NATO calls for beefed-up forces

Soldiers tighten border security for Kosovo

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Responding to escalating violence in the Balkans, NATO is asking members for more troops to tighten its control of Kosovo's border with the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

NATO Secretary-General Lord George Robertson, speaking March 19 in Brussels, Belgium, said member states will be asked to beef up their forces in Kosovo to give the alliance more flexibility. About 5,600 Americans are among the 37,000 NATO peacekeeping troops now in Kosovo.

About a month ago, a few hundred guerrillas began fighting for minority rights and self-rule in Macedonia, where ethnic Albanians make up a third of the country's 2 million people. NATO-led peacekeepers in Kosovo stepped up border patrols to block the flow of men and weapons from Kosovo to insurgents in Macedonia. U.S. troops patrolling the border March 7 engaged four gunmen in a firefight and captured three. No American soldiers were hurt in that exchange.

NATO also responded by allowing Yugoslav troops to move back into a 10-square-mile strip of southern Serbia bordering Kosovo. Ethnic Albanians reportedly have been using the area as a training ground, smuggling route and safe haven for offensive actions in Serbia and Macedonia. Only lightly armed Yugoslav police had been allowed in the area since Yugoslav forces pulled out of Kosovo in June 1999.

During the past week, fighting along the border intensified between insurgents and Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia military and police. The Macedonian government called up reservists to counter a five-day attack on the city of Tetovo and to prepare for wider conflict.

Robertson said the alliance strongly condemns recent attacks by ethnic Albanians against Macedonian soldiers and police. He said NATO leaders are confident enough troops are in place to do the job at the moment; he declined to say how many more would be needed.

NATO's governing body, the North Atlantic Council, and ambassadors of all the NATO member nations are slated to visit Skopje, Macedonia, and Pristina, Kosovo, in early April. Both NATO and the European Union stand behind Macedonia's democratic government, Robertson said.

That "common front," he said, "gives a very clear signal to the extremists that the work that they do is to the disadvantage of Albanians." The extremists are seriously damaging ethnic Albanians' interests and image in the region, he said, and their efforts to break up Macedonia are "doomed to failure."

Robertson said the alliance "will not contemplate the changing of boundaries by violence." Decisions should be made by the ballot box, he stressed, not by bombs or bullets. He called on the extremists to "focus on the ballot box to get the changes that

988th MPs deploy to Saudi

Soldiers leave for six months

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

While the long hours, foreign cultures and the unknown make deployments challenging, leaving family behind makes saying goodbye all the more difficult.

"This will be my third deployment and it doesn't get any easier," said Sgt. Tom Shoup, shortly before boarding a bus to Atlanta March 14.

Shoup and nine soldiers from the 988th Military Police Company embarked on a six-month deployment to Saudi Arabia where they will run security operation centers in Riyadh and Dhahran.

During the deployment ceremony, Capt. James Sides, 988th commander, said he felt each soldier was more than ready to go.

They have been hand picked, trained and fully prepared to go, Sides said.

He told his soldiers their next six months would be difficult, and their job would wear them down.

"It will become mundane and even slow," he said. "And worst of all, you might feel that your part in the big picture does not count."

Nothing could be further from the truth, he said and then told a story of a young airman who was possibly feeling his role did not matter.

"A young Air Force security policeman, Airman 1st Class Chris Wager, was probably feeling the same way when he went to work the morning of June 25, 1996, in a housing complex not far from where you will be living," he said. "His job was to sit on the roof of a 10-story military housing apartment and watch for suspicious activity, a job MPs would hate. But that morning, he spotted a terrorist threat and, with the assistance of two other security police, was able to evacuate three stories of Khobar Towers before a bomb exploded killing 19 Americans and wounding hundreds more. His actions saved scores of others."

Family Kosovo bound

Father, son, brother-in-law leave together

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Three members of a Rhode Island family — all part of a reserve medical unit — left Fort Benning Saturday for a six-month tour in Kosovo.

Sgt. Raymond Murray, a dental technician with the 399th Combat Support Hospital from Taunton, Mass., recalled the day nine months ago when he found out he would be deploying along with his father, Lt. Col. Raymond Murray, and his uncle, Col. Edward Cyr.

"I was excited, but I thought my mother was going to have a heart attack," Sgt. Murray, a 23-year-old junior at Norwich University in Vermont, said. "Not only was her husband leaving for six months, but her son and brother as well."

Jacqueline Murray, the sergeant's mother, remembers her reaction a little differently.

"I was a little stunned when I first heard the news, but I've always known that something like this might happen eventually," she said from her home in Rhode Island.

"I'm quite proud to have my husband, son and brother in the same unit," Jacqueline said.

Sgt. Murray said he has been called "the colonel's son" only a few times since most of the unit

Proposal makes Infantry Ball special

Officer pops question on Riverwalk

As hundreds of people began to fill the Columbus Trade and Convention Center for the 2001 Infantry Ball, one officer was determined to spend a few minutes alone with his date along the Riverwalk before the evening's activities started March 16.

Capt. Lucien Campillo, a student in the Infantry Captains' Career Course, had an important question to ask, but it took some convincing to get his girlfriend, Donna Stackhouse, to agree to go out onto the cold pathway.

"It was pretty windy, and I thought we should be looking for our seats. But he said he really needed to talk to me and wanted to take my picture. I told him it wasn't going to be a good picture because the wind was going to mess up my hair," Stackhouse, who lives in Atlanta, Ga., said.

Campillo prevailed, and once the two were alone he got down on one knee and proposed.

"I asked her to marry me and she said yes," Campillo said.

"I was in shock. He had the ring in his hand and then he put it on my finger," Stackhouse said.

Once inside the two shared their good news with friends. Stackhouse and Campillo, from Tampa, Fla., started dating 10 months ago, and they are planning a fall wedding.

During his welcoming comments, Col. Carter Ham, commander of the 29th Infantry Regiment, which organized this year's ball, announced the engagement to the gathering.

More than 870 guests attended the event, making it one of the largest infantry balls in the post's history.

Unity is key to survival

Bridgett Siter

commentary

Long before CBS made the word "survivor" synonymous with an every-man-for-himself mentality, a local group of survivors found their strength in numbers. Not statistics. Numbers.

Believing no man is an island, they surround themselves with others, like themselves, who believe unity is the key to survival. The measure of their success is counted in the growing number who join them — all survivors who refuse to be known as victims, or statistics, of cancer.

Their goal is to add more and more numbers to their ranks until a cure is discovered and they declare a total victory over the real enemy.

Forget rats and rain and melodramatic island soap opera drivel, these survivors have walked to the edge of death and back repeatedly, been blasted with radiation rays powerful and painful enough to make death seem palatable, and withstood the inward and outward ravages of cancer, its treatment and its aftermath.

And when it's all said and done and they've been handed a clean bill of health — at least for now — they quietly head back into the fray, this time to stand arm in arm with their sisters still fighting the good fight.

The Breast Cancer Support Group at Martin Army Community Hospital, like thousands of others across the U.S., is an "ensemble," said Shiloh Hendricks, Breast Health Patient Assistant at MACH. I like her choice of words — a very delicate description of some very strong warriors.

They're always looking out for each other, Hendricks said. Those are the kind of survivors I want beside me should I ever find myself stranded on an island called cancer, surrounded by a sea of chemicals and radiation and medical procedures and pain and fear.

They're "there for each other." What a novel idea. Might not sell on the prime-time market, but I like it.

I'd sure tune in to see them, arm in arm, walk through the valley of the shadow of death and declare themselves survivors one and all, victors over cancer.

Talk about sweeps week! Show's over, credits role, fade to black.

Everyone goes home a winner.

Moving is always challenging

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek

commentary

Many soldiers do not realize how difficult and trying moving can turn out, until they actually go through it themselves.

Recently, my family and I have completed a trek across the United States to our new home here.

My journey to Fort Benning began in January. I received orders bringing me here soon after returning from Christmas Exodus.

Although the move had been anticipated for about three months, I immediately began making plans for anything and everything I could to help things flow a little smoother.

My husband had just begun his first week of Drill Sergeant School, which left me to fight the battle alone with our 9-month-old daughter, Audrey.

Much to my surprise, as I started down the clearing road in mid-February, nothing was nearly as hard as I had thought it would be. I found the system working in my favor, from returning my military equipment at the central issue facility to having our household goods picked up and finally to signing out of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry).

Leaving Fort Drum, I remained extremely optimistic about beginning a new job at the Home of the Infantry, not to mention, seeing my husband for the first time in two months.

I took a few days to relax with family in Kentucky, anticipating my arrival more and more.

Since I had made a permanent change of station once before, from advanced individual training to Fort Drum, I had some idea of what to expect.

Still, I remained somewhat unsure about inprocessing.

We unpacked almost everything within the first 24 hours after receipt of our household goods, which was a week after arriving here.

Miraculously, we found everything to be in working order and nothing broken.

I finally began inprocessing here as a part of Army Garrison Replacement Detachment, Co. C, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

My experiences had been extremely positive until I reached the appointments phase at Soldiers' Plaza.

I had expected two jam-packed weeks of chaotic running from appointment to appointment, as I had experienced at Fort Drum when I inprocessed there.

Instead, like many others, I found myself with more than ample down time.

Most often greeted by a short wait and smiling face, the experience was overall enjoyable and informative.

I observed many hard-working soldiers and civilians doing their best to help soldiers smoothly enter into their new lives here — people such as Wayne Williamson, housing referral assistant, Community Home-Finding Relocation and Referral Services.

Williamson was not only extremely helpful, but also very polite and professional.

Now as I begin to snuggle down into a new daily routine, the anticipation has started to subside.

I find comfort knowing my duties and responsibilities have not changed, and I will be working with outstanding soldiers and civilians, two of whom I have had previous experience.

The last month has taught me several important lessons. I've learned every post does everything differently, from information written on checks; to child development services rules and in and out processing procedures. The importance of patience remains the most important lesson I've learned. Being patient is not a virtue with which I was born.

Continually, I've had to display patience in the past month more than ever when dealing with clearing my previous installation, receipt of household goods and inprocessing here.

I look forward to the time I will be spending working on The Bayonet helping inform the Fort Benning community.

I hope you will welcome me with equal excitement.

Soldiers should be recruiters too

Spc. Lindsay Pike
U.S. Army Alaska

When I walked into the recruiter's office four years ago, he painted the perfect Army picture.

He told me about great schooling and medical benefits, travel opportunities, and the pride that came with being a soldier.

Soon after I stepped out of the office, however, the perfect picture was torn up by negative and contradictory remarks. The new picture was 5:30 a.m. formations, green chow-hall slop and bad jobs.

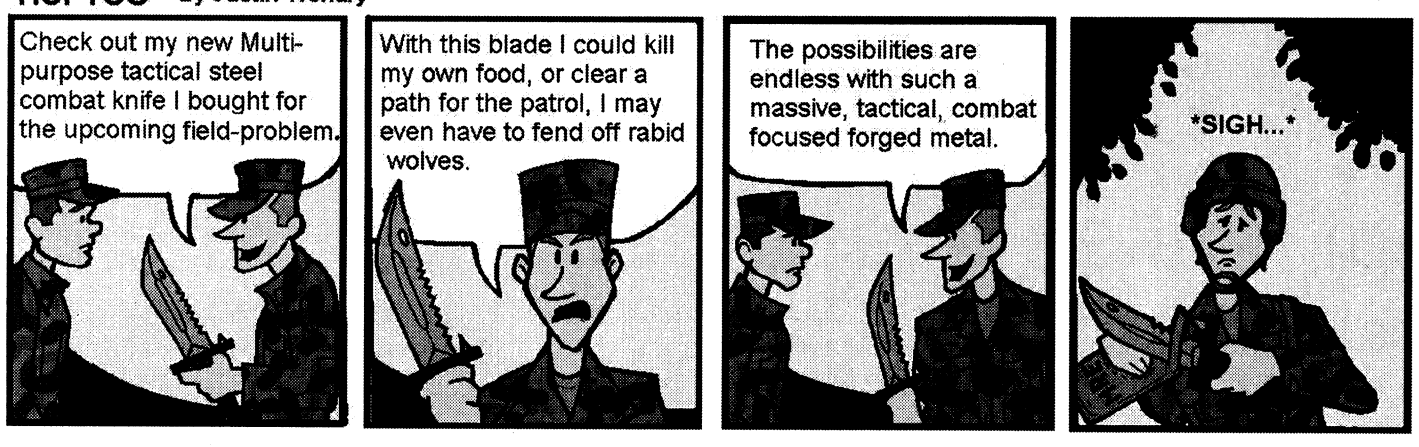
The artist who painted that terrifying picture was not one of my friends or family members, but someone who put on a green uniform every day.

This soldier, home on leave, spoke of huge drill sergeants barking out orders, the stench from chow halls as soldiers passed during the six-mile morning run, the dreadful life in the field, eating tree bark and bugs for dinner.

What this soldier was describing was not the military, it was prison.

Many potential recruits come face-to-face with soldiers before joining. Sometimes these soldiers give what they call "helpful" advice.

They seem to remember only the bad instances and share them.



Soldiers represent the whole Army. When a soldier puts down one aspect of the service, they put down every soldier who has served.

Young recruits are making a huge decision about what to do with their lives. If they hear soldiers bad-mouthing the Army, they become confused about whether this decision is a good one, and maybe they won't join the Army or join the Navy or Air Force.

Every soldier has a different experience. Some soldiers love basic training, while others hate it. Some soldiers visit Korea several times throughout their enlistment, while others never want to see Korea.

Ask yourself why you joined. Was it for the college money or for a chance to see different places? Share these thoughts with recruits. And let the recruiters do their jobs.

Rangers announce plans for new beret

Tan chosen as color for ranger beret

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The secretary of Defense supports the Army's decision to adopt a black beret as its standard garrison headgear and to allow Rangers to change the color of their berets to tan.

Deputy Secretary of Defense Paul Wolfowitz announced the Department of Defense's beret support during a Pentagon press brief March 16.

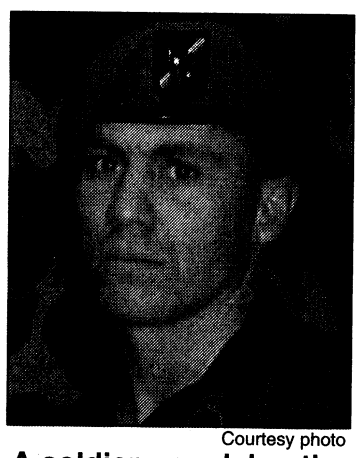
Critics of the Army adopting the black beret have claimed that such a decision belittles the dedication and accomplishments of past and present Rangers who are the only ones to have earned the right to wear the distinctive black beret.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki answered that charge at the press briefing in saying that "... other formations, to include armored units, cavalry units, other infantry units, have worn it over time. And because of that shared history in our Army, the black beret remains the most relevant color for wear Armywide today."

Shortly after Shinseki announced last October the decision for the Army to don the black beret on the next Army birthday, June 14, he offered the Ranger community the opportunity to change the color of its traditional beret.

Col. P.K. Keen, commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment officially requested to change the color of the Ranger beret to tan in a memorandum dated March 8. Shinseki approved the request March 15.

As Rangers move to a tan beret and most of the Army to a black beret June 14, airborne units will retain their maroon beret and Special Forces will keep the green beret.



In response to reporters questions about some of the black berets being made in China, Wolfowitz said that DoD is looking into whether the Defense Logistics Agency acted appropriately in attempting to meet the Army's requirements. That investigation could cause a delay in issuing the beret if something is found amiss, he said.

Current law requires the military to buy American where practical.

In order to meet delivery dates, DLA requested and was granted a waiver to contract beyond the United States to get the needed 2.6 million black berets for the Army because there is only one beret maker in the United States which has limited production capability. DLA contracted one U.S., a Canadian and two British manufacturers to make the berets — one of the British manufacturers maintains a textile plant in China.

"It's not the Army's responsibility to acquire — it's the Defense Logistics Agency's," Wolfowitz said. "We haven't cancelled anything yet. The acting under secretary for Acquisition is looking into the contract and whether there are any issues there that have to be looked at."

Shinseki reminded reporters that his decision regarding the beret was a symbolic and visible demonstration for soldiers to mark the real change the Army is making in transforming from a Cold War force into a more modern one ready for future challenges.

Leadership Columbus members witness HOTEX

Community participates in military day

Spc. Mark Watson

Members of Leadership Columbus received a firsthand look at the military March 16 when they witnessed a live-fire exercise on Red Cloud Range.

The prominent members of the Columbus area participating in the "military day," watched infantrymen mount an assault on the range using firepower the Bradley Fighting Vehicle and soldiers firing from a trench.

"I was in awe," Lisa Collins, the vice president of governmental affairs for the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, said. "It reinstills that sense of pride for what soldiers do. Freedom doesn't come without a price, but it doesn't come without sacrifice. And the soldiers make the sacrifice. That's what gets me."

Even members of the group who were more familiar with the military said the demonstration gave them a new respect for the Army.

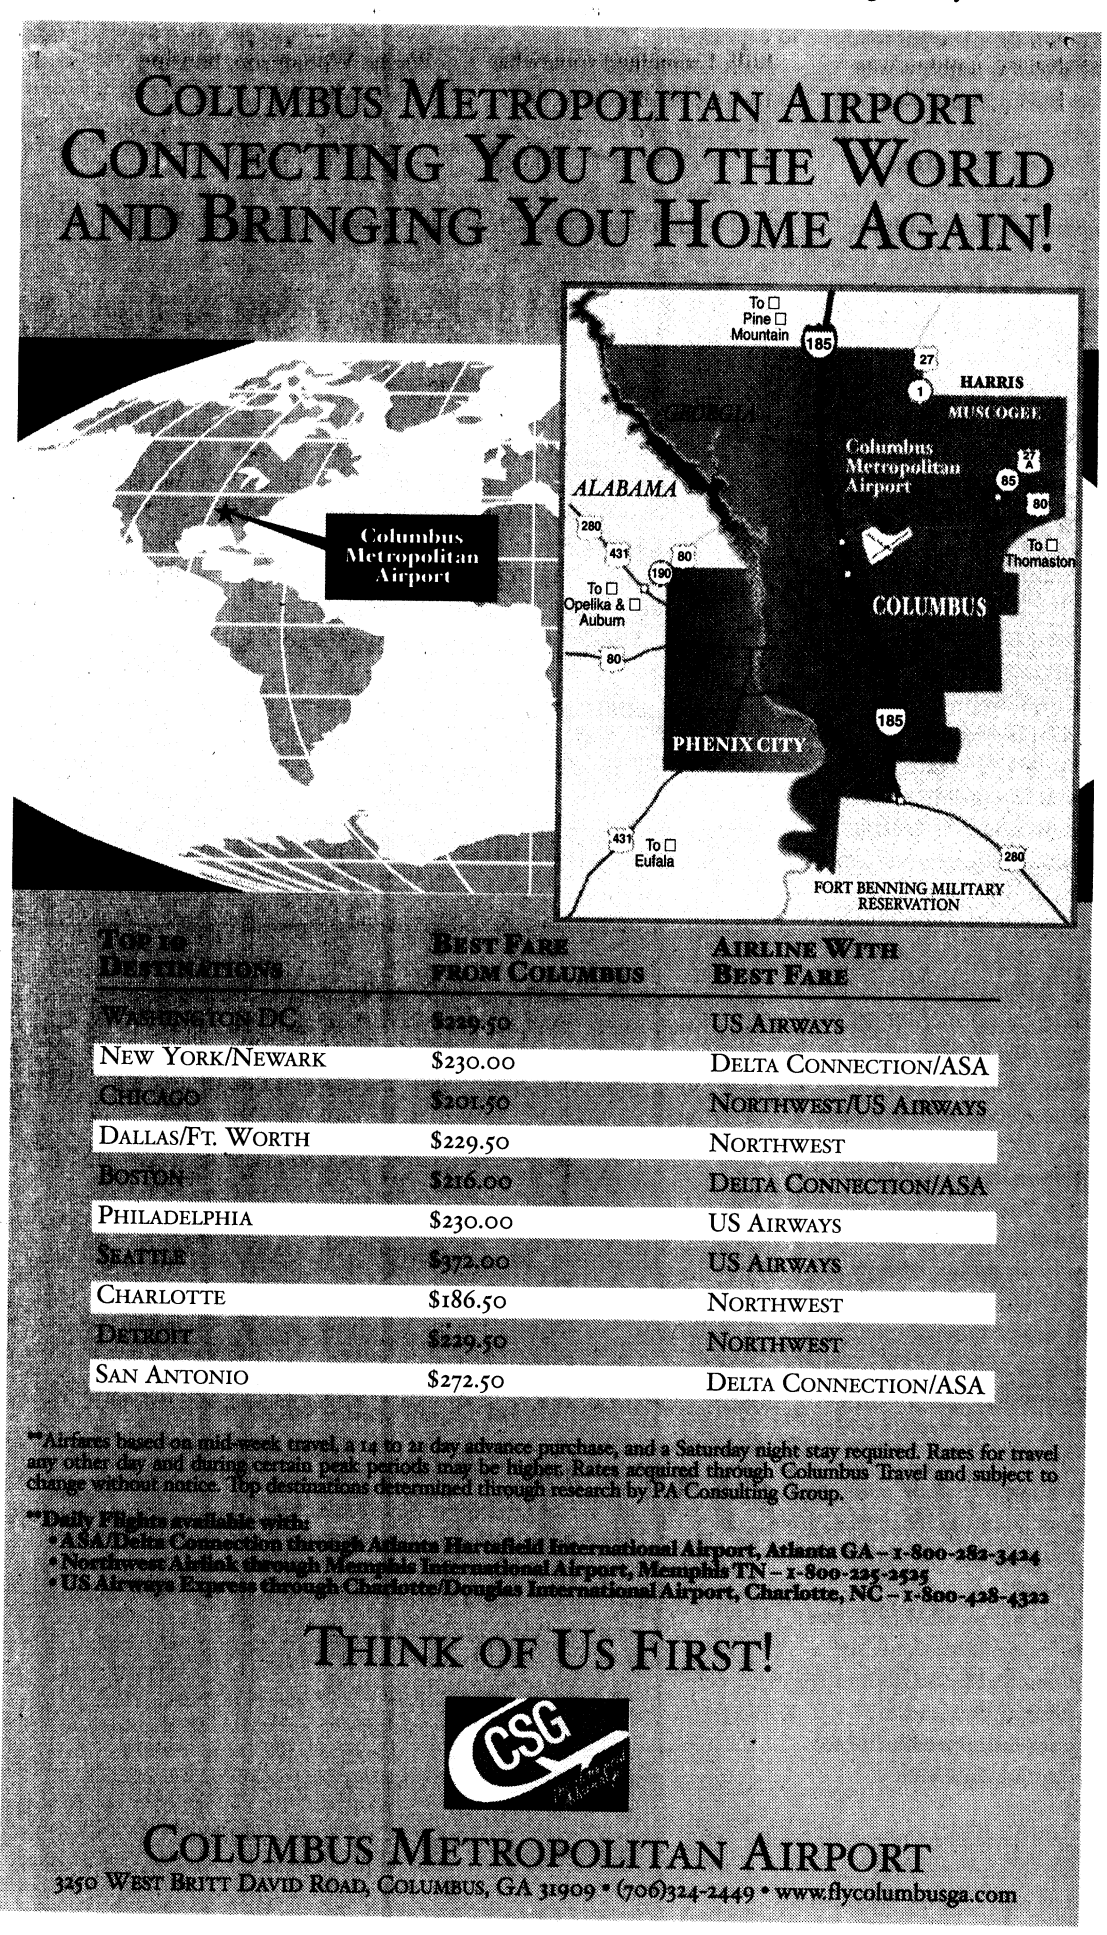
"My grandfather taught here for seven years and I've always heard stories about this," said Angela Wagenti, the vice president of sales from V'Roooom Technology, Inc. "You hear and you read about this, but it wasn't the same as being able to experience it.

"Everything was very impressive. I have a new respect now for when I get woke up at 3 a.m. (from the noise of the explosions)," she said.

After the live-fire demonstration, the group received an up-close look at the Bradleys along with several other weapons systems.

Then, those who wished to, were able to fire several weapons.

"I've never fired a gun before," Wagneti said. "It was awesome. I expected more of a kick, but it was cool. We shot four targets twice."



Members of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, instructed the civilians on how to fire the M-4 Carbine, the M-249 Squad Automatic Weapon and a Sniper Rifle.

"(Wagneti) was very excited about hitting the targets," Sgt. Jeffery White said. He instructed Wagenti on the proper way to fire the M-4. "I think they all were impressed with the weapons and the technology."

The Leadership Columbus group also watched a Rangers in Action demonstration, airborne training and a taste of Army food when they ate lunch with soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group in the Warrior Inn Dining Facility.

Local musicians land spots in movie

Pianist, singer, Infantry Band hit right notes

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Several Fort Benning and Columbus musicians hit the right notes with casting directors from We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

A pianist, singer, and members of the Infantry Center Band were among those given musical parts in the production filming on post this month.

Hollywood and Vining

A simple request turned into a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for pianist Barbara Vining, who has been the secretary for the post chaplain for 34 years.

Vining received a phone call in late February asking her to play a song the next day for a few people at The Infantry Center Chapel.

Vining, who serves as organist at Smiths Station Baptist Church, knew the hymn The Solid Rock well and was happy to help.

The "few people" included director Randy Wallace and singer Bellamy Young, who would perform the hymn during a memorial service scene filmed in the chapel.

Vining played the song several times that day — once so an audio recording could be made for Young to take back to Hollywood as a practice tape.

"At the end of the session, Randy Wallace told me he liked the way I played the song for Bellamy and that he would like me to be in the movie," Vining said.

"I felt honored that I was the one they selected. It was an experience of a lifetime."

The scene was filmed March 12, and it proved to be a long day for the cast, crew and more than 100 extras.

"We were there from 5:30 a.m. until 6:30 p.m.," Vining said. "It's hard work. I had an earphone in my ear, and when it beeped three times I was to start playing."

Vining lost count of how many times she played the hymn.

Her family, friends and co-workers were excited for her, and her boss, Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell, teasingly gave her the nickname "Hollywood and Vining."

"Chaplain Hartsell asked me if I was scared, and I wasn't. This is what I do, and I do it all the time," Vining said.

Sophisticated Lady

While Vining played the piano during the chapel scene, 10 extras served as choir members, including a very familiar face and voice.

Celeste Lee, a civilian employee with the Directorate of Operations and Training, attended a February casting call in Marshall Auditorium and received a call back a few days later for hair and wardrobe.

"I didn't want to pass up the opportunity," Lee said.

Lee, a native of Columbus and mother of four, is a veteran of numerous local theater productions. She was a featured vocalist and actor in Sophisticated Ladies at the Springer Opera House and has performed in several plays at the Human Experience Theater. She will star as a trial lawyer this summer in Miss Birdie Goes on Trial, the third installment in the Miss Birdie series.

She also performs frequently on post. She sang at 3rd Brigade's prayer breakfast March 14 and a Women's History Month luncheon the next day at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), 29th Infantry Regiment.

The actress and singer, who grew up listening to her mother sing with her father's band, said she really enjoyed participating in the film.

"I love acting and singing, plus it's something I can add to my bio," she said.

However, she noted several differences between film and theater work.

"It's really all about hurrying up and waiting. You may have some preconceived ideas about making movies, but you soon realize they tape, re-tape and re-tape again several times to get it to the point you see on screen. I really can't wait to see the final product," Lee said.

She and the rest of Fort Benning will have to wait until spring 2002.

And the band played on

Vining and Lee were fortunate to work during indoor scenes. That wasn't the case for five musicians from the Infantry Center Band who played during an outside party scene at Riverside, the commanding general's residence.

The 283rd Army Band's Jazz Combo worked from 4 p.m. until 7 a.m. March 9-10 playing The Girl from Ipanema and pantomiming other selections, said 1st Sgt. Michael Wholey.

"Actually, we stood around for about 99 percent of the time doing nothing," Wholey said.

The temperature dropped to 25 degrees during the night and after a break, the musicians returned to the bandstand to find ice on the drum set and piano.

"What gets into the movie is anyone's guess," Wholey, a trumpet player, said.

The entire Infantry Band was set to perform in a parade scene, but bad weather pushed the filming of that scene at Doughboy Stadium back to March 15-17, and the band had a scheduling conflict.

The band was already slated to perform Saturday in Gainesville, Fla., at the National Hot Rod Association's drag race, the "Gator Nationals." The Army sponsors a drag car for recruiting purposes.

The scheduling conflict opened the door for 31 male band members from Hardaway High School. Band director Tim Zabel received a call March 14 asking for 30 boys to be extras during the scene.

"The girls were pretty upset," Zabel said.

For the students it meant missing a day and a half of school and "sacrificing" a Saturday. For their troubles, they were paid $50 for up to eight hours of work, with time and a half after that, Zabel said.

They also had to have their hair cut.

"Some went ahead and had their hair cut short before they arrived on post, but about a dozen had to have it recut on the set," Zabel said.

The teen-agers wore uniforms like those worn in 1965.

"The haircuts and uniforms really transformed them. They all looked like young GIs when they came out on the field. It was absolutely amazing," Zabel said.

The musicians did not play a note during the filming, rather they pantomimed to a sound track.

"It was a once-in-a-lifetime experience anyone would treasure, and I hope some shots of the band will end up in the movie," Zabel said.

"I think the kids learned that filmmaking is not a glamorous way to make a living. There are many similarities in how you prepare for a band performance and how you approach a scene. You work at something so hard to get it perfect."

Caterer cooks up something big on movie set

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

It's a cook's worse nightmare. Slaving over a hot stove creating a beautiful meal for hundreds of people, just to have the guests arrive 90 minutes late.

Dirk Long, 30, knows the scenario all too well. It's a regular part of his life, but he's not complaining.

Flexibility is the name of the game when working on the set of a major movie production.

Long and a staff of nine food-service professionals are feeding the stars, cast, extras and crew during the filming of We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

The caterers prepare two and sometimes three meals a day for between 200 and 600 people — depending on which scenes are being shot.

"They change things so much," Long said of the production schedule. "Everything is up in the air, and that's hard when you are doing food service."

Long is the crew chief for TomKats Catering, a company with offices in Nashville, Tenn., New York City and Los Angeles. TomKats caters for movie productions strictly, and Long and his full-time crew will follow We Were Soldiers through its entire filming, moving next to California.

TomKats currently has crews working on six motion picture productions, as well as operating a West Hollywood commissary called The Lot.

The chef has worked on location in Texas during filming of Miss Congeniality starring Sandra Bullock, and most recently on the set of High Crimes starring Ashley Judd and Morgan Freeman.

Long, a native of Crossville, Tenn., brought five full-time TomKats professionals with him.

He hired four food service workers from the local area, including Cathy Carowick of Columbus.

Carowick worked in dining facilities while stationed in Germany and heard about the temporary job with the company from her husband, who works with Valley Hospitality.

Her friends are envious of her job providing meals for the likes of Mel Gibson, Sam Elliott and Madeleine Stowe, she said.

"They are so jealous, but I've told them if they could see me at the end of the day, they wouldn't be jealous," Carowick said. "I've got cake icing in my hair right now."

Carowick, Long and the other caterers had been on the job since 2:30 a.m. March 13 and at 4:30 p.m. they were loading the company's three trucks with food for the next morning's location shoot, a scene where hundreds of soldiers were expected as extras.

"Be sure to take lots of eggs, bacon and sausage," Long told his staff.

The previous day the catering crew worked from 1:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.

"You've got to love your job because you only get between three and four hours of sleep some nights," Long said.

Michael Lackey once cooked for guests at the Biltmore Estate and Grove Park Inn in his hometown of Asheville, N.C. But he left restaurant kitchens behind and took his culinary arts degree on the road when he joined TomKats.

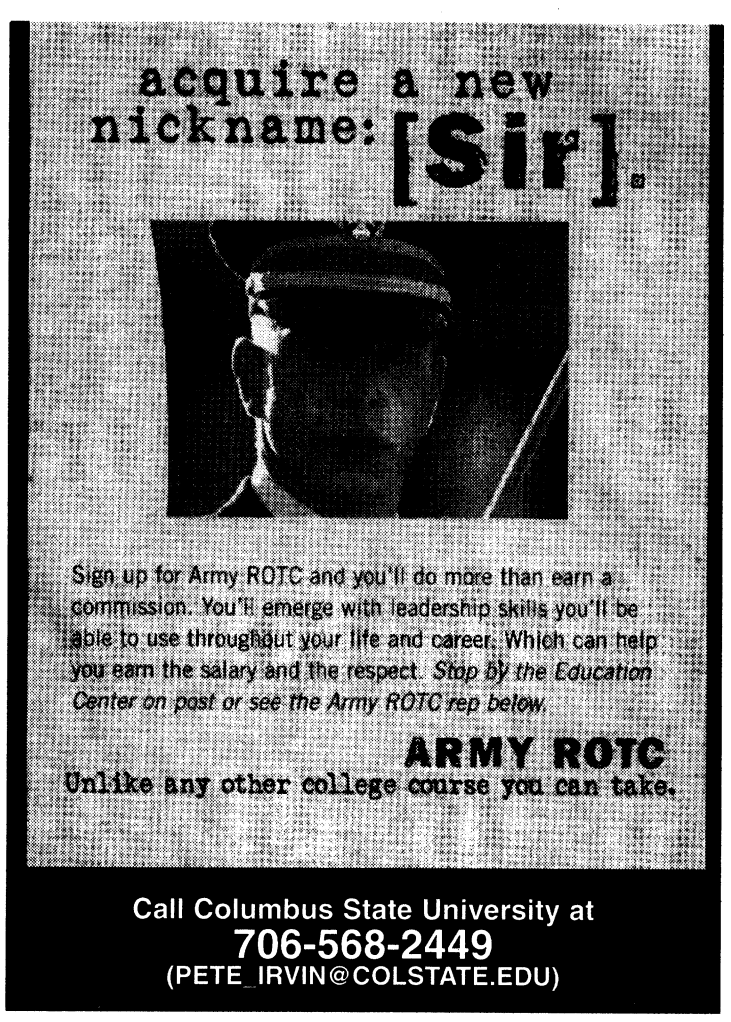
"You have to have a passion for what you do, and this is what I love to do," Lackey said.

The menus have something for everyone. Meals provided on the set so far have featured dishes such as smoked salmon, baby-back ribs, swordfish, steak and assorted vegetable and salad dishes.

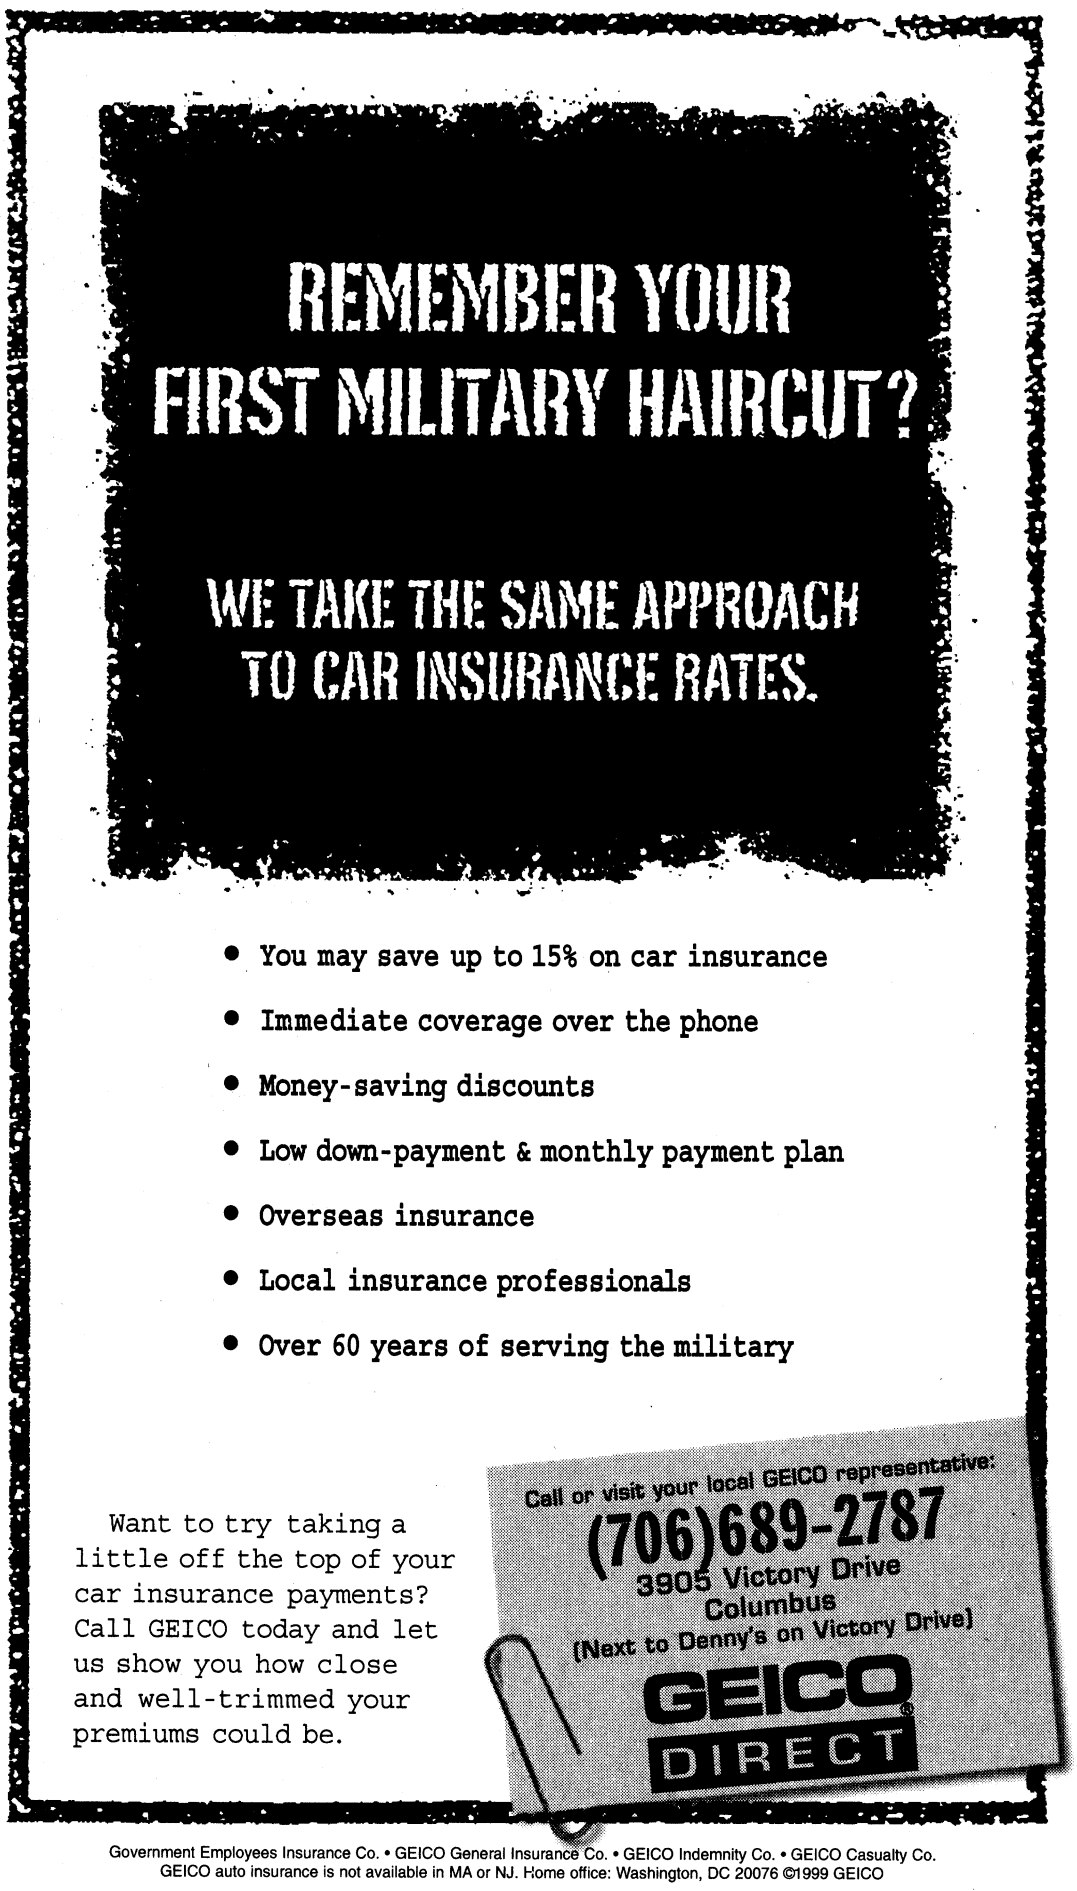
"You name it, they make it," Carowick said. "I haven't heard anyone ask for something that we haven't had."

That includes fresh beet juice and chemical-free chicken.

"That's the name of the game," Lackey said. "We cater to them — hands down, anything they want."



Groceries, including produce, meat, bread and fish, have been purchased locally, as well as ice and water.



"We pump a lot of money into the local economy," Long said.

He estimated he has spent an average of $30,000 a week on food in Columbus, and $15,000 on water and ice.

Families have moving experience with filming

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

When the Thomas family first heard the movie We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young would be coming to Fort Benning, they had a vision of themselves pulling out lawn chairs and watching the movie being filmed.

Instead, Maj. Scott, Gina and Bryan Thomas were given less than 48 hours to decide if they would volunteer their house for the filming of the movie.

Three Army majors and their families have donated their homes to be sets in the movie. Their quarters have been transformed into the 1965 residences of three soldiers from the story.

"The subject matter was very important to us. If this was just any movie we would not have agreed," said Thomas. "But it's hard to say no when they want to recreate something like this."

The houses were hand-chosen for the roles because of their location and angles for filming. The families were relocated to other accommodations while the movie is being filmed.

"They saw something in our house that normal people like us don't see," said Thomas. Their house portrays the residence of Capt. Tom, Catherine and Karen Metsker.

Thomas had a chance to see her newly refurnished house last week and was glad she did.

"I don't think we'd recognize our own house in the movie, it's so different," said Thomas.

Majs. Elizabeth and Jamie Gayton and son Stephen's house was chosen to be Jack, Barbara and Camille Geoghegan's residence in the upcoming movie.

"They chose one of the quietest streets on post. Mailmen used to have problems finding us," Elizabeth Gayton said.

Jamie Gayton has a special tie to this story.

He was attending a 1st Cavalry Division reunion at Fort Benning in August 1990. It was during this reunion he was told his unit would be involved in Desert Shield.

"While attending one of the mixers, I remember vividly Brigadier General Tilelli moving to the front of the auditorium and taking the microphone to brief the gathering. He told us that the division had been alerted to move to the Persian Gulf," Gayton said. "The remainder of the reunion was a solemn event with veterans choosing not to talk about their stories that often did not have happy endings."

Ed Grifenhagen, owner of Katz Home Fashions, completed the interior design work on the sets. He said it was uncanny that every room's specifications were the same size — down to an eighth of an inch.

He and his designer, Diana Trostle, have spent more than 10 weeks creating about 50 window coverings, in addition to tablecloths and chair cushions.

The Gayton's kitchen appliances were swapped for avocado green ones, 1960s cans of food adorn the countertops, and old carpets decorate the rooms.

"The set was unbelievable," said Grifenhagen. "It even smelled like the 1960s."

Maj. Peter and Laura Mount, and daughters Ashley and Jennifer, will have an easier time recognizing their house on the big screen.

Spc. William A. Graves

Maj. Elizabeth Gayton and her son, Stephen James III, enjoy the new surroundings in their home courtesy of the film crew of We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

Several of their personal items, including a piano and an antique drop-leaf table, were allowed to remain in the rooms during the filming. Where their own pictures once rested in the downstairs rooms, photos of Mel Gibson and Madeleine Stowe now rest. The couple will portray Lt. Gen. Harold and Julie Moore in the film.

In addition to keeping their own newspaper and photograph journals, the families were offered a chance to watch several scenes being filmed and an opportunity to be extras. Jennifer Mount, 3, will portray Karen Metsker in the film.

Each family had their own aspirations and memories during the filming.

Elizabeth had previously met Moore during a book signing tour, when she was stationed at Fort Lewis, Wash., as a captain. She would like to meet Bruce Crandall, she said, and discuss his experiences during the battle.

Thomas had one wish during the filming, which came to fruition this month — meeting Julie Moore. Thomas said she is a heroine because of all the work she has done with survivors' assistance and continues to be a role model for people everywhere.

"Everyday I'm asked why we're doing this. I tell them to read the chapter of We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young entitled 'The Secretary of the Army Regrets...' It's all right there. How can we not do this?"

Post hosts Industry Day

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne informed senior industry executives on the transformation and modernization plans for the future of the the infantry during Industry Day March 15.

"The chief of the infantry shared his vision to industry leaders so they will be able to focus their efforts on developing needed equipment," said Maj. Brad Scott, deputy director for combat development.

The conference was mutually beneficial for the more than 50 major companies and the infantry, he said.

"By communicating our technology needs and materiel requirements to defense industry leaders, we assisted them in focusing their research and development projects toward the satisfaction of the infantry's future requirements.

"It was beneficial for us because they will develop projects we need quicker and more efficiently," Scott said.

He said the infantry is poised to accomplish the Army Chief of Staff's goal of a lighter, more lethal and more mobile force.

"The companies know the future of our organization, how it will fight, and the what kind of equipment infantry soldiers will require to win on the future battlefield," Scott said.

The Association of the U.S. Army hosted a golf tournament March 14 for conference participants. A reception and barbecue dinner hosted by both the Columbus and Phenix City Chambers of Commerce and the National Infantry Association was held that evening at the Columbus Chamber of Commerce Courtyard.

"Everyone had a chance to get to know each other and break the ice," Scott said. "It also gave them a chance to see Columbus."

Murrays: Deploy as family to Kosovo

hasn't made the family connection.

"A lot of people haven't caught on," he said.

Sgt. Murray took a leave of absence from college, but will send stories to the school's newspaper during the deployment. He will be commissioned as a field artillery lieutenant when he graduates next year.

"I never thought I would be deployed with my old man," he said. "But I like to see him in action. He's pretty cut and dry and doesn't mess around."

Lt. Col. Murray, a pharmacist, spent a decade on active duty, which has helped prepare his wife and children for his absence.

"It's never easy, whether you are active duty or a reservist, to walk out of the house for a months-long deployment," the elder Murray, 45, said.

Lt. Col. Murray, his son and brother-in-law talked about their family and military ties before tackling the Leaders Reaction Course March 14.

The Murrays live just two streets over from the Cyrs in Bristol, R.I., — adding a whole new dimension to the military's family support group. The Murrays have four other children and the Cyrs have five daughters.

"It's quite a gathering when we all get together," said Cyr, a nurse anesthetist at Charlton Memorial Hospital, Fall River, Mass.

Cyr spent five years on active duty, and he describes his wife, Patricia, as the strength of the family. He said he feels comfortable that she and his family will do well during the deployment, thanks in part to the unit's family readiness group, which has been recognized as one of the most active support groups in New England.

"I've already received several phone calls from the (family support) group giving me updates on the unit. For example, I got a call that they arrived safely," Jacqueline said.

Lt. Col. Murray is the executive officer for the 178-member Task Force Med Falcon 4, which will run a 52-bed health care facility treating American and NATO soldiers and civilians in Kosovo.

In addition to the 399th CSH, the task force includes the 307th Medical Group from Columbus, Ohio, 407th Ground Ambulance Company from Puerto Rico and active-duty soldiers from the 44th Medical Brigade at Fort Bragg, N.C. They are replacing the 313th Hospital Unit Surgical from Springfield, Mo.

Col. Edward Cyr (left), Sgt. Raymond Murray and Lt. Col. Raymond Murray are deploying to the same theater of operations.

The soldiers processed through the CONUS Replacement Center before leaving for Kosovo. After completing their theater specific individual readiness training, they received additional medical instruction from the 30th Medical Brigade from Germany.

MPs: Say goodbyes before deployment to Saudi Arabia

"What you do over there is important," Sides said. "It is more important than you will ever see. You are part of a team that can accomplish something."

Although Shoup and his fellow MPs have a difficult job in store, families left behind will have a difficult mission as well.

"It's going to be rough," his wife, Jamie Shoup said. "The hardest thing will be dealing with the children and not having him relieve me when he comes home."

During his last deployment, a yearlong tour in Korea, Jamie stayed with her parents and she said they helped with the children. But this time she will be on her own.

Sgt. Pete Perez will also leave behind his wife of seven months.

"We've been apart before," Michelle Perez, said. We'll make things work. It will be OK. The most difficult thing will be not seeing him and not having him come home everyday."

She added, when he told her he was deploying, she had mixed feelings.

"I was hurt when he told me, but I understood too," she said. "This is what he has prepared to do. It is exciting for him to serve his country, and he really is excited to go. I'll be counting the days until he returns."

Reassuring the soldiers their families will be fine, Col. GT Myers, Fort Benning's provost marshal, said the company will do everything possible to help out the families.

"Don't worry about your families, friends and loved ones back here," he said. "The family support group and the chain-of-command will move heaven and earth to support them."

Then to the families, Myers told them their husbands and fathers would be fine.

"Don't be worried," he said. "These are well-trained troops going to a well-designed mission. They will come back fine.

"You will have the opportunity to anticipate their return, just as generations of others have before," he said.

The soldiers are scheduled to return in late September.

Proposal: Highlights event

The evening spotlighted the 50th anniversary of the Korean War with historical photographs and commemorative posters decorating the banquet hall.

Guest speaker Gen. William Livsey, post commander at Fort Benning from 1977-79, paid tribute to the American infantry soldier and military tradition.

"The military is built on tradition. It's tradition that carries infantry soldiers into battle; tradition that causes them to close with and destroy; and tradition that causes them to win," Livsey said.

In a lighthearted tribute to military chow, the evening's appetizer was an Army culinary tradition — chili mac. The concoction was served in canteen cups.

they feel are necessary."

Macedonia's parliament intends to put reforms in place that recognize the role of Albanians within the society, Robertson said. But there can be no question of "breaking up, federating or cantonizing" the country "now or in the future,' he added.

Macedonian Foreign Minister Srgjan Kerim, appearing at the NATO press conference with Robertson, said his country is not asking for help within its borders, but only in the border region's mountains and forests.

Post celebrates Women's History Month

Community recognizes contributions

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Soldiers and civilians from the Fort Benning community gathered Tuesday recognizing National Women's History Month with the "Celebrating Women of Courage and Vision" luncheon at the Officers' Club.

"We are not only celebrating past contributions, but future ones also," said 1st Lt. Kate J. Bielak, 988th Military Police Company, of distinguished women throughout history.

Several soloists performed during the ceremony. Sgt. Dorothy D. Bess-Moore, A. Co., 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, sang Precious Lord; Capt. Antoinette Gant, commander, 63rd Engineer Co., 36th Engineer Group, who recited A Room Full of Sisters by Mona Lake-Jones, and Malissa Hayes, an instruction support specialist for Fort Benning schools, sang Wind Beneath My Wings. Also performing a dramatic interpretation of Rosa Parks was Ashley Maignan, a student at Faith Middle School.

"I remind some of my brothers in arms that our maternal ancestors walked across the land barefoot," said Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, commanding general, as he introduced the guest speaker, Brig. Gen. Barbara Fast, National Security Agency.

"It's a pleasure for me (to introduce Fast) because she's a personal friend," he said. "This is the hardest working staff officer I've worked with."

"We are products of those that came before us," said Fast, as she spoke of the ways women have effected the course of history.

Women have participated in every major war from the Revolutionary War to the Civil War, from the Korean War and most recently, the Balkans, Fast said, pointing out that some were spies and fugitives, while others picked up weapons and fought beside the men they cared for.

"We are just a part of the force, no more, no less, and that's just where I want to be," she said.

Fast continued her address with advice for women who want to succeed in life.

"The most important lesson I learned early on was to just be myself," she said. "I couldn't be somebody that I just wasn't."

Fast said, the keys to success are: being courageous, doing what is important for you, making a contribution, setting goals, and always keeping ethics.

"Admit what you don't know, and then learn like heck," said Fast. "We should encourage all our soldiers to expand their education and never stop learning."

As Fast finished her speech, she told listeners what she believed was more important than anything else.

"Treat others as you would like to be treated," she said. "That golden rule is the best that I know."

Le Moyne presented Fast with a copy of the Follow Me statue as a symbol of appreciation for taking the time to speak at the luncheon.

Members from the Equal Opportunity Office presented a slide show to those attending the luncheon. The show was a tribute to women who dedicated their lives to making history. Among those recognized were Nelly Bly, a journalist considered to be the pioneer of investigative journalism, Antonia Novello, the first woman and first Hispanic to be named Surgeon General of the United States, and finally, Lt. Gen. Claudia J. Kennedy, who is retired from the U.S. Army.

NCO re-enlists for retirement

Sergeant major serves with pride on retention team

1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

For more than 26 years, Sgt. Maj. Edwin Lasanta, the Fort Benning installation retention sergeant major has served in the U.S. Army.

Lasanta raised his right hand for the last time in his extensive career for his final re-enlistment Feb. 23.

"I have been very fortunate to remain healthy and be able to serve the nation for 30 years. This has been my goal for quite sometime," Lasanta said.

It was in May 1973 when Lasanta at age 18, began his career as a medical records specialist. He wanted to work in an administrative field because of his accounting experience in high school.

He said he initially joined the military to take advantage of the G.I. Bill and to have a chance to travel.

In the beginning, Lasanta had goals to serve in the military and return to a civilian life to get an education. After separating from the military and returning in 1977, he set his sights on reaching the highest rank an enlisted soldier could attain.

"I pondered the officer ranks, but I really wanted to make things happen and decided to remain an enlisted soldier," Lasanta said. "I thought that I could retire as a sergeant first class or possibly a master sergeant. I exceeded my own expectations."

For the last 15 years of his career, Lasanta has been a part of the retention team. He wanted the opportunity for promotion, but more importantly to take care of soldiers. He is now concentrating on the future generations of the Army.

"I wanted to make sure that I was able to provide information and assistance to soldiers whenever they were making a decision about a career in the Army," Lasanta said.

Sgt. 1st Class Jose Irizarry, retention senior operations sergeant said, Lasanta taught him taking care of soldiers is the first priority of his job.

"Soldiers are our most important asset and therefore, should be afforded our utmost attention, especially when it becomes time to make a big decision such as re-enlist or get out," Irizarry said.

"Sergeant Major Lasanta motivates others to do their best, at whatever it is they are doing."

Lasanta continues to concentrate on the future of the military by assisting the soldiers who will be come the leaders of our military. He knows the importance for married soldiers to make decisions not only for themselves, but to do what is also best for their families. After 22 years of having a successful marriage and military career, Lasanta can also offer insight to those with less experience.

"You need to get the support from your family. If they don't support your career especially on deployments or assignments then is very difficult," Lasanta said.

"To make both career and marriage successful, you need to establish priorities and determine what things are more important than others and sticking with a plan."

Lasanta attributes his success to the support his wife, Sonja, and son, Daniel, gave him.

"My wife has been very supportive and my goals have been to provide them with opportunities to see the world and provide to my son an opportunity to get a college degree," Lasanta said.

MP graduates ground fighting course

Class helps soldier prepare for MP mission

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

A 209th Military Police Detachment soldier became the first MP to graduate the Basic Instructor Certification Course for ground-fighting techniques Friday.

Spc. Joseph Williams completed the 42-hour course that prepares soldiers to teach the basics of a new Army fighting system.

"The defining characteristic of a warrior is the willingness to close with the enemy, and Williams did it well," said Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larsen, combative master trainer for the 11th Infantry Regiment.

Athletic fighters and those with brawn are not necessarily the best students in the class, he said.

"The person who pays attention in class is the person who is better," Larsen said.

Williams was a proficient listener and one of the top fighters in the class, he said.

"He did well because he paid attention, used the techniques as taught, and kept his head under duress during fights," Larsen said.

Williams will take what he learned and teach it at the quarterly MP academy. He said the course will benefit his students because it provides mission oriented fitness that will improve force protection.

"While on the road, anything can happen," Williams said. "The class gave me confidence and prepared me for any situation. For example, if someone tries to grab me or my weapon during a traffic stop, I'll relax, take my time and handle it."

He said he'll be able to apply the training to many aspects of life, and, as a result, it made him a better person.

"I learned how to control my emotions," the MP said. "If you bring emotions into a situation, that's when it could get out of hand."

The knowledge gained from the class will enhance subject safety, Williams said.

"We use the appropriate level of force for a given situation," he said. "If talking doesn't work, we'll have the ability to control subjects without injuring them."

Williams said he looks forward to sharing the information with his coworkers.

The course has origins dating back to 1995 when soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, realized methods taught since 1946 were difficult to master and caused injuries, said Sgt. 1st Class Troy Thomas, combative master trainer for the 11th Inf. Regt. They investigated other fighting styles, but chose Brazilian ju-jitsu as the frame work for the new system because it presents quick and efficient ways to control and finish the enemy through joint manipulation and dislocation and chokes.

"The course's curriculum is just a portion of combatives training," Thomas said. "We teach ground fighting techniques because, if 70 to 90 percent of fights go to the ground, you need to know how to fight on the ground."

In fact, soldiers at the Basic Combat Training Brigade already learn the techniques, and drill sergeants from the Infantry Training Brigade will soon teach it. He hopes every soldier in the Army eventually will learn them, he said.

"The old (hand-to-hand) was a conglomeration of techniques and was difficult to learn in a timely manner," Larsen said. "We teach the basics of ground fighting because the same principles that make one a good stand-up fighter are those used in ground fighting."

The school is open to anyone on post who can clear a week off through their change of command.

Marine drill instructors visit drill sergeants

Marines witness Fort Benning training methods

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

One says hooah.

One says hurrah.

The sayings are just one of the their myriad of differences, but they share one important and common goal — train America's future fighting force.

Twenty Marine drill instructors and four officers from H Company, 2nd Battalion, Recruit Training Regiment, Marine Corps Recruit Depot, Parris Island, S.C., visited post Monday and Tuesday to witness Army drill sergeants in action.

"The trip was a great learning experience," said Staff Sgt. Robert Mims.

The visit was beneficial for the officers as well.

"It gave us a different view of the entire (U.S.) force," said Capt. Mike Durham, company executive officer. "Some things we do better, and some things you do better. We broadened our horizons."

Like Durham's recent deployment to Kosovo, the Army and Marines work together to accomplish government missions.

The visitors developed a better appreciation for how drill sergeants train our men, he said.

The Marines had opportunities to watch drill sergeants train basic trainees up close and personal. For instance, they had a chance to witness a "smoking session" of the trainees.

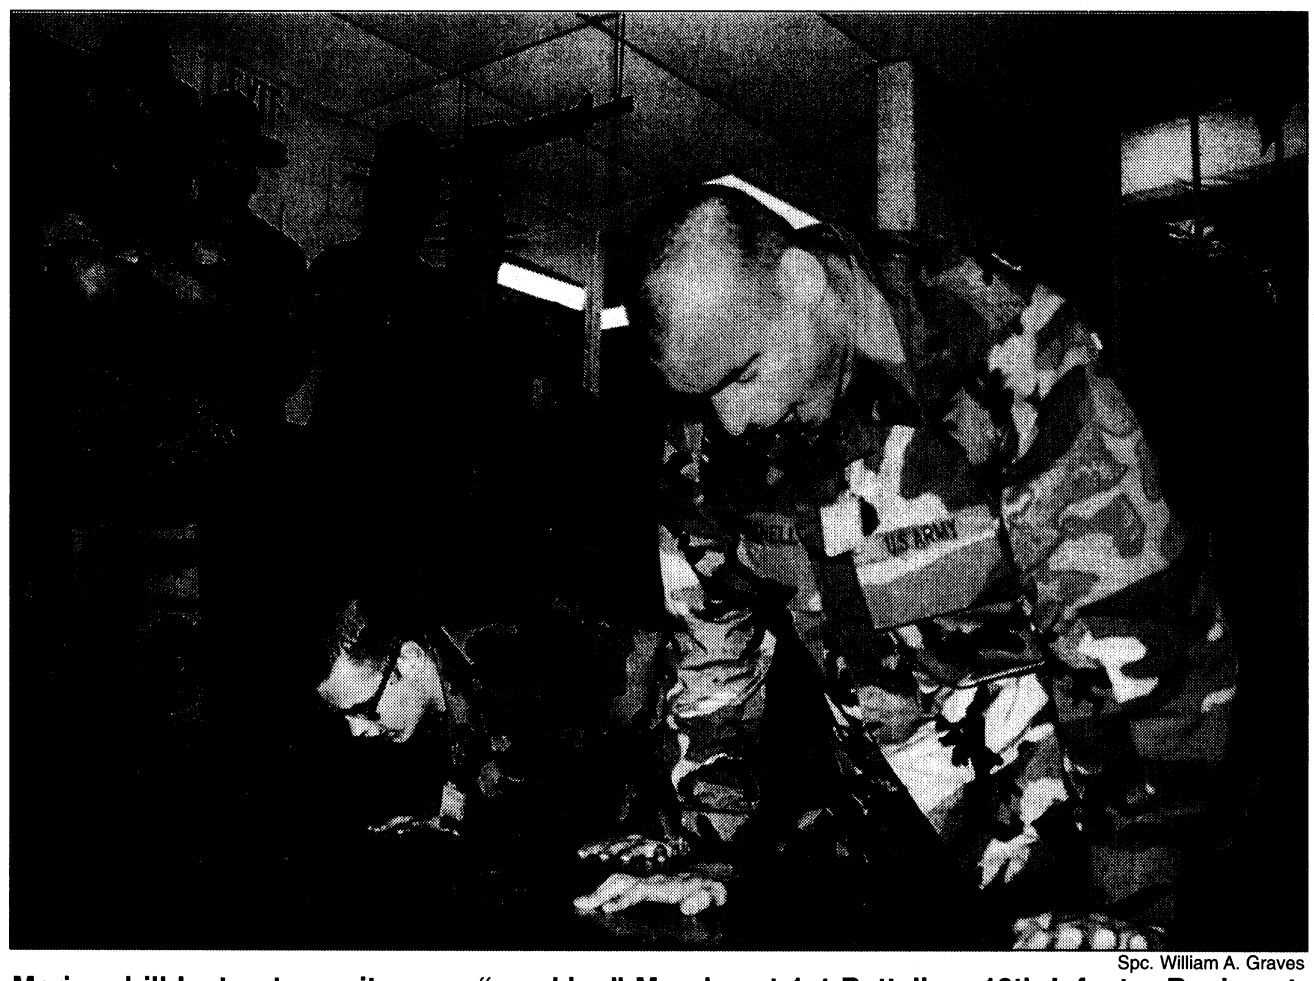
Marines and drill sergeants had plenty of time to bounce ideas off each other. Some of the differences they came across were:

• Marines call "smoking" a trainee Incentive Training.

• Marine drill instructors carry a Recruit Trainer Pocket Guide that tells them what they can and can not do, whereas drill sergeants can make trainees do 25 reps of a particular exercise every five minutes, said Staff Sgt. Alan Caldwell.

• Marines can make trainees do side straddle hops, stationary double time, push ups, arm rotations and mountain climbers only. The Army has many exercises from which to choose, Mims said.

• Drill sergeants call trainees privates whereas Marines call them recruits.



• Marines have three core values — honor, courage and commitment, and the Army has loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage.

• All Marines graduate a 12-week boot camp. Soldiers have nine weeks.

• Marines have a swim week. Soldiers do not.

• Marine barracks are older and quarters are tighter than Fort Benning's. Marines get foot lockers, not wall lockers like soldiers, as a result.

• The discipline level is totally different, Durham said. For example, Marine recruits have no unsupervised time. Soldiers do.

Spc. William A. Graves

Marine drill Instructors witness a "smoking" Monday at 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

• Marines qualify with their rifle in three positions: standing, sitting and kneeling. Soldiers quality in the prone and fighting positions.

• "We have a set training schedule from day one to day sixty-four," Caldwell said. "If the rifle range is on X date, then that's where we're going to be. It seems the Army has more latitude."

A few of the similarities between drill instructors and drill sergeants are:

• Both go through similar training phases. Each service's members learn the basics — uniform, history, drill etc.

• The infantryman's culminating training event, "The Bayonet", is similar to the Marines' "Crucible," Durham said.

"Drill sergeants take pride in what they do in making the best soldiers they can make," Mims said. "We make the best Marines."

Guard, Reserve may witness early promotions

Army extends board zone considerations

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Beginning this summer and continuing through March 2005, some National Guard and Army Reserve officers may be considered for promotion a year earlier than they anticipated.

The Army has extended an adjusted promotion board zone of consideration program first announced in August 1999. Promotion board zones of consideration will expand from a year to 13 months for several years, officials said, in order to comply with law.

First lieutenants and captains with dates of rank that now fall between May 17 and Aug. 31 may be affected by the incremental zone expansions, officials said.

Those majors and lieutenant colonels who have a date of rank of Jan. 2 through March 31 may also be affected by this special program.

"The intent is to actually promote people at their max time-in-grade," said Maj. Tom Fowler of the Directorate of Military Personnel Management.

The Reserve Officer Personnel Management Act, known as ROPMA, requires officers selected for promotion on their first consideration to be pinned before reaching their maximum time-in-grade, he said.

He explained that in the past, some promotion lists received final approval after a number of officers recommended on their first consideration had already passed their maximum time-in-grade.

To address that problem, officials said zones of consideration will be adjusted incrementally over the next few years.

The first boards with an expanded zone of consideration will convene at the end of May, Fowler said.

They will be the lieutenant colonel and colonel promotion boards for Army Medical Department, or AMEDD, officers.

The last boards to have expanded zones for promotion to lieutenant colonel and colonel will convene in October 2003, and in early 2005 for boards considering officers for promotion to captain and major. Army Promotion List, or APL, AMEDD, and Chaplain mandatory boards will use the same first-time zones of consideration at each grade level.

"If you're being thrust into the zone early, you need to have your military and civilian education complete before your board convenes," Fowler said.

Some officers may need to start taking night courses, Fowler said, in order to complete their required education in time.

Fowler emphasized that officers who do not meet their military education requirements before their promotion boards convene will not be considered qualified and therefore not selected for promotion.

And he said officers who are twice not selected for promotion to the next higher grade could be separated.

On the other hand, Fowler said that once officers are selected for promotion, if they are already serving in the higher-grade position, they may be allowed to pin on their rank without waiting for their mandatory time in grade. May 2001 colonel AMEDD board will have a date of rank of Jan. 2, 1997 through March 31, 1998.

The colonel AMEDD board first-time considered date of rank is based on a separate unrelated action, Fowler said. He said all colonel boards will be as follows in 2002, 2003, and beyond:

In 2002 the first-time zone of consideration for lieutenant colonels will be Feb. 1, 1998 through Feb. 28, 1999.

In 2003 the first-time zone of consideration will be for lieutenant colonels with a date of rank of March 1, 1999 through March 31, 2000.

In 2004 and after the first-time zone of consideration for lieutenant colonels being considered for promotion to colonel will be April 1 through March 31 of the following year.

The provision of ROPMA that requires first lieutenants, captains, and majors to be promoted by their statutory maximum time-in-grade date is, Fowler said, in Title 10, United States Code, Section 14304(a)(1).

Drill sergeant volunteers for more time on trail

Enjoyment of work prompts soldier to stay

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

The recent announcement that some Fort Benning drill sergeants are being extended on the trail for another year, has caused been mixed reactions by those chosen.

Some soldiers were involuntary extended, but others volunteered to give the Army another year as a drill.

For Staff Sgt. Robert Penn, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, making the choice to volunteer was an easy one. He said as much time as being a drill sergeant takes, it's still a road on which he would like to stay.

Penn, who normally works as a military policeman, said there are several reasons he volunteered for the extra year on the trail.

"Being a drill sergeant, it's an outstanding experience to be hands-on with the initial entry soldiers as they come in. You have the role as mentor and molder, you get them first, so their impression of the military is going to be you," he said.

"It requires more than an outer appearance, you have to believe in yourself because each soldier is going to represent a different style of life as they come in.

"I teach my soldiers that even though they are all different, they are here to achieve the same goal — to complete basic training by helping one another along," Penn said.

Penn's commitment to training new recruits, and volunteering for an extension was a great surprise, said 1st Sgt. George Moore Jr.

"He is what a drill sergeant should be — a great mentor, dependable, he loves training soldiers and has great leadership skills," said Moore.

"We were honored that he wanted to extend because it shows us that the chain of command has unity and cohesion if someone wants to stay on."

Penn said he also enjoys the stability of his duties as a drill sergeant.

"Dealing with the everyday caseload here, you know pretty much what to expect, the training schedule is there," he said.

"The soldiers are there with their minds in neutral and you are doing the driving," Penn said.

"On the MP side of the house, every day there could be a family member with a problem, a teen-ager, soldiers — everyday it was something different. I worked 12-hour shifts, but it was sometimes up to 14 to 16 hours," he said.

Penn, who arrived at Fort Benning in 1997, said the responsibility of being a drill sergeant does have its drawbacks, but also its rewards.

He said one drawback is sometimes working 18-hour days.

"You normally don't get home until about 9:30 p.m. That means that my kids are asleep when I leave and again when I come home," he explained.

"But I'm lucky being here because in the past, I was deployed to Bosnia for a year. With me coming in late, at least they know where I am, and I'm there to give them a kiss on the cheek at night," Penn added.

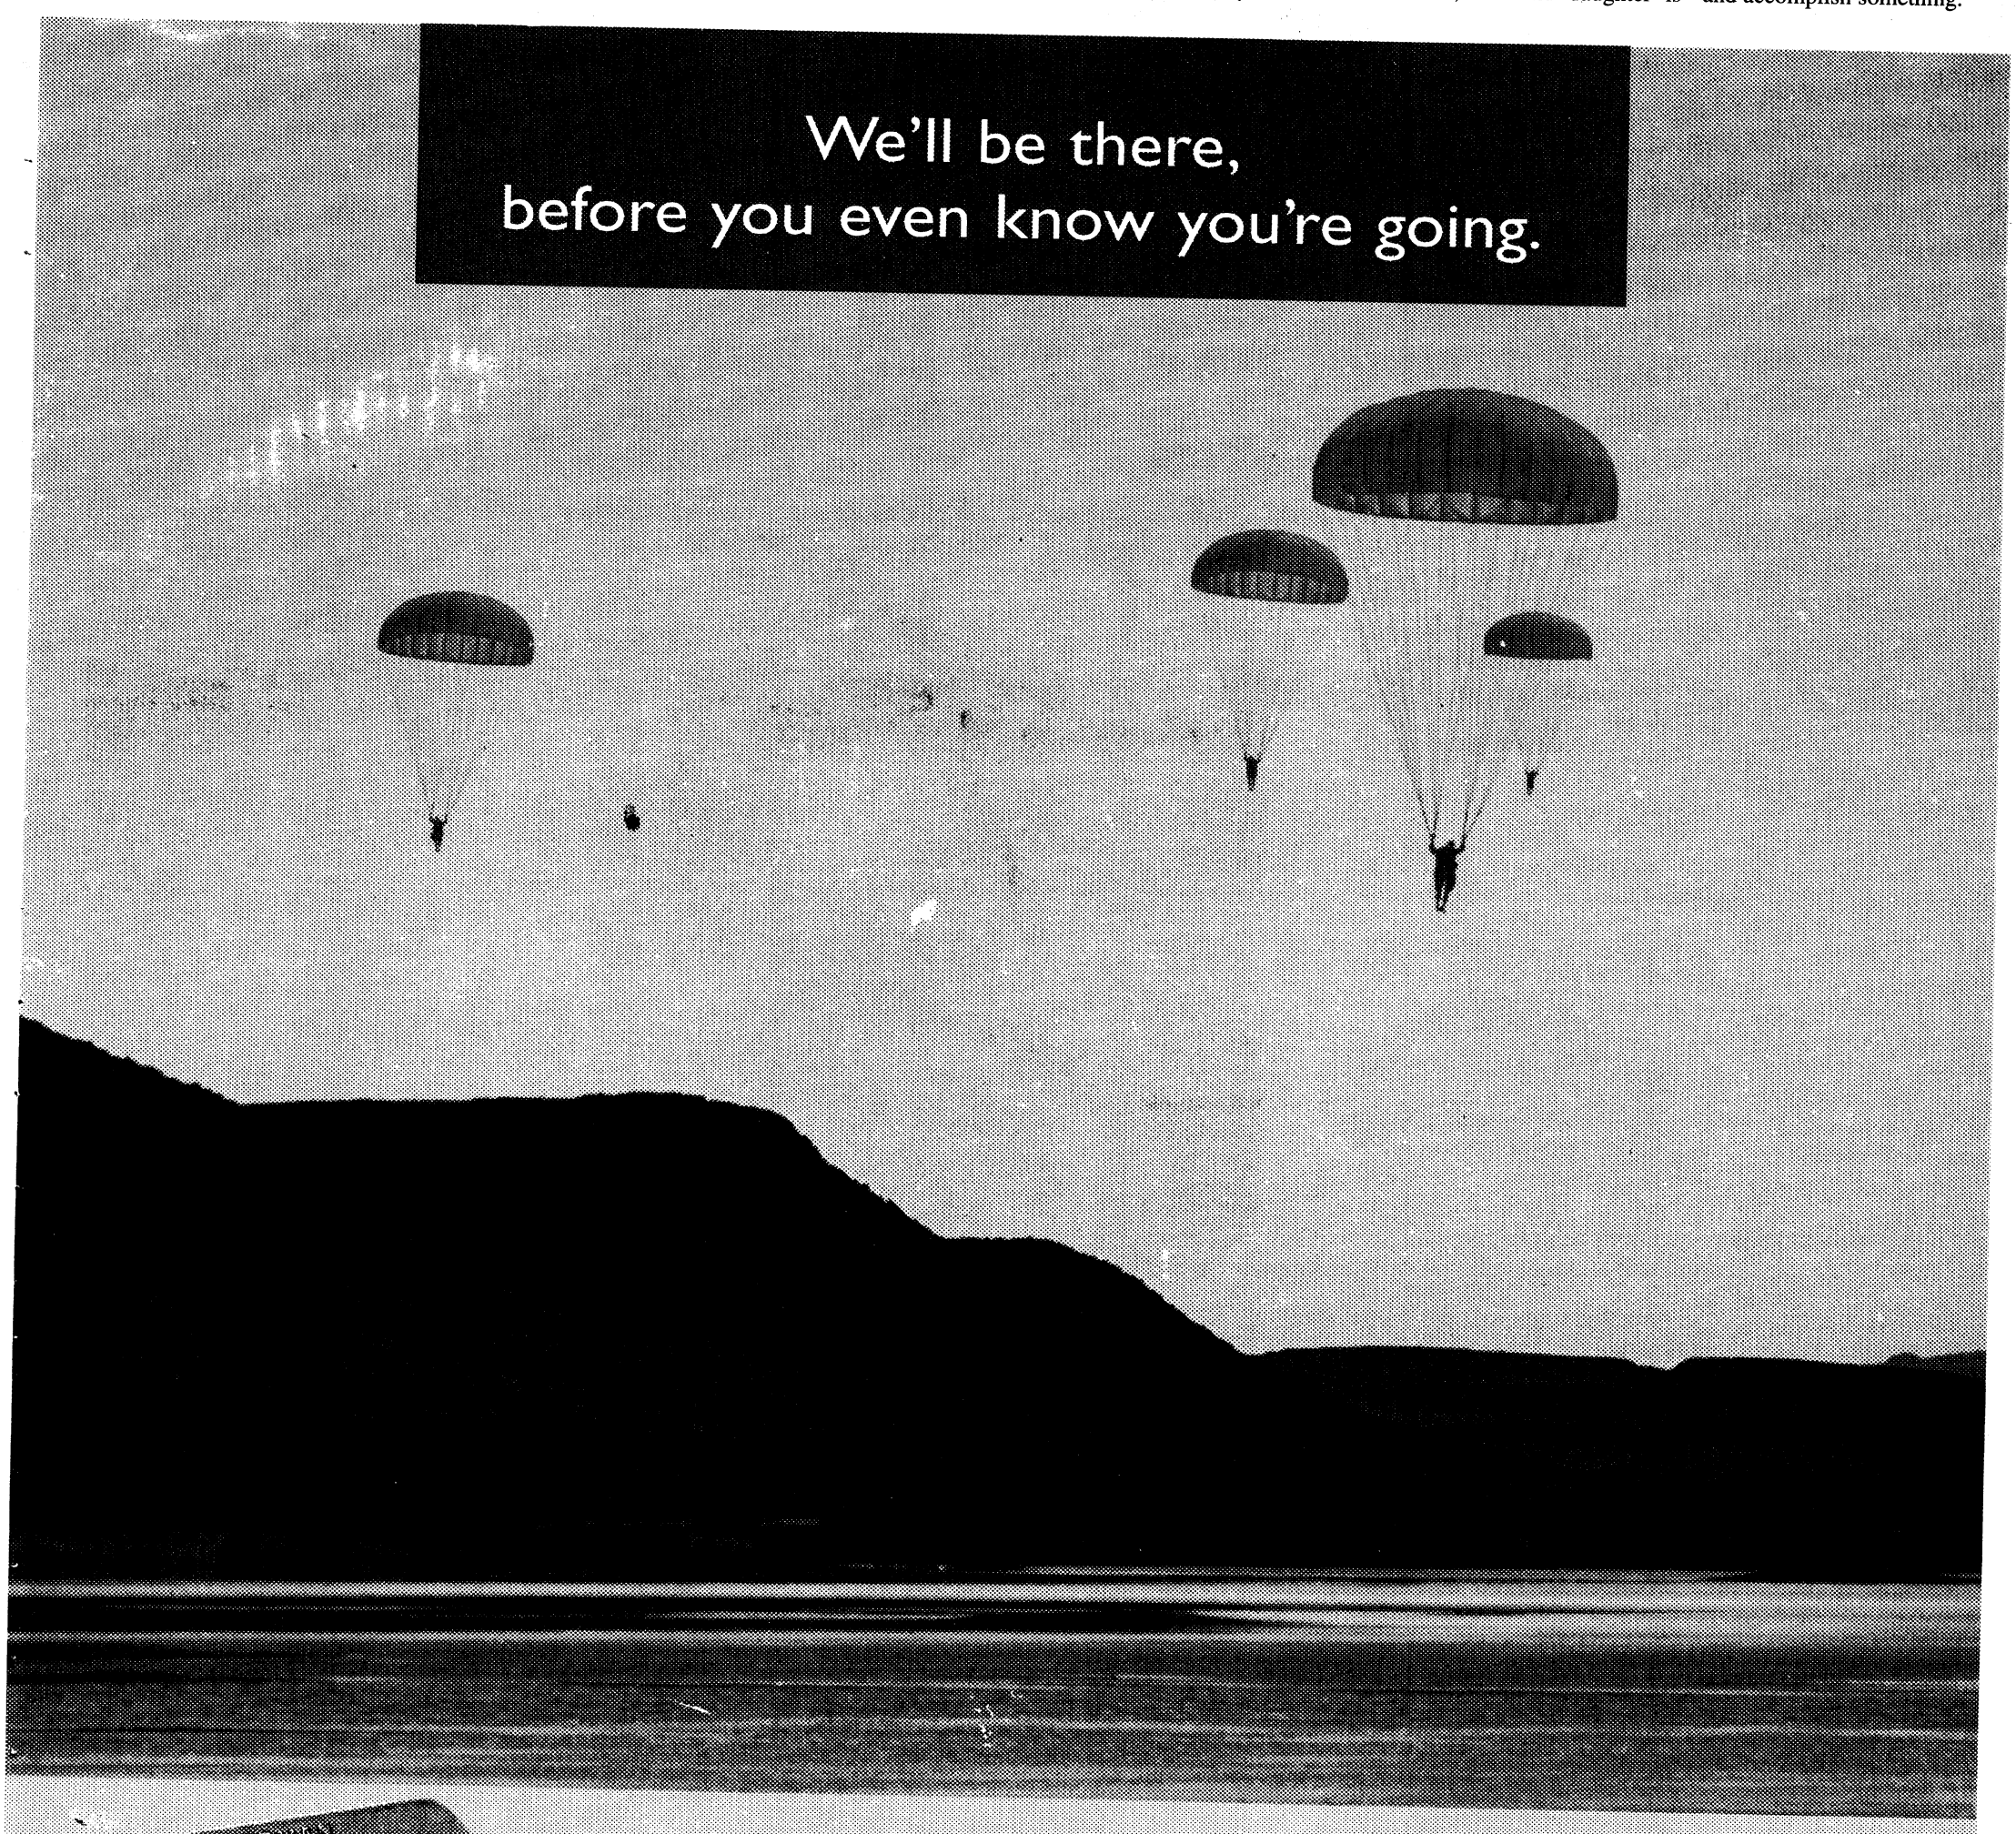
"At least this way I know my family will still be seeing me for another year. I know I'll be home each night," he said.

"When you've got a good thing within a job, sometimes you have to sacrifice something — I'm sacrificing those long hours away from the family."

Penn's wife, Melody, said she understands her husband's decision to do another year.

"When he first started as a drill sergeant, I thought it would be really, really hard to have time together because you hear stories from other wives about how much they are away. But it's been OK because they have their days on different shifts," she said. "He may not get home until after 8 p.m., but at least it's before our son goes to bed. We see more of each other now than when he was working as an MP.

"In the 15 years we have been married, we have learned to appreciate the time we have together," she said.



Penn said the time away from his wife, son and daughter is made up for in satisfaction with his work.

"I like the job. You have to enjoy what you are doing," said Penn. "It's like getting a brand new baby — in the first few weeks they are developing. Seeing the soldiers change and meeting their family members at graduation, it's a rewarding feeling to see them be successful and accomplish something."

Counselors offer deployment club

Deployments less puzzling with program

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

What's a 10-letter word for lonely? Stressed? Afraid? Sad and confused?

Just ask 8-year-old Jasmine Allen.

"D-e-p-l-o-y-m-e-n-t," the Dexter Elementary third-grader said. "It means my dad goes overseas for a long time and he's not here to play with me."

A four-time veteran of deployment, Jasmine's a member of the Dexter "Deployment Club," sponsored by Bammie Cofield, school counselor, and designed to make deployment less puzzling and less stressful for children.

"They know dad or mom's in the Army, and they often have to go away for weeks or months at a time, but they don't always understand why," Cofield said. "Especially in peacetime, they don't understand what role their parents play 'over there.' It helps to be able to talk about it and to be with other kids who are going through the same thing."

Cofield conceived the idea of an organized forum for the children of deployed soldiers during Desert Storm.

Since then, similar programs have been instituted at other post schools, including Stowers Elementary, where counselors Sherry Dignan and Trish Coughlin meet with more than 30 "members" on a weekly basis.

"We feel that when a parent is away for an extended period of time, these children feel a lack, something missing," Dignan said. "Even if they have another caring, supportive parent at home, that parent is having to deal with the stress and anxiety as well, so we try to help bridge that gap during the separation."

The counselor and club members sign a contract of confidentiality, so each child feels free to talk about his emotions. Members' pictures are posted on a "deployment wall," with a message to the absent parent and his or her temporary duty station, and they meet with other students their age to discuss the issues they face during separation.

They also color and create books to present to the absent parent upon his return.

Students typically attend meetings when the deployment begins, but Dignan urges parents to prepare children for their deployment as early as possible.

"Sit down and talk about where dad's going, how long he'll be away, what he'll be doing there and if he'll be home to visit during that time," she

Principals man hot line

Toll-free number gives parents access to education answers

Bridgett Siter

Stowers Elementary School principal Glenn Hughes will team up with more than 150 principals and psychologists from across the country to answer parents' questions about education during the National Association of Elementary School Principals annual convention in San Diego, Calif., April 8 - 10.

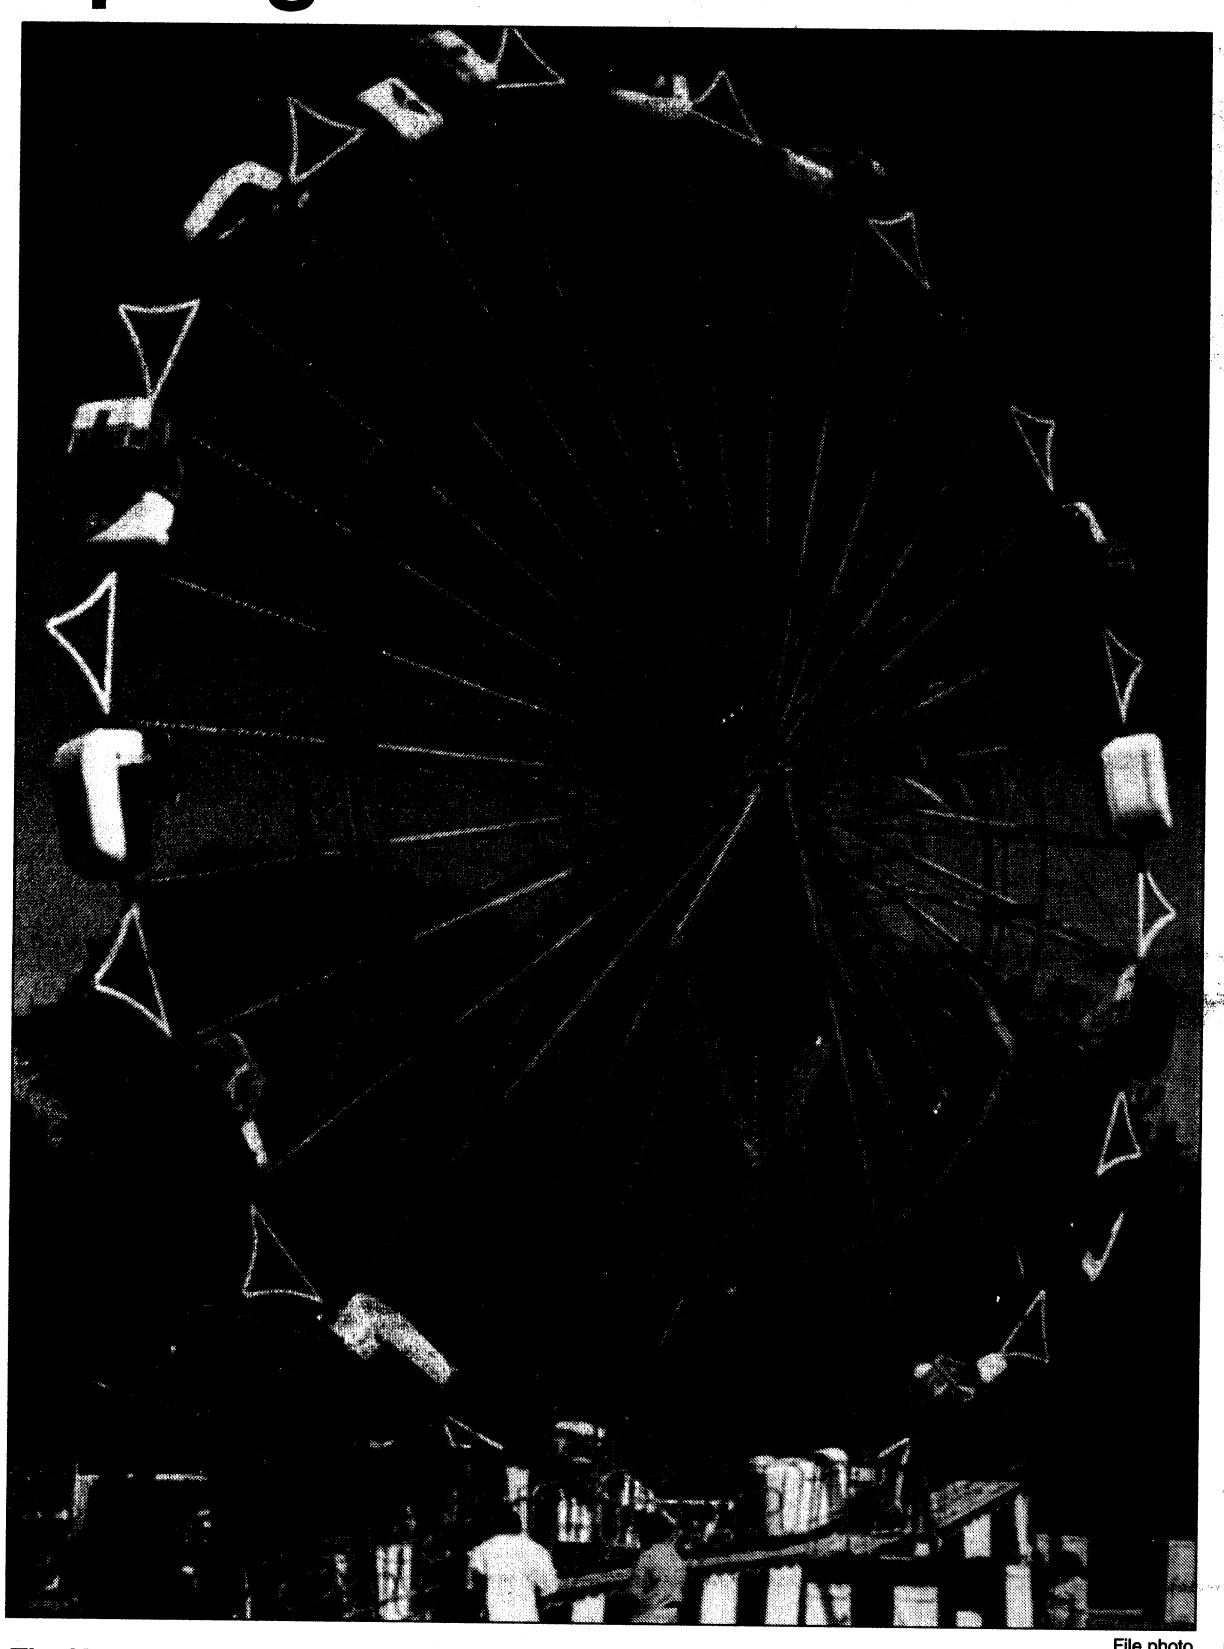
The 12th annual national principals' hot line — On Call For Kids, — sponsored by the NAESP, Family Circle and the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association, is designed to give parents, teachers and students a national forum for voicing concerns or seeking answers to their questions about education.

The toll-free hot line was created to promote communication between schools and families.

Over the years, thousands of parents have sought answers to their questions about learning disabilities, discipline, safety, testing, educational standards, teaching methods and relocation.

Hughes said his experience as a principal within the Department of Defense Education Activity brings a unique perspective to the panel of telephone operators.

"The Department of Defense schools and public schools are similar in many ways. The challenge of relocation is not unique to our system, and it's my responsibility to make the transition period as easy and productive as possible," he said. "I hope my experience will help parents and students nationwide who have questions pertaining to relocation."



Hughes said the lines will be open to answer any questions parents come up with.

"You can ask absolutely anything in complete confidence. We want to hear from anyone with a question about education or children, and we don't flinch at difficult questions," he said.

The hot line will be available April 8 from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m., April 9 from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., and April 10 from 7 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Spouses find jobs in area

Employment summit initiates action agenda

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 120 military spouses and civilian personnel specialists initiated an agenda last year to promote portable careers, remote training and telework for spouses.

The action agenda, which originated from the August 2000 Spouse Employment Summit in Phoenix, Ariz., will ultimately touch three Fort Benning offices. The Employment Readiness Program (formally Family Member Employment Assistance Program), Civilian Personnel Advisory Center and the Army Career Alumni Program are available to help a variety of local job seekers.

In fact, Fort Benning has more than 500 jobs listed on their Job Vacancy List this month, said Mark Mills, Acting Employment Readiness Program Manager. These jobs are throughout the tricity community.

"The next best U.S. Army post may have, in their best week, around 70 to 80 jobs," Mills said. "The job bank here has grown from 250 to 426 in just the last five years."

Portable careers are becoming more popular, Mills said. Jobs within the medical field are portable, prompting many spouses to have their licenses transferred from their prior place of employment. Teachers and child-care providers are also placed in this group.

"The hospital is in great need of nursing and medical staff. They're almost on constant recruitment," said Stacey Salo, personnel management specialist. "DoD schools are another big employer."

Jobs within the business field are also more transferable.

"Large retail stores, such as Wal-Mart and Lowe's, are portable because of their seven-year tenure," Mills said. "Spouses in retail find that many of them can transfer their jobs from store to store."

The federal government intends to have 25 percent of its workforce telecommuting within five years, under a stipulation of the fiscal 2000 Appropriations Act.

Requirements for employment have changed the in the last several years. The biggest shift, explained Mills, is in the requirement for advanced education past high school.

"This is the single most significant factor since many spouses marry right out of high school and do not have the time

One in three Americans will get cancer in his lifetime. Slightly more than half will survive.

Believing that survival rate can be increased through more research and greater community awareness, the American Cancer Society hosts the annual Relay For Life nationwide to raise funds for research and increase community awareness.

Last year's event netted more than $150 million for the American Cancer Society.

The Columbus and Fort Benning communities will team up for this year's event at Kinnett Stadium in Columbus, from 12 p.m. May 19 until 7 a.m. May 20.

"This is the signature fundraising event for the American Cancer Society," said Steve Phillips, general chairperson for the local event. "Nationally it constitutes just over 30 percent of the contributions the they receive each year."

The relay is a noncompetitive fund-raiser. Teams of 10 to 15 volunteers, including patients, medical support staff, civic organizations and churches, take turns walking or running on the stadium track throughout the event. The first lap is led by cancer survivors.

"This event is really for the survivors," Phillips said. "It's a celebration of their lives. We're hoping to have at least 400 survivors at the

Just one year ago Katie Turner was making her dreams come true. One month shy of her 24th birthday, she was pursuing a master's degree in pediatric audiology at the University of Georgia in Athens.

On April 21, Katie's life was cut short, just six days after being diagnosed with Burkitts Lymphoma, a cancer so rare it strikes less than 100 people in the U.S. each year.

But Linda and Dave Turner refused to allow cancer to destroy their daughter's dream of reaching out to disabled children.

They established the Katie Elizabeth Turner Endowment to provide financial support for families of infants and children who need hearing aids and other assistive devices.

"Cancer might have taken our sister from us, but we're not going to let it destroy her dreams," said Katie's sister, Kristen. "This endowment will ensure her wishes are fulfilled."

Dave Turner retired from the Army in 1993, and his wife, Linda, teaches at Dexter Elementary, where the school-sponsored K Club is hosting a "take-out dinner" fund-raiser, March 30, to support the Katie Elizabeth Turner Endowment.

Huckleberry's of Pine Mountain will be serving barbecue chicken, baked beans, coleslaw and bread, from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. Advance-sell tickets are $6 per plate and $7 at the door.

Tickets are available at the school, or call 545-3424.

Club sponsor Cy Dietrick said the K Club hopes to raise at least $1,000.

"The K Club is about the kids showing kindness," Dietrick said. "And what better way to show kindness, unselfishly, then to reach out to this family and children who suffer from hearing disabilities and enjoy a good meal in the process? Everyone benefits."

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A family-support survey will be mailed in early April to 20,000 Army spouses selected at random, researchers said.

The Survey of Army Families IV will give the spouses a chance to paint a day-to-day picture of Army family life from their perspective.

Researchers said they want to capture that knowledge so senior leaders can use it to improve family support.

"We want spouses to tell us what it's like to walk a mile in their shoes out there wherever they are," said Dr. Richard Fafara, senior research analyst at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center. "They know best what affects their lives and we value their comments."

The 104 questions in this year's survey ask spouses to uncover family concerns and needs.

From housing, relocation and childcare, to youth services and other issues that impact Army families, the goal of the survey is to paint a picture of emerging trends.

"These 20,000 spouses who respond are really catalysts for change," said Fafara. "Responses to the first three surveys, conducted in 1987, 1991 and 1995, led to changes that benefit today's spouses and family members. Programs such as spouse employment, education, family readiness groups, childcare and youth services all look different today, thanks to input from spouses in those surveys."

For example, Army Community Service Employment Readiness Programs assist spouses by matching skills and experiences with suitable jobs.

Spouses who volunteer learn how to document that volunteer time as work experience, enabling them to build a history of leadership experience, skills and growth, Fafara said.

An outgrowth of the 1991 survey, conducted after Operation Desert Storm, resulted in the establishment of Army Family Team Building. Thousands of family members have attended AFTB classes and have a clearer understanding of Army culture and traditions as well as the many programs, services, and benefits available to them.

"The knowledge they've gained from AFTB helps them cope better with daily stresses of military life, especially those surrounding deployment," added Fafara.

"If there are past participants whose friends or neighbors receive a survey, I hope they encourage the recipients to take their selection seriously and spend the 30-45 minutes it takes to answer the questions," said Fafara.

Heads-up notices were mailed to selected participants in mid-March.

The survey packets include postage-paid return envelopes, and officials encourage all the spouses to fill out and return the questionnaire as soon as possible.

or the monetary level to support a family and education at the same time," Mills said.

Local companies often list their jobs on Fort Benning first for a variety of reasons.

In addition to international business experience, spouses often bring with them talents that set them apart from other applicants.

"Where else are you going to possibly find Mandarin Chinese, French Canadian, Portuguese speaking employees?" Mills said.

There are other opportunities for military spouses.

The Military Spouse Preference program was one of several initiatives undertaken to retain military members and enhance the well being of families.

The program provides priority in the employment selection process for military spouses who relocate.

"A majority of spouses are aware of our program. If not, they talk to each other," said Joann Berry, personnel assistant. "It would be a lot harder for them to find jobs if they did not have a program like this."

Berry assists spouses looking to use the preference program.

While some users are newcomers, many have previously used the system.

The spouses preference program may be used for open positions in DoD. While it doesn't guarantee employment, applicants who are qualified have a better chance of being awarded the job.

Salo recommends participating in the spouse orientation briefing; visiting the employment readiness center; and using the Job Line at 545-7084.

There are also great resources on the web, Salo said. More than 110 jobs are currently listed in the state of Georgia through the www.cpol.army.mil Web site.

"For army spouses, use the Internet to find jobs not only where you are, but where you are going. You can search in advance," said Salo.

The Fort Benning offices also provide information on jobs and classes off-post.

AFLAC, Total Systems, and educational opportunities with Troy State University or Columbus State University are just a few of the opportunities available through the local community, Salo said.

"Check out everything that is available and stay flexible. Enjoy your time here; there are great opportunities in this area," Salo said.

DoD currently offers the DoD Job Search at http://dod.jobsearch.org and the One-Stop Jobs at http://dticaw.dtic.mil/mapsite/onestop.html to help spouses find jobs.

Another Web site to follow is www.usajobs.opm.gov.

Club: Eases deployment, transition woes for students

said. "It's a good idea to post a map on the wall and mark exactly where he'll be. Visual aids are something concrete a child can grasp."

Coughlin recommended a family calendar to "count down dad's return and mark important milestones along the way."

"Calendars are a great idea, especially since younger students can't conceptualize time. They can't understand it in their head, but they can see it on a calendar," Coughlin said. "And when dad or mom returns, reviewing it together is a good way to catch up on important events that have taken place during the separation."

Dignan suggested parents schedule a family meeting before the deployment begins to discuss temporary role changes and the redistribution of responsibilities.

"It's good for everyone to be involved in this. Someone's got to take on the chores dad usually does. How will they be divided? How can everyone work together to make it a smooth transition and lighten the load for mom?" Dignan said. "There's a lot of pressure on everyone at this time, so just remember that kids don't need the additional pressure of feeling like they're expected to fill mom's or dad's shoes. They shouldn't feel like they have to be 'the man of the house.'"

Cofield said parents of very young children might consider making a videotape or audiotape of themselves reading bedtime stories or singing lullabies, a simple way to add consistency to the child's life during the separation.

"And always write down any promises you make," she added. "Even if you promise to send a toy that you could get just as easily at Wal-Mart, a promise is a promise and that child won't forget it."

During the deployment, Dignan said children should be encouraged to write and e-mail often. They should be given a picture of the absent parent to keep in their backpack or beside their bed. And whenever possible, they should be allowed to talk to the absent parent on the telephone.

"Send pictures, report cards, schoolwork and awards," she said. "Keep dad involved in their lives as much as possible, and bring dad back into the home by e-mail and letters and telephone calls. It's especially important that some of these letters and e-mails are actually addressed to the child, not just to mom. It lets them know dad hasn't forgotten them."

Shortly before their parents return, Deployment Club members begin preparing for the transition. Dignan said they often share their excitement and their apprehension with a counselor.

"They don't always know what happens next. Often they're moving as soon as dad returns, so they're looking forward to and dreading his return at the same time," she said.

When an absent parent returns, Cofield said children, like adults, usually experience a short "honeymoon stage," often followed by a transition period fraught with frustration.

"We still make ourselves available to these students after the deployment is over, because that's sometimes the most difficult part," Cofield said. "After the initial excitement of having dad home, there's sometimes a power struggle as everyone tries adjust to dad's role in the family again. Usually the family falls into a comfortable routine when he's away, and it's not always easy to accept his authority again."

The key to surviving deployment, Cofield and Dignan agree, is communication, before during and after. The Deployment Clubs offer students a chance to communicate their concerns and fears with their counselors and peers, a fact that Jasmine said makes deployment less stressful.

"He's been gone a lot, so I'm getting good at it now, but the first time was the worst. I couldn't remember what his voice sounded like." she said. "But the club helps a lot. It's just nice to talk to someone about it."

opening of this event."

Each participant pays a $10 registration fee and is asked to raise at least $100 in pledges to support the American Cancer Society's programs of research, cancer control and patient services.

Anyone interested in participating, should call the Columbus chapter of the American Red Cross at 324-5614.

Cancer survivors are asked to identify themselves as such. They will receive a T-shirt and access to the hospitality tent.

Phillips said the highlight of the event is a luminary ceremony that will take place about 9 p.m. Anyone can purchase a luminary in honor of a survivor or in memory of a cancer victim. The luminaries will line the stadium track during the event. Luminaries can be purchased in advance for $10, by calling the American Cancer Society at 324-5614.

Tricare announces change

Patients to get individual provider later this year

Sgt. 1st Class Kathleen Rhem
American Forces Press Service

ARLINGTON, Va. — Gone are the days when you went to a military treatment facility and saw whoever was available. By June, most Tricare Prime enrollees should know their doctor by name.

Tricare policy used to be to assign patients to a group of primary care providers. Now, patients are being assigned to an individual to manage their healthcare, said Army Dr. (Lt. Col.) Scott Goodrich, a project officer at the Tricare Management Activity here.

"Previously, people would be looking for physicians to call their own. They'd request the same physician each visit," he said. But the system wasn't set up to ensure that would happen.

Goodrich, a family practitioner himself, said people have often asked him to be "their doctor." He said he'd always agree, but outdated computer systems and inadequate infrastructure sometimes kept patients from getting appointments with him.

"I've never been able to guarantee that promise could be kept," he said. "This is something patients always wanted, but we're just now able to deliver."

Managers in the various Tricare regions are currently assigning patients to specific providers, Goodrich said, noting that several regions are already finished. Many beneficiaries have already been notified by mail who their assigned provider is, he said.

The initial migration from the group system to by-name assignments should be complete by June, he said. After that, Tricare's ideal would be that 100 percent of newly assigned patients receive a provider-by-name notification all the time

Goodrich asked for patience, though — beneficiaries should expect localized glitches. Until the migration is done, those who want to know their assigned providers should contact their local clinic staff or appointment clerk, he said.

"This is a huge burden on medical treatment facilities, but many have been very good about notifying patients all the same," he said. They think the program's as good for them as for beneficiaries, he added.

"They don't need to spend valuable patient-provider time collecting your history every time you come in for a visit," Goodrich said. "That time can be used to focus on other things, like prevention and wellness." He said healthcare providers also appreciate "not being surprised by a new batch of patients every single day."

Although the mobile nature of military life prevents the cradle-to-grave care seen in some civilian communities, Goodrich said, Tricare's shift goes a long way toward improving the healthcare benefit.

"We can still provide a whole lot more continuity than we've been providing in the past," he said.

Patients shouldn't be too surprised if their primary care manager isn't a doctor. Many facilities use advanced practice nurses — nurse midwives and licensed nurse practitioners — and physician assistants in this capacity for beneficiaries with straightforward medical needs.

Beneficiaries needn't be concerned about getting "stuck" with a provider they're uncomfortable with, though. They can choose who their primary care manager will be or request a change at any point, Goodrich said.

"The only possible reasons we wouldn't honor your choice are if you request a physician who's already full up," he said, "or if you request one who really can't fulfill your medical needs. By that, I mean you are requesting someone who can take care of general types of problems but you have a complicated disease. We'd have to talk to you about that because it's not in your best interest."

He also said unit commanders might have some say in the process for active duty patients. For instance, some commanders may require everyone on flight status in their units be treated by a flight surgeon, he said.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet corrospondent

It is no big surprise that March has been an extremely rainy month. This has been a disappointment to eager gardeners and residents.

The unpredictability of the weather is a factor that gardeners must expect. Although this region is approaching the last expected frost date, that statistic doesn't always hold true. If the unexpected surge of rains is an indication of an unexpected frost, gardeners can be prepared.

By thoroughly amending the soil before planting, gardeners eliminate the problems that are often incurred by an abundance of rain. The incorporation of organic matter into the soil allows the soil to drain water away from the roots of a plant.

Though we are now officially into spring, residents need to be prepared and plan ahead should a frost threaten this area. One way is by hesitating to plant seedlings or sow the seeds of tender annuals. This would include those popular annuals such as marigolds, cosmos, celosia, petunias and generally all vine annuals.

Remember, if seeds are exposed to frost the internal structure of the seed will be damaged. If the seed package does not allow for sowing before the frost date, do not take the chance of destroying the viability of the seed. Most perennials will withstand a frost if the plant is large enough.

If the focus is on vegetables, gardeners should definitely consider covering them if a frost is expected. Crops such as bush and pole beans are extremely sensitive to frost.

This same warning can be used concerning tomatoes, peppers and eggplants as well.

By covering the plants with a double sheet of newspaper or a heavy gauge plastic the risk of frost damage is reduced. These methods prevent the frost form settling on tender plants.

Some plants such as strawberries are already setting fruit. The highest risk of frost damage is borne by the fruit itself. The process of covering or bringing indoors is the best chance for survival of the fruit.

Containers should be moved indoors if possible when a frost is threatening or when excessive rain is likely. Containers can often lose a good quantity of soil when the pot is flooded. And moving the containers indoors at night will minimize the exposure of the plant to cool temperatures.

Even with all these tried and proven methods, gardeners should not expect vigorous growth in their gardens until the temperatures begin to stabilize and this area begins to receive ample uninterrupted amounts of sunshine.

With the absence of sunshine, plants lack energy for growth. Until temperatures are stable, the soil will not be able to maintain a good growing temperature.

The hot days and drought may be around the corner and we will be wishing we had this rain and cool weather, so be patient residents and keeping those garden dreams alive.

ask the judge

Michael Mejia
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I just got my credit card bill for the month of January and I found two errors. First, my account was debited for a laptop computer for $2,000 which I never purchased, and my December's payment of $150 was not credited to my account. What should I do? What are my rights under the Fair Credit Billing Act?

A: The Fair Credit Billing Act is a federal consumer protection law that provides for resolving errors on your credit account. This law applies only to purchases on "open end" credit accounts (for example, MasterCard, Visa) or a store credit card. This law does not cover installment contracts — loans or extension of credit on a fixed schedule. Typically, such contracts are for the purchase of an automobile or furniture.

The FCBA covers such errors as any unauthorized charge; charges that list the wrong date or amount; charges for goods and services you did not accept or were not delivered as agreed, math errors; failure to post payments and other credits, such as returns; failure to send bills to your current address — provided you supply a change of address at least 20 days before the billing period ends; and charges for which you ask for an explanation, or written proof of purchase along with a claimed error or request for clarification.

If you find any such error, send a written letter to the address for billing inquiries, explaining the error within 60 days. You should send the letter via certified mail, return receipt requested, so you have proof of what the creditor received.

Also, make sure you save copies of all correspondence and support documents you send. The creditor must acknowledge your letter within 30 days and then resolve your dispute within two billing cycles, usually 60 days.

In the interim, you may withhold payment on the disputed error (and any related charges), during the investigation. However, you still must pay for any other legitimate charges.

The creditor may not pursue any collection actions against you. The creditor may apply the disputed amount against your credit limit, though. The creditor also may not report to you any major credit reporting agency as far as being delinquent with payment. If the creditor investigates and determines that you were right, then the creditor will explain to you, in writing, the corrections and remove all finance charges, late fees or other charges related to the error.

On the other hand, if you were wrong and the bill is correct, you will be told promptly and in writing how much you owe and why. You can ask for any supporting documentation. You will owe the disputed amount plus any finance charges that accumulated while the amount was in dispute.

What happens if the creditor blows you off and you do not get a response within 60 days? Any creditor who fails to follow the FCBA may not collect the amount in dispute, or any related finance charges, up to $50, even if the bill turns out to be correct. This penalty also applies if a creditor threatens to report, or improperly reports, your failure to pay anyone during the dispute period.

Finally, you can sue any creditor who violates the FCBA. If you prevail, you can be awarded damages and twice the amount of any finance charge between $100 and $1,000, attorney's fees and court costs.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division and make an appointment to meet with a legal assistance attorney. The number is 545-3281. Call Friday mornings at 8 a.m. to make an appointment for the following week.

Faith student wins contest

Poster idea sends Bobo to next level

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Bobo

Faith Middle School student Leah Bobo is on her way to becoming an internationally recognized artist by winning a local competition.

The Columbus Lions Club, who sponsored the contest, honored the eighth-grader this week at their club meeting.

Her poster is among more than 325,000 entries submitted worldwide in the 13th annual Lions International Peace Poster Contest.

Her entry will represent Fort Benning in the next phase of the contest.

Bobo's poster will advance to round-two district competition in Atlanta, where her piece will compete against those from other local contests.

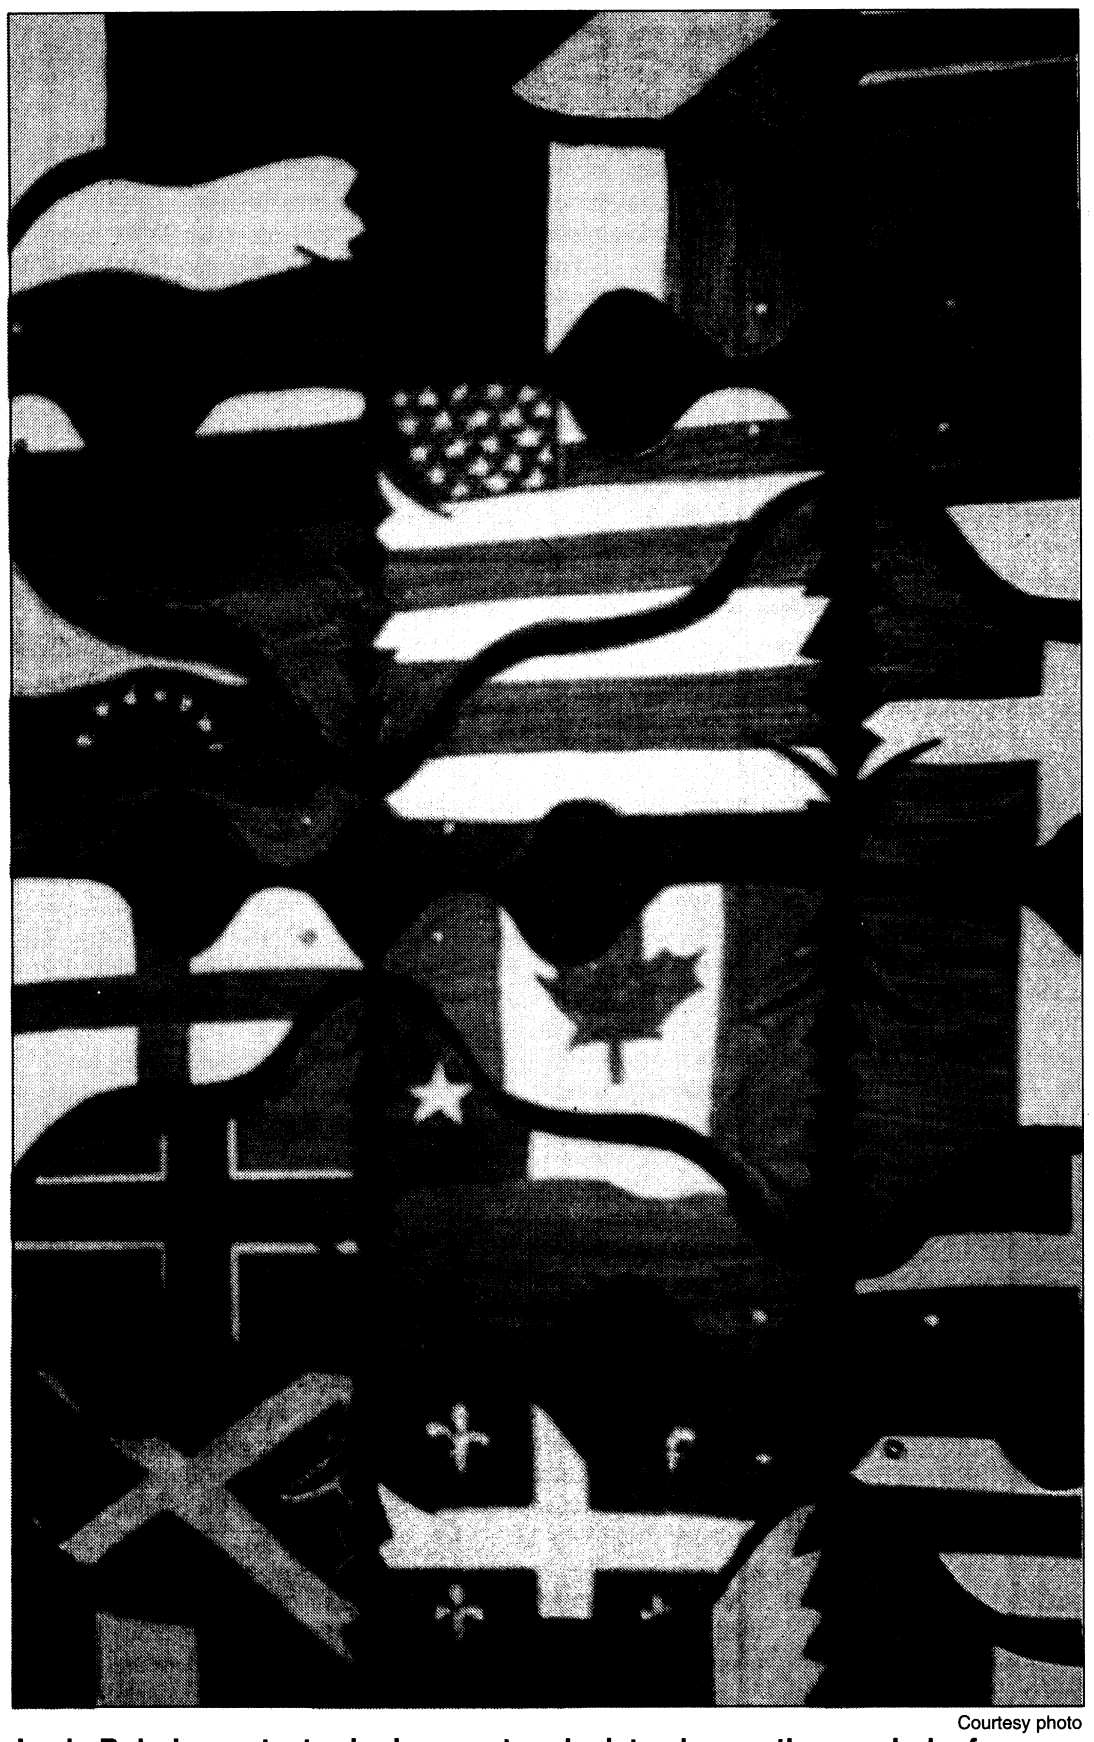
"When I heard I won, I thought it was a mistake. I thought a whole bunch of other posters were better than my own," Bobo said.

Columbus Lions Club President Michael Graydon said he was impressed by the amount of effort exhibited by Faith students.

"It's obvious that these young people have strong ideas of what peace means to them. The contest has shown us that seeing the world through a child's eyes can be an enlightening experience," Graydon said.

Bobo won a $100 savings bond from the Columbus Lions Club and a chance to win the grand prize of $2,500 cash and an all-expense paid trip for the winner and family to Indiana for the awards ceremony at the Lions Club International Convention in July 2001.

Twenty Faith Middle School eighth-grade students entered the contest, said Gloria Loar, Faith art teacher. Damaris Gutierrez, Ben Carter and Jesus Marmol also placed in the contest. This year, students were challenged to express their feelings about world peace and depict their version of "United in Peace."



"The first thing I thought of when starting the poster was a dove, because they are always associated with peace. Then I added the flags," Bobo said.

Her art teacher wasn't surprised when she heard Bobo won the local competition.

"She deserved to win," said Loar, who also won a Lions Club art contest years ago.

Rebecca Bobo said her house is full of her daughter's pictures, who has been drawing for years. This was the first time she's entered a contest like this, she said.

"We're cheering for Leah as her poster advances in the competition, and we hope that her vision will ultimately be shared with others around the world," Graydon said.

Burger King recalls toy

Army News Service

DALLAS — About 400,000 "Rattling, Paddling, Riverboat Toddler Toys" given out at Burger King stores are being recalled due to safety concerns.

The recall also applies to toys distributed at installation Burger King restaurants owned and operated by the Army and Air Force Exchange Service, according to AAFES officials.

The toy is a plastic boat with a paddle wheel. The recall was initiated over a concern that metal pins with plastic caps that attach the paddle wheel can come out and pose a choking hazard. The U.S. Product Safety Commission has stated that there have been no reported injuries connected to this toy.

AAFES Burger King customers are being instructed not to return the riverboat toddler toy to Burger King restaurants. Instead, a consumer hotline has been set up to receive consumer calls and to provide instructions on how to return the toy and receive a replacement toy.

The contact number, 800-661-9173, is printed on signs located inside the Burger King facility.

The recall is a voluntary action being made by Burger King Corporation and the Alcone Marketing Group.

Involvement in church key to 'belonging'

Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

I have observed a number of people over the years shopping for a church. Perhaps they did not yet belong to any congregation and wanted to begin attending services.

There were others who, for some reason or another, were dissatisfied with their current church and wanted to find another. Perhaps they came to disagree with some church doctrine, did not like the minister, the music or some aspect of the church's program.

I was recently approached by a lady who wanted to join a new denomination because she liked the worship services, which she found more entertaining than those in the church she had attended all of her life. She wanted my advice. When I gave that advice however, she was not at all happy with me.

What I told her was my experience as a clergyman of some 27 years had taught me you get out of church membership in proportion to what you put in. Indeed, you will never truly "belong" to any church, no matter how long you have been on the rolls, unless you get involved in some manner.

All too often today people approach church membership with a "commercial" attitude. They ask, "What can I get out of this church?" "What do they offer?" "How comfortable is the church building?" "Is the pastor a nice guy?"

While it is not wrong to ask these questions, we would be wise to keep in mind church membership is not only about taking, but also about giving. Indeed, it is precisely through giving we come into a true experience of church life.

Churches are not so much found, as made.

The fundamental religious relationship in the Judeo-Christian tradition is the "covenant." A "covenant" is a solemn agreement, a mutual exchange of persons. Marriage, for example, is a covenant. In marriage a man gives himself to his wife, and she to him. They no longer "own" themselves, for they have given themselves away.

We look to the covenants of the Old Testament in which God declared, "I will be your God, and you will be my people." It was God's intent that church membership be a covenant relationship.

Christians are bound through baptism to the body of Christ and the body of Christ to them (and Jews to God through the Old Testament covenant with Moses).

This covenant relationship is as deep as the bond of blood and family life.

People who take a commercial rather than covenantal approach toward church membership will seldom experience the spiritual depths of their faith.

chapel notes

Stations of the cross services — There will be services for the Stations of the Cross on Fridays during Lent, through March 30, at the Main Post Catholic Chapel at 5:30 p.m. The services will be followed by a soup and bread supper.

Classes available — Classes for premarriage and prebaptism for have been scheduled for the remainder of the year. Those individuals desiring to be married in the Catholic church, or to have a child baptized in the Catholic church during the remainder of the year should plan to attend one of these scheduled classes.

- Prebaptism, all classes are held at Custer Terrace Chapel from 1 to 3:30 p.m. April 29, June 24, Aug. 26, Oct. 28 and Dec. 16.
- Premarriage, all classes are at the Follow Me Golf Club from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday, May 27, Sept. 23 and Nov. 18.

