Several soldiers and employees at the Office of the Inspector General believe Hutchinson Hall is haunted. They've gone so far as to name their resident specter after 1st Lt. Robert Hutchinson, the Vietnam War hero for whom the building was named. Incidentally, the original Lt. Hutchinson never actually set foot inside Building 71, at least not while he was alive.

Sgt. 1st Class Monica Waddell first heard the ghost while she and another soldier were in the office after duty hours.

"Doors closing, file cabinets opening and closing, footsteps — you name it. The first time it ran me out of here," Waddell said. "The second time I went looking for it, but I didn't see anything. Now I just don't come in here by myself."

The ghost has become sort of a scapegoat, said Bob Raab, deputy IG. He's blamed for every mishap, mistake or misplaced item in the office.

"Personally I don't believe it," Raab said. "I think the noises probably come from the air ducts or the refrigerated drinking fountain. It cycles on and off and makes a big racket."

Down by the Riverside

Some Fort Benning historians believe a British soldier was where Riverside now stands. In fact, retired Lt. Col. Dick Grube, former director of the National Infantry Museum, said some accounts place the burial site at the spot that now serves as a cellar entrance.

The soldier, Col. John Tate, was leading a large force of Indians from Cusseta Town to Augusta in 1780. He fell ill along the way, and was returned to Cusseta Town where he died.

"It was during the Revolutionary War — long before there was a Riverside or a Fort Benning," Grube said. "He supposedly came west from Savannah, which was a British stronghold at the time. He's said to be buried right here on Fort Benning, probably on the grounds of Riverside."

Fort Benning's Historical Trail bears credence to the Tate tale. A marker in front of the guest house on Richardson Circle relays the historical account of his march and speculates that Tate is buried "somewhere on the military reservation."

Some of Riverside's former residents believe Tate's spirit roams the grounds, perhaps looking for a permanent place to rest.

Gloria Foss, wife of former Fort Benning Commanding General John Foss, lived at Riverside from 1984-1986.

"I didn't see a ghost, but there was something there," she said. "I used to keep my lipstick in the same place, on the mantel in the master bedroom. One day it just wasn't there. When I came back into the room, it had been moved to the other side of the mantel and stood up on end. There was no one in the house except me."

Foss hasn't decided if she believes the ghost is that of the British soldier or a young female. Local legend says a former general's daughter took her own life at the plantation site when her father refused to let her marry a stable boy.

"But it was definitely a man's footsteps I heard at night, outside the master bedroom on the balcony," Foss said. "Boots, I think."

Then there was the tiny feather-filled loveseat beneath the stairwell. Foss and another former resident, who wants to remain anonymous, claim the loveseat's cushions had to be fluffed frequently, as an invisible visitor sat on it just long enough to leave an impression.

Thanks, I think I'll walk

Sometime in the mid-30s, the post newspaper reported a growing concern among Fort Benning residents about a ghostly apparition sited on the Upatoi Bridge, which was at that time, a two-way access route.

Many speculated that the ghost, or ghosts — some said two — was the victim of an automobile accident on or near the bridge some 10 years before. The fact that the newspaper reported the accounts lent a certain credibility to the tales, and residents were cautioned against picking up hitch-hikers or accepting rides from strangers, particularly along the main-gate entrance to Fort Benning.

The Bayonet has received no reports of similar sightings in recent years, though reporters are always on the lookout for "foot" soldiers in khakis on the inbound Upatoi Bridge. Should we have the good fortune or good timing to encounter the illusive ill-fated infantryman, we'll be sure to relay it to our readers immediately.

Of course if you read it in The Bayonet, you can believe it.

The graveyard shift — can you dig it?

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

As Halloween approaches, thrill seekers may look for phantoms and frights at their local graveyards. What they'll find are stories of thousands of heroes, a couple of criminals and a creepy peek into Fort Benning history.

There are nearly 60 cemeteries scattered across the post which contain remains dating back to the 1800s. With the exception of the Main Post Cemetery, the smaller burial spots are family, community and church cemeteries which belonged to former residents of the land now known as Fort Benning.

The private cemeteries include the remains of Confederate, Civil War, Spanish-American War and World War I soldiers. The oldest known graves are of a Revolutionary War soldier, John D. O'Quin, buried in 1836, and his wife, Rhoda, located in cemetery 40 off Red Diamond Road.

The Carmouche Cemetery, a 19th-century grave site, was discovered during the construction of Carmouche Range. No markers or tombstones were present when heavy construction equipment uncovered two skeletons in 1983.

When more graves were unearthed, construction was halted until a survey was completed. Investigations suggested the remains were members of the Missionary Colored Baptist Church, during the 1880s.

The Main Post Cemetery had its first burial in 1922. More than 8,000 service members and their dependents have been buried there. The first burial was a murder victim allegedly named Pvt. William Hart. According to a 1969 article in The Bayonet, Hart was later identified as Pvt. William DeHaven, but the name remains Hart on his headstone.

Medal of Honor recipient Spc. Donald R. Johnston was buried at the foot of the flagpole in 1969. He threw himself on three explosive charges in the Tay Ninh Province of Vietnam and saved the lives of six of his comrades.

Cpl. James Edgar Smith, a ranger killed in Somalia, is buried there, as well as Capt. Patrick McKenna, whose helicopter was shot down in Iraq in 1994. The cemetery also contains the remains of 44 German prisoners of war, seven Italian prisoners of war, and four Chinese allied pilots.

Two soldiers hanged at Fort Benning in 1944 are buried at the post cemetery. Pvt. John O'Connor was convicted of killing a prison guard in 1944 and Pvt. Curn Jones was convicted of stabbing an officer candidate in Columbus. Their graves were not originally included within the gates of the cemetery. When the wall around the cemetery was expanded in 1974, the graves were then enclosed.

Perhaps the most famous grave in Columbus is that of Maj. Gen. Henry Benning, for whom the post is named. He is buried at Linwood Cemetery, along with 200 Confederate soldiers, including Gen. Paul J. Semmes, who died of wounds sustained at the Battle of Gettysburg. Linwood is the oldest cemetery in Columbus, dating back to 1828.

Brenda Bowser, mortuary affairs assistant at Fort Benning, said typically around this time of year, the cemetery gets some pretty unusual requests.

"Around Halloween, we get a lot of calls requesting caskets for Halloween parties, but we just don't keep extras lying around," she said.

ask the judge

Capt. Angela L. Crisp

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I was issued a government credit card. Can I use it for anything I need for the military, including uniforms, office equipment or gifts for guests? Can I let my spouse use it? And since it's a government credit card, I'm not responsible for paying the bills, right?

A: No to all the above. The Department of the Army issues service members and permanent civilian personnel government travel cards.

The credit card's use is limited to "official travel" only. Most service members use the credit card primarily for travel during temporary duty assignments. This credit card allows Army travelers the freedom and flexibility to use their cards for hotels, meals and miscellaneous travel-related expenses, without needing a cash advance from DFAS. The card may not be used for any other purpose outside of traveling under official Army orders.

If the card is used for any purposes other than official travel, the individual may be accused of abuse or fraudulent use of government property. The individual's command may initiate either disciplinary measures or formal actions under the UCMJ.

Furthermore, active-duty service members or civilian employees are the only people authorized to use the government travel card. Use of the travel card by anyone else, including your spouse, is not permitted.

You are personally responsible for charges made by anyone using your credit card if you knew, or had reason to know, that this individual had access to your card and you failed to stop this person from making charges or you gave him or her your permission to use the card.

When you are issued a government travel card, you also receive a personal identification number in order to access automated teller machines. Do not disclose your card's PIN number to anyone. Once again, only you are authorized to make withdrawals when you are traveling under official orders.

If your card is stolen, you are responsible for notifying the card issuer. You will not be liable for any further charges once the card issuer is notified. Know where your government travel card is located at all times.

You are expected to promptly pay your travel card expenses. Delinquent cardholders are reported in writing to commanders and supervisors. When a commander is notified that a soldier failed to pay a government travel card bill, the commander is required to take immediate disciplinary action against the cardholder. As a cardholder, if you find that you are unable to pay your account balance on time, you need to avoid letting your account lapse into a delinquent state. You must contact the card issuer in writing as soon as possible and arrange a repayment schedule.

Remember you do get reimbursed for your travel expenses. Once you complete your temporary duty, immediately fill out DD Form 1351-2 Travel voucher or Sub voucher. You will then receive your full reimbursement.

Just as a reminder, if you PCS to a new installation, you must in-process with the agency program coordinator at your new installation. If you do not do this, your card will be deactivated within 10 days after the report date on your orders.

For more information, TRADOC Regulation 37-3 (Government Travel Card Program) is available for your review.

If you have questions concerning your government travel card, call the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, or make an appointment with a legal assistance attorney.

The number is 545-3281 or 545-3282. Start calling Friday at 8 a.m. to make an appointment for the following week.

Kris Clemons

a second-grade teacher at Stowers Elementary School

Personal: Clemons is married to Carey Clemons. They have identical twin girls, Amy and April, age 20.

She enjoys spending time with her family and singing with her church choir.

Clemons began teaching at Fort Benning at White Elementary. Then she taught at Wilbur Elementary School before settling into her current classroom at Stowers.

Education: Clemons earned a bachelor's degree in early childhood education, a master's degree and a specialist degree in reading from Columbus State University.

Parenting and teaching children: "I am a mother first," Clemons said. "I think that mother's point of view explains my method of teaching."

"I consider teaching a calling. No matter who you are or what you do now, we all have had a teacher influence our lives," she said.

Clemons wanted to share an excerpt from a book given to her by a parent, Chalkdust, Prayers and Meditation for Teachers:

Lord, you have made these children as varied as the flowers of a garden. You have blessed each one uniquely. And each fragile, growing child is infinitely precious in your sight. You have trusted me to nurture them. And blessed me with the joy of seeing them grow. Lord, I teach in reverence.

On teaching: "I tell the children to choose a job they love. I am excited about coming to work everyday even after 20 years," she said.

Clemons love of reading inspired her to develop the Special Reader Program at Stowers. Through the program invited family and community members read to children and talk about the importance of reading in relation to their careers.

"No matter what they do, reading is important," she said.

Parents: Clemons applauds parental involvement and the unit support that allows parents to spend more time in classrooms.

Parents, school teach values

Modeling behaviors help children learn basic citizenship

Loyd Elementary School

At Loyd Elementary School, our counselor follows a curriculum that teaches all students good character traits.

Throughout the year, children will learn about the Army values: loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity, and personal courage.

In addition to those values, students will learn about gratitude, caring, trustworthiness, perseverance, friendship, fairness, heroes, citizenship, change, drug awareness, peer pressure, bullying, test-taking skills and conflict resolution.

We hope students will learn to develop positive character traits, which will help them distinguish between right and wrong.

These values cut across all ethnic, cultural, and religious boundaries. Teaching these values is essential for a healthy and functioning society.

The following excerpt from Helen LeGette's Parents, Kids, and Character lists 12 parental tips to help children develop good character.

1. Model good character at home.
2. Tell your children where you stand on important matters.
3. Show respect for your spouse, your children and other family members, and insist that all family members use good manners.
4. Have family meals together (without television) as often as possible.
5. Assign home responsibilities to all family members.
6. Plan as many family activities as possible; involve your children in the planning.
7. Worship together as a family.
8. Set clear expectations for your children and hold them accountable for their actions.
9. Don't provide access to drugs or alcohol for your children. Model appropriate behavior regarding alcohol and drugs.
10. Don't cover for your children or make excuses for their inappropriate behavior.
11. Know where your children are, what they are doing, and with whom.
12. Learn to say no and mean it.

With the school and home working together in partnership, our children will grow up with strong moral character. We will encourage children with integrity, which will prepare them to work productively and cooperatively.

All Saints Day marks start of forgiveness

Chaplain (Capt.) Stan Vaughan
3rd Brigade

reflections

At the time of this writing, our nation just received an eye-opening shock. We are angry and in disbelief. Among the many conversations I hear, there exist two major schools of thought:

One, we kill the people responsible.

Two, we exercise restraint and proceed with informed caution in order to bring responsible parties to justice.

A popular notion that spawned articles of clothing and jewelry is WWJD? "What would Jesus do?"

This is a valid question given our current situation. An extension or follow up question is, "what will the saints do?"

We need to first of all understand who the saints are. That understanding gave rise to the day we celebrate as All Saints Day.

There are differing views on who qualifies as a "saint."

For the sake of space I will oversimplify and say, on one hand, saints were looked upon as those who lived a life of exemplary holiness and were recognized by the church.

On the other hand, saints are viewed as those who are justified before God through faith in Jesus as Lord.

Regardless of the details, we have the opportunity to celebrate the grace and movement of God in our lives through the ages and in the present.

What about today, though? How may we offer ourselves as vessels of God's grace?

Our commander-in-chief speaks of the resolve of this administration to bring about justice. It is time for all the saints to resolve to pray.

We may pray for guidance for this nation and its leadership. We may pray for the ability to balance our desire for justice with our desire to do God's will, which may involve loving and forgiving our enemies.

Speaking to a large crowd, according to Matthew's account of the Gospel, Jesus said, "You have heard it said, 'You shall love your neighbor and hate your enemy.'

"But I say to you, love your enemies and pray for those who persecute you, so that you may be children of your father in heaven; for he makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good and sends rain on the righteous and on the unrighteous." (Matthew 5: 43-45)

In the words of my battalion commander on doing the right thing, "Sometimes you have to choose the hard right over the easy wrong."

Doing as Jesus says is hard for us to do. We hurt, we grieve, anger swells up in us, and we feel violated and victimized. We need to do something. We want to do something.

Perhaps for All Saints Day we may begin the process of committing ourselves to God and his desire for all of humankind. In taking this kind of action, we more fully participate in the lives of saints past and exemplify the lives of saints present.

Reassurance possible during war

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Our nation is at war with terrorism. America's military might is actively engaged in battle to rid the world of a diabolical menace and scourge. We can be reassured physically, spiritually and emotionally.

Physically our soldiers, sailors, Marines, and airmen are well-equipped, well-trained and well-led to handle the missions given to them to accomplish. Coalition forces from around the world are supporting our efforts and fighting with us in this new war. We are not alone in this battle.

In addition to our physical military might and the faith we have in our country is the spiritual strength that faith provides.

Koop

No matter what we may encounter, we know God will never leave or forsake his people. (Hebrews 13:5)

Being in a right relationship with God provides the confidence and encouragement we need to face any task, any danger and any foe. (Joshua 1:7 and I Chronicles 32:7)

There will always be wars and rumors of wars. (Matthew 24:6) Yet the people of God have the assurance the Lord of hosts, the ruler of the universe, will always love us and be with us every moment of every day. (Romans 8:35)

The trust we have in our physical and spiritual strength allows us to be emotionally strong in difficult times. We do not need to let the emotions of fear, worry, anxiety or doubt overwhelm us.

Are you anxious about what is taking place in your life and in the world? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

BCTB hosts Sand Hill Invitational Oct. 19

Event draws 33 teams to play golf

Tonya Johnson

The Basic Combat Training Brigade's first golf tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course last Friday drew more people than expected.

"We're pleased with the turnout," said Col. Thomas Cole, commander of BCTB. "The weather and timing couldn't have been any better."

The purpose of the Sand Hill Invitational was to bring people together.

"We wanted this to be a morale builder and raise money for the golf course," Cole said.

The tournament wasn't a fund raiser, but BCTB wanted to hold the event at the golf course to support a post facility.

Capt. John McLaughlin, BCTB brigade operations assistant and tournament coordinator, said it took only five weeks to put the tournament together.

Soldiers and civilians were invited to participate in the tournament. The $25 fee paid for green fees, cart, and food and beverages. Thirty-three teams of four played with one team of women.

"In light of the recent events, I think the businesses wanted to help the military in some way. We're thankful for their help because we received a tremendous response," said McLaughlin.

Capt. Clements Kerry, C Company commander, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, said he thought his team did well after a slow start.

"We're playing well, except for the first hole," Kerry said.

Most players came out to support BCTB and to have fun.

"This is about fellowship and supporting my unit," said Jerome Goff, the 29th Infantry Regiment ammunition manager.

Goff, an avid golfer, said his team did well. They had a score of one over par by the fifth hole.

McLauglin, who doesn't play golf, had a better appreciation of the game after putting the tournament together.

"I have more of an idea how golf operates," he said. "It was hard work, but the golf course staff was phenomenal with helping me. They put forward the effort to get this tournament moving."

BCTB plans to host another tournament because it fosters esprit de corps, McLaughlin said, but a date hasn't been set. The Infantry Training Brigade plans to hold a similar tournament in the spring.

After the competition, two teams emerged as the winners. First place for the men's team went to Billy Kimbley, Danny Wilson, Ron Brown and Joe Pyland. First place in the women's division went to Kathy Burns, Catherine Cole, Joie Mock and Marion Fowler.

Local businesses donated prizes, including First Command, a local investment company, Ranger Joes and Papa John's. Prizes included a portable gas grill, T-shirts, golf supplies and restaurant gift certificates.

Kerry, along with many of other players, said he planned to participate in the spring tournament.

"It's a good time to come out and play golf and bond with these people," he said. "That's what it's all about."

YS teams do battle Saturday

A Seminoles' quarterback, right, gets sacked by a gang of Cowboys in game two of the Youth Services' 11- to 12- year-old football league Saturday. The Cowboys stunned the Seminoles in a 30 to 0 blowout.

Raiders' center Josh Westberry, above, prepares to snap the ball to quarterback Gun Hanson during a game with the Steelers. The Steelers rallied for a second-half touchdown and defeated the Raiders in a hard-fought grid-iron battle 7-0.

YS games take place at Blue Field from 9 a.m. to noon Saturdays. Several teams have open spots. Anyone who is interested should call 545-3070.

Smiths Station golfer fires hole-in-one at Pineside

Seven months of serious golf renders first ace

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

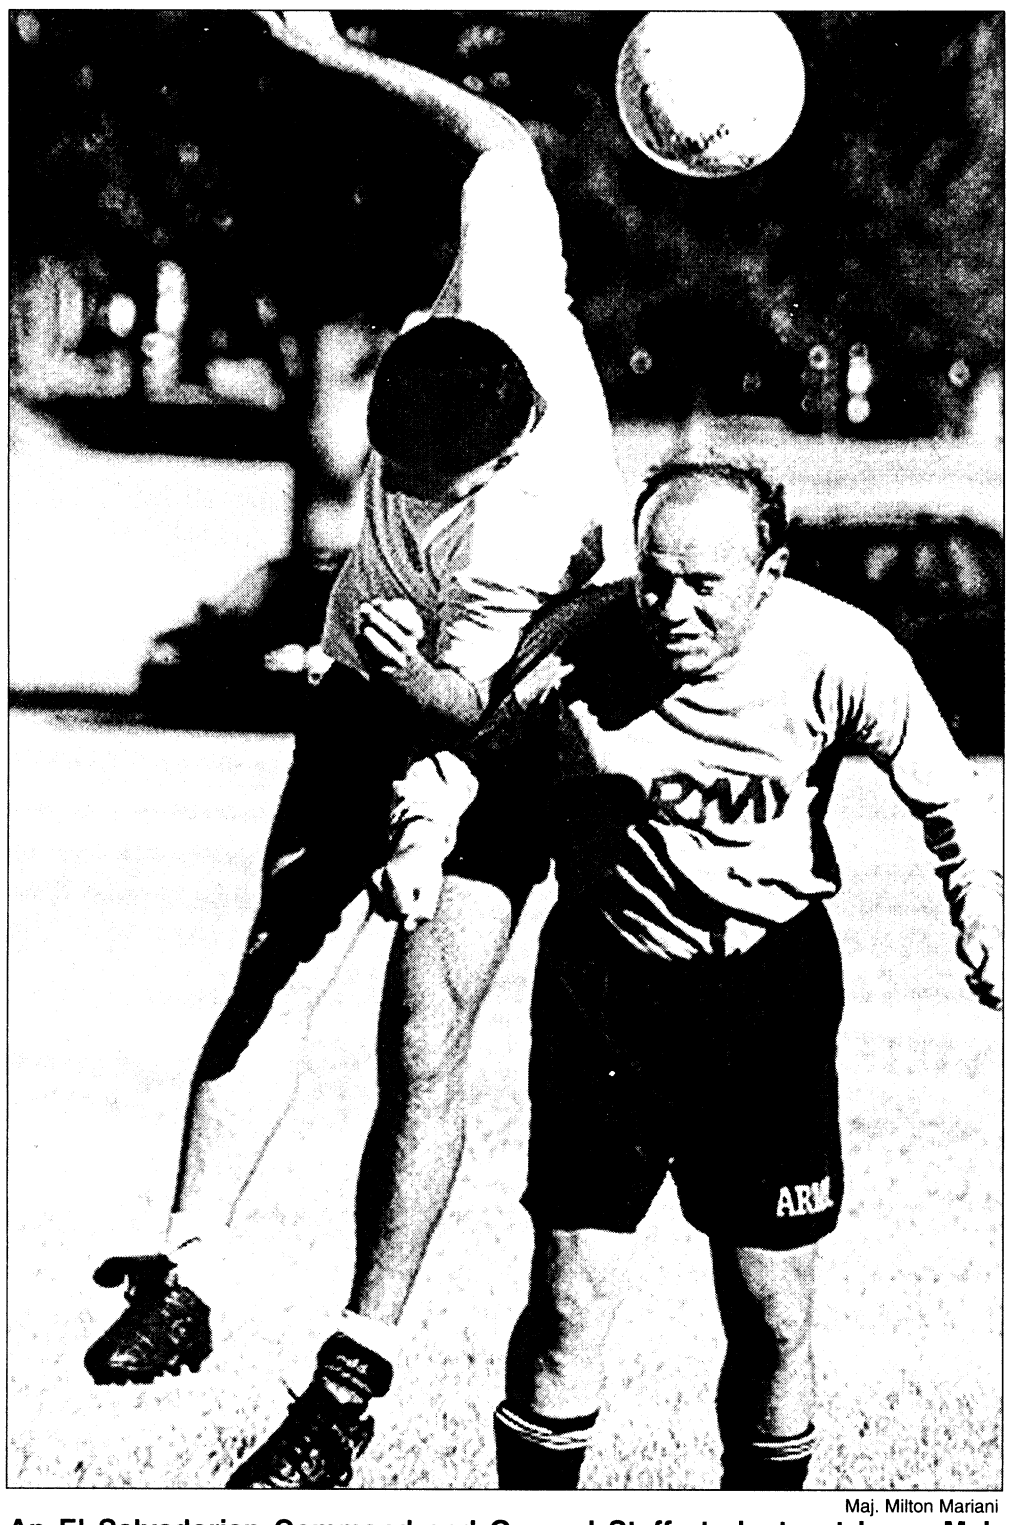
In only his seventh month on the greens, a Smiths Station, Ala., golfer shot a hole-in-one at Pineside's 129 yard, par-three, 16th hole Oct. 4.

"The players who were there had a better response than I did," Jeff Buckingham said. "It didn't seem that impossible for me because I hadn't played very long, whereas it would have excited someone who's played 10 years without one much more."

Off the tee, Buckingham and his playing partner, Richard Morrow of Columbus, thought the seven-iron shot would fly over the green. Instead, the ball hit the front of the green to the left of the hole, bounced to the right twice and plopped in the hole.

"I didn't want to take it out of the hole," Buckingham said. "I left it in there until the next group was on the tee. Then I pulled it out and showed them. They waved back in disbelief."

One of the players behind him had played golf for 60 years and had never scored an ace.



"I was pretty shocked," Morrow said. "You're lucky to get one in your whole life, but to get one after seven months is amazing. It was the closest I'll ever come to one."

"He's really good for the amount of time he's been playing," he added. "He's serious about playing and wants to get better."

Buckingham, who usually shoots in the 100s, credits Bill Logan, a Columbus golfer, with teaching him the ropes of the game. They have played together for five months, and he hopes to reach the 80s like his mentor. To accomplish his goal, Buckingham will take more golf lessons and plan to play every week.

"I hope to have another one, but I doubt I will," Buckingham said.

Bill Heard Chevy Agrees To Cut Silverado Prices To S-10 Levels & Finance Virtually Anyone With $29 Down.

FOR A LIMITED TIME!

CHEVY DEALER TO SELL SILVERADO PICKUPS FOR THE PRICE OF SMALL TRUCKS!

'01 Chevy Silverado 84 Mo. $196 Mo, 9.5% Apr, $29 Down Plus Tax, Tag, Wra Fees & Title. With Approved Credit. Call dealer for exact pricing on certain models.

BUYERS ARE STUNNED TO FIND OUT THEY CAN DRIVE AWAY WITH THIS BEAUTY FOR ONLY $29 DOWN.

Columbus, GA - For anyone who has ever dreamed of owning a new luxury, top of the line truck, but just couldn't quite make the numbers work, Bill Heard has exciting news. Market conditions have stalled sales of full-size pickups nationwide, and the southeast is no exception. Lots are jammed with new full-size Silverado pickups, just the reverse of 6-8 months ago when they were scarce as hens' teeth. Even 2000 new and untitled Silverados are still on the lot, and the 2002 announcement date is just around the corner.

Under the gun to make a decision to either sell these vehicles and recover some of the original costs, or continuing to throw 'good money after bad,' Steve Kash, after many discussions with Chief Financial Officer Frank Gonzalez, has decided to take drastic action - an immediate cut to small, econo truck prices is the plan of action.

Z-71 4X4 Buyers Stunned! "Can I really get a New Z-71 for a 4X4 S-10 Price?"

Hopefully, this price rollback, as dramatic as it is, will cut inventories in half. And to further make the offer attractive, the decision has been made to make financing available to virtually anyone working regularly and who can raise $29 in cash. An example of this deal would be the stk#MW010 full-size Silverado for only $12,020, $29 down, 9.5% APR, 84 months, and the payments only $196. Mister, that is a deal!

A word of caution here might be in order. In just the past few days, sales of new trucks seem to be heading back up, so this offer may not stay on the table long. And there is almost a certainty that it will never be repeated.

Dramatic price cuts similar to the cut on the regular cab SWD Silverado previously mentioned are available on the entire full size truck line including long beds, short beds, regular cabs, extended cabs, LS and limited LT models with leather, two- and four-wheel drives. Even included are the ever-popular Z-71 models, those with quad doors, and the all-new 4-door H.D. models notwithstanding. The point is to hurry for the hottest models, and before you ask, even the world's bestselling diesel, the state-of-the-art DURAMAX is included!

Bill Heard's exclusive "E-Z PAY" makes new dream vehicles available to virtually everyone with $29 cash and $1000 mo take home pay! Heard's "E-Z PAY" out reach program is making huge down payments and unreachable car payments a thing of the past!

Should you have a trade-in, you could be in the catbird seat as well. The used vehicle market has really taken off and the demand for pre-owned cars, trucks and vans, as well as all sport utilities, has made this a true sellers' market.

Right now you can just about 'throw the book away' as the actual value on trade far exceeds what is currently printed. Some models are literally rising faster than the book can be changed! And the dealership is making a firm guarantee to payoff any balance owed on any trade when they make a deal. Sales people will merely process the paperwork - no need to do a lot of hard core dealing on these trucks.

And to further assist in cleaning out these Silverados, the bank has agreed to a temporary 'credit amnesty,' washing away any past credit sins. So again, anyone with $29 cash, a desire to own the finest full-size pickup the world has ever seen, and a steady job, may drive away with the bargain of a lifetime is as little as 30 minutes after arrival at the dealership.

To beat the expected crowds and receive an additional $500 off your purchase price, please call ahead to Truck Manager Grant Humphrey and make an appointment.

"2001 SILVERADO PICKUPS - ONLY $12,020!"

"THIS PRICE IS EVEN LOWER THAN FACTORY-TO-DEALER PRICES!"

Grant may be reached at 706-322-8888 or 800-868-1585.

Battle Boars hold farewell ceremony

Kelley Hill soldiers support KFOR in Balkan region

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

The nation's missions continue despite the terror attacks in September, said the commander of Task Force 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, as his soldiers departed Kelley Hill this week for the peace support mission in Kosovo.

The battalion task force from 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division will serve the next six months in Kosovo as part of the 10th Mountain Division-led Kosovo Force 3-Bravo. The units are replacing others from the 101st Airborne Division from Fort Campbell, Ky.

While the deployment signifies a six-month separation of soldiers from their families and friends, the level of excitement and support for the mission was obvious during farewell ceremonies throughout the week.

"Separations are never easy, but deployments make families stronger," said Lt. Col. Audy Snodgrass, the task force commander. "Soldiers and families are more aware of the reality of the demanding job required by the Army."

Military families were able to prepare for the separation because they knew about the deployment months in advance.

"We have known about this deployment for a while and we were not looking forward to the time away from each other," Sgt. John Papay, B Company said. "But we will keep our heads up and continue supporting each other."

"I think, especially now, with the events of the recent past, I really support (my husband)," said Cody Papay.

Fort Benning soldiers and family members were afforded VIP treatment at the Buick Challenge Oct. 22-28.

"Anything we needed, any question we asked, they were right there to help. We were treated like royalty," said Pvt. Lonnie Devore, a basic trainee from Sand Hill's 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment.

"One of the pro's wives even said 'I really admire you for what you're doing,'" the Orlando, Fla. resident said. "I've been to the Bay Hill Classic for the past three years, and I've never got this kind of treatment. It was pretty amazing."

Devore joined more than 2,500 trainees who were bused from the Basic Combat Training Brigade, the Infantry Training Brigade and the Officer Candidate School to the 10th annual competition Oct. 26, courtesy of Callaway Gardens, the PGA, the Army and the Association of the US Army.

For many of the soldiers, it was the first break from training since arriving at Fort Benning seven weeks ago.

Benning welcomes new boss

Le Moyne receives third star

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

A former assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry Center assumed command of the center. commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School and chief of infantry at Fort Benning during a change of command ceremony at York Field Monday.

In military tradition the ceremony rendered honors to the departing commander, Lt. Gen. John Le Moyne, and solidified the transfer of authority and responsibility for the soldiers, equipment and mission to the new commander, Brig. Gen. Paul D. Eaton.

In his first address as commanding general, Eaton thanked all those in attendance and the community for the warm reception.

"(My wife) P.J. and I look forward to a great command with great soldiers in a great mission," he said.

"We continue with our mission of training soldiers to enter the force as highly confident infantrymen," he said.

During the ceremony, Gen. John Abrams, Training and Doctrine Command commander, honored Le Moyne by pinning on the general's third star.

Abrams praised Le Moyne and wife, Marion, for the dedication and leadership they provided the infantry branch, the garrison and the community.

Abrams then turned his praise toward Eaton. He referred to Eaton's appointment as, "a symbol of continuity of effort and command.

"John and Paul worked together to ensure soldiers are properly prepared and supported," he said.

Because of Eaton's efforts, Abrams said the Army and the Army chief of staff decided to continue that success by appointing Eaton as Fort Benning's newest commander.

"Paul and P.J. love Fort Benning, they love the Army and care about soldiers. Their hearts are pure to the infantry,

Trackers remember fallen comrades

Former soldiers say teams needed in war

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

During the Vietnam War, the U.S. Army faced an elusive, stealthy enemy, not unlike the one it now faces in Afghanistan. Those who tracked Viet Cong guerrillas in caves and caverns around Southeast Asia believe the Army would do well to re-establish an old war-fighting tactic — the combat tracker team.

Nearly 100 former trackers and family members gathered on Sacrifice Field Saturday to dedicate a monument honoring their fallen comrades, both human and canine. They shared stories about the past and pondered the possibility of using tracker teams to flush out the enemy on the modern battlefield.

Bill Vugrin traveled from Texas to be present for what he called a "milestone" in the history of the combat tracker. Now a police officer, Vugrin was a 22-year-old specialist when he was recruited from his military police unit to serve with a tracker team.

"We were a secret unit for the better part of the war, so we never were officially recognized or acknowledged," Vugrin said. "If there's any satisfaction in this, it's the recognition of those who gave their lives, like my cover man, Willy Lumsden. We're here for them."

Vugrin called the combat tracker teams "a great experiment" that proved successful.

Lauded as one of the most potent infantry assets ever fielded, combat tracker teams are credited with 6,513 enemy kills and capture and detecting 271 enemy snipers; 1,459 booby traps; 220 punji pits; 1,063 tunnels; 13,830 bunkers; and, 636 caves in Vietnam.

"For every combat tracker in the field, there were at least 50 lives saved," said Mike Seniuq, a former member of the 10th Combat Tracker Team. "So every man here represents thousands of soldiers who are alive today because of a tracker team."

First fielded in 1967, combat tracker teams were Gen. William Westmoreland's answer to guerrilla

Mother remembers her son

First of all I would like to thank the president for his heartfelt expression on the death of my son, halfway around the world. Those words sustain me in the darkest hours.

But I want to especially thank the rangers who came to honor my son. Your presence during this sad time in our lives has given us much comfort and strength. When I tried to express my gratitude for this help to Sgt. 1st Class Frank Pacheco, he simply said, "Well ma'am, we're rangers."

That is my new motto. Whenever I am faced with an overwhelming obstacle, I will simply say "Well ma'am, we're rangers" and deal with it.

When Kris came to visit not too long ago, I had an interesting discussion with him about what I would like in the way of a funeral service. (When you start to feel old, you think you should have this talk.)

We agreed that no formal gathering would be necessary, Kris was just to serve pizza and beer to my friends and sit around and tell funny stories. We had such a giggle to stipulate that the stories should probably be about me, of course.

So, I'd like to tell you a story about my son.

Kris enjoyed practicing some unusual skills that he learned at the Tom Brown Survival School in N.J. Tom is a man who Kris admired deeply and whose brother-in-law was one of the pilots on the second plane to strike the World Trade Towers.

Kris read all of Tom's books and attended many of his classes. He would come back so exhausted, so exhilarated and so very, very dirty. (The tub in my house still does not drain well.)

One of the skills Kris practiced was to become invisible in plain view. He would position himself in a tree or lie on the ground very, very still so he became one with the surroundings. But still plainly visible if only you knew where to look. He loved to watch us try to find out where his voice was coming from.

Another skill he practiced was to walk through the woods like an Indian Scout without making any noise. The ultimate goal was to touch a deer.

One day he came home and said he had done the "deer thing."

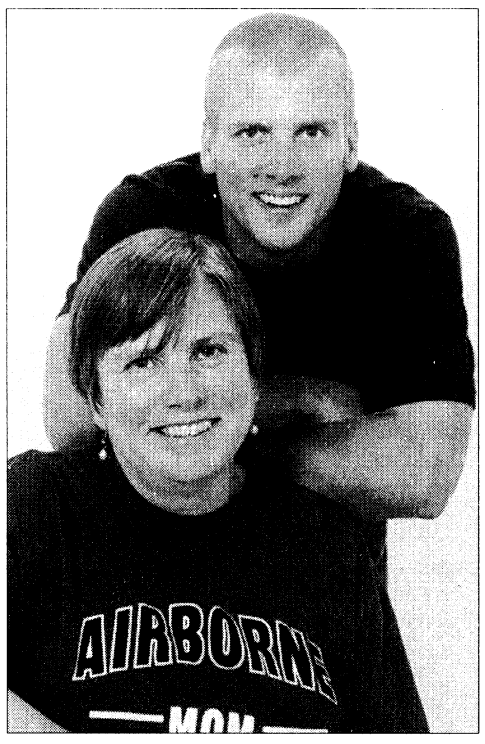
I said, "Great, tell me about it."

"Well," he said, "it probably didn't count since the deer was pretty young."

I said, "Well, that counts."

Then he said the deer was also fast asleep. But, the story is even more interesting since the young deer was asleep on the bank of a small stream. Kris approached through the streambed until he was face to face with the fawn. He waited patiently until the fawn awoke and focused on Kris's face. Kris wanted to see if he was really invisible to the deer. The fawn hesitated a long time before stumbling off into the woods.

I gave Kris the "sleeping deer" merit badge.



He intended to work on the "grazing deer" award.

He practiced walking barefoot and blindfolded using all of his other senses to detect the obstacles in his path.

When he would come home to my house from visiting his friends, he could enter and close the doors and actually move through a room without making any noise.

However, I had a mother's secret early warning device he never knew about. This was in my own defense so I would not jump out of my skin when he came in the living room.

From my chair, I look directly at a picture of a Lakota Indian. Everything that happens in that entrance hall is reflected in the glass of the picture. So, while I never heard a sound, I could always see his brief reflection just before he rounded the kitchen to greet me with his quiet hello.

My son walked very softly upon this earth; however, his impact on my life was immense. He is invisible now but always in plain view in our memories and our stories.

I've been a craftsman all my life, but I always said the two best products I ever made were my sons.

My true comfort lies in the fact that I actually appreciated this great gift of the special child while he was still alive.

The president says, "He did not die in vain."

I will not live in fear.

COMMENTARY

Does gov't have right to censor?

Citizens have the right to know what the government knows

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Servicemen and women pledge to uphold the Constitution and, during times of war, die for it.

We are at war. Residents of Fort Benning mourn the loss of two rangers, soldiers who volunteered to serve the country and volunteered for ranger training.

The nation is mourning the loss of nearly 5,000 citizens who just got up and went to work like we do everyday, making coffee with the morning news playing in the background, listening to NPR while downloading news off the Internet.

Most of us watched the tragedy of Sept. 11 unfold while we were at work — depending on the TV broadcasters to keep us informed.

Since Sept. 11 the news has included reports on the repercussions of watching too much TV and the effect this is having on children and adults. The reporters tell the public to turn off the news, to turn the newspaper to a different story.

We take for granted our right to the information the news programs provide.

If we don't like the spin the reporter has, we change the channel. As a nation, our cup runneth over with news programs.

During lunch the other day I was listening to Paul Harvey. One of the things he talked about was North Korea using Princess Diana's view on the media to censor the news. A government censoring the news?

The goal of a journalist is not to endanger the lives of our servicemen and women. Journalists are no less patriotic because they carry cameras and not M-16s. Reporters try to verify facts and get the complete story, not just one side of the story. The American public demands this.

Watergate dragged on forever. President Nixon was re-elected during his denials of wrongdoing. Break in — cover up. When the story was told, a president resigned instead of facing impeachment.

Iran-Contra is another recent bit of news history where journalists continued to dig for the facts and ignored coverup attempts.

Ronald Reagan couldn't remember anything and Ollie North was just a Marine following orders.

Today's news is about war and anthrax. Reports change as the news changes on the who, what and when questions. Journalists keep asking these questions because our citizens have the right to know what the government knows.

Government shouldn't blab all of its business

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

It's hard for me to write this commentary because I am a reporter, and a part of the media.

But I think that sometimes, we, as the media, can push the envelope too far.

We don't have to, nor do we need to, know everything.

The war on terror is a prime example. I watch CNN and other news programs where reporters hammer questions that don't need to be asked or answered by government officials.

Sometimes the media can be too nosy and intrusive. Reporters are asking questions such as when and how many troops are being deployed, where are they going, how long will they be there, etc.

I'm concerned about my peers' behavior.

Does it really matter what time and day certain units are deploying?

The same articles and television news programs you and I read or watch are the same ones potential terrorists might read or watch.

The U.S. government shouldn't blab all of its business.

We've already lost a lot of Americans in the terrorist attacks, we don't need to lose any more by giving away our game plan.

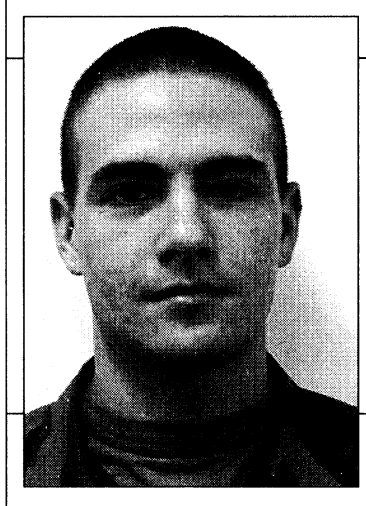
Not only can the information leaked to the media jeopardize soldiers' lives, but it can harm all of us.

We have lived through a terrible ordeal, and I would hate to relive this incident again with more terrorist attacks.

I sometimes wonder if members of the media have a conscious.

If something goes wrong and soldiers are sent back to the U.S. in body bags, would they feel guilty knowing that the information they printed or read caused these killings?

And some of the information that the media receives is incorrect.



If they (or I) don't get our facts right, then we could be reporting incorrect information to the public, which could cause even more problems. The public is easily aroused, and even the slightest bit of wrong information can be detrimental.

It is the government's responsibility to look out for the welfare of its citizens. If that includes not disclosing certain information, then that is acceptable to me.

I know as a member of the media we have a responsibility to report the facts and keep the public informed. But when innocent lives are at stake, some things are left better not reported.

Callaway Gardens appreciates military

Military receive free admission to tournament

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

More than 2,500 soldiers and family members had the opportunity to witness something they may never witness again Oct. 26 through Sunday at Pine Mountain, Ga.

Not only did Callaway Gardens allow ID card holders to witness David Duval's failed, last round comeback against Chris DiMarco in the Buick Challenge, it let them in for free during military appreciation weekend.

"It was a great weekend for Fort Benning, especially Friday when all the basic trainees came out in uniform," said Bo Callaway, chairman, board of trustees of the Ida Cason Callaway Foundation.

It was an honor to have soldiers and family members visit the resort, he said.

"This weekend is one more thing that sets Fort Benning apart from other posts," Callaway said. "Some of these soldiers probably just came in from the field. They're still walking in the woods here, but it's in a much more relaxed atmosphere."

He appreciated the hard work of Fort Benning volunteers who helped make the tournament a success, he said.

Second Lt. Matt Lee, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment was a marshal for Jeff Maggert, professional golfer.

"It's really nice to see Fort Benning takes good care of its soldiers and gives them the day off on Friday," Lee said.

"It reinforces the work hard, play hard mentality."

Maggert's other marshal was 2nd Lt. Keith Jennings, 2nd Bn., 11 Inf. Regt.

"We both enjoyed ourselves," Jennings said. "It was a very entertaining tournament. It's good to see the community values what we do as members of the military."

He said a highlight of his Callaway visit was meeting the golfers and caddies and speaking with them about traveling on tour.

Maj. Dave Shepherd, 29th Inf. Regt., was a green's marshal on Fort Benning's 11th hole.

He said he and the other marshals were glad to show their support for the community through their volunteer work.

All soldiers and family members who volunteered or watched the tournament took another step toward normalcy after the Sept. 11 attacks, he said.

"It was a beautiful weekend," Sheperd said. "(A couple of highlights) were watching the pro players and spending quality time with family in a beautiful environment."

First Lt. Ben Alter brought his wife, Danica, and 18-month-old son, Ben Jr., to the tournament Saturday.

"This was a fabulous time for military families to be involved in the community," Danica said.

They all enjoyed the great golf, beautiful weather, and free admission, she said. Non-ID holders holders paid $25 to enter the grounds.

"Fort Benning is fortunate to have a championship golf course so close to it," Ben said.

"It gave soldiers on post the opportunity to do something they will probably never do — witness professional golf at its best."

Trackers: Gather to honor sacrifices made in Vietnam

warfare. U.S. soldiers in Vietnam bemoaned the elusive nature of the enemy — "they just melted into the jungle," was the constant refrain of the line commanders. So Westmoreland looked abroad for a solution to the problem.

The British army had successfully employed hunter-killer tracking teams in Malaya, Borneo, Brunei and Africa in the 1950s. The teams were trained to "out guerrilla the guerrilla" — systematically eliminating the enemy by using the resources at hand. In fact, the British hunter-killer teams were the only successful counter to Communist guerrilla tactics at that time.

At Westmoreland's request, the British entered into a contract to train 14 teams of U.S. trackers at the British Jungle Warfare School in Malaysia.

Each 10-man team consisted of two squads, with a team leader, a visual tracker, a radio operator, a cover man and a dog handler with a trained Labrador retriever.

Labradors were proven more suitable for service than the German shepherd because they moved quietly in the field, remained even-tempered and could adapt well to new handlers. Most canine specialties at that time, including sentry and scout dogs, were strictly one-handler dogs.

"We were the pioneers," said Gary Ward, a team sergeant with the 6th Combat Tracker Team. "They recruited us country boys who were already used to the outdoor life — hunters and trappers and that sort of thing."

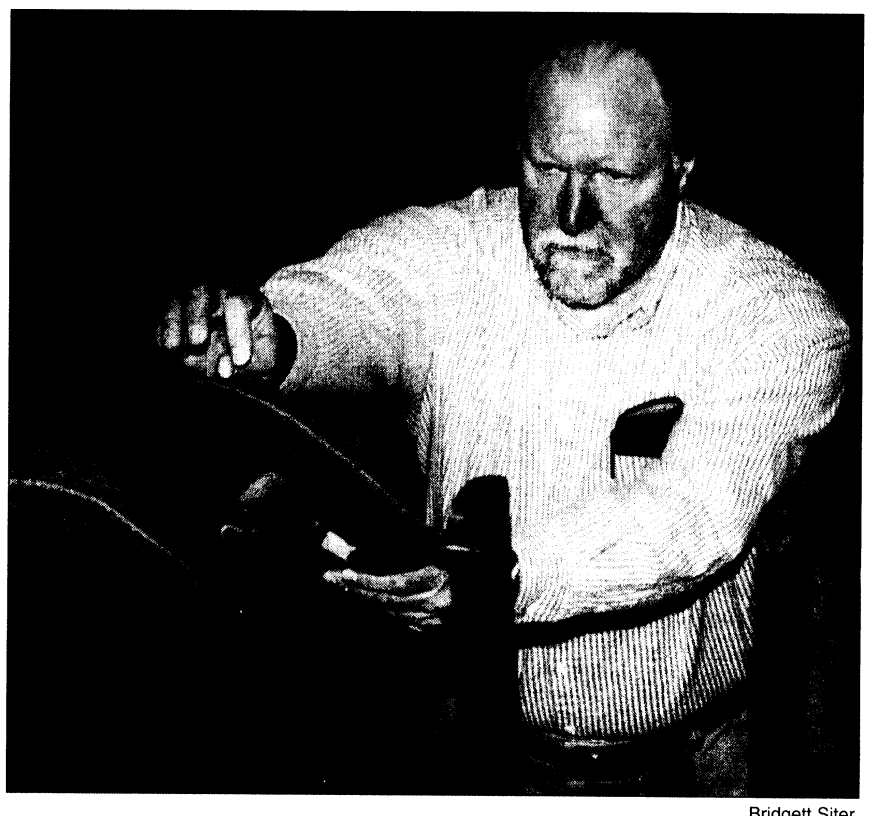
The Kentucky native said the teams' visual trackers were well versed in "reading the land," much like the Native-Americans attached to the Army's early cavalry troops.

The trackers were deemed successful by military officials, so when the British contract expired, the Army established a combat tracker school at Fort Gordon, Ga., where an estimated 500 trackers were trained in the five-week course between 1968 and 1973.

One of those soldiers was Sgt. Roger Logodzinski, who was killed while leading a combat tracker team in 1970.

Logodzinski's brother, Walter, and his nephew, David, traveled from Atlanta and Florida to be present at the ceremony. They unveiled the two pedestals which list the names of the 44 soldiers and 12 dogs killed in combat tracking missions.

Jessie Mendez, a former tracker, urged the audience to contact their state representatives and request tracker teams be re-established in light of recent speculation that Osamma bin Laden is probably hiding in a cave in Afghanistan.



"They could be very useful in today's war, but unfortunately few dogs are now trained for this type of mission," he said.

Those that are trained are still "working the front lines," said John O'Donnell, a former tracker who recounted his experience as a tracker in None Came Home.

"I was in New York at the site of the attack, and our dogs were right there on the front line again," O'Donnell said. "These dogs do a remarkable job.

"The military must remember our history. If we send the dogs in again, they'll find him."

Polk, La., Papay said he will keep his hopes up and think positive while away from home.

The commander of the 3rd Bde, Col. Daniel Allyn told his deploying troops he was confident in their abilities.

"(The command team) extends our pride and total confidence in your readiness to execute our nation's vital mission in Kosovo.

"I know from your steely-eyed look, you are ready to go," Allyn said.

The commander referred to the training soldiers received during their recent deployment to the JRTC. While there soldiers underwent "realistic training" in a simulated Balkan-style urban and rural environment.

Hoping to ease the pain of separation during the deployment, Allen also gave his assurance of support to soldiers and their families through the brigade and the battalion family readiness groups.

"Though the mission will be tough and challenging, we know that one of the toughest battles will be endured by the families at home," he said.

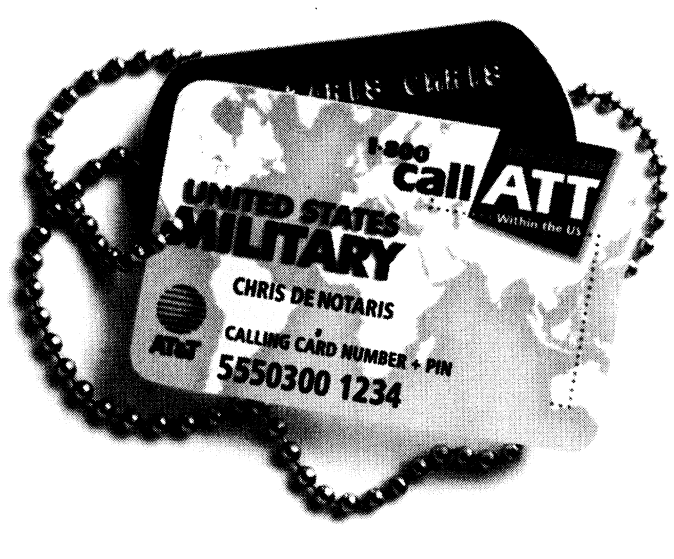
"To our Battle Boar families, you are blessed with a tried and tested and strong family readiness group," Allen said.

Also sharing departing words was Maj. Gen. Buford Blount, commander of 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Stewart, Ga.

"It is a great day to be a dog-faced soldier and a great day to be a part of this send off of this outstanding task force," he said.

He told the crowd he was thankful to share this day of history and add a page to the already proud history of 1st Bn, 30th Inf. Regt.

"The entire 3rd Infantry Division reflects with pride on your battalion. You are members of a proud outfit with a proven reputation," he said.



Blount also emphasized the importance of supporting those left behind during the deployment.

Blount ended his speech with one piece of advice for soldiers, "You train together, work together, you are never alone. Always approach each challenge as a team."

After the ceremony, soldiers filed into the recreation center to manifest for their long flight, as family members and friends took this last opportunity to say goodbye.

The line of smiling soldiers showed positive thinking, especially after the extensive training they received in the past few months for the peacekeeping operation.

"(This is a) totally different mission, but these soldiers are well prepared to accomplish this mission successfully," A Company's 1st Sgt. Jose Garza said.

Flu, anthrax share symptoms, but differ

Fears may cause confusion with viruses

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — With the approach of flu season, people who contract the flu virus may fear they have anthrax, just like people in widely publicized cases.

"That's because the symptoms of flu are similar to the early symptoms of those reported in people infected by the terror weapon," said Dr. (Col.) Bernard DeKoning, command surgeon for Training and Doctrine Command.

"So, not all symptoms of the flu are caused by influenza or anthrax," DeKoning said. "A subtle, but perhaps helpful distinction is that anthrax normally doesn't cause a runny nose or a 'productive cough.'"

A productive cough brings up mucous or drainage.

"One must keep in mind 'the flu' can be caused by any number of viruses," he said. "The flu comprises symptoms such as fever, cough, fatigue or respiratory discomfort caused by any number of strains of influenza and other viruses."

Only the most common strains of flu have vaccines against them, DeKoning explained. Flu itself sometimes can be dangerous, especially among the elderly and people with certain medical conditions.

Sniffles and a productive cough are not 100 percent foolproof indication that a person has not been inflicted with anthrax either, the doctor said.

DeKoning said people who choose to see a doctor because they do not know whether they have anthrax or the flu should retrace their activities over the past week by asking themselves the following questions:

- Did I or do I have a runny nose or a productive cough?
- What were my activities?
- Who was I with?
- Were those people experiencing the same signs and symptoms?
- When did they start experiencing signs and symptoms?
- Do those people have runny noses and productive coughs?
- Any unusual sores on my skin?
- Did people I was with have skin sores?

"Your doctor will find the answers to these questions very helpful," he said. "Based on your answers, your doctor may want to consult other colleagues and perhaps perform some tests such as a nasal swab or a blood test."

In the Army, flu vaccinations will be carried out just as they are every year.

"This year, a slight delay in influenza vaccine delivery has been experienced," DeKoning said.

"Upon receipt of the first shipment of vaccine at military installations, vaccination of mission critical personnel and high-risk medical individuals will begin.

"It is anticipated that sufficient influenza vaccine will be available by late November to meet all military beneficiary requirements."

DeKoning said the anthrax vaccine is currently not available for civilian use.

Besides, inoculation against anthrax consists of six shots over 18 months, plus a booster shot every year after that.

"We should all remember that the chance of any of us coming in contact with anthrax is extremely small," he said.

"Yes, we all need to be vigilant about our surroundings. However, we also need to live our lives, enjoy our freedoms and not become paralyzed by the fear of anthrax," DeKoning said.

Golf: Entertains many at Callaway during challenge

"At home I used to watch golf on Sundays to relax," said Pvt. William Alexin, a Hornell, N.Y., native, who frequently golfed with his dad before joining the Army. "So it was really cool to see the pros live — pretty amazing.

"It's hard to describe how it felt to see the top golfers in the world together in person."

The 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, soldier spent the day Friday following his favorites around the course. Though he was rooting for Vijay Singh, Alexin left the tournament expecting David Duval to take the top spot.

"I wrote my dad to tell him about it and to find out who won," said Alexin, who didn't learn the winner until Tuesday. "I didn't even know DiMarco was on the leader board. I would've put money on Duval."

Lt. Col. Mike Burns wasn't betting on any of the golfers as he watched the competition from the tee box on the 11th hole Oct. 24. But he was banking on their good nature. And he wasn't disappointed.

Burns, the deputy commander of Fort Benning's Basic Combat Training Brigade, volunteered to work at the tournament with his son, John, 11, and a friend, Ben Fabozzi, 12.

The three brought home a collection of 44 autographed cards, 47 autographed golf balls and an assortment of hats, gloves and photos signed by the pros.

"They were all really nice to the boys," Burns said. "Here they were very, very focused on the game, but they took the time to sign autographs and pose for pictures and speak to the boys, and they were genuinely enthusiastic about it. It was refreshing to see that kind of attitude from professional athletes."

John said the highlight of the day was meeting Duval and getting his signature on the July 30th edition of Sports Illustrated, which featured Duval, the winner of last year's Buick Challenge.

"I was nervous asking for it, but he was nice," John said. "It's funny, you get so excited talking to these guys, you feel like you've had a whole conversation with them. Then when it's over, you realize you said maybe three words."

Ben's favorite "catch of the day" was a copy of the 83rd PGA Championship program, signed by David Toms, the tournament champion.

"It was the best thing I got the whole day," Ben said. "I met a guy, a retired school teacher from Florida, who was all by himself, and we talked for a little while. He was real nice. I had three cards signed by Loren Roberts, so I offered him one. Then a few minutes later he gave me this program and said he was returning the favor."

Burns' favorite memory of the day was chatting with Rocco Mediate and Frank Lickliter about the Army's involvement in the war on terrorism.

"We had the same conversation thousands of people are having right now, but they took the time to show an interest," said Burns, who presented the golfers with golf balls emblazoned with the ranger tab.

Duval, too, showed a genuine appreciation for the spectators in uniform, Burns said.

"When he passed a group of soldiers he said, 'The reason guys like me can golf is because guys like them join the Army,'" Burns said. "That was really great for the soldiers to hear."

John said his new cards and balls will find a home among his extensive collection of autographed sports memorabilia.

Ben's will be put "someplace special," so he can always remember "it was an awesome day."

Act provides funds for improvements

Post expands runway, increases troop readiness

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

The U.S. House of Representatives approved H.R. 2904, the Military Construction Appropriations Act Conference Report Oct. 24.

The legislation will provide $10.5 billion in critical funding for Department of Defense construction projects.

The act earmarks $181.8 million for projects at Georgia bases. Fort Benning alone will be provided with $6.9 million for runway expansion, $17 million for a passenger processing facility and $5.1 million for the construction of a tactical equipment complex.

The runway extension at Lawson Army Airfield will provide a total of 1,800 feet of additional runway length to support C-5 and strategic B-747 aircraft.

The current runway length of 8,200 feet is insufficient for a fully loaded C-5 or strategic B-747 to take off with sufficient fuel for an ocean crossing, said Kenneth Holloway, chief of the Real Property Master Planning Branch.

The existing deficit in runway length results in either a 50,000-pound reduction in aircraft payload, a refueling stop at an airfield capable of supporting fully loaded C-5 and strategic B-747 aircraft, or aerial refueling en route. The project's design is 95 percent complete, Holloway said.

An air deployment complex to be built will include a 75,650 square foot passenger processing facility with the capacity to hold 1,500 soldiers. The complex will provide adequate facilities to process deploying unit personnel in an efficient manner, Holloway said.

> "The ranger battalion must be fully trained and ready to deploy on short notice for worldwide contingency operations. This readiness requires that tactical vehicles be properly maintained and fully operational for these deployments."
> Kenneth Holloway
> Real Property Master Planning Branch chief

Upon completion the tactical equipment facility will provide permanent maintenance and storage facilities for the 75th Ranger Regiment. Among other things, it will consist of two vehicle maintenance shops, deployment storage buildings and a central issue facility.

Continuous combat readiness must be maintained to execute National Command Authority directives and to fulfill applicable time lines, Holloway said.

"The ranger battalion must be fully trained and ready to deploy on short notice for worldwide contingency operations," Holloway said.

"This readiness requires that tactical vehicles be properly maintained and fully operational for these deployments."

U.S. Representative Sanford Bishop, congressman for Georgia's Second District, said the investments in the post help secure it from future post closings.

"This represents a major step forward in addressing the shortcomings that have existed in the quality of life of military service," Bishop said. "It will also help recruit and retain qualified personnel whom the nation needs at this critical time."

Veterans Day observances announced

Programs scheduled across county

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Veterans Day is fast approaching and so are many celebrations and ceremonies highlighting the national holiday.

The Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park Committee and the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus will hold its pre-Veterans Day program Saturday 10:30 a.m. at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial Park located at Lawyers Lane and Buena Vista Road in Columbus.

The ceremony's guest speaker will be retired Master Sgt. Milton (Davey) Lockett Jr.

Lockett enlisted in the Army in February 1952. He was a key member of the first Rangers in Action demonstration. He was a member of the five-man team who demonstrated Rangers in Action in 1961 for President John F. Kennedy.

In 1966, he saw action in Qon Loi, An Loc and Rung Sat Special Zone.

His awards and decorations include the Bronze Star Medal, the Combat Infantryman Badge and the Ranger Tab.

In 1991, after his retirement, Lockett took direct action against the local drug problem. He became a key leader in the community group Carver Heights Against Drugs. His activeness in CHAD earned Lockett recognition from several community leaders such as the Mayor of Columbus.

Lockett is also a member of the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Community members are invited to join the committee in food and fellowship as they honor deceased veterans and their families.

The Memorial Park Committee is also accepting donations to help in upkeep and maintenance of the park.

For more information, call 687-5357 or 321-9596.

Fort Benning and the tri-community will host a Veterans Day Ceremony 11 a.m. Nov. 9 on the Plaza Level of the Columbus Government Center.

The public is invited to attend.

For more information, call 545-5724.

The first Manchester Veterans Parade and Celebration will be 11 a.m. Nov. 10.

The parade is being held to honor those that have served the country and secured freedoms now held, to show support for service members serving now and to teach children about patriotism.

The parade is a one mile route that begins at Fifth Avenue and Atlantic Street, comes through the downtown area and ends at the Manchester Mill.

There is no charge to anyone entering a float or parade exhibit. Veterans transportation is being arranged free of charge. However, there is a $20 entry fee for people choosing to be a part of the parade of people. Each participant will receive a free T-shirt. The money raised from the parade of people will benefit veteran related local charities.

This year's recipient is the Army Emergency Relief Fund. AER's current project is the Pentagon Victims' Relief Fund.

Manchester, Ga., is located approximately 45 miles north of Columbus on Ga. Hwy. 85.

For more information, call Carla Stephens at 846-9892.

Nazareth Baptist Church will sponsor a Veterans Day Program 11 a.m. Nov. 11.

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop, chief of Family Life Ministries, Fort Benning, will address attendees.

The public is invited to attend.

Nazareth Baptist Church is located at 526 Radcliff Ave. in Columbus.

Additionally, the Richard W. Williams Chapter of the 555th (Triple Nickel) Parachute Infantry Association, Inc., will host its 12th annual Veterans Day observance 11 a.m. Nov. 11 at the National Infantry Museum's Woodruff Auditorium.

The service is a tribute to men and women who have worn the uniforms of the nation in times of war, conflict and peace since the Revolutionary War.

This year's guest speaker is Col. David M. Rodriguez, deputy commanding general and assistant commandant, U.S. Army Infantry Center.

The pubic is invited to attend.

Benning to host annual retiree open house

Tricare for Life will be main focus at event

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Retiree Council will host its annual Retiree Activity Day Wednesday.

Retired Col. Biff Hadden, council co-chair, said this year's appreciation day will not only illustrate the installation's support for retirees but also retirees' support for active-duty service members.

"Retirees should participate to show both their support of our military and to keep themselves informed about changes," Hadden said.

The activity day will focus on many changes such as Tricare for Life and other improving benefits that effect retirees. Tricare for Life is the:

• Primary payer when a service is a Tricare for Life benefit but not a Medicare benefit.

• Secondary payer if the service is a benefit of both Medicare and Tricare for Life.

• Third payer when the benefit is covered by Medicare supplemental policy or other health insurance.

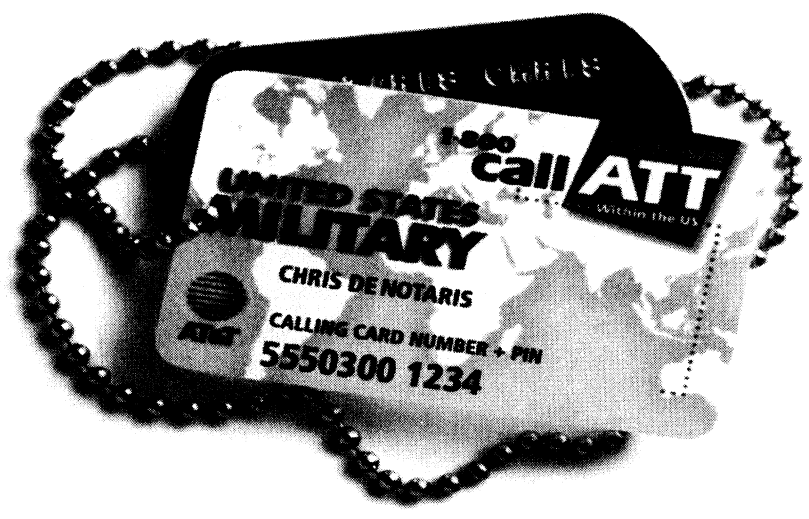
"There are so many retirees that rob themselves of benefits by not staying informed (about changes)," said Friede McDonald, chief of retirement services and personnel processing division.

Another important reason to attend the event is to network with other retirees, he said.

"The Army is still a part of their life," McDonald said. "I want them to come here, enjoy themselves and receive information they need to know. The whole day is supposed to be a special event for (the retirees) to enjoy."

Hadden and McDonald have planned many activities and speakers for Retiree Activity Day.

Besides eating breakfast with new troops from the Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill, the retirees will also receive a presentation and tour of the National Infantry Museum.



Retired Officer's Association Representative retired Warrant Officer Patrick A. Decrane will speak during a luncheon about many of the changes effecting retirees.

A benefit, health and dental fair wraps up the days events.

It will offer retirees the opportunity to have their blood pressure checked and wills updated.

Registration for Retiree Appreciation Day is closed.

"Retirees appreciate the effort the active force shows to all of us who have served," Hadden said. "(Retiree Activity Day) is a sincere thank you for showing your appreciation."

Lecture offers insight on Islam

Expert explains world religion to community

Tonya Johnson
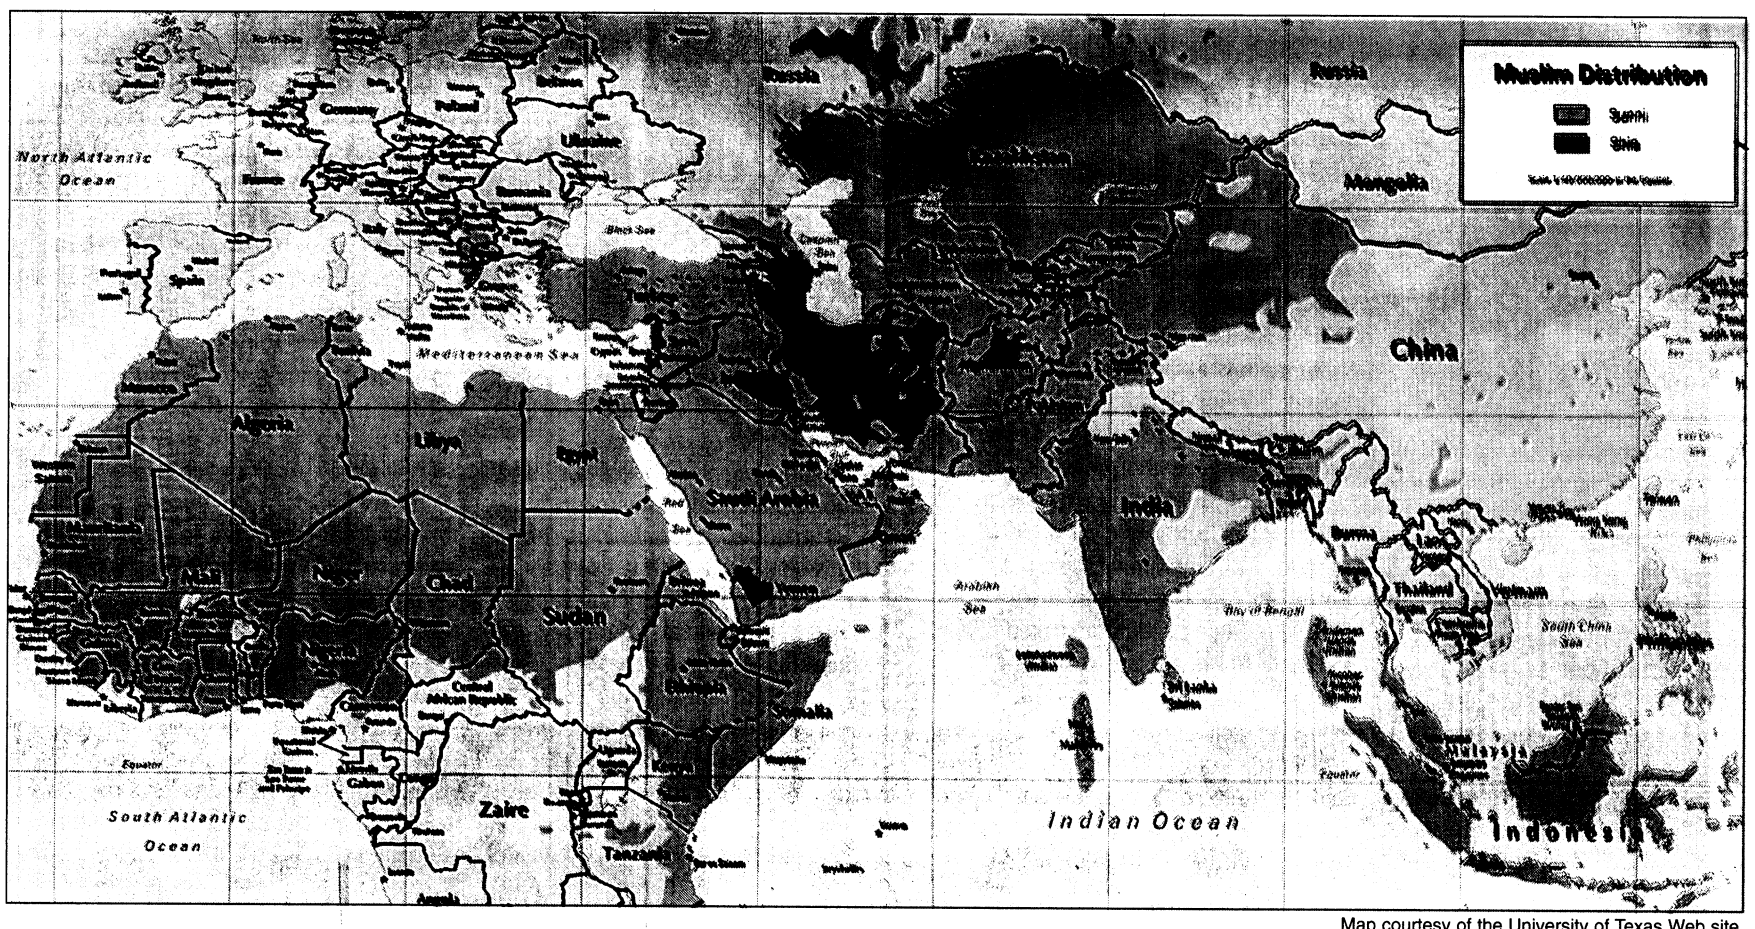
Bayonet staff

The religion of Islam has become quite a topic in the news since Sept. 11.

"There has been a lot of interest in Islam, but the media has reported some misconceptions about the religion," Dr. Roger Zeimet, historian at the Infantry Center, said.

With that in mind, Zeimet invited one of his closest friends, Dr. Daniel Spector, to speak to soldiers and civilians about the religion Monday in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

"Islam is a word too many of us associate with Sept. 11 as evil. But terrorists can be of any religion, whether Jewish, Christian or Muslim," Spector said.



"Terrorism is not a religion, it's neolism. It tries to destroy current order with hopes that whatever emerges will be better," he said.

Spector, the former historian at the U.S. Army Chemical School, has studied the religion and Middle Eastern history for many years. He taught Middle Eastern history at a number of academic institutions including Jacksonville State University in Jacksonville, Ala., and the University of Alabama in Birmingham.

"My mission is to try to dispel the notion that Islam is something we need to fear," he said. "Muslims believe most of the things Jewish, Christians and followers of other religions believe."

Islam means submission, and Muslim means one who submits.

Zeimet said that between 4,000 and 5,000 Muslims serve in the Army. There are more than 1 billion Muslims in the world and 2 billion Christians. Together they make up half the world's population.

Map courtesy of the University of Texas Web site

This map shows the distribution of Muslims throughout Europe, Africa, Asia and the Pacific Rim.

But the most populated Muslim countries aren't in the Middle East, said Spector. A large portion of Muslims live in Indonesia, Bangladesh and Pakistan.

There are similarities among Christians, Jewish people and Muslims. All three have religious days set aside: Judaism – Saturday, Muslims – Friday and Christians – Sunday. They also all have a holy book; Judaism — Old Testament, Christians — Old and New Testaments and Muslims — Koran.

Muhammad, who was born in A.D. 570 and died in A.D. 632, was the last line of prophets that brought the word of God, Allah, to man. Muhammad received verses from God through the angel Gabriel, and his revelations were later written in the Islamic holy book, the Koran.

The Koran contains 114 chapters and organized by length from longest to shortest, except the first chapter.

According to the Koran, on the last day Allah will judge people according to their acts and assign them to heaven or hell. Muslims pray five times a day facing Mecca. They have a month of fasting called Ramadan, when they don't eat or drink during daylight hours. Ramadan begins Nov. 17.

In addition, Muslims give a certain percentage of their wealth to the poor, represent their faith and must make a trip to Mecca in Saudi Arabia, if possible. Mecca is where Muhammad began his life and ministry.

Along with the Koran, the Hadith, which are traditions accepted of what Muhammad did or said, is a part of the religion. The Hadith has two parts. The first part is a statement of what Mohammed did, and the second part is a chain of longer works of narrators who passed the tradition along. Both help make up the Islamic law called Shari'a.

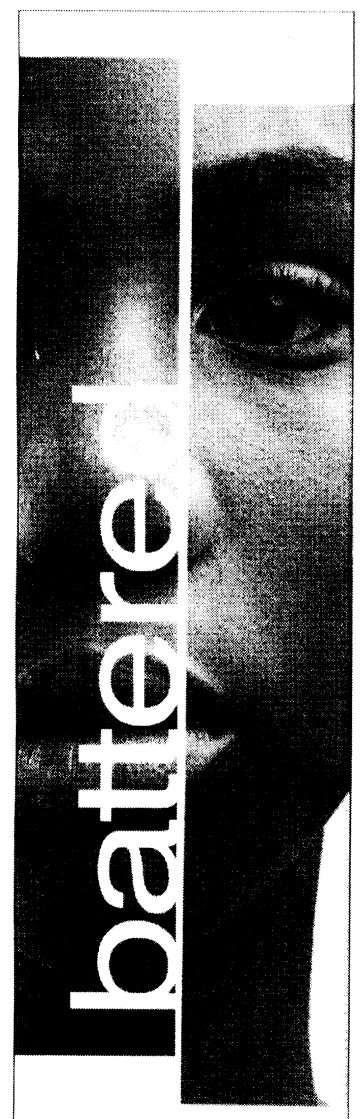
There are two major groups of Muslims — the Sunni and the Shi'ite. Sunni Muslims make up almost 90 percent of the religion and live in Arab states, in north, west and east Africa, Indonesia and India. They believe no one can succeed Muhammad in his nature and quality as prophet.

Shi'ites believe otherwise, that Muhammad instituted a cycle for continuing guidance by appointing a successor called an iman, one who has spiritual abilities and an expert in the Koran. The first iman was Ali, cousin and son-in-law of Muhammad.

Another group of Muslims is the Sufi, who is considered the mystical movement within Islam, with their sheikh masters and brotherhoods.

"Islam is a religion that has great diversity," Spector said.

With Islam, there are no attributes of divinity like there is in Christianity. In Christianity, Jesus Christ is considered the divine figure.



Nev Holder, a retired lieutenant colonel and a member of the Chattahoochee Retired Officer's Association, said that he was glad he came to the lecture.

"It was really in-depth. I learned that the religion is so diverse," said Holder. "This gave me a better understanding about the religion when I read the newspaper or watch television."

Spector, who lives in Jacksonville, Ala., said that he knows at least one of his students at the University of Alabama at Birmingham who has been harassed since Sept. 11.

Spector hopes that the lecture he presented will curb other incidents like this from happening.

"You don't paint the entire religion the same color. That's stereotyping," he said.

It could happen to any one of us. And if it did, wouldn't you pray for someone to help you put your life back together. We're here for Donna for as long as it takes.

Your donation could change a life. Please call us at 1.800.899.0089 or visit www.voa.org.

Protection issues force programs' halt

Public asked not to send letters anonymously

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Military postal officials have reluctantly ended the "Operation Dear Abby" and "Any Service Member" postal programs because of the anthrax threat.

Effective immediately, mail will no longer be accepted for these anonymous-sender programs.

Alan F. Estevez, acting assistant deputy undersecretary of defense for transportation policy, suspended the two programs in a signed Oct. 30 memorandum to the Military Postal Service Agency. The memo formalizes an interim agency suspension issued Oct. 16.

The Dear Abby program, founded by the newspaper advice columnist, Abigail Van Buren, has delivered mail to U.S. service members overseas during the holiday season for 17 years. Any Service Member mail grew out of Desert Shield and Desert Storm, but really cranked up during the U.S. assistance to Bosnia in 1995, officials said.

Both programs let U.S. service members overseas know that fellow Americans support them and appreciate their sacrifices.

A written notice from the Military Postal Service Agency said the most critical issue surrounding these mail programs is personnel safety.

"Both of these programs create an avenue to introduce mail into the system from unknown sources," the notice said. "The recent mail-related attacks have demonstrated the vulnerability of the postal system."

Mail handling has become more sensitive and time consuming, said officials, and the volume of Dear Abby and Any Service Member letters could impact the quality of military postal service and force protection.

Defense Department gives alternatives

Volunteering eases gap left by troops

Department of Defense Release

The Department of Defense today announced new ways for Americans to show support for their service members deployed overseas.

The initiatives, made necessary by a moratorium on mail addressed to "Any service member," provide alternatives to traditional letter-writing campaigns. DoD suggests that Americans support the troops by instead supporting the communities in which they live.

One way to show support is by doing a good deed on behalf of service members. Visit a VA hospital or nursing home, or volunteer in the local community to help make up for service members who normally would volunteer but are now deployed or otherwise too busy with their duties.

Many service members volunteer to coach children's teams, feed the homeless and aid their communities in a variety of other ways. Interested Americans can show their support and honor their military by volunteering in their local communities.

Although many towns do not have a military base nearby, military recruiters are stationed nearly everywhere. Local governments and chambers of commerce are encouraged to reach out to these local members of the military, invite them to speak at community events and encourage members of the community to learn more about America's military.

Members of the community who know military families might want to offer their support by reaching out to those families while their loved ones are deployed.

A number of private organizations are developing Web-based methods for Americans to show support. While donations of food and gifts for delivery overseas can no longer be accepted, interested Americans might contribute instead to military relief societies.

For more information see http://www.defenselink.mil

However, recent mail-related attacks have resulted in additional precautions and the safety of service members is paramount.

The increased manpower required to ensure safe mail handling coupled with the increased volume of mail that letter-writing campaigns generate could exceed capabilities, and therefore cannot be supported at this time.

Normal mail delivery addressed by name to individual service members will continue, uninterrupted.

Air campaign ratchets up against Taliban front line

Ongoing strikes directed against terrorist forces

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — About 80 percent of the air campaign Monday was directed against front-line Taliban and al Qaeda forces, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said.

Air operations included targeting terrorist and Taliban command and control facilities, including bunkers and tunnels. Joint Staff spokesman Rear Adm. John D. Stufflebeem said the efforts included strikes in 13 planned target areas as well as against targets in several engagement zones.

U.S. forces used about 70 strike aircraft. This included 50 to 55 carrier-based strike aircraft, and six to eight each of land-based tactical aircraft and long-range bombers. The strike aircraft are only the tip of the sword, DoD officials said. The number of aircraft sorties doubles if support aircraft such as surveillance and combat search and rescue aircraft are included.

Stufflebeem said the coordination between the pilots and U.S. ground controllers in Afghanistan has improved the bombing accuracy on front-line Taliban positions. The Northern Alliance asked for U.S. advisers.

