Soldiers pay increases 3.7 percent

Law provides more benefits, July raises

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — A 3.7 percent military pay raise, Tricare changes, military modernization and lifetime medical benefits are just some of the aspects of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2001 that President Clinton signed into law Oct. 30.

The act gives DoD permission to spend an authorized overall budget of $309.9 billion. The fiscal 2001 appropriations act signed in August actually provided the money.

The authorization act set total military fiscal 2001 end strength at 1,382,242. The Army's end strength is 480,000; the Navy's, 372,642; Air Force's, 357,000; and the Marines', 172,600. The Selected Reserve end strength is 874,664 with the Army National Guard's at 350,526, the Army Reserve's 205,300 and the Naval Reserve's at 88,900. The Marine Corps Reserve will have 39,558 members, the Air National Guard is set at 108,022; the Air Force Reserve at 74,358; and the Coast Guard Reserve, 8,000.

End strength is down 3,190 from fiscal 2000 for the active force and up by 4,366 for the Selected Reserve.

Service members did particularly well in quality of life expenditures.

In addition to the 3.7 percent across-the-board pay raise that went into effect Jan. 1, 2001, service members in pay grades E-5 to E-7 will receive a targeted, one-time monthly raise of $32 to $59 starting July 1, 2001.

Congress has added funds to the Basic Allowance for Housing to reduce out-of-pocket expenses service members must pay if they live off base. Currently, service members living off base pay an average of 19 percent of their housing costs out-of-pocket.

The money will bring that average to 15 percent in fiscal 2001.

The legislation authorizes the defense secretary to raise BAH rates to eliminate out-of-pocket expenses by fiscal 2005.

The act extends the military housing privatization program. The program allows commercial firms to build and run military family housing areas.

Another pay action calls for active and reserve military personnel to be able to use the Thrift Savings Plan.

The plan, long a part of the Federal Employees Retirement System, would allow military personnel to invest a percentage of their pre-tax pay toward retirement.

Taxes on participants' investments and earnings are deferred while in the plan.

Details remain to be worked out, but the act calls for the system to be up and running 360 days after the president signs the legislation.

The budget changes the Tricare military medical system in several ways.

For active duty personnel, Tricare Prime Remote now covers family members as well as active-duty personnel. The act also eliminates co-payments for active duty family members enrolled in Tricare Prime. It also allows travel reimbursements to those who must go more than 100 miles to see a Tricare health-care provider.

The biggest Tricare change, however, covers Medicare-eligible retirees.

The act restructures Tricare to allow Medicare-eligible military retirees and their family members to continue their coverage beginning in fiscal 2002.

Under the plan, Medicare-eligible beneficiaries would pay no co-pays, deductibles or Tricare enrollment fees or premiums.

Retirees can receive care under Medicare; also, any medical expense not covered by Medicare will be paid by Tricare.

The act also expands the mail-order pharmacy service to cover all beneficiaries, including Medicare-eligible retirees.

Bush nominates defense secretary

President-elect seeks $1 billion for pay raise

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — President-elect George W. Bush recently nominated Donald H. Rumsfeld as defense secretary.

If confirmed by the Senate this will be Rumsfeld's second tour at the Pentagon. He was secretary in the Ford Administration from 1975 to 1977.

Rumsfeld, 68, would succeed William S. Cohen. "He's going to be a great secretary of defense — again," said Bush during the announcement Dec. 28.

During the announcement, Bush said he wants to restructure the department to make forces more mobile. During the campaign, Bush said he would look into skipping generations of military hardware to ensure U.S. forces have the best weaponry. Bush also reiterated that he would add $1 billion to the budget for a higher military pay raise.

Rumsfeld will preside over the next Quadrennial Defense Review.

"One of Secretary Rumsfeld's first tasks will be to challenge the status quo inside the Pentagon, to develop a strategy necessary to have a force equipped for warfare in the 21st century," Bush said.

Bush called Rumsfeld "a decisive leader" who will work well with the rest of the National Security experts in the administration. Bush has nominated former Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Army Gen. Colin Powell as secretary of state and Condoleezza Rice as national security advisor. In addition, Vice Presider -elect Dick Cheney also served as defense secretary.

Rumsfeld is from Illinois and served in the administration of Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford. He is a former Navy fighter pilot and Illinois congressman. He was U.S. ambassador to NATO.

Rumsfeld was born in Chicago in 1932. He graduated from Princeton in 1954.

Fort Benning to celebrate King's life

Community plans MLK events

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning will celebrate the life and heritage of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. at a 10 a.m. commencement Thursday in Marshall Auditorium at Infantry Hall.

Col. Nolen Bivens, commander of the Basic Combat Training Brigade, will be the guest speaker.

The theme of this year's celebration is Remember! Celebrate! Act! A Day On, Not a Day Off!

Bivens plans to answer three questions during his address, he said.

"What did Martin Luther King Jr. celebrate? What did he remember? How did he act? Mining his life for answers to these questions will give us insight into what it is we ought to be celebrating, remembering and doing — rather than just taking a day off," Bivens said.

Sgt. 1st Class Danny R. Whitehead, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, will give a dramatic re-enactment of one of King's speeches. The Sightseeing Chapel choir and Celeste Lee, accompanied by Debra Mabry, will sing.

The ceremony, sponsored by the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, is one of several events scheduled throughout the week in honor of the King holiday on Jan. 15. Fort Benning has designated Jan. 12 a training holiday.

The Fort Benning EO office is sponsoring a float in the Columbus Phenix City Martin Luther King Parade Jan. 13 at 1 p.m. The route will begin at Colin Powell Parkway and Broad Street in Phenix City and will travel up Broad, crossing over the 13th Street Bridge to Broadway in Columbus. The route ends at the intersection of Ninth Street and Broadway.

Volunteers are needed to walk in the parade as part of a re-enactment of a nonviolent Civil Rights march. A bus will be provided to shuttle marchers to and from the parade.

"Our hope and intent is to get 35 to 40 people to dress in attire appropriate for that era, the 50s and 60s. The marchers will need to be in period dress; dark slacks, white shirt, narrow dark tie, dark suit jacket and dark shoes," said Sgt. 1st Class Billy Carmichael, EO adviser.

People are also needed to create protest signs and to assist in the construction of the float. For more information, call 545-6665.

The MWR Sports Branch will sponsor a basketball tournament Monday through Thursday.

The single-elimination tournament is for active-duty personnel. Games will be played at the four gyms on post.

The deadline to register is 10 a.m. today and an organizational meeting is set for 1 p.m. today at Kefurt Fitness Center at Kelley Hill.

To register, bring a team roster to Kefurt Fitness Center. For more information, call Lulu Mitchenor at 544-1747 or 544-3578.

The Columbus Martin Luther King Unity Run will take place Jan. 13 at 10 a.m. The 5K run starts on the Riverwalk at Bay Avenue and 10th Street. There is a $10 entry fee, which includes a T-shirt. For more information, call the Southwest Georgia Black Chamber of Commerce at 221-4425.

To register for the run in advance, drop by Room 207, Building 4, from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, or visit the chamber's office at 1170 Brown Ave., Suite 4. Runners may register race day beginning at 9 a.m.

At 11 a.m. Saturday the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus will kick off Martin Luther King Pride Months with a litter cleanup in Phenix City. For details, call 321-9596.

Benning tax center to open

Post offers free tax help for Soldiers

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Do you need help with filing your income tax returns? The Fort Benning tax center offers free assistance to active-duty and retired Soldiers and their family members.

Starting Jan. 17, the center will begin processing 1040EZ tax returns. Beginning Feb. 1, clients can bring in federal and state returns as well.

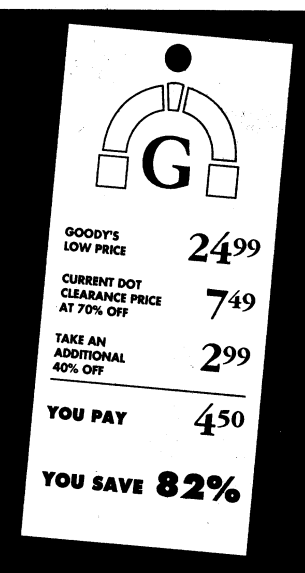
"We have Soldiers and volunteers directly trained by the IRS so they know what they're doing," said Capt. Aimee Hobby, installation tax officer.

Hobby said the center's electronic filing system also means quicker refunds in two or three weeks for clients.

During tax season, the center will operate from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. Clients are seen on a first-come, first-serve basis.

The schedule often fills up quickly so for those with complicated returns, it is recommended you arrive early in the day, Hobby said.

The tax center's new location is in Building 2826, Sightseeing Road, across from the Main Post Bowling Center and next to Bernheim Dental Clinic. There is limited handicap parking available. Parking is available across the street at the Bowling Center.



For more information, contact the tax center at 545-4267 or go online at www.jag.benning.army.mil/laframe.

DoD to open new institute

Democratic principles to be taught

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
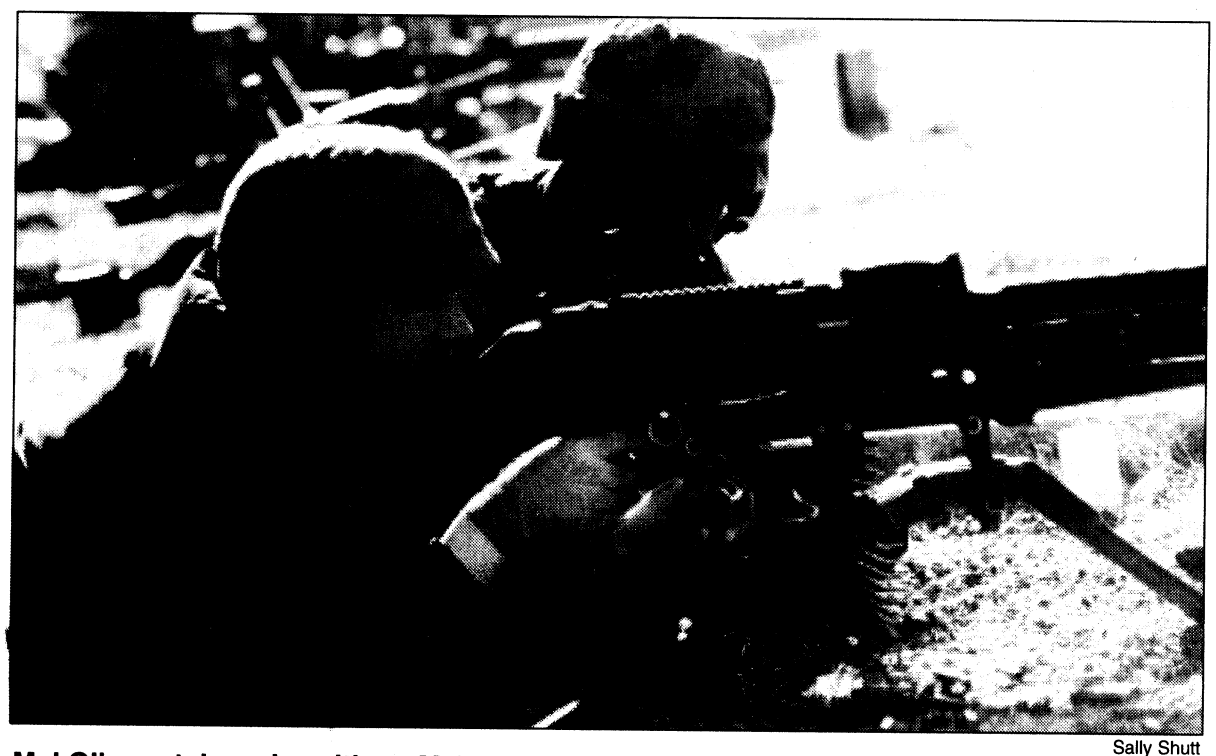
WHISC Public Affairs Office

Focusing on 21st century challenges in the Western Hemisphere, the Department of Defense will activate the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation (WHISC) Wednesday.

Deputy Secretary of Defense Rudy de Leon will be the keynote speaker during the activation ceremony scheduled for 3 p.m. at Pratt Hall inside historic Ridgway Hall, the former Infantry School Headquarters.

The Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal 2001 signed by President Clinton into law Oct. 30, authorized the Secretary of Defense to establish the institute and appoint a military service as executive agent. The Secretary of the Army was appointed the executive agent of the WHISC and the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command will supervise and manage the institution.

The institution will provide professional education and training to the democratic nations of the Western Hemisphere, according to Lt. Col. George Ruff, director for Information Operations.



"We will focus our training on the democratic principles set forth in the Charter of the Organization of American States (OAS)," said Ruff. "This institute will foster mutual respect, confidence, and cooperation among the participating nations while promoting democratic values, respect for human rights, and knowledge and understanding of U.S. customs and traditions among the students."

Ruff emphasized the OAS' five founding purposes are to strengthen the peace and security of the continent; prevent possible causes of difficulties and to ensure the pacific settlement of disputes that may arise among member states; provide for the common action on the part of those States in the event of aggression; seek the solution of political, juridical and economic problems that may arise among them and to promote, by cooperative action their economic, social, and cultural development.

He said the student population would include military members, governmental and nongovernmental civilians, and law enforcement officials of our hemispheric neighbors. The cadre will include U.S. and Latin American civilian and

Movie research reason for star's trip to Benning

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Mel Gibson visited Fort Benning last week in preparation for a future movie — an adaptation of the bestseller We Were Soldiers Once .... and Young.

The actor, along with the film's producer, director, production designer and art director, spent two days researching for the project and visiting several Fort Benning sites that may be depicted in the movie.

We Were Soldiers tells the story of the men who fought in the first major battle of Vietnam, the 1965 fight in the Ia Drang Valley.

Gibson will portray retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore, who in 1965 was the battalion commander of the 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry. Moore, who lives in Auburn, Ala., and Joe Galloway, the only journalist on the ground during the battle, wrote the book, published in 1992.

The trip was a chance for Gibson to learn more about the Army and soldiers in preparation for the role of a modern-day hero.

"I feel a tremendous responsibility," Gibson said of tackling the role of Moore. "Especially because he is still alive. That's why I am down here today."

Gibson spent about two hours at the Malone Complex Jan. 4 learning about machine guns from instructors at the Infantry Officers' Basic Course. Moore, who was a lieutenant colonel during the Ia Drang battle, stood by as Gibson and other members of his group donned helmets and fired the weapons.

Moore first met Gibson last October in Los Angeles when Randall Wallace, who adapted the book into a screenplay, introduced the two.

"We met for two or three hours, and it was an interesting conversation," recalled Moore, who will serve as a technical adviser for the movie.

"He is very sincere and has a quick mind. I can't think of a better actor in Hollywood," Moore said.

Gibson read the book a month ago after reading Wallace's script.

"The book is a very compelling read, very emotional," Gibson said. "I found it educational, especially in

Army shows soldiers money

New year nets more pay, BAH increase

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

For soldiers at Fort Benning and elsewhere, the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act means increased pay and improved benefits.

Signed into law by President Clinton last October, it increased the overall DoD budget to more than $300 billion.

Some of these effects will be seen in January's mid-month military paychecks.

Local Georgia Rep. Mac Collins was one of the supporters of this act.

"He was very concerned that it's important that we improve the quality of life so that soldiers want to stay in (the military)," said Doug Graham, press secretary for Collins.

Along with a 3.7 percent pay raise, the quality of military life will be improved for many soldiers and their families due to the additional funds appropriated to the Basic Allowance for Housing.

On average, this year's BAH rates will be 11 percent higher. The new rates will be among the largest in history.

Locally, the increased rates

Education gets cheaper online

Enrollment in program starts Tues.

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning soldiers can start enrolling in the Army's new tuition-free online education program Tuesday morning at 8 a.m. in the Education Center, Building 2602.

Enrollment will continue from 8 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 4 p.m. each duty day for the next several months at the center located in Soldiers' Plaza.

Soldiers who meet the criteria for the Army University Access Online program will be issued a technology package consisting of a laptop computer, printer, Internet service, e-mail account, software and technology support.

To participate in the program, soldiers — privates through first sergeants — must be assigned to Fort Benning with at least six months remaining on station. Soldiers must have at least three years remaining on active duty and have a high school diploma or GED. If they do not have three years remaining, they may extend their enlistment to meet that requirement.

Soldiers must also have their commanders' approval to participate.

Students who complete 12 semester hours, usually four courses, within two years will be allowed to keep their laptop computers and printers.

Fort Benning is one of three test sites for the program, which was announced in July. Last month, the Army awarded a $453 million contract to PricewaterhouseCoopers to provide distance learning for soldiers. The Web portal is scheduled to open next week with 29 different colleges and institutions offering classes online.

Interest in the program is high, and the Education Center has received numerous calls since the middle of December asking for information on the new initiative, said Elaine Livingston, education service officer at Fort Benning.

"This program is designed to offer the eligible soldier the opportunity to complete a college degree or certificate program anytime, anyplace, anywhere over the Internet," Livingston said.

The Donovan Library in Infantry Hall will offer technical support and information concerning the Army University Access Online program beginning Wednesday from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m.

For more information, call Dennis Bundy, the AUAO contractor, at 545-1774, or ask for an education counselor at 545-3093 or 545-6114.

Despite changes protesters never gave school chance

Col. Glenn Weidner
Former commandant of USARSA

commentary

On Dec. 15 the U. S. Army School of the Americas closed its doors after 54 years of service to the nation and to the inter-American vision of a peaceful and democratic hemisphere.

More than 61,000 Latin American and U.S. students passed through the school since its founding in the Panama Canal Zone and its closure after 15 years at Fort Benning. During that period, Marxist insurgencies in Latin America were defeated, democracy replaced authoritarian forms of government, the most egregious human rights abuses were curbed, and economic reforms began to have an impact on the endemic poverty in the region.

Few noticed the school's role in these achievements until a concerted smear campaign was undertaken by leftist activists resurrecting an old TASS disinformation theme circulated during the Cold War labeling USARSA the "School of Assassins." Given the effectiveness of that campaign, Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera led an initiative to recapture flagging political support for an essential part of our country's engagement strategy.

Next week, a new institute will open under the Department of Defense, absent the baggage of the School of the Americas issue. Its mission will be to provide "professional education and training to eligible personnel of nations of the Western Hemisphere within the context of the democratic principles set forth in the Charter of the Organization of American States ... while fostering mutual knowledge, transparency, confidence, and cooperation among the participating nations and promoting democratic values, respect for human rights, and knowledge and understanding of United States customs and traditions."

The legislation founding the new institute also mandates training in democracy and human rights for all students and provides for an external supervisory body with representation from the Congress, academia, the executive branch, and human rights organizations.

Thus, the concerns of the Congress about the School of the Americas have been resolutely addressed. Yet SOA-Watch activists and anti-capitalist affinity groups have already announced their intention to protest the new institute, to escalate civil disobedience, and to pressure the Congress for its closure.

This month, several SOA-Watch activists are engaged in a hunger strike at the Stone Gate.

Their goals, designed to deprive struggling democracies of much-needed professionalization of key institutions, as well as to perpetuate a smear on the highly principled and capable U.S. servicemen and servicewomen who are our best ambassadors to these militaries, is hardly conducive to a more secure and democratic future for the people of Latin America. Their protest wraps itself in the moral superiority of the language of peace, justice and equality. Its true message drips with malice and prejudice.

Their hatred of their military and their blanket condemnation of Latin Americans, regardless of the countries of origin or their individual qualities, are implicit in their demand to shut down an institution constituted under the law to promote peace and cooperation in the hemisphere, before it even begins to operate.

Citizens of Columbus and Fort Benning and local media have been extremely solicitous in their treatment of these protesters because of our respect for the principle of lawful dissent in a democratic society. The protesters are mired in a Cold War myth, and by ignoring the violence of their revolutionary "heroes" are causing harm to the very people they purport to be aiding. They, along with the soldiers and civilian employees of USARSA and WHISC, deserve much better.

Star's visit turns women to mush

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

What do women really want? Mel Gibson. It's that simple.

Forget everything you've heard about commitment and consideration and relationships based on mutual respect. Women just want Mel.

Unless you've been in a coma, you heard about Mel's visit to Fort Benning to do research for a movie based on the book, "We Were Soldiers Once... and Young," written by retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and journalist Joe Galloway.

I wasn't the reporter assigned to cover Mel's visit. That little nugget fell to Sally, and rightly so since she'd already done a lot of background research about the book and its authors.

She deserved it, and I'm really sorry about all those nasty things I said behind her back.

But I did a little reporting of my own. In fact, I reported the news to everyone I've ever known. "Hi. It's Bridgett. Remember me? We went to school together in 1982. I just called to tell you Mel Gibson's here on Fort Benning. Gotta go now. Bye."

To be perfectly honest I'm a Sean Connery fan myself. Though I've always enjoyed his movies, I've never been what you'd call a Mel Maniac, unlike my sister-in-law, who named her goldfish Mel. I haven't figured out the Freudian implications, but I'm working on it.

So why did I, a fairly mature, reasonably rational, devoted wife and mother go ga ga at the possibility of meeting Hollywood's leading hunk?

I haven't got a clue.

But whatever it was, I wasn't alone. I heard it in the grocery store checkout line from the 50-something-year-old cashier. The young mothers were talking about it as they dropped their kids at pre-K, and my son's pre-pubescent classmates were, for lack of a better word, giddy with excitement.

I did get an opportunity to take a few pictures of Mel during his visit. And as I sit here surrounded by half a dozen photos you wish you could get your hands on, I'm wondering just what it is that makes Mel so darned appealing?

He's ruggedly handsome, but let's face it, here on Fort Benning we're surrounded by so many soldiers we could overdose on rugged good looks.

He's got a really cute accent, but here in the South who doesn't?

And he's got a great sense of humor. But then so does Robin Williams, and no one's called him 'cute' since 1977 when he first dropped in from Ork.

Oh, well. Just as men will never really figure out what it is women want, I may never know why grown women turn to mush within five miles of Mel.

But given the opportunity I'll continue my research, because I'm an investigative reporter. It's a tough job, but somebody's gotta do it.

CG thanks community for exceeding expectations

Congratulations Fort Benning. Once again you exceeded the Combined Federal Campaign goal of $550,000.

It was a real team effort as more than 9,000 soldiers and civilians selflessly pitched in to help those in need.

Of the money collected, more than $50,000 will remain in the tricommunity to help such local charities as Army Community Service, Alliance for Battered Women, Columbus Hospice, Salvation Army, Easter Seals, Big Brothers and Big Sisters, YMCA, Scouts and Boys and Girls Clubs — in other words this is money that will help make our community a better place to live, work and play.

Again, thank you for your support of CFC 2000.

Veteran appreciates graduation ceremony

I wish to thank you for the fine graduation program provided for the soldiers who graduated from "boot camp."

During the ceremonies, veterans were asked to stand and we were thanked for our service to the nation.

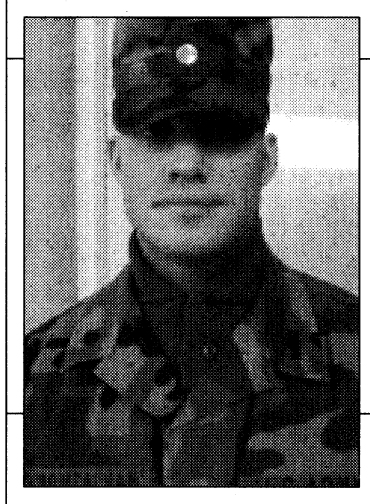
This was the first time that anyone ever thanked me for my military service.

I was very proud of the pride, bearing and professionalism displayed by your fine soldiers who graduated.

These are the people who will carry on the pride and honor of the uniform that we passed on when we left Vietnam.

Thank you for your dedication and love for the country.

The pride that your Soldiers displayed made me think that it would be great if universal military service was required for every American.



Many Americans take our freedoms for granted.

Our freedoms had to be earned.

Airborne instructor jumps to top honor

Black Hat mentors students

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

As a boy growing up in Ohio, he dreamed of one day being a paratrooper and a doctor.

One dream became reality for Staff Sgt. Robert Carlisle, and the other remains a goal he plans to pursue.

Carlisle is familiar with reaching his goals. His most recent accomplishment was acknowledged Dec. 15 when he was named Black Hat of the Year — an award for the best instructor at the U.S. Army Airborne School.

"He lives and breathes airborne," said Command Sgt. Maj. Efrain Hernandez, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry 11th Infantry Regiment "He's the epitome of a paratrooper."

Carlisle joined the Army eight years ago. After completing basic training, he earned his jump wings.

He spent the first six years of his career with the 82nd Airborne Division before returning to the Airborne School to teach in June 1999.

"I love the airborne community and jumping out of airplanes," said Carlisle, who also earned his ranger tab.

And he enjoys sharing his experience with students about to join airborne units.

"So many of their questions are about more than just making it through jump school. They want to know what to expect once they get to their units," he said.

"My experience has really helped me as an instructor because the students ask real-life questions about the dangers they may face. I relay the things I've seen happen or that I know can happen," Carlisle said.

"Staff Sergeant Carlisle relays his operational experience to the students and really mentors them. He is an outstanding individual," Hernandez said.

Carlisle's ability to retain information has impressed his fellow airborne instructors at D Company.

"You could almost say he has a photographic memory," said Staff Sgt. Roland Baldomero.

As a teacher, Carlisle encourages students to ask questions.

"He is constantly asking them for questions. He really puts an emphasis on telling them why they are to do something a certain way," Baldomero said.

As the Black Hat of the Year, Carlisle will don a distinctive cap from the other instructors at the school.

His black hat will bear gold braid, rank and wings.

The Black Hat of the Year competition includes a jumpmaster personnel inspection test of three individuals in five minutes, a class presentation, and a PT test based on standards for the 17- to 21-year-old age group.

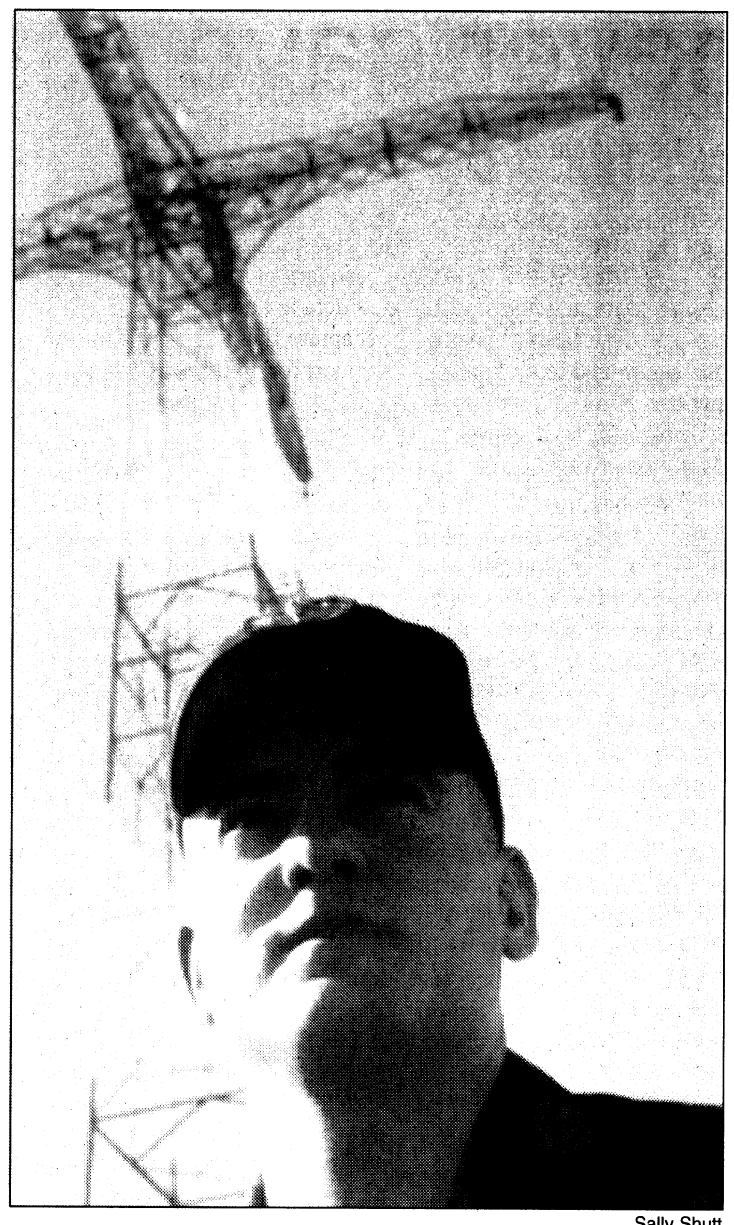
The instructors must also appear before a board and answer questions on all aspects of airborne training, from ground to jump week.

Carlisle is married, and he and his wife, Heather, have a 2-year-old daughter, Katelyn.

In his spare time Carlisle plays baseball with a league in Columbus, and the left-handed pitcher is known as a hard worker.

"Based on the work ethic he demonstrates on the baseball field, which is a carry-over from his work ethic at the Airborne School, there was no doubt in my mind he would be the Black Hat of the Year," said Capt. Ed Gawlik, Carlisle's baseball coach.

"He can handle stress at any moment. He's the guy I would put in to pitch with the bases loaded. If we needed an out, he could do it," Gawlik said.



As for Carlisle's dream to one day be a doctor, the soldier has been researching the feasibility of attending veterinary school at Ohio State once his enlistment is up in 2002 and then returning to the Army to serve as a vet.

But, for now, he can't think of anything better than continuing the airborne tradition and mentoring jump students.

In the 18 months he has been an instructor, Carlisle estimates he has worked with close to 600 students while assigned to D Company.

"One day at the 250-foot tower a student came up and thanked me for 'saving his life' by teaching him to land properly and keep his knees and feet together," Carlisle said.

"I was just doing my job, but that memory has stuck with me," he said.

military instructors, including resident professorship chairs from the Department of State, the Drug Enforcement Administration, and prominent international organizations and the Civilian-Military Operations Directorate under the supervision and guidance of a Department of State Foreign Service Officer with regional expertise.

"In addition to professional military education, the curriculum will include offerings in the areas of peace support operations, such as disaster relief, disaster preparedness, transnational security threats, international operational law, and civilian operations, as well as information operations, democratic sustainment and advanced counterdrug operations," he said.

Ruff added that every student and every instructor will receive, as a minimum, a basic eight-hour block of instruction in human rights that addresses the Just War Theory, the United Nations International Declaration of Human Rights, The Hague and Geneva Conventions of the Laws of Land Warfare, the proper role of a military in a democratic society, and specially molded case studies.

He said courses of longer duration like the Command and General Staff Officer Course, will supplement the basic instruction with further instruction in and discussion of these topics.

In addition, these human rights topics will be interwoven in other training situations that will test the students' abilities to apply the classroom principles in simulated real world situations.

"This module of instruction will be unique in its design and content and will cover these topics in more depth than any other U.S. Department of Defense institution," said Secretary of the Army, Louis Caldera.

DPS recognizes persons of the year

Professionals' motivation keys honors

Spc. William A. Graves
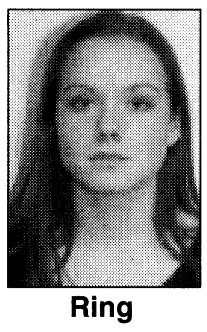
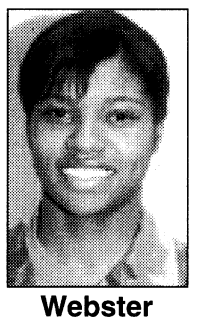
Bayonet staff

Motivating factors that result in one being the best at what he or she does come in different forms.



From the love of a child to the support of an organization, and from a burning desire to help others to a consuming passion to do one's job, the motivation of six Department of Public Safety professionals helped them become persons of the year in their respective specialties.



Spc. Shelly Ring, 71st Military Police Detachment, is the Military Policeman of the Year.

"Specialist Ring won because she's a truly dedicated soldier with outstanding foresight," Sgt. 1st Class Mark Sanders, 71st MP Det. Sgt. "She always puts the best foot forward, no matter what task she is given."

Spc. Ladolgy Webster, a supply specialist with the 71st MP Det., is the Support Soldier of the Year.

"Specialist Webster won because of her accomplishment of supporting the MPs while they conduct their daily missions," Sanders said. "She is a gifted young soldier who is really coming into her own."

Ring

Webster

He said Ring and Webster could accomplish anything they put their minds to; all they need is a challenge.

"They will not only meet it, they will always exceed the standard," Sanders said.

Webster said her son, Isaiah, inspires her to excel at work.

"My son motivates me," Webster said. "I enjoy showing him his mother can succeed and do the best she can so he may do the same in his future."

Ring said she received motivation from her units, previously the 988th MP Co. and currently the 71st MP Det.

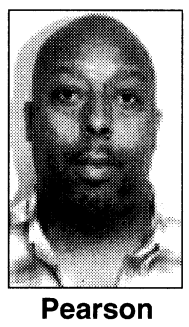
"They both are squared away, almost perfect," Ring said. "They reward for doing the right thing and really care about their soldiers."

She advised soldiers to always go the extra mile.

"There are so many aspects of being a soldier," Ring said. "One should meet the standard on everything, tactically and technically, and learn how to be a better soldier in every way.

"Everyone makes mistakes, Ring said. "As long as one is trying to do the right thing, no one can say anything to him or her."

The DPS Civilian of the Year is Carleton W. Pearson, supply technician, logistics office, 71st MP Det.



The U.S. Army Infantry Center MP Co. split off into two offshoots last year, the 71st MP Det. and the 209th MP Det., and Pearson played a major role in the split.

"Mr. P. was an essential piece of its logistical aspect of the conversion," said 1st Lt. Kate Bielak, logistical officer, 71st MP Co.

In November, more than 1,700 people had the chance to witness a derivative of Pearson's dedication when the military police processed them after the U.S. Army School of the Americas demonstration.

"Mr. P. was an integral part in the USARSA demonstration," she said. "He flawlessly orchestrated supply distribution, the processing centers for demonstrators and civil disturbance teams."

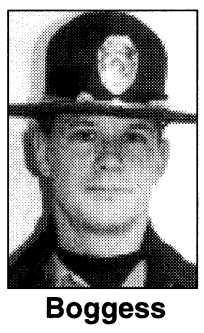
Bielak said Pearson is the hardest working civilian she has met, and added she hopes to have the opportunity to work with more professionals like him in the near future.

Pearson

"It's an honor to have been chosen," Pearson said. "I'm retired military, and I'm glad to have had the opportunity to support the soldiers of today.

"It's good to see, when one puts forth an effort, something positive comes out of it."

Anita Langford is the Safety Specialist of the Year.



"She is hard working and has high standards," said Regis Beighley, safety manager at DPS. "She's dedicated to preventing injuries to soldiers and civilian employees on Fort Benning.

"The programs she developed have been used throughout TRADOC."

Some of the programs used are the Bloodborn Pathogen, Lockout Tagout, Confined Space and Ergonomics, all of which protect soldiers and civilians in an efficient and effective manner, he said.

Langford, who has more than 25 years of safety experience, was unavailable for comment at press time because she was on leave.

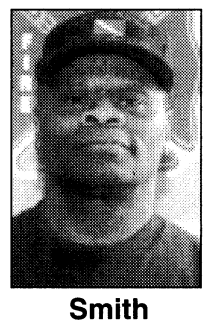
Officer Robert Boggess is the DPS Civilian Police Officer of the Year for the second consecutive year.

Boggess

"That says something about him and how his peers view him," said 1st. Lt. Esteban Guttierrez, law enforcement operations officer and supervisor of civilian police officers. "He's an excellent officer who gets results in his job."

He said Boggess makes routine stops that lead to bigger charges such as turning a traffic stop into a drug arrest.

While patrolling the training areas, he has a keen eye for illegal hunters, dumpers and off roaders.



"He is tenacious in his job and genuinely dedicated," Guttierrez said.

"I try to do the job I'm assigned in the best possible manner," Boggess said. "I enjoy the work I do and that's 99 percent of the reason I get up in the morning."

Boggess said one of the highlights of the year was hunting season where he spent much of his time looking for people violating the post's hunting regulations.

"We had a successful year of hunting hunters," he said.

Leroy Smith, Fort Benning Fire Department, is the Firefighter of the Year.

Smith

"Leroy is one of those guys where the rubber meets the road," said Chief Arthur Simmons, Fort Benning Fire Department. "He's always there in the trenches — like the Infantry, without them you can't win the war."

Simmons said Smith did not win for being a hero.

He won because he was reliable, steady, responsible and, above all, professional.

"I love what I do," Smith said. "I want to save lives and work with people, and this job gives me that opportunity."

He said he has seen gruesome fires, but he does not let the incidents get close to him and enjoys coming to work.

"You have to love what your doing, and if you do that, you'll do a better job," Smith said.

He said if firefighters want to win the coveted honor, they have to expect time away from their family and be physically fit.

His son, Leroy Jr., also is a firefight here.

"My goal is to set the example for not just my son but for everyone else," Smith said.

Engineers take on preliminary events before stakes

Sapper Stakes next target for post soldiers

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

With the main portion of the Sapper Stakes quickly approaching at the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade, the soldiers have been competing in several events leading up to the test.

Earlier this week they were out on the Malone ranges completing one of the basic soldier skills that is also a requirement for a unit to earn the Fit To Fight streamer — weapons qualification.

The engineers took two days at the range to first zero then qualify with their individual weapons.

This was one of several events they had to complete before moving on to the Sapper Stakes.

Other events included an Army physical fitness test, a 12-mile ruck march, a 4-mile run and a maintenance event for their armored personnel carriers.

These events were used as a readiness exercise for the Sapper Stakes, said Capt. Juan Zapata, assistant operations officer for plans.

"These events are the prelude. It's an onward movement type of thing. Right now they are prepping, making sure they are in shape, that they meet all of the basic requirements of an engineer," said Zapata.

With the first phase behind them, the engineers are ready to take on the Stakes, which run from Monday through Jan. 19.

Events in the Sapper Stakes test the skills of combat engineers by putting them in situations they will face while performing their jobs in a combat environment, said Zapata.

"The Sapper Stakes is designed to test the combat engineer squad in a multitude of combat engineers tasks that are part of their METL tasks," explained Zapata. "We set it up into various lanes and it's conducted throughout 24-hour operations. They have a total of eight tasks to accomplish, get graded on and move on to the next event."

Spc. Thomas Wadkins, B Company, who is participating for the second time, said taking part in the Sapper Stakes events is an exciting part of the annual routine at his unit.

"I like doing this type of thing because it gets us out in the field doing what we are trained to do," said Wadkins.

Pvt. Mark Walker, who recently completed his AIT, said he's also been looking forward to the stakes.

He said it will allow him to see how his skills compare to those of his fellow soldiers.

"I think I might have some advantage over other people because I just graduated, but it doesn't matter, it's a team effort. I think we'll do well," said Walker.

Actor: Tours Fort Benning to research his future movie

the way the war was fought."

During his visit to the range, Gibson shot an M-60 and an M-240B machine gun, as well as an M-249 squad automatic weapon.

"It was a kick, figuratively and literally," he said, brushing off red clay from his jeans.

The actor said he had received "ample instruction" from Sgt. 1st Class Vada King, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"He did OK," King said. "He would have qualified on all three weapons."

While briefing the Hollywood contingent, King stressed the importance of the M-60 machine gunners.

"Once this gun opens up, you have everyone shooting at you and trying to take it out," King said.

After firing the weapons, Gibson took time to pose for photos with a group of IOBC lieutenants who had been training on the range.

Moore and Galloway, a senior writer for U.S. News and World Report, accompanied Gibson during much of his stay. Sites visited included Moore's former headquarters at Kelley Hill, the quarters where his family lived on post and the Main Post Cemetery.

"I showed them where my troops are buried," Moore said.

They were the same sites the general had taken Wallace last year when the filmmaker visited post.

Wallace and Gibson have worked together before. Wallace wrote the screenplay for Braveheart, which won the Academy Award for best picture in 1995 and starred Gibson.

During a visit in May to Fort Benning, Wallace spent two weeks with the Ranger Training Brigade getting a feel for Army life.

"I wanted to give Mel an introduction to the Army at its finest," Wallace said.

Wallace also introduced Gibson to two other main characters in the Ia Drang battle who live in Columbus — retired Command Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley and Ernie Savage, who was a sergeant at the time.

"We wanted Mel to have the opportunity to not only absorb knowledge, but insight into the true character of these heroes," Wallace said.

"General Moore, Sergeant Major Plumley, Ernie Savage and Joe Galloway are national treasures as human beings," Wallace said.

Galloway and Moore had almost given up on Hollywood turning their book into a movie when the two received a call several years ago from Wallace seeking the rights to the work.

"We've waited a lot of years for this. A film will reach a much wider audience, and with a story this important, that's what you want," Galloway said.

The journalist, who flew down from his home in Virginia, has read Wallace's screenplay.

"It captures the heart and soul of the book," he said.

The Army and the Department of Defense have not announced approval for any filming to take place at Fort Benning.

"This is a fact-finding trip. They are conducting research for the film only," said Sgt. 1st Class William Homann, U.S. Army Public Affairs, Los Angeles, Calif., Branch.

Before dropping by the range, Gibson and company had lunch at the Four Winds, a restaurant in Cusseta where Wallace had visited in May and eaten one of the establishment's famous Ranger Burgers.

Gibson didn't pass up the chance to try a Ranger Burger. When asked, he said he did indeed finish the one pound of ground beef, cheese, bacon, lettuce, tomato and onion on a bun.

"But it hasn't finished with me yet," Gibson said. "It's still wrecking havoc somewhere down my esophageal tract."

Increase: Assists soldiers with housing, medical bills

will affect about 10,000 soldiers and their family members living in areas surrounding Fort Benning.

"It's a good thing," said Capt. Mike Pearce, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. Pearce and his wife currently live off-post.

"Considering the rent, it will come in handy. I wasn't expecting the rent to be quite so high around here," he said.

To arrive at the new rates, Anna Wilson, chief, Community Homefinding, Relocation, and Referral Services, Housing Division, Directorate of Public Works, followed specific criteria to conduct a survey of available housing off-post to determine if a BAH increase was needed.

Local areas deemed unsafe were not included in the survey.

"This process acknowledged and defined which neighborhoods in Columbus and Phenix City are safe and adequate and which ones are not appropriate for your members to live in," said Lt. Cmdr. Wesley Driver, deputy of the Coast Guard Housing Program and Coordinator of BAH Survey and Implementation for the Coast Guard.

As a Columbus resident, Driver also worked with the post CHRRS office to conduct and implement Fort Benning's local research, using the Coast Guard's data collection system as a model.

The figures (Fort Benning) came up with meet the Army's goal to not take more than 15 percent out of a soldier's regular pay for housing, said Ken Hankins, chief, Housing Division, DPW.

Wilson said the BAH increase for this area will make an impact, especially for soldiers in the ranks of E-1 through E-6.

"Our (previous) rates were so low, you couldn't find a one-bedroom for what an E-1 was drawing," she said.

The new rates for an E-1 with dependents have increased by about $165, Wilson said.

According to officials, these new rates can only go up. In the future, military members living off-post will not see a decline in their monthly housing allowance, even if local rental costs decrease.

Nationwide, the rate increases were not across the board. About 25 percent of BAH rates in relatively low-cost locations, such as Fort Campbell, Ky., will not increase at this time.

The new BAH rates for specific areas can be found online at www.dtic.mil/ perdiem/ bahform. html.

Also as a result of the Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act, the Thrift Savings Plan is another benefit military members will have to look forward to.

Once only offered to federal civilian employees, the TSP will eventually be available to service members as well.

"This plan reinforces the commitment we need to have to our military for the sacrifices they make on our behalf," Graham said.

If they enroll in the plan, active-duty and Reserve service members will be able to invest up to 5 percent of their pay and any special and incentive pays and bonuses they receive into the TSP.

The annual limit for investing will be $10,500.

This benefit is similar to private companies' 401(k) plans. Money invested into the TSP is from pretax dollars.

Investments and earnings in this plan are not taxed until they are withdrawn.

According to information taken from http://pay2000. dtic. mil/ home_thrft.html, there may be a limited matching fund program for the military TSP.

As a retention incentive, the plan may allow each service the discretion to match the contributions of up to 5 percent of pay for TSP members in certain hard-to-fill military specialties. The member would then have to commit to spend at least six years in his or her specialty.

It is estimated that service members will be able to enroll in the plan next fall and could begin investing in the TSP starting January 2002.

A CLOSER LOOK

- The new rates for an E-1 with dependents have increased by about $165.
- According to officials, these new rates can only go up. In the future, military members living off-post will not see a decline in their monthly housing allowance, even if local rental costs decrease.
- Nationwide, the rate increases were not across the board. About 25 percent of BAH rates in relatively low-cost locations will not increase at this time.

Blood supply dwindles, soldiers donate

Soldiers give nearly 3,000 pints of blood

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Last month's winter storms closed airports and made a mess of the highways, but they also left another problem that didn't blow away with the bad weather.

Business closures and tough travel forced the cancellation of blood drives in many parts of the country, leaving blood banks with a critical shortage of their lifesaving product.

"With bad weather, people are just hesitant about going out and giving blood," said Sandy Ethier, senior donor recruitment representative for the American Red Cross.

Recent history, however, suggests that the Red Cross has a significant resource to turn to locally as they work to meet the need for blood.

While the 200,000 residents of Muscogee County usually contribute around 5,600 pints of blood a year, Ethier said, Fort Benning's 25,000 soldiers contribute over 3,000 pints in the same period; rounding off, that's half the amount of blood with just one-tenth as many potential contributors.

As impressive as those numbers seem, the more impressive fact is that they mostly represent the contributions of a few units that have made the Red Cross a priority. Typically, said Ethier, a single battalion — 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, of the Basic Combat Training Brigade — collects 1,000 pints of blood a year, fully a third of the post total.

The 29th Inf. Regt. collects another 1,000 or so, for another third. And the 2nd Bn., 54th Inf Regt., Infantry Training Brigade, typically collects another 400. Those numbers, said Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander, are "a direct result of command interest and leadership."

They're also a result of the competitive instinct. At the 29th, the first and second battalions take turns coordinating the regiment's blood drives, said Col. Carter Ham, regiment commander, and "there's a very healthy competition between them. It's good-spirited, but it's done because the result is so important."

At 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., the extraordinary contributions to the Red Cross represent more than just a one-time chance to do something for others, said Lt. Col. Mike Burns, battalion commander.

For that unit's basic trainees, participation in a blood drive is also a tangible lesson in the real meaning of ideas like duty and selfless service.

"We tie giving blood to the army values," Burns said.

"When you were in basic," Burns asked, "How many times did you feel good about yourself? This is a chance to know that you're saving a life."

Le Moyne agrees that giving blood is a good lesson in values for soldiers.

"Service to nation, service to others," he said. "That's a very good analogy."

Still, Le Moyne added, it would be unfair to assume that units which make a smaller contribution in blood are less successful at serving their community; commanders all over the post put countless hours into good causes like Santa's Castle, AER, CFC, and support for local schools — not to mention the burdens of training soldiers for war and leading them through deployments.

"There's a limit to how much a human being can emphasize and push," Le Moyne said. "None of us can do everything."

Many units on post face another significant barrier to contributing blood: strict Red Cross rules on blood safety that often exclude soldiers who have deployed overseas. Due to changes in regulations regarding potential exposure to malaria, for example, many soldiers who have served outside the United States are prohibited from giving blood for several years, Ethier said.

Also, some active blood donors at Fort Benning aren't contributing to the Red Cross; the Army also collects a separate supply of blood on post for use by ill or injured soldiers.

Most of the 500 pints of blood used by Martin Army Community Hospital every year, said hospital blood bank supervisor Sheila Rudesheim, come from the Army's Camp Memorial Blood Center at Fort Knox, Ky.

In turn, Rudesheim said the center conducts quarterly blood drives at Fort Benning, collecting blood at the hospital and on Sand Hill.

Still, Rudesheim said, the Red Cross is as much of a resource to Fort Benning's soldiers as the soldiers are to the Red Cross. The post hospital regularly turns to the Red Cross as an emergency resource, receiving blood "at least once a month."

That number can change depending on the needs of the hospital's patients, Rudesheim said.

Recently, the Red Cross was providing blood and blood platelets to the hospital two or three times every week. Since they're a relatively fragile product, all of the blood platelets used by the hospital always come from the Red Cross.

The best part is that it's all free. Recognizing the contributions of Fort Benning's soldiers, the Red Cross doesn't charge the post hospital for blood.

For soldiers who need blood, the source isn't important — all that matters is that it's there when they need it.

Spc. Kimberly Forbes, A Co., 203rd Support Bn., gave birth to a little girl, Rhayne, Nov. 27. Her doctor told Forbes that her child would have to be delivered by Caesarean section, but there was another problem: she needed blood first.

"I've been anemic all my life," Forbes said. She received two pints, and her child was delivered with no more problems.

"If I hadn't gotten the blood I got," Forbes said, "I might not have made it through."

Local units go extra mile to help local Red Cross

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

There's a need, and it's being met. The new year was only a week old when Fort Benning soldiers began contributing blood to the Red Cross.

The first unit to host a blood drive on post this year was 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, where soldiers lined up last Sunday afternoon to trade blood for cookies and juice.

The training unit consistently contributes significantly more blood to the Red Cross than any other single battalion on post.

But other units were also in a hurry to do their part. When Lt. Col. Steven Hawley, battalion commander, 1st Bn., 50th Regt., Infantry Training Brigade, heard on the radio that the Red Cross is facing a critical post-holiday blood shortage, he turned to his soldiers to find volunteers.

He found them — but there was one problem: the bloodmobile was already booked. So the battalion found another way to make their contribution. 1st Lt. Jason Ballinger, executive officer, C Co., 1 Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., said that about 50 soldiers from the battalion would travel to the Red Cross blood center in Columbus to give blood this week.

BLOOD DRIVE

■ The 29th Infantry Regiment is sponsoring a blood drive Feb. 14 in Infantry Hall.

The 29th's 2nd Battalion is sponsoring the Feb. 14 drive, said Capt. John Jackson, commander, C Co., 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., and planning to alert every soldier in the regiment of the opportunity to contribute.

"It's stressed by every leader," Jackson said, "And time is made available to everyone."

Other blood drives planned for the coming months at Fort Benning are sponsored by the Army's Camp Memorial Blood Center, with the support of Martin Army Community Hospital.

Hospital blood bank supervisor Sheila Rudesheim said that the Camp Center's collection efforts, scheduled for March 9 and March 10 at the hospital and the Santiago Gym on Sand Hill, are expected to add at least 350 pints of blood to the Army's available supply.

Because of the inevitable no-shows and rules regarding blood safety, Rudesheim said, securing that many pints of blood will require officials to make at least 600 appointments with potential contributors.

Worldly education result of Bosnia deployment

Soldier learns life lessons while deployed

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

Last June when I was told I was going to Bosnia, I had no idea what to expect when I arrived. I had seen segments about Bosnia on the news, but didn't really give it much thought.

I had heard all of the terms — "Serbs," "Muslims," "Croats," "ethnic cleansing" — but didn't realize exactly how those terms fit into the lives of the 3.5 million refugees there.

Now I was going to find out more about these terms and just what had taken place in Bosnia-Herzogovina firsthand.

I've been in the Army for about eight years and had never deployed for more than 30 days at a time to cover training in foreign countries. I thought this was going to be my big adventure — deploying to a hazardous duty area for the first time.

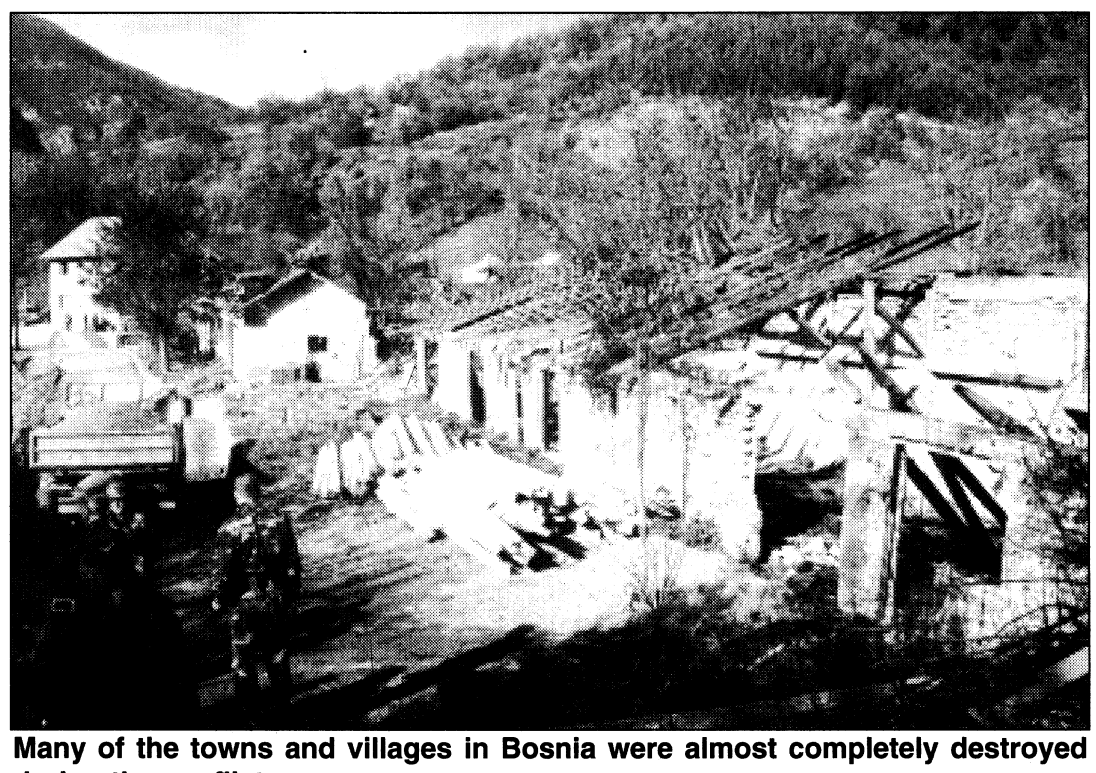
I served with the Stabilization Force in Sarajevo as a photojournalist. Seemed like a simple enough job since that's what I've been doing for the Army my whole career. But it turned out to be a little different than what I was used to.

Besides being my first time on a six-month deployment, it was also the first time I worked in a multinational environment with soldiers from across Europe. In my office, I worked with soldiers from France, Spain, Italy, Britain, Norway, and the Czech Republic, not to mention the other five nations represented in the Centralized Press Coalition Center.

It was a little overwhelming the first week just getting settled and trying to understand all of the accents of my new coworkers. Then things really began to get confusing as I started to ease into my job.

I was assigned to write stories about SFOR peacekeeping missions in the Southeast region of Bosnia and Croatia. This sounded like a real challenge as I read the list of nations I was to cover: Germany, Italy, France, Spain, Albania, Bulgaria, Greece and Portugal. I wondered just how I would communicate since I only "parlez" a little French.

The following months were such a learning experience though. I traveled to locations throughout all of Bosnia and Croatia. I saw and sometimes used military equipment from quite a few countries. As I met soldiers from almost every nation in the United Nations, I tried to take advantage of the deployment by learning basic phrases in their languages, I tried their native foods, we traded military paraphernalia and I also taught some of them more about America and the English language.



While we focused on writing about SFOR's role in Bosnia, I saw much of the country and met local people. It was great seeing so much of a really beautiful country and spending time with the people.

Along with the great parts to the job, I saw the real reason U.S. and other U.N. soldiers have been in Bosnia since 1993. We see fighting in other countries on the news each day, but you get a totally different perspective when you are there talking to the people who lived through it.

Sgt. Michael Maddox rappels with Italian soldiers in Sarajevo.

Many of the towns and villages in Bosnia were almost completely destroyed during the conflict.

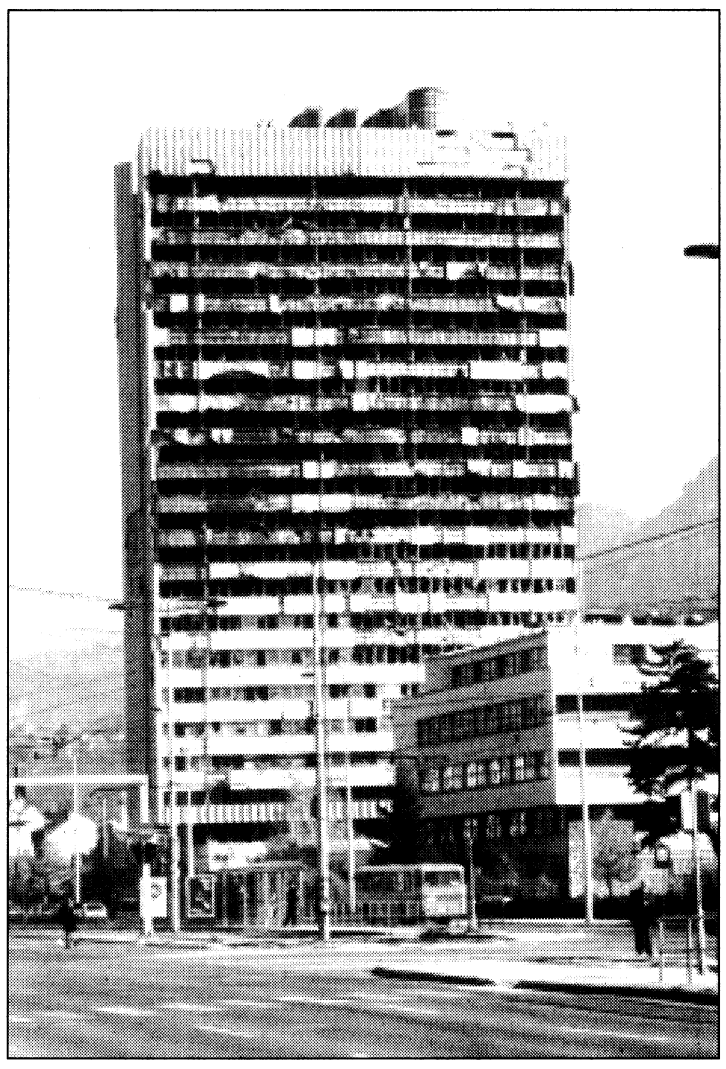
I remember once visiting a little girl who was the only child in her village; her father died in the war and her mother worked in another town to make money. The effects of the war were apparent in her as I watched her act shy and withdrawn.

I learned how the war began as the six ethnically diverse republics within the former Yugoslavia began to declare their independence. With this change there were also changes in the mind-set of the people — Bosnian Muslims wanted to see independence while the Bosnian Serbs didn't. War between fellow countrymen was the result.

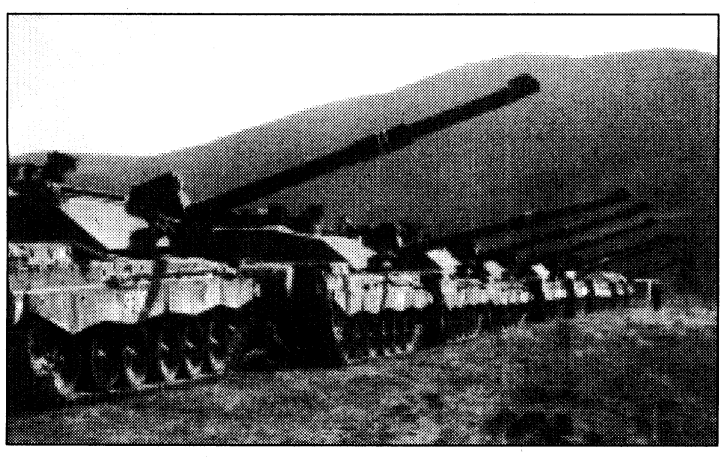
I saw how difficult it was for the people to rebuild their lives in the aftermath — a slow, tough process. I went to towns where only one family lived because no one else had returned. I saw homes still destroyed years after the war ended in December 1995 and more graves and cemeteries than I would have liked to.

I saw how far they still have to go to have a "normal" life as the ethnic groups still live by segregating themselves from others. I also learned the feelings that started the war are still present as houses of returnees would sometimes be vandalized in the night.



In the face of all of that, I noticed the Bosnian people still tried to go on with life and even found time to share a story, a snack of whatever food they had or a drink of coffee or homemade alcohol with us.

It was strange to me how accepting they were of having foreign soldiers in their country to promote peace among the people.



Each time I would stay and visit with the people, I couldn't help but wonder how they could be so strong and able to accept the recent past.

Now I'm back home and have time to reflect on all of the things I experienced as a result of my deployment. There were ups and downs the entire six months, but it was something I wouldn't trade for anything.

Like I said, it was going to be my big adventure, and that's just what it turned out to be. Not only that, it was a great learning experience that I will remember for years to come.

Some buildings in Sarajevo, like the government center, stand unrepaired as a reminder of the war.

British tanks wait for the order to move. To stay prepared for any situation they may face, SFOR soldiers regularly conduct training exercises.

Another reminder of the recent past are the many full cemeteries found in each town.

Family members to get new dental plan

New program takes effect in February

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A message on his December leave and earning statement telling him his dependent dental care program had stopped Dec. 1 had Fort Benning's top dentist shaking his head.

"I saw this remark on my LES, and it made no sense at all," said Col. David Clem, Dental Activity commander.

Clem was not alone. Service members in the Army and Air Force enrolled in the Tricare Active Duty Family Member Dental Plan received similar messages, said Vicki Trott, customer service representative with United Concordia, the plan's contractor.

"We received a lot of calls, and we told them not to worry, they were still covered," Trott said.

Clem also took action and sent out an e-mail message Jan. 3 to units addressing any confusion about the erroneous message and explaining changes in the family member dental plan that will go into effect next month when the new Tricare Dental Program kicks off.

The current Tricare Active Duty Family Member Dental Plan will terminate Jan. 31.

The next day, Feb. 1, the Tricare Dental Program goes into effect.

United Concordia, the current contractor, has been selected to administer the new program.

The new plan combines the current Tricare Family Member Dental Plan and the Tricare Selected Reserve Dental Program.

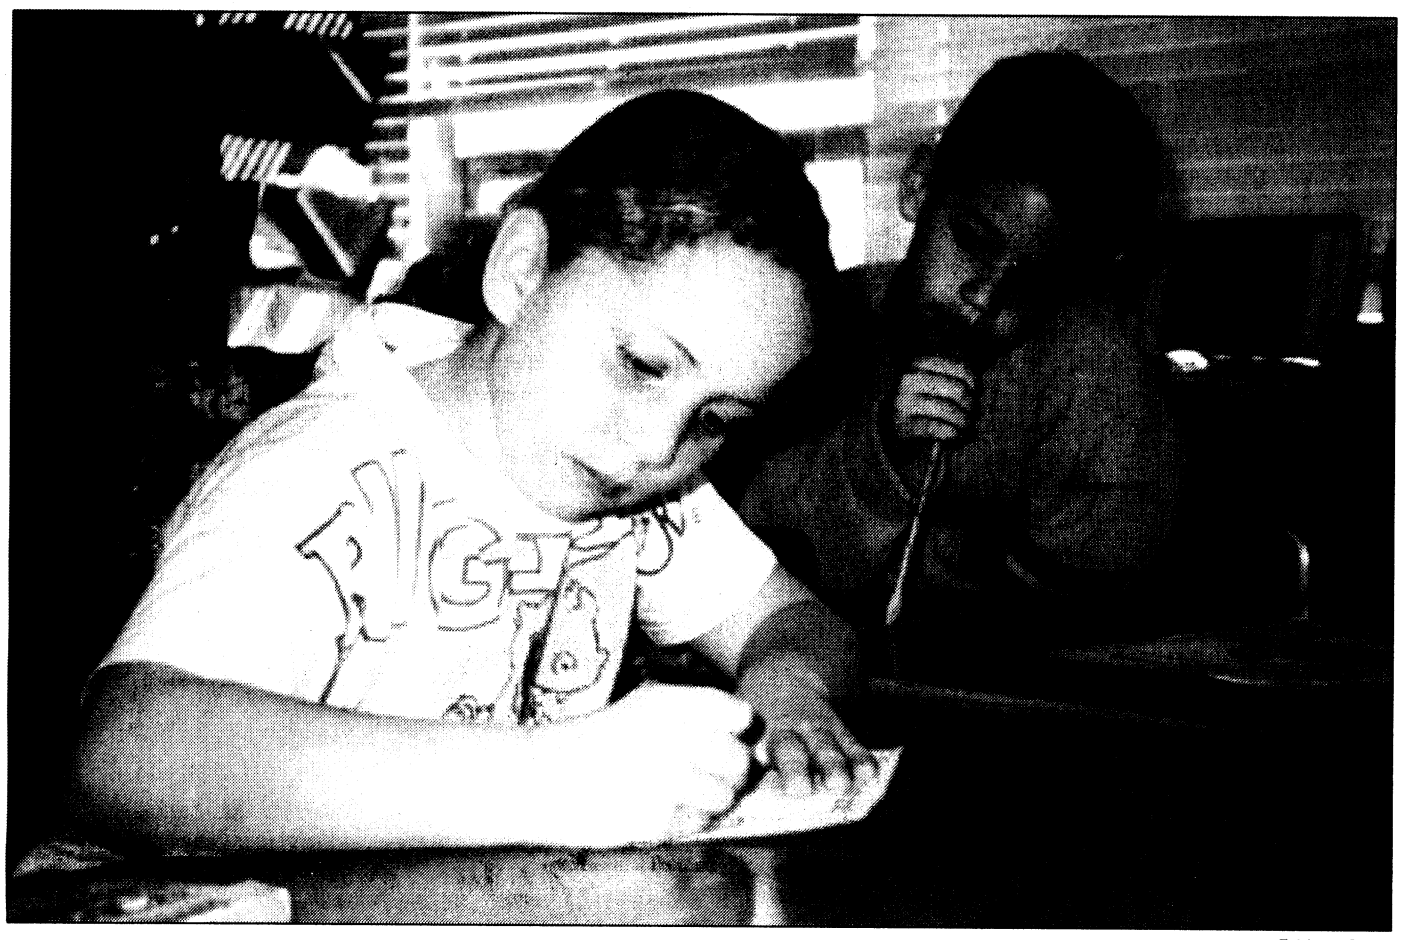
The move will create the world's largest dental benefits plan, serving more than 1.6 million members, according United Concordia.

In recent weeks, family members have been receiving beneficiary identification cards and booklets explaining their coverage.

Personnel currently enrolled in the old program will automatically be converted to the Tricare Dental Program.

"If you are already enrolled, you have absolutely nothing to do," Clem said.

Personnel wishing to the enroll their family members will no longer go through their personnel action office. Applications must be submitted directly to United Concordia. Forms may be picked up at dental treatment facilities, Health Benefit Advisors or personnel offices. Applications can be mailed to the address listed.



On Feb. 1 United Concordia will start accepting Tricare Dental Program enrollment applications via its Web site. Members choosing to enroll online must provide their credit card information for payment of the initial premium.

To enroll, call 1-888-622-2256 for forms or visit the Web site at www.UCCI.com.

"Requests should be done now because of a potential 30- to 60-day delay in processing," Clem said.

For information on enrollment and billing, call 1-888-622-6656 or 1-800-866-8499.

Leslie Haro vividly remembers her first year of school at White Elementary. That was eight years ago, and the 5-year-old had just moved with her family from Equador to Fort Benning where her father served as guest instructor at the U.S. Army School of Americas for one year.

"I was in kindergarten and I couldn't speak English," Leslie said. "It was weird. I couldn't express myself. I couldn't make friends. I wouldn't get out of the car every morning because I was afraid."

The Haro family returned to Fort Benning in 1999 when Col. Patricio Haro was named assistant commandant of the school. Now a 13-year-old eighth-grader at Faith Middle School, Leslie said she still experiences some difficulties with pronunciation and grammar, but she's grown to love her second home, and someday she hopes to move here permanently.

"Here in the U.S. the economy is good, and I will have better opportunities. My dad told me people risk their lives to come to this country," she said. "Once you get past the language barrier, it's a great place to be."

Like Leslie, Zoraida Roman also moved to the U.S. when she was 5, unable to speak English. That was 1960, and the Puerto Rico native started kindergarten the year her family arrived in Chicago.

With no programs in place to accommodate foreign students, Roman had great difficulty adjusting to school. As a result, she said her reading and writing skills suffered throughout her education.

Now fluently versed in English and several Spanish dialects, Roman is determined to make the transition easier for her own students. She teaches English as a Second Language (ESL) classes at White Elementary School on Fort Benning.

White has the majority of elementary-age students who accompany their parents who are attending the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. At the beginning of the school year, 84 foreign students registered at White, representing 14 countries, mostly in Latin America.

Many of these new students have never before set foot in the U.S., and cannot speak English at all. Others have a very basic command of the language and are labeled Limited English Proficient (LEP).

Roman spends between an hour and a half to two hours with these students each day, teaching them at individual levels as they progress from basic vocabulary words and phrases to reading and writing in English. The rest of the school day is spent in regular classrooms where the foreign students are often paired with a

Center provides free tax help

Tax filing made easier through service

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Tax Center will begin offering free processing of 1040EZ income tax returns Wednesday for active-duty military personnel, the local community's retired military and family members.

The 1040EZ returns will be the first priority through the month of January.

The center will accept returns on the federal and state level starting Feb. 1.

One goal of the tax center program is to eliminate the need for soldiers to go off post and use rapid refund tax centers, said Capt. Aimee Hobby, installation tax officer.

She added clients often end up spending some of their refund money needlessly to pay for these services.

"That's a lot of money out of a soldier's pocket," Hobby said. "We try to direct them to come and use our services for free."

Sgt. Sean O'Neill, 17th Air Support Operations Squadron, has gone to the tax office for the past two years and plans to use the income tax services again this year.

"They did a very thorough job," he said. "We've always had our return quickly and appreciate the service and help from the people who are there."

For those interested in this service, there are some guidelines to help the process run more smoothly.

The tax center does not accept appointments.

"It's on a first-come, first-serve basis," Hobby said. Clients who anticipate complicated returns should arrive at the center early in the day.

They should bring with them their military identification, tax returns from last year, social security cards for themselves and any dependents, and all W-2 forms from employers and 1099 forms from banks.

If one spouse is deployed and the remaining spouse has power of attorney, documentation of this authority should be brought to the tax office as well.

For clients who own property, Hobby suggests they write up the total amounts spent on repairs and improvements of their home and bring these figures in when filing tax returns.

She said it is always good to keep receipts, but they don't have to be brought into the tax office.

Direct deposit of refunds is available if clients bring in a voided bank check when filing their returns.

The center electronically files all federal forms and will electronically process as many state forms as possible. Currently more than 30 states have the capability to accept "e-filing."

Hobby said it usually takes about two or three weeks to get a refund from electronically filed forms.

The tax center has access to federal and state forms so those who are interested in doing their own taxes can also go there to pick up the necessary paperwork.

The soldiers and volunteers who work at the center are directly trained by the Internal Revenue Service.

Hours for the center are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

The tax center has also moved to a new location, Building 2826.

It's now on Sightseeing Road, across from the Main Post Bowling Center and next to the Bernheim Dental Clinic.

There is limited handicap parking at Building 2826.

Other motorists should park across the street at the bowling center.

The last day to electronically file at the center will be April 13. The deadline for paper filing is April 16.

For more information, contact the tax center at 545-4267.

Survival class teaches new parents coping strategies

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

If you're a new parent, don't despair. There is a crash course out there to help you learn the basics of taking care of your little one.

The New Parent Support First Steps Program will sponsor the next "Survival Class for New Moms and Dads" from 6:30 to 8 p.m. Thursday at Martin Army Community Hospital. Currently, this free course is offered every other month.

"It's about teaching new parents coping strategies for the crucial adjustment period," said Juliette Blakely, coordinator for the program. Blakely said it can take up to a year for a family to adapt to the presence of a new infant.

Trained program volunteers will facilitate the course. Topics addressed will include learning proper nutrition for both mother and child, and handling sleep deprivation and fussy infants.

The presence of a new baby may also compound stresses that are present in most families, said Rebecca Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, Army Community Service.

These include circumstances like financial problems, the deployment of one parent, or family members who are sick.

The program will give parents helpful information and resources for dealing with these situations, Welch said.

"(The course) will assist parents in developing and using the appropriate coping mechanisms while enhancing their parenting skills," she said. "We let them know there are other people they can call on when they need referrals to community resources."

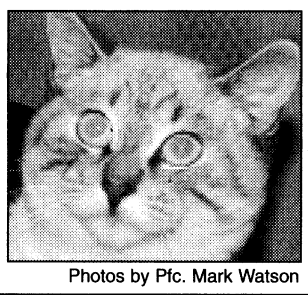
Post resident Mary Villanueva took the course last October, about a month prior to the birth of her son. She said out of all the classes she and her husband attended, this one was the most useful.

"It was a really good class," she said. "They put out practical, useful information."

Villanueva said she learned helpful tips like how to swaddle and comfort a baby.

"Most new mothers need those little tidbits of information that you don't find in books," she said. "There was also a lot of information about Fort Benning resources."

The class will be held in the Regimental Conference Room on the second floor of the hospital. Parents are invited to bring their newborns to the class as well.



Those interested in attending the class must register in advance. There are 20 spots available. Call the First Steps office at 544-2020 to register or for more information.

Those interested in volunteering for the program should also contact this number. The office welcomes suggestions for class topics.

"It's a good time for a new family to get a start on the right foot," Blakely said.

Q: Is there going to be a place on-post where we go to get our taxes done? If so, how much is it going to cost and what to we need to bring with us to file?

A: This year the Fort Benning Tax Center has a new location. It is now located in Building 2826. Building 2826 is on Sightseeing Road, across from the Main Post Bowling Center and next to Bernheim Dental Clinic.

The tax center will be open for business on Jan. 17. For the month of January, the center will process 1040EZ tax returns only. Starting Feb. 1, the center will process all federal and state income tax returns. However, if the demand for 1040EZ assistance is low, the center may begin processing more complicated returns before Feb. 1.

Tax center services are available to all soldiers, retirees and their family members. All clients are seen on a first-come, first-serve basis.

The center will operate from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. The schedule fills quickly, especially for complicated returns, so arrive early.

The telephone number to the tax center will be 545-4267.

Although there is some limited handicap parking available, there is no other parking at Building 2826. Soldiers are directed to park at the Bowling Center and cross the street to the tax center.

Bring the following documents with you for accurate completion of your income tax return:

• If you filed a Form 1040EZ last year, bring: Last year's federal income tax return; all W-2 (wage and earning statements); and all Form 1099 (interest statements from banks).

• If you filed a Form 1040A last year, bring: Last year's federal income tax return; all W-2 (wage and earning statements); all Form 1099 (interest statements from banks); Social Security Numbers for all dependents you are claiming on this year's tax return; information on child care expenses you paid last year; and information on Individual Retirement Accounts if you did or plan to contribute this year.

• If you filed a Form 1040 last year, bring: Last year's federal income tax return; all W-2 (wage and earning statements); all Form 1099 (interest statements from banks); Social Security Numbers for all dependents you are claiming on this year's tax return; information on child care expenses you paid last year; and information on Individual Retirement Accounts if you did or plan to contribute this year; mortgage interest statement (if any); alimony information (copy of divorce or separation agreement); and any other financial information for the tax year (e.g., investment statements, rental report, medical expenses, charitable contribution records, etc.)

As always, if you are using a power of attorney to file a tax return for someone else, you must bring the original power of attorney with you.

Sometimes the IRS holds your tax refund longer than expected.

In the past many people have questioned why this is so.

The IRS has listed the top three reasons why this happens: soldier provides the wrong Social Security numbers for his family members; soldier lists wife's married name on tax return, but wife has not officially changed her name with the Social Security Administration; and soldier does not include all wage and earning statements on his return.

When these problems occur the IRS must double check their records and, in many cases, ask for additional or correct information from the Soldier. Please be sure you have the correct Social Security numbers (bringing the Social Security cards for each of your dependents will prevent this problem.) and all wage and earning statements (W-2 forms) when you come to file your return.

The Defense Finance and Accounting Service plans to mail all calendar year 2000 Army W-2 forms by midmonth January.

Some year-end adjustments will not be included in the original W-2 but will be included in a corrected W-2 (Form W-2C). Review the documents you receive to ensure they are correct and include all adjustments. Do not file your tax return until you have received all W-2 and W-2C forms.

If you have reason to believe individual W-2 forms do not include all pertinent information and you do not receive W-2C forms, you can call your servicing finance office.

Separated soldiers can call Military Pay customer service, toll-free, at (888) PAY-ARMY or commercial (317) 510-2800.

In addition to the W-2 for wages, you will receive an additional W-2 if you: Had a do-it-yourself (DITY) move; participated in the Student Loan Repayment Plan; filed a Public Law 220 Claim; filed an Army Board of Corrections Claim.

These nonwage items are not reflected on your final 2000 Leave and Earnings Statement. Also, adjustments effected by Combat Zone Tax Exclusion entitlements may also not appear on the final LES.

Soldiers should not use their final LES to file taxes. To file taxes at the Fort Benning Tax Center we must have an actual W-2. We will not accept an LES.

This year's Army National Guard W-2s and Student Loan Repayment Plan W-2s will be sent to the U.S. Property and Fiscal Offices for distribution.

Army Reserve personnel will continue to receive W-2s mailed to their address of record, as they did last year.

For assistance with Army pay or LES problems, soldiers should first contact their servicing finance office. If that doesn't work, they can call the DFAS-Indianapolis Military Pay customer service hotline at (888) PAY-ARMY, DSN 699-2800 or commercial (317) 510-2800.

For more information, call 545-3281.

Woodlands teach children to appreciate environment

Penny Wilson
McBride Elementary School

Take a walk on the nature trail behind McBride Elementary School on any given weekday and you will likely encounter students who are actively engaged in outdoor education activities.

A schoolwide thematic unit called the Woodlands allows students to connect learning to their environment.

Students are enriching and expanding their basic curriculum knowledge while learning about the ecosystem that surrounds McBride.

Currently, first- through third-grade students are working on a "tree adoption" project.

Students, working in pairs, choose a tagged tree to report on in their journals. Students make observations about the tree and record the findings in their journal.

Their observations include descriptions and details about the foliage, bark and roots. They note the ground area around the tree and record any evidence of insect or animal appearances. Students also name their tree.

Michael Young, a second-grader, said he chose his tree because, "It had golden leaves and baby branches that are still growing."

Students will periodically revisit the adopted trees and record in their journal any changes they have observed.

By revisiting their tree, students are able to recognize the life cycle of plants and understand the changes that occur in them over a period of time throughout the seasons.

Caitlin Croft, second-grade, predicted, "My tree will change. In the summer it will have lots of leaves on it."

McBride's nature trail offers a setting where learning is fun and meaningful. McBride's teachers and students are making the most of this natural learning environment.

McBride students learn about Christmas in other cultures

McBride Elementary School

The second-grade classes at McBride Elementary School learned how the people in different countries celebrate Christmas.

They focused on Germany, England, France, Italy, the Czech Republic, Mexico, and Holland.

They studied how the people in Hawaii celebrate Christmas somewhat differently than the people in the "main" part of the United States.

The children also learned about Kwanzaa, as well as Hanukkah.

While learning about the various traditions, the students were able to compare and contrast the customs, taste various foods, create holiday decorations and view some of the different decorations that are used in the countries around the world.

The second-graders tasted lebkuchen and gingerbread as well as other traditional holiday foods.

They had an opportunity to see nutcrackers, wooden shoes, wreaths, poinsettias and advent calendars.

The students stayed busy by creating holiday items like windmills, bells, poinsettias, advent wreaths, and learning to say merry Christmas in the different languages.

Students present holiday program

McBride Elementary School

Every year at this time McBride Elementary's second- and third-graders present their holiday program under the guidance of their music teacher, Peggy Anders.

A lot of preparation goes into getting a show ready.

"We began practicing back in late October. The students who were involved in the speaking roles had to attend several after-school rehearsals, the scenery had to be created, and the chorus had to practice the songs to be sung in between the scenes," Anders said.

The show was presented Dec. 12 at McBride Elementary School.

After seeing the program, it was easy to see how hard the students had worked this year to put on a wonderful show.

It was so nice seeing the pride on the parents' faces as they watched their children during the program.

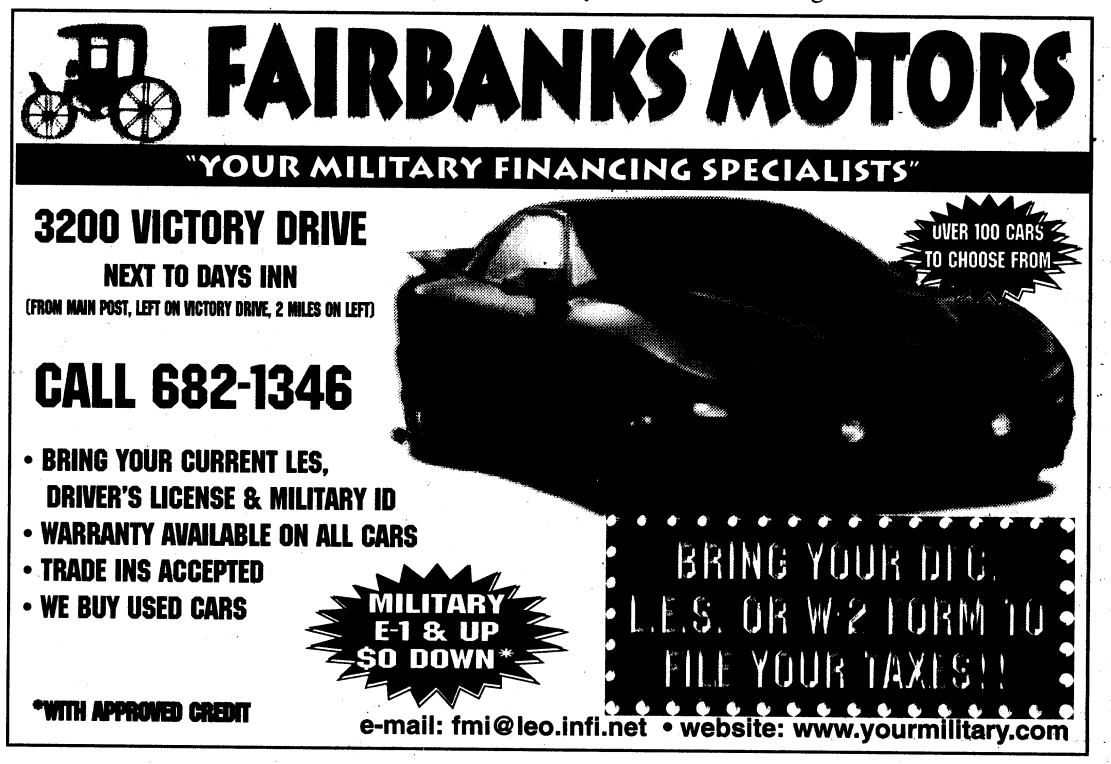
This year's production, Santa's Double Trouble, was a spin off of the ever-popular How the Grinch Stole Christmas. The audience was delighted as the chorus sang songs that went along with the storyline.

The students who had speaking parts did a wonderful job of entertaining the audience.

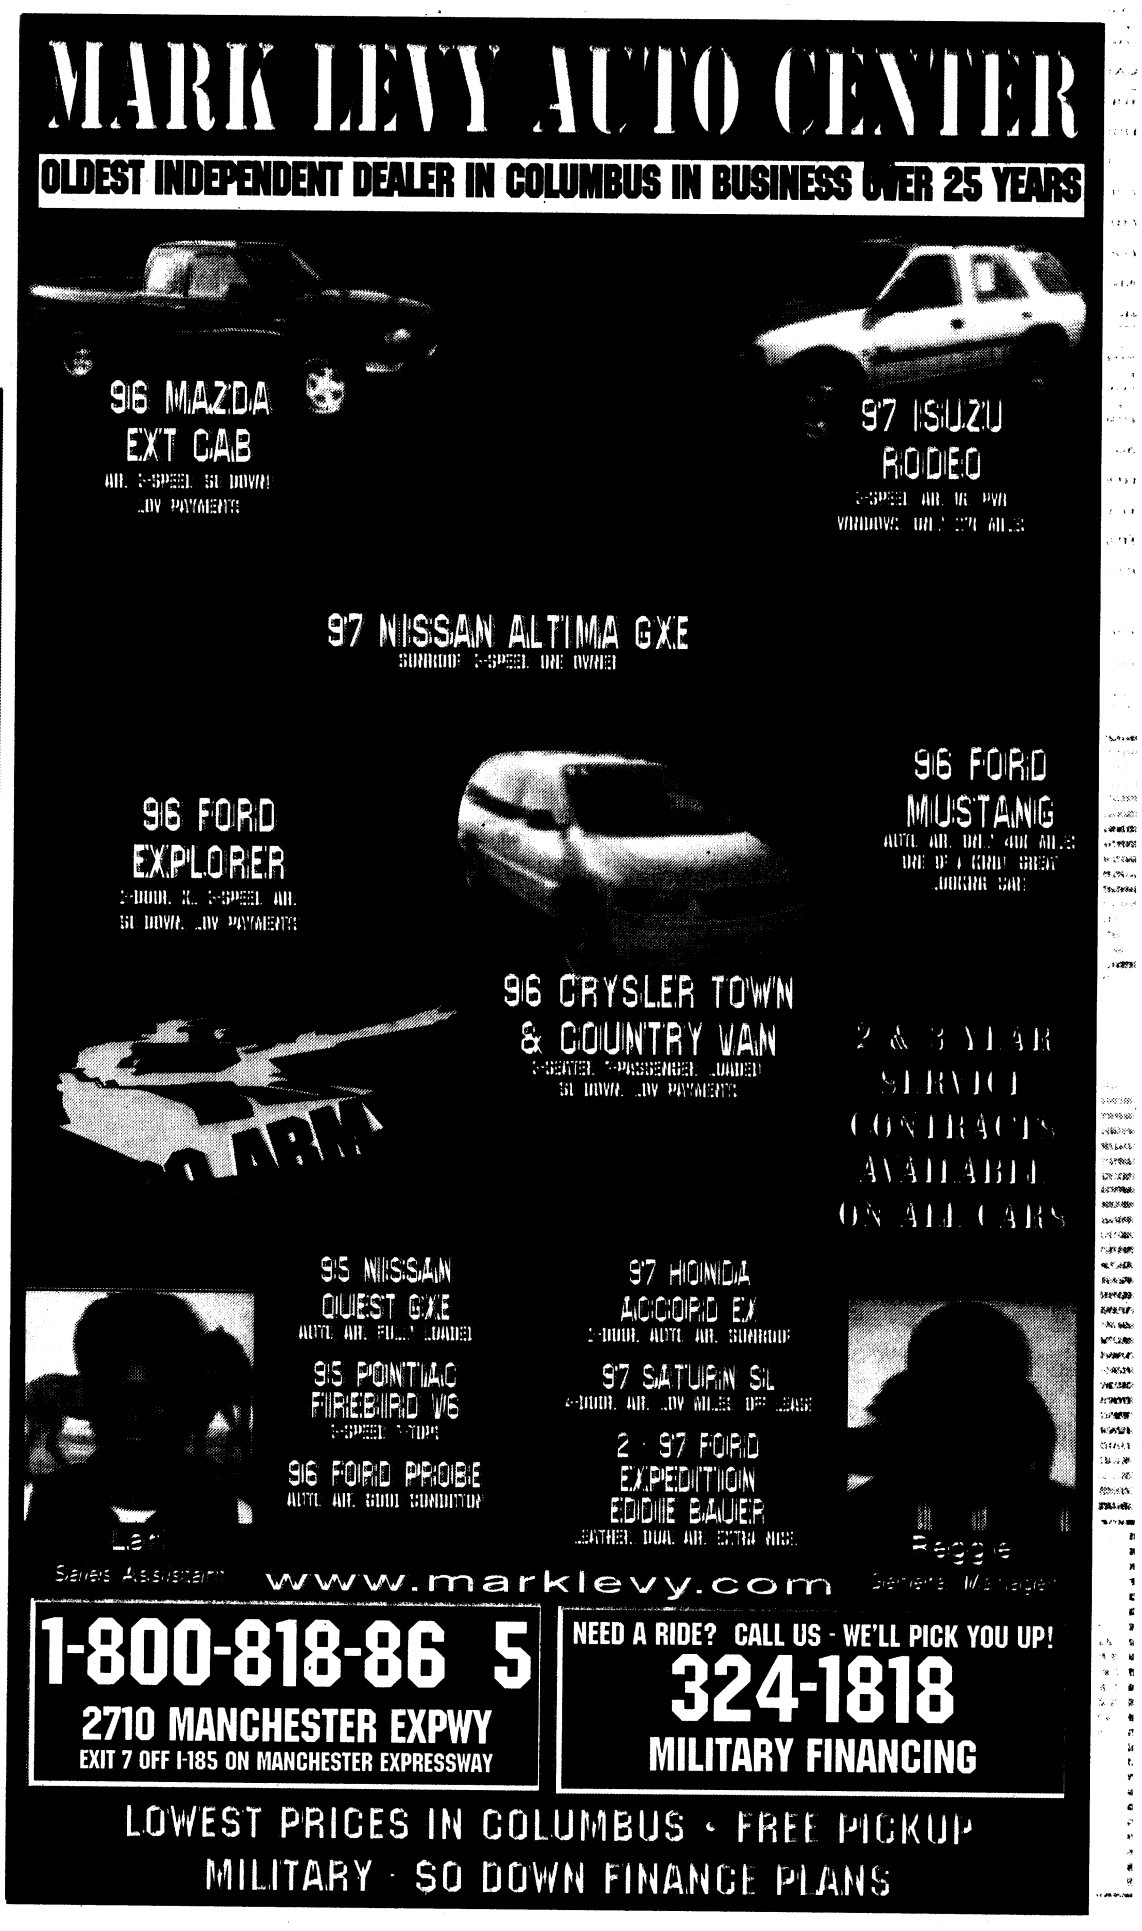
You could feel the holiday spirit in the air as the students, parents, and teachers gathered together for the evening.

This performance is one that everyone who had the opportunity to be a part of will remember for a long time.

Natascha Galena-Vasquez, who was one of the elves, said, "I liked this play because everyone was really nice to work with. We had a great time putting it all together. I think this year's was one of the best!"



Austin Geise played the character of Santa. He was very entertaining and seemed to really enjoy his role.



"This play was so much fun. I loved playing Santa," he said.

"I thought the scenery was beautiful. I liked watching Santa. He was good," said Telharsha McNair, a chorus member.

"I played the part of Buster in the play. I was a little nervous but I was happy to perform for my family," said Steven Campbell.

"I thought it was a good play. I got to give the flowers to Mrs. Anders at the end of the play. I was a little embarrassed because I had never done that before," Adam Wood said. "I thought the speaking parts and the songs were great."

Lack of daylight during season can lead to SAD

Patricia Simoes
Army News Service

People who feel depressed only in the winter may have a Seasonal Affective Disorder known as winter depression or winter blues.

"SAD is a layman term used to describe what psychologists diagnose as major depressive episodes that present with a seasonal pattern," said Maj. Novella C. Williams, chief of adult behavioral health at Walter Reed Army Medical Center. "In most cases the depression begins in fall or winter and remits in the spring."

Symptoms of SAD include excessive eating and sleeping, craving for sugary and starchy foods and lack of energy, Williams said.

"The best way of dealing with the winter blues is to promote awareness among soldiers," Williams said. "People must understand the importance of staying active during the winter."

She recommends "getting out and doing things that bring joy." People should maintain their workout routines, be outdoors and enjoy as much daylight as they can, and have normal social activities, she said.

SAD may be linked to the shortness of the days and the lack of light during the winter, Williams said.

She added it's especially prevalent in Alaska and areas with short winter daylight hours.

"Depression is definitely an issue here," said Col. Victor C. Bell, a psychologist at the Bassett Army Community Hospital at Fort Wainwright, Alaska.

The long nights, cold weather, small houses and lack of shopping malls affects the mood of soldiers and their families, he said.

Some medical experts have linked melatonin, a sleep-related hormone, to SAD.

This hormone, which may cause symptoms of depression, is produced at increased levels in the dark, so people feel depressed when the days are shorter and darker, according to the National Mental Health Association.

The most common treatment for SAD is phototherapy or bright light therapy, which has been shown to suppress the brain's secretion of melatonin, according to the National Mental Health Association.

There are two light therapy devices at Fort Wainwright.

Although there have been no research findings to definitely link this therapy with an anti-depressant effect, many people respond to this treatment, according to the association.

If phototherapy doesn't work or if it's not available, an anti-depressant drug may reduce or eliminate the symptoms, Bell said.

About 5 percent of the American population may have winter depression, and another 10 to 20 percent may have a mild case of the depression, according to the American Academy of Family Physicians.

In the United States, instances of SAD are more common the farther north one goes. For instance, SAD is seven times more common in the state of Washington than in Florida, according to the academy.

SAD is more common in women and in people in their 20s and 30s, but it's unclear if the statistic is meaningful, Williams said.

The term SAD can also be used for recurrent summer depressive episodes, Williams said, but it's more commonly used for episodes associated with the beginning of the fall or winter season.

Program: Helps students better English language skills

"buddy" who acts as a guide, and when possible, an interpreter. Studies indicate the quickest and most efficient way for students to learn English is to gradually "immerse" them in classes where they are forced to communicate in English.

Roman believes this method works well without placing undue stress on young students who are already dealing with culture shock.

"ESL is not a bilingual class," Roman said. "I teach in English. It's not a crutch that will keep them from grasping the English language. It's taught in such a way that anyone can learn. We simply start with basic vocabulary words like 'book' or 'desk.'

"For the most part they learn very quickly and by the end of the year, the little ones are progressing to phonics and some of the older ones are reading. But without any sort of class to give them this foundation, it's simply sink or swim, like when I was a child," she added. For most of these students, one or two years in the U.S. will have little impact on their education in the long run. But many have come to the U.S. to stay. In most cases their fathers or stepfathers serve in the U.S. Army and have moved their families from places like Germany or Puerto Rico. For these students, learning to speak, read and write in English is imperative if they hope to continue their education in the U.S.

Zulmarie Matos is one such student. The second-grader moved from Puerto Rico with her mother and stepfather in October.

Like her classmates, the 7-year-old, blue-eyed blonde loves pizza and french fries. And she enjoys her PlayStation with her new friend Latonya Burt. But Latonya doesn't speak Spanish, and Zulmarie doesn't speak English.

"We don't speak, but we can still play together," said Zulmarie, with the help of an interpreter. "She's my new best friend."

Still, Zulmarie misses her friends in Puerto Rico. Though she said she wasn't frightened at the prospect of moving to the U.S., she hopes to return to her native country one day so she can "understand what everybody is saying to me."

Zulmarie is fortunate to have two hours with Roman each day and her own interpreter in her regular classroom.

Michael Velez was born in the U.S., the son of Puerto Rican parents. He spent his early years in an English-speaking daycare center, but learned to speak Spanish at home. Now the 7-year-old often serves as interpreter for his classmates. He sits next to Zulmarie and translates instructions when necessary.

"When she got here, I had to tell her everything. I could tell she was frightened, but I would be too if I couldn't speak the language," Michael said. "But now she's starting to understand a lot more. She's already learned her colors and how to count in English."

Coming to the U.S. presents additional challenges for middle school students. Latin American countries begin their school year in January and end it in December, so students who register at Faith Middle School in August are "set back" half a year academically. When they return to their country, they're considered half a year behind their classmates and often are required to repeat a grade.

"It's something we're looking at now, to see what can be done to accommodate these students," said Dr. Kim Crowell, vice principal at Faith. "Students who are registering right now are being placed in the middle of the grade they just completed in their country. In many cases that's not necessarily a bad thing since there is a language barrier, but it presents a problem when they return to their home."

Like White, Faith offers ESL classes for beginning, intermediate and advance level students, but the majority of the school day is spent in regular classrooms. ESL students do not receive grades like their classmates. Instead they receive an evaluation on their progress and efforts.

"It wouldn't be fair to actually give them grades in subjects like literature or English when they can't speak the language," said Alice Martin, who has taught ESL at Faith for 14 years. "But they do amazingly well. For the most part they come in here embracing the opportunity to learn. They're motivated, and they take advantage of the time they have here to experience a new culture and learn a new language."

Martin has taught students from 38 countries and 16 different languages. But she speaks only English.

"I've found if you really want to communicate with someone you find a way," she said. "Very rarely do we have a problem understanding one another."

Martin said she feels a special obligation to those students who will remain in the U.S.

"They want to go to college just like everybody else, but it takes five or six years at the very least to master the language. The English language is one of the most difficult languages in the world."

King set example worthy of following

Chaplain (Maj.) David Norvell
3rd Infantry Brigade

reflections

Make your personal theme for observing the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday, "Remember, follow and lead."

When you look closely at him as a man, his message, his movement and his ministry you can do no less. Read something he said, wrote or what has been written about him during these next few days.

Everyone should find challenge and motivation from King's story. Find greater purpose, meaning and value for your life by observing his.

He was not superhuman or saintly, rather a man seeking to right a wrong and help his fellow man. His vision and dream grew out of his early religious teachings. Though some accused him of deserting the pulpit and entering politics, he never moved far from his early calling.

As late as May 22, 1967 he said, "When I took up the cross, I recognized its meaning ... the cross is something that you bear, and ultimately that you die on." He saw himself and his actions in the context of serving and doing God's will. He suffered and spent his life for a greater good and an unselfish goal.

His practical application of the principles of faith, hope and love filled his messages and prompted the direction of the movement he led. King remained a preacher and a prophet who saw the message of love including civil rights and dignity for all. His sermon of hope reached below the poverty level and lifted generations of children toward undreamed of opportunities. His prayers of faith called for boldness to stand up, speak up, sit in and march.

Compare King's life to the great Jewish leader, Moses, of whom it was said, "By faith he left Egypt not fearing the wrath of the king; for he endured, as seeing him who is unseen." Moses led a great nation from bondage to freedom.

During his short adult life, King led many towards a light of hope. Over these many years he led many more of us towards openness and a real faith. He stepped out of the crowd, moved to the front and led.

As a child from the 50s and young person from the 60s, I can now look back and realize how brave King was. He stood balanced on a giant wave energized with the hopes and dreams of millions, yet he realized he walked in an imperfect world filled with hate, ignorance, selfishness and stubborn blindness.

He dared to believe the promised land was not just from the Old Testament story of Israel nor the hope of heaven to come, but a promise for here and now, as people allowed their higher calling to rule and reign.

We have truly made great strides in racial and cultural relationships in the last 40 years, but there is still much that can be done. Ministers, Christians, people of all faiths and cultures can help make our nation great.

As an ever increasing culturally diverse nation we have the opportunity to show the world what truly being human means. We can move out of our comfort zone and learn from others. We can rise above our personal worlds and see new horizons.

We can practice our faith through caring, helping, listening and teaching. We can build character into our personal lives and pass virtues on to our children. We can change the world. You can impact your world.

King's focused life, compassion for the downtrodden, contagious vision, holy boldness and premature death draws a line in the sand daring you to follow.

Will you step across and accept the challenge?

Counseling can help binge eaters

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Feasting is an American tradition. Americans stuff themselves with turkey at Thanksgiving and ham at Christmas; gorge themselves with candy on Valentine's Day, Mother's Day and Halloween; gulp down pizza and chili dogs during games; and pig out at barbecues and fish frys on the Fourth of July and Labor Day.

Since many Americans don't exercise as they should, no wonder Americans are getting fat.

Fad diets are not the way to lose excess weight.

Nutritionally balanced meals in moderate proportions and 30 minutes of vigorous exercise a day are far better ways to lose weight.

Binge eaters rapidly gulp down food beyond the point of feeling full two or more times a week. They eat even when they are not hungry.

Once they start eating they don't stop, sometimes for days at a time. They often start diets, but with little success.

Unlike anorexics, bingers do not fast or excessively exercise to lose weight. Unlike bulimics and anorexics, bingers do not seek to purge by regurgitation, laxatives, diuretics or enemas.

Binge eaters may eat alone because of embarrassment. Their weight gain and eating habits interfere with their relationships with other people, their work and their ability to feel good about themselves.

They feel self-loathing about themselves and disgust about their weight gain and body shape. They often feel depressed, anxious, guilty and ashamed.

Scripture often associates gluttony (binge eating) with alcohol addiction (Deuteronomy 21:20, Proverbs 23:20-21 and Luke 7:34). The recovery process for bingers follows the methods used to treat other addictions.

Are your eating habits causing you to be embarrassed, disgusted, depressed, anxious, guilty and ashamed?

Counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or send an e-mail to USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Soldier's son trains for college baseball

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Soldiers' Baseball Association not only provides an athletic outlet for players on post, it has given at least one military family member the opportunity to test his skills at the college level.

After pitching and playing outfield for the Cannons, one of the recently revived post summer teams, Mike Young, 19, is now training to pitch for Columbus State University.

"He had a great grade-point average, good SAT scores and a strong arm, the perfect mix for a college player," said Capt. Ed Gawlik, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Gawlik should know. He coached Young last summer when he played for the Cannons.

It was Gawlik's dream to bring baseball back to post, after a 24-year absence. He started with the formation of the Benning Baseball Club last summer. There was such a large turn-out of interested players, two teams were formed, the Cannons and the Bombers. It was also Gawlik's hope that organized baseball on post could help some younger players improve their skills and give them a place to showcase their talents for college baseball recruiters.

So far, this situation has worked out well for Young. Prior to joining the Cannons, Young did not play ball for his high school team. He was playing in a recreational league, but said he did not feel challenged.

"I wanted to have the opportunity to play at a higher level," he said.

His dad, a drill sergeant on Sand Hill, told him about the baseball club and Young decided to give it a shot.

Gawlik put Young on the mound and liked what he saw.

"He needed some work but that's to be expected at that age," Gawlik said.

Gawlik said he felt Young could compete on the college level. He had him play outfield as well, to develop his fielding skills even more and set him apart from other pitchers.

Young said he enjoyed being a part of the team and appreciated the experience he gained as a Cannon pitcher and outfielder.

"I was playing at a higher level. The hitters knew how to hit better and the pitchers knew how to pitch better," Young said.

He said this experience helped him when he tried out for CSU's team.

"He did good enough to prove to us that we need to take a better look at him," said Greg Appleton, CSU baseball coach.

Young will be redshirted for this season so CSU can have an extra year to strengthen his skills.

"We'll see how he develops," Appleton said. "Hopefully he'll keep getting better and will be able to help us in the future."

As for the future of baseball on post, Gawlik is planning tryouts for the summer league this March.

The league is open to active-duty, Reservists, National Guard members and family members over age 18.

For more information, contact Gawlik at 545-2734.

Sonics, Lakers face off in season opener

Children start YS basketball Saturday

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

The hoops were lowered but the youths spirits still soared as Sonics' Deivan Washington gave his team an 8-2 victory over the Lakers in the 6- to 7-year-old Youth Services Basketball game Saturday in the YS gym.

Washington scored all eight of the Sonics' points, six of which came in the second half of the season opener.

The game was a learning experience for the teams, both coaches said.

The game began with a bang for the Sonics as Washington stole the ball and drove down court scoring the first two points of the game.

From there it was a see-saw battle for control of the ball until late in the first quarter when Sonics' Samuel Vazquez tossed the ball up and off the rim nearly scoring.

In the second quarter, the Lakers scored two points of their own when Conor Burns sunk a layup to tie the game.

During the half-time break Lakers' coach Jeff Pannell said, "We need to go to the basket more. But it is the first game and we will work the kinks out."

Sonics' coach Rick Vazquez said he was pleased with his teams performance during the first half.

"Everyone is doing good," Vazquez said. "My goal is for everyone to touch the ball at least once and to learn from the game."

Pfc. Mark Watson

Lakers' Jeffery Pannell drives toward the basket as Sonics' defenders swarm toward him. The Sonics' 6- to7-year-old team defeated the Lakers Saturday in the first game of the Youth Services season 8-2.

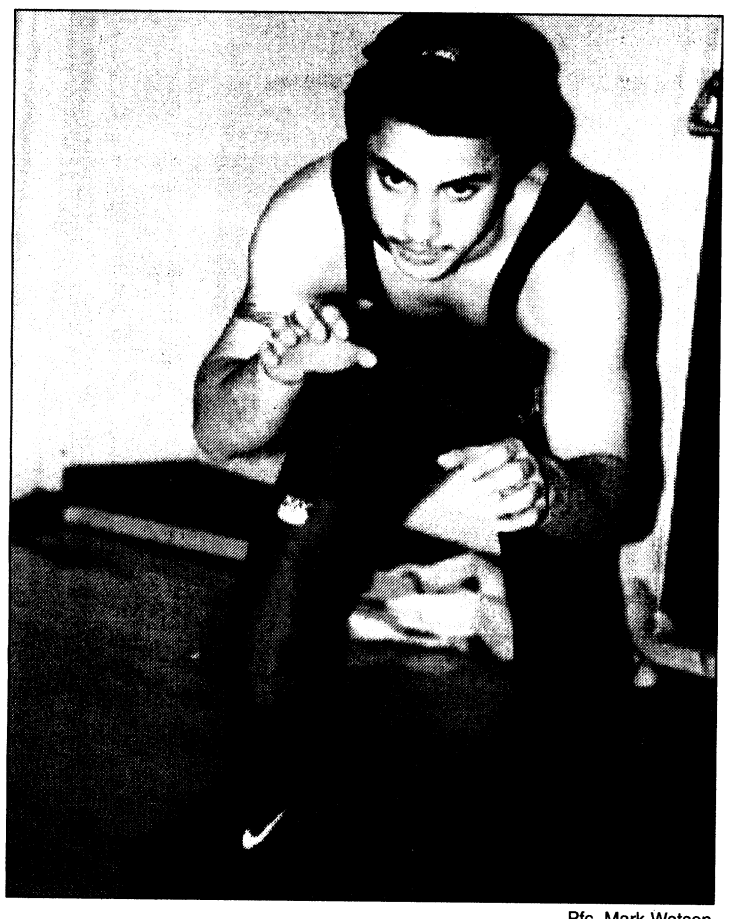
The Lakers' defense didn't play as strong as they did in the first half while the Sonics began a frenzy of steals and layup attempts.

Washington sank three unanswered baskets in the second half giving his team the first victory of the year.

"I was really happy we won," Washington said. "I was glad I could help out the team. I think we will have a good season and win all the time.

"I think we won because we worked well together," Washington said. "We rule."



Pannell said his team's lack of defense hurt the team.

"We just weren't playing defense." Pannell said. "We will be working on defensive drills next practice. Offense-wise we are OK, but we're aren't there yet."

Happy about the victory Vazquez said his team had a good first game.

"Our defense picked up in the second half so they didn't get a chance to work the ball much," Vazquez said. "They were a very good team we played. We have a whole team. Our guards are getting in. I think we have a good group of little kids."

Fort Benning youth grapples grades, opponents

Newcomer earns sport's respect

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Pound for pound he is one of the toughest wrestlers around in spite of his inexperience.

Christian Ayala, 17, has only a little more than a year of wrestling experience under his belt, but is a top contender in Columbus' Class AAAA 112 pound weight class.

Ayala, a junior at Jordan Vocational High School in Columbus, said he began wrestling in the 1999-2000 school year after talking to the coach and a cousin who wrestles.

"I did all right last year," Ayala said. "I finished 13 and 12 last year."

Ayala earned the Best New Wrestler of the Year Award at the Westover Invitational in Albany, Ga.

> "It is a sport that you can decide on the outcome. If you really want it bad enough, you can make it happen."
> Christian Ayala
> Jordan High wrestler

Now, with more experience, his season record is 12-1 and the year is only halfway over.

"I really like wrestling," he said. "It is a sport that you can decide on the outcome. If you really want it bad enough, you can make it happen."

Making it happen is what Ayala grapples with every time he wrestles.

"I try to watch people who I will wrestle and study their moves," he said. "Sometimes wrestling tests you. There is a lot of pressure and you want to quit because you are tired or hungry, but you just have to keep going."

During the Pacelli High Invitational Saturday, Ayala suffered his first defeat against the Georgia state champion Heath Dawson. He won his other two matches at the meet by pins. In his first match, he pinned his opponent within 30 seconds.

His coach, Russell Scott, said Ayala is nearly unstoppable.

"He is a great kid," Scott said. "He does everything I ask him to do. He is an ideal athlete both with his grades and on the mat.

"He has a good physique for a 112-pounder," he said.

Part of the physique comes from push-ups doled out by Ayala's father whenever he got in trouble.

His father, Staff Sgt. Reynaldo Ayala, a ranger instructor at C Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, said while during an Army Physical Fitness Test test at a junior Reserve Officer Training Corps camp in June, Ayala knocked out 117 push-ups in two minutes.

In addition to earning a slot on the varsity team, Ayala pinned down high marks in school where he is an honor student. He also works at the Wynnsong 10 Theater on Main Post. Ayala now wants to join the Army and to carry on his family's tradition.

"The Army builds character, you stay fit, you are always doing something so it isn't boring and you aren't wasting time," Ayala said.

No matter the outcome of his matches, Ayala's parents said they are extremely proud of him.

"He is a natural," Reynaldo said. "He is a good example of the kids from Fort Benning. Win or lose we are really proud of him. I think wrestling is making him a better man."

Town hall meeting set

Employees' questions to be answered

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A town hall meeting for employees of the Directorate of Public Works and Directorate of Logistics will be Monday at 2:30 p.m. in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The directorates are facing a reduction in force as most of their functions are contracted out at the end of the summer.

Topics covered during the meeting will include personnel initiatives, such as the Voluntary Separation Incentive Program, the Priority Placement Program, a retirement class to be offered in March, and "any information I can get on the Voluntary Early Retirement Authority and specifics for application," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works.

Stelzer also plans to provide employees with an update on the contract award status. March 4 is the tentative date for the contract to be awarded to a private corporation.

Stelzer and Ken Strumpler, director of Logistics, will open the forum to questions and try to dispel any rumors that may have surfaced between the last town hall meeting in December, Stelzer said.

The two directorates will consolidate in the near future.

The new organization will be the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, and it will have its headquarters in Building 6.

Stelzer will become the director of the new DFEL, and Strumpler will be the Installation Logistician.

March 4 until Aug. 1, when the contractor is scheduled to take over, will be a transition period. The time line and all dates are contingent on the contract process proceeding as planned.

"We want the new directorate to be up and running when the contractor gets here," said John

Soldier collapses during PT

Memorial service will be Tuesday at TIC Chapel

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

A Fort Benning soldier died Jan. 19 at Keesler Air Force Base hospital, two days after collapsing on a street near Doughboy Stadium during morning PT.

Sgt. Milton Willingham, 36, was a wheeled vehicle mechanic at Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

He is survived by his wife, Stacey, two stepchildren, Patricia and Edward, and a daughter, Shutayvia.

"He was a mild-mannered, well-rounded soldier," said Master Sgt. Elyon Zeigler, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., who had known Willingham for four years. "He was one that was good to be around."

A funeral is planned for Saturday in Augusta.

Willingham's company also planned an on-post memorial service in his honor.

That service will be Tuesday at 11 a.m. at The Infantry Center Chapel.

Willingham was running with another NCO when he collapsed, said 1st Sgt. Clinton Graves, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. The other NCO flagged down a passing truck and sent the driver for help.

Willingham had suffered a cerebral aneurysm.

Willingham was taken to the Keesler Air Force Base hospital on a medically equipped military jet aircraft, said Maj. Joseph Graham, chief of the Patient Admission Division at Martin Army Community Hospital.

The plane was staffed by medics and a flight nurse.

Willingham's wife traveled on the flight.

Willingham joined the Army in 1985, and served in Operation Desert Storm while assigned to the 24th Infantry Division.

He completed basic training at Fort Knox, Ky., and advanced individual training at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md., later serving at Fort Lewis, Wash., and Fort Stewart, Ga.

He served twice in Germany, and deployed to Bosnia and Kuwait while assigned to the 29th Inf. Regt. He had served in the 29th since 1997.

Stacey Willingham described her husband as a loving spouse and father and "a joy to be around."

Capt. Phillip Martin, commander, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., said that Willingham's death represented a significant loss to the company.

"He was a great soldier," Martin said. "He was dedicated to everything that the unit did. He was fantastic."

Workshop readies car buyers

Knowledge key to making car purchase

29th Infantry Regiment

Ann Pratcher had one question for a soldier who called her recently to describe his financial problems: "Is your last name Le Moyne? Because if you're not a general officer," she said, "there's no reason for you to be making a $600 car payment."

On Tuesday evening, Pratcher, the manager of the post's Army Community Service financial readiness program, hosted a seminar at the Family Unit Network Building to show future car buyers how to avoid falling into that kind of trap.

She had some help — Doug Putnam, vice-president of The Infantry Center Credit Union, has been offering auto-buying seminars on post for eight years.

The 20 people who showed up for Putnam's talk heard information on car pricing, negotiating tactics, financing, and the common mistakes car buyers make.

"Every time I do this," Putnam said, "you see people nodding their heads. They've been through this."

Most car-buying mistakes grow out of common roots, Putnam told the seminar audience. People make bad decisions because they get excited about a car and allow emotion to take over.

"Guys get stupid around cars," he said.

To avoid making that kind of bad decision, Putnam suggested, never buy a car on the same day that you walk into the dealership; go home, think it over and get the opinion of a friend.

Car dealers also make money by financing the purchases made on their lots, Putnam said, and "the sky's the limit on interest." Save money by getting a pre-approved loan from a bank or a credit union. "Don't wheel and deal on your financing," he said. "You're not going to win."

Pratcher added that pre-approved loans can come from different kinds of financing companies — all of which charge different kinds of interest. Stick with the banks and credit unions, Pratcher said. "If it says 'finance company' or 'lending company', anything like that, you probably don't want to deal with them."

Trading a car in to the dealer can also be a losing proposition, since the dealer will obviously buy your car for less money than he can sell it; dealer profit on trade-ins is frequently 15 to 20 percent. Sell it yourself, Putnam said, and put the dealer's profit in your pocket.

There are more sticky problems

tied up in the price of a car than most buyers realize, Putnam said. The manufacturer's suggested retail price, for one, is just that: It's a suggestion. The invoice price — which is usually thousands of dollars lower — is what the dealer actually paid for the car, and you'll probably negotiate a better deal if you start from invoice and bargain up than if you start from MSRP and bargain down.

Find out the invoice price of a car you're interested in buying before you visit the car lot, Putnam added; the dealer isn't going to tell you. Banks and credit unions can offer that information when you visit them for a pre-approved loan, and invoice prices are also available on the Web or at the bookstore.