All the classes will be complete one-session classes.

To register, call 545-5508 or send an e-mail to cathie.wampler@knology.net.

Behavior passed on by parents

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

We inherit more than just the genetic make-up of our ancestors, we also inherit their behavioral traits, mode of thinking and emotional predisposition. We can be the spitting image of one of our parents and a chip off the old block.

The maxims, "Like father like son; like mother, like daughter; and the fruit never falls far from the tree," all bear witness to this well known and accepted truth that our past influences our present.

The roles we accept in marriage are often based on the patterns we observed from our own parents. The way we argue is rooted in the communication patterns of our parents.

What comforts us and provides security to us is based on the model established by our parents. Whether we smoke, or drink alcohol or gamble are often pre-disposed by the behaviors of our parents.

The Bible tells us that the actions of our ancestors can influence us and our descendants up to three or four generations (Numbers 14:18).

The past does not determine the present. We can change the way we perceive, think and respond. Life is not predetermined by fate, but can be changed through our free will. We are not slaves to our past.

We can choose to be better (Joshua 24:15).

Do you want to change the direction of your life? Do you want to make your life better for you and your descendants?

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, can help. Call the center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Sluggers take to field Saturday

Post opens fields to Youth Service baseball games

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

After more than 10 years of planning and one year of construction, the Youth Services' Baseball Complex will open to young players tomorrow at 9 a.m.

A grand opening ceremony will take place before this year's baseball teams go onto the diamonds for the first games of the season.

Even though it has been a long process, having the field was definitely worth it, said Linda Laine, Youth Services director.

"We requested the field in 1990 because our existing fields were all very old. We had been using the same field since before I got here in 1978," she said.

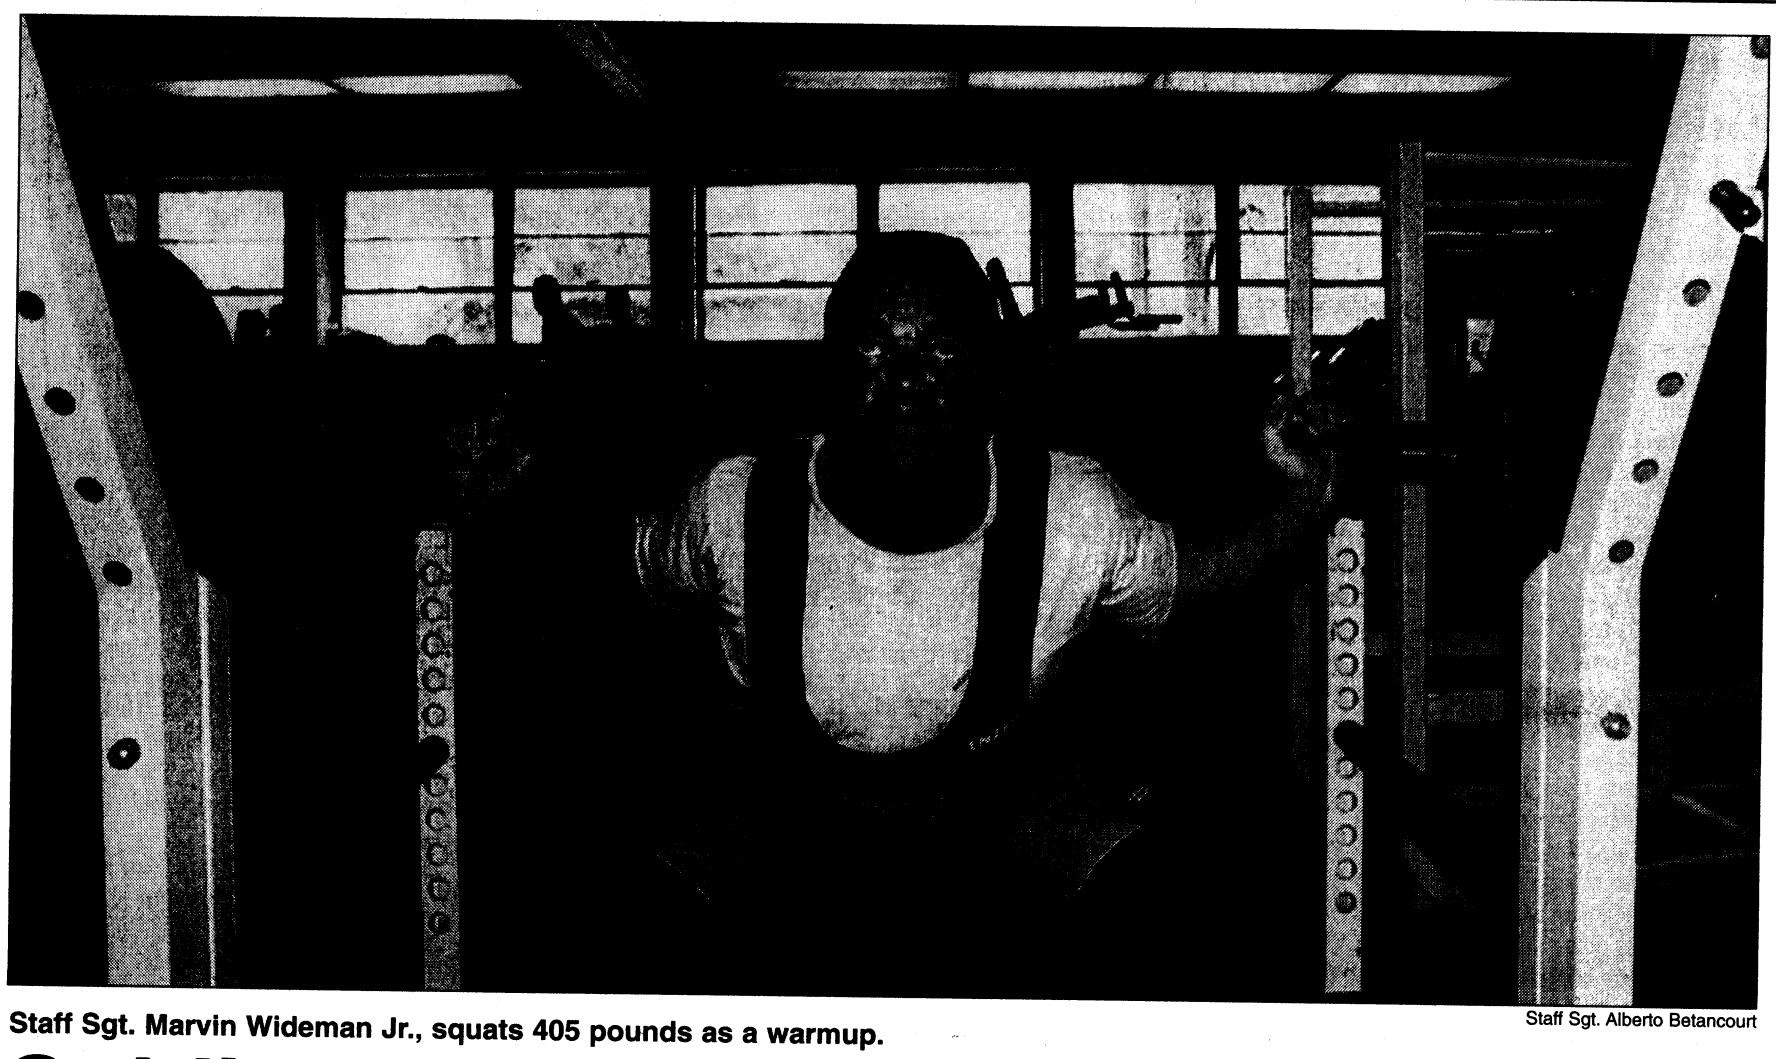
She said to refurbish the old fields would have cost nearly as much, so it made sense to build a new one.

"We originally planned to have a sports complex where we could play football, soccer and baseball all in one place. What we got was the baseball complex and we were really glad to be able to get that," Laine said.

"The new $2 million complex offers players four playing fields — two small and two large to accommodate T-ball and pitch games, a concession area and restrooms on the site.

Now that the work is complete and the games are about to begin at the complex, Laine said she hopes the convenience it provides spurs more families to come out to the games.

"With the new complex, we would love to see more people turn out for the games. They don't seem to do that anymore," she said. "When I first started over here in 1978, more parents would stay for the games, but now they have to drop off their kids and go to another field for another game."



Kyle Straits has two sons who play baseball in the YS league. She said she is looking forward to being able to take her boys to the new field.

"It definitely will be more convenient for me," she said. "Last year, I had to go back and forth from Dexter Field to Greene Field to go to all of my sons' games. A lot of times, the games were scheduled at the same time so I would spend 30 minutes at one game then 30 at the other."

Laine said after the opening tomorrow, the complex fields will be used only for games.

Practices will still take place on the fields across post to give the freshly laid grass an opportunity to take root completely.

For more information about the complex or YS sports programs, call the YS at 545-3070.

Soldier wins national championship

Infantryman picks up heavy load, weight lifting title

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

When someone said, "dynamite comes in small packages" they must've had Staff Sgt. Marvin Wideman Jr. in mind.

Nicknamed "fireplug" because of his short stature, the B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment soldier has blown up the power-lifting scene.

Already holding four national power-lifting titles and two international titles, Wideman combined a total of 1,190 pounds in the squat, bench press and dead lift during the USA Power Lifting Military National Championship held in Killeen, Texas, March 3, adding one more title to his belt.

"I didn't quite meet my goals during this competition," he said. "I wanted to lift for a combined total of 1,260 pounds or more. But, I'm content with the results."

What the 4-foot, 11-inch tall Javelin instructor and writer meant was, he didn't squat his anticipated 500 pounds; dead lift 500 pounds and bench press 260 pounds — a feat unrealistic to most but not to Wideman.

Meanwhile, on Sunday, inside Briant Wells Field House's weight room, bodybuilders toned their bodies and Wideman prepared for upcoming competitions.

Wearing headphones and a tight black squatting suit, he glared at the shiny silver plates adding up to 400 pounds equally distributed on each end of the solid steel bar. Hitting himself in the forehead once before wrapping each knee, Wideman tightened his power lifting belt and stood in front of the bar. Suddenly, the bodybuilders no longer tuned their bodies — all eyes were on "fireplug."

"This is the rush I love," he said. "People look at me and can't believe I can lift this amount of weight. But, I train like the Army — train like we fight. I'm at war with my competitor and I'm there to win."

The Hilton Head, S.C., native stumbled upon power lifting in 1990 while serving as a sheriff deputy with Gwinnett County, Ga.

He said he wanted to weight lift to become stronger in order to protect himself as a deputy. During one of his training sessions, he met his coach and mentor, George Herring.

"He told me if I let him train me he'd make me a world champion," he said.

Wideman took his offer and later that year won the Georgia State Championship held in Lawrenceville and the following year went to Memphis, Tenn. and won the World Police and Fire Games while setting two world records in the 132-pound division.

"That's when I got my first taste of what I was capable of," he said.

The following year, Wideman competed in the U.S. Power Lifting Senior Nationals in Raleigh, N.C. Although he walked away with a third

IOBC squeaks past Aces in final minute, 58-53

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Babe Kwaski's two three-pointers in the final minute gave his team the edge in Monday's intramural basketball game as they squeaked past the Aces, 58-53, in the Briant Wells Field House.

With the Aces from A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, in the lead, Kwaski lead the Infantry Officer Basic Course team, in one last effort in the struggle to break free of the Aces. Their attempt proved to be successful.

Nearly the entire first half was a game of trading baskets. Midway through, each team had only two fouls keeping the action flowing smoothly.

The game was so evenly matched, neither team took more than a five-point lead. What little lead there was, usually was in the Aces grasp.

At the half's end, however, IOBC slipped past the Aces and took a three-point lead, 35-32.

The second half, although still a deadlock, proved to be a half of turnovers, fouls and free throw shots.

Halfway through the second half, the Aces regained their marginal lead.

Both teams experienced foul trouble late into the game.

The IOBC team received the bonus first when the Aces committed their seventh foul of the second half.

Time and time again the IOBC team scored free throws after Ace fouls.

That may have cost the Aces the game as the sharp shooting IOBC players swished several free throws before their seventh foul was called against them.

Although free throws helped, IOBC needed something done soon as the final minutes ticked away.

That something came in the form of a three pointer fired from Kwaski with 52 seconds remaining in the game.

It tied the game at 51.

IOBC baffled an Ace player with a steal, and Kwaski drained another three pointer.

The Aces managed to sink a lay up for their final bucket of the game, but it wasn't enough to regain the lead.

The heartbreak came at the end for the Aces.

"Toward the end we let some open shots go," and that's what hurt us, Aces' Charles Henesan, said.

After the buzzer, IOBC's Eric Campbell said the game went extraordinarily well for his team.

"The game was great," he said. "It was very tight and went all the way down to the last two minutes."

He added fouls were what destroyed the Aces chance at a victory.

"They got into foul trouble and that allowed us to penetrate and draw more fouls."

AMU shooters score top honors

Tori Svenningson
USA Shooting

Four soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have been selected to represent the United States at the upcoming World Shotgun Shooting Championships.

Sgt. 1st Class Todd Graves, who won the Skeet Bronze Medal in the 2000 Olympics, and Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery shot their way onto the U.S. Skeet World Championship Team March 4 at the selection match held at Hook Range.

Scott Schroeder of McMinnville, Ore., also made the men's team and Staff Sgt. Joseph D. Buffa was chosen as an alternate. Connie Schiller Smotek of Lyons, Texas, Lauryn Ogilvie of San Jose, Calif., and Linda Ferrence, of Normal, Ill., made the women's team.

On March 7, a 1996 Olympian former USAMU Sgt. David R. Alcoriza made the Double Trap Team, along with Glenn Eller of Katy, Texas, and Jeff Holguin of Yorba Linda, Calif. Two-time Olympic Medalist Kim Rhode of El Monte, Calif., Kyndra Hogan of Springfield, Ore., and Ellie Schad of North Platte, Neb., made women's team.

USAMU trap shooters who made the team March 11 are 1996 Olympian Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson and Sgt. Joetta R. Dement.

The shotgunners will compete at the World Clay Target Championships in Cairo, Egypt, April 28 to May 9. The U.S. World Championship Team was selected on the basis of the combined results from the Fall Selection Match conducted in November in Colorado Springs, Colo., and the Spring Selection Match at Fort Benning held March 2 to 11. Competitors shot 300 targets at the fall match and 225 this spring. The spring match had to be cut short due to the heavy rain and wind.

Graves held a commanding lead throughout the trials, coming out of the first match with a score of 288, to which he added another 217 targets. Dulohery moved up from third place at the spring match with 279 targets to an overall second-place finish of 493 targets.

Following close on his heels with 492 clays was Schroeder, who had gone into the spring match lagging behind in fifth place. He fought back at Fort Benning, however, even slamming through a straight 25 despite the heavy winds and sheets of rain that pummeled the field.

"It was nice to shoot well enough to make the team," Dulohery said.

Stowers Stampede set for April 14

Stampede to replace Jingle Bell Jog

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

With much of the legwork completed, race directors Adam Weinbaum and Deedee Burch hope their first footrace will take off running.

The Stowers Stampede is set for April 14. A 5K run, a 1-mile fun run and a 5K wheelchair race are scheduled for race day.

"Faith School had a race like this for almost 20 years and this is the first year they're not doing it," said Weinbaum, Stowers physical education teacher. "I'm trying to keep the tradition alive."

The race coincides with the Cooking Light's Healthy Kids Challenge. The program is designed to get teachers, administrators and parents all involved as "kid links" to teach children the importance of a good nutrition and an active lifestyle.

Stowers is one of 500 schools across the country participating in the program.

This race is just another effort outside the classroom to emphasize a healthy lifestyle, Burch said.

More than 200 participants are expected to attend the race, Weinbaum said.

This includes the 40 Stowers students who participate with the school's running club.

"There's been so much planning, it's exciting to see it all come together for something they've been working up to," said Rebecca Corbitt, student teacher from Columbus State University.

Volunteers are still needed for a variety of areas, including:

- Timers
- Race route spotters
- Announcers
- Treasurer
- Start and Finish line
- Contacts for radio and TV
- Refreshment and registration workers
- Sign makers for tables and race routes
- Stuffing goodie bags
- Gathering donations

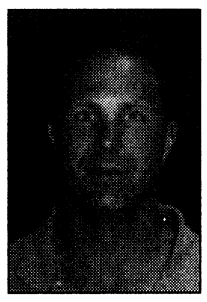
All races will start and end at Stowers Elementary School. While the one-mile fun run for ages 8 and below and ages 9-14 begins at 9 a.m., the other events start at 9:30 a.m.

Race-day registration begins at 7:30 a.m.

The entry fee for children 14 and under is $5, 15 and older is $10.

Two dollars will be added to the registration fee on the day of the race.

Participants will receive T-shirts and grab bags, containing treats and literature.



An awards ceremony will take place after the final race, with trophies being presented to the top two open division winners. Weinbaum encouraged all athletes to turn out for the event.

"It should be a fun race," Weinbaum said. "I hope people in the area come out."

For more information, call Weinbaum at 544-2567.

huntin' and fishin'

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Outdoor Recreation

(Last week I talked about camouflage, calls, and that turkeys tend to be most active during morning hours.)

As the morning glow appears, a hoot owl calls in the distance and a gobbler sounds off with a loud Gbbbbbl, Gbbbbbl, letting me know he is the baddest thing in the woods. This is the most crucial point of the morning hunt and time to ask yourself some questions:

- Were you quiet or did the gobbler hear you sneak into position?
- Are you well camouflaged and in a good location or are you too close?
- Have you positioned yourself to lure the turkey up hill?
- Are the decoys in the right location?

You must be extremely quiet getting into position. If you're too far away the hens will get there first, too close and the gobbler will hear you. I prefer to set up one to 300 yards depending on terrain and where I expect the hens to be. Set up is crucial and it really helps to know the terrain.

Ideally you would not want to have a ravine between you and your prey. Often the turkey will get hung up if there is something he doesn't like in the way. I guess he expects the hen to come to him and that's why you have to be convincing with your call. If you must set up near a ravine, get as close to it as you can and hope the turkey doesn't see you on his downward approach. Again, you always want to lure the bird uphill if possible. I always try to pick a big tree to lean against (wider than my body) with some vegetation between me and the avenue of approach.

Turkey decoys can be a big asset if they are legal. For instance they are legal in Georgia but not in Alabama. There are jake, hen, and gobbler decoys. You obviously can't carry all of these in the woods especially if you have the hard plastic variety. I like to use two hens and one Jake made of foam. A decoy is not essential for success; often there will not be time to place the decoys. Of course, if the turkey sees you trying to be sneaky setting up the decoys you're through.

When placing the decoys, try to position them to make the turkey circle your position starting at your direction of fire. Usually this will help allow a shot if your setup is right. You also want to try to get the shot at around 20 to 30 yards. It is also a good idea to practice your set up, accomplishing all tasks so you're ready to shoot in two minutes or less.

So, we have done all that, the turkey has gobbled and we know where he is. Now the hard part is calling him to within 20 yards for the shot. It's time to get him fired up. Make a few quiet yelps and hope for response. If you're careful you can do this a few times tantalizing the bird. Remember you're trying to sound like a sexy hen. But you're still in the tree, you haven't had any coffee and you're not really awake yet. The day is just beginning and you're just letting the bully know where you are. The glow of morning brightens and you're starting to wake up now. The next thing you're going to do is fly down for some breakfast. Many hunters use their hat or a turkey wing to simulate the fly down and if you're good enough you can make a fly down cackle. I haven't perfected this yet, so I usually use a wing then wait a few minutes and continue with a few slightly louder yelps and putts.

Hopefully all this works, the gobbler gives in, flies down 50 yards from you and comes right in to the ambush. But what usually happens is one of our girlfriends intercedes and steals our man. Sound familiar, ladies?

Often it will take 20 or 30 minutes or even longer, so be patient, don't make any unnecessary movement and be ready to shoot at all times. It's better to call too seldom than too often. No turkey likes a hen that talks too much. It has to be just right and you will know if you did something wrong when the gobbler clams up. Then it's time to move on to a new customer using your locator call.

There are a variety of locator calls such as the hoot owl, peacock, crow, gobbler and anything else that sets the gobbler off.

Sometimes they will even gobble when you slam your truck door. My favorite is the owl call, which I do with my mouth or my handheld call. Sometimes one of the above mentioned will work better than the other, so most of us have the whole menagerie. The locator call will help you locate the gobbler so you can set up and start the process all over again.

The shotgun you use is also important, as is the shell. I prefer a single shot 10 gauge with turkey choke and 3 and 1/2 inch magnum shells with number 2 and 4 mix shot. Some say this is a little overkill and I suppose that a 12 gauge full choke would be sufficient. Just check your pattern, which should be tight allowing for a headshot at 30 to 40 yards. One very important safety factor is that once you shoot your gobbler be careful of their spurs. Gobblers are extremely strong and are hard to kill. I have seen a six-inch gash — inch deep on a buddy's arm. He got too anxious and pounced on the bird before it was completely dead.

Another thing you will find is that gobblers hate the rain. They normally won't gobble at all and don't want to get their feathers ruffled. I have tested this theory several times, always returning home empty-handed. Plus most calls don't work when they are wet except for the diaphragm, so don't waste your time. One thing that is fun and works well is taking a buddy along. Often when two hunters work a bird together the gobbler will choose one of you to come too. But don't get upset when your buddy rubs it in that he can call better than you.

The best advice I can give is to spend a lot of time in the woods, listen to the hens, try different things, have patients and enjoy the outdoors. And be safe. Every year someone gets shot because an unsafe hunter shot at the decoy and hit the hunter. Make sure you're shooting at the real gobbler and respect other hunters.

When you call your first bird it will be a milestone you will not forget. There are few things more beautiful than seeing a mature gobbler in full strut, 20 yards away.

Weightlifter: Hoists load

place finish in his first national championship, it catapulted him into international status.

"Taking third at the nationals that year gave me a top rank internationally," he said. "There I was ranked in the top five in the world. That was a real motivator to keep me lifting."

Herring said he knew Wideman was perfect for power lifting when he first saw him.

"His genetics — he's compact, sturdy and strong — he seemed perfect," he said. "He was born to power lift."

Herring said Wideman has gone far because of his commitment.

"He goes that extra mile," he said. "I'm tremendously proud of him."

Being a soldier demands a lot of time and dedication — being a power lifter demands a lot of discipline and sacrifice.

"You have to be completely dedicated and love this sport or you won't go far," he said.

The 17-year Army veteran (nine year active and eight year Georgia National Guard) said he's been fortunate that during his military career, his immediate chain-of-command has been very supportive with his power lifting goals.

"They've all encouraged me to keep it up," he said. "With that kind of encouragement, I've become better at the sport."

Although encouragement is extremely important, Herring understands the sacrifices Wideman takes in order to continue competing in the sport.

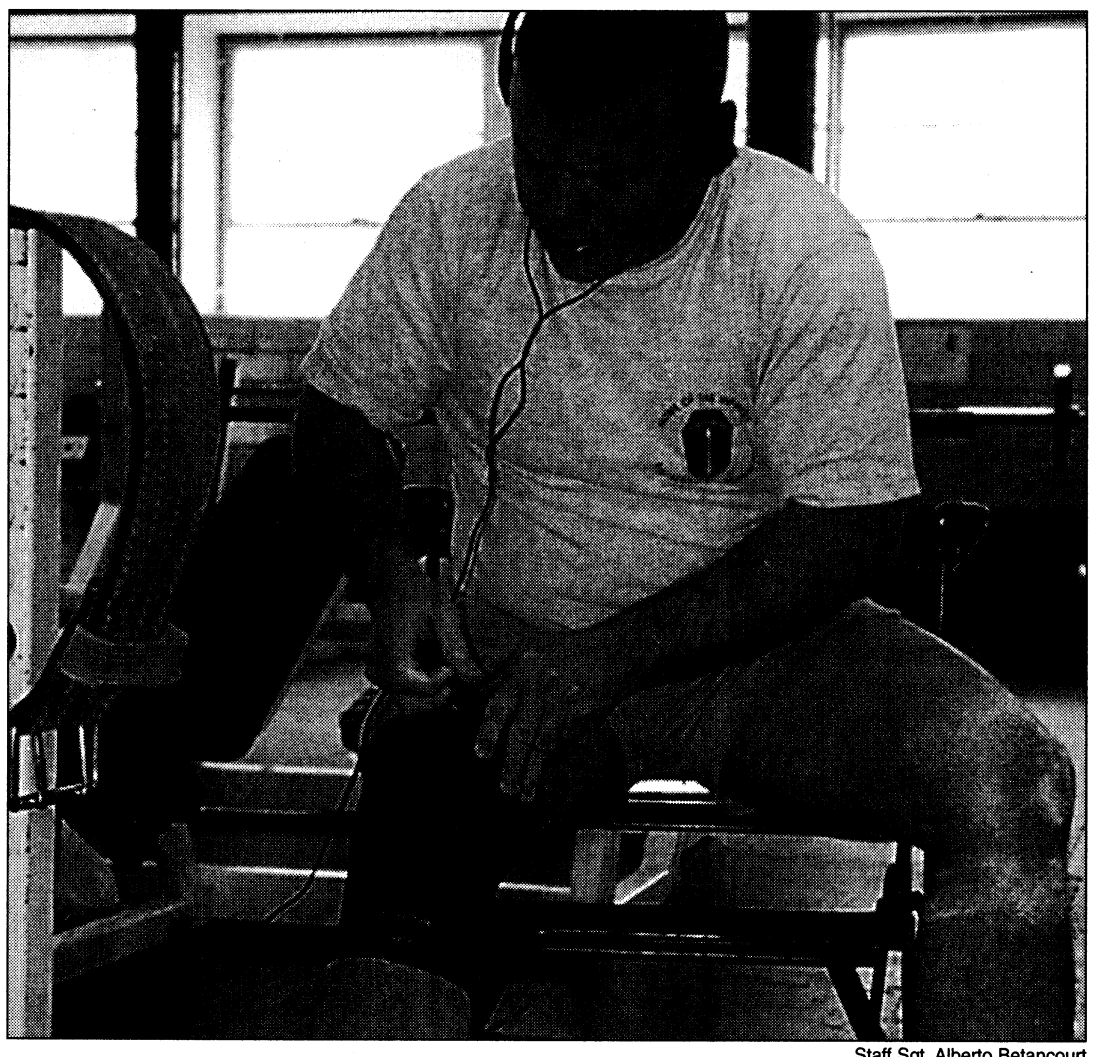
"The only feather he doesn't have, is the International Power Lifting Federation Championship title," Herring said. "But considering that all the other competitors are sponsored by their countries and the only work they have is to power lift — my guy has done an outstanding job."

The father of three (Lee, 16, Cara, 13, and Brian 10,) is currently preparing for Wednesday's Georgia State Championships in Forsyth.

Further ahead on his calendar is the World Dead Lift Championship in Reno, Nev., scheduled the last weekend in November. Last year he hoisted the world-record weight.

He said power lifting has been around since 1954 and competition is held during the Pan American Games and the World Games.

He said he hopes the Olympic Committee sanctions his sport one day.



"I have faith that power lifting will eventually make it into the Olympics," Wideman said.

Brute strength is not all he musters — he's also quite a showman with the crowd.

He said he puts his head down before his lift then suddenly throws his arms up in the air and yells loudly.

Then he walks back to the bar, performs his lift, sees the white lights indicating it was a good lift then growls and flexes for the crowd.

"It's show time — I'm in the zone," he said.

Web congestion clearing up

Network use only authorized for official duties

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

It was recently announced that Fort Benning employees were to "minimize" use of the nonsecure Internet Protocol Network because of network congestion problems.

Since then, there has been a decrease in net congestion, but some questions still remain on exactly what the post Internet system should be used for.

Paul Yates, director of Information Management, said the Department of the Army and Department of Defense sites are still OK to browse if the need arises.

"No DoD or DA sites are restricted by this policy," he said. "The restriction is for unofficial business.

"Just because it is a DoD or DA site, does not give an individual unlimited authority to go to the site — there should be a reason to go there," said Yates.

Yates said while college online programs are there to benefit soldiers, they shouldn't be accessed in offices.

"The college online program was set up for soldiers to dial-in to the 'classroom' via telephone line in their barracks or homes," he said. "The way I understand it, this is explained to soldiers when they sign up for the program. The intent was never to have them use either the official telephone system or official networks to take these classes."

Dennis Bundy, the on-site manager for Army University Access Online, said the use of government lines and networks are discussed with those signing up for the program.

"The requirement is that they have to have their own phone line at their home. By no means are students to take their laptops to work and tie up the phone lines. We stress that in every briefing we give," he said. "It's also possible that they could do their online work through the post network system, but they aren't supposed to. We tell them not to do school work at work."

Prior to the recent limitations, post employees had more flexibility for internet use.

"Individuals were authorized to 'surf the Web' during lunch and authorized breaks. Restrictions to this policy were unacceptable sites, pornography, hate sites and others in this category, as well as sites that played audio or video over the net.

Yates said there are also efforts to expand the post net system farther down the road.

"Along with this 'minimize' directive, a request was forwarded to TRADOC to increase our capacity

Leaders learn new skills

Course focuses on leadership development

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Officers transitioning from their commissioning point to the basic course find themselves testing a new Army concept.

The Basic Officer Leaders Course, with its second test class, integrates gender as well as branches.

For example, combat arms officers work directly with support officers in the classroom environment.

The seven week course not only focuses on leadership development but also reinforces basic soldier skills that enlisted soldiers learn in Basic Combat Training, producing leaders who demonstrate the characteristics of a leader and who embody the warrior ethos.

"It's a program designed to have all Army officers (learn) the same core values," said Capt. Russell Washington, senior platoon trainer, C Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Core values such as; the seven Army values: loyalty, duty, respect, selfless-service, honor, integrity and personal courage; and mental, physical and emotional strength.

Trainers and soldiers agree the course teaches important values, responsibilities and skills.

"What Officer Candidate School didn't finish, this school has," said 2nd Lt. Malida Ruiz, a signal officer on her way to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 11th Signal Brigade, Fort Stewart, Ga.

"I have a better understanding of what the infantry does," Ruiz said. "It helps to combine the different branches to learn on a solid foundation, when we normally wouldn't have been able to."

Currently instructed by several officers as well as drill sergeants on temporary duty status, the course is slated to become a permanent course required of every officer, said Maj. Daniel Stempniak, commander, C Co., 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.,

Soldiers call on medical skills

Training allows soldiers to help accident victim

Maj. Milton Mariani
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Throughout the year, students from around our hemisphere train here and return to their countries eager to apply recently learned techniques in their respective career fields.

For two students, who just finished the Medical Assistance course at Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, that opportunity came sooner than expected on March 21.

Capt. Geraldo Thomas, a 19-year health professional veteran and 1st Lt. Marta Porras, a nurse with the Costa Rican Public Security Ministry, were passengers on the shuttle bus that struck a pedestrian near Burger King on Main Post.

"The bus driver stopped immediately and we heard some screaming and commotion. In my broken English, I asked the driver to open the door and both Geraldo and I ran off the bus toward the screams," said Porras.

Acting on instinct, both rushed to the victim's aid.

"There was a young girl lying on the ground. We immediately proceeded to immobilize her and evaluate her injuries," Porras said.

Alcohol screenings offered Thursday

Prevention key in battle against alcohol abuse

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program is offering community members the opportunity to take part 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Thursday in the National Alcohol Screening Day.

NASD, the kick-off event for Alcohol Awareness Month, is a free program geared toward awareness and prevention of alcohol abuse, said Melvin Burnett, education coordination for ADAPCP.

The completely confidential program is offered to soldiers, family members and any other person who wishes to participate

"A lot of times, soldiers don't want to use facilities on Fort Benning because they're afraid of being identified," said Staff Sgt. Stephen Darling, NCOIC, drug and alcohol prevention. "Soldiers don't realize the help is here and free.

"They're afraid of being stigmatized as an alcoholic, whether they are or not. This is a chance for them to take an honest look at themselves and take steps to change their lifestyles."

Personnel attending the screening can expect not only complete anonymity, but also a brief written assessment, and an opportunity to review results with a clinician. Referrals will be made when appropriate.

"The biggest thing we're trying to get across is the alcohol problem here (as well as everywhere else,)" said Burnett. "Our goal is to educate personnel about signs and symptoms of alcohol problems. This would reduce the number of alcohol related incidents and save lives.

"We can make a difference in our community by educating our community."

Burnett said people between the ages of 17 to 21 are the largest group with alcohol problems. Even though some participants in the screening may be underage, their anonymity is also guaranteed.

Darling said he believes many people become alcoholics because they have to have their "liquid self-esteem," and do not realize that when they drink, the first thing to go is their sense of responsibility.

Some signs of potential alcohol problems are:

- drinking to calm nerves, forget worries or boost a sad mood,
- guilt about drinking,
- unsuccessful attempts to cut down or stop drinking,

Americans perfect Fools' Day

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

In light of my recent ramblings about the plethora of holidays, pseudo holidays, faux holidays and cheap, imitation knock-off holidays, I'll understand if you choose not to read another line, as I'm about to wax prosaic about the American institution of April Fools' Day.

Well, it's not strictly an American institution — it didn't even originate here, but I'm sure you'll agree we've taken foolishness to a new level. As Mark Twain once said — and remember, this was before the days of pregnant chads, multibillion dollar tobacco lawsuits and Beanie Babies — "The first of April is the day we remember what we are the other 364 days of the year."

Well, we Americans may have put the "fools" in April Fools' Day, but it wasn't our idea.

Though theories on the origins of April Fools' Day vary, it's commonly believed that it was first observed in 16th century France after Pope Gregory introduced a new Christian calendar, changing the start of the new year from the first of April to the first of January.

Some people didn't hear of the change or refused to accept it and continued to observe an April 1 New Year celebration. Others played tricks on them and called them "April fools." They sent them on errant errands or tried to make them believe something false was true — "Your shoelace is untied. Aha, you fool, shoelaces haven't even been invented yet."

Since that time, April Fools' Day has been celebrated all over the world.

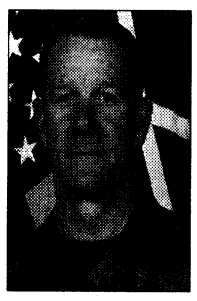
In Bangkok they're putting salt in the sugar bowls. In Botswana they're putting petroleum jelly on the telephone, and in Baghdad school children are putting tacks on their teachers' chairs.

My personal favorite April Fools' Day trick was the doozey my sister and brother-in-law pulled more than 20 years ago. They actually got married on April 1.

To their credit, neither of them have yet uttered those two little words that would nullify the marriage — "April fools!" But timing is everything, and I know those two crazy kids are just waiting for the right moment, maybe their 50th anniversary, to spring it on us. No messy divorce. No lengthy litigation. Just "April fools! Jokes over."

Perhaps the single most common April fools joke is the one where the first party — we'll call him the defendant — sets the clock forward an hour so the second party — the plaintiff — shows up an hour early for work or class.

With sleep being at a premium around our house, I fail to see the humor in this joke. It's practically criminal.



Don't be a fool — don't fall for it, unless of course you live in a time zone like ours where April Fools Day happens to coincide with Daylight Savings this year.

Then it's a good idea to "spring forward" or run the risk of being the butt of everybody's jokes until next fall when we "fall back."

And, hey, while you're setting your clocks forward — the ones in the kitchen and living room, the alarm clock, the VCR clock, the car clock and your watch — don't forget to check the batteries in your smoke detectors.

It's important that you remember to do this at least twice a year. You'd be a fool not to, because the safety of your family is no joking matter.

Children most precious resource

Child abuse must be prevented. Not only because it is the right thing to do, but it is also the smart thing to do.

Children are our future — our most precious resource, the leaders of tomorrow. We need to nurture children, protect them, defend them and see in them all the promise and hope of our communities and our country.

Since 1974, we have been committed by law, by regulation and by action to take an active role in making sure that child abuse and maltreatment are eliminated. Abuse and neglect hurt and injure children now and undermine the potential for leadership and caregiving in the next generation.

Nurturing and protecting start with the family but cannot end there. Everyone has a part to play in protecting children and preventing child abuse.

Our military and civilian professionals have specific responsibilities to assure the safety of children.

However, the nurture of children requires a contribution from everyone.

Only caring communities can produce caring, competent children and youth. Each child is special and every child deserves the chance to grow and mature and be part of a peaceful world.

Therefore, I declare April Child Abuse Prevention Month at Fort Benning and call upon all soldiers, families, citizens, community agencies, religious organizations, medical facilities and businesses to increase their participation in our efforts to prevent child abuse, thereby strengthening the community in which we live.

Protect our children; protect our future.

Manager takes steps to improve service

I was disappointed to learn Sgt. 1st Class Richard Holladay's experience at Reggie's Beverage Company Feb. 28 was unsatisfactory.

Our goal is to provide exceptional guest service and make Reggie's the first choice for dining out. Comments on our service and guest satisfaction are always welcome.

As a result of Holladay's letter, I am taking steps to improve our service.

I want to assure you that we are committed to doing all we can to improve our service until we are satisfied that we are providing our customers with the very best dining experience.

Again, I am sorry for the dissatisfaction you experienced. I hope we will have the continued privilege of serving you and demonstrating how much you are valued by all of us at Reggie's.

I want everyone on Fort Benning to feel at home in Reggie's and enjoy the service that my staff and I work hard to provide.

545-BOSS

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: A caller commented that unit formations are running PT in violation of USAIC Reg. 210-5, by having more than a two-man front while on the run. He complained that soldiers run out in front of vehicles, in front of on-coming traffic, screaming obscenities at drivers and banging on fenders.

Directorate of Public Safety Response: USAIC Reg. 210-5 states, "Foot columns will be marched and run on the right shoulder and off the roadway when possible. When not possible, they will be marched or run on the extreme right-hand side of traveled streets in columns of two. The OIC or NCOIC will be positioned to effectively control the movement of the troops and at the same time offer no impediment to traffic."

It goes on to say, "Individual runners or informal groups of runners must yield the right of way to all vehicular traffic. Runners have right of way over vehicles only at marked crosswalks. Runners should use sidewalks or road shoulders whenever possible. If not possible, runners will run in single file on the left side of the roadway facing traffic."

What was the most memorable April Fools' joke ever played on you?

Stephanie Martin, housing inspector — "My husband once changed all the clocks to say 9 a.m. when it was only 6 a.m. He woke me up and told me I was running late."

Staff Sgt. Joseph Shannon, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade — "My wife moved my car without my knowing it and then told me it was stolen. She let me believe it all day, until I was about to call the police!"

Alfred Heckard, AAFES employee — "I was once told I won $100,000 in a contest. They had someone come by with a briefcase full of play money and then told me it was an April Fools' joke."

Pvt. Esteves Bret, 608th Ordance Company, 36th Engineer Group — "My parents came home with a brand new BMW and told me it was for me for passing my driver's test. They let me drive it all day, thinking it was mine."

Sanzy Jackson, family member "My birthday is on April Fools' Day, so it's always a big day at my house. One year, my sister lied and said she had a flat tire and had me drive off post to pick her up. She just wanted to see me."

Lt. Col. Marshall Bush, Directorate of Training — "My four kids all brought home progress reports with Fs on them. They had a sign up saying they ran away because they knew I'd kill them. They had me going all afternoon."

Civic leaders tour Benning

Civilians live Army life during visit

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Members from the Defense Orientation Conference Association received hands-on experience with the military when they spent two days touring Fort Benning.

The organization sent 62 of their 500 civic leaders to learn about the Fort Benning community where they visited places such as the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and stopped to eat a MRE with Basic Combat Training soldiers.

They spent a large portion of Tuesday at Red Cloud Range, observing a demonstration from the 29th Infantry Regiment.

The unit showed off its force-multiplying Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the soldiers who comprise a mechanized infantry platoon.

The demonstration illustrated the abilities of the Bradley and mechanized infantry soldiers.

They were also given the opportunity to ride in a Bradley, fire weapons such as the M-16 A2 rifle and the M-4 rifle, and view static displays of the Bradley and the M-401 TOW Improved Target Acquisition System.

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek

Sgt. Abel Rodriguez, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, coaches H.J. Chay on how to fire the M-4 rifle during the DOCA visit Tuesday.

H.J. Chay, the owner of a meat packing business in Portsmouth, Va., and a member of DOCA, fired the M-4.

"It's a great weapon," he said. "I've learned a lot here. It has been a good educational tour, and as a taxpayer, I'm glad to know we have a strong military."

A strong military, Chay said, is the key to maintaining freedom.

Although DOCA members spent much of their time having fun, they did not forget their mission to gather information and share it in their own communities.

"By our folks visiting, we re-enforce (to the civilian population) the fact that quality in the military is high," said John Ohlsen, DOCA's executive vice president, from Burke, Va.

Visiting the Infantry Center to find out the challenges facing the military and to clarify misinformation with the public was one of the organization's main goals this trip.

"I think it's important that American citizens have a means of maintaining contact with the military," Ohlsen said. "The fact that there's no more draft makes for less contact between the military and civilians."

Visits from organizations such as DOCA benefit Fort Benning as well as the rest of the Army.

"Organizations such as DOCA can help inform the American public about what goes on inside their military," said Col. Carter F. Ham, 29th Inf. Regt. commander.

Airborne soldiers gather for festival

Memories kept alive through alumni

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

As a longtime paratrooper and the executive officer of the Airborne School, Maj. Keith Robinson, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment, has more than 100 jumps to his credit.

But he still talks about a retired airborne soldier he met last year who had far fewer jumps under his belt, having parachuted from military aircraft a grand total of nine times during his Army career.

Just one thing, though: That other soldier had jumped five times in training; on each of the other four occasions, the World War II veteran was jumping into combat.

"That humbles me," Robinson said, "like you can never know."

That kind of perspective is the point of the annual Airborne Awards Festival, the signal event for the entire Airborne community and a long weekend that brings together paratroopers of every generation.

"For those of us who are wearing wings today and are on active duty, it's a chance to visit with the grandfathers of the Airborne," Robinson said. "Airborne everywhere comes to be a part of it."

This year the event begins Wednesday in Atlanta, and continues through April 8.

One of the events on the schedule is a trip to Fort Benning Thursday where an elaborate all-day series of commemorative activities will take place.

The guest list hints at the significance of the day — a half-dozen contemporary general officers are expected to attend, as are members of the Army's first parachute test platoon.

The guest speaker at the post ceremony will be retired Lt. Gen. Richard Seitz, a paratrooper.

The day's events begin at 10:30 a.m. on Eubanks Field with a demonstration of Airborne training, and continues with movement to the nearby Airborne Walk.

That movement, Robinson said, will be "basically a parade," featuring the colors of every Airborne unit, past and present; veterans will move with the colors of their former units.

The ceremony planned for the Airborne Walk includes the placement of a wreath to commemorate the sacrifices of past Airborne soldiers. Seitz will speak, and a bugler will play taps.

Also scheduled for the ceremony is the pinning of the Keeper of the Wings, an event in which the oldest surviving paratrooper pins jump wings on the youngest member of the most recent group to complete Airborne training.

After lunch, ceremony attendees will travel to Fryar Drop Zone to see the final jump, and subsequent graduation, of a company of Airborne students.

But all of this still falls short of a real description of the day's events. For all the planning and formality underlying the ceremony, Robinson said, "It ends up being a lot more. It ends up being old soldiers getting together to remember the past, and to talk about the future."

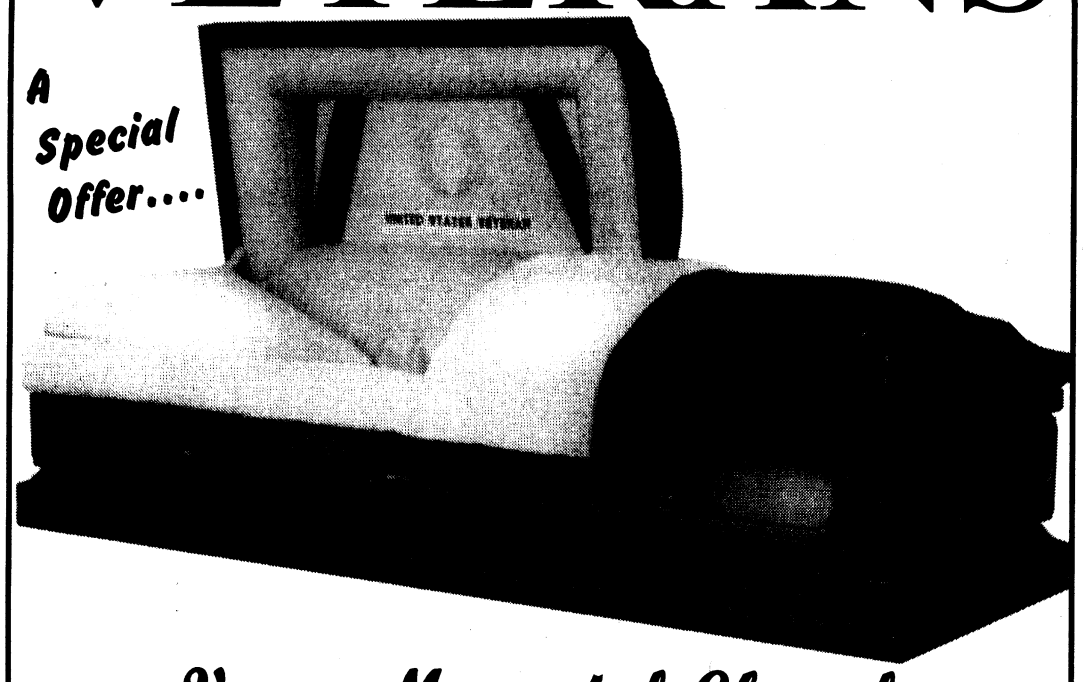
Pat Stutson, who worked at the Southeast Civilian Personnel Operations Center, died Sunday after an illness.

Stutson, 49, had worked at Fort Benning since Oct. 2, 1978. She performed duties and responsibilities of a staffing assistant and supported Womack Army Hospital and the DENTAC facility at Fort Bragg, N.C.



"Pat was a person with a great personality, a consummate professional with devotion to her work," said Karen Webb, deputy director, SECPOC. "She wanted others to have joy in their lives. She never asked why but rather sought avenues to achieve and be successful. She is missed."

"To her family and friends, we extend our heartfelt sympathy and prayers during this difficult time," Webb said.

Stutson was born Sept. 17, 1952. She is survived by her mother, Hattie K. Stutson; granddaughter, Shantrice R. Stutson; grandson, Reginald A. Stutson; sister and brother-in-law, Rickey and Dollie Stutson; sister, Lindsey J. Crocker; and sister and brother-in-law, Vickey and Willie Tells.

Life insurance to increase to $250,000

Families will benefit from automatic rise

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Effective Sunday, the Servicemember's Group Life Insurance maximum death benefit will increase from $200,000 to $250,000.

Cost of the new plan is $20 a month for $250,000. This equates to 80 cents per $10,000 worth of coverage.

"There is no comparison between this plan versus an equal amount of insurance bought outside the military," said Danny Wilson, chief, Personnel Services and Readiness Division, Adjutant General.

The rise is automatic for all active-duty service members.

Soldiers wishing to have a lower death benefit must indicate their desired amount on a revised SGLV-8286 form through their personnel records branch. To avoid higher premiums for April, soldiers must make this change on or before April 30. The military will credit back the overpaid premium for unwanted coverage in soldiers' subsequent May payments.

For example, a soldier has $200,000 of coverage during March, and elects on April 18 to retain that level of coverage. That soldier will have $250,000 of coverage for April, but will revert to $200,000 of coverage on May 1. The soldier will be charged a $20 premium for the month of April but will be credited $4 back in May.

"The increase from $200,000 to $250,000 was part of a larger package in the bill to improve the quality of life for our servicemen and women," said Congressman Matt Collins. "By far the most important quality of life measures passed by Congress in the bill were designed to provide better housing, pay hikes, and improved medical care."

The rise is designed to help keep pace with inflation, he said.

The congressional legislation was a great idea, Wilson said.

"Anytime soldiers can increase their coverage, especially with the low cost, it can only benefit them and their family members," he said.

Kelley Hill soldiers test new computer system

System could revolutionize heavy mortars

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Kelley Hill soldiers recently tested a new computer system that could revolutionize the way heavy mortars are brought into action.

Working hand-in-hand with members of the U.S. Army Operational Test Command from Fort Hood, Texas, the soldiers fired live rounds from 120 mm mortars using the XM-31 Mortar Ballistic Computer System.

The new computer system will replace the M-23 Mortar Ballistic Computer, which has been used by the Army since the 1980s.

It was an excellent system said Sgt. 1st Class Jeffrey Cornuet, the project NCO for the mortar ballistic computer. But replacement parts are difficult to find.

"It would be too expensive to reproduce the parts necessary to continue to sustain it," he said.

The new system, which looks much like a laptop computer, will be easier for the soldier to operate, Cornuet said, improving the speed with which soldiers can plot targets and decreasing human error.

The speed and less chance for human error come from part of the system's technology.

Using the new system, forward observers watch where rounds impact and assist mortar crews in adjusting fire by sending a data burst over the radio to the XM-31. Operators use that data to compute new fire missions for the gun crews.

Before, the forward observer's data was sent by voice messages via radio, increasing the chance of misunderstood messages and miscalculated coordinates.

Another aspect of the new system is the screen size. While the M-23 could display only a handful of characters at once, the XM-31's screen is much larger, and can display an entire fire mission at once.

Soldiers involved with testing the new system agree it is hands down better than the M-23.

"It is very user friendly," said Pfc. David Thompson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade.

"On this one (the XM-31), I can see everything that is on the screen. When I computed data on the M-23, I had to sit there and scroll through every screen. On this, everything seems like it is right there for me."

The XM-31 costs approximately $25,000 while the antiquated M-23 cost the government $10,000, said Maj. James Smith, chief of firepower division, Directorate of Combat Developments.

The operational test went very well, said Capt. Rich Hall, the project's test officer from the U.S. Army Operational Test Command.

The information gathered will be forwarded to the Army Evaluation Center in Alexandria, Va. that will provide insight to the fielding decision authority, he said.

"The XM-31 is scheduled to be fielded to the 1st Cavalry Division (Fort Hood, Texas) by June."

Soldiers helping test the system said they can't wait for that day to come.

"I really think this is a great system," Thompson said. "I can't wait to see it implemented into the United States Army."

AUSA to present Cocklin Award at black-tie dinner April 16

Army association to honor former senator

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Former Georgia Sen. Sam Nunn will receive the Gen. Robert Cocklin Award at 6 p.m. April 16 during a dinner, which kicks off the 2001 Association of U.S. Army's Third Region Meeting at the the Columbus Trade Center.

"We're excited to have someone of such national recognition to be the the recipient," said Richard Nurnburg, executive vice president, Chattahooche Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of AUSA. "I'm sure it will enhance the reputation of our tricommunity area."

The Cocklin Award is presented to individuals for their outstanding contributions to AUSA and the Army, and Nunn has contributed greatly to both, he said.

The association has extended the reservation deadline for members and anyone interested in attending to Wednesday.

Cost of the black tie affair — dark suit as minimum — is $30 for soldiers and Department of Defense employees. Otherwise, it is $40. Menu options will be prime rib and chicken.

More than 75 delegates from throughout the Southeast, Puerto Rico and Panama will attend the three-day meeting designed to allow chapters the opportunity to exchange information and receive updates from AUSA national headquarters. It also will feature:

- A Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation information briefing.
- A nonlethal demonstration at the Military Operations in Urban Terrain site.
- A Land Warrior demonstration.
- Lunch with 3rd Brigade soldiers.

Those interested in attending the dinner should call Chuck Hunsaker, AUSA member, at 323-9980 or write Hunsaker at 5363 Veterans Pkwy., Columbus, Ga., 31904.

Include name, number in party, a check to CV-Fort Benning AUSA and meal choice.

Thrift Savings Plan opens to military Oct. 9

Plan helps soldiers save for future

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Service members can begin to sign up for the Thrift Savings Plan beginning Oct. 9, DoD officials said.

The Thrift Savings Plan is a retirement and investment plan that has been available to civilian government workers since 1987. Congress extended the plan to include service members in 2000.

"It's in addition to your regular retirement," said Army Lt. Col. Tom Emswiler, a tax expert with DoD's Office of Military Compensation. "It's an optional program."

The open season for signing up will run from Oct. 9 to Dec. 8. Deductions start in January 2002. In 2002, service members can contribute up to 7 percent of their basic pay.

The maximum amount service members can contribute from basic pay will change. The current limit of 7 percent of basic pay will rise to 10 percent by 2005 and become unlimited in 2006.

Unlike civilians, who cannot make lump-sum payments into the program, service members may also contribute all or a percentage of any special pay, incentive pay, or bonus pay they receive.

"You can contribute from 1 percent to 100 percent of your special pays, incentives and bonuses into the thrift plan," Emswiler said.

The total amount generally cannot exceed $10,500 for the year. Contributions from pay earned in a combat zone do not count against the $10,500 ceiling. Combat zone contributions are subject to a different limitation, however, 25 percent of pay or $35,000, whichever is less.

Like civilian employees in the program, service members must choose how they want their money invested. Right now, there are three funds to choose from. The funds run the gamut of safe — the G Fund invests in special government bonds — to riskier investments — the C Fund tied to the stock market. There is also an F Fund for investing in commercial bonds.

TSP will unveil the new S and I funds in May. S Fund investments go to a stock index fund that paces small businesses. I Fund investors will track international companies the same way.

Service members will be able to start, change or reallocate their TSP contributions during two open seasons held each year. These are November to January and May to July.

"Because bonuses are hard to predict, if you are already participating in the plan and contributing from basic pay and you receive, for example, a re-enlistment bonus, you can elect to contribute at any time," Emswiler said.

Contributions to the plan come from pretax dollars.

Service members pay no federal or state income taxes on contributions or earnings until they're withdrawn.

The services will have teams visiting members to explain the program. Until then, see the thrift plan's uniformed services page at www.tsp.gov/uniserv/index.html for more information.

30th AG soldiers benefit from new computer power

Reservists ready inprocessing system

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers are always preparing for war, and the nine Army reservists working recently in tight quarters at the 30th AG (Reception) Battalion were no exception.

The men and women of the 1st Battalion, 334th Infantry Regiment, spent two weeks huddled in front of a row of computer screens.

The room was miniscule, just 20 feet away from the rows of benches where new trainees are herded for inprocessing. It was a fitting location, considering the task. The Wisconsin reservists were preparing an inprocessing system that will enable them to rapidly return members of the Inactive Ready Reserves to active duty in the event of a national security crisis.

The reservists brought computers from their Milwaukee-area unit, which they linked to the reception battalion's inprocessing system — allowing them to prepare their own duplicate reception network. That computing power means the reservists can supplement Fort Benning's reception battalion, if necessary — or they can quickly create a stand-alone reception battalion anywhere, anytime to rush soldiers back into an Army that may suddenly find itself at war, a peace keeping mission or a disaster relief.

"As long as there's a phone line," said Master Sgt. Scott Surprise, "we can go anywhere in the world."

The reservists worked nine or ten hours a day during to complete the project, but said the time was worth it.

"If we do get mobilized," said Staff Sgt. Bruce Vitale, "we've got all the contingencies covered."

Their work finished, the soldiers traveled home March 26.

Fort Benning children land on big screen

Movie making not a big deal to area children

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Sally Shutt

Kathy Stewart shares cookies with fellow extras (left to right) Sammy Desrosier, Samantha Mulvaney, Frankie Rivera and Todd Mueller. Marisol Ott watches in background. The group worked on the Miller Loop set of We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

While Mel Gibson and five actors who play his children in We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young filmed a scene on Miller Loop, several youngsters who live on the street seemed unimpressed with the action — or the big-name movie star — in their midst.

Catherine Pricone, 7, jumped on a trampoline in a yard behind the set as other children from the neighborhood played under the watchful eyes of parents and production personnel assigned to keep the area quiet during filming March 23.

The children cooperated beautifully; the barking dogs from one neighborhood over did not.

Pricone understood how to behave on a set because a week earlier she and her mother, Dawn, worked as extras during a parade scene shot in Doughboy Stadium.

"It was fun, but it was long. I had to stay very still, and this guy kept on saying something over and over again. I don't know who he is, but he was the guy saying the speech," Pricone said matter-of-factly.

The "guy" was Gibson, who portrays Lt. Col. Hal Moore.

As Pricone played, several other children were working as extras during the nearby filming.

"An extra is when you get to play in the background and just do stuff," explained Todd Mueller, 7, who after working two days on the film may consider becoming an actor "because it looks like fun."

And the money doesn't hurt.

Mueller, who was an extra in a scene shot earlier in the filming, made $50 a day and plans to purchase a Playstation with his earnings, he said.

During the Miller Loop filming, Mueller worked with his older brother, Travis, 11; Sammy Desrosier, 6; Frankie Rivera, 7, and Samantha Mulvaney, 4.

Mulvaney's sister, Ashley, 9, was working on another set that day at Doughboy Stadium.

Ashley called the experience fun, "except for the waiting part."

And then there was the wardrobe with which she had to contend.

"Some of the outfits I liked, but some of them I didn't. One day I had to wear brown shoes, and I was brown all over that day. I'm just not used to wearing brown," she said.

Rivera also had some qualms with the wardrobe and would have preferred to wear her jeans during the filming, said her father, Dan.

"Little Frankie doesn't like dresses, so she wasn't happy when she found out she had to wear one," Dan said.

Wearing a red-checkered, sleeveless dress selected from the wardrobe department, Frankie Rivera explained the movie's theme.

"It's about these soldiers who used to be in a war a long time ago in the 1960s," she said.

More than 30 Fort Benning minors, from babies to 16-year-olds, were hired as extras, Elliot Durant, casting director, said.

John Burns, 11, worked not only as an extra but also as a stand-in, or double, for an actor who portrays Gibson's son.

"I was nervous and excited at the same time. It's really a big opportunity and I didn't want to mess it up," Burns said.

The fifth-grader worked six full days during the filming, including a chapel scene where he and the rest of the congregation had to "sing a song over a hundred times," Burns said.

His favorite scene, which he hopes makes the film's final editing cut, was when he ran across a yard on Miller Loop, dropped a school book and stopped to pick it up.

"It's just been fun watching John do all this, and we're thrilled he stayed with it when the days got long," his mother, Kathy, said.

Although he has been asked by "tons of people" for his autograph, Burns said, he hasn't signed one yet.

"They were laughing when they asked," he said.

Substitute tutors child actors

Teaching skills pay off big time

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Substitute teaching paid off big time for one Fort Benning resident.

Kristine Schroeder was hired to tutor five child actors during the filming of We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

Schroeder, a certified teacher who recently earned her master's degree in education from Columbus State University, often substitutes at Stowers Elementary School. Fortunately, she was at the school the day the film's assistant producer called asking for the names of substitutes. The assistant principal turned in several names, and Schroeder was hired.

There are film industry teachers who specialize in working on sets. But Georgia is a "Right to Work" state, which allowed the producers to fill the slot with a nonunion teacher, Schroeder said.

Her students play the five children of Lt. Col. Hal and Julie Moore, portrayed by Mel Gibson and Madeleine Stowe, in the film.

At least one of the faces should be familiar to fans of How The Grinch Stole Christmas. Taylor Momsen, 7, portrayed Cindy Lou Who in the Jim Carrey film. Her 4-year-old sister, Sloan, is also featured in We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young. The sisters are from St. Louis, Mo.

Devon Werkheiser, 10, and Josh McLaurin, 13, both from Atlanta, and Luke Benward, 5, of Nashville, portray the Moore boys.

"This definitely isn't your ordinary teaching assignment," Schroeder said from the Miller Loop set where her young charges were filming a scene with Gibson.

"It was all new to me. They gave me the SAG (Screen Actors Guild) rules with a whole section on working with minors — how many hours a day they can work, how late at night they can work, how much schooling they have to have. I take my marching orders from the second producer," the teacher said.

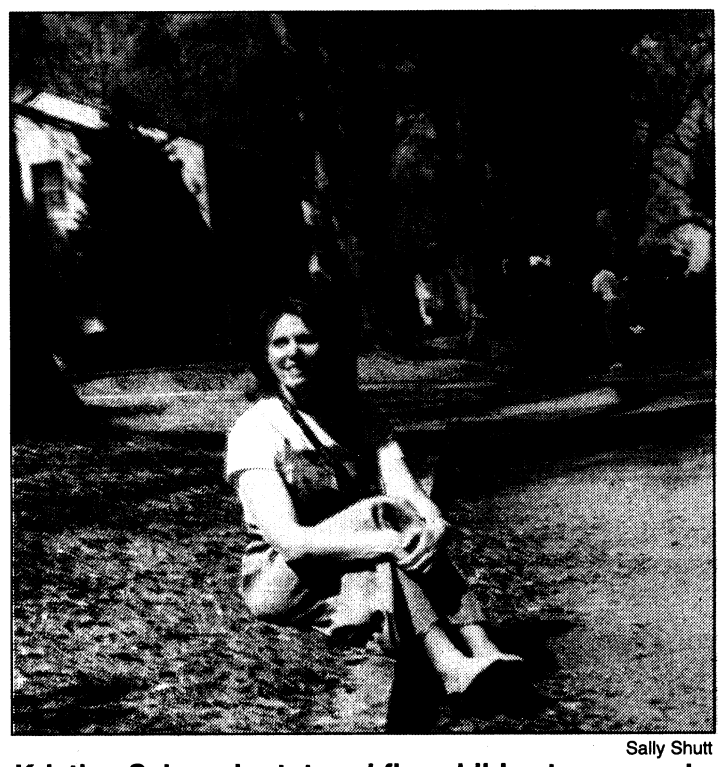
The rules governing the children's schooling required they receive at least three hours of instruction each day, and on most days that took place in a suite at the Columbus Hilton. On other days, a trailer with a classroom was available on the set so the children could study during down time, she said.

Her hours varied anywhere from three hours one day to 13 the next, she said.

With students ranging in age from a preschooler to a teenager, Schroeder said, "It was a unique experience in a one-room setting. It was a challenge. They were all doing different things. One was doing fractions, another double-digit subtraction, another was learning to do addition."

Schroeder was required to be on the set whenever the children were because her job also included watching after the welfare and safety of the young actors.

The students brought schoolwork from their classes back home, and Schroeder supplemented as needed.



She even took the actors and their parents on field trips around post, including a trek to Fryar Drop Zone to see an Airborne School jump.

"Major Keith Robinson took the older boys out in his vehicle on the drop zone so they could see the jump students land, and they loved it," she said.

Schroeder — whose husband, Adam, commands A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — also provided the children and their parents with military background information to help them better understand the movie and the book on which it is based.

For example, she answered questions about ranks, chains of command and protocol.

"Kristine has been wonderful. Because she lives on post, she was able to give us some insight and the kids have gotten to do some really neat things," said parent Valerie Werkheiser.

Kristine Schroeder tutored five child actors on set.

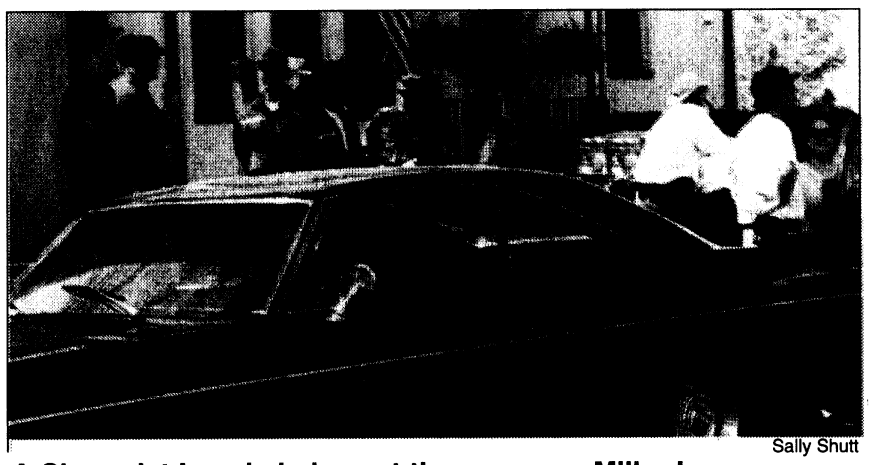
"After having a tutor for three hours every day, Devon's going to be ahead when he returns to school," Werkeiser said.

Known around the set as "Teach," Schroeder said she was excited when she found out she had gotten the job, but a little leery.



Although cameras are nothing new to Schroeder, a former producer and news anchor at WRBL, she still had questions about the assignment.

"Will I fit in? I thought I'm going to be an outsider, and it's going to be awkward. But, I was really welcomed with open arms. All the crew and cast have been friendly," she said.

Vintage vehicles from local area add to movie realism

Car owners provide rides for movie set

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A Chevrolet Impala helps set the scene on Miller Loop.

Hair stylists, wardrobe designers and make-up artists are responsible for making sure the stars, cast and extras look as if they just stepped out of 1965 in We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

It's Charley Bob Burnham's job to make sure the streets they step out on reflect the same period.

Burnham is the transportation coordinator for the film.

"I have to make sure any and all picture vehicles — those that will be seen on the screen — meet the criteria set by the art director, production designer and the director," Burnham said. The criteria include color, make, model and accessories.

Local car owners provided 25 vehicles from 1950 to 1965 that were used on several sets, including parked in the driveways along Miller Loop and in the parking lots at Riverside and Doughboy Stadium.

Ray Brown of Columbus has worked on and restored various models of cars from the 1950s and 60s, and he received a call from Teddy Ritchie, a transportation captain on the film, asking if he had any vehicles suitable for 1965.

Brown and his wife, Charlotte, responded with four Chevrolets — a 1957 BelAir; a 1959 El Camino; a 1960 Biscayne; and a 1963 Impala.

"I was living here in those days myself and these cars fit the local economy and the atmosphere of the area," Brown said.

"I have some of the Chevrolets that were low-end priced cars for troops and families to have. With our economy, you didn't really see many Corvettes, and if you did, it was usually passing through on the way to the beach," he said.

The owners were paid either daily rates or a "run-of-the-show fee" for the month-long filming, Burnham said.

"I was able to go to the set one day and ate a super fine lunch," Brown said.

While local car owners provided the bulk of the vehicles, Burnham had to go as far away as North Carolina to find a 1964 Ford Galaxy Country Squire station wagon for Mel Gibson and Madeleine Stowe, who portray Lt. Col. Hal and Julie Moore, to drive.

> "I was living here in those days myself and these cars fit the local economy."
> Ray Brown
> Columbus car owner

The car was put on a trailer and transported south, but not before a pit stop.

"The bumper had rusted from the inside out," Burnham said.

A business in Atlanta re-chromed the bumper overnight, and then two local companies were instrumental in getting the wood-paneled family car camera ready. Dieters Body Shop painted the car before Master's Auto Detailing added the finishing touches.

In the movie, the wagon tows a 1961 U-Haul trailer found in the moving company's inventory in Marietta, Ga. U-Haul researched their archives and sent graphics from 1965 to go on the trailer.

Military vehicles were also needed during the filming, including 12 troop buses, which were taken from Fort Benning's own inventory. The blue buses were covered in a wax base then painted olive drab green to look like those used in 1965 to transport troops.

After filming is completed on post, the buses will receive steam baths to melt away the wax and remove any trace of the paint, said George Mattern, Directorate of Facilities, Logistics and Engineering.

"You would expect Hollywood people to know about stuff like this," Mattern said.

"We were told the buses would be returned to us in the condition they received them in."

Other military vehicles used during the filming on post included five deuce-and-a-half trucks from the 718th Engineer Battalion, located at Harmony Church. Two M-151 A-1 jeeps, from the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, were modified for use in the movie.

1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Every year the Department of the Army sets goals for retention. This fiscal year, the main goal is to re-enlist the most highly qualified soldiers on a long-term basis. At the Fort Benning Retention Office, is supporting this goal by working to achieve to 100 percent objective accomplishment.

At Fort Benning, there is a team of soldiers whose main effort is to retain soldiers in the Army.

Their experience, knowledge, and motivation provide the strength necessary to retain soldiers.

"Without re-enlistment we wouldn't be able to maintain the Army's in strength to provide overall support to the nation and our way of life," Staff Sgt. Kennyetta Baldon, senior career counselor, said. "Every soldier should re-enlist at least once to get the full concept of the Army. The first enlistment is basically just training. It isn't until they get their feet wet and understand the team that they have become a part of."

Recently, Sgt. Maj. Edwin Lasanta, installation retention sergeant major re-enlisted for his final time.

He has dedicated the last 15 years of his career to being a part of the retention team. Lasanta continues to concentrate on assists soldiers by trying to do what is best for them and also to fulfill the needs of the Army.

Lasanta explained quality is equally important as quantity. "They must be qualified soldiers who meet the Army's set standards. In order to re-enlist, they must achieve these standards."

It is important for all leaders to remember to assist in the retention process.

From the moment a new soldier reports to a unit, it is the responsibility of the soldier's new leaders to take care of them. Retention is a unit function as much as it is the mission for the retention office.

"We as leaders should never forget that if it were not for the soldier, we wouldn't be needed. The Army is a great place not only to start, but to stay," Sgt. 1st Class Jose Irizarry, retention senior operations sergeant said. "Re-enlistment is a very important decision that requires time, effort and lots of good advice and concern shown by all leaders to their soldiers."

When considering re-enlistment, it is important to get all of the facts from your unit retention representative.

With their guidance, the retention office will work to fulfill the soldier's needs.

Re-enlisting is an important decision and taking the time to think things through properly is crucial.

"The Army is not for everyone, only those who are committed should consider re-enlistment as an option," Irizarry said. "There has never been a better time to re-enlist than right now.

"The Army is going through a tremendous transition and things are to only get better with pay, housing, and overall way of doing business."

going off the installation. Funding is the obvious issue," he said. "Our request is being reviewed by TRADOC and as of this time no funds have been identified to increase our capacity."

Yates said he appreciates the support given so far by post employees in cutting network use, but there's still room for improvement.

"It must again be stated that the use of our local area network is primarily for 'official business.' It's difficult to make a case for expanded capacity for the ability to surf the Web for unofficial reasons," Yates said.

"Since this most recent policy went into effect, traffic through our gateway has been reduced by 20 percent," he added. "We still have peaks during the day that approach maximum capacity, but over all our position is better."

habits,

• causing harm to oneself or someone else as a result of drinking,

• needing to drink increasingly greater amounts to achieve desired effect,

• feeling irritable, resentful or unreasonable when not drinking,

• and medical, social, family or financial problems are caused by drinking.

Screening sites on post are: the Main Mall Post Exchange, 36th Engineer Group Dining Facility, the pharmacy at Martin Army Community Hospital, Main Post Office, and Infantry Hall.

Informational pamphlets only will be available at Soldiers Plaza, Building 2630, and Kelley Hill Troop Medical Clinic, Building 9052.

ADAPCP and Martin Army Community Hospital are co-sponsoring the screenings.

For more information about the screenings, contact ADAPCP at 545-1138, 545-4993, or 545-4415.

BOLC: Trains leaders

NCOs will teach much of the course with one sergeant first class, two staff sergeants and one captain per platoon.

"(BOLC) is a good program because it gives them leadership skills before they get to their OBC," said Staff Sgt. Lenore Kaiser, a drill sergeant from 1st Bn., 61st Inf. Reg., located in Fort Jackson, S.C.

The course, although demanding, also has the potential to be rewarding for many officers.

"It can be challenging, but it's helping break down the barriers so we can be the Army of one," Ruiz said.

BOLC is slated to become a permanent course in June 2002.

injuries," Porras said.

With Thomas assisting, Porras quickly checked the girl and noticed bleeding from the left side of her head.

"I held her head steady since we couldn't tell the extent of her injuries and told her, in the little English that I know, to lie still and that help was on the way," said Porras.

As part of her day-to-day duties in Costa Rica, Porras has been involved in similar emergency situations, but this was the first time she was the first person to arrive at the scene.

Thomas said it was instinct and proper training that sent them to aid the injured girl.

"The language barrier between us and the girl added a little difficulty to the situation, but an American showed up with a cell phone, dialed 911 for help and began talking to the victim in English," Thomas said.

Fort Benning Fire Department Paramedics arrived within five minutes.

The two students assisted the paramedics with their initial triage and prepared the patient for loading onto the stretcher and transportation to the hospital.

When Keith Purinton, an emergency medical technician with the Main Post Fire Station, arrived at the scene, he found the students performing a C-Spine, a technique that immobilizes the neck and head to prevent further damage to the spinal cord, a technique he would've had to apply it if they weren't there.

"What they were doing was perfect," he said. "By them applying C-Spine, it allowed my partner and me to tend to other things and access our evaluations. These students saved us a lot of time."

Purinton, a six-year EMT veteran said the students followed the right procedures.

"The first thing we do when arriving at an accident scene where someone has been injured is perform a C-Spine," he said. "Once you hold C-Spine, we have to continue until a C-Collar is applied. I was glad to see that this was provided for us."

The students attributed their quick reaction to their course training.

"The six-week training we just completed really came into play. We both started working as a team. Although we have never worked together in our country, we were able to do a quick assessment of the injuries," Thomas said.

The injured girl is listed in stable condition at University of Alabama, Jefferson Towers Hospital.

" I really would like to thank them personally. If it wasn't for their expedient intervention, my daughter might have been in a worst condition when the paramedics arrived," said the girl's father who wishes to remain anonymous.

Porras and Thomas were two of the 15 students who graduated from the Medical Assistance Course March 23.

Columbian instructor visits WHINSEC

Sgt. Daniel Monroy

Pvt. Carlos Capera of the Columbia counterdrug police applies a bandage to a fallen soldier during the Medical Assistance Course.

Soldier shares medical skills, experiences

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

He may not be living the life of one of those doctors portrayed on television, but 1st Sgt. Jose Sotelo, a Medical Assistance Course guest instructor at Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, has seen his share of medical emergencies.

He uses his experience to teach others how to manage in those situations.

"That's our purpose. We serve in assisting civilian medical personnel with our resources and rescue skills during extraordinary circumstances as well as supporting the (Columbian) army's mission," said Sotelo, Colombian army medic.

Sotelo explained what the Medical Assistance Course is geared for and what is expected of the Latin American students during their six-week stint at the Institute.

"We want students to be able to treat and evacuate patients under highly stressful circumstances," he said, while grading students administering first aid to simulated victims.

Under clouds of smoke, ground-shaking booms and agony-filled screams, pyrotechnics and lots of acting added realism for students who were scrutinized on how well they kept their composure during the simulation.

"I was surprised when they didn't get frustrated with all the moving and yelling I was doing," said Pfc. David Arnold, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade.

Everything from severed limbs to open chest wounds demanded students to distinguish the severity of injury and determine evacuation order.

"I was never a drama student, but I really started to get into it after a while," said Pfc. Heriberto Magallanes, a Colorado native from 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., whose frantic and disorientated antics added another challenge for students rendering aid.

"They just stayed calm, even when I pretended to go crazy," Arnold said.

During the grading, students alternated through stations that tested their reaction skills to various injuries and their ability to adjust to changing circumstances.

Students tested on evaluating a casualty, carry methods and culminated the event with the drama-filled first aid and evacuation scenario.

"One feels afraid and nervous at first, but you have to control it and remember what you were taught. You have to be the calm one and reassure the patient," said Marta Porr, a Costa Rican Army nurse.

The Medical Assistance Course's curriculum includes everything from surgical procedures, treating ballistic injuries to obstetrics and gynecology.

"We cannot afford to stop teaching and reteaching these skills," said Sotelo.

Sotelo said saving lives is at the forefront of every medic's responsibilities, whether military or civilian and in all circumstances. Regarding the situation his country is facing, Sotelo shared a brief anecdote on what being a Colombian Army medic can mean.

"After an armed contact with insurgents, which resulted in various enemy wounded, our soldiers gave medical attention to those they had previously engaged. The wounded insurgents were confused as they thought they would surely be killed let alone medically treated," he said.

"Respect for human life is what being a medic and a soldier is all about," Sotelo added.

AER helps soldiers

AER Office

Army Emergency Relief is a nonprofit organization dedicated solely to, "Helping the Army Take Care of Its Own." AER has been the financial assistance organization since Feb. 5, 1942.

The program is governed under bylaws established by the AER Board of Managers.

AER has an education scholarship program for undergraduate study by dependent children.

Scholarship assistance is a small secondary program to give emergency financial assistance. Those eligible for assistance include:

- Dependent children of soldiers on active duty for more than 30 days.
- Soldiers who retired from active duty for longevity, by reason of physical disability or upon attaining age 60 (Reserve Components).
- Soldiers officially on the Retired Reserve list, but not yet receiving retired pay.
- Deceased soldiers who die while on active duty or after retirement. Funds for scholarships are limited.

AER can't provide assistance for:

- Pay for nonessentials.
- Finance ordinary leave or vacation.
- Pay fines or legal expenses.
- Liquidate or consolidate debt.
- Purchase a house or provide for home improvements.
- Purchase, rent or lease a vehicle.
- Cover bad checks or pay credit card bills.

However, if there are extenuating circumstances, relating to any of these, as an exception to policy, the garrison commander is authorized to act on the exception to policy.

Information is available at the installation AER office.

For more information, call 545-2536, 545-4043 or 545-7517.

Soldiers begin Ranger School journey

Class 6-01 faces rigors, stresses of intense course

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

This is the first story of a three part series, which takes an in-depth look at the U.S. Army Ranger School.

"Go," yells the ranger instructor, marking the start of the Malvesti Obstacle Course.

Six students begin their pull-ups. One by one, they finish and move forward.

"Low crawl!" the RI yells. The students flatten themselves on the soft dirt and inch their way forward. They make it to a new obstacle — a high tower with cargo net forming the route up and down.

The students begin to climb. Leg fatigue shows as the students straddle the log and begin their descent.

Reaching their next obstacle, the students climb a log ladder.

"Hey ranger, where's your ranger buddy?" asks the RI.

The students reach the monkey bars. They begin to cross. Several drop from the slippery bars into the water beneath the obstacle.

Finally, they all reach the other side.

"Hit the water," the RI screams.

"Oh geez," the students gasp as they plunge into the cold water that makes them gasp.

They crawl their way through the worm pit. Submerging their heads in the muddy water, they creep underneath the barbed wire to avoid getting cut.

As they approach the end, the pit becomes more shallow and they are forced to stay flattened on the bottom and low crawl their way through the ooze.

Finally, the end — six more pull-ups and they are done. As the RI leads them in a jog to the end, they scream words of encouragement and motivation to the next group of students just entering the pit.

"Everyone OK?" asks the RI.

"Oh yeah, Hooah!" the students shout.

This is the beginning of the fourth day of the U.S. Army Ranger School, and the rigors set before the students are there to replicate the chaotic, high-stress environment of war.

The 61-day course, which has been said to be the most difficult school in the U.S. military's arsenal, demands food and sleep-deprived students to excel in small-unit infantry tactics in any environment, at any time.

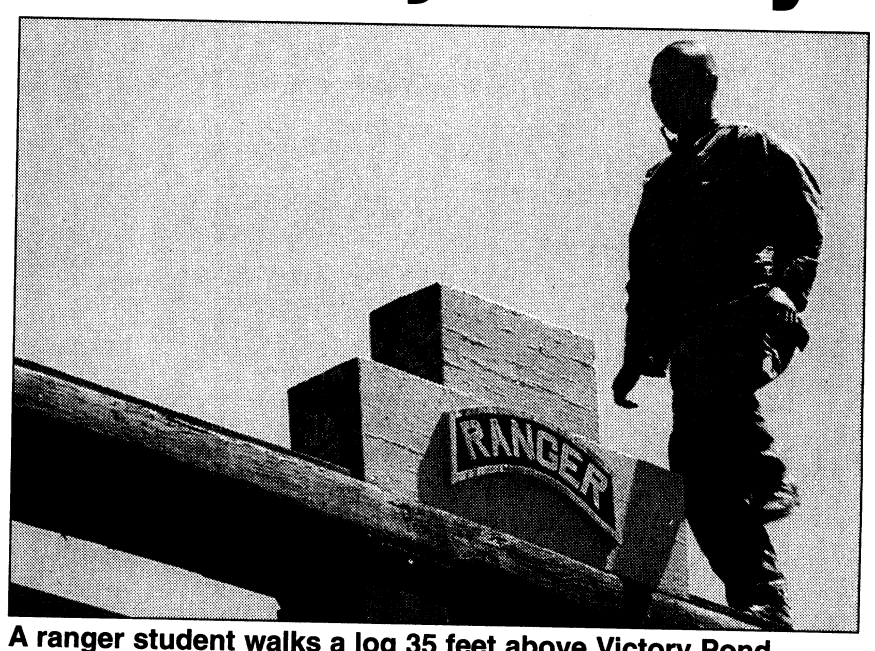
Divided into three phases, ranger students face a barrage of tasks spanning from patrolling the Fort Benning forests, to rappelling down Mount Yonah's granite face and trudging through the Florida swamps.

The first phase is executed in two parts, the first conducted in the Camp Rogers and Harmony Church areas.

During this period, the students face an assortment of tasks varying from PT tests to land navigation and from a water confidence test to hand-to-hand combat.

"The first phase is designed to be very, very physically intense," said Sgt. 1st Class Judson Gee, an A Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, ranger instructor.

After the Malvesti Obstacle Course the students faced the Water Confidence Test.



With the wind blowing in their faces, students walked on a flattened log 35 feet above the pond before crawling on a rope and dropping into the frigid water.

Later, they slid from a 74-foot tower down a cable for another dip into the pond.

The purpose of the water course is to overcome their fears, an RI said.

So intense is the first phase, Class 6-01, which began March 19 with 280 students, by the fourth day, was down to 250 students.

Historically, only 20 to 25 percent of ranger students will complete ranger school with their original class. But more than 95 percent of the students who are recycled eventually earn the Ranger Tab.

A ranger student walks a log 35 feet above Victory Pond during the Water Confidence Test.

Throughout the first phase, the omnipresent ranger instructors force the students to work together.

"The key element we try to instill in them is no one can be successful on their own," Gee said. "They have to work together and learn to work together and to support each other."

The second part of the "Benning Phase," is located at Camp Darby.

During this portion, students receive instruction on squad-sized patrol operations, field craft and they will run the Darby Queen Obstacle Course.

Although the 61-days are very challenging, said the 4th RTB command sergeant major, the students are able to complete the tasks, but it depends on the student's attitude.

"Those who want the tab will earn it," Command Sgt. Maj. Rafael Colondres, 4th RTB's sergeant major, said. "Those who don't care won't make it."

He said only the strong will survive the combination of sleep and food deprivation with the addition of facing the elements and the 200 plus miles the students will walk during the school.

Although difficult, Colondres added, "Any motivated soldier is able to complete this," and earn the tab.

Two rangers help police search for body in creek

Soldiers serve with special recovery team

It's not glamorous work. But, for Sgt. William Tomlin and Spc. Kristopher Tinsley, both from Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, Ranger Training Brigade, it's another opportunity to help their country in times of need.

Last week the two Fort Benning soldiers helped search for Seth Burleson, a 20-year-old Harris County resident who drowned after he and his 18-year-old brother, Chase, were thrown from their plastic raft on Mulberry Creek.

After days of unsuccessful searching, the Harris County Sheriff Department requested the Trident Foundation of Fort Collins, Colo., assist in the search, said Doyle Keeton, Trident information specialist.

Tomlin and Tinsely were called to the scene March 19 to assist in the search.

Landscapers found Burleson's body last week in Standing Boy Creek.

"My personal role in the water recovery mission was getting in a dry suit and helping look for evidence," Tomlin said. "It involved a lot of footwork in cold and rainy weather."

The two men and Sgt. John Kunze, also from the Ranger Training Brigade, are volunteers with the Trident Foundation, a service-specific, nonprofit organization created to help families, communities and public safety agencies.

"Some recovery or investigative operations can become more challenging or complex, and local or regional resources can quickly be exhausted," Keeton said.

That's when the Colorado-based group turns to people like Tinsely, Tomlin and Kunze.

"I just can't say enough about the cooperation we've had from the Fort Benning soldiers," said Keeton. "They've been a tremendous asset."

The team began an underwater search of the creek at noon March 20. They used johnboats, side-scan sonar and jet skis to aid in recovering the victim. An eight-man team, which also included team specialists from the fire departments and EMS, arrived at the Harris County EMS after noon.

This was Tomlin's second mission with the volunteer group.

He had participated in an aquatic search in Michigan a year ago.

The local rescue mission was the first chance Tinsely has had to work with the foundation.

Volunteers are hand chosen for their special talents.

Only about 65 individuals nationwide participate with the group.

"My family has a pretty long history with government service," Tinsley said. "They weren't surprised that I wanted to help out with a team like this during my personal time."

Many soldiers from the unit help with volunteer work, said Capt. Ed Murphy, Ranger Training Brigade.

"We have all types of people helping out off-post," Murphy said. "It's a good, positive motivator for the community."

Murphy said volunteer missions provide soldiers a chance to do something adventurous, yet still provide a duty for the local area.

"Tomlin and Tinsely are great individuals. Both have been a outstanding benefit to the Army," Murphy said.

COMMUNITY

Juvenile misconduct program works

Picking up trash deters youthful trouble

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The Juvenile Misconduct Action Authority is succeeding in deterring misconduct of Fort Benning community youth.

"The program has been helpful, without a doubt," said Garrison Command Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Graham. "It punishes and educates at the same time and gives them the opportunity to get their lives straight before they leave home."

When Graham visits local schools like Faith Middle School, he runs into children who have gone though the program.

"They tell me, 'I'm never going back there again,'" he said. "Ninety-six hours of picking up trash will do that."

The severity of the misconduct determines the amount of time a child has to work and other punishments. For example, children who are caught stealing have their Post Exchange privileges revoked for six months.

One child's misconduct was not as serious as theft so he has to work eight hours on Saturdays and Sundays sweeping gutters, working at the gym, throwing away trash and cleaning housing areas. The children do not clean near houses.

"That's the point," one parent said. "It takes away their free time. My son wanted to go to

Advocate lobbies for Army families

Spokesman leads fight for benefits

Master Sgt. Sally Roberts
USAIC Public Affairs Office

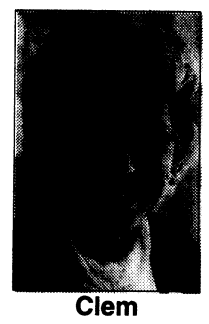
Somewhere along the road of life Ann Clem learned she may not be able to change the world, but she certainly could change her small piece of it.

Through volunteering, Clem has become an advocate for military families.

Sometimes the changes she makes result from simply pointing out a small, fixable problem or giving her time to a family activity. Other times, she takes her openness and determination to national levels as a representative to the National Military Family Association.

"The bottom line in advocating anything is that you can't just stop with the first person who tells you no," Clem said.

Through her own experiences as a military spouse, Clem knows well the joys and drawbacks of being a military family.



She and her husband, Col. David Clem, commander of Fort Benning's Dental Activity, raised their children as they moved from one assignment to another.

She compares this life to another path she followed within the religious community after attending college at St. Mary of the Woods in Indiana.

"That six years I spent in the religious community before I was married was the best preparation for this military lifestyle. We were often assigned to work where needed, according to the needs of the community," she said.

"Because we (in the military) are such a mobile group of people, we tend to put our roots down and take off running."

When her children were young, Clem's community involvement centered on their activities, with little time to lead the charge in family support group activities. She understands when young spouses hesitate to take on leadership roles, fearing that they will be too much to handle. Still Clem says taking on any role, no matter how small, can be a help to those who do take the lead.

Clem

"You can't ask someone to do something you're not willing to do. But even the small things are important. It's important that everyone does their little something," Clem said.

Once her children were grown she got even more involved.

"My mother once said, 'my day will come when I can do all those things. But right now my job is at home,'" Clem said.

"So often it's your kids' activities that thrust you into things. The year that my youngest child left for college and my husband was busy completing the Army War College, I had to thrust myself into something."

At the time, the Clems were living at Fort Sill, Okla., and the post needed a new representative to NMFA.

Clem was recommended and continued as a representative after they moved to Fort Benning. Now as one of three NMFA representatives from Fort Benning, Clem has lobbied for military benefits such as health care, retired benefits, pay raises, housing and day care for children.

"Ann Clem has become a spokesman and like many of our volunteers she serves as the eyes and ears for the command," said Chuck Walls, Fort Benning's garrison manager.

"When people speak out or point out things that may be bothering a lot of other people too, it helps bring the issues to those of us who are in a position to fix things."

Clem will soon be moving on to Fort Campbell, Ky.

"She will be tough to replace, but she has inspired many others to get involved," Walls said.

Spring carnival starts Tuesday

$10 wristbands buy unlimited rides April 3,5,7

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

What do funnel cakes, Ferris wheels and fuzzy stuffed animals all have in common? They're all ingredients of the Fort Benning Spring Carnival.

The event, hosted by Youth Services, will unfold on Stewart-Watson Field in front of Infantry Hall this week.

"This is the fourth year we've had the carnival," said Quintell Thorn, Youth Services recreation specialist.

"We've always had good attendance at the event, and we're hoping for an even bigger turn out this year," Thorn said.

Fort Benning's Spring Carnival had about 4,000 attendees last year. A portion of the fair's proceeds goes to the general MWR fund. The monies then help support other MWR and Youth Services programs, such as post sports and special events.

"Thirty percent of the proceeds come back to us," said Linda Laine, Youth Services director.

The carnival will begin April 3 and concludes April 7. Ride tickets are 75 cents each, though the amount of tickets per ride varies for each attraction. Special $10 wristband days, allowing unlimited rides, are available Tuesday, Thursday and April 7.

"Attendance is higher on wristband days," said Tandi Cain-Morris, marketing assistant.

"You can't beat the price of $10 to ride all the attractions you want from 5 p.m. until 10 p.m.," she said.

Admission is free and open to the public. The festivities begin at 5 p.m. on weekdays and 1 p.m. on Saturday and run until 10 p.m. Inclement weather may affect which rides operate, Cain-Morris said.

While Thorn doesn't partake in the carnival's rides, she said she takes pleasure in watching others enjoy themselves. She and a team of Youth Service volunteers will be working a Youth Services food trailer this year.

"It's nice to see the kids having a good time in a wholesome atmosphere like this," Thorn said. "We always receive compliments for having it here."

Thorn anticipates a large crowd this year due to increased advertising. Posters and advertisements have been run in post and local publications. Flyers are also being disseminated at the commissary.

Cain-Morris encouraged both post and local residents to attend the event.

"Come out and enjoy state fair rides, great food and fun games," Cain-Morris said.

April is the month of the military child. Other events planned for the month include the Youth Services Easter Egg Hunt, the Flashlight Easter Egg Hunt and the Teen Lock-In.

For more information about the carnival or other events, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

Benning prepares for annual Easter sunrise service

Community invited to Easter morning service

Angelica Anderson
Bayonet correspondent

Amidst the commercial hoopla of Easter eggs, baskets and bunnies, Fort Benning celebrates the event of the Christian year with an annual Easter Sunrise service.

Three crosses will be carried into Doughboy Stadium April 15 for a commemoration of the resurrection and the crucifixion of Jesus Christ on Mount Calvary. The 7 a.m. service, which has been a Fort Benning tradition for more than 60 years, emphasizes Easter Sunday as being the most important day on the Christian calendar, said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"Easter is the main holiday in Christian worship, much more significant than Christmas. The church has been celebrating Easter for probably 250 years longer than they have been celebrating the birth of Christ. We want people to not only come to the sunrise service, but to the Easter services that follow. The other chapels are having services as well," Taylor said.

"Easter morning is a great way to start not only the Easter Sunday but the rest of the church year," said Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop, Chief of Family Life Ministries.

The hour-long morning program is nondenominational in the sense that Protestants, Catholics, and Eastern Orthodox are encouraged to attend, Koop said.

"This is a Christian event, and so any Christian from any denomination is welcome. And of course, anybody from another denomination is welcome, but it is not a nonsectarian service."

Guest speaker Chaplain (Maj.) Steve Berry, 75th Ranger Regiment, will address Christ's resurrection, its significance and the application for Christians today as part of the free event that includes music from the Army band, soloist Joy Dillow, and two local choirs — TIC Choir and the Sightseeing Road Choir.

A free continental breakfast will follow the sunrise service, which will be held in the Infantry Center Chapel in the event of inclement weather. All of the day's offering will be donated to Army Community Services.

Faith Middle School's advanced band toured Fort Benning's elementary schools this week, performing a series of 30-minute concerts to promote "Music in Our Schools" month.

"So many schools don't even know if they'll have a music program next year," said Kim Green, band director. "Here at Fort Benning, every school has an outstanding music program. These concerts are our way of saying, 'Aren't we lucky to have such incredible support here at Fort Benning?'"

Green designed a special program for each of the six elementary schools, including scores from Titanic and Walt Disney Pictures' Hercules and the theme from the motion picture Mission: Impossible, a crowd favorite.

"I liked the Mission: Impossible music because I recognized it from the movie," said Patrick Thompson, a Stowers Elementary fourth-grader. "They played cool music — exciting, not boring stuff like some concerts."

Green said she chose the music for its appeal to younger audiences.

"I wanted something they would respond to, something they'd be familiar with," she said. "They were awesome audiences. I think they enjoyed it. I know we did."

Eighth-grader Ashley Maignan said she enjoyed her first touring experience as a flute player.

"It was interesting to see what professional musicians go through. We did two complete concerts each day and had to pack and unpack the bus over and over. By the end of the day we were exhausted," she said.

Stowers Elementary School's music director, Lorri Blanchard, said the concerts, though entertaining, were educational for the the audiences and performers.

"Music education teaches more than just the principles of music. Young musicians learn to set goals and work hard individually and as a team, and they learn to feel confident in front of others — all qualities they need to be successful adults," Blanchard said. "The children saw this hard work and dedication pay off today. Our students were spellbound. What better way to celebrate "Music in Our Schools" month?"

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

Spring is finally here and the Main Mall Post Exchange is acknowledging the season with a garden sale. The PX is gearing up now for this weekend's sale.

There will be prize drawings to include tools, plants, and garden amenities. Customers can expect a huge assortment of annuals, perennials, ornamental shrubs and houseplants.

Some residents may covet a beautiful garden but are unsure of garden techniques. The PX has a plan for that too.

There will be local master gardeners, including myself, to answer questions and provide information about lawn and garden care Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. At the top of every hour, the master gardeners will be giving step by step demonstrations for good maintenance practices, container gardening and much more.

The schedule for the demonstrations are:

- Lawn care at 10 a.m.
- Disease control at 11 a.m.
- Container gardening at noon.
- Plant selection for Georgia gardens at 1 p.m. The PX has also planned a variety of savings in the garden center. Plan to come out and gather information for your 2001 garden.

Poets share their souls

Faith Middle School

Faith students share their thoughts through poetry:

I Am
by Abdu Santiago

I am a silent person with a kind heart.
I wonder if I'm a reincarnation of an unknown past self.
I hear Silence screaming at the top of its lungs.
I see the darkness looking back at me.
I want to escape from life at times.
I am a silent person with a kind heart.

I pretend daydreaming is an actual method to exit from a place and to calm my mind.
I feel spirits dancing in the streets while I'm in bed.
I touch the smooth skin of an angel when I close my eyes.
I worry for nature, animals, and for all the people that are suffering and dying.
I cry at the thought of losing loved ones and for the loved ones lost.
I am a silent person with a kind heart.

I understand the feeling of being unwanted.
I say love is the purest thing that exists.
I dream about travelling to the beautiful places of this world.
I try to do my best even though I slip.
I hope my friends will not die young, alone, and sad but rather old and happy.
I am a silent person with a kind heart.

I Am

I am a cool guy who likes rap music.
I wonder what my one-year-old brother will be like at my age.
I hear rap music even when the house is silent.
I see little music notes when they're not really there.
I want to make the year fly by so I can start driving.
I am a cool guy who likes rap music.

I pretend my radio works when it is broken.
I feel the beats of the rap music flowing through my ears.
I touch my radio knowing that I have the power to make it work.
I worry about my brother when he is not with me.
I cry when my grandfather, whom I truly love, gets sick.
I am a cool guy who likes rap music.

I understand why my baby brother likes my friends.
I say whatever I want to say.
I dream that one day my grandpa will be all right.
I try to make my grandpa happy with my school grades.
I hope I can make my grandpa feel better when he is down.
I am a cool guy who likes rap music.

I Am

I am a girl who loves rainy days, and playing her clarinet.
I wonder what I'll look like when I'm older.
I hear music in the back of my head when no one's around.
I see people from my past in my dreams, but they disappear when I try to remember them.
I want my family to live forever; I don't want to be alone.
I am a girl who loves rainy days, and playing her clarinet.

I pretend I'm someone else sometimes, someone with no worries who's never sad.
I feel my mother's loss when I think of her mom, because no one should have to lose a parent so soon.
I touch all of my thoughts on the shelf in my mind.
I worry about my future, whether it's good or nonexistent.
I cry with frustration because of my shortcomings.
I am a girl who loves rainy days, and playing her clarinet.

I understand you can't have everything you want.
I say you have to learn certain things from your own mistakes.
I dream of feeling at home someplace, with people I've known all my life.
I try to be a better person.
I hope to make a difference in someone's life, so I'll know I haven't wasted mine.
I am a girl who loves rainy days, and playing her clarinet.

I am a tall and lanky boy named Ren.
I wonder what my family's past is.
I hear shooting stars flying through the midnight sky.
I see my life passing by me while I get older.
I want to succeed in everything I try.
I am a tall and lanky boy named Ren.

I pretend I know nothing.
I feel dizzy as the world turns round and round.
I touch the white flowing clouds in the blue sky.
I cry because of poverty and death in this world.
I am a tall and lanky boy named Ren.

I understand the problems we have on this earth.
I say we should revive our planet and take care of it before we destroy it.
I dream of angels dancing in the sky.
I try to accomplish as much as I can.
I hope the world can become a cleaner place.
I am a tall and lanky boy named Ren.

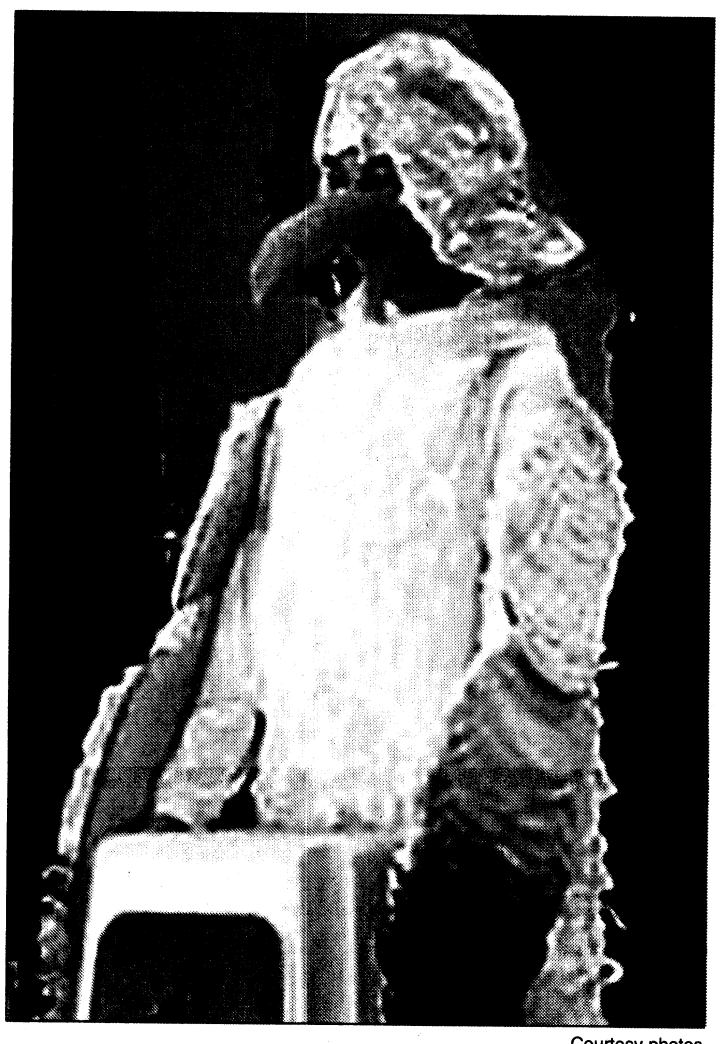
Faith students win competition with originality

Faith Middle School

The Faith Middle School Odyssey of the Mind team took the top spot over other middle school competitors at the regional Odyssey of the Mind competition in Warner Robins, Ga., Saturday.

The team, Clint Loyd, Bergen Goesch, Justin Cone, Kyle McKibben, Kris Kirby, Patrick Harold, and Taylor Osborne presented their eight-minute solution to the "Wild Winged Wonders" problem and received a raw score of 194.7 out of 200 possible points.



They scored 46 points out of a possible 50 for the style they presented through their membership sign, the "stained glass" work of art, the costume of the team-created bird named GottaLottaSeea (pronounced Gotta-Lotta-See-A), the costume of the mockingbird, Tequila Mockingbird, and the overall effect of the whole solution to the problem.

The team scored 73 out of a possible 125 for their spontaneous problem.

Both coaches, Anne Trawick and Cindy Givens, said they were very pleased with the children's performance, and they were also ecstatic that the team was awarded the most coveted and rarely given award — the Renatra Fusca of Creativity.

This award was given for the team's creative use of materials — one bird costume was made out of an old mattress pad; another was made out of coffee filters and baking cups — and for their humorous use of bird puns throughout the skit.

The team will now go on to the state competition in Milledgeville, Ga. April 21.

Garden planted in child's name

Classmates remember friend

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A snapshot hangs on the door of Katherine Walker's kindergarten classroom at Loyd Elementary School, a memento of a class field trip to Hamilton, Ga., in October.

"That's me," said 5-year-old Hope Thompson, moving her finger along the row of tiny smiling faces. "There's me, and there's Raymond — he moved to Germany, and there's Nicholle. She went to heaven."

Nicholle Goodfellow died suddenly and unexpectedly Oct. 25, just five days after the photograph was taken and two days after succumbing to what doctors believe was a rare bacterial infection.

Her classmates and friends gathered March 23 to share their memories of Nicholle and dedicate a perennial garden in her honor.

They remembered a little girl who "gave big hugs," who loved to laugh and loved to go to church — a little girl nicknamed "Nickle Pickle" because she weighed "about as much as a five-cent pickle when she was born."

A little girl who shared a kinship with her favorite pets — Oscar, the terrier, who "inherited Nicholle's klutzy" nature and tendency to run into doors — and the hamster she adopted from the school last year.

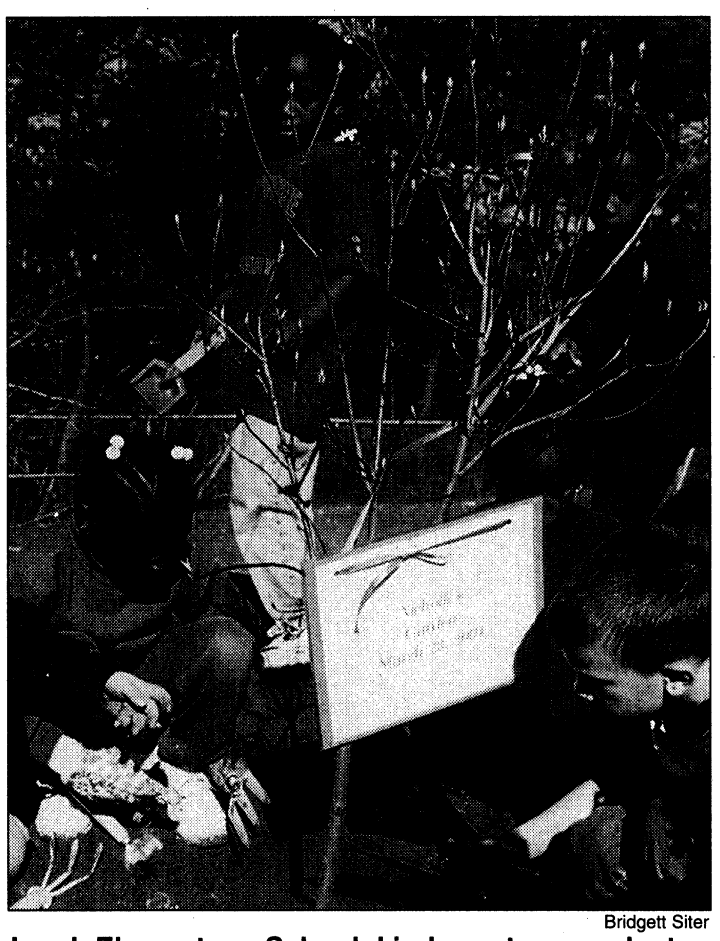
"She was my friend," Hope said. "She liked to joke and she made me happy. Now when I see this garden it will make me happy like her."

Goodfellow

Hope and her classmates were joined by Nicholle's mother, Lisa Juarez, and a group of parents who volunteered to spend the day creating an "earthy" tribute to one they called "an angel in the sky."

"She was such a sweet spirit. The kids talk about her all the time, and there's still so much of her in our classroom," Walker said. "They feel like she's still with us and watches us from heaven. In their own childlike way, losing Nicholle has taught them a lot about faith."

Walker began planning a memorial garden soon after Nicholle died. Friends, faculty and family members donated plants, including azaleas, lilies, mums and a pink dogwood for the garden's centerpiece.



"We chose carefully, so we'd have life in our garden all year round," Walker said. "We chose pinks and purples because they were Nicholle's favorite colors, and we added plants that attract butterflies because Nicholle loved them."

Nicholle's mother donated a statuette for the garden — the solitary figure of little girl, like the tiny, gold one she wears on her necklace.

"It represents Nicholle, so I wear it close to my heart," she said, smiling through her tears as she watched Nicholle's classmates playing in the mud as they planted flowers and shrubs.

Lisa recalled the last time she watched her daughter run and play with these same children.

"Everything was fine Friday. We had a great time on the field trip. We went to the Native American Heritage Celebration. Nicholle loved it. Then Monday evening she just quit breathing," Lisa said, struggling to compose herself. "I had to do CPR."

Bridgett Siter

Loyd Elementary School kindergarteners plant a garden in memory of their classmate, Nichole Goodfellow, who died Oct. 25.

Nicholle was kept on life support for two days, until her father and stepfather could return from Germany and Korea.

"They told me she wasn't aware of anything, but whenever I left her side, her vital signs would drop. She held on long enough to say her good-byes. I know in my heart that she was with us till the very end," Lisa said.

Nicholle was an only child, cherished by the mother who conceived her more than seven years after doctors said she'd never be able to have a child.

"She was our miracle. All I ever wanted was to have a child. I tried for so long, and I was so unhappy. Nicholle made me a happy person," Lisa said. "And then when I did get pregnant, I went into labor prematurely and she weighed only five pounds when she was born. So Nicholle's life was a miracle in itself.

"Sometimes I still ask why God would let this happen, but I know she was a gift from him for just a few years. I can't imagine the rest of my life without her. Maybe someday we'll adopt, but for now it just helps to see all these people who loved Nicholle. I'm glad she's being remembered this way."

Students write right, win contest

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The writings of five Fort Benning students have been selected to advance to regional competition in the Young Georgia Authors' Writing Competition.

The authors were presented certificates at Monday's school board meeting at Dexter Elementary.

"It is vital that our students are good writers if they are to enjoy successful futures," said Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools.

"I am so proud of the work these students have done. Students who are recognized as Young Georgia Authors bring outstanding recognition to themselves and the school system."

The Young Georgia Authors' Writing Competition is designed to encourage students to develop writing that represents their best efforts and provide a context for Georgia schools to support and celebrate the writing successes of all students.

All students enrolled in Georgia public schools, kindergarten through 12th grade are eligible to participate, but each school system can only submit one entry per grade level.

Fort Benning schools compete with Columbus schools in the Chattahoochee Regional Education System.

Students can submit any type of writing — fiction or nonfiction short stories, poetry, essays, journals, personal narratives, reports or any other original writing.

Corey Ray, a third-grader at McBride Elementary School, submitted a short story titled The Dragon and the Red Day.

"I was very surprised," Ray said. "I didn't think I'd win. I was just writing about something I like.

"I made it up, and it wasn't that scary.

"The dragon didn't eat anybody. I just like to make up stories about dragons, and red is my favorite color, so the dragon turned everything red," Ray added.

Besides Ray, Fort Benning winners are Cherelle Tatum, second grade, McBride Elementary, Amanda Carl, fifth grade, Loyd Elementary, Ebony Brown-Edwards, seventh grade, Faith Middle School, and Jamie Loak, eighth grade, Faith Middle School.

The winners of the state competition will be announced in the fall.

the airshow last weekend and couldn't go. He'll think twice next time."

Graham and a member of social services necessitated his son's attention.

"I think the program is working so far (with my boy)," he said. "He's walking the straight line. The earlier you catch this behavior, the straighter they walk.

"I imagine it may be harder for older children."

He said the added embarrassment of doing work in housing areas encourages other children to do the right thing and not get into trouble.

"Their classmates see them doing the work, and they don't want to be in their shoes," he said. "Passersby ask them what they did to deserve their punishment and walk away saying, 'Well, I'm not going to do what they did.'"

Jewish holiday rich with many traditions

Randy Kranepuhl
Shearith Israel Synagogue

reflections

This year, the Jewish people begin the celebration of Passover on the evening of April 7 with the first Seder.

Beginning at 6:30 p.m. at Shearith Israel Synagogue on Macon Road, we will tell the story of the enslavement of the Jewish people but we will emphasize more than that in the traditional Haggadah.

We will talk about the true beginning of the Jewish people, which culminated with the giving to the world of God's Ten Commandments at Mount Sinai.

Yes, we do mean to the world for Christianity accepts these Ten Commandments as do all Jews.

During the Haggadah, we will tell the story of the Exodus from Egypt. The children will ask "the four questions" the best known of which is "Why is tonight different from all other nights?"

We will tell the story of the 10 plagues and at one point, we take a drop of wine from our cups for each plague inflicted on Egypt as a sign of empathy for the suffering of anyone, even an oppressor.

We will eat of the bitter herb and of the charoset (representing the mortar used to build the pharaoh's monuments).

We will eat the unleavened bread, the matzah, which the Bible commands us to eat in this period of time as a remembrance of the time when the flight of the Jewish people was so quick that there was no time to allow the bread to rise. And we will eat a wonderful meal.

Traditionally Jews recline while eating, which is a throwback to ancient times when only the free people were allowed to eat in this position.

We will talk of the crossing of the Sea of Reeds (it was never the "Red Sea" — that was a mistranslation) and of the drowning of pharaoh's army in the waters.

We will remind ourselves that when the children of Israel and even the angels sang out in joy at the drowning of pharaoh's army how our God chastised even the angels saying, "My children are dying and you are singing?"

At the end, we open the door for Elijah, whom we pray will come to us and join our seder this year as an advance guard for the coming of the Messiah.

Passover lasts for eight days and we have seders the first two nights. During this time, we eat no food and drink no beverages that have any leavening.

It is common for observant Jews to clean their houses in excruciating detail to ensure there is no leavening nor leavened food or drink anywhere in the house.

This year, I pray and I believe all true Jews pray, for peace in the Middle East and in the world. It's time to learn to live together so we can all help bring the Messiah back where we need him to be — here on earth and with us to ensure peace becomes the norm, not a word or a wish.

Just a reminder — all are welcome at our seder on the evening of April 7, including the soldiers and family members at Fort Benning.

A $15 donation to cover food costs is requested, but there will be help for those who cannot pay.

For more information, call Randy Kranepuhl at 327-0985 or the Synagogue voice mail at 323-1443 for reservations.

As we say — Shalom and Hag Sameach (happy holiday)!

chapel notes

Stepfamilies create new bonds

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Neither the death of a spouse nor a divorce ends a family — these circumstances only change it. When remarriage occurs, the new spouse and new siblings do not replace anyone or anything; they add to the family relationships and dynamics. Stepfamilies are unique.

Newly formed stepfamilies experience both hope and sadness. The long-held marriage ideal and the dreams for the family have been shattered. The new parent may experience lowered status and stability.

The forming of new relationships with siblings and parent often produce a loss of personal contact, continuity and control.

After a divorce, the psychological presence of the nonresidential parent still lingers.

The stepparent's acceptance of the other biological parent is a positive gift that the stepparent gives to his or her stepchildren.

Custodial arrangements create frequent physical transitions from one household to another.

Each home has it's own set of rules and discipline. Stepparents will work hard to help children feel supported, wanted and secure.

Stepfamilies offer the opportunity to develop new traditions. The celebration of the stepfamily's anniversary, the keeping of a stepfamily journal or scrapbook and having regular weekly events all help to bond the stepfamily together into a new family.

New family roles, responsibilities, rules, relationships and sometimes a new religion can be challenging. Together, you can overcome these challenges and form a new home.

Additional help is available to strengthen your stepfamily.

Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries, located at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com for help.

Braves tame Tigers in YS baseball

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Braves' Taylor Ellis prepares to deliver heat in Saturday's YS baseball game.

Braves' pitching leads to 12-1 victory in youth game

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

It was a runaway game Saturday as the Fort Benning Braves beat the Tigers, 12-1, in Youth Services 9-11-year-old baseball action on Green Field.

The game was one of many for the day as the Youth Services Baseball Complex was dedicated and play began for the season. After a 9 a.m. opening ceremony for the complex, teams from all divisions took to the fields of the new complex as well as on Green Field.

The Braves came out on the warpath from the very beginning behind the pitching talents of Taylor Ellis.

Her pitching kept the Tigers from scratching out anything more than a single in the first inning.

Then it was time for the Braves to go to bat, and that they did. They started their scoring streak by bringing in three runs off a triple by Kevin Toliver. They finished the inning scoring the maximum of six runs.

The flow of the game stayed in favor of the Braves for most all of the four innings played before the game was called.

The tough luck for the Tigers continued in the second inning as the team couldn't even get a single. Then to make matters worse, several Braves players were walked before running in off of a double by Ellis. The inning ended with the score at 12-0, Braves.

It seemed as though the Tigers were on a short comeback in the third as Deandre Murphy smacked a line drive down the middle to take three bases, but team was taken out before he could run in to home. The Braves were also came up dry after their hot streak.

The referees decided to call the game in the fourth inning after an hour and a half of play.

The Tigers were able to bring in Josh Puckett off of a sacrifice single by Ryan Crossno, giving them their only run of the game.

Tigers assistant coach Owen Mehan said for his team's first game, the players hung in there as best they could.

"Everyone one else had already played one game, so this was our chance to see how things were working," he said.

"But as long they everyone had fun, I think it went well," he added.

He said now the plan is to work on pitching and outfielding after observing how the team played.

Braves coach Tony Toliver said he thought his did great for their second game of the season.

"The team played very well," he said. "They displayed some good basic fundamentals in both offense and defense and stuck together as a team.

"They are improving more as we go along into the season."

Games take place each Saturday at Youth Services Baseball Complex and on Green Field.

Raiders down Ammo Dawgs

Drill sergeants win first round playoff game

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The 8-6 Raiders surprised the 8-1 Ammo Dawgs at Bryant Wells Field House during a first round of the double-elimination, intramural basketball tournament game Monday night.

The soldiers played one of many first round contests held at the post's four gymnasiums. Teams will compete for their respective gym title — the winners to meet in the post final four, with the championship held Thursday.

The 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Raiders used tenacious defense and audacious rebounding against the bigger 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group, Ammo Dawgs.

Michael Johnson lead the Raiders with 20 points, most of which came via the fast break.

"We realized early on their whole team crashed the boards every time one of their players shot the ball," said Vondell Brown, Raiders coach. "As soon as they shot, we had Johnson break down court. We fought for the rebound and were able to set him up for some easy buckets."

A rapid five-point spurt gave the Ammo Dawgs the halftime lead, 20-19.

Nevertheless, the Raiders bounced back to lead, 44-34, with three minutes left in the game. Referees called a technical foul on the overwrought Raiders, who realized a huge upset may have been imminent. It almost cost them the game.

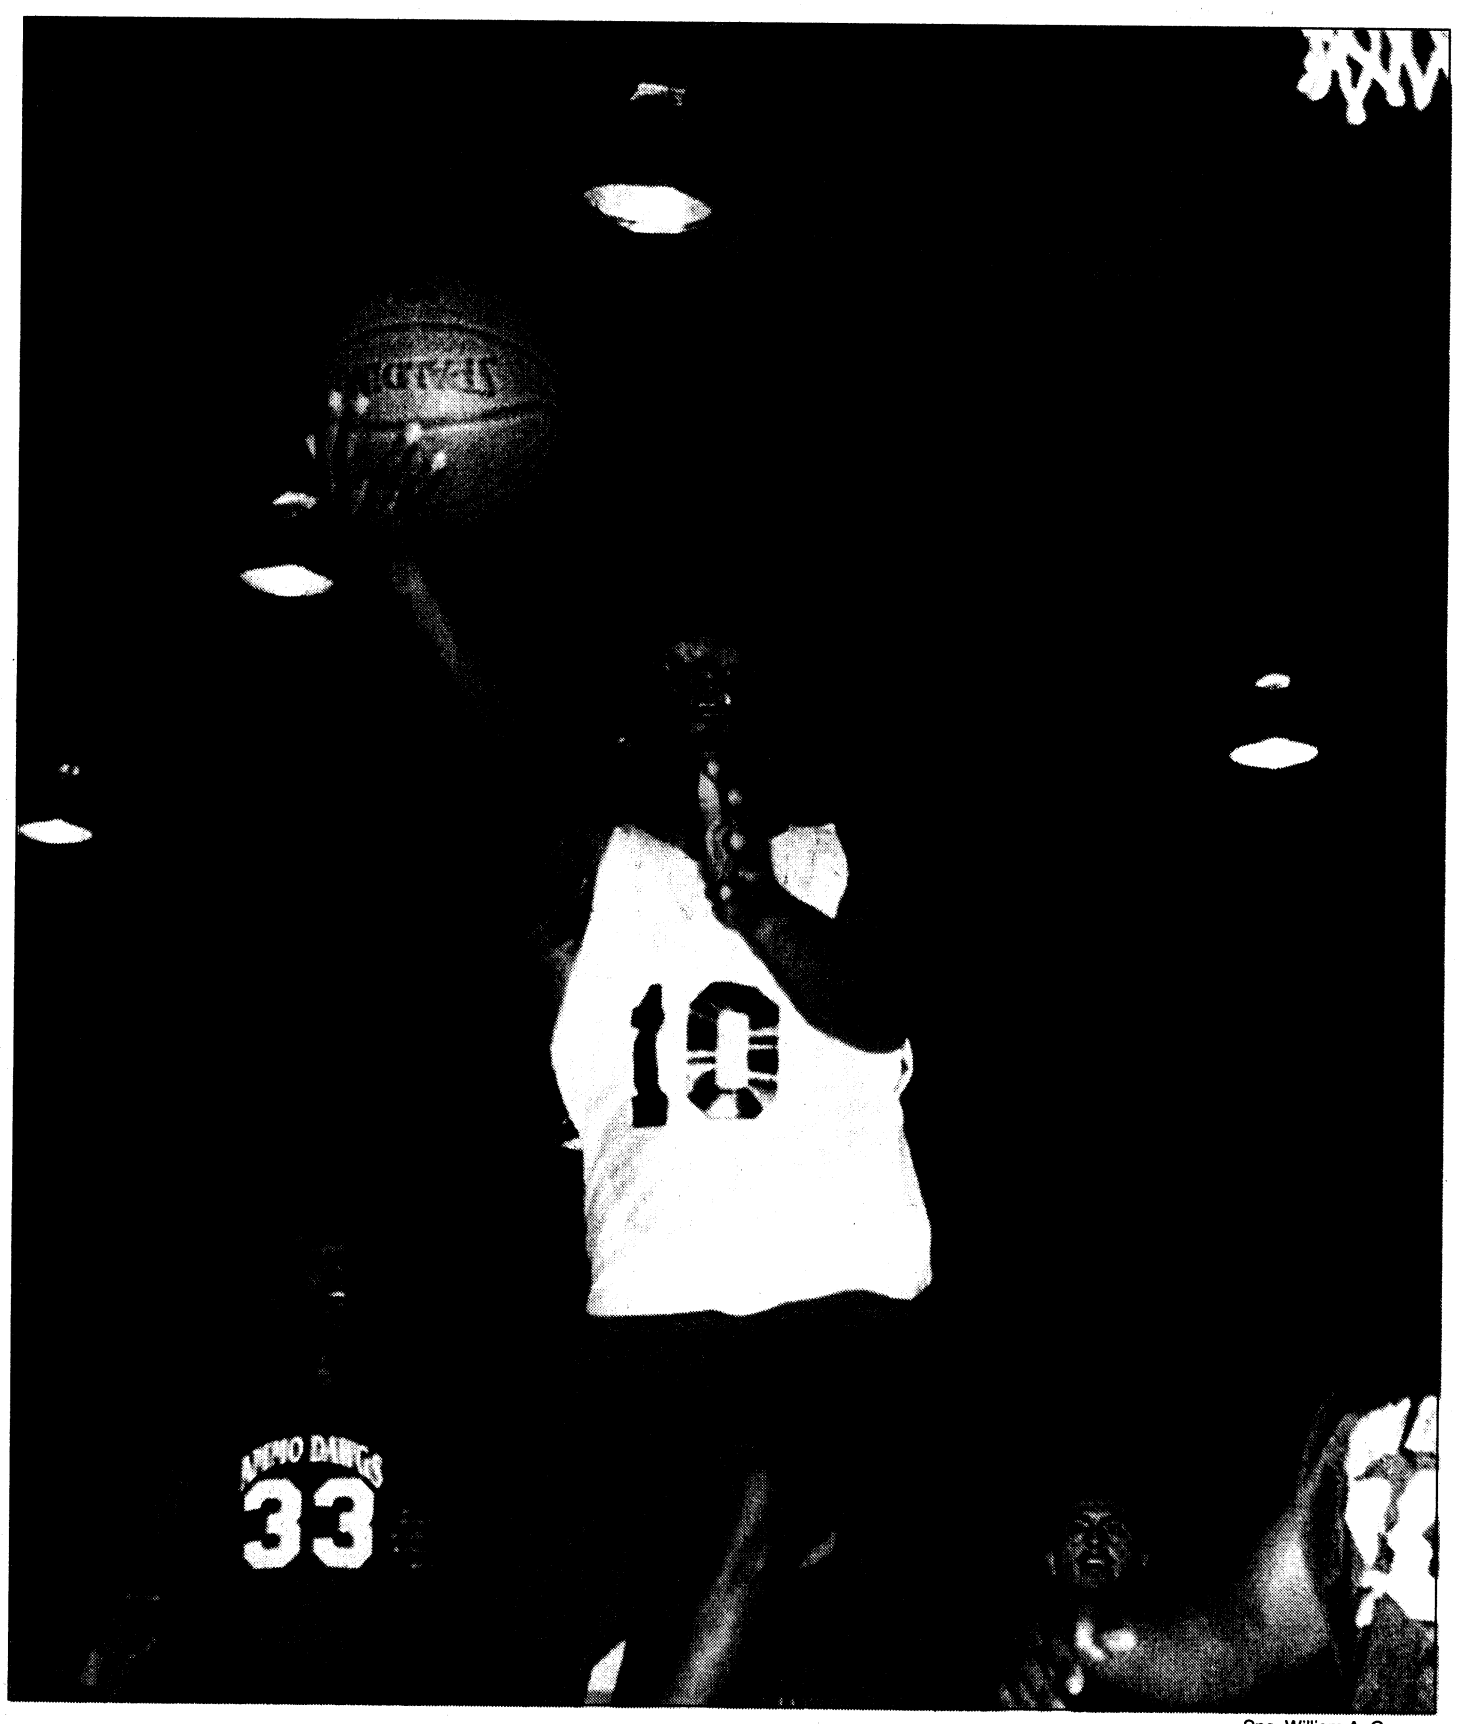
After the Dawgs made one of two free throws, momentum was on their side. Clifton Booker stepped up and knocked down a jumper, and after a quick steal, he scored on a layup to cut the lead to five with 2:09 remaining.