> "In any conflict, to assure an outcome, you have to take risk. Certainly our forces on the ground are going to be a concern to commanders who are responsible for them."
> Rear Adm. John D. Stufflebeam
> Joint Staff spokesman

"They've asked for support, they've asked for help, they've asked for liaison for the air strikes," he said. "Any time you have people on the ground you will improve the performance."

The risk of putting U.S. service members in place in Afghanistan is a calculated one, he said.

"We are always concerned about the safety of Americans anywhere in the world in a combat environment," Stufflebeem said. "We are taking an element of risk in putting combat forces on the ground, but it's a measured risk. It's a risk that's part of a plan.

"In any conflict, to assure an outcome, you have to take risk. Certainly our forces on the ground are going to be a concern to commanders who are responsible for them."

Stufflebeem said Monday's effort included leaflet drops in the north and east of the country and continued Commando Solo II broadcast missions.

"Two C-17s delivered 34,000 humanitarian daily rations yesterday and brought total to date to 990,000," he said. "If drops go as scheduled today we should reach more than 1 million."

Defense secretary announces homeland defense plans

White holds two other jobs temporarily

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army Secretary Thomas White is currently holding down two other jobs: DoD interim executive agent for Homeland Security and acting assistant secretary of Defense for Special Operations and Low Intensity Conflict.

The temporary appointment as DoD assistant secretary for SOLIC was made by President George Bush Oct. 15.

The appointment was made because homeland security encompasses some aspects of SOLIC such as chemical, biological or radiological threats, White said.

White said his priority will be to make sure American soil is secure against any and all threats.

"I define and view homeland security as having two principal elements," White said.

"First, there is homeland defense, a Department of Defense-led task involving protection of the United States in every dimension — land, sea, aerospace and protection from computer network attack.

"Second is civil support, where DoD provides assistance to a lead federal agency, which can range from the FBI for domestic counter-terrorism tasks to Health and Human Services for biological attacks," White said.

Traditionally, responses to terrorism were handled by the assistant secretary of defense for SOLIC and the director of Military Support within the Department of the Army.

White said construct no longer works. He envisions consolidating the efforts that concern homeland security to avoid gaps and duplications of capabilities.

The streamlining of homeland security will be the beginning of realignments White will make.

He announced Oct. 23 that Department of the Army headquarters would be reshaped to alleviate the problem of separate staffs performing the same functions.

White said he has not lost sight of his full-time job as secretary of the Army.

The Army started out as a homeland organization 226 years ago, he said.

This is not an additional duty, it is an inherent duty, a historical duty, White said.

Homeland security is the most important activity of the Army, White added.

"There are currently 6,000 Guardsmen in over 430 airports around the country, and we have received 70 requests since Sept. 11 from federal agencies for specific types of support," White said.

"Guardsmen are deployed protecting power stations in New York and other critical infrastructures."

Reserve-component soldiers will be used for security as deemed appropriate, but on a short-term basis, White said.

He explained that soldiers guarding airports and malls will not become a fixture of American life.

"There are in the country 11 million state and local first responders across a broad range of activities in homeland security — local hazmat teams, fire departments, emergency medical teams, and so forth," White said.

"They are the first line of defense for homeland security."

and it is with great confidence that we know that this tradition will continue," Abrams said.

In his farewell remarks, Le Moyne thanked soldiers and personnel for their dedication and professionalism and said he and Marion will cherish the friendships they made while he served as commander.

Le Moyne gave a warm welcome to his friend and Fort Benning's newest commander. He described Eaton's "calm professionalism," as just the right leadership quality for the installation.

"Paul has the intellect to grasp the concepts of the future and the compassion for soldiers to be just what we need at this point in time — a gentleman, a soldier and a friend," Le Moyne said.

Le Moyne will move on to Washington, D.C., where he will assume a position as deputy chief of staff of Personnel at the Pentagon.

Eaton's awards and decorations include the Defense Superior Service Medal, Legion of Merit, Expert Infantry Badge, and the Ranger Tab.

Eaton's last assignment was deputy commanding general for Transformation, U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, Fort Lewis, Wash.

He is joined by his wife, P.J.

D Company maneuvers through training

Low crawling at Malone offers challenges

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the sixth story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

How do you move into a good fighting position while being shot at? How do you keep the enemy's head down so your buddy can move?

The focus for D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, this week was to establish the basics for individual movement techniques.

Two hundred trainees learned how to move using the high crawl, low crawl and three-to-five-second rush. All of these movement techniques involve moving with a buddy to get into the correct position.

Monday they practiced and practiced.

"Just when we think we've got it, we do it one more time, just to make sure," Pvt. Lorenzo Gonzalez said.

Tuesday they did the same drills, only this time using live ammunition to lay down covering fire.

"I love getting out there and getting dirty," Pvt. Joshua Butler said, of learning the movement techniques on the sandy course.

Low crawling did present its share of challenges to some trainees. They were a little too enthusiastic about dragging their faces in the dirt and did so literally. The correct way is to turn the head to one side and look out to the right or left, not straight down into the dirt.

The company spent two nights in the field at the Malone Complex after its individual movement technique training. The temperatures dropped to the 30s while they were there.

"It was cold, but we just huddled together and did some extra PT (physical training) to stay warm," said Pvt. Michael Schoolcraft.

This week, D Company also learned how to operate the M-240 grenade launcher and the SAW 249 (squad automatic weapon).

Today they are rappelling off Eagle Tower. Standing 40 feet tall, Eagle Tower is a major confidence boost when completed, said Staff Sgt. Michael Chambers, drill sergeant.

The tower is a new addition to the Infantry Training Brigade. Training on the tower began in September. It was completed in July and is modeled after Fort Jackson, S.C.'s Victory Tower.

Last Friday was the Buick Challenge, which the trainees were allowed to attend in class B's. Prior to the golf tournament, D Company had only one Sand Hill pass for a couple hours.

"It was so nice to be able to leave the company area for a little while and just relax," Pfc. Jeff Chartier said.

The next day it was back to training, running through the military operations in urban terrain site.

Partners share knowledge, power

High school students watch live fire demo

Staff Sgt. Michael Ettman
29th Infantry Regiment

The 29th Infantry Regiment conducted a Hands on Tactical Exercise, a live-fire demonstration, for future battalion commanders and representative from the partners in education Oct. 11.

Spencer High School students and faculty along with Swift Demin Industries employees were able to see first hand the hard work and dedication of the regiment during the HOTEX.

Members of C Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, conducted the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle live-fire demonstration. The exercise was designed to display the composition and firepower of today's mechanized infantry platoon.

Members of the 2nd Bn. gave briefings on various types of weapons and classes on the type of firepower used today in the U.S. Army.

Terri Benson, 11th-grade English teacher from Spencer High School said she was very impressed with the demonstration.

"I thought the size of the Bradley would make it slow," Benson said. Nonetheless, she was impressed with the agility and lethality of the infantry fighting vehicle.

"It was really good, this was my first time seeing military weapons fire," Sahvanna Korves, 9th-grader said.

The battalion commanders and Partners in Education representatives are of particular interest to the 29th Regiment. For future commanders, it shows the array of weapon systems that are inherent to a mechanized platoon and their capabilities.

For the Partners in Education representatives, the event helps foster good relations and lets students know how much their efforts in the pursuit of excellence in education is appreciated by the regiment.

Marshall Berger, an Army retiree and In School Suspension technician, said the benefits to Spencer High School by Swift Denim Industries and 29th Inf. Regt. in the Partnership in Education program is very good.

"(An experience like this is) something that gives a teacher something to take back to the classroom," he said.

"I think that it is a good thing for the 29th and the Army to be involved in helping young students because we are your future," Kristen Ettman, 9th-grade student said.

The demonstration was part of the Partners in Education Action Plan for the 2001-2002 academic year the regiment along with Swift Demin Industries work with faculty and students from Spencer High School in striving to achieve excellence.

First Bradley Transition Course graduates

Class teaches light infantryman basics of vehicle

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Class members of the pilot course for the three-week Bradley Transition Course graduate today.

The Army designed the course, which begins in April with a 40-soldier limit, to bring light infantrymen up to the standard of a gunner or Bradley Fighting Vehicle commander in a mechanized unit.

Light, mechanized and anti-armor infantrymen merged into one military occupational specialty — 11B — Oct. 1. As a result, the Army can station NCOs anywhere in the world, regardless of the unit being light or mechanized.

"The course is an integral part of the current Army transformation and trains light infantrymen, who may never have stepped foot inside a Bradley, the basic knowledge of the fighting system," said Staff Sgt. Gary Welty, writer and instructor, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The class teaches light infantrymen — experts at close range tactics — how they can master long range tactics and kill an enemy they otherwise may not have been able to kill, Welty said.

"The class went well," said Sgt. 1st Class Clarence Lovick, branch chief, Bradley Transition Course.

"Instead of an NCO going directly to a mechanized unit from a straight leg unit, they'll go with a working knowledge of the fighting vehicle.

"There's a lot more to the Bradley than many people think," he added.

"It is very technical. The infantryman who operates it must be technically and tactically proficient. You have to get in there, find the working pieces and know how to operate each one."

The most challenging part of the course is the Bradley Gunnery Skills Test, a group of 14 timed tasks soldiers have to complete to standard in order to graduate, Lovick said.

One task requires soldiers to remove, disassemble, assemble and reinstall the 25-mm machine gun in 20 minutes.

"There are certain steps you have to follow in sequence, and if you miss one, you're a no-go," he said.

Sgt. William Tomlin, of the Ranger Training Brigade and a course student, said the skills test challenged him the most.

"We worked with weapon systems and ammunition that were a lot bigger and heavier than we normally work with," Tomlin said.

"For example, instead of using an 8-pound M-4, we worked with a 254-pound 25-mm," he said.

Another challenge of the course was its pace.

"The instructors gave us a lot of information about the Bradley's features and capabilities all at once," Tomlin said.

"However, they did a good job putting things in play right after we learned it, so we retained the knowledge pretty well," he said.

"The trainers have a solid base knowledge of what is going on," he added. "They impressed me with what they brought to the classroom."

The course is cumulative and culminates at a live-fire exercise, Lovick said.

"The ultimate goal is to see someone who knew nothing about the Bradley step in and fire rounds down range," he said.

Instructors were inside the Bradleys to help ensure accuracy and safety at yesterday's live-fire, and the students did well, he said.

The live-fire opportunity excited students.

"My whole reason for being here was to shoot the 25-mm," Tomlin said.

"There's no point in being here if you can't throw rounds down range," he added.

The Conduct Of Fire Trainer, a Bradley simulator, prepared the men for the live-fire and was a course highlight, he said.

"It's kind of like playing a video game, but it's much more realistic," Tomlin said. "It is an exact replication of the inside of the turret of the Bradley. Everything in there does what the Bradley does.

Sgt. William A. Graves

Sgt. William Tomlin Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Ranger Training Brigade and course student practices Bradley operation in the conduct of fire training Monday.

"You're always on a time crunch, and it forces you to work as a team," he added.

The machine simulates targets, and students have to not only acquire them, they have to shoot them with the correct ammunition in the allotted amount of time.

It factors everything students do, and it gives the teams a grade based on their efficiency. The Bradley commander and gunner have to be on the same page to be successful, he said.

"It's a lot more technical than I thought it would be," Tomlin said.

Nevertheless, the pilot course was mutually beneficial, he said. Students got their feet wet in the Bradley, and instructors worked out some of the course's quirks before the program of instruction starts in April. He is confident the course will meet its objective.

"It's going to have to go well," Tomlin said. "If you spend any amount of time in the Army, you're going to go to a mechanized unit sooner or later. For those units to be successful, this course has to work."

IOBC students trade swords for plows

Soldiers assist Habitat for Humanity

2nd Lt. Nathan Mayo
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Selfless service; it's a concept that most soldiers have been ingrained with. Service is the foundation of the Army. But what some people don't realize is that the Army can give as well as conquer.

It was that spirit that led students from C Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (IOBC), to gather in Columbus Oct. 20 to trade their swords for plowshares and give back to the community.

Dropping their weapons and picking up rakes and shovels, the soldiers volunteered their Saturday to Habitat for Humanity. The soldiers were helping landscape five new homes that the program had constructed.

Construction supervisor Bryan Miller was thrilled to receive the help.

"Without (the soldiers) we wouldn't have gotten nearly as much done," Miller said. "They did in half a day what it would have taken us three days to do normally."

All of this was done in spite of the fact that the IOBC students had just returned the previous day from field training.

"I was a little tired, but I was happy to give my time to the community," said 2nd Lt. Joe Opyd.

The job hardly seemed like work to the hardened IOBC students.

"After being in the field, this was a pleasure to do. The satisfaction in helping others is tremendous," Opyd said.

Habitat for Humanity functions even when no volunteers are present. Contractors build the house. They are assisted by full time AmeriCorps volunteers. They come from around the United States.

If you would like to volunteer for Habitat for Humanity, call 653-6003.

Officer candidates help local charity

Soldiers build sand box for day care

Sparkle Williams, left and Keyonte Mabry get help from officer candidates, Damon Robinson and Daric Wilson on the swing set.

In addition to the normal routine of class work and studies, officer candidates in Class 6-01 went the 'extra mile' and found a community project they felt could make a difference to fulfill part of their curriculum.

"Each class is challenged to do something that extends beyond their own personal or professional development," said Capt. Gregory Glenn, then commander of C Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"We try to teach them to think about others before themselves. These soldiers went far beyond the expectations of that challenge. I am impressed not only with the project they chose, but also with the impact that they have made on the lives of so many others," he said.

The class was given a community list of places that needed help. After research and many phone calls, the class decided to make the Open Door Community House Child Development Center their project.

"They were asking for people to help build a children's sandbox. Their budget was $500 for the materials, but labor costs would have far exceeded that," said Officer Candidate Matthew Pace, class projects coordinator.

The candidates spoke with Kim Jenkins, Open Door Program director, and Sandra Kelly, Child Development Center director, and visited the project site to see what needed to be done.

"The men of Charlie Company accomplished far more than we ever expected. The soldiers gave generously of their time and talents to help children of families in need," Jenkins said.

While building the sandbox, the candidates decided they wanted to expand their community service project.

"We canvassed many of the local stores for donations of materials to build a swing set as well and found a church that was getting rid of a jungle gym set," said Officer Candidate Daric Wilson, assistant projects manager.

Getting a chance to work in the community and do something tangible played a large part in the candidate's decision to accept this project.

"None of us are from around here and we rarely get a chance to meet with the people in the community," said Officer Candidate James Metz. "It was great to get out and meet the kids and the people at the center."

"Soldiers need to be involved with the people in their communities," said Officer Candidate Mark McNamara. "It shows that we are a part of it, even if only temporarily."

"Military families move from place to place and need to feel some sense of belonging," he said.

The project, initially slated to take one day, snowballed into a three day community venture for the volunteers.

More Fort Benning soldiers have called Jenkins wanting to volunteer.

DoD schools are model for nation

DoD focus is on child, staff development

In a recent study reported in USA Today, Defense Department schools ranked at the top of the nation's education system. According to the Oct. 9 article, 227 Defense Department schools are being commended in a report produced for the National Education Goals Panel, calling DoD schools "models for the nation."

Claire Smrekar, the lead researcher of the yearlong study, told USA Today both domestic and overseas DoD schools scored at or near the top of all states in reading and writing on the 1998 National Assessment of Educational Progress. White, black and Hispanic students in DoD schools each scored well compared with peers in other states, and the performance gap between the races was narrower than in public schools.

Smrekar said the success of DoD schools is not widely known.

"One specific point raised during the study is they're successful because they are the children of officers," Smrekar told USA Today. "That's absolutely not the context for these impressive achievements. Most of the children are attached to a family member who's enlisted in the military."

The report stated about 90 percent of the DoD students were the children of enlisted personnel, 35 percent changed school every year and about 50 percent qualify for free or reduced-price lunch, the common measurement for determining children from low-income households.

The report attributed the schools' success to several factors, such as strategic planning, smaller schools, sufficient resources and remaining goal oriented.

Gail Wilson, director of staff development for Fort Benning schools, has been with the post school system for 23 years. Wilson said there are many reasons for the success of post schools, including great parental involvement, sufficient materials and resources and outstanding leadership and community involvement.

"Our schools have always had a good reputation, and therefore have been able to attract high caliber teachers," Wilson said. "We also have high expectations of our children. No excuses are made or accepted.

"Teachers don't just push academics, but they also try to look at the whole child and meet their social and emotional needs, which is especially important for soldiers' children.

"The children have many opportunities to be creative and innovative, and we focus on critical thinking, which means teaching our students how to think and not what to

Students 'KICK' off fund-raiser

Barbecue to be sold at Walmart Nov.12

Dexter Elementary School students are hoping Fort Benning residents will KICK back and relax on Veteran's Day and leave the cooking to someone else.

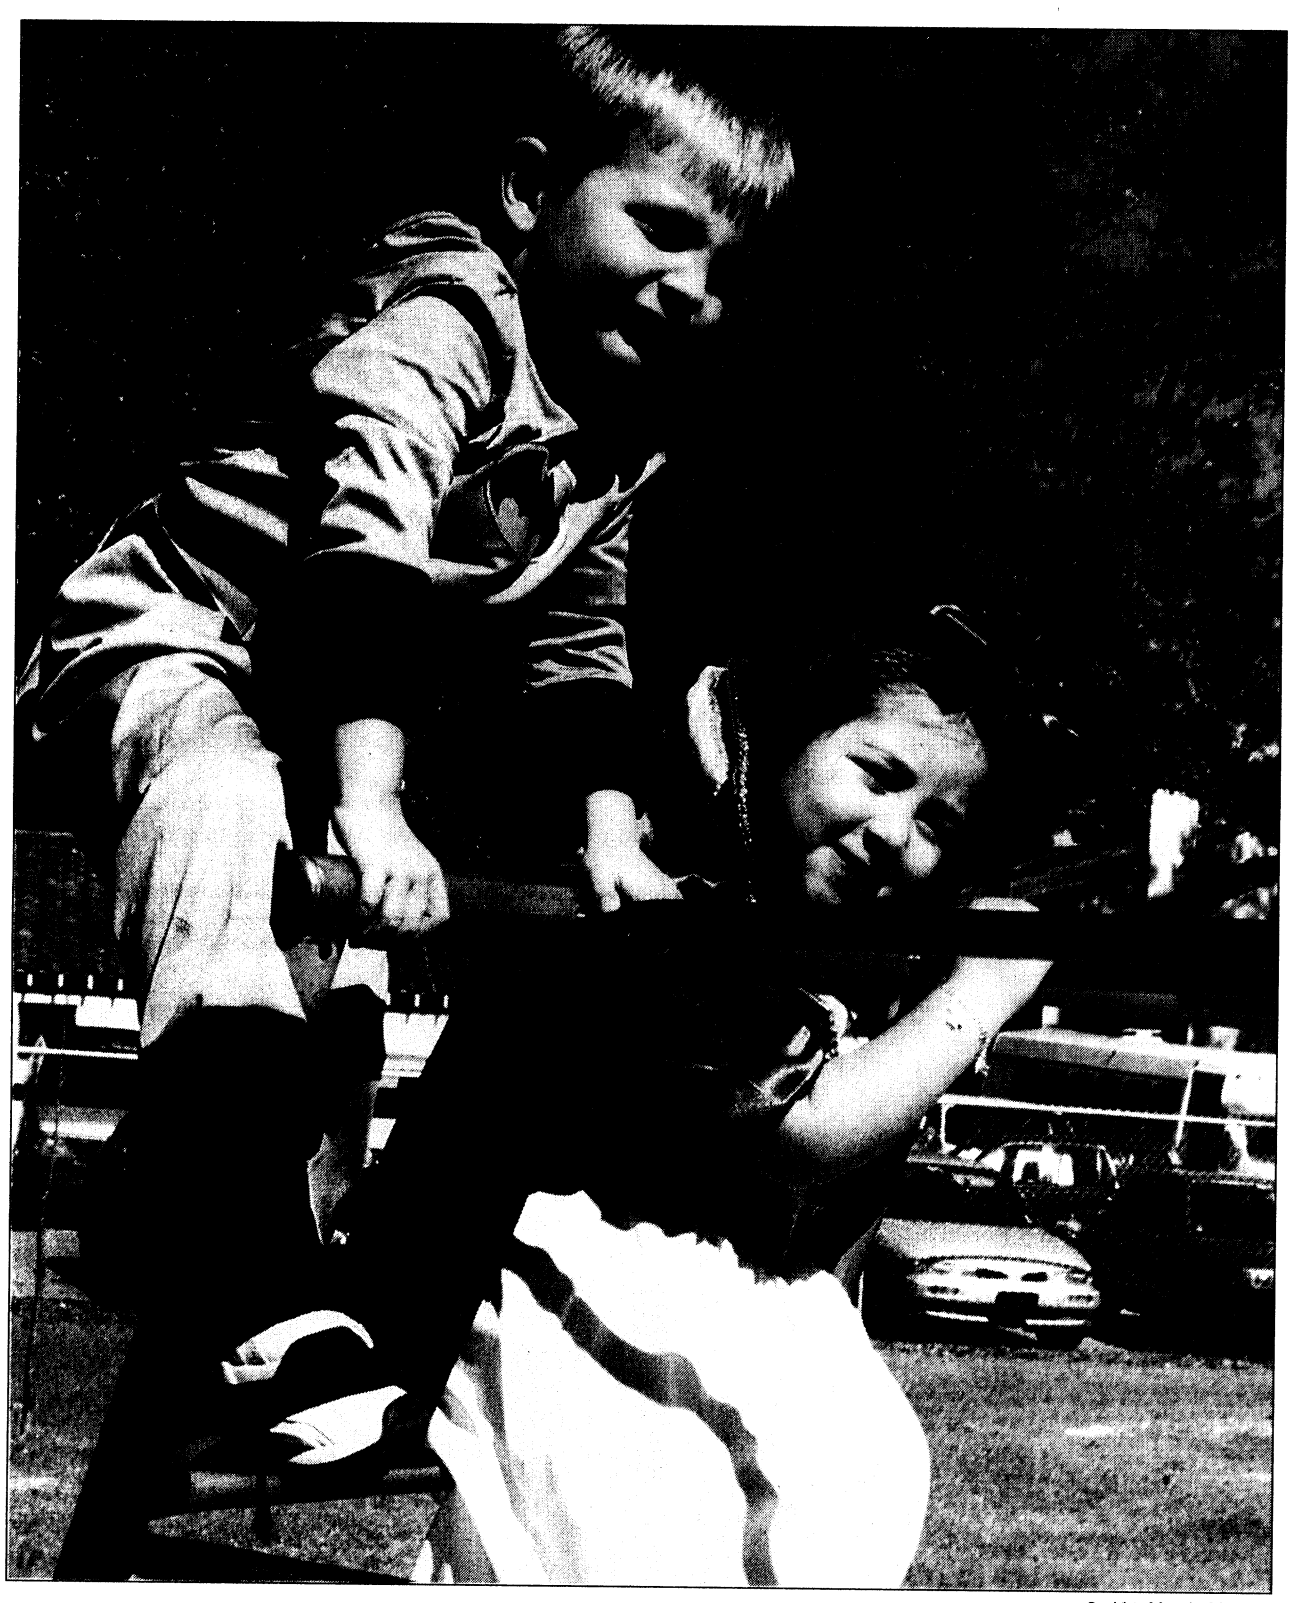
The school's Kindness Club will sponsor Project KICK — Kindness in Caring Kids — Nov. 12 at Walmart on the Airport Thruway in Columbus.

Project KICK is a barbeque chicken dinner fund-raiser, with proceeds going to the Pentagon Disaster Relief Fund in Washington, D.C.

"It's a continuation of our efforts to raise money to help ease the financial burden," said Cy Dietrich, K Club sponsor.

The K Club recently sponsored Project Hero Energy, providing $2,000 worth of high-energy snacks and drinks for relief workers at the Pentagon.

The service-oriented club continues to spotlight the need to support troops and relief workers on the school's in-house television program, and students show an interest in "doing more to help," Dietrich said.



By scheduling the fund-raiser off post on a holiday, Dietrich said the club hopes to reach a larger market.

"We want to raise at least $3,000," he said.

Huckleberry's of Pine Mountain will cook the food on-site. A dinner consists of half a chicken, baked beans, cole slaw and bread, for $7.

For more information about the fund-raiser, to purchase tickets or to volunteer, call Dexter at 545-3424.

Post inducts mayors

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Volunteer Mayors' Association inducted eight new mayors and vice mayors Tuesday evening at the Family Unit Network Center. The mayors were elected Sept. 15 in a postwide election.

Rosetta Darby, the associations' president and mayor of McGraw Manor, said the community mayors will serve as a vital link between post residents and the installation.

"Our job is simply to be a voice for the community, a liaison between the residents and the garrison," Darby said. "The mayors are here to help improve the quality of life on post. We're a resource to find the answers residents need to make them comfortable in post housing."

To that end, the mayors attended four hours of training and met with representatives from post directorates before assuming office. Darby said they will continue to attend monthly training sessions to keep them abreast of changing policies and current issues that may affect post residents.

"We'll keep them informed so they can keep their constituents informed," Darby said.

Sgt. Maj. Ronnie Porter, community life officer, said the mayors will work closely with community life NCOs and the military police, but he cautioned residents not to view mayors as a policing agent.

Teens get new hangout in old gas station

Club Beyond offers fun, fellowship

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning teens looking for something to do may find the answer at Club Beyond.

After six months of renovations, the new youth hangout is up and running.

Club Beyond is part of Military Community Youth Ministries, an international organization working solely with military installations to provide youth activities for junior and senior high school students.

Their new location comes at the hands of post's parents, teens and community directors, Bruce and Neisy Mulford.

"The parents and the teens are the ones who've done all the work," Bruce said. "We never thought things would look like this."

The building that now houses Club Beyond was the original installation gas station,

It was empty for about 12 years before the renovation began in April.

Youth Services donated all recreation equipment, including a pool table and a ping-pong table.

The auditorium is decorated with a Survivor theme and a banner that reads, "Outlove, Outserve, Outlive."

Jonah's Cafe is a place for the youth to get a bite to eat during meetings and special events.

Weekly club meetings include music by an all-teen praise band, games and spiritual lessons.

"We are trying to help teens become more successful, and we throw in a spiritual side to that," Bruce said.

"We want to help them grow closer to the Lord. The real target is to reach those youth that are not involved with a church or youth group at all."

While Club Beyond has only been open for 3 weeks, the post youth group has been around since March 2000.

Jennifer McCarty, 17, said that she started out in the youth group because a couple of her friends were doing it, and things have taken off from there.

"This club is important because it's a place where we can get together, meet new people and share our faith," McCarty said.

"This group offers good Christian fellowship and now a place to be with other kids who love the Lord," said Lt. Col. Stephen Boston, whose children Tiffany, 16, and Ross, 14, helped with the renovation efforts.

"Bruce and Neisy are a great couple with good values, and those values rub off on the kids," Boston said .

But there is still work to be done. Since the building is a historical marker, renovations to the outside are still pending approval. Future plans include a basketball hoop, sand volleyball and extending the hours of the club.

"We have only been in the new building for three weeks, but we intend to eventually be open after school," Neisy said. "We want to provide a place for the youth outside of the church setting so that they feel more comfortable."

Meetings are held every Sunday evening at 4:30 for middle schoolers and 6:30 for high schoolers.

For more information, call Bruce or Neisy Mulford at 545-2359.

Commissary offers college scholarships

Applications available online, at commissary

Bonnie Powell
Defense Commissary Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — Don't be like those holiday shoppers who wait until the last minute. Applications and fact sheets for the 2002 Scholarships for Military Children program are available now at your local commissary and at www.commissaries.com.

The deadline for filing completed applications for the $1,500 scholarships is Feb. 5.

"The response from military families to the 2001 program was fantastic," said Defense Commissary Agency director, Air Force Maj. Gen. Robert J. Courter Jr. "More than 5,000 students applied for the scholarships, and through the generosity of our industry partners nearly 400 scholarships were awarded. We anticipate receiving double the applications and making even more scholarship awards in 2002."

The $1,500 scholarships are funded through industry donations and the program is administered by the Fisher House Foundation through a professional scholarship evaluation company. Fisher House is known for building and donating fully furnished comfort homes near military medical facilities where families of patients receiving medical care can stay at a reasonable cost.

Sons and daughters of U.S. military ID card holders, to include active duty, retirees, and Guard and reserves, may apply for the scholarships. Eligibility of applicants, including survivors of deceased members, will be determined using the DoD ID Card Directive. Applicants may be college-bound high school seniors, or students already enrolled in a four-year undergraduate program. Students must have at least a 3.0 grade point average and write an essay that describes how his or her activities have enriched the community.

"We had great feedback last year," said Scholarship Program manager Edna Hoogewind, "and made two major changes for 2002 as a result."

A military ID may still have to be shown at the commissary for entry due to heightened security, but the ID is no longer needed as proof of eligibility when the application is turned in at the commissary. Applicants will be checked through the Defense Enrollment and Eligibility Reporting System prior to the awarding of scholarships, so sponsors should ensure that their children are enrolled in DEERS prior to applying.

In addition, students who don't live close to a commissary will be able to mail their applications to the nearest store location. Good things do not always come to those who wait, cautions Hoogewind.

"The majority of students wait to turn in their applications at the last minute, and if there is something missing, it might be too late to fix it before the deadline," she said. "Completed applications and attachments are due at your nearest commissary by close of business Feb. 5."

"We advise hand delivery to the nearest commissary or the commissary where you shop regularly, but if you do mail it in, you might want to send it by some form of delivery that requires a return signature," Hoogewind said. "In addition, if the applicant includes a self-addressed, stamped postcard with the forms, scholarship managers will acknowledge receipt of the application."

A permanent link with details on the Scholarships for Military Children program has been added to www.commissaries.com at the "What's New" link there applicants can download the application.

Mayors: Dedicate time, effort

Benning a great place to live, but we have very distinct, separate duties," Porter said. "The mayors are a conduit of information, the first point of contact if a resident has a question or concern, but if it's a complaint between neighbors or a safety issue, they'll be directed to the community life NCOs or the MPs."

Darby said the mayors will work with community life NCOs to make sure neighborhood concerns are resolved in a timely manner. They will also distribute welcome packets to new residents, organize volunteer beautification projects and community activities, attend monthly meetings with garrison officials and plan biannual community townhall meetings.

Though the mayors association is a private organization, it's sanctioned by Fort Benning's Directorate of Community Activities and receives funding from nonprofit organizations like the Soldier and Family Support Association.

The community mayors' and vice mayors' are volunteer positions. Porter said the new mayors can expect to devote between 15 and 20 hours a week to their duties.

"This is a good group," he said. "These ladies volunteer their time because they're dedicated to improving the quality of life in their communities. They're mothers and wives, and their lives are already filled with responsibility, so I take my hat off to them for taking on this awesome responsibility.

"This program can only be as good as the people involved, and we have some really good people involved here," Porter said.

Phyllis Gomez, the new mayor of Custer Terrace, said she believes the success of the mayors program hinges on community involvement.

"I volunteered for this job because I want to feel comfortable in my own community," Gomez said. "I'm confident we have a great group of mayors, but it's going to take neighbors getting involved in their own neighborhoods to make it work for them. We want everybody to feel a part of the community."

The mayors are:

think. You have to teach them how to learn," Wilson said.

Angie McPherson, principal at Lloyd Elementary, has been teaching at DoD schools for 20 years, 17 of which were spent teaching at Fort McClellan. When the post closed, McPherson transferred to Fort Benning, even though transferring means being separated from her husband, who still lives in Alabama.

"DoD schools are the best place to work, and I made the move so that I could continue teaching for them," McPherson said.

"The Department of Defense takes education very seriously, and we truly are model schools. Some parents have shown concern about the quality of education in our schools, but they soon find that the quality is there."

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning schools, said post schools maintain a close relationship with area schools.

"We work closely with the schools to ensure our children are prepared for their curriculum," McMullen said. "We need to replicate those things that work in the schools. That is what it is all about."

Charlotte Stratton,

a third-grade teacher at Stowers Elementary School.

Personal: Stratton has been married to retired Lt. Col. Gary Stratton for 33 years.

Gary still lives in Anniston, Ala., while Charlotte commutes between their Columbus home and Anniston so she can continue to work at Stowers.

They have two sons, Scott and Todd, and a grandson who is in the third grade in Alabama.

Professionally: In 1973, Stratton was part of the pilot pre-K program in North Carolina.

She entered the military schools system at Fort McClellan, Ala.,where she taught for 14 years.

She is in currently her third year as a third-grade teacher at Stowers.

Education: Stratton earned a bachelor's degree in education from the Central Michigan University and a master's degree in education from Jackson State University, Ala.

Teaching techniques: "I always take classes wherever we live. I love science, any area of science study," Stratton said.

That strong interest in science spills over into her own classroom, where "we do all sorts of experiments in the classroom using touch and feel techniques," she said.

Stratton borrows a trunk filled with a wide variety of materials from the Anniston Museum to use as learning and discovery aides in her own classroom.

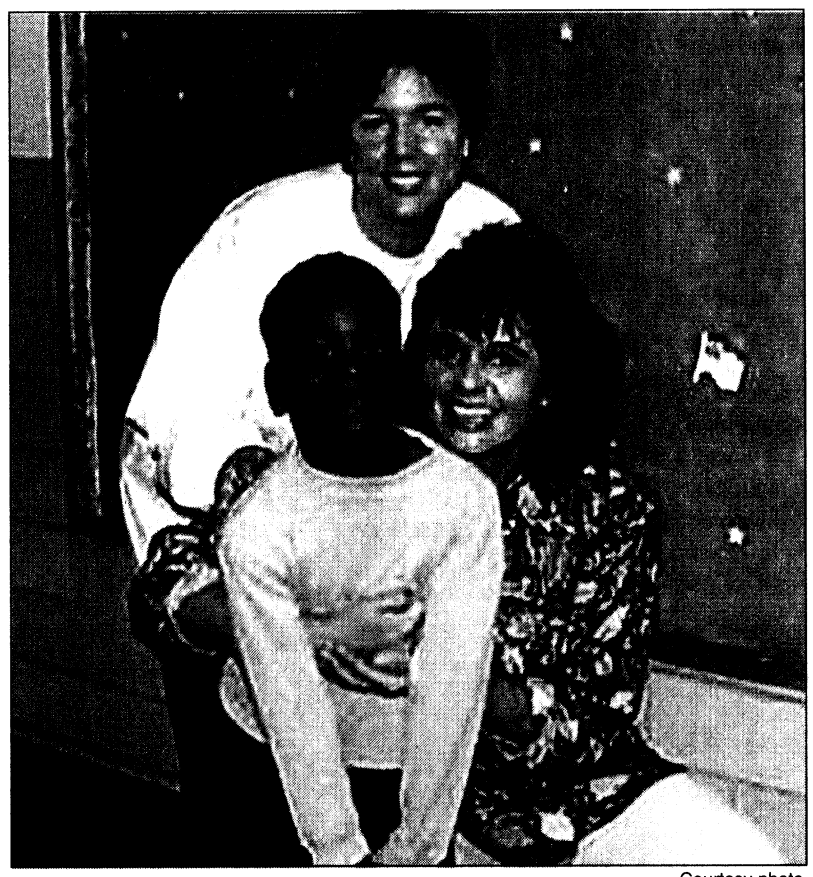
Students: Stratton enjoys teaching third-graders because "this is the transitional year, the students are active and verbal, in constant motion. If you put that to good use, they will do good work."

Personality: Stratton describes herself as shy, and when attending a school gathering, she is not the outgoing person some parents expect, but Stratton does not consider that a hindrance.

"I am very comfortable with children and one-to-one with parents," she said. "And I'm very enthusiastic about teaching. It think parents and students alike know that. My genuine hope is that I can instill my love for learning into the children."

Teaching: Stratton said she loves teaching military children because they come from varied backgrounds and bring a wide variety of personal experiences with them.

They can draw on those experiences to contribute more to any topic covered in class, she said.



"Most any topic we cover in class, someone in this school can share their unique experience," she said.

Other profession: Stratton once considered becoming a nurse and even volunteered as a candy striper during school.

But she quickly discovered she had a fear of needles and became too attached to her patients.

Most rewarding part of job: "When all of a sudden you see the light go on in a student's eyes, and you see them 'get it.' Then they learn to apply what they've learned," she said.

First-graders thank soldiers

McBride Elementary students collect 'goodies' to show their appreciation

Lisa Roush
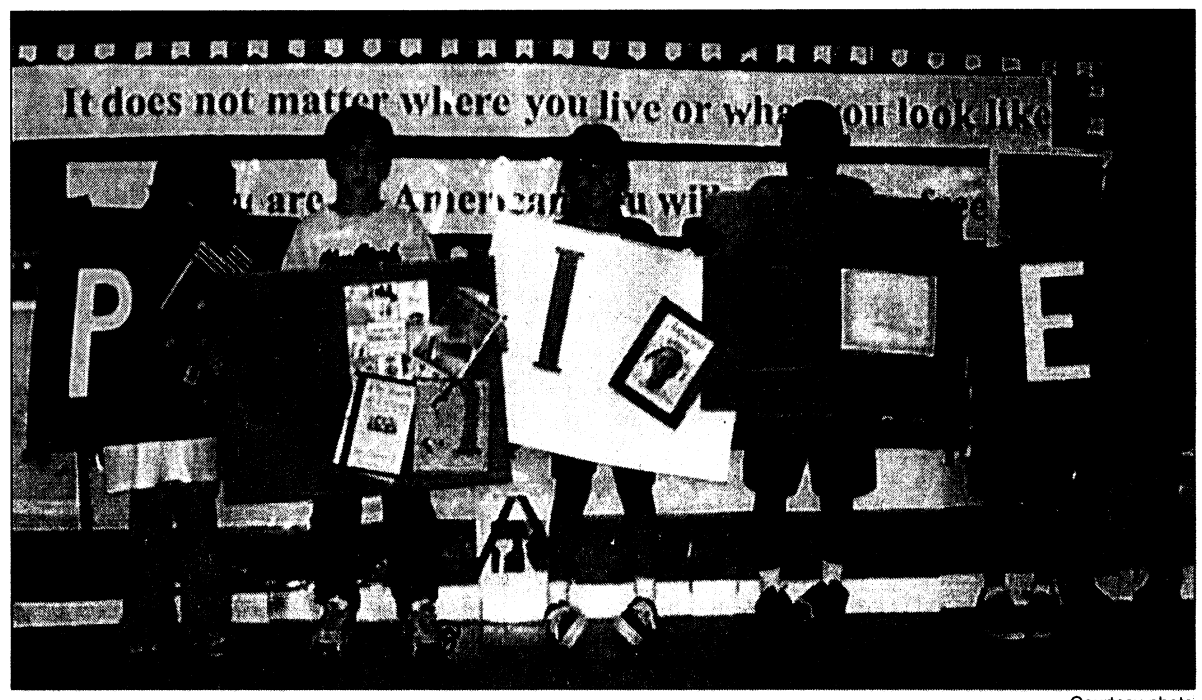
McBride Elementary School

The first-grade students and teachers at McBride Elementary School have noticed the soldiers at the checkpoint near the school.

In class they discussed how important the checkpoints are and how hard the soldiers work to keep us safe at Fort Benning. The students even commented on how the soldiers have to stand out in the cold and the rain to check all of the cars coming on to post.

The students and teachers wanted to thank them for being so helpful and for making them feel safe at school. The first-grade classes encouraged all of the classes at McBride to help them thank "our soldiers." The McBride teachers and students made cards for the soldiers and filled several boxes with "goodies" for them to enjoy while they are working.

"I think it is good to collect things for the them because they are just standing out there all of the time; sometimes in the rain and the hot sun," said Jennifer Fussell.



The McBride family is thankful for all that the soldiers do for them. They are the best.

"They are always standing on their feet. They need a rest," said Austin Goucher. "We need to be nice to them."

Nakeidra Devereaux, Aaron Russell, Jacob Colvin, Sarah Nash and Dominique Austin hold the letters that spell out PRIDE for Dr. Dell McMullen, Fort Benning schools superintendent, during the Patriotic Assembly held at McBride.

The students, faculty and staff at McBride Elementary School have been very busy learning about America as well as the importance of showing their patriotism.

The students have been writing paragraphs and writing sentences and drawing pictures about how proud they are to be Americans. They have been using the Internet and various sources to learn about the patriotic symbols of our country and the meaning of the words in the Pledge of Allegiance. The students have also been practicing many patriotic songs.

"We want our students to realize how important it is to be an American and how important it is to be proud of being a child from a military family," said Del Hicks, the school's principal. "We want the children to respect what America stands for."

In an effort to unite the patriotic lessons from all grade levels, McBride put together a ceremony that included a guest speaker, singing, reciting the Pledge of Allegiance and decorations of red, white and blue.

The speaker at McBride's ceremony was Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning schools. She spoke to the students on the importance of having "PRIDE." She taught the children that "P" stands for "Patriotic," "R" stands for "Respect," "I" stands for "Imagination," "D" stands for "Determination" and "E" stands for "Everybody."

Being an educator, she then explained to the students how they could use each of these characteristics to be successful in life. She went over the meaning of each word and related it to them on their level.

"I thoroughly enjoyed doing the presentation at McBride," McMullen said. "The children were very attentive and very creative. I was very impressed with how well they connected to the concept of PRIDE.

"The students even came up with a better idea for "E" than what I had. They said it should stand for "Environment." I think I will use that one next time."

As a result of the patriotic lessons and the ceremony, the students at McBride were very eager to discuss the importance of being patriotic and the honor it is to be an American.

The following are a few comments made by the students:

Justin Finch said, "Being patriotic is fun. We are all proud to be American."

P. J. Larkin said, "I think it's good that people are hanging up their flags."

Cody Reich said, " I don't like it when people burn the American flag. They need to respect it."

We Do Things The Old Fashioned Way, We Treat You Right

Learn to speak the language of love

Chaplain (Capt.) Michael L. White
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

reflections

"And now faith, hope, and love abide, these three; and the greatest of these is love." (1 Corinthians 13:13 NRSV)

Perhaps the most used and misused word in the English language — maybe even any language — is the word love.

It's frequently used euphemistically for romance, erotica and sex. But it's much more than either of those. It is probably the single greatest emotional need we humans have.

A man once said he wanted what any man wants "to be loved and to be famous." Personally, I'll settle for just being loved. Of course, being loved must translate into feeling loved, or else the sentiment is lost. So, how do we prove our love?

There are a myriad of ways to show love, but each way can be categorized into one of five basic actions, which Dr. Gary Chapman calls "love languages" in his book, The Five Love Languages. Chapman identifies five basic love languages in which we all show love at any given time, but he explains that we will always favor one as our primary love language and a second as our secondary love language.

The five love languages are:

• Words of affirmation. These are words of genuine appreciation for someone, such as, "You are so intelligent!"

• Spend quality time. Quality time is setting aside time for undivided attention for the one you love.

• Give gifts. Gifts refers to the practice of giving gifts, whether purchased or personally crafted.

• Acts of service. Performing tasks for the one you love, whether household chores and maintenance or work or whatever way you can help to show you care.

• Physical touch. Give hugs, kisses, caresses, massages, etc., to the one you love each time you see him.

Naturally, these love languages apply to everyone, not just spouses or lovers. In fact, Chapman has expanded on his original work to include two separate books on love languages as they apply to children and another as they apply to teenagers.

Each book contains detailed descriptions of each love language and how to identify not only your own but others' love language so you can show love in ways that are much more meaningful to those you love. You'll be amazed at the difference it makes in your most important relationships once you begin showing love in the way that is particularly special to the ones you love.

So, what are you waiting for? Start speaking the five languages of love today.

Priorities give meaning, life direction

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

You can tell a lot about a person by the priorities they have. Priorities determine how much time and resources we will devote to accomplishing our goals.

What is your number one priority? Common responses that I hear are: God, family, Army, mission, job and me.

Most people I have talked to agree that God should be first place in their life. This view goes back to the first of the Ten Commandments, "You shall have no other gods before me." (Exodus 20:3)

If God is not first in your life, who or what is? And has that person or thing become a god to you?

Koop

Not as much consensus surrounds the second priority. Most married couples put family or work as second.

I would suggest that family should be our second priority. If we make our job our second priority and our mate and children our third priority, when we retire, we may not have a spouse and family to enjoy.

How tragic for married soldiers to discover when they retire their children resent them as a parent and their spouses are embittered and no longer want to be married.

"Taking care of soldiers," suggests to leaders that soldiers work best when a soldier's family supports the work that their soldier does for the Army.

At times, service to our country will take priority to provide protection and security for our loved ones and our country. Leaders express this sentiment with, "Mission first, people always."

Would you like help setting your priorities? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Colonels compete in Buick's Pro-Am

Soldiers shoot with pros at Callaway

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

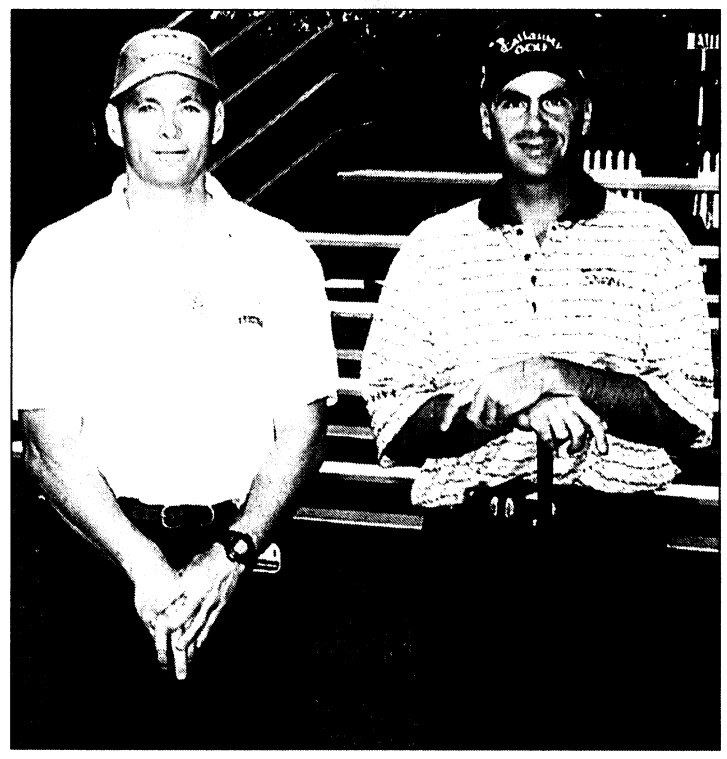
Two Fort Benning colonels participated in the Buick Challenge Pro-Am at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga., Oct. 24.

Col. Edwin Davis, deputy assistant commandant, paired up with Rocco Mediate, pro golfer, and Col. Tom Cole, commander, Basic Combat Training Brigade, played with Steve Flesch, pro golfer. The two also had three civilians each on their teams.

Davis' team shot 11 under par, thanks to the skill of Mediate, said Davis, who entered with a 21 handicap.

Davis said he played well for the first three holes.

"Then, things turned," Davis said. "My usual golf kicked in. I would have a couple poor shots, then a moment of sheer brilliance to keep me in the game."



For instance, he hit a green on a par three, but it was a challenge to stay in the fairways on the longer holes, he said.

"The rough was extremely harsh, and you paid a price when you went in," Davis said.

Another facet of the game on which he needs significant improvement is his approach shots to the green, he said.

Still, Davis said he had a great time.

"Playing with Rocco was extremely rewarding," Davis said. "He was personable, tolerant and a joy to play with. He spent much time giving impromptu golf lessons.

"He had a keen interest in the military, asked a lot of questions, and is a strong supporter of our current military commitment," he added.

Cole's team shot a -16 to tie for fifth place. The colonel, who has a 10 handicap, contributed three birdies in the effort because he kept things in perspective.

"I didn't put any pressure on myself," Cole said. "I looked at what I do for a living and compared golf with the challenges the military presents. Golf is a tough sport, but it's nothing like being a soldier and training soldiers for war. Playing golf with a pro is no big deal.

"I put my mind at ease, and went out there and had an outstanding time," he added. "It was a fun day, and I really enjoyed being apart of it."

The best part of the tournament was the opportunity to represent Fort Benning and play with Flesch against other golfers, he said.

"(Flesch) was a lot of fun," Cole said. "He was a real gentleman and cares a lot about the military."

Flesch played well and was unselfish, he said. For instance, he would take the time to help his teammates read putts.

Cole appreciated the help, especially on the 11th hole. Members of his brigade staff were the hole marshals.

"I wanted to play well in front of them and for the home crowd," he said.

He said he rose to the occasion, but the tournament did challenge him.

"I could have putted better," Cole said. "The greens were really fast. It was hard to get used to their speed and smoothness."

Couple finishes 26.2 mile Marine Corps Marathon

Soldier, wife race in tribute to their friend

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

First Lt. Neil Nunberg and his wife, Grace, didn't think they could run a 26.2 mile marathon, but they did.

"It was painful, but it was worth it," Grace said.

Last Sunday, the couple competed in the Marine Corps Marathon in Washington, D.C., which attracted more than 15,000 runners.

"As an American, it was awesome for Americans to get together and make it through something hard as this," Neil said. "It shows we can also make it through the recent terrorist attacks."

The couple was surprised the race was held because of the recent events.

"I was surprised, but I felt safe at all times," Grace said. "The area was well secured with police officers and Marines."

The couple had trained for the race since March.

"You have to be very disciplined," Neil said.

During the weekday, they would run shorter distances and longer distances on the weekends.

"On the weekends we would run 13 or 15 miles to get our bodies used to running long distances," Neil said.

In addition to training, Grace ate a lot of carbohydrates such as pasta, but Neil didn't.

Grace said there were several reasons for participating in the race.

The first was as a tribute to their friend, Andrew Verdi. Verdi, a volunteer fire fighter in Holbrook, N.Y., was killed in a car accident in May.

"We decided to run in Andrew's memory," Grace said. "This man was an amazing person.

"He would mow people's lawns who had heart attacks, and one time, during our senior trip in high school, he pushed a handicapped child around Washington, D.C.," she said. "That's just the kind of person he was."

The couple wore T-shirts with his name on them, courtesy of A & J Screen Printers in Columbus.

Another reason for competing and training for the race was it gave the couple an opportunity to spend time together.

It also helped Grace lose weight from the birth of the couple's first child, Dominick, who was born last December.

"This definitely helped because I gained 70 pounds while pregnant," she said.

By the time the couple got to Washington, they realized this was going to be a special

USAMU Public Affairs Office

The world-class shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit shot golf balls instead of guns Oct. 25, as the USAMU conducted its third annual USAMU Golf Tournament at the Follow Me Golf Course.

More than 40 unit members, alumni and their guests competed in the 9-hole tournament played on the Lakeside portion of the golf course. The 11 teams competed for an assortment of prizes ranging from golf balls and clubs to food and toys. Outback Steakhouse provided free lunches to the golfers.

The winning team, with a score of 33 (3 under par), was from the USAMU International Rifle Team. Team members were Coach Richard N. Hawkins, Sgt. 1st Class Jerry K. McCoy, noncommissioned officer in charge, and shooters Spcs. Shane M. Barnhart and Trevor D. Gathman.

The second-place team, which also had a score of 33 but lost first place in the tie-breaker, was made of up of Shotgun Team members Sgts. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery and Bret E. Erickson and Pfc. Mark L. Weeks and Staff Sgt. Eric G. Daniels of the International Pistol Team.

Dulohery won a prize for the nearest to the pin shot on hole number 8, former USAMU shooter retired Master Sgt. Loyd G. Crow Jr. won for the nearest to the pin shot on hole number 6 and Ray Meredith of the golf course won for the longest putt.

"It was a great tournament; we had a lot of fun," said Hawkins who was the winning team's captain. "We golfed a little better than we usually do; I personally did anyway. We made some nice long putts, and Gathman made some fantastic chip shots.

"We were watching the shotgun shooters because they really had the best team, and we thought they were going to win," he added. "I was very surprised that we won. We got pretty lucky. We're just glad we didn't come in last."

The golfers paid $25 to compete, which included the Outback lunch, beverages, greens fees, golf carts and a pizza dinner by Papa John's.

Everyone greatly enjoyed the competition and there were many requests for another tournament in the spring, said USAMU Headquarters Detachment Commander Capt. Kimberly N. Howe, who organized the tournament

"The golf tournament is a great morale builder for our unit," Howe said. "The soldiers from our different shooting teams never get to compete against each other so it was a lot of fun for them. There's a lot of rivalry between our shooting teams, and this gives them a chance to challenge each other, while at the same time enhancing the esprit de corps of our unit."

Couple: Runs Marine Corps race for friend, fire fighter

"It was incredible. It was cold outside, but you could feel the warmth from everybody," Neil said.

Grace agreed.

"We met the most wonderful people," Grace said. "Spectators were out there cheering us on, yelling for us and slapping our hands. I can't even begin to explain the camaraderie. I was in tears."

But, throughout the race, there were times both wanted to quit.

"By mile 22, it was a mental game," Grace said. "It was painful. You have to psych yourself up to finish."

"By mile 18, I was pretty bad off," Neil added. "What got me through was running behind a man with a T-shirt that said 'Don't Quit.'"

The pair thought they did well for their first time running a marathon.

"Our goal was to finish, which we did," Neil said.

Grace passed Neil in the race and finished in 4 hours, 37 minutes. Neil finished in 5 hours, 8 minutes.

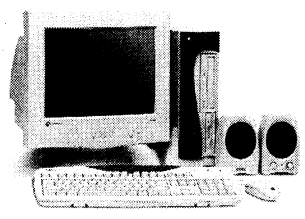
"I knew she was going to beat me," he said.

Neil said that Grace was able to train more since he was deployed for two months with the border patrol project in Douglas, Ariz.

"I wasn't set on breaking a record," Neil said. "The whole experience is the most important. I just wanted to run the race and say 'I did this,'" Neil said.

For completing the race, they were awarded a medal and T-shirt.

Both Neil and Grace, who have been married 3 1/2 years, have always been athletic. Before this marathon, the couple had participated in 5K and 10K races.



They also participated in sports in college.

Grace, 26, played field hockey at Hofstra University in Long Island, N.Y. Neil, 28, executive officer for the 63rd Engineer Company, played intramural sports at the U.S. Military Academy.

They plan to run a half marathon at Disney World in January, and both may run in the Marine Corps Marathon again. "We're open to it. I know I would do it again," Grace said.

Post prepared for annual protest

Golden Park to host demonstration

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

School of Americas Watch will hold its annual demonstration at Golden Park in Columbus this weekend, but both Fort Benning and city officials have prepared for the group to march to the post.

The post's response will be the same as for any other group threatening to march onto Fort Benning for a partisan political protest, said the Fort Benning staff judge advocate.

"The issue here is the authority of this commander or any commander to protect his or her installation from drunk drivers, thieves or prohibited partisan political demonstrations," Col. Dick Gordon said.

Gordon said SOA Watch has the right to demonstrate against the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, but not on Fort Benning. He said in the past SOA Watch demonstrators have acted as if they have the right to disrupt traffic, deface property, plant signs and carry wooden coffins.

"There's no Constitutional right, congressional act or federal statute that gives them the authority to do that," he said. "In fact, there are a large number of cases, all the way up to the United States Supreme Court which have upheld the authority of a commander to protect his or her installation from such demonstrations, to avoid the military from getting involved in politics."

The prohibition applies to all political organizations, regardless of their cause.

SOA Watch, created by Father Roy Bourgeois, a Maryknoll priest and former missionary to South America, began demonstrating against the School of the Americas at Fort Benning in 1990. The school was closed in December 2000.

The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation opened in January as a Department of Defense organization. Its mission is to educate military, police and civilians

Kid Butler remembers Bulge

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"Butler (was) a dandy lad, full of zip and tobasco,"

Ross. S. Carter, author of Those Devils in Baggy Pants

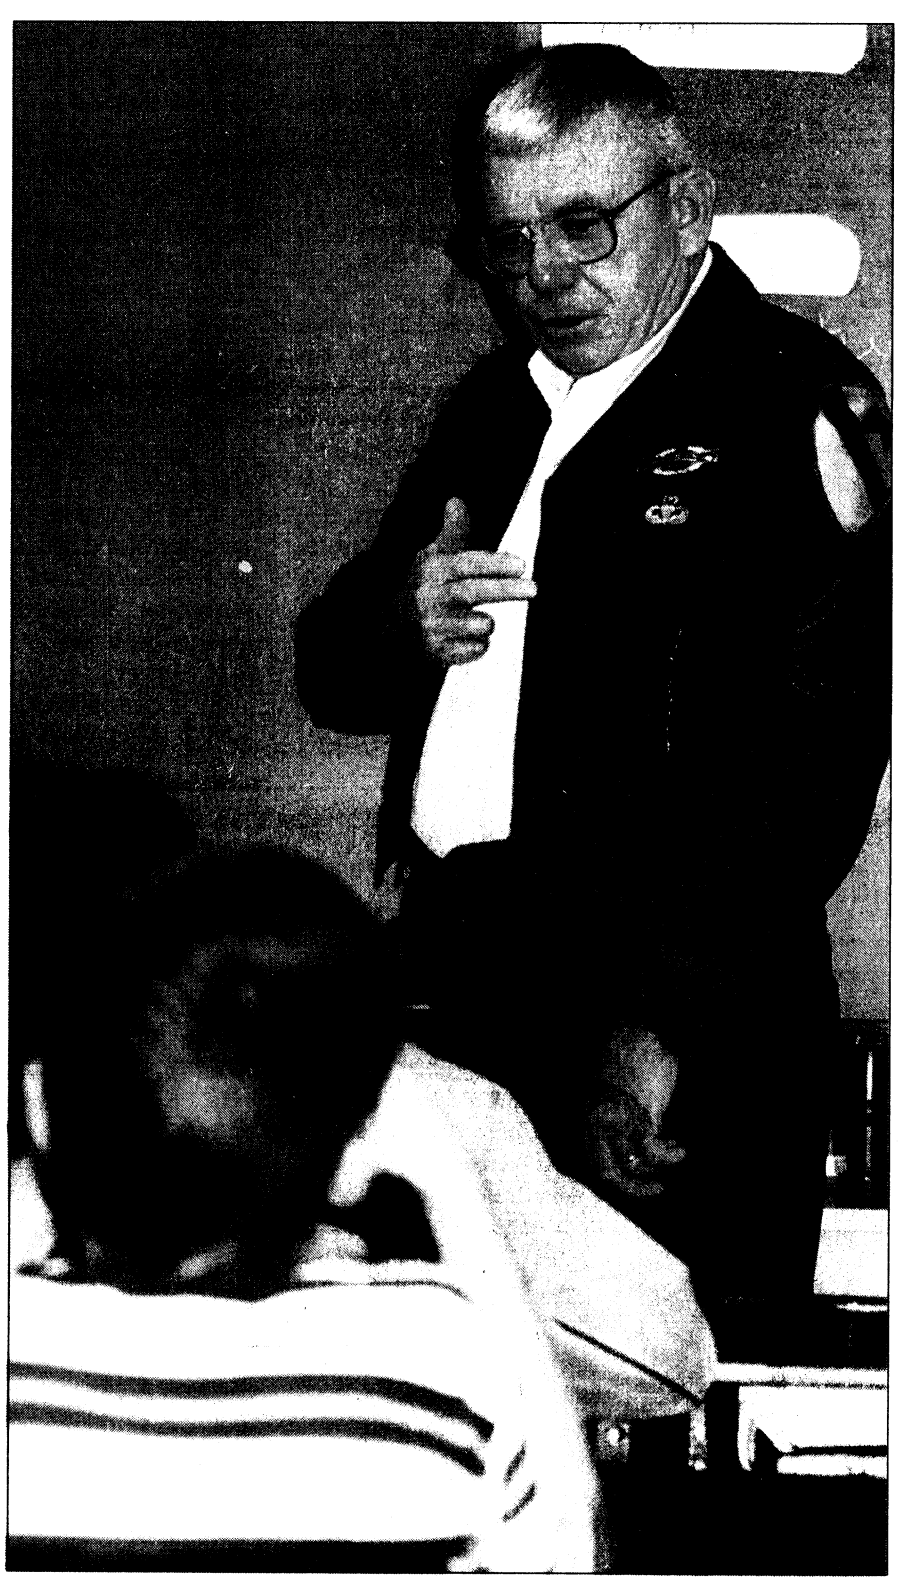
They called him "Kid Butler," the newest and youngest member of the 3rd platoon, C Company, 504th Parachute Regiment. He'd barely started his senior year of high school when his number was called, and 18-year-old Charlie Butler, a newspaper delivery boy from Bessemer, Ala., became Pvt. Charlie Butler, infantryman.

The day a studio photographer came from Birmingham to photograph the Bessemer High Senior Class of 1944, Pvt. Butler was making his final training jump at the Fort Benning Parachute School, now the U.S. Army Airborne School.



Three months later he jumped into Holland with the 82nd Airborne Division.

"I was too young and too naive, I didn't know enough to be scared," said Butler, recalling his combat initiation 57 years ago, as C Company led an assault on the bridge of Nijmegan. The 20 millimeter anti-aircraft rounds that whizzed overhead fascinated the young man who used to while away summer afternoons in Bessemer concocting recipes for home-made fire-crackers.

"It was like a great big fireworks display. I looked up to get a better view, and I got hit with shrapnel right here," he said, pointing to a scar on his forehead, just above his left eye.

In an instant Butler gained a Purple Heart and a healthy respect for war.

Soldier dies in Kosovo

Spc. suffers cardiac arrest at Bondsteel

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

A 25-year-old, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment soldier died Nov. 1 at Camp Bondsteel, Kosovo.

Spc. Jason Weber, from Onondaga, Mich., died of cardiac arrest.

He served at Camp Monteith, Kosovo, as a Bradley Fighting Vehicle systems mechanic.

"Specialist Weber was an exceptional soldier who served his country for more than two years," said Lt. Col. Joseph Southcott, executive officer, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Inf. Division. "Specialist Weber's service, dedication to duty, and professionalism will be missed by his friends and comrades in arms."

Weber enlisted Feb. 17, 1999, and went to basic and advanced individual training at Fort Knox, Ky. His first duty assignment was with 4th Bn., 7th Cavalry Regt., in the Republic of Korea. He joined 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., Nov. 20, 2000.

The battalion, which deployed last month, is supporting the 10th Mountain Division in peacekeeping operations.

Weber is survived by his 7-month-pregnant wife, Shalon, and children Mallory, 7, Emaleigh, 5, and Aleczander, 2.

Autopsy results are pending.

14th Field Hospital returns from Egypt

Attacks on U.S. left soldiers shaken, unsure

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Members of the 14th Field Hospital returned to Fort Benning this week from a two-month deployment to Alexandria, Egypt. The mission of the 89 soldiers was to set up and maintain a 504-bed hospital that provided medical support to the joint and coalition forces participating in Bright Star.

Approximately 23,000 U.S. personnel took part in Bright Star, a training exercise conducted every two years in Egypt.

"It was a constant learning experience," said Sgt. 1st Class Donald Richards, noncommissioned officer in charge, 14th Field Hospital. "After the events of Sept. 11, we originally thought the exercise would be canceled. But we are the United States, so we maintained our business as usual."

The advanced group had the toughest job of all. They had to go into Alexandria and stake out a location for the hospital, Richards said. Sixteen soldiers were the first to arrive in Egypt on Sept. 5, just six days prior to the terrorist attacks on the U.S. Since they did not have constant media access like most Americans at home, many were in disbelief of the events of Sept. 11.

"The living conditions were pretty primitive, so we didn't have access to television or radio," Spc. Derek Richardson said.

"We thought it was war play and a part of our mission, so we didn't initially believe the news," Pfc. Richard Crews said. "No one really knew what was going on."

"Once the news sank in, I was dazed, and couldn't think about what I was doing," Spc. Jeff Martinolich said.

"It was surely a trying time for them," Richards said. "There was so much uncertainty here at home, I am sure it was even more uncertain for them."

The tricommunity celebrated Veterans Day with a ceremony Nov. 9 at the Columbus Government Center.

Protest hinders post security

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

commentary

Every November for the past 11 years, the Rev. Roy Bourgeois and the SOA Watch has protested at the gates at Fort Benning.

I don't agree with why they're protesting, but I agree they have a right to do so because of the First Amendment. However, they don't have the right to protest at Fort Benning.

What troubles me is that members of the organization don't know what they're protesting about.

The protesters say the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation trains students to kill civilians in Latin American countries, which is absolutely false.

SOA Watch hasn't taken the time to find out about WHINSEC. They won't call for information or visit the institute to find out what happens during the day-to-day operations.

What continues to disturb me is SOA Watch plans to protest this year even in light of the terrorist attacks and increased security on post.

What are they thinking?

I know the protests have been peaceful the last 11 years, but you never know when something can go wrong.

The SOA Watch and Fort Benning have both been very lucky so far, and I do not want something to happen now.

That's why I don't understand the reverend's logic for coming this year. He said the organization had to be here. People are still grieving from the Sept. 11 attacks. Our soldiers need to be doing their jobs and continue training in case they are deployed. They don't have the time to look after protesters.

In the past, other groups not related to the SOA Watch have joined in the protests. SOA Watch cannot prevent these groups from joining them. Furthermore, they don't know who they are or what they may do. And if something happens, SOA Watch won't accept the blame.

I don't understand the purpose of the protests.

They want to shut the institute down. But Fort Benning cannot shut the institute down, only the Department of Defense or Congress can. Congress and DoD are more focused on the war on terrorism, not closing WHINSEC. It's amazing what the protesters will do for their cause.

They need to find out the complete truth before they come to Columbus. Obviously if the institute is offering them the chance to tour and learn about their facility, what is the institute trying to hide?

Instead of protesting at Golden Park and then marching to Fort Benning, I suggest SOA Watch protesters spend their time and money helping the victims of the terrorist attacks or volunteering in their local community.

Family's welfare first on soldier's mind

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

commentary

When I first entered the service, my recruiter, Sgt. 1st Class Randy Nance, told me there are three things not to mess with when it comes to keeping a soldier happy — pay, food and family.

While pulling my first-ever 24-hour staff-duty assignment, I was able to apply the three "importants" to another soldier's life. I received a disturbing phone call about 2 a.m.

The caller — "Jane," was trying to get information about her brother-in-law, "John," who was returning to the states on emergency leave from Kosovo.

Jane's sister and John's wife, "Darlene," had been physically assaulted earlier in the week.

Jane didn't go into detail as to what type of injuries her sister had sustained, but she was obviously upset.

John had been able to get a flight into the Columbus airport almost immediately after receiving the Red Cross message.

Outstanding, right? Not to Jane and Darlene.

John is stationed at Fort Stewart, Ga., and there were no planes traveling to the post that early in the day, nor did John have the money to buy a bus ticket.

John was stuck in Columbus while his recovering wife sat at Fort Stewart, anxiously awaiting his arrival.

Jane said she was disappointed with "the system."

"I'm not in the Army," she said. "I don't know very much about it, but I don't like it very well right now."

She said the Red Cross told her, "We got him to the Eastern seaboard, now it's his responsibility to get home."

Jane asked if the Army is really concerned about its families.

Jane's situation stayed on my mind the remainder of my duty. I wondered if she and Darlene had been able to find John a ride home or if they had to go get him.

Most of all, I wondered if Jane would ever really have an appreciation for the Army and its concern for families.

As a soldier, I know it is every leader's best intention to take care of a soldier's family as best as one can, but often, the family is overlooked — especially during stressful situations, such as deployments.

Military Family Week gives leaders the opportunity to take a moment to think about their soldiers and the soldier's family and how they can help make family life a little smoother.

The week is a time for each of us to take a few moments to recognize the people who possibly have the hardest jobs in the Army. Mothers, wives, children, husbands, fathers and many others, without reservation, stand beside their service members everyday and support them in their daily duties.

It's time to salute those who send their loved ones to defend our freedom and way of life, and soldiers, like John, who have to return from deployments.

My hope is Military Family Week will serve as a special reminder to do what's right for soldiers and their families.

Bush praises members of armed forces

I am proud to offer my sincere thanks to the brave wives, husbands, children, and other family members of our soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines during Military Family Week.

Many military families serve our country by sacrificing personal comfort as their loved ones help protect our Nation.

The men and women who serve in America's military depend on their families for solace and strength.

They need this as they defend our people and our interests around the world.

Your active support of our service members plays a vital role in our national defense.

You are making our country's Armed Services the finest in the world.

As we work to eradicate the evil of terrorism, military families must continue to meet their distinctive challenges with the American spirit of honor and courage.

Your selfless dedication to your loved ones and to our country sets an example of patriotism of all Americans to follow.

Laura joins me in sending our prayers, gratitude and best wishes.

Commander-in-chief

Post celebrates Military Family Week

Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program wants to remind everyone Military Family Week is celebrated during the Thanksgiving holiday period.

We would like to take this time to express our appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by service members and their families in our community.

In the daily press of activities, which characterize our modern lives, we often miss opportunities to express our appreciation to those who make special contributions.

To amend that oversight, we take this opportunity to salute all military families.

Military families, who live in our community--both on base and off--are separated from their hometowns and friends.

They are also frequently separated from each other because of military duties.

We, as civilians, should value and commend every soldier's contribution and celebrate during this week.

To show our appreciation, the ACS Family Advocacy Program will set up a display at Building 2624 Nov. 19-21 with educational materials for active-duty soldiers, spouses and children.

For more information, call 545-3344.

Army continues tracking program

DoD suspends $100-a-day pay requirement

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTION — The Army will continue to track individual deployment days, even though special high-deployment per diem has been suspended.

An Oct. 8 Department of Defense memorandum directed the services to continue tracking deployment days when it suspended the requirement to pay $100 a day to soldiers deployed more than 400 days in a rolling 730-day window.

The high personnel tempo payments were suspended due to the national emergency declared by President George W. Bush following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Had the high PERSTEMPO per diem not been suspended, the first payment might have been due Nov. 5.

"I want to dispel the misconception that the Army will no longer track PERSTEMPO deployment days," said Maj. Denise McCann, PERSTEMPO action officer, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"That misconception is out there because of the incorrect wording of a newspaper article that stated the services are no longer required to track deployment days with PERSTEMPO. While we have suspended tracking deployment days for payment purposes, we will continue to track deployment days for (personnel) management purposes."

Required by the 2000 National Defense Authorization Act, the services initially began tracking deployment days Oct. 1, 2000.

The law said service members deployed more than 400 days in a rolling 730-day window would receive $100 for each day beyond the 400-day threshold. However, the law also allowed PERSTEMPO requirements to be modified in the event of a declared national emergency.

In addition to the suspension of the requirement to track accumulation of individual deployment days for the purpose of determining high deployment per diem eligibility and the per-diem itself, general officers are no longer required to personally manage soldiers approaching the high deployment threshold within their command.

"The continued tracking of PERSTEMPO data is important because the PERSTEMPO Web-based application is the Army's only individual deployment database," McCann said. "That database can be very valuable in developing after-action reports to see just how many soldiers it took to accomplish a specific mission or operation."

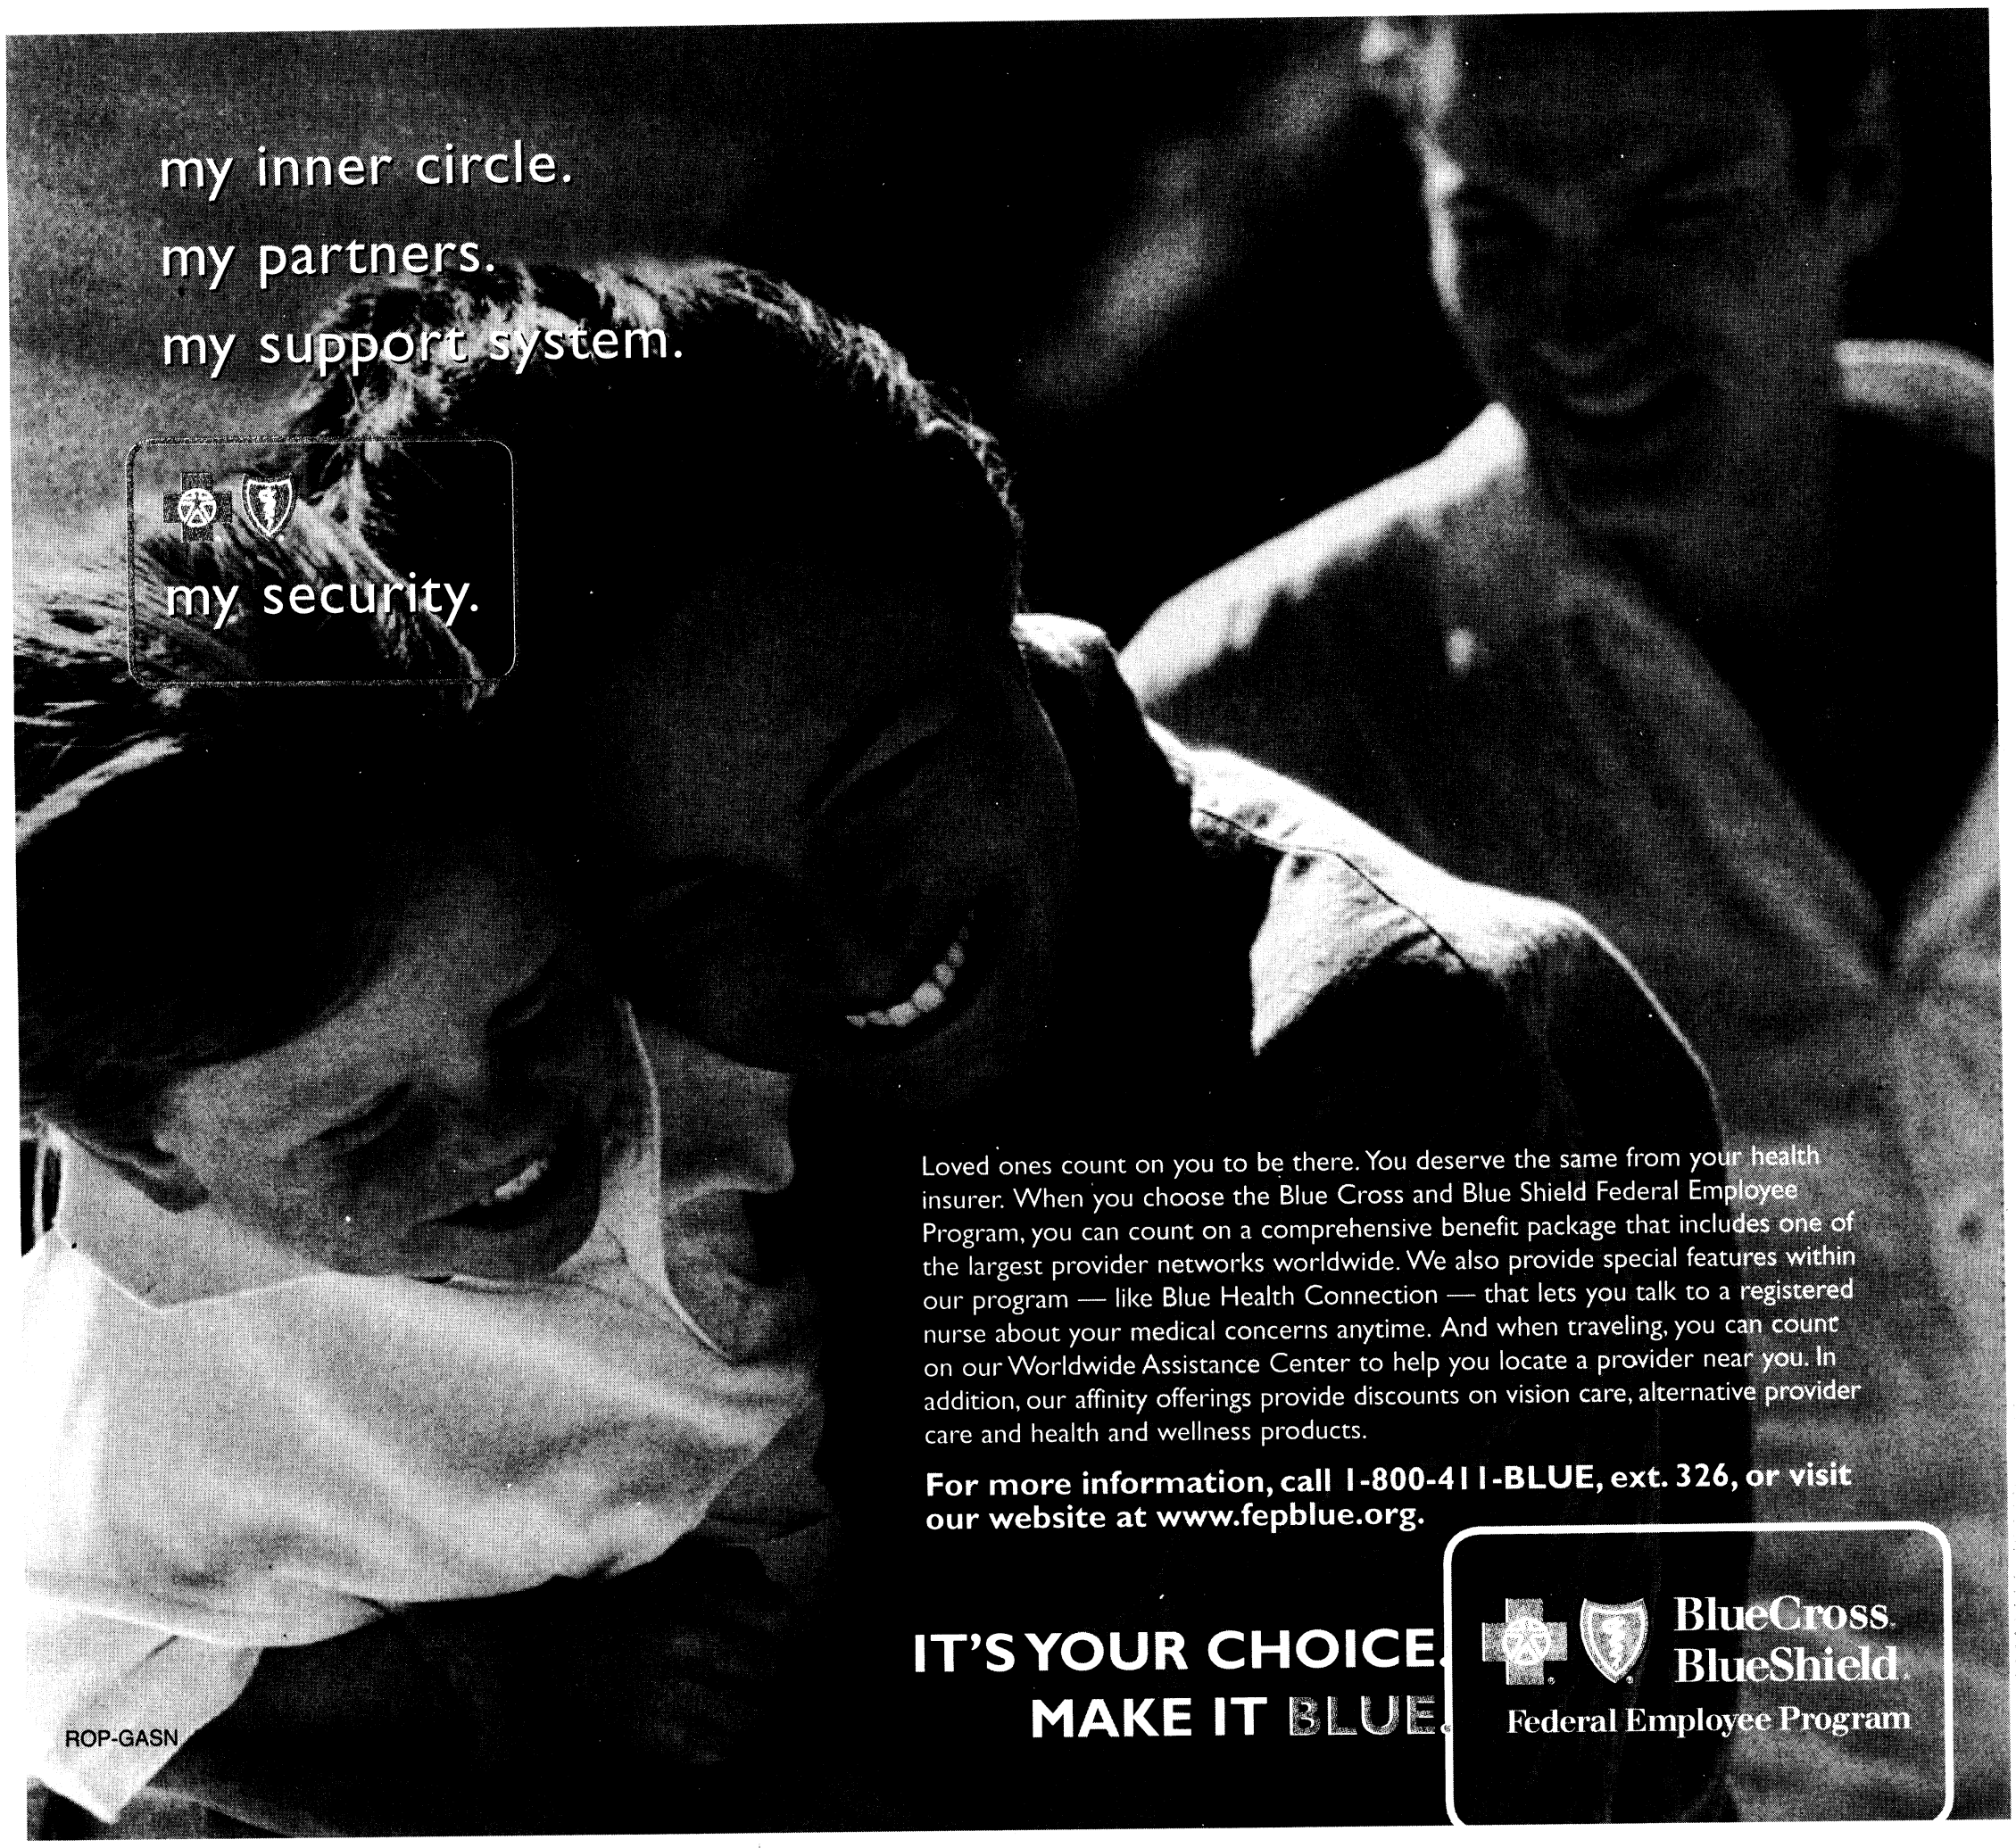
When the national emergency is over, McCann said, the PERSTEMPO per diem waiver will be lifted.