Dealer fees, unnecessary options like overpriced floor mats, and dealer-sold insurance can also bump up the price you'll pay for a car.

"If you're just trying to work them down on the sticker price," Putnam said, "they're trying to

What is an 'Army of One?'

Spc. Lindsay Pike
U.S. Army Alaska

commentary

After failing to meet its recruiting quota in fiscal 1999, it seems the Army blamed its advertising agency, Young and Rubicam.

But is changing a slogan, "Be All You Can Be" (the second most recognizable ad slogan of the last century, according to ad experts), the way to reverse that trend?

The Army's new ad agency, Leo Burnett USA, premiered the campaign with the "Army of One" commercial Jan. 11.

A lone soldier is seen running across the desert. He passes a formation, but never looks their way. He is his own person.

What does this say to prospective recruits? From my perspective, it is going against everything I have been taught as a soldier.

Throughout the history of basic training, battle buddies have been stressed. Not only does your buddy help build trust in a unit, but a battle buddy is another set of eyes for that soldier.

The Army is now testing a buddy assignment program, allowing two people to join, complete basic training and AIT and go to the same first assignment. This program is being implemented to help ease the fear of the unknown during enlistment.

The Army Research Institute tracks the progress of these soldiers to see if their attrition rate lowers.

"If you have a buddy by your side, you're twice as strong," an Army official said about the program. So where in the "Army of One" ad is the battle buddy?

One of the key reasons why the Army needed to change its message was the fact that the Army has missed its recruiting goals three out of the past five years — "Be All You Can Be" just wasn't working, Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera said.

Yet in the commercial, the running soldier says, "And I'll be the first to tell you, the might of the U.S. Army doesn't lie in numbers. It lies in me. I am an Army of One."

Teamwork also falls to the side in the new Army ad. As soon as I set foot on my drill sergeant's turf, teamwork was drilled into me. Nothing can be done with one person alone, it takes a team.

Sure, tell that new recruit he is an individual, and when he sees his drill sergeant, let him be the one to burst that bubble.

Look at your daily job. Are you the only person involved in completing a mission? I can't even get this story out without the help of the journalists, editorial staff and publisher.

Gen. George Patton summed up teamwork this way: "The Army is a team. It eats, sleeps, fights, dies as a team. This individuality stuff is a bunch of crap."

The Army has taken the step to help unify our Army by introducing the black beret.

If the "Army of One" soldier stands as a symbol of today's Army, then where is his beret?

Army officials believe the new campaign is geared toward the younger generation. I understand the importance of making people feel important as individuals, but where does this individuality fall into the Army principle of "One Team, One Fight?"

The new slogan might turn heads for the moment, but then what? Is this new jingle doing justice to the new recruits by leading them into an "Army of One," only to find out in basic training that they are a small part of an Army of Many?

Army's new slogan appeals to youth

Brian Lepley
U.S. Army Alaska

commentary

The "Army of One" recruiting campaign, announced Jan. 10, has been greeted by soldiers with the same enthusiasm and vigorous support associated with the black beret, anthrax vaccinations and Christmas Day CQ.

The negative reaction distills to this: basic training strips away individuality, builds a soldier from the ashes, and drills teamwork.

Why does the Army adopt an ad campaign to appeal to prospective recruits' selfish egos when they'll get a rude awakening from a drill sergeant?

I've been a soldier, I've been a civilian, and now I've been an Army civilian employee for eight years. From that experience, I'm certain the "Army of One" advertising campaign will not make or break Army recruiting, nor will it convince today's recruits they can maintain their slacker ways after enlisting.

I worked on a recruiting battalion staff for six years. Every day, recruiters talk 17- to 34-year-olds into giving up their homes, their lives, their world, for something different and frightening. That's what Army recruiting is, not some slogan or rapid-edit commercial.

Most of you reading this can flash back to when that NCO finally broke through to you and made you realize that the Army was the place for you. Ask yourself: did you do it because of that old commercial where the soldier says, "Hey, first sergeant, good morning"?

In fiscal 2000, 80,000 young Americans made that decision. The year before, 71,000 did so. Did those 151,000 people give up years of their lives for the promise of $40,000 in college money? Did the guarantee of a first duty station in Hawaii do it? Did a $6,000 bonus, chewed up by taxes and paid over five years, do it?

Not really. Army College Fund, Student Loan Repayment, the guaranteed training, bonuses — those get people into the recruiting station. It's all advertising, just like a catchy slogan.

The world of advertising advances as fast as people can react to it. The best advertising works because it stays ahead of trends, constantly evolving. "Be All You Can Be" worked hard for the Army for 20 years. In the advertising world, "BAYCB" is as dated as Beetle Bailey. It served its purpose, just like Montgomery Ward and the Oldsmobile.

Does the "Army of One" campaign pander to the ego and self-centeredness of today's youth? You bet your baggy jeans and pierced eyebrow it does.

Advertising reflects the generation it seeks to influence.

"Army of One" is not the Army's mission statement. It's not a philosophy change; it's not an abandonment of teamwork.

It's a message to reach the primary recruiting market: young, celebrity-and-youth-obsessed, self-centered, 17- to 24-year-old Americans. The Army will spend over $120 million annually on advertising to reach them, get them into recruiting stations, and let the NCOs take over.

Without advertising piercing the target audience's consciousness, all the Army would have as qualified applicants would be completely patriotic, morally fit, totally honest young people.

If the Army relies on completely patriotic, morally fit, totally honest people to fill its recruiting quotas each year, we'll have an Army of None.

Bayonet: 'It's not the Washington Post'

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

The Army's new slogan, "Army of One," has generated a lot of discussion in the national media, not to mention around the office.

If I understand the advertising world correctly, that's good. The ultimate goal is to get your message out and develop name recognition.

But, I have to admit, when I first heard the slogan I thought of a hyperactive 2-year-old with a stubborn streak. I've known two very well in my lifetime, and if you're a parent you probably understand all too well how one individual can resemble an army.

I believe in the value of catchy slogans. In fact, our family has its own phrase, and one of us uses it a least once a day. It's not designed to build up name recognition for the Shutt family. We just want to help others with the pronunciation and spelling of our last name.

Jim has used the expression "Shutt, like shut the door with two Ts" since childhood. I laughed when I first heard it. My last name was Smith. Trust me, I didn't have a problem with anyone mispronouncing or misspelling that moniker.

Soon after we married, I discovered the wisdom of Jim's little phrase after being called Mrs. Shoot a couple of dozen times.

I've used it since then and haven't been able to improve on his phrasing. I tried "Shutt, like shut your mouth," but people seemed a little taken aback. "Shutt, like shut my mouth" was a little too Southern, even for a girl from North Carolina.

Fort Benning, of course, is famous as the "Home of the Infantry" and "The Best Army Installation in the World." We have signs posted bearing those catch phrases, and I'd like to suggest we add a new one — "Fort Benning — Mel Gibson slept here."

It definitely grabs one's attention.

Many newspapers have their own slogans. Perhaps the most famous is "All the News That's Fit to Print," which runs daily in the New York Times. But, my favorite newspaper slogan comes from the Tideland News in Swansboro, N.C.

That weekly is proud to be "The Best Mullet Wrapper in Town," and I was fortunate to work there one summer as an intern. I like a paper with a sense of humor.

The Bayonet runs "Published in the interest of the Fort Benning community" on its front page each week.

While true, it's not memorable.

I prefer our unofficial motto, which can be attributed to Col. Jim Stone, director of Combat Development. I interviewed him for a December story on the Army's Transformation and the decision to develop a new Interim Armored Vehicle. After I sent him a copy of the story to check the facts, he called me and told me the story could run as is.

I guess he could hear the paranoia in my voice when I asked him a second time if everything was OK.

"It's The Bayonet. It's not the Washington Post," he said.

I shared his quote with the staff, and we've adopted it as our own — especially on those days when sources won't call us back, people are hesitant to answer the Various Voices question or some even refuse to have their photo taken.

We've found that our slogan works in persuading people to talk to us.

"Oh, come on. It's for The Bayonet. It's not the Washington Post."

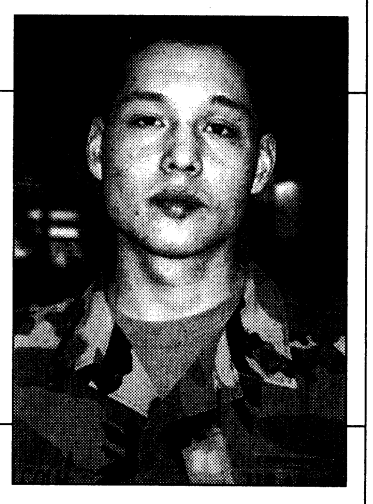
If nothing else, the phrase draws a chuckle.



And that's not a bad thing when you want to be remembered.

VARIOUS VOICES

What does the new Army slogan, "Army of One," mean to you?

Capt. James Ditolla, U.S. Army Medical Activity — "It means unity. I like it."

Staff Sgt. Raymond Malcolm, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, NCO Academy — "Everybody has their part in the Army, and everyone makes a difference, so I guess the new slogan does make sense."

Capt. Laundette Stewart, Student Detachment, Troy State University — "It seems too individualized. It should reinforce teamwork. I think it would've been better if it said, "We are One."

Sgt. 1st Class Kenneth R. Barnes, A Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade — "It means 'one' as far as color, race or gender. I can understand that but I don't totally like it."

Master Sgt. Earnestine Walk, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "We can go anywhere, do anything and be all things to all people."

Sgt. David Faughnan, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade — "It seems to say everybody is equal and we all have the same goal ultimately."

Family receives WWII MIA's medals

Purple Heart, Bronze Star bring closure

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A Purple Heart and Bronze Star were presented last week at Fort Benning, 56 years after the recipient was declared missing in action.

For the family of Pfc. John Walter Lucas, the ceremony was a time of celebration and closure after years of seeking answers to questions, some of which may never be resolved.

Sharon Wall of Ellaville, Ga., was born four months after her father was declared missing in action Jan. 23, 1945 in Offweiler, France.

Wall has the original telegram delivered to her mother, Kathleen Harris, in Pine Mountain, Ga., more than a half century ago.

"A major and his driver came to the house with the notification that he was missing in action," Harris said before the Commanding General's Recognition Ceremony in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium Jan. 18 where she and her daughter were presented the medals from Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne.

"We never heard another thing," Wall said.

In addition to the telegram, Wall has a photograph of her father in uniform, but there were no other personal belongings returned to the family.

During the years, Wall's mother and grandparents made sure she knew about her father, but as an adult, Wall wanted to know more, and her relatives didn't have all the answers.

"I've often wondered whether he was dead or living and suffering from amnesia," Wall said, tears filling her eyes.

About three years ago, it was her daughter, Lehanne Singleton of Buena Vista, Ga., who helped and encouraged Wall to reach outside the family for more information.

Singleton named her son, Lucas, 8, after her grandfather, and after seeing Saving Private Ryan, she was even more inspired to find out what she could about what happened to Pfc. Lucas.

"The movie was so stirring. Although I know he didn't see those exact scenes, my grandfather was in similar situations," Singleton said.

Singleton and Wall wrote Sen. Max Cleland's office asking for help. They also contacted Rep. Sanford Bishop, and the women said they are grateful to both men for their help.

Singleton spent hours on the Internet, and Wall filled out numerous forms from the Department of Veterans Affairs.

He was eligible to receive the medals after being declared missing in action in Offweiler, France, during World War II.

"It was like having to prove that my dad even existed," Wall said.

Singleton said she would become frustrated at times after being passed around to various governmental departments.

"But that was only because I would become impatient. It was a continuous trail of retelling the story and explaining why I wanted more information," Singleton said.

What the family did discover was that Lucas was driving a supply truck when he was ambushed and never seen again. They were told he was authorized to receive several medals, including the Bronze Star and Purple Heart. The family then requested the medals, and the awards arrived in the mail last October.

"But I still don't know why he got them," Singleton said.

The story doesn't end there.

It was Wall's stepfather, Elbert Harris, who contacted Fort Benning to find out if the medals could be formally presented to the family.

Almost a dozen relatives, spanning four generations, attended the ceremony.

"This is very significant not only for their family, but also for the extended military family," Le Moyne said.

"It shows that we honor service and loyalty," the general said.

> "I want Lucas, my son, to understand why we are here today. This is a big honor. It's a time to celebrate and show that our family stands for the United States and what this country stands for."

"I want Lucas, my son, to understand why we are here today. This is a big honor. It's a time to celebrate and show that our family stands for the United States and what this country stands for," Singleton said.

"This is also a time of closure," she said.

Her mother agreed.

"I started all this research so my grandchildren could know as much as they could about my father and what he did for his country, and I also wanted to come to some closure," Wall said.

That means that it's important to know what you're saying yes to — and it means taking a close look at the contract you're given to sign to make sure that no surprises have appeared.

"The car-buying game is just that," Putnam said. "It's a game."

Soldiers who attended the seminar were hoping to avoid a repeat of previous car-buying experiences.

Capt. Edlyn Smith, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, described returning home with a new car. A couple of days later, he said, he began to wonder if he really got the best possible deal.

"Like he said, it's a big game. You've got to know where they're making their money."

Smith said the seminar had been useful to him. "I was thinking that if I got the MSRP, I was doing well."

The captain added that he'd like to see the information Putnam and Pratcher offered made more widely available.

"I've seen soldiers get caught up in car payments and not be able to pay the light bill," he said. "I think they should make this part of inprocessing for new soldiers."

for the record

In the Jan. 19 issue of The Bayonet, the title of Horace Wilson's poem was incorrect. The title is The Vision: A Reality. In the same issue Israel Hernandez was misquoted in a youth basketball story. The quote should have read: "My team needs to learn to control the ball under the opponent's net."

Artist celebrates history

Former soldier creates interactive artwork

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

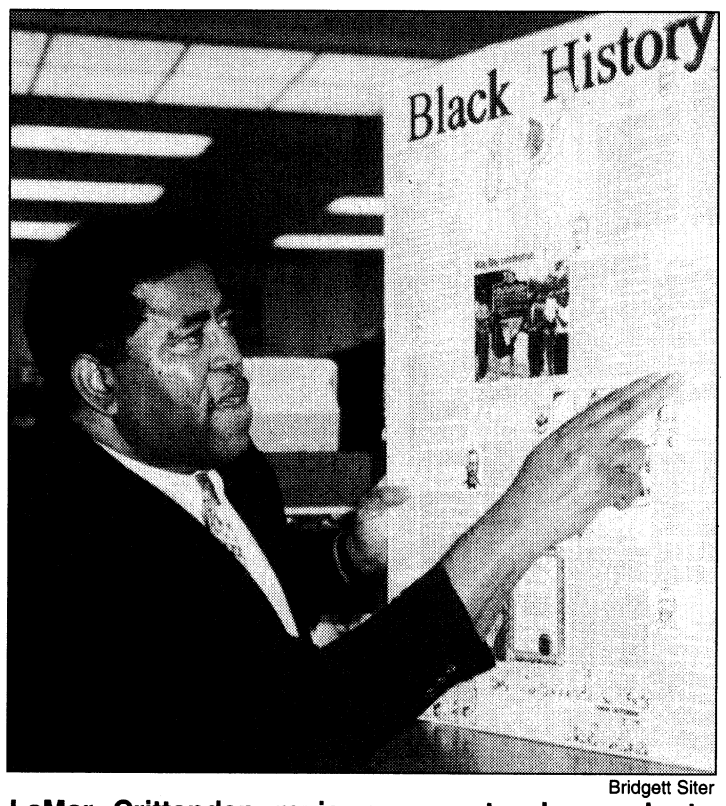
As Fort Benning gears up for its annual Black History Month celebration in February, one former soldier is putting the finishing touches on a project he's worked on all year to prepare for this occasion — a poster depicting famous and not-so-famous African-Americans who helped shape U.S. history.

LaMar Crittenden spends his days as a custodian at Faith Middle School, where he says the students are often surprised to find the retired 10th Special Forces Support Group soldier is the artist responsible for many of the posters they see in the school's library.

Crittenden discovered his knack for creating folk-art style posters in 1983, 10 years after joining the Army, while attending school in Fort Huachuca, Ariz. He designed his first poster for a class presentation.

His work impressed a fellow soldier who encouraged Crittenden to make more posters and focus on African-American accomplishments at a time when black soldiers "still had a hard time achieving the goals and rank they desired," he said.

"I started talking to different people, other black soldiers like General Short and General Paige who had accomplished great things in their careers," Crittenden said, referring to the deputy commander and commanding general of the U.S. Army Information Systems Command at Fort Huachuca in 1989. "I asked them for pictures and bios and began to create a poster that focused on the accomplishments of these great black leaders."



Soon Crittenden expanded his search to newspapers and magazines, clipping articles about some of history's greatest inventors, scholars, statesmen and athletes who met two criteria — they were all black and they all helped shape the future for all U.S. citizens in some way. He arranged these clippings and photographs on a large piece of poster board and added artwork, cartoons and puzzles to create what he calls interactive artwork.

"Whether the viewer is a child or adult, if they spend just one minute studying one of my posters, they'll learn something about black history," Crittenden said. "If that's all they get out of it, then I've done my job."

Crittenden retired from the Army in 1994 and returned to his home in Columbus, where he began showing his posters at local schools and civic organizations, including Columbus State University and the Masonic Lodge. He's putting the final touches on his 12th double-sided poster.

Each February Crittenden shares his work with Fort Benning students. His posters rotate between schools and can often be seen at various places around post, including the Infantry Training Brigade and the 36th Engineer Group.

"We look forward to his work every year. He's a great historian, and he dedicates his personal time to share this information with anyone who takes the time to read and benefit from his work," said Glenn Hughes, principal of Stowers Elementary School, which presented Crittenden with a certificate of appreciation in 1997.

"I just want these students and soldiers to know more than just Booker T. Washington and Martin Luther King," Crittenden said.

"I want them to know about people they can relate to. They may not be famous names, but their accomplishments are very important to all of us," he said, pointing out that many of the conveniences we enjoy every day, like the elevator, typewriter, refrigerator and clothes dryer, were created by African-Americans.

"Sometimes black youths think they can't do anything," Crittenden said. "These men and women accomplished great things 100 years ago. Think about all we can achieve in this modern day, with all our conveniences and technology. If you really want to achieve anything all you really have to do is put your mind to it. Don't say it can't be done."

For now, Crittenden's content to teach this message through his artwork. But with an eye to the future, he's clipping news articles and photographs of history's great female achievers and more recent articles about the U.S. electoral process. He hopes to expand his interactive artwork to include various subjects.

"I believe I am achieving what I set out to do, because I'm doing it in a way that interests me — artwork," Crittenden said.

"It's a gift from God and I'm glad I can put it in places that others can enjoy it and learn from it."

Post seeks input on spending

DRM needs suggestions for ACOE money

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Do you have suggestions about how to improve the quality of life at Fort Benning?

Now's your chance to voice your opinion.

The Directorate of Resource Management would like the community's help on deciding how to spend the $200,000 awarded to the post for winning the Chief of Staff Army award from the Army Communities of Excellence competition last year.

"The quality of life at Fort Benning involves the entire community," said Pat Porter, management analyst, Quality Management Division, DRM.

She said the award was won with the community's help and soldiers and their family members should have a say in determining where it is spent.

"I'm all for the money going back into the community," said Jodie Bowers, president, Fort Benning Mayor's Association.

"The community is what makes up the post. We take care of a lot of things here," she said.

Last year's award money totaled $500,000 and funded various community projects.

Portions of this money went toward the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program, uniforms and sports equipment for youth services, playground equipment and picnic tables for post families, exercise equipment and library equipment for the post community, electrical repairs to Briant Wells Gym, an interior upgrade for Soldiers' Chapel, carpeting for Sightseeing Road Chapel, and the renovation of Russ Pond.

As a suggestion for spending a portion of this year's money, Bowers said, "I would like to see park benches at some of the post playgrounds so that moms could have a place to sit and watch their children play."

Porter said her office has been taking suggestions since Dec. 1. The deadline for submitting suggestions is Wednesday.

It is requested that only projects that clearly benefit the entire post community be submitted for the survey, Porter said.

After all the suggestions are in, the Quality Management Division will organize the responses and submit a list of the community's requests to the post command group.

"Fort Benning's leaders will then decide where it will be spent," Porter said.

In the past, she said, the decision about how to allocate the funds was reached by early summertime and several projects were begun shortly afterwards.

To submit a proposal, the DRM would like the following information.

- What is the proposed project?
- Describe the project and how it will benefit the quality of life at Fort Benning.
- What is the estimated cost of the project?
- Include your name, the name of your organization and your phone number.

Soldiers and their family members who live off-post are welcome to submit suggestions as well.

Suggestions should be sent to the attention of Pat Porter, either in hard copy or through e-mail. Her office is located in Infantry Hall, Room 547. Her e-mail address is porterp@benning.army.mil.

Black Hat takes tuba to new heights

Musician hits high note as instructor

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Like the other Black Hats at the U.S. Army Airborne School, he is known as Sergeant Airborne to the students.

But to his fellow Black Hats, Sgt. 1st Class Frederick Dumas is called "Music Man" — a distinction he carries as the only Army musician assigned to the cadre.

Dumas is a tuba player who has served in the 82nd Airborne Division Band and as an instructor with the U.S. Army School of Music.

For the last two years he has been an instructor with B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"He fits right in," said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Harris, a fellow Black Hat in the company.

"He's the most squared-away tuba player I know. Of course, he is the only tuba player I know," Harris said.

When people find out his job in the Army is to play a 13-pound brass instrument, some display disbelief that Dumas would now be teaching at the Airborne School.

Dumas, who has served 16 years in the Army, has a ready response.

"I'm just telling you what I do for a living," Dumas, 34, said.

This exchange is almost always followed by the question, "Do you jump with the tuba?"

The answer is no.

A native of Bainbridge, Ga., Dumas earned his wings right out of advanced individual training at the Army's School of Music in Norfolk, Va.

His first assignment was at Fort Bragg, N.C., and the 82nd Airborne Division Band, where all band members are required to be airborne qualified.

Dumas wears a combat patch for his service during Desert Storm where he and the other members of the band pulled security duty.

"A lot of people tease me and laugh when they ask what we did over in Saudi," Dumas said.

To Dumas, the band's mission is not a laughing matter.

"We pulled EPW (enemy prisoner of war) search and seizure, division main security and security for the commanding general," Dumas said.

Returning to Fort Benning and the Airborne School was a goal after an encounter with someone who said it couldn't be done.

"I had an 11-Bravo back at Fort Bragg tell me I could never be a Black Hat," Dumas said.

"I wanted to prove him wrong," the soldier said, smiling.

And he did. Dumas also is the first musician to complete the Pathfinder Course, which he did in October.

Around B Company, Dumas is subjected to a fair amount of teasing.

"I rib him a lot just because he is a tuba player," Harris said. "He takes it all in and shoots it back at us.

"But you have to respect him. He is very knowledgeable," Harris said.

About 325 students make up each class assigned to B Company, Dumas said. Of those, one to three are usually musicians. Dumas usually tries to search them out and offer a little encouragement.

"I let them know that anything they want to accomplish they can, if they have the mind-set," Dumas said.

Spc. Kevin Quinones has been on the receiving end of that encouragement.

Quinones, a guitar player with the 82nd Airborne Division, is in the current jump class at B Company.

"I was surprised when I found out he was a tuba player," Quinones said. "I was a little lost here, but now I feel I have someone who understands me."

Dumas and his wife, Denise, have four children ranging in age from 8 to 17 years old.

He started playing the trumpet in fourth grade and switched to the tuba in junior high school. In high school, he played the drums, and has served as a drum major for different military bands.

This summer, Dumas will leave Fort Benning and return to his musical MOS and the 82nd Airborne Band, where he hopes to stay until he reaches the 20-year point.

When he enlisted 16 years ago, he planned to stay three years and move on.

"I kept re-enlisting because of all the different things I could learn and all the different people I could meet," Dumas said.

The soldier summed up his feelings and his motivation to succeed with a response he gave almost two years ago during an interview with the Airborne School's command sergeant major.

"I was at the School of Music and the sergeant major asked me why I wanted to come to Fort Benning and be an airborne instructor.

"I told him, 'The Army said I could be all I could be, and that's what I want, to be all I can be,'" he said.

Ad Valorem exemption saves soldiers money

SJA provides form to save on vehicle tax

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Many soldiers purchase new, expensive vehicles, and the annual ad valorem tax — that Georgia, Alabama and some other states impose on such vehicles registered in that particular state — could cost them several hundreds of dollars.

The tax is based on the value of the vehicle. Before a vehicle may be registered in Georgia or Alabama, the tax must be paid.

However, soldiers are in luck, said Jane M. Winand, chief, Legal Assistance Division.

The Soldiers and Sailors' Civil Relief Act exempts soldiers from ad valorem taxes charged by a state, which is not the soldier's home state, she said. A soldier living in Georgia or Alabama because of an assignment to Fort Benning, but who is a resident of another state, is exempt by federal law from the ad valorem tax charged by Georgia or Alabama.

This exemption applies only to soldiers and not family members, Winand said. Alabama currently allows the exemption to all vehicles owned by a soldier solely or with another nonmilitary person.

Georgia currently allows the exemption to all vehicles solely owned by a soldier and to only one vehicle jointly owned by the soldier and a family member.

"The exemption from ad valorem tax can save a soldier quite a bit of money, depending on the type and age of the vehicle," Ann Pratcher, manager Financial Readiness Program Army Community Service.

"Before the new law became effective, the soldier only received the exemption on a vehicle he or she solely owned," she added. "Non-Georgia resident soldiers coming to Fort Benning from another installation would face different costs for registering the same vehicle in Georgia."

Pratcher offered an example.

Soldier A is single and has a 1995 Nissan Maxima titled in his name. Soldier A pays $20 to register his vehicle in Georgia.

Soldier B is married to a non-Georgia resident spouse who accompanies her to Fort Benning, and they have a 1995 Nissan Maxima titled in her name only. Soldier B pays $20 to register her vehicle in Georgia, but her spouse must have a power of attorney to do certain things with that vehicle.

Soldier C is married to a non-Georgia resident spouse who accompanies him to Fort Benning, and they have a 1995 Nissan Maxima titled in both spouses' names.

Under the old law, Soldier C may pay $180 or more to register his vehicle in Georgia. Under the new law, Soldier C pays the same $20 that Soldiers A and B pay, and his spouse can transact whatever business is necessary regarding that vehicle.

The exemption is obtained by completing a form at the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate in Building 5. Soldiers must bring a current leave and earnings statement dated within the past three months, current military ID card, and information on the year, make, model and vehicle identification number of the vehicle to the Legal Assistance Division before the form will be completed.

A family member may apply for the exemption on behalf of the soldier if that family member has a current power of attorney to present to the Legal Assistance Division personnel along with the above-listed documents.

The exemption does not apply to leased vehicles in Georgia since the vehicle is not legally owned by the leasing party.

For questions concerning the ad valorem tax, contact the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281 or 545-3282.

Merger: Combines post's two largest directorates

Machovec, DPW's coordinator for the contract study, known as the A-76, that resulted in contracting out the services.

"When this goes to the contractor, there is going to be a change in the way the installation does business. How we accomplish the work will be different," Machovec said. "There is going to be a period of time when everyone will have to adjust."

For Stelzer, the biggest challenge he faces is "defining the roles, missions and limitations of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics and articulating them to our customers," Stelzer said.

"This transition takes the two largest directorates on Fort Benning — that literally impact on every action on the installation — and concurrently combines them, releases much of the institutional knowledge contained in the work force that has been here for decades, incorporates a contractor that is eager to make a good impression, and constrains it with our limited resources," Stelzer said.

"And we are going to do this in 150 days during our summer surge with the highest training loads, the busiest time for families PCSing in and out, with units deploying to CONUS and OCONUS training and missions of various lengths," Stelzer said.

"This will be anything but business as usual," he said.

The DFEL will have five divisions: Housing, Environmental, Engineering, Facilities, and Logistics.

The Housing, Environmental and Engineering Divisions will continue to provide the services they do now.

The Facilities Division and Logistics Division will provide operational oversight and decision-making functions related to the DPW and DOL functions that are being contracted, Machovec said.

"The goal for both directorates is that (the formation of) this new organization (DFEL) not adversely impact on anyone," said Ron Shehane, chief, Logistics Integration Office and the DOL's coordinator for the A-76 study.

"The contracting study has been traumatic enough for the employees, and we don't want the integration to have any further impact on them," Shehane said.

"Both directorates have worked closely together and several combinations of the organizations have already taken place," Shehane said.

"The combinations will make us better able to serve the customer, and it will make us better able to manage and use the resources we do have left, which are scarce," Shehane said.

What is left is a total of 220 positions in the new DFEL — 138 positions from DPW and 82 from DOL.

In November 1998, the cut-off date for numbers supplied to the A-76 study, DPW had 486 positions and DOL had 659.

Of the 220 positions remaining, 178 were excluded from the study because "the nature of their job did not permit contracting," Machovec said, citing environmental, engineering and mobilization positions.

Twenty-two positions are governmental in nature, and six are funded from outside sources.

That leaves 14 vacancies in Quality Assurance that will be filled through the RIF, Machovec said. Those positions will monitor the contractor along with the Directorate of Contracting.

All of DPW's operations and maintenance functions will be contracted out, such as buildings, grounds, roads, ranges, water and sewage.

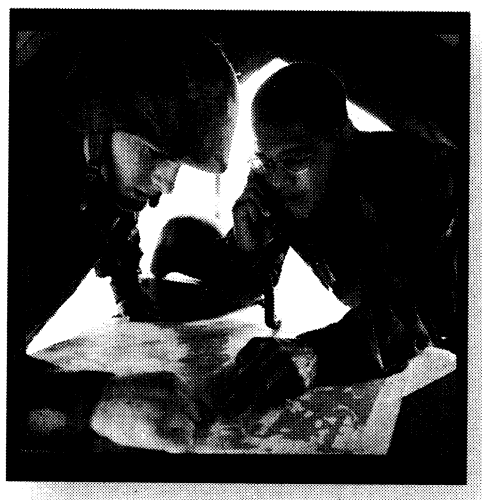
At DOL, the Supply and Services Division, which includes the Central Issue Facility and Property Accountability, will fall under the contract, as will almost all of the Transportation Division and all Maintenance Division shop operations.

Employees who will be affected will receive RIF letters in late April or early May, said Kathleen Kenna, director, Civilian Personnel Advisory Center.

"Mock" RIF notifications went out to Training and Doctrine Command employees in November to allow early registration in the Priority Placement Program and to let employees know how they would be affected if the RIF was conducted at that time, she said.

Since then the numbers have decreased as 59 individuals retired and others have participated in the placement program or found employment with outside organizations or tenant units, such as Martin Army Community Hospital, which are not under TRADOC.

"The numbers are changing daily," Kenna said.



A civilian transition workshop will be Feb. 22 at the Army Career Alumni Program. Call 545-2308 for details.

Squad wins top sapper award during stakes

Soldiers use training to prep for mission

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

After five days of 24-hour operations and plenty of rain and mud during the 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade Sapper Stakes, the soldiers of 1st Squad, 1st Platoon, C Company, were named the top sappers Jan. 19.

The engineers' skills were definitely put to the test during the nonstop operation, said Capt. Juan Zapata, 317th's assistant operations officer for plans.

"The infantry has their EIB and the medics have their EFMB, Sapper Stakes is designed to test the combat engineer squad in a multitude of combat engineer tasks that are part of their METL tasks," Zapata said.

Some of the tasks the sappers were tested on included:

- Emplacing a wire obstacle.
- Conducting a bangalore breach to open a footpath through a wire obstacle.
- Breaching a minefield
- Placing a row of mines in a tactical minefield.
- Conducting minesweeping operations.

Zapata said one of the things that made the testing different from the norm was that the work was controlled at the squad level.

"It's giving that squad leader a chance to make some command decisions independently," he said. "We feel that if we start from the beginning, right from the squad level and give those guys confidence, they will come together as a platoon."

Those decisions started from the very beginning, said 2nd Lt. Shawn Morton, OIC for the breach and minefield lane.

"During a lane, we give the squad a scenario of what to expect and what we expect them to do downrange. Then they execute on their own," he said. "We give the squad leader an operation order. From there, he's supposed to do his troop leading procedures and what he feels is necessary to complete the mission."

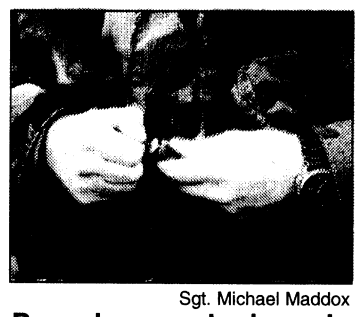
"We try to keep it as realistic as possible," Morton added.

Taking charge is just what Staff Sgt. Geoffrey Long did. Long's soldiers were named the winning squad.

"It was good training for us," he said. "Everybody just followed the standard and trained safely."

Long added, preparation for the stakes was key to his soldiers' success.

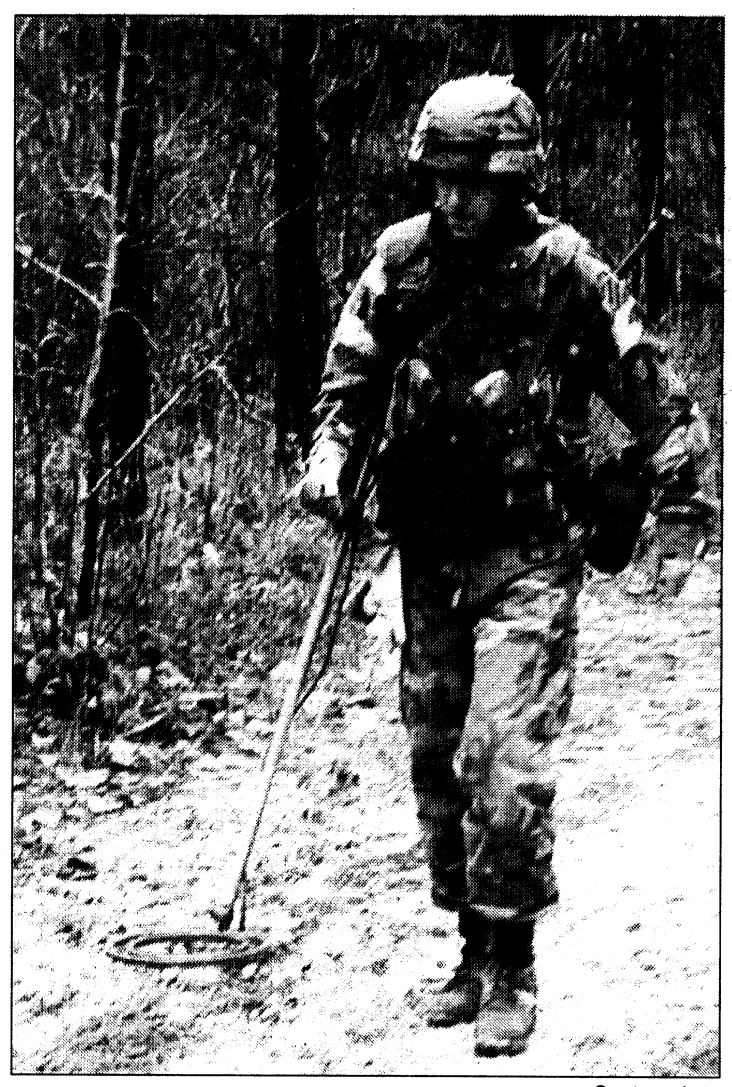
"We prepped before, went over each lane and trained to the standard," he said. "We didn't go in with competition in mind, to us it was just a training event. That's how we treated it."



Allowing squad leaders to make all of the decisions was a new and great experience for them, Zapata said.

"This was the first time where squad leaders were thrown into a position where all of his soldiers were looking to him for guidance," he said. "They were running mission after mission after mission, and the squad leader has to plan rest, maintenance — all of the things we do on a bigger level, the squad leaders had to do. And they were out there making it happen."

And the results of that leadership led to excellence by all of the sappers, Zapata said.



"All 18 squads have been EQT certified and accomplished all seven basic combat engineer tasks of the 3rd Infantry Division. That was really a big accomplishment for the battalion," he said.

"There were no losers. Every squad that participated was challenged so that we will be ready to support the tasks forces effectively in the future."

Fort Benning names NCO, Soldier of Quarter

Soldiers rise above peers to win honor

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning honored its NCO and Soldier of the Quarter at a luncheon Tuesday at the Main NCO Club.

Spc. Jamil Wilson, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, a personnel specialist, received an Army Achievement Medal and numerous other awards and savings bonds as the Soldier of the Quarter.

Staff Sgt. Jason Pate, 2nd Bn., 29th Infantry Mortar Leaders Course Instructor, took home the NCO of the Quarter honors.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Roberts, vice president of military banking at Columbus Bank and Trust, was the guest speaker at the luncheon.

He said both Wilson and Pate not only were excellent in their jobs, they showed compassion in doing so.

"You have to love soldiers to take care of soldiers," Roberts said.

While the honor was great for the two, "There's no better reward than taking care of soldiers," Roberts said.

Both did it to the highest standard at a post that does it the best, he said.

Wilson said it was a pleasant surprise and huge relief when he won. The two men had to wait a week after their nominations.

"Study time and preparation are the keys," he advised. "It takes a personal commitment to succeed. If you fail, keep trying."

The Miami, Fla., native said his current goals are to conquer the staff sergeant board, BNCOC, and his studies in business administration and real estate.

He said he credits his unit for the support given to him and for challenging him at the lower level competitions.

"Specialist Wilson, on countless of occasions, has had to step up to the plate and assume responsibility and take charge in my absence," said Staff Sgt. Denise Grant-Butler, senior personnel service sergeant. "With this display of leadership, it sets him apart from his peers."

Wilson's leadership is displayed throughout the battalion as the Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers representative, she said.

"Specialist Wilson constantly voices the single soldier's issues," Grant-Butler said.

"He identifies problems with solutions," she added. "A true leader not only identifies problems but comes up with a solution and devises a plan of action, which makes specialist Wilson a true leader and professional."

Pate said it was a distinct honor to be named the NCO of the Quarter.

"I wasn't too sure about the outcome of the selection process due to the outstanding soldiers with whom I had to compete," the Castleberry, Ala., native said.

It was a pleasure to have had the opportunity to meet and compete with such professional NCOs from throughout Fort Benning, he said. The support of many civilian agencies at the event was excellent as well.

"It is nice to know that they take the time to recognize the soldiers of Fort Benning and their accomplishments," Pate said.

Pate advised other NCOs that the board process is well worth their time and effort.

"Through this process, NCOs will gain knowledge that will make you a better soldier as well as give them the knowledge base to better advise your soldiers," he said.

He and the soldiers in his unit have a mutually beneficial relationship.

"My unit was consistently concerned with my performance and was always ready to provide the assistance I needed," Pate said.

Pate's short-term goals are to complete his associate degree, attend the Battle Staff course, and attend Air Assault School in Fort Campbell, Ky.

Staff Sgt. Allan D. Thomas D Company, 2nd Bn., 29th Infantry Regiment Company Operations NCOIC has known Pate for a year and a half.

"I have seen him do remarkable things in Delta Company," Thomas said.

In fact, Pate's hard work also led to his induction into the Sergeant Audie Murphy Club.

"Staff Sergeant Pate has demonstrated remarkable stamina and discipline while still maintaining his skills as an instructor and continuing his duties in the Infantry Mortar Leader Course," Thomas said.

Former drill sergeant replaces 1996 Olympian

AMU Det. changes command

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit welcomes a new Headquarters Detachment commander today. Incoming commander Capt. Prescott C. Mckenzie, a former Fort Benning drill sergeant, took command from 1996 Olympian Maj. Robert E. Harbison, in the USAMU Headquarters Detachment Change of Command Ceremony conducted at 3 p.m. at Sharpe Hall.

As the USAMU Headquarters Detachment commander, Mckenzie takes charge of the nearly 100 USAMU soldiers who are world-class shooters, gunsmiths and support personnel.

"I'm happy to be here," Mckenzie said. "It's wonderful to have the opportunity to command one of the finest units in the Army, a unit dedicated to shooting — one of the fundamental elements of the Army."

Mckenzie joined the USAMU in October as the assistant operations and training officer after completing his degree completion program at Troy State University at Fort Benning, where he was awarded a bachelor of science degree in management. Prior to that, he commanded C Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning's Basic Combat Training Brigade from March to October 1999. He was the commander of the E Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade from January 1998 to March 1999.

A native of Miami, Fla., Mckenzie enlisted in the Army in 1983. After he completed Basic and Infantry Training at Fort Benning in October 1983, he was assigned to the 4th Battalion, 23rd Infantry Regiment, at Fort Lewis, Wash. In May 1985, he was transferred to the 1st Battalion, 23rd Infantry Regiment, in Korea, and then served with the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, at Fort Benning, from May 1986 to October 1988.

In 1988 he became a drill sergeant with 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, at Fort Benning. He returned to Korea in 1991 and was assigned to 1st Battalion, 503rd Infantry Regiment (Air Assault), where he was a squad leader and platoon sergeant. Mckenzie then attended Officer Candidate School and was commissioned as a second lieutenant of infantry in 1993.

Following Officer Candidate School, the Infantry Officers Basic Course and the Bradley Leaders Course, he was assigned to 3rd Battalion, 5th Cavalry Regiment, in Germany. As a platoon leader, he deployed to the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia as part of Operation Able Sentry. As company executive officer, he deployed to Bosnia during Operation Joint Endeavor.

While in Bosnia, he served as the Headquarters Company executive officer, and upon returning from Bosnia he became the battalion operations and training officer.

Mckenzie has been awarded the Meritorious Services Medal, seven Army Commendation Medals, six Army Achievement Medals, Good Conduct Medal, Noncommissioned Officers Professional Development Ribbon, Overseas Service Ribbon, Expert Infantry Badge, Parachutist Badge, Air Assault Badge, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal and Drill Sergeant Badge. He and his wife, Prudence, have two daughters, Bernadette, 12, and Shanice, 6, and live in Columbus.

Harbison will be the USAMU operations and training officer until he leaves for Fort Leavenworth, Kan., this summer to attend Command and General Staff College.

Before taking command of the USAMU Headquarters Detachment in August, he was a USAMU international rifle shooter under the World Class Athlete Program since November 1998.

"When I became the detachment commander, I thought the job would be easy, but it's not," Harbison said. "But I want to thank everyone for making my job easier by doing a great job and being professional."

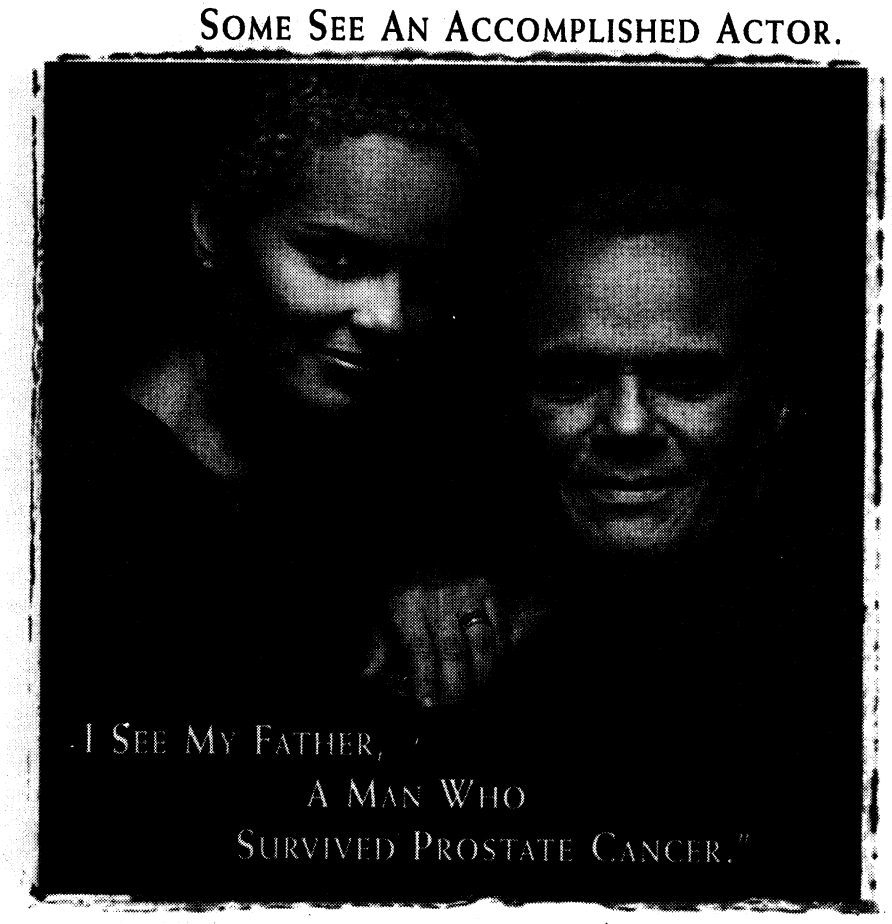
Raised in State College, Pa., Harbison graduated from State College Area High School in 1984 and received a bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Tennessee in Martin in 1988.

Harbison joined the Army in 1988 and was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 66th Armored Regiment, 2nd Armored Division, Fort Hood, Texas, as a platoon leader.

He was transferred to Fort Hood's 1st Cavalry Division where he served as a platoon leader in 1990.

The following year, he was promoted to an executive officer position within the 1st Cavalry Division.

He was assigned to the Army Marksmanship Unit in 1992 where he shot on the Service Rifle and International Rifle Teams and made the 1996 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team in both air rifle and free rifle.



In 1997, he left the Marksmanship Unit to command Troop A, 5th Squadron, 15th Cavalry Regiment.

Harbison has been awarded the Bronze Star Medal, two Meritorious Service Medals, three Army Commendation Medals, five Army Achievement Medals, Kuwaiti Liberation Medal, Southwest Asia Service Medal, Parachutist Badge, Distinguished Rifleman Badge, International Distinguished Badge and President's Hundred Tab.

Besides being a 1996 Olympian, he is a three-time Pan-American Games Gold medalist, a six-time World Cup medalist, a four-time national champion and a five-time member of the Conseil International du Sport Militaire Shooting Team and CISM Silver medalist.

He and his wife, Elizabeth, have a 14-week-old daughter, Julia. The Harbisons live in Columbus.

Community prepares for storm season

Storm education key to ride out bad weather

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Even though Fort Benning hasn't reached the typical severe weather season for this area, March 1 through Nov. 30, some recent bad weather and dangerous storm conditions have affected the community.

"You can't count on anything around here with the weather," said Regis Beighley, safety manager, Infantry Branch Safety Office, Directorate of Public Safety.

"Fort Benning is unique. This area is prone to high winds and tornadoes with little warning," he said.

Because of this fact, post officials have reminded residents to be on the lookout for bad weather and to be prepared in the event that a severe storm occurs.

For a severe thunderstorm, the American Red Cross recommends the following safety precautions:

• Unplugging all appliances before the storm hits and following weather reports on a battery powered radio.

• Also, avoid using the phone and stay away from faucets, sinks and bathtubs as metal pipes can conduct electricity.

• Close the window blinds and shades and then stay away from them.

• Keep any pets on a leash or in a carrier so they won't get lost in the event of an emergency.

• For those caught in or near water during a storm, go to land immediately and find shelter.

• When trapped in a car during severe weather, keep the windows closed.

• If shelter is unavailable, find a low-lying open place that is unlikely to flood and is a safe distance from trees, poles, or metal objects.

• Stay in a tucked position and try to touch as little ground as possible.

Tornadoes are another dangerous storm condition that have been occurring recently in areas not far from post. They are often created as the result of a thunderstorm.

In an average year, 800 tornadoes are reported across the nation, resulting in 80 deaths and more than 1,500 injuries, according to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

If a tornado is sighted or indicated on area radar, the post installation siren will sound for five minutes.

"The key thing is to stay aware, listen to the radio, do what you're told and always stay on the alert," Beighley said.

During a tornado, the post Directorate of Public Works recommends the following actions to reduce the possibility of injury:

• Take cover. Seek shelter immediately.

• If caught outside and unable to reach shelter, find a ditch, ravine or low area and stay there. Cover head

Car competition keeps Scouts racing

Cub Scouts debut car building skills

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

With the Pinewood Derby car kits delivered to den members in November, Saturday's competition seemed a long way off.

The Webelos den, which means "we'll be loyal Scouts," used the time to build race cars from the block of pine, four wheels and four nails.

Because of exacting standards, the cars can't weigh more than 5 ounces or be longer than 7 inches to compete in the Pinewood Derby, car design was an important factor for the Cub Scouts.

"While weight is important, wheel placement is key for success," said Richard Holladay, who watched his son, Jake, compete in his first derby.

First-time racer Riley Wray tested the validity of this design principle.

"The first time the car raced I won, but then the tire fell off — the wheel was bent," the 6-year-old said. Wray is a member of the Tiger den and built the car with the help of his father.

"I think I should build a new car for next year, Dad," Wray said to his father as they were leaving White Elementary School where the boys and their cars raced each other for most of the morning.

Jake Holladay said building the car was easy because his mom helped.

"I picked out the colors and the design," he said. "Mom did the cutting and I did the painting."

The Pinewood Derby vehicles came in various shapes including a humvee, shark and a banana.

The 30 cars entered in Fort Benning Pack 27's Pinewood Derby looked fast, but their speed wasn't measured, said Paul Humphreys who is the Cub master of Pack 27.

As lighter cars were eliminated in heat after heat, heavier cars proved that weight and its distribution is another factor in designing the fastest car.

Coins — Sacajewea dollars, quarters, nickels and dimes — added much of the weight to the cars.

Wolf den member Colton Lusk won the award for the most expensive car — $2.30 in change was taped to the underside of his racer.

An electronic finish line helped Humphreys and derby chairman Gary Mills keep track of the fastest cars during the numerous heats.

Another improvement was the addition of an 8-foot section of track.

Lori Egan

Jake Holladay (left) and Ryon Barton, who placed fourth overall, watch their cars compete in one of Saturday's Pinewood Derby heats.

"We added another section to the track," Humphreys said, "because last year some of the faster cars were breaking apart as they hit the box because they didn't have a chance to slow down."

The pack purchased the electronic finish line two years ago.

The Pinewood Derby is a family tradition, said Chet Keeton, who is the Webelos den leader.

"My brother, who is six years older than me, still has the car he raced when he was a kid," Keeton said.

Keeton's son, Tyler, will probably display his car on one of the stands a coworker made for the den. Tyler won the award for the most original car — it looked like a Chiquita banana.

The award for the coolest car went to Chris Hernandez, who is a member of the Webelos den. His car looked like a Formula One racer.

"He did most of the work himself and that really caught the judges' eyes," Humphreys said.

"The Pinewood Derby isn't about winning or losing," the elder Keeton said. "It is about doing your best. These kids are just as excited when a buddy wins as they are when they do."

"When I won first place in a round I felt lucky, but I'm happy that Dylan won first place," said 8-year-old Justin Perkins.

Dylan Pierson took first place for the fastest car. Both Perkins and Pierson are members of the Bear den.

Troop heads coat drive

Cold weather keeps charities supplies low

Bridgett Siter

Boy Scout Troop 777 is helping replenish local charities' coat inventories that were depleted during the holidays with a drive.

"Operation Restock" is seeking donations of coats, blankets, hats, gloves and boots to replace supplies local charities distributed during the Christmas season and several weeks of unusually cold weather that followed.

"It's not too pleasant to think about people going cold at this time of year," said 13-year-old Billy Scott, an eighth-grader at Faith Middle School and a Scout with Troop 777. "We're going to try our best to get coats to everyone who needs them."

Scoutmaster Ken Caruthers said the idea for a coat drive was born out of sympathy in his own home.

"My daughter lost her coat at school one day. My heart broke when I saw her little shivering self come through that door," he said. "It made me think about all the kids who don't have a coat to wear at all — ever. The boys and I decided to see if we could do something about that."

"The boys" are seven Scouts from Troop 777, sponsored by the Abundant Faith Center in Columbus.

They contacted Valley Rescue Mission in Columbus to determine the extent of need in the

Students back in building

Renovations complete after year

Sgt. Michael Maddox

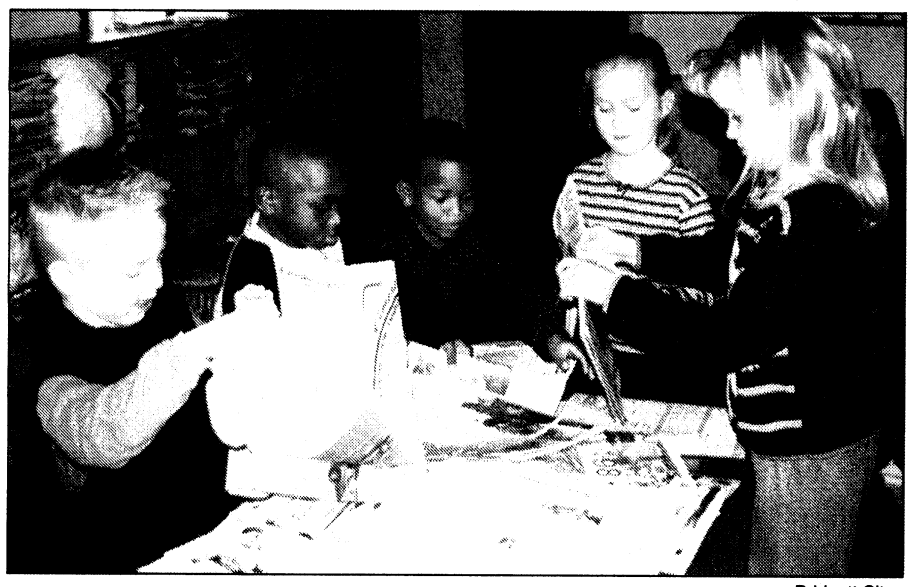
A year after the renovations at Dexter Elementary began, the students were finally able to go back to the school's classrooms Jan. 22.

During the renovations, the students had been attending classes in portable classrooms behind the elementary school.

Now, a year later, the work is done and everything looks great, said Dexter Principal Vicki Rogers.



"It seems lighter and brighter in the school — it's refreshing. We're real happy to be back in," she said. "Everybody has a smile on their face. I think we are all glad to be back under one roof again."

She said it almost seems like a totally new school with the installation of new wiring for the LAN system, a new heating and air conditioning system and floor and wall coverings.

"It was a total renovation, meaning more or less that they gutted the building and started over," Rogers said. "We haven't added any additional space, but we have made better use of the existing space by removing some walls to gain additional space.

"Because the lunches are prepared at Faith Middle School and brought in, we didn't need the space where our kitchen and pantry area was. So we also gained two additional class

Dexter club wins national award

Bridgett Siter

Dexter Elementary School's e-Club received the National Arbor Day Foundation's Education Award for educational contributions to the foundation's Arbor Day ideals.

Four students from the e-Club will accompany the club's sponsor, Earnestine Ezekiel, to the national awards ceremony at the Arbor Day Farm's Lied Conference Center in Lincoln, Neb., April 27-29.

"We're just ecstatic. We couldn't believe it. This is quite an honor for all of us, and an incredible opportunity for these children," said Ezekiel, the kindergarten teacher who's sponsored the e-Club since it began in 1994.

Each year the foundation recognizes outstanding projects and educational efforts that foster the ideals of responsible stewardship of the environment and ecological conservation.

The e-Club, with membership open to kindergartners and first-graders, went toe-to-toe with schools, civic organizations and major corporations nationwide to be recognized for its year-round efforts to teach Dexter students the importance of planting and recycling.

"It teaches us about saving our planet and keeping things clean around us," said club president, Delanie Doyle, 6 years old. "Even though it's work it's fun to do because we do it together in a club."

Ezekiel said her students first expressed an interest in starting an ecology club after completing a two-week unit on ecology and conservation in 1994.

"They just wouldn't stop, and I didn't want to stifle their interest," Ezekiel recalled. "They would spend their playtime picking up paper off the playground. All they wanted to talk with hands.

• If indoors, shut any open windows and stay as far away from them as possible.

Go to an interior room on the lowest floor, (like a closet or bathroom) if a basement is not available.

• Use overcoats or blankets for protection from flying debris.

• Have a battery powered radio to obtain information on current weather conditions.

If caught inside a public place like an office building or the commissary when a severe storm hits, it's recommended to stay put.

"You're safer in a building, even a large one, than a vehicle," Beighley said.

People should have a "disaster safety kit" on hand at home in the event of an emergency, said Gwen Baer, director of Emergency Services, West Central Georgia Chapter, American Red Cross.

Besides a battery operated radio, other supplies include flashlights with extra batteries, bottled water, a non-electric can opener and a supply of canned goods that can be prepared with no cooking and don't need refrigeration.

Also have a first aid kit, blankets, pillows and extra clothing, she said.

The post DPW also suggested having rubber or leather gloves, water purification tablets, and a waterproof container to secure valuables and important documents.

The American Red Cross encourages families to have a safety plan in place before a storm hits.

"They should have a plan so that they can gather at a safe place and know that all family members are safe and accounted for," Baer said.

"The most important thing is to stay calm, and help each other," she said. "Call the Red Cross if you have an immediate emergency need and tune into the radio for instructions for sheltering if need be."

The number for the post Red Cross station is 545-5194.

For more safety tips from the Weather Channel and the American Red Cross, go online to www.weather.com/safeside.

For storm-related emergencies, call 911. For all other questions, contact the post staff duty NCO at 545-2218 or the military police station at 545-5222.

"Perhaps severe weather will pass us by this year. But should it not, we want you to be informed and prepared," said Col. Keith Stelzer, DPW director.

rooms in that space for instructional support programs," she said.

Susie Reynolds, a fourth-grade teacher, said the wait to move back into the classrooms was worth it.

"It's so fresh, clean and teacher and student-friendly. We're really happy about all of the improvements," she said.

With the renovations complete, the next step to moving back in was the actual moving. It was accomplished in five days with lots of hard work.

"It was a collaborative effort made up of supply, maintenance and custodial workers across post," Rogers said. "People from our central office were participating — our assistant superintendent and budget officer were out here every day — plus, all of the Dexter staff. It was a big family project."

Now classes are being taught like before thanks to planning before the move.

"We made it a priority to get the teachers moved out and settled in their classrooms," Rogers said. "Everything is business as usual now."

The only thing left to complete the move is the removal of the trailers to the leasing company this week.

The work at Dexter was the last of the major renovation projects in Fort Benning schools, but there are several smaller projects still in progress, said Donna Ford, Fort Benning Schools' facilities manager.

"We still have a four-classroom addition at Loyd Elementary that we will hopefully start construction on in the next few months," she said.

Ford said another project that is almost complete is the installation of new carpeting at Faith Middle School. She said projects like these are a great achievement for Fort Benning.

"It's very rewarding to see all of the projects and renovations done," Ford said. "We have been very fortunate to be able to bring our schools up to the level that are now."

tricommunity area.

"It's been an extremely cold year this year, and naturally supplies are down now that Christmas is over," Caruthers said. "We decided to canvass the community and see if we can restock for the Valley Rescue Mission and any other local charity that might have a need."

The Scouts gathered about 20 coats last week in a door-to-door pick-up. Caruthers said they hope to collect at least 150 coats and jackets by mid-February.

"It's an ongoing project, just now gaining momentum," he said. "The idea is to get out there and help those less fortunate than ourselves, and you can't put a deadline on that. We'll keep at it."

Donation bins are located at the Piggly Wiggly warehouse on River Road, the Corner Market and Bait Shop on 54th Street, Publix on Bradley Parkway and Cub Foods, all in Columbus. Caruthers said the Troop will also schedule residential pick-ups.

was improving our campus. They basically organized the club on their own."

Seven years later, club members still meet twice each week, once to conduct club business, discuss projects and practice for their annual drama, and once to sort and bundle recyclable bags, newspapers and plastic lids. They maintain records of their findings and create graphs and charts on the computer.

"That way we're turning our activities into math lessons also," Ezekiel said. "And at the same time they can see the enormous amount of recycling that can take place over an entire year. They see that their work makes a big difference."

Club members also plant and cultivate six garden plots and a habitat for frogs, toads, goldfish and earthworms. The fruits of their labors — radishes, tomatoes, peppers and herbs — are often donated to the school's cafeteria and shared with Dexter families. The club's efforts have been recognized by the Georgia Department of Community Affairs, which awarded them the Keep Georgia Beautiful Award in 1999. The same year Ezekiel was named the Georgia Association of Young Children Teacher of the Year.

ask the judge

Capt. Aimee Hobby
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Can you please tell me who is allowed to claim the child and dependent care credit and how it works?

A: Generally, a taxpayer who maintains a household that includes one or more qualifying individuals (dependents under age 13 or dependents mentally or physically incapable of self-support) can take a credit for up to 20 to 30 percent of the work-related expenses the taxpayer paid for the care of the qualifying individuals. The expenses are subject to earned income and dollar limitations.

The credit is available to an individual who incurred employment-related expenses that enable gainful employment or search for employment. Qualifying individuals are: dependents who are under 13 when the care was provided and for whom you are entitled to a dependency exemption under IRC Section 151(c); your dependents are physically or mentally incapable of caring for themselves regardless of age, even if they have gross income in excess of the exemption amount.

The person can be a spouse or any other dependent. The disability is determined on a daily basis; so if the disability is removed during the year, you may still claim the credit for that part of the year the dependent is disabled.

The person must be incapable of caring for hygienic or nutritional needs or require full time attention of another for safety.

There is a dollar limit on the amount of your work-related expenses that you can use to figure the credit. This limit is $2,400 for one qualifying person or $4,800 for two or more qualifying people.

The credit is the applicable percentage times the expenses paid. The percentage is 30 percent reduced, but not below 20 percent, by one percentage point for each $2,000 (or fraction of $2,000) by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income exceeds $10,000.

If the AGI is $10,000 or less, the taxpayer gets the maximum of 30 percent; but if the AGI exceeds $28,000, the taxpayer gets the minimum of 20 percent. Regardless of the actual expenses, the maximum dollar amount to be applied to the percentages is $2,400 for one qualifying individual and $4,800 for two or more qualifying individuals.

The dollar limitation is reduced by the aggregate amount excluded from gross income under IRC Section 129 for dependent care assistance.

The dollar limitation also is limited to earned income of the taxpayer or spouse (if spouse's earned income is less) if the earned income is less than the $2,400 or $4,800.

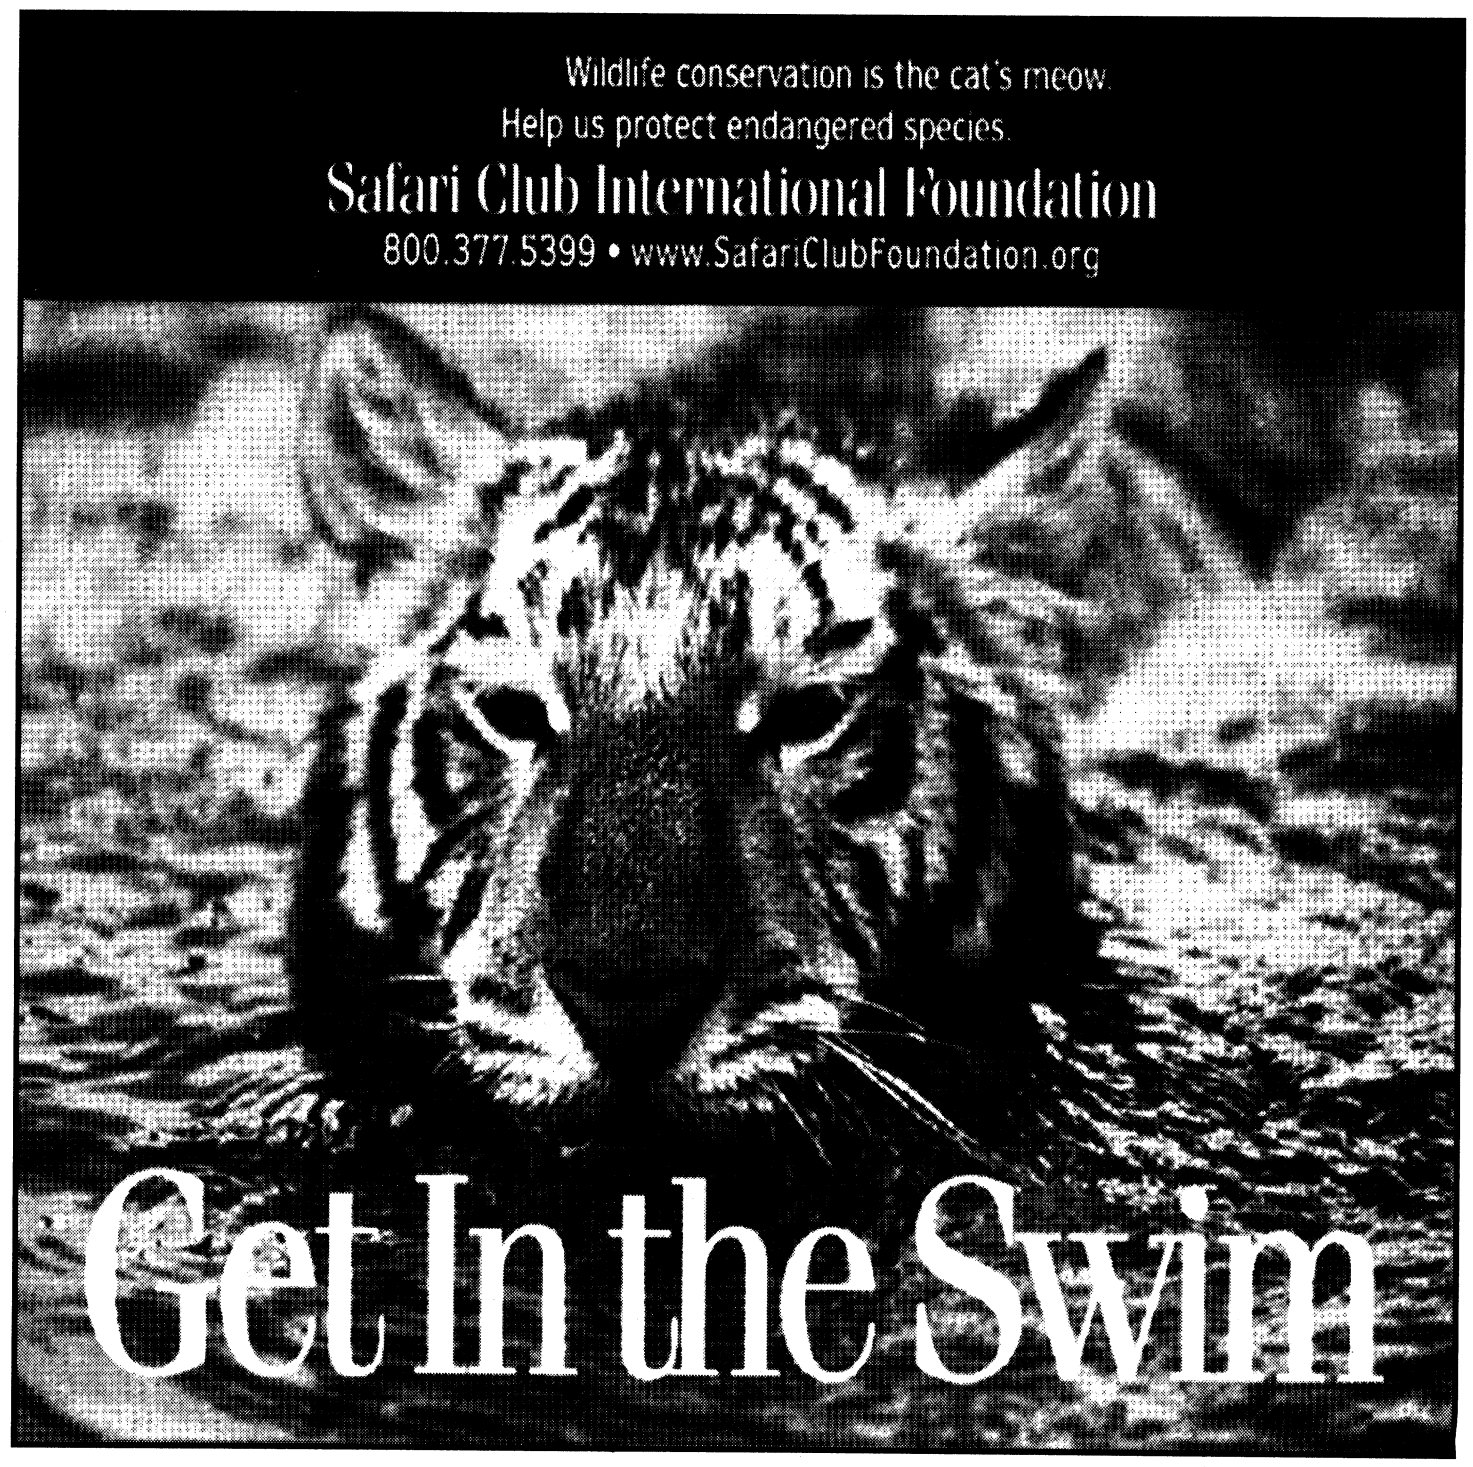
Earned income includes wages, salaries, tips, other employee compensation and self-employment income. It also includes disability pensions. Earned income is determined without regard to community property laws.

It does not include unemployment compensation, social security payments or worker's compensation.

No credit will be allowed unless the name, address and ID number of the care provider is included in the taxpayer's return. This information is provided on Schedule 2 of Form 1040A, Form 2441, or Form W-10, IRC Section 21(e)(9).

If the information is not provided, the credit will not be allowed unless it is shown that the taxpayer exercised due diligence in attempting to provide the information.

Where the child care provider does not have a social security number because he is a foreign national, the taxpayer should indicate that the provider does not have a social security number.



For more information, see IRS Publication 503, Child and Dependent Care Expenses, or call or stop by the Fort Benning Tax Center.

The center is located in Building 2826, next to Bernheim Dental Clinic. Parking is available at the Main Post Bowling Center. The center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. For more information, call 545-4267.

Brigade helps develop confidence

Partners plan to build course for campus

Wilson Elementary School

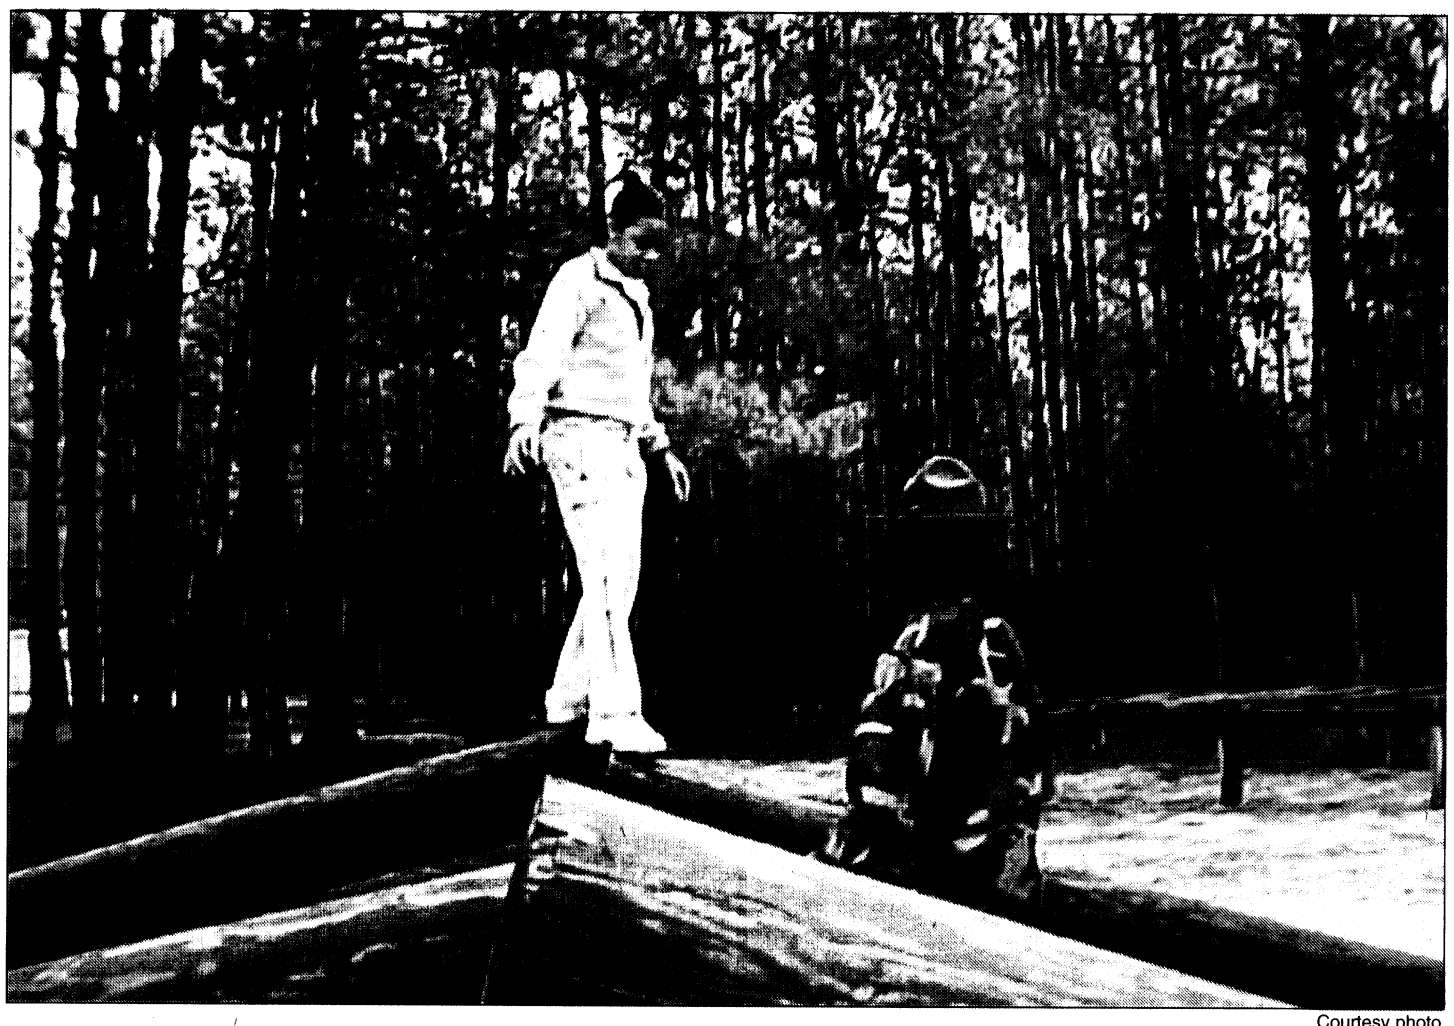
Wilson School's partner in education, Headquarters Service Company, Basic Combat Training Brigade is helping plan and create a confidence course for students.

The course, which will be located on the school's campus, will serve a variety of functions. In addition to providing physical training, the course will help to foster teamwork and build leadership skills.

Students of all ages will have the opportunity to use the course, and it will be integrated into different areas of the curriculum.

The confidence course has been in the planning stage for several months.

Under the leadership of Staff Sgt. Keith Hall, a drill sergeant with BCTB, students researched the different types of courses in place at BCTB and determined which would best suit the needs of the Wilson student body.



Part of the research involved student representatives visiting different courses. While exploring the obstacle course and the confidence course, student representatives Kazue Takemoto, Maneca Jackson and Andrew Ivey made notes, shot video footage and took digital pictures.

Their findings were presented to a committee of faculty, student and parent representatives and reviewed for consideration.

The idea for the course was a joint effort between the Partners in Education, BCTB and Wilson School.

"We wanted something unique to our partnership that would also be beneficial for our students," said Phyllis Parker, principal. "The course will help instill the importance of teamwork and leadership in our students. I can see that positively affecting all aspects of their lives."

The course is expected to be completed and dedicated in the early spring.

Good Morning Wildcats brings news to Wilson students

Wilson Elementary School

When the clock strikes 8:40 each day, every classroom at Wilson School is tuned in to Good Morning Wildcats, a student-produced newscast.

The program, which airs on closed circuit television, is shown each morning and contains information that relates to a variety of topics.

Enrichment students anchor and produce the program with the help of media specialist Wanda Person and enrichment teacher Margaret Koger. The format of the program is simple, but informative and useful to the student body.

Each program begins with the singing of Wilson's school song. A Spanish segment follows with a review of the week's Spanish vocabulary.

Principal Phyllis Parker said she wanted a schoolwide focus on foreign language and saw the closed circuit broadcast as an excellent way to reinforce the words students learn daily in their classrooms.

Evelyn Montgomery, school guidance counselor, contributes information each day that helps to reinforce the character development lessons taught in guidance classes.

Montgomery also provides the students with a "Test Taking Tip of the Day" in an effort to help students prepare for the CTBS Terra Nova, the standardized test administered to all Fort Benning students each spring.

A favorite segment among students is "Parker's Pertinent Points." In this part of the broadcast, Parker gives students pointers that will help to make their day more successful.

The "Word of the Day" segment follows and students are introduced to new vocabulary and encouraged to use it throughout the day.

"Willie the Wandering Web Cat" is the focus of the next part of the newscast.

In an effort to have more parents and students use the school's web site, Educational Technologist Melanie Keating hides a graphic of Willie the Web Cat in a different spot on the site each week.

Students search for Willie, and by visiting the many links on the web site are able to learn something in the process. The student who finds Willie first each week is highlighted during this part of the broadcast.

The program concludes with the student anchors leading the school in the Pledge of Allegiance and then reminding all students to "Drop Everything and Read," the sustained silent reading program in which the entire school participates each day.

"Having the morning program starts our day in a very positive way. Students enjoy seeing their peers anchoring the show and it is a very effective way to get announcements out to the students. Most importantly, I see the program as a teaching tool," Parker said.

Students agree. "I like learning the Spanish and using the word of the day. Being an anchor was also fun," said fifth-grader Ashley Foti.

Football teams model for family teamwork

Chaplain (Capt.) Daniel Petsch
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment

reflections

I hate to admit it, but I must confess that I'm a diehard Detroit Lions football fan. Yes, I know I have your deepest sympathies.

As long as I can remember, I have been a Lions supporter. Year after year I begin the football season with high hopes that maybe this will be the year when the Lions win it all.

Oops! Not this year, I'm afraid. Once again, Sunday after Sunday, my hopes are dashed to pieces.

Therefore, since we are nearing the end of the football season, I thought it appropriate to share a little philosophical insight into the game.

Football is a family-friendly game. It's a sport from which we, as military leaders, can draw many ideas and strategies to strengthen our families.

Consider your home team.

You likely have one or two caring player-coaches — that's your Mom and Dad. You may have veteran stars — your preteens or young teens. You may have promising rookies — your younger kids. You may even have a bonus baby or two. Since you cannot trade, waive or fire either player-coach or any player on your team, how do you build a winning team?

You build today. Today's championship teams take small steps every day to build team unity and teamwork. Team unity is strengthened when player-coaches take time to listen, to be encouragers and to pray for and with one another.

Teamwork is developed when player-coaches teach and players learn new skills by doing tasks together. So how do you create the winning balance? How do you build relationships for greater team unity?

Start small. Stay simple. Do something today and everyday to build your team.

You build for tomorrow. As a player-coach, your personality, passions and priorities are probably well known by the other player-coach and the players on your team.

What are the rookie and veteran stars seeing and hearing from you these days? Perceptive young eyes, ears and minds often look, listen and learn more than most of us realize.

Ask yourself, "What views and values am I giving to my team today, which will empower, equip and enable them to make good decisions tomorrow?

You build team unity. Winning teams communicate. Coaches communicate with one another and with their players. Players communicate with one another and with their coaches.

Winning teams will take frequent 20-30 second arm-on-the-shoulder or hand-in-hand, face-to-face huddles to convey information, inspiration and instructions.

Winning teams also show appreciation and affection. Huddles are places for team members to give each other a pat on the back.

Winning teams have player-coaches and players who say things like, "Nice job!" "I really like it when you..." "You're terrific!" "It means a lot to me that you..." "You've made my day!" "That was great!" "Thanks for helping me..." "I love you!"

Winning teams are seldom penalized for "holding." However, some "holding" may help your home team build greater unity. Try this:

• Hold evening training table reports. Ask team members to take two minutes to tell about an especially noteworthy event in their day.

Other team members will listen, learn and affirm the one sharing.

• Hold team meetings. Talk about team issues and ideas, strategy and plans.

Have team members offer positive comments and compliments about things they have appreciated or observed lately about each player and player-coach.

Or have each team member create and share with the team a crayon drawing or watercolor painting of a recent team event he or she especially enjoyed.

• Hold team sundae nights. Enjoy ice cream and a funny football blooper video or another family film favorite.

Huddle up and do a little holding. Give your teammates a pat on the back and cheer in the ear. Winning player-coaches and players support one another's success.

Winning team members remember the old phrase, "The word team has no 'I' in it."

Here then, is the way to build a winning team and tradition as a military family.

Build today. Build for tomorrow. Build team unity.

Go Lions, Go!

As I looked into the eyes of the teen-ager in front of me, I reflected on all the pain and embarrassment this young adult had caused by stealing.

For taking a small item from the PX, the teen was detained for an hour by the store manager.

Next the military police brought the teen to the MP station and booked and fingerprinted the youth for a total of two hours. Then the parents were called to come and pick up their child from the station.

Later, the teen had a mandatory meeting with the U. S. Army Infantry Center and school command sergeant major for an hour.

The youth was required to conduct 30 hours of community service and to attend six hours of professional counseling with me.

This did not include being grounded by the parents, the forfeiture of an allowance or being restricted.

Forty hours, one work week, gone for something that could have been purchased for less than five dollars.

The reasons for taking the items fell into the usual patterns.

"I didn't know." "I wanted it, but I didn't have the money." "My friends urged me to do it." "I didn't think I would get caught." "I wanted to know if I could get away with it." "I wanted to help a friend." "I got the urge to take it, so I took it."

Taking something that doesn't belong to you without permission or payment is stealing, regardless of its actual worth.

To steal is to break one of God's commands (Exodus 20:15) . There are alternatives to stealing.

Are you or one of your family members struggling with the impulse to steal? Counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 545-1760 or e-mail USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Soldiers join quest for cookies

Annual fun run boosts Girl Scout cookie sales

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Local Girl Scouts won't be the only ones at tomorrow's Girl Scout Cookie Run and Fun Walk.

Members of the Fort Benning community are planning to take part in the annual event as well.

Various post soldiers have already signed up as runners for the 5K, said Rosimar Melendez, communications specialist, Girl Scouts of Concharty Council, Inc.

"I think their participation is very important," Melendez said.

"Our community deals so much with the soldiers. To see them out there makes them become even more a part of the community," she said.

There will be a group of more than 20 participants from the International Student Training Detachment.

"We want them to see how American families interact and how families here train girls in leadership roles at an early age," said Mary Renteria, information program officer, ISTD.

The main purpose of the event is to help promote the Girls Scouts' biggest fundraising effort, selling Girl Scout cookies. The run and walk officially kick off the delivery of cookies sold by troops to their local communities.

Melendez said although Girl Scout cookie sales are the organization's main fundraiser, this activity only pulls in about half of the money the troops need.

Money from registrations fees for Saturday's event will support more than 4,000 Girl Scouts in a 12-county area, including Fort Benning.

The money will go towards activities, events and programming for local Girl Scouts as well as funding classes for volunteers.

The two-mile "Fun Walk" is a new feature of the 2001 event. Melendez said this will hopefully encourage people to come down who are interested in participating but aren't runners.

This year's walk will also give more Girl Scouts a chance to participate, Melendez said.

"It's a way to get out, have fun, and get the girls motivated," she said.

Members of post troop 12 will be there. "The girls are excited," said troop leader Andrea Graham. "A lot of moms are going with their girls too."

Another new feature of the event is the location. Instead of starting the race at Lakebottom Park as in years past, the runners will line up for the race in downtown Phenix City.

The 5K run, an event sanctioned by USA Track and Field, will take off at 9 a.m. in front of Regions Bank, 1200 Broad Street, Phenix City.

There will be awards presented to top male and female race finishers and to participants in all age categories.

The walk will start at 9:15 a.m. from the same location as the run.

Wheelchair participants are welcome to join in both events.

"It's a fun thing to do as a family.

Heat burns Spurs, wins third in row

Best defense decides game's victor

Spc. William A. Graves

From the upcoming Ravens and Giants Superbowl to pee wee baseball, a sound defense wins championships. It is no different in Youth Services basketball.

The Heat and Spurs knew that fact before the 10- and 11-year-old YS game Saturday at the YS gym.

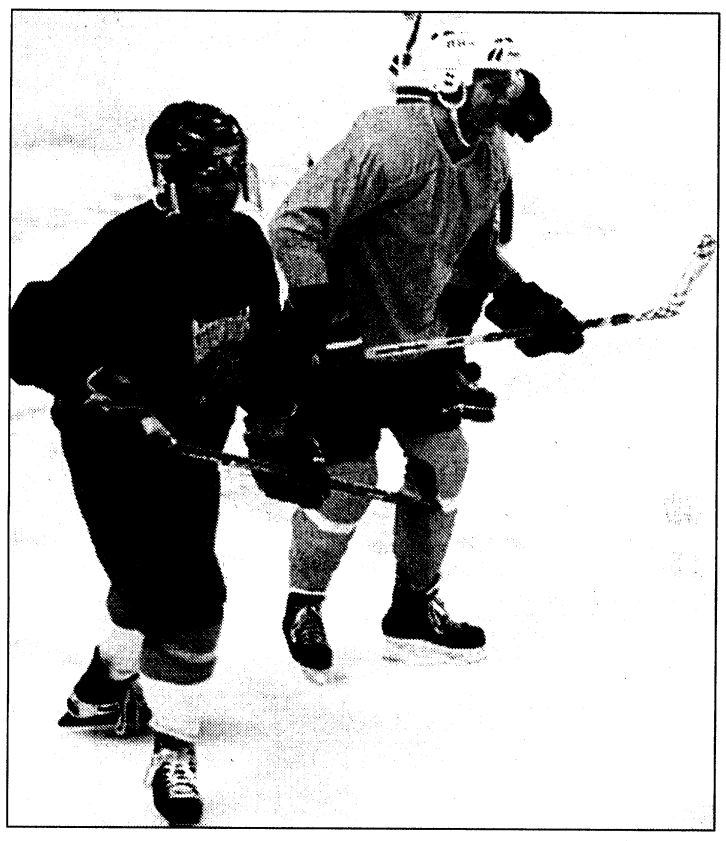
Both applied the full-court press to perfection and caused numerous traveling violations, jump balls and inadvertent fouls, but the Heat's defensive heat was better and rendered a 24-11 victory.

Anthony Wright Jr. and Andrew Rodriguez scored half of the Heat points and helped propel it to a 3-0 record.

Rodriguez scored five points, but it wasn't easy.

"It was a hard game," he said. "We were lucky we got a couple of good breaks. They had a really good trap."

As a result of the Spurs' press, he said his teammates were reminded they need to pass the ball often instead of dribbling through three or four people at a time.



The Spurs' tenacious defense caused Wright to commit four fouls, but he overcame them and scored seven points.

He said the Heat can get better.

"We have to keep playing good defense and score when we get good layup chances," he

Players drop puck, skate into 'Snake Pit'

They talk about "cheap thrills" and reliving "glory days" like a bunch of old soldiers. They plot attacks and applaud defensive maneuvers like combat veterans.

And that they are, combat veterans of another kind — veterans of the ice, soldiers who strapped on skates and went to battle on ice long before they donned combat boots.

No one knows exactly how many there are. Some say a dozen. Some say 20. There's no official count, just as there's no official score keeper. Just a handful of soldiers and former soldiers who join other local amateurs for a good-natured game of ice hockey at the "Snake Pit" — Columbus' Civic Center, where the Columbus Cottonmouths clear the ice twice a week to make room for those who want to play just for the fun of it.

"We're just a bunch of guys who love the game," said Mike Starrett, former Air Force NCO and assistant principal at Fort Benning's Stowers Elementary. "We're just out to have a good time, and it's a cheap way to relive the glory days."

Most of the players learned to play hockey at a very early age. Some, like Starrett played competitively in high school and college. Occasionally an old pro will show up, like Marcel Richard, former forward for the Cottonmouths.

1st Lt. Mike Kim, an occupational therapist at Martin Army Community Hospital, played in-line hockey in college.

A novice on ice, he recently joined the growing number of amateurs showing up for a shot at the puck.

"It's totally different than in-line hockey, and I've had very little experience on ice skates, but the guys are really nice, very forgiving. I'm having a lot of fun," Kim said.

There's no rhyme or reason to the line-up, no age limit, no coaches, no practices and no one calling the shots — literally.

"It's generally a very high scoring game, unlike professional hockey," Starrett said. "But no one really keeps score officially. Someone yells out the score and the other team argues with them. Very casual."

It's ice hockey's version of a pick-up game, and anyone's welcome to play or watch. In fact, Cottonmouths' equipment manager Randy Scrimpshire, himself a Monday night amateur player, recommends this kind of action for those who have never learned to watch the game.

"Hockey can be a hard game to follow if you're watching it on TV," Scrimpshire said. "If you watch it live you'll get a better understanding of the game. You can see everything happening at once and it all comes together."

It all "comes together" most Monday and Thursday evenings, when schedules allow. Players ante up $15 apiece to cover rink fees, divide into teams and don gold and blue shirts, courtesy of a local sports store that helped launch amateur night three years ago. Otherwise, players provide their own equipment.

They play from 7 to 9 p.m., two periods instead of three like professional hockey.

They admit to "improvising" on the rules when it suits them, and they try to keep one thing in mind:

"It ain't professional hockey," Scrimpshire laughed. "If you knock a guy down, you help him back up and tell him you're sorry. It's not too physical, but we're having a good time."

Fitness expert offers spring time fit tips

Exercises help turn flabby into fit

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

With the warmer months approaching, people are looking beyond their indoor winter projects to getting out to enjoy outdoor activities.

Now is the time when people should begin exercising so they are able to enjoy their outdoor activities without being sore or injuring themselves, Army fitness experts say.

For soldiers, exercising is no problem, it's mandatory. But for their family members and others it may not be as easy to get into the swing of things.

"The biggest thing with exercising is you want to make it a habit," said Sgt. 1st Class Cathy Parrish, a instructor and writer for the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School. "Being in the military it's easy to keep a PT schedule, but on the civilian side it is easy to say, 'It's the holidays or family is here.' It is easy to be laid back and eat a lot and not do a lot of physical activity. This is what you don't want to do.

"You want to condition your body at least three times each week."

The workouts do not have to be intense to do the body good.

"You don't have to be sweating and almost out of breath in order to consider it a workout," Parrish said. "If you can workout 20 minutes a day, three times each week it will help."

Conditioning before sporting activities is important to avoid injuries.

"People say 'I'm going to lose weight, I'm going to go out and do this,'" she said. "Then they go out and do a three-mile walk when they haven't done anything all winter. Doing too much too fast can lead to shin splints or stress fractures. You want to build up your strength and endurance."

She said moderation is key.

"You don't want to go out and do an intense workout for an hour for the first time," Parrish said. "You will get really sore and it will be harder to keep doing it.

"You want to gradually build up, even if you start at only 10 minutes a day," she said.

Parrish recommended walking as a good exercise for people just starting out.

"The best low impact exercise you can do is walking," she said. "But biking and the stair stepper are also good exercises."

Stretching is also an important aspect of conditioning as well as giving yourself time to recover.

Working with the fitness school for the past month, 1st Lt. Zachary Zmayefski said the school is helping him a great deal.

"I am getting better on the regularity," Zmayefski, who is helping out at the fitness school while in between schools, said. "That is helping me out with my cardiovascular endurance and muscle strength quite a bit. As far as flexibility, that just comes with time."

Parrish said no matter how much you work out and what you do, if you don't eat right or you take in more calories than are burned the purpose of exercising is defeated.

"You should eat foods from each food group every day," she said. "You shouldn't skip meals either.

"If you do, your body goes into a starvation mode and your metabolism decreases."

When that happens calories are not burned as rapidly. She said exercise and eating right is a must to stay healthy.

"Eating good foods and doing proper exercises are all intertwined," Parrish said. "If someone rides a bike for a long way and then eats at a fast food restaurant they defeat the purpose. You may look healthy on the outside, but inside you may not be.

"Basically you are what you eat."

Hunting disaster leaves scars, teaches lesson

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
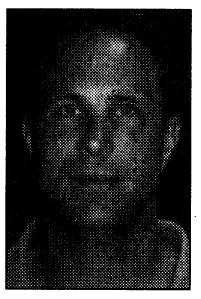
Outdoor Recreation

Sometimes unacceptable things happen when hunting, though hunters don't like to discuss it, like taking a bad shot and wounding an animal instead of killing it. This happened when I was out hunting with a novice hunter.

I am not proud of this story, but I write it in hopes that the same thing doesn't happen to you.

When I found out my brother in-law, Mark, wanted to hunt, I was enthusiastic. He lives in the city and doesn't have much time to shoot or enjoy the peace and quiet of the woods through hunting.

Last year we went a couple of times during his quick visits. I had briefly gone through basic safety and hunting techniques with him, but we really didn't talk at length. He managed to take a nice seven-point buck, but his shot was poor. After searching for more than an hour we managed to collect the animal. Mark was very excited and insisted on getting his first buck mounted, which I arranged.



Preparations for the 2000 deer season went well. Mark added several "must have" items to his hunting gear and when we talked on the phone, he would remind me of how he couldn't wait to hunt.

Thanksgiving came and he arrived chomping at the bit to hit the woods.

I arranged to hunt on some private land I manage, but we had little success. We were after mature bucks and weren't seeing them.

One day we were running late so we sat in a couple of stands I had behind my house. There was plenty of deer sign, so why not. We briefly talked about the stand he would use and when the deer might move.

We had double-checked the zero on his rifle earlier in the week. His shot groups were a little loose but not bad. He was able to hit a 6-inch diameter circle regularly. I was a little concerned that he really needed to practice more, but I didn't have the heart to tell him he couldn't hunt after driving all that way.

The thought of hunting deer so close to the house was really neat, so by 3:30 p.m. we were in the stands ready to hunt. He was in a nice ladder stand and I in my climber about 400 yards away. I sat there half asleep watching squirrels, which is usually the case, thinking how peaceful it was around my house.

At 4:20 p.m. an unexpected shot rang out. It startled me so much I almost jumped out of my stand. Then a second shot and I heard the sound of an animal running away.

I thought to myself, what in the world did he shoot at? He must have missed. A few minutes passed and I saw him walking around. I had forgotten to tell him to stay in his stand until the hunt was over. I watched him for a few minutes fumbling around; he was looking for the animal he had shot at.

I climbed down and headed in his direction. He said he shot a nice 10-point buck and was sure he hit it twice.

I had my doubts after hearing the animal run away. I asked him where the animal was when he shot and where was the blood trail. He said he hadn't found the blood trail yet, but the deer jumped over a fence 50 yards broadside to him; he watched it for a few seconds then it headed straight at him. He waited until it was 30 yards away and shot at its chest then shot again as it ran past. I asked, why he didn't shoot when it was 50 yards broadside. He said there was a bush in the way and he wanted to let it get close. There were not a significant amount of bushes to prevent a good shot, but with his inexperience and my lack of instruction, he didn't know the significance of the shot he took. I had taken it for granted that he knew when and where to shoot an animal.

Ever since I was a boy, my grandfather and father had told me to wait for the perfect shot or don't shoot. But now we needed to find the animal. That was what was most important.

Mark showed me where he had shot and the direction the deer ran. I followed the tracks for 75 yards on my hands and knees. Finally I found the first traces of blood. My worst fear — the blood was bright red indicating he had hit an artery and it was not a good vitals shot. Judging by the way it moved I guessed he had hit its shoulder, crippling it.

As I followed the weak blood trail there was no talking. I was upset at him and myself for the things I had taken for granted.

I could only guess where he hit the buck as the track continued. As the darkness closed around us I questioned myself; I wondered is the animal dead or should I wait until tomorrow? Maybe he is bedded down. What if the coyotes got to him first? What if it rains? The thought of the magnificent animal suffering made my heart hurt so we pressed on.

Tracking by flashlight was slow and we were both tired. Mark asked if we should go home; he didn't know, as long as there was a trail I could not stop. Two hundreds yards and two and a half hours into the track we jumped the deer. It sounded as if it could barely run.

Again I thought of my father saying you cannot leave a wounded animal in the woods. We pressed on. I could not stop as long as there was the slightest chance of collecting the animal. We jumped the buck one more time and it crested the hill into a pasture. At that point I lost the trail. For four hours it had taken us through the thickest cover around. My eyes and flashlight had given out. I hoped that Mark had learned a valuable lesson.

The walk to the house was a quiet one. What could I say? But as I walked, I thought of all the lessons my father and grandfather had taught me. Mark's father didn't hunt, so how could he know how I was grieving. I didn't sleep that night. My only thought was of the animal and if it was suffering. I was the most experienced hunter; did I do the right thing? There were a lot of things I could have done differently that's for sure. One thing was certain, I would have to look again in the morning.

Morning came slowly. I had Mark hunt with a friend the next morning and at first light I was standing at the spot where I had lost the blood trail the night before. As I stood there, I thought where would I go if I was a buck? I wouldn't go in the open. I would look for a place to hide and heal.

I walked 30 yards towards the thickest cover around and saw a large fresh print among many others. Could this be my buck?

There was no blood, but with nothing else to go on I kept following the tracks. I crawled through 50 yards of briars and vines, making my face and hands bleed. I came to a small opening, on the other side was more thick cover. Scanning the cover I saw what looked like a rack and ears. The buck had bedded.

No sooner did I see him, than he turned and made eye contact then bolted. I raised my gun. No shot! There was not even enough time to take my gun off safe.

I ran after him taking ten strides or so. A thorny vine wrapped around my neck and face knocking me to the ground. I jumped back up and continued running; I could still see the buck running in the pasture. Struggling to get out of the vines I managed to find a hole.

The buck was still moving across the pasture — 150 yards away. Quickly I concentrated, placing the cross hairs on the front of the buck, then fired. A lucky shot. The buck crumpled in mid-stride. As I stood there gasping for air, bleeding profusely from my neck and face, I was relieved, but sad the deer had suffered.

Many lessons I learned as a boy flashed through my mind.

Mark was right. It was a beautiful 10-point buck. One I will never forget. He had hit it just below the shoulder breaking its leg. Eventually it would have died and the coyotes would have gotten another meal.

Sometimes unacceptable things like this happen when hunting. In fact most hunters detest the idea of wounding an animal, and do everything they can to prevent it. Sometimes though, we need a reminder.

So the next time someone comes in from town, spend a little extra time with your new hunter.

There were a lot of things I took for granted that I thought he knew. This might not have happened had I taken the time to teach him more and not taken it for granted that he knew the basics of hunting.

The day before he left, we spent several hours covering everything I could think of. He listened intently.

Two months later, I still think of the ordeal and probably always will, and I will always have scars on my neck and arms of a lesson relearned.

Runners: Participate in fun run

You can even bring your pet," Melendez said.

"If you don't have anything else to do, come out and support a wonderful organization," she said.

Heat: Slide past Spurs Saturday

said.

He said all Spurs practice sessions are paying dividends. Players are much better since the start of the season, and teamwork has been and will be key to success.

"Whatever comes our way, we'll be ready," Wright said.

The teams felt each other out in the first period. Kendall Ingraham, who finished with a team high eight points, sank the only shot for the Spurs to give them a 2-0 lead.

Play picked up for the Heat in the second period. Myron Sanders had two buckets, and his team scored 11 unanswered points to make it 11-2 at the half.

Ingraham energized a Spurs comeback in the third period with six points and brought his team within seven.

However, Wright and Patrick Herold shut the door on the Spurs with four points each in the fourth.

Coach Anthony Wright was proud of his son and team after the game.

"This is the best team I've had so far," the coach said. "They love to work together as a team. They are very teachable and unselfish. They're fighters who get the job done."

He said the Spurs' pressure gave his team a challenge, and many players picked up fouls.

"We're getting better each game though," the coach said. "I feel confident we'll go undefeated."

Spurs coach Roland Sydney said his team learned a great deal as it fell to 1-2 for the season.

"I have to substitute better and set up better matchups for them," Sydney said. "We have to make the easy shots when we get the opportunity and not give up intensity."

Still, he said he was proud of his team, especially its work on the trap.

"My kids played hard," Sydney said. "They're getting better every game."

Researchers try on gear

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Don Leo, a researcher from Virginia Tech, feels right at home in soldier gear.

Scientists learn about soldiers' heavy loads

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

More than 40 scientists and researchers associated with the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency visited Fort Benning last week to gather information for an upcoming project.

DARPA is the central research and development organization for the Department of Defense.

The goal of the visit to the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab was to get an idea of what being a soldier is like and the day-to-day events that make up a mission in the field, said Dr. Ephrahim Garcia, a program manager for DARPA.

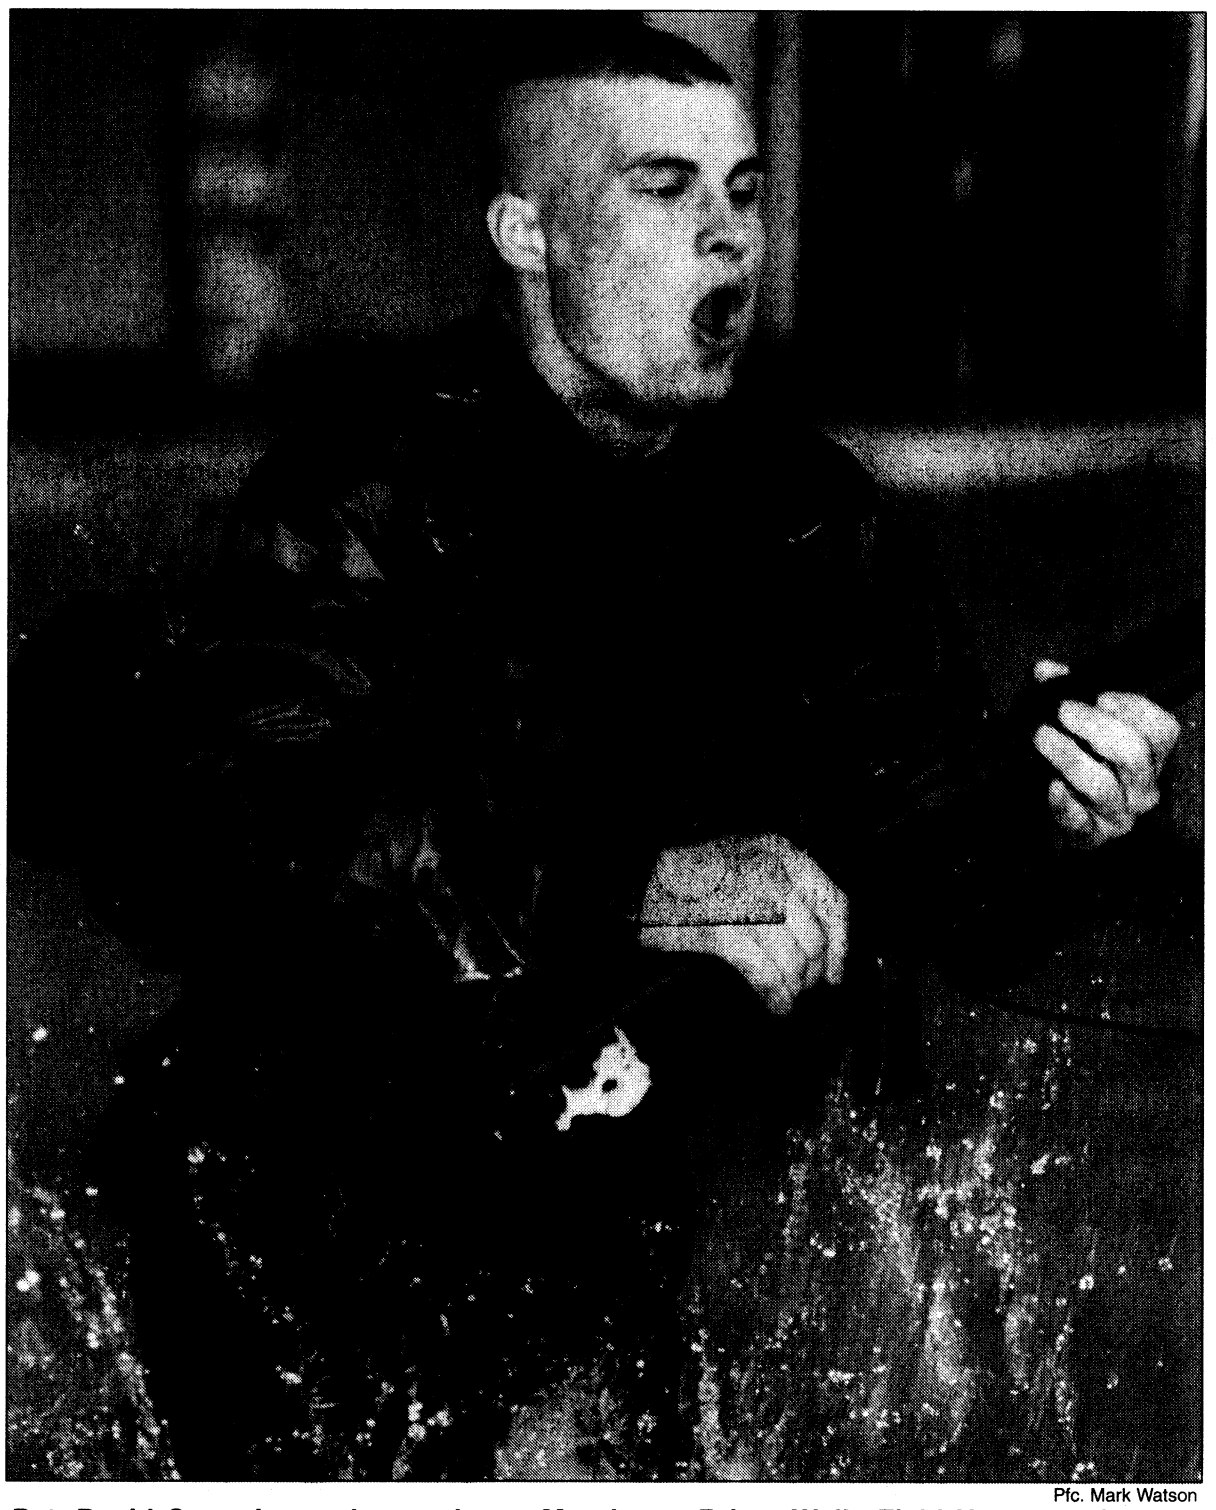
"We brought all of our investigators, or what the Marines call our '10-pound brains,' out here to get them a little bit uncomfortable — to give them a glimpse of what military folks do for a living," said Garcia. "Each person is carrying about 60 pounds of stuff and I think that's a tremendous education."

Col. Mitch Poodry, deputy director of the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, said the members of his staff were more than happy to help the researchers with their mission.

"We have a bunch of scientists and engineers here of whom 95 percent of them have never been in the military let alone wear military stuff," he said.

"We suited them up to let them see what a 35-pound ruck, flak vests, kevlar helmets and M-16s feel like while they walk through a tactical exercise.

"This will just give them a brief taste of what a dismounted soldier has to do on a very brief mission. They need to be able to feel the actual stress a soldier feels when he's under a load," said Poodry.



Along with the investigators, representatives from different branches of the service like the Army Research Office and the Army Research Labs, were on-hand to experience soldiering first-hand.

The data collected by the group is the first step in a project being developed by the personnel at DARPA.

"This is the kickoff meeting for a program where we are try-

Delay sought due to busy summer surge

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The status of a contract award for Fort Benning's public works and logistical functions was one issue on the agenda as post officials met with Training and Doctrine Command authorities this week at Fort Monroe, Va.

A key concern is the tentative plan to turn over the functions to a contractor on Aug. 1, in the heat of Fort Benning's "summer surge" when its schools are running at top capacity, 40 percent of its families are moving out of quarters, and units have planned deployments.

"We are going up there to ensure that TRADOC and the other authorities involved understand the intricate details associated with a transition of this magnitude," Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, said before leaving Fort Benning Tuesday.

"We will emphasize that there are certain decisions that have to be made by certain dates if we are to take care of our work force, while ensuring total mission accomplishment. There can be no degradation of our mission."

The Army Nurse Corps turns 100 years old today.

Army nurses, past and present, celebrated the birthday with a dinner Saturday at the Officers' Club.

Special guests included two nurses from World War II and Brig. Gen. William Bester, the Chief of the Army Nurse Corps and the first male to serve in that position.

Frances Nett, 82, and retired Maj. Bernice Gay, 91, were among more than 57,000 nurses who served during World War II.

Nett, who served on active duty from January 1941 until July 1945, noted numerous advancements made in the military nursing arena since Remember Virginia's letter to the New York Post?

Virginia wanted to know if there was really a Santa Claus, and her dad told her to write to the editor of the New York Post. If you read it in the Post it must be true, he said.

Someone had planted a seed of doubt in Virginia's mind. She was teetering on the brink of disillusionment, and it was up to the Post to right her world.

By the time thousands of readers had finished reading Virginia's letter, they were all holding their breath, praying the editor would respond in kind. There was something much larger than a little girl's fantasy at stake here. And the editor got it right with seven simple words — "Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus."

Virginia's innocence was safe for another year.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa Claus. Over the years it's come to mean so much more. There's still goodness. All is not lost. You just have to believe.

That was 100 years ago. Enter a new generation — a 21st century Virginia. We'll call her name Dorian.

She, too, is looking for answers to the questions that are laying heavy on her mind. But not about Santa.

At 14, she's concerned about issues some would believe teens don't really care about — abortion, education, conservation and less tangible ideals, like morality, accountability, respect and honesty.

Dorian's been reading for eight years and what she's read in the newspaper and watched on national TV has left her wondering if her generation will survive the nation's downward spiral of morality.

She's disillusioned, disappointed and teetering on the brink of apathy. Like Virginia she's looking for someone to restore her faith.

She too wrote a letter, this time to the new president of the United States.

"Mr. President, please make us proud," she wrote.

If you read between the lines in Dorian's letter — and similar letters from her classmates, printed below — you'll recognize a plea for assurance that all is not lost — that there are still leaders out there who are worthy of being called heroes, leaders Dorian's generation can be proud of.

She's not expecting the kind of reply the Post's editor dispatched. She's just hoping the new administration will set an example her generation will be proud to follow.

Dorian thinks character still counts. She's hoping George. W. Bush will lead with integrity and earn her respect and her vote, because Dorian and millions of her peers will be old enough to vote in four years.

Dear Mr. President: Make us proud

Editor's note: The following are excerpts from letters written by eighth-graders in Lisa Maddler's language arts class at Faith Middle School.

In November the students were asked to imagine they had five minutes to speak with the new president. What issues would they choose to discuss?

"I'm hoping you will improve our nation instead of creating more problems. Please, make us proud. I have a very strong opinion about abortion. I consider it the same as murder. Congress has a bill waiting for you to sign to alleviate abortion."

— Dorian Newby

"Why can't schools be safer? I'm scared to death of going to high school next year.
I have a black friend who is scared to go to his locker because he's afraid he'll get beat up."

— Jay Chapman

"There are so many issues harming today's teens. Adults are blaming video games, movies and songs.

"I feel some parents aren't teaching their kids right from wrong. What do you think you could do to help?"

— Ashley Suber

"I am very concerned about our parks. They're being used as dumps by people who don't care. Little kids are at risk. My suggestion is to get a group of people to clean up the parks."

— Megan Nicole Jones

"Please help my friends and kids around the nation. So many kids are caught up in drugs. We need stronger laws and consequences."

— Evelyn Ramos

"I want to ask you if you will try to stop military travel. I never see my dad because he's a drill sergeant and he works on weekends and holidays. It's hard when your dad is always gone and you're always on the move."

— Ashley Hall

"I worry about being safe. If you've made it this far, you have to be good at something, and I think you would be good at making this a safer place to live.

"Please make it harder to buy guns and do something about drugs."

— Jamie Roberts

Instructor responds to SOA-Watch protest

Staff Sgt. Robert Phillipson
Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation

commentary

I am amazed as I sit looking at the computer screen, wondering if anyone could possibly be taking this seriously.

Some take advantage of the Internet and its lack of regulation to fraudulently promote damaging slander without any accountability whatsoever. To illustrate, once a year Fort Benning must endure SOA Watches' civil disobedience.

They force their way on to post and are arrested for their actions. What would make you risk arrest? What do you feel so strongly about that you would risk spending months in prison for? I asked myself these questions and went to talk to some of the protesters.

I learned the answers are on SOA Watches' Web page, www.soaw.org. According to SOA Watch, active duty NCOs and officers teach a congressionally approved program of torture. Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation stands accused, and it reminds me of the entire Dreyfus affair. I am not Zola, but I am concerned. We, the instructors of WHISC, stand accused of teaching medieval nonsense.

The entire issue is based on an institutes responsibility for its graduates. How may high schools have had graduates that committed murder? Should we close them all because the research the student did on the battle of the Some sent him into a bloody rage? Evidently with this logic, schools produce killer psyches and therefore should be banned.

What makes man behave the way he does, no one really can say, but it certainly was not their high school training or rock and roll. Can the average American citizen believe Army instructors have classes that start with "first you take the fingers and put them into the thumb screws?"

Two of the more damaging reoccurring themes on the SOA Watch Web page are "Human rights training that no one attends" and "commando style attack."

The students at WHISC get more human rights training than soldiers in our own Army, and what is "commando style?"

The commando course that used to be taught was a Spanish language version of the U.S. Army Ranger course.

How many rangers out there were taught in school to torture and kill innocents?

I figured as much, obviously the conspiracy is much thicker than SOA Watch has initially suspected; it involves all of the sane people in America. If you attend a protest, you will see the many young high school and college students that read the Web page and who are filled with hate and venom. I cannot blame their exuberance, but can anyone be so easily proselytized after hearing only one side of the story?

I want all of the young Americans to be so impassioned and patriotic, but please research both sides of the story before you involve yourself in such matters. Most of the students that came on post, took the time to see our side of the fence, watched the training, saw reality and stayed dry that weekend in November.

Young Americans, be vigorous, challenge what you think to be foul, and most of all, research it. There are much more import issues that merit your time and energy. Do not let these ballads of horror lead you away from the truth.

This country is the United States of America, a country served by noble and patriotic men and women who sacrifice their very being for your freedom.