However, seconds later, Raider Clifton Robb sealed the game with a pivotal steal and layup, finishing the game with 11 points.

The Dawgs began fouling with a minute to go, but the Raiders remained calm and were true at the line.

The contest's furious pace did lead to a myriad of turnovers, but it was one reason the Raiders shocked the Dawgs, Johnson said.

"We were smaller so we kept the ball running," he said. "What won it for us was our defense and our battles on the glass."



As a result, the Ammo Dawgs chased the Raiders for much of the game.

Conversely, the Raiders were efficient at getting back on defense when their players missed shots.

"I think we can go all the way," Johnson said. "We lost some close games this year. Fortunately, everyone gelled together for the playoffs."

The Raiders benefit from drill sergeant training, Brown said.

National champions combine forces

Athletes team up to benefit cancer study

Alberto Betancourt
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Two former national champions rekindle athletic spark and team up to benefit cancer research.

Capt. Jose Solis and Spc. Ernesto Abreu, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, have a lot in common.

Both soldiers represented their countries in international athletic competition -- Solis was Puerto Rico's cycling champion from 1980-1986 and Abreu was Cuba's rowing champion from 1983-1991.

They've competed in the Pan American Games and the Central American Games. While both were stationed at Fort Lee, Va., in 1998, each ran the Army 10-Miler in Washington, D.C.

"Cuba and Puerto Rico are wings of the same bird united by heart, blood and bullet!" was the legendary cry that united both countries during the Spanish Revolution, where the native tribes of the Tainos and the Siboneys were almost wiped out. Yet, countrymen from both Caribbean islands, in jest, still argue as to whose flag really came first. However, with all the athletic comparisons, country similarities and heritage, there is a stronger bond that brings them together — they both lost their mother to breast cancer.

"My mother was my role model," said Abreu. "When she died, I felt discouraged from pursuing my athletic goals."

He said his mother, Olivia, who died in 1995 at the age of 50, was the driving force that pushed him toward athletic prowess.

"She was the one who told me never to give up — in the long run all my hard training was going to pay off," said Solis of his mother, Elsie, who died in 1998.

With all their training combined and personal attachment to the cause, their bid for champion has come full-circle with the upcoming Emerald Coast Sprint Triathlon in Panama City, Fla., April 21.

This triathlon is a first of a four-part series that donates all proceeds to cancer research.

The challenge for the soldiers — a one-mile swim, 20-mile bike trek and a three-mile run.

"We've been training very hard for this," said Solis. "We use each other's strengths to overcome our individual weaknesses."

Out & About at Callaway

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Saturday morning sky was filled with the swooping and diving of aerobatic maneuvers, which kept children positioning themselves for better views and screaming, "Wow! Did you see that? Ooh — look! Here he comes again!" and adults clapping appreciatively when each participant performed amazing feats that seemingly defied the laws of gravity and nature.

This was an air show that included great speed and split-second stops.

This air show wasn't Thunder in the Valley but the year's first Birds of Prey demonstration at Callaway Gardens.

Because I wanted to make sure we had good seats for the 10:30 a.m. show, I "route stepped" my 9-year-old through the crowd in the Virginia Hand Callaway Discovery Center to the path leading to the Discovery Amphitheater arriving at the grassy stage in less than a minute. We had a 30-minute wait to peruse the map, listen to birdcalls and watch a Canada goose mosey about, but we had good seats and I wouldn't be shooting into the sun.

A song, This One's for the Birds, was the prelude for the free-flight demonstration that included a red-tailed hawk named Bagherah, Horton, a great horned owl and Lady, an 18-year-old bald eagle with an amputated wing.

John Elmore, a wildlife lecturer with EarthQuest Environmental Foundation, introduced the first bird of prey, the red-tailed hawk, Bagherah.

While the 10-year-old hawk flew from perch to perch, I learned the hawk is the farmer's friend and that red-tailed hawks can be found sitting on telephone poles looking for field mice to eat. When the raptor flew to a tree limb above my head, I also found out I was sitting in the "splash zone."

What happened next was amazing — no I didn't get hit in the eye. The hawk fell from the branch soundlessly, diving straight down, seeming not ruffle any feathers to pull up inches from the ground to land on a leather bag with chicken meat strapped to it. Amazing. It happened so fast that if I had blinked I would have missed it.

Horton, the great horned owl, however, would not have. His eyes take up half the space in his skull and we only see 25 percent of them. Elmore said that if people had eyes as large as Horton each eye would weigh five pounds apiece. Good grief, Batman! Because the eyes are so large, owls have adapted extra vertebrae and have 270-degree field of vision.

The next bird of prey in the show was Renegade, the peregrine falcon.

The captive-breeding program of these falcons has been so successful, Elmore said, that now they are only "threatened," not endangered.

He warned the crowd about picking up a bird of prey feather out in the woods. It is illegal to have a feather, egg or part of a nest of a bird of prey, unless a permit is obtained, and the fine is a stiff one — $10,000.

Unlike the great horned owl and the red-tailed hawk, the peregrine falcon is a very picky eater preferring quail, duck, pigeons — other birds.

I think you'd need to be pretty fast to catch a bird. Peregrine falcons have been clocked at speeds of 270-300 mph. Their reaction time is pretty quick. Renegade came swooping and diving for a lure Elmore was swinging around his head. And when the lure landed so did Renegade. Luckily the raptor wore a bell, a 4,000-year tradition with falconers, otherwise I might not have been able to keep up with the swooping, diving bird.

The final bird of the morning show was Lady, an 18-year-old bald eagle whose left wing was amputated 13 years ago after she was hit by a truck. In the late 90s Congress enacted a law to prevent wing amputations.

A bald eagle's wingspan can reach 6 feet, Elmore said.

Another interesting fact is bald eagles don't come into the world with a white head. That doesn't start to happen until they are around 4.

The Birds of Prey show lasted about 45 minutes and was so interesting, Jessie and I came back for the 12:30 show. Nearly 400 other people came too.

We weren't as early and sat under a tree in the splash zone (lucky again). Not all of the raptors were the same in the second show. A 3-year-old bald eagle named Woodward was the last bird in the second show. Woodward's beak doesn't curve correctly making it impossible to rip and tear food. He couldn't survive in the wild.

Eagles use their talons to catch their food and can exert 1,500 pounds of pressure per square inch. Holy moley!

Both Jessie and I can't wait to go back and see the show again.

A daytrip to Callaway costs $12.84 for an adult and $6.42 for a child but if you are going to be in the area for awhile the annual membership might be the way to go. It is $36 plus tax for an adult and $18 plus tax per child, 6 to 12. There is no military discount.

Callaway is about 45 miles of Columbus. Take I-185 north to Exit 34, there is a brown informational sign just before the exit. Follow the signs to the gardens.

Team: Implements one, two, three drill tactics

"The three things drill sergeants do are: one — run, two — train, and three — fight. We implemented them tonight, and the combination of all three led to the victory."

He said the Ammo Dawgs entered the game over confident because of the Raiders' record among the teams playing at Briant Wells Field House.

"We came with a win-win philosophy," the coach said. "We had nothing to lose. I reminded the team, 'If we beat them, that's great. If we lost, that's OK because we were the underdogs.'"

With the upset behind them, he said his players would relax, relate and release to prepare for their next round.

"Win or lose, like we did tonight, we're not going to forget the point of these games — we're going to have fun."

The Raiders won via forfeit Tuesday, and, at press time, said they felt confident they would win last night.

The Ammo Dawgs also won Tuesday and Wednesday.

Bobby Seawright, Ammo Dawg coach, said, "No one can stop us now."

Triathletes: To participate in research fundraiser

schedules, (Solis as company commander and Abreu as the company supply sergeant) they've managed to incorporate training on all three events during lunch breaks, late afternoons after work and weekend sessions.

"I started swimming when I was 6 years old so it comes naturally to me," said Abreu. "I use cycling as a regular fitness routine and running is part of my daily aerobic training."

Abreu has a masters of science in physical fitness from the University of Havana in Cuba.

His training and nutrition advice has been another asset, said Solis.

"He's a great training partner," he said. "Like me, he's very competitive and has the same physical fitness goals."

Since the triathlons are held every other month, they intend to use their training in May during Fort Benning's Military Appreciation Week competition.

"This will be a great opportunity to represent our unit," said Solis. "It inspires me to compete with other soldiers."

Their goal is to motivate other athletes on post to some friendly competition and support of a noble cause.

"I hope by supporting cancer research through competitions like triathlons, other mothers can benefit and their children won't suffer like I have," said Abreu.

You don't pay tax on a Roth IRA

This is the big attraction of a Roth IRA—you don't pay tax when you make a qualified withdrawal, not even on the earnings and gains that build up.

You must follow certain rules, such as holding the Roth IRA for at least 5 years and reaching the age of 59½.

What's more, you can convert many traditional IRA accounts to a Roth IRA. And you can contribute to a Roth IRA after the age of 70½.

You will need to meet the guidelines, and make careful comparisons to determine which choice is best for you.

Other IRA options also offer tax advantages. For example, you can withdraw up to $10,000 from most IRA accounts without paying an early-withdrawal tax, if you use the funds to buy a first home or pay for higher education.

For all the facts on Roth and other IRA benefits, see your 1999 tax booklet. Or check the IRS Web site: www.irs.gov

Marne Focus wraps up

Monthlong exercise prepares soldiers for May NTC rotation

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

FORT STEWART, Ga. — Soldiers from 3rd Brigade wrapped up the force-on-force portion of Marne Focus, an annual, monthlong battalion and brigade level training exercise located in Fort Stewart, Ga.

The force-on-force portion matched Fort Benning soldiers against Fort Stewart troops in simulated battles using blank ammunition and multiple integrated laser engagement systems.

Employing the efforts of more than 4,000 soldiers, the brigade commander said his men and women turned out a top notch performance.

"Everyone has done a great job," Col. Tony Cucolo, 3rd Bde's commander, said. "I am very proud of them all.

"We had two days of torrential cold rain. They were digging fighting positions in the rain. My scouts were laying in the water when there was a report of an attack. My communication guys waded through water that was neck deep to set up (a radio relay system) so we could talk better. They have done a wonderful job and learned so much."

Soldiers of all skill levels said they learned a great deal, from senior NCOs down to one of the newest members of the brigade.

A tank from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, maneuvers during a mock assault on a enemy position during Marne Focus at Fort Stewart.

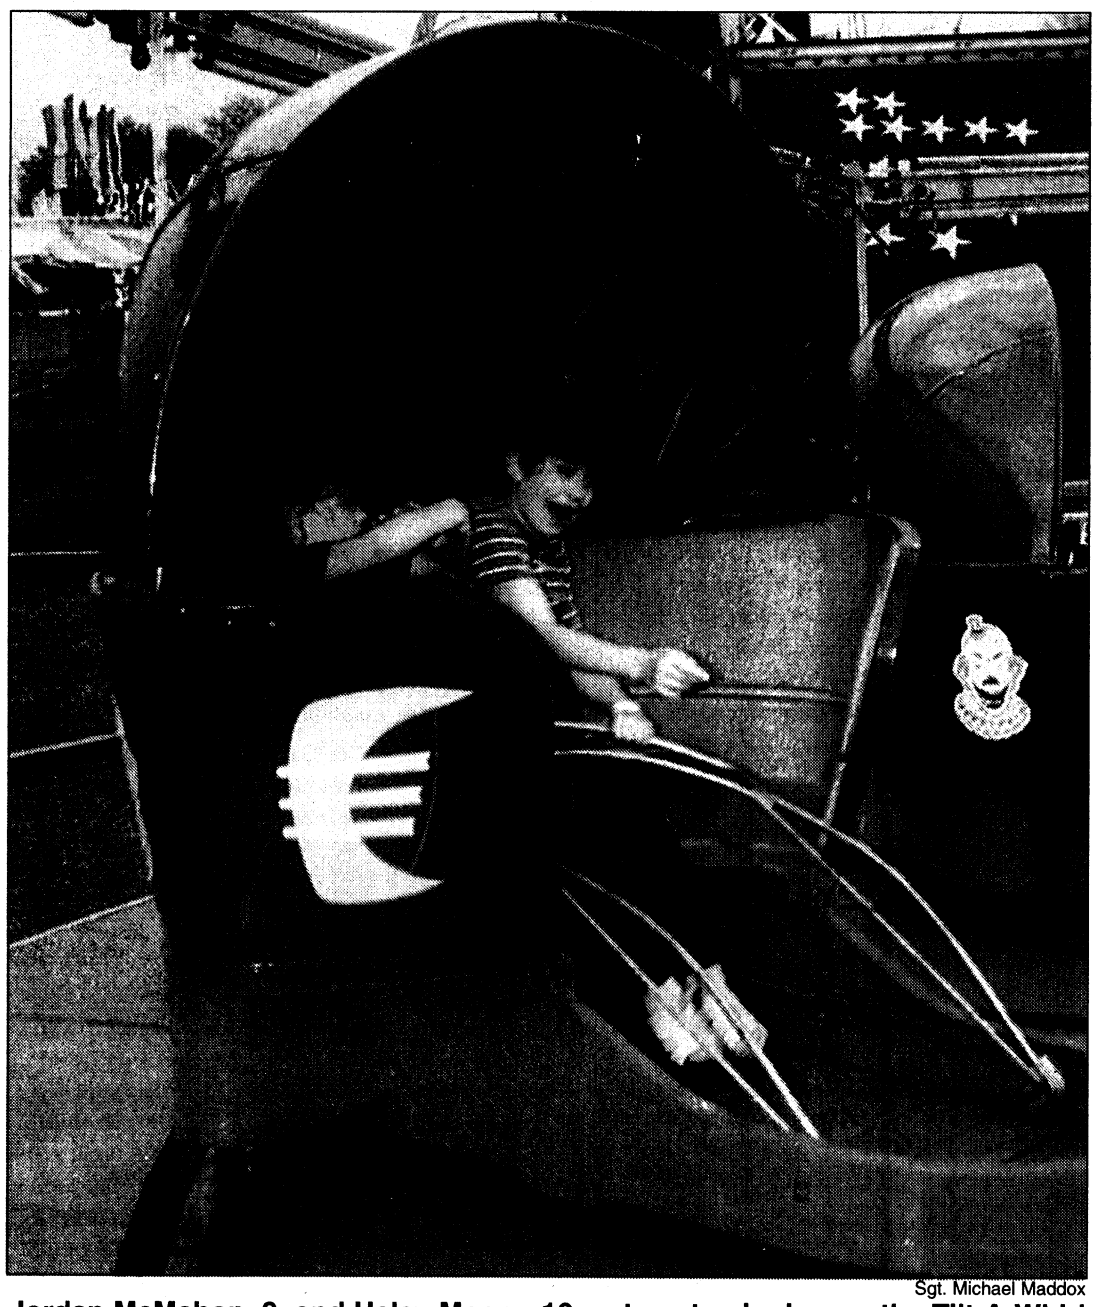
For Pvt. Travis Jones this was his first field exercise since reporting to his unit.

"I've had a good time," said Jones, an M-1 A1 Abrams tank driver for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion 69th Armor Regiment. "I'm learning a lot — learning how to work with the crew, learning how to drive in this terrain."



He said normally he would be driving in a more open terrain with not as many trees, but the experience was very beneficial.

"I am having fun," he said. "It definitely is a lot better than I thought it would be. I've heard stories on how bad the field was. In basic training I heard that you are always sleeping in the dirt."

Jones said the "war stories" he heard throughout

Navy aircraft not 'spy plane' say officials

Gerry J. Gilmore
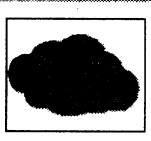
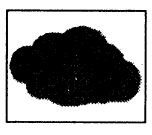
American Forces Press Service

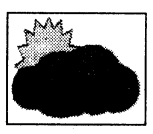
WASHINGTON — The Navy EP-3 aircraft and its 24-member crew now on the Chinese island of Hainan were conducting routine reconnaissance in international airspace over the South China Sea and not spying, a DoD spokesperson said.

Navy Rear Adm. Craig Quigley noted at an April 3 Pentagon press briefing that espionage wasn't part of the Navy aircraft's mission.

"This was overt, routine surveillance and reconnaissance, which is carried out around the world on a pretty regular basis by a variety of nations, the United States among them," Quigley said, refuting media reports that have suggested the EP-3 was on a spy mission.







Reconnaissance missions are carried out in international airspace under international rules, he said, adding that "the terms 'spy,' and 'spy plane,' and '24 spies on board,' and stuff like that just doesn't reflect the actuality" of the EP-3's mission.

He said he couldn't substantiate reports that the Chinese were stripping the Navy aircraft, calling such reports "rumors."

Quigley said the U.S. State Department has the lead in obtaining the release of the

Stabilization available for parents of seniors

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers with family members entering their senior year of high school may be able to stay an extra year at their current duty stations.

The U.S. Total Army Personnel Command sent implementing instructions for the initiative to the field via official message April 3.

Stabilizing Army families with high school seniors to reduce turbulence was among the top recommendations of an Army Community and Family Support Center Education Summit held last July. Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki heard the summit's out-brief and promised attendees to move forward quickly on the recommendations.

"This is about the Army taking some of the burden off Army families' shoulders," said Col. Jeffrey Redmann, deputy director of PERSCOM's Enlisted Personnel Management Directorate. "Kids want to go to the senior prom and graduate with the friends they've made over time. Army service shouldn't mean sacrifice for Army families. We're doing the right thing here."

Redmann said he definitely relates to turbulence affecting military family members. Growing up in an Air Force family, he attended three different high schools due to permanent change of station moves. He also said his son and daughter attended multiple high schools before graduating due to the requirements of his Army career.

Soldiers with a family member due to graduate high school in 2002 can initiate a request for stabilization by submitting a DA Form 4187 listing the family member's name and social security number. The family member must be enrolled in DEERS. A letter from the high school stating when the family member is projected to graduate must be attached to the 4187.

Soldiers stationed overseas must state on the form that they will extend their foreign-service tour to

No excuse for child abuse

commentary

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Last Friday morning at The Bayonet staff meeting, we were discussing what would be a good question for our next Various Voices.

We decided it should be something that relates to Child Abuse Prevention Month. The hard part was wondering if we could get people to talk to us about the subject.

As you can see to the right, we picked our question, but at the same meeting it made me wonder just how I would answer such a question if posed to me.

The subject of child abuse can bring out so many emotions in so many people, myself included.

If I were asked, I would say something along the lines of "Abuse of a child is one of those lines that should never be crossed. It's just wrong."

I know from experience that raising children can be very trying at times, but there is never anything a child could do that warrants such a level of punishment that goes past the line of teaching discipline.

Everyone has a different idea of where that line lies, put there by their own life experiences.

My line is anything that will physically harm or mentally scar my kids.

I'm not saying a swat on the rear end isn't in order from time to time in the Maddox house (it worked for me as a kid on several occasions), but you do have to think before you punish — take a step back before you act.

Maybe I'm a softy but my preferred method of punishment is to take away the video games, or a nice long discussion on the problem at hand.

Then there are also other types of abuse besides carrying a punishment too far.

Shaking a baby because he cries or gets into everything is also abuse.

You should never punish a child for doing what comes as natural instinct. Just take a breather and relax.

There is also abuse in the form of lack of attention or neglect of children. You see it on the news when children were left to fend for themselves for days in the absence of a parent.

I remember hearing a story like this in January where two small children in Arkansas nearly died in a house fire while the parents were away for hours. Luckily the children pulled through.

Leaving kids at home without food or supervision just isn't acceptable. I speak from experience on this one, so I make a special effort to share time with each of my children as much as possible.

There is no way I could list all of the ways that abuse can occur.

All I can do is hope this article will make you take a second to think about how you relate to your children.

Let's all do out part to help prevent child abuse.

Teen crime increases, more parental involvement needed

During the past five years, the teen-age crime rate has been on a drastic rise, ranging from drug trafficking to murder.

With the latest killing spree in Pennsylvania, the lawmakers of America are considering implementing radical control measures on guns.

The horrendous crimes committed by teens today have caused society to consider measures, that previously were considered suppression.

One of the possible measures that the lawmakers want to implement is raising the legal age for purchasing handguns from 18 to 21.

By raising the legal age, the lawmakers feel that it would make it difficult for the juveniles to purchase weapons. They also want to ban the possession of semi-automatic assault weapons and conduct a more in-depth background check to eliminate the possibility of weapons getting into the wrong hands.

Teens who are faced with domestic violence have a tendency to lash out or repeat the violence that they have experienced. Another factor often overlooked in teens is their performance in school.

Teens who have disciplinary problems in school may suffer from low esteem and feel they don't fit in with their peers.

The athletes and the honor students are normally favored by the administration, while those who are not so fortunate are looked down upon. Students may then bring weapons into schools in order to bolster their own egos.

Because of the weapons, schools need metal detectors and permanent law enforcement personnel walking the halls. Some students feel imprisoned or captured. With all these distractions going on, students lose focus of their academics, which can cause more turmoil among students.

There are no guarantees violent incidents won't occur again; however, there is a likelihood of copycat incidents. A good example of that is the school shooting in British Columbia, during which a teen-ager went on a shooting rampage and killed three students.

In an effort to minimize such incidents, society must be able to identify the warning signs.

If these warnings were recognized and taken seriously by schools, law enforcement and parents, the frequency of such shootings could be drastically reduced. Some common signs in all these incidents are the lack of parental involvement and not recognizing the cries for help.

Teens must become involved in programs that deter violence and promote consideration for others.

Neighborhoods are now being patrolled by police officers, especially in the crime "hot spots."

Some communities have intervention programs like the Little Village Gang Violence Reduction Program in New York. This program helps deter any type of gang violence and helps kids stay off the streets. Another program that is very successful is the Gang Resistance Education and Training Program where kids are taught values, morals and the need to reduce violence in their communities.

The control measures that the lawmakers want to impose may be a quick fix to the problem at hand, but the real question is will it be enough to prevent our teens from losing control tomorrow?

545-boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for Soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and unit commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Staff Judge Advocate response: A taxpayer's filing status is determined on Dec. 31 of that filing year. If the taxpayer is married on this date, he or she cannot file 'single.'

In order for one to file as 'head of household,' the taxpayer's spouse must not have lived with him during the last 6 months of the tax year.

A spouse is considered to live with taxpayer even if he or she is temporarily absent due to special circumstances, such as military orders.

VARIOUS VOICES

Where is the line between discipline and child abuse?

Staff Sgt. Paul Van Schie, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "If someone is going to use physical discipline, it should be in the context of letting their child know what they did was wrong. Abuse is just venting anger. That's the line."

Meta Bush, DoD employee — "Disciplining is trying to teach right and wrong and abuse is physical or verbal actions done to injure a child. Disciplining should be done calmly with a lot of talking."

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Don Taylor, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "A big determination is in the intent. Disciplining should have the intent of correction and improvement. Abuse is just to hurt."

Bettie Harris, DoD employee — "Excessive hitting, cursing, and yelling are all crossing the line. Many parents are not aware that verbal abuse or neglect is child abuse. I try to redirect and talk with my child instead of using physical discipline."

Staff Sgt. Walter Nesbitt, A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "When a child is fearful of a person, that is abuse and it crosses the line. There are other methods that can be used as teaching tools."

Spc. Nancy Ellis, 209th Military Police Detachment — "Hitting your child is over the line for me. I have a 9-month-old and can't ever imagine hitting him. I would put him in time out or say "no" instead of using physical means."

Students become teachers during course

Program puts students in teachers chair

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Melvin Riley, the student, loves to learn. Melvin Riley, the tutor, loves to teach. Every weekday afternoon, Melvin becomes "Mr." Riley, the teacher's aid, who loves to learn to teach.

Riley's a student in Jackie Belt's Introduction to Teaching course at Spencer High School. The 17-year-old senior spends more than six hours each week teaching first-graders at Fort Benning's Loyd Elementary School.

The class and the hands-on tutoring is part of Muscogee County School's Teacher Cadet Youth Apprenticeship Program, designed to encourage high school students to consider teaching as a career.

Now in its third year locally, the "Teacher Cadet" program is a collaborative partnership between Muscogee County high schools, participating elementary and middle schools and Columbus State University, which awards three semester credit hours to participants who earn an A or B in the class.

Riley and 18 of his classmates will spend 12 weeks assisting in the classroom, six at Loyd and six at Baker Middle School in Columbus.

They tutor one on one and in groups, grade papers, run errands, plan assignments and help with classroom projects.

"It's a win-win situation," said Angie McPherson, principal of Loyd. "Not only is it a great opportunity for these cadets to see what it's all about, but the kids love it too. They love their tutors and they look forward to them coming every day.

"And the teachers benefit from having the extra help in the classroom so they can spend more one on one time with students. This program has turned out to be far more then we ever expected. I hope we can continue this partnership for many more years."

Belt calls the course an "exploratory program."

"The whole purpose is to expose high school students to teaching by putting them in the classroom where they can get hands-on experience and determine for themselves if this is something they want to pursue," she said. "I love teaching, and given the opportunity to explore this field, I believe these young people will love it too. With the current shortage of teachers, this is the best way I know to encourage students to teach."

Riley is one of five students in Belt's class who already knows teaching is his career of choice.

"I didn't take the class to see if I wanted to be a teacher. I already knew that's what I want to do. It's a good opportunity to get some experience and get college credit for it," said Riley, who plans to attend Columbus State in the fall and eventually teach at a middle-school level.

Riley's experience as a teacher cadet has only affirmed his decision to teach, but Belt said some students will reach a different conclusion from the program.

She said the program ultimately "wins some and loses some."

"These kids are learning skills they'll use no matter what they decide to do with their lives. If they come here and decide not to teach, better that they find out now. Many of them plan to go into other careers involving children, so they'll benefit from their experiences in the classroom now."

Sarah Berry planned to become a teacher like her mother ever since she "was old enough to understand what a teacher was."

Teacher cadet Melvin Riley, 17, tutors Christopher Pouncie, a first-grader at Loyd Elementary School.

Only recently has she decided to pursue a career as a social worker.

"I always thought I wanted to be a teacher," the 17-year-old senior said. "But now I realize I really want to be a social worker and work with children. That's why I took this class — to get experience with children."

After nearly six weeks in a kindergarten classroom, 18-year-old Marie Menendez is now entertaining thoughts of becoming a teacher.

"I'm enjoying it far more than I expected," she said. "I underestimated these kids. I thought I'd be wiping faces and tying shoes, but they're very independent and very smart. Every night I go home and brag about my kids. Yeah, I could see myself doing this. It's fun."

New program lines jobs up for new recruits

Deal connects job candidates with employers

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

FORT KNOX, Ky. — Thanks to a recent formal arrangement between the U.S. Army Recruiting Command and Sears Logistics Services, Inc., more recruits signing enlistment contracts will have civilian jobs lined up upon successful completion of their enlistments.

With a signed memorandum of agreement in place March 20, Sears joined a growing list of businesses in the Army's "Partnership for Youth Success" program.

The Partnership for Youth Success program, also known as PaYS, seeks to partner the Army with industry for the benefit of both's recruiting efforts, according to program officials. The program is designed to increase the flow of Army recruits to help fill out junior enlisted ranks, while participating companies know they have qualified job candidates with solid work experience two to six years out in the pipeline.

"The U.S. Army is pleased to have Sears join our team as a corporate partner in the Partnership for Youth Success program," said Maj. Gen. Dennis Cavin, USAREC commander. "Adding Sears enables our recruiting force to offer post-Army employment opportunities to soldiers in a wide variety of jobs across America. This strengthens the Army chief of staff's goal of using the Partnership for Youth Success program as one of the tools to reconnect America and its Army."

PaYS post-service employment opportunities include jobs in emergency medicine, electronics and computer services, manufacturing, sales, logistics, construction, communications, and automotive and aircraft maintenance.

Under terms of the agreement between USAREC and Sears, young enlistees interested in gaining specific job training and qualifications will receive that training while in the U.S. Army. As part of the enlistment process, recruits sign a letter of intent to work for Sears upon completion of their term of service. As the end of their terms of service approach, the soldiers will then have an opportunity to interview with Sears for a specific job at a specific location.

"The PaYS partnership will provide Sears with a source of potential associates who have solid leadership training and experience," said retired Lt. Gen. Gus Pagonis, executive vice president, Logistics for Sears, Roebuck and Co. and president, Sears Logistics Services, Inc. "We know from experience that soldiers have essential skills and personal attributes that are well-suited to the logistics field. Recruiting directly from the U.S. Army will provide us with strong job candidates to supplement our other recruiting efforts."

When then-Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera announced the program last June, an initial cap of 5,000 recruits was placed on those allowed to participate. Program officials said they expect the cap to raise as more companies partner with the Army.

As of March 27, 247 recruits have enlisted under PaYS.

Companies currently participating in PaYS include General Dynamics, The Pepsi Bottling Company, DynCorps and State Farm Insurance.

For more information on the Partnership for Youth Success, check its Web site, www.armypays.com.

Soldiers to visit Holocaust museum April 19

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Fort Benning soldiers will have a unique opportunity to develop a deeper understanding both of Jewish culture and of the historical reality of the Holocaust during an April 19 visit to the William Breman Jewish Heritage Museum in Atlanta

"We're not looking at this as a day off," said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Blanks, 11th Infantry Regiment Equal Opportunity Adviser and the chair of the committee planning the trip. "We're looking at this as part of our education and awareness."

This year's trip will be the second sponsored by the post. Last year's trip was a success, Blanks said, that suggested the value of a return visit.

"A lot of them didn't know," Blanks said of the soldiers who visited the museum last year. "They'd heard, but they never saw."

The trip is open to 100 people — soldiers, Department of Defense employees, or family members are all welcome — who can obtain tickets for the museum visit through their unit equal opportunity representative. Tickets are $2 each — half the usual cost. The office of the 11th Infantry Regiment's chaplain, Maj. Stephen Russ, is covering the other half. Transportation is free. Buses depart Building 2509 at 8 a.m.

Also on the agenda is a visit to the Holocaust Memorial at Atlanta's Greenwood Cemetery.

"For two dollars, I think it's a wealth of information," said Blanks.

The day's events, Blanks said, represent a chance for soldiers to learn more about the country they defend.

"This religion helps make up who we are as Americans," Blanks said.

Wife compares movie storyline to real life

Moore uses experience to help others

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Hollywood is taking a little license with some of the details during the filming of We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

And at least one of the "details" — the family car — drew a chuckle from Julie Moore, the wife of retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore, the co-author of the book on which the movie is based.

"We had a much smaller car. I didn't get a car like that until he got back from Vietnam," Julie said of the roomy 1964 Ford Country Squire station wagon used in the movie.

The Moores watched from the sidelines March 23 as the cast and crew filmed along Miller Loop, the tree-lined street selected as the setting for several scenes in the movie.

One of the stately two-story houses on the street served as the Moores' home for the filming. But, in fact, Julie Moore and her five children moved off post once her husband and the battalion he commanded deployed to Vietnam in August 1965.

"I had 30 days to get off post; and, of course, he was gone, so guess who moved with five kids. I moved to a tiny house on Walker Street in Columbus," she said during a break in the filming.

Julie signed a copy of the book for one of numerous military wives who approached her at Fort Benning during March while the movie filmed on post.

"I just pray they never have to live through my chapter," Julie said.

The chapter is entitled The Secretary of the Army regrets .... It tells of taxicab drivers delivering telegrams to unsuspecting wives in Columbus informing them of their husbands' deaths.

Julie started following the cabs and tried to comfort the devastated families.

"The places I went to were trailer courts and small apartments," Moore recalled of the weeks following fighting in November 1965 between American forces and North Vietnamese regulars in the Ia Drang Valley.

"We had nothing. We just had each other. You know the old saying, 'The Army takes care of its own,' it was really, 'The women take care of themselves.' And we really did."

When several military wives complained publicly about the telegrams and how they were delivered, the Army formed casualty-notification teams of a chaplain and an accompanying officer.

"This battle was a total surprise and no one was prepared for casualties of this magnitude. So it wasn't until December that they were able to get the chaplains and officers coming to tell the widows," Julie recalled.

The day before the Miller Loop filming, Julie received a phone call from the widow of Sgt. Jack Gell.

"She was the very first one I went to visit. She lives in South Carolina now and is remarried. Her daughter, Carol, came down for the filming on Saturday," she said.

Other survivors and former soldiers from the 1st Cavalry Division visited the set to watch the filming.

"It has meant so much to these old troopers, and I know Randy (Wallace) wants so much to do this movie right," she said. Wallace is the film's screenwriter and director.

After wrapping up filming at Fort Benning, the production moved to California for three months of taping battle sequences.

The couple will leave their Auburn, Ala., home in early April and be on the set for some of those scenes, Hal Moore said.

"I have been repeatedly reminded that Randy Wallace, the director, is not making a documentary for the History Channel. He is making a movie for the American general public. And there are a lot of scenes in the movie that are true to life, and a lot that are subjective," Moore said.

"Our book really is an anti-war book. We hope — Joe (Galloway) and I — that the book will reawaken in the American people, and anyone who reads it, a hatred for war and a love for the American warrior. That's what the book is all about, and I hope that's what this movie will do," Moore said.

The Moores ventured in front of the camera once when they served as extras during a scene shot at the Infantry Center Chapel, and they were joined by two of their five children.

"We realized the movie life is not for us. That was a long day," Julie said.

The general purchased a "Gibson" nametag and has worn it pinned on his shirt while on the set.

"I thought, why not. He's wearing my name. When Mel saw it he busted out laughing," Hal Moore said.

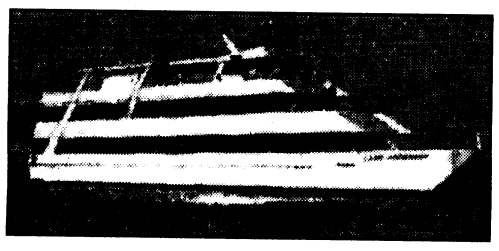
meet the stabilization requirement.

Enlisted soldiers must also list any scheduled training, such as schooling or temporary duty en route, on the 4187.



Officers with scheduled training should contact their branch assignment officer to reschedule that training.

The application suspense for soldiers with children who will be seniors this upcoming school year is May 30.

Beyond the 2001-2 school year, the suspense will be 12 months prior to the start of the youth's senior school year.

There will be instances where stabilization is not possible due to the needs of the Army, Redmann said, but those will be exceptions to the rule.

Soldiers add flavor to moviemaking

350 soldiers work as extras on movie set

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Standing tall and looking good, oughta be in Hollywood. From trainees to seasoned soldiers, more than 350 Fort Benning service members were given the chance to work as extras on We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

While some worked just one day, others were on the set for almost three weeks as part of a core group of 25 men moving from scene to scene.

In the large background scenes, the extras realize they may have a hard time spotting themselves on the screen, but that probably won't be the case with Sgt. 1st Class John Styron, a master trainer at the Airborne School.

Styron auditioned for and won a featured part in the film. He received a call after attending a casting call in Marshall Auditorium.

"The casting director wanted me to drop by the office at the Holiday Inn and have some more pictures taken," Styron said.

The photographs weren't of his face, but of his bare bottom.

"I got another call the next day and they wanted to take a couple of facial shots of my mean look," he said.

"I did my best without trying to force a mean look. I just tried to be natural," he said.

It worked.

Styron filmed a flashback scene recalling an incident between a platoon leader and platoon sergeant during training at Fort Benning. Styron portrays the sergeant, who is ordered by the lieutenant, to return to formation, along with the rest of the platoon, dressed in Class As on which all medals were to be pinned.

The sergeant, a veteran of World War II and Korea, returns with no medals pinned on and is sent back.

"I came back wearing only jump boots and two Medal of Honors around my neck," Styron said.

"This time next year everyone is going to see my hairy backside," he said. "I'll never hear the end of it."

Styron received $200 for the day's work.

"I was pretty honored to do this particular part, a double Medal of Honor recipient, and it was great to be a part of the movie," he said.

Those sentiments were shared by several soldiers who worked throughout the monthlong filming as members of a core group of officers.

"One day you are a nobody and the next you are involved in something like this. I'm very thankful they selected me, and if not for the Army I wouldn't have had this chance," said Staff Sgt. Ralph Jones, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

Jones has been selected to continue on as an extra during the battle scenes, which are being filmed in California. He leaves Wednesday and will spend 21 days on the set, bringing the total of leave days he's taken to participate in film to 52.

"It's been worth it," he said.

One of the highlights for Staff Sgt. John M. Farris, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., was the chance to hear the Nitty Gritty Dirt Band perform during lunch on the set.

"We were at Kings Pond on the helipad and they played for the cast and crew," said Farris, who in some scenes played a captain and in others a lieutenant.

While Farris found the work interesting, he said, "We've had long hours and many changes. The hurry up and wait has been worse than in the Army," Farris said. "We stand around three hours for a five-minute shoot."

Master Sgt. Tom Siter, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Ranger Training Brigade, earned $600 for one line

"Sir, Ma'am, welcome to Fort Benning."

Siter manned the front gate as Mel Gibson and Madeleine Stowe drove through with their family in a station wagon towing a U-Haul trailer.

"It didn't start out as a speaking part," Siter said. "On the first take, I looked at their orders and just nodded and waved them through the gate. Then Mel asked me if I'd like to say something on camera. I said, 'Heck yeah. I'll ad lib if you want me to.'"

If Siter's line survives the cutting room floor, he was told his name would appear in the final credits.

Some of the Army's newest soldiers answered the call from Hollywood.

When casting directors realized they were 200 soldiers short for a parade scene at Doughboy Stadium they asked the installation for help.

Relief arrived thanks to E Co., 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt., Infantry Training Brigade, which sent 154 soldiers and nine drill sergeants.

"We were doing recovery operations from our field training exercise so instead of cleaning their TA-50 they stood on a parade field," said Sgt. 1st Class Kevin Epps.

"They got a kick out of it. It went right along with the cadence, 'Standing tall and looking good, oughta be in Hollywood,'" Epps said.

The men worked two days. The first day they missed getting back to Sand Hill in time for their evening meal in the dining facility so the Elliot Durant, the extras casting director, purchased 154 Whopper value meals from Burger King — somewhat of a treat for the men the weekend before their graduation.

"The film people were very appreciative. Sam Elliott and Mel Gibson came over and talked to everyone and even posed for pictures with the cadre and the company. Once we get those pictures, we plan to send a copy to each of the 154 men who participated," Epps said.

The three were part of a core group of about 25 extras hired to portray soldiers in the movie, which is set during 1965. # Bye-bye Benning; Gibson film wraps up

Movie stars head back to Hollywood

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

It's a wrap, at least at Fort Benning. Mel Gibson, Sam Elliott, Greg Kinnear and the others from We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young completed a month of filming March 28 at Fort Benning and flew to California to finish the project.

For the most part, life has returned back to normal for members of the military community who participated in the production — some starting months in advance of the stars' arrival.

Randall Wallace, the screenwriter and director, spent two weeks at the Ranger Training Brigade last May going through an abbreviated version of ranger training in preparation for making the movie, based on the book of the same title.

During his visit, Wallace told reporters he hoped to film part of the movie here.

In January, Wallace returned with Gibson and a team of producers and directors to visit the sites being considered. It was also a chance for Gibson to visit with retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and Joe Galloway, the authors of the book. Gibson stars as Moore.

The Department of the Army and the production company reached an agreement allowing the filmmakers to work on post and filming started March 5.

The film company made an advance payment of almost $42,000 to the Directorate of Resource Management to cover any reimbursable expenses, such as labor, utilities, electrical work, construction and supplies. A special account was established for the purpose of supporting the movie.

Capt. Chip Colbert was working at the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, RTB, when he was told he would be assigned as a project officer for the production.

One of his first jobs was coordinating two weeks of training for the actors and numerous extras selected to appear as soldiers.

"At first I was skeptical and really leery of working with movie people with their egos and attitudes.

"I really didn't want to do it," Colbert said.

But after the two-week train-up, Colbert's opinion changed.

"That was a ball. The big-name stars were interested in the Army stuff and thought it was the coolest thing they had ever done," he said.

NCOs from the RTB, Infantry Training Brigade and 29th Infantry Regiment served as instructors, teaching the actors everything from the proper way to salute to how to hold and fire their weapons.

After completing the course, the stars were declared Honorary Doughboys during a retreat ceremony March 2, which honored all Vietnam veterans, especially those who fought in the Ia Drang Valley in 1965.

The ceremony proved to be the only chance the Fort Benning public would have to snap photographs of the stars during their visit. The event attracted more than 1,000 people.

Colbert flew to Fort Hunter Ligget in Jolan, Calif., in mid-March to coordinate the training of the extras who will portray both American and North Vietnamese soldiers during the battle scenes, and he will stay for the first two weeks of filming there.

Training was only one area of support the post provided.

The film company took over a warehouse, Building 228, as its production offices.

Furniture had to be moved, walls painted, electrical work completed — all paid for by Hollywood.

Vehicles, including 12 buses, from the post's inventory were used, as well as bus drivers.

Several ranges served as settings and the film company paid for maintenance for M-60 weapons.

They also reimbursed the Army for fuel used by Hueys, which flew in several scenes, including one shot at Doughboy Stadium.

A perfect setting

Here's a quick rundown on the Fort Benning sites used during the filming.

When the film is released in 2002, local viewers will enjoy trying to spot these locations:

Building 301 — This hanger at the base of the air tower at Lawson Army Airfield served as the site for scenes featuring the movie's Huey helicopters.

Camp Darby — Training scenes of soldiers running up a hill and tackling the Darby Queen were filmed here.

Infantry Hall — The lobby and first floor hallway of Infantry Hall served as an airport.

Jump Towers and running track at Eubanks Field — Soldiers boarded buses during night filming.

Riverside — A garden party scene was filmed during the night when temperatures dropped to 27 degrees. The cast and crew worked from 4 p.m. until 6:30 a.m.

Doughboy Stadium — The film company temporarily removed the goal posts for this scene depicting a farewell sendoff for the Air Cavalry on their way to Vietnam.

Ranges

Galloway Range — Soldiers listened to a tactical radio.

Brinson Range — Soldiers trained with M-60s.

Kelley Hill — A Fort Benning main gate, complete with guard house, was created at the Kelley Hill entrance off Ivey and 1st Division Roads.

The Infantry Chapel — A church service scene was filmed including a soloist, choir and a congregation of extras.

Kings Pond — An off-duty soldier takes his date to the location.

Miller Loop — Three sets of quarters served as homes of key characters.

The crew and cast spent several days filming on this housing set.

Building 2492 — A hanger at Lawson Army Airfield served as the set for the upstairs bedrooms of the Moore family.

Casting notes

Soldiers, family and community members selected as extras on the film will have countless stories to tell friends and family.

Lon Hodges, 39, was walking out of a Columbus bar when he was approached by a casting assistant who asked his height and waist size. Hodges, at 6'1", has graying hair and a 30-inch waist.

"I told her that was kind of personal, but then she asked if I would be interested in being a stand-in for Sam Elliott," Hodges said.

He was hired the next day.

One Fort Benning spouse almost passed up the chance to appear in five scenes as a member of the core group of officer wives.

Annie Isacco, who attended a casting call at Marshall Auditorium, received a call from the casting director offering her the part and wanting her the next day for hair and wardrobe.

Isacco's husband was out of town and she was worried about child care for her three young children, all under the age of 5.

"I said no to Hollywood," she said.

But a few minutes later, she had second thoughts and called her husband.

"He said I should have done it," Isacco said. "But I didn't even think to get their phone number."

Luckily she punched the Star 69 buttons on the phone and eventually reached the casting office.

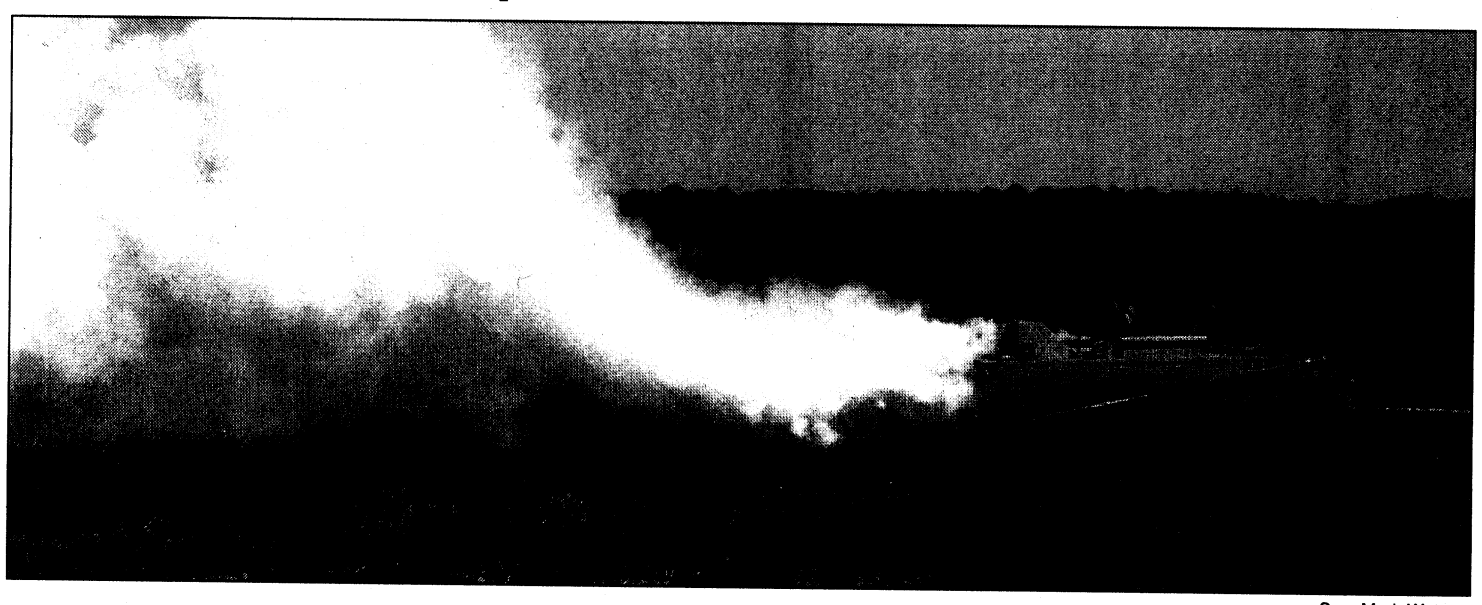
And, fortunately, child care proved not to be a problem.

The assistant producer saw Isacco's children when she dropped by to pick up paperwork a few days before filming started, and he offered the three jobs as extras in the chapel scene.

Isacco and her three children — Isabella, 4, Catherine, 3, and Michael, 1, — sat in the front on a pew beside retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and his wife, Julie, during the scene.

"I asked the director if he knew what he was doing because when I go to real church I sit in the back with them.

"Instead, he put us just in front of Madeleine Stowe," Isacco said.



"I knew I was doomed. But the only time they asked us to leave was during the recording of the sound track."

In addition to the Doughboy Stadium, Miller Loop and Riverside scenes, Isacco worked as a hand double for Stowe, ringing doorbells for several hours.

Despite her few weeks of working on a major movie, Isacco said she had a reality check waiting at home each day.

"I still had to change dirty diapers, and there was a mountain of dirty laundry just waiting to be done."

the training were just that — stories.

"Here we sleep in the tank, so it isn't so bad," he said.

Other members of Jones' tank crew said they are learning more in every engagement.

"The training is a whole lot more intense here," Sgt. Karanlall Brijbukhan, the tank's gunner, said.

He said the best part of Marne Focus was seeing the brigade come together.

Brijbukhan said fighting the mock battles against soldiers they do not face on a regular basis is a great asset.

"It makes things much more realistic and challenging. "They've been very tough and put up a good fight. We are just doing our best."

Marne Focus is also designed to prepare the Kelley Hill soldiers for their rotation to the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif.

"This is the best preparation for NTC," Cucolo said. "There are not a lot of divisions that spend the resources or time to train to this level — we do and that's the reason we are ready for war."

The 3rd Brigade soldiers are slated to deploy to the desert sands of the NTC in late May.

Navy aircraft and its crew, and that an U.S. diplomatic delegation met with the EP-3 crew April 3.

President Bush said April 3 that a military officer with that U.S. delegation "tells me they are in good health, they suffered no injuries, and they have not been mistreated.

"Our crew members expressed their faith in America, and we have faith in them. They send their love to their families. They said they're looking forward to coming home, and we are looking forward to bringing them home."

The president said the U.S. had offered the Chinese help in searching for the missing fighter pilot who collided with the American plane on March 31.

Bush noted that the United States' approach throughout the situation has been to keep the accident from becoming an international incident.

"But now it is time for our servicemen and women to return home, and it is time for the Chinese government to return our plane," Bush said.

He added that the unresolved situation "has the potential of undermining our hopes for a fruitful and productive relationship between our two countries."

Quigley called the mid-air collision "an accident, to the best of everybody's knowledge."

He said there had been "several fairly close approaches by Chinese fighters" around U.S. surveillance flights in the past three to four months.

"We have expressed our concerns to the Chinese, thinking that they were flying too close, creating an unsafe situation," he said.

Quigley added that U.S. officials would need to interview the EP-3 crew later to completely assess the cause of the collision.

After the collision, about 70 miles from Hainan, the EP-3 flashed a mayday and then made the short flight to the nearest airfield — which was on Hainan, he said.

"Clearly, we believe there is a diplomatic solution to this incident and not a military one," Quigley said, adding that senior defense officials continue to be concerned over the welfare of the EP-3 crew and the concerns of their families.

courts-martial

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

At a general court-martial March 7, Pvt. Charles C. Cutting Jr., C. Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was convicted of one specification of aggravated assault and one specification of absent without leave.

He was sentenced to be confined for a period of 22 months, to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, and to be discharged from the service with a bad-conduct discharge.

At a general court-martial March 6-7, Sgt. Roderick K. Ellis, 324th Combat Support Hospital, Perrine, Fla., was convicted of one specification of striking a superior NCO, one specification of insubordinate conduct towards an NCO, and one specification of assault.

He was sentenced to be reprimanded and reduced to the grade of E-4.

Private firearms banned in Germany

Restrictions remain in effect

Army News Service

HEIDELBERG, Germany — As the relocation season approaches, U.S. Army Europe officials are reminding soldiers and civilians that a restriction is in place prohibiting the shipping, transporting, or hand carrying of privately owned firearms to Germany.

This importation restriction does not affect private firearms covered by a valid German Weapons Possession Card, known as Waffenbesitzkarte, or WBK, officials said.

The temporary weapons restriction, in place since Sept. 26, will remain in effect until USAREUR and the German Federal Ministry of the Interior finalize procedures for soldiers and civilian employees to obtain a WBK through the U.S. Armed Forces.

USAREUR officials said these procedures, when in place, will allow military and civilian personnel assigned to the command to obtain a WBK without having to interact directly with German WBK issuing offices.

Until these procedures are implemented, officials said the temporary restriction on importation is necessary to avoid the possibility of incoming personnel unwittingly taking delivery of household goods and facing sanctions under the German Weapons Law or the Uniform Code of Military Justice for unlawful possession of an unregistered firearm.

The restriction will be modified or rescinded, officials said, when procedures are in place for U.S. military personnel to obtain the WBK through U.S. armed forces channels.

Hot chow: Soldiers come 'n' get it

Warm food makes field more enjoyable

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

FORT STEWART, Ga. — It's raining, you are cold, tired and looking forward to getting back to your own bed. And then it happens.

What is that smell?

The aroma of turkey, mashed potatoes and gravy, beans, corn and steaming hot coffee drift through the air and to your nose.

Your stomach is rumbling, and you feel as if your belly button is rubbing against your backbone.

Your tray of food is served with a friendly smile and as you down that first bite, you feel as if you are in heaven.

A little slice of heaven, soldiers say, is what the cooks for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade serve their soldiers on a daily basis while in the field.

Such was the case during 3rd Brigade's latest exercise — Marne Focus, a nearly monthlong exercise in Fort Stewart, Ga.

"It's a shot in the arm of motivation," Spc. Jacob Clien, HHC, 3rd Bde., said of the hot meals.

The soldiers who work in the mobile kitchen trailer provide three meals a day, rain or shine.

"It can be hard, it can be stressful but it's a lot more fun than working in a dining facility," said Pvt. Melinda Andrews, a member of the cooking team. "Here you get to work with your unit more."

She said even though it is stressful for her co-workers to prepare meals in a timely manner and in all kinds of weather, she feels they work better as a team while in the field.

Like most soldiers who are deployed or on training exercises in the field, long hours are the standard, and the cooks from 3rd Brigade are not exempt.

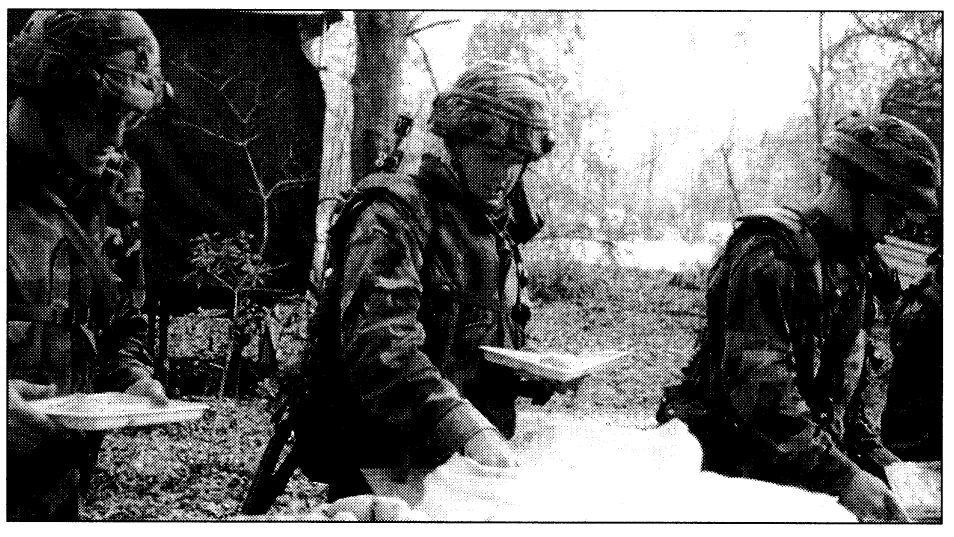
In fact they often work longer hours than many troops they feed.

"They are up at 4 a.m. every morning and usually hit the sack around 11 p.m.," said 1st Sgt. Martin Seay, HHC. "They work very tough hours but don't complain at all."

While the long hours are just part of the job, the cooks say in the end, it's all worth it, especially when they receive praise from the hungry soldiers.

Andrews said the best part of the job comes when the soldiers approach her and say they appreciate the hard work and the hot meal.

After all, soldiers' only other option for food in the field is MREs, so when chow time comes around, soldiers will line up outside the mobile kitchen to receive their share.



"The food here is definitely a lot better than MREs," said Pfc. Phillip Gulley, Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regt. "It makes the field much more convenient.

"The hot food makes me feel a lot better," he said. The people here really (work hard) and do a great job."

Other soldiers who eat at HHC's mobile kitchen trailer, agree the three meals they eat a day are much better than a MRE or even other unit's mobile kitchens.

"The food here is just a cut above the others," Clien said. "Here you always get good food and a friendly smile."

Soldiers receive quality dental care in field

Dentist packs up clinic, goes to field

Spc. Mark Watson

Spc. Mark Watson

Capt. Cathy L. Cook demonstrates dental care while in the field.

FORT STEWART, Ga. — Soldiers who need their teeth cleaned or other dental work performed while in garrison have no trouble doing so. All they have to do is make an appointment.

But what do they do if they are deployed to the field? What is the Army going to do, pack an entire dentist's office and move it to the field?

In a word — Yes.

"I've done more than 150 examinations since we've been out here," said Capt. Cathy L. Cook, 3rd Brigade's dental officer.

Cook performed the exams in her mobile dentist office, a small trailer filled with instruments and equipment necessary in the dentistry field.

"Everything they (the dentists) can do in a clinic, I can do out here," he said. "I can do extractions, cleanings, fillings, exams and root canals. I can take X-rays and develop them all right here."

But why is dental service important in the field?

"Field dental support is important to provide routine care that soldiers deserve," said Col. David B. Clem, commander of the U.S. Army Dental Activity. "But it is most important to provide emergency care. Most dental emergencies are quite painful and require immediate attention. Without field dental support, soldiers must be sent further to the rear and are lost from their units."

Cook told of one accident that required immediate care.

"One guy got hit in the face with a kevlar out here," she said. "He bit through his lower lip and broke six to eight of his teeth. So I sewed his lip and splinted his teeth and was able to fix him up."

Besides emergency situations, 3rd Brigade soldiers use the dental trailer for routine dental care as well.

"Having this in the field is a huge advantage," Cook said. "Coming here saves a lot of time. For a lot of soldiers dental care is not a priority. This helps expedite the process on the back end.

"Going to the dentist (while in garrison) takes up their free time," she said. "Out here they can make an appointment and get an exam on their free time."

Not only does dental care in the field save time, in can also save soldiers discomfort.

"I believe that soldiers in a field environment appreciate dental support," Clem said. "I am sure this is true if an individual has a painful emergency and a dentist is available to alleviate the discomfort."

Another crucial aspect of the dental officer is helping out the doctors and surgeons when a group of wounded soldiers arrive for treatment.

"I also triage people as they come in," Cook said. "I will triage them before they are treated and before they are medevaced."

Although Cook wears more than one hat in the field, the main priority is dental care.

In spite of the 150 exams she performed Cook said she wants more soldiers to take advantage of the service.

"I think we can get a higher number of people seen," she said. "Dental care is important. It is free here. On the outside people would pay a whole lot of money for the services. They need to take advantage of it here. All they have to do is sit here and they will receive a good exam."

4th Infantry Division revolutionizes NTC training

Digital system to help eliminate friendly fire

Spc. Johnny A. Thompson
Army News Service

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — In the largest rotation ever at the National Training Center, the 4th Infantry Division (Mechanized) started its quest March 31 to win the battle and demonstrate its new hi-tech digitized systems.

In the dimness of the cool desert morning, the 4th ID received its marching orders and elements of the 2nd Brigade Combat Team started rolling out.

By 4:30 a.m. they began maneuvering their way across the desert training area known as the "box" to officially begin their battle against the NTC's opposing force.

The Division Capstone Exercise at NTC is the Army's first look at the 4th ID's elite mechanized and aviation war-fighting capability under realistic battlefield conditions, officials said.

The DCX has drawn more than 11,000 soldiers and civilians — the latter being on hand to provide support services and technical assistance, officials said.

"Our intent is to conduct an exercise that creates the conditions for 4th ID's mechanized and aviation brigades to demonstrate they are combat mission capable," said Maj. Gen. B.B. Bell, exercise director and commander of the U.S. Army Armor School and Center at Fort Knox, Ky. "This exercise is not an experiment. Its intent is to give 4th ID a chance to train for war."

The 4th Infantry Division was designated as an experimental force in 1995 by the Army to develop the power of digital communications and adapt doctrine to take advantage of it. Since that time, 4th ID has developed and experimented with digitized systems, and officials said DCX is the transition stage from experiment to execution.

"The exercise is designed for the division to thrust the mechanized brigade into complex threat and terrain environments expected on 21st century battlefields. Additionally, the Aviation Brigade Task Force will fight in the division's air battle space employing enhanced battle command and control systems," Bell said. "That is the purpose of this monumental undertaking by the Army."

One of the new digitized systems 4th ID will unveil is the Force XXI Battle Command Brigade and Below. The FBCB2 is designed to facilitate communications between multi-vehicle platforms, officials said, to give soldiers assets they didn't have before.

It allows a soldier to know where he is, where his buddy is, and know where the enemy is, officials said, adding it allows units and their commanders to see first, understand first, and act first.

"In the past, we (the Army) had a lot of friendly fire accidents because we weren't always in sync with each other," said Pfc. Leonardo Rodriguez, a M-1 A-2 Abrams tank driver with B Company, 1st Battalion, 67th Armor, 4th Infantry Division. "We didn't always know where everyone else was, and sometimes mistook one another for the enemy.

"But with this system, everyone is on the same page. The FBCB2 lets everyone communicate and know who's who."

"This system is the start of the Army's future," said Staff Sgt. Robert Munsey, also a member of B Co. "The FBCB2 is another eye for soldiers. This system is a soldier's battle buddy.

"In the past I had to remember to log in reports, but in a battle you forget numbers or you wait until later which gives commanders inaccurate reports," Munsey said. "The new system allows me to log in reports on sight, which helps commanders get my soldiers and me the supplies we need. From fuel to food, commanders know what we need within a few minutes."

The "box" in which the 4th ID, the Blue Force, will engage the NTC's opposing force has been greatly expanded from previous NTC rotations, officials said.

It will allow the Blue Force commander to disperse his force over a greater area, they said, adding that the NTC measures just more than 350,000 acres.

Since the commander should know where the enemy is, he can operate with smaller groups over a much greater area, officials said.

Being networked, the groups should be able to mass their fires to greater destructive effect against the OPFOR.

Before departing for the battle, 4th ID spent its first weeks at Fort Irwin performing precombat checks on equipment and machinery during the reception, staging, onward movement and integration phase of the operation.

For the next two weeks, division leaders and soldiers will be in continuous operations, which Bell said does not mean constant "combat," but he said it will still stress the bad guys and the good.

Events on the DCX calendar include deep attacks, digital deliberate attacks, and live-fire. The DCX will conclude April 14.

Two women, one part-time salary and a 60-hour work week.

Deborah Holton is a part-time employee who typically puts in more time than she's paid for. But you won't hear her complain. As Fort Benning's installation volunteer coordinator, she knows the importance of giving, whether it's time, talent or teamwork.

Carla Federovich is a team player herself. In January she left her position as installation volunteer coordinator at Fort Drum, N.Y., to accompany her husband while he attends the Infantry Captains' Career Course at Fort Benning.

With time to kill and experience to offer, Federovich offered her services to Holton — pro bono.

"It's a good way to meet people in the community and see what resources are available," Federovich said. "And at the same time, I'm keeping my skills honed and staying abreast of any changes in the job. I enjoy what I'm doing and it looks good on my resume whether I'm getting paid or not."

Holton calls Federovich a "godsend."

"She's done the job, she knows the ropes and she knows the importance of what we're doing," Holton said.

What they're doing is setting an example for volunteers and potential volunteers in the Fort Benning community.

Holton's job is to coordinate the volunteer efforts of more than 2,500 soldiers, retirees and family members who donate their time and skills to the Fort Benning community.

MPs profile cars with children for safety check

Special to the Bayonet©

Stefanie Cook wasn't upset last week when Fort Benning military policemen stopped her and her two young children during their drive onto post. In fact, she was happy.

Safe Kids of Georgia Columbus Coalition representatives, military police activity and various volunteers were holding the first Fort Benning Car Seat Check Point on Custer Road March 28. Drivers were offered the chance to have their existing seats evaluated and inspected for proper use.

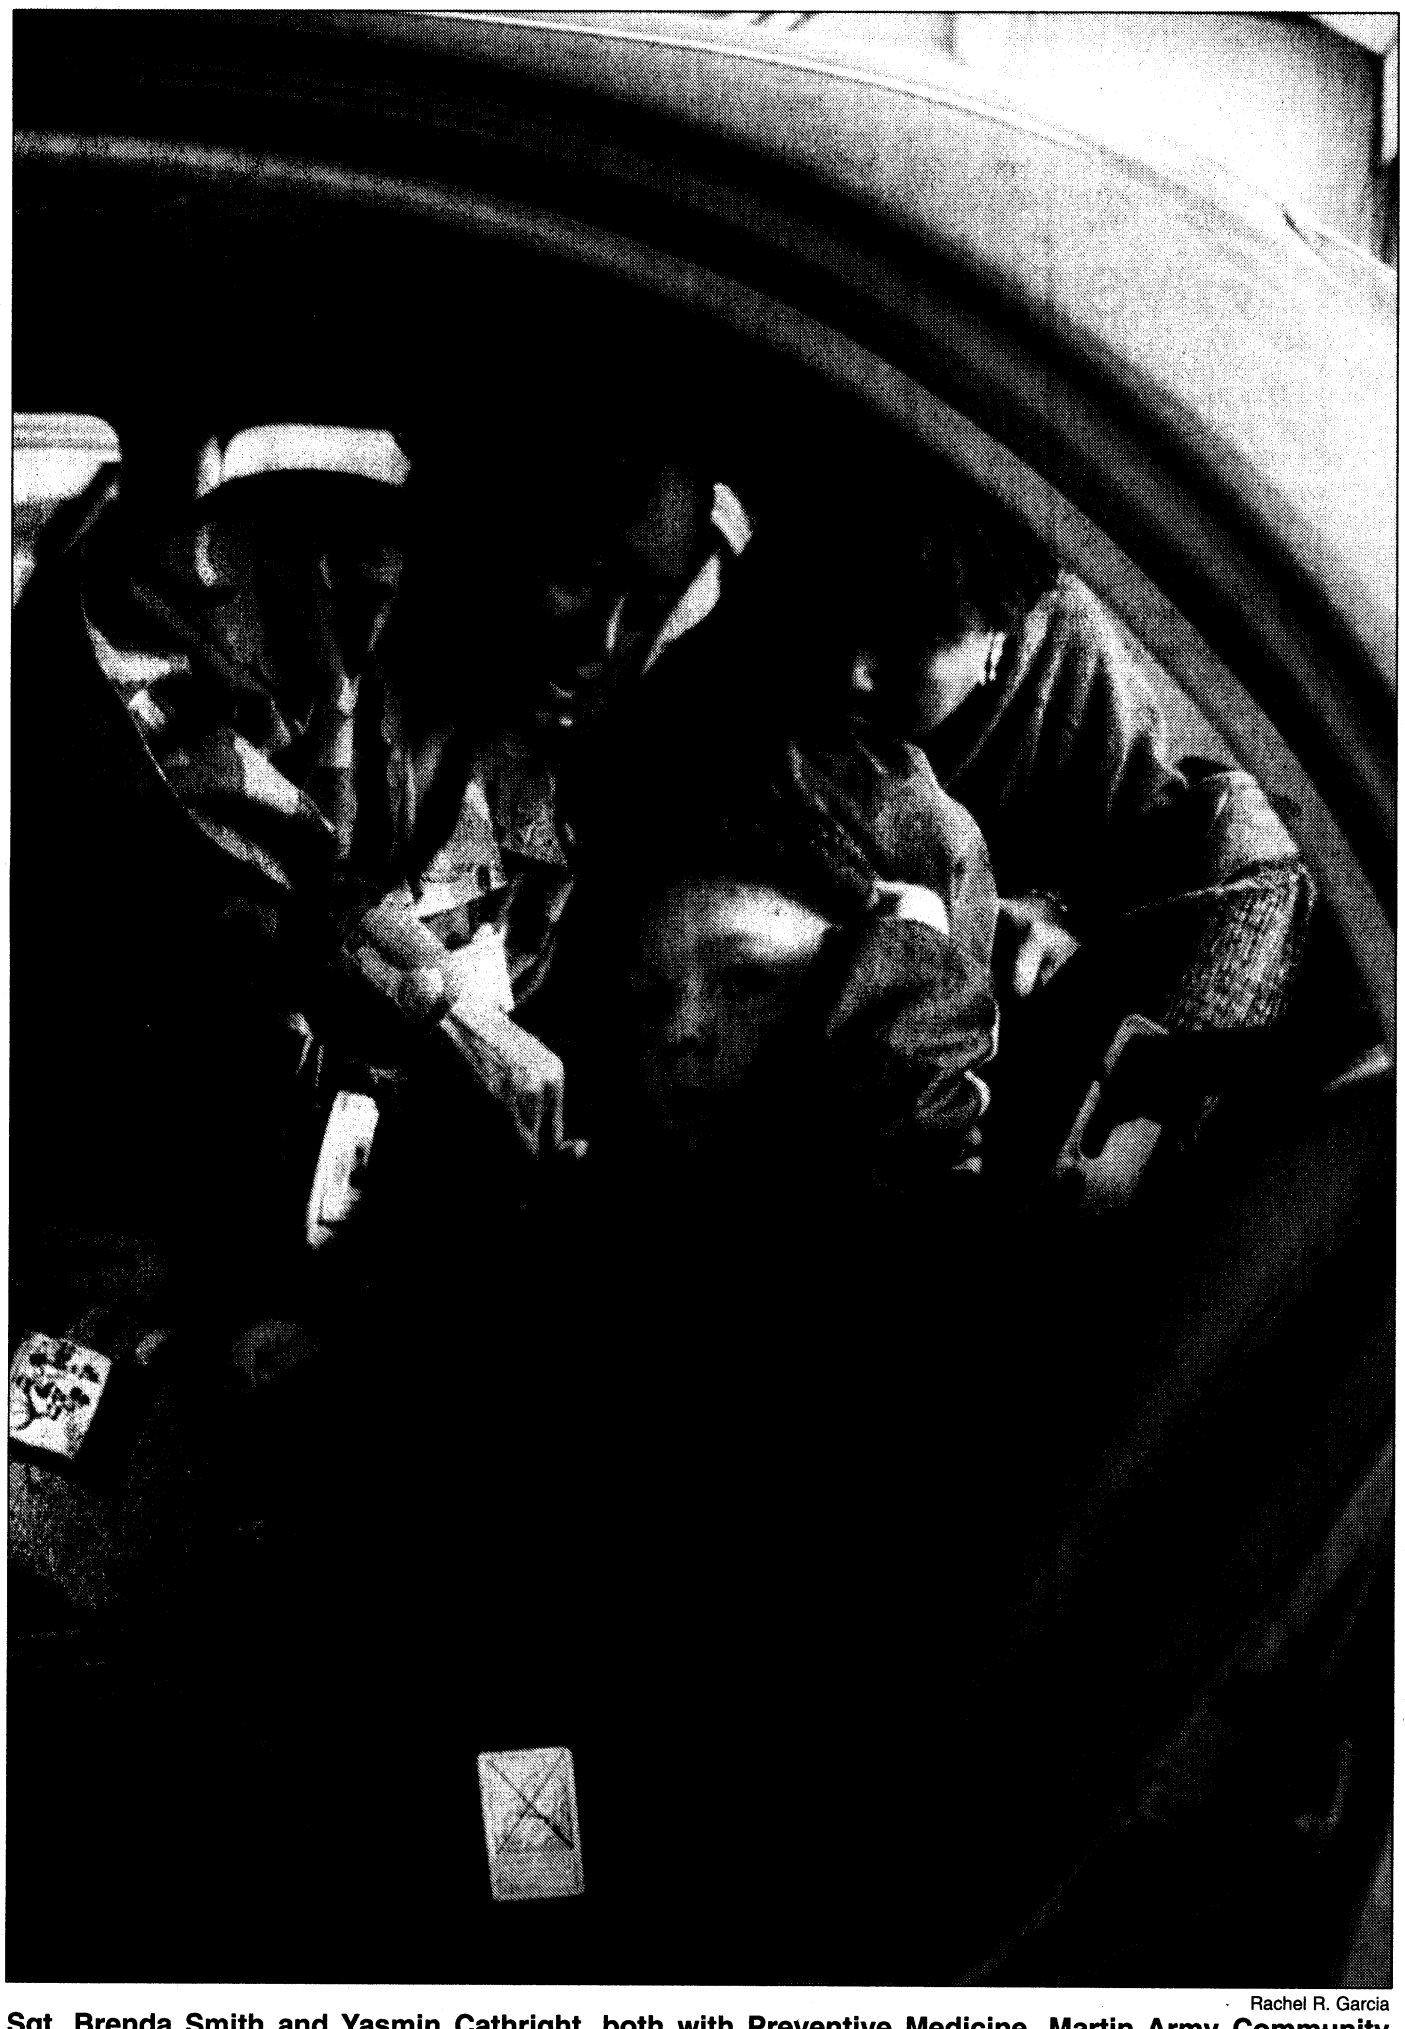
Car seats, which were deemed unsafe, were swapped for new ones at no expense to the owner. Drivers who didn't have the appropriate car seats for their vehicles were also given the free items.

Cook was one such driver who drove away with new seats — one for her 3-year-old son, Jerome, and another for 19-month-old daughter, Jeanette.

"I really like that they're taking the time to educate people. You think you know a lot about this, but you don't," Cook said.

Safe Kids Coalition employees and volunteers routed drivers to the Custer Road Fire Station for an evaluation. After a check by the technicians, some were able to get car new seats:

Criteria for a new car seat was:



- seat on a recall list
- seat damaged
- seat purchased at a yard sale or thrift store with an unknown history
- seat involved in a car crash or accident
- seat inappropriate for child's weight or age.

Pamela Fair, of the Safe Kids of Georgia Columbus Coalition, has been promoting correct car seat and safety belt use for years. Fair has performed clinics at Columbus Square Mall, Hollywood Connection and other venues in the local community.

This was the first time they've completed a project in conjunction with Fort Benning officials.

"We're crossing our fingers that this goes well enough to come out here again," Fair said. "We try to

Army aware of problem

Child abuse prevention program's goal

Theresa Sanchez
Family Advocacy Program

April is Child Abuse Prevention Month in the Army and this year's theme is Children Today; Leaders Tomorrow: The Army Prevents Child Abuse.

The Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program will be sponsoring several events during the month of April in observance of Child Abuse Prevention Month and Month of the Military Child.

The Army Family Advocacy Program at Fort Benning is joining many state and national organizations in a campaign to "get people to show their true colors" as part of Child Abuse Prevention Month in April. The Family Advocacy Program, under the direction of Rebecca Welch, is a specialized prevention program which focuses on child and spouse abuse.

• Blue ribbons will be distributed on and off post and adults are asked to wear a blue ribbon throughout the month of April, to symbolize the fight against child abuse and neglect. In the spring of 1989, Bonnie Finney, a Norfolk, Va., grandmother, took a stand against child abuse when she tied a symbolic blue ribbon around her van.

It was a signal to her community of her personal commitment to involve everyone in the battle to stop child abuse. Finney's own grandson, Michael Wayne "Bubba" Dickenson, was a tragic, young victim of child abuse. His death gave her blue ribbon its own inspiring message.

"Can one person make a difference? Bonnie Finney did. Bonnie Finney had a great message she was trying to get across to the public," Welch said. "The blue ribbon serves as a constant reminder to fight for the protection for all our children. We must protect our most precious gift of all — our children.

"Please wear a blue ribbon in April to show your concern for our children. Put one on your car, give one to a friend, and tell him or her what it means. You may save a child"s life."

Blue Ribbons can be picked up at the following locations during the month of April.

Defense Commissary Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — Shop your commissary and save more than 29 percent on your grocery bill. That's the good news according to the most comprehensive Market Basket Price Comparison Study ever done by the Defense Commissary Agency.

"This survey revealed an overall savings of 29.2 percent, which is in line with our agency's corporate objective to increase savings to 30 percent over commercial grocery stores and super centers by fiscal year 2002. In fact, we expect to meet that goal by the end of this year," said DeCA Director Maj. Gen. Robert J. Courter.

Bottom line for customers: the amount of savings verified by the survey means an annual savings of over $2,300 for a family of four that regularly shops in their commissary.

The market basket survey compares the prices of items sold in commissaries with prices of the same items sold in private sector supermarkets. The savings figure includes sales tax for commercial stores, and surcharge for commissaries.

This year's survey is unlike any previous DeCA price survey because it includes comparison data from overseas stores and it used a comprehensive database of actual prices from U.S. commercial grocery stores in addition to random price sampling of meat and produce items, said Scott Simpson, DeCA's director of operations. Prices from super centers — discount stores that also sell groceries — were also included in the study for the first time.

"This is the most comprehensive market basket survey we've ever had," Simpson said. "It's good news for our customers, and it's an important measuring stick to see how well we're doing in providing the commissary benefit."

Past studies compared prices on only about 600 items from a sampling of commissaries with prices of the same items found in nearby civilian grocery stores, and didn't include super centers. This year, thanks to the database price information, the study compared prices of virtually every Universal Product Coded (UPC) item sold in all commissaries in the 48 contiguous

Volunteers: Contribute to community

Last year volunteers contributed 120,000 volunteer hours — that's approximately $2 million worth of manpower at $14.49 per hour.

"That's $2 million the Fort Benning community would have to fund or do without if it weren't for the folks who say 'I'll take this on and make it happen,'" Holton said. "There are a lot of programs and organizations that would just disappear if it weren't for our dedicated volunteers."

Programs such as Santa's Castle, the Fort Benning Thrift Store, Red Cross, Youth Services athletic programs, Armyy Community Services, Army Family Team Building and Scouting, to name just a few.

Despite the impressive numbers, Holton said the need for volunteers is still greater than the supply, and "in a perfect world, we'd have twice as many people" to share the load.

Holton gave the following list of potential volunteers:

- Military spouses who are "short-timers" at Fort Benning, not here long enough to get a job, but long enough to make a lasting contribution to the community
- Soldiers and family members who are here for a few years and willing to learn a new skill or share skills already developed
- Retirees who have the time and inclination to help fellow veterans and their families
- Young mothers who are looking for something to fill the hours while the kids are in school
- Recent graduates or stay-at-home moms trying to develop a resume
- Teen-agers sampling the job market or applying for college scholarships

Holton said for every possible scenario, there's a volunteer position just waiting to be filled.

"There's something for everyone. Just give us a call," she said.

"We're grateful for whatever you can give. Even those that do typing or just answer the telephones are doing us a big service, since they allow others to continue their work uninterrupted," she added. "And any amount of time you can volunteer is a plus. It's the quality, not the quantity, that counts.

"We're just looking for people who want to make a difference in the Fort Benning community," Holton said.

Commissary: Targets price-conscious customers

states. Prices of items in Alaska, Hawaii, the Far East and Europe were compared using random sampling techniques because the database didn't have prices for those areas. Likewise, meat and produce items in all stores were also compared using random sampling techniques because their prices aren't available in the database.

DeCA has enjoyed great customer savings since its inception in 1991.

A 1991 market basket study was performed to assess the effect the consolidation of the military services commissary systems into DeCA would have on customer savings. That survey, which used data collected before the consolidation, found patron savings were 23.2 percent. By 1999, the last survey found savings at 27 percent.

Simpson said agency officials are confident they can reach the 30 percent savings goal because DeCA's buyers now have access to commercial sector sales and pricing data — the same type of information the market basket survey used.

The data gives DeCA's buyers the negotiation tool they need to drive down prices. In addition, the agency's merchandising approach is targeting merchandise selections to meet the needs of the various groups that shop each store. The agency's marketing initiatives give price-conscious customers access to the best possible savings.

The Defense Commissary Agency's vision statement is: "The Commissary Benefit — cornerstone of Military Quality of Life. It is our goal to deliver the premier quality of life benefit for our military efficiently and effectively."

With headquarters at Fort Lee, Virginia, the agency operates a worldwide chain of nearly 300 commissaries to provide groceries to military personnel, retirees and their families. Commissary patrons purchase items at cost plus a 5 percent surcharge, which covers the construction of new commissaries and the modernization of existing stores. Patrons enjoy substantial savings on their purchases. These savings enhance the quality of life for America's military and their families. A valued part of military pay and benefits, commissaries help the United States recruit and keep the best and the brightest men and women in the service of their country.

evaluate and educate."

Her main priority was to see if seats were appropriate for child's age and weight, and if the seats were installed correctly, she said.

MPs stopped more than 350 cars on their two-hour profile.

Staff Sgt. Patrick Coiner, 209th Military Police Detachment, Military Police Activity, said this was the first check he's seen of this kind in his 14 years of service.

"I look at this from a financial standpoint. People pay a lot of money for these seats and should know how to use them right," Coiner said.

Volunteers from different areas of Fort Benning were also on hand to help with the check.

Yasmin Cathright, community health nurse, said she hopes this is the first step in having more programs to promote child safety on post.

"We want to make sure our kids our safe," Cathright said. "We'd love to expand this out and do it more often."

Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief Law Enforcement Division, Military Police Activity, plans to continue the checkpoints in the future.

"It would be great to do this every month, but we'd like to start out doing this every quarter. I'm pleased that the Military Police Activity can reach out and perform this community service," Kelley said. "We're always looking to make Fort Benning a safer place."

Motor vehicle crashes remain the leading cause of unintentional injury-related death among children ages 14 and under.

Although 96 percent of parents think they have installed the seats correctly, it is estimated that 85 percent of these children are riding in improperly installed restraints.

Georgia State Occupant Law mandates:

- Infant through age 2 in child safety
- Ages 3 and 4 in child safety seat or safety belt
- Ages 5 through 17 in safety belt
- Safety belt law covers all occupants in front seating positions

For more information on recalled seats or safety notices, call the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration's Auto Safety Hotline at (888) 327-4236 or www.safekids.org.

Faith teacher writes Easter drama

English teacher directs play of faith

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

As a veteran teacher, Judi Ebert knows the value of visuals in getting her message across.

"It's true. A picture can be worth a thousand words," said Ebert, an eighth-grade English teacher at Faith Middle School.

Imagine the value of live theater, complete with pyrotechnics, in conveying the story of the struggle between good and evil.

That's the theme of The Battle, a 90-minute drama written and directed by Ebert. The Easter play will be presented April 12-15 at Cornerstone Church of God.

"It's a marvelous portrayal of the gospel of Jesus Christ in music and drama.

"Judi is an exceptionally talented and gifted lady when it comes to writing and producing Easter dramas, and she is supported by a wonderful cast and crew who are equally talented," said Daniel McEachin, Cornerstone's senior pastor.

Ebert has been writing dramas for 25 years, but prefers to stay offstage.

She saves her acting for the classroom where she introduces her students to the world of literature.

Ebert

"I do feel as though I am an actress sometimes in front of my class," she said.

She has always worked with eighth-graders.

"I love 13-year-olds. It's an in-between age, not a child, but not yet an adult. It's rewarding to see them grow and a real challenge to get them ready to move into high school," Ebert said.

"The things I teach 13-year-olds are the same things I love. I don't ask them to read something I don't like. I try to transfer my love of the subject to them," she said. "Anytime you are dealing with middle school students you have to be excited about your subject."

Ebert started her teaching career at Faith Middle School 31 years ago during the Vietnam War.

She met her husband, Robert, while he was stationed at Fort Benning, and the two decided to make Columbus their home when he left the Army.

She started working with theater in college, and it was her father, a minister and missionary, who provided her with some insight.

"Anything you do in the community, you should be able to do in the church," he said.

She followed his advice and started working on religious dramas.

"It's like an artist painting a picture. At first, I see them in my head — the story, the sets, the costumes," she said. "It's very rewarding to sit up with the lighting technician and see what was once in my head being performed on stage."

Ebert wrote the script for The Battle three years ago and this is the second year Cornerstone has presented the story.

The production has undergone some changes from last year's version, including some additional songs and different scenes.

"This is the story of Jesus and how he overcame death, hell and the grave," Ebert said.

More than 100 people, including the cast and crew, have worked on the production.

"The set is unbelievable. It rivals anything you've seen at the Springer Opera House," Ebert said.

The Battle is free. The doors open each night at 6 p.m., and the show begins at 7 p.m.

The church, at 7701 Lloyd Road, between Double Churches and Williams Roads, seats 400.

"I recommend they get there early," Ebert said.

For more information call the church at 327-2636.

Communication key as parent

Family Advocacy Program

Are you a hurried parent who could benefit from hints on how to enhance communication with your kids, tips on getting along better, guidelines on how to improve your relationship with your children?

The parenting tips that follow provide a fresh perspective, an opportunity to build on your own positive parenting skills so when difficult issues arise, you will have a strong foundation to build on.

Build Confidence:

1. Be Positive.

• Look for ways to give compliments.

• Give hugs.

• Remember to laugh with your child.

2. Emphasize your child's strong points.

• Praise special, unique traits in your child.

• Help your child understand that nobody's perfect and that's OK.

• Help your child understand that everyone is good at something and not so good at other things.

3. Give your time.

• As parents, you are all probably short on time and may often feel overwhelmed with all your responsibilities. However, it's important for you to know that the best gift is to give your child regular, undivided attention.

4. Say "I love You."

• Give this message in different ways. Try nonverbal as well as verbal.

Stay Connected:

1. Listen.

• Give your full attention. Keep good eye contact, nod, even touch your child.

• Listen for feelings. There are no wrong feelings. Acknowledge your child's feeling, then reflect those feelings back.

• Keep your talk to a minimum. Simply saying you understand and care may be enough.

2. Take time to be with your child.

• Read a book or watch TV together. Talk about the book or program. Use this time to give your full attention to your child.

• If you're a working parent, call your child from work to just say "hello" – not to remind him or her about chores or homework.

• Make time for regular heart-to-heart talks with your child. Keep conversations free and open.

Use Positive Discipline:

1. Set Rules.

• Determine what rules are important. Set limits and boundaries. Make sure everybody understands the rules and consequences.

• Apply rules consistently. If you make an exception, make sure your child understands that it's a special treat .

• Rules are flexible in that they're appropriate to the age of the child.

• Physical discipline is almost never effective.

2. Address a problem.

• Respond to the problem as soon as possible.

• Be firm. You're the parent. Do not underestimate your parenting ability.

• Keep calm, use your anger in a positive way. Address the problem, discuss the consequence, follow through. Don't blow up!

3. Criticize the behavior only.

• Choose your words carefully. Address the behavior, not the person.

Help in Problem Solving:

1. Define the problem.

• Try to help your child solve the problem, don't solve it for him or her. Teach your child how to problem-solve.

• Ask your child what exactly the problem is. What are their feelings about it?

2. Brainstorm about ways to solve the problem.

• Talk about every possible solution with your child. List them out. Discuss and weigh the outcomes of each potential solution.

3. Pick the best solution.

• Talk about, and role-play if necessary, the way you or your child will implement the solution.

4. Discuss the outcome.

• Did the solution work? Why or why not? If not, talk with your child about trying another solution.

For more information, contact the Family Advocacy Program at 545-6969 or 545-3344.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

Finally the warm weather has arrived. It is time to put those tomatoes in the ground.

Here are a few frequently asked questions about tomato plants:

What is a determinate and indeterminate?

A determinate variety matures and then bears it's fruit in one bulk. An indeterminate produce a steady stream of fruit throughout the growing season.

Determinate varieties are good for home canners and sauce makers. The indeterminate suit the a gardener's need for fresh tomatoes.

What is an heirloom?

A hybrid tomato has been cross pollinated from two different plants. An heirloom has not. It's genetically identical to its parent plant. Hybrids have been developed by isolating the desirable characteristics of one tomato and pollinating it with the desirable traits of another. This is usually done to create a variety that is popular and disease resistant.

Heirloom seeds can be harvested from the crop and saved to sow next year.

Hybrid seeds cannot be saved. Sowing them would result in a variation of the two parent plants but not the hybrid itself.

What is VFTN?

These letters listed after the variety name, in any combination, refer to disease resistance.

Tomatoes have been susceptible to these disease and science has developed resistant varieties. V is for verticullium, F is for fusarium, T is for tobacco mosaic, and N is for nematodes.

Buying these types of varieties is like purchasing insurance for your tomato crop.

Choosing a variety that is not resistant doesn't mean the plant will get one of these diseases. The varieties with resistance just have a better chance of not contracting these particular diseases.

What is early, mid, and late?

These terms refer to the days it takes to harvest the fruits of these varieties. Early varieties produce their harvest in 55-65 days. The mid-season variety produces between 65 and 75 days. The late season variety bears fruit after 75 days.

What types of plants are available?

There are several varieties available in the local nurseries. There are the dwarf or micro tomatoes.

This refers to the plant size but generally all of these produce small fruits.

Gardeners may find Tiny Tim and patio varieties locally. There are the cherry tomatoes. This term refers to the fruit size.

Some found locally are the Sweet Million or Sweet 100. There are the paste tomatoes which are good for making sauce and for tomato paste recipes.

Locally gardeners will find the Roma variety. There are the beefsteak tomatoes which can produce tomatoes in excess of two pounds.

These are typically late fruiting varieties like the beefmaster. There are bicolor and alternative color tomatoes which produce two tone tomatoes or tomatoes other than the typical red.

There are black, orange, yellow, white, and green tomatoes in this category. Some varieties to try are the sun gold or vita-gold.

What is the best tomato?

This can be a very opinionated answer. The best thing is to ask other gardeners which is best for taste, size and productivity based on your needs.

If you are growing a variety for the tomato contest then it's best to choose one for size from the beefsteak category.

Look for specific planting instructions for a successful tomato crop in future issues of The Bayonet.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

We have received several questions about the IRS collection process. When a taxpayer fails to pay the full amount of federal tax owed, the Internal Revenue Service will collect the delinquent tax on one of several ways. The following questions and answers should help explain the process:

Q: I thought I had paid my taxes and now I have received a notice from the IRS saying I owe more. How can that be?

A: There may be several reasons. You may have not had enough tax withheld from each paycheck or perhaps an error occurred in the preparation of your return.

If you are self-employed or had other income not subject to withholding, you may have missed making the required quarterly estimated tax payments.

Q: The IRS says I owe more tax, but I do not agree. What can I do?

A: If you think the bill is wrong, notify the IRS immediately by writing to the office that sent the bill. You may want to send copies of any record that support your claim, such as canceled checks or tax returns. Do not send the originals to the IRS.

Q: Do I have to pay the entire amount of delinquent taxes immediately?

A: If possible. The employee handling your collection case will review financial information that you provide to the IRS and determine whether the full amount can be paid at once, or if you qualify for an installment payment plan.

Q: What if I do not pay the IRS after they notify me that I owe delinquent taxes?

A: When an individual owes more tax, a bill is sent with the payment due within 10 days. Several more bills and a telephone call may also follow. If a taxpayer neglects or refuses to pay taxes or make satisfactory arrangements for payment, a levy may be issued against the taxpayer's salary, wages, bank accounts or commissions. During the levy process, if the tax bill is paid in full or an acceptable installment agreement is reached, ordinarily the levy will be released.

Q: What right do I have during collection proceedings?

A: Taxpayers have several basic rights during all collection-related activities.

They include representation, the transfer of a tax case to another office when your residence changes, receipts from the IRS for any payment, copies of all contractual arrangements, confidentiality of tax matters and elimination of penalty with reasonable cause.

Q: I received a bill from the IRS for some additional tax and paid the amount in full. However, I have some documents to verify that I owe less tax. What can I do?

A: If your records now show that you overpaid your tax, you should file an amended return on Form 1040X, Amended U.S. Individual Income Tax Return.

For more information about the IRS collection process, see IRS Publication 586A, The Collection Process (Income Tax Accounts); IRS Publication 1, Your Rights as a Taxpayer; and IRS Publication 556, Examination of Returns, Appeal Rights and Claims for Refund. You can also call or stop by the Fort Benning Tax Center.

The center is located in Building 2826, next to Bernheim Dental Clinic. Parking is available at the Main Post Bowling Center. The center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The phone number is 545-4267.

Heroes not all gone: They're all around

Chaplain (Capt.) Milton Johnson
1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Recently my unit started preparation to go to Kosovo. Right away, I started jotting down things I want to do as part of my religious support coverage for the time we will be there like: organize a choir, conduct a weekly prayer meeting and visit soldiers at work, home and hospital. My goal is to be a hero chaplain.

Speaking of heroes, there aren't too many left, but we can all be one. John Kennedy, John Wayne, Dr. Martin Luther King — take your pick; they're all gone.

There are, in fact, plenty of heroes all around us: single mothers working hard and keeping their families together; young soldiers who work all day and go to school at night, as much as they can.

Also, ordinary people on the job and at our religious gatherings who take the time to listen and care.

Take a look around — maybe you're a hero. However, even the brightest and strongest of us needs inspiration from time to time.

I recently read the following from a friend and I would like to share it with you.

I shall,

Like Paul, forget those things which are behind and press forward;

Like David, lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help;

Like Abraham, trust implicitly in my God;

Like Enoch, walk in daily fellowship with my heavenly father;

Like Jehosaphat, prepare my heart to seek God;

Like Moses, choose rather to suffer than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a reason;

Like Daniel, commune with God at all times;

Like Job, be patient under all circumstances;

Like Caleb and Joshua, refuse to be discouraged because of superior numbers;

Like Gideon, advance although my friends are few;

Like Aaron and Hur, uphold the hands of my leaders with prayer and practical support;

Like Andrew, strive to lead my brothers and sisters to God;

Like Stephen, express a forgiving spirit toward all who seek my hurt.

Realizing that I cannot hope to achieve those objectives from my own strength, I shall rely upon the power of God, for I can do all things through him who strengthens me.

Wouldn't it be great if everyone would strive to be a hero? I often tell myself, you never fail until you stop trying, and the sky is the limit as to where you can go and what you can do with the almighty.

Join me — speak, think, act like a hero.

Sexual concerns important in relationships

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Dr. Ed Wheat, M.D., said the common sexual complaints that couples express can be resolved. Here are some remedies for the most common problems.

If you want to be intimate at night, start the day off right. Leave love notes for each other.

Never leave each other without a kiss, a hug and saying "I love you." Call each other during the day to express your love. Bring home a small token of your love. Be a home-team player by helping around the house.

When loving becomes repetitious and boring, lovemaking becomes predictable.

Use variety. Learn to be creative and innovative.

Try surprising your partner with something new.

Couples need to be sensitive to the preferences of their spouse. The Bible says, "The wife's body does not belong to her alone but also to her husband. In the same way, the husband's body does not belong to him alone but also to his wife." (I Corinthians 7:4) Never force your spouse to do something they do not want to try or do.

Additional help is available to resolve sexual concerns.

Former student returns as coach

Bridgett Siter

Anthony Lane demonstrates the way to boot the ball.

Volunteer coaches middle school soccer, track team

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Faith Middle School alumnus has "come home" to coach the school's track and soccer teams in their maiden seasons.

Anthony Lane was a sixth-grader in 1987, the year Faith moved to its current location on Ingersoll Avenue. When Lane was 16, his father retired from the Army and moved the family to Phenix City, Ala. He graduated from Smith Station High School and earned a business degree from Auburn University.

Now the community projects manager for the Columbus chapter of Big Brothers-Big Sisters, Lane was facilitating Faith's mentoring program when the principal approached him with the idea of starting a soccer team.

Having played soccer as a child and ran track in college, Lane offered to coach the two teams simultaneously.

"I literally coached both at the same time for a while," Lane laughed. "Now we alternate days. It's a lot easier that way."

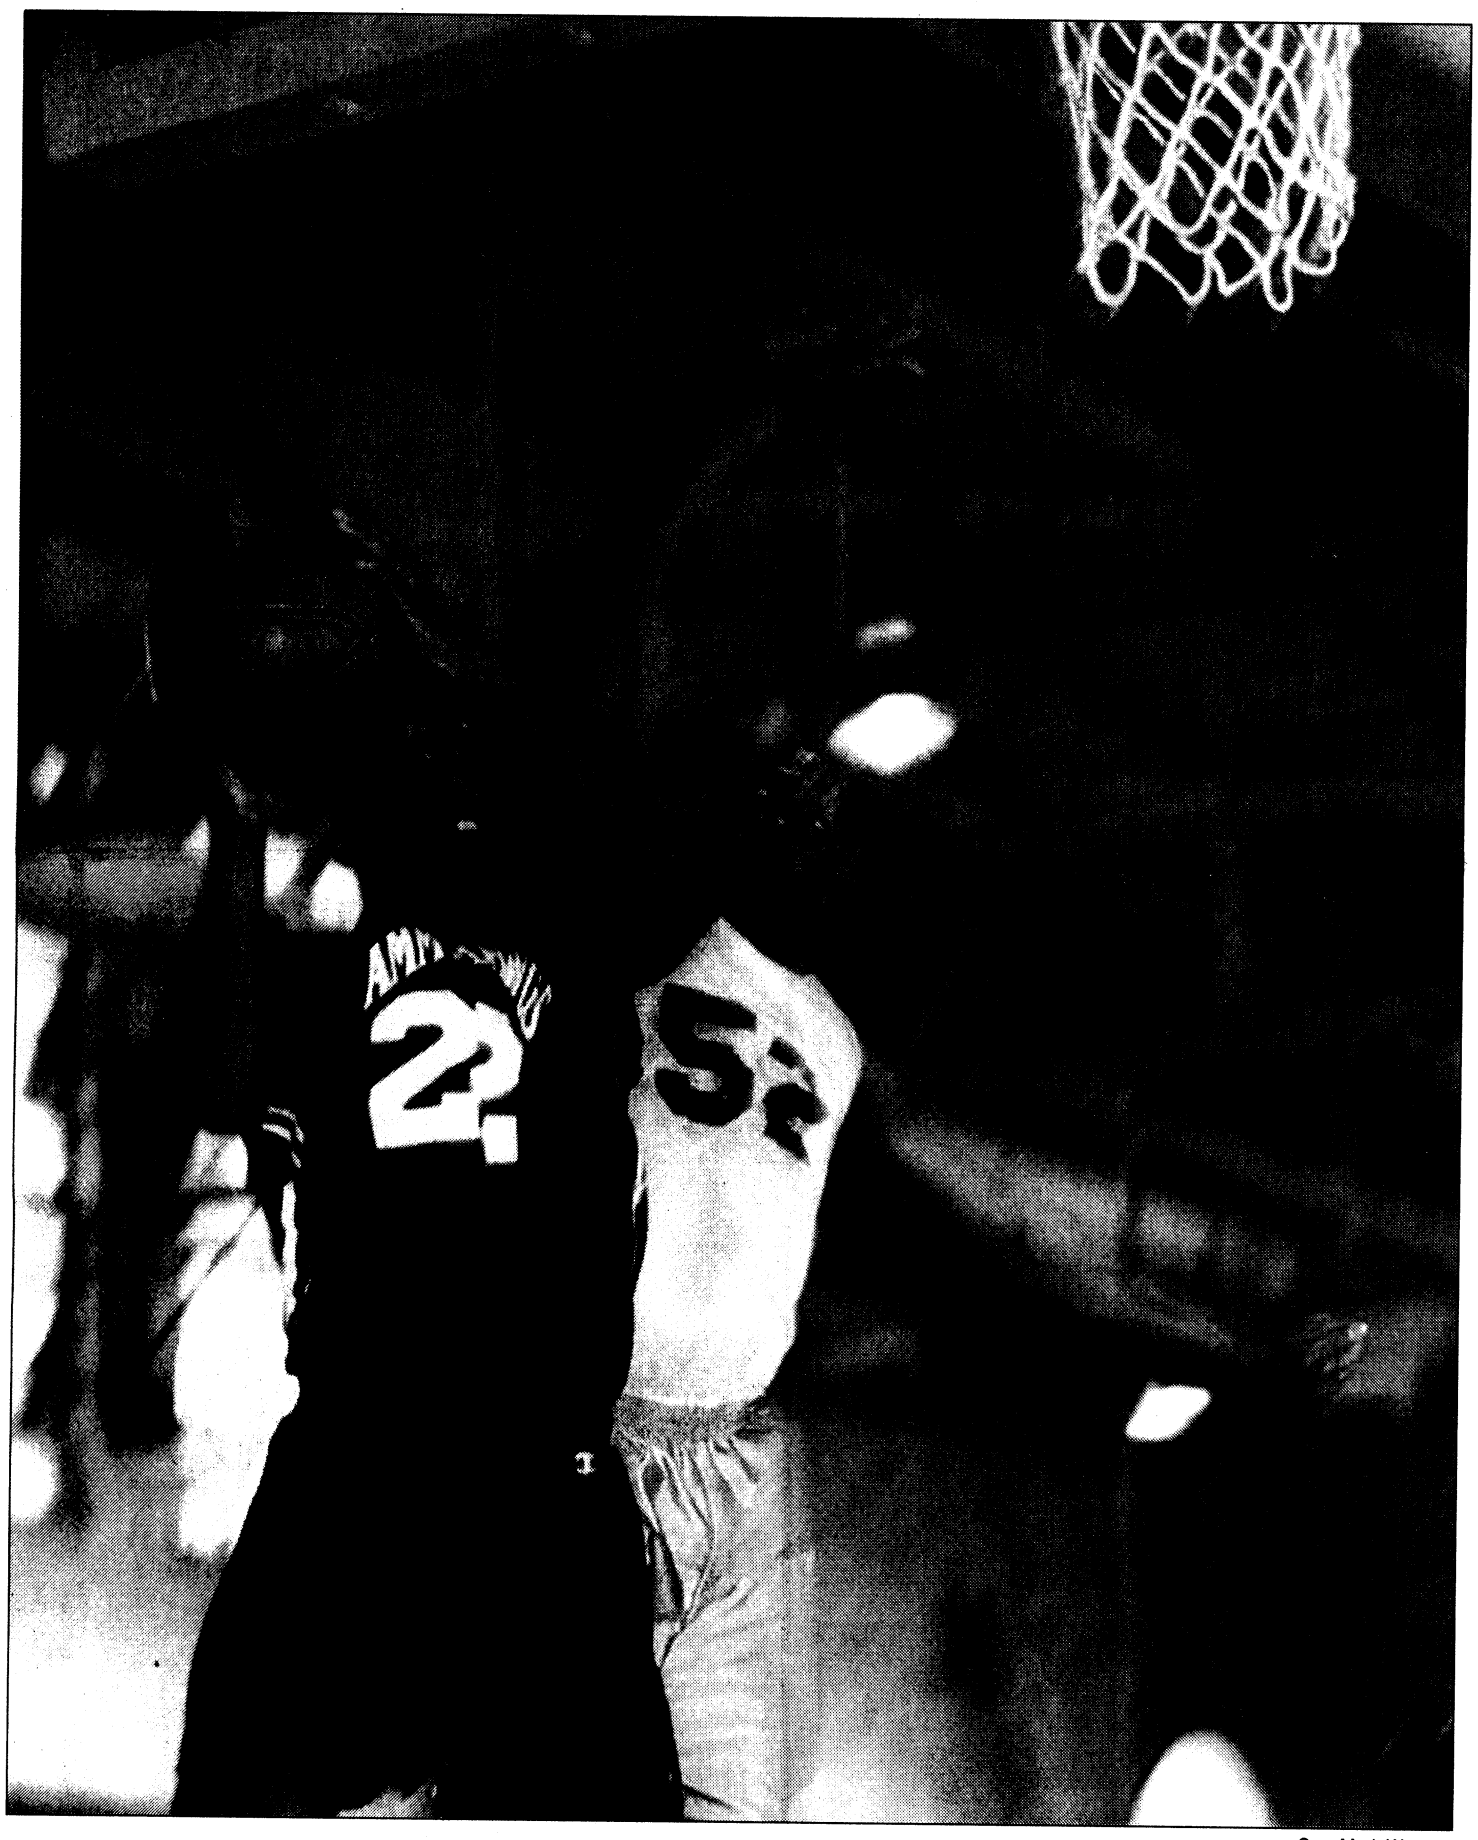
Both teams are doing very well, Lane said, though "track hasn't caught on as well as soccer."

"Most of these kids have played soccer before. They're military — they've been exposed to it wherever they've been stationed, all over the world," he said. "Track's not as popular right now. We average between five and 10 at practice, but they're doing very well."

Robert Lewis, a teacher at Faith, serves as the school's intramural director. It's his responsibility to schedule matches with other schools, a feat complicated by the fact that Faith is not a member of any local athletic association.

"It's our first year, and it's been a challenge," Lewis said. "But the kids are having a great time and doing very well, and that's because they have a great coach.

"The kids love him, and they follow him like the pied piper because he knows the game and he's straight with them about their performance. They appreciate that and they respond accordingly."



Besides coaching both teams and working full time with Big Brothers-Big Sisters, Lane, 25, still finds time to mentor and work with Habitat for Humanity during the summer and serve as project coordinator for Hands On Columbus, a volunteer network that partners volunteers with organizations and projects where needed.

"It sounds like a lot, but coaching these kids is a breeze," Lane said. "In my line of work, I'm used to single-parent kids who don't have the support or discipline these guys do. This is easy in comparison."

Robert Ransbottom credits Lane for making a tough job look easy.

"He's the best coach I've ever had," the 15-year-old soccer player said. "He's volunteering his time to come out here and work with us.

"He's patient, but he'll get out on the field and show us how it's done if he needs to. He's great."

Raiders down Ammo Dawgs, 44-38, Monday

Victory earned right to play in 'final four'

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Missed shots were the name of the game as well as the downfall of the Ammo Dawgs as they lost to the Raiders, 44-38, in Monday's intramural basketball game in the Briant Wells Field House.

The game semifinal match launched the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, Raiders into Fort Benning's version of the final four.

Having faced each other twice before, this game was the tie breaker, the winning team would play for the post championship title.

Almost immediately after the game-opening tip off both teams sprinted into action and they didn't seem to slow down the entire game.

Although the game was one of fast breaks and a rapid pace, the scoring was another story.

After 10 minutes of fast-paced action, the Raiders scored 7 points while the Ammo Dawgs from 608th Ordnance, 36th Engineer Group, scored only two meager points.

The shots went everywhere but in the net. Shots were high, shots were low, there were deflected shots, shots that "bricked" off the backboard and scores of "airballs." Even easy layups were difficult to sink for both teams.

It seemed as if neither team could get anything to fall for them.

Finally Raiders' Michael Johnson began draining buckets from outside giving his team a marginal lead.

The rapid-strike game continued late into the first half. Both teams had trouble maintaining control of the ball. Players fouled again and again. Missed passes were a main factor in the turnover business. Toward the end of the first half, the Ammo Dawgs slowly closed the Raiders lead. As the halftime buzzer sounded, the Raiders maintained their lead, 17-14.

The Raiders halftime victory was short lived as the Ammo Dawgs squeaked into the lead only four minutes into the second half.

The Raiders fought back and regained their lead with 14 minutes remaining in the game.

Both teams began to play more aggressively and foul more often. Both teams fouled more than 10 times by the end of the game.

Johnson fell head-over-heels for the Ammo Dawgs, literally, twice. While going up for the shot, he was knocked off balance by the defenders trying to strip him of the ball, sending him sprawling across the floor.

With the end of the game rapidly approaching, the Dawgs began to close in on the Raiders. But it was too little too late as the Raiders kept the Ammo

Golfers hit links for Dragnet Scramble tournament

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

More than 20 four-man teams hit the links March 23 in the Military Police Association Dragnet Scramble.

The Follow Me Golf Course hosted 88 golfers as they teed off for a sunny round of golf.

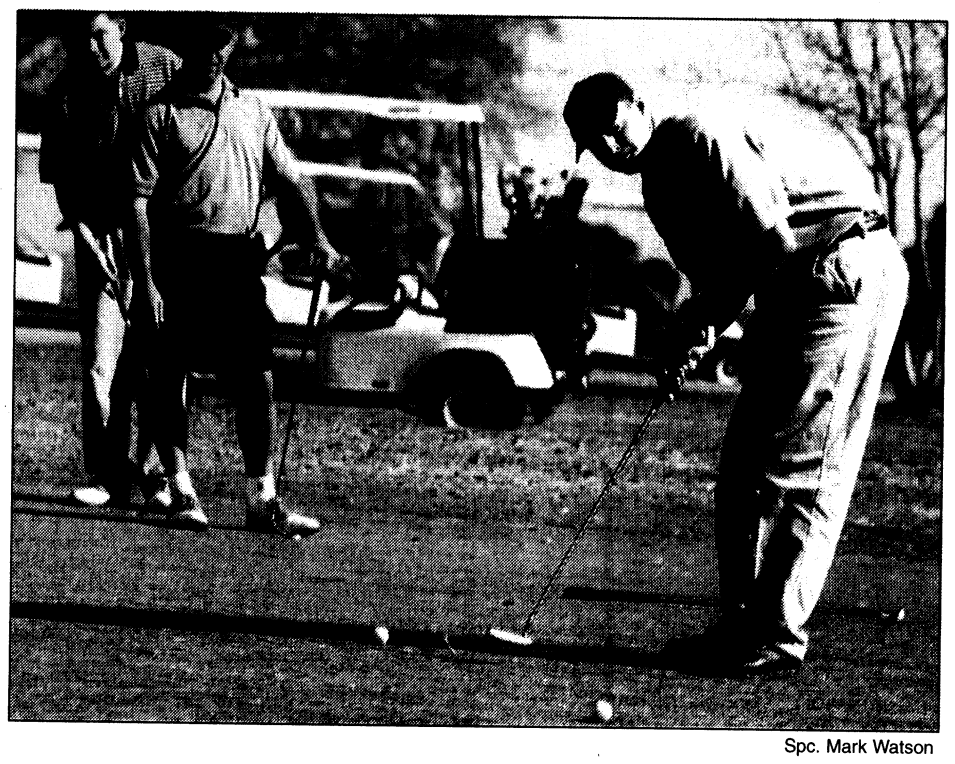
"It is a beautiful day to play," said 1st Lt. Matt Millar, a co-coordinator of the tournament. "It is great to be out here."

He said the tournament was also a fundraiser to help offset the price soldiers need to pay to attend the MP Ball.

Competitors said the tournament was a good time to just get out and play.

"This is great and low stress," said co-coordinator 1st Lt. Matthew McKinney. "It is good to come out here and support the Military Police Association.

"We are just out here to have a good time."



The first place team was the Military Police Activity Number 2 team comprised of Sgt. 1st Class Jeffery Cassell, Staff Sgt. Tracey Leach and Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins.

The 988th MP Company, 2nd Platoon team swung into second place. Team members were Pfc. Brian Kessler, Pvt. Francisco Zavala and Pvt. Anthony Jones.

The Red-headed Stepchildren's Sgt. Jeremy Brown, Sgt. Stephen Paquette and Sgt. 1st Class Bruce Balestreri chipped and putted their way into third place.

Although McKinney and his team finished last, he said he still had a good time.

"It was great," he said. "We still got prizes. We got golf lessons and free range balls. We just had a good time."

Raiders: Launch into final four

Dawgs at bay, 44-38.

"The game went great," Johnson said. "Everybody played their role. Everybody got the ball when they were supposed too and were in the right place at the right time. There were no superstars, everyone did their role."

Having played the Dawgs twice before, Johnson said his team knew what to do — rebound.

"We knew we had to box out the big man and get the rebounds off the board," he said.

Although the Ammo Dawgs lost the game, their coach said they played a very good game.

"They played just like I wanted them to," Bobby Seawright, the Ammo Dawgs' coach said. "The ball just wouldn't fall for them. We played good defense, the offense was good, shots just wouldn't drop. Other than that I think they played a real good game."

sports briefs

YS seeks coaches — Youth Services is taking applications for summer basketball coaches. There will be a coach's certification from 6 to 10:30 p.m. April 25, in the Youth Services Gym, Building 1055.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Baseball tryouts — Tryouts for the summer Soldier's Baseball Association Teams will be from 10 a.m to noon Saturday for pitchers and catchers and tryouts for the infield and outfield positions will be held Saturday from 9:30 a.m. to noon. Both tryouts are at Spencer High School, Columbus.

All Army personnel with professional, semi-professional or collegiate baseball experience are encouraged to participate.

Position players will be evaluated on their hitting and fielding skills, foot speed and arm strength. Pitchers will be evaluated on mechanics and arm strength.

Players selected for the Summer Varsity Squad will play in a league comprised of collegiate and ex-pro players. Additionally, players selected will be eligible for the 2001 SBA Team that will be playing the Navy, Marine Corps and Air Force teams in the 2001 Military Baseball Challenge Tournament in San Diego, Calif. this summer.

For more information, call Coach Ed Gawlik at 545-2734 or 685-4903.

Golf lessons — There are golf lessons available for women at the Follow Me Golf Course.

Lessons will be from 4 to 5:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Cost is $60 and limited to 12 golfers.

For more information, call 687-1940.

Lacrosse team — Lacrosse players are seeking more players and coaches for teams to play on Fort Benning.

No experience is necessary, but players need to provide their own equipment.

For more information, call 687-6482.

Special Olympics run — The Special Olympics Home Run, a 3-mile run and walk, will take place May 5 at Kinnett Stadium.

The run, walk will begin at 8 a.m.

All participants should report to the registration booth by 7 a.m.

Entry fee is $12 if registered by April 23, $15 after.

Participants receive a Special Olympics T-shirt, race packet, and post-race refreshments.

For more information, call Greg Crockett at 545-0133.

Archery club — The Fort Benning Archers are now accepting memberships to the archery club located on Aldridge Road.

The yearly memberships allow archers full use of the facilities including a key to the indoor range.

Membership costs are $15 for military, $35 for civilians and $45 for families.

For more information please call Brian Dansby 221-6838 or A.S. Morgan 327-8375.

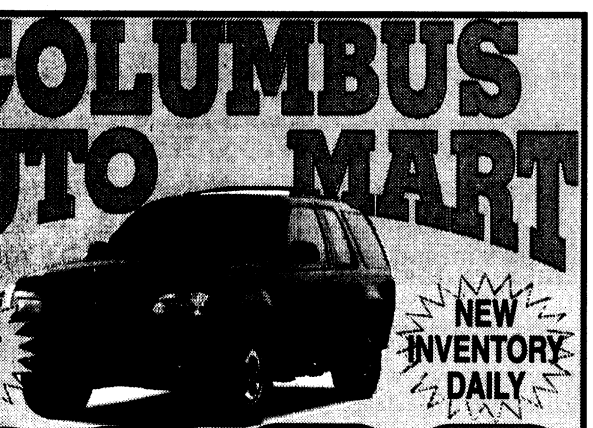
Local Car Dealer Sells Used Cars for $77!

COLUMBUS, GEORGIA - One of Georgia's largest Lincoln-Mercury-Isuzu dealers has been ordered to conduct a $77 "Super Slash Sale Event" on April 7, 2001 from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. at Gateway Lincoln-Mercury-Isuzu.

The General Sales Manager, Mike Affleck, says "this sale is absolutely necessary due to the fact that during recent years new vehicle leasing has exploded across the great state of Georgia. This epidemic has resulted in an over abundance of low mileage lease returns and trade-ins acquired nationwide. This enormous sales event is a result of 12 straight months of record sales that have left us with an over abundance of beautiful trade-ins stock piled in the back of the dealership.

Mike Affleck further states, "We must reduce our inventory to a more tolerable amount in order to control our inventory capital." Mike also says we would much rather offer these vehicles to our local community so that they can experience for themselves, first hand, Super Slasher prices. At a "Super Slasher sale" every car is on sale, first come first served and no auction bidding is required. 'In other words, now is the right time to buy a used car at the absolute lowest price, including cars for only $77.



Access to all $77 used cars and "Super Slasher Sale" prices will be available to the general public at the corner of 5th Ave and the 13th Street Viaduct inside the secured fenced area at 10:00 a.m. Mike Affleck recommends, "Be there early; because the last time another car dealer outside our city limits conducted a sale like this, they had over 400 people respond by 8:00 a.m. and some actually camped out on the public sidewalks in anticipation of driving home a car for only $77.

Here's how a "Super Slasher Sale" works! All cars will be secured behind gates. These gates will be unlocked at 9:00 a.m. so that the general public can come in and inspect the cars they want. A11 Super Slashing starts shortly after that. Every car will display the normal retail selling price on the windshield. No need to worry because when the slashing begins soon after and you are sitting behind the wheel of a vehicle of your choice, the price will be slashed thousands less than displayed 'and you will have the first right to buy the car. Example: Cars that are priced at $12,000 could be reduced below $8,000. Cars that are priced at $8,000 could be reduced below $4,000. In fact, there will be over 100 used cars.

Don't forget some will actually be sold as low as $77! Be sure to remember, all vehicles will be slashed one time and one time only to the absolutely lowest rock bottom price! Gateway Lincoln-Mercury-Isuzu will continue to slash prices on all vehicles until 5:00 p.m. on Saturday, April 7th. At that time the sale will be completed and the store will return to normal business procedures. Over the past few years Gateway Lincoln-Mercury-Isuzu has taken pride in supporting the local community. Mike Affleck is a huge believer in conducting a "Super Slasher Sale" in order to give back to the community. He further states that "This is a prime opportunity for everyone seeking a quality used car, truck, van or sport utility vehicle with the best dealer in the state of Georgia." -all and all, it's a win-win situation for the customer, community, and dealer. Any and all questions are welcome.

And Not Just Used Vehicles! New Malibu's, Impala's, Silverado's, Tahoes Available. Used Car Prices Start At $500

Due primarily to a slowdown in car sales nationwide, tons of unsold and unclaimed new vehicles lanquish on the lot at car dealerships across the country, and Columbus is no exception!

A nationally known disposer of surplus vehicles has been contracted to eliminate this inventory in the Columbus area. Starting today, if you can raise $29 and have the means to make small monthly payments, you are assured of driving away with something off the huge storage lot at Bill Heard Chevrolet 3615 Manchester Expressway.

Everything under the sun is here and ready to drive away. Full factory warranties, where applicable, will be honored. Cars, trucks and vans will be available. Jeep Cherokees, Chevy Tahoes, Ford Expeditions, Silverados and F150 Pickups, Toyotas and Rangers, Small Trucks, Buicks, Cadillacs, Hondas, Toyotas and Family Vans like Caravan and venture. They are all here.

Best of all, the credit process is incredibly simple and fast. You present your $29 cash to Jimmy Peters, who is hosting the event for the disposal company, and in less than 5 minutes he'll give you a list of vehicles to pick from. Payments range from $79 month and terms can be 6 months or less.