She said an interservice PERSTEMPO committee is considering the specifics of how the deployment day counter will be reinstated.

Currently, the law states the deployed days were counted for management purposes out of a 365-day rolling window and for payment purposes out of a 730-day rolling window.

The suspension could be lifted sooner if Rep. Cynthia McKinney has her way.

A member of the House Armed Services Committee from Georgia, McKinney introduced a bill Oct. 23 to remove the PERSTEMPO suspension authority. While the proposed bill has been introduced, a hearing on it has yet to be scheduled, said Eric Lausten, a legislative assistant to McKinney.



Soldiers' November Leave and Earnings Statements will reflect the suspension of the PERSTEMPO clock with the following in the remarks section: "Effective 8 October 2001, the accumulation of deployment days for purposes of determining high deployment per diem is suspended."

Community reminded of protest facts

Institute part of DoD' s broader focus

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC

As the annual round of protests by the School of the Americas Watch nears, the Fort Benning-Columbus community should be reminded of the facts and avoid being overcome by the misplaced emotions harbored by protesters against the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, the military, U.S. foreign policy or globalization.

Despite continued claims by SOA-Watch protesters, the U.S. Army School of the Americas closed last year in December. The only thing the new institute, a joint-service endeavor, has in common with USARSA is the Latin American students it trains.

The SOA Watch made the School of the Americas its focal point and accused the school of misconduct in training.

These accusers have now found a new focus in WHINSEC.

While the USARSA was key in helping foster stability in Latin America for decades, a broader focus was needed to compensate for changes in U.S. foreign policy in the region.

"The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation is entirely different.

"I call it a new institute for a new century," said Col. Richard

analysis

D. Downie, institute commandant and former chief military liaison at the U.S. Embassy in Mexico City with a Ph.D. in International Relations.

Since Jan. 17, providing professional education training for military officers, NCOs, law enforcement personnel and civilians from participating democracies in the region, the institute, has been shouldering a key role in U.S. national security and that of neighboring countries as well.

Evolving strategy in national security has demanded increased emphasis in engaging and collaborating with fellow democracies to face 21st century challenges.

"Now, our governments, our law enforcement authorities and our civic institutes must find ways to work together at all levels and more cooperatively than ever before, take concrete steps to tighten border controls, enhance air and seaport security, improve financial controls and increase the effectiveness of our counter-terrorism forces," U.S. Secretary of State Colin Powell said to the Organization of American States — commonly referred to as the United Nations of the Western Hemisphere — in the wake of the Sept. 11 attacks.

Security cooperation is one of many fronts in the war on terrorism that is proactive in its approach.

After all, having sound international relations with the militaries, police forces and the civilian personnel within them is pivotal and can mean the difference between stopping a threat outside U. S. borders instead of within.

Through its mission of education engagement with military and law enforcement agencies of the hemisphere, the institute is addressing the rise in non-traditional threats, such as terrorism, money laundering, transnational crime, illicit drugs, regional conflict, and smuggling.

"In spite of the recent attacks, peace, prosperity and democracy and an unprecedented stability have been achieved in the Western Hemisphere in the last two decades because of engagement and international trust," said George Bruno, former U.S. ambassador to Belize and visiting diplomat to the institute.

With these intentions, the institute provides a forum for multinational dialogue on professional subjects in an environment of academic freedom, while fostering personal as well as professional relationships between military, police and civic leaders of the region.

"I place great emphasis on our congressionally mandated mission that focuses on the promotion of democratic values such as the advancement of human rights and the rule of law.

"The institute offers the most extensive human rights training of any school in the Department of Defense," Downie said.

Institute: Prepares for SOA-Watch demonstration

from the Western Hemisphere in how democratic governments should be operated.

Yet SOA Watch continues its demonstrations. The group said it expects 10,000 demonstrators to show up this year.

The Columbus Ledger-Enquirer reported on a recruiting session Bourgeois had with about 35 students at Emory University in Atlanta Nov. 9. He told them there would not be a five-mile walk from Golden Park. Instead he said they will meet at a location closer to Fort Benning and walk from there.

If they do try to get onto Fort Benning, the post's military police and Department of the Army civilian police will ensure they don't get far, said Col. G.T. Myers, director of Public Safety.

"We have a number of contingencies set up, and those differ from year to year as to where the people will be met and stopped," Myers said.

Myers, in his second year at Fort Benning, said protesters have been nonviolent in the past. But they resist apprehension by lying limp on the ground.

"I've had a couple of Army civilian police and a couple of MPs suffer work-related injuries from having to lift and carry these limp protesters some distance," Myers said.

"Last year about 3,500 came on post," he said.

"About 1,800 were detained because they were engaged in partisan political protest, they were defacing government property or they were not cooperating with authorities."

The 1,800 were taken through the processing center on Fort Benning. Those who had not trespassed on Fort Benning or were barred from the installation before were given "ban and bar letters" from the commanding general, denying them access to the installation for at least five years.

"About 1,700 were simply taken off post and released without being charged," Myers said. "Most of them were people who had young children with them.

"In atrocious winter conditions, it was in the 40s with rain, our concern was to get the children out of the elements before they were unduly exposed."

Protesters who received ban and bar letters were referred to the U.S. Attorney for the Middle District of Georgia for prosecution in federal district court. The U.S. Magistrate eventually tried 26 protesters and 24 of them received sentences of six months in jail.

"We work closely with the U.S. Attorney for the Middle District of Georgia in Columbus to prosecute those individuals who were either barred before, or who committed some other offense on the installation," Gordon said.

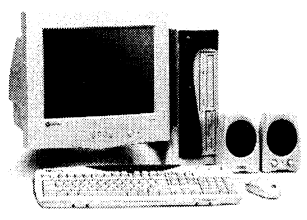
He said he has talked with many demonstrators at the entrance to the post and most of them were demonstrating for their pet issues, rather than against WHINSEC.

"Last year you had people protesting on behalf of animal rights. They were protesting against the World Bank and other issues, including alleged American economic oppression in Central and South America. We had people protesting against discrimination to gays and lesbians, people protesting against nuclear power, you name it," Gordon said.

At Fort Benning for three years, Gordon said in his first demonstration experience two years ago he was struck by protesters' belief they were above the law.

He said the senior federal judge for the Middle District of Georgia during the sentencing of several protesters seemed inclined to release them. Then when he asked each of them, as part of their plea, if they agreed not to return to Fort Benning, each said, "Oh, no. I'll be back this fall to protest."

He was just stunned by "their self-righteousness and arrogance," Gordon said.



"He gave them all jail time and you could just tell that the judge was really unaccustomed to hearing such people who obviously believe the law doesn't apply to them."

Gordon said SOA Watch college recruiters tell students and administrators that it's only a November weekend in Georgia, and on Monday they'll be on their way back home.

"I guess our response is 'not so fast, my friend. If you violate the law you're going to be prosecuted as far as we can convince the U.S. Attorney to prosecute you,'" Gordon said.

Golden Corral offers free meal

Veterans, active-duty eat at buffet

Who said there was no such thing as a free lunch?

More than 1,800 active-duty military, reservists and veterans ate free Monday at Golden Corral on Manchester Expressway.

The restaurant was so busy, the chow line stretched approximately 100 yards, and people who came alone or in small groups ate with complete strangers to facilitate rapid consumption.

"This was a great chance to bring everyone together as a big military family," said Kenneth Dewberry, a retiree who lives in Columbus. "It makes me proud to be an American."

Golden Corral planned the event in February, said Johnny Wells, associate manager. The free meals were to be from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., but because of the close proximity to Fort Benning, the restaurant extended the hours to 11 a.m. to 10 p.m. in order to accommodate the expected masses.

"We appreciate Fort Benning," Wells said. "We appreciate the vets and everything the current military does and will do for our country. Today was our way of saying thanks."

He said the company was glad the turnout was high.

Greg McNally, associate manager, is a veteran who served more than 23 years in the Army and had two combat tours.

"I know what (these veterans) have done," McNally said. "I've been in their shoes. This is a special occasion for me."

As McNally served fellow veterans as a manager, Spc. Armando Blanco, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, served fellow soldiers as a waiter.

"It feels good to serve other soldiers and those who had gone before us," Blanco said. "All the sweat (resulting from serving so many) is worth it."

Walter Braun, a retiree who lives in Columbus, said he had a good time.

"They get a lot of business from the military and retired community," Braun said. "Today was kind of a giving back."

Braun and other vets appreciated the free meal.

"This is one of the best things I've seen done for veterans," said Jack Cole, a retiree who lives in Phenix City. "It's better than a million dollar advertisement."

The long lines reminded many of their days in the military.

"It's like the chow lines we stood in when we were in the service," said Kellon G. Shepard, a retiree who lives in Phenix City.

Still, he said the food was worth the wait.

"The food was great," Shepard said. "The generosity of people (to offer a free meal) is one of the most patriotic expressions I've seen."

Current soldiers felt the long wait was worth it, too, said Pvt. Jacob Hinkkanen, 75th Ranger Regiment. He waited an hour and ten minutes just to see the entrance to the establishment.

"It's a good thing for 'Joe' to come out here and eat free before pay day," Hinkkanen said. "It shows the community appreciates the armed forces."

He said the meal was a welcome break from chow hall food.

Staff Sgt. Michael Johnson, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, brought his wife, Cassandra, to the restaurant.

"It's outstanding they made an offer like this," Johnson said. "Many companies talk the talk, but it's different to walk the walk. That's what they're doing today."

Today's 'warriors' pay tribute to yesterday's heroes

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Command Sgt. Maj. Julian A. Kellman, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, places I.D. tags, from unit soldiers who have died, on the traditional soldier memorial during the Veterans Day ceremony.

Ceremonies honor veterans

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

At the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month, the nation pays tribute to America's veterans in ceremonies held in parks, military installations and in schools.

The Fort Benning community held two Veterans Day ceremonies on the grounds of the National Infantry Museum.

The first of the two ceremonies honored members of the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion.

During opening remarks, retired Col. William H. Lundy, a member of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association, set the scene with a brief history of how Nov. 11 has become Veterans Day.

Guest speaker Col. David M. Rodriquez, Fort Benning deputy commander and assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School referred to members of the 555th Inf. Bn. as "Nickels from heaven."

He credited the veterans of the "Triple Nickel," with setting the example for today's airborne infantry.

"The Nickels from heaven know about the hard road," he said. "They know what tough training really is. They held their heads high and went where their nation sent them.

"Two months after the attacks on freedom and the American way of life, service members can hold their heads up because they still preserve the freedom ensured by our veterans," Rodriquez said.

"War reminds us we must never let our guard down," Rodriquez said. "We must dig in and do what is right. Just as our veterans swore, we must go where we are needed, uphold our Constitution, guard our homeland and, without faltering, continue the legacy left by our veterans. I am grateful we can be a small part of keeping the legacy alive."

After the playing of Taps, the group walked out to the 555th Parachute Infantry Battalion monument to place a wreath.

The day's ceremonies continued at the National Infantry Museum with a 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) Veterans Day tribute with special recognition of the veterans of the Korean War. The ceremony was hosted by members of 3rd Brigade, Outpost 60 and the Society of the 3rd Infantry Division.

The ceremony began with a few words by World War II Tank Destroyer Society national coordinator retired Col. Bob French at the World War II Tank Destroyer Memorial.

French spoke of the "piggy-back" relationship of the 601st Tank Destroyers and the division's doughboys. He told the crowd infantry soldiers would "catch a ride" on the tanks when they had to travel faster than by foot.

He also talked about how Medal of Honor recipient Audie Murphy jumped onto a tiger tank that was on fire, manned its machine gun and used it against the enemy.

After the ceremony, a bright orange and black wreath with a tiger was placed by the memorial in honor of tank destroyer veterans.

Next, participants and observers moved to the 3rd Infantry Division Monument where Col. Daniel Allyn, the brigade commander, thanked everyone for joining 3rd Inf. Div. soldiers in recognizing the "selfless service and the ultimate sacrifice paid by so many heroic veterans of our Marne division."

He told the crowd the ceremony had a dual purpose. First, it honored veterans. Second, it rededicated soldiers still serving in their honor to the continuous and unswerving commitment to the nation.

"Our veterans provide heroic examples of courage, commitment and honorable service to our great nation," Allyn said. "We continue this legacy today. As Sledgehammer soldiers, we serve on point for the nation conducting peacekeeping operations in Kosovo ... and elsewhere to maintain combat readiness to deploy in support of our nation's war against terrorism."

He assured veterans "the Marne tradition of excellence and selfless service is alive and well and will remain ready to answer the nation's call as they had done."

Following Allyn's speech was guest speaker, retired Command Sgt. Maj. James G. McDonough, Outpost 60 president.

"You are warriors," McDonough told the infantry soldiers gathered in honor of Veterans Day.

He thanked the brigade for its continued support and observance of their lineage.

"Seldom are veterans mentioned in history books," McDonough said. "In times of danger, people love vets. As soon as war is over, people forget.

"You are all veterans, warriors. You are responsible for making sure the sacrifices made by fellow warriors are not forgotten," McDonough said.

"These stone monuments speak more loudly than words," McDonough said just before wreaths were placed at the 3rd Inf. Div. monument.

nation."

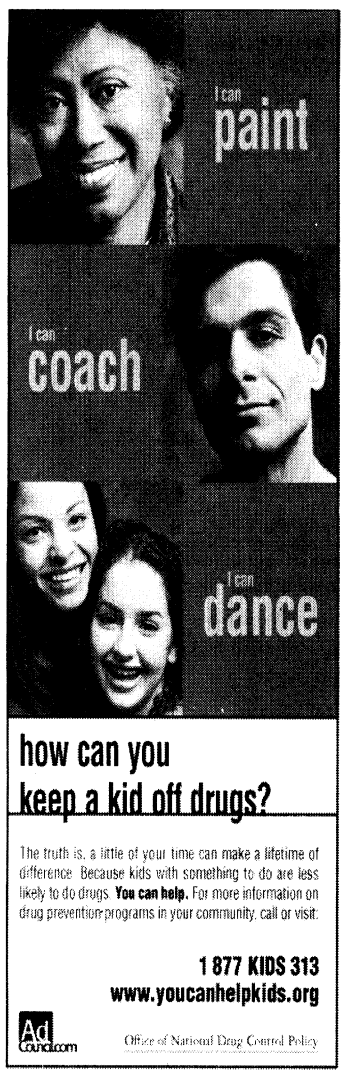
Torres, Columbus mayor Bobby Peters and Phenix City mayor Sonny Coulter, spoke at the ceremony.

"As we celebrate Veterans Day, it brings home the sacrifices veterans and their families have made," Coulter

Torres said he was proud to be speaking before the veterans.

"Our veterans provided the sword and shield that protected our nation," Torres said. "Because of them we are free."

Torres said there was both a bight and dark side to being a veteran. "The bright side is that you can say 'I was a player. I made a difference. I was there.' You can stand a little taller."

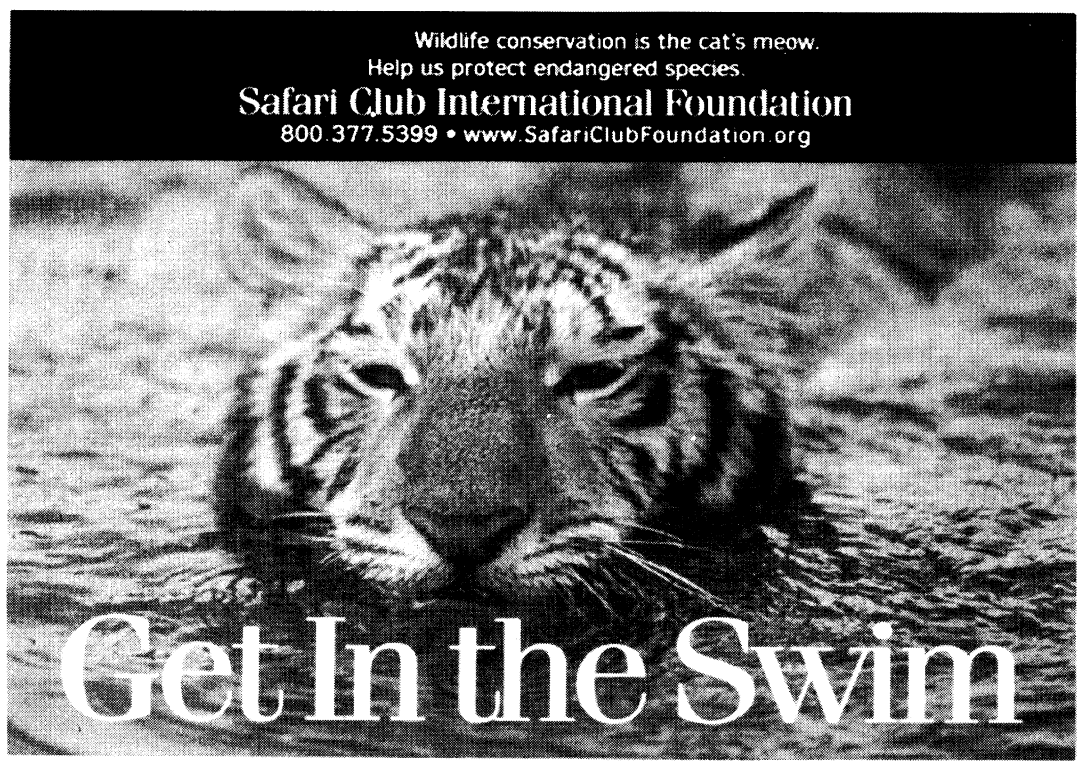


"But the dark side is ... you lost something whether your childhood innocence or spending months or years away."

Americans, Torres said, should be proud members of the armed forces protect the nation and put their lives on the line. They are dedicated to their country like veterans.

"They will go where they are needed," Torres said. "They will accomplish the mission."

The Infantry Band played several songs. Celeste Lee from the Directorate of Operations and Training sang the National Anthem.



Brittany Starr, a student at Dexter Elementary, read her poem Proud to be an American and received a standing ovation. Some of her fellow students sang, and signed, This Land is Your Land.

Butler: Teaches elementary students about World War II

He spent nearly two more months in Europe and was wounded again during the Battle of the Bulge, this time a rifle round through his right leg. It was there he saw the worst fighting of his military career, which spanned nearly three decades and three wars. Butler served once in Korea and twice in Vietnam as a combat engineer.

"But World War II was the worst, because I was in the infantry. The worst I ever saw was the Battle of Cheneux. It's right there in the book," he said, referring to Those Devils in Baggy Pants, a blow-by-blow account of the 504th's involvement in World War II, written by Ross. S. Carter, Butler's former squad leader.

Carter's account paints a poignant picture of the C Company's struggle with German forces in the town of Cheneux. But it's what's left unsaid Butler still finds painful to talk about.

"I try to block out the bad stuff, but the 20th of December is always a bad day," he said.

As the newest member of the eight-man squad, Butler was supposed to walk next to Carter as they approached a number of barbed wire fences on the outskirts of Cheneux. But a last minute change in line-up likely saved Butler's life.

Another soldier, Finkelstein, was the shortest soldier in the company. He traded places with Butler so the other soldiers could help him over the fences. Finkelstein was killed when a 20 millimeter shell exploded his hand grenades and set him afire.

"It talks about it in the book," Butler said in a broken whisper, his eyes brimming with tears. "But it doesn't say he took my place. If it weren't for him I wouldn't be here."

Now the 76-year-old father of two spends a great deal of time educating others about the realities of war and military service, airborne in particular. He frequently attends airborne graduations and shares with the soldiers his enthusiasm and appreciation for "all things airborne."

And he visits Fort Benning schools, like Stowers Elementary, where Butler met with a classroom of students and parents Nov. 9, during the school's Veterans Day Celebration.

Butler modeled the "Ike" jacket he wore in 1956 while serving with the 1st Cavalry Division in Japan, where he met his wife, Reiko. He showed the students faded photographs of himself as a young paratrooper, recalled occasional moments of levity among war-weary soldiers in battle — "They're like hunting and fishing stories — the more you tell them the better they get." — and he explained the mindset of a combat infantryman in terms a fifth-grader could understand.

"Being in combat is very much like being on a football team," he said. "You're all working together to accomplish a mission, but you can't be distracted by what the guy down the line is doing. You have to focus on what your job is to stay alive."

And when asked, Butler compared the job of the parachute infantryman in World War II to that of the modern soldier in today's war on terrorism.

"Every war is different, and what we have now is like nothing I've ever seen," Butler replied. "But some things haven't changed. The job of the soldier is still to get to the enemy, wherever he's at, and outpower him. And the essentials are still food and munitions."

For nearly half an hour, Butler regaled his audience with the air of a seasoned entertainer — parents cried, children laughed, everyone applauded. And Butler left the classroom on a humorous note.

"Thank you for letting me be here. Now drop and give me 10," he said.

Jokes aside, Butler takes his responsibility seriously, and he believes it is the responsibility of his generation to help educate the younger.

"For so long older survivors didn't talk about what happened, so people just didn't know," he said. "It's getting better. Maybe it's the world situation. Maybe it was the movie Saving Private Ryan. Maybe people are just realizing their own mortality. But more people are talking to their family members about it. They have to. If they don't, it just disappears."

Bright Star: Soldiers return

Afghanistan, there was a late night head count to make sure that everyone was where they should be, and that was pretty scary," Pfc. Jozzie Stonebrahn said. "I am a medic and I loved doing my job, but all I wanted to do was come home."

But security was not an issue, Richards said.

"People were initially scared and some thought we might be sent somewhere else, but this was strictly a training exercise," Richards said. "We were very safe and surrounded by many layers of security."

The main body of the unit arrived on Sept. 21. The hospital operated out of a group of tents, and responsibilities of the unit included 24-hour maintenance within the hospital and of medical equipment.

"We had physicians and nurses from installations all over the country. They could do any surgery there that we perform here," Richards said.

Cases seen in the hospital consisted of anything from broken bones to a heart attack.

"There are always ways to do things better," Richards said. "We learned a lot about pre-planning and real world situations, and got to see a part of the world we would not normally be able to see. We will learn from both the good and the bad, and work on the areas which need improvement."

We make the future brighter.

Future mortarmen learn valuable skills

AIT portion of ITB training begins

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the eighth story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

It just keeps getting better and better for soldiers currently training to be infantrymen. First they were mere civilians, now they're soldiers. Now they're training to be infantrymen, but better yet, 11Bs or 11Cs.

The infantry training for D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, has progressed to the advanced individual training portion of instruction.

Last weekend was a time to spend with family who made the trip to Fort Benning and relax, away from the company area and the watchful eye of drill sergeants.

But Tuesday was back to business as usual. The company split to allow 11Bs to receive their military occupational specialty training. The 30 11Cs from D Co. joined soldiers from A and D Companies, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, at the mortar training area on Sand Hill.

The soldiers spent night and day this week training on the M-252 81mm mortar. Tuesday, the soldiers learned the basic parts of the mortar.

The gunner's exam is today and covers five tasks: mount the mortar; small deflection and elevation; large deflection and elevation; refer and realign the aiming post; and reciprocal lay.

To pass the exam, 70 percent is required. To be considered an Expert Mortar Gunner, soldiers must achieve 90 percent.

Sgt. 1st Class Samuel Murphy is the only 11C drill sergeant for D Co. He is responsible for overseeing all the training his 11Cs will receive.

"All we're looking to teach them here is basic mortar gunnery," Murphy said. "Everything else they'll learn at their unit. We'll focus on the five tasks, and Friday (today) they'll take their exam."

Murphy is looking for this cycle to improve on the accomplishments of last cycle.

"Last cycle we had 93 percent first-time experts and everyone was a first-time go," Murphy said. "We're shooting for 100 percent first-time experts this time around."

Staff Sgt. Anthony Babilonia, noncommissioned officer in charge of the mortar training area, trained more than 1,000 soldiers last year on basic mortar gunner tasks.

"We're here to train the soldiers on what they need to know, and if they're struggling, we'll help," Babilonia said.

Each mortar requires a three person gun crew consisting of the gunner, assistant gunner and ammo bearer.

To set up the mortar, the preparatory command is, "to your front!" The command of execution is "action!"

The gunner picks up the 29 pound baseplate, puts it in position and moves to his left to the box containing the sight for the mortar.

At the same time, the ammo bearer picks up the 35 pound cannon, places the breach plug into the U-shape retainable socket, and takes one 15 inch step to the left.

The assistant gunner lifts the 27 pound bipod and opens the legs. The cannon is then latched into the bipod. The gunner attaches the sight and levels the bubble. At that point the mortar is up and ready.

"Gun up!"

At that point, the squad leader would come over to check the gun.

To take the gun system "out of action," the sight comes off, the bipod goes back to carrying configuration, and the cannon gets removed from the baseplate.

At combat speed, the demonstration team took 43 seconds to get from "action" to "gun up." To qualify as an 11C requires a time of 90 seconds or less, 65 seconds or less is expert time. To get the mortar out of action is not timed.

The M-252 81mm mortar is a commander's asset on the battle field.

The range of the gun system is 83 to 5,608 meters with a maximum rate of fire of 30 rounds a minute for two minutes.

Army suffers shortage of chaplains in all faiths

Recruiting push this weekend to add interest

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

In this time of spiritual awakening in the nation and the world, the Army needs chaplains more than ever.

The chief of chaplains at the Department of the Army has designated this weekend to be the Vocation Sabbath for the chaplaincy.

"The goal (of the weekend) is to encourage young men and women to consider a career in the chaplaincy," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor.

Placing emphasis on the importance of chaplains and encouraging new applicants is part of the Army's recruiting emphasis.

"The intent is to raise attention that we need to have Army chaplains," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New.

"We're looking to young soldiers and families. Even getting the message out to teen-agers who are looking at career possibilities," New said.

The chaplaincy is short on those who would fill battalion level positions.

The Army is short approximately 80 chaplains.

Fort Benning is seven below the number of chaplains they are authorized, with several battalion level positions open.

> "We're looking to young soldiers and families. Even getting the message out to teen-agers who are looking at career possibilities."
> Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New
> Garrison chaplain

Worldwide, the Army also needs priests to fill positions.

To be a chaplain requires a bachelor's degree, a master of divinity or its equivalent and three years in the church of the denomination in which an endorsement is sought.

"It's definitely a long process," New said.

To raise awareness, Army chaplains will be traveling to colleges and seminaries, talking to students about a career as an Army chaplain.

Chaplains have also been asked to share with their congregations how they happened to come into the chaplaincy, in the hopes that interest will be sparked.

There is also a video the chief of chaplains has prepared that will be shown.

"Hopefullly, some people will come to us and say, 'Yes, I'm interested,'" New said.

"If we can get that initial interest, we can take their names down and help them through the program," he said.

Task Force 84 getting ready to train, test IRR soldiers

Reserve unit activated for one year

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Army is getting ready to call some former soldiers back to duty from the Individual Ready Reserve and Task Force 84 is ready for them.

Seventy-one reserve personnel were activated from the 84th Division and Grissom Air Reserve Base, Ind., to come to Fort Benning for one year as part of the individual ready reserve train-up mission.

Because the individual ready reserve soldiers have been out of the Army for a little while, Task Force 84 is going to serve as a refresher course for them.

After their train-up here, they will go to the CONUS Replacement Center and then to their gaining units.

Soldiers will be trained and tested on common task training and military occupational specialty qualification training.

"Our mission is to support IRR call-ups for Operation Noble Eagle by conducting CTT and MOS qualification training," said Capt. Will Kline, operations officer.

"We're here to prepare the soldiers for their further duty assignments," Kline said.

Individual ready reserve soldiers will be with the 84th for three to five weeks.

"The length of time they're with us will depend on their proficiency," Kline said.

Soldiers will be tested on the knowledge they will be required to have and given a rapid train-up if they fail any portion.

Task Force 84 finished its certification this week and is ready for its first wave of individual ready reserve soldiers.

The task force headquarters is Building 2826, near the main NCO club. When they arrived, the building had nothing in it.

"We had no phones, no fax machines, no e-mail, all it was was a building," said Lt. Col. Michael Soja, battalion commander.

"All we had was a key to unlock the door, and you could turn the lights on," Soja said.

Maj. Kirn Chapman is responsible for trying to get the building up and running smoothly.

"It's been extremely hectic," Chapman said. "We're making headway, you can see a difference everyday."

Building 2826 has been been abandoned for a number of years.

Phone lines needed to be installed, furniture found, walls painted and grass mown.

They basically had just a shell of a building with which to work.

"So far it's been exhausting," Chapman said.

"Fortunately, the heating and cooling system works, the electricity works and the plumbing works.

"So the infrastructure was there, but we had to do everything else from scratch. It's been a little bit of a challenge," Chapman said.

Soja has been very pleased with how his soldiers are accomplishing the mission at hand.

"The attitude of the soldiers is great," Soja said.

"You've got quality reserve soldiers on the ground. I haven't heard one soldier say they don't want to be here, and they all know it's one year, potentially two years," Soja said.

Staff Sgt. Jim Springman, from Muncie, Ind., was planning on retiring in January, but re-upped for a year when his unit asked him to stay and go to Fort Benning for the individual ready reserve train-up mission.

In the civilian world, Springman works for Gas America, as a manager.

"The mood down here is really positive," Springman said.

"We all want to be ready to train soldiers," Springman added.

Staff Sgt. Beverly Bishop, is an office manager for an opthamologist in Kokomo, Ind., in the civilian world.

She's the noncommissioned officer in charge for Task Force 84's supply needs.

"I was activated for Desert Storm when my twins were five, so they really weren't surprised when I got called this time. I think I was more surprised than they were," Bishop said. "They kind of anticipated, with what was going on, that I would be called."

Bishop's children turned 16 yesterday.

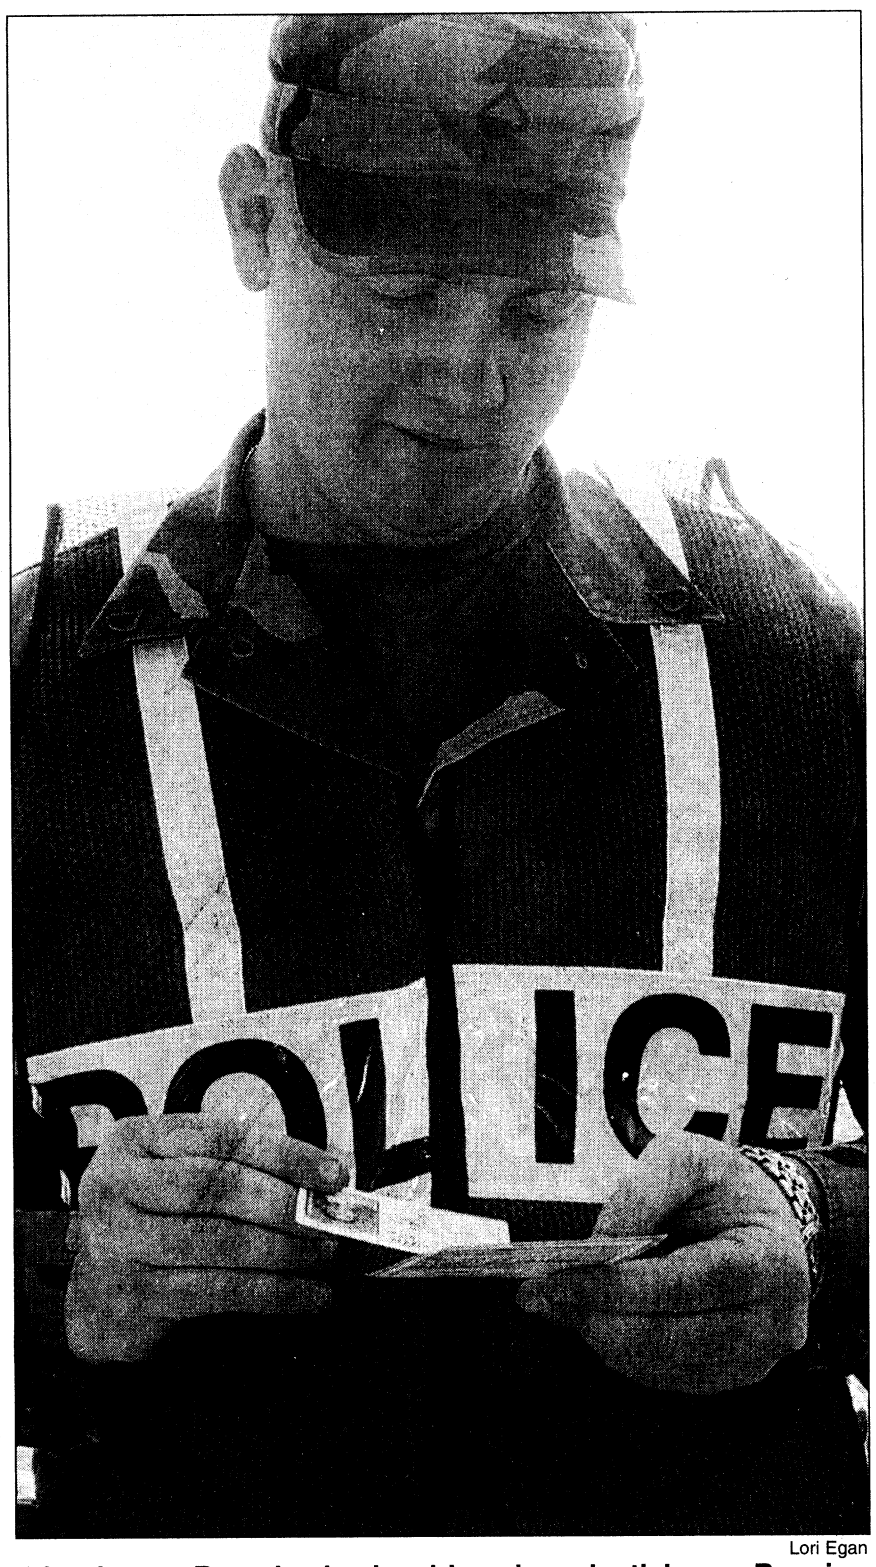
Bishop said she has received, "overwhelming support from the community. Friends from church, neighbors, they've all called, sent cards, bought gifts. It's just been amazing."

Spc. Ann Mais, is originally from Fort Lauderdale, Fla., but was a student at the University of Wisconsin, Osh Kosh, when she was notified she'd be at Fort Benning in a week.

"The only thing I did was return my key, turn in a copy of my orders and pack up," Mais said.

Mais was not distressed about putting her studies on hold.

"I signed up for the duration. I'll do whatever the Army wants me to do," she said.



Sgt. 1st Class Nick Brown from Kokomo, Ind., said he had no problems reporting to Fort Benning.

"I'm used to coming down here for two weeks in the summertime," Brown said. "So it feels like it should be about time to go home, but I know I'm not."

Task Force 84 will handle their first inprocessees on Sunday when fifteen officers arrive.

"We should be ready to execute our full-up mission by the first week in December," Soja said. "Second week at the latest."

Nations train in Egypt

Ten countries train together in Bright Star

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. soldiers maneuvered alongside Egyptian forces and troops from eight other nations the past few weeks in Bright Star, the largest coalition exercise conducted by Central Command.

Bright Star took place in Egypt Oct. 8 through Nov. 1 and involved about 60,000 troops.

The main U.S. maneuver unit was the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment from Fort Carson, Colo., with an element from Fort Hood, Texas.

Support forces included the 14th Field Hospital from Fort Benning, the 240th Quartermaster Battalion from Fort Lee, Va., and the 368th Cargo Transportation Company from Fort Eustis, Va.

Other troops participated from France,. Germany, Greece, Italy, Jordan, Kuwait, Spain, the United Kingdom and Egypt.

The exercise is an important part of U.S. Central Command's theater engagement strategy, officials said, and is designed to improve readiness and interoperability and strengthen relationships between U.S., Egyptian and participating forces.

A biennial exercise, Bright Star is designed to enhance military cooperation among U.S. and coalition partners, CENTCOM officials said, by strengthening joint commitment to regional stability and mutual interests.

The exercise began in the early 1980s and demonstrates U.S. capability to respond to various contingencies.

Bright Star is a joint, combined exercise involving tactical air, ground, naval and special operations forces field training.

The 368th Cargo Transfer Company from Fort Eustis conducted port operations in Egypt, ran a cargo marshalling area and helped with airfield departure and control group operations.

The 240th Quartermaster Battalion from Fort Lee, Va., provided bulk and retail fuel for all U.S. participants deployed to Egypt for Bright Star.

At Pyramid Log Base, the battalion's 58th Quartermaster Company operated a 300,000-gallon-capacity Fuel System Supply Point for JP-8 and a 30,000-gallon site for mogas.

Fuel from these sites provided power for everything from the smallest of generators to the largest of weapons, such as the 3rd Armored Cavalry Regiment's M-1 A1 Abrams tanks and UH-60 Blackhawk helicopters.

"Fuel has always served as the lifeblood of the warfighter, and that fact was proven here again during this year's Bright Star exercise," said Capt. John Schneeberger, 58th Quartermaster Company commander.

"Without fuel an M-1 Abrams is just a huge paperweight."

Before the bag farm was fully operational, the company demonstrated its versatility by using a fleet of 5,000-gallon tankers to distribute, or "push," fuel to user units.

The company also ran a small petroleum bag farm that fueled the Mubarak Military Complex prime power grid, as well as providing fuel for the 14th Field Hospital's medical evacuation aircraft.

"Supplying fuel for all of these various purposes was a challenge," said Sgt. Corey Woodard, a squad leader in the 58th.

"It makes you feel like your job is very important," Woodard said.

"I feel like what I'm doing here is worthwhile, and I know I am serving a purpose in this exercise."

Fuel came to the 58th site by way of an Egyptian contractor. Before any Egyptian fuel could be transferred to the 58th is fuel bags, it must be tested for quality by the 240th's mobile laboratory.

> "Without fuel, an M-1 Abrams is just a huge paperweight."
> Capt. John Schneeberger
> 58th Quartermaster

The specialized lab, one of two in the active Army, runs several tests on each sample from the Egyptian tankers.

Before it was declared suitable for use by U.S. equipment, the samples had to pass all tests.

"Working with the Egyptian tankers has been a good experience," said Sgt. Willie Grant, a squad leader with the 58th.

"The tankers are different because they use gravity flow to transfer fuel. Our tankers use pumps." Grant also said a special hose adapter must be employed when receiving fuel from Egyptian trucks.

Besides serving as the exercise's single source of fuel for U.S. forces, the 240th also served as the "mayoral" unit at Pyramid Log Base, a task normally suited for a combat support battalion.

The 240th, commanded by Lt. Col. Kerwin Walker, was faced with furnishing life-support for nearly 1,200 soldiers.

The battalion's 267th Quartermaster Company provided force protection and managed a consolidated dining facility, showers, laundry, a tactical field exchange, and a morale, welfare, and recreation site.

"This is a big, big mission," Woodard said.

"But it's been great.

"This isn't something we have a chance to do at Fort Lee. Out here, soldiers get to do what they are trained to do," Woodard said.

Carol Utter thought she knew what she was getting into when she married Cpl. Raymond Utter. Marriage to a soldier means long hours and frequent deployments. It's a package deal, he said.

But that was before the U.S. declared war on terrorism, and the soldiers of the 75th Ranger Regiment headed for parts unknown. Now, married just four months, Carol's frustrated by a sense of loneliness and a desire to be needed.

"I've always been the nurturing type," she said. "I need to feel needed."

In a moment of weakness, Carol sought comfort from a total stranger — two actually — and she brazenly revealed her indiscretion in a letter to her husband.

"I don't think he'll mind actually, as long as they're gone before he gets back," she said. "He's allergic."

Because her husband has allergies, Carol is indulging in a feline affair for a very short while. She learned about the Fort Benning Vet Service's kitten foster program while visiting the clinic last week.

"They brought out these two adorable little bundles and said 'Want to keep them for a few weeks?' I couldn't resist," Carol said.

Carol is one of six foster "parents" who has committed to care for orphaned kittens until they're old enough to feed themselves, usually about six weeks.

Missy Taylor, the clinic's civilian vet technician, said Vet

Tillinghurst helps break language barriers

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

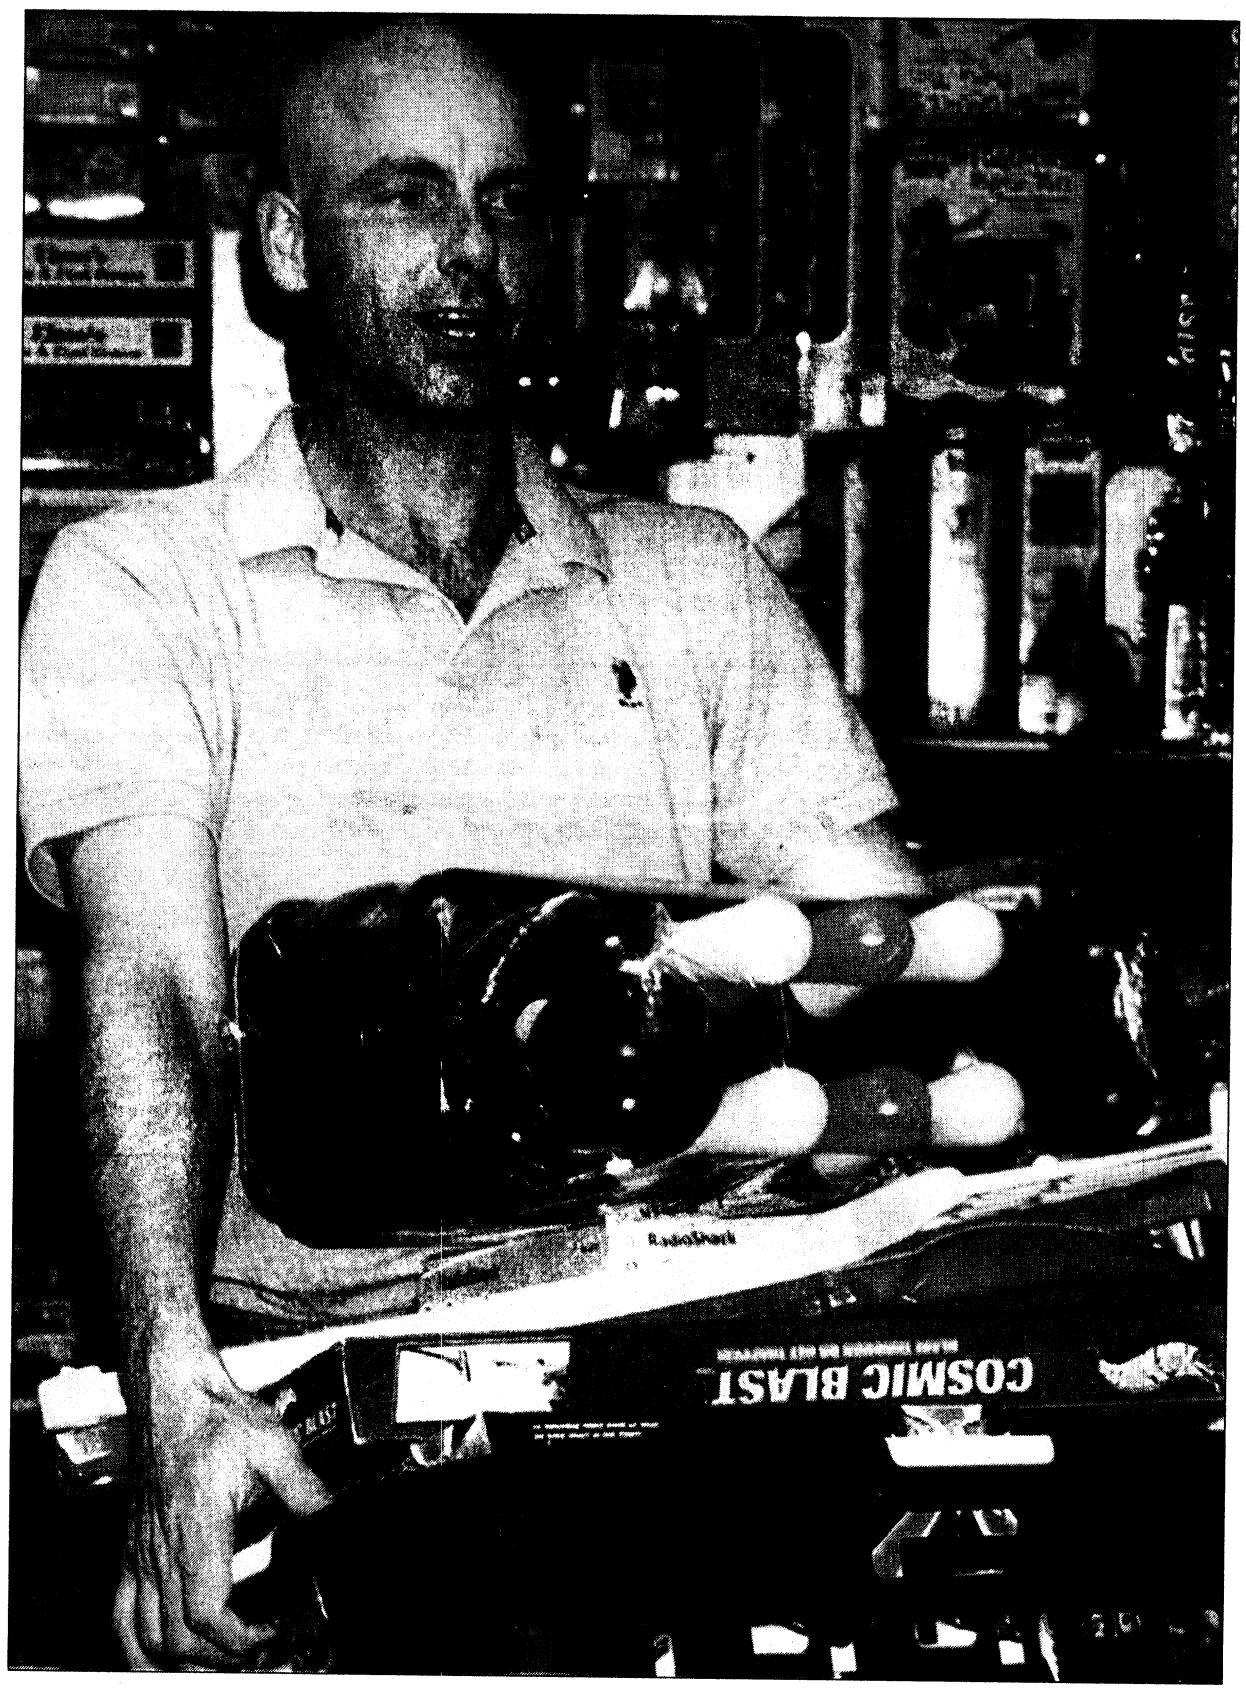
The Army boasts families from many locations around the world. Since the native tongue of many of these countries is not English, there is often a language barrier once the families are within the United States. But there are resources within the community that help break these barriers.

Tillinghurst Adult Education Center is a branch of the Muscogee County school district that offers classes that teach English as a second language. ESL classes are designed to teach conversational and survival English skills, including reading and writing, to students whose native tongue is not English.

ESL is available to anyone in Columbus or Fort Benning 16 and older. Classes are offered to all nationalities and are formed based upon the skill level and needs of the students. Students can attend either day or evening courses, dependent upon their schedule. Additional classes in grammar, mathematics, reading and GED preparation are also available during the day.

"The services here are bigger than language training," said Norma Boggs, manager of adult education at Tillinghurst. "We help integrate the students into the community."



"Many do not have a good background in American and local history, so we try to teach them about our culture," said Myrtle Chalkley, who works in the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate. Chalkley has worked for Tillinghurst for seven years, five of which were spent teaching ESL.

Last year, Tillinghurst serviced more than 700 students, Boggs said. Nearly 50 students and family members from Fort Benning currently attend ESL classes. Many are from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation

"WHINSEC students have to live here for one or two years, so we try to expose them to the environment and let them know about activities in the community, as well as involve them in Santa's elves are at work collecting and sorting presents for good boys and girls at Fort Benning.

Since 1986, Santa's Castle, an all-volunteer and nonprofit organization, has distributed gifts to parents with financial hardships for their children.

"We understand that some of the Fort Benning families aren't able to provide gifts for their kids due to financial burdens," Michelle Ossa, Santa's Castle chairperson, said. "This takes away some of the burden."

Only new toys are accepted and can be donated throughout the year. Used toys were accepted in the past, but took too long to clean and refurbish, Ossa said.

The gifts are collected from individuals, local groups, units and monetary donations made to the organization. Ossa said the toys for this year are "super good and above average."

"There are going to be some happy kids at Christmas," Ossa said.

In the collection room, there are Barbie dolls, stuffed animals, remote control cars and more. In fact, the toys reach the ceiling.

"But this isn't all of the toys. There are more gifts in the back," Ossa said.

Despite the large quantity of toys already received by the Santa's Castle, toys are still needed.

The organization still needs more toys. Ettman said the organization has collected about

Dexter students share native knowledge

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Fourth-graders research American Indians

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

In 1492, Columbus sailed the ocean blue. When he arrived in a new land, he named the native people Indians.

Cynthia Works, Dexter Elementary fourth-grade teacher, decided her students should learn more about the indigenous people in celebration of Native American Heritage Month. Her students selected a nation or tribe they wanted to learn more about and shared that native knowledge with classmates.

Tiffany Wilson, 11, chose the Aztecs of Mexico, because she knew she could find plenty of information on them.

"It was easy to look up the information," Wilson said. "I was able to find out they lived in Central Mexico and were strongest during the 14th to 16th century."

Wilson talked about the Aztec crops of squash, corn and chili peppers and their use of the Mayan calendar. She also learned about the superstitions and religion of their nation.

"Several gods ruled their daily lives. There was Huitzilopochtli, god of war, Quetzelcail, god of civilization and Tezcatlipoca, the chief god of the Aztecs," Wilson said. "They believed their gods would only grant them things if they nourished the gods with human blood."

But for all their remarkable feats and their barbaric customs, Wilson said she liked the pictography the best.

"I really liked the pictograph writing on paper and animal hides," she said.

After learning about the Aztec nation, Wilson said she is glad she did not live among them.

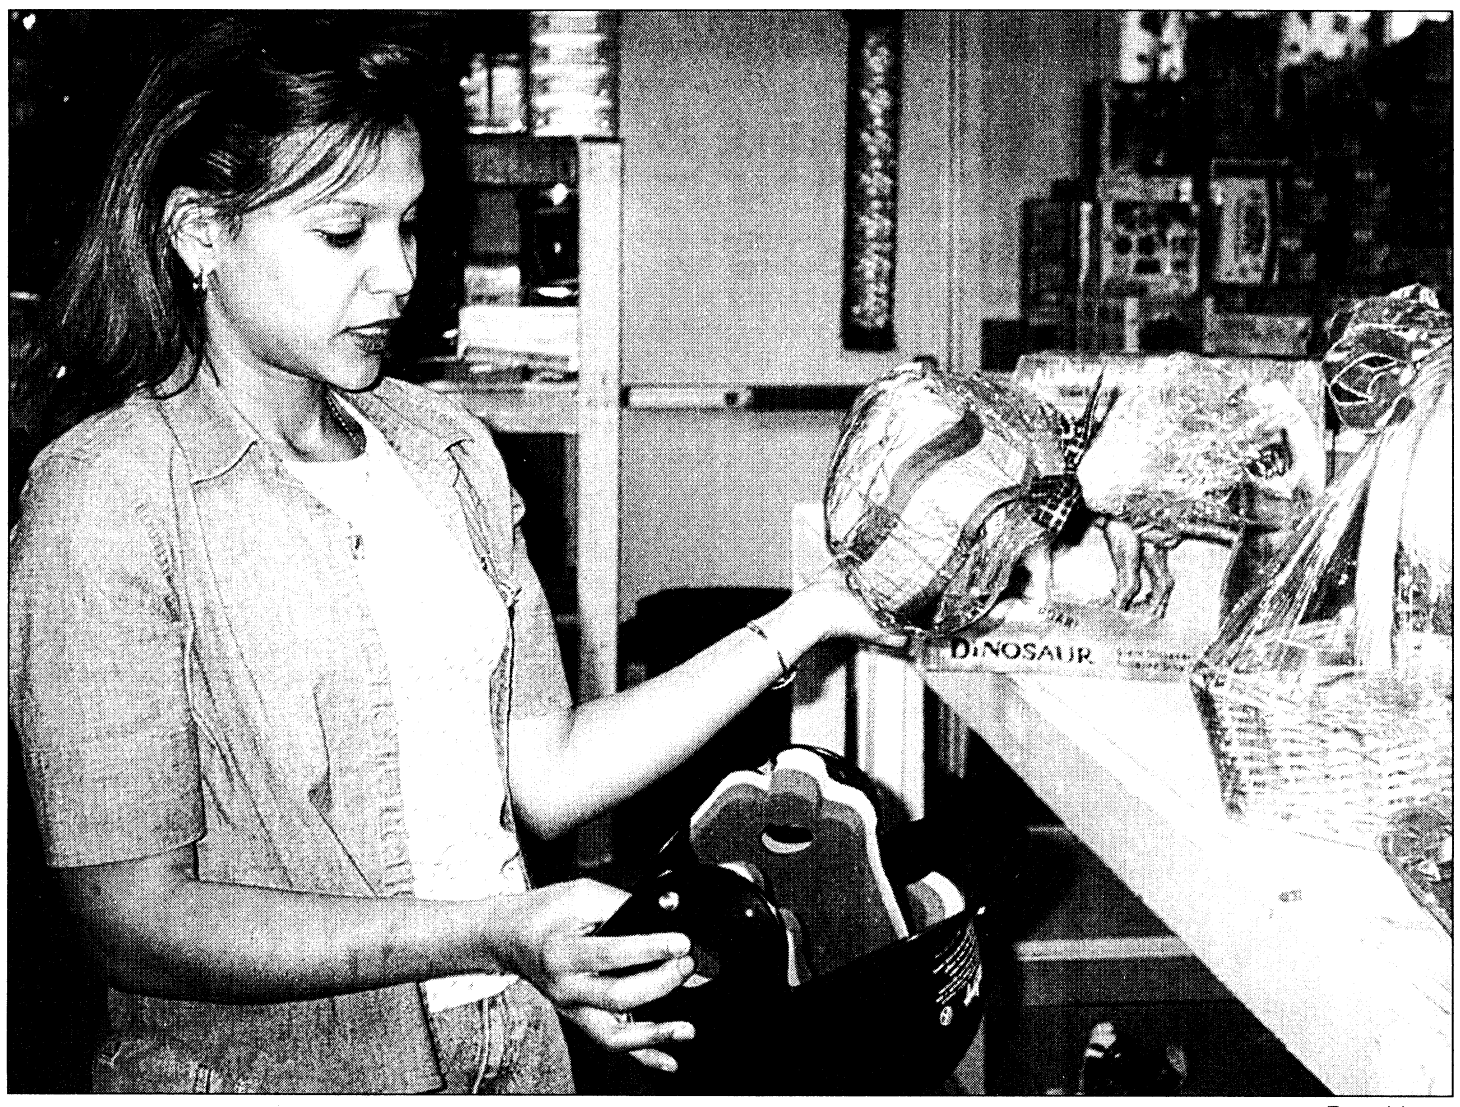
Classmate Preston Colvin, 9, learned more about the Kwakiutl tribe from the Seattle, Wash., area.

"They were hunters, fishermen and gatherers," Colvin said.

Colvin talked about what he liked best about the Kwakiutl.

"Two totem poles are placed outside the homes of the oldest tribe's member home. Everyone notices these totems, I liked that," he said.

Colvin learned about the long boats used by the Kwakiutl.



"The boats were made for 50 people, and each had to paddle, except the children," he said.

However, he did not like everything about the tribe.

"The boys would swim to catch fish. I

2,700 toys, but needs about 1,200 more.

"We really hope we have enough gifts for the kids. Right now we're definitely short," he said. "We're helping more families this year, so it's important we continue to receive toys."

Santa's Castle receives the most requests for younger children, but there are gifts for adolescents as well. Besides electronics, telescopes and sporting equipment, every family readiness group makes baskets for these age groups. Some of the items include perfume or cologne and hair accessories.

This is Ossa's first year volunteering for Santa's Castle, but she knows the impact of the program after listening to stories from other volunteers.

"A soldier came in with one toy request, an easy-bake oven," Ossa said. "The toy wasn't in the front so the volunteers went in the back and found one. The minute he touched the oven, he started crying. That really lets you know the program is serving a purpose."

Units submit applications to Santa's Castle, and volunteers set up appointments now until mid-December for parents to come and select toys for each child.

When parents come to Santa's Castle, they are allowed to pick three toys per child, one from each category. It costs on average $50 per child to purchase gifts.

Confidentiality is a must, Ossa said. Parents come one at a time, and volunteers must not disclose names. If a volunteer knows any of the parents, he or she is asked not to be present while the parents pick out toys for their children.

"This is difficult for some parents," she said. "They may feel uncomfortable about others knowing about their financial problems."

Last year, Santa's Castle helped 1,100 kids. This year, Ossa estimates they will help 1,300.

Ossa wants people to remember the program is for families who are having financial problems. "We're not a reward program, we're a need-based program," she said.

Families who need assistance and haven't submitted their applications can still apply.

"There's still time for parents to apply," Ossa said. "We do not want to turn anybody away."

Santa's Castle plans to continue to help many families, but the organization is facing a shortage of volunteers. Staff Sgt. Michael Ettman, volunteer coordinator, said Santa's Castle needs 30 more volunteers.

"We could use the help," he said. "When you volunteer, you give back to the community what they have given to you."

"We hope to keep the program running. With people PCSing all the time, it's hard to keep volunteers," Ossa said.

Volunteers are needed Tuesday and Thursday from 10 a.m. to noon. After Nov. 26 until mid-December, hours will be Monday and Fridays 5 until 9 p.m., and 9 a.m. until noon Wednesdays.

Whether volunteering or donating toys, Ossa hopes more Fort Benning residents become involved in the program.

"This program is emotionally and economically positive," she said. "It helps families and it fosters teamwork because people of all different ages and backgrounds come together. It's a perfect formula for success."

Santa's Castle is located in Custer Terrace, Building 2682 on Kandle Drive. For more information, call 685-4422 or 687-5017.

Kittens: Find temporary homes

Services launched the program in the spring to combat the growing problem of orphaned or abandoned kittens that require around the clock care — time that the understaffed clinic must devote to regular duties.

"When they're first born they have to be bottle fed every couple hours, and we don't have the manpower to handle that on top of our regular load," Taylor said. "So we decided to look for volunteers to be surrogate parents for a short while."

Though the commitment is short-term, it's a "full-time job and a big responsibility," Taylor said. The clinic supplies kitten formula, training and health care, but foster parents must constantly feed the kittens and handle them to make them sociable.

Since the program began, none of the fostered kittens have been euthanized, Taylor said, a fact she attributes to their friendly disposition.

"Every one we've had fostered has since been adopted. I think that's because they make better house cats since they've been hand-fed and held by humans from the start," Taylor said.

According to garrison housing regulations, Fort Benning residents can only keep two pets in their home. But litters are exempt from the limit until kittens are 6 weeks old.

"So even if you already have pets, you can foster a kitten until it's old enough to come back to us," Taylor said.

Taylor encourages fostering as "a sweet little diversion" for the families of deployed soldiers.

"It's really for anyone," she said. "It's just a good way to take your mind off your troubles or test the waters to see if you'd make a good cat owner."

don't think I would like catching fish that way," he said.

For classmate Troy Amnott, 9, learning about the Iroquois was more than just an assignment. The lesson helped him learn more about his family heritage.

"My great-great-grandmother is Iroquois," he said.

Amnott learned that of the five tribes of the Seneca Nation, the Iroquois were the strongest. As warriors, hunters and gatherers, he said the tribe was able to thrive from the Chesapeake Bay to Kentucky and retain close family ties.

Amnott was impressed with the houses and social structure of the Iroquois.

"They helped one another build the long houses, up to 300-feet-long and 25-feet-wide," he said. "Whole families lived together in them."

Family unity was a necessity for survival for many native tribes, Jessica Egan, 9, learned during her study of the Shoshone Indians. They are believed to be the first tribe to live in the Great Basin area, in the Western United States.

She learned men hunted, woman gathered, and the children even helped out by hunting small game and gathering.

Under these harsh climate conditions, Egan understood why the Shoshone were nomadic.

"The land left them no choice, they had to travel and hunt," she said. "Despite the climate, people usually lived to be 80-years-old."

Egan enjoyed learning the men would dress in big-horned sheep skins when hunting and beat logs to simulate the sounds of two rams fighting to attract other sheep.

"They were successful, I thought that was pretty neat," she said.

Egan also discovered some of today's traditions are borrowed from the Shoshone tribe.

"Today we practice some of their traditions such as funerals and celebrating the birth of children," she said.

After learning more about tribal life, Egan thought maybe she would like to live among the Shoshone.

"If I had my family with me i would," she said.

community service," Chalkley said.

"Students from Fort Benning usually speak Spanish in their day jobs, but are out socializing on weekends, and sometimes traveling. They need to be able to know the basics, like how to read maps and know how many miles they'll be traveling, so these are some skills we work on," Chalkley said.

Assistance is offered to students in a variety of other areas, such as banking, security, job applications, and citizenship instruction.

"The students feel very comfortable coming to the teachers with questions, and the teachers take a real interest in the students. We basically share as much information with them as possible," Boggs said.

Free child care is provided through the Even Start program, which also supplies parents with resources such as tips on healthcare, nutrition, and even ideas for fun family activities.

"We view parenting as a civic activity, so we focus on helping the parents in a variety of areas," Chalkley said. "Parents are encouraged to volunteer and become involved in their child's school."

Military spouses are also provided support when their spouses are deployed, even if it means just finding something to help them fill their time, Boggs said.

"This is an asset to the Fort Benning community, because it provides resources to the dependents and better enables soldiers not yet fluent in English to perform their job," Chalkley said. "Many who have come here have made progress with the language, and, a result, have gotten their GEDs or moved up to a better job."

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: What is a will? Do I need one? Why or why not?

A: Webster's dictionary defines the term "procrastinate" as putting off, deferring or postponing to a later time. Although most Americans are aware of the need for a will, it is procrastination that is the main reason why roughly 70 percent of us don't have one. Observing tragic events like the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11 reminds us of how suddenly our time on this earth can pass. It is then that we once again realize the need to prepare a will and not to procrastinate.

A will expresses a person's desires concerning the settlement of his or her affairs and the distribution of his or her property at death. A will may include the creation of a testamentary trust for the benefit of minor children, as well as the designation of their future guardians. A will also will name an individual to serve as personal representative, who is responsible for, among other things, making sure that the terms of your will are carried out.

It is important to note that not everyone needs a will. When an individual dies without a will, their property passes on by state law through a process called "intestate succession." Your property will be distributed to your spouse and children or, if you have neither, to other relatives according to a statutory formula. Also, in the absence of a will, a court will determine who will care for your young children and their property if the other parent is unavailable or unfit, with no guarantees. Thus, if you are a single soldier with no children and a gross estate valued under $675,000, the need for a will is less significant because your property will be divided among your surviving relatives by statute. On the other hand, soldiers with small children, with extended or non-traditional families, or with extensive property or holdings, will definitely want to prepare a will.

Should you decide that indeed it is time for you to make a will, there are several things that need to be considered. First, a will allows you to specify how you would like your property distributed. Any number of beneficiaries can be named with an equal or unequal distribution of property. Secondary or contingent beneficiaries can also be named as well in case the primary beneficiaries die before the testator.

For parents of minor children, it is essential to designate a guardian in the will. The court will, almost always, recognize the surviving spouse as the guardian, however, if something were to happen to this individual, your will can designate an alternate. Although the court has the final authority with respect to naming a guardian, it will usually follow the testators wishes as expressed in a will.

Likewise, a will allows you to provide for your children's financial support and designate someone to handle their finances until they are grown. The testator can accomplish this in their will through the creation of a testamentary trust. Property can be placed in the trust until the minor beneficiary reaches a certain age (the age of distribution). The person named to manage the testamentary trust is the trustee. The trustee is required to manage the property in the best interests of the named minor beneficiary.

The creation of a testamentary trust may be of particular importance to those soldiers who have designated that their SGLI or other life insurance proceeds are to be paid to minor children. Along with the creation of a testamentary trust, it is essential these soldiers make sure that the insurance designation beneficiary form clearly indicate the proceeds are payable to the child(ren) in trust. That is the only way to ensure the money is paid into the trust and not to the children directly.

While the preceding information details certain aspects and considerations with respect to a will, this by no mean encompasses all of them. Other aspects of a will such as its legal execution and estate taxation issues, need to be considered as well. The Legal Assistance Office can help. They are available to answer questions and help with the preparation of wills. Wills are prepared on a by-appointment basis only at the Legal Assistance Office, 5 Vibbert Avenue. For more information or to schedule an appointment, call 545-3281. A will can ensure that your family is protected when the inevitable arrives. Don't procrastinate.

Students learn about Middle Ages

Second-graders make paper-mache dragons

White Elementary School

The fourth- and fifth-grade enrichment students at White Elementary School were "well-wimpled and had a ready tongue" as they were videotaped in medieval costumes Oct. 31.

"Here's a little story about a king you see.

"His name is Henry the VIII. Yo-yo that's me!

"I closed the monasteries because I'm greedy.

"I didn't really care what happened to the needy.

"I died on my birthday, in 1547.

"As, bad as I am, do you think I'll go to heaven?" sang Austin Giese, in an original rap song he used to deliver his researched information.

The students evaluated the presentations using a rubric, which highlighted 10 focus areas. The students were delighted to see themselves broadcasted over the school's closed circuit during morning announcements.

The students researched various topics and developed PowerPoint presentations, which will later be entered in the Muscogee County Media Festival.

Students designed shields that mirrored their own lives, read several novels that depicted life during the Middle Ages and used Internet sites to obtain their information.

Maj. Pete Mount designed and constructed a castle entrance out of wood to add scenery to Evelyn Braman's classroom — giving the room a medieval atmosphere.

Meghan Dugabn said, "I don't think I would have liked to live in a castle. It was stinky, cold and damp all the time.

"The people, who lived in the middle ages, threw their trash into the moat and did not bathe regularly," she added.

"Ugh!" shuddered Kristin Wilson. "Yet, I do think I would have made a great troubadour."

Students in the second grade also studied the Middle Ages, made paper-mache dragons, and wrote stories about their adventures.

Courtesy photo

Connie Bryant and second-grader Keaki Bryant make paper-mache dinosaurs as part of a class assignment.

"My story is about a knight who wants to fight a dragon.

"The dragon does not want to fight because it is a baby," Kris Roldan said.

With all of the hard work the students have done, a valuable asset that should not be overlooked are the parents.

They helped the students build models out of newspapers and tape, covered the models with paper-mache, and helped add the tissue paper for the color and design. The involvement of the parents encouraged the students to work hard and succeed.

The students are eager to share their dragon stories with their second-grade classmates and their families.

"I can hardly wait to take my dragon home," Ross Baye said.

Student government represents White school

White Elementary School

The Student Government Association is a very busy group of fifth-grade students from White Elementary who work hard to represent the entire student body.

The SGA consists of two representatives from each fifth-grade classroom who work as ambassadors throughout the school.

The representatives have varying responsibilities, from raising and lowering the American flag daily, preparing PowerPoint presentations, both in English and Spanish, to introduce new families to the school, and planning and carrying out special events.

C.J. Purgerson and Ashley Reynolds perform their daily assignment of raising and lowering the flag.

Currently the SGA has three projects under way: collecting aluminum for the September Relief Fund, nonperishable food items for the Valley Rescue Mission, and red, white, blue and camouflage fabric for a United We Stand flag.

The representatives develop and carry out their projects under the direction of their sponsor, Debora Morgan. She has sponsored the SGA for several years and feels that it teaches the students responsibilities, creativity, use of technology and community service.

"I like being in SGA because adults finally listen to my ideas and I get to expand my creativity," said Tyler Keeton, one of the representatives.

"It has helped me to accomplish my dream of being a school leader and being helpful," Ashley Reynolds said.

"We do a lot of stuff," Jamia Burt said. "We make decisions that affect the entire student body, we listen to each others ideas, and it is a lot of fun."

"It is a special opportunity," Mary Lana Rice said.

"I get to do stuff that other students don't get to do," Carl Purgerson said.

Student government is another way of providing opportunities and adventures along a path of learning.

The Bayonet's feature teacher

Cynthia Works

a fourth-grade teacher at Dexter Elementary School.

Personal: The Columbus native was born at Martin Army Community Hospital.

She is the youngest of six children, four brothers and one sister. Her father and three of her brothers retired from the military.

Works said she did not join the military because, "Once I found out soldiers did not get fashion boots, I decided the military was not for me."

Education: Works earned a bachelor's degree in education from Columbus State University and a masters in education from Troy State University. She is planning to return to CSU to complete her specialist degree in education.

Professionally: After entering college, Works said it was an easy decision to pursue a career in education.

"Teaching just came natural," she said.

Works did her student teaching at Wilbur Elementary School, a former school at Fort Benning.

Hobbies and interest: "Shopping. I like to shop, especially for shoes," she said.

Works also enjoys reading, mostly mysteries.

"You know, the 'who done-it' kind, by authors such as Agatha Christie," Works said.

Teaching style: "I use humor in the classroom," she said.

Works describes her teaching style as a mix of humor with patience, good listening skills, sound judgement and flexibility.

"The children call me 'Judge Cynthia,'" she said. "Because they know I practice fairness and listen to them whenever there is a problem."

Teaching goal: "I want the students to realize that they can use the skills they learn here — punctuation, speaking properly — all of that will affect them for a lifetime.

"If we can build a strong foundation now, we're doing the best job we can with our children," Works said.

Marriage needs nurturing

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Marriage and family researchers have discovered four negative traits that can lead to the death of a marriage. They are negative interpretations, invalidation, withdrawal and escalation.

Negative interpretations produce contempt and hurtful criticism. They are hard to detect and counteract after they have become cemented into the lifestyle of a marriage.

According to scripture the antidote is trust. "Love does not delight in evil but rejoices with the truth. It always protects, always trusts, always hopes, and always perseveres." (I Corinthians 13:6-7)

Invalidations are painful put-downs. Discounting the thoughts, feelings and character of your spouse damages your marriage. Focusing on a minor flaw when your spouse is expecting praise is a subtle form of invalidation.

Koop

The remedy for invalidation is edification. "Do not let any unwholesome talk come out of your mouths, but only what is helpful for building others up according to their needs, that it may benefit those who listen." (Ephesians 4:29)

Stonewalling, avoidance, disengagement and the silent treatment are all forms of withdrawal.

These behaviors are an adult form of playing hide and seek with your partner and are destructive to your marriage.

Successful marriages seek to handle differences quickly and fairly before they become major problems. (Ephesians 4:26-27)

Escalation occurs when spouses attack, bring up past mistakes and do not control their anger.

Escalation is often enhanced when we defend, justify and rationalize our own behavior. Escalation can be stopped dead in its tracks with positive responses. "Do not repay evil for evil or abuse for abuse; but, on the contrary, repay with a blessing. Those who desire life and desire to see good days, let them keep their tongues from evil and their lips from speaking deceit." (I Peter 3:9-10)

Is your marriage languishing? We can help you revitalize it. Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Funny how we do certain things

reflections

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

I found this article in my files and changed a few words for the Fort Benning community:

Funny how $100 looks so big when you take it to church and so small when you take it to the mall.

Funny how long it takes to serve God for one hour, but how quickly a team plays 60 minutes of basketball.

Funny how long a couple hours spent in church are, but how short they are when watching a movie.

Funny how we can't think of anything to say when we pray, but we don't have difficulty thinking of things to talk to a friend about.

Taylor

Funny how we get thrilled when a baseball game goes into extra innings, but we complain when the sermon runs a little long.

Funny how hard it is to read a chapter of the Bible, but how easy it is to read 100 pages of a new novel.

Funny how people want to get a front seat at a game or concert, but scramble to get the back pew at church.

Funny how we need two or three weeks notice to fit in a church event, but we can adjust our schedules to fit other events at the last minute.

Funny how we believe whatever the newspaper says but question what the Bible says.

Funny how everyone wants to go to heaven, but no one wants to hear about the cost.

Funny how most people have a Bible in their homes, but almost no one knows the basics of its stories.

Funny, isn't it?

Editor's note: Chaplain Taylor is the Garrison Chaplain. He is married and has three grown children.

Favorite wins racquetball tournament

Sgt. William A. Graves

Jerold Russell prepares to return the ball Saturday.

Soldier wins championship at Briant Wells

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

There would be no upset this year during the U.S. Army Infantry Center Open Racquetball Championship Saturday at Briant Wells Field House.

Tournament favorite, Jerold Russell, smashed his way through the field of 10 to take the title.

"He's an outstanding player who knows the game," said Seth Isidore, who lost in the third round and refereed the title match. "The game has three phases — the way you serve, the way you return the serve and the way you kill the ball — and he had all three mastered."

Russell

To kill the ball, players hit the ball and make it die at the front wall, thereby negating a possible return.

On numerous occasions, Russell used his speed and power to do just that.

The players in the open tournament play each other often, and they knew Russell was the man to beat, Isidore said.

"Right now, he's the best player on post," he said.

Still, even with the daunting task of dethroning "the man," the players had a great time, and the tournament reinforced the camaraderie they share.

"It's not a matter of who wins or loses," Isidore said. "It's about coming out and enjoying friends and playing good racquetball.

"The person you play with on the racquetball court is going to be your friend forever," he added. "The bond is tight."

That reasoning probably helped him overcome his third-round loss.

