A bond's risk factor can be obtained through independent agencies, such as Moody's and Duff and Phelps, that rate bonds and evaluate a borrower's ability to repay the loan on time. A low rating means there is a higher risk of not being repaid.

Investors consider U.S. treasury bills (T-bills) and U.S. treasury bonds issued by the federal government the safest of all investments because the U.S. has never defaulted on a loan.

"Bonds help round out your portfolio," he said. "Usually, when the stock market is doing poorly, bonds are doing well.

"If you get lucky and purchase a bond for around 7 percent then go for it," he added. "Where else are you 'guaranteed' (a fixed rate of return) 7 percent on anything for a certain time."

Bonds help those soldiers who look to the long term and provide a mental safety net because diversification can help minimize their losses during market downturns.

Still, soldiers should remember corporations and municipalities have the right to call back their bonds before the maturity date, Dickinson said. They will repay your original investment, but they will stop paying you interest.

Another important consideration is a bond's resale value, he said. If a soldier buys a bond for $250 with a 6 percent interest payment and tries to sell it when interest rates are higher than 6 percent, they will fetch less than $250.

Remember, when interest rates go up, bond prices go down because a 6 percent bond is not worth as much as a 7 percent bond.

While soldiers diversify their portfolios, they should avoid a number of pitfalls.

Broughton said soldiers should avoid aggressive investing, such as putting all their money into one or two stocks.

"If soldiers start early enough, money will have a lot of time to compound," Broughton said. "They may not have to be real aggressive."

Investing in stock options or commodity futures is another definite no go, he said.

"Again, if you start saving early enough in the right way and stick with it consistently, then you can avoid taking unnecessary risks with things like that," Broughton said. "Those can really bite you."

He encourages soldiers to live by the old rule of thumb of saving 10 percent of their income, and, as income rises, adjust accordingly.

The kind of plan soldiers should start depends on the individual soldier and his or her objectives, but for new investors, he suggested a growth mutual fund.

Soldiers should strongly avoid selling stocks short, he said.

Selling a stock short means you buy the stock when it is high with the intention of selling it when it's lower.

"When you buy a stock, the most you can lose is what you put in, and that's it," Broughton said.

"But, when you sell short, the higher it goes, the more money you lose because you're betting on it going down. There's no limit on the loss."

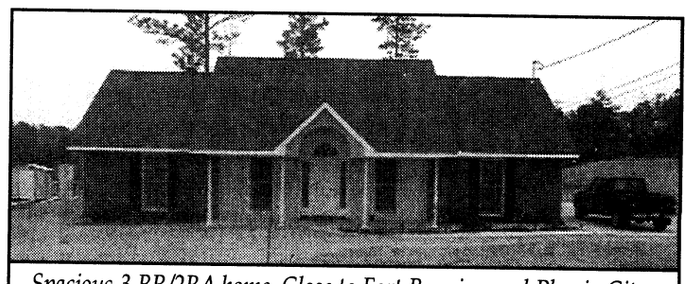
A margin account is another investment vehicle soldiers should avoid, he said.

Buying a stock on margin is a transaction in which a purchaser buys stocks by paying a percentage of the price and pledging the stock to guarantee payment of the balance of the price.

"If (a stock price) declines, they may have to sell to pay off the loan," Broughton said.

Dickinson also said selling stocks short or buying them on margin are not for soldiers because they probably can not afford doing either of them.

"These are risky takes on an ever changing market," he said. "A soldier's main concern and job is still being a soldier, not taking unnecessary risks."



Investors should obtain lists of referrals from brokers to see what type of work they do, he said.

Furthermore, soldiers should educate themselves before purchasing stocks or mutual funds that invest solely in sectors, such as those that invest solely in gold or technology companies.

"This can drastically change the value of your portfolio in one small bounce in the market," Dickinson said. "Just like last year with the dot coms, if you would have thrown your savings into just half of these then you would be broke by now."

Soldiers can direct questions about the above information, or any other topic covered in this series, to Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program, at 545-5485 or visit Building 2633 at Soldiers' Plaza.

Meeting: Draws many questions

resident of the Bouton Heights community, came to the meeting to speak out on several issues. One of his biggest worries, Davis said, is his concern for dangerous dogs in neighborhoods.

"If I can't go out in my own backyard, then it becomes my issue. My suggestion is to have some sort of hotline," he said.

Davis also recommended that town hall meetings be televised, as they were during his stint at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo. One reason for their success, he said, was how the post disseminated the information.

"The entire post community had an opportunity to view the meeting, because the event was televised on the post channel," he said.

While several residents had questions about Army Community of Excellence money, the garrison manager cited the distribution of the funds to improve areas on post.

Several areas where funds were disseminated included: the purchase of Internet computers at Sayers library, large screen TVs and pool tables at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center and the upgrading of playground equipment in housing areas.

Chuck Walls, garrison manager, also mentioned a switch back to community level town hall meetings in the future.

"We initialized postwide town hall meetings to limit the number of meetings on post and to centralize concerns. But we're not focusing on individual communities when we do that," Walls said. "Each housing area has its own personality."

The announcement was well received from residents, Davis said.

"If all these agencies still have a presence at the community town hall, I think it's a good idea. But, I think it's those people who get things done. We need representation to make it work," said Davis.

Other topics mentioned during the meeting were:

- A child safety seat demonstration in July,
- Martin Army Community Hospital regaining custody and control of medical records. Patients will be required to return their records in order to schedule appointments,
- Carbon monoxide sensors available at the Self Help Center,
- A safety standown later this month, where families are encouraged to learn safety routes.

Post residents are encouraged to speak with their community mayors. For more information, call 545-3069.

Wives: Receive pampering

me," said Boyett, whose in-laws live on post. "I had to readjust to my family." She and her husband relocated from Fort Carson, Colo., only a few weeks after her baby was born.

"But, you make home where you want to. You make it comfortable," Boyett said, smiling with her new friend.

For all their differences, the local residents share a common thread. The two women attended their first Enlisted Wives Club meeting May 9 in Building 80. They were among 35 others who attended the annual Mother's Day festivities.

The group meets the second Wednesday of each month in the white building off Yeager Street.

The women had the chance to be pampered, in honor of the annual celebration.

Member Monica Veilleux said she nearly melted off her chair, after being given a complimentary massage by professional masseuse Carol Weekley.

"I just started working my upper body at the gym and I've been tense all week," said the mother of two children. "She just rubbed that all away. This was a excellent gift."

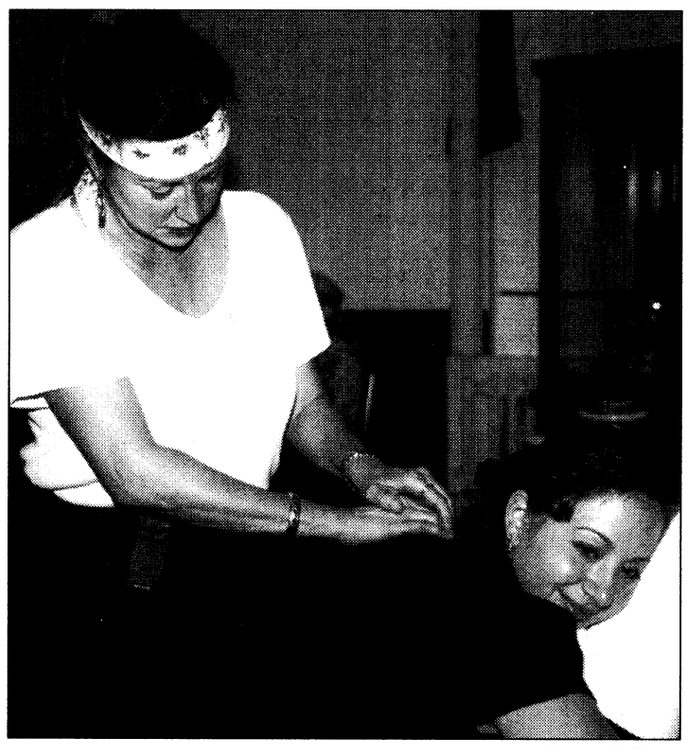
Aromatherapy lotions, scented candles and desserts capped-off the evening for the EWC members.

The group first held a short meeting, covering such topics as membership, budgets and volunteerism.

EWC is a nonprofit, all-volunteer organization dedicated to providing information, services and support to enlisted families of Fort Benning. The club admits all spouses of enlisted ranks and free child care is provided.

The group also hosts events for a wider audience through bingo games played at the Sand Hill NCO Club three times a week.

Proceeds from weekly events help fund a local scholarship, allowing a handful of active spouses to continue their education.



The scholarship has allowed recipients to attend classes toward advanced college degrees or continuing education classes. This year's award presentation takes place Wednesday.

Other special events are held throughout the year, such as the annual Christmas social, special road trips and craft bazaars.

It's these events that have retained members like Barbara Singleton for almost 30 years.

It's another home, she said, because she always feels at ease.

"Once you're a part of it, it's a part of you," Singleton said.

Monica Veilleux, an Enlisted Wives Club member, receives a massage from masseuse Carol Weekley. Member of the EWC were pampered last week in honor of Mother's Day.

Singleton has seen membership on the rise, from just nine people in September 1998 to the three dozen spouses that attended this month. President Michelle Ossa said she hopes to increase awareness and continue to boost membership for the club during her term.

"I'm extending an invitation to the senior enlisted wives, so that they may share their experiences. We want to build a team of spouses, not just a club," Ossa said.

Volunteer: Selected for program

Society and the School's Outstanding Student for 2000-2001, Kirkwood was also selected to attend the Governor's Honors Program this summer.

He'll join nearly 300 students from around the state for six-week college-level science courses at Valdosta State University.

In August he'll spend one week at the Trust to Reach Education Excellence Youth Leadership conference in Estes Park, Colo.

"We're blown away by it all. Every day it's something new," said Nancy Kirkwood, of her son's awards and achievements. "It must be a recessive gene, this over-achievement. We're just so proud of him. He's found his niche."

Kirkwood recently helped his school raise funds for a Habitat For Humanity project in Tanzania, and he joined several of his classmates working on a Habitat home in Columbus.

He graduated from the Leadership Columbus Course May 1 and was awarded a Georgia Certificate of Merit and the President's Student Service Award for contributing more than 100 hours of volunteer community service.

In June he'll complete his second year as intern at the Coca-Cola Space Center, where he conducts observations for school-age children every week.

He also participates in the Golden Apple Valley Radio Telescope project through his school and the space center. He monitors two deep-space dish network telescopes, creating radio images of the sun, studying radio flares and relaying his observations, via video teleconferencing, to graduate students in California.

But "by far the coolest" experience, Kirkwood said, was his participation in the NASA Youth Involvement Program, May 4-9, at the Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

Kirkwood and classmate, Andre Wolf, applied for a space flight opportunity and were one of only 10 teams selected nationwide to participate in the national symposium.

They visited Cape Kennedy, observed activity within an experimental module assembly building and watched the Space Shuttle Columbia being prepped for launch.

"We even got to touch it," Kirkwood laughed. "That was cool. Then we met with a group of engineers who encouraged us to resubmit our application next year for a chance at a flight. It really peaked my interest in NASA."

Kirkwood admitted he has little free time — "I spend it studying and working on my own computer," — but he makes time to work as a lifeguard at the Officer's Club and help coach a team of 4- and 5-year-olds in the Youth Services soccer league.

Coach Cheri Meyers nominated Kirkwood for the Fort Benning Youth Volunteer of Excellence award.

"I couldn't think of anyone who deserved this award more than Jake," she said. "He's such a neat kid. Four- and 5-year-olds can be intimidating, but Jake just jumped right in there without hesitation The kids love him.

"He has a lot of leadership skills.I have two sons of my own and Jake's the kind of kid I hope they grow up to be."

Book signing Saturday — The sixth Ranger Battalion's successful raid on a Japanese prisoner of war camp during World War II is the subject of a book, "Ghost Soldiers," by Hampton Sides.

Sides will be at the Mall Post Exchange from noon to 1:30 p.m. Saturday to sign books and talk about the daring rescue.

Fifty-three years ago, 511 American prisoners of war, survivors of the Bataan Death March, were saved from almost certain death when rangers conducted a surprise attack on Cabanatuan in the Philippines, killing more than 250 Japanese soldiers and rounding up the dazed, sick and starving Americans.

The raid remains the largest and most successful operation of its kind ever undertaken by the U.S. Army. The author traces each step of the rangers as they traverse mountainous jungles and low-crawl past enemy fortifications on their mission of mercy. As the rangers near the POW camp, Sides reveals the daily routine of the prisoners, including Bob Boby, who was about to try to escape the camp when the rangers hit. Sides researched the book using Army archives and talking firsthand with surviving POWs and rangers.

As an aside, Medal of Honor recipient, retired Col. Robert Nett's wife, Frances, was an Army nurse on Leyte where the POWs were transported after being rescued.

Pre-Memorial Day celebration — The 283rd U.S. Army Band, jazz ensemble, will perform a concert in conjunction with other performances at 10:30 a.m. Saturday at the Vietnam Veterans' Memorial Park to kick off a pre-Memorial Day celebration.

Preschool registration — Patch Preschool is now accepting registrations for the 2001-2002 school year.

Hours of registration are 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Your child must be registered with the Central Registration Office.

Wilson students help keep post clean

Wilson Elementary School

The Environmental Protection Club at Wilson Elementary School received the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission's 2001 Community Award for Litter Prevention in recognition of the club's cleanup on April 6.

The project's goal were to get students and community residents excited about doing their part for the environment, to establish a litter-free neighborhood and to promote recycling.

The project came about through brainstorming sessions after students complained that their community had too much litter.

Students decided that a daylong cleanup drive involving all of the students from pre-Kindergarten through fifth grade would demonstrate every effort makes a difference.

Indeed, the project provided firsthand knowledge about how much each individual effort contributes to the protection of the earth.

Prior to the cleanup day, the club secured a mobile recycling unit through the Fort Benning Recycling Station that could be kept at the school.

This unit not only serves the practical purpose of recyclable storage, but it also serves as a focal point to keep the project goals in the minds of the students and community.

All grade levels were assigned an area of the school grounds or the neighboring community of Indianhead Terrace to pick up trash and clean up.

Members of Wilson's Partners In Education, the Basic Combat Training Brigade joined the students for the cleanup, reinforcing the idea that environmental protection is the responsibility of everyone — adults as well as children.

As teams of students went around the school and throughout the neighborhood, they collected litter and recyclable materials. They sorted recyclable items from litter disposed of the litter, and placed recyclables in the mobile recycling unit.

The cleanup day experience gave each participant a hands-on understanding of the concept "reduce, reuse, and recycle" to prevent damaging the neighborhood and the earth.

The joint effort of the EPC, the Fort Benning Recycling Station, the BCTB, Wilson School students and the Wilson faculty and staff proved that working together as a united team can result in big differences for the environment.

Students take break with field day May 11

Students honor volunteers during field day

Wilson Elementary School

Wilson School's Field Day, held on May 11, provided a fun-filled day for students, staff and community members alike.

Physical education teacher Mike Campos organized a full day for students beginning with a parade through the community. Traffic stopped in Indianhead Terrace as pre-K through fifth grade students marched through the neighborhood.

Students kept time with school-related cadence calls and carried banners proclaiming their appreciation for Wilson's Partners in Education, the Basic Combat Training Brigade. Parents lined the streets cheering the students on as military police cars escorted the classes.

Student volunteers from Glenwood High School's Partners Club (sponsor, Ann Baldwin) in Phenix City, brigade members, parent volunteers and special guests provided assistance, displays such as Army vehicles and demonstrations for students.

One special event all students enjoyed was a dog obedience demonstration by Laura Ragsdale of Harvard's K-9.

Students watched as Ragsdale's dog jumped hurdles retrieved an object and did the long jump. Ragsdale also allowed the students to walk the dog through other standard obedience commands.

All students participated in events such as water balloon relays, hula-hoop relays and the three-legged sack race, as well as other activities designed to demonstrate agility, coordination, and teamwork.

Campos' theme for the day was "If you had fun, you won" and students were certainly all winners! Field Day was the culmination of Spirit Week, which began on May 4 with a Partners Appreciation Assembly.

School recognizes partners in education

Wilson Elementary School

During an outdoor assembly May 4, cheers, skits, cadence calls, banners and posters proclaimed Wilson's appreciation for all of the hard work that the Headquarters, Services Company. Basic Combat Training Brigade has done for Wilson School throughout this school year.

In a special Partners In Education Appreciation Day assembly, students made sure that their partners know how much of an impact they have made on the students and school.

Members of the brigade have been extremely visible in the school. Whether enjoying lunch with the students, treating the students to lunch at the brigade's dining facility, or engaging in the serious work of reading to students, tutoring students in math, or developing a confidence course for students, the BCTB has made the PIE motto, "Keeping Children at the Center," a reality.

Highlights of the assembly included the Pre-Kindergarten reciting Wilson's Creed, which proudly ends with the words, "Like my partners and my parents, I will be all that I can be," a parade of classes presenting cheers and cadence calls, and several skits provided by Wilson's "Kids With a Message" team.

"The Partners in Education program has been a major part of our school year," said Principal Phyllis Parker. "BCTB has surpassed our dreams for this year. It has been wonderful to see the eagerness of the brigade to work with and for our students. It has been rewarding to see our students so excited to provide services for the brigade in return."

Teens teach lesson in caring at chapel

Chaplain (Maj.) Blake Bowers
Martin Army Community Hospital

reflections

It was 9:30 p.m Friday night. It had been an extremely busy and taxing week. My weekend was filled with tasks yet to be accomplished.

I went to the chapel annex to pick up the boys who would be overnight guests.

Inside the annex I found nearly 30 teens singing and telling their stories of praise and thanks to God. The teens were about nine hours into a 30-hour fast to raise their awareness of world hunger and service to God.

As I waited for the praise time to come to a close, I listened and reflected. Before me were teens who were identifying with those of far less fortune than they. No news reporters, no cameras, no radio station reporting on their activity.

Then I wondered — if this had been a teen riot, a protest, a shooting, well I could imagine the headlines. Yet their focus was on praise, thanks and prayers for children facing world hunger.

Each teen was asked to pray for the child's name they wore around their neck that God would provide for their necessities.

My daughter, Ashley, was wearing the name of a 5-year-old girl from Peru. Then I thought to myself, "When was the last time I cared or thought of the hungry, the thirsty, the stranger and the unclothed? After all, I have plenty to eat, a place to live and clothes to wear."

I was flooded with emotions of thanks, joy, praise and my own personal and spiritual admonishment as I breathed a word of prayer for the efforts of these teens at this fast and for their trying to make a difference in the lives of a few children.

This time it took my sixth-grade daughter and 29 other teens on a Friday night at 9:30 p.m.to remind a father and a chaplain of a mission Christ gave to believers.

As I was challenged anew, I so challenge you to look around and ask the Lord to show you a need you can fulfill to make a little difference in this world.

"For I was hungry and you gave me something to eat …" (Matthew 25:35)

Acceptance, respect key for stepfamilies

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

New stepfamilies often have hopes that can lead to unrealistic expectations. Hopes and dreams are important for any family, but they should also be realistic (Proverbs 13:12).

Most stepfamilies want their homes to be happy and harmonious. They expect that everyone will love each other.

It is more important that stepfamily members accept and respect each other. Becoming a stepfamily takes time. Satisfaction comes from working together to build the new family.

Typical stepfamilies want to forget the past and make a fresh start. However, differences in their backgrounds are a part of daily living. They will need to deal with these differences and they have the opportunity to grow because of them.

Stepfamilies want to do better this time to make up for past hurts and losses. The truth is that their new family may not be better or worse. It will simply be different.

Most stepparents want their new family to be the ideal family to friends, neighbors and relatives. Presenting an ideal picture to others is not important, because all families have difficulties and differences.

Stepparents want their children to have security and stability. They want their children to be as happy about the remarriage as they feel.

Since children usually do not have a choice either in the termination of the first family or in the formation of the new family, they will feel confused — at times happy and at times angry. Listening to them and being empathetic will help them to feel safe and secure.

Stepparents are also disciplinarians. Many children, teen-agers especially, will be unwilling to accept authority from stepparents.

In addition, stepparents don't usually agree on how to discipline. Lots of patience, cooperation and compromise; a desire to build relationships rather than wield authority; and less threats, will create less resentment and more cooperation (Ephesians 4:2-3 and 6:4).

Would you like help with step-parenting? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, located at Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com for more help.

ITB wins postwide volleyball tournament

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Lack of turnout turned the postwide Intramural Volleyball championship three-day competition into a one-night, round robin tournament.

Three teams battled it out for the title of champion at Audie Murphy Fitness Center, May 10.

The competition, which was originally scheduled to take place over three days, was reduced to one night of back-to-back games, after one of the original teams backed out of the tournament, said Lulu Mitchenor, sports specialist, Fort Benning Sports Branch.

Mitchenor said advertising for the league began in early April.

But because there was not enough interest generated in the league, a round-robin tournament was decided upon instead.

"I had some guys who were adamant about playing volleyball," Mitchenor said. "Even though there was not a lot of interest, there are people that enjoy the sport, and that's what it is all about."

Many of the players and coaches present at the tournament said they wished there would have been a better turnout for this year's event.

"I wish there were more teams in the tournament," said Sgt. David Carter, coach, ITB. "(It would have been nice) for more units to have supported it."

Spc. Derek Canal, head coach, 14th Field Hospital, said he hoped to see more teams participate and show their support for volleyball next year.

Both coaches said they plan to be the victors of the 2002 tournament.

The Infantry Training Brigade team played the 14th Field Hospital's team winning the opening game, 15-9, and the second game, 15-7, prevailing over the match.

ITB proved to be the victors in the second match of the night against the 598th Maintenance Company, in a two-game winning spree with 15-5 in the first game and 15-7 in the second.

After the tournament ended, an awards ceremony was held to recognize the teams and players.

Each team that participated received a trophy for first, second or third place.

Every player also received a trophy for their support of the tournament.

Mitchenor, who played volleyball in high school, said she hopes that there will be twice the amount of interest in the league next year.

"If anyone is interested and their unit is not, they can come and play with another team." Mitchenor said. "If they are interested and want to play, then I will not deny them the right to play."

For more information about the volleyball league, call Mitchenor at 544-4511.

Bike race challenges riders

Iron Soldier Bicycle Race draws more than 75 participants

1st Lt. Stacy A. Picard
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

More than 75 bikers accepted the challenge of a 20-mile course and competed in the Iron Soldier Bicycle Race Tuesday.

The race was sponsored by A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"The turn out was better than anticipated. We expected 30-40 riders at the most," said Capt. Granville Smith, commander A Co., 1st Bn., 11 Inf. Regt.

"I think the idea of the race at Fort Benning is good. The good thing about a 20-mile race is that it broadens the applicant pool," Capt. J.B. Vowel, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., said. "The course was great with a couple of hills in it and there's relatively little traffic. I'd like the course to be twice as long."

"I liked the course. The bridge was scary and it was very hard to get up those hills. The straight away was nice," Teresa Fox, the first place female winner said. "I came out here to beat a few men and all the women. I did what I came out to do so I feel great!"

The first place male and female trophies were awarded to Vowel, and Fox, an employee at Mike's Bikes in Columbus.

The second place male and female trophies were awarded to Sgt. Troy Alexander, Fort Benning Army Marksmanship Unit and Sgt. Terri Rawley, 1st Airborne Battalion, 507th Infantry Regiment.

The third place male and female trophies were awarded to Sgt. 1st Class Billy Thompson, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., and Shiloh Hendricks, an administrative assistant at Martin Army Medical Center.

Suggestions were made by race participants as to improving the event for following years. Some of those suggestions were to lengthen the course, and to start and end the race at the same point.

"This was a chance to get a good workout and to be around a great bunch of people. It was a good course, a great event, and should definitely be done again," said Col. Michael Ferriter, 11th Inf. Regt. commander who competed in the race with his wife, Margie.

"I believe that (the race) should (happen) again," said Sgt. Allison Lugdon., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Lugdon also said that she believed many of the participants enjoyed the race and that "It was a good treat for them."

USAMU strikes gold

Tori Svenningson
USA Shooting

CAIRO, Egypt — A soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has realized a lifelong dream; he won a World Championship.

Dulohery

Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery won the Gold Medal in Skeet at the World Shotgun Shooting Championships May 9.

Dulohery shot a near-perfect match of 123 out of 125 targets in the qualifying round and a perfect 25 in the final, but his perfection was matched clay for clay by Italian Ennio Falco.

Dulohery fought hard for the title of champion. He went into the final tied with Falco for first place, and only one target ahead of two other men who were also jockeying for the top slot.

Both Dulohery and Falco then each shot a straight 25 in the final to tie once again, this time at 148 targets.

The two men proceeded to the shoot-off, where Falco dropped his second clay, leaving Dulohery the opportunity to hit his second and win the Gold Medal.

AMU's Staff Sgt. Joseph D. Buffa and Sgt. 1st Class James T. Graves, along with Dulohery, won the Skeet Team Bronze Medal for the United States. Among the three, the Americans hit a total of 361 targets to win the Bronze.

The conclusion of the men's skeet events also marked the end of the 2001 World Clay Target Championships, which were conducted April 28 to May 9.

USA Shooting sent a full team of 33 of its top shooters, sponsored by NRA Sports.

The United States won a total of 12 medals in individual and team events: four Gold, five Silver and three Bronze. USAMU's Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson also brought home the individual and team Silver Medals in Trap.

Rifle, Pistol Club sponsors shoots

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

More than 50 shooters competed in one of five night shoots planed for this summer May 5.

The International Defensive Pistol Association shoot, sponsored by the Rifle and Pistol Club, combined both day and night events in three different runs.

The first run was in the day. As the sun set and darkness blanketed the range, competitors shot their second and third runs.

"This allows shooters to see what works and what doesn't," said Jim Graham, assistant manager of the club.

And what worked became apparent soon into the second run. Some shooters mounted lights on their weapons and some held lights and shot.

"This really is a good time," said Chris Edwards, a competitor. "This is the only place I know of that runs matches at night so that is why I'm here."

The shoot was also a learning process, shooters said.

"You learn a lot," said Frank Russo, a range officer. "They learn how their weapons work at night and what they need to do to shoot better.

"Shooting at night is very different," he said.

The winners were:

In the stock service class, Don Schleicher took top honors. Johnaton Moore took second place and Chris Edwards scored a third place finish.

Rodney Lenton won the enhanced service class and Frank Russo won the back-up automatic class.

In the close quarters battle rifle side match, Ronnie Shores won the red dot optic class. He was followed by Moore and Shane Fitch.

In the scoped rifle portion of the side match, Edwards took first place followed by Carmine VanHousen and Ben Cartee.

Edwards also won the iron sights class, followed by Red Matthes and Moore.

Sunday shooters participated in the monthly rifle match.

Nearly 20 shooters participated in the rifle match Gene Ruff won the bolt action position class.

He was followed by Wallace Herrington and Jeff Allen. In the professional class, Ray Smith took top honors.

The Rifle and Pistol club hosts the monthly pistol shoots on the first Saturday of the month and the rifle shoots on the second Sunday of each month.

PUBLIC NOTICE

The Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations will conduct an accreditation survey of Martin Army Community hospital during the week of 21 May 2001.

The purpose of the survey will be to evaluate the organization's compliance with nationally established Joint Commission standards. The survey results will be used to determine whether, and the conditions under which accreditation should be awarded to the organization.

Joint Commission standards deal with organizational quality of care issues and the safety of the environment in Which care is provided. Anyone believing that he or she has pertinent and valid information about such matters may request a public information interview with the Joint Commission's field representatives at the time of the survey. Information presented at the interview will be carefully evaluated for relevance to the accreditation process. Requests for a public information interview must be made in writing and should be sent to the Joint Commission no later than five days before the survey begins. The request must also indicate the nature of the information to be provided at the interview. Such requests should be addressed to:

Division of Accreditation Operations
Accreditation Services Specialist
Joint Commission on Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations
One Renaissance Boulevard
Oakbrook Terrace, IL 60181

The Joint Commission will acknowledge such requests in writing or by telephone and will inform the organization of the request for any interview. The organization will, in turn, notify the interviewee of the date, time, and place of the meeting.

This notice is posted in accordance with the Joint Commission's requirements and may not be removed before the survey is completed

Local Dealer Brings Back Expert To Help Sell Off Repossessed Cars

"Repo Joe" Back In Columbus Sacrificing Bank Repossessions And Lease Terminations To Area Buyers Through Sunday

Columbus, GA - Georgia car, truck and S.U.V. buyers are getting ready to be exposed to an entirely new way to buy nearly new vehicles at a discount. Through Saturday, with the help of a man called "Repo Joe", Carl Gregory Northlake Auto Complex will offer bank repossessed vehicles for sale to the general public.

This past March when "Repo Joe" was at Carl Gregory Northlake Auto Complex the response was overwhelming. "Repo Joe–The Man, The Myth, The Bargains," is back and better than ever with twice the selection.

"Repo Joe"'s story is simple. After nearly two decades in the car business, Joe has seen everything a dealer has to offer. Yet he noticed there were always two types of vehicles that were far and away the best bargains: repossessed vehicles and vehicles that had been leased. The problem was, they were often hard, if not impossible, to find.

Fast forward to 1998. Utilizing relationships and contacts he had made with repo men, banks, credit unions and auto auctions over the past twenty years, Joe decided he would scour the nation looking for these vehicles. Now, he criss-crosses the country looking for the best buys out there. Then he chooses locations in each region of the U.S.A. to dispose of them. For Georgia, the exclusive location is Carl Gregory Northlake Auto Complex. In addition to the initial savings, Carl Gregory Northlake Auto Complex has secured financing that lets qualified buyers drive home by simply making a $27 down payment, then start making the payments.

General Manager, Richard Harrison of Gregory Northlake Auto Complex explained his store is prepared for the expected crowds.

"We got a fantastic selection of not just cars, but trucks, minivans, and yes, even sport utilities," said Harrison. "Plus, our sales consultants took days off earlier in the week so we'll be staffed to the fullest for this event. We just had a meeting where they were all briefed with a bit of history on each vehicle we'll offer for sale. We're ready!"

"Repo Joe will mark the payments you'll make on these vehicles right on the windshield of each vehicle Friday night," added Harrison, "you'll know right away how much the payments you'll start making will be."

"And not only will you find repos at huge savings, we've accumulated and acquired dozens of lease terminations," said Harrison. "These '98 and '99 models have low miles and at least a year or two of the warranty remains. If you think Program Cars are a bargain, wait until you see these."

> "We're just looking for people that will make the payments on these vehicles."
> ~Repo Joe

Repo Joe adds "The premise of this sale is simple, we're just looking for people that will make the payments on these vehicles."

Harrison warned that selection is good but limited. "We want everyone to know that this is a first-come, first-served sales event. At these prices, there will be a lot of great buys, but the really great buys will go fast!"

Realizing many car buyers use their current vehicle as a down payment, Harrison and his team have taken steps to make the trade-in process easy. "Extra appraisers will be here each day and have been given the order to pay any and every reasonable price for local trades," Harrison explained. "If a customer then chooses to use that cash as a down payment, their monthly payment will be even lower than the ones we've got marked on the windshield!"

Carl Gregory Northlake Auto Complex is located at 3000 Northlake Parkway at the corner of Veterans & J.R. Allen Pkwy in Columbus. For further information call (706) 568-4900.

This event concludes Sunday, May 20th at 5pm.

"How Can A Dealer Sell Cars For Only $29 Down?"

VOLUME 4, COLUMBUS EDITION

'98 Chevy Lumina Ls 4 door $79 mo, 9.9% APR, plus tax, tag & title. With approved credit

Credit Rebuilders Are In Columbus Promising "No Credit Investigation" Car Loans.

Columbus, GA - Mr. Jimmy Peters of Credit Rebuilders of America will be hosting a mega-sales event at Bill Heard Chevrolet today, Saturday and Sunday that will surely have car buyers out in full force and talking about it for years to come. If you want or need a new, one-, two- or three-year old car, truck, family van or sport utility, then you need to pay close attention. Even if your credit is totally ruined - I'm talking about people with previous bankruptcies, multiple repossessions, charge-offs, divorces, credit card difficulties, tax liens or just plain slow pay - Mr. Peters has a revolutionary new program that will, in almost every case, wash away all your previous credit sins and put you on the road to complete blue-chip recovery. And ,best of all, you get the new or late model vehicle of your dreams.

Well, you might say, "how much cash out-of-pocket will this fresh start and new or slightly-used dream vehicle require?" This is where the deal really gets sweet. Through Monday, credit rebuilders will only require a small amount of out-of-pocket - $29 to be exact! Yes, anyone who can raise $29 will, in all likelihood, drive a prestigious luxury Tahoe, Suburban, Silverado, Impala, Venture family van, Trail Blazer, Cherokee, Honda, Toyota, Explorer, Expedition, XLT, Laramie, Dakota, Mustang, Park Ave, or even a luxury Cadillac home this evening. Again, with only $29 down!

It only gets better. For those on limited budget payments, you can actually start in the $90 per month range. And finance rates, even for the credit-impaired, begin at an astounding 6.9% APR! A prime example of a deal of this magnitude would be a '97 Dodge Laramie SLT 4-door Club Cab pickup with the magnum V-8, automatic trans, power windows and locks, a CD changer in addition to a cassette player and, of course, air conditioning in addition to all the other comforts and utilitarian options. Priced at an unbelievable $8000, you pay $29 down, finance at 6.9% APR and make 72 payments of $142.60 each. Of course, the tax, title and license would be extra. Or if a small truck is your thing, perhaps this '98 Chevy Cavalier would hit the spot. You would simply make a $90 payment to one of the national banks hosting this event , spread over 72 months at 6.9% APR with the title, tax and license extra. As you might suspect, this 6.9% APR money is usually reserved for insiders and other blue-chip clients, so this opportunity may never, in fact, be repeated, so you must act now!

And if that wouldn't be enough to get anyone's attention, there is even more to excite savvy car shoppers. For a limited time, you may even delay payment start-up past normal vacation time, enabling you to put extra funds into summer vacation trips in your new or like-new vehicle.

For those who have been told they owe too much to trade, we have an even bolder program. Credit rebuilders vow to make special arrangements to pay off any vehicle, regardless of balance owed when they trade it in. You can trade your current vehicle, even if you believe it is a less-than-desirable brand. For any trade-in, you can expect to get an incredible amount over Kelley Blue Book Value. Even if your car is not running.

An event like this may never come to Columbus again and the lines are sure to be long. To avoid those lines, you may call ahead for a VIP pass. Ask for Mr. Peters or Mr. Marx at 322-8888 ext 108, or come to :

And best of all, The credit process Is incredibly simple and fast. You present your $29 cash to Jimmy Peters, who is hosting the event for the Disposal company, and in less than 5 minutes he'll give you a list of vehicles to pick from. Payments range from $79 mo. And terms can be 6 months or less!

Every Memorial Day Americans take time to remember the hundreds of thousands of men and women who served their country to make the United States the world leader it is today. This Memorial Day weekend services to commemorate veterans will be held throughout the tricommunity area.

Members of The Retired Officers Association and the Chattahoochee Valley Veterans Council will put up flags for the Avenue of Flags at 8 a.m. May 26 along Victory Drive. The Avenue of Flags is sponsored by the Gold Star Wives of America.

At 1 p.m. the 16th annual Andersonville Spring Fair and Memorial Day ceremony will take place at the Esterlin Bandstand on Main Street to honor more than two hundred WWII veterans. The scheduled guest speaker is Col. Lonnie Vona, Fort Benning's chief of staff. The Fort Benning Infantry Band is also scheduled to perform.

At 10 a.m., May 27 on Sacrifice Field, The Red Catchers Association scheduled a dedication ceremony for the 199th Infantry Brigade (Separate Light). A bugler from the Infantry Band will perform Taps and a color guard composed of members from the 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment will participate in the

Sgt. Michael Maddox

There's a war going on right now, but it's not on the ground in some foreign land. Instead, it's being fought on the growing network system relied upon by computer users across the globe.

Just because Fort Benning is a government agency doesn't make the post immune to this war. The Directorate of Information Management has its own "soldiers" who are on the front lines of this war everyday, said Paul Yates, director of Information Management.

"In the past year, the importance of information security has grown tremendously," he said. "As a result, there isn't a week that goes by without a message coming down from the chief of staff for TRADOC or someone else that is concerned about system security. What's happening, is that we have been trying to figure out where the next battles are going to take place technically, they're "happening now."

Survey says balance Army needs with beliefs

Transformation not just for equipment

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army transformation is not just about getting new equipment and creating doctrine for a leaner, lighter force envisioned for Interim Brigade Combat Teams.

It is also about creating a balanced internal culture that makes soldiers and their families the Army's center of gravity, according to the Army Training and Leader Development Panel.

A summary of the panel's findings was released today.

The panel interviewed more than 13,000 soldiers and family members in the past year to examine issues impacting training and leader development and how current policies in those areas effect leaders and soldiers as they carry out their assigned missions.

Additional studies seeking the views of NCOs and warrant officers are planned.

"The Army is transforming itself into a new force for the future," Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Eric K. Shinseki said.

"The most important part of that force will be its soldiers and leaders. They must be agile and adaptive in order to employ the capabilities that the future Army must possess. The Army must begin now to train the soldiers and grow the leaders for the Objective Force."

What the field said

Respondents addressed issues that ranged from well-being to job satisfaction and training standards to the officer education system. According to the report's executive summary, answers indicated that the Army culture is out of balance — that Army practices do not match up with Army beliefs. But, the field also expressed a strong belief in service to the nation and pride in their profession.

Specific findings included:

- Combat Training Centers are highly valued by the field as the Army's best training experience.
- High operational tempo negatively impacts every aspect of the Army.
- The officer assignment process focuses on personnel management rather than quality professional development.
- Lieutenants are often rushed through developmental leadership positions that impact on their opportunity to master tactical

Another protest lodged

DFEL meeting tries to answer questions

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Another protest has been lodged in response to Fort Benning's attempt to contract out the responsibilities of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

Johnson Controls filed another protest with the General Accounting Office May 17. This protest is in response to the government's decision that IT Group might have had an unfair competitive advantage when submitting the original bid because one of the company's subcontractors, Innovative Logistics Techniques, Inc., also known as INNOLOG, had access to data concerning the subcontractor's work with logistical operations.

The first protest, filed within weeks of the initial decision to award to IT Group in August 2000, dealt with the unfair competitive advantage issue. The second protest is in response to Training and Doctrine Command's solution on how to redress the issue. The normal time for the GAO to answer a protest is 100 days.

But what does this mean for the people who work in the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics? Post officials tried to answer this question and many others during a town hall meeting Tuesday afternoon.

Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, told nearly 300 of the organization's 800 civilian employees who were impacted by the A-76 study that although the contractor is still undecided the work will likely be contracted out. He explained the Army's solution to resolve the protest was for both companies to receive the information concerning the maintenance data and for both companies to rework only that portion of the bid and resubmit it for consideration.

"This is not a brand new solicitation," Stelzer said, "or a rework of the performance work statement. This is strictly looking at the year of record 1997, looking at the specific activity — the maintenance activity that has data within the

Vandals cause major problem

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Three weeks ago I brought you the story of Club Beyond members who spent a weekend working to make a Custer Terrace playground a safer, more sightly place for neighborhood children. After seven hours of toiling in the hot sun, they left the playground in much better shape than they found it. And isn't that what we're all supposed to do — leave this world just a little better than we found it?

One day after the story ran, a handful of young vandals struck the playground. They chipped and scraped away layers of fresh paint and in less than an hour 'undid' seven hours worth of work.

These were not teens, not even middle schoolers. They were elementary-age children destroying Fort Benning property — "kinder-vandals" if you will.

Which leaves me wondering who's minding the kids.

Where were mom and dad when junior was chipping away at my tax dollars and my son's hard work?

Assuming these children were old enough, according to post regulation, to leave the house unaccompanied, someone should have instilled in them the basic principles of civility, like:

• The recreation facilities you find beyond your back yard were paid for by the tax dollars of hard-working folks. It does not belong to you. They're yours to enjoy only so long as you respect them.

• Leave it the way you found it or keep your hands off of it.

• If it's community property and you damage it, you must repair or replace it if you wish to remain part of the community.

It stands to reason, if children aren't taught to be good citizens, their parents should be held accountable for their misconduct until they come of age.

Uncontrollable? Strong-willed? Hyper? Sorry, they're not excuses for neglecting to supervise a child.

In fact, if you know your child has a tendency to wreak havoc at home, don't free him to spread his mayhem beyond his own yard.

At last week's town hall meeting, several parents issued complaints about neighborhood children running amok. "What are you going to do about it?" they asked Fort Benning officials. Someone even suggested more recreation facilities might be the answer.

Are you getting this folks? Since when do we look to post officials to parent our children. And why should Fort Benning be responsible for entertaining them?

I'll be responsible for training and disciplining my own children, thank you very much. If they destroy property, they'll answer to me long before they answer to the garrison commander. And I'll have to face up to my own failure as a parent long after I make restitution for their crime.

Unfortunately, if you're one of the residents plagued by neighborhood children who swear like sailors and flaunt their disdain for authority, there's little you can do about it, other than report it to your community life NCO and the MPs.

The real question is not 'What are we going to do about these children?' but 'What are we going to do with the parents who will not take responsibility for their children?'

Community includes more than few

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

commentary

As the assistant editor for The Bayonet, I get the chance to know a lot about what's going on around post.

While there are some times when I get to know more than I want to, there are other times when having your finger on the pulse of the community comes in handy — like during our staff meetings.

The staff was recently making plans for coverage of upcoming sports on post so we could make sure we get out there and put our local athletes in the spotlight.

As we were going down the list, there seemed to be a pattern that was a little disturbing to me.

We talked about coverage of the post volleyball season — until I found out it was only a one-day tournament instead of a season of play.

Oh well, we can just head out to the diamonds to cover one of America's favorite sports — softball.

We had a preseason tournament but it only lasted a couple of days too. A couple of days? I would have guessed it would have lasted at least a week?

By now I'm starting to wonder why we have what seems to be poor sports activities on post.

With a little more discussion, I found out the reason these events were over so quickly is there is was a lack of participation. You can't have games if you don't have bodies to play them.

Where are these bodies? We have more than 25,000 soldiers assigned to Fort Benning.

As if this weren't disheartening enough, I found that lack of support doesn't just end in our sports program.

We sent a reporter out recently to cover an Enlisted Wives' Club meeting. The reporter came back and told me there were around 40 people at the meeting.

This is for a postwide organization. Out of thousands of spouses in our community, only 40 are interested enough in what is going on to show up?

The final straw for me was our discussion of how the last town hall meeting went. The numbers weren't any better.

We have more than 4,000 family housing units on post. But only around 35 post residents were present to voice concerns about our community. What does this mean — that more than 99 percent of everyone on post is happy, or just doesn't care?

From the numbers I collected, I began wondering exactly what soldiers and their families do care about?

I know there are reasons you can't support programs like being on deployments and staying busy with family matters, but these reasons don't make up for these kinds of numbers.

My opinion is that everyone is too concerned with themselves to worry about our community.

Maybe I'm wrong, but can you argue with numbers?

Safety important for long weekend

Memorial Day is the traditional beginning of the summer season and a time for outdoor fun, travel and family vacations.

It is therefore appropriate to remind all militray members to begin necessary training and planning to reduce unnecessary risks.

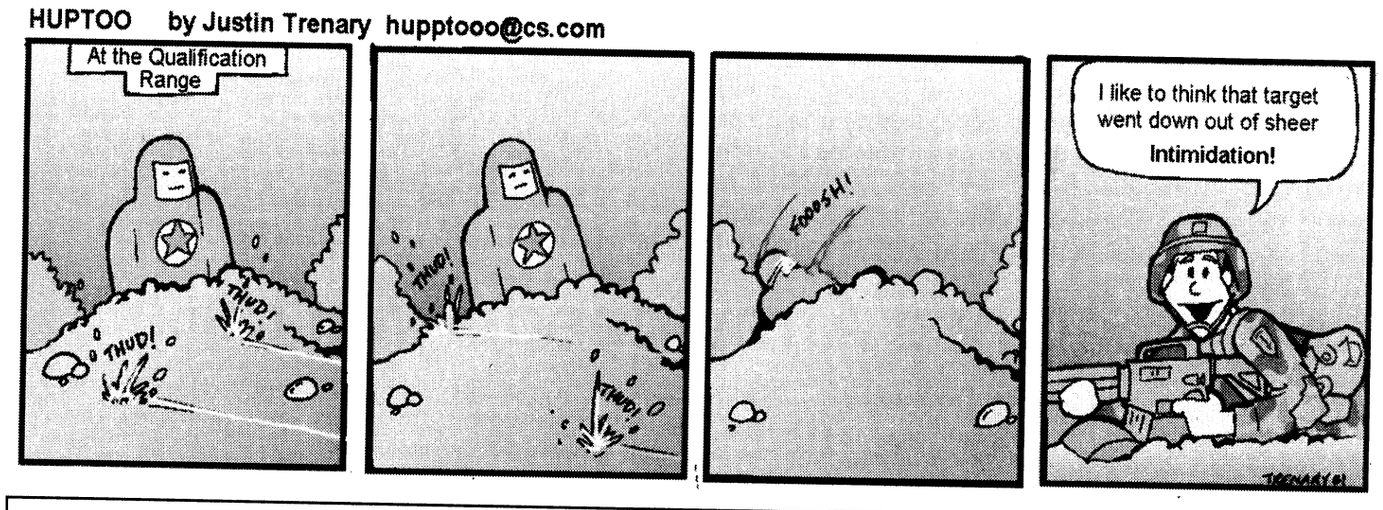
During the summer season last year, between Memorial Day and Labor Day, the Army recorded 108 off-duty privately owned vehicle accidents, 29 of which were fatalities.

We can prevent these tragic losses by taking the time to create awareness among soldiers and civilian employees of the risks associated with motor vehicle operation and summer activities.

More information on preventing motor vehicle accidents and other accidents can be found on the Safety Center's Web site at http://safety.army.mil.

Boating, swimming, camping, cycling and other sports are popular outdoor summer activities that are also high-risk activities. Commander and supervisor emphasis does make a difference.

The risk-management process that we use daily in our training and operational events can help to reduce risk in our off-duty activities as well.



Advise your soldiers and civilian employees to act responsible at all times, to use their seat belts when operating motor vehicles and to avoid consuming alcoholic beverages when operating motor vehicles or participating in high risk activities.

Memorial Day is set aside to commemorate the sacrifices of our soldiers and civilians who gave their lives in the defense of our country. The real tragedy lies in recognizing too late that identifying and controlling hazards would have reduced risks and likely prevented accidents while serving our country.

I urge all commanders to reiterate the importance of safety awareness and education prior to Memorial Day weekend and the summer season.

VARIOUS VOICES

What was your most memorable Memorial Day and why?

Staff Sgt. Orlando Garcia, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — I think the most memorable Memorial Day was the year I spent with my family at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, watching the fireworks. It was one of the few times my entire family was together.

Ethel Cody, AAFES employee — The one year I went to the Memorial Day parade with my two sons. The Army Band was playing and everyone had their flags out. It was very memorable.

Sgt. Blake Robinson, 2nd Battalion, 14th Infantry Regiment (10th Mountain Division) — When I was younger, I went to my grandfather's gravesite in Oregon. He was a World War II veteran and we visited his site on that day.

William Maehr, AAFES concessionaire — My most memorable Memorial Day was back in 1991. I had just got back from Saudi two weeks before. I was really grateful to just relax and be back.

Staff Sgt. David Weaver, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — My most memorable Memorial day was back in 1987, the year I graduated from Special Forces and I went to Washington, DC to visit the wall.

Patrice Smith, AAFES employee — Every year is memorable. I visit my grandmother, mother and father's gravesites in North Carolina.

Rangers, reptiles team to teach safety

Instructors train students to avoid snake hazard

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

While walking with a platoon of ranger students, a Florida ranger instructor spotted a water moccasin during a patrol in early May.

It is these encounters that could possibly get a student or instructor bitten.

That, however, hasn't happened, thanks in part to several ranger instructors who make up the U.S. Army Reptile Team.

Along with being tasked to train America's warriors, they also take care of snakes and alligators housed by the team.

The reptiles aren't pets. They are live props used by the instructors when giving classes to ranger students as well as people in the surrounding community.

"We teach the ranger students about all seven venomous snakes in the Southeast versus the nonpoisonous snakes," said Sgt. 1st Class James Rachels.

"We teach them how to ID the different species, what their habitat is and their temperament. We also talk about how to treat a snake bite. It makes the students aware that the snakes are out there."

Thanks in part to the class, the Florida camp on Eglin Air Force Base, hasn't seen a student bitten by a snake as far as the reptile team can remember, they said.

In fact students are able to identify the snakes they do encounter and avoid a confrontation, said Staff Sgt. Fred Babauta.

"I had a ranger student tell me he saw a snake (while training)," Babauta said. "I asked him what kind it was and he said he could tell it was a black racer because of the class we gave. Another student said he saw a timber rattler and identified it from the class too."

The reptile handlers also travel to the surrounding community to give classes about area snakes.

"We put on shows at local schools and in the community," Rachels said. "We also give (emergency medical technicians) refreshers, talk to local hospitals, give classes to doctors and inform construction workers what they may encounter."

Although responsible for the well-being of the snakes and alligators, no matter how tired they are from walking the long patrols with the ranger students, the team members always put safety first.

"They are experts in the field," said 1st Sgt. Scott Bond, 6th Ranger Training Battalion's acting sergeant major. "But their safety is always more important then the mission.

Spc. Mark Watson

Sgt. 1st Class James Rachels, a U.S. Army Reptile team member, keeps a close eye on a Burmese python during recent a class on reptiles.

"If they are too tired to handle the snakes, they will get someone else to do it for them."

The reason for the concern is all the venomous snakes can strike a fatal bite.

"They all have their fangs and poison sacks," Rachels said.

"Even if the fangs were removed, they grow back. And if the poison sacks were removed, the snakes can regenerate enough poison for a fatal blow within 24 hours."

Although their job is a dangerous one, the team members said they really enjoy what they do.

"It is a labor of love," said Staff Sgt. James Naughton.

Fort Benning top drill sergeant to be recognized Tuesday

Four Sand Hill drills compete for title

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will recognize its top drill sergeant at 2 p.m. Tuesday in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium during the Drill Sergeant of the Year ceremony.

Four Sand Hill drill sergeants are in the running for this year's title.

They are Staff Sgt. Rahsan Mitchell, Basic Combat Training Brigade's drill sergeant of the year, Sgt. 1st Class Marcian Gibson, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Staff Sgt. Matthew McCready, Infantry Training Brigade's Drill Sergeant of the Year, and Staff Sgt. Ronald Lawson, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

The title of drill sergeant of the year is a prestigious one, Mitchell said.

"Drill sergeants have an awesome responsibility to train civilians and turn them into soldiers," Mitchell said. "For one individual to be recognized out of all the drill sergeants is a superb accomplishment."

He said the drill sergeants in the running for top drill are what a drill sergeant should be.

"They are set above the rest," he said. "They are a role model for other drill sergeants and soldiers."

The drill sergeant of the year competition is a time for drill sergeants to shine, said Command Sgt. Maj. Kenny LeonGuerrero, Infantry Training Brigade's sergeant major.

"I have so much admiration for the drill sergeants across Fort Benning," LeonGuerrero said. "They are role models for the Army. The drill sergeant of the year is just the icing on the cake."

"The $275 they get (for drill sergeant pay) is not the reason they became drill sergeants. They became drill sergeants to train soldiers," said LeonGuerrero. "They are so often unrecognized. Their efforts day in and day out need to be recognized."

White discusses priorities if confirmed

Active-duty, reserve relations top list of concerns

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The designated Secretary of the Army said if confirmed by the Senate, his top priorities will be creating closer ties between the active Army and its reserve components and to align the transformation budget with the one set forth by the secretary of defense.

Thomas White, a retired brigadier general, was nominated by President George Bush to serve as the 18th secretary of the Army.

Louis Caldera, former secretary of the Army, left office March 5 as part of the changing of administration. Gregory Dahlberg and currently Joseph Westphal have filled the position as acting secretaries of the Army.

Stepping in during the Army's transformation is not going to be unfamiliar territory for White because he stated that he has personally witnessed many changes in the Army.

In a prepared statement for the Senate Armed Services Committee May 10, he stated that he participated in the transformation of the Vietnam Army to the Cold War Army.

Like then, the Army is transforming to meet important responsibilities for the security of the nation in the new century, he said.

"We have to make sure that the transformation of the Army conforms with that ... of national strategy ... and does so in a way that gives us a smooth transition from where we currently are to where we must be in 10 years," White said, "while sustaining readiness in between."

During the confirmation hearing, Virginia Sen. John Warner, committee chairman, pointed out that the cost of the projected transformation does not match the fiscal year defense budget.

White assured Warner that he would fight for the Army's share and more of the budget allocated to Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfield, but he will also work to bring the transformation budget into alignment with the DoD budget.

Promoting a positive relationship between the Army and its reserve components will be another top priority of White's, he said if confirmed.

"The National Guard units today are deploying side by side with active-component people in Kosovo and other places around the world," White said. "The Reserves have been reshaped into a combat service support force. I fully support that because it integrates them better into the total force. If confirmed, I plan on spending a lot of time with the reserve component promoting that relationship."

If White receives the Senate's nomination, more base closures are possible.

White agreed with Arizona Sen. John McCain that there is an excess of military infrastructures that can and should be reduced.

He said decisions would be made based upon a preliminary review of the base structure.

White holds a bachelor's degree in engineering from the U.S. Military Academy and a master's degree in operations research from the Naval Post Graduate School in Monterey, Calif.

White served 23 years in the active Army.

His service includes two tours in Vietnam, a number of assignments on the Army Staff, and duty as the executive assistant to then Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Colin Powell.

His military decorations and awards include the Distinguished Service Medal, Silver Star and Legion of Merit with three Oak Leaf Clusters.

In White's written statement to the committee, it read that his most enduring lessons over the years were provided by the individual sacrifices and contributions of the American men and women he had the privilege of leading.

He said taking care of people would be his sacred duty.

Before his nomination as the secretary of the Army,

White was the vice chairman of Enron Energy Services, the Enron Corporation subsidiary responsible for providing energy outsource solutions to commercial and industrial customers throughout the United States.

Enron is one of the world's leading electricity, natural gas and communications companies.

As secretary, White would be required to recuse himself from any decision regarding Enron.

He said that although the energy company would have very little to do with the Army or the Department of Defense, he will avoid any conflicts of interest with his former employer.

"We are obligated to follow both the letter and the spirit of the law in terms of potential conflicts," White said. "I will commit to avoid any appearance of conflict, in terms of any future relationships that Enron might choose to have with the departments."

The Senate has not yet scheduled a confirmation vote on White.

The Civilian Personnel Advisory Center received three Training and Doctrine Command Civilian Personnel Excellence Awards during the 14th annual TRADOC Civilian Human Resource Excellence Awards competition.

The command selected:

• Mary Loudermilk, personnel management specialist, as an Outstanding CPAC Employee Relations Expert.

• Stacey Salo, personnel management specialist, as an Outstanding CPAC Consultant.

• Kathleen Kenna, civilian personnel officer, to receive the TRADOC Award for Leadership in Civilian Personnel Administration.

The Civilian Human Resource professionals ensured the Army accomplished its mission by giving their best in customer service, Kenna said.

"This is especially true during the unprecedented challenges the command faces in managing its most important asset, our dedicated work force," Kenna said. "This competition provides an opportunity for major command level recognition of specific contributions made by the Civilian Human Resource community."

Salo said winning such an award wouldn't be possible without the support of others.

"It's an honor to receive the award," Salo said. "I'm very grateful to all the people I work with on Fort Benning.

"We have strong leadership, an excellent team of people in the CPAC, and we partner well with the Civilian Personnel Operations Center."

Protest: Keeps contract awarding from being completed

EMISS. Johnson Control cannot change their original proposal based on the transportation side of the house or the maintenance repair activity or anything else with regard to the facilities. It is all focused on a very specific portion of the entire packet."

Stelzer told the workers the contentious EMISS information was always available to Fort Benning and was included in the government's bid.

Which means the government does not "have a dog in the fight" and cannot resubmit a bid — only the two companies originally submitting bids are involved in the process.

"We provided our performance work statement in accordance with the data we had and now both these other companies will now have," Stelzer said.

In response to employee concerns, however, Col. Joe Torres, the garrison commander, said he would ask TRADOC if such a review and possible revision to the government's bid could be accomplished.

Because the directorate's mission is ongoing and the summer months traditionally mean more training, more moves and more services provided, temporary workers are being hired to help accomplish the workload.

Approximately 60 people have left the directorate through Voluntary Early Retirement Authority and Voluntary Separation Incentive Program and priority placement.

But the issue is not to bring people on board who will compete with the employees for positions when the contract goes into effect, Stelzer said.

He told the employees that because of the uncertainty regarding the contract, the authorization for VERA and VSIP are closed for now and Priority Placement Program status has been rescinded until the contract picture is clearer. Resumix support within the directorate is still available and there are two more retirement classes scheduled. The next retirement class is June 11-12 and the other will be in July.

Post officials are working with TRADOC to minimize the disruption of services and ensure a smooth transition when the contract does go into effect, Torres said.

Internet: Opens doors

isn't all that easy.

"The problem is that we don't necessarily know who the enemy is. It could be the guy next door or somebody from a hostile country. It's a virtual war," he said. "You can launch an attack on a system or series of systems from anywhere in the world if you have connection access to them."

Providing cyberterrorist a connection can be as easy as surfing the wrong Internet sites, Yates said

"One of the big issues we are facing now is what Internet sites do we really need to go to," he said. "You'd be amazed at how many requirements that this installation has to do business that requires us to go to the outside world, outside DoD.

"If you are surfing into commercial sites, generally speaking they are managed as a business. You won't have a whole lot of problems," Yates said. "However, there are sites where you might be surfing for your favorite music or something, but it could be a site where you download a piece of code that could start a virus or an attack on the system."

As a result, different solutions have been discussed on how to keep Fort Benning safe from computer attacks.

"One of the solutions that was discussed at higher levels is that we could lock down all commercial sites. The problem is, when you start locking down all of those sites, you have system access issues," he said.

"We are also looking at blocking additional sites. We've already been doing that to some degree for a longtime," he added.

To aid in maintaining a secure network, post computer users just need to follow common sense rules, Yates said.

"Be aware of what is going on around you. If you are surfing the Web and see something that just doesn't look right, let your system security people know," he said.

Yates also suggested not using commercial e-mail accounts over the post network.

He said minimizing Internet use has also helped protect the post network, but there is still more work to go.

"Be patient, understand what the mission of our network is to support Fort Benning. It's not to give everyone access to Hotmail and Yahoo, our business is to do military business," he said. "What is a perk and what is mandatory is a tough subject for us right now. In the outside world, surfing for personal reasons can be grounds for disciplinary action. That is not our position right now, but it is my guess that it may be at some time in the future."

Three-day event tests soldier skills

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, participated in the Pioneer Challenge Monday through Wednesday.

Since it's induction in 1998, the Pioneer Challenge has been a semiannual event modeled after Germany's Individual Stakes Competition held annually.

Composed of nine-man teams from each of the battalion's companies, the three-day competition pushes soldiers to the limit and encourages cohesion and esprit de corps between teams, said Staff Sgt. Reginald Poissant, battalion training NCO.

Soldiers competing in the challenge push themselves to complete events including: the Army Physical Fitness Test, day and night land navigation, pugil stick bouts, road marches, weapons qualification and combat vehicle identification.

The teams are often limited on the amount of time they can spend preparing for the event because of their busy schedules, Poissant said.

Many team members are instructors for classes taught here.

"It's very hard for us to come up with training time, so many of these guys train on their own time," said Staff Sgt. Donnie Bobo, battalion schools NCO.

"We trained for about a month," said Sgt. Chance Corbitt, C Company.

"We did extensive road marches, running and weapons training to prepare. We trained really, really hard."

Corbitt said he wanted his team to win the challenge because of "company pride," and "bragging rights."

Teammate Spc. Kevin Baker said his strategy for winning the event is to "see how good they're doing, and do it better."

Every team is required to have two Combat Life-Saver bags and one CLS qualified soldier, and two alternate soldiers to rotate in the event a soldier is unable to complete the competition.

"We tried to centrally locate everything around the battalion area for safety reasons," Poissant said.

Safety dictated much of how Pioneer Challenge was set up this year.

During each event, trucks followed soldiers with ample amounts of water as well as water points being set up along each road march route to help prevent heat casualties.

The event was also built to include leadership challenges, Poissant said.

Poissant said the soldiers want to win the competition badly, making it one of the most sought after competitions in.

The winners of the challenge will receive Army Achievement Medals, a trophy with their squad's names on it, and of course, bragging rights. The remainder of the participants will each receive certificates of achievement.

"I'm really proud of the guys that have made it all the way through the challenge," said Sgt. Glenn Penner, B Company. "This brings a head to the fact we're so tasked out and don't get a chance to (train)."

> "I've learned you got to suck it up and drive on. Prepare and be ready to face the unexpected because it does happen."

Penner said he is going to push his team next year to begin preparing for the Pioneer Challenge earlier than he did this year with working on identifying combat vehicles and more weapons training.

Pvt. Justin Witte, B Co., said that even though he felt there wasn't enough time to prepare for the challenge that his team was doing an excellent job.

"I've learned you got to suck it up and drive on," he said. "Prepare and be ready to face the unexpected because it does happen."

Witte said that he plans to spend more time preparing for the tasks involved in the competition with more focus on the APFT and road marches.

The squad from C Co. won the challenge with more than 1,900 out of 2,300 points.

BCTB welcomes new commander

Cole takes command of brigade

Sally Shutt
Bayonet correspondent

Fort Benning's "youngest" brigade and thousands of the Army's newest soldiers welcomed a new commander Tuesday morning at Sand Hill.

Col. Thomas Cole took command of the Basic Combat Training Brigade during a change of command ceremony at Pomeroy Field.

Col. Nolen Bivens, the outgoing commander, moves to the Pentagon where he will be the chief of the Support Agency Reform and Assessment Division, Joint Staff J-8 (Force Structure, Resources and Assessment.)

Bivens was the first commander of the "Cold Steel" brigade, which was activated in January 1999 and trained 26,000 soldiers during his command. With three battalions and 14 companies, the brigade trains soldiers in basic combat skills for nine weeks before sending them to advanced individual training.

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, commanding general, commended Bivens for building the brigade from the ground up and maintaining a 93 percent graduation rate.

"The Basic Combat Training Brigade instills a special sense of the warrior ethos and reflects Colonel Bivens' personal philosophy," Le Moyne said. "In his quiet, very calm, but very focused way, this professional soldier never loses sight of the fact that he is transforming America's sons into soldiers who swear an oath to give their lives, if needed, for our way of life."

In his farewell address, Bivens said he wanted to give God the glory, recognize the contributions of others and thank his family and loved ones for their sacrifices.

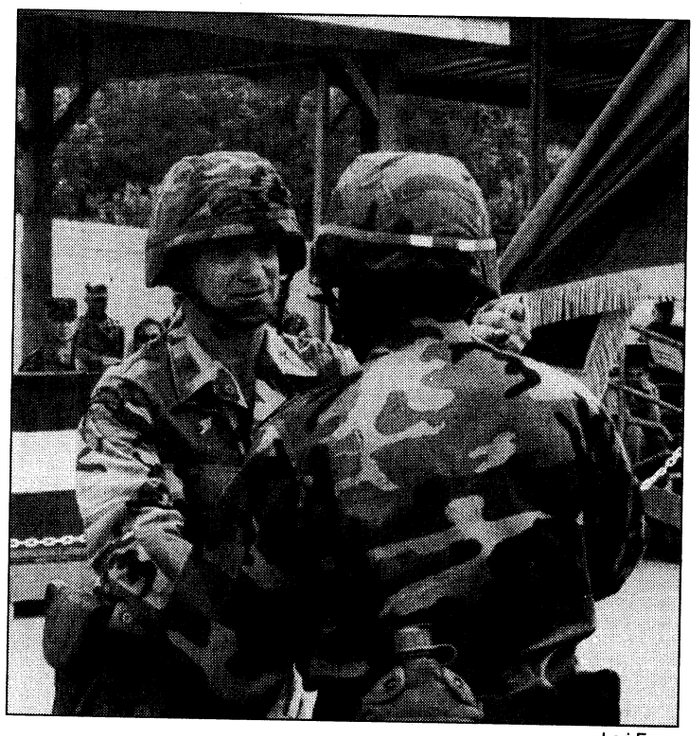
The former commander quoted a recent basic training graduate who wrote Bivens expressing his gratitude to the brigade and especially his drill sergeant for training him to standard: "Fort Benning has done more for me than any other experience in my life. The Army has given me a sense of confidence I have never found anywhere else. I just wanted to say thank you for making me a soldier."

After recognizing the soldiers, NCOs, drill sergeants and officers of the brigade, Bivens thanked his wife, Pamela, and children, Maranatha, Christopher and Victoria.

"We are so very proud to have been a part of something bigger than ourselves, serving with you in the Army," Bivens said.

Before taking command, Cole was the deputy director of the Combined Arms MOUT Task Force at Fort Benning.

"I am very honored and proud to become the newest member of this brigade," Cole said.



"I pledge that I will always lead from the front and never, ever let my comrades down. Let everyone hear me say that the drill sergeant is the man and will be the man as long as I am in charge."

A native of Richmond, Va., Cole earned his commission in the infantry from the Virginia Military Institute in 1977.

Cole commanded 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt., Fort Lewis, Wash., and 1st Bn., 501st Parachute Infantry Regt., Fort Richardson, Alaska. He also commanded Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C.; C Co., 2nd Bn., 505th Parachute Inf. Regt., Fort Bragg; and A Co., 1st Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., Hunter Army Airfield.

His awards and decorations include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Joint Service Commendation Medal, Meritorious Service Medal (4th Oak Leaf Cluster) and Combat Infantryman's Badge.

Cole and his wife, Catherine, have one son, Andrew.

Field artillery battalion receives new commander

Herold takes on new role as deputy CoS

Spc. Mark Watson

Soldiers of 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery bid farewell to Lt. Col. Ernest Herold III as he relinquished command to Lt. Col. John Harding Jr. May 18 on Essebagger Field.

Herold will stay at Fort Benning as he becomes the post deputy chief of staff.

During the ceremony, Herold said his command was a memorable one.

"While it has been fast and furious it has never been dull," Herold said. "The whole time has been busy, but I wouldn't have had it any other way. In the middle of it all, I had to undergo back surgery and recovery with thoughts that it may cost me command. Instead I've had the best of support from above and below that anyone could ask for."

Herold left command shortly before the 10th Field Artillery left for the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif. He said although he won't be there physically, he would be thinking of them.

"I'll be on the high ground in spirit," he said. "The three years we've spent here at Fort Benning have been the most memorable of my career."

Herold is married to Catherine and has two sons, Christopher and Patrick.

In his speech, Harding said he is proud to be the newest member of 3rd Brigade.

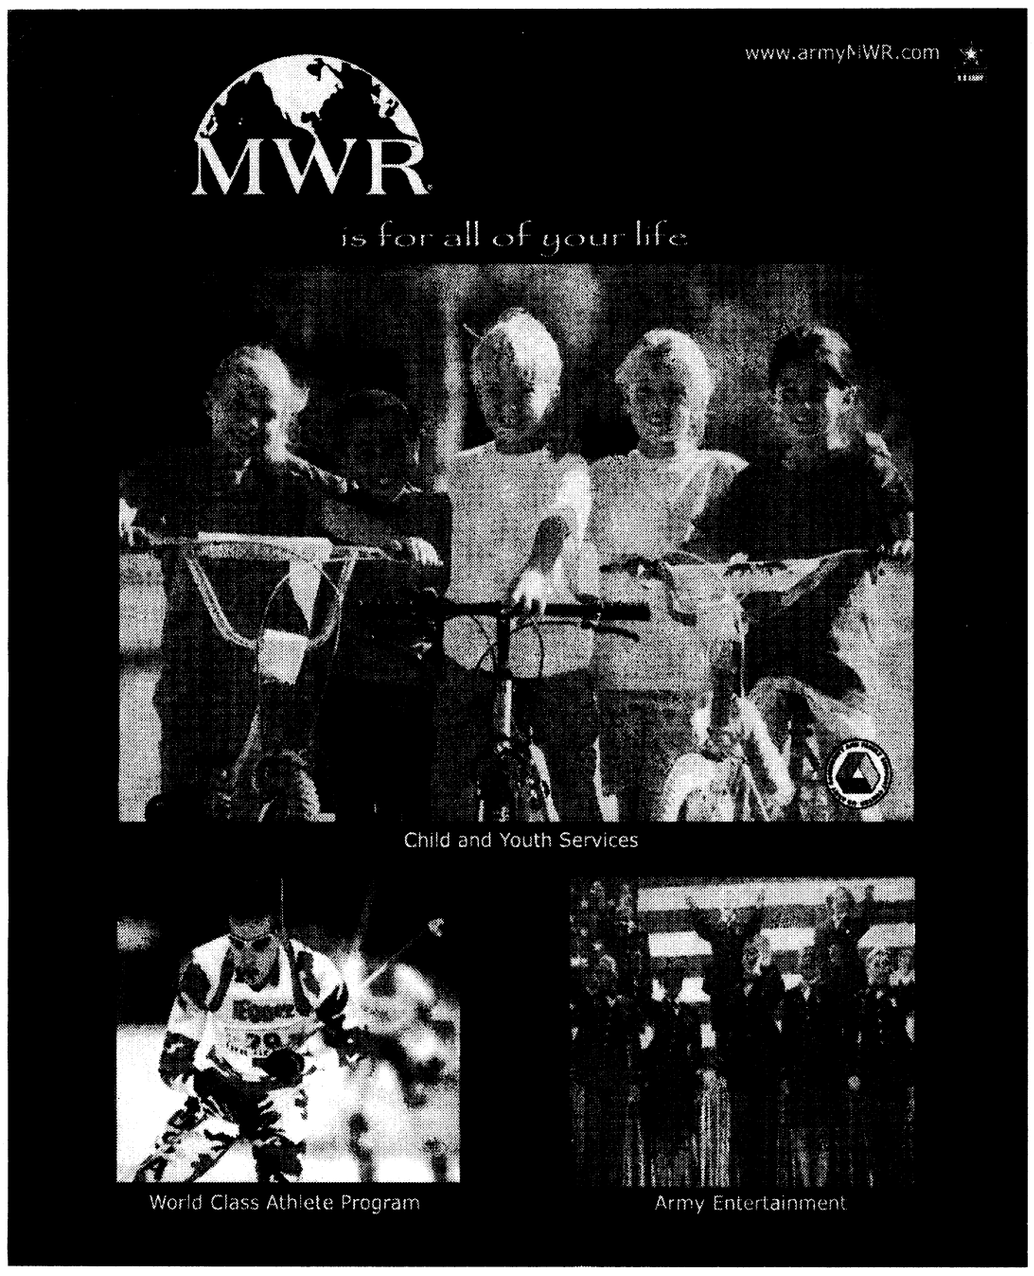
"I am honored to be back in the Marne division," Harding said.

He said he is looking forward to lead his newly acquired soldiers.

"I promise to train you for combat and lead you when we get there," he said.

Harding is a graduate of Norwich University and was commissioned in 1983.

His military education includes the Field Artillery Office Basic and Advance Courses, the Combined Arms Service Staff School and the Command and General Staff College.



He comes to 3rd Brigade from Alexandria, Va., where he served as the Chief of Operational Support in the Defense Threat Reduction Agency.

His awards and decorations include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, the Meritorious Service Medal (five awards), Army Commendation Medal (three awards), Army Achievement Medal, the Joint Meritorious Unit Award and the Airborne Badge.

Panel: Listens to soldiers and offers recommendations

and leadership skills because of a shortage of captains.

• The latest Officer Efficiency Report is yet to be accepted.

The management of the senior rater profile is a major issue discussed.

There is a belief that an above-center-of-mass perfor-mance does not always equal the same rating on the evaluation.

• The Army's commitment to well-being, family and personal time, health care, housing and retirement benefit expectations are not being fully met.

• Decisions to make the Army their career are strongly influenced by pride in the Army and its service to the nation. Spouses strongly echoed this position.

• Junior officers discussed concerns about job satisfaction, unmet leadership development opportunities and an imbalance between the needs of the Army and the needs of family.

• For more senior officers, concerns centered on the OER, the Command and General Staff Officer College selection board and a sense of being valued.

Panel recommendations

The panel used the results of field surveys, one-on-one interviews, focus groups and detailed research of other data sources in developing conclusions and recom-mendations.

The panel viewed seven recommendations as imperatives.

These were:

Army culture — recognize the strong relationship between Army culture and the quality of our training and leader development programs.

Army culture (job satisfaction, expectations, shared commitment, micro-management) must operate routinely within an acceptable "band of tolerance" for the Army to effectively train soldiers and grow leaders.

Officer Education System — adapt the system to meet the needs of the transforming Army and the realities of the operational environment.

Training — revitalize the Army training system by updating training doctrine, improving home station training, and modernizing the combat training centers.

Systems approach to training — recommit to standards-based training. Standards are the basis for developing training, assessing performance and providing feedback.

Training and leader development model — adopt a model that clearly shows how training and leader development are linked.

The new model must effectively communicate intent and be understood by junior leaders, staffs, and outside agencies.

The product of the model should be self-aware, adaptive leaders, and trained and ready units.

Management process — implement a management process to change training and leader development.

This management process must be iterative, collaborative and comprehensive.

It must provide a recurring forum for senior leaders to measure progress, adjust priorities and apply resources.

Lifelong learning — commit our leaders to lifelong learning through a balance of educational and operational experiences, complemented by self-development.

To be a learning organization that supports lifelong learning, the Army must provide training and educational standards and products.

It must also provide a doctrine that fosters lifelong learning; and, a digital "Warrior Knowledge Network" to provide one-stop information access for soldiers, leaders and units.