Details delay beret shipment

Questions answered about berets

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

With June 14 right around the corner, details are still being worked out so that the Army's black berets will be ready for distribution to soldiers for the Army's birthday.

With the recent trouble in China and previous opposition to having many of the berets made there, it is still unknown when Fort Benning soldiers will get the new headgear, said Mike Ware, the chief of supply for the Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics.

"We still do not know when we will receive our shipment of berets," Ware said. "Hearings and political maneuvers relating to the initial decision to purchase berets manufactured in China continue. Current plans suggest our shipment will be sometime in April with the mandatory wear date of June 14."

"Delays in contracts, manufacture, and delivery will certainly impact our ability to complete issues prior to June 14. Speculation continues, but as of April 5 shipments have been temporarily placed on hold although the June 14 date still stands."

Congressman Mac Collins, from Georgia, doesn't support getting the berets from China.

"I am against ordering the new berets from China. I voted against permanent normalized trade relations with China because it would mean a loss of jobs and this beret order proves my point," Collins said in a statement. "American workers will not get paid to make these berets. This is why the decision should be reversed."

Along with the shipment delay questions, Ware said there have also been a number of questions about the actual issuing of the berets. One of those questions was whether any soldier, officer or enlisted would have to buy the beret.

Since the beret is an organizational item, it will be issued to all soldiers, both officer and enlisted.

Berets will be available through the Army, Air Force Exchange Service after the initial beret distribution is complete, said Zana Setser, a general supply specialist for DFEL. This to ensure the Defense Supply Center in Philadelphia is able to support initial fielding and sustainment requisitions, she said.

Because the beret is an

Soldiers honored at ceremony

Past, present paratroopers share history

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne stopped for a moment, during a ceremony last week honoring this nation's paratroopers, to point out a distant background noise to his audience: "The rattle of rifle fire. The sound of freedom."

The tough realities that are the foundation of liberty were front and center at the annual Airborne Awards event, and the post commander drew sharp connections between the sacrifices of the past and the strength of the contemporary Army — an Army that was rebuilt, Le Moyne said, "after we tore it apart in Vietnam."

"We are your legacy," Le Moyne told the audience of paratroopers, many who had jumped into combat more than five decades ago.

The ceremony at Fort Benning was part of a larger set of commemorative events, most of which took place in Atlanta.

But the trip to Fort Benning represented a highlight of the gathering, as the former paratroopers got a firsthand look at the young soldiers who are carrying on their work.

The day began on Eubanks Field, the Main Post training area for students attending the airborne school.

Led by Sgt. 1st Class Fidelio Ordonio, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, airborne school cadre demonstrated training techniques and parachute equipment.

For the veteran soldiers sitting in the bleachers, the demonstration brought back a flood of memories.

"Boy, that was harder than it looked, remember?" said one in a whisper.

Charles L. Butler

Spc. Kendra Leonard, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, Soldier of the Year, left, and Staff Sgt. Robert Carlisle, Black Hat of the Year, carry a flower arrangement to the monument on the Airborne Walk to honor past airborne soldiers during the Airborne Awards last week.

The former soldiers used the time before and after the demonstration to reminisce about their own training.

E.C. Dickinson, who graduated from Airborne School more than 54 years ago, recalled his first practice jump from one of the 250-foot towers on Eubanks Field — a tower that, at the time, had guiding wires.

"It was a nice ride," he said.

Dickinson said that he was impressed by what he saw at the training field.

"I have a lot of respect," he said. "This is the only group in the military today that's sharp."

Following the demonstration,

Museum to get new home

Consultant hired to design museum

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A museum consultant has been hired to design a new National Infantry Museum, and he plans to meet with members of the Fort Benning and Columbus communities this week to find out what they want to see offered at the facility.

Barry Lord of Lord Cultural Resources, Inc., was hired in March to develop a master plan for the proposed facility. His firm has offices in Toronto and Washington, D.C., and was selected from a group of 18 candidates for the job.

"They specialize in planning museums. In 20 years they have worked on more than 900 museums worldwide," said Ben Williams, executive director of the National Infantry Foundation, which is part of the National Infantry Association, the organization sponsoring the project.

"Barry is probably the most experienced museum consultant in the world," said retired Maj. Gen. Jerry White, president of the association.

Lord should have the master plan completed by the end of the year, White said. It will include a vision statement, the museum's story line and theme, a facility plan, and a market analysis of museum users.

Starting Monday, Lord will begin meeting with active duty soldiers, retired military, community leaders and educators from the area during "visioning" workshops.

"We want this to be a major tourist attraction, so we will ask these people what they expect the facility to look like," White said.

"We want ideas from a wide variety of sources so we can better create a facility that will tell the story of the infantry and have a broader appeal. For example, do they want to see more stories about Medal of Honor recipients, or more information on weapons and uniforms?" said Frank Hanner, director of the museum.

"This is probably our only opportunity to do this thing right — the way it should be done —

Officers inducted into Hall of Fame

OCS graduates recognized for service

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Nearly 50 new names were added to the roles of the Officer Candidate School Hall of Fame including TRADOC Commander Gen. John Abrams, Medal of Honor recipient Capt. Alfred Rascon and brothers Brig. Gens. Andrew and John Schuster.

The OCS graduates were honored during a ceremony April 6 at Marshall Auditorium, recognizing them for distinguished military and civilian careers.

"This is the high point of our career," said John Schuster. "Our officership started here and now it ends here."

The brothers enlisted as infantrymen and were in the same platoon throughout their initial training but attended OCS a year apart.

Although selected to be inducted into the Hall of Fame in 2000, John delayed his induction so he would be able to walk the stage with his brother.

"I delayed a year because it meant so much," John said. "Ever since basic, (Andrew) might say that he had to work hard to keep up with me. Truth is, I've had to work hard to prevent him from overcoming me."

The brothers' career paths often crossed, although John was in the Army Reserve and Andrew in the Wisconsin National Guard. Throughout their careers the two said they have had a great time.

"Thirty-two years later, this is our first time back here together," Andrew said. "It's just such an honor. The infantry and infantry school has meant so much to us."

The careers of other inductees spanned many periods of U.S. military history including World War II, Korea and Vietnam. Many of the inductees are still serving.

"This is a very special day for them," said Lt. Col. David Osborne, commander of OCS. "It is a day they'll probably never forget."

The Army's Inspector General Lt. Gen. Michael Ackerman said the officers who were inducted were more than just a group of names.

Safety can become instinct with practice

Sgt. Maj. of the Army Jack Tilley
Headquarters, Department of the Army

commentary

I'm not usually one to either belabor a single topic or go out of my way to tell war stories, but I'm going to make an exception.

The subject is safety, and the story — I would hope — makes a point about doing what's right.

When I was in Germany, a blurry-eyed NCO was riding shotgun in a truck carrying chow and fuel to the field about 2 a.m. one morning. There was hardly any moon, and as the vehicle rolled down a darkened tank trail, something caught the NCO's eye. He ordered the driver to stop.

Without knowing precisely why, the sergeant followed his instincts and got out of the truck, walked ahead of the vehicle and used his flashlight to guide it down the trail.

Before covering much more than 10 meters, the sergeant found himself walking into the middle of a squad of infantrymen from another unit who'd bagged out in a flat area beside a curve in the tank trail. Nobody in the squad was awake, and they had marked their sleeping area with two weak chem lights you had to almost step on to notice.

Without the ground guide, the driver likely would have rolled through the curve, onto its shoulder and killed several soldiers.

As war stories go, this might not be an earth-shaking tale, but had the NCO not been paying attention and trusted his instincts, the results would have been earth shaking — especially if one of those killed happened to be your soldier, your buddy, your husband or your son.

Even a single safety-related fatality is one too many, and time and again — as I read of the events surrounding a death or injury — I find myself asking, "could this have been avoided ... would this soldier be alive right now if a leader or fellow soldier been paying a little more attention."

Many times, I've had to conclude, the answer is "yes."

As leaders, we can't stress safety enough, and there's more to safety than merely checking the block by including it in your op orders, training meetings, range briefings and after-action reports.

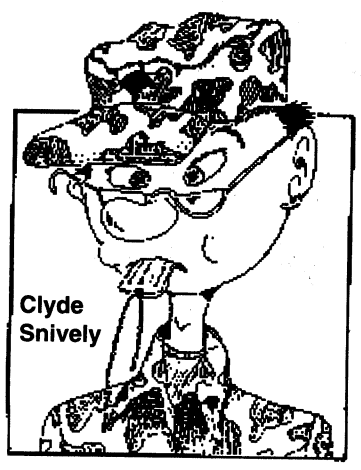
As a battalion commander once told his leaders, "safety isn't an add-on, it's a continuous process by which we evaluate risk alongside mission accomplishment."

The key word here is continuous, and it's a theme that NCO took to heart subconsciously that night when he dismounted the truck and saved lives simply by being alert and heeding his instincts.

Again, I would ask you to push this mindset downward within your formations and remind everyone — as often as you have to — that safety isn't an add-on.

At the same time, I would also ask you to give force protection the same emphasis as safety.

The simple reality is that U.S. forces are and will continue to be targets for various terrorist groups around the world.



Too often, it seems that people assume force protection is only something they think about when they're deployed to a place like the Balkans.

Like safety, ensuring our soldiers and families are protected from terrorism is something we must think about constantly. We can't assume anything in this day and age, nor can we educate our leaders and troops enough on force protection.

commentary

They're baaack.

Mosquitoes that is. I hate mosquitoes. Mainly because they love me. I can stand in a crowd and guess who gets the mosquito bite? Moi.

Well this weekend was the official start of mosquito season and for those of you taking morning PT this is not news to you.

I am surprised though that we don't have an official mosquito history month or a mosquito celebration lunch — we do for virtually everything else. And mosquitoes certainly need one.

Their PR stinks.

If you're like me, there is no redeeming quality for mosquitoes.

Or so I thought until I started researching this pesky critter.

For instance, did you know they play an important role in the environment? Larvae are a source of food for other aquatic organisms and adults of many of them have an important role in the pollination of several plants.

You want my answer to that? We can do without the aquatic organisms and plants that depend on mosquitoes for survival. Oh yeah, I know, there's some wisenheimers out there saying that if it weren't for those aquatic organisms and flowers, then we'd be without something else and that if we didn't have that something else … you know little fish eat organisms, bigger fish eat little fish, man eats bigger fish, ad nauseum.

OK tree huggers, go ahead and say that, but I believe that other alternate life styles would come along and replace those organisms. Hey, didn't we finally get rid of the twist? And disco?

Unfortunately there is also that axiom that proclaims the fittest and most adaptive will survive. Certainly true with mosquitoes. Until 1985 there were no Asian Tiger Mosquitoes in the U.S. Then the Japanese smuggled some into the port of Houston. Within two years they'd spread to 17 states, now they are in nearly all southern states and go as far north as Ohio and New Jersey. We have them in Georgia along with 55 other species of mosquitoes. That thought really makes me itch.

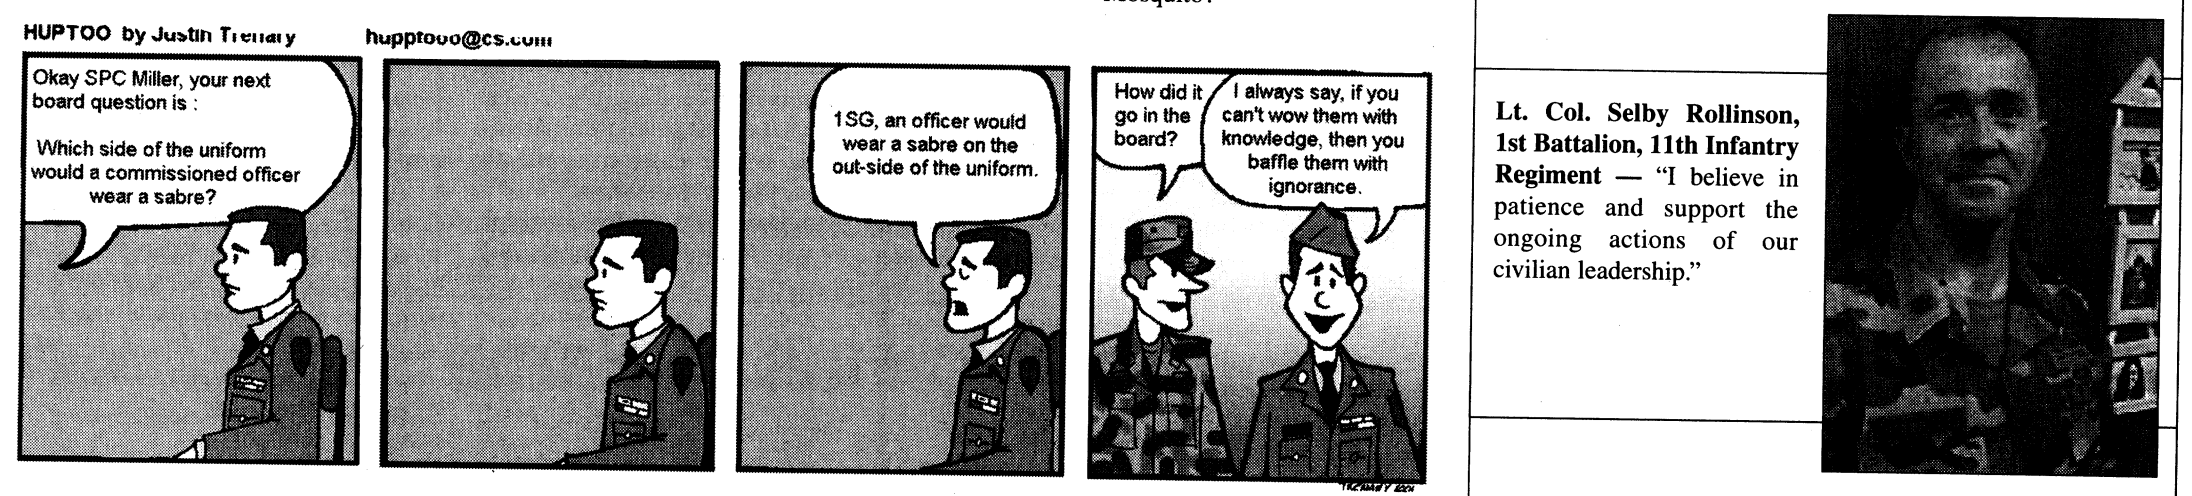
So what can we do about it? Well we could ban temperatures above 32 degrees, but I guess that wouldn't go over too big with bathing suit manufactures. So we need to fight back.

First we need to set up defense positions in our own yards — look for anything that will hold water after a rain — plant saucers, gutters, birdbaths, pet water dishes. These things need to be emptied every few days because a mosquito can go from egg to flying biting machine in four days.

The PX sells a product you can affix to the end of your hose to spray the yard. It's supposed to be effective for 30 days. I'm just happy to get a couple of bite-free evenings.

Other products include Citronella candles (outdoor use only). They repel mosquitoes and other biting insects, but are most effective when there is little air movement.

People who manufacture them claim Vitamin B1, garlic, brewer's yeast and other plant-based chemicals repel mosquitoes if taken internally (they come in tablet form). About the only thing I know of that garlic repels is other people.

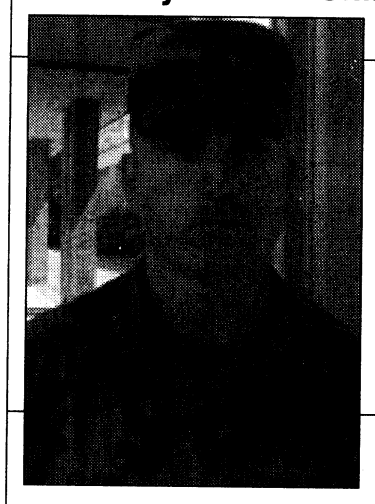


And guess what, scientific studies do not support the claims that these materials are effective repellents for mosquitoes or other biting insects.

In recent years, plants such as Citrosa are being promoted as having mosquito repellent properties. However, results of scientific studies of these plants have not supported the claims of effective mosquito-repellency in outdoor use.

A variety of battery powered ultrasonic pest repelling devices are available. Manufactures allege that high frequency sound emitted repel mosquitoes, ticks, fleas and even cock roaches. However, scientific tests … yep you got it.

Then there are bug zappers. I love bug zappers. I love to hear the little critters fry. But please, put the zapper in someone else's yard because they attract insects — how else can they zap them?



So, any ideas on how to celebrate the Month of the Mosquito?

Inspection keep units clean of drugs, guns

Canine cops help sniff out contraband items

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Health and welfare inspections are routine and performed continuously throughout the Army it's what found during those inspections that causes concern in many units.

A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment recently conducted its own health and welfare inspection of their troops and barracks.

"I believe that a unit should have health and welfare inspections at least once a quarter," said Capt. Granville Smith, A Co. commander. "However, for inspections to be effective, they must be unannounced."

During an inspection, military working dogs search rooms, common areas and, in some cases, soldiers.

The dogs perform anywhere from three to five inspections a week. That number may vary depending on the time of year, said Staff Sgt. Troy Sutton, kennel master, 209th Military Police Detachment.

Using their keen sense of smell, which has been developed to find several different narcotics and explosives, the dogs search for scents until they are rewarded.

Rewards come in the form of treats and encouragement, Sutton said.

If a soldier is found in the possession of drugs during a health and welfare inspection, a military police investigator is called to secure the evidence, he said.

Upon securing the evidence, the soldier is then arrested and taken to the military police station to be questioned by the MPs.

The obtained evidence is relinquished to the Criminal Investigation Division for further investigation.

Pending the investigation's outcome, the soldier may face either judicial or non-judicial punishment, Smith said.

Once a soldier has been determined to have alledgedly used an illegal drug, the trial counsel provides legal advice to the soldier's commander; however the commander makes the ultimate decision of what course of action to take with the soldier, said Maj. Stephen Lund, chief, Criminal Law, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

"Army regulations provide specific guidance to commanders as to what they must do once a soldier is identified as an illegal drug user," Lund said. "Each case must be assessed on an individual basis and on its own facts."

The importance of sniffing out drugs and illegal weapons in the barracks has not been overlooked, especially by Smith.

"The fastest way to destroy the effectiveness of a unit is to let drug problems within a unit go unchecked," he said. "A soldier who uses drugs cannot truly give 100 percent to any endeavor. This soldier is a liability to any mission and any other soldier who must depend on him or her."

However, if a soldier does have a drug problem, hope is not lost.

"If a soldier recognizes he has a drug problem, and does a self-referral to the Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, then the soldier should be allowed to go through the rehabilitation program," Smith said.

Smith's advice to soldiers who may decide to use drugs is: "Just say, no!"

New processing center opens

Facility helps ready soldiers to deploy

Terry Beckwith
Martin Army Community Hospital

It was a gloomy rainy day, not unlike others that had seen soldiers and civilians process through the Soldier Readiness Processing TEMPER tents at Martin Army Community Hospital en route to foreign lands or returning home.

Despite the rain it was a day of celebration for many. The ribbon cutting ceremony of the Readiness Processing Center took place March 29 before a small crowd of guests and employees.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Ron Smith gave the invocation and benediction. Smith said during his invocation, "as a soldier who has been processed through the CONUS Readiness Center and also the old SRP Center TEMPER tents, I feel very honored to be here today and also happy for the many civilians and soldiers who will benefit from the modern RPC."

The building of the new RCP will benefit many, said Col. Jim Beson, MACH commander.

"We decided to use one of our existing warehouses and convert it into a permanent RPC, to provide better service for the 100-200 civilians and soldiers who are processed through Fort Benning on a weekly basis," Beson said.

The project entailed converting 8,000 square feet of the warehouse's 12,000, adding a new metal roof and siding, lighting, exterior doors, and some paving. Included in the package were also heating and air-conditioning, interior partitions suspended ceilings, floor coverings and restrooms.

"Overall everyone is reaping the rewards of the new facility," said Valerie Bell, medical mobilization officer.

Retired Col. Bob Nett, Beson and Col. Jose Torres, garrison commander, performed the honors of cutting the ribbon commemorating the official grand opening of the RPC.

A brief tour of the RPC conducted by Bell followed the ceremony.

Benning range fitted with solar lighting

Panels lighten load on post electrical system

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning decided to take another step in helping the environment and reduce the amount of strain put on the power grids by installing solar energy panels into one of the post's ranges.

Garnsey Range became the newest member of the solar lighting world earlier this year, said Mark Fincher, chief, Energy and Utilities Division, Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics.

After receiving the requirement for lighting the mess points, control point, ammunition point and powering tactical radios at Garnsey Range, Fincher said he made the suggestion for solar panels to be installed.

Monetary concerns led to the decision to install solar panels at the range.

The total cost to install the panels came to less than $48,000, while it would have cost more than $200,000 to run normal electricity to the range because the closest power point is over two miles away, Fincher said.

After the Department of Defense supplied the money from the Renewable Energy Money fund, Southern Company was contracted to do the work.

"One of the best things about solar energy is that it doesn't put pollution into the environment," Fincher said. "Going to solar energy is the smart thing."

During the course of the next 20 years, several batteries located inside the panels will have to be replaced, but the cost of upkeep and maintenance on them is still comparable to that of other types of energy sources, he said.

Even though Fort Benning doesn't plan to go solely to solar energy within the next few years, plans are being considered on installing panels in the new barracks being built for water heating purposes to lighten the load on the electrical system and to install these panels on other ranges.

Sgt. 1st Class Nick Koziar, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, has recently used the new panels, and believes they will help make his job as an instructor writer a little easier by minimizing the amount of equipment he brings to the range.

"If they work like they are supposed to, it will make life a little easier because we won't have to carry things like the generator and the fuel out there anymore," he said.

So far the panels have worked great to perform functions such as charging the radios, he said.

Suspected Albanian smuggler shot by KFOR soldier

Altercation ensues during routine patrol

Army News Service

CAMP BONDSTEEL, Kosovo — A U.S. soldier shot and wounded an Albanian suspected of smuggling April 6 in Vitina, Kosovo.

Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 325th Infantry Regiment entered Sam's Pizzeria in Vitina, during a routine patrol Friday evening.

The soldiers spotted the Albanian male, whom they said was a suspected extremist, and asked him to step outside for questioning. While exiting, the man pushed a U.S. soldier and fled on foot.

Members of the patrol asked the suspect to halt and he refused, so the soldiers began pursuit. While running, the man reached into his pants and pulled out what could have been a weapon, authorities said.

With the object in his hand, he turned toward the soldiers. A soldier responded to this action by shooting the man once in the left shoulder.

The soldiers shouted at the man to halt again but he refused and entered a nearby building. U.S. soldiers cordoned off the area and then entered the building, detaining the man.

No Kosovo Force soldiers were injured.

"The soldier in Vitina responded with the appropriate force necessary for this situation," said Col. Tom Gross, Multinational Brigade East chief of staff. "The Albanian man is involved with smuggling and extremist activities and is known to be armed. Our soldiers were threatened and took appropriate actions to defend themselves."

KFOR soldiers transported the injured man to Camp Bondsteel for medical treatment of the gunshot wound. He is currently listed in stable condition.

The man will remain detained at Camp Bondsteel for questioning, officials said, after he receives medical treatment.

Top installations named

Army News Service

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld has announced the winners of the 2001 Commander In Chief's Award for Installation Excellence. They are:

- Army: Fort Bragg, Fayetteville, N.C.
- Marine Corps: Marine Corps Base Camp Lejeune, Jacksonville, N.C.
- Navy: Commander, Fleet Activities Yokosuka, Yokosuka, Japan
- Air Force: Seymour Johnson Air Force Base, Goldsboro, N.C.
- Defense Logistics Agency: Defense Supply Center Columbus, Columbus, Ohio.

The Commander In Chief's annual Award for Installation Excellence recognizes the outstanding and innovative efforts of the people who operate and maintain U.S. military installations.

The five recipients of this highly competitive award were selected for their exemplary support of the Department of Defense mission.

Each winning installation succeeded in providing excellent working, housing and recreational conditions.

Excellent installations enable better mission performance and enhance the quality of life for military men and women and their families.

The 2001 Commander In Chief's Award ceremony is scheduled for May 4, (time to be announced) in the Pentagon Center Courtyard.

Spring heat puts motorcycles back on streets

Rachel R. Garcia

Spc. Terrence Mizell, 209th Military Police Company, demonstrates the proper gear required to operate a motorcycle on post.

Bikers must follow post regs on cycle safety

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

He rode his motorcycle for nearly two decades, journeying with friends through open roads and lush stretches of land.

But Leslie Steen, a Fort Benning training instructor, sold his cycle six years ago because he didn't want to risk getting injured.

"People in privately owned vehicles don't look out or pay attention to you," Steen said. "I just didn't want to put up with the hassle anymore."

Steen now educates drivers on cycle safety through the Fort Benning driver testing office. His busy season is coming up too — higher mercury equals more motorcycles on the streets, and a higher probability that accidents may occur.

To avoid possible accidents, Fort Benning will continue to hold motorcycle safety checkpoints.

With the high temperatures come more frequent checks in high volume areas, said Staff Sgt. Lee Edwards, 209th Military Police Detachment, Military Police Activity.

"We're trying to be proactive in preventing accidents," Edwards said.

The most common problem they find is that cyclists are not wearing their reflective vests, Edwards said.

"We see a lot of riders wearing a reflective sash, and not the required vest. They can wear their sashes in addition to the vest, but they have to follow the rules," Edwards said.

According to Army regulation for Prevention of Motor Vehicle Accidents, military personnel operating or riding motorcycles on or off post must:

- wear a properly fastened, Directorate of Training approved helmet;
- wear proper eye protection (clear goggles or face shield attached to helmet);
- wear long trousers, full fingered gloves, long shirt or jacket, leather boots or over-the-ankle shoes;
- wear a highly visible reflective vest (not a sash, leg or arm band);
- have the motorcycle headlights on at all times;
- have the two rearview mirrors, one on each handle bar, right and left.

The same criteria in operating a motorcycle applies to Department of Defense and Department of Army civilians operating a cycle on-post or on official TDY travel that may take them off post.

Pvt. Nidia Fleming, 71st Military Police Detachment, Military Police Activity, said she has seen an increasing number of cyclists on post.

"There's always a surge in the summer months, with classes graduating and an influx of soldiers coming to the post," Fleming said.

Fleming said a good number of new arrivals to Fort Benning have taken the course elsewhere and simply need to register their cycles during the in-processing procedure.

To legally operate a motorcycle on post, they must be registered.

To register a cycle, individuals must show a valid state driver's license with a motorcycle classification and a valid military defensive driver's card along with a current registration and proof of insurance.

To obtain a motorcycle safety completion card, a riding course must be completed.

Two such courses are offered at Fort Benning, as well as Fort Gordon, Ga., and other military installations in the state.

Once cyclists have completed the three-day beginner's class and received a completion card, their military defensive driver's card is valid indefinitely.

The class, which costs $50 for Georgia residents and $200 for out of state participants, is free to military, DoD, DA civilians and their families.

To check the availability for particular classes, call the Motorcycle Safety Program Office at (800) 245-4410. Classes are kept small to allow for individual attention.

A CLOSER LOOK

To ride a motorcycle on Fort Benning drivers must:

- Wear an approved helmet
- Wear proper eye protection
- Wear long trousers, full fingered gloves, a long shirt or jacket, leather boots or over the ankle shoes
- Have headlights on at all times
- Have two rearview mirrors
- Wear a reflective vest

Card rates lowered

Interest rate drops for third time this year

Army, Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — For the third time this year, the Federal Reserve has lowered key interest rates by one half percent.

As a result, banks also reduced their prime lending rate by one half percent.

With this newest reduction in interest rates, the Military Star card reduced its interest rate from 13.25 percent to 12.75 percent, effective April 1.

The interest rate is computed by adding 4.75 percent to the U.S. prime rate. This decrease maintains the highly competitive rate of the Military Star card.

According to www.bankrate.com, bankcard variable interest rates now average as follows: Standard cards, 17.16 percent; gold cards, 16.72 percent; and platinum cards, 16.61 percent.

The Military Star card is accepted at all AAFES, Navy, Marine Corps and Coast Guard exchanges, including catalog and military clothing stores operated by AAFES and the Marine Corps.

The new rate does not apply to Uniform Clothing or Military Sales Plans, special promotions already in existence, customers on deployment whose balances are treated under special conditions or those who have balances at reduced rates.

Deployment is defined as travel overseas in conjunction with Joint Chiefs of Staff deployment orders.

Earnings from the card go back into military communities as morale, welfare and recreation dividends.

Criminal behavior linked to domestic violence

Commanders key to preventing domestic violence

Linda D. Kozaryn
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — DoD's Task Force on Domestic Violence says the military must make it clear domestic violence often involves criminal behavior and challenge commanders to intensify efforts to prevent it.

The panel's 12 military and 12 civilian members agree that message must come from "the top," so they're asking the Defense Department's senior civilian leader to put out the word.

"An unequivocal statement from you will send a powerful signal throughout the department. It will make clear that this matter must be addressed decisively, judiciously and unwaveringly," task force co-chairs Marine Lt. Gen. Jack W. Klimp and Deborah D. Tucker wrote in a letter to Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld.

In a report sent to the secretary Feb. 28 and presented to staffers of the House and Senate armed services committees March 9, the task force outlined its initial findings.

The report also contains 59 recommendations to improve DoD's response to domestic violence, ranging from increasing military police training to enhancing victim safety.

The panel labeled the first of its 59 ideas — the zero-tolerance memo — "The Mother of All Recommendations." It asks the secretary to sign a proposed memorandum stating that domestic violence is a pervasive problem within society that transcends all ethnic, racial, gender and socioeconomic boundaries, and it will not be tolerated in the Department of Defense.

Rumsfeld has 90 days to review, comment and forward the report to Congress.

Overall, the task force report calls on the Defense Department to address domestic violence as it has other social problems that can adversely affect national security.

Panel members noted that DoD has worked effectively, for example, to eliminate racial and gender discrimination by establishing equal opportunity policies.

DoD's "zero tolerance" policies have significantly reduced alcohol and drug abuse. A similar policy would help prevent domestic violence, the congressionally mandated panel said.

About 69 percent of the 12,043 substantiated reports of domestic violence recorded by DoD in fiscal 1999 involved mild abuse, according to DoD officials.

About 24 percent involved moderate abuse; 6 percent, severe abuse; and 1 percent, unknown.

Under its three-year charter in the fiscal 2000 Defense Authorization Act, the task force began studying domestic violence in April 2000. The group visited Fort Bragg and Camp Lejeune in North Carolina, and Langley Air Force Base and Naval Station Norfolk in Virginia. Further visits are slated to European Command in May and Pacific Command in September.

The task force found few military personnel are prosecuted or administratively sanctioned on charges stemming from domestic violence.

It said military police generally are not trained to properly investigate and document domestic violence. Many MPs felt the bulk of what they had received was only on-the-job training, panelists reported.

The panel also found an across-the-board lack of awareness of the 1996 Lautenberg Amendment and its ramifications on military careers. The law prohibits anyone convicted of domestic violence from bearing a firearm.

Military spouses, the panel found, are usually unaware of the DoD Transitional Compensation Program, which provides financial and other support for victims. Many victims fail to report abuse because they fear damaging their military spouses' careers and losing the family's income and government housing.

Klimp said the installations visited so far — one of each service — approached domestic violence much the same way, though some places "did it a little better." The panel's 59 recommendations, he said, "could probably be classified as the 'best business practices' we've observed throughout the year."

CID probes net $78 million from manufacturers

Investigation proves fault on suppliers

Ron Peregrine
Army News Service

DETROIT — A six-year investigation recently ended when the Boeing company agreed to pay the government almost $62 million to settle a lawsuit filed after two CH-47 Chinook helicopters crashed, allegedly due to faulty transmission gears.

A Boeing supplier, SPECO, which manufactures the helicopter transmission gears, also paid the government nearly $16 million under an earlier settlement.

At least $32 million so far in monies, inventory, tooling and equipment has been awarded directly to the Army as a result of the case, officials said.

The investigation was handled in part by an arm of the Army Criminal Investigation Command, the Detroit Fraud Resident Agency. Special Agent William Janiga of the DFRA had a significant role in the joint investigation, along with Special Agent Conrad Swensen of the Defense Criminal Investigative Service in Dayton, Ohio.

The investigation began in November 1994 when information was received that transmission gears manufactured by the SPECO Corporation were responsible for at least two accidents involving CH-47 Chinook helicopters. The gears were believed to have a defect known as "continuous inter-granular carbide networking." When the gears failed, one aircraft was destroyed and another received major damage.

The investigation resulted in a civil lawsuit being filed under the False Claims Act. The trial attorneys were Dennis Phillips and Paul Wogaman, Civil Division, Department of Justice, Washington, D.C. The settlement with SPECO was reached in December 1996. In the recent settlement with Boeing, an additional $14 million is pending appeal.

Even more important than the money, officials said, is the resulting identification of a safety issue and the removal of gears manufactured by SPECO from the Army and Boeing inventories and all CH-47 aircraft.

Another recent CID investigation involving a manufacturer of Bradley Fighting Vehicle drive assembly gears concluded with the contractor agreeing to pay the government more than $47,700.

Jo-Bar Manufacturing of Bedford, Ohio, entered into a plea agreement, resulting in restitution of the full contract price, $44,707.20.

The firm's contract with the U.S. Army Tank-automotive and Armaments Command specified that the Bradley gears were to be welded using a costly "electronic beam weld" process. Visual inspection of the finished gears by quality assurance inspectors could not determine if this process was actually used.

When the gears began to fail, subsequent testing determined that they had not been welded as required, officials said. Investigators found Jo-Bar had used a "heat-shrink fit" process which was accomplished by placing one piece of the gear into a "used pizza oven" to heat and expand it. The cold, unheated or "shrunken" piece was then pressed into the heated, "expanded" piece. When the pieces regained their normal temperature, they would "bind" together and give the appearance of having been properly welded.

In addition to the restitution and costs, officials said all the gears were removed from warehouses or returned by field units and destroyed.

The investigation was conducted jointly by Special Agents William Janiga of the Detroit Fraud Resident Agency and Special Agent Timothy Robertson of the Defense Criminal Investigative Service in Cleveland, Ohio.

Another TACOM contractor — Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company — recently agreed to a settlement, ending a three-year investigation into out-of-tolerance track shoes for the M-88 A1 and M-88 A2 Recovery Vehicles

Under the terms of the settlement, not only was Goodyear required to provide 5,000 replacement track shoes valued at $300,000 at no additional expense to the Army, but the firm also agreed to replace or modify its production line at a cost of $153,000.

The investigation involved extensive testing and inspection of track shoes manufactured by Goodyear, officials said. Had the administrative settlement not been reached, it was estimated that additional testing and inspection of the track would have been required in preparation for criminal and civil litigation. The associated costs to the Army for the testing alone were estimated to exceed an additional $300,000 to $400,000.

The investigation was conducted jointly by Special Agent William Janiga of the Detroit Fraud Resident Agency and Special Agent Timothy Robertson of DCIS in Cleveland, Ohio.

Holocaust remembrance

The USAIC Equal Opportunity Office and the 11th Regiment Chapel pay honor to the victims as well as survivors of the Holocaust Thursday at the William Breman Jewish Heritage Museum in Atlanta and the Holocaust Memorial at Greenwood Cemetery.

Buses will leave Building 2509, the Equal Opportunity Office, and will return around 5:30 p.m. Soldiers, dependents and DoD civilians are welcome. Attire is civilian.

Cost is $2 per person (admission into the museum). There will be a guided tour of the museum and a lecture and story from a survivor of the Holocaust.

Participants will need to provide their own lunch.

To purchase your tickets or for more information, call the Equal Opportunity Office at 545-6665 or 545-5535. The deadline to purchase tickets is Wednesday.

Bus schedule

The post shuttle bus will run a reduced schedule today through Sunday.

It will make stops only at the Main Mall Post Exchange, the hospital, Sand Hill points, Custer Road points and the Main Post Mini Mall.

Two-Star Breakfast

The quarterly CG's Two-Star Excellence Breakfast and Awards Ceremony is scheduled for April 27 at the Supper Club in the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The cost of the breakfast buffet is $6.25 and includes scrambled eggs, bacon, creamed chipped beef, hash browns, biscuits, coffee and juice.

There will be open seating at the breakfast and buffet lines open at 7:30 a.m. Tickets are available through the Quality Management Division, Infantry Hall, Room 547.

Call Pat Porter at 545-4729, or send an e-mail to porterp@benning.army.mil for more information.

NCOA visit

The president of NCOA, retired Sgt. Maj. of the Marine Corps Doug Sommers, will be at Fort Benning April 17-18.

During the visit, he will be at the NCOA Cookout at Russ Pond April 18 from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.

For more information, call retired Sgt. Maj. Bobby Wright at 563-4706.

Ranger reunion

The Florida Ranger Camp 50th Anniversary and Florida Ranger Instructor Reunion takes place April 19-21 at Camp James E. Rudder, Eglin Air Force Base, Fla.

All former Florida ranger instructors and their families welcome.

Details can be found on the Web site at www.benning.army.mil/rtb/6th%20RT Bn/index.htm or call Capt. Eric Baus at (850) 882-1162.

SFC Board

The Department of the Army sergeant first class selection board will convene May 30 to consider soldiers for promotion.

The zone of consideration for the board is all staff sergeants with a date of rank of June 30, 1999 with a basic active service date between May 30, 1982 and May 30, 1995.

Soldiers who meet the eligibility criterion must have a current photo on file.

They must review their personnel records and authenticate their personnel qualification record.

For more information, call your personnel sergeant or call the Adjutant General Personnel Services and Readiness Division at 545-8861 for an appointment.

Heritage display

The Equal Opportunity Office is looking for anyone who may have items relating to Asian Pacific Heritage for our display in Infantry Hall. This includes books, posters, crafts.

The display is from May 18 through June 1. Anyone who can help should contact the Post EO Office at 545-6665 or 545-3198.

OCS board

The Officer Candidate School board schedule for 2001 is as follows: Board Three: Applications are due no later than April 27 for the May 1 local board; Board Four: Applications are due no later than July 27 for the Aug. 1 local board.

All applications will be submitted to Sgt. Angela Gonzalez in Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2619. For more information, call 545-3341 or 545-4702 or refer to the Fort Benning Web site.

Survey available

The Infantry School Course Feedback Survey is now available on the Fort Benning Web site.

Complete this survey, six months after graduation, and ask your commander or supervisor to participate as well.

All responses will be confidential.

The school's commanders, staff members and instructors rely on your professional opinion of its effectiveness in producing graduates whose technical, tactical, and leadership skills and physical abilities meet the needs of the 21st century land warrior.

to make it both an educational and patriotic experience," Hanner said.

The museum is now housed in a former hospital built in the 1920s on Baltzell Avenue. About 100,000 people visit the museum each year.

In addition to constantly battling climate-control problems in the building, Hanner is only able to display about 20 percent of the museum's holdings.

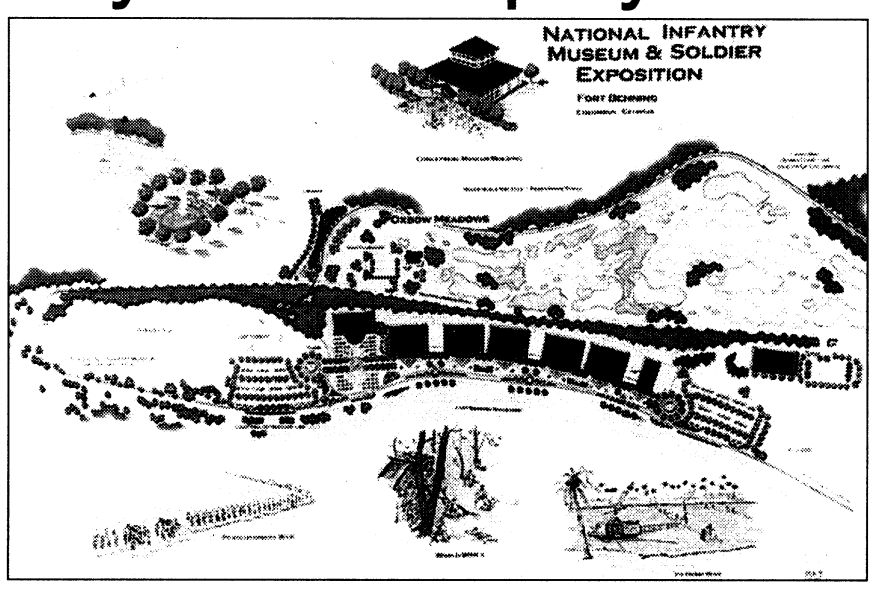
Items in storage include a World War II glider, jeeps, a landing craft and numerous artifacts too large for the present location.

"We want Barry to come in and look at the collection already on display and at the extensive inventory in storage and help us design a facility that would highlight what we have," Williams said.

The proposed site for the new facility is a tract of land between Benning Boulevard and South Lumpkin Road, which includes about 90 acres owned by Fort Benning and 124 acres owned by the city of Columbus. It would be connected to Uptown Columbus by the Riverwalk.

The NIA's plan includes securing a long-term lease from the city for the property.

The association signed an agreement with Fort Benning and the Center of Military History in October that granted the association the legal authority to proceed with the project.



Once completed, the facility will provide exhibition space to the Army at no cost, and the NIA will handle all operational matters for the facility such as security, scheduling, maintenance and utilities.

One concept calls for a series of buildings to be constructed in a "campus" style.

Options being discussed for the site include a reunion hall for military associations, a memorial garden, parade field and a World War II company street featuring seven buildings from that era that now stand behind the current museum. The buildings are set for restoration as a tribute to the men and women who served during that war.

A price tag has yet to be set for the new museum project.

A dollar estimate will come once Lord has completed an overall design, Williams said.

Awards: Carry on legacy of former airborne soldiers

the paratroopers moved to the nearby Airborne Walk to remember their past — and to honor their fallen brothers.

"They were really heroes," said retired Lt. Gen. Richard Seitz, former commander of the 82nd Airborne Division and 18th Airborne Corps, and the guest speaker at the ceremony. "They purchased a legacy of freedom with their blood."

As high a price as those fallen heroes paid, Seitz said, "peace without freedom is worse than no peace at all."

Symbolizing the passing of that responsibility through the generations, one of the Army's original paratroopers then pinned jump wings to the uniform of the youngest, newest addition to that elite family — making that young soldier the "Keeper of the Wings."

Thad Selman, who served as a member of the 29th Infantry Regiment's parachute test platoon in 1940, represented the past in the ceremony; Pvt. Christopher Brink, a newly minted paratrooper, at the age of 17, represented the present — and, more importantly, the future — of the Army's airborne infantry force.

Afterward, Brink tried to explain how he felt about the honor.

"It's just — it makes me feel ... There's no way to describe it," Brink said.

The feeling of jumping out of an airplane was an easier one.

"It's the greatest feeling in the world," Brink said. "It's almost like you're a rocket flying through the air."

That feeling is one that 15,000 new Airborne students learn about every year, and the ceremony only told part of that story.

An hour after the former paratroopers had heard the day's speeches and gone on to lunch, a few soldiers stayed behind to fold up the chairs and sweep around the Airborne Walk.

A hundred yards away, though, the day's events had no impact on a Black Hat teaching his soldiers how to parachute into combat.

"We are wasting time," he shouted, in a refrain heard for decades on that same spot. "Hurry up, hurry up, hurry up!"

It was, as much as the sound of rifle fire, the sound of freedom.

"This is a truly magnificent group," Ackerman said. "I looked at your biographies. I was in awe of the accomplishments that you all have done over the years. I am humbled to stand here before you."

One example was Rascon, who earned the Medal of Honor in the Republic of Vietnam in 1966 while he was an enlisted medic in the 173rd Airborne Brigade (Separate). Rascon graduated from OCS in 1970 continued his career as a military intelligence officer and recently retired from civilian government service.

Ackerman said these soldiers are what make America great.

"You epitomize what is so good and what is so great about this country of ours."

This year's ceremony marked the 43rd anniversary of the OCS Hall of Fame. Since its beginning, 1,900 graduates have been honored, including former Sen. Bob Dole.

organizational issue item, it will be returned through direct exchange at CIF and will eventually be stocked in AAFES.

Ware said his office has received questions on whether units can issue the new berets to save time. He said CIF must issue the berets individually because of reporting and property book requirements.

Students attending schools at Fort Benning during the issuing phase will also receive their berets as a part of their CIF issue.

"The only exceptions to this rule are IET soldiers in training who will receive their beret at their first permanent assignment," Ware said. "Our Basic Combat Training Brigade and Infantry Training Brigade trainees will therefore receive their beret as a 'rite of passage' at their first assignment after graduation from one station unit training or advanced individual training.

Headquarters, Department of the Army has determined that the beret will be issued at the first permanent station — not at the installation where training took place.

Berets will not be issued to soldiers processing though the Conus Replacement Center or Individual Deployment Site because berets are not to be worn in a field environment.

Soldiers will get a beret upon redeployment back to their original unit.

School helps hone leadership skills

School teaches Army's newest instructors

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

The first impression a soldier has of the Army upon entering basic training is his drill sergeant.

He or she teaches the new recruits everything it takes to be a soldier in the U.S. Army. The drill sergeant must always serve as a wealth of knowledge and a perfect example of a soldier.

But who teaches them to teach others?

There are three drill sergeant schools across the Army — one is here and the other two are at Fort Jackson, S.C., and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Turning soldiers into drill sergeants is a task that is taken on with great pride at Fort Benning, said Sgt. 1st Class Nathaniel Coakley, senior drill sergeant.

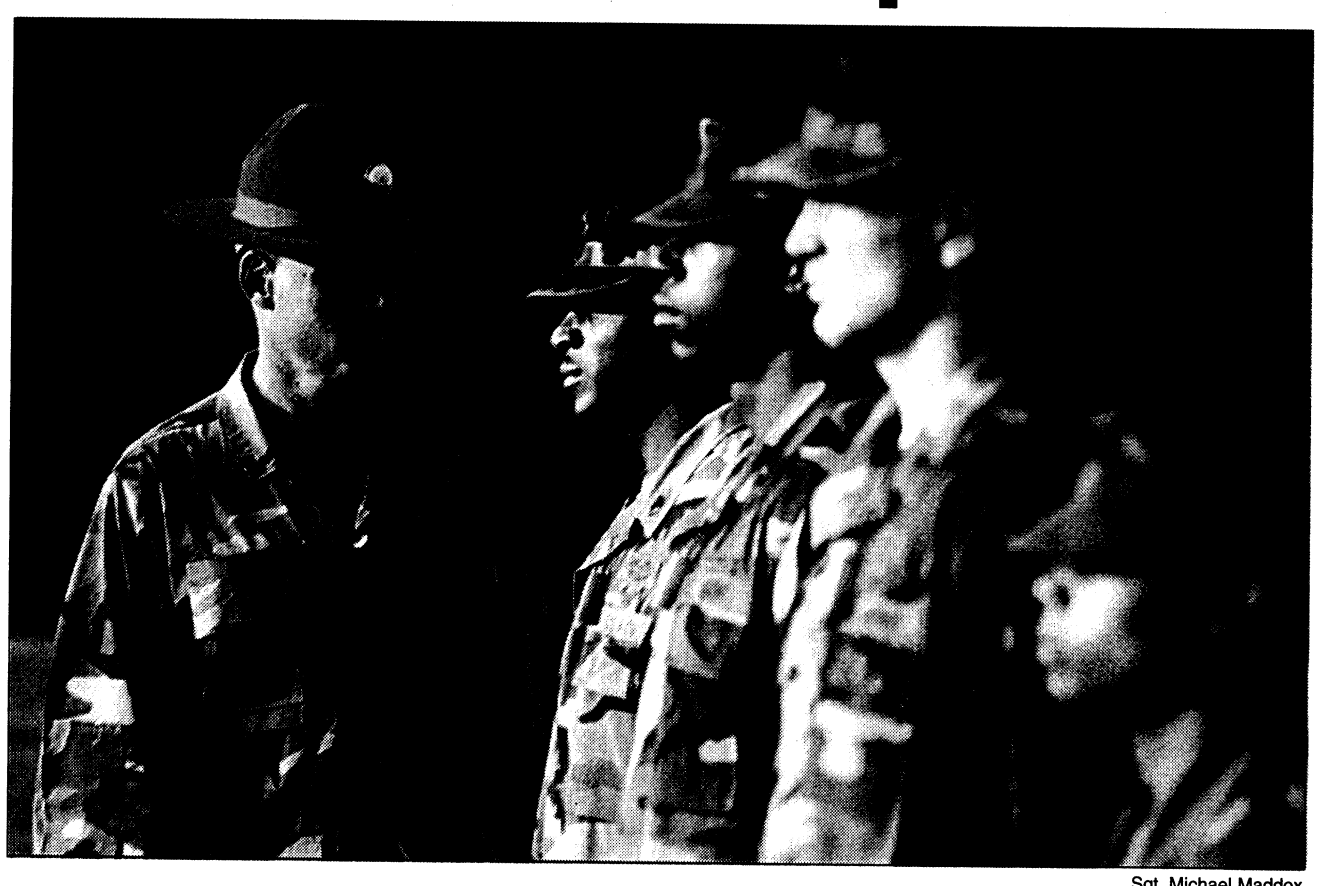
"We take noncommissioned officers who have been deemed qualified by the Department of the Army. We take the skills they already have and hone them so that they are the end product the Army wants to have to train new soldiers," said Coakley.

The drill sergeants in training learn a variety of tasks during the nine-week school that will help them be leaders in the Initial Entry Training environment. Among those are how to properly conduct drill and ceremony, physical training, leadership and counseling.

Staff Sgt. Charlie Carrasco, a drill sergeant school student who has been serving as an indirect fire infantryman at Fort Campbell, Ky., said learning the proper way to accomplish these tasks can be very tough.

"It's pretty mentally intensive," he said. "They (cadre) take you back to almost just like basic training when you get here and reteach you so you can teach others."

Coakley said this retraining is one of the toughest parts of the course because it requires attention to detail.



"Testing through the modules is probably one of the hardest parts of the course. It's where they have to display their ability to retain information and their oral skills," he said. "The whole school overall is tough though. There's a lot of information for us to put out and for them to retain in nine weeks.

"Here we use the references, the field manuals, the Army regulations as our guide to hone those skills they already possess and bring them back to the level of skill needed to be a drill sergeant," Coakley said. "We don't break down, we try to rebuild from what we already have."

He said teamwork is key to making it through the school.

"The big thing we preach here is teamwork. Without teamwork, you cannot accomplish any mission," he said. "You will need teamwork to survive and succeed in the IET environment."

Sgt. 1st Class Felicia Griffin, a drill sergeant school student who has been serving with Fort Benning's Primary Leadership Development Course, said she enjoys the hard work it takes to complete drill sergeant school.

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Staff Sgt. Andy Hill keeps a watchful eye on drill sergeant school students to correct any errors during a drill and ceremony module.

"It's a challenge to be prepared every day to test on modules. You have to be prepared to test a lot and know tasks by the numbers," she said.

She said she knows all of the hard work will pay off in the end.

"As I came through basic training, I always had the impression that drill sergeants were a part of the elite and they always set the example," Griffin said. "I feel like I can lead by that example and become a part of the elite."

It may not be an elite group, but it does take a certain kind of soldier to take on the task of being a drill sergeant.

That's why a background check and a psychological examination are required before being accepted to the school.

Upon graduation from the course, the drill sergeants report to their new units. Coakley said they can be sent anywhere there is a need for a drill sergeant.

"A drill sergeant is a drill sergeant, you can be sent to any basic training unit," he said. "Each unit is unique and has their guidelines on what happens there. We cover basic combat training and that's most important for them."

Ranger Regiment teams win memorial races

Competition evaluates readiness

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Victory can sometimes be bittersweet.

Two 75th Ranger Regiment teams won their respective races at the 12th annual Bataan Memorial Death March April 1 at White Sands Missile Range, N.M. They also overcame a small taste of the horror tens of thousands of American and Filipino forces experienced April 9, 1942.

In the "Military Heavy" category where participants had to carry 35-pound rucksacks, the team of Staff Sgt. John Pugh, Sgt. Louis Sisneros, Sgt. Kevin McGurk and Sgt. Brad Milard, all with the 1st Battalion, and Staff Sgt. Glen Smith, 3rd Battalion, broke an eight-year winning streak by British teams. They finished in 5 hours and 18 minutes.

A team from 2nd Battalion won the "Military Light" category — one in which participants did not carry rucks. Members were 1st Lt. Byron Pateras, 1st Lt. Jay Yancey, Sgt. Herslyn Romero, Spc. Kevin Hedahl and Pvt. Ralph Giordano.

The , 26.2 mile memorial march started on White Sands Main Post, crossed hilly desert terrain, circled a small mountain and returned to the Main Post through sandy desert trails and washes. One of the rangers' goals was to honor and learn more about the service members who went through the Bataan Death March, Smith said. Approximately 30 of the survivors were on hand.

"It was pretty cool having the veterans there and seeing how much they appreciated us," Pugh said. "They shook our hands when we crossed the finish line. They treated us like heroes, when actually we ran the race for them. They are the true heroes."

Another ranger objective of the race was to prepare for the Best Ranger Competition.

"We wanted to see where everyone stood," Smith said. "The nature of the course provided a great evaluation."

"It definitely wasn't easy," Pugh said. "We were hurting, but we pushed through and conquered it. Not only did it challenge us physically, it was a good mental test."

A memorable period of the race came at mile 20, Smith said. "The Sand Pit" was a steep, one-mile stretch of deep sand that was one of the most demanding portions of the contest.

A highlight of the event was the support the "Heavy" soldiers received from the "Light" soldiers and members of the crowd along the death march route.

"The times when people sprayed us with water hoses were the best parts," Pugh said.

The rangers' edge came at the beginning of the race when they ran the first eight miles, Smith said. The following five miles was uphill so they slowed to a fast walk. They varied walking and running the rest of the race.

"The key to our success was we stuck together when other groups separated," Smith said. "When one of us would be hurting, the rest of us motivated him to keep going."

The early pace gave them a gargantuan lead but also gave rise to another obstacle, he said.

"Being so far out front, we didn't know where the rest of the teams were," Smith said.

However, the team held on to beat a team from the 8th Army by approximately five minutes. The British team finished 18 minutes behind the rangers.

"The Brits were good sports," Smith said. "They said the defeat might cost them funding for next year's race, but they took it well."

More than 3,200 military and civilian marchers competed in this year's march, which commemorated the 59th anniversary of the surrender of American and Filipino troops to the Japanese in the Philippines. Competitors represented 45 states as well as Canada, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Holland, Korea and Guam.

The Americans who suffered the actual death march were members of the Army, Army Air Corps, Navy and Marines. The Japanese marched them for days in the scorching heat through the Philippine jungles. Thousands died. Those who survived faced the hardships of a prisoner of war camp. Others were wounded or killed when unmarked enemy ships transporting prisoners of war to Japan were sunk by U.S. air and naval forces.

"It was an unforgettable experience," Smith said. "Those men went through so much. We're all proud to have had the opportunity to honor them."

Actors receive lethal training for historic movie

Post units help train big screen stars

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Standing in a clearing in the woods, Staff Sgt. William Craft, C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was trying to explain the seriousness of the moment to his trainees.

"Everything you put your hands on," Craft said, "is a lethal weapon."

But the warning was met with quiet laughter, and one of the men gathered around Craft spoke up in response.

"A lethal weapon, huh?" said a trainee named Mel Gibson.

It was a rare light moment in two weeks of serious and focused training as Fort Benning soldiers prepared the cast of We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young to credibly portray a group of infantrymen in combat.

Capt. William Colbert, Ranger Training Brigade, was the officer in charge of seeing the actors were trained to standard.

Supporting the filming of the movie was worth the time, Colbert said, because of the value of the book on which it was based — a book that offers a firsthand account of American combat in Vietnam.

"This book is extremely important to the Army, and to the infantry," Colbert said.

Actors trained from Feb. 21 to March 3 working with the 29th Inf. Regt., Ranger Training Brigade and Infantry Training Brigade. They fired rifles, machine guns, grenade launchers and pistols, and learned to move tactically with hands-on training. Much of the training the actors received would have been at least somewhat familiar to a soldier who trained on Sand Hill.

At the hand grenade training site, for example, Craft and his fellow instructors weren't afraid to correct the actors — and to demand their undivided attention.

"I didn't say relax, son," Craft told one actor as they walked through the process of arming a grenade.

The instructors closely watched the actors as they practiced throwing the practice grenades, making them do it over again more than once.

"Prepare to throw," Craft said, and followed it with words that any Sand Hill trainee knows very well: "Too slow, get down."

"You take your time getting up with a grenade, you're going to get shot with a grenade in your hand," Craft said.

The real soldiers didn't just talk, either — they also showed the actors a thing or two by example.

After the actors repeatedly struggled to successfully throw a grenade into a trench at 25 meters, Staff Sgt. James Bobadilla, A Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., casually dropped to the prone, armed a training grenade, vaulted to one knee, and effortlessly tossed the grenade straight into the objective.

"Well," one actor said to another, "he does it every day."

The actors clearly appreciated the quality of the training they received — and they walked away with a clear view of the Army.

"The incredible thing for me is to come in and look at military life," said actor Sam Elliott. "It worried me, as an American citizen, what kind of condition it's in."

He wasn't worried when he left.

"You cannot come in here and waste this opportunity, and not fully appreciate what these guys go through," Elliott said. "As actors, we have an obligation to get it right."

Demonstration leads to development

Division's exercise helps mold Army's Objective Force

Army News Service

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — With the two-week Division Capstone Exercise at the National Training Center about to enter the "live-fire" phase, the Army's senior leadership is already looking at the lessons learned and how they will be applied to the development of the Army's Objective Force.

"This was a great demonstration of the warfighting capability of our Legacy Force to fight and win decisively," said Gen. Eric K. Shinseki, Chief of Staff, U. S. Army. "The increases in situational awareness and technical advances demonstrated here are the vanguard in shaping the requirements for the future Objective Force capabilities."

Since the beginning of April, the 2nd and 4th Brigades of the 4th Infantry Division from Fort Hood, Texas have been put through their paces in a very demanding, fully instrumented, training environment against the world-class opposing force in a contemporary operational environment. Tough, very demanding, realistic training, challenged the competence and character of every soldier and leader. Rugged, non-stop operations, stretched and challenged the reliability and contribution of the Army's investment in digitization for command and control, modernized attack helicopters, tanks, infantry fighting vehicles, and tactical unmanned aerial vehicles. Both soldiers and leaders organized and trained in lethal cohesive units were pitted against a very adaptive enemy employing asymmetric strategies, which validated new Army tactics and strategies for combat operations.

At the NTC, the unit's junior leaders are empowered with a comprehensive view of the battlefield employing information "digital" systems.

At a touch of a button, they now use computers embedded in tanks, fighting vehicles, supply trucks, combat engineer vehicles, helicopters, logistics centers and tactical operations centers to see exactly where they are, where their buddies are, and, most importantly, where the enemy is. This exercise focused beyond information. It focused on leader and soldier knowledge and actions of units to accomplish tactical missions.

"This stuff is so much better than what we used to do," said a sergeant in the 2nd Brigade's tactical command post. "Six months ago, I wasn't a complete believer. Now, I am."

The Army Chief of Staff pointed out the changes are not just in hardware.

"Integrating and leveraging technology is not just equipment," Shinseki said. "It is about the magnificence of our soldiers and their leaders who bring the human dimension to warfighting dominance."

Maj. Gen. B. B. Bell, commander of the Army Armor Center at Fort Knox, Ky., and DCX director, echoed Gen. Shinseki's perspective.

"Not only has the Army embraced information superiority as a huge multiplier for combat effectiveness, the 4th Infantry Division has also fielded an array of extremely lethal upgraded combat equipment such as the M-1 A2 (Systems Enhancement Package, or SEP) tank, the M-2 A3 Bradley Fighting Vehicle, and the Longbow Apache Attack Helicopter," said Maj. Gen. Bell.

"Most importantly, at the center of the formation remain confident, extremely well trained and highly motivated soldiers who are imbued with a winning offensive spirit."

By putting the Army's first digital brigades into the complex combat environment of the NTC, leaders are seeing how well the equipment holds up, and how soldiers are using the information that it provides to destroy the enemy.

"I commanded a brigade in the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) and led it in an NTC rotation in 1992," Maj. Gen. Bell said. "The brigade's subordinate units were still fresh from victory in the Persian Gulf, and they were very skilled and battle wise. They were very, very good. In the few years since then, the advances in the Army's warfighting capability that I've witnessed here at the DCX are almost staggering. It's a good thing, too, since my read of potential threats is that they have made substantial improvements as well."

Small unit operations have advanced their ability to operate with greater initiative, faster tempo, and be more adaptive to changing situations. Combat formations operated at night and during periods of limited visibility, operate faster, with greater lethality.

"The soldiers of the 4th Infantry Division proved themselves worthy opponents on the National Training Center battlefield. They were relentless fighters," said Col. H. Mike Davis, commander of the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, which is the NTC's Opposing Force. "It was evident that they communicated orders and concentrated combat power far more rapidly than non-digitized units over a greater battlefield area during challenging and continuous operations."

The series of combat engagements throughout the two-week DCX have shown the digital information systems embedded in the 4th Infantry Division's brigades are enabling greater coordination between combat elements.

"While the Army transforms to the Objective Force, I am confident that digitized brigades like those we're seeing here at the NTC will be capable of getting the job done, and that job is fighting and decisively winning the nation's wars," Maj. Gen. Bell said.

In its quest to ensure dominance of the battlefield, the Army is continuing its move into the future with better equipment and more capable soldiers. Maj. Gen. Bell noted that soldiers and leaders are in agreement that the presence of these information technologies integrated into the platforms and command posts have increased the ability of soldiers and leaders to accomplish their tasks in complex operational environments.

Planning prepares pets for PCS

Arrangements alleviate pet abandonment

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning veterinarian technician Missy Taylor has a serious pet peeve. She is frustrated with travelers waiting until the last minute to find out requirements in bringing their pets with them on permanent change of duty assignments.

"We had a woman come in two hours before she was leaving to see what shots her dog needed before they got on the plane overseas," Taylor said.

Pet owners are responsible for the care and preparation of their animals when they head overseas, including shots, quarantines and proper documentation. This process could take months and should begin as soon as one has their orders, Taylor said.

Each destination has distinct requirements for animals to enter the area. Hawaii, for instance, has a mandatory pet quarantine for any dog or cat, becausé of their rabies-free status. Other overseas destinations, like Europe, ban canine types.

"Some breeds are not allowed to go to specific destinations, such as fighting dogs," said Sgt. 1st Class Kelly Robinson III, NCOIC of veterinarian services. "Germany outlaws breeds like pit bulls and terriers."

Another consideration is the time of year one moves overseas, Robinson said.

"There are concerns with traveling in certain summer and winter windows. Sometimes, storage compartments for animals can get above 120 or below 20 F, which is obviously dangerous for pets."

Shipping containers must be approved by the International Air Transport Association and be big enough for an animal to stand up, turn around and lie down comfortably. Small pets are allowed to travel in a charter aircraft cabin with special permission from Air Force Air Mobility Command, but it must be in a hard, covered kennel and not exceed 20' x 16' x 8'. AMC flights usually reserve three spots per flight for these carriers.

AMC charters will move only two dogs or cats per family. Fish to fowl, hamsters to horses, many

Students pick up schoolyard, neighborhood

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Wilson Elementary School students and teachers scoured the schoolyard and the surrounding neighborhood last week when they threw a pre-Earth Day clean up. This year commemorates the 31st anniversary of the holiday, celebrated worldwide April 22.

As part of the Keep Columbus Beautiful quest, Tina Bal, Wilson resource teacher, organized the event April 6. Students from all grades took turns clearing the area of debris, as well as finding items that could be recycled. Playgrounds, fields and neighborhood streets were all targeted on the cleanup day.

Residents of Indianhead Terrace, parents and friends of the school were also invited to help the effort. Many donned their plastic gloves and helped the children pick up glass, paper and plastic items around the campus.

Among those assisting with the clean up effort was Melanie Lawson, 19. Her 4-year-old sister, Page, asked her to participate.

"I'm here to help my sister today. This is a good cause," said Lawson. "She's having fun doing this."

The school recently received a large recycle bin, allowing students and faculty to participate in the post recycling effort. Before this, Bal and other teachers were taking items to their own residences to be recycled.

"I was bringing full boxes

Schools seek volunteers

Report reflects increase, growing need

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Despite an increase in the number of volunteer hours in Fort Benning schools, administrators say the need still outweighs the manpower.

According to Fort Benning Schools volunteer report, 134 volunteers donated 1,410 hours in the month of February, 128 hours more than February, 2000. But Gail Wilson, director of staff development, said the increase in numbers reflects a growing need.

"If you just look at the numbers, it looks like a lot of hours, but the need has also grown," Wilson said. "Now more than ever, we encourage parents to be actively involved in their child's school and volunteer whenever and wherever they can."

Wilson said each of Fort Benning's seven schools track volunteer hours monthly by having volunteers "log in" each time they work. The schools then forward this data to the installation volunteer coordinator, who consolidates this information in a monthly report.

"We know that so much more goes on than is ever actually documented," Wilson said. "Volunteers who work on a regular basis consistently log in and out. But every day we have parents who drop in for a few minutes to help grade papers or read with students one on one.

Benning teams up for cancer relay

Bridgett Siter
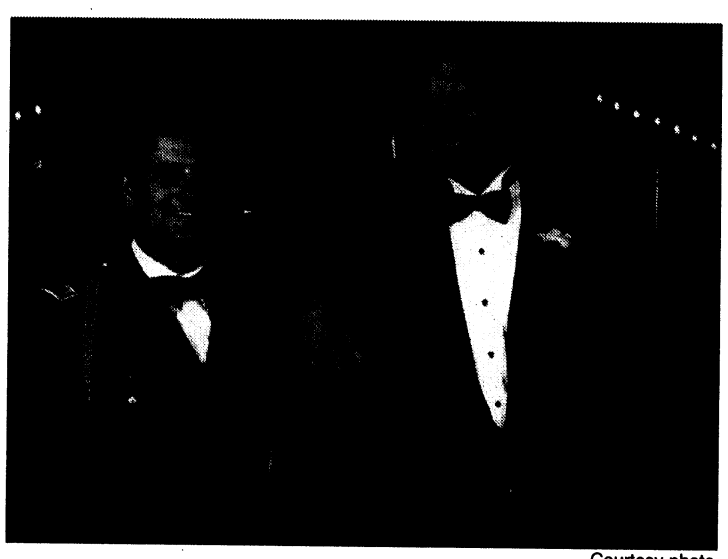
Special to the Bayonet©

"When it comes to finding a cure for cancer, we'll keep going and going and going."

That's the conviction behind the creation of the "Benningizer Bunnies," said 1st Lt. Kate Bielak, logistics officer for the 71st Military Police Detachment and team captain for the newly formed team of Fort Benning folks who'll be participating in the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life May 19-20.

Bielak and 22 of her friends and coworkers from the MPA will be walking the walk to back their talk about their commitment to finding a cure. They'll be circling Kinnett Stadium over and over and over, from noon May 19 until 7 a.m. May 20, to assist the ACS in its biggest fund-raising event of the year.

"I have a lot of confidence in my team, but in my opinion, if we raise only $100, that's a hundred more than we started out with," Bielak said.



Team members are forking over $10 each for the privilege of taking part in the national event. Though the ACS encourages teams not to exceed 15 members, Bielak found it impossible to discourage participants.

"Initially I thought we'd be lucky to have enough walkers. I said we'd have a team even if it was just me and my husband," she said. "But then they just kept coming. I couldn't turn them away. It's for a worthy cause and we're all excited about participating."

Lynda Kelley, wife of Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of law enforcement division, will be the first team member off the starting block. She'll participate in the 'survivors' lap' at the beginning of the relay. Kelley was diagnosed with breast cancer last May.

"I underwent surgery and went through chemotherapy. I just had a check up last week and I'm doing great," Kelley said. "So I'm glad I can do my part. Walking's not my favorite thing. It's very difficult for me.

Retired Col. Randy Buck, former Fort Benning school board president and director of Public Works, presented shirts to the children in recognition of their environmental awareness. Wilson, as well as each school in the Fort Benning school district, will receive the shirts from Flint Energies, where Buck now works.

"He's always been a good friend to Fort Benning schools," said Principal Phyllis Parker. "I think this will instill even more pride in their efforts."

In addition to the shirts, students were given buttons for participating.

Earth Day activities will continue through the month, including an Earth Day door-decorating contest. Students will be encouraged to use recyclable goods to create artistic posters. The first-place class will win an ice cream party as well as free pizzas for the class.

In addition to the ecological-awareness events, students are offered the chance to participate in Wilson's Environmental Protection Club. More than 25 students are members of the club, which started this year.

It was this club that first initiated Bal's idea to get the clean up started.

"The students actually said that the areas around the playgrounds were filled with garbage," Bal said. "Kids can now see what they are doing is making a difference."

The club promotes recycling, planting trees and plants, and general environmental issues. The club, which also will help host a courtyard cleanup and garden planting later this month, meets weekly.

Co-club sponsor Clint Wise, resource teacher, said school projects like this give students a wider sense of community.

"This is something the kids can really get involved with, and boost their self-esteem at the same time," Wise said

Pets: Need preparation before flying

animals are not considered pets and are therefore excluded from aircraft.

The government does not reimburse the cost of shipping pets either, so owners must pocket their animal's fees on military or commercial flights.

Melissa Locke, Veterinarian Services, said many pets are left behind on post, either abandoned in military quarters or let loose in the area.

The reason, she said, could be attributed to owners realizing they don't have the needed time to ready their pets or have the money to front the fees. Quarantine costs alone total hundreds of dollars per pet.

Service members are encouraged to tell their transportation office about their pets when they make arrangements to ship their belongings. It costs about $95 to ship a pet and container weighing no more than 70 pounds aboard a charted flight.

Ray Anderson, transportation assistant at Scott Air Force Base, Ill., said it's important to work with one's transportation office and have the pets listed. The reason — only about 10 pets are taken per flight and these prized slots are often reserved weeks ahead of time.

"We have limited space," Anderson said. "If a person arrives at a port without going through the right channels, they risk having their pet sent out commercially."

Considering military and commercial gateways are not always in the same areas, Anderson said, a predicament like this could add additional stress to an all ready hectic time.

"Imagine the inconvenience of arriving in a new place overseas and having your pet in a completely different spot," Anderson said.

To prevent this, he said, "we like people to be about two or three months ahead of schedule in reserving space for their animals."

There's an incentive for early birds, too. Waivers are available for owners who would like to bring more than two pets or if their animal exceeds AMC's 99-pound weight limit.

For more information, call AMC at (800) 851-3144 or send an e-mail to petwaivers@scott.af.mil.

For more information about overseas pet requirements, call Fort Benning Veterinarian Services at 545-4444.

Volunteers: Key to schools success

"We know they're out there and we appreciate what they do, even if we're not always able to point a finger and single them out for the work they do."

Mike Starret, assistant principal at Stowers Elementary, Fort Benning's largest elementary school with more than 600 students, said the increase in volunteer hours also reflects an increase in parental involvement.

"We logged more than 3,000 volunteer hours in the calendar year 2000, and we've experienced a steady increase every month of this year," Starret said.

"That tells me our parents feel a strong dedication to their children's education, and we're getting across exactly what we're trying to communicate — parental involvement is key to success."

Starret attributes the success of the Fort Benning Schools volunteer program to community involvement.

"We're real fortunate here at Fort Benning because we have such a tight-knit community and each school is a neighborhood school," he said. "It makes for a comfortable, friendly environment, one where parents feel welcome to come in and spend time getting to know the teachers and faculty. As a result, they also feel free to become a part of the school by volunteering their time to help where they see a need."

Parental involvement statistically declines in the middle school years, a fact reflected in Faith Middle School's monthly volunteer report. Faith had the lowest number of volunteers — eight — and less than 70 volunteer hours in February.

"That's pretty indicative of the trend. It's not alarming," said Cindy Givens, Faith's volunteer coordinator. "Middle schoolers are more independent and inclined to discourage mom or dad from 'hanging around' the school.

"However, though the numbers may be low, we have an outstanding core group of volunteers who regularly give of their time and talents to make things run smoothly here."

Jane Carter is one such volunteer. She spends Monday afternoons in the school's media center, where she can "keep track of what's going on" with her son's education.

"The library is the hub of the school," Carter said. "Every student, every teacher, every faculty member comes through here. They get to know me and I get to know them. They feel comfortable approaching me if there's a problem or if they're concerned about Ben for any reason.

"And because I'm here regularly, Ben knows I care about what he's doing in school. He knows I value what he's doing."

Wilson said parents like Carter are sending a "strong message" to their children.

"It goes back to what we know about parental involvement," she said. "If the kids see their parents valuing education, they'll deem it important themselves. That's the key to success in school."

Relay: Raises money for research

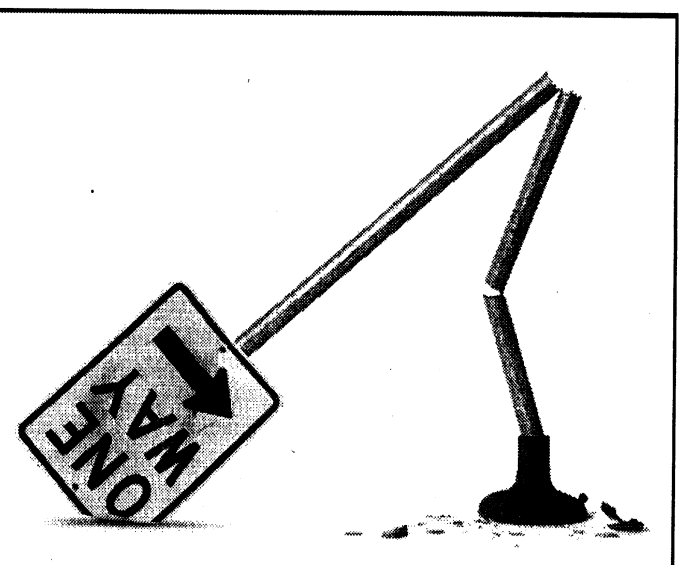
"But this is such an important cause and I appreciate everyone that's involved in it and fighting to find a cure. It just makes you feel really good all over."

Capt. Ed Gawlik will be walking to honor the memory of his best friend, Cameron Christman, who died from cancer in 1998.

"We were buddies for a long time. He was best man at my wedding," Gawlik said. "He was diagnosed with cancer and died two weeks later, before the birth of his first child."

Gawlik will be wearing a special T-shirt honoring his best friend.

After the relay, he plans to present the shirt to 2-year-old Cole Christman, the son Cameron never got to meet.



"I've been blessed in the fact that I haven't lost anyone close to me to cancer," Bielak said. "But I know in my lifetime, I'll be touched by cancer again and again. Everybody is at some time.

"So I feel the need to do my part, to give some small service to God through the community. That's what it's all about."

Broadway comes to Dexter

Dexter Elementary School

Dexter Elementary students staged their Spring Musical, "Eli and the King" Tuesday and Thursday.

The story and music was written by Cy Dietrich, Dexter's Visual and Performing Arts teacher. It tells about the King of Shilo, played by Kalvin Miller, who does not have any children and is in search of a loyal subject to become heir to the throne.

Eli, played by Emily Toon, seems to be the only one who possesses the qualities to become the royal heir.

The catch in the story is that the King does not know that Eli is a girl. The King is a bit embarrassed, but the Queen, played by Victoria McKernan, reminds him that his Royal Decree did mention the heir had to be a boy.

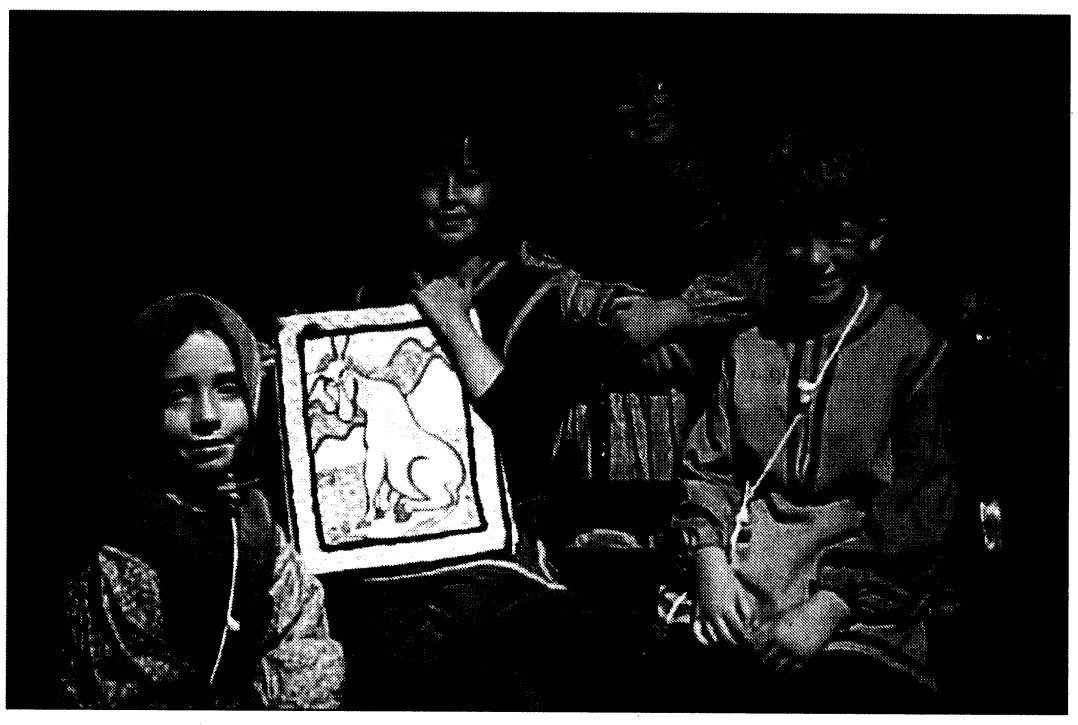
The King swallows his pride and announces Eli as the Princess, Heir to the Throne.

Milo, played by Sylvia McCallum, who has been a faithful servant and one of the Royal Trumpeters, is not happy with the King's choice.

Milo felt sure that he should have been chosen and seeks out the Wizard, played by Xilef Remigio, to help him become the King. Not able to find the Wizard, Milo mixes a potion to give to Eli to make her grow old, and in her wisdom, she will choose him to be the King.

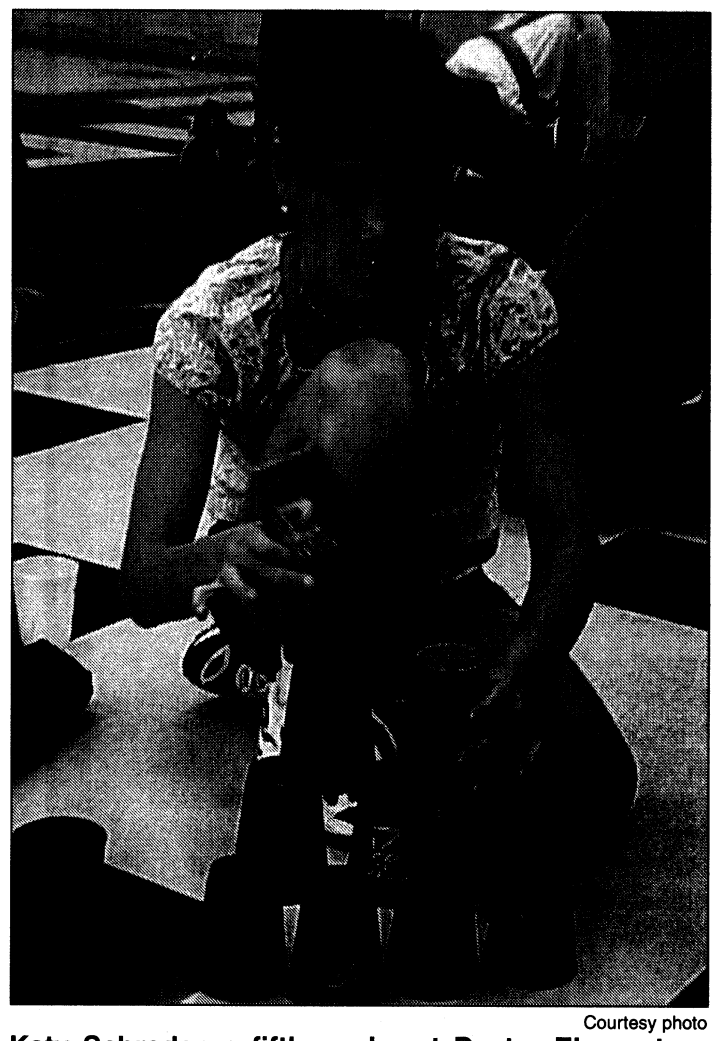
A surprise ending finds Milo to be the one who grows old and has to live with the results of his choice.

Eli delivers the last line of the play when she says, "The one thing we don't seem to understand is wisdom, until we grow old."



Just offstage was a group of Balladiers who help tell the story in song. All the characters were costumed to fit the era of the play.

The set was designed to represent a small medieval town with little shops, a town well and gas street lamps.



The lighting scheme provided a fun experience for the audience.

Students learn sport of cupstacking

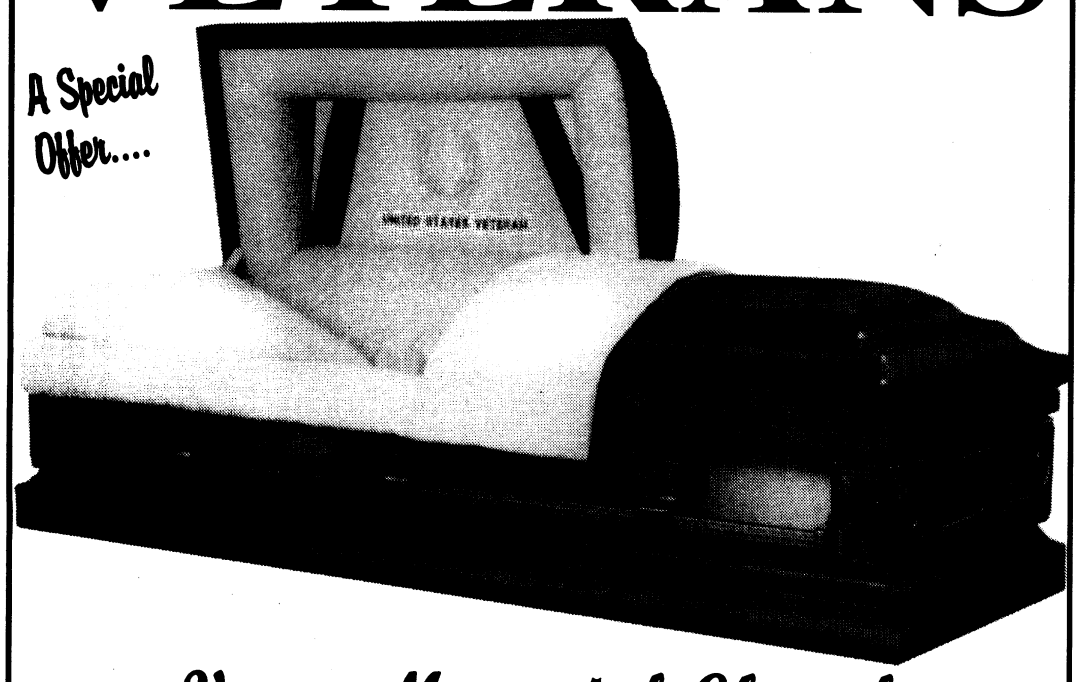
Dexter Elementary School

Dexter School has introduced a unique sport called cupstacking in the Physical Education program.



Cupstacking is an exciting individual and team sport where competitors stack and unstack 12 specially designed plastic cups in predetermined sequences.

Not only is it a lot of fun, but it helps promote hand-eye coordination, ambidexterity, quickness and concentration skills needed to excel in most any sport.

When students are cupstacking, they are using both sides of their bodies and brains to develop skills needed to dribble and shoot a basketball, throw and catch a baseball, play a musical instrument, type on a computer and more. Students practice in and out of school.

Most holy holiday celebrates resurrection

Chaplain (Capt.) Randall Bowen
2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

As we look to the celebration of Easter, we look to what is perhaps the most holy and important of all Christian celebrations.

During this season we remember Good Friday and the death of our Lord Jesus Christ.

We remember it is his death for our sins. Then we come to the Easter culmination — Easter Sunday, the day of the resurrection of Christ, the day of hope.

Easter Sunday is a day of hope as we remember it is the day when our eternal life is secured through Jesus' resurrection from the dead.

reflections

Thus, Jesus' resurrection is our Easter hope.

When Lazarus was sick, his sisters, Mary and Martha, sent for Jesus to come and heal him. But Lazarus died waiting.

Then after four days, Jesus arrived on the scene of his dead friend. The sisters were discouraged that Jesus had not come quicker to heal his friend, their brother. But he wanted them to focus on the eternal.

He wanted them to focus on the hope of the resurrection from the dead. Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life. He who believes in me, though he may die, he shall live. And whoever lives and believes in me shall never die." (John 11:25-26). In this statement, Jesus said many things about himself and his resurrection.

Jesus used the "I Am" statement in his declaration of being the resurrection and the life to wed himself to the God of Moses. God's self-attestation (declaration) to Moses that he is the "I am who I am" (Ex. 3:14) would have been familiar to the sisters of Lazarus.

Thus, Jesus comes as the incarnation of the "I Am."

Because he is God, the "I Am," he is able to raise Lazarus from the dead and give him life. Being the "I Am," Jesus gives Mary and Martha hope in the resurrection.

So after declaring that he is the resurrection and the life, Jesus gives life by raising Lazarus from the dead. Jesus is now attesting to his divine ability of raising the dead and giving life.

This is the Easter hope of the resurrection. Jesus is the resurrection, so those of us who believe in him have the hope of our own resurrection at the last day.

Jesus is the life, so those of us who believe in him have eternal life.

Things may have gone wrong for you this past year, as they went wrong for Mary, Martha and Lazarus. But since we possess life through the resurrection of Jesus, let us look at the new beginning we have in his life. Lazarus was dead, but Jesus gave him life — a new life.

I am not saying Jesus is going to raise someone from the dead today, but the hope of Easter is that we have resurrection life now, and will have it in eternity because Jesus has risen from the dead for us.

No matter what you are going through this day, or have gone through in the past months, look to Jesus for help and hope.

If Jesus raised Lazarus from the dead, don't you think he can help you with any problem you are going through?

Since Jesus has risen from the dead wouldn't it be a wise thing to look to him for help?

Seek him this day. Seek Jesus — he is the resurrection and the life. Seek Jesus Christ for he is our Easter Hope.

chapel notes

Easter services — The Easter Sunrise Service will be at 7 a.m. in Doughboy Stadium.

The senior high group meets Tuesdays from 6:30 to 8 p.m. at 506 Wickersham Ave.

For more information, call Bruce Mulford at 545-2359.

Discipline style needs to be flexible

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

The heart of discipline is discipleship, not punishment. Without teaching and training, discipline becomes negative. As parents we need to encourage appropriate behavior, prevent problems from arising and instill self-discipline within our children (Ephesians 6:4).

To be effective, discipline should begin early and be appropriate and consistent for the age level of the child. As the child develops, your discipline should also change (Proverbs 22:6).

Most parents seek to raise children who exercise self-control, respect the rights of others, express emotions appropriately, develop good work habits, develop a healthy self-esteem and who become increasingly self-reliant and independent.

The challenge is to change demanding behaviors and stubbornness into consideration, impatience into patience, strong wills into obedience, hurt and anger into forgiveness and toleration and jealousy and envy into sharing and taking turns (Galatians 5:19-26).

Parents should work early and consistently to create an atmosphere of love in the home (Colossians 3:12-14).

- Never discipline in anger.
- Always be quick to listen to your children. Ask who, what, when, where and how questions, rather than why.
- Don't assume their guilt. Make it your goal to understand your child, for each child is unique, and discipline that works with one child may not work with another.
- Set realistic limits necessary for your children's safety, health and happiness as well as the family's.
- Establish appropriate bedtimes and curfews, set boundaries as to where they can go and with whom and state expected behaviors of what they can and cannot do.

When these rules are given they should be explained and discussed, and then repeated as often as necessary. Let them know that if they misbehave that you will need to discipline them. Above all, set a good example for your children to follow.

Be flexible in your discipline. Don't always resort to physical punishment.

Additional help in disciplining is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Soldiers, player restore Green Field

T-ball field should offer children fun

Six men, three hard-working days, a whole lot of love and $45 later, one of Fort Benning's older, under-developed T-ball fields became a reason for parents, children and coaches alike to be proud.

Green Field, the post's practice field for 9- to 11-year-old little league players, hadn't been properly taken care of for some time, said Capt. Ed Gawlik, coach of the Soldier's Baseball Association and company commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

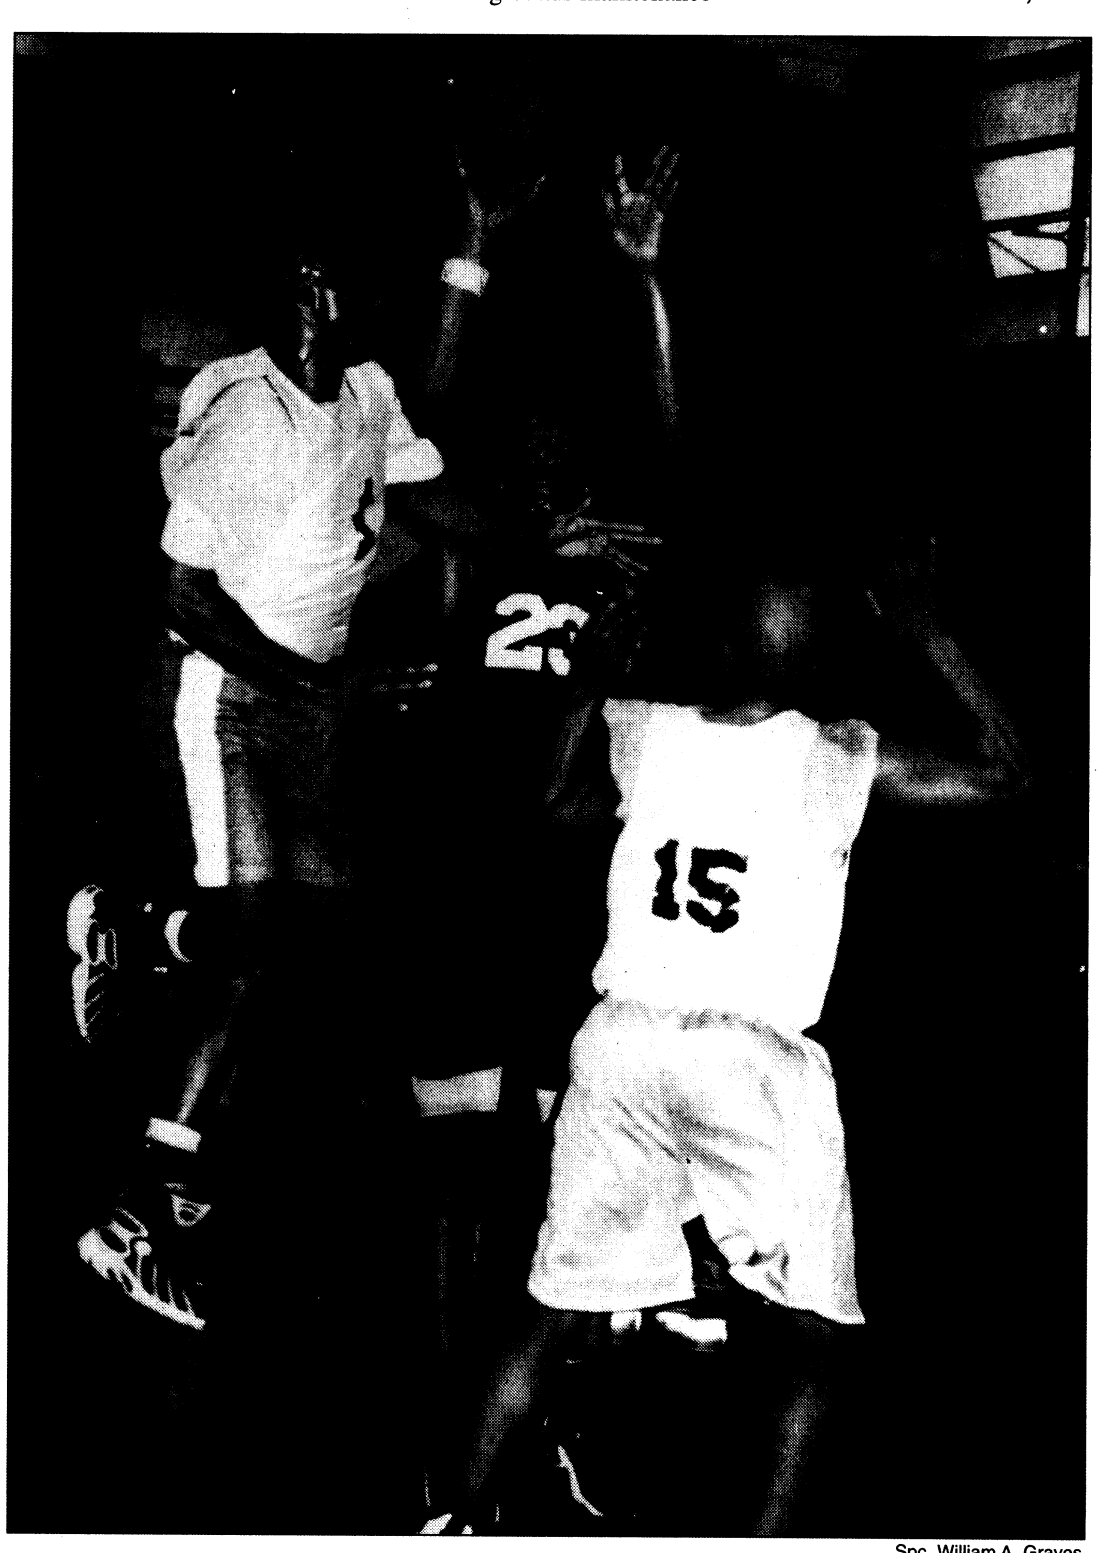
Some of the field's deficiencies that were corrected include:

- home plate bevels uneven with the ground;
- grass covered base paths;
- the distance and elevation of the pitcher's mound was incorrect;
- the distances between bases was also incorrect for regulation play.

Rob Ford, director of grounds maintenance for the Columbus RedStixx, volunteered his time to assist in the restoration of Green Field.

"I wanted the kids to have something to play on," said Ford. "People along the way have made sacrifices for me, and it is only right I return the favor."

The RedStixx donated more than their grounds maintenance director. They also donated regulation bases for the practice field.



"We had some extra bases, obviously older, and I would rather have them be put to good use than thrown away," said Ford.

The restoration project came after coaches and parents learned that several 9- to 11-year-old boys would not have an adequate place to practice because of a lack of maintenance on the field over time, said 1st Lt. Eric Hare, the

Outlaws victorious at post championship

Foul shooting huge difference in close game

Spc. Mark Watson
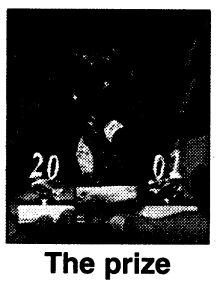
Bayonet staff

The Outlaws capitalized on foul-shot opportunities late in the post intramural championship game April 5 at Briant Wells Field House and won, 52-50.

The Headhunters from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, lost one game during the double-elimination tournament. They had to win in order to force a second contest with the undefeated Outlaws.

As a result, the Outlaws knew they were in for a rumble.



"We expected it to be a close game," said Carl James, Outlaws' coach. "We were all a little tense and excited about this. We just wanted to stay close until the two-minute mark. Their fouls helped us out. We shot out free throws very well."

The game was fast paced and featured aggressive defense. As the Headhunters won the tip-off and drove toward their net, the Outlaws from the Directorate of Combat Development, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., stripped the ball and took it to their own basket for an easy layup.

However, the Headhunters answered right back with a bucket of their own.

The rest of the first half was mainly one of tough defense and hard hitting fouls. Neither team could take a significant lead.

Headhunter Terry Larkin brought the crowd to its feet with a monstrous slamdunk seconds before the halftime buzzer. His team sustained the resulting momentum and three-point halftime lead, 27-24, for most of the second half.

The prize

The teams exchanged buckets numerous times, but with 5:20 remaining in the game, the Outlaws regained the lead and never looked back.

The Headhunters played tenaciously, but their foul trouble allowed the Outlaws to creep further ahead.

As the game ending buzzer sounded, a Headhunters went downtown from nearly half-court, but it was too little, too late.

Darrin Simmons, the Headhunters' coach, said his team just ran out of steam down the stretch.

"The game went well, we just got tired," Simmons said. "Once they started putting the pressure on us, we started making turnovers."

Although the Headhunter lost the defensive battle, team members said their defense was not all that bad.

"Out defense helped us out," Larkin said. "Our offense stumbled a little at the end. I guess we were just out of sync."

He said he was proud of his team's performance. The Outlaws faced the Headhunters three times prior to the tournament and won by 10, 20 and 25 points.

Post Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein was on hand for the nail-biter. He presented trophies to the teams and to each soldier after the game.

"These teams fought hard tonight," Klein said. "The teams are both winners."

Military family members sign sports scholarships

Athletes ink college deals for good play

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Soccer season is in full swing, and most afternoons this spring Dan Ferriter can be found playing the game he loves.

Ferriter, a senior at Columbus High School, started playing soccer when he was 5 years old, just like the children who practiced one field over from where Ferriter played Tuesday afternoon on Fort Benning's French Field.

"Then I was the little kid who never passed it to anyone else," Ferriter recalled.

Ferriter's passing ability improved greatly through the years, so much so that he recently signed an athletic scholarship to play soccer at Davidson College in North Carolina.

Ferriter, the son of Col. Michael and Margie Ferriter, will attend the college with his sister, Meghan, who plays for the ladies soccer team.

Ferriter is one of several military family members from Fort Benning and Columbus who will report to universities later this summer on athletic scholarships.

B.J. Adams, a classmate of Ferriter's at Columbus High, signed with Fort Valley State University in Fort Valley, Ga. Adams, the son of Master Sgt. Christopher and Andrea Franklin, played defensive end at Columbus his senior year. He played his freshman and sophomore years at Spencer High School, and did not play football his junior year.

"I'm real excited about going to Fort Valley," said Adams, who plans to earn a degree in education, eventually becoming a physical education or elementary school teacher.

Brandon Webb, son of Sgt. 1st Class Marlin and Pam Thomas, received a football scholarship from Alabama State University in Montgomery, Ala. Webb played tailback for Spencer High School.

Four military family members who played for Shaw High School's football team, the Georgia state champions this year, will play college ball.

Ian Kinsey will join Webb at Alabama State. Kinsey, a defensive end, is the son of retired Sgt. Maj. Eddie and Ruth Kinsey.

"Winning the state championship was the best feeling I've ever had," Kinsey said. "I get to graduate on top. I just hope to take that success with me to Alabama State."

Reginald McFadden, son of Staff Sgt.Timothy and Wanda McFadden, is headed to the University of Georgia in Athens. He played all four years for the Shaw team as a corner back.

currently going through degree completion courses before reporting to the 988th Military Police Co., as a platoon leader.

"The children needed an actual field instead of a piece of grass and some dirt," said Gawlik. "It's important because you're giving children the opportunity to excel. They're going to play better."

Ford, Gawlik and Hare all said they agree that the importance of restoring the field lay in being able to enforce the fundamentals of the great American game.

"We fixed it so they could have the best equipment possible," Hare said. "All of the hard work pays off everyday at practice."

He said the practice field doubled as a playing field the first game of the season because the complex that houses the 9- to 11-year-old age group was not ready for the season to begin.

"It was great, I was happy they were actually on a real field," he said.

In addition to Ford, Gawlik and Hare, three other parents, Dan Cardiel, James Schwartz, and Scott Thomas, also helped to restore Green Field.

As for future maintenance to the field, Gawlik said he plans to turn to his command for help.

"I hope units can start helping to maintain the field," he said.

Ford said he hopes to continue his relationship with the Army through helping to maintain and restore fields.

He said he would particularly like to see Hank Gowdy Field restored to its original appearance. The field is on Main Post, next to Doughboy Stadium.

Gowdy Field was named after the first professional baseball player to lay down the bat for a pair of boots during WWI, and later left managing professional baseball to lead soldiers during WWII.

for Grambling State University in Louisiana.

Sterlin Jenkins, the son of Sgt. 1st Class Sidney and Ivy Robinson, played running back all four years at Shaw. Before that he played in Pennsylvania and Germany.

"I'm real excited about playing for Grambling because of the coach, Doug Williams, and because it's a part of the United States I haven't seen before," Jenkins said.

Jenkins sees college football as the stepping stone to his dream.

"I want to go pro one day," he said.

Ben Johnson will join Jenkins at Grambling.

He is the son of Annelle and Ben Johnson, a military retiree.

David Lee, a basketball player at Hardaway High School, will move to Florida and Jacksonville University. Lee is the son of Tammie and David Lee, a retiree.

Bobby Fix, a senior at Columbus High School, has accepted an appointment to the U.S. Military Academy. Fix plans to run on both the track and cross country teams at West Point. Fix, the son of Lt. Cols. Bob and Debra Fix, will follow in his mother's footsteps. Debra ran for West Point as a cadet.

In addition to being a second-generation academy runner, Fix will also continue another family tradition. Upon graduation, he will represent the fourth generation to become an Army officer.

PRESERVE OUR CHILDLIFE

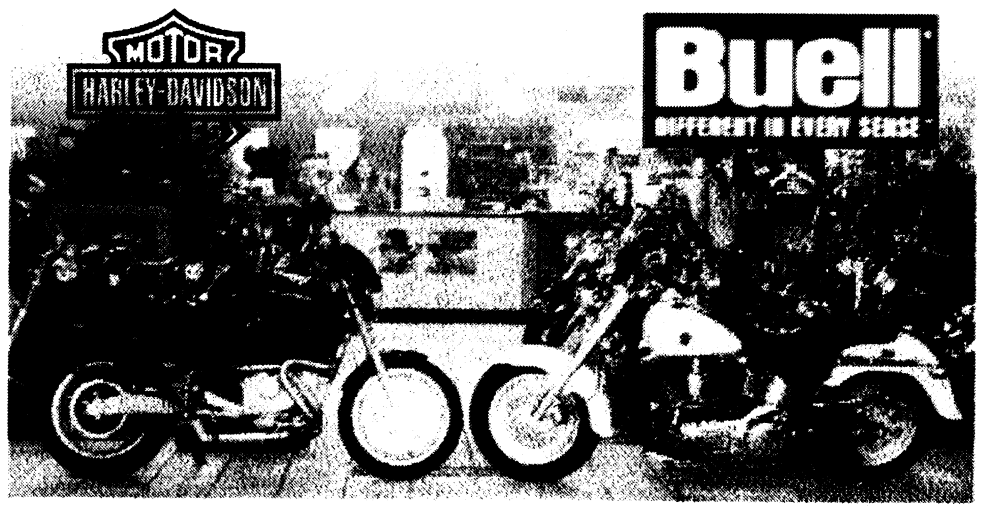
More than 1,000 children between the ages of 5 and 14 are killed annually as the result of pedestrian-motor vehicle accidents. Stay alert for children going to and coming from school:



- Obey the speed limit (15 MPH on post) in school zones.
- Watch for children walking, skating or cycling.
- Stop for buses loading and unloading children.

PX check policy to change

Social security numbers no longer required

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

The days of putting a sponsor's social security number on checks is about to be a thing of the past in many Army and Air Force Exchange Service facilities.

In accordance with the new system for check acceptance, AAFES facilities are being outfitted with new check verification equipment. The new equipment is currently being installed in AAFES sponsored activities across Fort Benning.

The new system will allow verification of social security numbers without it being written on checks.

This is a step to help protect customer information from falling into the wrong hands, said Tim Bailey, chief of the AAFES Management Information Fiscal Support Branch in Dallas.

"It is AAFES policy to take every practical step to ensure the privacy of the service members, retirees and the family members we serve," he said in a press release. "AAFES has made this commitment as a part of our mission to better serve our customers throughout the world."

One difference with the new system is that it will not require cashiers to enter the social security number of the sponsor on the check. Instead, the social security number of the person presenting the check will be entered by taking the social security number off the presenter's identification card and keying the number in as a one-time requirement into the computer to associate it with bank information.

The check is scanned using Magnetic Ink Character Recognition reader technology, which reads the routing number, account number and check number.

Other basic data, such as the presenter's name, address and military unit (for active duty personnel) must still be printed or entered on the check.

The MICR system is currently being installed in all Fort Benning AAFES facilities and they should go online by the end of the month, said Donald O'Reilly, Fort Benning

Plans made for ACOE winnings

Repairs across post top list of projects in need of funding

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Maintaining the standard of excellence here is a continual effort on the part of all soldiers, family members and civilians.

As a result of this commitment to excellence, Fort Benning received $200,000 last year in the Army Communities of Excellence program.

After receiving the money, proposals were made by units and organizations on post for where it should be used, said Sara Hodges, chief of the Quality Management Division.

Some of the criteria each approved proposal had to meet were: the project must have a high visibility that will benefit the installation; the money will not be used on a project which is funded by other pots of money; and it must benefit as many people as possible.

"We like to spread the wealth so everybody benefits and sees how it touched them," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "ACOE is a program that really emphasizes looking for efficiency, a smart way of doing business and helping the customer."

Out of more than 91 project submissions, the field was eventually narrowed down to 13 proposals which will be filled this summer, Hodges said.

Some of the approved proposals for the money include repairing boat launch ramps at different recreational ponds on post; repairing Pioneer Field's basketball court; purchasing and installing computers in the Sand Hill Recreation Center; and upgrading female shower and dressing areas in Infantry Hall.

In past years, monetary rewards have helped fund the Riverwalk, improving playground equipment and installing handicapped ramps, Hodges said.

Soldiers help rescue injured civilian

Medevac crew aid local officials during air evacuation

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning soldiers supporting ranger students at Camp Frank D. Merrill, near Dahlonega, Ga., lent a helping hand to the Gainesville, Ga. community when they assisted in a rescue of an injured civilian.

While making repairs to a communications tower, David Chapman, 21, stepped backward, tripped and hit his head. Unconscious, he required immediate medical attention on the top platform of the 200-foot tower.

Members of the 498th Medical Company sprang into action after Al Lovinggood, from the Hall County Fire and Rescue Department near Gainesville, requested assistance and the use of an Army Medical Evacuation helicopter.

Arriving at the scene of the accident only 10 minutes after lifting off from Camp Merrill, the rescue helicopter lowered Sgt. Richard Stickles, a medic, to the injured Chapman.

"Normally, we will lower someone to the ground. This time we were 200 feet up with nothing for the pilot to look at but the sky," said Spc. Jason Townsend, a crew chief on the helicopter. "I constantly was giving directions to the pilot."

While providing air ambulance support isn't uncommon for the helicopter crews at Fort Benning, they don't get called out as much at Camp Merrill, Townsend said. This time was different though as local rescue teams needed air support.

What made the mission all the more difficult was that the triangle shaped platform was small — not more than 10 feet long on each side with metal rods sticking up. Joining firefighters from local rescue departments, Stickles helped assess the situation.

"He was stable and alert," Stickles said. "The firefighters had him ready to move, they just didn't know how they were going to do it."

Stickles and the firefighters placed Chapman in a stokes litter and the MEDEVAC crew hoisted Chapman into the helicopter and transported him to the hospital. Chapman was treated at the Northeast Georgia Medical Center in Gainesville and was released the following day.

Chief Warrant Officer Eric Bennett, the pilot, said the mission went off without a hitch because of teamwork.

"It was a team effort," Bennett said. "Everybody did what he was supposed to do. No one person can take credit for the success. If anyone didn't do what he did, we wouldn't have been able to pull it off."

At a short ceremony for the crew, Maj. Kyle Campbell said he was very proud of the crew.

"They did a superb job," said Campbell, commander of the 498th. "Anytime they are recognized for work they do on a day-to-day basis is outstanding.

"This was a tremendous opportunity for us to provide back to the civilian community the training that taxpayers provide us."

Tree hugger. Earth muffin. Granola head. I've been called all of these names at some point in my life.

Back at Rush-Henrietta High School, my friends and I started an Environmental Club. I'm not sure how Denise and I came up with the idea for the group, but I distinctly remember spending the summer between my freshman and sophomore years making these trendy newspaper folders.

We had this grandiose scheme to make hundreds of the eco-friendly folders before the school year started and pass them out to the dozens of science classes.

Sure, the folders melted in a misty morning fog or a light sunshower. But, it was a start.

But I couldn't shake my quest and two years later, it was Elizabeth and I who started an Interact Club chapter at the same school.

We spent the school year helping out non-profit organizations around the city, helping food shelters and battered women safe havens.

But the highlight of our year was Earth Day, a day that will forever conjure up images of new tree saplings and my fellow classmates scouring the schoolyard in search of refuse.

We spent months planning the day — securing free trees from local nurseries, building time schedules and maps of what garbage-studded fields belonged to which volunteers.

And to our surprise, this made big news in the city of Rochester, N.Y. The local papers stopped by, as well as camera and radio hounds. Our expedition made the news that night; our quest to clean the yard and speckle the fields with new shade-bearing trees was fulfilled. And maybe we had enlightened a few new people on what Earth Day embodied.

So here I am, a few years older, and I'm now one of the reporters covering events such as the one I threw back in the 90's. I have to smile at the kids here at Fort Benning.

I had a chance to see McBride and Wilson Elementary School students combing their own schoolyards in search of recyclable goods, as well as planting a few new trees of their own.

It was last week, however, when McBride third-grader Ariel Tucker and I chatted about her own adventures with the April holiday.

She loves the woods, the solitude, the animals. She hopes to revisit the Woodland Trail one day, and her adopted tree-friend Spring.

What made me smile the most is the way she was thinking, even at this tender age.

Ariel thinks planting more shrubs around the post is a way to leave her mark on the world.

Well, Ariel, I think that's a fine idea. Maybe Fort Benning should try to promote a new-fangled annual event. We could label it "Sow-a-Sapling," "Plant-a-Pine," or "Deposit-a-Deciduous."

But really, we don't even have to limit the holiday to Fort Benning — you can carry the tradition on anywhere and at anytime of your life.

Maybe you'll come back to Fort Benning one day and your new project will have blossomed into a shady tree, big enough to have a picnic underneath. If not a picnic then, a home to a robin, a perch for a bushy-tailed squirrel or a picturesque pallet of colors to decoráte someone's yard.

The last time I visited home, I stopped by my alma mater, to see the tree that was planted back in 1994.

The marble plaque was still near the maple I had set in the ground. I had made my mark, along with the hundreds of other students that donated their time.

It's a legacy that's deeply rooted.

Children catch on to crafty creativity

commentary

I consider myself a creative person and my creativity, such as it is, infuses every facet of my life. I have four children, so you could even say I'm "pro-creative."

Bad jokes aside, my creativity defines me. I am a writer, a decorator, a storyteller, a mother. I see endless possibilities in my home, my garden, my work, my children.

My creative energies are the last to go to sleep at night, and when I'm on my deathbed, I'll probably ask someone to dim the lights, "feng shui" the furniture and bring me a paintbrush.

My creativity brings me joy. It is both a gift from God and a learned behavior. Some people are born with it. Others work hard to develop their creative-thinking skills. Others just never get it. Poor souls.

Those who like to pigeonhole personalities might separate the creative from the analytical from the intellectual. I beg to differ. Certain facets of our personalities may be better defined, but we all have the potential to develop our creativity as we develop our intellect and our muscles, especially if we start early, in school.

I owe my love of writing to my art teachers as much as my English teachers, and if it weren't for my drafting teacher, I'd probably have never grasped algebra and geometry. You can separate the arts and the academics only on a classroom schedule. In real life they go hand in hand.

With less than 35 percent of all public high schools requiring art credit for graduation, we're in danger of turning into an artless, uncreative society. Though apparently safe from the axe here on Benning, the budget-blight is way-laying arts programs in more and more schools every year.

I wish you could have seen the looks on the faces of the students at Faith Middle School last week, when Bond Anderson created a marriage of math and music that surely made the angels sing. It was a fun, painless lesson in the practical application of everything they'd been learning in math and science. They enjoyed it, they understood it, they "got it."

The arts are an important part of a well-rounded education. Art education is fundamental to the development of well-rounded personalities.

That doesn't mean everybody should choose a career in the arts instead of academics or business or the military. It means we'll turn out creative-thinking problemsolvers, just what we need in corporate America, the Army and the classroom.

Volunteering can add fulfillment, meaning to lives

"Change the World – Volunteer!" is the theme for the 28th annual National Volunteer Week April 22-28.

National Volunteer Week began in 1974, when President Richard Nixon signed an executive order establishing the week as an annual celebration of volunteerism.

Every president since has signed a proclamation promoting the week sponsored by the Points of Light Foundation and the National Network of Volunteer Centers, National Volunteer Week is a time to recognize and celebrate the efforts of volunteers.

This year's theme reflects the International Year of Volunteers, which will be celebrated during 2001, as proclaimed by the General Assembly of the United Nations. The theme is particularly appropriate as we enter the 21st century with renewed hope for what we can achieve together through volunteering.

For many members of the Army family, volunteering is the key to healthy, fulfilling and meaningful lives.

Volunteering renews our connection to our community while building self-worth and self-reliance.

Through volunteering, individuals have the opportunity to grow by making creative and productive contributions that connect them to the installation and to the Army. By making a difference, volunteers contribute to the well being of our military communities making them better places to live.

As we celebrate National Volunteer Week, we applaud the volunteer endeavors of our soldiers, civilians, retirees, spouses and youth. We encourage those who have not yet volunteered to become part of this special group.

There are volunteer opportunities for everyone, whether you want to give your time every week, once a month or once a year. There are opportunities to volunteer with your family, your friends or your colleagues.

Help your Army community by getting involved today.

On behalf of the Army, we thank all volunteers and recognize their commitment to the well-being of our communities and to each other.

Endangered woodpecker population rising

Efforts help feathered friends find new homes

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Like a hurricane striking a forest, a southern pine beetle outbreak last winter wiped out more than 85 percent of the red-cockaded woodpecker habitat in Daniel Boone National Forest, Ky.

For reasons such as this, programs have been developed to translocate the endangered birds to other areas well-suited for their needs.

Fort Benning assists in the effort to increase the bird number, by translocating single and mass numbers, both externally and internally.

Like little pioneers, the woodpeckers adapt to their new surroundings and start a new home for themselves.

Wildlife biologist Michael Barron, Conservation Branch, said he often hears grievances about distributing the birds off-post.

The red-cockaded woodpecker creates its home in established pine forests, such as those with long-leaf pines averaging 80 to 120 years old.

While other woodpeckers bore out cavities in dead trees where the wood is rotten and soft, the red-cockaded woodpecker is the only type which hollows out nooks entirely in living pine trees.

Fifteen populations in the southeast must expand their numbers for it to be removed from the endangered species list. Fort Benning, along with four military posts, is recognized as one of these "recovery populations."

"We're trying to increase populations as quick as we can by creating artificial opportunities for them to expand," Barron said.

"Artificial cavities are created to provide new homes for the birds. This has allowed the population to grow by creating more breeding opportunities," Barron said.

The Fort Benning woodpeckers have increased 8 percent since 1994. Currently, about 178 breeding pairs reside in this area and the number is on the rise. In fact, the first nest of the season was found last week.

It is important to recover the bird at Fort Benning, but ultimately, recovery has to be achieved at 15 populations to save the species, Barron said.

"It's personally been very satisfying. When we first started there were about 126 breeding pairs and now we are up to about 178."

Barron attributes their success partly to the relationship with the military. Remarkably, military activity often starts wildfires that help create an open pine forest.

"This is also ideal training lands for troops at Fort Benning," Barron said.

Prescribed burns are part of Fort Benning's ongoing attempt to reduce the risk of wildfires and improve the health of forests for wildlife, including the woodpeckers' surroundings. Acreage on post is on a three-year prescribed burn rotation.

"Fires are an interregnal part of the ecosystem," Barron said. "Historically, lightning strikes caused fires, in turn creating open forests. People have this predisposed idea that all fires are bad."

Only two types of military training are allowed in a cluster area — foot traffic and the firing of blank rounds, Barron said.

Two white bands are painted on pines that have red-cockaded cavities. A 200-foot buffer surrounds the cluster and is labeled with diamond shaped signs.

Six wildlife technicians and two biologists lead the effort to help track the clusters.

> "We're trying to increase populations as quick as we can...."
> Michael Barron
> Conservation Branch

Curtis Fowler, lead wildlife technician, said he is impressed with the program's success.

"I've seen improvement in the habitat. The troops' fires in addition to prescribed burnings has made the woods open and manageable," Fowler said.

The technicians use instruments, referred to as "peepers."

The remote cameras allow a bird's eye view of their homes by peering into the cavities within the pines.

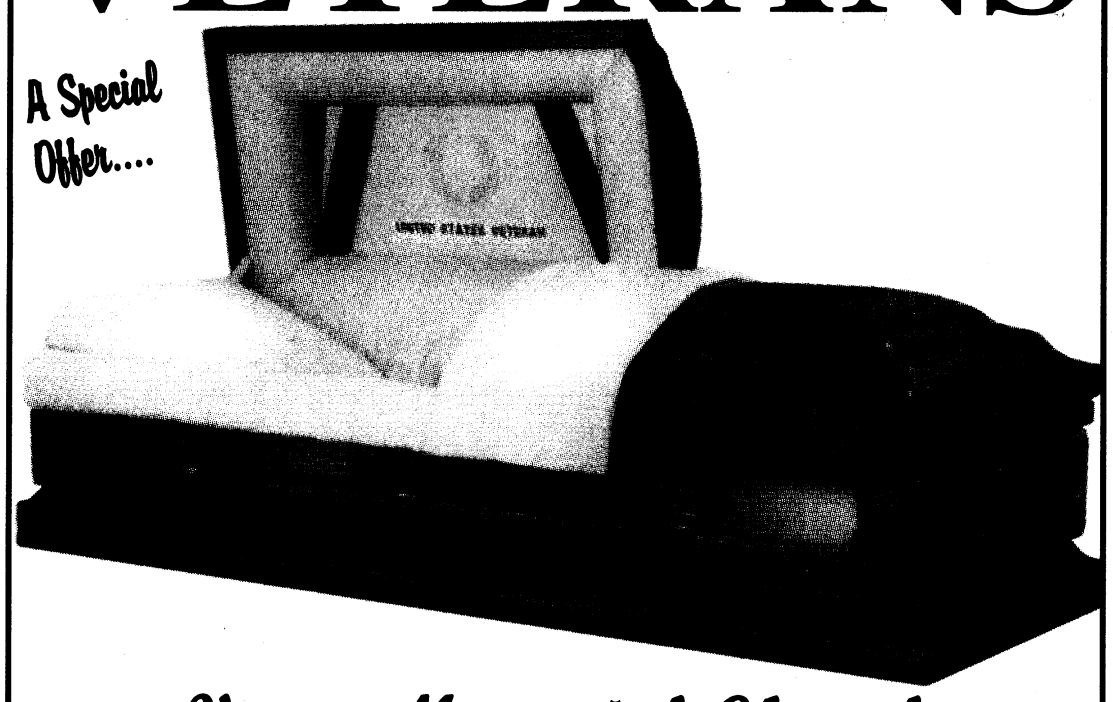
The eight-person team tracks the birds-from nestlings to fledglings to adults on their own.

Also, woodpeckers are continually identified through a banding process.

Each nestling receives two sets of bands — those on the right leg are color-coded and identify its family cluster. The other leg is the number of that bird.

The team tracks 25 percent of the active bird population. Some have been traced since the initial banding program started in 1994.

Historically, this woodpecker's range extended from Florida to New Jersey, as far west as Texas and Oklahoma, and inland to Missouri, Kentucky and Tennessee.



Today it is estimated that there are about 10,000 to 14,000 birds, living in clusters from Florida to Virginia and west to southeast Oklahoma and eastern Texas, representing about 1 percent of the woodpecker's original range.

Post announces air conditioning policy

Preparations being made for heat relief

Master Sgt. Sally Roberts
USAIC Public Affairs Office

As springtime temperatures rise, so does the question of the season: When will they turn on the air conditioning?

In a word, the answer is, soon. Workers from Fort Benning's Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics are currently bringing the large industrial cooling systems on line, performing required checks and maintenance before the long Georgia summer hits with sizzling temperatures and high humidity.

But the process takes time, said Mark Fincher, DFEL's chief of energy and utilities, and some offices and barracks will feel the cool air sooner than others.