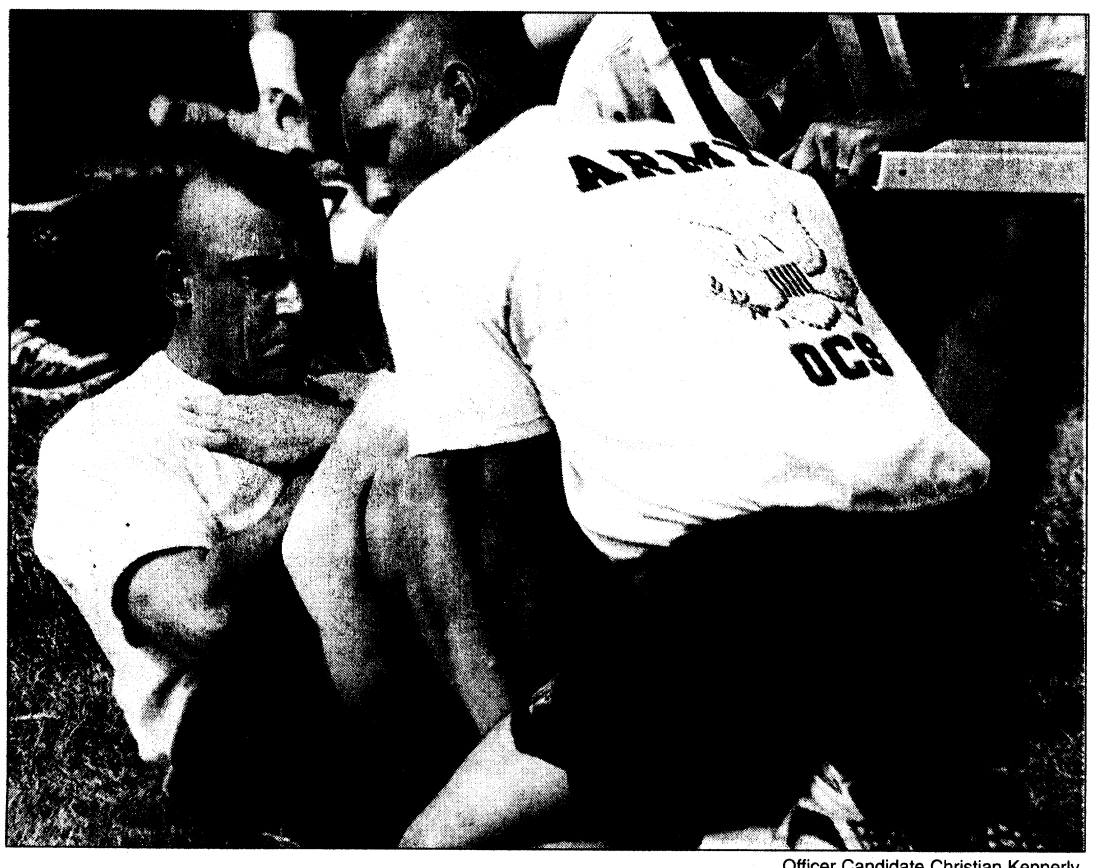
"Old age caught up with me," Isidore said. "When you try to move and your foot stays right there, you're not going to move. The young kids have it now."

Isidore was not the only one who was tired at the end of the day.

"I'm exhausted but happy," Russell said after his win.

Racquetball tires players physically and mentally. In fact, he said the game is 50 percent mental and 50 percent physical.

"The key is to know the little things that get inside of their head and try to take them out of their game," Russell said.



He thought his physical play was decent, too, thanks to his return of serve.

"(Return of serve) is important because you put your opponent on the defensive right away, which means, more than likely, he's running to the back of the court to try to just put it back in play," Russell said.

Once in that predicament, his opponents had little chance to win the point because the inevitable kill shots that followed were blazing and accurate.

Ronnie Williams overcame six other players to capture the 40-year-old and over tournament, and Carmen Foster took home the novice trophy.

For more information about upcoming events or how to play the game, call Nancy Hadley at 545-4726.

Army officer candidates win third straight year

Soldiers take Joint Military Athletic Competition title

Officer Candidate Christian Kennerly
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS)

For the third straight year, the officer candidates of 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, carried the victory "bomb" home to Fort Benning, after they won the Fall 2001 Joint Military Athletic Competition.

The "bomb," a 30-pound dummy round painted in the victor's colors, is the trophy for the one-day competition and rests comfortably again in Army OCS hands.

Competing against fellow officer candidates of the Air Force and Navy, Army won three of the seven athletic events and clinched the overall title with 15 points to Air Force's 14 and Navy's 13.

The competition originated in 1991 when an Air Force general suggested a friendly contest between the officer schools of the Air Force and Navy to foster unity among the branches.

Since then, the competition has grown into a rivalry between the four military branches, a distinction the Army has managed to capture all but once since it began competing in 1998.

The competition took place at the Air Force Officer Training School at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Ala.

Officer Candidate Troy Thomas, the battalion head coach for the competition and also a participating athlete, said he was very pleased

Benning Olympic weight lifter to compete Sunday

Oral surgeon gears up for competition

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

A Fort Benning oral surgeon will compete in the Olympic Weightlifting American Masters and World Team Trials at 3:30 p.m. Sunday in Hinesville, Ga.

Maj. Scott A. Noren will perform two types of lifts at the competition — the clean and jerk, where he will lift weights to his shoulders, stop, and jerk it over his head, and the snatch, where he will use a wider grip to lift weight over his head in one continuous motion. His goal is to lift 264 pounds in the harder-to-master snatch and 330 pounds in the clean and jerk.

"I feel pretty good," Noren said. "I'm getting second winds, and my technique is improving. I'm looking forward to increasing my total."

This weekend's event will help Noren prepare for the American Open, set for Dec. 8. His goal will be to reach a combined weight of approximately 560 pounds so he can qualify for The National Weightlifting Championships.

The key to success for both events will be flexibility, speed and timing.

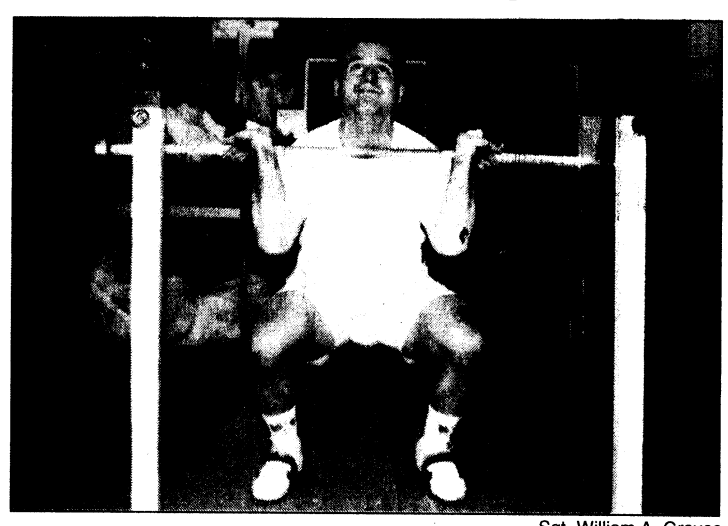
Noren trained with Shane Hamman, super-heavy weight Olympic champion, Nov. 3, in Colorado Springs, Colo., to help improve the fundamentals. The professional advice was invaluable, he said. For instance, he was reminded to take huge breaths before lifts and to keep straight during the snatch.

"It's the ability to notice the little things that makes a good coach," Noren said. "He knows your weakness and knows how to get you to overcome them."

Other preparations for the events includes staying healthy, ensuring not to injure himself, training hard and making each workout session count, he said. He currently works out four days per week.

"Sometimes you hit a plateau." he added. "To see jumps in weight, you have to always work on your technique to get better and accomplish your goal."

He has realized jumps in weight often. The Chicago, Ill., native has been an Olympic weight lifter since 1997. He was a power lifter from 1981 until then. The difference is power lifting involves the bench press, squat and dead lift instead of the clean and jerk and the snatch.



"It's amazing to flip large weights over your head that you otherwise wouldn't be able to do without a lot of hard work," 182-pounder said. "That's what drives me."

Ben Green, an Olympic weightlifting coach in Newnan, Ga., has been Noren's coach for 9 months.

"Scott's doing well," Green said. "In Olympic lifting, you need explosive power, and he has that. We're looking for him to have some good results."

"Scott's in good shape, and he's learning fast," he added. "He trains hard and is determined. He doesn't mind putting in a lot of time at the gym, and that gives him an edge on most people."

The hard work may pay big dividends. If Noren does well Sunday, he'll qualify for the 2002 World Masters Weight Lifting Championships in Brisbane, Australia.

Noren encourages all athletes, male or female, who want to compete or train with him, to call him at 545-6380.

The competition is Saturday and Sunday. It is at the Shuman Center located at 800B Tupelo Trail. Hinesville is just outside of Savannah, Ga.

Candidates: Excel at JMAC

with this year's effort.

"I was very proud of the performance the team put in," Thomas said.

Thomas said he attributes the win over Air Force and Navy to the high physical standards of Army OCS.

"The Army, as a whole, focuses more on physical fitness, and we have a good variety of athletes in our battalion," he said.

This year's team was coached and managed for the first time exclusively by the officer candidates themselves, but Thomas said Capt. Alan E. Preizer, A Company commander, was instrumental in making sure the team had what they needed to practice and compete.

For the last six months, a small green bomb, encased in glass, has resided in the OCS Dining Facility.

Twice a year this bomb becomes a symbol of pride for the winning officer candidate school, when it returns to JMAC as the top trophy of the event, as it did on Nov. 3.

The competition is divided into seven events: three-mile run, a super PT test (equivalent to the Army test plus pull-ups), super PT relay (each event is performed by a different individual), 100 meter relay, a litter carry, volleyball tournament and a tug-of-war contest.

The Army did well in these events by placing first in the three-mile run, super PT relay and litter carry. The turning point for the event was when Army came in second in the volleyball tournament. This led into the litter carry where Army won with a commanding finish.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members used the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right - 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important) while reducing. You keep "full" - no starvation - because the diet is designed that way. It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home. (For men too!)

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. women's Alpine Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today! Tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $9.95 - add .50¢ RUSH service to: MIDWEST ASSOCIATES, 2733 E. Battlefield Rd., Suite 308, Springfield, MO 65804. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team diet will do.

Schools implement strategic plan

Military education ranks among top in national studies

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Editor's note: This is the first of a five-part series that will take a closer look at the Department of Defense Education Activity's Community Strategic Plan, and specifically how it is being implemented in Fort Benning schools.

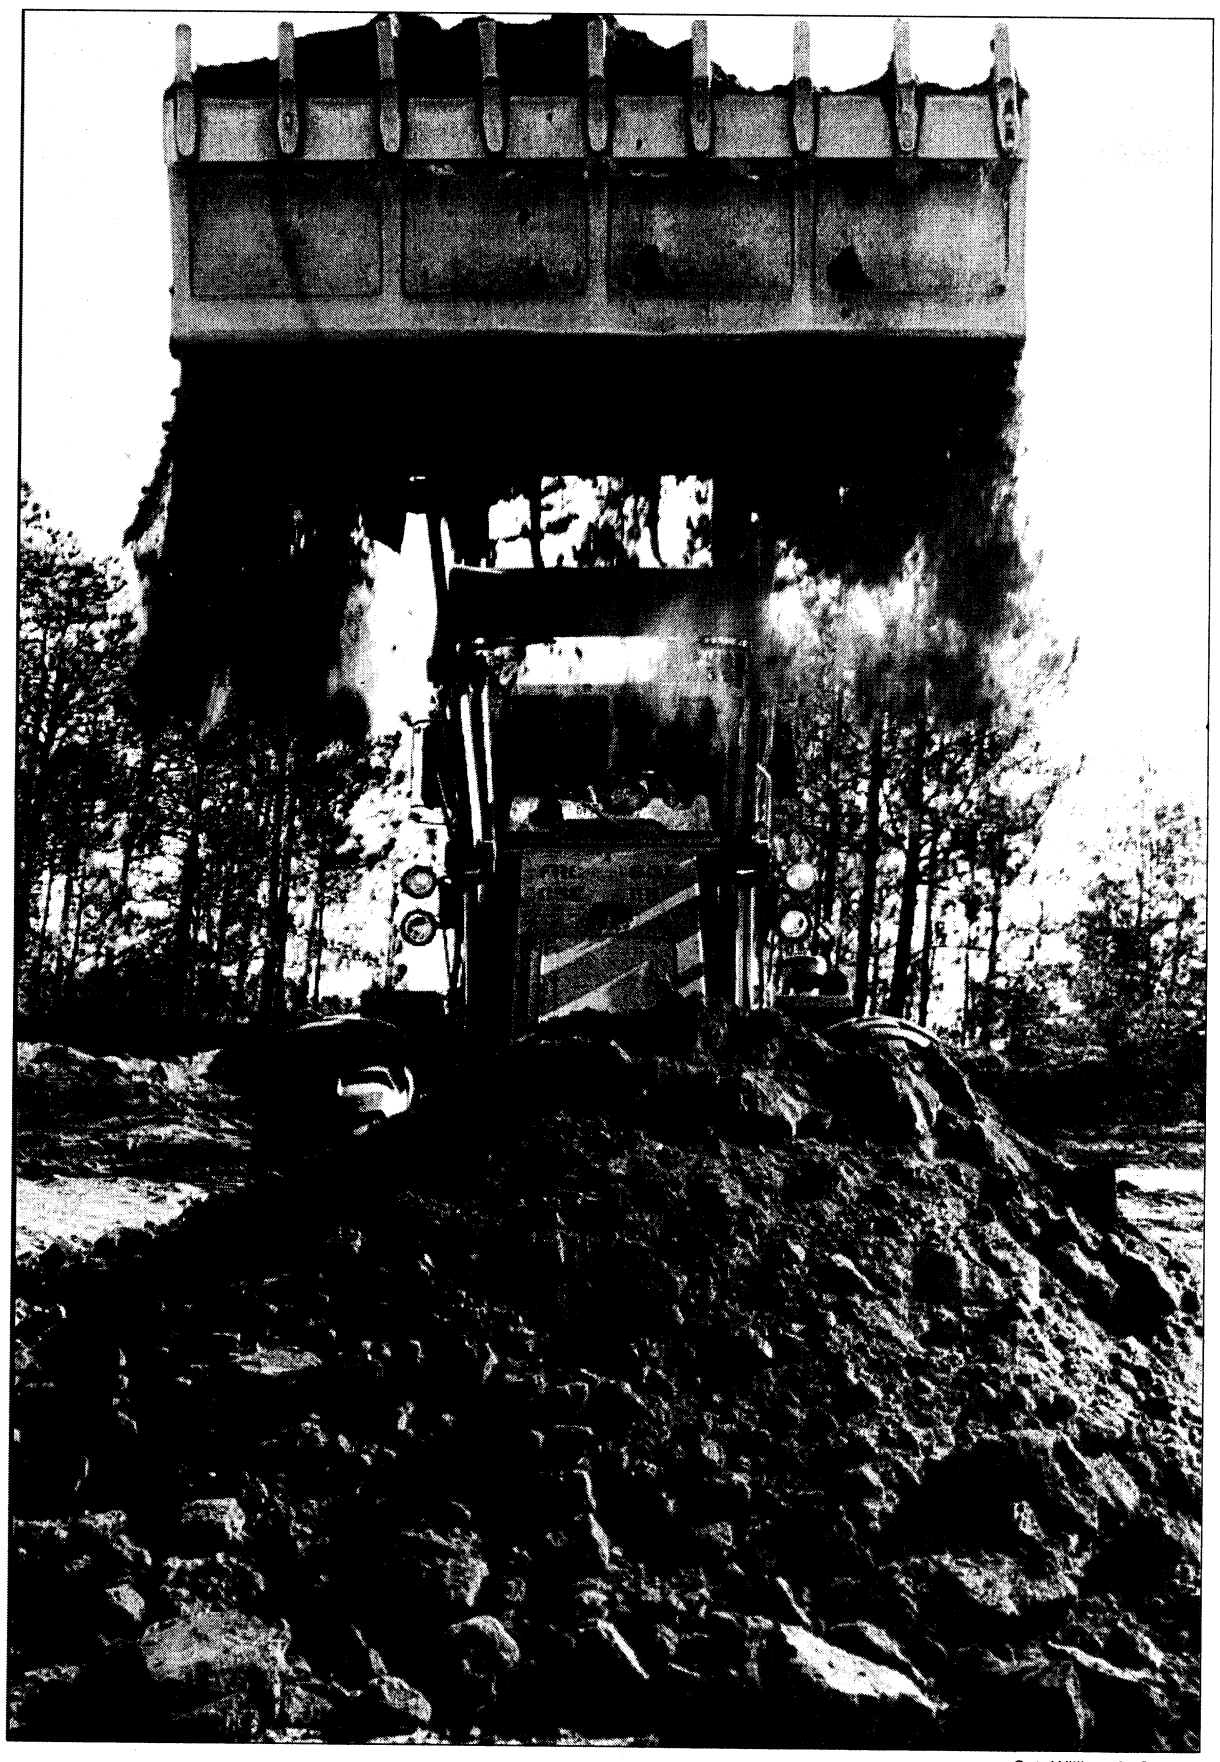
A recent report by a Vanderbilt University research team concludes the nation's public school systems could learn a lot from Department of Defense schools, here and abroad.

The report compared state systems nationwide with the Department of Defense Education Activity's 170 schools, which serve approximately 112,000 children of military personnel around the world.

If it were a state, the report said, the DoDEA system would rank first or second nationally on the National Assessment of Education Progress, a series of exams administered periodically to groups of students throughout the United States.



While the Vanderbilt research team and school systems across the nation analyze the success of Pentagon-run schools, DoDEA representatives say they won't rest on their laurels. The system implemented a series of forward-thinking strategic plans for improvement at the beginning of the 2001 school year.

The Community Strategic Plan is a five-year "road map for keeping DoDEA in the forefront ... as a leader in the nation for improving student performance and achievement," according to the published plan. It calls for the implementation of various strategic measures to improve four target areas: student achievement, management systems, workforce and partnerships with organizations that will facilitate progress in all areas.

Kathy Einhorn, Fort Benning School's director of curriculum, called these four goals "broad umbrellas" for a much more detailed, community

A new teenage driving law, which becomes effective Jan. 1, is going to impact teenage soldiers and family members.

"We've found young drivers and inexperience to be the major factors in car accidents," said Susan Sports. Georgia Department of Motor Vehicle Safety Public Information Officer. "This (law) was implemented to address that."

The law was approved by the Georgia General Assembly this year and signed by Gov. Roy Barnes.

The goal of the bill is to reduce crashes, serious injuries and traffic-related deaths involving teen-agers and their passengers. According to the Georgia Department of Motor Vehicle Safety, motor vehicle crashes are the leading cause of death for Georgia teens.

Thrifty and smart, not cheap

commentary

I'm not cheap. I'm smart and thrifty. I'm on a budget because I'm saving for a rainy day.

When I tell people this, the harsh comments like, "You're so cheap," and, "I can't believe you use coupons," disappear.

I love finding bargains, and discount stores are some of my favorite places to shop. You can save tons of money. I get a kick out of buying something at one of those stores and then finding the same item at department stores. Don't get me wrong, I shop at those places too, but only when there is a sale.

Sales are important. Why pay the full price for something when you can wait a couple of weeks and save money? It may not be there, but my rule of thumb is if I was meant to have it, it will be there when I return.

True bargains can be found at thrift stores and yard sales. Like they say, "One man's trash is another man's treasure."

My mom got me interested in yard sales and thrift stores. We loved getting up early on Saturdays to go to yard sales and to Buckhorn, a flea market in my hometown, Mebane, N.C. I have found so many bargains at these places — name brand clothing, appliances, furniture and more.

You may have to haggle with yard sellers. If they want $5 for a shirt, you have to be convincing on why they should sell it to you for $3.

Remember, bargains can be found anywhere, including the annual Benning Bazaar 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Sunday at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Coupons are also a must. I scour the Sunday newspaper for coupons on my favorite foods and products. A dollar saved here and 50 cents there really does make a difference.

And when I go to the grocery store, I use value cards. I don't care if they know how much bread I buy as long as I save money.

There are other ways I'm thrifty. The dollar theater is my friend. The only way you'll find me at the regular-priced theater is if I'm on a date.

Being thrifty also involves looking for the best restaurant deals. I'll order something from a kid's menu in a heartbeat. I also love to visit restaurants that offer super value menus.

I admit, some of the things I do could be questioned as being cheap. For instance, I'll order water with lemon. When it arrives, I add sugar. Guess what? Now I have lemonade.

Being thrifty is hard work, but it means more money in my pocketbook and bank account.

commentary

I don't handle change well. The kind you find beneath the couch cushions I mean.

I've never been much of a saver. A penny earned is a penny spent I always say.

But what I lack in reserve I make up for in thrift.

I'm a bargain hunter, a treasure seeker and a trash comber. I love yard sales, thrift shops and junk stores.

One of my favorite finds is an ornate mirror that rests on my mantel.

"I love that piece. Where did you find it?," I'm frequently asked, because those who know me well know I'm not ashamed to reveal sources or prices. I proudly reply, "In a junk shop."

We're not talking Ye Olde Junque Shoppe here. I do mean Junk shop with a capitol J — the reason I keep a supply of hand sanitizer in the van.

I had to dig through some dirt to get to this mirror, and then, get this, I had to pry it from the medicine cabinet it was attached to. That's right, my prize piece once hung in somebody's bathroom, a shabby-chic portal to the bandaids, Brylcream and BenGay.

I'm not alone in my passion for trashin' — it's popular and acceptable everywhere, perhaps nowhere so much as the military community.

Military families have learned to be thrifty as a matter of necessity and practicality. Curtains and carpets fit here, but they don't fit there. The goods get damaged or they don't show up at all. You know the drill.

As usual, we've made the most of our unique situation. We've learned to downsize, economize and compromise. We've learned to take pride in our resourcefulness and use it to our advantage.

Case in point — the Fort Benning Thrift Shop. It's a great way to off-load used goods or find affordable furnishings, clothing, appliances, toys and whatnot.

The thrift shop is run on a donation or consignment basis, with the consignor pocketing 75 percent of the selling price of each item.

The rest of the money goes to the Officers' Spouses' Club, where it's distributed to various charities, community organizations and scholarship funds.

It's staffed mostly with volunteers, spouses and retirees who give their time and energy to help our community help itself.

Each year the thrift shop generates tens of thousands of dollars for Fort Benning folks. Talk about a win-win situation. I clean out my basement, make a little pocket change, and help someone with their education.

And it's a great place for a treasure-hunter like myself to find baubles from all over the world for a mere pittance.

Resourceful. Economical. Just the way I like it.

Commander thanks Fort Benning community

P.J. and I are delighted to be back at the Home of the Infantry. Fort Benning really is the best military installation I've seen. It is that way because of you. You care enough to take care of the post and the people who live and work here.

Further, the relationship we enjoy with our civilian neighbors is unparalleled — they truly care about us and openly support us.

My goals for Fort Benning are simple:

My first priority is to train our young soldiers and train them to standard.

We will continue to ensure that Fort Benning is a safe place to live and work.

We are a force projection installation. We must ensure our soldiers are fully deployable and can be deployed with little advanced notice.

We must not fear change. We need to embrace change. We must look at what we do with fresh eyes.

We need to continue to evolve and grow, adjusting to the demands placed on us by the American people, especially during these trying times.

My thanks go out to the wonderful men and women from our reserve component forces who are putting their civilian jobs and lives on hold by being here to help us secure our post and train our soldiers.

Finally, let us continue to make Fort Benning the best place in the Army to train, work, live and raise a family.

I am looking forward to working with and meeting you.

Cemetery shouldn't remove flowers

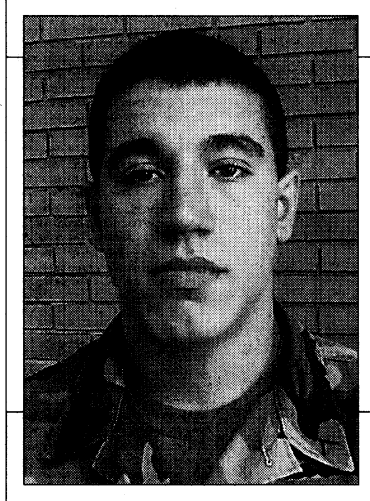
I am writing concerning the Fort Mitchell National Cemetery in Fort Mitchell, Ala. My husband, William P. Wiggins, is buried there. He is a veteran of the Korean War, and served his country with pride, honor and dignity.

I don't understand why the maintenance people at the cemetery who remove the flowers from the graves to mow, take the flowers to the edge of the woods to what they call a "holding area," without replacing them on the graves. They say they don't have time. This is not right, it's not fair, and its very disrespectful. My family and I are shocked and upset over this.

You would be upset if you took flowers to your loved one's grave, and went back the next day to find the maintenance workers had removed them and put them in the edge of the woods, and didn't even try to put them back.



I will not forget my husband, and someday I will be placed by his side in the Fort Mitchell National cemetery. I don't want the maintenance workers to remove flowers from our graves, which our loved ones brought to us out of the love, respect and honor they have in their hearts for my husband and me.

Drill sergeants awaken Alabama town

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Birmingham, Ala., residents woke to the voice of Fort Benning drill sergeants Nov. 21.

WERC Radio's Morning News with Kevin Miller, broadcast live from Infantry Hall, featured interviews with drill sergeants, rangers, airborne instructors and military police.

Miller, a former Army journalist, and the show's producer, Glenn Edwards, also an Army veteran, decided to take their show on the road after the Sept. 11 attacks.

"Instead of just talking about what's going on, we want to take our listeners to the events or bring the events to the people," Miller said. "We went to New York after the attacks, and now we're here to find out how the Army is conducting business in light of what happened on September 11."

Miller interviewed soldiers, two at a time, in half-hour segments, each segment focusing on a different aspect of Army training.

He asked his guest to explain their jobs in such a way his civilian audience could understand.

"Simplify for our listeners," he urged, as his guests responded to questions such as, 'How do you transform an individual from a civilian to a soldier?,' 'What's the job of an infantryman?,' 'How do you stay motivated?,' 'Where do you come up with those cadences?,' 'What is a ranger?,' and 'How do you teach a soldier to jump out of a perfectly good airplane?'

Sgt. First Class Orlando Pendleton, an airborne instructor with the 1st Battalion (airborne), 507th Parachute Regiment, took advantage of his air time to wish his family in Birmingham a happy Thanksgiving.

The Birmingham native also explained his job as an airborne instructor and talked Miller through a parachute landing fall on the air.

"It was fun, very relaxed," Pendleton said. "Having a microphone in front of you is not like having a camera in your face. It was real laid back, just talking. Then (Miller) asked me to explain a parachute landing fall, and he stood up and did it step-by-step."

The show was frequently interrupted for commercials, weather and traffic updates, and Miller and Edwards used the time to reminisce about their own military experiences. Miller joined the Army in 1986 and was stationed at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind. He later served with the U.S. Army Reserves in Panama and Turkey.

At 34, Edwards is considering re-enlisting, this time with the Air National Guard.

"The Army's just a little too strenuous at my age," he said.

Holiday: Soldiers enjoy special meal

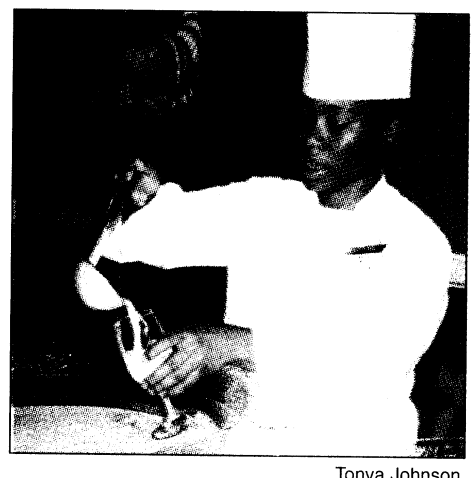
Johnson, manager of Warrior Inn. "Whether soldiers are going home or not, we wanted to prepare a special meal to let our fellow soldiers know how important they are to us."

Johnson said it took her staff two weeks to prepare for the meal for more than 800 soldiers, which included decorating the cafeteria and preparing the menu.

"It was hectic, but I'm happy with the way everything turned out," she said.

Master Sgt. Carolyn Lewis, food advisor, said the facility decided to serve the Thanksgiving meal the day before the holiday so more soldiers would be able to come.

"We served our meal on Thanksgiving last year, and not as many soldiers as we expected came. Most probably went home or spent Thanksgiving with their friends," she said. "This year, we wanted everyone to have the opportunity to come without having to choose between here or eating somewhere else on the same day."



Turkey, roast beef, mashed potatoes, sweet potatoes, dressing and cranberry sauce were some of the items served in the buffet-style line by officers and NCOs from the different companies under the 36th Engineer Group.

Pfc. David Harker, 690th Medical Company, said he enjoyed his Thanksgiving meal.

"The meal was delicious, and I especially enjoyed the sweet potatoes," he said. "I can't get enough of them."

Staff Sgt. Felicia Gladney, 36th Engineer Group, also enjoyed the meal.

"I'm glad I came," she said. "This gave me a chance to support the dining facility and eat with the troops."

Planning: Five-year plan to keep DoDEA schools sharp

approach to improvement.

The plan offers direction and an ultimate destination for all DoDEA schools, but it's up to the individual district to decide what route it will take to get there, Einhorn said.

"The plan establishes a consistency for all DoDEA schools, so no matter where you transfer within the military, you'll know that all schools are headed in the same direction, with the same goals in mind," she said. "But the plan also establishes autonomy for each school system.

"For example, goal one: highest student achievement. Whereas our number one focus at Fort Benning is literacy, another post might be centering on math, because that's where they've identified a need. But ultimately we're all working toward the same outcome — highest student achievement," Einhorn said.

This isn't the first time DoDEA has implemented a strategic plan. Though systemwide results from the 1995-2000 Community Strategic Plan were deemed an overall success according to standardized test scores and evaluation measures established at the onset, the plan was considered by many to be an "overwhelming undertaking," with 10 goals and 42 benchmarks.

The new plan has been streamlined, simplified and personalized to meet the needs of the individual school district. A leadership team with representatives from all stakeholder groups — parents, teachers, principals and superintendents, including Dr. Dell McMullen, Fort Benning School's superintendent, — developed the new plan objectives.

"It's a much more focused plan compared to the last," said Gail Wilson, director of accountability for Fort Benning Schools.

"We brought together all the right people to establish a concise plan that would address everything that goes into creating a successful school system — technology, safety, education materials and equipment, funding and staffing. You name it, it's covered."

Wilson said Fort Benning schools will be providing parents with information about DoDEA's Community Strategic Plan.

It can also be viewed on line, at www.odedodea.edu.

New law: More practice required before license issued

to gain experience and skills before they receive their license.

Before a teen can apply for a permanent driver's license, he or she must have 40 hours of supervised experience, with six hours required at night. If the teen has taken and passed a driver education course, then only 20 hours of supervised driving is required, including six at night. The hours must be certified by a parent, legal guardian or responsible adult.

"We hope parents train their teen-agers beyond 20 or 40 hours," Sports said. "We also encourage parents to take their teens out on a rainy night, show them how to merge on the expressway and teach their teens how to change a flat tire and learn the different parts on a vehicle."

Sports said most parents are not aware of the new guidelines, which concerns her.

"We're asking parents to take responsibility," Sports said. "Before this, most parents may have been involved, a little, in teaching their children how to drive, but now we're putting more burden on them. Now they must keep track with teaching their teenagers."

All applicants under 18 must also complete an Alcohol and Drug Awareness Program, which is taught in the Georgia State School System before receiving their drivers' licenses. Those who are not in school should contact their local State Highway Patrol Office for information on how to take the course.

After teenagers receive their licenses, they must follow certain guidelines. They are not allowed to drive on public roads, streets or highways between midnight and 6 a.m. nor can they have more than three other passengers under 21 in the vehicle who are not members of the driver's immediate family.

Drivers under 18 can have their license suspended for six months if they receive four or more points on their license within a consecutive 12-month period.

"We've had parents and grandparents call, and most are in favor of the new law," Sports said. "They're glad they don't have to spend the night pacing the floor worried about their teen-ager."

Phillip Thompson, a 16-year-old family member, who plans on getting his license next year, doesn't like the new law.

"It seems like a hassle," he said. "My parents work a lot so I don't know when I'll get the 40 hours in. I also dread hearing my parents constantly nag and complain about how I drive while riding with me."

Sports said emancipated minors, teenage soldiers or spouses who are 16 or 17 and do not have their license must also have the supervised experience. All they need to do is have someone over 21 validate their required driving hours and go with them to the DMV office.

Michael Lane, a legal assistance attorney with the Staff Judge Advocate, said the new law wouldn't affect a lot of soldiers.

"I don't think there's going to be a huge impact," he said. "We may have two or three soldiers per cycle affected by this.

"But there are very few soldiers who finish basic training and A.I.T. (Advanced Individual Training) who don't have their license."

People over 18 who do not have a learner's permit and wish to receive their license need the required driving hours, and can swear before a DMV official they have completed the requirements.

Teens who have a license from another state and move to Georgia do not have to complete the required hours.

They only need to transfer their licenses, but they must be Georgia residents who have lived in the state at least 30 days.

The Georgia DMV released a brochure, the Parental Guide to New Teenage Driving Requirements, which outlines how the laws will affect teens and their parents. It also includes guidelines, requirements, a driving skills checklist and optional driving log.

The free brochures are available at all DMVs or at www.dmvs.ga.gov.

soldiers."

The program, initially funded last year, offers active-duty soldiers a computer, free internet access, a free printer and free books and tuition — all in an effort to help soldiers continue their education, said Dr. Aaron Lucas, Southeast Troy State University regional director. With approximately 3,000 enrolled student soldiers, EArmyU also aims to help increase enlistments and retention in the Army, he said.

Through EArmyU, soldiers have been able to continue distance learning while on TDY or even deployed, Hovis said.

Troy State is one of the major proprietors of the program which is set to go Armywide within the next few years, Lucas said. Although only four soldiers will be able to actively participate in the graduation, as many as 11 more will receive their college diplomas.

"EArmyU is working well," Lucas said. "The Army should be proud of being in the forefront of this thing."

The Army has become the forerunner in the aim for higher education, Lucas said. Other services are following suit with similar education programs.

Hovis said she would advise soldiers not only to take advantage of the vast resources EArmyU provides but to take advantage of the program, period.

"We have a lot of satisfied students," she said. "EArmyU is a way for soldier-students to make a personal accomplishment. After all, someone with an education is a (greater) benefit to the Army and to the civilian sector."

Soldiers and civilians gathered Tuesday to pay homage to fallen comrades during a wreath-laying ceremony at the Main Post Cemetery.

Lt. Col. Kurt Rotter and Sgt. Maj. Manfred Jerabek, German army liaison staff, hosted the annual event in an effort to bring recognition to the sacrifices made by soldiers of not only the German military, but all countries.

Post leaders, members of the German Club, Heimatland, and representatives of POW and MIA organizations stood side-by-side with Fort Benning soldiers and veterans who gathered to honor past heroes.

"Celebrating the Volkstauertag, the German people's day of mourning, we remember all the soldiers and civilians who made the ultimate sacrifice, serving their country in war or peacetime," Rotter said. "We are gathered to commemorate the 44 German soldiers, from private to brigadier general, whose final resting place is here. All are victims of war, who lost their lives because of their ideology or their political convictions."

"Never forget," was the message Rotter hoped to impart on guests.

Bernd Kuebart, guest speaker from the Consulate General of the Federal Republic of Germany in Atlanta, Ga., spoke after Rotter.

Kuebart told the crowd the tense past between Germany and the U.S. was over, and now each country is building a stronger relationship.

"We will not forget the helping hand of the U.S. during the Berlin blockade," Kuebart said. After the recent tragic events of Sept. 11, Kuebart told the crowd the two countries share a common enemy, one he described as "debellare," a Latin word meaning to wage total war without the hope of negotiating a peaceful outcome.

"An attack against one of us is an attack against all of us," Kuebart said.

After a wreath was laid at the grave site of a German soldier, a lone bugler played "Taps" at the conclusion of the ceremony.

Officers experience no problems after Sept. 11

ICCC students stand together following attacks

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

There have been numerous incidents across the United States in which Muslims have faced problems such as glares and name-calling since the Sept. 11 attacks.

That hasn't been the case for international officers who are students in the Infantry Captains Career Course.

Maj. Raid Al Quran, 37, who is from Jordan, said that people have continued to treat him in a positive way.

"People are now more concerned about me," Al Quran said. "They want to help me and give me advice such as 'Be careful because there are bad people around.' But I haven't met anyone like that."

Capt. Nasser Al Shammair, 29, who is from Saudi Arabia, also said that he hasn't faced any problems since Sept. 11.

"To tell you the truth, people in the United States are good," Al Shammair said. "They realize all Muslims aren't bad."

Al Quran said he is still upset by the attacks and was in class when they occurred.

"It was very sad to see that happen in front of my eyes," he said.

"At first I thought it was an accident, but when the second plane went in, I knew it wasn't an accident," he said.

All of Al Quran's family, including his wife, Wafa, and two sons, Esom and Raee´d, continue to live in Jordan, and they are also upset about the attacks.

"They were astonished. They didn't like it at all," Al Quran said. "I can't imagine anyone who could be happy about killing innocent people. It's such a barbaric act."

Al Shammair's family in Saudi Arabia were outraged by the acts, and they were also concerned about his safety.

"I let them know that I was safe and all right," he said.

Both have spoken to other international soldiers and said most haven't experienced any major problems since Sept. 11.

They know of one incident involving an officer who couldn't board an aircraft after the Sept. 11 attacks.

Al Quran and Al Shammair stressed that Islam is a peaceful religion.

"The terrorists were extremists. Islam involves living together in peace no matter where we come from. It's also a religion of forgiveness," Al Quran said.

"I can't imagine why anyone would judge a whole group based on extremists," he added.

Al Shammair agreed.

"In Islam, terrorism is forbidden. If you kill someone, Allah will account for you," he said. "People shouldn't compare Islam and Sept. 11. Every religion has good people and bad people."

Islam is the world's second largest religion with over a billion followers. Christianity is the only religion with more followers.

There are more than six million Muslims in the U.S., and Islam is the fastest growing religion in this country.

The International Student Training Detachment and instructors and staff from ICCC have asked all Muslim soldiers to report any incidents of harassment immediately.

"I told them to let me know if anyone has treated you differently," Capt. J.B. Vowell, chief of Tactics Team 1, ICCC, said.

"My concern was people would take their anger from the Sept. 11 attacks out on these students and fellow officers. We know that's not Islam, and we also know the attacks weren't the students' faults."

Al Quran, who leaves to go back to Jordan next month, is grateful for the way the Fort Benning and Columbus communities have treated his classmates and him during their stay here.

"I like America, and I have met a lot of friendly people," he said.

"Columbus is a nice city, and I enjoyed being here."

School trains cold-weather techniques

Army lays concerns to rest

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The concern about whether U.S. troops are trained to fight during Afghanistan's harsh winter was put to rest when officials from the Army's Mountain Warfare School briefed media at the Pentagon Nov. 20.

The Mountain Warfare School in Jericho, Vt., — run by the Vermont Army National Guard — trains soldiers in cold-weather operations, specifically mountain mobility, said Lt. Col. Lambert, the school commander. Many of the students are special forces or rangers, Lambert said. The school is not restricted to combat arms, but most of the students are from combat arms units, he added.

The school trains several hundred troops a year, but Pentagon officials said the school is unable to say if all the soldiers involved in Operation Enduring Freedom are mountain warfare trained.

"The school's responsibility is to train soldiers, they have no way of monitoring school-trained students on deployments," said Army spokesman Col. Tom Begines. "I can say that I'm very confident that whatever soldiers have been deployed, they have been very well trained for whatever missions and whatever environment they're in."

Currently soldiers from the 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y., are in Uzbekistan. The 10th Mountain Division and the Mountain Warfare School work together closely, Lambert said. Soldiers from the division train with the school annually and also assist with operations, he added.

"When the school first opened in 1983, most of our first students were from the 10th Mountain Division, and we have a fantastic ongoing relationship," said Col. Gary Varney, deputy chief of staff for operations at the Mountain Warfare School.

Mountaineer training is a grueling two weeks with 15-hour days, Lambert said. Trainers teach soldiers how to use adverse terrain and weather conditions to their advantage, and trainers specialize in how to operate in mountainous terrain, under all climatic conditions, he said.

The school also teaches preventive measures, Lambert said, adding that's critical because Afghanistan gets large amounts of snow and has a significant amount of varying terrain.

"We train soldiers to be able to take care of themselves and prevent cold-weather injuries, while maintaining the ability to contribute to the mission," Begines said. "Historically many casualties are not from enemy fire, but from the cold weather."

The two-week course is held in the summer and winter. Each season has a different curriculum.

Some of the training held in the summer course is cliff evacuation, mountain river crossing and balance climbing. During winter training, some of the instruction goes over effects of cold weather on weapons, avalanche hazards and rescue, glacial movement operations and bivouac considerations.

Besides the two weeks of training troops get when they visit Vermont, installations can request mobile training teams tailored to meet their special needs, Lambert said. Since Operation Enduring Freedom, the requests for the mobile teams have increased, but Lambert did not say how large the increase has been.

"The bottom line is that these skills have always existed widely in the Army," Begines said. "So there is not a shortfall that needs to be met. It's a matter of maintenance and ensuring that the installation continues to train the trainer on a recurring basis."

Cold-weather training is done mainly at the installation level, Lambert said.

The school then reinforces unit-level training or trains soldiers to go back to their unit and give the instruction, Lambert said.

Transformation, Objective Force forge ahead

Future Combat System yet to be developed

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki may not know exactly what the future Objective Force will look like, but he said he is sure it will be built as a networked system of systems, keep the Army from becoming irrelevant and be fielded this decade.

Shinseki made those observations while addressing an Association of the U.S. Army symposium held in Washington Nov. 8-9.

"'I don't know' does not mean 'I don't care,'" Shinseki said in reference to moving transformation ahead without firm blueprints on the table for the Objective Force. "The science and technology insights and breakthroughs are being discovered today in labs, workshops and simulations centers all across the country. We're looking for capabilities that will gird a capabilities-based force for the full spectrum of missions we will face in the 21st century."

Shortly after assuming the Army's top leadership position a little more than two years ago, Shinseki announced his vision for a future Objective Force that would be more deployable than current heavy divisions, yet have more lethal firepower than today's airborne and light divisions.

The move toward his vision is known as transformation.

The chief talked about the only map he has permanently placed in his office since he moved in. It depicts the landmass surrounding the Caspian Sea — including Afghanistan — in Central Asia. Because of the remoteness and poor lines of communication in the area, Shinseki said it reminded him on a daily basis of the importance of transformation.

"We must be able to project power anywhere in the world — not just in the easily accessible areas with multiple air and sea ports of debarkation, but in the most remote, landlocked and infrastructure-poor areas as well," Shinseki said.

"That goal was critical as we crafted the Army vision over two years ago. Our current operations in Central Asia reinforce the need for Objective Force capabilities as we balance this global war against the asymmetrics of international terrorism with the regional threats that demand our attention and a need for conventional warfighting prowess."

The danger of the Army not transforming into a force that can project real sustainable combat power anywhere in the world is the Army becomes irrelevant to national security, he said.

The primary vehicle for transformation is the yet-to-be-developed Future Combat System.

The envisioned FCS will be networked to allow real-time situational awareness and require less logistics and maintenance than current combat systems. It will also be able to operate more effectively in joint operations.

However, transformation isn't just about new equipment, Shinseki said, it is also about people.

"All the weapons in the world are useless without the intellect, dedication and remarkable sense of duty of the American soldier walking point for our nation," he said.

"This is all about our soldiers; they remain the centerpiece of our formations. They are the ones who have won our past wars for 226 years; they are the ones who will win this war; and they will win the wars to come."

Shinseki said he will spend the remaining two years of his tenure as chief of staff of the Army building irreversible momentum to field the Objective Force this decade.

Mentioning last year's annual AUSA symposium where had he first announced the fielding of the controversial black beret, Shinseki got loud laughs when he said soldiers would not be issued umbrellas or brown aviator jackets in the coming year.

Number crunching students do the math

Course expands military, civilian numbers

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC

More than doubling in size since its last graduating class, the Departmental Resource Management Course at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation has not only expanded its student volume, but increased its civilian numbers as well.

"Since its inception, this class has attracted many civilians with law degrees and MBAs (masters in business administration)," said Dr. Russell Ramsey, visiting professor from Troy State University, who has auspices over the course.

The course, which teaches in-depth learning objectives that include economic reasoning, management theory, quantitative reasoning, system analysis and decision making, is midway through its duration and has already had impact, said students.

"We have begun to forge interpersonal relationships with international students working in similar fields," said Ruben Vicente, a government civilian, working in the quality systems department for the Argentine Navy.

"What is remarkable about this course is the variety of theories students bring to the table, help shape the course for future classes, Ramsey said.

Because of the approach taken to the course — a professional seminar, rather than classroom lecture — "professionals learn from professionals," Ramsey said.

"I'd have to say the interchange of ideas is probably one the most intellectually stimulating segments of the course along with the practical exercises," said Capt. Paulo Gomez of the Paraguay Navy, who works in human resources.

Practical exercises require students to work together in teams and apply strategy and policy in formulating budgets that range in scope from multiple departments to the national defense levels.

Various scenarios press students to adjust strategies in formulating a budget.

"Competing needs and abundant wants are problems we have to account for," said Maj. Cortazzo, a financial analyst with the Uruguay Air Force. "Circumventing the shortages is where thinking on the part of the whole group is very important."

With more adding of students and the increased diversity of classroom environment, we hope to eventually create an international network of budget and financial officials with good interpersonal relationships, understanding and idea sharing," Ramsey said.

Company comes together for TOW training

Soldiers team-up to accomplish MOS training

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the tenth story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

Weapons training continued for D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, as they gear up for their final weeks of infantry training.

D Co. spent Tuesday and Wednesday at Lee Field for training on the M220A tube-launched, optically-tracked, wire-guided system.

"The training they're getting out here is just to familiarize the soldiers with the TOW system," said Sgt. 1st Class Samuel Murphy, drill sergeant for first platoon.

The weapon system is an easily moved, heavy anti-tank weapon designed to attack and defeat armored vehicles and other hard targets, such as field fortifications.

Because the Army recently consolidated the 11 series, the 11H MOS (TOW system) training is key for the soldiers of D Co. who don't know what kind of unit will need them once they complete their training.

The 11Cs (mortarmen) of D Co. will not be assigned to a TOW company, but the training is still relevant, so they know the weapon system's capabilities.

"I'd like to be in a TOW unit," Pvt. Justin Bray said. "I'd like to be in a HMMWV (highly-mobile multi-purpose wheeled vehicle) rather than humping."

Bray liked the capabilities of the TOW, even though the technology has been around for a long time.

"It was good technology in the 70s," Bray said. "But it's kind of out-of-date now."

The system itself weighs 306 pounds with missile, 246 pounds without. The velocity of the missile when the round exits the launch tube is 175 meters per second.

The TOW weapon system has a wide range, spanning 65 to 3,750 meters and rounds can be launched as quickly as the gunner can re-load.

The M220A TOW system consists of; a tripod with friction locks, a traversing unit, a launch tube, a day sight, a night sight, and a missile guided system that functions as the "brain" of the weapon system.

The standard for setting up all the equipment from its carrying configuration is three minutes for one person.

The soldiers received their first segments of instruction on the TOW and got some hands-on experience, identifying the basic parts and assembling and disassembling the weapon system.

During normal usage, the weapon system is fired mainly from a HMMWV.

The TOW is very versatile and can also be mounted on other vehicles. The entire weapon system can be broken down and hand-carried, and it can also be used day or night.

Training on the TOW is the last new information the soldiers of D Co. will be presented with before graduation Dec. 14.

This week begins a week-long field training exercise that will culminate Dec. 7 with "The Bayonet," a challenging field problem based on the "The Crucible," that culminates boot camp for the Marine Corps.

Today the company begins their final FTX with a 15-mile foot march. The soldiers will carry 35-pound rucksacks while walking an average of 3 miles per hour. With rest breaks every hour, the foot march will take approximately 7 1/2 to 8 hours.

"The 25-miler is actually easier to do," Murphy said. "It's at the end of the FTX, so you're going in. Plus, the privates are motivated. You have missions to do and then you keep walking, it's just not as painful.

"For me, the 15-miler compares relatively to the 20-miler in ranger school because it's so miserable," Murphy said. "The pace is just incredibly slow."

The final FTX is the end of training for the soldiers of D Co. Graduation is only a week away after completion of "The Bayonet."

The training has been very rewarding and taught the soldiers a lot about themselves and what they are capable of.

"The drill sergeants have taught us we can do more things than we thought," Pvt. Carlos Santos said.

"Teamwork has really been emphasized," Santos added. "Either we'll use teamwork, or nothing's going to get done."

Training has rewarded Santos in more ways than one.

"It's better than working in a pizza parlor and going to school, which is what I was doing before I signed a ranger contract," Santos said.

63rd Engineers help Fort Benning save money

Soldiers work 24-hour ops, complete jobs

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The 63rd Engineer Company and Fort Benning scratched each other's back again Nov. 13 through Nov. 16.

Fresh off a mission of building force protection berms around post, the company performed three missions that gave them a chance to train at night and saved the post money in the process.

"It's a win-win situation," said Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Mitchell, platoon sergeant for 3rd platoon. "We received great training in a 24-operation environment, and the post is able to use the money they would have spent for the construction in other areas that would help improve the installation."

In fact, one job that required the construction of two small parking lots and the grading of the road leading to the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation training area, saved the post nearly $140,000, said Capt. Antoinette Gant, company commander. A contractor would have charged $160,000.

Soldiers also upgraded a tank trail for the Basic Combat Training Brigade and prepared the Garnsey trench line used by the Infantry Officer Basic Course for rebuilding.

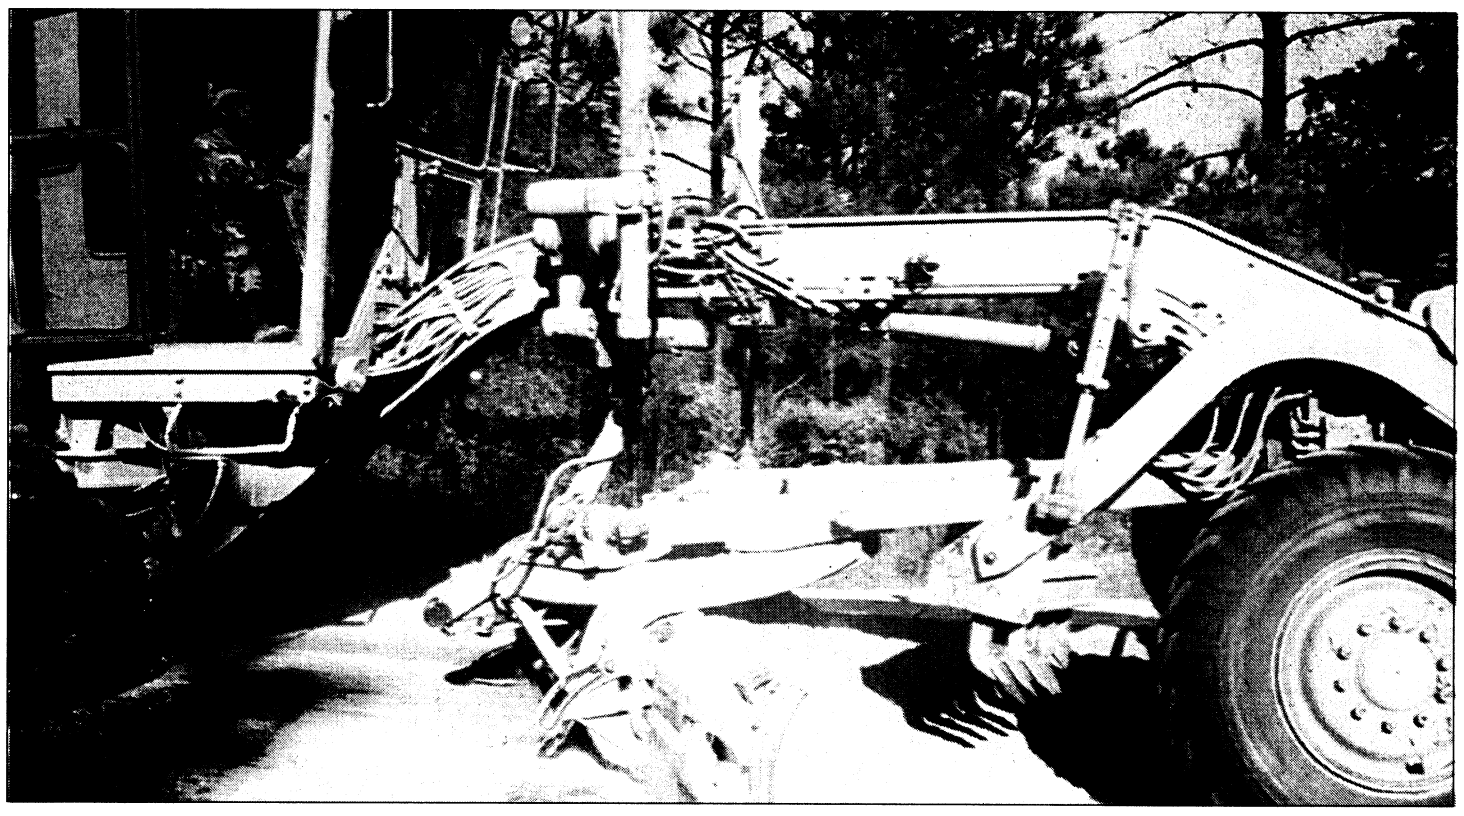
The missions helped soldiers feel more comfortable working with heavy equipment under the lights at night, Mitchell said.

"They learned how to compensate at night for things like depth and distance, and it reminded them of the various safety hazards that go along with that," Mitchell said. "Everyone did an outstanding job — the maintenance, supply and DFAC (dining facility) personnel included."

All three missions prepared the company to operate under combat conditions.

"If you don't train around the clock here at garrison, you won't be able to go to war and operate effectively," Mitchell said.

Soldiers gained confidence about future combat missions as a result of the missions.



"If we get the call of duty, we have to know the equipment and how to execute to standard," Pvt. Brandon Coles said. "This proves we'll do great things for the Army when that time comes."

Soldiers enjoyed the 24-hour operations, and the missions reminded them of important horizontal-construction engineering principles, such as the proper methods for stock piling, dirt loading and many other engineering tasks. Plus, they gave many a chance to receive valuable "stick" time on their equipment, Coles said.

"It was a great experience," Coles said. "With the expert tutelage of the non-commissioned officers we have, you can't beat it."

The work they provided Fort Benning was just another day at the office for the company.

"When most of the missions come down, they call us because they know we can get the job done," Coles said.

Reserve soldiers deploy to Fort Benning

Soldiers return to Fort Benning after ETS

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

After years of faithful military service, many soldiers decide to leave active duty and join the Reserves or National Guard.

But that does not mean these soldiers do not don the green uniform and report for duty when their country calls, full-time.

Just last month, military police officer Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins was a member of the 71st Military Police.

Jenkins officially left active duty Oct. 9, and enlisted into the 2145th Military Police Detachment, a reserve unit, Oct. 10.

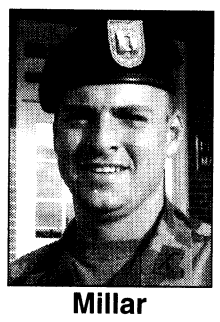
Jenkins

He began his new job as a LaGrange police officer.

No longer Staff Sgt. Jenkins, he was now Kyle, mild-mannered civilian.

Then one day while working at a crime scene, Jenkins received a call on the car radio.

The station dispatcher told Jenkins to call his reserve unit, ASAP.



Using his cell phone, he called his unit and was informed he had two hours to report to Fort Benning.

He was being re-activated.

"Never in my wildest dreams did I think I would be activated while serving in a reserve unit," Jenkins added.

Not only did his country need him to put back on the battle dress uniform full-time, his unit was deploying to Fort Benning for one year.

"I had already said my good-byes to friends and co-workers," Jenkins said.

Millar

Now Jenkins is back patrolling the streets on post.

He is again working in the traffic office at the Provost Marshal's Office as the assistant traffic NCO.

He has also resumed his role as team leader for the post's Special Reactions Team.

Along with Jenkins is former Fort Benning soldier, Capt. Matthew Millar

Millar served with both the 71st MP and the 988th Military Police Detachment while stationed at Fort Benning.

They, and 54 reservists, are now at Fort Benning patrolling the road, maintaining the peace and enforcing the law.

Millar, now serving as commander of the 2145th, was not as surprised to be activated while on Reserve-duty status.

He just found it humorous that his unit, out of Jacksonville, Fla., deployed to Fort Benning.

"After watching the attacks Sept. 11, I knew the unit would be called upon," Millar said.

"I just never thought I would be mobilized to Fort Benning."

Just as Jenkins and many other soldiers, Millar had began redefining himself after leaving active duty.

After completing four years of active duty service, he decided to join the Reserves.

He began a new job as director of business operations for a marketing company located in Amelia Island, Fla.

Millar is still a newlywed. He married his long time-girlfriend in April.

"I wanted to stay on active duty, but I wanted to stabilize my family, too," he said.

Millar said his soldiers are as professional and qualified to carry out the responsibilities of this mission as their active-duty counterparts.

He said Reserve soldiers bring a wealth of knowledge to the unit and the mission.

"These soldiers have a lot of skills and training they received at their civilian jobs," Millar said. "These are attributes that can be used to further develop the effectiveness of the unit's mission."

For these former active-duty soldiers, their role in the military is not much different.

But their life may never be the same again.

Former drill sergeants adjust

Instructors help transform soldiers in units

Sgt Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

At one time we all looked up to them, admired them for their professionalism, marveled at their vast knowledge of the military regulations, secretly began to pattern our military careers to mirror theirs. They are drill sergeants. Those strong, loud soldiers introduced us to our new lives as members of the Army. Across an ocean of trainees, the round-rigid rim of the infamous drill sergeant hat seems to float above an ocean of garrison headgear.

Sadly, their reign must end. After two to three years 'on the trail,' drill sergeants remove that unmistakable symbol of expertise in exchange for a beret and try to blend in with the rest of us.

But you can always pick one out — a sideways glance, a stern observation or some gesture or utterance ultimately gives any former instructor away.

For three soldiers, donning the beret not only means a change of duty, it is a change of life.

"When you are a drill sergeant for basic combat trainees, you are the "standard bearer," said Sgt. 1st Class Peter Rocha, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Rocha served as a drill sergeant at Fort Jackson, N.C. for three years prior to reporting to his current assignment as a career management NCO at the Office of Infantry Proponency 18 months ago.

Now as a member of a unit where his role as a leader is different, Rocha said he needed to make some adjustments when interacting with other soldiers.

He said it still remains his duty to correct soldiers though he is no longer a drill sergeant.

He admitted he has caught himself briefly placing a hand in his pocket or some other minor infraction he would not have tolerated during his years as a drill sergeant.

But he has never stopped striving to be the very best soldier.

This infantryman believes his years as an instructor not only made him a better soldier and leader, but the experience has made him a more rounded person.

"As an instructor, I had to deal with all sorts of issues I never had to deal with in an infantry unit," Rocha said.

An issue such as training and working with females is an opportunity few infantrymen experience.

Sgt. 1st Class Andrea Martin, an instructor at the U.S. Army Fort Benning Drill Sergeant School, said her experiences as a drill sergeant have made her a strong leader.

I have a better sense of the bigger picture, and I am better prepared for the challenges of working with soldiers who may not want to do things correctly, she said.

The transportation specialist will be 'coming off of the trail' this December, at which time she will have completed four years as a drill sergeant.

Her first two years were spent at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., before she reported to the drill sergeant school.

Martin applied for the instructor position at the school when she learned there was a need for more female instructors.

Nonetheless, Martin knows it is time to dedicate more time to soldiering and training than molding students into leaders and better soldiers.

"I am looking forward to getting back to basic soldiering and being a squad leader or platoon sergeant in a regular unit," she said.

Martin will report to the White House transportation staff when she leaves Fort Benning early next year, a position her experience as a drill sergeant has not exactly prepared her for.

It will be different working with civilians and soldiers in the same unit, Martin said.

She admits she will have to make some changes when working with others in a regular unit, but those inevitable changes have not dampened her enthusiasm for soldiering.

It will be a big transition, but I have worked with a lot of people and my experiences have helped me gain new insight and a new outlook, Martin said.

Everyone coming off the trail however does not share that enthusiasm.

For Staff Sgt. Joseph Martinez, also an instructor at the drill sergeant school, leaving drill instructor status after three and a half years will be anything but a smooth transition.

"As a drill sergeant, we are strict about following regulations and maintaining standards.

"To personally experience the horror stories told by former drill sergeants about undisciplined soldiers is going to be a lot to take," Martinez said.

"I can adapt," he said. "I am a professional. I will try not to notice the little things."

Martinez served as a drill sergeant at 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment on Sand Hill for two years before instructing at the U.S. Army Drill Sergeant School. The infantryman will report to Fort Lewis, Wash., later this year.

COMMUNITY

SECTION B

Community shares time-honored tradition

Holiday lights ceremony will be Dec. 10

Regina L. Small
Bayonet correspondent

Fort Benning will host it's traditional Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony at 5:45 p.m. Dec. 10 at the Field of Four Chaplains, adjacent to The Infantry Center Chapel.

"The Christmas Tree and Menorah Lighting Ceremony has been a tradition on Fort Benning for at least 34 years," said Barbara Vining, installation staff chaplains secretary.

Due to the Sept. 11 incident, Chaplain Maj. Tim Bedsole said people are turning to their families, friends and faith. The holidays this year will be different for many families.

"One lesson learned is to value life more than material goods," Bedsole said. "This is the season of hope. The lights symbolize hope."

The ceremony is to honor both Christian and Jewish faiths. It is a time to remember the reason for the season. There will be a large-scale nativity scene and a Christmas tree and menorah lighting.

The Infantry Band will begin the ceremony with holiday music. Santa Claus will arrive. His arrival will not be in the traditional way, by sleigh, but in a Fort Benning fire truck.

A special event this year will be a performance by the Faith Middle School Choir. There will be audience-encouraged participation singing of Christmas carols.

Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, along with a child from the audience, will light the Christmas tree and menorah.

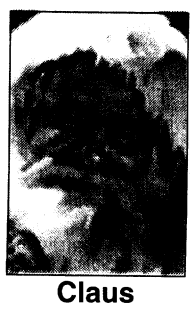
"My favorite part is seeing the smiles and excitement of the children. This is a happy time of year and families come together," Vining said.

There will be candy and treats for the children. Bedsole said more than a hundred children are expected to attend. They have tried hard to provide candy and treats for the children. However, donations are welcome.

Spc. Andrew Prater enjoyed last year's event.

"I took my children and they enjoyed it," he said. "I was able to spend time with them and see the excitement in their eyes. That was the best part."

This is Bedsole's first Christmas here at Fort Benning. His family was last stationed in Europe.



"I look for the warmth and friendship within the community," he said. "This is a time for sharing. We picked up and enjoyed a lot of German holiday traditions. Right now I am thinking of how much we enjoyed and will miss some of them."

Santa coming to town

Big man will be on post 'for training'

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Santa Claus is coming to town, er, post. The big man himself will pay a visit to the home of Fort Benning's new commander and his wife, Brig. Gen. Paul and P.J. Eaton, Thursday.

Claus

Claus will be accompanied by an undisclosed number of elves and Santas-in-training, and has requested an audience with Fort Benning children to "assist in the technical aspects of training new recruits."

Claus said he hopes post children will help his novice gnomes fine-tune their caroling skills and tweak their mirth-making magic.

"They're pretty green," Claus said, in a letter addressed to Fort Benning's first family. "I can't imagine a better place to bring these young recruits up to snuff than right there at Fort Benning, where the best in the world are trained. I'm counting on the children to help."

In return for their cooperation, Claus will be available for personal wish-list consultations between 5 p.m. and 8 p.m. on Riverside's north lawn. A photographer will be present, but parents are encouraged to bring their own cameras.

Refreshments will be served, as per Santa Claus Contractual Clause Number 1, which states, "The undersigned agree to supply ample food (read 'candy') and beverages, i.e. milk, hot chocolate or hot milk chocolate, for the duration of the appearance of said Claus and company."

Noticeably missing from the Claus entourage will be Donner and Dasher and Prancer and ... well, you know the rest. They'll remain at the Pole and adhere to a strict diet and exercise routine to gear up for the big night.

Claus thanked the Eatons for ho-ho-hosting the event and encouraged all Fort Benning folks to attend. He offered clemency to those on his naughty list.

"In the spirit of the holiday, I think we can let by-gones be by-gones, start with a clean slate so to speak," he said. "Just come on out and have a jolly-good time with me and the boys. We'll look forward to seeing you."

Volunteers give time, support

For each one of the more than 700 births at Martin Army Community Hospital every year, there's a visit, a smile and a gift from one of fifteen volunteers.

The New Parent Support Plus and First Steps Program, headed by Juliette Blakely, is a Department of the Army program geared to help first time parents and their new arrivals slide into life a little easier.

The program, which has been in existence for more than 10 years, provides all new parents an outlet they can go to when they have questions, concerns or just need someone to talk to, Blakely said.

Backed by Prevent Child Abuse, Georgia, the program's main goal is to bring awareness to and prevent child abuse, Blakely said.

The program also promotes healthy child and family development skills, positive parenting skills and helps families understand and use the community resources available

PTSA active in Spencer High School

Parents, teachers, students enhance education

Spencer High School's Parent, Teacher, Student Association

The Parent, Teacher, Student Association is an organization completely comprised of volunteers who are dedicated to developing and implementing programs that will directly benefit the students and families of Spencer High School.

Throughout the school year, our organization works hand-in-hand with the teachers and staff of Spencer High School to enhance curriculum and the climate of the school through meaningful parent improvement.

PTSA is the oldest and largest volunteer association working exclusively on behalf of all children and youth, promoting education, health and safety of children and families.

The PTSA recognizes the importance of parent involvement and to this end our organization at Spencer High School has established its goals for this school year: to communicate between homes and school, parents playing an integral role in assisting student learning, volunteering, and advocacy.

Currently, the PTSA has two programs and two projects under way: the Reflections Program, a Cultural Arts contest where students can submit works of art in the areas of literature, musical composition, photography and Visual Arts. Deadline to submit an entry is Dec. 7. To submit an entry contact Marion A. Boynton, Spencer High School PTSA budget chairperson.

The PTSA Christmas concert is 6:30 p.m. Dec. 13 in the auditorium.

The organization is also sponsoring a "Sports Bra" donation drive for the Muscogee County Clothing Bank. All bras should be brand new and can be dropped off at Spencer High School. The drive ends Dec. 17.

We paid tribute to the events that occurred Sept. 11 by joining in a nationwide Wreath Day established by National PTSA where a bulletin was created and displayed with a wreath in the center so students could write down their feelings on how the events of that day has affected their life. Please stop by the school to see the bulletin board and read what the students wrote.

Like all organizations, the PTSA at Spencer High School are always seeking volunteers to come out and get involved in the school in any capacity. There will be a membership drive from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 to 8 p.m. Friday at the PX for parents, community members and anyone interested in becoming involved and making a difference in a young person's life. You don't have to have a student in the school to join the PTSA.

The cost for membership is $4 for the year or you can give a donation. All monies collected go to implement planned programs and projects established except the PTSA Executive Board. The Executive Board at Spencer High School this year is:

Lt. Col. Stephen Boston — President
1st Sgt. Wanda Blackmon — Vice President
Teri McCray — Secretary
Debra Benson — Treasurer

First Steps: Gives new parents valuable support

through distributed information and follow-up phone calls.

"Parents need help, and we're empowering them to be (better) parents," said Carolyn Harris, New Parent Support Plus and First Steps volunteer.

Harris has been volunteering for the program for more than four years, doing everything from making informational bags for new parents to calling parents after they've taken their new baby home.

"It's rewarding to see the expressions on their faces when we help them solve problems," she said. "It's like a positive chain reaction. Once we help them, they can help someone else and so on."

Trained volunteers do most of the leg-work for the program like stuffing gift bags, making follow-up phone calls to new parents and conducting one-to-one hospital ward visits.

Volunteers like Joan Horning do their best to offer emotional support to new parents whose families often live far away.

"The program is important to new parents," Horning said. "We're like an extended family to those whose parents can't make it."

New parents are given the bags, stuffed with music CDs, a first-year growth calendar, important community phone numbers, Tricare enrollment information, car seat safety instructions and many other informational pamphlets and papers.

Nicole Lesperance, whose husband is an infantryman from 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, recently gave birth to the couple's first child, Dominic, a 7-pound, 2-ounce baby boy.

Lesperance said she was glad volunteers from the First Steps Program visited her after Dominic was born. It helped ward off the isolation of being so far away from home.

"It's hard to know who to go to," the Northern Michigan native said. "You don't have the contacts or the family here that you would at home."

She said the information contained in the bags helps people like herself because they don't know all the in's and out's of having a child while in the military.

"There's lots of info geared toward helping make being a new mom easier," she said. "It's just great."

Dannie Andrews

a kindergarten teacher at Wilson Elementary School.

Personal: Dannie Andrews and her husband of 34 years, retired Lt. Col. Wayne Andrews, live in Columbus, where he retired from the Army at Fort Benning as the chief of the public affairs office. They have three grown children, Elizabeth, Russell and David. Elizabeth is a teacher in the Columbus area.

History and Education: Andrews grew up in the small farm town of Greenwood, S.C. She earned her bachelor's in elementary education from Erskine College, but actually started out majoring in Christian education.

"I had a notion I was going to work in an orphanage," Andrews said.

But her inspiration to become a teacher appeared long before college.

"My mom ran a private kindergarten before kindergarten was a part of the schools curriculum," Andrews said. "I was always tagging along watching her interact with the children. Grown adults would come back and tell her how much she taught them, and that inspired me. Perhaps it's true that 'All you need to know in life you learn in kindergarten.'"

Career: After graduating, Andrews taught in Atlanta and Augusta, Ga., one year in an experimental kindergarten class, before moving back to South Carolina in 1970.

"I was so excited because I was going to teach for my hometown principal," she said. "But I was told I couldn't teach in South Carolina because I was pregnant. I was very disappointed, but it worked out for the best because I was so sick."

Andrews took the time off to raise her children. In 1984, she moved to Fort Benning, and has been teaching here ever since.

"It was hard to get a job teaching then as a military spouse, because they knew you were going to leave," Andrews said.

"Times have changed and the children have changed, too," she said. "I must admit that as a child I was guilty of talking in the classroom a lot. But it was less acceptable for children to have a lot to say then. I was shushed a lot, and that made me very quiet. "Children today have a lot they want to share, and that's a good thing. Children need to have a voice, and we as teachers need to be their advocates.

"My husband and I recently went to see Harry Potter, and he caught me chatting with a group of children I didn't even know," Andrews said. "He said, 'Can't you leave them alone for a little while?' But I just love children."

Hobbies and interests: "I love to read, and I keep a stack of books by my bed. I recently started The Poisonwood Bible, a book about a group of missionaries who go to the Congo. I love to cook and entertain, so my husband and I have dinner parties often." she said.

On teaching the military child: "The military child has lived in many different places, so they have been exposed to more," Andrews said. "Fort Benning teachers are in a unique position to provide security to their students when parents are away. It is important for them to know they have a friend when they come to school."

She teaches her students the "Golden Rule," which according to Andrews could be, "the best way to live."

Would you recommend teaching to others?: "Absolutely, but anyone who wants to teach has to be able to enjoy the whole package and all the rigors that come with it. There is a huge responsibility factor. You have to be able to handle any situation that occurs," Andrews said. "These children are mine while they are here with me, and I have to make sure they are safe and learning everyday."

Plans and goals: "I want to teach for at least two more years, and then retire and travel and enjoy life with my husband," Andrews said. "We have plans to go to Australia, Mexico and Hawaii. I'd like to get back to Germany and my husband wants to visit Vietnam."

What others are saying: "She's fantastic. She's so easy to work with and so compassionate towards the kids. When they're happy, she's happy. When they cry, she cries," said Myra Barber, Andrews' aide of 17 years.

Concert: Band to play

Community members are encouraged to attend.

There are many other opportunities to hear the Infantry Band this holiday season. The band will also perform during the Columbus Christmas Parade Dec. 8, the post's Christmas tree and menorah lighting ceremony Dec. 10 and the Tower lighting ceremony 5 p.m. Dec. 13 at the Airborne Towers.

The band will also carol through the housing areas Dec. 10-21.

The busy seasons for the band are summer and major holidays like Christmas. Being in the band is not a nine to five job. Sometimes assignments come up last minute, so they always have to be prepared.

Since Sept. 11, there has been more calls for patriotic music.

"It helps in keeping spirits up and is good for healing," said Staff Sgt. Gwyn Truchon, tuba player.

"That's our job," said Wholey. "To keep morale up of military soldier and act as a conduit between U.S. Army and American people. The Army Band is the commander's most potent non-lethal weapon."

Students learn environmental responsibility

Concerned kids do their part to protect ecosystem

Wilson Elementary School

The Environmental Protection Club, under the direction of teacher sponsors Jennifer Sherrill and Beth Young, is alive and well at Wilson School.

The club, comprised of students who are concerned and motivated to do something about improving the environment, meets once a week after school.

Activities so far this year have included leading the school in an anti-litter and beautification pledge in September. In addition, students have conducted a neighborhood clean-up campaign and participated in the Help the Hooch River Clean-Up. Currently, the club is actively involved in recycling paper, plastics and aluminum cans, as well as collecting old phone books for recycling.

Recently, the club applied for and was awarded a grant from the Officers' Wives Club. The grant will be used to plant a garden in the school courtyard this spring in memory of the victims, families and other persons affected by the tragedies of Sept. 11.

"Students have shown such enthusiasm for the club," fourth-grade teacher Jennifer Sherrill said. "This has translated into other service oriented activities as well."

Beth Young, fifth-grade teacher and club co-sponsor agrees.

"What these children are learning to do now will help enable them to be better caretakers of our earth as adults," she said.

Club members are equally excited. Travis Tovar, fourth-grade student, has learned how to recycle everyday items at the club meetings.

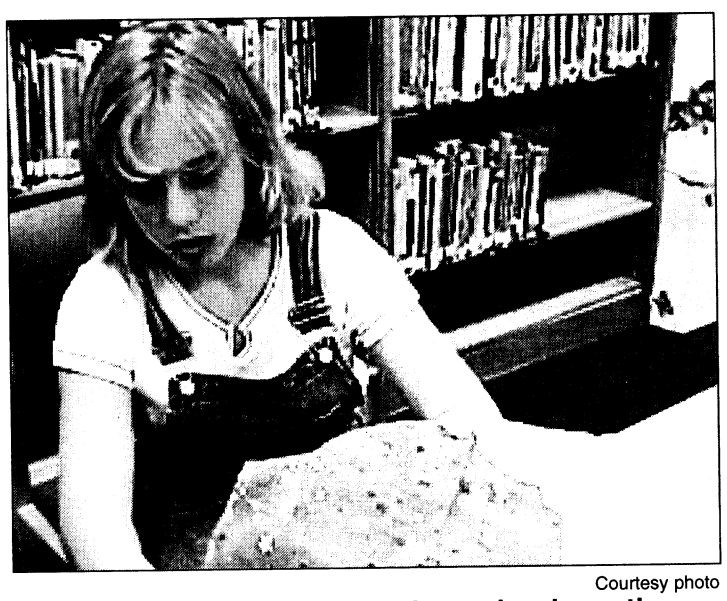
"We can reuse old tires for swings and egg shells can be used to create compost piles," he said.

Fourth-grader Zack Arabinko shares that same enthusiasm.

"We do cool experiments in EPC. Once we created an oil spill so that we could see how the oil affects birds," he said. "We also learned about phosphates that are found in soaps and how bad they are for the environment."

Sponsors Sherrill and Young believe providing students with these types of hands-on learning experiences is instrumental in developing a greater degree of personal responsibility for the environment, for others and for the future.

Arabinko couldn't agree more.



"We have to help the environment. After all we live here," he said. "If something bad happens to the earth, where else could we live?"

Young inventors create unique designs

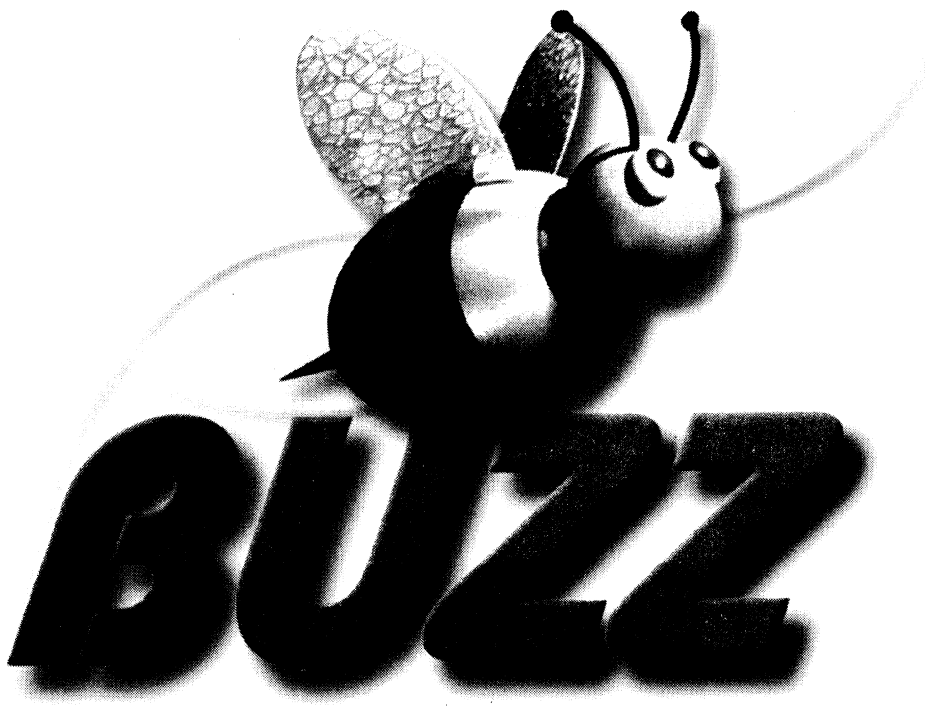
Wilson Elementary School

How many inventions did Thomas Edison patent? How much money did Henry Ford initially invest to start the Ford Motor Company? Which famous inventor of the radio was a surviving passenger on the Titanic? To find out the answers to these and other little known facts about inventors and inventions, just ask the enrichment students of Wilson School. These students have been busy working on inventions for the past several months.

Each student has researched famous inventions and inventors and made multimedia presentations to present to their classmates. In addition, students have been charged with the task of inventing a new product. While the idea to have students work on inventions is not a new one, it is one that requires high level critical and creative thinking skills.

There are many reasons to teach the inventing process, said Margaret Koger, teacher. First, inventing gives children hands-on experience in applying and synthesizing knowledge. This provides real-life experiences in using the scientific method. Children use the scientific process as they invent by observing, collecting data, organizing, generalizing, predicting, revising, and applying laws and theories.