Summer heat sends swimmers to pools

Post pools to open this weekend

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

It's not the tan she's after.

Red Cross water safety instructor Vivian Pedrozo will be returning to the Officers' Club outdoor pool to teach swimming lessons to local children this summer. Fort Benning pools, with the exception of Youth Services' pool, open this weekend for the summer swim season.

While Pedrozo originally learned how to swim from her mother, she'll be teaching others by the book. It's a task she looks forward to she said, especially after her rewarding experiences last summer.

"There was one little girl in particular who was terrified to get in the water," Pedrozo remembered. "I just decided to pursue that and make sure she knew how to swim."

It's a job she practices throughout the year. Pedrozo said she spends the rest of the seasons polishing her skills at Briant Wells indoor pool, while swimming laps and working out. This past spring though, Pedrozo said she has been eager to help more children.

"The kids are so cute," she said. "I see them around and even though they don't always recognize me, I remember them. I can't forget their smiling faces."

Four swim sessions will be taught at the Officers' Club this year, each lasting two weeks. Eight to 10 students will be allowed per class. Sessions will range from Mom and Tot to Level 5.

Tim Cole, Officers' Club pool manager, said he expects to have ## Children thank contractors for work

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Dexter Elementary students thanked the people responsible for the school's brighter hallways and faster Internet connections Monday afternoon when they invited the architects, electricians, plumbers and construction workers along with the school's groundskeepers and custodians to an open house.

Student ambassadors showed the guests of honor the school and explained how the students use the renovated facility. After the tour, the guests were taken to the multipurpose room where fourth- and fifth-graders in the sign language club signed two songs and then student representatives from all of the grades demonstrated cup stacking.

Local children watch rangers in action demonstration

Students take class outside, learn about Army at show

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Preceding every U.S. Army Ranger School graduation, ranger instructors perform rangers in action, a demonstration of skills and training rangers go through.

Several special education students from South Columbus Elementary School in Columbus took the time to visit Hurley Hill May 18.

They observed the show as part of their studies about the Army and its functions.

After the show, the students ate MREs and got their faces camouflaged by Pfc. Ron Cameron, 4th Ranger Training Battalion and 1st Sgt. Cristopher Kibler.

"(I'm here to) help out the little kids," said Kibler. "It's a good thing, and this is a big recruiting tool for the rangers."

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

Often, the number one problem for avid gardeners is available space. Gardeners realize that there are several more plants they just have to have in their plot but don't have the space for them.

A simple solution is often overlooked. Container gardens can be as lush and beautiful as a garden bed. When choosing container plants remember to think about depth and height. Use several different combinations and colors to create depth.

Remember to choose a tall plant to give the container a vertical lift like salvia. Then choose a bushy plant to surround the taller plants.

There are many popular trailing plants to use on the edge of the pots to hide the container. Try to pack in the overall number of plants to make the container full.

Don't be concerned about choosing a pretty container. Choices for containers are endless. Look around the house for objects to grow plants in before running to buy a traditional pot.

Cracked mop buckets, old containers of laundry detergent, and empty toy bins are a great way to start.

Moisture can often be a problem when planting in containers. Because pots are not protected by the coolness of the ground and because they are packed tight with plants they tend to dry out more frequently. One way to help with the lack of moisture is to choose a light soil mix with plenty of peat moss.

The peat moss will help hold in moisture. Many gardeners are also using a new tool, silica gel. Silica gel can be purchased in the nursery section or in the craft section.

By incorporating a small amount of silica into the mix a container is able to hold more moisture for longer periods of time.

Remember to add bone meal for continual flower production all season. Check the soil for moisture every day during the blazing heat of summer.

ask the judge

Carolyn Moller
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am a new commander on this installation, and lately I have observed personnel from various insurance companies attempting to solicit business from soldiers and their family members that live on post. Is this allowed? Is there anything I should warn and or advise my soldiers of prior to their purchasing insurance from these people?

A: Solicitation of this nature is allowed to a certain extent. However, it is subject to the regulations set forth in Public Affairs Directive 1344.7 on Personnel Commercial Solicitation on DoD installations.

As such, certain practices are strictly prohibited, and violations should be reported to appropriate authorities. First and foremost, no sales agent should have, nor should they provide, allotment forms for the soldier to complete should the soldier decide to purchase insurance or any related insurance product. In the event a soldier decides to purchase insurance from the agent, the soldier will have to go through Finance to obtain the necessary forms to start an allotment should they decide to use this method of payment.

All solicitations of this nature shall be conducted with the soldier pursuant to a prearranged appointment date and time. Door to door sales of this nature are strictly prohibited.

Also, use of military identification cards to gain access to DoD installations for the purpose of sales solicitations by retirees, reserve members and or active duty personnel is prohibited. Nor may the sales agent use their military identification card to gain access to unauthorized or restricted areas to make a sales pitch. Further, insurance agents cannot give the appearance that their sales solicitation is endorsed or sponsored by the post installation or the Department of Defense.

Solicitation of recruits, trainees and transient personnel in "mass" or in "captive" audiences is strictly prohibited. Further, insurance agents may not participate in any military sponsored insurance education program or orientation in order to make a sales pitch.

Note, senior ranking personnel may not make sales solicitations to junior grades and ranks, nor may DoD personnel act as sales agents for this type of commercial solicitations. Finally, use of daily bulletins or other such official or unofficial notices is prohibited and may not be used to advertise such commercial sales solicitations.

Finally, use of misleading, deceptive or fraudulent advertising or literature to make a sales solicitation is prohibited. This prohibition also includes the use of deceptive schemes or devices to make a sale.

Remember, no person has the authority to enter an installation to transact commercial business as a matter of right. This is a privilege, not a right, that may be revoked at any given time, especially if the perimeters set forth in this Directive are ignored or abused. Violations of this Directive should be reported to the appropriate authority.

Prior to making a substantial commitment to purchase insurance, or any related insurance product or investment from these sales agents, soldiers and their family members should seek counsel from unrelated sources to determine the validity of the solicitation. A good starting place for this type of information is your local Legal Assistance Office.

If you need more information on this topic, call the Legal Assistance Office to make an appointment. The telephone numbers are 545-3282 or 545-3281, or come by Building 5 on Friday mornings to make an appointment for the following week.

Mutual funds offer diversification

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This is the fifth story of a seven-part series, which takes a look at the basics of investing.

Reading the previous story in this series may have made some readers want to invest in stocks. Unfortunately, they may not have the money to buy the recommended minimum of 100 shares.

What many do instead is team up with a large group of investors who share similar objectives in a vehicle called a mutual fund.

When investors own a mutual fund, they own a small slice of a large pool of stocks, bonds or other investments that is managed by an investment professional. Some of the more than 10,000 funds pay dividends; some do not and rely mainly on growth in the fund's value.

Soldiers should take advantage of the inherent diversification of mutual funds, said Jason Dickinson, registered representative and agent, United Services Planning Association and Independent Research Agency for life insurance.

"Mutual funds are absolutely the best way to get hooked on the idea of investing," he said.

He emphasized the fact some mutual fund companies allow a soldier to invest (systematically, every month) for as little as $25 to $50 per month.

Another term for systematic investing is dollar cost averaging. Soldiers can accumulate great wealth by using it, Frank McCanham said, Chartered Life Underwriter and Chartered Financial Consultant at Financial and Asset Management in Columbus.

When the price of a fund is down, one buys more shares. When the price is up, one buys less shares. This lowers the average cost per share and increases profits in the long run.

"What happens is the miracle of mathematics," Dickinson said. "It helps an investor beat the market without even trying."

If an investor bought $2,000 worth of shares at $6 per share, they would own only 333.33 shares. If they dollar-cost averaged into the fund, given the hypothetical monthly prices, they would own 456.6 shares.

More shares equal more money over time.

Furthermore, when making monthly investments, individuals can purchase fractional shares.

For example, a soldier invests $100 per month. For a given month, the price of their mutual fund is $15. They buy 6.6666 shares. There are no fractional shares with individual stocks.

"We all know that the true relation to how much a person can make in the market is not how much they contribute but the time the money is allowed to compound and the discipline to leave it in when the road appears to be rough," Dickinson said.

Given that, he said buying a mutual fund is the most advantageous plan a novice investor can make because it takes very little knowledge to start. They can pay great dividends for a long term investor — especially if contributing to an IRA.

There tends to be a positive correlation between risk and reward. The more risk one takes, the more return one may receive.

"You should invest in aggressive type funds if you are under age 40," Dickinson said. "Time is on your side. Should you make a poor decision somewhere, then you still have 25 years before true retirement."

However, he said there are several tests — on the Internet or through a mutual fund company — that can evaluate a soldier's knowledge and help him make an informed decision on what type of fund for which to look.

Once ready to invest, look for, "a professional with integrity. The big name, a bank or your buddy are not always the best people to have invest your money.

Look for a person who is knowledgeable and cares about what happens to your money just as much as he cares about his million-dollar client." Dickinson said.

Soldiers should avoid putting all of their eggs in one basket.

"Your granddad was right, be diversified," Dickinson said.

Start with a small amount of money and, as one's comfort level increases, increase the outlay, he said. Investors should also increase expenditures with promotions and pay increases.

"Pay yourself first," Dickinson advised.

When investing in mutual funds, one can invest in load funds and no load funds.

A front-end load fund has a fee investors pay, usually 5 percent, every time they buy new shares.

After investors pay the fee, they can sell their shares and invest in another fund within the company's family of funds without a fee on the initial shares owned.

A back-end load fund has a fee for a set amount of time that decreases as years pass. For instance, the fund could have a 5 percent fee to sell the first year, 4 percent the second, 3 percent the third and so on.

No-load funds have no front-end or back-end load. Investors familiar with the market use them to increase their bottom line.

Most brokers sell load funds.

"Having an advisor who hold your hand when you're not familiar with the market can benefit an investor," McCanham said. "I'd discourage an investor from investing in a front-end load fund. It can take time to recover the fee."

"The best type of advisor is a fee-only planner who will charge you a flat fee to assess your situation and give you recommendations on types of funds at which you should look," said Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program.

Investors can obtain names of solid no-load companies from FRP. Some require an initial investment (amounts vary) then allow a smaller monthly investment.

"A company that requires a bank draft is not a good idea," Pratcher said.

McCanham said investors should be aware of numerous aspects of mutual funds, such as:

• The objective. Find out if the fund is geared toward growth, growth and income, income, etc. Does it invest in large capitalization (large cap) companies, middle cap or low cap. A company's size determines the cap.

• Its sales and operating charges. Some funds have higher charges than others. This takes into account loads, management fees and other fees.

• Its performance. Past performance does not guarantee future results, but it gives you an idea of the direction the fund might head.

• The contents of its prospectus. It tells investors everything they need to know about the fund, from its top holding to its management fees.

• Its Morningstar or Value Line ratings. These can be found at libraries.

• Who is the manager. Some funds have managers who have not managed the portfolio very long. One should have at least two or three years under his belt. When the manager changes, the fund changes.

• The sectors in which it invests. Younger investors should consider a fund that has 25-35 percent of its assets within the aggressive arena such as in technology and bio-technology companies.

"These have radical ups and downs, but long term, they've been real good performers," McCanham said.

Older soldiers should consider having a portion of their portfolio in tax-advantaged municipal bond funds. They should look for general obligation bond funds which the municipality guarantees, not project funds, such as those meant to raise capital for bridges. However, water and sewer bonds are often secured.

Soldiers can direct questions about the above information, or any other topic covered in this series, by calling 545-5485.

Pools: Offer cool relief from Georgia heat, humidity

more than 700 lesson slots available this year. Local records of training will be issued upon successful completion of the program and Red Cross certificates are available for an extra $5. Classes start June 11, at a cost of $25 for members and $35 for nonmembers. Adult swim sessions are also available, Cole said.

The popularity of aquatic programs has kept an interest in swimming yearlong, said Nancy Hadley, swim director at Briant Wells Field House.

Hadley has been certified as a water safety instructor and lifeguard instructor for 15 years.. She has witnessed several facility renovations along the years, which will soon include the post indoor pool. Briant Wells will be renovated this summer, including work to the ceiling and lighting system.

She's also seen the evolution of swim programs on post. It's the increasing attraction of swimming that is impressive, she said.

"Fort Benning has more aquatic programs now than we ever did. People really use swimming as a lifestyle change and have been utilizing swimming as an alternate exercise," Hadley said.

There are various water activities including water aerobic classes and senior swim programs. These activities will shift to the Carey Outdoor Pool during the summer duration, if enough interest is generated through registration.

Cole expects another banner swim season, with thousands of swimmers each week.

Two to three hundred people flock to the water each day, he said.

Pool passes are available to the Officers' Club pool as space permits for all authorized MWR patrons. Season passes are $150 for families and $120 for singles. Daily passes are also available for $3 a person.

Students: Thank workers for school renovation

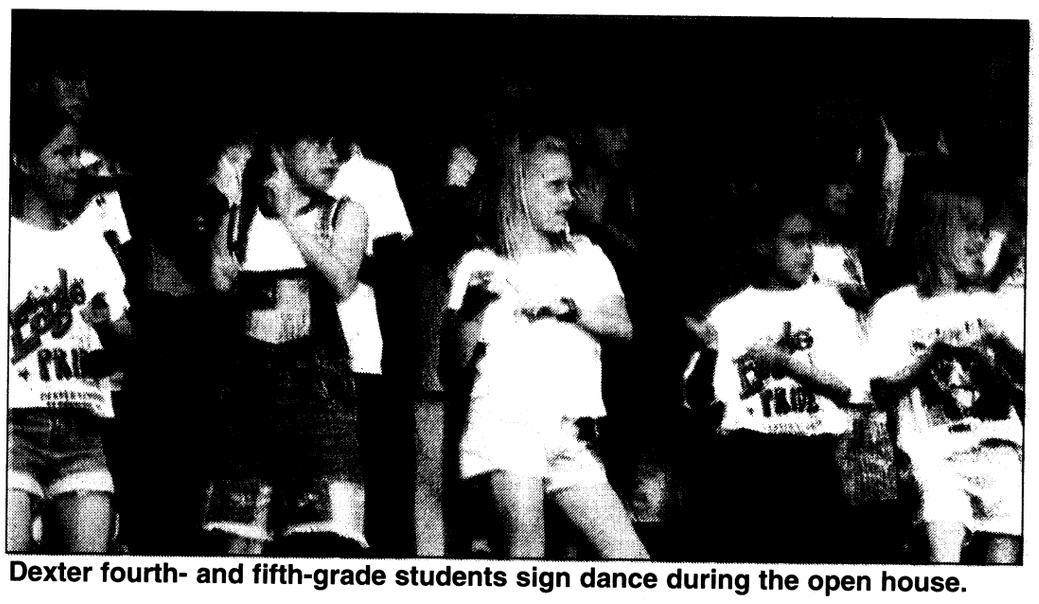
Koon, Dexter's physical education, told the group.

Kindergarten teacher Ann Horn has taught at Dexter since 1969.



She said when she was first told about the renovation she was less than enthusiastic about the prospect of moving into the modular buildings that became the "outback village," but the Dexter family made the modular buildings home.

"I spent more than 30 years in Room 11 and I was told to pack up and move into a trailer. I was used to the termite patterns in the windowsill.

"I filled three dumpsters with stuff from the closet during the move," Horn said.

After a year in them she wasn't excited about moving back into the building.

"We created the cutest little neighborhoods and it was a wonderful experience and I wasn't sure I wanted to move back in to the building," Horn said. "But this is a beautiful new building with bright paint and new carpet and I thank you for your work."

Dexter fourth- and fifth-grade students sign dance during the open house.

Mike Chaney, a facilities engineer with Department of Defense Domestic Dependent Elementary and Secondary Schools, said the building had a sense of staleness because of its age and no ability to move air through the building.

In the process of the renovation and bringing the building up to code money was saved because of paneling that was installed in the hallways instead of tiling.

"It is cheaper than tiling, we saved 50 percent on the installation and it is more durable and washable," Chaney said.

"I like the way the school is uses the hallways to display the children's work."

Rangers: Teach students about Army

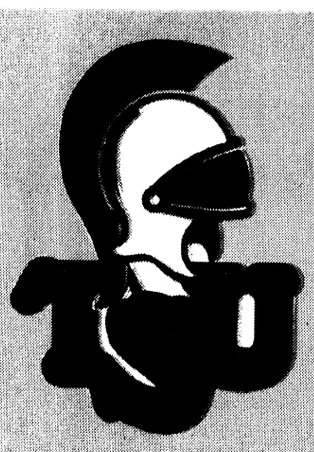
said she brought the children out to expand their horizons and hopefully have them realize being in the Army is an attainable goal for them.

While many groups watch rangers in action, this was a rare opportunity for the group.

Most importantly, Tanner said, is for the children to realize their own potentials.

"(The Army) could be a career choice for them," Tanner said. "It is something they could do, even though they are special education."

Derious Alexeander, an 11-year-old fifth-grade student from South Columbus, said he enjoyed watching rangers in action.



"It was good," he said. "I really liked when the soldier slid down the rope."

Alexeander's classmate, Desmond Monigan, agreed with him about the show, saying that he liked most "When the two men were fighting," and when the helicopter lifted several rangers from the forest.

Many of the children said they enjoyed spending their day watching the rangers and eating the staple of many soldiers diets while in the field.

"Thank you for letting us come and I enjoyed your presentation," Monigan said.

Family time brings back memories

Chaplain (Capt.) Christian Biscotti
1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment

Take a walk by yourself today, get away from the crowds, the celebrations and the ceremonies just for awhile, and listen to history, as she takes you by the hand, and with her voice filled with patriotism and emotion, she says, "Follow Me!"

Just recently, we had our first family reunion, held in southern California, where we grew up. It was the first time my wife and two girls (both under the age of 3), met my brother and his wife and their two boys and one girl. Our eldest brother flew in from Arizona, my mom made a magnificent Easter Sunday meal, and we all got reacquainted and rekindled the deep love and admiration we have for one another. One of the main highlights, however, was talking about Dad, who died in 1988 and left us all heartbroken. The last time we were all together was at his funeral.

I always learn more about Dad, when we get together. This time I learned he fought in the Battles for the Philippines in WWII, while serving in the Army from 1942-1945. His three brothers, Uncle Joey, Uncle Al and Uncle Red, all served in the Pacific Theatre. Joey and Red previously had stormed the beaches at Normandy. All four brothers survived and came home to start their own families and share a part of the American Dream.

Thus, this year Memorial Day has become immensely more personal and real to me. I am now searching for Dad's old unit and longing to find out all that I can about what he did, his awards, his unit, his experiences, his story.

My dad died nine years before I joined the Army, never knowing that his son followed in his footsteps.

As I am beginning my search, I desire to walk where my dad walked, to relive some of his experiences, to smell what he smelled and what he felt. In doing so, I feel closer to him and I feel a part of his story and a part of history, and I feel a part of America.

Memorial Day should be just like this — a time to relive and remember what our brothers and sisters, fathers and grandfathers, friends and relatives did for you and for me.

Memorial Day is like one big family reunion, where we all get together to celebrate the lives we now live because of the lives that were lived and given before us.

It is a day of thanksgiving and a day of mourning — filled with tears of joy and tears of sadness. It is a day where history grabs us by the hand and looks us in the face and says, "Follow Me," "Remember Me" and whatever you do, "Don't ever forget me!"

My wife and I set up a 12-foot, above ground, 30-inch deep, big, blue and wonderful swimming pool. Abbeygale, our 2-and-a-half-year-old, loves the water!

She sang and ran around with great jubilation as she watched her mother and me build her little paradise in the sun in Columbus. Her joy, laughter and youthfulness embodied what we either feel or should all feel living in America.

It is the feeling of freedom! Free to run, to play, to splash and to live!

There is a wall of protection around America, held together by fragile, priceless human hands, as strong as a steel chain, stretching more than 200 years. And that chain has never been broken.

Why? Because millions of Americans have chosen to never let go, to always fight, to nurture the living, to care for the wounded and to honor the dead.

Today, we honor you and everyone who paid for our freedom and wrote our glorious history with their blood.

Words can wound, heal others

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Words can harm, and words can heal. The old rhyme, "Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never hurt me," is a lie.

Words can hurt. Words can wound. Words can kill a person's reputation.

They can assassinate the character of a person. Lying, half-truths, rumor and innuendo all work to put others down or to blame others.

We speak them so that we can avoid the consequences of our own actions or to make ourselves look better in the eyes of others.

The truth is, those who speak these things in the long run deceive and destroy themselves.

Coarse jesting is not a joke. The effects of the coarse jesting embarrass the person who is the brunt of the joke and wound their spirits.

To absolve ourselves of our foolishness, we say, "I was just kidding," or "Can't you take a joke?"

Yet, the harm has already been done, and the relationship has been weakened. Racial, ethnic, sexual and gender jokes fall into this category for they demean and denigrate others. These "jokes" are not to be tolerated.

Verbal slurs and name calling insult and disparage others.

They vent our anger and frustration, but only make things worse.

Instead of making things better they serve to further divide us and to build walls between us. Words can also encourage, nurture and heal. Words can brighten our day and put a smile on our face. Words can bring forgiveness and restore relationships.

The choice is yours.

Do you need help with learning to communicate without hurtful words?

Post softball takes off with wild pitch

Sluggers prepare for season

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

While the Fort Benning softball season is not yet in full swing, practice sessions, scrimmages and small tournaments around post have teams honing their skills in anticipation.

For softball players from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, weekly scrimmages provide team synergy, while quenching the team's competitive thirst until the season officially kicks off June 4.

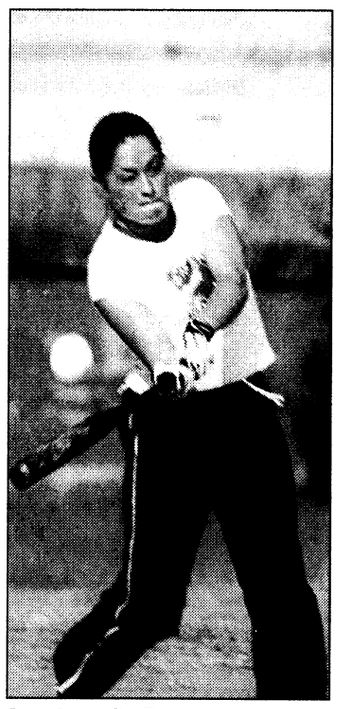
Weekly games between the Institute's Headquarters and Headquarters Company and the Command and General Staff Officer Course instructors have been the testing grounds, said Julio Battistini, HHC coach and pitcher.

"It lets us know what we have to work with. Having ability is one thing, being able to put it all together is another," Battistini said.

"The scrimmage is important because it gives me an idea of how my players perform under pressure. For the most part, they seem to step up their game," Battistini said.

Both teams will compete separately when the season begins, so the scrimmages give both teams an edge going into the regular season.

"Before we've gotten close (to winning the post championship), but we beat ourselves with silly errors. This year it's going to be different. We're going to beat the rangers this year," Battistini said.



Aside from the scrimmages, vying for positions has teammates squaring off, displaying cannon-fired throws from the outfield, acrobatic double plays by the infield and power hitting at the plate.

"Aggressiveness, quick thinking and the ability to formulate a mental picture of what they're going to do if the ball is hit to a certain part of the field are the tools I look for in selecting my infield," said Jose Carbone, CGSOC, assistant coach and shortstop.

"Outfielders, without a doubt, must have speed to charge the ball and make accurate throws to the cut-off man or base if possible, but most importantly, they must learn to back each other up," Battistini said.

Communication in the outfield is crucial. Players must consistently talk to avoid collisions and costly errors, Battistini said.

"The outfield is very competitive, because there is a new player gunning for a position every day," said Ronald Franks.

Martha C. Placios drives the ball past the infield.

Franks, who is the right fielder, said that his position is locked.

Player participation at practice has increased weekly, since the team first gathered, said Battistini.

"We're lucky to have such a big turnout of players this year. The practices and games bring a lot of cohesiveness … and that's good on and off the field," Battistini said.

USAMU shooters leave for CISM finals in Finland

Paula J. Randall Pagàn
USAMU Public Affairs

Sixteen military shooters have won slots on the 2001 U.S. Conseil International du Sport Militaire Shooting Team, which will leave July 11 to compete at the CISM Shooting Championships in Lahti, Finland.

CISM, the World Military Shooting Championships, consists of men's and women's rifle and pistol competitions and will be conducted July 12 - 21.

Approximately 50 countries are expected to send about 650 shooters to compete for the World Military Shooting Championship Trophy.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit hosted the U.S. CISM Rifle Team Selection Matches April 12 - 14 and the U.S. CISM Pistol Team Selection Matches April 27 - 29.

The U.S. CISM Shooting Team is made up of five male and three female rifle shooters and five male and three female pistol shooters.

The CISM male rifle shooters are USAMU international rifle shooters Maj. Stephen C. Goff, Capt. Glenn A. Dubis, Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas, Sgt. Jason A. Parker and Spc. Shane M. Barnhart and the CISM female rifle shooters are Spc. Mary K. Elsass and Spc. Karyn E. Manges of USAMU, along with U.S. Navy Midshipman Marta Jung.

The men's CISM Pistol Team is made up of U.S. Army Reservist Lt. Col. Terry M. Anderson and USAMU's Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski, Staff Sgt. Eric G. Daniels, Staff Sgt. Carl W. Trompeter and Spc. Grant E. Saylor.

The men's pistol team will shoot in the Center Fire and Military Rapid Fire Championships.

On the women's CISM Pistol Team are U.S. Army Reservist Maj. Rhonda L. Bright, U.S. Marine Chief Warrant Officer Roxane Conrad and Navy Reservist Petty Officer 3rd Class Sandra Uptagrafft.

They will compete in the Sport Pistol Championships, shooting .22-caliber pistols at targets 25 meters away.

Accompanying the U.S. Shooting Team to Finland will be: USAMU Commander Col. Robert I. Hoidahl Jr., as the CISM chief of mission; USAMU gunsmith Sgt. 1st Class Charles P. Gartland as team captain; USAMU International Rifle Team Coach Richard N. Hawkins as CISM rifle coach; USAMU International Pistol Team Coach Frank Briggs as a member of the CISM Pistol Jury; and USAMU Chief of Competition Michael J. Behnke as a CISM 50-Meter Classification Jury member.

"We have the strongest team that we've fielded in several years," Behnke said. "Several of the services are well represented in this Department of Defense-wide Team."

Behnke said the strongest competition for the United States this year will come from Russia, Norway, Sweden, Finland, France and Switzerland.

Outdoor-Adventure Festival — Looking for something fun to do this summer? Mark your calendar for a new outdoor-adventure festival that is taking place this summer in Asheville, N.C.

Scheduled for June 1-3, the Mountain Sports Festival features a variety of outdoor sporting competitions as well as clinics and demonstrations.

Competitions during the festival include Biltmore Estate's 15K Run, the Blue Ridge Adventure's Dual Slalom and Cross Country Mountain Bike Races, Western North Carolina Disc Golf Club's Disc Golf Tournament, the Junior Competitive Climbers Association's Climbing Competition hosted by Climbmax and the Junior Olympics Track and Field Meet.

Festival hours are 3 to 5 p.m. June 1, 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. June 2, and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. June 3.

For more information, or if you are interested in becoming a volunteer or a vendor during the festival, call (828) 285-9935.

Post Golf Championship — The Fort Benning Post Golf Championship will be held June 2-3 at the Fort Benning Golf Club. Starting times will be assigned.

The championship is a 36-hole stroke play tournament, individual stroke play as well as four-man team competition. All skill levels are welcome; open to military and civilian.

For more information, call Sgt. Rob Brown at 545-6800.

The Infantry Conference 5K Race and Fun Run — The Infantry Conference 5K Race and Fun Run takes place June 13 at 6 a.m. at York Field, in front of Infantry Hall. Individual pre-registration costs $10 (includes T-shirt), a 15-runner "Super Squad" pre-registration is $100 and on-site registration is $5 (no T-shirt available). Pick up t-shirts in advance during the Infantry Conference.

There will be two top overall winners (male and female) and two top winners in each age bracket (male and female) and a "Super Squad" (group) first place winner.

If you want to run for fun, you can (no T-shirt, no award). Just show up and run. No entry fee, no registration. Military and civilian personnel are welcome.

For more information, call 545-5504 or stop by the S-3, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, IOBC, Building 76.

Major league baseball scouting — The Columbus RedStixx will host the Major League Baseball Scouting Bureau as they conduct an open tryout 9 a.m. June 11 at Golden Park.

The tryout is open to players ages 16-25.

The event will be free, but participants must bring their own baseball equipment, including gloves and shoes. Bats and balls will be provided.

Participants must show proof of age and all American Legion players are asked to show permission from their coach or post commander.

The Major League Scouting Bureau is a department of Major League Baseball based out of Ontario, Canada.

Ranger Rendezvous fun run — There will be a 5K, 10K and 1-mile Fun Run July 23 for Ranger Rendezvous at Stewart Watson Field, across from Infantry Hall.

Race day registration begins at 6 a.m. and the race starts at 7 a.m.

Entry fee is $10 for pre-registration, $12 race day (T-shirts will be limited on race day). The one-mile Fun Run is free, but participants will not receive a T-shirt.

Prizes will be awarded to the top overall male and female finishers in the 5K and 10K and the top finisher in each 10K age group and for the first place finishers in their age group for the 5K.

Ribbons will be given to all 1-mile Fun Run participants, and a trophy to the top team in the 10K. Teams will consist of 10 runners in the 10K.

The 10K and 5K courses are generally flat throughout Main Post. The 1-mile Fun Run is on the one-mile track.

The 5K and 10K begin at 7 a.m. The 1-mile Fun Run begins at 8 a.m.

For more information, call Tom Spahr at 545-7157 or 545-6126 or e-mail him at spahrt@soc.mil.

All proceeds from the race will go to the Ranger Regiment Association to support the rangers' Army Ten-mile Team.

Archery club — The Fort Benning Archers are now accepting memberships to the archery club located on Aldridge Road.

The yearly memberships allow archers full use of the facilities including a key to the indoor range.

Membership costs are $15 for military, $35 for civilians and $45 for families.

For more information call Brian Dansby 221-6838 or A.S. Morgan 327-8375.

BASS Club — The BASS Club of Fort Benning is accepting applications for new members.

It is open to active duty military and their dependents 16 and older.

It is also open to retired military and Department of Defense civilians and their dependents 16 and older.

For more information, call 685-4975.

Youth Services gymnastics — Youth Services has received many inquiries regarding the gymnastics program over the past few months and would like to update the Fort Benning community as to its status.

The gymnastics program will be conducted at the existing YS facility Building 1056, on McIver Street, and is expected to begin in August.

A contract will be awarded to a reputable gymnastics company to provide experienced and knowledgeable instructors for the classes.

For more information, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

AREA MANAGER (Japan)

Experience Career Lift-Off!

For 50 years, SatoTravel has served the needs of the world's most demanding and discriminating travelers, including corporate America, the U.S. government, and all branches of the military. With approximately 1,000 staffed offices and automated ticketing locations worldwide, our billion-dollar organization seeks an Area Manager for the Asia/Pacific region.

Based in Japan, this professional will oversee the management & operation of assigned SatoTravel Military & Government locations under the direction of the Regional Operations Manager. Providing leadership & management to Branch Managers, this proven leader will ensure compliance with contract requirements and delivery of optimum customer service while meeting financial, quality and productivity goals.

Along with a Bachelor's Degree, the ideal candidate will live in Japan and have 5 years of travel agency experience, including 2 years in a management capacity. Background should include 1 year of financial management experience with direct responsibility for measuring, analyzing and controlling costs to meet fiscal & business objectives (including manpower planning, P&L and managing productivity factors). Knowledge of government travel regulations, contract procedures and military & government business practices essential. Airline or travel agency background and ability to travel will be vital.

Your valuable contribution will be rewarded with an attractive compensation and benefits package. Please forward resume in confidence to:

Local job agency to close

Army to close Southeast center here

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Acting on studies to improve human resource management, the Army will consolidate functions at the Southeast Region Civilian Personnel Operations Center at Fort Benning and the National Capital and Aberdeen Proving Grounds, Md.

The Southeast center at Fort Benning is scheduled to close March 31 after the NCR center at Fort Belvoir, Va., which is scheduled to close Sept. 30.

The moves will affect 368 employees between the two organizations, according to Elmer Williams, director of the Civilian Personnel Center Managing Agency at Aberdeen.

The Southeast CPOC will close and its the civilian personnel operations will be absorbed by the South Central CPOC in Huntsville, Ala., Williams said.

"Although we have been making steady improvements in performance and streamlining our operations, independent studies by the General Accounting Office and the U.S. Army Audit Agency recently recommended further consolidation of our centers to promote increased efficiencies," Williams said.

The Army moved from large garrison Civilian Personnel Offices to regional CPOCs and small garrison Civilian Personnel Advisory Centers in 1994.

There are currently seven CPOCs in the United States and three overseas.

With the need to consolidate identified by the independent studies, the NCR and Southeast centers were selected because the other regions were more efficient and customer satisfaction was higher than in these two regions, Williams explained. Against an Army average of 62 days, the NCR CPOC averaged 87 days to fill a civilian position vacancy, and the Southeast CPOC, 75 days, since last July.

"Part of the problem at the National Capital Region center has been a significant turnover of its workforce," Williams said. "In the previous two years, it has experienced a turnover rate of 27 percent, which, in this fiscal year, has escalated to 45 percent. It has become increasingly difficult to recruit and retain a quality staff there."

Congressional leaders were notified of the Army's consolidation intent May 30. Employees at the two centers were briefed this week.

"We expect to offer continuing employment to the employees impacted by this action," Williams said. "We will canvass employees at the two centers regarding their desire to relocate to other Civilian Personnel Operations Centers within the United States. If warranted, we may seek Voluntary Early Retirement Authority and also possibly offer Voluntary Separation Incentive Pay.

"Those who decline offers of reassignment will be offered the opportunity to register in the Department of Defense Priority Placement Program at the earliest possible date."

More information on the CPOC consolidation is available at Civilian Personnel On Line, www.cpol.army.mil, or via phone, 1-866-748-4636.

Tribute paid with celebration

Sacrifices pave way for freedom

Spc. Mark Watson
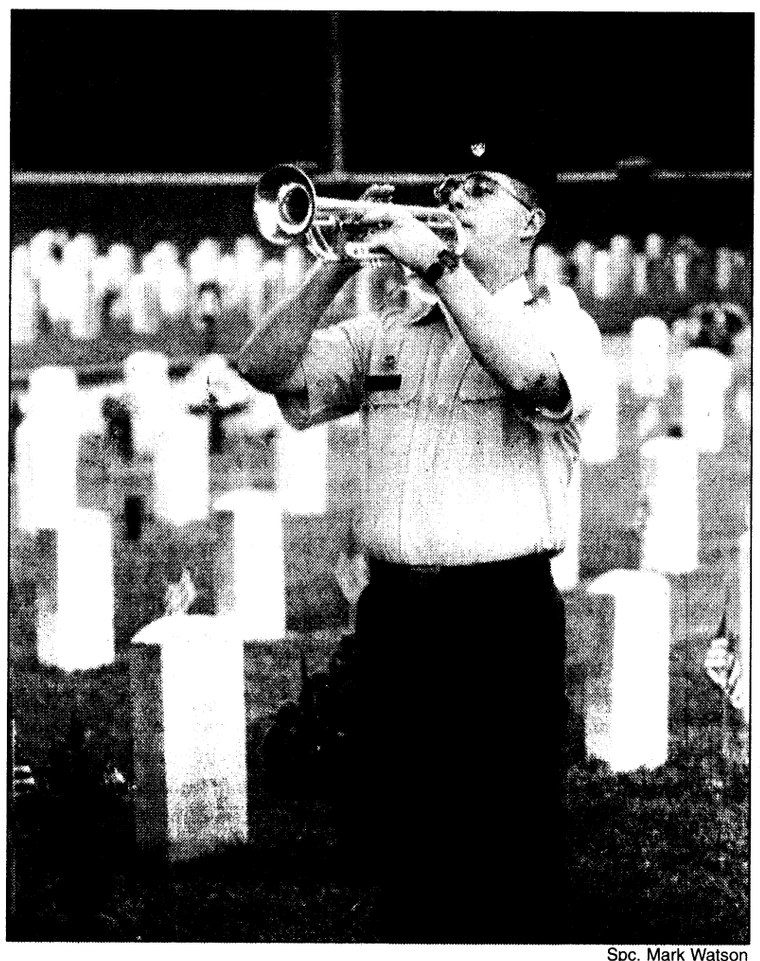
Bayonet staff

During a Memorial Day ceremony at the Main Post Cemetery, Fort Benning paid tribute to the men and women of the armed services who died in defense of the nation.

The ceremony marked the annual remembrance of America's fallen.

"We can't help but think, as we look all around us, that men and women, of years gone by, paid the price of service for country," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Daniel Taylor, the garrison chaplain, during the invocation. "Men and women who've both volunteered and been called into service have willingly fulfilled those obligations and in many cases sacrificed their own lives in order that we might have a future as a strong nation."



During his speech, Col. Lonnie Vona, Fort Benning's chief of staff, said Memorial Day brings out many emotions.

"Today is a day of conflicting emotions — celebration and sadness, victory and death, hope and hopelessness, relief and rage," Vona said. "These are emotions that have become embedded in our history."

He said those emotions began when colonial soldiers took up arms in 1775.

"Since then more than a million Americans have died, fighting for the independence that we enjoy today," he said. "The tombstones you see before you serve as stark reminders that freedom is not free.

"The price is steep. The expense is a heavy burden. But payment was made with the lives of men and women of our armed forces and with their eternal vigilance," Vona said.

"Each of those individuals was a loved one cherished by family and friends," he said. "Each was a tragic loss to their community and to our nation.

"We owe them our thanks. They paid the tragic, ultimate price for what we enjoy today — our freedom."

The ceremony closed with Vona and Taylor laying a wreath at Fort Benning's grave of the unknown soldier, a 21-gun salute and the playing of Taps.

Vona called for Americans to pick up where our fallen comrades left off.

"They've fulfilled their responsibilities," Vona said. "And now we must fulfill ours. We must continue winning every struggle to protect our nation. The armed forces of the United States stands guard in a world that continues to pose significant threats to our country and our allies."

Options require review

Retirement pay option offers bonus

Master Sgt. Sally Roberts
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers approaching 15 years of military service have a choice to make regarding their retirement benefits, and sorting through the mounds of information may make it a difficult choice for some.

Those who entered military service on or after Aug. 1, 1986, may choose between the High-3 retirement system, which offers retirement pay of 50 percent of monthly base pay or a Career Status Bonus of $30,000 and 40 percent of their monthly base pay after retirement.

Benefit helps build nest egg for retirement

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Army transformation is not just about a lighter, more mobile and lethal force.

It's also about empowering soldiers to be all they can be financially.

To accomplish this mission, soldiers will have the opportunity to enroll in the Uniserv Thrift Savings Plan in the initial election period of Oct. 9 through Jan. 31, 2002.

"Soldiers frequently say they have to spend every penny they earn to live and they have no money to save," said Ann Pratcher, manager, Financial Readiness Program. "It will be a big mistake to miss out on the Uniserv Thrift Savings Plan.

Legislation to benefit soldiers

Senator seeks to improve military quality of life

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

With the Memorial Day weekend putting service members, past and present, on the minds of many Americans, U.S. Senator Max Cleland, Georgia, took the opportunity last week to introduce legislation pertaining to military quality of life issues.

Cleland said he hopes one of those bills introduced, Senate Bill 2851, will improve communications between the White House and Congress when U.S. troops are deployed abroad.

The bill would change current reporting requirements for covert military operations to cover overt operations and deployments as well.

Specifically, the bill would require a report from the president to congress before the deployment of forces with the use of Congressionally appropriated funds.

This would apply to forces sent into hostilities, contingency operations or multilateral operations.

It would not apply to deployments in response to war or national emergencies.

In the report to Congress, the president would specify the vital national interests at stake which require the deployment; indicate why diplomatic and other means are not able to achieve those vital national interests; identify concrete objectives which can be obtained as a result of the deployment; define the end point of the deployment and specify the authority for the deployment under the U.S. Constitution or international law.

Cleland said the reason for the bill is to hopefully stem the load of deployments U.S. service members are being tasked for.

"Most people don't look at the commitment of military might until it (deployment) happens, so I've

Practical joker enjoys job

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs

commentary

There's nothing wrong with an occasional practical joke, is there? We play them on each other here in the office all the time.

But it's not fair. I get blamed for more than my fair share. Is it my fault that the few, the very few, I instigate go so well?

Take the time I waited until very late on deadline day, disguised my voice, called The Bayonet staffer who honchos the letters to the editor and engaged him in a lengthy discussion.

I eventually told him I would be happy to write a letter to the editor and asked him what he wanted me to write about. As the deadline doomsday clock ticked, I proceeded, at length, to point out why each topic he suggested was not practical.

When our new intern was alone in the community relations office for the first time, she had to field a series of calls asking about five nonexistent tour buses hauling 200 patients from a mental health facility parked in front of the building waiting for their tour guide.

Amusing enough, but not nearly as exciting as the time one of my co-workers found the skin a six-foot long boa had shed in his desk drawer.

I had to wait patiently until after lunch for a reaction to that one. The wait was worth it, though had I known that he had such an aversion to snakes, I might have chosen another desk. Nah.

I once worked with a soldier who kept his desktop so immaculate, it looked like you could perform emergency surgery on it at any given moment.

Everything was always exactly in its place. As he left on leave once, he announced to the rest of us that when he got back, everything had "better be where he left it." It was. Of course, the rubber cement and double-stick tape helped.

It was even better the time we took a piece of wire, some rubber bands and a metal washer that rattles an envelope as it's opened.

I'm still not sure if he or the envelope was more rattled.

Desks have a lot of potential for practical jokers. I (I mean, somebody I know) once took some flashcubes, and with the help of some double-A batteries, a clothespin, some electrician's tape, wire, string and a plastic spoon, rigged a drawer so that when it was opened the flash went off.

That reaction was even better than the time I (I mean, somebody I know) put a piece of masking tape on the back of the amplifier in his phone.

He could hear people talking to him, but they couldn't hear him.

Yes, I fixed it. Right after that call from his stockbroker.

That stunt was pulled the same week I told a squad of Bradley driver students it was very important to never traverse a turret more than 12 times in the same direction because if they did, the turret would pop out of the hull as it completed the 13th "360."

I almost got away with it but as their break ended, one of the instructors walked up, pointed at a student and said, "So tell me everything you've learned about this vehicle." To my credit, when the soldier was through, the instructor asked suspiciously, "Have you been talking to Ms. Jackson?"

Medical personnel and practical jokers have a prime directive in common — "First, do no harm."

There are a lot of practical jokes I've never tried because they cross the line. The toothpaste (or super glue) injected into a door lock. The wedge of Limburger cheese on an engine block. The fish planted under a car seat in July.

I will admit that I have been tempted to try the one that calls for dumping a box of baby powder on a sheet of newspaper and sliding the newspaper almost all the way under a door. Then you take a blow dryer, turn it up high and...

Sometimes I feel guilty when a practical joke goes exceptionally well, and swear I will never pull another one again. They are childish, and I am, after all, an adult.

Oh, before I forget ... since you are on your way out? Would you mind stopping at the PX and picking up a box of grid squares for me?

Rangers provide exciting show

I accompanied a fourth- and fifth-grade class from South Columbus Elementary School to see the Rangers in Action show at Hurley Hill May 18. Wow! What an impressive demonstration; the kids are still talking about it.

But even more impressive is the way we were treated by the rangers assigned to the Ranger Training Battalion. Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, command sergeant major at RTB, had coordinated with 1st Sgt. Christopher Kibler, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, RTB, to give the children an additional treat after the show.

The first sergeant showed them how to camouflage their faces and how to dine on MREs. He began by camouflaging one child's face. While applying the camouflage, he explained the method well enough that the student was able to camouflage another student's face.

Pfc. Ron Cameron, 4th RTB, who was passing by and saw what we were doing, joined our camouflaging party and applied the camouflage to other students. Before we knew it, everyone's face was painted.

I knew when I began this venture of coordinating a field trip for elementary students that I couldn't go wrong if rangers were involved. I've always been impressed with their knowledge and abilities — they are an elite group. But the energy and excitement for what they do that they showed these students was phenomenal.

I wouldn't be surprised if, in about seven years, there will be several basic trainees who once attended Wendy Mock's class at South Columbus Elementary School and had the opportunity to really see rangers in action.

With sincere thanks,

Tracy L. Tanner
Columbus

boss

Dial 545-BOSS is the commander's action line for soldiers, family members and civilians to call when they have problems or complaints that can't be resolved elsewhere.

While it is not a substitute for the chain of command or for agencies established to provide assistance, the line offers another means of communication between Fort Benning's community and commanders.

The Bayonet features some of the calls that may benefit other members of the Fort Benning community.

Call: A caller commented on concerns about recycling products such as copy paper, office print, and card board. He said he keeps hearing from various sources where he works that people are just supposed to trash those items now.

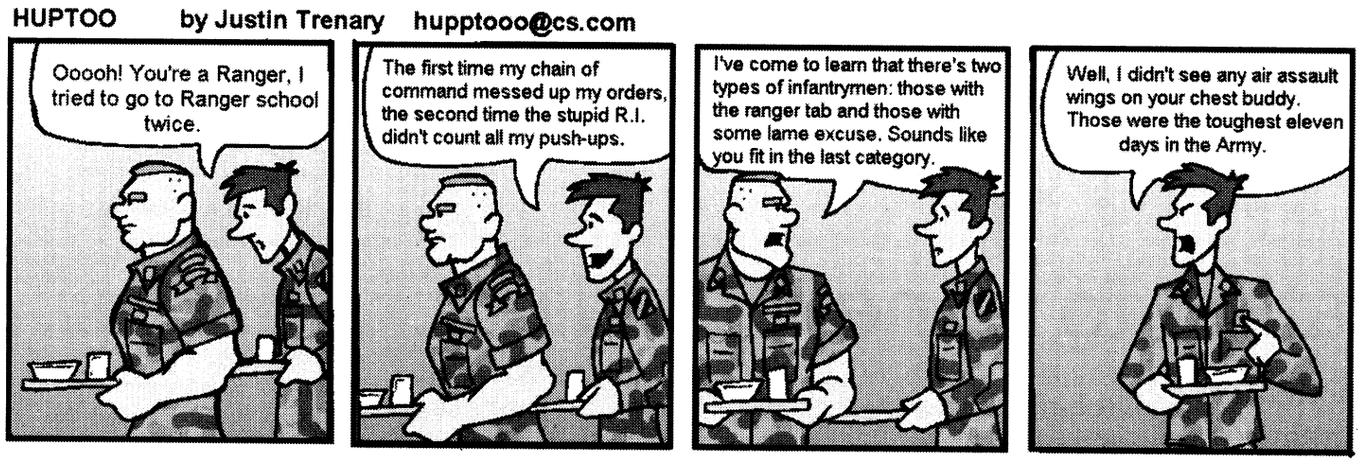
The caller said he knows there is a program operated by the Environmental Branch, but apparently no energy is being focused on this to recapture the funds. The caller wanted to know what is happening with the recycle program?

Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics response: Fort Benning DFEL operates a very comprehensive recycling program that includes collecting, processing, and marketing all of the materials mentioned in the call to the BOSS Line.

In addition to the products mentioned, the Fort Benning "Follow Me" Recycling Program collects, processes, markets and recycles a large volume of additional metals, glass, plastic, paper, wood, asphalt and concrete materials.

Revenue received from the sale of these products is returned to Fort Benning to support the recycling program and also used for post environmental and safety projects. Much of the material is also reused or processed and recycled on Fort Benning.

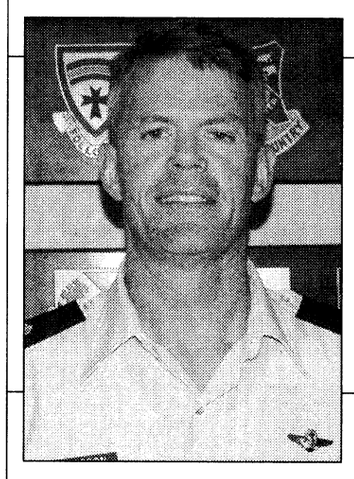
The recycling revenue is important to Fort Benning. Money can be saved recycling rather than paying to have valuable natural resources landfilled.



At times the market price for certain recyclables is below the level to justify production cost. We store some products on-site until markets move in our favor, but we have limited storage and there are regulatory requirements and safety concerns that also limit storage of recyclables.

Because of this we, as do other recyclers, have to be flexible and modify our list of material from time to time that we collect and process.

Hopefully, we will have good markets most of the time, but there will be times when we must decide which product we need to collect and which we are forced to landfill.



If you have any questions about the Fort Benning "Follow Me" Recycling Program, call Walter Nichols, Solid Waste Program manager, at 544-7187 or 544-6142.

Former Sergeant Major of Army visits Benning

Seventh SMA speaks with soldiers, leaders

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Former Sgt. Maj. of the Army, retired Sgt. Maj. Glen E. Morrell spoke to several organizations during his visit to Fort Benning last week.

Morrell who is the 7th Sgt. Maj. of the Army spoke Tuesday to BNCOC students at the NCO Club. He gave soldiers advice and compared today's infantryman to yesteryears'.

"Society does not want killers out there. So you may think that as an infantryman we may not have marketable skills, but there is one thing we have in our favor — leadership skills," Morrell said. "Learn as much as you can while you are away from your environment and your unit," Morrell said. "Use the knowledge you already have and that is what will help you out in the real world."

He went on to stress to students the importance of being a good leader.

"Take care of your subordinates and your subordinates will take care of you," he advised. "Help each other out."

He said the NCOs' mission is simple. "Take care of troops, be a great leader and share knowledge of the mission when appropriate."

After his address, Morrell was awarded the Order of Saint Maurice by Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk, Commandant of the NCO Academy. Recognized for his contributions as an infantryman to the welfare of infantry soldiers, Morrell was almost speechless, yet he urged students and instructors to continue to strive for excellence in and out of the Army.

Later during the week, Morrell addressed members of the Executive Leadership Development Program, 45 Department of Defense employees touring post and receiving valuable hands-on experience alongside Fort Benning soldiers and trainees.

Morrell took the opportunity to expand on why the NCO Corps is the "Backbone of the Army."

"NCOs are the ones that make everything happen. Not to take away from the officers, but if you have one officer and four NCOs you can do anything. Conversely, if you have four officers and one NCO, you will not even get the lock off the gate to the motor pool," he said.

Morrell said he enjoys speaking to various groups and sharing his experiences with soldiers.

When asked if he could do it all again and join the Army in any occupational specialty other than the infantry, Morrell quietly considered the question then answered.

"If I could not be in the infantry, then I would not join at all," he firmly said.

Morrell is seventh Sergeant Major of the Army, having served from July 1983 to July 1987. At the age of 41, Morrell completed Ranger training, making him one of the oldest soldiers to earn the Ranger Tab. He served in the Army for 31 years, during which time his units of assignment included the 6th Infantry in Berlin, 14th Armored Cavalry Regiment, 82nd Airborne Division, Fort Bragg, N.C., 5th Special Forces Group at Fort Bragg, and three tours in the Republic of Vietnam, 1st Ranger Battalion, 75th Infantry, Fort Stewart, Ga., Special Forces Detachment (Airborne) Europe, and the United States Army Forces Command, Fort McPherson, Ga.

Leaders gain soldiering experience during four-day visit

Civilians gain perspective from soldiers

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

For the last 15 years, members of the Executive Leadership Development Program have visited Fort Benning to gain true to life soldiering experience.

During their four-day visit, the 45 ELDP members toured post, observed various training situations and were given the opportunity to participate in Army training.

Tom Koslowski, director of ELDP 2001, is grateful to the on-going support given by the Fort Benning community. He recognizes the value of the interaction between future Department of Defense leaders and warfighters during the ELDP members' deployment to multiple military installations.

"Down the road when (ELDP members) are in senior positions and a part of the decision making process, they will be able to draw on their experiences gained during this program to make better informed decisions that will in turn affect service members and DoD employees," Koslowski said.

"As we progress in our careers we have the ability to impact tomorrow's soldier, so we need a better understanding of the warfighter," said Angela Kay Morrell, daughter of retired Sgt. Maj. of the Army Glen E. Morrell. "This is critical so that we can make policies, research, develop and procure the proper equipment," she added.

Koslowski said the ELDP program allows participants to "put a face to the millions of service members and DoD employees their decisions will affect."

Not only were group members given the opportunity to witness firsthand training sessions, they also took part in exercises designed to demonstrate what working knowledge is required of military members. During their tour of Fort Benning, ELDP members fired weapons and weapon systems, flew in military aircraft, visited the NBC chamber, ran through the Leader Reaction Course at the Officer Candidate School, visited the Airborne school, and the NCO Academy, among other demonstrations throughout post.

This past year's experience has definitely had its impact on the group. After an address given by former Sergeant Major of the Army, retired Sgt. Maj. Glen E. Morrell, members expanded on their recent deployments and newfound understanding of DoD missions and the military.

Ermelinda Rodriquez, human resources at Randolph Air Force Base, San Antonio, Texas, said the experience has definitely given her the opportunity to see the ramifications of policies and procedures made by high level decision makers.

Having no prior military experience, Rodriquez said the program is her first chance to interact and gain a glimpse of every service.

"Now when I am talking with my supervisors, some of whom are military members, I have more confidence in my knowledge of the needs of my clients," she said.

"Visiting various military installations has enhanced my appreciation of my job and the importance of a strong military," said former soldier Barry Creed, senior watch officer at the Joint Force Command, Norfolk, Va. Creed is a former soldier having served both as an enlisted soldier and a commissioned officer.

"The visit to Fort Benning and many other installations re-inforces what I see as a high quality of training. Today's professional NCOs are proof that we are headed in the right direction," he said.

Established in 1985 with the approval of the Secretary of Defense, ELDP is designed to expose highly motivated DoD employees who have demonstrated outstanding leadership potential to DoD missions.

All participants must be in grades of General Schedule or General Management 12-13 or military grades of 0-3 to 0-4.

A stringent selection process is also involved in identifying up to 60-members eligible annually.

The group deploys one week every month beginning in December to June to various military installations to include joint commands, Navy and Marine Corps, Air Force, Army, National Guard, and forward-deployed forces such as Korea.

Institute students survive mock hurricane

Agencies respond during simulated disaster exercise

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Civil and Military Course students from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation along with city and state agencies and the Red Cross met at the Columbus Public Safety Center for a simulated disaster exercise May 22-24.

The exercise, which integrated emergency medical services, fire department, police department, the local chapter of the Red Cross and military representatives, was a scenario in emergency response to a Category 5 hurricane that made landfall at Panama City Beach, Fla., and its destructive path through southern Georgia and the Columbus area.

WHINSEC students were put into teams representing the different agencies and their respected roles during a hurricane.

Hurricane Georgina was born of a computer program introduced by the U.S. Southern Command to assist civilian and military agencies in disaster readiness and relief.

The program, Consequence Assessment Tool Set, has the capacity to graphically and statistically depict the magnitude of disasters ranging from chemical spills to earthquakes and provide feedback according to input provided by users, said Harry Pillot, Operations Research and Systems analyst, SOUTHCOM, who administered the exercise.

Drawing on statistical data from Columbus and the surrounding area, here are some of the numbers the CATS program predicted if a Category 5 hurricane hit: 155 mph winds, 60 percent of the population without power, 40 percent without potable water and more than 40,000 left homeless from floods.

"When disaster hits, being able to effectively respond depends on how well agencies like the emergency medical service, the fire department and police communicate," said R. Riley Land, director of Emergency Management for Columbus.

During the exercise, teams had to deal with problems associated with hurricane disasters, such as housing the homeless, designating evacuation routes, controlling traffic, making clean water and rations available, protecting property from looters, making medical care available, and conducting rescue operations with military assistance. These were some of the problems teams presented solutions for.

Solutions were subsequently put into the CATS program for feedback.

"The situation either improved or worsened according to the solutions entered," said Maj. Joshua Melendez, WHINSEC.

For WHINSEC students, one of the most important learning points of the integrated class was to view how local, state and national government plays a role before, during and in the wake of disasters, Melendez said.

"In most Latin American countries, the national government, usually the military, takes over disaster operations immediately. However, what they learned here is how we do things; they learned that civilians set the pace and tempo and that the military takes on a supporting role. Civilian agencies ultimately determine the complete role of the military," said Melendez.

During the after-actions review each team presented positive and negative comments regarding the exercise.

"They (Latin American students) were curious how civilian agencies like the Red Cross, without authority, are able to come together with volunteers to assist during these (disasters)," said Howard E. Mayfield, Red Cross volunteer.

For local and state agencies, the exercise brought up many issues that some had not taken into consideration.

"Identifying work schedules, having liaisons working with other agencies and protecting food and water supplies are some of the things you don't really think of right out," said Lt. M. C. Todd, Columbus Police Department.

The exercise showed just how much communicating with the other agencies during any disaster makes a difference in how effective police are in helping the population, with given resources, Todd said.

"Overall, I think it was a good exchange of ideas and it got us all thinking proactively in how we would house displaced people due to flooding, how we would deal with disease and what agency would cover a specific aspect of the disaster relief effort, whether it be providing a dry place to sleep, food, medical evacuation or security," Melendez said.

Study shows rollovers possible with passenger vans

Unloaded vans found to be less prone

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

A 12-page study from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration suggests there is a high rollover propensity for 15-passenger vans.

According to the report, there are several reasons rollovers are possible.

Because 15-passenger vans differ from most light truck vehicles, they have a large payload capacity and the occupants sit fairly high up in the vehicle, when loaded, the vehicle may have a worse rollover rate than when unloaded, according to the NHTSA's study.

According to the study, 15-passenger vans, fully loaded, run almost six times the risk of rolling over as compared to a 15-passenger van that has fewer than five occupants when involved in a single vehicle crash.

This makes the vehicles dangerous when drivers turn corners too fast or exceed the recommended speed limit, said Ronald K. Johnson, installation transportation officer, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

The vans become hazards due to the change of the center of gravity.

As more people load the vehicle, the center of gravity raises further off the ground and more toward the rear of the vehicle.

The more people added to the vehicle, the higher the safety hazard for all involved.

Vans that were tested include: Chevrolet Express 3500, GMC Savanna G3500, Dodge Ram Van and Wagon B3500, Dodge Ram Wagon B350, Ford Econoline E350, Ford Club Wagon E350, and the GMC Rally and Vandura G3500.

According to the study, 15-passenger vans have almost the same rollover ratio as all light trucks and vans.

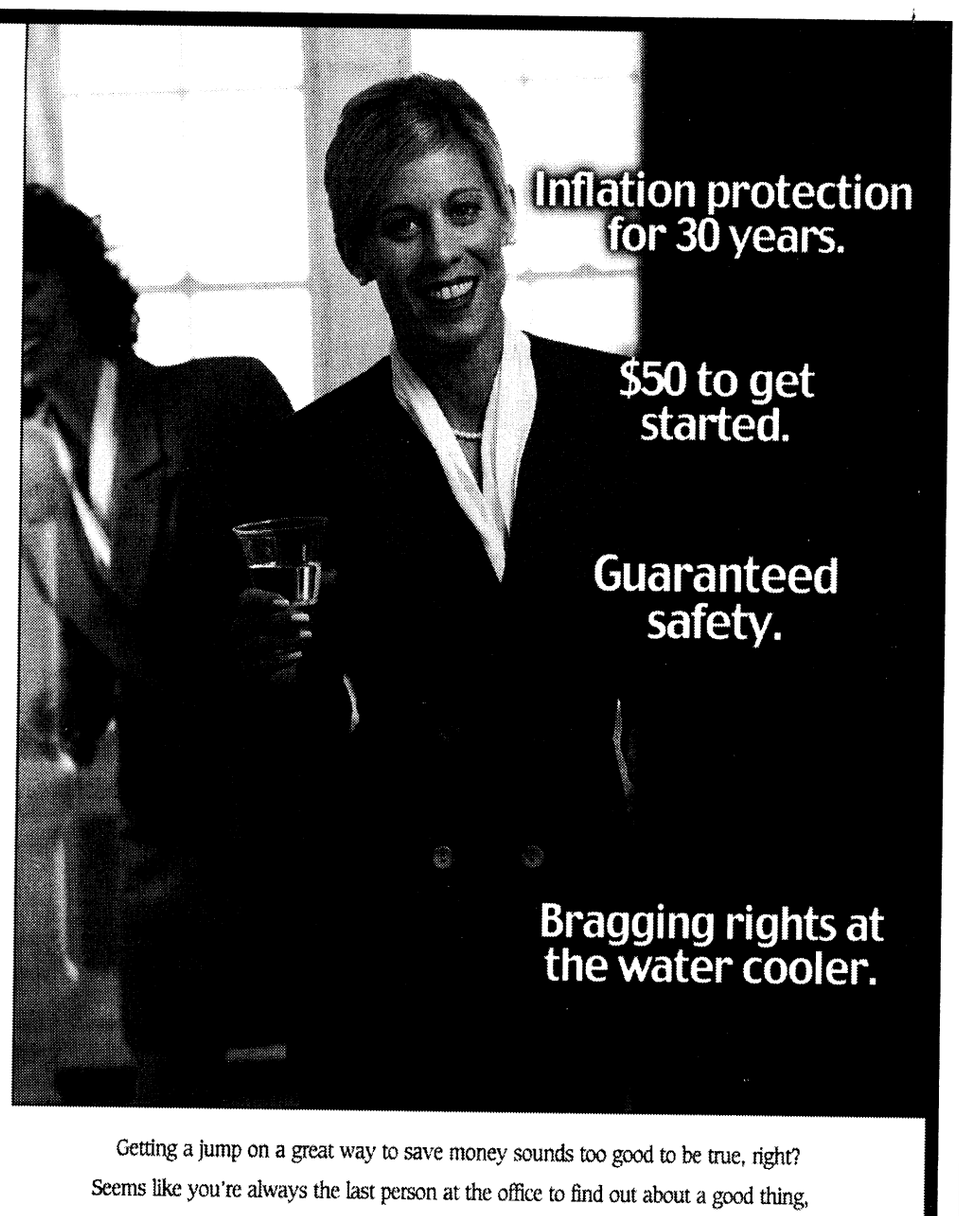
Fort Benning relies on the use of more than 35 Chevrolet, Chrysler Corporation and Ford vans on a daily basis, Johnson said.

These vans are widely used by many headquarters elements and supply shops throughout the installation, Johnson said.

"Since we're currently not having any rollover accidents with the 15-passenger vans, that tells me that drivers are driving responsibly," Johnson said.

However, in the last eight years of use on post, there have only been two incidents related to Fort Benning-used vans, one in 1996 and the other in 1998, where the vans rolled over during a crash.

"It's a matter of getting the word out and informing people," Johnson said. "I think the awareness of the risk involved is the best resource we have out there."



Transportation motor pool staff remind drivers of the safety hazards associated with the vans.

Johnson said the transportation staff will continue to keep an eye on the vans, but since there have been no recent rollover accident, he doesn't see a need to pull the vehicles from use at this time.

Unless, he said, there is a determination that the risk of rollover accidents are such that it warrants the removal of the vehicles from use.

Vehicle manufacturer's have not issued recalls on the vans, nor have they issued instructions for modifications to already existing vans to Fort Benning, Johnson said.

"The most important thing is to have competent drivers," said Regis P. Beighley, Fort Benning safety officer. "Make sure everyone wears their seatbelt."

Stereotypes broken during protocol class

Army traditions passed on through course

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Murmur the word coffee or tea to many military spouses and it conjures up visions of genteel ladies donning their white gloves and big-brimmed hats.

It's a stereotype trainers Sarah Hertig and Amanda Bender are trying to amend each time they instruct an Army Family Team Building protocol class. The class focuses on customs and courtesies throughout the military.

At 11 years old, Hertig attended the Marine Corps Ball in Washington, D.C. After 26 years with the military, she said she's seen it all.

Her father was in the Marine Corps, she was in the Air Force and later she married a soldier.

It's this background, plus her sense of humor, that inspires Hertig to teach the traditional class.

"We put more humor in it," she said. "We try to emphasize the fun aspects in things."

For example during the proper dress portion of a recent class, trainer Bender mentions common fashion flaws at official functions.

"No one wants to see your corned beef legs. Wear hose!" Bender joked.

And at each turn, the crowd kept laughing. Teaching such aspects as invitations, table etiquette and receiving lines can get dry the trainers said.

So the two relate their know-how to their own adventures, like Hertig's experience at the Blue Jean Tea last March for 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

"Teas are usually formal affairs," Hertig said. "This was a very casual event though. It was great."

Wearing casual attire, Hertig said the event allowed participants the opportunity to learn the courtesies of a tea in a relaxed setting.

While a majority of participants are spouses of rotating Infantry Officers' Basic Course, Infantry Captains' Career Course and Officer Candidate School students, individual units are encouraged to call and request classes.

The class isn't necessarily aimed at women — men can also learn a thing or two about official functions, they said.

Bender said they shape the lectures to fit their audience.

Men, for example, often do not know when to take off their coats at formal functions or etiquette for bringing guests down a receiving line.

"We have both men and women come to our classes," Hertig said, "A lot of commanders see the benefit of teaching their soldiers. They need it too."

Besides the cyclic class interest, a surge of interested parties occurs around the winter holidays in preparation of seasonal events. For that reason, AFTB hosted the class, "White Gloves and Combat Boots" last November, Melinda Canter, the spousal coordinator of a current ICCC class, is adjusting to her husband Tyler's recent transition from the Marine Corps into the Army.

Toppled with a recent tour in Okinawa, Japan, Canter said she was very interested to learn the differences in protocol between all branches of service.

"We attended a lot of formal functions, but there's a lot of differences between functions held in Okinawa and the states. There's a lot of tradition in the Marine Corps, but just in a different sense," she said.

One of the most common trends threading decades together is what to wear to which event.

One thing Bender emphasizes is that every military post is different.

Combine that with customs for various countries and folks may get lost.

Regardless of the locale, it's the convention of Army protocol that the two wish to continue.

"Keeping old traditions alive is important," Bender said. "But it doesn't have to be the most serious thing to teach in the world."

For more information about AFTB classes, call 545-5377.

A CLOSER LOOK

What to wear depends on the occasion:

- Coffees — Casual or informal
- Teas — Semiformal
- Hails and Farewells — Informal
- Receptions — Semiformal
- Banquets — Formal
- Cocktail Parties — Semiformal
- Outdoor Affairs — Casual
- Open Houses — Semiformal
- Parades and change-of-command ceremonies — Informal
- Graduations — Informal or semiformal

Casual — khaki slacks and a polo shirt, a blouse and a skirt, an afternoon dress or leggings and a sweater. Sport coat, no tie.

Informal — Something worn to a nice restaurant. Conservative slacks and sport sweater. Tie optional.

Semiformal — More dressy than informal wear. Nice suit or cocktail dress, conservative slacks and sport jacket. Tie.

Formal — Long gown or tea-length dress, very dressy cocktail suit. Dark conservative suit and tie, dinner jacket or tuxedo.

Ecosystem maintenance topic of workshop

Longleaf pine gets help from panel

Bob Larimore
Land Management Branch

Fort Benning recently hosted a workshop for natural resource managers from military installations throughout the Southeast.

The Longleaf Alliance and DoD Legacy 2000 sponsored the workshop.

The primary goal of the Land Management Branch at Fort Benning is to restore and maintain the longleaf pine ecosystem while being compatible with the military training mission.

The workshop focused on longleaf pine restoration and management.

During the workshop, a history of Fort Benning forest management was presented to give a perspective on the current forest conditions at Fort Benning.

A field tour followed during the afternoon and the entire next day.

The workshop attendees saw firsthand some of the effects of past forest management practices and learned about those currently being implemented on Fort Benning, including longleaf pine restoration.

Longleaf pine forests once covered an estimated 90 million acres of uplands ranging from southeast Virginia down the Atlantic Coast and across the Gulf Coast to East Texas.

These forests evolved under the influence of naturally occurring fires.

They are the most fire dependent forest type in North America.

They are also the most biologically diverse forests in the United States, sometimes containing more than 40 different plant species in an area the size of a handkerchief.

Longleaf forests have been in a steady decline since European settlement due to fire suppression, conversion to other land uses, and development.

In 1946, longleaf forests occupied approximately 15-20 million acres.

Today there are less than 3 million acres of longleaf remaining, 60 percent of them in Alabama, Florida, and Georgia.

Because of the decline of longleaf acreage, more than 30 plant and animal species associated with longleaf ecosystems are now threatened or endangered.

Military installations across the south, including Fort Benning, provide not only a refuge for much of the remaining longleaf pine forests, but also an opportunity for recovery of the longleaf ecosystem.

The workshop ended Friday with a panel discussion consisting of experts in longleaf pine management.

Members of the panel were Leon Neel, consulting forester; Dr. Bill Boyer, who is retired from the USDA Forest Service Southern Research Station; Rhett Johnson, director of Auburn University's Solon Dixon Forestry Education Center and co-director of the Longleaf Alliance; Mark Hainds, research coordinator for The Longleaf Alliance; Tim Beatty, wildlife biologist, Fort Stewart.

The panel discussion stimulated many questions and lively sharing of knowledge among the natural resource managers.

And knowledge there was — Neel and Boyer together accounted for more than 100 years of longleaf pine experience.

Workshops like this one allow natural resource managers, whether they are forestry or wildlife managers, to profit from the experience of others. As natural resource managers, you never stop learning; workshops like this are essential to the continuing education process.

The knowledge acquired from this workshop will help Fort Benning's natural resource managers in fulfilling the goal of longleaf pine restoration and maintenance.

LESs help soldiers keep track of deployments

Soldiers get paid if deployed more than 401 days

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Keeping track of how often you are away from home for Army business just got a little easier, if you are a soldier.

Effective with May's end-of-month Leave and Earnings Statement, soldiers will start seeing a personnel tempo counter in the remarks section.

Mandated by Congress in the Fiscal 2000 Defense Authorization Act, all services began tracking individual deployments last October.

Service members will be entitled to $100 per day for every day deployed 401 days or more in a rolling 730-day window.

The policy applies to active and reserve components.

The payment is not intended to provide an additional financial entitlement or incentive for deployment, according to Capt. Danita Bertone, the Army's PERSTEMPO staff officer with the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"The intent of the Personnel Tempo policy is to force commanders at all levels to better manage every soldier's time away from home due to Army requirements," Bertone said. "Frequent soldier deployments has an impact on soldiers' and their family members' quality of life."

"The Army has implemented a web-based application to facilitate this intensive tracking requirement in the field and to provide leaders a tool to better manage soldier deployment," she added.

The congressional definition of a deployed day is "Any day which, pursuant to orders, the member is performing service in a training exercise, operation or performing mission-support temporary duty at a location or under circumstances that make it impossible or infeasible for the member to spend off-duty time in the housing in which the member resides when on garrison duty at the member's permanent duty station."

What counts as deployment days are overnight events, such as support operations, exercises, on- and off-post unit training and mission-support temporary duty.

What does not count on the PERSTEMPO clock is disciplinary confinement, absence without leave, school training and leave in conjunction with a deployment event.

Some LESs may not accurately reflect a soldiers' current deployment count.

The two most likely reasons for a discrepancy, Bertone said, are the unit has not entered deployment events in the PERSTEMPO web application, or the soldier is including deployment events that occurred after the "as of date" of the LES counter.

Deployment time prior to Oct. 1 does not count.

Soldiers who believe their LES PERSTEMPO count is incorrect should contact their unit commander to review the deployment events they have participated in since Oct. 1.

Commanders will investigate and ensure any needed corrections are made to the web application individual deployment history, Bertone said.

For more information, visit the PERSTEMPO web site, www-perscom.army.mil/perstempo.

Dragon challenge breathes fire into soldiers

Event pumps up unit before deployment

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Before their departure to the National Training Center, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment sharpened their sporting skills at the Iron Dragon Challenge's field day events on Essebagger Field May 17.

The first wave of deployments to Fort Irwin, Calif., began last week.

Soldiers will conduct training exercises for more than a month during their rotation.

Events such as stick wrestling, baseball games, tug-o-war, track toss and horseshoes were spotlighted during the afternoon event.

The activities allowed soldiers to relax before leaving for their rotation, said 1st Lt. Scott Bier, one of the organizers for the event.

"This breaks the tension and keeps us motivated as we get ready for NTC. The best thing it does is keep the battalion together mentally," Bier said.

The regiment holds events such as this prior to major deployments as a way to prepare soldiers on a more personal level, said Capt. Steve Ruth.

"It's just a good spirited competition," said Ruth. "The soldiers are excited to participate and it's just a chance to blow off steam."

Pvt. Thomas Lannom, who joined the battalion last month, said the event gave him the chance to get to know people before heading off to the monthlong rotation.

"This is a good time for us before going to our NTC rotation. A lot of these events are gut checks, like the Iron Dragon test," he said.

"It's good to see what your fellow guys can do."

The field day was also an opportunity for family members to meet each other.