The priority goes to barracks and living areas, followed by administrative buildings, Fincher explained. Some business and recreational facilities on Fort Benning currently have air conditioning because those services, such as banks and restaurants, pay the bill for the energy they use.

The first soldiers to feel relief from the heat will be those in Initial Entry Training on Sand Hill because they are at the greatest risk for heat injuries, said Col. Keith Stelzer, chief of DFEL. Engineers will continue to turn on the air conditioning in the remaining soldier barracks and offices over the next two weeks.

The air conditioning in government housing is controlled by codes set at individual home units, so that residents can set their own thermostat to comfortable levels. These systems have been operational for more than a week so that technicians can identify problems and perform maintenance before the weather turns warmer.

"Because we've turned on the air conditioning in housing, we are working off the backlog of maintenance and getting ahead of the season," Fincher said.

Requests for maintenance of air conditioning systems should be called into the work order section at 545-2135.

But officials are asking that residents make good use of the $2 million spent annually on air conditioning. Last winter's unusually colder weather coupled with a sharp rise in the price of natural gas used to heat homes and buildings drained the post energy budget. That means our remaining funds for energy must be used wisely, Stelzer explained.

"In December our gas bill was $1.5 million, much higher than normal," Stelzer said.

"It's left to us to manage our energy dollars. We have conscientious people living and working (at Fort Benning). Knowing the circumstances, I know they will comply with energy conservation."

A CLOSER LOOK

Tips to stay cool this summer include:

- Close drapes and shades to keep out the sun.
- Do your cooking at night or early in the morning whenever possible.
- Consider serving cold dishes rather than hot meals.
- Use fans and open windows whenever possible.
- Change air conditioning filters when needed. Filters are available at the Self Help Issue center, Building 385 on Vibbert Avenue.
- Turn lights off when not needed.
- Use cold water when possible, especially when washing clothes. Use your clothes dryer at night or early in the morning.
- While away from home, turn the air conditioner off.

Marksmanship unit welcomes new commander

Arnold retires after 30 years of military service

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

The commander of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has gone home to Columbus.

Col. Archibald V. Arnold III relinquished command of the Army Marksmanship Unit April 11 and retired from the Army after 30 years of service.

Col. Robert I. Hoidahl Jr., the former deputy assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School, assumed command of the Army Marksmanship Unit from Arnold in a change of command ceremony at Pool International Shooting Complex's Ceremony Hill.

Hoidahl shared some remarks with the soldiers and guests at the ceremony.

"What a great day to be a soldier at Fort Benning and now the commander of AMU. Commanding at any level is a privilege and I indeed am privileged today to take command of this unit," Hoidahl said. "I am happy to be here and I look forward to working with the USAREC team. To the soldiers of AMU, you look great, you are professionals, and I look forward to the future, together. All policies remain in effect, keep your eye on the target, for I, too, am 'An Army of One.'"

A native of Calumet City, Ill., Hoidahl received a bachelor of education degree from Purdue University in June 1973 and a master of arts in management from Webster University of St. Louis, Mo.

Hoidahl enlisted in the Army as a military policeman a month after graduating from Purdue University. After graduating from Officer Candidate School, he received a reserve commission in January 1975.

He had numerous assignments including with the 25th Infantry Division, the 5th Special Forces Group and the 82nd Airborne Division where he participated in operation Urgent Fury as aide-de-camp of the commanding general. Hoidahl also served as commander, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and was executive officer, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, and the U. S. Army Airborne School. He also served with Fourth U.S. Army, and the Joint Readiness Training Center before becoming the chief of the Leadership Division, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, U.S. Army Infantry School and commander of the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry, Infantry Officers Basic Course, from February 1993 to 1995.

He was then assigned to Fort Sill, Okla., as deputy director, Fire Support and Combined Arms Operations Department, Field Artillery School, and as chief, Army Directorate, and deputy chief of the Office of Defense Cooperation Turkey. He became the deputy assistant commandant of the Infantry School Aug. 9, 1999.

Hoidahl has numerous awards and decorations including the Defense Superior Service Medal, two Bronze Stars with "V" device, five Meritorious Service Medals and the Pistol Excellence In Competition Marksmanship Badge.

He is married to the former Leann Kalish of Lake Bluff, Ill.

GI Bill program to offer new educational benefits May 1

Master Sgt. Jon Connor
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Participants in the Montgomery GI Bill program will be given the option starting May 1 to increase their monthly stipend up to $800.

Educational benefits legislation enacted into law in November contained a program that will allow MGIB participants the opportunity to make new contributions maximizing the total for soldiers serving on active duty three or more years to $28,800, an increase of $5,400.

This amount, combined with annual cost-of-living increases, will definitely help offset education costs for service members, said Lt. Col. George Richon, chief of Recruiting Resources Branch, Enlisted Accessions Division under the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. The payment will be matched by a 9-to-1 return on investment if the complete 36 months of benefit is used, Richon said.

The minimum contribution is $20, and can be made monthly carried over whatever amount of months enrollees decide, up to a maximum total $600 contribution toward the existing MGIB benefit.

All contributions are nonrefundable, Richon said.

Army education centers will supply the DD Form 2366 and payment documents to begin the additional contribution. Actual payment arrangements will be made at the local installation's finance office.

Only those personnel who entered active duty on or after July 1, 1985 and enrolled in the MGIB program during the first two weeks of active duty are eligible to participate. Those "hundreds of thousands" of eligible individuals hoping to participate in the optional benefits program must contribute the additional funds only while serving on active duty, Richon said.

Those soldiers who were on active duty Nov. 1, 2000 but will separate prior to May 1, 2001, have until July 31 to contribute through their servicing VA office. Army education centers will inform eligible members separating prior to May 1 of the option program.

Eligible soldiers separating are encouraged to contact the Department of Veterans Affairs at 1-888-GIBILL1 or www.gibill.va.gov/education/benefits/htm for payment procedures.

Proper precautions stop would-be thieves

Bike, scooter riding equipment includes locks

Military Police Activity

More than half the people reporting bicycle theft left their bikes unattended for just a moment.

Whether you plan to step away for a minute or an hour, there is a possibility your bicycle will not be there when you return.

That's the key — always lock your bike, no matter what.

Carrying around a five-pound lock on your 19-pound bicycle can be a hindrance, so for added convenience, you may consider keeping your lock and chain or cable attached to the bike rack at work or school and just keep the key.

Then carry an additional lightweight cable lock with you, for use at home or locations that you do not frequently visit.

Scooters topped the list of best-selling toys since Christmas.

Due to the increase in number of injuries on the scooters, here are some precautions that parents need to pay close attention to:

• Parents should contact the manufacturers to see if the scooter is on their recall list.

• Conduct a preventive safety check of the scooter.

• Make sure that protective headgear fits properly and that it does not interfere with the rider's movement, vision or hearing.

• Provide adult supervision for younger kids.

• Avoid riding on hilly streets or slippery surfaces with water, sand, gravel or dirt.

• Riding at night should be prohibited.

Bicycles and scooters are usually stolen from the home, meaning the yard, garage and so on.

Unlike other crimes that occur, bicycle theft is not usually premeditated.

Bicycle theft is a crime of opportunity, so to prevent yourself from becoming the victim, take that opportunity from the criminals and keep your bike secured and in a safe location.

Do not assume that if your bike is on the grounds of your quarters that it is safe.

If you leave the bike lying outside overnight, there's a pretty good chance that it won't still be there in the morning.

Not all missing bicycles and scooters are left unattended and often, they are brought to the Provost Marshal Office.

If your bicycle or scooter was stolen or missing within the last year, come to the Military Police Station to check the lost and found.

There are currently a large number of unclaimed bicycles located there.

Record your information on your bike and keep it in your personal records.

Engrave the rider's name on the bike or scooter.

When you come to the Military Police Station, be prepared to give an in-depth description to include the make, model, type and color of your bicycle.

Remember that you can register your bicycles at the Vehicle Registration office at 545-2994.

If you have any questions regarding a missing bicycle call the Military Police Found Property Custodian at 545-1236 or 545-3029.

Keep in mind that if your bike or scooter is not locked correctly, it may as well not be locked.

Keep your investment safe. If you don't lock it, don't leave it.

County courthouses protect records of military service

Department of Veterans Services

ATLANTA — Approximately 900 Georgians are discharged from the military each month, and Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs Pete Wheeler advised them to have their discharge papers recorded at their county courthouse as soon as possible.

"This is a free service," Wheeler said. "And one that is very important to the veteran, as it provides a ready source from which a certified copy of a veteran's military record can be obtained whenever it is needed.

"If original papers are lost or destroyed, and a veteran's or his dependent or survivor needs to furnish proof of military service in order to file a claim or apply for certain VA benefits, certified copies may be readily obtained if they have been duly filed and put on permanent record at the courthouse."

Recalling the disastrous fire that destroyed thousands of files in the Military Personnel Records Center in St. Louis in 1973, Wheeler said, "A disaster like this graphically demonstrates the importance of having valuable papers permanently recorded. It is entirely possible that veterans who were discharged prior to the fire may have in their possession personal copies of their discharge papers, which could very well be the only existing proof that they ever served in the military."

All veterans, regardless of when they were discharged, should make certain that their discharge papers are properly recorded in the Superior Court Clerk's office in their county courthouse.

Any office of the Georgia Department of Veterans Service will assist veterans in obtaining this valuable free service.

Everyday, 1st Sgt. Cornell Swanier spends much of his time teaching alcohol and drug awareness and prevention to soldiers in his unit.

But, it's what he does on his spare time that earned him the GEICO Military Service Award.

Swanier will receive the award this weekend during a ceremony in Washington, D.C.

Swanier, the first sergeant for B Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, was selected to receive the award earlier this year.

Swanier has moved on, but said he continues his work in drug and alcohol prevention and awareness by speaking with children and adults of all ages.

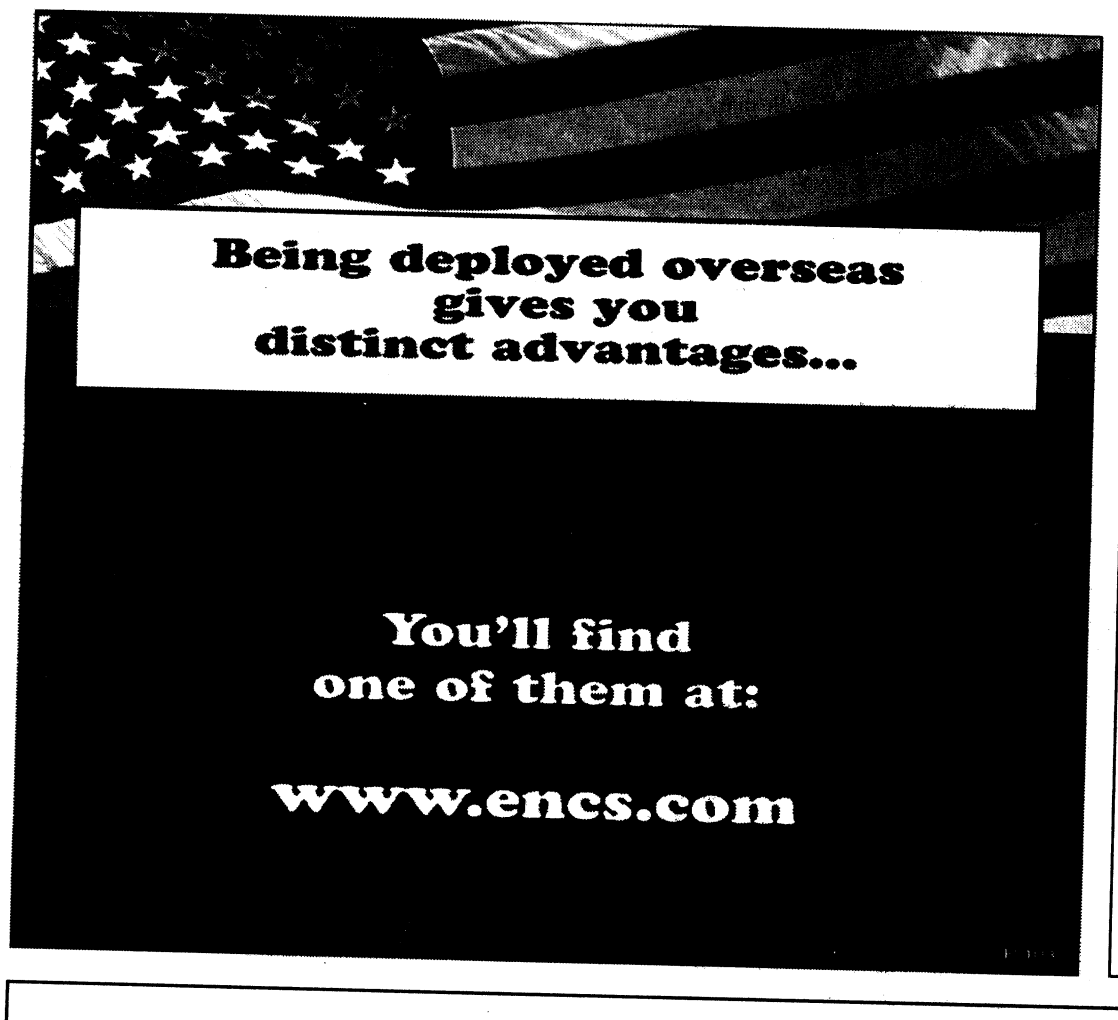
"When I went out there, it was always about soldiers, children, high school students. I always wanted to make a difference," Swanier said.

Making a difference may not accurately describe what he does for the Fort Benning community.

"Everybody makes mistakes and goes through trials and tribulations in the Army," Swanier said. "It's the same way here. In order to receive help, you have to help yourself."

He dedicates much of his time to speaking to groups such as the Boy Scouts, students participating in the Gang Resistance Education and Training Program in Columbus and the surrounding communities.

He also educates soldiers, family members and civilians on how to recognize high-risk behavior and alcohol and drug prevention.



The GEICO Military Service Award recognizes one enlisted member from each service branch and one member from the reserve and national guard component each year for their special achievements and contributions to the public good of the civilian and military community.

"Swanier has committed an enormous amount of time and effort to prevent alcohol and drug abuse at the installation, schools, and local community," according to Yvonne Wilbanks, alcohol and drug control officer, in nomination of Swanier for the award. "It is only appropriate for him to receive national recognition for the professionalism, dedication and selfless service that he has provided to adolescents and adults."

"It's an honor," he said about receiving the award. "I've put a lot of hard work into what I've done in the drug and alcohol prevention arena."

However, Swanier also said the personal impact of being the recipient of this award has not quite sunk in yet, and will not until he arrives in Washington D.C.

Swanier said he would not have received the award without the support of his wife and daughter and the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program staff.

Environmental statutes impact readiness

Urban development effects training

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Encroachment, a growing list of endangered species and harsher interpretations of environmental statutes are impacting the use of Army training ranges, and consequently, military readiness.

Maj. Gen. R.L. Van Antwerp, the Army's assistant chief of staff for installation management, made that observation during a statement to members of the Senate Armed Forces Committee last month.

While stating that the Army was not seeking relief from environmental laws, the general did ask for Congressional support of Army programs and plans that could lessen the impact these issues have on the use of training ranges.

"We ask that you recognize the unique role of the Army and our sister services within the Department of Defense," Van Antwerp said. "We carry out our training, not for profit or gain, but to ensure the readiness of our force. That readiness is critical to our ability to perform the missions assigned to us and to do so efficiently and with a minimum of casualties."

Encroachment refers to the urban development of areas immediately surrounding military installations. Many posts were established decades ago in rural areas. As suburbia's sprawl bumps up now against these posts, civilian complaints of the dust, smoke and noise caused by maneuver, live-fire exercises and flights by military aircraft usually increase, officials said. In a few cases, this has caused installations to limit the hours when or where training can occur to ease community relations with annoyed civilian neighbors.

In addition, encroachment has severely scaled down the size of wildlife habitats surrounding Army bases — making many training ranges "islands of biodiversity" no longer found outside the front gate, according Van Antwerp. Federal regulations protecting an increasing list of endangered plant and animal life living among those islands has limited the use of many training ranges, he said. There are currently 153 federally listed endangered species making their homes among 94 Army installations.

"The effects of these encroachment factors are intensified by well-organized communities committed to the elimination of the military's impact on them," Van Antwerp told the committee. "The effectiveness of these communities is enhanced by a system of environmental regulation that allows for discretionary enforcement and citizen's authority to challenge regulatory decisions, resulting in pressure on regulators to interpret environmental requirements most conservatively to avoid speculative effects or risk litigation."

The general gave Fort Hood, Texas as an example where encroachment issues and environmental compliance has affected the Army's use of it's ranges and training areas. Due to noise restrictions and requirements to protect a number of endangered species and more than 2,400 archeological and culturally significant sites, only about 17 percent of Fort Hood's 185,000 acres of training lands are available without restrictions throughout the year.

While the Army has an obligation to meet other federal agencies regulations, it also has the requirement to train soldiers as realistically as possible, Van Antwerp said. That means maintaining two-way lines of communication between agencies to understand each side's positions to lessen the chance of arbitrary decisions, he said.

To balance the demands of environmental compliance and encroachment with the training needs of the Army, a Sustainable Range Management program is currently being implemented, Van Antwerp said.

Another encroachment initiative the Army continues to pursue is partnering with conservation groups to buy land for wildlife areas just outside installation fence lines to create buffers against urban development.

Fort Bragg has been successful in this area by partnering with The Nature Conservancy.

On Cape Cod, the Environmental Protection Agency rendered a decision to cease all live-fire training at the Massachusetts Military Reservation in 1997 due to high levels of lead in the soil.

The Army then implemented the use of "green" environmentally-safe ammunition. This allowed the MMR small-arms ranges to reopen.

Other initiatives to combat environmental and encroachment issues across the Army include designing small-arms ranges to minimize erosion, employing shock-absorbing concrete to provide reusable backstops and using dust-control technologies on tank trails and helicopter hover pads, according to the testimony.

Checks: Require less info

Exchange general manager.

He said he thinks this is a step in the right direction to protect customer's information while adding an extra measure to check control.

"In my 30 years with AAFES, I've had more customers in my office that have refused to put their social security number on a check because of the risk of someone else getting it, even though we are legally authorized to have it. Today there is a very high concern with giving out personal information, so AAFES is doing what many outside agencies are," he said. "I think it's very good for the customer. They can be relieved that their personal information isn't being spread all over.

"It goes to show that we care about the customer's needs."

O'Reilly said contracted concessionaires on Fort Benning will not be outfitted with the new system, but they are still expected to follow the no social security number on checks rule.

"AAFES is mandating in contracts that they do not require social security numbers on checks," he said. "Regardless if they are directly under AAFES or are a contract operation, the requirement to write or imprint the number on a check is no longer there."

In line with the AAFES check policy change, the Defense Commissary Agency will be implementing a similar system. Fort Benning Commissary officials said customers should expect to see changes by the end of May.

Students learn to trust buddies in Dahlonega

Instructors lead students to teamwork

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff writer

This is the second story of a three-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the U.S. Army Ranger School.

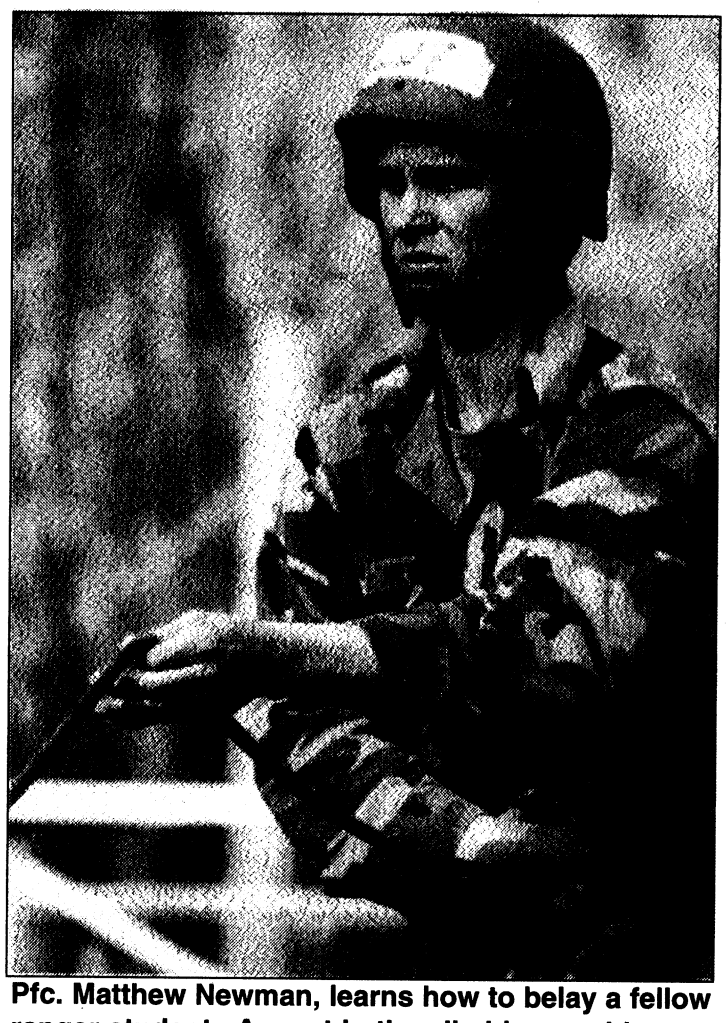
"No one person can earn the tab — it's your squad that earns it for you," said Capt. Chris Foust, a ranger student, shortly after arriving the second phase of the U.S. Army Ranger School.

It is that sort of teamwork Fort Benning ranger instructors instill into the students. At Camp Frank D. Merrill, near Dahlonega, Ga., ranger students show how well they work together as they face the challenges thrown before them during the 22-day mountain phase of the school.

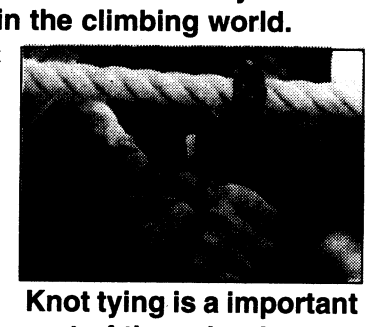
From learning how to tie special mountaineering knots to scaling Mount Yonah's granite face, the soldiers literally put their lives in the hands of their ranger buddies.

During the first few days of their training, students learn basic mountaineering skills. They must master tying 10 mountaineering knots and show their proficiency in belays, the lifeline between a climber and his partner. Should a climber fall, his belay man is the only thing to stop him from a bad fall.



On Mount Yonah, they test their training as they inch their way up rock walls and rappel off granite cliffs.

"This phase familiarizes the students with operations in a mountainous environment," said Staff Sgt. Sidney Agent, a ranger instructor with 5th Ranger Training Battalion. "They learn how to negotiate obstacles in steep terrain, creek and river crossings and how to evacuate casualties."



Although much time is spent learning how to tie the various knots, they are the biggest cause of recycles at Camp Merrill, instructors said.

"It's a perishable skill," said Staff Sgt. Jeff Waters, a ranger instructor. "Knots get a lot of people. Either they don't remember the names of the knots or they begin to tie the wrong knot. When they realize their mistake and try to recover, it's too late."

Nearly all the students struggle with the terrain, Agent said. Few have served in places where the landscape is mountainous. Korea and Hawaii are two of the few places where soldiers train regularly in mountainous terrain. Although still early in the phase, students said they were enjoying the mountains and the weather.

Pfc. Matthew Newman, learns how to belay a fellow ranger student. A must in the climbing world.

Knot tying is a important part of the school

"Putting up with the thunder storms was probably the worst thing back at Fort Benning," said Capt. Clayton Meals, a ranger student. "We faced a lot of adverse weather, but we're an all-weather Army so that's something you have to deal with.

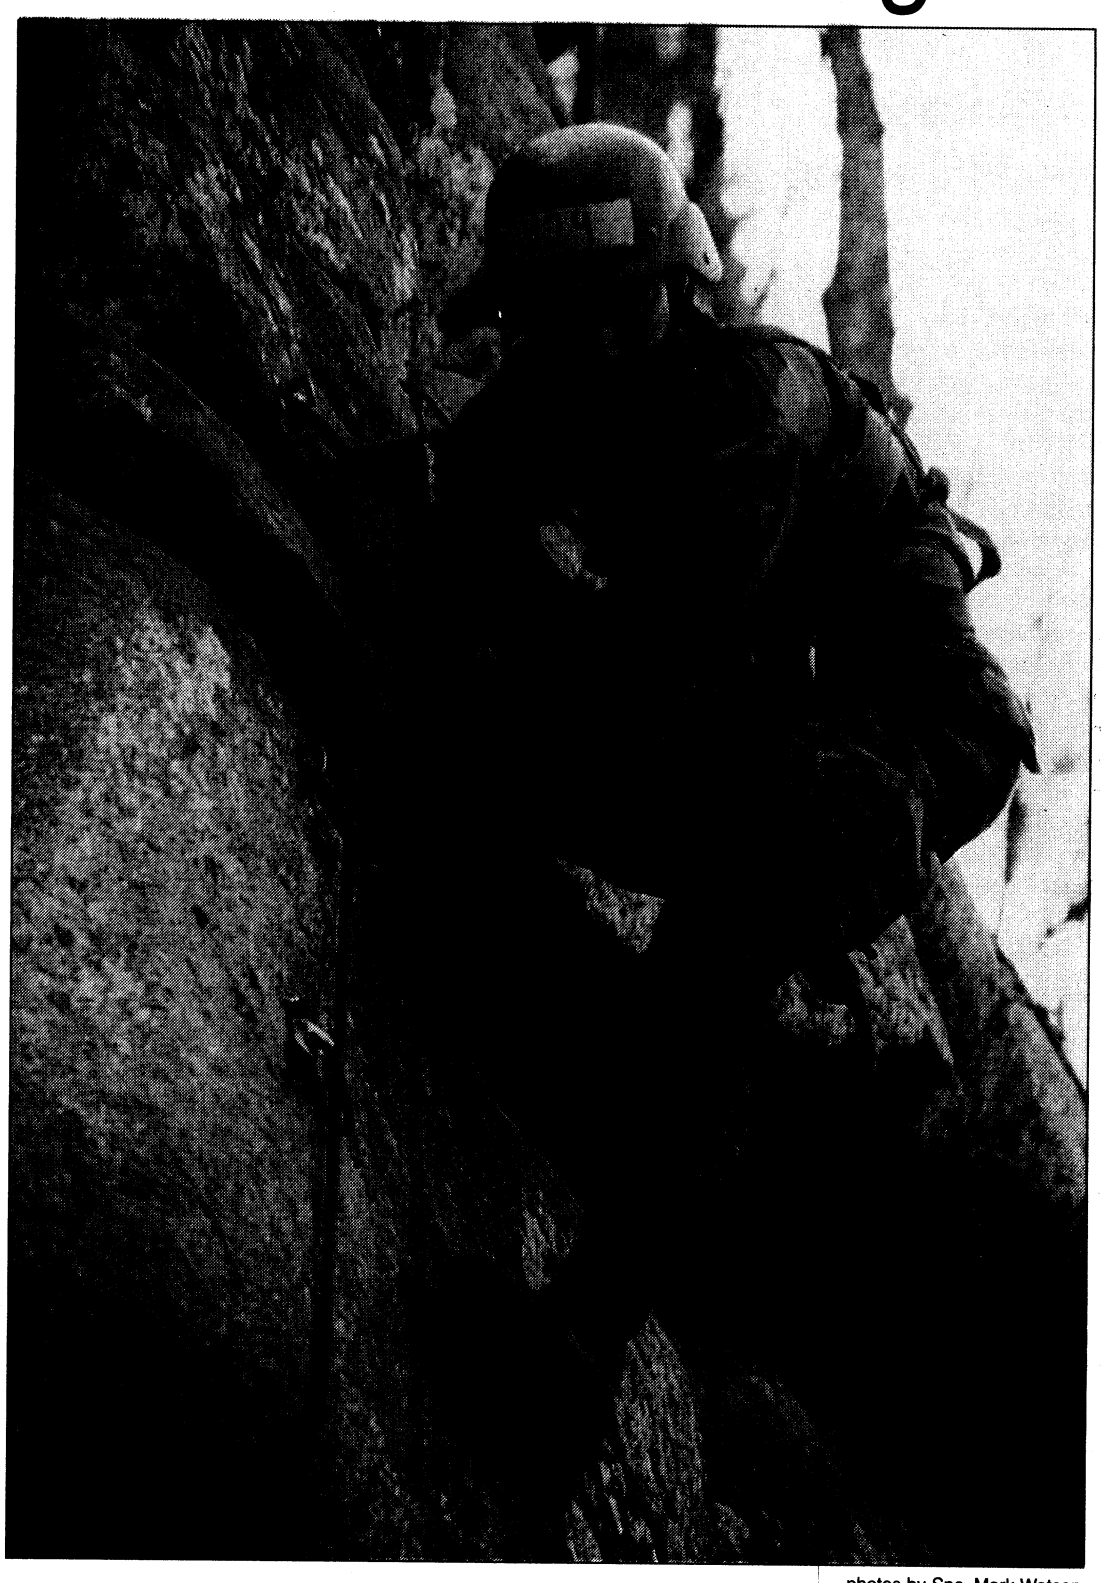
"The training here is great and intense," he said. "We're really tired and pretty sore, but you learn a lot about yourself.

"A lot of the guys are saying food deprivation is the worst, of course we're getting fed pretty well, but sleep deprivation is a big thing right now," he said. "Sometimes we average maybe two or three hours of sleep a night. Then when we're out on all-night operations, you could be up for 24-48 hours."

But the lack of sleep and intensity of the training has its place in earning the tab. The course is also about endurance.

"When you're on your feet for 20 hours, even though you might not be doing a lot, it tears your body down," Foust said. "Our feet are getting tired and some of the guys' legs are a little swollen. We are just getting tired."

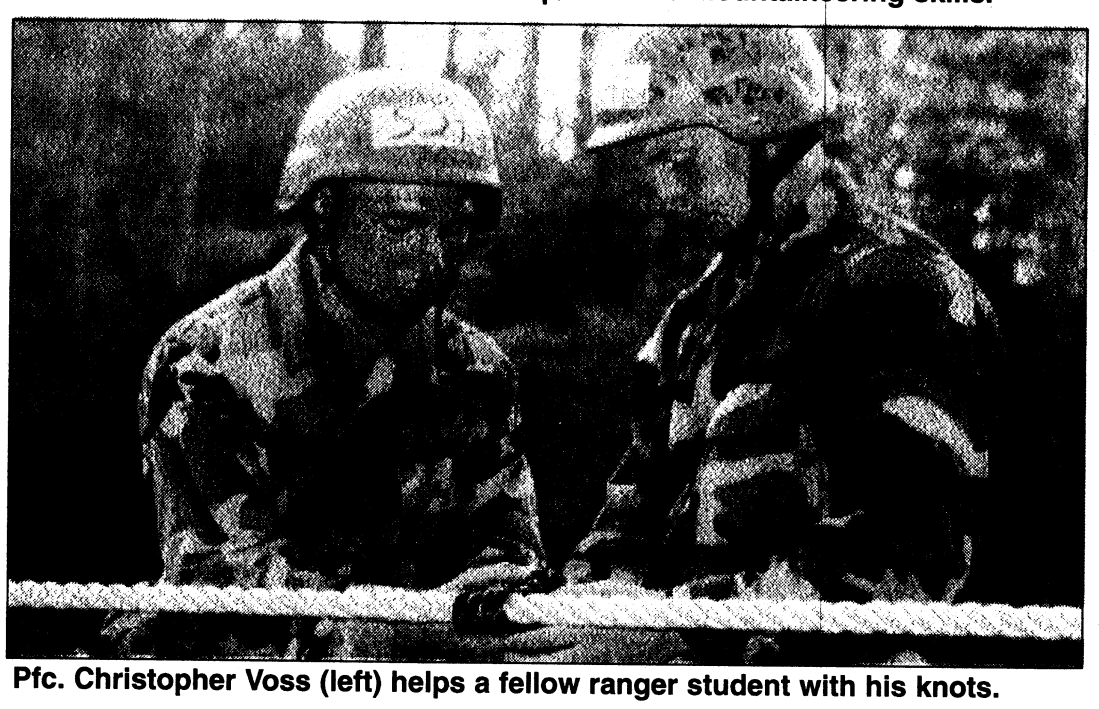
Even with the warmer weather ranger students said it is difficult to want to keep going.



"It's hard to stay motivated," said Staff Sgt. Brian Disque, a ranger student. "Food and sleep are what motivates us. We always want to know when do we get to eat or when do we get to sleep."

Foust joked, "If a super model came up to us right now our first question would be 'Got any chow.'"

After the ranger students complete their training on Mount Yonah they conduct platoon ambushes and raids during two field training exercises.



While the rugged terrain tests the students to their limits, it also helps them become closer.

"Everyone out here is hurting," Foust said. "You learn that no matter how bad you are hurting, you look around and there is someone hurting too. You stick together and take care of each other."

Sergeants judge War Eagle invitational

ITB soldiers evaluate future leaders

Staff Sgt. Matthew McCready
Infantry Training Brigade

The sun and the temperature began to rise as 21 drill sergeants from the Infantry Training Brigade went to Auburn University Saturday April 7 for the 19th annual War Eagle Invitational.

The invitational is a competition for JROTC. Events include the Army Physical Fitness Test, Land Navigation, Marksmanship and Drill and Ceremonies. This year 28 schools from Alabama and Georgia participated.

Drill sergeants from Fort Benning have participated in this event since 1982.

"Who better to evaluate a D & C competition than the drill sergeants from Infantry Training Brigade?" said Staff Sgt. John Parmigiani from the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

Each battalion from ITB sent four drill sergeants to take part in the day's events, combined with Reserve drill sergeants from the 100th Division in Tennessee.

"The cadets must have felt as though they started basic training a few years too early," said Staff Sgt. Charles Gilmer, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

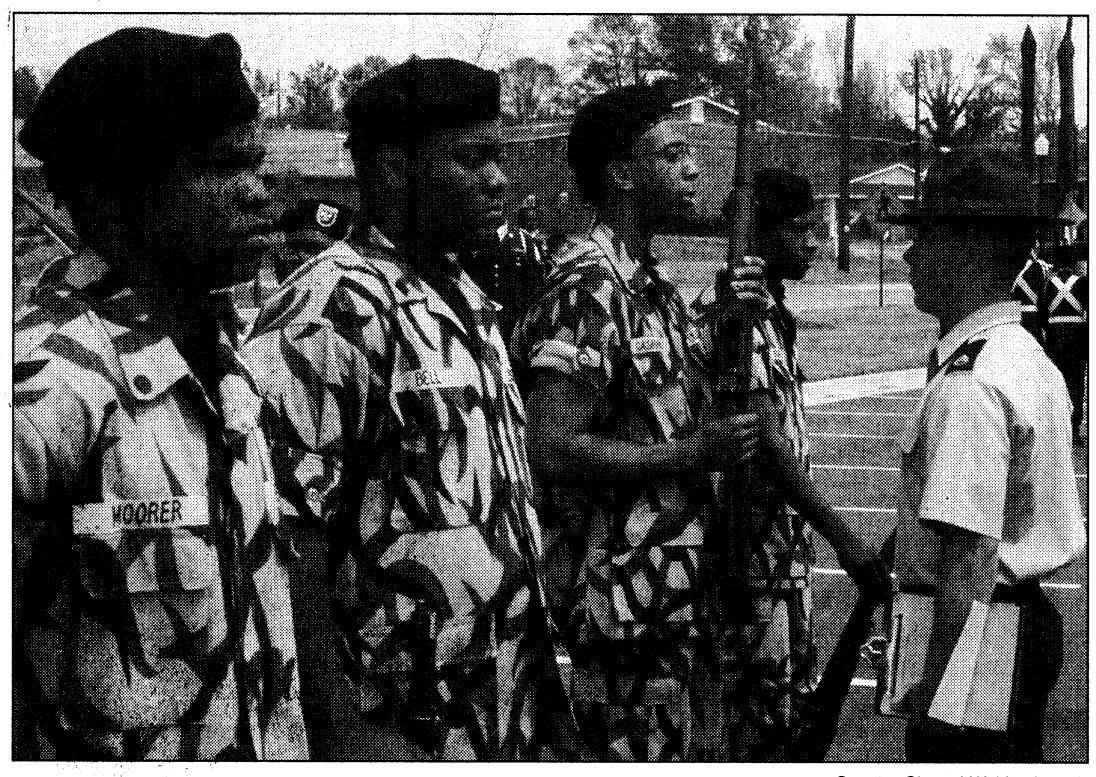
The drill competition began for the cadets at 8 a.m. as they rotated through 12 drill and ceremony stations where they were evaluated on standard military drill and expeditionary drill with and without weapons.

One station was a formal platoon inspection conducted by the drill sergeants from the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

"Some teams were very impressive, sounding off with their general orders and their weapon's characteristics," said Staff Sgt. Carlos Cambre, 1st Bn., 19th Inf Regt.

At another station the cadets were evaluated on their performance as a color guard.

"The competition is tough. These teams leave little to no room for error and perform as well as seasoned, trained soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class Phillip Riddick, a drill sergeant from 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.



"I definitely have the best event to evaluate," said Staff Sgt. Brian Vandegrift, from 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment. "The exhibition drill with weapons shows just how much discipline these high school cadets have and how hard they have worked to win."

The last event of the day was an individual "Knock Out" competition, a military "Simon Says." However, this time it was "Drill Sergeant Says."

"This put the drill sergeants doing what we do best, weaving in and out of the ranks looking to spot a deficiency," said Staff Sgt. Richard Wright, from 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt.

A thumb not straight along the seam of the trouser leg, or an improper hand salute eliminated the contestants. It took about 20 minutes to identify the winner, Bethany Brown from Weptumka High School.

The drill sergeants received certificates at the conclusion of the event with much appreciation for making the day a success.

Sgt. 1st Class J.W. Vandonsel

Staff Sgt. Craig Mussatti, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, conducts a platoon inspection for JROTC cadets.

"Excellent, excellent work drill sergeants. We couldn't have done it without you," said Master Sgt. Carlton Daniels, chief Military Science Instructor at Auburn University.

"We are very grateful in having the Fort Benning Infantry Training Brigade drill sergeants evaluate our drill and ceremonies event.

"Their technical knowledge and professionalism exemplifies what the Auburn University War Eagle Invitational is all about," said Maj. Michael Knox, Assistant Professor of Military Science at Auburn University.

The day's overall winner of the six-foot tall Commander's Cup trophy went to Enterprise High School from Ozark, Al.

Candidates experience land navigation

Officer Candidate David Briten
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

"It's great to walk through the woods, find points and get paid for it."

The words of Basic Officer Candidate Bill Knott summed up the experience for many of the candidates from class 4-01 during land navigation training.

Recently, 113 Officer Candidate School candidates from Class 4-01 traveled to Yankee Road for three days of land navigation training.

During the fourth of 14 weeks of training, Class 4-01 learned day and night land navigation techniques.

The training went well and was very useful, said several of the candidates.

"I felt well prepared by the train-ups and remembered the methods we learned from the cadre when it was test time.

"Completing the course was a real confidence booster," said Candidate Robert Cook.

Cook received a "first-time go" on both the day and night land navigation training.

Even the candidates who were very experienced at land navigation, said the training time was well spent.

"Land navigation is a perishable skill, anytime you have the chance to practice, take advantage of it," said Candidate David Smyth.

The time away from the barracks also provided good training for the candidates with limited experience in the field.

The C Company soldiers constructed shelters using ponchos and 550 cord or bungee cords. Class 4-01 experienced life in the field, when it rains, without the comforts of barracks or shelter-halves.

"It was a different, and wet experience," said Basic Officer Candidate Jason House.

Basic Officer Candidate Luan Nguyen found it to be "a great experience, I learned a lot."

The candidates of C Company performed well on test day and were proud of their achievements.

"Overall it was a challenging course, we received good instruction from the land navigation committee and had a good experience," said Candidate Oderay Watson.

THINKING outside the BOX

Stories and photos by Bridgett Siter

Bergen Goesch adds the top feathers to her Odyssey of the Mind costume.

Feathers fly during state OM competition

Of all the bird-brained ideas middle-schoolers can come up with, Cindy Givens and Anne Trawick hope theirs is the best.

Faith Middle School's Odyssey of the Mind team begins state competition today in Milledgeville, Ga., and coaches Givens and Trawick believe their rookies stand a good chance of representing Georgia in world competition in May.

"They were incredible at regionals," Givens said. "Astounding. And to think they're all, but one, sixth-graders. I was blown away. I knew they were good, but I just didn't realize they'd reached that level of perfection just yet. If they do as well at state, they'll make it to world."

By definition, OM is the world's largest creative problem-solving competition for kindergartners through college students. Practically speaking, it's a decathlon for the brain, or Olympics for the mind, as it was called when it first began in the late 1970s. It's sponsored by Creative Competitions, Inc., and designed to encourage students to "think outside the box."

"Researchers tell us tomorrow's job market is going to need people who think creatively," Givens said. "Typically we teach students exactly what we want them to think from the day they enter kindergarten. Then when they graduate we tell them to think for themselves and think creatively. OM is all about getting these students to take the blinders off and look at problems from a different perspective."

Faith's seven-member team adopted a very different perspective this year — a bird's eye view — using recycled mattress pads, foam insulation and coffee filters to create elaborate feathered fowl.

OM teams are presented a menu of problems, each with its own set of restrictions and requirements, and Faith's team selected the problem "Wild Winged Wonders," which required them to perform an eight-minute skit incorporating at least three birds — one

Faith's artist in residence becomes 'math-magician'

Demonstration elicits 'tight' response

The math and science students at Faith Middle School took their lessons from a rather unorthodox teacher last week. He calls himself a musician, designer and craftsman. His students call him a "math-magician."

Bond Anderson is the creative genius behind SoundPlay, Inc., in Parrott, Ga., and the designer, creator and producer of outdoor musical 'playscapes' around the world. He worked his peculiar brand of magic on the students at Faith last week during the school's annual "Artist in Residence Week."

Bond demonstrated the practical and sometimes impractical applications of various math and science formulas and principles using a bit of string, some PVC pipe and assorted recyclable materials.

"Cool!" "Awesome!" and even "Tight!" were the typical responses Anderson elicited during a schoolwide assembly Monday.

"Tight? That's a new one on me," Bond laughed. "But, yeah, the kids usually respond favorably to this kind of demonstration. I'm teaching math and science and even social studies and language arts through art.

"Art is the common denominator. Art is the link that crosses over into every other area or subject they're studying and it ties them all together. It only makes our lives richer to understand the correlation."

Bond started the week with the assembly, giving the students a brief overview of his work. He explained the various ways he uses math and science as an artist.

"See this straw?" Anderson began, holding aloft a drinking straw from the school's cafeteria. "A straw usually has only one function in life, and that one sucks."

As the students giggled and groaned, Anderson pinched the tip of the straw, trimmed its end and bent it in the middle to demonstrate the various sounds it could make as an instrument. He talked about the physics of "bending air" and "wind vibration," and explained the mathematical equations he uses to determine exactly where he should space holes in the straw to create a flute.

Expanding on this lesson, Anderson, an accomplished flutist, met with classes individually throughout the week to teach students the fundamentals of using recycled materials, math and science to create instruments of their own.

They tend to like the fact that we're using recycled materials," he said. "That typically reaches students at every level because they're interested in learning to use common materials in uncommon ways and they're being taught the importance of being environmentally conscious.

"Once again, it's art, but it's making them use their knowledge of science and their creative thinking skills. We're using ratios and fractions and learning about the speed and vibration and length and pitch of sound.

"They're learning real-world applications for science and math — transferring what they've learned on paper to an object of music and art. The learning is just reinforced."

Lianne Turner, an eighth-grade algebra student, said Anderson's demonstration was "pretty cool."

"He explained how the octaves in music relate to ratios. I didn't even know there was a correspondence between music and math. Now I'm starting to understand it," she said.

Anderson said he hopes programs like Faith's "Artist in Residence Week" will ensure a future for art programs in schools across the United States.

With fewer than half the nation's high schools requiring art credits for graduation, he said it's often difficult to convince people of the importance of art.

"I reach them however I can with the message that art is crucial to a well-rounded education. In this country, creativity has made us what we are," he said.

"Why, it's so important God even put it in the Bible. Right there in the first chapter, it says he created everything. Then it says he created us in his image, which means he made us to be creative like him. It's not one of the Ten Commandments, but it's on page one. I think that makes it pretty important."

Post kicks off Earth Day event

Students learn about nature on trail

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

She named the tree Limbo because it was bent over like a Limbo stick. Third-grader Nicky Martin and many of her McBride Elementary School classmates have been studying and surveying the Woodlands Nature Trail this past year.

Last week, two new additions were added to its ranks.

Representatives from Directorate of Facilities, Engineering, and Logistics, Fort Benning Garrison Commander Col. Joe Torres, and Woodlands Club members launched joint Earth Day and Arbor Day Activities April 11 by planting two red maples in front of the dirt trail.

The trail, which was established informally years ago in the area adjoining the schoolyard, underwent a revamping. Explanatory signs, wood duck and bird boxes, and maintenance work were completed in the weeks leading up to the celebration, courtesy of DFEL.

Both members of the school and local community use the mile-long trail. More than 60 different species of trees, as well as beavers, ducks, and other animals reside in the nearby forest, said McBride Principal Del Hicks.

"Members of DFEL have guided and directed us throughout this project. What an opportunity for our kids to learn about ecology and nature," Hicks said. "We're real pleased."

The trail is often used by classes at the school to study the surrounding environment.

An Outdoor Education program is a highlight of the children's learning, where students have been offered the chance to have outside classrooms. It's a treat the students enjoy, said teacher Marie Hand.

"We are so lucky to have this trail in back of our school," said Hand. "We teach lessons out there, not only in science, but we incorporate math, reading and other subjects. The children get very excited and are disappointed we can't go out there more often."

Torres spoke to about 50 students last Wednesday, having them guess the ages of the two new red maples. Torres encouraged children to plant their own plants and trees, providing a more eco-friendly and more beautiful place to live.

"I remember planting trees around where we lived when I was younger," said Torres. "Those trees now provide homes to animals as well as make the area nicer. This isn't just for McBride, but for the whole community."

Bob Larimore, chief of land management division, also spoke to the student crowd.

"This is always a great idea because it makes kids aware of their own environment. The opportunity is there and a need to maintain the ecosystem," Larimore said. "We wanted to provide the kids with an opportunity to go out and explore nature, and help the school improve the trail."

McBride continued the activities April 13 with a school presentation. Students had the chance to sing songs, read poems and essays, and another tree planting. A magnolia tree was also planted.

The best lessons this year for third grader Ariel Tucker came from her participation with the Woodlands Club, she said.

Tucker hopes to revisit her adopted tree, Spring, and has plans to write about her experiences one day.

"I'm the writer in my group," Tucker said. "I like nature and

Recycling program excels on post

Center processes more than 178,000 pounds monthly

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

One man's garbage is another man's treasure, and in this case, the riches appear in several forms.

For every empty milk jug, cardboard box or soda bottle that's put out on the curb for weekly recycling pickups, salaries are made and monies are added to Fort Benning's MWR programs.

A six-person crew makes up the Recycling Center on post, where thousands of pounds of recyclables are collected each month. These goods are then sold to recycling centers, allowing funds to come back in the form of wages and other post projects.

The biggest moneymaker, said Material Recovery Supervisor Olin Lott, are cardboard products such as packaging boxes from movers.

"It's our most abundant product," Lott said. "We have a tremendous amount of cardboard, especially in the summer time when there are a lot of moves."

Mixed paper, newspaper, aluminum cans and plastic goods are also collected. While transacted price levels may only pay about $40 per ton for containerboard, it adds up. All in all, several loads are sent off routinely.

"We use to brag about 60,000 pounds years ago," Lott said. "Now we produce more than 178,000 pounds a month."

Sometimes overwhelmed with work, the crew has witnessed a surge of growth over the last several years. Why? Call it a trend or a life-style change, residents and workers on Fort Benning have all pitched in; enough to hire two new folks, who will be joining the group next week. They will help out with areas that have been at a standstill, such as concrete, timber and glass.

The new crewmembers are brought up to speed by veterans like Frank Griffin.

Rachel R. Garcia

Olin Lott, material recovery supervisor for the Recycling Center, points out a capped bottle that did not compress.

Griffin has been with the recycling center more than seven years. He saw the building expand back in 1996, and hopes the center will again soon. An adjoining lot was converted to house more goods, where a mountain of products now resides.

"The amount of growth has been amazing," Griffin said. "It's almost a problem of where to put all of it."

They are proud of their safety record, too. Only one accident has occurred in the entire history of the material recovery center.

While residential neighborhoods contribute a large percentage of the items sent over, other areas on post are a big supporter of the effort.

"Faith Middle School is a constant," Lott said. "They call us every week like clockwork."

The team said they work like a well-oiled machine, with a weekly routine that keeps the pace.

"Like a chef who slices and dices and knows his craft, we know how to sort and bail," Lott said.

The crew has saved some interesting trophies for their efforts as well, including, artwork, bookends, and trinkets — all items received at the center. One worker even found 27 winning bottle caps in one day from people not removing the tops from their old soda containers.

And while that was a lucky bonus, that is the one thing that creates the most headaches. When folks don't take off their caps, the bottles can actually explode during the compressing stage.

For that reason, "please remove your bottle caps," Lott said.

Fort Benning residents are invited to peruse the center. Besides participating in the recycling effort, people can come by and grab bottles caps, pull tabs, or soup labels for cash.

"While the first priority is to benefit post, Fort Benning schools are also a precedence," said Lott.

The material recovery station is open Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Feathers: Flock to Faith students in competition

completely original, one from literature and one a depiction of a real species — all within a $125 budget.

They had five months to write an original dialogue, with music and lyrics, and create costumes and stage props.

"I've wanted to be a part of this team since I first heard about it, but I had no idea how many sacrifices I'd have to make," said sixth-grader Kyle McKibben. "We've spent a lot of time working on it, but now it's paying off."

Clint Loyd, an OM veteran and the only eighth-grader on the team, is the "creative leader" of the team, Trawick said. He wrote the script, a pun-filled parody of To Kill a Mockingbird, featuring "Tequila Mockingbird," a spirited bird of questionable character who finds herself in a peck of trouble after "Aunt Whipper" is murdered.

"We all brainstormed ideas and made a list of all the bird puns and bird jokes we could think of.

"I wrote the final draft but it was really a team effort," Loyd said, adding he's confident the team will perform well at state.

"We scored over 190, out of a possible 200, at regionals," he said. "That's the highest score I've ever seen. If we do that well again, we'll make it."

Faith's OM team has a history of "making it." They've competed in world competition 12 times since they started in 1987, bringing home the gold three times.

Joining Loyd and McKibben at state are teammates Patrick Herold, Kris Kirby, Taylor Osborne, Bergen Goesch sand Justin Cone.

Students learn basics of cooking with solar power

Pizza boxes serve as mini-ovens during energy study

Loyd Elementary School

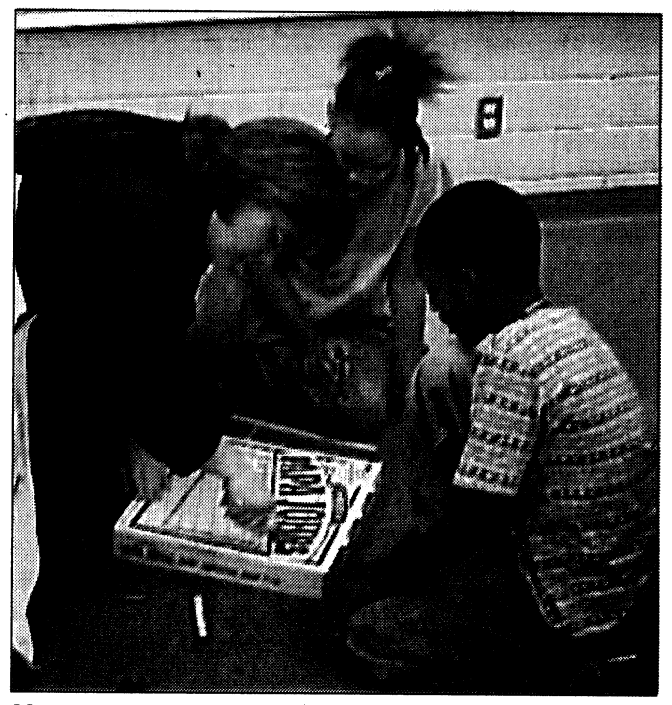
After studying how different types of energy produce electricity, fifth graders in Beth Young's class constructed pizza box solar ovens.

Students learned the positive and negative effects of producing electricity by burning nonrenewable fossil fuels such as, coal, crude oil, and natural gas, as well as, using renewable resources such as, wind, water, and the sun.

During class discussion, students quickly recalled that people had used energy from the wind, water, and sun for millions of years.

After all, windmills were used to grind wheat into flour and haul water from wells. Falling water was used to turn huge waterwheels to power lumber mills. The sun's energy was used to dry clothes and make sun tea.

Students were able to recognize the benefits that we would reap by using our renewable resources to produce energy needed to complete our day-to-day tasks.



They excitedly constructed solar ovens out of pizza boxes donated by Papa John's. They were anxious to see how well the sun's energy would work for them.

As it turned out, they were able to enjoy delicious treats. They made cheese toast, English muffin pizzas, s'mores, and even hotdogs! They were umm, umm, good!

Catholic conversion not once-in-a-lifetime thing

Cathie Wampler
USAIC Chaplain's Office

reflections

The Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults is a process of conversion, not just for converts wishing to become members of the Catholic church, but for the whole community.

It compels us to take a look at our roots as a church and to renew ourselves in light of our tradition. It challenges us to relearn what it means to be a church.

Not very long ago, adults who wished to join the Catholic church attended weeks of private instruction and were baptized quietly, usually with only a few relatives or close friends present. The following week the new convert would take his or her place in line for communion with little or no attention to the face that they were joining the community for the first time at the table of the Lord. Confirmation might take place with the next seventh- or eighth-grade class when the bishop came for his yearly visit. Infant baptism had become the norm with almost total emphasis placed on the "cleansing of original sin."

That approach to adult baptism has changed radically. Following years of study and research, during which church leaders reached into the church's rich heritage to apply the ancient Catechumenate process to modern situations, the Revised Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults was published July 1, 1988. The RCIA was reborn.

In the early church, adult baptism was the norm. Early christians invited people to join the community in a journey of faith. Those who accepted the invitation were called catechumens and began a step-by-step process toward full membership in the church. This process usually lasted three years or more. It was a time of instruction, scripture sharing, discernment and a time to explore the responsibilities in carrying out the church's mission and ministry.

This was a beautiful, community-supported journey of faith. Praying for and with the catechumens, instructing them in gospel values, sharing with them the faith-life of the church and celebrating the stages of their faith journey with special rituals was looked upon as a community responsibility. It demanded total community involvement.

The purpose of Lent in the early church was totally related to baptism. It was a time of final preparation and formation for those catechumens to be initiated into the christian community; and it was a time for the community to remember and renew their baptismal commitment.

At the solemn Vigil of Easter, the early christians joyfully welcomed the newcomers to full membership in the church community through the celebration of the Sacraments of Initiation (Baptism, Confirmation and Holy Eucharist). Another period of instruction followed their initiation, one that centered on ministry and led them to a deeper understanding of the mysteries of faith.

The significance of the restoration of the catechumenate is powerful and for the candidate and the community. For the candidate, the RCIA honors the individual's process of growing in faith with all its individuality.

There is time for growth, for reflection, for digesting Scripture and the Christian way of life, and time for choosing a life of ministry and evangelization. There is inclusion in a caring community. Formation becomes more important than information.

The RCIA calls us to be a community of hospitality and friendship. It calls us to be a community in search of meaning that is attentive to God's word. It calls us to be a community that celebrates our holiness; one that worships together in praise and thanksgiving. It calls us to be a community in the process of ongoing conversion.

Conversion is not a once in a lifetime thing. The catechumens journeying toward initial conversion model for us the deeper conversion to which we are all called. We all experience God's call to reexamine our lives and strengthen our relationship with the Lord and with one another.

Single parents face extra challenges

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Single parenting is not easy. Single parents have more responsibility and demands upon their time and energy than married couples. Frequently they earn less than married couples.

Faced with economic, emotional, social and practical concerns, single parents work hard to overcome these challenges. Sole parenthood is a big job.

Finding adequate childcare is a major concern. An in-home sitter, a neighbor or nearby friend, a licensed daycare center and after-school care are common solutions. Older children must meet the state age requirements before being permitted to care for other infants and children.

To make ends meet, make a budget and stick to it. Reduce energy costs. Avoid reoccurring costs, such as cable TV and Internet service.

Plan menus and wardrobes and shop accordingly. Avoid impulse buying.

Your children can help with the housework. Give chores that are age-appropriate for your child. Teach them how to make housework fun rather than drudgery.

Spending quality time with your children is more important than having a spotless house.

Strengthen your relationship with your children by actively listening to them. If you have not already done so, make sure your children understand the reason why their other parent is absent from the home.

Seek to involve your children in the decision-making process whenever possible. Plan family activities together. Provide loving and consistent discipline.

Set common goals, share successes and praise your children often.

Remember to take time to care for yourself. Seek help whenever it's needed.

Racers beat feet in Stowers Stampede

New race promotes healthy activity, family fun

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Hundreds of runners from the local area turned out to beat feet Saturday during the Stowers Stampede 1-Mile Fun Run and 5K Road Race which was located at Stowers Elementary School.

The event, being held for the first time, was a huge success, said Dee Dee Burch, Stowers Physical education teacher and one of the Stampede coordinators.

"It's turned out better than we had dreamed. I am really excited about the turn out," she said.

Burch, who coordinated the day's events with Adam Weinbaum and Rebecca Corbett, said the group decided to promote the Stowers race for several reasons.

"We were hoping to carry on the tradition of the Faith holiday race by picking it up and keeping it going," she said "We are also trying to promote healthy activities and healthy living throughout the community by getting families and children together and active."

Jeremy Reynolds, 13, said runs like the 5K are good exercise and training.

"I run a lot — I run track and field in school," he said. "I run a fitness test every quarter and I have one coming up, it's a mile run, so I'm trying to get ready for that."

Mary Carothers and her 11-year-old son, Joe, said they like doing activities like the run for different reasons.

"My son loves to run these 5Ks and I come out to come in last and to support him," she said with a smile.

Participants were awarded trophies for first place finishes in their divisions. Other runners received door prizes, coupons, gift certificates and T-shirts to commemorate the race.

Winner by category were:

1-Mile Race

Instructors school students 3-2 in soccer game

Students, teachers face off in game

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Enduring the midday heat, Command and General Staff Course students and the teaching faculty for the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation were pit in a friendly game of soccer that proved to be a sweat-drenched scorcher at French Field April 6.

In the end, the instructors won 3-2.

World Cup level of play? Not exactly, but their competitiveness could have held its own on any playing field.

"Everyone gave a tremendous effort," said Jose Solis, WHINSEC, teamed with the instructors.

"Both teams displayed a combination of experience and skills that made the game a close one, but what made the difference in us winning was strategy," Solis said.

Near the end of the first of half, fatigue coupled with hot weather had taken its toll in the form of drenched shirts and flush faces.

During the game, the stands came to life with Latin rhythms and percussion as fans, mostly family members, cheered to rally their team.

"I stayed on the sidelines at first.

"They played me the second half to take advantage of their fatigue," said Solis.

This strategy apparently worked as the team of Instructors held the Students to zero goals in the second half of the game.

"Strategy won the game for us," said Solis.

"Those who played most of the game must have got a major workout," said Joao Rocha, referee.

"To keep the tempo up, the next time we have something like this, permanent-party should be involved to substitute as players," said Rocha.

The game provided both students and teachers a competitive method of physical conditioning and a well-deserved break from the confines of the classroom, said Solis.

"The change of scenery was very healthy," said Solis.

Volunteers save post $2 million

Helping hands make offices run smoother

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Thousands of volunteers make things happen at Fort Benning — obvious services like answering a phone at the Army Community Service and providing newcomers with information on which agencies provide what services, providing free tax preparation and filing, to teaching new family members about the Army and the support available.

But volunteers also spend their lunch hours fixing shelves in the Thrift Shop, evenings answering new parents' questions, Saturdays tutoring at-risk students in math and reading and Sundays teaching Sunday school. Fort Benning volunteers help keep the 'Hooch clean, raise money for cancer research and are counselors at the Muscular Dystrophy camp every summer. Volunteers make sure needy children receive toys from Santa's Castle and the ACS Food Locker gets stocked. They provide shelter for battered women and build homes with Habitat for Humanity.

The post recognized these efforts during the annual Volunteer Appreciation Reception Tuesday at the Officers' Club when Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne accepted a symbolic check worth nearly $2 million from Installation Volunteer Coordinator Deborah Holton, who proved her ability in finding volunteers for any situation when she drafted her husband, Col. Walter Holton, at the last minute to give the invocation after the scheduled chaplain was unable to attend the ceremony.

Guest speaker, Roxy Parrish, said the shaping of the modern Army's volunteer corps began in the early 80s. A study from the chief of staff of the Army's office identified volunteers as great human resources that could augment garrison staff to the benefit of the military community.

An imperative was for the volunteers to document their time spent in the service of others. This provided the volunteers proof of experience gained "on the job."

"This was very forward thinking for any large organization at the time," Parrish said, "and it was the Army that led the way."

So not only did the garrison benefit but also the volunteers, Parrish said and then told how her own experience as a volunteer led to becoming the IVC at Fort Stewart, Ga.

After coordinating the volunteer effort at Fort Stewart for nearly 15 years she left to work in human resources for Waffle House.

Competition blown away

Ordnance teams compete for title of best in Army

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
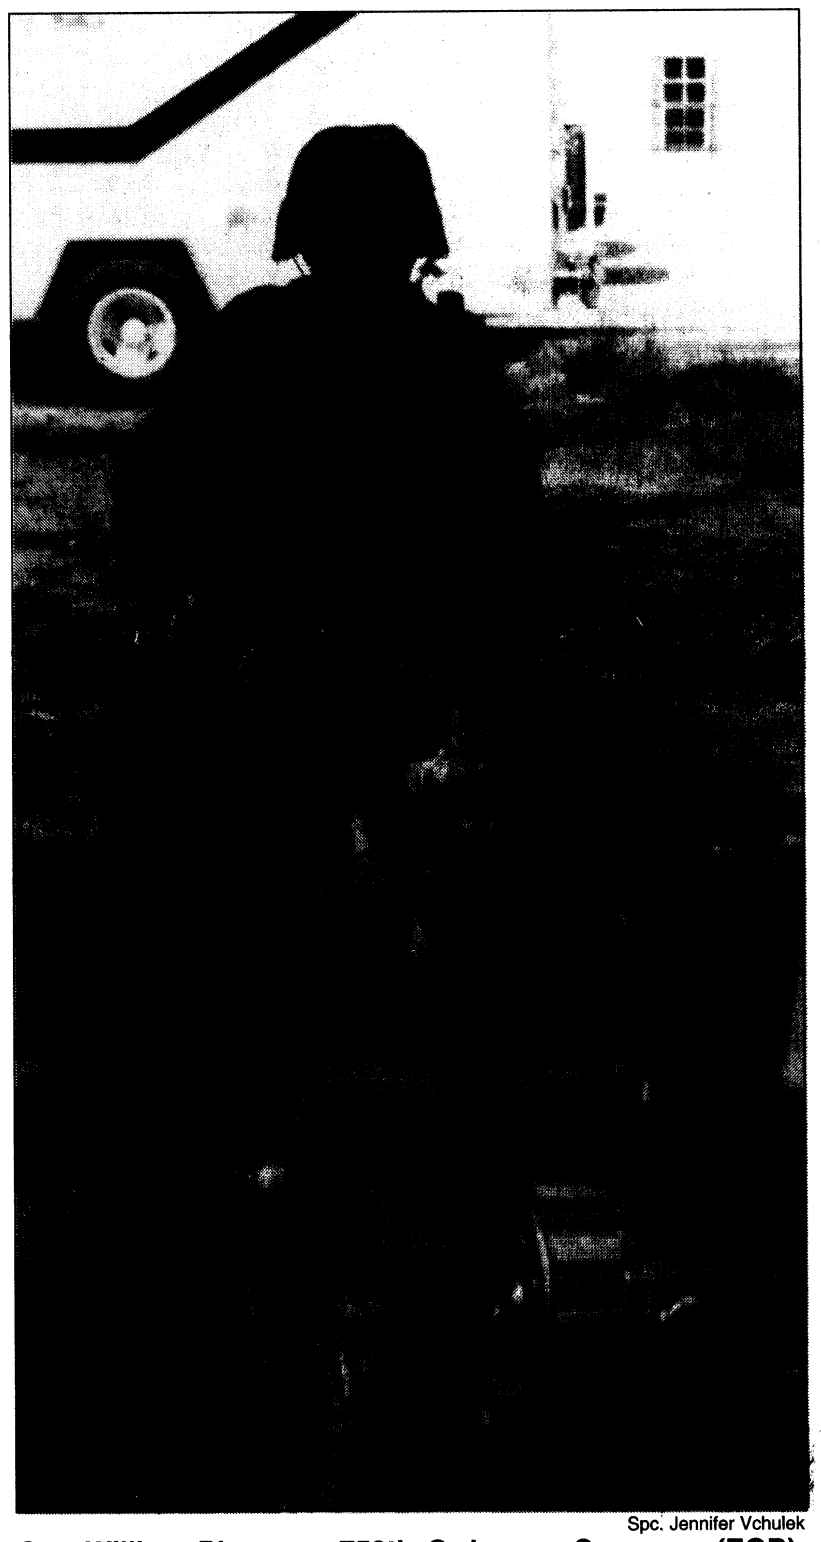
Bayonet staff

Sixteen soldiers traveled here in hopes of winning the title of the Department of the Army Explosives Ordnance Disposal Team of the Year, after spending the entire year preparing for the largest competition of its kind in the EOD field.

The 15-year-old competition, which tests soldiers on their ability to perform such skills as locating, identifying, and disposing of explosive devices, took place Monday through Thursday.

Soldiers are tested on basic soldier skills such as marksmanship, land navigation, first aid and protection from a nuclear, biological or chemical attack.

Modeled after the Army's Best Ranger competition, it provides EOD soldiers with the opportunity to earn the title of best of the best, said Command Sgt. Maj. John Maples, 52nd Ordnance Group (EOD), Fort Gillem, Ga.



Eight teams are competing in this year's competition, with each team comprised of two soldiers.

The teams come from both state-side and overseas units, including Korea, Hawaii, Germany, the Sinai, Fort Irwin, Calif., Fort Meade, Md., Fort Sill, Okla., and Anniston Army Depot, Ga.

"Every individual who reaches this level is a winner, they've proven themselves to be competent and professional EOD technicians," said Maples.

However, the victors of this year's

AER passes goal

Community donates $192,000

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Army Emergency Relief Campaign wrapped up last week with the announcement that the community had met its goal of $170,000.

In fact, community members rallied together to raise more than $192,000 in less than six weeks, said Alfonso Deane, AER officer.

"As the AER officer, I'd like to thank all the units and directorates that helped the installation meet its goal," Deane said.

Even though there is no established competition among units during the campaign, all units that participated will receive certificates of appreciation for their contributions, Deane said.

"I think soldiers and leaders realize the importance of AER," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander. "We have a lot of soldiers who really benefit from AER."

Torres said AER was made to help soldiers and everyone should contribute because, "we could all find ourselves in future need."

'Forgotten Division' remembered

Monument secures soldiers places in history

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Once known as the "forgotten division," the 94th Infantry Division secured its place in U.S. history Monday with the dedication of a monument on Fort Benning's Sacrifice Field.

More than 150 family members and former soldiers from the 94th gathered to herald the division's defeat of German forces at the Saar-Moselle Triangle and its subsequent "drive to the Rhine" during World War II.

They came wearing medals and ribbons, black and gray patches bearing the numbers of the 94th, and remnants of the uniforms they first donned more than 50 years ago. They laughed and cried as they shared memories of battle buddies no longer living and celebrated the dedication of a monument designed to insure their legacies never die.

"Today we salute the living and remember the dead," said Charles H. Manning, the 94th Infantry Division Association's chaplain, who was a private in 1945. "I cry when I think of the atrocities of World War II, but there's joy in my heart when I see people living in freedom because of our sacrifices.

"We're dying one by one, fading away, disappearing from the radar screen, but our stories live on. I hope our children and grandchildren will be inspired by this monument, and we will not be forgotten again."

The division was headed for the "forgotten" war in Brittany upon landing on Utah Beach, Sept. 8, 1944 — known, coincidentally, as D-Day plus 94. Their mission was to assume responsibility for the containment of 60,000 German troops who had sought refuge in the ports of St. Nazaire and Lorient, and the men of the 94th never expected to see the main part of the war at all.

But Gen. George Patton altered previous plans and called on the 94th to fill gaps on the Third Army's front. It was there the 94th attacked a series of strong defenses on the Siegfried Switch Line and cleared the Saar-Moselle Triangle, where the division suffered the bulk of its 1,156 casualties and nearly 5,000

Best Ranger secrets revealed

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

It's that time of year again. No, not the annual protest. That's in the fall, when we give thanks that it's finished. The Best Ranger Competition starts today.

Last year, one of the Ranger mommies caught up with me at the end of the weekend and asked how I had held up so well over the weekend.

There are secrets to surviving a weekend of "Best Ranger" as a spectator and I am going to share them with you, the home team.

First of all, "holding up well" is a relative term. The translation is "still on your feet." This is one time when it's OK to settle for less. If it takes a megadose of caffeine with a sugar push, so be it.

Accept the fact that at the end of the weekend, you're not going to look your best. Just keep telling yourself that no one else looks like they could waltz into a prom either.

Best Ranger is one of the world's most grueling competitions. It's pretty tough on the spectators too.

Key to your survival will be water, a lot of water. That basic guideline of eight glasses a day won't cut it, that's for air-conditioned couch potatoes.

Keep sipping and keep sweating, I say. "Hydrate or Die" is more than just a catchy slogan for a hydration system. Besides, the medics are going to be busy enough. One less heat casualty is a good thing.

Get some serious sunblock. Use it. Liberally. I'm not talking about that wimpy SPF 15 stuff. Go for something that would rival 40-weight oil. You know, the big numbers, at least SPF 30. SPF 45 is even better. This is no time to be working on a tan. We're talking survival here. If you don't feel like you're basting, it's time to re-apply.

And while we're on the subject of sun, may I suggest a hat? And not just because if everyone wore one I wouldn't stick out wearing mine.

My last survival technique is also a warning. I'm not saying that the mosquitoes near Camp Rogers are worse this year than last, but think CIB — Combat-ready, Insatiable Bugs. I was out there earlier this week for a briefing and I swear that rather than fly over to a tasty target, they just moved the furniture to get to him.

OK, so maybe I'm exaggerating a little. It was just one chair, it had rolling casters, and it still took two of them to move it, but you get my point. They're big and they're hungry. Very hungry.

Well, I was spared being an entrée last year and I intend to be spared again.

"These bugs (slap) don't seem to (scratch) be bothering you very much."

"No, sir. I've lived down here a long time and I guess I'm used to them."

You, too, can skip being a blood donor. Here's the secret. Look around the crowd and identify someone who looks like they are doing a poor imitation of a South Pacific slap dance. It won't be hard. You'll have plenty of victims, I mean, targets, to choose from. Spritz yourself liberally with insect repellent. Post yourself near the slap dancer. They'll abandon you and go for him every time.

Of course you'll reek with "Off" and not "Chanel No. 5." But remember your mantra, "We're not going to the prom."

So there you go. Water. Sunblock and a hat. Insect Repellent.

It won't get you to the prom, but it'll get you through Best Ranger weekend every time.

Personal attention appreciated

The boys and we parents "anxiously" awaited report card day sponsored by Faith Middle School.

When that scheduled day arrived (April 2) we sat down for dinner and noticed that there were not any report cards displayed on the kitchen table as we are used to. Trying not to be too zealous, we waited patiently for a reasonable excuse why report cards were not available or a reasonable excuse why happiness had not filled the air as it usually does.

Our normal dinner conversation proceeded with the most updated news and weather forecast then the focus shifted to friends, then the cat and dog, and the "Oh, it's only Monday syndrome."

Exactly, "It's Monday," I was thinking, the Monday that report cards should have been present. What better opportunity to manipulate our conversation to address school and what we were "anxiously" awaiting on this special day.

So I thought ... It was quickly brought to our attention that the computer system was down at school, which resulted in a delay in the distribution of report cards.

As any parent can relate, my thoughts were, "Is this the real story or better yet, what is the rest of the story?" The next morning I made a little inquiry with the receptionist at Faith Middle School. I learned that this was the "rest of the story," just as the boys had informed us. Report cards would be brought home that afternoon.

As I expected, the report cards were displayed and the boys were acting normal — you know jumping around, fighting, and screaming. We all sat down and enjoyed dinner while looking at those report cards on the table wondering what we would find inside.

After dinner, my husband and I studied these reports and we became overwhelmed with joy. Our boys proved to us they had continued with a commitment they made to us and themselves to achieve academic excellence. They managed to take another huge step in reaching their academic and personal goal. From the look on their faces, it was obvious they prescreened these report cards. They were just grinning from ear to ear.

As we placed the reports back in the envelope, we noticed a flyer from Flint Energies. This flyer identified Flint Energies as the agency responsible for providing energy to the Fort Benning Military Installation. Not only that, Flint Energies is Faith Middle School's Partner in Education and explained that they are committed to giving back to the Fort Benning community. Better yet, they are sponsoring a program for all students at Faith Middle School.

This program offers every student with at least one "A" on his or her report card the opportunity to enter a drawing and be one of two chosen to receive a $50 savings bond from Flint Energies. All the students needed to do was send Flint Energies a copy of their report card: Signed, Randy Buck.

"WOW," I said to my husband, "This is too good too be true. We must encourage our boys to address the envelopes, affix the stamp, and we will do the rest."

And that they did. And that we did. Bless my husband's heart, I had him traveling throughout Columbus during one of the worst rainstorms Columbus has had this year, looking for a mail box with the earliest pickup time to ensure these report cards made it to Flint Energies

All this commotion paid off when I received a telephone call from retired Col. Randy Buck. During our conversation, an enormous amount of emotion filled my heart.

He took the time to call me personally to share how impressed he was with our boys' report cards. He was genuinely concerned and commented on how proud we should be of them.

He then complimented, my husband and me in the job we are doing in raising our children and challenging them to achieve academic excellence.

All I could think of was how kind it was for this agency to offer such an incentive to the students of Faith Middle School. Secondly, how sincere the words annotated on the flyer are. Thirdly, this man is obviously reviewing every report card that is being sent to him. He has to, how else would he have made the association that we have three boys attending the same school. Can you imagine how many students took him up on this generous offer?

By this time, you're asking why is she writing this to the paper. Thanks for asking. My point is, it is not so much the monetary award to two students but what a wonderful gesture he has made to the parents of these boys. You cannot imagine how good he made me feel.

To Randy Buck and Flint Energies, I say with a great amount of enthusism, "Thank you for taking the time to acknowledge our boys' academic excellence." And to Calvin, Joseph, and Richard Rowe we say just as enthusiastically, "thank you for your personal commitment to achieving academic excellence."

VARIOUS VOICES

What programs need the most volunteers and why?

1st Lt. James Grady, 29th Infantry Regiment — "The school systems, Big Brothers-Big Sisters and the educational programs need volunteers. Actively participating in education provides children with a postive role model and gives them a positive image of the Army."

Jill Crider, former installation volunteer coordinator — "The Thrift Shop desperately needs volunteers. This time of year there is a large turnover in volunteers because of moves, yet the shop stays open in the summer and the hours don't change."

Sarah Hertig, family member — "Family readiness groups always need volunteers. The FRG is where the rubber meets the road — where the most influence is made because of the interaction between family members and the unit is at its highest."

Lt. Col. Don Sando, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — "School programs because our children are our future."

Vernita Henry, family member — "The Columbus Alliance for Battered Women Shelter needs volunteers. There are so many women out there who need counseling and some type of assistance to let them know how to break the abusive cycle."

Marilyn Wallace, Army Community Service chief — "ACS volunteers are needed in relocation, information and referral at our front desk. Volunteers are always needed because of the volume of customers and the information we provide."

Germans learn American soldier skills

Infantry soldiers share common language, skills

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiering is soldiering. That's what students from the Infantry Officer Basic Course and several of their counterparts from Germany found out earlier this week as they negotiated McKenna MOUT site at Fort Benning.

Six German infantry officer cadets are spending two weeks on Fort Benning to see just how American soldiers accomplish missions, what weapons they use, and what it's like to be an American soldier.

The German soldiers are spending their first two weeks training with various units across post. Next week they will train with rangers in Florida for a week before rounding out their visit to America with a trip to Washington, D.C.

The whole experience is something the cadets have been looking forward to, said German officer cadet Benjamin Brock.

"This is quite a bonus for us, having four weeks in America," he said. "It's a good time to get to know the United States Army, to get a closer view of how you fight, how you train soldiers."

And the benefits of that experience are numerous, said Brock.

"We are learning a lot. There are some differences in MOUT fighting. Here you are moving very fast as you go through and get your corners," he said. "The soldiers here have also been fantastic. We have been integrated into squads very fast and everyone has been very friendly — it's been great."

German officer cadet Mathias Rissel said he has also been enjoying his time as an "American soldier."

"It has been a very good experience for me having such close contact with members of the U.S. Army. We've had a lot of fun and teamwork," he said. "We've also learned much. It's just been a great time."

"We (Germans) are mechanized infantry and they are light, but we are finding that the training is the same from German to U.S."

IOBC student 2nd Lt. Bryan Hughes, who has been training with German officer cadet Michael Loebermann, said while he can't pronounce his counterpart's last name, they still have had no problems sharing their ideas.

"Michael has been very quick to learn our style of MOUT training. Our style is a little different and he shares how they do it in Germany compared to our way," he said. "It's been a pretty good time because we have been discussing tactics for our armies.

"We've kind of been combining some of them as we go along because he's been showing us some pointers and vice versa. It's been real enjoyable," said Hughes.

Sgt. Michael Maddox

German officer cadet Michael Loebermann prepares to help secure a room on the McKenna MOUT site along with students in the Infantry Officer Basic Course.

Lt. Col. Kurt Rotter, German liaison officer, said this type of exchange is just what the program that brings the German soldiers to Fort Benning is all about.

"Our soldiers should see the differences between your weapons, your soldiers, how you train, what equipment you use, military language," Rotter said. "These guys have almost three years in the army and will be promoted in July to second lieutenant — they need to broaden their horizons. If they see how other soldiers do training, they can take that back to share with others."

The program has been so successful in the past that now German soldiers from other branches besides infantry are also beginning to visit Fort Benning.

Thirty of these soldiers are scheduled to spend four days here next week being introduced to the home of the Infantry and U.S. soldiering.

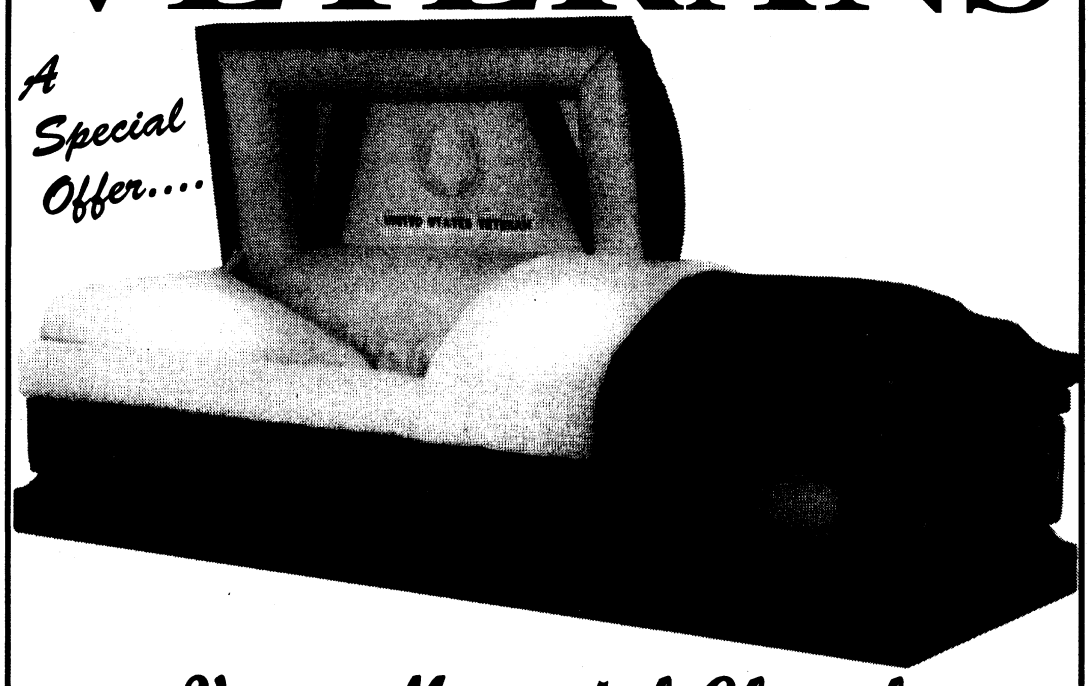
Army awards highest civilian award to DACOWITS

Army News Service

During a recent full honor review at Fort Meyer, Va., Vice Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. John M. Keane awarded the Decoration of Distinguished Civilian Service to the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services.

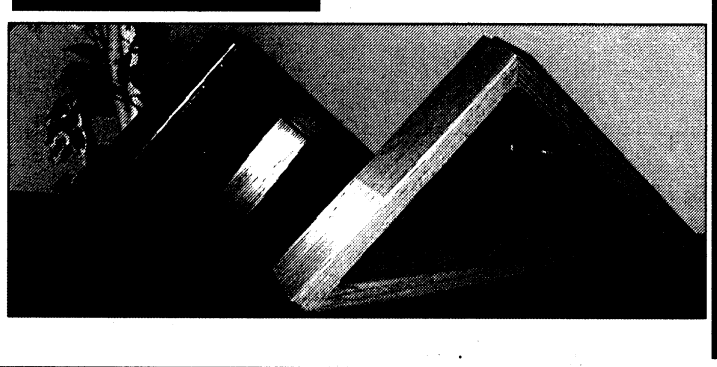
The Decoration of Distinguished Civilian Service is the Secretary of the Army's distinguished service highest civilian award. The award recognizes DACOWITS for its selfless contributions in improving the integration and retention of women into all the Services, but especially the Army.

DACOWITS is the first committee ever to receive the prestigious award. The Secretary of the Army awards this decoration to those who provide that established in 1951 by then substantially contributes to the accomplishment of the Army's missions.



This week DACOWITS celebrated the 50th anniversary of its founding with a weeklong conference in the national capital region. The conference focused on issues involving the recruitment, retention, and use of women in the U.S. Armed Forces. The committee was retired Secretary of Defense Gen. George C. Marshall.

The conference began with a field trip to Fort Lee, Va., the site of the first DACOWITS installation visit after it was founded 50 years ago. DACOWITS members flew on CH-47 Chinook helicopters to the home of the Army's Combined Arms Support Command and visited with soldiers and toured various training facilities. Upon their return to the Pentagon, the full honor review ceremony was held.



A full honor review is a traditional military ceremony that consists of drill and ceremony, an inspection, and "trooping the line." Members and former members of DACOWITS watched as the Army band "Pershing's Own" played an Armed Service medley and soldiers from the Old Guard marched onto Fort Meyer's Whipple Field. Vickie McCall, chairwoman of DACOWITS, reviewed the troops along with deputy commander of the Old Guard Lt. Col. Charles Sniffin.

The field trip to Fort Lee, the full-honor review, and the presentation of the Decoration of Distinguished Civilian Service Award kicked off the DACOWITS 50th anniversary.

Medal of Honor recipient teaches leadership

Major recalls actions during Vietnam

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Fort Benning soldier is the only Medal of Honor recipient remaining on active duty and the youngest ever to be awarded the country's top honor.

Maj. Gordon Roberts was a 19-year-old specialist in 1969, an infantry rifleman with the 101st Airborne Division in Vietnam, when he single-handedly disengaged four enemy bunkers and came to the aid of a sister company pinned down by enemy fire.

July 11 was a day "not a lot different than any other ... rainy, dark and dismal," according to published accounts of the battle. B Company, 1st Battalion, 506th Airborne Infantry, had endured nearly 20 fire fights in the two months since they'd arrived — including the infamous Hamburger Hill — and this day was no different. They'd made brief contact with the enemy earlier in the day, and as darkness approached, Roberts could hear D Company come under heavy attack 300 meters ahead on Hill 996.

"My platoon was to be air assaulted in," Roberts recalled. "Our objective was to move up the ridge, traveling at approximately 15 meters apart, and break through enemy defense."

But Roberts' platoon soon came under fire and four soldiers behind Roberts were wounded immediately, creating a significant gap between him and his platoon.

"I was separated from the others and it became clear to me that I had to take out that bunker," he said. "Of course, at that point, I thought that was the only bunker there."

Roberts charged the bunker and killed its occupants. Thinking the "coast was clear," he climbed on top of the bunker and assumed what he called the classic "follow me" position.

"That's when I found out there was another bunker. They shot my rifle right out of my hand," Roberts said.

Under continuous heavy fire, Roberts grabbed an M-16 that had been dropped by another soldier and attacked and destroyed the second bunker. And the third. And the fourth.

A fellow soldier from B Company told how Roberts, now completely cut off from his platoon, then turned his attention to assisting the injured soldiers of D Company.

"He linked up with our sister element and turned his efforts toward helping their wounded and recovering bodies strewn along the ridge," wrote Pfc. Nick Nelson, shortly after the fight. "Through Specialist Roberts' actions, we were able to secure the hill in a very short time. Those men are forever indebted to him. Our whole platoon owes him much."

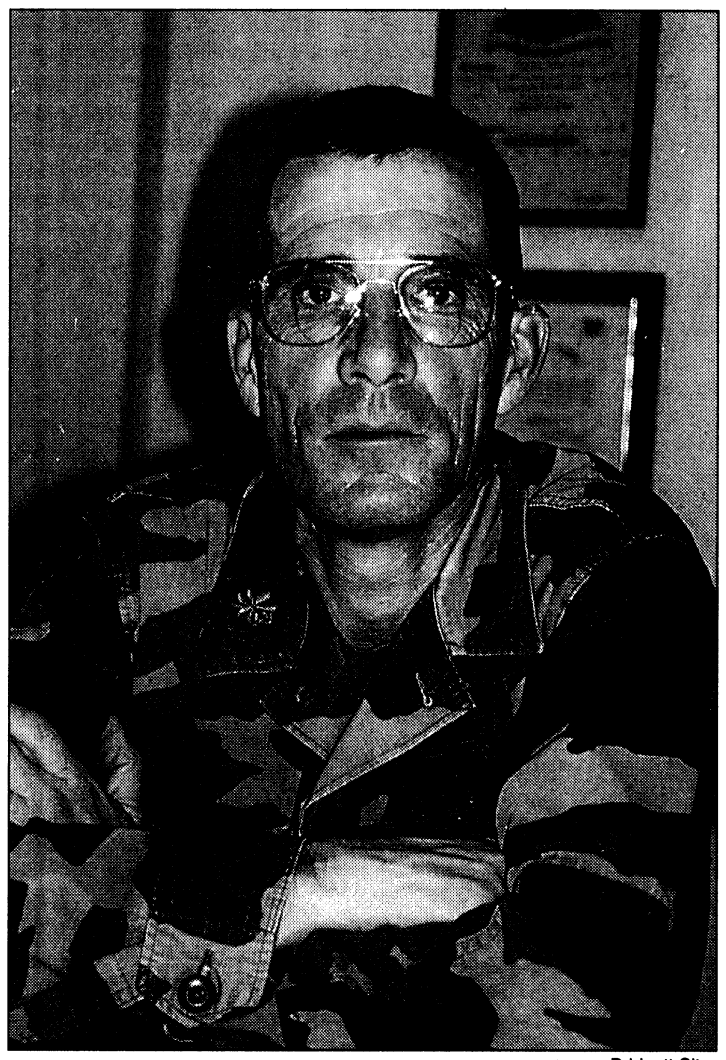
Nelson and Roberts, both natives of Lebonan, Ohio, met in Vietnam shortly before the conflict. Thirty-two years later, Nelson still vividly recalls what it was like to watch his friend's unselfish acts of heroism.

"It was like watching something out of a Hollywood movie," he said. "That's the only way I can describe it. We were pinned down. No one followed him, but he was unstoppable, untouchable. What he did that day was phenomenal!"

Roberts said he "just did what I was taught to do." Now a leadership instructor at the U.S. Army Infantry School, assigned to the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate, he tells his students that paying attention to his own instructors paid off when it mattered the most.

"When I came through here for basic training, the country was at war. The drill instructors had been there. They were veterans of World War II or Korea or Vietnam," he said. "I knew they knew what they were talking about and I paid attention. I don't remember what I was thinking that day (of the battle). I just remembered what I'd been trained to do."

Roberts was 20 when President Richard Nixon presented him with the Medal of Honor. His hometown welcomed him with parades and named a ball park in his honor. Roberts said then, as now, he found the experience and the adulation overwhelming.



"I still get 30 or 40 requests for autographs each month. I don't understand it. I'm not a hero. I don't look at myself in that genre," said the father of two, a 16-year-old son and a 6-year-old daughter. "My daughter is very curious about all this attention. I tell her this country is just very proud of the people who serve. She understands that."

> "Through Specialist Roberts' actions, we were able to secure the hill in a very short time. Those men are forever indebted to him. Our whole platoon owes him much."
> Pfc. Nick Nelson
> A witness to Roberts' heroics

Though "not fond of the attention," Roberts admits he, too, understands the concept of pride in our nation's patriots. He calls his fellow Medal of Honor recipients "true heroes."

"They are my heroes. They are the people I grew up idolizing," he said. "I held their standard as my own. When I was young, it was the veterans of World War II and Korea that inspired me. My own father jumped into Normandy with the 101st. He received two Purple Hearts and a Silver Star. I fell in love with the military when I was very young."

That "love for the military" brought Roberts back to service in 1988, 17 years after leaving to pursue his masters degree at the University of Dayton and a career as a social worker. He received a direct commission in the Ohio Army National Guard and returned to active duty in 1991.

Bridgett Siter

Maj. Gordon Roberts earned the Medal of Honor as a specialist in 1969.

"My initial plan was to serve a tour, then go to college and get on with my career, which I did," Roberts said. "But I never got the Army out of my blood. Nearly 20 years later I still felt the need to serve. I think I'll be here as long as I'm healthy and able."

Nelson said he isn't at all surprised by his old friend's decision to return to service.

"Gordy always seemed to be at home, at ease with the whole military situation, even in the jungle. I remember when they took him out of the field, just before they awarded him the medal. It really ticked him off," Nelson said. "He was comfortable with his role and his assignment there. I could see he was real comfortable with being a soldier."

Infantry soldiers relive holocaust during trip

Holocaust witness shares tales of atrocities

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Combat wasn't enough. It left them unprepared. During a German artillery barrage in the urgent final months of World War II, Morton Waitzman dived into a hole for protection. Two other soldiers piled in on top of him. Their bodies became his cover; he had to be dug out from under their corpses.

Later, as the 29th Infantry Division fought its way through the towns of Germany, Hitler Youth would try to take out American tanks by climbing up and dropping grenades through open hatches.

"And we would have to defend ourselves," Waitzman said. "You always hoped it would be someone else who would have to shoot these kids."

But for all the horrors of killing and dying, Waitzman and his fellow soldiers had no way to understand the things they saw at a place called Dora Mitelbau, a Nazi slave labor camp that was liberated by American troops. Waitzman, now a retired medical researcher who avoided discussing the war for the first 50 years that followed it, described the American arrival at the camp for a group of Fort Benning soldiers who visited the Breman Jewish Heritage Museum in Atlanta last week.

Prisoners at the camp built the V-1 rockets that the Nazi regime sent flying at London. They were worked without relent, until they dropped; they were worked to death. Waitzman's unit, the 115th Infantry Regiment, walked into a waking nightmare.

"We were sick, nauseous," Waitzman said. "You can't describe it. You can't describe the stench, and the anger ... I knew there was something called a holocaust going on, but I hadn't seen it."

A soldier asked Waitzman if, upon capturing German camp guards and seeing what they had done, he had wanted to take matters into his own hands.

"Yes," he said simply, in a flat, clear voice. But officers fought to control their troops, ordering them to secure the guards and move them safely to captivity. Waitzman is grateful for the wisdom those leaders demonstrated.

"When discipline breaks down," he said, "where is the military?"

Not every German soldier was captured, though, as the American troops searched the entire camp. In one building, they found a room full of ovens; opening the doors, they found ash and bits of bone. Then they opened a final oven door, the only one that wasn't warm to the touch. A lieutenant warned them to move carefully.

It was a good call: Inside the oven, a German officer was waiting, with a pistol in firing position, to take a few of the Americans with him into death. He never got the chance.

"He didn't kill any of us," Waitzman said. "Because we got the first shots in."

After Waitzman spoke, soldiers clustered around him at the front of the room to hear more, and to see the photographs he hadn't wanted to pass around the room.

"That's a lot of what we saw," he said, flipping through a stack of photographs. "Bodies and bodies."

Waitzman's memories weren't the only window the visiting soldiers had into the historical realities of the Holocaust. Docents led the troops through a series of exhibits in the museum that brought the events of 60 years ago into clear relief. The horror and banality of evil were equally in evidence.

> "We liberated more dead bodies than live ones."
> Morton Waitzman
> Holocaust witness

"The Jew nose is crooked at the top," reads a page in a picture book distributed to German schoolchildren before the war to help them identify their enemy. "It looks like the number six."

But hate wasn't just taught in the years leading to the so-called "final solution" — it was also enforced, in action, as a matter of public policy. German police and soldiers staged public humiliations of both Jewish citizens and those who were believed to have sympathy for them.

A photo in the museum shows a man surrounded by officials in a public square, with a sign hanging around his neck that reads, "I am a race defiler."

Another picture nearby shows a child painting the word "Juden" — Jew — on the front of his father's store, as a heavyset man in a coat, tie, and swastika armband looks on with evident satisfaction.

As the visiting soldiers walked the chronological path of the displays, they saw cause give way to effect.

Twenty steps away from the photographs of ritual humiliation and hateful instruction hangs the 1942 photograph of a German soldier in the Ukraine with his rifle raised to shoot a mother and her young daughter; the mother tries to shelter the girl with her body in the final moment before both are killed.

A few steps in another direction is a photograph of Nazi einsatzgruppen — death squads — executing a line of Jewish prisoners with gunshots to the back of the head.

Some of the soldiers grimace; one laughs. The prisoners are being killed at the mouth of a ditch, to facilitate their burial.

For Fort Benning soldiers, the day was a cold immersion in the worst kinds of reality — and a reminder of some of the good reasons to serve as a soldier. The soldiers who already learned that lesson firsthand can't forget it.

"We liberated more dead bodies than live ones," Waitzman said. "I was very happy to leave."

A CLOSER LOOK

■ Holocaust Remembrance Day was April 19.
President George W. Bush marked the day with a tour of the National Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C.

■ Sixty years after World War II, not every nation remembers the Holocaust in those terms.
Last week, an ultranationalist member of the Russian parliament pointedly refused to stand for a brief ceremony in memory of those killed. And Iran's supreme leader, the Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, said in a speech that Zionists had inflated the reality of the Holocaust to justify crimes against Palestinians.

■ American soldiers played a significant role in liberating Nazi concentration and slave labor camps, a story told in Robert Abzug's 1987 book Inside the Vicious Heart.
The book, published by the Oxford University Press, is still available in paperback.

■ A group of more than 900 Jewish refugees fled the growing menace of Hitler's Germany in 1939, headed by ship for Havana.
But Cuba refused entry to the refugees, and the St. Louis headed for Miami.
The United States also refused to allow the refugees to enter, and Coast Guard patrols prevented the ship from entering U.S. waters. The refugees returned to Europe.
That story is told in detail at http://www.ushmm.org/stlouis/index.htm

■ One of the little-known stories of the Nazi reign of terror was the opposition of an underground movement of German students who called themselves the White Rose.
The group distributed anti-Hitler leaflets calling for German citizens to resist the Nazi regime.
They were eventually caught, tried and executed; the youngest member, 20 year-old Sophie Scholl, stood in court to tell the judge — handpicked by Hitler for the show trial — that the war was already lost. She was beheaded just a few hours later.
The story of their courage is told at http://www.jlrweb.com/whiterose

■ The U.S. Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C. maintains a learning center on the Holocaust.

No bones about it; archeologist one man show

Fort Benning home to treasured hunter

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Dr. Chris Hamilton has accomplished what some people have only dreamed of: He's hunted for buried pirate treasure off Cape Cod's coast, worked as a ranger in Florida's parks and participated in excavations in different areas of the country.

Eighty percent of Fort Benning's archeological sites have been identified under his guidance. With the use of the Geographic Information and global positioning systems, the area will be nearly 100 percent charted in two years.

Hamilton, Fort Benning's only archeologist, has worked with the post since 1994. He spends a majority of his weekdays shifting through paperwork piles, working with various contractors and managing a few thousand acres of land — 184,000 acres to be exact.

That huge number includes managing 3,000 cultural sites, where many are 10,000 years old. Nineteenth century homesteads and 77 gravesites also exist on post.

Land use guidelines have changed dramatically since Hamilton's first days in school.

When Camp Benning first opened in 1918, there were few laws governing land management. It's been fairly recent, since the 1980s, that "people really started paying attention," Hamilton said.

"There's more coordinating and consulting now," Hamilton said. "The biggest lesson for me has been working with the American Indian tribes, who are under a 'sovereign nation status.'"

One of Hamilton's current tasks is helping coordinate the Black Ramp expansion project at Lawson Army Airfield. Fort Benning wants to expand the strip, in order to increase and improve air movement.

Like most archeological projects of this magnitude on post, it's a process that involves speaking to 11 American Indian tribes, various military departments and researching any new land procedures.

While people were first alerted of the potential activity in August 2000, the procedure could take months to complete.

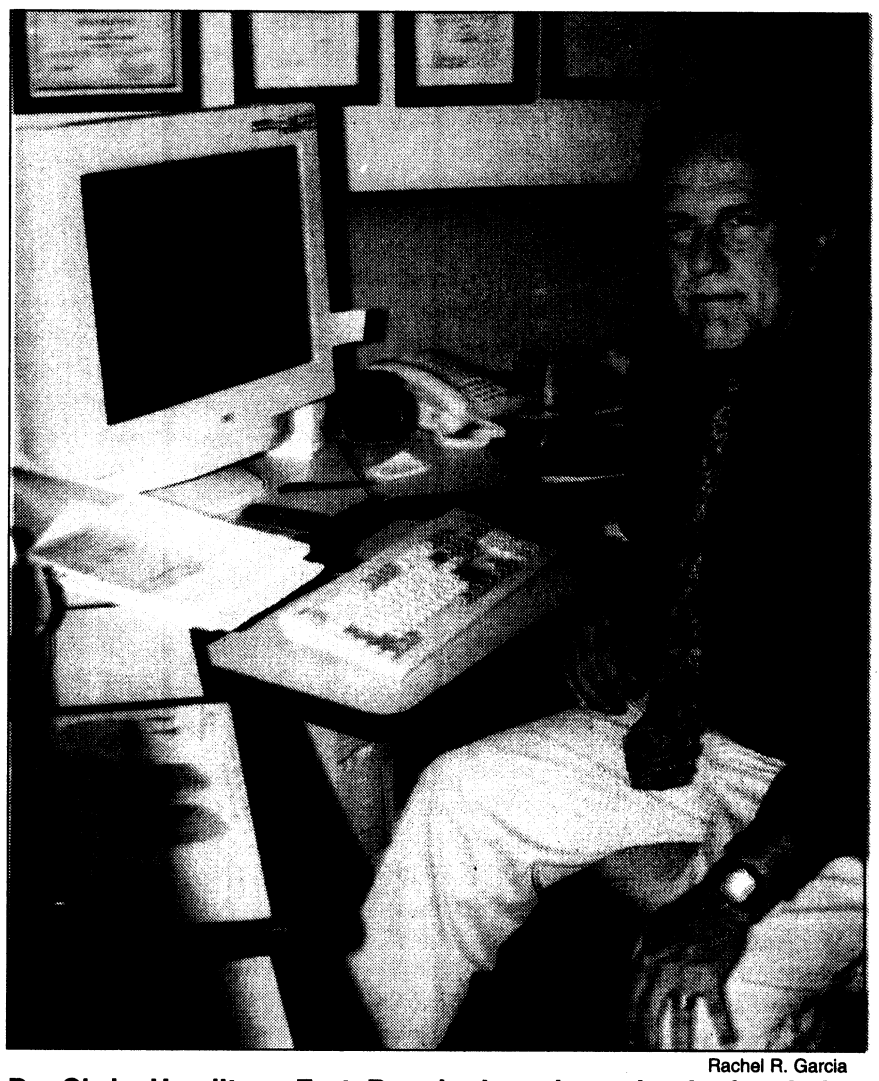
John Brent, Environmental Management Division chief, said he's always impressed with Hamilton's professional flair.

"He's a one-man show," Brent said.

Hamilton has won a variety of awards in his field, most recently a TRADOC Environmental Award presented during the last quarter.

"Dr. Chris Hamilton is a consummate professional, with a bent toward serving history and mission requirements of today in a unique blend of support to his profession, Benning's rich cultural history and the challenging training," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"It is no surprise to me that he has claimed such accolades as TRADOC's The Environmental Award winner 'Cultural Resources Management,'" Stelzer said.



Hamilton still gets called into the occasional surprise.

"Four years ago, human remains were discovered from a slit trench a troop was creating," Hamilton said. Turns out it was a turn-of-the-century cemetery, one that hadn't been charted.

His willingness to go the extra mile extends outside the office.

He also finds time to help Boy Scouts earn merit badges in archeology and give presentations in local schools.

"I'm trying to make a contribution here," said Hamilton. "Fort Benning is a huge laboratory for military science, as well as a preservation for cultural sites and the study of human behavior."

Selfless service recognized during ceremony

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

At an afternoon ceremony last week in the shadow of the Follow Me statue, members of the Fort Benning community were recognized for their service and dedication to the Army.

"Good people doing good deeds," said Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander. "It's that selfless service that separates us from many others."

The achievements noted by Le Moyne and Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, were bookended by the recognition of individuals at different ends of their military careers.

Pfc. Jose Montero, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was recognized for earning the Expert Infantry Badge only two months after completing his initial entry training.

"It sets you apart," Le Moyne said of Montero's accomplishment.

Montero credited his success to the leadership of his NCOs, who returned the compliment.

"He's outstanding," said Sgt. 1st Class Andrew Lee, Montero's platoon sergeant.

Montero is continuing to excel — he has completed Airborne School, and had to be pulled from training at Sniper School to attend the post ceremony.

He was presented with a certificate of achievement by the garrison commander.

Also honored was Maxie Gordon, whose service to the Army as a soldier and as a civilian add up to more than 45 years.

"I like it when someone else has served the Army for longer than I have," Le Moyne said.

Gordon, a truck driver at Martin Army Community Hospital who delivers medical supplies to the post's troop medical clinics, retired from active duty as a first sergeant.

As a soldier, Gordon served four tours in Korea, as well as serving in Holland and Panama.

"That was a really good assignment," Gordon said. "They were all good assignments. I just enjoyed the whole thing."

SFC Board

The Department of the Army sergeant first class selection board will convene May 30 to consider soldiers for promotion.

The zone of consideration for the board is all staff sergeants with a date of rank of June 30, 1999 with a basic active service date between May 30, 1982 and May 30, 1995. Soldiers who meet this eligibility criteria must have a current photo on file.

Those who meet the eligilibity criteria must review their personnel records and authenticate their personnel qualification record.

Contact your personnel sergeant or call the Adjutant General Personel Services and Readiness Division at 545-8861 for an appointment.

Heritage display

The Equal Opportunity Office is looking for anyone who may have items relating to Asian Pacific Heritage for our display in Infantry Hall. This includes books, posters and crafts.

The display is from May 18 through June 1.

Anyone who can help should contact the Post EO Office at 545-6665 or 545-3198.

SJA closures

The Legal Assistance Office and the Claims Office of the Staff Judge Advocate will be closed every Thursday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. for mandatory Sergeant's Time training.

Also, the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate will be closing at 11:30 a.m. May 11 for Law Day Activities.

OCS board

The Officer Candidate School board schedule for 2001 is as follows: Board Three: Applications are due no later than April 27 for the May 1 local board; Board Four: Applications are due no later than July 27 for the Aug. 1 local board.

All applications will be submitted to Sgt. Angela Gonzalez in Soldiers Plaza, Building 2619. For more information, call 545-3341 or 545-4702 or refer to the Fort Benning website.

Survey available

The Infantry School Course Feedback Survey is now available on the Fort Benning web site.

Please complete this survey, six months after your graduation, and ask your commander or supervisor to participate as well.

All responses will be confidential.

The school's commanders, staff members, and instructors rely on your professional opinion of its effectiveness in producing graduates whose technical, tactical, and leadership skills and physical abilities meet the needs of the 21st century land warrior.

Army Learning Center

The Army Learning Center has relocated from the Donovan Library to Infantry Hall's Room 32A.

The hours of operation are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday and noon to 10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Reunion

The Army's renowned First Infantry Division will conduct its 83rd annual reunion in Nashville, Tenn. from Aug. 17-21.

More than 1,000 veterans of the Big Red One and their guests are expected to attend the reunion, which will feature a memorial service to remember the nearly 13,000 First Infantry Division soldiers who have given their lives in the service of their country.

For more information, write Society of the First Infantry Division, 1933 Morris Road, Blue Bell, PA 19422, call (888) 324-4733 or e-mail Soc1ID@aol.com.

Postponement

The Department of Defense will postpone the effective date of the Military Thrift Savings Plan by 180 days, making the sixty-day open season start Oct. 9 and TSP deductions will start Jan. 2002.

Moves contractor

Effective now, outbound moves of personal property and household goods will be done through a Full Service Move Project Move Manager contractor, The PASHA Group.

The PASHA Group is located in Building 280, Transportation Office, Transportation Lane. For more information on outbound moves, call 545-4900.

wounded.

Though dozens of Allied divisions occupied Europe in the early part of 1945, the 94th fought for nearly four months on this 450-mile front all by itself and distinguished itself as the first to "reach the unreachable Rhine," thereby enabling the American forces to capture Ludwigshafen, a city critical to the success of the Allied mission.

Charles W. Donovan was a 25-year-old captain and the commanding officer of I Company when his battalion crossed the Saar and encountered heavy mortar fire. Donovan's unit was recommended for a presidential citation in 1945 and awarded the Presidential Unit Citation just two years ago.

The monument, like the citation, was a long time coming, Donovan said.

"This is long overdue," the 30-year veteran said, as he and his family gathered around the triangular-shaped granite monument, its design derived from the fact the division received its "baptism of fire" in the Saar-Moselle Triangle. "It feels great to be here. The monument is just right, and looking at it I can say 'That's where I was.' This is a big thing today."

Col. Joe Torres, Fort Benning's garrison commander, echoed Donovan's sentiment.

"This is a great day for Fort Benning, a truly special occasion. These men secured our future and our freedom, so we can be here today," Torres said, in his welcoming remarks at the ceremony. "They are the embodiment of America itself. They lived up to the most important duty, protecting and securing our freedoms. This is for them, the valiant men who gave the ultimate sacrifice and those who are here today. We are a nation grateful for everything you've done."

Torres lauded the division for capturing more than 17,000 prisoners and cited the awards presented to the men of the 94th, including a Medal of Honor, 20 Distinguished Service Crosses, three Legions of Merit, 339 Silver Stars and 2,500 Bronze Stars.

"This is truly America's greatest generation, our role models, who've passed along a rich heritage to this nation," Torres said.

Don Mulry, historian for the 94th Infantry Division Association, shared the division's biography, from its activation Sept. 15, 1942, at Fort Custer, Mich., to its deactivation in 1946 and its subsequent reactivation as an Organized Reserve Corps command, the predecessor to today's U.S. Army Reserve.

In 1967, the 94th became the 94th Army Reserve Command and charged with the command of all New England Army Reserve units until 1996, when it was again restructured as the 94th Regional Support Command with headquarters at Fort Devins, Mass.

The 94th RSC continues to support UN peacekeeping forces in Bosnia.

Two of the command's units are currently serving in the Balkans.

Parrish hires the hourly employees for 12 restaurants in the southeast.

"I figured (this job) would be a breeze because I was used to getting people to work for nothing and Waffle House pays," she said. "It was a perfect match.

"But it was my experience as a volunteer that led to these jobs."

Parrish worked for then Maj. Gen. Norman Schwartzkopf and was responsible for developing the Fort Stewart program that became the Army benchmark.

"Volunteers became an integral part of the work force and made a significant difference in the quality of life for the soldiers and their families."

The garrison commander agreed with Parrish when he told the audience their contributions improved Fort Benning's quality of life.

"You ungrudgingly planned, coordinated and executed tasks that made our community a better place to work, train and play," Col. Joe Torres said. "I look to you as heroes, every day you go beyond what is expected, you epitomize everything that is good, you serve as our role models and mentors. Thank you for making our community a better place to live."

competition can expect not only the satisfaction of knowing they are the best in their field, but also Army Commendation Medals and a print from one of the most notable Civil War painters, said Maples.

"The competition is designed to see who is the best EOD team in the Army," said Staff Sgt. Jody George, team leader, 722nd Ordnance Company (EOD). "It gives you something to do to distinguish yourself and it's something to show we're doing the Army good."

George and his teammate, Sgt. Adam Green, said they agree this is one of the hardest competitions they've participated in since coming into the military.

They also plan to win the title of EOD Team of the Year.

"We didn't come here to compete," said George. "We came to win."

Maples said his advice to EOD technicians wanting to compete in the competition in years to come would be to "Set an attainable goal. Train for it, and never lose sight of what your goal is."

Are you interested in becoming an explosive ordnance disposal technician?

Maples said EOD is always hiring.

"We're actively recruiting specialists and below that want a change of pace and focus; that want to do a demanding and sometimes dangerous job," Maples said.

"Male or female, it doesn't matter."

13th CSB welcomes new commander

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers of the 13th Combat Support Battalion said goodbye to Lt. Col. Tony Swain as he relinquished command of the unit to Lt. Col. Scott Fabozzi during a change of command ceremony on York Field April 18.

Swain, who has been commander of the 13th CSB for two years, is headed to the Senior Service College in Washington, D.C. He is married to the former Inell Cleveland from Centerville, Ala., and has two sons, Stephen and Marcus.

Fabozzi, a native of Savannah, was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the Ordnance Corps through the ROTC program at North Georgia College. He graduated in 1983, earning a Bachelor's Degree in business administration.

In 1994, he earned a Masters of Science Degree in Management from the Florida Institute of Technology. His military education includes the Ordnance Basic and Advanced courses and the Army Command and General College.

His early assignments include platoon leader and shop officer for A Company, 55th Maintenance Battalion, 56th Field Artillery Command (Pershing) in the Federal Republic of Germany; commander for C Company and then battalion operations officer for 782nd Maintenance Battalion, 82nd Division Support Command, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., and Dhahran, Saudi Arabia during Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm; and then in the Republic of Korea as deputy G4 for the 2nd Infantry Division.

While assigned to the 101st Division Support Command, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault) at Fort Campbell, Ky., he was the support operations officer and executive officer, 626th Forward Support Battalion, later serving as 101st DISCOM deputy commander and most recently as the 101st DISCOM chief of Division Management Material Center.

His awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal (with two oak leaf clusters), Army Commendation Medal (with three oak leaf clusters), Army Achievement Medal, South West Asia and Kuwait Liberation Medals, Master Parachutist Badge and Air Assault Badge.

He is married to the former Sarah Mason of Madison, Ga., and they have two sons, David, 14, and Benjamin, 11.

Chaplain introduces soldiers to beach, enjoyment

Trip provides time for reflection

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

"A lot of soldiers, on the weekend, they get in front of their TV or their Nintendo," said Chaplain (Capt.) Mickey Jett, 29th Infantry Regiment. "I don't think a lot of people realize that's just as stressful as working a 12-hour day, and not getting out and enjoying the outdoors."

So Jett came up with a hands-on solution to the problem of isolated soldiers who spend their leisure time locked away indoors and saturated with passive media: he took them to the beach.

"We showed them we could have fun without drinking alcohol," Jett said.

The 29th's chaplain made much more of the trip than that, though, using the three-day "Duty Days with God" event to teach 24 of the regiment's single soldiers about Army values and team building; NCOs traveling to Fort Walton Beach, Fla., with the group volunteered to teach classes on those subjects.

"Enjoy yourself," Jett told participants, over the long weekend, "but also reflect on the inner-self and on God."

The setting was ideal for that very purpose.

"You find, when you look out at the ocean, there are no boundaries," Jett said. "It's all open space, and the mind can just deal with focusing on the self."

For the soldiers who went, the trip represented both a good learning opportunity and a great deal.

The regiment provided the bus that got them to the Air Force recreational facility, and the Chaplain's fund covered most of the other costs.

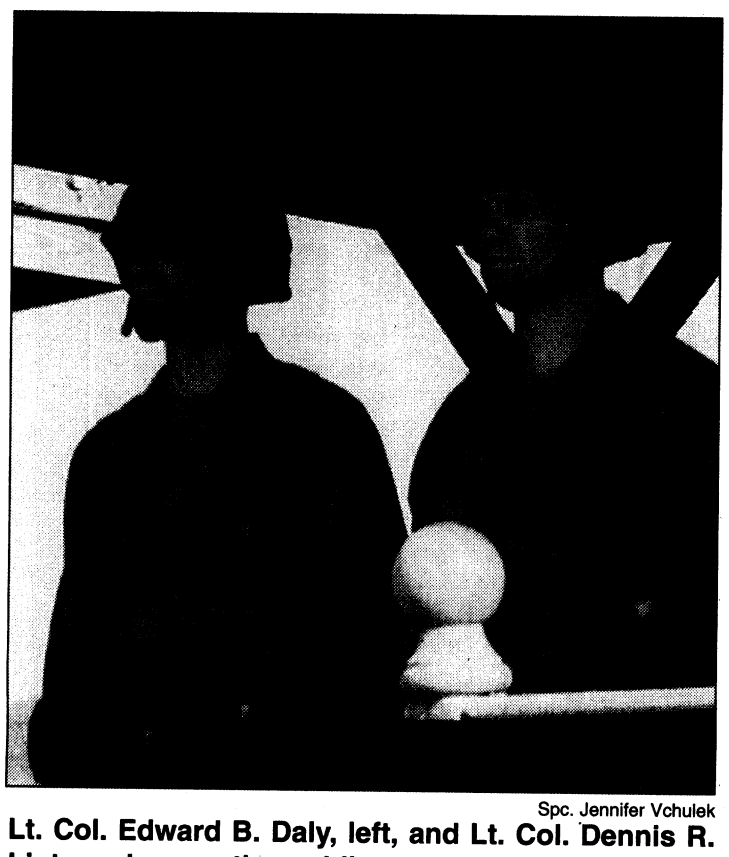
Soldiers donated $15 to help with the expense. The soldiers agreed that the trip was worth it.

"The facilities were more than accommodating," said Sgt. 1st Class Patricia Mackey.

The trip was meant to lead to better work, back on post, Jett said.

"When they get back here — I tell commanders this — your soldiers are going to be energized and ready to get back to work," Jett said.

Sgt. Alfredo Velez agreed.



"I felt my inner chi align," Velez said. "It was a chance to relax, lay back, and release some stress," he said. "I got my money's worth."

Jett is already planning for the next trip, a long weekend in Destin, Fla., for married soldiers and their spouses.

That trip will focus on building strong family connections, Jett said.

Other travel events will follow — all with the serious purpose of improving the well-being of the regiment's soldiers.

"Every month, or at least every quarter, we have something," the chaplain said. "The 29th is very interested in building up the spiritual individual."

The former strategic planner and executive officer in the Strategy and Policy Deputy Directorate on the Joint Chief of Staff, Pentagon, Washington, D.C., took command of the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Wednesday morning on Pomeroy Field.

Lt. Col. Dennis R. Linton succeeds Lt. Col. Edward B. Daly, who will be working in the Directorate of Training here.

During the ceremony, Col. Nolen V. Bivens, Basic Combat Training Brigade commander, took the opportunity to highlight some of Daly's accomplishments here.

"I am honored to be a part in the ceremony," said Bivens. "Today, we are celebrating an American moment. Daly has taken this battalion and made it from scratch, but he didn't stop there. He made it the best there is."

In welcoming Linton to Fort Benning, Bivens said the new commander is "superbly qualified to take on the reins of this battalion. We warmly welcome you and your family."

Linton was assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, where he served as the battalion adjutant, rifle company commander and rifle platoon leader.

Later, he moved on to Fort Lewis, Wash., where he held the reins of the operations officer and then the executive officer of the 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry Regiment (Mechanized).

Linton's awards include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Army Meritorious Service Medal, fourth oak leaf cluster, Army Commendation Medal, one oak leaf cluster, Joint Service Achievement Medal, and the Army Achievement Medal, fourth oak leaf cluster.

He brings with him wife, Michele, and their four children, John, Molly, Joshua and Jackson.

Best Ranger Competition starts today

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Nearly 90 soldiers will gather at Fort Benning to compete in what has been called the most difficult 60 hours, outside of combat, that any soldier will face.

It is the 19th annual David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition.

A grueling, three-day race in which two-man ranger teams from throughout the Army crawl, climb, shoot and run in hopes of earning the title of Best Ranger.

The rangers who compete epitomize what the rangers are made of, said Master Sgt. Chris Schott, Ranger Training Brigade's public affairs NCOIC.

"To become the best ranger it takes a lot of heart and perseverance," he said. "While we watch these guys display it throughout the three days, in essence, this is what being a ranger is all about. It's about when the times are tough, the tough get going."

And only the toughest can survive the test. Last year 44 teams started — only 17 finished.

It was a tremendous gut check, competitors said.

This year's competition began today at 5 a.m. with a ranger physical fitness test. The test is comprised of the standard push-up and sit-ups the test also includes a run through the Malvesti Obstacle Course and a run with a distance that is unknown to all the competitors.

After the predawn fitness test, the competitors take to the sky where they will jump from a Blackhawk helicopter onto Lee Field in the spot jump.

They are scored on how close they can come to a designated point on the field as well as how fast they can complete the exercise.

The first day of events also includes road marches and weapons qualifications.

Day one ends with a road march, and day two begins with night ranger stakes, which consists of tasks rangers could face in combat.

In past competitions, those tasks have varied from knot tying to a Prusik climb, assembling different weapons to calling in artillery. The competitors are required to complete all the tasks to standard.

They will also run through the bayonet assault course, perform day ranger stakes and then participate in a night land navigation course under the weight of a 60-pound ruck sack.

The third day of competition begins at Camp Darby where, those still in the running for the best ranger title, will face the Darby Queen Obstacle Course. Then they hit Victory Pond in the water confidence test, the helocast and a final buddy run.

Schott said although the tasks by themselves are accomplishable, add the 60 continuous hours or the race with no programmed sleep, a 60-pound rucksack, a rifle, food deprivation and only the strong will make it to the end.

In the end there will be only one best ranger team. Last year, the honor went to 2nd Lts. Rick Ahern and Marc Messerschmitt.

After competing for five years Ahern won the Best Ranger title.

"It took a few days for the reality of it to really sink in," Ahern said, now a first lieutenant assigned to 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment on Sand Hill. "That was my fifth year in a row and it seemed so unattainable because I went year after year. Each time it ended I was ready for it to start again."

For Messerschmitt, his victory was a huge sense of accomplishment.

"It was my third time competing," said Messerschmitt now a first lieutenant with 3rd Bn, 75th Ranger Regt. "That time I laid all cards on the table. It was such a sense of relief when we won.