Inventing also encourages creative thinking by stimulating creativity and providing a channel through which the creativity can be expressed. The inventing process is also a great motivator for children. Inventing lets them explore and design projects based on their own unique interests. When children invent, they move quickly through the higher order skills by using previous knowledge, comprehension skills, application, analysis, synthesis and evaluation.

This has been evident in Wilson's enrichment classes over the past weeks. Inventions such as a pillow designed to cool a hot head, a super deluxe water balloon launcher, and a glow in the dark trash can are just a few of the innovative ideas the students have designed and built. All inventions will be showcased during an upcoming "Invention Convention" at the school.

Christmas: empty gift without Christ

Chaplain (Capt.) David Trogdon
1st Battalion, 50h Infantry Regiment,
Infantry Training Brigade

A few days before Christmas two men decided to go fishing while their wives went Christmas shopping. They had only been out for a short time when a storm blew up. Their boat was tossed all around until they became grounded on a sandbar. With mud up to his knees, the waves pounding, the chilling rain and wind beating against his face, one husband looked to the other and said, "This sure beats Christmas shopping, doesn't it?"

Perhaps you can identify with these husbands trying to escape the Christmas rush with all its commercialism. For many, Christmas has lost its real meaning. On the first Christmas, there were no sales, blinking lights or reindeer on the hills surrounding Bethlehem but only a few shepherds, their sheep and a heavenly choir. The angelic announcement reminds us Christmas is to be a celebration. "Do not be afraid. I bring you good news of great joy that will be for all people. Today in the town of David a Savior has been born to you; He is Christ the Lord." (Luke 2:10-11)

Trogdon

Christmas is a celebration of the perfect Gift. This 'gift' is not found at the mall or under a tree, but in the person of Christ. God gave us the gift of His very own Son. (John 3:16) Jesus was born as "Emmanuel." (God with Us) Jesus came to give us abundant life, eternal life and to be an essential part of our daily life. Trying to celebrate Christmas without Christ is like a child forgetting his present and playing with the box.

Christmas is God giving Himself to be with us. Don't miss the fun – enjoy the gift.

Christmas is also a celebration of good news. The angels announced "good news of great joy for all people." What was the reason for this joyous celebration? This was no ordinary baby lying in a manger in Bethlehem; this child was the Savior of the world. Christmas is only a part of the story. Jesus didn't remain a baby. He preached the gospel, healed the sick, raised the dead, died on a cross for our sins and then arose from the dead.

Because Jesus came, we can have God's love, forgiveness, blessings and assurance of eternal life. Christmas celebrates the good news of our Savior and His love for us.

Finally, Christmas is a celebration of God's glory. Christmas is our opportunity to worship God. The angels worshipped, the shepherds worshipped and the wise men worshipped, this baby. What was so special about this child? He is "Christ the Lord." He was God the Son and thus worthy of praise and worship. To fully enjoy Christmas we must love and enjoy Christ. Celebrate Christmas by celebrating the birth of Jesus!

Christmas is not about buying gifts, putting up decorations, waiting for Santa or going to parties. Christmas is a joyous celebration of Christ. I can almost imagine one shepherd after hearing the angels and seeing the Child turning to another and saying, "This sure beats fishing doesn't it."

Faithfulness establishes trust over time

Wounded confidence hard to rebuild

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Chaplain

Trust takes time to be established. It can't be forced. A trusted friend is invaluable. (Proverbs 30:10-11)

Most people are willing to extend a certain measure of trust to someone they have just met, but their trust is tentative. As they talk and interact with others, they begin to deepen their trust and confidence in others and in their abilities. If not, they remain distant and uncommitted.

Koop

Some people can quickly assess others. They know within a few minutes whether or not they can depend upon another. Call it a "gut feeling" or intuition, their internal radar either affirms or cautions their initial trust in others.

When trust has been broken by a lie, though the revelation of a secret, the breaking of a promise, or having an affair, only faithfulness can restore trust over time. Admission of wrong by the trust-breaker is not sufficient to restore trust. Forgiveness by the wounded person is inadequate to rebuild trust. Restoration, if possible, helps to appease the broken trust but is insufficient to re-establish trust. Only continued faithfulness rebuilds trust.

People, who have been hurt, find it hard to trust. (Jeremiah 9:4-5) No matter how dependable and reliable someone may be in keeping their promises, wounded people remain guarded and tend to expect the inevitable let down or betrayal from others. With time, faithfulness restores trust.

Do you want to rebuild trust with your partner? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

She will give birth to a son, and you are to give him the name Jesus, because he will save his people from their sins. – Matthew 1:21

Faith girls lose first home opener

Team drops first game 41-21 to Macon

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Faith Middle School Falcons basketball team played their first-ever home game Nov. 20.

The opposition, the Macon County Middle School Bulldogs, proved too much for the girls' team, however, in the 41-21 loss.

Robert Lewis, coach for the Falcons and teacher at Faith, was proud of the effort put out by the team.

"Our girls played hard, and I was proud of them," Lewis said. "We've got twelve little fighters out there. They've been practicing hard and they'll be a very good team."

Lewis kept his team motivated for the whole game, even though the loss was hard to take.

"The game didn't go how I thought it would," said Talia Davis, 13, of the Falcons. "We need to use a little more teamwork."

That thought was echoed by Cindy Walker, Falcon coach, "They still need a lot of work, but they're coming together as a team."

In years past, the Falcons have played all their games away, but this year the Falcons are playing on their home court. However, only one end of the court has a three-point line, and it's drawn on with marker.

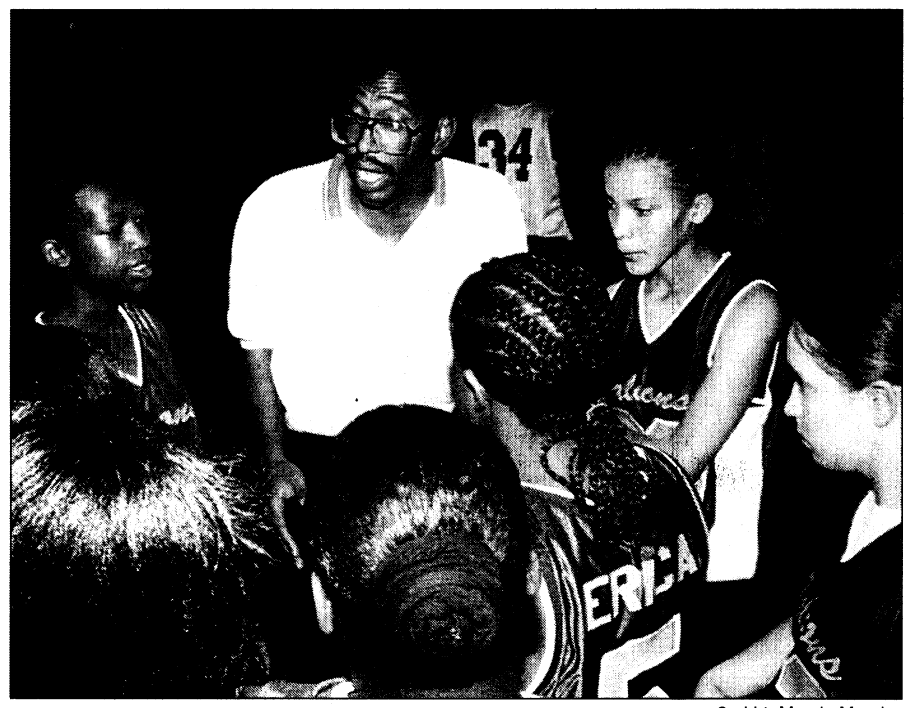
This was the first game for the team that has practiced together since October.

The Falcons started off the game with good rebounding, but they had trouble moving the ball up the court.

The Bulldogs had some quick steals that racked up points for Macon.

When the Falcons did get the ball down to their zone, weak shots from the field failed to add points to the scoreboard.

At the half, the score was 27-9, Macon.



During the second half, the crowd was loud and supportive, but it failed to ignite a spark in the Falcons offense.

The defense played strong with key steals that resulted in quick breakaways, but the layups did not fall for the Falcons.

There was great hustle on both sides of the court, but the Bulldogs prove better shooters and walked away with the win.

The Falcons' Ashlee Barley, 12, was disappointed with the loss, but she recognized it's only the beginning.

"I've been playing for six years, and sometimes you lose," she said.

Faith's boys win first home game

Falcons soar to win over Macon County Bulldogs

Phillip Thompson
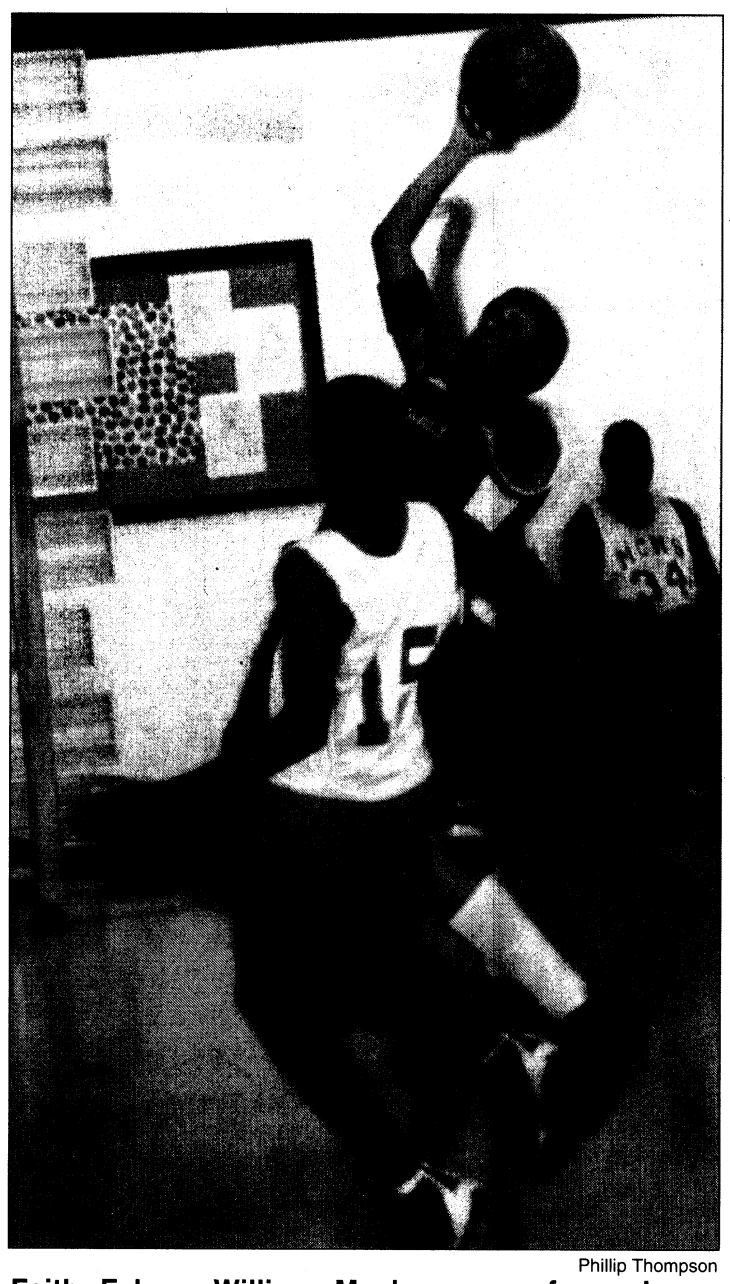
Bayonet correspondent

Given the fact the boys' basketball team at Faith Middle School had never played a home game, there was much speculation of a Macon County blow-out Nov. 21.

The boys proved everyone wrong. In a tough, back-and-forth game, the Falcons battled for a 54-49 victory.



They controlled the first half and went to the break with a 26-18 lead. However, a sloppy performance allowed Macon County to take control and come within three points heading into the fourth quarter.

Macon County continued to dominate to take the lead, 39-36, with 4:24 remaining in the game. However, the Falcons kept the score close.

"We could have given up, but we didn't," said Coach Robert Lewis, who has been coaching for the past five years.

With the game tied 47-47 and 1:37 left on the clock, Eric Tyler launched the Falcons to the win with seven unanswered points.

"This was a very important game for us, we had to set a standard," Lewis said. "We set a very high one, and I hope we play with this same competitive instinct for the rest of the season."

Friendly fire kills three soldiers

Afghanistan incident takes American lives

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

Three Special Forces soldiers were killed and 19 were wounded north of Kandahar, Afghanistan, when a 2,000-pound U.S. bomb missed it's target and hit in close proximity to friendly forces Dec. 4.

They are Master Sgt. Jefferson Davis, 39, of Tennessee; Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Petithory, 32, of Massachusetts; and Staff Sgt. Brian Prosser, 28, of California.

All three soldiers served in the 3rd Battalion, 5th Special Forces Group, Fort Campbell, Ky.

A B-52 that was called in to provide fire support to ground forces who were under fire, reportedly dropped it's ordnance about a football field away from two Special Forces teams and Afghan opposition fighters, officials said.

Rangers return

U. S. Army Special Operations Command

Elements of the 75th Ranger Regiment, deployed in support of Operation Enduring Freedom, returned to Fort Benning early today.

The rangers were welcomed home at Lawson Army Air Field by family, friends and members of the Regiment.

Col. Joseph L. Votel, who returned with his troops, told the group during the welcome home ceremony how proud he is to be the ranger commander.

Rangers were instrumental in destroying Taliban and al Qaeda strongholds, Votel said, and credited the hard ranger training as the reason they were successful.

He said the enemy will be conquered on the battlefield because of superior training and our determination to defeat terrorism.

Never mind the electronic game or CD player — all Eric really wants for Christmas is a family.

Orphaned at the age of 4, Eric has spent the past 10 years being shuffled from one foster home to another — 10 in all. He quit believing in Santa the year his mother died of cancer, and he's never celebrated a traditional Christmas since.

"It's different every year," he said with a shrug and a shy grin. "It doesn't matter, but it would be nice to have a family and a big dinner."

The 15-year-old is a resident at Carpenter's Way Ranch, a group home in Cataula, Ga., for "social orphans" — victims of

A new president was elected for the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program and she has big plans for the coming year, including encouraging more soldier participation.

Spc. Jessica Pisa, president, said she wants more soldiers to know about BOSS and to join the program.

"My top priorities are education, which involves letting people know about the program, and communication, keeping everyone informed about the program," Pisa said.

Unit representatives and the executive board met last week to brainstorm ideas for next year, including what to do for soldiers who are not going home for Christmas. Ideas include taking a trip or holding a social function on post.

BOSS was created in 1989 as a way for single soldiers who may or may not live in the barracks to address their concerns including housing and other well-being topics. If soldiers have concerns with the barracks such as leaky pipes or broken lights, or if

Another year ends, and like so many other service members, I am making my plans to spend quality time with my family. But not before I have to pay bills, clean my living quarters, wash my truck, change the message on my answering machine, request the post office suspend my mail until I return; thank God I don't have any pets to worry about ... .

Holiday stress? Perhaps, but these are everyday concerns for anyone living single.

As an NCO , I understand our young single soldiers, most of whom live in the barracks, are our main focus. Unfortunately, not everyone left the nest with maturity, responsibility and the capacity to deal with stress, finances and repeated change tucked neatly in their backpacks.

Soon after newcomers settle in, so does reality. Bills, appointments and other matters that require their attention begin to pile up.

Being single in the military is an issue not adequately addressed.

As a single soldier, if I can not take my truck in for a brake job, no one else will.

No matter how late I get home, if I do not prepare a meal or make it to the dining facility, I do not eat.

I know this sounds familiar to a lot of people, but for a single soldier, a helping hand is not easy to find.

Hopefully, through camaraderie and building positive friendships, single soldiers are able to get through everyday crises and more.

Through genuine offers, married leaders extend dinner invitations to their single soldiers or ask about their quality of life.

Gestures that are very much appreciated.

In my six years of service and as a single soldier, I know there are many programs available throughout the military.

But what are they? Who can tell me?

These are not any board questions.

Being single should not equate being alone.

Soldiers need to make it a goal to make the label "single soldier" an oxymoron.

In today's "Army of One," we are one team.

Together we can combat loneliness, stress and frustration faced by soldiers who do not qualify for programs designed for married soldiers or family members.

How about a single soldier family day? Or a bonus for anyone who has served as a single soldier for more than a year?

Better off staying single is still my catch phrase, but being happy and single should not be something only college students enjoy.

Training wheels aren't necessary

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

My eight-year-old daughter has finally figured out that she knows how to ride her bicycle.

After a solo ride around a parking lot that scared her socks off, she got on her bicycle and rode several miles on the Riverwalk. She still needs a push start and stopping is a step up from a controlled crash, but she can ride.

Her training wheels aren't getting any of the credit.

If you have a child who is ready for her first bicycle, let me clue you.

Don't let them know that training wheels exist.

Lie if you have to. When they ask about the training wheels on their friends' bicycles, tell them that all training wheels have been recalled.

If they see them on a store shelf, blame an uninformed department manager for not removing them sooner. If they ask why they didn't hear it on the news, say the story got bumped.

Weaning my daughter off those training wheels was tougher than weaning her off her bottle.

If you have a child who thinks she is ready for a bicycle, here's the rest of my free advice.

Buy or borrow a two-wheeler that's almost too small so your fledgling cyclist won't be so intimidated by how far off the ground she is. A bike that will let them sit on the saddle and plant at least their toes securely on the ground would be about right.

Take your child and the almost-too-small bike to an empty parking lot or a large grassy field. Make sure her helmet is on right. Show your child how the brakes work and tell her to put down at least one foot when the brakes are applied.

Let 'er rip.

If you have an overly cautious child like mine, you might take a page out of my daughter's book. When she got "serious" about riding a two-wheeler, she strapped on the knee and elbow pads she uses when she 'blades.

We could have cut the learning curve in half if it hadn't been for those training wheels.

Sometimes all of that help really slows up the work.

Military spouse speaks out against protesters

I am writing about the SOA Watch protest. First of all, I think that it is absolutely ridiculous that some, if not all, of the students who attended the protest received college credit for being here.

What are these students going to become?

They are getting credits toward graduation for causing chaos and unruliness. Can these students not be awarded credits based on their knowledge? If this is the case, then maybe they should be working at McDonald's instead of walking a paved road to "Corporate America."

Many of the protesters had no clue as to what they were actually doing here. Nor did they realize that because of every soldier here, they are given this right to act like fools and they have the right to be rude to those who gladly make sure that Americans will always have those rights.

We saw one protester on the news, who had no idea that the School of Americas had been closed and replaced. Not only has the school been closed, but the curriculum has changed.

Coming back on post Friday night after the protest, we had a run in with five protesters.

As they began to insult us and call us murders and criminals, I asked one of them to please tell me exactly why she was here. She said that she did not approve of her tax dollars being used to murder innocent people in other nations.

We all know that the SOA has not gone anywhere to murder anyone.

The school is a building and cannot simply load up, arm itself with a gun and go do anything.

I then asked if they knew that there was no longer a SOA. There was an older man with them. He said, "Yes I do. It is Whisk!" I laughed at this response, because I was unaware that we had named our new school after a laundry detergent. He then walked up to our vehicle and proceeded to call my husband 'boy' and tell him that he should not believe anything that his sergeants tell him. He also asked how my husband would feel if he pulled me from the car right there and began torturing me.

They won their fight in court to be at the gates of Fort Benning, then broke not only state, but federal laws, by littering the gates, and trespassing on federal property. I am glad they only use the laws of the land and the court system to their benefit.

These protesters did nothing but infringe on every soldier and soldier's family constitutional right to the "pursuit of happiness" during the weekend.

Thanks to them, there were limited access points and those who actually have a right to be on Fort Benning had to undergo extreme scrutiny just to return to their homes from a day of shopping.

This protest is worthless and the protesters are only showing the world two things. One, they are uneducated, and two, they are not only criminals, breaking state and federal laws, but they should also be considered terrorists.

My question to them: If you were attacked by an outside nation, would you not want the very people that you are protesting to come to your aid?

My advice to them and their leader: Your tax dollars are not banked here, take your debate where it is better served ... to Washington.

On another note: Thank you service members. Thank you for protecting, as every service member before you has, each and every American and their rights, no matter how ungrateful, rude, ignorant or helpless they may be. Those who proudly serve in the United States military are undoubtedly America's best.

Competition wraps up

Snipers test skills, claim best in world

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Today is the final day of competition for 14 sniper teams from the Army and sister services in the U.S., Great Britain and Canada who are participating in the U.S. Army International Sniper Competition, the first contest the U.S. Army Sniper School has conducted since it was established in 1987.

"This is what separates the men from the boys," said Staff Sgt. Justin Shaffer, who along with his sniper teammate, Staff Sgt. Dominic Barnello, birthed, shaped and stoked the idea of hosting an international competition at Fort Benning for nearly two years.

"It's a natural. We are the U.S. Army Sniper School, the proponent of all Army sniper schools, but we've never before held a competition right here, at home, where the best snipers in the world are trained," said Barnello.

Shaffer and Barnello have traveled to various competitions in the U.S. and Canada, including the Shoot Right Snipers' Paradise Challenge in Brownsville, Texas, where they were named the top finishing military team in October. They gleaned ideas from other competitions to develop what they feel is a composite of all the best of all the rest.

"It's a culmination of all the other competitions we've ever seen," Barnello said. "We chose elements that worked and perfected them and made them bigger and better to create a very challenging competition that would test their ability to perform in every area a sniper team might have to perform in a real-world mission."

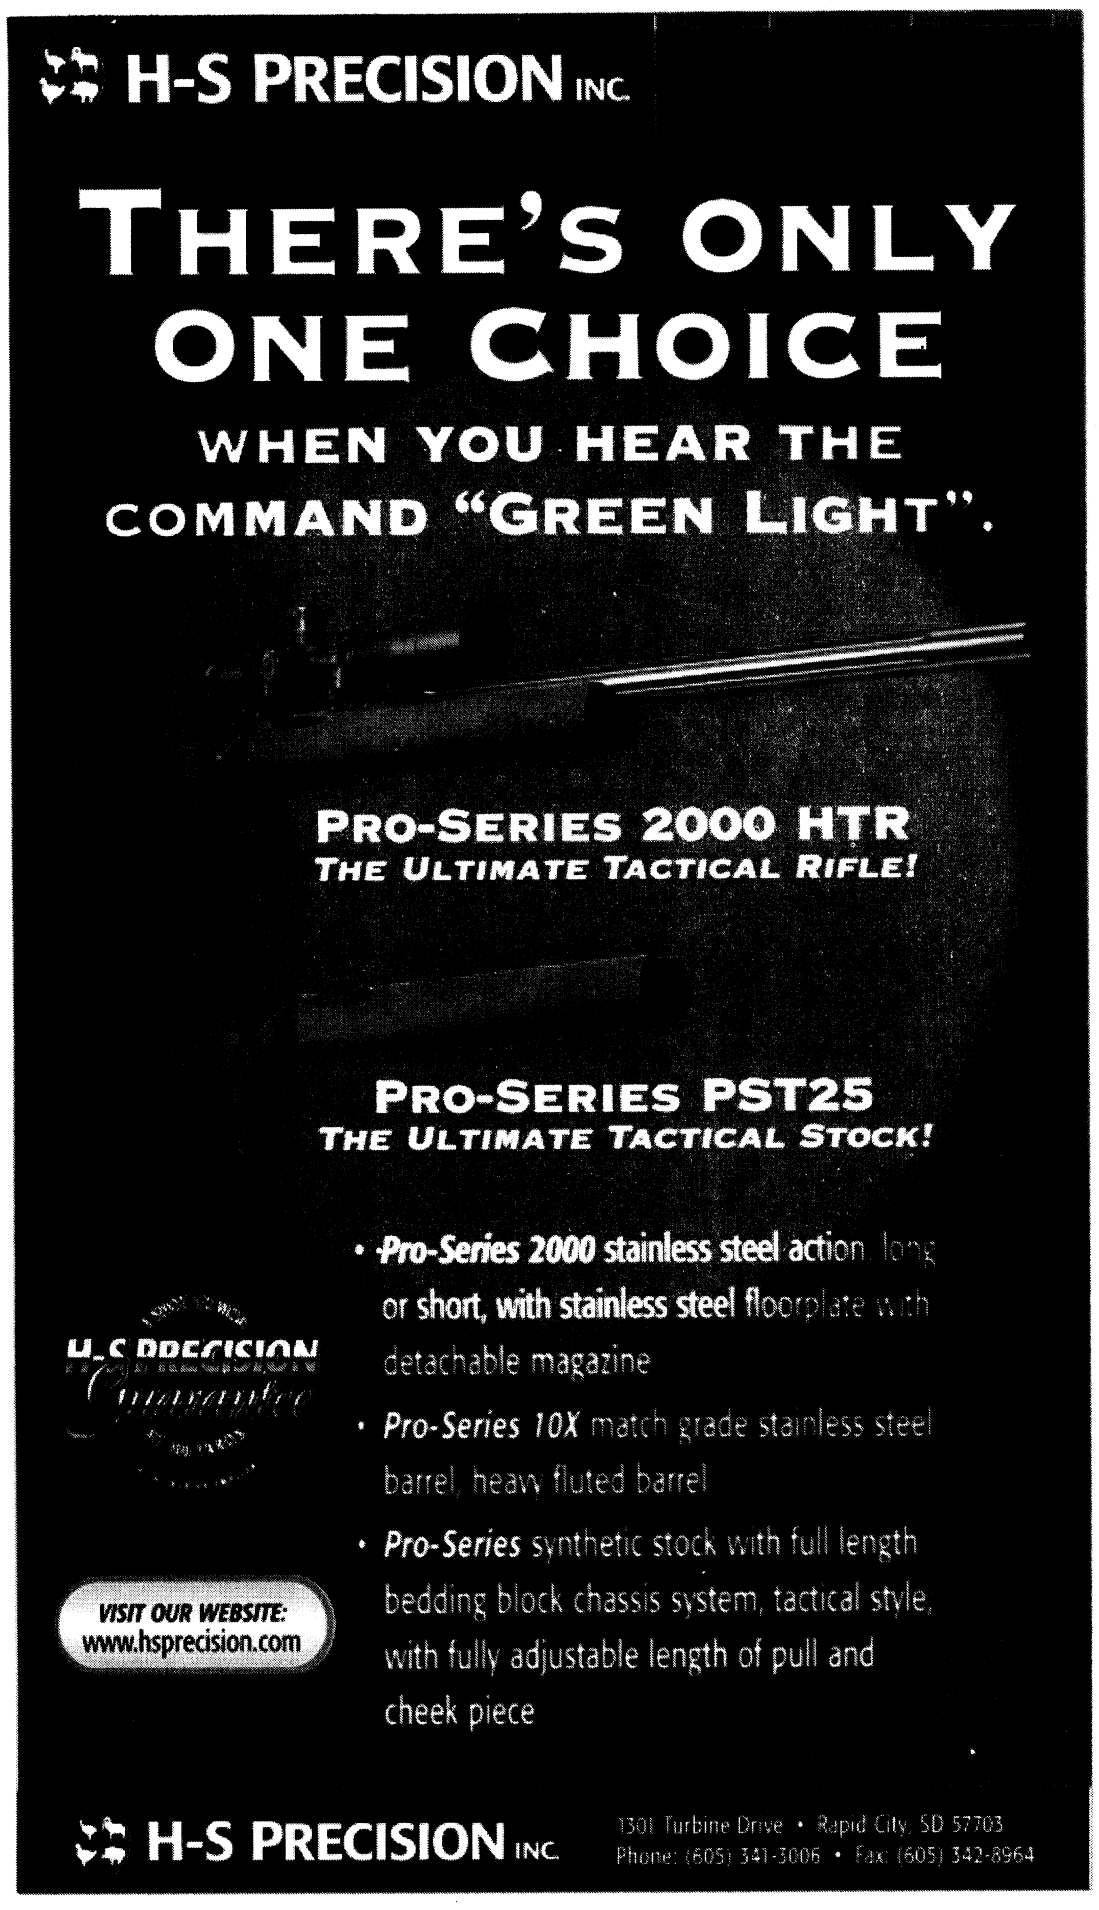
Barnello and Shaffer designed a five-day competition consisting of 13 events, including the urban shoot, live fire stalk, stress fires, alternate position fires, orienteering and cold bore. They invited teams — a sniper team consists of a shooter and a spotter — from around the world, and received affirmations from the Marines, Air Force, Navy, National Guard, Special Forces and various Army units — 44 initially. But the events of Sept. 11 cast a pall over the competition, and for a while Barnello and Shaffer feared it would have to be canceled.

"We lost a lot of teams right after it happened," Barnello said. "The 10th Mountain Division and the 101st (Airborne Division) couldn't be represented at all because of the war. But in the end we decided to give it a go, and I think 14 teams is a pretty good turnout under the circumstances.

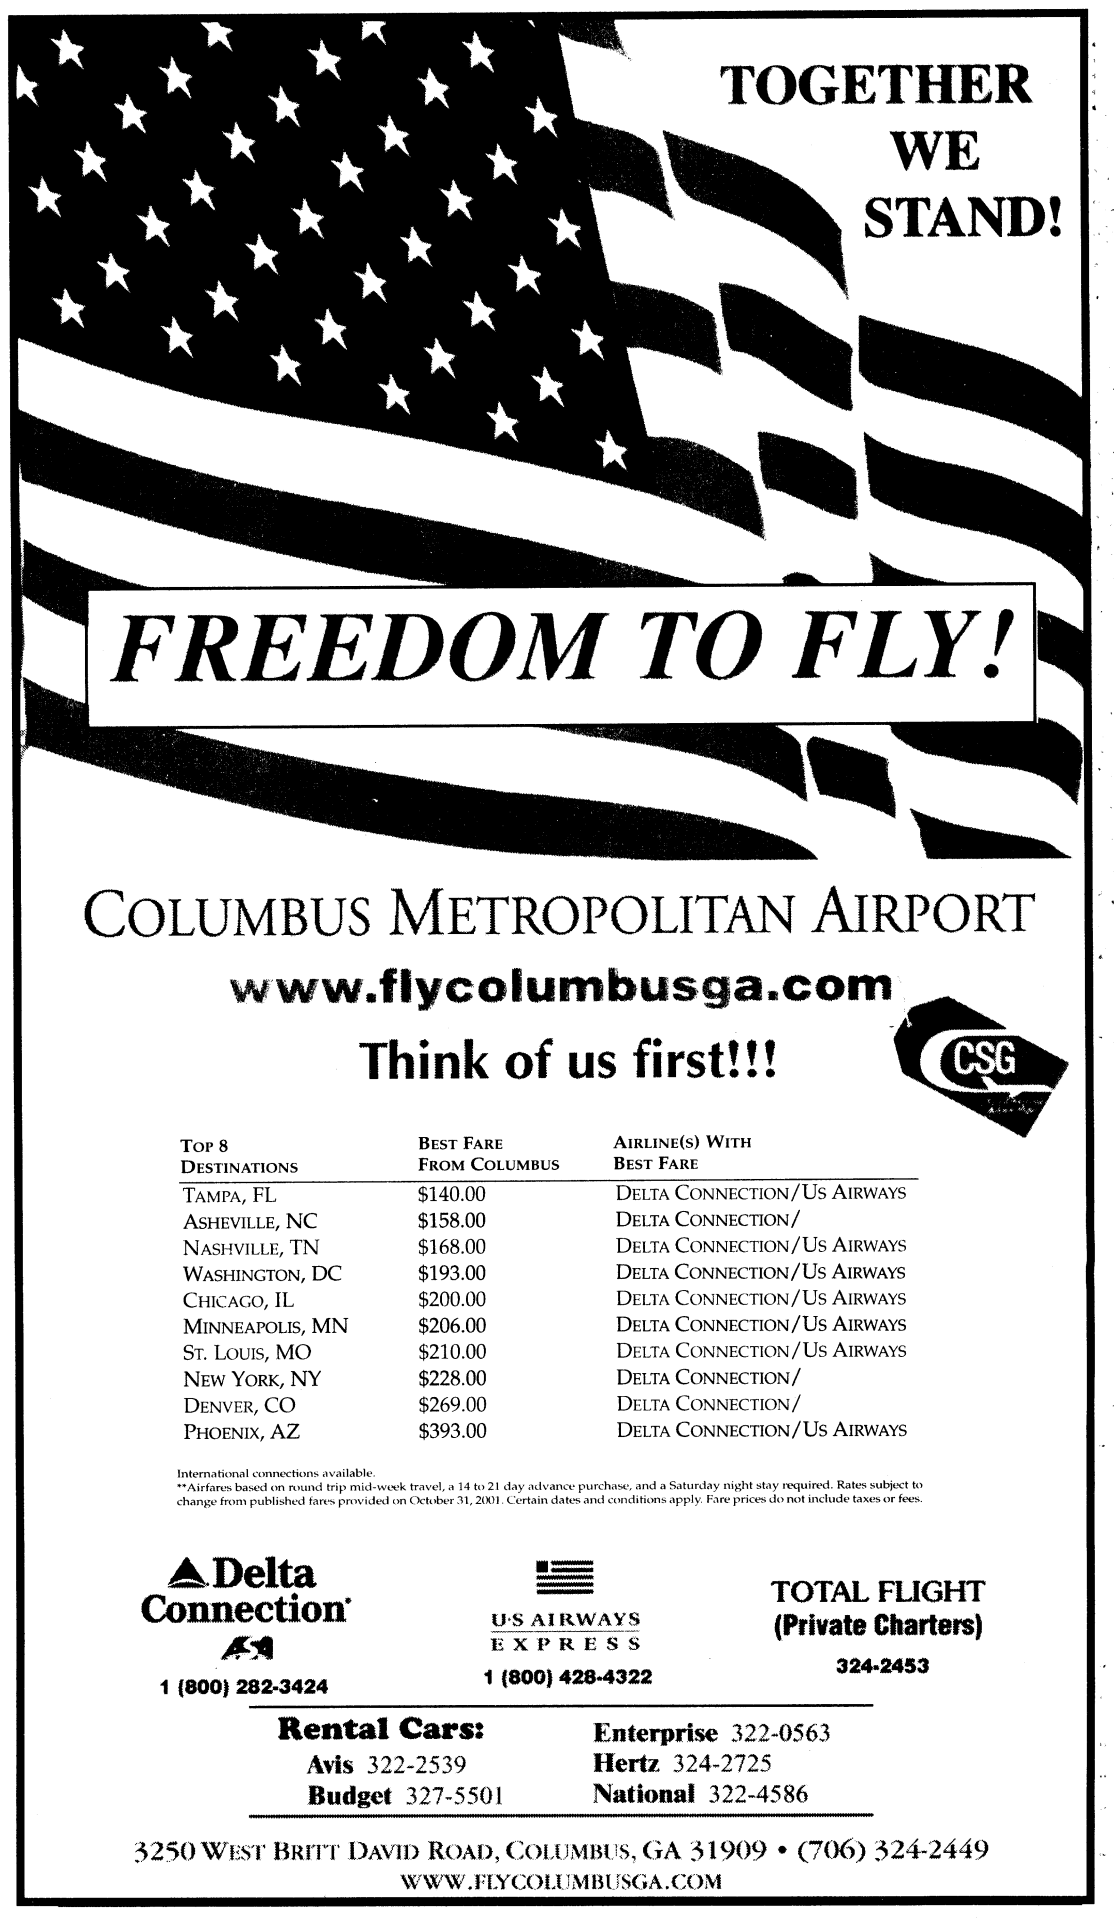
The team of Cpl. Devon Ramos and Cpl. Mike Hallgren and their coach, Sgt. Blake Ives, traveled four days by car from Edmonton, Alberta, to represent Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry in the competition.

Ives, a 13-year sniper veteran, said his team was drawn by "the high level of competition" and a desire to learn tactics and strategies from other competitors.

"The biggest part of a competition is the opportunity to learn from others," he said. "If we do come into a NATO mission where we have to work alongside military from other countries, like we did in Kosovo where we worked with the British, it's important to know how they work. Coming here gives us all an advantage in the event of a real mission."



Sgt. Jorge Nunez and Spc. Bryan Hiatt have been a sniper team since they attended the five-week course in August. The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, soldiers said the competition gives them an opportunity to test their new skills.



"It's the best way to find our strengths and weaknesses," Nunez said. "And some of these teams have been doing this for years, whereas this is a relatively new concept for the mechanized, having sniper scouts. So we're here to learn from the best."

Sniper school cadre kept a running tab of scores throughout the week, but did not release the tally at the end of each day.

"It's any man's game," Shaffer said. "They don't know where they stand so they stay motivated. From the beginning we knew we had a lot of contenders, so we decided to wait and see the results at the end of the competition."

The competition concludes today when the final scores from each event are tallied at 2:30 p.m. Winners will be announced at a ceremony at 5 p.m. and one team will leave with "bragging rights to the title of best sniper team in the world," Barnello said.

Soldiers: Three lives lost

Two soldiers were pronounced dead at the scene, and the third soldier died while being transported to a medical facility in the region, officials said. Five Afghan opposition fighters were also killed and an unknown amount wounded, officials said.

"A close air-support strike is one of the most potentially hazardous types of missions used," officials said. "Simultaneously calling in air strikes on your own position and the enemy's position that you're engaged with takes very fine control, coordination and precision. Unfortunately, it doesn't always happen without causing our own casualties."

Officials said they would not speculate on the reason the precision-guided bomb missed its target, whether the wrong coordinates were given, wrong coordinates were entered on the plane or the system malfunctioned.

A second bomb was also dropped and it did hit the intended target, but officials said they did not know how much damage the bomb inflicted on enemy forces.

Since the war began, this is the second U.S. bomb that has missed its target and hit in the proximity of U.S. troops. A stray bomb hit four soldiers and an airman while they were helping Northern Alliance forces fighting armed Taliban captives in a fort near Mazar-e Sharif.

In an unrelated incident, an infantryman from 10th Mountain Division, Fort Drum, N.Y. died Nov. 29 in Uzbekistan. Pvt. Giovanny Maria, 19, N.J., enlisted in the Army in May. He went through infantry training at Fort Benning before being assigned to Fort Drum.

The incident is under investigation, but officials said Maria's death was not the result of enemy action.

Ranch: Needs big hearted holiday families

abuse, neglect or abandonment who have been removed from their homes by the Division of Family and Children's Services.

Since 1998, the Ranger Training Brigade has partnered with the ranch, sponsoring regular outings for the boys, including trips to Rangers in Action demonstrations, and assisting in various ways in and out of the classroom.

This year they've stepped up their involvement. They are actively seeking Fort Benning families to host a boy or a group of siblings for the Christmas holiday.

Currently 16 boys, between the ages of 6 and 16, live on the 33-acre ranch. Ten of them have nowhere to go for the holiday.

"We can't quit trying till we've found a place for every one of these kids," said Master Sgt. Chris Schott, who chairs the unit's partnership with the ranch.

"It's like the puppy in the window syndrome — if everybody else has some place to go and I'm the only one left, there must be something wrong with me," he said.

"They've already been dumped by their family and failed by the system," Schott said. "From their perspective, this is just one more confirmation they don't belong. It's heartbreaking."

Eric's greatest fear is being left at the ranch on Christmas day. He's aware that the younger children are often more appealing to potential hosts, but he hasn't given up hope of finding a family of his own.

"It doesn't matter what color they are, but they should have a kid my age, and they should like football," he said.

The boys are carefully screened and evaluated before entering the facility. Those with a history of judicial, psychological or severe health problems are referred to other agencies.

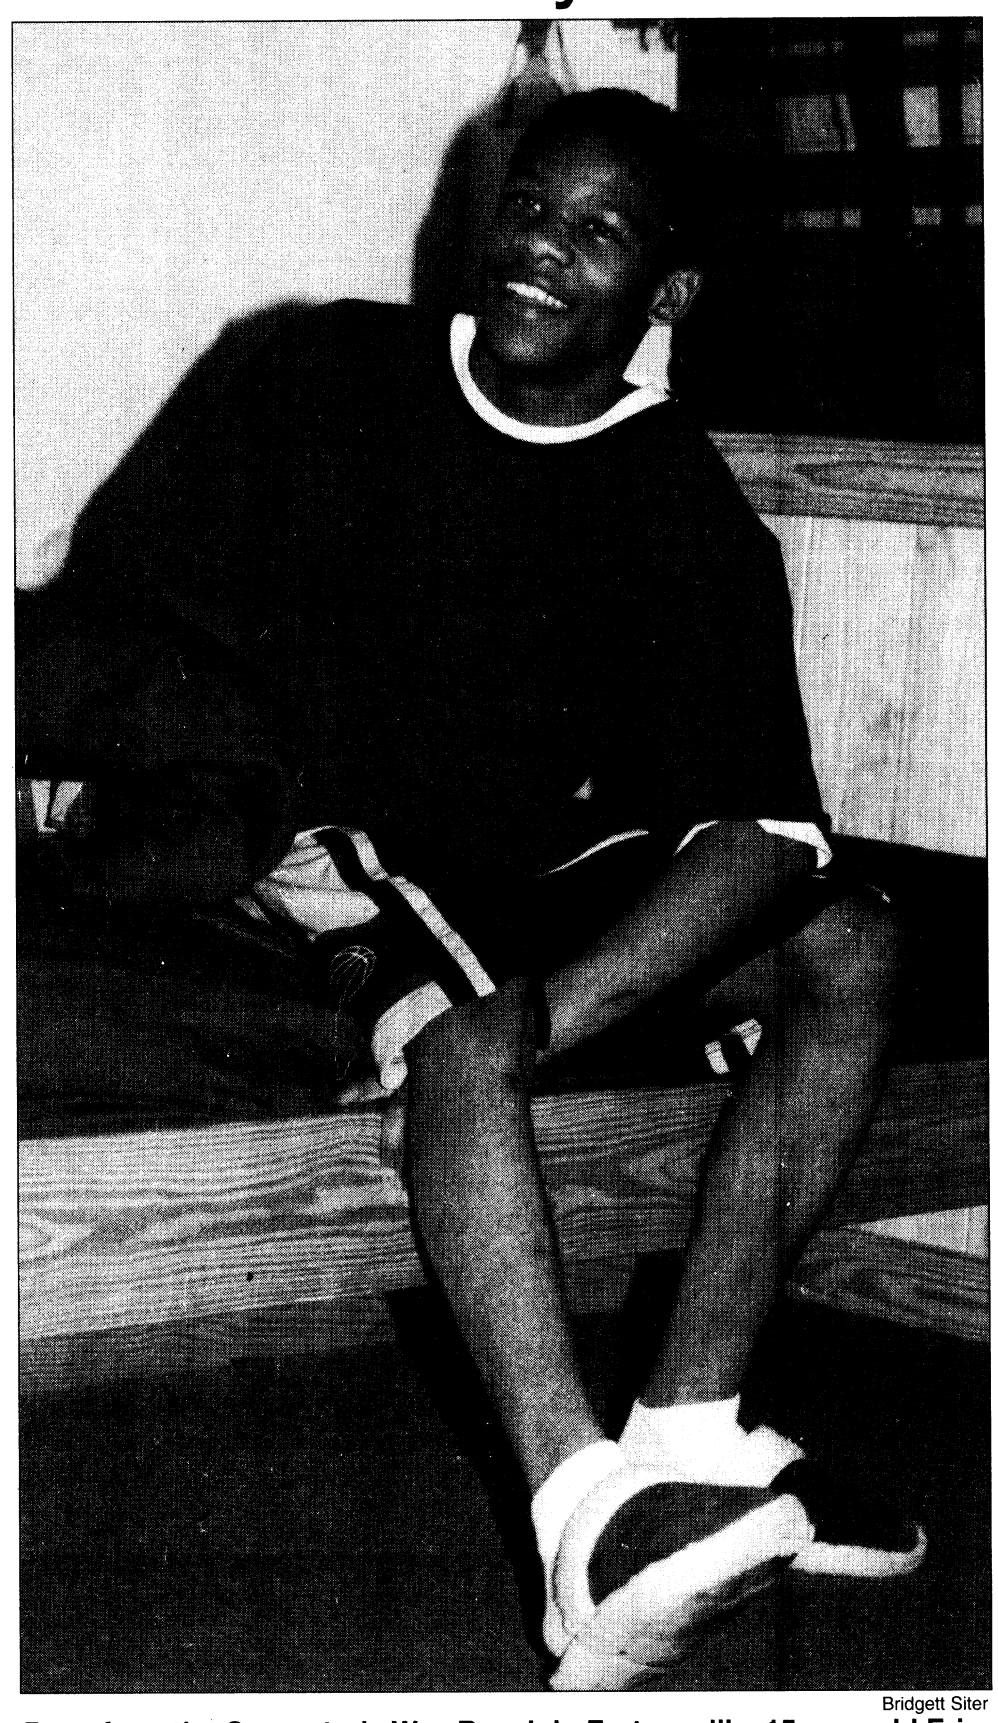
Carpenter's Way Ranch solicits "resource families" to host a boy at least one weekend a month.

The resource family program is important throughout the year, but never so much as at Christmas, said Bob Lynch, program director.

"These boys have what they need as far as material things go. What they want more than anything is to spend the holiday with a real family," Lynch said.

"Most of them have never had that. They don't know how a real family functions," he said. "It doesn't matter what the house looks like — if there's a mom and a dad and a TV, it's Disney World to them."

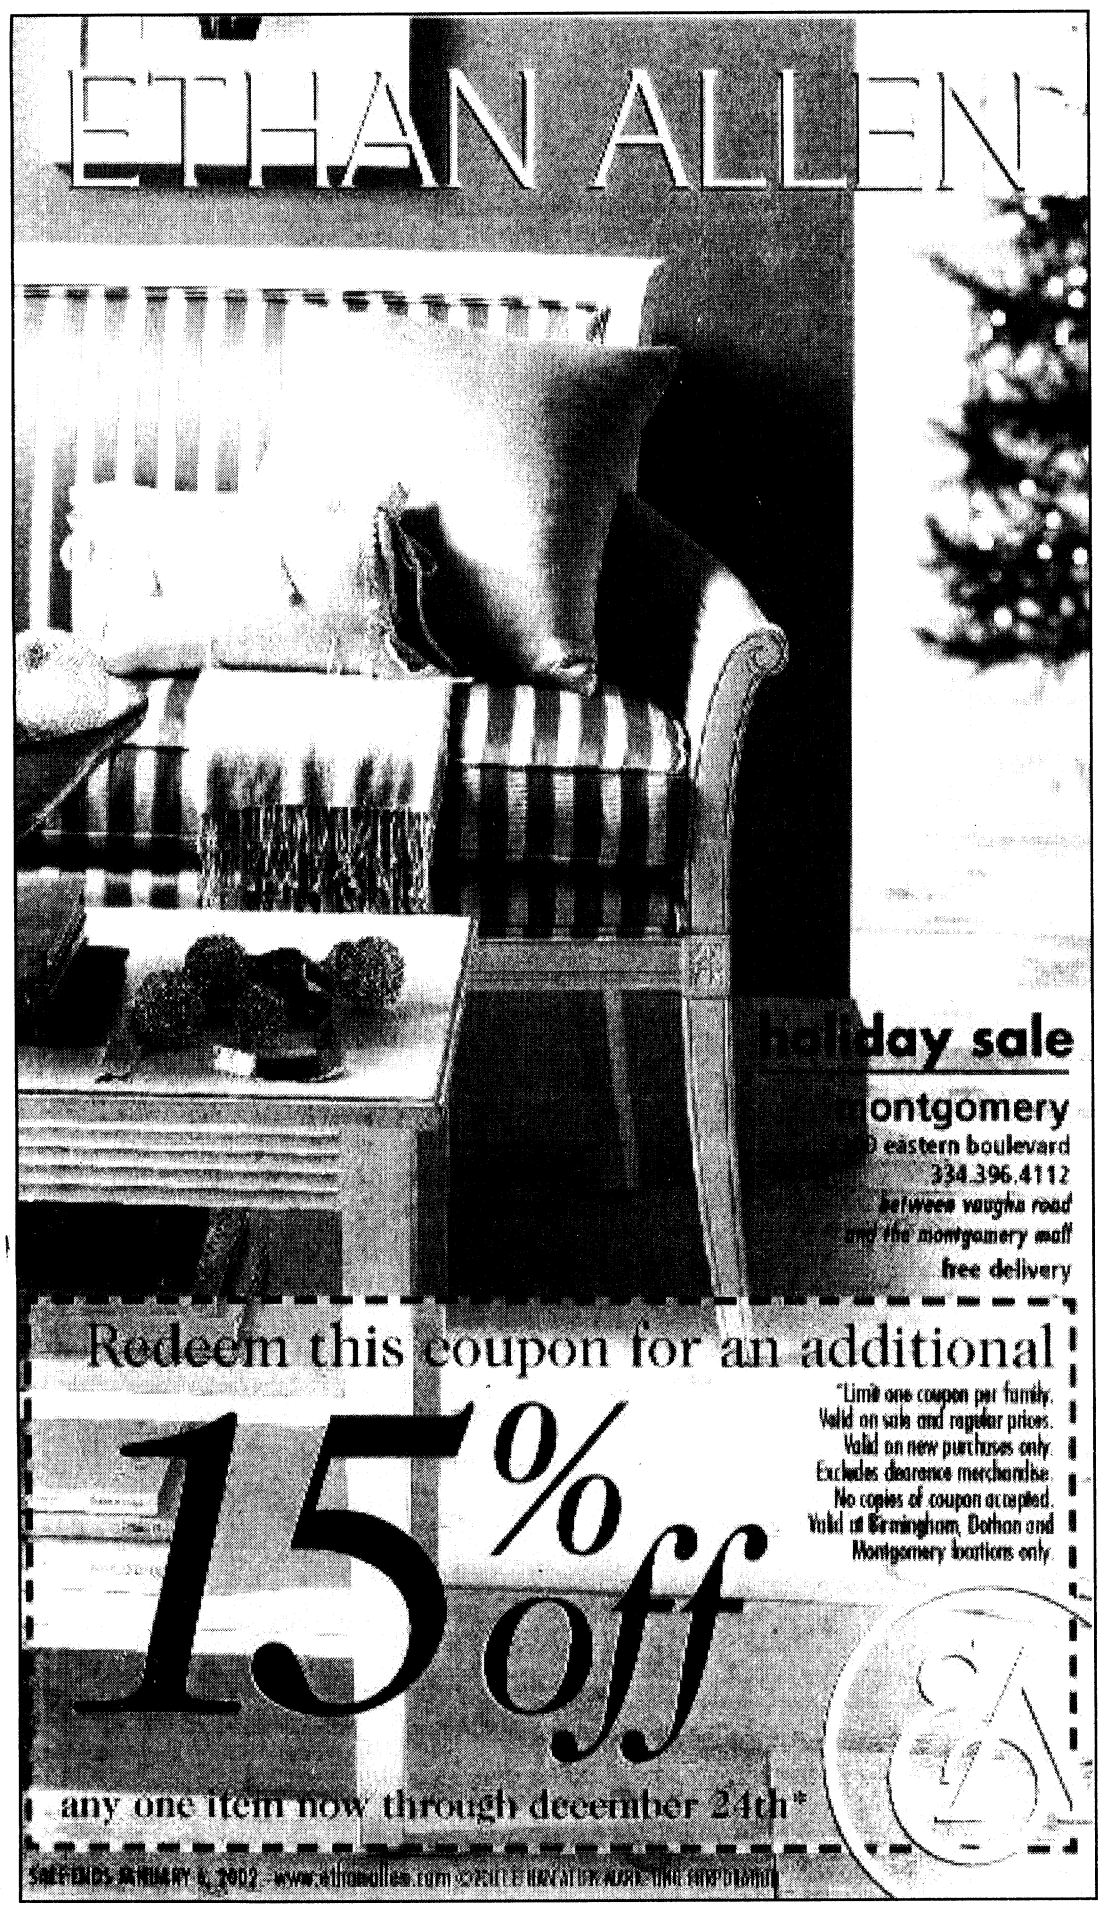
Lynch said host families are not expected to purchase Christmas gifts.



Though funding has suffered since the Sept. 11 attacks, a local agency provided a bicycle for each of the boys.

"I call them low-maintenance kids, because they ask for so little and appreciate every little thing the rest of us take for granted," he said.

Host families are required to complete an application and submit to a background check, a process that takes about three days.



Lynch will travel to Fort Benning or Columbus to meet with interested applicants, or they can attend the Carpenter's Way Christmas Open House from 6 to 9 p.m. Dec. 11. at the ranch.

For more information about Carpenter's Way Ranch, call 322-5406. To find out more about the RTB's partnership with the ranch, call Schott at 544-6451.

BOSS: Offers opportunities

they have problems with the dining facilities, BOSS representatives are available to listen to soldier's concerns.

Tandi Morris, BOSS MWR advisor, said many soldiers aren't aware of the services BOSS can provide. BOSS acts as a referral service by providing the agencies and phone numbers soldiers can call or visit if they have problems such as financial management or problems leasing an apartment or house.

In addition, the organization provides soldiers with an opportunity to have fun by hosting social functions and taking trips. Recently, they visited Busch Gardens. Proposed trips for next year include a skiing trip in Gatlinburg, Tenn., and deep sea fishing in Destin, Fla.

"BOSS is designed to look after the soldier's health and welfare, and the program also provides an outlet to do fun things," Pisa said.

Last month, BOSS and AT&T sponsored a "Tired of Turkey" bowling bash for Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade soldiers who didn't go home for Thanksgiving.

BOSS also provides soldiers with community service opportunities. This week, members volunteered at Riverside dressed up as Santa Claus, Mrs. Claus, elves and Scrooge.

Proposed community service projects include an Easter egg hunt and volunteering as counselors for the Muscular Dystrophy Association's summer camp.

Unit representatives said it's important for soldiers to become involved with BOSS.

"We need to make the Army a good experience," Spc. Glorine's Suarez, 203rd Forward Support battalion representative, said. "This program helps build morale and leadership skills. Becoming involved in BOSS shows soldiers they can make a difference."

Spc. Terry Bacon, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity Command representative, agreed.

"I've encouraged a lot of soldiers to become involved," he said. "I got tired of shy soldiers sitting in the barracks complaining about how there wasn't anything to do. There are opportunities out there, and BOSS is one of them."

Pisa said everyone is invited to the BOSS meetings. The organization hasn't set a date for its January meeting, but soldiers are encouraged to visit the BOSS Web site, which will be launched in January. It will be linked to the Fort Benning and MWR Web sites. The BOSS Web site will feature, BOSS information, a calendar of events, representatives and their contact information, links to other sites and more.

"I'm excited about the Web site," Morris said. "It's going to be very informative and allow soldiers to keep up with what BOSS is doing."

Pisa said whether you come to the meetings or not, at least support the program by attending the events, volunteering, or going on the trips.

"We're here and available for the soldiers," Pisa said. "We provide opportunities soldiers should take advantage of."

Sgt. Robert Brown, outgoing president, said he feels the BOSS program will be successful next year.

"I'm encouraged the way the program is going," he said. "It looks like they're starting off with a good, firm base."

"I think BOSS is important for all single soldiers. People are available to assist (them)."

Spc. Jessica Pisa
29th Infantry Regiment

Spc. Jessica Pisa hasn't officially taken over as BOSS president, but she's already busy.

Pisa, 27, was the battalion representative for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment before being elected to her new position.

Pisa applied to become BOSS president because she wanted to make a difference and saw it as a challenge.

"They were looking for someone who's mature, responsible and had been active in the program," she said. "They were also looking for someone who could multitask and has goals and plans for the future. I think I possess all those qualities."

Pisa knows her job is a tough one. As the president of BOSS, she, along with an executive board and BOSS representatives, are responsible for addressing the concerns of single soldiers. They also plan community service activities and trips.

"I think BOSS is important for all single soldiers," she said. "People are available to assist with all their needs. BOSS is also a good way for new soldiers to become oriented with this post."

She encourages more soldiers to become involved to gain leadership skills, meet new people and make a difference concerning soldier's well-being.

Since last month, she's been learning the ropes of the job she will take over Monday from Sgt. Robert Brown, and working her other job as the finance levy and leave clerk for regiment personnel of the 29th Infantry Regiment.

Pisa joined the Army May 2000. Prior to joining the Army, Pisa, a native of Buffalo, N.Y., was a nursing student at North Country Community College in Saranac, N.Y. Due to financial difficulties, she had to leave after two years. She joined the Army as a way to continue her education, travel and as a personal challenge.

She is currently taking classes with Georgia Military College and is enrolled with eArmyU. She also plans to earn a bachelor's degree in occupational health and safety.

If Pisa doesn't make the military a career, she would like to work for the Environmental Protection Agency.

Fort Benning is Pisa's first duty assignment, and she's looking forward to the rest of her four-year enlistment.

"I like Fort Benning, and I like the Army," Pisa said. "You have the opportunity to meet a variety of people."

over the hill for activation. But we found out different."

Dacar, who is from Illinois, spent three years on active duty before joining the National Guard. He retired in April from federal civil service.

The IRR officers came to Fort Benning from as far away as Alaska and Texas, and as close as Fort Rucker, Ala. Included in the group are retirees, Vietnam veterans, teachers (three who taught at West Point), principals, real estate managers, and businessmen.

Most had seven to 10 days to report to Fort Benning after they received their orders.

"All of us are honored to be part of the call-up," said Col. Robert W. Schulkins II. "It's a great honor to be able to contribute to our present situation. I think it's unusual to call up IRR people, and it took a presidential executive order to do so. We're the first of the initial phase of this."

Schulkins spent four years active duty, eight with the National Guard and 15 with the reserve. The officer candidate school graduate and Vietnam veteran is a systems acquisitions manager for DoD, from Farmington Hills, Mich.

"Our intent is to do whatever it takes, whatever our country needs."

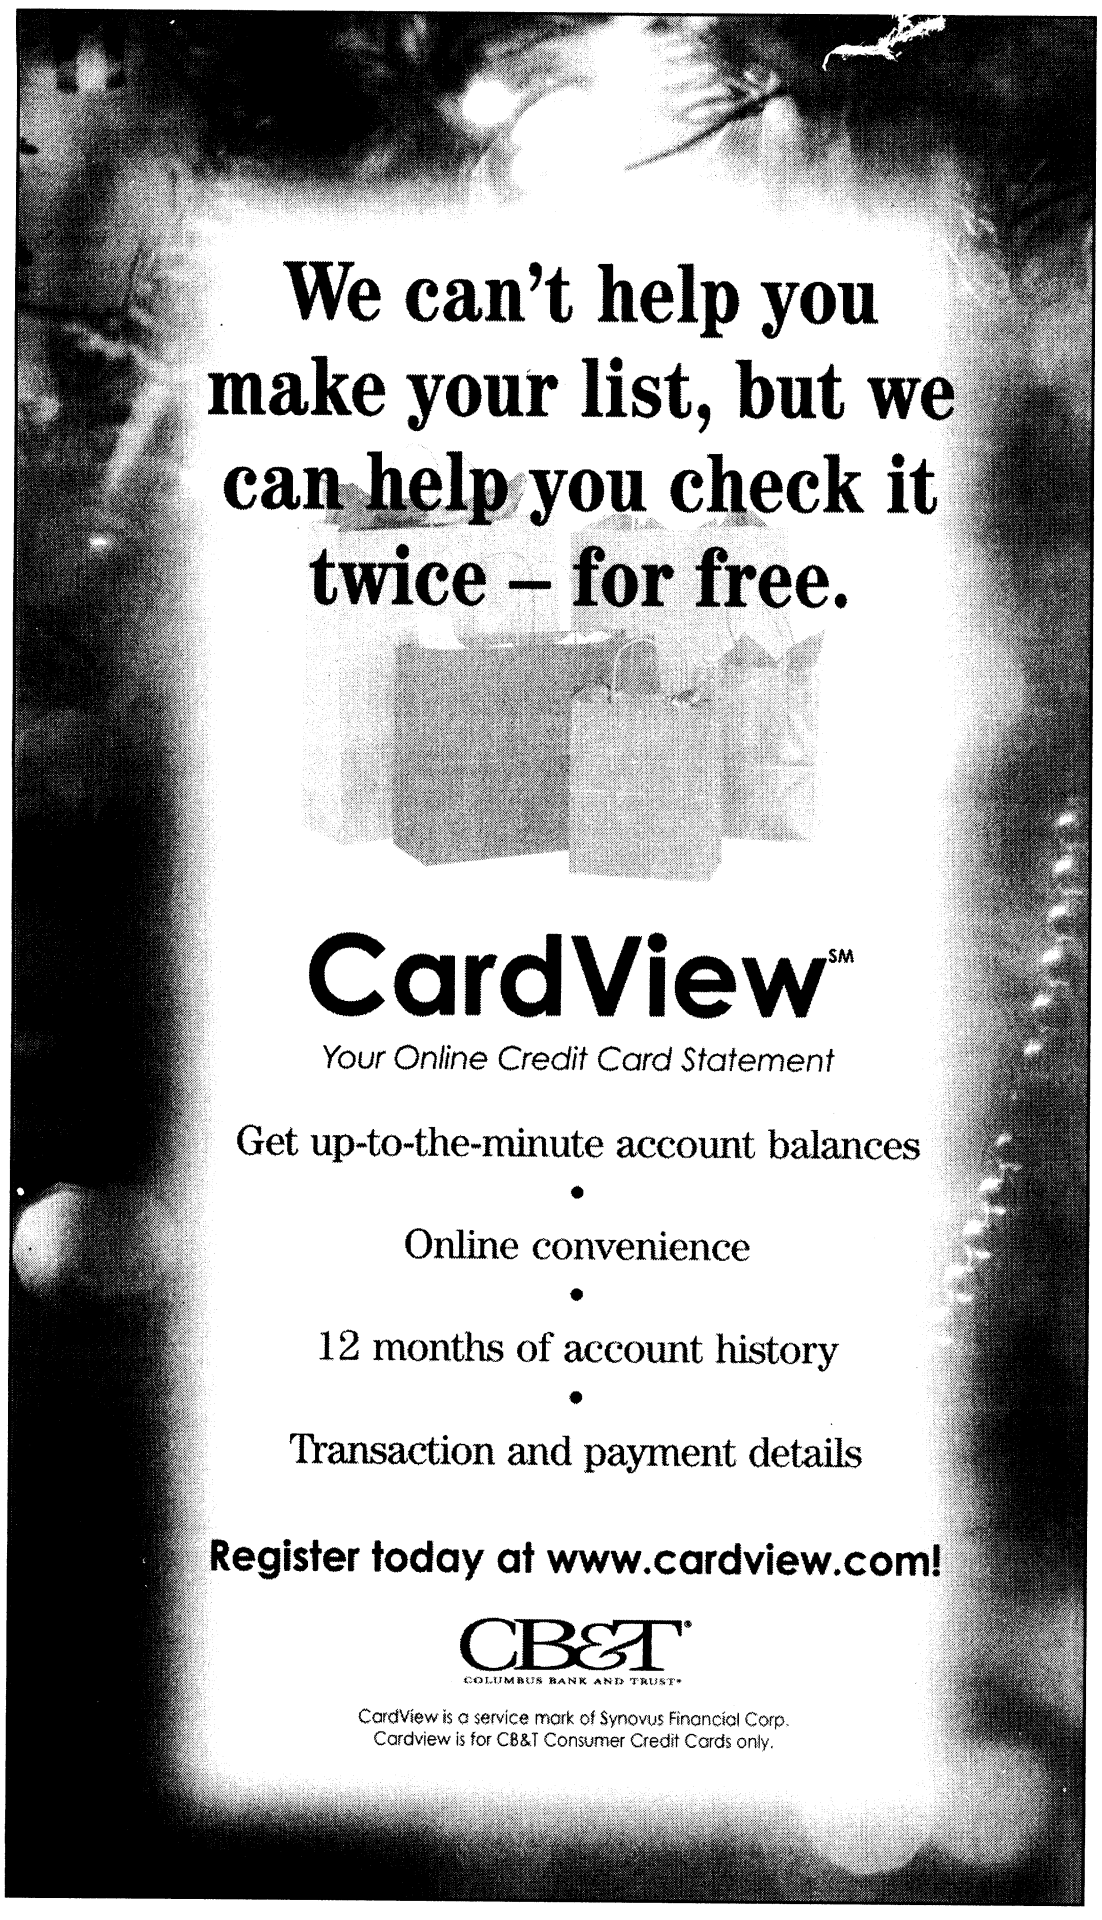
Task Force 84 is made up of 71 reserve personnel who were activated from the 84th Division and Grissom Air Reserve Base, Ind. They are responsible for inprocessing and retraining the IRR call-ups.

"It's been real smooth," Dacar said. "The days have been good. Meals have been good. Task Force 84 has obviously done a lot of work to get ready for their first arrivals."

"These guys have bent over backwards to help us," Lt. Col Douglas Anson said. "Everyone's been really professional down here."



The IRR officers have been activated for up to a year but can be extended for up to five years.

"If we can help the active duty by backing them up, I'm glad to be here," Anson said. Anson is a West Point graduate who spent 13 years on active duty and was a reservist for nine years. He was working at Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico when he received orders to Fort Benning.

"I work with a military operations research group," Anson said. "We build computer and math models for nuclear weapons, conventional defense, transportation, it's fun work."

All the officers were pulled abruptly from their civilian lives, but are ready to again serve their country.

"Our intent is to do whatever it takes, whatever our country needs," Schulkins said.

Laura Martinson

Editor's note: This article is the first in a seven-part series that will honor and explain the origin of some of our national symbols.

In a period of renewed national pride, more and more U.S. citizens are flying "Old Glory" on a daily basis. While most Americans are proudly waving or donning the red, white and blue to show support for a country at war, not many, if any, know with absolute certainty who designed the first stars and stripes or whose hands fashioned it.

However, most have heard the long standing legend detailing its origin, that of Betsy Ross.

Nearly every American learned in grade school the first American flag was sewn by Elizabeth Ross of Philadelphia. On June 14, 1777, the date we now celebrate as Flag Day, Congress adopted the new design. Although the tale has thrived with immense popularity, some historians say she has been incorrectly credited with designing the first stars and stripes. The legend itself goes like this.

Elizabeth Griscom Ross was married to John Ross, an upholsterer who was killed in a munitions explosion in 1776. After his death, she kept the upholstery shop going, which was just blocks from the State House.

Ross was acquainted with George Washington prior to his command of the Army. She embroidered his shirt ruffles and performed other mending tasks for him. She and her husband also knelt every Sunday in Christ Church in Philadelphia, just a pew away from Washington and his wife, Martha.

As the legend goes, when Washington became the general of the Continental Army, he appeared on Ross' doorstep around the first of June 1776, with two representatives of Congress, George Ross and Robert Morris.

They asked her to make a flag according to a rough drawing they carried with them, now commonly believed to be designs of Continental Congressman Francis Hopkinson. At Betsy's suggestion, Washington redrew the flag design in pencil in her back parlor to employ stars of five points instead of six. It was then that she supposedly showed the men how to create a five-point star with just a mere snip of the scissors.

However, skeptics of the story claim "her version" of the flag for the new republic was not used until six years later. They further stated the story was first brought to light in 1870 by one of Ross' grandsons, William J. Canby, at a meeting of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, 94 years after the event presumably took place. Canby was 11 when Ross died in his home.

In the many years since the story was told, numerous historians have conducted vigorous searches into government records, personal diaries, and writings of Washington and his contemporaries, and some claim they have been unable to verify the story as being factual.

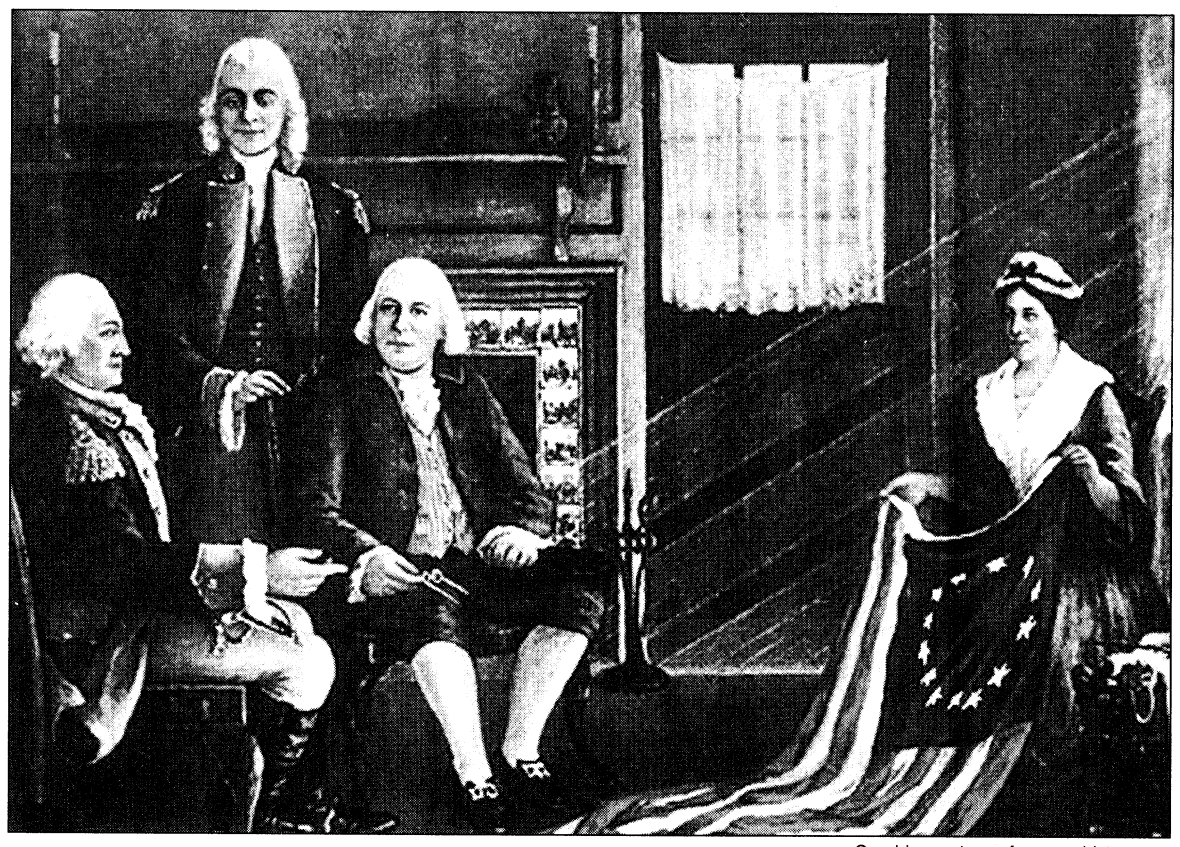
One verifiable fact was found in the minutes of the State Navy Board of Pennsylvania for May 29, 1777, which shows Elizabeth Ross made colors for Pennsylvania state ships.

But for those who question the validity of her story, sworn affidavits of several family members, including her sister, daughter and granddaughter, recounted stories told by Betsy.

If the story is not true, then why have so many generations of Americans come to accept it as fact? After Canby's death, a book written by his brother George Canby and nephew Lloyd Balderson was published in 1909. The book, The Evolution of the American Flag, presented in more detail the claims for Betsy Ross made by William Canby in 1870.

Among other things, the authors describe the formation of the Betsy Ross Memorial Association, and reproduced a painting by Charles H. Weisgerber depicting the alleged meeting of the committee of Congress with Betsy Ross. The picture, entitled Birth of Our Nation's Flag, is actually a composite portrait made up of from pictures of her granddaughters and other descendants.

The artist took more liberties with history by painting the stars in the flag in a circle. This painting stirred a great deal of public interest when it was first exhibited at the 1893 Columbian Exposition in Chicago.



This gave the legend widespread publicity and the Weisgerber painting was reproduced in school history textbooks throughout the United States.

Skeptics may say too much time has passed, and during that time we lose the validity of undocumented historical accounts. But the presentation made by Canby may best describe why a family legend could indeed be reliable.

"Where a long period has elapsed, and generation after generation has passed away between the occurrence of the event and the writing of it, there can be no doubt that tradition will become an uncertain resource for the seeker after facts," Canby stated. "But, when we can see face to face, and can converse with the parties who learned these facts from the actors in them, tradition, uncontradicted by the written record, stands unimpeachable, quite as reliable and often more so, than the books."

At the same time, there often seems to be a wistful regret if the account is not true, best expressed, perhaps, by President Woodrow Wilson when asked his opinion of the story. According to the U.S. Flag Web site, he replied, "Would that if it were true!"

A CLOSER LOOK

Elizabeth Griscom, also called Betsy, was born Jan. 1, 1752. She was the eighth of 17 children, a fourth-generation American, and her family was of firm Quaker belief.

When she finished school, her father apprenticed her to a local upholsterer. Today upholsterers are primarily thought of as sofa-makers and such, but in colonial times they performed all types of sewing jobs, including flag-making. It was at her job that Betsy fell in love with another apprentice, John Ross, who was the son of an Episcopal clergyman at Christ Church.

Quakers frowned on inter-denominational marriages. The penalty for such unions was severe — the guilty party being "read out," which meant being cut off emotionally and economically from both family and Quaker meeting house.

One's entire history and community would be instantly dissolved.

She apparently thought the risk worth taking when, on a November night in 1773, 21-year-old Betsy eloped with John. They ferried across the Delaware River to Hugg's Tavern and were married in New Jersey. Her wedding caused an irreparable split from her family.

Less than two years later, the couple started their own upholstery business. On Sundays Betsy worshiped at Christ Church sitting in pew 12 with her husband. Some Sundays would find George Washington, America's new commander in chief, sitting in an adjacent pew.

John joined the Pennsylvania militia. While guarding an ammunition cache in mid-January 1776, he was mortally wounded in an explosion. Though his young wife tried to nurse him back to health, it was to no avail.

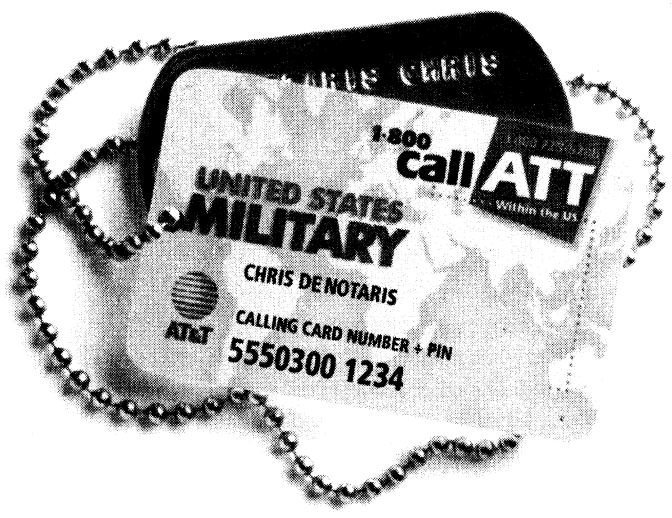
In late May or early June of 1776, according to Betsy's telling, she had a fateful meeting with the committee of three: George Washington, George Ross and Robert Morris, which led to the sewing of the first flag.

After becoming widowed, Betsy returned to the Quaker fold, in a way. Quakers are pacifists and forbidden from bearing arms. This led to a schism in their ranks. When free, or fighting Quakers — who supported the war effort — banded together, Betsy joined them.

Betsy would be married again in June 1777, this time to sea captain Joseph Ashburn, in a ceremony performed at Old Swedes Church in Philadelphia. Ashburn was later captured by the British in the West Indies and sent to Old Mill Prison in England, where he died in March 1782.

Betsy later learned of her husband's death by an old friend, John Claypoole, who was also imprisoned at Old Mill. In May of 1783, Betsy was married for a third time to Claypoole.

Betsy convinced her new husband to abandon the life of the sea and find landlubbing employment. Claypoole initially worked in her upholstery business and then at the U.S. Customs House in Philadelphia.



She continued working until 1827 bringing many of her immediate family, including four daughters, into the business with her.

In 1834, there were only two free Quakers still attending the Meeting House, Betsy Ross and Samuel Wetherill. They agreed that the usefulness of their beloved Meeting House had come to an end. At that last meeting, Betsy watched as the door was locked, symbolizing the end of an era.

Betsy died Jan. 30, 1836, at the age of 84.

She has been buried in three different locations: Christ Church Cemetery, Mt. Moriah Cemetery, and now on Arch Street in the courtyard adjacent to the Betsy Ross House.

A major Philadelphia bridge is named in her honor.

Final FTX wraps up infantry cycle

Field work finished, unit 'turns blue'

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the 11th story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

It all came down to this: One last field exercise. One last foot march and now they're done. They've "turned blue" and can now wear the light blue cords and the crossed rifles of the infantryman with pride.

All that's left for the soldiers of D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, is to walk across Kanell Field Dec. 14 and graduate from the Infantry Training Brigade.

Their final field training exercise began Nov. 30 and culminated with a 25-mile foot march that ended at Honor Hill Thursday.

Culminating the field exercise is the "Bayonet," an intense field problem based on the "Crucible," that culminates boot camp for the Marine Corps.

The "Bayonet" is continuous operations, meaning the soldiers will get no sleep, while they walk a total of 25 miles and conduct missions along the way.

"The 'Bayonet' will wear you out and do a number on you," said Staff Sgt. Daniel Denormandie, drill sergeant for 1st platoon.

During the ceremony following the "Bayonet," the commander, first sergeant and each of the drill sergeants lighted tiki torches.

Using their canteen cups, the soldiers scooped blue Gatorade from a drum to toast the infantry and the 50th Infantry Regiment. The soldiers and cadre drank to the regiment as a list of the battle involvements were read aloud.

"The infantry really has a proud history that is full of tradition," said Capt. Robert Perry, company commander. "These soldiers just eat it up."

Monday, the company conducted the "Battle, March and Shoot." During this exercise, the soldiers conducted a 3.1-mile foot march, at a 20-minute mile pace, from William Lee Field to Malone 17 Range. Once at the range, each soldier shot 30 rounds at known distance targets.

"The event is meant to simulate walking to a battle site and then having to fire accurately on target," said 1st Lt. Andrew Thrash, company executive officer.

The event was also a competition among the platoons for a guidon streamer.

They were graded on how well they shot, a strict packing list for their rucksacks and their time on the foot march. It is not the fastest time that wins. The winner is the platoon that can keep the pace as close as possible to the 20-minutes-per-mile standard.

Monday's competition was won by 2nd platoon.

Individual squads went through a certification process Tuesday by the company commander and first sergeant.

"The first sergeant and I validate each squad," said Perry.

"This is our last chance to put a thumbprint on them and say they can operate as infantry soldiers."

The certification also serves as a way to incorporate the soldiers more completely into the infantry soldier culture.

"During the certification process, I really try to focus on the AAR (after-action review)," Perry said.