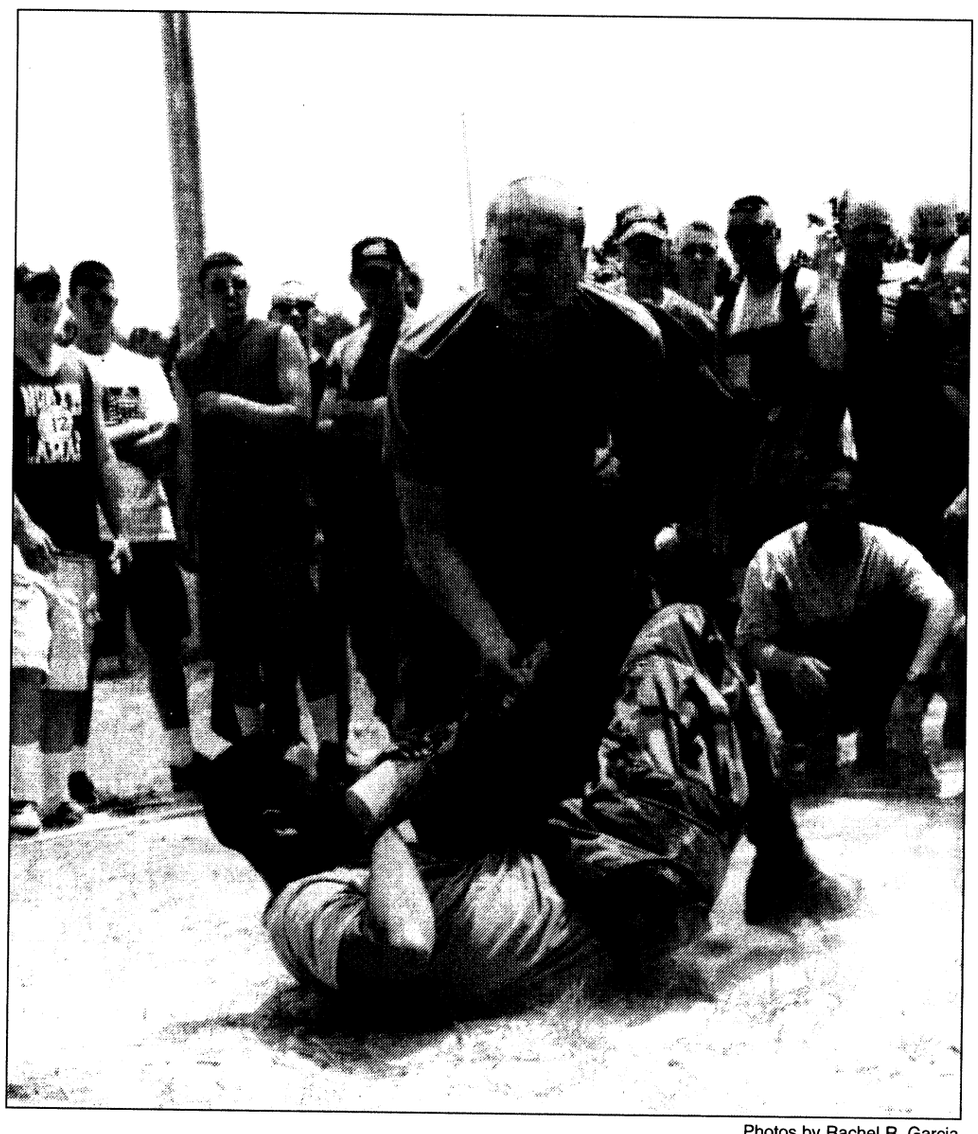
"Spouses and family members were encouraged to come out, to cheer their husbands or dads to victory," Ruth said.

This will be Spc. Chris Jackson's first rotation to NTC and his family's first deployment experience.

Jackson's wife, Angel, came out to the day's events.

"I really don't want him to go. It'll be hard to be apart," she said. "It's nice to have events like this though, because they are a chance for families to come together."

The unit's family readiness group held meetings for spouses where information such as schedules and emergency information were shared with family members.



It's events like this that reinforce Jackson's belief that his family has a support system, he said.

"Wives get to know one another and it makes you feel better when you're away. It's another chance to network," Jackson said.

The soldiers are scheduled to return home to Fort Benning by July 4.

Capstone rounds out officer candidate training

Officer Candidate Mamie Murphy

Officer Candidate Zalena Gajadhar defends her fighting position by scanning for enemies during the Capstone training exercise. Capstone is the culmination of all the skills officer candidates learn during their training at Officer Candidate School.

Officer Candidate Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

After 10 weeks of Officer Candidate School, and as the final week of Intermediate Phase, Class 4-01 got the chance to prove what they've learned.

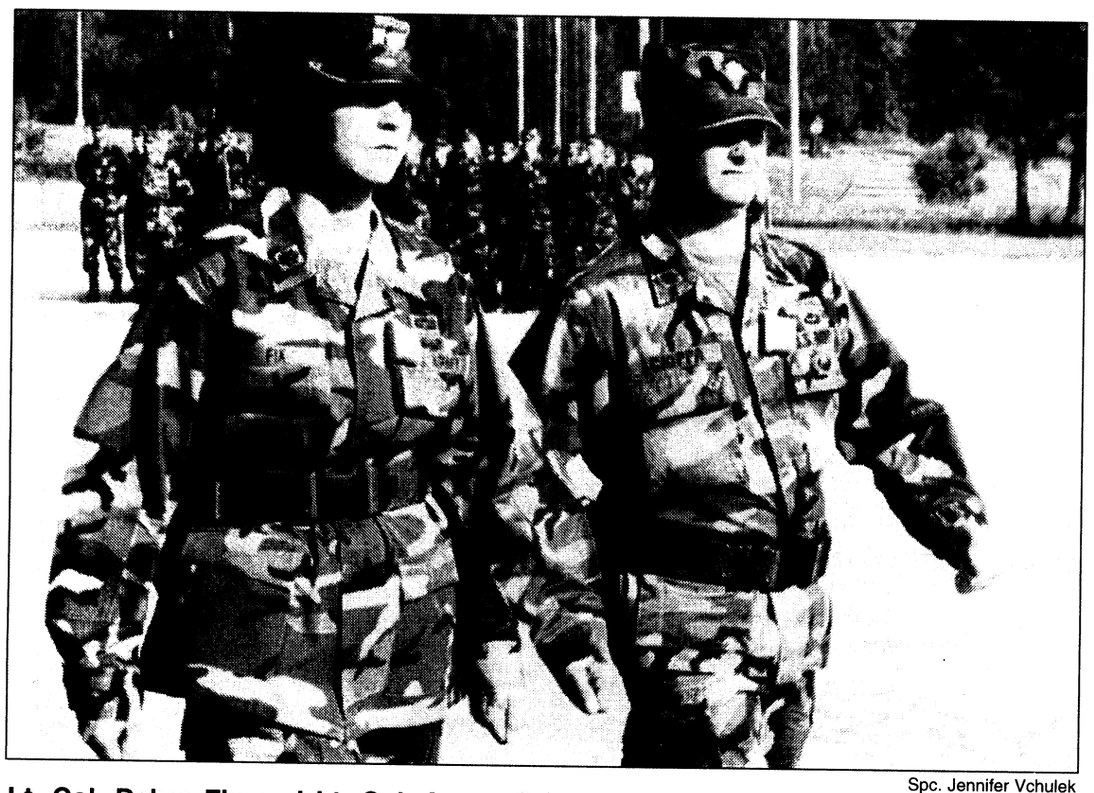
Everything from troop leading procedures, tactics and field craft got put to the test during their capstone exercise.

"Capstone is a great way to understand the task organization that is needed to accomplish any mission. You find out the responsibilities of everyone in the rank structure, from E-1 all the way up and how it all works together as a whole," said Officer Candidate Shannon Aseron.

On May 10, 1st, 3rd and 4th platoons came together for a final combined attack on 2nd platoon.

Officer Candidate Peter Villalobos was the student company commander for the attacking force.

"My main goal as commander was just to make sure that the final attack was simple and straightforward so that everyone could understand it."



"The ones that aren't branched infantry, that aren't necessarily in their field of expertise, they were really grasping a lot more of the infantry tactics and techniques as the week progressed."

Officer Candidate Janet Blair said, "We've been receiving a lot of tactical training in the classroom for weeks now, but once we got out in the field and got the chance to apply it, that's when it really made sense to me. I got to see how it all comes together."

"It's hard to make a transition from garrison to field leader. Being in a leadership position out in the field is a totally different experience. You get a whole new outlook on what it feels like to be a soldier out there in the woods. As a leader, once you understand that, that is when you take better care of soldiers," said Officer Candidate Jorge Albin.

"Colonel (Michael) Ferriter (11th Infantry Regiment commander,) said it best when he came out to talk to us after the final attack," said Officer Candidate Villalobos, "He said, 'This is your last chance to be a private.' Which is so true, because from here on out, we're not going to be in that position anymore. We won't be privates, we'll be the ones responsible for making decisions and getting it all together."

30th AG soldiers welcome new battalion commander

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek

Lt. Col. Debra Fix and Lt. Col. Aaron Cioppa return from reviewing the 30th AG (Reception) Battalion soldiers during the ceremony.

Former commander heads to DC

The former commander of the Sioux Falls, S.D. Military Entrance Processing Station took command of the 30th AG (Reception) Battalion, 29th Infantry regiment, during a change of command ceremony Wednesday morning at Kanell Field.

Lt. Col. Armon A. Cioppa succeeds Lt. Col. Debra L. Fix, who will be going to the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel, Washington, D.C.

"It has been my distinct honor to serve as the commander of this great unit," Fix said. "I am better for having served here. It is a blessing and privilege to relinquish command to such a great command team."

During the ceremony, Col. Carter F. Ham, 29th Inf. Regt., commander, took the opportunity to highlight some of Fix's accomplishments here.

"Under (Fix's) command, this battalion has truly soared," Ham said. "Today, they are recognized as the finest reception training battalion in the Army. Thank you."

In welcoming Cioppa to Fort Benning, Ham said the new commander "understands how the battalion works, and I know he is ready to go. Welcome."

"You look magnificent," Cioppa said. "The battalion looks great.

"I pledge to you I will command this battalion with every ounce of energy, commitment and wisdom I have."

After commanding companies in the 29th Inf. Regt., 39th Inf. Regt., and the 187th Inf. Regt., Cioppa transferred branches to the Adjutant General's Corps where he completed duties in the Republic of Korea as the chief of personnel plans and operations division, brigade intelligence and operation officer and executive officer for the 516th Personnel Services Battalion, 8th Personnel Command.

Cioppa's awards include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, second oak leaf cluster, Army Commendation Medal, second oak leaf cluster, and the Army Achievement Medal, third oak leaf cluster.

The new commander brings with him his wife, Amy.

They have two children, Stephanie, 14, and Christopher, 9.

TSP: Offers soldiers short, long-term retirement plans

Therefore, soldiers should be getting their financial house in order so they'll be ready for their contributions to be deducted in January."

The TSP allows soldiers to invest 1 to 7 percent of their income on a pre-tax basis, which grows tax-deferred.Soldiers can allot 100 percent of bonus, incentive and special pay up to the IRS maximum ($11,000 for 2002).

"The important thing to remember is that you must contribute from base pay in order to contribute from a bonus," Pratcher said.

Currently, the government will not match any soldier contributions.

However, tax-exempt, combat zone pay is not subject to the IRS maximum.

There will be five funds from which to choose and they are:

- G Fund (short-term government securities)
- F Fund (bond fund)
- C Fund (stock fund)
- S Fund (small cap stock fund)
- I Fund (international stock fund)

When soldiers leave the military, they can leave the funds in the TSP or roll it into an individual retirement account.

"The Uniserv Thrift Savings Plan is like a 401(K) plan in the civilian sector," Pratcher said. "I believe people should always contribute the maximum allowed to this type of plan to maximize their investment dollars."

Soldiers will like the fact money will come directly out of their checks and, consequently, not miss it, said Staff Sgt. Roger Ayscue, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"I always wondered why soldiers didn't have it when civil service employees did," Ayscue said. "This plan is something that should have happened a long time ago."

He said he would enroll in the plan and encourage his soldiers to do the same.

"I always tell them they should look down the road towards their future instead of them looking forward to the next four-day weekend," Ayscue said. "The Thrift Saving Plan is an excellent way for all soldiers to ensure they won't leave the military empty handed."

The plan offers the possibility of much better returns than savings bonds that the military has always publicized, he said.

For senior soldiers, he said those who elect the $30,000 payment in return for lower retirement benefits should consider investing a portion of the funds into the plan.

Younger soldiers on their first or second enlistment, in particular, stand to gain a great deal because of the time value of money, too, he said.

"Soldiers who finish their 12 months of contributing to the Montgomery G.I. Bill should take the $100 extra they'll probably blow and invest it into the plan," Ayscue said.

"If it encourages the average soldier to save money, it's a good thing," he added.

Anyone interested in individual assistance for this opportunity should attend a Financial Counseling Intake at 8:15 a.m. on Mondays in Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information, call Pratcher at 545-5485.

Program: Offers bonus for early retirement, 15 years

The key in making the choice, officials say, is a complete review of the options under both programs and consideration of each individual's personal needs and preferences.

Service members must make their choice between 14 and 15 years of service.

They will receive notification through unit personnel offices and be referred to the installation retirement services center for counseling and assistance.

Those soldiers who are eligible to choose between the two options will be automatically covered under the High 3 retirement system unless they elect the CSB/REDUX program with the $30,000 bonus and reduced retirement.

The first step in the process is determining a soldier's DIEMS date, or the Date Initially Entered Military Service. This date is the earliest date of enlistment, induction or appointment into the regular Army or reserves.

In order to elect the CSB/REDUX, soldiers must be fully eligible for retention to 20 years of service and agree to stay in for at least 20 years.

The $30,000 bonus will be paid after completing 15 years of service and is taxable at the time it is paid.

In some cases a portion of the bonus can be sheltered from taxes if the service member places it into a thrift savings plan account.

Comparisons of the two programs rest heavily on how the service member chooses to use the bonus money when it is paid.

Officials said the biggest benefit comes from investing the money wisely and then allowing its value to build until retirement.

A wealth of information regarding retirement benefits is available through several government Web sites and through Fort Benning's retirement services office located in Soldiers Plaza.

The Army's retirement services Web site is http://www.odcsper.army.mil/retire and the Department of Defense Military Pay Web site is at http://pay2000.dtic.mil.

Soldiers at, or approaching the 15-year deadline for selecting one of these retirement options should contact their unit PAC, or personnel actions center.

Senator: Lobbies bills

introduced a more workable system," Cleland said. "This is patterned after existing legislation to have the president report to Congress on covert operations. That has worked well.

"There has been a gray area in the Constitution about deployments, this will at least get Congress properly involved in these continued deployments that are strapping the forces," Cleland said. "We are stretched too thin. This says, if you commit forces into hostilities, we would like to know your rationale. These are the kinds of questions that must be asked at the front end of a commitment, not at the end."

Another bill introduced last week would modernize the Montgomery G.I. Bill to have a more family-friendly military benefit structure.

The Helping Our Professionals Educationally Act would make benefits transferable from the service member to their spouses and children, with some conditions.

Those conditions include allowing members who are deemed by the service secretaries to have critical military skills to be able to transfer 50 percent of their basic benefit to the spouse or children. Spouses will be able to use transferred benefits at six years of service, with children using these at 10 years of service.

Cleland, who is the ranking member of the Senate Armed Services Committee's Personnel Subcommittee, said he thinks this will be a great retention tool.

"The military is hemorrhaging for top quality people trained in high-tech skills," he said. "From traveling around to our bases, I know our personnel want this opportunity for their spouses and kids. I think this will help us in retention," Cleland said.

COPS patrols keep neighborhood safe

Military police increase presence near school

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

During the postwide town hall meeting, reports of physical assaults and confrontations with truant teens surfaced when a resident from the Davis Hill Housing Area raised concerns about safety on school paths.

Although the military police weren't able to substantiate reports of battery or assault, the provost marshal did activate the neighborhood policing program, Community Oriented Police Squad, earlier than planned to increase MP presence in the neighborhood.

> "Urban legends like camp fire stories grow in the telling until they take on a life of their own."
> Lt. Col. Terry Kelley
> Chief of Law Enforcement Division

The COPS are working with Stowers Elementary School administrators to make sure children stay safe to and from school, said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley. chief of the MPA's Law Enforcement Division.

Kelley said he hopes an increase in MP presence will discourage rampant rumors of mayhem on school property.

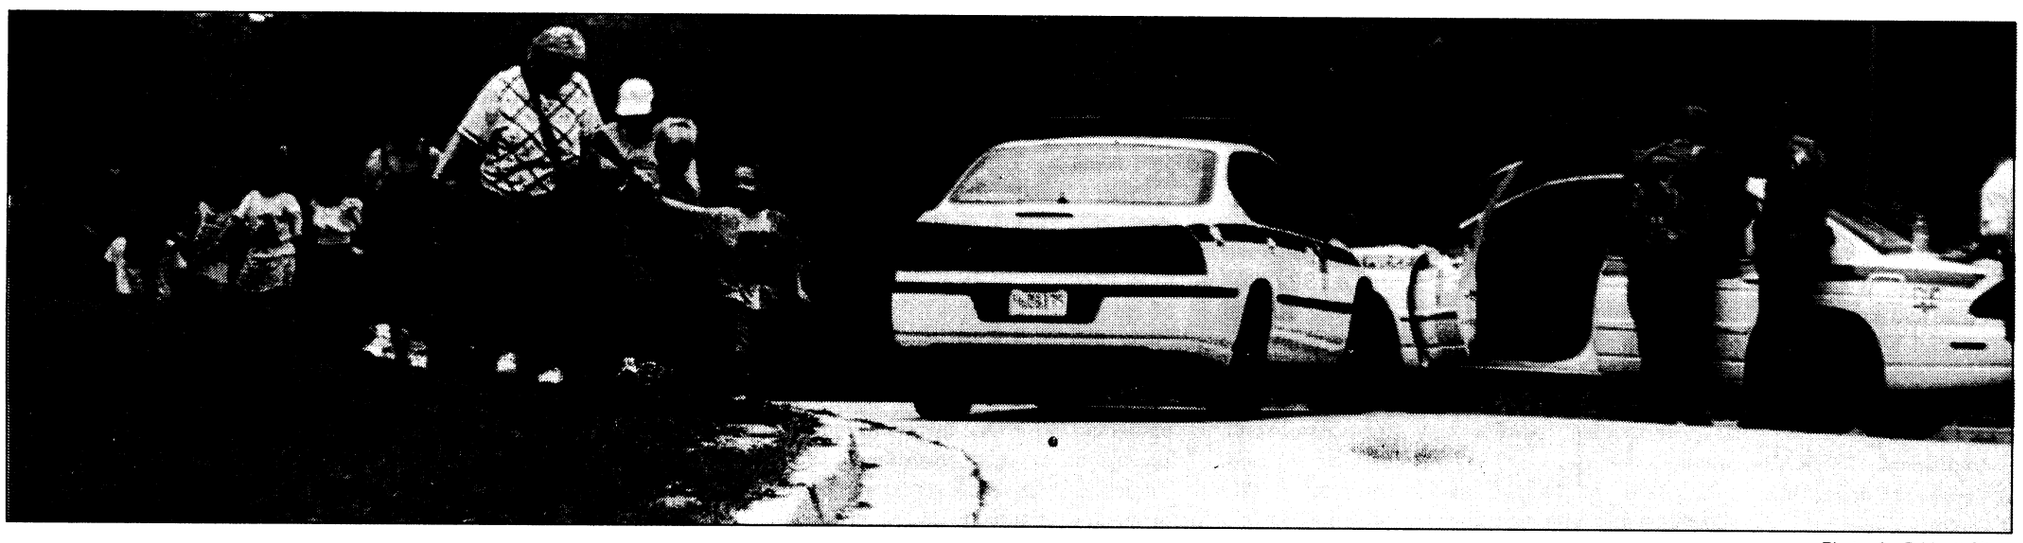
"Urban legends," Kelley said, "like camp fire stories they grow in the telling until they take on a life of their own."

The rumors are varied, vague and usually unsubstantiated, he said.

Those rumors include gangs, physical assaults and sexual molestations, although the MPs have not received any reports of physical assault, other than routine confrontations between children.

"There's been no increase in crime in the area, but we chose to send out patrols because parents were asking for them," Kelley said. "We've had no report of anything of that nature at all. We've heard the rumors and looked into it. If there's violence out there, it's not been reported to us."

Kelley said rumors are usually "rooted in a kernel of truth," but these rumors appear to begin and end with Stowers students.



"Kids push and shove and taunt. That's what kids do, unfortunately. The only incident we've heard about was the kind that typically happen in the spring when more children are walking the paths to school — squabbles between children," he said.

Stowers principal, Glenn Hughes, said teachers have volunteered to help patrol the paths, and he distributed volunteer forms for parents who wish to help, but as of Wednesday, he's received no response.

"I will say unequivocally, we do not have a discipline problem at Stowers," Hughes said. "We haven't had a single school suspension this year. But, of course, we encourage parental involvement to discourage the kind of petty behavior we see at this time of year."

Hughes encouraged parents to call the school to voice any concerns about their children's safety on the way to and from school, and Kelley asked parents to notify MPs if they witness violence.

"The bottom line is, if you see violence call the MPs immediately. If you hear a rumor, call us and tell us what you're hearing. We want to hear (the residents') concerns," Kelley said.

Plan put through test

School, military police stage mock crisis

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Safe Schools Plan was put to the test May 22 when Stowers Elementary School and the Military Police Activity staged a mock hostage crisis at the school.

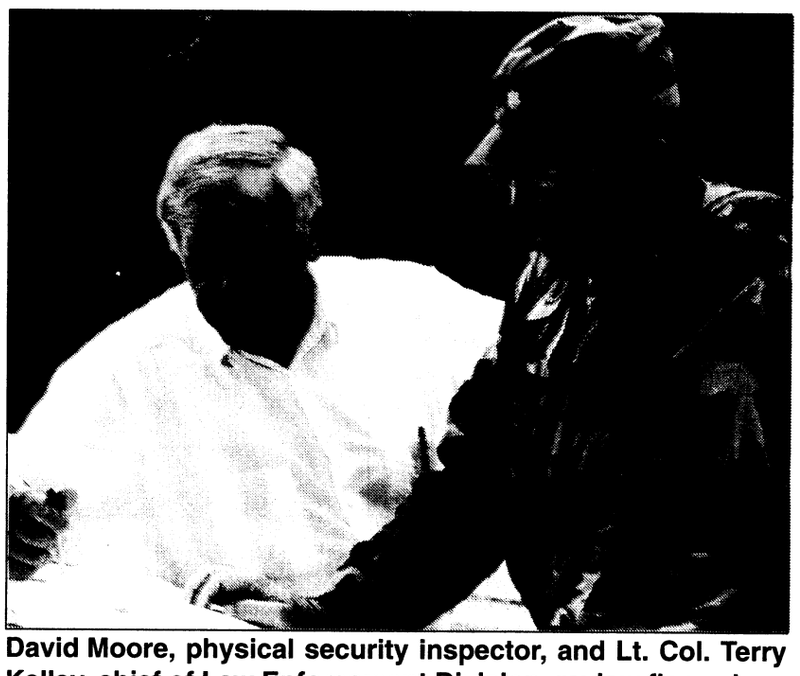
A lock down and evacuation drill was "the next logical step" to ensure Fort Benning is prepared for an actual school emergency, said Glenn Hughes, principal.

"We've had two terrorist drills in the last two years, each involving the various directorates on post that would respond to a real emergency," Hughes said. "But this time we felt it was important to involve the whole school, because a plan is only as good as we make it, and to make it effective we have to test it in real-life scenarios."

Sgt. Jennifer Jones, a civil liaison with the MPA, played the part of a disgruntled parent who barricaded herself in the school's media center with a student hostage.

"I knew about it before it happened because the principal asked me if I'd play the part," said the fifth-grade student, who asked not to be identified. "But when she started screaming and waving the gun, it got real. Mr. Hughes told me just to keep reminding myself it was all pretend."

The actors and only a limited number of people knew about the drill in advance, though teachers had been told to expect a drill sometime before the end of the school year, and parents were notified by newsletter.



Students rehearsed various emergency procedures in the past few weeks, and a soldier from the MPA's Special Reaction Team visited the school a week before the drill.

"We wanted to familiarize the students with what he would look like to alleviate any fears or concerns they might have," Hughes said. "Most of our students have never seen a member of the team in uniform and they can be very intimidating. The MPs don't want our children to be scared."

The first MP arrived less than five minutes after a school official called 911 and military police investigators, criminal investigators, the Special Reaction Team and the 988th Quick Reaction Force were all assembled in less than 30 minutes and secured an interior and exterior perimeter around the school grounds. They were not informed the situation was a training exercise until they arrived at the school. Members of the SRT accompanied Hughes into the school to evacuate 650 students, a procedure that took 37 minutes, less than half the time projected by MPA officials.

Using flash-bang simulators, the SRT then stormed the media center and subdued the disgruntled parent.

"The response time was amazing," Hughes said. "Everyone involved reacted perfectly and it went like clockwork. They know their jobs, and I feel confident they're prepared to protect our children."

Library offers summer reading program to Fort Benning children

Theme will highlight history, Native American cultures

Nancy Wahlstrom spent summers reading stories with her older sister Ruth, back in Grenada, Miss.

Now the Fort Benning librarian heads her own summer reading program at Sayers Memorial Library.

She invites children ages 5 to 12 to participate, as long as they're family members of active duty, retired duty or civilian personnel. Wahlstrom said she wants to encourage reading during the summer, even if it's not traditional reading material.

"If kids are reading, that's what counts," she said. "Newspapers, comic books or classic stories — as long as they read."

It's not the same strict reading program that many adults may remember from their childhood, said library volunteer Rebecca Maddox. Besides logging reading hours along the sultry summer months, the program allows children to learn more about their local area.

This summer's reading theme is "Picture This: A Piece of History," focusing on Native American cultures. The program, which will run seven weeks, will include such activities as creating rhythm drums, sand painting and constructing a Native American sun catcher. Several guest readers will also be appearing throughout the program.

"I think this is an excellent program this year," Maddox said. "Many of the children here are transplants, coming from different areas. For them to learn about local Native American culture is wonderful."

Maddox and her three boys, William, Jake and Andrew, participated in the program last year. In fact, they did more than just read —

Columbus hosts free health expo

Expo offers health screens, blood tests

Hope Stockton
Institute for Healthcare Leadership

Free health screenings, educational sessions for health professionals and the community, and a presentation by a former top White House official are highlights of the second annual Men's Health and Fitness Conference and Expo June 7-9 at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center, 801 Front Ave.

Activities begin June 8 with a conference for health professionals. Participants can choose from among 26 educational sessions related to men's health.

Hamilton Jordan, former White House Chief of Staff during the Carter Administration and a cancer survivor, is the luncheon keynote speaker during Friday. He is the author of "No Such Thing as a Bad Day," which describes his personal battle with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma.

A free session is scheduled June 9 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Activities include free health screens for prostate and colo-rectal cancer, HIV and sexually transmitted disease, diabetes and high cholesterol, and blood pressure checks. Other screens include body fat analysis and checks for bone density, hearing and vision.

In addition, information will be available on topics such as nutrition, sleep disorders, advance directives and end-of-life decisions, and pharmacists will be on-site to discuss medications, proper dosages and drug interactions. There also will be entertainment and recreational activities for all ages, cash prizes and other give-aways.

Organizers expect this year's attendance to outpace that of last year's inaugural event. "We had more than 3,000 people at the community expo last year," said J. Ronald Hunt, M.D., one of the organizers of the event. "This year we expect at least 6,000."

"Men are probably the most ignored group in health care today," said William M. Harper IV, M.D., chairman of the Georgia Commission on Men's Health, president of the Muscogee County Physicians Foundation, and one of the event organizers. "As a result, "men's health has risen to the level of a critical public health concern."

Harper noted the incidence of stroke is higher among men than women, as are life-threatening depression, AIDS and deaths from heart disease and cancer.

"That's why this expo is so important," he added. "It's a great opportunity for men and their families to spend the day together, learning about good health habits and having the health screens to detect developing health issues before they become serious problems."

Soldiers can benefit from retirement plans

IRA and tax advantages help investors

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

This is the sixth story of a seven-part series, which takes a look at the basics of investing.

Do you want to rely on the government for your retirement money?

Thought not.

Given that, Individual Retirement Accounts, or similar investment vehicles, are appropriate for everyone, said Jason Dickinson, registered representative and agent, United Services Planning Association and Independent Research Agency for life insurance.

"Anytime one can legally avoid being taxed for an extended amount of time, that's advantageous," Dickinson said.

An IRA allows an investor to deduct $2,000 of earned income per year, place it in an investment plan and have it grow tax deferred until withdrawal at retirement.

There are two types of IRA's — Roth and traditional.

A traditional IRA's contributions are tax deductible, but Roth's are not.

Both grow tax free, but one has to pay taxes on withdrawals in a traditional IRA, whereas, an investor does not have to expend taxes on Roth withdrawals.

There is a 10 percent penalty for early withdrawal from IRAs prior to age 59 and a half.

Currently, there is pending legislation that may increase the tax-deductible amount to $5,000.

"Provided investors have significant liquidity for emergencies and other needs, they should try to allocate the maximum," said Frank McCanham, Chartered Life Underwriter and Chartered Financial Consultant at Financial and Asset Management in Columbus.

The correct type of IRA in which to invest depends on many variables such as income, age and whether or not one owns a home.

"Traditional IRAs are beneficial, but the Roth is a better bang for the tax buck in most cases," Dickinson said. "Generally speaking, Roth is better for today's younger (under age 35) investors due to their propensity to earn more dollars during their 40s and 50s."

Older, higher-income investors tend to benefit from traditional IRAs more because they need the tax relief sooner, rather than later, he said.

A great benefit of an IRA is one can use it for first time home purchase deposits and family education without a penalty for withdraw, he added.

An IRA is a plan established by law. Investors can fund it with virtually anything they want.

"Mutual funds are a great way to fund an IRA," McCanham said. "If an individual is skilled enough and doesn't mind the risk, individual stocks may benefit, too."

He said he would avoid allocating high risk investments such as commodities or stock futures into an IRA.

"Investors do have to manage their IRAs and pay attention to them," he said.

They should review their IRA once a quarter or twice a year in order to make sure:

- It is performing well.
- Their advisors is in tune with their current objectives.
- The economy is not having an adverse effect on the accounts.
- The account is doing what they anticipated when they invested in it in the first place.

Soldiers will have the opportunity to start a Thrift Savings Plan in the initial election period of Oct. 9 through Jan. 31, 2002.

The soldier TSP allows soldiers to invest 1 to 7 percent of their income on a pretax basis, all of which grow tax-deferred. Soldiers can allot 100 percent of bonus, incentive and special pay up to the IRS maximum (11,000 for 2002).

Currently, the government will not match soldier contributions.

Tax-exempt, combat zone pay is not subject to the IRS minimum.

There will be five funds from which to choose and are the:

- G Fund (short-term government securities)
- F Fund (bond fund)
- C Fund (stock fund)
- S Fund (small cap stock fund)
- I Fund (international stock fund)

When soldiers leave the military, they can leave the funds in the TSP or roll it into an IRA.

"The allocation of pretax dollars into an investment that compounds tax deferred is a tremendous advantage long term for military personnel," McCanham said. "Here again, investors should consider investing the maximum amount possible, provided significant liquidity."

Another tax-advantaged plan is known as an UGMA. One can invest for a child's future through the Uniform Gift to Minors Act.

"UGMAs are terrible as far as I am concerned, unless you have a good family income," Dickinson said. "An UGMA becomes the child's income upon the age of maturity, which usually causes the child to not qualify for any financial aid. Bad news."

An education IRA is a vehicle one should consider for their children, he said.

"You could avoid taxes and pay for an education early and have the aid of a little thing called a compound factor," he said.

An investor can direct the IRA funds into stocks, bonds, mutual funds or other vehicles.

"Mutual funds and, maybe later, stocks are the types of investments I would recommend," Dickinson said.

All soldiers, including career soldiers who will receive pensions, should have an IRA and TSP, he said.

"Do you want to live on 50 percent of what you are living on the year you retire," Dickinson said.

"You would have to decrease your lifestyle and living standards by 50 percent. IRAs sure help beat getting another job to make-up the difference."

When soldiers leave active duty, they can invest in 401(k) plans if their new employers offers them. A 401(k) is similar to an IRA, but there are some differences.

- Some employers match part of one's contribution. The exact match depends on the company.
- One invests in mutual funds or other investments offered by the employer, so choices may be limited to as few as three.
- There is not a Roth 401(k).
- One can invest more than $2,000 of earned income per year. Investors can contribute up to 15 percent of their income to a maximum amount determined each year.

Soldiers can direct questions about the above information, or any other topic covered in this series, to Ann Pratcher, manager for the Financial Readiness Program, at 545-5485. Interested soldiers may also visit Pratcher at Building 2633 at Soldiers' Plaza.

Pesky 'skeeters' can carry bad bugs along with sting

Barbara Joye
Georgia Department of Human Resources

Mosquitoes aren't just a nuisance in Georgia — they can also carry several diseases, said Kathleen E. Toomey, director of the Georgia Department of Human Resources Division of Public Health. Toomey said she encourages everyone to take these simple prevention measures this spring and summer:

Get rid of standing water in your yard so the mosquitoes can't breed, and use insect repellent when you go outdoors.

West Nile virus first appeared in this country in the Northeast two years ago, but an infected bird was found in North Carolina last year. Experts believe that the virus may appear in Georgia this summer, according to Toomey. Mosquitoes, who feed on infected birds, can transmit the virus to people. It cannot be transmitted from one person to another.

The West Nile virus is a close relative of other types of mosquito-borne viruses that have been in Georgia for many years. Most people who are infected with West Nile virus don't even get sick. However, a small proportion — mostly people over 50 — may become ill and need to be hospitalized. The West Nile virus is rarely fatal.

Mosquito eggs hatch only in water. After hatching, the larvae or "wigglers" live in the water for about two weeks before they turn into adult mosquitoes and take wing. Public health experts agree that the most effective control measure is something anyone can do: eliminate standing water around the home.

"Outdoor sprays and fogs will kill some mosquitoes, but the effect is only temporary," Toomey said. "Electronic repellers have not been proved effective. The best method of mosquito control is to get rid of the insects' breeding and resting places."

If you are outdoors when mosquitoes are active, wear long sleeves and pants and consider using a mosquito repellent that contains DEET on exposed skin. Use mosquito repellents according to package instructions — do not use repellents containing DEET on infants, and do not use a repellent with over 10 percent DEET on children.

Many birds infected with West Nile virus die, so public health officials are using dead bird reports as one way to watch for the virus. People who find freshly dead birds in their yard should report them to their county health department. The reports will be used to map bird death throughout Georgia, and some of the reported birds will be collected by public health staff and tested for West Nile virus.

For more information about mosquito control, call your county health department. For more information about West Nile virus, see http://health.state.ga.us/epi/vbd.shtml.

A CLOSER LOOK

- Throw away or bring indoors anything that can collect water, such as tires, cans, buckets, uncovered jars, and toys. Drill drainage holes in tires used as swings.
- Scrub bird baths, pet dishes, and kiddie pools and refill with clean water at least twice weekly.
- Empty water from saucers under potted plants, and from trash baskets. Turn over wheelbarrows.
- Clean gutters, flat roofs, and air conditioner drains frequently.
- When watering lawns or gardens, try not to leave puddles. Drain or fill stagnant water pools, puddles, and drainage ditches around the home.
- Eliminate water-holding tree stumps, and fill holes in trees.
- Keep fish, such as goldfish, in ponds and water gardens to eat mosquito larvae.
- Keep window and door screens tight-fitting and in good repair.
- Store boats so they will not collect water.
- Maintain pools and hot tubs with proper chemicals and filtration.
- If you use covers over a pool, hot tub or boat, remove any water trapped on the covers after each rain.
- Repair leaky pipes and outside faucets so water does not collect.
- Keep grass and weeds mowed, especially on banks next to water, to reduce the adult mosquitoes' resting places.

ask the judge

Carolyn Moller
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Last year, I gave temporary guardianship of my minor child to a relative located in the Columbus area.

My circumstances have changed.

I want to terminate the temporary guardianship.

What do I have to do to legally regain custody of my child?

A: Most people think all that is necessary to terminate the guardianship is to pick the child up from the temporary guardian.

That act in and of itself is sufficient to terminate the temporary guardianship.

However, since the temporary guardianship was created by a court order that was issued by the probate court, it must be terminated by the issuance of a second court order by the same court.

In the first action, the temporary guardianship was created by the proposed guardian filing a petition in the probate court in the county where the child was living with the temporary guardian, and paying the appropriate filing fee.

This order is called Temporary Letters of Guardianship of the Person of a Minor ("Temporary Letters").

Now that you want to terminate the temporary guardianship, a second petition must be filed in the probate court that issued the letters by the minor child's natural guardian, usually the child's mother or father.

The second petition is called a "Petition for Dissolution of Temporary Letters of Guardianship of a Person of the Minor," and as with the first petition, there is a filing fee associated with the second petition.

At this point, the process can be quite easy, or it can be complicated, depending on each set of particular circumstances.

Remember, each case has its own unique facts and variables, so what worked for your neighbor may not work for you. Each case is different.

If possible, it is always best to do things the easy way, and usually the least expensive.

If everyone is in agreement that the temporary guardianship should be terminated.

Then all that is necessary is the consent of the temporary guardian, which is attached to the natural guardian's petition to the probate court.

The consent acknowledges the temporary guardian's notice of the petition, and waives all further notice that may be required by law.

This petition is filed in the same county that issued the temporary letters.

This consent allows the probate court to immediately enter and order dissolving the temporary letters, and the minor child is returned to the natural guardian.

The hard way, on the other hand, requires the natural guardian to provide at least 10 days notice of the probate court's intent to sign an order dissolving temporary letters pursuant to the natural guardian's petition to dissolve the temporary guardianship.

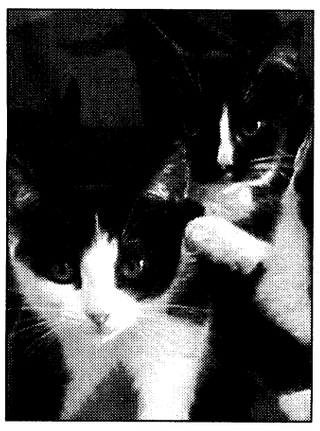
During this 10-day period, the temporary guardian may file an objection to the natural guardian's petition to dissolve the temporary guardianship.

If this happens, the probate court must transfer the entire file to the juvenile court located in that county in order to have a hearing on the matter.

The juvenile court makes its decision based on what is in the "best interest" of the minor child: to allow the child to remain with the temporary guardian, or should he or she be returned to the natural guardian.

Hearings of this nature can get quite expensive because usually each side is represented by their own civilian attorney, and a guardian ad litem, also an attorney, is appointed to represent the interests of the minor child.

Also, there can be additional costs to be borne by each party if the hearing requires the testimony of medical experts in order to determine what is in the best interest of the minor child.



However, if the temporary guardian does not file an objection to the natural parent's petition to terminate the temporary guardianship.

Then the probate court may issue the order terminating the temporary letters after the 10-day notice period.

Thereby returning custody of the minor child to the natural guardian.

For more information on this or other topics, call the Legal Assistance Office at 545-3282 or 545-3281, or go to Building 5 Friday mornings for an appointment.

different perspective," Widdicombe said. "Then we can pinpoint what we did good, what we did not so good and what we can do to improve our operation."

Though common practice elsewhere, Hughes said, this is the first time Fort Benning has practiced a full lock down and evacuation drill of this magnitude with an elementary school. Hughes said the drill was designed to test the school's internal operation procedures and readiness as well.

"An amount of practice and awareness raises questions and gives us answers about what we're doing right and what we need to do different," Hughes said. "It's about working out the bugs, so if this kind of situation ever occurs, we'll not encounter situations we haven't developed contingency plans for."

In the event of an actual crisis, Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of MPA's Law Enforcement Division, said he feels confident the various responders are prepared to move quickly and efficiently.

"It wouldn't do a bit of good to have the greatest plan, but never exercise it. We have to prepare for the worst-case scenario and then practice that plan," Kelley said. "At Fort Benning our emphasis has always been on school safety. There's nothing more important than our children."

Program: Helps children read

Maddox helped organize the program.

"In summer 1999, I called and asked about the summer program and was told there wasn't one running," Maddox said. After volunteering in libraries in Alaska and Germany, Maddox said she offered to help them get the program running again.

Last year, more than 40 children participated in the curriculum. This year, Youth Services will be partnering with Sayers in providing craft kits for the students. Maddox and Wahlstrom said they expect more participation this summer, after last season's successful program.

For children who want to participate with reading programs but aren't old enough, the library offers another option.

The preschool reading hour is 11 a.m. to noon on Tuesdays throughout the year. Debbie Vandenheuvel and daughters, Christiana, 4, and Hannah, 2, said they have enjoyed the younger program on several occasions.

"It was lots of fun and the girls liked the stories they chose," she said.

Daughter Christiana said, "I like all books. I just like to read."

That's just what the programs are trying to reinforce, Wahlstrom said.

The summer reading program will run from 10 to 11 a.m., June 20 to Aug. 1 on Wednesdays. Registration runs until June 14. Late registration will be held at the first session.

For more information, call Wahlstrom at 545-4911.

Pentacost refreshes concern for others

Chaplain (Capt.) David Codington
1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Pentecost traditionally has been remembered as the time when the Holy Spirit was poured out on the church.

Pentecost comes from the Greek word meaning 50th, because the Holy Spirit was sent 50 days after the Passover when Christ was crucified.

Before his death, Christ said, "The Comforter, the Holy Spirit, whom the Father will send in my name, will teach you all things and will remind you of everything I have said to you. Peace I leave with you; my peace I give you. I do not give to you as the world gives. Do not let your heart be troubled and do not be afraid," (John 14:26, 27).

We have Christ's promise that he will never leave us alone without his help. But we must be receptive to him.

I was stationed in Plattsburgh Air Force Base in upstate New York a number of years ago. It can get very cold there, and the temperature occasionally drops to 50 degrees below zero Fahrenheit. While I was there, during the month of December, it never got above zero.

While I was there, an elderly couple was found in their home, tragically frozen to death.

They were living very modestly, even poorly, and had not provided adequate heating for themselves. When their bodies were discovered, the man was found to have $20,000 in a money belt, wrapped around his waist.

Sometimes, we can be like that in our spiritual life. We hold on to the things that are not important, and are interested in our own agenda.

We become more concerned about what we can get for ourselves, rather than keeping focus on what is really important.

We are promised the comforter, the Holy Spirit, but we must go to God to receive him. We do have to answer God's invitation in order to share his blessings.

God's help and comfort is always available to anyone who asks for him for assistance.

As you begin each new day, especially during this period of Pentecost, commit yourself to God, make a deliberate effort to be committed to him.

Do not be like the couple who had the necessary resources available, but simply refused to use them.

Decisions not always easy to make

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Life would be so much easier if the decisions we made were obvious choices. Unfortunately, the decisions we make are not always clear cut.

We don't always have the easy choice between good and bad, right and wrong or black and white. Sometimes the choice we make is between murky shades of gray.

If we could look into the future, we could make better choices; but I am not a prophet. If we could read other people's minds and motivations, our ability to make decisions would be easier; but I am not a mind reader. If we could perceive things beyond the scope of our normal senses, we could select the best alternative; but I am not clairvoyant.

If you are not a prophet, a mind reader or a clairvoyant, here are some guidelines that can help you make the best decision.

First, gather the facts.

Second, explore your options. Be creative here. Don't limit yourself. Think outside the box.

Third, weigh the pros and cons of each option according to what is most important to you. If cost is the most important factor, then weigh that more than anything else.

Fourth, seek the counsel and wisdom of others. Don't expect to be an expert in everything. Talk to those who made a similar decision, and discover what they would do again or do differently.

Fifth, if the choice involves your family, consider the feelings and opinions of your spouse and children. Failure to consider their input will often lead to less than satisfactory choices.

Sixth, what option best supports your spiritual, ethical and moral values?

Don't forget to seek God's guidance through prayer, the study of Scripture and the spiritual counsel of your chaplain or religious leader.

USAMU hosts pistol competition

Interservice championship runs June 11-14

Paula J. Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

For the first time in decades, the Interservice Pistol Championship Matches will not be held at Camp Robinson, Ark.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning will conduct the 42nd Annual Interservice Pistol Championships June 11-14 at Phillips Range.

The matches are sponsored by the National Guard Marksmanship Training Center of Camp Robinson and registered with the National Rifle Association of America.

"We are extremely happy to host the Arkansas National Guard's 42nd annual Interservice Pistol Championships here at Fort Benning," said USAMU Chief of Competition Michael J. Behnke. "We anticipate approximately 115 shooters from all branches of the service to compete in the championships. It looks like there will be good competition. All of the four branches of the service, both active and reserve, have fielded great teams and the competition should be tough but exciting."

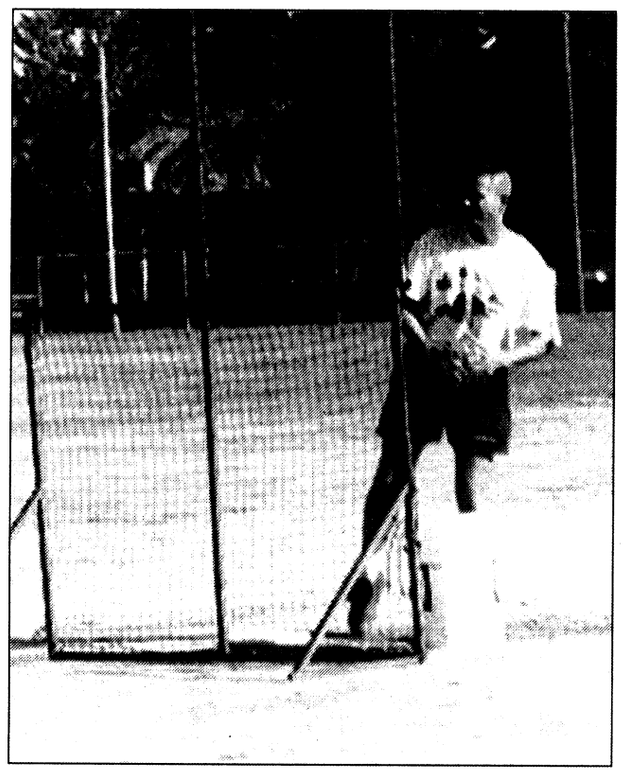
Each shooter will compete in a 900-point aggregate with each service weapon — .22-caliber, .45-caliber, center fire and service pistols; USAMU shooters use the modified M-9 in the service pistol category.

The 27 matches consist of slow-fire at 50 yards.

They also consist of timed fire and rapid fire at 25 yards and the National Match Course at both 25 and 50 yards.

First, second and third place individual and four-person team awards will be given in these matches.

"The championships will provide us with an excellent opportunity to test our skills against a field of the greatest military pistol shooters in the world," said USAMU Service Pistol Team Coach Ray Arredondo.



"Of course I hope we win, but no matter who ends up with the medals, each soldier should come away from this great event with improved marksmanship skills, increased confidence in the core combat task of shooting and an enhanced ability to teach marksmanship to fellow soldiers."

Association seeks sponsors, support

Photos by Rachel R. Garcia

Cpl. Jake Stims, 75th Ranger Regiment, above, and head coach, Capt. Ed Gawlik, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS), right, participate in batting practice.
The team, known as the Soldier's Baseball Association, holds its practices on Gowdy Field Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:45 to 7 p.m. in preparation for the upcoming baseball season.

Team searches for funding

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Fueled by a passion to play baseball, 35 dedicated Fort Benning players will be hitting the local streets for team sponsorship to continue playing the game they love.

This is the second season that the group of post soldiers and family members, known as the Soldier's Baseball Association, are searching off-post for funding.

The team must search off-post for funding, as MWR funds can not be used for this type of sporting event.

A common interest in the game has generated soldiers, spouses and sons from Fort Benning to band together and continue the baseball group.

The association has received sponsorship from such local businesses as The Cannon Brewpub, Ranger Joe's and Columbus Bank & Trust. More than $3,300 was raised last year to fund the team.

Besides allowing players to polish their skills, the team has seen players like 19-year-old Mike Young, continue their baseball careers at a collegiate level. Young played for Columbus State University this past year.

The team invites active-duty soldiers from all ranks and MOSs and family members to share the sport, as well as retain a piece of an American pastime.

Spc. Anthony Ferraioli, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, played for his unit's softball team in the past. But the sport isn't the fast-paced game he played with his family back in Staten Island, N.Y.

He said he enjoys the rules and tradition of baseball.

Ferraioli also said the lack of funds has not deterred the group from playing.

More than 90 people showed for last season's try-outs. It is these numbers, plus the dedication of their coach, that has kept the team inspired.

Coach and organizer for the team, Capt. Ed Gawlik, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS), continues to represent the association both on and off the field.

Last season, the team had just enough money to cover expenses, like registration costs and baseball gear. And with just $10 remaining from last year's pot, the team will use that money to purchase new baseballs.

Then the process of fundraising starts again.

While the group continues to practice in preparation for upcoming games, they still hope for post recognition — and post dollars — one day in the future.

"More funding would be good for the team, but I don't think it has deterred people from playing," said Cpl. Jake Stimson, 75th Ranger Regiment.

Spc. Michael Bernarding, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity, agreed.

"As long as there's a chance to play, we'll keep coming," Bernarding said.

The team practices on Gowdy Field on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 5:45 to 7 p.m.

For more information about the baseball association, contact Gawlik at soldiersbaseball @att.net or call 685-4903.

Post golf course receives renovations

Nine holes, nine tees get face lifts

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's MWR golf course is undergoing a renovation of nine greens and establishing nine forward tees to improve playability for its patrons.

The back nine holes of the Lakeside portion of the course will be getting a facelift during a project to refurbish the greens. The project includes renovating greens to U.S. Golf Association standards. Once complete each green will average 5,600 square feet, about double the size they are now. In addition, underground drainage and Tifeagle grass, the newest development in golf course turf grasses in warmer climates, is going to be used on the putting surface.

"There have been so many improvements since then, that the grass now pales in comparison," said Ray Meredith, golf course superintendent.

While maintenance is done daily, this will be the first time the course has seen a project of this magnitude since it's opening decades ago.

The total upgrade package will comprise nine greens, 17 bunkers and 11 forward tees.

The first step of this renovation was completed in 1999 when the fairways on these holes were redone with Bermuda grass.

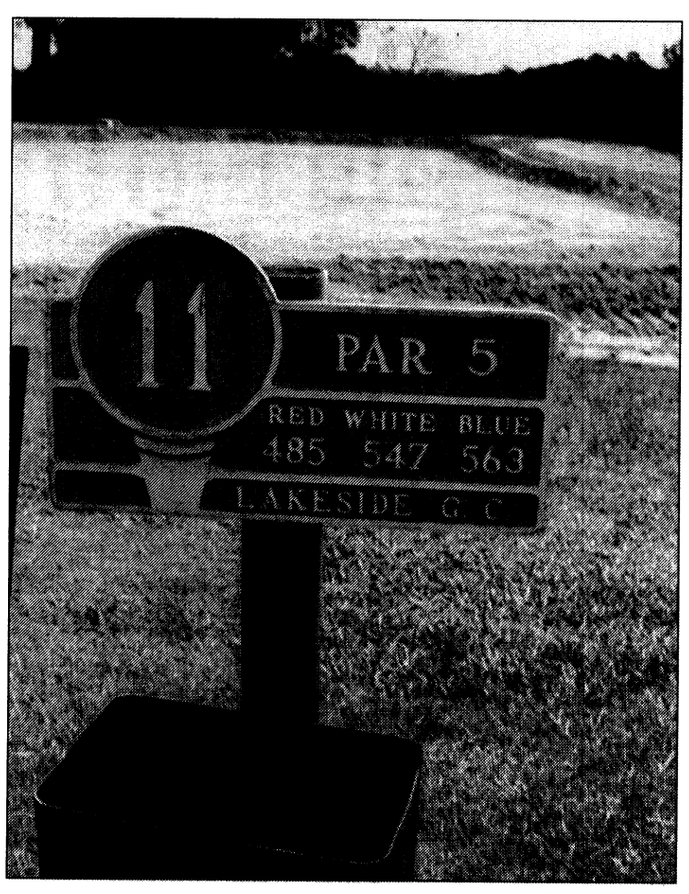
Now, with the greens being upgraded, these nine holes will have undergone a complete modernization.

Lakeside was selected due to the challenge for the golfer and its location allowed the architect open areas to design larger, more modern putting surfaces with a minimum of environmental impact.

"Once this project is complete, golfers will enjoy playing on the newest grasses available for golf courses in the South," Garrity said. "These holes will be comparable to any new golf course in this area."

During the interim, 27 holes will remain open to the public.

Every 20 years or so, a project like this is usually done to keep the grounds fresh and for the course to remain consistent with new technology, Garrity said.



"A golf course lives and dies on the condition of the course. If a facility is successful 80 percent of its success can be attributed to the condition of the greens," Garrity said.

"A golf course's reputation and best marketing tool is by word of mouth. Good greens equals return customers, bad greens will put a course out of business."

And with the opening of several new golf courses in the general vicinity during the past decade, maintenance is increasingly important, said Col. Arch Arnold, president of the golf council.

"I'm really optimistic that this investment we're making in the

USAMU's sixth soldier highlighted

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

A soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will be highlighted in the June 4 issue of Sports Illustrated in the "Faces in the Crowd" column.

USAMU shotgun shooter Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery will be featured by Sports Illustrated for winning the Gold Medal in Skeet at the World Shotgun Shooting Championships in Cairo, Egypt, May 9.

Dulohery

Besides winning the 2001 World Skeet Championship, Dulohery also brought home the Team Bronze Medal in Skeet for being a member of the U.S. Skeet Team that took third place in the World Championships.

Dulohery is the sixth USAMU shooter to be selected for the "Faces in the Crowd" column in the past five years.

Scramble winners announced

Larry Cruise
Fort Benning Golf Club

The winners of the 2001 Fort Benning Golf Club Memorial Day two-person scramble were released Tuesday.

The winners of the first flight were Roger Garrity and Fred Wadsworth Sr. with the runners-up being Mike Ray and Fernando Pedroza.

Ron Martere and Bob Greenfield were victorious over the second flight while Bob Osbourne and Paul Leonard came in second place.

The victors of the third flight, Lee Henderson and Mary Henderson prevailed over the second place contestants, C.D. Morgan and Don Russell.

Sports festival premiere

Asheville Public Affairs Office

ASHEVILLE, N.C. — A new outdoor adventure festival premieres this summer in the highest mountain peaks in the east.

Scheduled today through Sunday in Asheville, the Mountain Sports Festival will feature a variety of outdoor sporting competitions as well as exhibitions and clinics. Events include mountain bike racing, climbing, a triathlon, a road race and trail run, disc golf and a touring and recreational boat symposium.

"This event has potential to grow into a renowned adventure sports event. We see it as the emerging Gorge Games of the eastern U.S.," said Stuart Cowles, festival organizer.

As early as the 1800s the mountain city of Asheville enjoyed a reputation as a select locale in which to relax or to take a cure with exercise and restorative air. Even the earliest travelers enjoyed hiking or horseback riding through the Blue Ridge peaks and valleys, and today the western North Carolina mountains remain a haven for outdoor enthusiasts.

With its backwoods trails and well-worn paths, mountainous rock faces and indoor climbing walls, the Asheville area easily pleases both the beginning outdoor adventurer and the thrill-seeker with a variety of outdoor pursuits.

The Mountain Sports Festival is expected to bring both adventure sports competitors and onlookers from all over the southeast.

Sporting events and clinics will take place in and around Asheville and Asheville City and County Plaza in the heart of downtown will serve as the festival's home base, or Festival Center.

• Mountain biking competitions for beginners and experts will occur today through Sunday at the Alexander Bike Facility on six miles of trails devoted exclusively to biking. The single-track course was designed by mountain bikers for mountain bikers.

• Saturday, ClimbMax Climbing Center, in downtown Asheville, will host the regional finals of the Junior Competitive Climbers Association and a climbing demonstration.

This climbing course features three inflatable tubes, 30-feet high, covered with hand and footholds arranged to challenge beginning, intermediate and advanced climbers.

Updated information and event specifics are posted at the festival web site, www.mountainsportsfestival.com.

For more information, write The Mountain Sports Festival at P.O. Box 7521, Asheville, NC 28802, call (828) 285-9935 or e-mail at info@mountainsportsfestival.com.

golf course is going to bring us up to the standard of being the best installation in the world," he said.

"The last couple of years, they've gotten really serious about modernizing our course and facilities."

DCA plans to upgrade another nine holes next season. A master plan and design has already been developed, Garrity said.

This will give Fort Benning golfers 18 new Tifeagle greens, bunkers and tees.

"We're trying to make the course more playable as well as continuing to make the course challenging for everyone," Garrity said.

The greens project is just part of a plan to bring the course up to par with other courses in the area.

By August 2002, the golf course 18-hole renovation will be complete, Garrity said.

Meanwhile, an ecology project is also underway. Fort Benning was chosen as a test site to implement more environmentally compatible courses.

The project will allow wildlife to flourish and for certain areas to grow under more natural conditions, Garrity said.

The implementation will cut down on operating costs, such as those associated with mowing and upkeep of certain areas.

The ultimate task will be to draft an environmental resource management handbook to be used for military golf courses.

The project will remain on the books for one year, with a study after its test time.

"The response has been positive. We have a skeptical bunch," Meredith joked, "but the responses we have had are very encouraging."

And with the popularity of golf on the rise across the country and more golfers playing on the course each year, the improvements will be seen for decades to come, Arnold said.

Patrons are reminded to make weekend tee times. For more information on rates to book a tee time, call the golf course at number 687-1940.

Skier: Volunteers Time

racing competitively on the slopes while in college, Beson said it was a dream of hers to be on the slopes during the Olympics.

She said she visited the Web site www.SLC2002.com and found out about the chance for her to be on the course.

"This was exactly what I wanted to do," she said. "It was a whole lot better than getting parking lot duty or taking tickets someplace where you couldn't even see the action going on. I'll be right next to the race course."

Beson, along with the other volunteers will put up crash fences the entire length of the nearly two and a half mile long downhill course. In places the protective nets will be layered three deep to stop any skier who should lose control and fall.

And that is bound to happen along the course as racers barrel along at speeds close to, at times, 100 miles per hour on the course that drops nearly 3,000 feet on a slope that reaches a 74 percent grade.

Beson

She said she will also shovel and rake the loose snow off the course after racers pass her position.

"The turnaround has to be fast," she said. "Any delay can cost (the television networks covering the race) millions."

Getting the loose snow off fast is also important so racers keep their edges as the fly down the mountain.

"They like it as icy, as hard and as smooth as possible," she said.

Should a racer lose his edge on the loose snow, he may lose control and crash into the nets.

Beson got her first taste of the course in March when she volunteered to do the same responsibilities during the World Cup and Disabled World Cup races.

"The ParaOlympics was a whole different world," she said. "They ski so well without all the advantages that we have. It was really heartwarming."

During the World Cup, racers made two practice runs and then prepared to race the following day. That never happened, she said.

"When it came time to actually get the race on, we had three straight days of snow," Beson said. "In places it snowed three feet. We had some of the paid staff up on the mountain at 2 a.m. trying to rake the snow away from the course so we could race the next day, but it didn't do any good."

Although it was a disappointing World Cup, Beson said she is more than ready for the Olympics.

"Since I was growing up and in elementary school, they've talked about how nice it would be to have the winter Olympics in Salt Lake City," she said. "It's a great place to have the Olympics."

Leaders meet for conference

Infantry soldiers share ideas, plan future

Spc. Chris Bray
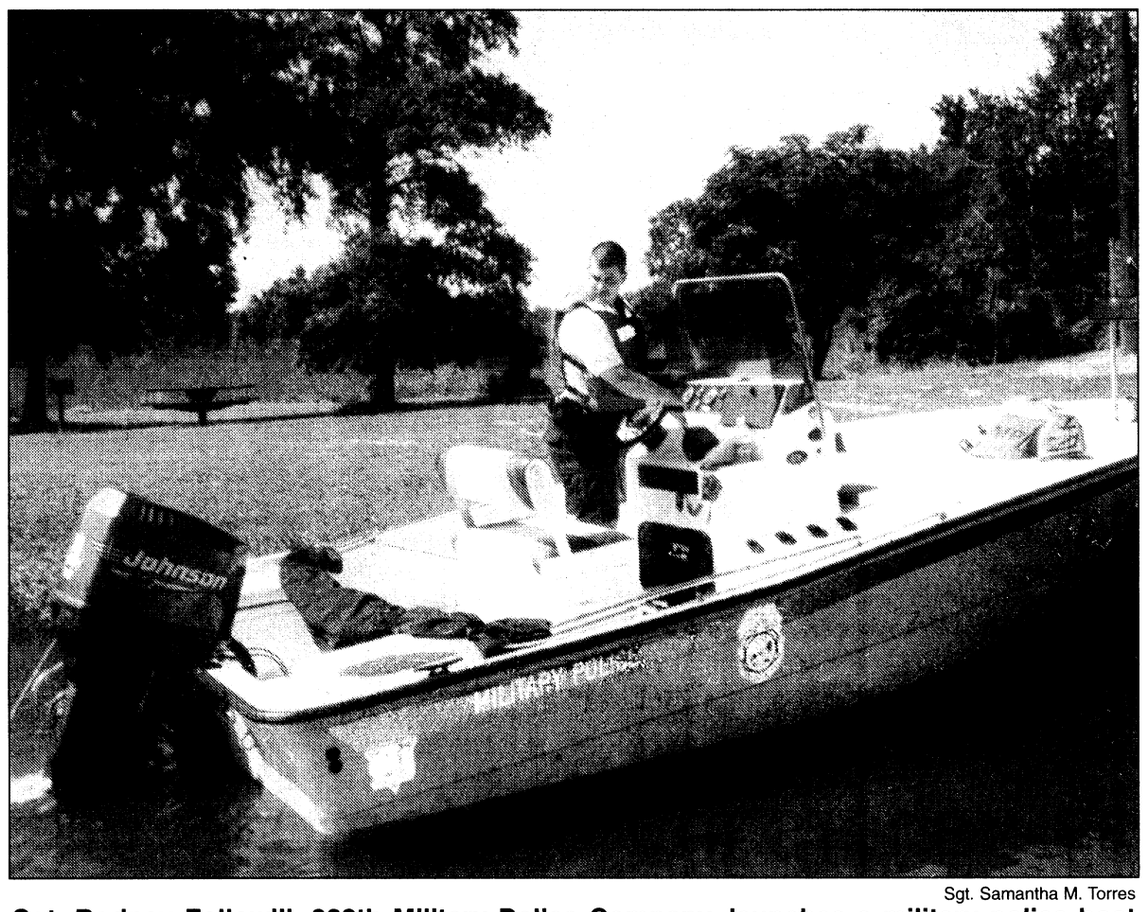
29th Infantry Regiment

The U.S. Army Infantry is all over the world. The U.S. Army Infantry School, on the other hand, can only be found in southeastern Georgia. And the infantry as a whole can't afford to lose touch with its center.

"Decisions that are made here, and the results of the discussions that happen here, have a fundamental effect on activity in the field," said Lt. Col. Mark Fields, chief of the Office of Infantry Proponency.

Ensuring that the fact of physical separation doesn't lead to a disconnect in training and doctrine, Fort Benning hosts the annual Infantry Conference, a gathering of leaders from every part of the branch. The conference provides those leaders with a chance to share ideas and look to the future, but it also has a more immediate relevance to the community that leads the way in training and doctrine.

"The Infantry Conference is a way that the Infantry School stays linked to the force in the field," Fields said. "They tell us what's working, what's not and how we can best support them."



The 2001 Infantry Conference is Monday through Thursday. The professional leadership of the Infantry branch will gather at the conference to discuss the Army's future in a changing geopolitical environment, and will also have a chance to see new military technology showcased in more than a hundred vendor displays. Discussions and presentations will cover questions of doctrine, organization, training, equipment, and the needs of the individual soldier.

The theme for this year's Infantry Conference is "Army Transformation and Future Operations."

Gen. Eric Shinseki, Army Chief of Staff, is scheduled to discuss the organization's ongoing transformation, while Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, chief of infantry and Fort Benning post commander, will present the annual State of the Infantry address.

Pending final consideration of the address, Le Moyne is expected to discuss the consolidation of the 11-series career management field; the leadership of the Infantry Center has prepared for that consolidation with a top-to-bottom review of infantry training. Le Moyne's anticipated address will cover assignment and professional development issues for 11-series soldiers in light of the changes. Also among the chief of infantry's expected remarks will be a discussion of new equipment — such as the M-1 A3 Bradley Fighting Vehicle and the Javelin anti-tank weapon — and training

MPs keep waterways safe

Summer heat brings boat patrols

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Memorial Day weekend, 30 members of the Fort Benning Military Police and Department of Defense police officers began patrolling the waterways on post to assist local authorities with the increase in water recreational activities. The two-man teams will throttle along the South River Bend to the Waterworks off post. The patrol teams will launch one of two center consoled fiberglass patrol and rescue boats from the Uchee Creek boat ramp every weekend and summer holiday until Labor Day.

"The purpose of the patrols is to continue to ensure a secure environment for those who live and work in the area," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement Division.

For several years the military police have assisted the local and state authorities in providing teams to patrol the river on post. According to Kelley, the team's main concern is safety for soldiers, their families and neighbors on and around post.

He said recreational boaters are required to wear a personal flotation device. Everyone in a boat

Center closure plans discussed

Positions transferred to other centers

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

It was announced last week that the the Southeast Region Civilian Personnel Center will close early next year and work at the center will be transferred to the South Central CPOC in Huntsville, Ala.

As a result, 216 jobs at the CPOC will be affected either by transferral to the South Central facility or by being eliminated.

While the actual closing date for the CPOC isn't scheduled until March 31, already plans are being made to ease the transition of jobs from one center to another, said Pat Gentry, director for the Southeast Region CPOC.

"We are going to get a transition plan put together by our headquarters within the next couple of weeks that will lay out, with a little more definition, how the transfer will work," he said.

In the transfer, many of the positions here will be transferred to other centers, Gentry said.

"All but the 16 positions that will not be needed will be transferred to other facilities," he said.

Not all of the transferred positions will be in Alabama though, they will be spread out among the remaining CPOCs.

"Even though they (South Central CPOC) are getting the work, they are not getting all of our positions. Other centers will increase in size of their service population, so new positions will be needed," Gentry said.

The Southeast CPOC services 18 installations and 30,000 civilian employees working for the Army. That work load will be transferred to the Huntsville facility.

Even with jobs pretty much guaranteed, Gentry said there are still many problems to be faced with the move.

"We had a town hall meeting last week in one of the classrooms in Infantry Hall. We briefed the employees on the concept as we understand it — we would be closing this CPOC and moving the work to South Central," he said. "We also discussed that for all of the folks at the working level, there is an equivalent position for them with very few exceptions.

"Now we are getting to the point where people will have to make decisions in their lives about moving," Gentry said. "When we set up the CPOC, some people migrated over here from the old Civilian Personnel Office. A lot of these are floating people who work here, worked there, have never worked any place else, so

Infantry soldiers to be awarded

Event highlights conference

Spc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

One of the major highlights of the annual Infantry Conference is the presentation of the Doughboy Awards, which recognize infantry soldiers for their contributions to the branch.

This year, retired Gen. Paul F. Gorman and retired Sergeant Major of the Army George W. Dunaway will be presented with the Doughboy Award by Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne.

"As Chief of Infantry, I am proud to present these two distinguished combat infantrymen to you as the recipients of the 2001 Doughboy Award," Le Moyne said in an announcement.

Gorman served in the military for 40 years, following a Navy enlistment during World War II with four years at the U.S. Military Academy. He fought as a platoon leader in the Korean War, and held both battalion and brigade command in Vietnam. He later commanded the 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized) and the U.S. Southern Command.

Dunaway served three decades, beginning with his enlistment in the National Guard in 1940. He was called to active duty in 1941, and served as a platoon sergeant with the 517th Combat Team in France during World War II. In Vietnam, he served with the 5th Special Forces group and was the command sergeant major of the 101st Airborne Division. He retired in 1970 as the second sergeant major of the Army.

Presentation of the Doughboy Awards will take place at an informal dinner, as part of the 2001 Infantry Conference.

The event will take place at the Fort Benning Officers Club Wednesday.

Doughboy awardees are selected by a vote taken among lieutenant generals, generals, and their command sergeants major.

commentary

There are three televisions and three VCRs in front of my desk. They're programmed to tape newscasts and any other programs Fort Benning may have had a role in.

They're also pressed into service from time to time to keep up with breaking news. I was tuning CNN in the other day, and that's how I caught the last 10 minutes of the National Spelling Bee.

Next to lunch and recess, spelling was my best subject. Not much of a testament to my academic career, I know, but it's the truth. I did OK as far as spelling tests and spelling bees at my district level, but that was as far as it went.

I had better things to do than "study" by reading a dictionary. Dictionaries are great for what they do, but there's not much of a plot.

At the national competition, a smart speller can ask for more information about the word, a real advantage. I would just be stalling for time.

It wouldn't matter how many times the pronouncer repeated the word, used it in a sentence, read its definition, gave alternate pronunciations and definitions, told me what part of speech it was and its language of origin, I wouldn't have lasted two rounds with those kids. (Which is better than the no rounds I would have lasted through in the Geography Bee.)

My hat's off to all 248 national finalists, and to the spellers at all the levels in between. Spelling is not something we take lightly, or take for granted in our office, no matter what you may have heard. On the other side of the coin, those kids were at a distinct disadvantage.

It's not fair that they were asked to spell words that they'll never use again, except for when someone asks what word they spelled wrong when they competed in the National Spelling Bee.

Take, for example, "obmutescence," which means keeping silent or mute. Around here, we just call that "being quiet." No mom I know has ever said, "Excuse me while I go check on the kids. They're being just a little too obmutescent back there."

Or how about "hamartia," which means a defect in character? Isn't that about the same as "he's not 'right'?" And what about "resipiscence," meaning a change of heart or mind? Isn't "he changed his mind" instead of "he resipiscented" a lot better?

"Saltimbocca" I knew, only because I've seen it on a menu at an Italian restaurant. I knew "nisei" too, because it's a common expression where I grew up, but "arnica?" "Hyoid?" "Fimbrillate?"

This year's winning word was "succadaneum," meaning "one that succeeds to the place of another." I would call that "being the next guy up."

I looked up some winning words from past competitions, and they weren't much better. When was the last time you saw a "bedizenment" under a "plenilune?" Served "advocaat" at a "Bacchanalian" event? Engaged in a little "terpsichore?"

At least I could work those words into sentences. I'm still working on "amygdaline," "saurophagous," and "propinquity."

But enough of that. I wouldn't want you to think I was querulential.

Community needs to arrest gossip

Bridgett Siter

commentary

Stowers Elementary School administrators and Fort Benning's MPs are stepping up patrols of neighborhood paths in an effort to arrest a growing problem — gossip.

MPs on bikes, members of the Community Oriented Police Squad, won't be issuing tickets for loose lips, but if bad gossip was a crime, I'm thinking they could fill a paddy wagon.

It all started with one Davis Hill resident's unfortunate encounter on a school path — a legitimate concern. Now I hear horrid tales of sexual molestation, gang violence and a monster called "the clown rapist," who only strikes when Retreat plays from post loudspeakers every evening at 5:30 p.m.

So far no one's been able to substantiate any of these rumors. The conversation usually goes something like this:

"So, did you hear about that kid attacked on the school path?"

"Well, I've been hearing rumors. Who was it?"

"I don't know, but my neighbor said it was a 4-year-old girl attacked by an older boy."

"Really, how old was he?"

"About 5 or 6. I'm not sure."

"Hmmm. When did this happen?"

"Well, she couldn't say for sure, but she heard about it when she first got here two years ago. And by the way, did you hear about that crazy clown?"

It seems some overzealous parents are repeating rumors of madness and mayhem without checking their sources.

They're fostering a sense of unease among their neighbors and trivializing the legitimate concerns of good, honest community members.

Brings to mind an old HeeHaw spoof where a handful of HeeHaw Honeys gather round a wash basin to gossip and giggle at other folks' expense.

"No you'll never hear one of us repeating gossip, so you'd better be sure and listen close the first time," they sing in unison.

Who's it hurting, you ask? For one, an already over-taxed COPS squad. They work very hard, pedaling two-wheelers up hill and down, day in and day out, in all kinds of weather, and I'd sure hate to think we might be sending them on a goose chase.

If you have a legitimate concern, don't hesitate to call the MPs.

They're the good guys, here to help chase away the boogey man and keep our neighborhoods safe for our children.

But do us all a favor — think twice before you repeat gossip. Question your source. Ask 'who,' 'what,' 'when' and 'where.'

And if he or she can't answer those questions, please don't repeat the story.

Army birthday ushers in new force

The Continental Army formed with the goal of ending tyranny and winning our freedom 226 years ago.

Since the end of the Revolution, American soldiers, imbued with the spirit of the original patriots, have pledged their allegiance to our nation through their sacrifices in uniform. Today, all our forces — heavy and light, active, Guard, and Reserve — share the heritage of the Continental Army.

Whether standing a dangerous watch in Korea, safeguarding schoolchildren in Bosnia, or fighting wildfires in Idaho, you are the finest men and women the nation has to offer.

The thousands of you on point around the globe ensure the freedom our forefathers fought and died for, and do the tough jobs that maintain our American way of life. In the remotest corners of the world, you command respect because you are American soldiers.

The key to the Army's success has always been both its reverence for the traditions that make our nation great and its flexibility and willingness to change. Our Army is transforming to an Objective Force that will meet the challenges of the 21st century.

This new force will be as lethal and survivable as our heavy forces, but also as responsive and deployable as our light forces.

On this, the first Army birthday of the new millennium, as a tangible symbol of our transformation, our unity, and our commitment to excellence as the Army, we will begin wearing the black beret. The color black represents the heritage of both our heavy and our light formations. It is the black of night that hid Washington as he crossed the Delaware and the black of the grease that kept our tanks on track in Operation Desert Storm.

The Army flash commemorates our heritage as an Army, bearing both the colors of George Washington's Continental Army at the time of the deciding victory of the Revolution, as well as the 13 white stars of our nation's 13 original colonies.

You represent what is most noble about our nation: liberty, freedom and unity. As the symbol of our transformed Army, you are, and will continue to be, respected by your allies, feared by your opponents, and esteemed by the American people.

Your courage, dedication to duty, and selfless service to the nation will remain the hallmark you, the soldiers of the U.S. Army, carry into the 21st century.