American citizens do not dishonor their efforts by supporting programs of subterfuge based on innuendo and rumor.

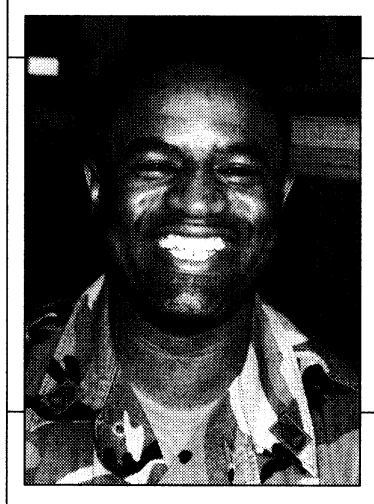
29th Infantry Regiment celebrates 100 years

On the 100th anniversary of the 29th Infantry Regiment, I am pleased to send my greetings and congratulations. Since the days when the 29th Infantry Regiment "arose with increased splendor" (our very first motto), through days of hard combat, occupation duty and here at the home of the infantry, the 29th Infantry Regiment has been and always will be a proud organization whose faithful professionals are committed to excellence.



Our regiment has performed with distinction throughout these 100 years. During most of its existence it has been stationed here at Fort Benning, at the Infantry School, and it has acquired an enviable reputation in its important role in infantry training. The present members of this fine regiment, as in the past, may be especially proud of their contribution to the intensified wartime training of the Infantry.

The 29th not only instructs soldiers, but is able and willing to fulfill its mission in successful combat such as in the Philippines, World War II and Korea in 1950, against the forces of the enemies of our country. Soldiers, NCOs and officers of the 29th, I commend you for the loyal service you have given your country and your regiment. I am confident that you will always uphold the traditions of this fine regiment.

— Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank C. Plass
Honorary Sergeant Major, 29th Infantry

VARIOUS VOICES

Pfc. Cody Braaten, D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I'd like to see more money for training and fixing training facilities. They're in really bad condition."

Karen Portzer, family member — "Schools — a very important issue. I don't think there are enough teachers for one-on-one learning, and they aren't getting paid enough."

Pvt. Luis Gomez, B Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery, 3rd Brigade — "We need more schools for immigrants, more teachers who speak Spanish and more job opportunities for Hispanics."

Patriot flees persecution, finds peace

IOBC student finds new life in America

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

One Fort Benning soldier said the regimen and rigor of Army life isn't half bad if you've experienced life in a communist country, where hunger, abuse and discrimination are the norm.

"The Infantry is tough in comparison to civilian life. I don't enjoy the rain and cold anymore than anyone else, but in retrospect, it's not half as bad as when I was a kid," said 2nd Lt. Grigory Charny, a student at the 11th Infantry Regiment's Infantry Officer Basic Course.

Grigory was born in Minsk, the capital city of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Belarus in the former USSR.

He was a veteran of war by the time he was 12. Even as the Cold War was coming to an end, Belarussians were waging an undeclared civil war against Jewish families like Mikhail and Maria Charny and their children, Grigory and Olga.

Grigory often felt the repercussions at school, where teachers classified students as Jew or non-Jew in their grade books. At the age of 8, he was attacked by classmates and slashed with a knife.

And though his father earned a master's degree in nuclear physics at the University of Minsk, he couldn't find an employer willing to hire a Jew.

"That was just the way things were. We took it for granted," Charny said. "Dad got a job at a factory, and Mom worked nights to help out. It was hard, but there were very few times I went hungry."

In May of 1986, the Chernobyl nuclear plant exploded, and less than 200 miles away, Minsk residents experienced the fallout. That's when the Charny family began to seriously consider leaving Belarus.

"In Belarus people gather berries and mushrooms to store for the harsh winters. That year I was 9 years old, and I remember mushrooms growing as big as me," Grigory said. "The people were happy, because they had food for winter, but my father had the equipment to measure the radiation levels in the foods. Of course there were ridiculously high levels of radioactivity, but we had no choice but to eat it."

The cost of leaving Belarus prohibited the Charnys from leaving immediately. But Mikhail began to save part of his meager wages and by 1989, when Belarus was embroiled in the Afghanistan war, he applied for and received permission to leave.

"I was expecting a civil war to erupt at any time," Mikhail said. "I guess that was the strongest factor in our decision to leave. But even if we stayed and there was no civil war, Grigory would have had to join the Army and fight in Afghanistan. I didn't want my son to go to war."

The Charny's paid the equivalent of $150,000 to "sell their Belarussian citizenship and come to the U.S.," Grigory said.

"We were only allowed to leave with two suitcases and $100 each. That was policy," he said. "The government put us through very hard times, but in the end they did us a favor. Three days after we left they closed the border and no one could leave."

The Charny family spent six months in a refugee camp in Italy until a Jewish family from Maryland sponsored their trip to the U.S.

"Being a refugee was horrible," Grigory said. "You have no rights. It doesn't matter how smart you are, how hard you work. You're a nobody."

In the U.S., the Charny's found a haven in the Jewish community. Friends helped them find an apartment in Rockville, Md., and Grigory and Olga attended a private Jewish school.

But their struggles weren't over.

Maria took a job washing dishes at a fast-food restaurant while Mikhail searched for work. The Charnys had to wait five years to apply for U.S. citizenship, and Grigory experienced a different kind of discrimination in his new school.

"Over there I was 'a Jew.' Here I was 'a Russian.' The wall hadn't fallen yet and there was still a lot of antagonism," he said. "Kids can be so cruel."

Grigory began attending a public high school in 1992. There, he said, he "blended." He found more diversity, more acceptance — and an interest in medical science.

He earned a degree in neurology and physiology at the University of Maryland in 1999 and enlisted in the Army last March.

After graduating from OCS last fall, he earned his jump wings. He plans to attend Ranger school after graduating from IOBC in April.

"The Army is just something I always wanted to do," Grigory said. "Someday I'll want my kids to know I did something for this country that did so much for me."

Initially Grigory's parents had a hard time accepting their son's decision.

"I was not excited," said Mikhail, who now works as an electronic design engineer. "One of the reasons I wanted to leave Belarus was so that he wouldn't have to join the Army. In Belarus it is mandatory. But I respect his choice, and now I don't mind so much. It's a good experience and a good way to give back to this country."

A fifth-generation officer, Grigory hopes to attend the Bethesda Uniformed Services Medical School and pursue a career involving both his love of medicine and his devotion to the Army.

"I made my peace with the past," he said. "The older I get the more I resent what we had to go through and the more grateful I am to be here. And I'm glad to be able to give something back."

Savings Plan to change

Contribution limit increases twice this year

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning civilians will soon have the option of raising the contribution limits of their Thrift Savings Plan.

Congress recently passed Public Law 106-1033, which raises the maximum amounts that can be deducted from employees' salaries.

The law changes the amount for each month to 11 percent for Federal Employees Retirement System employees and 6 percent for Civil Service Retirement System employees.

Employees may elect to raise their contributions up to the new limit effective with the TSP Open Season beginning May 15, according to Sherry Smith, Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Army Manpower and Reserve Affairs.

She said the contribution limits will rise by another point to 12 percent for FERS and 7 percent for CSRS employees the following open season beginning Nov. 15.

The TSP investment limit will rise by 1 percentage point at the start of each fiscal year until 2005 when it will reach 15 percent for FERS and 10 percent for CSRS.

The percentage limits will be removed during fiscal 2006.

More details about the raises will be available later this year, said Felicia Griffin, with Fort Benning's Personnel Advising Center.

More information will be available as soon as it's released through Department of the Army channels, she said.

For more information about the Thrift Savings Plan, call the Civilian Personnel Advising Center at 545-5562 or 545-7657.

Purple Heart recipients get tax break

Ad valorem tax exemption will save money

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Men and women who have been awarded a Purple Heart can now save money because of it.

The Georgia legislature passed a law with an effective date of Jan. 1, which provided an ad valorem tax exemption for several categories of vehicles, one of which covered vehicles owned or leased by veterans awarded the Purple Heart citation.

The ad valorem tax is assessed annually and is based on the value of the vehicle, said Jane Winand, supervisory attorney, legal assistance division. The tax is set each year by the state.

"A Purple Heart recipient with a high value vehicle could save hundreds of dollars each year in taxes with this exemption," Winand said.

Biff Hadden, senior vice president, military affairs and commercial development, Columbus Chamber of Commerce, earned the Purple Heart in 1967 while serving in the Republic of South Vietnam.

"The state is recognizing all those who served and paid an extra price for their service in a small but special way," Hadden said.

He said he feels like the state appreciates the sacrifice he made.

"Georgia is one of a few states that have a special tag for recipients and gives them that tag without taxing that vehicle," he said. "It shows that Georgia is pro-military.

"It understands when service members separate or retire, they are great additions to the state's work force."

The exemption, which will save Hadden approximately $250 this year, is another incentive for recipients to stay in Georgia, the retired colonel said.

Purple Heart recipients must provide written proof of the citation to the tag office in the county in which the vehicle is to be registered.

Unlike the active-duty soldier exemption, there is no affidavit to complete at the Legal Assistance Division prior to registration.

For more information, call the tag office at 653-4208.

A CLOSER LOOK

- The ad valorem tax is assessed annually and is based on the value of the vehicle.
- A Purple Heart recipient with a high value vehicle could save hundreds of dollars each year in taxes with the exemption.
- The exemption does not apply to leased vehicles in Georgia since the vehicle is not legally owned by the leasing party.
- Recipients must provide written proof of citation to the tag office.

Fort Benning longs to fix Sunshine Road

Mother Nature, vehicles erode supply route

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning is looking for a ray of sunshine on Sunshine Road.

The road is the primary route the post has to transport ammunition from the Ammunition Supply Point to Lawson Army Airfield.

However, within approximately three years, erosion may pose challenges to Fort Benning's deployment capability, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

"Sunshine Road is a key link to our deployment mission," Walls said. "It has become a critical infrastructure priority in the last several years. We are looking into every possible solution to remedy the situation."

Fort Benning's number one priority project in its Military Construction, Army (a program that goes to Congress for funding), Army Strategic Mobility Program (a project that helps improve post infrastructure for deployments) will cost 3.1 million dollars, said Kenneth Holloway, chief, Real Property Master Planning Branch, Directorate of Public Works.

Fort Benning officials have submitted a request to Forces Command for MCA, since it supports the post's missions. Post officials have met with Georgia's military affairs committee, an organization set up by the governor to assist military instillations, to address the problem.

Sunshine Road erosion has escalated to the point where Fort Benning cannot rebuild the road "in house." The post is looking into who will restore the supply line, Walls said.

He said parts of Sunshine Road are built on eutaw formation, a non-cohesive type of soil, and mother nature has eroded chunks of road. In fact, a half-mile strip of asphalt near Jamestown Road has eroded to the point where only one lane is available. Other sections of the road have huge ruts.

Holloway said approximately 18 miles of Sightseeing, Sunshine and Jamestown roads require repair and upgrade, but the critical area is the relocation of the failed one lane section of Sunshine Road.

Years of use by heavy vehicles have helped cause the deterioration, he said.

"If this problem is not corrected, further deterioration will occur, possibly to the point of impassability," Holloway said.

Author to discuss war experience

World War II vet hopes wisdom will protect soldiers

2nd Lt. Stacy A. Picard
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

A World War II veteran and author will talk about his experiences Thursday.

Belton Y. Cooper, author of Death Traps: Survival of an American Armor Division in WWII, will give a presentation at 8:30 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. Cooper will discuss his book, which is a memoir of his experiences during the war.

Cooper, 81, decided to write about his own military experiences to help soldiers understand how to survive during wartime as well as mark the mistakes made by the military during World War II to avoid future ones.

"I hope they will learn that the United States made a terrible mistake. It took a lot of suffering to figure out that the government should never again put soldiers in a war with poor equipment," Cooper said.

"We had thousands of casualties and lost a large number of tanks. We had not been briefed or told anything about the German Tiger tanks. We were led to believe that the Sherman tank was a good tank and it had equal chance against the Germany tanks. The truth was a shock."

Cooper said he was devastated by the performance of the Sherman tank and casualties that were caused due to the poor performance.

"We had to clean out the tanks and it was a horrible sight. There was literally blood and remains everywhere. The stench of it would never come out completely," he said. "These tank crews would get into the tanks knowing the last crew died in it. Some soldiers did this more than once or twice.

"I had the utmost respect for those soldiers who would get into a tank that was damaged, repaired and then sent back out."

As a World War II veteran, Cooper wants future leaders and soldiers of the military to survive war if another should occur.

Cooper believes that each soldier must understand the fundamentals of being physically, mentally, emotionally, morally and spiritually ready. If a soldier does not understand each of these fully, his survival will be less likely.

Cooper served for more than four years as a combat command liaison officer. After the war was over, Cooper was discharged as a captain. He graduated from the University of Michigan in 1946 with a Bachelor of Science Degree in Naval Architecture and Engineering.

Since 1969, Cooper has owned his own business, which specializes in robotic and automations systems. He resides in Birmingham, Ala., with his wife, who he credits for keeping him focused on writing his book.

After 50 years, her support has helped Cooper publish his book. An added bonus is the foreword, written by Stephen E. Ambrose, the author of the New York Times bestsellers D-Day and Undaunted Courage. Cooper had an encounter with Ambrose and discussed his ideas. Ambrose requested to see his manuscript and ended up using quotes from the manuscript for his book, Citizen Soldiers. The History Channel also made a documentary based on Cooper's book, called Suicide Missions-Tank Crews.

Cooper admires many works by Ambrose and was more than happy to have him write the foreword for his book. "Ambrose was Eisenhower's biographer. Eisenhower read some of his work and was convinced that he was very accurate and reliable."

Cooper believes the same. Copies of his book will be available for purchase at the presentation and Cooper is more than willing to sign copies as well.

Dr. Roger Zeimet, Fort Benning historian, believes that the presentation will be a success and those in attendance will be able to gain something from Cooper.

Zeimet hopes the presentation will stir up new ideas for other speakers to come to Fort Benning. For more information, call 545-5610.

Meeting: Informs of contract status

An initial decision was announced last August to contract more than 1,000 positions to private industry. IT Corporation of Monroeville, Pa., submitted the lowest bid on the contract, but a final decision was not expected until Jan. 16 after any appeals and protests were reviewed.

"But that day has come and gone and still no word," Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Public Works, said during a town hall meeting Monday afternoon for Directorate of Public Works and Directorate of Logistics employees, who face a reduction in force as the result of the contract.

March 4 has been tentatively set as the date for the contract to be awarded, with March 5 through July 31 serving as a transition period. But those dates remain dependent on a final decision being reached on any appeals and protests.

In his update to almost 500 employees in Infantry Hall's Marshall auditorium, Stelzer said an unsuccessful contractor has lodged a protest that is still being reviewed by the General Accounting Office.

Four appeals had been submitted and are being reviewed by the TRADOC Administrative Appeals Board. None of the appeals have been decided, and details on the subject were not available, Stelzer said.

If the appeals and protests were not resolved and a final decision given by Thursday, Stelzer said, the installation would ask to have the contract award date delayed — a task that would fall to Torres during his TRADOC visit.

Asking for a delay on the contract award would prevent the post from having to push back dates and operate on a sliding implementation plan as the post awaits a final decision.

Milestones dependent on a final decision date include when RIF letters will be delivered to employees, personnel separation dates and the contract start date, now set for Aug. 1.

"We wish to establish dates or thresholds for the next opportunity to award so that you all can plan for your future. I don't want to keep you on a string. And it will help management plan as the work force erodes," Stelzer told the employees.

Charles Thomas, a DOL employee in the weapons pool, said he was concerned about transitioning to a contractor during his section's peak season.

"From May to August, every Tom, Dick and Harry wants a weapon," Thomas said.

"Your sentiments are the same as mine. I agree it's not a real good time to be transitioning to a contractor, and that is why we would like to drop back and punt," Stelzer said.

"There is never a good time, but there sure are some bad times," Stelzer said.

Rumors have been spreading via e-mail and hallway conversations, and Stelzer wanted to clear up any misinformation being passed around.

"I wanted to take time to tell you what the truth is, and I wanted you to hear it straight from me," he said.

One rumor squelched was that the contract has been postponed to October 2002.

"The contract has not been delayed to October 2002. The GAO is reviewing the protest and has not made a ruling. Until it does, we are just waiting to hear," Stelzer said.

On personnel issues, Stelzer announced that the Voluntary Early Retirement Authorization window would open next week for the month of February. Only 40 positions are authorized for now, but there may be more in the future, he said.

The VERA would not be accompanied by the Voluntary Separation Incentive Program because the installation does not have the money to offer the financial incentive again, Stelzer said.

A VSIP window was offered in November and 47 DOL and DPW employees were approved and have already departed the installation work force.

Retirement classes will be offered March 7-8 in Classroom 7, Infantry Hall.

Registration is limited to 100 people. Participants are asked to sign up early so that packets will be available on each person's retirement system.

Other upcoming events include a Civilian Career Transition Workshop Feb. 22 from 8:30 a.m. until 4:30 p.m. in Classroom 5, Infantry Hall.

For more information, call 545-2308.

Nurses: Celebrate 100th anniversary

she wore a uniform.

"We weren't allowed to start IVs or change dressings," she said. "The doctors did that."

The chance to advance up the chain of command is another improvement. Nett's first supervisor had been in the corps 23 years and was still a first lieutenant.

"In those days she was referred to as Miss Hankins, not Lieutenant Hankins," Nett said.

"Today, nurses are promoted like the other officers, as it should be," she said.

Gay, who retired after 20 years in the corps, offered advice to today's Army nurses.

"Stick with it. It's wonderful," she said.

To mark the corps' anniversary, a national ball will be held in Washington, D.C., tonight, and celebrations like the one at Fort Benning are planned across the Army to mark the occasion.

The Army Nurse Corps Historical Society maintains uniforms from the various eras — from a long, white cotton version at the turn of the 20th century to the jungle fatigues of Vietnam and the mint green Class Bs of the 1980s.

Nurses from Martin Army Community Hospital modeled the uniforms, and then recognized nurses who served during the various eras.

"I think it is important for us to stop, reflect and celebrate our accomplishments," Bester said. "We've had thousands of Army Nurse Corps officers over the years who have contributed immeasurably to this country, some with the ultimate sacrifice, their lives."

During World War I, 270 nurses died. Another 215 nurses lost their lives during World War II, and nine nurses were killed in Vietnam.

The corps has more than 3,300 nurses on active duty today, with 1,150 holding master's or doctorate degrees.

One of the significant changes in recent decades has been the increased involvement of the National Guard and Reserves, Bester said.

"About 70 percent of our medical resources are in the U.S. Army Reserves," Bester said.

"We can't do it without them anymore. When we go places, we have to do it together," he said.

The Army's chief nurse gave the example of the Gulf War.

"Two out of every three nurses who went to Desert Storm — and we had 2,200 who went there — were from the reserve component," he said.

"And in the Balkans today you see Reserve hospitals rotating in and out of there," he said.

At Martin Army Community Hospital, 350 men and women — including registered nurses, licensed practical nurses, medics and civilian nursing personnel — serve the military community.

"They work extremely hard to accomplish the mission and support our beneficiaries," said Col. Patricia Clay, Martin Army's deputy commander for nursing.

Clay, who has served in the Army for 24 years, has seen Army medicine evolve from being focused solely on treating illnesses to stressing wellness and prevention.

"As we are entering the new millennium, our health care focus is centering on population health improvement," she said.

ing to develop the core technology for a powered soldier enhancement that would enable them to carry more pack loads, distributed loads and point loads," Garcia explained.

At the end of the visit, the researchers conducted an after action review where they discussed what they had learned from their visit.

Christopher Kearns, Dismounted Forces Division chief and AAR leader, said the group seemed pleased with the results of their visit.

"Many of them told me it was well worth the time they spent here to learn what being a soldier is like.

"It was definitely a positive visit," he said.

Kearns said it went so well that there is already talk of another possible research trip later this year.

Family's airborne tradition continues

Black Hat retires, son pins on wings

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Some people are willing to go to any length — or height — when it comes to finding just the right gift.

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Dimitroff, an instructor with the U.S. Army Airborne School, will retire this week after serving 20 years in the Army and completing 102 jumps.

For his final jump on active duty Jan. 22, Dimitroff served as jumpmaster, and the first airborne student he put out the plane was his stepson, Pfc. Matthew Wagner.

Having his first jump on the same day as his stepfather's last was special for Wagner, a symbolic changing of the airborne guard.

"This was something I really wanted to do, kind of as a retirement present for him," Wagner said.

Dimitroff, a Black Hat for two years, recalled his words to Wagner just before the 19-year-old jumped from the plane.

"I gave him the commands and put him out," Dimitroff said.

"I told him to make sure he kept his eyes open, feet and knees together and don't look for the ground, it will come to you."

A little later during the plane's second pass over Fryar Drop Zone Dimitroff made his last jump — and the airborne mantle was officially passed to the next generation.

Wagner met him on the ground.

"He came over and gave me a hug," Dimitroff said. "He said his jump was awesome."

Wagner completed jump school Jan. 26, and it was Dimitroff who pinned the shiny silver wings on the young soldier during a graduation ceremony at Airborne Walk on Eubanks Field.

Wagner was one of 249 paratroopers to graduate with B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment.

For Dimitroff, the ceremony was particularly stirring as he remembered his father, George, who had been a paratrooper and jumped at Normandy on D-Day.

Capt. Greg Battles, B Company commander, recognized Dimitroff and Wagner in his comments.

"As Sergeant First Class Robert Dimitroff is closing a chapter in his life, his son is opening a new one.

"Private Wagner, you have some big shoes to fill," he said.

That comment drew a smile from Dimitroff's wife and Wagner's mother, Isabel.

"This is a great day," Isabel said, video camera in hand.

"I can see Matthew making this a career. He likes to excel, and he likes competition," she said.

"Dad encouraged me to go airborne, and I agree it is the right way to go," said Wagner, a graduate of Spencer High School in Columbus, where he participated in the Junior ROTC program.

Wagner graduated from the Infantry Training Brigade in December and spent three weeks at jump school under the watchful eye of Dimitroff.

It is rare for a Black Hat to have a family member going through the course, Dimitroff said.

Although the two were in the same company, Wagner was not in his stepfather's stick, or squad.

Being in the same company where his father was a Black Hat drew the attention of not only the other instructors, but also the other students.

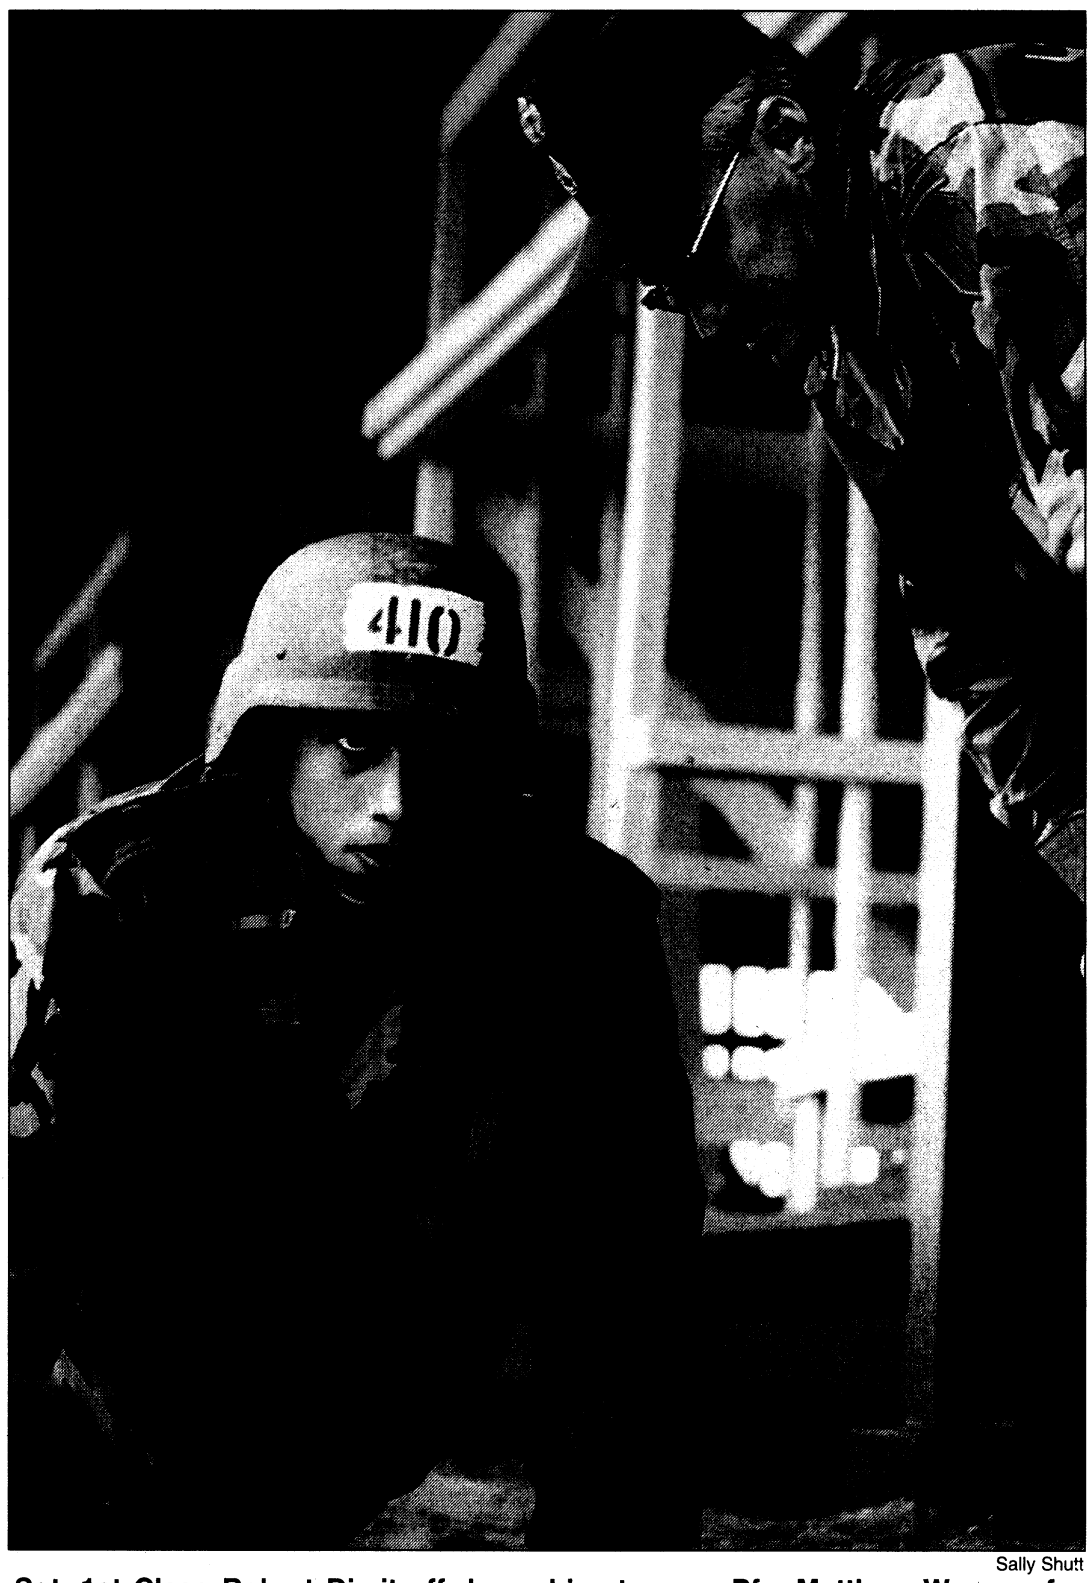
"The instructors would look at me and say, 'Hey, I know you.' Then the students started asking me 'Why are they messing with you?'

"Eventually, they all found out and thought it was pretty cool," Wagner said.

Dimitroff was named Black Hat of the cycle during the graduation ceremony.

He leaves Fort Benning next week for Crawfordville, Fla., where he hopes to go into law enforcement.

Wagner will be stationed at Fort Benning.



After completing the two-week long javelin course, he will participate in the Hometown Recruiting Program and then report for duty at the Adjutant General Replacement Detachment.

The hometown recruiting duty will last 20 days and give Wagner a chance to visit his alma mater, Spencer.

"I want them to see that the military can change you, and that it wouldn't be a waste of their time.

"It gives you pride in what you do," Wagner said.

"When I graduated from basic training I felt good, and when I got the wings I felt even better," he said.

Crews build teamwork in cramped quarters

Marne soldiers realize benefit during Table 8

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

From the day soldiers arrive at basic combat training, one word is all but beaten into their heads. The word is team.

Everyone has heard the adage, "There is no I in team." No soldier can win a war by himself. The win depends on a team and how well they work together.

New crews from 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, tested teamwork during Bradley Table 8 qualifications Jan. 26.

One of the new crews, from B Company, led the battalion in their qualification score.

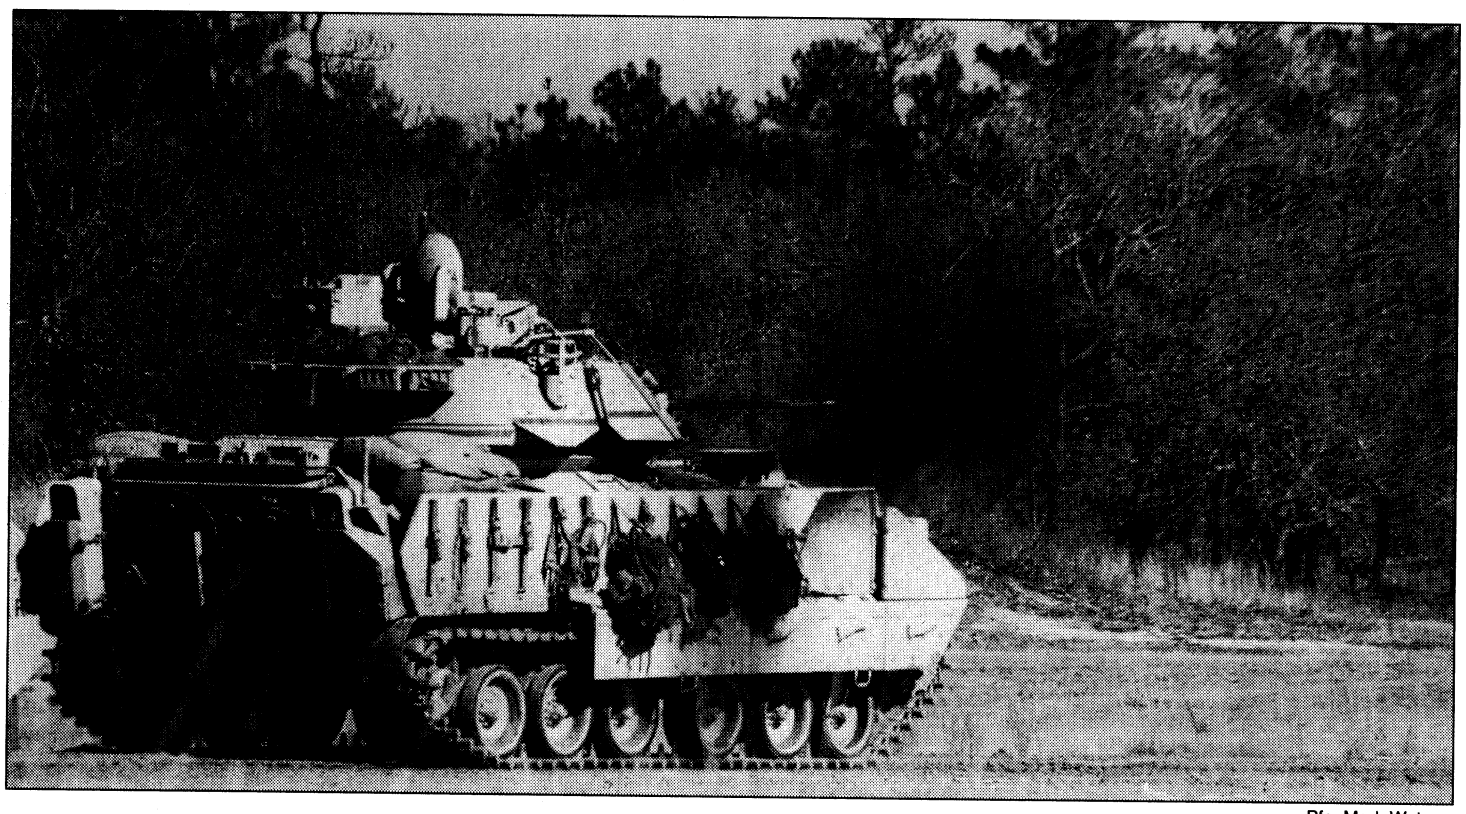
The crew credited their success to teamwork.

"We're there. We're in that zone where we react instantaneously to what each other say," Sgt. John Swicegood, the crew's gunner said. "We pretty much know what each other is thinking."

Having been a gunner in previous crews, Swicegood said his experience helps the crew, but he depends on the other two crew members.

"We work very well together," he said. "We cross talk a lot. The driver checks me on stuff. I check him.

"We all double check each other to make sure we have our jobs down and make sure for each engagement we know our specific part.



"For a brand new crew with limited simulation time, I'd say we are smoking the range like an experienced crew," Swicegood said.

Bradley commander 1st Lt. Mark Chaney said the Bradley's tight quarters help the crews develop.

"We've been out here for more than two weeks pretty much living and working together," Chaney said.

"Not only are we doing the textbook technical crew coordination, all the time we have between firing and while we are prepping the systems, we get to know each other and that helps us become a better crew.

"It's not just memorization of firing commands," he said. "But it's finding out what each other's strengths and weaknesses are and knowing the inflection in each other's voices that brings us together."

Pfc. Mark Watson

A Bradley from 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, qualifies during Bradley Table 8.

Getting to know each other helps the crew become more efficient, said driver Pvt. Matthew Smith.

"We really have good crew coordination," Smith said. "We work well as a team.

Basically we go out there and do what needs to be done.

"We talk to each other a lot," he said. "If one of us doesn't see something downrange, we have two others who have their eyes open."

Smith gave an example of their coordination.

"When we were qualifying, Sergeant Swicegood was shooting too low," Smith said. "I saw where the rounds were hitting, so I told him to move a half target up and to the right.

"Sometimes he can't see because of the dust and I will tell him what to do and vice versa. We just try to help each other out as much as possible."

Swicegood said the crew's closeness and teamwork not only help their efficiency, but it also helps their entire platoon and company. It helps the crews in the platoon know that they can count on us and they know what we are doing," Swicegood said.

"It all plays into being a team. You are only as strong as your weakest link."

Military police gear up for bicycle patrols

Cycle course prepares COPS for bike patrols

Rachel R. Garcia
Bayonet correspondent

The military police are literally gearing up for the warm summer months.

"We're going to be the Fort Benning Pacific Blue," said Sgt. 1st Class Jeffrey Cassell, 209th Military Police Detachment, Military Police Activity, referring to the popular television show.

Neighborhood residents across Fort Benning will soon see soldiers donning their bicycle helmets and grabbing their hand pumps, as the Community Oriented Policing Services cyclists take to paths in May.

Motorized patrol cars will continue to tour the streets, as an expanded group of military policemen will be concentrating heavily on protecting post communities.

But before the MPs get on their bikes, one will attend a specialized course in Florida.

Staff Sgt. Patrick Coiner, 209th Military Police Detachment, Military Police Activity will attend the International Police Mountain Bike Association Instructor Course in Orlando this month. The weeklong training will certify the 14-year veteran military policeman as an IPMBA police cyclist instructor, so he can train others in his unit.

While attending the instructor course, Coiner will participate with in-class presentations, on-bike drills and peer and self-critiques. The intense program will also prepare the class for teaching their own students with overcoming their problem spots and to incorporate different styles of training.

Coiner first discovered the instructor's class through a newsletter he receives over the Internet.

After speaking with his chain of command, the green light was given to attend the session and assist with activating the bike patrol team. "This is a professional unit," Coiner said.

Only 10 students may work with instructors at one time, so courses will be extremely personalized. The Fort Benning Military Police Cyclist Course will cover such topics as equipment, traffic laws and community policing.

Quality soldiers will be given the opportunity to train and work with the specialized force allowing them a break from their usual routine, Cassell explained. The bikers will have to maintain demanding fitness and nutrition standards, to perform the tasks associated with their jobs. Obstacle avoidance, emergency dismounts, drills and other riding exercises will be focused upon.

Different uniforms will be worn by the soldiers, which Coiner hopes will lend to a less authoritarian reputation. Patrollers will dress in a uniform of white polo shirts and black shorts and tennis shoes than traditional police garb.

Mary Pettengill, 8, a student at Dexter Elementary School, said she thinks that having MPs patrolling her neighborhood would be a better chance to understand what their jobs entail.

"I'd ask them what they do and get to know them better. I'd feel safer because they protect us," she said.

The bicycles will allow officers to be in closer contact with post residents while patrolling neighborhoods.

The ability to move with pedestrians will make the patrol more approachable and accessible to the public.

"This allows more visibility and one-on-one contact with the community," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of the Law Enforcement Division. "We're looking to COPS to spearhead that effort."

McGraw Manor Mayor and resident Rosetta Darby said the COPS program is an important part of post safety, along with the interaction with the MPs.

"Maybe this year we could do more with them. McGraw Manor has a parade each year and it would be nice to have them riding their bikes," she said.

Teen offers plea to new president

Student's letter grabs national attention

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Fort Benning teen-ager caught the attention of a national magazine with a simple plea to the new president: "Dear Mr. President, please make us proud."

Dorian Newby put a lot of thought into the letter she wrote for a class assignment at Faith Middle School. The instructions were simple: Imagine you had five minutes to talk with the president and write about the issues you'd like to discuss.

But at the age of 14, Dorian is facing issues that aren't simple at all, and her heart-felt response to the assignment allowed her to voice her concerns to a national audience.

Dorian's eighth-grade language arts teacher, Lisa Madler, makes a point of having her students respond to the weekly queries Parade magazine poses to teens in its "Fresh Voices" column. Madler submitted Dorian's reply to the "Dear Mr. President" assignment in November.

Her letter immediately caught the attention of Parade magazine's editor, Lynn Mynton.

"Her's was a very touching letter," Mynton said. "It was a personal story about a daughter's love for her father and it addressed issues very important to Parade magazine and me. It was a natural."

Dorian wrote about issues she feels warrants the new president's close attention. She expressed her views about abortion — "I'm pro-life. I wanted him to know how I felt about that," — and educational reforms — "Teachers need more pay, just like soldiers."

But it was Dorian's plea for a stronger, more family-friendly military that made print in the Jan. 28 issue of Parade and lent itself to the article's headline — Mr. President, Please Make us Proud:

"I'm an Army brat, and my dad means more to me than anything else in the world. So the military is an issue I feel strongly about. Some families are on welfare — the same people who protect our great country. My dad is currently in Korea — his second year-long term there. Mr. President, please make us proud: Raise military salaries and don't send enlisted soldiers with families away for more than two months at a time."

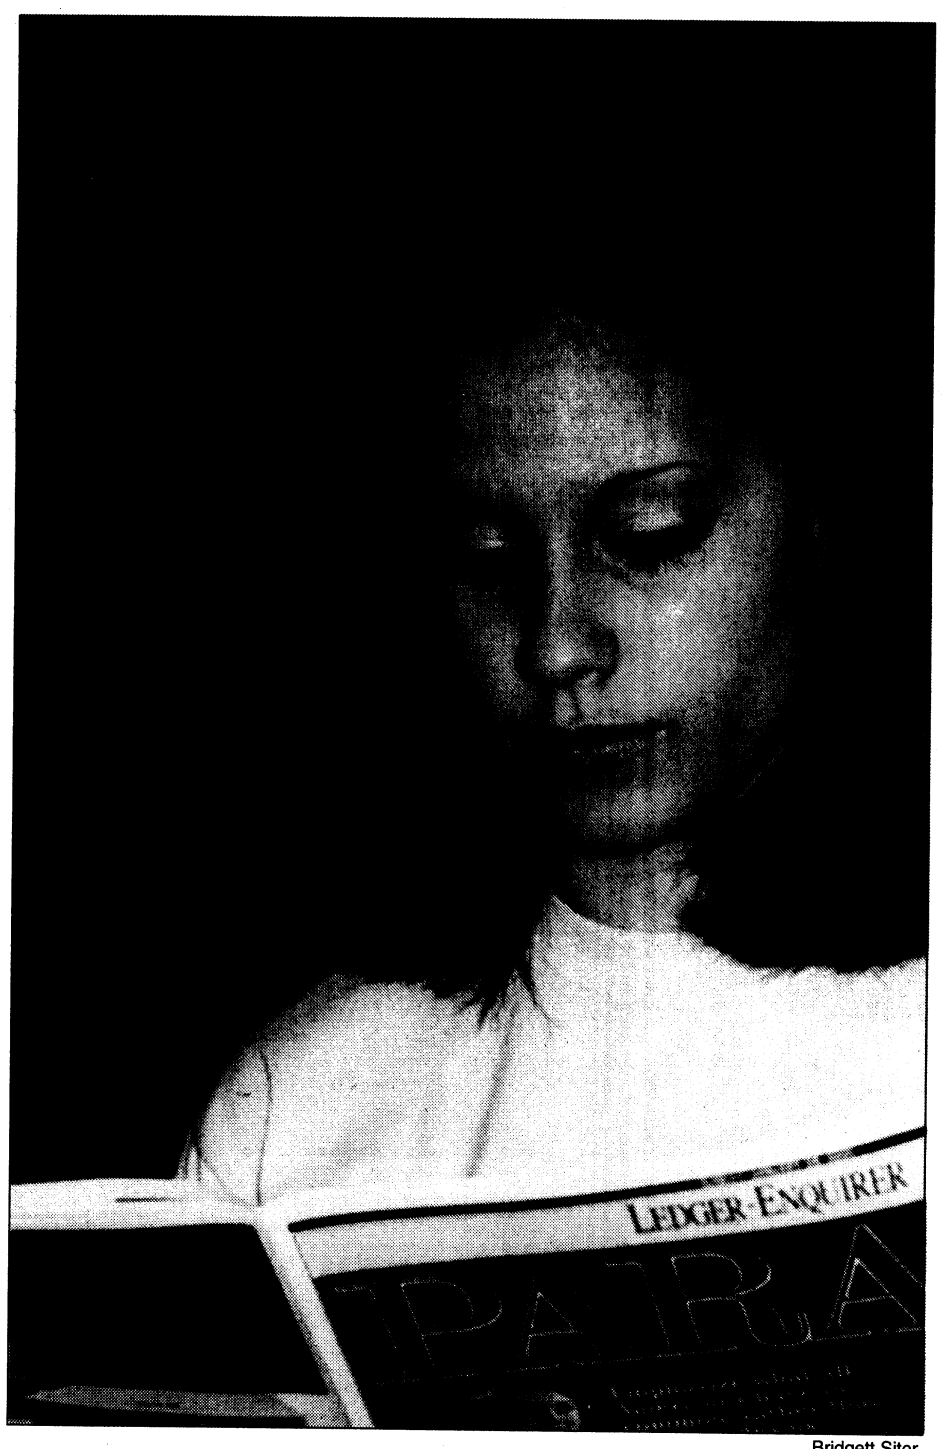
Dorian, the only child of Staff Sgt. Ted and Delane Newby, believes she spoke for most "Army brats" when she expressed her desire to have her whole family together.



But her letter didn't talk about the circumstances that makes Ted's separation difficult for Dorian and her mother.

Her mother suffers from paranoid schizophrenia, a mental disorder that requires close supervision and daily medication — and a condition that Dorian said means her mom, like her dad, is often "in and out of my life for weeks at a time."

Dorian worries about her mother's health.

She keeps a close eye on her medications and watches for signs

USAIC TV back on air

New programs make up future line-up

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

After a seven-month absence from the air, U.S. Army Infantry Center Television is up and running again to inform the Fort Benning community about military matters.

Programming, which is aired on Time Warner Cable's channel 4, is currently made up of Army News Watch and Air Force News running in a continual loop.

There will be several additions to the programming in upcoming months, said Spc. Brent Roach, a broadcaster with the Fort Benning Public Affairs Office. It's hoped that those programs will come from the national and local communities.

"We are only airing two programs right now, but we're putting a request out to other units that may want to give us something like safety tips or other things that were run in the past to put a little variety in the programming," he said.

Roach said The Fort Benning Update is scheduled to be added to the line-up within 90 days. The show will focus on news and events in the Fort Benning community.

Preparations being made for National Prayer Breakfast

Event scheduled to take place Feb. 22 on post

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning will celebrate the National Prayer Breakfast at 8 a.m. Feb. 22 at the Officers' Club.

The serving line for the breakfast will start at 7:30 a.m. The event is open to anyone in the Fort Benning community.

"It's an opportunity for us to remember in prayer both our nation and those who lead it," said Chaplain (Capt.) Michael White, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry, Infantry Training Brigade.

The foundation for the National Prayer Breakfast was laid almost 50 years ago in Washington, D.C., when lawmakers came together to pray for the newly elected President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Roggia, chaplain for ITB, said the post prayer breakfast has been going on for years as well.

"It's a tradition around here," he said. "It's important to have a prayer breakfast, to be grateful and to remember where our strengths come from."

In addition to prayer and reflection, there will be entertainment. A quartet from the Army band and the Army Brass Quintet will perform.

Also, Chaplain (Maj.) David Giammona, Basic Combat Training Brigade, will play the saxophone and Sgt. Dorothy Bess-Moore, Infantry Chapel NCOIC and Chaplain (Capt.) Deirdre Stokelin, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, will perform solos.

The guest speaker for the event will be former Army Capt. Stu Weber. Weber holds advanced degrees from Western Seminary in Portland, Ore., and is currently senior pastor of the Good Shepherd Community Church, also located in Oregon. This will be a homecoming for Weber, who was stationed at Fort Benning during some of his time in the Army.

He is airborne and ranger qualified and was awarded three bronze stars as a Green Beret captain with the 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne) in Vietnam.

More recently, he is the author of several books including Tender Warrior, All the King's Men, and Four Pillars of a Man's Heart.

White encouraged people to come out to the breakfast and enjoy what Weber has to say as well as the various other things planned for the event.

"There will be a variety of special music, great fellowship, a delicious breakfast, an outstanding, inspirational speaker, and of course, prayers for our nation," he said.

There will also be Bible readings and a reading from the Koran.

The event is nondenominational and is an all-faiths gathering, White said.

"We try to get different faith-groups to participate," he said. "It's open to anyone who believes in prayer."

"We want people to get a renewed relationship with God," Roggia said.

The required dress for military is duty uniform.

For tickets, there is a requested donation of $4 for soldiers E-1 to E-4 and $6.25 for E-5 and above and civilians.

"In the past, there's been very few tickets at the door," Roggia said. "We would rather people get them in advance."

Contact unit or directorate sergeant majors for ticket information or call the unit battalion chaplain's office or the installation chaplain's office at 545-2288.

gardening tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

The dead of winter and nothing to do in the garden? That's what most people are thinking right about now. The temperatures have been so cool that no one really thinks about their garden. There are several things to be doing right now.

• Watering. This time of year it's important to be aware of how much water your plants are getting. Plants still need an inch of water per week. It may seem futile to water when there doesn't seem to be any growth, but the growth is happening below the soil line.

The roots of the plants are still thriving under the soil. Especially where perennials are concerned. Their roots are expanding under the soil to enable the top growth to be larger and more dense during the next growing season.

• Check on the mulch. Occasionally, when cleaning out a flower bed, mulch is raked away and put out with the leaves. This can be especially true if the bed has been mulched with bark. Mulch is vitally important to plants during the winter months. The mulch is still helping to retain moisture.

Plants also need the mulch to keep the soil temperatures from dropping too low. Mulch prevents damage to the root structure of the plants.

• Turn the compost pile. Keeping the compost pile turned is important anytime of the year. If necessary, now is a good time to add more manure to speed the decomposition in the pile. It's a major asset for a gardener to be able to retrieve compost from the pile in the spring rather than to purchase it from a local nursery.

• Check on the spring bulbs. Some of the early blooming bulbs will be breaking the surface of the soil now. Make sure to water them well. If mulch is desired for the spring display now is a good time to apply it.

• Make a list of items needed for the upcoming year. After years of wear and tear, things like hoses and gloves need to be replaced. If the garden tools were not sharpened at the end of the season, now is a good time to take care of that.

• Clean up pots. The pots from last season are probably covered in moss or mildew. Now is a good time to get them ready. Clean all pots with a mixture of one part bleach to nine parts water. Make sure to scrub them clean and rinse them well before letting them dry. This mixture can be used on plastic pots and terra cotta.

• Start seeds. Place pots with seeds in an eastern facing window for the best lighting situation. Specialized growing lights can be purchased at the local nursery for serious seed starters. Most seed packets suggest starting the seeds six to eight weeks before planting outside.

ask the judge

Carolyn Moller
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I was in a car accident, and the other driver was at fault. How can I get his insurance company to pay for the repairs to my vehicle?

A: When you are involved in a car accident, the at-fault person is responsible for reporting it to their insurance company. It's a good idea, however, to call the insurance company yourself because sometimes the at-fault person is slow to report the claim. You should have received the other driver's insurance information at the scene of the accident.

Make sure you get the insurance company's name, at-fault driver's policy number, claims reporting telephone number and address. It is even a good idea to get the insurance agent's name and address if available.

Report the accident as soon as possible while the information and facts are still fresh in everybody's memory. This will help prevent unscrupulous people from changing their version of the details. The sooner you report the claim, the sooner the claims representative can start working on getting it resolved.

It is not a bad idea to report the accident to your own insurance company. This is important to preserve your claim with your insurer just in case the at-fault driver's insurance company denies liability. Your insurance rates should not increase because you report a claim, especially if you were not the at-fault driver.

Most states have laws that prohibit insurers from increasing their policyholders rates for accidents that were not their fault. It is important to note, however, that these laws do not prevent an insurance company from not renewing your policy at the end of its term. This may be the case if you have made several recent claims.

When you speak to the at-fault driver's insurance company, only state the facts.

Tell them there was an accident involving a policyholder, which caused damage to your vehicle. You also need to report all injuries, if any. The police, and the court, if necessary, will determine fault.

Usually the insurance company determines fault and liability of its insured based on the police report and recommendation; thus it is not necessary to add your own two cents to the fracas.

If you are not the at-fault driver, you would expect that all that is required is the reporting of the claim in order to get the repairs completed and the doctor bills paid. In reality, this may not be the case. Insurance companies often require that you get prior approval before repairs are completed.

Failure to get this approval may create a headache down the road, and you run the risk of the claim being denied because the approval was not obtained before the work was done. Thus, it is a good idea to get the insurance company's approval, in writing, before undertaking repairs. Also, the insurance company cannot force you to take your vehicle to a specific repair shop, however, recommendations are allowed, but ultimately the choice is yours.

Most states have laws that prevent insurance companies from denying liability without reasonable investigation of the facts or to deny liability when it is reasonably clear their insured was at fault. However, that does happen sometimes.

At this point you will have to make a decision on whether you want to fight the at-fault driver's insurance company. To do so usually involves hiring an attorney.

Remember, the attorney will receive a percentage of the settlement, if any, and it can be anywhere between 25 to 50 percent plus their out-of-pocket costs such as filing fees.

If you do not want to battle the at-fault driver's insurance company, you can always file a claim with your own insurer. Note, however, you will be responsible for the deductible, if any.

In the event your insurer seeks reimbursement of the monies it paid because of the accident, you may receive reimbursement of your deductible from the proceeds recovered from the at-fault driver's insurance company.

Students learn to work clay

White Elementary School

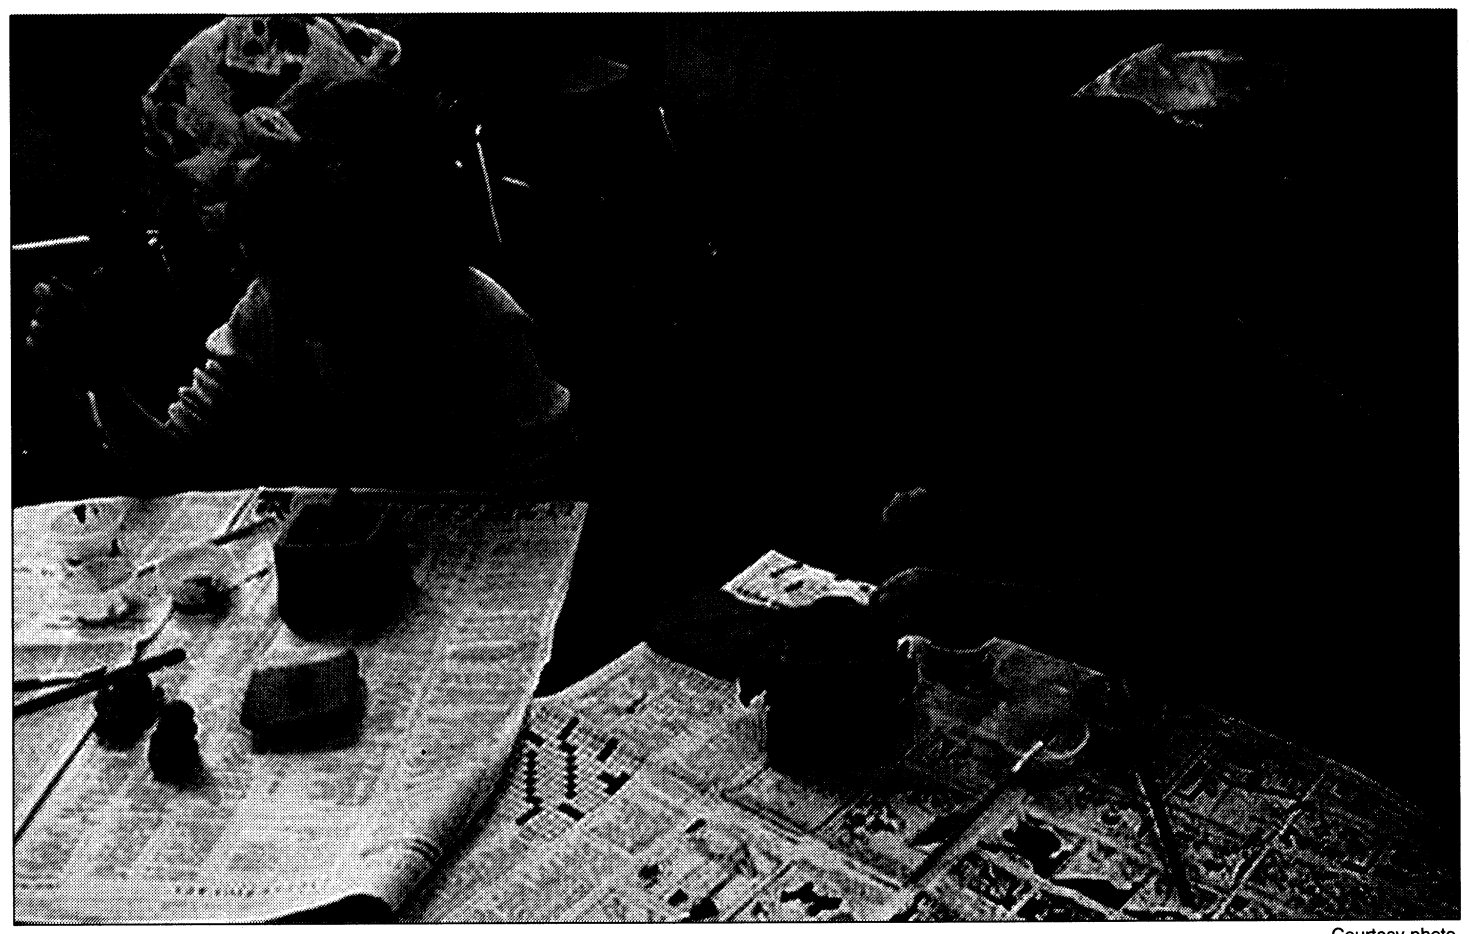
Students at White Elementary School have been up to their elbows in clay.

Enrichment teacher, Evelyn Braman, arranged for Inez Gardner, a local potter, to share her expertise in working with clay.

Gardner has been teaching students to work with clay for a number of years, most recently at the Shirley Winston Recreational Center in Columbus.

"The student's creativity always amazes me. Every piece created is very unique even though the students receive the same instruction," said Gardner.

Everyone at White School will be involved with the clay project, with each grade level creating a different clay object. Once the clay project is shaped it must then dry for two weeks.



Then the object is placed in the school's kiln to be fired overnight. The final step is to paint the clay object.

The entire process takes a little more than a month to complete.

Ann Lucas' first-grade students made boxes before the holidays.

Second-grade students have already made fish, while the third-graders made banks in the shape of frogs.

The fourth-grade is working on lighthouses, while fifth-grade students have the challenge of designing clay bookends based on their favorite book.

Study brings earth's biggest mammals to life

White Elementary School

Not all mammals live on land. First-graders in Ann Lucas' class learned about the abundance and variety of animals that live in the oceans.

The students were fascinated to find out that whales are the largest mammals on the Earth today.

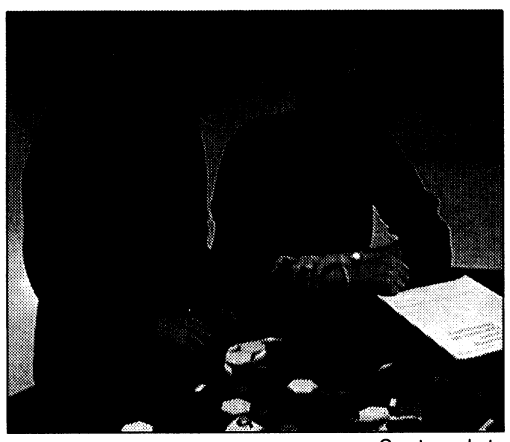
Some scientists believe that whales had hind legs and once lived on land during the time of the dinosaurs.

Eventually the legs evolved into flippers over millions of years.

Along with the study of whales, the first-grade enrichment students helped build a life-size model of a sperm whale.

The students developed measurement skills as they helped measure 70-foot strips of plastic, which would later become the whale's body.

Logic and reasoning skills were necessary as the students taped the flippers, dorsal fins, and tail sections together. This was a whale of a job!



While working on the whale students also learned many interesting facts about whales.

"Wow, I didn't know that the blue whale's heart is the size of a small car," said Kris Roldan.

Ann Smith, a fifth-grade teacher at White School, shared a seven-inch whale's tooth from a sperm whale that belonged to her grandfather, Gen. Oscar W. Griswold.

He was a troop commander during World War II in the Philippines.

In an act of respect and honor, the Fiji chief presented him with the group's most prized possession — the whale's tooth.

Children, parents learn together

White Elementary School

Do you think math is just about numbers?

Does the thought of solving story problems make the hair on your neck stand up?

Whether you love mathematics or try to avoid it at all costs, Family Math Night is for you.

The activities selected for White School's Family Math Night Jan. 9 were designed to show parents and students that mathematics can be fun.

Activities such as object pattern cards, shape animals, and guess how many showed that even pre-K through second-grade students can begin to explore concepts of estimation, algebra and geometry.

Third- through fifth-grade students and parents worked on concepts of spatial reasoning, mathematical progressions and logical reasoning through a variety of games and active explorations.

Parents and students read through and completed the activities together at each station with assistance as needed from teachers.

By working with their children, parents were able to gain new knowledge about the scope of our mathematics program.

Small acts of kindness do not go unnoticed

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Richard Roggia
Infantry Training Brigade

reflections

I found myself sitting in an airport waiting for a plane to take me home. As I sat there I began to reflect on the thousands of miles that I had already traveled and the thousands yet to go.

Out of sheer boredom, I began to count the number of people who were responsible for assisting me on my journey. By the end of my counting I had come up with more than 400 people.

Any one of them could have been responsible for making my journey a miserable experience. They didn't know me and had no idea about the impact that they had on my life.

In a recent counseling session an individual said, "What I do doesn't make any difference." I'm sure that each of us at one time or other has felt that way.

When you have given your best and no one seemed to care, when you wonder if you have any worth as a human being, when you never seem to arrive at the time when life is without its frustrations, then is the time that thought comes creeping into your heart. It is that time when you just don't want to try anymore, that time when you look around and see a world of needs and you doubt that you can do anything that will matter.

Good deeds do not need to be show-stopping. There is really no such thing as a small good act. Henry Wadsworth Longfellow said it this way, "Give what you have to someone, it may be better than you dare to think."

How many people whom you never see and never thank contribute to your life everyday? The man who clears the garbage from your street. The person who stocks the commissary. The one who keeps the power lines working.

If they were ever to think that what they accomplished didn't make a difference just let them stop for a month and see how miserable the world would become.

What you do makes a great deal of difference in this world. The important thing is to believe that.

An old Arabic legend tells of a rider finding a spindly sparrow lying on its back in the middle of the road. He asked the sparrow why his feet were in the air.

"I heard the heavens were going to fall today," replied the sparrow.

"And I suppose you think your puny bird legs can hold up the whole universe?" laughed the horseman.

"Perhaps not," said the sparrow with conviction, "but one does what one can."

The scriptures tell us that we are literally children of God made in his image and likeness. Each of us is here as a divinely created being who has a loving father in heaven.

All he requires of us is that we do what we can.

Safe sex not necessarily risk free

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

What is usually touted as safe sex isn't completely risk free against either conception or sexually transmitted diseases.

Talk with your parents, school nurse, doctor and clergy person before you decide to become sexually active. Some factors to consider are safety, effectiveness, medical desirability, convenience, cost, maturity, personal feelings and values.

Common contraceptive methods and devices include the withdrawal method, rhythm method, intrauterine devices, diaphragm, condoms, spermicides and birth control pills.

Abortatives include the morning after pill, RU-486, dilation and curettage, more commonly known as D and C, and abortion.

I personally believe that abortion should not be used as a method to prevent an undesired childbirth.

Some contraceptive methods and devices are more effective than others. For maximum effectiveness against conception, several contraceptive methods should be used in combination, such as, using birth control pills, diaphragm, condom and spermicide together. Proper application and use of each contraceptive is essential.

Use of a prophylactic helps reduce transmitting STDs. Without the use of a prophylactic, oral sex and anal sex do not significantly reduce the contraction of STDs.

The only method that is 100 percent safe and risk free against conception and sexually transmitted disease is abstinence until entering a lifelong monogamous relationship with another who has also remained abstinent.

Are you being pressured to engage in sexual activity? Do you want to remain abstinent? Free counseling and support are available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works and glorify your father who is in Heaven.

Education makes boating safer

Following safety guides leads to safe summer

Shannon S. Walsh
Special to the Bayonet©

As the weather begins to turn warmer and boat owners start to spend more time on the water, accidents and fatalities can be reduced by following certain rules and guidelines.

It's important to learn the federal boating laws and state laws for the state in which you have registered your boat, said J.R. Addington, a volunteer for the Columbus Auxiliary of the Coast Guard and chief, Plans and Operations Division, Directorate of Logistics.

For Georgia residents, a boating license is not required.

A certification course is only required for younger boaters between the ages of 12 and 15.

For those 16 and older, boating safety instruction is not a must, but it is recommended.

"The biggest thing is go attend a course and learn the rules of the road. There are driving laws just like on the highway," Addington said.

Another incentive is some insurance companies give a discount to boaters who have taken a certification course, he said.

He said it is also beneficial to attend a course in the area you'll be boating in so that you can learn about specific local dangers.

"The Chattahoochee is a very dangerous river," he said. "It can look smooth as glass on top and there are strong currents and pulls underneath.

"The depth also varies greatly. It's deeper in places than people think," he said.

More than 20 service members have lost their lives in the Chattahoochee over the past 35 years.

There is no swimming allowed in the river within post boundaries due to the unpredictable conditions but also in part because some of the water's unfriendly inhabitants include alligators and water moccasins.

Of all the safety devices on a boat, Addington said personal flotation devices are the most essential.

"A life jacket is probably the most important piece of equipment a boater can wear," Addington said.

Georgia law requires that children under age 10 wear properly sized life jackets while a boat is in motion. There must also be accessible life jackets for each person on the boat.

Addington recommends that every person on the boat keep their life jacket on in case of an accident.

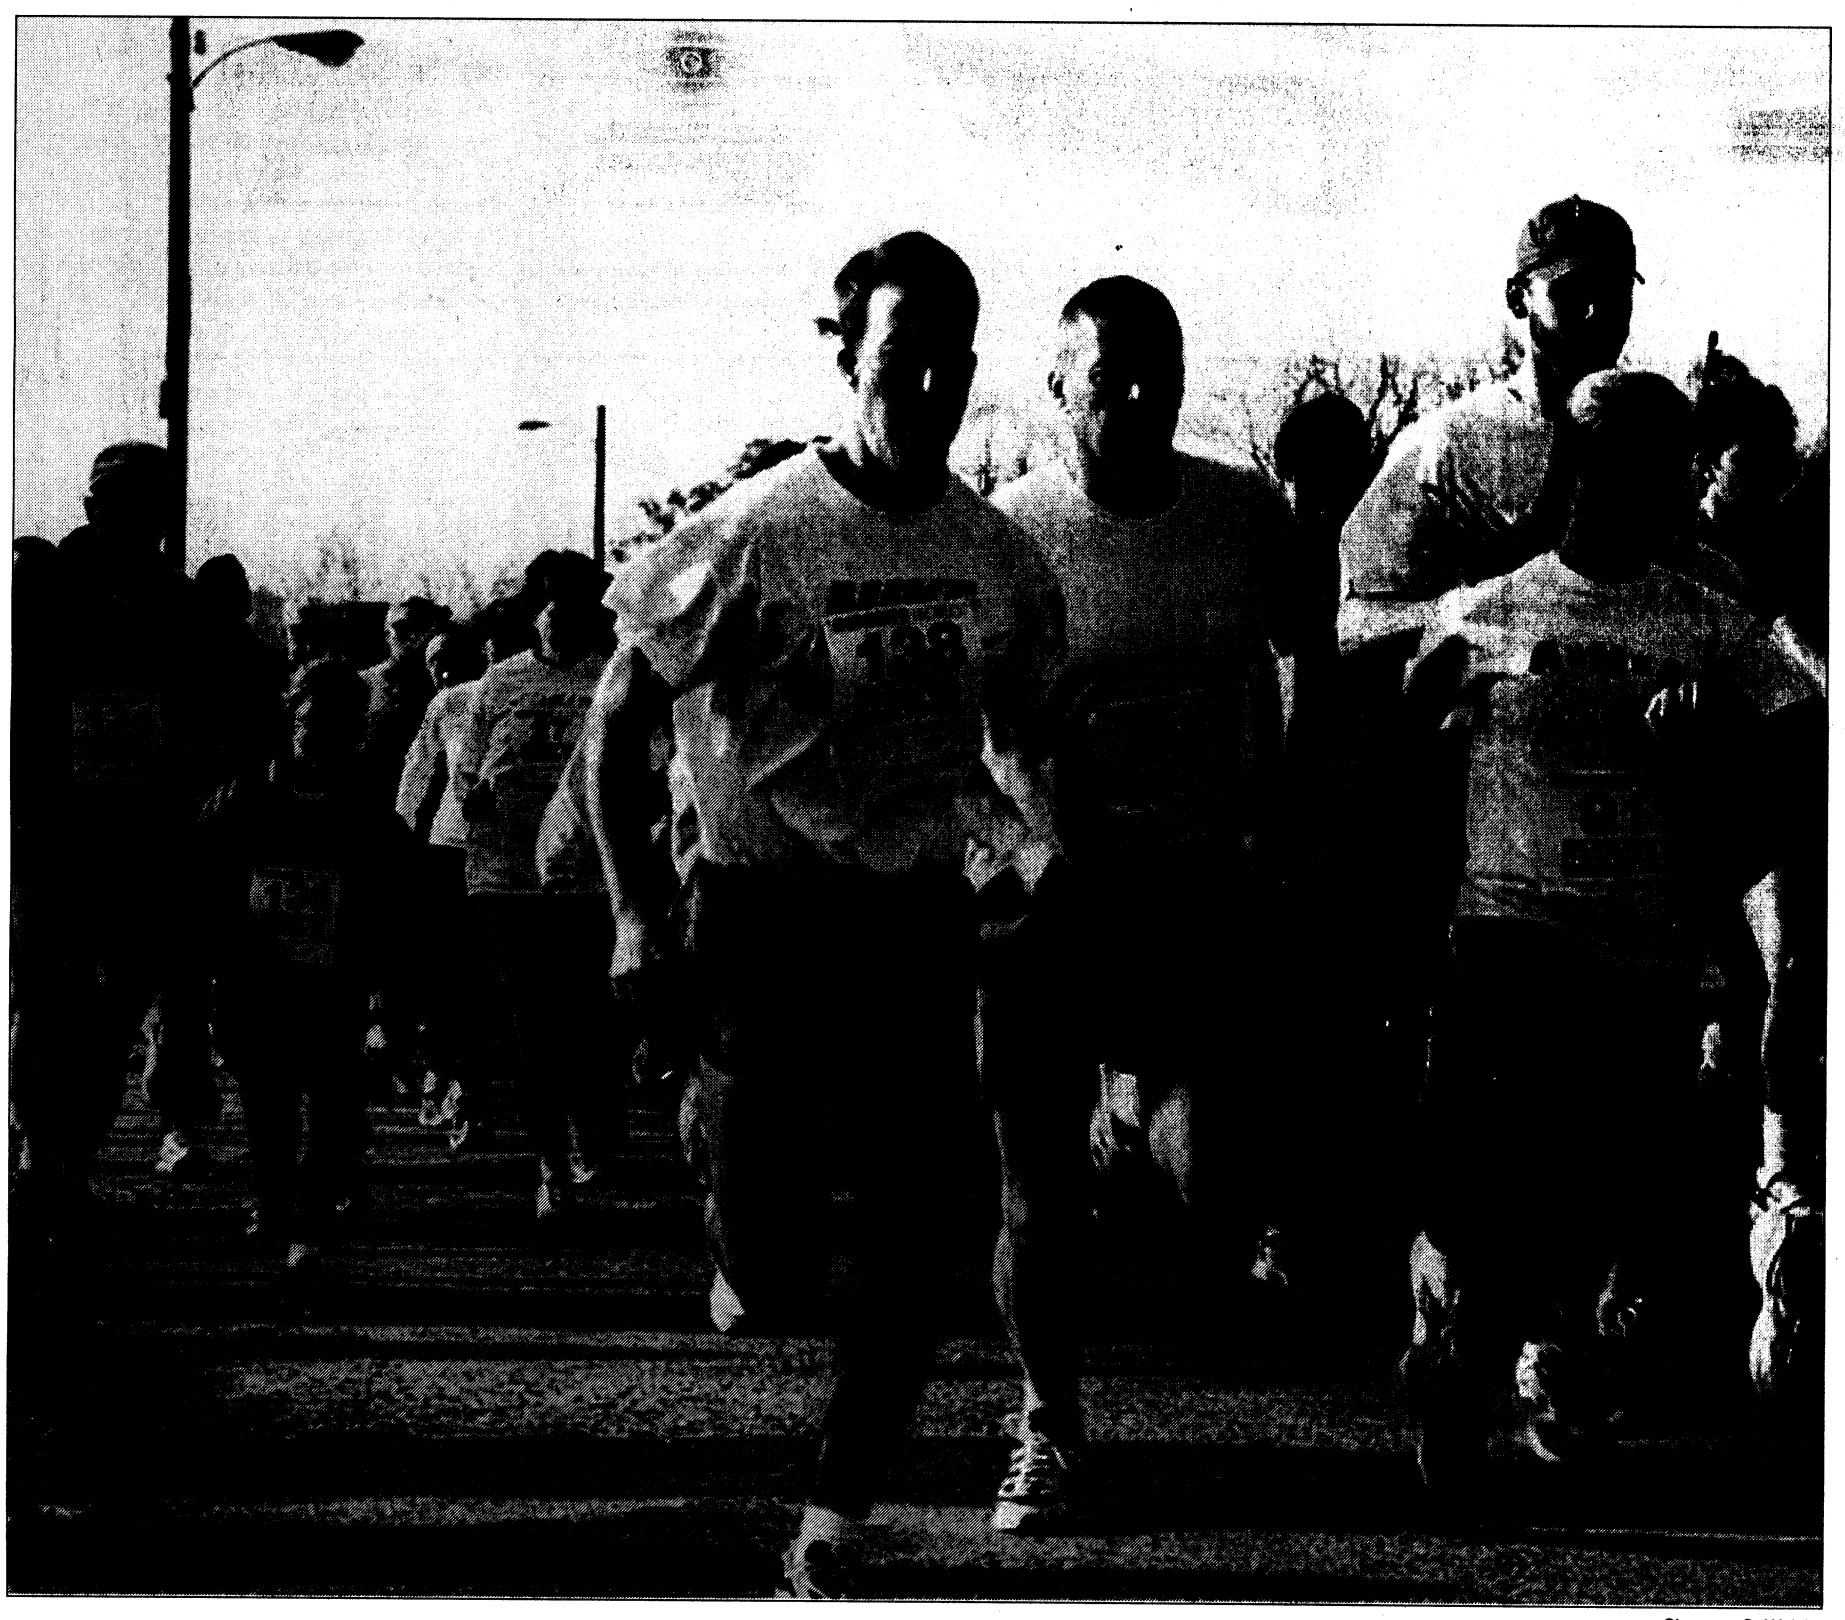
If you're in a collision, you might drown without one, he said.

Another important determination to make before going on a trip is a float plan, said Sgt. Tony Toliver, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and public affairs officer for the Bass Anglers Sportsmen Society of Fort Benning

"At all times a boater should have a communications plan, like a cell phone in a waterproof bag, for emergencies," Toliver said.

"Never leave home without telling someone the general plan of your trip, the area you will be boating and your expected time of return," he said.

"Always be conscious of your surroundings, other boaters, water hazards and wildlife. Have a map and compass on your boat at all times," Toliver said.



The post Infantry Branch Safety Office recommends the following additional rules and guidelines for safe boating.

• Personal flotation devices should be worn or at least secured to each person with a stout cord.

• Other important safety equipment includes a fire extinguisher, a paddle, red and green lights on the bow and a

Fun walk, run add spice to cookie tradition

More than 160 runners help area Scouts

Special to the Bayonet©

This year's Girl Scout Cookie Run started the same way it has for the past 20 years — with the voice of retired Chief Warrant Officer William Cogar.

"Get on your mark, get set, go!" and about 160 participants were off and running on Saturday morning in downtown Phenix City.

Cogar has been calling the shots at the starting line for years and has seen the affect this event has had on Girl Scouts and the local community.

He said the annual 5K race has been very helpful in bringing the two worlds together.

"It's a traditional thing. It's been one of our best (public relations) events," he said.

Some of the registration money from the race and two-mile walk, an addition to this year's event, goes toward activities and expenses for the local troops and training classes for Girl Scout volunteers.

Cogar, who formerly ran the Girl Scouts' Camp Concharty, said the event is another way to make people aware of what the organization is all about.

"It's a building of strengths in girls. It's giving them a good start in life, teaching them caring, sharing, and responsibility," he said.

The race and walk were open to anyone who wished to

Tarheels squeeze Orange Crush in final minute

Sudden scoring frenzy gives Tarheels victory

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Up until the final minute in the game, it looked as if the Orange Crush would crush the Tarheels. As the final seconds ticked away, a sudden scoring frenzy from William Page and Jacee Lawary along with an "in your face" defense from Chelsie Black gave the Tarheels a 39-36 victory in the 12- to 15-year-old basketball game Saturday at the YS Gym.

During the first quarter the Tarheels and the Crush ran neck-in-neck and neither team took more than a four-point lead. Toward the end of the quarter, the Crush began using the fast break to their advantage and the quarter ended with the Crush in the lead 10-6.

With the second quarter under way, Crush's Tony Toliver led his team with a blitzkrieg approach to the game.

Toliver sparked a frenzy of key offensive and defensive plays forcing many Tarheel turnovers while adding points to his team.

Although his aggressive playing broke up the Tarheels game plan, Toliver fouled three times and was close to fouling out with the second half still to come.

As the final seconds of the first half ticked away, it looked as if the Tarheels would not be able to come back from the 20-13 Crush lead.

During the first half, Toliver scored nearly half of his team's points, while Tarheel's Lawary led his team with six points.

During the third quarter, the Orange Crush, with seven players, no longer sizzled but fizzled while the Tarheels, who outnumbered the Crush remained fresh.

The third quarter was one of turnovers.

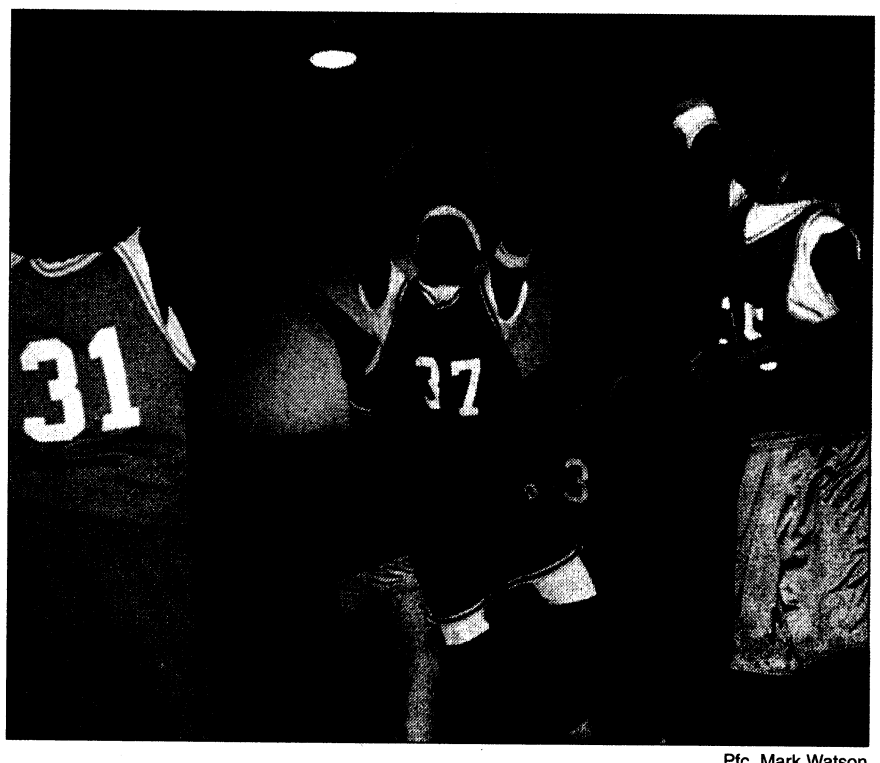
The Crush drew foul after foul allowing the Crush players to go to the free-throw line several times.

The Tarheels, on the other hand, forced the Crush to travel time after time.

Black lead her team's defense, and although scoreless in the game, she forced many turnovers.

With only minutes remaining on the clock in the third quarter, the Tarheels came within two points of the Crush.

The Crush managed to open their lead to five points when the buzzer sounded giving them a 30-25 lead.



The Tarheels took the lead with 5:20 remaining in the game.

The Crush began lose their shooting accuracy while the Tarheels stuck to the Crush with a pressing defense.

With one minute remaining, the Tarheels led 37-32.

During the final minute the Crush sank two baskets and the Tarheels

MUNICH, Germany — U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit international rifle shooter Sgt. Troy A. Bassham won a third Silver Medal in air rifle for the United States at the International Competition for Air Rifle, Air Pistol and Running Target in Munich Sunday. The win capped off an impressive showing by the Americans at the well-attended air gun match.

Bassham was tied for second going into the air rifle final, with 596 points.

He shot a solid final, including a 10.9, until his last two shots — a 10.0 and a 9.9 dropped him into second place with a 698.7, 4/10ths of a point behind the Gold Medal winner.

2000 Air Rifle Olympian Sgt. Jason A. Parker also made it into the final.

His 595 started him off tied for third place, but a pair of 9s and an 8.9 gave him a 695.6 for a final score in eighth place. Sgt. Timothy R. Manges finished 44th with 587 points and 2000 Air Rifle Olympian Staff Sgt. Kenneth A. Johnson tied at 68th place with 582 points.

2000 Olympian Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski took fifth place in the Air Pistol Competition

Besides all being members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit's International Rifle Team, all the soldiers are members of the national shooting team run by USA Shooting, the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports.

Soldier recalls past games, hopes for game's return

Capt. Ed Gawlik
3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment

In my quest for information about Gowdy Field I have found that Fort Benning led the way in athletic racial integration between 1922 and 1925.

While reading the October 1922 edition of The Infantry School News, the precursor to today's Bayonet, I found out that the 24th Infantry Regiment challenged the post to throw out the "rulings" that segregated the 24th from competing against the rest of the post units in athletic events. At this time in our history, black units were not allowed to compete with or against white units.

The 24th Infantry was incredible for all that they accomplished before and during their association with Fort Benning. I believe one of the 24th Inf.'s greatest contributions to Fort Benning was their persistence and determination to change the "rulings" preventing competition between them and the other units. The challenge from the 24th was issued in October 1922 but it was four months before a reply was rendered. That reply showed the post that there was support for an inter-racial league on Fort Benning. The writer from the Infantry School Detachment (White) said, "we are all soldiers, so why not a soldiers' league composed of the best that the Post affords." The following week held the reply from the 24th applauding the ISD (W) writer and asking for more to follow suit. However in the same issue a new writer for the ISD (W) wrote that though the idea is good, it is good as long as no white ball players are cut. After this I could not find any more articles about a soldiers' league and in the summer of 1923 things continued as before.

The 24th Regimental Team played the regional black universities and the powerful teams of the Negro Baseball League. The Doughboys (Fort Benning's varsity baseball team) played the major colleges and some professional teams. In the 1923 summer intramural league, the 24th was once again on their own, not included in the post competition.

Though the soldiers' league did not come to fruition in 1923, something did blossom and that was the behind the scenes action of the 24th Infantry's officers. The 24th had officers just like any other unit but for one exception. The officers of the 24th were white which was by "ruling." These officers took it upon themselves to fight for their soldiers for inclusion in a post soldiers' league. The regimental commander from 1922 to 1924, Col. Benjamin Patton Nicklin who had strong ties to professional baseball and had been quite instrumental in the regimental team's scheduling of professional as well as collegiate games. In the background he furthered the cause for a soldiers' league "to improve his (24th) team's level of play." In 1924 Nicklin was reassigned and his replacement Col. Wait C. Johnson, hit the ground running.

Johnson, whose background included athletics at all levels, worked tirelessly to ensure his men would continue to play the best teams in the region from collegiate to pro. Upon his arrival at Fort Benning, he was placed in charge of the Athletic Association, which made him responsible for the construction and oversight of the newly approved athletic complex, which included Doughboy Stadium and Gowdy Field. This appointment also placed him in contact with all the "powers that be."

Johnson in his capacity as OIC for the Athletic Association took VIPs to watch his regimental team practice or play when he could, all the time hinting at a soldiers' league. During the tours as the VIPs inspected the construction of Gowdy Field, which was built primarily by the 24th Infantry, he would paint the picture of all soldiers playing, not just certain units. As he continued to push for the builders of Gowdy Field to be included in the post intramural leagues, the summer of 1924 started and once again the 24th was left out. However an olive branch was noticed as the article describing the start of the 1924 post intramural league also had a mention that the 24th would be allowed to play in a "three cornered series between the 29th, 24th and winners of the Intramural League." Though seen as just a minor sentence in a multi-paragraphed article, it was a milestone in the step towards an integrated soldiers' league.

The "three cornered series" did not materialize as the optempo for completion of Gowdy Field took precedence over everything. The 24th labored on in shifts to complete the ball field in time for the first game and Johnson continued the behind-the-scenes fight for a soldiers' league. It seems that almost as a reward for their efforts in the construction of Gowdy Field, the 24th received inclusion in the post intramural league in May 1925.

During the hard fought season the 24th teams (Reds and Blues) played admirably.

Their sportsmanship on and off the field was stated in many articles. The season was split in halves with the winners of each half to play in a best of five series to determine an overall winner for the post. In the first half the perennial powerhouse team from the Infantry School Detachment defeated everyone to win the first half title.

As the ISD fell into a slump, the 24th Reds went into a winning streak and won the second half title setting the stage for the playoffs. The hard fought title was eventually decided in the last game (game five) with the 24th Reds coming away the victors in the first integrated Post Intramural Baseball League, before sell-out crowds.

Nearly three years after the 24th challenged the issue of athletic segregation, a soldiers' league came to pass. Changing the "rulings", as "we are all soldiers, so why not a soldiers' league composed of the best that the post affords." How long did this league run? Only further research will show and the information can be found in the Donovan Research Library in Infantry Hall. In the meantime, baseball is making a comeback for the soldiers on Fort Benning in the form of the Soldiers' Baseball Association.

It is hoped a soldiers' league will once again be seen on Fort Benning for it would be a shame for the efforts of the 24th to have been wasted.

white horizon light aft, a ventilation or flame arrester on inboard boats, and a whistle or horn.

• Know the boating rules. In crossing situations, the boat on the right has the right of way. In passing situations, the boat being overtaken has the right of way. In head-on situations, both vessels turn right and pass port to port.

• Reduce speed in harbors and confined areas. Avoid making a disturbing wake in congested waters. Make sharp turns at reduced speed. In rough water, stay low in the boat and cross waves at a slight angle.

• Do not exceed the capacity of a boat. Distribute passengers and gear evenly. Avoid horseplay.

• All passengers should remain seated in small boats.

• When refueling, stop smoking, extinguish all fires, and close all vents, doors and hatches.

• Operating a boat under the influence of alcohol or drugs may bring a fine of up to $5,000, imprisonment of one year, or both.

• Stay with the boat if it capsizes. It will make rescue easier.

Falling or being ejected from a boat is a scenario that happens frequently among the boating community, Toliver said.

He said it is helpful to have an extra set of clothing in a waterproof bag on the boat, especially during this time of year when the water can still be very cold.

The BASS Club encourages boaters to conduct a pre-boating safety inspection each time before going in the water.

For those interested in having a boat initially inspected to make sure it complies with state and federal requirements, contact Addington at 545-7910.

participate. Even some family pets joined in the fun. There were also a number of people there from Fort Benning.

Pfc. Peter Hendrickson, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was one of the soldiers there from post.

"I like to race," he said. "I'm doing it for a workout and for a good cause."

The overall winner of the 5K was Bobby Fix, 18, from Fort Benning, with a time of 16 minutes, 51 seconds. The first-place female runner was Connie Robertson, 38, of Hapeville, Ga., with a time of 18:59.

The "fun walk" was added this year in the hope of getting more younger girls and family members who aren't runners to join in.

Approximately 400 people participated in the event.

Some of the walkers weren't taking the challenge lightly.

"We have to stretch before we do the walk so our muscles don't hurt," said Jessica Moore, 8, from post Brownie troop 177.

"I think it's great," said her mother and troop leader, Tonya Moore. "It's a wonderful way to promote the cookies and to bring the girls together."

Event organizers were pleased with the support of this year's run and walk.

"We've had a wonderful turnout and great weather," said Rosimar Melendez, communications specialist, Girl Scouts of Concharty Council, Inc.

Goodwill was in the air as troops cheered on other troops as they crossed the finish line.

An extra enticement after both events for the younger participants was a "cookie carnival" with games, prizes, and of course, Girl Scout cookies.

For some walkers, that was reason enough to cross the finish line.

"We heard we get to eat a big cookie at the end," 8-year-old Moore said.

For seven-year veteran participants like Julianna Lovelette, 12, Columbus cadet troop 387, the best part of the day was "having a race and being with all our friends."

dropped one giving them a 39-36 victory.

After the game, Crush's coach Charlie Norman said the game went well but his team tired in the second half.

"The game was good, but we just ran out of gas," Norman said. "We are a first-half team and in the third quarter we ran out of steam."

While his team is 0-3, he said his team has potential; they just need to work on their defense and endurance.

"The kids worked really hard," he said. "They were just outnumbered, but they didn't give up."

Arthur Scott, the Tarheel coach, said his team did a good job and just needed the first half to warm up.

"The game went great," Scott said. "In the first half it seemed as if we weren't sure on our defense, but once we got warmed up we did a good job."

Although the Tarheels pulled out the win, giving them a 2-2 record, Scott said he was surprised by how well the Crush played.

"They surprised me," he said "I thought they were going to be weak on their defense and we would blow them out, but they came out playing hard. I was shocked."

Scott predicted his team would win the final two games of the season.

"I think we are going to win the final two," he said. "I'm just glad we won't be playing them again because they were very tough."

Black said the Tarheels had a good offense but a little trouble with defense.

"Our offense was good pretty much the entire game, but during the third and fourth quarter we finally got our defense back together and that helped lead us to our win," Black said.

While only one of just a few girls on her team, she said that didn't stop her from anything.

"I've played on these teams for four seasons," she said. "Most of the time I was the only girl."

When boys push her around, she pushes them right back.

BANK REPOSSESION SELL-OFF

ASK ABOUT NO QUALIFYING ASSUMPTIONS!

Mr. Heard knows how difficult it can be to purchase a first car. Mr. Heard owns numerous dealerships and has decided to make it easy for you to obtain a vehicle without the complications many dealers would put you through. HERE IS THE DEAL: Mr. Heard has decided rather than sell these vehicles to used car dealers which would enable them to buy them and inflate the prices to you. he has ordered us to bring all of these vehicles from his other dealerships here at one location.

Furthermore, in order to simplify this sale even more. Bill Heard Chevrolet will require a $17 down payment and you will assume payments directly from our banks.

Hollywood plans for possible strike

Jacqueline Cutler
TVData Features Syndicate©

One of the pleasures of fall is finding out what happened in the cliff-hanger endings of favorite shows and tuning into new programs that have been hyped all summer.

But this coming fall, viewers instead may find themselves channel-hopping among reality shows, newsmagazines, sports, and movies they have already seen.

Writers and actors may go on strike this spring and summer, respectively, and if they do, viewers this fall would be left with a steady diet of nonscripted programming.

Though network executives have contingency plans to keep viewers tuning in, you may want to consider alternative ways to spend your time.

Instead of watching the gang on Ed bowl, there's always the possibility of rolling a few strikes of your own. If you have been holed up for so long that your only pals are Monica, Phoebe and Rachel, maybe it's time to find some new friends.

As of midwinter, no one could say with any certainty if the strike would occur.

"We think there is a deal that can be made," said Greg Krizman, spokesman for the Screen Actors Guild, which represents 135,000 actors. "We enter every discussion with the assumption that there will be a negotiation."

The actors were hammering out final demands. Meanwhile, the Writers Guild of America, representing 11,000 scribes, wants increased residuals for syndication and Internet use of scripts.

Barbara Hall, a TV writer for 20 years and executive producer of Judging Amy, said, "The issue of redefining cable is not going to go away. TV's only getting bigger. It's a slippery slope, the idea that they can use loose definitions of cable to pay writers. Why not deal with it now and nip it in the bud?"

For now, Krizman said, "I would just like to move it from the presumption of a strike."

Network executives say that's also their intention. Each network president said it's best to avert a strike.

However, contingency plans must be made now. Since the last writers strike in 1988 and the last actors strike in 1980, the television landscape has changed drastically because of the explosion of cable channels and personal computers.

"A strike would be devastating," said Peter Roth, president of Warner Bros. Television. "At Warner Bros., we have certain series picked up already: For Your Love, Baby Blues, Dead Last and Whose Line (Is It Anyway?). It really doesn't matter, in the final analysis, whether we stockpile episodes. The impact is not simply with the number of jobs that would be lost, which is incalculable, and the impact on the economy of Los Angeles, which is also devastating. The real impact is on the viewer. In 1988, we lost 9 percent of our audience following that strike. That was a time when there was a triopoly of three networks. There weren't nearly as many alternatives for the viewer. Imagine today with the proliferation of choice for the viewer, a strike drives viewers away from network television at a time when we can least afford it."

"It's not in anybody's interest to have a strike happen," said Scott Sassa, NBC's West Coast president. "In sports when that happens, it's never good for the teams or the fans. We have made plans. We have a number of reality shows that are in stages ready to go that we'll try to put in the spring and summertime. We also have made plans by purchasing Law & Order III: Criminal Intent ... we'll air 13 episodes of that. Dick Wolf and Studios USA have been incredibly helpful in doing extra episodes of both Law & Order and SVU (Law & Order: Special Victims Unit) for next year."

With actors and writers strikes looming, viewers might want to have their own contingency plans, such as spending time at the bowling alley a la NBC's Ed. If the strikes occur, expect more reality and news programming, sports and recycled movies.

With the development of reality shows still going strong — as evidenced by a new Survivor airing on CBS and plans for a third and fourth lined up — expect to see even more of this type of programming than you would otherwise.

"Everybody has a lot more reality in development, which is not union dependent," said Leslie Moonves, CBS president and CEO. He said that newsmagazine shows will likely be expanded.

"The legacy of the last writers strike in my mind is 20/20 and Dateline on three or four nights a week," said Don Reo, executive producer of ABC's upcoming sitcom My Wife and Kids. "Those were put in as a stopgap measure at that time, and they've lasted."

Only a select few TV actors and personalities have reached such heights that a strike likely means little to their celebrity or bank accounts.

Still, they plan to stick with the union on principle. "If we go on strike, we go on strike," Jay Leno said. "It's OK with me. I'm a union person."

Then there are those starting out. Ana Ortiz, 26, just landed a role in the upcoming show Kristin. "If worse comes to worse, I'll go home (to New York) and stick to my theater company," Ortiz said. "I can always bartend."

Some veterans are ready to picket. Shelley Morrison, who plays Rosario the maid on Will & Grace, is worried about the thousands of workers around Hollywood who depend on the entertainment industry. "This is a company town," Morrison said. "So many people are affected by this — the lumberyards, paint supplies, carpet companies, housing; it just goes on and on."

Chuck Lorre, a writer and executive on four hits, including Dharma & Greg, said, "I pray along with everyone else that common sense will prevail, and we will have a middle ground everyone's unhappy with. My contingency plan is to get really good walking sneakers so I can carry a picket sign."

Now playing at a theater near you.

O Brother, Where Art Thou? — They have a plan, but not a clue.

Ulysses Everett McGill (George Clooney) is a garrulous, silver-tongued, petty criminal having some difficulty adjusting to the regimentation of life as a man sentenced to a term of hard labor in Mississippi.

Reluctant to spend any more time crushing rocks, he scams his way off the chain gang with a clumsy duo of lame losers: sweet and simple Delmar (Tim Blake Nelson), and the maladjusted Pete (John Turturro).

With nothing to lose and still in shackles, they make a hasty run for their lives and end up on an incredible journey filled with awesome experiences and colorful characters. However, they must also match wits with the cunning and mysterious lawman Cooley.

O Brother, Where Art Thou? is written and directed by Joel and Ethan Coen, two filmmakers who put their own unique modern-day spin on Homer's classic tale of The Odyssey.

With the words of a blind prophet ringing in their ears: "You will find a fortune but not the fortune you seek," the three shackled escapees make a hasty run for their lives and buried treasure. They travel down the road on a journey filled with perils, surprises and wondrous events.

Along the way, they meet an assortment of curious characters including Tommy Johnson (Chris Thomas King), a musician on his way to Jackson to sing on the radio, Big Dan Teague (John Goodman), an unscrupulous, one-eyed Bible salesman who deceives them, Babyface Nelson (Michael Badalucco), the notorious gangster who befriends them in the middle of a robbing spree, and Penny Wharvey (Holly Hunter), an important part of Everett's not so distant past.

O Brother, Where Art Thou? is rated PG-13 for violence and language.

Thirteen Days — You'll never believe how close we came.

For 13 extraordinary days in October of 1962, the world stood on the brink of an unthinkable catastrophe. Across the globe, people anxiously awaited the outcome of a harrowing political, diplomatic and military confrontation that threatened to end in an apocalyptic nuclear exchange between the United States and the Soviet Union.

In Thirteen Days, the power and peril of the American presidency is dramatically explored by director Roger Donaldson, who captures the urgency, suspense and paralyzing chaos of the Cuban Missile Crisis.

One sees President John F. Kennedy and his brother Bobby through the eyes of a trusted presidential aide and confidante, Kenneth P. O'Donnell (Kevin Costner).

While mounting evidence suggests that the risk of a nuclear exchange was far greater than previously imagined, no one will ever know everything that happened behind closed doors at the White House, but, drawing on numerous historical sources, including White House tapes, memoirs, oral histories, CIA documents and personal interviews, screenwriter David Self has dramatized and woven together a story inspired by the events of October 1962 into a memorable thriller.

Thirteen Days is rated PG-13 for strong language.

Finding Forrester — In an ordinary place, he found the one person to make his life extraordinary.

He was a vibrant personality who wrote a Pulitzer Prize-winning classic novel four decades ago. And that's the last the world heard of William Forrester.

That is until Jamal Wallace, a brash 16-year-old with writing aspirations of his own, cracks the veneer of Forrester's sheltered existence and re-ignites the dreams of this literary legend in the winter of his life.

Known as the neighborhood recluse, silver-haired Forrester (Oscar-winner Sean Connery) is a man whose mystery and eccentricity border on the mythical. When Jamal (Rob Brown) — a talented African-American scholar-athlete who is recruited by an elite Manhattan prep school for his brilliance on and off the basketball court — sneaks into his apartment and accidentally leaves behind his backpack full of writings, they both get something unexpected in return.

Forrester's apartment, full of dusty stacks of classic tomes and the furious sound of a clicking typewriter, quickly becomes the place where the two writers meet, laugh, argue, learn and dedicate themselves to the one thing that irrevocably binds them together — love for the written word.

Finding Forrester is PG-13 for brief strong language and some sexual references.

Cast Away — Explore the blessings and cruelties of fate and the survival of the human spirit.

Tom Hanks stars as Chuck Noland, whose personal and professional life are ruled by the clock. He proceeds at warp speed, devoted to a career that matches his compulsive personality.

While Chuck can "fix" anything at work, his personal life is another matter. Chuck's job responsibilities leave little time for his longtime girlfriend Kelly, played in a featured role by Oscar-winner Helen Hunt.

Chuck's manic existence abruptly ends when he becomes isolated on a remote island — cast away into the most desolate environment imaginable.

Cast Away is rated PG-13 for some violence.

American Boychoir to sing at Rylander

Rylander Theatre

The American Boychoir of Princeton, N.J., comes to the Rylander Theatre for a return engagement at 7 p.m. Feb. 9 in the Jimmy Carter Auditorium.

Having captivated audiences with their first appearance here in February 2000, the sterling voices of the Boychoir will perform classical music, art songs, American popular tunes, spirituals and sacred music.

Each fall, The American Boychoir School welcomes its students back to Princeton, N.J., for a rigorous year of studies, rehearsals and performances. Repertoire is chosen at that time and is based on the sound and blend of the choral members.

Founded in Columbus, Ohio in 1937, the Boychoir has been located in Princeton, N.J. since 1950. The Boychoir has established a reputation as the premiere concert boys' choir in the U.S. for its rich sonorities, musical sophistication, expressive power and innovative programming. The 2000-2001 season is rife with prestigious performances.

Plans for new PX announced

New facility will cost $21 million, open in 2003

1st Lt. Stacy Picard
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Fort Benning is getting a new post exchange.

Construction on the new facility, which will cost $21 million, begins next year. The new shopping center will more than double the current floor space.

The new center is needed because there is no space to expand the current building and meet the growing needs of the community, said Ted Wulff, Army Air Force Exchange Service chief of Store Planning.

"Based on the demographics for Fort Benning, the existing store is too small," he said. "We looked at the options of expanding the existing store or if we should build a new store. As it turned out the best alternative was building a new shopping center."

"Shoppers are well aware of the current congestion with all space at a premium. Given the existing location constraints and parking problems, expansion of the present store isn't feasible using existing designs," said Donald O'Reilly, Fort Benning AAFES manager.

"Construction of a new shopping center with an ideal location across the street from the newly renovated commissary will solve the sizing, overcrowding, and parking while providing easy access and the feel of one-stop shopping," O'Reilly said.

There will be many additions to the new shopping center.

A larger post exchange will offer more variety and an optometrist office will be one of the additions within the complex.

The food court area will provide more choices for patrons to include Taco Bell. The food establishments currently in the existing shopping center will be in the new complex, which will more than double the size of the existing building.

The current building that houses the PX, mall, and food court is approximately 95,000 square feet. The new shopping center is slated to be more than double the current size at 208,000 square feet.

"The new AAFES Shopping Center will cost approximately $21 million. This modern facility will offer almost three times the current retail selling space, a larger food court with both AAFES and name brand food outlets, and enlargement of service outlets to significantly enhance the level of service to our patrons," O'Reilly said.

Kenneth Holloway, master planner of Fort Benning, said he did not want to see the existing building go to waste after the transition and offered up the idea of converting it into a new welcome center to replace the offices residing in Soldiers Plaza.

"The project will move the offices currently at Soldiers Plaza, out of the World War II barracks on Dixie Road and into the old mall," Holloway said. "This idea came about due to the offices being spread out between too many buildings, which can cause confusion for soldiers.

"This location is right off of I-185

Post tests officer basic

Class integrates lieutenants from all branches

Sgt. Michael Maddox
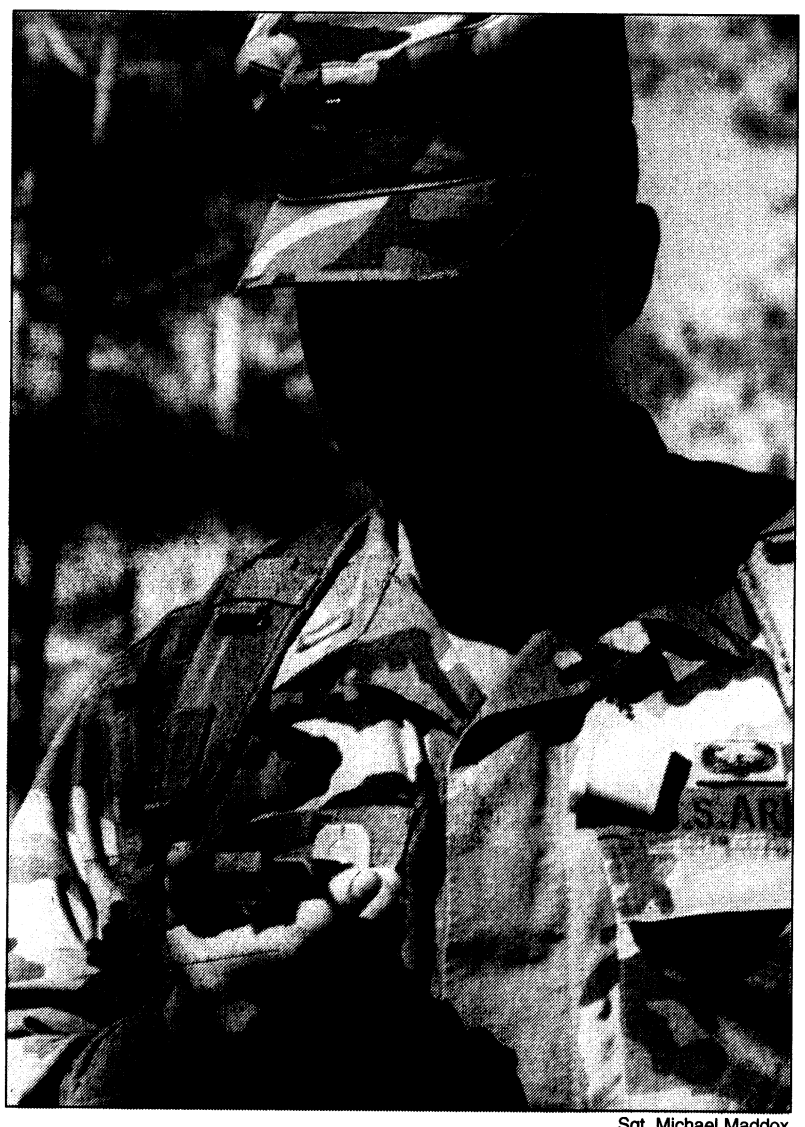
Bayonet staff

The officers in the Basic Officer Leader Course at 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, are in their third week of training and everything is running smoothly. As far as they are concerned things in B Company are business as usual.

While that is sort of the case, it also isn't. The class is the first one of its kind testing a possible new way to train Army officers in basic soldier skills and leadership.

In BOLC, officers from all branches will learn basic soldiering skills together instead of within their specific field.



"The focus is leadership and to instill the warrior ethos, bringing everyone to Fort Benning, male, female, whatever branch they are, for seven weeks before they go off to their branch training," said Maj. Jim Crider, B Company commander. "We aren't teaching anything really new. We're stressing leadership and developmental counseling to a much higher degree earlier in this course. We've also added a week of patrolling that we didn't have in the previous course."

"We're doing things in a different order than before. Things that are more infantry officer specific — instead of doing those in the first six or seven weeks of infantry specific training, those skills will be taught at the basic branch course," Crider said. "The intent is to ground them in some basic infantry skills to use them as a vehicle to practice leadership."

This is accomplished with more hands-on training that in past courses, said Crider.

"Most of the time here is spent out in the field. A minimal amount of time is spent in the classroom,"

Movie stars wanted

Casting calls for Mel Gibson film this week

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Soldiers, family members, civilians and retirees from Fort Benning will have a chance to work as extras on the upcoming Mel Gibson movie We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young, which will film in March.

A casting call is set for Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium. Another call will be held Wednesday from 2-4 p.m. in the auditorium, located on the building's first floor.

These casting calls are for people affiliated with Fort Benning and retirees only.

All ages and ethnicities are needed, said Christopher Gray, casting director. (Children must be accompanied by an adult.)

Gray is looking for a large number of soldiers from all ranks and from different military occupational specialities.

"I want to make sure we get some real strong military guys," he said.

Individuals must be able to work one or more consecutive days between March 5-17, and

Racial profiling violates basic rights

Soldiers discuss stigma of 'driving while black'

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

On a hot summer afternoon in 1998, Sgt. 1st Class Jerry McCullough was enjoying the scenery along south Florida's Interstate 75. Traffic whizzed by on either side, but he was in no hurry. His weekend R&R was coming to an end, and McCullough was savoring every last moment in the Florida sun before heading north to Fort Benning and his new responsibilities as equal opportunity adviser.

Suddenly blue lights flashed in his rearview mirror.

"At first I thought he was after someone else," McCullough recalled. "Cars were flying by, but he stopped me. He called it a 'routine stop,' but he never said why he pulled me over and he didn't give me a ticket. When he saw my military ID, he just let me go."

Frustrated by what he suspected was a case of racial profiling, McCullough put the incident behind him — a mere 30 miles behind him — before he was stopped by a state trooper again.

"Same story, 30 miles down the road. Routine stop, no problem. He just wanted to see my registration and ID," McCullough said, shaking his head.

"I thought society had got past this kind of thing. I was stereotyped — a black man driving a foreign car with out-of-state tags."

McCullough teaches classes on racism, perception and stereotyping at Fort Benning's Equal Opportunity Office. He said his experience three years ago helped prepare him for the grievances he hears frequently from others who have experienced similar kinds of discrimination.

"We offer courses to EEO reps every month, and in every single class we hear several stories like this," he said. "This kind of thing happens all the time."

"This kind of thing" has a name. It's been derisively dubbed DWB — "Driving While Black," and the American Civil Liberties Union says the term defines racial profiling and violates the Fourth Amendment, which declares it unlawful to stop or detain someone without probable cause.

"Skin color has become evidence of the propensity to commit crime, and police use this "evidence" against minority drivers on the road all the time," said David Harris, professor of Law at the University of Toledo, in a report published by the ACLU in November.

The ACLU monitors incidents of racial profiling across the U.S. and supports its claim of widespread discrimination with statistics from traffic surveys conducted on various major highways and interstates. It continues to work to advance legislation, such as the Traffic Stops Statistics Study Act to ban racial profiling in all states.

And in some cases, the union files suit on behalf of those victimized by the unlawful practice. The ACLU filed a lawsuit in Oklahoma last year on behalf of Sgt. 1st Class Rossano Gerald and his 13-year-old son, Gregory, claiming violation of their federal civil rights in a 1998 traffic search and seizure on an Oklahoma

I was looking through a photo album this weekend during a visit from my parents. It contained pictures I had taken at my brother's wedding in June.

There were dozens of the bride and groom. But the picture that made me stop and reflect was one of Charlotte and Raymond Cook, both in their 90s. Charlotte wore a royal blue dress, and Raymond escorted her in a gray suit.

During the reception, the guests moved from wishing the newly married lovebirds well to speaking to the most senior symbols of enduring matrimony in the room.

Both couples glowed. One so happy, so in love, so young. The other so happy, so in love, so young at heart.

I heard more than one person comment that the Cooks looked like they were "courting" that day.

Raymond stayed by Charlotte's side. They held hands and tried whispering to each other, as best they could for two people who were hard of hearing. That's how my brother overheard Raymond's comment about the wedding cake.

Charlotte, who was considered legally blind after years of fighting an eye disorder, had mistaken a large cheese ball covered in nuts for a cake and had cut a slice for Raymond.

After taking a bite, Raymond's only comment was, "It's good cake, but it's a little rich." He finished off the "cheesecake" and never let Charlotte know of her mistake.

I consider that one of the sweetest, most romantic gestures that occurred during the wedding celebration.

The Cooks were among the last guests to leave that day, and it would be the last time I would see Charlotte. She died Dec. 26, and Raymond was by her hospital bed.

On the videotape made during the wedding and reception, Charlotte is seen talking to my two brothers. They are all smiling and laughing as she offered up some advice on making a marriage work.

They didn't tell me what she said, but I can tell you how she and Raymond lived.

The Cooks were married more than 65 years and lived next door to my parents. In fact, my father recalls the couple moving into their home in 1946, when he was 16. They were a fixture in that neighborhood, and never met a stranger.

They treated everyone equally. As a child, I never felt as though they were talking down to me. And, most importantly, they never talked disparagingly about each other. You could see their mutual respect and love not only in their words, but in their actions.

They were avid bird watchers and always allowed little children to use their binoculars, even little girls who were prone to break things. Raymond added a special window to their den where he and Charlotte would look out into the woods at the birds. They could name each one they spotted and would provide visitors with a guide book in an attempt to get them hooked on their pastime.

When they did things, they did them together. They shared a love for nature, as well as many other hobbies, like growing grapes and raising beagles.

When you left their presence you always had a funny story to tell. Raymond and Charlotte loved to laugh, with each other especially.

Raymond sits by his den window alone now, looking out at life and the birds he loves. He's doing well, according to my parents who visit him often.

In a note to us last month he called his wife's passing "Charlotte's graduation."

I've always liked the way he and Charlotte looked at things — whether birds, life, love or death.

Grab a hanky — this is a moving story. Not the tear-jerking, heart-breaking variety, but the "break-out-in-a-cold-sweat-cause-I-feel-your-pain" variety. You'll need the hanky to wipe your brow as you recall similar experiences of your own, when someone uttered those dreaded words to you — "Pack up and clear out before Friday."

If you've been in the Army for any length of time, you know moving is an ordeal, whether you're moving up, moving on or moving over.

We've moved over, clear over across post, but we've still had to deal with the same hassles we do when we transfer hundreds of miles.

And we had less than a week to do it.

Less than seven days to forward the mail, disconnect and transfer the cable and telephone, take down a chain-link fence, pack a family of six and clear quarters.

Then of course we had to unload, unpack and put that fence right back up.

Whew. See what I mean? Grab a cold drink and a hanky.

The good news is we did it, but not without a lot of help from our friends. This is my way of saying thank you to the people who made the impossible possible.

Thank you to the friends who spent their training holiday helping us lug furniture from there to here. Thank you for giving up a hard-to-come-by day off work to come work at our house.

Thank you to the friend who let the kids play at her house so I could concentrate on packing breakables.

Thank you to the friend who cooked a hot meal and brought it over so I wouldn't have to stop packing long enough to cook. After five days of peanut-butter and jelly, the kids were ever so grateful.

And thank you, thank you, thank you to the friend who spent her holiday helping me paint — and actually made the job a pleasant experience.

Thank you to everyone who said, by word or deed, "Don't worry about it. Let me handle this detail for you," whether it was picking the kids up from school or making another run to the hardware store for fencing material.

These are the kind of people who define true friendship — the ones who give till it hurts, inconvenience themselves for others, put others' needs ahead of their own desires. These kind of friends in need are friends indeed.

All too often, when the Army moves us, we appreciate too late the quality of friends we've left behind. I guess I'm kind of lucky. I've learned how much our friends care for us, and I didn't have to say good-bye to find out.

So, thanks friends. You know who you are and where we live. The coffee's always hot and the door's always open to you.

I believe there's a special place in heaven for friends like you. I hope it's next door to me.

Pets' idiosyncrasies lead to pet peeves

commentary

Why can't I have normal pets? The birds come pretty close, if you count singing fractured nursery rhymes like drunken sailors normal. They can't help it if they're tone deaf.

The cat will not drink from a water bowl, she'll only drink water dripping gently from a faucet. If the faucet isn't dripping, any glass, including yours, will do. A normal cat would just drink from the toilet.

Lumpy, is our 13-pound canine senior citizen. Mostly deaf and blind, he thinks nothing of challenging the other two dogs. The girls have him outflanked, outnumbered and outweighed by at least 20 pounds each. As a result, Lumpy wears what a terrier judge would call "honorable scars."

"Honorable scars?" I could have just had "Stupid" tattooed across his forehead.

When our "in-between" dog, Smoke, begs for treats, does she sit up? Hold up a front paw? Bark? No. She does push-ups.

Most dogs are hooked on something — food, a tennis ball, or a favorite toy. Floss? She would rather watch TV than eat.

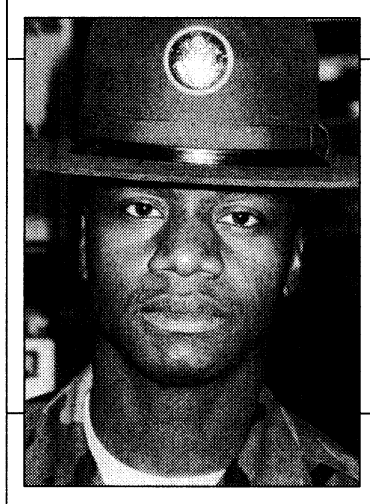
That's right. Watch TV. To be completely accurate, she actively watches TV, with a paw on either side of the screen as she snatches at the creature on the other side of the glass. We've got the nose prints and smears to prove it.