"This is extremely important for the soldiers," Perry said. "It really helps them get accustomed to the language of the profession."

The soldiers were enthusiastic to complete their final field exercise and move on to graduation, Denormandie said.

"They're all motivated right now," said Sgt. 1st Class Samuel Murphy, drill sergeant for 1st platoon. "Whatever they've got to do to be finished with training, they'll do."

That thought was echoed by the soldiers.

"It feels good to be out here," Pfc. Jeramy McCarty said. "I'm looking forward to being done and seeing my family."

McCarty and a battle buddy were playing the role of the opposition force for the individual squads coming through the certification lanes Tuesday. Through the shrill beep of MILES (multi-integrated laser engagement system) gear, McCarty commented on the training.

"We're just out here having fun and doing some good training," McCarty said. "I feel confident that I know what I'm doing, or at least I have a basis for understanding."

The soldiers will move on to units or further training after graduation.

Basic trainees conquer fears at Eagle Tower

Soldiers gain confidence, learn teamwork

Sgt. William A. Graves

Photos by Spc. Douglas G. DeMaio

Spc. Cesar Echavarria maintains three points of contact during training with 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment.

After a week in the classroom, soldiers from A Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, performed their first high-speed training Monday at Sand Hill's Eagle Tower, a rappel and confidence course.

"I'm ready to do it again," Pvt. Terry Hooper said. "I loved it. I wanted (to go faster), but the drill sergeants wanted us to crawl, then walk, then run.

"Still, after a week of class work, it was a great change of pace."

The event consisted of seven key parts, which were the:

- Two- or three-rope bridge,
- Cargo net descent,
- Practice swing and practice wall,
- Rope coral, where trainees learned the Swiss seat, used for rappelling, and the square and overhand knots,
- Vertical-wall climb or the ladder climb,
- Rope swing,
- Eagle Tower rappel.

The two-rope bridge and the vertical-wall climb challenged Hooper the most.

"The bottom (of the two-rope bridge) is slippery, and the only thing holding you up is yourself," Hooper said. "If you don't have that upper-body strength, the chance of you falling off is great. It was a good work out."

No one fell off the bridge, but there were some men who had the "shaky knees."

The vertical-wall climb was a different story. There were many falls off it onto the blue safety mat.

"It's tough because your feet keep slipping out from under you," Hooper said. "You end up fighting yourself."

The highlight of the day was the rappel, he said.

"When you extend yourself off the wall and hold yourself up with one hand, it gives you a lot of confidence," the Baltimore, Md., native said. "It was a good thrill."

Staff Sgt. Charles Golden, drill sergeant, said the men did well.

"It's all about overcoming the fear of heights and having fun," Golden said. "This sets them up for success at next week's confidence course, the rest of basic training and the rest of their careers as infantrymen, especially if they go to air assault school."

There was plenty of fear and nervousness on the tower.

"I'm still a little shaken by it (Eagle Tower rappel)," Pvt. Nathan Wendelken said. "I'm definitely afraid of heights. When I crept my feet over the edge, I couldn't look down."

The soldiers' fear was all in their head because safety was paramount in all activities, Golden said. Drill sergeants insisted they stay on all fours while on elevated areas. Plus, safety nets and mats were there to catch falling trainees, and fellow trainees were safeties, or belay men, at the rappel wall. When Wendelken reached the ground, he had a new found confidence.

"It set my head straight," he said. "They put us in a situation where you have to do it. Now, I feel good about the rest of training. It's a boost."

The Cleveland, Ohio, native was glad the drill sergeants took good care of his platoon. They made sure the trainees were safe at all times by making them pay attention to detail and ensured they derived the most benefits from the training.

Hooper said the drill sergeants did a great job helping the men, too.

"They're stern but fair," Hooper said. "We're realizing they're not here to hurt us. They're here to teach us and make sure we do the right thing. Their bark is worse than their bite."

The best part of the day was how each platoon learned how to work together, Wendelken said.

"We accomplished something as a team," he said. "We helped each other and got rid of our petty differences. We encouraged each other instead of ripping on each other. We grew a lot today."

Spc. Cesar Echavarria displays 'total confidence' by letting go of the rappel rope with his support hand before rappelling down from Eagle Confidence Tower, Monday. The Basic Training Company conquered the rappel wall, the cargo net and the vertical climb.

Army enacts 'stop-loss' for some specialties

Military retains aviation soldiers, special ops

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — An Armywide "stop-loss" program announced today, will keep soldiers in selected military occupational specialties from leaving active duty; mainly those in special operations and some in the aviation field.

Reginald J. Brown, assistant secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs, approved the stop-loss measure Nov. 30.

This selective stop-loss program allows the Army to retain soldiers with critical skills on active duty beyond their date of separation for an open-ended period, officials said.

They explained soldiers affected by the order generally may not retire or leave the service as long as reserves are called to active duty or until relieved by the president, whichever is earlier.

The Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel estimates this stop-loss program will stabilize 994 soldiers in the Army through the end of this fiscal year.

The enlisted specialties affected by this decision include soldiers with the following MOSs:

MOS 18B, Special Forces Weapons Sergeant

MOS 18C, Special Forces Engineer Sergeant

MOS 18D, Special Forces Medical Sergeant

MOS 18E, Special Forces Communications Sergeant

MOS 18F, Special Forces Assistant Operations and Intelligence Sergeant

MOS 18Z, Special Forces Senior Sergeant

MOS 00Z (only those with Career Management Field 18 background)

MOS 67U, CH-47 Helicopter Repairer (all skill levels).

The only commissioned officers affected by the stop-loss will be those in Career Management Field 18, Special Forces.

Warrant officers affected by the stop-loss include those in MOS 180A, Special Forces and aviation warrant officers with the following specialties:

152C, OH-6 Scout Pilot

153D, UH-60 Pilot

153E, MH-60 Pilot

154C, CH-47D Pilot

154E, MH-47 Pilot.

The stop-loss will also affect all warrant officers with the following additional skill identifiers:

K4, Special Operations Aviation

K5, MH-60K Pilot

K6, MH-47E Pilot.

No new requests for separation will be accepted from soldiers in categories affected by the stop-loss, officials said. But they said some soldiers scheduled to separate prior to Jan. 15 may still be able to do so.

"The intent is to ensure the Army does not create hardship for soldiers who have begun transition leave," said Lt. Col. Robert Ortiz, chief of the Enlisted Professional Development Branch under Deputy Chief of Staff Personnel Enlisted Records.

"If you're a soldier who has already started transition leave and conducted final out-processing and cleared your installation or transition center, the Army will allow you to separate," Ortiz said.

Ortiz said retirements and separations scheduled before Jan. 15 will be looked at on a case-by-case basis.

This initiative freezes soldiers in the active Army and does not include Active Guard Reserve members.

Ortiz said this stop-loss measure doesn't affect reserve-component soldiers who have not been activated. He cautioned, though, that stop-loss could be expanded at a future date to include reserve-component soldiers, if operational requirements dictate the need.

The Army last used stop-loss during Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm in 1990.

The decision to enact stop-loss now was based on a servicewide manning analysis that considered input from all major commands, officials said.

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld delegated to the heads of the military departments the authority to implement stop-loss as needed Sept. 19.

The Air Force announced a stop-loss policy that began Oct. 2.

The Navy began a limited program Oct. 10 affecting about 10,500 sailors in certain specialties.

The Marine Corps has not yet implemented a stop-loss program.

The assistant secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs received authority to implement stop-loss Oct. 18 from Secretary of the Army Thomas White.

The Army did not immediately enact 'stop-loss' because it was already at its congressionally mandated strength level, according to Brown.

In addition, he said National Guard and Army Reserve soldiers were initially able to fill special needs when activated.

The recent Armywide manning analysis, however, indicated that stop-loss would enable the Army to retain trained, experienced and skilled manpower in certain essential MOSs deemed critical to the defense of the United States, officials said.

Exceptions to the stop-loss policy allow the involuntary discharge of soldiers for criminal acts under the Uniform of Code of Military Justice, or for medical reasons.

In fact, most involuntary discharges will not be affected by stop-loss, officials said, nor will stop-loss change any Army policies or regulations currently in effect that might lead to an administrative discharge or medical discharge.

Officials said the selective stop-loss does not impact soldiers who meet their mandatory retirement date.

The Army will re-evaluate stop-loss on a monthly basis, officials said, and use it as a tool to maintain unit strength levels.

Fort Benning schools focus on literacy

Plan centers on excellence in education

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Editor's note: This is the second of a five-part series that will take a closer look at the Department of Defense Education Activity's Community Strategic Plan, and specifically how it is being implemented in Fort Benning schools. This installment looks at CSP's goal one, Highest Student Achievement, which states, "All students will meet or exceed challenging standards in academic content so that they are prepared for continuous learning and productive citizenship."

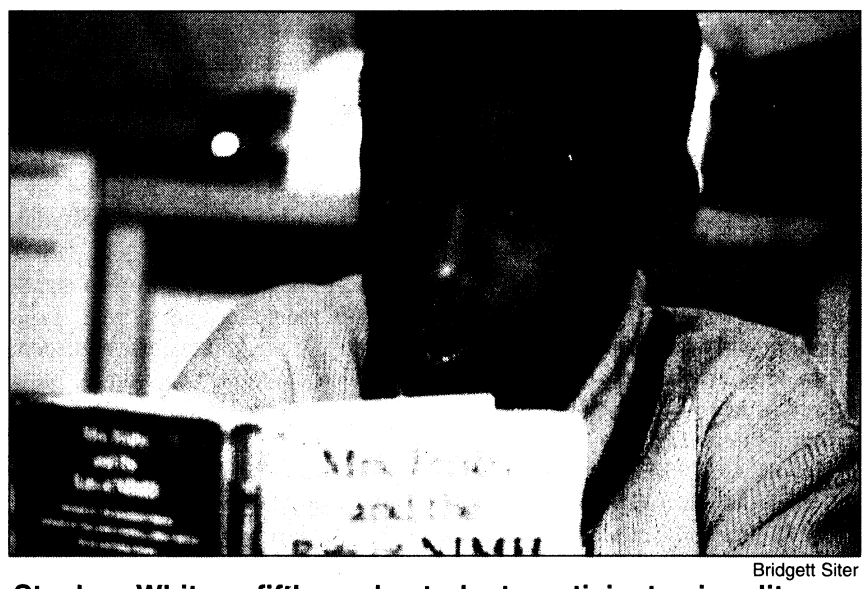
One year ago, Ashley Davis couldn't read the writing on the wall. The 7-year-old couldn't read the simple sight words posted on the "word wall" in her Stowers Elementary School first-grade classroom.



Now, thanks to Fort Benning School's Reading Recovery program, Davis is reading at grade level midway through the second grade — reading anything and everything, her mother said.

"She enjoys reading all the time now. She comes home and gets a book from the closet and reads on her own. It's great," Kimberly Davis said.

Reading Recovery is an early-intervention, short-term reading therapy program for first-graders deemed "at risk" for reading failure. The program is designed for students who are not catching on to the complex concepts that make reading and writing possible — phonics, phonemic awareness of letter to sound relationships, guided oral reading and comprehension.

Individual students receive a half-hour lesson each school day for 12 to 20 weeks with a specially trained Reading Recovery teacher. When students test within the average range of their class and grasp the skills needed to continue to progress, their

The Infantry Center Band performed their second annual holiday concert Tuesday evening at Three Arts Theatre in Columbus. The band opened the night with a patriotic flare, playing first God Bless America and then the Star Spangled Banner.

The band performed several holiday medleys, which included bits of traditional festive songs such as Deck the Halls, O Come All Ye Faithful, and Silent Night. Leroy Anderson's Sleigh Ride, which ironically was composed during a July heat wave, gave the

Christmas mourning: Grief mars celebrations

Compromises necessary part of grieving

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Good grief — an oxymoron if ever there was one.

Anyone who's ever experienced the heartwrenching loss of a close loved one knows there's nothing good about grief.

A period of mourning can be a time of emotional healing and spiritual growth, as those left behind reflect on memories and reaffirm their faith, but grief often returns unbidden to mar the happiest of times.

Like Christmas.

The feelings of loneliness and sorrow in the weeks, months and even years after a loved one's death can be compounded during the holiday season.

"Even in the best of situations Christmas is a very stressful time," said Ginger Martin-King, a bereavement coordinator with the Columbus Hospice. "It's understandable, even predictable, that this can be an especially tough time for those who are working their way through the grieving process."

It is important for the one who is grieving and his or her family and friends to recognize the impact grief can have on traditional holiday behavior and activities, Martin-King said. A moment of joy can trigger painful memories and a renewed sense of profound loss. A favorite tradition can be a source of comfort or sorrow.

"It's not a one-size-fits-all process. Grief is very individual and very physical," Martin-King said. "One person may draw strength from the routine.

"It offers security. Another

A CLOSER LOOK

Christmas takes on a whole new meaning to those faced with the imminent loss of a loved one. When the season of celebration heralds the end of life, it's hard to know the best way, if any, to mark the season.

Ginger Martin-King, bereavement coordinator for the Columbus Hospice, said terminal patients often cling to holiday traditions, finding comfort in the familiar life-affirming rituals of Christmas.

"Many of our hospice patients actually make it their goal to get through Christmas, so it 's important to observe the season in some way, even though it may have to be tailored to their special needs," she said.

Martin-King suggests several ways to celebrate the season with a dying loved one:

- Decorate early to give the patient a sense of anticipation.
- No tree? If possible, let the patient make the choice. A smaller tree placed close to his or her bed may suffice.
- Limit visitors. This is a good time to focus on family, keeping celebrations quiet and intimate.
- Ask a clergy to visit the home and conduct a private mass or Christmas service shortly before or after Christmas.
- Gift giving should not be the focus of this year's celebration. If the patient is alert, give a meaningful gift — a photo, a child's artwork or a handwritten letter.

"The gift of time and memories and laughter is the best gift you can give," Martin-King said. "Now's the time to explore the spiritual side of Christmas."

- Christmas cards? Completely optional, Martin-King said. Consider sending greeting cards in the spring.
- Expect to receive cards and phone calls from acquaintances who don't know about the patient's condition. Think about how you'll want to tell them.

Traditions ease sadness, offer stability during holidays

Bridgett Siter
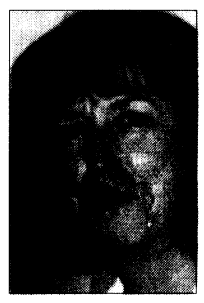
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's first lady knows a thing or two about grief, both professionally and personally.

The former grief counselor marked the one-year anniversary of her father's death on Thanksgiving. She celebrated his memory with a private family dinner.

"I brought my mother here from Pennsylvania. It was important to me to be with my family and to laugh and share memories and to celebrate his life," said P.J. Eaton, wife of Fort Benning's commanding general.

The holidays can be a time of profound joy or sadness, she said, and the two aren't mutually exclusive. There can be moments of joy in shared memories and brief levity in the midst of sorrow. It's important to know what works for the individual.



The lessons she learned as a counselor 25 years ago have applied to her life as an Army wife in many situations.

"Any major change, such as a move or major deployment, may bring about a grieving process," she said. "You have to work through it in some ways just like you would the death of a loved one."

Eaton recalled the Christmas her husband spent in Somalia — the Christmas she decided to break tradition.

"I didn't feel like decorating. I bought an artificial tree. The kids hated it," she said.

That was when Eaton realized her family was grieving the loss of her husband — albeit temporarily — at Christmas time.

Eaton

"We had to go through the process, and I had to find out what worked for the children. I asked them what traditions they wanted to continue and which ones they wanted to forgo until dad got back.

"Children need a sense of stability, and family traditions offer that. Even if they have to be altered somewhat, they can still create some kind of normalcy."

Eaton said she, her sons and daughter also took advantage of her husband's absence to create new memories.

"We watched all the movies and ate all the foods he didn't like. It gave us something to laugh about," she said.

Many Army wives understand the kind of grief Eaton experienced in her husband's absence. It's important to realize they're not alone, she said. There's strength in numbers.

"It's not a weakness to ask for help. Turn to family or family support groups or a chaplain," she said. "Sometimes we have to step outside our comfort zone to ask for help, but it's a necessary part of the healing process. If you get stuck in grief or depression and you can't get through it, ask for help. That's a sign of strength."

For help with depression during the holidays, call the Columbus Hospice at 569-7992 or the Family Life Chaplain's Center at 545-9014.

Students and soldiers build partnership

BCTB Soldiers work with Wilson school children

Wilson Elementary

Over the past two years, Wilson Elementary School and the Basic Combat Training Brigade have forged a strong partnership. Under the leadership of Col. Tom Cole, BCTB is fully committed to enriching the life experience and academic performance of the students of Wilson School.

The kick-off celebration for the school year was held in early fall. Attending were Cole and Brigade Command Sgt. Maj. Otis Blanks as well as many other soldiers from BCTB. Representatives from the Fort Benning Schools' Central Office, Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of schools, and Mr. Richard Skinner were also present at the event. John Adams from the Partners in Education Board presented the partnership pledge at the celebration.

One of the major projects planned for this year is the design and construction of a team development and leadership course on the school campus.

Recently, Drill Sgt. Paul Oden hosted a group of Wilson teachers at one of the brigade's training courses. The course consists of six obstacles; each named in honor of a soldier who died in heroic service to his country. Four of the six obstacles were chosen for the Wilson Team Development course. The obstacles are in the design stage, and construction is slated for January.

Students at Wilson are committed members of the partnership as well.

Recently, kindergarten, first and second grade students surprised a group of soldiers with homemade cookies as they ended their six-hour post at the identification check point on Sand Hill.

The group of children spontaneously sang God Bless America and You're a Grand Old Flag to the troops.

"Thank you for helping to keep us safe," Kindergartner Kaitlynn Martinson remarked to the group.

"Now do you remember why we are doing this?" responded a soldier to his fellow troops.

The event was quite touching for both students and soldiers. "This is what it's all about," Oden said.

The brigade continues to offer their support to the faculty and students of Wilson School.

At the school's first Incredibly Terrific Kid Day Nov. 15th, the soldiers from BCTB were present in every classroom. In addition, a mentoring program is being organized where soldiers will be adopting classes. The PALs Program (Partners and Adopted Learners) will allow students and soldiers to work together on a regular basis.

"Ours is a true partnership in every sense of the word," remarked Principal Phyllis Parker.

"While the partnership is only in its second year, the benefits for both groups have been far reaching, and we look forward to a long relationship with BCTB."

Housing authorities release decoration policy

Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their quarters in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation.

Holiday decorations will conform to the following:

Exterior:

Roofs — no decorations, lighted or unlighted, are allowed on quarters' roof, because the installation can be dangerous to individuals and cause damage to roofs.

Elsewhere — decorations may be affixed to quarters' walls, the underside of eaves, and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations to the quarters, use the smallest possible fasteners such as staples. Use only Underwriter's Laboratory electrical decorations.

Interior:

Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Given our ever-diminishing funding resources, energy conservation is important. Be judicious in your use of electrical decorations.

Do not turn on outside electrical decorations until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

Safety:

"Family of four dies in home fire — short circuit in Christmas tree lights blamed."

Every year headlines like this appear in newspapers during the Christmas season. Often the hazards common to the season are remembered only after reading the headlines.

Fire is a great destroyer of life and possessions. Here are some tips to avoid a home fire.

Christmas trees:

Fresh Christmas trees do not catch fire as easily as do dry ones.

Christmas trees will not dry out as readily if the cut end is kept in a container of water.

Christmas trees should not be placed near heating units or fireplaces.

Lighted candles, matches and other "open" flames should be kept away from Christmas trees.

Indoor Christmas tree lights should be turned off before going to bed or leaving the house unattended, even for short periods of time.

Christmas lights:

Before using, inspect Christmas lights careful for short circuits, broken insulation and exposed wires.

Avoid overloading circuits when hooking up your Christmas lights.

Do not use metal foil under burned out light bulbs hooked in series to keep others burning.

UL should approve Christmas tree lights for the use intended. Outdoor lights should not be used inside nor should inside lights be used outdoors.

Wrapping paper:

Tissue and gift-wrapping paper catch fire readily. Keep gift-wrapping paper and wrapped parcels should away from open flames. Used gift-wrappings and paper materials should be discarded as soon as possible. Accumulated waste paper invites a fire in the home.

Protect the family during the holidays.

Plan ahead to prevent a home fire before buying and decorating the Christmas tree and celebrating the holiday season.

Band: Entertains local community

audience something more to listen for – the sound of horses. Wooden blocks made the clip-clop sound of hooves hitting the ground, and a trumpet finished the song by creating the sound of a horse's "neigh."

Since today marks the 60th anniversary of the attack on Pearl Harbor, the band dedicated a musical piece, titled Eternal Father, by Claude T. Smith to "those who proudly served and died on that day, the day that will live in infamy."

The piece itself switched from being upbeat and energetic to solemn and reserved and finally triumphant. The change in tempo mirrored the many emotions experienced following the attack, said Staff Sgt. Robert Jones, operations NCOIC, percussion leader and drummer for the Infantry Band.

"That piece takes a look at the whole attack on Pearl Harbor and the battles that followed," Jones said.

"It starts out with everything going great, and then turns to upset, and then finally to perseverance."

"It displays that out of nowhere we were attacked, but we rebuilt and made a comeback, just like what is going on in our country now," he said.

Steve Thiele, better known as "the voice of the Infantry," read 'Twas the Night Before Christmas, accompanied by audio animation from the band. Santa made a surprise guest appearance, greeting spectators of all ages.

The evening closed with Handel's Messiah, and an invitation to audience members to sing along with a few Christmas carols led by April Slaughenhoup, Miss Georgia 1998.

Band members are the only soldiers in the Army who have to be proficient in their trade prior to being assigned their MOS, said Bandmaster Chief Warrant Officer Paul Clark. They must go through auditions and then six months of training at the School of Music before being accepted into the band.

For those wanting to view the talents of the Infantry band, they have 20 more engagements in December. The band has about 700 musical engagements each year. They will march in the Columbus Christmas parade Saturday and be at the post Christmas tree and menorah lighting ceremony Monday.

Schools: Improve skills

lessons are discontinued and new students are enrolled in their place.

Last year 65 students participated in the Reading Recovery program on Fort Benning. On average, they scored above average after 20 weeks in the program, with one-on-one instruction every day, said Melissa Hayes, Fort Benning's instructional support specialist for Reading Recovery.

"And the good news is, they continue to increase, not maintain, their reading level after they leave the program because they've developed the skills they need to become life-long readers," Hayes said.

And that's the goal of Fort Benning School's literacy initiative, Every Child a Reader ... Every Child a Writer, which falls under the umbrella of goal one of the DoDEA Community Strategic Plan.

"Our focus this year is on literacy, the root of success in all areas of academics," said Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools.

"We're committed to giving every child the skills they need to become proficient readers and writers," McMullen said. "And we're using every resource at our disposal to accomplish that goal."

Reading Recovery is just one of many programs and activities geared toward developing strong readers and writers.

The Reading Counts program was implemented last year at all seven post schools.

Students are required to read a designated number of books from an approved reading list and are tested on their comprehension of each.

Word walls, such as the one in Ashley's classroom, are standard in every post school.

Common 'sight' words — those that should be easily recognizable to early readers — are posted to familiarize young students with the use of letters and words as early as pre-K, before they've begun to practice reading and vocabulary skills.

And most elementary schools have formed reading clubs or literacy circles to encourage recreational reading.

Students meet during or after school to discuss their literature of choice.

Fort Benning elementary schools have implemented individualized programs, such as VIP (Very Involved Parents), FBI (Fathers Becoming Involved) and guest readers, who share a favorite book and explain the impact literature has had on their lives and how they use reading skills every day.

Grief: Tips ease holiday blues

may feel the need to celebrate differently or not at all."

Martin-King said grief is "hard work, very exhausting," more so during this time of year, so healthy habits, like eating right and getting plenty of exercise and sleep, are very important.

So too, is a "plan of action," Martin-King said. It's essential to form a plan early in the season, but remain flexible and sensitive to changing emotions.

"I always recommend you make a plan, even if it's not set in stone," she said.

"Maybe you don't feel up to the traditional holiday meal. Ask, 'Can I just come for dessert?' instead. Spend a few hours if you desire. Allow yourself to change your mind if you feel like it. Having choices gives you control over the situation."

Communicating his or her desires may be the hardest task a grieving person faces, Martin-King said, but it's one of the most important.

"Tell your family exactly what you want or need. Families have expectations about traditions, so communicate changes ahead of time so they'll have time to adjust to the change.

"Simply tell them if you don't want to host the party you've always hosted or attend the services you've always attended, because it's too painful this year. Let them know it may only be a temporary change," Martin-King said.

In fact, the holidays following the death of a loved one may be a good time to create new traditions, she said.

"If you try to carry on as if nothing has happened, it's like an elephant in the middle of the room — everybody knows it's there, but nobody wants to talk about it. If the bereaved person is ready to talk, use this time to share favorite memories of the person who died," she said.

"Better yet, incorporate those memories into new traditions. Create memory albums or write memories and put them in a stocking to share. Light candles. If the deceased was dad or grandpa, let a young member of the family set in his place as an honor in his memory. Scale down the celebration for as long as you need to. Do whatever works for you and your family, but don't ignore it."

Unfounded expectations of extreme joy or sorrow may also lead to anxiety and disappointment, Martin-King said.

Those who anticipate depression or sorrow may feel guilty if they find themselves enjoying the holiday in the wake of a loved one's death.

"It's not uncommon for the bereaved to find themselves unexpectedly enjoying the holiday or at least some elements of it," she said.

"Leave yourself open to enjoying the day without feeling guilty.

"Remember that grieving is a process, and it will have its ups and downs. And if you get stuck along the way, get help."

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Jessica Plaut, first grade teacher at Wilson Elementary School.

Personal: The upstate New York native and her husband, Cpl. Matt Plaut, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, live at Fort Benning with their two sons, Quinlin, 6, and Connor, 3.

History: Plaut earned her first bachelor's degree in criminal justice, after she served as a probation and parole officer in Nevada and New York.

"I loved it. It was very professional and empowering," Plaut said. "I wanted to teach criminal justice at the college level."

She eventually earned a master's in general education, but a career change came in 1998 when her husband joined the Army.

They moved to Fort Benning, where she received her bachelor's degree in early childhood education from Columbus State University. She did her student teaching at Stowers Elementary, and started at Wilson this year as a first-grade teacher.

Philosophy: "Every child is unique, and it's my job to show them their strengths, alert them to their weaknesses, and teach them to not be afraid of change," Plaut said.

"I truly believe it is the parents who are the most influential. Parents who believe education is important have children who strive to achieve."

Technique: "I don't see myself as the 'all-knower' or the giver of information. I try to teach so I am the facilitator of resources," Plaut said. "I want my students to be independent thinkers and problem solvers. I try to present information in a way that I have asked the right questions, so it is the students who have discovered the answers. Students who are taught to think for themselves will soon realize they are capable of achieving their goals. Even in the first grade, the students can, so I think they should."

Goals: Plaut has set yet another educational milestone for herself – obtaining a doctorate by the time she is 45.

"My teaching goal is to instill in my students the love of learning, so they never think they have all the answers. I hope to leave the impression that we all learn, everyday, in and out of the classroom," Plaut said.

Hobbies: Plaut does Tae-Bo every morning.

"I used to have other hobbies, but being a first-year teacher, I am concentrating on getting that right," she said.

What others are saying: "I think she's pretty squared away for a first-year teacher," said Cecilia Arabinko, whose 7-year-old son is in Plaut's class. "She's very conscientious about whether or not she's getting through to the kids."

Students learn to help others

Program offers chance to find role models

Terri Bond
Dexter Elementary School

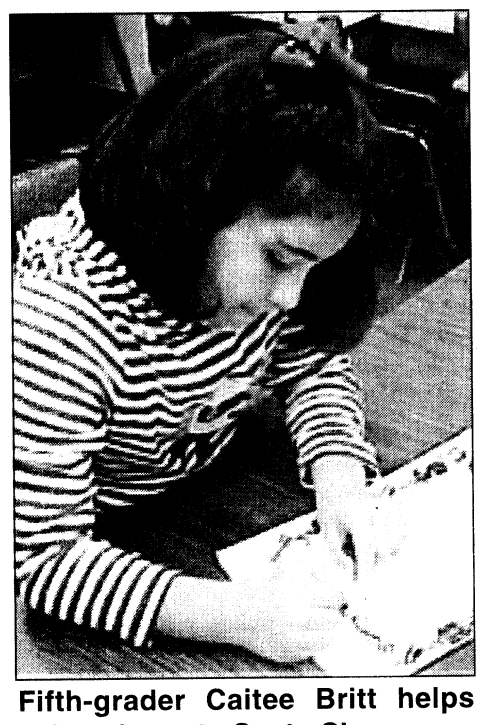
How does a giraffe give kids real heroes and move them to be courageous, caring and responsible? He does it by being a good example.

The Giraffe Program is a character education and service learning curriculum for students in third through fifth grade. Giraffe teachers are parents who volunteer to visit the classroom each week to help children learn to live well, lead well, be courageous, compassionate and responsible. Third-graders at Dexter Elementary School are currently involved in the Giraffe Program.

"The Giraffe Program is a great opportunity for students to discuss positive role models, many of whom are children," said Dexter principal Vicki Rogers. "I am very proud of the way our Giraffe Moms present each week's lesson and allow for group discussion. Each lesson is interactive."

"The Giraffe Program teaches us to be human giraffes," said third-grader Samuel Banach.

"That means to help people with their problems. Even if someone tries to stop a human giraffe, they persist until the job gets done."



"We learned that human giraffes are like real giraffes because real giraffes have huge hearts that are 25 pounds. Human giraffes have big hearts and are kind to others," said third-grader Merissa Ferry.

"Giraffe is an excellent program that allows children to detect the good in people and to be willing to reach out and help others in their everyday lives," said Dexter's Giraffe Moms, Margie Banach, Joy Cox, Kim Lockhart and Treva Spencer. "We feel that bringing the program into the classroom is especially important during these times when children are bombarded with negative images."

The Giraffe Program was started in 1982 as a way to provide balance to the bad news typically seen on news programs each day.

The program focuses on the good in people and uses those examples to bring out the good in students.

Parent volunteer Kim Lockhart works with third-grader Maverick Hudgins as part of the program.

The founding principle of the Giraffe Program is a quote from La Rochefoucauld, "Nothing is so contagious as an example."

Advent is time to celebrate

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott F. New
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Advent is a special time of the year. In the Christian church, it is the four Sundays before Christmas, celebrating the birth of Jesus. It is a time the church and many communities look forward to. It is a joyous time with great expectations. Historically, it has been a time when decorations are displayed; friends and family visit and give gifts representing the gifts given to Jesus, and God's gift to humanity.

What are you looking forward to in this advent season?

Do you see the Christmas season as primarily a religious or secular season?

It's too confusing an issue for children and many adults and even for society. But it is quite clear for retailers. Christmas is business to make or break the year's profit margin. Children look forward to making requests for their favorite toys. Many parents hope they can afford their children's requests.

New

Advent comes with many memories and traditions taught by parents and grandparents. Have these traditions included the telling of the story of the birth of Jesus?

As the church looks forward to celebrating the birth of Jesus, it also is reminded of his return. We do not know the time or the date. We do know of the promise. It took 2,000 years from the time of God's promise to Abraham, to the coming of Jesus. It has been almost 2,000 years since Jesus said he would return.

What are you looking forward to this Christmas? Will you look forward to the one for whom Christmas is about? As you look at your traditions and give gifts, pause to experience God's gift. I hope each of you will have a very blessed advent season.

Editor's note: New earned a master's in Divinity from East Baptist Theology Seminary, Pa., and a master's in marriage and family counseling, California Family Study Center, Calif. He is married to Fran and they have to sons, Scott and Kevin.

Anyone can change the world

Vision, confidence are tools for success

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Fear, self-doubt and lack of vision are our worst enemies. They rob us of our God-given potential. Once these giant marauders are slain, we are free to be and do all that God wants to do through us.

With $500 dollars and a $5,000 loan Mary Kay formed a multi-million dollar cosmetic firm that opened the highest levels of corporate power to any woman in her company.

The thousands of pink cadillacs given to her top sales representatives are a testimony to her vision and their motivation.

Koop

In 1990, a group of teen-agers in Bureson, Texas, having attended a Disciple-Now weekend, felt compelled to pray for their schools.

That evening, at the flag poles of three different schools, they met for prayer. Their desire and vision became an international movement, 'See You at the Pole.'

Millard Fuller has a desire to eliminate poverty housing and homelessness from the world. His desire and vision has developed into Habitat for Humanity, International, that builds housing for families around the world.

William Carey, the founder of modern missions, expressed it this way, "Expect great things from God, attempt great things for God."

Through his efforts the practice of burning surviving wives on the funeral pyre of the deceased husband was banished in India.

In the late 19th century, evangelist Henry Varley remarked to D. L. Moody, "The world has yet to see what God will do with, and for, and through, and in, and by, the man who is fully consecrated to him."

Moody responded with, "By God's grace, I'll be that man."

Despite having only a seventh-grade education, before his death at the age of sixty-five, Moody still was able to preach to 100 million people and to record more than a million first-time converts to Christianity.

Post intramural-football playoffs start

Ammo Dawgs blow away Charlie Better

Pvt. Brain Trapp
Bayonet staff

A cool, windless evening made a great night for intramural flag football Tuesday at Engineer Field.

The 608th Ordnance Company, Ammo Dawgs battled it out with Charlie Better, C Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, for a 12-0 win.

"We played a great game," said Robert D. White, team captain for the Ammo Dawgs. "This was the best game we played all year, and we will get better throughout the playoffs."

The first half was a fierce battle of the two teams defensive prowess.

An interception and blocked pass by Charlie Better gave them the confidence for a strong first half and put a halt to the Ammo Dawgs hard drives for the end zone.

Charlie Better and the Ammo Dawgs back-and-forth, midfield battle made for an exciting but scoreless first half.

"The defense kept it all together," said Harry G. Holmes III, Ammo Dawgs quarterback. "We could have gave up, but we stayed in there."

Charlie Better's momentum from the first half supplied the power for a hard drive early in the second half.

Jewel Brock, quarterback for Charlie Better, scrambled for 20 yards twice in a drive to bring them within scoring distance. His efforts were shut down by the Ammo Dawgs carpeting defense.

An interception late in the second half gave the Ammo Dawgs the advantage they needed to steam roll over Charlie Better and reach the end zone.

Jimmy Rush, Ammo Dawgs receiver, brought down a 35-yard pass from Holmes and ran in for the score.

In the last two minutes of the game, Rush, under double coverage, pulled in another expertly placed 30-yard pass in the end zone to clench the game.

"We picked it up in the last half," Rush said. "Everyone stepped up and gave 100 percent."

White said he was proud of his team.

"They played with so much heart. We came together as a team and kept our focus," White said.

The regular season standings were:

Falcons win 42-32

Boys survive fourth-quarter 'rollercoaster'

Phillip Thompson
Bayonet correspondent

It was anything but easy flying for the Faith Falcons boys' basketball team, who hosted Chattahoochee County Cougars Nov. 27.

If it wasn't for key plays by Miles Scott and William Mackey in the fourth quarter, the Falcons probably would not have pulled off a fourth-quarter rally to win the game, 42-32.

"Whew, this was a hard game," said Robert Lewis, Faith coach.

The team started the game with a bang when Eric Tyler won the tip off, and Kenneth Tillman drained a three pointer.

The Falcons were aggressive and dominant throughout the first quarter and headed to the second with a 10-5 score.

But the Cougars weren't out yet — they were just getting warmed up. They completely took over the second quarter and held the Falcons to just two points and scored 11 unanswered points. The Cougars led, 18-12, at the half.

"Like the last game, we could have given up, but we overcame our problem and took back our competitive edge and played good basketball," Lewis said.

The Falcons sloppy performance in the second half of their previous game against Macon County allowed them to take control and the lead, 39-36, with 4:24 remaining, but the Falcons dug deep and pulled out a 54-49 win.

Likewise, the third quarter against Chattahoochee was a battle, too. Led by Tayjsan Tutson, they closed the Cougar lead and tied the score, 28-28, going into the fourth quarter.

"The fourth quarter was a rollercoaster," a fan said.

Indeed. The teams exchanged the lead throughout the quarter, but key defensive stops and offensive plays helped propel the Falcons to their second straight victory.

commentary

As our first ever soccer season draws to a close, my husband and I had a hearty laugh as we looked back over the last 10 weeks. We both agreed at the onset our group of 4- to 6-year-olds, our daughter included, would learn how to be good sports and how to work as a team. But, more than anything, we wanted to teach our 16 youngsters that having fun is far more important than winning the game.

However, the roles were reversed as the children taught us most of the lessons, and we quickly realized how much we had to learn.

The initial practices ran smoothly. We had structure on the field and interest from the kids. As with most children this age, interest soon waned. What was intended to be used as a soccer field became a dance floor, a track and a wrestling ring.

You see, within our group, we had a slider, a tripper, a tackler and a kicker (even young children have their strategies). There were the dancers, the huggers and a couple who just wanted to wrestle in the dirt. And I quickly learned when you hear the words, "He's in my class!" you can guarantee you're outranked.

I laughed when my token daydreamer ran into the ball by accident during a game and was thrilled to kick the ball and hear the crowd cheer. I laughed when they were kicking it the wrong way down the field, because they felt they were doing it "right."

There's something heart warming about a high five or a team chant after working together to score a goal. One of my favorite moments was when a girl on my team looked up at me in the middle of the game and said sweetly, "I have a dress." I had to laugh out loud.

You see, they were the only ones who knew what the game was all about, and, to each one, it was different. Our little team of winners made us smile more when they were just being themselves than when we shamelessly beat a team, 7-0.

We learned some very valuable lessons from this little team of teachers. You cannot expect too much from young children; they will give you all they have anyway. Each one is an individual, and each one wants to be the star. They all had their moment of glory, and that was the biggest reward.

Youth Services football finishes season

Steelers, Rams conquer foes, win trophies

Y. Abbadakka
Bayonet correspondent

Youth Services concluded its 9- to 10- and 11- to 12-year-old football season Saturday and Sunday at Doughboy Stadium. Each age group was seeded according to its regular season record.

The first round in the 9- to 10-year-old division saw the Rams defeat the Ravens and the Cornhuskers defeat the Falcons in a 6-0 overtime thriller.

The 9- to 10-year-old championship game matched the undefeated Rams against the Cornhuskers. The game was a pitched battle that saw dynamic defensive play from both teams. There was no score at the half.

The second half consisted of hard hits and stalled drives. The Cornhuskers threatened late but stalled at the Rams' 10-yard line. The Rams took advantage of the situation and moved the ball the length of the field for the championship-winning touchdown.

The 11- to 12-year old age group pitted the Raiders vs. the Ravens in game one. The Raiders won a hard hitting contest, 20-0, and advanced to the second round. The second game matched the Cowboys against the Seminoles. The Cowboys won the game, 48-0, and advanced to the championship game.

Game three saw the wild-card Raiders take the field for the second time Saturday against the undefeated Steelers. Both teams played outstanding defense until the Steelers scored with 1:12 left in the fourth quarter. The Raiders fought hard and moved the ball to the Steelers' 15-yard line, but their season came to an end with 12 seconds left when the Steelers intercepted a pass in the end zone.

The championship game matched the number-one-seed Steelers vs. the number-two-seed Cowboys. In a hard-fought first half, the Cowboys took a 6-point lead with a second quarter interception returned for a touch down. The Cowboys failed to convert the extra point and went to halftime leading, 6-0.

The Steelers opened the second half with a kickoff return for a touchdown and took the lead with a converted extra point. The Steelers and Cowboys battled the rest of the game. However, neither team could score, and the Steelers took home the championship trophy.

1. FREE assessment of your military credits with a minimal one-credit course. Most schools charge application fees or require 9 or more credit hours with them as a prerequisite for evaluation.

2. All required textbooks are rented to students, making us financially competitive with in-state colleges.

3. We keep class size low for increased enjoyment and a maximal learning experience.

4. We schedule special classes when and where they are needed.

5. Only six residency credits out of 62 have to be taken with Vincennes University. CLEP and DANTES credits are accepted.

6. Military dependents and Civil Service/NAF employees welcome.

Rangers return from Afghanistan

Weather delays flight arrival

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Nearly 200 rangers returned from Afghanistan just after dawn Dec. 7.

After a number of delays due to mechanical problems and weather conditions, elements of the 75th Ranger Regiment, deployed in support of Operation Enduring Freedom, arrived to an early morning welcome.

An airplane hangar at Lawson Army Airfield was the site of the ceremony. Family and friends huddled in blankets, clutching flags and sipping coffee as the chartered aircraft circled the field for more than an hour, waiting for the heavy blanket of fog to lift.

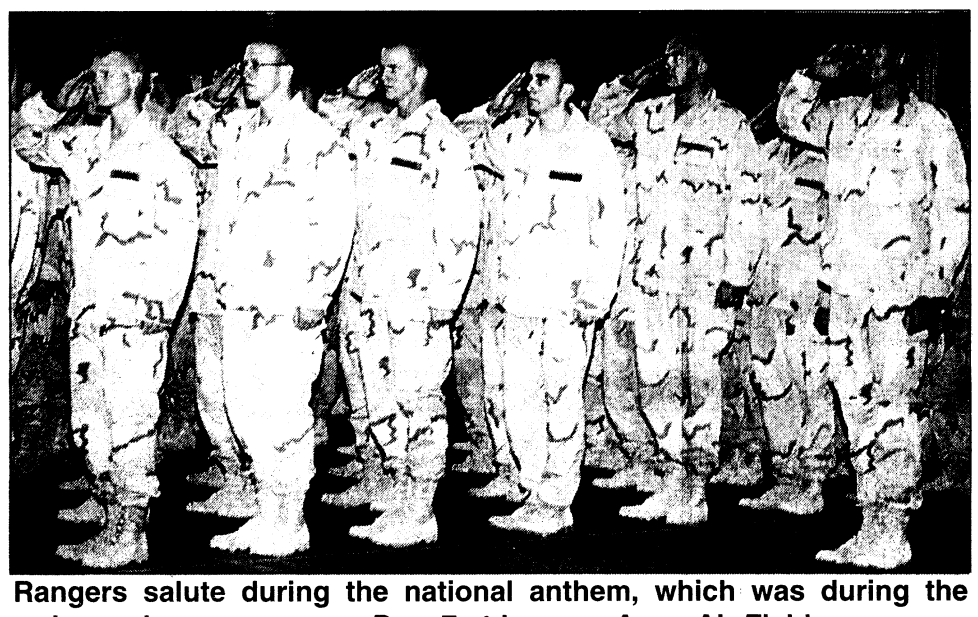
"So goes it at Fort Benning — the fog has lifted and the best soldiers in the world have arrived," said Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, Fort Benning's commanding general, in a brief welcome speech. "As I overheard one young lady say 'no hugs until we're authorized,' so I'll keep it short. Welcome home."

Five-year-old Bryant Smith arrived at 5 a.m. with his mother, Doreen, claiming he hadn't seen his dad, Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Smith, "in a thousand days."

"I'm gonna tell him I don't want him to ever go back there," said Bryant, who was wearing a special T-shirt he made for the homecoming ceremony.

'Have you seen my daddy?' it read. 'He looks a lot like me, but he's taller, with a high-and-tight and big feet.'

Staff Sgt. Eric Brandenburg's family saved their Christmas decorating for his return.



"I told (the children) we'd put up lights when their daddy got home," Tashia Brandenburg said. "Every time we passed a house with lights on, they'd say 'Their daddy must be home.'"

Bill proposes pay hike for soldiers

Senate backs 5-10 percent increase

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

The Senate approved a $345 billion defense spending bill for fiscal 2002.

If approved by the House, the military could see a pay raise ranging from 5 to 10 percent, effective Jan. 1.

That announcement was made after earlier reports of a possible delay in the passage of the bill due to a number of factors, including the Sept. 11 attacks.

If passed, defense officials said they do not guarantee the pay hikes will be in midmonth checks.

"The (Senate Armed Services Committee) has produced a good, balanced bill that meets our defense needs and supports the priorities the committee adopted for the fiscal 2002 defense program," said Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., chairmen of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

The $345 billion will represent an increase of 11 percent.

Under the leadership of Sen. Max Cleland, D-Ga., and Sen. Tim Hutchinson, R-Ariz., portions of the bill focused on quality of life for military personnel and their families.

The proposed bill will direct $700 million to pay and quality of life programs for armed forces members and their families.

The bill will accelerate the move toward increasing basic allowance for housing and eliminating all out-of-pocket housing costs for service members and their families by 2003.

Another benefit for service members is a fully funded Defense Health Plan that includes comprehensive care in skilled nursing facilities, home health care and extended benefits for military dependents with certain disabilities.

Also included in this bill are provisions that would ensure overseas voters and absent military voters have an opportunity to vote.

The bill is also aimed at improving the readiness of the U.S. forces.

It would allocate $1 billion to the military services. This portion of the bill is aimed at funding the increase in full-time manning requirements in the Army National Guard and Reserve to allow the Army to achieve its mission.

The bill also allocates $800 million to advance the transformation of the military services to a lighter and more lethal force.

The bill also includes $600 million to improve armed forces' ability to meet nontraditional threats, such as terrorism and unconventional means of delivering weapons of mass destruction.

The committee earmarked more than $2 million for a Combating Terrorism Initiative that includes funding to develop technology to detect, identify and measure biological and chemical weapons.

Berets in short supply

Second contract still in works for headgear

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Six months after issuing the first black berets, there is a shortage of the Army's new uniform headgear.

The first berets were issued June 14 to celebrate the Army's birthday. The second round was to be issued by October. It's now December, and the second shipment has not been given to soldiers.

Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, said the initial issues are not completed, and the contracts for the second berets are not in place.

"The best projection on when the second shipment will be in is October 2002, but we've been told to expect delays beyond that," said Stelzer.

Supply division currently has fewer than 2,000 berets in stock. Although that may sound like a large number, there are nearly 13,000 berets in use that will soon need to be exchanged.

This dilemma will eventually cause a problems on the installation, Stelzer said. The post cannot obtain replacement berets since the Army hasn't issued the first beret to some units. However, the post is responsible for replacing berets via

Holiday wish comes true

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Last week we brought you the story of Eric, a 15-year-old orphan whose only Christmas wish was to have a family to spend the holidays with.

That became my wish, too, my prayer in fact. I asked God for a little help with this one — help in conveying the heartbreak I felt when I met Eric and his friends at the Carpenter's Way Ranch, a home for boys who have been abused, neglected and abandoned by their families.

Carpenter's Way is a wonderful facility. I can't stress that enough. But it's a "facility" nonetheless, and the boys know it. It's staffed by fine, Christian folks with hearts the size of Texas, but at the end of the day they go home and the boys remain. It's not the same as a "real" family.

Of course real families have very little to do with biology. If that were the case, Eric would never be lonely. He has 14 siblings, yet he's never experienced the genuine warmth of a family Christmas. I know because I asked.

"Fifteen kids!" I said in amazement. "So is that your idea of a real Christmas — lots of kids around the tree?"

"I don't know. I've never had one like that," he said with a shrug.

Shrugs are a typical response for these boys. They've been "shrugged" more than hugged — by parents, grandparents, caseworkers and foster families. And they've learned to shrug at life's little disappointments, like the Christmas two years ago, when Eric and his foster family returned home to find the house ransacked and all the presents gone.

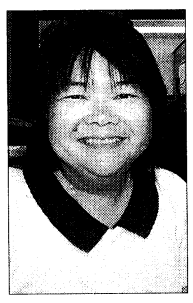
Ask them what kind of gifts they want for Christmas. They'll shrug and grin and drop their eyes. It doesn't really matter.

But ask them what they want for Christmas more than anything and they'll tell unequivocally. A family.

So you can understand my fear, last week, as I brought you the story of Eric and his friends. What if no one responds? What if they all just shrug it off as someone else's problem?

But that's not the way this Christmas story ends. Dickens couldn't have written it better.

Carpenter's Way received more than 30 phone calls within the first 24 hours from Fort Benning families who want to adopt an orphan for Christmas.



God bless you all, whoever you are. You are an answer to prayer — mine and Eric's and the staff and board of directors of Carpenter's Way Ranch.

And God bless Master Sgt. Chris Schott and the rangers of the Ranger Training Brigade, who rallied for the cause and mustered up more than $1,500 in donations to purchase gifts for these children. You are heroes and I thank you.

Adjusting to clipless pedals isn't easy

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

I finally switched from toe clips to clipless pedals on my bike. It was almost as big of a milestone as the last time my dad took my training wheels off ("for real this time and this time I mean it").

At best, I'm a mediocre recreational cyclist with a fear of falling, and I'm mildly accident prone to boot. Going clipless was a leap of faith in my equipment guru's guidance.

For those of you unfamiliar with the concept of clipless pedals, it means wearing bike shoes with cleats bolted to the soles so you can perform the unnatural act of locking your feet to your pedals.

I'm told they're similar to ski bindings, but I grew up in Honolulu where we didn't do much of that kind of thing so I wouldn't know.

It's referred to as "clipping in" which is really a contradiction in terms. How do you "clip in" to clipless pedals?

I took the liberty of putting my bike on a stationary trainer and practiced clipping in and (more importantly) getting-unclipped-in-a-hurry.

It was actually a lot easier than I thought. I made sure I got some solo rides in before I showed up for a "Ride at Five Club" meeting with my new pedals, so it would look like I knew what I was doing.

And those new clipless pedals have led me to wonder about my biking buddies. One of the first things they said was "Have you fallen over because you forgot to unclip yet?"

Forgot to unclip? I'd rate that right up there with "forgot to eat."

Other helpful comments included, "They're designed to release automatically when you fall," and "You're going to eventually. Just go ahead and get it over with," followed by anecdotes that started with, "One time when I wrecked..."

Perhaps I've been laboring under a false impression. I thought the goal was to get the bike upright and stay up. What's with the fixation with falling?

Time marched on and I managed to avoid doing an imitation of Laugh-In's Arte Johnson doing a slow-motion fall from his tricycle. We moved from "first day" to "first week" and then to the "first month."

So far, I've beaten the odds. I'm not sure how. Maybe not riding my bike as if I stole it has something to do with it, but I haven't taken a spill...yet.

As for the disbelievers, I suspect Mr. Mileage and Snively are placing bets on when "yet" is.

The answer is "Not yet."

Daughter thanks soldiers

I would be remiss if I did not send a note to let you know what fine young men we have in the Army today.

My father was a World War II veteran. He died Nov. 27, and he had a full military funeral on Nov. 29. The funeral detail was from A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The detail was made up of the following soldiers: Staff Sgt. Joe Benavides, Sgt. Khambas Mounlasey, Cpl. Paul Fedorisen, Spc. Kenneth Luna, Pfc. Sean Petit, Pvt. Wojciech Syzmanski, Pfc. Rayan Garcia and Pfc. Brandford Young.

They did a superb job under difficult circumstances. The day was windy and the top of the vault was not moved out of their way. However, the young soldiers improvised and no one knew they were having a hard time. You would have been proud of them.

It made me realize once again how fortunate I am to work with such professionals, no matter what the task. Some may have thought they were doing their duty, but I'm here to tell you they went beyond the call of duty.

I want those soldiers to know that my family and I appreciated what they did for us in our time of sorrow.

Program welcomes residents

The Army Family Team Building program will celebrate its seventh year of providing family readiness training to Army family members worldwide Sunday.

The purpose of "AFTB Day" is to celebrate the program's success and recognize more than 40 instructors and many more volunteers who support our program. AFTB is a family training and readiness program that provides participants with an understanding of Army culture and resources they need to become self-reliant, self-sufficient members of the military community.

There are three levels of AFTB: Level I is for family members new to the military or those interested in updating personal skills.

Level II is for family members interested in gaining life skills and those emerging as leaders in the community.

Level III develops advanced leadership skills for the experienced family member.

AFTB originated in 1992 when leaders and spouses saw a need to educate family members as a result of lessons learned during the Gulf War. The program was officially established in 1994.

AFTB welcomes everyone to join our celebration on Monday at 12:30 p.m. at the Fun Center, Building 359. Stop by and meet our program volunteers, instructors and master trainers, and join us for cake and punch. For more information, call Sarah Hertig, AFTB program coordinator, at 545-5377.

Competition wraps up

Snipers test skills, claim best in world

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Today is the final day of competition for 14 sniper teams from the Army and sister services in the U.S., Great Britain and Canada who are participating in the U.S. Army International Sniper Competition, the first contest the U.S. Army Sniper School has conducted since it was established in 1987.

"This is what separates the men from the boys," said Staff Sgt. Justin Shaffer, who along with his sniper teammate, Staff Sgt. Dominic Barnello, birthed, shaped and stoked the idea of hosting an international competition at Fort Benning for nearly two years.

"It's a natural. We are the U.S. Army Sniper School, the proponent of all Army sniper schools, but we've never before held a competition right here, at home, where the best snipers in the world are trained," said Barnello.

Shaffer and Barnello have traveled to various competitions in the U.S. and Canada, including the Shoot Right Snipers' Paradise Challenge in Brownsville, Texas, where they were named the top finishing military team in October. They gleaned ideas from other competitions to develop what they feel is a composite of all the best of all the rest.

"It's a culmination of all the other competitions we've ever seen," Barnello said. "We chose elements that worked and perfected them and made them bigger and better to create a very challenging competition that would test their ability to perform in every area a sniper team might have to perform in a real-world mission."

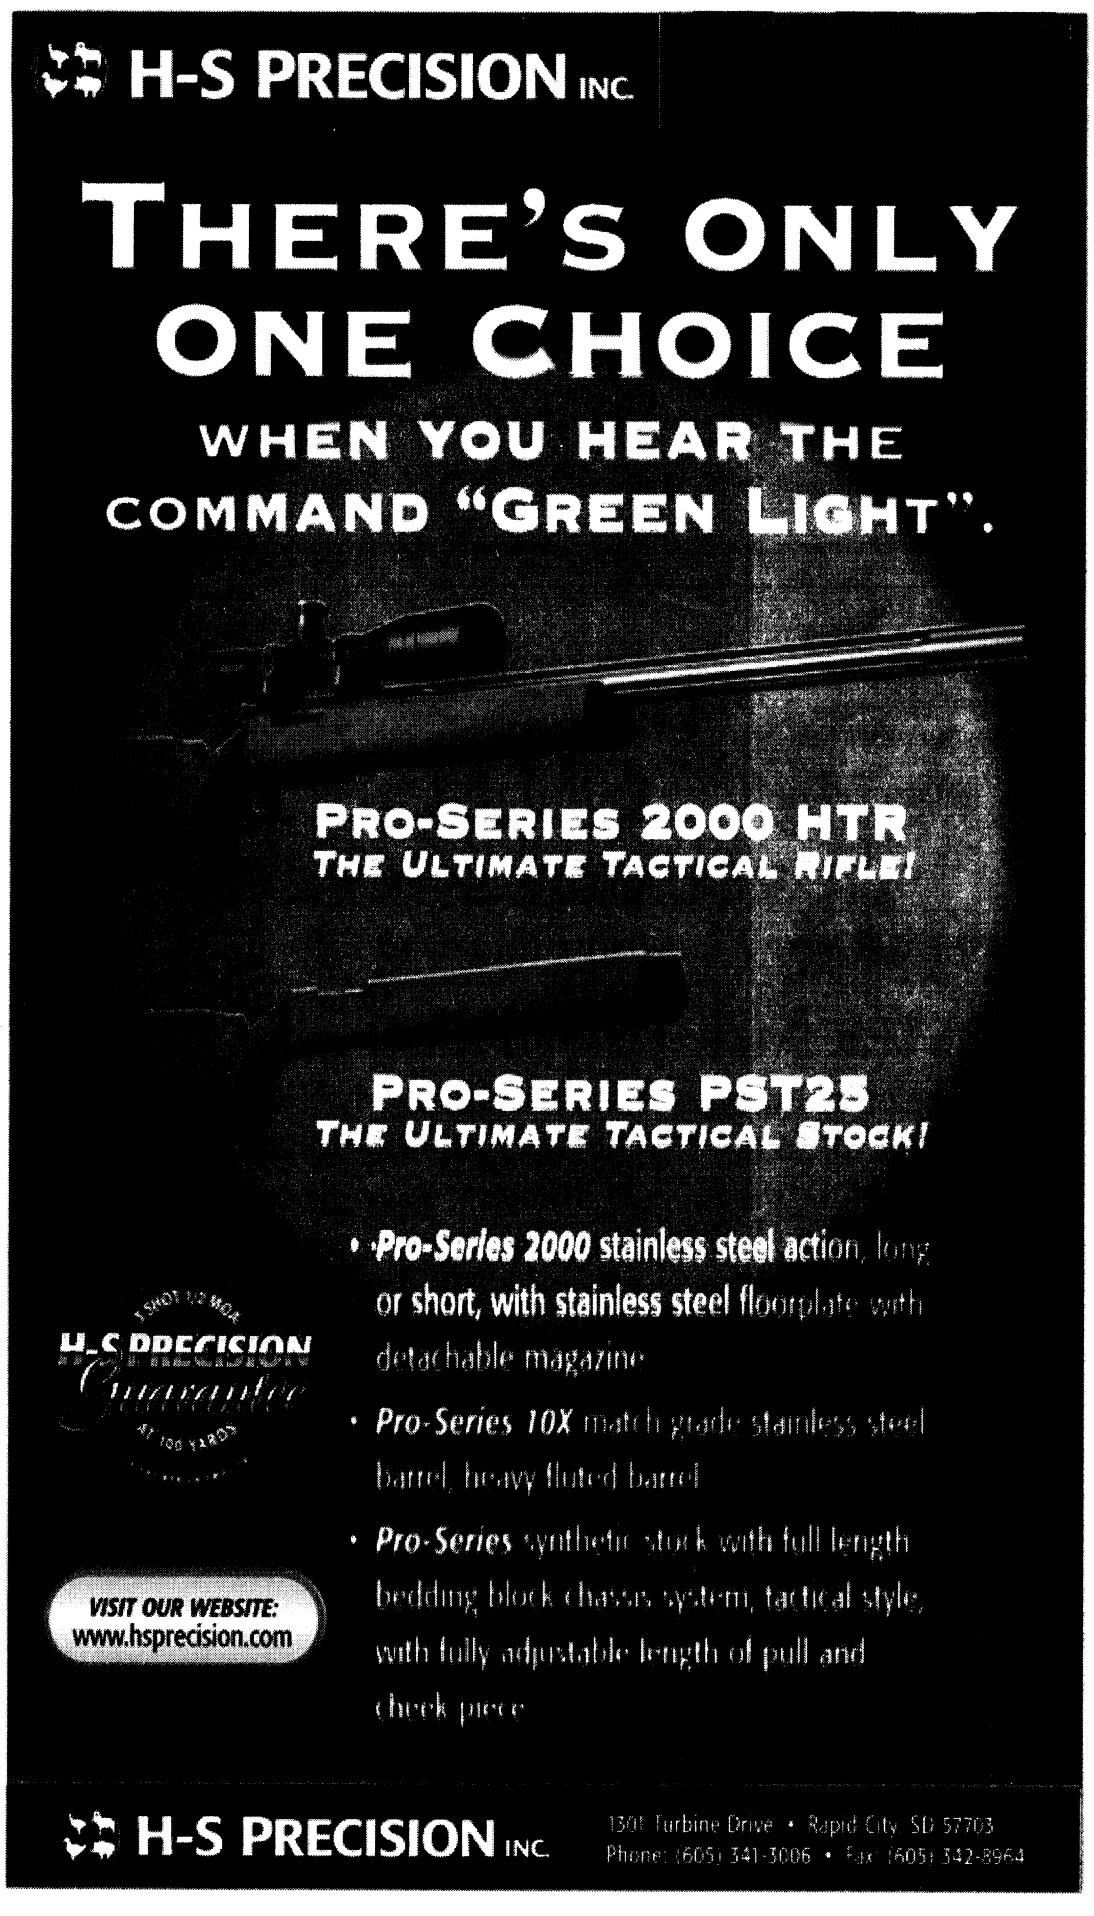
Barnello and Shaffer designed a five-day competition consisting of 13 events, including the urban shoot, live fire stalk, stress fires, alternate position fires, orienteering and cold bore. They invited teams — a sniper team consists of a shooter and a spotter — from around the world, and received affirmations from the Marines, Air Force, Navy, National Guard, Special Forces and various Army units — 44 initially. But the events of Sept. 11 cast a pall over the competition, and for a while Barnello and Shaffer feared it would have to be canceled.

"We lost a lot of teams right after it happened," Barnello said. "The 10th Mountain Division and the 101st (Airborne Division) couldn't be represented at all because of the war. But in the end we decided to give it a go, and I think 14 teams is a pretty good turnout under the circumstances.

The team of Cpl. Devon Ramos and Cpl. Mike Hallgren and their coach, Sgt. Blake Ives, traveled four days by car from Edmonton, Alberta, to represent Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry in the competition.

Ives, a 13-year sniper veteran, said his team was drawn by "the high level of competition" and a desire to learn tactics and strategies from other competitors.

"The biggest part of a competition is the opportunity to learn from others," he said. "If we do come into a NATO mission where we have to work alongside military from other countries, like we did in Kosovo where we worked with the British, it's important to know how they work. Coming here gives us all an advantage in the event of a real mission."



Sgt. Jorge Nunez and Spc. Bryan Hiatt have been a sniper team since they attended the five-week course in August. The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, soldiers said the competition gives them an opportunity to test their new skills.

"It's the best way to find our strengths and weaknesses," Nunez said. "And some of these teams have been doing this for years, whereas this is a relatively new concept for the mechanized, having sniper scouts. So we're here to learn from the best."

Sniper school cadre kept a running tab of scores throughout the week, but did not release the tally at the end of each day.

"It's any man's game," Shaffer said. "They don't know where they stand so they stay motivated. From the beginning we knew we had a lot of contenders, so we decided to wait and see the results at the end of the competition."

The competition concludes today when the final scores from each event are tallied at 2:30 p.m. Winners will be announced at a ceremony at 5 p.m. and one team will leave with "bragging rights to the title of best sniper team in the world," Barnello said.

Exodus finds soldiers on their way home

Many initial entry soldiers travel during holidays

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
2d Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Fort Benning's initial entry soldiers will ave in droves for exodus beginning Wednesday, when soldiers can depart by ivately owned vehicles.

Departure is authorized by bus and airplane hursday. Soldiers who are in airborne oldover or graduate prior to Dec. 20 are uthorized to take leave beginning today. eturn to Fort Benning is Jan. 3. Soldiers bserving Three Kings Day will be returning n. 7.

"I'm excited to go home," said Pfc. Jeramy IcCarty, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry egiment. "I'm really looking forward to eeing my wife and 2-year-old son again."

Logistical support was needed in a variety f areas to assure that the soldiers were able to go on leave without any glitches. Travel arrangements for the outbound soldiers were made through Carlson Wagonlit.

Supervisor Carol Thomas said approximately 5,000 soldiers will travel during exodus, and 95 percent will leave from the Atlanta airport.

The Carlson Wagonlit staff of 12 began booking IET soldiers' exodus travel arrangements Nov. 17.

"It's very time consuming, getting all of them booked. The agents worked long hours," Thomas said. "The actual ticketing is done on Saturdays and Sundays. Our staff usually works 15-hour days to get all the bookings done."

The average cost of the tickets was $200-$300 for flights to the East Coast and $500 for flights to the West Coast. To get the soldiers from Fort Benning to the Atlanta airport, 95 buses were chartered.

1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment will house soldiers remaining on Fort Benning.

A dining facility will be available, with special meals being served in observance of the holidays, as well as scheduled morale, welfare and recreation activities.

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Young, E Company drill sergeant, and assistant operations officer said the battalion will have two 44 passenger buses assigned during exodus.

Besides doing organized physical training everyday, the soldiers will take trips to the PX, recreation center, movies and sports games.

Arrangements have been made to get the soldiers tickets to the Columbus Cottonmouths and Riverdragons games. Longer excursions to Atlanta are also being planned to attend Falcons football games and Thrashers hockey games.

All IET soldiers must wear Class A uniforms during travel.

Drill sergeants will allow soldiers to use TVs in the barracks, but it's important to remain physically fit and safety conscious.

"It's really a great opportunity for the soldiers to relax," said Staff Sgt. Michael Chambers, drill sergeant for 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

"They come back charged up and ready to complete the mission," Chambers said.

Rumsfeld: Taliban, al Qaeda dangerous like wounded animals

U.S. Forces continue to cut off escape routes

Sgt. 1st Class Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Taliban and al Qaeda are trapped in an ever-shrinking area, and desperation may make them more dangerous to U.S. forces, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said Tuesday.

"As the area under the Taliban and al Qaeda grows smaller, there is no question but that the danger to coalition forces will be growing greater," Rumsfeld told Pentagon reporters. "We all know that a wounded animal can be dangerous."

Rumsfeld said the Taliban and al Qaeda are in their last pockets of resistance.

Rumsfeld played down media reports that suggest America is close to a victory in Afghanistan. There's still a long way to go, both the secretary and the chairman of the Joint Chiefs said.

"Our military mission remains to destroy the al Qaeda and the Taliban networks," Air Force Gen. Richard Myers said.

Myers called the Tora Bora region "the last effective al Qaeda stronghold," and said all American air strikes Dec. 10 were in support of opposition forces fighting there. American service members are also helping resupply opposition fighters in the area.

Opposition forces continue to press al Qaeda forces holed up in the mountainous, cave-riddled region in eastern Afghanistan, Rumsfeld said. He added that opposition troops had withstood al Qaeda counterattacks.

"It is clearly a major fight," he said.

The secretary also indicated he believes American forces in Afghanistan will soon start taking prisoners. Until now, American commanders had preferred to allow opposition groups to handle all prisoners, saying America didn't have enough of a presence in the region to effectively handle prisoners.

> "As the area under the Taliban and al Qaeda grows smaller, there is no question ... the danger to coalition forces will be growing greater. We all know that a wounded animal can be dangerous."
> Donald Rumsfeld
> Defense Secretary

Rumsfeld believes American forces can gather valuable intelligence information from "detainees." However, he wants the American people to have as much information as possible about how U.S. forces treat prisoners.

"We want to fashion a system that is as open as possible so that the American people can have a good comfort level about the process itself," he said.

Battlefield detainees could be held in several different locations, Rumsfeld said.

Opposition camps, U.S. military camps in Afghanistan, U.S. ships at sea in the region, or even areas in the United States are all options commanders might choose based upon the situation and the individual being held.

Regardless of where they're held, Rumsfeld said, detainees will be treated in a manner consistent with this country's values.

"But also in a manner that reflects the seriousness of their situation and of our situation," he added.

U.S. forces in Afghanistan continue to work on cutting off escape routes, Myers said.

Marines of Task Force 58 in southern Afghanistan are trying to keep fleeing Taliban forces from escaping the Kandahar area.

Pakistani soldiers are attempting at the direction of their president to make the border between their country and Afghanistan less porous, Rumsfeld said.

He said this is a very difficult job given the size of the border and the terrain. However, their work should make it harder for terrorists to flee.

Coalition must remain focused in Afghanistan

Taliban network leadership still at large

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The war in Afghanistan "ain't over yet," and the United States must concentrate on the business at hand and not get complacent, said Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz.

Wolfowitz said the coalition against terrorism has made great progress in Afghanistan, but more remains to be done.

He said the coalition has accomplished one major goal — the defeat of the Taliban government.

The defeat of the Taliban regime is "a worthy example to any other country that would aspire to support al Qaeda or shelter or harbor al Qaeda terrorists," Wolfowitz said.

But the leadership of the Taliban and the al Qaeda network are still at large.

It will be a long and involved process to round up these men, Wolfowitz said. Afghanistan is as large as Texas and has terrain that "is favorable to those who want to run and hide."

The United States is working with Pakistan to block the border of Afghanistan.

Ships departing the area have been stopped and searched to ensure that no al Qaeda or Taliban leaders are on board.

"The conditions in Afghanistan are very far from stabilized," Wolfowitz said.

"A lot of the progress is a result of people switching sides. The situation is fluid and remains fluid and it could be dangerous for our people who are there.

"So we have to remain alert. We cannot make the mistake of thinking it's all over but the shouting," he said. "There's a lot more work to be done."

Appearing with Wolfowitz was Joint Staff briefer Rear Adm. John Stufflebeem.

Stufflebeem told reporters that intelligence reports from the area tend to point to the area around Tora Bora as Osama bin Laden's hideout.

He said the United States has substantially reduced bin Laden's ability to command and communicate both with forces inside Afghanistan and al Qaeda cells outside the country.

"I think we've substantially reduced his authority over people who might be inclined to listen to him," Wolfowitz said.

The deputy secretary said bin Laden is a man on the run and who has a big price on his head.

"(This is) a man who has to wake up every day and has to decide 'do I keep all this security around me which I need to make sure some Afghan bounty hunter doesn't turn me in,'" Wolfowitz said.

But the deputy secretary believes all the security helps to pinpoint bin Laden's location in the region.

He "doesn't have a lot of good options," Wolfowitz said. But that does not mean al Qaeda is powerless.

"This is a network with many bad apples in it. "You don't take out a network just by taking out one piece," he said. "You have to go after every piece of it."

Special Forces available for young soldiers

New opportunity available for junior soldiers

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Army's elite fighting force is opening the doors of adventure to junior enlisted soldiers.

Special Forces is accepting applications from infantry basic training soldiers to attend a Special Forces class that begins Jan. 7.

"Special Forces is looking for someone who is dedicated and both mentally and physically strong," said Sgt. 1st Class Ian F. Geredes, a Special Forces recruiter with the Special Operations Recruiting Company.

One of the reasons behind the change allowing junior enlisted to go Special Forces is that more soldiers are retiring and leaving the Army than people graduating from the Special Forces qualification course, said Sgt. 1st Class Thomas T. Nichols a Special Forces recruiter.

This has been happening for nearly a decade. "We're recruiting from places we never were before, like airborne school and infantry basic training," said Nichols.

The new program is only open to infantry soldiers in the 11B and 11C Military Occupational Specialty fields with a GT score of 110 or higher, compared to the normal requirement of 100.

"This is a fantastic opportunity for people just joining the Army because they will get a lot of advanced training typically not offered to younger soldiers," Nichols said.

"I think this is an excellent opportunity for people who have spent years dreaming of being a Special Forces soldier," said Pvt. Ryan Underwood, an infantry basic training soldier with the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. "Now, they will have the chance to achieve this without having to wait for years just to start obtaining their goal."

There are some different requirements for initial entry soldiers entering the course in comparison to the normal requirements.

The difference in the GT scores is because lower ranking infantry soldiers with a GT of at least 110 have a better chance for success in the program, Nichols said.

"We're anticipating levels of success will match the levels from our normal recruiting pool," Nichols said. "I'm excited to see how this program works out."

The new program for junior enlisted soldiers has been augmented with additional courses to help them reach the same skill levels as their more senior Special Forces counterparts.

The goal is for 100 soldiers to attend a two-week Special Operations pre-course between January and March.

All junior enlisted will attend a two-week Special Operations preparation course.

When they finish the Special Forces qualification course, the soldiers will be Primary Leadership Development Course qualified.

"The Special Forces community feels they are up to the challenge," Nichols said. "If we can train foreign soldiers in foreign languages in any environment, then we can train our own soldiers in the environment of our choice."

"I get to see all these brand new soldiers come out of AIT and airborne school, and they are motivated and excited," Nichols said. "It's contagious, and it motivates me. I know in a couple of years, I'll see these guys out in the Army wearing a green beret."

For more information about the program, call 545-3079.

Rangers: Return home

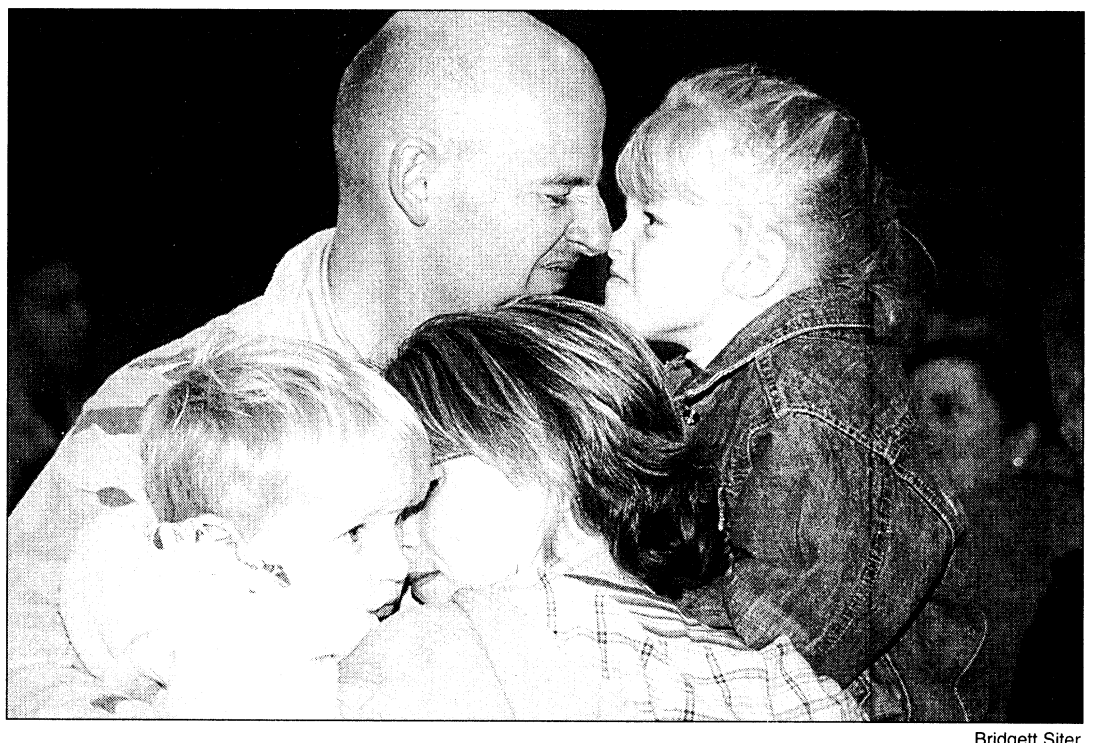
Lt. Col. Buck James, regimental operations officer, said the rangers were glad to be home for the holidays, but were ready and willing to return to Afghanistan if needed.

"I don't think any of us expected to be home this quickly," James said. "We were prepared for the long haul, and we'll continue to be prepared to go whenever and wherever we're needed."

The rangers parachuted into southern part of Afghanistan Oct. 19, where they helped secure an airfield and were instrumental in destroying Taliban and al Qaeda strongholds, said Col. Joseph Votel, the regiment's commander, who returned with his troops.

The rangers "accomplished all their missions flawlessly," he said.

"But it's not over. Operation Nobel Eagle continues and, as always, the rangers will stand ready to defend our great nation."



Votel thanked the families for "waiting, hoping, praying and supporting" their rangers in a war that promises to be neither short nor easy.

The rangers entered Afghanistan with posters of the American flag being raised over the Pentagon and the Twin Towers with the words "Freedom Endures" on them.

"We did that to send a clear message that this operation was for the reasons stated," James said. "Freedom will endure and we will not be bowed down by this."

After a brief ceremony, which included a reading of the Ranger Creed and a tribute to Spc. Jonn Edmunds and Pvt. 1st Class Kristofor Stonesifer, rangers who were killed in a helicopter crash in Afghanistan in October, the soldiers were released for a 15-minute "hug exercise" before being transported to the regiment's compound for debriefing.

Beret: Stocks in short supply

direct exchange and to issue berets to soldiers who arrive at Fort Benning for their initial permanent assignment.

As berets become worn, soldiers will be forced to return to the BDU cap or purchase berets from outside sources with personal funds.

Few places carry the berets, and those that do charge around $15, $6 dollars more than the berets actually cost.

"While we have some residue from the initial fielding, our stocks are dwindling as we conduct daily business," Stelzer said. "I've seen lots of BDU caps around Infantry Hall and Building 6 already."

Task Force 84, a group of reservists from Grissom Air Force Base in Indiana, was one unit that received some of the remaining berets for their assignment to Benning two months ago.

Some soldiers question when they will receive their beret, but the delay comes after months of contract disputes and inquiries into beret production on foreign soil.

When Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki decided last year to make the black beret standard uniform headgear for the Army, there was discontent among many.

The initial contracts for production of the berets were made with foreign markets, but national leaders and citizens felt the U.S. military should be wearing berets made in America.

Mike Ware, chief of the supply division, said berets purchased off post may be a part of the initial bunch made outside of the U.S.

The investigation that ensued of where the berets were produced only fueled the fire, and now has leaders skeptical of new contracts, said Ware.

"The beret issue is an emotional one for a lot of reasons," Ware said. "Military members take pride in their dress, but the berets out there now will soon be unserviceable, and many do not fit appropriately."

Soldiers cannot purchase berets from the clothing sales since none are available until after the second disbursement is complete. Post Exchanges cannot request berets from the Defense Supply Center in Philadelphia until initial fieldings are completed.

Another problem for soldiers is a sizing tariff, which restricts the supply facility to a certain number of each size of berets. That means soldiers may not be able to get their size.

"We have young basic training graduates who are going to be assigned here," Ware said.

"They have completed a certain rite of passage. We owe them a beret. How much longer are we going to be able to give them one?" Ware said.

Snipers compete for best team title

Canadians earn top honors

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Snipers competed in the first U.S. Army International Sniper Competition at Fort Benning last week.

When the dust settled, Canadian teams from 1st Royal, 22nd E Regiment and 3rd Royal Canadian Regiment took top honors.

The Army team of Staff Sgts. Cameron Nix and John Watt of Task Force 2, Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk, La., surprised competitors with their stealth move to secure third place among the military's best.

Watt, a former Marine, completed the Corps' sniper school before he enlisted in the Army. He teamed with Nix just days before the event.

"We didn't have the opportunity to train as a team," Nix said. "But we were given the opportunity by our command to continue to train on our own."

Though contestants did not know their standings until the awards ceremony, Nix knew his team was somewhere in the top five.

The sniper school cadre did not announce team standings throughout the competition because they wanted all the teams to stay motivated throughout the week, said Staff Sgt. Tom Dow, sniper instructor.

Fourteen sniper teams , each consisting of a shooter and a spotter, from the United Kingdom, Canada and the U.S. participated in the five-day competition.

"It went well for the first competition," Dow said.