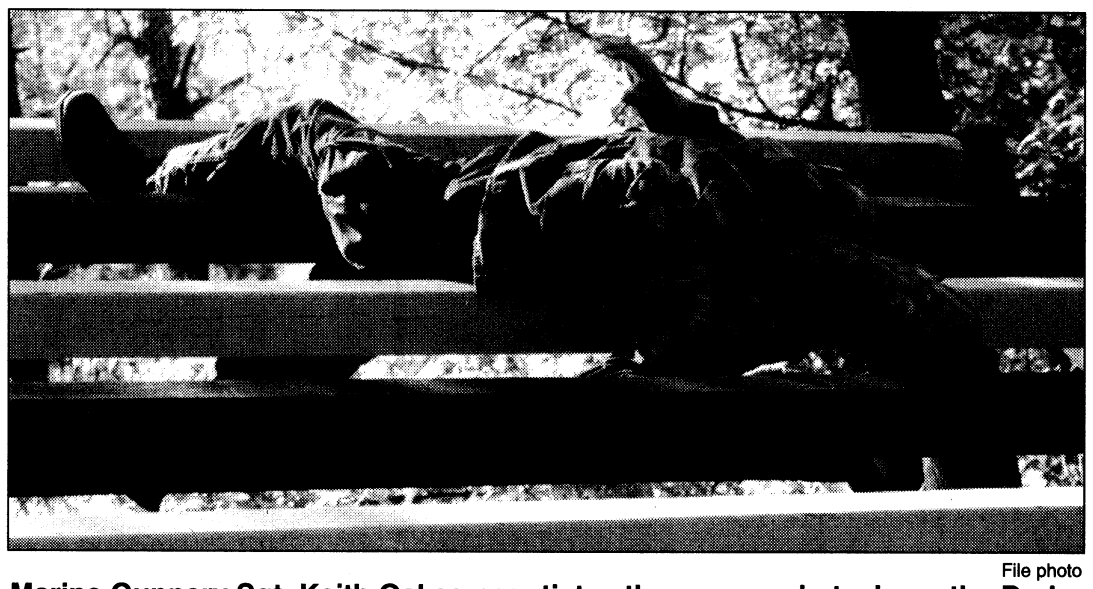
"It was the closest competition there has been and the slimmest margin of victory."

So close was the competition, that only 26 points separated first and second place.

Considering more than 2000 points can be earned, Messerschmitt said the winner was still up in the air as the last event began.

"We won the Prusik climb, the land navigation course and the Darby Queen," he said. "After that, I thought we would win but never relaxed until we were about a mile from the finish."

Although neither are competing this year, Ahern is playing a vital role for two teams in this year's competition — their coach.



"They've got as good of a shot as anyone else," he said.

"This year I'm going to be on the side eating hot dogs and drinking pop just like I've seen people do, but I will still wish I was out there."

He said being a best ranger is a tremendous honor, but with that honor comes a tremendous burden.

"Now instead of showing my best on a three-day event I have to live it," Ahern said. "At any time time the battalion commander may say 'Ahern I need you to take a PT test.' If I score anything below a 300 people may say 'He was a best ranger?'

"I have to live up to it every day," he said. "There is no room for error, and no way I can slack off for a month at a time. But it is a responsibility I carry with pride."

Korea ... the forgotten war

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A firm stance by U.N. forces in Korea stopped a Chinese and North Korean spring offensive, inflicting massive losses, 50 years ago this week.

The defensive action kept Seoul from falling into communist hands for a third time since the war began.

April 26, 1951 — Maj. Gen. Frank Milburn orders I Corps to withdraw from line Delta as the North Korean Peoples Army I Corps and XIX Army Group hit the Republic of Korea 1st Division's 11th Infantry Regiment on the west end of the line, and 3rd Infantry Division's 65th Infantry Regiment.

Milburn's plan is to establish another line between Delta and Golden, the second defense line above Seoul, set by Lt. Gen. Matthew Ridgway April 12. He sets a line centered on Uijongbu but just above the town.

To Lt. Gen. James Van Fleet, Eighth Army commander, there is evidence the enemy offensive is losing its punch. Information gained from captives reveals their commanders have no clear objectives and are themselves confused. Since the Chinese offensive began April 22, it's estimated that just in the I Corps sector alone, infantry, artillery and air strikes have killed 48,000 Chinese and North Korean Peoples' Army troops. Tha's the equivalent of five divisions.

With I Corps' withdrawal, Van Fleet establishes another defense line. It connects with line Golden in the west, then curves slightly down to just above where the Pukhan River joins the Han. Then it angles sharply northeast to the coast above Yangyang.

Van Fleet does not give a name to the line, so it becomes known as the No Name line.

It's understood that adjustments in the line will be based on the movements of I Corps.

That night, Chinese forces get past two companies of the 25th ID's 27th Infantry Regiment. Regimental reserves stop them after a mile. Then air attacks hit the enemy. A radar-guided bomb wipes out the enemy lead section. A flare, dropped by a plane, illuminates the enemy and GIs on both sides wipe out the rest.

April 28 — Van Fleet tells his corps commanders to "hold firmly" on the No Name line. Although most I Corps units have their backs to the Han River, the general said there would be no withdrawal — unless the units were under attack by overwhelming force, and then only if he ordered it. Van Fleet is determined not to let communists take Seoul for a third time because it "would ruin the spirit of the nation."

About a regiment of North Koreans is spotted gathering around Haengju, a village above the Kimpo airfield. Two artillery battalions and eight-inch shells from the cruiser Toledo off the coast at Inchon raise havoc among the enemy group before survivors escape.

The ROK 1st Division is in position on line Golden early in the day. Just before midnight, the NKPA 8th Division, along with about a regiment of Chinese, attack. But well-placed artillery and tanks, along with the Toledo, break up the attack before the Reds can get past the outposts. As day breaks, an ROK tank and infantry force chases after the retreating enemy for about two miles. Along the way, the troops see between 900 and 1,000 dead enemy soldiers.

April 29 — Heavy artillery and air attacks hit a large enemy force reported by aerial observers forming in front of the 25th ID on line Golden. The next day, patrols find an estimated 1,000 enemy bodies.

Van Fleet orders the No Name Line be fortified just like Golden, and patrols go out in search of enemy units. In the I Corps region a ROK 1st Division patrol found the NKPA 8th Division blocking Route 1, otherwise no communist troops in large units were found.

April 30 — The communist offensive is essentially over. Eight Army headquarters lists the number of enemy casualties since April 22 when the enemy attacked as 13,349 enemy killed, and 23,829 estimated wounded along with 246 prisoners. U.N. Command headquarters in Tokyo places the number at between 75,000 and 80,000 enemy killed and wounded.

American casualties from April 22-29 were 314 killed and 1,600 wounded. Both figures are just a little more than half of the casualties among U.S. divisions during the last communist offensive in November.

May 1 — May Day parades are held in Moscow and Peking celebrating communist rule. The Moscow parade features military weapons, including an air show with more than 200 planes. American communists attempt a small May Day parade in New York City and are pelted with eggs and squirted with ink from water pistols, while onlookers yell insults.

May 2 — The Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees release a transcript of the Wake Island conference between President Harry S. Truman and Gen. Douglas MacArthur the previous October, in advance of Senate hearings set to begin the next day. MacArthur will be the first and major figure testifying.

The transcripts show that MacArthur told Truman that there was very little chance the Chinese would intervene in Korea. He had said the biggest force the Reds could get across the Yalu River was 60,000 and the Air Force would "slaughter" them before they could get to Pyongyang. As far as the Russians were concerned, MacArthur told Truman it would take six weeks for them to get a division to Korea.

He also said the fighting in Korea should end by Thanksgiving and he hoped the Eighth Army would be back in Japan by Christmas.

Columbus Riverfest begins today

James Brown to perform Saturday night

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Maybe it's the allure of a southern barbeque, concerts, carnival rides or an arts and crafts festival that attracts thousands of Fort Benning and Columbus families to Riverfest Weekend each year.

This year is no different, with the 32nd annual celebration starting today and concluding Sunday.

The three-day event is Historic Columbus Foundation's largest fundraiser all year.

The Salisbury Fair, Pig Jig and Folklife Village will span alongside the Chattahoochee Riverwalk.

More than 100,000 are expected to attend.

"I can assure you," said Riverfest coordinator Frances Quick, "that this year it's bigger and better."

Riverfest houses some unique opportunities for individuals and families alike — events like Saturday's "CPR for Family and Friends" to help celebrate National CPR Day.

Columbus is one of 100 cities across the nation whose goal it is to train 1,000 people, free to the public.

Two-hour classes will be offered four times during the day at the Trade Center. Graduates will receive free passes to the fair, including a concert by the "Godfather of Soul," James Brown at 9 p.m.

Highlighted events for this weekend include:

• Folk Art Show and Folklife Stage, where 50 folk life vendors will have items on sale and for viewing. Included are paintings, pottery, carvings, sculpture and musical instruments;

• A classic car show on Saturday, where more than 125 entries will be displayed. Included are antique military vehicles and a special WWII MASH unit;

• Military Working Dog Demonstration, presented by the Fort Benning K-9 unit at 4:30 p.m. Saturday;

• Some of the best chefs in the valley will be dishing up their creations at the Backyard Barbeque Challenge Sunday. Teams set up at 9 a.m. and judging starts at 1 p.m. Trophies and cash prizes will be awarded;

• "Skills Alive," a Native American show detailing life before gas ovens and electricity. Tanning, basketry, pottery, gourd crafts, stone tolls and beading will be highlighted;

• Nickelodeon's Game Lab program Saturday. Two 45-minute shows will take place. One lucky child from the audience will have a chance to get "slimed" as part of the event;

• The fourth annual Contact-Riverfest Road Race at 8 a.m. Saturday with a 1-mile run walk, 5K and 10K;

• Court of Champions Barbeque Cookers, where five of the country's best chefs will offer rib tastings at $1 a piece;

• "As the Quilt Unfolds," where more than 85 quilts from the region will be on display.

"If we have great weather, which we are expecting, it will be a great time. There's a quilt show, an arts and crafts show, river cruises, concerts, food, a children's interactive center and more.

"It's bound to be a good time for everyone," said Fran Garner, Pig Jig Coordinator.

For the fourth year, the Pig Jig will be part of the Memphis in May National Barbeque Sanctioned Contest Network.

The public can sample tasty tidbits as well as learn from the best grill-masters in the region. The winner will represent Columbus in World Championship Barbeque Contest in Memphis, Tenn. several weeks later.

"Fort Benning families are invited to come and enjoy the weekend," said Vikki Mancil, Folklife Village coordinator. "It's such a diversified event, there's absolutely something for everyone."

Advance Riverfest Weekend 3-day passes are $17 and can be purchased at the Historic Columbus Foundations and the Columbus Convention and Visitor's Bureau.

Regular daily admission for adults is $8; admission for children ages 6-12 is $2 and children under 6 are admitted free.

On Sunday admission is $5 for ages 12 and older. It's also Wristband Day at the carnival, where $12 buys unlimited rides.

Santa's Castle gets new helper

Volunteers help keep dreams alive

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Santa's Castle chairperson Lori Simmons relinquished her reign to Michelle Ossa this week after providing three years of service to the nonprofit, all-volunteer organization.

Last Christmas season, with the help of hundreds of volunteers, more than 500 families were given gifts. Originally created in 1986 to give toys to children of military parents at Fort Benning, more than 1,100 children receive gifts each year through the post group.

When Simmon's husband Scott deployed to Kuwait upon arrival to Fort Benning in 1998, Lori channeled her energies to helping the volunteer organization. In addition to her medical transcriptionist career, Simmons has worked beside hundreds of volunteers, putting in more than 1,000 hours of work each year.

It's a job she hopes to continue in the civilian sector, when she relocates to Texas this month.

"I like the concept behind this place. We're helping soldiers and their children," Simmons said. "It's very rewarding."

Simmons' and the Fort Benning community has taken the organization through many changes.

Originally housed in Soldier's Plaza, Santa's Castle now sits perched on a hill in the Custer Terrace neighborhood.

Once inside the castle's walls, volunteers and shoppers are greeted with playful holiday decorations and music — all work completed within Simmon's term as chairperson.

Simmons attributes the group's success to all her fellow comrades, volunteers like Maj. Pat Nary.

"Major Nary was home for only a month between deployments a while back," she explained, "and he was up here helping us out every single day. These are the kind of volunteers that make this place what it is."

Michelle Ossa plans to follow Simmon's footsteps as the incoming chairlady.

"I am a big fan of all that Lori's accomplished so far," she said. "I only hope I can follow the same wonderful program. I think it'll be an easy transition."

Ossa took interest in the group weeks ago. Besides teaching first graders at Wilson Elementary School, Ossa also acts as the Enlisted Wives Club president and as an Army Family Team Building instructor.

With a large majority of fundraising events planned for the summer months, Santa's Castle board members have recently begun their 2001 holiday season.

New toys and funds are collected year-round, though the store doesn't officially open until November.

Each shopper is allotted three toys per child, or about $45 worth of new toys. Gifts are bought immediately after the previous holiday season, in addition to restocking presents throughout the year.

Traditionally, an event like 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment's Red Leg golf tourney brings in the dollars that the organization relies on. Since 100 percent of operating costs and toys come from donations, the group depends on coffee groups, individuals and units to provide help.

Donations are accepted year-round to purchase gifts, in addition to specialty items the group may require.

"Right now, we need a fax machine,' Ossa said. "It will cost about $200, but it will help with our communication greatly.'

Jane Carter, the latest advisor, has also surrendered her spot on the castle's board. She will take with her fond memories of achievement, Carter said.

"To see the faces of soldiers when their eyes get as big as saucers after they walk in the building. They're absolutely stunned," Carter said. "Without Fort Benning units, there would be no Santa's Castle. It's the coolest thing because it's Fort Benning helping Fort Benning."

For more information on Santa's Castle, call 685-4422.

The 2001 board members are:
• Chairperson: Michelle Ossa
• Assistant Chair: Tori Woessner
• Advisor: Sharon Torres
• Inventory: Alyssa Dudley
• Treasurer: Laura Cummings
• Secretary: Charlene Miseli

Book review Sunday

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Before Hollywood puts its own spin on retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore's account of the bloody Ia Drang battle, a local church is giving the public a chance to hear first-hand accounts from the men Moore and reporter Joe Galloway immortalized in We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young.

St. Luke United Methodist Church in uptown Columbus will host a book review from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Sunday at the church's fellowship hall.

Among the guests of honor will be several of the soldiers who were present during the first major conflict of the Vietnam War, the battle that inspired the book and a movie starring Mel Gibson, expected to be released late this year.

"This is the right time to do this, what with all the interest in the book and all that's taken place on Fort Benning recently," said the Rev. Kevin Hudson, St. Luke's minister of evangelism, referring to the recent filming of various movie scenes on post.

The public is invited to join retired Col. Ralph Puckett, who will lead the panel, retired Sgt. Majs. Basil Plumley and James Scott, retired Sgt. 1st Class Ernie Savage, retired Master Sgt. Jimmie Jakes and retired Chief Warrant Officer Riccardo Lombardo for an open-forum discussion of the Vietnam War and the battle at Ia Drang, in particular.

The panel will speak from 6:30 until 7:30 p.m., at which time refreshments will be served and the audience will be given the opportunity to express their opinions or ask questions.

There is no charge for the event and nursery service will be available for infants through 4 years old.

For more information, call 327-4343.

'Junkies' get quick fix at postwide yard sale

Semiannual sale offers shoppers bargains galore

Angelica Anderson
Bayonet correspondent

This year, getting rid of dated Tom Clancy novels or old, but dependable lawnmowers, is as easy as scribbling a few letters, eight to be exact, on a poster board.

At this year's spring postwide yard sale the only thing that is needed to sell goods and furniture is a sign with the words yard sale printed on the front.

No license, registration deadlines or permit fees are required to crowd your front lawn with boxes of baby clothes and tables cluttered with costume jewelry.

Sponsored by the Community Life Mayors Association, the May 19 bargain hunt was simplified for convenience and to correct the mistakes of past years, said Jodie Bowers, president of the Community Life Mayors' Association and East Main Post mayor.

"All you have to do is set up in front of your house, put a sign out, and it's open to all the post," Bowers said. "We tried to have permits one year, but people weren't getting them in on time; some people didn't even know that you needed one. It was a complete disaster. We learned from our mistakes."

The sale will begin at 8 a.m. and last until 2 p.m. The mayors ask that residents take down their signs at the end of the day, Bowers said.

There are still certain obvious restrictions that prospective vendors have to observe.

"Anything prohibited by Georgia state law such as firecrackers and firearms are not to be sold on post," said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, operations sergeant for the 71st Military Police Detachment.

The Fort Benning Thrift Store will be accepting donations of yard sale leftovers, between 2 and 4 p.m. at the loading dock behind the store, located on Ingersoll Avenue.

For more information call Jodie Bowers at 685-0030.

Good dental habits pay off

Enthusiasm helps students win contest

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Four students at Wilson Elementary had no idea they would make their classmates so happy by winning the National Children's Dental Health Month Contest. But they did.

Each of the fours winners' classes at Wilson received a pizza party Monday courtesy of Sadie Sabatino, Chris and Nathan Amos and Shana Hawkins.

The children, whose grades range from second to fifth, were the first four winners from the same school in the history of the United Concordia Tricare Dental Program contest.

"When I was told over the intercom that I won, my friends gave me compliments," said 10-year-old Hawkins. "They said I was lucky."

Luck was with three students that day. While only one child from each age category usually wins, this year there was a three-way tie in the 8-12 age range. This allowed all four Wilson students to win. The classes were rewarded because of the overwhelming interest the school showed, said Isaiah Edwards, dental benefits advisor.

Each champion will receive a $100 savings bond. The students were also presented with certificates during a small assembly Monday.

Nathan Amos, 9, was surprised to hear both he and brother Chris, 8, won the contest.

"I didn't even think I entered in time because I handed it to the school nurse on the last day," Amos said. "But I must have gotten it there in time, because I won."

His winning poster depicted his version of WCF or "We Fight Cavities" wrestlers. The characters had such names as "Stone Cold Paste" and "The Rock Floss."

His brother also created a unique idea, by using his father as a model.

"My poster shows a drill sergeant saying, 'Attention! It's time to clean this place up!'" he said. "My dad is a drill sergeant. That's where I got the idea."

> "If we didn't teach about the dentist, a lot of people would have cavities, bad breath and just bad teeth. Brush and you'll have good teeth!"
> Nathan Amos, 9
> Wilson Elementary student

Sabatino's mother, Jennifer, said she tries to reinforce good dental practices at home.

"We make sure she brushes," said Sabatino. "It's rewarding for Sadie to win this, after doing her best."

The contest also encouraged the Amos boys to contemplate what happens if they don't take good care of their teeth.

"If we didn't teach about the dentist, a lot of people would have cavities, bad breath and just bad teeth," Amos said. "Brush and you'll have good teeth!"

The contest has been running annually for years, with hundreds of entries from each region.

School nurse Angela Coy helped the procedure this year by offering to process entries that were completed by Wilson students.

"Most grades participated," Coy said. "We encouraged everyone to enter."

Edwards said he was proud of the school.

"Kudos to the winners and their parents," said Edwards. "The dental program is designed to encourage children to maintain good health. We highlight children and starting the process at a young age."

United Concordia sponsored the contest earlier this year. Children ages 3-7 were required to color in a preprinted comic of a toothbrush and tooth duo, while those ages 8-12 had to create an original poster with an emphasis on good dental habits.

Only family members who are enrolled in the Tricare Family Member Dental Plan or the Tricare Dental program were eligible to participate.

ask the judge

Jane Winand
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Recently I left my car at a mechanic's shop for repairs. The repairs took about a week and when I went to pick up my car, I discovered that it had been broken into and the radio stolen. What can I do about this? Is the shop liable?

A: When you leave your car with a mechanic under these circumstances, you and the mechanic have entered into what is known as a bailment. You have bailed your property to the mechanic, which gives rise to certain duties on the mechanic's part with respect to the care and safekeeping of the vehicle.

Generally speaking, a person in receipt of bailed property is required to use "ordinary care and diligence" in keeping the property safe and secure while in his or her possession. The definition of "ordinary care and diligence" is based on what a reasonable person would do or not do under the same circumstances. Thus, the duty of care will vary depending on the circumstances of each case.

For example, if you, as the mechanic, know from experience that the area in which your shop is located is subject to a lot of vandalism and theft, you probably would take more precautions to protect property than someone located in an area of low crime.

However, bear in mind that no one can absolutely guarantee that theft or vandalism won't occur. All one can do is take reasonable precautions.

Before leaving valuable property in the care of another, it would be wise to inquire about the measures which will be taken to secure the item.

Be aware that some shops will attempt to limit their liability by placing a disclaimer on work orders or other paperwork associated with the repair. You should ask about the shop's policy on covering loss from theft or vandalism.

If you don't like what you hear, consider taking your vehicle elsewhere. If it is possible to remove valuable property from your vehicle before leaving it, do so. If a theft does occur, make sure that a police report is made.

Sometimes, the theft is an inside job, and you will want to know if a police investigation bears this out.

Theft by an employee of the shop is not the "ordinary care and diligence" to which you are entitled.

If you have questions concerning this, you should call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 and 545-3282 and make an appointment to meet with an attorney.

Enrichment class teaches journalism skills

Students try their hands at writing, photography

McBride Elementary School

Editor's note: Marie Hand's third-grade enrichment classes worked together to write the following three articles. They decided on the topics, wrote the articles, interviewed various people and used the digital camera to take photos to compliment the articles. We are very proud of their efforts on a job well done.

Technology at McBride

In one word, technology at McBride this year has been "techknowledgeful." Each class has completed many projects using the wonderful technology at our school.

In the computer lab so far this year, the students have made PowerPoint presentations, researched topics using the internet and used the encyclopedia Encarta, Reading Counts programs, made use of the thinking skills programs that McBride has on-hand, used Microsoft Office programs to do various projects, used scanners and learned to use the digital cameras.

Many McBride students said they enjoy the opportunity to learn about the technology available at the school.

"I love doing Power Point presentations because of the neat animations you can do in that program," said Daniel Chambers.

"The technology is good because we get to work together to create great things. I love McBride," said Mechelle Lockhart

— Alexandra Hatt,
— Steven Campbell,
— Austin Geise,
— Corey Ray

Enrichment Class

In the enrichment class, the students have learned many fascinating things. The classes have focused on the individual states in the United States, Talents Unlimited, Saving the Earth, folk tales, and the skills from Benjamin Bloom.

The students have done many things using the computers at McBride. One of the favorite programs of the enrichment students is the Thinkology program. Students also enjoy surfing the Internet for research information.

The latest project that the students have been involved in is the "Keep Columbus Beautiful" program. The students investigated the littering problems in our area and discussed ways to solve the problems.

They created posters that are displayed around the school to remind people to help keep our environment clean.

Enrichment students said they are glad to do their part in helping the environment.

Alexandra Hatt said, "I loved making and memorizing my Earth Day poem."

Our Woodlands

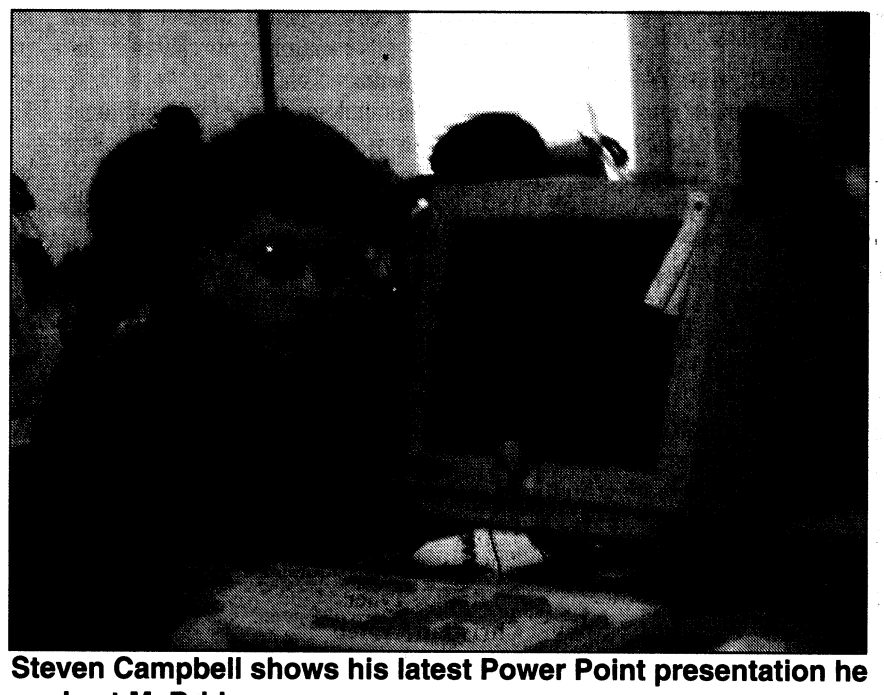
At McBride, the students are so lucky! McBride has an Outdoor Education program that takes place right outside the school in the courtyard area and in the woodlands.

During the many lessons, the students have learned about litter control, different kinds of plants, the stages of plants and trees, decomposition, leaf identification, how to identify animal tracks, tree troubles, habitats and all about the woodland's ecosystem.

The woodlands of McBride are so neat. They're a great place to learn about our environment. The students have kept journals about a tree that they adopted.



Each time the students go to the woodlands, they write down the changes that they notice about their trees.

It's been very interesting to watch the changes during the different seasons of the year.

To make the woodlands even more exciting, the third graders have the opportunity to participate in The Woodlands Club that is organized by Walter Blanks, a teacher at McBride.

The club meets once a week for about 45 minutes after school. Blanks also has a parent volunteer, Staff Sgt. Roger Schneider, to help him with the program.

According to Blanks, a self-proclaimed 'nature buff,' "This program enables the students to gain a wealth of knowledge about the environment. I have a good time with it and I am sure the students do as well."

Steven Campbell shows his latest Power Point presentation he made at McBride.

The students in the club said they learning about nature is interesting.

Travon Sherman said, "I think it is fun because we get to see lots of animals and bugs."

Students design woodlands T-shirt

Carla Jackson

McBride PTO

Once again the McBride Parent-Teacher Organization sponsored their annual "Design a T-shirt" contest.

Each child was given an entry form and asked to design a shirt that included the theme "Wonderful Woodlands of McBride."

The students seemed very eager to participate because they each wanted to be the designer for the school shirts.

A committee of faculty members chose two entries from each class to be presented to the school as possible choices for the design. Students, parents and teachers voted on the designs chosen by the committee.

With the help of Jean Batey, the voting process was made a little easier this year. She scanned all of the entries and put them on the ballots.

The students were able to view the choices by watching a PowerPoint presentation created by Batey and then cast their votes on the special made ballots. For the voters not using the lab, a voting board with all the entries attached traveled from room to room, as well as in the lobby for all to use as they cast their votes.

After a week of voting, McBride had a winner — second-grader Kiana Vives. However, her drawing did not include a slogan so a second winner was added this year to complete the contest.

Ariel Tucker, a third-grader, had the perfect slogan to go along with Kiana's drawing of the woodlands. Her slogan simply says "Come Take a Walk in McBride's Wonderful Woodlands." By combining the two students' ideas, a wonderful T-shirt was created for McBride.

Like last year, the PTO wanted to make sure that each child received a free shirt. This meant once again contacting local businesses for donations.

After many calls and a fundraiser that involved selling candles, the money for the shirts was raised. All of the students were very excited to receive their shirts and can be seen wearing them proudly around Fort Benning.

Proper planning key to sound investing

A little money plus time equals lots of money

Spc. William A. Graves
Fort Benning Public Affairs Office

This is the first story of a seven-part series which takes a look at the basics of investing.

Brokers, insurance agents and financial planners have used one line for decades to sell investments.

People don't plan to fail. They fail to plan.

However, soldiers and civilians in the Fort Benning community have the opportunity to succeed. They just need to learn the basics and follow simple steps, said Capt. Jason Dickinson, Basic Combat Training Brigade, who has studied the financial services field for over five years.

A soldier should invest for the future such as for college money, cars, or long-term goals.

"If you start before you have money you'll never miss it," Dickinson suggested. "If a soldier begins saving 10 percent of his monthly income (dollar cost averaging it into a mutual fund, for instance, which is covered later in the series) with his or her first paycheck, he grows accustomed to living off the 90 percent left, which means he never learns to spend more than he has."

Each time soldiers get a pay increase, they could split the increase with their financial plans, he said. With a $40 pay increase, he or she could give $15 more to mutual fund and have $25 to spend in the short term.

A lack of education for what is available, which leads to the "it takes money to make money" misconception, is one reason why soldiers do not invest, Dickinson said.

As the old adage goes, "Give a man a fish, and he eats for a day, but teach a man to fish, and he eats for a lifetime," he said. "The military has provided the discipline and personal courage that most new investors lack, soldiers just have to use it."

"A little bit of money plus time equals a lot of money," he added.

Leaders can fail to plan for financial security just as easily as junior enlisted soldiers, he said. For these individuals, it may be advantageous to follow the Troop Leading Procedures they learn in their leadership classes.

- Step one: Receive the mission. Start today.
- Step two: Issue warning order. Develop a mission to make financial plan.
- Step three: Make a tentative plan. Assess budget.
- Step four: Start Movement. Begin putting a portion of money away, in accordance with one's budget assessment, immediately into something temporary like a savings account or money market fund (covered next week).
- Step five: Conduct a reconnaissance. Research savings vehicles and investment vehicles.
- Step six: Complete the plan. Sit down with a professional and assess budget and current savings, and move forward.
- Step seven: Issue operation order. Get locked into some long and intermediate term investments and stick to them.
- Step eight: Supervise the plan. Watch and manage the growth and risk of investments.

There are four reasons for saving or investing money, according to the Soldiers Magazine's Winter 2001 Hot Topics: emergencies, reserve periodic expenses, major purchases and retirement.

The supplement gives an example of why it is beneficial for one to start saving early.

"One person saves $2,000 a year at a 12 percent interest rate from age 22 to 27 then stops. Another person saves $2,000 a year at the same interest rate from age 28 to 65. At age 65, the first person has accumulated $1,348,440 and the second person has accumulated $1,366,020."

"We have to stop thinking about what we want today and start thinking about what we want for tomorrow," said Mildred S. Quinones, manager of the Consumer Affairs and Financial Assistance Program at Soldiers and Family Support Center at Fort Belvoir, Va., in the supplement.

She encouraged soldiers and family members to take advantage of the free financial assistance program at their duty stations.

"Budgeting money can be challenging regardless of income, deployments, growing families and the loss of spouses' income upon changes of station," said Maj. Gen. L.D. Gottardi, chief of public affairs, in the supplement.

However, he said leaders are hard at work aiming to help them obtain economic stability through its Army Well-Being Program, a program in which leaders are asking Congress for higher pay and benefits.

Regardless of the possibilities of higher salaries in the military, investors need to remember to establish a budget first, said Frank McCanham, Chartered Life Underwriter and Chartered Financial Consultant at Financial and Asset Management in Columbus.

A sound strategy that helps a budget work is staying out of short term debt, such as in credit cards, he added.

"When one is paying 20 percent interest, extricating oneself out of debt is difficult," McCanham said. "You end up paying and paying and paying."

"Delayed gratification" while one establishes a budget and an emergency fund can only help in the long run, he said.

Emergency funds help an investor many ways, McCanham said. For instance, if a child gets sick and has to travel to another hospital for treatment, one has to have money for lodging, food and other necessities.

Another example is when a parent dies.

"You can't always get a hop," McCanham said. "Depending how loaded they are, airlines may not give much of a break."

Chris Stallman, a financial planner who writes for www.teenanalyst.com, said there are five tips to successful investing.

- Think long term. "So many people begin investing with the mind-set that they will become instant millionaires. The reality is that the odds of this happening are pretty slim."
- Don't chase the trends. "Just because a stock or industry was "hot," it doesn't mean that it will continue to be. After all, no trend lasts forever."
- Reinvest, reinvest, reinvest. "(Reinvesting dividends and capital gains) speeds up the process of compounding (the idea of earning money on what one has already earned)."
- Keep focused on goals. "I know someone who received a cash gift that he invested with the intention to save for college. He quickly doubled his money and decided to take the money out of the account and spend it. He had totally lost sight of his original goal."
- If it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. "Although the idea of it (earning 500 percent in a year) sounds promising, be wary of what you get yourself into. There are usually catches to these kinds of things."

Stallman said investors who remember these basic guidelines will have a successful plan.

Advisors who can help soldiers form a solid plan may be hard to find, Dickinson said.

"Find a good professional you can trust who will give you the same service for $100 per month as they would $10,000 per month," he said.

"If you talk to someone and you don't have a good feeling about his honesty, use someone else — you have to be very close and personal with your financial advisor," he said.

While dealing with one's selected choice of company, one should remember the correlation between risk and reward.

"Bottom line, if you are under age 40, you should invest aggressively because time is on your side," Dickinson said. "After age 40 you should consider diminishing risk with return — meaning, begin to tone it down so that you don't loose the farm in one downward swoop of the market."

Mutual funds, for instance, are beneficial for this due to their inherent diversification, he said.

Once a plan is in place, soldiers should insure they have insurance on their investments such as an emergency cash reserve and life insurance, Dickinson said.

Upcoming stories feature experts in their respective fields and include:

- Certificates of deposit, savings, and money market funds
- Real estate
- Stocks and bonds
- Mutual funds
- Retirement accounts
- Life insurance

Soldiers and community members can direct questions about the above information, or any other topic covered in this series, to Ann Pratcher, manager, Financial Readiness Program, at 545-5485. They can also visit Soldiers' Plaza, Building 2633.

A CLOSER LOOK

One way to invest is to follow the Troop Leading Procedures:

Financial Readiness Program to offer free seminar

Class to help soldiers buy cars correctly

ACS Financial Readiness Program

Mother's Day is approaching, and that traditionally brings people out to the car lot.

No one understands the reasoning behind it, but a lot of people seem to buy vehicles during Mother's Day weekend.

If you're one of the many people shopping for a vehicle this Mother's Day, or in the near future, the Army Community Service Financial Readiness Program has a seminar to help you get the best deals possible.

Yes, that's deals, because there are several separate deals involved in the purchase of a vehicle.

The car buying seminar, "How to Buy a Car Without Being Taken for a Ride," is scheduled for May 8 at 6:30 p.m. in the Family Unit Network Center, Building 359.

Reservations are required and can be made by calling the Financial Readiness Program at 545-5485. The reservation deadline is May 4.

The seminar will help participants identify their vehicle needs and what they can afford. It will identify all the players in the various deals and identify the different deals.

Warranties and "lemon laws" also raise many questions. How to shop for a vehicle and for financing will be addressed, as will determining what you should be willing to pay for the car.

How does your insurer figure into your car-buying decision? Come find out at the ACS car buying seminar.

To reserve your space and handouts, or to ask questions, call the Army Community Service Financial Readiness Program at 545-5485 or visit Building 2633 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Do right thing by God, country, family

Chaplain (Maj.) Mickey Jett
29th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Exodus 32:24 — "And I said to them, 'Whoever has any gold, let them break it off.' So they gave it to me, and I cast it into the fire, and this calf came out."

Aaron was frightened at what he had done. He was afraid of the act itself, and how Moses would respond, so he tried to persuade Moses that it was not he that had done the idol making, instead, he lays the blame on the furnace.

It sounds like he is saying a miracle occurred: "Out came this calf," and I had nothing to do with it. We have all been there.

The people had cast off all restraint. They were running wild. The Expositor Commentary says that the word for "out of control" and "wild" is the same word used in Proverbs 29:18, "Where there is no revelation (message from the Word of God) the people cast off all moral restraints (become ungovernable)."

Another way to say that is when people stop doing the right thing, they might just do anything. We are having problems with that in society today.

Doing the right thing means that we place certain restraints on others and ourselves.

We can't just allow anything to go and be a prepared and a ready-to-go-to-war-Army.

Doing the right thing means you do it as an act of service to God and country. Doing the right thing means doing it when no one is looking. It means going the extra mile with one of our soldiers when they need it.

I had an outstanding NCO tell me one time, "Chaplain, it is easier to chapter a soldier out of the Army, than to take time with him or her and make them the soldier they want to be." No matter what rank, what status, what role or function we serve in, we do the right thing because God and our nation demand it.

Our day, our age we live in, our society is the furnace around us. Its fire can set and fix and fasten what the man or woman puts into it. But, it cannot create character.

Every day your character is on the line. Doing what is right even when Moses is not looking develops character. It also means doing what is right when others are looking.

Today, some educators tell us our environment is responsible for how we turn out. I totally disagree with that. My environment exposes me to both the good and the evil in this world, but it never made me lie, steal, cheat or to do evil to my fellow classmates. That is my decision, just like it was Aaron's when confronted by Moses. Aaron failed to rise above the evil around him, and when confronted by Moses, he again exposes the weakness of his character. It lacked personal development.

You and I are challenged daily to rise above the evil around us. With help from God and participating in personal spiritual development we can do that. Isn't that what made our country?

I submit that our country's greatness is founded in men and women who wanted to be great for God. They were men and women of character.

I think the new cold war of today is a crisis of this spiritual development or character.

One cannot develop character without working on it. Unless a garden is tilled and worked, weeds will grow.

Doing what is right has its foundation in a person's character, which has its basis in the spirit of a man and woman.

Even though we are inundated with Hollywood's value system, we can rise above the common and be men and women who practice honesty and integrity, duty and honor, loyalty and personal courage. We can take ownership of our character.

So, here I am just reminding all of us that when it comes time to do the right thing, do it. Do it for God, your country and your family. It will not only make a difference in your character, but will reveal your character.

Emotional health stems from parents

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Parents help their children experience and express healthy emotions and happiness in the home. Stress in the home can adversely affect the emotional and physical health of children.

The best thing a father and mother can do for their children is to love each other as husband and wife. When arguing, disrespect and hostility occur between parents, children grow up insecure, afraid and anxious.

When love is expressed between parents, it is contagious to all around them. Loving parents make children feel secure.

Loving parents provide positive role models for children to follow. Children learn how to handle conflict, anger, fear or stress by observing the behavior of their parents.

Parents, with strong moral values and a vital relationship with God, model to their children the virtues of self-sacrificial love, humility, mercy, forgiveness and grace. As a result, they can help their children properly handle the emotions of anger, fear, worry, shame and guilt.

Simple household rules, along with appropriate and consistent discipline, help to create a stable and orderly home life. Loving discipline fosters respect and caring.

Providing nutritious and well-balanced meals at regular times and healthy snacks between meals helps children stay healthy and feel good about themselves.

Good personal hygiene and clean clothes promote healthy self-esteem and self-confidence.

Many children act out and become irritable when they are tired.

Adequate rest allows children to wake up feeling refreshed and happy.

Exercise improves coordination and lets children feel confident about themselves and their abilities.

Additional help is available to assist you in fostering your child's emotional health. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, located at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com for more information.

Army wins JMAC, retains 'The Bomb'

Soldiers pass Navy in final events for win

Spc. Mark Watson

More than 800 officer candidates and trainees from the Army, Air Force and Navy competed in the Joint Military Athletic Competition Saturday on Eubanks Field. In the end, the Army walked away with it's sixth victory.

From physical fitness tests to a volleyball game, from a three-mile run to a tug-of-war, the soon-to-be officers pushed, pulled, ran and jumped in attempt to earn "The Bomb," a 25-pound inert bomb the winning team gets to paint to their liking.

The contest is a series of friendly but competitive sports sponsored twice a year by the different services.

The Army got off to a rough start. Despite a 14:41 three-mile run time from James Seefeldt, after the three-mile run, super physical fitness test and the male and female fitness tests the Navy led the Army and Air Force, 10-7.

However, by emerging victorious in the extremely close volleyball matches the Army closed within a one-point gap of the Navy.

After winning the 4X400 meter relay race and the litter carry, the Army took the lead and only needed second place to win the The Bomb.

The Army tugged the Navy over the line in their first bout. The Air Force, however, had no trouble pulling the Army across.

As the Army and Navy faced each other for the second time, the Navy struggled to keep traction. The Army strained and pulled the Navy over for second place and the overall win in JMAC.

"It is a good, friendly competition," Officer Candidate Nicole Christenson said. "It is nice to come out and talk to people from the other services and see what it is like for them."

Fellow teammember Tod Masilon, said the competition was a welcome break from their day-to-day routine.

"This really is a good break," Masilon said. "Normally we would be studying or training today. We've heard about JMAC since Day 1. We've been looking forward to this for a long time."

Air Force officer trainees said the competition helped recharge their spirits.

"I am really enjoying this," Air Force OT Deborah Morillo said. "Preparing for this has been a lot of hard work, but this also helped us relax. Now we are fresh to go back to training."

The next JMAC will be this fall at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.

RedStixx don camo for military appreciation night

Local team gives tickets to soldiers

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Columbus' baseball team, the RedStixx, has found a way to show its appreciation for the military.

This season, during the RedStixx Military Appreciation Day games, which are slotted throughout the year, teammembers will be wearing their thanks.

Camouflaged jerseys with the Follow Me patch, an Airborne tab and a Ranger tab, sewn to regulation on the sleeves, were chosen by the vice president and general manager, Mike Edwards.

"When I got here, I wanted to do everything to increase the relationship with Fort Benning," Edwards said. "I wanted to do something from a RedStixx viewpoint for the military."

The RedStixx went through the Department of the Army, via Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, for approving the wear of the patches, Edwards said.

> "I think it's fantastic that they're showing the civilian communities appreciation for the service that we in the military do"
> Col. Joe Torres
> Garrison commander

"I think it's fantastic that they're showing the civilian communities appreciation for the service that we in the military do," Torres said. "This is the way the RedStixx give us feedback.

"This is a thanks from them to us."

Many of the players may not be happy about the fashion statement they make wearing the camouflage, Edwards said, but his players have a lot of fun entertaining soldiers and their family members while providing good, clean, family fun for the rest of the community.

"I think traditionally, the Columbus baseball team has offered cheap fun and cheap beer," Edwards said. "We want to provide a family-oriented environment."

The RedStixx are scheduled to play eight more Military Appreciation Night games.

Those dates are May 7 and 28, June 17, July 2 and 23, Aug. 6 and 26, and Sept. 2. Upon ending the game Sept. 2, a drawing will be held to give away 30 autographed jerseys, Edwards said.

"It's not about making money," Edwards said. "We're willing to make the sacrifice (and lose revenue from the cost of the jerseys) because we want to give back to the Army and their family members."

He said the RedStixx just want to show their appreciation for the diversity Fort Benning adds to the community.

"I think it's really neat that people go out of their way to say 'We want to show our appreciation this way,'" Torres said. "It's something we shouldn't take for granted."

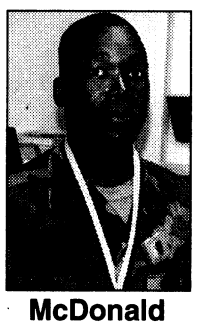
RedStixx' Hank Thoms fires the ball in during Military Appreciation Night.

Soldiers, family members and retiree's wishing to see Military Appreciation Day games free may pick their tickets up at the following locations:



- ITR (inside the PX Mall)
- Officer's Club Cashier's Cage
- Reggie's Beverage Company
- Audie Murphy Fitness Center
- Briant Wells Fitness Center
- Infantry Hall Fitness Center
- Kefurt Fitness Center
- Santiago Fitness Center.

ITB soldier runs in Boston Marathon

Local runner beats more than 12,000

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

To many people, the thought of running a marathon is nearly impossible, but for one Fort Benning soldier, mention running a marathon and his eyes light up.

McDonald

Mention running to Master Sgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr., Infantry Training Brigade's supply NCOIC, and the conversation takes off running.

And why not, after all he participated in the 105th Boston Marathon April 16 and finished 858 out of more than 15,000 racers.

This wasn't his first time running the race. He is a five time veteran of one of the toughest marathon courses in the world. What makes the course so difficult McDonald said, is the hills.

"You can run well on the first half," he said. "You go up small hills and then can gain some of the time back going down, but at mile 16 the course begins to gradually build up to a gigantic hill."

He said the hills just keep coming. Like a giant staircase, the course will climb then flatten off only to gain elevation again.

"When you get to mile 20 you get to the most famous hill," he said. "It is Heartbreak Hill. If you don't have any energy left, you'll never make it. A lot of people don't make it to the top."

He said the course is one that requires a good running plan.

"It is a very strategic course," he said. "It doesn't matter how fast you run other courses, everything has to go right the day you run Boston."

McDonald ran his fifth Boston Marathon in 2:59:39. He said that wasn't bad. Only 19 minutes off his best time, which he ran in 1986.

Although 858th may not sound like it is the best in the world, considering more than 2,000 racers who have run in marathons before, never finished, he said he was pleased with his time.

"The Boston Marathon brings in the best in the world," he said. "The Olympic Gold and Silver Medalists were there. But at the Boston Marathon you don't have to be a Olympian to compete against an Olympian."

Qualifying for next year's race McDonald said he is looking forward to his sixth Boston Marathon.

"I definitely plan on being there," he said. "As long as I am healthy and able to run, I'll be there."

sports briefs

Kelley Hill Day — There will be a Kelley Hill day from 8:45 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

The day includes a Iron Hammer Soldier's Triathlon for 3rd Brigade soldiers only, and a 1K fun run, 5K and 10K for everyone. Medal of Honor recipient retired Col. Ola L. Mize will be recognized at 8:30 a.m. during a weight room dedication. The weight room will be named Outpost Harry, after the battle in which Mize earned the award.

Lunch will be $3.20 for soldiers and family members of sergeants and above, and it will be $2.75 for lower ranking soldiers and their family members.

Pistol matches — The first match of the Night Pistol Series will take place at 6 p.m. May 5 at the Rifle and Pistol Club on English Range.

This series of four monthly matches is designed for both new and experienced shooters using stock handguns.

One Glock pistol will be awarded by drawing to a qualified participant. To qualify for the drawing competitors must be registered in all four matches of the series.

Match dates for the series are: May 5, June 2, July 7 and August 4. Entry fee for a new shooter (first match here) is $12. Subsequent matches are $15 preregistered or $20 day of the match.

For more information, email at brpc@mindspring.com or visit us English Range.

Aquatics programs — The Officers' Club Aquatic Center will conduct an Abdominal Workshop from 8 a.m. to noon Saturday. There will be special appearances by National Bodybuilder Competitor, Donna Sweat, and Body Sculptor Tammy McQuinn.

The workshop fee is $12.95 for members and $15.95 for non-members.

Aquatic Exercise classes are scheduled for May 5, 6, 12 and 13 and will be conducted by instructor Donnie Lee.

For registration and information, call Tim Cole at 687-0871.

Softball tournament — The USAIC annual Spring Softball Tournament is scheduled for May 5-6. The registration deadline is Tuesday. A tournament meeting will be held at 3 p.m. Thursday at Gowdy Field.

For more information, call Carol Gearheart at 544-9595 or 544-9486.

Lacrosse team — Lacrosse players are seeking more players and coaches for teams to play on Fort Benning. No experience is necessary, but players need to provide their own equipment.

For more information, call 687-6482.

Law Day 5K Fun Run — The law day 5K Fun Run takes place at 9 a.m. May 5 on Main Post. The start line will be adjacent to Stillwell Field on Hall Street and facing Vibbert Avenue to the north. Registration and check-in tables will be at Stillwell Field across from Briant Wells Gym, Building 933.

Late Registration and Race check-in begin at 8 a.m.

Entry fee for the race is $7 for runners 18 and under, $8 for those 19 and over.

Registration forms can be picked up at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate or in Briant Wells Field House.

PUBLIC NOTICE

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations will conduct an accreditation survey of Martin Army Community hospital during the week of 21 May 2001.

The purpose of the survey will be to evaluate the organization's compliance with nationally established Joint Commission standards. The survey results will be used to determine whether, and the conditions under which accreditation should be awarded to the organization.

Joint Commission standards deal with organizational quality of care issues and the safety of the environment in Which care is provided. Anyone believing that he or she has pertinent and valid information about such matters may request a public information interview with the Joint Commission's field representatives at the time of the survey. Information presented at the interview will be carefully evaluated for relevance to the accreditation process. Requests for a public information interview must be made in writing and should be sent to the Joint Commission no later than five days before the survey begins. The request must also indicate the nature of the information to be provided at the interview. Such requests should be addressed to:

Division of Accreditation Operations
Accreditation Service Specialist
Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations
One Renaissance Boulevard
Oakbrook Terrace, IL 60181

The Joint Commission will acknowledge such requests in writing or by telephone and will inform the organization of the request for any interview. The organization will, in turn, notify the interviewee of the date, time, and place of the meeting.

This notice is posted in accordance with the Joint Commission's requirements and may not be removed before the survey is completed

Vacation Bible School June 18-22, 2001

"I like everything about church 'cause it's fun!"
–Will, age 9

Worship for the 21st Century

- Sunday, 9:30 a.m. is alive with a contemporary praise and worship. Come as you are and discover or rediscover the joy of the Lord.
- Sunday, 11:00 a.m. is spirited-traditional worship. The Calvary Choir and Orchestra lead the congregation with classic hymns of the faith and choruses.
- Sunday, 6:30 p.m. combines both traditional and contemporary praise. The Calvary family comes together for an enriching time of worship and Bible study.

ADULT MINISTRIES

Women @ Calvary

The Women's Ministry is dedicated to fulfilling Christ's mission by encouraging women with a sense of belonging to God and each other. Weekly Bible studies, fellowship events and mission opportunities give women an opportunity to grow in their commitment to the Lord, their families and their church.

MEN'S MINISTRY

The Men's Ministry at Calvary is deeply dedicated to creating opportunities for men to develop vital friendships, personal integrity and profound Christ-centered growth.

Bible Study

Our Sunday School is clustered around life stage interests and /or age graded groups so that you can interact with individuals or couples with whom you have a lot in common.

CALVARY MINISTRIES

- CALVARY CHRISTIAN SCHOOL
  A caring facility providing with a Christian foundation from preschool through grade twelve.
- CALVARY COMMUNITY
  Affordable apartments for the elderly or handicapped, operated by a caring, Christian staff.
- THE GARDENS AT CALVARY
  An assisted living facility providing the dignity you deserve, the independence you want, and the assistance you need.
- COLUMBUS CHRISTIAN COUNSELING CENTER
  An individual and family Christian counseling service provided by sensitive and caring counseling professionals.

Youth Ministry at Calvary Baptist Church

JR AND SR HIGH SCHOOL

Wednesday nights like you never imagined! Great music with a live student band, wild games and challenging topics about real life bring the M.S. Chapel to life. J.A.M. (for JR High) meets weekly from 6:00 p.m.-7:00 p.m. THE MAIN EVENT (for SR High) meets weekly from 7:00 p.m. -8:00 p.m.

Sunday mornings are a great time of praise and worship. Make new friends, play crazy games, learn more about God's Word.

And then you might want to be a part of...

No Chinese berets for U.S.

Berets to be recalled, sold as surplus

Gary Sheftick
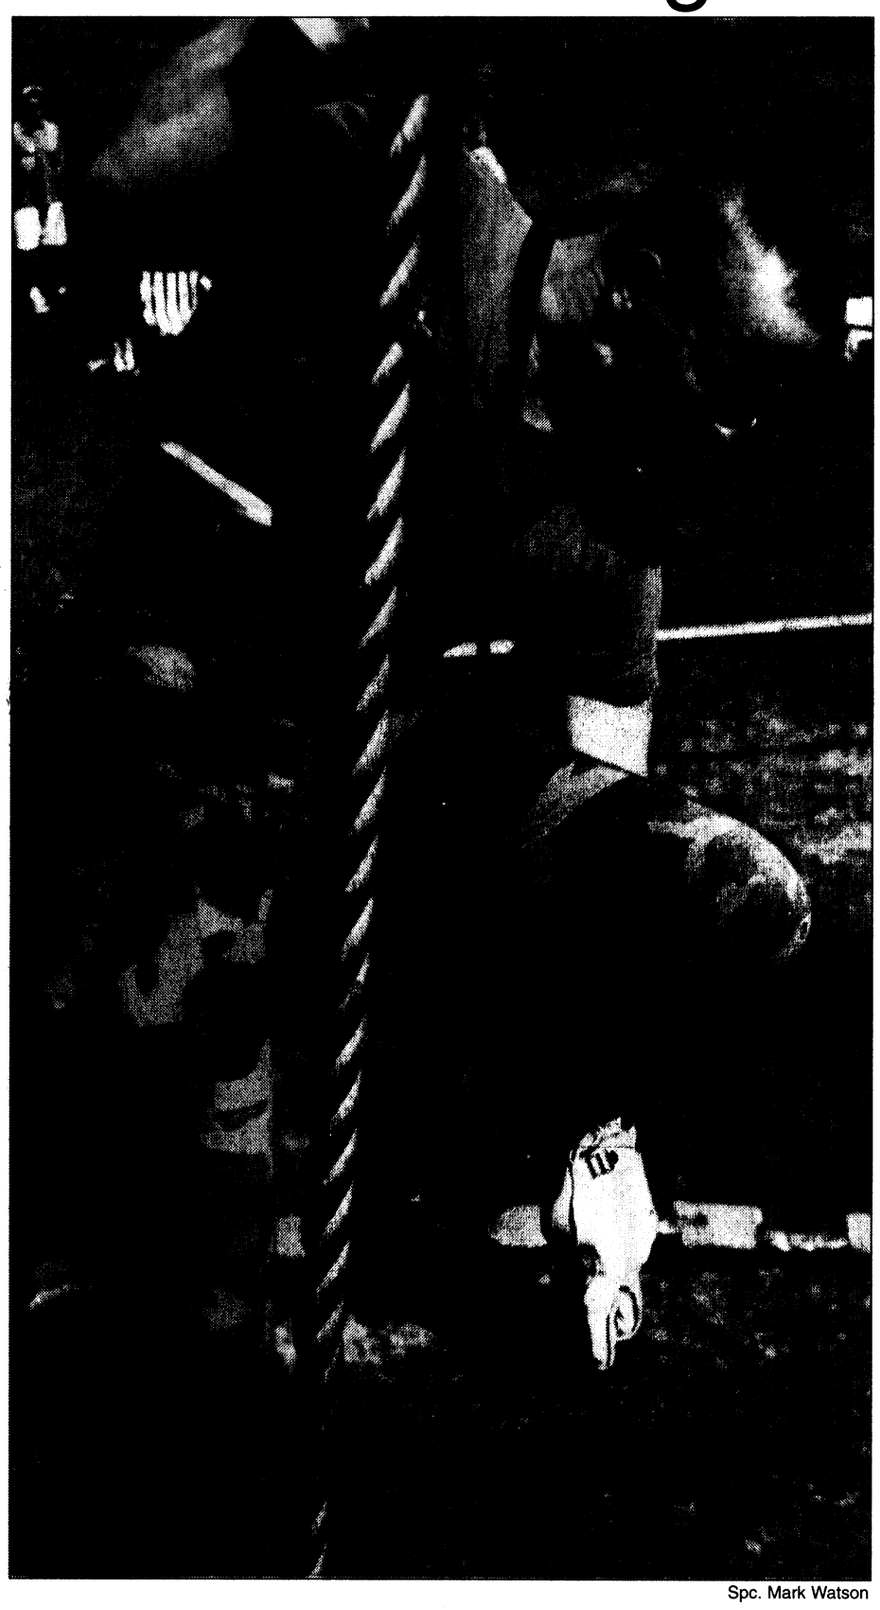
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Not all soldiers will don black berets June 14, officials said, adding that a phased fielding of the headgear will continue into November.

The delay in fielding some berets is due to three companies defaulting on their beret delivery, officials said, and a policy decision not to issue berets produced in China.

"The Army chief of staff has determined that U.S. troops shall not wear berets made in China or berets made with Chinese content," said Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz in a statement Tuesday. "Therefore, I direct the Army and the Defense Logistics Agency to take appropriate action to recall previously distributed berets and dispose of the stock."



An order for about 618,000 black berets had been contracted to a British firm, Kangol Limited, that subcontracted to produce the berets at a factory in China. About half of those berets have already been delivered, officials said, but most have not yet been issued to soldiers. Those berets will be recalled and sold as surplus through the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office, according to a DLA spokesperson.

See BERET, A-11

A CLOSER LOOK

- The decision to have all soldiers wear the black beret was made last October to symbolize the Army's transformation.
- Many different units have worn berets — armor, cavalry, airborne and Special Forces.
- The Army authorized the rangers to wear the black beret in 1975.
- In March, it was announced that the rangers would adopt the tan beret.
- 4.8 million berets were originally contracted to seven different companies for a total cost of $29.6 million.
- Berets made in China or with Chinese content will be recalled, if distributed, and sold as surplus through the Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office.

Benning benefits with taxi contract

Post flat-rate fee prevents overcharging

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

People who need a lift from here to there and are using public transportation should expect nothing but the best from the taxi service being used on post.

Independent Taxi Cab Company, Fort Benning's only authorized unofficial taxi cab transportation company, is the only service currently allowed to operate on post.

Also, Columbus Shuttle Company is the only contracted shuttle service authorized for picking up and busing soldiers from post to Columbus and Atlanta airports.

These exclusive contracts incur zero expenses for the installation and are reviewed on a yearly basis with an optional four years of extensions without renewal, said Charlotte S. Jackson, chief, Support Services and Lodging Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

Under the contracts, each company is required to pay a set amount of revenue back to the installation. This money is used to provide for the Quality Assurance officer's salary and

Brigade remembers Korean War battle

Weight room home for war mementos

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Kelley Hill soldiers gained access to a new weight room Saturday after a dedication ceremony honoring the men who fought in the battle of Outpost Harry, a bloody eight-night battle during the Korean War.

Medal of Honor recipient retired Col. Ola Mize and retired 1st Sgt. Jerry Cunningham cut the ribbon opening the weight room.

The Outpost Harry Weight Room will now be a shrine to the Korean War, said Col. Tony Cucolo, 3rd Brigade's commander. The walls display Medal of Honor citations and war pictures.

Members of the 15th Infantry Regiment, 10th Engineers and 39th Field Artillery, all with the 3rd Infantry Division, along with a battalion of Greek soldiers fought from June 10-18, 1953, to prevent the Chinese from taking control of Outpost Harry. The hill was of strategic importance because it prevented the enemy from penetrating through to the allied lines.

During the nights the Chinese attacked, sometimes overrunning friendly positions, but every morning the Americans held the high ground.

"We are humbled and proud to serve in the same unit," Cucolo said. "They said, 'I will die so others may be free.'

"They were the 'dog-faced soldiers' in the trenches with their chests in the dirt waiting for the next bugle call marking the next human wave of attack," he said.

When the battle was done, more than 600 Americans were killed or wounded. The Chinese received more than 5,200 casualties.

"This is a great honor," Cunningham said. "It was a big battle. No references were kept, and so many lives were lost."

> "I can still see the Chinese coming over the hill."
> Retired 1st Sgt. Jerry Cunningham
> Korean War veteran

He said the battle was so intense, that he didn't have time to worry, he was too busy trying to keep from getting killed.

"You weren't afraid, so much was happening at once," Cunningham said. "You did what you had to do to stay alive. You helped your friends who were wounded and you tried to annihilate the enemy. There was no time to worry or anything."

Now, 50 years later, the eight days still haunt him in his dreams.

"I can still see the Chinese coming over the hill. I remember all the dead and wounded in the trenches. It was eight nights of hell."

Although the Korean War is known as the Forgotten War, Cucolo said his soldiers will remember the sacrifice the men gave.

"Kelley Hill and the 3rd Infantry Division will not forget," Cucolo said.

commentary

Walking is a passion of mine. I'll walk to the post office instead of putting my mail out front.

I'll sometimes choose walking a couple miles over driving my car. In fact, if you see someone breeze by your quarters at 6:15 a.m. in these little reflective Adidas sneakers, that's probably me.

I was on one of my little walking tours a few weekends back. It was a hot, Saturday spring morning. People were planting the prettiest flowers out front and their kids were helping clean their leaf-ridden yard.

It was nice to see the family sharing in an outing, at the same time making efforts to improve their quarters.

I did a few more laps that day. I think I can tell you every person on my route that really takes responsibility for their areas, be it a home or an office. There's a distinct absence of weeds and the lawns don't look like something out of a safari documentary.

It seeps into other aspects of our lives though too, doesn't it? That same person, it seems, who is so particular about her petunias so often has perfectly manicured cars or kids. It's a generalization, I know, but I think there's some truth to it.

It got my mind churning about a few things.

The next postwide Town Hall meeting is at 7 p.m. May 10 at Building 359. Fort Benning residents are encouraged to attend and share their insights on post concerns.

So often though, these meetings can take a turn for the worse. While it's always nice to see a large turnout, how many of the people are there to complain? Those same people who griped will be back for more next time, often with similar concerns.

I think a lot of it boils down to personal responsibility. While many will have legitimate grievances, a great deal more will vent about issues they could deal with themselves.

I'm not saying an irate resident should poison the neighbor's dog to solve the midnight barking issue. Though, maybe, instead of calling the MPs every evening, they can take the first step and speak to their neighbors about it.

Instead of whining about how horrible their quarters look, take the initiative to go to the Self-Help Center and pick up some free flowers.

Or heck, spend a few minutes on the phone with your community mayor and see what can be done about the dilapidated playground.

I guess the same thing can be said for problems at work. It's some natural law that even if your office is fairly stress-free, there's always that one person who wrinkles the water. Seems most people either run to their boss after the first minor incident or never say a word until their resignation letter is typed up after months of real trauma.

Instead, try communicating with the person in question and see what comes of it. Sometimes, it's a simple problem that a little conversation may alleviate.

Not everything can be dealt with on one's own merits. But save the reinforcements for the real battles. Be the role model for the neighborhood, your kids and your colleagues.

I tell you, those walks really get me thinking. And maybe at the next Town Hall meeting on Thursday, you can share with us how you solved your problem.

Fasting teens attack world hunger

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

More than 23,000 people reside on Fort Benning, including troops and trainees. More than 4,000 are children under the age of 18. Imagine this entire population wiped out in a day.

Unfathomable? Maybe to you and me, but not to the starving people in Peru and Tanzania and many other third-world countries. It's a reality. Every day 30,000 children succumb to starvation and malnutrition.

Think of it. Try to imagine. Every single child you know — gone in a day. They're just as real and just as precious as the children we tuck into bed each night — the ones who go to bed on a full tummy after saying no to a second helping at dinner.

Look, we all experience the occasional dry spell — too much month at the end of the money. We have to forgo the dinner out and whip up something from a box or open a can of vegetables. Woe is we. But here's a thought to help put everything into perspective:

• Did you know $8, the cost of a movie ticket and a small drink, will provide a month's education for a child in Mongolia?

• The cost of dinner for a family of four at a fast-food restaurant, about $30, will re-roof an entire house in Tanzania.

• The $45 you spend on a new video game will buy a year of medical care for a child in Mexico City.

• The amount you spend on a pair of name-brand running shoes, about $80, will feed three refugee babies in Lebanon for one month.

Last Friday my oldest son came home from school and passed up the offer of an after-school snack. No can do, he said, as he headed out the door to join 24 other teens at Fort Benning's teen center where they kicked off a 30-hour fast designed to raise awareness of, and funds to alleviate, the problem of hunger around the world.

The next day I caught up with them at a playground in Custer Terrace. You can read about that in the community section of today's paper. There I mostly stuck to the facts. Here I'd like to elaborate.

While the rest of us were out watching 88 rangers undergo the physical hardships inherent to the Best Ranger competition, God bless them, these kids were toiling away in the hot sun on empty stomachs with not so much as a single complaint, no cheering section and only a plate of pasta at the finish line. Knowingly or not, they heeded the scripture's instructions on fasting in Matthew 6:16.

So here's a challenge for you — all of you, except the elderly, diabetic, pregnant and nursing. Starting now or after dinner tonight, spend 30 hours — one hour for every 1,000 children that will die today —without food. And every time you feel a pang of hunger, think of those who've never known the satisfaction of a full tummy.

And sometime between now and Monday give Bruce Mulford a call (545-2359) and thank him for the wonderful work he's doing with Club Beyond.

While you've got him on the phone, ask where you can drop off a check — every little bit helps — to make sure another child won't close his eyes for the last time on an empty tummy.

Military spouses deserve appreciation

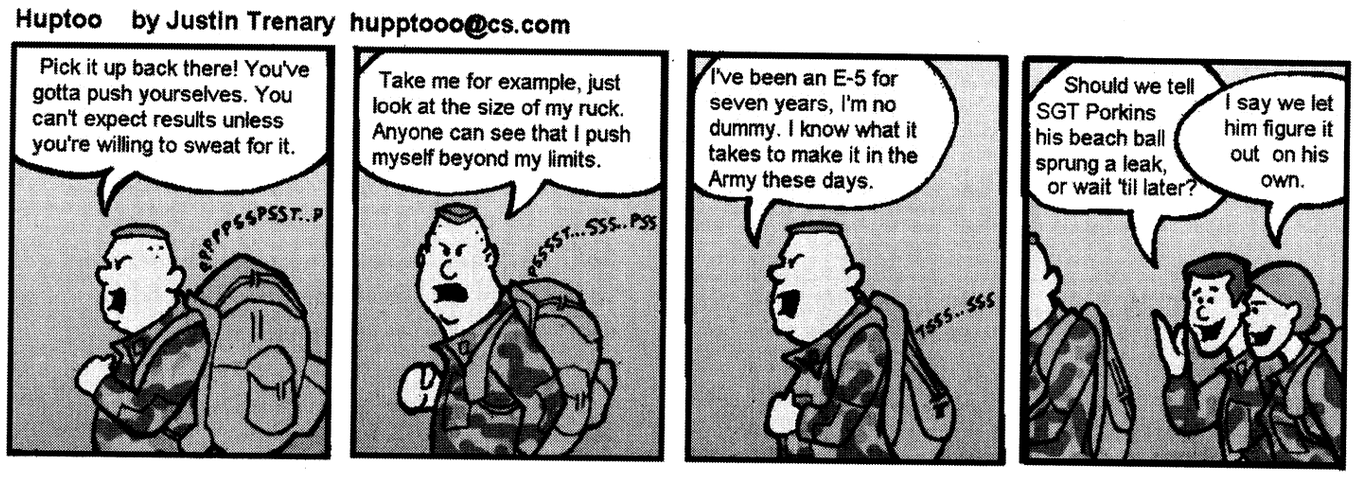
The Family Advocacy Program wants to remind everyone that Military Spouse Appreciation Day is celebrated May 11.

We would like to take this time to express our appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by military spouses in our community.

In the daily press of activities, which characterize our modern lives, we often overlook opportunities to express our appreciation to those who make a special contribution.

In an effort to amend that oversight, we take this opportunity to salute all military spouses.

We should value and commend every military spouse on this day. To show our appreciation, the FAP will give out a canvas tote bag to each military spouse and have a display set up at the Army Community Service Center, Building 2624, May 11 from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. with educational materials on parenting, building better relationships, blended families and other topics.



As another token of appreciation for Military Spouse Appreciation Day, the FAP will provide free child care for moms and dads interested in a night out May 11 or 12 from 6 p.m. to midnight.

Families who are interested in taking a night out can register directly with Tot Town Child Development Center at 689-8698 by May 9.

For more information on Military Spouse Appreciation Day, call the Family Advocacy Program staff at 545-7517.

VARIOUS VOICES

Will you be attending Thursday's Town Hall meeting? What issues would you like to see discussed?

Melissa Mick, Custer Terrace resident — "I don't usually attend, but I have two children and I'd like to see better playground equipment in the neighborhood. It's very old and in bad condition."

Sgt. 1st Class Billy Carmichael, post Equal Opportunity Office — "I'm a short-timer so I won't go. The only issues I've got are enforcement of housing regs and lawlessness in the neighborhood. I've had two bikes stolen since I've lived here."

Staff Sgt. Greta Wiley, 13th Combat Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group — "Yes, I'll be there. I want to know why we can't have our own parking space in McGraw Manor."

Shanon Tucker, Bouton Heights resident — "I'll be working late, but I'd like to see quicker response times from BSI. Two months to get a door fixed is ridiculous. And I'd like to see more MPs patrolling the neighborhood to cut down on speeding."

Sgt. Scott Dunlap, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I work two jobs, so I won't be there. With summer coming up, I'm concerned about safety, noise control and the overall appearance of lawns."

Sgt. Kenneth McElroy, 203 Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade — "I'll be out of town, but I think a lot of people aren't taking care of their lawns, and parking is a problem everywhere."

Cadets compete in Leaders' Challenge

Soldier skills tested during daylong event

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Students from seven area schools turned out for the Junior Reserve Officer Training Course Leaders' Challenge held on post April 28.

Eighteen five-person teams competed for the honor of top JROTC squad in the area.

When all was said and done, Carver High School came out victorious with four teams filling up the first and second place spots in both categories, one and two, of the competition.

Jordan placed third in category one and Kendrick took third in category two.

Carver also dominated the top spots during the physical training competition. Carl Battee, Carver, took first place for males and Eli Apuya, Columbus High School, placed second.

Chasidy Bowman and Bianca Cole, Carver, took first and second in the female category.

It may have been a good day for the Carver students, but it was also a good time for all of the competitors, said Sgt. Maj. Taomage Glover, JROTC operations and training NCO for the Muscogee county school district.

"It's physically challenging and it also gives the cadets something to look forward to," said Glover. "It gets the teams fired up to compete against each other just like in baseball or football. It gives them a chance to show other teams how good they are and what they've done to prepare for this."

Jamie Donaldson, a team leader and drill team commander for Carver, agreed.

"I think it's a good mental and physical challenge. Being in competition from 7 a.m. to 3 p.m is a long time, it's demanding, but I still enjoy," she said. "And doing well feels good because it's a tradition here."

That tradition includes taking the top spot for the challenge for the past three years, and six total.

During the competition, co-ed five-member teams took on a variety of soldier tasks including an Army physical fitness test, the Sand Hill obstacle course, a search and recovery event, constructing and crossing a rope bridge, and a written test on military knowledge. The day wrapped up with a five-mile road march.

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Mike Wooden, Columbus High School, looks ahead to see how much farther he has to traverse during the rope bridge event of the Leaders' Challenge.

Andre Wolf, a team leader for Carver whose father is a soldier at Fort Benning, Staff Sgt. Francis Hancock, said the leader's challenge was just that — challenging, but worth the effort.

"Beating the heat during the competition is tough. I made my team drink a fair amount of water," he said. "But it's still exciting. I enjoyed going through the events."

After a day of fierce competition, top team members were awarded gold, silver and bronze medals for their performance.

Carver also received the silver cup awarded for overall best performance.

Maj. Allen Brinkman, senior Army instructor at Carver, said he is proud of the effort put into the competition by his cadets.

"We were very satisfied," he said. "It simply reflects the end product of a lot of hard work and commitment by the kids."

Glover said holding the annual event wouldn't have been possible with out the support of Fort Benning and members of the local national guard.

White remembered by co-workers during memorial service

Soldier dies of apparent heart attack

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

A Fort Benning soldier collapsed while taking an Army Physical Fitness Test April 25.

Capt. James E. White, a dentist assigned to the Advanced General Dental Residency Program, was on the last half mile of his run when he collapsed of an apparent heart attack.

White's colleague's performed CPR while awaiting the arrival of emergency medical services responded to the Lawson Army Air Field track. He was taken by ambulance to Martin Army Community Hospital where he was pronounced dead.

A memorial service was held April 27 at The Infantry Center Chapel.

White

White, 28, was described by his co-workers as a wonderful resident who showed great compassion to his patients and a man others wanted to be around.

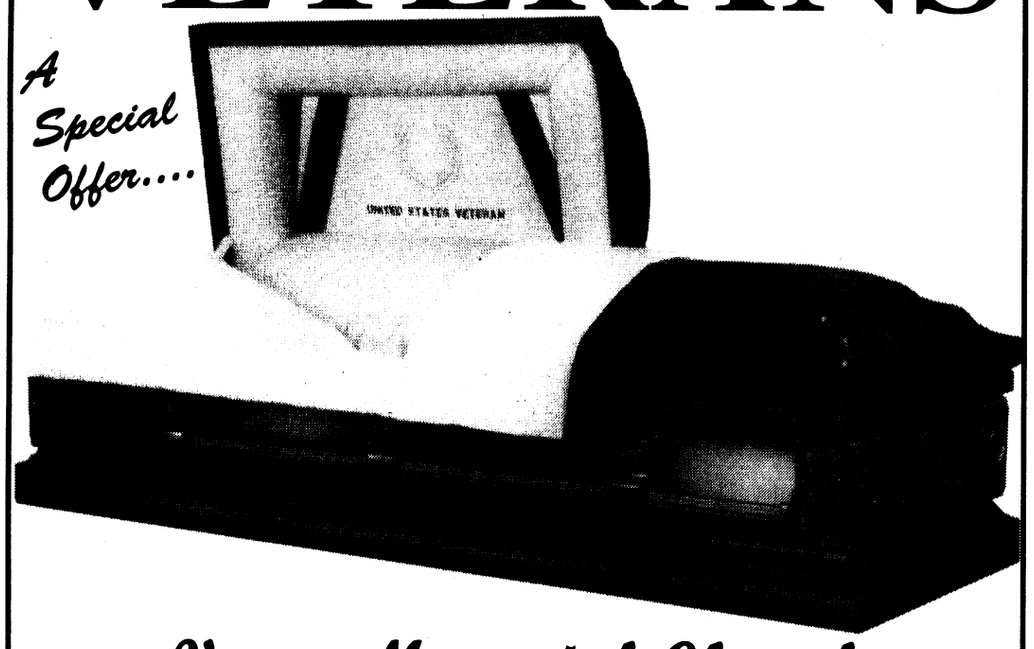
"James had a great zeal and commitment to life," Col. Donald Fanning, the director of the one-year program, said. "He was a team player in the truest sense of the word and the term 'me' didn't exist in his vocabulary.

"James worked hard to ensure that none of his colleagues or patients felt alone and I believe it is symbolic that when he died he was surrounded by his colleagues."

"James was the nicest person," said Capt. Mark Commean who shared office space with White.

"He had a smile for everyone. If a person wasn't smiling before he saw James, he definitely would be after talking with James. He was always laughing and telling jokes. He was fun to be around."

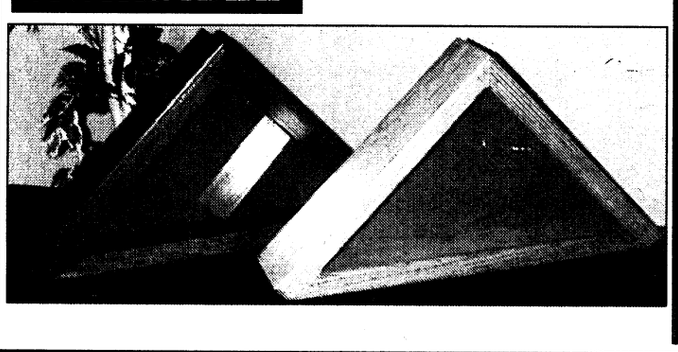
"He wanted to make sure his patients had the best medical care. Often he was in early and stayed late to make sure his patients had the proper care," said 1st Lt. Johnathon Jones, Dental Company commander.



White earned his doctor of dental surgery degree from the University of Missouri-Kansas City in Kansas City, Mo., last year.

He entered active-duty July 2000 and completed the officer basic course at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio, Texas.

He arrived at Fort Benning September 2000.



White is survived by his mother, Gwendolyn White; and sisters, LaKiesha and Katrina White.

German soldier earns American jump wings

Students share jump experience

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

During most airborne school classes, there are small differences in the trainees' uniforms because they come from all branches of the services.

Last week, there was yet another uniform in formation during the graduation ceremony April 27, that of German Officer Cadet Erol Tezsevin.

Tezsevin, who is stationed in Varel, Germany, earned his American jump wings by completing jump requirements during the last week of airborne training.

Tezsevin has been in the U.S. for several weeks becoming acquainted with the U.S. Army, and earning his wings was just part of his four-week excursion.

While it may seem odd to have a foreign student in the class to students, it's a normal occurrence for the school, said Capt. Chris Meredith, operations officer for 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry Regiment (Airborne).

"We probably get around five foreign students from all over the world per class," he said. "Most come here without any jump background at all.

"Usually the only students who already come in airborne qualified are the German cadets. We have a good relationship with the Germans."

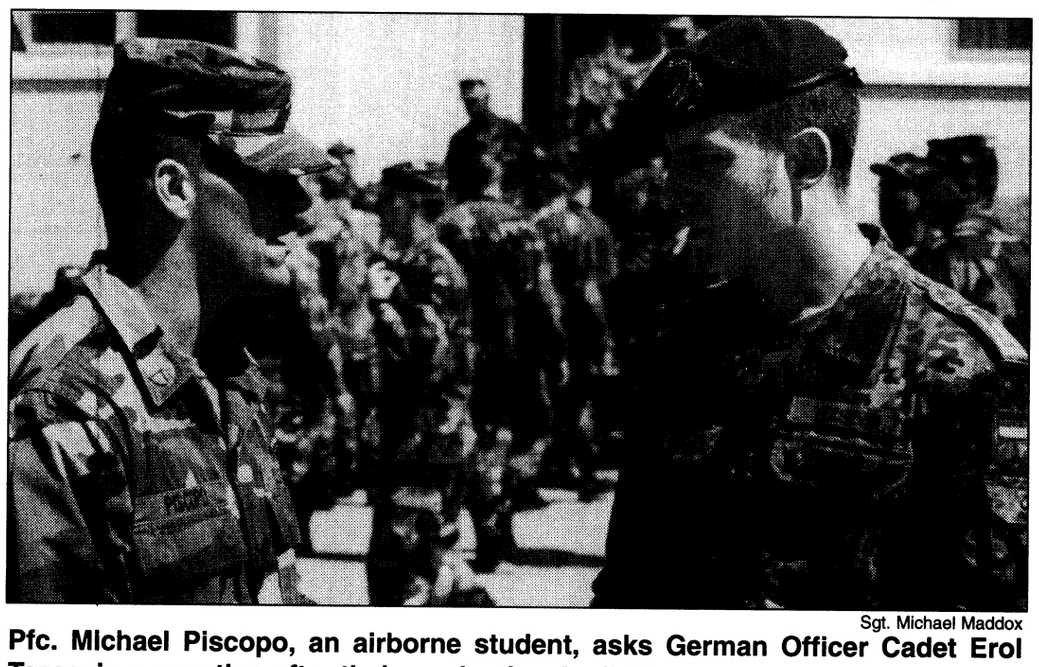
Meredith said the foreign soldiers who go through the whole course come through the International Student Division.

The German soldiers who are already jump qualified through their own country's military are controlled through the German liaison.

No matter how they make it to the school, Meredith said the soldiers have a good grasp of the English language.

Tezsevin, who has been a parachute soldier for all three years of his career, said even though the jumps were very similar to the way Germans jump, training with soldiers from another nation was still a great opportunity for learning.

"I was glad to be able to take part in the jump education here," he said. "I'm a parachutist in Germany as well, so this was a good opportunity.



"Everyone has been very polite to me and open-minded. I've really enjoyed spending time here."

Meredith said spending time with American soldiers is one of the main objectives of allowing foreign soldiers to train side-by-side.

"It gives (foreign soldiers) an opportunity to see how we do business, how are students complete the school and what equipment that we use," he said. "It gives them a broader perspective. It also makes it easier for us to interact at times when it's necessary."

Meredith said the requirements for any foreign national to earn American jump wings is five parachute jumps, to include one night jump and one combat equipment jump.

"It mirrors the requirements of our own students," he said.

Service members asked to retrieve savings bonds

Finance center plans to eliminate paper copies

Chuck Gordon
Defense Finance Accounting Service

INDIANAPOLIS — The Savings Bonds system allows active duty military from all branches of service to request bonds they have purchased through allotment deductions be kept in safekeeping.

"In 1994, we had 1.4 million hardcopy bonds," said Gene Rowe, Central Disbursing Services. "Since then we have converted bonds storage to electronic files with the ultimate goal of eliminating paper copies."

"About 180,000 actual hardcopy paper Savings Bonds are in safekeeping here at Indianapolis now," said Bonnie Thomas, DFAS Indianapolis Central Disbursing Services. "The goal is to eliminate paper copies altogether, for soldiers who are no longer in service."

Central Disbursing has about 20,000 bonds on hand for former soldiers. Those are the focus of the effort to reduce paper.

"We continue to provide safekeeping services for the Army's active duty troops," Thomas said. "However, we're trying to get soldiers to contact us when they separate or retire from the Army so we can reduce that 20,000."

According to Central Disbursing director Jimmy Heller, this reduction is a huge success for the organization.

"Thomas and her folks are doing wonderful things," he said. "On a day-to-day basis, they have easily a 99 percent — or better — success rate."

While the goal is to reduce paper use, we also want to continue the best customer service. Savings Bonds can be held at no cost to the soldier until the owner requests that they be mailed to a current mailing address.

"Putting bonds in safekeeping is sort of like using a safety deposit box at a bank. You wouldn't put items you may need immediate access to in a safety deposit box and you shouldn't place bonds in safekeeping unless they are to be kept for an indefinite period, or until you retire or otherwise separate from service," Heller said.

Safekeeping services for bonds issued on or after July 1, 1968 are provided by DFAS and hardcopy bonds for soldiers dated from July 1968 through September 1994 are physically stored in Indianapolis.

All bonds since October 1994 are electronically stored at the Federal Reserve Bank in Pittsburgh and are printed and mailed from there.

People wanting to withdraw bonds (hardcopy or electronic) from safekeeping must send a signed letter or fax.

Selecting specific bonds or numbers of bonds to be released is not allowed. A request for release of any bonds held in safekeeping will cause all your bonds to be released.

The request letter must include your signature, Social Security Number and an address to which the bonds are to be sent. A confirmation letter will be sent stating that the bonds have been released.

The bonds should be printed, mailed and arrive from the Federal Reserve Bank within 30 days. Allow at least 30 days before claiming non-receipt of released bonds.

To retrieve bonds in safekeeping, write to:

Wives provide strength for competitors

Best Ranger competition is family affair

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Rachel R. Garcia

Ann Berg greets her husband, Capt. Sean Berg, at the finish of the Best Ranger competition.

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Collazos started this year's Best Ranger competition with one goal in mind — just to finish the race. That was enough to satisfy the first-time contender, who finished 18th with teammate Staff Sgt. Shane Jernigan.

To what did Collazos attribute his success? A hearty, healthy diet, low in fat, high in protein? A rigorous daily training regimen? Willpower, tenacity or know how?

None of the above, said Collazos.

"My wife. She's the reason I'm here. She's the reason I made it," Collazos said emphatically. "She's my foundation. When I felt weak, she was my strength. I couldn't have made it without her."

Collazos and Jernigan, representing the 6th Ranger Training Battalion, both realized early on they'd need their wives' suppors to make it to competition.

Jernigan hired a part-time cleaning lady to help ease the load at home so he could devote more time to training.

"We have 5-year-old twins, and she just finished college and started a new job," he said. "It was a tough transition, a rough time for me to decide to compete, so it was the least I could do for her, because without her support I couldn't have done it."

Time and time again, the competitors — first, last and in between — credited their wives and families for the continual support they received during several months of intensive training leading up to the actual competition.

"She put everything on hold for me," said Sgt. Jeffrey Rembold, a 75th Ranger Regiment soldier who captured ninth place with teammate Spc. Harlen Ely. "Just taking part in the competition takes a little bit of selfishness because you ask your spouse to sacrifice so much. If you don't have the support at home, you just can't compete. I know I couldn't have done it without Beth Ann."

Beth Ann Rembold, Deva Collazos, Cheri Oakes — they're not names you'll find engraved on any Ranger trophy or listed on a Best Ranger roster, but, according to their husbands, they're all part of the team. And like true team players, they're hesitant to take any of the credit.

"It was his goal, something he desired. I just gave him the freedom to get there," said Cheri, wife of first-place winner Gunny Sgt. Keith Oakes, who represented the 5th RTB with teammate Sgt. 1st Class William Patterson.

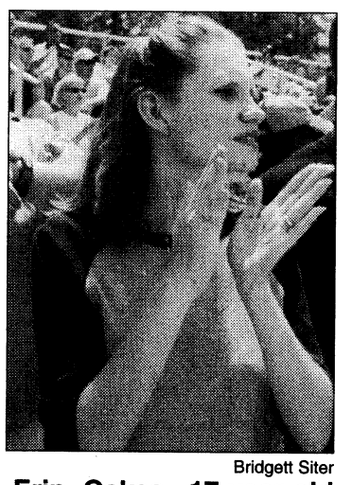
Cheri homeschools 15-year-old Dusty and 17-year-old Erin, so adjusting their schedules to accommodate her husband's training was "no big problem," she said.

Deva Collazos and Jill Jernigan traveled from their homes in Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., to watch their husbands compete.

Though both agreed the last few months have been stressful, neither regretted the experience.

"Yes, it was like being a single mom sometimes," Jill said. "But it was worth every minute of it to see them out there competing. Words really can't express how proud I am."

Collazos and Jernigan began preparing for the competition in January, and their wives had to adjust their own schedules and diets to accommodate their husbands' training schedules and dietary needs.



"Lots and lots of food — big grocery bills — and major changes in our diets. Lots of good, healthy foods. Lots of protein and carbs. And one room in the house was totally devoted to his gear," Deva said.

In February Collazos and Jernigan began traveling to Fort Benning for five days of training every week, returning home "just long enough to get their laundry cleaned and get a little sleep," Jill said.

"It was tough, but I'd do it again," she said. "We've been told once it's in their blood, they'll keep coming back for more. That's OK with me. If he wants to do it again, I'll be back."

The hardest part of all was not the sacrifices and months of preparation, but the competition itself, the wives said.

"We got to speak to them across the tape in the holding area, but we couldn't get close or touch them," Deva said. "It's tough to watch them go through this and not be able to give them a hug.

"My husband's mother and father came for the competition, and his mom turned away from the Darby Queen with tears in her eyes. It just hurts to watch, but the pride is indescribable," she added.

One competitor's wife just couldn't watch her husband "hurt" anymore. When competition ended and the competitors were instructed to pick up their 60-pound rucksacks once again and move to the meal tent, Bonnie Gregory took matters in her own hands. She hoisted the pack on her back and reached for her husband's hand.

Fewer than half of the two-man ranger teams that competed in this year's David E. Grange Jr. Best Ranger Competition finished.

This year's honors went to Sgt. 1st Class William Patterson and Marine Gunnery Sgt. Keith Oakes.

The competition kicked off with a pre-dawn physical fitness test. After a the PT test comprising of pushups, situps, a run through the Malvesti Obstacle Course, a swim through Victory Pond and a soggy run, the competitors took to the skies for the spot drop event.

1st Lt. Christian Stevens and Sgt. Harper Wilmoth, of the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C., took first place in the spot drop event. Patterson and Oakes then jogged their way into second place after winning the 20-mile moonlit road march known as the "midnight massacre."

After the "midnight massacre" only 24 teams were left on their feet. The other 20 teams were disqualified for not making the six-hour time limit or dropped out because of injuries.

Although not dropped from the competition, the third place team of Sgt. 1st Class Bruce Hoffman and Staff Sgt. James Yaw suffered a crippling blow. Yaw's feet, like most other competitors, began to form blisters slowing him down, but not enough to keep the team from maintaining third place through the ranger day stakes.

After night ranger stakes and the bayonet assault course, the Army-Marine duo fought Stevens and Wilmoth for the lead.

Going into day ranger stakes, Stevens and Wilmoth maintained a marginal lead.

Patterson and Oakes took control of the competition during the day stakes. Their first place finish in ranger stakes and the Prusik climb boosted them into the lead. Oakes scored a 47-second Prusik climb while most of the teams were completing the obstacle in twice the time or more.

Hawaii's Staff Sgt. Michael McNulty and 1st Lt. Lucas VanAntwerp, of the 25th Infantry Division, moved from 15th place to seventh, and into position for a shot at the title.

As darkness approached Saturday, so did the start of the night land navigation portion of the competition.

Rangers hoisted 60-pound rucksacks onto their backs and trekked through the woods.

Yaw and Hoffman struggled on the course.

"Instead of getting the point we needed we had to head in," Yaw said. "I just couldn't walk."

The two made the time limit but lost hold of their third-place position.

Energy efficient washing machines installed

New washing equipment cuts costs in half

Cheri L. Grantz
Bayonet correspondent

It's no small change — the money that will be saved after the installation of energy efficient washing machines in the barracks.

Fort Benning is currently installing 901 energy efficient washing machines and the annual savings in combined utility costs is estimated to be nearly $140,000 once the new washers are in use.

Because of a national energy shortage and rising energy costs, the Department of Energy has mandated new standards for washing machines.

The new standards were approved by the Bush administration last month and Fort Benning is one of the few taking advantage of its cost savings before a federal standard requires all manufacturers to market the energy efficient clothes washers.

Post engineers learned of the cost savings from a post-implementation survey distributed by Fort Drum, N.Y., and then did more research with engineers from one of the manufacturers of the more efficient washing machines, said Ralph Harrison, an engineering technician in the Energy and Utilities Division with the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics. The research concluded that the energy dollars saved are worth the postwide installation.

Existing conventional machines cost $431,272 in sewer, water and heating water every year compared to the $291,966 anticipated cost of the energy efficient machines.

The current washers on post operate on 100 percent hot water while the new washers will use a maximum of 60 percent hot water. The difference in hot water usage will save $42,686 in hot water heating costs annually, Harrison said.

According to Energy Department reports, appliances are responsible for 20 percent of energy bills and replacing old, inefficient appliances with modern, low efficient ones will save money.

The standard requires new washing machines to be 22 percent more efficient in 2004 and 32 percent more efficient in 2007. The delay of the implementation gives manufacturers time to lower the consumers' costs.

The DOE estimates the neteconomic benefit of setting an energy efficient standard will be $15.3 billion from 2004 to 2030.

But the energy efficient washers currently on the market cost about $200 more than standard clothes washers.

"Over the life of a washer, that's a lot of savings," Harrison said. "They pay for themselves."

The Energy Department projects consumers will save an average of $30 a year on their utility bills and 18 gallons of water for every load of wash. The DOE compares the amount of energy saved between 2004 and 2030 to the amount of electricity used to light 16 million U.S. homes for 25 years.

In addition, the agency says greenhouse gas emissions are expected to reduce by an amount equal to that produced by three million cars every year.

Fort Benning has contracted to rent 901 brand new washers and 869 new dryers, said Richard Chancey, chief of the Construction Inspection Branch, Engineering Division, DFEL.

Under the contract, the washers and dryers will be replaced every three years.

"They will be for our soldiers to use," Harrison said. "These washers will run four to six cycles per washer per day."

The new washers are heavy duty, energy efficient and front loading, the design that results in the most savings.

Most energy efficient washers are front loading.

The horizontal position of the washer provides a faster spin cycle, which leaves less water in the clothing at the end of the cycle.

Less water in the clothes also saves energy in drying cost. Dryer models are not yet available as energy efficient. However, a faster spin of 1,100 rpm will save $8,166 in water costs and $51,739 in electrical drying costs every year on post, Harrison said.

"The new technology installed in the washers allows them to cut the heater off automatically when the water reaches a certain temperature," Harrison said.

A CLOSER LOOK

Tips for buying a new clothes washer:

- Choose a washing machine that has several options for adjusting the water level. A small load should have the option of using a smaller amount of water.
- Choose a model with a "mini-basket", a small tub that fits over the agitator. This allows you to wash very small loads.
- Look for pre-soaking options. Both pre-soaking options and "suds saver" features conserve energy.
- Choose a washing machine with faster spin speeds. Higher spin speeds can result in better water extraction and reduce drying times.

Tips for lowering your washer's energy usage:

- Locate the washing machine close to the hot water tank, if possible, to reduce the heat loss in long pipe runs. Insulate exposed pipes.
- Keep your hot-water heater thermostat setting at 120 degrees. Each 10 degree reduction in water temperature will cut the cost of washing clothes.
- Wash most clothes in warm or cold water, rinse in cold. Use hot water only if absolutely necessary.
- Do not overload washers. general, washing one large load is more efficient.

Expo offers employment opportunities, advice

Local, national employers present at job fair

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

It's time to shine those shoes and update the resume for the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter AUSA Job Fair slated for May 17.

The expo will take place in Infantry Hall from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Active-duty and retired soldiers, Department of Army civilians and their family members are invited to attend.

Representatives from more than 115 companies will be on-hand, said Bruce Tait, a local veteran's employment representative.

"We'll have local, state and national employers present. That includes companies from California, Colorado, Washington and New York," Tait said. "This is a golden opportunity to meet and see what companies are seeking."

Companies who have taken part in previous years include Lockheed Martin Aircraft, Turner Broadcasting System, New York Life, as well as law enforcement and medical agencies.

Many of these companies are searching specifically for military occupational specialities, Tait said.

"Recruiters look for certain MOSs, like mechanics and hospital personnel. Their organization has found they are successful in hiring because of the training they've already received," Tait said.

The job fair has grown more than three times since its inception several years ago, when 35 agencies first appeared on the scene.

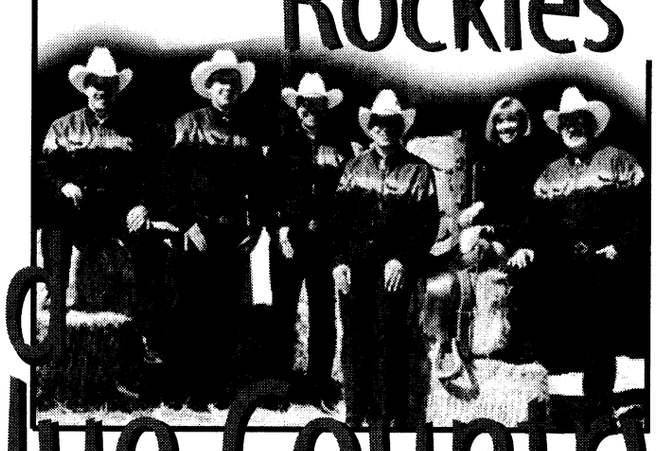
It's been so well received in recent years, that it's been moved from the NCO Club to Infantry Hall to allow more room for the event.

"The last three years we've really had a great response. There were something like 2,500 attendees last year," Tait said.

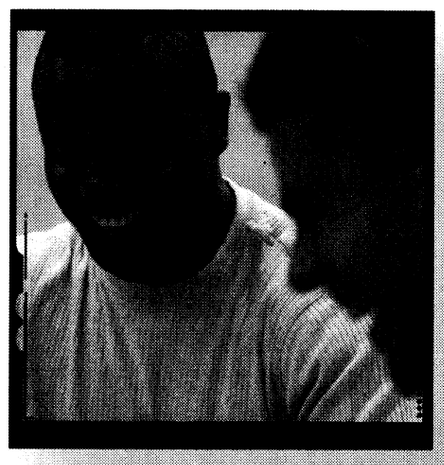
Career specialists like retired Lt. Col. Guy Smith, Army Career and Alumni Program, will be available.

After more than 20 years with the Army, Smith began another career within human resources. His second profession spanned more than 17 years.

As well as being on-hand for consultation, Smith will be heading up a career panel of veterans in the local area for interested parties.



A six-person panel will answer questions and give advice on job-hunting at 1 p.m. in Classroom 30.



"I've been on both sides of the table," Smith said. "Hopefully I can help others in this transitionary time."

On-site interviews will be available. For that reason, officials recommend attendees bring references and extra copies of their resumes. Dress is duty uniform or other appropriate clothing. This is a time to research organizations, meet recruiters and get information on companies, Smith said.

For resume assistance, contact the Army Career and Alumni Program at 545-2308, the Army Community Service at 545-6969, or the Family Member Employment Assistance Program at 545-5516.

WHINSEC students take tour of area businesses

Class studies American manufacturing

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Seeing firsthand how U.S. industry manages its books and production lines, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's first resource management class toured Cessna Aircraft Company.

The company recently received accolades as one of Georgia's top manufacturers with excellence in corporate responsibility, economic impact and work ethic from the Bluebird Bus plant, in nearby Fort Valley, the largest bus manufacturer in the U.S.

These included assembly line tours and a briefing on costs.

"I really admire the way things are done here, especially the discipline and work ethic that Americans have in general," said Maria Del Pilar Aparicio, student and civilian employee working in Paraguay's national defense accounting department.

In-depth learning objectives that include Economic Reasoning, Management Theory, Quantitative Reasoning, Systems Analysis and Decision Making, were met through experiences that included "Patria" the final exercise.

"Patria" was a three-day stint where students took on the role of government for five different countries.

They applied strategy and policy in formulating a budget for national defense and police, Dr. Russell Ramsey explained.

"We didn't make it easy. Military takeovers, resistance groups and terrorist attacks on natural resource reserves were elements added to really challenge students," Ramsey said.

For example, one scenario was the bombing of oil reserves by a terrorist group.

Students, forced to react to a scarcity of resources relative to competing needs and abundant wants, developed and employed methods to circumvent shortages.

The student body, uniformed and civilian alike, represented various Western Hemisphere nations.

They are at the forefront in developing their national defense and police budgets.

"They work at the national level. Usually, four to five people execute the budget," Ramsey said.

Reinforcing the course with the exchange and sharing of ideas between students was a major part of the learning experience, said Ramsey.

"For me, this course has been of grand importance because it has refreshed and reinforced what I learned in college and has illuminated new ideas that I can directly apply when I return to Nicaragua," said Lt. Col. Silvio Palacios, who heads the Nicaraguan Army's logistical department.

When Lt. Col. Pelayo Moscarda was a young lieutenant, new to the Paraguayan Army and new to the idea of democracy, he attended the U.S. Army School of the Americas' Resource Management Course and went on to write Paraguay's entire defense budget, Ramsey said.

Now, with more rank on his collar and experience under his belt, Moscarda, has returned to the United States for a new learning institution with a hemisphere's scope and a new Resource Management Course for the future.

Moscarda now shares with his classmates what time and experience have taught him.

"You get a real feel for the progress that is taking place, especially when you get new students who, in their course work and discussions, reflect that knowledge being passed on and shared back in their countries," Ramsey said.

"Latin American countries have improved tremendously since the 80s in their affiliation with the world market and also in improving the democratic system ... but the process is not yet complete," said Yves Gisse, an economist and international consultant with 30 years of experience working for the International Monetary Fund and guest speaker for the Resource Management Course Graduation.

Reflective in class assignments and discussions, many students attributed the public's lack of confidence and trust to how governments appropriate state funds and ineffective methods to prevent fraud, waste and abuse.

"Government organizations should never manage themselves closed or autonomous from the public eye," Del Pilar said.

"The strongest feature (of the course), according to the students was how to prevent corruption (within government agencies),"said Ramsey.

"The more people are made aware of what is going on inside military organizations, as well as the rest of the government, the more flexible they will become to economic changes affecting them," explained Del Pilar.

"We are all in this together, and together we must work for the betterment of the state and all her people," she ended.

Luau planned

The third annual Fort Benning Asian-Pacific Luau is from 3 to 10 May 18 at Uchee Creek. Admission is free.

This year's event features free party barge rides, face painting for the children, canoe races and a two-hour authentic Polynesian show.

The evening will be capped off with a free concert by the local band, Cornbread.

This year's Polynesian menu includes Kaluha pork, teriyaki chicken, fried rice, and tropical fruit and will be provided by the Officers' Club.

Presale meal tickets are $3 and will be available through May 17 at the Installation Equal Opportunity Office, Building 2509, off Indianhead Road.

Meal tickets will also be available at the luau for $4.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers will also sell hot dogs and hamburgers, and there will be two beverage tents.

Kiddie Korner will feature several inflatable rides for the children. Popcorn and cotton candy will also be available.

Drawings will be held every half hour. Prizes will include a two-night stay in Destin, Fla., a weekend at Uchee Creek, and the grand prize of two round-trip tickets on US Air (restrictions apply).

For more information, call the EO Office at 545-6665.

Heritage display

The Equal Opportunity Office is looking for anyone who may have items relating to Asian Pacific Heritage for our display in Infantry Hall. This includes books, posters and crafts.

The display is from May 18 through June 1.

Anyone who can help should contact the Post EO Office at 545-6665 or 545-3198.

SJA closures

The Legal Assistance Office and the Claims Office of the Staff Judge Advocate will be closed every Thursday from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. for mandatory Sergeant's Time training.

Also, the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate will be closing at 11:30 a.m. May 11 for Law Day Activities.

OCS board

Applications for board four of the Officer Candidate School are due no later than July 27 for the Aug. 1 local board.

All applications will be submitted to Sgt. Angela Gonzalez in Soldiers Plaza, Building 2619.

For more information, call 545-3341 or 545-4702 or refer to the Fort Benning Web site.

Survey available

The Infantry School Course Feedback Survey is now available on the Fort Benning Web site.

Please complete this survey, six months after your graduation, and ask your commander or supervisor to participate as well.

All responses will be confidential.

The school's commanders, staff members, and instructors rely on your professional opinion of its effectiveness in producing graduates whose technical, tactical, and leadership skills and physical abilities meet the needs of the 21st century land warrior.

Education grant

The Hope Grant Program will pay all tuition and fees up to $100 per quarter for textbooks for all active-duty military and their dependents stationed at Fort Benning and living in Georgia. For more information, call 685-8549.

Army Learning Center

The Army Learning Center has relocated from the Donovan Library to Infantry Hall's Room 32A.

The hours of operation are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday and noon to 10 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Postponement

The Department of Defense has postponed the effective date of the Military Thrift Savings Plan by 180 days, making the 60-day open season start Oct. 9 and TSP deductions will start Jan. 2002.

Outbound moves

Effective now, outbound moves of personal property and household goods will be done through a Full Service Move Project Move Manager contractor, The PASHA Group.

The PASHA Group is located in Building 280, Transportation Office, Transportation Lane. # Medical personnel conduct exercise

Mass casualty, live surgeries help soldiers

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Capt. Hawkeye Pierce would be proud.

Fort Benning soldiers overcame severe stress, resulting from blood, guts, civilians and media on the battlefield, an OPFOR and scarcity of resources to provide care to approximately 50 casualties during a mass casualty exercise April 25.

The medical training was part of a 10-day event for members of the 14th Field Hospital, 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group's Headquarters and Headquarters Company and Martin Army Community Hospital. Volunteers from 13th Corps Support Battalion played the part of casualties.

The mock scenario presented the soldiers with a casualty count that far exceeded that of an average hospital. They had to think on their feet and send the wounded to the correct place for treatment.

"We put our soldiers in a situation where they had to handle their assets (personnel and equipment) the best they could, and they did really well," said Capt. Paddy M. McVeigh, 14th Field Hospital, clinical training officer. "They treated and evacuated patients with the highest standard of care they would get in a normal facility."

One highlight of the exercise was the opportunity to perform two live surgeries in the field, which included a lower extremity mass excision and a pilonidal apstectomy.

"They recovered and we sent them home without any complications," McVeigh said.

Another highlight for the soldiers was the chance to learn how to fly and evacuate patients on Black Hawks, said Sgt. Maurice Ladson, who is a licensed practical nurse with 14th Field Hospital.

"It was outstanding," he said. "The exercise was my first time with a field hospital, and I learned a great deal."

Ladson was the NCO in charge of the moulage treatment area, one at which medical personnel tended to the volunteers' mock injuries.

He said his soldiers had an excellent training opportunity to experiment with different injuries.

"Our casualties were very cooperative and eager to help us learn," said Spc. Shemika Causey, 14th Field Hospital, a medic at the moulage area. "They would say, 'Can I get blood on me, now.'"

The hands-on nature of the exercise was a great experience for her and other medics, she said.

"We're more than ready to do a top-notch job for any situation the Army throws our way," Ladson said.

The next mission is a two-month deployment to Egypt this fall.

"We're looking forward to Egypt," said Staff Sgt. Joseph Anthony, 14th Field Hospital operations NCOIC. "Not only will we see the sites there, we'll also see how well the training we will have completed pays off in the real world."

The field problem gave deployment participants the chance to inventory equipment and make sure everything works, he said.

Both equipment and personnel are ready for the mission, and the exercise proved it, he said.

"It takes a lot of people to make this hospital function," Anthony said. "We were understaffed, and everyone had an extra workload, but we pulled together to get the job done."

Given the hectic and stressful conditions that accompanied the high number of casualties they received, teamwork was imperative to the success of the exercise, said Sgt. Keisha Dixon, 690th GAC.

"It was very well planned out," she said. "Everyone worked together as a cohesive unit. We helped each other out, and everything feel into place."

4th RTB command changes hands

SOCOM soldier takes command of rangers

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The former division chief for Plans in Strategy, Policy, and Plans Directorate, United States Southern Command took command of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion Wednesday morning at the Ranger Memorial.

Lt. Col. Gregory L. Hager succeeds Lt. Col. K. K. Chinn, who will be moving on to serve at the U.S. Army War College, Carlisle Barracks, Penn.

"Serving with 4th RTB has been humbling. It's been a privilege and and honor to serve with this battalion. We have been truly blessed by the big ranger in the sky the past two years," Chinn said. "And finally, Hager, I say to you, train hard, take care of the rangers and have fun."

During the ceremony, Col. Hazen Baron, Ranger Training Brigade commander, took the opportunity to recognize Chinn's accomplishments here as well as welcoming the new commander.

"Chinn, ranger school graduates are indeed your credentials," Baron said. "Darby 6 assumes a new voice on the radio. We welcome the Hagers to the command circle and wish them luck."

Hager's previous assignments include serving as the battalion logistics officer and commander, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment, battalion operations officer, 2nd Battalion, 1st Infantry Regiment, and brigade operations officer, 1st Brigade, 6th Infantry Division (Light).

Hager's badges include the Ranger Tab, Master Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge and the Expert Infantryman Badge.

He is joined by his wife, Ruth, and two children, Kyle and Ethan.

Retired general addresses leadership classes

Former soldier speaks on leadership

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

In the middle of a revolution in military affairs, within an Army that is working toward a sweeping transformation, the bottom line for officers and NCOs is the same as it was 50 years ago: Put combined arms battalions into high-intensity combat, and win at all costs.

That was the message that retired Gen, Barry McCaffrey brought to a Monday morning address in the Marshall Auditorium.

"Lose sight of that," McCaffrey said, "and you lose the nation."

McCaffrey, introduced by Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne as "recognizably one of America's most successful soldiers," addressed his comments to students from nearly every leadership course taught at the Infantry School.

"The next 10 years of our Army leadership is here," the post commander said.

Speaking conversationally, McCaffrey — like Le Moyne, a veteran of both Desert Storm and the Vietnam War — delivered a series of stark warnings and stern injunctions. Leaders, he said, must move to "the center mass of the struggle ... and get killed with the rest if it goes wrong."

"At two o'clock in the morning, if you're not carrying out your responsibility, the nation is in peril," McCaffrey said.

McCaffrey downplayed the importance of the formal tools that the Army gives an officer or NCO to lead troops. Real leadership, he said, has more to do with the kind of personal example a leader sets.

"Your leadership ability to a large degree depends on the kind of person you are," McCaffrey said. "When you walk into an Army element and take charge, you've got to take charge. The motto of an Army officer ought to be, 'frequently wrong, but never in doubt.' "

That last comment drew a ripple of knowing laughter.

The most significant challenges to a leader's ability to get the job done are personal, McCaffrey added.

"Booze is the biggest enemy of 10 percent of you sitting in this room right now," he said. "If the sergeant major calls you on Saturday night and says, 'Hey, sir, we have a problem we need your help with,' and you can't respond because you're drunk — we can't trust you with our soldiers."

Another impediment to quality leadership in the peacetime Army is the zero-defects mentality, McCaffrey said. The idea that a plan has to be flawless and exhaustive before anyone can act leads to 50-page operations orders that bog troops down. And a fixation on military philosophers like Sun Tzu, he added, is a waste of time: Study the map, the weather forecast, and the enemy's organization instead.

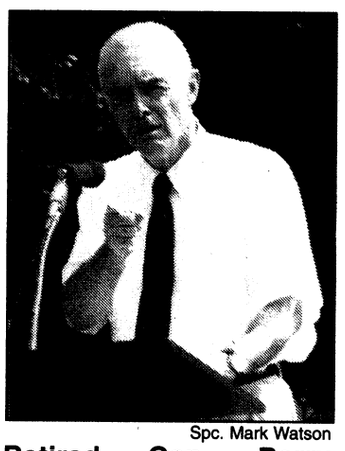
McCaffrey acknowledged that the Army is still struggling to find its role in the post-Cold War world.

New ideas are coming, he said, but they'll take time.

"Somebody doodles on a piece of yellow paper, it'll be 15 years before you see that in your battalion. The lead times are just incredible," McCaffrey said. "But I'd say the same thing for Harvard or the Catholic church."

Following his prepared comments, McCaffrey took questions from soldiers in the audience — a session he began with a straightforward: "Lights up. Let's talk."

McCaffrey responded with clear bitterness to a question about the Vietnam War, calling it a "national tragedy" that was the result of both bad political strategy and bad military strategy.



"This book by (former Secretary of Defense Robert) McNamara is disgusting," McCaffrey said. "He says he figured out we couldn't win, but we kept going."

For all that, he added, Vietnam was the "most positive experience" of his life, with his time as a rifle company commander reflecting a high point of his personal feelings of usefulness and purpose.

As for that purported revolution in military affairs that will lead to a long horizon of low-intensity conflicts and operations other than war, McCaffrey said, "don't believe it. You're gonna have to fight."

But the question of what the threats will be is still one that soldiers should ask every day.

"Your job as a military officer is to be worried, to be scared," he said. "You're paid to be insecure."

Spc. Mark Watson

Retired Gen. Barry McCaffrey addresses the audience during the Best Ranger Ceremony.

Acting on his own advice about the posture of leadership, McCaffrey ended his comments at Marshall Auditorium with a sharp, "on your feet!"

The soldiers in the audience responded instantly. And one whispered a response from the middle rows.

"He sounds like he's still in charge," said the soldier.

Exercise tests transformation concepts

Transportation key to future objective force

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — If the Army's future Objective Force is to be effectively employed more than a decade down the road, the force needs fast shallow-draft transports and aircraft that can carry at least one medium armored vehicle with crew and then land it on a short airstrip.

Those observations were made by officials conducting "Vigilant Warriors," a war game designed to refine emerging Army Transformation concepts at the Army War College in Carlisle Barracks, Pa., April 23-26.

"It is important to bring a force that can affect the situation rapidly," said retired Brig. Gen. Huba Wass De Czege, the commander of the notional U.S.-led international coalition known as the Blue Force. "We can't dribble forces into the theater. It doesn't have impact unless you get there in mass."

Getting there first doesn't mean much unless soldiers arrive with the equipment they need to deploy immediately, he said.

The Army Transformation answer to the issue of Confederate cavalry commander Nathan Bedford Forrest's axiom of "getting there the firstest with the mostest" is packaging troops, their equipment and ammunition for transport together, whether they go by air or sea, according to Brig. Gen. Hank Strattman, war game director. This will allow units to immediately affect operations when they arrive in a theater of operations, he said.

The Gulf War demonstrated the need for packaging as many troops arrived in Saudi Arabia via commercial air and then had to wait up to two weeks before their vehicles and other heavy equipment arrived by sea — unable to conduct any combat operations during the wait.

Besides allowing the Transformation concept of packaging to work more effectively, use of new shallow-draft transports and short-takeoff and landing cargo aircraft would also assist the concept of rapid entry into a theater, Strattman said.

Current military heavy sea and airlift capability requires the use of deep-sea ports and major airports. These ports are usually few enough in any area of the world to be high priority targets for conventional or unconventional attack by an opposing force with the goal of hindering or stopping the flow of men and material into the area, Strattman explained.

The envisioned shallow-draft transports would carry both men and equipment and be able to offload them along almost any coastline. The cargo aircraft would be able to use air strips of 1,000 feet or less.

This would exponentially expand the number of places U.S. forces can be quickly inserted for immediate operations, he said.

The Navy and Air Force are working toward giving the Army the transport capability it wants for the Objective Force. Like the Army, the two services are attempting their own transformations using Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Henry H. Shelton's Joint Vision 2020 as a guide. Part of the joint vision is improved strategic mobility.

Lessons learned from the Gulf War have been the driving force in making the Army Transformation into a reality.

When Saddam invaded Kuwait, we sent in the 82nd Airborne and 101st Air Assault Divisions because they were the only forces we could get to Saudi Arabia quickly, said Col. Neal Anderson, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations. We then basically held our breath, hoping that Saddam wouldn't send his tank divisions across the border while we slowly moved heavier forces in theater because we knew our light forces could not stand up against them for very long.

Shortly after becoming the Army chief of staff almost two years ago, Gen. Eric K. Shinseki set the Army on the road to developing and fielding Interim Brigade Combat Teams to fill the deployability gap between today's Legacy Force and the Objective Force.

Using a medium armored vehicle made by GM GDLS Defense Group L.L.C. as its backbone, the IBCTs will be able to deploy to a theater of operations within 96 hours of notification and be able to stand up to an armored threat more effectively than a light division, officials said.

Third Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, at Fort Lewis, Wash., is currently using a mix of medium to light armored vehicles to develop IBCT tactics and doctrine until it gets the new vehicles later this year.

Under the current timeline, two additional Transformation war games will refine and access desired Objective Force characteristics, concepts and capabilities before a decision is made on what that force will be in 2003.

Beret: Cancelled contracts add more delays to plan

In addition, three contracts were canceled this week with U.S. companies that had beret factories in Romania, South Africa and India.

"Quality was one of the issues," said a DLA spokesperson about terminating the contracts April 30. She added that the three companies had not met their delivery schedule.

Originally, 4.8 million berets were contracted to seven different companies for a total cost of $29.6 million, according to DLA.

The three remaining companies producing berets that will be worn by soldiers are: Bancroft Cap Company in Cabot, Ark., Dorothea Knitting in Canada, and C.W. Headdress, a British company with a factory in Sri Lanka.

The Army's goal is still to get as many of the berets issued by June 14 as possible, according to Lt. Col. Paul Hilton, who is coordinating the fielding plan in the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations.

Priority for fielding in the active component will go to large stateside installations with deployable units, Hilton said, and also to the Recruiting Command and the National Capital Region. He said a number of Army Reserve and National Guard units will also receive the berets prior to June 14.

"It's going to all three components at the same time," Hilton said.

"The chief is adamant about that."

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki announced in October that soldiers would begin wearing black berets on the Army's birthday, June 14, as a symbol of the Army's transformation to a lighter, more deployable force.

Soldiers in Ranger units, who have traditionally worn the black berets, will switch to tan berets. Soldiers in Airborne units will continue to wear the maroon berets, officials said, and Special Forces will continue to wear the green berets.

Fielding of the black berets has already begun, Hilton said. The National Guard has 148,000 at its distribution center. The Army Reserve already has 40,000 and another 32,000 were shipped this week, Hilton said.

He said the first active-component units may receive their berets next week.

Berets were shipped this week from DLA to Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Bragg, N.C.; the Military District of Washington and to Recruiting Command battalions across the nation.

Next week, the fielding plan calls for berets to be shipped to Fort Campbell, Ky. On May 14, berets are scheduled to be shipped to Fort Lewis, Wash.; Fort Carson, Colo., Fort Stewart, Ga., and Hunter Army Airfield, Ga.

DLA is scheduled to ship berets May 21 to Fort Benning and May 28 to: Fort Drum, N.Y.; Fort Riley, Kan.; and Fort Sill, Okla. Berets are scheduled to be shipped June 4 to Fort Bliss, Texas and Fort Polk, La.

Berets will be shipped to other installations and units on a weekly schedule through Oct. 29, according to the plan.

"We do incremental fielding on everything," Hilton said. "Soldiers will understand. Not everyone got the M-16 A2 at the same time."

U.S. Army Europe will be the last to receive the berets, Hilton said. While the priority for fielding goes to stateside soldiers in large units, Hilton said if a division receives the beret — so will all soldiers at that installation.

"If you are on the garrison staff at Fort Stewart, you'll don it the same time as the 3rd Infantry Division," Hilton said.

"We are trying, to the maximum extent possible, to avoid mixed uniforms at the same installation," Hilton said.

Taxis: Contracted on post

the rest goes into the post's Morale Welfare and Recreation fund.

Under the provisions of the contract, the taxi company must provide no fewer than 75 working cabs to service Fort Benning at all times. Each vehicle must be the same color for identification purposes, and each driver must have his picture identification with customer comment cards available for consumers to fill out, as well as a valid city of Columbus taxi permit.

Possibly the most notable portion of the taxi contract is the set rate drivers are able to charge for on post services.

"This contract stopped the overcharging and implemented flat fees for the installation," Jackson said. However, soldiers are charged regular meter rates beyond the installation gates.

The shuttle service also has several of the same guidelines. They must have at least 10 shuttles available for transport, all vehicles must be the same color and their rates are also set for the two airports.

"I think it's the greatest thing since sliced bread," said Jackson. "It helped a problem on this installation, it provides a quality service and security for family members, soldiers and civilians here."

Since Fort Benning began contracting unofficial travel approximately 10 years ago, complaints about taxi drivers and their methods of handling soldiers has gone down almost 95 percent, said Alan Stewart, chief for the Directorate of Community Activities.

"We just don't get complaints," he said. "We went in, isolated and solved the problem."

Postal service helps 'stamp out hunger'

ACS, postmen work together for food drive

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

One day a 25-year-old specialist found himself standing on the side of the road with a punctured tire, tow charges, a car full of spoiled groceries and an empty wallet.

The next morning he stood in line at the Army Community Service office, hoping Fort Benning's food locker would supply a meal for his family of four.

It happens every day, often several times a day. Someone turns to the food locker for emergency, temporary relief.

And like the young soldier, they leave with a bag full of groceries or a voucher to spend at the commissary. Just another way Fort Benning takes care of its own, said Al Deane, the Army Emergency Relief officer in charge of the emergency food locker.

It takes a lot of groceries to feed Fort Benning's hungry, and Deane said much of the funding for the food locker comes from an ACS support fund. But the food locker gets a little help once a year from an unlikely source — the postman.

The letter carriers employed by the U.S. Postal Service to deliver the mail, will be looking for a handout May 12. They'll collect canned goods and nonperishable foods, and every "bite" collected on Fort Benning goes directly to the food locker.

"Fort Benning's contributions stay on Fort Benning to help Fort Benning soldiers," said Jerry Hooks, a 74-year-old retired letter carrier from Columbus, who helps coordinate the local "Stamp Out Hunger" drive each year.

Sometime this week, Fort Benning residents will find postcards in their mailboxes reminding them that next Saturday marks the ninth annual food drive, the largest one-day effort of its kind in the country.

Sponsored by the National Association of Letter Carriers, in conjunction with the U.S. Postal Service, Campbell's Soup, United Way and Saturn, last year's drive netted more than 64.2 million pounds of nonperishable foods for local food banks around the country.

Columbus area residents donated approximately 27,000 pounds, all of which went to the local chapter of the 2nd Harvest National Food Bank Network, which in turn distributed the food to local charities.

Fort Benning didn't fare as well, Hooks said, declining to say just how much food was collected on post. But this year, he's hoping for a much better response.

"We have five carrier routes on Fort Benning, and each of those carriers will deposit the food he collects at the fire station on Custer Road, where we'll get an accurate weight before it goes to the food locker," Hooks said. "Knowing that their contribution (benefits the food locker and fellow soldiers), I'm hoping Fort Benning residents catch on and make this the biggest drive ever."

Mack Toole, president of the local NALC, said Columbus carriers are hoping to pick up 36,000 pounds of food this year.

With that goal in mind, nearly 30 retired carriers, many military veterans, will be joining the effort at various collection points.

Fort Benning residents are asked to leave nonperishable foods, such as canned meats, tuna, fruits and vegetables, dried milk, cereals, juices, pastas and boxed food mixes by their mail boxes, where it will be picked up when the mail is delivered. No glass containers please.

Club Beyond joins effort to end hunger

Local children help raise awareness

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Every time you take a breath, somewhere in the world a child dies of hunger.

That's more than 30,000 each day, or eight times the number of children living on Fort Benning.

In an effort to increase awareness and raise funds to help alleviate the crisis, 25 members of Fort Benning's Club Beyond joined young people around the world in a 30-hour fast, sponsored by World Vision, the world's largest, privately funded Christian nonprofit relief organization.

Called the 30-Hour Famine, the annual hunger awareness program draws one million participants from 21 countries, more than 600,000 from the United States alone.

Last year's campaign netted $9 million, money that goes to provide immediate famine relief and long-term assistance to help communities overcome poverty overseas and in the United States. Club Beyond members, under the guidance and supervision of director Bruce Mulford and his wife, Neisy, solicited pledges in the weeks prior to the event, which began April 27 after school and ended Saturday at 6 p.m.

They began fasting after lunch and met for prayer and devotions at the club's new youth center on Wold Street, before separating into smaller groups and spending the night at sponsors' houses on post.

Saturday they reunited at a dilapidated playground in the Custer Terrace housing area and spent seven hours cleaning and repainting playground equipment and distributing sand around the park. Ashley Bowers, 11-years-old, explained the rationale behind

MPs tighten speed control

Traffic violators and speeders slow down.