She's not a picky TV viewer, but she does have her favorites. Network news and game shows don't do much for her, but just about anything airing on the Animal Planet is always a big hit — in more ways than one.

More than once now, Floss has gotten so excited about something on the screen that she has raced across the room to pin it down with her feet, moving the set in the process. The only way the rest of us can tell what direction the action is moving is to watch the back of her head as she sweeps the screen with her face. In the process, she has turned the TV off, raised or lowered the volume, adjusted the color and invoked picture-in-picture, which really raises her motivation level.

That enthusiasm is why Floss has been banned from taking interactive television to new heights in the living room. The set out there is on an open stand and pretty much defenseless from four-legged feedback.

Our daughter, whose TV viewing is limited to an hour a day, sees nothing unusual with her dog's behavior. In fact, she's tried to parlay it to her advantage. She's campaigning for the dog to get an hour too.



My only consolation is that I have reliable witnesses to testify that my dog is a TV junkie. Not like the time our rabbit turned bad and started attacking people.

Don't get me wrong. I fully support putting the "fun" back in "dysfunctional," but it has to end somewhere. And when my last shot at a normal pet is our little lizard, Fluffy, it's going to be a long, slow haul.

Couple's romance survives war, landing

Marriage begins with sparks flying

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

In December 1943, an infantry lieutenant stood on the runway at the Army Air Base in Presque Isle, Maine, watching as the aircraft from Labrador carrying his fiancee, an Army nurse, crash landed.

"It was a moment I'll never forget. I didn't know if I would be going to a wedding or a funeral," recalled retired Col. Bob Nett, 78.

"The plane came in, landed, and left a trail of sparks for 1,000 feet down the runway. The two fire trucks chasing the plane covered it with foam, and it came to a safe stop. The door opened, and there stood a beautiful Army nurse in a big parka, holding an armful of medical records," he said.

Bob and Frances Nett married Dec. 18; and 57 years later, he never tires of telling how the two met thanks to the Army Nurse Corps, which celebrated its 100th anniversary this month.

It was a year earlier, 1942, when Bob met 1st Lt. Frances Kabler at Fort Jackson, S.C.

Bob, who was assigned to the 77th Infantry Division, had just completed Officer Candidate School after serving more than eight months in the South Pacific.

He describes their courtship as a meeting of two worlds.

"Frances was a Methodist born in Lynchburg, Va., south of the Mason-Dixon Line, and I was a Catholic Connecticut Yankee from New Haven," Bob said.

But with a war going on the two would have to pursue a long-distance romance.

Frances' next assignment was at Goose Bay, Labrador. She was one of the first American nurses to work at the U.S. Army Air Corps Advance Base where airplanes en route to Europe landed for refueling and crew rest.

"It was an isolated place, with winter temperatures often down to 30 degrees below zero," Frances said.

The mission to Maine provided Frances and Bob the perfect opportunity to marry before he would leave again for duty in the Pacific. A flight nurse was needed to go back to the U.S. with a plane of patients, and Frances was selected.

"It was a day I'll never forget," Frances, 82, said of the near-fatal landing in Maine.

"The patients were looking at me. I told them to tighten their seat belts and pray because it was going to be a rough landing. I couldn't show any fear.

"But to this day I have to hold Bob's hand when landing," she said.

After her eight charges were safely in the care of the doctors on the ground, Frances and Bob made plans to be married.

The ceremony was in Bob's hometown of New Haven, Conn., and his mother was able to attend the ceremony.

A week later, on Christmas, Frances returned to Goose Bay, and Bob left for duty in Guam, eventually serving in the Philippines and later Okinawa.

The couple did not see each other again until more than a year later when Frances was reassigned to New Guinea.

She tried unsuccessfully to locate her husband. Mail was often transported by ship and had a hard time catching up with the two officers.

"I didn't know where Bob was, and he didn't know where I was," Frances said.

Her hospital was moved from New Guinea to the island of Leyte, in the Philippines, where the medical personnel treated casualties from the heavy fighting against the Japanese. She worked 12-hour shifts caring for 20 frontline casualties.

Frances had no idea her own husband had been severely wounded three times in the Philippines during an attack on a reinforced enemy battalion on Dec. 14, 1944. He had been evacuated to Hawaii for treatment.

Retired Col. Bob Nett sits with his wife, Frances, in their Columbus home.

Bob, who was shot in the neck, was awarded the Medal of Honor for his actions that day.

Before making a full recovery, Bob "talked his way" back to Leyte where he now knew Frances was stationed.

"It was crazy. The worst thing he did was talk his way back to Leyte.

"If he had been killed, it would have been my fault because he talked his way there to be with me," Frances said.

Bob's unit was located more than 20 miles from the hospital on the island, but when he was off duty, he traveled by jeep through the miles of dense jungle to see her.

Frances resigned from active duty in July 1945, but spent more than 30 years as an Army spouse.

The Netts have two children, Frances Anne and Robert Jr., a former airborne doctor, and three grandchildren.

After 33 years of active duty, Bob retired and settled in Columbus, where he taught high school. He visits Fort Benning regularly to visit the Officer Candidate School and talk to soldiers.

In his home office, Bob has displayed numerous mementos of his military career, including medals and photographs.

But he is quick to point to a Filipino bolo knife on the wall. A wounded soldier who wanted to make sure Frances was recognized for her hard work presented it to the nurse.

"I didn't give her anything, except of course, my love," Bob said.

Of her husband of more than five decades, Frances said, "I couldn't live without him. He's a wonderful person."

Institute to celebrate Human Rights Week

Event to mark, promote respect for humanity

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
WHISC Public Affairs Office

Professionals in the human rights field will gather at Ridgway Hall during the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's first Human Rights Week, Saturday through Feb. 17.

This event, which combines the 40-hour block of instruction on Human Rights Law and International Humanitarian Law given to the students attending the one-year Command and General Staff Officer Course, will include lectures, panels, workshops and displays all related to the topic, according to Maj. Tony Raimondo, judge advocate for WHISC and the institute's principal human rights instructor.

"This event can be described as a week of activities that celebrates the respect for human rights and international humanitarian law," Raimondo said.

"It also exemplifies the foundation of this institute, which is to teach respect for human rights as an integral part of military training and doctrine," he added.

Some of the lecturers speaking during the weeklong forum include Prof. Steve Schneebaum, an attorney from Washington, D.C., and author of several books on human rights; Prof. Peter Bowen, president of the Sangreal Group in California; Prof. Bernard Leoffke and Prof. Lyndon Godsall from Nova Southeastern University; the Rev. Denis St. Marie of the Catholic Diocese of Cleveland; Prof. Harold Kearsley of Troy State University; retired Col. Ralph Puckett; Larry Rockwood, a former U.S. Army captain and currently involved in the field of human rights training and retired Col. Lex Parker, the current Salvadoran Consulate in Boston, heading a three-day training event on International Humanitarian Law, the Law of War, under auspices of the International committee of the Red Cross. The ICRC will also send a delegate. Raimondo added two Human Rights discussion panels will be held Feb. 16 from 1 to 5 p.m. The first panel will feature Rockwood speaking on "The Moral and Ethical Obligations of Service Members to Stop Human Rights Abuses," and Puckett speaking on "The Moral and Ethical Foundation of the U.S. Army in Vietnam."

The second panel will feature Bowen speaking on "The Moral, Ethical, and Legal Obligations: SREBRENCIA," Kearsley on "The International (Permanent) Criminal Court," and the ICRC delegate on "The Rule of Law During Military Operations."

The public is invited to attend Human Rights Week, but because of limited space, call the WHISC Public Affairs Office at 545-2576 to reserve a seat.

soldiers and civilians must be on leave status the days they are involved with the movie. They will need to clear this leave through their units and directors.

A regular workday will consist of between 12 and 14 hours of shooting for adults, and six to eight for children.

"For some people, it could be for as many as five to 15 days," Gray said.

The casting director is trying to develop a core group of soldiers to appear in several different scenes. As for civilians, spouses and children are needed, especially for a crowd scene scheduled for later in the filming. At the casting calls, potential extras will meet Gray and Kimberly Rodgers, another casting director. Registration cards will be distributed and respondents will be asked personal information, to include rank and MOS. Polaroid photos will also be taken.

"We will try to make it as painless as possible," Gray said.

If selected to work on the project, individuals will be paid, but the wages have not yet been established, Gray said.

"Come one, come all. This will be a great opportunity to see how a movie is made," he said.

"We really want to use Fort Benning people, especially since the post is being so gracious in letting us film here."

Paramount Pictures is producing the movie based on the book We Were Soldiers Once and Young by retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and Joe Galloway.

Card rate falls

Fed cut allows Military Star card reduction

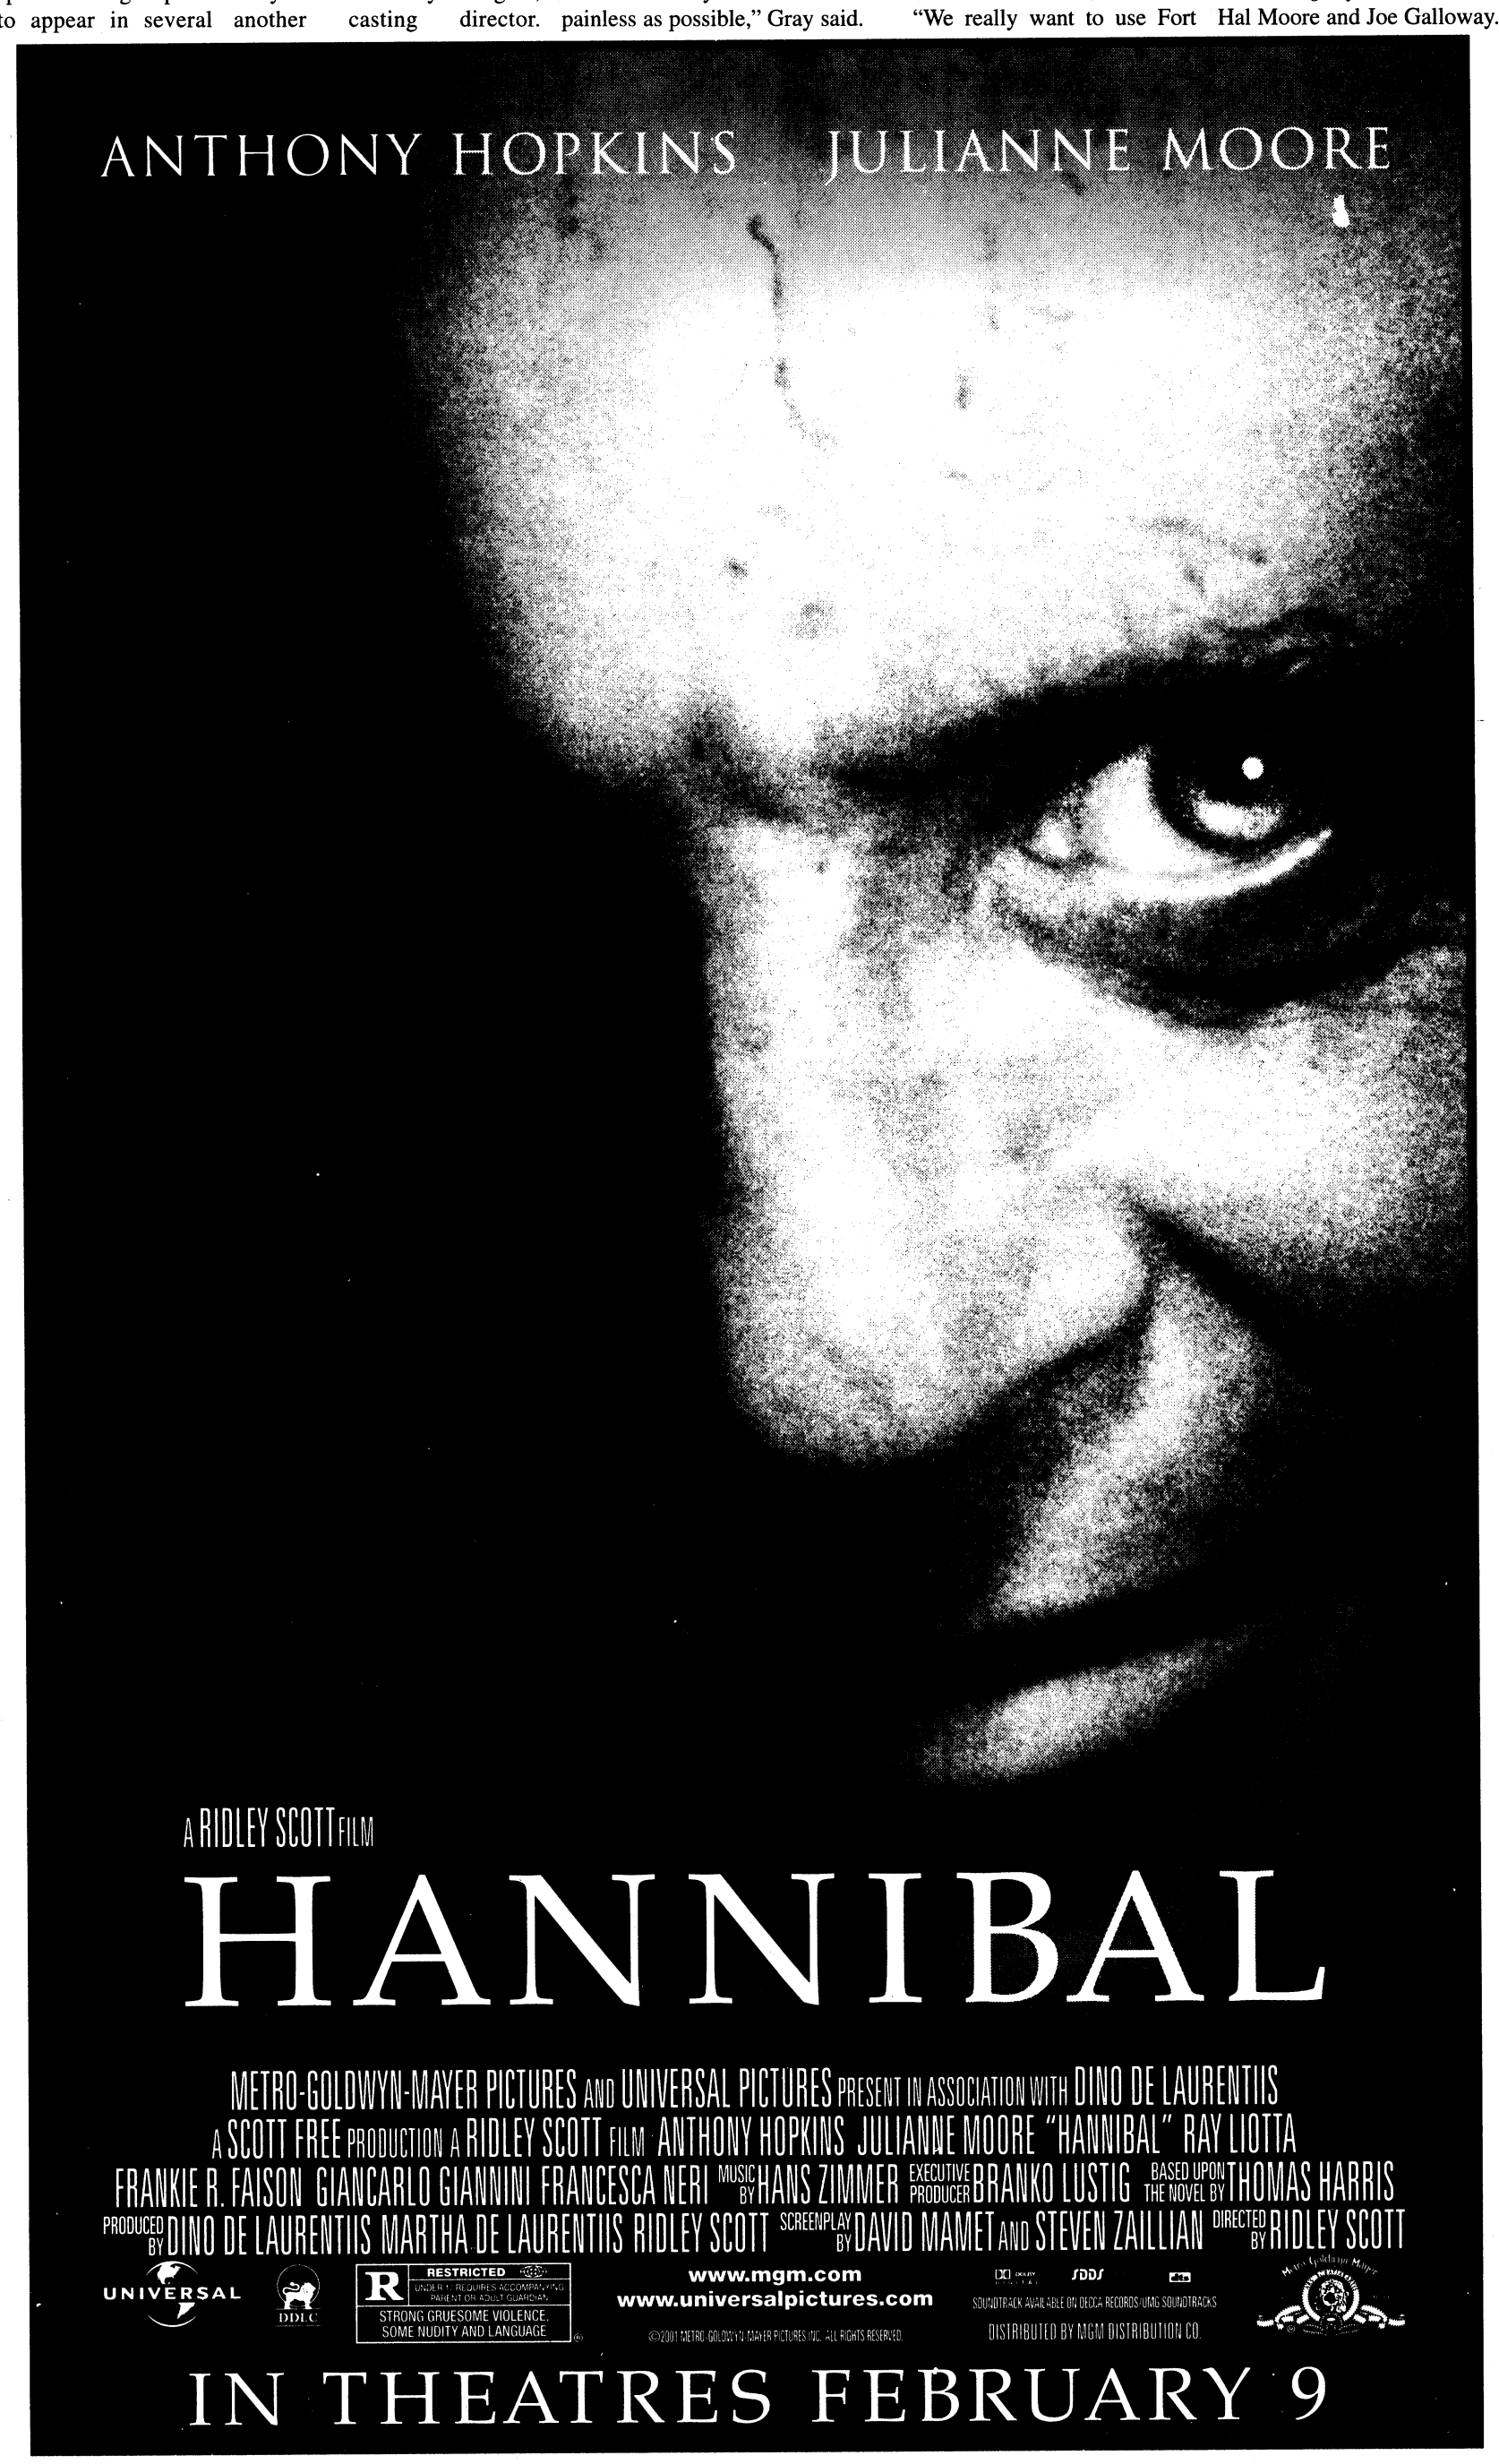
Army and Air Force Exchange Service

DALLAS — For the second time in the past four weeks, the Federal Reserve has lowered key interest rates by one half percent. As a result, banks also reduced their prime lending rate by one half percent. The Military Star card is reducing its interest rate from 13.75 percent to 13.25 percent, effective Feb. 15.

On Jan. 17, the interest rate on the Military Star card was lowered from 14.25 percent to 13.75 percent.

The Military Star card is accepted at all AAFES, NEXCOM, MCX and Coast Guard exchanges, including catalog and military clothing stores operated by AAFES and Marine Corps exchanges. The new rate does not apply to UCDPP/Military Sales Plans, special promotions already in existence, customers on deployment whose balances are treated under special conditions or those who have balances at reduced rates.

Deployment is defined as travel overseas in conjunction with JCS deployment orders.



The interest rate is computed by adding 4.75 plus the U.S. prime rate. This decrease maintains the highly competitive rate of the Military Star card.

According to www.bankrate.com, bankcard variable interest rates now average as follows: standard cards, 17.09 percent; gold cards, 16.56 percent; and platinum cards, 16.51 percent.

Earnings from the card go back into military communities as morale, welfare and recreation dividends.

and will be easier to find for new soldiers and everything is condensed into one building."

The new PX brings nothing but positives to the post, said O'Reilly.

"AAFES and the Fort Benning command share in the excitement of this project and the positive impact on the quality of life for our soldiers and families," O'Reilly said.

Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, agreed.

"It's a great thing that is going to happen for Fort Benning. I think it's going to be fantastic because this project is going to support all of our soldiers, leaders and the retirees in this area," he said.

Wulff said it is important to remember that AAFES makes a profit that directly goes back into the military community. The profits assist the MWR funds on installations and goes to build better shopping centers as well. Their mission is to provide services to military members, retirees, and their families.

This project has already been approved and funded by the AAFES Board of Directors and the Department of Defense. Construction is planned to take between 14-16 months.

The grand opening of the new AAFES Shopping Center is scheduled to take place in fall of 2003.

he said. "We might teach a class on how to counsel, but then they execute it in the field.

"More than 75 percent of the course is spent in the field environment."

The pilot class is fashioned after training done by other countries as well as the Marine Corps, said Maj. Dana Foley, executive officer for 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

"The Marine Corps also does this as a welcome to the military. It brings everyone to one course that's grounded in certain leadership principals and some 'hooah' aspects of the Army to get their attention," he said. "It let's them know they joined something special and it gets them enthusiastic about it."

It's a step in the right direction, Foley said.

"I think it will improve the skill of the lieutenants as we go to the basic course," he said. "They will all come to one place where they'll be grounded in certain Army values, ethics and leadership."

So far the testing of the new program is going well, said Crider.

"The class started Jan. 21. It's all male and all infantrymen. All we are doing is testing the program of instruction — the same things we intend to teach in a couple of years from now," he said. "We're testing the program to see if we are teaching the right amount of things and the correct subjects."

More testing will follow to see if the new program can work, said Foley.

"We're doing two tests this year. B Company is doing the first test and C Company will do the second one. That one will have 40 other than infantry lieutenants in it to include 14 females," he said.

That class begins Feb. 25. Then there will be two more test classes next January and February. The course should be fully up, branch immaterial by October 2002, said Foley.

The implementation of the actual Officer Basic Leader Course planned to officially begin during the 2003 fiscal year.

Like McCullough, Gerald was stopped twice in 30 minutes, and the second stop lasted more than two hours.

Gerald, a 38-year-old veteran of Desert Storm, and his son were detained in a closed car with fans blowing hot air, and warned that a police dog would attack them if they attempted to escape.

"I'm an authority figure myself," Gerald said, in a statement published by the ACLU. "I don't want my son thinking for one minute that this kind of behavior by anyone in uniform is acceptable."

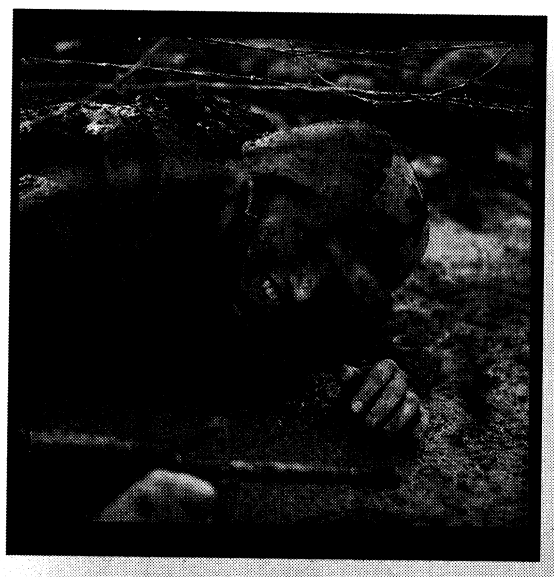
It's the uniform — or the military ID — that often makes the difference when a soldier is stopped, McCullough said.

Time and time again soldiers report a "change in attitude" when they show their identification. Such was the case with Staff Sgt. Roderick Stokes, a drill sergeant with the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry, Basic Combat Training Brigade.

Stokes was stopped for allegedly speeding on an Alabama highway last year.

"I had my daughter in the car, and I was not speeding. Cars were passing me," Stokes said. "He was yelling at me and threatening me and calling me 'boy,' but he calmed down real fast when I told him I was military. I wonder what would have happened if I wasn't in the military."

McCullough said Stokes handled the situation correctly.



"The best way to handle this situation is to be courteous and calm. That lets them know you don't fit the stereotype they've pinned on you," he said. "Use your best judgment, and when it's over, contact your commander immediately and come see us at the EO office. We'll help you evaluate the situation and point you in the right direction if you need further help."

Kelley Hill soldiers outgun OPFOR

Training prepares men for combat

A B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armored Regiment, 3rd Brigade, Abrams participates in a security zone exercise Tuesday.

Kelley Hill tankers, along with a platoon of Bradleys and dismounted infantry, took on an enemy force Tuesday, acting as the first line of their battalion's defense.

The Abrams tankers, from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, 3rd Brigade, and Bradleys fought an opposing force of Bradleys and dismounted infantry in preparation for Marne Focus, a series of battalion-size exercises beginning March 10 in Fort Stewart, Ga., and their upcoming National Training Center rotation in Fort Irwin, Calif., where they will participate in brigade exercises.

During the exercise, the OPFOR set up an ambush for the combat team. They knocked out one tank and a number of troops. The OPFOR then pulled out of their positions as they were overrun and pulled back to set another ambush.

Although the team fought in a mostly wooded area during the beginning of the engagement, the terrain opened up toward the end.

"During the first few contacts the team reacted very well and did the exact right things," said Maj. Michael Todd, the battalion's operations officer. "But when we got into the open, we got a little focused on the open terrain and the enemy had a lot better opportunity to get us."

The OPFOR did just that. As two tanks motored their way along the open terrain, the enemy Bradleys and infantry made their move.

"We were doing real good up until the very end," said Sgt. Robert Walden, a tank gunner in the lead column of tanks. "Then the tank got flanked and I got shot."

The other tank in the lead element experienced several close misses but knocked out one enemy Bradley and a number of ground troops.

As more tanks and the remaining Bradley of the combat group moved up to support the lone tank, they flushed out remaining enemy Bradley from its concealed position. Several minutes later, the combat team destroyed it and the engagement was over.

While the exercise took longer than running it in a simulator, crews said they felt they got more out of the training.

Walden said that although the battle was fought in a close area, the training was very beneficial and better than in the simulator.

"It was close combat, but good training," Walden said. "It is better than the simulator because you can get your drivers more into it and actually get the feel of the terrain.

"You get to know your equipment. In the simulator you're never on your track, and not actually knowing how it works," he said. "Out here you learn what your track can do and if it can hold up. It's more realistic out here."

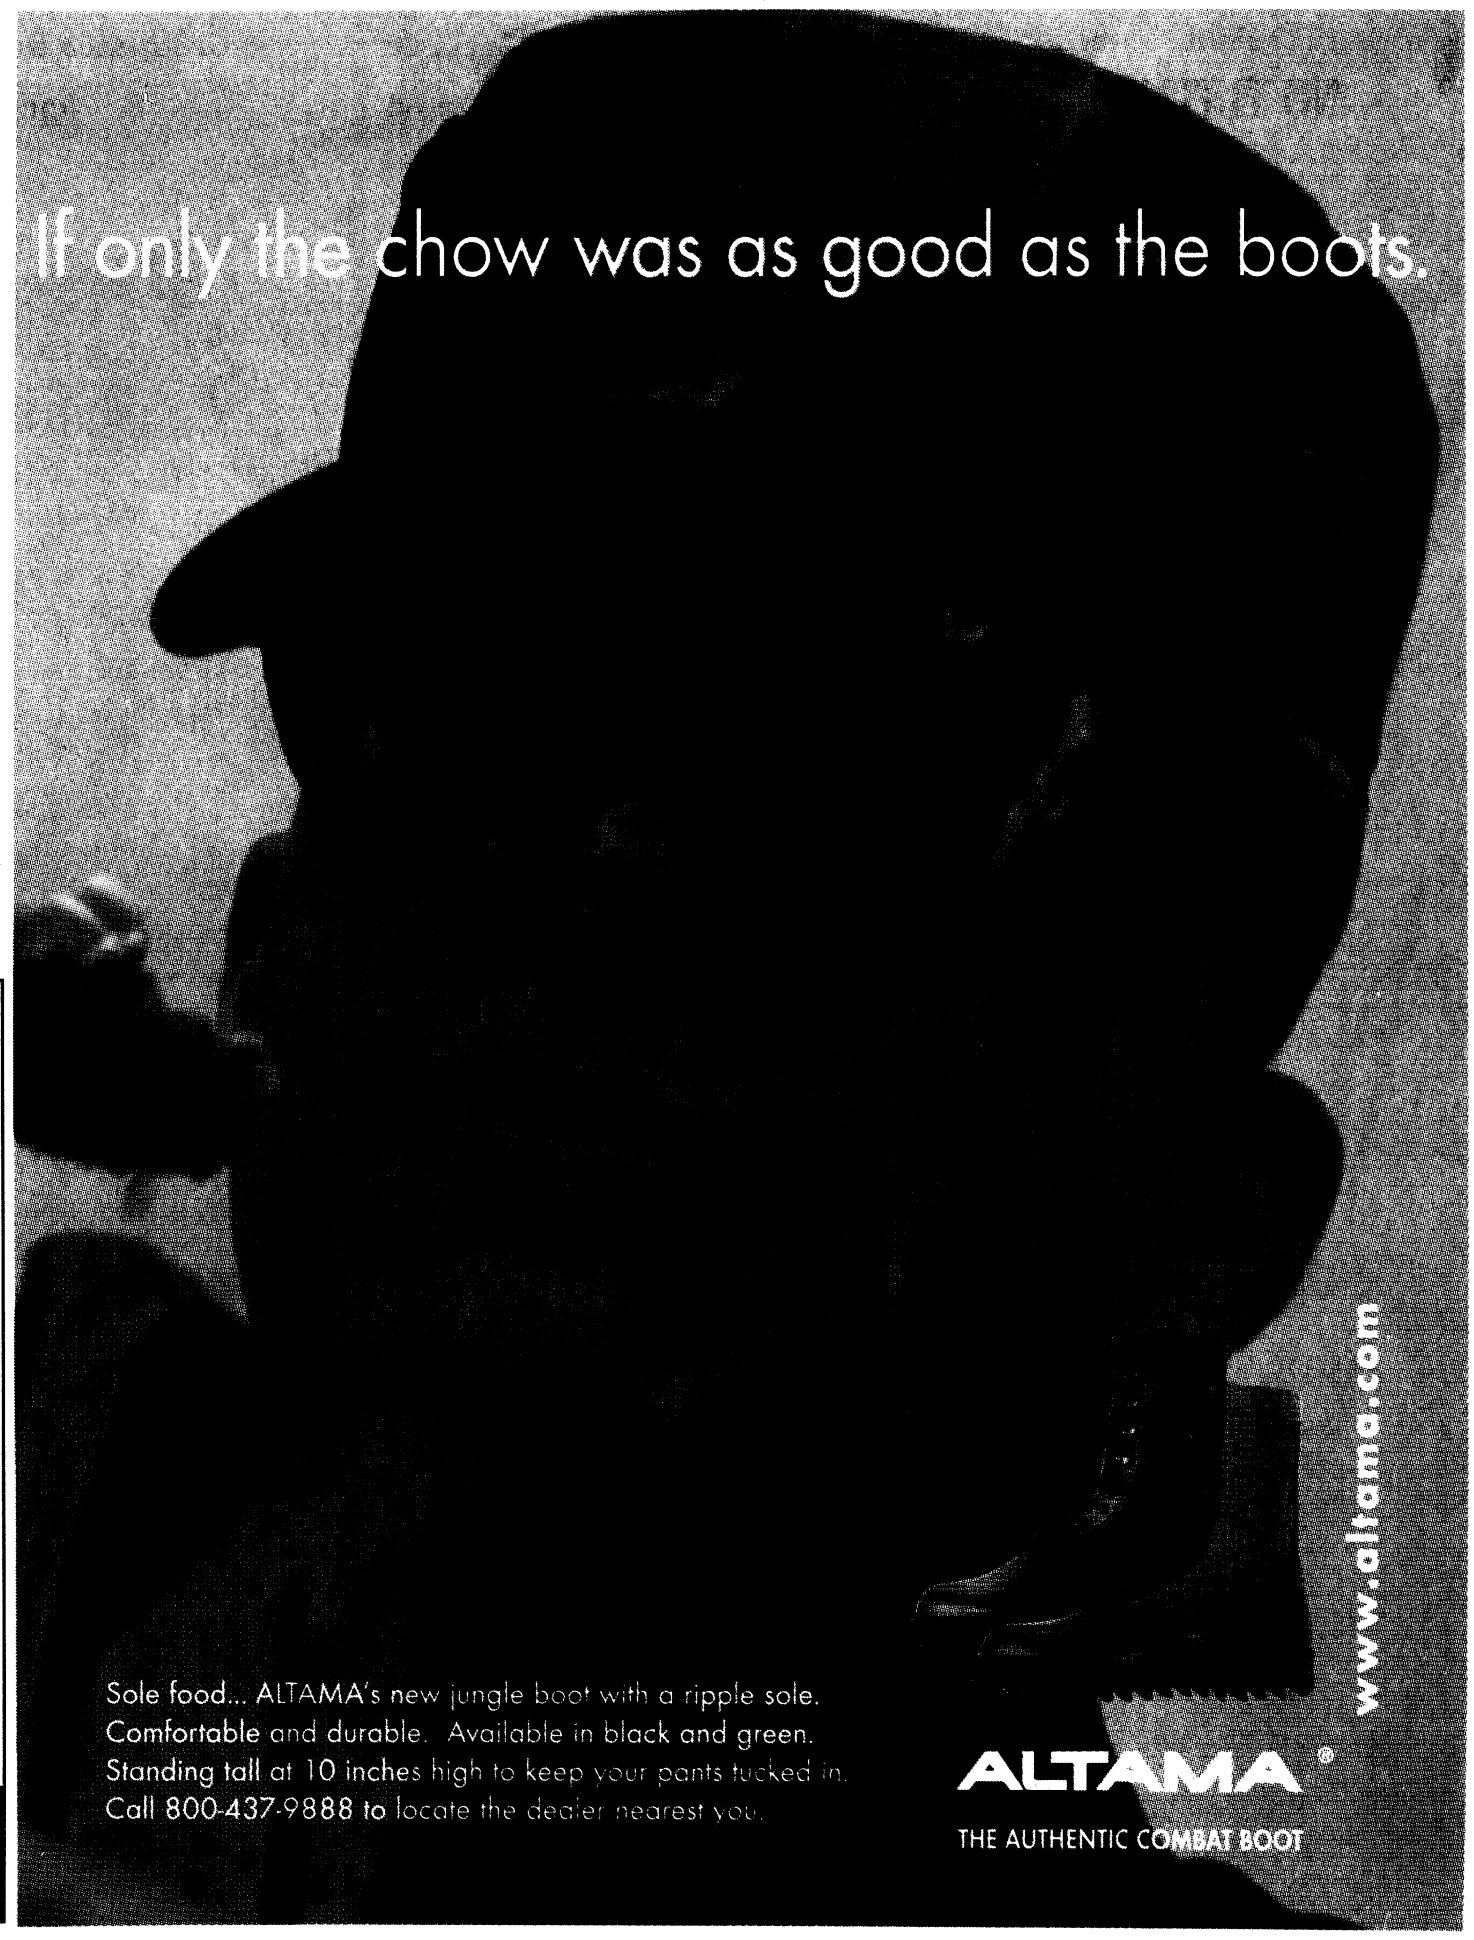
The exercise not only helped the tankers, but the infantry as well.

It allowed them to work along side tanks and let the soldiers fill the positions of people lost in combat

"The best part of this is having people die," said Joans Aguiar, a squad leader of the dismounted troops. "You get the opportunity to take over other positions, which gives the younger soldiers an opportunity to learn what their next position could be."

Aguiar, said if he were to go down, his squad would be able to carry on.

"My radio telephone operator automatically takes over as squad leader, so they get confidence in what they have to do."



After the tankers discussed how they could have done things better, they started the exercise over, this time they would fix what they did wrong in the previous engagements.

"This is a highly complex business," said Lt. Col. Peter Bayer, battalion commander. "Although they don't like to do things over, we tell them to get better, have fun and get the bad guys."

Child seats key to preventing harm

Seats can lower leading cause of child deaths

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Traffic accidents are the leading cause of death for children between the ages of 6 and 14, and 47 percent of fatally injured children are completely unrestrained, according to the National Transportation Safety Administration.

Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety believes those numbers can be reduced by educating the public on the correct methods of securing safety seats and restraining children in vehicles.

They've teamed with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the U.S. Department of Transportation to hail Sunday through Feb. 17 as Child Passenger Safety Week nationwide.

"Four Steps For Kids," is the theme of this year's event, with an emphasis on the milestones and practices for correctly transitioning children to each of the four types of restraint systems — rear-facing child seat, forward-facing child seat, booster seat and seat belt.

One of the most common mistakes parents make is that they don't understand the different stages of child restraint throughout the child's growth, according to ParentingPlace, a national network on parenting education. Four out of five children are improperly restrained.

Since most states require safety seat use up to age 3, many parents assume older kids are safe in just a seat belt. Children less than 80 pounds and under five feet are generally too small for an adult seat belt, but statistics show booster seat use for children between the ages of 4 and 8 is less than 10 percent.

Adult seat belts often ride up over a child's stomach and the shoulder strap cuts across the neck. In a crash, this could cause serious injury and even death. In a rollover crash, small children can be ejected when only a seat belt is used.

"We don't want to lose a single child in a so-called 'accident,'" said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, Fort Benning's chief of Law Enforcement Division.

"Accidents are things we can't help or can't prevent. Improper child restraint, or no child restraint at all, is something we, as parents, can prevent. Our first concern should be for the welfare of our children. No one plans for accidents, but we should be prepared for them," he said.

Kelley fears the inconvenience of car seats and relatively low speed limits on post might lead parents to assume a quick trip across post doesn't warrant normal child safety precautions.

"Sure they can be inconvenient, but kids are worth that extra second it takes to make sure they're secure," Kelley said. "Imagine running headlong into a brick wall. The average runner can do an eight-minute mile. Imagine the pain. Now imagine the impact on a child going three times that fast — still relatively slow, but potentially deadly for a child. It's not worth taking a chance, even in a 15 mile per hour zone."

The NHTSA recommends parents employ these "4 Steps For Kids" to protect their children:

1. Use rear-facing child seats from birth to at least 20 pounds and at least 1 year old.

2. Use forward-facing child seats for children between 1 and 4 years and between 20 and 40 pounds.

3. Use belt-positioning booster seats for children between 40 and 80 pounds and less than four feet, nine

Slave's struggle brought to life during local play

Special to the Bayonet©

Musical theater provided a history lesson Monday as a cast of six told the story of Harriet Tubman to children from Fort Benning and Columbus schools.

The Three Arts Theatre was packed for two performances of the hour-long musical detailing how Tubman escaped slavery and became a conductor on the Underground Railroad.

Seventh-graders from Faith Middle School, fourth-graders from Dexter Elementary and fourth- and fifth-graders from White Elementary School's enrichment program attended the performance in celebration of Black History Month.

The play, based on Tubman's first biography written by Sarah Bradford, recounted various scenes from the former slave's life, including her flight to freedom at age 28 and her return to the South on several occasions to rescue her family members and others.

"I learned lots of interesting facts about Harriet Tubman. I would have been kind of scared to be a slave, and I don't know that I would have gone back to help others. Harriet was a very brave person," Tony Sanzotta, a fourth-grader at White Elementary, said.

The cast performed several spirituals, including "Let my people go," which refers to Moses and his struggle to free the Israelites from Egypt. Tubman was known as "the Moses of her people."

"I enjoyed the singing best," said Clara Langdon, who is in fourth grade at White Elementary.

For Evelyn Braman, White Elementary's enrichment teacher, the trip was a chance not only to learn more about one of the most famous black women in our history, but also to expose her students to live theater.

"We will be doing a performance later this year, and I wanted the students to see how actors use their hands and facial expressions to help convey the story to the audience," Braman said.

Parent Academy teaches moms, dads discipline skills

Expert shares experience with families

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Parenting is a tough job — serious business — said Gail Wilson, mother of two and director of staff development for Fort Benning Schools.

Wilson looks forward to recharging her parental batteries at this year's eighth annual Parent Academy, Feb. 22 and 23, sponsored by Fort Benning Schools and Family Advocacy Program.

"It's fun, it's informative, it's free," Wilson laughed. "I look forward to it every year."

This year's keynote speaker is Barbara Coloroso, author and an internationally recognized speaker in the area of parenting, teaching, school discipline and conflict resolution.

Wilson said Coloroso brings a unique blend of wit and wisdom to the event.

"She's absolutely incredible, the most knowledgeable person I've ever met in the area of parenting," Wilson said. "She has a very humorous outlook about every day concerns we all face as parents. She's so funny I just never get tired of hearing her."

And she's not alone. The overwhelmingly positive feedback from last year's event led Wilson to seek out Coloroso once again.

"Parents kept asking to have her back again. This will be her fourth time as our keynote speaker," Wilson said. "That tells you how much people really enjoy her."

Coloroso is one of the most sought-after experts in the country specializing in discipline and excellence in education.

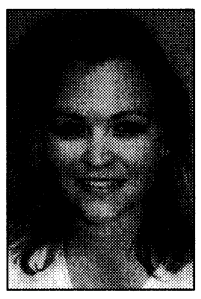
The former nun, former classroom teacher and former university instructor has a background in sociology, special education, philosophy and theology.

But it's her firsthand experience as a mother that has honed her sense of humor and helped shape her philosophy on parenting, both evident in her video Winning at Parenting Without Beating Your Kids, and books, Parenting with Wit and Wisdom and Kids are Worth it.

This year Coloroso will share her ideas on discipline, simple rules to help stop trouble before it starts, stress management and the angst of mealtime, bedtime, chores and fighting.

Wilson said the academy has been restructured this year to accommodate more working parents.

Seminars are scheduled for 6:30 - 9 p.m, Feb. 22 at Faith Middle School, and from noon to 3:30 p.m., Feb. 23, at the Officers' Club Supper Room.



Participants must register before Feb. 16 at any Fort Benning school or Room 2 of the administrative office on Custer Road.

Free child care for children between the ages of 6 and 11 will be available during the Feb. 22 session, and non-school age children during the Feb. 23 session. Reservations for child care can be made at the time of registration.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

This is the time of year when most gardeners are anxious for spring.

There are still several weeks before the popular annuals and vegetables can be planted.

Most of the popular annuals are not frost hardy. This means that the plant cannot tolerate exposure to frost. Scientifically, the tissue in the leaves of the plant freeze easily and do not recover.

In the fall, when the first frost is expected, gardeners are not surprised to find brown mush where there used to be plants.

In the spring, gardeners are reluctant to plant anything before the last frost date.

The last expected frost for this area is between Feb. 28 and March 31. Gardeners choose their personal tolerance for frost and plant accordingly.

A seed packet or plant label will often say, "plant after all danger of frost."

Many packets have a planting map on the back. This map breaks up the United States into planting regions and assigns months to planting dates for this area.

There are frost hardy annuals available at the local nurseries such as the ever popular pansy. Violas, close cousins to the pansies, will be available soon.

There are also several varieties of annuals and perennials that can be seeded now. There are seed racks popping up all over the local stores.

Look for these seeds to be available: Delphinium (Delphinium belladonna), Larkspur (Consolida ambigua), Veronica (Veronica spicata, and Snapdragon (Antirrhinum). A few herbs that enjoy the cool starts are parsley, dill and chamomile.

Faith math team to compete

Faith Middle School

The members of the Faith Middle School math team are once again participating in the districtwide Mathcounts Math Tournament this year.

The team has been hard at work preparing for the competition, which takes place Saturday at Precision Components International in Columbus.

The Mathcounts team members are sixth-graders Loraine Solis, Joshua Robinson and Tyler McGuire.

Returning for a second year is seventh-grader James Tartaglia who won an award at last year's competition.

Participating for a third straight year is eighth-grader Ed Pipalski, who garnered an award two years ago for top scoring sixth-grader.

"We have an excellent combination of extraordinary new talent mixed in with exceptional mathematical ability and experience which gives Faith an excellent chance of bringing home multiple awards," said Gloria Watkins, a sixth-grade math teacher at Faith and math team coach.

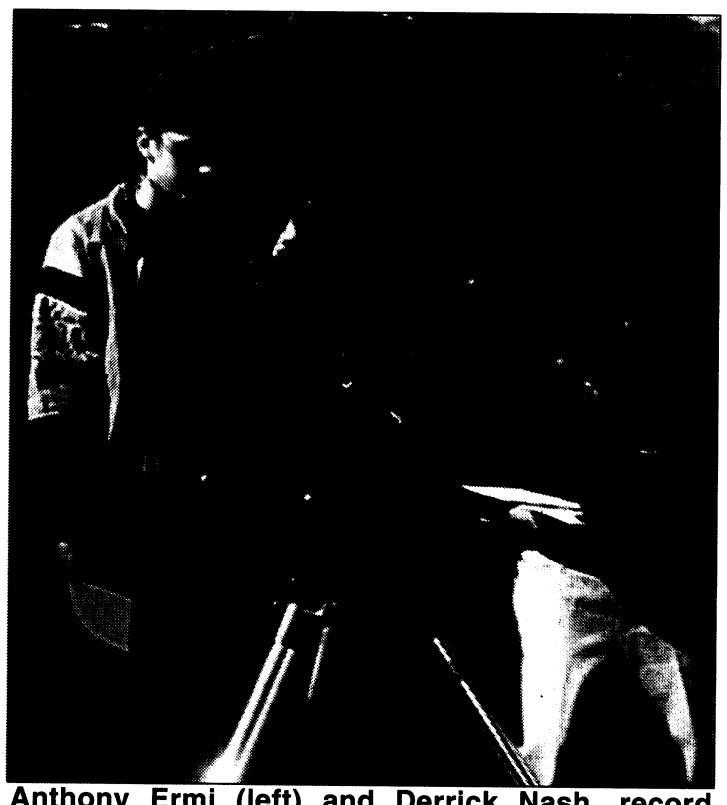
Students reach to stars during sunspot study

Faith Middle School

Faith School's David Bunt is teaching his eighth-grade students about the sun.



One of the student activities is viewing sunspots through a telescope.

The telescope is designed to filter the sun's light, making it safe so the students can look directly at the sun.

Bunt said now is a convenient time for these observations, as the sun is at its solar maximum. Now, more sunspots are visible than at any other point in the 12-year sunspot cycle.

After the students observed the sunspots, they graphed and sketched according to the locations of each group of sunspots.

"It was fun and educational," said Ryan Browning. "I was really interested in learning about sunspots."

Baby teeth need as much attention as adult

Proper dental care begins with child's first teeth

Fort Benning Dental Activity

If you have a new baby, you may not realize how important it is to care for the child's baby or primary teeth.

The Fort Benning Dental Activity warns parents that although a child's primary teeth will eventually be replaced with permanent ones, the baby teeth are critical for proper chewing, speaking and appearance. Without proper care, some children can develop serious tooth decay by their second birthday.

Baby bottle tooth decay, also called nursing-bottle or nursing-mouth syndrome, is a condition that can destroy the primary teeth of an infant or young child.

It develops when a baby frequently receives a bottle of milk, formula, fruit juice or sweetened liquids to serve as a pacifier or comforter.

It may result when the child often is allowed to fall asleep with a bottle during naps or at bedtime. Prolonged demand breastfeeding may also cause this condition.

Although the teeth most likely to be damaged are the upper front teeth, others may be affected.

Tooth decay is caused by bacteria, which are present in a thin film of plaque that constantly forms on the teeth.

The bacteria in plaque use sugar to produce acid which attacks tooth enamel.

If sugary liquids are allowed to remain in the mouth, acid can attack teeth for several minutes. Tooth decay can occur after frequent, repeated acid attacks.

It's not just what children drink, but how often and for how long their teeth are exposed to decay-causing acids. For example, if you offer a bottle containing sugary liquids as a pacifier many times a day, the teeth experience more acid attacks.

Allowing a child to fall asleep with a bottle during a nap or at night can also harm teeth.

While the baby sleeps, the flow of saliva decreases. Harmful sugary liquids collect and remain around the teeth, inviting acid attacks.

You can prevent this by watching what you give your baby between regular feedings.

A nursing bottle should not be used as a pacifier or as an aid to help baby sleep unless it contains plain water. Don't dip pacifiers in a sweet liquid and don't add sugar to baby's food to try and make it taste better.

Children can be taught to drink from a cup as they approach their first birthday. This will eliminate prolonged bottle feeding or using a bottle as a pacifier.

The Fort Benning Dental Activity recommends that after each feeding, parents should wipe their baby's teeth and gums with a clean, damp washcloth or gauze pad.

This will remove plaque and prevent acid attacks.

Begin brushing as soon as baby's first tooth appears. Continue cleansing and massaging gums in all other areas that remain toothless.

Visit the dentist by the child's first birthday. While this may seem early, your dentist can determine if you are using the right cleaning techniques. The dentist can also determine if there are problems with the child's primary teeth.

Children should receive an optimal amount of fluoride, a mineral needed for the development of decay-resistant teeth.

You should ask your dentist how your child can get the right amount of fluoride.

For more information about how to care for your baby's teeth, contact your dentist.

4. Use seat belts for children over the age of 8 who are large enough for the belt to fit correctly — at least four feet, nine inches tall and 80 pounds.

The NHSTA also encourages parents to have all child restraint systems checked by a certified child passenger safety technician.

They've introduced a Web-based locator service at www.nhtsa.dot.gov.

Click on the "Child Safety Seat Inspections" link to find a current list of inspectors in your area, or call 1-888-DASH-2-DOT.

A certified technician from The Safe Kids Coalition of Columbus will visit Fort Benning's main PX, Feb. 19 from 4 to 6 p.m., to answer questions about child seat safety and demonstrate the proper use of various types of restraints.

The coalition also offers monthly classes in Columbus for parents who want to learn more about child seat safety. Registration will be accepted at the expo Feb. 19.

For more information, call 321-6183.

Cycles recalled

Consumer Product Safety Commission

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, Kawasaki Motors Corp., U.S.A., of Irvine, Calif., is voluntarily recalling about 18,000 motorcycles, used in motocross competition.

The rear brakes on these motorcycles can fail, causing a rider to lose control of the vehicle and crash, resulting in injuries or death.

CPSC and Kawasaki have not received any reports of injuries or failure of the rear braking system. This recall is being conducted to prevent the possibility of injuries.

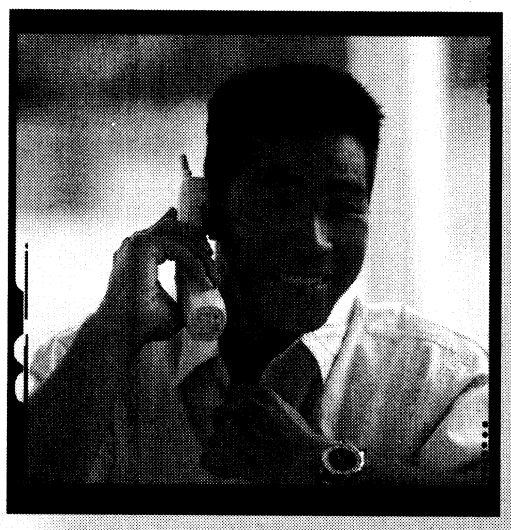
The recalled Kawasaki motorcycles are 2001 KX series motocross vehicles, with model numbers KX65, KX85, KX100, KX125, KX250 and KX500. The name "Kawasaki" appears on each side of the frame near the steering column, and the model number appears on each side of the frame running from the rear tire to the breaking system.

The motorcycles are green, with white on the front of the steering column and on the each side of the seat. Kawasaki dealers nationwide sold the motorcycles from May 2000 to November 2000 for between $2,800 and $5,800.

Consumers should stop using the motorcycles immediately. Kawasaki will mail owners a free repair kit. Owners can make the repair themselves or return their motorcycle to a Kawasaki dealership, for a free repair.

For more information, consumers should call their local dealership or Kawasaki at (866) 802-9381, between 8:30 a.m. and 4:45 p.m. Monday through Friday; or, go to the company's website at www.buykawasaki.com.

To see a picture of the recalled product, link to http://www.cpsc.gov/cpscpub/prerel/prhtml01/01065.html.



The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission protects the public from unreasonable risks of injury or death from 15,000 types of consumer products under the agency's jurisdiction. To report a dangerous product or a product-related injury, call CPSC's hotline at (800) 638-2772.

Chaplain knows what women want: friendship

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) George Onstad
Family Life Training Program

A couple of weeks ago I asked my wife if she wanted to go see the new Mel Gibson movie What Women Want. She said no, she knew what women wanted.

I guess she does. And, if I might be so bold to suggest, so do I. Well, at least after 30 years of marriage, I know what one woman wants (most of the time).

After 18 years of providing pastoral counseling to couples, I have a pretty good idea what other women want also.

reflections

Bridgett Siter, in her commentary Jan. 12, suggested the answer to this question is easy. Women want Mel Gibson. Well, I won't argue with that, but I have a few other, more practical ideas of what women want. Men, prepare to copy.

Women want friendship. Oh, you knew that, huh? Well, I think all of us know that, but unfortunately many men forget this after they get married.

As a matter of fact, most couples as they are preparing to get married will say that their fiancee is their best friend. But this is generally the first thing to go over time. Our best friend becomes the business partner in the family.

Our talk around the dinner table or between TV commercials or on the front porch becomes business meetings: kids have football practice Thursday, I'll be in the field next week, the car needs an oil change, etc. Or worse, all our talk between marital partners is focused on problems.

Business meetings are good, but not a replacement for friendship talk. Working together to solve a family problem is important, but all work and no play causes one to lose friends.

Remember friendship talk? Couples in their early relationship can sit in the car for hours talking about their dreams, their interests, etc. We teach a program at the Chaplain Family Life Center called Preparation and Enhancement Program which helps couples communicate better and restore that friendship piece of the marriage.

The program reminds us how friends listen to each other. Friends listen with little defensiveness; friends show respect for your opinion; friends are careful to not give unwanted advice; and the core of friendship is a mutual interest in what is happening to each other.

Do you want to keep your friendship alive? Here are three suggestions: Listen like a friend; make time for friendship; and protect time from conflict. You can also come to the next PREP workshop. Call 545-1760 for the next class. You will learn about friendship and much, much more.

What do women want besides Mel Gibson? The Bible talks about it as oneness, "the two shall become one." Friendship is part of that oneness.

When a couple has this "oneness" not even Mel Gibson can compete against it.

Date abuse comes in various forms

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

One in four women have experienced some level of dating violence.

An average of 200,000 incidents are reported each year, which is 8 percent of all violent crimes.

More injury is caused to young women during a date than by automobile accidents, muggings and stranger-rape combined. In 95 percent of the time, women are the victims of dating violence.

Dating violence may involved intimidation, isolation, brainwashing, restraining, deprivation and physical abuse. Intimidation may be verbal threats of injury or death, or physical threats of throwing things, destroying things, stalking, terrorizing family members and driving crazily.

A perpetrator of date abuse is often jealous and seeks to isolate his date from others. He doesn't like her talking or being with her friends. He won't let her go out with anyone else but him. He may take her money to manage it and, as a result, control her.

The abuser may control his date through brainwashing. He forces her to center her life around him and his wishes by telling her where she can go, what she can do, and the clothes, cosmetics and the hair styles she can wear. He may force her to drink alcohol and take drugs.

The violator may seek to restrain his girlfriend. He may push or shove her, prevent her from leaving, hold her down, lock her in a room, or tie her up. In addition he may deprive her of money, food or other necessities.

The physical abuser may push, shove, pinch, twist an arm, pull hair, slap, punch, hit, choke, bite, kick, burn, and hold or use a weapon. The perpetrator may also force his date to engage in non-consensual sex.

You may have not viewed some of these actions as abusive behaviors. Like physical abuse, all of these actions are designed to make his girlfriend afraid, control her, make her dependent and make her believe that she must do what he wants in order to get along and survive.

If you are experiencing date violence, free counseling and support are available.

Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Lakers topple 76ers in YS action

Spc. William A. Graves

76ers' James Morrisey shoots through the defense of Lakers' Kevin Miller as Ketrail Cohen looks on.

Scorching shooting, swarming defense lead to victory

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The net was on fire for the 76ers as they went on a scoring spree in the first half of Saturday's Youth Services 8- to 9-year-old basketball game against the Lakers and took a 20-2 halftime lead.

The Lakers put up a valiant effort in the second half and kept the 76ers scoring lower — allowing them to nearly match points, 13-12. In the end, it was too little too late as the 76ers took the 32-13 win.

The 5-0 Sixers' James Morrisey scorched the score board with 10 points in the first half, and his teammate Deandre Murphy slammed the door on the Lakers in the second half to finish with eight points.

"I feel honored because we've worked very hard for the team," Morrisey said.

He said he was grateful to his teammates for his game-high score.

"We passed the ball around and got open shots and made them," Morrisey said. "We're getting better each game."

Murphy said he felt good about his team's effort.

"We got their defense confused," he said. "That's how we got the open shots. We're learning to move to the basket better."

The Sixers' Ketrail Cohen hard-nosed defense hurt the Lakers more than his four points.

"We're like warriors on defense," Cohen said. "We're thankful for our coaches who've supported us."

"We did everything right," he added. "We snatched the ball and used the backboards. We could fly and do anything possible to win."

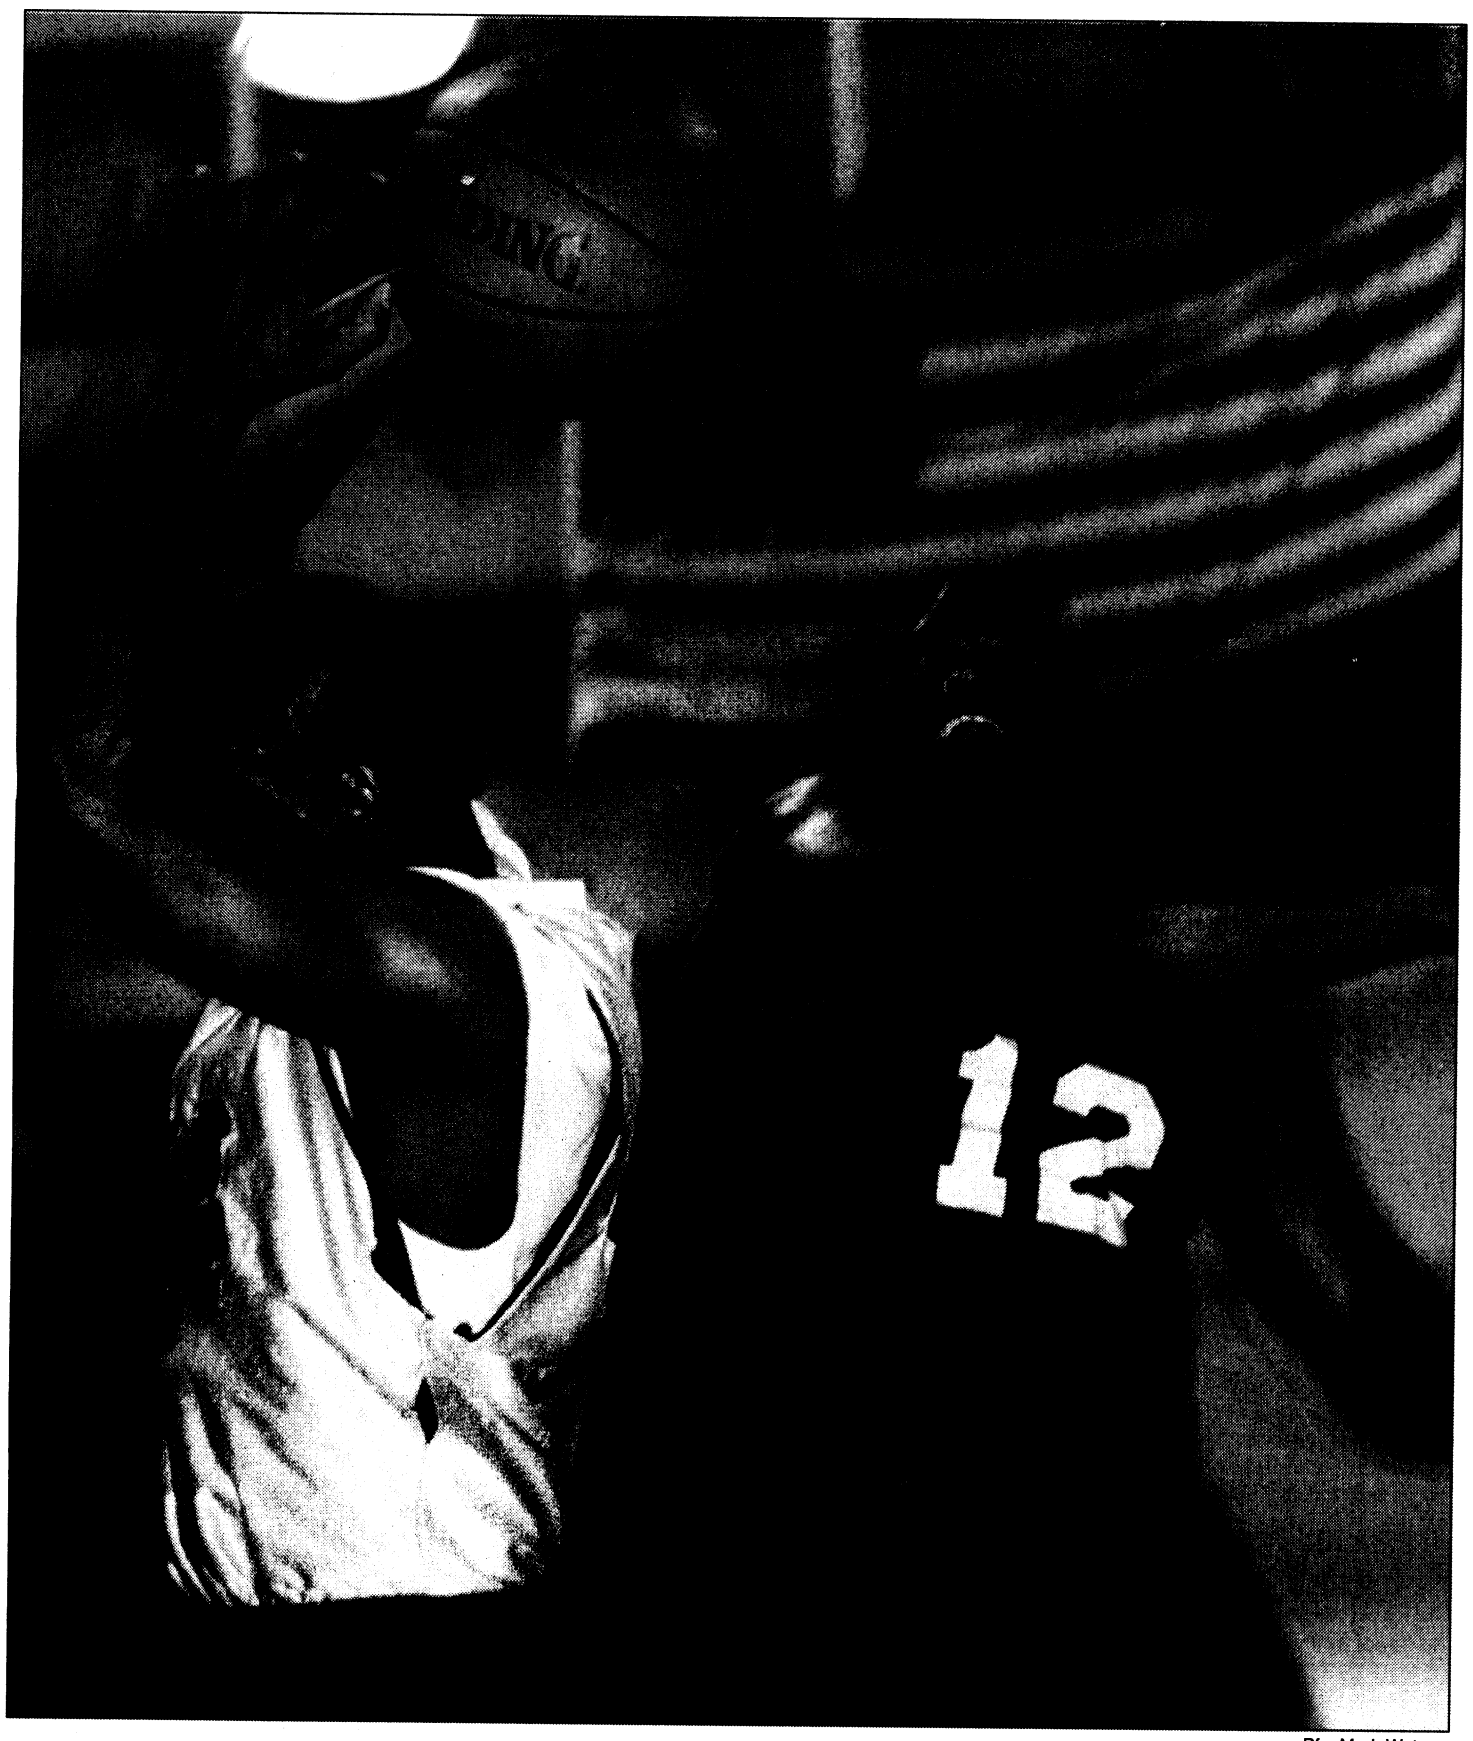
Troy Murphy, 76ers coach, said he was proud of and impressed with his team.

"My kids have practiced and played real hard all year, and it continued on the court today," Murphy said. "They have a good grasp on the concept of team play," he added. "Everyone is playing unselfishly."

Teamwork helped the Sixers move the ball well on offense.

"We need to work harder on defense, but, overall, we played a well-rounded game," the coach said.

Jeffrey Sykes scored seven points for the 1-1-2 Lakers, but his team could never cut into the large deficit.



Lamar Sykes, Lakers coach, said his players have shown tremendous progress. In fact, in one game earlier in the season, they only scored two points. He said the team learned how to play better as a team in the second half, but they still faced challenges.

"We're learning to stay on our man," Sykes said. "They went back door on us and found open players a lot."

Still, his team improved as the game progressed.

"They played aggressively the whole game," Sykes said. "When the score gets out of hand like it did in the first half, some teams quit, but my team stuck in there and played well. I'm proud of them, and I applaud their effort."

50th squeaks past sister unit in final seconds

Man-to-man combat edges out 19th

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

In a game that wasn't decided until the final seconds, the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, squeaked past 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., 37-34 in Monday's intramural basketball game at the Santiago Fitness Center.

The teams, both from Infantry Training Brigade, kept the game up in the air until the last minute when the 19th fell by three points.

Although outnumbered by one man, the 50th had the advantage of the bigger man under the basket.

Throughout the first half, the 50th made the most of their rebounding power. As they controlled the backboard, they controlled the game and ended the half in the lead, 20-14.

During the halftime break, 50th's Will Northcut, who led his team in scoring with nine points, said rebounding helped them out.

"Since we have a big man tonight we are able to rebound the ball," Northcut said. "On offense, we are getting a lot of penetration to the basket."

Members of the 19th felt as if the other team was getting the better of them on rebounds.

"We need to work on getting rebounds," 19th's Ricky Ray, said. "We can't get enough offensive rebounds. They're getting most of the rebounds on both sides. We are getting good looks at the basket, but we just are not getting open. If we get open we pretty much can make the shot."

As the second half began, it became apparent that the 19th got open more than in the first half.

They sank shot after shot often driving to the hole for an unopposed score.

The 19th took the lead in the game with 10 minutes remaining in the game.

The 50th team made a quick defense change, switching from zone defense to man-to-man.

With the minutes ticking away, the 50th began to gain lost ground on the 19th. And with 44 seconds they scored again tying the game at 34.

The 50th took the lead with less than 30 seconds remaining. As the 19th desperately tried to regain control of the ball, the 50th sank another basket giving them a three-point lead.

Just before the buzzer sounded, 19th Rick Johanningsmeier fired a shot from three-point range, but missed giving the 50th their first victory of the season.

Johanningsmeier said it took them a while to get their momentum going.

"We played a bit sluggish in the first half, but we came back in the second and played real well," Johanningsmeier said. "Once we got ahead it seemed as if we lost control."

"We gave up a lot of easy rebounds," he added. "When they started playing man-to-man we didn't execute, we didn't make a lot of picks, but other than that we played really hard."

Northcut said the game went well for his team, but he was a little nervous in the second half.

"In the second half we started getting a little lax and let the other team get off some shots," Northcut said.

"When we switched to man-to-man, instead of a zone defense, we started moving around and got us back in the game," he added.

Local hunter turns 'no-show' into successful outing

Retired Staff Sgt. Carl Sandy
Bayonet correspondent

On Dec. 24, I was waiting at the Harmony Church gas station for Maj. Hugh T. O'Connor who was to meet me there at 6 a.m. At 6:15 a.m., I realized that the major was not going to show, so I headed to one of my favorite hunting spots. Once there, I got my gear together and headed to the area in which I was going to put O'Connor.

By this time, shooting light was 20 minutes away and I had yet to reach the right spot, so I stopped where I was and hung my treestand in a pine tree. Not long after I settled in the tree, it was shooting light. I surveyed the area and it looked like a city park. I shook my head and thought to myself, "If I wouldn't have told the major I'd meet him this morning I'd still be in that warm bed and wouldn't be sitting here looking over an area that probably hasn't had a deer walk through it in years."

Well, 10 minutes later, I heard something. At 20 yards was a real nice 11-pointer with a dagger of a drop tine hanging off his left mainbeam. The big buck lifted his nose straight into the air and was trying to wind me.

I knew the buck would hear my head or heart pounding or my irregular breathing, but he didn't.

Minutes later I was struggling over one of the best bucks I had ever taken. After the tag was filled out and the field dressing was complete, I started dragging the big buck through the woods. At this point I was struggling with two thoughts and the buck: one minute I was thankful that the major was a no-show and the next I was angry that I didn't have him there to help me with recovery ops. Between thinking about this and dragging the buck, I finally reached the conclusion that I was the lucky one. And finally I reached my truck, elated to have the buck loaded up.

There are several lessons to be learned. If you say you are going to be somewhere to do something, you should be there and doing that or you might miss out. You never know when or where a big buck will show up. The most unlikely spots aren't that unlikely. And hunting should be fun.

The major's alarm clock or something failed him that morning and he was plain sick when he saw the buck he could have gotten.

Some lessons seem harder than others.

Rylander offers entertainment option

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

If the dedication a six-foot Steinway model "L" grand piano to former First Lady Rosalynn Smith Carter on Saturday night was any indication, Rylander Theatre in Americus provides an exciting entertainment getaway for the soldiers and community members of Fort Benning.

There was only one problem. No one from the post community attended the program, and Rylander representatives said they feel its members missed out on extraordinary performances.

"The Rylander brings quality theatre productions to the region that you would otherwise have to travel great distances to see such as the recent performance of Unforgettable, the Nat King Cole story, and the upcoming Halley's Comet, starring John Amos, star of stage, TV and film," said Liala Case, Rylander public relations.

She emphasized the fact that the theater located is a quick and easy 60-minute drive from Columbus and Fort Benning area.

Former President Jimmy Carter also attended the concert program Saturday, which featured several accomplished Steinway artists performing piano literature ranging from gospel and pop to classical selections. A few of the performers were John Innes of Atlanta, Christine Menedis of Miami and Gary Menzie of Atlanta.

The Rosalynn Smith Carter piano was purchased by her friends and supporters of the Rylander Theatre through the efforts of Phil Jones Jr. of Americus. The theater auditorium, named in honor of the former president, was dedicated at his 75th birthday celebration at the Rylander Oct. 1, 1999.

"I cannot think of a finer, more splendid way to honor one of the world's most compassionate and generous women than with this," said Norman Easterbrook, theater general director. "The piano fits the theater well acoustically, aesthetically and programmatically. Housing such a fine instrument will firmly place the Rylander Theater at the top of the list of world class midsize performing arts venues."

The goal of the evening was to warm hearts and lift spirits, he said, and Rosalynn Carter said the Rylander exceeded expectations.

"It's kind of nice to have my piano in the Jimmy Carter Theater," she said. "Thanks to all the performers. It's been wonderful for me."

Upcoming shows at the Rylander include the following:

• American Boychoir — at 7 p.m. tonight — is a group that has established a reputation as the premiere concert boys' choir in the U.S. for its rich sonorities, musical sophistication, expressive power and innovative programming.

• Halley's Comet — at 7 p.m. Feb. 16 and 17 — is a one man tour de force starring John Amos, star of stage, screen and television and presently in the Emmy award winning TV series, West Wing.

• The General — at 2 p.m. March 4 — is 1927 silent adventure film starring Buster Keaton with organ accompaniment by Rosa Rio, veteran theatre organist, who has performed since the silent movie era.

• The Kingston Trio — at 7 p.m. March 23, is a group that emerged in 1957 from San Francisco's North Beach club scene to take the country by storm, bringing the rich tradition of American folk music into the mainstream.

• Following Fannie: In Search of a Perfect Ending — May 31 through June 10 — is a melodramatic, musical comedy about the misadventures of Fannie Fakename, the heroine, who takes the audience through a journey of 1920's vaudeville theatre. The Rylander box office is open Monday through Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Call 229-931-0001 for more information, or write the Rylander Theatre, P.O. Box 864, Americus, Ga., 31709.

Americus is located 60 miles east of Columbus and Fort Benning.

For directions, visit the Rylander on the Web at www.rylander.org

The Rylander Theater was built in 1921, closed in 1951 and reopened in 1999 following a $4 million restoration.

Bush pledges more money

President vows $5.7 billion for pay, housing

Sgt. 1st Class Kathleen T. Rhem
American Forces Press Service

FORT STEWART, Ga. — President George W. Bush announced a significant increase in funding for quality-of-life issues affecting U.S. service members Monday.

Speaking to a group of roughly 6,000 3rd Infantry Division soldiers and their family members here, Bush pledged an additional $5.7 billion in 2002 to be spent between military pay increases and improving military housing and healthcare.

The president got a rousing round of applause when he announced he plans to spend $1.4 billion on a pay raise for service members — "pay increases on top of the increases the Congress passed (during) the last couple of budget cycles," he said.

Bush also said he plans to spend $400 million on military housing and an additional $3.9 billion to improve healthcare.

"Because of you, America is secure. Because of you, the march of freedom continues," Bush said. "Our nation can never truly repay our debt to you. But we can give you our full support, and my administration will."

He said the nation owes its service members and their families a decent quality of life, necessary training and equipment, and solid defense policies.

MPs receive new cameras

New system will help keep soldiers safe

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Staff Sgt. Kevin Sparks, 71st Military Police Detachment, conducted a routine traffic stop last year. The speeding suspect was nice, cordial and even thanked Sparks and his partner after he received a ticket.

The accused then went straight to the MP station and told the soldiers' supervisors they cursed, humiliated and even assaulted him.

Supervisors checked the in-car video system the soldiers activated at the beginning of the stop. The eight-year-old video system showed what actually occurred, verifying the MPs version.

The MPs received a new system in late January in four of their vehicles, and bogus complaints like those Sparks experienced will become even less of a problem for the Department of Public Safety, said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief, Law Enforcement.

Features and benefits of the new camera are numerous. They include:

• A magnifying zoom that can help an MP see a license plate two football fields away from his vehicle.

• An audio system that can record everything inside and out of an MP's vehicle that is many times smaller than the old model. It has a transmission radius of more than 1,000 feet. Soldiers can enter a

Contract date still unknown

GAO sustains unsuccessful bidder's protest

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The majority of functions provided by Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Works and Directorate of Logistics will be contracted out to private industry. That is certain.

However, the question of when still remains unanswered.

The Government Accounting Office announced this week it sustained the protest by an unsuccessful bidder on the contract due to "unfair competitive advantage."

Johnson Controls World Services, Inc. protested the initial decision that identified IT Corporation as the "tentative" winner of the contract in November.

JCWSI maintained in its protest that IT, through one of its subcontractors — Innovative Logistics Techniques, Inc. — had "impermissible organizational conflict of interest, and that the award therefore was improper," according to the GAO's Web site.

"The GAO found that JCWSI's protest had merit. (They) told the Army to go back and review the issues about which JCWSI complained," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, as he prepared Wednesday for a Thursday afternoon town hall meeting with employees from both directorates.

"The Army has to determine its position on this ruling. Once the Army decides what to do, they will tell us how to proceed," he said.

The ruling does not mean JCWSI has been declared the new contractor, Torres said.

During the town hall meeting in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium, Torres planned to discuss the status of the directorates' transition to a contractor.

"We are going to contract, but we do not know when," Torres said. A planned reduction in force will still occur, however it will be delayed.

As for when the RIF will take place or any other dates key to the transition, Torres said no one knows and timelines cannot be established or announced until the installation's final decision report is given the OK by Training and Doctrine Command and the Department of the Army.

Congress will also have to be notified of the final decision as a formality.

That final decision report cannot be finalized or submitted until all rulings on appeals, protests and litigation have been made.

To read the complete GAO ruling on the protest by JCWSI, visit www.gao.gov/decisions/bidpro/286714 2.htm.

Soldier killed during training

Live ammo mistaken for blanks

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

A Fort Benning soldier was killed Feb. 9 during a training exercise.

Sgt. Richard M. Robak Jr., A Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), was shot during the night portion of a blank-fire training exercise.

Initial findings indicate that during the night portion of a force-on-force exercise and after two previous engagements, a single magazine of live ammunition was inadvertently passed to a soldier as magazines were cross-leveled among squad members in the darkness.

The magazine was loaded into an M-16, and during the next engagement two rounds were fired at close range.

The soldier who fired the two rounds immediately identified himself and turned his weapon and the remaining ammunition over to his chain of command.

Robak, 25, of Perry, N.Y., was hit by one of the rounds. He was treated on site by Army medics and evacuated by helicopter to the Medical Center where he was pronounced dead at 1:45 a.m. Robak was posthumously promoted to staff sergeant.

Units from 3rd Brigade had conducted live-fire training earlier in the week. A preliminary investigation by military police ruled out criminal intent.

A team from the U.S. Army Safety Center at Fort Rucker, Ala., arrived at Fort Benning Saturday to conduct an investigation. The safety center routinely investigates training accidents.

A memorial service for Robak was Thursday at 3 p.m. at the Kelley Hill Chapel.

Focus misses great moments

Pfc. Chris Bray

commentary

President's Day: not very exciting. It's third grade all over again, with Washington crossing this and Lincoln signing that. The great acts of important men, yes, but not exactly new territory for anyone who's over the age of 10.

But the narrow focus of the holiday also leaves us missing some real moments of greatness in our nation's past.

Take Dwight Eisenhower.

No, I mean it. Eisenhower. The man had an impact that resonates in our lives every day. You want acts of moral and physical courage? Foresight? Wisdom?

Try this, then. After the Supreme Court struck down the doctrine of separate but equal, nine black Arkansas students attempted to enroll at Little Rock High School. The governor of Arkansas called out National Guard troops to prevent them from getting on campus.

Nineteen days later, they tried again. They were stopped, again, and threatened by a mob.

Dangerous, angry, hateful times. And this was 1957, not exactly the high point of American racial harmony anywhere; Little Rock obviously wasn't some isolated hotbed of racist sentiment.

Here's where the boring old caretaker president comes in. The habitually conservative, no-pulse Republican, the golfer.

President Eisenhower responded to Arkansas Governor Orval Faubus' pledge to forever resist the desegregation of his state's public schools not by sending lawyers from the Justice Department or agents from the FBI — instead, he made an extraordinary show of serious force, sending 1,200 soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division to make sure those students were permitted to attend classes.

That's a pretty big statement. Imagine the impact of 1,200 paratroopers coming down your street: We'll never allow desegregation! Never! We'll fight until the ve- uh... Never mind.

Eisenhower's leadership also had a physical impact on the landscape of our daily lives that's impossible to overstate.

In 1919, Eisenhower was a captain in the Army, and he set out to travel from Washington, D.C., to San Francisco with 294 other soldiers.

They traveled in a truck caravan, and arrived a mere 62 days later.

Imagine what would happen, Eisenhower thought, if the country urgently needed to reinforce one coast or the other against invasion.

Later, during World War II, Eisenhower saw that enemy planes could choke off a supply effort with a few well-placed bombs along a rail line. But the broad concrete lanes of a highway were hard to destroy, and easy to fix. And so he concluded that domestic transportation was an issue of national security. As president, Eisenhower pushed Congress to take up and approve the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1956. The law funded the construction of 42,000 miles of highways.

Like driving to Atlanta in something under two hours? Thank Dwight Eisenhower.

Finally, there's the speech. Eisenhower's farewell speech as president was one of the great moral and practical exhortations undertaken by a political figure in the 20th century.

Eisenhower's presidency sits, in time, very near the roots of the Cold War, and his farewell reflected that. The president called "not so much for the emotional and transitory sacrifices of crisis, but rather those which enable us to carry forward steadily, surely, and without complaint the burdens of a prolonged and complex struggle — with liberty the stake."

That statement of committed is a cornerstone of the nation's consistent determination, over the course of decades, to stand against the extraordinary evils of communism.

In more familiar words, what he said was: Freedom isn't free.

And yet, most importantly, Eisenhower warned — with strength and clarity — that the struggle against communism could lead us to adopt the evil we were fighting.

Americans, he said, should be vigilant, forever, against the "grave implications" of the influence of the "military industrial complex."

That's a warning worth remembering, as our new commander-in-chief works to redirect military spending toward real needs. Money alone, Eisenhower knew, can't secure freedom.

People celebrate more in shortest month

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

I've always looked forward to February. The holidays are over, and with a little creative financing I've paid the bills for the toys that didn't last as long as it took me to pay for them. I've blown my New Year's resolutions and dealt with the guilt. Things are settling down to normal, whatever that is.

But something crazy has happened to February. I don't know when it happened, who's responsible or how it all came about, but my nice, quiet 28-day rest has turned into one long noisy celebration.

From Groundhog Day, Feb 2, to Ash Wednesday, Feb. 28, Americans observe, celebrate and commemorate more holidays and pseudo-holidays in February than any other month of the year. That's saying a lot considering it's also the shortest month of the year.

Don't get me wrong, some holidays are sacred. I chose to be married on St. Valentine's Day, the most romantic day of the year, because there's a very logical reason for it. Chocolate. Anyone who can sell an entire nation on the idea that love equals chocolate deserves to be sainted.

I'm suggesting we tighten up, squeeze a few holidays together and ease up on the partying. For starters, we could combine Valentine's Day and Lincoln's birthday, because love and honesty should go hand in hand — with chocolate, of course. The world would be a better place Feb. 15 if we'd all just be honest — "I'd love to share that 10-pound chocolate heart with you, but tomorrow you're history babe. I gotta be honest."

I understand why a holiday was established for the love of love and candy, but for the love of Pete, do we really need to set a day aside a special day for trees? It seems to me we should combine Arbor Day and George Washington's birthday. Everybody could plant cherry trees.

And I guess it wasn't enough that we celebrate both Washington and Lincoln's birthdays this month. What's with Presidents Day? Were all the other dead presidents feeling cheated? How exactly are we supposed to celebrate Presidents Day?

Depending on what calendar you buy and where you live, you'll find something for everyone in February. We're celebrating black history and children's dental health all month long. Last week was designated Car Seat Safety Week. Next week is National Sugar Week. Go figure.

It's Mardi Gras in New Orleans, Festival Week in Florida and Lobsterfest in New England. If you're of Chinese heritage, you're celebrating the Lantern Festival this month. If you're from Mexico, you're celebrating Dia De La Constitution, which sounds about as exciting as Presidents Day.

There's a special day for mothers-in-law, German shepherds and Tennessee walkers. In one week's time we commemorate the Ford Foundation, the potato famine (hey, come on over, french fries for everyone!) and radial tires.

Is there no end to the madness? Are fraternities lobbying for these worthless holidays? Is Hallmark marketing a line of potatoes? "This spud's for you sweetheart. It only has eyes for you."

According to my desk calendar, my pocket calendar, the calendar on the fridge and my "day-at-a-glance," there's only one day in the entire month of February that hasn't been farmed out to the highest bidder. Twenty-four hours that haven't been ear-marked for some sort of February-fest. By golly, that calls for a celebration.

The party's at my house. Bring your own potato.

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments, and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their units' or directorates' activities.

Coverage of events

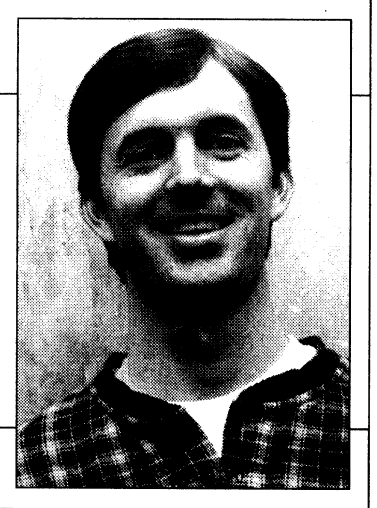
The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include brigade-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events. We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the brigade level, check presentations and group photos.

The frequency of such events on post and small number of photojournalists on The Bayonet staff prohibits us from covering these sorts of events.

Also, Army Regulation 360-81, which governs the production and content of Army newspapers, states covering such events is not a function of the post newspaper or the Public Affairs Office.



If you need a photographer to record events for official purposes, call the Training and Audiovisual Support Center's photo lab at 545-4417.

Mel Gibson movie tryouts attract 2,800

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Diane Stetzer's husband thought she was shopping at the commissary Saturday morning. But Stetzer took a detour first.

The Fort Benning family member was one of about 1,500 people who turned out for a casting call for the Mel Gibson movie We Were Soldiers Once .... And Young, which will film on post in March.

The casting call in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium was the first of two at Fort Benning. Wednesday afternoon's call attracted 1,300 more soldiers, family members, retirees and civilian employees.

The general public from Columbus is invited to a casting call Saturday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Columbus Hilton, 800 Front Ave.

"I asked myself, 'Why not? It's an opportunity and you never know what might come of it," Stetzer said. "I'll still have to go by the commissary and come back with groceries."

Casting director Kimberly Rodgers was happy with the turnout.

"It was one of the most organized open casting calls I've been to in a long time," Rodgers said.

Filming will start on post March 5 and continue for several weeks. People selected as extras will be called sometime before the start of filming, Rodgers said. Extras are needed for a big parade scene and in other settings.

"There is no one type of person we are after, and we need all ethnicities," Rodgers said.

Like Stetzer, others took time out of their weekend routine to stop by Infantry Hall.

"We were going to get something to eat off post and decided to come by," said Spc. Zachary Plante, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Sgt. Damien Thomas, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, brought his wife, Marie, and 21-month-old son, Garrette, along.

"I heard about the call and figured it was something we could do on a Saturday. If we get picked, great. If not, then we can say we went on a casting call for a movie with Mel Gibson in it."

Some people, like 5-year-old Ashley Locklear, came prepared with professional black and white glossy photographs to leave with the casting director.

Sally Shutt

Diane Stetzer, family member, fills out an audition form Saturday.

Locklear, who has signed with an agent in Atlanta, is an old pro at casting calls. The daughter of Tina and Sgt. 1st Class Ronald Locklear, D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, she has modeled in North Carolina and will appear in ads for Peachtree Mall's new carousel.

"She has been to a couple of auditions before. Even if she doesn't get selected, she's just having a good time," Tina said.

The movie, based on the book of the same title written by retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and journalist Joe Galloway, will focus on the 1965 battle in the Ia Drang Valley between members of the 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry, then based at Fort Benning, and North Vietnamese regulars. The battle scenes will be filmed in California.

Sally Shutt

Ashley Locklear talks to casting director, Kimberly Rodgers, during an open casting call for We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young Saturday at Infantry Hall. Locklear's mother, Tina, and brother, Zachary, also attended the call.

Bill Putman, a retiree and civilian employee, had a special reason for wanting to be an extra in the movie.

"I was here when the 1st Cavalry Division was organized and they were testing the Airmobile Division," Putman said. "I've met General Moore and I knew some of the other people in the division. I thought I would give this a shot."

DoD launches service Web site will help members find positions

Army News Service

The Department of Defense recently announced a new Internet resource for service members leaving active duty. Dubbed the DoD Transportal and located at http://www.dodtransportal.org, the Web site is designed to be the doorway to Internet transition and job assistance information and services for departing service members and their spouses.

The online service is intended to complement the existing network of transition assistance offices at more than 212 major military installations worldwide.

The Web site has three main features. "Transition Assistance" provides a brief overview of the DoD Transition Assistance Program, including a general discussion of all benefits and services available to service members and their families.

"At Your Service" provides the locations and phone numbers of all transition assistance offices worldwide and links to other transition-related Web sites.

The last feature, "Your Next Career," provides mini-courses on conducting a successful job search campaign and creating resumes; information on avoiding Internet scams; and links to job search Web sites and corporate recruiting sites.

There is also a suggested reading list of books that can be used as job search resources.

Post unit celebrates 100th anniversary

Regiment continues tradition

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

The 29th Infantry Regiment celebrated its distinguished history Feb. 2, commemorating the 100th anniversary of the regiment's founding.

Soldiers marked the anniversary with a regimental run, led by retired Command Sgt. Major Frank Plass, honorary regimental command sergeant major and a veteran of World War II, the Korean War, and the war in Vietnam.

Soldiers of the regiment began the day in Marshall Hall, where they viewed an inspiring presentation documenting the "One Hundred Years of Excellence" since the regiment's earliest days.

Continuing a tradition, the regiment formed on Pioneer Field for a photograph which will add to the historical collection on display in regimental and battalion headquarters.

The regiment also hosted a celebratory organization day, which included competitions in sports such such as volleyball and football as well as a Pioneer Stakes competition involving military skills.

The soldiers of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, prepared barbecue meals for over 800 soldiers, Department of the Army civilians, and family members on Pioneer Field.

The history of the 29th features many highpoints.

Congress authorized the formation of the regiment on Feb. 2, 1901.

The regiment actually formed on March 3, under the command of Col. W.M. Van Horn, at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

The 29th earned its first battle streamer during the Phillipine Insurrection.

During World War I, the regiment guarded the Panama Canal. After three years of that duty, the 29th was to deploy to the fighting in Europe, but an influenza outbreak prevented that deployment from occurring.

Between the world wars, the 29th participated in numerous important developments while serving at Fort Benning, including the implementation of the plastic canteen.

Soldiers from the 29th also formed the world's first parachute test platoon in 1940.

The 29th played a significant role in the development of Fort Benning, voluntarily participating in the construction of Doughboy Stadium, Gowdy Field, and numerous cuartels, including the buildings that still house the contemporary 29th Infantry Regiment.

During World War II, the 29th played a crucial role, taking responsibility for the coastal defense of Iceland.

Later, the 29th guarded the famed Red Ball express supply effort in France, and fought along the Meuse River, in the Ardennes Forest, and into Germany, all the way through VE day.

At war's end, the regiment provided security to the Supreme Headquarters, Allied Forces Europe.

The 29th was then deactivated, then reactivated just under three years later, assuming further guard duties on the island of Okinawa.

The regiment was dispatched to the Korean War at the outset of the fighting, serving bravely in numerous campaigns.

The regiment returned to Fort Benning and the Infantry School in November 1954, where it resumed its training duties.

In 1970, 15 soldiers from the 29th formed the world's first fully trained TOW missile platoon.

In 1983, leading instructors from the 29th trained and qualified the very first Bradley Fighting Vehicle crew in the world, at Fort Hood, Texas.

Today, the 29th continues to train infantry soldiers to serve and defend their country, continuing a proud tradition.

Currently, the regiment is commanded by Col. Carter Ham.

The regimental command sergeant major is Command Sgt. Major Joe Bradley.

To learn more about the 29th Infantry Regiment, visit the unit's home page on the World Wide Web at http://www-benning.army.mil/29thInf/29index.htm.

A CLOSER LOOK

■ The unit crest of the 29th Infantry Regiment features a lamp of knowledge and learning, symbolic of its long association with training missions at Fort Benning and the U.S. Army Infantry School.

■ The first battalion, a mechanized infantry unit, conducts training involving the Bradley Fighting Vehicle. Courses run by the first battalion include the Bradley Leader Course, the Bradley Master Gunner Course, and the Basic Bradley Transition Course. The first battalion also provides Bradley Fighting Vehicle support for graduation ceremonies at the Infantry Training Brigade, as well as for several general infantry training courses.

■ The second battalion, a light infantry unit, conducts training involving all weapons used by infantry soldiers. Second battalion instructors teach mortar and anti-tank courses, run M-16 rifle and M-9 pistol ranges, and lead courses on land mine warfare, hand grenades, machine guns, and the M-203 dual-purpose weapon. The Army's internationally respected Sniper School is a second battalion operation.

■ The 30th Adjutant General Reception Battalion, located on Sand Hill, receives and processes soldiers arriving from Military Entrance Processing Stations all over the world for training at the Infantry Training Brigade and the Basic Training Brigade.

■ The history of the 29th is, in many ways, the history of Fort Benning. Much of the main post reflects the volunteer construction efforts of 29th Regiment soldiers. Doughboy Stadium and Gowdy Field were built with the effort of the regiment's soldiers between the world wars, and regiment lives and works today out of buildings constructed by their predecessors.

Fort Benning to celebrate values

Officers' Club to open doors for breakfast

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Meditation and music, food and fellowship will all add flavor to the upcoming National Prayer Breakfast on Thursday.

The Fort Benning Officer's Club will open its doors to the community at 7:30 a.m. to share the morning meal, with the program immediately following at 8 a.m.

As in the past, the event's mission is to celebrate and recognize the moral and spiritual values upon which America was founded.

The forum presents an opportunity for the community to pray for its leaders, its social and spiritual needs and the country at large.

"We hope to increase patriotic awareness for prayer in our nation," said Chaplain (Capt.) Michael White, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry, Infantry Training Brigade.

Dr. Stu Weber, a former Army captain, will be the guest speaker for the event.

Currently senior pastor of the Good Shepherd Community Church in Portland, Ore., Weber is also the author of several books including Tender Warrior, All the King's Men and Four Pillars of a Man's Heart.

Once stationed at Fort Benning, Weber is airborne and ranger qualified and was awarded the Bronze Star Medal with two oak leaf clusters as a Green Beret captain with the 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne) in Vietnam.

Sgt. Dorothy Bess-Moore, Infantry Chapel NCOIC and Chaplain (Capt.) Deirdre Stokelin, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, will sing. Saxophonist Chaplain (Maj.) David Giamonna, Basic Combat Training Brigade will play the saxophone

A quartet from the Army Band and the Army Brass Quintet will provide entertainment for the prayer breakfast.

The required dress for all military members is duty uniform, while civilians may attend in casual attire.

Tickets are available in advance or at the door for a requested donation of $4 for E1-E4 and $6.25 for E5 and above and civilians. Anticipating a large audience, White recommends purchasing tickets beforehand. Weber a very popular speaker, White said.

For additional information call the installation chaplain's office at 545-2288 or contact unit or directorate sergeants major for ticket information.

Soldiers visit Tuskegee University

Tour offers first-hand look at black history

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Fort Benning usually celebrates Black History Month with commemorative breakfasts and memorial displays.

This year, though, 115 soldiers did something more, traveling to Tuskegee, Alabama for a first-hand look at one of the birthplaces of equal opportunity.

The soldiers toured the campus of Tuskegee University, one of the nation's leading historically black colleges and universities, and walked through the U.S. Park Service's George Washington Carver Museum. They also heard about history from one of the men who made it.

Retired Air Force Col. Roosevelt Lewis was one of the original Tuskegee Airmen, the group of black soldiers who were the first to train for combat aviation in what was then the Army Air Force during World War II. Lewis spoke to soldiers for an hour in a university auditorium.

Lewis described the lives of black pioneers in military aviation, such as Gen. Daniel "Chappie" James, the first African-American to wear four stars in any service.

The trip was the brainchild of Fort Benning's equal opportunity advisors, who worked together to come up with a different way to take note of black history.

A trip to Tuskegee, they agreed, would bring that history to life for the soldiers who went.

"They'll take something back home with them in memories and photographs," said Sgt. 1st Class Jerry McCullough, who chaired the group making plans for Black History Month. "There's just a lot of knowledge here."

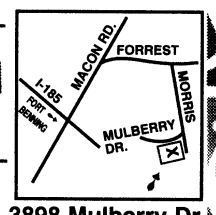
Tour escort Priscilla Madison, a Tuskegee University senior majoring in animal studies, began the day when she led soldiers to the Booker T. Washington monument near the campus chapel.

Washington founded the school, which has gone through several name changes, in 1881. The monument was the site of a 1941 ceremony marking the start of pilot training at the school.

The trip ended with a visit to the museum, which featured displays on Carver's life and the history of the university.

A film exhibit at the museum told the story of the Tuskegee Airmen.

Soldiers participating in the trip agreed that it had been worthwhile.



Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Blanks, equal opportunity advisor to the 11th Inf. Regt., called it "a good starting point to begin to understand the heritage of the contributions made to this great nation" by black soldiers.

"I think everyone walked away with something new, something different," he said.

Tobacco products banned in Infantry Hall

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

The same Army that once provided cigarette rations to thousands of soldiers is now creating a new generation of policies to snuff out tobacco use.

Fort Benning's Chief of Staff Col. Lonnie Vona updated the policy on smoking cessation and use of tobacco products to specifically include Infantry Hall.

The use of all tobacco products in Infantry Hall is now prohibited, including snuff and chewing tobacco. While cigarette, pipe and cigar smoking has been prohibited in the building for years, smokeless products were never targeted.

This policy was last updated in August 1997. Policies are reviewed annually by the chief of staff and are occasionally revised.

Medical evidence has clearly established a link between smokeless tobacco products and adverse health effects-ranging from gum recession and increased tooth decay to increased cancer risk of the oral cavity, pharynx, larynx and esophagus.

What is less known is that nicotine blood levels achieved by smokeless tobacco use are similar to those from cigarette smoking.

"From a medical standpoint, this is consistent with promoting more healthy behaviors in the working population," said Maj. Bryan Alsip, chief of Preventive Medicine.

Tobacco products can constrict the blood vessels. Athletic performance and endurance levels are decreased by this reaction, Alsip said.

Once a tobacco user himself, Lt. Col. Selby Rollinson, deputy chief of staff, believes the updated policy is a change for the better and one that is more in tune with today's values.

"When I was younger, the Army was not as considerate of people's feelings when it came to tobacco use," explained Rollinson. "For those individuals who think the updated policy infringes on their individual rights, we all made the decision to become part of the Army and to follow the rules."

The gazebo located in back of Infantry Hall continues to be the only designated location for tobacco use in that area. As in the past, smoking is prohibited within 50 feet of the building. That was not always the case.

Susan Turner, with secretary general staff, said, "In the 80s, there was no 50 foot rule. People smoked in any entrance of the building."

Carrie Martin, a sales representative employed in the Infantry Hall AAFES, also remembers a time when the guidelines were less stringent.

"Before, it seemed people could smoke just about anywhere," Martin said. "I guess people made a big issue of it."

The AAFES shop continues to sell dozens of tobacco products per day, she said. Cigarette sales once far outnumbered the smokeless tobacco products sold in the building past. The snuff purchases have gained increased popularity, as well as the reduced nicotine products.

Failure to adhere to this new policy subjects users to a variety of penalties. Soldiers can expose themselves to UCMJ punishment, while civilians are subject to disciplinary acts. Adhering to the rules is expected, Rollinson said.

"I think there's going to be some upset people," said Linda Gilbert, AAFES operations manager. "especially the younger soldiers who couldn't smoke cigarettes and started chewing."

VEAP offers second chance at more lucrative GI Bill

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Opportunity does knock twice.

Soldiers who enrolled in the pre-1985 Veteran's Education Assistance Program, and turned down a 1996 offer to convert to the far more lucrative Montgomery GI Bill, now have another window in which to make the switch.

Enthusiasm for the new opportunity has run high among VEAP participants, said post education officer Elaine Livingston.

"People have been waiting for this for a long time," she said.

The new period of eligibility is the result of congressional action. The Veterans Benefits and Health Care Improvement Act of 2000 was approved Oct. 17.

The conversion window established by the law closes on Oct. 31 of this year.

There are a number of eligibility rules, but the end result is not as intimidating as the dense thicket of restrictions may suggest.

"It's a simple process for the soldier," Livingston said.

Not surprisingly, the most significant eligibility rule involves a soldier's contribution to the MGIB program.

Soldiers who are currently enrolled in VEAP must request a refund of their VEAP contribution, which is then repaid to the federal treasury as an MGIB contribution.

What's more, the total soldier contribution to the MGIB fund must total $2,700 before the Department of Veteran's Affairs can begin paying out MGIB benefits.

For VEAP participants, that means filling the gap between accrued VEAP contributions and the required MGIB contribution with payroll deductions or out-of-pocket payments.

But it is worth it: While VEAP benefits top out at $8,100 and represent a 2-to-1 ratio of Army to soldier contributions, MGIB benefits climb far higher, and represent a 9-to-1 Army contribution.

"The cost is nothing, compared to the benefits," Livingston said.

Eligible soldiers must also have served continuously on active duty from Oct. 9, 1996, to April 1, 2000.

Veteran's benefits require an honorable discharge.

Soldiers seeking more information on the switch from the VEAP plan to MGIB benefits should visit the education center at Soldier's Plaza, Livingston said, where trained counselors can answer questions and start the conversion process.

On the political front, the new eligibility window appears to represent a growing recognition in Congress of the importance of education for service members.

Rep. Mac Collins, who serves the Fort Benning area in the House of Representatives, said that the new VEAP rule was just one of several new items benefitting military veterans that he hoped to shepherd into law last year.

"While the Senate didn't accept all of the improvements I supported," Collins said, they "did accept some of the provisions in the final bill.

"I also believe education is important to active duty military personnel," said Collins, who has supported measures to provide access to online education for Fort Benning soldiers.

As the new VEAP rule suggests, that kind of legislative sentiment has created an exceptionally positive climate of opportunity for soldiers.

But it is, finally, up to soldiers to take advantage of it.

More information on the VEAP-to-MGIB transition is available online at http://www.perscom.army.mil/education/veap.htm.

Bush: Explains pay raise to soldiers

"When we send you into harm's way, we owe you a clear mission with clear goals," he said.

Bush called the soldiers the foundation of America's military readiness.

"But while you're serving us well, America is not serving you well enough," he said.

The president said problems like low pay and poor housing reach across the services with predictable results.

Frustration is up, while morale and recruitment are down, he said.

"This is not the way a great nation should reward courage and idealism," Bush said. "It's ungrateful, it's unwise, and it is unacceptable."

The president opened his speech by asking for prayers for the nine people missing since Feb. 9 when a U.S. submarine surfaced under a Japanese fishing vessel off Hawaii and sank it.

He called for a moment of silence for "those missing, their families and our friends, the people of Japan."

In his first visit to a military base since taking office Jan. 20, Bush also visited a single-soldier barracks and had lunch with soldiers in one of the post's military dining facilities.

The president's Georgia visit kicked off three days of visits with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld to military bases to explain some of his national security policies.

Tuesday he visited Joint Forces Command in Norfolk, Va., and Wednesday, the two visited National Guard and reserve troops in Charleston, W.V.

Maj. Gen. Walter L. Sharp, 3rd Division commander, told Bush he couldn't think of "a better place to see what soldiers and their families are doing in the Army today."

The president agreed. "You've been called the most highly trained and rapidly deployable mechanized force in the world," he told the soldiers.

"That is high praise, and you have earned it."

Throughout the presidential campaign, Bush promised to take a hard look at increasing amounts of military deployments.

Much of the manpower from those deployments comes from the 3rd Division, he said.

Bush noted many division soldiers are currently deployed to Bosnia and still more will replace them in March.

In addition to the current and upcoming Bosnia missions, Fort Stewart soldiers are currently training for a May deployment to Kosovo as well.

"You volunteered for this job. You decided to serve a cause greater than yourself," Bush told the troops. "I'm proud to lead you, and I'm committed to serve you."

Accident: Causes death of soldier

overstate this. Not only was he a great soldier, he was a great human being. He was polite and compassionate. He was the kind of guy you would want your son to be like," said Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Martinez, the command sergeant major for the 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

Martinez had been Robak's first sergeant at D Company, 1st Battalion, 8th Infantry Regiment, Fort Carson, Colo.

Robak arrived at Fort Benning in April. When he reported for duty at the 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., he was reunited with Martinez, whom he had met seven years ago at Fort Carson during his first assignment out of basic training.

"He was a cut above everybody else. As a private first class, he was put in a gunner's position, which is actually a sergeant's slot," Martinez said.

Martinez saw Robak grow from a young private to "one of the finest noncommissioned officers in our Army. He had unlimited potential," he said.

Robak was considered a superb athlete and led his company softball team to the Fort Carson post championship for two years in a row.

At Fort Benning, he organized a softball team at A Co., 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

"He coached, pitched and was the superstar on the team. That's the kind of winning spirit he had," Martinez said.

That winning spirit showed earlier this year when Robak, the leader of 2nd Squad, 3rd Platoon, prepared his squad for a battalion squad competition.

"It was a rigorous test of tactical and technical knowledge, and the squad led by Sergeant Robak was our top squad in the battalion," he said.

"He was just the greatest. I loved this kid. Our soldiers are really devastated by this. He will be greatly missed," Martinez said.

After leaving 2nd Squad, Robak became the leader of 1st Squad, 3rd Platoon.

"He cared about everybody. You could really trust him to do whatever he could for you. He would put his rank on the line and go toe-to-toe with the first sergeant or anyone he needed to, no matter what the situation was," said Spc. David Rogers, a 1st Squad member. "When he said something would be taken care of, it would be done."

Rogers described Robak as a friend you could talk to about anything.

"Everyone knew him. He had friends throughout the brigade, and he will be missed by everybody. Even though people come and go in the Army, everyone who knew him will keep his memory with them forever."

Camera: Benefits MPs, community

building and have an audio recording of what transpires.

• A standard VCR mounted in a protected, air-conditioned and locked case in the rear of the vehicle. MPs do not have to transfer the VCR tape to another medium in court or at the station because most have VCRs.

• Overdub protection. If someone tapes over a segment of the tape, the system identifies the attempt was made, thereby preventing tampering of the tape.

• Inter-system capability. If an MP stops to help a fellow MP with a traffic stop, he or she has the capability of recording their voice on their buddy's system. For example, as one MP conducts a field sobriety test, the other can record what he notices in the suspects car.

• A mount into the headliner that saves MPs valuable space.

• A detachable camera. Soldiers can put it on top of their MP cars and use it for surveillance and other undercover missions.

• A rotating mount. Officers can turn the camera around, turn off the monitor, and the system will record what happens in the backseat. A suspect's statements on tape are admissible in court.

• Automatic system activation when soldiers hit their lights that will benefit the MPs if they forget to activate the new system.

In the near future, when MPs clock someone's speed, the system will record their target speed and display it on the system monitor.

"It's a reliable, easy to operate system," Kelley said. "It will help protect the public and the military police and is well worth the money the post spent because it verifies or exonerates the testimony of both MPs and complainants."

"It's a very good system," Sparks said. "It's great for evidentiary purposes mainly, but it will save us the burden of false accusations."

The new camera system will also be a valuable training tool during after action reviews, he said.

"You can see things after the fact that will make you become a better investigator," Sparks said.

The system will enhance MP force protection as well, he said.

"If I or my soldiers get hurt and can't speak for ourselves, our fellow officers can pull up, and the video speaks for us. It gives them a head start on who hurt my soldier or me."

The new system will echo the old adage, "A picture is worth a 1,000 words," and will undoubtedly help the MP mission, making Fort Benning a safer, more secure environment for those who live, work and play here, Kelley said.

Officer candidate describes new class

OCS students learn how to be leaders

Officer Candidate Niul Manske
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

We have come from all corners of the United States. We have come from within the ranks as well as the private sector. We are a cross-section of the Army and the American public.

Sergeants first class, specialists, teachers, chief warrant officers, rangers, accountants, aviators, medics, behavioral therapists, Special Forces NCOs, and college students — we are now bonded together by our singular aspiration — we all wish to serve our country as officers in the U.S. Army.

For most of us, the Officer Candidate School is the fastest paced school of any Army school we have attended, and we are eager to accept the challenge.

There is much to do and learn. After all, the goal is to turn our disparate group of individuals into competent, confident lieutenants in a mere 14 weeks.

Like everywhere else in the Army, we do PT, but unlike everywhere else in the Army, we are learning the new physical fitness science straight from the U.S. Army Fitness School.

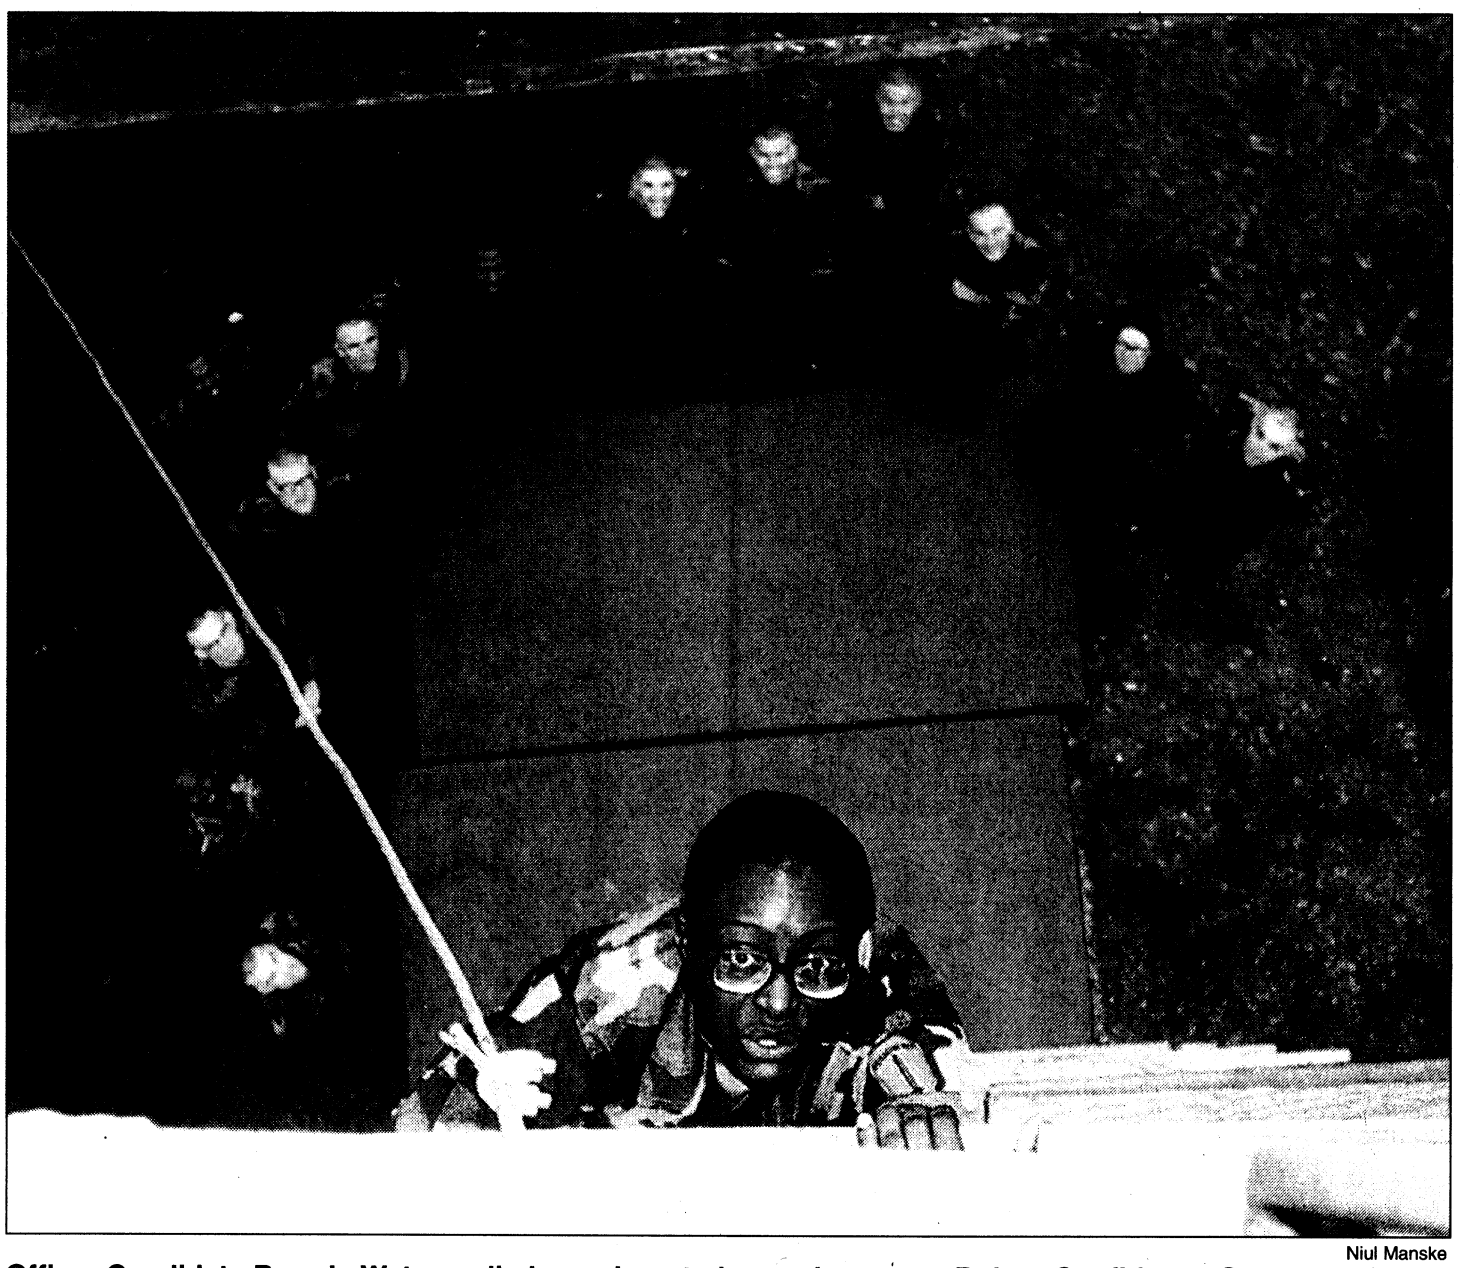
As future lieutenants, we will bring the new PT doctrine to the Total Force.