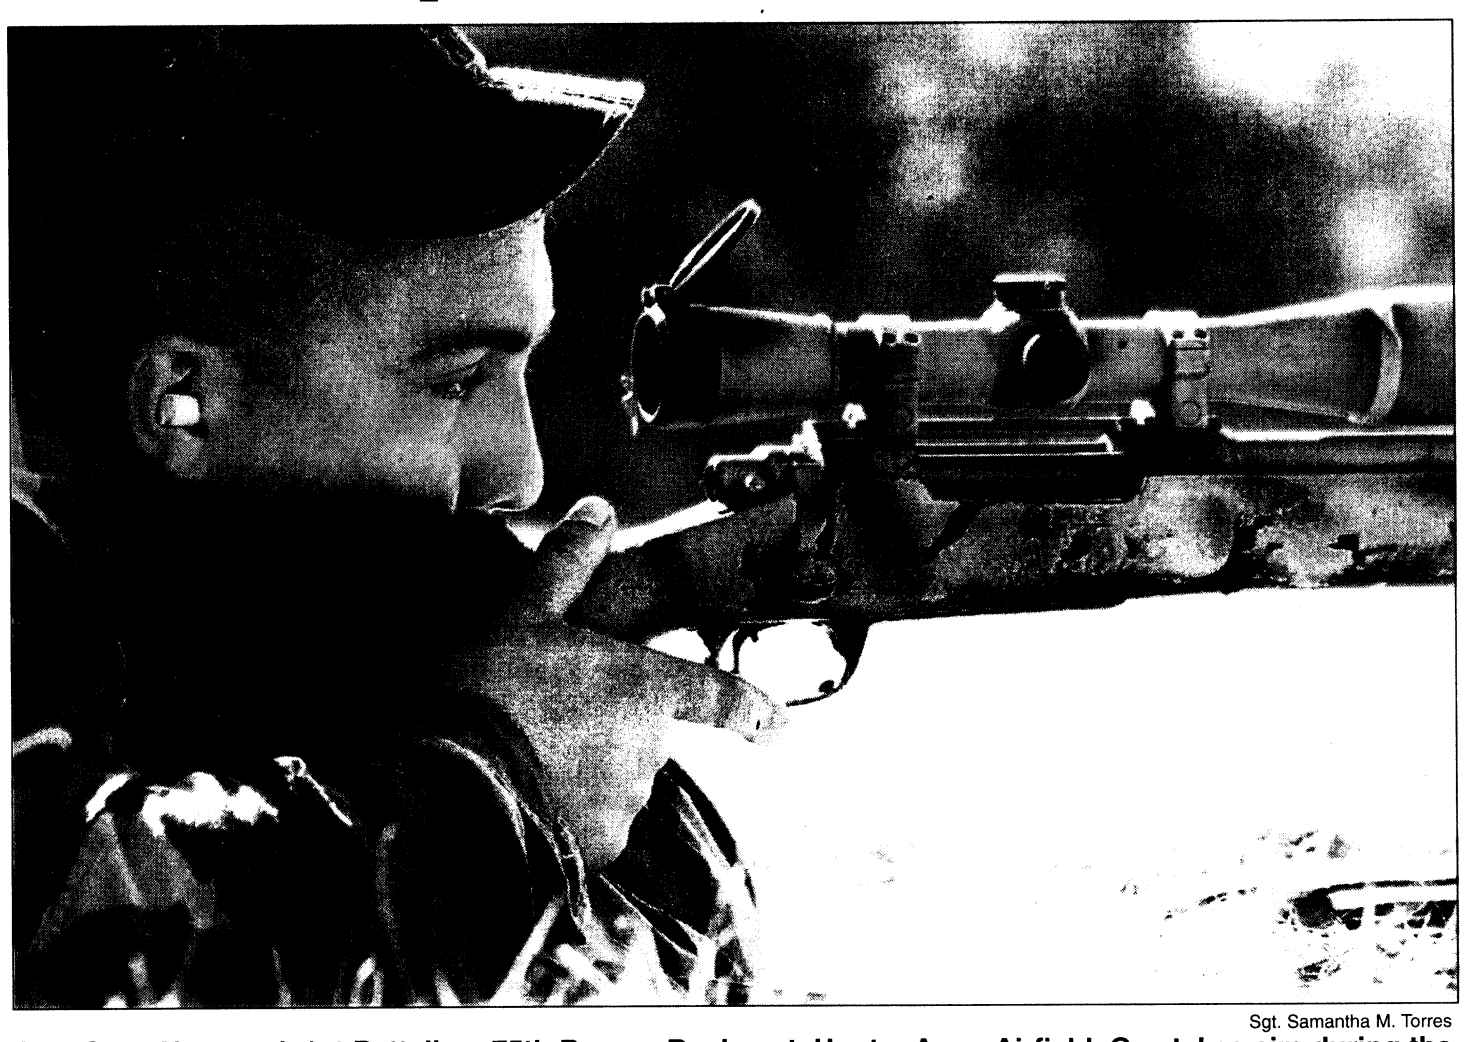
The competition tested the best in 13 separate events, including stress fires, an urban shoot, live stalk fire, a combined land navigation and road march and the final orienteering and cold bore shoot.

After two years of planning, cadre members finally hit their mark and were able to host the school's first international sniper competition.

"The cadre worked so hard to organize the competition," said Sgt. 1st Class Brian Hooten, sniper school NCOIC.

He, along with other cadre, credited Staff Sgt. Justin Shaffer and his sniper teammate, Staff Sgt. Dominic Barnello with competition's organizational work.

It is not only about winning, Hooten said.



The competition gives snipers and cadre the opportunity to get together and learn from one another.

"Some units do not use snipers," Dow said.

"So many of the competitors do not get to do this everyday," he said.

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, Fort Benning's commanding general, echoed this sentiment when he told snipers at the ceremony Friday evening at the NCO Club that the military neglects snipers.

"We are going to build on this work to engage more teams to compete next time," Eaton said.

Vendors demonstrate weapons of mass destruction

Response teams focus on real threats

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Earlier this year, someone found a suspicious package in Building 6. A hazardous material team arrived on scene, boxed up the package, sent it away for testing and decontaminated the personnel who had contact with it.

Test results were negative, but the incident reminded Fort Benning the threat of nuclear, biological and chemical attacks are real.

In light of that fact, Fort Benning held its first weapons of mass destruction vendor demonstration Dec. 5 at McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain Site.

"After Sept. 11, we started to think more about how we would react to a nuclear, biological or chemical attack," said Staff Sgt. Aaron Prowell, chemical noncommissioned officer at Combined Arms Tactics Division.

"We brought everyone together to see what state-of-the-art technology we have available to combat such an event and enhance the survivability of the first-response teams," Prowell said.

Vendors from around the country witnessed post firefighters handle a mock scenario of the disposal of a suspicious letter found inside one of the MOUT buildings.

"The first-response teams always do their job — detect, identify and neutralize problems — but it's how fast and accurate they do it that counts," said Capt. Donald M. Patterson, chemical instructor at CATD.

"The vendors are here to match their technologies to what the teams need," Donald said.

A goal of the demonstration was to show the tricommunity the response teams work well, Patterson said.

"We want local industries to know what the teams can do and what they can do to help," Patterson said. "It's a collective effort. Today was a success in that it was a springboard for future progress."

A major challenge in the fight against terrorism is to stay on the cutting edge of technology.

"If you buy (a computer) today, technology has already replaced it," Patterson said. "It's the same with the equipment the first responders use."

Funding for the needed technology is another obstacle.

"We don't always have the type of budget that can keep on the cutting edge," Patterson said. "Not everyone will agree on the dollar amount."

> "The people who develop weapons come out with new weapons all the time. So, in turn, we have to keep one step ahead of them."
> James Moses
> Fort Benning firefighter

This could be a problem if, for example, outdated equipment gives false readings at test sites.

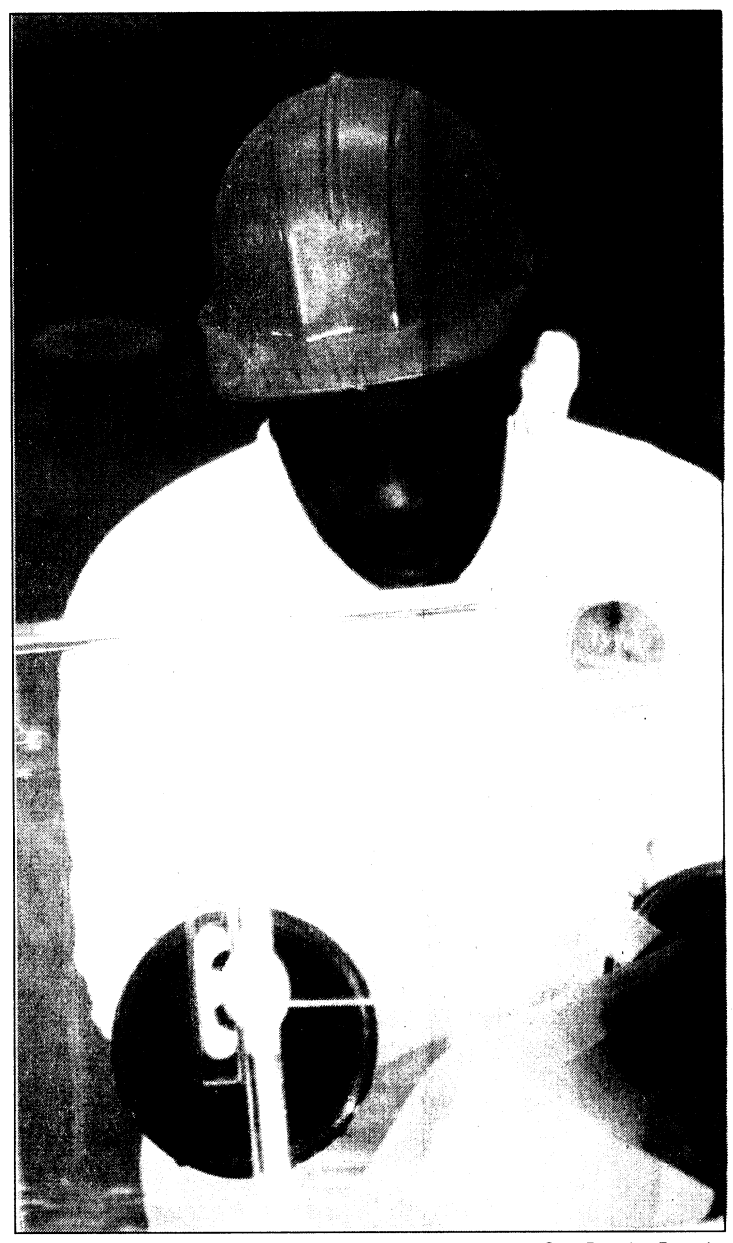
Another challenge is awareness of what could happen, Patterson said.

"There is a lot of false security, even after Sept. 11," he said. "We want to instill in everyone's mind that the threat is real."

Coordinated demonstrations like the one Dec. 5 can help the community conquer its challenges and neutralize the terrorist threat to the area, Patterson said.

"The battlefield is the U.S. now," Prowell said. "Everyone has to be a soldier, in one sense, and be ready. Hopefully, this proves we can all come together and combat the threat."

James Moses, Fort Benning firefighter and retired first sergeant, said his team did well.



"They are all professionals and prepared to do their job," Moses said. "That's important because you never know what situation you may face."

That makes training for possible attacks a work in progress, he said.

"The people who develop weapons come out with new weapons all the time," Moses said. "So, in turn, we have to keep one step ahead of them."

The fact the post, Columbus and Phenix City Fire Departments and other emergency agencies work well together making the community more prepared, he said. Constantly, each agency tries to familiarize themselves with each others' strengths and weaknesses and helps each other in times of need.

"Community members need to do their jobs like normal," Moses added. "If they find something suspicious, we are here to help protect them."

Reserve officer stretches his new wings, learns to fly

Colonel goes airborne, earns beret

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Completing U.S. Army Airborne School is no small feat. However, a little extra credit is due when the feet jumping out of the aircraft are 55 years old.

Col. Rene Dolder graduated Dec. 7 with Class 07-02.

The reservist is assigned to the 360th Civil Affairs Brigade, Airborne, Fort Jackson, S.C.

"I wanted to earn the beret as opposed to just wear it," Dolder said.

He also hoped his successful completion of the course would serve as an inspiration to others in his unit.

Dolder

"If I can make it, that's a big boost to junior officers, junior enlisted, to think that they could do this too," Dolder said.

While an airborne student, Dolder was assigned to B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry.

Company Commander Capt. D. Christopher Kingston said Dolder served as a motivator for his fellow students in the class.

"He did very well and qualified to standard on each apparatus," Kingston said. "I think he was an inspiration to the rest of the students. Graduating at 55, when 65 percent of the students are not even 21 yet, is quite an accomplishment."

Dolder felt the support of his platoon, especially during runs.

"On runs they were very encouraging," he said. "They thought it was great that I was here."

Dolder's successful completion of the course came after three weeks of hard work.

"I thought I was pretty prepared when I came here," Dolder said. "Everyone I talked to said, 'You won't have any problems, you run everyday.' But, it was more physically demanding than I thought it would be. It was really a lot of upper body.

"The LDA (lateral drift apparatus), what a torture machine that is," Dolder said. "I had muscles hurting that in 55 years never hurt before. I never knew they were there."

The first jump made the training all worthwhile, Dolder said.

"My first jump was textbook," he said. "It was just perfect, I came down like a feather. I could have stood up if I wanted to."

Dolder credited the high-quality of instructors for his successful training.

"The instructors were top-notch, very knowledgeable. They made sure we did it right," he said.

Dolder's main instructor was Sgt. 1st Class Christopher Nock.

"He hung in there," Nock said. "He really showed a lot of improvement during tower week, and during jump week he did pretty well. He was the most highly motivated, dedicated soldier in the platoon."

Dolder's platoon members noticed his dedication as well.

"He helped motivate a lot of young soldiers," 2nd Lt. John Yun said. "He was highly motivated and enthusiastic about training. He was definitely excited to be here."

Dolder was happy he earned the right to wear his beret.

"I'm just glad I got the opportunity to come do this," Dolder said. "I just wish I'd done it 30 years ago."

CID soldiers support Operation Enduring Freedom

Deployment set to last three months

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet correspondent

Six soldiers were trained and deployed in late November to Southwest Asia in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

The soldiers, members of the Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Division Battalion, will support 3rd Military Police Group CID soldiers for the next three months.

Four soldiers were shipped to Kuwait and two other soldiers were sent to Southwest Asia to set up a CID office.

They were all eager to do their job, said the battalion 1st Sgt. Kenneth M. Dowless.

"We're always excited to make a difference," he said.

The soldiers' training was successful, and the transition from the training environment to an overseas combat environment will prove to be successful, Dowless said.

They received three days of subject-matter training to prepare for the combat environment.

Soldiers received training on nuclear, biological and chemical, combat communication skills and security tactics training.

The soldiers also trained in weapons qualification and studied the rules of engagement.

"Being overseas gives CID more flexibility to respond to cases that may arise," said Capt. Darcy L. Overbey, battalion training officer.

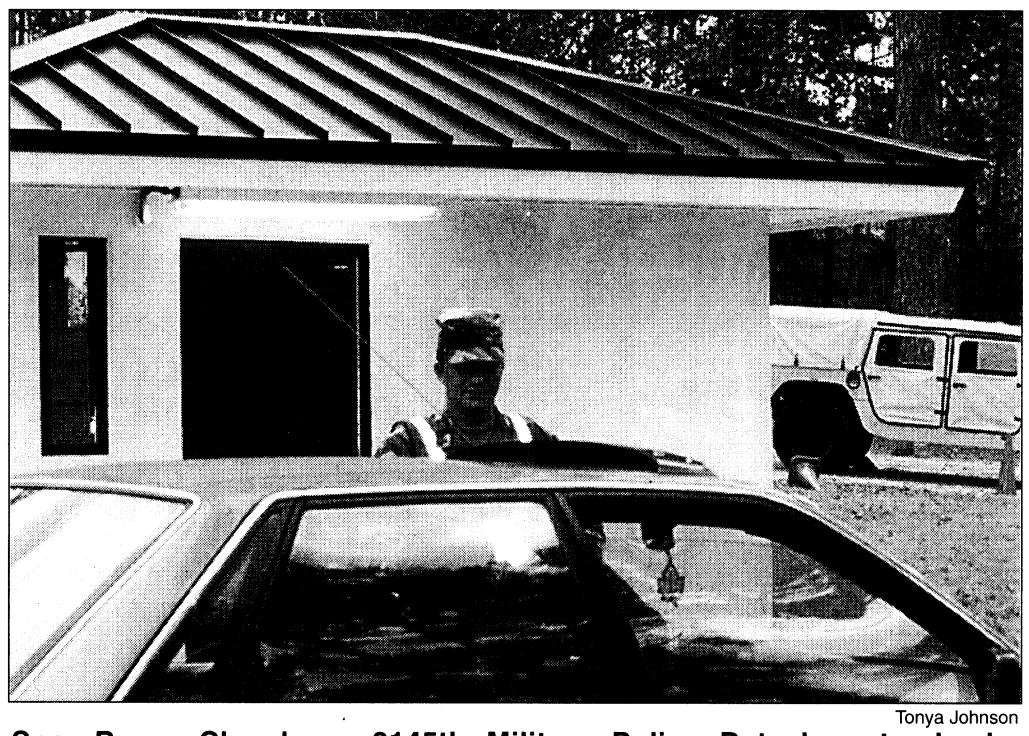
"We make sure equipment and supplies have reached their destination untampered," Dowless said,

"We also provide personal security for important individuals."

One soldier's mission is to provide security for commanding general, Lt. Gen. Paul T. Mikolasek, 3rd U.S. Army.

"He's his bodyguard," Overbey said. "He ensures the routes taken are safe and secure. He's basically his right-hand man."

While he and the others work, the battalion contacts their families weekly.



"We do weekly family and soldier contacts to make sure the needs of our members are being met," Dowless said, "We send them Christmas stockings and care packages."

The peace of mind the battalion provides to the soldiers will allow them to focus on their mission, Dowless said.

"All of them are honored to be there at this important time in our history," he said,

"They look forward to accomplishes their missions to standard."

Cold War Medal — Contrary to a flurry of recent e-mails, the so-called "Cold War Medal," for service during the time of post-World War II rivalry between the United States and the former Soviet Union, is not authorized for wear.

A bill outlining the criteria for awarding of the medal has been passed by the House and is currently in the Senate awaiting vote. If the Senate does approve the bill, the design and distribution of the medal will be determined at that time.

The Cold War certificate is still the only authorized recognition of service during that time period.

Internet auctions and email solicitors have offered the Cold War medal for sale, but this is an unauthorized representation of a medal that is not yet been approved for wear.

Any Cold War medal is currently fraudulent and unauthorized.

"We want to reach out to the people who can't physically get a paper," McDowell said.

"I think it's a great asset for The Bayonet to have a Web site," said Bob Jordan, Bayonet reader.

The site should be very successful once it gets enough advertising, and will increase the reading audience, Jordan said.

"(The site is) published in the interest of the Fort Benning community," the site will be useful to the community and evolve with the technologies that become available to the public, said Jeff Book, online manager for Montgomery Advertiser.

"The digital world is quickly coming upon us," Book said. "Being on the Internet gives readers more options to read information in different text through hand-held computers and cell phones.

"The Web site can be very useful to soldiers shipped overseas. "They can see what is going on back at home or in the Columbus community," Book said.

Research tools will also be a part of the Web site.

"We are working on an archives system to pull research content," Book said. "Growth and progression with the site will definitely be a priority."

The Montgomery Advertiser provides the design and technological resources for The Bayonet online service.

"We conducted a detailed search for the publisher of our newspaper," McDowell said. "The site is part of our agreement."

Montgomery Advertiser's online department has been operational since the summer of 1998.

Holiday turkey program helps many

Locker assists families during holiday season

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The holiday turkey program is making a Christmas turkey dinner possible for less fortunate soldiers and their families this holiday season.

The Holiday Turkey program, operated through the Army Community Service Support Fund, provides each of the installation's main subordinate commands with turkeys in bulk to help their soldiers with Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners.

"Soldiers think it is a great program," said Sgt. 1st Class Fredwick L. Rhodes, 29th Infantry Regiment supply NCOIC.

"There are a lot of soldiers who are not as fortunate as some families, and the program helps the less fortunate through the holidays," Rhodes said.

There will be 126 soldiers who receive turkeys in the 29th Infantry Regiment this Christmas, Rhodes said.

"The food locker exists for the sole purpose of supporting soldiers and their family members during periods of time when they, for whatever reason, are financially unable to do it themselves. They are welcome here if they want support," said, Al Deane Army Emergency Relief officer and supervisor for Army Community Services emergency food locker.

"I used the food locker, and it truly helped my family when we didn't have any food in my house," said Spc. David Jackson, 36th Engineer Group.

"If not for the locker, I would have been in a world of hurt due to my no pay dues. The food locker is a great thing," Jackson said.

The food locker bases the number of turkeys distributed to a command on the percentage of their assigned married and single parent soldiers private to staff sergeant.

"We gave out 618 turkeys during Thanksgiving, and we expect to hand-out 630 for Christmas," Deane said.

Schools make safety priority

Post schools use lessons learned

Bridgett Siter

Editor's note: This is the third of a five-part series that takes a closer look at the Department of Defense Education Activity's Community Strategic Plan, and specifically how it is being implemented in Fort Benning schools. This installment looks at CSP's goal two, Performance-Driven, Efficient management Systems, which states "DoDEA will use a performance driven management system that ... facilitates a safe environment conducive to optimum student achievement."

In the wake of tragedies like the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and the assault on Columbine High School, Fort Benning school officials have adopted a watch-and-learn policy about school safety. They've incorporated the lessons learned elsewhere into the Safe Schools Plan.

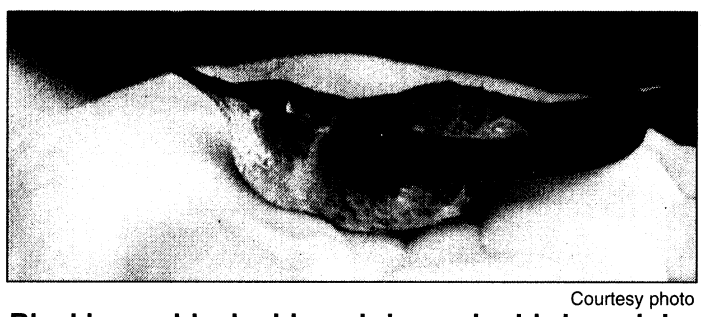
"Unfortunately we can't do a thing to change what's happened in our country or other schools, but we can take what we've learned from those tragedies and apply it to our own situations to make our own schools safe for our students and staff," said Donna Ford, Fort Benning school's support services supervisor.

The Safe Schools Plan is an emergency plan of action for natural disasters or acts of terrorism, including, but not limited to fire, tornado, bomb threat and hostage crisis.

Preventive measures are an integral part of the plan. All schools have a visitor sign-in policy, and staff members have been trained to watch for unidentified visitors on campus. Schools have also limited access after school starts each morning. Only the main entrance remains unlocked throughout the day.

"We've always had a plan in place that included standard procedures for evacuations," Ford said. "But we stepped up those plans to include more preventative, proactive measures to include safety measures for every possible emergency scenario.

The plan works on two levels.



The immediate response plan details every action that should take place in the school as soon as a crisis situation has been identified. Checklists are

Hummingbird winters with family

Migration flies in face of convention

Bridgett Siter

Blackie, a black-chinned hummingbird, weighs less than 4 grams.

Not all birds of a feather flock together. While most head south for the winter, an occasional free-thinker will wing its way eastward as fowl weather approaches.

Bird aficionados are calling it a very uncommon occurrence — a black-chinned hummingbird wintering at Fort Benning and feeding at the home of Capt. Bobby and Brigitte Toon.

Black-chinned 'hummers' are native to the Rocky Mountain region and rarely venture this far east of Mississippi. It's even more unusual to find one wintering in the southeastern region.

"Right now we're the envy of every hummingbird lover in the county," Brigitte said. "I have a friend who's an avid bird-watcher, and he says the black-chinned hummer is on his list of birds he's never seen in his life. I guess we're just the lucky ones."

Luck, and a little forethought, played a role in the Toons' good fortune.

They knew very little about the birds when their daughter received a hummingbird feeder for her birthday. But they enjoyed watching the red-throated hummers that frequented their front porch to feed on the sugar-water mixture, so Brigitte decided to leave the feeder out in the fall after reading that hummingbirds need a little help bulking up for migration.

She expected to enjoy the birds until mid-October, but when one remained at the beginning of November, she suspected she was hosting a rare wintering hummingbird.

"I got so excited because I thought one was staying," she said.

Actually, Blackie, as the bird has been named, did not stay behind when the other hummingbirds left.

She migrated to this area, probably from the Rocky Mountains, and may have spotted the Toon's feeder from half a mile away, said Fred Bassett, of the Hummer/Bird Study Group in Montgomery, Ala.

But bird-lovers should not get their feathers ruffled, Bassett said. The Toon's feeder didn't interfere with the black-chinned hummingbird's regular migratory pattern.

"It has long been a myth that feeders will keep hummingbirds from migrating," he said. "When nature tells a bird to migrate, there's nothing you can do to stop it. Feeders don't attract the birds — the birds are already here, wintering for whatever reason. The feeders just give them a better shot at survival and give us an opportunity to enjoy them during the winter."

Bassett visited the Toon's home in November and banded the tiny winged wonder. She was assigned a number and registered with the National Bird Banding Laboratory in Laurel, Md., so she can be tracked if she's ever spotted in another region.

But Bassett said Blackie may return to the Toon's home every winter.

"There are lots of theories, but no one knows for sure why some birds' migration patterns don't fit the mold," Bassett said. "But I have banded some that return to the same house year after year. They become family members. So it's not a fluke that they end up wherever they choose."

The prospect of hosting the hummer is exciting to the Toons.

"They keep calling her 'our' bird, as if she belongs to us, but we're just thrilled she's chosen us for the winter," Brigitte said.

"I hope she'll keep coming back."

Post Celebrates holiday season

Santa Claus pays visit to post

Laura Martinson
Special to Bayonet©

Fort Benning marked the official start of the holiday season Monday night with the lighting of the post Christmas tree and menorah.

Residents gathered at the Infantry Center Chapel to usher in a festive spirit with candles, carols and cookies for all. The walls, balconies and altar of the chapel were adorned with garland, wreaths, red ribbons and poinsettias, to create a very merry atmosphere.

"We are here to celebrate the joys of Christmas, Hanukkah, Ramadan," Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor told the crowd. "Don't let anyone take away your holiday happiness. There are some grinches out there who want to steal our joy, but we won't let them."

Parents and children sat side-by-side in the pews singing Christmas carols.

The crowd enjoyed songs performed by the Faith Middle School chorus and traditional holiday favorites like "Deck the Halls" played by the Infantry Center Band, before moving outside to light the tree and menorah.

Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, called for children volunteers to summon Santa Claus by singing loudly Jingle Bells. Santa must have forgotten his sleigh, because he answered their request by riding into the celebration on a fire truck.

He got quite a few more requests later when he greeted children in the reception hall of the chapel. Children hopped on Santa's lap to request everything from a Nutcracker Barbie to scooters and snakes. He greeted each child with a small bag of goodies, a Polaroid photo of their visit and wishes for a safe and prosperous season.

Torres bestowed holiday wishes on behalf of Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton, post commander, and called for prayer for soldiers away from home fighting for freedom.

"The holidays tend to bring out the best in all of us," Torres said. "We are happier, more optimistic, and more excited.

"We have been assaulted by enemies of freedom, and our spirit has been wounded. But the qualities that make us great shine now more than ever. We are more generous, more patriotic, and more conscious of Parent volunteers grilled hot dogs, and the team ate lunch outside. The students finished up the day by helping with cleanup, creating poems and bubble gum wrappers, and creating words form the term, bubbleology. All the participants hope this festival will be repeated.

Harvard student visits Faith Middle School

Matthews tells students writing important for entrance

Faith Middle School

Lauren Matthews, 23, a third-year student at Harvard Law School, visited the seventh- and eighth-grade gifted-education students in Libbie Kurinec's class at Faith Middle School Oct. 29.

She talked about the educational steps she took to get into Harvard Law School.

The 1995 Hardaway High School salutatorian graduated in Columbus and then entered Furman University, where she majored in economics and later earned the highest score on the Law School Admission Test ever made by a Furman student.

The LSAT is the entrance exam all law schools require.

Matthews, who served on the admissions board at Furman her senior year, had some advice for the students. She told them how important it is for them to read and acquire excellent writing skills now.

As a former member of the admissions board at Furman, Matthews recalled submissions were not only rigorously scrutinized for academic successes and SAT performances but for basic writing errors.

Any application with even one small error or omission was thrown out.

At that level, the competition for "getting in" is also based on an applicant's ability to communicate their thoughts through writing in a highly polished and professional manner.

Years of rigorous study, school activity involvement and self-determination enabled Matthews to submit an attractive college application for which she received a full, four-year undergraduate scholarship to Furman University, so she entered Harvard debt-free.

Matthews said she plans to work one year at a large law firm in Boston and then complete a clerkship with a federal judge to see how things look from "behind the bench."

Currently, Matthews is gaining courtroom and legal experience representing indigent clients.

"There's no doubt Lauren is on the success track and will be a high-powered attorney some day," said Kurinec.

Kurinec said, "Faith's gifted-education students now have first-hand information and new insights into the world of higher education."

Lauren is the daughter of retired Lt. Col. Jim and Mary Matthews who reside in Lee County, Ala. Her mother is a seventh-grade science teacher at Faith Middle School.

Lauren has two siblings, Trey Matthews, 21, a student at Auburn University, and Susan Sharrow, 27, an information technologist for Cox Communications in Atlanta.

Students help rescue mission with toy drive

Asia Gibson, Stowers Elementary School fifth-grader, examines some of the toys donated to the Valley Rescue Mission this year.

Charity to receive more than 400 toys and gifts

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Students and faculty at Stowers Elementary School are giving the Valley Rescue Mission a helping hand this holiday season.

Since Nov. 29, they have collected new and used toys in good condition in their second toy drive to benefit the mission.

"We're trying to teach kids to support the community and take time to give something back," said Ruth Doughty, Stowers' counselor.

Barring toy knives and guns, the students have collected almost every kind of toy from Tickle Me Elmo to toy cars and Barbie Dolls.

Trish Coughlin, counselor, said she has taken great pride in helping to raise the more than 400 expected toys for the Valley Rescue Mission this year.

"We want to make sure everyone has a good Christmas," said Rhonda Mobley, development director, Valley Rescue Mission. "It's very touching when a child has been raised by parents who teach them giving and charity is good."

Last year the Valley Rescue Mission gave more than 2,300 children toys and 900 families food baskets for Christmas, some of which were donated by Fort Benning residents.

"Everyone is involved and the students are happy to give," Coughlin said. "We're really fortunate."

The holiday season is supposed to be a time of joy and celebration. However, Coughlin said it is important to remember not everyone enjoys the holidays.

"We know there's a need, and this isn't a happy time for everybody," she said. "We need to help as much as possible."

"There's so many needs in this community," Mobley said. "We at the Valley Rescue Mission see tragedy every day in people's lives, and being able to give children toys on that special day is something the Fort Benning community should be proud of."

Fifth-grader Asia Gibson couldn't agree more.

"Some of the kids' parents don't have enough money to buy toys for Christmas," Gibson said. "It makes me feel good (to donate) because if I were in that situation, I would like people to do the same."

Coughlin said she enjoys helping Gibson and other Stowers' children learn through the Valley Rescue Mission toy drive that giving to others is one of the best gifts a person can give themselves.

"This is a legitimate cause," Doughty said. "(The students) are learning to give and they learn to give by participating."

Lesa Carter, also a fifth-grader, said it makes her feel good to help the local charity.

"I think it's (great) we can give some stuff to the unfortunate," she said.

Carter said she hopes the students' contributions will help the many children touched by the Valley Rescue Mission have a better holiday season.

"Thank you so much to the Fort Benning community for your support throughout the year," Mobley said.

provided for personnel listing emergency contacts and procedures to follow to reduce students' exposure to danger.

"Teachers are our first level of defense because they're our first responders. They've been trained to know how to respond as soon as an emergency occurs. They know what steps to take to protect their students," Ford said.

The second part of the plan is called Operation School House, an all-inclusive title for the various plans Fort Benning emergency response departments have developed. Ford said this part of the plan is the result of a group effort that included the schools, support services, and emergency response forces such as the military police, fire departments, and health-care workers.

"We worked hand-in-hand with post officials to make sure our plans not only meshed with theirs, but that we're all working together and know exactly what we expect from one another in the event of a crisis," she said.

Under the guidelines of the Community Strategic Plan, DoDEA schools are required to develop a system of assessment to measure each school's level of disaster prevention and readiness by the start of the 2002 school year. By the following year, all systems are to be audited to measure their current status "toward meeting standards for providing a safe environment."

With the Safe Schools Plan, Fort Benning schools have a jump start on the CSP requirements. Administrators have already begun assessing each school's progress in a series of emergency lockdown and evacuation drills.

"We've done fire drills, hostage drills and bomb threat drills. I haven't been to a school yet that didn't know exactly what to do and when to do it," Ford said. "It should be comforting for parents to know that these schools are committed to this plan and that they continually train their teachers and custodians and office staff to know what they need to know to keep our schools safe."

The menorah is a reminder of the Jews' struggle to practice religious freedom.

Food drives also supported the program. Some of the contributors were Faith Middle School and Wilson Elementary School.

Even with the increase in donations the food locker still needs more, Deane said.

ACS prefers monetary donations in check or money order made payable to Army Community Service Support Fund.

The food locker also accepts nonperishable foods such as canned vegetables, cereal, canned baby formula and diapers of all sizes.

Jews celebrate Hanukkah by lighting menorah

Holiday tradition remembers 8-day miracle

Joel C. Funk
USAIC Chaplain's Office

Every year between the end of November and the end of December, Jewish people around the world celebrate for eight days and nights the holiday of Hanukkah, the Festival of Lights. Hanukkah begins on the 25th day of the Hebrew month of Kislev, but the starting date on the western calendar varies from year to year.

This year, year 5762 on the Hebrew calendar, 2001 on the western calendar, Hanukkah begins on the evening of Dec. 9.

Hanukkah means "dedication," and the holiday commemorates the rededication of the holy Temple in Jerusalem after the Jewish victory over the Hellenist Syrians in 165 B.C.E.

The Greek King of Syria, Antiochus, ordered the Jewish people to reject all aspects of their religion and worship the Greek gods. But the law of God forbade the Jewish people to bow to statues or idols. Yet some Jews were afraid of the Greek soldiers and obeyed them, but most were angry and decided to fight back.

Inspired by Mattathias and led by his son, Judah, a small group of Jews called Maccabees, meaning "hammer," fought back.

After three years of fighting, the Maccabees were finally successful in driving the Syrians out of Israel and reclaimed the temple in Jerusalem, the Jew's holy place.

Yet, the temple had been destroyed, so they had to clean and repair it. On the 25th day of the month of Kislev, the job was finished and the Temple was rededicated. As part of the rededication and celebration, Judah and his followers wanted to light the menorah, the candelabrum found in every Jewish house of worship that symbolizes the eternal covenant between God and the Jewish people and the continuity of tradition through the generations. They looked everywhere for oil to light the menorah, but only found a small amount that would be enough for a single day. Miraculously, the oil lasted for eight days. This gave them enough time to make new oil to keep the menorah lit.

Today candles have replaced the oil and Jews celebrate Hanukkah for eight days by lighting candles in a menorah every night to remember the eight-day miracle.

The celebration also reaffirms the continuing struggle to live by God's commandments and to lead Jewish lives. Even though it's not mentioned in the Hebrew Scriptures, Hanukkah is widely celebrated as a major holy day of the Jewish year. In America, families celebrate Hanukkah at home. It's traditional to give small gifts to children on each night of Hanukkah. The celebration includes songs, games and toys such as a dreidel — a spinning top. Yet the religious celebration of lighting the candles and prayers always comes before the party.

"When all is said and done, perhaps the most important message of Hanukkah may be found in the name of the holiday itself: Dedication. When Jews have dedicated themselves, through faith and action, to the pursuit of high religious and human ideals, Judaism has been strong. That imperative, to strengthen our religion and our people, remains an important challenge at this season, in every generation" (Jewish Outreach Institute).

Maintain right heart for holidays

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

reflections

Be on the alert. The Grinch who stole Christmas can rob you of a glad heart during the holiday season. His heart was two sizes too small. Your heart might shrink too, if you're not careful.

Like Ebenezer Scrooge, from Charles Dicken's A Christmas Carol, I don't think either Scrooge or the Grinch were born with an obstinate heart. Over time, their hearts had become cold, hardened and withered. The cure for a petrified heart is spiritual open-heart surgery.

Like a surgeon who cuts opens the chest cavity to manually massage the heart, the Holy Spirit must open up a hardened heart. (Acts 16:14) The stiff heart must become broken and contrite for healing to begin. (Psalm 51:17) The Holy Spirit cuts to the heart (Acts 2:37) and removes the layers of bitterness, selfishness and anger in order to make the heart new, soft and tender again.

Koop

If that doesn't work, a spiritual heart transplant is required. God describes this process in Ezekiel 36:26-27, "I will give you a new heart and put a new spirit in you; I will remove from you your heart of stone and give you a heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit in you and move you to follow my decrees and be careful to keep my laws. "

How can you tell if your heart is right? A right heart is a glad heart (Ruth 3:7) and a singing heart (Job 29:13) and a heart that is pure and clean before God. (Psalm 24:4, 51:10)

Is your heart right for the holidays? If not, contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza. Call 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Students say: 'We won't forget'

Laura Martiinson

Wilson students unroll the "We Will Remember" quilt on Dec. 11. The quilt's messages to soldiers include "We stand for the U.S.A." and "Forever peace in America."

Children dedicate patchwork quilt

It was three months ago when terror struck the homeland. The perpetrators now say it's time for America to forget its losses. But on Dec. 11 the nation took a stand to show the crimes of Sept. 11 will not be forgotten.

"That's what they want us to do," said Danielle Jones, fifth-grader at Wilson Elementary. "They want us to just forget about everything and fall apart. But we are not going to do that."

President George W. Bush called upon the entire world to unite with the United States in remembrance of that day. He asked that each country worldwide play their anthem at the exact moment the first terrorist-hijacked plane struck the World Trade Center in New York, at 8:46 eastern time. Wilson was one of many schools in America that honored the request, but they took their remembrance a step further.

Each student at Wilson designed and drew a patch to create a huge paper "We Remember" quilt. The quilt was unfurled at a brief assembly Tuesday morning, following the singing of The Star Spangled Banner by students and faculty.

"Quilting has become a Wilson tradition," said Dr. Wanda Person, media specialist. "When the kids are having a bad day, it is calming and comforting for them. Although this quilt is not stitched, it was therapeutic for the kids to express their feelings through their artwork.

"When the attacks first happened, many of the kids said it looked like a movie, but it is not. It is very real. The families who lost loved ones on Sept. 11 are hurting as much today as they were on that day. Our support for them needs to continue."

The president and first lady hosted 50 first-graders at a White House ceremony where at 8:46 a.m. the U.S. Marine Corps Band played The Star-Spangled Banner.

The call for remembrance came after the Taliban released a statement Nov. 20 that the United States should "forget" about the attacks of Sept. 11.

White House officials said the United States refuses to forget the thousands of victims from more than 80 countries who perished in the attacks in New York, at the Pentagon and in a Pennsylvania field.

"They want us to be silent. They want us to shirk from our duties. They want us to forget what took place on September the 11th," Bush told the American Forces Press Service. "We will not do so. The United States will not do so, and our friends and allies will not do so. We won't forget what took place. And we will bring them to justice. We'll bring them to justice in Afghanistan, and we'll bring them to justice wherever they try to hide. Civilization is at stake."

Teen-agers tackle leadership training

High schoolers appreciate structure

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Area high school students recently had the chance to see leadership at the most fundamental level — basic training. Forty juniors from 10 high schools traveled here to take part in the Youth Leadership Challenge Dec. 6.

The theme for the day was "Leadership and Communication." The challenge began with interactive classes on understanding differences and communicating effectively, both of which are critical areas for being an effective leader, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

"If you lead, you have to be able to talk, but you also have to be able to listen," said Azzell Benton of Kendrick High School.

"Communication is important, but stereotypes can get in the way of what you're trying to say," said Chelsey Morris of Calvary Christian School. "If you're not effective, people can take something away from a conversation that you don't want them to."

The students later bused out to Sand Hill to observe the regimented daily activities of basic training soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

"What better place for children to learn what being a leader is all about?" Walls said. "You can't learn to be a good leader until you become a good follower, and basic training is the birthplace of leadership. There is nowhere to go but up."

> "This experience shows the kids that being a leader means you have to motivate people."
> Susan Catron
> Adult Leadership Columbus alumnus

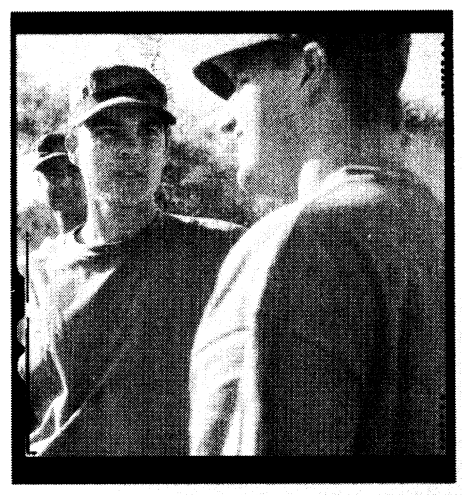
Morning classes also emphasized the "Be, Know, Do" motto of the Army, which means making things happen, knowing who you are, and the need to learn all you can, Walls said.

"They can apply this motto to the Army as well as any leadership position," Walls said.

Youth Leadership is a branch of Leadership Columbus, which recognizes and trains adult leaders in the community. School counselors select students for the youth program. Most of them already head their own groups, such as sports teams and other clubs.

The program involves high school juniors because the summer before senior year and the year itself are both times of decision making and college preparation, Walls said.

"This experience shows the kids that being a leader means you have to motivate people," said Susan Catron, Adult Leadership Columbus alumnus. "I have so much faith in our future after working with this group of smart teachers."



"Fort Benning has so many different means of showing leadership, I could keep them all day," Walls said. "But even one day is not enough."

"It's cool to see how soldiers live, and what they go through to be leaders," said Amanda O'Shields, a junior at Hardaway High School. "I have a totally different impression of young soldiers now."

"Everybody has to start somewhere to get where they want to go," Morris said. "Leading is serving, and you have to serve to be a leader."

"I asked around.
I kept hearing 'USAA for property insurance.'"

Girard Bulldogs beat Faith Falcons

Boys battle, lose first game of season

Phillip Thompson
Bayonet correspondent

The undefeated Faith Falcons confidence was high before their game against the Girard Bulldogs Dec. 4.

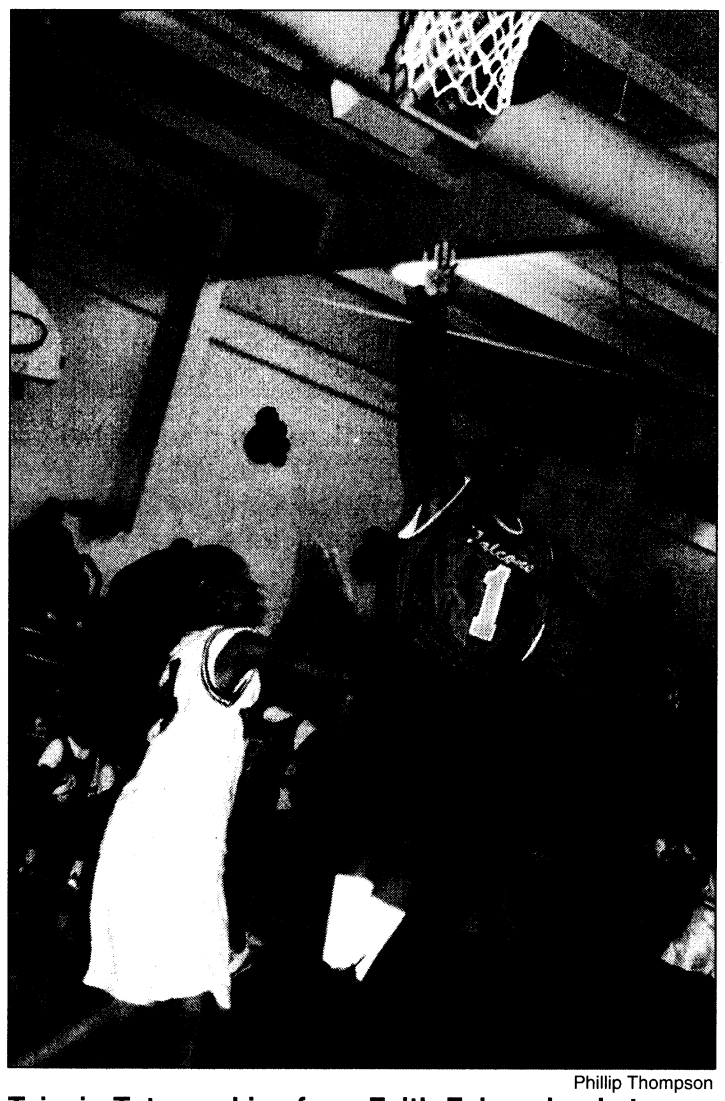
"We have a good chance of winning," Falcon Myles Scott said.

Then, reality set in. Team members didn't know what hit them and after the game, had a look of utter disbelief when they looked up at the scoreboard — 56-34, Bulldogs.

"This was the worst offense we played all year," Faith coach Robert Lewis said.

The boys watched as the Bulldogs controlled the entire game and walked away with the win.

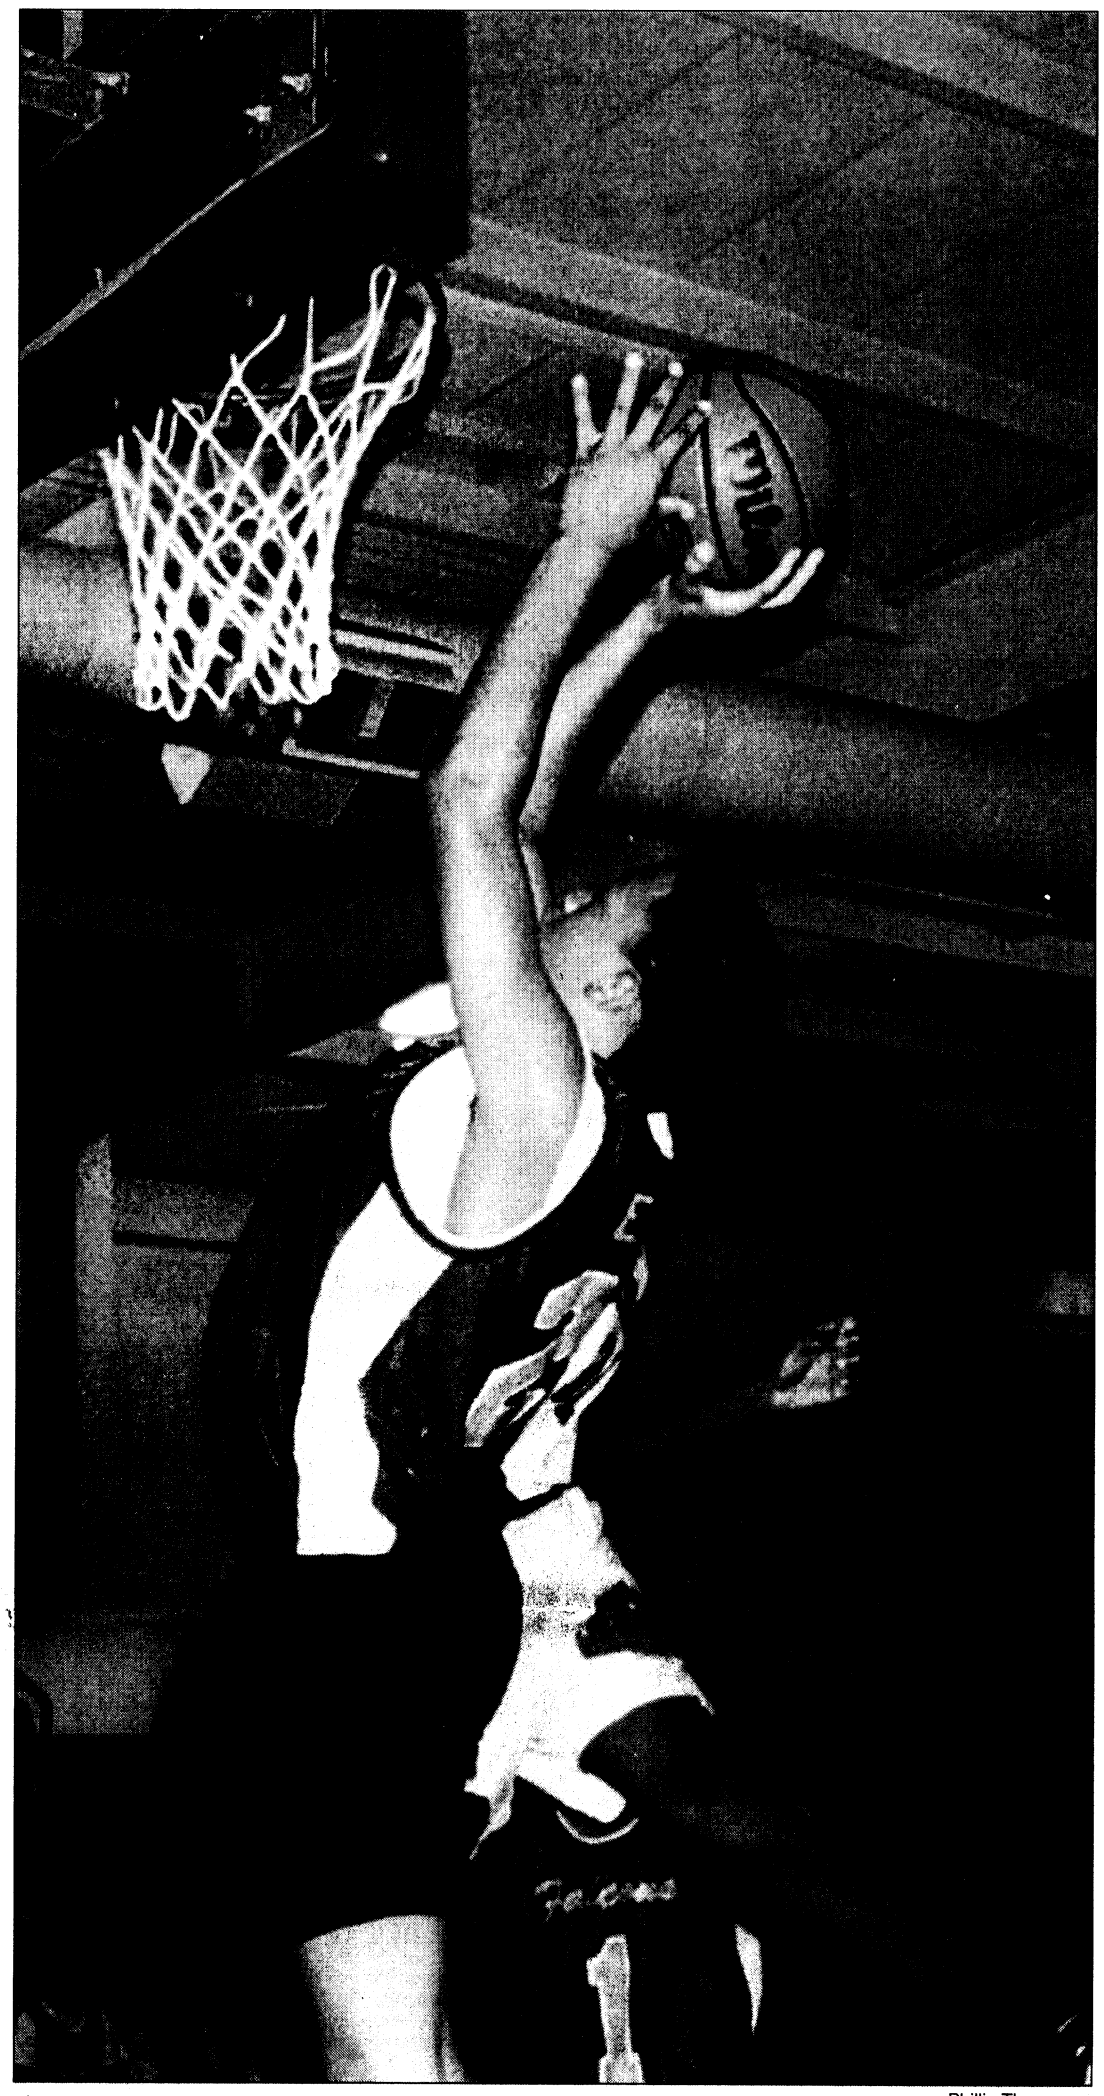
The first half of play truly belonged to the Bulldogs. The only thing the Falcons could do was to keep the game as close as possible, and they went to the break, 24-12.



"It will be a test if we can come back," Lewis told his team at halftime.

The words sparked a rally in the third quarter, and his team came up with key steals, rebounds and 6 unanswered points.

However, the success was short lived. Girard bounced back and stopped Faith's offensive progress. Faith's lack of offense and defense showed as Girard pounded in 12 points.



The Falcons continued to fight in the fourth quarter, led by Troy Lumpkin's 6 points, but it wasn't enough. The Bulldogs pulled away and left the Falcons saying, "What if."

"Tonight was a rough one for us," Lewis said. "We hope we can bounce back from this loss and continue to play good ball."

Lady Falcons take loss

Girard Bulldogs offense overwhelms Faith's defense

Phillip Thompson
Bayonet correspondent

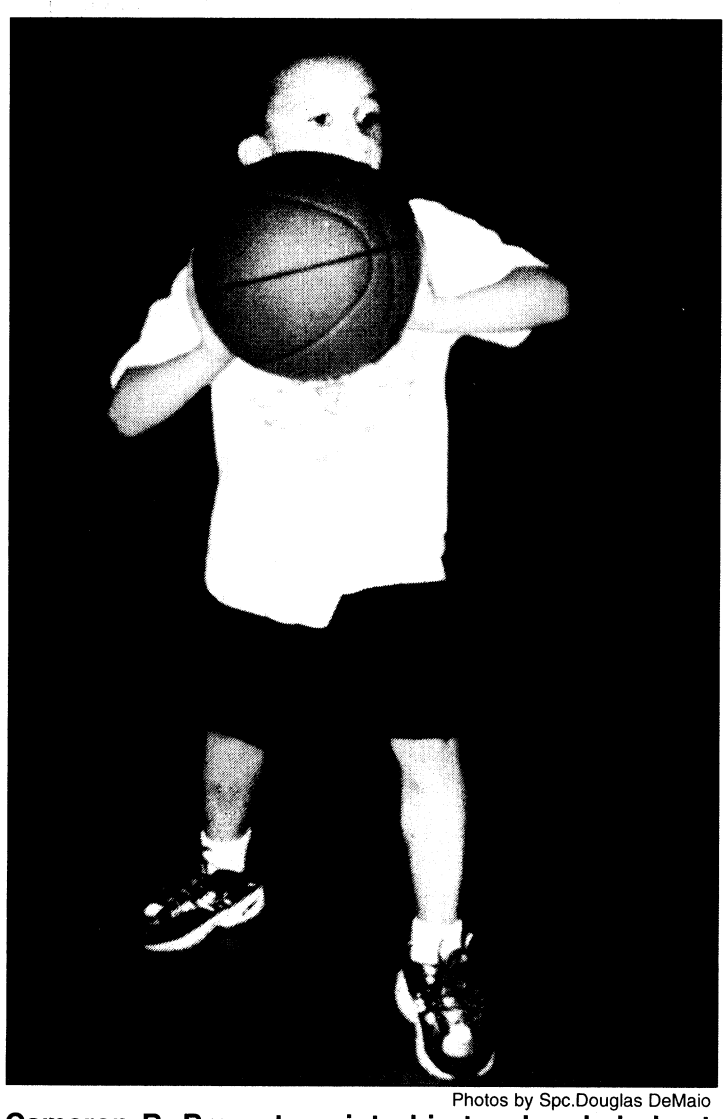
School ran late for the Lady Falcons Dec. 4 — the Girard Bulldogs gave them a class in humility and beat them, 44-21.

"Our team was just intimidated by the other team's size, but I think we did well," Falcons coach Cindy Walker said. "We just need to work on our defense."

The girls could not produce offense or play hard enough defense to overcome the Bulldogs barrage of points.

The Lady Falcons felt the Bulldogs wave of dominance early and often. The Lady Falcons' Tierra Tutsonto scored her team's only points in the first half, 3 points in the first quarter and 6 points in the second.

The Falcons went to the half trailing the Bulldogs, 26-9.



"Our performance was alright, but we needed to pass better," Lady Falcon Erica Alford said.

The third quarter was no different. The Lady Falcons still could not produce offense. Girard performed aggressively and without mercy, allowing Faith only 6 points.

The fourth quarter seemed better for the Falcons. They held the Bulldogs to 6 points, but they could only manage 6 points themselves.

"We need to work together as a team and need to hustle and play solid defense," Lady Falcon Kelly Doherty said.

YS basketball camp teaches basic skills

Children learn fundamentals of game

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet correspondent

Walk into an old gym and the odor of musty sweat and the echo of a basketball hitting the floor can raise the heart rate and excite even the novice.

For Cindy Walker, coach of Youth Services' Basketball Camp and the eighth-grade girls basketball team for Faith Middle, the excitement stems from the accomplishments of a child.

"When I see a child who has never played basketball before learn something new about the game, use it and feel excited about themselves, it thrills me," Walker said, who has coached for 12 years.

Recently, Walker had the opportunity to fulfill that emotion when she held a Youth Services basketball camp for 6 to 9-year-old players Dec. 3-7.

The children enjoyed the activities at the camp so much some did not want to leave and go do other enjoyable things.

"One little girl had to leave and go see Santa, but she wanted to stay and play," Walker said.

Walker, who learned to coach basketball from her husband Chaplain (Maj.) Roy T. Walker, taught the campers the basic fundamentals of basketball.

"She taught us how to play the real game of basketball," said Maurice McFarland, 9. "The things we learn here will help us when we play the game."

It is important for the campers to get familiar with touching the ball, so they will be confident and secure with the ball during games, the coach said.

"We give them activities that teach them the rules of the game, and we teach them how to dribble, shoot and pass," she said.

Sharing the ball is an important part of the game, but learning the fundamentals of a pass is just as important as the pass itself.

"I'm having a good time passing the ball around," said camper Cameron R. Bray, 7. "We pass the ball to their chest, and when you pass the ball, you snap your thumbs down and out."

In many ways, the lessons from the coach are the most invigorating.

"She doesn't yell," McFarland said. "She just says, 'stop', and then explains to us what we can do to improve. She explains to us not to let our palms touch the ball, only our fingertips. She makes me like to shoot the basketball."

The camp will set many of the youngsters up for success when they begin Youth Service basketball practice this week and the season in January, Walker said.

Post CG orders climate survey

Test looks at environment, quality of life

Laura Martinson
Special to Bayonet

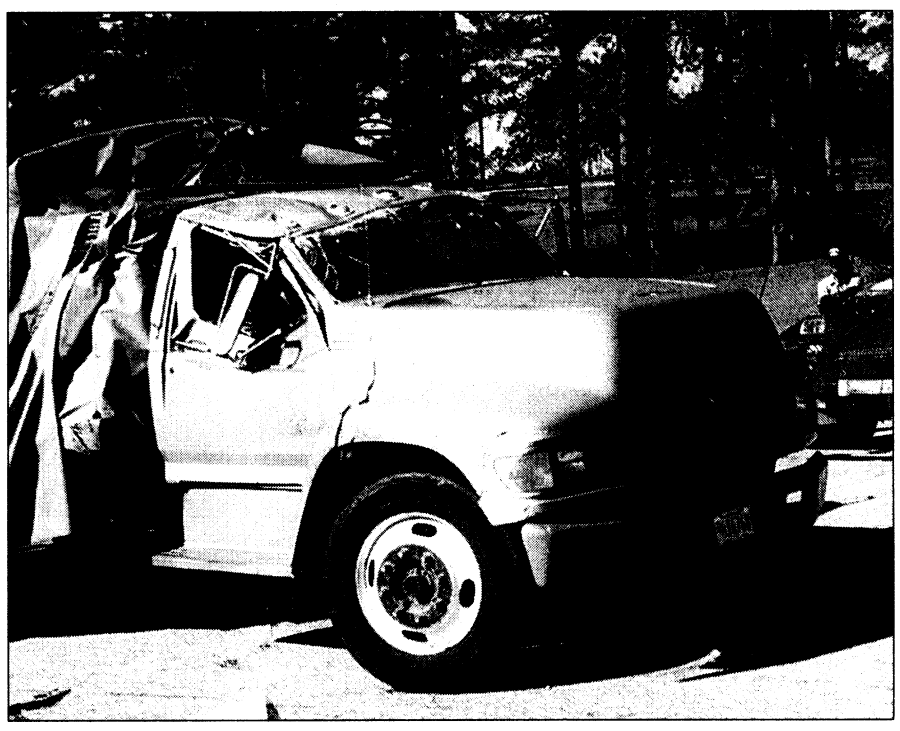
Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton has been in command of Fort Benning for just 54 days and already has improvements on his mind. A climate survey, to be given in January, is in the works to assess the work environment and quality of life on post.

"We want to know what people would like changed on the installation. Some we will be able to do, and some we will not," Eaton said. "Every time you get a new commander, the door is really opened to make those changes. We just need to hear what people's thoughts are."

Eaton has asked the office of the Inspector General and the Quality Management Division to construct a measurement tool specific to the needs of Fort Benning.

"This isn't going to be an off-the-shelf instrument," said Tony Ralph, mission systems specialist for IG. "What's unique about this survey is it's looking at two broad areas that before have not been combined. He gave us specific areas to target, and that's the part that excites me."

"The incoming commander always assesses on some level, by talking to people and feeling out certain areas," said Sarah Hodges, QMD. "But this is the first time the incoming commander has said 'let's do it officially and have data we can look at.'"



IG and QMD are working closely to create the survey, which will be given Jan. 3. Participants will be 1,100 randomly selected soldiers and civilian employees on post. Questions can be expected to target areas such as work demands, job satisfaction, housing and the post exchange. Participants will be asked to describe their satisfaction level with these and several other designated areas.

Results obtained will allow the commanding general to know how people really feel about the bowling centers, restaurants, club systems, hospital patient care, housing and work environment.

2 1/2 ton truck overturns, 33 injured

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

An overloaded 2 1/2 ton truck carrying 46 soldiers overturned Tuesday morning at Sand Hill, sending 33 basic training soldiers to the hospital.

The 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment soldiers were returning to the company area after a training exercise when the accident occurred near the intersection of Moye Road and 11th Airborne Division Road.

First on the scene were drill sergeants and cadre of 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

"Their immediate reaction was superb," said Lt. Col. Don Sando, commander of 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt.

One soldier remains in Martin Army Community Hospital in stable condition, while the others were treated and released.

"This was an absolutely preventable accident," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton.

Preliminary findings indicate overloading and badly worn, under-inflated tires contributed to the accident, said Regis Beighley, Infantry Branch Safety manager.

The truck is only designed to carry 18 soldiers in the back and two in the front, Beighley said.

The fire department and four ambulances arrived on scene to treat the injured.

"The quick response of emergency personnel and their professional performance at the scene were commendable," Sando said. "The staff of Martin Army Community Hospital were fantastic while treating our soldiers."

Circumstances surrounding the accident are under investigation.

Congress suspends closings

Two in Senate go against bill, 40 in House

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Congress agreed Dec. 13 to suspend a proposed new round of military base closings and realignments until 2005.

Congress gave final approval to a $343 billion defense authorization bill that includes the highest military pay raise in two decades.

The compromise bill also includes full funding of President George W. Bush's missile defense efforts, an increase in anti-terrorism programs, lifetime health care benefits for military retirees and their eligible family members and upgrades military readiness, according to a press release from U.S. Representative Sanford Bishop, 2nd Congressional District, Ga.

The vote in the House was 382-40 followed by a 96-2 Senate vote, with two senators not voting.

The bill now goes to the president for his signature.

"For the foreseeable future, our military leaders should concentrate on prosecuting the war on terrorism and not on shutting down more bases and extensively reorganizing our military infrastructure," Bishop said.

Writing new doctrine for training

Readiness emphasized over fitness

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

> "The big shift is to physical readiness, not physical fitness."
> Capt. Dennis Edwards
> Physical Fitness School operations chief

According to the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School current physical fitness training, when based on Army Physical Fitness Test success, does not correlate very highly to preparation for combat or improving performance of critical soldier tasks.

Based on that theory, the school is writing a new doctrine to improve the Army's overall physical readiness.

Stephen Van Camp, chief of doctrine at the school said the new program focuses on training soldiers to do real-world tasks.

"We're not practicing soccer to play football," he said.

The guiding principle behind physical readiness is the ability to meet the physical demands of any combat or duty situation, accomplish the mission and still have a reserve of strength.

According to the school, a physical training program based solely on running creates neuromuscular and musculoskeletal imbalances in total conditioning, neglecting the functional requirements for strength and mobility.

"Our goal is to make a physical readiness training regimen that is meaningful and provides adequate training to do the job better," said Capt. Dennis Edwards, operations chief, for the school. "The big shift is to physical readiness, not physical fitness."

Keeping Christmas, not traditions

Bridgett Siter
Special to The Bayonet©

commentary

" ... and it was always said of him, that he knew how to keep Christmas well, if any man alive possessed the knowledge. May that be truly said of all of us!"
— from A Christmas Carol, by Charles Dickens

My childhood Christmases were all about tradition.

We put the tree up together — seven kids jockeying for the best position to hang our hand-made ornaments. We took our places in the church cantata year after year, some on stage, some in the choir, some in the congregation. And we woke at the crack of dawn on Christmas morning and gathered around the tree before we gathered around the breakfast table.

It was always the same — comfortable, predictable and exciting to a child.

Then one year my parents decided to break tradition, and we headed South to spend the holidays with my dad's family, who in my considered opinion, didn't know a thing about the proper way to "keep" Christmas.

Never mind that we were welcomed like the Christ-child himself, perhaps better, with genuine warmth and hospitality. They just didn't do things in the proper order. They opened gifts on Christmas Eve after a huge supper, so there was no anticipation of Santa's arrival, no early morning squeals around the tree and no feast on Christmas Day.

I was profoundly disappointed and frustrated at the chaos as hordes of aunts, uncles and cousins and second-cousins-once-removed milled about the house, perching on tables and counter tops and chair arms, balancing paper plates filled with leftovers, and when the leftovers ran out, bologna sandwiches.

So absorbed was I in my self-pity, I failed to notice the joy on Grandma's face as she was surrounded by her nine children and their children and grandchildren. That was the only time ever we were all together for Christmas.

I was 10 that year, as my daughter is now. And we're heading South for the holidays — to Florida to spend Christmas with my husband's grandmother, the first time ever we'll all be together for Christmas.

My children are looking forward to it, and I'm confident they'll not be disappointed. Why? Because I learned a valuable lesson 25 years ago, though I was an adult with children of my own before I understood the value of that experience, and I've passed it on to my children.

Keeping Christmas is not about traditions. Traditions are simply born of celebration. We repeat the rituals we enjoy to recapture the moment. But if we're not careful, we begin to focus on the traditions, not the meaning behind them.

It's a lesson best learned early in life, when the "whys" of Christmas still outweigh the "hows." Why do we celebrate? Because the gift of Christ is cause for great celebration.

How do we celebrate? Well, that changes from time to time, depending on where we're stationed, what resources are available locally and how far we have to travel to be with our extended family.

You might say our family has made a tradition of altering our celebrations to keep the meaning of Christmas fresh and foremost in our hearts. That's what "keeping Christmas" is really all about.

Christmas creates special memories

Laura Martinson
Special to The Bayonet©

commentary

The earliest holiday memory I have is singing Christmas carols with my sister and cousins. Each year, per our grandmother's request, we gathered before our family to show off our great vocal talents, which, by the way, were not so great.

Being young girls, we were not thrilled to have such an attentive audience, but payment for our stockings was required.

Years have passed, and we no longer have to sing for stockings. But now I have a family, and we have established a few holiday traditions of our own.

We always put the tree up the day after Thanksgiving, and my daughters mark the days until Santa's arrival with a Christmas countdown calendar.

We light candles on Christmas Eve in remembrance of our daughters' baptisms, both of which occurred on that day.

We attend a candlelight church service on Christmas Eve, and, of course, we bake (and eat) lots of cookies, cakes, pies, and a turkey with all the trimmings.

We also have one other holiday tradition that's seven years old, as old as my husband's Army career.

We've never spent Christmas in the same place twice.

No, we're not nomads, although after three moves in six years, it's beginning to feel that way.

We, like many Army families, have a lengthy drive or flight ahead of us if we want to visit our extended families during the holiday season.

We typically do whatever the leave schedule allows. We have been lucky enough to spend Christmas with one of our families every year.

Although my favorite Christmas was the one spent at home with just the husband and the kids, we have created many happy memories in the homes of others.

Our trips have been many: one 10-hour drive to Washington, D.C.; one 14-hour drive to Arkansas; one 20-hour drive to Texas; one 12-hour drive to Missouri; and, one 12-hour flight to Hungary.

Our travels were long and often challenging with little ones. But the bottom line is this — they were all worth it.

The holiday season is about celebrating with the ones you love, and sometimes that means a little extra effort on our part.

This year we are hosting a houseful at Christmas.

So instead of packing suitcases and cars full of presents, we are busy decorating and readying the house for our guests.

The fact of the matter is this — you can drive halfway across the country or fly halfway across the world and still hang on to the fundamental ideals of the season.

We have been able to take our annual traditions with us on our holiday journeys.

The beauty of it all is that we get to share our traditions with the rest of our family, and they with us.

Anyway you look at it, we have gotten the best of both worlds.

Commander sends holiday greeting

I want to extend to you and your family members the warmest of holiday greetings. Our Fort Benning community for years has enjoyed many wonderful traditions and experiences related to the holiday season. Included in such activities are religious services, organizational parties and a myriad of outreach programs to meet community needs. I encourage you to make the most of this festive time of the year to strengthen important relationships and to assist those who are less fortunate.

Eaton

Since Sept. 11, our nation has experienced both trauma and revival, sorrow and renewed hope. Our armed forces remain vigilant and ready for any assigned mission. You are a part of this ready force and your commitment to professional excellence has never been needed more. I commend you for your outstanding service to our country and Fort Benning.

Our diversity, varying backgrounds and traditions make us a strong nation. I am encouraged by the spirit of dedication and concern expressed by our service members, civilians and family members who work here at Fort Benning.

We will enter the New Year with renewed vigor to face the challenges and opportunities that await us.

I look forward to serving with you and pray that God's richest blessings will be yours.

Maj. Gen. Paul D. Eaton

Commander thanks community for caring

Thank you for all you have done for the Rangers and our families during the past three months.

We couldn't have been successful without you. We are extremely grateful to the entire post and its leadership.

We have enjoyed nothing but tremendous support throughout, from facilitating our initial deployment, to providing for the families of deployed Rangers, and now in supporting our recovery.

We know, more than ever, how important it is to be a part of the Fort Benning team.

— Col. Joseph L. Votel

Santa's helpers send thanks for donations

We would like to express our heartfelt thanks to the individuals and families who contributed to the designated offering at the Fort Benning worship services Dec. 2.

We are so appreciative of the consideration of the post chaplains in choosing our organization to receive an offering.

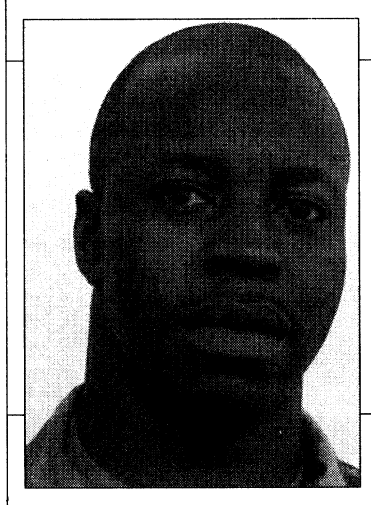
The donation came during our most critical time of the year.

Without these funds, Santa's Castle would not have been able to meet the goal of providing toys to 1,300 children this holiday season.

Santa's Castle is an organization that buys and collects toys throughout the year for distribution during the Christmas season.

The recipients of these toys are children of soldiers on post.

These soldiers, for whatever reason, do not have the ability to provide their family with adequate holiday gifts.



We are so thankful to all of Fort Benning's units, local organizations and individuals for providing toys and monetary donations throughout the year.

The support of the surrounding community makes possible everything we do at Santa's Castle.

MPs use 'Loaded 45' to defend post roads

Program targets impaired drivers during holidays

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet

Fort Benning military police apprehended 52 soldiers and civilians for driving under the influence in December 2000. That's more than twice the number apprehended on average each month for the entire year. Already this month, MPs have charged 35 drivers with DUI, more than any other month this year.

"And we're not even halfway through December," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of law enforcement division. "'Tis the season to be jolly, and that's fine, but if you're drinking it's your responsibility to find an alternate ride home. If you're drinking and driving, it's our responsibility to get you off the street."

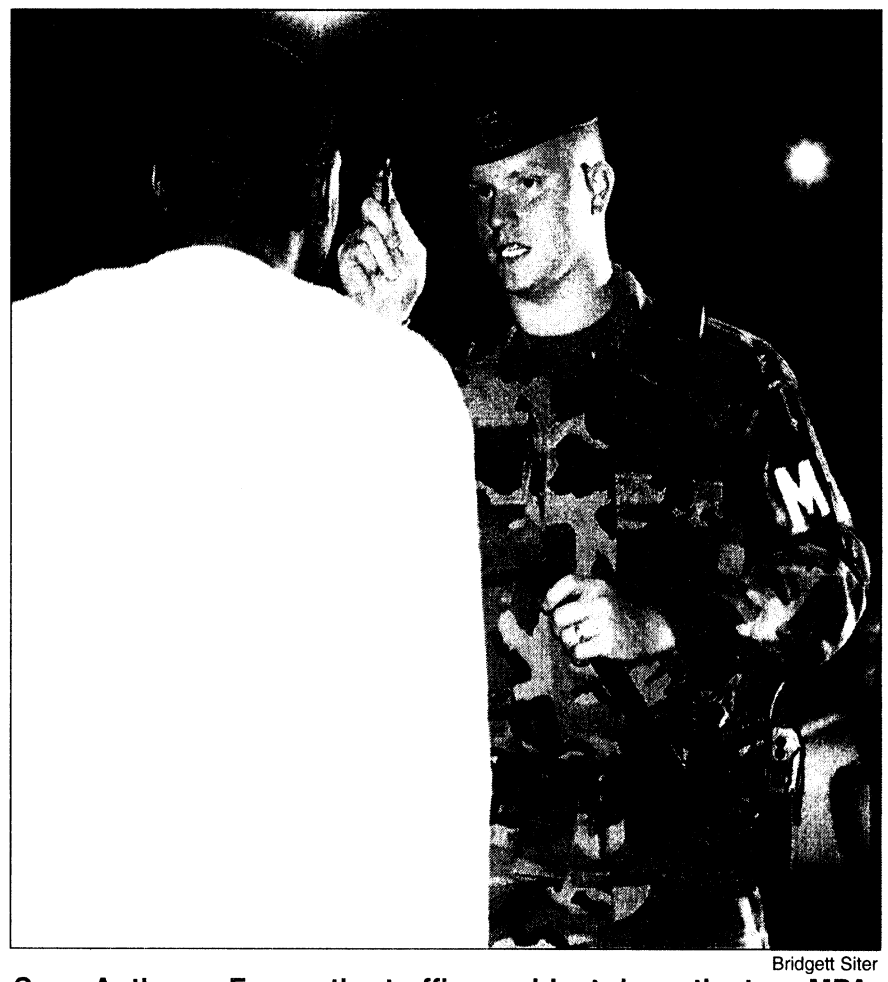
Statistically, the 45 days between Thanksgiving and the weekend following New Years are the deadliest on U.S. roads. There's little post officials can do to curb the consumption of alcohol off post, but there are ways to prevent alcohol-related vehicular deaths on Fort Benning roads, Kelley said. "Loaded 45" is one of them.

"It's 45 days of intensive enforcement, targeted at drivers who get behind the wheel while impaired by alcohol or drugs," Kelley said. "It's not about catching drunken drivers. It's about taking impaired drivers off the streets before they ruin the holidays for themselves, their families or someone else's family. This should be a time of joy and happiness, not pain and sorrow."

Military police step up patrols and surveillance during Loaded 45. They typically increase the number of MPs on the street between midnight and 4 a.m. when the number of impaired drivers increases dramatically.

Officers are trained to look for "indicators" — driving behaviors that signify the likelihood of impairment — such as weaving, driving too fast or too slow or making wide turns.

"These are behaviors that might not elicit too much concern in the middle of the day — what you might call minor infractions, but infractions nonetheless," Kelley said. "Because of the hour and the propensity for drunken drivers, our policy is to stop the driver for any infraction. By breaking the law the individual gives us the opportunity to scrutinize who they are, their driving history and their condition."



All traffic patrol cars are equipped with breathalyzers to register an immediate measure of alcohol concentration during a traffic stop. MPs are also trained to administer a series of simple sobriety tests, such as the "walk-and-turn test" to gauge the likelihood of impairment.

"These are screening tools we use to determine if we need to get someone off the street," said Spc. Anthony Foxworth, a traffic accident investigator. "That's the bottom line. Our mission is to stop DUIs. So if the numbers are up since last year, that means we're doing our job, taking more impaired drivers off the road."

Georgia's legal limit for alcohol concentration is .08 percent, which can be as little as two beers for someone who weighs 125 pounds. Kelley cautioned drinkers to know their limit and have an alternate ride home in the event they exceed it.

"Even a little alcohol can impair your vision, your judgment and your reaction time," he said. "If you're going to drink, designate a driver, call a cab or call a friend.

"The bottom line is don't drink and drive."

Safety Cab provides free ride home during holidays

Sponsors hope more will use service this year

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

The holiday season has begun, and post and off-post agencies want to make sure soldiers and their family members have a free, safe ride home for the holidays.