Historic buildings to be restored for museum

Gen. Patton's headquarters part of collection

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Drive down Bergen Street behind the National Infantry Museum and it may take a second to remember what decade it is.

The street is lined with buildings from the World War II era, two that once housed Gen. George S. Patton's headquarters and sleeping accommodations.

Several buildings were relocated in 1992 from Sand Hill and other post locations to save them from demolition.

Now the National Infantry Foundation, in cooperation with the Army and the National Infantry Museum, have initiated restoration work on the buildings. The work began after an extended period of planning and obtaining the required approvals and permits.

Eventually exhibits pertaining to this era in history may be installed and on display to the public. Another option is to make several of the buildings into classrooms for soldiers, said Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum.

"I can't think of a more appropriate place for having classes," Hanner said. "I think it's ideal to have something from one of the largest events in the world's history,"

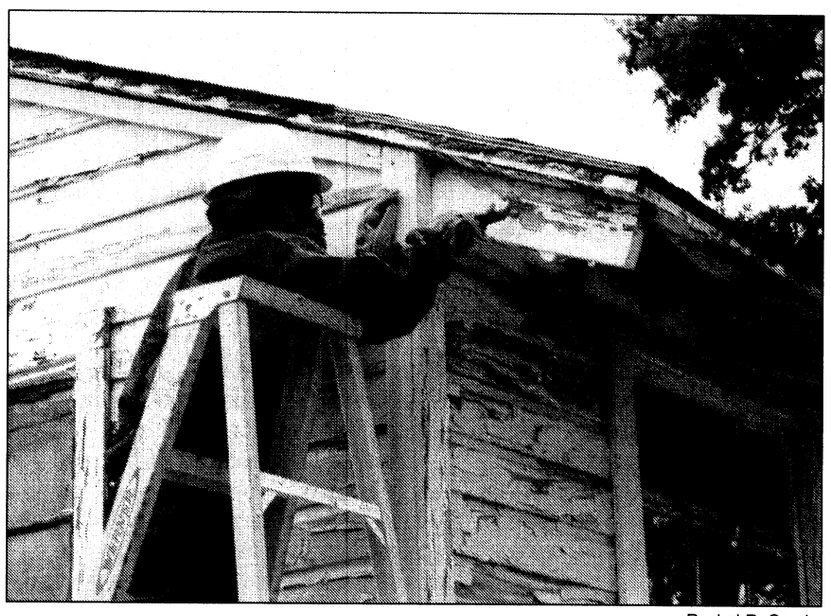
The first phase of work, which began last month, is the removal of hazardous material from the buildings. Asbestos and lead-based paint were used in the original construction and in concurring years when the buildings were maintained.

The price tag on the first phase of the project is about $120,000. A large portion of the bill came from individual grants, like those from Frank Lumpkin, Jr. Lumpkin, who died last year, was a private citizen who donated thousands of dollars to community projects.

The second phase will be to restore the buildings and count them among the 30,000 items already on exhibit at the National Infantry Museum.

While no absolute date is set for the completion of the project, project manager Randy Rivinus said the first phase should be done by the end of the summer.

Hanner said it's important to have the structures available for the thousands of Fort Benning soldiers who pass through the area each year and the public.



"Generations are going to forget," Hammer said, "when the battlefields are 10,000 miles away from here."

The structures may eventually find a new home down the road, if a proposed site project for a new museum becomes available. Barry Lord, of Lord Cultural Resources Inc., was hired in March to develop a plan for a proposed museum. Lord should have the master plan completed by the end of the year.

This new facility may stand on a proposed site between Benning Boulevard and South Lumpkin Road, which includes about 90 acres owned by Fort Benning and 124 acres owned by the city of Columbus.

Options being considered for the stretch of land include a reunion hall for military organizations, a memorial hall, a parade field and the World War II company streets, featuring the restored buildings.

The new facility may spotlight a World War II glider, jeeps, a landing craft and other items which are all included in the museum's holdings. Currently there isn't room to display all of the items.

Rachel R. Garcia

Elfido Morales scrapes paint off one of several World War II buildings. Restoration work recently began on the structures.

"It was just time to do something about it, or lose the items to other museums that can take care of them," Hanner said.

In the interim, restoration work will commence on the World War II era buildings.

MP checkpoints to help tighten installation security

Measures mandated by Shinseki

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

The Directorate of Public Safety will begin random vehicle checkpoints next month to verify post registration in preparation of increased security Armywide.

While there is no known direct threat to Fort Benning or the area, increased security measures will be taken to ensure the safety of soldiers, family members and the work force on post. Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Eric Shinseki mandated Army installations begin mandatory registration of vehicles and tighter access control.

Fort Benning has submitted a study to TRADOC citing ways to gate and fence Fort Benning per the Department of Army directive. A process action team consisting of members from more than 20 agencies on post identified key concerns and created a course of action plan last month.

The mandate ordered post commanders to begin access control immediately within available resources.

As a result of the directive, MP checkpoints are the first phase in a wave of security measures to verify vehicle registration. The construction of six permanent access points and fencing will begin after the receipt of funding, said Provost Marshal Col. GT Myers.

The cost for implementation of these requirements costs millions of dollars.

"Fort Benning is the fourth largest post in CONUS, so this is a big mission," Myers said.

The completion of the six permanent access control points after the receipt of funds would take about six months, Myers said. The Army is the only one of the four services that currently does not routinely control vehicle access.

The mandate also directs commanders to tighten control near high-risk targets, such as places with a high concentration of people.

The checkpoints will ensure individuals coming to post have legitimate business.

The plan calls for six permanent access points to be equipped with temporary passes.

An additional 14 gates at 11 locations will be added and 25 other roads leading onto the installation will be permanently closed using troop unit construction from the 36th Engineer Group.

Other resources needed to handle the task are barriers, multiple light sets valued at more than $7,800 each and a manned force of some 109 DA civilian police officers.

"The Army is looking at maybe increasing the number of MPs in the Army to accomplish this mission," Myers said.

However even if this receives approval, Fort Benning would not see the added numbers for about three years.

Post directors are launching a media campaign in the interim to educate the tricommunity public on the status of the project.

"People need to know why and how it will effect them. It's important to know we are not closing post, but are controlling access onto post," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, Law Enforcement Division. "Picture entering air force bases and that's what we'll look like in the near future."

As in the past, the Fort Benning public is urged to register their vehicles.

"I would urge people who live on post or assigned to Fort Benning, be they civilian employees, contractors or soldiers and their family members, if they have not registered their vehicle, to please go ahead and do that very soon so that the inconvenience at checkpoints will be limited," Myers said.

Those needing to register their vehicle should visit Vehicle Registration in Building 2637.

Some dietary supplements could be dangerous

Physicians warn about dangers of 'stacking'

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

More and more soldiers are using dietary supplements that may have harmful effects.

Col. Lonnie Vona, chief of staff, issued a safety alert in April addressing the use of dietary supplements, many of which contain the substance ephedra.

Ephedra is an herb that stimulates the nervous and cardiovascular systems, constricts blood vessels and increases heart rate and blood pressure. The herb causes dehydration and can cause abnormal heart rhythms, cardiac arrest, dizziness, seizures, insomnia and death.

Ephedra is in many common brand name supplements found in many local nutrition stores.

In his alert, Vona urged leaders to take the initiative and help soldiers make informed decisions about the substances they put into their body.

According to Vona, soldiers can help reduce their risk of becoming victims by seeking reliable information and reading product labels.

Vona advised soldiers to take only the recommended dosage of supplements, to consult a health provider before taking them, and most importantly, avoid taking supplements during pregnancy and while breast-feeding.

"Dietary supplements are not proven safe by the Food and Drug Administration," Vona said in the alert.

Some units have banned supplements to ensure soldiers do not become victims.

The Infantry Training Brigade is one of these, having banned the use of all dietary supplements both to cadre and trainees.

Maj. Karen O'Brien, director of the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Residency Program, said one of the largest dangers of using supplements comes from 'stacking.'

She defined stacking as a combination of ephedra, aspirin and caffeine in pill, power bar or drink form.

The three different substances work together to increase performance, but also raise blood pressure, increase heart and body heat rates, and in some cases can cause death, O'Brien said.

"A lot of the effect is a placebo," said Maj. Mark Williams, primary care sports medicine consultant, MACH Family Practice. "The key to improving performance is changing workout programs.

"The best thing to do is eat a well-balanced diet."

Williams advises soldiers taking multi-vitamins and supplements to follow the directions and watch for adverse effects closely.

"Nearly 50 percent of the soldiers I ask are taking supplements," Williams said. "We have a high potential for problems."

> "What's good for the American general population is not always good for the soldier. It's each soldier's responsibility to know what they're putting into their bodies."
> Maj. Mark Williams
> Martin Army Community Hospital

However, Fort Benning has not had a death on post related to these products, although many soldiers do take substances such as creatine.

Creatine is a liver product that is stored in skeletal muscles and the heart. It is often used to increase energy production in muscles.

Williams said soldiers don't see supplements like creatine for what it is, a potentially dangerous substance.

"What's good for the American general population is not always good for the soldier," Williams said. "It's each soldier's responsibility to know what they're putting into their bodies.

"If soldiers have questions, (they should) talk to their primary care provider," he said. "Ask the questions and check out reliable sources."

Reliable information about these and other dietary supplements can be found in the Soldiers online magazine at www.dtic.mil/soldiers/HotTopics/HTNov2000/NovHT. pdf; at the Food and Drug Administrations Web site at www.fda.gov, or by calling the FDA at (888) INFO-FDA.

Camelbak rules laid out

Drinking system authorized in areas of post

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Georgia days are getting longer and hotter, posing a greater need for leaders to watch soldiers' hydration levels closer.

Many soldiers are using hydration systems, such as the Camelbak, to keep their bodies cool and beat the heat this season.

One problem with this is that according to Army Regulation 670-1, Uniform Wear and Appearance, hydration systems are only authorized for wear in the desert battle dress uniform. However, the command here has expanded on the policy.

Command Sgt. Maj. Miles Retherford of the U.S. Army Infantry School said the hydration systems are authorized for use anywhere that is not a cantonment area.

Cantonment areas are the barracks, office areas, etc.

The hydration systems are authorized for use in training areas only — rifle ranges, confidence courses, and during field exercises.

Some units on post, such as 75th Ranger Regiment, have purchased hydration systems for their soldiers as a unit issue item that remains at the unit when the soldier departs for another unit.

Soldiers going through basic combat training or infantry basic training are not authorized by their brigades to use hydration systems.

"The bottom line is that because (hydration systems are not) a standard issue item, we have no standard for wear," Retherford said.

Retherford said he's not sure if the Army will adopt hydration systems to replace the one-quart canteen because it would be difficult to monitor a soldier's consumption of water and because there is no Army standard for uniformity and cost.

"Two one-quart canteens have been successful (in the Army) for 50 years," Retherford said. "I don't think they're going anywhere soon."

Currently Army regulation doesn't specify the appearance of hydration systems, therefore leaders are not authorized to do so themselves.

The bottom line is camelbak is not a Common Tables of Allowance item and is not currently authorized for wear.

Retherford said in his opinion, the most important thing for soldiers to remember while trying to hydrate themselves is to "maintain intake of food and water at a reasonable rate."

Senate confirms new secretary of the Army

Army News Service

Thomas E. White became the 18th Secretary of the Army May 31 after being nominated by President George W. Bush May 1 and confirmed by the Senate May 24.

At his confirmation hearing before the Senate Armed Services Committee, White identified four objectives he will pursue as Secretary of the Army in support of the President and the Secretary of Defense.

"The first objective is to invest in people. We must attract, develop and retain America's best and brightest," he said. " We must provide for the quality of life and well-being of soldiers, Department of Defense civilians, veterans, and their families. In short, there is no more important investment than our investment in people — it is an imperative.

"The second objective is to assure readiness," White said. "Assuring readiness today means a full commitment to modernizing our equipment and weapons to maintain the qualitative edge afforded by advances in technology, recapitalizing the systems we need in the near and midterm, fully integrating the active and reserve components, fully manning our combat and support units, and managing the mission cycle of units to improve the operational and personnel tempo of our people and systems. ... I am committed to readiness in the broadest sense.

"The third objective," said White, "is to transform the entire Army. Transformation encompasses every aspect of our Army.

"It is more than just an Interim Armored Vehicle, or a beret or a Future Combat System. Every aspect of the Army doctrine, organization, training, leadership, materiel and equipment, recruiting and advertising, acquisition, infrastructure, and much more must all change together in a holistic manner," White said.

"The final objective is adopting sound business practices. ... We must share the burden of achieving the military capabilities America needs and do so in an affordable manner," he said.

"To that end I will take a hard look at opportunities for increased outsourcing and privatization of noncore functions," White said to the committee.

Conference: Allows leaders to share ideas about future

developments involving both Ranger School and the Basic Officer Leaders Course.

More than 52 general officers have confirmed their attendance, as well as nearly 80 colonels and lieutenant colonels and 24 sergeants major.

Reflecting the significance of the event to both Fort Benning and the entire infantry profession, a staff of 20 officers, NCOs, and civilians has worked full-time on conference preparation since early May. More than 100 additional Fort Benning soldiers will join the effort in the final days before the conference begins — primarily to serve as drivers and escorts for visiting officers — and stay on the job until the event is successfully completed.

"It went off without a hitch last year," said Sgt. 1st Class Gerald Hightower, operations NCOIC for the Infantry Conference. "This year, we're continuing to improve it — we're making our own program, so that when next year's team comes, all they have to do is open the book to page one and go down the list."

"I think it's going to go well," Hightower said.

It usually does.

"It works," said Fields. "It's always a great dialogue."

The final day of the conference will also be the 226th anniversary of the infantry, which will be celebrated with an 8:30 a.m. cake cutting ceremony. Also scheduled for the event are an informal dinner and a golf tournament.

CPOC: Closure will move work, jobs to other locations

this is sort of a problematic experience for them.

"They have families, they have friends and relatives in the area," he said.

"They have never made a move before so it's hard for them to visualize leaving. Others have just settled here for some time and don't want to move," he added. "We are extremely sensitive to the human side of this."

Karen Webb, deputy director of the CPOC, said help will be available for those who decide to move in response to this human side.

"When we have more information, we intend to have some training sessions for people who haven't moved before," she said.

"We'll talk about what entitlements they will have and answer as many questions as we can."

Gentry said those who decide to make the move to other centers will be entitled to full PCS moving expenses.

There may be options for those who do not wish to move. These may include early retirement and voluntary separation incentive pay.

For now, work will continue as usual while details are worked out.

"We want the transition to take place in an orderly fashion. We also need to remember our basic mission — to support the civilians in the southeast region and take care of business as we make this transition," Gentry said.

More information on the CPOC consolidation is available at Civilian Personnel On Line, www.cpol.army.mil.

Inquiries can also be made via phone, 1-866-748-4636.

Patrols: Keep water lovers safe during summer months

whether it is moving or not, must wear a life preserver.

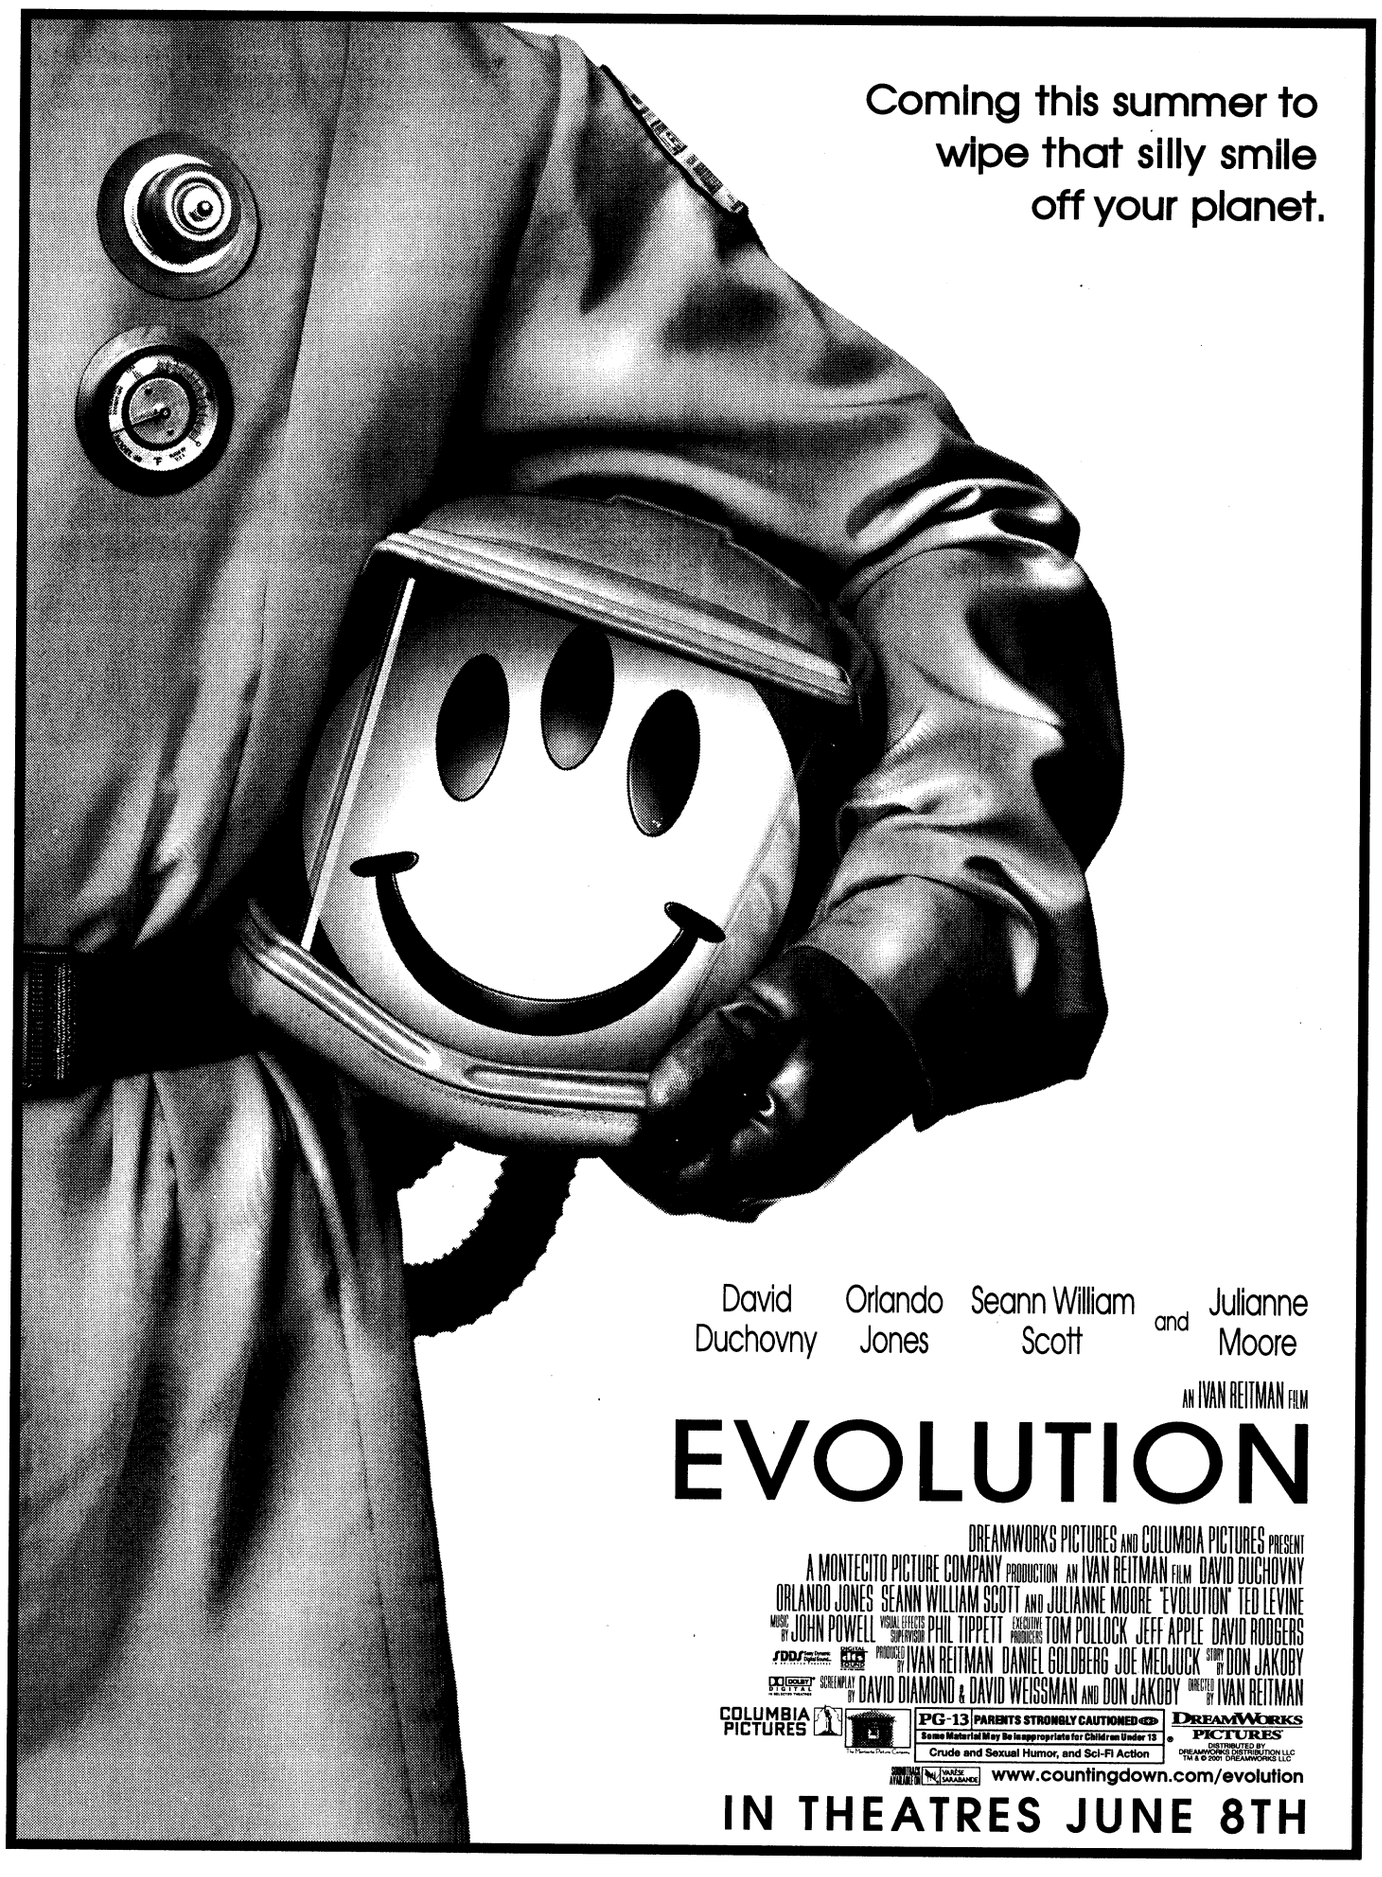
MPs will be able to assist in case of a medical emergencies in the water or along the banks. They will also tow vessels — jet ski, pontoon boats, etc., that cannot return to Uchee Creek Recreation boat ramp under its own power.

Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, Law Enforcement Operations NCOIC, wants everyone to be aware that the reckless operation of boats will not be tolerated, nor will noncompliance with the rules of boating set by boating officials on post.

Drinking and boating do not mix. Boaters can be charged with boating under the influence whether they are operating a high-powered boat or sitting in a canoe. Spc. Dale Hatfield, 71st Military Police Detachment, reminds boaters that it is illegal to possess alcohol in their boat while on the waters within post boundaries.

Patrol teams are also assisting the Georgia Department of Natural Resources and game wardens by verifying fishing licenses.

As stewards of the environment, Kelley said everyone has the responsibility to preserve our natural resources. Fines will be assessed for anyone caught littering along the banks or in the river.



Participating in the patrols for a second year, Sgt. Rodney Followill said that he has not seen a lot of recklessness on the river. He said many people are wearing their life vests. Yet sometimes he notices children are wearing adult life vests.

"If the vest is too big it will not function properly, therefore children need to wear the appropriate vest," Followill said. "Though I do enjoy talking to people and spending time on the water, safety is what we are concerned about out here."

Kelley wants the community to know that the additional duty does not compromise security provided by the MPs, nor will it effect road patrols

"We are here to provide a safe environment so people can enjoy the river," Snapp said.

Examination of travel vouchers can pay off

Voucher reviews mandatory before filing

Defense Finance Accounting Service

Travelers, are your travel settlement vouchers being reviewed before you submit them to the Defense Finance and Accounting Service for payment? They need to be.

A change occurred when the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, with Army approval, sent a message to the field a year ago (May 2000) requesting commanders and supervisors to review and sign all travel claims.

This change simply means to get your reviewing official's signature and date included on your travel voucher before submitting it to DFAS to pay you.

Travelers are responsible for preparing a travel voucher (DD Form 1351-2) within five days of completing travel.

Now, you also need to make sure it gets reviewed quickly so you can get paid by the government.

The requirement to obtain a travel review applies to all military and civilian travelers performing temporary duty and permanent change of station travel.

Temporary duty travel reviews may be conducted by the supervisor, commander or a designated representative appointed as reviewer for the commander.

The military PCS travel reviewer is the in and out processing individual receiving the voucher from the traveler at the appropriate paying office. Reviewers for an Invitational Travel Order are assigned to the office inviting the individual to travel.

This review is not intended as a payment computation but is used to determine that the travel voucher has been completed appropriately to include necessary signatures, documents and receipts to validate the claim have been attached and only those items authorized by the order are included on the travel claim.

Travelers use one of several settlement forms so there are different methods.

• For the older travel settlement forms (DD 1351-2) dated prior to August 1997, after the reviewer finishes the review, he or she places the notation "Reviewed (Date)" and signs over his or her printed name in the upper right corner of the form.

• If using the newer DD 1351-2 dated March 2000, the signature is placed in Block 20c and dated in Block 20d. Reviewers do not sign in the block for the "approving official."

This block is strictly for the travel-approving official.

You are encouraged to use the new DD Form 1351-2, dated March 2000. This form is available on the Internet at http://web1.shs.osd.mil/icdhome/ddeforms.htm.

This new form has specific blocks to make it easier.

Travel vouchers submitted without the reviewer signatures may be returned to you, according to the May 2000 policy change. This delays your travel payment.

Here are items commanders or supervisors look for when reviewing vouchers:

• An original claim with original signature and date is presented

• Administrative data on the voucher agrees with the travel orders

• Original receipts for lodging and rental car are attached. Original lodging receipts are required — regardless of amount.

• Lost receipt statement, if applicable, is attached and includes the traveler's signature.

• Advance and partial payments are indicated in the appropriate block

• Statements of non-availability or confirmation numbers for meals, lodging, or transportation are present.

• The claim is reasonable and consistent with the mission, and claims for reimbursement are authorized on the orders.

• The authorized rental car used was appropriate to the mission, and the number of travelers and cost was the lowest.

• All single items of expense of $75 or more are supported by an original receipt.

• When foreign currency was used while traveling on official business, the traveler includes the expense in both foreign and U.S. dollars, showing the exchange rate and commission charges for the foreign currency at the time of exchange.

Any questions or concerns may be directed to Donna Bowden, Chief, Travel Branch, DFAS Orlando, (407) 646-4413, DSN 791-4413, or e-mail her at DFAS-OR-VPCS@DFAS.MIL

A CLOSER LOOK

When reviewing travel vouchers, look for:

- An original claim with original signature and date presented
- Administrative data on the voucher agrees with the travel orders
- Lost receipt statement, if applicable, is attached and includes the traveler's signature.
- Advance and partial payments are indicated in the appropriate block
- Statements of non-availability or confirmation numbers for meals, lodging, or transportation are present.
- The claim is reasonable and consistent with the mission, and claims for reimbursement are authorized on the orders.
- The authorized and rental car used was appropriate to the mission
- All single items of expense of $75 or more are supported by an original receipt.

Soldier, veteran share memories of Vietnam

Chance brings two together after 30 years

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Owen Ditchfield calls himself a fatalist. The Vietnam War made him that way.

His is not an attitude of helplessness or hopelessness, but a sense of certainty that his life has been guided by a greater force.

"I know beyond doubt that I would have died there, but God wasn't done with me. I know that. I left Vietnam with a strong sense of purpose, a sense that there was still work to be done and it was my job to do it," he said, reflecting on the moment 33 years ago when he was delivered from death by an "act of God" and the heroism of a fellow soldier.

July 1, 1969, began a "muggy, foggy, drizzly day," much like any other day in Vietnam, said Ditchfield, who as a 30-year-old captain, commanded D Company, 1st Battalion, 506th Airborne Infantry Division. His company, though severely understrength with only 80 soldiers, was tasked to occupy Hill 996.

But D Company was attacked from the rear and cut off from her sister companies, and in the battle that ensued, suffered 78 casualties. Ditchfield was was wounded by a rocket-propelled grenade and later awarded a Purple Heart.

"It made me a fatalist, made me want to live my life to the fullest, with no regrets and no worries. The memories are just as vivid today as they were then," he said.

Vivid, but surreal.

"It was like something you see on TV, surreal. We were laying on the ground, bullets whizzing over our heads, and out of nowhere comes this lanky, enlisted guy," Ditchfield said. "He was walking from tree to tree like he was shooting squirrels, and to my amazement he just kept coming."

The soldier was 19-year-old Spc. Gordon Roberts, a rifleman with B Company, who had been separated from the rest of his platoon by a barrage of gunfire.

He single-handedly charged and destroyed four enemy bunkers, using an M-16 he'd retrieved from a fallen soldier after his own weapon was shot from his hands.

Roberts was the youngest soldier ever awarded the Medal of Honor. That, coupled with the fact that he's the only recipient remaining on active duty, was the focus of an article in The Bayonet April 27.

Ditchfield, now the media specialist at Fort Benning's White Elementary School and a member of the Muscogee County School Board, read the article and contacted The Bayonet to share his side of the story.

"I never had the opportunity to say thank you to that young soldier," Ditchfield said.

For several years after the war, he tried to contact Roberts, who left the Army to pursue a career as a social worker.

The two shared mutual friends, but "fate" sent their paths in different directions until Roberts received a commission from the Ohio Army National Guard and returned to active duty in 1991. Now a major and a leadership instructor at the U.S. Army Infantry School at Fort Benning, he received a call from Ditchfield in April.

"The first thing he said to me was 'You don't know me, but I owe you my life,'" Roberts recalled.

Owen Ditchfield and Maj. Gordon Roberts reunited in April to discuss the circumstances surrounding the battle for Hill 996 in Vietnam.

Roberts and Ditchfield finally met to discuss the circumstances surrounding their first encounter and direction their lives have taken since that time.

"It was very strange, but very rewarding," Roberts said. "We heard horror stories about Vietnam veterans for so many years.

"It's always been my contention that if you looked closely at the numbers, there are far more who've gone on to lead successful lives than not. Owen's one of those. Here's a man active in the community, doing important things. Hearing from him felt good, very rewarding. It's been a good experience for both of us."

Ditchfield said the two "haven't spent a lot of time talking about the war."

"We've talked some about the details, getting the story from both perspectives, but mostly we've just gotten to know each other. There's a certain kind of unspoken bond between people who've been there, done that — a quiet reflection of what happened that doesn't necessarily need to be put into words," he said.

But Ditchfield's "urge to express gratitude" couldn't go unspoken.

"I just had to say 'Thank you,'" he said. "I know without a doubt I wouldn't be here today if it weren't for him."

The former commander of the 1st Battalion, 394th Infantry (Training Support Battalion,) Louisiana Army National Guard, took command of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment during a change of command ceremony Wednesday morning at York Field.

Lt. Col. Christopher E. Lockhart succeeds Lt. Col. Keith A. George, who will be serving in the operations group at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

"I'd like to thank God for the blessings bestowed on the command the past two years," George said. "I am honored and proud to have served in your battalion. Now, we close a chapter in our lives that will never be forgotten."

George will be joined in California by his wife, Kimberley, and their two children, Sarah, 6, and Ethan, 4.

During the ceremony, Col. Carter F. Ham, 29th Infantry Regiment commander, took the opportunity to thank George for his service.

"Under the command of George, the (unit) has remined a battalion of experts," Ham said. "(George,) you and Kimberley should be proud of everything you have done. We will miss you."

In welcoming Lockhart to the unit, Ham said, "This is the command team that is ready to take the (battalion) to new heights. Welcome."

"I thank the Lord for answering my prayer because this is the battalion I wanted to command," Lockhart said. "I am truly honored to be your new commander, and my family and I are honored to be in your ranks. We lead the way."

After serving as the aide-de-camp to the commanding general at the Military District of Washington, D.C., he was assigned to the 1st Battalion, 36th Infantry, in Friedberg, Germany, as the motor officer.

He also served as the battalion executive officer with the 2nd Battalion, 7th Cavalry and the brigade operations officer with 3rd Brigade, 1st Cavalry Division, Fort Hood, Texas.

Lockhart's awards include the Bronze Star Medal, the Army Meritorious Service Medal, fifth oak leaf cluster, and the Army Commendation Medal.

The new commander brings with him his wife, Kimberly. They have two children, Elizabeth, 10, and Christopher, 8.

Korea ... the forgotten war

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite rain, mud and fog, U.N. troops kicked the Reds out of the Punchbowl, 50 years ago this week in Korea.

With the Iron Triangle cleared, I Corps units moved unopposed into the North Korea capitol, Pyongyang.

June 7-13, 1951 — As Operation Piledriver continues on the western front, I Corps divisions slug it out and advance slowly against Chinese who are fighting from dug-in regimental positions arranged in depth. Finally, on June 8, the ground and air pressure forces the enemy to give way and they begin pulling back incrementally in about battalion strength. The three I Corps divisions make it to line Wyoming by June 11.

In I Corps, the 1st Marine and Republic of Korea 5th Divisions are in a vicious fight to capture the terrain around the southern rim of the Punchbowl.

They have to crawl up and down a series of steep ridges; each is defended by dug-in North Koreans.

The roads into the Punchbowl are heavily mined at each end. The twisting, narrow mountain roads have to be widened to allow trucks traffic.

Intermittent showers make the roads muddy and slick and trucks frequently slide off sharp, narrow curves. The rain also caused mudslides that block the roads.

A combination of rain and fog also eliminates air support.

The North Koreans fight fiercely from fortified positions, and when they are driven off a ridge, they immediately counterattack to win it back.

On June 8 Maj. Gen. Edward Almond, X Corps commander, puts a regiment of the ROK 7th Division to work clearing the ground above the eastern part of the Hwachon Reservoir, so the Marines can concentrate on the southern rim of the Punchbowl.

On June 9, the 1st Marine Division commits its reserves so four regiments press the North Koreans.

A ROK 7th Division regiment punches through the communist defenders and secures its position on line Kansas.

It takes the Marines and ROK 5th Division another week to slug their way to their objectives, an advance that covers six miles.

Lt. Gen. James Van Fleet, Eighth Army commander, tells reporters the communists have lost the Iron Triangle and it will require "a considerable build-up" before the enemy can stage another offensive.

Maj. Gen. Frank Milburn, I Corps commander, sends tank-infantry patrols up both legs of the Iron Triangle May 13.

They meet no resistance and go all the way to Pyongyang, where they find the North Korean capital deserted. However, Chinese troops who had been chased out of the triangle are in fortified positions on the high ground northeast and northwest of Pyongyang.

Testimony continues at the combined Senate Armed Forces and Foreign Relations Committees investigation into Gen. Douglas MacArthur's dismissal and Korean policy. The witnesses over the seven days are Secretary of State Dean Acheson, ex-Defense Secretary Louis A. Johnson and retired Lt. Gen. Albert C. Wedemeyer, World War II commander of the China Theater.

During Wedemeyer's testimony June 11-13, he calls Korea a "bottomless pit." He agrees with MacArthur that the United States should "go it alone" if need be and hit Red China. Either that or pull U.S. troops out of Korea and blast the communists from the air and sea when they pour in.

June 7 — Despite vociferous objections from businessmen, the West German government says it will go along with the U.N.-sponsored trade boycott against Communist China.

June 8-9 — The Army reports June 8 that the enemy casualty rate as of June 2 is an estimated 1.1 million killed, wounded and captured.

The next day, the Army says the death rate among 37,000 communist prisoners is 7 percent, largely due to poor health standards in the North Korean and Chinese armies. The U.S. fatality rate among wounded in Korea is 2.67 percent, compared to 4.5 percent in World War II.

June 8-12 — Defense Secretary George C. Marshall visits Korea after making an unannounced trip to Japan. He tells reporters his trip is not to arrange peace talks. They will have "to ask Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai" about chances for negotiations to end the war.

Back in Tokyo on June 11 he says he "cannot conceive of the Korean War going on for years" but the Chinese "have the problem of 'face,' the importance of which is hard for us to understand." Although "ripped to pieces" by U.N. forces, he says the Reds are apparently still bent on driving U.N. forces out of Korea and using the peninsula as a base to attack Japan. According to Marshall, the purpose of the trip is to discuss manpower and troop rotations.

Back in the United States June 12 he meets with President Harry S. Truman and then tells the news media that by fall the rotation rate of troops from Korea should reach 25,000 a month.

June 8 — General of the Army Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, meets in London with his British counterpart to ask for more troops in Korea.

U.N. Secretary General Trygve Lie says a truce setting the 38th Parallel as the dividing line between forces will be a "long step" toward achieving UN goals in the country. He's "very pleased" that allies are talking peace but has "heard no expression from the other side — not so far."

June 10 — South Koreans demonstrate in Pusan against Marshall's trip to Japan and Korea, believing it's a start of negotiations to end the war at the 38th Parallel.

Marchers carry signs reading "Give us death rather than a humiliating truce."

A U.S. Army corporal and four privates receive prison terms of 10 to 30 years for running a black market in stolen U.S. government property, the Eighth Army announces. Military police have recovered more than $400,000 worth of stolen military goods.

June 12-13 — More than 50,000 ROK draftees died of starvation and disease last winter at training facilities, charges the National Assembly Investigating Committee in Pusan June 12.

The committee also says that 80 percent of the 350,000 survivors are "physical wrecks, incapable of labor."

On June 13, the South Korean government arrests Brig. Gen. Kim Yoon, National Guard commander, and staff members for embezzling nearly $4 million in training funds. The investigating committee charges that 300,000 men died or deserted in December during a 300-mile "death march."

June 13 — Truman blasts a "sabotage press" and "Congressional demagogues" for misleading American citizens about casualties in Korea at the President's Highway Safety Conference in Washington.

Truman says both groups claim U.S. combat and non-combat losses in Korea total 150,000. The true figure is "less than 80,000 ... and that means every kind of death and injury that could take place in that operation." He points out that more than a million people were killed and injured on the country's highways in 1950.

MacArthur begins a four-day visit to Texas by addressing the state legislature in Austin. He says the U.S. has outdone the "bloody lessons" of Munich and is now practicing "appeasement on the battlefield." He said the United States was "never so strong," despite Truman's domestic policies and individuals who "seek to make all men servants of the state."

Military police target speed, safety

Speed checks raise public awareness

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

If Fort Benning's traffic section had a theme song, it would probably start off Slow Down, You Move Too Fast.

The Directorate of Public Safety is implementing a program to target speeding motorists using radar intensive enforcement. MPs refer to this program as RAISE because it's designed to raise public awareness of their speeds.

Fort Benning is attempting to slow down drivers across post, said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement Division.

RAISE began this week and will continue through the summer months, Kelley said.

Main streets on to Fort Benning will be targeted, including Custer Road, Interstate 185 inbound and Dixie Road.

Summer is always a time of increased motor activity, which makes this month a good time to begin the program, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Kelley, Traffic NCOIC.

"There's just so many more things open and available in outdoor activities," said the sergeant. "People have to drive to get to them and some of them speed to get there."

Drivers are reminded to maintain a safe distance between cars by allowing one car length for every 10 mph.

As in the past, other areas across Fort Benning will continue to receive attention. More than 1,500 automobiles are stopped each month in attempts to slow down drivers.

"Our intent is not to harass people, to make them late or inconvenience them," the lieutenant colonel said. "Our intent is to slow people down so that they operate their vehicles within the posted speed limits. By doing that we are making Fort Benning a more safe and secure environment for those of us who live, work and play here."

Kids share message

Performance group helps with image

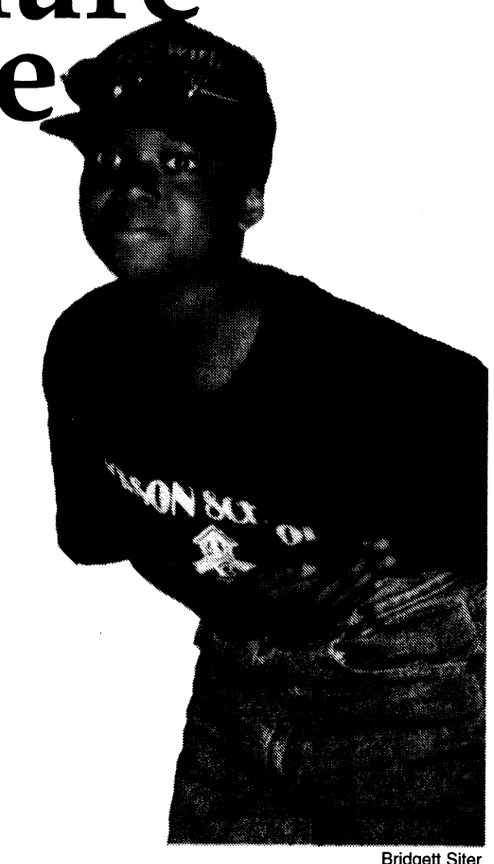
Special to the Bayonet©

If you move with the crowd, you'll never move beyond the crowd.



That's the message 29 Wilson Elementary student council members, called "Kids With a Message," shared with their peers as they toured five post elementary schools last week.

They wore matching T-shirts and ball caps, but their message was one of individuality, and they delivered it through song and dance and poetry.

"Be a leader, not a follower. Be an individual," said 10-year-old Melanie Atkins. "You're important just the way you are. That's what we want to tell kids."

Evelyn Montgomery, Wilson's counselor, choreographed and directed the production, a variety show of sorts, featuring selected poetry, songs and short stories with messages of friendship, self-esteem, compassion and tolerance.

"I wanted to bring character education alive for these students and the kids they perform for," Montgomery said. "This kind of message has more impact than a classroom lesson."

Trail leads to knowledge

Students learn lessons from nature

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

That classroom came in the shape of the Woodlands Nature Trail that runs behind the school.

The students invited the garrison commander, Col. Joe Torres, the superintendent of Fort Benning School's, Dell McMullen, Deborah Mayberry and Kathy Einhorn from Fort Benning School's Central Office and Bob Larimore and James Parker from the Environmental Management Division, to go for a walk on the trail and see how the students have benefited from the lessons it presents.

Along the walk, Marie Hand, an instructional support specialist, and Walter Blanks, who leads the after-school Woodlands Club, discussed various topics with students with respect to the environment and looked for signs of woodland animals.

Nature walks and studies provide great learning material both in and out of the classroom, said Sharon Martz, who's second-grade class uses the trail each month.

"In my class, all of the students have adopted a tree, observed it looking for changes like when buds are starting to form, studied the moss, looked for insects and animals living around or on the trees — all kinds of things in the forest," she said. "They take notes, come back and summarize what they have seen that day."

Sgt. Michael Maddox

BriAnn McClendon, a second-grade student at McBride Elementary, shows Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, a spot where beavers have made a home on the Woodlands Trail.

Those notes help during lessons later in the classroom.

"Whether you're talking about animals, weather or almost any subject, you can find a way to fit nature in," Martz said.

Aaron Russell, second-grader, said the trail is educational and fun.

"I like going out to the trail to look for animals and the trees," he said. "I've seen a lot of different animals like squirrels and a crane out there."

Russell said he enjoys the Woodlands trail so much that he visits it when he's not in school.

"Me and my dad go fishing out there," he said. "We see lots of things like ducks and beavers."

Those feelings of joy the students gain from the trail are exactly what the students and staff wanted to pass onto their guests, said Del Hicks, McBride principal.

"We wanted to share with them the result of all of their support by showing them how much the students enjoy it," Hicks said.

"We couldn't have made the trail without everyone's help," he said. "They (Torres and the school administrators) were supportive of the idea and helped us get it going. The DPW and forestry people came out and helped trim the trees back, marked trees and did some work on the bird and duck houses in the area."

"It's been great how everyone has helped us develop this outdoor classroom," Hicks said.

Student-actress shares life, goals with Benning students

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Phenix City student shared her talents with Fort Benning elementary schools Tuesday.

Chastity Threadcraft is an actress, but it's her balancing act that caught the attention of Debra Mabry, Fort Benning School's instructional support specialist.

Mabry invited the 13-year-old to share her secret to juggling school, church and a myriad of extracurricular activities with second-graders from four post elementary schools.

"She does it all — acting, cheerleading, twirling and church, and still maintains straight As," Mabry said. "She's a positive role model for these children, and since she's a child herself, they're willing to listen to her message."

An eighth-grade student at South Girard Middle School, Threadcraft played the lead in the Springer Opera House production of Amazing Grace. She performed three short dramatizations for the students, each with a positive message about self-esteem.

"My nana always said I could do anything I wanted to do or be anybody I wanted to be," Threadcraft said.

"Never let someone tell you you can't do something you want to do."

Threadcraft's first major role in state theater was the part of Peter Pan, a role she said she auditioned for in spite of the fact she's a black female.

"My friend told me, 'You can't be Peter. Peter wasn't a girl.' And another friend said, 'You can't be Peter. Peter's not black,'" Threadcraft said. "But I thought acting was all about being someone else, so I decided to go for it anyway. And I got to play Peter. So the moral of my story is don't ever let anyone tell you you can't be something you want to be."

Threadcraft cautioned the students to pay attention in school and maintain good grades, a message her mother, Janice Threadcraft reiterated.

"Focus on God and family and school," she said. "Then you'll be able to balance the other things, the extra activities. If you work hard in school now, it'll be easier later."

Jessica and Jay Phillips look forward to summer camp all year long."It means everything to them. They can't wait," said their mother, Jane. "It's the one time of year they get to be just like everybody else."

Jessica, 15, and her brother, Jay, who is 8, both suffer from spinal muscular atrophy, a type of muscular dystrophy. The Milledgeville, Ga., residents are confined to wheelchairs and require nursing care at home to help with most basic tasks.

"They have very special needs, and all year long they're different from all the other kids at school. They can't do the things their peers and siblings can do. They're left out," Jane said.

"Summer camp is the one week out of the whole year they're surrounded with kids just like them. They're not different. It's absolutely wonderful."

Jessica began attending camp for kids with MD 10 years ago. Her brother joined her for the first time three years ago.

They enjoy the arts and crafts and campfires, but it's the physical activities they can't normally

Students score above average on Terra Nova

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The results of standardized test scores show Fort Benning students continue to score above the national percentile.

The director of curriculum development for Fort Benning schools presented Terra Nova Multiple Assessment test scores to school board members May 29.

Kathy Einhorn gave a detailed analysis of systemwide results of the standardized test, which was administered to all Fort Benning school students March 12-16.

All schools within the Department of Defense Education Activity use the Terra Nova to assess student strengths and weaknesses based on national standards. Parents receive their child's individual test results at the end of the school year, and a comparison of test scores throughout the system are tabulated and reviewed before the upcoming school year.

Since Fort Benning schools first administered the test in 1998, they have consistently scored above the national percentile and have, for the most part, shown a steady improvement in all five areas evaluated: reading, language arts, math, science and social studies.

"We've seen significant improvement since we started taking the test," Einhorn said. "It's very different from other standardized tests, which were traditionally multiple choice. The Terra Nova is a performance-based assessment. It looks at not only students' knowledge base, but how they've learned to apply that knowledge also. It requires a higher level of thinking than the traditional approach to assessment."

Each area is divided into "subtests" to evaluate student performance on various levels. This year Fort Benning schools improved test scores in 19 of 42 subtests. The remaining 23 subtest scores fell near the 60th percentile.

Science scores increased in four of the six grades tested, though social studies decreased in the same grade levels. First and second graders are not tested in the areas of science and social studies.

Language arts scores were up in five grade levels. Math scores increased in two grades and reading scores increased in three.

All scores were above the 53rd percentile — the 50th percentile being the national median — with a total score range of 53.7-75.2 percentile.

School registration begins

New, returning students can register June 11-15

Fort Benning Schools

Registration for new students and verification for returning students will take place June 11-15 from 8 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. each day.

All registrations and verifications will take place at the school that the child will be attending next school year.

It will be necessary for parents to register at each school if they have children in more than one of the Fort Benning Schools.

The following documents are required:

Returning Students

Please bring an updated shot record and the child's social security card. Sixth-grade students must show proof of varicella (chicken pox) vaccine, or proof of immunity. Verification of post housing must also be provided.

Proof of immunity includes a physician or health care provider's statement or medical record.

Verification of housing does not need to be an official statement from the housing office.

It can be a copy of a recent bill with printed name and address.

Returning Students Transferring to Another Fort Benning School

From McBride to White:

Students attending McBride School and promoted from third to fourth grade will need to verify registration at White Elementary School, 300 First Division Road.

From Fifth to Faith:

Students promoted from fifth grade to Faith Middle School's sixth grade will need to verify registration at Faith Middle School, 1375 Ingersoll Street.

Transfer Students

Parents must provide school records, verification of housing, military ID, and child's social security card. Prekindergarten, kindergarten, and first grade require a legal birth certificate.

A Georgia Certificate of Immunization is also required. These certificates are available through Martin Army Hospital. Immunization information will be available at registration.

Students Entering School for the First Time

(Preschool, pre-K or Kindergarten) Parents must provide a legal birth certificate, verification of housing, military ID, and child's social security card.

Georgia Certificates of Immunization and Eye, Ear, and Dental Examinations are also required.

These certificates are available through Martin Army Hospital. Immunization information will be available at registration.

Consider insurance needs before purchase

Spc. William A. Graves

USAIC Public Affairs Office

This is the seventh story of a seven-part series, which takes a look at the basics of investing.

Your finances are doing well. The children's education and your retirement funds are earning about 12 percent per year. You're paying off credit cards and building up equity in the house.

You reflect on your future, while driving to PT in the rain, your car hydroplanes. It flips and crashes into a tree. You die instantly.

Your future is no more.

"Life insurance replaces the lost future income of an individual, usually tax-free, and provides funds to meet immediate and long-term family needs following the loss of a family member," said Retired Sgt. Maj. Carl R. Foust Jr., an agent with New York Life, and retired death benefits of life insurance have unique features, he said. The benefits:

- Normally bypass probate and are not restricted by or included in a will.
- Are typically paid quickly.
- May be paid with an interest bearing checking account.
- Normally pass to the beneficiary income tax free.
- Normally are not accessible by creditors.

Life insurance provides a back up to investment plans.

"Should you die short of your goal, then your family must start where you left off. As a result, life insurance is essential when planning a portfolio," said Capt. Jason Dickinson, registered representative and agent, United Services Planning Association and Independent Research Agency for life insurance.

Either term or permanent life insurance, a type that builds cash value are available.

An example of term is the $250,000 of coverage the Army offers its members. When a soldier leaves the service, the term runs out.

"Soldiers should take advantage of the $250,000," said Frank McCanham, Chartered Life Underwriter and Chartered Financial Consultant at Financial and Asset Management in Columbus. "They should also do some long-term planning with a permanent program. They could be shocked when they retire and see how much insurance costs."

Term insurance is set for a specific length of time, like 10 or 20 years. The premium, usually level for the duration of the initial team, is lower than permanent plans. It typically does not build cash value.

An example of a permanent plan is whole life insurance. It has a guaranteed premium for life up to age 100 and builds "equity," similar to buying a house, over the life of the policy. The cash value is available for the insured for events such as education and home mortgage payoff.

Another cash value plan is universal life insurance. Returns are not guaranteed.

"The type of (cash value) policy one should buy depends on the individual's risk tolerance," Foust said.

Ask the following questions, he said.

- Are guarantees vital? If so, whole life is generally indicated.
- Are 'mutual fund' type investments acceptable? If so, a variable life insurance product may better suit the individual. Performance is not guaranteed.
- How well can the policy be funded? Variable and universal products internal costs can 'eat up' minimally funded plans.

"People tend to mix investments with insurance," McCanham said. "I feel insurance ought to be insurance, not about speculation."

Regardless of the type of plan, the death benefit amount of life insurance coverage can vary, depending on the individual needs and desires, Foust said.

He said some things to consider when determining insurance needs include:

- Amount of family debt, installment debt, credit cards and mortgage.
- Number and age of children.
- Desire to fund schooling, to include college.
- Desire to establish perpetual income stream for surviving family members.

Other considerations include estate costs, impaired child costs resulting from the need to care for mentally or physically disabled children, and parents who may become dependent on their child for long-term care, McCanham said. Furthermore, a funeral costs $8,000 to $11,000 on average, and it doubles every 13 to 15 years.

Dickinson said some agents suggest five times one's annual salary is sufficient.

"I say that's nuts!," he said. "It will take that just to pay for the education of a family member. Then what about the $100,000 plus per child for a state college? What about the cars and the mortgage, not to mention all of your debt and the burial cost?"

To improve attractiveness, life insurance companies offer many riders for their policies, Foust said. These include:

- Term rider for whole life plans.
- Term rider on spouse or children.
- Disability waiver of premium, one that pays premiums during times of disability.
- Unemployment rider, one that pays premiums during times of unemployment.

Life insurance shoppers should ask themselves important questions before buying, Foust said.

- Is the company financially solid, reputable, available? Obtain an A.M. Best's, a company that rates insurers' financial situations, report at a library to determine this.
- Is the agent reputable, available?
- Will the policy pay if the insured "makes a mistake?" Mistakes include driving under the influence, driving without a seatbelt and suicide.
- Does the insurance product provide for the family needs, and is it flexible enough to adapt to changes?

MacCanham said soldiers should also:

- Ask their life insurance agent if the policy has a war clause in it. Meaning, if a soldier dies in a war, the policy does not have to pay a portion or the entire amount of the death benefit. Moreover, some companies define dying during riot control, a civil disturbance or in transport from a war zone as war.
- Have an insurance contract with a company with a nationwide presence.
- Have an agent with whom they feel compatible. Soldiers' agents should be experienced and not just out to make a sale. They need to ask the agents what professional development courses they take to see how dedicated they are.

One needs an agent who stays informed about complex and ever-changing plans.

Another insurance product on the market is called an annuity. There are deferred and immediate annuities. An annuity is a combination of an insurance contract and investment vehicle in which earnings grow tax deferred until withdrawn. It also can provide for a series of payments at some future time.

A deferred annuity grows tax deferred until withdrawal. There is a 10 percent penalty on the gain for withdrawal prior to age 59 and a half. Some companies allow the withdrawal of money out without penalty in the event of a disability. Taxes are paid on its gains.

"Annuities are good accumulation vehicles," McCanham said. "They are not good transfer vehicles, however, because, unlike life insurance, (the gains) are taxed. You need to have a plan to get out of it or when to generate income from it (converting it to an immediate annuity)."

Deferred annuities can be fixed or variable. Fixed annuities pay a fixed interest rate, whereas variable annuities are similar to mutual funds.

Unlike mutual funds, some companies have a guaranteed death benefit. That means if the market takes a dive, the value of the annuity drops in half, and the owner has a heart attack and dies as a result, the insurance company will pay the owner's beneficiary what the investor allocated into the annuity.

Similar to back-end load mutual funds, it is vital to remember there are surrender fees for deferred annuities. For instance, one could have a 7 percent surrender fee in the first year, 6 percent in the second, and so forth.

Investors should avoid companies that have long surrender fee periods and high internal insurance costs.

An immediate annuity is one where an investor pays X amount of money into an insurance company. In return for the money, the company sends payments to the annuitant until principal plus interest is paid in full.

Annuity payments have a taxed portion (the interest) and an untaxed portion (the principle). Investors need to remember they cannot ask for the entire principle back once they start receiving payments.

MD Camp: Needs helpers

perform that summer camp special.

"We get to swim and dance. My favorite part is the dance," Jessica said. "And I get to see my friends again. I can't wait."

Jessica and Jay plan to join nearly 100 other kids between the ages of 6 and 21, July 28 through Aug. 3, at Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga., 30 miles east of Atlanta. The camp is specially designed and equipped to give handicapped campers the opportunity to participate in activities normally beyond their abilities.

Each camper is assigned a "camp buddy," a counselor who devotes the entire week to meeting the needs of his or her camper. They swim, fish and dance together. They make crafts and learn archery. They have "water wars" and play putt-putt. And more often than not, the counselor also helps his buddy bath, dress and eat.

"The only bad thing about camp is that it has to end," Jane said. "The kids always cry when it's over. They get very attached and they don't want to leave. These counselors are a very special group of people. They go beyond the call of duty and the kids love them."

Ideally one counselor is assigned to each camper, though sometimes one adult takes care of two or more. But according to Joni Rosenbaum, camp director, a shortage of counselors this year threatens to curtail the fun for campers like Jessica and Jay, who require round the clock assistance.

"Right now we've had to put a hold on any more applications. We just don't have enough counselors," Rosenbaum said. "The kids look forward to this week all year long. For most of them, it's the highlight of their year. We don't want to turn any of them away, so we're making a plea for counselors."

Soldiers and family members from Fort Benning have been volunteering as camp counselors for 10 years, Rosenbaum said , and she's hoping they'll once again answer the call to help.

"We've got phenomenal support from Fort Benning. Without the soldiers' support I just don't know how we could do this each year," she said. "They're serving their country, and this is just another way for them to do that. We appreciate their dedication and commitment."

Sgt. Robert Brown, president of Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, served as camp counselor last year.

"It's hard work. By the end of the week I was exhausted," he said. "It was tough meeting their every need physically but staying focused on their emotional need to forget about their disability for one week and just have a good time. It wore me out, but spiritually it was great. I'm looking forward to it this year."

Pfc. Sam Cox, 63rd Engineer Company, said he's returning as camp counselor this year because his first experience was "a blast, awesome."

"It was a week full of just great fun," Cox said. "I recommend it for everybody. Just watching those kids in their wheelchairs who don't let their disabilities get in the way of a good time is awesome to see. When it's over you're exhausted, but you feel great."

Rosenbaum encourages Soldiers and family members to contact the BOSS office at 545-6800 for information about serving as a counselor.

Cast spells doom for wicked witch

Students take on Wizard of Oz challenge

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

A spinning house, a wedding dress, a grandfather's old oil can and chewed bubble gum used to affix a mustache were just a few of the props used by fifth-graders in their production of The Wizard of Oz June 1 at White Elementary School.

The hours of preparation paid off for the cast and production crew when the audience of students, teachers and parents gave the fifth-graders a standing ovation.

And the children really deserved the credit, said fifth-grade teacher Judy Little.

"They had ownership of the production," Little said.

"They did the set design, filmed the production and even published the program themselves."

The end of school production was the result of the fifth-graders accomplishing the year's lessons and wanting to tackle a larger project, said Little who co-teaches with Mary Jo Judge.

The students in the combined class auditioned for the parts and although not everyone was on stage they all contributed to the success of the play.

"These were the best group of kids to work with," she said. "They wanted to do the play, they knew they needed to learn the lines, learn their positions and they did."

The children practiced for the performance during the school day and a couple of afternoon rehearsals.

Casey Shutt, who played the lead role of Dorothy, said the play was hard work but a lot of fun.

The script was adapted to fit the talents of the students, Evelyn Braman, the play's director said, to include munchkins who rapped a welcome song to Dorothy after her house landed on the wicked witch.

Ozzie Reyes, who was one of the rapping munchkins, said his favorite part of the play was the spinning house at the beginning of the play.

Fans, a big stick and a twirling house simulated the Kansas tornado that lifted Dorothy to the Land of Oz.

Between acts, the audience listened to the music from the Judy Garland version of the movie and during the curtain call the children lip-synced to Garland singing Somewhere Over the Rainbow.

After the cast party, Marquis Wiley who was the voice of Oz took home the part of the cake with "Oz" written on it as a souvenir.

"These children were just thrilled with the result of their hard work," Braman said.

Scores: Show improvement

increased in all five areas. Fifth- and third-graders scores improved in four of the five areas tested.

"The Terra Nova shows us how our students are doing — how they're performing compared to other students nationwide," Einhorn said.

"And this year's results show us we're still headed in the right direction.

"However, it's important to note that it's DoDEA's philosophy to look at multiple assessment measures. It would be unethical to judge any student or teacher based on one test score," she added.

"Standardized tests are designed to compare our students performance to other groups of students taking the same test, but it's not meant to be used as the only indicator of what each child knows."

Fort Benning students can expect to see changes in next year's test, Einhorn said.

The test will be revised and updated, something that occurs about every five years, and it will only be administered to students in grades three to eight, a common practice in most school systems around the country.

For more information about the Terra Nova and test results, visit the Web site, www.odedodea.edu/testing/purpose.html.

Performers: Act message

they learned a little about commitment as well.

"It wasn't always easy. Sometimes they wanted to give up, but I told them I was counting on them. That's commitment," she said. "And now, though they're tired from all these shows, their hard work's paid off."

Kids With a Message donned "shades" and became "cool cats" to perform the musical number Scat Like That, and they encouraged the audience to participate.

"I'm having fun, but I'm learning too," said fourth-grader Nicole Barbara.

"I'm learning that name-calling hurts real bad on the inside, and it's important to chose your words wisely."

Students liberate painted lady butterflies

Third-graders release butterflies

Dexter Elementary School

Dexter's courtyard was ablaze with color as Terri Bond's third-grade science classes released their painted ladies butterflies last week.

These students have been studying the life cycle of the painted lady butterfly and followed the stages of development from the larvae to the butterfly.

"The children eagerly awaited the arrival of the larvae," Bond said. "When they arrived, the larvae were about the size of a hyphen (-) and we provided everything they needed to grow into beautiful butterflies."

The painted lady butterfly project was part of the Galaxy Classroom distance learning curriculum, a nationwide network of budding scientists who study the same topics and communicate through videos, faxes and online portfolios.

"Painted lady butterflies have the most widespread habitat in the world, so it is perfectly fine to release them in our area. They are found around Fort Benning anyway, so they won't upset the natural food chain here," said third-grader Preston Colvin.

The students were excited to see the butterflies they had nurtured, observed, and loved. They collected facts from the internet about the insect, so they knew what to expect as the changes occurred.

Painted Lady facts include:

• The eggs are laid on leaves so that food is readily available when they hatch. They are in the egg stage for three to five days. The eggs are the size of the head of a pin.

• The larvae, called caterpillars, begin eating immediately after hatching. They remain in the larva stage for five to seven days. The larvae begin about the size of a hyphen and grow to be about two inches long.

• The caterpillars go through a major metamorphosis while in the chrysalis stage. At one point, the body turns to liquid. This stage lasts for seven to ten days.

A painted lady lands on the butterfly bush in the garden behind the school.

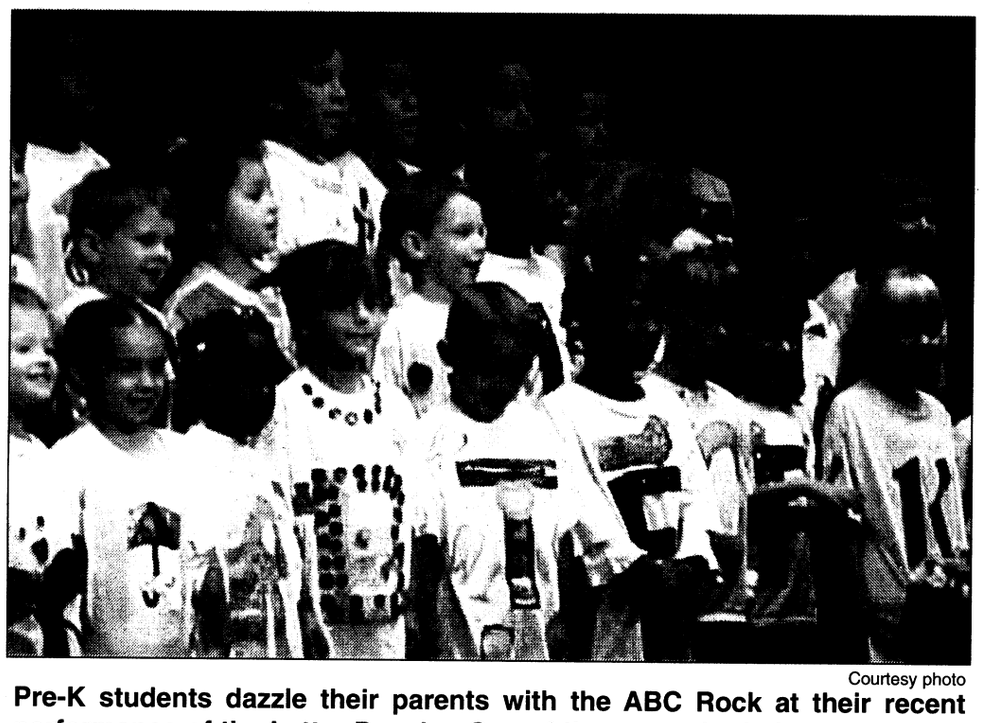
While inside, the chrysalis may shake to scare off predators.

• The adults finally emerge and live for about two to three weeks.



They must reproduce quickly so the life cycle can continue.

Third-graders show tech know how to visitors

Dexter Elementary School

Third-graders in Joyce Flatt's technology classroom showed how they use technology as a tool for enhancing their learning when visitors came to the classroom.

Dr. Beth Middlemiss, Associate Director of Education for the Department of Defense Education Activity, John Bearrs, chief, Technology Program Office, and Barbara Shriver and Lanette Welton, also from the Technology Department at DoDEA Headquarters in Washington, visited Fort Benning Schools on Thursday.

Students greeted their guests and hosted a tour of their classroom. At one station, they showed how each student uses a computer to independently check his or her attendance and do the lunch report as they enter the classroom each morning. At another station students demonstrated the PowerPoint kiosk, where they shared the daily oral language assignment, the problem of the day, as well as daily announcements such as the menu, the student of the day, and other important news for the day.

When asked to name ways that computers helped the students, Danielle Terhune was quick to reply, "Oh, we use computers for PowerPoint presentations and research — especially with the CD ROMS."

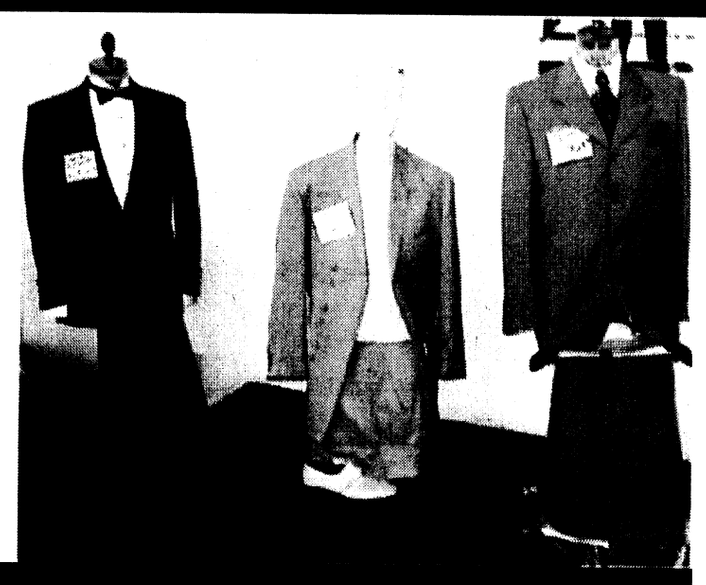
Students explained and demonstrated how the digital camera, scanners and computers allow them to create products like the ABC Books made for pre-K buddies, the PowerPoint presentations for research projects, and the "I Spy" books to accompany their Literacy Place unit.

When Bearrs asked Ben Crossno to name his favorite Web site, he didn't hesitate.

"Oh, it's the Egyptian Web site that we are using in our Literacy Place centers," he said with confidence.

Before the visitors left, one student used the digital camera to take a group picture of the guests.

Constance Crockett, one of the student guides, told the guests how much the technology equipment in this classroom had helped her.



"I really like using all of the equipment and hope that we have it next year in our fourth-grade classroom," she said.

Use compass to stay on spiritual path

Chaplain (Capt.) Scott Crossfield
3rd Battalion, 75th Infantry Regiment

reflections

Every day we are bombarded with external stimuli that compete for our attention. Much of it is worthy of our time and comes from our families, our work, our friends or God.

A great deal of it does not bring any lasting value into our lives.

Therefore we have to be aware of what is competing for our thoughts and give attention to what will be most beneficial to us. God plays a part in this struggle because scripture teaches that he loves us and desires to have a relationship with us. He may use circumstances, scripture, friends or the internal voice of the Holy Spirit as he strives to get our attention.

But sometimes we do not experience him because we are either not looking or we do not see him through the haze of everything else competing for our thoughts.

It is almost like being in a deep, dark forest — losing track of which way is which. At times you should stop, take a deep breath and check your compass. By doing that you ignore all the other distracters and you can see the truth about where you are heading.

Spiritually it is the same and you can get on track and hear God's voice with one simple spiritual compass check.

The spiritual compass check that I offer you comes from Psalm 46, which says this: "Be still, and know that I am God."

I know it may sound simplistic but this small and focusing act of the will to clear your mind really works. It does for me every day when my thoughts are racing everywhere else except toward God.

As you go through the rest of your day, take a moment and recognize the things fighting for your attention. Then do a spiritual compass check and see what the Lord is trying to tell you.

Dads important for development

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Time was, being a great dad meant all you had to do was put food on the table and a roof over the family's head, but times have changed. Today's dads and children want more from those fleeting years of parenting.

The phenomenon of absent fathers is widespread. In America, 38 million children suffer from father absence. This is more than half (54 percent) of all children under 18 years of age.

Physical father absence affects 27.3 million children (39 percent). Emotional father absence afflicts another 10.7 million children.

Julie, a teen-age girl, wrote, "I don't like my dad very much. Not once has he really hugged me. Rarely has he told me he loves me. I feel so awful because I can't ever run to my dad and have him make things OK… I want so badly to scream and let out all of this hurt. I feel so alone."

Many nonprofit organizations work to alleviate child neglect and child abuse. A few groups are dedicated to prevent children from becoming victims. Even fewer organizations work to equip fathers in this important role.

There is a need to turn the hearts of fathers to their children (Malachi 4:6).

More than 99.5 percent of fathers have received zero training in what it really means to be a dad. Many new fathers do not have a good role model to follow from their own fathers.

These men face the most challenging, complex and important task of their life without any training and very little motivation and encouragement.

Some fathers rationalize their absence by saying that the amount of time is not as important as the quality of time spent with their children. Yet research demonstrates that both quantity and quality of time is required of fathers to be a great dad.

Would you like more help with fathering? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, located at Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Shooters compete at English Range

Spc. Mark Watson

Amanda Grant fires for competition in the tactical pistol shoot at English Range. The shoot marks the second nightime competition of the season.

50 gunners in competition for club title

Spc. Mark Watson

Nearly 50 shooters competed Saturday in this month's tactical pistol shoot at English Range.

The shoot marked the second nighttime competition of the season.

Shooters fired in three different runs at a combination of paper and steel targets.

One run was in the day while the other two were in the dark forcing shooters to use a flashlight.

One of the shooters was a newcomer to competing in the sport.

"I've never shot in any competition," said Amanda Grant from Montgomery, Ala. "My dad found this competition on the Web and so we decided to come."

With her first run done, she said she was shakey, but enjoyed the competing in the match.

"I think I'll probably start coming to these," she said. "I mean I can only get better."

Her dad, Jim Grant, said he, too, liked competing against other shooters.

"I am enjoying this very much," he said. "But even better is seeing her enjoy the match."

Amanda finished 28th out of 33, one place ahead of her dad.

The tactical pistol shoot competition was broken down into several classes that were defined by the different types and caliber pistols.

Jonathan Moore won the stock service class. Ricky Phifer took second and Aaron Orlando finished third.

Jay Long topped the custom defensive class. He was followed by Clayton Meals.

Moore also took top honors in the service revolver class.

Frank Russo won the back-up auto class, followed by Don Schleicher.

In the close quarters rifle side match, Randy Banks won the red dot class. Shane Fitch took second place and William Higgins finished third in the class.

Schleicher took top honors in the iron sight class and was followed by Moore and Meals.

Paul Gay won the SKS and AK class.

There will be a tactical rifle match at 2 p.m. Sunday at English Range.

The range hosts pistol matches the first Saturday of the month and rifle matches the first Sunday.

AMU: winning gold isn't unit's only Army mission

Unit maintains marksmanship standards

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit was formed in 1956 by President Dwight D. Eisenhower to raise the standards of marksmanship throughout the U.S. Army.

Nearly 45 years later, the unit still produces America's best competitive shooters and the Army's greatest custom gunsmiths — but winning Gold Medals isn't the unit's only mission.

The Army Marksmanship Unit's main mission is to train its soldier-athletes to win competitions; USAMU shooters have won hundreds of national titles, more than 40 World Championships and 20 Olympic Medals.

But the USAMU also has two other missions of promoting the Army and enhancing combat readiness through conducting marksmanship clinics and research and development of weapons and ammunition.

Although the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is located here and is a tenant unit of the post and is actually a part of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command at Fort Knox, Ky. The USAMU became a part of USAREC's Recruiting Support Brigade in October 1999, and when it did, it picked up an additional mission — recruiting.

"One of our most important tasks at the AMU is to assist Army recruiters in attracting great Americans to the service of our country through an Army enlistment," said USAMU Commander Col. Robert I. Hoidahl Jr.

"Our world class soldier-shooters tell the Army story all over the country. Our soldiers bring recruiters a wide range of recruiting tools targeted to their specific needs to help them encourage young Americans into boots."