But there is more to officership than physical fitness. Among the many things we do in the first month, there are classes on Army subjects ranging from leadership, tactics, and operations, to staff organization and signal equipment.

There is no typical day in basic phase as no two days are the same, but all days remain engaging and challenging.

One day may try us with the combat water survival test while another day will have our full attention with the leadership reaction course.

One of the subjects that is a change for the OCS of yesteryear is combatives training. We are learning the Army's new school of hand-to-hand combat techniques from the ground up, literally.



In basic phase we learn ground fighting techniques, starting with the fundamentals of dominant body positions, progressing to basic escapes.

As combatives progresses, so does all our other training, as well as our understanding of how success in OCS will lead to success as a lieutenant.

While that first day was only a little more than a month ago, for all of us here it feels like a distant past. One reason for this is because we have accomplished so much in such little time.

Field exercises, day and night land navigation, obstacle courses, classes, tests, and road marches; all this we have completed in our four weeks of basic phase.

Another reason why the beginning of our basic phase seems so long ago is because all of us have begun to undergo the change that OCS brings out. We have learned that it is impossible for one candidate to accomplish the missions given by OCS, but when working as a team, we can surpass any expectations.

Niul Manske

Officer Candidate Brenda Watson climbs up inverted rope descent at Bolton Confidence Course as fellow candidates look on.

Our entire company is now student run.

From team leader to the student company commander, we are responsible for our daily training schedule and its corresponding logistics.

This system is on the job training at its finest and is excellent preparation for the platoon leader positions we all hope to fill.

Our company has now crossed the threshold from basic to intermediate phase.

To all of us in Class 2-01, the differences in our first day of basic phase compared to our first day of intermediate phase are enormous.

As we step into our new phase, each squared-away candidate wants to be a part of a good team, each team to be part of a great squad, each squad to be part of an excellent platoon and each platoon wants to be part of our outstanding company.

All individual differences have been shed for the good of the many. Petty arguments were cast aside as we crossed the line from basic to intermediate officer candidates.

During our change over from basic to intermediate phase, the company commander of A Company, OCS Class 2-01 challenged us with a quote of John F. Kennedy, "To whom much is given, much is expected."

As the intermediate officer candidates of OCS Class 2-01 move on into our next phase, we continue on our mission, not only to achieve our commissions, but also to meet and exceed the expectations of the people of the United States of America.

Infantrymen learn high-angle attack skills

Trainees learn to fire live mortars

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Of the many steps it takes to mold an Army recruit into a soldier, many say the best times in training are those that result in a big bang.

Winding down their 10th week of infantry training Feb. 1, indirect fire infantrymen fired their first live mortar rounds.

"This is a lot of fun," Pvt. Erik Maciejewski said after participating in the live fire. "It is, by far, more fun than any other weapon we've fired.

Here you get to watch the explosion and see what you blow up."

At this point in their training, mortarmen in D Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, split off from the rest of their infantry company to focus on their speciality as mortarmen.

"Mortars are high angle weapons," Thomas said. "They can fire over a hill unlike artillery.

In an urban environment, you can lob mortars over tall buildings and hit targets on the other side."

They also learned their role in infantry battle tactics.

"They are indirect fire support for the infantrymen," said Staff Sgt. Michael Thomas, a D Co. drill sergeant.

Mortarmen carry the lightweight 60 mm mortars on missions and use the weapons to prepare an objective before the infantry attacks.

Also mortars, unlike artillery, can fire over obstacles.

The trainees began their live fire by practicing with the short range training round, a reusable hull which allows the soldiers to get a feel for the real thing.

Maciejewski said with the small group, training has been rigorous, but they are learning a lot.

"With the small group, the training has been pretty intense," Maciejewski said.

"We are getting more hands-on training than in a larger group because there is enough equipment for everyone to use."

After firing the training rounds, the trainees moved to the real thing.

"This is a lot cooler than the hand grenades," Pvt. Aaron Haehn, said. "I didn't think there was as much involved in firing a mortar.

But this is all new and exciting."

After learning the basics of the smaller mortars they will use as infantrymen, the soldiers will move into mortars with more firepower and longer range in their final week of training.

Haehn said, "We get to shoot the bigger mortars next week and I am looking forward to that."

Carothers comes to post from Kansas

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Lt. Col. Charles W. Durr Jr. relinquished command of the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, to Lt. Col. John Carothers Feb. 8 during a change of command ceremony on York Field.

Durr commanded the battalion, which is the Infantry Officer Basic Course, for two years and will be the deputy commander of the Infantry Training Brigade until this summer when he leaves for the War College.

"Chuck Durr touched the lives of 2,000 lieutenants and in doing so the Army will be better for the next 20 years," said Col. Michael Ferriter, commander, 11th Inf. Regt.

Durr addressed the future infantry platoon leaders who stood in formation on the field.

"You are the sole reason this battalion exists. You have begun a sacred quest to lead America's sons and daughters, and if required, take them to battle to fight and win," he said.

"Your contribution to our nation will be significant. You will bring order to chaos. Most importantly, you will be the last commissioned officer in the chain of command who will look a soldier dead in the eye and give him an order that may result in him giving his life for his country. There is nothing more sacred or daunting," Durr said.

Durr thanked his wife, M'Lynda, and son, Charles, for their support during his command.

"Your many questions that started with 'What about?' 'Why does?' and 'How many?' prepared me daily for the trials of training infantry lieutenants," Durr told his 6-year-old son.

"You have no idea of the similarities, and I was grateful for the rehearsals."

Carothers' previous assignment was with the Battle Command Training Program at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

A native of Washington, D.C., Carothers is a 1983 graduate of James Madison University in Virginia. He has served in Baumholder, Germany; Fort Ord, Calif.; Fort Benning and Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

"I am humbled to be selected for this command and look forward to serving the soldiers of this battalion. Readily, I accept the mission to train and prepare infantry lieutenants to lead platoons into combat," Carothers said. "This battalion's mission is decisive to the future of the infantry, our Army and our nation."

Carothers and his wife, Mary, have three sons, Joseph, David and Daniel.

Some to stay on trail longer

Summer surge reason for year-long extension

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

The trail for more than 60 Fort Benning drill sergeants is getting a little longer — 12 months longer to be exact.

It was recently announced that 62 of the post's 504 drill sergeants will have their tour extended because of a projected shortage of new drill sergeants, said Personnel Command officials.

Due to new drill sergeant to soldier training ratios, new training units being created and the projected loss of more than half of current drill sergeants, the Army's three drill sergeant schools can't keep up with the demand, officials said.

Drill sergeant schools' student numbers have been increased to help alleviate the sudden shortage, but the extension is also necessary to meet the Army's needs.

The Infantry Training Brigade was tasked to provide 41 soldiers and the Basic Combat Training Brigade was asked for 21 to help fill this gap.

The Fort Benning soldiers aren't alone in filling in the gap — 250 drill sergeants from all military occupational specialties Armywide are being selected to stay on the trail a little longer.

Before soldiers were chosen, there were certain requirements that had to be kept in mind, said Ricky Fannin, of Fort Benning's Drill Sergeant Management Office.

"There were some guidelines sent down to both brigades. First, they had to interview the soldiers and let them know what was going on," said Fannin. "We were asking the brigades to explain to the soldiers that this process was on-going, and that they could volunteer or it was possible that they would be involuntarily extended.

"Second, they had to make sure the soldiers didn't have any problems like family problems, an upcoming ETS date or something that would prevent them from being extended."

Another requirement was that the selected soldiers had to have an end of tour date between March and September 2001.

Actors who will portray U.S. soldiers fighting in Mogadishu in the upcoming movie Black Hawk Down spent five days training with the 75th Ranger Regiment at Fort Benning Feb. 12-16.

"It's been a meeting of two very different worlds," said Ewan McGregor, the Scot who will play a company clerk in the film.

While the technical knowledge the 21 actors gained concerning firing weapons and moving during combat will help in their portrayal of rangers, McGregor saw an added benefit to the "ranger orientation" training.

"This has been invaluable for bonding our group of guys together. We will be a much closer group when we arrive on the set in Morocco," said McGregor, who starred as the young Obi-Wan Kenobi in Star Wars Episode One: The Phantom Menace.

"I think it has been a culture shock to these guys, but they are stepping up to it

Benning meeting retention goals

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

It's not every day that a soldier re-enlists in the Army — so when a specialist in the 29th Infantry Regiment recently decided to continue serving his country, the decision received quite a bit of attention.

But Spc. Nicholas Kolowich, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Inf. Regt., is used to being the center of attention. The mechanized infantry soldier was named post Soldier of the Year for 2000.

Kolowich's re-enlistment comes at a time in which the Army is putting new incentives on the table to keep soldiers in green.

Many new and improved re-enlistment incentives took effect on Feb. 8, while the Army has budgeted over $60 million for re-enlistment bonuses in 2001.

The incentives appear to be working. Halfway through the quarter, said Sgt. 1st Class Jose Irizarry, post re-enlistment NCO, Fort Benning is halfway to its retention goal — right on target.

Armywide, retention goals are being exceeded; while the Army hoped to sign 1,910 initial term soldiers to re-enlistment contracts by this time of year, the office of the deputy chief of staff for personnel reports that more than 2,410 have actually signed new contracts.

But money alone isn't convincing soldiers to re-enlist, said Staff Sgt. Walter Spears, HHC, 29th Inf. Regt., the regimental re-enlistment NCO. Kolowich, for example, decided to re-enlist after his first sergeant, commander, command sergeant major and re-enlistment NCO all brought up the possibility with him and discussed the advantages.

"He re-enlisted because of a lot of command involvement," Spears said. "Money didn't drive him."

Kolowich re-enlisted in part for the opportunity to pursue an education through the Army University Access Online program. He hopes to complete an associate's degree in criminal justice.

Kolowich's re-enlistment reflects the Army's larger goal of retaining quality soldiers throughout the organization. Officers and NCOs in the 29th

Soldiers to take test for beret

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A test on the Army's history is a "rite of passage" soldiers will be required to undergo in the future before donning their black berets, said Sgt. Maj. of the Army Jack L. Tilley.

Tilley said the BDU cap will continue to be worn in the field after June, but its name will change to "patrol cap."

He said that the Army leadership is still working to determine exactly what new soldiers will be required to do in order to earn the privilege of being issued a beret. But he said one thing is certain:

"We're going to have a test; an undetermined amount of questions right now, but we're going to have a test that talks about the history of our Army."

The test might be given when a trainee reports to his or her first permanent duty station, Tilley said, but added the Army leadership hasn't decided for sure.

"It's a big deal for us to move into that first unit," Tilley said.

Tilley said not only the test, but the beret itself will emphasize the Army's history.

Tilley said the new beret flash comes from the Revolutionary War.

"The blue flash represents the Continental Army and the 13 stars represent the 13 colonies," he added.

He said many soldiers don't know about the Army's birthday, and that's going to change.

"We're going to go back now and start talking about the history of the Army," Tilley said, "the importance of the Army, where we came from and what we're going to do.

"When you look at that beret, you're going to think about transformation," Tilley said as well.

"The chief of staff of the Army has a great vision for us," he said.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki announced in October that soldiers will begin wearing the black beret on June 14, the Army's first birthday of the new millennium. He said the beret will be a symbol of the Army's transformation to a lighter, more deployable force.

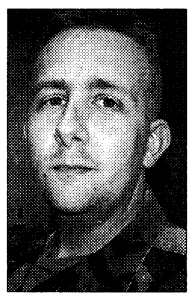
"Starting next June, the black beret will be symbolic of our commitment to transform this magnificent Army into a new force — a strategically responsive force for the 21st century," Shinseki said. He then charged the sergeant major of the Army to come up with a plan to implement the beret's adoption Armywide.

Tilley admitted that at first, some soldiers of the Army's elite ranger units were concerned about sharing their traditional black berets with the rest of the Army.

"Any time you talk about change, I think some people get very frustrated," Tilley said.

"What a lot of people don't realize is that, this beret was not just (worn by) the rangers," Tilley said.

As early as the 1920s, Tilley said the beret was worn by British tankers. And he said U.S. Army "heavy" units — such as the armored cavalry — wore the black beret in the 1970s.



"We're not taking anything from anybody, we're just being all that we can be and we're just moving forward," Tilley said.

Tilley said black was the color selected for the universal beret because it matches all of the Army's uniforms and it hides dirt better.

Heat brings out rudeness

commentary

Since we've had some exceptionally chilly nights this winter, I've been anxiously awaiting warmer days.

During the past couple of weeks my dreams have been coming true on a regular basis — temperatures have been up in the 70s and I'm loving it.

The kids are getting a little fresh air, the barbeque grill has been getting used and I've even done a little yard work.

There are so many great things to enjoy in warm weather, that I almost forgot some of the things I don't like so much when it's nice outside.

But there have been plenty of folks on post to remind me — it's time for them to share their love of loud, obnoxious music with me.

Whether I'm sitting at a light and my car is shaking from a fellow soldier's bass, or out on my carport being serenaded by songs from several houses up my street, I've been reminded how much other people's loud music bugs me.

Sometimes I'm even lucky enough to hear blaring music from passing cars while I sit in my house with the windows shut.

I love music as much as the next person, but I was taught not to infringe on other people's rights and to respect their space. I sometimes wonder what is going through these people's heads, besides high decibles of sound, when they decide to open up their windows and test their sound system.

But I'm not the only person that this type of behavior bugs. It's such a problem in the community that there's a post regulation against it.

According to the regulation, "Playing of radios and electronic sound devices in a motor vehicle which emits sound outside the passenger or driver compartment at a volume which is audible to a person with normal hearing at a distance of 15 feet from the motor vehicle on any public street, public parking area or private driveway on Fort Benning is prohibited."

The same goes for hand-carried radio and electronic devices.

As if the loudness isn't enough, some of the songs include obscene language.

That pushes my buttons even more as I have three young sons and I don't want them subjected to many of the words heard in today's music.

It surprises me to hear those same songs being played by people with young children of their own right there listening to it.

In this case, it's double trouble because obscene language is also prohibited on post.

That same regulation covers this by stating, "The use of obscene, vulgar, or profane language in any public area on the Fort Benning military reservation is prohibited."

It goes on to explain that obscene language includes words that would clearly offend a reasonable person's sense of decency.

I'd like to think I'm a reasonable guy.

And I hope my fellow soldiers and their family members can try to be reasonable too.

Now that the warm weather is here for a while, let's all try to enjoy it. But at the same time, please keep other people in mind while you do.

Pet peeves generate nicknames

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

I've worked around soldiers for a long time now, and no matter where I've been, the more colorful characters are dubbed with highly descriptive nicknames. Some of those colorful personalities knew about their nicknames, others didn't.

Just breathe "Stormin' Norman" and anyone who was around during Desert Storm will know exactly who you're talking about.

I will never forget the colonel who instituted a tougher PT program for a "schoolhouse" at Fort Bragg.

The unit was made up of staff and faculty, and it wasn't easy getting everyone together, much less do organized PT. It was rumored (and probably true) that the "old man" had a profile, and he didn't always show up himself. When he did, his participation was often limited to vocal encouragement. We called him "the Coach."

On the other end of the scale was the colonel we called "Bullet." You've heard of the "Airborne Shuffle?" Slow that shuffle down. A lot. No, even slower than that. That was "Bullet" doing PT. He walked faster than he "ran," but at least he was always out there.

The CG at Fort Bragg back then was a great admirer of Patton, as evidenced by the ivory handled pistols he was fond of using as props. He must have been a fan of westerns, too, because he was proud of his "Gunfighter" nickname.

Every time I get on the elevator at Bunker 4 and someone rides up one floor I am reminded of a certain colonel we minions referred to as "The Elevator Monitor."

He took his duties seriously. On more than one occasion, I cowered in the corner of the elevator as he delivered scathing diatribes on the virtues of "Walk up one, down two" to Soldiers who mistakenly chose to take the elevator instead of the stairs. It was rumored that his OER support form reflected a significant decrease in the number of elevator riders riding up one and down two floors.

He had me so intimidated that I took to walking up two, and down three.

To his credit, very pregnant women, the elderly and anyone with a leg cast were exempt from his personal enforcement of his pet peeve.

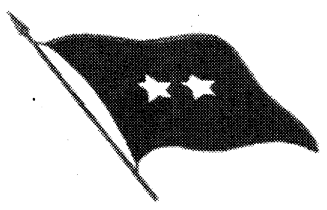
Please note that I said LEG cast. If your arm was in a cast, you had better "walk up one and down two" with the rest of us.

During that regime, I attended a military function at the Iron Works.

When the crowd, all denizens of Infantry Hall, had to move from the first to the second floor a gridlock formed at the foot of the escalator. Because of the crowd, getting to the stairs was out of the question.

After standing in place for 10 minutes, I walked over and called the elevator (which only ran between the first and second floors).

My husband, his boss and some co-workers and I piled in but only after we all, including the colonel who was with us, checked the AO for the Elevator Monitor. We got off at the second floor to choruses of, "We're telling Colonel X!"



After all these years, it's still amazing to me that hundreds of people stood in place, packed closer than sardines, rather than take the only other way upstairs because "the Elevator Monitor" might catch them riding up one floor on an elevator that only ran between two floors.

Shortly after Return of the Jedi debuted, a senior officer whose favorite "snacks" were young captains who didn't do things his way prowled the halls of Bunker 4. "Darth Vader walks" became the captains' shorthand warning order for each other.

It was a pretty good system, too, until a lieutenant colonel overheard the watchword one day and demanded to know who they were talking about. He promptly delivered a lecture on how and why nicknames were disrespectful, earning himself the handle "Mr. Protocol."

At least "Mr. Protocol" was more respectable than his other nickname. We couldn't print that one.

Post celebrates diverse heritage

African Americans have made an indelible impression on the fabric of our society.

They have played a central role in the development of our nation. Through strength of will and unimaginable endurance, they survived slavery to become settlers, writers, artists and leaders in the religious, political and business world.

The traditions, values and strength that African Americans brought from their diverse countries of origin and difficult passages have not only reinforced the moral and political fiber of our country, but add beauty to our culture as well.

African Americans today continue to enrich our culture and quality of life through contributions in every segment of society from business, education and politics to science, law and medicine. They distinguish themselves and bring honor to our nation by serving admirably in its defense throughout the world.

As our African American communities grow along with our nation, we share a deep pride in their culture, traditions and values, recognizing the key role they play in the progress of our democratic system.

It is important to recognize the contributions African Americans have made to the social, political and moral strength of the U.S.

I challenge each of you to recognize the many accomplishments of our African American citizens and to discover more about their rich culture and triumphant history. In doing so, you will gain a greater understanding not only of the heritage of African Americans but of our national heritage, which are one in the same.

Discover the undeniable kinship between African American heritage and that of every American.

In recognition of Black History Month and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, I proclaim the month of February as Black History Month for Fort Benning.

This year's theme is "Creating and Defining the African American Community: Family, Church, Politics and Culture."

During our African American Heritage Observance events you will have an ideal opportunity to learn more about African American culture.

Enjoy the music, food and entertainment. But, take time to learn as well.

Look at the exhibits, read the material provided, ask questions of your African American friends. Celebrate African American heritage!

Rangers tell actors about combat experience

Actors want to know about personalities

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

As a private with B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, George Siegler fought in the Battle of Mogadishu.

Seven years later, the staff sergeant wasn't sure he would be able to talk about those experiences from October 1993 with the actors who will bring the firefight to the big screen in the upcoming Black Hawk Down.

"But I'm so glad I did," Siegler said.

The NCO met with several of the actors last week at Fort Benning. He was one of several soldiers who gave the actors firsthand descriptions of the men they will portray — from their accents and personal habits, such as smoking, to their physical traits, like wearing glasses.

"I had never met an actor before so I was a little afraid of how they would approach this," Siegler said.

"They were compassionate and concerned. They take pride in what they do, and they want to get this right because they know how important this is to the families," Siegler said.

Siegler, who now serves with A Company, 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., was leery at first when he heard Hollywood was turning the book, Black Hawk Down, into a movie.

"But after I saw how Saving Private Ryan was done, I felt better. I hope, with care and dedication, this will grab people and be realistic," said Siegler, who met with the actors twice during the week.

"One or two of them asked me what it was like to kill a Somali. I avoided those questions, because I don't think about that. I prefer to think about my ranger buddies. They are why I keep re-enlisting — to make sure it doesn't happen again and to prepare my soldiers if they do go to combat," Siegler said.

Actor Orlando Bloom asked Siegler about Pfc. Todd Blackburn, who Bloom will play in the movie. Blackburn broke several bones and suffered head and neck trauma when he fell from a Black Hawk.

"He wanted to know what he was like. If he was funny, loud, any of his personality traits. His questions made me happy," Siegler said.

While instructors from the regiment's Ranger Training Detachment provided tactical lessons, Siegler and others were on hand to fill in the blanks about the individual men.

Staff Sgt. Reese Teakell, a veteran of the firefight, also found that most of the questions he was asked centered on the personalities, dialects and mannerisms of the actors' characters.

"They wanted to know the things they did that made them who they are," Teakell said.

Teakell recalled his first reaction to seeing the actors in desert BDUs bearing the names of the characters they will portray.

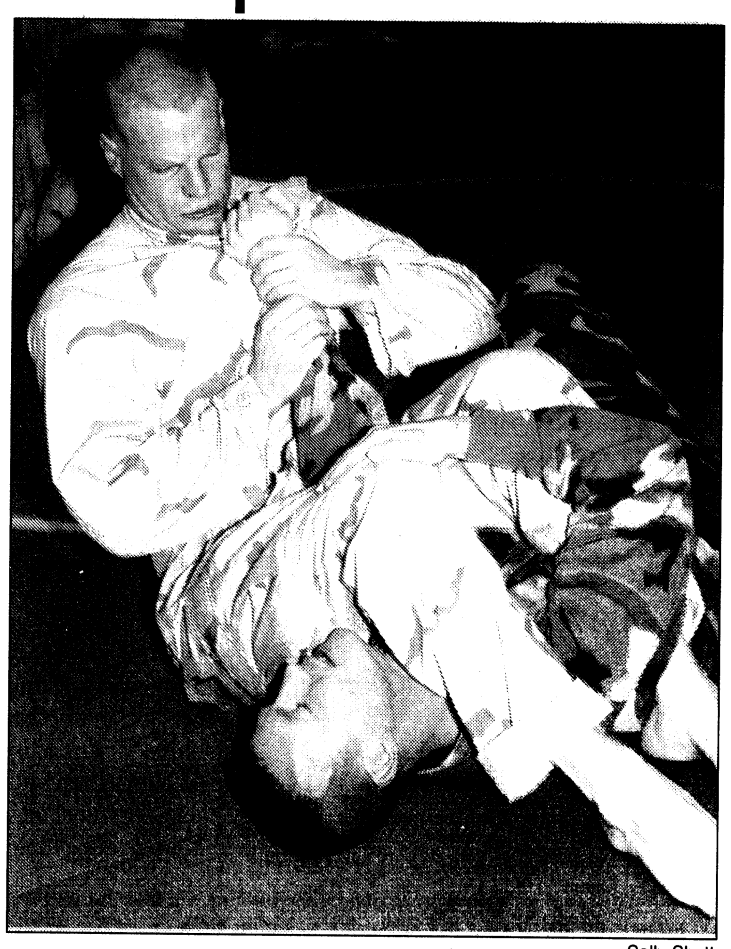
"It was weird. I didn't know they were going to do that," Teakell said.

When he spotted an actor who will play a soldier who died during the battle, Teakell said, "I got goose bumps. It raised the hair on the back of my neck, but that reaction has worn off somewhat."

Hugh Dancy will be medic Sgt. 1st Class Kurt Schmid, and Ben Foster will portray Cpl. Jamie Smith.

Both actors talked on the telephone to Capt. Larry Perino, who was a platoon leader during the battle. Perino, who now serves at Fort Monroe, Va., was with Schmid as the medic tried unsuccessfully to save the injured Smith.

"He talked to me about the events on Oct. 3 and 4. He talked me through it, and it was very helpful," Dancy said.



"He told me about keeping control of yourself in a situation like that — how your training overcomes whatever your natural instinct might be," Dancy said.

Foster took notes as he listened to Perino on a cell phone at the McKenna MOUT site.

"I think most Americans aren't aware of what went on. That's why I think this is an important film," Foster said.

"People hopefully will leave realizing how important these guys are. They are real live superheroes, and they need to be remembered and appreciated," Foster said.

"It's a daunting task to live up to these perfect standards," the actor said.

Trail: Gets longer for drills

not necessarily exempt from the selection process, Fannin said.

The drill sergeants chosen were only from ITB and BCTB. Soldiers in the 30th Adjutant General Battalion and the Drill Sergeant school were taken out of the running because they support a specialized mission where more experience is needed, he said. The Army needs basic training drill sergeants, Fannin said.

The selection process wasn't an easy one, said Capt. Vincent Valley, BCTB's personnel officer.

"It was a hard decision. We tried to handle it as humanely as we could to get the best people for the job," said Valley. "The battalions gave us their recommendations. We tried to be as fair as we could."

Now it's just a waiting game until the soldiers are notified as to who will be staying on the trail and who won't.

"We are waiting for DA to give us the list of the approved names so we know who will actually be extended," Fannin said.

PERSCOM officials said soldiers should get this notification within the next two weeks.

The normal tour for a drill sergeant is 24 months, but it can be extended up to 36 months. The only exception to this is for drill sergeants who teach at drill sergeant school who can stay on the trail up to 42 months.

Retention: Meets goals

constantly meet that challenge.

The 29th is currently re-enlisting just over one in three soldiers, Spears said.

"Kolowich is one of the high percentage of soldiers who are re-enlisting to stay at the 29th Regiment," Spears said.

That's partly because soldiers in the 29th have an unusually good opportunity to pursue both civilian education and military training. Kolowich, for example, has already earned his jump wings and is scheduled to start Pathfinder School in March.

But the other reason so many soldiers wish to remain at the 29th, Spears said, is that soldiers like command climate.

"You could go down to the motor pool and get a bunch of different stories," Spears said, "But the bottom line is that, if a person likes where he's at, he'll re-enlist."

The opportunity to pursue an online education also isn't generally the only thing that convinces soldiers to stay, Spears said; rather, it can help a soldier who's on the fence about re-enlisting to make a decision in favor of continued service.

That's a good reminder that, no matter how many incentives the Army adds to sweeten the pot.

Soldiers will keep serving if they have a positive view of where they work, what they do, and who they work for.

Institute focuses on human rights week

Rule of law emphasized during forum

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation Public Affairs Office

The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation wrapped up a weeklong human rights forum Saturday.

Maj. Tony Raimondo, judge advocate for the institute and principal human rights instructor, said the symposium combined the 40-hour block of instruction on Human Rights Law and International Humanitarian Law given to the students attending the institute's one-year Command and General Staff Officer Course.

The weeklong training emphasized the rule of law during military operations, especially the respect for human rights and law of war.

"No matter where they occur or when they occur — during times of peace or conflict, inside their country or outside their country — all of these laws are applicable," Raimondo said.

Claudio Baranzini, a delegate with the International Committee of the Red Cross, attended the event.

Baranzini is a 20-year veteran with the ICRC and has served in many capacities in different countries throughout different continents. He is currently stationed in Guatemala as the director of International Humanitarian Law for the Western Hemisphere.

The ICRC is a private Swiss organization whose role is to take direct and immediate action to assist victims of war in international and internal conflicts, as well as in situations of internal disturbances and tension. They also promote preventive measures by disseminating knowledge of International Humanitarian Law.

"There's an enormous desire by this institute to ensure their students understand and respect what the law of war is all about," Baranzini said. "That's why this weeklong forum was created. This is fundamental. The impact of this event, in my opinion, will be carried forth when these students return to their country to share and apply the knowledge they received here."

He said he saw a true interest by the students in learning from the many lecturers during the week.

"The interchanging of ideas between the representatives from the different countries was phenomenal," he said. "This allowed the forum to become one of reality and applicability versus one of only theory."

Discussions and workshops on human rights topics varied during the week from ethics and just war doctrine to the importance of the Organization of the American States.

"The importance of the OAS with this institute is the emphasis of the American Convention of Human Rights, or the Pact of San Jose," Raimondo said. "We taught this during Human Rights Week and we'll continue teaching it to all the students attending subsequent courses at this institute."

He said the American Convention of Human Rights was a creation of the countries in the two American continents.

"It is one of the leading documents that deals in the field of international human rights law," he said. "It is important because it has effective enforcement mechanisms in the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights, as well as the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. It is definitely a premier document."

The document clearly defines what human rights is all about and what the state's obligation is to abide by human rights, Raimondo said.

"We will emphasize this during our human rights sessions at the institute," he said. "Our goal is to always show that human rights is at the forefront of consideration by military planners because that is the best way to avoid human rights violations."

He said the importance of the new and permanent International Criminal Court created by the 1998 Rome Treaty was another hot topic of discussion during the week because the court ensured an enforcement mechanism where human rights violators are brought to justice. On Saturday the students visited Andersonville's National Historical Site.

"The purpose of this trip was to learn the causes of past abuses and atrocities and to think about the placing of mechanisms that ensure such violations will not repeat themselves," Raimondo said. "Andersonville allowed us to look at ourselves, our past mistakes, and honor its victims by not repeating such errors in the future."

Human Rights Week will become an annual event for the institute. And the ICRC will conduct human rights workshops throughout the year.

Fort Bennning prepares for Infantry Ball

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

The infantry is as old as the Army, and soldiers serving in the branch will soon have an opportunity to celebrate their unique military heritage. What's more, infantry soldiers will also be able to share that celebration with a far-larger community than usual this year.

The Infantry Ball will take place March 16 at the Columbus Iron Works and Convention Center.

The guest speaker at this year's Infantry Ball is retired Gen. William Livsey, former commander of US-Korean Combined Forces and a former post commander at Fort Benning. Livsey commanded the post from 1977 to 1979.

In addition to Livsey's speech, the ball will feature a reception with cocktail service, formal dinner, and a commemoration of the 50th Anniversary of the Korean War.

Dancing will begin at 10 p.m., after the retiring of the colors.

The choice of the Iron Works as a venue is an especially significant choice, noted Maj. Arthur Tulak, deputy commander, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"Historically, the ball has been held at the Officer's Club, which has limited participation to about 350," Tulak said. "We expect a crowd of about 800 to 900 people, with a healthy mix of civilians, veterans and active-duty soldiers."

The 29th is responsible for organizing this year's ball.

With the focus on Korea, the ball will provide an especially noteworthy celebration of infantry heritage, as veterans of the Korean conflict are encouraged to wear their war-era dress uniforms to the event.

The 29th will decorate the convention center with historical photographs and commemorative posters, and will bring working military vehicles of the era for display — including a Jeep and a halftrack.

Ball price is $25 per person, which includes dinner. Dinner choices are beef, chicken, or portabello mushroom pasta.

Reservations must be made by March 2 and will be taken through each major subordinate command. Points of contact for each unit are listed in the box accompanying this article.

Entertainment will last throughout the evening. A pianist will play during the social hour, and a woodwind trio will play during dinner. A disc-jockey will play dance music after the formal portion of the evening ends.

Uniform for the Infantry Ball is Dress Mess, Dress Blues, or Greens with white shirt and bow tie. Again, official service uniforms from past eras are authorized for veterans, and uniforms from the Korean War period are welcome.

Actors: Gain technical knowledge for upcoming film

pretty well," said Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Fuller during a break in training Feb. 16 at the McKenna MOUT site where the actors were learning to clear rooms.

Black Hawk Down, based on journalist Mark Bowden's book of the same title, is the story of the October 1993 firefight between U.S. Special Operations soldiers and Somalis that left 18 Americans dead and 73 injured. More than 500 Somalis died. Bowden's book grew out of a series of stories that appeared in the Philadelphia Inquirer and other newspapers nationwide.

Josh Hartnett was 15 years old when the Battle of Mogadishu took place. Before reading Black Hawk Down, Hartnett said he had only a faint memory of the fight — the photograph that appeared on magazine covers of an injured Mike Durant, the pilot shot down and held prisoner by the Somalis.

"But I've learned a hell of a lot since then," Hartnett said.

Black Hawk Down will be Hartnett's second military film. He costars in Pearl Harbor, the World War II drama by screenwriter Randall Wallace scheduled for release in May. (Wallace wrote the screenplay for We Were Soldiers Once .... And Young set to film at Fort Benning in March.)

After spending a week with the rangers and having very little free time, Hartnett said, "These are real guys. They have girlfriends and wives. And they love being rangers. By projecting their attitude on film, we'll show respect for them and all they do."

Staff Sgt. Reese Teakell fought in Mogadishu with B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt. Now an instructor with the regiment's Ranger Training Detachment, Teakell said most of the actors' questions centered on the individual characters they will play and not the tactical aspects of war.

"I personally don't expect this to be a documentary. No one does," Teakell said.

"The most important thing for them to understand is the essence of being a ranger. That the ranger next to them is more important than themselves," Teakell said.

Cadre from the Ranger Training Detachment, which runs the regiment's Ranger Indoctrination Program, kept the actors busy from PT each morning to well after dark with classroom and hands-on instruction.

"Not only are we teaching them ranger skills, but basic soldiering skills like how to address an NCO, customs and courtesies," said 1st Sgt. James Hardy, commandant of the detachment.

"They want to do the best they can, and they realize how important and significant it is to be a part of a unit."

During the week the actors visited Lawson Army Airfield and received a familiarization briefing on the UH-60 Black Hawk. They received advanced marksmanship training and fired M-16s. Their final day was spent at the McKenna MOUT site learning the proper techniques in clearing rooms and moving in an urban environment.

"We had to fit three weeks of training into five days, so we focused on the skills that would help them in portraying rangers during the actual events in Mogadishu," said Maj. Bill Butler, the regiment's project officer for Black Hawk Down.

The U.S. Army Special Operations Command is providing official support to the movie, and two other posts were hosts to actors from the film during the week — the 7th Special Forces Group (Airborne) at Fort Bragg, N.C., and 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment at Fort Campbell, Ky.

Fort Benning, Fort Bragg and Fort Campbell were selected as training sites because "those are the locations of the units involved in the actual firefight in Mogadishu," said Carol Darby, USASOC public affairs officer.

"It behooves the Army to support such projects to ensure accuracy in the portrayal of our units," Darby said.

The movie will film in Morocco starting in March, and a platoon from B Co., 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., will deploy there to support the filming of fast roping and ground battle scenes with soldiers and equipment, Darby said.

Jerry Bruckheimer, who produced Top Gun and Pearl Harbor, is the executive producer, and Ridley Scott will direct. Scott directed Hannibal and the Academy Award-nominated Gladiator.

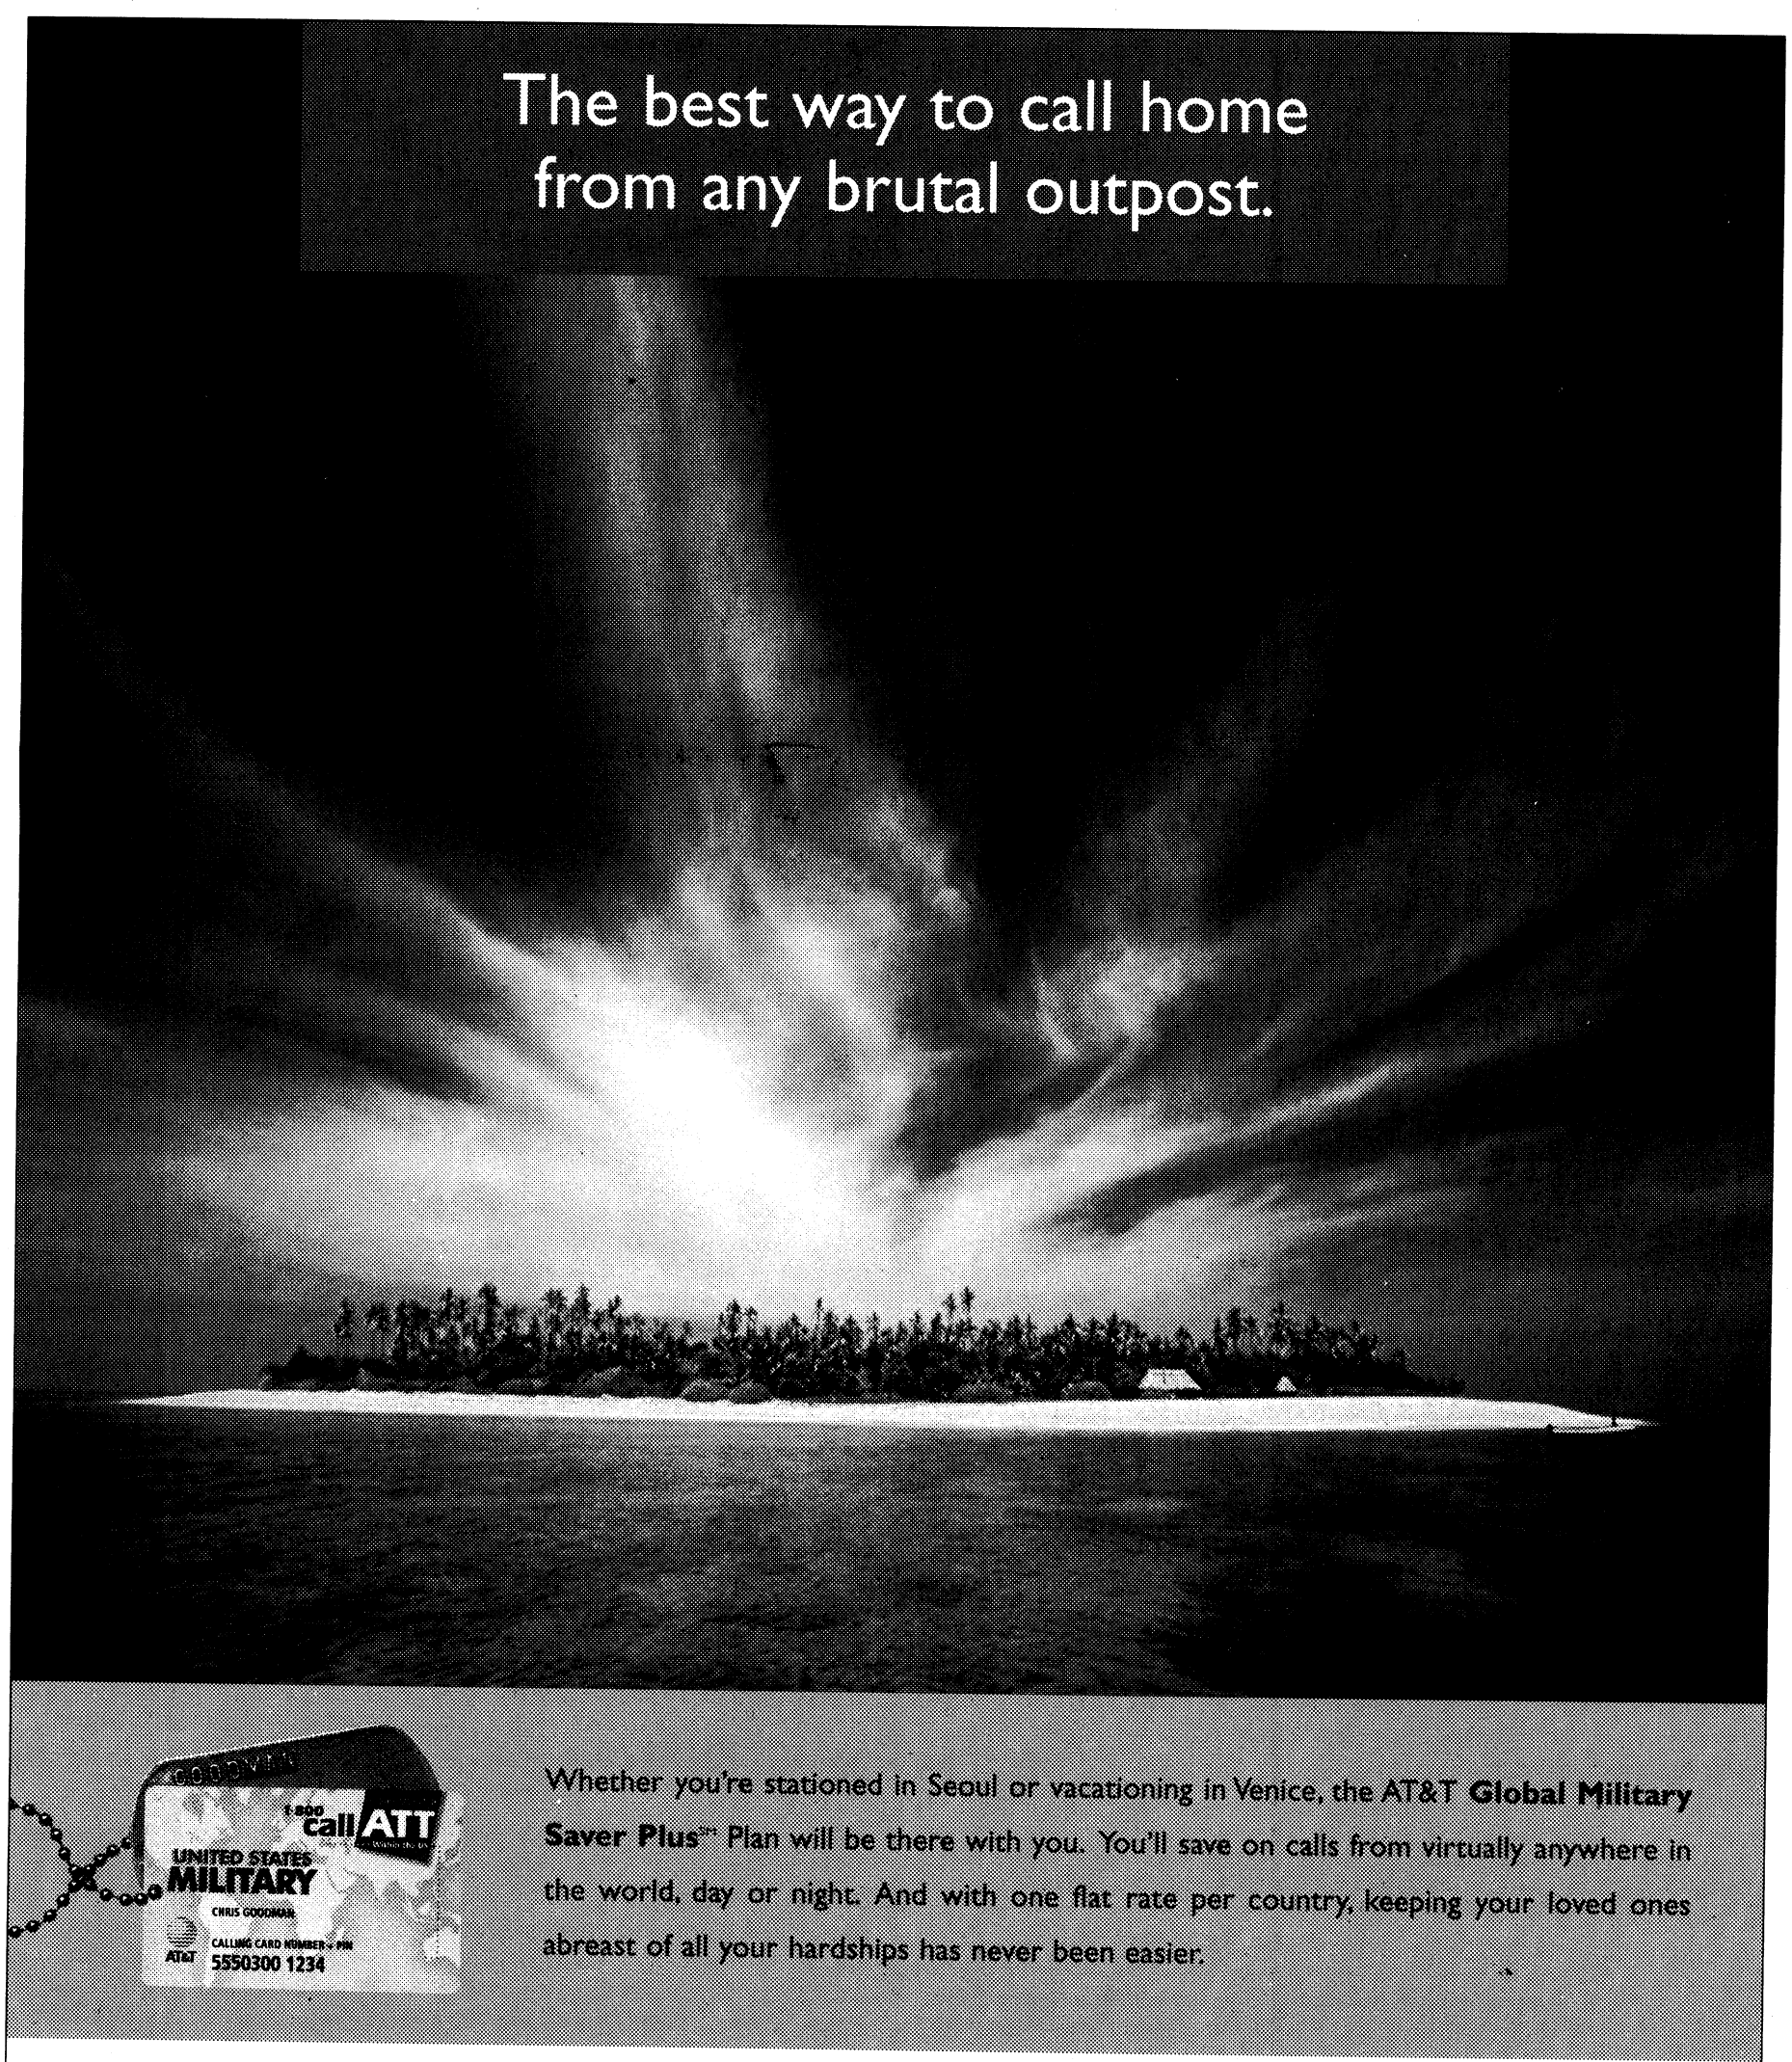
Basil Grillo, an assistant director on Black Hawk Down, traveled to Fort Benning with the actors.

"We want to make sure they have the tools and preparation they need to give an accurate portrayal of U.S. Army rangers," Grillo said.

The actors received "high and tight" haircuts on their first night with the rangers, and throughout the week they wore desert BDUs bearing the names of their characters.



First call was at 6 a.m. each day, followed at 6:30 a.m. by physical fitness training, which included combatives one morning.

Tom Sizemore, who costarred in Saving Private Ryan, was paired with Butler during the Jiu-Jitsu training.

After sparring with Butler, Sizemore announced to the room full of actors and green-suited rangers, "I don't want to fight anyone else in green. This time I want to fight a sissy."

Sizemore, who will portray Lt. Col. Danny McKnight in the film, came down with the flu early in the week — one of several casualties of the training. One actor broke his hand, and two others suffered leg injuries. They have two weeks during rehearsal in Morocco to recover before filming starts.

Soldiers build tank trail off Babbitt Road

Unit creates path, executes training exercise

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Rachel R. Garcia

Spc. Gary Graham, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group, helps build the tank path off Babbitt Road.

In the seven months Sgt. Maj. Scott Landy, Directorate of Public Works sergeant major, has been on the job at Fort Benning, this is the first troop construction project he's witnessed — from the cutting of dirt to the slice of the red ribbon. And with the successful outcome, Landy hopes it won't be the last of its kind.

Staff Sgt. Melvin Gray and the 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Group, spent one month creating a mile long tank path off Babbitt Road for access vehicles to use in addition to executing a training exercise for the soldiers.

The newly constructed path will keep tanks from bottoming out in the once muddy trail, previously used as a bypass off the Hurley Hill demonstration area.

The tank trail will also eliminate competition for use of private vehicles and buses on Babbitt Road.

The tank road is almost as wide as a highway, eliminating any reason for the heavy vehicles to contend with the other road.

The platoon cleared away trees and rocks, as well as leveling a hill to allow a smooth path for water to flow.

"We started when the area was a big swampy mess," Gray said.

The project couldn't come at a better time, as it was "becoming more of a hassle" for tanks to get through, said 1st Lt. Jowanna Day, platoon leader.

The material cost of the trail was about $20,000, but provided a priceless experience for many of the younger soldiers in the platoon, Landy said.

While there is no formal troop construction program currently under the Directorate of Public Works, Landy said opportunities like this project are a valuable teaching opportunity.

"Generally speaking, every project is a great experience, because you always have new soldiers. Always an opportunity to train young soldiers and young platoon sergeants and leaders in the management of projects," Landy said.

The unit is actively engaged in trail upgrades and road maintenance.

The unique aspect about this project was its incorporation into a field training exercise.

The crew spent 10 of the 30 days straight at the site area, working 18-hour days to get work done. At times, extra lights were brought in to complete the work in the dark.

"We slept out there, worked from 6 a.m. to midnight and used lights to get the job done," Gray said.

The most time consuming portion of the job was the first major cut, which took six days alone to complete.

For several of the soldiers, this was a chance to see firsthand the work they will be expected to perform and was a chance for them to get their hands wet, Gray said.

Spc. Gary Graham, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group, has performed many jobs in the civilian sector along these lines but has had little experience within the military.

His major project on the job was with putting in the culvert. For a storm drain system to function as designed, it is essential to install the pipe to the proper line and grade. Certain installation techniques can greatly increase the system performance and rate of installation.

"This is the first of what a lot of us are hoping to be the first of many projects that we'll be involved with together. It's a great relationship when everything falls into place," Landy said.

Army introduces landmine detection system

System fuses penetrating radar, metal detection

Spc. Casondra Brewster
Army News Service

FORT BELVOIR, Va. — An innovative handheld landmine detector, designed to enable soldiers to quickly and accurately detect all types of anti-tank and anti-personnel landmines, was unveiled and demonstrated here Feb. 12.

The U.S. Army's Project Manager for Mines, Countermine and Demolitions, in conjunction with the Communication Electronics Command Acquisition Center, also announced its awarding of a $12.3 million sole-source, fully funded contract for the engineering and manufacturing development phase of CyTerra Corporation's Handheld Standoff Mine Detection System.

"Existing mine detectors are based on a single technology — metal detection," said David H. Fine, president of CyTerra. "Our system fuses together two sensor technologies — ground-penetrating radar and metal detection."

The new system dramatically reduces the high number of false alarms that have been a problem with current landmine detection equipment. False alarm rates are especially prevalent with the current systems when you have other metal elements in the soil such as shrapnel or bullet casings. The new device's rate of detection is unaffected by such 'noise' during the detection process.

The coupling of the GPR also makes detecting plastic-cased mines possible and easier.

During testing at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., the CyTerra prototype demonstrated a probability of detection near 100 percent.

Sgt. 1st Class Richard Sylvester, U.S. Army engineer and project manager, found this testing significant enough to earn his trust.

"I took the AN/PSS-12 (the Army's current mine detector) in lane testing and had a detection rate of 72 percent," Sylvester said. "Then I took the HSTAMIDS with very little training and hit 96 percent of the target mines."

Sylvester also said the new detector allows soldiers to be in the detecting mode longer because the system of audio tones used to alert soldiers to the presence of a buried landmine is gentler to ears.

"With the old technology you could go about 20 minutes before you go tone deaf and have to switch off with another operator," he said. "This new system I could go for 30 minutes or more and not have a degradation in performance user time."

"CyTerra's system represents a true leap ahead in mine-detection technology," said Larry Nee, chief of the Countermine Division.

"Our goal is to significantly improve the speed and safety of mine clearance operations for U.S. soldiers. This contract takes us one step closer to making that happen," he added.

CyTerra now has to finalize the design, improve its durability — make it deployment-rugged — and lighten its weight to seven pounds, Nee said.

Final production cost targets are between $5,000 to $10,000 per unit. Current mine detectors run from $3,000 to $6,000 per unit. Sylvester and soldiers like him should have the revamped detector in-hand by fiscal year 2004. Soldiers will need 32 hours of training to use the equipment. CyTerra and the Army are working to slim line that training.

"The need for improved landmine detection is obvious," Fine said. "More than 25,000 people a year — about 500 a week with one-third of that number being children — are killed or maimed by antipersonnel landmines.

Once a mine is in the ground it remains dangerous until removed."

Landmines were responsible for 34 percent of all U.S. causalities in the Persian Gulf War. There are currently an estimated 60 to 70 million landmines in the ground in 70 countries around the world.

The 12 most affected countries are: Afghanistan, Angola, Bosnia-Herzegovina, Cambodia, Croatia, Eritrea, Iraq (Kurdistan), Mozambique, Namibia, Nicaraugua, Somalia and Sudan.

There are more than 350 different types of antipersonnel landmines, many of which cost as little as $3 to manufacture and as much as $1,000 to remove, officials said.

Korea ... the forgotten war

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Fifty years ago this week in Korea, "Operation Killer" continued under unseasonably warm temperatures, which brought intermittent rain during the first few days. Roads turned to quagmires and rivers rose, often filled with large chunks of ice.

Mud slowed the progress of Operation Killer and made it difficult for supplies to reach 9th and 10th Corps. Airdrops were used to bring in enough supplies to keep the situation from becoming critical.

• Feb. 22-28, 1951 — Although Operation Killer forces cannot catch withdrawing Red Chinese and North Koreans, they engage in sharp battles with Chinese rear guards.

Maj. Gen. Bryant E. Moore, 9th Corps commander, dies from a heart attack. It occurred after the helicopter he was in crashed into the Han River. Both he and the pilot escape, but the general dies about 30 minutes later.

Lt. Gen. Matthew Ridgway's choice to replace Moore is Maj. Gen. Joseph M. Swing, commandant of the Army War College. While his request is forwarded to U.N. Tokyo headquarters, Ridgway takes the unusual action of appointing the 1st Marine Division commander, Maj. Gen. Oliver P. Smith, to command of 9th Corps.

While uncommon, Marine generals commanded Army forces in both world wars.

Ridgway orders his staff and Army division commanders in the corps to cooperate with and to follow Smith's orders. By the end of February, the two corps regain a lot of lost ground.

They were on or close to the Arizona Line, code name for a line from which U.N. forces can launch attacks or defend against communist assaults. Units are on line at the far west and east ends, but somewhat below it in the middle. The 1st Marine Division is below the line and south of Hoengsong in the hills overlooking the town.

Operation Killer did not succeed in trapping and inflicting punishment on large communist forces, but both corps report they inflicted heavy damage on the enemy units they encountered. The 9th Corps claims it killed 7,819 enemy, wounded 1,469 and captured 208.

• Feb. 23 — The director of Defense Mobilization reports on radio and television that as a result of the war effort, there will be higher taxes and more price and wage controls. However, wage controls are being "modified again to conform with the best interest of the entire economy." More than 60 million people are employed and it is projected that 65 million will be employed by 1954. Industry is producing 35,000 tanks a year and 18,000 jet engines a month.

• Feb. 24 — Truman sends a message to the American Association for the United Nations in Chicago. It says the United States will accept "every approach to the honorable conciliation" of differences. The country is involved in Korea in the hopes it will "restrain aggressors from other imperialistic ventures."

• Feb. 26 — The Senate approves a Navy modernization program by voting to build a 57,000-ton supercarrier and 139 other vessels. It also authorizes 292 Navy ships to be overhauled.

The British government says it agrees with President Truman that U.N. forces may cross the 38th Parallel in conduct of operations, but not to carry out major offensives north of the line.

• Feb. 27 — The U.N. command in Tokyo announces that it has 11 front-line divisions in Korea, totaling 160,000 men. Seven of them are American divisions, along with the British 27th Commonwealth Brigade and South Korean units. Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told Congress the day before that there is a total of 250,000 American troops in Korea.

Refill pharmacy takes load off hospital

New options lessen wait time at post hospital

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

After 33 years in the Army, retired 1st Sgt. James Sparks and his wife, Dorothy, know the ins and outs of the rules — even with getting his prescriptions refilled.

However, come March 1, the rules are changing for him and the 78,000 beneficiaries of Martin Army Community Hospital.

Pharmacy customers will have to use the phone-in system exclusively for prescriptions at the Main Mall Post Exchange pharmacy.

Previously people were allowed to walk up and request immediate medicine refills.

"This will eliminate much of the wait time and lines that exist," said Lt. Col. Edward Schowalter, the chief of the Pharmacy Services. "This will also allow us to use the pharmacy personnel more efficiently, which is crucial in a time of severe staff shortages. The pharmacy will have most prescriptions filled before the work day begins."

Terry Beckwith, chief of marketing services, won't need to change her routine. She's been using the phone-in system and picking up her prescriptions when she visits the mall.

"It's a convenience," Beckwith said. "It's one-stop shopping that way."

Beckwith has seen firsthand how long customers have to wait in the hospital pharmacy line — up to 100 people waiting more than an hour. The problem affects more than those customers wanting their prescriptions refilled.

Patients just released from the hospital needing their medications before returning home are waiting for the same amount of time, explained Beckwith.

"I see this huge line every time I pass by," said Staff Sgt. Timothy Chapman, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, Pathology. "Not having to wait in line really is the only change."

The phone-in system was developed several years ago and has been an integral component of the MACH Pharmacy. With few complaints about the system in the past, Schowalter anticipates a smooth transition for the new policy.

Patients not having a touch-tone phone or who cannot successfully complete the phone-in procedure can call 544-3319. A pharmacy representative can help those people figure out where their problems exist.

If patients don't want to use the phone-in system, they can mail in their request using a mail-in form. Refill requests will be ready five working days from date of postmark and will be held for 14 working days from the postmark. These forms are available through the hospital and at the refill pharmacy.

A mail-order program is also an option for patients. For up to a 90-day supply of non controlled medications and a 30-day supply of controlled medicine, the National Mail Order Pharmacy program can eliminate a trip in the car. There are small copayments for this service.

Event provides marriage tips

Lasting love begins with communication

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Forbidden fruit? Old story. Newlyweds can learn a few things from Adam and Eve.

"When you hear you can do anything but one thing — sooner or later you find yourself in front of that one thing."

That was the message that 12 couples from the 29th Infantry Regiment heard on Valentine's Day from Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New, deputy post chaplain.

The couples were gathered for an evening of dinner and conversation at the Columbus Holiday Inn, an event sponsored by the office of the regimental chaplain.

New was the guest speaker, and he had some experience with the topic of getting along as a couple; the chaplain met his wife in the ninth grade, and married her eight years later.

The soldiers listening to him had slightly less experience with marriage; when New asked how many had been married for more than five years, one hand wavered tentatively in the air.

And how would all those new couples learn to live with one another? Good question.

"You get an instruction book when you get a refrigerator," New said.

But New, perhaps unsurprisingly for a chaplain, did have an instruction book he recommended for marriage, and he discussed it at length.

For Adam and Eve, for example, "there was no responsibility," at first; they had a free ride.

But then Eve found herself in front of the one forbidden thing.

"The fascinating thing," New said, "is that she ate the fruit, and what did she do? She turned to Adam and she said, hey, this is terrific stuff."

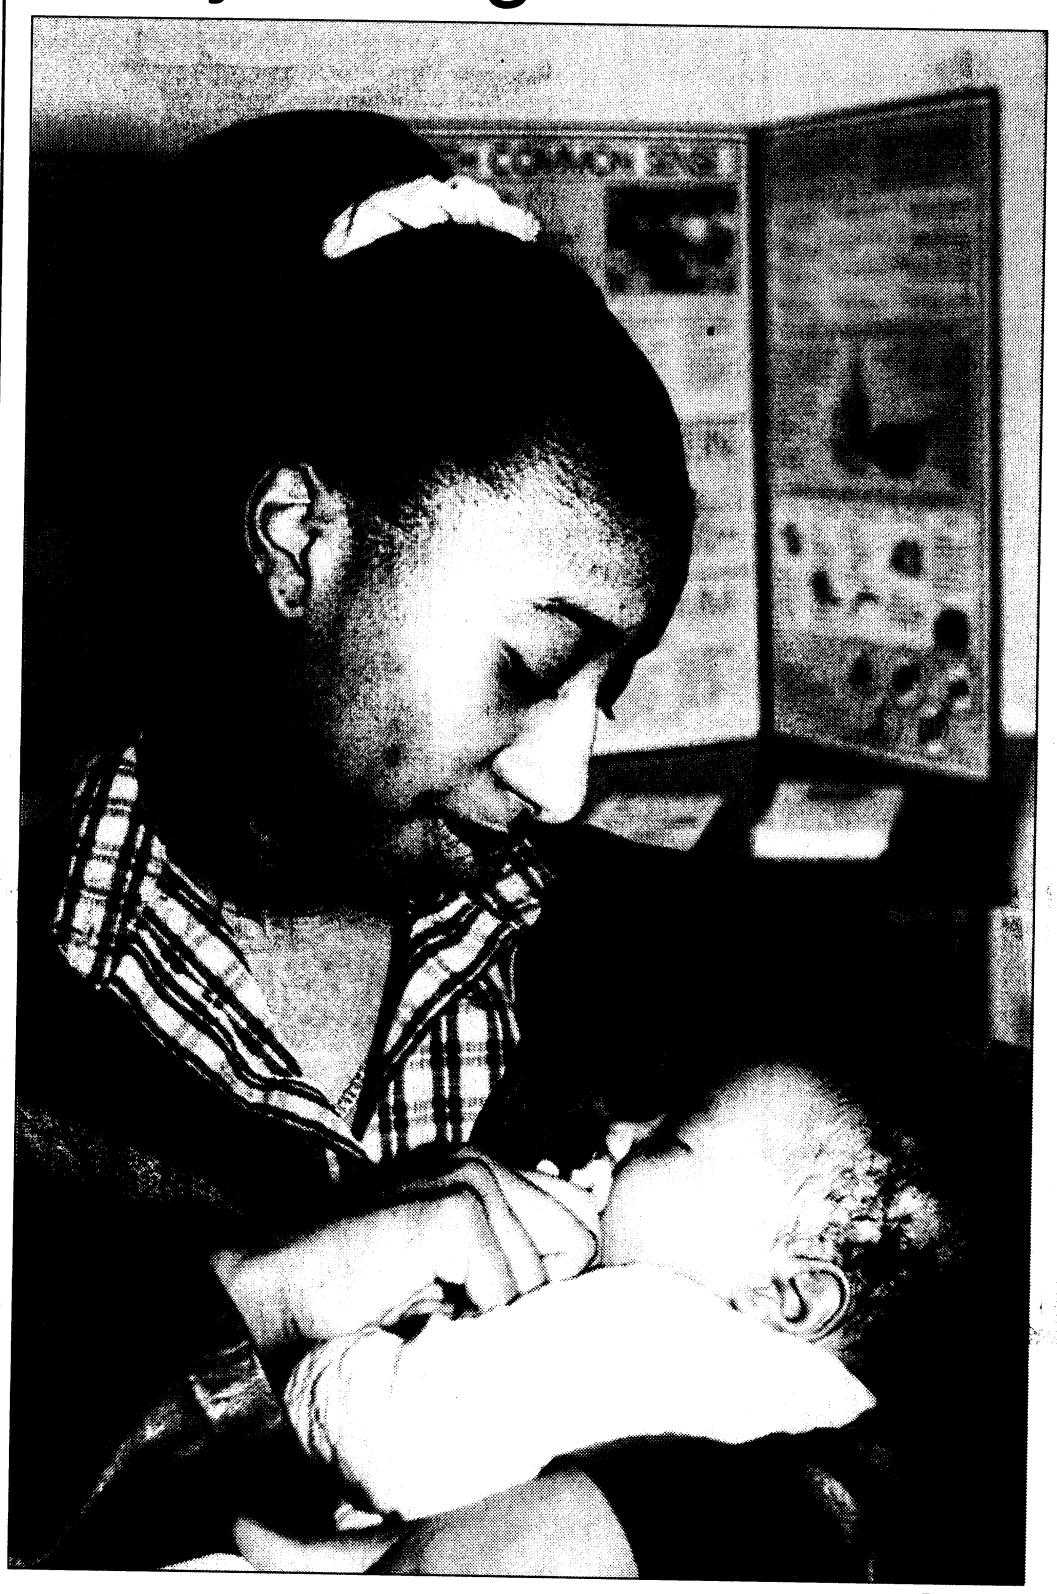
And so Adam convinced himself that nothing was unacceptable.

"We buy the lie," New explained.

But that, the chaplain added, is only the first part of the problem. Once the first husband and wife broke the single rule they'd been given, they immediately realized that they were naked; they reached for the fig leaves, and they hid.

"The first thing, when we deal with our vulnerability, we cover up," New said. "The more we begin to do that, the more we begin to separate ourselves."

The chaplain offered a checklist as an alternative to the model of cheating and covering up, though: First Corinthians, Chapter 13, verses 4-8.



Those verses offer a definition of genuine love: patient, kind, never jealous; not boastful, haughty, selfish, or rude; not inclined to demand its own way, be irritable, or hold a grudge.

"If you ever get in a bad argument," New said, "then pull that chapter out."

New's discussion wasn't the only part of the evening, and

But it's not a classmate or another teen LaDawna adores. It's her 4-month-old son, TaQuarus.

"He's my first responsibility," LaDawna said. "My baby and my grades — that's what's important now."

But that wasn't always the case. A year ago LaDawna enjoyed the same things her classmates enjoy — parties, ballgames and movies with her boyfriend. That all changed when she found out she was pregnant last spring.

"This is my life now. I stay home and take care of my baby," she said. "I do things with my family. I study. I go to my brother's ball games. All that other stuff just stopped."

LaDawna will graduate with her Spencer classmates in May, though she's currently taking classes at the Teenage

True Love Waits challenges teens to practice purity

Bridgett Siter

Chaplain (Maj.) Jim Paulson, presents his 14-year-old daughter, Denae, a promise ring during the Feb. 11 ceremony at The Infantry Center Chapel.

Teen-agers vow to adopt policy of abstinence

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Sex is often a matter of life or death for the 900,000 teens who will become pregnant and more than three million who will contract some form of sexually transmitted disease this year.

The statistics are alarming, but they're not enough to sway 50 percent of the teen population who will engage in sex before the age of 18. It's a kinder, gentler message they want to hear, according to LifeWay Christian Resources, which sponsors True Love Waits, an international campaign to challenge teens to adopt a personal policy of abstinence until marriage.

Based on the Biblical principle that premarital sex is a sin, True Love Waits teaches the dangers of having sex before marriage, including the risk of death, lost relationships, incurable disease, depression, shame, sexual dysfunction and disobedience to God.

Since 1993, churches, youth groups and student organizations have been spreading the message through rallies and seminars, such as the one sponsored last week by Club Beyond, Fort Benning's youth group.

"Since its inception, more than three million teen-agers have pledged publicly to remain sexually pure until marriage," said Bruce Mulford, Fort Benning's director of youth ministries. "It's working. That's why Club Beyond decided to participate. This is a positive way to encourage and uplift teens who are constantly bombarded with negative messages about sex."

Five parents and 25 students attended "Sex, Culture & Me" Feb. 11. The two-hour seminar dealt with the ramifications of premarital sex and reinforced Biblical ideals about the sanctity of sex within marriage. Afterward the students and their parents participated in a "promise ring" service at The Infantry Center Chapel. During the candle-lit ceremony the participants exchanged "vows" — the students pledged to abstain from pre-marital sex and their parents promised to support and encourage their decision. Then the parents presented their children with a token of this commitment — a ring, a bracelet or a necklace.

"When a student stands with their parent and verbally commits to staying pure until marriage, it's a very moving experience, and one they'll never forget," Mulford said.

Mulford said he adapted the True Love Waits message, involving parents in the seminar, in hopes of having a long-lasting impact on the teens.

"On TV, 85 percent of all prime time shows in the fall of 2000 mentioned or portrayed sexual situations. It's almost impossible to find a movie where purity is the best choice, and music sells sex. Sexuality seems to be on the other side of every door in a teen-ager's life, but parents rarely talk about it with their

Beauty only skin deep when buying home

American Homeowners Association

Buying your first home is the experience of a lifetime. Just remember that beauty is only skin deep.

A home's least glamorous features such as the structure, furnace or electrical systems, are often the most expensive to fix.

"Anxiety over the contract, plus the anticipation of moving in can sometimes keep a homebuyer from paying attention to very important details," said Richard Roll, president of American Homeowners Association. "What exactly is the home's true condition? You need a professional home inspector to find out, before you go to closing."

Every home inspection should cover all the major systems, including plumbing, drainage, heating, and cooling; the structural condition, including the roof; and the electrical system.

One of the most chronic conditions is a roofing problem, due to aging, wear, or improper installation. The good news is roof problems are frequently cured with a repair job, not replacement.

Water or moisture problems also occur frequently in basements or crawlspaces due to ground water conditions or faulty drainage. Don't take this problem lightly.

The solution can be as straightforward as regrading the exterior grounds or fixing the gutters, but water damage, if not corrected, can be extensive.

Structural damage from rotted wood at building exteriors and around plumbing fixtures can happen in areas where wood remains wet for long periods, e.g., roof eaves, exterior trim, decks, around tubs and showers, or below loose toilets.

Again, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Look out for major damage from the fungus infection commonly known as dry rot, especially if the former owner let the problem fester for years.

Electrical safety hazards frequently pop up in home inspections due to ungrounded outlets, lack of ground fault interrupters (shock protection devices), and faulty wiring conditions in electrical panels or elsewhere in a building.

Be sure to check for unsafe fireplace and chimney conditions, faulty installation of water heaters, and hazardous conditions involving gas heaters or furnaces. All create serious health and safety problems.

Finally, when you receive the inspection report, make sure you actually read it. If you don't understand something, get your inspector to explain it.

ask the judge

Capt. Aimee Hobby
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I have been volunteering all year at my church. Is it possible to use this volunteer work as a tax deduction?

A: Many soldiers and their family members donate their time and services in support of bona fide charitable organizations such as churches, Boy Scouts and others.

Although admirable, they may not take a charitable deduction for the value of their time or services.

The tax court has upheld regulations disallowing a charitable contribution deduction for the value of contributed services.

In one case, the taxpayer performed uncompensated legal services for organizations eligible to receive deductible charitable contributions. The taxpayer did not include the value of these services as income.

On his income tax returns, he deducted amounts representing the value of the time he spent performing the services.

When he prepared his returns, he was aware that Treasury Regulation 1.170A-1(g) prohibited a charitable contribution deduction for a contribution of services, but he disregarded the regulation.

The tax court held that the taxpayer was not entitled to deduct the value of his contributed services to the charitable organizations under IRC 170.

The court also determined that regulation 1.170A-1(g), which disallows the deduction of the value of contributed services, is valid.

Additionally, the court held that the taxpayer had no reasonable basis in claiming a charitable contribution deduction for the value of his contributed service and was, therefore, liable for an addition to tax for intentional disregard of the regulations.

While it is well established that a taxpayer may not deduct the value of his time or services contributed to charity, he may deduct the fair market value of any gift to charity and the amount of any reasonable expenses incurred in performing charitable services.

For example, if the taxpayer incurs transportation expenses in service of a charitable organization, those expenses are deductible.

Taxpayers may deduct the actual cost of the transportation, or a flat mileage rate of $.14 per mile driven.

Deductible expenses include parking fees, tolls and mileage to and from the location of the charitable service.

As with any deduction, however, the taxpayer must keep adequate records of those expenses to deduct them at the end of the year.

While expenses incurred by those donating their services to charity are generally deductible, they are only deductible as itemized deductions on Schedule A of Form 1040.

The deduction is subject to the three percent reduction of total itemized deductions if the taxpayer's adjusted gross income exceeds $126,600 ($63,300 if married filing separately).

For more details or to get answers to tax questions , call the Fort Benning Tax Center at 545-4267.

The tax center is in Building 2826, next to Bernheim Dental Clinic.

Parking is available at the Main Post Bowling Center.

The center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday though Friday.

Soldiers make difference

Stephanie La Rue
Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus

Faith Middle School is offering the Fort Benning community an opportunity to make a difference in the lives of its students through a school-based mentoring program.

The program allows volunteers to meet with children one day a week, for one hour during the school day to play games, eat lunch, and assist in schoolwork. The program is coordinated by Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus with the support of Faith's teachers and staff.

Command Sgt. Maj. Kenneth Graham, garrison sergeant major, has been a supporter of the program for two years. Graham is a mentor to Joel Simpson, a seventh-grader at the middle school.

Simpson said he's glad he has someone to turn to for help and advice.

"It's nice. Sergeant Major Graham helps me with social studies and he shows me how to study. He also comes to my football games," Simpson said.

On Wednesdays, the two can be found in the library playing checkers, or talking about school, family, and football.

"We talk about goals and computers — we discuss several different topics — there are no parameters. I let Joel discuss whatever he wants," said Graham.

Graham and Simpson each other's company so much that they also get together outside of school to participate in various activities.

Graham said he believes it's important to give back to society, and he encourages Simpson to get into the spirit of giving as well.

When asked what he would say to those thinking about volunteering, Graham replied, "Take that first step. Stop thinking about it and go ahead and do it. You'll really enjoy it."

Anyone interested in volunteering with the Faith Middle School Mentoring Program is encouraged to call Anthony Lane with Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus at 327-3760.

Students learn history of Andersonville

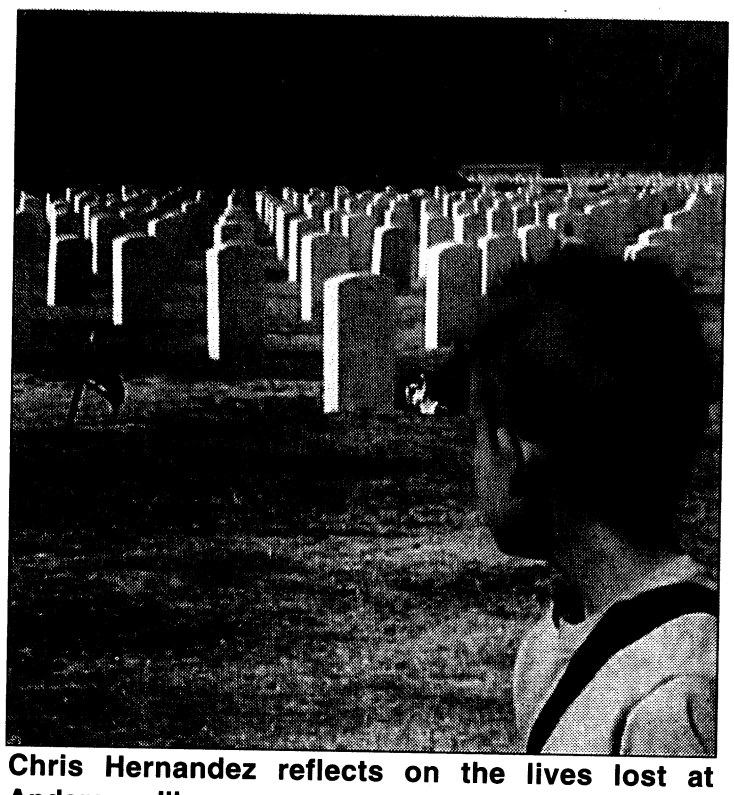
Dexter Elementary School

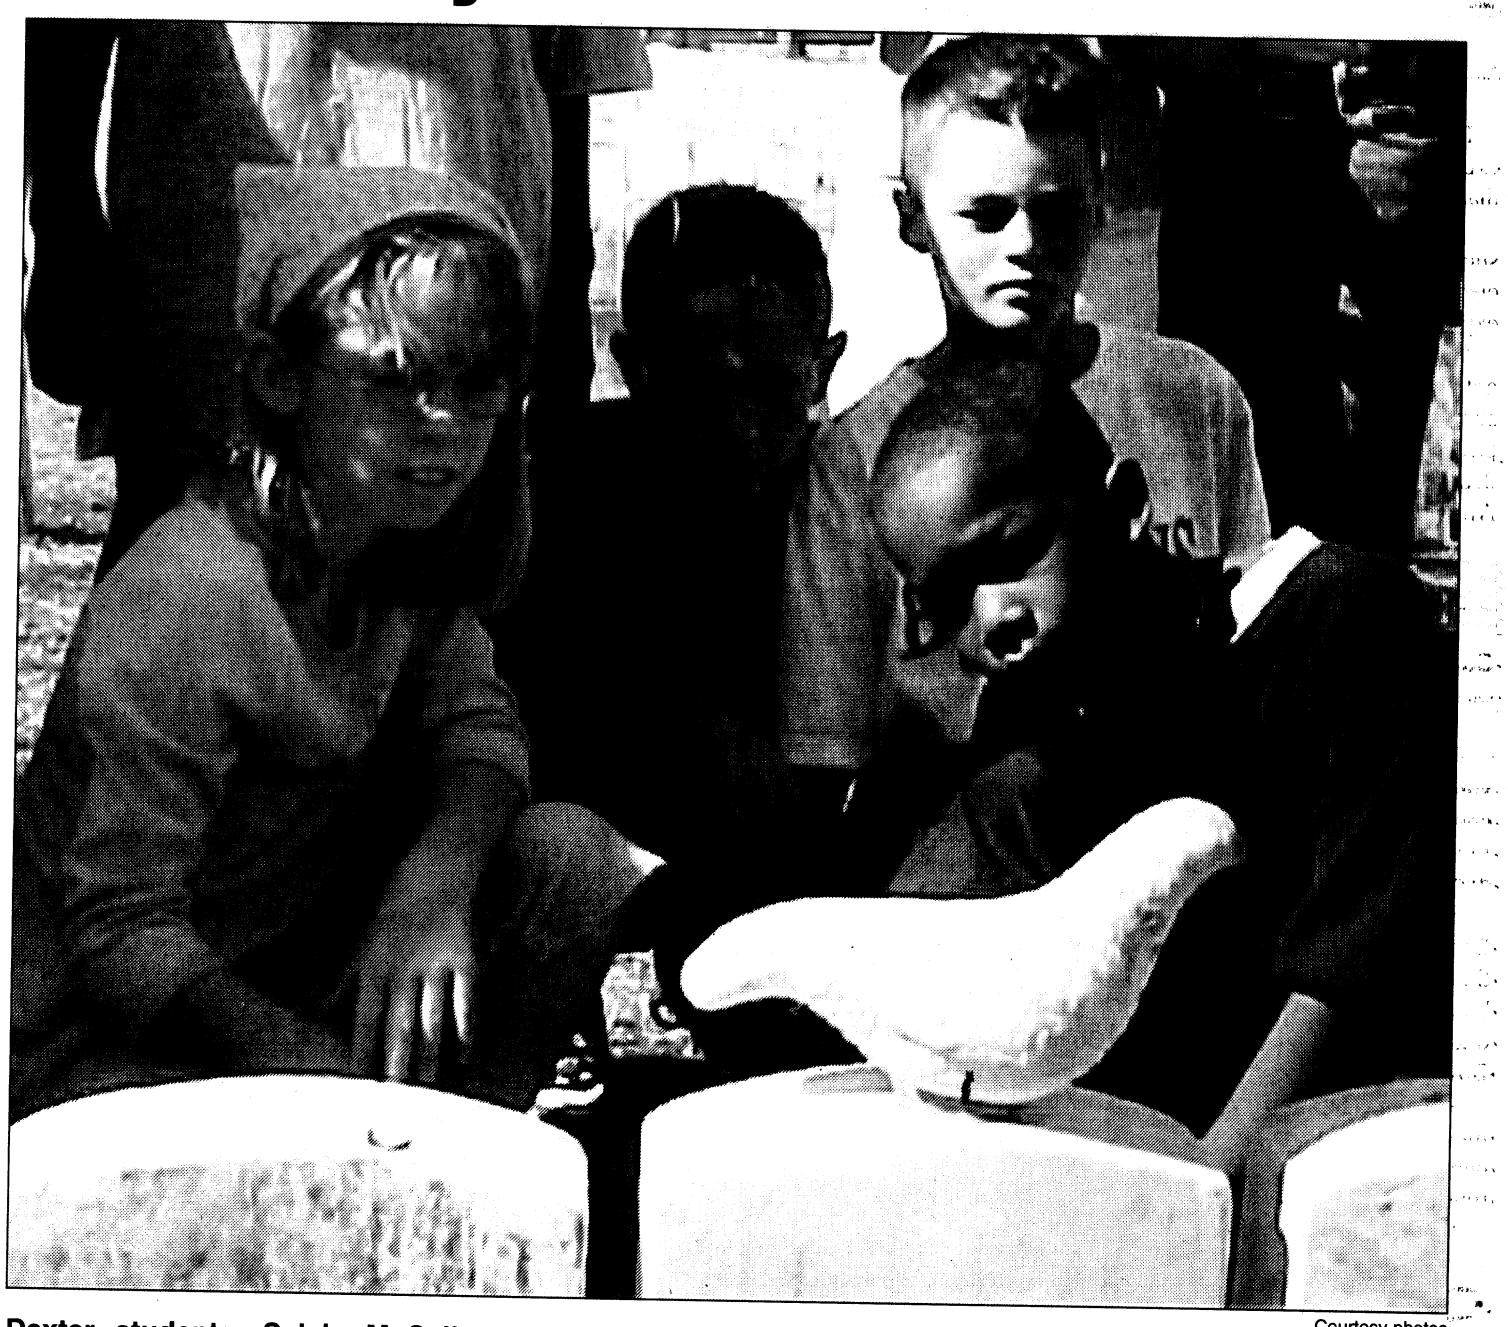
Social studies came alive for Dexter's fifth-grades when they explored Andersonville, a national park centered around the Civil War prison site.

Guide Peggy Shepherd showed students the wells prisoners dug during a critical shortage of water in the camp.



She also pointed out the "dead line," which was named this because prisoners who crossed this line were immediately shot.

All of the students were fascinated by the story of one Union soldier's grave.



A cement dove mysteriously appeared on a soldier named Sgt. Tuttle's headstone. No one with the park service knows how it got there.

The students also visited the Prisoner of War museum at the park. They heard first-hand accounts from prisoners of war from all of our country's conflicts.

A historic fair is scheduled for May 26-27 in Andersonville. Many of Dexter's fifth graders said they plan to attend with their families.

Chris Hernandez reflects on the lives lost at Andersonville.

Trips offer fun, learning

Dexter Elementary School

Field trips are fun, but they are also an integral part of the educational process at Dexter.

They are used to advance and expand upon things that students have been studying in the classroom.

Fourth-graders recently went to the Three Arts Theater in Columbus to see the play Harriet Tubman and the Underground Railroad.

The trip was incorporated into their monthlong study of Black History.

Students said they enjoyed the story.

"I learned that Harriet Tubman felt the moss on the trees to find her way north when there were no stars to follow," said Dante Fiumano.

Devon Humphreys said he thought the actors did a great job.

"I thought the actors did a good job playing different characters. I also learned about Pennsylvania being a free state," he said.

"I thought it was funny when the actors ran through the aisles. They had very good singing voices," said Carrie Hankling.

Third-, fourth- and fifth-graders in the enrichment program are also taking a field trip. They're going to Massachusetts without even leaving the building.

They're involved in a Web search using the Internet.

"Black History in Boston: A Virtual Field Trip" allows the students to read about and research the history of the Underground Railroad in Massachusetts.

They are finding out about the lives and influence of such Americans as Harriet Tubman, Frederick Douglas and Crispus Attucks.

Go to the Enrichment Web page on Dexter's Web site benning-w1.odedodea.edu/dexter to find out more about these fascinating subjects.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

As the weather warms, residents will notice their lawns greening up. The majority of this greening will be weeds. This is just the beginning of a weed infestation.

There are two ways to deal with weeds. One choice is to tolerate them and the other is to apply herbicides.

There are two optimal times of the year to apply pre-emergent herbicides — in the spring and in the fall. A weed's life cycle is very quick. It takes only a short time for weeds to grow, flower and set seed, and then die.

But residents can bet they will be back. Weeds can sow seeds for next year right now, so this is the time to apply the weed killer.

First, it's important to identify the weed you're trying to kill.

This can be done by taking a sample of the weed to the Extension Office in Columbus.

Knowing the type of weed will help determine the weed killer needed.

There are two choices in herbicides: selective and nonselective. A selective herbicide will kill only specific types of plants. A nonselective will kill plants regardless of species.

When purchasing a weed killer make sure to read the label carefully. Apply the chemical as directed on the package.

Chemicals should not be over applied. These chemicals leak from the soil into our water supply. Apply all chemical lawn-care products properly.

Residents need to remember that when applying a weed killer, they are applying a deadly chemical and should use them with caution.

If a favorite plant is sprayed with a non-selective herbicide, it will kill the plant on contact.

Use extreme caution around family members and pets as well.

Always use caution when applying chemicals to your lawn or garden.

Mom: Makes baby's needs priority

Parenting Center at Waverly Hall Terrace in Columbus, where her son is enrolled in an on-site child care center.

Each morning a school bus picks up LaDawna and TaQuarus from their Custer Terrace home. LaDawna takes parenting courses along with her regular academic schedule and TaQuarus receives his well-baby check-ups from a registered nurse at the school.

"It's a wonderful program," LaDawna said. "But I'd like to be back at a regular school. It's difficult being a mom and a student."

LaDawna is the daughter of Staff Sgt. Michael and Cheryl Eberhart. Though her dad's career has meant extended separations, she's always enjoyed a very close relationship with her mother.

"Dad was always gone, so we had to be close. We could always talk about anything," LaDawna said. "Well, almost anything. I didn't talk to her about sex. I didn't want to disappoint her. She didn't see me as the type."

Mother and daughter both regret not confronting the issue of LaDawna's sexuality when she began dating.

"I tell my friends to keep the communication open," Cheryl said. "A daughter needs a close relationship with her father as much as her mother, or she'll go looking for attention from another man. I knew that, but I didn't want to believe it. I didn't want to see it.

"Now I say go with your gut instinct. Don't believe everything you hear. If you suspect there's a chance your child is having sex, talk to her."

And LaDawna believes such a conversation would have helped her make a wiser choice.

"If I had talked to her, she would've given me a better understanding about the consequences," LaDawna said. "I don't think I would have jumped into it so fast."

Despite the struggles of being a teen mom, LaDawna is determined to make the most out of her education with her parents' support.

"A lot of people want me to be a statistic. I'm not," she said. "My parents will help me as long as I'm in school, and I'm going to get my education, no matter how hard it gets, so I can make a good life for me and my child.

"This is my life now. I just have to keep it together."

Ring: Symbolizes abstinence promise

children," he said.

"Having a seminar not only provides them with the opportunity to discuss the issues they're concerned about, but it also challenges them to communicate more often and more honestly."

Communication is the key, said Shirley Koop, who attended the seminar with her 15-year-old daughter, Stephanie.

"We started introducing the topic early, with books and videos that were age-appropriate," Shirley said. "We wanted her to feel comfortable, not embarrassed, to discuss sex and her body using the proper terminology."

Stephanie said movies and music would have teens believe "everybody's doing it," but she knows many teens, like herself, who have taken a pledge to abstain.

"Not everybody's doing it. I took the pledge in middle school. Hundreds of other kids signed pledge cards saying they would stay pure. Most of my friends are waiting. That gives us a common ground, a bond, and it makes it easier to say no to pressure."

Stephanie's parents, Shirley and Chaplain (Maj.) Ray Koop, presented her with a promise ring before her 13th birthday.

"My ring symbolizes my promise to God, my family, my self and my future husband to stay sexually pure until I marry," she said. "It's a gift, and giving it away before I marry makes it less valuable."

But Shirley said promises and preparation can't completely prevent peer pressure and "raging hormones."

"As parents, we're taking preventive measures by talking to her and giving her the guidelines she'll need to make the right choices," she said. "It's a matter of forewarned is forearmed. I want Stephanie to make a choice before she's confronted with a tough situation. I want her to set limits and know her own values."

As for Stephanie, she's certain she can withstand sexual pressure because her parents have helped her develop strong core beliefs.

"They trust me, and that empowers me. I can stand up for what I believe in," she said. "If you really love someone, it's worth the wait."

Event: Fine tunes marriage skills

soldiers and their spouses later played a version of the Newlywed Game.

That game was led by Staff Sgt. Jimmie Gordon III, C Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

Sample question: Who is your wife's closest female friend?

Remarkably few husbands got that one right, but Gordon was consoling.

"You weren't going to win anyway," he teased one couple. "You were too far behind."

The evening was paid for with church offerings from post soldiers, and was intended for lower enlisted troops and their spouses who were most likely to benefit from a free evening out, said Chaplain (Capt.) Mickey Jett, 29th Inf. Regt.

The participants said they enjoyed the evening. Spc. Antonio Merriweather, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., attended with his wife of two years, Nickoa.

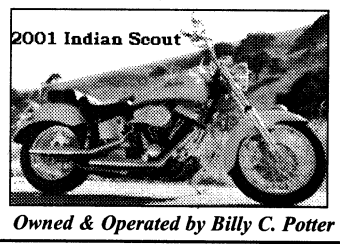
The couple was looking for "something cool to do for Valentine's," the Bradley mechanic said.

While it was a lighthearted event, New said the evening had a serious purpose.

"I think the more that you're able to share positive models, people will look at that," he said. " Marriage can be confusing."

Jett said the evening was a success.

"Overall," he said, "I thought everybody enjoyed themselves."



The Merriweathers agreed — and said that they very much expect to be married for life.

"She won't leave," Merriweather joked.

Ash Wednesday time to reflect on sorrow

Chaplain (Capt.) Deirdre Stokelin
203rd Forward Support Battalion

reflections

It is amazing how life comes full circle. I attended Catholic school all the way through college, though I have always been Baptist. In elementary school, every year on Ash Wednesday, I was excited about receiving the ashes on my forehead.

However, it was not until this article that I gave any thought as to why the event took place.

I remember going into the dimly lit chapel and smelling the incense burning. The sun would stream through the stained-glass windows making the saints come to life.

Then I would kneel before the altar and the priest would make the sign of the cross on my forehead. After school all the public school children would question why I had "dirt" on my face. I am sure I must have known some answer that sounded holy and above their comprehension. All I really remember is that it made me feel unique and important.

Now some 30-plus years later I realize it was humility, sorrow and grief that I should have felt. Ignorance is bliss, or so they say. I wonder, would I have felt such pride in wearing them if I had known they represented my filthy, "dirty," sinful soul?

The history of Ash Wednesday began with Gregory the Great (590 to 604). He established Ash Wednesday as the first day of the 40-day Lenten season. Pope Paul VI declared this observance in the church calendar a day of universal fasting and abstinence.

The name Ash Wednesday comes from the solemn ceremony wherein ashes of palms and other appropriate substances are blessed and placed upon the forehead. Throughout the Bible the act of placing ashes on the forehead is symbolic of worthlessness (Job 30:19), sorrow (Job 2:8), affliction (Psalm 102:10), grief, repentance and the call to penance (Matthew 11:21).

Developing an attitude of humility and self-evaluation should be an everyday occurrence for all people at all times.

In the early church, Christians performed public penance for sins by putting on sackcloth and ashes. But in today's society, publicly exhibiting repentance, sorrow and grief are almost taboo. With a lack of accountability comes the breakdown in morality and mutual respect.

If we were to take a closer look at ourselves we would have less time to be judgmental and critical of others. Humanity has a mandate by God's law to love another, but this is impossible if we are not accountable for what we say and do to God and each other.

In today's society, where success determines a person's worth and anything goes, we often gloss over our infractions to God's law as trivial or unimportant.

Repentance and confession are often equated with Catholic tradition or the more charismatic faiths.

The need to examine one's self and repent are clouded by the fight for survival and the fast pace of daily living.

Rush hour traffic, crowds in the mall, a fretful baby, a nagging spouse — these and many other things cause tempers to flare and tongues to wag. Apologies are rare and little thought is given to how others are effected by injury or insult.

There are few, if any, visible signs of sorrow or repentance today. Ashes on a forehead are glanced at and ignored. A person on the street corner dressed in sackcloth would be equated to a street person and given a wide berth as we scurry to our destinations.

If we would only stop for a while each day and place spiritual ashes of repentance and grief on the surface of our hearts, what a difference it would make in the way we present ourselves to others.

If we approach others in humility, clothing our minds in sackcloth, recognizing that daily we all fall short of God's glory, I believe we would be a more loving and tolerant society.

Putting on sackcloth and ashes is a pretty economical way to clothe a proud spirit.

When exactly does life begin?

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Life is a mystery. The beginning of the human soul is even more mysterious.

How a person answers the question of the beginning of human life will influence their views on cloning, use of contraceptives and on abortion.

Some believe human life begins at birth. Scripture tells us God formed man and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul (Genesis 2:7). Some believe human life begins at quickening, about the fifth month of gestation, when the mother feels the fetus move in her uterus. The Gospel records how during her sixth month of pregnancy, Elizabeth's baby leapt for joy in her womb when Mary, who was pregnant with the Christ child, came to visit her (Luke 1:14-28, 38-44).

Others believe human life begins at conception. This is based on the new DNA formed at conception, the passage in Luke above and other Scripture. According to Psalm 139:13, God forms and weaves us in the womb.

In addition the Lord spoke to the prophet Jeremiah saying, "Before I formed you in the womb I knew you, and before you were born I consecrated you; I have appointed you a prophet to the nations" (Jeremiah 1:5).

The birth of identical twins and conjoined twins infers that the soul forms after conception, for identical twins and conjoined twins do not possess the same soul. The development of stem cells and other cells into new life through cloning, would suggest that through cloning, most human cells have the potential of developing into a new soul.

Are you pondering the issues of life? Are you considering an abortion? Are you wrestling with the aftermath of having an abortion? Free counseling and support are available.

Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 545-1760 or send an e-mail to USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Teams face off in racquetball

10 doubles compete in tournament

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

More than 10 teams participated in a doubles racquetball tournament Saturday in the Briant Wells Field House.

The teams battled it out, and one-by-one, teams fell victim to the swatting power of Joshua Mitchell and J.M. Christian.

Both experienced teams and new teams played against each other.

One such matchup was that of Christopher Swisher and Jerald Russell facing off against Carmen Foster and Osvaldo Corela.

Although avid racquetball players, this was the first time Foster and Corela competed together.

"We had them going for a while," Corela said after he and Foster fell to Swisher and Russell. "Sometimes you just fall short."

Although they lost, Foster said she was pleased with how they played against the defending champions.

"I'm happy about how we played," Foster said. "We just got beat," she joked.

While Corela and Foster were new to competing together, Swisher was a seasoned veteran of racquetball tournaments.

"I've played in tournaments for 25 years," Swisher said. "This just gave me another opportunity to play."

Swisher said he has the opportunity to play against most of the competitors on a weekly basis.

The tournament was a good competition and a chance to go out and gave fun, he said. "We play with these people all the time, so this is another opportunity to play."

More than the tournament, Foster said the group just enjoys the game.

"Outside of tournaments we play all the time," Foster said. "We're just a group that plays together, then try to beat each other in the tournaments. We just enjoy racquetball."

"We're very good friends outside the tournaments, but once you start playing it's very competitive," Corela joked.

Briant Wells Field House has two courts — a challenge court and a reserve court for people who schedule a particular time to play.

Briant Wells also has rackets, balls and eye protection for people to use.

For more information on how to reserve a court or how to play racquetball, call the field house at 545-4388

Aces give 'heartbreak', edge Headhunters by 1

Player-coach's foul shot is game winner

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The Aces slipped past the Headhunters Monday night at Briant Wells Field House 64-63.

Both teams are from 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The Aces are from A Company and the Headhunters are from Headquarters and Headquarters Company.

With intense motivation to claim bragging rights within the battalion, the teams battled back and forth the entire game.

Down 63-60 with 23 seconds left, the Aces' Willie Danzey went downtown to tie the score. After a crucial Headhunters turn over, Ace Coach David Best was fouled in the paint with 14 seconds on the clock. He missed the first free throw but made the second.

"I went to the line knowing I had to hit one of two," Best said.

The Headhunters charged up the court needing a bucket to win, but Decarlo Tyson missed a 15-footer with 6 seconds left. His team desperately fought for the rebound but could not get another shot before time expired.

"It was heart-breaking most of the game," Best said. "Fortunately, Danzey stepped up and knocked down the three to give us a chance."

The 2-2 Headhunters led at the half 32-31 behind eight points from Aundry Anderson and seven points from Tyson. Best led the way for the 1-1 Aces, scoring 10 of his game high 15 points.

The Aces distributed the ball more evenly in the second half as the Headhunters relied on James Williams' nine of his team high 14 points and Jeremiah Jones' and Terry Larkin's seven.

Neither team could take a big lead and keep it. For instance, the Headhunters led 48-43, but the Aces sank three quick shots to lead 49-48. The team's exchanged baskets the rest of the game.

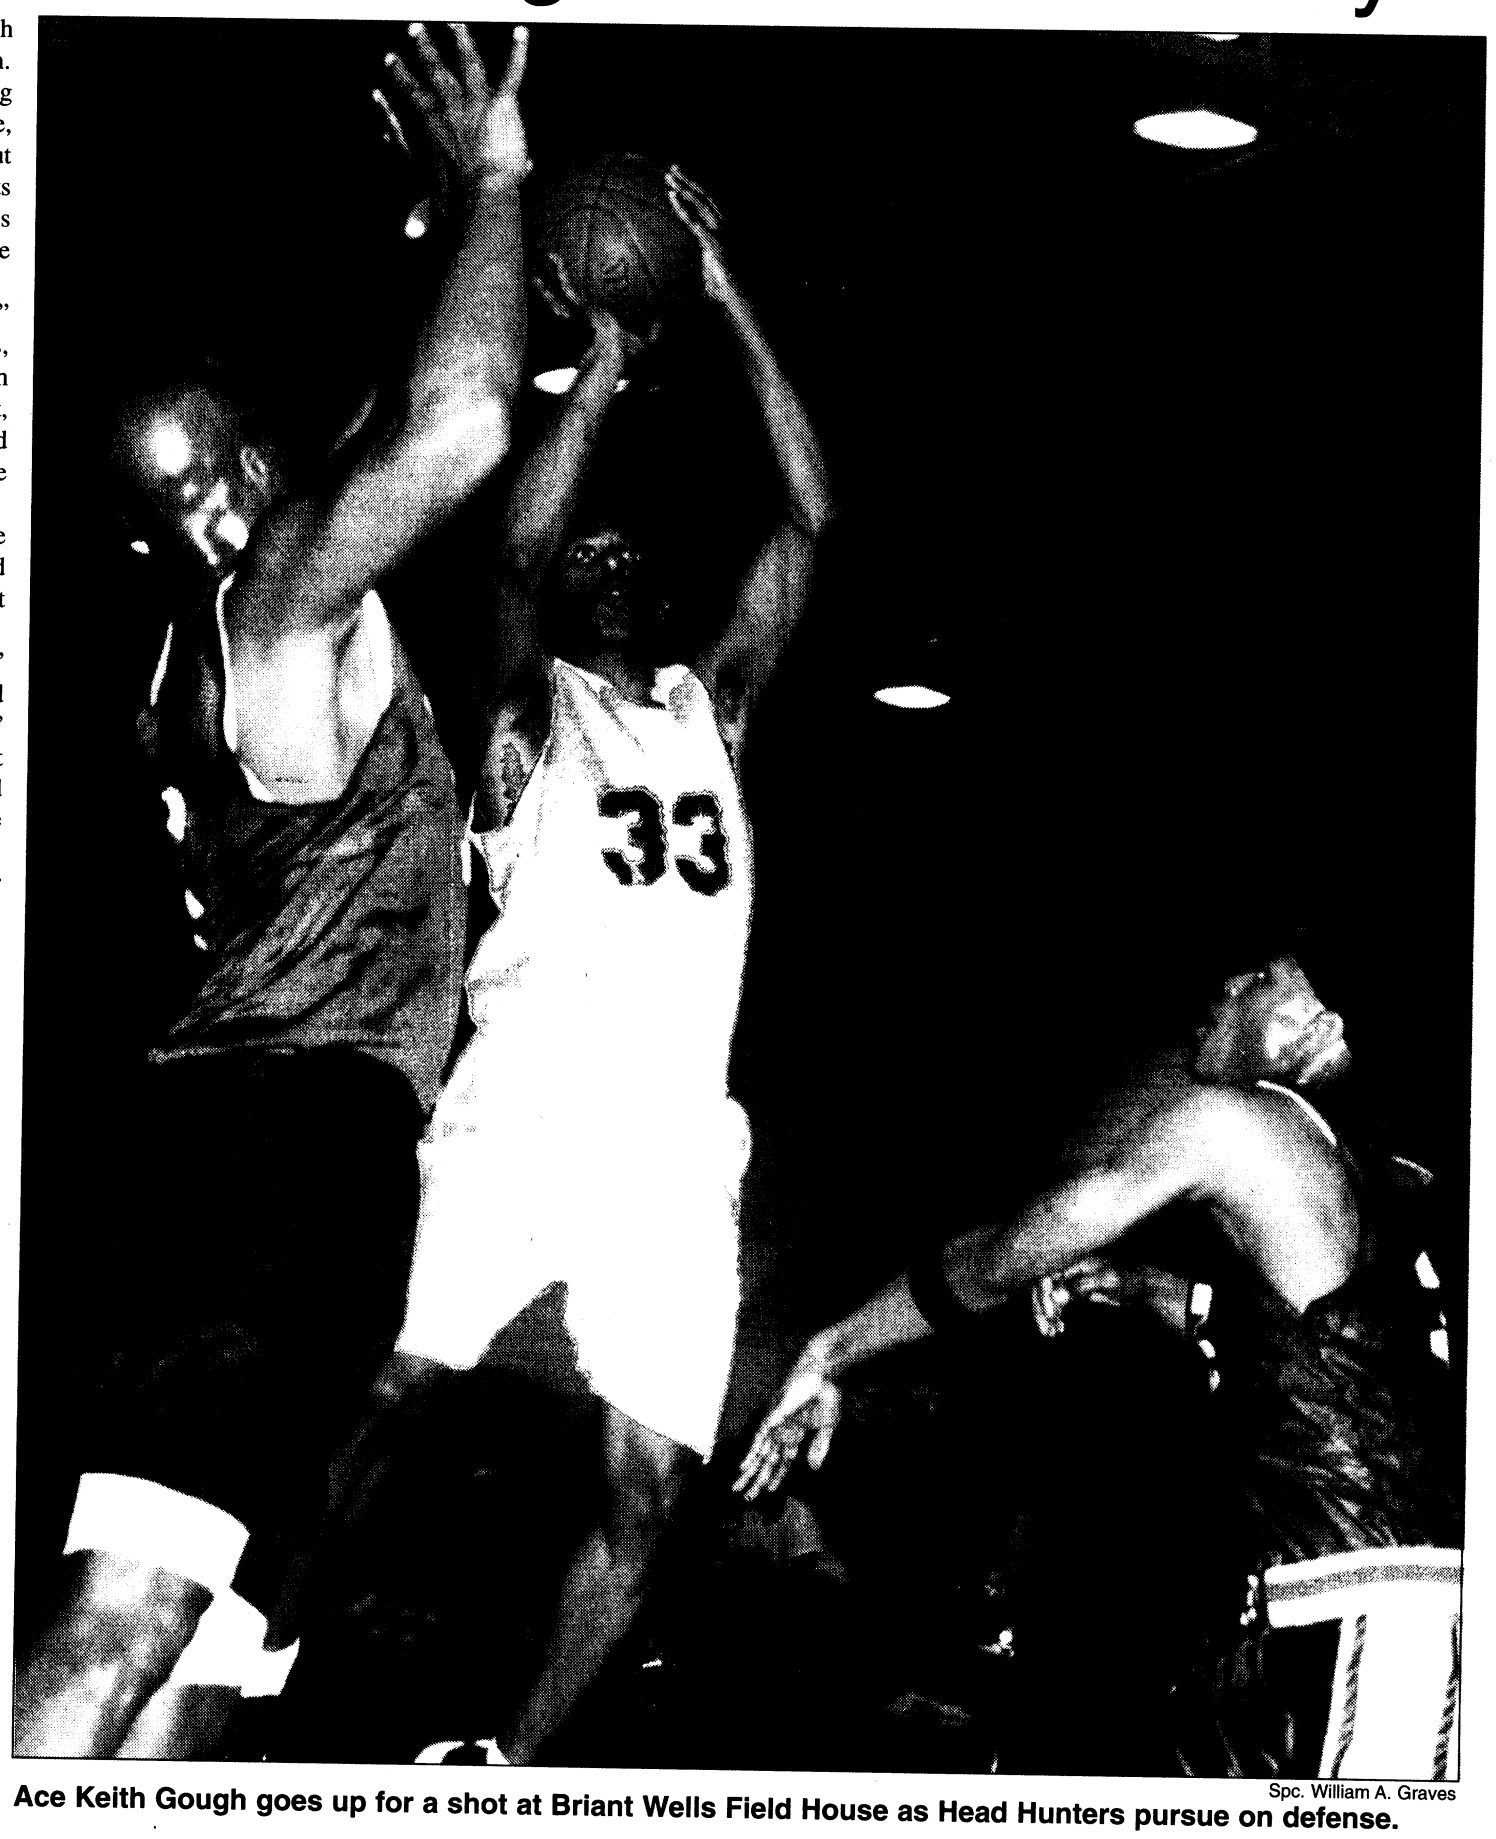
"The first half was sloppy," said Darrin Simmons, Headhunters coach. "Both teams threw the ball away a lot, but they settled down and moved the ball around better in the second half."

Simmons said the game made the team want to practice and become more proficient at hitting free throws.

"That's what lost it for us," the coach said. "We missed some big ones down the stretch."

However, the game brought the team closer and strengthened trust, he said. As a result, the team will have a better season.

The game's real challenge for the Aces was negating the Headhunters' deadly shots behind the arch, Best said.



He said his team won because it met its goal of minimizing the Aces' pounding of the boards for offensive rebounds and subsequent easy shots. Tenacious defense was another key to victory.

The coach said the game invigorated his team. The soldiers will feed off it and be more successful as the season progresses.

"The game was great for morale and built camaraderie," he said. "On the court it's war, but off the court we're all friends."

He said he is sure the soldiers will talk and joke about the game at the water cooler.

"It was an unforgettable game and a lot of fun," the coach said. "Everyone knew that no matter who won, soldiers from the one-twenty ninth would be victorious."

DENTAC urges mouthguard use

Athletes should wear guards to protect smile

Fort Benning Dental Activity

Do you play football, basketball or go mountain biking? How about racquetball, skateboarding, soccer or volleyball? Perhaps you are in gymnastics or baseball. No matter what sport you're in, there's always a risk of injury.

A properly fitted mouthguard, or mouth protector, is an important piece of athletic gear that can help protect your smile. You may have seen them used in contact sports, like football, boxing, ice hockey, lacrosse and field hockey.

A mouthguard can help cushion blows that might otherwise cause broken teet, and injuries to lip, tongue, face or jaw.

There are three types of mouthguards: the ready made, or stock mouthguard; the mouth-formed "boil and bite" mouthguard; and the mouthguard custom-made by a dentist.

The most effective mouthguard should have several features. It should be resilient, tear-resistant and comfortable. It should also fit properly, be durable and easy to clean and not restrict your speech or breathing.

Generally, a mouthguard covers only the upper teeth. If you have a protruding jaw, your dentist may recommend that your lower teeth also be covered. Here are some cautions and reminders from the American Dental Association for Sports Dentistry:

• Don't wear removable appliances, such as an orthodontic retainer, removable bridge or complete or partial dentures with your mouthguard in place.

• If you wear braces or bridgework, you should wear a mouthguard that has been properly fitted by your dentist.

• If you have a protruding jaw, receding chin or cleft palate, you also should wear a custom-fitted mouthguard made by your dentist.

• Do not chew on or cut pieces off of your mouthguard.

• A properly fitted mouthguard should be worn during all practice sessions as well as games.

A mouthguard is relatively inexpensive and an easily obtained piece of sports equipment that can do much to protect a smile. If you take part in sports or other recreational activities, ask your dentist about how a properly fitted mouthguard can protect your smile.

Army to consolidate 11 series

Infantry branch merges jobs for proficiency

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

Big changes are about to be made to the infantry career field in the near future. Beginning July 31, several military occupational specialties in the 11 series will be consolidated into one MOS.

The consolidation will be a big change for many soldiers, but it's a change for the better, said Lt. Col. Mark Fields, chief of the Office of Infantry Proponency.

The purpose of the change is to balance basic infantry skill proficiency across the force, Fields said.

It's a change that's been a while in the making.

"The Interim Brigade Combat Team in Fort Lewis, Wash., Forces Command, the Army — all have said that based on analysis of the future threat, the IBCTs are to be infantry-centric organizations," Fields said. "The chief of staff of the Army has also had a separate organization

Heroes to be honored today

Movie stars to attend ceremony

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Three real-life heroes of the Vietnam War will be honored this afternoon in front of Infantry Hall by the commanding general of Fort Benning.

In the audience will be the actors and filmmakers who will bring these soldiers' heroics to the big screen in the upcoming movie We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young, based on the book of the same title by retired Lt. Gen. Harold Moore and journalist Joe Galloway.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley, retired Sgt. 1st Class Ernest Savage and retired Lt. Col. Bruce Crandall — all survivors of the Battle of the Ia Drang Valley in November 1965 — will be recognized with an Honor Bayonet Ceremony in front of the Follow Me Statue at 4:30 p.m.

"The focus of the ceremony will be to pay tribute to these men who served so bravely at Landing Zone X-Ray and to thank all service members who fought in the Vietnam War and their family members," said Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne.

Moore, who commanded the 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry Regiment, in the battle, and Galloway, the only civilian on the ground at X-Ray, will not be able to attend the ceremony. Their account of the fighting in the Ia Drang Valley was published in 1992 and spent 17 weeks on the New York Times Bestseller List.

Filming of the movie will begin next week with Mel Gibson starring as Moore and Barry Pepper as Galloway.

Plumley, the battalion's sergeant major, retired in 1974 with more than 32 years of service to the Army. His awards include the Combat Infantryman's Badge with two stars; two Silver Stars; and four Purple Hearts.

Sam Elliott will portray Plumley, who at age 81 lives in Columbus.

Savage was a sergeant in 2nd Platoon, B Company, 1st Bn.,

Instructor dies during accident in Chattahoochee

Maj. Milton Mariani
Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation

A soldier drowned Monday when he fell into the Chattahoochee River while preparing for a training exercise.

Staff Sgt. Miguel U. Polanco, 33, an instructor with B Company, Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, was unloading boats into the Chattahoochee River.

He was preparing the site for riverine operations to be conducted by the Institute's Counter-Drug Course students Monday afternoon. At the time of the accident he was alone at the site, as two of his fellow instructors had returned to the warehouse to pick up more boats to be used in the training.

Fishermen in the vicinity overheard calls for help but were unable to reach Polanco in time to rescue him. Polanco was not wearing a life jacket.

Polanco, a native of the Dominican Republic, joined the U.S. Army in June 1991.

He arrived at Fort Benning 16 months ago and was the primary instructor for the land navigation train-

AER campaign in full swing

Program helps Army take care of its own

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The Army Emergency Relief program has helped the Army take care of its own since February 1942.

And this year's AER campaign kicked off yesterday afternoon during a workshop in Infantry Hall. The campaign runs through April 15.

"The program epitomizes soldiers helping soldiers — financially," said Al Deane, AER officer.

The goal this year is to raise $170,000 for the installation, and Deane said he feels like the post will meet it.

"At Fort Benning, we have always achieved and exceeded our goal," he said. "By the same token we have always outpaced assistance provided as opposed to goal achievement."

AER has provided more than $610 million in assistance to more than 2.5 million Army families worldwide.

More than 1,000 Fort Benning soldiers and their family members benefitted from nearly $700,000 in aid last year.

"Financially, AER has always been in a good position to assist soldiers during times of emergency need," Deane said.

He said the intent of the campaign is to:

New program to save lives

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

commentary

It sometimes takes a village to help save "an Army of one." The Army's new suicide prevention campaign seeks to train more people to recognize early signs of suicidal behavior and intervene until a mental health professional is available.

The bottom line is: everyone needs to get involved.

"Soldiers, Leaders and Communities Saving Lives" is the campaign motto. As the motto indicates, it's time to stop thinking that suicide prevention is just the commander's responsibility.

It's the community's responsibility when it's not communicated to the proper officials that a soldier is in need of help.

The U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine at Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md., and the American Association of Suicidology said in the last 10 years suicide has been the second leading cause of deaths in the U.S. Army, and that 10 times more soldiers have committed suicide than have died in hostile fire. I've heard soldiers complain about their free time being taken away because they had "crazy horse" watch. Most soldiers are unaware that suicide is a psychiatric disorder, and they think that the majority of individuals who threaten to commit suicide just want attention or they are trying to get out of work.

Unfortunately it could only take one time for a soldier's cries to go unheard before he decides to take his own life.

There are four types of suicidal behavior: thoughts, gestures, attempts and the completed act, according to center.

The American Association for Suicidology said 6 percent of the American population has thought about suicide within the last 12 months.

Gestures are made by those who act upon the thought, but do not want to die.

Attempts are failed suicides, and then there are those who actually take their own lives.

We cannot make the determination whether someone is serious about harming himself or herself. When I say we, I mean those of us who are not mental health professionals, counselors or chaplains.

The new program will make it mandatory for all soldiers and Army civilian personnel to attend a briefing on suicide risk identification and what support agencies are available in the community.

This briefing shouldn't be viewed as another disruption in the duty day. Most suicides are preventable and being knowledgeable on suicidal behavior can possible help you save your buddy.