Safety Cab, which started Monday, is a community service program that allows taxis to take drivers who have been drinking home. The hours are 9 p.m. to 2 a.m., and the phone number is 660-6069.

Safety Cab was founded in 1983 by the Bradley Center at St. Francis Hospital to decrease the number of driving under the influence accidents and save lives.

"We want people to know that number and call," said Judy Walsh, Safety Cab coordinator at the Bradley Center. "We want to make the roads as safe as possible for our loved ones."

Last year, the cabs gave a total of 244 rides, 28 rides to Fort Benning, 36 to Phenix City and 180 in Columbus, said Harley Chase, safety specialist for the Infantry Branch Safety Office. Passengers are only picked up from bars and restaurants off post and dropped off at residences in the tricommunity. Passengers cannot be taken to another party.

"We had a good turnout last year, but we're prepared to handle more," Chase said. "During the past few years, more people have called, which is a good thing. We want drunken drivers to stay off the road. Last year we took 244 off. That's 244 less potential accidents."

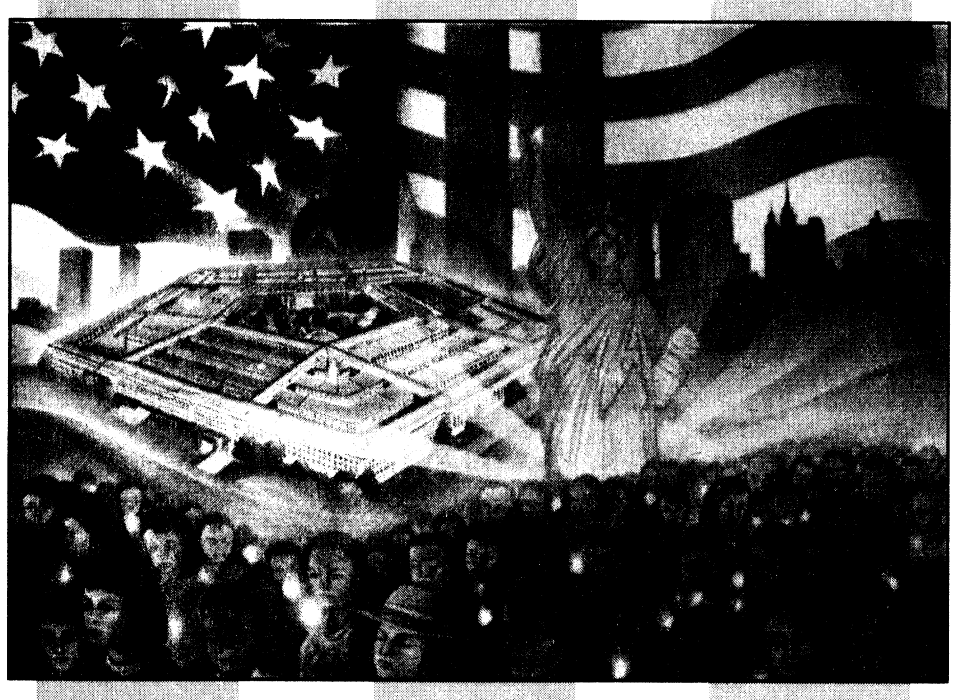
First sergeants and company commanders aren't called if Safety Cab is used, but are called if a soldier is picked up for driving under the influence.

There are repercussions for being charged with a DUI. Depending on a variety of factors including age, alcohol level and previous DUI offenses, violators could lose their license, automobile and face jail time.

The DUI will also stay on the violator's record, insurance will increase and soldiers could face additional penalties under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

Soldiers may also have to complete Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Training.

Each year in Georgia, DUI crashes claim nearly 500 lives.



The Georgia State Patrol estimates there will be 5,320 crashes, 1,696 injuries and 37 deaths during the holiday period from Dec. 21 to Jan. 1 related to people driving while impaired.

Last year there were 4,063 crashes, 958 injuries and 30 deaths.

"We're encouraging people who drink to call Safety Cab," said Melvin Burnett, Army Substance Abuse Program education coordinator. "

"If you can save one life, it's priceless. What is the value of one life?" said Burnett.

Soldiers complete training

D Company graduates ITB Dec. 14

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the 12th story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

After 14 weeks of learning how to be an infantryman, D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment graduated Dec. 14 at Kanell Field.

"This has been a great cycle," said Sgt. 1st Class Samuel Murphy, 1st platoon drill sergeant. "They've just been outstanding."

The soldiers proved themselves in more ways than one throughout the cycle. Their most notable achievement was their performance during basic rifle marksmanship.

The company only had seven soldiers who were not first-time goes, and all seven qualified on their second attempt. Overall, the company had a 97 percent first-time go rate, which was the highest in the brigade.

Lt. Col. Steve Hawley, battalion commander, attributed the company's successes in basic rifle marksmanship and throughout the cycle to the hard work of their cadre.

"The drill sergeants are irreplaceable," Hawley said. "They put a tremendous amount of effort into training these soldiers to standard. It's their reputation that's going off the graduation field out into the Army."

The soldiers were satisfied with the level of training they received.

"The training was really good," Pvt. Carlos Santos said. "We've got good drill sergeants. They know what to say to get us to do stuff, and they're training us really well."

Pvt. John Hugee realized a key for training early in the cycle. "It's a lot of work," he said. "So, you've really got to be focused. Some people just don't know how to handle being away from their families, but you've just got to be focused. Our families need us the most right now, and I just want to do the best I can for them."

Throughout the training, the soldiers had a hard time picturing graduation day.

"I didn't really think this day would come when we first got started," Pfc. Ryan Kerr said. "It seemed so far away."

But graduation came, and the soldiers officially completed their training.

"Today is why we're here," said Staff Sgt. Daniel Denormandie, drill sergeant for 1st platoon. "All the hard work through the cycle, this is why we do it. (During the 'turning blue' ceremony), I pinned on four cords. There's a lot more family here than usual. Usually I pin on cords for half the platoon."

The symbolism of pinning on the cords was not lost on Denormandie.

"This is me welcoming them to the infantry. It's what I do, and now they're a part of that. I take that very seriously," he said. "Today is something they focus on the whole cycle. They seem like they're in shock and can't believe it's over.

"They're saying goodbye to friends and the life they've led for three months. Mostly what I've been hearing is, 'I can't wait to ...'"

The soldiers have gained more than just soldier skills during their training.

"I came here and didn't know where I was going," Kerr said. "But now I've got a basis for my life, the training here has really set me up for success."

Pride in soldiers shows at graduation ceremony

Families see new respect in their sons

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Family members, some of whom had traveled from as far away as Hawaii, watched as the young men they knew four months ago stood before them transformed.

"The service took a boy and made a man of him," Robert Matticks said.

Matticks came from Scranton, Penn., with nine other family members to see his 19-year-old grandson, Jason, graduate.

"Certainly we're very proud of him and his accomplishments," Matticks said. "Especially at this time, with everything that's going on in the world."

The pride felt by family members was echoed around the company.

"We're especially proud of him now, after the attacks," said Maria Carbone, who came from Long Island, N.Y., to watch her son Dominic graduate.

"I just feel like it's such a great honor for him to be in the military," Carbone said.

Barbara Maucelli also came from Long Island, driving 20 hours with her family to see her son graduate.

"The neighbors wrote to him and asked us about him all the time," Maucelli said. "They wanted to know how he was doing. I had a neighbor tell me, 'Thank goodness for kids like him.'"

Community support was also evident among Matticks' neighbors.

"All our neighbors are very proud of his participation in the service," Matticks said. "The whole attitude is that the military is doing what they can for those that can't."

Deborah Retlewski, from Owosso, Mich., recognized a change in local attitude as well.

"There's a new respect for the military," she said. "There's renewed pride in the uniform."

Retlewski also realized she doesn't know when she'll be able to see her son again.

"He's on his way to do airborne school after this, and then he'll go to Italy," she said.

"I've been a single mom for a long time, and I couldn't really afford to travel, but I'll find a way to go see him while he's there," Retlewski said.

Ranis Avet and his wife Janice came in from Houma, La., and noticed a big change in their son, Pfc. Joshua Avet, right away.

"He stands tall now," Ranis said. "It's wonderful. They all look so happy.

"I really like what I see among the guys," he said. "They're coming up to each other and saying, 'Aren't you going to introduce me to your parents?' That certainly wouldn't have happened at a football game in high school."

Marine Col. Robert Herkenham and his wife Pat, flew in from Honolulu, Hawaii, to witness Pfc. Joseph Herkenham's "big day."

"He said he's got lots of stories to tell us," Robert said. "We'll just catch up and hear about all his adventures."

Overall, friends and family were just happy for the chance to see their soldier again and spend some time with them.

"I couldn't wait to get down here," Retlewski said. "I've been waiting for this day since he left in August. The days couldn't go by fast enough. I couldn't wait to put my hands on my boy."

Instructor gets nod for MacArthur award

Leadership skills render large pay off

Tonya Johnson
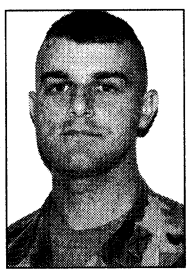
Bayonet staff



Capt. John Grantz always knew he wanted to be an Army officer, and the leadership skills he's gained have paid off.

Grantz, a member of the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was recently selected as Fort Benning's nominee to advance to the Training and Doctrine Command level for the Gen. Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award.

The Gen. Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award recognizes company grade officers who demonstrate the ideals MacArthur stood for — duty, honor and country. Nominees must possess the Army values, provide purpose, direction and motivation to their soldiers and demonstrate technical and tactical competence.

Grantz, who was selected for the award out of more than 900 company-grade officers on post, is currently a senior platoon trainer with the Infantry Officer Basic Course and is responsible for training more than 40 lieutenants per cycle.

"I'm glad to be recognized for my hard work, but there are a lot of people who work hard on post," he said. "I take it as an honor to represent this battalion and post."

Grantz

Grantz, who has been in the Army six years, graduated from James Madison University in 1995 with a bachelor's in business administration. He is from a military family and is the first college graduate and officer.

Grantz said he was familiar with the award before being nominated, but he never thought he would be nominated for an award named after the famous World War II general.

"This is really a prestigious award," Grantz said. "(MacArthur) was a dynamic leader who rose to the occasion when the country needed him."

Maj. Tom Boccardi, A Company, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Régt., company commander, said Grantz is a superior officer.

"He's putting endless hours into a job many would not do," Boccardi said.

"Most captains are either deployed or they're commanding a company. Instead, he's here teaching nuggets of wisdom to lieutenants.

"He's making a difference, and everyday he's being watched by young impressionable minds. We've got the right leader at front teaching them," said Boccardi.

Overall, 24 MacArthur awards will be distributed from the major Army commands this year — 12 to the active Army, six for the Army National Guard and six to the Reserve.

Grantz will appear before the TRADOC board next month, and winners from each command will be announced in March 2002.

Recipients and their spouses or closest family member will attend an award ceremony in May 2002 at the Pentagon.

Winners will receive an engraved 15-pound bronze bust of MacArthur from the Macarthur Foundation, an engraved wrist watch from the Association of the U.S. Army and a commendation memorandum from the Army chief of staff.

Grantz is no stranger when it comes to receiving awards. In addition to being nominated for this award, Grantz has received two Army Commendation Medals and three Army Achievement Medals. He has also won the Cadre of the Cycle Award from IOBC twice.

He credits his awards and honors to having good mentors.

"I've never had a bad commander," he said. "I've been really lucky to have good company, battalion and brigade commanders. They have all helped me become a better leader. If it weren't for them, I wouldn't be here."

Grantz also credits his soldiers.

"If you work hard for your soldiers and NCOs, they'll work hard for you."

CG presents awards during ceremony

Pvt. Brian Trapp

The U.S. Army Infantry Center instructors of the year are Capt. Nick S. Mauldin, Sgt. Maj. Joseph J. McIvor and Staff. Sgt. Donnie Elsenpeter.

The awards were presented Dec. 12 at Infantry Hall.

Mauldin, a fire-support instructor with 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, is the Officer Instructor of the Year.

"I challenge everyone, when the opportunity to excel arises, to take it," Mauldin said. "Sergeant Major McIvor and I studied together a lot to get ready for the final board. I think that gave us the push we needed."

McIvor, an Australian exchange representative at the U.S. Infantry School and a subject matter expert in the employment of machine gun fire, is the Senior NCO Instructor of the Year.

"I enjoy the ability to pass on my experience and knowledge," McIvor said.

"I like to watch the look on the students faces when they (finally understand the subject). It's a great honor to receive an award as an instructor when there are so many other good instructors out there," McIvor said.

Capt. Don McDannald, fire support instructor with Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate works with both Mauldin and McIvor.

"They take pride in what they do — teaching the future leaders of the Army," McDannald said.

"They both are dedicated to their students and excited to instruct."

Elsenpeter, a Bradley Fighting Vehicle Master Gunner instructor with 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was awarded the Junior NCO Instructor of the Year award.

"I'm extremely honored to receive this commendation," Elesnpeter said.

"Fort Benning soldiers are the best because of the professionalism and effort the instructors provide."

Sgt. 1st Class Bryan Bevley works with Elsenpeter.

"He is a very dedicated NCO and works very hard at instructing his students," Bevley said.

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, commanding general, presented the awards.

All the men (who have earned this award) set the standard for Fort Benning, Eaton said. With soldiers like these our installation and country can expect great things.

Post honors soldier, NCO of Year

Performance provides key to success

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Pride, professionalism, performance and passion can measure personal achievement.

Winning the titles of post NCO and soldier of the year require all four of these qualities.

"It's about setting a good example," said Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Hackney, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, the recipient of the NCO of the year award. "Being professional is what's important to the service members around you."

"He's an outstanding NCO," said 1st. Sgt. Richard McAfee. "He provides excellent guidance and instruction."

Named top among his peers, the soldier of the year, Sgt. Jesus Maldonado, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was a specialist at the time the board was held.

"Everyone talks highly of him," said 1st Sgt. Mark Parker, Maldonado's first sergeant. "His professionalism is amazing. He's always willing to extend a helping hand."

Maldonado said he has worked hard to be as professional as possible.

"I feel proud. It's an honor to receive this award," Maldonado said, who's from Puerto Rico.

"He wanted to win," Parker said. "He was dedicated and he deserved it."

Hackney said it's an accomplishment he shares with his unit.

"This is a great thing for me and for the airborne community," Hackney said, who has been an airborne instructor for 18 months. "You strive your entire career to achieve something of this magnitude."

Preparing for the board takes hours of commitment and concentration.

"I made a study manual and studied one minute here or two minutes there," He said. "When ever I had time, I'd just pull out my manual and study a few questions."

Winning the title is not the final chapter for these two soldiers.

"I plan on graduating from the Primary Leadership Development Course, finishing my degree in nursing and then applying for Officer Candidate School," Maldonado said.

Hackney has more education in his future plans as well.

"My goal is to complete my bachelor's, become a first sergeant of an airborne company and be there for my children whenever they need me," Hackney said.

Students give donation to local charity

North Georgia gives help to Red Cross

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Students from North Georgia College collected 400 packages containing various items, and with the help of the Northeast Georgia chapter of the American Red Cross, delivered them to the Fort Benning Red Cross to send to soldiers overseas in Southwest Asia during the holidays.

Heather Wilkie and Heidi Beerryman, student representatives from North Georgia College, presented the donation to the post Red Cross Dec. 11.

The packages are filled with letters and cards from elementary school children, toiletries, books, hard candy, pens, paper and envelopes.

"It all started in a class," Wilkie said.

"Everyone wanted to do something to help out the soldiers, but we wanted to give something more than just money," Wilkie said.

Wilkie and Beerryman organized the project to gather all of the donations.

Items were collected from schools, churches, people on the North Georgia campus and the surrounding community.

"Since it's a military college, we felt it would be good to get involved with providing something for the soldiers," Beerryman said.

"We called up the Red Cross to see who we could get in contact with, and they really helped us out," Wilkie said.

It is an honor for the Red Cross to help soldiers, said Andy Thompson, field service director for the Red Cross.

"The Red Cross is just trying to be a facilitator to help get this project done," Thompson said.

"I feel very appreciative and glad we can accept these packages on behalf of the military," said Lionel L. Grant, American Red Cross representative.

Because of mailing restrictions and Anthrax scares, the plastic zipper bags containing the items will be repackaged for safety purposes and to meet new regulations, then sent from the post Red Cross to a Red Cross overseas to be distributed there.

"It's been a lot of fun working on this," Thompson said.

Soldier works to hasten Afghanistan relief efforts

Organization sends aid overseas

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Fort Benning soldier is working with local and international organizations to expedite relief efforts in Afghanistan.

Lt. Col. Bob Morris, project officer for the Battle Command Division, is a founding member of the Partners International Foundation and a key player in its partnership with the Muscogee Rotary Club during his off-duty time.

The two organizations have teamed to assist in the delivery and distribution of medical equipment and aid packages in war-torn areas of Afghanistan.

Partners International Foundation is a nonprofit organization, founded in 1997 and dedicated to promoting healthy international relations and charitable projects around the world.

It is staffed by volunteers, mostly military and former military, who pay their own travel expenses.

"It goes to show that it doesn't take a big organization with big salaries to make a global impact," Morris said.

"This is all about Columbus with its military ties, making a difference in the lives of people around the world who have been devastated by this war," Morris said.

In November, a Partners International team of two former soldiers delivered an electrocardiograph machine,

> "It just goes to show, it doesn't take a big organization with big salaries to make a global impact. This is all about Columbus with its military ties making a difference around the world."

donated by the Muscogee Rotary Club, to a hospital in Khoja-Baldeen, a remote city in Northern Afghanistan hit hard by the war against terrorism and the Taliban regime.

The hospital had not received medical equipment or supplies in nearly four years.

"These are people who just want to help in some way, and they have great experience in unstable environments because of their military experiences," Morris said.

The team entered the hostile territory before coalition and Northern Alliance forces went in, Morris said.

"While others are sitting back and waiting for the situation to stabilize, these men are going in and making a difference," he said.

The team also conducted a formal assessment of the delivery and distribution procedures for relief packages. They found rations stacked up at the border because no one wanted to enter the area until it was deemed completely safe, Morris said.

The team formulated a plan to help resolve the problems, which was presented to the chairman of the Senate and House Armed Services Committee.

Partners International plans to return to Afghanistan to re-evaluate the situation and deliver blankets and medical supplies as they become available.

David Kildee, the Afghanistan project manager, said the organization stays devoted to its goal of making the most impact for each dollar donated.

"Many people donate to big name organizations with large overhead, when it's the small, community-based groups like Muscogee Rotary that can and do have the most profound impact," Kildee said.

"Hopefully this ECG machine represents the first of many donations of funds and equipment and supplies the project can get to the needy people of Afghanistan."

Kildee estimated the group needs between $250,000 and $300,000 for the next phase of the operation, which will focus on providing food and shelter to homeless refugees during Afghanistan's harsh winter months.

Museum display honors fallen rangers

'...lest we forget' pays homage

Bridgett Siter
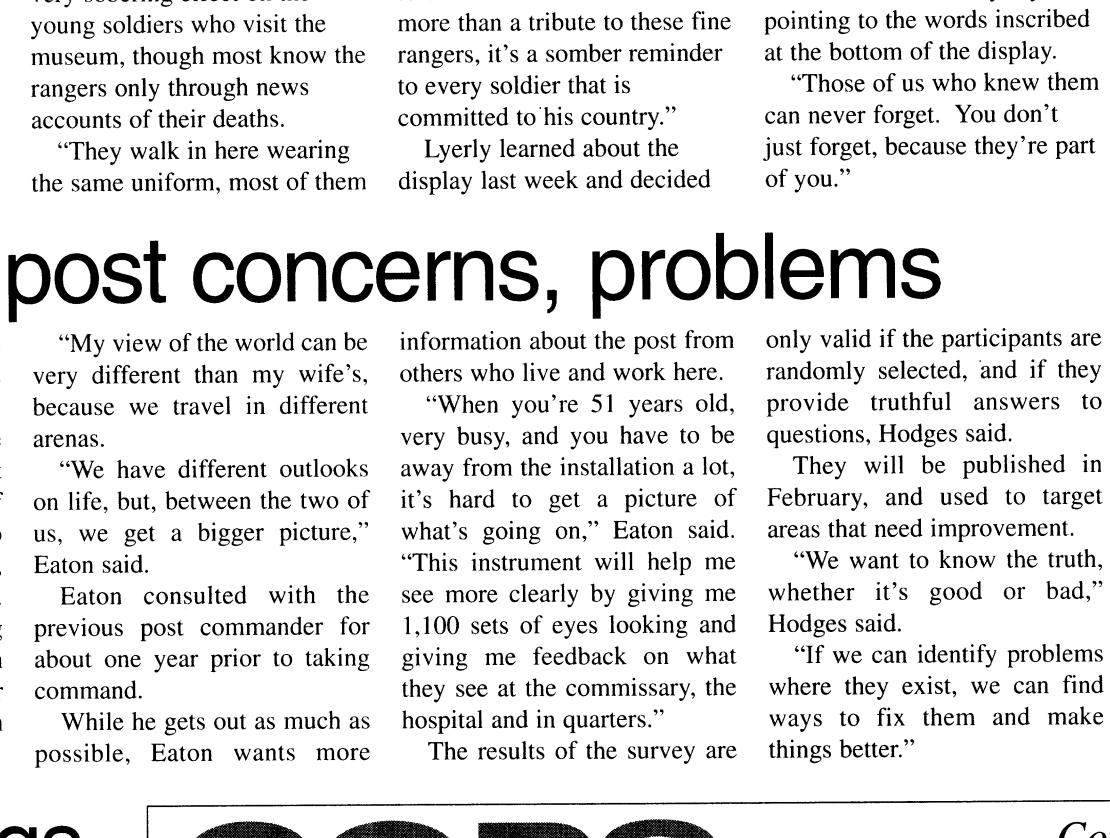
Special to the Bayonet©

The National Infantry Museum's newest display honors the two Fort Benning rangers who lost their lives in the war against terrorism Oct.19.

"... lest we forget" pays homage to Pvt. 1st Class Kristofor Stonesifer and Spc. Jonn Edmunds, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment soldiers who died when the UH-60 Black Hawk helicopter they were riding crashed 60 miles from the Afghanistan border.

The display, which features Stonesifer's uniform and Edmund's kevlar, is a fitting memorial to the young men who were eager to please and anxious to serve, said Spc. Larry Lyerly, who trained alongside both soldiers in B Company's 3rd platoon for nearly two years.



"Edmunds always wanted to do everything, and Stonesifer was willing to do anything. They met the standard and set an example for every other soldier in the company," said Lyerly, who visited the display for the first time Tuesday.

"Funny thing is, they were so much alike and so opposite," he said. "Stonesifer was always joking and teasing. When I picture him he's always got a smile on his face. He'd go out of his way to be your friend. Edmunds was always there for you if you needed him, but he was the quiet, serious one."

The 20-year-old Edmunds was already a member of B Company when Lyerly arrived in January 1999. Stonesifer, 28, a former philosophy major at the University of Montana, arrived shortly thereafter.

The three shared "the best of times and the worst of times," Lyerly said.

"Not just us — the whole group of us, the whole platoon. We were like family. We deployed to some of the worst places imaginable," he said. "We went through it all, the mud and rain and heat and exhaustion, and we loved it. We ate together, slept together, sat around the fire together and told stories and laughed. What makes a family isn't your name or blood. It's what you go through together that bonds you, you know."

Bridgett Siter

Spc. Larry Lyerly visits the National Infantry Museum's newest display, "... lest we forget," which pays homage to two of Lyerly's friends.

Frank Hanner, the museum's director, said the display has a very sobering effect on the young soldiers who visit the museum, though most know the rangers only through news accounts of their deaths.

"They walk in here wearing the same uniform, most of them about the same age as these soldiers were, and they realize the uncertainty of their own future," Hanner said. "These two were young and healthy and well-trained and willing to go and fight, but they expected to come back alive. This is more than a tribute to these fine rangers, it's a somber reminder to every soldier that is committed to his country."

Lyerly learned about the display last week and decided to visit the museum to pay tribute to his friends.

"It's still real fresh. For a long time it didn't seem real — it didn't sink in. This (display) is good. It helps. But '... lest we forget' is for people who didn't know them," Lyerly said, pointing to the words inscribed at the bottom of the display.

"Those of us who knew them can never forget. You don't just forget, because they're part of you."

Survey: Identifies post concerns, problems

polling," Ralph said.

"He'll have 95 percent confidence that this is the right answer or this is what the installation feels about whatever objective is being targeted," he said.

There are other ways to give feedback besides the survey, such as the comment cards placed at the PX.

There are also annual assessments made by individual organizations on post, but the magnitude of this survey is installationwide, Ralph said.

Although the survey is to be given to soldiers and post employees, there are hopes of expanding it in the future to include family members, retirees and contract workers. Eaton would like soldiers taking the survey to collaborate with family members to get a better idea of what is happening on post.

"My view of the world can be very different than my wife's, because we travel in different arenas.

"We have different outlooks on life, but, between the two of us, we get a bigger picture," Eaton said.

Eaton consulted with the previous post commander for about one year prior to taking command.

While he gets out as much as possible, Eaton wants more information about the post from others who live and work here.

"When you're 51 years old, very busy, and you have to be away from the installation a lot, it's hard to get a picture of what's going on," Eaton said. "This instrument will help me see more clearly by giving me 1,100 sets of eyes looking and giving me feedback on what they see at the commissary, the hospital and in quarters."

The results of the survey are only valid if the participants are randomly selected, and if they provide truthful answers to questions, Hodges said.

They will be published in February, and used to target areas that need improvement.

"We want to know the truth, whether it's good or bad," Hodges said.

"If we can identify problems where they exist, we can find ways to fix them and make things better."

Bill: Delays closings

The bill not only provides more financial assistance with moving expenses but also a boost in construction spending.

This including improvements to military family housing.

"Halfway around the globe, thousands of sons and daughters are engaged in a noble cause against the forces of evil and intolerance," said Rep. Bob Stump, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, in an Associated Press article.

"Our job is to support them, provide them the necessary resources and tools to successfully accomplish this task and ensure they are safely returned to their families," Stump said.

PLDC graduate earns four top awards

MI soldier sets standards for academy

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

When Spc. Teressa Petosky, 206th Military Intelligence Battalion, reported to Fort Benning to begin leadership training, she did not intend to dominate her class and make history.

Primary Leadership Development Course Class 02-02 student, Petosky earned the distinguished honor graduate award, the commandant inspection award, the leadership award and made the commandant's list. It is the first time in the history of the Henry Caro NCO Academy that one soldier has earned four of the five honors during a cycle of PLDC.

The military intelligence soldier's APFT score of 297 placed her in the top three, narrowly keeping her from racking up all five achievement awards.

"She did not set out to get all these awards," classmate Spc. Gloria Esquivel said. "She just stayed motivated and always took the initiative."

Petosky and Esquivel are both stationed at Fort Gordon, Ga., and attended the PLDC preparatory course. Esquivel said the Arabic linguist was a wallflower during the prep course.

"I could not prepare for this course," Petosky said. "Once the cadre appointed me to a leadership position, I just reacted."

Petosky said she learned about leadership by watching the small group leaders and the other students when they held leadership positions. She took note, made adjustments and, when she was made student first sergeant, she set out to be fair.

"She did not do this well just because she is an MI soldier, " said Staff Sgt. Ramiro Ramirez, Petosky's small group leader.

"She earned them because she is motivated, she asked a lot of questions, she helped out her classmates and asked for advice from students and cadre."

As Petosky began racking up the recognition, other students rallied behind her.

"Early in the cycle her squad believed in her," Ramirez said. "Her likable personality and good interpersonal skills definitely are two of her strengths her classmates recognized."

In the classroom, during physical training or in the field, her classmates continued to encourage Petosky to do well by offering advice and share their soldiering experiences and knowledge.

"It was a good atmosphere," Petosky said. "I received encouragement from the other students to do well, especially in the field, by experienced field soldiers. I expected some people to hold back, but my classmates continued to encourage me to do my best."

This soldier learned more than just leadership during the course. Petosky said she learned about herself through others.

"Other people are telling me I make a good NCO, a good leader," the three-year Army veteran said. "That has never been related to me before. Back at Fort Gordon, I have my duties and the responsibilities of my job. After this course and talking to my SGLs, other options seem open to me. It has been a growing experience."

Petosky said she does not know if she will make the military a career. She will return to Fort Gordon, her husband, a Marine Military Intelligence corporal stationed at Parris Island, at the MI Battalion.

29th Infantry Regiment answers annual challenge

Unit competes in 'Pioneer Challenge"

Sgt. John Lewis
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

As the clouds rolled in on a chilly, wet December morning, the 29th Infantry Regiment kicked off the first day of its competitive Pioneer Challenge on Simpson Range.

Rival unit teams attempted to qualify, without zero, using the M-16 A2 rifle. The defending champions, C Company, 1st Battalion, were present, along with opposing challengers from A and B companies.

"C Company is favored to win. They are the three-time Pioneer Challenge champions," said Sgt. 1st Class Daniel L. Harris, who was in charge of the Pioneer Challenge.

Each year, squad-level teams from various units enter the Pioneer Challenge to demonstrate their military occupational specialty competence as well as physical endurance and teambuilding leadership skills.

Contending teams encountered 10 events including: M-16 A2 combat qualification, M-240 B combat qualification, leader's reactionary course, 5.9 mile litter carry, day and night land navigation, alternate Army physical fitness test, obstacle course, common task training and pugil stick matches.

While using live ammunition, rival teams proved their ability to engage a target on the battlefield using the M-16 A2 and M-240 B small arms weapons.

Field expedient thinking was demonstrated in the leader's reactionary course as challengers faced battlefield-simulated hazards.

"The LRC is a mental and physical event," said Staff Sergeant Donnie Bobo, the Pioneer Challenge NCOIC. "Today the squads must negotiate 13 stations in two hours," he said.

Life-saving measures and teamwork combine in the litter carry event.

The day and night land navigation courses required teams to revert to basic infantry skills, Harris said.

In order to navigate when modern equipment malfunctions on the battlefield, each soldier must be familiar with terrain association, pace count and map orientation.

During a modified APFT, competing squads showed muscular strength and endurance.

"This is the stepping stone for the infantryman," Harris said.

Each team was given five minutes to do push-ups, three minutes to do sit-ups, and three minutes to do pull-ups.

Bolton Confidence Course was used where challengers encountered various mentally and physically oppositional teambuilding obstacles.

During the CTT portion, each team demonstrated basic soldiering skills.

Claymore mines, map reading and combat vehicle identification were among the common tasks in this tactical proficiency test.

Sgt. John Lewis

Second day competition escalates as Bravo Team clears the hurdle in the High Step Over obstacle on Bolton Confidence Course.

In the evening of the second day of fierce competition, units struggled in hand-to-hand combat pugil stick matches. Team members cheered loudly as their strongest warriors viciously attacked each other in grueling conflict.

The winning decision of the Pioneer Challenge came down to the last pugil stick match, as squad members from A and C Companies engaged in the final skirmish.

Each unit gave its best in the two-day competition, A Company prevailed as the new Pioneer Challenge champion, with C and B Companies coming in second and third, respectively.

Regulations spell out leave, special pass rules

DA form 31 needs to be filled in accurately

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

It is always important for soldiers to fill out a request for leave or a pass.

It is especially so during the holiday season when a majority of soldiers will take time off from work.

Any soldier, not currently in training, can apply for leave or a pass anytime they are not required for duty. It is the commander's responsibility to encourage soldiers to take maximum use of their leave.

A request and authority for leave, DA form 31, is what the Army uses to track who is on leave, and how many days of chargeable leave they have taken. It is also proof that the soldier was granted permission to be away from the place of duty and a copy should always be kept while on leave or pass.

Passes can be taken with leave, but according to AR 600-8-10, "A pass begins and terminates on post, at the duty location, or at the location from where soldier normally commutes to duty before leave begins."

The opposite is also true if a pass is taken after leave.

Special passes can also be used in the three and four-day varieties to accommodate soldier needs. For example, special recognition of exceptional performance of duty, to attend observances of major religious events, to exercise voting responsibilities, are just some of the times when a special pass would be appropriate.

Regular passes are normally used for an absence from post, or place of duty, during normal off duty hours.

Special passes include duty days. A four-day special pass must include at least two consecutive non-duty days. For example, the end of work on Thursday until Monday morning.

Three-day special passes must include at least one duty day. However, special passes cannot be granted together with leave.

When filling out a DA 31, in block 17, the remarks block, the soldier needs to have this statement.

"I understand that, if I require other than emergency medical service, I am required to contact Tricare at 1-888-999-5195."

For more leave and pass information, see AR 600-8-10 and TRADOC Regulation 350-6.

National Guard Bradley course changes in length

Soldiers learn to adapt

Capt. Damien W. Choi
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Three NCOs from the 49th Armored Division Texas National Guard graduated from the Bradley Master Gunner Course Nov. 29.

However, instead of taking 13 weeks to reach graduation, it took 13 months.

These three master gunners graduated from the Bradley Fighting Vehicle Master Gunner Distance Learning Pilot Course. This concept was introduced in late 1999.

The concern of the National Guard was, and still is, the best master gunner course candidates often have trouble in attending the 13-week course because of their commitment to their civilian employers.

The 13-month course started Oct. 9, 2000, and retained the same content as the resident course. Students completed practical exercises, homework assignments and a short-range training plan.

Similarly, the cadre spent extensive hours converting the program of instruction slides to video, sending and receiving e-mails and traveling to Texas to administer tests.

The course was long for both the students and cadre.

"This was intentional because the two active training periods had to be split over two fiscal years and training could only be conducted one weekend a month," said Sgt. 1st Class Charles L. Inderrieden, course developer.

Engineers celebrate history

Sgt. 1st Class Michelle Williams
36th Engineer Group

Soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group celebrated Native American Heritage Month with a cultural retreat to the Chattahoochee Indian Heritage Center, located next to Fort Mitchell Cemetery, Ala., Dec. 4.

While at the center, the 13th Combat Support Battalion hosted a program for group soldiers, which highlighted the significance of the center, to include the contributions made by Native Americans.

Master Sgt. William Cole, 13th CSB, emphasized the various contributions of Native Americans .

He said Native Americans are known for the introduction of corn, potato, sugar cane, beans, peppers and many types of squash.

The irony is Native Americans suffered with the arrival of the Europeans due to diseases, such as small pox and the flu, that were transmitted from camp to camp unbeknownst to the Europeans; however, the foods that were significant to that culture flourished in Europe.

Native Americans were one-fifth of the world population during the 1500s, and many of their teachings live on today.

Fort Benning schools get new playgrounds

Reginna Small
Bayonet correspondent

Stowers Elementary School dedicated its new playground equipment to the schoolchildren Dec. 12.

Initially Stowers planned to replace only the playground used by younger children, pre-K through the second grade, with money the parent-teacher organization raised. But because of left over year-end funds, all the playgrounds could be replaced.

The PTO raised $7,000 last year, said Cheryl Gibson, PTO president. But the playground they wanted cost nearly $130,000.

"In July I received a phone call from Mike Starrett (Stowers assistant principal)," Gibson said. "He told me that we were getting a new playground."

Stowers isn't the only school to get new equipment. Department of Defense Education Activity year-end money is funding new playgrounds for all post elementary schools.

"We wanted a fun and safe place for the children to play," said Dr. Dell McMullen, Fort Benning Schools superintendent.

The new playgrounds are designed with safety in mind. The hard surface of grass and dirt has been replaced with a very thick layer of small wood chips. The old equipment was replaced with a more forgiving hard plastic equipment.

"It is a safer environment," said Tom Dignan, principal of Stowers. "It is a place for the children to gather and we hope the families will enjoy it as much as the children will."

Kindergartner Daniel Kent was excited about the new playground equipment.

"It's good. The slide is bigger than the old one, and I like to climb on the monkey bars," Kent said.

Fifth-grader Ricky Robinson was happy about the new equipment.

"I am glad we got it," Robinson said. "The younger kids had most of the playground equipment and we only had bars. Now we have this and we are excited."

The schools are donating the old equipment, said Sgt. Maj. Ronnie Porter, Fort Benning Community Life officer. The old equipment, which is still serviceable, will be used in some of the community parks.

Staff development courses enhance classroom learning

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

This is the fourth of a five-part series that will take a closer look at the Department of Defense Education Activity's Community Strategic Plan, and specifically how it is being implemented in Fort Benning schools. This installment looks at CSP's goal three, Motivated, High Performing, Diverse Workforce, which states " ... administrators at all levels will continually recruit, hire, support, evaluate and recognize personnel in order to retain a highly motivated and committed workforce ... ."

Mable Wilson drives more than an hour each way, to and from Loyd Elementary School, where she teaches special education. She's been traveling from her home in Newnan to Fort Benning every school day for more than 10 years.

"I love my home in Newnan, but I love my job, too," Wilson said. "I've compared the Fort Benning school system to others in Atlanta and Newnan, closer to my house, and they just don't stack up. So it's worth the drive."

Wilson called Fort Benning schools "top-notch" for their dedication to students and staff.

Like all teachers in the state of Georgia, she's required to renew her teaching certification every five years — a real challenge for someone who spend nearly three hours on the road each day. A minimum of 10 credit hours, or 100 classroom hours, are required for recertification.

The Fort Benning school system has made it easier for Wilson and her coworkers to get the education they need at a convenient time and location. Most Tuesdays, "early dismissal" day for Fort Benning students, teachers attend staff development courses, where they receive the necessary credits for recertification. The courses are free to Fort Benning teachers.

"That's one of the advantages of working here,"

Post pupils provide praise

Wilson gives back to those who serve

Laura Martinson
Special to Bayonet

Wilson Elementary School students are wrapping up the first half of the school year. But that's not all their wrapping. The students have had a busy year of gift giving, and the gifts have come in many forms, anything from a can of green beans to a pair of socks.

"There are a lot of people out there who don't have the things we do," said Bobby Hawk, a fifth-grader. "We're lucky to have all the things we have, so we should help the ones who need it."

The students are now learning about the Army value selfless service. In the process, they too have become examples of what it means to serve.

Last week, the students donated a quilt made of drawings by each individual student to the families of victims of the Sept. 11 attacks and the soldiers now fighting the war on terror. They are presently collecting socks to donate to Afghan children, and making Christmas cards, letters and emails to send to troops abroad.

The students also took baked goods to Sand Hill last week and made several stops at the Basic Combat Training Brigade, the school's partners in education. This is the second "thank-you" trip made to soldiers of BCTB this year.

"They are so motivated and they do so much for us," said Capt. Wendy Martin, BCTB.

"The soldiers help the school in so many ways, so around the holidays we like to say thanks," said Margaret Koger, gifted education teacher.

Phyllis Parker, Wilson's principal, agrees that it's the soldiers who deserve the thanks.

"Our partners are great. They will do anything they can to help us. There hasn't been an event this year that they haven't made it to,"

Project strengthens bond between students, friends

Teacher combines art, reading, writing for class

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Anne Trawick loves combining art, reading and writing with her students.

Trawick is a gifted education teacher at Loyd Elementary and for the past 10 or 15 years, she has always planned a special project for the students to work on. That special project is called "Holiday books."

The project involves students brainstorming, planning, researching and putting together books for their classmates. This year Trawick's gifted students prepared books for their special needs classmates.

"The main purpose for the books is several reasons," said Trawick. "Students practice mechanical skills and write for a real audience, and I want my students to learn about giving. When you give, you receive the most. Children are never too young to learn this."

Through the years Trawick has some fond memories concerning the "Holiday Books," formerly known as "Big Books."

"Big Books" was a project for seventh graders to make a book for kindergartners. It also told a story, but the books were made on laminated construction paper.

Now most of the work is done on the computer.

"It's a lot easier, and we don't have to waste unnecessary time rewriting on paper. Plus it's not as expensive as laminating pages," Trawick said.

Each child is paired with their classmate at random. The book must consist of at least 15

Think safety when buying holiday gifts

Choose toys appropriate for age

Martin Army Community Hospital

Editor's note: Adapted from A Guide from the Toy Industry Foundation

The holiday season is once again upon us. Parents, grandparents, other family and friends are making preparations for Christmas Day. Children are anxiously awaiting to see what toys the holiday season will bring. Listed are 10 steps to fun and safe play:

1. Before shopping for toys, consider the child's age, interests and abilities.

2. When shopping, read labels. Look for age ranges and safety warnings.

3. Be especially careful when choosing toys for children under 3. Select toys that are free of small pieces, pieces that can separate or be broken off, are lightweight, have no sharp edges or points and are non-toxic.

4. At home, carefully read instructions for assembly and use. Keep product information for future references. Always complete warranty cards.

5. Remove and discard all packing from a toy before giving it to a baby or small child.

6. Consider the home environment in which a child will play with a toy. A toy intended for an older child may be dangerous in the hands of a younger one.

7. Supervise children when they play and set good examples of safe play.

8. Remind caregivers of safety concerns.

9. Choose a safe storage place for toys.

10. Check toys at least every three months to determine their safety. Make any repairs immediately or throw away damaged toys.

According to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, in 2000 there were an estimated 191,000 toy-related injuries treated in U.S. hospital emergency rooms.

There was a rise in estimated toy-related injuries from 1999 to 2000, primarily attributed to a rise in injuries associated with unpowered scooters. Do not allow your loved one to become a victim. Shop smart, be smart.

Learning: Keeps teachers up to date

Wilson said. "It's a great help to the teachers, especially those of us who travel. It keeps me current on training and technology and helps me meet my recertification requirements."

Gail Wilson, Fort Benning School's director of staff development, said most Fort Benning teachers acquire "far more credits than they need" through staff development courses.

"Rarely do we have someone with just 10 credit hours," she said. "Our teachers have the desire to stay on the cutting edge, to stay abreast of the newest teaching techniques and the most current technology.

"Not all of our courses are requirements, some are optional. So the fact that they want to be there speaks highly of our teachers," Wilson said.

Besides Tuesday afternoon staff development course, teachers attend systemwide training during three in-service days each year.

"There we offer courses that parallel our priorities systemwide, lots of literacy and technology workshops," Wilson said. "But the schools also offer courses and workshops that address priorities unique to their own needs."

Fort Benning schools have also worked with Columbus State University's Instructional Technology Center and math department, the Georgia Youth Science and Technology Center and Netschools Orion to develop training courses and programs for Fort Benning teachers. Nearly all post teachers have completed seven days of training on integrating technology throughout classroom curriculums, training required by the state of Georgia for all teachers by 2006.

"It's our goal to offer our teachers a wide variety of courses that apply to what they're doing in the classroom," Wilson said. "And that's the bottom line. These teachers are here because they love teaching kids, so they're excited about the training that enhances their students' education."

pages, with the story containing a problem and solution. The special needs student is the main character, the protagonist.

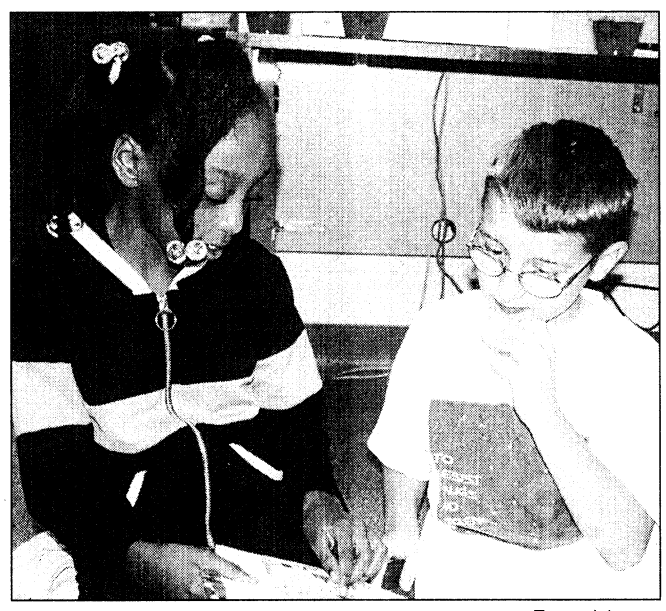
Bethany Ray, a fifth-grader, enjoyed making her book, Santa Joins the Military. In her book, Santa Claus joins the military for job security, but receives news he's needed back at the North Pole.

"This was a fun project," she said. "I like to write and draw. One day I want to become an author and illustrator."

Terry Hemingway, also a fifth-grader, enjoyed the project.

"I've learned about English and how to group and crop pictures. And it was fun working on the computer," he said.

Those are the typical responses Trawick usually receives.



"This project gives children a real reason to write. I see when they do something for a real purpose, they approach it with enthusiasm," she said. "Some of them even came on Saturdays for a few hours to work on their books."

Tonya Graves said her third-grade daughter, Toya Carter, has influenced her to write.

"After looking at her project, I'm inspired to write," Graves said. "She did a great job, and it's thoughtful for all them to make a book and share with their classmates."

The holiday books took three weeks to complete, and Tuesday, the books were presented to the main characters of the books.

"This is a great project, one I truly believe in," said Angie McPherson, principal. "It gives students a chance to write and do something for others. Presenting the books is a huge payoff for them."

Wilson: Gives back to community

Parker said. "We are trying to teach the children to be good citizens and to do the right thing. They are learning that giving is a gift."

"Some people give because they want something in return," said Michelia Rivera, fifth grade. "But I just give because some people need things in their lives, and I can help give that to them."

The school has also recently held canned good drives for the local community and for the families and firefighters of New York and Washington, D.C. In the spring, the school intends to continue its humanitarian efforts by collecting baseball caps for cancer patients.

The school is a member of the Kids Care Project, which is a club designed to develop compassion and the spirit of charity in children. The project, with over 800 registered clubs in 50 states, does this by providing hands on service projects that benefit the needy in their local and global community. The project estimates over 1.7 million dollars in relief last year, and has reached 3.6 million people.

feature teacher

Kris Keske, a fifth-grade teacher at Loyd Elementary School.

Personal: Keske lives in Smiths Station, Ala., with her husband David, a printer for Hallmark, and their two sons, Sam, 16, and Mark, 14.

Education and History: Keske received her bachelor's degree in elementary education from Beaver College. Upon graduation, she joined the Peace Corps, and went overseas to Palau, a small island in the South Pacific. She taught English as a second language to children and adults for two years before moving to Tehran, Iran, where she taught second grade and P.E. for two years. When hostages were taken at the American embassy in Tehran, tensions mounted, which made living and teaching there more complicated.

"It was a very unsettling experience," Keske said. "I had to move several times to safer areas within the city."

Keske soon returned home to the U.S., where her career took a surprising turn. "I joined the Army. I think it was probably in response to my experiences in Iran, and it offered me stability that I had not experienced there," Keske said.

She chose Fort Benning to be close to her grandmother. It was there — in a mess hall — that she met her future husband.

After three and a half years in the Army, Keske's life took yet another drastic. She and her husband ventured through the country for a year behind the wheel of a tractor-trailer. When a drunk driver pulled out in front of them and their truck was totaled, they decided a new line of work might be a good idea. She got her master's degree in elementary education from Columbus State University and began teaching at Fort Benning in 1988. She has taught fourth grade for 11 years, and fifth grade for two.

Philosophy: "I want children to love to read. There are so many experiences to be had by reading books," Keske said. "Everybody should get another perspective on life, and you can certainly get that from books." Keske has an area set aside in her classroom where students can get comfy on a couch or an oversized pillow for quiet reading. She has made it a part of her teaching practice to do everything the students are doing.

"I do what they do so I can understand where they are coming from and make sure the tests are fair," Keske said.

On teaching the military child: "I really like military kids. They are more flexible, and more accepting of differences," she said. "They've had more experiences, and I feel blessed to have them. The sad part is I often have to say good-bye to them."

On the rewards of teaching: "The rewards are many. I am so lucky to do what I like," Keske said. She was recently invited to attend a school banquet with a former fourth-grade student.

"When they remember you in 12th grade, that makes teaching fulfilling. When I have made a difference in a child's life, it makes it all worthwhile."

Panther parents participate in programs

Loyd Elementary School

As part of the Department of Defense Educational Activity Community Strategic Plan, Loyd Elementary School is doing its part to get parents actively involved in their children's education.

So far this year, parent participation has been impressive for the majority of the activities offered for them. Research shows that increased parental involvement leads to increased student achievement. Therefore, it is Loyd's goal to have all parents participate with their children in school planned events centered around literacy. Here are some of the events held over the past few weeks.

Courtesy photos

Cheryl Gramer helps her daughter, Marissa, improve her literacy.

• Literacy lessons at Loyd

On Oct. 24 parents of students in pre-K through second-grade were invited to participate in a literacy related lesson with their children during the school day.

Often, the word 'literacy' automatically makes one think of reading, however these lessons involved all subject areas, even math. Strategies were presented so parents in turn could try them at home. They received a firsthand view of how to integrate some form of literacy into every aspect of the curriculum.

In January, parents of third-, fourth- and fifth-grade students will have the opportunity to participate in the same program.

• Partners-in-Print

Partners-in-Print was an activity offered to students and their parents Nov. 5. Each grade level presented a fun activity that focused on school curriculum the parent and child could enjoy doing together. When these activities ended, some of the fathers read to groups of students and their parents. Topics offered by each grade level were as follows:

Pre-K — learning from environmental print

Kindergarten — circle time, writing and reading

First grade — homework tips; writing in math

Second grade — using a rubric in writing

Third grade — homework tips; writing in math

Fourth grade — circular math

Fifth grade — writing with tangrams and pentominoes.

• F.B.I.

A new program, Fathers Being Involved, has kicked off at Loyd this year. It is a program designed for fathers or any other adult male living in the home, to have a more active role in their child's educational development within the school setting.

The first organizational meeting was Nov. 29 and officers were elected. The officers are: Daniel Gomez — president; Ray Kawski — vice president; Mike Menapace — secretary; and Roy Trevino — telephone chairperson. These fathers, knowing the hectic schedules of soldiers, suggested the meetings be Saturday mornings. All interested Loyd students are invited to attend and get involved.

• Other fun events

Academically related activities are not the only activities parents have been invited to attend.

During the week before Thanksgiving, parents of students in all grades were invited to physical education classes to "Turkey Trot" for a mile with their children. Each parent, younger sibling and student completing a mile by walking or running received a sticker that read "I Turkey Trotted 1 mile in PE!"

Staff Sgt. Alton Tounsand spends time with Staff Sgt. Antonis Tunker his daughter, Hope, and wife, Gina.

They also wrote their name on a feather and added it to the large turkey on the gym wall.

That same week, parents of students in Jean Anderson's and Mable Wilson's classes attended a Thanksgiving dinner and dessert party. The desserts were extra special because everything was homemade with loving care by the students. As part of a life skills curriculum, the students learn cooking, grooming and community skills.

Along with the good food and wonderful company, parents and students enjoyed videos of the students involved in activities in their classrooms as well as their bowling practices as they prepared for the Olympic Tournament held Nov. 30 at Peachbowl Lanes in Columbus.

Spencer PTSA 'jingles'

Parent, teacher group combines music, business, good time

Parent, Teacher, Student Association

Spencer High School celebrated this year's holiday season with a Parent, Teacher, Student Association sponsored meeting and Christmas Concert in the school auditorium Dec. 13.

PTSA president Stephen T. Boston greeted guests with a warm welcome and thanked them for attending both the meeting and concert.

The PTSA opened its order of business with the reading of the minutes from Terri McCray, PTSA secretary, committee reports from Marion Bohannon, announcements from Boston and door prizes were given out by the Vice President Wanda Blackmon.

All eligible voting members of the PTSA were given delegate cards to vote on the PTSA school budget for this school year, which was adopted and approved, with a majority vote.

The PTSA also celebrated the inaugural issue of its newsletter written by the president. Boston said the newsletter would be a medium through which the PTSA can communicate items of interest to parents, teachers and students alike.

Before concluding PTSA business winners from the Reflections Program, a literature, visual arts, musical composition and photography contest, were recognized. The winners received a plaque donated by Names and Frames, a certificate, free movie passes and a gift card from Wal-Mart. Congratulations to winners, Mariah Morris, Michael Doud, Kristin Bohannon and Heather Tamas.

Then the moment all were waiting for: the chorus, directed by Catherine McKeehan, performed Silent Night, Angels We Have Heard on High, Silver Bells, Do You Hear What I Hear? and We Wish You a Merry Christmas. Soloists sang Happy Christmas.

Afterward the band, directed by Marci Hankins, played Jingle Bell Jazz, Christmas Cradle Song, Santa at the Symphony and Merry Christmas or Bust.

Christmas: Time for spiritual growth

Chaplain (Col.) Richard M. Hartsell
U.S. Infantry Center Staff Chaplain

What kinds of preparations are you making for the holidays?

Many of us are busy shopping, writing cards, calling loved ones and planning trips. We may be purchasing gifts and attending special social events.

Hartsell

What about spiritual preparations? Isn't it easy to get lost in the business and rush of the holiday season to the extent we may defeat its real intended purpose?

In Mark 1:3, John the Baptist said, "Prepare the way for the Lord, make straight paths for him."

He preached the baptism of repentance and the forgiveness of sins. John the Baptist was the "pavior" for the savior Jesus Christ.

He paved the way or prepared the way for the coming of Christ to our earth. His focus was on repentance and forgiveness. Both of these concepts are critical to our own spiritual growth and development of relationships with others.

We cannot honor the Lord without this humble, contrite posture. When others see us as penitent people intent on learning and growing in our faith, they will more likely respond to the message of the gospel. John the Baptist ultimately gave his life in service to God.

His commitment to God extended well beyond his oratory skills.

Every Christmas there is a dynamic tension between the activities of the holidays and our need to surge in spiritual growth.

Take time to ask the Lord to forgive you of your shortcomings.

Then take the time to forgive someone else who may have wronged you.

You will find relief, peace and strength in the process. You will also have made the best of preparations for the holidays.

Avoid emotional holiday roller coaster

reflections

Koop

Getting ready for the holidays can develop stress, anger and depression. Stringing the lights, enduring the crowds of other shoppers, finding this year's perfect present and getting ready for the in-laws are stressors that often lead to emotional depression.

Emotional depression sometimes occurs when we want everything to be just right for the holidays, and the reality of the season doesn't meet our high expect-ations.

The kids are quickly bored with their new gifts. Teens want to get out and be with their friends. Mom and Dad seem overly critical of every suggestion. And our spouses feel they have to do all the work.

Getting the family together and talking about each person's expectations and responsibilities for the holidays can greatly reduce stress, resentment and depression.

Setting spending limits per person will reduce the sticker shock of holiday bills. Simplifying your schedule will make the holidays less hectic. Doings things which all can enjoy will foster quality family times and memories.

This year keep the focus on the real reason of the holiday, God's precious gift to us.

A proper focus during the holidays will move us away from commercialism, materialism, and selfishness.

Celebrate life and health, the love of family and friends, the faith of our religious beliefs and your hopes for the new year.

Are you flooded with negative emotions this holiday season? If you are, contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for help.

Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has blessed us with every spiritual blessing in the heavenly places in Christ."

NCOA wins intramural football title

Only score comes from safety

Pvt. Brian Trapp

The NCO Academy squeaked out a 2-0 victory over The Headhunters from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, for the intramural flag football championship Dec. 13 at Engineer Field.

"The victory was a long time coming," said Johnny Newsome, NCOA coach.

The Headhunters had a strong start. They kept the ball primarily on the NCOA's half of the field and gained possession of a fumble. Then as the Headhunters made a drive for the endzone, NCOA's Primus Brown picked off a pass to crush their efforts.

Then, late in the first half, NCOA's James Davison pulled down a 20-yard pass to bring the team within scoring distance but penalties stalled their drive.

Compton Johnson of the Headhunters rushes behind a wall of blockers.

The following Headhunters drive produced the only points of the game — but not for them. A mix-up near the endzone ended in a safety and gave NCOA the lead.

"They were a good team — we just made the safety and held them off (for the rest of the game)," Newsome said.

Seconds before half time, Brown intercepted his second pass and scampered 31 yards into Headhunters territory. Still the Headhunters' defense held the NCOA back from scoring.

Brown was considered Most Valuable Player for the game , Newsome said.

The defensive struggle continued in the second half.

"I've been struggling to get (to the championships) for three years, and this was my last season," Brown said.

Two interceptions by the Headhunters put a halt to the NCOA's efforts to widen the gap in the score.

In the last two minutes, a huge vertical leap by Brown knocked away a long pass from a Headhunters receiver.

"Defense won the game for us — just look at the score," Newsome said.

A final drive by the NCOA with a minute left held Headhunters at bay and wore down the clock.

"Dedication and will-power brought us here and gave us the power to win," Newsome said. "Football is a team sport — if you don't have a team, you don't have anything."

The NCOA players were proud of their hard fought victory.

"I think our 12-0 record speaks for itself," Brown said.

After the game, trophies were handed to each team in a small ceremony on Engineer Field. Both teams walked away with a smile.

DFAC wins first Christmas tournament game

Teamwork, defense help in close game

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The DFAC served The Rock a bitter taste of defeat, 51-48, at the first game of the post, single elimination, Christmas Intramural Basketball Tournament Monday at Audie Murphy Gym.

The DFAC's Gregory Brooks, from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade's dining facility, drove hard through the lane for the game winning layup with 12 seconds left in the game.

Brooks was not finished. He stole the rock from a Rock player, from B Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, and went to the line to hit one of two after a desperation foul.

"It was kind of lucky —- just good timing, I guess," Brooks said.

Robert James, who had given the Rock the lead, 48-47, with two key free throws at the 1:10 mark, had a clear shot from downtown as time expired, but the shot rimmed out.

"It was a heart breaker," Rock coach Eddie Holland said. "Turnovers and mental errors cost us."

Still, the game was a good learning experience, and the Rock players look forward to performing much better when the regular season starts Jan. 21, he said.

As for the DFAC, the game was a showcase in perseverance.

"We maintained our composure and played well down the stretch when they made their run," said DFAC coach Blakley Jones.

Jones set the example for his team.

In a span of approximately one minute, Jones hit two crucial 3 pointers and banged the boards hard for another 2 points to give his team a seemingly comfortable lead, 46-39, at the 8 minute mark.

Holland quickly called a timeout to regroup his team. It worked. The Rock scored 8 unanswered points.

DFAC players stopped their skid when they started to foul with 37 seconds left. Short of a one-and-one situation, the Rock could not inbound the ball in time and, the referees called them for a five-second violation and paved the way for Brooks' magic.

"We showed a lot of heart today," Brooks said. "We worked hard, ran the ball well and hustled on defense."

The Rock led the punch-counter-punch contest at the half, 26-24. Each team spread the ball around well. James, Chris Wash and Leroy Russell had 6 points for the Rock. Brooks and Antonio Hunter countered with 5 each for the DFAC.

The second half saw more of the same point distribution. Damon Ward had 5, and James added another 4 for the Rock. Jones had 10, and Hunter had 5 for the DFAC.

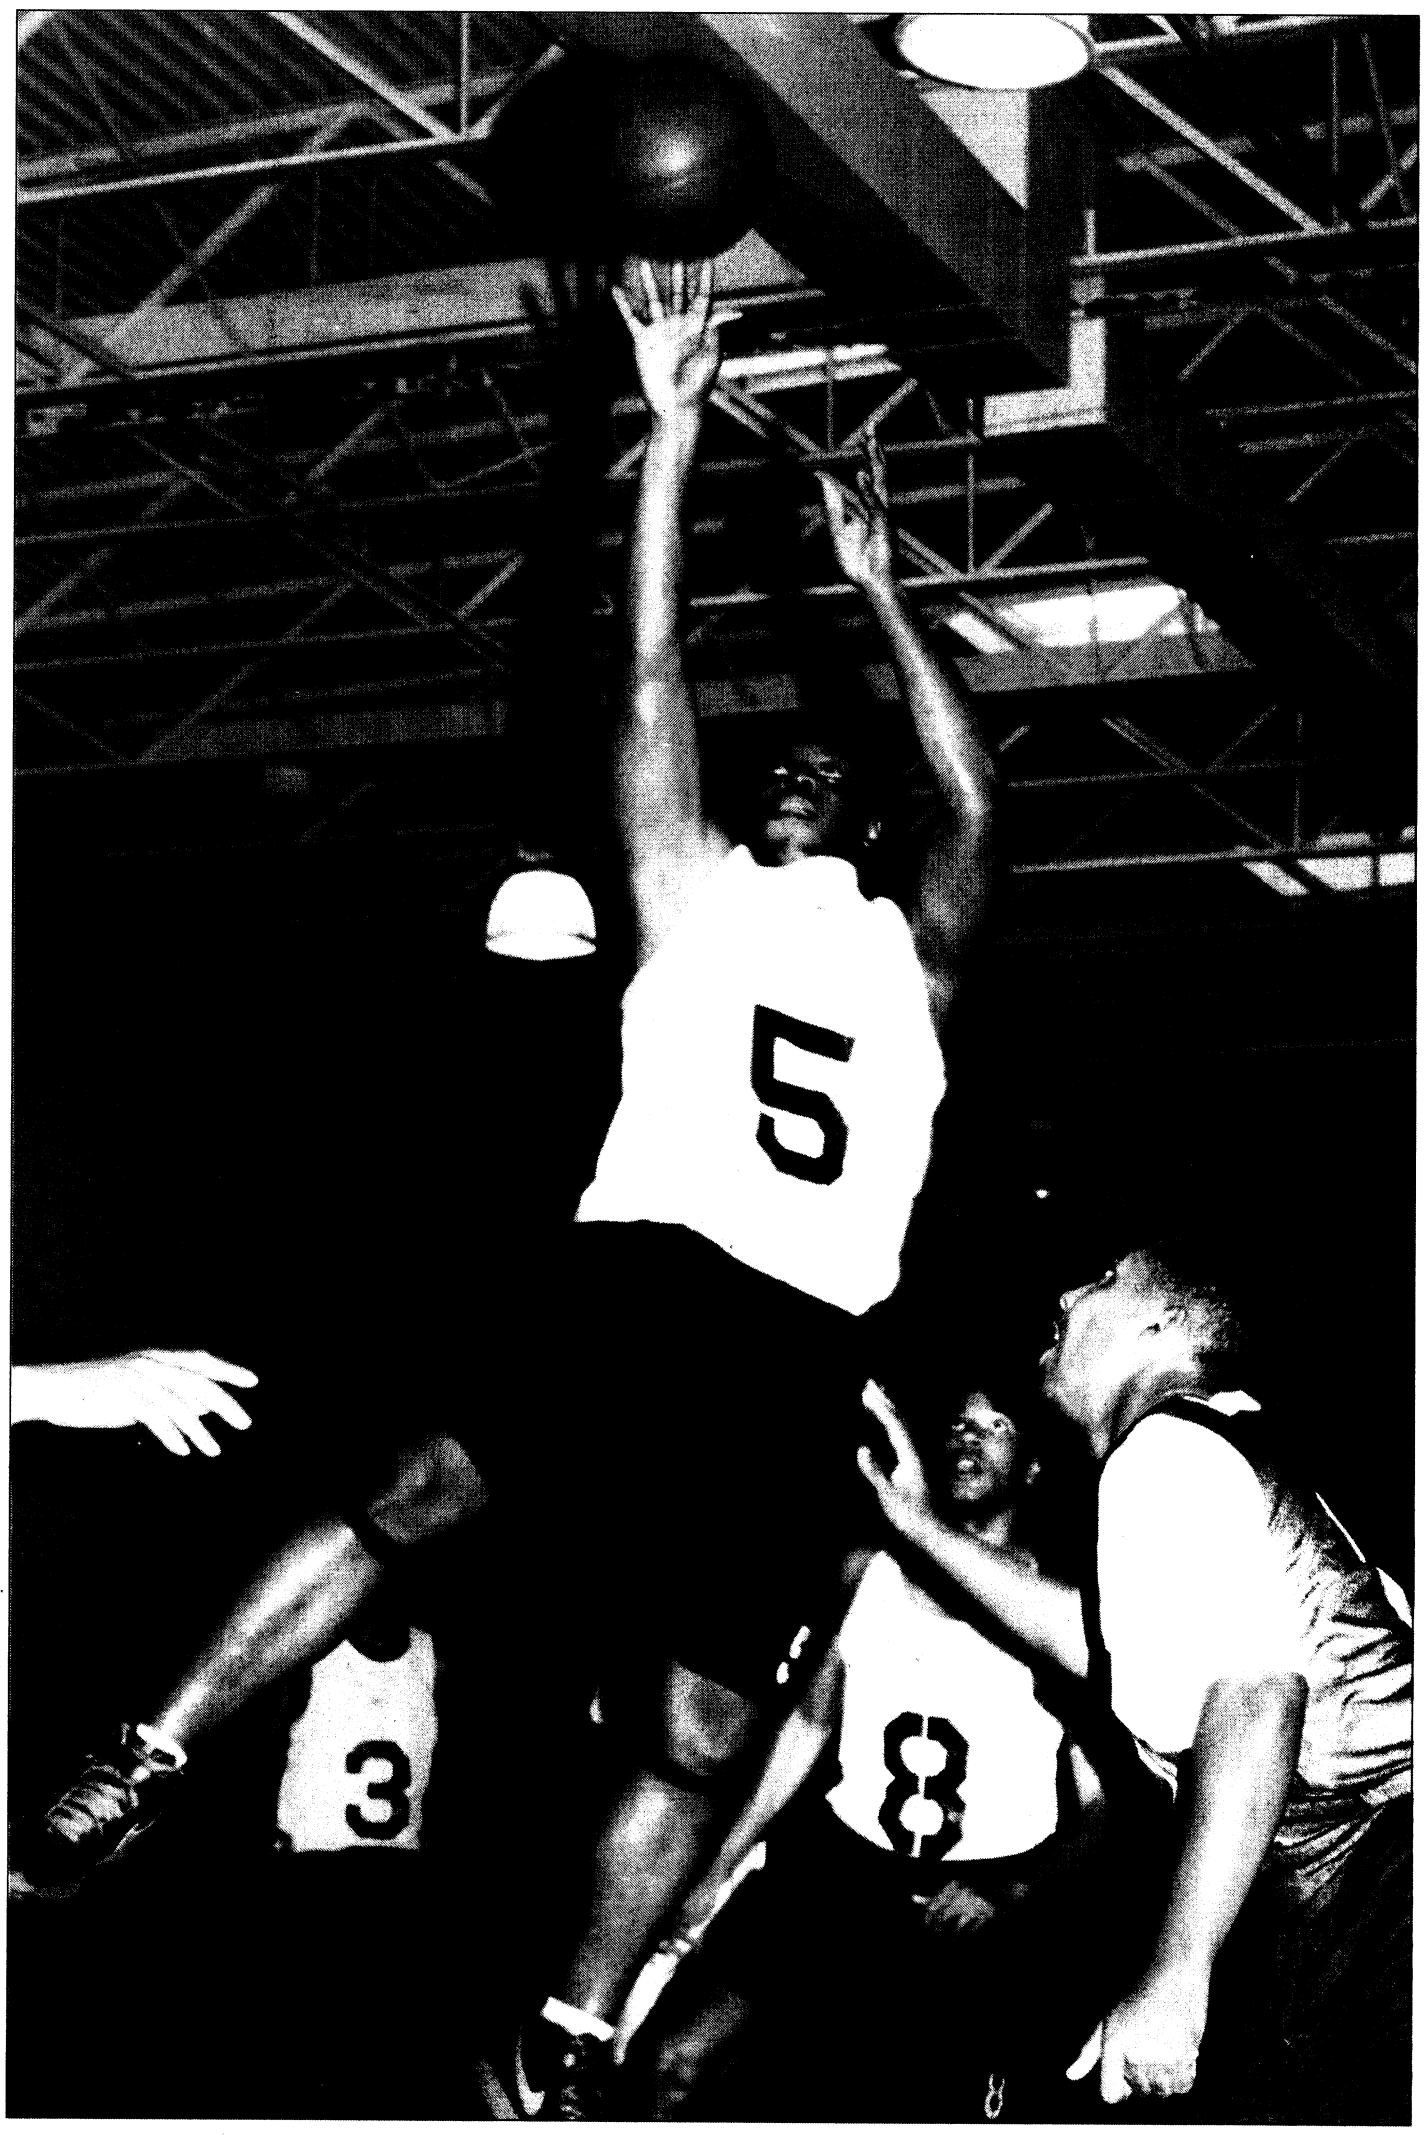
"It was all about team ball out there, and that's how we compensated for each other's mistakes," Jones said.

Brooks said the DFAC will continue to work hard for the rest of the tournament like it did when it took second place in the post's summer tournament.

"I feel we have a good chance to win it," Brooks said. "We have tough men who work the boards and men who can shoot the ball from the perimeter. That makes up for us not having the big beef inside."

The 6-foot, 210-pound Jones is the team's biggest man.

"Many soldiers have the misconception the DFAC doesn't have good sports people," the coach said. "Given what we've done against these bigger teams, that myth is gone."



The team has a simple philosophy.

"The taller you are, the harder you fall — that's what we believe in," Jones said.

Win or lose, the game and rest of the tournament had a positive impact on each of the soldiers' missions.

"The tournament is a great morale boost," Jones said. "The operation tempo is always high at (3rd Brigade), and this is an excellent chance to relax, have fun and take a break from field problems and the hard work everyone does at Kelley Hill. It sets everyone up for a good Christmas break."

The championship game is at 3 p.m. today at Audie Murphy Gym.

CG kicks off scramble

More than 100 participate in tournament

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

More than 100 people gathered at Fort Benning's Follow Me Golf Course Thursday to play in the monthly Pay-Day Golf Scramble Dec. 13.

Col. Steven Sifers along with Lt. Col. Gary Volesky, Maj. David Crowe and Sgt. 1st Class James Parker won the scramble.

Commanding General Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton began the scramble to boost morale and camaraderie around the installation, said Larry Cruise, Fort Benning Golf Club professional.

"The general wants units and people to get out and enjoy the day," he said.

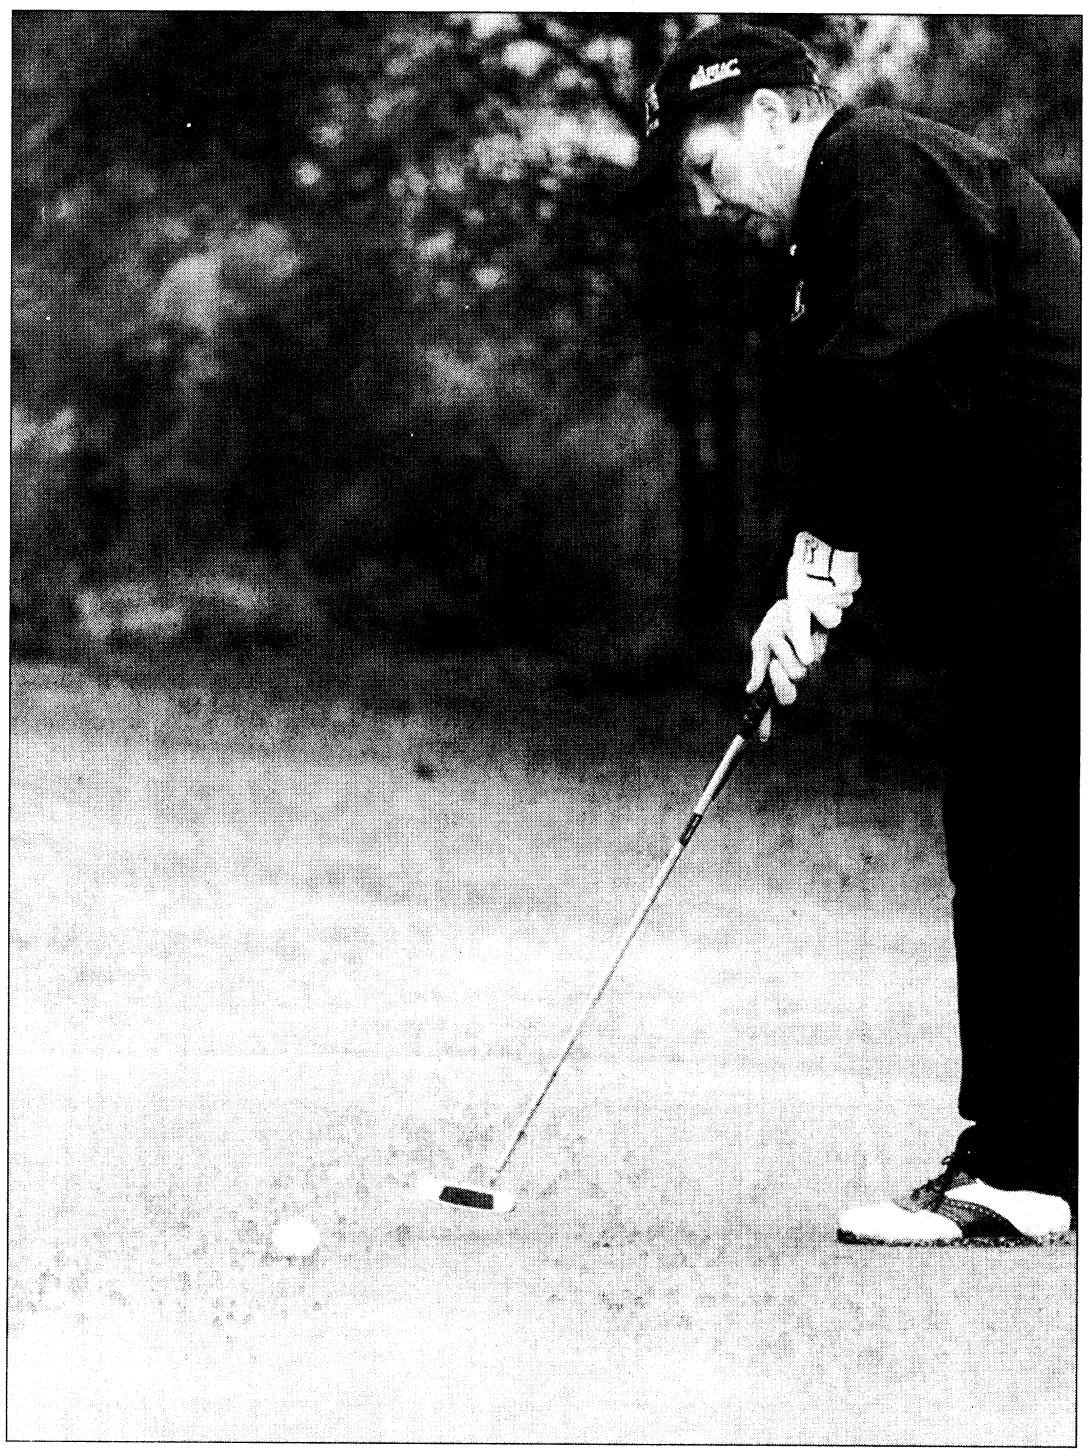
Many people said they enjoyed the day playing a round of golf on the Pineside course.

"I think it's outstanding and builds a lot of esprit de corps throughout units and the installation," said Sgt. 1st Class John O'Connor.

"I hope to see more units and families come out to support the scramble."

The scramble was a success, Cruise said.

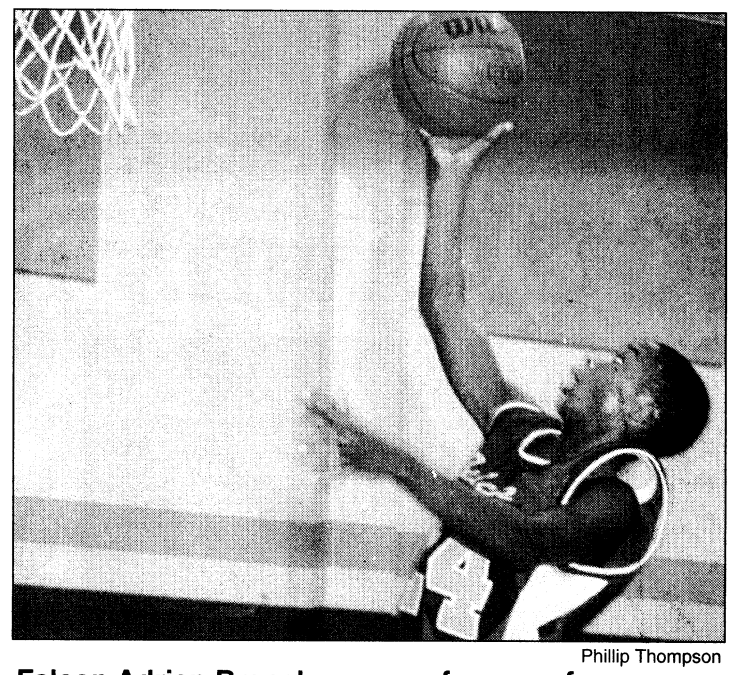
"We hope more people will come out and see what we're all about," he said. "That's what we're here for ... to have tournaments and play golf."



The monthly scramble is currently scheduled for the last Thursday of each month with a $15 entrance fee for each golfer. Golfers at every skill level are welcome and should sign up at the golf club each month before the tournament or call 545-2676.

Each month, the winning team will receive a different prize sponsored by local businesses.

This month the winning team took home $40 to spend in the Pro Shop and a food basket from the commissary. The post exchange; Officers' Club and the Auto Skills Center supported the tournament.



There will also be numerous other prizes handed out.

"It's really great to see the commanding general take an interest in his golf course and the people who play," said Jim Fowler, tournament player. "Plus, it's really nice to have eagled the last hole."

Faith boys whip Webster County

Falcons soar early during home game

Phillip Thompson
Bayonet correspondent

The Faith Falcons gave Webster County an early Christmas present Dec. 11 — a 52-13 hometown whipping.

"We are having fun again," Faith coach Robert Lewis said.

From the opening tip-off, Faith controlled the ball and scored 11 quick points. Webster could not hold the ball on their side of the court long enough to pass the ball, let alone score a point.

The Falcons did not give Webster a chance. The visitors watched as Faith completely dominated them, 22-0, in the first quarter.

In the second quarter, it took a couple of foul shots to put Webster on the board, but their success was short lived. Falcon Andrew Rodriguez added four unanswered points.

Then for the first time, Webster showed a little defense, and held the Falcons and went to the half, 26-2.

With such a strong showing by the starters in the first half, Lewis sent in the second string.

"This was a good opportunity for the bench to play," Lewis said.

The last half was anything but pretty for Webster, but they never gave up, even when Faith held them to just nine points for two quarters. Their offense did not compare to Faith's well-oiled scoring machine. The Falcons scored a total of 26 points in the second half and controlled the ball, rebounds and boards.

"Those boys never gave up — they kept on fighting," the Falcon coach said about both teams.

"She may never serve, but she can be a USAA member."