"We are here to serve Army recruiters and assist them in making their mission," said Sgt. 1st Class Eric C. Wilbur, USAMU USAREC liaison. "Through USAMU recruiting-assistance events, we help recruiters expand their market and reinforce the contacts they have already made."

USAMU recruiting support usually consists of two to five soldiers who visit high schools, speak to groups and Delayed Entry Program members or present static displays at multimedia events, including air shows, county fairs and major sporting events.

They also conduct marksmanship clinics for a variety of programs such as JROTC, ROTC, NCAA competitive shooting teams, Boy Scouts and law enforcement agencies at all levels. Clinics give the local recruiters a "foot in the door"

USAMU hosts annual tournament

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning will conduct the 42nd annual Interservice Pistol Championships Monday through Thursday at Phillips Range.

The matches are sponsored by the National Guard Marksmanship Training Center of Camp Robinson and registered with the National Rifle Association of America.

According to USAMU Chief of Competition Michael J. Behnke, more than 100 shooters from all the four branches of the service, both active and Reserve, are expected to compete in the championships.

Each shooter will compete in a 900-point aggregate with each service weapon — 22-caliber, .45-caliber, center fire and service pistols — in 27 matches consisting of slow-fire at 50 yards, timed fire and rapid fire at 25 yards and the National Match Course at both 25 and 50 yards.

First, second and third place individual and 4-person team awards will be given in these matches. There will also be an Excellence in Competition Match.

The schedule is as follows:

- Monday — .22-Caliber Individual Championships, 8 to 11 a.m.; and .22-Caliber Team Championships, 1 to 2 p.m.
- Tuesday — Center Fire Individual Championships, 8 to 11 a.m.; and Center Fire Team Championships, 1 to 2 p.m.
- Wednesday — .45-Caliber Individual Championships, 8 to 11 a.m.; .45-Caliber Team Championships, 1 to 2 p.m.; and Excellence in Competition Match at 2 p.m.
- Thursday — Service Pistol Individual Championships, 8 to 11 a.m.; Service Pistol Team Championships, 1 to 2 p.m.; and Awards Banquet at 6 p.m. at the Columbus Iron Works Convention and Trade Center.

Youth Services hosts children's fishing derby

Anglers enjoy 'reel' fun at Russ Pond

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Kaitlyn Ellis has been learning to fish for the past year, but she had yet to bring in a catch until Saturday's fishing derby at Russ Pond.

Nearly 20 children took part in the derby, which was sponsored b Fort Benning's Youth Services.

For some, it was the first time fishing. For those who've had some fishing experience, some had never successfully landed a fish.

One such fisherman was 10-year-old Ellis. That all changed though within the first hour of the derby.

She stared intently at her red and white bobber floating on the muddy water. As it began to sink her eyes lit up.

"I got one," she shouted. "I got a fish."

She reeled in the small catfish. As she pulled the fish onto the bank she was all smiles.

Ellis was unsure of what to do with the fish,so her fishing partner, Sarah Welty, 11, came to her aid.

The two tried to remove the hook, but became jumpy when they touched the fish.

"It's all slimey," they giggled.

They got the fish off with a little help from Welty's dad, Gary.

Then the girls hit a hot streak. As soon as the bobber hit the water it began to dance — a tell tale sign that there was a fish on the other end.

"This is exciting and fun," Ellis said.

She said fishing was a great way to relax and hang out with friends.

Welty said fishing brings her family together.

"It's a family sport," she said. "Everyone but my mom comes with us."

One such family, who was spending together was Jacob Clark, 5, and Larry Clark.

"This is three hours of bonding," Larry said. "It is a

to schools and markets that may have been difficult to penetrate in the past, Wilbur said.

The Army Shooting Adventure Package is USAMU's premier recruiting tool and is used primarily at multimedia events, Wilbur said.

Designed to draw public attention, the ASAP is a 28-foot-long, fifth-wheel trailer, pulled by a commercial dual rear-wheel-driven pickup truck, both of which are adorned with "eye-catching" Army graphics.

Although the ASAP showcases the Army's best shooters, members of the general public can also test their own skills by shooting at targets using specially modified air pistols.

"The effect of the ASAP is to have an interactive, safe arcade, which provides an avenue for USAMU shooters and prospects to interact one-on-one in a fun environment," Wilbur said.

The USAMU also has three freestanding static displays and a Noptel, which are used during recruiting missions.

The Noptel system is a laser marksmanship-training computer, which AMU soldiers use as a training tool for competition and have incorporated in their school presentations by attaching it to an air pistol or air rifle.

This system has been very popular at high schools, state fairs and sporting expositions, according to Wilbur.

The USAMU has helped Army recruiters generate thousands of leads, which have lead to young civilians across the country taking the oath of enlistment in the U.S. Army.

time I can spend with him and not worry about anything like work or finances.

"Besides I think this is an American tradition — a father teaching his son to fish," he said.

Getting children outside and learning how to fish was a goal of derby officials.

"This is fun for the children to come out and fish," said Dorrie Wagner, a Youth Services child and youth program assistant. "We wanted to get them out of the house and get them to do something different like learning to fish. They really seem to be enjoying themselves."

At the end of the derby, the children counted the number of fish they caught and then released them back into the pond.

"Naa, we're not going to eat them," Sarah said. "We're going to put them back in. Besides the only fish I like to eat is fish sticks."

USAMU announces year's victories

Shooters excel in matches

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning have scored some major victories recently. The following results are some of their accomplishments:

- Memorial Day Shotgun Championships, Gainesville, Fla., May 26-28 — USAMU shotgun shooter Sgt. William H. Keever won both the Trap and Double Championships.
- Tennessee State Pistol Championships, Columbia, Tenn., May 25-27 — Service pistol shooter Sgt. 1st Class Roger C. Jacobson won the Tennessee State Short Course and the .22-Caliber Match. The USAMU Team of Jacobson and Staff Sgt. Gregory S. Wilson, Sgt. Adam J. Holloway and Spc. Adam E. Sokolowski won the Service Pistol Team Match.
- Alabama State Championships, Pleasant Grove, Ala., May 18-20 — Action pistol shooter Spc. Maxient J. Michel won the Alabama State Championship and Pvt. 2 Adam J. Bossier took third place overall and won the Class A Division.
- Confederate Nationals, Lanier, Ga., May 19 — Service rifle shooter Staff Sgt. Norman L. Anderson won the National Individual Championship.
- Liberation Grand Prix, Pilzen, Czech Republic, May 2-6 — International pistol shooter Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski won the Silver Medal in the Standard Pistol Match.

Get In the Swim

Finding a way to protect your money from inflation for the next 30 years doesn't require a degree in economics. Or even a crystal ball. You just need to visit your local bank, check out the new U.S. Savings Bonds EasySaver Plan, or talk to your employer. Not only do I Bonds earn a real return over and above inflation, they're also exempt from state and local income taxes. And you can get started with as little as $50. To find out more about I Bonds, go to www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to U.S. Savings Bonds Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.

Then relax. Because we predict a more secure future for your money.

Soldiers don new headgear

Ceremony marks Army transformation

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

The berets are here. Fort Benning units donned the black beret Thursday. Members of Fort Benning's command group were among the first soldiers to don the beret during a ceremony in honor of the Army's 226th birthday.

The ceremony marked the end of an eight-month wait since Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki announced the new headgear.

"The beret is a symbol of the transformation of the Army," said Command Sgt. Maj. Miles Retherford, the U.S. Army Infantry School's sergeant major. "This wasn't something the chief of staff decided to do one day. The Army has been looking into getting a new standard headgear for quite a while."

Finally black was decided upon and soldiers began receiving them.

"Fort Benning has enough to issue one to every soldier (with a few exceptions)," he said. Soldiers attending schools, such as PLDC and BNCOC will not receive one until they return to their home units.

Soldiers in initial entry training will not receive berets until they arrive at their first permanent duty stations, he said.

"Within the next six months all soldiers, other than IET soldiers, will receive berets," he said. "By next year there will be enough for

Infantry leaders discuss ideas for future of field

Spc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Strong, and getting stronger.

That was the message Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne brought to a presentation on the state of the infantry, one of the highlights of the Infantry Conference.

Wearing three hats — as chief of infantry, commandant of the Infantry School, and Fort Benning's post commander — Le Moyne told conference attendees that the U.S. Army Infantry is ready to fight.

"We're doing something right," he said. "Despite all the pessimism, all the hypocrites, all the critics — we're doing something right. We have to be careful we don't change the chemistry."

Le Moyne addressed a number of specific issues, all focused around the common challenge of keeping the country safe in a changing military environment.

"If we don't get ahead of it by 10 or 20 years" he said, "we'll always be behind."

Army birthday celebrated

Special day time to reflect, look forward

Spc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

The U.S. Army celebrated its 226th birthday June 14 in a world of simmering conflict and murky challenges — while looking to the past for lessons on the future.

Reflecting that awareness of the organization's history, the theme for the birthday commemoration was "1901 — Transforming the Army — 2001."

In a joint statement, Gen. Eric Shinseki, Army chief of staff, and Joseph Westphal, former acting secretary of the Army, said, "The key to the Army's success has always been both its reverence for the traditions that make our nation great and its flexibility and willingness to change."

Army historians note similarities between the challenges faced by the Army in 1901 and the challenges faced by today's Army.

"This was an all-volunteer force," said Dr. Martin L. Kaplan of the U.S. Army Center for Military History, "and the Army faced recruiting and retention challenges as it took on overseas responsibilities. Readiness was very much the topic of that day."

For the Army of 1901, new weapons had also changed the face of battle.

"The adoption of rapid-fire and long-range smokeless-powder weapons made the battlefield more lethal, fostered decentralization and resulted in demands for smarter, independent-thinking soldiers who could rely less on orders from officers," Kaplan said.

Col. Richard McCallum of the Army's Strategic Studies Institute said that the experience of the Army a hundred years ago offers a vital lesson for today's Army.

"The study of military history reveals an important principle: As technological change progresses and actual experience in war recedes, established military theory becomes less realistic unless military organizations sustain their quest for vitality, innovation and experimentation," McCallum said.

Today's Army faces a so-called "revolution in military affairs" in which the nature of armed conflict is expected to be very different in coming years

Doughboy awards presented

Retired infantrymen honored for lifelong contributions

Spc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

Paul Gorman retired as a general. George Dunaway retired as the sergeant major of the Army. But the career officer and the career NCO have some things in common.

"Both of them go for the tough jobs in tough times," said Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne at a June 13 dinner in their honor. "Both of them have the Purple Heart. Both of them earned the Silver Star."

And now both of them have earned the Doughboy Award, given yearly to honor those who've given extraordinary service to the infantry.

Le Moyne described Gorman as a "warrior-diplomat" and a "quiet professional."

The general retired in 1985, after 40 years of service — service that began, during World War II, in the Navy.

"His first job was 32 commodes," Le Moyne said. "Keep 'em clean."

But Gorman was soon released from Naval service as the war came to end.

Pet's death reason for caution

commentary

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Backing out of my driveway May 21, I felt something under my tire that wasn't supposed to be there.

My first thought was that it was a tree limb. My second thought was that it could be one of my neighbor's puppies.

Unfortunately, the latter was the truth. I had killed Skunk, a 3-month-old Rottweiler.

After I woke the neighbor and gathered the puppy from the driveway, I left for work, crying the entire way as I thought about how the neighbor's children must feel losing one of their pets. I felt awful.

About 100 feet away from Tot Town Child Development Center, I almost hit another animal. A cat and four kittens were crossing the road. My heart raced. I began to panic thinking I might, for the second time in one morning, run over an animal.

Thankfully, the cats made it across the road safely.

Pets are an important part of life for those who have them. As pet owners, we have a responsibility to keep them safe.

Many pet owners fall into the "No, not me. Not my pet," category when it comes to their pet being killed by a vehicle.

Well, I'm here to say, yes, your pet could be a victim too.

Whether it's keeping them in the house, or simply building a fence around your yard, do something to keep your pet safe.

Hospital care questioned

I am writing about an incident that occurred at Martin Army Community Hospital.

On May 15 my mother had a mild stroke at home. I called the paramedics and she refused medical care, so all I could do was watch her through the night. The following afternoon I convinced her to go to MACH.

In the emergency room, she started having delusions and hallucinating. She said she was seeing alligators and lizards trying to attack her. Drs. Rodney Gonzalez and David Bear called Capt. Douglas Lane to do a psychological evaluation. He confirmed she had Alzheimer's disease with dementia and decided to admit her for more tests.

Dr. Bear was trying to help us with our mother. Once he ruled out anything else was wrong, we (the doctors and her daughters) concluded that there really was nothing more we could do for our mother, except find a nursing care facility.

Dr. Bear tried so hard to help, but others higher up seemed to not care at all — they were playing pass the buck with our mother's health.

We have tried for so long to get help from her primary doctors at Victory Clinic but when a doctor only sees you 10 minutes every five months he doesn't know anything about a person's health nor does he take the time to find out.

Needless to say, they kept mom two days and released her without considering all her health problems. We are very disappointed in MACH's treatment of our mother.

Our father died on active duty. I wonder what ever happened to taking care of the spouse!

Martin Army's response

Alzheimer's disease is frustrating for family members and loved ones because of the cyclical nature of the symptoms.

The behavioral symptoms, such as irritability, apathy, wandering, psychosis, disorientation and agitation can have a significant negative impact on family members and care providers.

When patients are no longer able to care for themselves, families are often forced to pursue remedies in court, such as an adult guardianship.

The Victory Clinic, as with all MACH Family Practice clinics, receives calls for appointments based on patient requests for care. There are no limits set on the number of appointments patients can have by this or any other clinic at the hospital.

Patients or family members who have issues to resolve with Martin Army Community Hospital should do so by contacting the Patient Affairs Liaison Office at 544-1817 or 544-2733.

The Patient Affairs office staff members are available to address patient care issues within the facility. All inquiries are staffed through appropriate channels and all issues are managed in a confidential professional manner that is respective of patient rights and confidentiality.

In order to better protect our patient's rights, Martin Army Community Hospital will not comment on specific patients or their treatment in the media.

Doctor appreciated

Having been the beneficiary of outstanding medical service from Dr. J.D. Varma and his kind, caring and efficient staff at Victory Clinic, I thought it was high time I passed on this information to his superiors.

I have been Dr. Varma's patient since he first started practicing in the Victory Clinic many years ago. From my very first visit with him I was impressed with his obvious sincere interest in my health and welfare. He never failed to listen attentively to my explanation of various ailments and to ask the right questions to elicit the information he required to determine the appropriate treatment for me.

His patience and care were always evident. Not once did I ever get the impression that he was trying to hurry me through the system so he could get to his next patient. (This was in spite of his prescribed time for handling his patients). Many is the time he has called me at home to provide me with test results and treatment recommendations.

Since I was a private, way back in 1946, I have been receiving medical care from Army physicians. I can truly say that Dr. Varma's medical care for me has truly been the very best of the best.

I would truly be remiss if I did not include some kudos for Dr. Varma's staff. His staff, in true emulation of their supervisor, reflects the truly caring and competent service provided by Dr. Varma.

As a patient I have observed the staff and their treatment of other patients and their caring attitude and their competent efficiency are a direct reflection of Dr. Varma.

You can truly be very proud of Dr. Varma and his staff. They are a great credit to your hospital and to the medical profession.

Writer praises family physician

Being the typesetter for The Bayonet, I just finished typing in the letter to the editor from Fred Young, in which he highly praised his doctor and the clinic he attends at Martin Army Community Hospital.

I was very moved by his letter because I think praise for the doctors of MACH is very deserved, and not brought to light often enough.

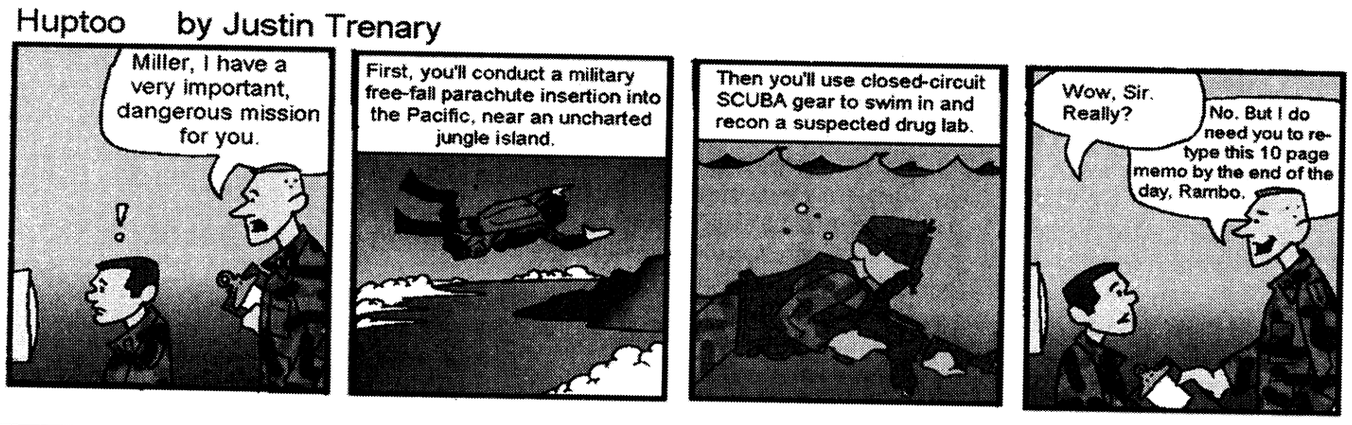
I have lived on post now for almost five years. In that time, I have changed clinics and have been assigned to at least 10 doctors. As with any profession, some were better than others, but my last doctor was truly the best I have ever had, military and civilian.

His name is Eyako Wurapa, and he worked at Family Practice. The first time I saw him was after my son was born, roughly two years ago, and in the past two years, I have truly felt comfortable discussing both personal and run-of-the-mill problems.

Like Fred Young said about his doctor, Dr. Wurapa never seemed to be rushing me, dismissing my problems or avoiding my questions. He always explained everything very carefully and always made sure my questions were answered. He didn't put me off, as I had been before, with serious questions about my health.

Dr. Wurapa also returned my calls when I requested a new prescription or refill to let me know he ordered it. He even called to tell me he was ordering a different inhaler, along with my fast-acting one, to better control my asthma.

Last week I learned that Tricare has assigned me to a new doctor and a new clinic — my third clinic in five years. I was not very happy, to say the least. I enjoy being an Army spouse, and I've come to understand I have to take the bad with the good and everything with a grain of salt (OK, maybe a whole salt shaker.)



I understand doctors have to move on like anyone else in the Army, although it is disheartening to find such a quality doctor like Dr. Wurapa and see him leave. I will truly miss him and his compassion.

After typing Young's letter, I'm no longer upset or angry, because he had such high accolades for the staff of Victory Clinic, my new clinic. Now I can truly say I'm looking forward to going there.

Fred Young, thank you for lessening my fears, and I believe that you have set an example for others to follow — praise the good instead of complaining about the bad, which is so often done.

Troupe takes on Possum Trot, finds bargains

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs

Friday nights used to mean getting gussied up and hitting a club or two. Things like time and children have a way of changing all of that, and last Friday night showed me just how much.

Instead of getting gussied up, three of us dressed down and headed for Seale, Ala., and the Possum Trot auction. We didn't completely dress down for our evening in Seale. Lori waltzed up in birkenstocks instead of the work boots she would have needed to fit in. My ensemble included a shirt with a collar and socks that were a pretty close match. The third member of our group had a clean T-shirt tucked into her overalls. And yes, we were almost overdressed.

We all went with the same fragrance, eau de "Off," a good choice.

Girls' night out at the Possum Trot started off with the traditional barbecue sandwich at the Possum Trot Barbecue, conveniently located next to the auction site. It's good barbecue, whether you're there for the auction or not. On the side, I highly recommend the fried green tomatoes and any of the desserts. Drinks? You bet. And with a deluxe drink you get a cup and ice.

After dinner, we moved over to the auction. Seating at the Possum Trot is in church pews, complete with hymnals of various denominations. They come in handy for holding your place when you want to move up front and examine the merchandise. Unlike church, early arrivals choose to sit up front.

The half-dozen or so vendors had their wares ready to lay out when their allotted time came up. I was dismayed to find none of them had a two-foot tall ceramic Elvis bust like the one I passed up the last time I went to the auction, but not really surprised. That's not the kind of artifact you see every day. I figured there would be something else almost as irresistible, and I wasn't disappointed. The pair of great Americans (Teddy Roosevelt and Benjamin Franklin) decanters came close. I didn't know they were decanters, though. I thought they were bookends. Had I known their heads pulled off, I would have held up the index card that serves as a bid paddle quicker. They could have both been mine for a paltry $2.

Teddy and Ben were not the most unique decanters of the evening. That award went to the wall plaques with a fake handgun mounted on the front. About the size of an encyclopedia volume, I figure each "plaque" would hold a fifth. Had you bought all four of them (for $7 each), you'd have an affordable, nifty little grouping — and almost a gallon — discreetly hanging on your wall. We tried to come up with a profile of the kind of person these decanters would appeal to, but we gave up. It was too scary.

On this particular Friday evening, the attendees could be sorted into three groups. The three of us. Some other people, who had all watched too much Antiques Roadshow. And the vendors, who spent part of their time getting their stuff auctioned and the rest of their time bidding on and buying the stuff that the other vendors were selling. By the end of the evening, we had seen at least one unique, hard to find, one-of-a-kind piece more than once.

Stories that "Possum Trot" is French for "Dueling Banjos" are not true. My guess is Lithuanian, but definitely not French. I've been to the Possum Trot twice now and I've seen everything from collectible dolls to a pipe threader and everything in between auctioned off. It's a fun way to spend a Friday evening with good friends. When you go, say "hey" to Arnold and stay away from the Antiques Roadshow junkies.

We left Seale with a glass chicken, a magnifying paperweight, an old orange juice reamer (just like Mom's), a Japanese teapot and cups (for my third-grader's tea parties) and a mantel. Next time we might find a fireplace to go with it.

Of course we're going back. Gotta love those fried green tomatoes. And I'm still looking for Elvis.

letter

I am writing about an article on the postwide town hall meeting published May 18.

Although the article about the community meeting was very informative, it was missing vital information regarding issues that were discussed at that meeting.

I attended the community meeting with a prepared statement explaining the issue I wanted to bring to light. All of the residents attending were told there would be a three-minute limit to talk about everyone's issues because of the turnout.

I went to discuss the safety of our children on the school paths between Stowers Elementary and Davis Hill housing vicinity. This is a very important issue that needed to be addressed.

Two teen-agers verbally assaulted and physically threatened me on one of the trails I walk to pick up my son from pre-K.

I feel our children have a right to walk home safely and with their dignity intact. Ever since this has happened to me I have been told by numerous parents that they have had incidents similar to mine and worse. Stowers Elementary is the only school on Fort Benning that is located in a heavily wooded area that has three out of four of its walking paths leading through the woods out of plain sight to any adults or school personnel.

Since the day after the meeting we have had wonderful responses by Fort Benning officials including Sgt. Maj. Scott Landy with the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics and the military police for which I am very grateful and want to thank Lt. Col. Terry Kelly for his time, compassion and resources shared.

I do understand that valuable resources such as trained military police officers shouldn't have to spend their time guarding the pathways to an elementary school four times a day, 30 minutes each time when school starts or ends.

Our military police officers work long hours due to understaffing and surely there are more important things to tend to than this matter.

Therefore, I am looking for a long-term solution to this problem by looking for funding to train parents as road guards and compensate them as it is done on many other military installations or start a parent volunteer effort with the ultimate goal of making it safe for our children to walk to and from school, since this is a basic constitutional right that ought to be protected.

If there are any parents, who have had similar incidents or are interested in volunteering please call me at 682-9581 or e-mail me at family3190@aol.com.

Bracelets make sure MIAs are never forgotten

Token provides spiritual link to those missing

Bridgett Siter
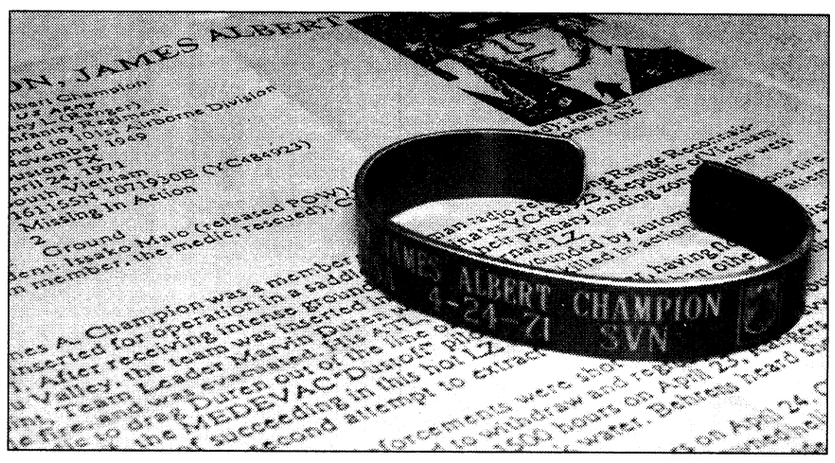
Special to the Bayonet©

Family members and friends are heartened by the Defense POW/Missing Personnel Office's push to collect DNA samples from relatives of soldiers still unaccounted for since World War II. Organizations like the POW Network and the National League of POW/MIA Families are seeing a resurgence in public and private concern for the issue of accountability.

Federal and state laws, like Georgia's House Bill 294, which requires the Department of Transportation to fly the POW/MIA flag year-round at rest stops around the state, make the issue a very public matter, but concerned citizens and family members have been making a personal statement about their commitment to POWs and MIAs for more than 30 years.

Former Air Force pilot and California Congressman Bob Dornan introduced the concept of "Montagnard Bracelets" when he returned from Vietnam in 1969. Dornan was one of many servicemen who served alongside Montagnard hill tribesman in Vietnam. The tribesman often presented these bracelets as a token of appreciation and comradeship. The Americans wore them as a spiritual link to a far away friend still in danger.

Dornan introduced the concept of a POW — MIA bracelet, a variation of the Montagnard bracelet, to a group of college students trying to draw public attention to the prisoners and missing in Vietnam. Voices in Vital America began marketing metal bracelets with the name, rank and loss date of POWs and MIAs in Vietnam. More than five million were purchased before the Paris Peace Accords was signed in 1973.



Many of those original bracelets are still worn by those who purchased them. The brochure that accompanied those earliest versions stated emphatically, "Don't wear it unless you want to get involved. This bracelet is to be worn with the vow it will not be removed until the day (the soldier's) real status is determined or he returns home."

Today POW — MIA bracelets are still being sold in specialty shops, military surplus stores and through various online associates, and according to the POW Network, purchasing a bracelet today is still a commitment to wear it "till he comes home — however many days or years or decades." Though public demand diminished greatly throughout the 70s and 80s, distributors still sell them on a steady basis.

"We sell about 12 a week," said Rocco Tauriello, manager of Ranger Joe's in Columbus. "Mostly to soldiers who're wearing them or giving them as gifts."

These days the bracelets come in a variety of metals — aluminum, stainless steel, copper, brass and silver, and a variety of colors — red, gold, silver and bronze. Like the earlier versions, they're engraved with the name, rank and date of loss, though some are now available with a brief biography of the soldier and even a picture.

Tauriello said his customers are often looking for the name of a specific soldier or a soldier from the same unit, home town or state. Bracelets featuring rangers or soldiers killed or missing in Somalia and Panama are among the most requested.

Bracelets, like the one shown, honor prisoners of war and soldiers killed or missing in action.

Staff Sgt. Linwood Bailey, a drill sergeant with the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, wears a bracelet with the names of six rangers who were killed in Somalia in 1993.

"I wear it in honor of friends and fellow soldiers who died for our nation," Bailey said. "This one is dear to me because the soldiers were actually friends of mine."

Unlike Bailey, most wearers know very little about the soldier whose name they wear.

Web sites are devoted to correspondence between the bracelet wearers and relatives of "their" soldiers.

DNA testing could shed light on identity of remains

Local woman believes test holds answers

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A local woman says she won't rest until she's confident everybody knows about the effort to identify the remains of soldiers listed as missing in action since World War II.

More than 88,000 soldiers are as yet unaccounted for, according to the Defense POW/Missing Personnel Office — 6,000 from the Korean War alone. One of those soldiers is Sgt. 1st Class James Streetman, Jr., a Columbus native. His sister, Sharon Ray, has joined the fight to find answers — answers she feels lie in DNA testing that may help identify more than 860 remains buried at Punchbowl, the National Cemetery of the Pacific at Honolulu, Hawaii.

"That's where I think my brother is," said Ray, who was only 7 when her mother received a telegram from the Secretary of Defense.

Streetman was assigned to the 19th Infantry Regiment in North Korea. He is believed to have died in July 1950, during the first battle of Naktong.

"He was 14 years older than me, but I still remember him. I thought he was a god," Ray said. "I'm told when I was a baby and very, very sick, he'd stay up nights with me so my mom could get some rest. I owe this to him. I can't rest till I get the word out to everyone I possibly can."

The DPMO is working to identify remains through a number of techniques, including mitochondrial DNA testing, which requires blood samples from maternal relatives. But Ray said limited funding means too many people are still unaware that this process is now being conducted throughout the U.S.

"The whole process is free, no charge to the family. What funds there are, are being used for testing and recovery. There's not a lot of money to notify families about what's going on, so it's up to us to pass it along," Ray said. "Even if you don't personally know someone listed as MIA, you never know who else might have a connection. Just tell everyone you can."

The DPMO was formed in 1993 in response to public criticism about resolving the mysteries of missing soldiers. In 1996, the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy directed the DPMO to assume responsibility for all efforts related to the DoD's personnel recovery and accounting efforts.

Ray's search for information about her brother led her to the DPMO's Web site where she learned about the testing.

She and her mother, 93-year-old Lillian Streetman, contacted the agency to schedule bloodwork.

"They sent a local phlebotomist to mother's house, and we had it done together," Ray said. "We signed a little paperwork and he drew blood. The whole thing took less than 15 minutes."

Ray said she and her mother will now wait, several months at the least, to see if their DNA matches any remains already on file.

"Even if it doesn't match yet, we now have it on file. If the DNA is there when remains are recovered, it'll go just like that," she said, snapping her fingers. "Otherwise the remains just hang in limbo, in a lab somewhere. We owe them better than that."

Ray now spends much of her time passing out fliers and contacting VFW and American Legion chapters to spread the message about testing. She attended a DPMO's family briefing, called "Keeping the Promise," May 19, in Atlanta.

"They call it, 'The Forgotten War,' but the Army made a promise to bring them all back, and they won't stop until they do. This is what I can do to help — spread the message. It's we the people, not the government, that owe these men a debt of gratitude," Ray said.

For more information about DNA testing, call the U.S. Army Casualty Office at 1-800-892-2490, or the DPMO's Web site at http://www.dtic.mil/dpmo.

Support groups not just about social occasions

Meetings provide family members important info

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

It was nerve-racking for April Cross to invite 36 couples, most of whom she didn't know, to a party for her husband's unit in California.

And even worse, not one person showed.

Cross looks back on that Family Readiness Group meeting and uses it as an example of an unsuccessful occasion.

She and husband, Sgt. Jeremy Cross, now assigned to the 988th Military Police Activity, help lead the FRG for the unit, which is now deployed to Kuwait for six months.

The soldiers have been gone since March.

Cross volunteered to help organize the unit's group during their six-month peacekeeping rotation. During the deployment she's planned events like next month's ice cream social.

Not only do FRGs give folks a chance to socialize, they provide information to those members left behind.

The group holds monthly meetings, hosts social events and fundraising activities.

FRGs, with permission from DCA, may conduct up to six informal fundraisers a year. Total fundraisers for a group may not generate more than $500 per year.

The overall mission is to provide a social and informational network for soldiers and their families.

But maintaining members can be a feat in itself, she said.

During Cross's stint as leader, she hopes to break stereotypes that some may have about FRGs.

"I think a lot of people have had bad experiences with FRGs in other places and don't give new ones a chance," Cross said.

In order to make the group more inviting, she recently gave a questionnaire to spouses and constantly asks for feedback.

Like herself, it's the facts participants are after.

"I like being in the know," Cross said. "People have to understand that it's important to have a support system in place before their spouse is deployed."

It's another challenge to keep up with the Army's changing family dynamic.

"We have women deploying and their husbands staying behind. Or both the husband and wife are in the Army and they both deploy," she said.

It's not an easy thing to breathe life into the "Old Army's" way of dealing with deployments, Cross said.

Since her husband, Capt. Mitch Watkins, took command of B Company in 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, Bethany Watkins said she has tried to implement fresh ideas into the group.

"Everyone plays a role," she said. "And I don't let anyone fall through the cracks."

Watkins said it's unrealistic to expect everyone to be an active volunteer in an FRG.

"The FRG may be a place where one can contribute gifts of wisdom and experience by reaching out to those who need that help and guidance," Watkins said. "I think all families, no matter how experienced or inexperienced, have an important role with the group."

> "People have to understand that it's important to have a support system in place before their spouse is deployed."
> April Cross
> Family member

While soldiers from the unit aren't deploying on their eight-month rotation to Kosovo for several more months, the unit's FRG is already in action. This way, people know one another before the deployment.

Watkins' husband agreed that the better informed a family is, the more comfortable the family will ultimately feel.

"There can be a lot of apprehension that spouses feel when they don't understand what's happening," Watkins said. "We try to generate a better understanding of what they do. You have to be flexible, ask advice and adapt."

And even though FRGs are well received by many, it sometimes takes special incentives to bring in numbers.

That's a hurdle 2nd Lt. Brandee Campbell, 690th Medical Company (Ground Ambulance), 36th Engineer Group (Construction) said she jumps each month.

The unit sometimes offers a morning off to soldiers if they, or a member of the family, attend the meeting.

"And you don't have to have a family to come to a meeting," she said. "Information given is useful to anyone."

Transforming Army issues new doctrine

New field manuals provide glimpse of tomorrow's Army

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army released two new field manuals Thursday, on its 226th birthday, that provide a glimpse of how it will operate while transforming into a more strategically responsive and dominant force for the evolving security challenges of the new century.

One manual, FM 1, "The Army," establishes Army doctrine, while FM 3-0, "Operations," establishes how the Army will conduct activities across the full range of military operations.

"Both manuals reflect the fundamental changes occurring in the Army today, linking national strategy to Army strategy and operations," said Col. Neal Anderson, chief of Strategic Planning, Concepts and Doctrine with the Army Staff's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans.

FM 1 has four main parts: the Army in the profession of arms, how the Army fits into strategic and joint military operations, the Army's core competencies and "the way ahead," or the future of the Army.

"This manual reiterates the Army's role to serve the nation, in war and peace, with a primacy of focus on fulfilling our non-negotiable contract with the American people — fighting and winning our nation's wars," Anderson said. "It articulates the Army's core competencies, which are essential and enduring capabilities that define the Army's contribution to our nation's security."

FM 3-0, the Army's capstone warfighting manual, establishes doctrine across the range of military operations — peace, conflict and war, he said.

It outlines those operations as offensive, defensive, and stability and support operations that can be performed simultaneously, Anderson said.

Linked to FM 1, FM 3-0 will guide the Army as it transforms into a force that will be more responsive, deployable, agile, versatile, lethal, agile, survivable, sustainable and deployable, he said.

These field manuals are important because they establish doctrine for a doctrine-based Army, Anderson said.

DoD releases study on 'don't ask, don't tell'

Separations nearly double last fiscal year

Amy Stover
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The number of soldiers separated from the Army for violating the military's policy on homosexuals almost doubled last year, according to a study released June 1 by the Department of Defense.

The Army separated 567 soldiers under Chapter 15 last fiscal year, compared with 274 separated by the Army in fiscal 1999.

No one knows objectively why the numbers have gone up, said Lt. Col. B. Duncan Baugh, a command policy officer with the Army Chief of Chaplains Office. He said the figures simply show an increase in the number of soldiers who made statements admitting homosexuality.

"All of the attempts to define why soldiers made statements are speculative," he said. "The Army's numbers aren't bad," he said, explaining that they merely reflect an increase in admissions.

Baugh said one reason for the increased numbers could be the intense focus by the Army, DoD and the media following the July 1999 beating death of Pfc. Barry Winchell, a soldier who was reportedly gay.

"The intense focus created a unique environment ... and the increase in separations for homosexual conduct may be the unintended consequence of this unique circumstance," he said.

Under the current policy, commanders must have credible information to give a soldier a Chapter 15 separation. Credible information is when a reliable person makes an admission or statement of homosexuality, attempts to marry someone of the same sex or engages in a homosexual act, said Baugh.

In most cases of admission, soldiers are administratively separated with an honorable discharge once they make their statement. More than 94 percent of the discharges were based on admission statements and 84 percent of those discharges were first-term soldiers, said Baugh.

All of Fort Campbell's discharges were based on admission statements.

"These studies are always dominated by admissions," Baugh said.

Statements admitting homosexuality require no proof, he said. Typically, an investigation is not conducted for admission statements only.

The statements are taken at face value, assumed to be true and the soldiers are separated, Baugh said.

"We don't investigate any further because we respect the person's privacy," he said.

The Main Post ID Card Section will be closed daily for lunch from noon to 1 p.m.

The Main Post ID Card Branch has an appointment system for more convenient service.

People with appointments have priority over walk-ins and are seen within five minutes of their scheduled appointment time.

Walk-ins for emergency situations are always welcome but appointments are highly encouraged.

The to make an appointment, call 545-4068.

For more information about the ID Card Branch, call Dollie Stutson at 545-1411.

Clearing post

Many soldiers who need to clear post are not able to do so as quickly as they might because they did not have the proper paperwork.

Software glitches remain

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Software problems that recently precluded Army civilians from making Thrift Savings Plan elections through the Army Benefits Center's Interactive Voice Response System are fixed now, according to program officials.

However, glitches still remain in the software that allows users to make automated TSP elections via the center's Web-based Electronic Benefits Information System.

Following full deployment of the center's automated benefits system last year, the Army established a policy that all benefit elections were to be completed either by telephone or online.

Because the Web-based election option was not available as of June 8, the Army announced that employees may submit TSP elections to their servicing Civilian Personnel Advisory Centers using the paper form, TSP-1.

Employees may elect to start, stop or change contribution amounts to the plan's various funds twice a year during an open season.

The current TSP open season started May 15 and ends July 31.

The next open season will run Nov. 15 through Jan. 31.

The TSP is an optional part of civil service retirement plans under which employees may invest in selected mutual funds, money markets or bonds.

Starting in July, contribution limits for Civil Service Retirement System employees will be raised from 5 to 6 percent, and contribution limits for Federal Employee Retirement System employees will be raised from 10 to 11 percent. These limits will continue to increase by 1 percent per year through 2005.

For more information on the Army Benefits Center, visit www.abc.army.mil. For specific information on TSP, go to www.tsp.gov.

Leaders chart infantry's progress at conference

Speeches highlight transformation

Spc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

The leadership of the Army came to Fort Benning this week to chart the organization's progress in the early stages of a decade-long transformation.

Topping the list of speakers at the annual Infantry Conference was Gen. Eric Shinseki, the Army's chief of staff.

"The history of this country is the history of the Army," Shinseki said. "And the history of the Army is, in large part, the history of the infantry."

Shinseki stressed that uncertainty is inevitable for the nation's soldiers in the coming years.

"For those of us who put on the uniform 36 years ago, the Army has changed," he said.

Despite the changes, though, the Army will always have the same primary function: "Prompt, sustained land combat."

"You can do lots of things with an army," Shinseki said. "But for all those other things, there are cheaper solutions. Warfighting is our business."

That business should always be done decisively, Shinseki said, and with overwhelming force; the Army has never believed in giving the enemy a fair fight.

"We believe in the 100-to-1 contest, although that's hard to achieve," he said. "We want him to declare 'no mas' at the end of the first quarter."

The Army's challenge is to stay ready to crush any opponent who shows up to fight today, Shinseki said, while building the Army that can win on the complex and unfamiliar battlefields of future decades.

With finite resources to do both of those things, he warned, achieving one goal can only mean being forced to make some sacrifices in the other.

Diligence and strong leadership will be needed to keep soldiers ready to fight.

Ultimately, Shinseki said, the Army will look very different at the end of the current transformation — armor, for example, will probably be a lot lighter, to allow for greater agility and deployability.

"If you can design a system that doesn't get hit, you can shed all that Cold War weight," he said.

"We want to see farther than the other guy. We want to shoot first every time. We want to kill a target every time we pull the trigger."

Another key to tomorrow's Army, the chief of staff said, will be an improved personnel policy that adds greater stability and predictability to an Army career.

Despite the need for change, Shinseki said, the current force remains the best in the world.

"Stand tall," Shinseki said. "It's a magnificent Army. And it's magnificent because of your leadership."

Soldiers who heard Shinseki's address said the chief of staff's comments offered clear insight into where the Army is going.

"He's definitely one of the best, from my time in the military," said Command Sgt. Maj. George Monk, commandant of Fort Benning's NCO Academy. "It gives me confidence we're headed in the right direction."

Other senior Army leaders followed Shinseki with similar messages.

Lt. Gen. Timothy Maude, deputy chief of staff for personnel, assured soldiers that enlisted manning is holding strong, with every rank at or near the 100 percent mark.

"Your NCO corps is really very healthy," Maude said.

Gen. John Abrams, who heads the Training and Doctrine Command — of which Fort Benning, as the U.S. Army Infantry Center, is a part — said that it was a "huge misrepresentation" to suggest that the Army is clinging to the old ways.

"This is not a dialog between old goats," Abrams said. "It's hopefully going to light a fire in your belly about what it's going to take to sustain the momentum."

Abrams strongly rejected the idea that no military force in the world is strong enough to think about taking on the U.S. military.

"Have you been to the Paris Air Show, and seen what they're buying?" Abrams asked. "We're not the only ones who are adapting."

But the Army is ready to meet whatever challenges emerge, the TRADOC commander said.

"We have strategic respect in this business," Abrams said, "and it didn't happen overnight, by signing some order.

"We've got some work to do. And we can prevail. It's not just for the Army. It's for the nation."

Conference: Brings infantry leaders, ideas together

The problem of staying ahead of the curve is compounded by a reduction in resources, warned the soldier responsible for leading the development of infantry doctrine.

Still, the value of the infantry soldier — as measured by the killing effectiveness of a rifle squad — continues to grow. Over the long term, Le Moyne said, he hopes to see those squads grow by two soldiers, to an even more effective 11-man unit.

In other developments, Le Moyne said that the computerization of the battlefield is increasing the infantry's ability to organize and sustain a fight, even in darkness.

The consolidation of 11-series military occupational specialties will be supported by new training at the Infantry School, Le Moyne said, while soldiers will enjoy new career mobility as a result of the streamlining.

"We have a barrier system in our personnel policies that precludes soldiers from crossing over if they want to," he said. "The ethos is a bit different from light to heavy — but when you get down to the soldiers, they'll tell you that it's all right."

During the switch to a consolidated infantry career field, Le Moyne said, it will be the NCO corps' "ruthless adherence to standards" that will count most. Le Moyne also rejected reports the infantry isn't preparing for the growing likelihood of urban combat.

Every infantryman now spends five days training in the city environment before even completing initial entry training, and dozens of new urban warfare training facilities are planned and funded across the service.

Still, the problem requires continued thought.

"Ten thousand years of military strategy," Le Moyne said, "and we're still using grappling hooks."

The new model of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle, the M-2 A3, has improved dramatically on the original Bradley, Le Moyne said, with demonstrable results in gunnery.

Funding is on track for nearly 1,000 of the new infantry fighting vehicles.

The package of technology that forms the dismounted infantryman's Land Warrior package has lost weight — from 100 pounds down to about 89 — while growing in reliability and effectiveness, Le Moyne said.

Land Warrior technology works consistently in water and mud, and tested well in trials with the 82nd Airborne — where troops said they wanted to keep it.

"When a paratrooper tells you that he'll carry it, you know you've got something," Le Moyne said.

"The word is, when you hit the drop zone find the guy with the heads-up display and follow him."

Training is getting better, too, Le Moyne said.

A pilot program in leadership, the Basic Officer Leaders Course, is aimed at introducing basic soldiering to a suburbanized force of new officers who are less likely to have fired weapons or spent a night in the woods before serving.

Ranger School students are the beneficiaries of a new effort to reduce wash-outs without lowering standards; Ranger trainees are seeing more cadre and more preparation for the course.

The seriousness of the infantry's business, Le Moyne concluded, has to be kept at the forefront of every discussion; the chief of infantry pointed to the six Army divisions in the late days of World War II that sustained casualties rates of more than 200 percent.

"Forget what counts," Le Moyne said, "and young men will die unnecessarily."

Berets: Continue transformation of Army changes

everyone to have two berets.

Although not all soldiers will receive the berets before the Army's birthday, the post's central issue facility is issuing them as quickly as possible.

"We will issue 15,966 berets here," said Myrle McIntosh, a CIF property book officer.

"We want to get them in the hands of the troops as soon as possible."

The new berets will display the Army's flash — a shield with a light blue background with 13 stars.

After a year, major subordinate commands are authorized to replace the Army's flash with an organization flash.

"This is an exciting time," Retherford said.

"The Army is moving forward toward an objective force. The beret is a symbol of the Army's change.

Soldiers are to wear the berets while in the garrison area in BDUs or while wearing Class As or Bs.

"It will be the designated headgear of the day," Retherford said.

"Of course there will be soldiers going to and from the field in BDU caps," he said.

"But if someone is going to the dining facility in a BDU cap, he is wrong and is going to get an on- the-spot correctio," he added.

"This is about change. It's about recognizing that the U.S. Army is the most professional Army in the world," said Retherford.

"I welcome the change."

Awards: Highlight contributions

Having already faced the unique challenges of enlisted service, Gorman went on to the U.S. Military Academy, earning a commission as an Army officer.

"He learned his craft as a company commander in Korea — and he never forgot those lessons," Le Moyne said.

Gorman went on to hold battalion and brigade command in Vietnam, and later commanded the 8th Infantry Division (Mechanized) at the height of the Cold War.

At retirement, he headed the U.S. Southern Command.

But Gorman's career was also marked by unusual assignments outside the military.

He served as an advisor in the State Department, and was tasked for a year as an analyst to the Central Intelligence Agency.

That quality of insight, Le Moyne said, has appeared at every stage of Gorman's career.

"This is the man who, in the 1970s, was talking about computerized training and digital simulation — before any of us knew what that meant," Le Moyne said.

Dunaway's career was similarly distinguished. The retired sergeant major of the Army enlisted in the National Guard in 1941, and was soon called to active duty. He never left.

"Now, count the years," Le Moyne said. "He joined in 1941. He was a first sergeant in 1946."

Dunaway went on to serve two tours in Vietnam with the 5th Special Forces Group, and later served as the command sergeant major of the 101st Airborne Division. It was from that job that he was called to serve as the Army's top enlisted soldier.

"Behind every good commander is a better command sergeant major," Le Moyne said.

Gorman stepped forward to accept the Doughboy with clear gratitude — and a clear call to action.

The strength and pride of a military unit, the retired general said, lies in the connection of its soldiers to the men who have gone before them.

"This is the stuff that the infantry is made of," he said. "Whatever else you do, preserve that heritage."

Gorman called on the Army to help veterans find the men they once fought with.

Strong regimental associations, he said, can be the "connecting file" that gives current soldiers a sense of history. And that cause is now becoming particularly urgent.

"We're losing our World War II membership," Gorman said. "They're going very rapidly, now."

Gorman said that Fort Benning had a particular role to play in linking soldiers to the infantry's past.

"This is the home of the infantry," he said. "Help us keep the family together."

For Dunaway, the family connections are hard to forget.

"My daughter was born at the post hospital, here," he said. "And that was a long time ago."

When Dunaway went to the fighting during World War II, his family stayed at Fort Benning.

Dunaway also had strong words of advice for contemporary soldiers.

"My men," Dunaway said. "We worked together. We played together. And we were ready to fight for our country together. My goal was not to be the sergeant major of the Army — my goal was to take care of my troops. And I learned that right here at Fort Benning."

than it was in the 20th century; in contrast to the large conflicts between industrialized state militaries that characterized the World Wars, troops are expected to spend the next few decades fighting Chechnya and Somalia-style conflicts against ad hoc separatist militias and decentralized terrorist organizations.

It's that challenge Shinseki is seeking to confront with his ongoing transformation of the Army — proving that, at the age of 226, the Army remains quick on its feet.

Trainees experience the immediate effects of the Chemical Smoke gas. NBC training is part of basic training for all soldiers.

Soldiers in training gain confidence in gas chamber

Exposure to gas, important to trainees

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

During basic training, all soldiers must face the challenge of going through the gas chamber.

Armed with facts and lessons about their masks and a little apprehension, soldiers of E Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, made their way through the chamber on Brittin Range Monday.

While it was a learning experience, it was also one most soldiers don't soon forget.

Some of the soldiers, like Pvt. Robert Timmins, thought they already had a pretty good grasp on what the chamber would hold for them.

"I know I probably won't be able to breathe and I may throw up as soon as I come out," he said. "I'm not scared now, but as soon as I walk in, I'll probably be terrified."

Others in the unit shared Timmins' fear of the unknown.

"This kind of stuff is new to me so I'm kind of nervous about going into the gas chamber," said Pvt. Rickey Gulley. "At least from what I've heard, no one has died in there, so I know I have a chance to make it. I'm a little worried though."

Getting soldiers past those fears through personal experience is part of why the NBC chamber is included in basic training, said Staff Sgt. Marvin Boykins, an NBC chamber NCO.

"We send soldiers through the chamber to build their confidence in their equipment and for familiarization," he said.

The CS gas in the chamber helps enforce that confidence.

"A demo with the gas makes the soldiers work with something that they can't see, and that's how most chemicals work on the battlefield, you can't see, smell or taste them," Boykins said.

"Going through here, they can't see the CS, there's no effect until they take the mask off."

Every soldier who goes through the gas chamber follows a preset routine. Inside the chamber, masks are checked to make sure they are properly sealed, then the soldiers break the seal and then reseal the mask.

Photos by Sgt. Michael Maddox

Staff Sgt. Marvin Boykins, an NBC chamber NCO, checks the seal and proper fitting of the M-40 protection mask on a soldier before entering the chamber.

Then comes the tough part.

"They take their masks off three soldiers at a time and the drill sergeants will ask them a few simple questions. Then they come on out," said Boykins.

He added, soldiers are then asked questions to make sure they are breathing while in the chamber to get the full effect of the gas.

The effects of the gas, like red, teary eyes and difficulty breathing are only temporary. Even so, soldiers handle the effects in many different ways.

"People will come out and say, 'I can't breathe.' If you can talk, you can breathe. They just feel that way," Boykins said.

"I've seen everything out here," he said. "When I first got out here, I saw one soldier come out and hug his drill sergeant. The drill sergeant couldn't do anything but pat him on the back and tell him it's okay."

After the chamber was over, the soldiers learned they could conquer yet another challenge put to them.

"It wasn't too bad. It was a little bit worse than I thought it would be, but when you join the Army, you do what they say and you'll make it," said Pvt. Jesse Travis.

Pvt. Robby Courson said he was glad to get it over with.

"It was definitely an experience that I'll never forget. I made it through and I'm alive!"

Engineers field new equipment on river

Guard soldiers bridge river during FTX

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

As calm as a humid Georgia afternoon, soldiers from the 167th Engineer Company, Alabama Army National Guard gracefully completed a full bridge closure with the Improved Ribbon Bridge section during the unit's annual training exercise June 2-12, at Fort Benning,

"We are very fortunate that we are in a very good place to bridge," said Capt. David Ward, 167th Engineer Company commander. "We will be on the river at least eight times a year using a ribbon bridge."

He said the unit's training consists mainly of rafting missions simulating the movement of tanks from one shore to the other in a ferry mode, with each platoon employing four interior bays and two end ramps to transport vehicles back and forth. But it is during the annual exercise that the unit practices full bridge closures, connecting bridging sections completely to allow troop and vehicular movement over a river.

"This is the best training area because everywhere else the river is too narrow to be a challenge or too wide for one company to bridge," Ward said.

With what Ward refers to a "great mix" of soldiers both former active duty and new troops, an abundance of experience and confidence makes this one of the best units he has seen in an Assault Ribbon Bridge Company.

"I have soldiers who worked with this bridge for more than twenty years before (developers) came out with the IRB," Ward said.

As tie-off members latched metal pieces of the Ribbon Bridge, soldiers in MK2 Bridge Erection Boats scooted up and down the Chattahoochee River to deliver another bridge section. In just under one hour, 24 interior bay sections and two ramp bay sections connected the river banks of Georgia and Alabama at Engineer Landing.

It is these troops who were able to make a seamless transition from working with Standard Ribbon Bridge sections and adding an IRB section with no time lost in completing their mission.

Sgt. Wendall Grant, right, prepares to latch the Ribbon Bridge section as Sgt. William Flanagan directs soldiers to continue pulling the sections slowly.

"Adding the new piece could have been a challenge," said Sgt. Jayson Hill, head raft commander, "because of its slight differences in weight and thickness. We just worked together to learn what was the best way to lock it in."

"As a company commander, my greatest concern was that my soldiers had not had training. But EWK Eisenwerke Kaiserslautern GmbH technicians were right here to assist us," Ward said. "The great thing about this IRB system is its interoperability with older equipment."

Ward is excited that his engineers had the opportunity to work with equipment that could be fielded in the military in three to four years. This IRB bay is number 0001 explained the National Guard commander.

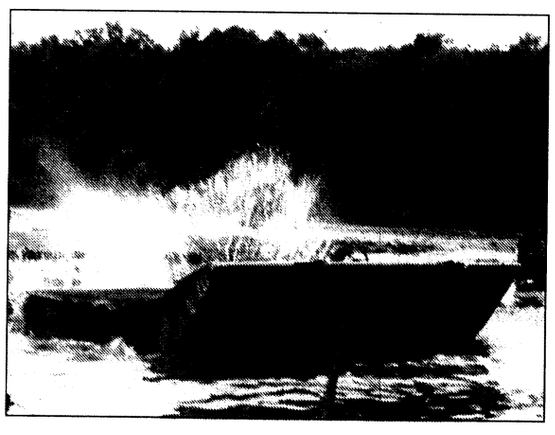
Safety was a high priority for the commander and senior enlisted soldiers during this exercise. Safety boats crews were positioned close by in the event a heat injury or a misstep sent a soldier into the river.

"The NCOs do a great job of ensuring the safety of the troops," Ward said. "My job is to think about the risks, inform the NCOs and let them take the 50 pages or so of risk assessment I prepared into effect," Ward said. He added with unabashed pride, "I have never seen an unsafe unit with good NCOs."

A well-trained and safety conscious unit on their annual training allowed developers a unique opportunity to field test their product.

"This training exercise is an excellent opportunity to check the bay out just to see if it would fit properly," said Dennis Haag, assistant projects manager for EWK. "Our technicians were here to test the IRB. We could not resist this opportunity." The IRB is fully interoperable with the SRB and the EWK Folding Float Bridge in terms of bridge coupling and transport equipment he said.

"The soldiers said they loved it," Ward said. He explained that training with new equipment furthers the company's role in the Army's transformation



"We continue to train to be a multipurpose bridge company. We train with flow bridges, fix bridges and medium Girder bridges, but the Assault Ribbon Bridge sections will stay in our inventories," he said.

The unit's training continued with a combined arms night exercise complete with an air assault mission, sending scouts to destroy the enemy's observation point, setting up a tactical operations center, air-lift bridging equipment to the site to set up rafting capabilities to traverse the river transporting troops and vehicles.

Top drill sergeant named after tough competition

ITB soldier to represent post in Virginia

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning is sending its top drill sergeant to compete in the Army's Drill Sergeant of the Year competition in Fort Monroe, Va., Monday through June 22.

Staff Sgt. Matthew McCready, from the Infantry Training Brigade, earned the title of the post's drill sergeant of the year.

"It's an awesome accomplishment," McCready said.

McCready competed against Staff Sgt. Rahsan Mitchell, the Basic Combat Training Brigade drill sergeant of the year, and two other Sand Hill drill sergeants for the title.

McCready

The four competitors were graded on their performance during an Army physical fitness test, a written test, drill and ceremony, a class they taught and then graded on how they performed in front of a reviewing board.

"It was a tough competition," McCready said. "Everyone did well in PT. Everybody on the written test faired the same. Everybody was really close when we went to the board."

As McCready went before the board, he said he was nervous about the outcome.

"I felt pretty good, but you always think you didn't study enough," he said. "But, like a promotion board, if you answer the first few questions good, then you relax and they start coming easier."

After all the points were tallied, McCready led the field and was named Fort Benning's drill sergeant of the year.

His efforts were recognized by ITB officials.

"He is a extremely dedicated and professional NCO," said Col. Tom Hayden, ITB's commander. "He is committed to developing the best soldiers he possibly can.

"It took a lot of dedication, time and effort practicing to be selected," he said.

Hayden said McCready's accomplishments reflect on the quality of drill sergeants in ITB.

"I think he has a good shot at winning the Army's Drill Sergeant of the Year competition," he said. "He is very talented, smart and professional. He compliments all that by a strong leadership."

As the post's drill sergeant of the year, McCready will act as a liaison between the Sand Hill drill sergeants and the brigade's officials. He said he will get whatever the drill sergeants need and keep them up to date on the constant changes in regulations.

Although he plays an important role in the trainees military education, the days of face-to-face contact with the Army's newest soldiers are over.

"I miss some of the soldier aspects and training the soldiers," he said. "But in a position of greater responsibility, like I am now, I am able to do better things for them and the drill sergeants."

McCready decided to become a drill sergeant while in basic training.

"It is something that I wanted to do since basic," he said. "I wanted to train soldiers. I wanted to turn civilians into soldiers I'd want to serve with in a line unit."

"It's an awesome feeling to take soldiers who have no idea what's going on and watch them grow from Day One to the end of Week 14 — transforming from a civilian to a soldier.

"It's a good feeling when they come up to me at the Turning Blue Ceremony and say 'Drill Sergeant, will you put my cord on me,' that's probably the pinnacle of the whole cycle."

McCready still has a year left on the trail. Then he will have the chance to return to a line unit, where he said he would like to serve with soldiers he has trained.

"Any of the soldiers I've trained will probably be sergeants when I leave," he said, "and I'd take any one of them as one of my team leaders."

He said if that were to happen they would know what he wanted.

"They know what to expect. I don't act any different out there than I do here. I probably wouldn't drop them for as many push-ups," he joked.

New vehicles keep Army's transformation rolling ahead

Infantry to see new equipment with transformation

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers from the Army's first transformation team got hands-on training with the new eight-wheeled Interim Armored Vehicle.

A squad from 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, Fort Lewis, Wash., was introduced to the two variants of the IAV family by the General Motors General Dynamics Land Systems contractors.

The Mobile Gun System and the Infantry Carrier Vehicle are the two variants that were recently put on display at Fort McNair, D.C., for soldiers to probe and become more familiar with. There are also eight other configurations of the ICV that were not on display.

"Getting new equipment gives us confidence that we're being supported in the jobs we do," said Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Self, squad leader from 5th Bn., 20th Inf.

The basic ICV has armor that protects the two-man crew and nine on-board soldiers from machine gun bullets, mortar and artillery fragments. The variant models of the ICV include configurations such as the reconnaissance, antitank guided missile, medical evacuation vehicle, antitank guided missile vehicle, and carriers for mortars, engineers, and reconnaissance and fire support teams.

The Mobile Gun System variant consists of a General Dynamics Land Systems 105 mm cannon mounted in a low-profile turret integrated on the General Motors Light Armored Vehicle III chassis. All models can attain speeds of 62 mph on the highway and have a maximum range of 312 miles.

The average cost of the 9 types of vehicles is $1.5 million, said Jim Flynn, sales and marketing manager for General Motors Defense Group. His company plans to have the first unit equipped and operationally capable with 320 of the light armored vehicles in the 2002-2003 timeframe.

"Both types of vehicles are oriented toward urban terrain," said Self.

Soldiers said they look forward to the training because just having the equipment will improve morale.

"No matter how tough we are, carrying 110 pounds of equipment for 25 miles, to engage in a battle, takes a lot out of you," said Pfc. Shaun Ratcliff, IAV driver, 5th Bn., 20th Inf. "Soon we can arrive at the field site rested and ready to train harder and longer."

The interim vehicles will put the Army closer to transformation because infantry units will be able to get to the fight faster and safer, Self said.

Moving vans mark start of summer

Rachel R. Garcia

Maj. Shawn Faherty separates a few items before his move from Fort Benning. The Faherty family began moving preparations weeks ago.

Planning ahead can help remove last minute troubles

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Memorial Day doesn't signal the unofficial start of summer — moving vans do. They dot the scenery on military installations across the country.

But before the cardboard box parade begins, certain requirements must be met. Once orders are in hand, it's time to contact the housing and transportation office to schedule appointments.

Fort Benning Housing officials recommend scheduling a pre-inspection appointment 30 to 45 days prior to the expected move-out date.

At this inspection, tenants are told what work needs to be completed on the house before their final inspection. Having the pre-inspection this far ahead allows plenty of time to contact craftsmen and to make needed repairs such as changing filters and replacing blinds, said Ron Smith, chief of Family Housing Branch.

"There's no time to accomplish things if left until last minute," Smith said.

With the pre-inspection out of the way, the date and time for their final inspection can be made.

While no dates are guaranteed, planning allows people the time frame they want — especially when dates are penciled in two or three weeks in advance.

The next stop is to the transportation department to schedule an outbound move. The Pasha Group, Fort Benning's contracted move manager for all outbound shipments, will schedule a counseling session for those moving. This will be either group session or one-on-one depending on the complexity of the move.

"We have so many people moving from Fort Benning that it's easier for everybody to schedule it in a group briefing, because otherwise people wouldn't get the appointments that they wanted," said Fran Vollaro, the Pasha Group's vice-president of operations. "Especially during this time of the year, we'd never be able to schedule enough single appointments."

The group holds two move briefings a day, except Wednesdays, to discuss entitlements, typical transient times and relocation issues.

And while it's still recommended to contact the outbound shipment coordinators as soon as orders are issued, there still may be problems, Vollaro said.

"It's a catch-22 situation because we tell people to come in as early as possible and then they get upset with us when we don't schedule their move until a week or two before the move. So what happens is they don't come in early, they still have orders to move out and when they come in, we have to stop processing the early ones and handle the ones who come in late," Vollaro said. "As a courtesy to everybody, it's best to come in as early as possible."

In fact, the Pasha Group implemented a new venture this month to keep people in check. An advance orders program began last week, where those moving will receive a courtesy call and be advised to make an appointment for their upcoming trip.

"We're hoping to catch the people who might have procrastinated or waited a little bit," Vollaro aid.

After the transportation briefing, the designated moving company will assess the

Commissary opens doors for early shoppers

New program allows for early shopping

The early bird gets the worm, er, food at Fort Benning's commissary.

The DECA store is implementing an early bird shopping program June 26. Shoppers looking for just a few items — 15 items or less — will be able to enter the store and shop between 7 and 9 a.m. Tuesday through Saturday. All other store hours will remain the same.

Gary Hensley, store director, said the program is designed to help on-post soldiers and their families as well as civilians who have military shopping privileges.

"If someone gets up in the morning and needs milk, something for school lunches or a birthday cake for the office, we're forcing them to drive right past here and drive downtown. I absolutely refuse to let people do that. We're in the business of serving soldiers," he said.

Hensley, a prior zone manager for military commissaries, said other posts already have such hours. It was an easy decision to implement a program like this here, where more than 2,300 patrons shop each day.

It's an idea shopper retired Sgt. 1st Class Oscar Maxwell thinks will be well received.

"It's good for the person on the move," Maxwell said. "When I used to get up for PT in the morning, hours like this would have been great. I could grab something and get back to work."

Lawn equipment theft on rise

Thiefs target unsecured tools, bikes

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Every summer Fort Benning Military Police respond to numerous claims of stolen lawn equipment, particularly lawn mowers, weed eaters and other tools.

Many of these thefts could be avoided if residents secured their lawn items, Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement Division said.

Unsecured equipment being stolen is a recurring problem here, Kelley said.

"If people leave their lawn mower unsecured, there is someone who is willing to 'secure' it," Kelley said. "You cannot make the assumption that because your lawn mower is on your lawn it will stay there."

In addition to lawn mowers, thieves also take bicycles, scooters and weed eaters.

"People sometimes get complacent," said Maurice A. McKinney, a military police investigator with the Directorate of Public Safety.

Military police are taking steps to help remind soldiers living on post to secure their valuables before they are otherwise acquired. If an MP finds unsecured items, they will attempt to contact the owner. If they are unable, they will leave a note notifying the person responsible that they are subject to loss by theft for leaving their belongings unsecured.

"If you are approached by

Exceptional program designed to assist families with special needs

Manager dispels myths, misconceptions

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Exceptional Family Member Program manager and the public affairs office of the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center are working together to dispel the myths about the EFMP.

Marsha Collins, program manager at Fort Benning, said the program is designed to prevent hardships and offer resources to the families of those enrolled, but too many soldiers fear enrollment will be detrimental to their careers.

"It's really a simple matter of looking at the family member's special considerations to prevent hardships, medical or educational, with each assignment," Collins said.

"It's a big benefit, underutilized, because there's been a misconception — a stigma — attached to the EFMP label. It doesn't cripple a career, but when a soldier and his family has to deal with special needs without the assistance of EFMP, that definitely does affect his family and his career."

Shirley Brown, EFMP program manager at the USACFSC, the Department of the Army agency responsible for moral, welfare and recreation programs such as EFMP, addressed the issue of misconceptions in a recent Army News Service interview.

"The Army cares about soldiers who have special needs family members. That's why the EFMP program was set up. It's the Army's helping hand," Attention Deficit Disorder, or ADD, is a medical condition, believed to be caused by a chemical imbalance in the brain, that interferes with concentration, impulse control and attention. It's one of the many disorders and diseases that qualify family members, usually children, to be enrolled in the Exceptional Family Member Program.

Early diagnosis, behavioral modifications, educational planning and even medication can help, but children with ADD often experience a loss of structure and an increase in behavioral problems during the summer months, said Marsha

Students receive close look at Army

McBride Elementary School

First- through third-grade students took a field trip May 6 to take a look at what their Partners In Education — 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — actually do when they are not working with the students at McBride Elementary School. The students were given a tour of the various military vehicles that are common to the unit.

They were very eager to sit on the vehicles and pretend to be soldiers.

The soldiers were very patient and professional while answering the many questions from the students.

During the visit, it was evident that both the students and the soldiers have benefited greatly this year from working together as Partners In Education.

Daymon Furr said the trip was a lot of fun.

"I liked going on the trucks. The soldiers were fun!" he said.

"We got to get on the tanks. I love that place," Ali Poore said.

Preschool registration — Patch Preschool is now accepting registrations for the 2001-2002 school year.

Hours of registration are 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Your child must be registered with the Central Registration Office.

For more information, call 687-2404. Register early before all classes are filled.

Vaccination proof required — Fort Benning Schools follow the Georgia Department of Human Resources guidelines for immunizations and work cooperatively with Martin Army Hospital. All students entering the sixth grade next year will be required to have the varicella vaccine (chicken pox) or proof of immunity.

Proof consists of a physician's or health care provider's diagnosis of the disease or a statement of immunity.

Please check with your physician, clinic, or health care provider to be sure you have the appropriate documentation for school registration.

Mayors wanted — The East Main Post mayor's position and the vice mayor and the Indianhead Terrace vice mayor position are currently open.

Call Rosetta Darby at 687-7747 for more information on how to apply for these positions.

Grants available — The Hope Grant Program will pay all tuition and fees, and up to $100 per quarter for textbooks for all active duty, and their family members 16 years or older (with rare exceptions) stationed at Fort Benning and living in Georgia.

All you have to do is fill out the required forms and register for classes at Columbus Technical College.

Depending on the program, classes are offered at Fort Benning and main campus, day and evening.

Programs offered include Management, Computers, Office Technology Medical, Dental, Paramedic, Automotive, Carpentry, Air Conditioner Repair, Welding and many others.

For more information, call 685-8549, or come by Building 2614 in Soldier's Plaza.

Volunteers wanted — The Family Advocacy New Parent Support Plus and First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking follow-up phone callers.

Mothers of all descriptions are needed.

Those who have had premature babies or multiple births, who were teen-age moms, single moms, and SIDS moms can be especially helpful.

The basic requirements are to be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support, and referrals to services they need.

For more information, call New Parent Support Plus and First Steps at 544-2020.

Red Cross needs volunteers — The Red Cross is looking for volunteers and instructors. If interested, call the office located in Soldiers Plaza at 545-8221.

Internet seminar — Chattahoochee Valley Community College is offering a free seminar on "Searching the Internet" Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon in the Learning Resource Center Computer Lab.

The program will demonstrate how to effectively search the Internet for both educational and recreational purposes.

Call 291-4979 or 291-4978 for reservations. Seating is limited.

Donations needed — The Columbus Goodwill is in need of donations of clothing, furniture, house wares, linens and small appliances.

Donations fund the mission of providing job training for disabled and disadvantaged individuals.

For more information about donating, call the Goodwill at 324-4366.

Counselors needed —The Muscular Dystrophy Association needs volunteer camp counselors for Camp Walk N' Roll for the week July 28 through Aug. 3. Camp is held at Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga., which is about 45 minutes east of Atlanta.

Applications are available through Sgt. Rob Brown, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, Infantry Hall, Room 550. For any questions concerning camp responsibilities, call Joanie Rosenbaum, camp director, at 322-7573 or (770) 621-9800.

Reunion — The Army's renowned First Infantry Division will conduct its 83rd annual reunion in Nashville, Tenn., from Aug. 17-21. The reunion is sponsored by the Big Red One veterans' organization, the Society of the First Infantry Division located in Blue Bell, Penn.

The Big Red One is the Army's oldest and most famous division. It has fought with distinction in four wars in the 20th century: World War I, WWII, Vietnam and Desert Storm. Presently, the Division has units deployed on peacekeeping and military support missions in several countries in eastern Europe.

More than 1,000 veterans of the Big Red One and their guests are expected to attend the reunion which will feature a memorial service to remember the nearly 13,000 First Infantry Division soldiers who have given their lives in the service of their country.

Everyone who ever served in the First Infantry Division is cordially invited to attend the reunion.

For more information, write Society of the First Infantry Division, 1933 Morris Road, Blue Bell, PA 19422, call (888) 324-4733 or e-mail Soc1ID@aol.com.

What is DD Form 2648 and who needs it any way?

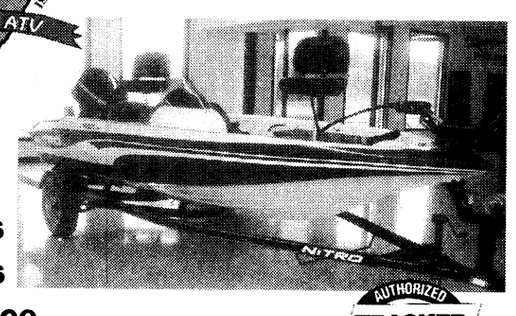
It is the preseparation counseling checklist that is used by all of the military services to record preseparation services and benefits requested by and provided to separating service members. It is used used to identify preseparation counseling areas of interest as a basis for development of an Individual Transition Plan.

The ITP is your game plan for a successful transition back to civilian life. It helps you identify actions and activities associated with your transition. DD Form 2648 allows you to identify the benefits and services you want to receive additional information and counseling on as you prepare your ITP. You will then be referred to service providers, subject matter experts, who will gladly answer any questions you may have.

Title 10, U.S. Code 1142, requires the Preseparation counseling checklist be completed not later than 90 days prior to separation or retirement.

Service members who are retiring from the active duty may make appointments with ACAP to complete the checklist one year prior to their date of retirement.

Other separating service members may make appointments no earlier than six months prior to their separation date. Completing the checklist does not obligate a service member to separate or retire. It is to be used as a planning tool, guide and basis for the ITP, regardless of the separation or retirement date. However, in all instances, the preseparation checklist must be completed at a minimum of 90 days prior to separation, and is a required document for final outprocessing. It's the law.



To find out more about DD Form 2648, log onto the Fort Benning ACAP home page at www.benning.army.mil/ACAP/ and click on Benefits and Services.

Preseparation counseling appointments can be made in person at the ACAP Center, Building 2634, Soldier's Plaza, or by calling the ACAP Center at 545-2308.

EFMP: Offers resources, support

Brown said. "The program works with other military and civilian agencies to provide a comprehensive, coordinated multiagency approach toward community support, housing, medical, educational and personnel services to families with special needs."

An exceptional family member is defined as a child or adult dependent with any physical, emotional, developmental or intellectual disorder that requires special treatment, therapy, educational considerations, training or counseling. Special needs range from mild learning disabilities to medical conditions such as asthma, Down Syndrome, blindness or other severe disabilities.

More than 50,000 are enrolled in the program Armywide. Of those, 36,157 are special needs children.

Devin Downer is one of 552 active enrollees on Fort Benning. The 10-year-old was diagnosed with cerebal palsy and mild autism at birth.

Katherine Downer said her son's special needs have never interfered with her husband's career and the EFMP program has always ensured the family is stationed where Devin can receive special medical care.

But the program is only as good as the resources available at each post, Downer said, and parents still need to be proactive about finding the resources they need.

"Some posts seem to have better programs in place than others," she said. "Initially the program was great, but I think the longer we've been enrolled, the more people seem to think we know all the answers."

Downer said Collins was "very helpful and very kind" when the family arrived at Fort Benning last year.

Before leaving Fort Jackson, S.C., Downer contacted Collins to discuss the special housing needs the family would require — no stairs and stabilization as soon as possible, since disruption often means setbacks to children with autism. But the family languished in billeting for two months and had to find temporary housing before being assigned quarters.

"We did our part and she (Collins) did her part," Downer said. "But other agencies involved need to recognize EFMP's input and cooperate with the program."

Officials recognize the program has its limitations.

"We have some installations that have excellent programs," Brown said. "We have situations where the regulation isn't fully implemented. We know our services are inconsistent across the board, but we're working to make them consistent."