Soldiers share love of Army tradition

Spc. Jonathan Wiley
Army News Service

commentary

Soldiers love tradition and almost without exception, those who have been in the Army for longer than five years are a little suspicious of the changes that have occurred since their first enlistment.

Words like: "The Army isn't like it was when I first joined," read as a simple observation, a reflection on the state of things without any particular value attached to it. When spoken, however, they're rarely neutral. They're intoned in a way to suggest that the "new" Army is an imitation of the old — today's soldier may carry a heavy load, but it is a few pounds lighter than the one carried by yesterday's.

Given this attitude, it would be asking a lot of soldiers to immediately embrace the Army's new advertising slogan — "An Army of one" — without fondly reminiscing about the old. Those of you who joined the Army between the years of 1981 and 2000 did so to "Be all you could be."

That was an ingenious slogan because it draws upon an assumption almost every recruit has about the Army: that it is challenging, that you can only achieve your best through adversity. It says "Sure the Army is hard, but aren't you as well?"

How could you not be sad to see a slogan like that go?

The new slogan is like a stepmother at the moment.

Even if she does have some good qualities, it's natural to be a little resentful of her presence if you liked the slogan she's replacing — and obviously, most of us did since we're wearing BDUs.

The new slogan isn't for us, though. It's for potential recruits wondering if they should investigate the Army further. While it's impossible to predict whether or not the new slogan will be successful, I think it might be, because, like "Be," it packs a lot more meaning into a short, punchy phrase than a first reading betrays.

Initially, "An Army of one," seems to encourage functioning on one's own, taking little notice of the team.

Imagine a recruit at basic training explaining to his drill sergeant why he's doing things his own way and not the way he was instructed.

"I'm an Army of one, drill sergeant, and in my Army I do things this way."

It's safe to say that probably wouldn't go over too well.

The slogan doesn't actually encourage a disregard for teamwork, though. Instead, it simply allays a potential recruit's fears that the Army strips soldiers of their individuality.

In doing so, it conveys an idea about the Army as classic and as American as something its first general, Gen. George Washington, said about himself and his troops: "When we took up the soldier, we did not lay aside the citizen."

As a nation, America demands that its citizens function as individuals, not drones, and it expects its soldiers to be citizens.

Yes, as soldiers we must follow orders. But as citizens, we must each choose those who shape the orders — our highest leaders. As soldiers, we must answer to our commander-in-chief. As citizens, our commander-in-chief must answer to us.

It's a curious contradiction, but one at which the "An Army of One," slogan artfully hints.

It suggests that every American soldier retains his or her unique identity, but it also implies that every soldier is a member of an organization with a singular and unwavering purpose.

We are powerful as individuals, and we are undefeatable as a team.

Our Army has always been, and hopefully always will be, a monolithic force remaining ever vigilant in the fight for the freedom and liberty of every individual. It's an Army of one.

Former soldier agrees with new motto

Bob Lonsberry
Army News Service

commentary

He made his debut the other night. A lone trooper. Camouflage fatigue pants, olive drab t-shirt, combat boots, gear slung on his back. Eyes glinting and hard, looking resolutely into the distance and the future. Running through a rocky desert. Strong and unstoppable. A kick-ass G.I. Joe. The American fighting man.

An Army of one.

I liked the ad. I loved the ad. It made me proud. It made me want to be that trooper.

And the slogan clicked. It just clicked in my mind, and I understood.

That's what those P.R. slicks in Chicago were thinking.

I enlisted during a different era. Be all you can be. That was our motto. I've still got mugs somewhere that say so. And T-shirts and maybe an old bumper sticker — Army. Be all you can be. I can hear it still being sung in my head.

And so I was angry when I heard. It was in the paper. The Army was mothballing its old slogan and was going to some glitzy $150 million campaign to pump a new one. An Army of one. It didn't make any sense to me. It sounded selfish. The Army isn't about being one, it's about being one of many. It's about being part of a team. It's about making the interests and objectives of your unit more important than yourself.

Until I saw that trooper. That's why I joined the Army, that's why I was proud to be a soldier. That's why all these years later I've got my honorable discharge certificate framed and on display. You're not a soldier once, you're a soldier always — if you were a good one. And I hope that young men and women will see that trooper and hear that slogan and think of possibilities. Possibilities within themselves. I hope they will consider going into the service of their country. As commissioned officers or enlisted soldiers, it doesn't matter, the honor is not in the rank, it is in the willingness, and in the "U.S." insignia you wear on your lapel. And someday in the flag they will drape across your casket.

And it's odd that I feel that way, because the Army isn't fun. It's often anything but fun. It is even occasionally miserable. And that's the peacetime Army. I have no knowledge of war or experience with it. I cannot imagine combat, though I believe there was a time when I was prepared and trained for it.

And I know that my fondness for the Army has grown since I left it. And that when my enlistment was up I didn't re-enlist, and that I was darned glad to be out.

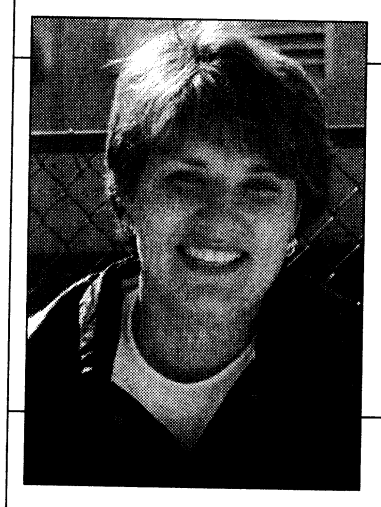
But it helped me in ways that it took years to understand, and it gave me a sense of oneness with and belonging to the Republic that I treasure more and more as I age.

But I have been an Army of one. And that trooper running powerfully across the desert, I have felt that spirit and that sense of invincibility. I have been him. Not literally, not in battle dress, but in the challenges and exertions of life.

The Army taught me that I had no limits. That physically, emotionally and intellectually I had reserves I had not previously imagined, and that the barriers I had imagined were universally wrong. I would have lived a fine life without the Army, but it would have been a life without vision and excellence. It would have been a life blindly ignorant of my potential. It would have been half a life.

But it is not.

I am an Army of one. And I got to be that way by putting on the uniform of the United States, by standing in the long green line of soldiers that stretches back through Da Nang and Normandy and Gettysburg to Valley Forge. I understand that now, a dozen years out of the Army, in a way I never could have when I walked into the recruiter's office.



The old slogan will always be part of my memory. But I'm not going to reject the new one. Because I figure in another 20 years there will be some 40-year-old guy sitting there thinking about his days in uniform and it will mean something special to him. And I suspect he will feel the same, and that he will be proud.

That he was an Army of one.

Army develops new suicide prevention plan

Program recognizes early signs

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army has developed a new suicide prevention campaign plan that officials said should be released to the field this spring.

"Soldiers, Leaders and Communities Saving Lives" is the plan's title. It focuses on training people to recognize early signs of suicidal behavior and how to intervene.

The plan was formed after the Army had a 26 percent increase in active-duty suicides between 1997 and 1999, said Lt. Col. Jerry Swanner, the Army suicide prevention program manager at the Pentagon. He said the problem seemed to culminate in January last year when the Army had six confirmed suicides in the first five days of the year.

"Obviously, this caused great concern within the Army leadership," Swanner said, adding that it prompted Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki "to direct a complete review of the Army's suicide prevention program."

The Department of the Army Suicide Prevention Working Group, which consists of policy officers, chaplains, and psychiatrists across the Army staff, launched an exhaustive study, Swanner said. The group examined numerous reports and studies including the U.S. Surgeon General's "Call to Action to Prevent Suicide," published in 1999.

The group also met with leading civilian psychiatrists in the field of suicide prevention, including Dr. David Shaffer, who was commissioned by the assistant secretary of Defense for Health Affairs in 1996 to analyze all DoD Suicide Prevention programs.

"We used to believe that suicides were from stress, and if we reduced stress that would reduce the risks of suicides," Swanner said. However, he said recent studies indicate the majority of suicides occur due to some form of psychiatric disorder.

Stress can trigger the desire to commit suicide, but stress alone is not sufficient enough for someone to commit suicide, said Col. David Orman, the psychiatry consultant to the Surgeon General of the Army.

The new Army suicide prevention model focuses on four major areas: developing life-coping skills, encouraging help-seeking behavior, raising vigilance on suicide awareness, and integrating and synchronizing unit and community programs.

Although draft versions of the new campaign plan have already been sent to the Army's major commands, Swanner said he expects the official release sometime within the next six weeks.

He said the working group is waiting for a final DoD directive concerning "psychological autopsies" and the requirements for a standardized suicide surveillance format.

The new campaign plan encourages leaders to reinforce positive life-coping skills. One such program, which Swanner said originated in the 25th Infantry Division, is "Building Strong and Ready Families." It focuses on developing interpersonal communication skills between married couples.

The Army has recently funded a pilot program for a selected number of brigades.

About 75 percent of all soldiers who committed suicide last year were experiencing "significant relationship problems" in their personal life, said Lt. Col. Glen Bloomstrom, a chaplain in the Family Ministry Office for the Army's chief of Chaplains.

Some recruits enter the Army predisposed to mental illness, Swanner said.

He said the Army Surgeon General's Office and TRADOC are now determining the feasibility of pre-screening recruits for dysfunctional behavior during the early stages of initial entry training. He said those determined unfit for duty would ideally be separated before they reach their first unit of assignment.

On the other hand, Swanner said the Army should not discriminate against those who seek and receive mental health treatment.

He would like to change the stigma associated with mental health care.

"We must tear down these barriers that prevent our soldiers from receiving the professional mental help that some so desperately need and deserve," Swanner said.

Swanner said dramatic change could only occur if there's a shift in the "gung-ho, drive-on" mentality that implies seeking help is a "sign of weakness."

When soldiers realize they need help, it's a sign of individual strength and maturity, Swanner said, not of weakness.

In the new program, the Army is turning to Living Works Education, a public service organization based in Calgary, Canada, that has developed a workshop titled "Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training" or ASIST.

The focus of the training is to provide anyone who might come in contact with a person at risk for suicide with the confidence and tools to take immediate life-saving actions, Swanner said, until the individual can be seen by a mental health care professional.

The goal is to eventually have one ASIST-trained soldier within every battalion to assist the commander in determining the actual risk of self-injurious behavior, Swanner said.

Chaplains now attend ASIST workshops as part of their formal training.

But Swanner said all counselors that come in contact with soldiers in need would benefit from the workshop. Trial defense lawyers, MPs and even unit leaders preparing for an extended deployment should take ASIST training, Swanner said.

To accomplish this goal, the campaign plan calls for two ASIST trainers at every installation.

Throughout the creation of the campaign plan, one theme was emphasized over and over again by the senior Army leadership, Swanner said.

That is, suicide prevention is a leader's responsibility. Therefore, he said the plan was prepared to assist installation commanders in the refinement of their own suicide prevention policies and programs that are outlined in AR 600-63 and DA Pam 600-24.

"The bottom line is to get involved and take action," Swanner said.

"After all, you may be the very last person to have a chance to help."

Club institutes new policy

Non-ID cardholders need sponsor

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

The Main NCO Club has a new sponsorship policy. This policy now requires all non-ID cardholders to have a service member, E-4 or above, sign them in.

The reason for the policy change is fighting.

Several small brawls broke out at the club during evening events, where patrons were causing problems and disturbing other guests.

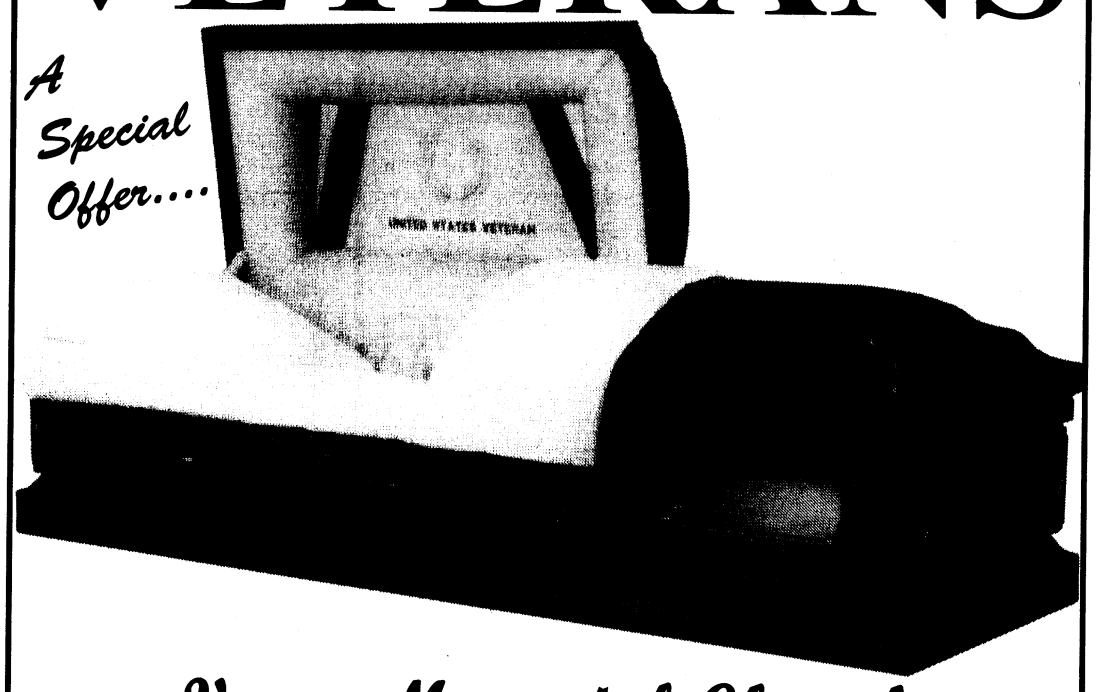
Large crowds attending events like Bosses Night have brought more people from the local community. 1st Lt. Esteban Gutierrez, MP operations officer, has seen a pattern develop over the last year.

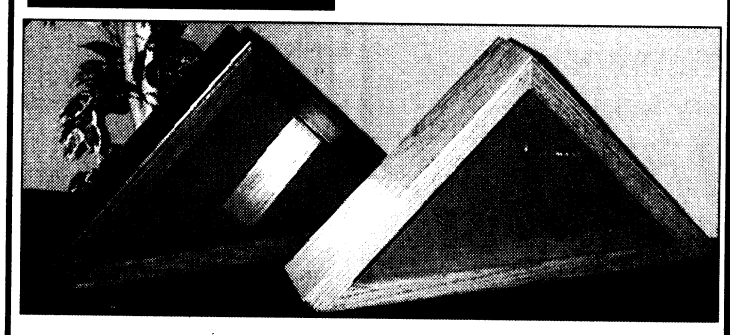
"As of late, we have received some calls. There have been numerous physical altercations and some uncomfirmed reports of shots fired. Some people have been injured," Gutierrez said. "The NCO Club is being proactive with instituting the policy."

One recent problem at an event caused the club to close its doors early, said Vermell Bush, NCO Club operations manager. While rules of conduct are more relaxed for certain events, standards of etiquette are enforced.

"They should have known how to act; now we have to crack down," Bush said.

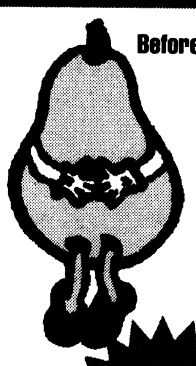
There is currently a two-guest policy and $5 a month membership fee for admittance for events. As with other clubs on post, civilians are also allowed to attend special functions in accordance with their job grade.

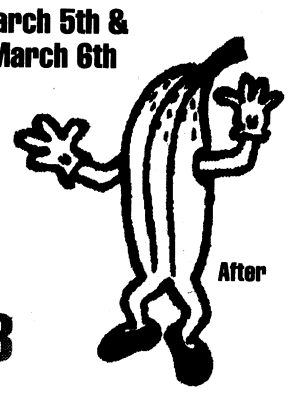




Unit-sponsored functions will not be part of this policy. Events such as weddings, lunches and other individually based occasions will also be excluded.

NCO club manager Jesse Carter wants to bring in patrons without fighting or rough housing.





"I think people are going to look at this and see we're trying to do the right thing." People spend their money for a decent and clean place to have a good night out."

For more information about membership or events, call the NCO Club at 687-1232.

New system aids in marksmanship training

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

A new computer training system being fielded at Fort Benning will allow units more training time to hone their shooting skills.

The Engagement Skills Trainer 2000 allows soldiers to fire an array of small arms weapons, including M-16 rifles, pistols, shotguns, light and heavy machine guns, antitank weapons and grenade launchers.

Unlike computer games, the EST gives an accurate feedback of where rounds hit.

"If you take a machine gunner out and he shoots 500 bullets and only hits three targets you ask, 'Where did the other rounds hit?'" said Ron Martere, the action officer of Directorate of Operations and Training, Systems Division, of the EST 2000. "Here, we can go back and find exactly where the bullets went."

He said knowing where the bullets hit is important so the shooters can make corrections.

More than showing where the bullets hit, the EST simulates the "same physical, functional, operational characteristics and capability of service weapons," Martere said.

The EST has more than 400 training exercises and scenarios. The programs include standard courses of fire, shoot-don't shoot decision training and defensive exercises.

In one exercise, shooters take the place of a military police officer picking up cash from the bank. As they walk in, they notice two men acting suspiciously, who they discover are robbing the bank. If they shoot while people are in the way or no weapon is present, the EST will pause the simulation allowing commanders to question the shooter on why he chose to pull the trigger.

However, if the suspects are a threat, the simulation will run in its entirety.

Another exercise allows up to 15 shooters to defend themselves from an enemy attack using weapons from their small arms arsenal.

The Kelley Hill infantrymen will be among the first soldiers throughout the Army to receive the EST.

"Initially 26 EST 2000s will be fielded under a low-rate initial production plan," Martere said. "One station unit training and basic combat training units will receive one, 15-lane EST per battalion. Brigade sized elements will receive one 10-lane EST."

Officials are planning to have 368 ESTs fielded before the end of fiscal 2007 with approved funding, Martere said.

Members of the U.S. Army Special Forces community visited Fort Benning Feb. 12 to test the system on their training needs

Chief Warrant Officer William Bryan, the operations officer for the Army Special Operations Mission Support Activity in Fort Bragg, N.C., said one of their main goals is to use the high-tech system for urban warfare scenarios.

Along with preloaded urban scenarios, the system also allows users to create their own environment — in some cases using photographs of city streets or terrain to customize the scenario.

If we knew of a particular environment that we needed to attack, then we could build it and attack it, Bryan said.

Each system costs approximately $125,000 depending on the weapons included. But the saving of time and training resources make the investment worth the price, officials said.

"While we don't want simulation to replace all the training, you still want soldiers to go out in the field and shoot at a range, but when that is unavailable, this is a good supplement," Martere said.

Fort Benning's 3rd Brigade will be the first Fort Benning unit to field the EST. The Kelley Hill infantrymen will begin installing the system Tuesday.

36th Engineers celebrate Black History Month

Event defines black culture, history

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

For Spc. Kwesi Adinkrah, Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, and his wife, Patience, there simply aren't enough programs in the military to educate soldiers and civilians about other countries.

So he takes it upon himself to invite families to his Fort Benning home for meals and to explain Ghana's customs. The Adinkrahs also donated their Ghanian clothes to a Black History Month celebration at the Sightseeing Road Chapel Feb. 23.

The theme of the event, sponsored by 13th Combat Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group, was "Creating and Defining the African American Community: Family, Church, Politics, Culture." Magazines, videos, and artwork were on display, as well as the authentic African clothing.

The guest speaker for the event was Maj. Samuel Mosteller, chief of Law Enforcement Services Branch, Directorate of Public Safety. Mosteller has made a "personal quest" to research Africa and black history for the past 22 years.

"In spite of troubles in America and in the world to resolve issues of African-America history and culture, be encouraged," he said. "The rest of the world looks at America. We're always pushing further."

The 36th Engineers provided all talent for the show. They began preparations for the event two months ago, said Sgt. 1st Class Loucious Hires, 13th Combat Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

"The African-American culture is not just defined in life of African Americans, it's enjoyed by all races," Hires said. "It's part of my life and everyone else's as well."

"Sometimes we have a stereotype of what people are like. It's just that we don't have any history or information about that culture," said Staff Sgt. Sarah Blackmon 13th Combat Support Battalion, 36th Engineer Group.

First Lt. Kate Bielak and 1st Lt. Matt Millar, 71st Military Police Detachment, Directorate of Public Safety, both attended the event. Bielak said she enjoys attending presentations for the talent and artistic approach to education. It's more than coming to hear dates and a timeline, she said. Participants walk away with a better understanding of traditions.

Programs like these offer soldiers a unique chance for people to learn about other cultures, Bielak said.

"The military may be better off than the civilian sector, because they are interacting with various cultures on a daily basis," Bielak said.

Spc. Jervon Burns and Pfc. Gloria Wormley-Williams performed solos at the celebration and Master Sgt. Annette Mincey recited a Langston Hughes' poem, Negro Mother. Pfc. Lenora Gogins-Watkins performed a traditional African dance.

Adinkrah wants participants of equal opportunity programs to walk away with a better understanding of other traditions.

"This is a chance for participants to get an idea of what Ghana is really like," Patience Adinkrah said.

Blackmon said she hopes to have more participants attend the program next year to spread awareness about black history.

Friends reunite on post

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The end of a military career marks the renewal of an old friendship for one Fort Benning employee.

Retired Lt. Col. Ron Abner, 81st Army Reserve Command, started his career 25 years ago as an MP at Fort Bragg, N.C., where he struck up a friendship with another officer, then 1st Lt. GT Myers.

Now the director of Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety, Myers is recognizing his "old Army buddy" today at the DPS Quarterly Awards ceremony for more than 25 years of exemplary service to the Army and Fort Benning.

"Ronnie Abner is an outstanding example of a true citizen soldier at work," Myers said. "He's had a very unique career, serving his country and his community well. He's an integral part of the Fort Benning family, and I'm just tickled to get the opportunity to work with him again after all these years."

Abner

Abner was the battalion personnel officer for the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning when he left active duty in 1987. He moved to Columbus with his wife, Kim, and his son, Louis, and accepted the position of physical security specialist on Fort Benning. It was in his current capacity he found himself once again working with Myers.

"We've stayed in touch from time to time through the years," Abner said. "It's good to see him and work with him again."

As a physical security specialist for DPS, Abner is responsible for maintaining security standards in matters concerning force protection.

"Ronnie and I were brought up under a command that emphasized soldiers first. We were allowed to make our mistakes and learn from them," Myers said. "Now I see how that mentality reflects in Ron's professionalism."

Abner retired from the Army Reserve Command in November after 13 years of service, including the 417th Chemical Detachment in Opelika, Ala.,, the 375th Theatre Area Support Group in Montgomery, Ala. and most recently the 87th Division in Birmingham, where he served with Maj. Monte Simonton.

"Ronnie's always been a can-do guy," said Simonton, district chief for Fort Benning's Custer Road fire station. "When he said, 'Don't worry about it,' you never had to worry about it. We didn't realize how bad we'd miss him till he was gone."

Library provides lessons

Soldiers learn old, relevant battle history

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Drawers of yellowing onionskin, torn at the edges, bound in folders gone orange with age. Notes written in pencil. At the top, a word stamped in capital letters, SECRET, crossed out by hand on page after page.

"Just beautiful," said Dr. Germaine Pavlova. "One better than the other. When you start, you never finish."

Pavlova is the director of the Infantry School's Donovan Research Library, which traces its roots to the 20-book professional collection started in 1907 at the Army's School of Musketry in Monterey, Calif.

The library moved to Fort Benning in 1926 — but really came into its own in 1927, when then Col. George C. Marshall, the new assistant commandant of the Infantry School, formally established the infantry's branch library as a part of a newly created Academic Department.

"Only when you know history will you be a good soldier," Pavlova said, summarizing the idea underlying Marshall's decision.

The value of military history hasn't declined with the contemporary emergence of a so-called revolution in military affairs, said command historian Dr. Roger Zeimet.

"Technology changes, but the essential principles of combat leadership are the same as when Alexander the Great was banging around the ancient world," Zeimet said. "Having the gadget is one thing, but being able to use it is more of an art and a skill that has to be developed."

Due in large part to its longetivity, the library has an extraordinary collection of military material, much of it in one-of-a-kind items that aren't available anywhere else in the world.

Thick folders in Pavlova's office are stuffed with requests from around the world — letters from academics, writers and retired soldiers pursuing tiny, specific pieces of history.

A historian in Virginia, for example, is looking for detailed information on the "Operations of Company K, 394th Infantry (99th Infantry Division) in defense actions near Elborn, Belgium, Dec. 16-21, 1944."

That's not the kind of thing you find at Books a Million — or even, often, on the Internet.

But it is the kind of thing you find in Pavlova's library, in forms that open a frequently compelling link directly to the thoughts and actions of soldiers who have long since been dead.

One long row of filing cabinets, for example, holds folders of declassified intelligence reports and once-secret operational assessments from past wars, reports in fading typescript with titles like, "Observations of G-2, 29th Infantry Division, April 1944."

A fragile memorandum that made its way to Fort Benning from the European Theater of Operations in October 1944 reports on lessons learned regarding defense against German mortars in "dense woods where the enemy has limited fields of fire."

The enemy can't adjust mortar fire too close to his own troops, wrote Col. Richard Marr, so "the best counter-action against mortar fire is to move forward rapidly until small arms fire is encountered."

> "Technology changes, but the essential principles of combat leadership are the same as when Alexander the Great was banging around the ancient world."
> Dr. Roger Zeimet
> Command historian,
> Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate

That was a lesson that would change in later years, as new enemies proved willing to drop mortar fire far closer to their own positions.

Not far from the archive of typed reports are several cabinets filled with microfilm of still more declassified field reports and after-action reviews; there are, for example, a complete set of AARs from the Battle of the Bulge, and regimental field orders from the major European campaigns.

In the stacks, the library houses thousands of rare and often arcane volumes — a decades-old book on the tactics of the Soviet rifle regiment and bound classroom materials from the Infantry School in the years immediately following the first world war.

A vault door at the back of a room in the library opens into another room that sits mostly empty, except for a few tables and chairs and another row of filing cabinets.

These cabinets hold typed monographs from infantry officers attending courses at Fort Benning, descriptions of personal experiences at war and the lessons learned on the battlefield.

Pull a folder out at random, and you're looking right into the face of history.

A paper from 1949, for example, describing the firsthand experiences of a company commander in Europe, details the "Operations of Company I, 362nd Infantry (91st Infantry Division), in the Breaking of the Gothic Line, 18-19 September, 1944."

The story of Company I would ring bells for some veterans of Desert Storm, where friendly fire came closer than some of the enemy's.

"There was a tense minute or two just as the leading platoon reached the edge of the smoke," wrote Maj. Clifton Peters. "Three rounds of tank fire hit the house on the crest about 20 yards from the nearest man in the 2nd Platoon. The battalion S-3 was contacted. He assured the company commander that the tanks would fire no more unless requested to do so."

Peters concluded that the fog of war was inescapable — something that should be taken into account when preparing soldiers for combat.

"A plan for a night attack should be simple, require little or no maneuver, and be based on complete and detailed information of hostile forces," he concluded.

That's the kind of lesson that soldiers keep relearning — but at least a few of the benefits of experience can be borrowed.

Benning community gathers for fellowship

Speaker recognizes contributions

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 400 soldiers and civilians attended the U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning National Prayer Breakfast at the Fort Benning Officers' Club Feb. 22. The breakfast was held in celebration of divine guidance for national leadership.

Guest speaker, Dr. Stu Weber, from Portland, Ore., was joined by representatives from various religious faiths to draw together the local community.

Weber spoke of acceptance, accountability and affirmation during his address at the breakfast.

He also made reference to his guest of honor this morning. I am honored to be in your presence. This is emotional for me. Thanks for allowing me to be here," the pastor said.

Weber

Over eggs and orange juice, 1st Lt. Alex Padgett and Capt. Ed Santiago both of 104th Transportation Company, 36th Engineers Group, listened to Weber's message.

While it was Padgett's first time attending an event of this type, Santiago has frequented the national event in the past, both at Fort Benning and Fort Campbell, Ky.

"I enjoy the camaraderie of the people who attend," Santiago said. "They always have something great to say."

"It was very inspirational and I think Weber struck some key issues with soldiers," said Chaplain (Capt.) Michael White, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade.

Sgt. Dorothy Bess-Moore, The Infantry Center Chapel NCOIC, sang Amazing Grace and Chaplain (Maj.) David Giammona, Basic Combat Training Brigade, played He Looked Beyond My Fault on his saxophone. The Infantry Brass Quintent provided music for the event.

The National Prayer Breakfast movement began during WWII, when groups met for prayer and study. In 1953, President Eisenhower established the first Presidential Prayer Breakfast.

The name was changed in 1970 to the present name, to emphasize the purpose of gathering.

White said he hopes to see more civilians attending the event next year, as the program is geared for the entire community.

"In my mind, you are the guest of honor this morning. I am honored to be in your presence. This is emotional for me. Thanks for allowing me to be here," the pastor said.

Community extends Southern welcome

Institute's students meet sponsors during reception

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation Public Affairs Office

Host of Latin Americans and residents of the tricommunity gathered at the Officers Club Feb. 22 to welcome new students from the Command and General Staff Officer Course and guest instructors attending the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

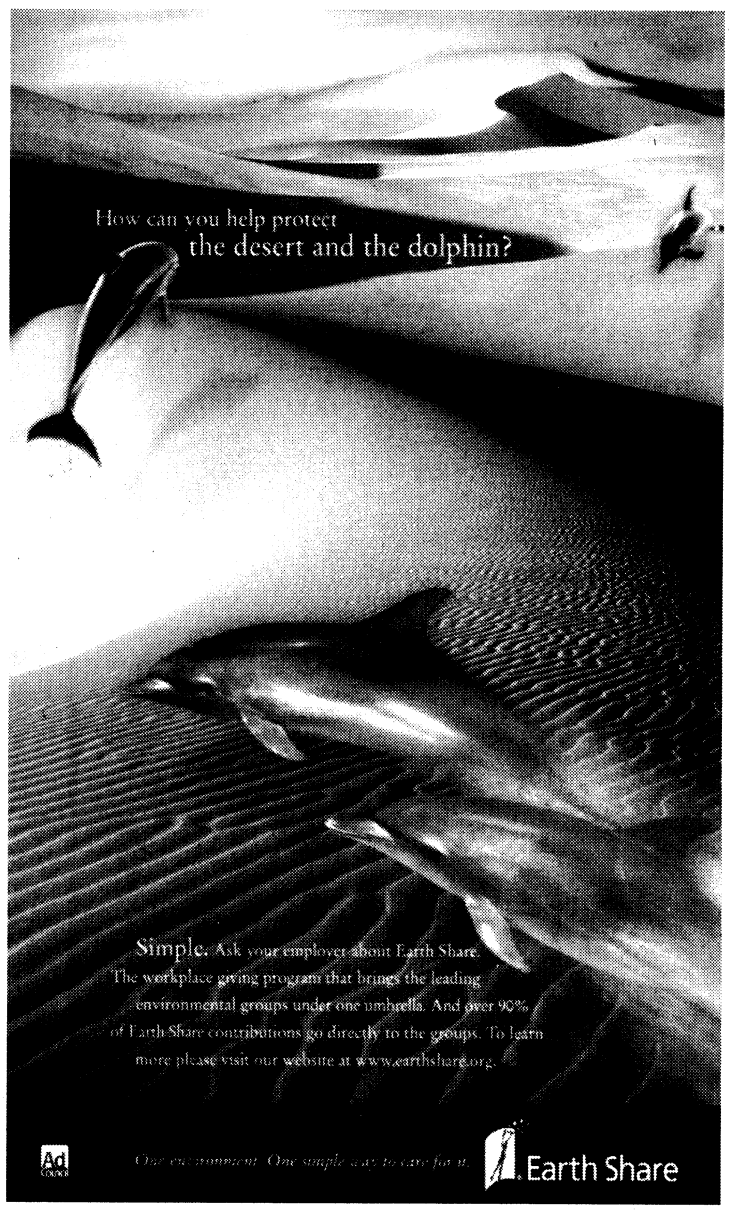
The evening reception also gave the institute's students, guest instructors and their families an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the HOLA volunteers assigned as their sponsors.

Volunteers are charged with helping Latin American students, guest instructors and their families better understand and identify with the American way of life through community events and cross cultural exchange in domestic living, said Cecilia Alexander, the institute's International Military Student officer and HOLA coordinator.

"The purpose is not just for students to learn more about U.S. culture and customs, it's about developing long lasting friendships," explained Alexander.

As an HOLA volunteer, Carmen Rodriguez, a nurse at Martin Army Community Hospital, not only plans on showing Maj. Guido Soto of Bolivia the American way of life, she and her family, being from Puerto Rico, will share their home's rich Caribbean culture as well, she said.

"I believe this is a wonderful program, it gives us all a chance to exchange ideas and learn from one another," said Rodriguez.



Soto, who is attending the officer course at the institute, said although he and Rodriguez share a commonality in the Spanish language, both have quickly learned of the differences in dialect and cultural expression.

While these differences are familiar throughout the institute, there are many North Americans unfamiliar with Latin America and its vast diversities, Rodriguez said.

Embracing diversity is of the highest importance within the halls of the institute and outside, said Soto.

Raising his glass to toast HOLA volunteers, CGSOC students and guest instructors, Col. Richard Downie, director of the institute, charged volunteers with making lasting friendships and encouraged instructors and students to keep in touch long after they've said farewell and left the halls of the institute behind.

"This gives you an opportunity to see another culture through someone else's eyes who eventually you'll call 'friend'," said Downie.

Storage system helps ranger mission

Weapons storage saves time, lives

Spc. William A. Graves
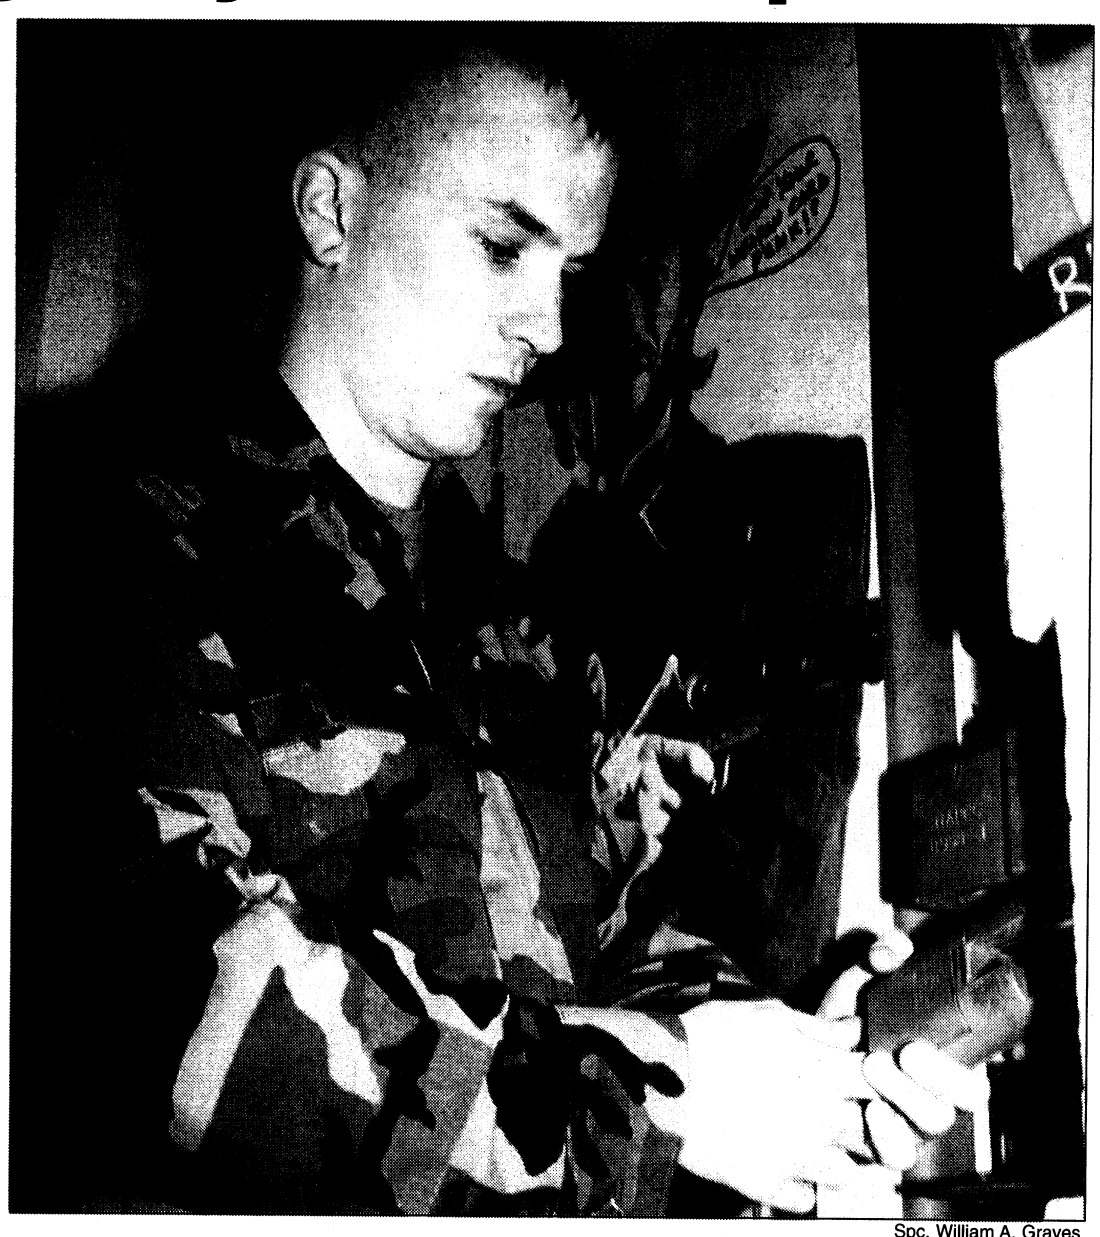
Bayonet staff

You are in the 75th Ranger Regiment in its Ranger Ready Force One battalion when you get the call to be wheels up to Destination Unknown in only a few hours.

Unlike any other unit in the Army, the arms room stores your weapon system with scope and laser attached. As a result, you don't have to zero your weapon.

Time is saved.



You and your superiors have more time to plan.

You crush the enemy.

According to Army Regulation 190-11, there must be three barriers between stored weapons and the arms room specialist.

Other Army units use a rack as the final barrier, which means soldiers have to detach their M-68 or Advanced Combat Optical Gun sights, AN/PEQ-2A or PAQ-4 night-vision lasers in order to make the weapon fit and vice versa when their next mission happens.

Since January 1998, 75th Ranger Regt. soldiers have used either three heavily locked doors or two doors and a cage to meet the Army's security requirements.

Spc. William A. Graves

Spc. Mark Corliss unlocks one of the three barriers into the rangers' arms room.

Not having to zero M-4s or M-16s every time soldiers take them out of the arms room enhances the regiment's mission.

"We are taking a large logistical piece out of the equation," said Sgt. Maj. Matthew Berrena, operations sergeant major, 75th Ranger Regt. "We can move into a combat situation and kill the enemy quicker and more efficiently."

> "We're going to combat more confidently, so it's going to save lives in the long run"
>
> Spc. Mark Corliss
> Armor specialist

Soldiers can use a bore light laser to zero their weapon, but soldiers feel better about their zero when it is as a result of going to a range.

"We're going to combat more confidently, so its going to save lives in the long run," said Spc. Mark Corliss, armor specialist, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regt.

The system also makes training run smoothly, he added. Soldiers feel more capable and proficient in their jobs when they do not have to waste a day or two at the range.

"If it's smarter, why not do it that way?" Corliss said.

He said he feels like all units in the Army will eventually store weapon systems like rangers, as long as they can meet the security regulations.

In fact, his prediction may not be far off. Berrena has exported his unit's knowledge on compact discs to other units such as the 82nd Airborne and 10th Mountain Divisions.

"The storage system is working great," Berrena said. "It's very convenient on our arms specialist and soldiers.

"They draw a complete weapons system, not just the weapon."

Furthermore, soldiers have one arms card for the weapon, laser and sight.

"It fits into his (Gen. Eric K. Shinseki, chief of staff of the Army) vision (Force 21) of a lighter, more mobile and lethal force," he said.

The regiment is always on the leading edge of new technology and ways of doing business, Berrena said.

Like it has done in the past, the regiment is up to the challenge.

For instance, every six months, it holds its regimental marksmanship conference because marksmanship is one of the regiment's "Big 4" — the others being PT, first aid, and small-unit battle drills.

At the convention, soldiers look for new procedures and exchange and tweak ideas to improve force modernization.

"We leverage the technology to make the soldier more lethal," Berrena said.

With innovative derivatives such as the new storage system, the conferences work well, he said.

Fort Benning MPs to deploy to Middle East

Soldiers to run security centers in Saudi Arabia

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

A small group of Fort Benning Military Police will soon deploy to Saudi Arabia for a six-month tour replacing Soldiers from Fort Bliss, Texas.

Ten soldiers from the 988th Military Police Company volunteered for a mission that will take them across the globe. They are slated to leave Fort Benning later this month.

Staff Sgt. David Williams, the company's movement NCO said the soldiers will run security operations centers in Riyadh and Dhahran.

With the departure date nearing two of the MPs who are going on the mission said they were excited about their upcoming tour of duty.

"I am really looking forward to going," Spc. John Ruppe said. "This will be my first deployment and my first time, while in the Army, away from Fort Benning. I really am looking forward to seeing how people in different countries live."

While this deployment is to be Ruppe's first, another volunteer, Sgt. Pete Perez, is a veteran of deployments.

> "Of course there is going to be some sort of nervousness because you don't know what to expect, especially with the things that are going on now."
> Sgt. Pete Perez
> 988th Military Police Company

Perez said he deployed to Kosovo and is excited about the latest opportunity even though he expects the mission will be totally different.

"It's a different region and different people," Perez said. "You really don't know what to expect until you get there."

Not only will the region and culture be different, but his job will be different as well.

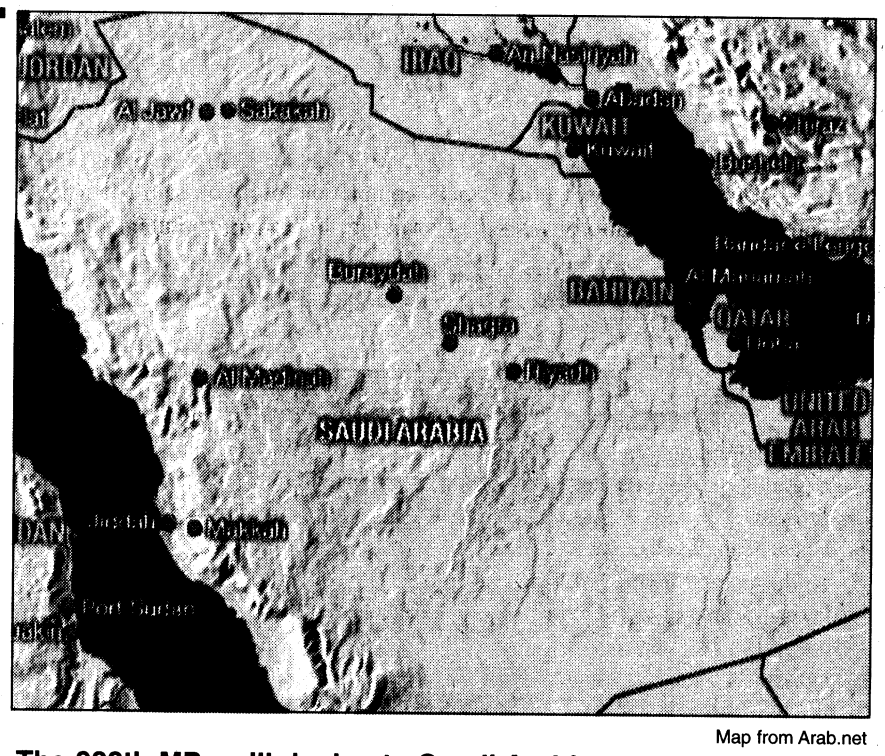
"When I was in Kosovo I was a combat engineer, now I am going as a military policeman," he said. "So my job will be completely different."

With recent military action taken against Iraq and tensions elevating, Perez said he was a little on edge.

"Of course there is going to be some sort of nervousness because you don't know what to expect, especially with the things that are going on now," he said.

Ruppe said he is sure things will be fine.

"I have confidence in all our people that they all know the right things to do," Ruppe said.



The MPs are battling any nervousness by learning deployment specific tasks such as customs and courtesy, force protection and refreshing basic soldiering skills. For the past two weeks they also received information on the current threat situation due to the recent activity and what actions to take or stay away from.

Williams has also provided valuable insight to the mission as he returned from Saudi in April of 2000.

"They will have a great time over there," Williams said. "It is an outstanding deployment, especially for young soldiers. The job over there is an outstanding job.

"They are treated very well," he said. "They work hand-in-hand with the Saudi Arabian government and army."

"They also work with the national guard and get experience working with the U.S. Air Force, Navy and Marines," he added. "It's a good deployment for a young soldier to be on.

Map from Arab.net

The 988th MPs will deploy to Saudi Arabia.

"It teaches them a lot."

Williams said the only downside to the deployment is the MPs will be there for the summer rotation.

"It's going to be real hot for them over there," he said. "It will be about 140 degrees at 10 a.m."

The two said the hardest part won't be the heat, but leaving their families.

"It's going to be rough," Perez said. "I've only been married for six months. It will be a real test on the marriage."

Although Ruppe and Perez both said the separation will be difficult, their wives support the mission.

It will be tough but well worth it, Perez said.

"You spend every day out here training for it," Perez said. "Now we actually get six months to go out and do it."

Intelligence director details threats facing United States

Globalization reason for concern

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The world is in transition from the Cold War to something new and the top military intelligence officer expects the next 10 to 15 years to be at least as turbulent, if not more so as the past 10.

Navy Vice Adm. Thomas Wilson, the director of the Defense Intelligence Agency, testified before the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence Feb. 7. In his written statement to the committee he said the basic forces bringing stress and disorder to the world will continue.

"No power, circumstance, or condition is likely to emerge capable of overcoming these (forces) and creating a more stable global environment," Wilson said. "Within this environment, the big issues — especially counter drug, counter intelligence, counter proliferation, counter terrorism — will remain key challenges for the United States."

Driving all, according to Wilson, is globalization. On one side globalization means the increasing flow of ideas, money, people, information and technology around the world.

The European Union broke down barriers in Europe. The North American Free Trade Pact can do the same here. The Internet and the explosion of information available at the click of a mouse has fueled this drive toward globalization.

But it also has a dark side, Wilson said.

"Globalization is generally a positive force that will leave most of the world's people better off," he said. "But in some ways, globalization will exacerbate local and regional tensions, increase the prospects and capabilities for conflict and empower those who would do us harm."

The transfer of information and technology increases the dangers from weapons of mass destruction. Wilson said this trend "will increasingly accord smaller states, groups, and individuals destructive capabilities previously limited to major world powers."

Wilson analyzed the state of the world today and detailed some of the threats he sees facing the United States. Sometime during the next two years he predicts a "major terrorist attack against United States interests, either here or abroad, perhaps with a weapon designed to produce mass casualties."

He said this type of terrorist attack remains the most likely threat to the United States. If conditions worsen in the Middle East this could lead to an expansion of Israeli-Palestinian violence. A breakdown in the Middle East peace process could cause an increased risk of anti-American violence, an increased risk of a wider regional conflict and intensified Iraqi efforts to exploit the conflict to gain relief from sanctions, Wilson said.

Within the next two years, the United States must closely monitor the Korean peninsula. A breakdown in the growing rapprochement between North and South Korea may mean war.

On the other hand, the United States must prepare for an accelerated move toward reunification whose impact catches regional powers unprepared. The United States must guard against an expanded military conflict between India and Pakistan over Kashmir.

This is more serious now since both India and Pakistan have nuclear weapons and the means to deliver them.

"Both sides operate from 'zero-sum perspectives,' retain large forces, in close proximity, across a tense line of control," he said. "The potential for mistake and miscalculation remains relatively high."

In the next two years there may be intensifying disagreements with Russia over National Missile Defense and its implications on the Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty. European security moves and so on. These disagreements are "spurred by President Putin's more assertive and potentially confrontational foreign policy," Wilson said.

There is a possibility of conflict between China and Taiwan "resulting from increased pressure by Beijing for reunification or a more assertive stance from Taiwan on independence."

There is a possibility of more violence in the Balkans. Wilson said the violence could be between Serbia and Montenegro and, or Kosovo as these smaller territories continue their demands for increased autonomy or independence.

Infantry: Combines 11B and 11M, becomes more lethal

independently looking at every MOS for opportunities to consolidate. What they're looking for is a multiskilled soldier."

With the combined efforts of the deputies chief of staff for operations and personnel, PERSCOM, TRADOC, FORSCOM, the Army National Guard, Army Reserve and the Infantry Center, the consolidation plan is ready to be implemented this July.

"July 31, here's what happens: 11B, infantry, 11H, anti-armor infantry and 11M, mechanized infantry, will be consolidated into 11B at skill levels one, two, three and four," Fields said. "At skill-level five, 11C, mortar soldiers, will be recoded 11Z.

"All infantry master sergeants and first sergeants will be eligible to serve in any infantry E-8 authorization. This way a mortarman could be a rifle company first sergeant."

The consolidation will make the infantry more flexible in several ways, Fields said.

"This (consolidation) means that PERSCOM will be able to assign soldiers in these skill levels according to the needs of the Army," he said. "It used to be if you are coming out of the 82nd Airborne Division, light infantry, you might go to drill sergeant school and then go back to the 82nd.

"Now, a soldier can grow up in the 82nd, when it's time to re-enlist, he can re-enlist for Fort Carson, Germany, Korea, places where there's mechanized infantry. That's a pretty good deal for the infantry," Fields said.

> "This will make promotion opportunities in the 11 series more even across the board and will level promotion discrepancies."
> Lt. Col. Mark Fields
> Office of Infantry Proponency chief

The assignment process will be more flexible to support the changing demands of the transformation.

This transformation and consolidation is a step in the right direction, said Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein, post sergeant major.

"This is something that's long overdue," he said. "I think it's being done for all of the right reasons.

"We need a more proficient infantry that can deploy heavy and light forces. Infantry is infantry, it's only in the how we get to the battle that there's a difference," he added.

Klein said he thinks the consolidation will make infantry soldiers more versatile to accomplish their mission.

"The close fight for the light forces is 300 meters and the close fight for the mechanized soldier is 1,000, this closes the gap in the fight and trains every soldier to be ready for any situation," he said.

The consolidation process won't be an overnight event, training will need to be reorganized to meet the new structure.

"In one station unit training, we are going to increase emphasis on basic infantry tasks. There will be a little exposure to mech and anti-armor," Fields explained.

"At skill level two and three, we'll have training for Bradley gunners and TOW gunners, and Bradley commanders and anti-armor leaders at skill level three."

"The Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course will train mechanized and anti-armor collective and individual leaders tasks," he said.

Fields said training for soldiers will be made available en route for those soldiers going to positions for which they have had no preparation. Skill level two and three exportable programs of instruction will also be available.

As a result of the new positions and new schooling, one aspect of the consolidation that had to be considered during the planning phase was effects on promotions.

Fields said promotion points will be awarded for completion of the training needed to complete the consolidation.

"This will make promotion opportunities in the 11 series more even across the board and will level promotion discrepancies," Fields said.

Centralized promotions will be focused more on demonstrated performance as reflected in NCOERs.

7th Cav., in November 1965. He assumed command of the "Lost Platoon" after it became isolated from the rest of the battalion during the fighting. He retired from the Army in 1982 and works at Fort Benning as an intelligence analyst with the Directorate of Intelligence and Security.

Savage is low-key about the film and the attention the project has generated.

"I never like to have the spotlight on myself," said Savage, a native of McCalla, Ala.

Savage has talked briefly with Ryan Hurst, the actor who will portray him.

"It was nice to get a look at him and talk one-on-one. I hope he gets a feel for the relationships in the unit because I'm more concerned that they give an authentic representation of what happened — not of me per se," Savage said.

Crandall commanded A Company, 229th Assault Helicopter Battalion in the Ia Drang Valley. The pilot returned to Vietnam for a second tour in 1967. During his two tours there he flew lead ship on 756 separate missions. Crandall, an All-American baseball player from Washington, attended Officer Candidate School at Fort Belvoir, Va., and was commissioned as a lieutenant in the engineers. He was in the first class of aviators at Fort Rucker, Ala.

Greg Kinnear will star as Crandall, who lives in Arizona.

After presenting Infantry Coins to the former soldiers, Le Moyne will present Gibson, Elliott, Kinnear, Pepper and the other actors with certificates citing their completion of two weeks of training in infantry mobility, tactics and techniques.

"The certificates will signify their completion of a rite of passage, two weeks of training with some of Fort Benning's finest soldiers. They are now qualified to go forth and share the story of the great Americans they will be portraying," Le Moyne said.

"We want to recognize their determination and dedication to get the roles right and to embody the same values that we instill in all of our soldiers," he said.

Twenty-three actors from the film are expected to attend the ceremony.

The Fort Benning community is invited and will be allowed to take photographs during the recognition portion. However, there will not be an opportunity for autograph signing or posing for pictures with the film's stars, said Monica Manganaro, deputy Public Affairs officer.

"He was a team leader, very straight to the point," said Staff Sgt Alexis Campagne, an instructor with B Company. "Polanco cared very much about his team and was impeccable with accomplishing his missions on time. He was also very jovial, liked to joke around and bring a smile to everyone."

Staff Sgt. Jose Aranda, an instructor with B Co., had known Polanco since his arrival here.

"He was always happy, joking around, but very professional and dedicated when it came to his job," said Aranda.

A memorial service for Polanco is set for 3 p.m. today at the The Infantry Center Chapel.

You don't pay tax on a Roth IRA

This is the big attraction of a Roth IRA: you don't pay tax when you make a qualified withdrawal, not even on the earnings and gains that build up.

You must follow certain rules, such as holding the Roth IRA for at least 5 years and reaching the age of 59½.

What's more, you can convert many traditional IRA accounts to a Roth IRA. And you can contribute to a Roth IRA after the age of 70½.

You will need to meet the guidelines, and make careful comparisons to determine which choice is best for you.

Other IRA options also offer tax advantages. For example, you can withdraw up to $10,000 from most IRA accounts without paying an early withdrawal tax, if you use the funds to buy a first home or pay for higher education.

For all the facts on Roth and other IRA benefits, see your 1999 tax booklet. Or check the IRS Web site: www.irs.gov

Fuzzy math:
One plus one makes three

Parents count trio of toddlers as triple blessing

Visitors to Staff Sgt. Wray and Tammy Gabelmann's Bouton Heights home are serenaded with a chorus of cheerful "hi's."

"It's their favorite word," Tammy explains, as three tiny Gabelmanns wave and repeat their greetings again and again.

"Hi. Hi. Hi."

"Come on now. Let's go find something to play," Tammy coaxes.

"Hi," replies Alexis, the first Gabelmann triplet to greet the world 20 months ago, June 22, 1999. Tammy said she's been the leader ever since.

"Hi," mimics her brother, Christian, a blue-eyed, dimpled blond with a never-ending smile. He's the silliest of the three, his mom says.

And true to form, Jackie, the third-born "thinker," sucks her thumb pensively and carefully chooses her words.

"Hi. Hi. Hi," she says, before she thrusts her thumb back into her mouth and toddles away.

Tammy and Wray were high school sweethearts, both Air Force brats, who married in 1990, two months before Wray joined the Army. With a history of multiple births in both families, neither doubted they would have a family of their own some day. But after eight years, a series of fertility tests and a myriad of medical procedures, Tammy nearly gave up hope of having a baby.

"We decided to give it one last shot. We tried invitro fertilization," she said. "It took, obviously. We were shocked. Extremely happy, but definitely shocked. I think it hit Wray the hardest."

"My first thought was 'Am I ready for this, and how much is it going to cost?'," Wray laughed. "We suddenly had three times the number of questions and concerns most people have when they find out they're pregnant, and we didn't get the opportunity to practice with one."

Tammy calls them "miracle babies." They were delivered at 33 weeks after a "smooth pregnancy and a fairly easy 7-hour labor."

Brother Chris checks out his sisters', Alexis and Jackie, driving skills at their Bouton Heights home.

Alexis, the first, was also the heaviest, at 3 pounds, 9 ounces. Jackie weighed 3 pounds, 2 ounces, and at 2 pounds, 15 ounces, Christian was the smallest, though not for long. "Big brother Chris" is now the largest of the three.

The Gabelmanns moved from Fort Hood, Texas, to Fort Benning when the triplets were two months old. As a drill sergeant for 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training

Author puts moms, dads through Parenting 101

Educators, parents take 'three tenet test'

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 300 parents and educators took to the classroom last week at the ninth annual Parent Academy, sponsored by Fort Benning Schools and Family Advocacy Program.

The subject was Parenting 101, and the instructor was Barbara Coloroso, international speaker, parenting educator and author of Parenting With Wit and Wisdom and Kids are Worth it.

Coloroso conducted two seminars, Feb. 22 and 23, at Faith Middle School and the Officers' Club. She shared the 1,2,3s of raising children to be responsible, resourceful, caring adults.

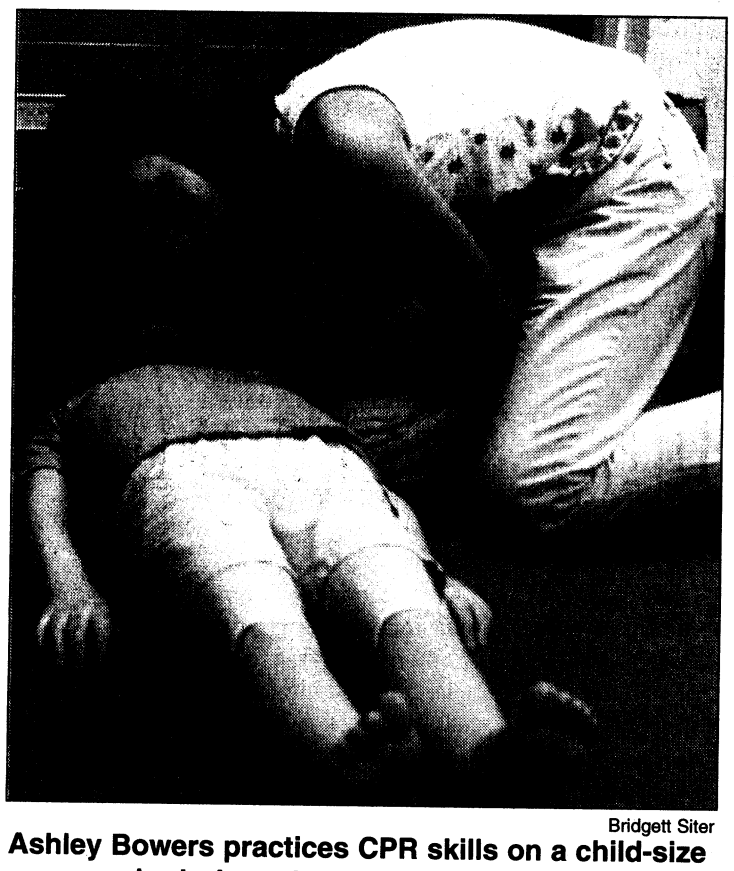
Coloroso said she bases her parenting philosophy on three tenets:

- Kids are worth it. "I'm sure you believe this," she said. "Because I know you're not in parenting for the money."
- I won't treat them in a way I wouldn't want to be treated. "If I wouldn't want it done to me, I have no business doing it to my child."
- If it works and leaves both our dignities intact, do it. "Just because it works doesn't make it good; it must work and leave the child's and my own dignity intact."

When parents dole out punishment for mistakes, Coloroso said, they typically don't pass the "three tenet test."

"Punishments are adult-oriented, judgmental, they impose power from without, arouse anger and resentment and actually invite more conflict," Coloroso said.

"We must discipline instead of punishing, and there is a big difference. Discipline gives life to learning. Discipline shows children what they've done wrong, it gives them ownership of the problem, gives them ways to solve the problems they have created and leaves their dignity intact."



Discipline often includes consequences, Coloroso pointed out, which is not the same as punishment.

"Some consequences are just natural," she said. "If a child leaves his bike out and it gets stolen or ran over, the consequence is he's without a bike. But sometimes we, as parents, have to come up with a consequence."

Coloroso said consequences need to be reasonable, simple, valuable and practical.

"For instance, if a toddler breaks a glass you told him not to touch, it would be unreasonable to make him pick up the glass, but it wouldn't be unreasonable to make him hold the bag while you pick up the pieces," she said.

Sitters practice child care skills

Course offers sitters hands-on experience

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Cathy Johnson enjoys babies so much that she's willing to tackle the dirtiest jobs to get the chance to baby-sit.

"Stinky diapers. That's the worst," the Faith Middle School sixth-grader said. "But I can handle it. I have a little brother. It can't get any worse than him."

Johnson participated in the American Red Cross Baby-sitter's Training at Fort Benning Saturday. She learned the proper techniques for holding and carrying a baby and a few basic first-aid procedures. She practiced CPR on a child-size mannequin, and much to her surprise, she even learned how to diaper a baby the old-fashioned way — something her little brother's dirtiest diapers hadn't prepared her for.

"Cloth diapers?" she shrieked. "No way. Who uses cloth diapers? Gross."

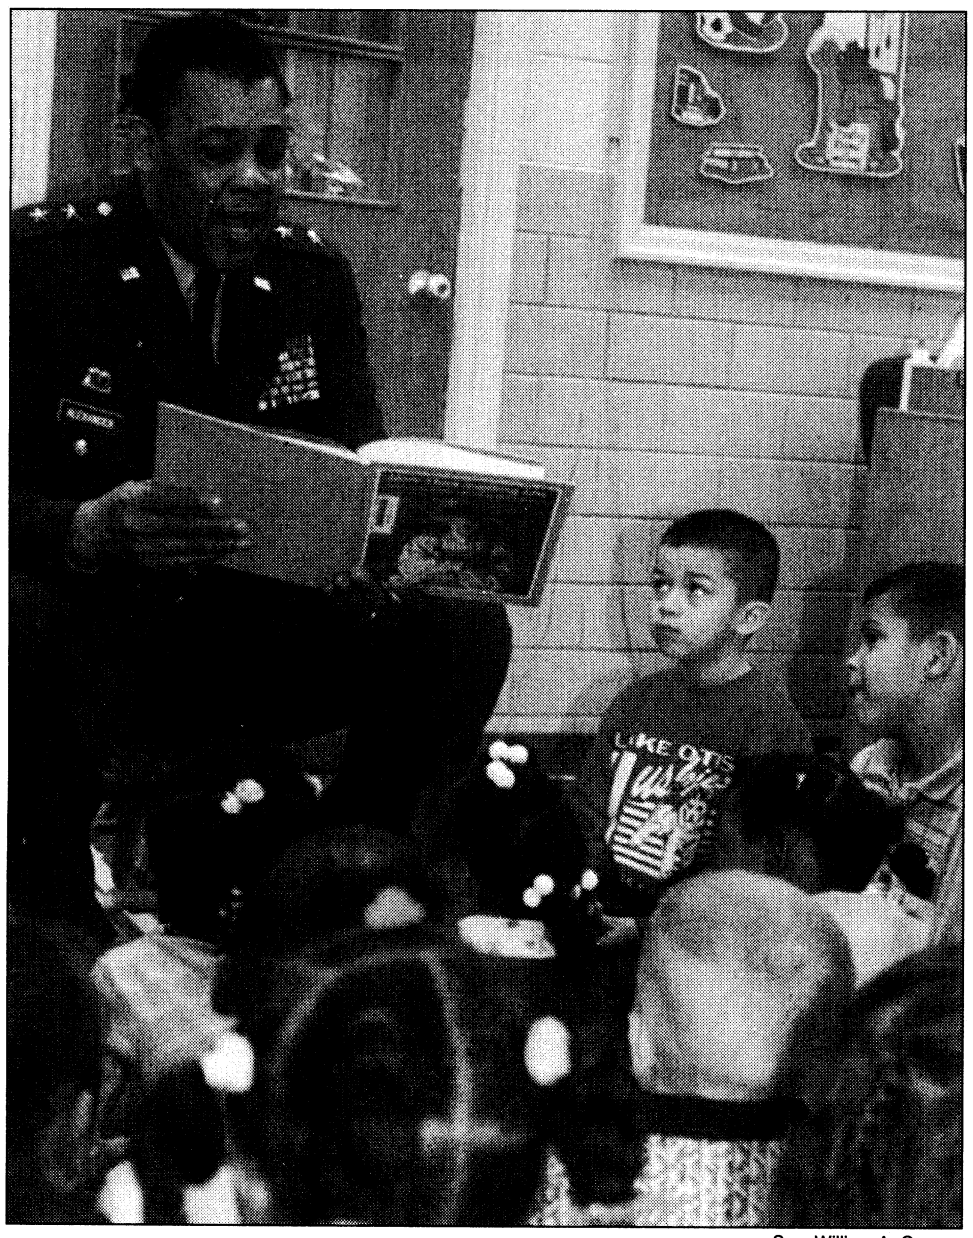
But Johnson and her 14 classmates survived the diaper pins and padded cotton and left feeling much more confident about their ability to handle any baby-sitting crisis.

"I've baby-sat before, but I feel better now that I've taken the course," said 11-year-old Joycelin Johnson. "I feel more prepared because I know what I should do if someone is choking or not breathing."

Fort Benning regulation requires baby-sitters to be certified. Anyone older than 12 who will be left in charge of younger siblings or other children must participate in the eight-hour course, sponsored by the West Central Georgia Chapter of the American Red Cross.

Michele Walton, Red Cross health and safety coordinator, and a team of volunteers conduct classes about once a month at Building 2626 in Soldiers Plaza. Walton said participants each receive a card that certifies them to baby-sit on any military post.

"Certification is a requirement on post, but we recommend it for off-post residents also," she said. "The age requirement may vary from town to town, but we offer the course to anyone 11 and older here on Fort Benning."



Much of the class is spent discussing various crises that can arise while baby-sitting — everything from a stranger at the door to a choking child. But the favorite part, Walton said, is the hands-on training with dolls and mannequins.

"They can't wait to get their hands on the dolls," she said. "If they're here for the class, they're serious about learning to take care of a baby, so they look forward to practicing with the dolls."

Students practice diapering, with cloth and plastic diapers, carrying and holding the dolls. They learn how to administer CPR on the baby-size dolls and a larger child-size mannequin. They also learn how to properly deliver abdominal thrusts and

Alabama adjutant general visits Loyd School

Spc. William A. Graves

Maj. Gen. Willie Alexander, Alabama's Adjutant General, reads More Than Anything Else to Loyd students as a part of the school's Black History Month celebration.

General shares black history with children

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The students and faculty of Loyd Elementary School continued their celebration of Black History Month Feb. 22 with a special guest — the first African-American adjutant general of Alabama.

Maj. Gen. Willie A. Alexander spoke to the third- through fifth-graders about black history during an assembly.

Alexander told the students stories of famous Americans such as Frederick Douglass, Jackie Robinson, Rosa Parks and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Blacks have overcome many difficulties during the past 150 years, such as back door service at restaurants and careers of servitude, he said.

"They have survived, persevered and succeeded," Alexander said. "They have all been well aware of their African heritage, but they were all Americans first."

Blacks have achieved the American Dream, he said. Examples of this are:

- They have built many businesses and economic empires.
- There are thousands of patents they developed at the U.S patent office.
- They have served with honor in all branches of the military and professional organizations.

"The progress made by former slaves and the descendants of slaves shows that a higher power is working on the hearts of all people."

He said the students should tap into that power to achieve their dreams.

They must pledge, regardless of ethnic background to move forward and do the right thing.

"Black America's future is in the hands of today's youth," the general said. "Each of you here today have the responsibility and duty to continue that journey."

Deone Patterson, fourth-grader, said he enjoyed the general's speech and learned valuable lessons.

"It made me feel the leaders who set us free care about my race," Patterson said.

He learned more about the bus boycott that Rosa Parks led, and he especially enjoyed the aspects of the speech about MLK, Thurgood Marshall and Hank Aaron.

Samantha Dobson, fourth grade, said it was nice to learn more about black history and its important figureheads.

"I learned that there are many black people who saved them from not being treated right and helped them be treated equally," Dobson said.

She enjoyed the portion of the address about Rosa Parks, "because she stood up to the bus driver and didn't give up her seat."

After the assembly, Alexander read More Than Anything Else to two groups of students from pre-K through second grade.

> "If you can read, you can do anything. So study hard, and you will succeed in life."
> Maj. Gen. Willie Alexander
> Alabama Adjutant General

The book is about Booker T. Washington's dream of reading. He wanted to be literate More Than Anything Else and became, "the foremost black educator of the late-19th and early-20th centuries," the general said.

Following the reading, Alexander asked the children questions and spoke about, "the magic of reading."

"If you can read and do math, you can do anything," he said. "So study hard, and you will succeed in life."

Cameron Norman said she enjoyed the reading and it was, "nice, because I like to read."

Justin Fox, pre-K, said the reading made him want to learn how to read well.

"I liked the whole book," said Denzel Robinson, first grader.

He said the reading reminded him that he has to study hard and learn how to spell words.

"If we learn how to read, we can do anything," Robinson said.

Tips: Sharpen skills

"If you find yourself drawing up a 10-page legal contract with your teen, it's too complicated. Keep it simple. Make it a valuable learning tool. Buying her friend a new book to replace the one your daughter ruined is simple, reasonable and a valuable learning tool. And it's practical. Punishing her for her mistake would be impractical and it wouldn't allow her to take ownership of the problem and solve it."

When facing reasonable consequences, Coloroso said kids will often try three con games to get parents to back down, give in or change their minds:

- Begging, bribing, weeping and wailing. "It is really hard not to give in to this con," she said. "You just have to be assertive and consistent."
- Anger and aggression. "Don't respond with anger, don't be passive and don't argue with this con," Coloroso said. "Again, be assertive. You have a responsibility to yourself not to put up with it and a responsibility to your child to teach him better ways of dealing with the situation."
- The sulk. "Normal, healthy kids will sulk for five minutes, gifted kids for 10. You deal with this con the same way you deal with the other two — be assertive."

The mother of three and a classroom teacher, Coloroso punctuated her message with personal anecdotes about her own successes and failures as a parent. She encouraged parents to acknowledge their own mistakes and "never be afraid to retract a statement or plan if it's stupid."

"If it's inefficient, impractical or just plain stupid, admit your mistake and look for a reasonable alternative," Coloroso said. "We're trying to teach our kids that mistakes aren't bad. They're just opportunities to learn. They'll start to hide their problems if you make them think mistakes are bad."

Helping kids learn to solve their problems and correct their mistakes is what discipline is all about, Coloroso said.

"Healthy discipline teaches kids six critical life messages," she said. "I believe in you, I trust you, I know you can handle it, you are listened to, you are cared for and you are important to me."

Course: Teaches safety

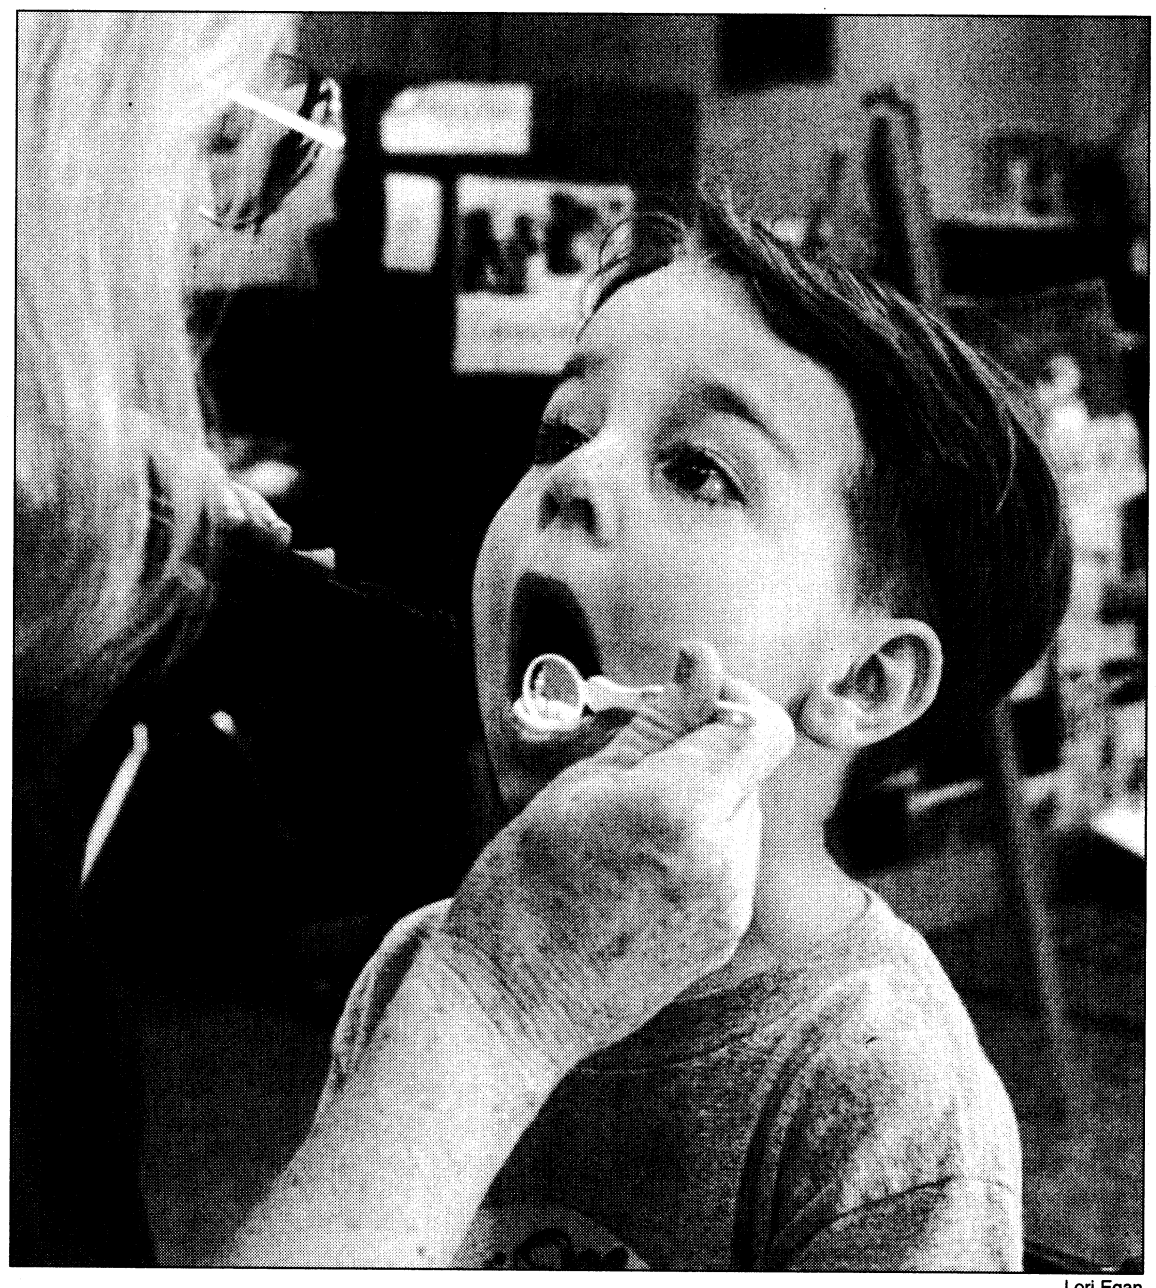
back blows to a choking child.

"And above all else, they learn that it's OK to call a parent when in doubt," said Staff Sgt. Charles Monfee, 17th Air Support Operation Squadron. "And of course, to call 911 in a true emergency."

Monfee has been a Red Cross volunteer for more than four years. He said the students in the baby-sitting course are typically enthusiastic about the class.



"They're eager and excited to learn," Monfee said. "And those that have baby-sat before are always anxious to share their experiences with the others. By the time they leave, you can see a tremendous turnaround in their confidence level."

Andrew Cole, 13, said he doesn't expect to ever have to use the techniques he learned, but he's confident he'll be prepared if an emergency arises.

"Just in case. I wanted to be sure I knew the basic life-saving skills," he said. "We talked about them and practiced them so I feel really confident."

Walton said a training class is scheduled for March 24. To make reservations for the class or to request a list of certified sitters, call 545-8221.

ask the judge

Capt. Aimee Hobby
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My wife and I just bought a house. Can you tell me if we're allowed to claim the mortgage interest as a deduction on our taxes?

A: Home mortgage interest is deductible by soldiers even if they are receiving tax-free Basic Allowance for Quarters. The law, however, may limit the amount of the deduction that may be claimed.

Under current law, home mortgage interest includes two categories of interest: interest upon acquisition indebtedness and interest on home equity indebtedness. Acquisition indebtedness is debt incurred in acquiring, constructing or substantially improving your principal or second residence.

You may also be allowed to refinance a home and substitute the new debt as acquisition indebtedness. The new debt qualifies as acquisition indebtedness, however, only to the extent it doesn't exceed the balance of the old debt.

Debts incurred to substantially improve a residence are also treated as acquisition indebtedness. The total allowable acquisition indebtedness for any period cannot exceed $1 million.

Home equity indebtedness also produces deductible mortgage interest. Home equity indebtedness is debt secured by the home to the extent that the total amount of the debt doesn't exceed the fair market value of the home reduced by the amount of acquisition indebtedness. Thus, the combined total of acquisition indebtedness and home equity indebtedness cannot exceed the fair market value of the home total for two residences.

The total amount of home equity indebtedness cannot exceed $100,000. The total amount of home equity indebtedness and acquisition indebtedness on both the principal residence and a second home cannot exceed $1.1 million.

If the amount of the acquisition indebtedness and home equity indebtedness is below the limits, all mortgage interest paid during the tax year is deductible provided the taxpayers itemize on their returns.

A qualified principal residence is your main residence. This can include a house, cooperative apartment, condominium, house trailer or houseboat. A qualified second residence may include an unused residence if not rented, a residence that is used part of the year or a rented residence.

If the residence is rented out, it is subject to the use requirements relating to vacation homes (must be used for at least 14 days or 10 percent of the rental period, whichever is greater).

You should not overlook the three basic requirements for a home mortgage debt to be considered secured. First, the security instrument must make the debtor's interest in the residence specific security for the payment of the debt. Second, upon default, the residence must be subject to satisfaction of the debt with the same priority as a mortgage or deed of trust. Finally, the security instrument must be recorded or otherwise perfected under state law.

For more information, refer to IRS Publication 17, "Your Federal Income Tax," and IRS Publication 936, "Limits on Home Mortgage Interest Deduction."

Triplets: Keep parents on toes

Brigade, Wray's work hours are long and unpredictable.

Tammy said she learned early on not to "wait around for daddy when there are errands to run."

She stuffs a diaper bag with diapers and sippy cups, loads the minivan with a triple stroller, buckles three carseats and heads for the doctor's office, the commissary or the mall.

"Doctor appointments are the worst. When one gets sick, they all get sick," she said. "But we like to go to the mall or the bookstore. We can't just stay in the house all the time and it's not as much trouble as people think."

In public, Tammy said the triplets always draw attention.

"Everybody asks questions," she said. "Usually I don't mind, unless I'm in a hurry or the kids aren't cooperating. But sometimes the questions do get intrusive. People tend to ask about their births, like did we use fertility drugs. Does it really matter? Sometimes I tell them it was natural, because they're here, they're healthy, they're perfect — what could be more natural?"

Most people assume triplets mean three times the work of one child, Tammy said, and in the early days that was the case.

"Of course it's more work at bath time and supper time and when it's time to change diapers, but they don't demand my undivided attention constantly like they did when they were babies," Tammy said. "Now I can sit and read while they're entertaining each other. In some ways I think it must be easier than having one child because they are each other's playmates, and they're pretty much on a schedule so they nap at the same time."

On the other hand, Tammy said the triplets recently learned to climb out of their cribs and open drawers and cabinets, and she's anticipating new challenges in the next few months.

"We have three little potties now," she laughed. "They like to look at them, but they haven't figured it all out yet. That's going to be a lot of fun."

It"s the financial challenges the family will face in the years to come that concerns Wray the most.

"We went from two people living large to an instant family," he said. "We immediately had to rethink our budget.

"Not only are we spending an astronomical amount of money on diapers and milk, but we have to think about things like college and weddings. Since this is our first set we're learning as we go."

Panthers on prowl at Loyd Elementary School

Loyd Elementary School

The Panther Pride Run and Walk Program is a schoolwide fitness program, initiated by physical education teacher Sherri McKendree.

The program is designed to help motivate students to become physically fit and to enjoy running or walking on a regular basis.

Students participate in the program during physical education class and are encouraged to continue it after school with friends or family.

Take-home activity calendars are sent home each month and parents are invited to join the students in PE occasionally.

The run and walk program is an important part of the school's physical education curriculum.

Lively music is played during the running time and students who do not enjoy running are encouraged to "walkie-talkie" with friends to make the time enjoyable.

At the beginning of the year and again at the end, students are allowed to run a mile and are timed for the fitness test.

Sometimes a "Fun Run" is held and they receive a special sticker or token for completing a mile.

At Loyd, students are given 10 minutes once a week to run, jog, or walk for fitness. Students are given a wooden craft stick for each lap and a running total of each student's laps is recorded.

For motivational purposes, the gym is decorated with charts showing each student's progress.

On the field, six laps are equal to a mile. When students reach five miles they receive a membership card for the Panther Pride Club, a foot token to put on their shoe laces and a sticker to put by their name on the chart in the gym.

Upon completion of 10 miles, they receive a Panther Pride Club badge, another token and another sticker for the chart. Additional foot tokens and stickers are awarded at each five-mile interval.

At the end of the year, top runners in the school as well as top runners in each class are recognized with trophies and ribbons provided by the PTO.

Occasionally games are played with the younger students to keep their interest in running. An example of this is near Halloween when they are given a different Halloween character to turn into for each lap.

Older students are encouraged to figure their own mileage and keep up with it for practice in math. Some like to compare their class averages with those of the other classes.

Literacy is incorporated into the physical education curriculum in many ways.

One way is from games students play that require reading, identifying the alphabet, colors, numbers, words, etc. or that involve math activities. All are very active games that keep the students moving while also focusing on learning.

Keeping students on their toes keeps McKendree busy finding new and challenging activities or games for students in all grade levels.

Loyd's PE curriculum is designed toward monitoring and improving student fitness.

The Presidential Fitness Test is given to all students in grades K-5 in September, and then plugged into a software program that creates a "Fitnessgram" for each student.

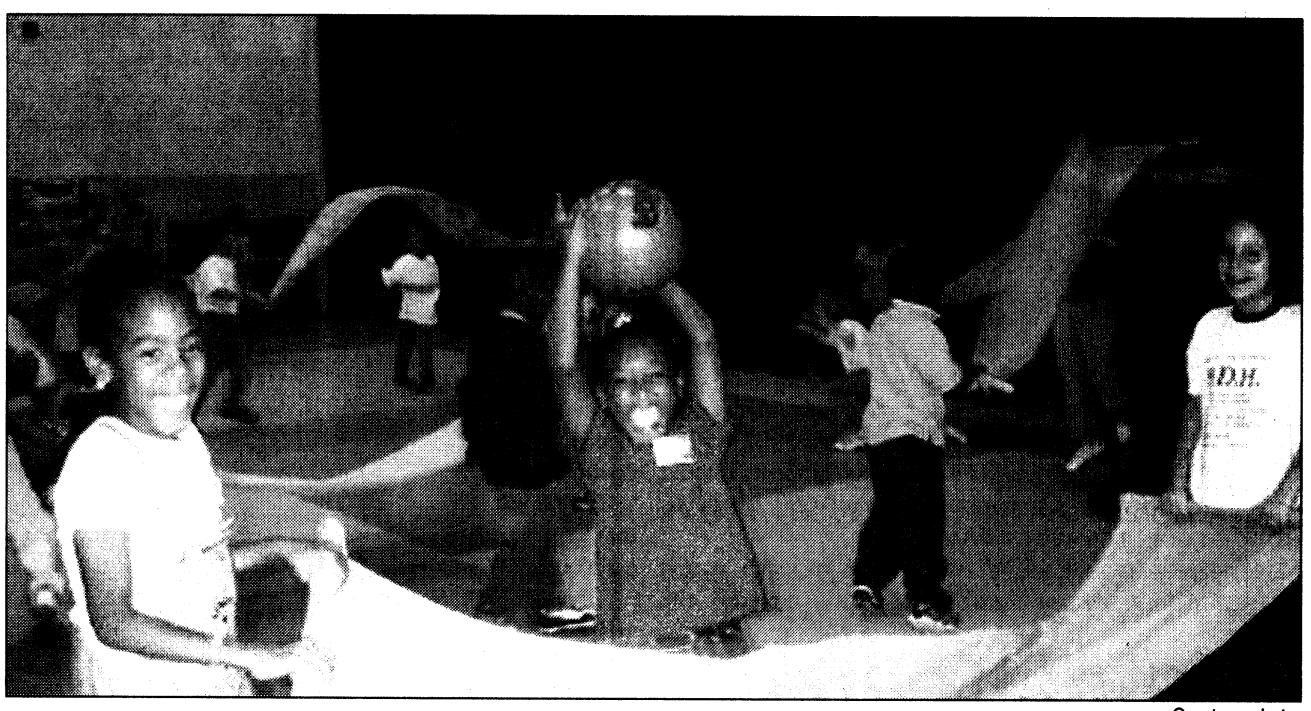
This is a type of fitness "report card" that identifies the areas of fitness and tells whether the student has reached the "healthy fitness zone" in each area.

The information from the fitnessgrams is used to assess the areas of strengths and weaknesses of the students and design the PE program to try to raise the scores on the weak areas and further enhance the strong areas.

The fitnessgram prints out suggested activities for individual students to do to improve his or her weak areas. Students are awarded gold, silver or bronze stars on the fitnessgrams when reaching the healthy fitness zone on all six, five of six or four of six items on the test.

The fitness test is given again at the end of the year to check for improvement.

The fitnessgram compares the end of the year scores with previous scores on the test.



Students qualifying for the National or the Presidential Fitness Awards receive these at an awards ceremony at the end of the year.

Gold, bronze or silver awards are also given. A school record is maintained on each student with scores from all the tests they take while at Loyd.

When asked about her philosophy of physical education, McKendree said, "I strive to develop a healthy attitude in my students toward physical activity. I do this by trying to introduce many varied activities in hopes of finding at least one or two that each student will enjoy enough to want to continue it after he or she leaves PE class.

"I feel that students should be excited and motivated about their PE classes, and it should light a fire within them that they want to keep fueling for a lifetime," she said.

"It is my responsibility to ensure that they are not turned off by physical activity at an early age. If they have already developed a negative attitude, I try to change that attitude to a more positive one."

Protect your child's smile

Fort Benning Dental Activity

The way children care for their bodies today will have an impact on their health years from now. The good news is that preventive dental care has greatly improved the oral health of American children.

It's now possible for many children to reach adulthood without ever experiencing tooth decay.

Tips for parents and caregivers to help children keep their teeth healthy include:

- Take your child to see the dentist regularly, beginning by the child's first birthday.
- Put water only in a child's naptime or bedtime bottle.
- Start brushing as soon as the child's first tooth appears.
- Begin flossing when two teeth begin to touch.
- Make certain your child gets the fluoride needed for decay-resistant teeth. Ask your dentist how this should be done.
- Ask your dentist about dental sealants, a thin protective barrier that shields the chewing surface of the back teeth against tooth decay.

Good oral health practices should begin in infancy and continue throughout adult life. In your child's early years, you must provide this care.

Later you will need to instruct, monitor and motivate your child to help maintain good oral health habits.

Attitudes and habits established at an early age are critical in maintaining good oral health throughout life.

Purim is time to celebrate life, faith

Chaplain (Capt.) Stan Vaughan
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment (Mechanized)

reflections

The Jewish festival of Purim has its origins in the Book of Esther. (You may want to read the Book of Esther along with this article).

No matter your religious preference, you will find in the Book of Esther a story about faithfulness, risk, love for God's people and working within the limits of a given structure.

If you want to find illustrations for Army values you need only look to the Book of Esther. The main players Esther, Mordecai, Haman and the King Ahasuerus interact around themes of loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage. Yes, they are all in there.

What stands out to me is God triumphs over evil. The victory comes only after much suffering and anguish.

We cannot overlook nor downplay the role of suffering in this story. The text refers to wailing while in sackcloth and ashes as well as fasting and weeping and lamenting (Esther 4:1-3).

The drama exposes the very soul of the Jewish people: oppressed, taken for granted, more than expendable. What appears to be a legal order frames the story.

It is really an abuse of power driven by a personal grudge.

Thus, the planned genocide requires only execution. Thankfully a strong bond exists between Esther and Mordecai. They prevent tragedy and deliver the Jewish people.

I think that there is much to celebrate.

Nothing brings people together like shared experiences, especially the experience of suffering.

When everyone experiences the same threats and destiny, they instantly have much common ground.

Their petty differences no longer seem to divide. The threat of annihilation seemed to provide a perspective with which everyone could identify.

Occupation, position, education and income no longer separated people from each other. In spite of their differences, they were able to unite for a common purpose: simply staying alive.

I also think that there is reason to give thanks to God. For all the times that perhaps we should get what is coming to us, God provides for and delivers us.

We all face Hamans in life who seek to destroy us with wicked plans. He provides a way for us to continue living and hopefully growing as his people. I think that the characters of Esther and Mordecai provide us a life map for integrity.

God clearly shows us what he expects and honors. As the story affirms, God ultimately does triumph over evil. It is God who ultimately preserves us. For this we do need to celebrate.

When the time arrives to celebrate Purim this year, pause and participate in a festival of life that promotes the well being of everyone. We also celebrate the preservation of God's people as people of faith and perseverance.

Moral standards make us human

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Obedience to the letter of the law does not exempt us from doing what is right.

Slavery was legal in the U.S. for more than 100 years. Jim Crow laws permitting discrimination continued for decades after the Emancipation Proclamation.

Redlining suburbs to prevent other races or ethnic groups from buying property is still permitted in some areas, but isn't moral.

Enacting laws to abolish slavery, to rescind Jim Crow laws and to prevent redlining was and is the right thing to do.

The same is true with women's rights. The rights to own property, the right to vote and the privilege to serve in the military, at one time, were denied women in our country.

Fortunately, the people of the U.S. repealed these laws and did what was right by allowing women to own property, to vote and to serve in the armed forces.

If we use the standard of what is legal to guide our choices, our choice may fail the moral standards that govern our lives as individuals and soldiers.

The prophet Micah exclaimed that God has shown us what is right and good. "And what does the Lord require of you? To act justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with your God."

Let us strive to do what is right and fair, to take into account mitigating circumstances and to be in a right relationship with God.

Are you struggling with making the right moral choice? The staff at the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road can help you.

Call the center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com for more information on how to get help.

Local teacher finds dressage passion

Pfc. Mark Watson

Janie Pride shows off her award-winning pony, Ico.

Music instructor to show prize pony this spring

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

For one Fort Benning teacher, horsing around is the name of the game.

Janie Pride, a fine arts teacher at White Elementary School, owns a champion dressage pony.

Having previously owned two horses, Pride sold them and traveled to Holland two years ago to select a new horse.

"At the time I was training with a man from Holland, Verner Geven, and I told him I wanted one older and smaller horse with brilliant gates and a good temperament," Pride said. "I came home with two ponies."

The two Dutch warmblood ponies are not the typical waist high ponies that are a favorite of children, but they are classified as and are approximately size of a small horse.

"They have wonderful breeding, wonderful gates and I couldn't be happier."

Dressage began as military movements where the rider used his mount as a weapon.

With the horse no longer used in battle, dressage has changed from tactical movements to competition somewhat like an equestrian mix of gymnastics and ballet.

Dressage is now a competitive sport that has been part of the Olympics since 1912.

Possibly the most famous dressage animals are the white Lipizzan Stallions from the Spanish Riding School in Vienna, Austria.

Although Pride said the sport is dominated by larger horses, her ponies do well competing against larger horses.

Pride began riding when her husband was an instructor at the U.S. Army Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., and she worked part time. Using the stables where the cadets trained, Pride discovered dressage.

"I always wanted to ride," Pride said. "I had a half-time music teaching job and decided to ride after all these years. Its been a hobby my husband wished I would stop, but I haven't.

"Jumping never appealed to me. I just liked the thinking part of the sport and the closeness you have to your horse," she said.

Now, Pride owns two dressage

Raiders overcome size, Rock Force 50-47

Quickness, teamwork key to victory

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The speed of David was too much for the bulk of Goliath as the Raiders edged the Rock Force, 50-47, Monday night at Santiago Field House.

The three-point marksmanship of Timothy Edwards and presence of big man Michael Thomas in the paint helped the Rock Force climb back from an 11-point deficit and take a 47-46 lead with 1:08 on the clock.

Raider David Hickman hit the game winner with 43 seconds left, and Clifton Robb, came up with a huge steal six seconds later.

"I was able to stay open and rotate around the perimeter well to get the shot, then our defense came up big," Hickman said.

The Rock Force, of 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, had to foul four times before Robb went to the line for a one-and-one with six seconds remaining. He missed, but Raider Reginald Peterson, of 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, fought for and put back the offensive board.

"Their players weigh much more than ours," Hickman said. "Our team's speed kept us in the game and eventually won it for us."

With two seconds left, Edwards had an open look, but he could not drain his sixth three-pointer of the game.

The 5-3 Raiders led at halftime, 27-22, behind nine points from Mike Johnson and eight from Hickman. Edward Mills tallied seven and Edwards scored six for the 4-3 Rock Force. The Rock Force dressed only six, compared to the Raiders 10, but at halftime, Rock Force Battalion Commander Douglas McCallum suited up to give his team an emotional escalation. His team steadily chipped away at the Raider lead and tied the score at 33 at the 13:01 mark. Edwards finished with the half with 10 of his game-high 16 points and Thomas pounded in six points.

However, they were not enough, as Johnson added six of his team-high 15 for the Raiders, and Hickman contributed 5 of his 11.

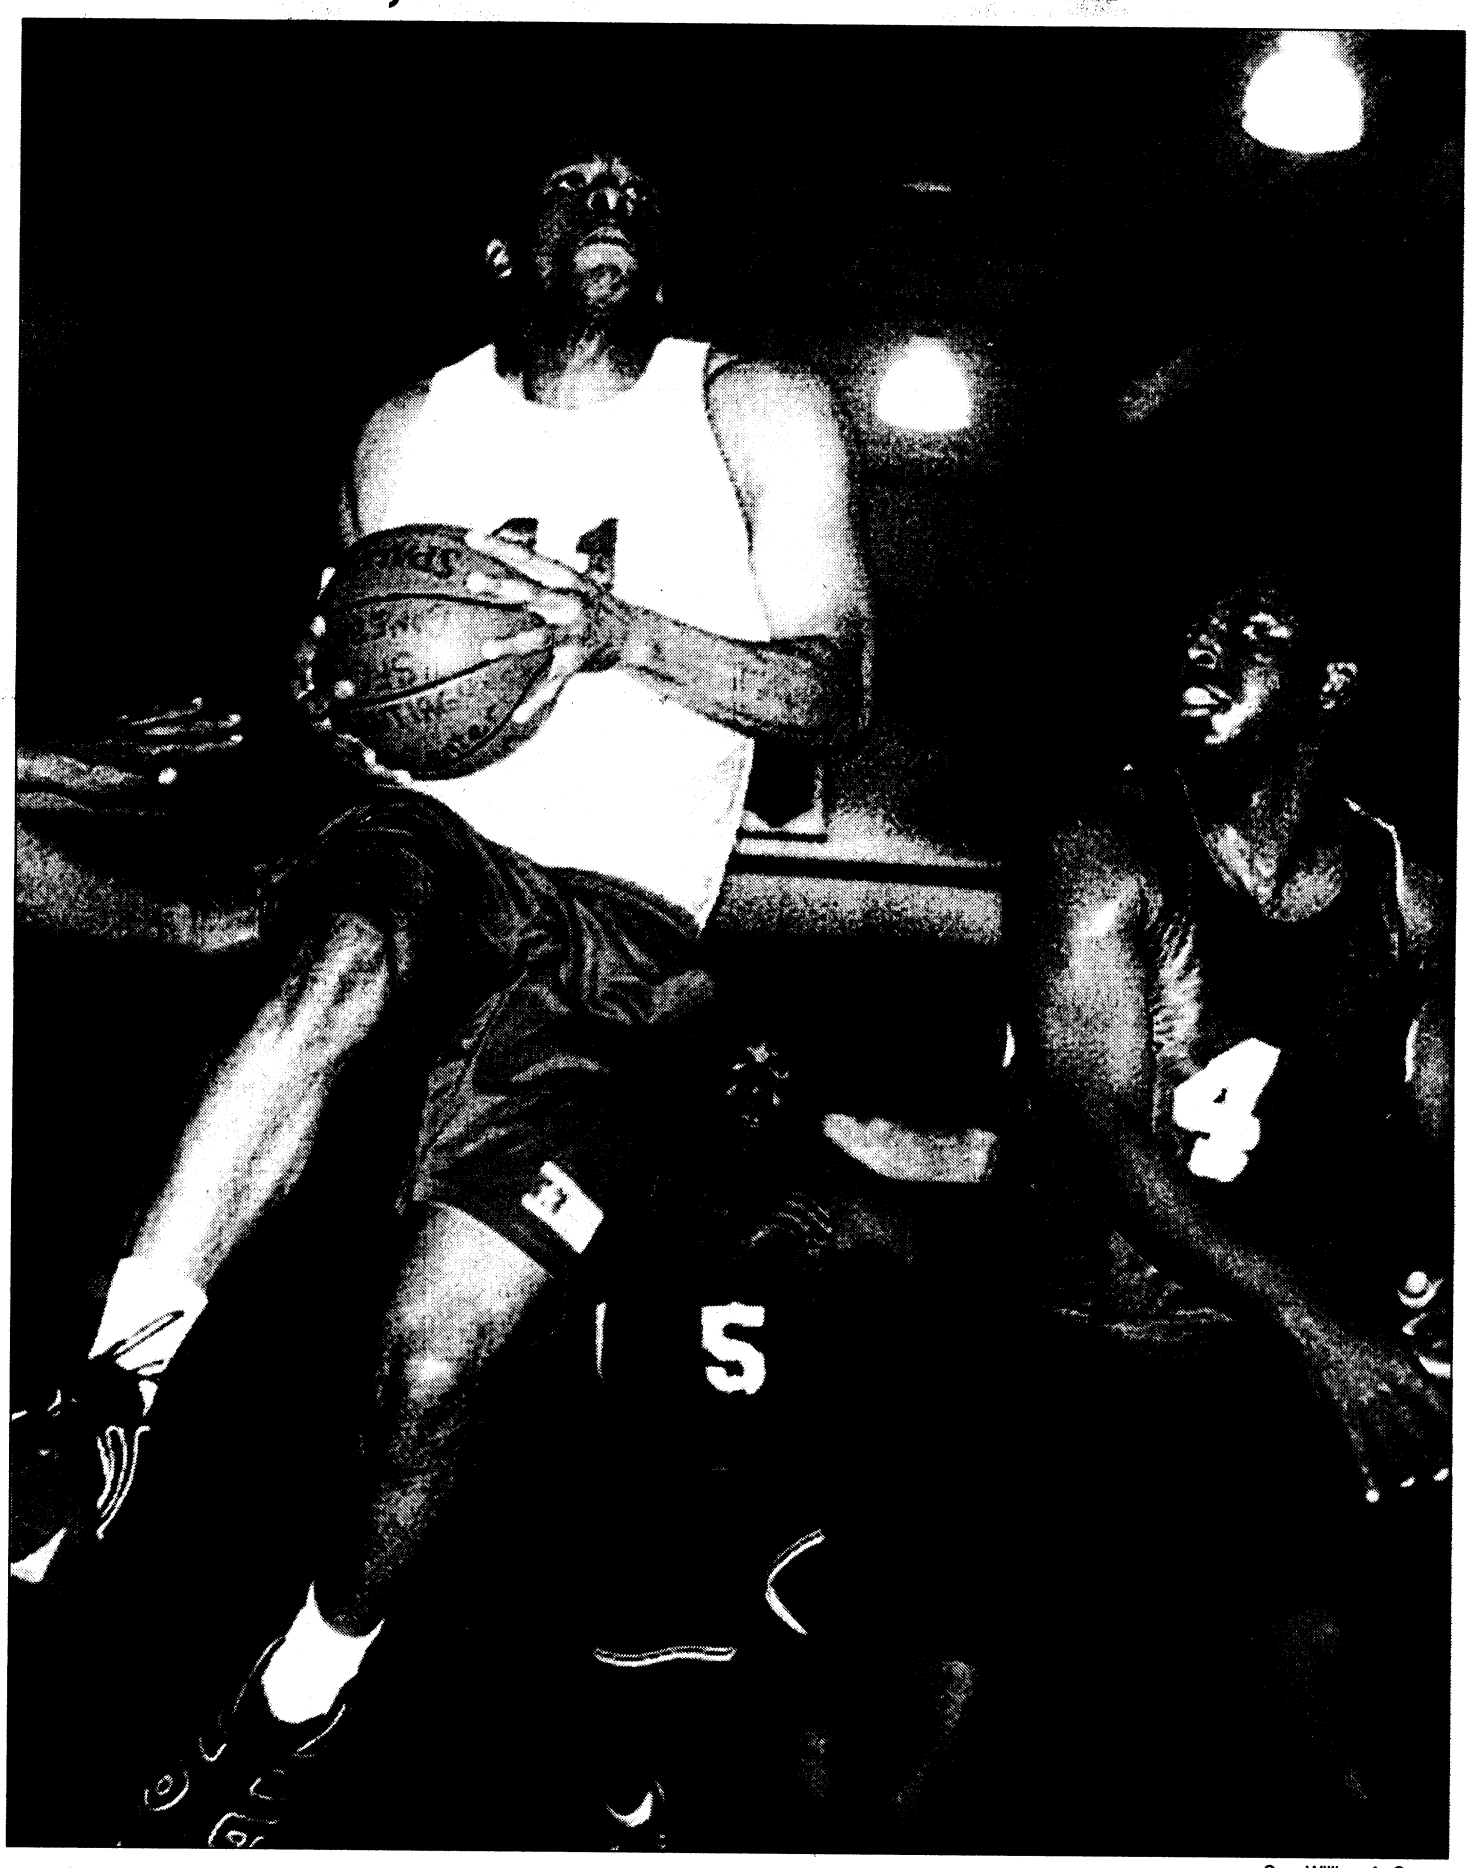
"We needed that victory in order to put us in good contention for the playoffs," Hickman said.

He said the key to victory was the Raider's aggressiveness when running the floor.

"Our fast break allowed us to hit some easy buckets," Hickman said. "If we stay on track like we did tonight, we'll take Sand Hill and have a good chance at post."

The game exhibited the guts of the Raiders, said Vondell Brown, Raider coach. They still have room for improvement, but an abundance of teamwork triggered the slaying of the Rock Force's giants.

"We boxed out pretty well and were able to pull down some crucial offensive rebounds," Brown said. "They may have been bigger and stronger, but they were also slower."



His team benefited from its quickness and played together better than its opponent.

"I'm proud of them," the coach said. "They did not allow the Rock Force to intimated them."

The game helped the Raiders understand if they do not use teamwork, they will lose close games, he said.

Another necessary ingredient to success is the first thing to remember in stressful situations, such as those near the end of the contest, Brown said.

"You have to have fun," he said. If you're not having fun, you're not going to win. We enjoyed ourselves tonight."

Fort Benning youths swim to state competition

Local girls form close friendship during swimming lessons

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

For two Fort Benning girls, the passion of their sport has created a close bond.

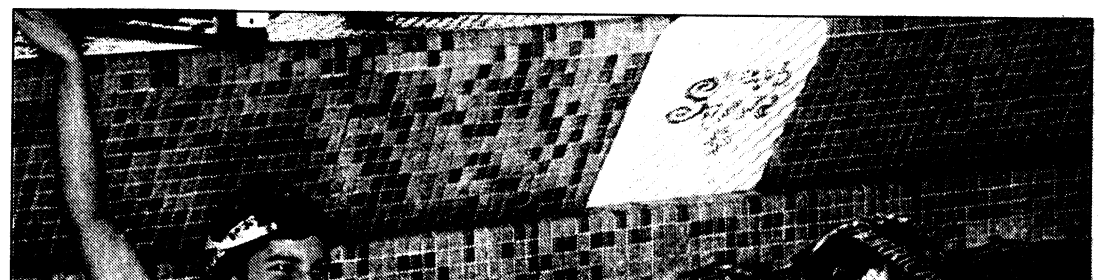
Loren Fuentes, 11, and Alexus Small, 9, have swam side-by-side since September, when Fuentes and her family moved to post from Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

"She's my best friend," Small said.

And that became apparent as the two swam their laps in the D.A. Turner YMCA. They pushed each other trying to better their times, and when they had a break they chatted.

Both Fuentes and Small began swimming at an early age.

"I began taking swim lessons when I was 2," Fuentes said.



Three years later, she was pleading her mom to let her join a swim team.

"When I was 5, I was really bugging her to let me swim, but the team wouldn't let me join until I was 6."

Small got her feet wet after watching the Olympics.

"She was 5 years old and watching the Olympics on TV," Small's mom, Reginna Small said. "When she saw the swimmers she turned

Family getaway found in Blue Ridge Mountains

Mountain lodging great for family fun, romance

outdoor corner

There are two types of people in this world — those that love the mountains and those that love the beaches. I'm the former, but I married a beach bum, which just goes to prove opposites do attract, marry and live happily ever after if they learn the fine art of compromise.

I love the beach, don't get me wrong. But my spirit seems to soar with the altitude. Knowing that, my sun-loving husband gave me a wonderful anniversary present — a weekend in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

We stayed at Camp Merrill, home of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga., and much to my surprise the accommodations were four-star by ranger standards. No room service mind you, but the adorable little lodge we rented for pocket change came complete with two bedrooms, full bath, kitchen, living room and a covered porch with a mountain view.

So much for so little — room enough for the whole family. It was a shame we didn't take the kids along.

Yeah, right, I knew you wouldn't buy that.

But the truth is, Dahlonega is a great escape, whether you're looking for romance or fun for the whole family.

The beauty of Dahlonega is its location. It's smack dab in the middle of all that's wonderful about Northeast Georgia. We spent the whole weekend traipsing from one tiny, historic village to the next, exploring all the little novelty shops and antique stores. And along the way we enjoyed the breathtaking beauty of the Blue Ridge Mountains and Vogel State Park, Georgia's second oldest state park.

Dahlonega got its name from the Indian word "telonaga," which means golden. It's the site of the nation's first gold rush back in 1838. The tiny town centers around the old Lumpkin County courthouse, circa 1860, which now houses a gold museum. And strewn about in all directions is an array of unique little restaurants and shops that hawk everything from gold dust to home made fudge. After Dahlonega, we visited Blairesville and Cleveland and Murphy, N.C., all just a stone's throw away. We spent a couple of hours at a flea market in Murphy, explored art studios in Blairesville and discovered BabyLand General Hospital in Cleveland. That's where Cabbage Patch babies are born and adopted by loving families. We'll take the girls there on our next trip and we'll add a new member to our family.

And on our next trip, we'll pan for gold and tour the Consolidated Gold Mine, the largest gold mining operation east of the Mississippi in the late 1800s.

We'll picnic in one of the three local state parks, go horseback riding on Big Cedar Mountain and visit Amicalola Falls, the state's highest waterfall. If we're feeling really adventuresome, we'll take an innertube or kayak down the Chattahoochee River.

We've already made plans to see the mountains the old fashion way — by train. The Blue Ridge Scenic Railroad offers a 26-mile round trip along the Toccoa River, and while we're at it, we may as well take a day trip to nearby Chattanooga, Tenn., to learn more about our country's early railway system.

After two days in the Blue Ridge Mountains I came home hungry for more. We've already reserved a lodge for another trip this spring. Since Camp Merrill only has two lodges for guests, you'd better call in advance to reserve the Country Cottage or the Hunting Lodge, both $20 a night, with a two-night minimum. For more information, call 706-867-7748, or visit Dahlonega's Web page at www.dahlonega.org.

Tournament to raise money for rape crisis center

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Local basketball players and the Russell County Rape Crisis Center will work together this month to raise awareness toward a common goal.

Fort Benning is invited to participate in the upcoming first Benefit Basketball Tournament March 17 at the C-Club Gym in Phenix City. All proceeds from the event will benefit the Russell Rape County Crisis Center.

"We're trying to create more awareness in the community, as well as have fun in a relaxed atmosphere," said Elizabeth Nason, rape crisis response coordinator.

April is Sexual Assault Awareness Month. Russell County Rape Crisis Response hopes the tournament will increase awareness of the issue throughout the local area.

The center will use proceeds to purchase such things as clothing and personal supplies for rape survivors.

Each team has an entry fee of $100, which can be paid through a sponsor or by team members. All parties interested in forming a team have until Wednesday to register.

Pam Holton, executive director, Russell County Tri-Aid Inc., said she would like to see more men supporting the issue at the local level, including Fort Benning soldiers.

"I think it'd be nice for Fort Benning soldiers to contribute to rape survivors because people never know when they may need that type of support," said Spc. Lashunda Smith, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "Twenty dollars per player isn't a lot of money to help out a good cause like this."

The games begin at 11 a.m. with a trophy award ceremony at the close of the tournament. Refreshments will also be available for participating team members. Game tickets will be available at the door for $1. Door prizes will be awarded during the game.

The Russell County Rape Crisis Center has been open for nearly three years. Last year, the agency held "Workout Against Rape" at a local fitness center to raise money and get the community involved. The event raised more than $1,200.

"We're trying to bring a very important message that this isn't just a women's issue," Nason said. "Sexual assault does happen here and needs to be addressed and not pushed under a rug."

"Help society. That's the only excuse you need to play," said 2nd Lt. Will Wright, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment.

For more information, call Nason at 291-8545.

ponies, one of which, Ico, has been recognized as a champion.

The 5-year-old gelding has won numerous awards including the title of the 2000 Pony of the Year by the American Warmblood Society. She said it was the first year the society offered the title.

Although Ico is relatively new to dressage, he has already progressed to third level, nearly halfway through the dressage training program with Grand Prix the highest level. Pride said she hopes, with the help of her trainer and his wife, who have been showing the ponies, to get Ico to Grand Prix level, the Olympic-quality level.

Although Pride hasn't shown her ponies for several years, due to a riding accident, she plans on competing this spring.

"She really loves this," retired Lt. Col. Sam Pride, her husband, said. " She's done very well with it. She gets better all the time.

"It's just neat to see with the animals and gain the confidence and do better each time she rides them."

The two said they hope Janie takes over the showing responsibilities.

"It's going to happen," Janie said."

"Our goal is for Jamie to ride them and win," Sam said. "She's not there yet, but she will be."

around and said, 'Mommy I want to be an Olympic swimmer,' so we got her started in swimming lessons and we've been doing them since."

Now several years after beginning swimming lessons, both have their sights set on making it to the Olympics.

"I want it to the 2004 Olympics," Alexus said. "I will be 13 then, followed by the 2008 Olympics in China."

Fuentes also has hey mind set on the upcoming summer games.

Their coach, Mike McCardle, said even at a young age, he can see the girls' potential to go far in their swimming careers.

"They're still very young," McCardle said. "A lot of things can happen. If they have the desire, if they have it in their hearts to do it, right now they're very phenomenal in the water and are doing a super job."

Although not at Olympic level, the girls participated in the Georgia State Championships, in Savannah, Ga., Feb. 22-25. Both participated in seven events. Alexus placed the highest of the two with a sixth place finish in the 100 yard back stroke. Fuentes did not place in her events but bettered her times on all races. Even though she did not place, Fuentes said she was very happy with her results.

"I was really glad to be there," Fuentes said. "I had just aged up so I really wanted to go there with all the older kids and prove that I could be there."

Alexus said she had a lot of fun there meeting new people and felt it was an honor to go to the state championships being one of the best young swimmers in Georgia.

Along with swimming, Fuentes is involved with several activities.

"Back in Kansas I was involved in Girl Scouts, gymnastics, acrobatics and swimming," she said. "Here I am in Girl Scouts and swimming. And I will soon start with acrobatics."

Alexus has just as busy of a schedule as her friend. She is involved with dance classes, piano lessons along with her swimming.

Both are straight A students.

The duo said they swim nearly every day, but they don't tire.

"You get tired of not being able to do things that you want to do," Fuentes said. "But swimming is actually fun for me."

Alexus said she loves to swim even though there is a lot of work and time involved.

"It is a lot of fun," Alex said. "You like the sport but you don't like it if your mom pushes you to much. She doesn't push me too much, but she just said she wants to help me get better.

"But it is all worth it."