Because of daylight savings time and the increasing complaints of speeding in housing areas, the Military Police Activity is shifting their focus to identifying those citizens who put lives in danger by careless driving.

"My intent is to make Fort Benning a safer, more secure environment for those who live here," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement. "It's easy for people to believe they're saving time by speeding. But they're taking the potential risk of a near miss, hitting a child or worse."

The traffic section of MPA has exclusive jurisdiction to enforce traffic laws on Fort Benning, and they intend to do just that, especially now, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Kelley, traffic NCOIC.

"We're going to be out there. Our enforcement is going to be both passive and active to heighten awareness," said the NCOIC. "Making people aware of the laws and enforcing them is one of the most important parts of our job."

This shifting of emphasis will continue until the situation in the housing areas improves.

"This is not to inconvenient our soldiers or their families, but to help safeguard their children," Lt. Col. Kelley said. "There is no place that you need to get on post that you should speed and get there quicker. It's simply not worth the possibility of injury to yourself or to our kids."

MPs remind citizens the speed limit on post is 25 miles per hour unless otherwise posted and 15 miles per hour in the housing areas, and to always drive safely and defensively.

Big Brothers-Big Sisters partner with middle school

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Last year Donovan Nance learned an important lesson in science class — boredom and a short temper make an explosive combination.

"My behavior wasn't so good," said Nance, a 14-year-old eighth-grader at Faith Middle School. "I had a temper and too much time on my hands. I was getting in a little but of trouble."

Nance's "little bit of trouble" led to several school suspensions, and his science teacher suggested he join the school's mentor program.

Now in his second year in the program, Nance's grades have improved and he's experiencing fewer disciplinary problems at school. His mother said she's seen a remarkable improvement in his behavior.

"I've seen a lot of changes in him," said Staff Sgt. Constance Jones. "At first I was skeptical about him being involved, but it's going great. He's hanging out with a good crowd and he's learning to control his temper.

"I think the program has given him another outlet, a place to vent, so his temper doesn't come out in the classroom."

Nance is partnered with "big brother" Bruce Mulford, director of Fort Benning's Club Beyond and a first-time participant in the Big Brother-Big Sister program of Columbus, which is teaming up with Faith to provide an in-house mentoring program at the school.

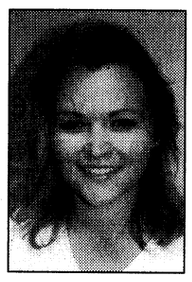
Mulford and Nance meet at least once a week for lunch or a friendly game of chess and constructive conversation. They're looking forward to attending an upcoming Columbus Wardogs ballgame.

"Donovan's a naturally quiet guy, but he's really competitive and he loves sports," Mulford said. "We have a lot in common. We share the same interests.

"He's a good kid who just needed some encouragement and direction. I'm enjoying the relationship and he's enjoying an extra role model, another adult in his life who cares about him and how he feels."

That's what the program is all about, said Fred McCraw, Faith's sixth-grade guidance counselor and program facilitator.

"The mentor is not a babysitter or a surrogate parent. He's not a counselor and not necessarily a tutor," McCraw said. "He's a third party, another outlet, who's willing to listen and spend time with a child."



McCraw said the mentor program, now in its second year, marries the school's teacher-mentor program with Big Brothers-Big Sisters.

"On the in-house side, we have teachers and administrators who have volunteered to spend their planning period and even free time after school working with these students," McCraw said. "Sometimes the logistics of meshing students' and teachers'

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

Each year there are residents who are potential gardeners deliberating the idea of cultivating a vegetable garden.

Inevitably those new gardeners have questions and make mistakes. These tips should help alleviate those mistakes and answer some of those questions.

Should I do anything to my soil first?

Yes. Even the best soil benefits from amendments. On Fort Benning the soils are predominantly clay and must be amended to be successful. The choice of material to amend the soil with is a personal or financial one.

Based on the size of the garden plot, money can be an issue. If the plot is small go for the good stuff, compost, available everywhere. If the plot is large get the cheap stuff, top soil. And an even better choice is the free stuff, manure at local farms or stables.

Do I water everyday?

No. Despite the hot weather, despite the lack of rain, plants still only need an inch of water per week. You will do more damage from overwatering than underwatering. Always water deeply. Your plants suffer from being given a little water now and then. Shallow watering causes plant roots to stay at the surface rather than rooting deeply into the top 6 to 8 inches of soil. Shallow roots systems are stressed easily and will not produce sturdy healthy plants.

Should I fertilize every week?

No. Excessive fertilizers leach from the ground into our water supply.

Plants can't take up all the fertilizer they are given. A good schedule is to fertilize every 14 days at the most. Start with a high nitrogen fertilizer, like fish emulsion which is 5-1-1, then switch over to a fertilizer high in phosphorus if it is a fruiting plant like tomatoes, peppers, and squash, like a 5-9-5.

The best piece of advice is to observe your garden. By looking at your plants every day you will be able to tell if something has gone wrong. You can judge watering needs through observation. If your plants begin to droop give them water otherwise stick to regular watering. You will catch early signs of pests through observation. Early detection will allow you to treat your plants with insecticidal soap instead of toxic chemicals.

Most new gardeners "love" their plants to death. Too much attention will create weak plants that are susceptible to disease and pests.

Gardeners play a very small part in raising a good garden.

The best success in the garden comes from healthy plants.

Healthy plants come from proper care. Water deep and infrequently and fertilize every 14 days. Let nature do its job and don't force it.

Liquid investments great for emergencies

Low-risk medium provides stability for financial plan

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This is the second story of a seven-part series which takes a look at the basics of investing.

Risk vs. reward.

The two have battled for ages in the investment world.

"Risk, in the context of investments, generally involves the potential for gain or loss," said Ann Pratcher, manager, Financial Readiness Program. "Most people look at the risk of losing part of their investment."

There is a positive correlation between risk and reward. One tends to build more assets when one takes more risk with his capital, and vice versa.

Conservative liquid investments — cash one can obtain quickly — such as savings accounts and money market funds, and longer-term investments such as U.S. Treasury bills, 30-, 60- and 90-day U.S. Treasury bonds, certificates of deposit and savings bonds fit into the "less risk, less reward" category.

Most certificates of deposit, which pay interest on money deposited for three months or longer, are not considered the same as cash, because there's usually a penalty for withdrawing money early. Still, CDs can be advantageous in a declining interest rate economy because they lock in a rate which investors could not earn later, said Frank McCanham, Chartered Life Underwriter and Chartered Financial Consultant at Financial and Asset Management in Columbus.

Despite the corresponding low interest rates of CDs and savings bonds, they can be beneficial for soldiers, said Capt. Jason Dickinson, Basic Combat Training Brigade, who has studied the financial services field for more than five years.

"Also, these are an exceptional replacement for a traditional savings account considering the rates of return are nearly double. These can often be 'testers' to see if a soldier is really ready for longer term investment commitment."

He emphasized traditional savings account usually do not beat inflation but money market funds and CDs usually do.

"Money market funds are fine because they provide liquidity, flexibility and safety," McCanham said. "In fact, they are more secure than most people realize."

Money market funds are not guaranteed, but the Security Investor Protection Corporation helps protect them by ensuring their fund managers make sound decisions. Any investments backed by the U.S. government such as bonds do not pay exceptionally high interest rates, but they are extremely safe. The government has never defaulted on a loan.

For the new investor under age 40, the percentage of investment expenditures made up of such investments should be relatively small, Dickinson said.

"This allows for the majority of one's money to work aggressively. When time is on your side, like it is for the young, one should stay aggressive."

Conservative investments are excellent mediums for emergencies, McCanham said.

"An emergency fund doesn't have to be in a cookie jar," he said. "A money-market fund works well."

An investor should avoid touching funds equal to the amount of money that will sustain an investor for two or three months, McCanham added.

Individuals can also use these investments as a storage shed for other investment opportunities that may arise, such as when the market is down and excellent stocks are cheap, he said.

As soldiers become older, they should increase the cash percentage of their portfolio.

Soldiers can direct questions about the above information, or other topics, to Pratcher at 545-5485.

Pet owners take caution to rabid animals

Missy Taylor
Vet Services

Pet owners should be concerned — a rabid fox was caught in Columbus. But only after it attacked two men. For those who think this incident is an isolated case, remember, the fox contracted it from another animal.

However, that other animal was not as lucky as the fox, which was caught. Lucky because rabies is a painful disease. Animals that are infected with rabies have difficulty swallowing, increased drooling, changes in their behavior, and general sickness. Once symptoms set in, it's too late, and the only humane thing to do is euthenize the animal.

There is treatment for humans, but you must start the series of painful shots before symptoms are evident.

Rabies is very serious. It kills 50,000 humans and millions of animals around the world yearly. Ever wonder why it is so hard to ship your pet to Hawaii? Because rabies has been reported in every state, except Hawaii. Any mammal is capable of being infected. Raccoons, skunks, foxes, bats, dogs, and cats can all get rabies, and so can humans.

An animal contracts rabies through saliva, which is transferred by a bite from an animal that has the disease. In some cases, just having the saliva come in contact with an area of broken skin is enough to become infected.

Rabies is totally preventable. Vaccinate pets once a year against it. One shot, once a year, is a small price to pay for the safety of your pet and your family. If you see a stray animal around your house, do not attempt to trap the animal by yourself, call Animal Control at 545-5222. If you or your pet comes in contact with a wild animal, contact your veterinarian immediately, and have Animal Control trap the animal in question.

If you have a Military I.D. card, active duty or retired, you can call Fort Benning Vet Services at 545-4444 and schedule an appointment to have your pet vaccinated.

For more information on the rabies disease contact the Center for Disease Control and Prevention at (404) 639-1052 or your local veterinarian. It is a post regulation that all pets over 12 weeks of age be vaccinated against rabies and registered with Vet Services.

Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I'm going to be a proud single parent of a beautiful, healthy 1-year-old. My friend told me that the Army would help pay for some of the costs of my adoption. Can you tell me if this is true and exactly what the program is all about?

A: Generally, under the provisions of 10 U.S.C. section 1052, and as implemented under DoD Instruction 1341.9, service members who adopt a child under age 18 years old may be reimbursed a maximum of $2,000 (in the case of more than one adoption in a calendar year, a maximum of $5,000) per child for qualified expenses related to the adoption.

However, stepparent adoptions are not reimbursable under this program.

Members of the uniformed services must be in an active-duty status to qualify for this program.

In addition, full-time active Guard and Reserve members on active duty orders for at least 180 days are also eligible. Adoption reimbursement expenses may be paid to single or married service members; however, if you are a dual military couple, then only one service member can apply for reimbursement relating to the same child.

You must apply within one year after completion of the adoption, that is, issuance of a final order or final decrees of adoption.

You must submit DD Form 2675 (Reimbursement Request for Adoption Expenses), all receipts and the final adoption decree.

Your commander must also certify the adoption by completing Block 30 of the form.

Submit this form, along with all documents to your servicing Personnel Activity Center, who will then send the entire application to the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, Cleveland Center, for processing.

Adoptions that qualify for reimbursement include a child under age 18, adoption of a foreign child and adoption of children with "special needs."

These adoptions qualify only if arranged by a qualified adoption agency, that is, a state or local government agency that has responsibility under state or local law for child placement through adoption, or any other source authorized by a state to provide adoption placement, if the adoption is supervised by a court under state or local law.

You will only be reimbursed, up to $2,000 per child to a maximum of $5,000 per calendar year to any servicemember, for documented, reasonable and necessary adoption expenses.

Reasonable and necessary expenses include:

- Public and private agency fees, including adoptive fees charged by an agency in a foreign country.
- Placement fees, including fees charged adoptive parents for counseling.
- Legal fees, including court costs, for services that are unavailable to a member of the military services under 10 U.S.C. section 1044.
- Under certain expenses, some medical expenses for the pre-adoptive child and biological mother.
- Temporary foster care charges when payment of such charges is required to be made before the adoptive child's placement.

Upon submission of a properly completed form with all documentation attached, you can expect payment by electronic fund transfer to your account within 30 days.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division to make an appointment, at 545-3281 and, as always, call starting at 8 a.m. Fridays to make an appointment for the following week.

Dental care now saves problems

Sgt. 1st Class Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

ARLINGTON, Va. — Taking young children to the dentist makes them better dental patients later in life — reducing stress for both them and their dentist.

"Going to the dentist is not something people generally look forward to," Navy Capt. Lawrence McKinley said. "The earlier children can be exposed to the office atmosphere and to the equipment and procedures, the more comfortable children become. Dental visits become less frightening for them."

McKinley is a dentist and the senior consultant for dentistry for the Tricare Management Activity and DoD's Office of Health Affairs here.

Children of parents enrolled in the Tricare Dental Program are automatically covered when they turn four, but parents can voluntarily enroll children at any age.

During an American Forces Information Service interview, McKinley encouraged people to enroll their children as soon as they have teeth.

Coverage in the Tricare Dental Program includes "established guidelines for preventive care for children and adolescents," he said. The program covers twice-yearly exams and cleanings for enrolled members.

Preventive care isn't just important for children either. Everyone enrolled in the program should use the benefit regularly, McKinley said.

Military family members do use their dental benefits more than their civilian counterparts, McKinley said, but there's always room for improvement.

About 80 percent of people eligible are enrolled in the Tricare Dental Program. Of that 80 percent, however, 57 percent see a dentist at least once a year, McKinley said. Only about half of the civilian population see a dentist in a given year, he added.

McKinley said DoD officials want to increase usage in the dental plan because they want to improve beneficiaries' quality of life.

"If you can prevent more complicated and prolonged dental care down the road by using preventive care up front, it's to everybody's advantage," he said.

For more information on the Tricare Dental Program, visit www.tricare.osd.mil.

Students learn law lessons in trial

Local youths participate in Law Day

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

The verdict was in for nine students cited for winning recent Fort Benning art and essay contests. Several Fort Benning children were honored April 26 at the annual Law Day luncheon at the Columbus Convention and Trade Center.

The winners each participated with the theme, "How the Law Protects Children."

National Law Day was Tuesday and Staff Judge Advocate is celebrating three different ways. A Law Day luncheon, a 5K race and a mock trial have extended the festivities through two weeks.

Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters and Georgia Governor Roy E. Barnes were among the guests at last week's event.

Barnes encouraged others in the judicial profession to use their influence to help better inform the public.

"We have an obligation as lawyers to make sure that we help support laws and procedures and that we help implement laws and procedures to ensure that children are adequately supported," Barnes said. "Our profession requires us to be informed and involved and make sure that we spread the knowledge that we have to other citizens."

It was the same theme of sharing knowledge that Capt. Brian Bohlen, 3rd Brigade legal advisor, said he hoped Fort Benning students obtained from the local contest.

"Sharing their thoughts on paper gives the students an opportunity to think about how the law effects them as well," said Bohlen. "This year we had a tremendous amount of participation, with literally hundreds of entries."

The contest not only allowed members of Fort Benning's law office to see what local students equate regulations with, but also gave children the chance to think about how law integrates their life, said Bohlen.

Popular topics included smoking, traffic and seat belt laws, as well as unique topics like unsupervised Internet use.

The winners included Meredith Shutt, Lydia Grant, Marian Cruz, Jason Bartlett, Brittany Williams, Ashley Chinn, Joanne Boggs, Matthew Larson and Danielle Hawley.

The law lessons continue today for Faith Middle School students. Seventh- and eighth-graders will have the opportunity to watch a mock trial and see court action firsthand. The event takes place today, with two court proceedings, the first for seventh-graders at 1:30 p.m. and another for the older students at 2:30 p.m.

Capt. Richard Henry, trial counsel, said it's important to observe the law process in action and to gain respect for the judicial system.

"Trials, and the processes involved, play a major role in society and the law. Therefore showing students a little bit of how it goes on is important. In addition, we try to pick topics of interest to the students, as in this year with the dress code.

"That way it is enlightening, and informative as well," Henry said.

The experience is an annual event sponsored by the Office of Staff Judge Advocate to coincide with National Law Day.

Using facts and figures from actual court cases, the scripted case will lead to a question and answer period upon its completion.

This year's trial theme of school uniforms is a topic trial counsel Capt. Paula Harrison said affects the children on a daily basis.

"We want students to see how trials work and to see that laws effect things in their lives everyday," said Harrison.

The third event takes place tomorrow at 9 a.m. The Law Day Fun Run takes off at Stillwell Field. Registration begins at 8 a.m. Registration the day of run is $9, 18 and younger and 19 older is $10.

Race age groups are 18 and under, 19 to 29, 30 to 39, 40 to 49, and 50 and older. An awards ceremony will be held immediately after the race.

For more information on these events, call the law office at 545-3285.

the community service project.

"We're fasting and working hard so we can know what it feels like. The people in poor countries work very hard, but they still don't get three meals a day like we do," she said

Bowers admitting she'd never gone a whole day without food and was "a little bit hungry" by the time she arrived at the playground.

"But I can go to the fridge any time I want and find something to eat. I want to know what it feels like to for the kids who can't do that."

Kids like 5-year-old Ezekial, who lives in the Tanzania, one of the poorest countries in the world.

Drought, tsetse fly infestation and undeveloped agriculture have rendered his community the most impoverished in all the region.

Club Beyond members learned of Ezekial's plight and those of many other children like him in destitute communities throughout Tanzania and Peru.

Each participant wore a badge with the picture, name and brief biography of the child they represented throughout the famine.

"It puts a name and a face to the whole project," Mulford said.

"When these kids feel hungry, they realize what that child is going through every day. When they went to bed hungry last night, they realized that child goes to bed hungry every single night," said Mulford. "Seeing a face makes it worth our while, makes us realize it's real people out there starving and dying each day."

To date, Club Beyond has raised more than $1,500 for World Vision's famine relief fund.

Mulford said he hopes to reach $2,000, and will be accepting donations until the Monday deadline.

Anyone wishing to contribute to the 30-Hour Famine should call Mulford at 545-2359.

For more information about World Vision and the 30 Hour Famine, call (800) 7- FAMINE or log on to www.30hourfamine.org.

Mentors: Listen to youths' problems, concerns

schedules makes a match nearly impossible, so we've expanded our program to include Big Brothers-Big Sisters to draw in volunteers from the community."

Currently there are 32 students enrolled in the program and 46 on a waiting list.

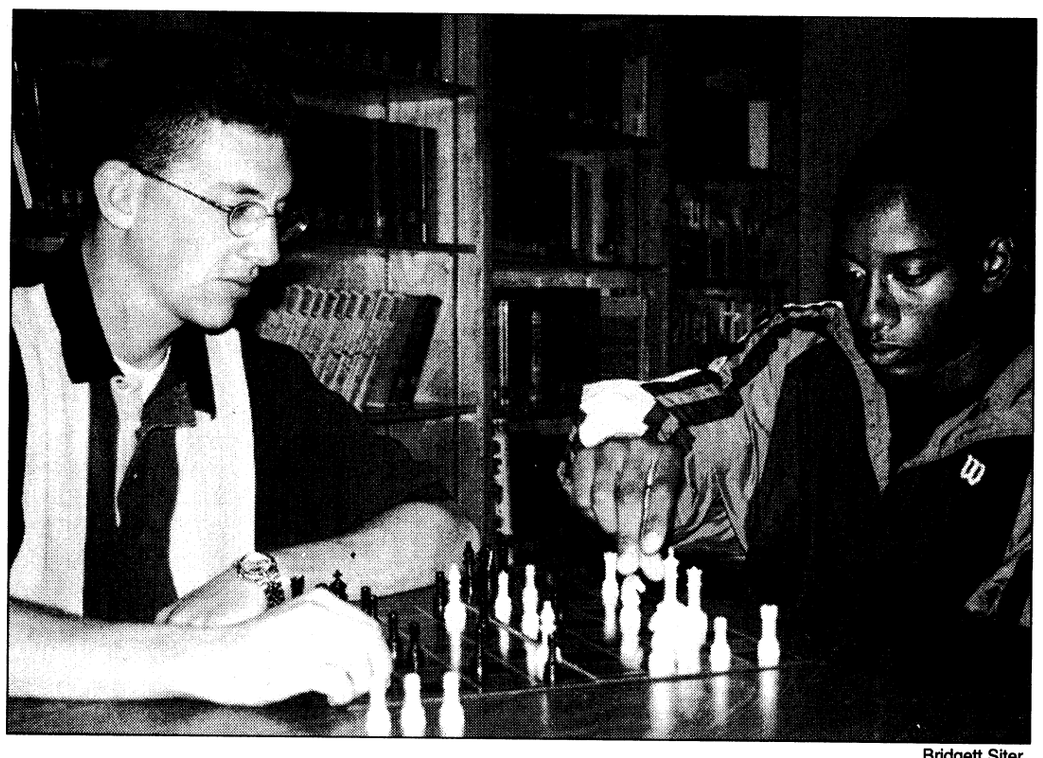
"There's a great need here," McCraw said. "It doesn't require a lot of skills or a lot of training. We just need someone with a big heart and a desire to see these children grow and learn."

McCraw said the nature of life on Fort Benning provides families with unique challenges. The school's mentor program is designed to assist families rather than usurp parental guidance or authority.

"We have a lot of single parents and a lot of parents overseas," McCraw said. "The program helps fill a void. It gives these kids someone else to talk to, someone to listen. Even as adults we often just need a willing ear. It's the same with children, particularly at this age. They just want to be heard and accepted."

McCraw said the Big Brothers-Big Sisters program handles the "monumental administrative tasks" involved in running such a program.

"They have the wherewithal and expertise to handle this kind of project," he said. "We just latched on to them and let them take the lead."



Anthony Lane, community projects manager for the Columbus chapter of Big Brothers-Big Sisters, heads the Faith program. Lane echoed McCraw's plea for more volunteers.

"We have a big need for more people willing to give a little time," Lane said. "We need people who can give an hour each week just to spend with a kid. Some need tutoring, some just need to talk."

McCraw said the program is already making inroads into the absentee and discipline problems at the school.

"Statistically, since last year, we've seen discipline problems diminish, grades improve and absences decline," he said. "On a more personal level, I'm seeing these students appear to be happier. They're seeing things from a different perspective. They know someone really cares."

For more information about the mentor program, call Faith Middle School at 545-5524 or Big Brothers-Big Sisters at 327-3760.

Dexter students celebrate Earth Day, Science Day

Courtesy photo

Dexter Elementary School students put their hands together during Earth Day and Science Day festivities April 13. Students and faculty celebrated the dedication of JOVALY, the school's new greenhouse.

Children take part in festivities

Terri Bond
Dexter Elementary School

Students at Dexter Elementary School had a double celebration April 13.

Earth Day is celebrated by most of the world April 22, but since that day was during Fort Benning Schools' Spring Break, Dexter students celebrated Earth Day on the Friday before the vacation began. This was followed by a hands-on Science Day.

Dexter's Earth Day celebration began in the courtyard ecology habitat with a history of Earth Day, recited by kindergarten and first-grade e-Club members.

The highlight of the program was the dedication of the school's greenhouse.

The greenhouse was officially named "The JOVALY," in honor of the three present and past faculty members who donated the grant making it possible for Dexter School to have a greenhouse.

Third-grade "Earth Watchers" presented plaques to faculty members Joyce Flatt, Virginia Wilcox and Lynn Harp.

The name JOVALY comes from using two letters from the first names of the three teachers.

Music teacher Cy Dietrich added the finishing touches to the day by writing a song in honor of this special dedication.

The celebration ended with third-graders singing the Earth Watchers song, and afterwards the students were invited to enjoy Science Day activities provided by the Georgia Youth Science and Technology Center.

Many fun, exciting educational activities were set up in the multipurpose room for Dexter students to enjoy during the day.

"My favorite activity was poking a skewer through a blown-up balloon," said third-grader Shelli Bond. "I couldn't believe the balloon didn't pop. The secret was putting oil all over the skewer."

Dexter students also joined schools nationwide to vote online for their favorite tree.

Roger Ingram, Dexter school media specialist, provided science connections through literature by reading environmentally oriented books.

"Although the focus was science, there were connections to math, reading, language arts and social studies — it was truly an interdisciplinary day," Ingram said.

Beware trip fraud

Better Business Bureau

If you haven't already made your summer vacation plans, the Better Business Bureau warns you to be cautious. Each year, hundreds of consumers get ripped off by fraudulent offers that promise — but fail to deliver — that much needed "fun in the sun."

Not all fraudulent offers involve losing money; some are simply misleading. The accommodations may not be what you expected, or what you thought you paid for. Promoters may sell packages that do not include confirmed hotel spaces or flights. And, even if accommodations and flights are confirmed, the actual cost of the package is sometimes misrepresented when companies fail to inform customers about additional fees.

The Better Business Bureau urges consumers to take special precautions when booking trips. Here are a few suggestions:

- Be wary of offers that promise "the moon" for a very low price, or ones that require immediate purchase to lock in the announced rate.
- Before paying anything, request all details of the trip in writing, including total cost, restrictions where applicable, cancellation penalties and exact names of the airlines and hotels included in the packet.
- If a charter flight is involved, ask for the charter operators name and address and then check its registration with the U.S. Department of Transportation, Office of Consumer Affairs.
- Be suspicious of vacation certificates that claim you have "won" a hotel stay or resort visit. If you discover you have to pay something to get the promised "free" vacation, look elsewhere.
- Never give credit card information over the phone to a company or person you're not familiar with.
- Use reputable travel agents.
- Contact the Better Business Bureau of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama for a report on the company you're considering using.

reflections

Are you happy? Happiness is not something that is found outside of ourselves ... it comes from within.

No one else can make you happy. Happiness is a by-product of our thoughts, words and actions. In Matthew 15:18, we are told that those things which proceed out of the mouth come from the heart. This is an acknowledgement that our thoughts become our words and our words precede our actions.

How would you like to have your every thought for the past six months flashed on a screen for all your acquaintances, neighbors and the church friends to see? We need to give careful attention to our thoughts not only because God knows them, but also because our thoughts determine our character.

I once heard the following story told by an Auburn professor.

"I had gone to Scout camp every summer for several years, but one year was different from others. On the first day of camp, a distinct impression came to me: 'Your little sister has been bitten by a rattlesnake.' Rattlesnakes were not uncommon around our mountain home, and Lorene played outside often. I fretted — should I ask my Scoutmaster to hike out of our mountain retreat and drive me home? What can I do for Lorene? Will she die? I was miserable. The camp lasted five days. Everyday I worried. Everyday I wondered if I should ask to be taken home. It seemed like an eternity, but finally the week ended. As we drove up to the house, my heart was pounding. There was Lorene in the front yard riding her bike. No one had seen a snake all week. Sometimes we assume that the devil's objective is to get us to sin, but the truth is that his objective is to make us miserable."

He can accomplish this objective two ways. One is to get us to sin. Wickedness will never produce happiness.

The second way is to get us to take no joy in living. Imagine a life where there is no hope in Christ, no faith in redemption, no love for others. We don't have to sin or do anything wrong to be miserable; all we have to do is believe Satan's lie, and listen to his voice. Galatians 5:22 tells us that "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness and faith."

The theologian George Q. Cannon has said, "Whenever darkness fills our minds, we may know that we are not possessed of the spirit of God, and we must get rid of it.

When we are filled with the spirit of God, we are filled with joy, and with peace and with happiness, no matter what our circumstances may be; for it is a spirit of cheerfulness and happiness."

It is the spirit of God within us that produces happiness and we all deserve to be happy.

Respect for others begins at home

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

If we are to rid our nation of bigotry and prejudice, we must practice respect for others and teach tolerance to others.

In the film South Pacific, one of the songs describes how "You must be carefully taught" if bias and racism are to survive. To combat discrimination and stereotyping, we must practice and teach tolerance and respect for others.

Tolerance and respect for others begin at home. Parents set the example for their children. The Bible expects us to be an example to others in speech and in love (I Timothy 4:11).

Tolerance and respect for others are promoted at school, church and work. Leaders set the example for their units. Leaders are the role models, set the standards and make on-the-spot corrections. Evil prevails when good people do nothing.

Avoid coarse jesting and humor that makes fun of a person's race, ethnicity, gender, handicap, age or religion. Be firm by telling others, "That's inappropriate;" "That's not funny;" or "That language is not tolerated here."

Refrain from general statements that lead to stereotypes, such as: "Old people can be like that;" or "Woman driver." And eliminate disparaging names from your vocabulary.

When speaking, put the person first. Say "the singer, who happens to be blind," rather than "the blind singer." Or use neutral terms, "that driver;" "that person;" or "that individual."

Take inventory of your own beliefs, words and actions; make the necessary corrections; set the example; and don't tolerate disrespect and prejudice in your life, your home or your work.

Are you struggling with the effects of biases and stereotypes? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, located at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 for more information or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Philippians 4: 45 — Rejoice in the Lord always. I say it again: Rejoice! Let your gentleness be evident to all. The Lord is near.

Gators participate in Field of Dreams

RedStixx share America's great past time

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Baseball has been said to be the all-American sport, especially for children.

The Fort Benning Gator's T-ball team spent Friday night hobnobbing with the Columbus RedStixx baseball team as a part of the Field of Dreams program.

The program brings one or two community baseball teams to the game almost every night during the summer months to meet the RedStixx players, and to enjoy being in the spotlight for one night, said Bill Levy, RedStixx assistant manager.

Each player receives a baseball, which they can have autographed by all the RedStixx players, a certificate for a free, large pizza from a local pizza parlor, a hotdog and hamburger cookout, and best of all, they are introduced to the crowd in good old baseball style at the beginning of the game.

The Gators, a seven player co-ed team, said they enjoyed their experience with the RedStixx.

"I want to get all the autographs of the players," said Billy Reese, catcher and third baseman. "It's cool. And I'll always play baseball."

This is Reese's first year playing T-ball, and he said he enjoys playing the game.

"It's very generous for the RedStixx to offer this opportunity for the children," said Melanie Williams, a player's mother. "It's very impressive that there are people out there who are willing to help the children."

Levy said it's all in a day's work because the kids are at the best age to find out the players are human and people just like they are.

Gator's head coach Sgt. Walter Edwards, believes the best thing children can have growing up is a positive role model.

"This is important so the children can grow up to be outstanding citizens and people," Edwards said.

"Even better, the children are learning one of America's greatest pastimes."

Athlete shares dream

Officer Candidate runs into high Olympic finish

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Many athletes train for countless hours just on one sport to become a world class contender, but only a select few people can master a number of events.

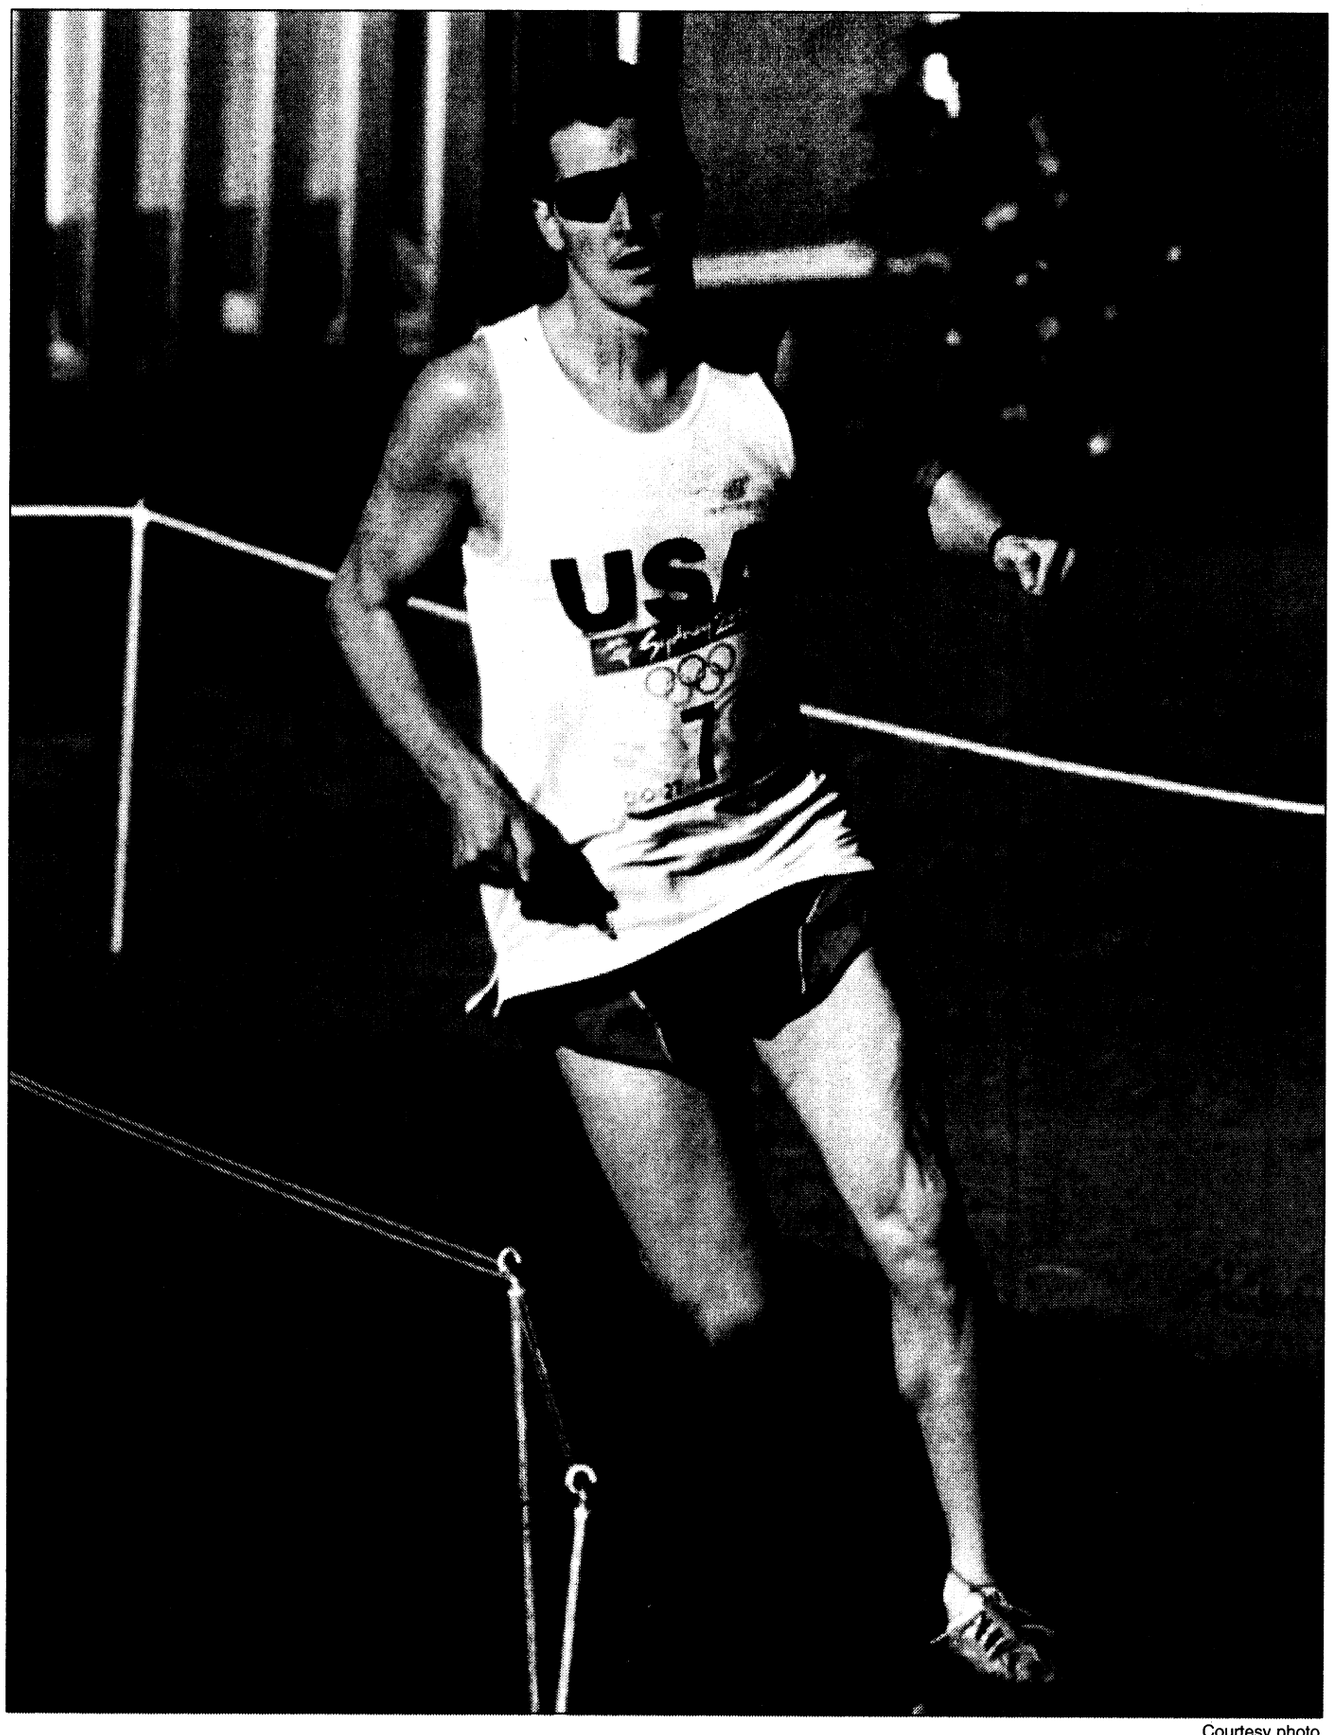
Fort Benning can boast one of its' own is a master of several events — five to be exact, all wrapped up into one .

Officer Candidate Chad Senior competed as a specialist in the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia where he took sixth place in the modern pentathlon.

Senior said he grew up running and swimming, so when the Army World Class Athlete Program in Colorado Springs, Colo., offered him a slot on the team, he accepted.

"They told me they would teach me to shoot, fence and ride," Senior said. "So I took a gamble, and it has paid off."

Senior said he trained hard to make the Olympic team.



"I would eat, breath and talk Olympics," he said. "I had to move from my house to a motel to keep away from distractions.

"It was difficult," he said. "You can't help but feel the pressure."

All his hard work and dedication paid off while at the summer games.

"I was in the lead after three events," Senior said. "There were

Soldiers compete in Cyprus

Men, women fare well in competition

CYPRUS — Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit was the only American to compete in the men's trap final at the opening 2001 Cyprus World Cup April 26.

Erickson went into the final tied for third place with 119 targets, but he missed six of the 25 targets in the final round, dropping him to sixth place overall.

The Americans fared much better in the women's Grand Prix.

USAMU's Sgt. Joetta R. Dement tied for first in the women's trap event.

But she was edged out by New Zealand's Teresa Borrel in a shoot-off.

Dement had been trailing Borrel going into the final, l 67 to 64, but she gained three targets in the 25-target final, making the score an even 87.

The two women then proceeded to the shoot-off.

Dement was unable to break her target and thus ended up with the Silver Medal when Borrel knocked hers out of the sky and took top honors and the Gold Medal.

The national shotgun team, sponsored by USA Shooting and NRA Sports, is currently in Cairo, Egypt, competing in the 2001 World Clay Target Championships which began Saturday and end Wednesday.

Iron Soldier bike race promotes safety, endurance

1st Lt. Stacy Picard
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Iron Soldier Bicycle Race, sponsored by A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, is scheduled for May 15.

The 20-mile course will run from the bottom of Cardiac Hill to the intersection of 8th Division and Jamestown Roads on Fort Benning.

The idea for the race came from Capt. Granville Smith, A Co. commander.

"The race is to promote a spirit of friendly competition, that is challenging and lots of fun," Smith said. "The idea came about as a result of the monthly bicycle rides that our company cadre conducted."

The cadre section within A Co. has been conducting bicycle physical training over the last few months. It began with a 12-mile trip and gradually increases with each session. All soldiers in the company are invited to participate, but only a few have taken up the challenge at this point.

One soldier who takes part in the bicycle PT sessions is Master Sgt. Kevin Elliott, USAIC Equal Opportunity Office NCOIC. He said he enjoys biking and has been training on Fort Benning's various hills and roads to prepare for the race. His said his goal is to finish the route in 90 minutes.

"This race offers the opportunity to bike ride with a larger group of people, over a greater distance," Elliott said. "The company cadre host bike PT once a month and we are up to 14 miles."

Safety is the key factor in conducting a race of this magnitude. Smith ensures the best possible safety measures for participants have been taken. There are many twists and turns while traveling on this route and racers need to be aware of the roads they'll be riding.

Dr. Lou Tomasi, Research Physiologist for the Army Physical Fitness Program and a rider himself, mentioned the riders need to be very aware of the cracks in the road on this route. Their awareness will help prevent possible injuries from occurring.

The route begins at the intersection of 82nd Airborne Division Road and Bradshaw Roads, which is the bottom

Soldier wins tournament

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Staff Sgt. Marvin Wideman Jr. has done it again.

The 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment soldier hoisted a total of 1,245 pounds March 30, winning the U.S. Power Lifting Federation Georgia State Championship, held at Forsyth, Ga.

"Winning this championship ranks me in the top three in the world in the 148 pound weight class," he said.

Adding to his accomplished feats, Wideman set a new Sub-Master Dead Lift world record of 505 pounds during the World Association Bench Press and Dead Lift tournament in Atlanta April 28.

"I went to this tournament only to perform an exhibition dead lift and set the world record," he said.

"I felt so strong—I not only lifted it once, but I set it down and lifted it up again. The crowd went crazy."

Wideman will continue training for the World Dead Lift Championships in Reno, Nev., scheduled for November.

Senior: Competes in 2000 Olympics

two to go. I was sure of the win. Then I drew a horse I didn't connect with," he said. "I fell from first to seventh place in a matter of a minute and a half.

"The Olympics was one of the greatest but most depressing moments in my life."

Senior's final event was the run, where he ran into sixth place.

Two weeks after the closing ceremony, Senior left the World Class Athlete Program to take his military career to new heights. He arrived to post where he attended Airborne School.

After earning his wings, Senior put in his Office Candidate School packet and was accepted.

Nearly midway through OCS he competed in the Joint Military Athletic Competition, a series of events officer candidates from the Army, Air Force and Navy compete. Senior's role was the two-mile run portion of the PT test. He completed it in just more than 10 minutes.

"It brought back memories," he said. "I got the butterflies again. It was just fun to compete."

Although he will become an officer on June 7, when he graduates OCS, he still wants to go back to the athletic program.

"It will be a little more difficult as an officer, but I still want to go back," he said. "I want to go back to the 2008 Olympics. The way it (the 2000 Olympics) ended will haunt me for the rest of my life or till I win."

Race: To challenge competitors

along Lawson Airfield until racers come across Dixie Road. After turning left onto Dixie Road, an immediate right is taken onto Sightseeing Road. The racers will then take a left onto Sunshine Road and then another left onto Jamestown Road.

The finish line is at the intersection of Jamestown Road and 8th Division Road.

The route runs through woodlines and will be a great workout for all racers, said Staff Sgt. Michael Cochran, Training NCOIC for A Co.

At the seven-mile mark, the racers begin the challenge of conquering what seems to be a never-ending hill.

This hill will test the strength and endurance of the racers, said Elliott.

Flyers have been distributed throughout post and the Columbus area to advertise for the race. All participants must have a light attached to their bicycles, reflective clothing, and the proper headgear to enter the race.

Registration for the Iron Soldier Bicycle Race takes place outside the Main Post Exchange from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. May 2, 3, 9, and 10. Registration can also be done at A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., located in Building 751.

There is a fee of $5 per entry or $7.50 to include a T-shirt. The race is not a fund-raiser; therefore, all money raised will be used strictly for the race. Trophies will be presented to the racers for first, second, and third place in both a male and female categories.

For more information, call 545-3417.

PUBLIC NOTICE

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations will conduct an accreditation survey of Martin Army Community hospital during the week of 21 May 2001.

The purpose of the survey will be to evaluate the organization's compliance with nationally established Joint Commission standards. The survey results will be used to determine whether, and the conditions under which accreditation should be awarded to the organization.

Joint Commission standards deal with organizational quality of care issues and the safety of the environment in Which care is provided. Anyone believing that he or she has pertinent and valid information about such matters may request a public information interview with the Joint Commission's field representatives at the time of the survey. Information presented at the interview will be carefully evaluated for relevance to the accreditation process. Requests for a public information interview must be made in writing and should be sent to the Joint Commission no later than five days before the survey begins. The request must also indicate the nature of the information to be provided at the interview. Such requests should be addressed to:

Division of Accreditation Operations
Accreditation Services Specialist
Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations
One Renaissance Boulevard
Oakbrook Terrace, IL 60181

The Joint Commission will acknowledge such requests in writing or by telephone and will inform the organization of the request for any interview. The organization will, in turn, notify the interviewee of the date, time, and place of the meeting.

This notice is posted in accordance with the Joint Commission's requirements and may not be removed before the survey is completed

Bank Agrees To Loans For Individuals With Bad Credit!

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of reliable transportation.

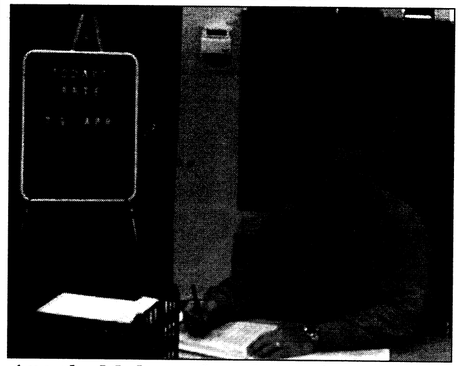
Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. Including Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 Bankruptcies, one or more voluntary or involuntary repossessions, Charge-offs, credit counseling and partial payment situations.

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture.



These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Bankers will be on hand at Bill Heard's main location at 3615 Manchester Expressway until the end of July. Best of all, cut rate financing will be offered to those whose credit would not normally meet such an arrangement at rates that banks usually reserve for their blue chip clients. Quoting Watts, "I can't imagine that anyone anywhere who has strained credit would want to miss this chance to become associated with such a reputable national lender at a rate generally set aside for only the affluent, and to seriously repair their credit standing.

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the vacation season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. Again the $1 down to validate the deal and start making payments on a new bank contract of just $111.89 for 72 months at the same low 9.9% APR with credit approval that may be arranged while you wait.

"Good people who have had Repossessions, Bankruptcies, charge-offs have limited time to rebuild credit!"

Angela Malcom free-lance interviewer, speaks with loan officer Kevin Thompson and his assistant Chris Crosby who will be on hand granting "high risk" loans at rates generally reserved for blue chip clients!

Again, the low monthly payment is possible because of the $5997 sale price adding only tax, tag and title.

This offer is for you even if you have been recently turned down for auto credit or were unable to afford payments on a better vehicle.

Hundreds of new Chevys including Silverados, Tahoes, Venture Vans, Blazers, Malibus and Impalas are included in this offer. Along with acres of used Chevys, Fords, Hondas, Jeeps, Acuras and Nissans.

Shop as a cash buyer by getting pre-approval and actually find out how much the bank will advance you by calling Mr. Thompson or his assistant Mr. Peters at 322-8888 OR 1-800-868-1585, 9am to 9pm.

Post contract to be relet

GAO upholds bidder's complaint

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

The contract for the services provided by the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics hasn't been awarded and details are still sketchy as to when a contractor will be named.

The top two bidders for the contract to perform logistics and public works functions on post now have to resubmit bids after specified management data is made available to both, as a result of a General Accounting Office ruling.

The decision came about after Johnson Controls, one of the two bidders, filed a protest claiming International Technology Corporation possibly received information that provided an unfair competitive advantage, said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

"Johnson Controls protested the initial conditional award given out to IT Corporation. Johnson Control said, 'There is a subcontractor that works for IT Corporation called INNOLOG (Innovative Logistics Techniques, Inc.) that had some inside information.' So Johnson Controls thought IT Corp. may have also had this information."

INNOLOG's role in the Training and Doctrine Command is what brought up the suspected inside information, said Ron Turner, contracting officer with the TRADOC Acquisition Center at Fort Eustis, Va.

"INNOLOG has an ISM (Integrated Systems Management) contract at TRADOC headquarters," he said "In that capacity they compile EMIS (Executive Management Information System) data. That data tells how long it takes to repair a vehicle, how long it stays in the shop, and so on."

INNOLOG and other contractors have ISM contracts at nearly every military installation.

As a result of the protest, the GAO became involved, but no evidence was found that EMIS information was used by IT in the preparation of its proposal, TRADOC officials said.

Teachers needed

First lady speaks at rally

Linda Lyly and Regenia Gatewood
TRADOC News Service

FORT JACKSON, S.C. — Surrounded by educators, children and soldiers, first lady Laura Bush spoke in honor of National Teacher Day and tried to recruit soldiers for the Troops-to-Teachers program during a visit here Tuesday morning.

About 3,000 people gathered on the driveway and lawn in front of C.C. Pinckney Elementary School to see the first lady during a Troops-to-Teachers Rally.

"To every teacher here I want to say 'thank you' for your hard work," she said. "President Bush and I salute you."

Speaking to the soldiers, the first lady said she and the president also wanted to salute them.

"We deeply appreciate the sacrifices you make for our nation," she said.

Men and women in the military answered a call to serve their country "in the finest Army in the world," Bush said. As they prepare to leave the military, she asked them to turn their attention to the homefront — "to Uncle Sam's classrooms, where we need your help through the Troops-to Teachers program."

Established in 1994, Troops-to-Teachers helps retired service members get certified and find jobs as teachers. Since its

Sand Hill gets new buildings

Modular buildings become barracks for IET soldiers

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

As new trainees arrive at 30th AG Battalion (Reception) at Sand Hill and report to either Basic Combat Training Brigade or Infantry Training Brigade, many of them may be staying in temporary modular buildings finished earlier this month.

The reason Sand Hill needs these buildings is lack of space in the existing barracks to house the trainees coming to Fort Benning for basic training, said the director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"These facilities have been built to house the summer surge of initial entry training soldiers," said Col. Keith Stelzer, DFEL.

The modular buildings will be used to house trainees waiting assignment to their training units and for soldiers who are training holdovers, Stelzer said, while providing flexible barracks space for the Army to meet transformation requirements.

"As the Army goes through the transition to the objective force, there will be impacts on force alignments," Stelzer said.

"This temporary strategy will also allow the Military Construction, Army program to forecast and fund newer IET barracks.

"These (modular buildings) will meet our current needs and allow some clarity in the future as to where we need to be conducting training," Stelzer said.

In order for the modulars to be approved for building, another contract for expansion of 30th AG's already standing barracks must have been in progress, said Kenneth Holloway, master planner, DFEL.

Fort Benning was the first installation to field these modular buildings two years ago, said Darlene Brakefield, a contract specialist, with

Secretary of Army speaks at graduations

Tells soldiers about travels to Macedonia

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Acting Secretary of the Army Joseph Westphal spoke at two Fort Benning graduation ceremonies May 4.

He was the guest speaker for two companies graduating from 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment's one station unit training and later at an airborne school graduation.

During his speech to the new soldiers of 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., Westphal wished them well on their new careers.

He also shared details about his recent trip to Macedonia.

"I was visiting soldiers in Macedonia last week. Our soldiers are there doing work that they never imagined they would be doing — talking to mayors, police chiefs, mafia leaders, all kinds of individuals — attempting to get them to accept a future that has stability and peace in their lives," he said.

"You will face many challenges like this in the future, but keep two things in mind — this country loves and cares about you and we are doing everything we can to support you in every way we can. We are so proud and honored by the work that you do."

"You — the soldiers, the infantry, are the very backbone of our nation's security. We could not do the job that we are doing to protect our nation, to

A few weeks back my 5-year-old climbed into the van after school and said, "No school tomorrow Mom, cause today's Friday and tomorrow's Saturday and that means I don't come back til Monday. OK?"

"OK. If you're sure about that," I grinned, tickled as only a mother can be at her baby's newfound wisdom.

I'm sure I looked a bit startled because McKenzie had never before shown any understanding of, or any interest in, the days of the week. She must have mistaken the look for doubt, because she quickly reassured me.

"Oh, I'm sure. Miss Frazier told me. She's credible."

I giggled all the way home.

Yep, Louise Frazier is "credible." That makes her a good teacher. She's reliable and dependable and all those "bless" that make her a credible teacher. But mostly she's *in*credible, which is what my little English-slayer meant to say in the first place.

"Incredible" means unusual, exceptional and extraordinary, but here on Fort Benning, incredible seems more the norm than the exception. Is that possible?

I'm certain we have more than our fair share of incredible teachers.

There's Charlotte Stratton, who leaves her husband, her home and grandbaby in Anniston, Ala., every week to teach my daughter's third-grade class. When Fort McClellan closed a few years back, Ms. Stratton and several of her colleagues began teaching at Fort Benning.

There's no bonus in her paycheck for the extra expense of maintaining a home away from home, and no amount of money can compensate for the time she sacrifices for my child, but you'll never hear her complain.

She loves what she does and her students love her.

There's David Murray, my son's fifth-grade teacher, who put the 'cool' back in school for Jacob. He plays ringmaster to 20-some 11-year-olds, a three-foot iguana and a snake.

Scarey huh? I think I'd rather take my chances with the snake than the 11-year-olds, but nothing ruffles his feathers.

He obviously loves what he does and the kids respond to his enthusiasm.

Jacob looks forward to school every day, thanks in a big way to Mr. Murray (and a small way to a certain little blue-eyed blonde.)

My job takes me to all the schools on Fort Benning where I see incredible teachers everyday. We've got at least a couple dozen who surely qualify for the "one-in-a-million" club.

I wish I could name them one by one and thank them for the wonderful work they do with our sons and daughters. But I'll have to leave that up to you.

Today wraps up National Teacher Appreciation Week, so make sure you thank a teacher today for the selfless sacrifice he or she makes every day.

It's a pretty rare event for me to find my friend Shireen's house without a full pantry. She's one of those value shoppers, who insists on buying everything in bulk.

Name your pleasure, she likely has it.

The girl has cases of soda, cupboards chock-full of canned food and a basement bursting with dried goods.

It was a running joke when we were younger that her mother, Marcia, would have all the fixings for Christmas cookies and treats as far off as March.

But, for as much food as they store, they were always willing to share it with others. They are true givers.

Maybe that's why it bothered me so much when I read Bridgett Siter's article last week about the Stamp Out Hunger food drive.

Fort Benning sounds like it's not quite on the ball when it comes to stocking the post food bank.

Last year's Columbus drive brought in more than 26,000 pounds of chow, all donated to the local chapter of the Second Harvest National Food Bank Network.

That filled a whole lot of tummies.

Knowing we take care of our own, I'm surprised there weren't more contributions to feed our own soldiers.

I've been in some tight spots myself, going as long as a month between trips to the commissary because I've had no dollars in my denim pockets.

It's nice to know there are places I could go to get a boost.

Stamp Out Hunger Day is tomorrow. We don't even have to step past our driveways to help out.

Try to put one can of food, whether it's canned tuna, soup, dried cereals or veggies. If you can sacrifice more, buy a bunch.

And the next time you PCS and want to get rid of all your nonperishable foods sitting in the cupboard, think of the local food bank.

Folks at Fort Benning are generous people.

A neighbor is pregnant and we pull out the red carpet to provide presents or a new soldier comes around and the local welcome wagon males a stop to say hello with some freshly baked cookies.

So, I hope this year residents are a little bit better with putting another charitable act out the door.

This Sunday is Mother's Day and I want to share a story about four incredible women who have blessed my life. My mother, sister, mother-in-law and grandmother-in-law, have all made an incredible impact in my life.

Since each of them is a mother, I wanted to take this opportunity to wish them a Happy Mother's Day and let them know how much I appreciate and admire each of them.

My mother, Gemma Ouellette, struggled as a single mother to raise three children in a rough neighborhood. She worked hard to provide for us financially, but never neglected to support us emotionally and spiritually.

My mother is very devoted to her children and without her encouragement and support, I wouldn't be as successful as I am today. She truly is my hero.

My sister, Karen Alves, took on motherhood by adopting my niece, Tricia.

I admire my sister for successfully juggling motherhood, her career, a new marriage and going to school all at once.

She deserves so much credit for being such a wonderful role model for working mothers everywhere.

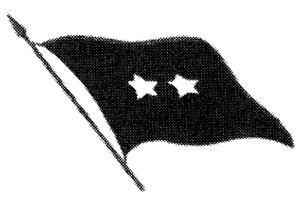
I am proud that she is my older sister and friend.

My mother-in-law, Lisa Picard, is a second mother to me.

I happen to be one of the few who can actually say I love my in-laws and mean it.

She is always there to assist me with any dilemma or to share a laugh. She is also an incredible chef, and luckily, my husband picked up her cooking talents!

Finally is my husband's grandmother, Victoria Eppoliti aka "Nana." She let me into her heart, which is so important to me since all of my grandparents have passed on.



Her love and support have influenced her children and grandchildren in so many positive ways.

In their own way, each of them has given so much to my husband and me and truly defines what a mother should be.

I am very proud to be a part of two wonderful families and appreciate all the wonderful things they have done for us.

Happy Mother's Day to all mothers in the United States and around the world!

Spouses deserve appreciation

President Ronald Reagan proclaimed the first Military Spouse Appreciation Day on April 17, 1984. The celebration date is the Friday before Mother's Day each year.

This year we will recognize and applaud the efforts of military spouses on May 11.

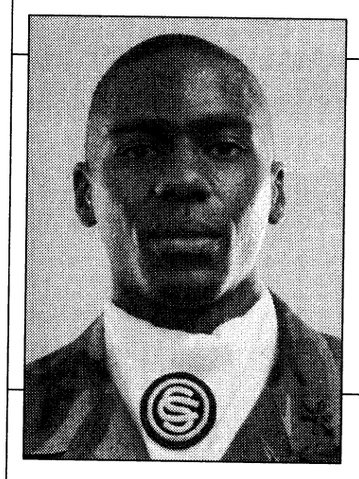
From the beginning of America's Army, spouses of our military have made unselfish contributions to the spirit and well-being of their soldiers in support of the communities in which they live and work.

The commitment of these spouses to our nation and to its ideals is just as great as that of the soldier who stands point for the nation.

Both serve so that free people everywhere might live in peace and justice.

Neither takes peace for granted because they know its price. To those who have lost a loved one in the cause of freedom, we, as a nation, owe a special debt that can never be repaid.

Enduring frequent periods of separation from family and friends, establishing homes in many distant places, and serving as both mother and father to their children are some of the countless personal sacrifices that are made each day by military spouses manning the homefront.



This special occasion allows us to recognize and thank all those men and women around the world, who, through care and support of their spouses in uniform, enhance morale, improve readiness and contribute to the well-being of the force.

On behalf of the Army, we thank all military spouses for their commitment to their service and their country.

Erosion creates 'Hammer Canyon'

Underfunding prevents earlier fix

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Kelley Hill has a new landmark — "Hammer Canyon."

The canyon is the result of erosion, and March's record rainfall of more than 13 inches caused more land to fall into what was originally part of a storm drainage system but is now an ever-widening crevasse that was threatening black top and the environment until now.

Stopgap measures are underway to prevent further damage.

The area was eroding at a marginal rate of perhaps 35 feet a year, officials said, until this spring when the three heavy rains accelerated the damage and a year's worth of erosion occurred in less than a month.

This caused a decrease in the buffer area of a parking lot near the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery motor pool putting the parking lot and a nearby road at risk.

To prevent further erosion, a contractor was hired to interrupt and reroute the runoff to another pipe and distribute the water "downstream" from the current location.

However, this is an interim fix to a Kelley Hill erosion problem that could cost in excess of several million dollars, the post's top engineer said.

"The fix at this specific location is in the hundreds of thousands of dollars," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics. "The troublesome aspect of this is that out in that area of the post, there are several areas that could become just as bad. We have estimated that the fix for erosion at Kelley Hill will be in excess of $2 million."

Lack of funding is the reason the canyon has continued to grow until it now is at least 50 feet in depth, 100-200 in width and 500-600 in length.

"There used to be a fence to prevent access to the area," said Lt. Col. Skip Davis, 3rd Brigade's deputy commanding officer, "but that has collapsed into the gulch."

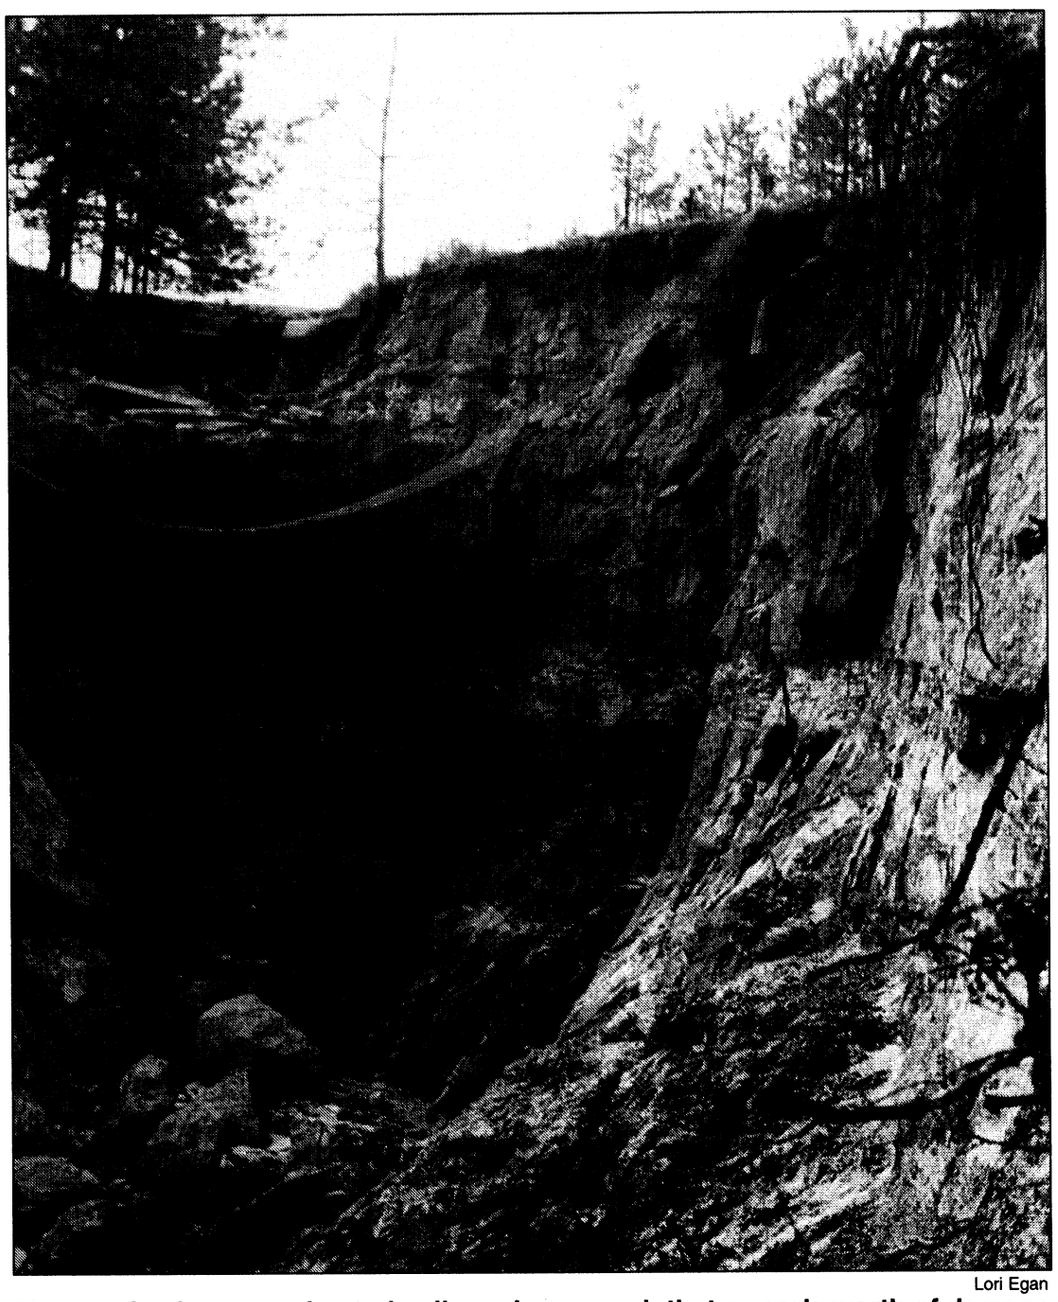
"We have allowed this hole to go unchecked taking care of more immediate problems," Stelzer said explaining the post's maintenance priorities in fixing leaky roofs, backed-up sewer lines and deteriorating training facilities. "The crevasse has grown significantly this past spring and (fixing the problem) simply could not be postponed any longer."

The money, $248,000, is allocated by the installation, Davis said.

Training and Doctrine Command has the responsibility for all maintenance and repair, Stelzer said, and the chief of staff funded the quick fix out of the commanding general's emergency withhold in spite of severe funding constraints across the installation.

"This type of situation is common throughout the Army," Davis said. "There is a huge backlog of maintenance projects at Fort Benning waiting for funding."

While waiting for the money to fix this problem, Fort Benning's watershed has seen an increase in silt.



"The considerable silt and debris that is being washed down this gully eventually ends up in our creeks and rivers," Stelzer said.

"This threatens wildlife in these fragile ecosystems, and will create shallower waterways more susceptible to drought impacts."

Officials implemented water restrictions last summer because of the drought conditions the Southeast has withered under for the last several years.

Silt buildup at the water collection inlet necessitates the dredging of sand from the area at least once every three-to-five weeks, said Joe Wilkins, environmental specialist with DFEL.

"We have mortgaged our future and the balloon note is due," one official said.

Polynesian dancing one of many activities at luau

Event gives taste of island culture

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Main Mall Post Exchange manger Kalei Givens learned many things from her grandmother on Oahu, including authentic Polynesian dances.

She continues to study the craft, in addition to teaching others through her group for more than 11 years, called Hula Halau O'Kalei. Her son, Matt, continues the legacy, by performing dances such as the Samoan Fire Knife dance.

The dance group will perform to an anticipated crowd of 3,000 at the third annual Fort Benning Asian and Pacific Luau May 18 at Uchee Creek. The event is free to the public.

Givens said it's a great venue to see what many people may not — authentic island dancing.

"I like showing other people what I do," Givens said. "The girls in my group are excited and it keeps me energized each year."

Authentic Polynesian dancing is just one example of events celebrating the month. May is Asian Pacific Island Heritage month. "This provides an introduction to the Polynesian culture and spans other cultures as well," said DCA's Stacey Doherty

Along with the Polynesian Show, the luau will provide a taste of the islands with foods like Kalua pork, teriyaki chicken and caribbean fruit.

The event includes more than $8,000 worth of items from local sponsors, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers and Equal Opportunity, said Brian Smith, director of marketing.

Highlighted events for the day include:

- 3 p.m. — Luau starts,
- 3 to 8:30 p.m. — Kiddie Korner with a space walk and inflatable slides,
- 3:15 — Canoe races, contest open to the public,
- 3:30 to 7:30 p.m. — Free party barge rides on the Chattahoochee River,
- 4 to 7 p.m. — Free face painting and balloons,
- 4 to 6 p.m. — Polynesian show,
- 6 to 6:30 p.m. — Children's martial arts show,
- 6:30 p.m. — Funk Soul Brother concert,
- 8 to 8:30 p.m. — Adult martial arts show,
- 8:30 p.m. — Cornbread concert.

A grand prize drawing will also take place at 8:30 p.m. Winners don't have to be present to accept their prizes.

They will be a grand prize drawing for two round trip tickets on US Air. Drawings will be held every half hour, which include a two-night stay in Destin, Fla., and a weekend at Uchee Creek.

Smith encouraged the Fort Benning community to come out and enjoy the luau's activities.

"This truly is an event for everyone. This is just a relaxed outing for couples, families and single soldiers," Smith said.

Free parking will be available a short distance from Uchee Creek near the Boy Scout campsite.

The American Legion will provide rides to the entry of the event.

For more information and $3 presale meal tickets, call the EO office at 545-3198.

Institute's students visit Fort Rucker

Class field trip provides look at U.S. culture

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Command and General Staff Officer Course students attending the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation traded the classroom for the open road May 3 to visit the U.S. Army Aviation Center at Fort Rucker, Ala.

The trip was part of an educational program within the curriculum designed to give foreign students a glimpse into the military and civilian American culture, Lt. Col. Andrew Stewart, course director, said.

During the Fort Rucker tour, students were introduced to the Helicopter School Battalion's mission, which is training pilots and aviation mechanics.

The tour also included a visit to the Aviation TestBed Collective Training Facility, where students were briefed on and witnessed the latest technology in battlefield simulation.

Everything from rotary wing simulators and fixed-wing simulators to operations centers for company, battalion and brigade-level commands was available for students to view with guides answering questions on technology and cost.

"While the (simulators) overhead cost is high, the money saved in not having to use live resources to conduct exercises is worth it down the road," said Maj. Rueben Diaz Esparza, a student from the Mexican army.

Students also visited the aviation museum to learn the U.S. Army's long role in aviation history.

Outside the classroom, experiences, like the Fort Rucker visit and others, give students a feel for how things run in the U.S.

"Exposure to American culture begins early," said Stewart.

"One of the very things we do is we match up every foreign CGSOC student with an American CGSOC student sponsor, and most of them with American sponsor families.

"Our first 'field trip' is to introduce them to local city government where they met the mayor of Columbus, the city manager, and key government officials.

"They learn very early on how an American city collects taxes and spends taxpayer money under a coherent city plan, with all the checks and balances that come with it," said Stewart.

Expo eases transition to civilian workforce

Career fair brings employers to Fort Benning

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter Association of the U.S. Army is sponsoring their annual career fair from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Thursday on the first floor of Infantry Hall. The expo is open to retired and active-duty soldiers, Department of Army civilians and their family members.

Job seekers will have a chance to advertise their skills with more than 100 employers. In addition to gathering information from a wide range of companies, the fair also presents candidates with an opportunity to practice their interviewing skills. On-site interviews will be available.

Sarah Beecham, Army Career and Alumni Program manager, said employers are searching for those people who are trainable and dedicated, specifically military personnel.

"They're looking for people who have completed successful terms and an established work ethic," said Beecham. "Generally, the military hosts every sort of job skill, including administrative, technical, medical, law enforcement or instructors."

Though, there are various careers which are popular right now.

"Information Technology is definitely on the rise and has been for some time. Fifty percent of job announcements pertain to that field," Beecham said.

Spc. Rebecca Cravens, 36th Engineer Group, is one of hundreds of Fort Benning's soldiers who are expected to attend the AUSA Job Fair, as well as use post employment offices.

"I'm trying to look for jobs online," Cravens said. "Employers are always asking what jobs and experiences you have, so I'm getting ideas off the Web. I have to post my resume soon."

Besides helping people prepare for the AUSA career expo, ACAP offers two minijob fairs a month.

Beecham recommends retirees begin job researching as far as a year prior to retirement and six months for others whose terms of service are expiring.

"It's important to explore and identify skills and correlate those skills to the market," she said.

Spouses are encouraged to attend job fairs on post as well, said Beecham. Ten percent of ACAP's clients each month are spouses. Besides providing resume and interview services, post career centers offer simulated interviews with cameras.

That's a service Cravens intends on using.

"This office helps with putting together packets and other items you may not know you need," Cravens said.

ACAP recommends the following guidelines for job fair resumes:

• Pinpoint what job you're interested in obtaining. Then taylor your resume that specific field,

• List an appropriately named e-mail address, which is designed for job searching,

• List a stable phone number, where you may be reached after separation,

• List an objective. "Otherwise, it's like a term paper without a thesis," Beecham said.

• Job skills, education and employment sections should support your objective,

• List employment history, no more than five to eight years back,

• List only those military awards and training which support the objective,

• Store resumes in a document protector. Do not staple or paper clip resumes,

• Resumes should be no more than one or two pages.

Career centers also recommend attendees dress in appropriate attire. While duty dress is acceptable, Beecham recommends wearing civilian clothes.

"Since it will be a transition job fair, make the effort to dress the part," she said.

Interview dressing often includes: white shirts, matching belt and shoes and dark ties for men and pumps, solid-colored long sleeve-blouses, with dark colored-bottoms, like gray, navy and black. Floral or pastel colored items rarely work, she said.

For more tips or information about job fairs, call the Army Career and Alumni Program at 545-2308, the Army Community Service at 545-6969, or the Family Member Employment Assistance Program at 545-5516.

A CLOSER LOOK

Recommendations for resumes include:

- Pinpoint what job you're interested in
- List an appropriately named e-mail address
- List a stable phone number
- List an objective
- Job skills, education and employment should support your objective
- List employment history, no more than five to eight years back
- Store resumes in a document protector
- Resumes should be no more than one or two pages

John B. Amos Library speaks volumes for democracy

Library stands as symbol of freedom

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

"Democracy without libraries is like having no democracy at all," said Yamill Collazo in a soft-mannered tone that echoed loud with substance through a well of knowledge, lined with hardcovers and paperbacks.

For international students arriving at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, the John B. Amos Library is a subtle, yet powerful statement for democracy.

"Many (international) students who use it (library) have never seen a library system like we have here in the U.S.," said Collazo, technical information specialist.

"Yet, for many U.S. citizens, libraries don't make the list when they think of freedom; not many people realize that just having a place to read and check out literature, references and periodicals is an important perk we enjoy as a democracy,"

History is filled with accounts of censorship where oppressive governments like Nazi Germany and Fascist Italy that conducted mass book burning, said Collazo, who displayed on his desk a passage from Winston Churchill that read ...

> "Even with the Internet at your finger tips, nothing substitutes having a book."
> Yamill Collazo
> John B. Amos Library

"'You see these dictators on their pedestals, surrounded by the bayonets of their soldiers and the truncheons of their police. Yet in their hearts there is unspoken — unspeakable — fear.

"They are afraid of words and thoughts. Words spoken abroad, thoughts stirring at home, all the more powerful because they are forbidden. These terrify them.

"A little mouse — a little tiny mouse — of thought appears in the room, and even the mightiest potentates are thrown into panic,'" read Collazo, paying tribute to Churchill's work.

"That goes to show, we should never take anything for granted. We need to appreciate the fact that we have access to literature and ideas and free thinking," Collazo said.

"Our libraries foster individual growth through liberal learning," he said.

They do this by allowing individual research outside the classroom so students can form their own thoughts on certain issues, free from the influence of others, he explained.

The Amos Library staff prides itself not only as public servants in education, but with its "Library Without Walls," an On-line Computer Library that connects with over 50,000 libraries world-wide, a virtual knowledge-well is a mouse click away, Collazo said.

Providing patrons a myriad of learning resources from online distance learning and exam-proctoring to old-fashioned spined references, the Amos Library offers uniformed and civilian students several learning mediums.

However, tapping a hard-cover, Collazo said, "Even with the Internet at your finger tips, nothing substitutes having a book."

"Libraries, books are very relevant. Where else can a poor man learn, who doesn't have access to a computer?"

"With the coming summer months, we invite everyone to visit a local library, check out some of the programs offered," Collazo said.

"If anything, come on in and escape the summer heat with a good book. Remember, when you grab that book, that you are exercising a freedom."

Long hours prove rewarding for nurse

Lieutenant enjoys tough profession

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

The last light of a Friday evening was visible through a sixth-floor window at Martin Army Community Hospital as 2nd Lt. Carla Renfro sat at a patient's bedside, trying to find out just what was bothering the young man.

He felt sore, but couldn't say just how, and thought he might have been suffering a fever.

"It doesn't really, really hurt," he said. "But it, like, hurts."

Renfro worked quietly, asking questions in a conversational voice and carefully feeling the soldier's arm where an intravenous line was taped down.

"It wouldn't be possible to get some ice cream?" the soldier asked.

Leaving the room for the quiet hallway of the medical and surgical floor, Renfro sighed. The patient was right about his fever.

"We've got to get his temperature down," she said to herself, barely out loud.

For Renfro, a nurse at the hospital since January, the young soldier with a fever was one in a long series of patients who called upon both her medical skill and her vigilant kindness during a long 12-hour night shift.

The shift began for the 23-year-old nurse, the hospital's newest, just before 7 p.m. The arrival of a new shift brings the nursing staff on each floor together for a detailed report on their patients — some of which are taped, so not every nurse is needed in the report room.

The evening report was just ending when Renfro was called upon to begin helping patients; another nurse walked in with the news that a patient at the far end of the hall was feeling nauseous.

A pattern that would develop throughout the evening began with her very first patient — Renfro asking questions, patients responding with murmured answers of "yes, ma'am," and "no, ma'am."

"Are you sore?" Renfro asked. "Can I see your incision?"

Over and over again, all evening long, Renfro asked about pain: How much, how often, where.

"Pain has become like the fifth vital sign" she said. "You're assessing it all the time."

The job of assessing pain can be complicated by the fact that every patient deals with it differently.

"A lot of people see pain as a sign of weakness," said 2nd Lt. Roy Mobley, working the floor with Renfro on Friday night. "One of our jobs is convincing people to be honest about it."

But the job doesn't end with assessing pain; Renfro and her colleagues also work constantly to bring it under control.

"It's a big issue," Renfro said. "It really is."

That issue translates into the effort to get pain medication just right; it's an ongoing process.

Renfro, a graduate of Texas Christian University in Fort Worth, Texas, earned her commission through the ROTC. The ROTC program offered a way of paying for an education.

After graduation and the nursing board exam came a five-week ROTC camp — during which she received her passing scores on the nursing boards — and a four-month Officer Basic Course; her first assignment after training brought her to Fort Benning.

Another first: Renfro is a "Navy brat," the daughter — and niece, and step-daughter — of retired sailors.

"He was also enlisted," Renfro said of her dad, "so he says I'm a double-traitor."

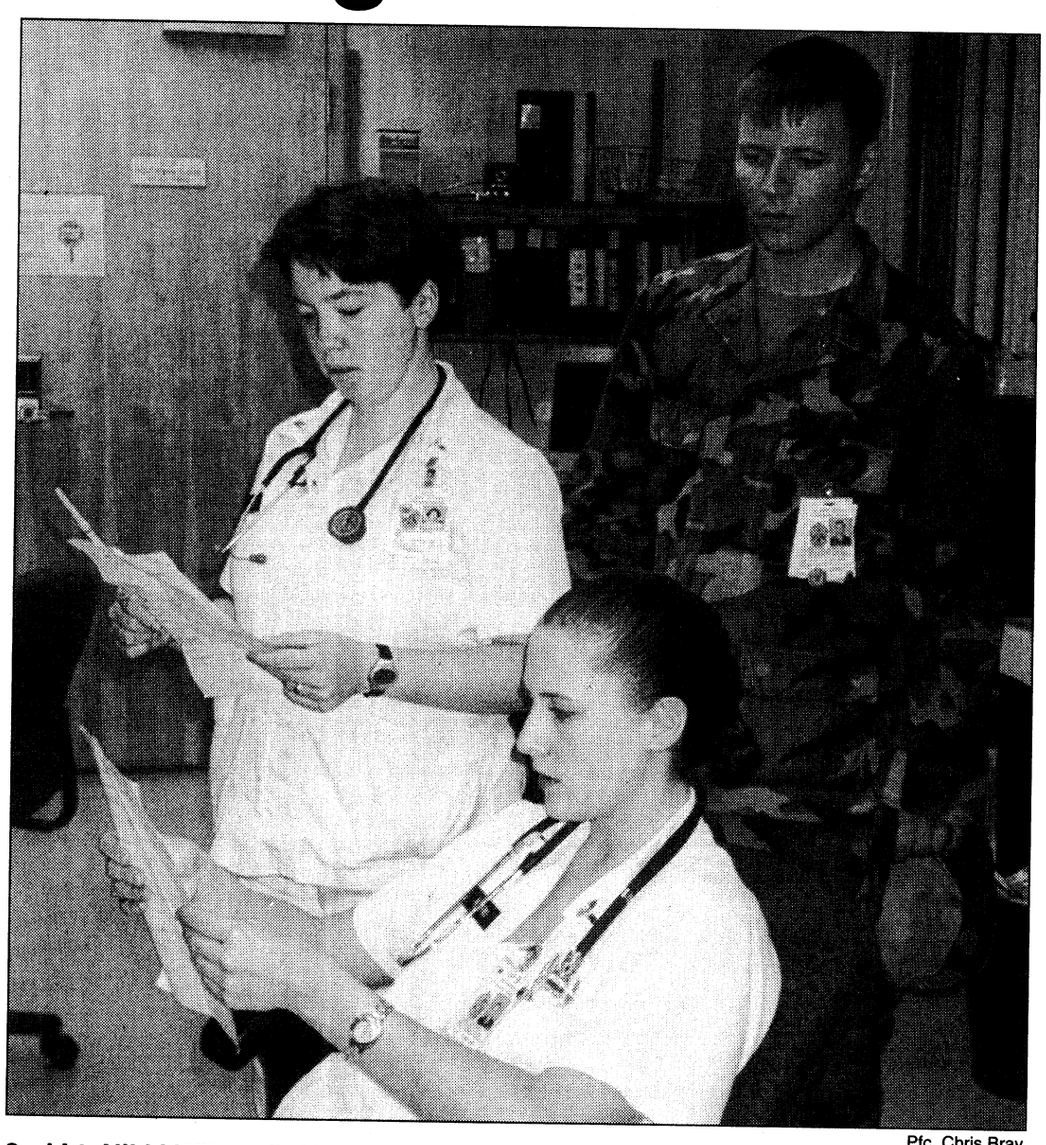
The double-traitor was saluted for the first time as an Army officer by her dad, the retired Navy NCO.

Even for a nurse, Renfro said, Army life features some elements familiar to any soldier. The lieutenant recently spent a week in the field, helping to establish a field hospital — and putting up a security perimeter.

"I did that for two days," she said. "I pounded stakes and put up concertina wire."

As the night progressed, and patients began to fall asleep, the floor grew quieter. The nurses spent more of their time at tasks like updating patient charts.

In the quieter hours, patients kept calling the nurses' station, often with the same request: "Can I get some more ice water down here?"



Renfro said she doesn't mind that request at all.

"You're a nurse," she said. "And for me the main thing about being a nurse is taking care of people. I like doing that more than anything."

Late that night, checking on a new arrival, Renfro squeezed the patient's toes — which protruded from the bottom of a heavy cast.

"Can you feel this okay?" she asked.

The soldier, also a lieutenant, injured his leg during his second jump at Airborne School.

"Jumping's actually really cool," the patient said. "It's just ..."

"The landing part?" Renfro said, finishing the sentence for him.

The hours after midnight passed quietly. As the sun came up, Renfro was standing in the room of a pneumonia patient, the only light in the room coming from the door that was open to the hallway. Throughout the shift, she had talked the woman through her illness.

"What you need to do is really deep breathing and coughing every hour," she said, "so you can get that stuff up."

During the next hour, Renfro quietly walked down the hallway, going from room to room with the usual question: "Hi, how are you feeling? Any pain?"

And then breakfast arrived for the patients, and the new shift began, and it was time for another report.

Other nurses from Renfro's shift began to leave as the hospital's newest nurse sorted through the medication room, taking accountability and signing the floor's stock of drugs over to the new shift.

She had walked into the hospital in sunlight, and was walking out into sunlight again; the night had passed in between, but Renfro hadn't seen it.

Her next shift began that evening, just before 7 p.m.

Former Army nurse shares World War experience

Military career took nurse through history

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

In the late days of the Great Depression, Frances Nett needed an education her parents couldn't afford — and she needed work in a country with not enough of that to go around.

She found a way to resolve both needs: she became a nurse, working her way through her training at Lynchburg General Hospital in Virginia. She completed nursing school in 1939.

Nett quickly found a job at a small-town hospital, also in Virginia, and settled into a new routine of work hours and off-duty hours. But the town proved to be a little too small.

"If we went downtown during off-duty hours," she said, "people would know who you'd talked to, what you'd had for lunch. It was just an open book."

Meanwhile, a friend was traveling the world as a member of the Army Nurses' Corps.

"Her letters were just so fascinating," Nett said.

Nett made up her mind to be an Army nurse, and — after an initial rejection — she was accepted for service in January 1941. That combination of career field and timing would put Nett on a path to participate in history, but she didn't see it coming.

"No, no. I didn't read the news too much at that time," she said.

She met her future husband, a young soldier named Bob — who would go on to earn the Medal of Honor and retire from the Army as a colonel — during her first stateside assignment, at Fort Jackson, S.C.

The couple couldn't get married, just yet: Army nurses weren't allowed to.

When war came, Nett said, "We just had to take it day-by-day and see what happened." Her husband went off to war; she was eventually sent on a cold and isolated tour to Goose Bay, Labrador, an Arctic air station where the worst casualties came after a squadron traveled straight to duty from summertime Louisiana and fell ill from the shock of the transition.

Another set of casualties offered Nett a rare opportunity, during wartime. Bob was home on leave, and a group of young troops being sent home from the "complete isolation" of a remote pair of radio transmission centers to the north of Goose Bay needed a nurse for the long flight home.

"Those young men just went berserk," Nett said, during their long and lonely Arctic service.

She volunteered to fly home with them. In December 1943, Nett and her soon-to-be-husband met in Maine.

The Army, desperate for medical personnel as the war dragged on, had relaxed the ban on married nurses.

They had just a few days together; they decided to get married.

Just one problem: Maine — and Virginia, too — both required a five-day wait before a wedding ceremony.

"So Bob's mother, with both of us in the military, got it lifted," Nett said.

And then Bob went right back to the fighting.

Frances Nett was also about to get a closer look at the war. In February 1945, she was assigned to a hospital on Leyte Island, in the Phillipines.

She traveled by way of a hospital ship, an experience she described as a "free cruise." ("Bob keeps saying I should have a sense of humor," she said.)

On the way there, she heard that Bob might have been injured and sent back to the states. "And he was," Nett said — Bob Nett had been wounded in December 1944, an experience he got to know pretty well.

"One battle I was wounded three times," the retired colonel said. "I finally gave up, because of loss of blood."

During the next months, Nett would begin to see soldiers who'd suffered a fate that sometimes seemed worse than being injured in combat.

"When POWs were released," she said, "they came straight to our hospital. It was horrible — you just have to have seen these people to really know what they had been through. We could just look at them and tell how they had suffered."

Among the freed prisoners were Army nurses, who had been forced to provide medical care to their captors.

Back in the states, Bob Nett was busy talking his way back to the war; he told the doctors he had a slot waiting for him as a postal officer.

He reached the Phillipines, and saw his wife again, before shipping off to the Japanese-held island of Okinawa. He wasn't a postal officer.

"If anything had happened to him then," Frances Nett said, "I would have felt like I'd killed him. He was not in a condition to go back into combat."

But Frances had problems of her own, as she and a handful of NCOs tried to care for two tents full of wounded — 40 soldiers in all.

"We didn't really have the personnel or the time to treat them," she said. "We could not give those men the care they deserved."

Her war was almost over, though, and at just about the same time as it ended for the rest of the world: In August 1945, as Japan surrendered, Nett was home in Virginia to give birth to a daughter.

Frances and Bob Nett also have a son, born in 1954.

They live in Columbus, where Bob's Medal of Honor and other combat awards hang on the wall near a display of Frances' painted plates.

Their son married an Army nurse.

It is requested that anyone with information concerning this individual call the CID Duty Agent at 545-8916 or the Military Police at 545-5222.

The identity of anyone providing information will be kept in the strictest confidence.

Energy awareness seminar held

Tips offered to cut back on electricity costs

Ralph Harrison
Directorate of Facilities, Engineering, and Logistics

The Directorate of Facilities, Engineering, and Logistics hosted the U.S. Army Energy Awareness Seminar April 26-27.

These workshops have been successfully conducted at army installations throughout the world for more than 15 years. The seminar consisted of a survey and presentations. The Department of the Army Energy Team conducted the seminar.

The Energy Survey Team performed a three-day and night installation walk-through of the facilities to observe operations and identify energy savings opportunities April 23-25.

Two training sessions were held April 26, they included a building energy monitor training session and an engineering staff briefing.

An executive staff briefing was held on the last day of the seminar. Each session was provided with the contents that specifically addressed energy consumption and energy savings. A clear understanding of the impact of everyday actions on energy consumption was provided to both military and civilian personnel.

One instructor raised the question just before the class started, "Did you know that the typical U.S. family spends close to $1,300 a year on their home's utility bills?"

Unfortunately, a large portion of that energy is wasted. The instructor said he would rather spend his money on his vacation than to send it to a utility company for wasted energy.

Some valuable tips and techniques were provided in this seminar that will help lower utility bills. The following tips are either inexpensive or free:

- changing furnace filters
- caulking, or weather-stripping
- closing drapes at night
- repairing small water leaks
- turning off your computer monitor when CPU is idled
- turning off your CPU before leaving work or home
- turning the lights out in unoccupied rooms
- lower the thermostat to 110 degrees on your water heater
- install 2.5 gpm nonaerating low-flow showerheads and faucets.

Doing laundry accounts for 26 percent of the homes utility bill. There are two ways to reduce the amount of energy used for washing clothes — use less water and wash in cooler water.

Unless you're dealing with oily stains, the warm or cold water setting on your machine will generally do a good cleaning job.

When purchasing appliances always shop for energy efficient. Remember every appliance should be clearly marked with a price tag and the yearly operating cost. The nice thing about energy efficiency is that it usually pays for itself in energy savings.

The information provided will better manage costly energy resources if used. Insights were provided on how to identify and eliminate costly energy waste at the home and office.

A significant reduction in current energy usage was achieved in Fiscal Year 2000 by implementing a number of relatively simple energy conservation opportunities, which translated into significant annual energy savings.

New contractor takes care of travel needs

Vacation plans begin with Omega Travel

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Rachel R. Garcia

Omega Travel provides information on many vacation spots across the country.

Omega World Travel agent Laura Schelling has oodles of success stories from happy travelers. Though, she said she has spent quite a few hours fixing disappointments from those vacationers booking trips over the Internet.

"We end up being the heroes in the end. We can do our best to make new arrangements and turn things around, " Schelling said.

The local community has the opportunity to bring those destinations a little closer with help from the new full-service travel agency.

The store had its grand opening in the Main Mall last week.

Omega recently won the leisure travel contract on post, while Carlson Wagonlit will continue to service all official business.

The new addition to the mall offers a complete range of vacation travel services, including airline tickets, hotel and car rental reservations, tours and cruises.

Several experienced travel agents, who are world travelers themselves, are on hand to help customers.

Schelling, the store's manager, is a 14-year-veteran of the craft. Not only does she speak German, French, Spanish and American Sign Language, but Schelling was also visited more countries than she can recall.

"We have to know what we're selling," said Schelling. "Like a car salesperson, you need to have driven the product first."

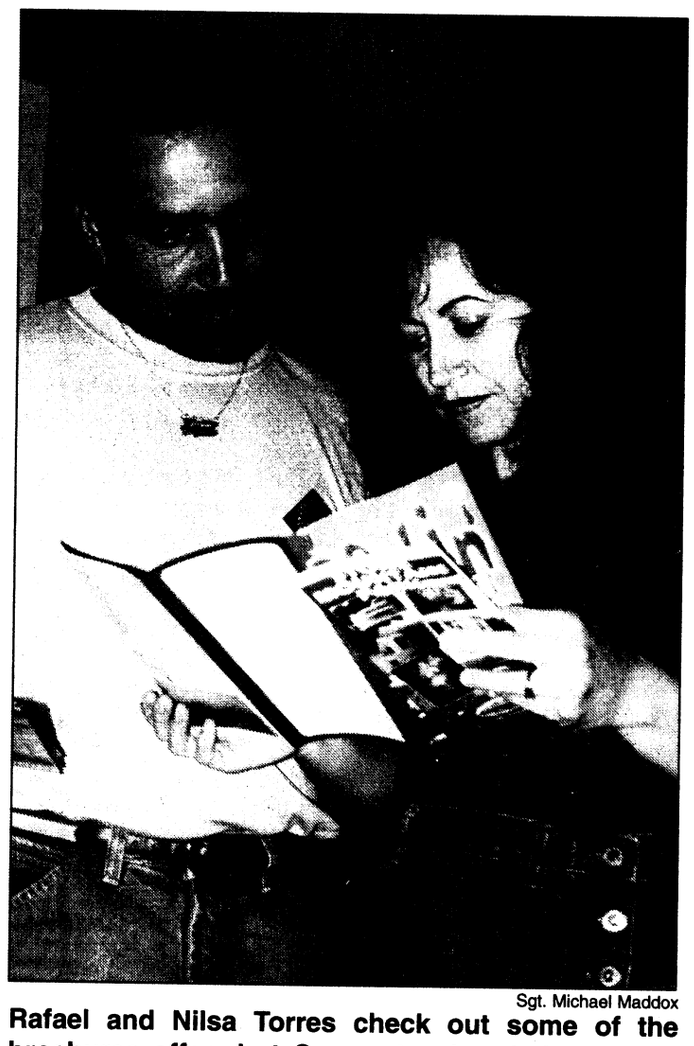
The new shop has been well received, said Katie Pomp, regional manager for Omega World Travel. The shop had hundreds of clients walk through its doors within the first few days. She is overwhelmed with the support she has received.

"We have a very captive audience here," said Pomp. "It's been very busy, thanks to excellent marketing and a great location."

The agency wants to focus on leisure travel for hard working military families, she said.

Pomp, who also manages the Fort Bragg, N.C., office, said this includes recommending shuttle services, cheaper flights from Montgomery and Birmingham, Ala., and assisting with research for different countries.

One agent is also devoted to attraction tickets. Tickets are available to locations like Callaway Gardens, Sea World and Disney World.



Attraction agent Sophia Ortiz said the destination with the highest sales currently is Six Flags in Atlanta.

In fact, that's exactly what brought Spc. Scott Bates, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, into Omega.

"I'm getting tickets for Six Flags," said Bates. "I heard the shop just opened. It's a good place and very cheap."

The tickets, which normally cost more than $32, ran Bates $20 this month because of a special for Military Appreciation month.

Omega will also give away several trips as part of its grand opening festivities, including two nights at Homewood Suites in Alpharetta, Ga.; two nights at the Homewood Suites in Lake Mary, Fla., near Disney World; and two nights at the Double Tree Guest Suites in Atlanta. Omega World Travel will continue grand opening giveaways each week the month of May.

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Rafael and Nilsa Torres check out some of the brochures offered at Omega to plan their summer getaway.

Two winners were chosen by Garrison Commander Col. Joe Torres during a drawing on Tuesday. Chris Bryant will spend two nights at the Radisson Riverwalk Hotel in Tampa, Fla., and Scott Dunlap won two roundtrip US Air plane tickets.

Omega Travel is open Monday through Saturday.

For more information, call 685-1151.

Bragg wins ACOE

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
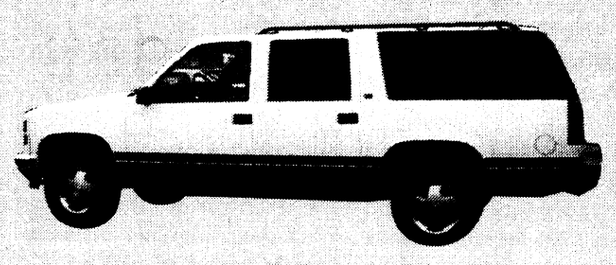
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Fort Bragg, N.C., was honored at the Pentagon May 3 as the winner in the 13th Annual Army Chief of Staff, Army Communities of Excellence awards program along with nine other finalists.

The nine installations awarded as ACOE finalists were: Rock Island Arsenal, Ill.; Wisconsin Army National Guard; White Sands Missile Range, N.M.; 34th Support Group, Yongsan, Korea; U.S Army Garrison Fort Meade, Md.; Fort Rucker, Ala.; Fort McCoy, Wis.; 417th Base Support Battalion in Kitzingenwuerzburg and Giebelstadt, Germany and 10th Area Support Group, Okinawa, Japan.



"Today is all about excellence and we're here to recognize it," said Maj. Gen. Robert Van Antwerp, the Army's assistant chief of staff for Installation Management. "Let's face it, most people who strive for excellence never achieve it. Most people don't even try because they don't want to risk failure. These installations have driven for excellence and achieved it."

The installations did not compete against each other to achieve excellence, officials said. The posts were recognized based on the Army Performance Improvement criteria, that focused on self-examination.

"Award recipients were those who had improved their overall performance and demonstrated excellence in delivering high-quality products and services to customers," Van Antwerp said.

Gen. John Keane, vice chief of staff of the Army and Raymond Fatz, assistant secretary of the Army for Installation and Environment, presented the 10 installations with silver trophies and ACOE flags. Fort Bragg also received a check for $3 million.

Troops: Asked to help educate America's children

inception, it has placed 4,000 veterans in teaching slots across the country.

In South Carolina, 200 former military members have gotten teaching jobs through Troops-to-Teachers.

In the next 10 years, schools across the nation will have to hire thousands of new teachers to keep up with the growing student population, Bush said, and that's where former military personnel could help.

"My husband thought I was kidding when I told him I was going to call in the military," she said.

But the first lady added that the president supports her 100 percent and also gives 100 percent support to service members interested in Troops-to-Teachers.

"American school children need you," Bush said.

The Troops-to-Teachers program is designed to find "the best and the brightest to serve in our classrooms," she said. "You have a sense of duty, honor and courage that our children should emulate."

Military veterans also have expertise in hard-to-fill subjects like science, math and engineering, the first lady added.

"We need many more excellent teachers," she said. "We need more people like you."

Because Fort Jackson is a training ground for young soldiers, those who train them are well poised for a career in education, Bush noted.

While the challenges of teaching are different from those of serving in the military, Bush said the rewards of teaching are great.

"As a former teacher, I'm proud to add my voice."

The president has added his support by proposing that funding for Troops-to-Teachers be increased from $3 million to $30 million in fiscal 2002.

"Join Troops-to-Teachers," Bush said, "for your future and for our nation's future."

Before Bush spoke, Maj. Gen. Raymond Barrett, Fort Jackson commander, looked at the crowd and said, "Thank you for caring about the education of our youth."

After parents, Barrett said teachers are children's greatest role models.

With a teacher shortage expected to affect the nation's classrooms, the commanding general said the Troops-to-Teachers program would be able to "close that gap." Referring to the veterans who have already turned to a career in teaching, he said, "They are excelling at it."

Barrett introduced one of those veterans, Dr. William Harner, a former Fort Jackson battalion commander who was certified through Troops-to-Teachers.

Three years after leaving the military, he is the superintendent of Greenville County, S.C. School District.

"We've already heard from the Association of School Superintendents how important it is across the country to get retired military," Bush told Armed Forces Radio and Television Service after the rally. "Just as there is a need for teachers, there is also a need for principals and superintendents, and a lot of retired military have already had a lot of experience managing big budgets and managing big groups of people, and that's what superintendents and principals need to do."

Also speaking at the rally was Tyrell Brown, a Spring Valley High School junior whose teacher, Franklin Davis, is a retired Army sergeant first class and Troops-to-Teachers veteran.

Brown praised his teacher, saying, "He's shown me he's willing to be a friend and trust me."

After the rally, South Carolina Troops-to-Teachers Coordinator Veronica Whetsell said, "We're hoping that (the first lady's visit) will breathe new life into the program. We're optimistic that with Mrs. Bush's support, Congress will allocate more money for these veterans to get their training."

Spectators of the first lady's visit thought the initiative was a good one. "I agree with her wholeheartedly," said Sallie Currin, a Hood Street Elementary School teacher. "We need the proven leadership of military personnel. I'm glad she's here to support education."

defend our nation, and bring peace to the rest of the world without soldiers who are trained," he said.

Later in the morning, Westphal shared words of encouragement with airborne students during their graduation. The first thing he did was recognize those who provide support to the soldiers.

"I want to thank the VIPS, the family members for being here today. We could not field an Army as great as ours without the support of our families," he said.

He went on to share his recent experiences as secretary of the Army with the crowd.

"One of the most exciting things I have done is to see our soldiers in action — to travel around the world and experience with them the very difficult tasks they face every day," he said.

He went on to explain how important he feels soldiers like those airborne qualified are.

"After you use the bombing campaigns, the smart weapons and missiles, at the bottom of the road, to keep the peace and provide stability to protect we need our airborne, and we need our soldiers on the ground," Westphal said. "I can't tell you how proud we are of you, how much we respect what you are doing and will be doing on deployments."

Westphal, who has been serving as the acting secretary until a new one is chosen, said he thinks his successor will have several top issues to face.

"All of the services face challenges like money challenges — getting enough resources to do the job, provide the quality of life for our soldiers.

"Quality of life is one of the biggest challenges we face," he said. "We need to do a better job of correlating quality of life to readiness.

"Our senior leaders are there, but we still face the challenge of getting the resources to meet the increasing cost of quality of life," he added.

"Training is also a challenge," Westphal said. "We have more and more encroachment into our ranges and training areas making it more difficult to conduct training.

"We are trying to do the best job that we can to meet that challenge."

Before taking the post as Acting Secretary of the Army, Westphal had been serving as the assistant secretary of the Army. Prior to his confirmation, Westphal spent 10 years working on Capitol Hill for both the Senate and House of Representatives and served in the Carter and Reagan administrations.

solution would be to let both companies resubmit their bids after studying EMIS data for Benning from fiscal 1997.

In the meantime, the contract will remain unawarded until both contractors have an opportunity to resubmit bids that include this information.

"TRADOC was told by the GAO to review the process all over again because there was some foundation that there was, at least, the perception that INNOLOG could have given information to IT Corp," Torres said. "TRADOC reviewed this and made ruling. The conditional award was withdrawn.

"Now TRADOC is going to give Johnson Controls and IT Corporation the exact same data that were in question to insure that there isn't a perception that one person has more information than the other," he said. "Both of the contractors can then review their proposal in that one area that is effected, revise their plan and resubmit them to TRADOC so a winner can be chosen for the contract."

"It's not starting the process all over again, it's just starting the process for that one area."

Right now there are no details on how long this process will take, Torres said.

"We don't know the times or dates on any of the upcoming plans," he said. "We are trying to get that information now because that will allow us to better explain what's going on to our civilian workforce. It's still being worked.

"We don't know when, we don't know who, we just know we are going to go contract, that's all we know," Torres said.

"We think that this course of action will satisfy GAO's recommendations for Fort Benning," he said.

the Directorate of Contracting.

Other installations, including Fort Jackson, S.C., Fort Sill, Okla., Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and Fort Knox, Ky., have also contracted to build the modular buildings to house basic trainees in.

Each set of modular buildings includes two buildings for barracks and office space, one building for a classroom that holds up to 200 people.

The barracks can house 240 people and are about 72 square feet per sleeping space.

The three sets of relocatable modular buildings were contracted to be built by the Chickasaw Indian Nations, Brakefield said.

The building began upon awardment of the contract Feb. 28.

According to the terms of the contract, the buildings are leased for the first year with optional leasing for the following four years.

Brakefield said the buildings would then be removed after the contract expired because the contract does not specify for more.

However, she also said if the mission requirements are still there for the buildings, then they may remain.

Class prepares soldiers for PLDC

JLDC instructs soldiers on tough topics

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs

A lack of training in soldier skills such as map reading and land navigation has led to numerous failures during the Primary Leadership Development Course.

However, all Fort Benning soldiers have the opportunity to conquer the problem areas before PLDC by attending the Junior Leadership Development Course.

Training soldiers on tough topics is the focus of JLDC, said 1st Sgt. Agnes Bennett-Green, Basic Combat Training Brigade. She used to be in charge of PLDC and now runs JLDC.

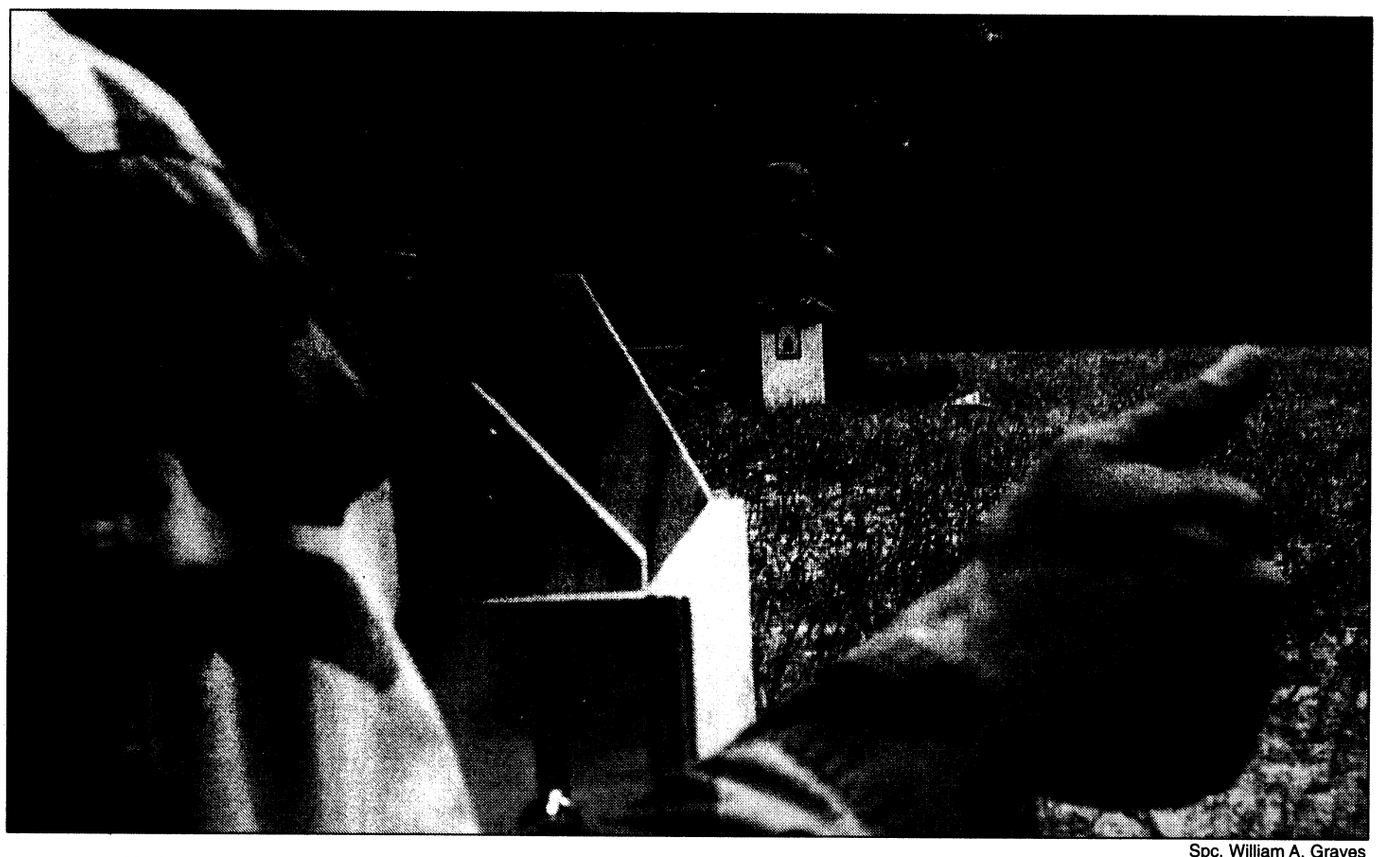
"I saw so many soldiers who went over there and struggled," Bennett-Green said. "PLDC is designed to sharpen skills, not to to teach skills from ground zero. It's harder to get them up to speed when they haven't done a task since basic training.

"JLDC starts everything from scratch, and soldiers are more comfortable and relaxed when they arrive at PLDC."

The course has helped soldiers since its inception in December 1999. At least 80 percent of the course's graduates finish on the PLDC commandant's list. Some even are distinguished or honor grads.

The success of the junior class is a result of BCTB's Command Sgt. Maj. Otis Blanks' vision of a challenging curriculum with strict attention to detail, she said.

"We have failures, too, Bennett-Green said. "It doesn't hurt as bad as PLDC though."



The two-week, 80-hour course requires a "go" in the following areas: written examination I and II, physical fitness training, leadership, drill and ceremony, individual training and land navigation evaluations.

One of the differences between the junior and primary courses is JLDC allows soldiers to go home daily. PT is at 6 a.m. and soldiers are dismissed at 7 p.m. There is no overnight field problem.

"I'd recommend the class to everyone. It takes you back to the training mentality," said student Spc. Gary Barker, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

The emphasis on leadership is obviously key, he said. For instance, he learned the ways in which he should and should not act around his soldiers and he foresees the course paying long-term dividends as a result.

Spc. Theresa Spicer, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, said she was glad she attended the class. The course reminded her of many specifics such as the commands given on the right foot during drill and ceremony and the required measurements on military uniforms.

Spc. William A. Graves

Cpl. Geoff Gomez holds a target for Spc. Jason Ball, both from 988th MP Company, during a target-box exercise at the Junior Leadership Development Course.

"The course helps you break bad habits and teaches you the correct way of doing things," Spicer said.

Many units do not know about the course, said instructor Sgt. 1st Class Rahsan Mitchell, BCTB.

"That's unfortunate because the class sets soldiers up for success," Mitchell said. "It helps them obtain answers to questions they have but never asked in their unit without even asking a question."

He said soldiers come back all the time to thank the instructors for preparing them for PLDC.

Sgt. Joel Culver, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, stopped by Bennett-Green's office Monday to thank her for helping him prepare for PLDC and to sign one of his soldiers up for the next class, which is July 9-23.

"It was well worth the time spent," Culver said. "PLDC was a breeze."

He said JLDC teaches the step-by-step method more so than PLDC. The low student-teacher ratio ensures students will not be left behind.

"The instructors were really willing to help out and genuinely cared about our success," Culver said. "Everything was outstanding. The D and C, PT, map reading and land navigation we learned benefited everyone in my class.

"Even infantryman need to be reminded of the basics every now and then."

Post takes part in pilot postpartum PT project

Program helps soldiers return to regular unit PT

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning is conducting a year-long study that may help determine the standard of postpartum PT Armywide.

The study, which began April 1 and is funded by a grant from the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine in Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., is designed to assess the effectiveness of a new physical training regimen specifically designed to assist the postpartum soldier in a safe, successful return to regular unit PT.

Though most Army installations require pregnant and postpartum soldiers to participate in some form of modified PT, the Army has no standardized postpartum PT program. USACHPPM is currently working to develop such a program under a comprehensive "pregnancy campaign plan" being led by the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Bridgett Siter

Sgt. Demetrius Bush participates in postpartum PT at the Youth Services Gym.

Cindy Irwin, who coordinates the Military On the Move pregnancy and postpartum PT program for Martin Army Community Hospital's Community Health Nursing, conducts daily PT for pregnant and postpartum soldiers. She is incorporating the revised PT exercises into the class' current regimen of walking, swimming, resistance training, step and aerobics.

Under the guidelines of the study, Irwin will monitor soldiers after they return to their individual units for PT to gauge the effectiveness of the new postpartum regimen. She'll conduct diagnostic APFTs and collect data on standards pass rates, injury rates and personal satisfaction with the program, information that will be compiled in quarterly reports for CHPPM.

If successful, Irwin expects to see a decline in the number of PT-related injuries and profiles in the months following a routine delivery.

"Our goal is to prepare them to return to their regular PT," Irwin said. "By modifying the exercises they'll be expected to be able to perform in their regular units, we hope to see our postpartum soldiers make a smooth transition back into their units with less difficulty and no injuries."

More than 80 soldiers are currently enrolled in the MOMs program, which is a requirement for all pregnant and postpartum soldiers on Fort Benning, according to Policy Memorandum 99-19.

Attendance is mandatory, but not always enforced by the unit, Irwin said, though installation policy states soldiers must participate in postpartum PT for a minimum of six weeks following six weeks of convalescent leave. Absences can be authorized for medical appointments, training holidays and leave, but the soldier's "return to unit date" will be extended for every day of missed PT.

According to USACHPPM, six percent of female soldiers are pregnant at any given time, and many unit trainers are unfamiliar with medical guidelines for pregnant and postpartum soldiers. Therefore, many are left to train on their own or not at all, which can generate a morale problem for the soldier and her unit, and impair the soldier's physical readiness.

Irwin hopes the study will conclusively demonstrate the effectiveness of postpartum PT so units will recognize the importance of enforcing the regulation for the safety and well-being of their soldiers and mission-readiness of their unit.

"It's up to the unit to enforce the policy. We see too many injuries and profiles from soldiers being thrown right back into their units regular PT without enough time and training to get them back in good physical condition," Irwin said.

Lisa Young, a health educator with USACHPPM, said the goal of the study is simply to evaluate the effectiveness of the program. Actual implementation will be determined by the U.S. Army Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations.

The results of the study, which is expected to cost $30,000, will be published by June 2002, Young said.

WHINSEC students conquer cadet leadership course

Technology, hindsight secure future

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Leadership — some say it can't be taught. They contend either you have it or you don't.

While the intangibles that make others admire and follow an individual into uncertainty cannot be filed or measured, these ideas and tactics to overcome can be studied in depth.

Borrowing from the past and considering the future in regional operations, Cadet Leadership Development Course educators at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation are teaching future leaders of the Americas with yesterday's hindsight and today's technology for a secure and democratic tomorrow.

Nearing the end of the four-week Cadet Leadership Infantry Course, Dominican Republic air force and army cadets and Colombian marine cadets underwent training that included familiarization with modern technology used on and off the battlefield, Land Navigation, Infantry Tactics and Principles and Air-Assault Operations Planning.

"We're teaching platoon-level leadership skills; the basics," said Maj. Ramiro Alonso, WHINSEC.

"They were given the tools to function as platoon leaders; however, we also stressed how, when and where to employ these skills," Alonso said.

Cadets were taught rules of engagement and they received formal training and discussed human rights issues that affect military and police participation in operations during conflict and peace.

They received theoretical training in the definition, concepts and the historical development of present-day human rights and international humanitarian law precepts, and discuss human rights case studies. Where appropriate, situational exercises were embedded in tactical training.

"These are the guys who are at the front lines and responsible for the platoon and its actions. So we stressed to them that no matter what the other side does, you always have to do the right thing. In the long run you'll gain the respect of the populace," said Alonso.

"Most of these guys are very young, and it's great to see how much their maturity level grows while they are here," said Staff Sgt. Miguel Lewis, a cadet engineer course instructor.

"Although most cadet courses host students from different countries with different professional backgrounds, the basics we teach, discipline, responsibility for one's actions and responsibility for subordinates, these leadership fundamentals can be used in any field," said Alonso.

Concentrating their efforts with strategy and teamwork to negotiate obstacles at the Fort Benning Leadership Reaction Course, cadets realized that overcoming what may have appeared simple in scope was actually a window into the complexities of group dynamics when accomplishing a task.

"Alternating through leadership positions, cadets in charge had to know the limitations and the strengths of team members. Young leaders had to task organize everyone and communicate exactly what they needed everyone to do," Alonso said.

"It's like a puzzle," Alonso added. "There is really not a wrong way, because there are several different was to accomplish a task. "However, the process in which a leader assesses the obstacle, the task and the teams capabilities to accomplish it, indicates much on leadership."

Special day: No walk in park for teen

Teen marches 24 miles with drill sergeant dad

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"The Bayonet" is infantry training's grand finale and a daunting exercise for the most stalwart soldier. But a "little kid with a big heart" met the challenge head-on and inspired a platoon of privates to do the same.

When Roger McCombs, the 14-year-old stepson of Staff Sgt. Chad Walker, agreed to tag along on "Bring Your Child to Work Day," April 26, he had no idea he'd be hoofing 24 miles over rough terrain and rappelling a 80-foot cliff.

"The soldiers said I was crazy — they'd rather be in school, but it was an easy choice," Roger said. "I had a lot of make-up work, but it was worth it."

When Walker, a drill sergeant the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, heard about "Bring Your Child to Work Day," he thought it would be a good opportunity to spend quality time with his stepson, who's lived with him less than three years.

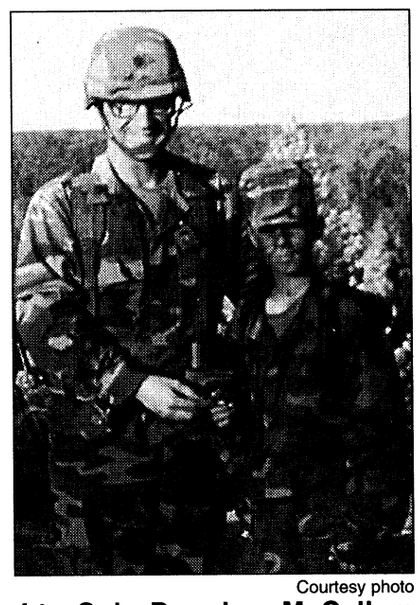
"We're still bonding, so I thought it would be a neat experience for both of us," Walker said. "But when I realized it was also the day of the march, I told him I'd understand if he'd rather change his mind. He said no way. I knew it would be a really big test for him, but he's tough. He's a little kid with a big heart."

Wearing BDUs and tennis shoes and carrying a 14-pound ruck sack filled with water and fresh clothes, Roger joined Walker's platoon at the start of "The Bayonet" after school April 25. They walked a mile and a half before bedding down in the woods until 5 a.m. when they resumed the march, which included an uphill climb over the sandy, steep hills that earned Sand Hill its name.

"That was the toughest part — the heat and the sand and the hills. I didn't think I'd make it," Roger said. "When I got through that part I decided I was going to go for it. I was going to make it all the way."

It was at that point Walker realized the gravity of the challenge his stepson had undertaken.

"He wanted to push himself to accomplish something he'd never done before, never thought about doing. He was testing himself, pushing himself beyond his limit, and I wanted to help him get there," Walker said. "This was an incredible thing for his self-confidence. He wasn't going to let his body beat his mind."



Roger wasn't allowed to participate in several of the Bayonet missions, including an ambush and casualty evacuation. But he sought permission, and was granted, the opportunity to tackle "The Bayonet's" final obstacle, an 80-foot cliff assault.

Lt. Col. Douglas McCallum, battalion commander, met Roger at the top of the cliff and presented him with a battalion coin.

"The fact that he'd walked all that way and made it up the cliff — it was neat to see," McCallum said. "You have to reward that kind of determination. He was an inspiration to me."

Pvt. Joshua Rivera, C Company, said Roger was an inspiration to him as well.

"I'd never walked 24 miles in my life, and we'd been through 14 weeks of training leading up to it," Rivera said. "To see this 14-year-old make it through a difficult road march was amazing. I'm afraid of heights so I didn't think I could make it up that cliff. Then here's this kid scrambling up it like it was nothing. That's what kept me going."

Deployable 'digital campus' ready to commence

New system teaches soldiers in the field

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — A new digital "Deployed Training Campus" can be shipped to anyplace in the world, be set up in about three hours by two people so it can be ready to help train soldiers via the Internet and a two-way video and voice system.

"This prototype supports the Army's concept of training soldiers in the environment they're going to fight in," said Chief Warrant Officer Charlie Bos, chief of the Deployed Training Branch within Training and Doctrine Command's Deputy Chief of Staff for Training organization.

"They can be trained on their critical tasks and remain proficient."

Older versions of the training system, which were built basically using equipment in the Army inventory, are being used in the Sinai, Kosovo, Bosnia and Germany. The new system was built for the Army for about $400,000.

Bos points out that figure includes research and development.

"These systems will hopefully cost less than $200,000 by the end of the next iteration. And they'll be twice as powerful and they'll be half the size," he said.

The systems currently deployed in Europe have to be carried on a flatbed truck. The new one fits into 19 specially designed boxes and goes on a small-ramp C-130 loading pallet. Bos wants the package to eventually fit into a Humvee.

"The original plan was to give one or two units to a division," he said. "I think the ultimate place for this is at brigade headquarters. When the brigade deploys and once they get settled into their mission, they need to go right into training and this is the vehicle to provide it."

The deployed campus consists of 17 high-end laptop computers, multiplex equipment that can handle video, voice, fax, telephones, and a deployable antenna, all with test equipment.

The videoteletraining package contains a pan, tilt, zoom and automatic focus videocamera, two 42-inch plasma flat panel displays and eight push-to-talk microphones.

After the antenna is set up and plugged into the system, it is digitally ordered to align itself with the correct satellite.

Power is provided by the deployed unit.

"We stopped using a generator with the last iteration," Bos said. "We were spending big bucks on a diesel generator that weighs a ton, and we never used it. We just didn't want that log trail."

Bos recently brought the campus to Fort Monroe and set it up in a tent in Continental Park across the street from the TRADOC commander's house. Throughout the day he gave briefings as officers, enlisted soldiers and civilians wandered in.

