite tough and it had a unique purple appearance. Not to complain, but we won't have that again. Oh well, at least she tried to do something a little different. Doing everything yourself can be a lot of fun, too.

I ast year we bought an industrial grinder and started making our own burgers and sausage. The sausage was most excellent.

We had the best success mixing and measuring pork or beef fat with purchased boston butts and the venison for several different flavors based on the seasonings. We came up with Italian, basil and hot, with cajun being the favorite. This was quite a tedious process as we grilled each one and tasted it as we were processing. Definitely worth the effort though!

So remember, keep your meat as clean as possible, cool it as soon as you can and either take it to a processor or do it yourself and save a little money.

And by all means, experiment, avoiding the purple stuff and, of course, have a safe and happy hunt.

Cotton Pickin' fun found at fair

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

outdoor corner

"There's not a cotton pickin' thing to do around here. It's not fair."

How many times have you heard that one? If I were to write a mother's manual, chapters one and two would be called "Not a cotton pickin' thing to do? Clean your room," and "No one told you life would be fair. Get used to it."

Now the good folks in Gay, Ga., have undermined everything I've worked so hard to teach to my children. And it probably started something like this:

Back in the early '70s, someone — my guess is a teen-ager —complained and complained and complained about the lack of entertainment in the tiny town of Gay.

Instead of responding according to the book (i.e. "Get a job Junior," or "Son, when I was your age we used to tip cows for fun,"), the townsfolk decided it might be a good idea to give those young'uns something to do before they all left town on a bus headed for Atlanta.

So in 1972 the citizens of Gay threw the biggest party they could muster and invited everyone near and far. And by golly, they had the best cotton pickin' time anybody could remember. It was so much fun they decided to make it an annual — no, better yet, a semi-annual — event and call it The Cotton Pickin' Fair.

I admit my theory is purely conjecture, but there's no arguing the outcome. Their little venture has put Gay on the map. Nearly 30 years later, folks are still coming from far and wide to take part in The Cotton Pickin' Antiques, Arts and Crafts Fair. They come from Florida, North Carolina and Tennessee to peddle their wares at what's been called one of the top 10 festivals in America.

The brochure called it "a Sunday dinner of the senses," and I can't argue with that. My daughters and I arrived early and stayed late, and we still didn't get to sample all there was to do and see.

Music filled the air — really good knee-slappin' bluegrass and country and flute and harp and something called Sisai, music of the Andes. Who knew those Andes could make such lovely music?

While the music tickled our toes, a potpourri of aromas tempted our noses and made our mouths water for roasted corn-on-the-cob, fried green tomatoes and "Smack Yo Mama" barbecue, candies and jams and funnel cakes and homemade ice cream.

There was lots for the kids to enjoy — trains and pony rides, rock climbing, games galore, an "old-timey" puppet show and various activities just for the young and young-at-heart.

And beneath it all lies the town, little more than a village, whose architecture and main-street facades are preserved much the same as they were a hundred years ago when cotton was king of Gay.

The fair is held on the grounds of a turn-of-the-century cotton plantation. More than 300 vendors and exhibitors set up shop below the magnolias, pecans and pines. Most of the antique booths are housed in the cotton gin, seed house, packing sheds and Victorian plantation house built in 1891.

In retrospect I'd say that's what sets The Cotton Pick' Fair apart from the hundreds of others that crop up around Georgia every spring and fall.

The people of Gay have not only preserved the historical integrity of their tiny slice of the peach, but they've also welcomed the rest of the world to touch it, taste it and try it on for size.

Gay is located 50 miles north of Columbus on Highway 85. Take the Interstate 185 Manchester exit north through Warm Springs and you can't miss it. The Cotton Pickin' Fair is held the first weekend of May and October every year, and is open from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday, and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $5 for adults and $2 for children between the ages of 4 and 12.

Shooters: Receive induction without him, I wouldn't be here."

"Being in the Army Marksmanship Unit is the best job in the Army," Anti said. "I want to thank the USAMU commanders and my teammates — the best team ever assembled at the Army Marksmanship Unit — and Mr. Krilling who has coached me since I was a junior."

Johnson was unable to attend the induction ceremony so Krilling accepted Johnson's award for him.