Bush budgets for defense

$310.5 billion to strengthen, transform military

Jim Garamone
Army News Service

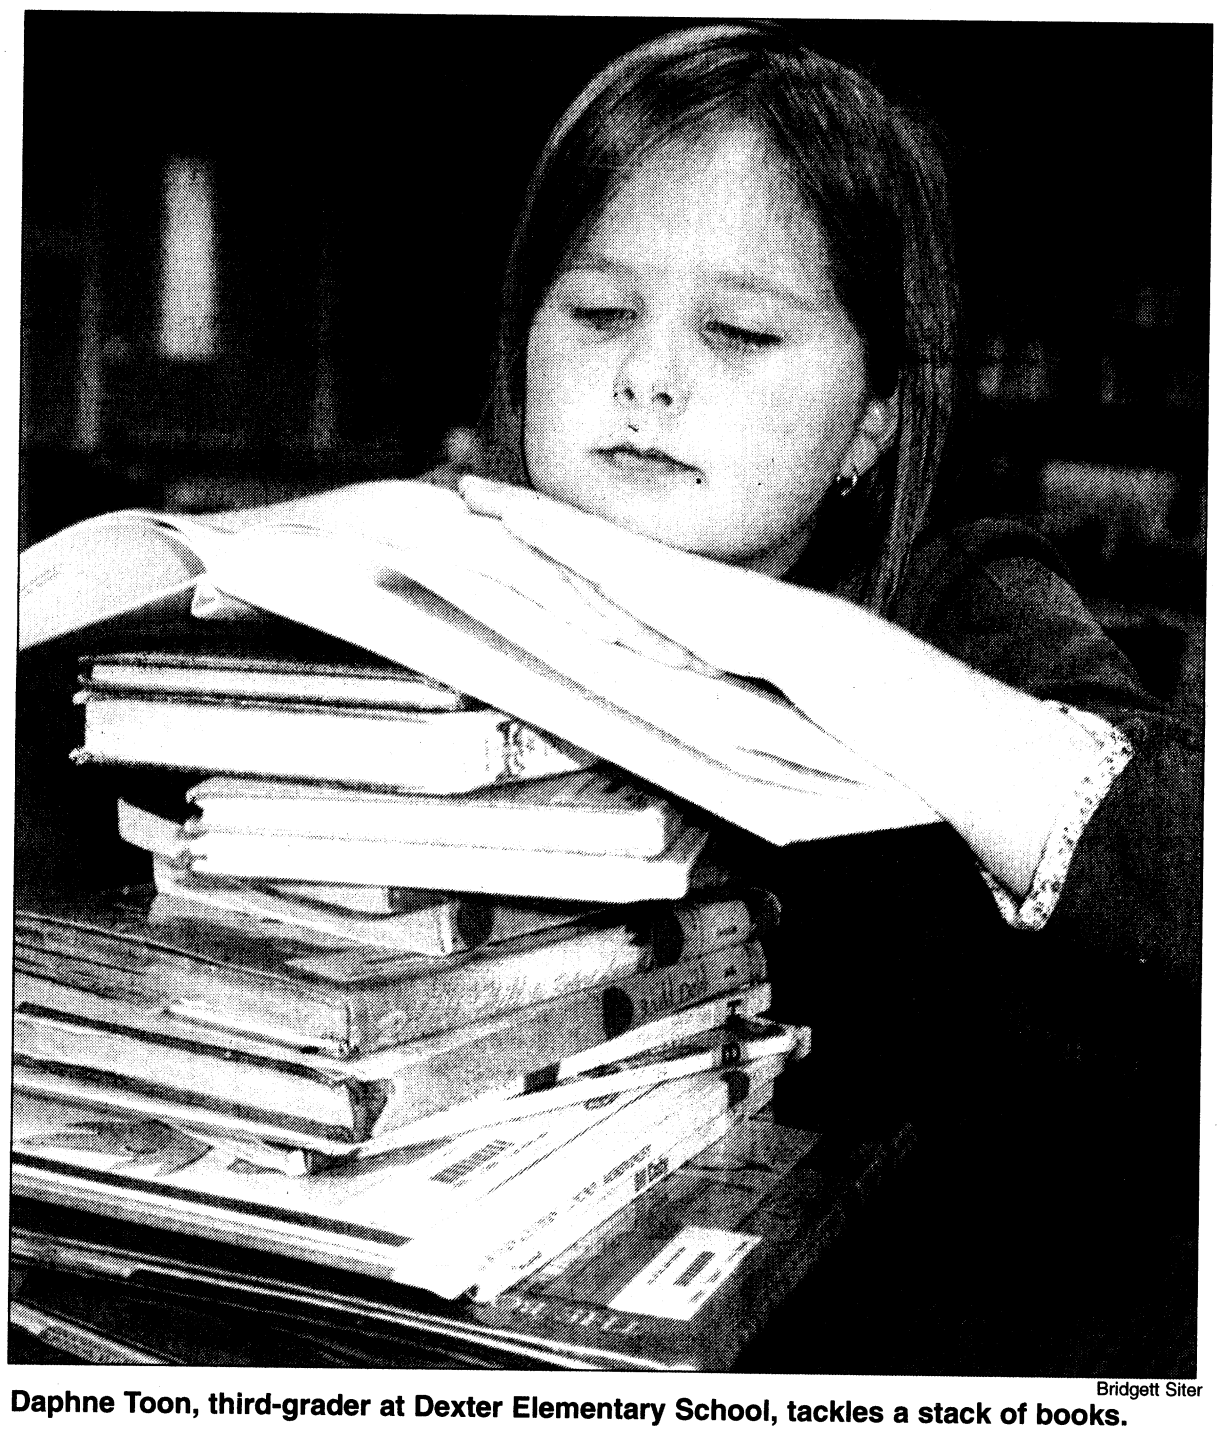
WASHINGTON — President Bush has recommended a defense budget of $310.5 billion for fiscal 2002.

Bush spoke before a Joint Session of Congress Feb. 27. Overall, the fiscal 2002 budget request is a "reasonable" 4 percent more than the fiscal 2001 budget. The fiscal 2001 DoD budget is $296.3 billion.

The budget request concentrates on personnel. It includes an extra $1.4 billion for a boost to military pay and another $400 million to build or refurbish military housing.

"The budget I propose to you also supports the people who keep our country strong and free, the men and women who serve in the United States military," he said. "I am requesting $5.7 billion in increased military pay and benefits and health care and housing. Our men and women in uniform give America their best, and we owe them our support."

Bush said the U.S. military will change. In documents released by the Office of Management and Budget, Bush called for changes in the Cold War strategy that continues to dominate the American military. The threat of a massive nuclear attack from the Soviet Union has been replaced by threats from rogue states bent on acquiring weapons of mass destruction and terrorism.



"We'll promote the peace," Bush said. "And we need a strong military to keep the peace."

The military must change if it is to remain relevant and able to defend the country and American interests. "Our defense vision will drive our budget, not the other way around," Bush said.

He said the budget request makes a "down payment" on the research and development necessary to transform the military. In the OMB document, Bush calls for an increase in military research and development

Join the club, the Dexter Elementary Reading Club, that is.

Currently 38 students have claimed membership since the club first began last fall, said Kris Keske, fifth-grade teacher and club sponsor, and each week "new recruits" join the crowd.

"We're running out of room in my classroom," Keske said. "We're going to have to find a new place to meet or bump out a couple of walls."

Everyone's welcome, but membership does have its requirements.

"You just gotta love to read, that's all," said 8-year-old Daphne Toon, who joined the club with her 11-year-old sister, Emily.

Soldier dies in car accident

Lori Egan
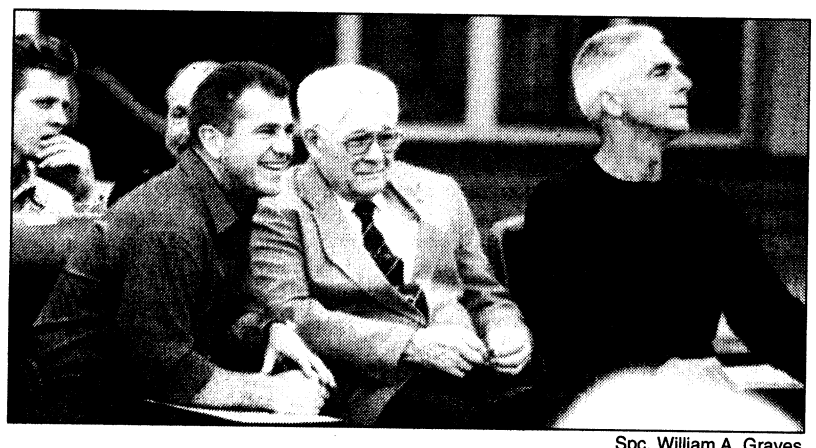
Bayonet editor

A Fort Benning soldier assigned to Camp Merrill in Dahlonega, Ga., died March 1 after a head-on collision on Highway 60 near Gainesville, Ga.

Pvt. Christopher J. Ware, 19, was southbound on the two-lane highway Feb 28. While attempting to pass, he crossed over the double yellow line and struck the vehicle driven by Katherine Edwards, from Dahlonega, Ga.

Edwards died on the scene, and Ware was transported by air medevac to Grady Memorial Hospital in Atlanta. Officials reported no alcohol or drugs were involved.



Ware, from Branson, Mo., was in the process of inprocessing into the 5th Ranger Training Battalion's Ranger Support Element at the time of the accident.

"He seemed to be a motivated and extremely physically fit young soldier. He had a bright future with this unit," Capt. Will Weycker, Headquarters and Headquarters Company commander, said. "I was looking forward to working with him.

"This was indeed a tragedy, not only for the unit but for the Ware and Edwards families," Weycker said.

A memorial service for Ware was March 1 at Camp Merrill. He is survived by his parents, Chris and Debbie Ware, his younger sister, Jennifer, 11, and his grandparents, Bob and Ursula Ware.

Three days before filming started at Fort Benning on Hollywood's adaptation of We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young, the commanding general recognized the movie's cast at a retreat ceremony March 2

However, stars Mel Gibson and Sam Elliott weren't the headliners. That honor went to three "quiet heroes from another time" — retired Command Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley, retired Sgt. 1st Class Ernie Savage and retired Lt. Col. Bruce Crandall.

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne paid tribute to the trio of Vietnam veterans whose story of heroism will be told in the upcoming movie, based on the book by retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and Joe Galloway.

Le Moyne described the veterans as "ordinary soldiers who did extraordinary things."

More than 1,000 soldiers, family members and civilian employees — most with cameras in hand — attended the ceremony in front of Infantry Hall.

commentary

For 11 months out of the year, I usually glance at the headlines in the sports section of the daily newspaper before tossing that part of the paper into the recycle bin.

Don't get me wrong. I like to read features on people who participate in sports — human-interest stories about men and women who set goals, and against whatever odds, strive to win games, races or medals.

However, I'm not one to read play-by-play coverage of events or statistics in tiny print.

I also can't bring myself to read about overpaid athletes who misbehave, commit crimes, abuse drugs or demand more money, and in recent years that's been a large part of what I've seen in the world of sports. It's too much to swallow, especially when you compare pro athletes' salaries to those of the men and women who defend our country, teach our children, fight our fires and protect our neighborhoods.

But when March rolls around, my reading habits change as I start checking the NCAA men's basketball tournament coverage. I'll even clip the graphic showing the regional pairings and fill in the winners' brackets all the way to the Final Four.

I usually pass on most televised sports, except when it comes to college basketball during tournament time. We're talking high drama here — three-point shots to win overtime games, Cinderella teams from out of nowhere defeating number one seeds and technical fouls called on overwrought coaches.

It's called "March Madness." But, for me, it's more like "Homecoming."

College basketball has been a part of my life from the time I was a little girl growing up in North Carolina surrounded by basketball fanatics.

By the time I entered the first grade there, I knew how to answer the popular playground question, "What's your favorite team?" There were only four real choices — Duke, N.C. State, Wake Forest or the University of North Carolina. No one cared about the NBA just yet. After all, Michael Jordan was shooting hoops on a similar playground in Wilmington, N.C., at this time, not flying through the air in Chicago.

At age 7, I declared myself a true, Carolina blue, Tar Heel. Out of spite, my brother chose the Wolfpack of N.C. State to support. The lines were clearly drawn, and it made for some interesting Saturday afternoons at the Smith house during televised Atlantic Coast Conference games.

I followed college basketball from the preseason until the final net was cut down in the post season.

I even told some kids at school that Dean Smith, the head coach at UNC then, was my uncle. I was joking, but some believed me because my father and Dean had the same long nose.

Unfortunately, "Uncle Dean" never sent me any tickets to Carolina's games. So, a few years later I decided the best way for me to get tickets was to apply to school in Chapel Hill and hope for the best.

I had four great years there, and one of the highlights was watching Air Jordan in person. He led UNC to a National Championship in 1982 over Georgetown, and one of his teammates, Matt Doherty, now coaches the Tar Heels.

I left my home state 14 years ago when I married a military man who just happened to be from Kentucky. He has his own "Wildcat" ideas about basketball and doesn't share my profound belief that the finest college teams come from my home state and the best rivalry in the game is between UNC and Duke.

(I've learned to accept our differences for the sake of our two children.)

The ACC tournament is taking place in Atlanta this weekend. I hope Carolina plays better than it did Sunday in its loss to Duke.

In any case, both teams — currently ranked in the top 10 — will be in the NCAA tournament next week. I'll be watching every move, thinking of home and an old James Taylor song.

Trenary — rhymes with canary. It's important that you know that. The name will be popping up around here frequently, and it would be nice if everyone could pronounce it correctly.

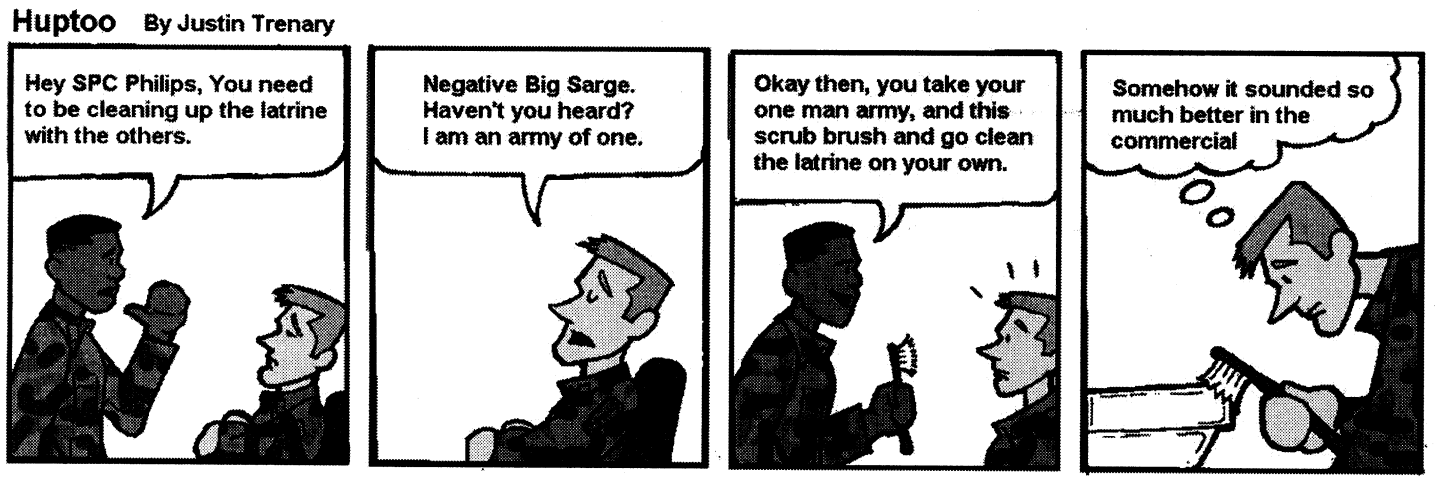
Staff Sgt. Justin Trenary is The Bayonet's newest contributor. He's not giving up his day job — most of the time you'll still find him out at the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, where he serves as an instructor with A Company and the dive supervisor for the RTB's dive team.

But he's agreed to give us a little of his spare time — to share his talent and his wicked sense of humor with our readers. He's got plenty of both.

I met Justin at a party soon after we arrived at Fort Benning, and the first thing I noticed about him was his wit. The second thing I noticed was his plaid pants, but that's beside the point. Since then we've visited on various occasions and I'm continually struck by his spontaneous humor, his off-the-cuff one liners and his ability to turn the mundane into mirth. In a word, he's a card.

Now I find out he's also an artist. He's just as sharp with pen and ink as he is with his tongue. He specializes in cartooning, and he's found plenty of inspiration for his strip, "Huptoo," in his seven years in the Army — which by the way, he chose over a full-ride art scholarship at Oklahoma State. I'm thinking Uncle Sam and The Bayonet got the best of that bargain. I'm sure you'll agree.

Today we're introducing the first of many Justin Trenary originals.



Might I suggest you clip it and save it for posterity. It might be a collector's item some day. If nothing else, it'll make a great bookmarker.

If you like what you see, drop Justin a line at jtre4633@earthlink.net.

And, hey, if you spot him around post today, have him sign it for you. Tell him I sent you.

Just make sure you get the name right. He's funny about that, too.

Service lacking at Reggie's

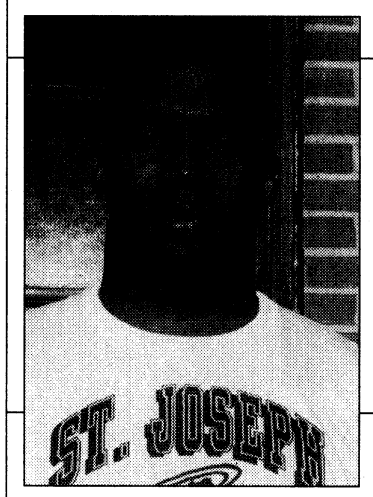
Excellent customer service is common in successful establishments. Reggie's Beverage Company and Restaurant on Main Post has yet to understand this key concept.

On Feb. 28 we arrived at the restaurant around 7 p.m. and were seated in the nonsmoking section. There were two other large (9-10 person) groups and several smaller groups seated throughout the large room. Unfortunately, there was only one waitress to serve everyone on that side of Reggie's. We waited for one hour and 40 minutes for our food. After eating we couldn't find anyone to pay. It was after 9 p.m. when my wife spotted a person she thought was the manager. When we asked to pay, this person mumbled something and walked away toward another table. When the restaurant employee left that table, I approached her to complain and request the managers' names. She refused this request. During this discussion another person arrived and told us to get out. He ordered me to leave even though my bill was unpaid and I did not have the information I requested. This person then began to threaten me using extremely foul and profane language from behind the register counter.

Later I discovered the enraged person was actually not an employee but that his wife works there. I have since been contacted by the MWR head of on-post clubs who spoke with extreme professionalism and was gracious enough to meet me the next day. He was sincerely concerned with this situation. I thank him and wish him luck in straightening out the "great plan poorly executed" that is Reggie's. As for the Reggie's staff, I ask if they would tolerate the attitude and behavior we endured at an off-post establishment and remind them that the M in MWR stands for morale.



Finally, to the man who verbally insulted me and physically accosted my wife — get the facts straight before you jump to conclusions. Grow up, keep your hands to yourself, and learn to control yourself and your temper. There were children watching, including the ones at your own table.

You can bet that next time I want to go out to eat, I will be taking my business elsewhere.

What men's team do you think will win the NCAA tournament this year and why?

Sgt. David Best, A Company, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Arizona. The coach's wife died during the season, and they are playing, not only to win the tournament, but in her memory."

Sgt. 1st Class Adrian Fleming, Headquarters and Headquarters, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "North Carolina will win because of superstar Joseph Forte. They also have a strong, four-deep bench that can carry them."

Pfc. Colby Keck, C Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "Wake Forrest will win because I have a Mountain Dew cap with their name on it. If they win, I'll win a prize."

Sgt. Andre Hicks, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 75th Ranger Regiment — "Duke will win because of their fire power. They're a solid team on both sides of the ball — offense and defense."

Sgt. John Miles, B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "Duke. Shane Battier is an all-around player. As long as they stay focused, there's no reason for them to lose. Defense wins championships and they have plenty of it."

Pvt. Christina C. Griggs, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Maryland. They're very deep. They went through some hard times, but right now they're gelling — playing as a cohesive, well-oiled machine."

In preparation for his role as a battalion commander in Vietnam, Mel Gibson tackled the Ranger Training Brigade's Darby Queen obstacle course March 1.

Later in the day the actor admitted he was sore.

"I'm in pain," Gibson said during a press conference at the National Infantry Museum where he and other actors discussed the upcoming movie based on the book We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young.

Before the cameras started rolling on post Monday, the actors had put in two weeks of training with various units, including the RTB.

"I'm sure we got the watered down version of it," Gibson said of ranger training. "It's not like what a real ranger goes through."

Of the Darby Queen, Gibson, 45, said his time was a bit slower than the younger actors, including Barry Pepper, who will portray Joe Galloway, a senior writer for U.S. News and World Report and the co-author of the book, We Were Soldiers Once ... And Young, which is considered required reading for infantry officers.

"Some of the younger guys were flying through it (the obstacle course). They're in pretty good shape. But, I was dragging up the rear," Gibson said.

The film marks the second time Gibson has worked with Randall Wallace, the film's screenwriter and director. The two teamed up for Braveheart, and Gibson credits Wallace with bringing this latest project to him.

"Randy read the book and fell in love with it, and I had pretty good luck with a Randy script before," he said, drawing a chuckle from the assembled media.

Galloway and retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore published their book in 1992, and it spent 13 weeks on the New York Times Bestseller List. The book is the firsthand account of the battle at Landing Zone X-Ray in the Ia Drang Valley in November 1965 between soldiers from the 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile) and North Vietnamese regulars. The battalion spent 14 months training at Fort Benning before deploying.

"This is an emotional movie. It's about people, not about hardware and things," Wallace said.

"I think the best thing we have done to prepare was to first get to know the real people — those who are still with us and those who are no longer with us through the accounts that were given to the authors," Wallace said.

Gibson, who will star as Moore, said he has spent a fair amount of time hanging out with the general who lives in Auburn, Ala., and talking with Moore about the officer's mind-set at the time.

"And then the book is there — to be read and read again," Gibson said.

Sam Elliott, who will portray Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley, was attending the University of Oregon in 1965. After the death of his father, he dropped out of school and fulfilled his military commitment with the Air National Guard.

"This is a tale that should be told, and to have an opportunity as an actor to bring it to the public is an incredible thing," Elliott said. "Our obligation as actors is to do it justice."

Elliott has high praise for the soldiers he has met while at Fort Benning.

"You come here and see what kind of people they are producing here — particularly in the rangers and the others who stay on for additional training — and it restores your hope in what is going on in this country," Elliott said.

Pepper, who played the sniper in Saving Private Ryan, called the book — particularly the chapter entitled "Aftermath" — "one of the most powerful pieces of literature I've ever read."

After meeting with Galloway, Pepper said, "As an actor you want to make this fraternity of men proud." Galloway, a UPI reporter, was the only journalist on the ground during the battle.

Greg Kinnear will portray Bruce Crandall, who as a major commanded the helicopters in the Ia Drang. Crandall, a retired lieutenant colonel, attended the conference.

"I look better up there," Crandall said and pointed to the As Good As It Gets actor.

"For me this is a chance to play a real hero," Kinnear said.

Keri Russell, star of Felicity, will portray a soldier's wife left at home to await word of her husband's fate.

Russell said her father served with the Army in Vietnam, and she's excited to be a part of the production, but glad she didn't have to participate in the pre-production training.

Filming will continue on post until the end of March, and then move to California for three months. The movie should be released next spring.

"There is only one place to start this movie, and that's here where the story all started," Elliott said.

'We Were Soldiers' cast of characters

Filming started Monday at Fort Benning for the movie based on the book We Were Soldiers Once.... And Young by retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and Joe Galloway. # Fort Benning IG to retire after 30 years

Former GC ends career with pride

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

After 30 years of Army service, Col. Ron Greene III, inspector general and former garrison commander, will retire to Columbia, S.C., in June with his wife Nina.

"There's a part of me that wants something new and different, and there's a part of me that doesn't want to leave," Greene said.

Some of Greene's earliest memories were of playing here at the age of three.

Greene

The son and daughter of career infantrymen, the colonel and his wife, Nina, met here during high school.

"Being in the Autumn of my career, and to have had the opportunity to come here where it all began for me was magnificent," Greene said. "My career has come full circle."

Part of that circle included seeing the Army transform numerous times and handling the recent cutbacks in personnel and resources.

Nevertheless, from the new barracks, training facilities and movie theater to improved streets, more dependable utility lines and better family services, he has managed to accomplish many missions while at Fort Benning.

"Colonel Greene is a strong, quiet leader who truly believes in doing things right," said Susan Turner, secretary general staff. "There's never any gray area with him."

Greene loves the Army and Fort Benning, she said.

A highlight of his assignment here was the dedication of Yuchi Town on post as a national historic site when he was the GC, he said.

A group of approximately 10 Yuchi Native Americans, one of whom was a very old matriarch who impressed Greene with her zeal for the tribe, drove 24 hours straight from Oklahoma to take part in the unveiling of the town monument. With an abundance of Native American garb, prayers, chants and songs, the enthusiasm and genuine appreciation in peoples' faces made it his most rewarding experience here.

"The goal I came here with was to do the best I could in my job, taking care of people along the way to help make a difference," Greene said.

His passion for the post helped it become the best Army installation in the world and led to the receipt of two important, hard-to-achieve awards — the Georgia Oglethorpe Award and the Presidential Quality Award, Turner said.

"His focus was on caring for families and ensuring customer service," Turner said. "He also cared and showed concern for Fort Benning civilian employees as the government headed toward contracting out jobs."

Greene will receive the Legion of Merit for his service.

One part of the citation reads, "Colonel Greene's entire 30-year career has been marked with brilliant success, superb management, outstanding leadership, and profound concern for soldiers, families and civilian employees."

Greene said he was fortunate to have been able serve as long as he has.

"I always said I'd get out of the Army if I was unhappy or if I was not making a contribution," said Greene. "I'm happy, and I feel I'm making a contribution. That's what makes it tough to go.

"Still, it's been a great career," he added. "I would do it again. It's nice to end it at the Home of the Infantry at a time when I'm healthy and able to enjoy the rest of my life."

Greene plans to overdose on playing golf with his wife, hunting and fishing.

He said he looks forward to being close and spending time with his father, son, daughter and son-in-law.

Instructors become ambassadors for human rights

20 students learn effective techniques

Staff Sgt. Alberto Betancourt
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Civilians, police officers and military personnel from four different Latin American countries spent three weeks at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation learning the techniques for effective teaching and integration of human rights within military and security force training.

The 20 students, representing Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador and Peru graduated from the institute's first Human Rights Instructor Course Wednesday.

Maj. Tony Raimondo, judge advocate for WHINSEC and the institute's principal human rights instructor, said the course provided in-depth discussions on human rights topics including ethics, the doctrine of just war, historical development of human rights, case law, pertinent documents and principles, the relationship between human rights and the law of armed conflict, and a case study on the My Lai Massacre.

"This course gave the students the necessary skills to go back to their country and teach human rights and International Humanitarian Law," he said.

"We not only gave them the substance of the laws and norms, but also the technical training allowing them to create an interesting lesson plan — one they can impact with their subordinates and peers back home," Raimondo said.

Having a diverse student body was a very important factor for the course.

"In Latin America, we are seeing an increase in missions where both police and the military are involved," Raimondo said. "It's important that the members of these two forces can equally relate and share their experiences —especially when it comes to human rights."

Lt. Col. Carlos Alvarado of the Costa Rican National Police was one of the graduates of this course.

He said the technical instruction given during the course was excellent — one he plans to apply when returning to his country.

"I'm returning to Costa Rica to incorporate a human rights instruction program at our police academy," Alvarado said. "But, this course gave me the tools I need to expand what we already teach. It will become a full human rights program."

The course provided formal instructions on human rights issues that affect military and police participation in operations during war, conflict and peace.

Additionally, the students received instruction on the concepts of civilian control over the armed forces and the U.S. democratic process.

The training was reinforced through field trips in and around the local area, allowing them to experience U.S. society and introducing them to the local customs and lifestyle, he said.

Prior to the start of the course, the students attended a human rights symposium filled with lectures, panels and workshops celebrating the rule of human rights and International Humanitarian Law held at WHINSEC, Feb. 12-17.

"Human rights is a rule everyone shares during peace or war — internal or external conflict," Raimondo said. "These students will serve as ambassadors for their countrymen and ensure this rule will always be present."

Alvarado agreed that the application of human rights is vital for his country, as well as all the countries in the world.

"I recommend that every country in Latin America send a representative to this course, " he said. "Countries in other regions of the world would also benefit by sending a representative."

New arrivals lighten load for Vietnam era trucks

Soldiers solve transportation problem

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

If trucks were like fine wine, the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment would have been in pretty good shape.

But trucks just get older as they get older, and some of the unit's motor pool monsters are old enough to retire with a healthy pension; crawling into the cab of one truck recently, Lt. Col. Keith George, battalion commander, called out the date it entered service: 1967.

But that problem has been solved, thanks to an innovative bit of large-scale recycling. George found 13 much-newer trucks at Fort Stewart, Ga. that were sitting neglected; the unit that owned them had received new vehicles, and the older trucks were parked in storage.

So the 1st Battalion made an offer: Let us have them, and we'll worry about how to get them to Fort Benning.

Of course, the meaning of the word "old" varies, and the replacement trucks don't really qualify for the term in their new home. George was back up in a truck cab to check the date the new trucks were built: 1991.

"At least these trucks aren't older than some of the people driving them," George said.

As well as it worked out, there was one problem: the trucks, having been left sitting, weren't in driving condition.

Since they arrived, said Sgt. 1st Class Albert Stokes, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., soldiers have been working steadily on refurbishing the trucks and putting them back into service.

The older trucks are still in use, for now, but the new arrivals will make life easier when the repairs are finished.

"You can put away the 90 mile-an-hour tape, the bailing wire, the 550 cord," said Capt. Phillip Martin, commander, HHC, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., at a ceremony marking the completion of the effort.

> "At least these trucks aren't older than some of the people driving them."
> Lt. Col. Keith George, commander, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

With that, one of the trucks was launched into service with a bottle of sparkling wine across the bow — although, this being a motor pool ceremony, it was nonalcoholic, and the glass was swept up quickly.

And then, for trucks and soldiers alike, it was right back to work.

Cavalry re-enactor lands role in war movie

Marine hooks lieutenant on hobby

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Soldiering is more than a profession for 2nd Lt. Brian Huskey.

When he trades in his modern-day camouflage uniform for that of a 19th century cavalry scout, Huskey joins the ranks of thousands who keep history alive through re-enactment of famous American battles.

But Huskey's hobby has also led him to his proverbial 15 minutes of fame.

While attending Infantry officer training at Fort Benning, Huskey and his horse, Kid, will be featured in the movie currently being filmed here based on the book We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young.

The pair will portray a ceremonial cavalry scout during scenes when the 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry, leaves Fort Benning for Vietnam.

"It will be neat," he said. "It's mostly the fact that when I am older, I will be able to see myself on TV and tell my kids and grandkids, 'There's your granddad.' I guess that will be the neatest thing."

Huskey, who is assigned to Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, said he participates in authentic re-enactments across many of the eastern states, from the Battle of Gettysburg, in Pennsylvania, to the Battle of Antienam, near Sharpsburg, Md.

He mostly plays the roll of a confederate soldier or a frontier cavalry scout depending on the scene of the authentic re-enactment.

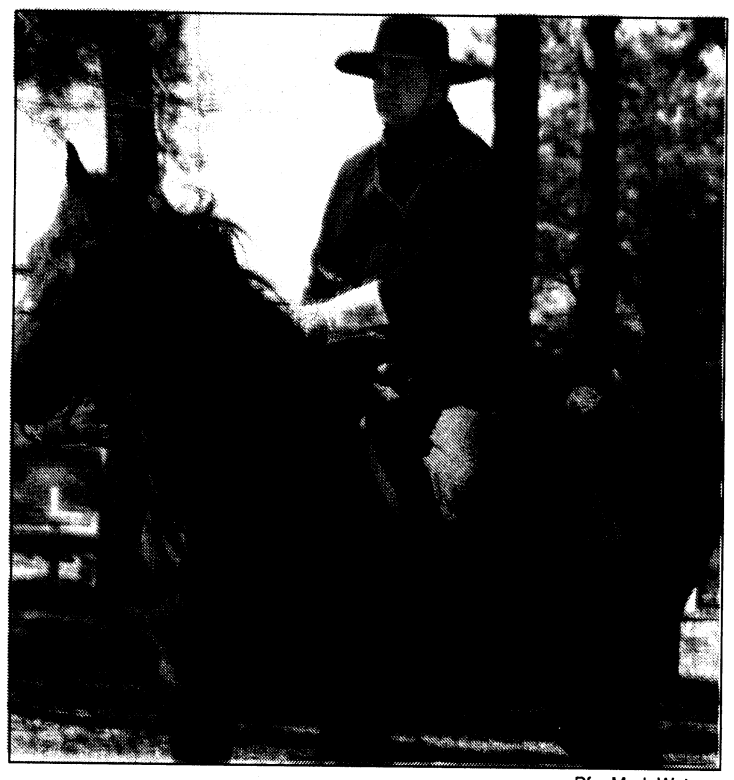
One of the highlights come after the mock battles are over and he has the opportunity to discuss the re-enactment with the audience.

"I always ride up and ask the people if they have any questions," Huskey said. "Of course they want to ask me all kinds of questions, anything from 'Is that saddle comfortable?' or 'How do you get your horse to stand there when the cannons are firing?'

"Or they will ask me why we are wearing this or why do we fight like that, and I will explain what the actual role of the cavalry is."

Although he had ridden horses most his life, Huskey himself knew little about re-enactment until he was participating in a field exercise while in the Marine Corps.

"This guy was being funny, waking us up every morning, by playing a bugle," he said. "I saw the bugle had a yellow cord on it, and I knew that it was cavalry."



The Marine told Huskey that he did Civil War re-enactment and offered an extra uniform to wear if he wanted to join.

"I did it and got hooked, so I've been doing it ever since."

Although he is only at Fort Benning for a short time while attending training, Huskey brought Kid along to keep him company while his wife, Monica, finishes nursing school in Arkansas.

The pair often ride along the Riverwalk, where Kid generally gets most of the attention.

"When I ride on the Riverwalk, people usually stop and want to pet him," he said. "But mostly people come up to me and want to know where they can rent horses."

Ceremony: Remembers heroes from Ia Drang battle

commander of 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry, 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile). The unit trained at Fort Benning for 14 months before deploying to Vietnam in August 1965. Two months later, some 450 men air assaulted into the Ia Drang Valley and were quickly surrounded by 2,000 enemy soldiers. During the ensuing battle 79 Americans were killed and 121 wounded.

The movie will focus on the action at Landing Zone X-Ray, one of the most significant battles of the war.

"I think it's great that people are finally recognizing what we did over there," said Savage, an intelligence analyst with Fort Benning's Directorate of Intelligence and Security.

Savage, then a sergeant, was the fourth man to inherit command of the 2nd Platoon, B Company. The unit was dubbed the "Lost Platoon" when it became isolated from the rest of the battalion during the battle. Savage held the platoon together during 26 hours of combat, fighting off waves of North Vietnamese.

"It was a nightmare, and I can't imagine what went through his mind," said Capt. Rafael Duran, who read the book four years ago during the Infantry Officer Basic Course. He was among those who waited in line for Savage's autograph after the ceremony.

"This means a lot. I told him I was a former NCO," Duran said, looking down at the program where Savage penned a brief message.

"The reason I came here today wasn't to see the actors, but to see the real men. It was great to see Mel Gibson, but my motivation is standing over there," Duran said while pointing to Savage and Plumley.

"They are the real heroes," Capt. Steven Toth said. "I think turning their story into a movie will let people know how things really were in those days." Toth and Duran are students at the Infantry Captains Career Course.

Ryan Hurst, who will portray Savage, did not attend the ceremony because he was working on another project.

During the ceremony Plumley sat between Gibson and Elliott, who will portray the sergeant major in the film.

Plumley made five combat parachute jumps — four during World War II. He has been awarded two Silver Stars and four Purple Hearts. He retired in 1974 after 32 years in the Army and lives in Columbus.

"I talked with him (Elliott) about three hours or so earlier in the week about military things, and I really enjoyed it," Plumley said.

Plumley's wife of 50 years, Deurice, thinks Elliott will do a great job in the role.

"I don't think they could have picked a better person to play him," Deurice said.

Greg Kinnear will portray Crandall, who commanded the helicopters in the Ia Drang Valley and will serve as a helicopter adviser on the film.

"They are going to keep it as real as possible," said Crandall, who lives near Seattle, Wash.

He and his wife, Arlene, were relieved to hear from family that their house and possessions had survived the recent earthquake.

"We know a lot of stuff came off the shelves," Crandall said.

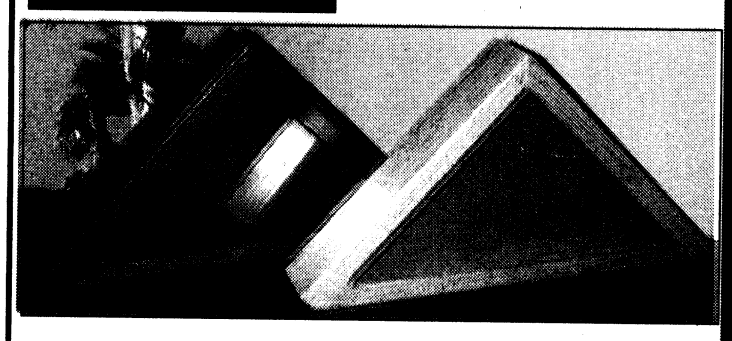
He recalled his first reaction to the news from Galloway and Moore that their book would be turned into a movie.

"I didn't know they were going to use our real names. I was OK with it, until I found that out," Crandall said with a laugh.

Crandall served two tours in Vietnam and flew lead ship on 756 separate missions. He won the first Helicopter Heroism Award of the Aviation and Space Writers Association for his two daring nighttime landings under fire to rescue 12 badly wounded troopers.

"The nicest thing I've ever had written about me is in the book when it said his men loved him and he was one of the funniest guys in the world. That just shows you they didn't have very good senses of humor," Crandall said.

Moore, whose mother died earlier in the week, and Galloway were unable to attend the ceremony.



Le Moyne presented certificates to the actors citing their hard work in completing two weeks of training with soldiers from the post.

"We've sensed your sincerity and respect your talent," he said.

books," Emily agreed. "And you have to like to talk about books and share them with your friends."

Emily and Daphne and dozens of their classmates, third through fifth grade, meet after school every Wednesday to discuss their favorite literature. They search for their favorite authors or book series online, write entries in their reading diaries and add titles to their growing lists of "must reads."

"I have lots of books at home, but it's more fun to come here and read and be with my friends and tell them about what I'm reading," said fourth-grader Meaghan Hartz, who confessed to reading by the light from her alarm clock after bedtime.

"I just have to read," she said. "It's better than TV. My favorite is The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe, or anything by C.S. Lewis."

Keske said she sees a dramatic difference in the reading material members choose after participating in the club for several months.

"Particularly in third-grade boys. Where they may have joined the club choosing simple books like Arthur, they're now experimenting with longer, more mature books. What I call real literature. They're expanding their interests."

Jimmy Reeves said he joined the club to find books about animals.

"My favorite is Charlotte's Web, but anything with animals will do," the third-grader said.

Keske said the club was born of a desire to see students enjoying themselves with books.

"I began to see children making a distinction between reading for school and reading for fun," she said."Reading at school should be fun. These students know that after school on Wednesdays I'm not their teacher. We're all here to enjoy ourselves."

Despite the crowd, Keske said the club will continue to welcome new members.

In fiscal 2002 that increase would be $2.6 billion.

Bush also wants to allocate 20 percent of research and development funds to especially promising programs that will give U.S. forces weapons systems that are "generations ahead" of any rival.

What programs these may be and what other changes will come to the defense budget must wait until Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld finishes his top-down review of the department.

However that review goes, however, it is clear that the military needs new rounds of base closures, according to the OMB document.

Bush told Congress last month the United States must "develop and deploy effective missile defense."

The president has called development of such a system "the most pressing national security challenge."

The budget request calls for a missile defense system to "protect our deployed forces abroad, all 50 states and our friends and allies overseas."

The proposed budget is now the subject of debate in Congress.

Its details will change as representatives and senators hold hearings on the various aspects of the request.

NATIONAL CIVIL WAR NAVAL MUSEUM

"Damn The Torpedoes, Full Speed Ahead!"

What was it like to be inside a Confederate ironclad ship during the battle of Mobile Bay in 1864 when Admiral Farragut uttered the now famous, "Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead!"command? Find out at The National Civil War Naval Museum, the nation's newest and most innovative Civil War museum.

Follow Farragut onto a replica of his flagship, USS Hartford. Go below deck and see where the sailors slept, ate and passed the time playing music and writing letters. Then, look over Farragut's shoulder as he plots strategy from his cabin. Catch up with the CSS Albemarle in a small port city on the roanoke River. Climb on board the famous ironclad and brace yourself for combat as the ship comes under attack and the crew scrambles to battle station.

Stand on the bow of the CSS Jackson and view the expansive 225-foot long hull of the largest surviving scratch-made ironclad in the world.

Artifacts on display throughout the museum tell unique stories, including a daring capture of a Confederate ship's flag and the uniform coat of the naval officer who commanded the CSS Virginia the day it fought the USS Monitor.

Opening weekend, the anniversary of the famous battle between the USS Monitor and the CSS Virginia (Merrimac), will be a weekend of excitement, discovery and fun. Along with tours through the new museum, guests will be treated to cannon/howitzer firings, music and displays by period re-enactors.

Army to promote E-4s before PLDC

COs to give conditional promotions

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Some specialists who make the promotion cutoff score will soon be able to pin on sergeant stripes before attending the Primary Leadership Development Course.

Beginning in May, specialists who meet the cutoff score for promotion — but are operationally deployed, on a temporary profile or on the waiting list to attend PLDC — may receive a conditional promotion to sergeant, said Sgt. Maj. Franklin Raby, a personnel policy integrator for the Department of the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. But the conditional promotion can only be made upon a commander's request, Raby said.

The early promotions should increase readiness numbers, he said. This new initiative, however, may lower the monthly number of specialists selected for promotion, Raby said.

"We select about 2,500 specialists a month to be promoted, but on average only about 80 percent get promoted. The others either separate from the service or lose their eligibility and get removed from the list," Raby said. "Those numbers may fluctuate because we currently have 5,000 specialists who have made the cutoff and are waiting to attend PLDC."

Promotions to staff sergeant should remain the same, Raby said.

"Our promotions are based on projected losses. We select numbers to try to maintain a grade at 100 percent operational. So if we project that a grade is going to suffer a loss because of separation, retirement, promotion or reduction in rank, we base our promotions off of that number."

Raby said that when the actual numbers come in, if they are greater than or less than projected, DCSPER will adjust the next month's promotion cutoff scores to make up that difference. Projections are usually fairly accurate, he said, because they are based on previous promotions during the same time period.

There were 2,500 specialists and 1,300 sergeants selected for promotion in March; however there could have been 1,486 more promotions in 'STAR' military occupational specialties if there had been more soldiers on the standing promotion list, Raby said. MOSs categorized under 'STAR' are those that don't have enough soldiers on the standing promotion list to fill their vacancies for sergeant and staff sergeant. In November of last year there were 44 'STAR' MOSs with 1,788 vacancies, in March there are 41 'STAR' MOSs with 1,486 vacancies. Raby said due to structural problems there will always be 'STAR' MOSs, but the main problem is that not enough soldiers are being sent to the promotion board.

"The Army is doing a much better job at sending soldiers to the board, but we're not getting more soldiers in the right MOSs," Raby said. "There were 1,486 vacancies in March, but there were 12,000 soldiers in those MOSs who were eligible to compete for promotion, but were not on the promotion standing list. When I say eligible I mean they have time in service and time in grade.

"But it's the commanders and the NCOs in the field that have to determine if soldiers are ready to be NCOs. We just need to focus on getting soldiers trained up and ready to become noncommissioned officers."

The promotion board for master sergeant convened Feb. 22 and the list of those selected will be released in mid April

The sergeant first class board is scheduled to convene May 30-June 29 and the list will be released in September

The sergeant major board is scheduled to convene Oct. 2-24 and the list will be released in late January or early February.

Brains and brawn.Put them together and you have one high-speed soldier — or is that two?

Pfc. Stephen Burns, "the brawn," and Pfc. Daniel Burns, "the brains," are identical twins and are scheduled to graduate March 15 as members of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade.

The 19-year-old National Guard soldiers from Pine Bluff, Ark., used Stephen's strength and Daniel's intelligence to help conquer basic training.

"The drill sergeants used the fact we are twins to challenge us," Stephen said. "They joked with us and developed a competition between us. They made us work harder to accomplish missions, and told us, 'Are you going to let your brother beat you,' but it made training more fun for the both of us."

The drill sergeant's use of the devil's advocate not only helped motivate the twins, it amused and developed a competition between the drill sergeants, said Capt. Jason Dickinson, commander, 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt.

"We thought training the twins was an interesting experience," Dickinson said. "The battalion has never had twins."

Dickinson said he looks forward to meeting their parents and seeing how the twins interact with them. The twins often spoke of their strong ties back home.

"Both twins would have soldier time at different times and could call home and let their family know the other one was fine," he said.

Stephen, a medical supply specialist, and Daniel, a radio operator maintenance specialist, said having each other present, albeit in different platoons, made basic training easier.

"When the training discouraged us, we could sometimes talk to and motivate each other and pull each other out of ruts," Daniel said. "I knew he was going through the same aches and pains I was. We both kept reminding ourselves, 'If he can do it, so can I. I have to drive on.'"

Both were involved in ROTC in high school, but Stephen was involved with athletics more.

He used his athletic skills to outscore his brother on the Army Physical Fitness Test 220-204.

A memorable experience for both of them came when they had to battle each other with pugil sticks.

Having the brawn, Stephen, "gave Daniel a pretty good whipping," he said.

However, Daniel quickly pointed out, "I got some licks in, too."

A challenge for Stephen came at the rifle range. After Daniel scored a 31, Stephen struggled to pass with a 25.

"Daniel kept reminding me, 'All you need is to qualify. Don't worry about me,' and that encouraged me to stay focused and get in done."

The twins learned valuable life lessons.

"After two weeks here, we realized how important family can be," Daniel said. "Being here has given us a whole new perspective — family is what counts."

"We saw how each of us have developed aspects of our character," Daniel said. "Both of us will take what we learned here to the civilian world and be able to achieve our goals."

For their advanced individual training, Stephen heads to Fort Sam Houston, Texas, and Daniel to Fort Gordon, Ga.

Both said they joined the National Guard for college money and may join the Army as active-duty officers after school.

"We've never been separated," Stephen said. "It was good doing something together again before we split for AIT."

"We have always had fun and gotten in trouble together," Daniel said. "Basic training was another interesting experience that we will share for a lifetime."

NCOs to carry hemisphere into new millennium

Sgt. Daniel Monroy

First class graduates new academy

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Civilian police and military students from Argentina and Colombia marched across Pratt Hall's stage March 2 after graduating from the NCO Career Course. This marked the first graduation for the Roy P. Benavidez NCO Academy at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

What makes the academy unique from others is two-fold.

Charged with writing and teaching curriculum to such diverse groups, the academy is the only NCOA with a mission that not only tears down Latin American boundaries, but also creates closer ties between civilian and military organizations, said Staff Sgt. Hugo Vives, academy instructor.

Before anything, students are given a standard 12 hours of human rights awareness training they will use in situational operations throughout the course.

Students, all junior leaders with at least three years service experience, underwent the five-week course to hone their abilities in planning, conducting individual and unit training at the squad and platoon level, Vives said.

"Being the commander's link to a unit, the NCO puts the mission's intent into action by providing subordinates direction, purpose and motivation for an end result, so providing the NCO with quality education is vital to any military or police organization," said Sgt. Maj. Rene M. Rivas, guest instructor from the El Salvadorian army.

"Like always, we get our doctrine from the United States Army Sergeants Major Academy; what we do, however, is place special emphasis on portions that directly affect our students (armed forces or police) for that class," Vives said.

"The majority of the content is directly applicable to our mission," said Colombian National Police Sergeant Jackeline Baron, Anti-narcotics Division, during a reconnaissance exercise.

Staff Sgts. Jorge Barrios and Jose Gonzalez of the Argentine army both agreed that learning the various leadership styles and techniques interested them most.

"The course is geared to help young leaders understand and finally realize their authority and role in the organization," Rivas said.

"I saw the many roles NCOs play in the United States Army's day-to-day business," Gonzalez said.

"We are not given the opportunity to provide as much operational input (as U.S. Army NCOs)," said Staff Sgt. Miguel Baldes, Argentine army.

"Most students are amazed at the amount of responsibility and trust our officers give us," said Vives. "Before they come here, they have some idea about our NCO Corps; but when they leave, they all say we truly lead the way in development," added Vives.

"Teaching here is one of the best things that has ever happened to me. It feels good knowing that what you teach is going to be used to better another country's situation," Vives said.

Although the student population was diverse in many ways, they all displayed certain qualities that transcended borders.

"They all shared the willingness to learn, a love for their country and the NCO Corps," Vives said.

Hospital seeks cure for appointment line

Phone system being fine tuned to help patients

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Martin Army Community Hospital is experiencing problems with their general appointment line.

The problems with the phone lines are two-fold, Col. Jim Beson, Martin Army Community Hospital commander, said.

"The problem lies with the fact that we're using a modern concept with some antiquity of equipment," Beson said.

When the phone system is at maximum volume, calls are sent back to the beginning of the recorded message. This makes patients think the system is not working, said Carolyn Bradley, patient affairs liaison.

The line has been in use since May 1999, but in January patients were asked to use the 544-CARE line for such things as booking appointments, calling the pharmacy, reaching their primary care manager or reaching the Tricare Service Center, instead of calling each service separately.

"We wanted one line to be the lifeline to the hospital," Maj. Wanda Scott, health care management division chief, said.

Scott heads up the 13-member team that meets semiweekly over lunch with representatives from other departments to discuss the phone line problem, doctors' appointment schedules and emergency room protocols, to work out solutions in access to care problem areas.

One of the solutions to the phone problem is to track the calls as they come in so help can be shifted to the departments receiving the most calls during peak volume times, Bradley said.

Until the system is working smoothly, Bradley suggests calling the 544-CARE line at certain hours for making routine appointments.

"Don't call in first thing on Monday morning," Bradley said.

"The worst time to call is 8 a.m. to noon at the beginning of the week. Wait until Wednesday or Thursday afternoon if possible, as fewer callers are apt to make appointments midweek," Bradley said.

Tricare Prime patients have priority when appointment slots are reserved. Non-Prime beneficiaries are seen on a space available basis as they endeavor to serve the Prime enrollees as the first priority, under the laws that regulate Tricare.

Space available care is scarce with more and more patients electing to join Tricare Prime, Beson said.

To eliminate some of the traffic jams, there will be limited times for non-Prime access calls. In the near future non-Prime appointment calls will only be accepted after noon daily.

"We realize there is a problem, we are attempting to fix the problem, but it will not happen overnight," Beson said. "Be as patient as you can."

"As we have told our Tricare Prime eligible customers for years, Tricare Prime is their number one benefit," he said. "If they wish to be seen and have guaranteed access standards apply to them, they have to be Tricare Prime users."

Reading Counts! opens doors

Student acts as principal for day

Bridgett Siter
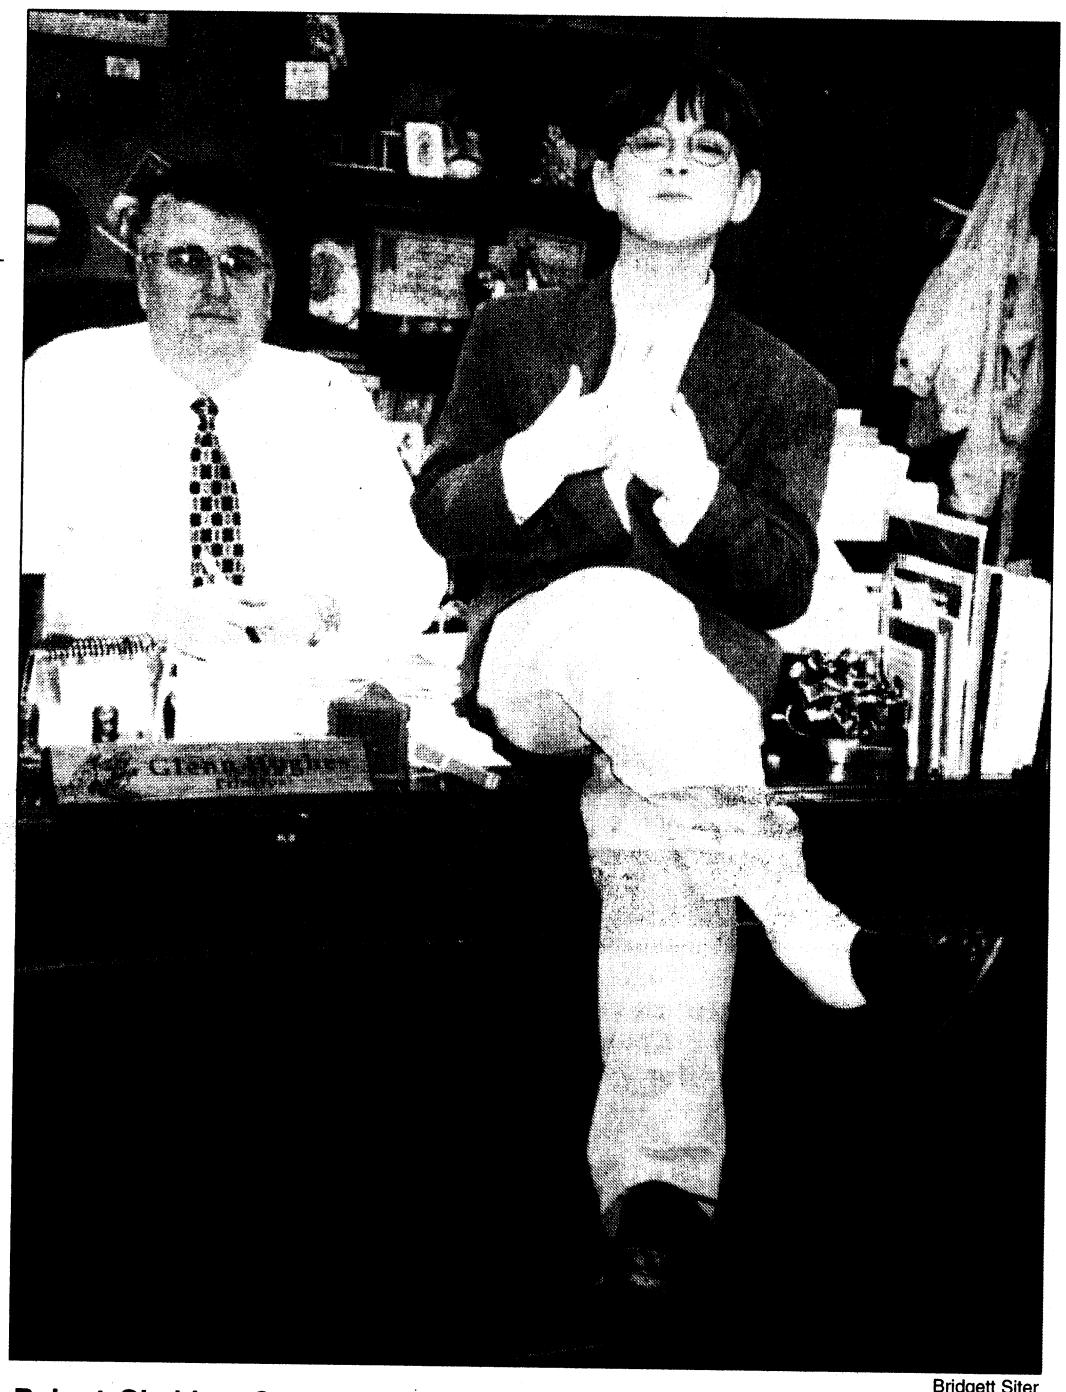
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning students are discovering that reading opens the doors to new frontiers — like the teachers' lounge, for example.

A new postwide reading program, called Reading Counts!, awards points for reading, which students "spend" in various ways. A fifth-grader recently cashed in his wealth for a chance to be principal for a day at Stowers Elementary School.



"It was cool," said 11-year-old Robert Gladden, who traded 175 reading points for his prize. "We had a meeting about school supplies and I had coffee with Mr. Hughes, the other principal. And I got to go up on the roof and in the kitchen and in the teachers' lounge. They have a microwave and a soda machine in there."

While Robert contemplates the perks of being principal, students all across post are enjoying the rewards of reading.

"Some might say it's a bribe. I call it motivation, and anything that gets students reading is a good thing," said Kathy Einhorn, director of curriculum development for Fort Benning Schools.

Scholastic's Reading Counts! is a computer-based program that allows students to work independently at their own "lexile" level.

"Reading material has traditionally been assigned based on a grade level score," Einhorn said. "The lexile framework is a different way of looking at reading levels. A book is assigned a lexile based on its total vocabulary, sentence structure and complexity. Students were tested at the beginning of the year to determine their individual lexile and their individual interests.

Bridgett Siter

Robert Gladden, Stowers Elementary student, fills the shoes of principal Glenn Hughes as a reward for his work in the Reading Counts! program.

"That's a nice feature about this program — it's geared toward their individual interests. Just because a book is in their lexile range, doesn't mean they'll read it unless it's something they're interested in. It has to hook them."

Based on their individual reading level and interests, students are each given a list of age- and level-appropriate books from which to choose. The program has more than 20,000 books in its database.

After completing each book, students take computer tests to gauge their reading comprehension. Each test consists of 10 questions randomly selected from a bank of 30, so each quiz is unique. Students can test on the same book more than once, if necessary, with different questions each time.

Points are awarded for each test passed. Herein lies the motivation to read, Einhorn said.

"It's working, even at the middle school level. At that age, we're finding students are competitive about their points,

Program boosts reading skills

Mentoring makes difference

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

At the age of 6, Brett Gronau suffered a potentially crippling injury, and his parents wondered what long-lasting implications it would have on his education.

Brett had been "bounced around," but it wasn't an arm or leg that suffered the impact. It was his ability to read.

"I was overseas for two years, and the kids were bounced around, from one school to another several times," said Sgt. Larry Gronau, 988th Military Police Company. "Their grades fell, and Brett never developed a good reading foundation. By the time we got here, we were very worried about his reading level and how it would affect him the rest of his life."

Brett started first grade at Wilson Elementary School last August, where he tested at a low kindergarten reading level. He was immediately recommended for the Reading Recovery, an early-intervention reading "therapy" program for first-graders deemed at risk for reading failure.

"It's a fantastic program," his dad said. "The difference is amazing. Now he wants to read all the time. We have to make him put the book down to eat. He loves to read."

Less than five months after starting the Reading Recovery program, Brett has surpassed many of his classmates, testing at a late first-grade, early second-grade reading level.

"Brett's progress is great. It's indicative of the results we're seeing overall. On average, we're finding that Reading Recovery students are testing above average after about 20 weeks in the program, with one-on-one instruction every day," said Melissa Hayes, Fort Benning's instructional systems specialist for Reading Recovery. "And the good news is, they continue to increase, not maintain, their reading level after they leave the program because they've developed the skills they need to become life-long readers."

Though it originated in New Zealand nearly 30 years ago, Reading Recovery is still a relatively new concept in the U.S. Fort Benning first instituted the program in 1991, but budget cuts forced it to take a back seat in 1995, until 1999, when it was "reorganized and reinstated," Hayes said. Now Fort Benning has a Reading Recovery program in every elementary school, with 35 students currently enrolled.

The program is defined as a short-term intervention of one-to-one tutoring for students who are not catching on to the complex concepts that make reading and writing possible — phonics, phonemic awareness of letter to sound relationships, guided oral reading and comprehension. Individual students receive a half-hour lesson each school day for 12 to 20 weeks with a specially trained Reading Recovery teacher.

When students test within the average range of their class and grasp the skills needed to continue to progress, their lessons are discontinued and new students are enrolled in their place. Last year 65 students participated in the Reading Recovery program on Fort Benning.

"Our goal is to reach the bottom 20 percent of the first-grade class," Hayes said. "We

Play teaches environment appreciation

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

A parade of colorful costumes graced Dexter Elementary's stage last week when the e-Club presented the play, "Jungle Party." The performance culminates more than two months of rehearsals and lessons about rainforests.

Kindergarten teacher Earnestine Ezekiel wrote, directed and produced the play, as she has done every year since the e-Club's start in 1994. Each year the play has an environmental theme.

"I want children to walk away with a better understanding of rainforests and the animals that live there," said Ezekiel. "The underlying impact of this drama is fair play in relationships."

Lesli Upton said her daughter, Sarah, has been preparing for this day for weeks.

"She's been saying her lines in her sleep," Upton said. "This is good practice to get her ready for life. She's a shy child and she's learning to overcome that."

The children were given the opportunity to have speaking or non-speaking parts. Some children changed their minds during the production or just became more vocal, said Ezekiel.

The kindergarten teacher purchased all of the fabric for the outfits. Costume designing was blocked into several sections; each designated to the different animals represented in the play.

Partners in Education, parents, teachers and other volunteers helped put the play together. It's these volunteers that help get the show running, said Ezekiel.

"Cathy Codington sewed more than 36 hours and Kim Shiree Rowland sewed 28 hours. I couldn't have pulled this of without great people like them," said Ezekiel.

It was the last scene that brought the most laughter and smiles from the audience. The cast of "Jungle Party" ended the drama by dancing across the stage, spotlighted by the one character that the play was based around.

"The last part was the best because we got to dance the way we wanted to," said Jalen McLaurin, who played Eli Elephant. "I thought it went great!"

The e-Club is an ecology group consisting of all Dexter's kindergartners and many first-graders. The club meets Tuesday and Thursday mornings before school begins. The club members also meet during a portion of their Friday lunch hour, when they pick up trash around the school.

They incorporate lessons into each project, such as counting exercises when sorting out recyclable goods.

The group does several programs throughout the school year, including gardening, pond projects and

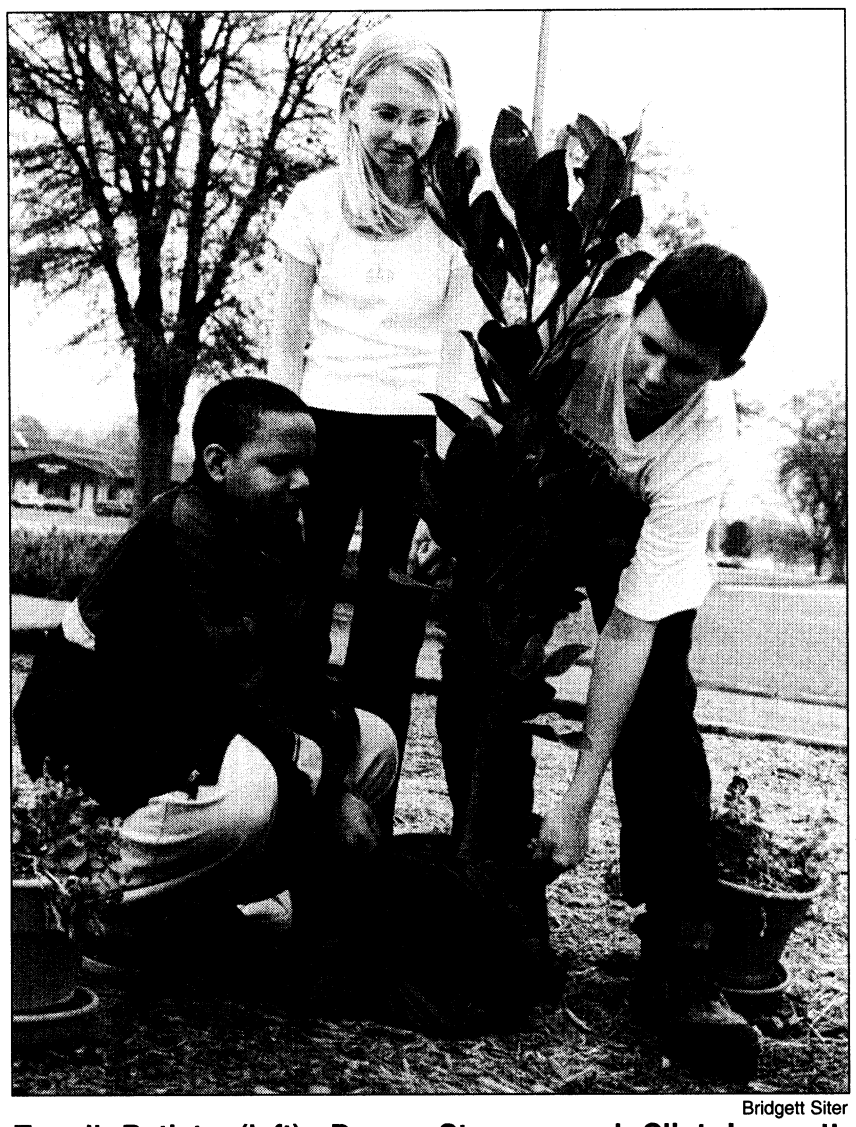
A group of Faith Middle School students and the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission signed a "tree-ty" of sorts Feb. 28.

Sponsored by the commission's Arbor Day Committee, the "Arbor Day Tree-ty" ceremony was conducted on the front lawn of the school, where a dwarf magnolia was planted in the Tierra Sparks Memorial Garden.

Students, faculty and guests made a pledge to "cherish, protect and care" for trees.

"We promise to lavish on them our gratitude for the air they purify, the fresh coolness they provide, the good earth they enrich and the leafy beauty they bestow in such profusion," recited 21 students from Mary Mattew's seventh-grade science class.



Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell challenged the students to learn the value of trees as one of Earth's greatest natural resources.

"At this age you take a lot for granted, but as you grow, you'll learn that trees and green spaces disappear," Hartsell said. "Trees are a blessing we often take for granted, but they make tremendous contributions to our lives.

"A tree is a well-spring of life and activity. It's a reflection of God's glory," he said. "Let's pledge today to be more caring and nurturing of our environment and our ecology, and let's start with this one tree."

Devon Stevens said she thinks the magnolia represents new life.

"I know this garden was planted in memory of a young girl who died just last year," the 12-year-old said. "I think its good that we're putting something lasting in her garden, instead of just flowers, which don't last very long. This tree will be around for a long time."

ask the judge

Capt. Aimee Hobby
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: My wife and I are thinking about investing in an employer-provided retirement plan. Can you tell us how this will affect our taxes?

A: Individual Retirement Arrangements are one of the most popular investments. An IRA is a personal savings plan that lets you set aside money for your retirement. Any contributions you make to an IRA may be tax deductible and the earnings in an IRA are not taxed until they are distributed. The deduction depends on: Whether you are covered by an employer-provided retirement plan; how much income you have; and your filing status.

If you are not covered by an employer-provided retirement plan you can still take a full IRA deduction of up to $2,000, or 100 percent of earned compensation, whichever is less.

If you are covered by a employer-provided you may be entitled to a partial deduction or to no deduction at all, depending on how much income you have.

An employer-provided retirement plan is one that is set up by the employer who then makes contributions to the plan for the benefit of the employees. Members of the Armed Forces on active duty for 90 days or more are considered covered by an employer-provided plan, even if they have served less than 20 years in the military.

The Form W-2 (Wage and Tax Statement) that you receive at the end of the year will show whether you are covered. People who are receiving retirement benefits from a previous employers plan, for example, retired members of the military services, are not considered covered by that plan for this purpose.

For the purposes of the IRA deduction rules, an employer-provided retirement plan is any of the following: A qualified pension, profit-sharing, stock bonus, money or purchase plan; a qualified annuity plan; a plan established for its employees by a federal, state or local government; a tax-sheltered annuity plan for employees of certain tax-exempt organizations; a simplified pension; or a trust that is funded only by employee contributions.

If you are covered by an employer's retirement plan you may be entitled to a partial deduction or no deduction at all, depending on your adjusted gross income.

The deduction begins to decrease when your AGI reaches a certain level and is eliminated completely when it reaches a higher level. The deduction is reduced, and eventually eliminated entirely, depending on your filing status and income.

For more information consult IRS Publication 590, Individual Retirement Arrangements, call or stop by the Fort Benning Tax Center. It's located in Building 2826, next to Bernheim Dental Clinic.

Parking is available at the Main Post Bowling Center. The center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. The telephone number is 545-4267.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

As anxious as everyone is for the lush green grass of spring, residents should think twice before fertilizing their lawns now.

The grasses seeded in southern climates do not tolerate frost. Though the warm days and rain Fort Benning received this year have caused many lawns to become more green, it is not the time to fertilize.

Fertilizing now can cause damage to your lawn. It will cause dormant grasses to initiate a growth spurt. This growth spurt will send up new blades that will be under potential hazard should this area receive a frost.

The last expected frost for Fort Benning is in the month of March. So residents should refrain from fertilization until the middle of March. Most of the lawn fertilizers are a slow release type. Fertilizing in mid-March will give the chemicals time to release themselves and the grasses time to absorb the fertilizers. By the time the lawn becomes more green, the danger of a severe frost will have past.

Residents can be getting ready for the 'lawn labor' by preparing for the season. Now is the time to replace or sharpen mower blades. Weed-eaters can also be restrung.

Make sure your lawn is free of debris and leaves before the season arrives.

Residents can also purchase their lawn care products now. Remember that lawn fertilizer is available at Self Help (U-Do-It) Center for those who live on post.

It's also not too early to start thinking about planting one of gardeners' most prized vegetables — tomatoes.

The tomato can be found in almost every garden. Even residents who do not have a garden will have tomatoes growing in containers.

This year there is another reason to grow tomatoes. The County Extension Agency is having a contest. Prospective participants need to register by June 15 at the Extension Office.

The contest will begin at 10 a.m. at the State Farmers Market on 10th Street and Victory Drive. There will be two categories: circumference and weight.

The same tomato can be entered into both categories. There will be a first, second and third prize in each. Prizes have not been announced. The first place winner in each category will be invited to appear on Channel 38 during the 'Rise and Shine' program.

For more information contact the County Extension Agency at 653-4200. Look for tips on growing tomatoes, in this column, in future issues of The Bayonet.

recycling.

It's projects like these that inspire Xavier Henry to help out at home. His mother, Sonia, said her son helps remind the family to salvage items.

"He walks around the house saying 'Recycle, recycle, recycle!" Henry said. "The more aware of conservation he is when he's younger the better off he'll be when he's older."

whereas at the elementary level, they're accumulating points for these various prizes or incentives," she said.

But Reading Counts! has more to offer than a point-based incentive program, Einhorn said.

"It's convenient, because students can test in their classrooms, the media center and the computer lab. That's a plus," she said. "But more importantly, what sets this program apart from others, is that it makes teachers aware of where their students are going with their reading, it alerts them when a child is having trouble and it matches the students with subject matter they've expressed an interest in. It also supplies a growth report to track improvement."

Students can also track their own progress with their individual Student Reading Records. They can access these records when they first log in, and after each test, they're given the opportunity to rate the book on a Read-O-Meter.

These results are compiled in a report that lists class and school favorites.

start with the lowest, those most at risk, and as they graduate out of the program, we fill their slots with other students. We're moving up the ladder and still reaching those that might be considered borderline."

Students who are still having problems after a full series of lessons are referred for further evaluation.

National statistics show 59 percent of all students who have Reading Recovery lessons can read within the average range of performance for their class, and follow-up studies show they continue to improve in later years.

"Last year we conducted a study at the beginning and the end of the school year," Hayes said. "We randomly sampled 100 first-graders and tested them to determine their reading level, with the average being level 4. Our Reading Recovery students started with an average level of 1. Our random sample tested at a level 17 at the end of the school year, and the Reading Recovery students averaged 18.

"These are students who were destined to fail first grade, but somewhere along the way they've surpassed their classmates. It's working, and we're seeing incredible results."

Students compete in 'McBride Bowl'

Black history highlighted during trivia competition

McBride Elementary School

The students, parents, and teachers at McBride recently celebrated Black History Month with the "McBride Bowl."

The McBride Bowl is an academic competition between students that is in a Jeopardy-style format.

At this particular competition, the students were required to answer trivia type questions that focused on the achievements and accomplishments of African Americans. Each first-, second- and third-grade class chose a student to represent them.

Melissa Lewis, a first-grade teacher, along with Kim Anderson, the grandmother of student, Ariel Tucker, and representatives from 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment 3rd Brigade, McBride's "Partners in Education," were instrumental in putting this wonderful program together for the students.

Lewis coordinated the cheerleading squad and the drum line from Carver High School entertaining the audience during the event.

"The students at Carver on the cheerleading squad and the drum line are role models for the students at McBride because they carry themselves well, exhibit good behavior, and work hard in school," Lewis said.

Lewis carried this theme throughout the program by reminding McBride's students that they too can be good role models by carrying themselves well, showing good behavior, and working hard in school.

As the academic bowl got under way, Lewis asked the trivia questions. When a student answered a question correctly, the representatives from the 1st Battalion kept track of the points for each team.

Each grade level had their own competition during the bowl. The class representatives for first-grade were John Burmeister, Armondo Carpenter, Jacob Wilson, Philip Lenavitt and Brianna Jackson.

The winner from this group was Jacob Wilson.

The second-grade representatives were Jacob Colvin, Valencia Murphy, Nakeidra Devereaux, and Kenna Carrillo.

The winner from this group was Nakeidra Devereaux.

The third-grade representatives were Mikayla Dillon, Karissa Jackson, and Ariel Tucker.

The winner from this group was Karissa Jackson.

Even though only one winner was selected from each group, Lewis reminded the students that everyone at McBride is a winner.

At the end of the competition, everyone involved felt that winning spirit.

"I think that this event has been fabulous. I really enjoyed being at McBride today.

It was all very exciting," Debra Mabry, Fort Benning's Instructional Support specialist, said.

"Everyone did a good job even though some people didn't get as many points as others. We are all winners at McBride. I enjoyed the drum line from Carver," said Adam Wood, a McBride student.

John Burmeister said, "It was fun competing against other first graders. I learned a lot about black history."

Pop tops help charity

McBride Elementary School

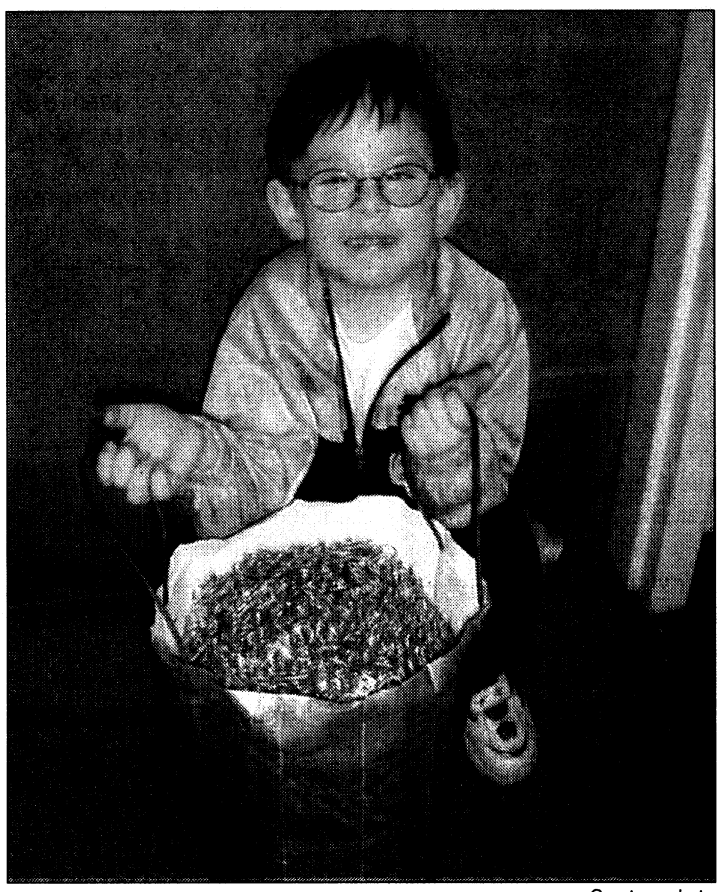
The McBride Elementary school students have been collecting pop tabs to help support the Ronald McDonald House in Columbus. The tabs are recycled and the profits are used to help pay for the utility bills at the house.

The house is a place for people stay when a family member needs to be hospitalized.

Each grade level has a large container in the library at school to show how many tabs they have collected.

The tabs are then donated to the Ronald McDonald House.

Before the tabs are turned in, many of the classes at McBride use the tabs in their daily lessons.



Students can be seen counting and weighing the tabs as well as grouping them in sets to help with counting, adding, subtracting, measuring and multiplying.

Austin Davis, a pre-K student, has been bringing in a ziplock bag of tabs each week. He said he likes collecting them and counting them.

He has also been busy recruiting people in his efforts.

He asked his grandfather to help him.

Pastor Michael Davis then asked his church members in Decatur, Ga., to help with the tabs.

Austin Davis, a pre-K student at McBride, proudly displays the bag of pop tabs that he brought in for the Ronald McDonald House.

Austin can now be seen bringing in shopping bags full of the tabs.

Austin said, "It's too heavy so my mom has to carry it in for me."

Other students said they were glad to do their part to help out a good cause.

"My family drinks lots of soda and they help me save the pop tabs. When we fill up a milk jug with tabs, I count them and bring them to school," Karissa Gates said.

"One time I brought in 9,000 tabs," said Hannah Evans. "My dad and my nanna helped by collecting them in my dad's shop. I am proud of our hard work."

Activities abound at McBride

McBride Elementary School

The McBride Elementary family has a new member: the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, "Battle Boars."

This new addition has become McBride's Partners In Education.

According to Marie Hand, the enrichment teacher at McBride, the "PIE" will be helping the students and teachers with various activities in and around the school.

They have been helping students with the "Reading Counts" program, reading with students, and tutoring them. The 1st Battalion soldiers were also involved in the McBride Bowl Feb. 16.

In return, the students and teachers at McBride will show their appreciation by making cards for the soldiers, writing stories for them, as well as sharing various school activities with them.

This program has been working very well.

The soldiers as well as the students have been enjoying working together.

It's evident by the smiles on everyone's face and the comments made as students learned a new skill.

"I really like working with my partner. It is so much fun," Sierra Hall, a McBride student.

Kay Wiggins, at teacher at McBride, said, "The extra hands are always helpful. The soldiers bring energy to the school."

In addition to the Battle Boars, the McBride teachers and students have been working to involve the parents in the daily education process through Lunch and Learn programs and the Bookworm program that took place Feb. 1-14.

During this event, the head of the bookworm, created by Art teacher Walter Blanks, was put up outside of the main office.

The students were then given paper plates to take home.

After the students and parents completed a book, they decorated the plate with information about the book.

The plates were then brought back to school to be attached to the bookworm.

This program was very successful.

Teacher Sherian Sansom said the students at McBride read 1,454 books during that two-week period.

The students were very excited to see the worm, Mr. Wiggle, grow through the halls each day.

"I enjoyed bringing in my plates for Mr. Wiggle because I had a lot of fun reading the books and decorating my plates," said Megan Hayes.

Time, resource management important

Chaplain (Capt.) Michael White
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

reflections

A little boy received two quarters from his mother — one for himself and one to place in the offering plate at church. As they were walking down the sidewalk to church, he accidentally dropped one, and it rolled into a nearby drain.

He peered down through the grates of the drain at the shiny coin on the bottom.

When he realized he couldn't retrieve it, he said, "Well, God — there goes your quarter."

How many of us do the same thing, not only with our money, but with our time and other resources too?

When we come up short on either one of these, we usually shortchange God.

Each situation begs the question, "What's left for God?" Would we treat a dignitary the way we treat God in these instances? How much greater is God?

When Jesus was asked about the spiritual lawfulness of paying taxes to a secular government (in that case, Rome), his reply was, Give to Caesar what belongs to Caesar, and give to God what belongs to God. (Matthew 22:15-22; paraphrased).

God is not nearly as interested in our money, however, as he is in us personally.

God wants us — our time, our attention and our unswerving devotion. In fact, if he has our devotion, he will have our all.

After we spend a week on the job and a weekend relaxing in whatever way we choose, do we still reserve some time for God — say, an hour or two for congregational worship?

During the week, do we set aside a few minutes each day to pray and read a passage of scripture and think about how it applies to us?

If we don't make time for God and give a generous portion of our money and other resources to him, what's left for God? Good question — how do you answer it?

Custody battles can create emotional pain

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

The emotional upheaval caused by divorce is magnified when children are caught in the middle. Some parents seek to cause further pain by advancing unreasonable demands on their spouse.

Like the women who came before King Solomon (I Kings 3:16-28), divorcing parents get caught up in the struggle of splitting their children rather than doing what is in the best welfare for their children.

Here are some custodial arrangements that may give you some more ideas.

Sole custody usually means that the children live with a custodial parent, and the other noncustodial parent has some form of visitation rights.

The custodial parent has the sole authority and responsibility to make medical, educational, legal and religious decisions for the children.

Alternating custody divides the custody of the children for a period of time, such as, alternating years or between the school year and summer vacation.

The parent who has the physical custody of the children at the time has sole authority.

Split custody gives custody of one or more children to one parent and the custody of the other children to the other parent. Each custodial parent has sole authority over the children that live with him or her.

Joint custody allows shared decision-making authority regarding the educational, medical, legal and religious decisions of the children.

Joint custody allows both parents to share in the major decisions of their children, but permits the residential parent to make day-to-day decisions.

Are you struggling with what child custody arrangement is best for your children? The Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, can help you. Call the center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com for more details.

Legal questions concerning divorce or separation may be answered by a Fort Benning Legal Assistance attorney.

Call the Legal Assistance Division on Fridays at 8 a.m. to make an appointment for the following week to meet with an attorney. The number is 545-3281 or 545-3282.

AMU coach leaves after 53 years

Rifle coach says goodbye to AMU shooting team

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

A man who has given more than a half-century of service to the Army, served his last duty day March 2. He's a man who commanders say personifies the word "soldier," but he refers to himself as a "survivor."

William E. Krilling, 74, the coach of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit International Rifle Team for the last 28 years, retired after nearly 53 years of federal service. The retired Army master sergeant was honored at a retirement gala March 2 at the Columbus, Iron Works Convention and Trade Center.

Krilling

Hundreds of people from seven different countries attended the dinner honoring this internationally respected shooter, coach and judge, including: Deiter Anschutz, president of the Anschutz Rifle Corporation; Horst Schreiber, the secretary general of the International Shooting Sport Federation; Gen. Jin Sam Lee, retired chief of staff of the South Korean army; Col. Jens Nyard, head veterinarian of the Norwegian army; Maj. Gordon R. Robert, the only active duty Medal of Honor recipient; and numerous Olympic medalists from around the country.

Krilling, who said he's been almost everywhere in the world except the South Pole, said he has enjoyed his time with the Army, where he got to beat the enemy on the battlefield as well as on the competition firing line.

"It's hard to retire when you enjoy what you're doing," Krilling said. "There's always a challenge. I enjoyed what I did in the Army. Then I got out and got a job doing what I wanted to do most."

Raised in Buffalo Lake, Minn., Krilling enlisted in the Army after graduating from high school in 1946. He started shooting in 1949 and first competed with the post team at Fort Belvoir, Va. He continued to shoot for the Army, made the All-Army Team in 1954 and also shot for the national team. In 1958, he became a member of the U.S. Army Europe Rifle Team and was a member of the record-breaking national championship service rifle team. Krilling also won the title of the World's Best Shooter at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire — the World Military Olympics, also known as CISM.

In 1959, he was assigned as a shooter and instructor at the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning where he won a team Gold Medal and individual Silver Medal at the 1963 Pan-American Games. In 1966, he won an individual Bronze Medal and a team Gold Medal at the World Shooting Championships.

Krilling, a U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Hall of Famer, won six national championship titles and set a National Rifle Association shooting record, which he held for 50 years. He also won four Gold Medals, one Silver Medal and two Bronze Medals in international competitions and was a member of two world-record-setting teams.

Since May 1973 at the USAMU, Krilling coached his team, which included 14 Olympians, to 105 CISM medals, 172 Championship of the Americas medals, 84 Pan-American medals, 185 World Cup medals and four Olympic medals. Krilling was also the 1998 U.S. Olympic Committee National Shooting Coach of the Year and one of the five finalists for USOC Coach of the Year.

He was an Olympic Jury Member at the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia, as well as at the 1996, 1992, 1988 and 1984 Olympics.

'Can Do' soldiers brawl for boxing title

Soldiers fight each other in smoker

Pfc. Mark Watson
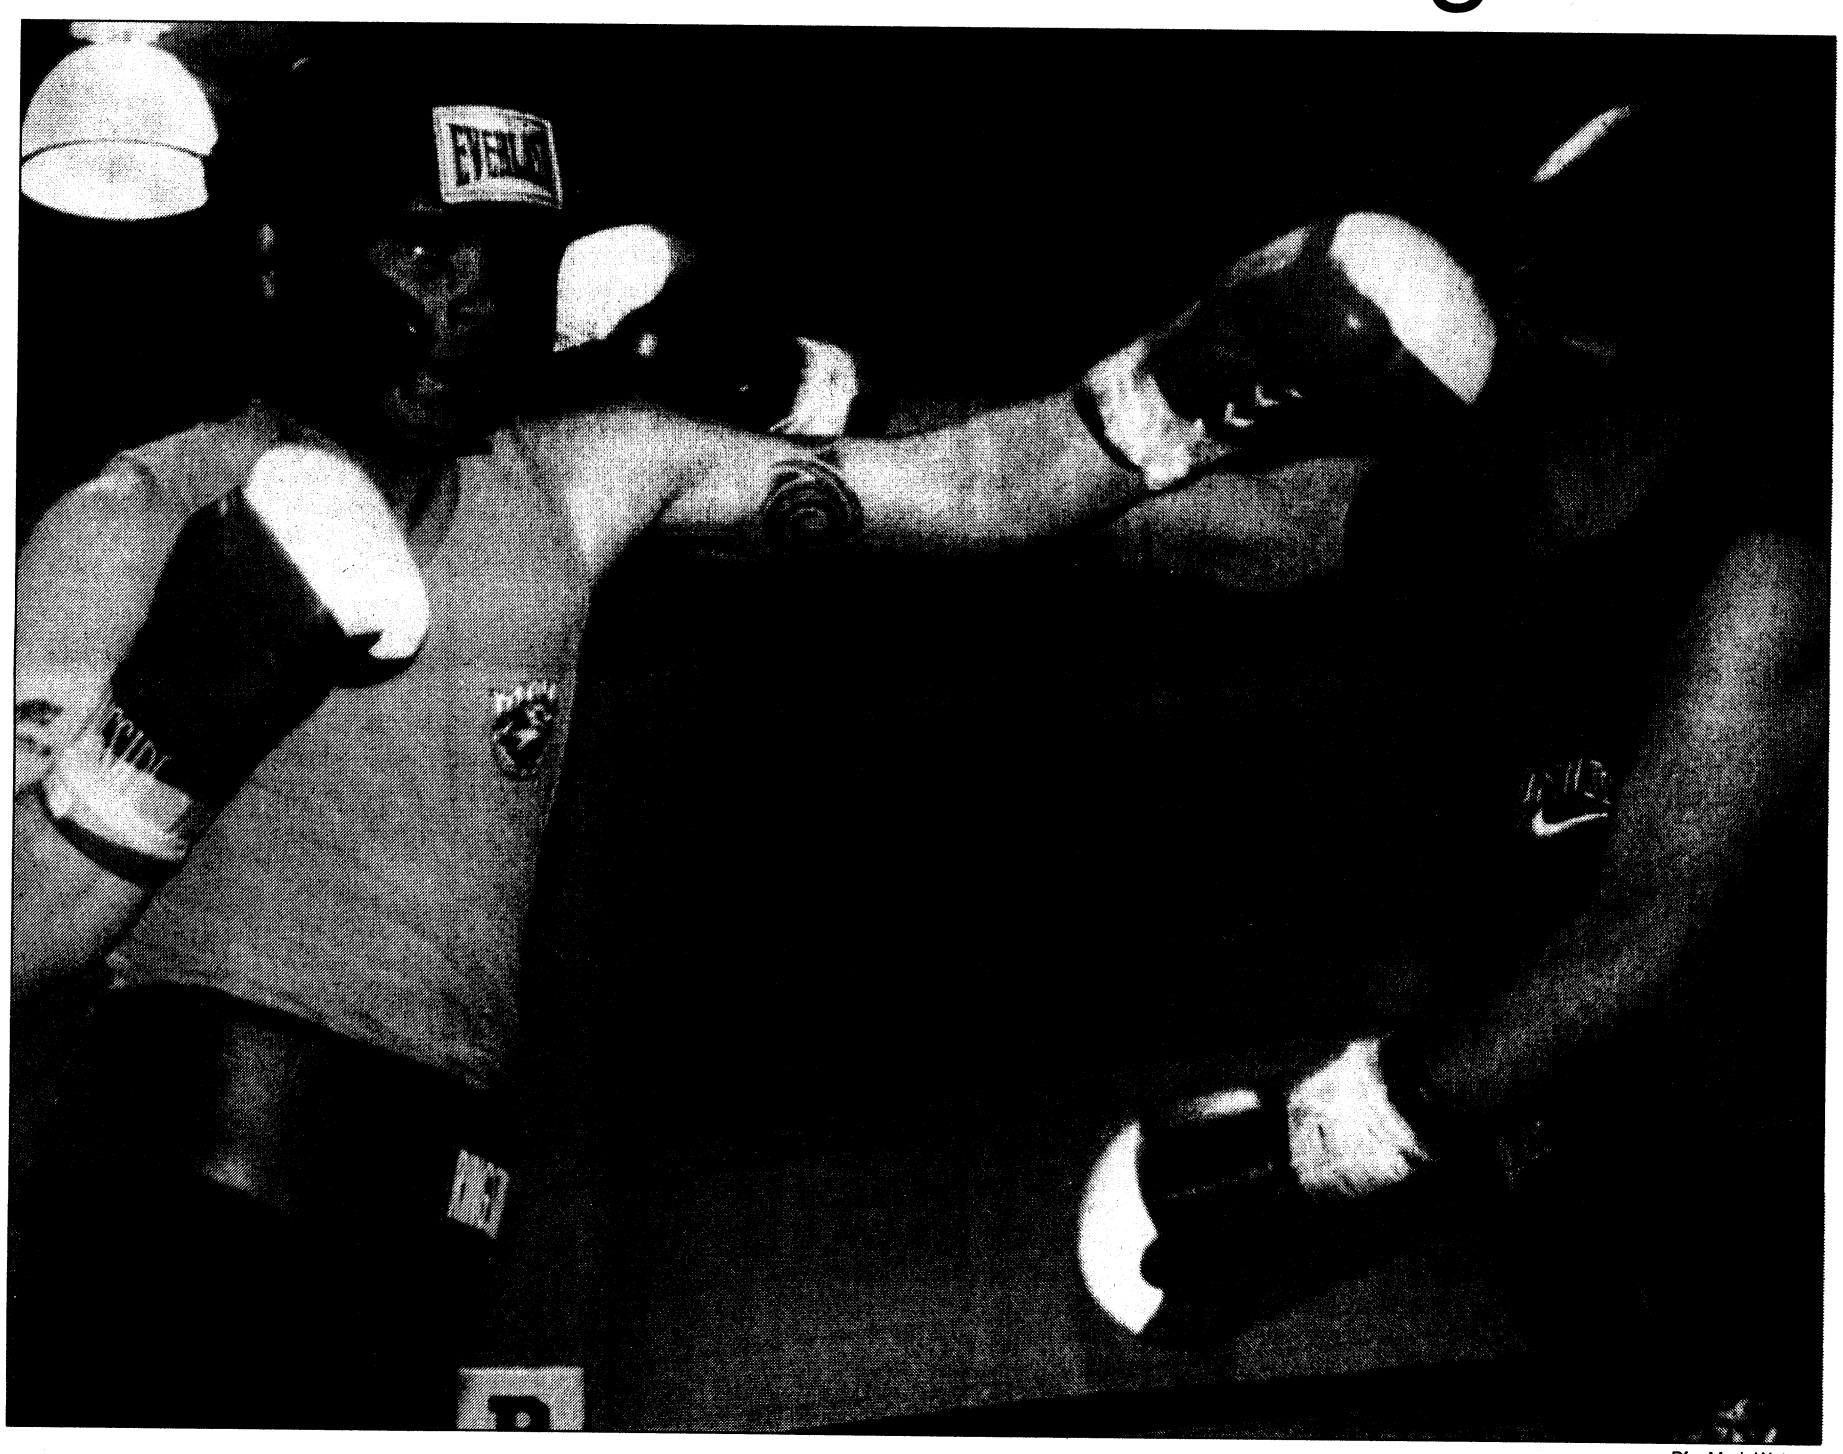
Bayonet staff

"Let's get ready to rumble," echoed throughout Kelley Hill's Kefurt Gym Feb. 28 marking the start of the second Dragon Smoker, a 15-match tournament.

The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade boxers faced off for three, one-minute rounds.

As their names were announced before each fight, the "Can Do" boxers charged through a curtain and smoke into the gym. Battalion soldiers welcomed the boxers with a roar of encouragement.

"I was really pumped up going into the fight," Armando Leon, B Company, said. "It didn't last very long though. The fight was called 52 seconds into the first round."



As Leon fought his opponent, William Nestor, from A Co., he said he could tell the fight wouldn't last long.

"I knew I had him from the beginning," he said. "I knocked him down once and the referee finally called it."

Another victorious B Co. soldier, Robert Marteszewski, said the fight went well.

As the first bell sounded Marteszewski mauled A Co.'s Estrada Sumter.

Sumter could only be defensive during the first few brutal moments of the round, but was able to fend off the attack and deliver a few blows of his own.

Pfc. Mark Watson

The two traded punch after violent punch until late in the second round when Sumter ran out of steam.

The referee stepped between the two, and after determining Sumter should not continue, he called the fight.

"I was a little worried about him," Marteszewski said. "He was responding in his corner so I knew he was OK.

"I felt bad for him," he said. "He put up a good fight. He sure knocked my head around a few times."

As a precautionary measure, the remaining 10 matches were canceled because the doctor

Academy stomps Ammo Dawgs

NCOA's defense leashes Dawgs' offense, 73-43

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Monday's intramural basketball game in Briant Wells Field House was one of fast-paced defense, and in the end the NCO Academy drilled the Ammo Dawgs, 73-40.

The first few seconds of the game went well for the Dawgs. Gary Bynum received the ball off the tip-off and took it to the hole unopposed for the easy basket from the Dawgs of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment.

But the team from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, NCOA, answered by taking control of the ball and kept it for most of the remainder of the game.

However, as the minutes ticked by, shot after shot bounced off the rim. Other shots rolled around the rim and then dropped on the outside.

Midway through the first half, the Dawgs trailed, 7-17. Half of their points were scored from freethrows.

The Academy, on the other hand, had no trouble sinking shots.

Time and time again, they rebounded the ball then sprinted to their side of the court and scored on easy layups.

It wasn't until late in the first half that the Ammo Dawgs made a comeback.

The Academy began to double team the Dawgs, leaving one man open. The Dawgs keyed into the defense and started finding the open man.

The Academy, putting pressure on the Dawgs, managed to steal the ball several times, but were unsuccessful getting the ball to drop.

At the end of the first half, the Academy was in a commanding lead, 34-20.

The second half started better for the Ammo Dawgs. They scored shot after shot.

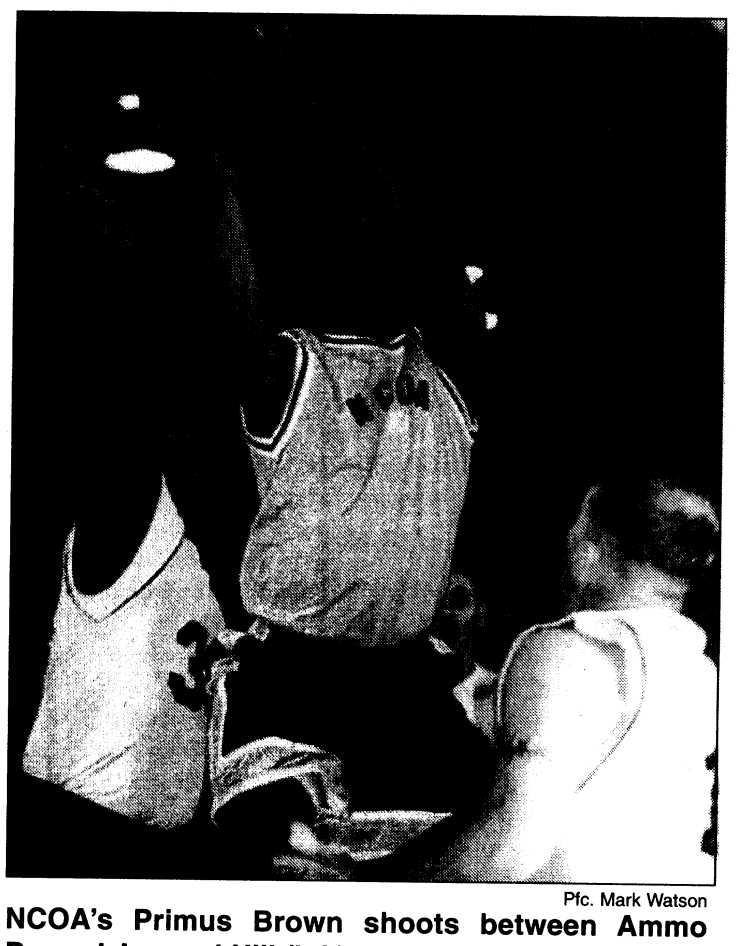
Finally the Academy was able to drain the ball when the Dawgs began to tire.

Their lead expanded as the game and the Ammo Dawgs' energy dwindled.

With only minutes left in the game, the Academy began to show off. The referees ejected Roland Sydney from the game when he received his fifth foul for hanging from the rim after dunking the ball shortly before time expired.

"Having only five people really hurt us," Dawgs' Lakito Bynum, said. "We had a little bit of foul trouble, too."

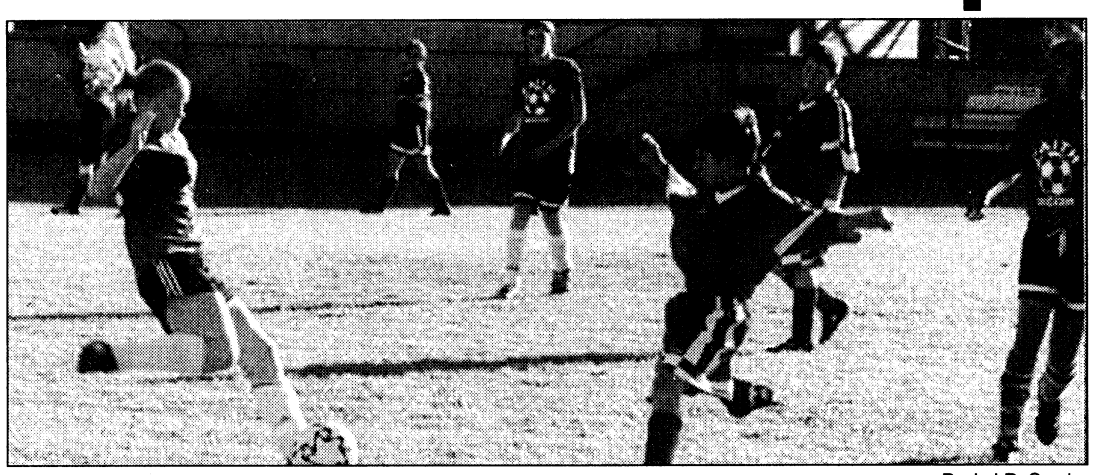
Bynum said the team's slow start was planned.



"We were trying to figure out what they were doing and then started stuffing them," he said. "We changed from man-to-man to a two, three zone. In the second half they came out and started running on us. We just got tired."

The Academy blue-printed the game's fast pace and the Dawgs tired as a result, but it was the Academy's defense that shined brightly, said Academy's Ricky Baker.

"The key to the game was defense," Baker said. "We knew we had them offensively.



"We played lazy in the start of the second half," Baker added. "We made adjustments, started putting pressure on the guards."

The Academy now has a record of 6-1 while the Dawgs are 1-4.

Faith Falcons represent post on field

Rachel R. Garcia

Falcons' Chelsie Black prepares to pass the ball in Saturday's game. The Falcons defeated the Bulldogs 3-1 in their third victory.

Falcons soar past Bulldogs

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

The Faith Falcons flew past the South Gerard Bulldogs from Harris County Monday night at Garrett Stadium in a 6-1 upset.

It was the third soccer game of the season for Faith Middle School, though with an added twist — the game was played co-ed.

The opposing team didn't have the numbers to support both a girls' and boys' game, said Anthony Lane, Falcon coach. Representing Fort Benning, the players beat the cold and windy weather.

The Falcons charged the field to make two goals in the first few minutes of the game. Both Chase Betack and Whitney Ferriter drove the ball down the field to bring the Falcons up 3-1.

One other goal was made when a player from the opposing team accidentally kicked the ball in the Falcon's goal.

Even though the Falcons were in the lead at halftime, the players said they could play harder.

"We're doing OK, but we're not playing at our best," said Ferriter.

The Falcons continued to rule the field during the second half.

Megan Pidlaoan drove the ball across the field to bring the Falcons up another goal. With only a few minutes left on the clock, Nathaniel Snodgrass and Ryan Oliver both came in with goals of their own. Oliver said that the team really came together to get a win for the school.

"Our offense looked a lot better than last week," he said. "We worked as a whole team."

Members of the opposing team attributed the Falcons talent to their military backgrounds.

"I think a lot of the players played in other countries or areas where soccer was a bigger deal," Joshua Rogers said. "Their offense is stronger than ours."

The Falcons will face the same team, and on the same field, in the fourth game of the season March 19.

"The next game we'll have better balance on the field and more aggression," said Rick Spradlin, Bulldog coach.

Middle school team shows soccer skills

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

For these students, it's not whether you win or lose the game, but where and who you can play for.

For the first time since the 1970s, Faith Middle School offered students the chance to represent Fort Benning on the field and show their skills on the soccer court.

For players like seventh-grader Amber Hanson, the team offers her challenging opponents and a chance to learn from an energetic coach.

"Anthony knows more about soccer than any other coach I've had," Hanson said.

Anthony Lane offered to coach both the boys and girls teams.

A Big Brother mentor in the school, Lane said he was excited to be asked.

"My dad was in the Army and we were stationed here at Fort Benning years ago. I used to play soccer in the Youth Services sports program," Lane said.

Many of the players have participated with the Columbus Red Star travel team, the Fort Benning Youth Services sports team or with previous leagues at other posts.

Faith's program offers another avenue to explore.

Eighth-grader David Rodriguez, said the school team is more challenging for him, because of the added pressure of representing the school.

"I'm trying to perform for my school," he said. "I think there's more competition and we're playing tougher teams than I did when I was with YS."

Robert Lewis, Faith Middle school intramural director, started planning the season several months back by calling area schools to build a schedule for the season. The initial interest meeting was held in January.

The team will also prepare the players who plan to join varsity level sports programs, Lewis said.

"There's a certain amount of culture shock when kids go up to play sports in high school," Lewis said. "This will better prepare them."

The team is still looking for additional coaches to help on and off the field, though parental support hasn't been a problem since the team started up.

"Anything that excites my son, Nathaniel, this much and is this involved with is a good thing," Andy Snodgrass said. "Nothing but goodness can come out of a program like this and I have no problem investing in it."

The team doesn't yet charge for ticket to games or require additional fees for playing. The Falcons were going to wear the sports jerseys from the basketball program, to save money, until the parents got together and purchased new shirts for the team.

Sibling, parents and well-wishers can be found at every game. The team has not required a bus for game days, because there are enough parents to carpool the kids to and from the games. Lane said he is amazed by the support the community is giving.

"Not every school has enough parents involved to carpool all the players," said Lane.

Youth Services runs several soccer programs for this age group.

The spring season currently has four teams, with more than 60 children participating.

The Youth Services program focuses on learning the sport and enjoying themselves, said Linda Laine, Youth Services director.

While the teams are competitive, its primary focus is to be a recreational league, Laine said.

"Quite often, the players are going up against their friends." Laine said. "I think it's good for the kids to have a school team as well."

Both the men's and women's Faith Falcons are 3-0 this season.

"We're willing to take the risk and try this," Lewis said. "The support is unreal."

Coach: Retires from marksmanship unit's rifle team

A decorated war veteran, Krilling received the Distinguished Service Cross — the highest military award next to the Medal of Honor — as well as the Bronze Star Medal and Purple Heart for his heroism during the Korean War.

He also was awarded the Vietnamese Gallantry Cross with silver star and a Bronze Star Medal for his actions during the Vietnam War.

After Krilling retired from the Army in 1971, he trained SWAT teams with the National Sheriffs Association and coached the Mexican National Shooting Team, which set an air rifle world record at the Championship of the Americas, until he joined the Army Marksmanship Unit in May 1973 as the civilian coach of the International Rifle Team.

He has also acted as the U.S. National Team coach from 1981 to 1986 and has served in several different capacities for both the U.S. Team and the International Shooting Union.

"I'll miss being with the shooters and the going to the big competitions," Krilling said. "But I won't miss the paperwork, meetings or my computer."

Krilling will spend his retirement in Columbus with his wife, Maureen, daughter, Kathy Nickerson, who was a Kendrick High School shooter, and granddaughter, Laura Nickerson, who is a Junior Olympic shooter at Hardaway High School.

Besides doing some fishing and gardening, Krilling plans to teach horseback riding and continue serving as a consultant and juror in the Olympic shooting sports.

"Now it's time to take care of some things and spend some time with my family," he said. "I'm looking forward to the future. The value of life means everything. You should take advantage of every day of your life.

"Don't put things off; you might never get to do it," Krilling said. "I'm a survivor. When I die, I'll probably have a smile on my lips. I have no regrets."

Soldiers: Duke it out

remained by Sumter's side.

Although the smoker was called short, Marteszewski said it brought the soldiers closer together.

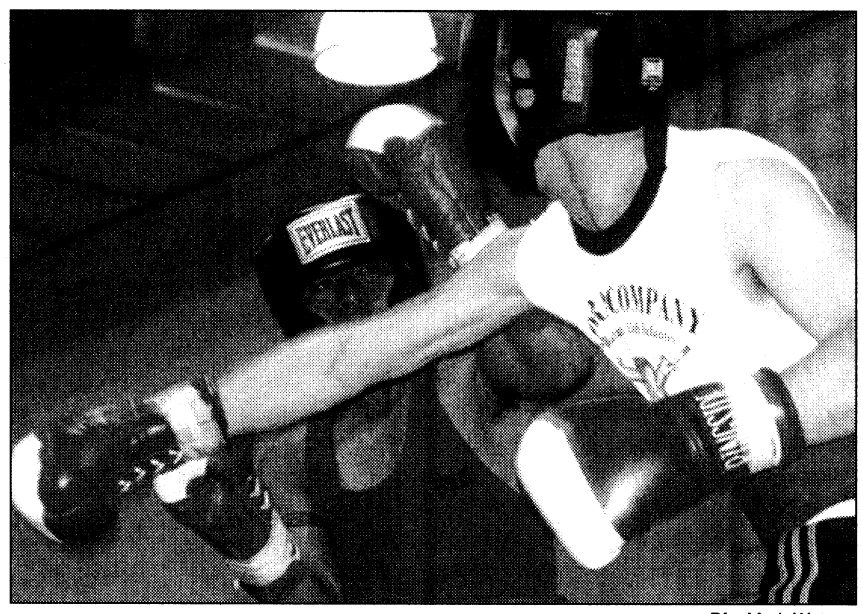
"I think it was great," he said. "It brought everyone together. Now people from the battalion will come up to me and congratulate me still."

Marteszewski's and Leon's wins along with another B Co. boxer, Ringko Tomsin, gave B Co. the bragging rights along with a streamer to hang from their guidon. B Co.'s coach, Gregory Lee, said he was proud of his boxers' performances.

"I felt good about the matches," Lee said. "I felt we had a pretty good chance to win, but we didn't have a lot of time to train.

"All three won by technical knockout," he said. "I was ecstatic."

Going into the boxing smoker, Lee told his boxers not to be nervous and to stay focused.



"I told our first fighter to go out and set the pace," Lee said. "Everyone followed suit and was motivated and pumped up."

The victorious B Co. boxers said they are ready for their next bouts.

"This is the first time I've ever been in a fight," Marteszewski said. "I had a great time."

Also happy with the fight, Leon said he is looking forward for his next chance to step into the ring

"I had a lot of fun," Leon said. "I am ready to fight again and will definitely try to be in the next smoker."

Pfc. Mark Watson

Post land swap completed

Deal finalized after 12 years of discussions

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

The land swap between Fort Benning and the city of Columbus was finally completed March 9, 12 years after a trade was first proposed.

Columbus acquired 2,124 acres in Muscogee County adjacent to the city landfill at the northern edge of post, which will be used for industrial development. Fort Benning, in turn, received 2,156 acres in Chattahoochee County and $3.8 million.

Mayor Bobby Peters signed the final paperwork during a brief ceremony in his office last Friday morning. The Army Corps of Engineers, which acts as the Army's real estate agent, received a check that afternoon.

"We expect that the Department of the Army may keep half of the money; the other half could be earmarked by Training and Doctrine Command, our higher headquarters, for special projects," said Chuck Walls, the garrison manager.

The process began in the late 1980s when Columbus announced it needed large tracts of land for industrial development. A land swap proposal followed, and in 1990 Congress enacted legislation allowing the exchange of about 3,000 acres of Fort Benning land for almost 3,000 acres the city had purchased in Chattahoochee County on the reservation's southern border.

"It has been an awful long process, but the end result will be extremely beneficial to Columbus and Fort Benning."

Jim Buntin
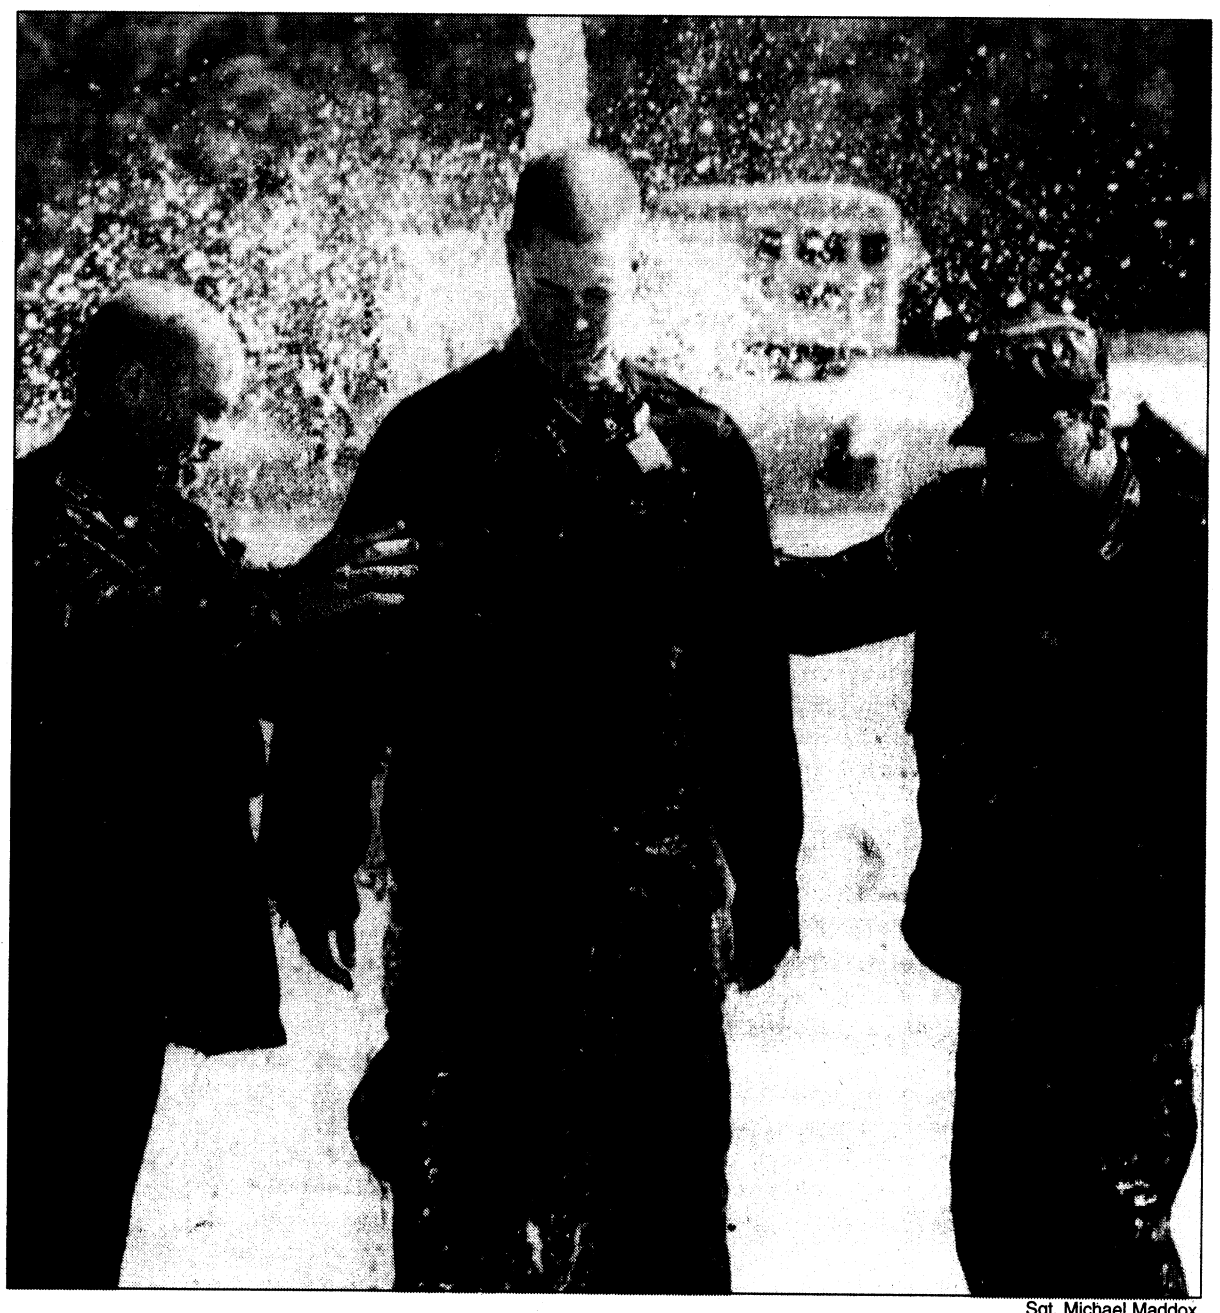
Columbus Development Authority



However, numerous delays followed, as first environmental and then cultural issues were ironed out and agreements reached.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service endorsed the plan in 1998, but only after hundreds of acres were removed from the deal to protect endangered red-cockaded woodpeckers and their foraging habitats discovered on the Muscogee County property.