Enrollment became mandatory in 1986, though the program has been around for 22 years.

Active duty, reserve soldiers in the Active Guard Reserve, reservists on active duty exceeding 30 days and AGR personnel serving under authority of title 10 United States Code with exceptional family members are required to enroll and update their records every three years.

Department of the Army civilian employees are not eligible for the program. However, they must identify children with special needs each time they process for an overseas assignment.

Collins said enrollment information is "very, very private." It's not available to selection boards but is entered in a private data bank available only to installation managers who work closely with the families.

Enrollment allows Army assignment managers to review the medical and educational needs of exceptional family members during the assignment process. Whenever possible soldiers are assigned to an area where these medical and educational needs can be met, depending on the personnel requirement for the soldier's grade, specialty and eligibility for the tour. Enrollment does not change a soldier's eligibility for worldwide assignment.

"Let's say a soldier is being considered for reassignment to three different posts," Collins explained. "The assignment manager notes this soldier is enrolled in the EFMP and takes a closer look at those three posts to see which one has the programs and facilities the soldier and his family need. Helping ease the burden of the soldier's family can only have a positive impact on the soldier's career."

Soldiers with family members who qualify for the program should contact the EFMP medical enrollment section at 545-5803 or Collins at 545-6969.

Camp: Helps kids with ADD

Collins, EFMP program manager at Fort Benning. Many times the gains made throughout the school year are lost when summer vacation rolls around.

That's why Fort Benning's Army Community Services EFMP is sponsoring 16 children to attend Camp Discovery, a summer day camp for children with ADD, presented by the Bradley Center of St. Francis in Columbus.

Camp Discovery is a therapeutic program, designed to help children with ADD maintain and improve skills in managing their social interactions, physical activities and behavior. Trained professionals will lead group sessions that focus on listening skills, stress and anger management, self-esteem, problem-solving, cooperation, following directions, organization, nutrition and accepting rules and authority figures at school and home.

The two-week camp will also feature field games, arts and crafts, swimming and a community outing.

The first session, for ages 6 to 8, will run from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Monday through Friday, July 16 - 27. The second session, for ages 9 to 11, will run Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Aug. 6 - 17.

Transportation from Fort Benning will be available.

Soldiers with family members enrolled in the EFMP and diagnosed with ADD can pick up a registration form at Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza, or call Marsha Collins at 545-3344 or 545-7517. Spaces are limited to 16, and the deadline for application is June 29.

Thieves: Deterred by security

MPs while home, remember, they are there to help you and possibly will remind you of the need to secure your property," Kelley said.

Kelley said a few steps soldiers can take to identify their high-value items in the event they are stolen are: record serial numbers, make and model of equipment, along with the date of purchase and a canceled check or receipt if at all possible. Taking these steps makes it easier for recovery of stolen items later.

If soldiers see their stolen items being sold in a pawn shop, contact the MPs with all available information about the item.

However, be aware. Columbus Police Department can hold recovered items as evidence against the perpetrator.

Some other tips for helping to deter theft from your yard are:

• Turn lights on in backyard

• If going out of town, have someone mow the yard, check the home periodically and take the mail inside.

Don't give the appearance of being gone.

"If you have something that's too large to fit in the storage shed (which most quarters have) then you should find someway to lock it up," McKinney said.

He also said that simply being aware of who's in the neighborhood is also a large theft deterrent.

better business bureau

Better Business Bureau

"Luxury cars for under $1,000...Mercedes-Benz, BMW, Ferrari, Jaguar...Purchase all these for literally pennies on the dollar!...Your government is practically giving these luxury goods away."

The ads are enticing, whether you spot them in local newspapers, view them in an infomercial or come across them on the Internet. And, for many people who are looking to purchase a car, advertised auctions appeal to their desire to avoid price negotiations or comparison shopping among dealerships.

Before even setting foot at the auction, some consumers fall victim to fraudulent marketing of auto auction guides. They are lead to believe that, for a $50 or $100 fee, they will receive a priceless guide listing hundreds of auctions and the secret key to saving thousands of dollars.

If they do in fact receive the promised guide, it is typically filled with only general information about auto auctions and their addresses and phone numbers. This information is available free or at low cost from the federal government.

Before responding to an ad promising the inside scoop to government auctions for automobiles or any other property, the Better Business Bureau of West Georgia, Southwest Georgia and East Alabama advises consumers to:

• Check with the federal government first.

• Look for information about upcoming sales in the classified or business sections of national or local newspapers or in notices in post offices, town halls and other local and federal government buildings.

If you do decide to purchase your next vehicle at a government auction, the BBB advises the following:

• Stories about exotic cars sold for little or nothing are pure fiction. As the U.S. General Services Administration advised: "There are no giveaways – GSA expects to receive a fair market price, and every item has an undisclosed minimum price."

• The cars are not new and their condition may vary.

• The government does not provide any forms of financing. Check with the government agency beforehand for acceptable forms of payment.

• There are no guarantees. The federal government does not guarantee the condition of its sale items, and is not responsible for any problems that may be identified after the sale.

• Become familiar with the common types of auction sales (sealed bid, auction, spot bid and fixed-price sales) and know which method will be used by the government agency that is auctioning the vehicles you are interested in.

BBB-Online advertising:

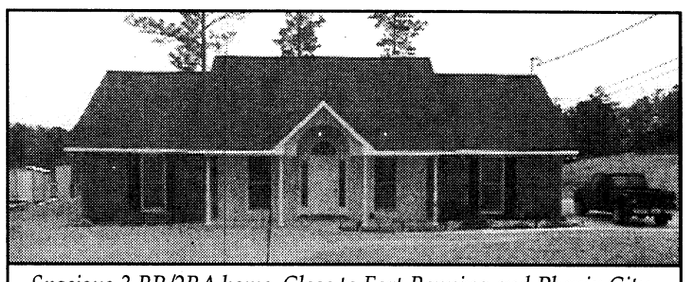
Online advertising presents new opportunities no business can afford to miss if it wants to succeed in today's global marketplace. Businesses are advised to learn how the ground rules for online ads compare with those of more traditional forms.

Primary responsibility for truthful and accurate advertising rests with the creators of advertising, whether it applies in the online or offline marketplace. With this responsibility comes some of the same issues that are encountered in traditional advertising. What changes is the medium to which the rules are applied.

The most distinctive aspect of online advertising is its interactive nature. Reading an ad in a publication or watching one on television is a passive experience. When consumers access an ad online, they become an active participant in that ad. The lines between editorial and advertising content can become blurred.

The primary goal of online advertising is to help consumers make informed buying decisions in a way that will encourage a loyal and highly ethical relationship. This can be achieved by applying the principles of truth and accuracy described in the Better Business Bureau Code of Advertising.

For instance:



• Comparisons: While comparing your product to a similar one made by a competitor, compare related or similar attributes that contribute strongly to the product's worth of usefulness. Do not make "apples and oranges" comparisons that make your product appear superior while ignoring advantages of competitors.

• Claims: Be sure that every claim you make can be supported by facts. Do not use either omission of pertinent information or deception to lure consumers into believing your product delivers more than it actually does.

Technology has also generated new means and methods of advertising, which don't yet have ground rules. Groups are questioning whether the use of bulk e-mail solicitation (spamming) is ethical.

Online privacy protection is also a concern. Consumers want to know how the information (names, e-mail address, buying preferences, etc.) they or their children submit to online advertisers get used and whether it's distributed to other parties.

For more information, view the Web site www.bbb.org.

Movers offer tips to ease packing

Planning helps alleviate problems

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

The key to a successful move is planning ahead.

Fran Vollaro, Fort Benning's move manager for The Pasha Group, said the battle to stay organized begins weeks before the initial move. It's important to categorize items in your house before the movers arrive. This applies to everyone, including single soldiers, she said.

"If you're going overseas, you might only be entitled to a small shipment because it's a short tour and the rest of your goods go into storage," she said.

• Color coding boxes

Vollaro recommended designating each room's boxes with a color-coded sticker. Unpacking is easier on all parties concerned.

Vollaro also recommended asking the movers for inventory pages one at a time, instead of all at once.

After nine moves with the military, Kim Farehty has some tips of her own. She and her family have discovered some of the best ways to manage military moves. She also advises those moving to start preparation early, especially if children are involved.

• Involve children

"Pack separate bags for kids while in transit. Have them pack up some of their own stuff, introduce them to the movers and show them the truck. Let them know that the truck is driving to the same place they are," she said.

The Fahertys, including husband Shawn and children, Colin, Nolan and Marin, are using a U-Haul as well as the professional moving line for their upcoming move to Maryland. Their U-Haul is packed with items to start off their new surroundings, such as bedding, clean carpets and personal items. Moving companies also offer tips on moving day. The movers themselves also have tidbits to share.

• Make arrangements for pets

Don't forget to make accommodations for pets when the movers come — that way they feel safe and won't get in way of movers, said Matthew Freeman, United Moving Lines.

Another tip Freeman advises is to make sure there's at least some water available for the crew, especially in Georgia's hot and humid climate.

It's something he knows he and his fellow movers appreciate.

Rachel R. Garcia

Virgil Guffey, a housing inspector, notes the torn screen on a door of a recently vacated house.

"We have some people that even try to give us tips," he said. "That's real nice. All we would really enjoy is to be offered a cool drink on a warm day."

• Consider DITY moves

And don't forget the DITY (Do it Yourself) move. It's a sure way to track your own items, but not always the best option, Vollaro said.

"I think once a move gets larger people don't understand how much is involved. I don't really recommend it for people with larger families or complicated situations. You might as well let professionals handle it," Vollaro said.

Moving: Needs planning

weight of the shipment, how many crew members will be assigned and how much time will be needed for the job.

This is usually done five to seven days before move date. And in some cases, a home visit is not warranted.

Moves consisting of less than 5000 pounds can be arranged over the phone.

In general though, residents can estimate 1,000 pounds per room and a time frame of one day of packing and loading for every 4,000 pounds.

"The larger the shipment the earlier in the day they're going to start. If you have a 500-pound shipment they can still get there at 3 p.m. and be out of your house in no time," Vollaro said.

After the transportation section has come and gone, it's time for housing's final inspection.

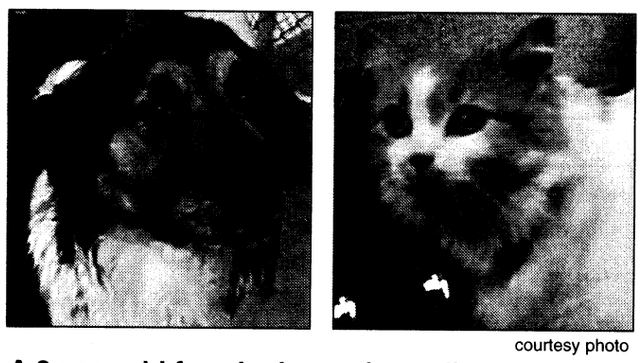
There's a set of standards that the Army says soldiers will clean to when they leave their quarters, Smith said.

The housing office can provide a list of cleaning companies for soldiers. While prices depend on the square footage of the house and how clean it's all been kept, prices range from $100 to $300 per job.

It's an option that housing inspector Virgil Guffey said people shouldn't discount.

"These people have the professional cleaning equipment needed," he said.

With about 15 inspections each inspector needs to perform per day, Guffey said it's imperative to know what they are searching for. "Call housing, ask questions and be ready for the final inspection," Guffey said.



To avoid delaying deployment dates, don't wait.

"Plan early, plan early, plan early. I can't stress that enough.

"As soon as you get your orders, you need to start coordinating household goods pickup with housing inspections," Smith said.

"Start tying that all together, start gathering information on cleaning teams, be thinking about what maintenance needs to be done with your quarters and when you're leaving."

shoppers are expected to bring in $10,000 to $20,000 each morning.

And the best part — no additional funding had to be approved for the venture.

"It costs us nothing, not an extra penny," he said. "We already have the meat cutters here and the produce workers. All we needed were a few part-time cashiers and adjusting some schedules," he said.

Fort Benning Commissary shoppers save about 30 percent off products sold in off-post grocery stores, Hensley said.

To ensure customer satisfaction, the store director also intends to offer more case lots sales during the next few months.

Case lot sales sell items like frozen food, produce, paper products at reduced rates. While no dates are set, he said he wants to have the next case lot sale in August and a tent sale in October.

"You get a really great savings, sometimes as much as 50 to 70 percent off.

"And that's on top of savings you're already getting by shopping at the commissary," he said.

In the meantime, shoppers like Frida Fleenor can enjoy extended hours in which to pack her pantry.

"I think it's a good idea to have the earlier shopping hours," she said. "It's just more convenient all around."

Fathers follow God's example, give best

Chaplain (Maj.) David Giammona
Basic Combat Training Brigade

reflections

I went to see my education counselor the other day. In that office, I got more of an education than I bargained for.

For, you see, on the desk of Timothy Reynolds was the following: A Blueprint for Achievement —

BELIEVE while others doubt
PLAN while others play
STUDY while others sleep
DECIDE while others delay
PREPARE while others daydream
BEGIN while others procrastinate
WORK while others wish
SAVE while others waste
LISTEN while others talk
SMILE when others pout
COMMEND when others criticize
PERSIST while others quit

As you can see, my education was enhanced that day. Of course, it is a message that can be applied to everyone. Today, however, I want to speak to fathers.

Army fathers are busy folks. The stress of the everyday wrangling on the job, having to make tough decisions, working with difficult people, preparing for deployment and coping with transition is difficult enough.

Add to that the added dimension of caring for the family and you have a recipe for failure at some point down the road.

Which brings me to the blueprint for achievement — if you want to be a great father, follow the blueprint. If you look carefully at what the blueprint says, it will show you that it is an outline on how to be a positive person. And that is the Father's Day message — become the kind of father who has a positive influence on the family. Our model for success comes from our heavenly father in the gospel of John, Chapter 3, verse 16: "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believes in Him shall not perish but have everlasting life."

Notice that God gave his best by sending his son so we might have life. If the father gave his best, shouldn't we give ours?

Trust in Christ today and make yourself the kind of father that you were meant to be and you never know — you may get more than you bargained for.

Vacation Bible School needs volunteers — Fort Benning Vacation Bible School is June 18-22 in White Elementary School for students 4 years of age through senior high school.

Each student is asked to bring a package of cookies on the first day. These cookies will be used for refreshments for the remainder of the week.

The theme this year is "Jesus to the Rescue."

Teachers, assistant teachers, musicians (pianists), refreshment, recreation, administrative and registration personnel are needed.

Child care will be available for volunteers' children who are too young to attend regular classes.

Those interested in volunteering can call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Late registration will be in the cafeteria of White School today from 10 a.m. to noon.

Catholic Vacation Bible School — The Catholic Religious Education Center is sponsoring a Vacation Bible School June 25-29 from 9:30 a.m. until noon. The theme for this year is "Jesus Is Cool."

This program is designed for kids of all ages. Teen and adult volunteers are needed.

To register or to volunteer, call the Religious Education Center at 545-5508.

Prebaptism class — At 1 p.m. June 24, there will be a prebaptism class for parents wanting to have their children baptized in the Catholic church June 24 at 1 p.m.

Expecting parents are encouraged to attend this class. To register, call 545-5508.

Catholic masses suspended — Catholic weekday masses at the Main Post Catholic Chapel will be suspended, excluding Wednesdays, beginning June 11 through early September because Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan is PCSing.

Weekend services will continue to be held as scheduled. Confessions will be from 4 to 4:45 p.m. Saturdays.

Fathers make difference for kids

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

When asked to name the most powerful forces that shaped their character, young people have overwhelmingly cited their parents (86 percent), their grandparents (56 percent) and their spiritual leaders (55 percent).

Research is confirming the positive role that fathers have on their children.

Children with fathers at home are twice as likely to complete high school.

Children are 11 times less likely to exhibit violent misbehavior when their fathers take an active parenting role at home.

Children raised by their fathers are five times less likely to live in poverty.

Children parented by their fathers in the home are 50 percent less likely to engage in criminal activity, two times less likely to commit sexual assault and three times less likely to commit murder.

Teen-agers are two and a half times less likely to be placed in state reform institutions when the father is actively engaged in parenting in the home.

Teen suicide decreases by 75 percent when both parents reside in the home.

When asked what they thought were the most important actions of a father, young people identified four behaviors: showing affection, being a good example, exhibiting parental togetherness and being spiritually mature. For the kids' well-being, fathers must take an active parenting role in the home (Ephesians 6:4).

AMU Olympian wins world

USA takes gold in finals of free rifle competition

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

MILAN, Italy — On the last day of 2001 Milan World Cup, 2000 Olympian Jason Parker of the United States of America took the Gold Medal in the remaining final of the free rifle competition.

Parker is a sergeant assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit at Fort Benning.

The 26-year-old beat the "who's who" of marksmanship competition worldwide in the 50-Meter Rifle Three-Position Match June 4.

He defeated the Olympic champion Rajmond Debevec of Slovenia, world champion Jozef Goenci of Slovakia and Juha Hirvi of Finland, the Sydney 2000 silver medalist.

After the qualification round, Matthew Emmons of the USA was in the lead by one point, scoring 1,173 points, two points ahead of last week's Seoul World Cup winner, Artur Aivazian and Jury Sukhorukov, both of Ukraine.

Emmons struggled in the final, adding only 85.3 dropping to fifth place.

Debevec, who started in fourth place with 1,168 points, scored 2.4 in his sixth final shot and lost every chance to win.

Hirvi dropped out of the medal race by hitting a 5.9, followed by Goenci who managed to score three 10s, several eights and one seven in the final round of competition.

Besides Parker, the medals were awarded to Jury Sukhorukov of Ukraine and Johann Zaehringer of Germany.

Parker entered the final in the sixth-place position, but managed to compensate for his seven point disadvantage with the best final score — 96.3 — winning the gold by more than three points.

Sukhorukov was qualified as third with 1,171 points, a five-point lead over Zaeringer, who started in seventh place with 1,166 points.

He hit 10 one time in his last final shot. Sukhorukov earned his first silver ever, 89.6 to 93.2.

This bronze medal was Zaehringer's first medal win in a world cup competition.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning has scored several other major victories during the last two months.

The following results are some of the team's latest accomplishments:

• The National Skeet Shooting Association World Championships, Atlanta, June 8-10.

USAMU shotgun shooter Staff Sgt. Joseph D. Buffa won the World Championship, followed by Pfc. Mark L. Weeks who placed second, and Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery, who placed third.

• Area 4 Championships, Shreveport, La., June 2-3.

Action pistol shooter Spc. Maxient J. Michel won the Area 4 Championship in Shreveport.

• Bianchi Cup, Columbia, Mo., May 23-26.

Action pistol shooter Sgt. Julie A. Goloski won first place in Match 3, tied for the lead in Match 4 and came in second place in Match 2.

Goloski placed fourth overall and in Match 1 in this national championship competition.

WHINSEC students excel during competition

'Triple threat' prevails during Florida triathlon

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

"The waves were perfect for surfing," Jose Solis said.

But for Solis and his teammates competing in the Emerald Coast Sprint Triathlon in Panama City Beach, Fla., June 2, choppy waters set the mode early for an all-out and grueling affair — one that would reveal the team from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation top in the military division of the competition for the second time this year.

The EMCS Triathlon is a four-event triathlon series, whose proceeds are donated to cancer research.

Despite the heat, high winds and frigid waters, the "WHINSEC Triple Threat" of Solis, Ernesto Abreu and Ramon Cantu were able to outscore opponents in the three events, a one-third mile open-sea swim, an 18-mile bike and a 3.1 mile run with a category-winning time of 1:30 during the triathlon to support cancer research.

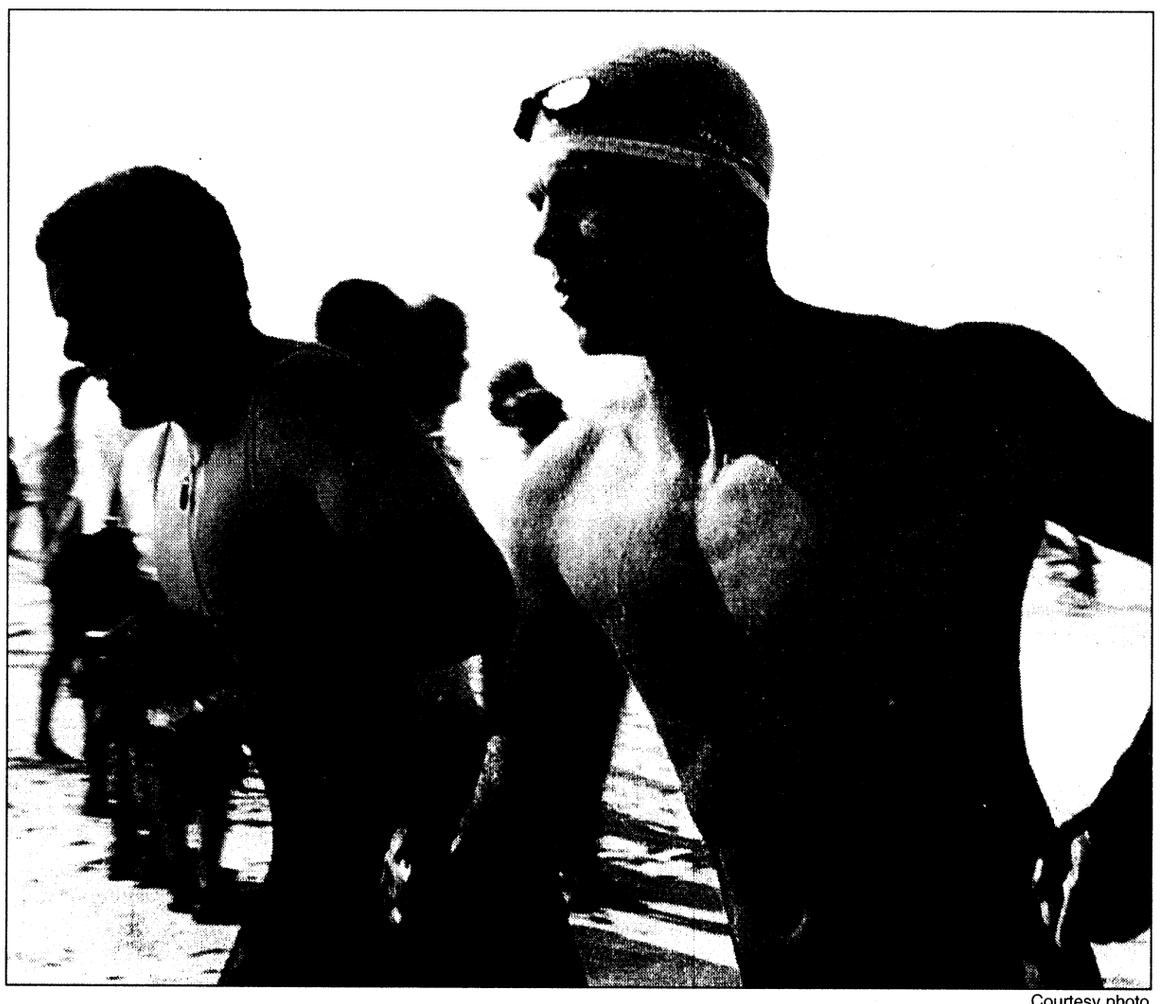
Training weekly in the events and at different intensity levels paid off during competitions.

However, Solis did admit it wasn't their fastest time.

"The swimming just killed our time … the currents and the high surf," Solis said.

Abreu said the swimming portion of the triathlon is probably the most grueling and puts the endurance, determination and heart of competitors to the test.

"First off, you're out of your environment. Water pressure on your body and the temperature will take their toll," Abreu said.



The team members get their "feet wet" daily at Briant Wells swimming pool.

Abreu said that maintaining the high level of physical and mental toughness needed to compete comes from a strict daily regimen that includes variety in training and extends to diet.

"You hope everything just comes together, and all the little things you did in training will catch the competition unprepared," Solis said.

Solis, the commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, WHINSEC, said he doesn't expect everyone in the unit to compete in such vigorous and time consuming hobbies, he feels

Weightlifter competes in Pan Am Nationals competition

Soldier, athlete sets goal to reach next level

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

After 20 years of competing, most athletes are looking at retirement.

That's not the case for Maj. Scott Noren, he's still looking forward and reaching for the next level.

Noren, who has been competing in various aspects of weightlifting since 1981, got the bug for the sport by trying out powerlifting.

"I was in track and field in high school. Toward my junior and senior year I began thinking, 'You should try playing football,' because I really liked it," he said. "To do that, you have to bulk up."

Bulking up didn't take the Army major into football though, instead it sparked an interest in powerlifting.

And that interest took Noren to national competition over the years, leading him to a personal best of a 336-pound bench press — more than double his body weight at the time of 164 pounds.

It wasn't until 1997 that Noren decided he wanted to take his skill in a different direction into the sport of weightlifting.

Even with only a few years of weightlifting under his belt, he's already making great strides toward his goals of competing at next year's national weightlifting competition.

His best lifts so far include a snatch 231 pounds, and a clean and jerk of 297 pounds.

Noren recently competed in the Pan Am Nationals in Savannah, Ga., where he was able to snatch 225 pounds and clean and jerk 275. Besides making it into fourth place, Noren said the event was also fun for other reasons.

"It was a great experience. I got to meet athletes from all over South and Central America," he said. "It gave good experience and I was happy with the results."

Over the 20 years of training, there have been a lot of lessons learned, Noren said. One of the most outstanding lessons in his mind is how much the two sports he has competed in differ.

"Looking back, I wish I had never started powerlifting," he said. "The transition was excruciatingly painful."

"It's tough to make that transition from powerlifting to this. This is more like gymnastics, it takes more flexibility compared to raw power," Noren said. "Now I'm trying to stretch and increase flexibility. Before, I was maintaining what I had. I never really tried to increase my range of motion, because I didn't have to."

Another lesson Noren learned through his experiences was the differences in athletes over the years.

"Some of the athletes I have known were using steroids and other chemicals. One of the reasons I went to this sport, was because of that," he said. "You don't need that. You just have to really focus on what you are doing.

"There's always temptation, but I've been doing this for 20 years now and have never used any kind of metabolic and don't plan to," Noren added.

He said that lifestyle is also one soldiers can benefit from.

"If my friends in weightlifting can perform world-class level without any form of supplementation involved, there's no reason to," he said. "With the right training you can achieve your potential without it. You could die from using some of these supplements."

Now Noren is focused on his goal of someday making it to national level weightlifting championships. This is no easy task considering his schedule as an oral surgeon for Salomon Clinic on Sand Hill and his obligations to the military fitness regimen.

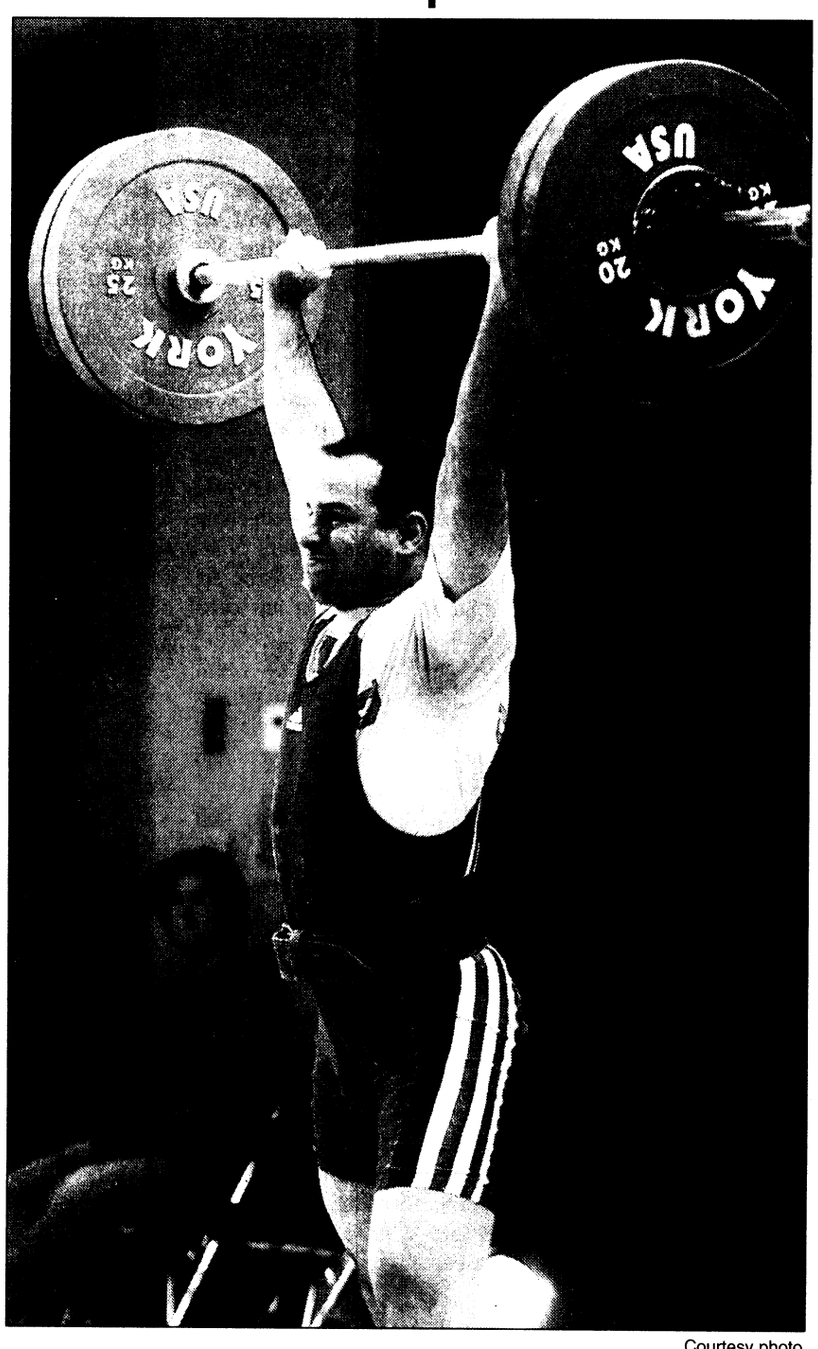
He said he usually works out for one and a half to two hours, four to five times per week for competitions.

He said he also has to make sure he is ready to do his best on the APFT.

"I have to do a PT test every six months. That's not a big deal for most people, but for me, getting ready for the run and being able do a decent PT test takes a lot of work," he explained. "I have to start getting ready for it several weeks before and it's really tough training for both the test and lifting."

"With lifting, you're adding muscle mass, so your legs are heavy, it makes it harder to do the run."

At the same time, he is always training for next year's national level competition and for the future.



"My goals between now and February are pretty lofty and will be really challenging," he said. "I want to work up to a snatch of 264 pounds and a clean and jerk of 330 pounds."

That's a goal that's still possible, said Noren's coach, Ben Green.

"He's got potential. It all just depends on how hard he works for it," said Green, who's coached four Olympic level weightlifters. "He's fast and flexible, so the potential is there to go up the ladder as far as he can."

Noren said while the nationals are his next goal, they aren't his last.

"I hope to peak somewhere in the next two or three years," he said. "As long as I can stay relatively injury free, and make some smooth increases in my strength, I'll keep going."

Tactical rifle competition continues

Shooters fire with pinpoint precision for title

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Nearly 40 shooters took part in the monthly tactical rifle competition Sunday on English Range.

Shooters fired 360 yards with pinpoint precision while the Georgia sun forced beads of sweat into their eyes.

Top-ranking competitors shot scores within only a few points of each other.

One shot out meant the difference between first and second place.

In a side match, the close quarters battle, competitors shot at paper targets and bowling pins at 50 yards, farther than in the previous matches.

The pins proved to be difficult for many of the shooters to knock off their perch.

"This is fun and it keeps you on your toes," Mark Hagemann said. "This is by far the most difficult match I've shot in here. You always have to think about what you are doing."

Although competition officials set up the course of fire to stress the shooters, participants said they make sure you understand what to do before you go through the course.

"I've shot in a lot of places and this is the most professionally run," Al Oliveira said."It is very fair here.

"They don't make up rules that could trick the competitors, and they look after the shooters. If you have a question on the course of fire, they will stop and help you out."

The match was divided into categories based on the caliber, type of sight and type of rifle.

Lindsay Bunch topped the competitor bolt action class.

He was followed by Steve Ward and Allan Brown.

In the bolt action precision class, Jeff Allen walked away with the win.

Gene Ruff scored second and Wallace Herrington finished third.

Chuck Cobb shot a first place score in the semiauto precision class.

Mark Hagemann and Arnell Fernandez followed suit.

In the professional class, Raymond Smith took top honors.

In the red-dot, non-magnifying close-quarters battle side match, Seth Ruff walked away with the win.

In the red-dot class, Tong Nguyen took first place. Steve Howa and Shane Fitch followed.

Douglas Bradfield topped the iron sight class. Jim Redus and Jim Grant rounded out the top three positions.

Triathlon: Tough

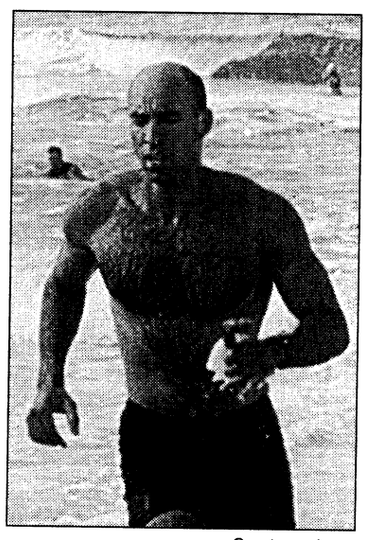
that the competitive training and mentality that comes with triathlons and other recreational activities can go a long way in setting not only a physical, but all around precedence of well being for others to follow.



"We're hoping to get more and more people involved, hopefully some female competitors," Solis said.

"It's all around fitness, mind, body, spirit and the commitment to yourself, the team and helping cancer research," Abreu said.

The next competition will be held in Panama City Beach Aug. 18.

The ECS Triathlon has four series of competitions. Registration fees are $45 until July 23 and will increase $10 thereafter for individuals. Relays fees are $90 and will also increase $10 after the above date.

All proceeds will go toward cancer research. For more visit www.active.com.

BLACK RAMP EXPANSION
LAWSON ARMY AIRFIELD
FORT BENNING, GEORGIA

The expansion of the Black Ramp aircraft-parking apron (the "Undertaking") is one of several projects to upgrade the mission essential facilities at Lawson Army Airfield (LAAF) at Fort Benning, Georgia (the "Installation"). As currently configured, the proposed project consists of the removal of the asphalt construction Brown Ramp to the south of Black Ramp, Taxi Way C, and portions of the Clear Zone, and replacing the asphalt with concrete sufficient to hold large C-5 and C-17 cargo jets. Significant portions of open grassy areas west of the current Black Ramp (North Open Area and the South Open Area) will also be concreted. The construction will include some cutting and filling to achieve a more level surface. A storm water retention pond is also planned between the NE - SW runway and 82nd Airborne Division Road. Ground disturbance will also be required for the installation of new drainage lines, jet fueling lines and some new lighting.

The historic properties in the area include the American Indian historic town of Kasita, and the Lawson Army Airfield Historic District. A description of the Kasita Town cultural site affected by this project as described by the 2001 Fort Benning Research Design for Selected Portions of Kasita, Lawson Army Airfield as follows:

The name Kasita is most commonly associated with eighteenth-century Lower Creek settlement along the confederacy, the settlement system of the Lower Creeks was somewhat stable until removal in 1836. While the town undoubtedly shifted in location across the large flat terrace on which LAAF sits, we can narrow the location somewhat based on previous investigations. One location for Kasita has been established at Lawson Army Airfield (LAAF), 9Ce1, however the extent of the town is not well defined.

Additional related or nearby sites include American Indian cultural sites or archeological sites at 9Ce178, 9Ce179, and 9Ce126.

A description of the potential historic district affected by this project as described by the 1997 Fort Benning Historic Resource Survey Update is as follows:

The Lawson Field Historic District is a nationally significant airfield that includes a variety of contributing resources that were built between 1919 and 1945. These include airplane hangers, parachute training facilities, a fire station, a fireman's bunkroom, instructional facilities, and intact portions of the World War II-era runway and taxiway system. The district, which has functioned in military airflight capacities from the 1910s to the present, is significant under the areas of Military and Architecture. There were ten contributing resources within the historic district.

The ten contributing resources included the intact portions of the World War II-era runway and taxiway system and Buildings 301, 303, 304, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2411, 3445 and 2592. Unfortunately, four of these resources (Buildings 2402, 2403, 2404 and 2411) have been demolished. In addition, six aircraft maintenance hangers (Buildings 2444, 2446, 2459, 2486, 2491 and 2492) were built between the years 1953 and 1965. At the time that theseresources near fifty years of age, they may be eligible for inclusion within the Lawson Field Historic District.

It was determined that the expansion of the Black Ramp aircraft-parking area may result in an adverse effect on the historic properties, including archeological sites, cultural resources, and the LAAF Historic District. The Army, in consultation with the SHPO and the Federally recognized Tribes historically associated with the Fort Benning area, has drafted a Memorandum of Agreement (MOA) requiring that the installation revise the Black Ramp Expansion project to minimize ground disturbance in areas of cultural or archeological sites, comply with the Native American Grave Protection and Repatriation Act (NAGPRA) for any human remains, burial objects, sacred items, or items of cultural patrimony; and conduct data recovery for cultural or archeological sites that cannot be avoided. Fort Benning will ensure proper curation of any recovered items. Fort Benning also will ensure confidentiality of sensitive information such as specific descriptions and locations of the cultural sites to prevent an invasion of privacy or illegal resource damage.

Further information regarding the Black Ramp Expansion project is available from the Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, at Fort Benning. Comments on the Undertaking, the MOA, or related matters are invited in accordance with 36 CFR 800. All comments should be made in writing and submitted to Mr. John J. Brent, Environmental Management Division. Building 6 (Meloy Hall), USAIC, Fort Benning, Georgia. Comments received by June 11 will be considered for the MOA and the Undertaking.

Point of Contact for any questions is Mr. John Brent at (706) 545-2180.

Finding a way to protect your money from inflation for the next 30 years doesn't require a degree in economics. Or even a crystal ball. You just need to visit your local bank, check out the new U.S. Savings Bonds EasySaver Plan, or talk to your employer. Not only do I Bonds earn a real return over and above inflation, they're also exempt from state and local income taxes. And you can get started with as little as $50. To find out more about I Bonds, go to www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to U.S. Savings Bonds Guide, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328.

Then relax. Because we predict a more secure future for your money.

Kelley Hill soldier, wife expecting quintuplets

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Kelley Hill soldier and his wife are expecting quintuplets in November.

Pfc. Steve Brown, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, plans to join his wife, Amber, in California for the duration of her pregnancy, thanks to a compassionate reassignment to the Defense Language Institute in Monterey.

Amber became pregnant in March while Steve was assigned to the 789th Explosive Ordnance at Lawson Army Air Field, awaiting departure to Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., for 11 months of training in explosive ordnance school.

He decided to postpone his training until after the birth, so when doctors determined Amber should be treated at Stanford Medical Center in Palo Alto, Calif., the only hospital staffed with the 20-plus doctors needed to deliver quints, Brown requested a compassionate reassignment to the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, where he would work as a chaplain's assistant.

In the meantime, Amber was in and out of the hospital, suffering from dehydration, and doctors warned of the myriad of possible complications surrounding the birth. Her case manager at Martin Army Community Hospital secured an Army medical flight to California June 2, and Amber went to stay with her in-laws, who live in Monterey, expecting her husband to join her soon after.

But before he could be reassigned, a first sergeant from the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment realized Brown wasn't officially released from Kelley Hill in February.

Brown reported to the company May 16 to initiate the paperwork for reassignment. He expects to receive orders today to report to the institute Aug. 20.

Until then, Brown said he worries about his wife "stressing" at a time doctors say she should get as much rest as possible, and Amber admits the last two weeks have been the toughest.

"We thought he'd be here by now. It's hard, real hard," she said. "He never missed an ultrasound or doctors' appointments. Now he's missing it all. We waited a long time for this."

Soldiers complete exercise

Kelley Hill unit prepares for deployment

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, participated in a live-fire exercise Tuesday on Cactus Range.

While the rest of Kelley Hill is at the National Training Center, in Fort Irwin, Calif., this sole remaining unit is training for its upcoming deployment to Kosovo.

Tuesday's exercise was the Bradley Table 12, a platoon-sized exercise that combines Bradley Fighting Vehicles, dismounted infantrymen and mortarmen.

The exercise was part of the required high intensity conflict training before the departure to Kosovo, said Lt. Col. Audy Snodgrass, the battalion commander.

The scenario started after Bradleys moved into defensive positions and targets down range were promptly mowed down by the main guns. Closer targets simulated the approaching attacking force.

The Bradleys moved downrange "giving chase to the fleeing enemy."

The infantrymen dismounted and approached a bunker complex. As one squad laid down covering fire, another moved into a wide trench and began cutting the concertina wire blocking their approach to the bunkers.

With a hole in the wire, the soldiers rushed through it and into a trench leading to the bunkers.

The dismounted troops cleared the trench while the Bradleys provided an overwatch of the area.

As the soldiers set up a defense, the enemy "counter attacked."

Man-sized targets popped up close to the trench while large armored vehicle targets rose behind the smaller targets.

Bradleys gunned down the large targets while the infantrymen knocked down the close targets. Once again the enemy shifted to a new position forcing the soldiers to move slightly.

With the enemy "on the run again," the Bradleys moved over to the trench and picked up the infantrymen.

After the exercise ended, the soldiers said, although they were mostly new to the unit, they felt good about what they accomplished.

"Overall, I think it was a success," said 2nd Lt. Brian Jones, the platoon leader. "Most of us are new here. We are working on transitioning.

"We'll get together, work more and train harder. We'll work out the little kinks and get to know each other."

Injuries heat up for summer months

Caution a must to prevent heat related injuries

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Eggs fry. Potatoes bake. Water boils. Soldiers suffer heat injuries.

Summer months at Fort Benning can be difficult and uncomfortable for everyone because of the combination of high temperatures and humidity levels. As a result, everyone needs to be watchful for heat injuries.

Fort Benning has, on average, 34 heat injuries per year, according to Maj. Karen O'Brien, director of the Martin Army Community Hospital Family Practice Residency Program. There are far more heat injuries occurring that do not require admission to the hospital.

Safety needs to be a top priority when the heat category rises. The risks of injury rise if soldiers do not follow proper safety precautions.

There are three major categories of heat injuries: heat cramps, heat exhaustion and heat stroke.

Soldiers can recognize heat cramps by isolated cramping. The calf is the most common spot. Slow, easy stretching, with gentle massage helps. Multiple cramping is more serious and should be treated as heat exhaustion. The symptoms of heat exhaustion are: profuse sweating, cold, clammy skin, dizziness, pale or grayish skin, nausea and headache. Treatment involves moving the victim into the shade, lowering the head and elevating the feet 12-18 inches. Fluids should be forced. The extremities should be gently massaged and the victim referred to a physician.

Heat stroke is the most serious heat injury and its symptoms are: little to no perspiration, dry, hot, red skin, a strong, rapid pulse and a sudden loss of consciousness. The victim should be cooled as quickly as possible, treated for shock and transported to a hospital immediately. Heat stroke is a medical emergency and can be fatal.

Another type of heat injury is

Brig. Gen. Paul Eaton will become the 45th commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School and Center this summer, the chief of staff of the Army announced Thursday in Washington.

Eaton had previously served at Fort Benning as the Infantry School's assistant commandant. He served in that role from August 1999 to October 2000.

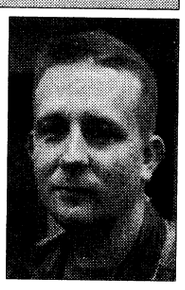
Eaton, who was nominated for promotion in June by President Bush, replaces Maj. Gen. John L. Le Moyne who arrived at Fort Benning in September 1999.

The Department of the Army has asked Le Moyne, not to retire, but further information has not been announced.

Eaton is currently at Fort Lewis, Wash., where he is the deputy commanding general for Transformation for the Training and Doctrine Command. In that capacity he has oversight of the Army's transformation program, which is reshaping the Army into a more mobile force designed to get to distant trouble spots in days instead of weeks.

Eaton has commanded at every level from platoon leader to brigade commander. A 1972 graduate of West Point, he was a company commander with the 8th Infantry Division in Germany, commanded a battalion in the 10th Mountain Division, and served as the division's operations officer during Operation Restore Hope in Somalia.

He commanded the 1st Brigade of the 3rd Infantry Division (later redesignated the 2nd Brigade of the 1st Infantry Division) in Germany. Eaton later served as the assistant division commander of the 1st Armored Division and deployed to Bosnia.



In addition to his military schooling, Eaton has a master's degree in French from Middlebury College, Paris, France.

Born in Las Vegas, Nev., Eaton calls Weatherford, Okla., home. He is married to the former P.J. Kirstein. They have three children, Shane, Joshua and Gina.

Berets provide soldiers unity

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

commentary

I got a present last week, as did thousands of other soldiers, for the Army's 226th birthday — a black beret.

After all of the discussion and fuss people have been making over the new headgear, I finally had one in hand.

And I was one of those people with an opinion and preconceived notion.

But now I was faced with the future of the Army in my hand.

There was a strange feeling in my stomach — I was a little excited to have a "cool" beret, but on the other hand I was a little sick to my stomach wondering how I would adjust.

The first thing I wondered was, "How do I wear this thing?

Second, why doesn't it look like other berets I've seen?

And more importantly, how will others react to me wearing it?"

Those feelings soon subsided as I went back to work, knowing that I could handle whatever came about.

After all, our leaders think we can make the change, and I have faith in them.

The first ones to see me in my new headgear were my wife and our neighbor.

Their reactions were snickers and comments like "Oui, Oui, mon ami" — I wasn't feeling too good about this thing.

But they say time heals all wounds and that is true. The next day I hurried into work to avoid any more laughs.

I didn't get laughs or jokes though. Instead I got the opposite.

My whole attitude changed as several rangers I know took the time to help me get my beret in shape. I thought they would be resentful, me wearing something they hold so close their heritage.

Instead, they are offering soldiers advice on wear and care tips.

Now, a week later, my beret doesn't look or feel so silly to me. It still feels a little awkward, but nothing I can't get used to.

Change is always difficult, but it's something that passes with time. Our new headgear is just another milestone in the 226-year history of the Army.

This hasn't been the first change we have seen and I'm sure it won't be the last.

All I know is I'm looking forward to the future, with my new beret, regardless of the changes, we'll all be there together.

Family trips hold trials, tribulations

Elsie Jackson

commentary

We're going to northern Virginia to visit grandma next week.

Some people dread visiting their in-laws. Not me.

Next to the ordeal of getting there, the visit with the in-laws part is a snap.

Actually, next to the ordeal of getting there, a pleasant visit with Attila the Hun is within easy reach.

We're driving this time, and I hope the patron saint of "still married" doesn't abandon us on the road.

Even after 20 years every time we take a long road trip, a trial separation starts looking really good.

Some trips are better than others. On one memorable occasion, we were on speaking terms almost all the way to LaGrange.

On the other end of the record scale, I've been overly aggravated before we hit the end of the driveway.

It's never my fault, of course. If everyone would compromise and do things my way, things would go a lot smoother.

On our road trips there are three roles; passenger, driver and navigator.

By default (no driver's license, plus she's way too short) our rising third-grader is automatically the passenger.

Thanks to some unwritten rule, my husband assumes the role of the driver.

That makes me the navigator. As nearly as I can figure out, as the navigator, my job is to read the map, directional signs and the driver's mind.

This is to the driver's advantage because if we get lost the driver 1) doesn't have to stoop to asking for directions, and 2) has the navigator to blame.

I also serve as a road trip stewardess.

I've recited lists of available foodstuff, fixed sandwiches, opened snack packages, unwrapped burgers, popped open cans of soft drinks, handed out napkins and stuffed trash bags while proposing travel activities to our daughter as we barreled down the road.

I suppose it's only fair, since they sure don't get that kind of service at home.

My other additional duty on road trips is supply specialist. If the van looks like a rolling 7-11, there's a chance I've anticipated everyone's needs.

I usually do a pretty good job there.

Marvin would not be starvin' if he traveled with us.

As the supply specialist, it's also my responsibility to lean left and pointedly check the gas gauge regularly, as the driver is busy driving.

On our first road trip I mistakenly assumed that checking the gas gauge was the driver's responsibility.

Proving again that every cloud has its silver lining, had I been more responsible and checked that gas gauge, I would never have gotten to visit both blocks of beautiful, downtown Truth or Consequences, N.M.

Some other things I learned on that trip?

I learned that Truth or Consequences is not right off the interstate off-ramp like it shows on the map.

I learned that the car salesman who sold me my car using fuel efficiency as a big selling point was not exaggerating.

I learned that just because a city looks twice the size of Atlanta on the map, it ain't necessarily so.

I learned that some people think that the "E" on the gas gauge stands for "E"nough.

And most importantly, I learned that you can, too, drive on fumes.

I drove that car for some years after the Truth or Consequences incident.

I always found it comforting that it would make every effort to get to a gas pump rather than leave me stranded on the side of a road.

So grandma and grandpa are waiting. A full two-thirds of our family can't wait to take off.

We have a destination and route (don't laugh, I've started trips with less). The rolling convenience store is almost fully stocked.

The backseat survival books are ready to go.

The dogs have kennel reservations, and I've lined up a sitter for the lizard.

My neighbor will come in to feed the cat, birds and fish.

I've got extra batteries for the gameboy and CD player, kleenex, sunblock, travel pillow, bicycles (and a tire pump, of course), travelers' checks, a trash bag and a clean cooler waiting to be filled.

The driver has his car keys and sunglasses.

Driver or navigator? Driving is better.

Soldier's help appreciated

While boating with my wife and children on Lake Harding June 15, our boat broke down.

We were stranded on the lake with two small children, ages 5 and 3 — this can be a very frightening experience, not to mention we were an hour away from our campsite.

Luckily, Pfc. Louis Atchinson came to our rescue and he went out of his way to assist us.

Even though he wasn't that familiar with the lake, he got us to our campsite and by this time it was almost dark.

I know by helping us this took time from his day at the lake, but he seemed more than happy to do what he could for us.

It is great knowing that there are people out there like Pfc. Atchinson who are willing to assist someone in a time of need.

I just wanted to let you know what a fine young man Pfc. Atchinson is and I feel it's an honor to have such a fine person like him serving our country.

Please extend our sincere thanks to Pfc. Atchinson again for helping us.

Dining facilities to go a la carte system

Photos by Rachel R. Garcia

Junester Everson, a dining facility cook, prepares lunches for soldiers.

New system should save soldiers money

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning soldiers will see changes in their dining facilities both in what they can choose and who's serving it. A new a la carte system and new uniforms for food service specialists will be implemented on post in the next three years.

"You're going to pay for the individual items that you want. You want a salad, you just pay for the salad and not the full meal," said Edward Hilton, executive installation food program manager.

Army installations which have begun the a la carte system in the majority of their dining facilities are Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Carson, Colo.; Fort Drum, N.Y.; Fort Monroe, Va.; and the Presidio of Monterey, Calif.

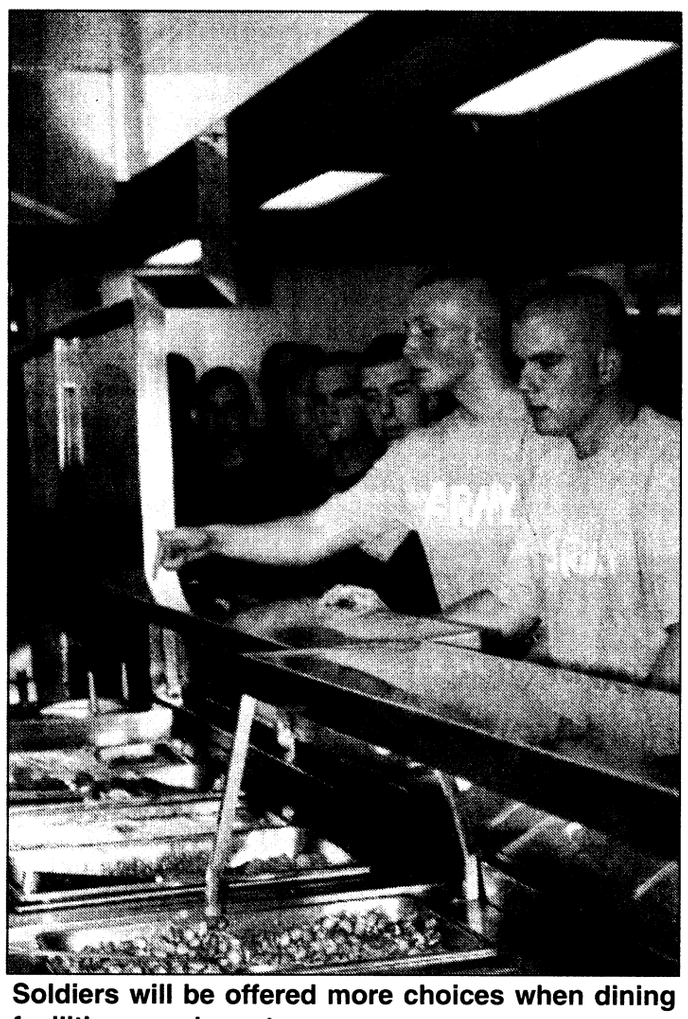
Fort Knox, Ky., started the first a la carte facility seven years ago. Several other military installations have added the system, but still continue the traditional dining system as well.

Fort Benning will begin implementation of the system in the next three years, Hilton said. Of the 16 dining facilities on Fort Benning, eight are full food service which contractors are responsible for.

Soldiers currently pay $1.60 for breakfast and $3.20 for lunch and dinner.

Along with the new system are new uniforms for food service specialists. The new uniforms were approved in January.

The new uniforms, which resemble the white gear worn at restaurants, are now being worn at Fort McNair, Washington, D.C. No date has been determined as to when the new uniforms will reach post.



The new developments for Army dining facilities were among topics of discussion at the recent Worldwide Food Conference in New Jersey this month.

Willie Baldwin, American Service Contractors assistant food production manager, attended the weeklong conference. He said the new developments sound promising and he is excited that Fort Benning will begin implementation of the program in the future.

Baldwin, who was in the Army, said there have been many advances in the way dining facilities operate since his soldiering days.

"There's a lot more selection now than there was before," Baldwin said. "When I was first in, you used to come in and just get a meat, a salad and a starch, a vegetable and bread. Now you have choices for just about everything."

Pvt. William Henderson, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said he looks forward to the a la carte system.

Soldiers will be offered more choices when dining facilities go a la carte.

"I think it's a good idea," Henderson said. "The lines will probably be shorter and people will be able to grab what they want."

Training on the system will eventually be implemented here in preparation for the new program, as more and more facilities are leaving the traditional one-price meal. Until the new system is implemented, soldiers will continue to receive Fort Benning's top-notch service, Hilton said.

"You've got to give soldiers what they want or they get it from somewhere else," he said. "Soldiers will benefit from it because they can eat what they want, pay for what they get."

Army officials seek funds for transformation

Budget under review, future funding needed

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite the lack of a submitted budget for fiscal year 2002, the Senate Appropriations subcommittee for Defense heard testimony on transformation and other Army future funding needs from Secretary of the Army Thomas E. White and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki June 13.

The Army's proposed budget for next year is currently under review, along with those of the other services, by the Department of Defense before being forwarded to the Senate and House of Representatives.

"The Army's transformation plan is bold because it envisions a force to meet future threats and takes concrete steps now to build that force," said Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, Hawaii, committee co-chairman.

"The plan is challenging because it must balance the need to maintain a strong and ready force today with the need to build that future force. And it is risky because it could be crippled by a lack of sufficient resources or a lack of commitment by the Department of Defense. The road ahead is long and formidable, but I can assure you that you have the full support of this committee," Inouye said.

"Moreover, it is my hope, and I'm sure that of my colleagues, that the department's FY 2002 budget request and the secretary's strategic review will meet these challenges head on."

After thanking committee members for adding more Army funds in the FY '01 budget for increased research and development of the future Objective Force and the standup of an additional Interim Brigade Combat Team, Shinseki admitted that balancing current equipment readiness with the needs of transformation has been a challenge. About 75 percent of the Army's major combat systems have exceeded their expected half-life, he said.

"Aging equipment means increased operations and maintenance costs," Shinseki said.

"Those costs have grown 30 percent in the last four years alone. Aviation safety flight messages have gone up over 200 percent since 1995. To combat these spiraling costs, we have identified 21 systems that must be recapitalized in order to extend their useful readiness."

> "The Army's transformation plan is bold because it envisions a force to meet future threats and takes concrete steps now to build that force."
> Sen. Daniel Inouye
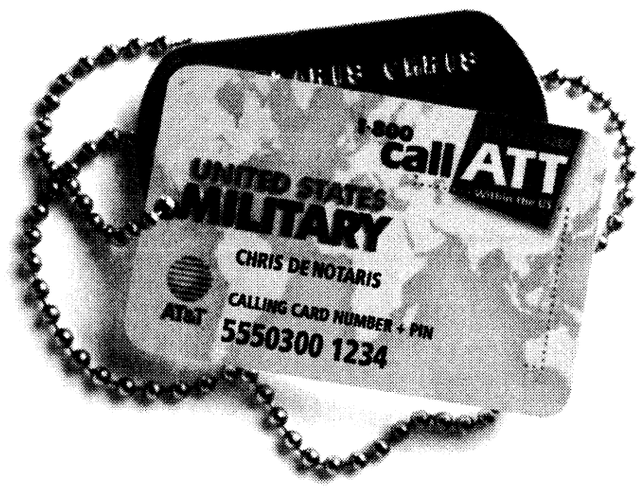
> Hawaii



Asked when the first IBCT would be equipped and fielded, Shinseki said it would be fully fielded and ready for operations capability testing in spring 2003. Fielding of the Objective Force should begin in 2008, he said.

When asked about a concurrent transformation within management of the Army, White reiterated what he had told reports earlier in the week — the Army needs to concentrate on its core missions.

"For those activities that we decide are non-core, we have to make decisions as to whether we continue to do those in-house, or whether we seek partners in the private sector who can bring a better value proposition — better service at a lower price," White said.

"I think the initial indications are that we're being very successful in family housing privatization, for example."

Inouye is a World War II Army veteran who was awarded the Medal of Honor last June for actions on April 21, 1945, at San Terenzo, Italy, while serving with the 442nd Regimental Combat Team.

BAH rates to increase for junior enlisted

Soldiers ready to see rate increase July 1

Nicholas J. Carter
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Service members in pay grades E-1 through E-4 who have families and live off base will see an increase in their allowance for housing July 1.

The boost is the result of legislation aimed at helping junior enlisted families.

"One of the reasons was to take the E-1 to E-4 with dependents (family members) and have them receive the same basic allowance for housing rate," said Maj. Leslie Gerald, manager of the compensation and entitlements division of the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"The other initiative was to increase the housing standard that the E-4 with dependents (family members) currently had prior to July 1," she said.

On average, those in the E-1 through E-3 grades will receive a monthly increase of more than $50. E-4s will see a smaller monthly boost of about $11. Rates will remain the same for single service members.

Housing allowances are based on rental costs, so the actual increase will vary, depending on the cost of living in that particular area. In most cases, those living in high-cost locations will see larger increases, while allowances will be lower for those living in more affordable housing.

Each year the military is required to determine community off-base housing costs. Those figures are used to calculate the basic allowance for housing rate. Significant changes in the housing market will be reflected in the BAH rates for that year, Gerald said.

"Some housing markets are more volatile than others," Gerald said. "It just depends on the location and the conditions of that housing market."

A two-bedroom town house is the off-base housing standard on which the BAH is built for E-1s, E-2s and E-3s with families, according to Pentagon policy. For E-5s, a two-bedroom town house or duplex is the standard.

Under the new plan that begins July 1, an E-1 who lives in Oakland, Calif., will receive $1,325, which is $124 more than last year's allowance of $1,201 for that area.

Service members stationed overseas receive housing allowances under a different system and are not affected.

The new junior enlisted BAH rates were added by Congress to the fiscal year 2001 Defense Authorization Act. The addition was one of several initiatives designed to aid low-income military families.

Lawmakers and Pentagon leaders have been addressing the financial concerns of low-income service members for the past three years, according to a report in Army Times.

Last year, Congress passed legislation aimed at getting military families off food stamps by offering extra money to those who qualify, and former Defense Secretary William Cohen developed a plan to eliminate out-of-pocket expenses by 2005.

Army secretary plans to implement business practices

Military could benefit from corporate ideas

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Army Thomas E. White plans to add business practices to the Army Vision's current pillars of people, readiness and transformation.

Just shy of two weeks into his new job, the retired Army brigadier general and former corporate CEO made that "on-the-record" announcement during his first meeting with Pentagon correspondents June 12.

"I spent 11 years in corporate America with Enron Corporation, an energy company," White said. "... It is very, very clear to me that there is enormous potential to improve the basic business practices of this department."

To make that improvement, the Army needs to determine what its core responsibilities are and then outsource non-core activities to contractors who can give the Army a better-value proposition and improved service, he said.

"We're not just going to study it — we're going to do it," White told reporters.

While praising the Army's successful efforts to privatize family post housing, White gave other examples where the Army has been slow to contract out. One Army non-core activity he asserted is installation utilities. Congress gave permission to the Department of Defense to privatize its gas, electric, water and sewage plants in 1997. Only one Army post, Fort Hamilton, N.Y., has turned over all its utilities to the corporate world in the ensuing four years, he said.

"Any business that was that slow in taking advantage of an opportunity would not be in business very long," he said. "I see no reason whatsoever why the Army is in the energy business ... It's a stupid business practice for the Army to be running itself that way."

Another Army practice, White questioned, is that of having two Army staffs working at the Pentagon — one working for the secretary of the Army and the other for the chief of staff.

"My view is that we ought to step back and say there's got to be a better way to run this railroad — to combine these things so that we have one integrated staff that is still under civilian control of the military, but more efficiently uses the people we have than it has in the past," he said. "And that corporate entity aligns better with the Joint Staff on its side of the table and the (Office of the Secretary of Defense) staff on its side of the table."

On the issue of the Army adopting the black beret, White said he fully supports the chief of staff's efforts and related how his armored cavalry infantry platoon wore them in Vietnam in 1969. He said surviving members of his platoon will be wearing them again in August when they meet for an 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment reunion at Fort McNair, Washington.

"There is a long tradition, not only in our Army, but in virtually every NATO army and a lot of other armies around the world, that heavy forces wore black berets," White said. "Any time you stand out on NATO parade fields, you can clearly see that."

The secretary continued that he would like to see brass plaques on textile mills around the country that state they make berets for the finest Army in the world. Further, he would like to send young soldiers wearing the black beret out to those mills from time to time so all could take pride in the Army's symbol of transformation.

Comparing the Army's current transformation efforts to the Army changing after the Vietnam War, White said today's Army is starting at a much higher readiness level with a more lethal force. A disadvantage is that the Army today faces less certain threats than the Army of the'70s and '80s.

> "My view is that we ought to step back and say there's got to be a better way to run this railroad ..."
> Thomas E. White
> Secretary of the Army

"What I am demanding of the Army is that we have the same total commitment to Transformation that we had back in '72 and '73 — that is not optional," he said. "...If there are any disbelievers or people that don't quite see it that way, then they need to get on board."

Asked about his position on the need for another Congressional Base Realignment and Closure study, White said that he believes there currently is too much infrastructure to support the size of today's Army. However, he warned that the decision for another BRAC should not be made until the Quadrennial Defense Review is complete and the services have time to determine the force structures they need to support its findings. The QDR is expected to be complete by mid-July, he said.

On the subject of technology, White said the Army is behind the civilian sector in applying it to the organizational structure.

The secretary said he can envision the possibility of the Army doing away with divisions 10 to 15 years from now. Instead, he said the Army might have brigades reporting directly to corps or through small mobile corps command posts.

The Army has a number of testing facilities, like the National Training Center, which White said will allow the Army to experiment with information technology for command and control now.

White accepted the fact that his views will likely cause a lot of people to get excited, but said that was fine by him, as long as it also caused them to think.

Transformation takes hands-on effort

New headgear needs special preparation

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

It's a problem that plagues many first-time wearers of the Army's newest symbol of transformation — properly shaping the black beret.

But those soldiers aren't alone in transforming this symbol of transformation.

Cpl. Jonathan Panipinto, an infantryman and driver for 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who served four years with the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, has been teaching soldiers from the battalion how to wear and shape the new headgear.

"Everyone walking around wearing the beret wrong looks ate up and like they don't even care," Panipinto said.

So, the corporal has devised a five-step method to help fellow soldiers learn how to wear the beret properly.

His first step in the process — fit the beret to your head.

Panipinto said this can be done either by tying the string, cutting the ends, and stuffing them out of sight, or by simply taking the string out of the headband if the beret is already tight enough.

"It should fit tight," he said. "You shouldn't be able to fit a finger under the headband."

Next, Panipinto says the best way to get rid of "fuzz" is to grab a disposable razor, and start shaving.

Shaving the beret is a personal preference, however, he said, it does help it lay on the head better.

Panipinto warns soldiers they must be careful shaving to avoid razor burn.

His advice is to only shave it once, don't shave it too thin and don't forget the inside.

Step three in the Panipinto beret shaping process is soaking.

Grab the beret, flash in hand, and thoroughly wet the headgear, then don it.

"When it's wet, you'll be able to smooth the wrinkles and fit it to your head better," he said.

Smooth the beret back and down to the flap. Wear it about 20 minutes or until it's almost dry.

The beret will start getting stiff, like the starch in uniforms.

He said he recommends carefully removing the beret and laying it with the flap hanging off a table top or buying a mannequin head for storage.

Panipinto's fourth step in the shaping process is cutting the cardboard strip behind the flash.

"By trimming the cardboard a little at a time, the flap will lay better and look better," he said. "If you don't trim the cardboard you'll get a big bulge all the way around your head and it looks really (bad.)"

The final step in Panipinto's process is properly carrying the new item.

He recommends soldiers carry it in their battle dress uniform pocket, or in their belt at the small of their back.

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek

Cpl. Jonathan Panipinto, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, demonstrates how to wear a beret.

"The most important thing to remember about shaping the beret is don't force it," Panipinto said. "The more you wear it, the more it's going to shape. It's eventually going to fall into shape."

For more information about the wear and appearance of the black beret, consult Army Regulation 670-1, Uniform Wear and Appearance.

Prevention half of battle against home burglary

Simple steps improve chances of deterring theft

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Many soldiers and their family members take vacations during the summer and leave their homes empty.

Military police spend a lot of time responding to reports of break-ins, burglaries or prowlers in quarters. In many cases the tenants are away.

There are several ways, many free, to minimize the chances of becoming a victim to this type of crime.

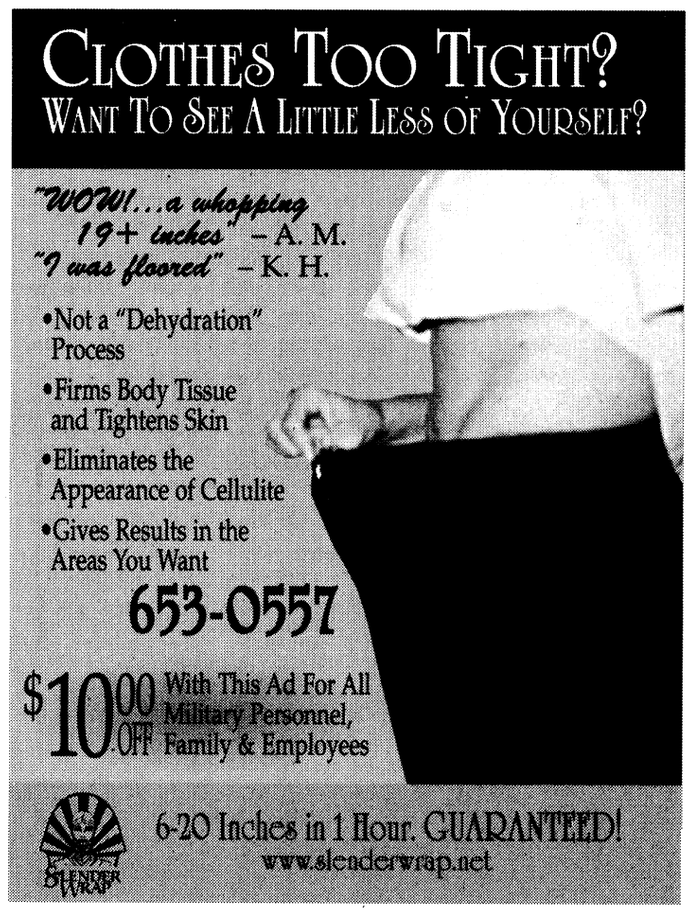
Military police investigator Maurice A. McKinney, with the Department of Public Safety, investigates many of these crimes and has come up with a few simple steps to help improve a person's chances of not becoming a victim.

McKinney said he believes home safety is important because it deters criminals from stealing and harming family members.

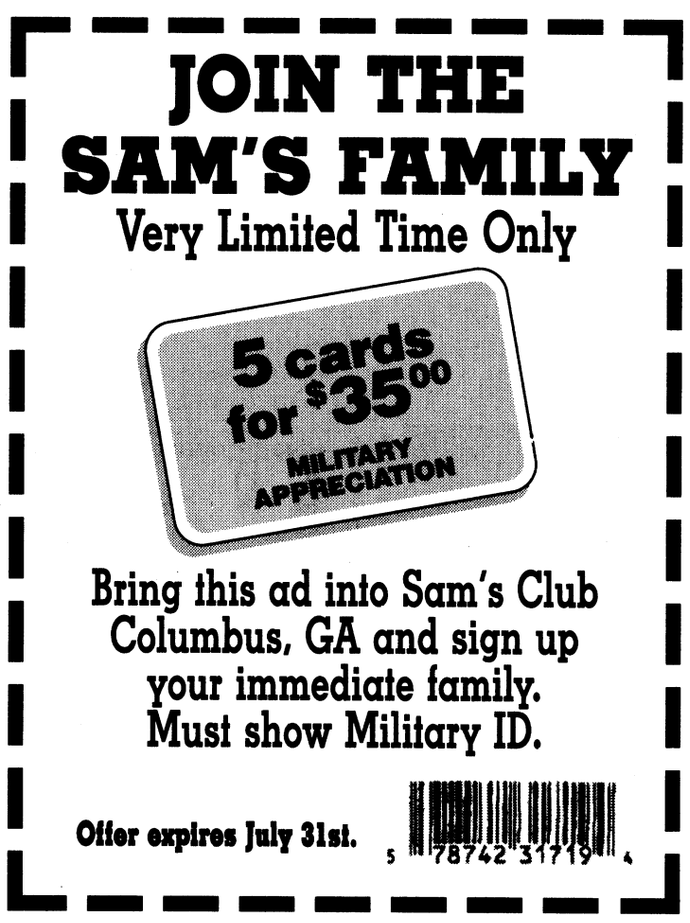
McKinney said barriers such as fences often act as a deterrent for thieves. Residents should also keep their yard neat, so potential criminals cannot hide in bushes. Leaving lights on acts as another barrier.

Besides relying on window locks, residents can also place a piece of wood or a stick diagonally in their windows. McKinney said this will prevent criminals from raising the window. They will have to break it to get in and for most people, that's just too much work, he said.

Also inside, keeping a neat home will allow people to see if someone has broken into their home while away.



He said having a neighbor or friend check the mail daily as well as coming into the home and staying for a while will help deter criminals.



If someone living in quarters is going to be absent from their quarters for any reason, McKinney said they can go to the Military Police Station and fill out a simple form.

The MPs will drive by and check those quarters periodically.

McKinney said keeping a list of all valuables in your residence with the name, serial number, receipt and date of purchase helps to recover stolen goods in the event of a break in.

For more information, call the MP desk at 545-5222.

Family: Expects quintuplets, complicated delivery

After several years of trying to conceive, the couple, who have been married nine years, used a combination of doctor prescribed fertility drugs, the first round in early March.

A week later, Amber discovered she was pregnant.

"The pamphlet that came with the drug said we could have as many as three. That was OK with me. We wanted three," Amber said. "So when I saw three little dots on the ultrasound I said, 'Oh, goody.' When the doctor said there were five, I asked for a recount."

At 17 weeks, the ultrasound shows at least one boy, Brown said, but the sexes of the other four are uncertain.

"They think the others are all girls, but they're not sure yet," he said. "I have the distinct psychic feeling they're girls, because all four are huddled together on top, and he's kind of staying to himself below, like they have cooties or something."

Brown said the couple expects to be "severely strapped financially," but two baby product companies have promised to supply a year's worth of formula and diapers. The Army has no specific programs for multiple births, but the family will be enrolled in the Exceptional Family Member Program and receive federal subsidy assistance.

"I have to say honestly the Army's been great," Amber said. "How many people get to go to Stanford, the best hospital in the country? People have been so helpful.

"The biggest frustration is (Steve) not being here with me when I need him."

Brown said he'd like to be with his wife to "keep things stable."

He worries about the publicity so early in the pregnancy.

A major television network has already asked to film a show about the birth.

"I just don't want all that to compound the stress she's already under," he said. "It's not that I'm against any kind of publicity about it, I just want to be there to control it for her.

"The only thing I can't handle is what I can't control," he added.

platoon, Pfc. Jerrame Sheik, said he thought the exercise was great training.

"I think it went excellent," said Sheik, a driver for a Bradley. "Especially at the trench line, my gunner laid down some awesome suppressive fire."

Although his first time in a Bradley, while in the unit, was five days ago, he said his team members are there for him.

"They are helping me out tremendously," he said "If I have a question, they are always on it.

"I got a lot out of it. This was my first actual mission instead of just berm drills I learned quite a bit."

Although all the platoon leaders were at a different level of experience, Snodgrass said they all got a lot out of the exercise.