Following the USAMU International Rifle Hall of Fame, 2000 Olympian retired Army Reserve Col. Bruce Meredith inducted 12 U.S. Army Reservists into the USAR Roll of Honor. Range rededication Medal of Honor recipient, retired Col. Robert B. Nett of Columbus, Ga., was the guest speaker at the Hook Range Rededication Ceremony at 11:45 a.m. Oct. 7.

"It's great to be back at the Home of the Infantry," Nett said. "I'm grateful to be here today for the Hook dedication and to recognize the world's most outstanding marksmen."

Nett and USAMU Commander Col. Arch Arnold unveiled a portrait of Hook, painted by USAMU graphic artist Charles R. Pagan. Then, the USAMU 44th anniversary cake was cut by the youngest member of the MMA at the ceremony — 18-year-old USAMU action shooter Max Michel — the oldest member of the MMA — 84-year-old Walter Schneider — and the MMA member who traveled the farthest to attend the reunion — Rocky Marchioli from Luxembourg.

Gordon R. Roberts, the only active duty Medal of Honor recipient, was the guest speaker at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Hall of Fame Induction Ceremony Oct. 7 at 2 p.m. at Pool's Ceremony Hill. Roberts is assigned to the U.S. Army Infantry School at Fort Benning and is a part-time international rifle shooter. Inducted into the Hall of Fame were former Maj. Lanny Bassham, retired Lt. Col. Francis B. Conway and former 1st Lt. John R. Writer.

"It is a great pleasure to induct these three national treasures into this esteemed Hall of Fame," Roberts said.

Bassham, who won an Olympic Gold Medal in 1976 and an Olympic Silver Medal in 1972, was unable to attend the ceremony. Conway, a former USAMU gunsmith and rifle and pistol shooter and former commander of the U.S. Army Europe Marksmanship Unit, was present to accept this award and encouraged all the support personnel of the Army today to do the very best job that they can do because of its importance to the Army's mission. Writer, a 1972 Olympic Gold Medalist and 1968 Olympic Silver Medalist was also unable to attend.

His former coach, Bill Pullum accepted the award.

Brewers: Nearly shut out Rockies and he got one.

"I always think fastball," he said. "I knew I'd seen all his pitches and was just waiting for the fastball."

The lead remained 1-0 until the top of the seventh when Baglio doubled to right field to drive in the second run.

Baglio later comes home on a single by Jacob Stimson, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., to make it 3-0. For Baglio, the No. 5 hitter in the lineup, his hit was on that was long overdue.

"I've been fighting myself at the plate lately," Baglio said. "This is the first time I've hit in this ball park."

Baglio said in order to hit that double in the seventh he had to adjust his arms a bit to make contact with the meat of the bat.

"Whatever it takes to get the barrel of the bat on the ball," he said.

Baglio was 2 for 3 on the day including his RBI double and a triple in the fifth inning.

The Brewers were happy to have breathing room, especially at the bottom of the eighth. The Rockies showed signs of a rally in the seventh to no avail; but in the eighth they put together a few hits to drive in one run and potentially more if not for Bielak's game-ending strikeout that left men marooned on first and second.

Bielak, who pitched a solidly stellar game, seemed to tire in the eighth especially after the Rockies scored.

"I had to bear down a little bit and get some outs," Bielak said.

Baglio helped Bielak get back in the game by reminding him that keeping it together mentally is very important.

"You have to tell yourself that this team will not hit you," Baglio said of his advice to Bielak.

"In the last inning he looked like he was losing it. But again he gained it back and gutted it out," he said.

There was an evident sigh of relief from the Brewers when the inning ended and they came away with the win after a game that was nail-bitingly close.

"The Rockies are just a very tough team. Even in the summer without all their players, they're tough to beat," Brewers' coach Ed Gawlik, 3rd Bn. (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt.

Gawlik said every time the teams have met the game was always within a few runs and they usually exchanged the lead. In the last game against the Rockies, Sept. 16, the score see-sawed and then ended in a Brewers victory 7-3.

The Brewers' next and last regular game until the playoffs is 1 p.m. Sunday at Golden Park where they will play the White Sox.

The first week of playoffs are set for 7 p.m. on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday also at Golden Park.