In December, representatives from five American Indian tribes with historic ties to Fort Benning signed a memorandum of agreement containing preservation covenants. Those covenants became part of the Muscogee County deed and protect nine American Indian cultural sites found on the land. They also address the treatment of any human remains that may be discovered

Soldier dies in car accident

Driver charged with vehicular manslaughter

A Fort Benning soldier was killed early Sunday morning in a single-vehicle accident on Interstate 185 in Columbus.

Pfc. Michael J. Wozniak, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, died after the Jeep Cherokee, driven by Pfc. Stephen R. Lane, also assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment, went out of control between the Manchester Expressway and Macon Road exits.

According to police reports, Lane lost control of the Jeep and hit a noise-reduction wall. The Jeep rolled and slid 120 feet on its roof into the left lane and hit the concrete barrier that separates the south and northbound lanes of traffic.

The accident occurred at approximately 2:30 a.m. Wozniak, who had turned 21 the day before the accident, was pronounced dead at the scene by Columbus deputy coroner Richard Weeks.

Wozniak is survived by his parents, Greg and Kathy Wozniak, of Erie, Pa, a brother, Jeff, and a sister, Amy. He was a member of the HHC's Mortar Platoon and the platoon along with his chain of command traveled from Fort Pickett, Va., to Erie to attend the funeral. His unit, training at Fort Pickett at the time of the accident, is planning a memorial service today there.

Wozniak's funeral was Thursday in Erie. The unit, which was training at Fort Pickett, Va., at the time of the accident, is planning a memorial service today at Fort Pickett.

Lane, 22, was taken to The Medical Center for treatment of minor cuts and bruises. At press time, Lane was being held at the Muscogee County Jail for vehicular homicide pending a court appearance.

A Fort Benning soldier has been awarded the Korean War Service Medal more than 50 years after his death in North Korea.

The family of Sgt. 1st Class James Streetman Jr. received a letter of commendation from the president of the Republic of Korea last week, citing Steetman's "noble sacrifice" and contribution to "the efforts to safeguard Korea and uphold democracy all over the world."

Word of Streetman's award came as no surprise to his mother, Columbus resident, Lillian Streetman.

"It was awful nice of him to send it over here, but I'm 93 years old — nothing much surprises me anymore," she said.

But news of her son's involvement in the Korean War did come as a surprise in 1950. The first time Lillian learned about the war was the day she learned of her son's death.

"I didn't even know there was a war until they delivered that telegram. His letter said he'd be there for a couple of

commentary

This past week, the news has once again been filled with details on recent school shootings.

As every newscaster and subject matter expert were discussing these tragic events, I couldn't help but wonder where all of this violence in the schools comes from.

I know there are a ton of experts with their theories on why school shootings take place, but who's to say what the real reason is behind these horrible incidents.

Some people blame the kids, some the parents, some the schools, some society, some video games and others gun manufacturers — the list goes on and on. The responsibility could lie anywhere among those on the list.

While we may not know where these things begin, I have a pretty good idea of how we could try to extinguish these situations before they get out of control.

I think if parents and their kids had better communication between them, things may not go as far as they have in recent years. My children are still younger than 10, but I try to keep the lines of communication open and let them know I'm interested in who and how they are.

I know it can be hard when both parents are chasing the mighty dollar, and for military families we have the added deployment from time to time. But we still have to take the time to talk to our kids and be involved in their lives.

Some of the parents of these teen shooters say they have done this, but how can these kids be building weapons and making elaborate plans to kill schoolmates without their parents suspecting anything unusual? If nothing else, what ever happened to the days of the snoopy parent who checked out the kid's room from time to time?

It saddens me to see parents who are so busy with their own lives, that they sometimes forget they have more than a boarder living with them who visits the house from time to time.

We have to stay involved in our children's lives. We have to teach them right from wrong, let them know they are important to us and help them solve any issues they might be facing.

On the other side of this, we need to teach our kids to let someone know if they suspect another child who may be facing such problems. In some of the recent shootings, other kids knew something was wrong before these shootings took place but didn't talk to adults. I know things aren't like in the "old days" when we settled things with a fist fight, but we can still try to save our kids by being involved.

It may not be a sure cure for school violence, but if nothing else it will give us a chance to find out more about our children. And I can only see positives as a result of that.

Reason actors are on post is to work

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

commentary

Fort Benning has been hopping and popping lately ... playing host to movie stars Mel Gibson, Sam Elliott, Greg Kinnear and Madeline Stowe, who happens to be my brother-in-law's favorite actress. I found this out just the other day when I told him the actors were on post to film some of the scenes for the upcoming movie based on the book, We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young by retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore and Joe Galloway.

Everyone is talking about the movie and the stars. One reporter from the Ledger-Enquirer has even asked readers to call her if the actors are sighted in town.

The actors, the movie, who the extras are and where the filming is taking place are all topics of everyday conversation. People in Infantry Hall are even riding the elevator past their floors for tidbits of information and snatches of gossip speculating on anything concerned with the movie.

I've even had visitors to my office, people I haven't seen in years, looking for "the scoop" wanting to know where the actors are and how to get on the set.

I think it is pretty neat that scenes from the movie are being filmed here, after all the men who fought in the Ia Drang battle were stationed here before shipping out to Vietnam in 1965.

This movie is a great opportunity for the Fort Benning folk who were selected to be extras because they can make some extra money and have the behind the scenes look at movie magic.

Even the entrance of Infantry Hall has been transformed by movie magic to become an airport terminal.

No loitering signs haven't stopped the curious from appreciating the transformation or the students' movement to and from classes.

I've truly enjoyed my second-hand look into the movie-making business — talking with those who have been selected as extras.

I've learned that Sam Elliott stands in soft sand for some of the training scenes on Eubanks Field. And the loud noise Monday afternoon that shook Main Post wasn't Sam screaming about the sand or lightning hitting the lights the production crew put on either side of The Infantry Center Chapel. (The script called for sun to stream through the stained-glass windows during the scene that was being filmed during a torrential downpour.) It was a loud clap of thunder that shook Infantry Hall and knocked the "A" off the American Airlines sign behind the ticket counter, or is it a gate?

Anyway it is time to take a step back into reality.

The actors and everyone else associated with the movie are on post to make a movie. Simply put — they're working. They have much to accomplish with a short suspense.

Why do people assume that actors should entertain us when they're working? They entertain us when we spend our $6.50 to see the movie. Sometimes it is money well spent, other times we should have waited for the video.

I am amazed by how many people have been stopping by or calling the Public Affairs Office looking for visitors' passes to the set wanting to watch the actors while they work.

Why do people assume they should visit the movie set on a particular day, convenient to their schedule?

I have just one question: How much work do you get done when people are watching you work? Not a lot if you are like me.

I am amazed by how pushy people become with their obsession to see a movie star in person. Why? Aren't they still people who deserve some privacy? While they're working or even eating? Does the Golden Rule mean anything anymore?

And to the people who are calling, asking to speak to Mel Gibson — he's not in the office.

VARIOUS VOICES

How can we solve the problem of school violence?

Willa Moon, AAFES employee — "I suggest parents control their children and the media quit advertising the graphic violence on T.V. Stronger penalties would help, too."

William Gonzales, retiree, Columbus — "It starts at home. Parents need to lock up their guns and get down on their children. Discipline is key. Children should pay the same price as an adult."

Tameka Williams, AAFES employee — "We should increase security at the schools. If you deter the act, such as with metal detectors, the children will know better."

Jamal Vaughn, family member — "Stricter rules and more security guards would benefit. Many kids skip school, and that's when violence occurs. There's too many people standing in the hall looking for trouble."

Spc. Ja'Male Morrow, 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group — "Teachers need to pay more attention to their students. Many students try to reach out for help. If the teacher doesn't take them seriously, many take that as rejection and react with violence."

Christopher Stinsman, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry (Airborne), 11th Infantry Regiment — "We need to instill values of self control. Teachers need to teach students how to cope with specific stresses and to talk out their problems instead of storing up rage and acting out on it."

CRC handles increase without glitch

It is my great pleasure to acknowledge and commend the superlative support that has been extended to the soldiers and civilians of my Conus Replacement Center rotation as we have prepared to deploy to numerous areas of the world.

My rotation was to have numbered about 120 persons but swelled overnight to more than 200. This unexpected increase was handled in a quiet, dignified and highly efficient manner, with very little negative impact to my group.

B Company of the CRC may have been mostly responsible for the smoothness of our transition, but much of our support also came from the medical clinic, hospital, dental and dining facilities, as well as many individuals.

All of those who gave shots, examined, prodded and poked, reviewed records, furnished wills and Power of Attorneys, issued gear, lectured, ran firing ranges and gave hands-on training provided superior support.

This support was always given in a patient, concerned and professional manner. I will remember, with pride in our Army, the true courteousness shown to each of us as we were cleared for deployment within one week of arrival; many of us to dangerous areas of the world.It is impossible for me to thank all those who so nobly supported those of us deploying because many of your people do not get to meet us face-to-face.

I congratulate the entire chain of command down to the lowest ranking soldier and civilian that has contributed to the support of this mission. The uniform professionalism that I experienced here has been the finest that I have enjoyed in my 36-year military career.

Open windows pose safety hazard

Gates, locks offer extra measure of protection

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

The recent surge of warm temperatures has tempted many post residents to open up their windows to enjoy the weather.

Unfortunately, the opening of windows has led to several accidents involving children.

In the past month, there have been two separate incidents where children have fallen out of second story windows.

In one case, a child had been napping in the bedroom and was left alone for a moment when the accident occurred. The bed was positioned against the wall next to the window, enabling the child to stand up and open the window and fall through the screen.

In a second, similar incident, a child fell out of an upstairs window after an older sibling had unfastened the screen to talk to a friend. The 2-year-old child crawled on the bed, which was placed in front of the window to see what was going on outside and fell out.

In both cases, the children received only minor injuries. If there is another incident like this, the child may not be so lucky. To prevent this, the Post Safety Office has several suggestions.

> "If you have small children in an upstairs bedroom, don't put furniture or something they can climb on near the window."
>
> Debbie Gutierrez
> safety specialist

"If you have small children in an upstairs bedroom, don't put furniture or something they can climb on near the window," said Debbie Gutierrez, a safety specialist for the Fort Benning Safety Office. "In both of these cases, there were beds right next to the window."

She added, there are no easy fixes to prevent this from happening again.

"All of the windows are different on post, some open in and some open out. It will be hard to make an across the board fix," she said. "Maybe if you have little ones, safety gates could be put up in the window.

"The screens are only to keep the bugs out, not to keep kids in," Gutierrez said.

Vanessa Speckman, the mother from the first incident, said she has been exploring several options to make sure her son is safe in his room.

"I've been looking at putting the dresser by the window or installing a chain lock like on a door so that the window can be opened some to get air in the room," she said. "I'll have to put it halfway up so he can't reach it because children are smart and can figure things out if they have enough time."

Family Housing officials remind housing occupants that children of any age can fall through second story window screens. They recommend parents educate children on the possible dangers of open windows.

Community members can install various devices like child gates and window locks to keep children from opening windows. Even so, older children learn to manipulate safety devices quickly, so they may require additional attention.

Post promotes year-round safety practices

Fort Benning observes Safety Stand Down

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

Even though Fort Benning's Safety Stand Down Day is still more than two months down the road, May 24, that doesn't mean that's the only day to be safety conscious.

Observing safety practices is a daily requirement both on and off the job, said Col. Dale Vona, chief of staff.

"Safety is not an eight hour a day thing. You should observe it off duty as well as on duty," he said.

Examples of this are proven by statistics.

There have been eight fatalities in the Fort Benning community this fiscal,, three of them on post and five off the installation. All were active-duty soldiers.

Vona said while all of the accidents were unique in nature, safety played a role in all.

"Usually accidents are a series of things that have gone wrong where any one of them, if done correctly, would have prevented the accident," he said.

And that prevention is a team effort.

"Safety is a responsibility at all levels. Everyone has to take responsibility," Vona said. "If they see something that's not right, they need to tell someone. Everyone has to do their job.

"We have built in safety checks so that we can catch these things during daily missions, that's why everyone needs to do their job," he said.

According to a memo to commanders, the May 24 observance date is flexible.

If essential training or critical events preclude participation that day, commanders will designate an alternate date within 15 days prior to or after May 24.

The soldiers of 3rd Brigade completed their Safety Stand Down Day March 1 due to back to back deployments for the next couple of months.

Maj. William Schafer, 3rd Brigade's OIC for training, said the brigade focused their training on several different aspects of safety.

The soldiers reviewed military vehicle operations safety, privately owned vehicle safety, field operations safety and also conducted a "soldier inventory" to see what safety issues were on the soldier's minds.

Schafer said military vehicle operation and field operation safety were the main focus because, "They speak to the fact that we deploy regularly."

He said the brigade is now ready for its deployment to Marne Focus this month.

"Everything went well, but we are still getting feedback on how the soldiers feel about the training," Schafer said.

Other ideas on what to train on for the post safety stand down day are available at the Post Safety Office.

For more information, call 545-3267.

Post rescinds Web surfing privilege

Capacity reaches 100 percent, causes problems

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Col. Jose Torres, Fort Benning garrison commander, directed the post to institute a communications status of "minimize" with respect to the Non-secure Internet Protocol Network (NIPRNET) and Internet Monday.

"Minimize" status means:

• No surfing the net. Authority to surf the net for other than official business is rescinded, including lunch hours and breaks. Normally, Army and Fort Benning policy states Fort Benning personnel are to use the Internet for personal reasons only during lunch and breaks.

• No streaming audio and visual, including Internet radio or real audio.

• If one needs to conduct official business on the net, one should do it and get off the net. Just minimizing the view ties up precious space on Fort Benning pipe.

"As a result of the increased requirements to use new Web-based military programs and systems for day-to-day military actions, Fort Benning has reached 100 percent capacity on our outbound and inbound network pipes," Torres said.

> "What's happening is a hardening of the arteries, if you will."
> Paul Yates
> Director of Information Management

The Directorate of Information Management estimates up to 50 percent of traffic going off Fort Benning is unofficial traffic, he said.

"A potential impact of this high usage is that many of our 'official business' systems may stop operating with a crash of the network gateway," Torres said.

"What's happening is a hardening of the arteries, if you will," said Paul Yates, director of information management. "We have reached a point of saturation."

As a result, he said the information going out and in on the post lines could get damaged.

This hampers the mission of many on post such as the Directorate of Contracting and Financial Management.

To free up space, Torres said the post is in the process of increasing line size.

The date of the upgrade depends on funding, Yates said.

Until then, "Everyone is reminded personal use of our LAN for other than official business is a privilege, not a right," Torres said.

Yates said it is vital for Internet use to be only for official use.

For instance, an employee who is trying to get a job as a result of A-76 is conducting official business. Using an online dictionary or thesaurus is authorized, too.

"I know people surf the net," Yates said. "If they're on Yahoo, they may be interfering with official government business. This has to stop."

Armed Forces offer complimentary flights

Many soldiers are not aware of benefit

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

He's flown to Germany, Hawaii, Japan, and Puerto Rico all for the bargain price of $0.

Retired Staff Sgt. Ivory Melton takes advantage of Space Available flights, many of them originating from Lawson Army Airfield at Fort Benning.

Air Mobility Command's first responsibility is airlifting Department of Defense traffic. But after the official duty of loading passengers and cargo, seats are open to hopeful travelers like Melton. In some cases, a majority of the seats may be available.

"A lot of people at Fort Benning don't know about us," said Fort Benning's Will Choate, air traffic control specialist.

"Like right now, we have three C-130s with 10 seats open on each flight. It's a shame to have these flights open and nobody on them."

Space Available flights are a privilege given to active duty, retired, National Guard, Reserve, family members and many other travelers.

The system is broken into travel categories, each representing the priority for folks to fly. While the system can't guarantee passengers time frames, they make available every seat they can.

East Coast Air Mobility Command hubs can be found at Charleston, S.C.; Dover, Del.; McGuire, N.J.; and Norfolk Va. Both commercial and military gateways are also found at a variety of airports across the country, including Atlanta-Hartsfield International Airport.

Atlanta-Hartsfield International Airport has twice weekly flights to Rhein Main Air Base, Germany. Departure days are Thursdays and Sundays. Travelers can catch a return flight home from the same base on Fridays and Wednesdays, making the Georgia airport a popular port for Fort Benning families to travel from.

> "A lot of people at Fort Benning don't know about us. Like right now, we have three C-130s with 10 seats open on each flight. It's a shame to have these flights open and nobody on them."
> Will Choate
> air traffic control specialist

Charleston International Airport also offers flights to Rhein Main each week with return flights on Mondays.

Most terminals have routine flights to certain areas of the world, and many have their flight schedules recorded via phone, making it easier for travelers to formulate tentative plans. Some military terminals provide lounges, restaurants and entertainment rooms mirroring their commercial counterparts.

Numerous Army airfields have similar setups, though on a smaller scale. Lawson Army Airfield has schedules available at the base operations office and representatives are available to answer questions frequently asked my users. Choate has assisted hundreds of passengers in and out of Fort Benning since 1981. He and the five-person crew run the station 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

"You can come in here Christmas morning at 3 a.m. and find out what flights are available," he said.

Generally speaking, the rule of thumb is that family members can't fly within the states, Choate said. But if a flight originates on the east coast and stops in California to refuel on its way to Alaska, for example, it's clear sailing for any spouse or child.

While a majority of flights are within the country and therefore inaccessible to many family members, it can be the first leg of an international trip for duty members.

Be flexible and have enough funds to stay in a hotel or buy a one-way ticket back if needed. While the system is an amazing benefit, it's not a way to take a weekend trip, Choate said.

"If a soldier is supposed to be in formation Monday morning and isn't, he's considered AWOL," Choate said. "And most young troops don't have the funds to buy a last minute ticket back."

Passengers must register for travel and present all required paperwork, such as ID cards, passports, and leave forms. Travelers can do so in person, fax, mail or e-mail.

All travelers will remain on the register for 60 days after registration, for the duration of their leave orders or until they are selected for flight.

Travelers can choose up to five countries. They suggest using the "all" as the fifth destination, so that travelers may take advantage of unscheduled and unique travel opportunities.

For instance, Charleston Air Force Base offers flights to the Virgin Islands, Spain and Honduras.

"Learn the system and use it," Melton said. "You'll save lots of money."

For more information about Lawson Army Airfield flights, call 545-3524 or 545-2471. For information regarding flights from Atlanta or Charleston, call (843) 963-5794/5795.

Post needs to remain vigilant against terrorism

Fort Benning not immune to threat

Al Harvey
Directorate of Intelligence and Security

The current terrorist threat to Fort Benning is low. However, this threat has the potential to change rapidly, based on perceived vulnerability and hostile intent.

Lowering the installation THREATCON to "normal" requires increased individual awareness to continue to combat terrorism.

The physical security measures that were in place during THREATCON Alpha (roadblocks, vehicle checks, etc) are no longer routine measures. The installation has returned to THREATCON "normal." Thus each individual must assume a greater responsibility in the overall protection of themselves, family members and facilities.

Individuals must become increasingly aware of their surroundings, remain alert for anything suspicious or out of place and keep a low profile by not attracting attention to themselves. It is necessary to remind the entire Fort Benning community that the threat is real (regardless of THREATCON) and will continue in the future. Terrorists attack weak and soft targets, regardless of location and without warning.

Education is one of the best tools to combat terrorism.

Terrorist attacks against DOD have claimed over 300 lives and wounded well over 600 personnel in the last 20 years. The most common form of attack was a bomb.

The spring and summer months mark a time of historically symbolic dates that may invite some form of terrorist action. Fort Benning is currently in this window of heightened terrorist activity, from both domestic and international groups.

Terrorist attacks ranging from the Khobar Towers bombing in June of 1996 to the Kenya and Tanzania embassy bombings in August of 1998 have occurred during the summer months.

Although many of these incidents transpired overseas, Fort Benning is not immune to such acts. Fort Benning is host to several prominent figures, including our international students that visit for military training.

The July 1997 Centennial Park bombing is a grim reminder that domestic acts of terrorism hit home. Let us not forget Usama Bin Laden's (World's most wanted terrorist) words, "All Americans are our enemies. Not just the ones who fight us directly, but also the ones that pay their taxes."

With the anniversary of the Olympic, Kenya and Tanzania bombings approaching, it is important to emphasize that terrorist groups oftentimes employ their acts of violence on a significant historical date. Some significant approaching dates are as follows:

- Feb. 24,1998, Usama bin Ladin issues fatwa that justifies attacks on Americans anywhere in the world.
- Feb. 26, 1993 — The World Trade Center bombing
- March 20, 1995 — Sarin gas attack on Tokyo subway system
- April 12, 1985 — Restaurant bombing in Madrid, Spain
- July 27, 1996 — The Centennial Park, Atlanta Summer Games bombing.
- Aug. 2, 1990 — Iraq invades Kuwait.
- Aug. 7, 1998 — Kenya and Tanzania embassy bombings.
- Aug. 19, 1969 — First hijacking of a U.S. airliner by Palestinians.

The above list is just a short example of the many dates that may be important to certain groups or individuals. Fort Benning represents the power of the nation, an immense source of soldiers and valuable equipment, an open installation, and with the status as Best Installation in the World can be considered a potential target that would add to a terrorists reputation.

As soldiers, civilians and family members prepare to PCS or take leave overseas, it is important to know the threat level of the country they will live or visit.

This information will provide information on terrorist situation and the potential danger existing in the specific country. Individuals will also be greater prepared to protect themselves, property and loved ones.

The following Country Threat Level chart outlines the current threat level for selected countries.

This information is updated weekly or as changes occur. The following methodology is used for determining the threat level:

High: Anti-U.S. terrorists are operationally active and use large casualty producing attacks as their preferred method of operation. There is a substantial DOD presence and the Operating Environment favors the terrorist.

Significant: Anti-U.S. terrorists are present and attack personnel as their preferred method of operation or a group uses large casualty producing attacks as their preferred method but has limited operational activity. The Operating Environment is neutral.

Moderate: Terrorists are present but there are no indications of anti-U.S. activity. The Operating Environment favors the Host Nation or the U.S.

Low: No group is detected or the group activity is non-threatening.

High — Columbia, Egypt, Jordan, Kuwait, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Turkey, Yemen.

Significant — Bosnia, Fry, Germany, Greece, Iran, Iraq, Italy, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Pakistan, Philippines, Somalia, Sudan, Tajikistan, United Arab Emirates, Uzbekistan.

Moderate — Albania, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Equador, Ethiopia, Fyrom, Georgia, Haiti, India, Indonesia, Israel, Kenya, Oman, Paraguay, Peru, Puerto Rico, Russia, Rwanda, South Africa, Spain, Sri Lanka, Turkmenistan, Uganda, United Kingdom, Venezuela.

The Republic of Korea and any other country not listed above have a current terrorism threat level of low.

Old forms can mean big trouble for families

Jesse French
Adjunct General, Directorate of Personnel

Is your Record of Emergency Data, DD Form 93, and Servicemen's Group Life Insurance, SGLV 8286, up-to-date?

If not, your family could be headed for big trouble should you be injured or die while on active duty.

Too often, the foremost important documents to the soldier are the monthly Leave and Earnings Statement, those long awaited Permanent Change of Station Orders or the DD Form 214, Certificate of Release or Discharge from Active Duty.

But we need to educate ourselves about what should be the two of the most important documents to a soldier while on active duty — the Record of Emergency Data and the Servicemen's Group Life Insurance.

Tragedies do happen. When they do, one of the first actions taken by the casualty clerk is to obtain the soldier's 201 File.

The DD Form 93 is screened to determine who is to be notified of the incident or death.

Serious repercussions can occur if the DD Form 93 does not reflect the correct information.

For example, a soldier is divorced and remarried, then dies while on active duty. Because the soldier did not update the DD Form 93 to reflect his or her current marital status, the ex-spouse is notified of his or her death while the current spouse is looking for a letter in the mail. Situations like this have been known to happen.

Soldiers are always given the opportunity to review and update their DD Form 93 and SGLV when arriving and departing a duty station.

However, between these times, it is entirely up to the soldier to update these documents when changes occur.

After an update of these forms, a copy is furnished to the soldier.

Copies of records should be kept in a safe place, reviewed occasionally and, if a change is needed, the soldier should go through personnel channels to update them.

The DD Form 93 contains other important information, like who the soldier's beneficiary is for death gratuity and unpaid pay and allowances.

Incorrect information in these areas have led to lawsuits.What about the SGLV? Referring to the example we used above, the soldier did not change his or her SGLV election after the remarriage to show that the current spouse was to get his or her life insurance.

Therefore, the SGLV still reflects the ex-spouse.

Who gets the money? The ex-spouse. What does the current spouse get? Nothing. Legal action will be imminent.

The importance of the DD Form 93 and SGLV 8286 cannot be overemphasized. Unit commanders, first sergeants and supervisors should make sure soldiers keep these forms up-to-date.

Plans being made for airfield expansion

Approval needed from Indian tribes for work to begin

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Lawson Army Airfield will expand its parking ramp this summer, but not before American Indians with historic ties to the post approve a cultural resource proposal for the site.

Post officials briefed representatives from seven American Indian tribes on the airfield project during a consultation at Fort Benning March 8.

The post's archeologist, Dr. Chris Hamilton, will soon send the tribes the installation's action plan concerning the handling of any artifacts or human remains uncovered during the expansion of the airfield.

The Georgia State Historic Preservation Office will also review the proposal, which could cost the installation an estimated $1 million to execute, Hamilton said.

"The money would cover excavation, conservation, analysis, reporting and coordinating with the tribes and the state," Hamilton said.

Panamerican Consultants, Inc., a cultural resources firm, holds the contract for the work.

The airfield is located near the historically important American Indian town of Kasita, the first archeological site recorded in Chattahoochee County more than 30 years ago, Hamilton said.

Tribal leaders from Alabama, Texas, Oklahoma and Florida attended the consultation.

"We informed them of the military requirements that make this expansion mission-essential," Hamilton said.

A Military Traffic Management Command study in 1997 looked at what the airfield needed to properly deploy troops and recommended the expansion of the runway and the parking apron, said Dean Miller, industrial engineer, Logistics Integration Office, Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics.

The airfield serves the CONUS Replacement Center, through which individuals and units deploying overseas process, and is a Force Projection Platform for units such as the 3rd Brigade, and the 75th Ranger Regiment.

The planned lighted parking apron in the northeast corner of the airfield will quadruple the available parking area and allow the airfield to park up to seven large airplanes, such as C-5s, said Roger Sigmon, supervisor at Lawson's base operations. The project is estimated to cost $15.8 million.

"Always in the past if we had more than three planes on the ground we had to rely on areas not designed for parking," Sigmon said.

Congestion on the ground has halted airborne training at times, Miller said.

The runway will be expanded from 8,200 feet to 10,000 feet in fiscal 2002. The runway extension will allow the C-5 aircraft to carry up to 21,000 additional pounds, depending on weather conditions.

"This will allow large airplanes to carry more cargo and fly longer distances without having to stop and refuel," Sigmon said.

The final project will be a passenger processing facility to be built in fiscal 2002 for deploying troops.

The first stage of the four-stage improvement project has already been completed. An ammunition holding area at the airfield's southeast corner is scheduled for final inspection today. That project cost $1.22 million, Miller said.

Sigmon has worked at the airfield for almost 20 years, off and on since 1974.

"We have been asking for it for years and years," he said of the ramp expansion project.

"It's needed and now we are getting some of the money to do the things we need to do."

Swap: Benefits community

during the development of the land. One acre of land on Fort Benning will serve as a reinterment site for the remains.

"It has been an awful long process, but the end result will be extremely beneficial to Columbus and to Fort Benning," said Jim Buntin, chairman of the Columbus Development Authority.

Buntin applauded the partnership established between the military, private and public sectors.

"We were all working together for the same goal — to move Columbus and the region forward. This is an opportunity for the region to move up to another level in industrial development," Buntin said.

Columbus plans to develop 1,500 acres of its newly acquired tract and call it the Muscogee Technology Park. Land has also been set aside for parks and recreation and as a natural habitat.

"In the past, Columbus could attract business people who wanted 25- to 50-acre sites, now we can bring in people who need 200 to 300 acres, and that will mean jobs. The benefits will be far-reaching," Buntin said.

Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, sees some of those jobs putting money into the pockets of the military community.

"The increased number of jobs from the commercial development will benefit family members from Fort Benning. I'm sure of it," Torres said.

The land swap doesn't mean the post will break all ties to the land it once owned.

"We will continue to work hand-in-hand with the city and be partners in this," Torres said.

For example, environmentalists from the Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics will assist in the relocation of state-protected gofer tortoises from the city's tract to areas on post, said John Brent, chief, Environmental Management Division, DFEL.

And both the city and post will continue to manage the red-cockaded woodpecker habitat. Prescribed burning will continue on designated areas to maintain and improve habitat requirements, Brent said.

"Both the city and Fort Benning went through a learning process, and we've all benefited from this experience," Brent said. "Now we have a textbook example of how to deal with wetlands, endangered species and cultural resources. This has been a win-win situation for everyone."

Fort Benning will use its new land for dismounted training, said Robert Jordan, deputy chief, Directorate of Operations and Training. The area is not appropriate for mounted maneuvers because the soil is sandy and would erode under tracked vehicles.

"The additional land to the south greatly enhances our dismounted maneuver space, and will give commanders at all levels greater flexibility for planning, preparation and execution of nonlive fire maneuver training," Jordan said.

Four die in training accident

Navy aircraft drops ordnance in wrong place

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Four soldiers were killed Monday in a training accident near the Udairi Range in Kuwait when a Navy aircraft dropped ordnance too close to an observation post.

The accident took place during a nighttime close air support exercise in Kuwait when a Navy F/A-18C dropped its MK-82, 500-pound ordnance on or near observers at the Udairi Range, located about 30 miles south of Iraq.

A U.S. Air Force service member was also killed in the accident, along with a member of the New Zealand armed forces who was observing the exercise. Three additional U.S. service members were injured in the accident, officials said.

The soldiers killed are:

Staff Sgt. Troy J. Westberg, of Wisconsin, who was assigned to the 3rd Special Force Group, Fort Bragg, N.C., as a Special Forces medical sergeant.

Staff Sgt. Richard N. Boudreau, of Florida, who was assigned to the 707th Ordnance Company (Explosive Ordnance Detachment), Fort Lewis, Wash., as an explosive ordnance disposal specialist.

Sgt. Phillip M. Freligh, of Nevada, who was assigned to the 734th Explosive Ordnance Detachment at White Sands Missile Range, N.M., and attached for deployment to the 707th Ordnance Company (Explosive Ordnance Detachment), Fort Lewis, Wash., as an explosive ordnance disposal specialist.

Spc. Jason D. Wildfong, of West Virginia, who was assigned to the 707th Ordnance Company (Explosive Ordnance Detachment), Fort Lewis, Wash., as an explosive ordnance disposal specialist.

Three U.S. service members remain hospitalized with "non-life-threatening injuries," an official said. One injured service member was transferred to Landstuhl Regional Medical Center in Germany, and two remain in a military hospital in Kuwait, said Army Lt. Col. Rick Thomas, a U.S. Central Command spokesman.

The accident occurred at 8 p.m. Kuwaiti time (11 a.m. Eastern time) during a joint Kuwaiti-U.S. air exercise near the Al Udairi firing range. The cause of the accident is under investigation, officials said.

Army officials said they are deeply saddened by the tragic deaths. They extended heartfelt sympathy and condolences to the families and friends who lost loved ones.

The Army's first concern is for the families in this time of anguish and bereavement, officials said, adding that the Army is committed to providing its full support in providing for the needs of the family members.

Streetman: Receives honor

weeks on a reconnaissance mission," she recalled. "He was supposed to come home."

But Streetman never came home, and his body was never recovered. For nearly half a century Lillian held on to the hope that her son was still alive. Only recently has she accepted the fact of her son's death, but too many questions remain unanswered and the death of hope gave birth to frustration.

"I'd like to know what really happened to him," she said. "I'd like something definite. I'd like the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Where there's no answers there's never, never, never any closure. I can take most anything but this frustration."

The second of eight children, Streetman joined the Army in 1946, at the age of 16. He was assigned to the 14th Infantry Regiment occupational force in Japan. By the age of 20, he was promoted to sergeant first class, and began his second tour with the 19th Infantry Regiment in Korea.

In August, 1950, Lillian received a telegram from the Defense Department saying her son had suffered minor wounds in July. Three days later, another knock, another telegram. This one began "The Secretary of Defense regrets to inform you ..."

"There's still so much confusion about exactly what happened," said Frances McCall, Streetman's sister, who was 16 at the time of his death. "The last confirmed sighting of him was on an ambulance. He was wounded but expected to recover. After that there's no record of him at all. We've been told the ambulance may have been blown up. We've been told he probably returned to his unit and was killed later. We've been told he may have been a victim of the Death March, but his name has never been listed among those recovered."

Streetman's obituary ran in the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer soon after his disappearance, but Lillian refused to have a funeral or a memorial service until his remains were returned. As long as there were no remains, there was still hope, she reasoned.

"It was just so foreign to us that they could not find him," McCall said. "They told us he was killed, but they couldn't give us any real evidence, not even dog tags. How do you accept something like that?"

Hope began to wane in 1994, and Lillian's children convinced her to give her oldest son "the honor he was due from his country." A memorial service was conducted at Fort Benning's Main Post Cemetery and a marker was placed in the spot Lillian still hopes to bury her son one day.

"I'm still waiting," she said.

McCall and her siblings have continued the search for information about their brother. Streetman's dental records have proved inconclusive, so his sister and nephew have agreed to donate DNA.

"Still it's a matter of waiting," McCall said. "Momma's received a letter nearly every year for the past 50 years keeping her informed when remains have been recovered and identified. Now we're just waiting for the opportunity to establish a DNA record. Mom doesn't have too much longer to wait."

Accident: Kills ranger

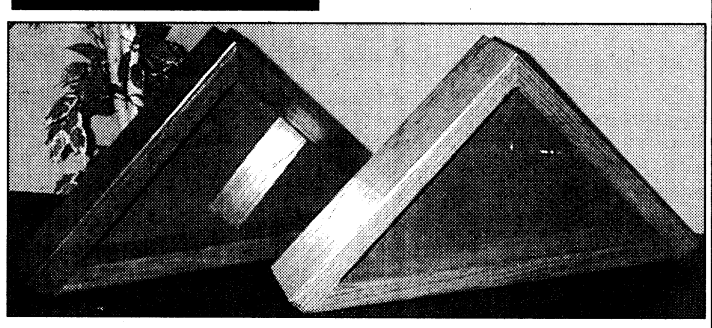
alcohol contributed to the crash. In Georgia a driver is legally intoxicated at .08 blood alcohol level.

"This is a terrible and tragic accident that not only affects the families of both rangers but also their friends in the battalion," said Maj. William Butler, 75th Ranger Regiment. "This will have a lasting impact on the unit for a long time."

The accident stands as a reminder that safety measures should be observed at all times, on and off-duty.

"Fort Benning lost its fifth soldier in as many weeks," said Fort Benning Chief of Staff Col. Dale Vona. "This is also the third death involving a motor vehicle. All were the result of accidents that could have been prevented. Each of us must take responsibility for our own actions and for those around us. As leaders we need to take care of our soldiers. As soldiers we need to act maturely and responsibly.



"Today a fellow soldier of our latest victim is charged with vehicular homicide. This is a double tragedy and must not be allowed to happen again."

There is no doubt in my mind that my future financial security will be from my real estate holdings and not from my work as an attorney. NGC has given me the tools to make this possible. Thank you."

Availability, terms and amounts of grants and loans vary. You must meet eligibility requirements to qualify. Re-payment may be required if program conditions are not met.

It's FREE — But You've Got To Work For It!

As we all know, the best things in life are free, and the rest we have to pay for either by working hard or laying out cash. When it comes to government grants, you really can get FREE money. However, you will have to qualify and work for it. Sometimes you'll have to work hard and sometimes all you have to do is properly fill out the paper work and it comes easy.

You see, through the government grant, loan and subsidy system, it is possible to buy your own home, even though you don't have a down payment. You might also be able to start your own business or expand your existing business even though you don't have the money you need.

Get Money To Expand Your Business!

"For anyone who's in business or even wants to start their own business, you can get a $6,000, or more, subsidy, courtesy of the U.S. Congress, that you never have to pay back every year for the rest of your life, as long as you're in that business. NGC shows you how to get this."

– Sandy Botkin,
Attorney & CPA, Former IRS Trainer

Availability, terms and amounts of grants and loans vary. You must meet eligibility requirements to qualify. Mr. Botkin is not a speaker at the NGC conference and is not a principal of NGC.

This free money comes from the federal, state and your local city government grant, loan and subsidy systems. These systems can (if you qualify) help you to become a real estate investor, even though you don't have any money, or the knowledge to do it. Or if you're already a real estate investor, you might be able to get free money to fix up your property and never have to pay it back.

Sound too good to be true? Read on. It gets better!

There is one organization in particular that teaches how to find free money, low-interest loans and subsidies offered by the government grant, loan and subsidy system. They provide reference materials about all the programs available in your local area and guide you to which ones you might qualify for receiving a grant, loan or subsidy.

The company is called the National Grants Conference (NGC) and they are on a mission to educate local business people, property owners and individuals who are sincerely interested in learning how to get free money from the government.

The first step in that learning process is attendance at an Introductory Conference. Conference attendees can discover little known programs that offer free government money, low-interest loans, subsidies and great financial opportunities in their local community.

Not Just For Poor People

There's a myth going around that only poor people can take advantage of free money grants, subsidies and low-interest loans. But really, some of the most famous people that have taken advantage of them in the past are the super wealthy. People like Donald Trump, his father Fred Trump and Ross Perot, to name just a few.

Did you know that Lee Iacocca got a $1.5 Billion dollar Guaranteed Loan for Chrysler and Stephen Jobs got money from the Government to start Apple Computer? It's True.In fact, most of the programs that people can qualify for actually fall in an income bracket that encompasses the majority of the American people. There are grant programs available in this area for people making as little as $1,500 a month.

Mid-Income Range

NGC specializes in helping people get government grants, low-interest loans and subsidy programs for those in the middle income range who make between $20,000 a year on the low end, and up to $300,000 a year on the high end.

Is it Really FREE Money?

If you don't have to pay the money back, it's actually free. However, you do have to meet eligibility requirements to qualify and grants are subject to conditions that vary. And in some cases, re-payment may be required if the program conditions are not met. But if you can live with all that, this really is FREE Money!

All this sounds great, but why is the government doing this?

Better Life & More Taxes

Benefit number one is that as more people become home owners, they have a pride of ownership in their houses and they tend to be more productive members of society. They also pay property taxes and tend to be more stable in employment because they've got to make their house payment to maintain their investment.

Grant Money To Revitalize Communities

That's why the government also provides grant money for investors to revitalize communities. They offer grants and low-interest loans to property owners to take the properties that are in bad shape, that have been run down and rebuild them and make them available for subsidized housing for the low to moderate income, as well as the elderly.

Know-How & Unique Insights About How To Qualify

"NGC has created a treasure chest of valuable information about Federal, State and Local Programs that help people buy their homes, expand their businesses and invest in real estate. With this information we provide know-how and unique insights about how to find the right programs you qualify for, how to complete the applications, what questions to ask and what people you should be talking to."

– Lisa Yount,
NGC Research Staff Director

More Jobs & More Taxes

The government also has programs for small businesses. The reason for this is because the small businesses drive the American economy. Most of new jobs are created by small businesses. We've seen the future in big corporations. They're downsizing. It's the small businesses that are giving the economy a big lift and providing more jobs.

Programs For Women

There are special programs for women to get into business. The facts and figures about women in businesses are growing in this country and their success rate is extraordinary.

At the Conference, many opportunities for businesses and women have been identified and various local, state and federal programs will be targeted that many people may be interested in and may be able to qualify for.

Local Free Money

NGC has a team of research specialists with offices in Chicago, Illinois and Rochester, New York. These specialists conduct daily research on every government grant, loan and subsidy program available in every major U.S. City as well as all programs that are nation wide.

In almost every case NGC is able to provide a wide variety of different programs that local people can take advantage of.

$100,000 For Your Business

There's one particular loan program that's really exciting. It's called the 'Low Doc Program.' This is for individuals who want to start or grow a business. And there's a simple one-page form you have to complete. With this form you may be able to qualify for up to $100,000 for your business. It's a fabulous program that cuts through the red tape.

$50,000 Research Grants

If you have a great idea and are thinking... "If I just had the money..." — You will be interested to know that there is a research program, which allows up to $50,000 if you have a great innovative idea on technology. The Government may give you six months of money for research.

Two More Buildings With No Money Down

Marilyn Woods of Elkgrove, Illinois discovered that sometimes just one idea can turn your whole life around.

"I really got back on my feet and out of debt by going to the NGC seminar. A few key ideas turned a couple of real estate deals completely around where I was able to acquire two more buildings - no money down - take equity out of the the buildings, leave the closing table with over $20,000 and double my cash flow income for the next year."

– Marilyn Wood
Elkgrove, Illinois

Availability, terms and amounts of grants and loans vary. You must meet eligibility requirements to qualify. Re-payment may be required if program conditions are not met. Personal Experience, Yours may vary.

Resources For Small Businesses

As a small business owner you can apply for government funding. You can use the money for equipment, for purchasing equipment, for getting technical help, as well as for your inventory and to even purchase the real estate too.

In a sense, by using these programs the government helps you create the American dream: owning real estate and owning your own business.

Who Should Attend?

If you are thinking that you don't want to work for a boss anymore, or you're sick and tired of your job or you don't want to commute any more, attend this conference.

Or maybe you simply don't have a sense of security working for somebody else. Take the time and effort and come to this local conference. Learn about these programs. If you have a great idea, you may be able to get the money for a new business or real estate investment and start to depend on yourself.

Look at all the examples on this page. People who've changed their lives and now have successful businesses and own their own homes and investment properties. These are examples of their own personal experience. Your experience may be different. It may be worse or it may be even better. The only way you'll ever know is if you try. Call and make your reservation today to attend the conference in your local area.

Bad Credit Is Not A Block

Bad credit is not necessarily an obstacle any more because many lending institutions have made it easier to qualify for a loan and there are various programs for people in this situation.

Bankruptcy Not What It Used To Be

Also, bankruptcy is no longer the kind of problem it used to be. That's because 1.3 million Americans filed for Chapter Seven protection last year. Banks understand that you can only go bankrupt once every seven years.

If you don't have a job, a business or a regular source of income or are in the process of declaring bankruptcy, it is doubtful that this program will be able to help your situation.

Participate On Any Level

The beauty in these programs is that you can participate on any level you want. If you just want to be a home-owner, there are programs available that may be able to help you get the down payment grants and loans to provide the down payment, to buy your home.

If you want to be an investor, there are programs available to rehabilitate properties.

If you'd like to go into business for yourself, so you don't have to work nine to five, work for somebody else, depend on anybody else for an income, there are programs for small businesses. You can choose or combine many of the programs together.

Listen to the information provided at this Introductory Conference, further participation is optional. You'll learn about different ways you can take advantage of the unique programs the National Grants Conference (NGC) offers.

Husband & Wife Team

This is especially true if you are a husband and wife team, and you've been sitting down talking about your financial future. Come to this conference because NGC is going to share with you a great opportunity that most people are completely unaware exists.

Whether it's the government grants and loan systems for buying your first house, for investing in real estate, as well as going into business. You may be able to build a future for yourself, a future that you can feel good about with your children and show them a way forward.

Learn how you can apply for government grant money that you may not have to pay back. Come to the National Grants Conference in your local area. You'll find out all about these programs, and if you qualify, you just may be on the road to financial security.

Make plans to attend the National Grant Introductory Conference, coming to your area. Discover the free money grant, loan and subsidy programs available right now.

Infantry Band NCO is best in Army

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Eister plays his saxophone outside his office.

God motivates sax player to excel in life

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

"Commit your works to the Lord, and your plans will be established."

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Eister, saxophonist, U.S. Army Infantry Band, is a living example of the Proverbs 16:3's wisdom.

He is the Army band, senior NCO of the Year.

"The Lord is essential in everything I do, and he deserves the glory," Eister said. "This recognition is a result of his work in my life."

First Sgt. Michael Wholey was confident the Christian of 28 years would win.

"I was sitting on pins and needles waiting for it to happen, and it did. It's always reassuring when someone that good gets the recognition he deserves."

The saxophonist emerged victorious from a pool of senior NCOs who had to score over 90 on each event of the Army Physical Fitness Test and a 3.0 grade or higher on a large group of musical tasks.

His credentials passed through two boards who felt he should win.

Wholey, Chief Warrant Officer Paul A. Clark, band director, and Eister travel to the School of Music in Little Creek, Va., April 18 to attend the Band Masters Conference.

While there, Eister's peers will honor his accomplishments.

Eister's high-speed nature was the reason the band chose him to be acting first sergeant from June to October last year.

He didn't disappoint, Wholey said.

"I walked into what one can only call a first sergeant's dream," Wholey said. "Everything was clicking on all levels, and everyone had ultimate respect for him."

The 36-year-old sax player is an outstanding leader who knows how to look out for soldiers, he said. His professionalism and dedication to band members will soon be missed. The Atlanta, Ga., native heads to Schofield Barracks, Hawaii, in July to join the 25th Infantry Division (Light) Band.

Band members will remember his exceptional musicianship and leadership as a palatial drum major and conductor, he said.

"It will be really hard," Wholey said. "He'll leave a huge void we'll be hard pressed to fill."

The 10-year Army veteran advised Wholey often and helped him learn the first sergeant position.

"I'll miss the opportunity to bounce every aspect of my professional and personal life off him," Wholey said. "He is the best NCO I've seen in the 22 years I've been in the Army. He is a sergeant major in waiting."

Eister said he has mixed emotions about leaving.

"I have enjoyed serving here immensely," the saxophonist of 27 years said. "It's been challenging and rewarding, but my family and I are excited to see what the Lord has in store for us in Hawaii."

He is thankful for everyone in the band for their support.

"I am honored that my command recommended me and doubly honored to have been chosen," he said.

He said another pivotal ingredient for his recognition was his wife, Tina, daughters, Rachael, Madison and Kasey and son, Mark Jr.

Serving as first sergeant was the greatest highlight of this assignment here, he said.

"It gave me the opportunity, not only to learn and grow, but to develop an interest in each and every soldier personally and professionally, in depth," he said.

The challenge of the first sergeant position will help him as his career progresses.

"My number one goal is to live up to the honor," Eister said. "At my next assignment, I know they'll say, 'So you're the NCO of the Year, huh.' But at the same time, I just want to be myself."

Eister, who will soon earn a bachelor of science degree in religion from Liberty University, Va., will accomplish his objective, Clark said.

"He inspires his soldiers to think, evaluate, and choose proper courses of action for themselves," he said. "Sergeant First Class Eister is the complete package: concert soloist, jazz improvisor, seasoned conductor, exceptional drum major, teacher, mentor and soldier."

Soldiers earn Expert Infantryman Badge

Only half withstand stress to pass big tests

Pfc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Just short of the 11-mile mark, Pfc. Jason Henke, B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, finally admitted that it was beginning to get to him.

"Shoulders are really feeling it now," he said, speaking in the abbreviated sentences of a man who's just alternately run and range-walked for more than two hours with a rucksack and a rifle. "That's the only thing really hurting on me are the shoulders."

Another half-mile, and Henke spotted the landmark he was looking for.

"There's my curve," he said. "One last left turn."

A sergeant drove past and shouted a time out the window of his truck: 2:23. Henke began to pick up the pace.

"Run from sign to sign," he said to himself, "then take a break after the curve."

He never took the break. Seven minutes later, at two hours and 30 minutes, Henke crossed the finish line with half an hour to spare. He stumbled to a stop, and an NCO ran up to take charge of him.

"Keep walking, keep walking," the NCO said. "Follow that sergeant right there."

Moments later, after Henke had laid out the contents of his ruck for a final inspection, it was official:

He was qualified to wear the badge of an expert infantryman.

Henke was the second finisher in the March 9 road march that was the final hurdle for 37 soldiers attempting to earn their Expert Infantryman's Badges. At the beginning of the week, 64 soldiers had begun testing for the honor.

At the chow point, though, second place — and everything behind it — brought the same joking response as soldiers walked up for their breakfast. The first finisher, 2nd Lt. Francisco Pena, D Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 3rd Brigade, crossed the finish line five minutes before Henke, leading to one repeated question from the soldiers dishing out the eggs and grits: "You let a lieutenant beat you?"

None of them seemed to care: All 37 finished in time, successfully earning the EIB.

The day had begun well before dawn, as EIB candidates gathered at a range not far from the headquarters of the Ranger Training Brigade to prepare for the final challenge of the week. The infantrymen assembled in the dark at Burroughs Range had proved their expertise at more than 20 infantry tasks, qualifying as experts with the M-16 or M-4 rifle and earning high scores on the Army Physical Fitness Test before testing with grenades, machine guns, mines, protective masks, communication tasks, and camouflage.

At 5:30, they received their final briefing; 20 minutes later, the soldiers geared up and moved to the starting line to begin the march.

Although maybe "march" isn't quite the right word. The shouted command that started the clock also started most of the soldiers running.

A few kept it up, and picked up an early lead on the others. Some said they were out to beat a particular time, but Henke wasn't worried about the clock.

"I just want to be first," he said. "That's all I care about."

For a while, he was, with a few others at the front. For the fastest soldiers, traveling ahead of the pack, the march started in near-silence, except for the sound of boots on pavement and empty magazines rattling in rifles.

As the sky began to grow light, machine gun fire began from a distant range; at the two-mile mark, the first bird sounds of morning began as Henke broke into a run again.

Henke had some good training behind him as he marched.

The young soldier said that his company conducts a serious road march every Thursday, while he had also been running and working out on the Stair Step Machine.

But Pena, who caught up with Henke at the three-mile mark, had been doing some training of his own.

The lieutenant said he does a monthly 12-mile march on personal time, "just for fun," and had once run a personal best of one hour, forty minutes.

"I told a bunch of people that I was true blue, and all that," Pena said. "I don't want to let them down."

Henke initially watched Pena pass him, before shrugging and saying, "Well, might as well catch up with him," and breaking into a run again. Once he'd caught up, the two marched side-by-side for a while, trading encouragement.

"I think I caught my second wind," Pena said.

Henke hesitated for a moment, like he was trying to convince himself, then agreed that he had, too. Pena pointed to the road ahead.

"You see that second bend? Let's run to there," he said.

By the four-mile mark, no one was in sight behind them as they slogged on.

"This is the worst place to put a hill," Pena said, midway up one long incline.

And then he took off running again. Henke fell behind and caught up, then fell behind again. At five miles, Pena led by a hundred yards.

Finally, Pena reached the six-mile marker, and turned around to go back the other way. Henke reached it a couple of minutes later, and Sgt. Steven Atkins, A Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., called out his time: one hour, eight minutes. Henke turned for home.

Just short of another mile back down the road, Henke passed his first sergeant, company commander, and other members of his company, headed the other way.

"Way to go, Henke," they called out.

A group of passing NCOs said they'd seen a lieutenant headed the other way, but added that he was "about 500 yards ahead," probably too far away to catch. Henke became the only EIB candidate in sight for hundreds of yards in either direction, walking in silence. At the eight-mile mark, Henke was at 1:34; the sergeant at the marker said Pena had passed at around 1:20.

Henke passed the next two-mile markers in silence, head down and pacing forward. He wasn't worried about the pace, anymore, or about falling behind Pena.

"I got this one in the bag," he said. "It doesn't matter."

And then his shoulders began to hurt, and he came up on that last left turn.

And then it was over.

At the chow point afterward, tired soldiers mixed horseplay with solemn congratulations.

"That lieutenant was moving," a specialist said.

Among the grateful finishers was Sgt. John Guadalupe, B Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., who earned the EIB on his first try.

"One shot, one kill," he said, looking up from his breakfast. "I'm not coming back here again."

Which was, at the end of a hard morning and a hard week, a sentiment 36 other soldiers —all of them expert infantrymen — could probably have understood.

Captain inspires children to succeed

Soldier uses life experiences to spur growth

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Broken homes, broken dreams, poverty, apathy, violence, racism — they're a fact of life for many, said one Fort Benning soldier — but an excuse for no one.

"I didn't have my own bed till I went off to college. There were never less than nine kids in the house, and Mom was on welfare. I still have the scar from a knife fight in school," said Capt. Ivy Williams, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "It's true, the things that don't kill you make you stronger. If you live in America you have no excuse for failure."

A self-described hot-tempered kid from a broken home, Williams calls on his own reserve of "been-there-done-that" anecdotes from his colorful childhood to inspire, even goad, local youth to succeed.

"I tell them they ain't seen nothing I ain't seen," William said, reverting to the slang, the "on-their-own-level" teen-speak that reaches the young men and women who regularly turn out to hear him speak at local high schools and detention centers.

But it's Williams' work with the younger students that recently earned him recognition by the Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus. Williams was named Tutor of the Year for the second time since joining the volunteer staff of CCSC's tutorial program in 1996.

"Maybe joined is not the right word. Actually, I was assigned to volunteer for community service as a punishment," Williams admitted, sheepishly. "My hot temper got me in trouble when I was a lieutenant in IOBC. It was a slap on the wrist. I knew I was getting off light, but I didn't realize just how much I'd enjoy it. It was supposed to be for one weekend but I've been going ever since."

Williams lives five minutes from Eastway Elementary School where he spends two hours every Saturday mentoring and tutoring students who need help with reading, writing or relationships.

"I'm there to help them learn, but if there are issues standing in the way, we talk about them," he said. "They know they can tell me what's bothering them, whether it's mom and dad or trouble at school. We deal with it before we tackle the homework."

Ten-year-old Cierra Jones said Williams takes the dread out of doing schoolwork.

"He's funny and he makes it fun, but he also makes it easier," she said. "I come here every weekend because I understand my schoolwork better when I leave."

In 1997, Williams became a member of CCSC's executive board. It was his rapport with young people and his commitment to mentoring and tutoring that caught the attention of Lonnie Jackson, CCSC's founder and director.

"From the start he's shown real leadership qualities," Jackson said. "He's been an outstanding asset to our program, and more importantly, he's been a role model for these young people. I know how we got him here, but I see how dedicated he is to these kids."

Williams said his success as a mentor stems from his own history — "common ground" he calls it — which often mirrors the lives of those he meets at the Muscogee County Youth Detention Center. At 5 foot, 7 inch, the 30-year-old father of two looks more like a teen-ager himself, a fact he often uses to his advantage.

"I just insinuate myself into the situation, become one of them," he said. "I look like them, I act like them. I get on their level. It catches their attention. Then when they start with the issues, I tell them like it is.

"They're doing the same things I did, dealing with the same problems I've had, but I have to show them I've been there before they'll take any advice from me."

And the best way to start, Williams said, is from the beginning.

"I was always the shortest guy. I'd get picked on and I'd blow up," he said. "I don't condone violence, but I was an angry young man and it got me in trouble. One day the entire third grade chased me home from school. The coach saw me running and recruited me for the track team. Sports became my life from then on. I loved to run, but football was my first choice."

Williams' dream of playing college football carried him from his Miami, Fla., home to Triton Jr. College in Chicago.

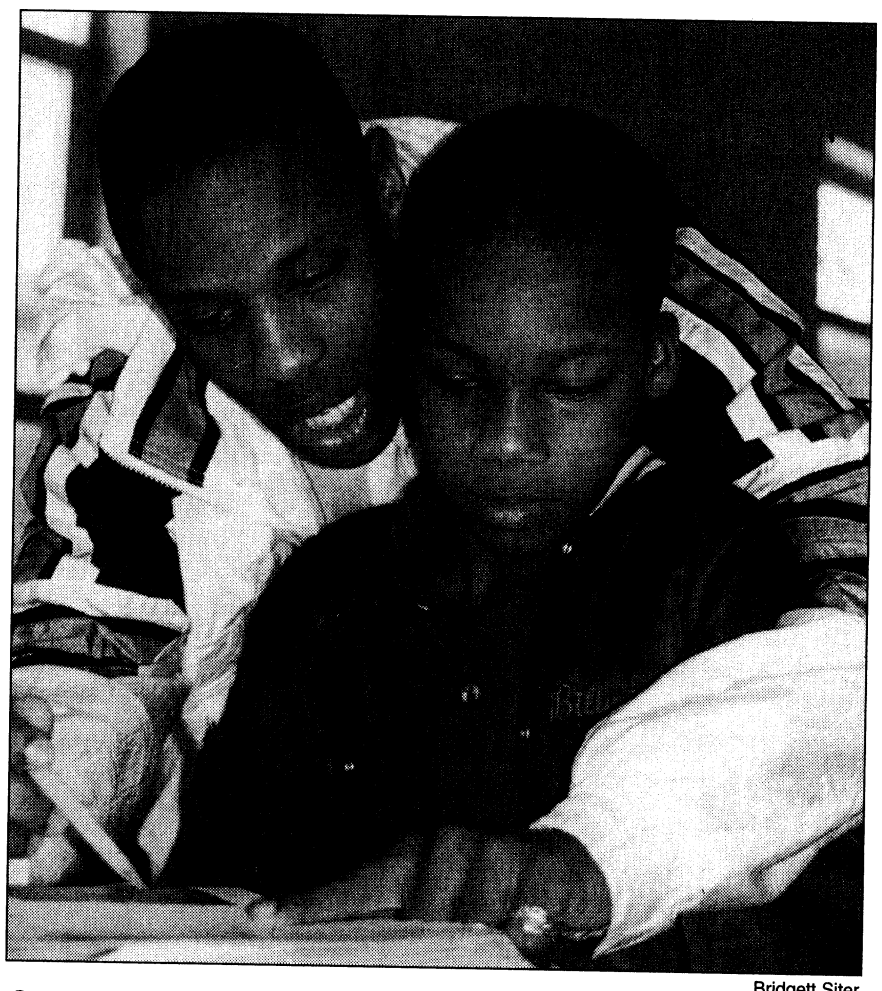
"In the beginning I only went to college to play football. More than 300 guys showed up on the field, and I was the smallest again," Williams laughed. "It was then I decided I should take my education a little more seriously. I might need it."

He enlisted in the Army Reserves in 1990 to help pay for school. After graduating from Iowa's Wesleyan College in 1994, he enlisted full-time.

"The NFL never called, so I made a plan. It started with Fort Benning. My brother, Larry, was dying from AIDS at that time, and I needed to get back here as close as I could," Williams said.

"I spent a lot of time on the road between here and Florida. My brother was 14 years older than me — the one I looked up to as an example of what not to do with my life. He used to sit me down and say, 'Ivy, don't do as I do. Do as I say.'"

Larry died in 1996, while Williams was in Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning.



"I saw the consequences of drugs first-hand. It was a powerful message, and I tell these kids today, 'I've seen what drugs will do to you and I've seen what they'll do to the people that love you. It's hard to watch someone you care about die."

Williams said he learned about volunteerism from his mother and inherited his drive to succeed from his father, who died when Williams was a young teen.

"Mom taught me to reach out to other people. Dad taught me to reach for my dreams. He told me once if I ever decided to be a soldier, I should be a ranger. That's my next goal," said Williams, who started Ranger School Monday.

"I told him I'll be praying with him, and he's going to make it," said his mom, Ethel Cooper, from her Miami home.

"So far he's succeeded at everything he's put his mind to, and he'll do it again."

CCSC seeks tutors

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Combined Communities of Southeast Columbus continually seeks volunteers like Capt. Ivy Williams to tutor young students from Fort Benning, Phenix City and Columbus.

CCSC's year-round tutorial program has served an estimated 20,000 students since it's inception 18 years ago, when it began as a summer program.

"The program is designed to help students keep pace in the classroom," said Lonnie Jackson, founder and director. "We found there was a great need to reach these students during the school year, before they fail. So 10 years ago we created this weekend program and it's been working ever since."

On average, 60 students attend two-hour sessions each Saturday at Eastway Elementary and Eddy Middle schools, and between 300 and 400 attend the summer workshops.

Jackson said ideally each student receives one-on-one instruction at each session, but just as there's a "high turnover" of students, Jackson said there's also a high turnover of tutors, despite more than 7,000 registered volunteers.

"Last weekend we had one-to-one instruction, enough tutors for every child. This week each tutor was working with a handful," he said. "We're grateful for all our workers, if they give us one day or every day, but we do need volunteers who are willing to commit to these children."

Jackson said volunteers do not need to have a background in education, just a willingness to help. The students bring their own school books and complete their homework assignments during each session. Tutors stand ready to answer questions, help with reading or explain math concepts as needed.

Wayne Chason began volunteering four years ago. The TSYS employee was named Volunteer of the Year in 1999.

"I try to be here at least three weeks out of the month. I like seeing these kids learn," he said. "Sometimes it's just a little bit of progress at a time, but it starts to add up. That's when it's all worth while, when you see it click. That's a great feeling."

MACH program teaches care for dying

Doctors learn to care for dying as well as living

Sally Shutt
Special to the Bayonet©

Like all medical students, Lt. Col. Carlos Parrado was taught that death was the enemy, to be beaten at all costs.

His training focused on saving lives, with little or no mention of how to help patients deal with the end of their lives — emotionally, spiritually and psychologically.

Times have changed.

"In our formal training we really are not taught how to deal with the dying patient. Our mission is to keep them alive, not to let them die," Parrado said.

But now medical professionals can receive training in end-of-life care, and Martin Army Community Hospital is the first military treatment facility in the Department of Defense to offer the program to their staff members, Parrado said.

The Education for Physicians on End-of-Life Care is a project supported by The Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and started in 1998. A team from the American Medical Association developed the curriculum, which includes modules on communicating bad news, whole patient assessment, pain management, depression, medical futility and legal issues such as advance directives, guardianships and informed consent.

Parrado, an internist at Martin Army, presented the three-day program to 19 health-care professionals at the hospital Feb. 26-28. Physicians, nurses, social workers and chaplains were among those who attended. They will now serve as trainers taking the course to the rest of the hospital staff and the Medical Command.

"This curriculum teaches skills involved in caring for dying patients or those with chronic illnesses that cause total pain — physical, social, spiritual and psychological," he said.

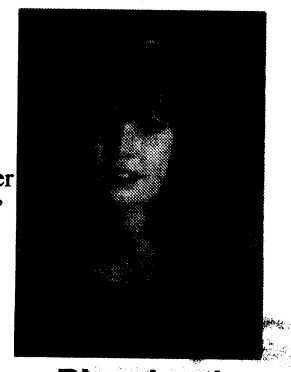
"There are more than surgical and medical issues to deal with. There is the continuity of following a patient through the dying process and providing comfort by being there for him, her and the family at the end of life," Parrado said.

Sheila Murphy, a nurse, volunteered to take the class. She is a mammography case manager who works with breast cancer patients.

Murphy has found that medical professionals become very uncomfortable around patients facing death and even have trouble "looking them in the face," she said.

"We don't know how to approach them. We are used to dealing with their physical problems, but are unsure how we are to approach them on an emotional level," she said.

Beverly Brooks is a nurse who serves as a pediatric case manager for the hospital. She also works with oncology patients of all ages.



"I think this will help me help the family members and the patients address the issues that need to be addressed at the end of life," Brooks

Stowers teacher recognized

Love of job, students earns music teacher VFW citizenship award

Blanchard

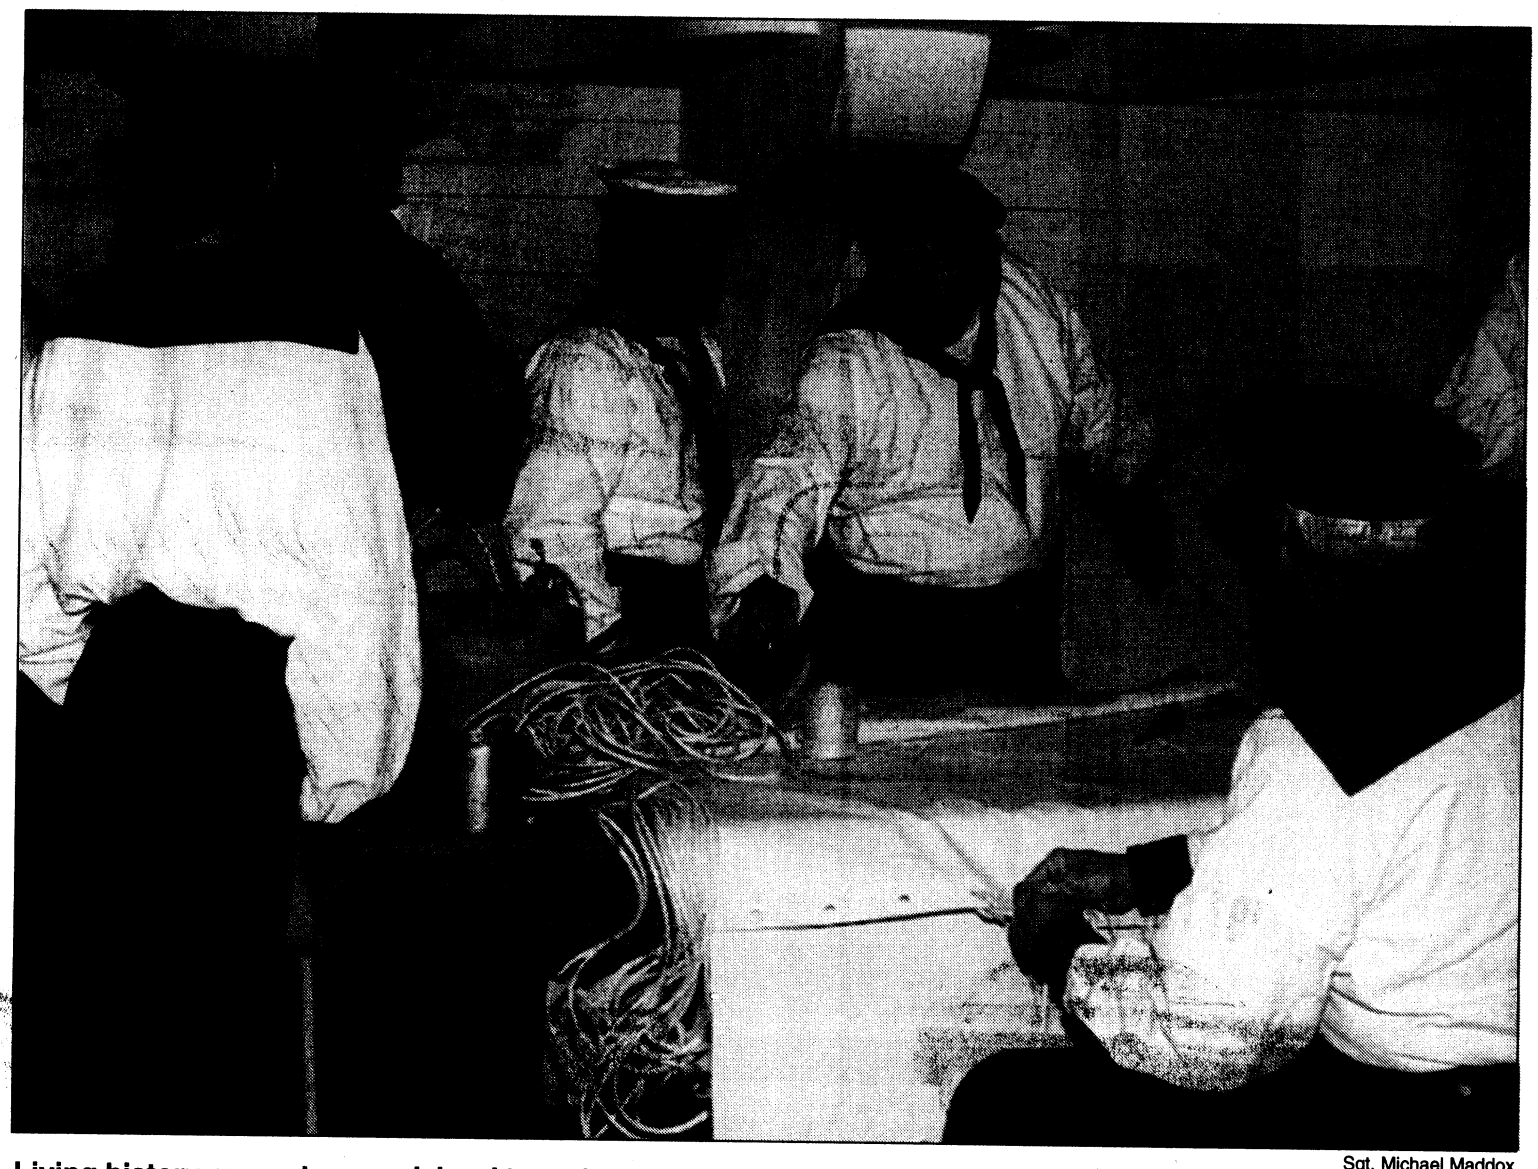
Stowers Elementary School's music teacher and chorus director, Lorri Blanchard, was awarded the Veterans of Foreign Wars Citizenship Education Teacher Award Feb. 21 by the Ladies' Auxiliary, VFW Chapter 665 in Columbus.

More than 45 members of the the Stowers faculty nominated Blanchard for the award based on her "hard work and dedication ... to celebrating our nation's heritage and honoring our soldiers and veterans through song," said Millie Harris, Stowers enrichment teacher, in a letter addressed to the national selection committee.



For the past three years, Blanchard has orchestrated the Celebrate America program, which involves every student in the school, preK through fifth grade. It's her ongoing dedication to this patriotic program that earned her the nomination by her peers, Harris said.

"Every year she writes the script, gets the costumes together, compiles the music, solicits volunteers, raises funds and practices long, hard hours after school to make sure each performance is the very best it can be," Harris said. "We average more than 1,500 people in the audience. It's a huge undertaking, and it's always a moving experience."

Blanchard, a Columbus native and graduate of Columbus State University, has been teaching music at Fort Benning for 15 years. At the request of principal Glenn Hughes, she developed the Celebrate America program in 1997 to give every student an opportunity to perform before an audience.

"I believe it's my responsibility as a teacher to instill in my students a sense of pride in America," Blanchard said. "It's been my hope, from the beginning, that this program would help these students understand the sacrifices soldiers, like their parents, have had to make throughout history to

Anchors aweigh: museum opens

Port Columbus offers area residents taste of naval history

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet staff

There's a new place for military history buffs to explore their pastime and watch it come to life in Columbus.

Port Columbus, the National Civil War Naval Museum, 1002 Victory Drive, opened its doors during a grand opening ceremony March 9, the 139th anniversary of the famous battle between the USS Monitor and the Merrimac.

The $11.3 million museum is the first of its kind in the U.S. — a museum dedicated entirely to Civil War naval history.

Area residents who visited the new museum found there's a little piece of history sitting right on the banks of the Chattahoochee River.

On the site of what used to be a Civil War shipyard, the museum houses various attractions, such as the the recovered frames of both the CSS Jackson, the largest surviving scratch-made ironclad ship of the war, and the gunboat, the CSS Chattahoochee. The Jackson was built less than one mile from the museum site.

The museum also offers a replica of Admiral David Farragut's fleet flagship, the USS Hartford. Museum visitors can climb aboard the Hartford and explore various cabins to include crew quarters, the ship doctor's office and the captain's cabin.

To add to this experience, living history reenactors sometimes volunteer time on weekends to tell tales of the ship's adventures.

Museum visitors can also get a feel for what being part of an ironclad fight was like in the battle simulator theater. It offers a firsthand view of what battle was like for Civil War seamen.

Many types of Civil War naval equipment are also on display in the museum. Artillery pieces like two seven-inch Brook rifles on the CSS Albemarle and various weapons from the era are included in the collection.

The museum is open 364 days a year, closed on Christmas Day. It's open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day.

Cost of admission is $4.50 for adults, $3 for students and $3.50 for senior citizens and military members.

Discounts are also available for groups of 20 or more people.

"As long as I live, I shall always be myself — and no other. Just me. Like a tree."

Huddled in clusters beneath umbrellas, Wilson Elementary students gathered on the school's front lawn March 9, and recited Walter De La Mare's Me, as they concluded their weeklong observance of Exceptional Children's Week with a tree-planting ceremony.

Heavy rain didn't dampen their spirits nor hinder their purpose as 30 students from Wilson's special education classes and their "buddies" from the school's environmental protection club planted a magnolia tree — courtesy of the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission — in a place of prominence near the school's flag pole.

"It's here for everyone to see, as a symbol," said Tina Bal, special education teacher. "Just as people with disabilities have made some incredible contributions to our history and our society, we're here today to make a positive contribution to our school and our environment."

Bal said she hopes that symbol will be an inspiration to Wilson students for many years.

"Just as this tree will thrive and grow stronger and bigger as it overcomes the elements, so will our students overcome their challenges and grow stronger for them," she said.

Wilson joined all Fort Benning schools in their annual observance of National Exceptional Children's Week.

Each school scheduled various activities to spotlight their own exceptional students and pay homage to famous artists, athletes, inventors, educators and statesmen, past and present, who overcame disabilities to make a positive, lasting impact on society, including Winston Churchill, Thomas Edison, Leonardo Divinci, Helen Keller, Albert Einstein, Tom Cruise, Marlee Maitlan and Christopher Reeves.

"They never gave up. They just kept trying, just like a tree," said Dequan Summers, fifth grade.

"And just like no two trees are alike, no two people are alike, either" he said. "We all have our differences, but we're all beautiful. That's what today is all about."

Cub Scouts build new homes

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

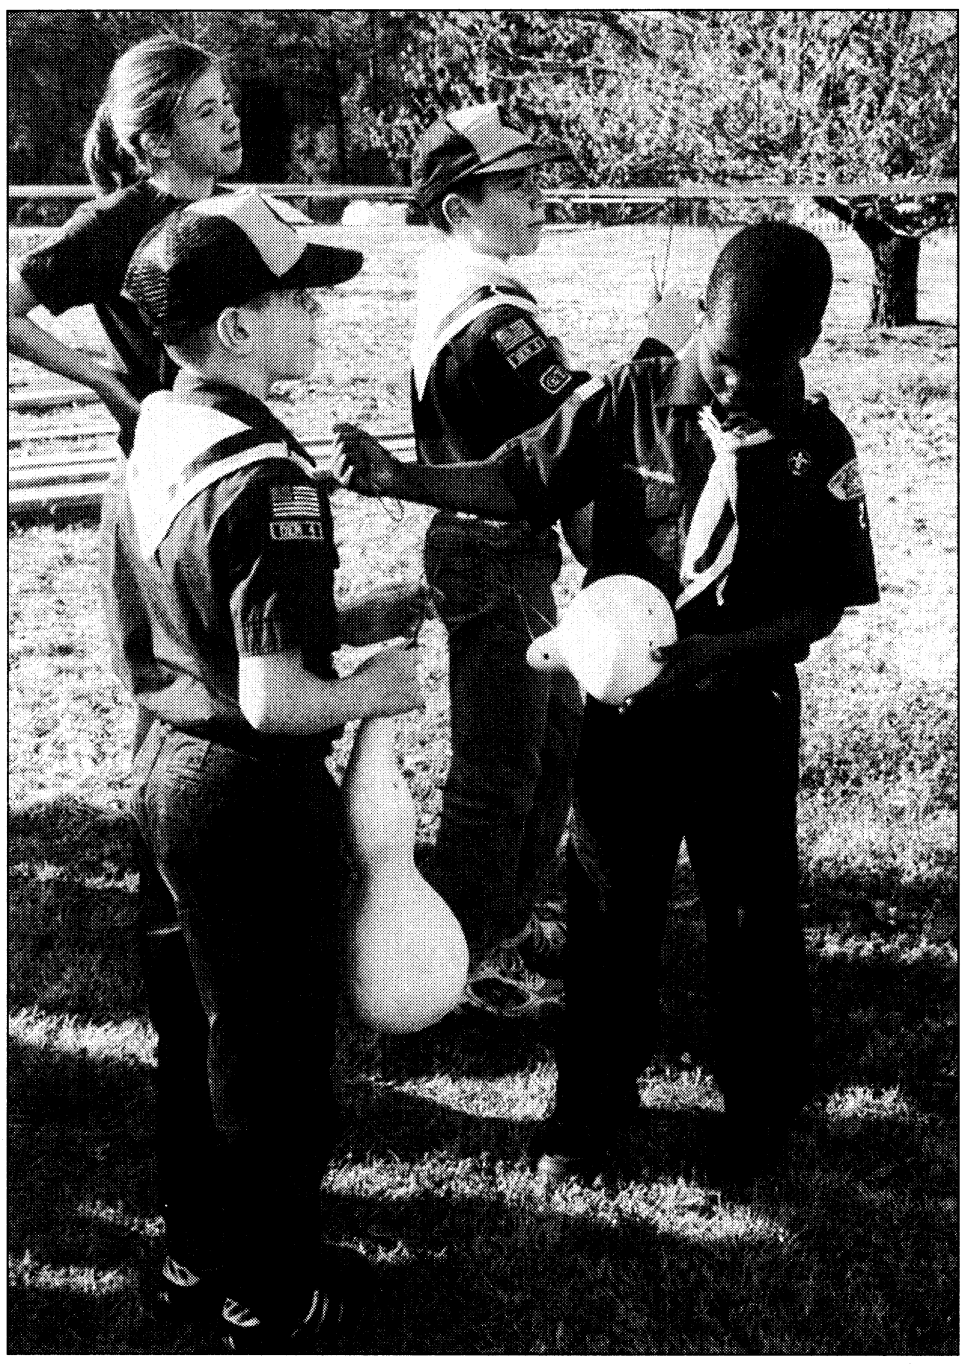
A few dozen purple martins will have new homes this year, thanks to Cub Scout Den. 4, Pack 27.

As part of the boys' requirements to obtain the Cub Scout World Conservation Award, six scouts took on the task of making gourd birdhouses.

The Cub Scouts recently presented the 16 finished houses to Pete Swiderek, chief, Conservation Branch, Directorate of Public Works. The white homes hang on a wire tree near the conservation office.

"The boys have been working on this project for months. It's very detailed. The conservation project tops this all off," said Theresa Lacamera, co-den leader.

The boys were required to complete a series of elective projects, including building waterscopes, creating weather vanes and collecting leaves. The final achievement was to create a project with the theme, "Sharing Your World with Wild-Life."



"They went out and found something they needed for the community. We try to encourage them to work with their hands. The post had a need, so this was a great project for them to choose," said Maj. Paul Humphries, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, the Fort Benning Scout Master.

The gourds, which were hand- cured, are almost as tough as plywood. With help from their parents, the scouts cleaned, painted and hung the gourds from coat hangars. The houses can last up to 30 years.

The project couldn't have come at a better time for the birds, who make the flight from South America to this area each spring. The birds typically migrate north in late winter and stay through the summer.

"Last year the houses started to crack. We've had these gourds for years and every year the purple martins come and stay a spell," Swiderek said. "This one project has appeared to be quite successful."

The World Conservation Award is not an honor earned by all Scouts. Because of the extensive time and parental management involved, not all boys can achieve the decoration.

Rachel R. Garcia

Scouts from Pack 27 prepare to hang up the gourd birdhouses they made to earn the Cub Scout World Conservation Award.

"This is something earned by maybe 20 percent of Cub Scouts. It's a big deal because there's alot to do for this age level and much parental involvement," said Kathy Vona, awards chairman.

The Cub Scouts also received a nature lesson from Swiderek to complete their award. Both the boys and their siblings learned about the various endangered species thriving at Fort Benning.

The Scouts said they would like to follow up with their work and observe the birds in a few weeks.

"I enjoyed this because I made the house," Josh Whalen said. "I want to come back and see who is living in it."

ask the judge

Jane M. Winand
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I bought a car in Florida when I was home on leave last weekend. The dealership asked which state I wanted to title the vehicle in. Since I'll be stationed here in Georgia for the next few years, I'm thinking of getting a Georgia title. Does it matter in which state I title and register a new car?

A: There could be serious tax consequences depending on the state in which you choose to title your new car. The state in which you purchase a new car assesses the sales tax at the time of purchase. If you apply to have that new car titled for the first time in a different state, and the title state has a higher rate of sales tax, the title state can charge you the additional sales tax at the time you apply for the title. As an example, if you purchase the vehicle in a state with a 3 percent sales tax, you will have this 3 percent tax included in the purchase price. If you then apply for a title in a state with 5 percent sales tax, the title state can charge you the additional 2 percent sales tax. You were given a credit by the titling state for the 3 percent sales tax paid at the time of purchase.

This potential "twice taxation" occurs only with new vehicles being purchased in one state and titled for the first time in a second state.

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act, a federal law, does provide soldiers with some protection from state taxes. The Act exempts a soldier from ad valorem taxation of a vehicle owned by the soldier and being registered in the soldier's state of current assignment, provided that the soldier has a permanent residence elsewhere than the state of assignment. The ad valorem tax is assessed each year and is based on the value of the vehicle. Soldiers can avoid this tax for their vehicles by obtaining an affidavit from the Legal Assistance Division of the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate indicating that the soldier is a permanent resident of a state other than the state of military assignment. However, the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act does not exempt soldiers from paying sales taxes.

Consequently, you should consider the sales tax situation before picking a state in which to title and register your vehicle. Although it may be convenient to title your vehicle here for the next few years, unless you elect to maintain permanent ties with Georgia, you will need to obtain a new title when you move from this state. Some states have annual inspection requirements which can be troublesome. You should consider all factors before selecting a state for titling purposes.

For more information concerning sales tax and ad valorem tax, you can make an appointment to speak with an attorney in the Legal Assistance Division. Appointments are made by calling the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281

Some consumers get more than bargains

Better Business Bureau

Consumers should pay close attention when ordering merchandise from television or over the phone.

In some cases you may get something more than the product or service you ordered.

The National Consumers League and the Better Business Bureau report that a growing number of consumers are finding charges on their credit card statements and debits from their bank account for discount buying club memberships that they never agreed to or did not agree to renew after an initial trial offer.

To avoid surprise charges, the Better Business Bureau encourages consumers to:

• Pay attention to the fine print on TV screens when ordering merchandise. Does it indicate that you will be enrolled in a club that offers discounts on other products?

• When you receive club offers through the mail, be sure to read the material thoroughly. Some clubs offer "free trial" memberships. If you do not call to cancel the offer within a certain number of days, you will automatically be charged for the membership.

• Review your credit card and debit card statements carefully. Once someone has your account number, it is possible to charge you or debit your account even if you never agreed to purchase their services.

If you find unauthorized charges on your statements, dispute them immediately, in a letter to the company that made the charge, and in writing to your credit card company or bank.

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

Residents should be gearing up for the growing season, so now is a good time to talk about alternative gardening techniques.

Gardeners everywhere should be and are convinced about the importance gardening has on the environment. Fort Benning residents can be made aware too.

While most people are scared of the word "organic," there really is no need to be. In fact, residents should look at organic gardening as the wave of the future.

With the Environmental Protection Agency passing more and more laws every year against the use of pesticides and herbicides, gardeners today are looking for alternatives to conventional gardening practices.

This year residents should take advantage of the wealth of information available on the Internet, and with the Cooperative Extension Office, and beginning gardening for the environment.

Residents can begin by removing the pesticides and herbicides from their closets. Don't throw them in the trash. These products will only end up in the landfills if they are thrown away. Call the Cooperative Extension Office for information on disposing of those types of chemicals.

Alternatives to using herbicides would be manual labor. Make the decision to forgive the weeds for invading your lawn. By deciding to pull weeds from flower beds residents will not only help the environment but reduce their family's risk of exposure to potentially lethal products.

Healthy plants will generally not contract any disease or pest. Although healthy plants and proper watering will not ensure a gardener immunity from such nuisances these practices will reduce the risk. In the event pests are found on your potential prize winning tomatoes choose a non-chemical approach to the management of pests. Products made with pyrethrin are safer than the conventional pest control chemicals.

Residents who choose to use alternative gardening methods will be breaking the cycle of environmental abuse. So make the switch for peace of mind and give future generations a healthier planet.

said.

"As health-care professionals we know how to help keep patients alive, but we also need to know how to help them die and to die with dignity," Brooks said.

Communicating bad news is never easy, and the class covered a six-step protocol on how to approach it.

"I used to work in the ER here and downtown and that's the hardest thing in the world — to tell someone his or her loved one is dead or dying," Brooks said. "It's given me some insight on how to better address the issue."

The class also discusses self-care for medical professionals.

"We are all caretakers, yet we never take care of ourselves," Brooks said.

Murphy agreed.

"If a patient doesn't make it, we may feel as though we are failures. We often hold those feelings inside and move on to the next case, often without taking time to talk about what just happened," Murphy said.

The Citizenship Education Teacher Award is presented annually to teachers who continually exemplify the qualities of patriotism and good citizenship and instruct their students in the same, said Kay Kelly, contest chairman.

"This award is given to teachers that go the extra mile for their students," Kelly said. "It's her interest in her students and the extracurricular hours she devotes to teaching them about patriotism and true citizenship that earned Mrs. Blanchard this title."

Kelly said Blanchard's award makes her eligible to compete at the national level. The winners of the VFW National Citizenship Education Teacher Award will be announced in the spring.

"Mrs. Blanchard deserves to win the national award because she spends so much time with us after school, teaching us songs for all our programs," said 9-year-old Marin Kniskern.

Elementary students learn with technology

White Elementary School

Two second-grade classrooms at Edward A. White School are well on their way to greatly increasing their technology abilities.

Selected as the school's "InTech Model Pilot Classrooms," the students in Rooms 8 and 9 are quite excited about all that is going on in their classrooms.

The two classrooms work closely together, using the many pieces of equipment that have been installed in one of the classrooms.

Both classroom teachers were trained in a program called "Integrating Technology into the Classroom," which is a 50-hour class given by Fort Benning Schools, through Columbus State University.

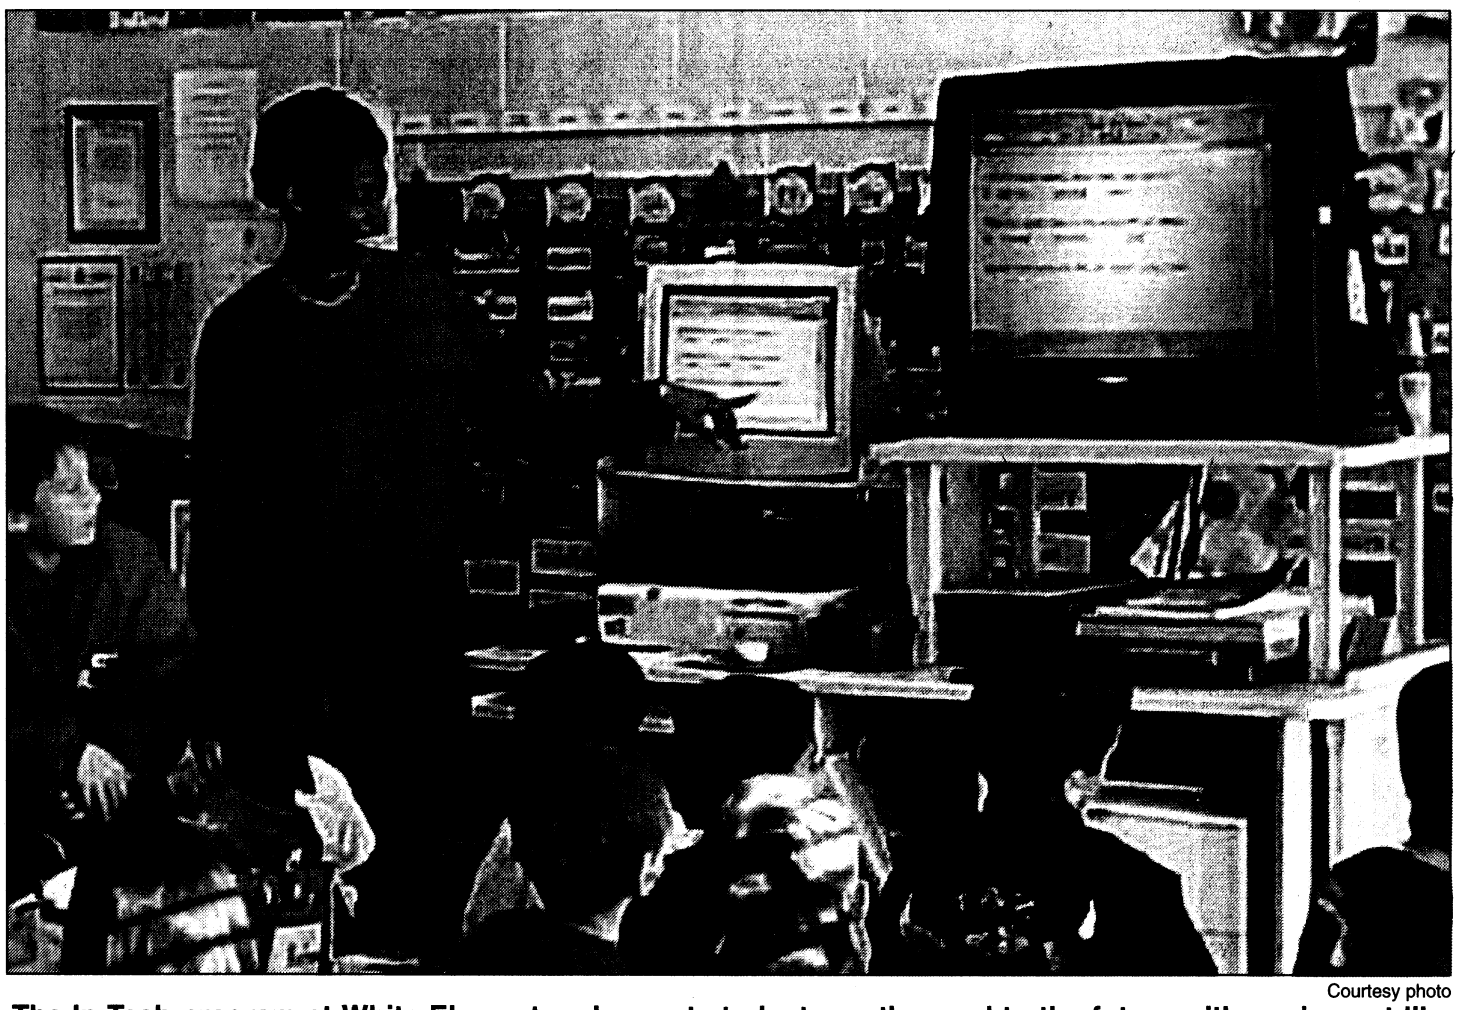
The equipment and furnishings to be used were distributed in three phases.

Phase One was delivered and set up at the beginning of December. This delivery included the following: one Teacher Multimedia Station, containing one computer, one InFocus Projector, and one digital camera.

Phase Two arrived approximately two weeks later, and included a Student Multimedia Station and equipment: one scanner, one VCR, one DVD, one TV, one computer and printer, and two student chairs.

As part of the model, all of the equipment needed to be stationed in one room. Room 8 was the designated room, due to its layout and its network connections.

Once everything was moved and put in its place, the two teachers sat down and went over their original plans as to how all of this technology was going to be incorporated into both of their classrooms.



They started off with assigning one computer as "the Journal of the Day" computer. At this station, all students from both classes, individually, read the statement that is typed on the screen.

They type in their answer (or opinion), save their work, and then pull a name out of a cup for the next student that needs to come and write.

Both classes usually complete the journal by lunch time. The students are now used to doing this fairly quickly, and this activity moves very smoothly three times a week.

Each morning, both classes get together in Room 8 for Daily Language Review. This is a daily lesson on editing skills, and is set up on the "Smart TV", which is the large-screened TV on the Student Multimedia Station. Students take turns editing the Daily Language Review.

Throughout the morning, during their Language Arts block, students go in and out of Room 8, taking tests for their reading incentive program, Reading Counts; working on WiggleWorks, which is a component of Fort Benning's Literacy Place series; writing about stories that they have read, or working on PowerPoint presentations.

Courtesy photo

The In Tech program at White Elementary has put students on the road to the future with equipment like "Smart TV."

Often, in the afternoons, during their Science or Social Studies times, students can be found doing researching on the Internet, editing what they have written, and then proceeding to make PowerPoint slides on whatever they have researched. Using the scanner and inserting pictures into their documents is another area that they are beginning to learn now, to add to their repertoire of technology.

As you may guess, the entire second grade at E.A. White School is very excited about all that is happening in their classrooms. Both teachers strongly agree that all classrooms could benefit with this type of setup.

The students in Rooms 8 and 9 will gladly tell you that this has definitely been, and continues to be, a great experience for them. They will also tell you that they would not want to give back all of this great technology that they have learned to use and appreciate.

Kathy Kirkland and Mel Vaillant, second-grade teachers, invite parents to visit them and see this wonderful technology. Just let them know in advance so they can schedule a visit.

Students share ideas, wishes through poetry

Students at White Elementary were recently assigned the task of writing poetry on ways they think the world could be made a better place.

Here are some of their works, and ideas, as a result of their efforts on the assignment:

I Wish...
By Kristina Daniels

I wish there was world peace.

I wish everyone was nice to each other, and kept bad opinions to themselves.

I wish everyone would be happy, and no one would have to suffer hunger.

I wish everyone had a roof over their heads and good clothes to keep them warm.

I wish we could all live in a safe and peaceful world.

I Wish...
By Casey Shutt

I wish there would be more homeless shelters.

I wish people would respect others even if they don't know them.

I wish there would be less violence and no murders.

I wish everyone would have food.

I wish all of these prayers would be answered.

I Wish...
By Alexandra White

I wish that there was peace.

I wish that people were treated equally.

I wish that parents would listen to their children and not threaten them.

I wish people wouldn't kill animals for fun.

I wish that animals and people were treated equally.

I wish people wouldn't pollute the air, I wish people wouldn't throw trash into the ocean.

I wish children weren't being bullied.

I wish everyone could understand my feelings.

I Wish...
By Kayla Maine

I wish the people of this world were nice to wild animals and house pets.

I wish people wouldn't make fun of people that wear glasses or braces, because they need them.

I wish the world wasn't loud and harmful, but quiet and peaceful.

I wish the people of the world would respect animals and people.

I Wish...
By Tara Fair

I wish the world was peaceful.

I wish the world had no suffering.

I wish the world's confusion would end.

I wish each person would give the gift of respect to others.

I wish each person could understand the stupidity of crime.

I wish the world was like a perfect family.

Lent historically marked with ashes

Chaplain (Capt.) Joseph Agnotti
3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Many Christians in the western world entered their churches and had ashes placed on their foreheads Feb. 28.

Some, who are not familiar with this tradition, wonder about its meaning and purpose. For those of you who are wondering why this is done, I will do my best to offer a brief explanation.

Ash Wednesday marks the beginning of a church season called Lent. Many Catholics and Protestants, as well as Eastern Orthodox Christians, observe 40 days of preparation before celebrating the great feast of Easter.

They receive ashes as a sign that they are sorry for their sins and wish to repent. The wearing of ashes and sackcloth were biblical traditions that signified someone wished to be forgiven of their transgressions.

In the early days of the church, Christians had only one opportunity in their lifetime to receive what is called the Sacrament of Penance, often referred to as "going to confession."

Any serious sins committed after baptism had to be publicly acknowledged before the local bishop. Those wishing to make their public confession (the penitents), would wear the biblical sackcloth and ashes and report to the cathedral.

The bishop would give them a penance to perform (a penance is a spiritual work that is performed not to get a sin forgiven, but to purify the one who has sinned, of any attachment to their sinful acts). Because this was all done publicly, everyone knew who committed what sin, and what their penances were.

After doing penance for 40 days, the penitents would return to the cathedral on Holy Thursday. After inquiring whether the penance had been properly observed, the bishop would give the penitents absolution. (See John 20:21-23) The repentant Christians were now prepared to receive Holy Communion at the Easter Mass. The Catholic church is mindful these days as she calls her children into the season of Lent. May all Christians use these 40 days to give themselves more fully and completely to the Lord Jesus, the same Lord who spent his own 40 days in the desert, preparing for the cross.

Touch relays communication

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Scientific studies have found that touch can reduce tension, elevate mood, enhance self-esteem and maybe even strengthen the immune system. Human touch has a calming effect.

In a recent study by Dr. Maria Hernandez-Reif, Ph.D., co-director of the Touch Research Institute at the University of Miami, Fla., School of Medicine, touch lowered stress levels of the hormone cortisol and increased the body's primary mood regulator of serotonin.

Babies need human touch, so much that without it mothers do not bond with their infants and babies fail to thrive.

In an experiment during the late 1800s in Germany, babies that were only fed and diapered, all died.

Holding hands, hugging, feet rubbing, massages and reflexology all produce positive effects for both participants. Not only does it feel great, touch conveys trust and love.

Kissing is an important method of touch (Luke 7:45). Infants readily put everything they grab up to their mouths. It's their primary way of exploring their world.

Human lips are more sensitive to touch than other areas. Letting your lips gently pass over the lips, cheeks, face, neck and skin of your partner is both sensual and soothing. Touching between couples can actually be more emotionally powerful than the sex act itself.

Not all people welcome touch by others or by their marriage partner. Touch, at times, may be irritating, annoying and demanding.

Some people reject the contact of others because it is seen as perfunctory, mechanical or artificial. Some people have an inordinate fear of touching.

Jesus used touch to effectively communicate friendship (John 13:23-25), sincere concern (John 13:5), openness and vulnerability (John 20:27), wholesome love and acceptance (Mark 10:13) and healing (Mark 1:30-31).

Are you desiring to improve your communication with your partner? The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, can help.

Local youths get taste of big league

Area hockey team plays Macon team in 'Snake Pit'

It didn't matter that the other team was bigger, or they had more time on the ice than the home team.

What mattered for the local youth hockey hopefuls was they were taking to the ice in the Columbus Civic Center and skating within the shadows of semi-pro players, the Columbus Cottonmouths.

A team of 7- to 12-year-olds from Columbus and Fort Benning faced off against opponents from Macon in a friendship match Saturday. Although there was no title at stake, and the one-hour scrimmage ended tied at six goals apiece, the free ice time was valuable to the young players.

"They have 8-year-olds who can skate better than some of our 12-year-olds," Cale Dodds, a member of the local team, joked.

"Sure it is competitive," Dodds said. "But it really doesn't matter. I think it's just cool to play another town."

The game marked the first time the Macon team, which included members from Warner Robins Air Force Base, traveled to play another team.

For many on the Columbus team, it was their first ice hockey game. Most had only played roller hockey.

"We've been planning this for the last five weeks," said Elizabeth Story, a coach for the Macon team. "We were really looking forward to the game. I think it is a great opportunity for them."

The Macon players never played a team from another town, she said.

The best show of sportsmanship may have come when a member of the Macon team, who was only 5, took to the ice for the first time.

His teammates encouraged him while the members of the Columbus team congratulated him on a job well done.

"I had a lot of fun," said Drew Middlebrooks, a 9-year-old Columbus player. "It was a good time and a chance to ice skate."

Other local players said the game went very well, especially since the Macon players were more experienced.

"They had like four more years experience than we did," Craig DuBois, 10, said. "I was really happy when I scored. It made me skate and play hard."

DuBois added that playing in the Snake Pit made him feel like he was a professional hockey player.

After the game, Story said all of her players were ecstatic about the game.

"It was awesome and exciting," she said. "Even though they didn't win, they had a great time.

"Being able to play another team made them all feel like they were in the pros."

In fact, the teams got a taste for the roar of the crowd later on Saturday when they played a brief exhibition between periods of the Cottonmouth's game.

"They got a lot out of it," Danny Lopez, a local coach said. "The crowd really loved them.

"Normally you will see people get up and go get food and stuff between periods, but they stayed and yelled and cheered for the kids.

"It was a great time," he said. "We got them all out there playing and they had a good time."

Dust Off blows past Engineers, 54-49

Doctor-like precision leads to win

Spc. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The 498th Medical Company Dust Off had the cure for 63rd Engineer Company Engineers Monday at Audie Murphy Gym, 54-49.

Dust Off Clarence Thomas, shot with doctor-like precision and pounded in 23 points to overcome the Engineers' gargantuan duo of Lincoln Smith and Michael Keys, who had 18 and 17, respectively.

The game was one of rapid spurts. The Dust Off juggernaut built a 16-point lead early in the first half behind Thomas' 14 and Jason Taylor's seven. However, behind seven points from Keys and Smith, the Engineers rallied to trail 25-20 with 10 seconds left. Thomas stepped up and entertained the crowd with the game's climax — a long three pointer, one step beyond half court, as the buzzer sounded.

"I couldn't believe it went in," said Eduardo Libed, Dust Off coach.

After nine unanswered Dust Off points, player-coach Smith called a time out trailing 44-31 with 8:44 remaining.

Hoping the game was well in hand, 46-33, the Dust Off started playing keep away with 5:08 remaining. It backfired. The Engineers ferocious defense lead to quick turnovers and eight unanswered points.

Libed quickly called time out with 3:14 left, and, perhaps saved the game for his team.

"He (Libed) picked the right times to use our time outs," Thomas said. "We were able to slow the tempo down and play our game."

Dust Off Jeff Talley's rebound and put-back with 25 seconds left in the game closed the door on the Engineers.

Talley and Thomas finished the half with 11 and 10, respectively, for the 4-3 Dust Off.

"It's a thrill having a winning record," Libed said. "We are ready to make history and become the first aviation unit to become Fort Benning champion."

Teamwork led to the victory, he said.

"We moved the ball around well on defense and offense," he said. "We were able to spot Thomas and get him open shots."

"Without my team, I couldn't have accomplished one thing," Thomas said. "It was my time to score. Next game someone else may score 23."

The Dust Off's biggest obstacle was controlling the Engineers in the low post, Libed said.

"Compared to them, my players were small in size but big in heart," Libed said.

Thomas said the Engineers big duo became tired, but they still bullied his team. Smith and Keys denied many Dust Off attempts with heady blocks.

"You can't do the same thing twice, and you definitely can't go through them," he said. "We used screens and went back door on them effectively though."

Dust Off Teshon Howard played point guard much of the game and boldly broke the Engineers' pressure.

"She does a pretty good job," Thomas said.

Howard and the rest of the Dust Off enjoyed themselves, and their spirited play proved it, Thomas said.

"We had the mind set of, 'If we win, it's a plus. If we don't, we're still going to have fun."

"These games are important in my unit," he added. "They talk about them in the barracks and at work. "It's good to have a team sport like this to provide relief from our busy schedule," Thomas said.

As for scoring the game high, "Tonight was an opportunity to show them I appreciate the hard work they do."

Local hunter talks turkey, equipment, opening day

Hunter offers tips for successful gobbler season

Staff Sgt. Cliff Hughes
Outdoor recreation

One thing that's great about Georgia and Fort Benning, there are always outdoor sports to enjoy. Hopefully, you had another successful deer season and ended the season with a few plump piggies (feral swine that is). We can soon look forward to turkey season and spring fishing. Turkey season, which starts March 24 in Georgia and Tuesday in Alabama, can really be a lot of fun, especially if you have never seen a turkey in full strut. There are few places that have more turkeys than Georgia and it seems, at times, like there could be more turkeys than deer on post. I personally haven't been hunting turkeys that long, new to the sport four years ago, a subject matter expert I am not. But what I can tell you is how I got started and how to be successful as a beginner.

Let's talk about gear for starters: It seems most any camouflage will work as long as it blends relatively well and your body is completely hidden except for your eyes of course. Some hunters go to great lengths wearing ghillie suits and the like but this is not necessary, many hunters wear BDUs and have success. Many hunters prefer using blinds, I have experimented with these and they do let you get away with a little more movement. However they are quite cumbersome in the woods and if you can sit still for about 30 minutes behind some vegetation blinds are not necessary.

Why all this talk of camouflage? It is said that a turkey can see 40 times better than humans and I believe it. Sometimes even your uncovered eyes will send them scurrying for cover. If you have ever been deer hunting and had turkey walk by your stand gobbling up acorns, usually you will get spotted if you not camouflaged and sitting absolutely still. I call this the turkey test. If your camo can pass the test deer should be an easy prey and work in the spring on turkeys as well.

I usually end up wearing the same thing I bow hunt with. Oh, and by the way, unlike deer, turkeys can see in color.

OK enough talk about camo, how do we get started? I recommend getting a turkey calling video, pop that baby in and start making noise.

You will probably find you drive everybody in the house nuts except for yourself. My wife generally has earplugs handy this time of year unless she is practicing too. The video will give you a good idea on how to sound like the sexy hen, you're not.

It's funny how some people have a knack for doing this. My ranger buddy's entire personality changes this time of year, almost as if he is getting in touch with his feminine side. It's really funny to watch a 200-pound ranger act like a 20-pound female bird. The video will really help; the other way is to con an experienced caller into taking you under their wing and going with them "a lot."

A combination of the two is how I learned. Maybe if you practice a lot, they will let you make some noise at the end of a hunt. Not only have I gotten good at the hen but have figured out a way to gobble as well. If you can imagine a 190-pound guy gobbling like a 25-pound bird, that's even funnier to watch. But at eleven o'clock and all else fails, turkey hunters will try anything, and believe it or not it has worked.

There are hundreds of calls available to simulate the female turkey: slates, box, wing bone, tapes, diaphragms, etc. At any rate they all try and simulate the hen.

Family member enjoys rodeo thrill

Barrel racer plans PRCA return

Pfc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

To some, military life means a pause in all their hobbies.

That's not true for at least one Fort Benning family member, as she doesn't let anything get in the way of her barrel racing.

"It's a great way of life and I'm glad I'm in it," barrel racer Louise Poodry, said.

Growing up in Washington, Poodry began barrel racing as a teenager after begging her parents, who didn't like horses, for a horse of her own.

Her love of horses prompted her to ride anyone's horse before she owned her own. After much begging and pleading, her parents bought Poodry her own animal.

She said after trial and error, along with clinics and 4-H, she began to get better and improve her time. Although she began to compete, she didn't compete seriously for quite some time as her first love was race horses.

It wasn't until she met her husband, Col. Mitch Poodry, deputy director, U.S. Army Dismounted Battle Space Battle Lab, that she began to compete seriously.

"When I met my husband I was training race horses," she said. "After we got married, it was obvious that I couldn't move and continue to train race horses."

So, instead of training race horses, she began to compete in rodeos as a barrel racer. Since she began, she has progressed from student to teacher and trainer with a six-year stint on the Professional Rodeo Cowboys' Association circuit.

Although married to the Army, Poodry said she always finds a place to rodeo.

Saturday, she competed at a barrel race in Montgomery, Ala., where she said she did well, but is still waiting on results.

She said, like the military, barrel racers are one big family and they help each other out.

"I try to find out as much as possible before we move to a different post," she said. "If I need help when we get there, I will call people up and say, 'Hi. You don't know me, but I just moved to the area. Where is this or where is that.' They will tell me, 'This is a good farrier or this is a good vet. This place has good ground, that place doesn't.' They help out a lot."

Most places they have been stationed, she has been able to take her horses.

She said the rodeos keep her busy throughout the year.

"Last year I traveled to Memphis, (Tenn.,) three times, Oklahoma City, (Okla.,) Kansas City, (Kan.,) and those are just the big ones," she said. "It isn't uncommon for me to compete against 800 people at those.

"When I was running pro, it was nothing for me to leave on a Wednesday and not pull back in until Monday."

She added, if she was traveling by herself, she would drive all night to get to the next rodeo, only getting three of four hours of sleep a night.

Now, she doesn't go to as many rodeos, but she continues to help new riders get started as well as breaking in young horses.

"She really enjoys barrel racing," Mitch said. "But it's more than a hobby. For her, it's a business of competing and training.

"Back then (when she was running pro) it was all fun," he said. "Now it is more of a business. We have to think on how much the entry fees are and how much money is added, but we still have fun."

Mitch said Louise is looking forward to the day when she starts running the pro circuit.

Louise added as soon as she has a horse that is pro quality, she will get back to racing on the pro circuit.

Pfc. Mark Watson

Louise Poodry shows off her trophies earned from barrel racing.

"She is looking forward to getting back to that level of competition," Mitch said. "But it's not so much on winning as it is taking young horses with potential and watching them improve."

And with her two young horses showing strong potential, she said it may not be too long until she is back in the saddle again.

Simple guidelines lead to safe summer

Players should follow easy steps to avoid injuries

1st Lt. Andrew Contreras
Soldiers' Baseball Association

It's almost that time of the year again. Time to oil up the glove, knock last season's mud out of your cleats and grab the ol' Louisville Slugger and head to the batting cage. If you are one of the many athletes on post preparing for the upcoming Fort Benning Baseball Team tryouts or if you are getting a head start for the unit picnic, here are some key activities to include in your pre-season preparation.

Baseball can be broken down into three major components.

• There's a lot of short distance running with quick stopping and starting, which can be hard on the hips, thighs, knees and ankles.

• The throwing demands vary from pitchers to outfielders, but all positions require plenty of arm strength.

• Swinging a bat puts a large demand of control and power from your trunk and core body muscles, which require stamina and flexibility.

Proper pre-season preparation is essential to preventing costly injuries during the season. The following exercises are recommended in order to prepare you for each of the three major components. It is recommended you complete each of the categories three times a week, with a day of rest in between. Remember, over-training can be even more harmful than not preparing at all.

1 In addition to having good cardiovascular fitness, try these drills to increase your quickness and coordination.

• Start jumping rope using both feet for 30 seconds, then without stopping change to right foot only for 30 seconds then switch to left foot only for 30 seconds. Once you have that mastered, increase the time in 15-second intervals until you're up to 3 minutes each.

• Do interval running to build up leg strength and to condition your hips, knees and ankles. Complete this circuit without taking a break in-between laps. Jog around the bases (or an equal distance) at an easy pace for five laps, then sprint a home run. Next jog another lap then sprint a triple and jog the rest of the way to home. Jog another lap then sprint a double and jog the rest of the way. Jog one last lap then sprint to first and jog the rest of the way to home. Walk around the bases two times to cool down. Keep working at it until you can complete the circuit 3 times.

2 The simplest way to improve your throwing is to start playing catch. However, do not attempt to throw 100 feet the first time you pick up a ball. Start slow, play catch three times a week for 15 minutes, throwing no greater than 50 feet. Start with slow speed and long arcs, working up to faster velocity throwing in a straighter line. Gradually increase up to 30 minutes.

• Make sure you have properly strengthened your rotator cuff for the season by working on this exercise. For this exercise try using a can of soup or a hand weight. Stand with the weight in your hand and arms at your side. Keeping your elbow straight, rotate your arms until your thumb is pointing behind you. Lift your arms up at an angle that is at the mid-point between straight in front of you and straight out to the sides, about 45 degrees. Lift the weight to eye level using a three count and slowly lower the weight using the same count. Repeat for three sets of eight-12 repetitions using a maximum of five pounds.

• Work on your grip strength for ball and bat control. Using a tennis or racquetball, squeeze the ball 50 times in each hand. Then work the wrist muscles by rotating the wrist while holding the ball 25 times clockwise, and 25 times counter clockwise on both hands. Complete three to four times a day.

3 To work on your trunk or core muscles try these exercises. Do abdominal crunches laying on your back, feet flat on the ground and knees bent. Do 25 crunches bringing you elbows to your knees. Then do 25 bringing your right elbow to your left knee.

Then finish with another set of 25 bringing your left elbow to your right knee. As this gets easier, increase the difficulty by holding your feet off the ground and increasing the repetitions by five until you reach 50 of each.

• Sidebends with dumbbells will strengthen your obliques which are key to trunk rotation during swinging and throwing. Stand upright with a dumbbell in each hand, feet shoulder width apart and palms facing each other. Bend to the left side, allowing the dumbbell to slide down your left leg until you feel the right side muscles working. Always face forward, never twist at your waist. Once you've gone as low as you can, slowly bring yourself upright to the start position and repeat to the right side. Do three sets of eight-12 reps.

• The hamstrings are the most commonly pulled muscle in baseball due to the demand placed on them when running, throwing and swinging a bat. Make sure you properly stretch them prior to the season, and before each game. Hold this stretch for 30 seconds, and repeat it three to five times for each leg. Lay flat on your back and bring one knee up towards your chest. Reach and hold that leg behind the knee with your fingers interlocked.

Your hip should be at 90 degrees, with your thigh pointing straight up into the air. Bend your ankle up bringing your toes toward you, and slowly extend your knee. The stretch should be felt throughout your calf and behind your knee. Hold and repeat on the other side.

These are general guidelines for healthy individuals. If you have a health condition, please consult your physician prior to participating in any athletics.

In addition, if you have sustained a previous injury that may prevent or hinder your participation, it is important to be evaluated by a health care professional prior to participating.

If you have other questions regarding exercise or injuries, referrals to Physical Therapy can be obtained by asking your primary care physician.

Turkey Season: Opens Tuesday; hunter offers tips

Turkeys make a variety of strange noises, which we attempt to name; the putt, pur, yelp, cluck, and some other noises I'm sure I missed. But if you can perform the yelp four or five times in succession you stand a chance.

The easiest calls to operate are the box call and the slate. Outdoor recreation on post has a wide variety of calls for the potential buyer. You will probably find that like myself you will have to have at least five different name brands and 10 different strikers. The slates are made of slate, glass, aluminum to name a few and the strikers come in wood, plastic, glass, carbon and just about anything else you can scratch with.

My favorite is the traditional slate call and mahogany sticker of a name brand I can't mention in this article. Follow the instructions on your call for best results and sand frequently.

Try a combination of all your different gadgets and whichever one most closely simulates the video is a good place to start.

Turkeys can be called at all times of the day with morning being the most popular. During turkey season there will usually be a decline in the headcount at morning PT; and if the first sergeant is gone, you will probably be able to guess where he is. Oh, that's right a dental appointment!

The largest turkey I have taken was 2 years ago at 4 p.m. on a Saturday. I have seen several turkeys taken during lunch just make sure the areas open like all good Fort Benning hunters do.

A normal turkey-hunting scenario sounds like this.

Arrive in the woods one hour before sun up, sit in woods (in the dark) for one hour near where turkeys are supposed to be.

At first light move 1000 meters to get close to turkey, set up, call the turkey, he gobbles two or three times but gets hung up, wander around for two more hours doing the same thing, depart the woods at 10 a.m. empty handed.

Turkeys you will find are really smart despite their little wrinkly nugget.

In the first part of this two part article, I touched on camouflage, which calls are easiest to operate, a couple of ways to learn the ropes and when gobblers are most active. At this point we are sitting in the woods 30-minutes before sunrise near turkeys on the roost.

Oh and by the way, a good way to find turkeys on the roost is to be in the woods listening for them to fly up, they make more noise than a squad of ranger students on patrol.

Next week I will cover some basics on calling, decoys, weather, times to hunt, how close to set up, and gear such as shotguns, ammo, vests, and locator calls.