The tent, he explained, was not part of the deployed campus; it was just one he brought with him to serve as a classroom. The ideal place to house the equipment is wherever the deployed unit is housed, but a tent works just fine.

"If, for some reason, you wanted to use it outdoors in the heat or the cold, the equipment can take it," Bos said.

Classes are scheduled through the Network Control Center at Fort Eustis, Va. The NCC handles communications and schedules classes for all the deployed training sites.

TRADOC leadership was so impressed they want Bos to demonstrate the system to Army leadership.

Although the full schedule hasn't been set, Bos will take the system to the Pentagon and the TRADOC Commanders Conference in August.

The Sergeant Major for DCST, Sgt. Maj. Danny Hubbard, will show the system to attendees at the Armor Conference at Fort Knox, Ky., May 21.

Forerunners of the Deployable Training Campus have been in operation in the Sinai, Kosova, Bosnia, Macedonia and Germany, some for as long as six years.

The system at Vilseck, Germany, has saved U.S. Army Europe about $7 million to train soldiers in the Battle Staff NCO Course.

Three times a year, instruction is beamed via satellite from the Sergeants Major Academy, Fort Bliss, Texas, to soldiers who need the training. Although soldiers from installations around Europe travel to Vilseck for the training, the cost is much less than sending them to the United States for the course.

Soldiers from deployed areas such as Bosnia can be included in the training without having to leave their operational areas.

First priority for the Deployed Training Campus is military training, according to Bos.

In addition to BSNCOC, such training as Defense Language Institute refresher foreign language courses have been beamed to overseas troops by satellite. A hazard materials handling course was also broadcast for the first time to troops in Germany and Kosovo in March 2000.

"The pilot program was so successful that a second course was conducted in June 2000," Bos said. "That one linked Bosnia, Kosovo, Vilseck, North and South Camps in the Sinai and Alaska.

"This was the first time that soldiers on three continents were taught at the same time."

Next on the priority list is individual professional military development, followed by civilian education. Live classes are beamed from institutes such as City Colleges of Chicago and the University of Maryland after duty hours to deployed troops.

Morale and welfare is the third priority. When not in use the campus can be used for soldiers to call their families if the calls are local to Fort Eustis or can be patched in through the Defense Switching Network. Computers are available to get on the Internet to correspond with friends and families.

Deployed units can also schedule video visits with families through videoteleconference centers on installations in the United States or overseas.

"The satellite stream is a 24 hour, 7 day a week operation and costs not one dime more to keep it running, so there's no extra charge to let soldiers use it for personal communications.

"Once you've seen a long line of soldiers waiting to just get inside a tent to get their chance at the Internet, you know that's an important benefit for them," Bos said.

"The staff at the Network Control Center spend a lot of late nights connecting video calls for deployed soldiers. To say that Mr. Walt Breckons and his people at the NCC are supporters of our deployed troops would be a mild understatement."

A recent upgrade now allows NCC staffers to connect with all National Guard and Army Reserve sites around the country.

The ability to run simulations also makes the campus ideal for a commander to run combat training with his staff.

"The campus would serve as a great tactical operations center, but we hope commanders won't use it for that purpose, and use it for it's intended purpose," Bos said.

The system that Bos demonstrates is the first of three prototypes, with two others undergoing initial acceptance tests at Fort Eustis.

Even though he is chief of the Deployed Training Branch at Fort Monroe, Bos' duty station is with the TRADOC Interim Brigade Combat Team Coordination Cell at Fort Lewis, Wash. While helping to develop training programs for the new organizations, he also oversees development of the digital training campus.

Dexter students receive award

Foundation honors e-club members

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Four members of Dexter Elementary's e-Club traveled to Lincoln, Neb. to participate in the National Arbor Day Foundation's Award Winners Weekend Celebration April 27-29.

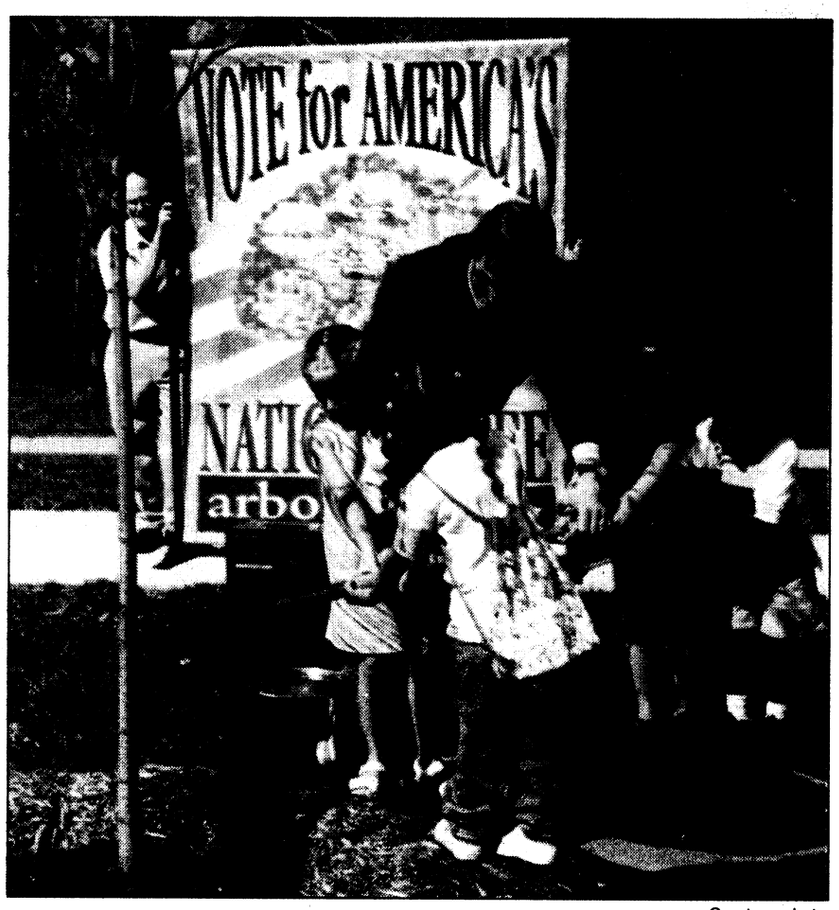
Kindergarten teachers Ann Horn and Earnestine Ezekiel, club sponsor, and four parents joined kindergartners Jalen Jackson, Delanie Doyle and Anna Karcher, and first-grader Brittany Britt for the national awards ceremony at the foundation's Lied Conference Center, where Georgia's state flag will hang for one year on behalf of the state's winners.

The students accepted the foundation's Education Award 2001 on behalf of the club's 58 kindergarten and first-grade members.

"It was wonderful to have the children participate in a program primarily for adults," Ezekiel said. "I sat next to the president of the foundation who said, 'After 126 years, we've finally got our focus in the right direction — the children.'"

The e-Club was presented one of the foundation's highest awards for its environmental stewardship projects, including a greenhouse, garden and recycling program.

"This award is for the kids because they're the ones who give the club direction," Ezekiel said.

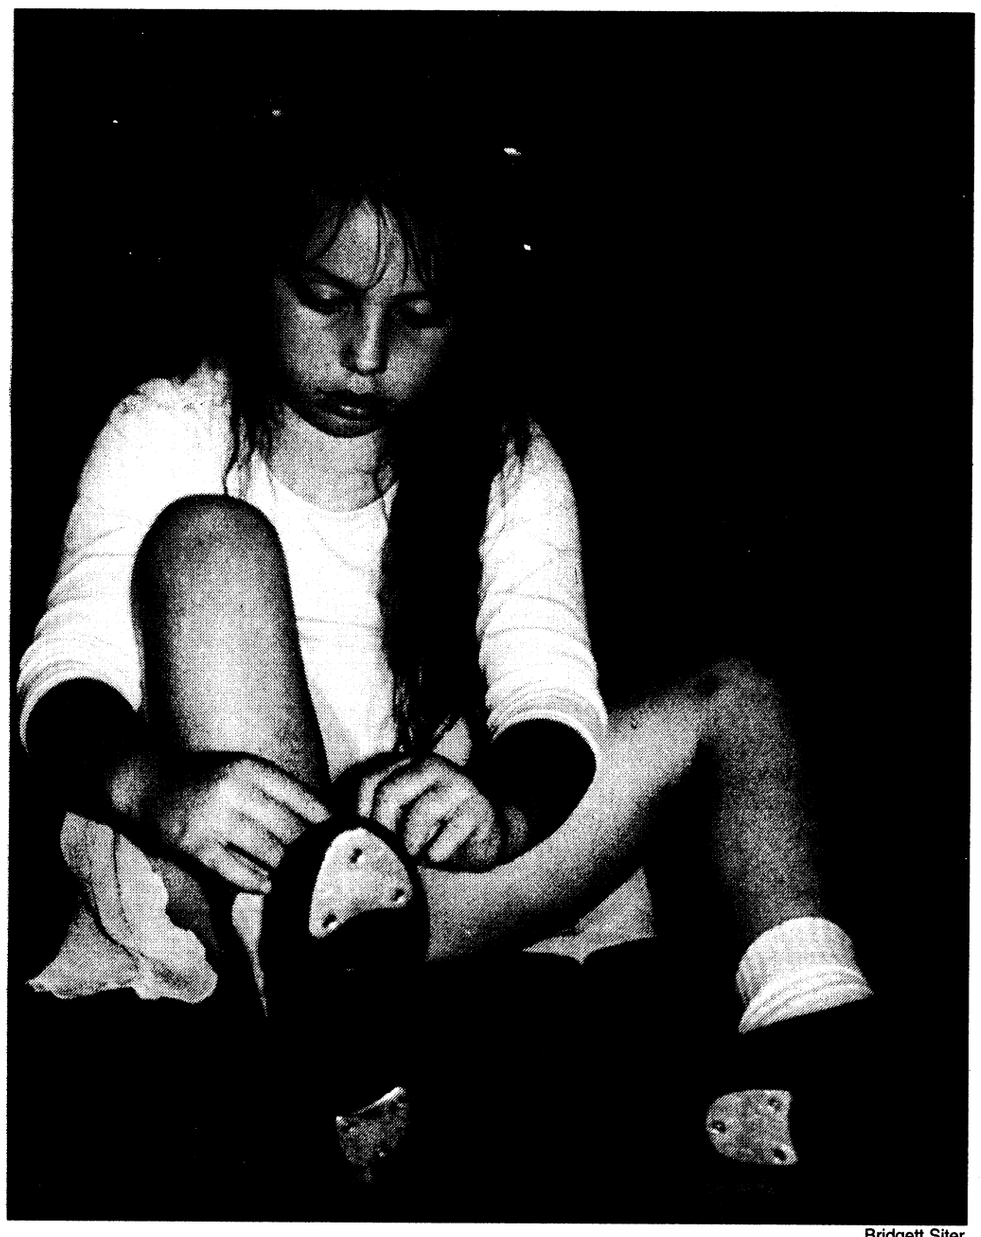


"They're ever conscious of the environment and they'll be stewards of the earth for a lifetime."

The highlight of the trip, Ezekiel said, was the national tree-planting ceremony on the lawn of the conference center. The students helped plant a Northern Red Oak, which was selected as the national tree this year by a nationwide online poll.

The students also rode in a trolley in the Nebraska City Arbor Day parade and visited the conference center's arboretum, an apple orchard and museums.

"My favorite was the Apple House," said Jalen Jackson, the club's 5-year-old business manager. "We got to eat and drink cider and I got a pencil made out of tree bark."



Ezekiel nominated the club for the environmental award in September, and members began planning the trip after receiving word of their award in January. Parents and the school's PTO helped fund the trip.

Soldiers help make Olympics special

Pfc. Chris Bray
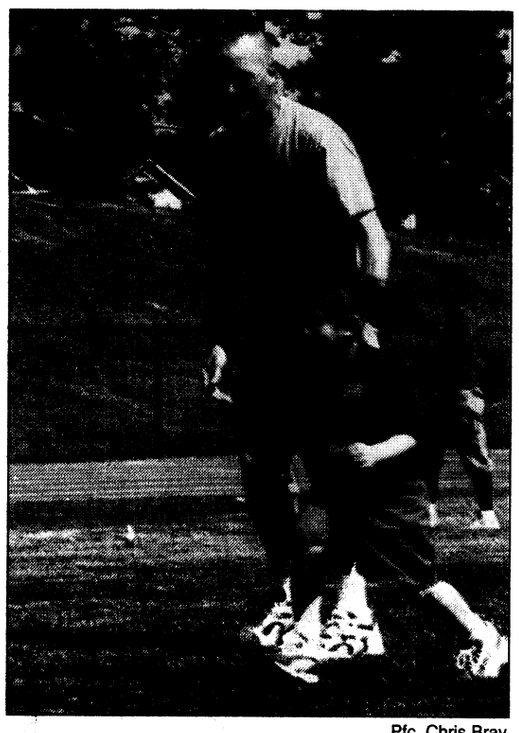
29th Infantry Regiment

Hundreds of children participating in a major Special Olympics competition at Shaw High School's Kinnett Stadium last week had a hand from soldiers from several Fort Benning units.

Col. Bill Rieger, commander of the Army Physical Fitness school, said he was volunteering his time "as a person who feels that these children are God's special children."

"They just have a lot of courage," Rieger said. "Whatever you do for them, any little thing, just makes them smile."

The participation of the soldiers was evident from the opening moment of the event, as Rieger and his daughter Ali joined Jeremy Strickland, of Blackmon Road Elementary School, in running the Special Olympics torch into the stadium to start the games.



During the course of a warm and chaotic day, the value of the volunteers' efforts was clear as the teachers and organizers running the event faced the challenge of keeping spirits high as energy sometimes lagged.

"I know you're hungry," one teacher told a competitor, "and I know you're tired, and I know you're hot. We're hot together, okay?"

Rodney Harrison, the principal at Gentian Elementary School, brought 15 students to the competition, ranging from 7 to 11 years old.

"We have great teachers," Harrison said. "They have a lot of patience."

Soldiers also demonstrated their patience and enthusiasm as they led events on the field. Sgt. Steve Johnsrud, National Guard liaison at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception), quickly gave up trying to explain his soccer ball-kicking event to competitors, instead running cheerfully from one set of orange cones to another to show exactly what to do. Johnsrud was one of 12 soldiers from the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) at the games, led by Capt. Mickey Turner.

Pfc. Chris Bray

Sgt. Steve Johnsrud, the National Guard liaison at 30th AG Battalion (Reception), runs with one of the Olympians from Gentian Elementary School in Columbus.

Master Sgt. Stan Smith, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, said that the five soldiers participating from his battalion were at the games because of their involvement in a local school through the Partners in Education program.

At the end of the day, soldiers had supported an important event that provided young people with a chance to have fun and practice their coordination.

"They live for this," Parker said. "They live to compete."

Engineers help students stretch bridge-building budget

Students manage $1.5 million account

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Minnie Bucks' lumber warehouse was assisting customers like Ima Bridgebuilder last week. But at $8,000 a toothpick, it's no wonder the construction company has to remain on a tight budget. So the group called in reinforcements for advice — soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group.

Fourth- and fifth-grade Dexter Elementary students are constructing mini bridges for the "Brasfield Bridge-Off" June 4. The contest will determine which project best encompasses the entire spectrum of tasks — from which bridge is the strongest to which team was the most price-conscious.

Several engineers were called in as professional consultants and have been assisting the children on each phase of the monthlong project.

Marjory Brasfield, who plays Bucks, said she created the idea for the bridge contest years ago.

"I saw the project at a conference for high school students," said Brasfield. "I just adjusted the idea for a younger age group."

The toughest task for the students, Brasfield said, is that they sometimes have a tough time visualizing how far their dollars will stretch.

"I hope they learn some real concept of money," said the enrichment teacher. "When they hear a number like a million they think they're rich. Then they start the purchasing process."

The bridges must be built according to the bridge building code, using only materials supplied by the fictitious I. Saw Lumber Company. With a budget of more than $1.5 million, the students thought they had plenty of money to spend, Brasfield said.

A winner from last year's bridge contest said it's easy to run out of money, even with such a large budget.

"We have to have some money left if our lumber breaks along the way. We also get fined for things, like too much glue," said Emily Toon.

Costs are associated with every aspect of the project. Land, for example, costs $50,000. Audit service, checks and extra sheets of paper come at a price.

Volunteer 1st Lt. Lisa Wills said she enjoys helping the students understand the entire process.

"We're approving their plans and drawings, and giving ideas on how to build it," said Wills. "It's cool. They've come up with some very intelligent ideas."

For students like Toon, Wills is also a relief in the financial arena.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

As temperatures continue to heat up, remember the rules on the smart way to water your lawn.

Rule 1 — Water between the hours of 10 p.m. and 10 a.m. There are several reasons for this rule.

• When watering between these hours you are not increasing the "dew" period.

The moisture from the air naturally settles on the grass between these hours. The longer your lawn is kept moist the higher the risk of disease and pest damage. So by watering during these hours you aren't extending the amount of time your lawn is wet, thus not inviting problems.

• When you water during the day, 70 percent of the water is lost to evaporation. So the water never gets to the roots where it is needed.

• When you water during the day you are also subjecting your grass to serious burn. The water intensifies the sun's rays and will burn the grass to the soil line.

Rule 2 — Water to a depth of one inch and only water once a week.

• Shallow, frequent watering cause the roots of the grass to stay near the surface of the soil. When the roots form here or in the thatch layer (the layer of decaying debris between the soil surface and the bottom of the grass blades) it causes the grass to be weak. The only lawn that will make it through the tough summer heat is the grass that has formed roots deep in the soil.

• Lawns only need one inch of water per week. You will do more damage to your lawn by overwatering than by not watering enough.

Rule 3 — Limit your watering to 20 minutes in one spot.

• Most oscillating sprinklers have an output that will saturate a section of the lawn in 20 minutes. If possible use a sprinkler that keeps the spray of water close to the ground to avoid water loss.

Post residents should remember that as summer approaches and the rainfall becomes infrequent, there will be drought restrictions placed on outside watering.

If residents baby their lawns now, they will only suffer worse damage when restrictions are in place.

Proper watering now will create a healthy root system for stress conditions later.

Contrary to popular belief, when residents water their lawns the excess water takes a long time to get back to our water supply. That water becomes unavailable, which means it can no longer be used by us or mother nature.

When it does make it back to the watershed it has brought tons of lawn chemicals with it that will potentially end up in your faucet feeding your family.

So when you lawn lovers are out there watering excessively, you are using up all our available water supply and possibly contributing to the toxicity of our drinking water.

Book signing Saturday — The sixth Ranger Battalion's successful raid on a Japanese prisoner of war camp during World War II is the subject of a book, "Ghost Soldiers," by Hampton Sides.

Sides will be at the Mall Post Exchange from noon to 1:30 p.m. Saturday to sign books and talk about the daring rescue.

Fifty-three years ago, 511 American POWs, survivors of the Bataan Death March, were saved from almost certain death when rangers conducted a surprise attack on Cabanatuan in the Philippines, killing more than 250 Japanese soldiers and rounding up the dazed, sick and starving Americans.

The raid remains the largest and most successful operation of its kind ever undertaken by the U.S. Army. The author traces each step of the rangers as they traverse mountainous jungles and low-crawl past enemy fortifications on their mission of mercy.

As the rangers near the POW camp, Sides reveals the daily routine of the prisoners, including Bob Boby, who was about to try to escape the camp when the rangers hit.

Sides researched the book using Army archives and talking firsthand with surviving POWs and rangers.

As an aside, Medal of Honor recipient, retired Col. Robert Nett's wife, Frances, was an Army nurse on Leyte where the POWs were transported after being rescued.

Yard Sale — There will be a postwide yard sale from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. May 19.

Preschool registration — Patch Preschool is now accepting registrations for the 2001-2002 school year.

Hours of registration are 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Your child must be registered with the Central Registration Office.

For more information, call 687-2404. Register early before all classes are filled.

Vaccination proof required — Fort Benning Schools follow the Georgia Department of Human Resources guidelines for immunizations and work cooperatively with Martin Army Hospital. All students entering the sixth grade next year will be required to have the varicella vaccine (chicken pox) or proof of immunity.

Proof consists of a physician's or health care provider's diagnosis of the disease or a statement of immunity.

Please check with your physician, clinic, or health care provider to be sure you have the appropriate documentation for school registration.

Holiday schedules — There will be no yard waste picked up in Family Housing May 28. The next scheduled yard waste pickup will be June 4. There will be no recycle pick-ups in Family Housing May 28. Areas normally scheduled for pick-up will be picked up May 29.

For more information, call the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, Construction Inspection Branch Office, at 545-4232.

All sections of the Self-Help Center (U-Do-It) will be closed May 26-28. The Self Help Center will reopen May 29 at 8:30 a.m. For more details, call Abegail Gibson at 545-1121.

Mayors wanted — The East Main Post mayor's position and the vice mayor and the Indianhead Terrace vice mayor position are currently open.

Call Rosetta Darby at 687-7747 for more information on how to apply for these positions.

Grants available — The Hope Grant Program will pay all tuition and fees, and up to $100 per quarter for textbooks for all active duty, and their family members 16 years or older (with rare exceptions) stationed at Fort Benning and living in Georgia.

All you have to do is fill out the required forms and register for classes at Columbus Technical College.

Depending on the program, classes are offered at Fort Benning and Main Campus day and evening.

Programs offered include Management, Computers, Office Technology Medical, Dental, Paramedic, Automotive, Carpentry, Air Conditioner Repair, Welding and many others.

For more information, call 685-8549, or come by Building 2614 in Soldier's Plaza.

Volunteers wanted — The Family Advocacy New Parent Support Plus and First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking follow-up phone callers.

Mothers of all descriptions are needed. Those who have had premature babies or multiple births, who were teen-age moms, single moms, and SIDS moms can be especially helpful.

The basic requirements are to be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support, and referrals to services they need.

For more information, call New Parent Support Plus and First Steps at 544-2020.

Red Cross needs volunteers — The Red Cross is looking for volunteers and instructors. If interested, call the office located in Soldiers Plaza at 545-8221.

off post

Black Tie and Blue Jeans Gala — The American Heart Association will host the first ever Black Tie Blue Jeans Gala from 8 p.m. to midnight Saturday at the Springer Opera House.

The Gala is targeting philanthropists in the 25-45 age group and is the second annual event in the state of Georgia. Local band, Misty Harbor, will provide entertainment while participants enjoy food, drink, dancing and other activities including a silent auction to kick off the night's festivities.

The Black Tie and Blue Jeans even was charted 12 years ago in Maryland by a group of young professionals who wanted to offer an affordable and fun event to their peers and introduce them to the American Heart Association. The result was one of the most creative and successful events in the Baltimore area and one that has grown in popularity across the nation.

Now, here in Columbus, more than 300 citizens will attend the Second Annual Black Tie Blue Jeans Gala in May. Last years Gala set a precedent for this year's event and it promises to be bigger, better and and the most fun yet. One reason the Black Tie Blue Jeans Gala is so successful is because it attracts a premium mix of married and single adults at an affordable price.

Internet Seminar — Chattahoochee Valley Community College is offering a free seminar on "Searching the Internet" June 16 from 10 a.m. to noon in the Learning Resource Center Computer Lab.

The program will demonstrate how to effectively search the Internet for both educational and recreational purposes.

Call 291-4979 or 291-4978 for reservations. Seating is limited.

Donations needed — The Columbus Goodwill is in need of donations of clothing, furniture, house wares, linens and small appliances. Donations fund the mission of providing job training for disabled and disadvantaged individuals.

For more information about donating, call the Goodwill at 324-4366.

Counselors needed —The Muscular Dystrophy Association needs volunteer camp counselors for Camp Walk N' Roll for the week July 28 through Aug. 3. Camp is held at Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga., which is about 45 minutes east of Atlanta.

Applications are available through Sgt. Rob Brown, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, Infantry Hall, Room 550. For any questions concerning camp responsibilities, call Joanie Rosenbaum, camp director, at 322-7573 or (770) 621-9800.

Reunion — The Army's renowned First Infantry Division will conduct its 83rd annual reunion in Nashville, Tenn., from Aug. 17-21. The reunion is sponsored by the Big Red One veterans' organization, the Society of the First Infantry Division located in Blue Bell, Penn.

The Big Red One is the Army's oldest and most famous division. It has fought with distinction in four wars in the 20th century: World War I, WWII, Vietnam and Desert Storm. Presently, the Division has units deployed on peacekeeping and military support missions in several countries in eastern Europe.

More than 1,000 veterans of the Big Red One and their guests are expected to attend the reunion which will feature a memorial service to remember the nearly 13,000 First Infantry Division soldiers who have given their lives in the service of their country. Everyone who ever served in the First Infantry Division is cordially invited to attend the reunion.

For more information, write Society of the First Infantry Division, 1933 Morris Road, Blue Bell, PA 19422, call (888) 324-4733 or e-mail Soc1ID@aol.com.

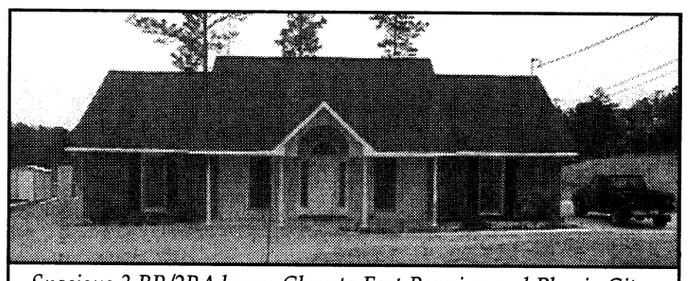
triangle design all in the same direction would make the bridge unstable.

To make the contest fair, fourth-graders were also given an advantage.

Costs for lumber, welding and auditing services are slightly more for fifth graders, said Brasfield.



"It's harder for us, because fifth grade gets charged more," said Garcia.

While the entire group is involved in the project, only one team will be proclaimed the winner. Though the students will have to cross that bridge when they come to it.

"I can't wait till the bridge-off next month. I think ours will be hard to beat," said McCallum.

White School students check out a huge whale designed and made by the first-grade enrichment students.

White School students have "whale of a time"

Children learn valuable lessons during Earth Day

Janie Pride
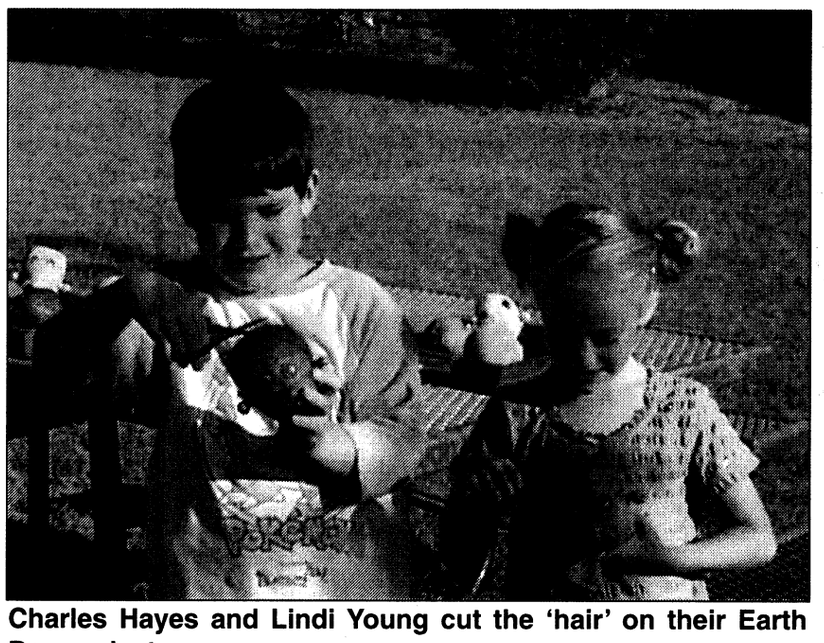
White Elementary School

White Elementary students had a "whale of a time" celebrating Earth Day 2001 April 23.

All students from pre-K through fifth grade participated in this special event coordinated by teachers Evelyn Braman and Dorothy Hyder.



Retired Col. Randy Buck of Flint Energies provided all teachers and students with colorful Earth Day T-shirts, which were worn on this day

The fifth-grade River Kids sang and danced to "Rollin' on the Chattahoochee" and encouraged everyone to protect and clean this valuable resource in the Fort Benning area. Fifth-grader Casey Shutt led the group in a recitation of the "Earth Day Pledge."

Owen Ditchfield, media specialist, dedicated two bluebird houses to White Elementary School. The birdhouses were made and donated to the school by coach Lewis Jones.

Braman provided facts about whales and led students on a tour of a huge whale designed and made by the first-grade enrichment classes.

Later, the students picked up trash and litter on the school grounds.

Charles Hayes and Lindi Young cut the 'hair' on their Earth Day projects.

Students celebrate SPARKS

White Elementary School

Fifth-grade students from White Elementary School participated in the SPARK 2001 (Special Program of Arts for Kids) program at Callaway Gardens April 25.

This visual and performing arts event was put on by the Education Department of the Gardens as a part of the "Celebrate the Arts" art festival.

SPARK used indoor and outdoor spaces in the gardens to feature visual and performing artists. Students were guests of featured artists, Laura Spitzer, a piano virtuoso from California, and Fred Newman, of the ABC cartoon "Doug" and the PBS series "Between the Lions."

The fifth-graders were divided among three of the featured visual artists.

One group worked with Cora Waterhouse, a children's art teacher from the Chattahoochee Valley Art Museum. She provided a hands-on experience using recycled materials and household items. The children made beautiful owl and butterfly masks using recycled milk jugs.

Another group participated in a session with Michael White, an award-winning artist and illustrator of children's books. He showed the students how a story may evolve from a piece of artwork and had them create drawings.

The last group experienced the work of Debra Quillen, a visual artist who uses computer generated art, polymer clays and paper casting as some of her art techniques.

"We had such a terrific day," said Janie Pride, White's fine arts specialist and coordinator of the event. "It was so exciting to have the students experience these fantastic artists.

"I was amazed that the visual artists provided such exciting hands-on experiences for the students."

Real estate is serious investment

Soldiers should do homework before purchase

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs

This is the third story of a seven-part series which takes a look at the basics of investing.

"I do."

Most soldiers recognize them as two words with long-term implications.

Words of commitment one should never say without serious thought — I do solemnly swear I will pay the mortgage payment for up to 30 years.

"Soldiers should understand real estate is a serious investment and a time consuming one," said Capt. Jason Dickinson, Headquarters, Basic Combat Training Brigade, who has studied the financial services field for more than five years.

Preparation is key, said Murray Calhoun, of Flournoy and Calhoun Realtors in Columbus, who has sold real estate since 1965.

"The first step is to get qualified (approved) by a mortgage banker to find out what price range that you qualify for," Calhoun said. "Then select a Realtor to represent you — with their computers, they can make the selection process easier."

Affordability is also vital, said Patti Herron, accredited financial counselor, Financial Readiness Program here.

"You may qualify for a $200,000 house, but don't go as high as you can," Herron said. "You have to eat you know. You have to have money for emergencies and a spending plan with which you feel comfortable."

Interest rates and the length of the mortgage matter, she said. Given a $50,000, 30-year mortgage, the difference between the total amount paid between 9 and 10 percent is $35.84 per month and $12,903.48 in total payments.

For a 15-year mortgage, the difference is $29.50 per month and $5,311.11 in total payments.

Adding an extra payment every year has a direct impact on the real estate investor's bottom line, Herron said.

Soldiers would benefit from knowing the basics of real estate, Calhoun said. There are numerous terms and jargon about which one can learn on the internet or the library, but some include:

• A list price is seller's advertised price.

• A sales price is what the buyer will pay for a property.

• The appraised value is the appraiser's estimate of the property's worth.

• An offer is a price less than the listed price a purposed purchaser can bid on a property.

• Foreclosure, losing the house, is what can happen when one does not make monthly payments.

• Appreciation is the difference between what one pays for a property and the price one realizes upon sale.

• Equity is the difference between market value and the mortgage balance.

Some soldiers may struggle with the question of renting versus buying.

"If you think you will be in the house three years or more, buying makes sense," Calhoun said.

"We can point out many stories of soldiers who have gained considerable wealth investing in real estate," Calhoun added. "Don't forget the three most important things in real estate — location, location, location."

Another important consideration is the time at which to buy, he said.

"(The best time to buy real estate is) when the market is slow — in the winter — when interest rates are good," Calhoun said.

It is imperative to remember there are many tax advantages when buying a house, such as the deductibility of property taxes and interest, he said.

"In Muscogee County, if you own the home that you live in, you can claim homestead exemption (if you are a resident of Georgia). This saves $500 plus per year in property taxes. Also, this 'freezes' the value that your home can be taxed for."

Points, percentage fees a loan company can charge in order to offer a lower interest rate, investors or sellers pay are also deductible the year they purchase the house.

Points, prepaid interest, and property taxes are part of a group of fees called closing costs. They also include title insurance, escrow or closing day charges and document fees.

Before closing, have the home inspected and obtain a title report and an attorney, Calhoun said.

"When you find your house, get an attorney to make sure the title is clear," he said.

Soldiers should also purchase a homeowners insurance policy equal to the value of the full-replacement value of the home, he said.

Some soldiers use real estate to earn income. This is a serious proposition, Dickinson said.

"The average American buys three homes in a lifetime, so if you are attempting to buy property to rent out — investigate first," he said.

Soldiers should ensure they have the time to check on the house or the money for another to be responsible for its well-being, he said.

"Be very selective of who lives there," Dickinson said. "A home can go from great to not so great in about a year, if the residents don't care for it."

Other ways to invest in real estate include buying fixer-uppers and foreclosures or vacation homes and condominiums.

"Vacation homes can work out good, but they are kind of risky," Calhoun said. "Condos (or flats) have good resale (value)."

For soldiers with real estate already in their portfolio, some may have trouble selling it; they have a slow mover.

"They should make their property as attractive as possible and consider reducing the price," he said.

According to the American Title Company Web site, http:db.inman.com/inman/qa/atic, other preparations include:

• Sweep the sidewalk, mow the lawn, prune the brushes, weed the garden and clean debris from the yard.

• Clean the windows and make sure the paint is not chipped.

• Be sure the doorbell works.

• Clean and spruce up all rooms, furnishings, floors, walls and ceilings.

• Organize closets.

• Make sure basic appliances and fixtures work. Get rid of leaky faucets and frayed cords.

• Make sure the house smells good.

• Put vases of fresh flowers throughout the house.

• Playing pleasant background music sets the mood.

The site also points out several cardinal rules to negotiating effectively:

• Do not let yourself get rushed into any decision, no matter how tempting it may be.

• Do your homework, and learn as much about the seller or the buyer as you can.

• If you have doubts about negotiating skill, hire someone to help.

• Play your cards close to your vest and do not reveal too much information to the other party or their agent.

"Realtors work for the seller for the most part," Herron said. "They'll tell the seller any information you give them."

"Everything is negotiable," she added. "Try to find out how desperate the seller is to sell. They may pay part or all the closing fees."

When buying a home, Herron offered these tips:

• Ask if and when the water heater, roof and carpet was replaced.

• Go back two or three times to look at the house.

• Look at the house and the neighborhood at night.

A CLOSER LOOK

Given a $50,000 30-year mortgage at 9.5 percent interest with a $420.43 monthly payment:

- A soldier pays $151,354.80 ($101,354.80 in interest).
- By making one extra payment per year, a soldier pays $94,176.32 ($44,176.32 in interest), and saves $57,178.48 in total payments.

Given a $50,000 mortgage at 9.5 percent interest the difference between the total amount paid between 9 and 10 percent is:

- $35.84 per month and $12,903.48 in total payments. (30-year mortgage)
- $29.50 per month and $5,311.11 in total payments. (15-year mortgage)

"You may qualify for a $200,000 house, but don't go as high as you can. You have to eat you know. You have to have money for emergencies and a spending plan with which you feel comfortable."

Shana Magnotti Fund requests burial donations

Master Sgt. Sally Roberts
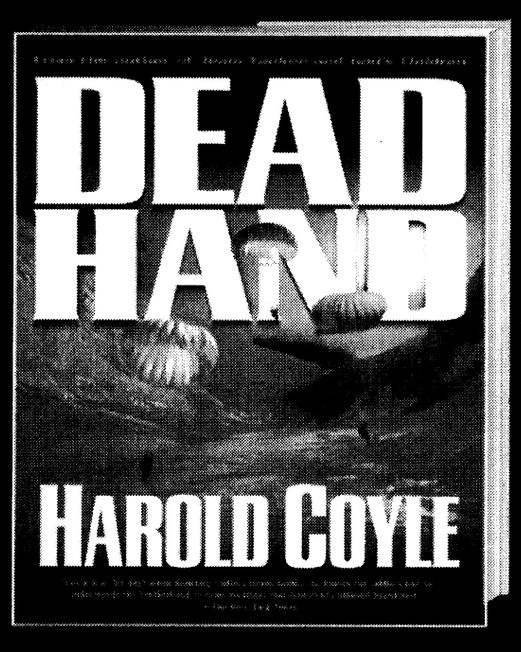
USAIC Public Affairs

A memorial fund has been established to assist the family of a soldier in the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment in covering the funeral expenses of Shana Magnotti.



The 20-year-old wife of Pfc. Joeseph Magnotti died April 29 at Emery University Hospital in Atlanta after a brief and sudden illness. She will be buried near the couple's home in Bonifay, Fla.

Donations will help to cover nearly $7,000 in burial expenses as well as the costs of her medical care.

Donations can be made to the Shana Magnotti Fund at the Main Post branch of Columbus Bank and Trust, account number 61124311.

For more information, call Capt. David Cripe, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., 545-5324.

Mothers provide strength behind soldiers

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

reflections

Mothers have always played an important role throughout the history of the U.S. Army.

Military moms fall into three categories: mothers of military personnel, wives of military personnel with children and mothers who are service members.

With the exception of when the U.S. Army has been deployed overseas in combat, traditionally, families have accompanied military members.

In the early 1800s while the West was being settled, families accompanied soldiers to their duty stations and lived in the forts. Sometimes, in worse cases, wives had to follow their husbands, bringing with them their few household goods, clothes and children on stagecoaches.

In these meager surroundings, these mothers not only did housework, took care of the children and often provided school classes for the children, but also tended gardens, canned and dried food and made clothes. In really bad circumstances, they found themselves with whatever weapons were available, helping to defend the fort, protecting themselves and their children.

As time progressed, fortunately living got easier, but expectations changed — there were more social obligations. An old Army saying is that you could move in during the morning and have a party that night.

At the onset of World War II, many mothers were asked to pack their families and goods on short notice, and board ships to return to the U.S. from overseas areas such as the Philippines because of the possibility of Japanese attacks. These mothers set up new homes and cared for their families for several years, with little or no news as to the welfare of their husbands, or even whether they were alive.

During this same time, other more fortunate mothers whose husbands would receive orders to move, would pack their families and drive to the husband's new station, and have to search for quarters, since there were rarely any quarters available on post.

As recently as the mid-1900s, Fort Benning personnel could still be assigned a garden plot on post, and again, the mothers played a large role in cultivating the garden and canning surplus food for use in winter.

By that time, mothers were deeply engrossed in juggling the needs of the family around the one family car, getting the husband to work and transporting children to school and to the myriad of after-school activities.

During this time, there were school events, changes of command, unit reviews, field day activities, honors ceremonies and numerous other social events which mothers were expected to attend. Fewer mothers worked outside the home, but they performed countless hours of volunteer service for the many volunteer agencies on post.

There is an old saying, "Oh, for the life of an Army wife." This could easily be changed to, "Oh for the life of an Army mother." Through the years they have had good and hard times.

Army mothers, past, present and future, I salute you! Have a great day!

Stress can manifest in many ways

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Stress in children is often manifested in physical symptoms and behavior changes.

Common physical symptoms include headaches, stomachaches, trembling, bedwetting or frequent urination, a sore jaw from grinding teeth or clenching their jaw and increased accidents.

Some behavioral indicators of stress are crankiness, laziness, nervousness, poor eating habits, poor sleep habits and zoning out by watching television or playing video and computer games excessively.

All children show these signs at times. If physical causes are ruled out and the symptoms remain, the child may be suffering from stress.

Children come under stress from neighborhood bullies or when parents argue or become upset. When a parent is away on a field exercise or on an unaccompanied tour; when there is a divorce; or if their beloved pet or loved one is in the hospital or has died, children experience stress. Moving to a new home or school also creates stress.

Even positive changes, such as the birth of a baby, competition, dating or a vacation trip can produce stress in children.

Parents can teach their children how to handle stress through deep breathing exercises, muscle relaxation, smiling, visual imagery, exercise, meditation and prayer.

A proverb says, "A cheerful look brings joy to the heart" (Proverbs 16:24).

Positive interventions, such as encouragement, praise, flexibility and not demanding perfection help to prevent stress. The Bible says, "Pleasant words are a honeycomb, sweet to the soul and healing to the bones" (Proverbs 16:24).

Does your child need help handling stress? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, located at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

"Her children arise and call her blessed, her husband also, and he praises her: Many women do noble things, but you surpass them all." — Proverbs 30:28-29

Columbus hosts military championship tournament

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Members of every service competed Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the U.S. Rugby Football Union 2001 Military Championships.

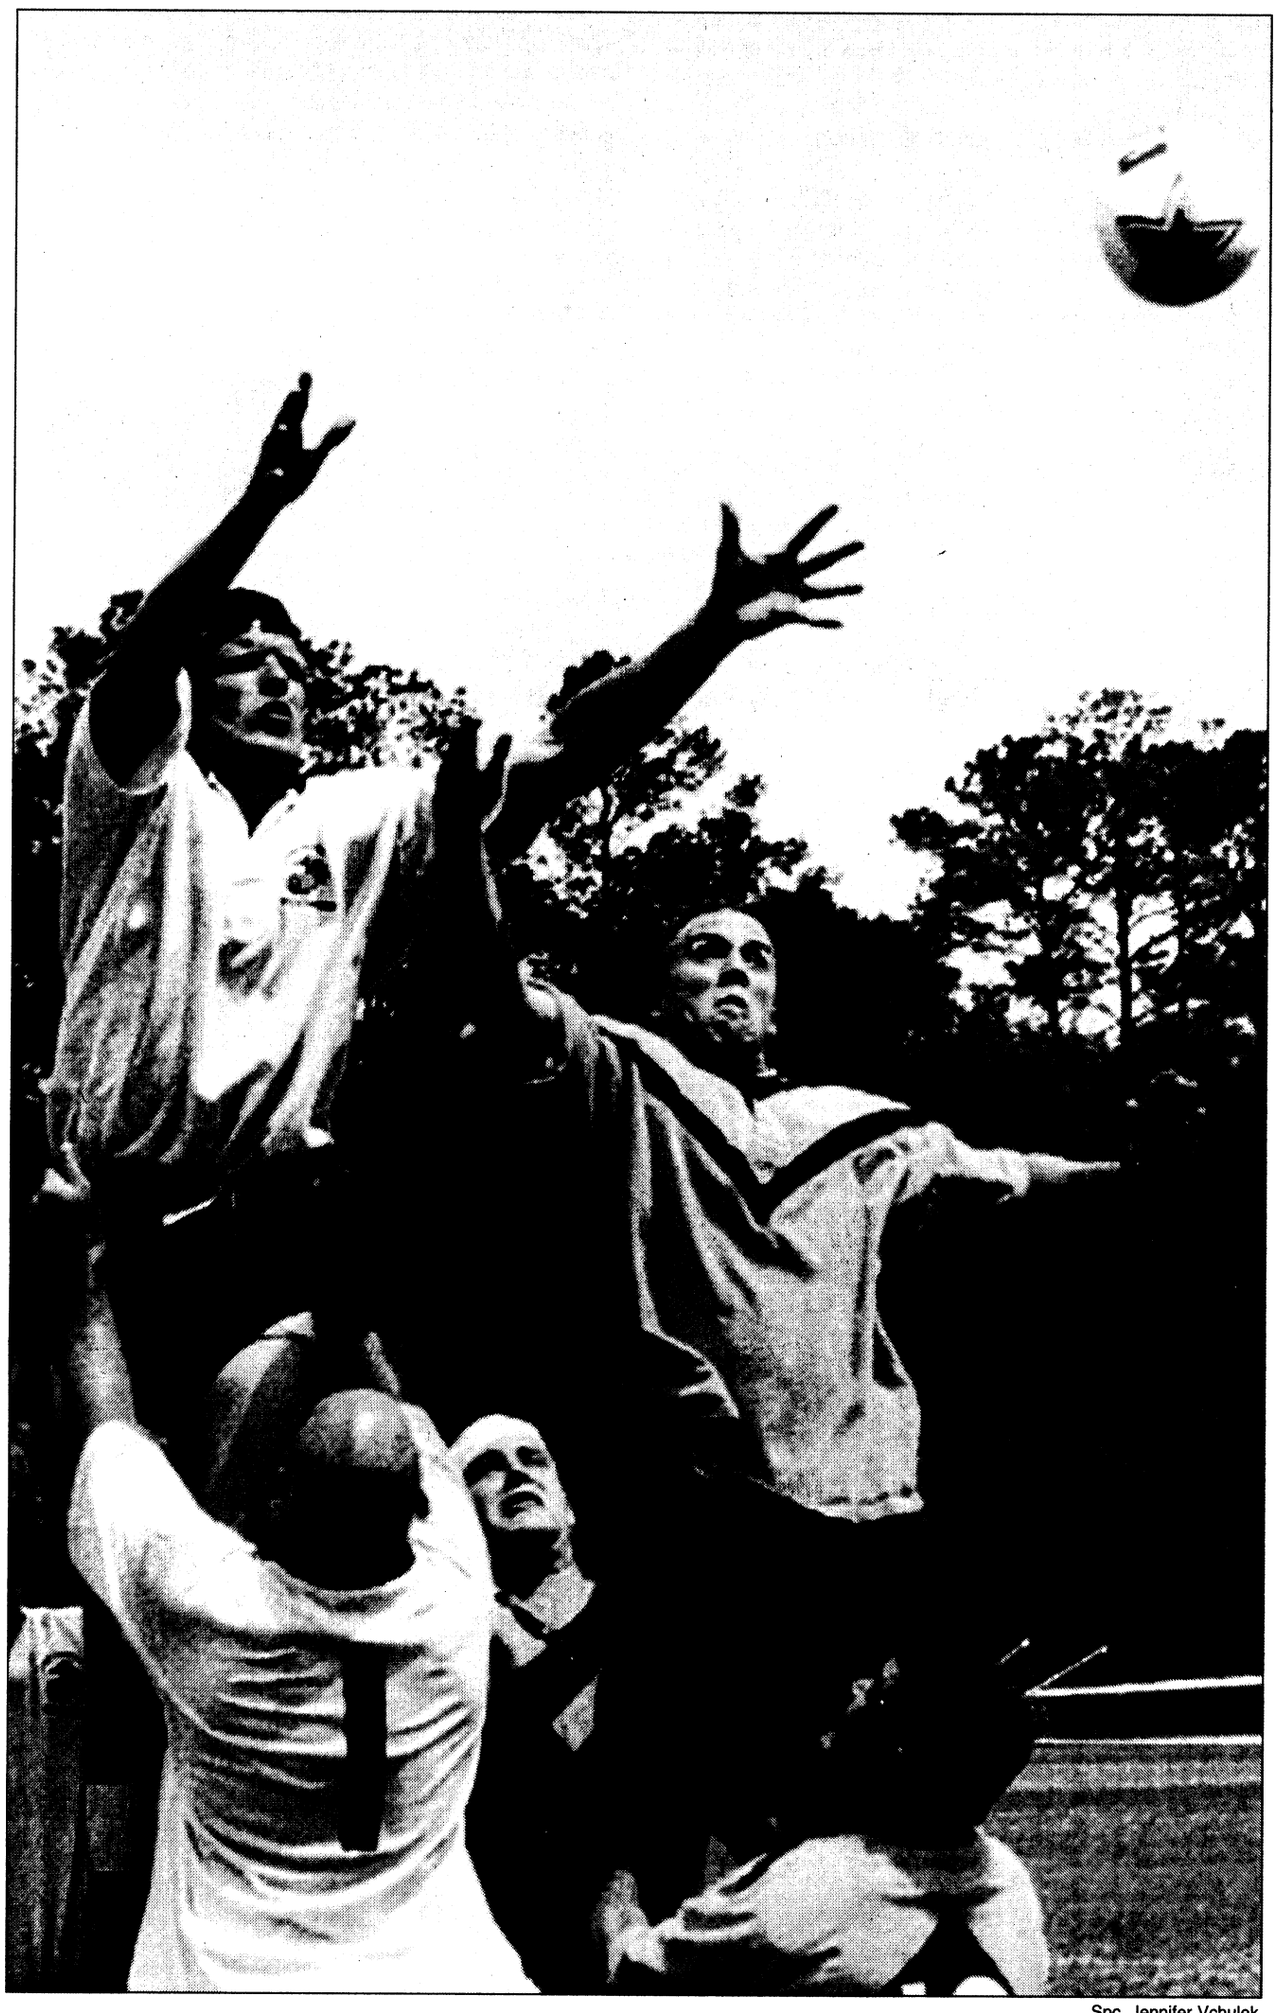
The tournament, held at Woodruff Farm Soccer Complex, in Columbus, featured 22 rugby teams from across the United States and overseas.

The tournament encompassed an open division and a military club division. In the open division, service members from different posts joined together to form teams and played against each other.

The club division, comprised of 12 clubs, was broken into three groups of four teams a piece. Each team played three matches Saturday, and the best team proceeded to the finals held Sunday. The Marines from Camp Pendleton, Calif., came out on top winning the men's tournament, 11-8, against the Navy's Pensacola, Fla., team.

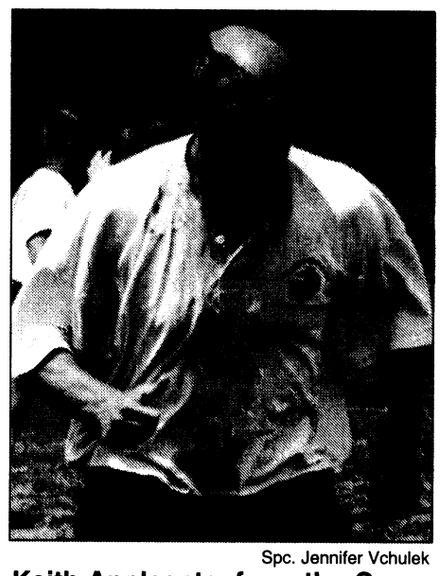
The Navy's Norfolk women's team won their tournament against the Marine's team from Camp Lejeune, N.C.

Fort Benning's men's team didn't fare well, losing the three games they played.



The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Football Club has hosted the annual championship tournament six times in the past, said Gary Kent, treasurer, for the Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Football Club.

Every year, installations bid on the tournament for the following year. Kent said he bid on the 2001 and 2002 tournaments in 2000.



The 2002 tournament is also scheduled to be fought at Woodruff, Kent said.

"This is a benefit to our club locally in terms of national recognition," Kent said. "We do a good job at hosting the tournament and want to continue to maintain a high standard of excellence to the players (and to the sport)."

Kent said holding the tournament wouldn't be possible without the support of Columbus Parks and Recreation and the Youth Services Soccer Association, who allowed the organization to use their facilities.

Ruggers battle for title

Jim Muldoon
Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Team

During the first 10 minutes of the game that decided the champions of the U.S. Rugby Football Union 2001 Military Championships, the Marines from Camp Pendleton jumped out and wreaked havoc just to the edge of the referee's whistle to gain a 13-0 lead.

Scrumhalf Justin Constantine converted two penalty kicks and a conversion to cap outs de center Neal Kendricks try before the young Aviators found their pace. Pensacola fought back but could only muster a penalty kick by outside center Pat Marvel to narrow the gap to 13-3 at the half.

Pensacola dominated the second half play but Camp Pendleton's experienced squad turned them back again and again until time was short. Pensacola threw everyone into the line to spring winger Ely Burleson into the corner for a try to close the margin to the 13-8 final score as time expired.

In the women's championship match dominated by scrumhalf Kambeth Kelly cycled phase after phase of clean ball to the backs who were stymied by the West Coast defense. As time expired in the first half, flanker Andrea Annunziata snuck around the flank of a ruck to dive over for a 5-0 lead.

The storm continued to dominate and camped on the West Coast line for the early part of the second half but West Coast mounted a furious counterattack that tested the Norfolk ladies to the limit. Despite West Coast's best efforts Norfolk showed their experience and gradually cleared the Coasties from their zone to drive in a final try by prop C.J. Jones converted by flanker Tonya Stanton to secure a 12-0 championship victory.

11th Infantry Regiment hosts Iron Soldier Bike Race Tuesday

Physiologist encourages racers to hydrate

1st Lt. Stacy Picard
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment is sponsoring a 20-mile bicycle race Tuesday.

The Iron Soldier Bicycle Race was designed to promote a spirit of friendly competition and a fun, challenging experience for all.

All racers must be in compliance with Fort Benning post policy for bicyclists to participate in the race.

Racers must have the following safety equipment in order to ride: a helmet, a reflective device attached to their bicycle and reflective clothing. Reflective tape will be on hand at the start point for racers who do not have reflective clothing.

Dr. Lou Tomasi, research physiologist for the U.S. Army Physical Fitness Program, and avid bicycle rider, offered some important advice for all participants.

"Between now and the race, people should get on their bikes and ride. They need to get their bodies used to riding their bikes for a long distance.

"Hydration is important as well," Tomasi said.

"Make sure you have a comfortable bike with the proper seat height for your body. It is also important to have a comfortable seat.

"Cycling is not stressful on the bones and is an excellent form of cross-training."

Tomasi stressed that the riders need to be very aware of the cracks in the road on this route during the race.

He said believes the course chosen for the race is an excellent one, due to the low traffic volume.

But some parts of the roads are rough.

The awareness of each rider will help prevent possible injuries from occurring. After the race, Tomasi recommends riders intake some form of carbohydrate. Electrolyte drinks are a good choice. Eating fruit or a non-fried carbohydrate such as bagel is another suggestion.

No need to bleed: Golf tourney to support Red Cross

Master Sgt. Sally Roberts
USAIC Pubic Affairs

Mention a benefit event for the American Red Cross and most people envision blood drives. But on May 24, the second annual golf tournament sponsored by the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment offers a painless and enjoyable way to support local Red Cross efforts.

The tournament begins at 1 p.m. at the Fort Benning Golf Course and all proceeds are donated to Fort Benning and Chattahoochee Valley Red Cross offices to support their many efforts to assist people in need, said Lt. Col. Mike Burns, commander of the 2nd Battalion.

The tournament raised more than $1,000 last year and organizers are hoping for another successful turnout of community conscious golf enthusiasts.

"The Red Cross does more than just take blood out of your arm," Burns said. "I love to golf and helping organizations like the Red Cross directly supports our Army Values training."

In addition, members of the Raiders' battalion have donated more than 2,000 pints of blood through unit blood drives.

Given a time and place to be a blood donor, nearly 75 percent of the cadre and basic training soldiers in the unit have volunteered to donate blood, Burns said.

Fees for the tournament are $35 for Fort Benning Golf Course club members, $40 for military and Department of the Army civilian employee non-members and $50 for civilian guests. The package includes green fees, riding cart, range balls, awards, door prizes and refreshments. Local sponsors have donated a bounty of door prizes such as sporting equipment, restaurant gift certificates and travel discounts.

Proceeds from the tournament are used to support many Red Cross programs including blood drives, CPR and lifeguard classes, disaster relief and emergency assistance for families in crisis.

Adventure festival premieres

Festival offers participants events, clinics

Asheville Public Affairs

Asheville, N.C. — A new outdoor adventure festival premieres this summer in the highest mountain peaks in the east.

Scheduled for June 1-3 in Asheville, the Mountain Sports Festival will feature a variety of outdoor sporting competitions as well as exhibitions and clinics. Events include mountain bike racing, climbing, a triathlon, a road race and trail run, disc golf and a touring and recreational boat symposium.

The Mountain Sports Festival is expected to bring both adventure sports competitors and onlookers of all ages from all over the southeast.

Sporting events and clinics will take place in various locations in and around Asheville and Asheville City and County Plaza in the heart of downtown will serve as the festival's home base, or Festival Center.

• Mountain biking competitions for beginners and experts will occur June 1-3 at the Alexander Bike Facility on six miles of trails devoted exclusively to biking.

The single-track course was designed by mountain bikers for mountain bikers.

• The Biltmore Estate Kiwanis 15K race will be held June 3, and the course will be run on the grounds of the Estate, starting at the winery and making a loop in front of the house and through the gardens. Everyone entering the Estate for the race must present a special race ticket.

• On June 2, ClimbMax Climbing Center, in downtown Asheville, will host the regional finals of the Junior Competitive Climbers Association and a climbing demonstration. World-renowned climber and storyteller Kurt Smith will present a slide show that night featuring slides of his adventures and accomplishments.

• Nantahala Outdoor Center's Touring and Recreational Boat Symposium will feature demos and clinics in and about touring and recreational boats. This free event will be held June 2 at Lake Julian, just south of Asheville.

• The French Broad River Park will be the starting point for the Fifth Annual RiverLink Triathlon, June 3. Asheville's French Broad River corridor provides a fast, flat course suitable for first-time triathletes and veterans alike.

• The Land of Sky Disc Golf Tournament will be held June 2 and 3 at the just-opened Richmond Hill Disc Golf Course.

• A Trail Run will start at the Trace Ridge Trail Head in Pisgah National Forest. The nine-mile, technical course crosses Mill River 12 times in the first three miles.

In addition, North Carolina Outward Bound will staff a one-of-a-kind, 30-foot climbing tower on the lawn at City and County Plaza. This climbing course features three inflatable tubes, 30-feet high, covered with hand and footholds.

Updated information and event specifics are posted at the festival Web site, www.mountainsportsfestival.com.

For more information, write The Mountain Sports Festival at P.O. Box 7521, Asheville, NC 28802, call (828) 285-9935 or e-mail at info@mountainsportsfestival.com.

- Comprehensive benefits including medical, dental, and vision insurance, 401(k) savings plan, and company paid retirement plan.
- Quality of life is extraordinary
- Live anywhere in the gulf coast states
- Rotational work schedules provide equal time off: (2 weeks on - 2 weeks off, or 3 weeks on - 3 weeks off)

DRILLING OPERATIONS MANAGEMENT TRAINING PROGRAM

A "fast track" program designed to rapidly educate and advance an individual into the company's critical management positions. (4 year college degree required). ~$48k

ROUSTABOUT

Primary focus is to safely perform various work activities that assist the crane operator including:

- Loading and off-loading equipment and supplies from supply / work boats.
- Lifting and moving various equipment, systems, containers, tubulars, palletized materials, food stores, and other supplies about the installation.
- Coordinate communications between work boats and crew boats.
- Perform preventive maintenance, repair, installation and removal of all crane, rigging / slinging, and deck maintenance equipment.
- Perform deck maintenance about the installation to include cleaning, painting, and housekeeping. ~$30k

MOTORMAN

Assists the assistant engineer with various preventative maintenance, repair, monitoring of diesel engines and support systems associated with the engine room. ~$40k

PUBLIC NOTICE

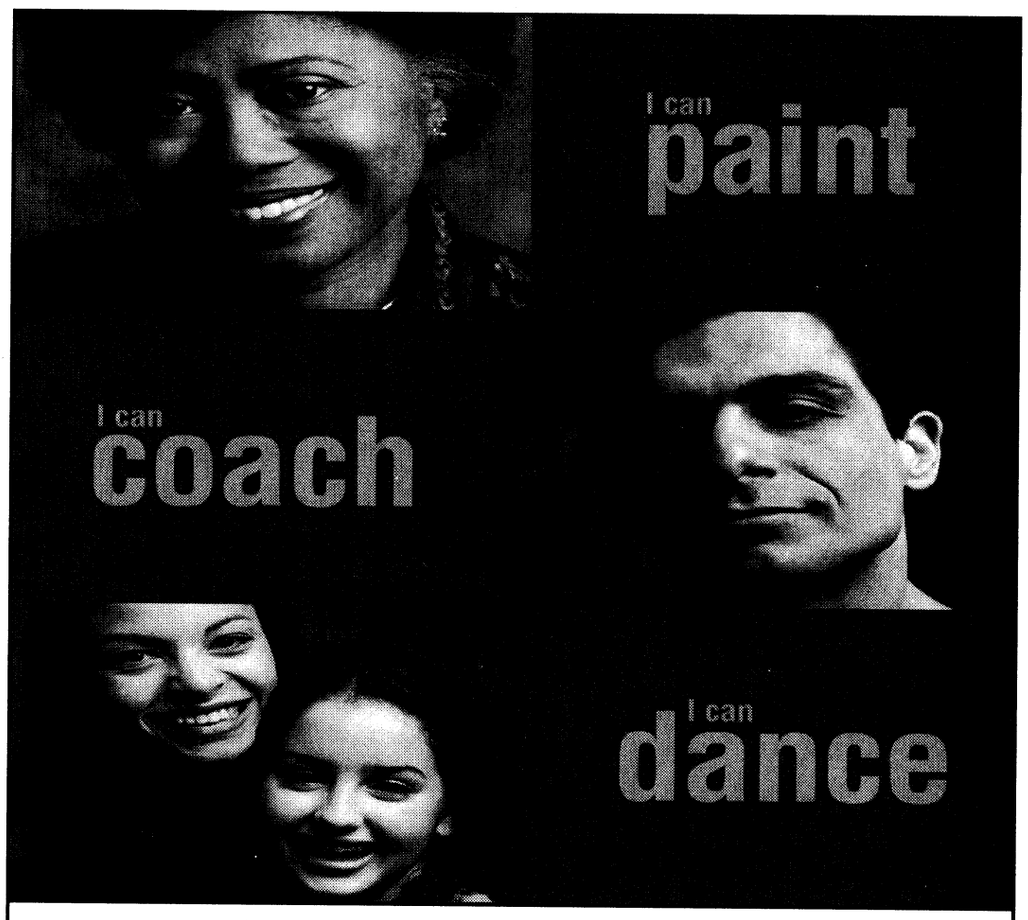
The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations will conduct an accreditation survey of Martin Army Community hospital during the week of 21 May 2001.

The purpose of the survey will be to evaluate the organization's compliance with nationally established Joint Commission standards. The survey results will be used to determine whether, and the conditions under which accreditation should be awarded to the organization.



Joint Commission standards deal with organizational quality of care issues and the safety of the environment in Which care is provided. Anyone believing that he or she has pertinent and valid information about such matters may request a public information interview with the Joint Commission's field representatives at the time of the survey. Information presented at the interview will be carefully evaluated for relevance to the accreditation process. Requests for a public information interview must be made in writing and should be sent to the Joint Commission no later than five days before the survey begins. The request must also indicate the nature of the information to be provided at the interview. Such requests should be addressed to:

Division of Accreditation Operations
Accreditation Services Specialist
Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations
One Renaissance Boulevard
Oakbrook Terrace, IL 60181

The Joint Commission will acknowledge such requests in writing or by telephone and will inform the organization of the request for any interview. The organization will, in turn, notify the interviewee of the date, time, and place of the meeting.

This notice is posted in accordance with the Joint Commission's requirements and may not be removed before the survey is completed

Finding a way to protect your money from inflation for the next 30 years doesn't require a degree in economics. Or even a crystal ball. You just need to visit your local bank, check out the new U.S. Savings Bonds EasySaver Plan, or talk to your employer. Not only do I Bonds earn a real return over and above inflation, they're also exempt from state and local income taxes. And you can get started with as little as $50. To find out more about I Bonds, go to www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to U.S. Savings Bonds Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.

Then relax. Because we predict a more secure future for your money.

Water restrictions in effect

Residents asked to help combat water shortage

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Even with some recent heavy rains hitting the area, it hasn't been enough to steer the Fort Benning area clear of drought conditions.

As a result, post officials have decided to enact water restrictions beginning today to combat a possible water shortage.

Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, said the post is emplacing restrictions to follow suit with the state.

"Our neighbors, and the state of Georgia, are under water restrictions. Columbus is already in the odd-even days schedule," he said. "Emplacing restrictions show that we are also being good stewards of the environment."

Under the restrictions, outside watering, including lawn watering, car, bike and boat washing and swimming pool filling is allowed for even-numbered addresses on even-numbered calendar days and odd-numbered addresses on odd-numbered calendar days.

The hours for outside water use each day are between midnight and noon and between 7 p.m. to midnight.

There can be no outside watering between noon and 7 p.m.

Currently sprinklers are authorized, but if conditions worsen, water use must be supervised at all times without a sprinkler.

Post residents need to follow the restrictions, said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"These restrictions are mandatory and enforceable," he said. "Community Life NCOs will go around and knock on doors and leave notes if someone is using the water when they aren't supposed to be.

"The drought is not severe now. If the drought gets severe at a later date, then restrictions would change in favor of conservation," Stelzer said.

Water restrictions now could make a difference in the long run, said Joe Wilkins, environmental specialist, water project manager for DFEL.

"It's difficult to understand that a serious drought, far more severe than we had last summer, could happen," he said.

"We have seen recently how occasional rains make it appear that we are coming out of the drought. And we have seen that subsequent days can pass without a drop of rain.

'Hammer' Brigade leaves for NTC

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

The soldiers of 3rd Brigade are about to hit the road for their annual National Training Center rotation.

Beginning Saturday, the majority of the brigade's soldiers will deploy to Fort Irwin, Calif., where they will conduct training exercises for more than a month.

More than 4,500 soldiers from six different installations are taking part in the rotation.

Col. Tony Cucolo, 3rd Brigade commander, said he has several goals he would like to see the brigade meet during the stay at NTC.

"I have three criteria for a successful rotation: no deaths or serious injuries, no lost sensitive items and we improve every mission. That's what I'd like to see out of this rotation," he said. "It is a chance for us to do large-scale collective training of unmatched scope with incredibly accurate feedback systems, so I really believe we can get better every fight.

"And we can, because the nature of training event is repetitive under changing conditions — we'll attack more than once, I want every successive attack to be better than the last. We'll defend more than once, I want to improve each successive defense. And we can," said Cucolo. "We'll come home more confident, definitely more competent and absolutely ready for anything our country needs us to do."

Cucolo said he is also looking forward to seeing how the combat teams work together.

"Eight battalions, seven separate companies, troops and batteries are deploying with the 3rd Brigade. Four of those units have brand new commanders.

There's no better way to learn about your outfit than to endure a crucible like NTC together," Cucolo said.

Lt. Col. Skip Davis, deputy commander for 3rd Brigade, said another way this year's rotation will be different than those of the past is in equipment used. In the past, brigades have drawn the M-1 A1 Abrams tanks and M-2 A2 Bradley Fighting Vehicles from Fort Irwin, but this year the unit is taking its own M-1 A1 (Heavy) tanks which have slightly modified

Allowance assists soldiers

Soldiers to get cash instead food stamps

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The government has enacted the Family Subsistence Supplemental Allowance for fiscal 2001 to get soldiers off food stamps.

The allowance will raise soldiers above the gross income threshold set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Soldiers are eligible for the supplemental allowance if their gross income, together with their household's gross income, does not exceed 130 percent of the poverty line defined by the USDA.

The allowance will not exceed $500 per month.

Soldiers must include housing allowances or the value of government housing as a part of their income when they determine their eligibility.

"One thing I especially like about the program is that it treats soldiers living in civilian housing and those living in government housing equally," said Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program. "Frequently, soldiers who live on post are eligible for food stamps, while the same soldier off-post is not."

Policy offers seniors stabilization

May 30 deadline for stabilization requests

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers with dependents entering their senior year of high school must apply for stabilization by May 30 if they hope to remain at their current duty station throughout the 2001-2002 school year.

A new Army policy, implemented by the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command April 3, is the result of an Army Community and Family Support Center Education Summit held last July, which revealed family stabilization during the senior year to be among the top concerns of Army families.

The policy will grant soldiers stabilization for up to one year, enough time to allow their high schoolers to graduate with their current classmates.

The policy change comes just in the nick of time for students like Jake Kirkwood, a junior at Carver High School in Columbus. Jake moved to Fort Benning three years ago with his parents, Nancy and Maj. John Kirkwood, a nurse anesthesiologist at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The family was due to PCS in December, Nancy said, and they were "sweating bullets" as the deadline approached.

"I had to move between my junior and senior year of high school, so I know how traumatic it can be," she said. "I refused to go to school for nearly a month. I'm not proud of the trouble I gave my parents, but I was

Should 'computer' qualify as four-letter word?

Spc. Clyde Snively
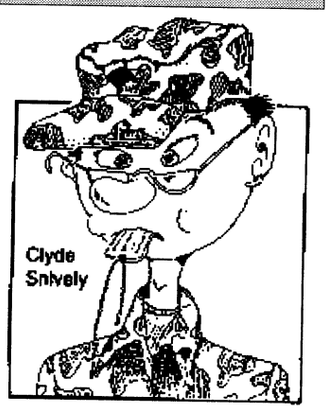
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Computers eat my lunch. Not a day goes by that you won't find me cursing that infernal machine, shaking my fist at it and wanting to toss it out of the sixth-floor window of our office.



The other day I had a blinding flash of the obvious as to why computers are so demanding and controlling.

They are designed by demanding and controlling people.

They are designed by people who understand computers and who find computer programming an easy thing to do.

And that's where we mess up. Computers and their software should be designed by people who wouldn't know Dbase from Cobol, who still think windows is what you gaze out of.

That's a perfect world, of course, and I understand that these types of people could never design a computer, much less software programs. However, all software should be run past the Clyde Snivelys of the world.

If the Clydes can figure out the program, then put it on the market.

Like the latest thing to hit Fort Benning is this thing called DJAS. I have no idea what it stands for, but I do know that it's a four-letter word.

I think it's also having a positive effect on the budget in many offices. Filling out requisition orders has become such a chore, that people are going downstairs and buying their own pencils now.

We haven't had anyone go TDY since the program began, and haven't broken the code.

I take that back, we did have one go TDY, but only because Pat from down the hall helped out. "When you do as many of these travel orders as me, it gets to be easy," she said modestly.

And I'm not sure about this "easy" business.

I do a lot of word processing, but "easy" never came up. In fact I can get downright peeved at times — like when the software decides it likes a particular format better than the one I'm trying to use.

Back in the old days, before Microsoft Word, if a program pulled a fast one on me, I'd hit the reveal codes key and find out what was going on. Bill Gates designed his MS Word without reveal codes.

So you either spend a great deal of time trying to work around the curve ball you're being thrown, or cave in and do it the computer's way. And I hate being at a computer's mercy.

A gal in our office sent an e-mail that I find appropriate for this column.

Seems Bill Gates died and went to heaven where he was greeted by God.

God told Bill he had his choice — heaven or hell. Bill was mulling over his options when God told Bill that he could check out both places first.

They went down to hell and Bill saw white sandy beaches, beautiful tanned bodies lounging about, surfers skimming the waves. The sky was bright blue and the temperature in the 80s with a cooling ocean breeze.

They then went up to heaven where there were puffy white clouds and blue skies with angels flitting about playing their harps.

Bill opted for hell.

A couple of weeks went by and God stopped by hell to check on Bill.

Bill was in pure misery. He was chained to a wall, flames were licking at his body and crawly insects were having a field day on him. Bill was not a happy camper and when he saw God he yelled out, "What happened to the white sandy beach and tanned bodies."

"Oh that," God said, "that was the screen saver."

I'm not a vengeful man, but the story definitely appealed to me.

Reader enjoys coverage

Since I was quick to criticize last year's coverage by The Bayonet of the Best Ranger Competition, I want to be quick to praise this year's effort.

All of the coverage, both copy and photos, was nice to see.

And Bridgett Siter's article about the competitors' wives — I don't have adequate words to praise you for this wonderful piece!

Reading it brought back a flood of memories to my mind and a flood of tears to my eyes.

I don't know if you've been in this position yourself, but you certainly hit the nail squarely on the head in describing the range of emotions that accompany this stressful time in an Army wife's life.

My husband was in the competition last year, representing the 29th Infantry Regiment.

I saw myself in each line of your article.

I have enjoyed all of Bridgett's work for The Bayonet since she joined the staff, but this story will hold a special place in my heart.

I may even add it to last year's scrapbook of the competition to serve as a reminder of those very emotional four months — not to mention those three wild days!

I can assure you this year's participants and their families are most appreciative of the excellent coverage you all provided in The Bayonet.

Remembering my disappointment last year when I opened the edition printed after the competition, I thank you all for giving them such a nice memento.

Please know that all your hard work week after week is appreciated by many.

Ceremony marks history

A solemn ceremony commemorating Australia's most culturally significant holiday was conducted to remember past actions by her armed services April 25.

In the pre-dawn gloom of April 25, 1915, members of the Australian and New Zealand army corps rowed ashore on the Turkish-occupied Gallipoli peninsula at a location near Suva Bay, later to become known as Anzac Cove.

They were met with fierce resistance and desolate terrain, limited supplies and uncoordinated support from the British commanders. The action was meant to draw Turkish focus away from a British landing closer to the Dardanelles.

After fierce fighting, with the gaining and loss of ground of little tactical importance, the attack was halted less than four miles inland and remained in a futile dead lock until their withdrawal Dec. 20.

From the outset, the mission was confronted by poor logistics as it was the supporting effort, incorrect landing location, inadequate communications, meager fire support and lacked focus by the British War Council.

Those Anzacs who fought more than 86 years ago are now few but their legacy to their nation and the tradition that they forged under shell and bullet remain as the trademark of her current armed services.

In the deserts of the Middle East, the green fields of Europe and the jungles of Malaysia, Indonesia, Borneo, New Guinea and Vietnam, Australian servicemen and women have upheld these values.

What began as an acronym — ANZAC, has entered the lexicon as a word in its own right.

"Anzac" means mateship, an un-daunting spirit of courage, strength and honor in adversity, selflessness and initiative — tempered with a laconic humor.

In the 86th anniversary of those landings and in the year of the Australian army's 100th birthday, let us remember all those who gave so much, so willingly so that we can live today free and without fear.

Anzac Day is not the sole possession of the veterans, probably never was intended to be. It has not been the possession of the armed forces, although we are to some degree custodians of Anzac Day.

It is where it ought to be and probably has been spiritually for generations, the possession of the people of Australia.

They shall grow not old, as we that are left grow old,
Age shall not weary them, nor the years condemn.
At the going down of the sun and in the morning,
We will remember them.

Drill sergeant duty filled with responsibility

Soldiers share stories from trail

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

I am a drill sergeant.

I will assist each individual in their efforts to become a highly motivated, well-disciplined, physically and mentally fit soldier, capable of defeating any enemy on today's modern battlefield.

I will instill pride in all I train. Pride in self, in the Army and in country.

I will insist that each soldier meets and maintains the Army standards of military bearing and courtesy, consistent with the highest traditions of the U.S. Army.

I will lead by example, never requiring a soldier to attempt any task I would not do myself.

But first, last, and always, I am an American soldier. Sworn to defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, both foreign and domestic.

I am a drill sergeant.

Most soldiers don't have the Drill Sergeant Creed memorized, although most of them have seen a drill sergeant put into action the words they live by.

Coaching, mentoring and teaching are integral parts of an Infantry Training Brigade drill sergeant's duties and responsibilities as they turn civilians into well-trained, highly efficient infantrymen, said Command Sgt. Maj. Kenny LeonGuerrero, ITB.

"(Drill sergeants) only have 14 weeks to train soldiers," LeonGuerrero said. "We are effective trainers, we are the lifeblood of the Army."

During those weeks, drill sergeants spend countless hours not only training soldiers but also mentoring and counseling them.

"You have to be a father, a chaplain and a psychiatrist to these kids," said Staff Sgt. Mike Kane, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. "And it's hard sometimes.

"Being a drill sergeant is an awesome responsibility. You impact the future of the Army. You are the first (impression) soldiers have about the Army."

Staff Sgt. Damon B. Perez, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, said he wanted to become a drill sergeant so that he could make a difference in the lives of soldiers.

Perez said in order to make a change, you have to be part of the solution.

"The soldier is the important (person) to be trained," he said. "It's all about the soldiering."

Aside from transitioning civilians into soldiers, drill sergeants also have the responsibility of ensuring every private leaves basic training healthy and unscathed.

"It's all about the heart and soul," said LeonGuerrero. "A drill sergeant has got to show compassion for the private, but at the same time, he has to be a hard and fair leader."

Learning to be a hard and fair leader is not often easy, and for some people in pursuit of a happy medium, discipline may turn to punishment.

"You want to show (soldiers) you care," said Staff Sgt. Michael P. Cole, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment. "It's very important not to belittle them."

Perez said he believes singling out soldiers to antagonize or taunt them with names is inappropriate behavior.

"We're the first (person) privates see when they come in the service," he said. "And the outcome of the privates is great. Seeing the change from civilian to soldier, overrides (everything) we put up with."

Kane said when he first arrived at his unit he witnessed an instance of physical abuse to trainees, but stopped the NCO before it could go any further.

"When you begin to take away the soldier and make them feel like they are no longer human, it is abuse," he said. "I try to stay away from phrases like 'pathetic.' There are other ways to discipline. I also try to stay away from cursing."

> "It's all about the heart and soul."
>
> Command Sgt. Maj. Kenny LeonGuerrero
> Infantry Training Brigade

Kane and Perez said they both agree drill sergeants sometimes get bad raps for what others do.

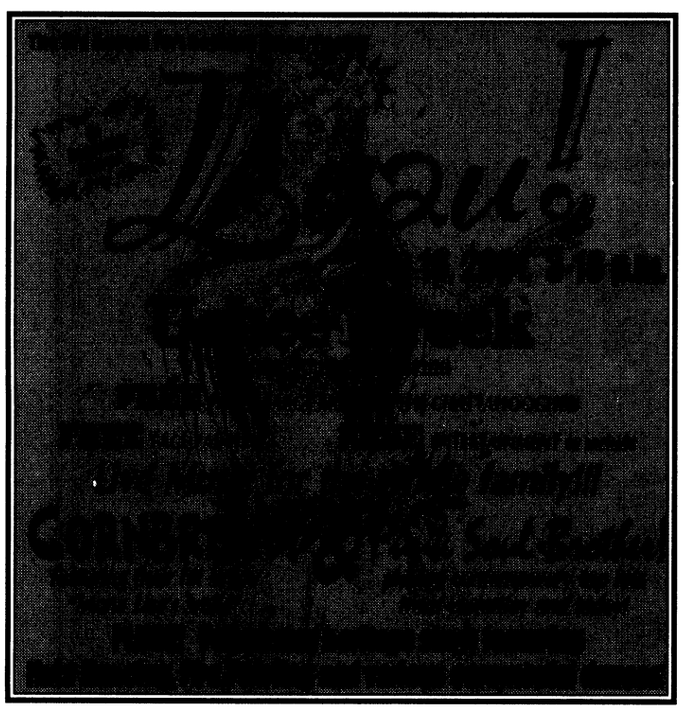
"Everybody wants to look out for the private. Who wants to look out for the drill sergeant?" Perez said.

"Judgement is a thing we need to start (installing) now," said LeonGuerrero. "No drill sergeant should fall flat on their face. If we teach the drill sergeant what right looks like, that's exactly what they will do."

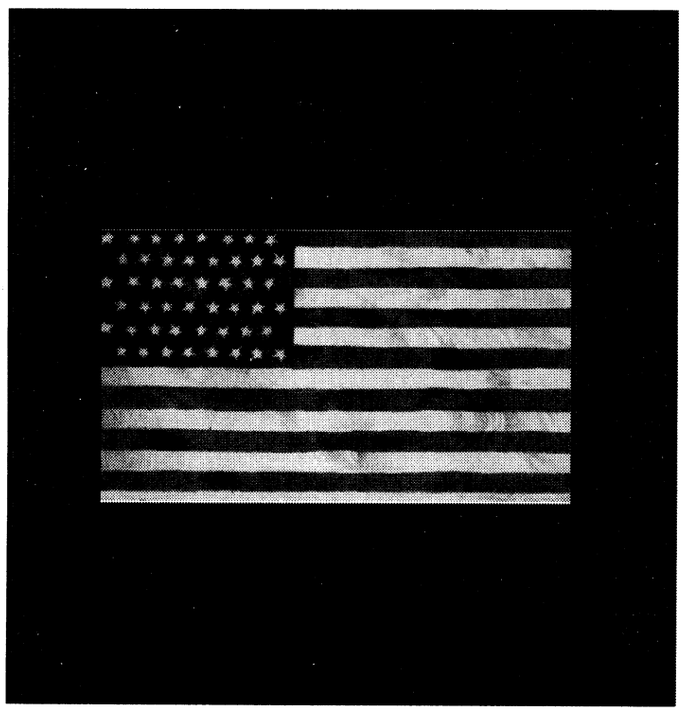
Maintaining a healthy family life is as important to many drill sergeants as training soldiers.

Cole, who lives about 45 minutes away from post, said he enjoys his long drive home every night because it gives him a chance to relax and get the day's events off his mind.

"I need the time to settle down and relax," he said. "When I go home, I like to spend time with my kids."



Kane said the one thing he wants his children to learn from his tour as a drill sergeant is "a respect for the military."



LeonGuerrero has seen every angle of infantry training, and said he firmly believes one of the most important matters a drill sergeant deals with is family matters.

If a drill sergeant has a strong marriage when he goes on the trail, then he will have a strong marriage coming off of the trail, Perez said.

"I've got so much admiration and respect for those guys because I've been there," LeonGuerrero said.

"Drill sergeants deserve recognition. Their job means a lot. Everything they do is for the sake of their country."

Soldiers to volunteer as camp counselors

MD camp needs volunteers for buddies

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Muscular dystrophy has claimed more victims than the Vietnam War. That's why the Muscular Dystrophy Association is recruiting soldiers to join the fight to find a cure and make life a little more pleasant for the children who suffer from MD.

So far, 15 soldiers have signed up for the opportunity to spend a week at Camp Twin Lakes, July 28-Aug. 3, serving as counselors for children stricken with the disease. But Sgt. Robert Brown, Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers president, said the need for counselors outweighs the supply.

"We're still at least 15 short," Brown said. "And we could certainly use more than that. It's an incredible opportunity, an incredible experience — one I'd recommend every soldier take advantage of at least once."

The term muscular dystrophy refers to a group of genetic diseases marked by progressive weakness and degeneration of the skeletal muscles that control movement. The muscles of the heart and other involuntary muscles are sometimes affected by MD.

The progression of MD often confines sufferers to wheelchairs, limiting their ability to function independently. Though in most cases the disease does not affect the brain, those with progressive MD usually require assistance with the most basic tasks, such as bathing and eating.

Camp Twin Lakes, which is located 30 minutes east of Atlanta, is specially designed and equipped for handicapped campers. There are more than 90 camps in the U.S. designed for children with MD, but Camp Twin Lakes is the only one in Georgia, and with more than 100 campers each year, it's the second largest in the U.S.

It gives MD sufferers between the ages of 6 and 21 a chance to participate in activities normally beyond their abilities. Ideally each counselor is assigned to one camper, though a counselor shortage sometimes means one adult takes care of two campers.

Each counselor devotes the entire week to meeting the needs of his "camp buddy." They swim, fish and dance together. They make crafts and learn archery. They have "water wars" and play putt-putt. And more often than not, the counselor also helps his buddy bathe, dress and eat.

"It's hard work, and I was apprehensive about getting involved at first," Brown said. "It was tough meeting their every need physically while staying focused on their emotional need to forget about their disabilities for one week and just have a good time. By the end of the week I was exhausted, but spiritually it was great. I'm looking forward to it this year."

Forgetting about their disabilities for a short while is what MD camp is all about, Brown said. This year he'll be teamed with Cody, a 13-year-old with a reputation for causing trouble. Last year Brown discovered the secret to ensuring Cody's cooperation.

"He just wants to be treated like a normal kid. He was notorious for causing trouble, but when we figured out he needed to be treated just like us, he quit acting up and had a great time. He's a great kid," Brown said.

Joanie Rosenbaum, camp director, visits Fort Benning each year to recruit counselors. She said Fort Benning soldiers have been attending the camp for 10 years.

"They're serving their country, and this is just another way to do that," Rosenbaum said. "Without Fort Benning's support I just don't know how we could do this each year."

Rosenbaum encourages soldiers and family members to contact the BOSS office at 545-6800 for information about becoming a counselor. She said Fort Benning soldiers, both male and female, bring physical and mental muscle to the camp program.

"They have the physical strength to do whatever they need to do to take care of these kids. That's important. But they've also been trained to stay focused on the task. That's important when you're talking about a whole week spent caring for children with disabilities."

Pfc. Sam Cox, 63rd Engineer Company, said he's returning as camp counselor this year because his first experience was "a blast, awesome."

"It was a week full of just great fun," Cox said. "I recommend it for everybody. Just watching those kids in their wheelchairs who don't let their disabilities get in the way of a good time is awesome to see. When it's over you're exhausted, but you feel great."

Changes of command

The change of command ceremony for 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, will be held at 9 a.m. today at Essebagger Field.

Lt. Col. John Harding will assume command from outgoing commander Lt. Col. E.J. Herold.

The Basic Combat Training Brigade will conduct a brigade change of command ceremony between Col. Nolen V. Bivens and Col. Thomas A. Cole at 9 a.m. Tuesday on Pomeroy Field, Sand Hill.

The public is invited to the ceremony.

The change of command ceremony for 5th Ranger Training Battalion will be conducted at 10 a.m. Wednesday in Dahlonega, Ga.

Lt. Col. Timothy Flynn will assume command from outgoing commander Lt. Col. Keith Antonia.

Maj. Gregory Gentry will assume command of the 498th Medical Company (Air Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group, from Maj. Kyle D. Campbell at 9:30 a.m. Thursday at the Directorate of Operations and Training Hangar, Lawson Army Airfield.

The change of command ceremony for the 30th AG Battalion (Reception), 29th Infantry Regiment will be held at 9 a.m. May 30.

Lt. Col. Armon Cioppa will assume command from outgoing commander Lt. Col. Debra Fix.

Off-limits businesses

The Armed Forces Disciplinary Control Board has placed these businesses off-limits to all military persons in the Fort Benning area: the All Breed Dog Training Academy at 1302 Sandusky Drive, Mr. Transmission at 3137 Macon Road in Columbus and The Pen Dixie Pit on Old Perry Road in Clinchfield, Ga.

Luau planned

The third annual Fort Benning Asian-Pacific Luau is from 3 to 10 p.m. today at Uchee Creek. Admission is free.

This year's event features free party barge rides, face painting for the children, canoe races and a two-hour authentic Polynesian show.

The evening will be capped off with a free concert by the local band, Cornbread.

This year's Polynesian menu includes Kalua pork, teriyaki chicken, fried rice, and tropical fruit and will be provided by the Officers' Club.

Meal tickets are available at the luau for $4.

Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers will also sell hot dogs and hamburgers and there will be two beverage tents.

Kiddie Korner will feature several inflatable rides for the children.

Popcorn and cotton candy will also be available.

For more information, call the EO Office at 545-6665.

Technology can't replace soldier assets

Senior leaders from active-duty and national guard units within the Long Range Surveillance community gathered for the annual LRS Conference Tuesday through Thursday at Infantry Hall.

The purpose of this year's conference, hosted by the Ranger Training Brigade, was to educate senior leaders throughout the Army on how they can use Long Range Surveillance.

"The primary goal of the conference is to increase awareness on the value of LRS and its mission," said Capt. Anthony Turpin, commander of the Long Range Surveillance course, 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

Thomas

One of the conference goals was to develop a framework for Long Range Surveillance unit structure and doctrine in both the active and reserve components for Force XXI.

"Long Range Surveillance is a theater commander's extended eyes and ears on the battlefield," said Col. Hazen Barron, RTB commander. "It is a critical source of human intelligence and a tool that can help confirm or dispute intelligence gathered from other sources."

"All intelligence gathering has its advantages and disadvantages," said keynote speaker Maj. Gen. John Thomas, chief of intelligence at the U.S. Army Intelligence Center, Fort Huachuca. "New technology is good, but eyes connected to a brain on a target helps prevent deception."

"Photos are good," said Turpin. "But it is the human factor on the ground that provides '24-7' intelligence with all weather, all terrain capability."

Turpin said the conference goals were met by the time it ended.

"The conference proved extremely successful in providing a forum for leaders throughout the Army and the long range surveillance community to discuss issues effecting training, doctrine, combat development and organization to frame an aggressive strategy for the future of long range surveillance operations," Turpin said.

New legal Web site gives easy access to advice

Web site answers legal questions

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Army Judge Advocate General's Corps has launched a legal services Web site, designed as a portal of legal information for military members and their families.

The Web site, www.jagcnet.army.mil/Legal, creates a "virtual" legal information and resource knowledge center, officials said. It includes information on personal legal assistance, claims, trial defense, and victim-witness information for the Army.

It provides preventive law information and helps users find the nearest Legal Assistance Office of any military branch.

The JAG Corps legal site aims to provide soldiers and spouses with information to make informed decisions on personal legal affairs, maintain legal well-being, readiness, avoid consumer scams and otherwise minimize "legal" distractions.

The idea, said Maj. Gen. John D. Altenburg Jr., the assistant judge advocate general and JAG Corps' chief information officer, "is to provide soldiers and family members 24 (hour) x 7 (days) desktop access to useful information for their own legal preparedness. It is a great tool for soldiers and spouses to maintain their personal legal affairs."

It is designed to be a doorway to Internet-based legal information and services for those eligible for military legal assistance under Title 10 United States Code, said Altenburg.

He explained the site does not offer legal advice, rather, information that site users should consider to prevent legal problems or before consulting an attorney.

The JAG Corps legal site has several main areas or pages: A "Home" page listing subject pages and additional information links; A "Locate Legal Assistance" page that displays links to installation Legal Assistance Web sties and that connects to SITES with instructions for finding military legal services information worldwide; A "Locator" page that helps site users find a private attorney, find a DoD regulation, publication, or form, and connects to several people locator services for military members.

"Our site does not replace our personal service — private attorney-client consultation, but it does give soldiers an opportunity to decide when to seek counsel and to prepare better for that meeting," said Altenburg.

"Soldiers, spouses and others eligible for legal assistance should use the site to obtain general information before seeing an attorney (either military or civilian). The site should immediately improve how many soldiers obtain legal assistance," he said. "Site users will have content available to research the law, obtain information, and prepare better for seeing an attorney."

"Soldiers and spouses who use our site will have more timely information that they can use to avoid legal difficulties," said Altenburg.

> "Soldiers and spouses who use our site will have more timely information that they can use to avoid legal difficulties."
> Maj. Gen. John Altenburg
> JAG Corps chief information officer

"Eventually many Army users may use the portal as their legal home page, where they store electronic copies of legal documents prepared at military legal offices. It is difficult to imagine all the possibilities for this technology," he explained. "But one need only look back over the past 10 years to see how much things have changed, to see how differently we all work today. This portal is a tool that will significantly improve a soldier's management of legal affairs."

"Our site makes it possible to reach people we could never reach before, deliver legal information resources where there were none, and do so conveniently for the soldier," said Altenburg.

Since the formal founding of Legal Assistance in War Department Circular No. 74, 16 March 1943, almost six decades, the Army JAG Corps has provided legal services to our soldiers and families.

Preventive law information — information in advance of problems to make smart, informed decisions thereby avoiding legal problems has been one important component of those services. "This site now makes that knowledge base more readily available — on demand of those we advise."

cid

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is seeking information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person responsible for the theft of a government-owned Sprint PCS cellular telephone.

The telephone was stolen from Martin Army Community Hospital some time between March 19-20.

CID is also seeking information pertaining to the larceny of a Kenwood CD player and TV screen, two Kenwood amplifiers, a Kenwood CD changer and a 12-inch speaker box.

The items were stolen from a privately owned vehicle in the parking lot of Martin Army Community Hospital between May 4-5.

The assistance of the local community is being requested in an effort to identify and apprehend the perpetrators.

Anyone with information concerning these individuals call the CID Duty Agent at 545-8916 or the military police at 545-5222.

The identity of anyone providing information about one of these crimes will be kept in the strictest confidence.

Drought: Causes water restrictions to be emplaced

Prediction Center and the National Drought Mitigation Center in Lincoln, Neb., don't see an end to the drought. They think it may persist and cannot say that the drought will not get worse."

This year is not be the first time Fort Benning has had to implement a drought contingency plan.

Post officials enforced restrictions last spring. Last year's restrictions proved themselves in water saved, said Wilkins.

"Last summer we saved around 1.7 million gallons per day for most days," he said.

There are certain requirements that must be met before drought contingency plans are implemented, Wilkins said.

Activation of the plan occurs if the Upatoi Creek flow drops to 96 million gallons per day. Wilkins said the normal flow range can fluctuate from 100 to 400 million gallons.

"Last year, the creek was very low. It looked like a different creek than with what most of us are familiar — the flow was close to and at 50 million gallons per day for several days," he explained.

It may seem like an inconvenience to follow the drought plan, but it helps everyone in the long run, Wilkins said.

"The plan, when followed in drought times, controls water use and prevents waste of the available water," he said.

"Most important, in Fort Benning's case, controlling the water use in days of limited water guarantees sufficient quality water for the troops in the field during the hot summer days."

Sufficient water is also needed for other activities like fire fighting, for cooking, bathing, safety, and personal hygiene for the troops' families and post work force at these times, Wilkins said.

Program: Gets soldiers off government aid programs

"(The allowance) also differs from the USDA program in that (the allowance) has no asset test, such as bank account balances, vehicles, and boats," she added.

Soldiers need to make a considered decision before they receive FSSA money, Pratcher said.

"The FSSA program is voluntary, and a soldier should make careful considerations about using it. Receipt of FSSA may affect the soldier's participation in other programs such as the earned income tax credit, school-lunch programs and military child care rates."

But the new allowance will protect soldiers' pride, she said.

"Sometimes it is very difficult for someone who works very hard every day to go into a commissary or a civilian grocery store and have to use the United States Department of Agriculture debit card or food coupons," Pratcher said. "For soldiers who are eligible and who elect to participate, that hurdle will be removed."

One challenge soldiers will have to overcome is the temptation to spend the cash unwisely.

"If eligible soldiers elect to participate in the (supplemental) program, they should ensure that they only use the allowance for food," Pratcher said. "There are many pitfalls to doing otherwise."

According to a Department of the Army message, one pitfall is FSSA eligibility terminates when a soldier's household income increases by $100 or more; a soldier's household size decreases; a soldier is promoted; a soldier is reassigned to another permanent duty station; or a soldier receives FSSA for 12 months.

"The allowance does not continue forever," she said. "Committing to a long-term debt or expense based on the FSSA is suicide, because you are not sure how long you will be receiving it. All soldiers receiving FSSA must recertify annually."

Department of Defense estimates only about 6,000 across DoD will be eligible.

Soldiers can log on to the DoD Web site www.dmdc.osd.mil/fssa/index2.html to see if they qualify for assistance. For more information, call Pratcher at 545-5485.

Study: Finds transition toughest on high school students

devastated by the move. I didn't want that for my son."

Jake's already attended three high schools, but a transfer at this time could damage his chances of being awarded scholarships, Nancy said.

"He transferred from one block system to another during his freshman year and we had to fight to get him credit for the classes he'd already taken. If we hadn't gone to bat for him, he would have had only two and a half credits at the end of his freshman year. I couldn't see going through that again his senior year, starting all over," Nancy said. "It could've ruined his class standing and his chance at college scholarships completely."

If all goes as planned, the Kirkwoods will PCS after Jake graduates next spring, as his younger brother Ben enters his sophomore year. After two years at their next duty station, the Kirkwoods can once again apply for stabilization so Ben can graduate with the classmates he'll have known for three years.

"We're excited about it," John said. "It's long overdue and very welcome. Military kids miss out on a lot, but they have a lot of advantages too. This is another way we can make military life a little easier for them."

Making life easier for the student and his family is what the new policy is all about, said Col. Jeffrey Redmann, deputy director of PERSCOM's Enlisted Personal Management Directorate, in an Army News release at the onset of implementation.

"This is about the Army taking some of the burden off Army families' shoulders," Redmann said. "Kids want to go to the senior prom and graduate with the friends they've made over time. Army service shouldn't be a sacrifice for Army families."

Soldiers with a family member due to graduate next year must submit a DA Form 4187 listing the family member's name and social security number by May 30. The student must be enrolled in DEERS and a letter from the high school stating when the student is expected to graduate must be attached to the request.

Soldiers stationed overseas must state on the form that they are willing to extend their tour to meet stabilization requirements.

Enlisted soldiers must also list any scheduled training, such as schooling or temporary duty, on the 4187. Officers with scheduled training should contact their branch assignment officer to reschedule training.

Beyond the 2002 school year, soldiers must request stabilization at least 12 months prior to the student's senior year.

components and its own M-2 A2 ODS Bradley Fighting Vehicles.

"Had we just drawn Fort Irwin's vehicles, we would have been using less capable infantry vehicles and using tanks that our soldiers had not habitually trained with, and which had some different parts," Davis said. "This is one of the first times a brigade element has done that," he said.

"Additionally, we are bringing six newly issued M-7 Bradley Fire Support Team vehicles or B-FISTs, which is the latest improved fighting vehicle for the artillery observer teams which support each of our heavy company teams."

The brigade is scheduled to return home to Fort Benning by July 4.

Rangers sweat it out in swamps

Students pushed to limits during 18 days in swamp

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

This is the final story of a three-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the U.S. Army Ranger School.

Trudging waist deep through a swamp, students of U.S. Army Ranger School neared the end of their 61-day course.

Throughout the third and final 18-day phase, ranger instructors pushed the students to their limits as they negotiated platoon-sized operations in a jungle and swamp environment.

At Camp James E. Rudder at Eglin Air Force Base Fla., ranger students learn the tactics necessary to win a war in a wetland environment.

"It's a costal swamp area we have here," said Capt. Clint Kirk, a company commander of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion. "They get a little (training in) swamp movement, a little boat movement and a little ocean movement just to see operations in a different environment."

Although the students see a wide variety of terrain throughout their training, from hardwood forests, granite cliffs and stagnant swamps, the ranger instructors use the terrain to bring out the best, and worst, in the students when they are thrown into leadership positions.

"The terrain is only important as a tool in their overall training," he said. "These guys come out and go through this for three phases and learn some important skills that relate to each phase, but honestly what they are learning is leadership."

The soldier's leadership potential becomes apparent on their field training exercise when they are functioning on little food and only a few hours of sleep each night.

During the Florida phase, ranger students put everything they've learned together during their field training exercise. Here, ranger instructors push them harder and farther than ever before, Kirk said.

"This is the capstone phase," he said. "We push them a little bit harder. They go for a full nine-day field problem without any rest or breaks, whereas in the other phases they had some breaks. So by the time they are executing the mission on Day 8 or 9, mentally they are zapped and they are learning: 'This is what I have to do to be a leader.'"

At any time a ranger student may be picked to be a squad or platoon leader, and when that happens, he needs to be on his toes, students said. One of the students who was selected to lead a patrol was Marine Cpl. Matt Haringer.

"It gets a little stressful making decisions and making the right decisions," he said. "Here we don't get a lot of sleep and a lot of food, so you have to put out a lot. It's a team effort here. You need teamwork to make it through."

How well they work together shows during their training. If one soldier is slowing down, another is there to help him out. They help each other as much as possible, students said.

"It's all about everyone getting through and earning the tab," said Capt. Chris Foust, a ranger student.

He said although the school is a gut check, students have to make the best of things.

"Ranger School is one of those schools that you just have to suck it up and drive on, no matter what," Foust said. "Some days are going to be really bad, other days will be a little easier. But you are running on no food, no morale, no sleep. You have to have something internal that tells you to keep going. Either you want it or you don't."

Midway through the phase, students began looking toward graduation.

"I'm going to make it," he said. "There is no way I am quitting."

The rigorous training of Ranger School weeds out the soldiers who don't have the desire to give everything they have and then some. It also transforms soldiers into some of the most elite in the world, instructors said.

"If you look at the quality of ranger graduates over time since the school began in the 50s, you see they are the backbone of the Army," Kirk said. "The guys aren't necessarily better than anyone else, but they have this training. They know what they can do, so they can go out and make the Army better."

Two hundred eighty ranger students started the class in March. Only 128 graduated. The others were either recycled or dropped for a number of reasons including injuries and failure to meet the course standards. Most will get another chance of earning the ranger tab.

Spc. Mark Watson

Capt. Chris Foust, a ranger student, watches his sector of fire during the Florida phase of Ranger School.

Although historically only 20 to 25 percent of the students will complete ranger school with their original class, nearly 95 percent of those who are recycled will eventually earn the ranger tab.

After walking more than 200 miles, countless hours of training and a lot of sweat, they arrive at the end of their training. Ranger students complete the journey today when they are pinned with their coveted ranger tabs at 9 a.m. at the Hurley Hill Demonstration Area.

MOUT training readies rangers for urban warfare

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Rangers from the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment participated in a nighttime assault on the McKenna Military Operations on Urbanized Terrain site Saturday during part of their military operations on urban terrain training.

MOUT training is one of many exercises that is well-suited to the rangers' special skills and capabilities. Military planners say that the future of battles will involve more urban fights with civilians in the middle.

During the nighttime training exercise, rangers were subject to several unplanned scenarios including a "downed helicopter" and civilians on the battlefield.

The training began with flying in on helicopters, the rangers began their attack against the opposing force, but civilians were caught in the middle, forcing the rangers to choose their targets carefully.

Spc. Mark Watson

A ranger from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, fires through a window at the opposing force.

A squad of rangers made their way to a downed helicopter on the outskirts of the MOUT site. They secured the crash site and treated the "wounded."

Back in the center of the town, the main force of rangers engaged the OPFOR in a firefight for nearly a half hour.

Muzzle flashes lit up area. Helicopters buzzed overhead providing aerial protection as well as a bird's-eye view of the battle. When shots quit firing, ranger squads rushed into the buildings where the OPFOR soldiers were. According to the training scenario, they were looking for several missiles that they were to recover.

The civilians fled the streets when the firing began, but began to move about during the lull. An information operations team bombarded the area with squeals and sirens from a loud speaker clearing the streets.

After all the enemy soldiers were out of action, the rangers concentrated on locating the missiles and the pilot of the downed helicopter. They found the pilot and three of the four missiles. Using an interpreter, the rangers questioned the mayor of the town on the locate the missing missile. Gathering the needed information, the rangers left the MOUT site in search of the last missile. After the raid on the MOUT site, the rangers said they were pleased with how the mission went.

"The mission seems to be going exceptionally," said Pfc. Jeremy Mangione. "There were no problems that I saw, and if there were any at all they were quickly adapted to and overcome immediately."

He said their mission went so well that even the civilians yelling at them and posing a threat to the rangers, as well as themselves, did not have an effect on his squad's role in the overall mission.

"We are taught to deal with that sort of situation," he said. "So they really didn't effect us."

Soldiers must know how to deal with civilians on the battlefield and an enemy force that will draw troops into the added confusion.

Although Mangione wasn't disturbed by the civilians, squad leader Staff Sgt. Damon Sidney said he felt a little more pressure.

"It was difficult trying to gain their trust," Sidney said. "It (the mission) helped me learn how to control my temper."

He said although he wanted to go out and grab them, to keep them safe and out of the way no matter how obscene they were being, he was able to coax them into a safer place.

"It was difficult trying to find a technique to gain their trust," he said. "Toward the end some gained our trust but some didn't."

The gain of trust, and the lack of it helped make the mission more realistic, helping the rangers to be better prepared, Mangione said.

"Making the training as real as it gets helps for the real thing. It's realistic training for a real world experience."

Reservists hone MOS skills

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

The next time the nation goes to war, the soldiers whose experience makes them effective at training other soldiers will quickly be called upon to take that experience to the fighting.

Preparing to fill the roles those soldiers leave behind, nine reservists from the 7th Brigade, 84th Division (Institutional Training) recently spent a week at the 29th Infantry Regiment learning their wartime jobs.

The commander of the 29th, Col. Carter Ham, said the training was conducted with a seriousness that reflected just how heavily the regiment will rely on the 7th Brigade once the shooting starts — a lesson learned when the Iraqi Army rolled into Kuwait.

"This is not something that will never happen," Ham said. "This is something that has happened."

The 84th Division already plays a significant part in training infantry soldiers. Dozens of subject-matter experts from the reserve unit serve as initial entry training instructors every year during the summer surge.

This year, 75 reservists are expected on Sand Hill; next year, said Maj. Arthur Tulak, deputy commander of the 29th, that number will probably grow closer to 150. The TRADOC instructor of the year, Tulak noted, is a 7th Brigade reservist.

"They're quality guys," Tulak said.

Reservists have also regularly participated in individual displacements of 29th Regiment staff, Tulak said. When the 29th's deputy commander took leave last December, for example, Maj. Rick Tucker of the 7th Brigade's 1-339th filled in at the desk for two weeks.

But the recent visit of brigade-level command staff was unusual in its scope, and the result of a series of conversations between Ham and his counterpart in the reserve unit. It was, Ham said, the "natural follow-on" to the longstanding role of instructors and individual replacements from the reserve unit.

"It would have been very easy not to do this," Ham said, but both commanders concluded that hands-on training was essential.

"Nothing can beat going to your location and walking the ground," said Col. Gerald Meyer, 7th Brigade commander.

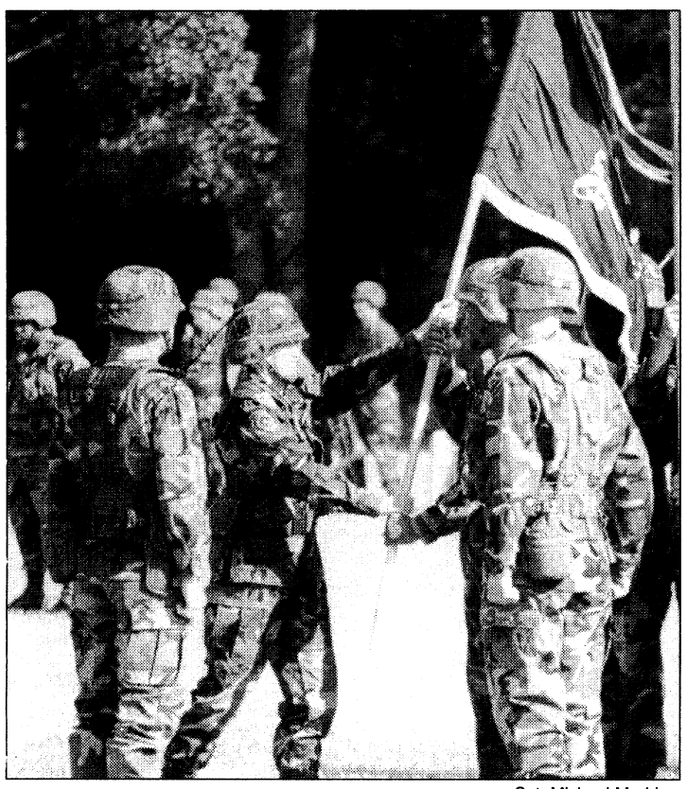
Meyer brought his S-1 and S-3, and the NCOs who will staff those shops. The reservists had a busy week:

They shadowed the soldiers who they would replace, and took charge of day-to-day training while the active-duty soldiers continued to oversee long-range planning.

The reservists also observed training at the Malone ranges, and met with the commanders at the Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade.

"That gives me the focus of what we're supporting," Meyer said.

Soldiers from both units judged the training to be a clear success.



"In the event of mobilization, we're prepared," said Maj. Robert Schuerman, the 7th Brigade officer who spent the week training to serve as the 29th's S-3.

"I think our troops will be motivated, eager, and ready to hit the ground running."

That readiness is a critical component of the Army's ability to sustain a fight by sending newly trained infantrymen to the field; wartime, said several of the soldiers, isn't the moment to begin learning what's needed of you.

"If we really had to do it, there wouldn't be much overlap," Tulak said. "We'd be gone in a hurry."

Cook welcomed as new commander for 3rd Brigade unit

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers of the 203rd Forward Support Battalion bid farewell to Lt. Col. Richard Poole and welcomed new commander, Lt. Col. Katherine Cook, during a change of command ceremony Wednesday at Essebagger Field.

The outgoing commander, Poole, a native of Virginia, heads to Alexandria, Va., for his next assignment where he will serve as a special assistant to the Army Material Command Staff Group.

During the ceremony, Poole applauded his soldiers for their support during his last 22 months as commander.

"I realize the time we have as soldiers is too short," he said.

"Handing those colors over is tradition, but a necessary one because it isn't the commander that makes a unit great, it's the soldiers," he said.

"Commanders are given only a finite time on watch over a unit, it is the soldiers who carry on the tradition of greatness for a unit," Poole said. "I have truly been honored to command this fine group."

During her speech, Cook thanked community members and the soldiers of the 203rd.

"This is a great honor and I deeply appreciate being given this opportunity to serve. Thank you for taking the time to share this memorable day with us," she said. "Soldiers of the 203rd, you look terrific this morning. Your pride shines through your appearance and performance on the field today.

"I look forward to serving as your commander."

The incoming commander, Cook, is originally from Washington, D.C.

She graduated from the George Washington University with a bachelor of arts degree in history.

She was commissioned in 1983 through the Georgetown University ROTC program as a quartermaster officer.

Her military education includes completion of quartermaster basic and advanced courses, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College.

Cook comes to the 203rd Forward Support Battalion from the Pentagon, where she served in Department of the Army, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Logistics as a logistics staff officer.

Her awards and decorations include the Bronze Star, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal (three oak leaf clusters), the Army Commendation Medal (three oak leaf clusters), the Army Achievement Medal, the Southwest Asia Medal, Saudi Arabia Kuwait Liberation Medal, the Kuwait Liberation Medal, the Joint Meritorious Unit Award, the Army Meritorious Unit Commendation, the Army Superior Unit Award, the Army Staff Identification Badge, and the Airborne and Air Assault Badges.

Mayors host postwide yard sale

Trash, treasures can be found at yard sale

Angelica Anderson
Bayonet correspondent

It's time to dust off the old bicycle and unpack the $2 coasters, because the allure of a great sale inspires Fort Benning residents to trek across post looking for bargains at the semiannual postwide yard sale.

The sale kicks off at 8 a.m. and lasts until 2 p.m.

The postwide yard sale offers shoppers bargains galore and an opportunity to sell treasures and collectibles gleaned from attics and garages.

No license, registration deadlines or permit fees are required to sell.

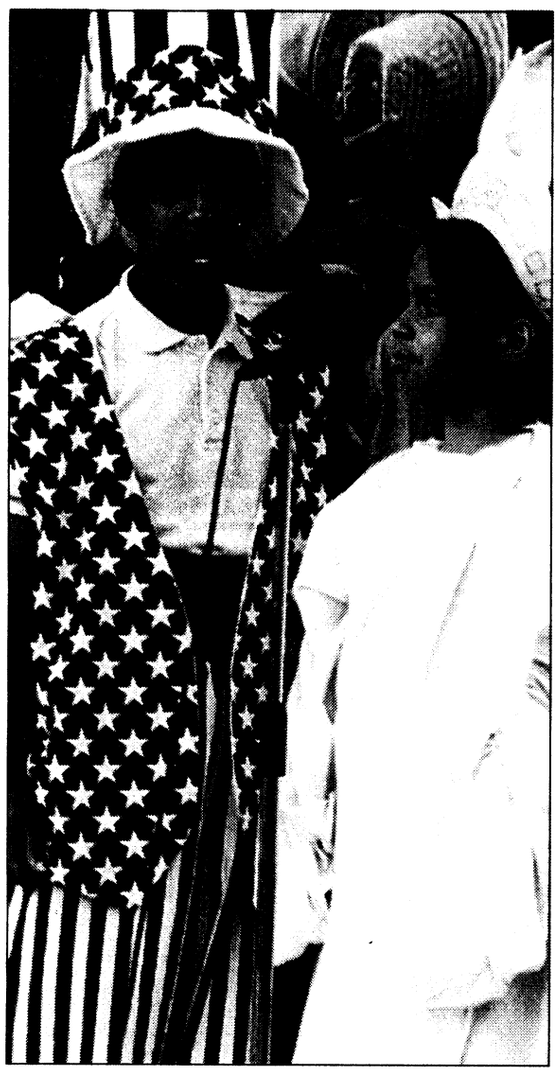
The Saturday sale, sponsored by the Community Life Mayors' Association, has been stripped down to the fundamentals: a sign, tables and boxes of reduced price items ready to sell.

Prospective vendors need only to set up in their front lawn with a yard sale sign and adhere to public sale restrictions prohibited by Georgia State Law such as the selling of firecrackers and firearms.

At the end of the day, the CLMA asks that Benning residents remember to take down their signs.

There's also a home for those items which don't sell during the day — yard sale leftovers will be accepted as donations by The Fort Benning Thrift Store, between 2 and 4 p.m. at the loading dock behind the store, located on Ingersoll Avenue.

Military personnel and civilians, both on and off post, are welcome to participate in Saturday's yard clearance.



There is no designated parking for the event, though safety is always a key issue.

For more information about the yard sale, call Jodie Bowers at 685-0030 or the Fort Benning Thrift Shop at 687-4830.

Post residents sound off at meeting

With a strong showing of Bouton Heights and Davis Hill residents, the postwide town hall meeting took place May 10 in Building 359. Armed with prepared statements and jotted notes, more than 35 post residents cited speeding motorists and pestering pets as their biggest concerns.

Representatives from several post agencies, including Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics, Directorate of Public Safety, and AAFES, were on hand to answer questions.

Grievances were aimed at the community instead of individuals, said Master Sgt. Donald Blackmon, installation community life NCOIC. Blackmon said he was impressed with the meeting's message.

"Overall the big picture remained on their communities, not on individual concerns," he said.

It's an age-old tale for any Army spouse — switching their old stomping grounds for new surroundings.

Irene Acevedo and Belinda Boyett arrived to Fort Benning at different times and at different points in their lives. Moving from New York City, Acevedo left her family behind to start a new life with her husband.

Besides the tribulations of starting over, Acevedo endured the culture shock of switching her family's neighborhood in Brooklyn for one in southwestern Georgia.

A Fort Benning resident was named Tricommunity Youth Volunteer of the Year April 23, one day before being named Fort Benning's Youth Volunteer of Excellence at the post's annual Volunteer Appreciation Ceremony.

Kirkwood

Jake Kirkwood, the 18-year-old son of Maj. John and Nancy Kirkwood, is a junior at Carver High School, a math, science and technology magnet that requires students to volunteer 20 hours of community service each year. Kirkwood has completed more than 300 hours since his sophomore year, earning him the school's nomination for the tricommunity award.

"Jake is phenomenal," said Joyce Lee, lead math teacher at Carver. "He's a student of outstanding character. He has to be to be able to balance school work, extra-curricular activities and his service to the community."

Kirkwood, who plans to major in chemical engineering or computer science at Georgia Tech, devotes much of his time to Carver's Computer Repair and Upgrade Program, refurbishing computers for elementary schools and non-profit organizations, and the school's Student Expert Computer Helpline, where he spends his lunch hours fielding calls and providing technical support to people with computer problems.

Investors should consider stocks, bonds for portfolios

Long-term benefits can outweigh risks

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This is the fourth story of a seven-part series, which takes a look at the basics of investing.

The year is 1985. You're sitting on the couch, and the telephone rings. It's a stock broker. In disgust, you hang up the phone after she tells you about an exciting opportunity in a company called Microsoft.

The year is 2001. You're sitting on the couch and pondering the decision you made about not buying into one of the biggest and most profitable companies in the world.

"Shoulda, woulda, coulda," you say under your breath and drive on.

If it makes you feel better, for every Bill Gates, there is also one considerably lesser known corporate owner who has filed for bankruptcy.

Given the uncertainty of the future, most soldiers should invest in mutual funds (covered in the next story) that invest in stocks rather than individual stocks, said Jerry Broughton, a stock broker for Edward Jones in Columbus for the last five years.

Stocks do tend to fluctuate, but are better for soldiers than bonds because they allow money to accumulate faster, he said.

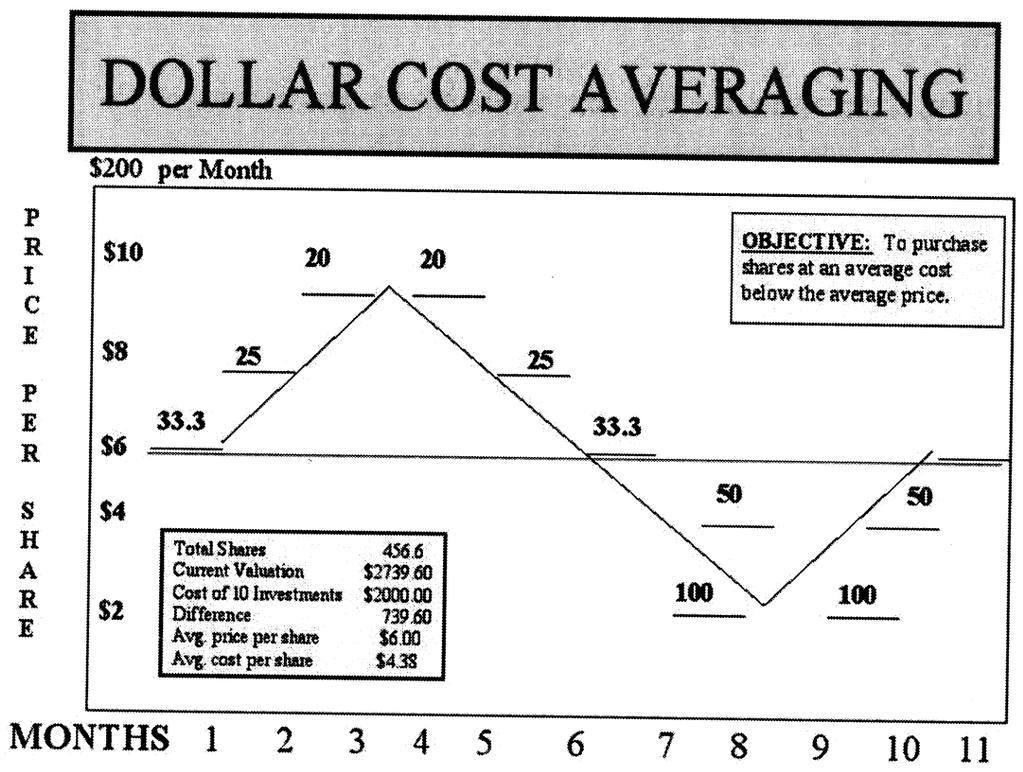
"Stocks give higher long-term growth than bonds do," Broughton said. "Bonds are great if you want money paid to you now."

Bonds represent cash the company is borrowing.

When soldiers own stocks, they own a portion of that company and hope the value goes up. Sometimes they receive a dividend, a portion of profits given to shareholders.

One can own common or preferred stock. Preferred stock owners receive a fixed dividend per share and have no voting rights. Owners of common stock receive a dividend only after preferred stock owners, but they have a greater potential to share in the future earning of the company.

Some of the different kind of stocks include:



• Penny stocks of a very small company that are very cheap (under $2).

• Growth stocks of a rapidly growing company or have potential for success.

• Blue chip stocks of large, well known companies.

Investors trade stocks through a broker on a trading floor — the New York Stock Exchange or the American Stock Exchange — or through a broker on the NASDAQ (National Association of Securities Dealers Automatic Quotation) system.

Soldiers should concentrate on stock mutual funds, too, said Capt. Jason Dickinson with Basic Combat Training Brigade, who has studied the financial services field for more than five years.

Dollar-cost averaging increases profits in the long run.

"Once a good fund portfolio is established, individual stocks can be helpful," Dickinson said. "However, beware of the tendency to trade."

Day trading, when one buys and sells stock after minute changes in price, is something soldiers should leave to the pros, he said.

He recommends looking around one's home at the everyday products one uses or eats or consumes.

"These are usually produced by your buy-and-hold companies that will continue growing at a steady pace," Dickinson said.

Soldiers should then watch the stocks by putting them into a free online, individual portfolio tracker such as CNBC or Morningstar, he said.

"Watch them for a bit, then when you feel comfortable, buy and hold on for the ride," Dickinson said.

Stocks are usually bought in even lots, such as 100 or 1,000 shares. Given that, stocks require a larger initial investment than a mutual fund, which one can start for as low as $25 per month.

"With stocks, you can be very aggressive," he said. "However, the risk is also there. Should one stock do poorly you stand to lose, possibly a great deal, less when diversified (into other investment vehicles like mutual funds and bonds)."

When soldiers buy a bond, they lend their money to a company or government in return for interest payments until the bond's maturity date.

Corporate or municipal bonds, sometimes called tax-exempt bonds, do have inherent low interest, but soldiers should consider them for diversification purposes, especially early in their investment career, Dickinson said.