"For all of them it was a tremendous amount of individual growth," Snodgrass said. "It was a great training opportunity. They had the opportunity to be with the entire platoon.

"We do a lot of squad level and individual level training, but not a lot where the platoons are brought together."

The brigade will rejoin the battalion later this month when 3rd Brigade redeploys from NTC.

Heat: Increases possibility of injury as temperatures rise

overhydration. Drinking too much water can cause the dilution of electrolytes in the body. Hourly fluid intake should not exceed one and a half quarts, and daily fluid intake should not exceed 12 quarts.

Maintaining the proper level of hydration is essential for keeping the body temperature within parameters that are safe.

The body releases heat two ways when the core temperature begins to rise. In one method, the blood absorbs heat from the muscles and increases blood flow to the skin where it can be cooled. The other method is to produce sweat which is evaporated from the skin.

According to FDA Consumer magazine, "a pearl-sized bead of sweat can cool nearly one liter (about one quart) of blood 1.8 C (1 F), using 580 calories in the process."

The body loses an average of four liters of fluid a day. Perspiration, exercise, high temperatures and altitude all increase this amount. Sweating alone can increase necessary fluid requirements to two to four gallons.

But in hot, humid weather, our sweat does not work up to its full potential. The surrounding air is already saturated with water, so it can't absorb any more.

Heat and humidity combine to determine the heat category index. Heat categories are determined by the Lawson Army Airfield Weather Station.

Fort Benning has had 15 Heat Category 5 days in June alone.

With 75 percent humidity, the temperature only has to reach 84 degrees. When 100 percent humidity days hit, the temperature only has to be 81 degrees for the weather station to issue a Heat Category 5.

Ranger medics receive realistic training

Medics test life-saving skills on simulator

Spc.. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Hearing the faint cries for help from within a small building, a ranger medic crawls over a low wall and enters the dark building.

"Over here. Help me," gasps a voice from the dark.

The medic discovers a life-threatening wound on the man.

The victim's pulse is rapid and his breathing is shallow.

Ignoring the sounds of bullets whizzing overhead, nearby explosions, and soldiers firing, the medic goes to work. If the medic is too slow, the victim may die.

This isn't combat, or even a training exercise gone tragically wrong, it is part of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, medics' assessment and validation exercise that the ranger medics must go though every nine months.

The medic is working on the Human Patient Simulator, a life-like mannequin that has many characteristics of a living person.

Its eyes blink, it can breath in oxygen and exhale carbon dioxide, it has a pulse and veins so medics can administer IVs. The medics can introduce a breathing tube should the victim need it. They can administer surgical airways, chest tubes and life-saving drugs.

"This is about as realistic as we can make it," said. Maj. Russ Kotwal, the battalion surgeon. "Name something that we could do (in the field) to a person and we can do it on this (the human patient simulator.)"

The assessment and validation exercise begins with a written test followed by an oral board assessing their reasoning skills and trauma pharmacology knowledge. They then move onto the hands-on portion and refresh their skills on mannequins before moving to the simulator.

With nearly 50 scenarios already programmed into the simulator, medics have a wide variety of trauma situations in which they must treat.

Make the wrong call on the simulator and it can "die."

"It will respond to what the medics do to it," Kotwal said.

For example, Kotwal explained, giving a patient a morphine injection with too much morphine can cause respiratory arrest and the simulator will die.

The simulator builds a medic's confidence, he said.

And that level of confidence takes the rangers and their medics to a new height in their training. Should an accident occur during training, the rangers may not have to completely halt the mission.

Battalion senior medic, Sgt. 1st Class Robert Miller, told of an exercise when a ranger was wounded.

During a live-fire exercise, a soldier was caught in the back-blast area of an antitank weapon. The back-blast punctured a half-dollar size hole in his leg and began to ooze blood, Miller said. Rangers asked him if they should cease fire. After checking the wounded man, making sure he wasn't bleeding from an artery, had a pulse below the wound and could move his toes, Miller said he determined the wound wasn't life threatening so, he gave the green light to continue the fight and call in a tactical vehicle to evacuate him just as the rangers would do in an actual battle.

"And that's the key right there," Kotwal said. "The confidence is in the medics to continue their procedures under the same guidelines that they would have in combat. Unless there is a risk of loss of life, limb or eyesight, they continue to function exactly as they would in combat."

Even when there is serious injury, the competence of the medics is such that the injured man does not slow the progress of the mission. On one of the rangers' latest missions a man received multiple injuries on a jump. Kotwal said the injuries threatened the man's life. The battalion commander had the tactical aircraft move out of the way so that another nontactical helicopter could transport the man to a trauma center. Later, rangers said they didn't even know about the accident until after the mission was over.

Spc. Michael Hullender, a ranger medic, provides an airway on a mannequin.

Although the rangers didn't stop the training in this situation, the medics said they were confident in their skills so the training could go on.

"We're not going to cause life long problems for these guys just so we can practice it tactically," Kotwal said. "We'll do what we deem is safe. If it is safe for them to continue, then they will continue until we pull them out."

The level of this confidence has just come around within the last few years, thanks in part to the simulator, Sgt. Robert Rothwell, said."We had an accident three years ago that went totally different," Rothwell, a battalion medic said. It was a live-fire and a guy had a fragmentation injury from a grenade — that was when we were still using live grenades." That exercise ended

But rangers today can continue to train under the same situation.

"This is part of our job," Kotwal said. "Rangers train to be lethal at night under extremely stressful conditions. Medics need to be able to save lives at night in the most austere of environments. Optimally we strive to do no further harm while increasing ranger survivability."

Rangers can practice their procedures in high stress situations, like what they may face in combat, while working with the simulator.

"You can actually see the benefits of the procedures," Kotwal said. "You can see the good or bad of what you do or not do."

Crime fighters welcome new top sleuth to ranks

Spc.. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Special agents of the Crime Fighter Battalion welcomed a new commander Tuesday during a change of command ceremony at the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Lt. Col. James Crockett III, relinquished command of the Fort Benning Criminal Investigation Command Battalion, which has the largest geographical area of responsibility of any CID battalion or district in the Army, to Lt. Col. Deborah Geiger.

During his final speech to the battalion, Crockett said he is going to miss the soldiers and the area.

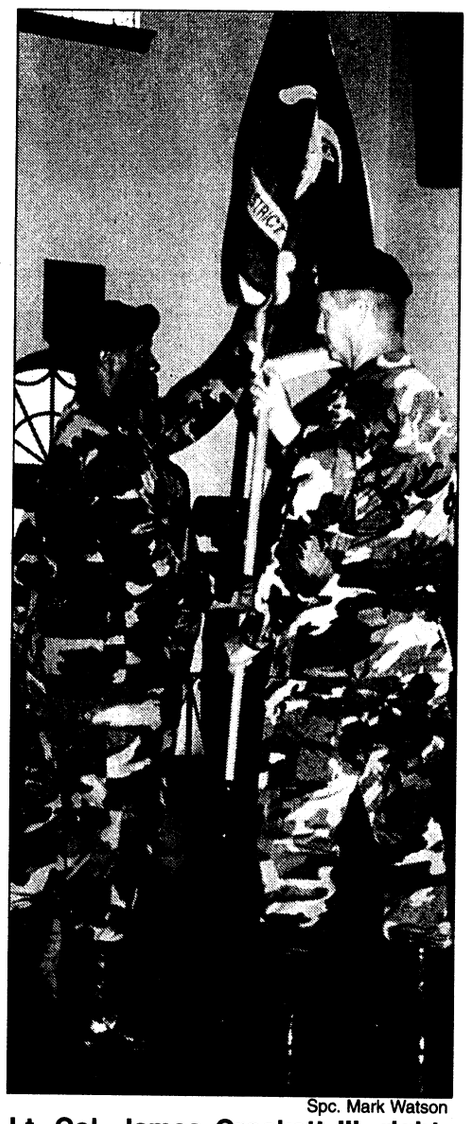
"I am in no way ready to leave Fort Benning and this battalion," Crockett said. "But our Army only allows me a limited two years as a battalion commander."

He then welcomed Geiger to the battalion and gave her news on how much she would be on the road.

"Welcome to the Crime Fighter Battalion and an anticipated 29 weeks on the road during your command," he said. "The good news is this will be less than your previous job required. I am convinced you are the right person for the job ahead."

Crockett and his wife, Priscilla, and son, Cody, will move to Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., where he will be the Military Police director of Combat Developments at the Maneuver Support Center.

Crockett also has a son, James, and a daughter, Misty.



During her speech Geiger said she was glad to be on post and told the soldiers what they can expect from her.

"It is with great pride that I assume command of this exceptionally professional organization," Geiger said. "You can expect my dedicated attention and visible leadership as your commander."

She then challenged her soldiers to maintain their professionalism.

"I challenge you to continue to exceed the standards in the accomplishment of the difficult, often sensitive and dangerous missions that you perform in a multitude of environments.

"We, together, will continue to train and operate within our geographically dispersed area of operation."

Geiger is a veteran of Operations Desert Shield, Desert Storm and Just Cause.

Her most recent assignment was at the Defense Threat Reduction Agency in Alexandria, Va., where she was the Nuclear Security Officer.

Korea ... the forgotten war

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. troops dug in at line Kansas and the nation attempted to establish peace talks, 50 years ago this week in Korea.

June 21-25, 1951 — Retired Maj. Gen. Patrick J. Hurley wraps up his two-day testimony at the MacArthur hearings on June 21. He says that shortly after the World War II Yalta meeting between President Roosevelt, Josef Stalin and Winston Churchill that Roosevelt worried that too many concessions were made to Stalin. The president sent Hurley to London and Moscow to "ameliorate" the agreement. Sen. Brien McMahon of Connecticut read testimony that Hurley had given to the Senate in 1945. Then Hurley had favored the Nationalist Chinese making concessions to the communists and compared the communists to Oklahoma Republicans, with the difference being the Republicans were not armed.

"Russia is not supporting the Chinese Communist Party," he said.

Maj. Gen. David G. Barr, head of a mission to China in 1948, disagreed with previous testimony that the Nationalist Chinese lost the mainland because they didn't get enough American arms and equipment. He said it was because of corruption and "atrocious leadership in the field and lack of will to fight." He said Chiang Kai-shek let his crony generals literally rob the army. One example he used was when a division commander received the division's payroll, he would keep half before paying the troops.

Barr agreed with the U.S. cutting off the Nationalists in 1949 and the MacArthur firing.

He said that Gen. Matthew Ridgway, then-Eighth Army commander, sided with MacArthur in wanting to let the Nationalists invade mainland China from Formosa. Sen. William F. Knowland of California read a summation of a letter Ridgway sent to Gen. J. Lawton Collins, Army chief of staff, in which Ridgway said the Chinese reds were so deeply committed in Korea that the Nationalists could have easily invaded.

Air Force Maj. Gen. Emmett "Rosy" O'Donnell, the last witness, says June 25 that MacArthur was right in wanting to bomb Chinese targets in Manchuria in November. He said the Russians wouldn't have "dared" to get involved and the U.N. could have won the war in 1950. Now that it's too late, he thinks the U.S. should keep its "Sunday punch" in case Russia should begin a war.

The hearings conclude June 25 after 42 days and more than 2 million words of testimony. Senators feel there is enough material for at least two reports, and possibly three.

June 22-27 — Soviet U.N. ambassador Jacob Malik is the target of a broadcast by the U.S. State Department's "Voice of America" broadcast June 21. He is asked to comply with U.N. President Trygvy Lie's request that the communist "say the one word the whole world is waiting for."

The next day, the U.N. Price of Peace radio program broadcasts a 15-minute recorded speech by Malik.

After spending most of his time blaming the United States for the war, he ends with saying the Soviet Union believes the belligerence in Korea should begin negotiations, and that fighting forces should withdraw to each side of the 38th Parallel.

On June 24, Soviet newspapers, Izvestia and Pravda, print Malik's entire radio message. The next day the Chinese communist newspaper, People's Daily, endorses Malik's comments. Peking radio follows, but says before peace talks can begin, U.N. troops must first meet the same conditions of pulling out of Korea. Following the broadcast, Malik refuses to elaborate on his comments and claims illness to keep from seeing Iran's Nasrollah Entezam, president of the General Assembly, who wants to discuss the Soviet's intent.

The State Department is leery of Malik's comments and advises Ridgway that his statements may be an attempt to get the U.N. forces to withdraw south of the parallel. Officials tell him that intelligence reports no indication that the Chinese or North Koreans are preparing for more fighting rather than peace.

Ridgway had his staff develop plans for establishing outposts 10 miles north of line Kansas and a "cease-fire" line 10 miles above that. On June 25, Ridgway sends a staff officer to Korea to present the plans to Lt. Gen. Van Fleet, Eighth Army commander.

Van Fleet does not like the plan. Taking the Iron Triangle and the Punchbowl has been hard and costly. To advance another 20 miles, in leaps of 10 miles, will be at least as difficult, if not more so. The next day, Ridgway visits Van Fleet, who convinces his commander that his army could do it, but it's not worth the price.

On June 27, Alan G. Kirk, U.S. ambassador to Moscow, speaks with Deputy Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko to get the Soviet's stance on a peace settlement.

Gromyko says that while the Soviets do not know China's real intentions, their view is that a military cease fire should be agreed upon by the U.N. and South Korean military commands on one side, and the Chinese and North Korean military leaders on the other. After that, leaders on both sides can agree on political and territorial arrangements.

The U.S. government will not make direct contact with the Chinese or North Koreans, so it's a matter of waiting to see what will develop.

At the home of the Army's only officer candidate school, candidates, soldiers, family and friends gathered to bid farewell to their outgoing commander and welcome Lt. Col. Daniel A. Kessler.

Kessler succeeds Lt. Col. David C. Osborne as commander of the 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, after a change of command ceremony Wednesday morning at York Field.

"Standing in the field in front of you are the future leaders of our Army. The future hall-of-famers," said Osborne. "These great soldiers and the cadre charged to train them, have accepted a challenge their civilian peers can only dream of; leadership of the greatest Army on the face of the earth.

"The training for nearly a thousand officers for the active Army and another 600 for the Army National Guard falls on the shoulders of just 69 indefatigable soldiers assigned to this battalion. The cadre's dedication to excellence and exceptional talents are unmatched," he said.

Osborne thanked his family for their unyielding support, patience and tolerance and for helping him to keep a proper balance between home and work.

In his final comments, Osborne said, "I would be remiss if I did not say something about what I firmly believe in and that is positive mental attitude. PMA all the way will take you to the top.

"In life things are going to fall apart.

"But soldiers will always rally to a leader who displays a single quality of positive mental attitude."

Osbourne's next assignment will be as a member of the staff at the Army War College, Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

He will be joined by his wife, Belinda, and their two children, Taylor, 12, and Shelby, 10.

In his opening address to attendees Kessler said, "I am truly honored to assume command of this great battalion. I am committed to upholding the traditions and maintaining the standard of OCS and to commission the future leaders of tomorrow Army."

"To the soldiers and candidates of OCS I look forward to working with each and everyone of you. 'Standards, no compromise," he said.

Kessler has served as the Armor Task Force Training and Operations Officer Trainer, the Brigade Training and Operations Officer Trainer, and the Chief, Leader Training Program at the National Training Center.

He also served as the Battalion Training and Operations Officer and Brigade training and operations officer in the 3rd Brigade, 4th Infantry Division.

The new commander is accompanied by wife, Kathleen, and their two sons, Andrew, 5, and Ian, 3.

MPs crack down on curfew violators

Children need to be home by 10 p.m.

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

It's 10 minutes after 10 p.m., your 17-year-old is still not home from his friend's house, and you're worried.

The telephone rings, you think the worst.

Answering with a "Hello," you hear the voice on the other end asking for you.

Your child has been picked up for violating the postwide 10 p.m. curfew, and the military police want to talk to you.

U.S. Army Infantry Center Regulation 210-5, Section 1, Dependent Curfew and Supervision of Children, 4-1, Dependent Curfew, states that all children younger than 18 are required to be in their quarters after 10 p.m. until 5 a.m., except when accompanied by a parent or guardian.

Exceptions are made for recognized school functions or in the event of emergencies.

Family members found in violation of this curfew will be taken to the military police station.

Their parent or sponsor will be called and told they need to come and pick them up, according to the policy.

However, if a spouse of a soldier is under the age of 18, they are not required to adhere to the post policy set forth for dependent children.

Curfew violations can also cause families to be evicted from family housing.

"The only justification for a young person to be out after 10 p.m. is if they are going from point A to point B or if they are with a responsible adult," said Maurice A. McKinney, a military police investigator with the Directorate of Public Safety.

For example, McKinney said, if a teen is coming home from work or, as the policy states, a recognized school function.

"We don't pick and choose (who we're going to pick up), but we do use common sense," McKinney said.

Common sense is often left to the officer's discretion when citing someone for a violation.

"Generally, kids don't have a lot of business out after 10 p.m.," McKinney said.

"If they are out that late, they're going to run the chance of getting in trouble."

Military police aren't the only ones catching underage dependents out after curfew, residents also report violators on a regular basis.

McKinney, who has three children, said he enforces an earlier curfew for them than the post policy dictates.

"There's just nothing out there for them to be doing," he said.

Curfew violators face a juvenile misconduct hearing. As a result of the hearing, they may face community service.

"If they are out there, they're basically rolling the dice (with they're safety)," McKinney said. "Chances are high they'll get caught."

Independence Day show set for June 30

Fort Benning's festive fireworks show is set for June 30. The explosive event begins on York Field (in front of Infantry Hall) at nightfall, after an afternoon full of rides, games and free entertainment. More than 6,000 people are expected to attend the event.

"It's always been a great show," Cliff Davis, conference and ceremony coordinator, said. "It's as good or better than the show they put on downtown."

The extravaganza begins at 3 p.m. Patrons can expect plenty of entertainment before the main attraction. York Field will be lined with vendors selling treats like barbeque, pizza, funnel cakes and ice cream.

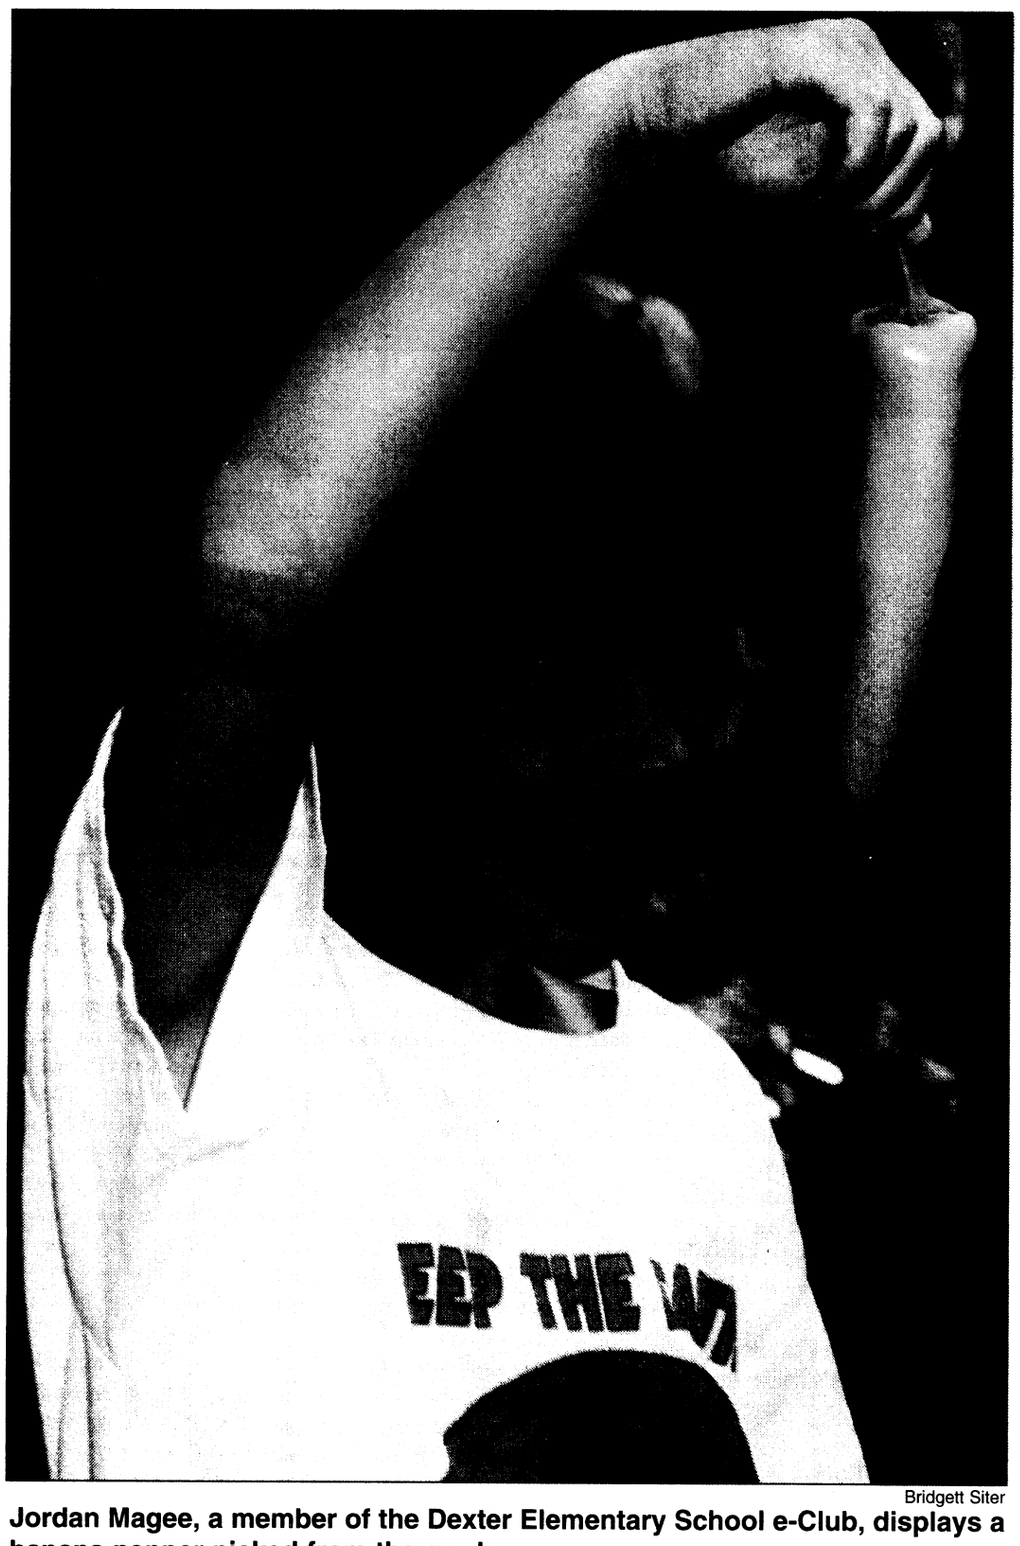
"If you're planning to eat, there will be plenty of food," said Sally Ghent, administrative officer, Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

Children's inflatable rides, and T-shirts can also be found on the field before the big show.

Those interested in purchasing food, pictures or rides will need to buy tickets before approaching the vendors. The ticket stand, which will be located at the back left corner of York Field, will be open until 9 p.m.

The band, Cornbread, who performed at the third annual Luau last month, will play. Two concerts by the band are scheduled during the day. The first set begins at 5 p.m. with a second concert at 6:30 p.m.

The National Flag Pageantry begins at 8:20 p.m. The event, performed by Infantry Training Brigade and 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division soldiers, boasts a flag display from each of the 50 states and U.S. territories. Several soldiers from 11th Infantry Regiment will also don historic war garb during the show. Soldiers from 29th Infantry Regiment will participate in the color guard.



The Infantry Band will begin playing following the flag pageantry. The last note of the 1812 Overture will signal the

Kindergartners grow garden for hungry

e-Club members plant, harvest vegetables for House of Mercy

While 31 million Americans go hungry each month, 26 pounds of groceries may seem a drop in the bucket, but for the residents of the House of Mercy, in Columbus, it means no one goes to bed hungry.

Nine kindergartners from Dexter Elementary School's e-Club, led by Earnestine Ezekiel, club sponsor, delivered a bounty of vegetables — 26 pounds of squash, green peppers, banana peppers and herbs — to the House of Mercy Tuesday.

The vegetables were harvested from a garden club members planted in the spring. The gardeners voted to donate their produce to the home for the homeless in downtown Columbus, though none of the children had ever visited the facility.

"I keep imagining it's like a great big palace," said Michael Lewis, 6. "It probably has lots of room and lots of people. I can't wait to see it."

Michael and his friends had the opportunity to see the home when they delivered their vegetables and toured the three-story building, which once housed an elementary and a middle school.

"It's huge. It does look a lot like a palace," Michael said.

The House of Mercy houses up to 90 residents, including men, women and children, said Patricia Green, assistant director. The facility depends on donations such as the e-Club's for food and clothing.

Before getting a close-up look at the home's dormitory, chapel, nursery and library, the children delivered baskets full of vegetables and bundles of herbs to the kitchen and cafeteria, where they were greeted with applause from the residents.

"Thank you, thank you, thank you," said resident Dorothy Brown, as she hugged each child. "You're beautiful and sweet. This is such a nice thing."

Soldiers ready Boy Scout camp for use

Volunteers get early start on Day of Caring

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Some Fort Benning soldiers got a jump on the United Way's "Day of Caring" by helping out a local Boy Scout camp.

The national "Day of Caring," is Sunday, but Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers sent 15 soldiers to Camp Lumpkin June 13.

The "Day of Caring" is a community outreach program which benefits local United Way agencies by providing manpower to assist with needed tasks.

The United Way contacted the BOSS program to enlist their help for the Boy Scouts.

"The United Way called and asked us if we'd be interested in helping out," said Sgt. Thomas Davis, BOSS coordinator. "We're always ready to lend a hand, so we said OK."

BOSS program soldiers took a bus to Camp Frank G. Lumpkin, a Boy Scout camp located on Lake West Point in LaGrange, Ga.

Camp Lumpkin is part of the Chattahoochee Council Scout Reservation, which is on a long-term lease to the Boy Scouts from the Army Corps of Engineers.

There was still a lot of work to be done on the camp to prepare it for the summer influx of campers.

The soldiers spread gravel for a walkway, cleaned up the dining hall and surrounding area, set up tents, cleared brush and helped build a sand volleyball pit.

Camp Lumpkin and the United Way appreciated the efforts of the soldiers.

"It's great to have the soldiers here. Fort Benning is a big part of the community and them helping out is just great," said Cindy Cain, who works out of Fort Benning during campaign time as the Combined Federal Campaign manager for United Way.

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy

Frank Smith, camp ranger at Camp Frank G. Lumpkin, supervises Spc. Chris Whitman, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, while he works on a sand volleyball court.

"I've really found that soldiers have big hearts. Once you let them know that you need them, they are here and they give 100 percent."

The soldiers were glad they were able to assist the camp staff.

Summer Reads

Photos and stories by Bridgett Siter

"Outside of a dog, a book is a man's best friend. And inside of a dog, it's too dark to read,"
— Groucho Marx

I didn't have a "house" dog growing up. I had Queenie, a collie-shepherd mix, who was confined to the great outdoors. She reigned over the backyard and ate our leftovers, but she was never allowed to beg scraps from the table or sleep at the foot of my bed.

So, outside of a dog, I learned to rely on books for entertainment and companionship. They were perfect for snuggling through the coldest Indiana winters and a great escape from the heat and monotony of what Mom called "the dog days of summer," when she'd shoo me out from underfoot with a "Go outside, it's summer!" and I'd search out a shady spot to while away another dog day with Nancy Drew.

Like a faithful hound, great literature followed wherever I went as I grew, occasionally taking a back seat to not-so-great but none the less fascinating works, like Seventeen and TigerBeat. As a teen, I spent my summer vacations by the pool with a stack of magazines. I learned to slather my body in Bain de Soleil with one hand while balancing a magazine and a Tab in the other.

Long after I sacrificed summers at the swimming pool for the labor pool, books remained my constant companion. And at the onset of "Uh-oh, I-think-this-is-the-real-thing" labor, it was a copy of What to Expect When You're Expecting I wanted packed between my nursing gown and breast pump.

Now, as a mother with a house full of kids and a couple of "house" dogs of my own, books are still my haven, my guide or my entertainment, whichever I need at the moment. They don't bite, they don't leave little puddles on the carpet and they always stay where I tell them to stay. I keep one by my bed, by the tub, on the coffee table and in the van.

So when the kids cry boredom or complain about the wretched heat during "dog days," I'm going to pass along a gift they'll never outgrow. One that never needs to be walked and doesn't require shots. They'll thank me for it one day I'm sure.

The Bayonet staff bring you their recommendations for great summer reads:

The last few months I've been reading travel essays and adventure books at an amazing pace.

My current reading is Eiger Dreams: Ventures Among Men and Mountains, by Jon Krakauer.

The book is broken into several distinct chapters covering mountaineering, rock climbing and canyoneering. It also has stories about renowned alpinist throughout history.

In addition to my latest reading, I've read two other novels by the author, Into the Wild and Into Thin Air.

I can't do Krakauer justice in this short review. His style is so candid it's addicting. I highly recommend his books.

— Rachel R. Garcia

When I was growing up, my mom would take my younger sisters and me to the library at least once a week during the summer.

We'd leave with stacks of books and promptly mow through them once we got home.

My favorite author was Bill Watterson. His comic adventures of Calvin and Hobbes entertain and enlighten me still.
I'm currently rereading his 10th anniversary collection, aptly titled Calvin and Hobbes 10th Anniversary Collection.

For any fan of the series, this is a must-read. Unlike his other collections, this one is only half comics.The other half is commentary from Watterson. He talks about the history of Calvin and Hobbes, his creative process and his battles with his syndicate to keep the cartoon from becoming too commercial.

— 2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy

Currently I'm reading study guides for the promotion board and a little Good Night Moon on the side for Audrey, my daughter.

I love reading, and if I ever have more time to devote to it, I'll finish Icy Sparks, by Gwyn Hyman Rubio, from Oprah's Book Club, The Everything Dreams Book, by Trish and Rob MacGregor and The Complete Idiot's Guide to Getting Published, by Sheree Bykofsky and Jennifer Basye Sander.

— Spc. Jennifer Vchulek

Last summer I was assigned to cover a memorial dedication, what I thought was going to be a somewhat boring story, but it turned out to be one of the most touching stories I've ever covered.

John Cook, a former prisoner of war at Camp Cabanatuan, in the Philippines, dedicated a memorial to the men who rescued him and 511 others from the Japanese camp.

When I heard about a book being published about the raid, I was one of the first in line to purchase it.

Ghost Soldiers by Hampton Sides, is the story of the liberated prisoners and the men who risked their lives to sneak 30 miles behind enemy lines to save them. The book keeps you on the edge of your seat from beginning to end.

I'm also reading Patrick McManus, a true outdoorsman who grew up in the mountains of Idaho, hunting, fishing and camping.

With his friend, Retch Sweeney, and mentor, Rancid Crabtree, he fished local trout streams, bought military surplus and gun powder, went on hundreds of camping trips and walked thousands of miles exploring the outdoors.

Now he's put his experiences on paper in a series of hilarious books, including Poof! No Eyebrows to The Night the Bear Ate Goomba. The stories will have you in tears from laughing so hard.

— Spc. Mark Watson

I'm reading T*he Rise of Antichrist Nicolae*, by Tim LaHaye and Jerry B. Jenkins. It's the third book in an eight-volume series.

The whole Left Behind series features books containing a Biblical genre brought to life in today's setting.

Authors LaHaye and Jenkins keep readers on the edge of their seats with spine-tingling scenes of Revelation prophecies fulfilled.

Some of the series is available at the PX and mini-mall, and the entire series can be found at most book stores.

— 2nd Lt. Sandy Mosley-Kuria

I'm reading I'll Be Seeing You, by Mary Higgins Clark. It's a suspense novel about murder and obsession.

Clark weaves a fast-paced tale that begins with a car accident and the alleged death of Meghan Collin's father. The only problem is the police can't find the car or his body and the insurance company suspects he staged his disappearance after cashing his insurance policies.

As a reporter, Meghan searches for the truth, which leads to murder and her discovery that her father has led a double life for years. The discovery is linked to the murder of a young woman who looks just like Meghan. Clark's skillful talent in character development brings the book to life. Makes you want to read it, doesn't it?!

— Monica Manganaro

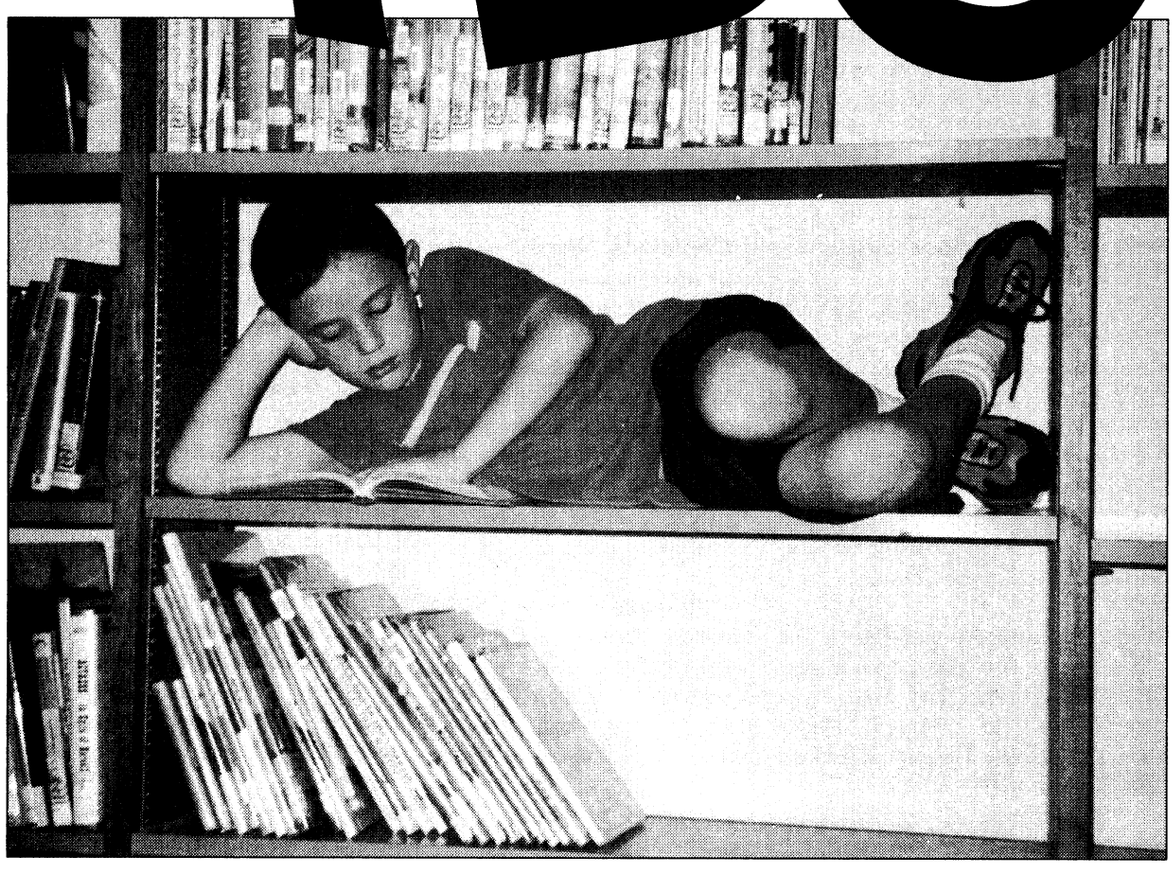
I'm reading Those Devils in Baggy Pants, by Ross S. Carter. It was a book suggested by Charlés L. Butler, a wonderful veteran who frequents our office. This easy reading book not only leads the reader through the the battles fought by members of the 504th Parachute Infantry of the 82nd Airborne Division during WWII, it also allows you into the personal thoughts and lives of these bravemen.

The scenes are so well written that at times I had to pause and reflect on what I had just read.



As a woman in the military forces, this book led to some insight of the tight bonds of friendship and trust forged in battle and enjoyed in training.

I may never know that team closeness shared and treasured by infantry units. But I cannot complain because it was that bond that granted me freedom and a chance to serve my country.

— Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

ABCs of helping your child be a reader

Reading begins at home

Summer is a great time to encourage new or reluctant readers, but with the school year over, the focus should be on reading solely for fun.

Studies indicate children who don't read during the summer experience a loss of reading skills, but children who continue to read throughout summer actually improve.

Veteran readers who view summer reading as an infringement on their vacation fun can be enticed into reading by:

- extending bedtime half an hour just for reading.
- offering a reward for completing a book.
- planning a trip to a place or event related to the book. For instance, plan a trip to a baseball game when your reader completes a book about a baseball player.
- receiving a subscription to an age-appropriate magazine that interests the reader.
- listening to books on tape when they're in the car.
- reverse psychology. Tell your reader to stop at a particularly interesting or suspenseful point in the book and save it for the next day.

New readers should be encouraged to read for short periods of time every day. Here's a list of suggestions to help make the most of your child's reading time:

- Sit close together when you read to really "share" the book.
- Point out the words as you read them. Have your child point if he or she is the reader.
- Give your reader plenty of time to look at the pictures on each page.
- Allow your child to turn the pages.
- Discuss the story as you go along and answer any questions your child may have.
- If he or she gets restless, chose another story or postpone reading until later.
- Set aside a special time each day when the two of you can be alone. Turn off the television and radio while reading.
- Take your child to the library or bookstore and pick out books together.
- Libraries are wonderful, but make sure your child owns a few books of his own.
- Let your child handle the books and keep them in a convenient place.
- Read age-appropriate chapter books to your child at bedtime, ending each session at an exciting point so he or she will look forward to the next night.

If your own reading skills need help, don't let it stop you. Call your local library or visit Literacy Volunteers of America online to locate a volunteer tutor.

Ask questions. "What do you think will happen next?"

Buy books as gifts for special occasions.

Chat about what is happening in the story and how it relates to your child.

Drop everything and read for at least 20 minutes each day.

Examine book illustrations carefully. Choose books that have large, bright pictures.

Find books that interest your child.

Give hints when your child gets stuck on a word.

Have fun. Smile and enjoy the story. Read slowly, relax, be expressive.

Invite your child to a bookstore or the library.

Join in your child's reading successes and celebrate them.

Kids love to receive mail. Send your child a subscription to an age-appropriate magazine.

Learn to read with — not just to — your child daily. Read aloud, share ideas.

Model reading. Let your child see you reading.

Never force your child to read.

Offer your child a variety of reading material, books, magazines, cereal boxes, comics and newspapers.

Predict story elements, draw conclusions and retell the story with your child.

Quiz your child at the end of the story.

Reread books to familiarize your child with words and to build confidence.

Sing songs, recite poetry and do fingerplays to develop language and listening skills.

Try to help your child understand it's OK to make mistakes.

Understand that reading is developmental and it takes time and practice to become fluent.

Visit your local library often.

Welcome wordless picture books into your collection. They generate conversation and allow the nonreader to create his or her own story.

"Xhibit" patience when your child is selecting books. Your support is empowering.

You are the most important person in helping your child develop a lifelong love of reading.

Zealous readers are the result of supportive and nurturing role models.

How to choose a book with your child

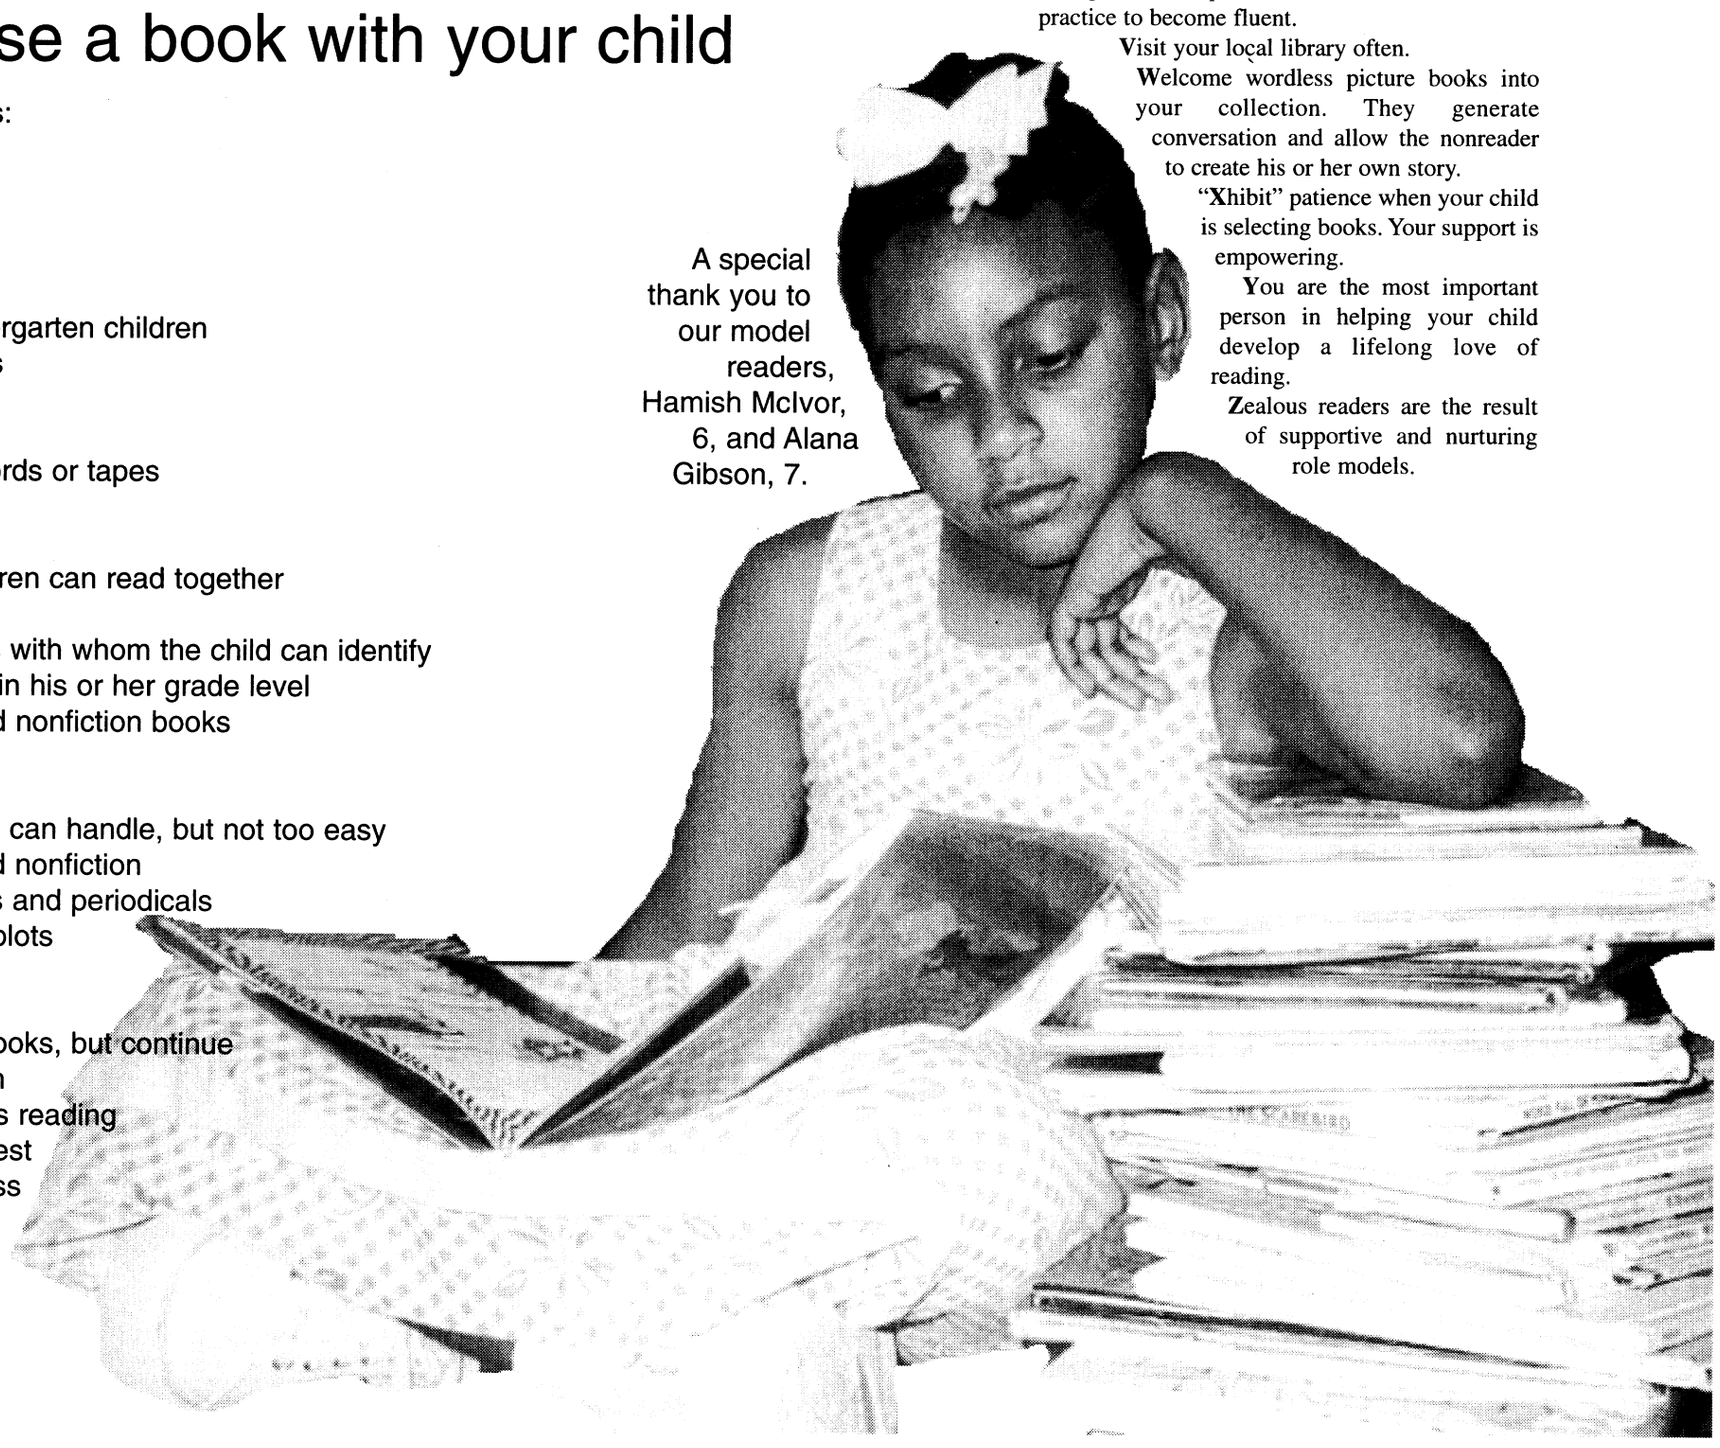
For babies and pre-schoolers:
- bright pictures
- familiar objects
- rhymes
- cloth or cardboard pages



For nursery school and kindergarten children
- nursery stories and rhymes
- fairy tales
- books with word repetition
- books with read-along records or tapes

For children in grades 1 to 3
- books that adults and children can read together
- books with strong plots
- books that have characters with whom the child can identify
- books with vocabulary within his or her grade level
- a combination of fiction and nonfiction books

For grades 4 to 8
- books with vocabulary they can handle, but not too easy
- a combination of fiction and nonfiction
- age-appropriate magazines and periodicals
- chapter books with strong plots

For high schoolers
- allow your child to select books, but continue to monitor his or her selection
- talk about what your child is reading
- share magazines that interest you and your child and discuss interesting articles

A special thank you to our model readers, Hamish McIvor, 6, and Alana Gibson, 7.

BOSS: Helps out

"As soon as I heard them say 'Boy Scouts' I said, 'I'm there.' I was an Eagle Scout and I'm more than happy to help them out. I really enjoyed Boy Scouts for its positive role models, and the great influence it had on me," said Spc. Chris Whitman, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "For me it was fun just getting away from everything and being in the outdoors."

"I was a Boy Scout a long time ago, so I volunteered. It sounded like fun," said Spc. Douglas Johnson, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "Helping out, is helping out."

"We really needed the help. It's so good to have these soldiers here to lend a hand," said Marty Hagood, assistant camp director and business manager. "We've got 150 Scouts coming in two weeks and all summer we'll have between 800 and 1,000 come through the camp."

First year scouts learn basic scouting skills, during all day programs with the possibility of an overnight, while at Camp Lumpkin.

All scouts have a variety of activities open to them, including aquatics, shooting sports, scoutcraft, ecology, first aid, fitness and handicraft.

"We're here to teach leadership, problem solving, team building and confidence," said Vincent Atterberry, high adventure program director. "We challenge by choice. We encourage our scouts to push themselves, to do things that they didn't think they could do. But we won't force them to do anything they don't want to."

The BOSS soldiers definitely did not feel forced to be out at Camp Lumpkin, lending a hand.

"I had a great time. I really wish we could have stayed there longer," said Whitman. "I really would have liked to finish the volleyball court."

Fireworks: Set

official start of the fireworks. The show will last about 30 minutes.

Officials recommend parking near Infantry Hall or Building 6.

"Come early to get a good parking spot," Ghent said. In addition to the thousands of Fort Benning soldiers and families who flock to the extravaganza each year, visitors from Columbus and Phenix City are also expected to attend.

"We've even had calls from people in Atlanta," Ghent said.

As always, safety is a concern. On-lookers will not be allowed on the Stewart-Watson Field launching site. Pets, as well as personal fireworks, are not allowed.

community notes

on post

Preschool registration — Patch Preschool is now accepting registrations for the 2001-2002 school year.

Hours of registration are 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Your child must be registered with the Central Registration Office.

For more information, call 687-2404. Register early before all classes are filled.

Vaccination proof required — Fort Benning Schools follow the Georgia Department of Human Resources guidelines for immunizations and work cooperatively with Martin Army Community Hospital. All students entering the sixth grade next year will be required to have the varicella vaccine (chicken pox) or proof of immunity.

Proof consists of a physician's or health care provider's diagnosis of the disease or a statement of immunity.

Please check with your physician, clinic, or health care provider to be sure you have the appropriate documentation for school registration.

Mayors wanted — The East Main Post mayor's position and the vice mayor and the Indianhead Terrace vice mayor position are currently open.

Call Rosetta Darby at 687-7947 for more information on how to apply for these positions.

Grants available — The Hope Grant Program will pay all tuition and fees, and up to $100 per quarter for textbooks for all active duty, and their family members 16 years or older (with rare exceptions) stationed at Fort Benning and living in Georgia.

All you have to do is fill out the required forms and register for classes at Columbus Technical College.

Depending on the program, classes are offered at Fort Benning and Main Campus day and evening.

Programs offered include Management, Computers, Office Technology Medical, Dental, Paramedic, Automotive, Carpentry, Air Conditioner Repair, Welding and many others.

For more information, call 685-8549, or come by Building 2614 in Soldiers' Plaza.

Volunteers wanted — The Family Advocacy New Parent Support Plus and First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking follow-up phone callers.

Mothers of all descriptions are needed. Those who have had premature babies or multiple births, who were teen-age moms, single moms, and SIDS moms can be especially helpful.

The basic requirements are to be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support, and referrals to services they need.

For more information, call New Parent Support Plus and First Steps at 544-2020.

Red Cross needs volunteers — The Red Cross is looking for volunteers and instructors. If interested, call the office located in Soldiers' Plaza at 545-8221.

Donations needed — The Columbus Goodwill is in need of donations of clothing, furniture, house wares, linens and small appliances. Donations fund the mission of providing job training for disabled and disadvantaged individuals.

For more information about donating, call the Goodwill at 324-4366.

Counselors needed —The Muscular Dystrophy Association needs volunteer camp counselors for Camp Walk N' Roll for the week July 28 through Aug. 3. Camp is held at Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga., which is about 45 minutes east of Atlanta.

Applications are available through Sgt. Rob Brown, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, Infantry Hall, Room 550.

For any questions concerning camp responsibilities, call Joanie Rosenbaum, camp director, at 322-7573 or (770) 621-9800.

Reunion — The Army's renowned First Infantry Division will conduct its 83rd annual reunion in Nashville, Tenn., from Aug. 17-21. The reunion is sponsored by the Big Red One veterans' organization, the Society of the First Infantry Division located in Blue Bell, Penn.

The Big Red One is the Army's oldest and most famous division. It has fought with distinction in four wars in the 20th century: World War I, WWII, Vietnam and Desert Storm. Presently, the Division has units deployed on peacekeeping and military support missions in several countries in eastern Europe.

More than 1,000 veterans of the Big Red One and their guests are expected to attend the reunion which will feature a memorial service to remember the nearly 13,000 First Infantry Division soldiers who have given their lives in the service of their country.

Everyone who ever served in the First Infantry Division is cordially invited to attend the reunion.

Children celebrate yearlong journey's end

Cathie Wampler
USAIC Chaplains Office

Members of the St. Maurice Parish (Main Post Catholic Chapel) celebrated two significant events during the month of May.

On May 5, 28 children joined family and friends for the first time at the table of the Lord when they received their first Holy Eucharist.

The children listened as Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan told them this was a day each of them would remember for the rest of their lives.

reflections

Two weeks later, sponsors, families and members of the community witnessed Bishop Francis X. Roque, Auxiliary Bishop of the Archdiocese for Military Services, confer the sacrament of confirmation upon 27 teens and young adults of the Fort Benning Catholic community. For all of the young people, celebration of these sacraments was the culmination of a year of study, prayer and preparation. Throughout the year, they have been guided by their parents and teachers and supported through the prayers of the community.

These events mark significant milestones in the life of a Catholic, as do each of the seven sacraments. The sacraments are central to the Catholic faith.

They are a marvelous combination of ancient Jewish ritual and New Testament theology, which have evolved into rites through which we experience and celebrate the presence of Christ in our midst. Sacraments celebrate initiation into the most fundamental of our human experiences, to include life and Christianity, growth and maturity, love and forgiveness and sickness and death.

Rooted in Jewish thought is the concept that, in "memory," a past event can be brought into the present and made real and effective.

In this sense, "memory" is a real, "making-present," not a "looking-back-on" memorial. All who take part in the Pesach feast (Seder) share, in the present moment, the liberating and redeeming event of the Exodus. This concept shaped the origins of the Catholic Church's sacramental theology. The sacraments are present, saving events. Jesus Christ is made present in the Holy Spirit through the power and praise of God's almighty works.

Through the Holy Eucharist, we experience the Last Supper and the saving and life-giving event of the death and resurrection of Christ. We experience the presence of Christ when we receive the Eucharist, just as his apostles did when they celebrated the Last Supper together.

The gifts and blessings of the Holy Spirit become present to those celebrating the sacrament of confirmation in the same way that Christ's disciples experienced the power of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost.

Celebrating the sacraments is also a means of sharing and passing down Catholic faith and tradition. These special events provide an opportunity not only for the individuals to affirm their faith, but for the entire community to recognize and celebrate the real presence of Christ among us.

Congratulations to all the young people of the St. Maurice community who continue their journey of faith throughout the recent celebration of the sacraments of Eucharist and confirmation.

All Fort Benning women are welcome. For more information, call 685-0739.

Teens need unconditional love

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Thousands of teens were asked what single question they would like their parents to answer. Fifty percent said, "Do you love me?"

The most single influential factor of adolescent behavior is the young person's perception of being loved. Teens who perceived parents as loving are less prone to severe problems. Jerry Johnston, who has spoken before 4 million teens in more than 3,000 schools, concurred. "I can't believe how many teens have told me their parents don't love them," he said.

Children, especially teens, need to know that they are unconditionally loved. Show them that you love them by your actions. But also tell them (Philippians 1:9). One ninth-grade boy reflected, "I wish my dad would say that he loves me more often."

Unconditional love is love with no strings attached. It is love that is always there, regardless of the circumstances. It is to love your child for the unique, infinitely valuable being that he or she is, regardless of performance, attitude, behavioral pattern or specific behavior.

First, see the uniqueness of each child. Cultivate their positive skills and abilities and cooperate with them. If there are negative traits, counteract them. Don't ignore them.

Second, encourage them. Don't point out every flaw. Give them your attention and affection. Don't lose control of your anger. Praise them for doing their best.

Third, disciple and mentor them. Be an example to them in word and deed. Last of all, give a blessing to your children. Let it be a living legacy for your children.

Would you like more help with parenting? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

AMU takes interservice championship

Army pistol shooters walk away on top

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs

The Army's pistol shooters walked away with the top team trophies at last week's Interservice Pistol Championships.

Four soldiers from the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit beat 13 other teams from the Air Force, Marines, Navy, National Guard and Reserves to win the Interservice Pistol Team Championship.

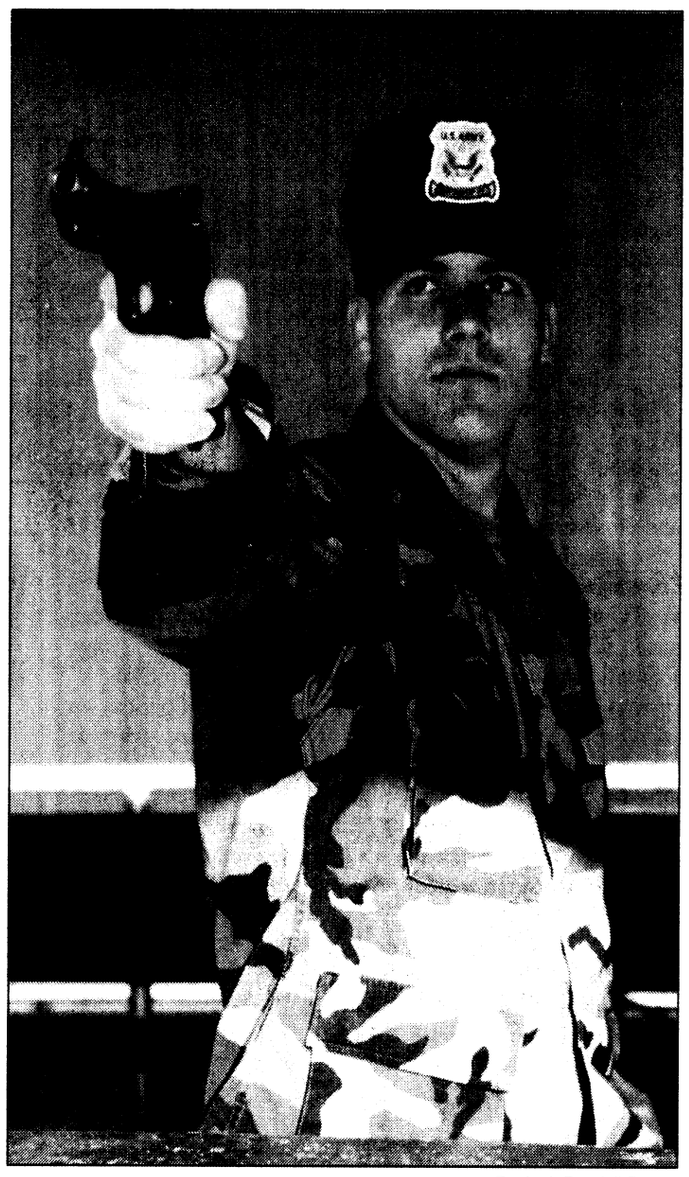
The USAMU team of Sgt. 1st Class Roger C. Jacobson, Staff Sgt's. Thomas A. Rose and Gregory S. Wilson and Spc. Adam E. Sokolowski won the overall pistol championship, followed by the All-Guard Team in second place and U.S. Army Reserve Team in third place.

The USAMU Team won the .22-Caliber Team Championship Match, in which the All-Guard Team took second place and the U.S. Army Reserve Team was third.

The Army Reserve Team won the Center Fire Team Match; USAMU was second and the All-Guard Team finished third.

The USAMU Team won the .45-Caliber Team Championship with the Army Reserve Team in second place and the All-Guard Team in third. The USAMU also won the Service Pistol Team Championship; the All Guard Team took second place and the Marines were third.

"They did a fantastic job," USAMU Service Pistol Team Coach Ray Arredondo said of his team.



"I was not surprised; I've got a hard-working team. They did the best that they could and ended up winning it all. It was a major accomplishment because it was a top-notch competition with some excellent shooters from the other services."

U.S. Army Reserve Master Sgt. Steven F. Reiter beat 91 other shooters to win the overall Individual Interservice Pistol Championship. Sgt. Keith Sanderson of the Army Reserve took second place and USAMU's Jacobson was third.

USAMU's Rose won the Service Pistol Individual Championship, in which Reiter was second and Jacobson third. Reiter also won the .45-Caliber Championship; Sanderson took second place and Marine Staff Sgt. Dexter Conrad was third.

Sanderson won the Center Fire Championship, followed by Marine Sgt. John C. Ennis in second place and Reiter in third. Marine Staff Sgt. Scott

AMU to compete in national shooting tournament

Soldiers participate in competition

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs

More than 30 soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit are competing in the USA Shooting National Championships Thursday through July 1 at the Tom Lowe Shooting Grounds, the site of the 1996 Olympics.

USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

Shooters compete in International Rifle, International Pistol and Running Target competitions.

However, the 50-meter Running Target competitions will be conducted at Fort Benning's Hibbs Range Tuesday and Wednesday and the 300-Meter Rifle National Championships will be held at Fort Benning's Pool Range Aug. 23-26.

The Shotgun National Championships will be July 18-28 at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo.

The National Championships will also choose the 2001 U.S. Team that will compete in the Championship of the Americas — called the CAT Games — Sept. 30 to Oct. 7 at Fort Benning.

The CAT Games, Campeonato de Tiro de las Americas, is the shooting championships for the Western Hemisphere which is conducted every four years. The CAT Games is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and Pan-American Games — where shooters can win medals and set world records.

At the CAT games, the U.S. Team will compete against shooters from North, Central and South America for the title of being the best in the Americas.

Amateur athletes prepare for annual state games

Nine-day event offers more than 40 amateur sports

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Amateur athletes from across the state are training up for the Georgia Games in Atlanta July 14-22.

The nine-day event will allow competitors to show their skill in 43 different Olympic sports.

Any amateur athletes are eligible to compete in the games if they meet the 30-day Georgia residency requirement.

Interested athletes just need to submit an entry form for the sport or sports they are interested in competing in along with entrance fees.

Registration dates and entrance fees vary by sport. Many entry forms are available on the Games's Web site.

Maj. Scott Noren, a local weightlifter, said he thinks the event provides a good forum where athletes can measure their prowess against others and have some fun.

"An event like this is different than in a gym setting. You can take everything you have (skills) from the gym and try to make it happen again during the meet," said Noren, who won last year's Olympic weightlifting event.

"This takes more adrenaline, so sometimes you can get a personal record, and you get an idea of what you can do under pressure."

Events offered during the games and competition dates are:

- Archery, July14
- Armwrestling, July 21
- BMX Cycling, July 17
- Badminton, July 15
- Baseball - Youth ages 16-18, July 14-17

Teen-age pistol shooter dominates

AMU 19-year-old considered one of best shooters

Paula J. Randall Pagan
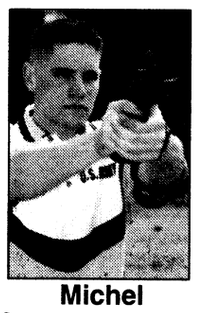
USAMU Public Affairs

Although he's still a teen-ager, an Army pistol shooter has been dominating the U.S. Practical Shooting Association Area Championships in the United States.

Spc. Maxient J. Michel, a member of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Action Shooting Team, has become one of the best international practical shooters in America by winning some major championships recently.



The infantryman is only 19 years old but is already considered to be one of the top action pistol shooters in the country.

More than 20,000 American shooters in the International Practical Shooting Confederation compete not only in The United States, but also with IPSC shooters in over 60 countries.

This year, Michel has won the Area 4 and Area 6 Regional Championships as well as taking the Alabama, North Carolina and South Carolina State Champion titles.

Last year he was the Junior Champion at the Pan-American Games as well as an overall Pan-Am Bronze Medalist.

He also won the Military World Shoot Off and was the IPSC Interservice Champion.

Michel

Michel was 5 years old when he received a .22-caliber rifle from his father and started target shooting. His father was an IPSC shooter and got him started in action pistol at the age of 11. According to Michel, he made a lot of sacrifices as a teen-ager including not getting a driver's license, so he would have more time to concentrate on his sport.

"All I did was go to school, come home, do homework, go to the range and shoot," Michel said.

"I didn't drive. I didn't have time to go out with my friends on the weekends. Everything revolved around shooting and competing."

When he became a teen-ager, Michel became interested in joining the Army after speaking with a member of the USAMU Action Shooting Team at a competition.

At 16 years old, Michel said he talked about enlisting in the Army with Ray Arredondo, the USAMU Action Shooting Team coach at the time, and that's when he decided to become a soldier after high school.

Michel joined the Army six days after graduating from Andrew Jackson High School of Chalmette, La., in 1999. After he completed Basic and Infantry Training, he joined the USAMU's Action Shooting Team.

"Max had a lot of energy and potential; I knew he would be awesome for the Army Team," Arredondo said. "He is so highly motivated, and with his skills, he is very capable of becoming the national champion."

In 1998, Michel finished in 52nd place at the National Championships and was unable to compete in 1999 because he was in Basic Training.

However, when he competed at the Nationals last year, Michel amazingly finished in third place overall.

"I keep getting better every year and my goal is to keep progressing," Michel said. "The Army has definitely helped me. It has boosted my confidence and given me the time to train, the facilities, equipment, resources ... everything I need to meet my goals."

Michel said his goals include winning the National Championships in September.

He also wants to win the World Championship next year in South Africa before he turns 21.

Besides being a world-class shooter and a soldier, Michel also attends Troy State University where he is majoring in criminal justice.

"It feels good to be a soldier and to be part of the Army," Michel said. "The black and gold Army uniform really stands out and people come up to me all the time to talk with me about the Army, especially veterans and the media. I tell them, 'I love to shoot and the Army is the best place to be.'"

Army 10-Miler T-shirt contest — The Army 10-Miler T-shirt design contest reopened Thursday and will run until July 13th after being temporarily halted due to technical difficulties and voting irregularities.

Action has been taken to correct system problems and to identify those who vote more than once.

T-shirt designs associated with voting irregularities have been disqualified. If multiple voting by single voters continues, the contest will be discontinued and the Army Ten-Miler office will select the winning designs.

Previous votes collected will not be included in the new results.

For more information and to vote, visit the Army 10-Miler Web site at www.armytenmiler.com.

Military Tribute Days — Pick up your free RedStixx tickets for the July 2 game at Omega World Travel.

First pitch is 7:15 p.m., and the gates open one hour prior.

Omega World Travel is located inside the Main PX Mall.

For more information 685-1151.

Pistol matches — There will be a Night Pistol Series shoot July 7 and Aug. 4 at the Rifle and Pistol Club on English Range.

This series of monthly matches is designed for both new and experienced shooters using stock handguns.

Entry fee for a new shooter (first match here) is $12. Subsequent matches are $15 preregistered or $20 day of the match.

For more information, e-mail brpc@mindspring.com or visit English Range.

Ranger Rendezvous Fun Run — There will be a 5K, 10K and one-mile fun run July 23 for Ranger Rendezvous at Stewart-Watson Field, across from Infantry Hall.

Race day registration begins at 6 a.m. and the race starts at 7 a.m.

Entry fee is $10 for pre-registration, $12 race day (T-shirts will be limited on race day). The one-mile fun run is free, but participants will not receive a T-shirt.

Prizes will be awarded to the top overall male and female finishers in the 5K and 10K and the top finisher in each 10K age group and for the first place finishers in their age group for the 5K.

Ribbons will be given to all one-mile fun run participants, and a trophy to the top team in the 10K. Teams will consist of 10 runners in the 10K.

The 10K and 5K courses are generally flat throughout Main Post. The one-mile fun run is on the one-mile track.

The 5K and 10K begin at 7 a.m. The 1-mile fun run begins at 8 a.m.

For more information, call Tom Spahr at 545-7157 or 545-6126 or e-mail spahrt@soc.mil.

All proceeds from the race go to the Ranger Regiment Association to support the Ranger Army 10-Miler.

22nd annual Purple and Gold Golf Tournament — The local chapter of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, Inc. will host the 22nd annual Purple and Gold Golf Tournament. The tournament will be held at the Follow Me Golf Course June 30 and July 1.

It is open to the public. The format for the tournament is 36-holes medal play with flighting after the first day's round.

Prizes will be awarded for the first, second, third, fourth and fifth in each flight including trophies. Ladies are invited to play. Flights will be based on entries.

Many other prizes will be awarded to include the longest drive and closest to the hole on all par threes for both days.

All contestants will have the opportunity to win two free round-trip tickets and hotel accommodations, courtesy of U.S. Airways Express.

In addition, the first hole-in-one June 30 and the first two holes-in-one July 1 win an automobile courtesy of Bill Heard Chevrolet, Freeway Ford, Jordan Woolfolk Insurance and Jay Buick.

The entry fee is $85 per person, which includes greens fees, riding cart and refreshments for both days, plus a pre-Tee-Off Reception at the Columbus Chamber of Commerce June 29.

For more information, call Robert Anderson at 649-4789 or Howard Pendleton at 653-4529.

Youth Services gymnastics —Youth Services has received many inquiries regarding the gymnastics program over the past few months and would like to update the Fort Benning community as to its status.

Youth Services is committed to operating a quality gymnastics program for the youth family members of the Fort Benning community.

The gymnastics program, to begin in late August, will be conducted at the existing YS facility, Building 1056, on McIver Street.

The YS staff is in the process of modifying a room to meet required safety standards.

A contract will be awarded to a professionally established gymnastics company in order to provide experienced and knowledgeable instructors for the classes.

New state-of-the-art gymnastics equipment has been ordered.

Prior to August, YS will advertise dates for enrollment for gymnastics classes via the community TV cable, flyers, and all outdoor signs.

For more information, call 545-3070.

AMU: Wins at interservice games

R. Allison was the winner in the .22-Caliber Championship; Reiter took second place and Command Sgt. Maj. Danny R. Estes of the All-Guard Team was third.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit conducted the 42nd annual Interservice Pistol Championships June 11-14 at Phillips Range. The matches were sponsored by the National Guard Marksmanship Training Center of Camp Robinson and were registered with the National Rifle Association of America.

The USAMU Service Pistol is now training for the National Pistol Championships, which will take place at Camp Perry, Ohio, in July.

Out & About at the Good Shepherd Therapeutic Center

Story and photos by Bridgett Siter

It's fawn season, appropriately named, because even the crustiest hunters "oooh" and "aaah" and fawn over newborn deer. And who wouldn't? They're soooo cute. The deer I mean.

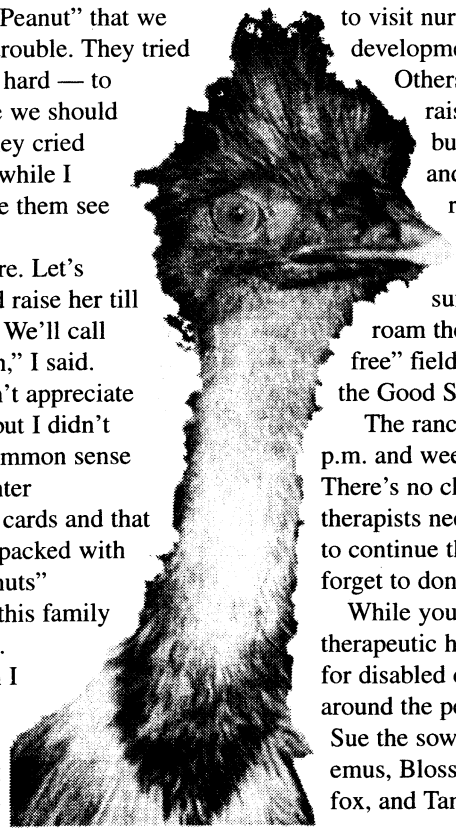
Just last week my husband and some of his ranger buddies rescued a tiny orphaned deer. The hunters became doting surrogate mommies. They took turns cradling "baby deerest," coaxing her to nurse from a bottle, while I combed the yellow pages for someone a bit more qualified to care for our Bambi.

I knew the minute the kids tagged her "Peanut" that we were in for trouble. They tried hard — real hard — to convince me we should keep her. They cried and begged while I tried to make them see reason.

"Yeah, sure. Let's keep her and raise her till she's prime. We'll call her "Venison," I said.

They didn't appreciate my humor, but I didn't concede. Common sense says our hunter certification cards and that deep freeze packed with frozen "peanuts" disqualifies this family for adoption.

Still, even I hated the thought of never seeing her again — or worse — Peanut staring down the barrel of a 12-gauge next fall.



So I made a few phone calls and found a solution that pleased everyone involved, especially Peanut.

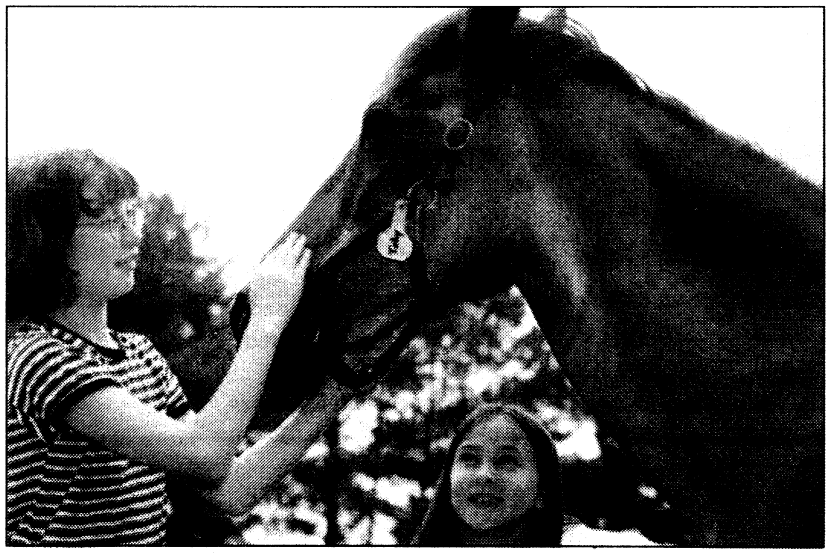
The Good Shepherd Therapeutic Center in Warm Springs, Ga., offered Peanut a home and my family — and yours — a chance to visit her whenever we like.

The Good Shepherd's main ministry is reaching out to the elderly, abused and disabled through animal-assisted therapy.

Funded by United Way and donations, the Good Shepherd fosters a variety of domestic critters and native Georgia wildlife, many old, orphaned and disabled themselves.

Some of the animals, like the rabbits, birds and puppies, travel with therapists to visit nursing home residents and developmentally delayed children.

Others, like Peanut, will be raised on site, separate from, but visible for school children and families who visit the ranch to enjoy.



When Peanut is older and completely self-sufficient, she'll be free to roam the 300-plus acres of "hunt-free" fields and forests that surround the Good Shepherd.

The ranch is open weekdays until 5 p.m. and weekends by appointment. There's no charge, but the staff and therapists need all the help they can get to continue their good work, so don't forget to donate.

While you're there, ask about the therapeutic horseback riding program for disabled children. And mosey around the petting zoo and meet Piggy Sue the sow, Estelle and Lester the emus, Blossom the skunk, Rufus the fox, and Tango, the African Grey parrot, who alternately cries "Praise the Lord," and "I'm gonna wring your neck!"

There's even a rare Sicilian donkey, called a "Christ donkey" because it's the kind that carried Mary to Bethlehem and Jesus into Jerusalem — and it has the shape of a cross on it's back.

The Good Shepherd is located just off U.S. Highway 194 in Warm Springs, about 45 miles from Fort Benning. Call 655-2354 to schedule a visit.

Dr. Dolittle 2 — Eddie Murphy returns as the doctor who can talk to the animals. This time, it's a man vs. nature showdown, in the midst of the animal kingdom's first strike.

In Dr. Dolittle 2, the now-famous doc has more patients — two-legged and four-legged — than he can handle. But his animal friends want more than office visits. The outraged critters want to save their forest from unscrupulous human developers, and they're seeking Dolittle's help.

Dolittle concocts a plan to save the forest: Find an endangered species the law protects. He discovers a lone endangered Pacific Western Bear, Ava, living in the condemned forest. But she needs a mate — and Dolittle thinks he's found one in Archie, a city-dwelling, wise-cracking, fast food-loving, circus-performing bear. Although Archie initially resists the idea, Dolittle convinces him there's love to be found in his natural habitat. Dolittle and his dog, Lucky, head to the forest to try and teach Archie the ways of the wild.

Will Dolittle's animal friends start walking picket lines? Can he come up with the right prescription to bring Ava and Archie together, and save the forest? It's down to the wire, as Dolittle and company give the money-hungry land-grabbers a taste of real bargaining power — wilderness style.

Dr. Dolittle 2 is rated PG-13 for language and crude humor.

What's the Worst That Could Happen? — Martin Lawrence and Danny DeVito square off to find out in this zany comedy from MGM Pictures.

Kevin and Max have made careers out of stealing: Kevin Caffrey (Martin Lawrence) is a professional thief with a taste for the finer things and billionaire Max Fairbanks (Danny DeVito) is a ruthless businessman used to getting whatever he wants.

When Kevin targets Max's supposedly unoccupied beachfront mansion for an easy nighttime heist, he interrupts Max in a bathtub tryst with Miss September, the cops are called, and Kevin is arrested.

With Kevin in handcuffs, however, Max takes it one step too far — he takes Kevin's good-luck ring right off his finger, telling the police it's his and exacting his own little revenge — thieving from a thief.

What's the Worst Thing That Could Happen? is rated PG-13 for language and sexual content.

Lara Croft: Tomb Raider — Oscar-winner Angelina Jolie reinvents the modern action hero in the phenomenally popular interactive Tomb Raider game.

Born into wealth and groomed at the most elite schools, Lara Croft travels to dangerous and mysterious locales around the globe in search of rare, lost crypts and long-forgotten empires. She speaks numerous languages, is highly trained for combat and answers to no one, obeying only a desire for adventure.

But now she must face her greatest challenge yet: to find two halves of an ancient artifact buried in space and time. To possess it means ultimate power for its possessor. But to get there, she must first take on a powerful and dangerous secret society. The fate of mankind rests in her hands.

Lara Croft: Tomb Raider is rated PG-13 for action violence and some sensuality.

Swordfish — There exists a world within our world.

A world beneath what we call cyberspace. A world protected by firewalls, passwords and the most advanced security systems.

In this world we hide our deepest secrets, our most incriminating information, and of course, a whole lot of money. This is the world of Swordfish.

Gabriel Shear (John Travolta), a charismatic and dangerous spy wanting to finance his own brand of patriotism, needs to get inside this world. If he can get in, billions in illegal government funds wait for the taking.

Stanley Jobson (Hugh Jackman) enters the picture. One of the two best hackers on the planet, Stanley has been forbidden to get within 50 yards of the nearest electronics store after doing time for wreaking havoc on the FBI's controversial high-tech cyber surveillance operations.

Now Stanley is living out his life in a broken-down trailer, penniless, alone and without the one thing that gives his life meaning — his daughter Holly, whom he lost in a divorce.

Swordfish is rated R for strong violence.

The Animal — Marvin Mange (Rob Schneider, Deuce Bigalow: Male Gigolo) will soon have the strength of a mountain lion, the agility of a chimpanzee and the affections of ... a goat?

His life is going to be a zoo thanks to a weird experiment that invites him to take a walk on the wild side. A police evidence file clerk, Marvin answers a 911 call. There's a robbery in progress, and with no one to assist, a bungling Marvin races to the scene. The bad guys get away, and Marvin ends up in a near-fatal car crash.

His rescuer, the eccentric Dr. Wilder (Michael Caton, The Castle), has cracked the genetic code. In his private barnyard lab, he repairs Marvin's body with a strange fusion of animal organs, including those from a performing sea lion and a talented dog, to name a few.

Life gets more complicated when he meets and falls for Rianna (Colleen Haskell, Survivor), a former tree hugger who now volunteers at a local animal shelter.

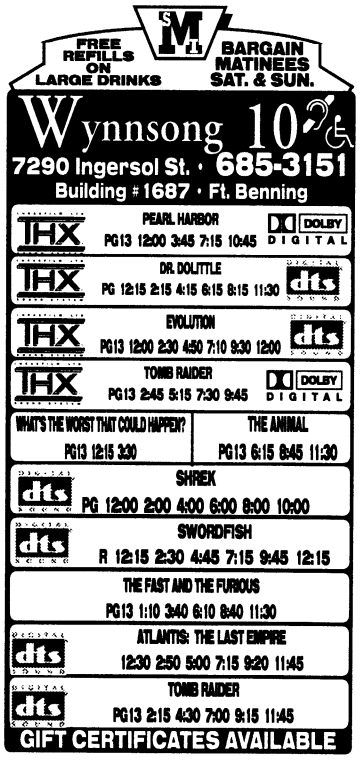
The Animal is rated PG-13 for crude and sexual humor.

Pearl Harbor — On a sleepy Sunday morning in December as children played and families prayed, Japanese war planes screamed across the skies of a Hawaiian paradise.

They launched a surprise attack on the U.S. armed forces at Pearl Harbor, the infamous day that jolted America from peaceful isolationism to total war and altered the course of world history.

The story focuses on the life changing events surrounding Dec. 7, 1941 and the war's devastating impact on two daring young pilots.

Two boyhood friends serving in the U.S. Army Air Corps, and a beautiful dedicated nurse, with whom both of them fall in love.



It is a tale of catastrophic defeat, heroic victory, and love set against a backdrop of wartime action.

Pearl Harbor is rated PG-13 for intense war sequences, images of wounded, brief sensuality and some language.

Horse expo coming in July

Donna Johnson
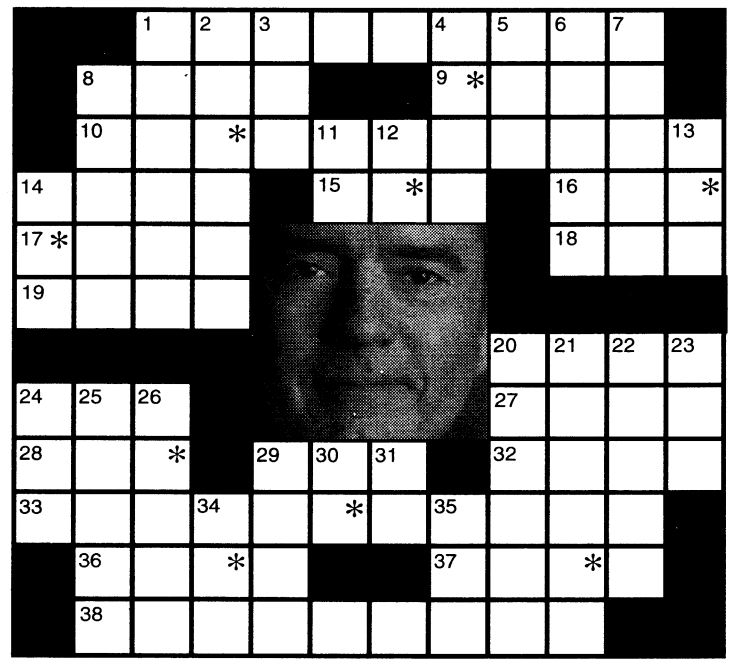
Southern National Expo

The Southern National Expo will be coming to the Georgia National Fairgrounds & Agricenter in Perry, Ga., July 19-22. Known as "Your equestrian and livestock show of the future," the Southern National Expo will feature a livestock auction, multi-breed demonstrations, clinics, horse shows, entertainment, exhibits and seminars as well as shopping galore.

There promises to be an abundance of activities for the young and old alike. Southern National Expo will present Free Rein "an equestrian and livestock entertainment event for the entire family." Horses and horse breeds from around the nation will be showcased in magnificent costuming, professional choreography, elegant lighting and music partnered with some of the best–known horse people in the nation.

More than 300 commercial exhibitors will be showcased in the three exhibit buildings conveniently connected to the demonstration and horse show arenas by a covered walkway. Commercial exhibits will be open July 20 through July 22. Outdoor exhibit areas and entertainment will also be featured throughout the event.

Demonstrations and seminars will be a feature during the Southern National Expo. You can learn and visit with the most popular equestrian and livestock clinicians each day. The SNE anticipates the most popular demonstrations will be presented by some of the most renowned horse people on the show circuit today. They will demonstrate and help you become a blue ribbon winner at your shows.



Free Rein will be at 7:30 p.m. July 20 and 21 and at 1 p.m. July 22.

Come see the action-packed, upbeat performances of:

- The Riata Ranch Cowboy Girls, making their debut performance in Georgia. They will thrill you with their trick riding and masterful horsemanship.
- Chris Cox with his riveting rendition of The Man from Snowy River.
- Pop Wagner and his soft blend of poetry, lasso twirling and cowboy musical talents.
- Lynn Palm performing with the Gypsy King in their own performance of Love, Luck & Lynn.
- Linda Little Wolf, Native American Indian performing with horse partner, Wakawacipi, Spirit Dancer.
- The speed and agility of barrel racing.
- The ever-popular large horse hitch and more.

Come be a part of the inaugural Southern National Expo, at the show facility in Perry, Ga., July 19-22. For more information, call Donna Johnson, show director, at (888) 287-0827 or visit the Web site at www.sne2001.com.

Course teaches confidence

New program teaches officers to lead

Spc. Chris Bray
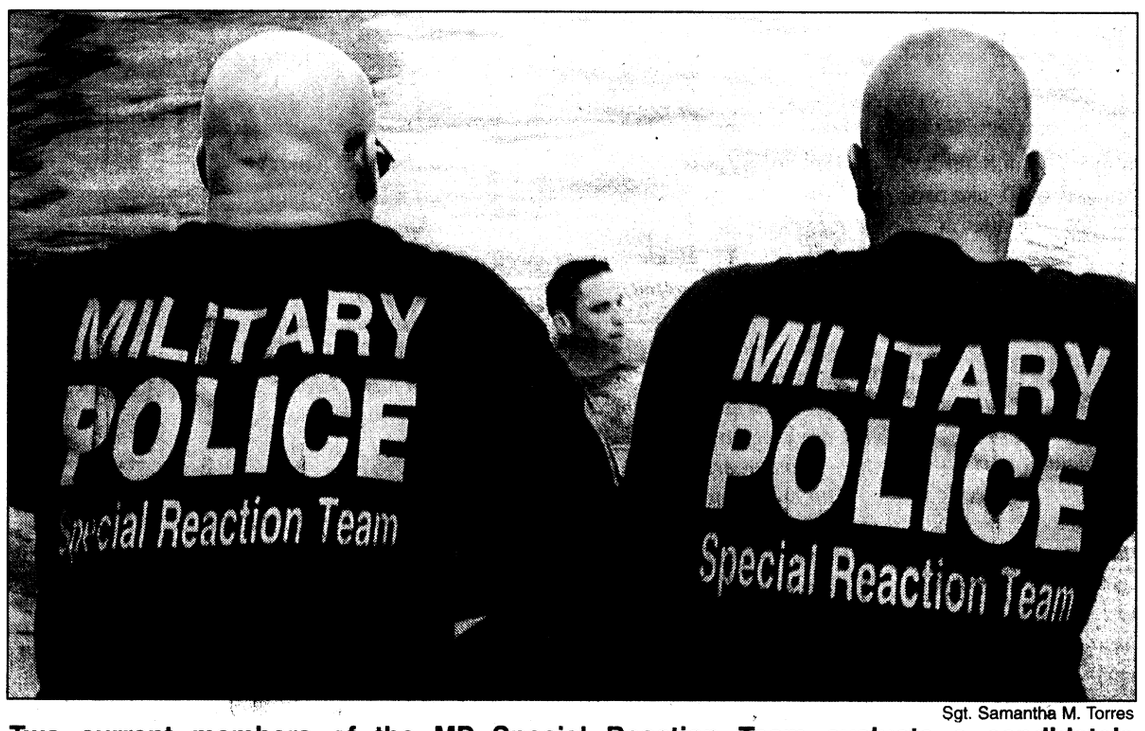
29th Infantry Regiment

Lt. Col. John Carothers was learning to live as a soldier long before he ever became one. Growing up on a farm in North Carolina, Carothers said, he frequently found himself out hunting in the dark and bitter cold, "chasing dogs down through the swamp at 2 a.m. with a shotgun in my hand, when I was a kid."

Later, training in the jungles of Panama or in the swamps of Florida during Ranger School, the career infantry officer realized that he was accustomed to being wet and tired. He wasn't bothered by the darkness. And, most of all, he knew how to ignore the conditions and keep going. "I've been here," he remembers thinking.

For a growing number of Army officers, that kind of childhood experience is little more than a scene from a movie they may have watched. A recent report from a Washington think tank put the suburban population of the United States at 140.6 million, and growing — almost exactly half of the people in the country.



The increasingly common experience of a suburban childhood means that many soldiers are arriving at the early stages of a military career without having ever spent a night in the woods or handled a weapon; stepping out of that zone of carefully managed comfort into the daily realities of service in a ground combat organization can be not only disorienting but a shock to a soldier's confidence and determination. Add the responsibilities of leadership to the transition, and you have a complete picture of the challenge facing many young officers in the contemporary Army.

Officials who oversee Army training and doctrine are responding to that challenge with the Basic Officer Leaders' Course, a seven-week pilot program meant to provide a grounding in fundamental soldiering skills while developing composure under stress for officers from all branches. Carothers, as commander of the 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, oversees the course; he has no problem training soldiers who didn't learn to be cold, wet, and tired while they were growing up.

"I can give 'em that," he said.

But he also gives them quite a bit more. Students in the course qualify with the M-16 rifle, train at

During the dark hours of the morning, seven anxious soldiers focus on the next two days of the Special Reaction Teams trials.

Standing tall the men and women have chosen to accept the challenge to prove they are worthy to be part of the Army's equivalent of a civilian Special Weapons and Tactics team.

"We have slots opening up and we are looking for qualified team players who can respond to anything," said Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins, SRT team leader.

After a briefing, the candidates prepare to take the Army Physical Fitness Test. But just a passing score of 250 is not enough for this standard entry team's requirement. These candidates must put much more into every event or risk not making it to the next level.

Only five of the seven candidates reported to the Bolton Confidence Course where they attempted to conquer their fear and exhaustion on 10 obstacles.

"I am trying out to see if I can do it. Looking at the big picture, what this team does is real, they save lives," said Pfc. Brittany Winkler. "I want to be part of this team."

Once through the course, the five regroup and take on the course again. Now knowing one another's strengths and weakness, they negotiate the course faster.

"We are not only evaluating their physical endurance, we are looking for people who can follow as well as

Fourth of July celebrations without fireworks would be as unrecognizable as Oreo cookies without the cream filling.

The pyrotechnic program is a tradition Fort Benning continues each year, ensuring soldiers and their families an event worthy of the lofty holiday. This year's sponsors, AT&T, Geico, Troy State University and Econo Lodge, are providing more than $9,000 for the explosive display.

In addition to food and games, music by the Infantry Band, a flag pageantry and two free concerts by the band Cornbread, spectators will be treated to the blaze above the sky. The fireworks extravaganza will take place over York Field, located in front of Infantry Hall, Saturday at nightfall.

Soldier saves teens from burning truck

Ranger displays selfless service with rescue

Bridgett Siter
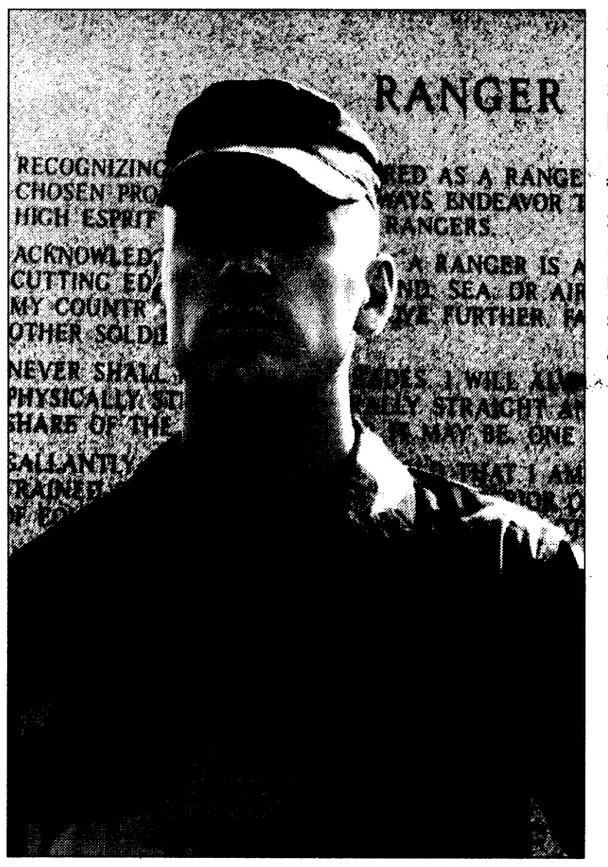
Special to the Bayonet©

A Fort Benning soldier is being heralded a hero by the families of two young men he saved from a burning truck.

Sgt. Andrew Stults, a squad leader with the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, was one of the first to arrive on the scene of a head-on collision June 8, while on leave in Joelton, Tenn., 20 miles northwest of Nashville.

Stults was returning from the grocery store with his girlfriend, when he came upon the accident.



Dean Finch and Ricky Jackson, both 17-year-old, high-school juniors, were on their way to meet friends at the bowling alley in Finch's customized 1979 pick-up truck. According to the Nashville Metropolitan Police Department report, a car crossed the center lane at "a high rate of speed," hit the truck head-on and exploded on impact, killing the car's driver instantly.

"The car was engulfed in flames. You couldn't even tell what it was," Stults said. "I knew the driver was dead, so I ran for the truck. The hood was in flames and the cab was completely crushed. I could hear someone screaming 'I'm on fire. Get me out, don't let me burn.'"

Stults and another man, Jamie Harper, a Nashville resident, tried to pry open the doors but couldn't. They climbed into the truck's bed, pulled the victims through the rear window and carried them away from the burning vehicle.

"Their clothes were burned completely off and their shoes had melted to the floor board," said Stults, who will be promoted to staff sergeant Sunday. "They were covered in blood and burns, so we couldn't tell how bad they were. I just kept telling them to hang in there."

commentary

"A hero is just a scared man that doesn't walk away."

That's my favorite lyric from Hero, written by Keni Thomas, a former ranger and the lead singer for Cornbread, a local band you can hear at Saturday's Independence Day celebration.

Thomas wrote the song as a tribute to a young soldier who died in Somalia.

The first time I heard it, that line spoke volumes to me, because in my line of work I meet lots of real heroes — regular Joes who just didn't give up the fight.

Like Sgt. Andrew Stults. You can read about his heroism on A-1 of this week's Bayonet. While interviewing Stults, I was struck by his matter-of-fact disregard for the heroic nature of his own actions.

He admitted being afraid that he wouldn't be able to rescue two young men trapped in a burning truck. But he forged ahead as those around him ran from the flames or recoiled from the sight of charred, bloody flesh.

He was scared but he didn't walk away, and two young men are alive today because of his actions.

That makes Stults a real hero, one of many I've met here at Fort Benning. They're not the kind of heroes the multi-billion dollar marketing industry wants you to buy stock in — the athletes and movie stars and musicians. These are real heroes just because they didn't give up the fight.

Take for instance Maj. Gordon Roberts, Fort Benning's own active-duty Medal of Honor recipient, who single-handedly destroyed four enemy bunkers in Vietnam, and under intense fire, came to the rescue of an entire company of soldiers. He's not comfortable with the term "hero" when it's applied to him.

Or Maj. Sam Mubangu — who did run. He ran for his life from corrupt government officials who sought to kill him and fellow patriots fighting Africa's corrupt leadership in 1979. Facing seemingly insurmountable odds, Mubangu escaped, penniless, and sought refuge in the United States, where he taught himself to speak English and struggled through college before joining the Army to pay a debt of gratitude to this land he calls "heaven on earth."

Or Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Leonard, a Korean vet who volunteered for duty in Vietnam because he feared for the lives of the younger, inexperienced soldiers. Leonard's platoon came under severe attack and his left hand was shattered by a sniper's bullet, but he refused medical attention and continued fighting.

When his platoon's machine gun malfunctioned and the gunner was wounded, exposing the entire platoon to gunfire, he charged the enemy and destroyed the gun crew, despite being hit several times by gun fire. Leonard propped himself against a tree and continued to engage the enemy until he succumbed to his wounds. Leonard died fighting.

And there's Sgt. Samuel Vega, a soldier from the 14th Field Hospital, who risked his own life to save another soldier from a burning car in 1999. The car exploded just seconds after he carried the injured soldier to safety.

"I just did what I would want someone else to do if I were in that situation," Vega said.

That's the attitude I've encountered time and time again when I meet real heroes, and here I've only mentioned a few. They're selfless, self-sacrificing and self-effacing, unlike the self-important imitation heroes we meet through venues like Survivor or MTV or the NBA.

Independence Day is a great time to reflect not only on our nation's fight for freedom, but the heroes who've fought and died or fought willing to die for our country, it's citizens, or the right to live and serve in the Army. We've a wealth of those kind of heroes right here on Fort Benning.

Luau lines could prevent patronage

My family and I attended the post luau May 18 and we brought along out of town guests with the understanding that it was a free event.

We were very disappointed.

There was a charge for everything, except of course the music.

First of all, we had to stand in line to purchase tickets, and then stand in line again at the various rides and concessions to spend these tickets. Ludicrous.

Rides for the kids — and we had four with us — cost one or two tickets each — that's $1 or $2 for each ride. Multiply that by four, then multiply that by the number of rides a small child wants to experience in three hours.

The food was delicious, but the small portions were overpriced.

The music was great, but definitely geared toward teens and adults.

So all in all, this "free family event" was anything but.

So please tell us now, should we hire a sitter for the 4th of July celebration or take out a small bank loan?

Will we be standing in line to purchase tickets so we can stand in another line (and another and another and another) to cash our tickets in for food and rides?

My family will not be attending next year's luau, and the way things are run Saturday will determine if we'll take part in any more post activities at all.

— Name withheld upon request

DCA response:

The Fort Benning Directorate of Community Activities makes every effort to provide quality programs and events that all soldiers and their family members can enjoy.

The third Annual Asian-Pacific Luau held at Uchee Creek Recreation Area and Marina was no exception.

All advertising regarding the event stated that admission, party barge rides, face painting for children, two bands and the Polynesian show were free of charge.

Unlike many off-post events, parking was free as well. In addition, all advertising messages included a menu and price for the luau meal. Tickets were $3 in advance and $4 the day of the event. Compared to numerous local events and attractions this was about half the retail price.

The cost to put on such an event is substantial and all expenses cannot always be covered. Free attraction expenses were covered through aggressive commercial sponsorship solicitation or with Morale, Welfare, and Recreation monies. It is unlawful to give away free alcoholic beverages on the installation and food charges simply paid for labor and cost of goods.

In addition, the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program offered patrons three items for $2. These items included hamburgers, hot dogs, chips and candy, which essentially meant that a patron could purchase three hamburgers for $2.

With regards to the children's rides, the inflatables used at this event were contracted through a third party concessionaire and paid for. Sponsorship monies were stretched to cover as much as possible, but these costs had to be defrayed through a small charge. All rides were $1 with the exception of the larger teen and adult ride, the Orbitron.

The Fort Benning MWR is the custodian of soldier and family member dollars on the installation. We sell tickets instead of allowing vendors to accept cash in order to meet internal control and accountability procedures. We do understand that standing in two lines (one to purchase the ticket and another to redeem it) presents an inconvenience and we are constantly seeking ways to provide faster service at these large events.

There are currently more than 15 radio stations in the Columbus area. Every attempt is made to provide music that offers broad-based appeal to our patrons. Music selections by the first band included popular Top 40 selections from the past (unlikely that many teens would recognize the majority of the selections) as well as the present. Cornbread is a top-shelf local band headed by a former ranger, features many songs targeted to the military, and has a strong following of 20- to 40-year olds.

The Fourth of July Celebration, scheduled for June 30 at 3 p.m. will feature a free fireworks extravaganza, free local band performances and free admission. Food, beverages, and youth attractions will have fees associated.

We hope that everyone from the Fort Benning community will come out and enjoy what is sure to be an enjoyable celebration of our Independence Day.

The Fort Benning MWR feels that one of its primary missions is to provide quality, affordable activities and events for its community of soldiers and their families.

We will continue to make every attempt to offset costs through commercial sponsorship and we hope that this information will create a better understanding of how these events work. Our desire is for Fort Benning soldiers and their families to continue to participate, support and most importantly enjoy these events.

Officer candidates practice 'new' PT

PT program incorporates new drills

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Spc. Mark Watson

Officer Candidates Carmen Avalo (left) and Robert Westman Jr. exercise with the rest of A Company. The candidates were using the new PT regimen Tuesday morning.

"PT isn't what it used to be."

That's what soldiers in the U.S. Army Officer Candidate School are saying.

They are using the new physical training program that includes exercises similar to those used in the pre-World War II days of the Army. The new PT program incorporates medicine balls, speed, dumbbell and climbing drills, which have increased candidates' PT scores.

"Our company average on their very first Army Physical Fitness Test was 263," said Capt. Cecil Henry, A Company, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, executive officer. "We just had our midcycle PT test and the score raised an average of 10.5 points. On the final PT test we expect to see an average of 280."

More than increasing PT scores, OCS cadre are finding that the new program is reducing injuries.

"Injuries have been reduced dramatically," Henry said.

There are not as many cases of shin splints, stress fractures and pinched nerves as in the past, he said.

"It doesn't look like we are doing a lot, but it sure works," Henry said. "I used to have knee problems. After doing the movement drills before a run, I don't feel the pain as much."

Although candidates are still up in the air about the new program, they are seeing their run time improve drastically.

"I cut nearly a minute off my run time," said Officer Candidate Josef Jacobsen.

OC William Mote said he also shaved a full minute off his run time, but his push-ups and sit-ups decreased.

"I didn't max my push-ups this time," Mote, who has been an enlisted soldier for the past 11 years, said. "I love the climbing drills and working with the weights. They are working well for upper body strength, but the exercises aren't the same as on the PT test.

"The change is difficult to go with," he said. "I think it would be good if the PT test would coincide with the exercises we are doing."

Although the candidates said they haven't gained many points or even lost them, cadre members said overall the new exercises are paying off.

"This is something new," said Staff Sgt. Anthony Smart. "We just introduced the program last cycle, but we've seen improvement."

Army to adopt new weapon for infantry soldiers

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

More than 30 years ago, the M-16 replaced the rugged and reliable M-14.

Although soldiers didn't like it at first, it has since become a symbol of the U.S. military.

Since the "Black Rifle" was first introduced, there have been many changes in weapons. Now, the Army is adopting one more.

That change is the Objective Individual Combat Weapon, a somewhat Space Age looking rifle that incorporates a standard 5.56 mm NATO round as well as a high-explosive round, much like the M-16 with the M-203 grenade launcher attached.

However, unlike the aging system, which the OICW replaces, the new rifle uses its high-explosive 20 mm round as its primary ammunition, said Col. Jim Stone, director of Combat Developments.

This marks the first time that a high explosive round has taken priority over a standard bullet.

The reason for the change is the air-bursting capabilities of the OICW.

The OICW uses its fire control system to automatically program each round's fusing system. When the round is fired, the fusing system counts the number of revolutions and then detonates when the proper number is reached.

Unlike the M-203 round, the OICW airbursts, raining shrapnel onto its target giving the enemy "no place to hide."

"In combat, soldiers don't generally shoot as well as we'd like," said Stone.

Stone said to overcome the inaccuracy, historically soldiers massed together to put as much firepower on one target as possible. The OICW can help change that, he said.

"A bursting munition will compensate for a soldier's inability to place well-aimed fire on a target," Stone said.

The compensation becomes apparent with the OICW.

"On the M-16 qualification range the probability of a target hit at 300 meters is about 50/50," said Maj. Stuart Meyer, Small Arms Division chief for the

A soldier takes aim with a prototype version of the Objective Individual Combat Weapon.

Directorate of Combat Developments. "In combat the probability of a hit is .08 percent at 300 meters. With the OICW it's like you are putting a precision grenade downrange — you can hit with 50 percent accuracy up to 500 meters."

The OICW will have a maximum effective range close to 1,000 meters making it deadly far beyond the capabilities of the M-203.

Stone said the manufacture is working on final modifications of the weapon and the first soldiers should field the OICW in 2008-2009.

He said special operations units will likely be among the first to receive it with the grenadiers probably being first equipped.

"I think it is a great concept," Meyer said. "Airburst is a great concept. It removes error in aiming. This will give the infantry a leap ahead capability in lethality," Meyer said.

"We try to make an unfair fight — unfair in our favor so we will win and go home. The OICW will make the battle an unfair fight to our advantage."

State lowers legal limit for drunken driving

Georgia law changes blood alcohol limits

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Beginning Sunday, a Georgia House Bill lowers the legal blood alcohol content from .10 grams to .08 grams for a DUI conviction, according to a press release from the Governor's Office of Highway Safety.

This change will also affect the Fort Benning community because post officials can charge under the Georgia state code. However, this change does not affect drivers under the age of 21, the limit is still .02.

Capt. Paula Harrison, trial counsel, with the office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said a judge can impose both a monetary fine and possible jail time if a person in convicted under the law.

The lowering of the legal limit, however, does not change the repercussions.

- Drivers can lose the license for a year.
- Drivers can pay fines.
- Points can be assessed toward a point suspension of driver's license.
- Drivers can lose their installations driving privileges.

For soldiers penalties may also include:

- A letter of reprimand, typically from the office of the commanding general.
- A reduction in rank.

A second DUI conviction within five years will result in a license suspension of three years. Offenders will have to wait 18 months to apply for reinstatement. Under the old law, offenders could apply after 10 months.

The difference whether a driver is apprehended on or off post is, a off post motorist will be arrested by local police, they must post a bond to get out of jail, pay to have their vehicle released from the impound lot. Offenders then face state charges and appear before a circuit judge.

Drivers apprehended on post will be released to their unit if the driver is military or if they are civilians they will be released. Civilians will face a federal magistrate in federal court.

"We work closely with the tricommunity law officials," said Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins, traffic investigator. He reminds drivers that MP cars are equipped with video cameras and once the blue lights are flashing, the camera is recording.

House Bill 385 also prohibits open containers of alcohol in the passenger areas of vehicles, when the vehicle is on the roadway or shoulder of the public highway.

The driver will not be charged with the offense if the passenger is in possession of the open container or is the one who consumed the alcohol. But the driver is the only person in the vehicle he will be charged with possession.

"For this fiscal year, 202 drivers have been apprehended for drunk driving on Fort Benning," said Jenkins and this number is down from last year at this time.

In addition to the DUI law changes is a new criminal offense "aggressive driving." That means driving with the intent to harass, intimidate, annoy or obstruct other drivers through reckless driving maneuvers. This offense will cost violators penalties that include points assessed against a motor's license.

The changes do away with the "unsafe to drive," offense drivers were charged with when caught driving with .08 blood alcohol content or lower, Jenkins said.

House Bill 248 makes it mandatory to use child safety seats for children ages 4 and younger.

Vehicle registration mandatory for post access

Post decals will help keep traffic flow orderly

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Registration of vehicles has become even more important to post drivers since the recent announcement that Fort Benning is moving from an open post system to controlled access.

Vehicle registration has always been mandatory on post and the chief of the Law Enforcement Division, Directorate of Public Safety.

The requirement is for people to register cars within 10 days of arriving on post; however, some who live and work here don't, Lt. Col. Terry Kelley said. Because the chief of staff of the Army has now mandated stricter access to all military installations this is an area we must now strictly enforce.

Now, drivers won't be able to enter the military reservation unless they have the proper registration documents from the Traffic Regulation Enforcement Office.

"We're doing this for security purposes. It enables us to determine who is authorized on post and who is not," said Sgt. Scott Howard, NCOIC of the Traffic Regulation Enforcement Office.

> "If they do not have post registration, the checkpoints will stop them."
> Sgt. Scott Howard
> Traffic Regulation Enforcement Office NCOIC

"If they do not have post registration, the checkpoints will stop them," he said. If, however, they do have a valid reason, such as for training purposes from Army Reserve or National Guard, or are outside contractors with a valid memorandum stating the purpose of contract visit, they will be issued a temporary registration. They will need a valid driver's license, current registration for that vehicle, and current proof of insurance for that vehicle.

Registration is mandatory for everyone who frequents the post on a regular basis, Howard said.

All active-duty personnel, retirees living in the Fort Benning area, all current DoD and DA civilians and any currently authorized contractors doing maintenance on post with a valid and current contract with Fort Benning must be registered. The registration process is quick and simple.

"You need to bring a current and valid driver's license, current and valid registration and proof of insurance for the vehicle that you are driving, and an I.D. Card if applicable," Howard said.

"Registration, by itself, doesn't take any longer than five minutes per person, per vehicle," he said. Our job is thorough, fast and easy if you have the right documents we need."

The vehicle registration office is located in Building 2637 in Soldiers' Plaza. For more information, call 545-3646.

Jackson was treated for multiple broken bones, burns and abrasions and released three days after the accident.

Finch suffered head injuries, multiple burns, a crushed leg and ruptured spleen. He has since had a kidney removed and is undergoing rehabilitation at Vanderbilt University Hospital.

"They would've died in there if it weren't for those men," said Finch's stepmother, Anita Finch.

"I don't see how they got them out. The cab was crushed like an accordion, it was on fire, and the engine was sitting on the seat," Finch said.

Finch said her family will be forever greatful to Stults.

"He's a real hero. I hope he gets some kind of commendation for this. He deserves it," she said.

Stults has been nominated for the Soldier's Medal, but he said the peace of mind that comes with "doing what had to be done" is it's own reward.

"You never know how you'll react until you're faced with this kind of situation," he said. "The whole time I was running for the truck I was afraid of what I'd find or how I'd handle it. But I couldn't just stand there and let them burn. I'm glad I could help."

Fireworks: Light up sky for Independence celebration

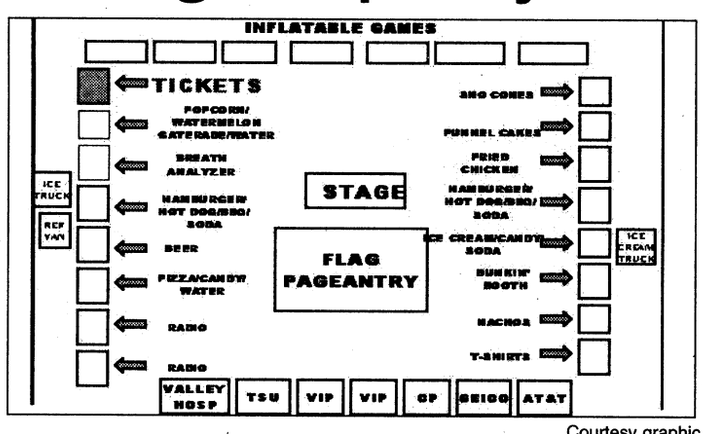
expected to attend the Independence Day event, safety is a top priority.

Whether it's fireworks, vehicular safety, protecting your pets, Fort Benning's Military Police Activity wants to ensure everyone has a great time.

Parking areas can be found near Infantry Hall and Building 6.



Parking will also be available at Soldiers Plaza and other areas within walking distance of York Field.

"And by all means, if your home is within walking distance of the field, walk to the show," said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, Military Police Activity.

Patrons are also reminded to leave their pets at home.

Animals have sensitive ears and the noise from the explosive display can harm their hearing. People found with pets that evening will be asked to take their animals home, said Cliff Davis, conference and ceremony coordinator.

Spectators are reminded that personal fireworks are illegal in the state of Georgia, as well as on military installations worldwide.

Courtesy graphic

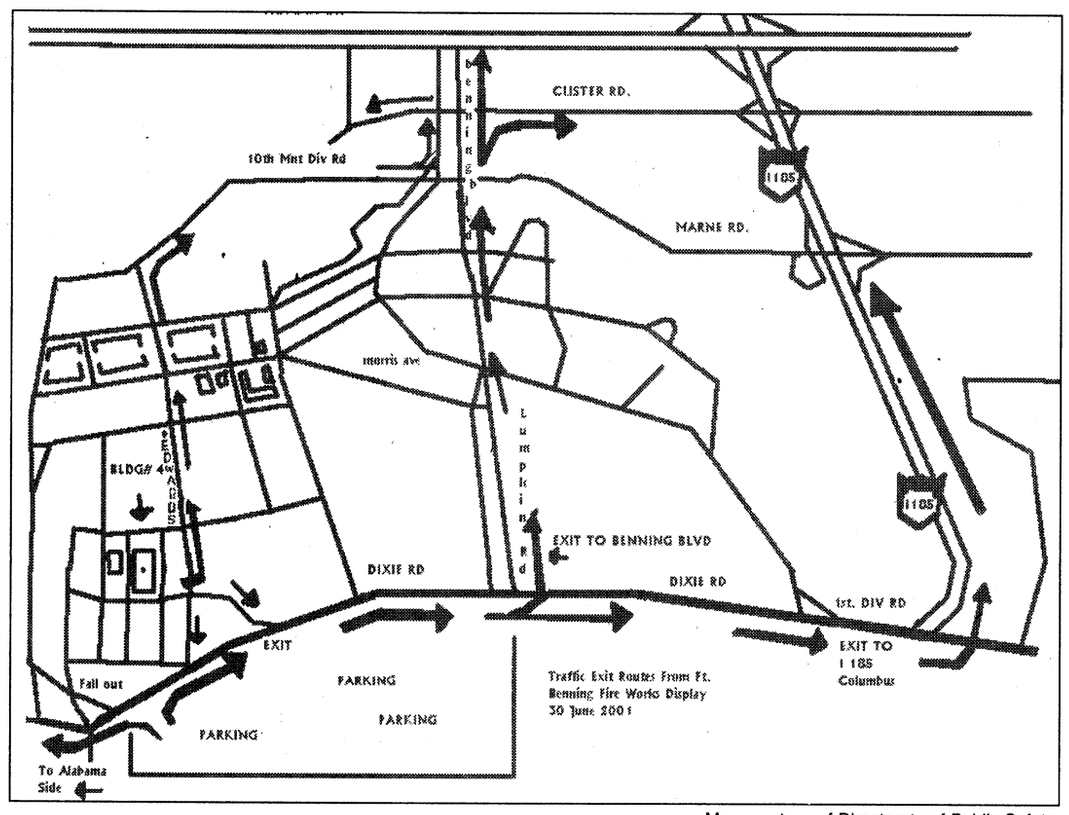
While fireworks aren't allowed on post or within the state, nearby Alabama does sell and allow the explosives.

For those living or traveling into the state for celebrations, remember the following safety precautions, said Regis Beighley, Infantry Branch Safety manager:



- Never allow children to play with or ignite fireworks,
- Never try to re-light fireworks that have not fully functioned,
- Light fireworks on a smooth, flat surface away from the house, dry leaves and flammable materials,
- Be sure other people are out of range before lighting,
- Keep a bucket of water nearby in case of a malfunction or fire
- Have first aid supplies on-hand in case of accident.

Even with the recent wet weather, three or four dry days can increase the potential for brush fires, Beighley said.

"The safest way to enjoy fireworks is to let the professionals light them," he said.

Another safety concern is traffic.

MPs will be on hand to direct traffic during and after the explosive event.

Map courtesy of Directorate of Public Safety

Map shows the direction military police will direct traffic after the fireworks end.

"Getting out of the area is always the issue, because everyone is leaving at the same time," said Snapp.

"Let common sense and the directing MPs be your guide."

There will be a few road closures and traffic control points in place for the event.

From 9 to 11 p.m., or until traffic is less congested, the Upatoi Bridge will only have one inbound lane and three outbound lanes.

In case of foul weather, the fireworks extravaganza will take place Sunday at nightfall.

Course: Teaches readiness, fieldcraft to new officers

individual tactical movement, conduct combative physical training and water survival classes, complete several road marches —and, above all, get used to getting work done in the field.

"That's the directive from TRADOC," said Capt. Joseph Reap, operations officer for the 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

"They want us to be spending as much field time as possible. I mean, you don't learn fieldcraft in garrison," he said.

Some critics outside the Army have slammed the BOLC pilot as infantry training for non-combat officers — what one reporter memorably described as "desk-molesters."

But senior leaders at the Infantry School say this is a criticism that ignores military history and tactics.

No enemy, they point out, ever takes care to attack only at the point where you've placed your infantry.

In a war, everyone in uniform may find themselves under fire at some point.

"You never want to throw yourself against a hard surface," Carothers said.

"It goes back to Sun Tzu — you find a soft point, and you penetrate there. Everybody needs to be able to fight, and to have a warrior ethos," Carothers said.

While the course is still in its early stages, officials say it seems to be working at developing that ethos.

Marnie Salter, a psychologist with the Army Research Institute who has monitored the progress of BOLC students, said that initial follow-up interviews now underway with those who've completed the course are producing some positive comments.

While many officers expressed unhappiness, in assessments completed during training, at being sent through the course, those who Salter has spoken with since express appreciation for the experience.

They endured emotional, physical, and mental challenges, Salter said — "all of it" — and came out stronger.

"They knew they were challenged, and that they had accepted and met that challenge," Salter said.

"They're officers, and they want to do what it takes to be officers."

And what it takes to be officers is the ability to lead under any circumstances. Carothers recalls the opening moments of the movie Saving Private Ryan, in which an Army captain goes over the side of a landing craft during the D-Day assault on the beaches of Normandy; he sinks under the water, struggles with his gear, and finally makes it to the beach. It's a scene that came to mind during water survival training with the most recent BOLC class, he says, as he watched new officers jump off the high dive in combat gear.

"Now they know," Salter said. "All they have to do is swim to the surface, and start leading. It's not just the skills, it's the ethos — let's drive on and do it."

Barber keeps soldiers trimmed up

Attitude keeps octogenarian working

Spc. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

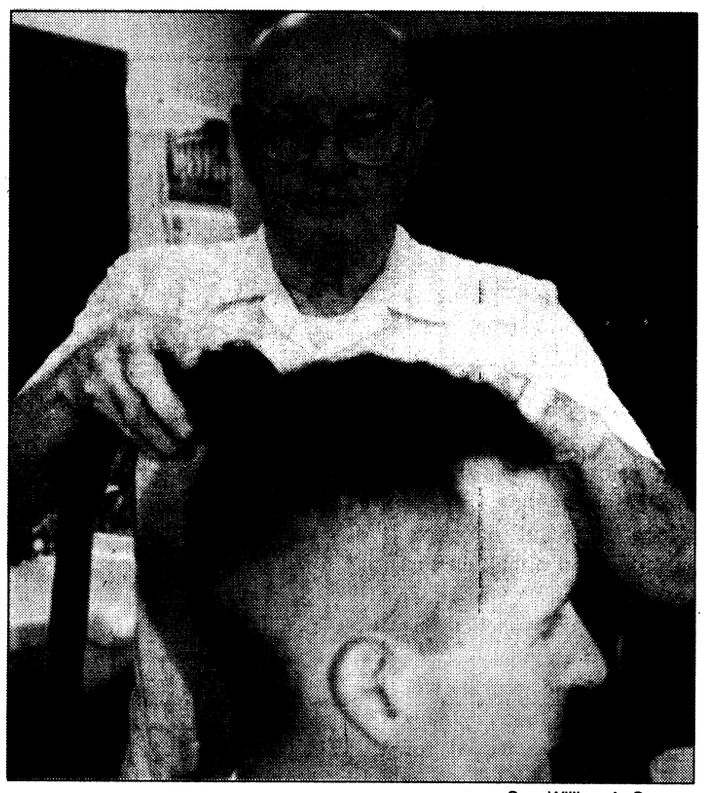
A doctor once asked Infantry Hall barber Hubert Webb for advice about his dandruff. The building's 30-year veteran considered charging the officer for an office visit. He didn't. When Webb finished cutting the man's hair, he asked him a medical question. The doctor said he had to come in for an office visit.

"I've met all kinds of people from all walks of life," Webb said.

The World War II draftee served two years in the Army in the chemical corps. The highlight of his tour in Europe was when the Army turned him into an infantryman and had him take part in a mop-up operation of German soldiers after the Battle of the Bulge.

The once daunting German juggernaut surprised him.

"It was odd to see so many Germans give up," the 81-year-old said. "You would be sitting around, and they would come up and tap you on the shoulder and put their hands up. They came in hordes."



After the war, Webb enrolled at a barber college under the G.I. Bill. Upon completion, he worked at various civilian barbershops until 1951 at which time he obtained a position at Fort Campbell, Ky. While there, he started his string of cutting the hair of the Army's top brass.

"General (William) Westmoreland was the most famous one I worked on," Webb said. "He was one of those no nonsense kind of persons."

It was in Kentucky that Webb married his wife, Rebecca, in 1953. He has one stepson, two daughters and eight grandchildren. The family moved to Columbus in 1964, and he started working on post.

"When I first came here, the post was booming," the Kansas City, Mo., native said. "It was the height of the Cold War and Vietnam was heating up. After a while, they realized these boys at Infantry Hall had to go a long way to get a hair cut, so they turned what used to be a storage area into what is now my shop. I've been here ever since."

Most soldiers who have their hair cut by Webb are not aware he fought in the greatest battle in U.S. history and barbered here for so long, said Staff Sgt. Michael Treglazoff, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Spc. William A. Graves

Hubert Webb, 81-year-old barber, cuts Maj. Frank March's hair in the Infantry Hall barbershop.

"Most think he's just an old man who can cut hair really well," Treglazoff said.

He said Webb is a patriot.

"It seems to me most soldiers in the Army today just want to take and leave," Treglazoff said. "Very few have any plans to continue to serve beyond their initial obligation to this country. He, on the other hand, has served his country and still continues to serve, but in a different capacity."

Webb's service allows all soldiers, both young and old, to look and feel like a professional soldier, he said.

"If you take the time to get to know the person behind the clippers, not only will you walk away with a good haircut, but you'll also walk away with a sense of knowing (more information)," Treglazoff said.

Webb said soldiers who want to chat should know he is well read and informed on many subjects thanks to his hobby of dowsing, a divining craft he uses to answer questions or solve problems.

For the past 20 years, answers to his questions have been found in the direction his pendulum swings, he said. If it swings clockwise, the answer is yes. If it swings counterclockwise, the answer is no. A neutral or side-to-side motion means there is no answer.

"I'm curious about anything and everything," Webb said. "Some use the pendulum to find water or oil to make money. I use it to find the truth about a variety of information in articles and books for fun."

It seems to work, too, he said. While others use trial and error in the laboratory, he bats .850 with general knowledge questions and does even better with metaphysical questions.

"When it comes to frivolous questions, such as what lottery numbers will be or whom you're going to marry, I don't get anywhere," Webb said. "If people want to know that, they need to go to a fortune teller."

His hobby is one reason he believes he has had a long and productive life.

Another key to his longevity has been his desire to keep working, he said.

"Being a barber has not been too exciting, but it's a living," Webb said. "I must like it a little bit. Fifty-six years is a long time to be doing the same thing. I get to meet a lot of people. Some of them come back and say hi every year when we have things like the Infantry Conference."

Webb said he enjoyed cutting soldiers' hair as they progress through the different stages of their careers.

Still, Webb said he has enjoyed his front row seat to society and Army transformation.

From the demise of racial segregation to the influx of more women into service, and from haircut styles and names to an all-volunteer fighting force, he has witnessed it all.

He is sure he will see more change.

"I'm going to be like George Burns," Webb said. "I'm going to be one-hundred.

"My brother is still a barber, and he's ninety. We're in good health because we're doing something, so I'm not going anywhere."

Given his propensity to know the truth, he probably has an 85 percent chance of being correct.

Trials: Test MPs

lead," said Capt. Andrew Sullivan, 209th Military Police Detachment commander and SRT commander,

"Whenever they move, they should move in a single file, as a team, not as a group of individuals, like now," Jenkins said after watching candidates maneuver through the course.

It is still early morning when candidates begin their next challenge in the swimming pool.

Within 35 minutes candidates had to swim 250 meters freestyle, swim under water for 25 meters, then tread water for 15 minutes.

Struggling to stay afloat, each had to retrieve a 15-pound weight belt from the bottom of the pool and hand it to Jenkins, without touching the wall.

With five candidates remaining, it is back to the Bolton Confidence Course.

The dampness of their hair quickly turns to sweat. But this time they moved as a team. Before they can continue, bad weather forces Jenkins to suspend the trials.

Day two, 5:30 a.m., reporting for fitness training: five candidates. Physically numb, they move out to Buchanan Range for MOUT drills. It is here that they repeatedly rehearse entering a building. Teamwork and communication are essential here.

"If they do not follow instructions or training, they will get themselves killed," Jenkins said.

The stress level remains high as SRT members conduct one-on-one interviews with each candidate.

After the interviews, candidates don padded suits and defend themselves against SRT members during individual unarmed self-defense.

Bruised and exhausted, each still must qualify expert at the 9 mm range.

Finally, the five candidates wait in the SRT conference room for the final round of interviews.

In a military manner, Jenkins forms his team in front of the five candidates.

After a brief pause, he asks only two candidates to join the SRT.

MPs focus on deployment training

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Two military police officers from the 988th MP Company practice properly maneuvering during the military operations in urban terrain exercise that was conducted June 18-22.

Police hone MOUT training with exercise

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

When people think of the military police, the first image to pop up is of soldiers enforcing the law like their civilian police counterparts.

But writing tickets, pulling over speeders and keeping the peace aren't their only responsibilities as soldiers.

Additional duties such as providing escorts, security and even rear defense are also the responsibility of military policemen when they are out of the garrison environment on deployments, like Kosovo or Bosnia.

These duties were the focus of a week of training at the MOUT site June 18-22 for the soldiers of the 988th Military Police Company.

Being trained to standard on such tasks is important for the soldiers because they never know when they will be in a foreign land performing them, said Capt. Darrell Sides, 988th MP Co. commander.

"MPs have five different battlefield missions we have to be able to do while deployed. One of the five is area security and we have been training on four tasks that fall under that," he said.

Some of those missions include convoy escorts, security of designated persons like VIPs, setting up area security and performing searches.

"During deployment, they (MPs) may be asked to go into an area and seal it off, go through and do a search for whatever they are looking for, a cache of weapons or a certain person like a war criminal or something," Sides said.

Another mission the MPs are trained to perform is deliberate attack.

"This is an infantry mission, but MPs have to be able to do this in a a rear area." Sides explained. "One of our biggest missions is 'attempt to delay.' If a large force breaks off and starts to go for a division headquarters, an airfield, anything like that, the MPs have a mission to move over and fire on the enemy, then fall back a click.

"We have to try to slow them down as much as we can until a combat arms force comes in and takes over for us," he added.

Many of the tasks MPs perform on deployment require working with civilians. This is an area where MPs shine, Sides said.

"We are constantly working with civilians in a garrison environment, and we use minimum force necessary in whatever mission," he said. "Combat arms' mission is lethality or to kill, that's what they know. For us it's natural to be able to go in and pinpoint targets among a group of innocent people. In Bosnia and Kosovo, MPs are getting pushed in there a lot, so we have to be trained to do that."

In many training scenarios, the soldiers had a chance to practice such missions before they are sent in to do the real thing. This was accomplished by having to deal with civilians on the battlefield at the MOUT site.

"Figuring out the line of when to use deadly force and when not to — that's the tough part of this," Sides said. "With this training, we have been pushing the soldiers, touching weapons, not taking them, getting in the MPs faces — playing the line to see if civilians get apprehended or shot."

"It's not an easy thing for the soldiers," Sides said. "'If someone is threatening me, I shoot them.' That's what we do in combat, but this isn't the same. They are having to think about their reactions before-hand."

Soldiers from the 988th MP Co. have been getting quite a bit of real-world experience as well as in the training environment. Already this year, 10 soldiers have been sent to Saudi Arabia, one is in Bosnia and last year 30 soldiers were in Honduras. They have also been deployed eight times, as a company, during the past 10 years.

The exercise was a great success and proved valuable for training, said 2nd Lt. Cesar Ocasio, a platoon leader with the 988th MP Co.

"We don't train much in the urban environment," he said. "And it seems that the future of peacekeeping operations will takes us to urban areas and this type of training should take precedence over cold war-based scenarios.

"I really enjoyed the realism of the training," he said. "The simunitions provided an incredible amount of realism to the training."

Spc. Randy Groves said using the simrounds made the training more effective for the MPs.

"Simrounds hurt pretty bad when they hit you, so you do what you need to do," Groves said. "You do the three to five second rushes, you take aim and fire, you apply marksmanship skills — with MILES a buzzer just goes off, so this training is more realistic because MILES doesn't hurt."

Ranger battalion welcomes new commander

Mechanized leader takes over light unit

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The former commander of the 3rd Battalion, 15th Infantry, Fort Stewart, Ga., took command of the 3rd Battalion, 75th Regiment Regiment, during a change of command ceremony Wednesday morning on York Field.

Lt. Col. Stefan J. Banach succeeds Lt. Col. Craig Nixon, who will attend the Air Force War College at Maxwell Air Force Base, Ala.

"I've been privileged to serve as the leader of 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment," Nixon said.

Nixon wished his successor well by saying, "Good luck and God speed."

During the ceremony, Col. Ken Keen, regiment commander, took the opportunity to thank Nixon for his service. "To serve as rangers is an honor, to lead rangers is a privilege," Keen said. "I cannot think of two men more qualified to do so."

"Nixon has been the type of leader these soldiers deserve and expect. It has been a pleasure to serve with you."

Nixon will be joined in Alabama by his wife, Debbie, and their two daughters, Haley and Jordan.

In welcoming Banach to the unit, Keen said, "We are indeed fortunate to have Banach. He is a proven combat leader. Stefan, welcome back. Rangers lead the way."

After serving as the liaison officer with the 75th Ranger Regt., and battalion adjutant for 1st Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., at Hunter Army Airfield, Ga., he was later assigned to the 2nd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt., as a liaison officer.

Banach awards include the Bronze Star with "V" device, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, two oak leaf cluster, and the Army Commendation Medal, four oak leaf clusters.

Banach and his wife, Margaret, have three children, Marilyn, 12, Audrey, 9, and Samuel, 7.

Ceremony shows support for commander

Bayonet staff

The former executive officer to the commanding general of 1st Army took command of the 2nd Battalion, 27th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, during a change of command ceremony Monday morning at Pomeroy Field.

Lt. Col. Chip Lewis succeeds Lt. Col. Mike Burns, who moves on to serve as the BCTB deputy commander.

"Today's ceremony is not about Mike Burns and Chip Lewis," Burns said. "Today's ceremony is about the soldiers who support and serve with us. It has been a pleasure serving with each and everyone of you. I will cherish every moment."

During the ceremony, Col. Thomas A. Cole, brigade commander, took the opportunity to thank Burns for his service.

"Today, Burns relinquishes command, he has fulfilled the promise and commitment he made two years ago," Cole said.

"Because of his leadership, his battalion has led the way in turning civilians into soldiers.

"This brigade and Fort Benning are fortunate for having you remain (among our ranks.)"

Burns remains on Fort Benning to serve as the deputy BCTB commander, with his wife, Kathy, and son, John.

In welcoming Lewis to the unit, Cole said, "I know you're raring and ready to go, so hit the throttle and hold on tight."

"All credit belongs to God, my wife, Daisy, and to all the soldiers I have served with," Lewis said. "God bless everyone here, and god bless America. Raiders never quit."

After serving as the training officer for 8th U.S. Army, Seoul, Korea, he was assigned to the 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Stewart, Ga., where he served as the 2nd Brigade supply and logistics officer.

He also served as the Warfighter Division plans chief at Fort Gillem, Ga.

Lewis and his wife have two children, Christina and Amanda.

NCO scores near perfect for promotion

Sergeant scores 799 for E-6 promotion board

Spc. Chris Bray
29th Infantry Regiment

People who work with Sgt. Doris Haynes, an automated logistical specialist with the 690th Medical Company, pile on the superlatives.

"She's a perfectionist in an imperfect world," said Chief Warrant Officer Anthony Felton. "She's the kind of person who will hit her head against the wall until she gets it right."

Those perfectionist tendencies can be measured in numbers; a score of 347 on the extended Army Physical Fitness Test is a good example.

And yet Haynes repeatedly met with frustration as she worked toward promotion. In her occupational specialty, promotion point cut-offs are unusually high, and the sergeant sat on the promotion list at 784 for some time — short of the 798 she needed to earn promotion in the secondary zone.

So she hit her head on the wall until she achieved perfection: Haynes will be promoted to staff sergeant on July 1, having achieved 799 promotion points. She fell one short on the firing range, missing the 800-point mark when she hit 39 out of 40.

Haynes

Haynes said her achievement reflected the need for soldiers to stay determined and focused.

"My unit supports their soldiers," she said. "But they can only push so much, and then it's on you. You have to push that extra mile."

Making that push requires constant attention to goals, Haynes said; the sergeant made a list of things she wanted to get done every month, "and I made sure I got there."

"You pay for it now," Haynes said. "You work for it, and then you get the reward later."

Felton, who said that Haynes has "unlimited potential," said that Haynes earned her promotion points by keeping her eyes open and looking for ways to improve.

"She's one of the most resourceful NCOs I've had the privilege to work for in 16 years," he said. "You talk about the total soldier concept — Sergeant Haynes is the total soldier."

Haynes has served in the Army for six and a half years, reaching Fort Benning after tours in Germany and at Fort Campbell, Ky. She has been at this post for two years.

Now that she's made staff sergeant, Haynes isn't looking for promotion to sergeant first class; instead, the NCO is applying for officer candidate school. She hopes to serve in the adjutant general corps.

In the meantime, she sees her experience as a valuable opportunity to learn about personal growth.

"I knew the score wasn't going to go down," she said. "So I reached for it. I really believe that if I can do it, anybody can do it."

TRADOC names Army drill sergeant of the year

Post soldier competes for title

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — For the fourth consecutive year, a NCO from Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., won the Army Drill Sergeant of the Year award.

After three days of competition among 21 active and reserve component drill sergeants, Sgt. 1st Class Andrea Thorn was presented the 2001 title June 22 during a ceremony at Fort Monroe's Continental Park. Thorn is the first woman to represent Leonard Wood, and the fourth female to become the Army Drill Sergeant of the Year.

Sgt. 1st Class Wayne McPhillips, 84th Division (Training), headquartered in Milwaukee, Wis., took the reserve component 2001 Army Drill Sergeant of the Year.

During a morning that saw alternating clouds and sun, Lt. Gen. John Van Alstyne, Training and Doctrine Command deputy commanding general for Initial Entry Training, spoke to the 21 drill sergeants and an audience of about 200 people.

Van Alstyne said in the 19 months he's held his position that he's visited every initial entry training installation several times.

"I have seen hundreds ... of drill sergeants, and in every case I have come away impressed with their motivation and their dedication and their competence that they display every day, day in, day out," he said.

He said that when he commanded the U.S. Army Training Center at Fort Jackson, S.C., before coming to TRADOC, the one thing that concerned him there, and still does, is if drill sergeants know how important their jobs are.

"I'm never quite sure that our drill sergeants realize the great contribution they're making to our nation, to our Army and to the individual soldiers that they train," Van Alstyne said. "I think sometimes the problems get so much in your face that you can't see the bigger picture.

"You are in the business of transforming young Americans."

He cited an old adage that soldiering is an affair of the heart.

"Drill sergeants are in the business of bringing heart and spirit to young Americans," he said.

Also attending the ceremony were Sgt. Maj. of the Army Jack Tilley, and two of his predecessors, Sgts. Maj. Robert Hall and Richard Kidd. Tilley said he was a drill sergeant at Fort Polk, La., and Fort Benning.

"The quality of the noncommissioned officers in this ceremony today was really very touching," he said.

"It really touched home that this is the quality of noncommissioned officers we have."

In honor of her achievement, Thorn will serve a year at TRADOC headquarters as advisor to the commander on drill sergeant and basic training matters. The reserve Army Drill Sergeant of the Year will serve in a similar fashion in his training division.

Fort Benning to help locate pollution

Tricommunity participates in air survey

Danielle Foerschler
Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

Fort Benning and Columbus teamed up with two other cities to find out what is causing smog and how to prevent it.

The Environmental Management Division of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics is participating in a statewide air quality study to help determine sources of pollution in the air.

Polly Gustafson, who is the air program manager for the Environmental Management Division, represents Fort Benning on the Columbus Consolidated Government Environmental Task Force.

Fort Benning is a strong supporter of this study because we are part of Muscogee County, Gustafson said.

"We hope the study will show us exactly what we are putting in the air, so we can say what activities need reducing to help the ozone problem," she said.

The task force's purpose is to educate the citizens in Columbus and the surrounding areas on the problem of increasing ozone or smog levels.

The three-year study is based on investigating the air quality of Georgia's second tier cities: Columbus, Augusta and Macon.

The three cities have formed an alliance in order to share their resources for the purpose of studying the air quality. The alliance hopes to give the cities a unique perspective of the air quality in each of the metropolitan areas.

The study in Muscogee County began in July 2000 when Columbus realized they were approaching nonattainment of air quality levels.

According to the Georgia Environmental Protection Division nonattainment occurs when a city cannot achieve the air quality required by law. And according to the new standard set by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, Columbus has reached nonattainment. However, the Georgia Environmental Protection Division has not put the new standards into effect, so Columbus is not officially in nonattainment status. Until the new standards go into effect the city will continue to receive federal and state funding and enjoy economic growth.

If Columbus enters into nonattainment, several factors could result.

Federal funds for roads could be restricted, and stricter emission standards for factories and cars placed in the city, causing a decline in the commercial growth because companies will take their business elsewhere. The excessive smog also presents a long-term health threat to certain groups at risk.

Last year Dr. Michael E. Chang from the Georgia Institute of Technology in Atlanta collected detailed information of air pollution components in Georgia. In Columbus a mobile unit was located at the Columbus Water Works on River Road to collect data that will help in achieving the goals of the first and second year in the study.

The monitors placed in Columbus will be able to tell what part of the particulate matter is coming from burning vegetation on Fort Benning.

The ozone forecast and weather conditions are taken into consideration before prescribed burns take place, James Parker, Land Management Branch,

Local youth places second in essay contest

Reading is Awesome scores second

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
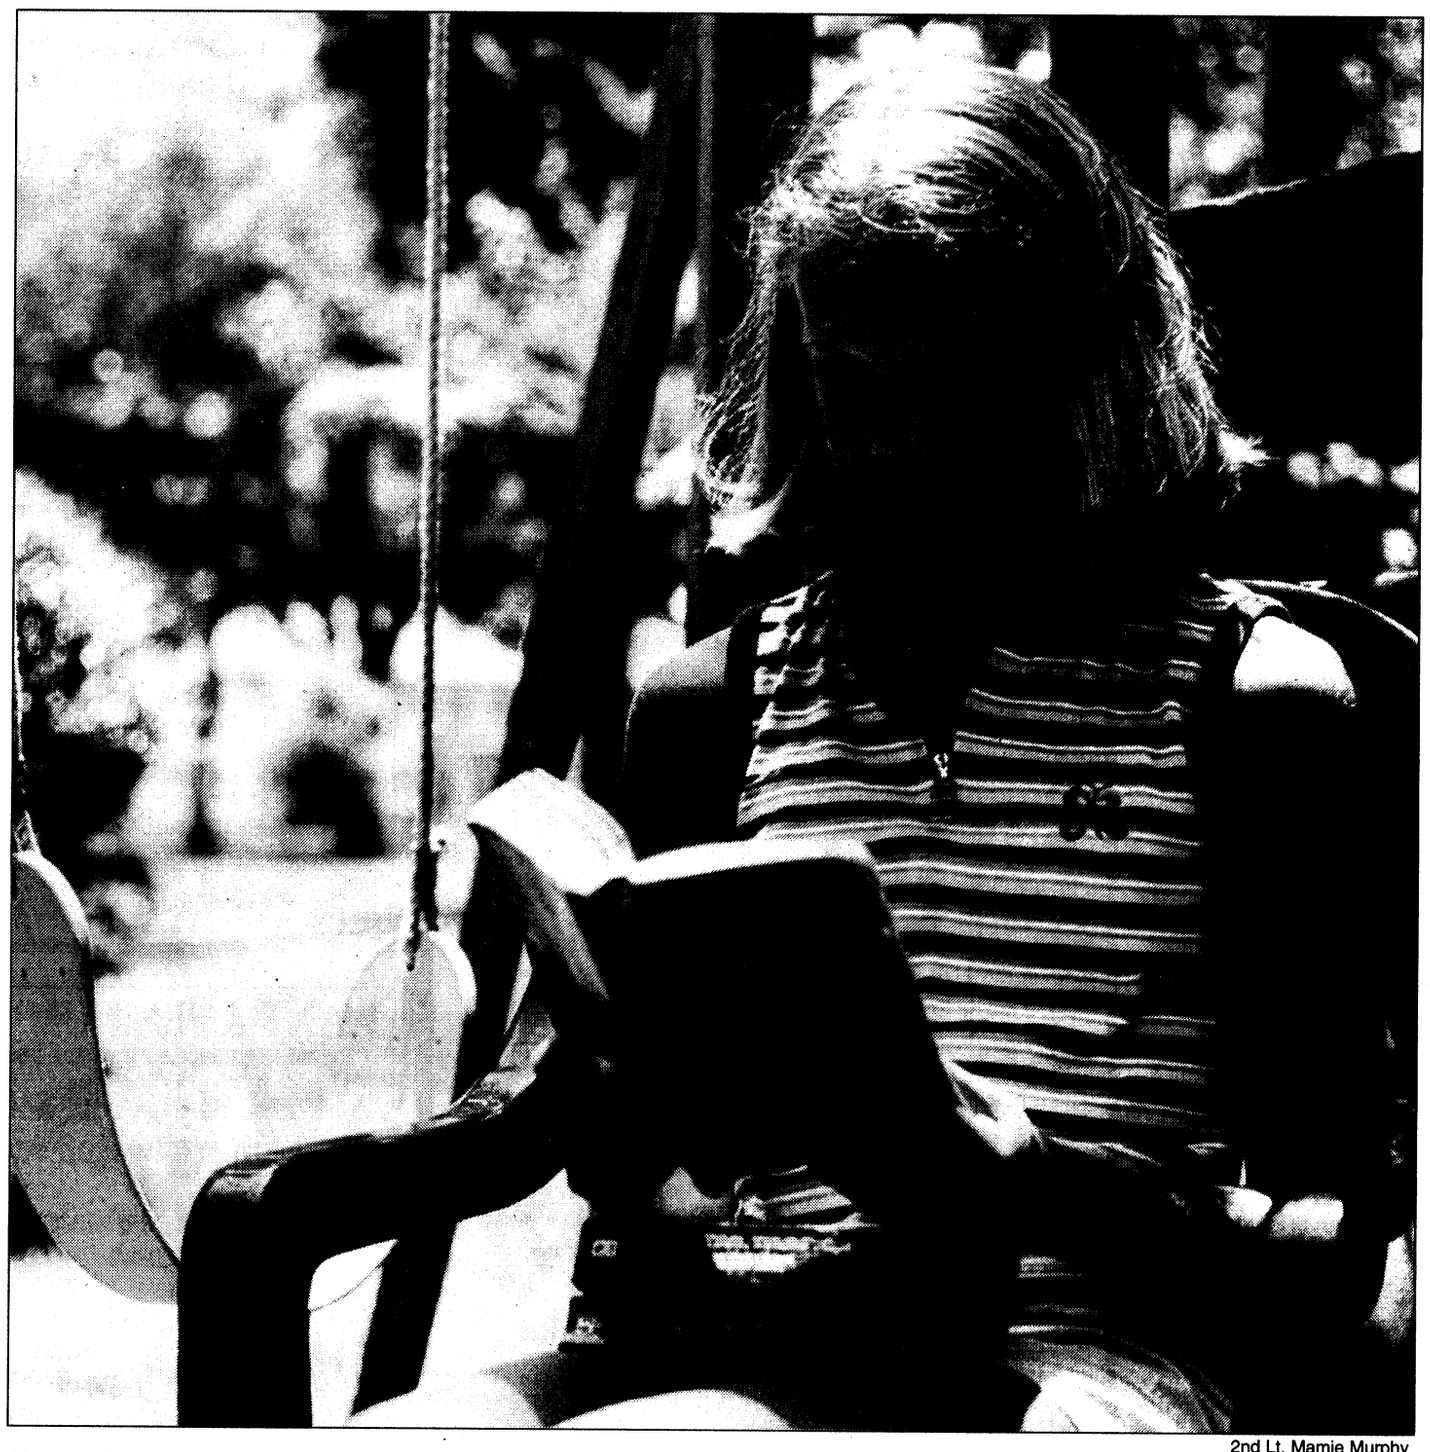
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Reading can pay off in more ways than one. Not only does it improve your mind and expand your vocabulary, it can be monetarily rewarding as well.

Megan Ferry, 13, won second place in the YMCA Armed Forces Essay Contest. For her essay she won a $100 U.S. Savings Bond.

This was the sixth annual Armed Services YMCA Essay Contest, co-sponsored by the U.S. Naval Institute. More than 2,500 children, with parents serving the military, entered this year's contest. They ranged in age from preschool through high school. The subject of the essay was "Why do you like to read?"

The title of Ferry's winning essay was "Reading is Awesome."



The recent Faith Middle School graduate credits her parents, Maj. Charles and Angela Ferry, for her love of reading.

"I've been reading since I was real little. "My mom would read to me all the time," Megan said.

Megan's mom echoed the sentiment.

"She's always enjoyed reading, and that's something

Soldiers remember family members

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

"It is a celebration of life," said Capt. David Cripe, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Soldiers from the battalion dedicated a dogwood tree in the memory of Belinda Ryan, late wife of Sgt. David Ryan, and Shana Magnotti, late wife of Pfc. Joseph Magnotti.

Both spouses died within months of one another. Belinda passed away unexpectedly in March. Shana died in April after a brief and sudden illness.

At a Family Readiness Team meeting Alison Cripe, wife of the company commander, brought up the idea of planting a tree remembering the women. With the support of the battalion commander Lt. Col. John K. Carothers and his wife, Mary, Alison used donated monies to purchase the tree and a small plaque bearing the names of the deceased.

"I felt it could provide a closure for the families," said Alison. She hopes that the tree symbolizes to the families that their loved ones are not forgotten. "Flowers die, a tree will last a lifetime," she said.

Dance Wednesdays deter youths' summer time blues

Youth Services offers dance lessons to kids

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

It's no surprise Jamie Shultz, 9, is a good dancer — she learned from her mother.

"She just loves dancing," said Mary Shultz. "We dance to the radio at home, and dance whenever we can."

The mother and daughter duo were two dancers who attended last week's Youth Services' Dance Wednesdays.

Youth Services is hosting a series of dance lessons for its members through Aug. 1. The classes, which take place in the ballroom from 6:30 to 7:30 p.m., run for six weeks and are open to both children and their parents. The classes are geared for 6- to 18-year-olds, but younger siblings can also attend the lessons.

The lessons run the gamut of dance steps — from the cha-cha slide and reggae through country line and salsa dancing. Both professional dance instructors and YS employees, who love the steps, will be instructing the classes.

YS program assistant Rosalind Broom taught the first program in the series, a mix of the cha-cha and the electric slide. The lessons are good exercise and a chance for kids to beat the summer blues, she said.

Broom, who learned the dances years ago in her hometown of Greenwood, Miss., said she enjoys watching the younger children learning the same steps she did as a child.

"During the Youth Services monthly dances, the disc jockey always plays the cha-cha slide and the kids would say they didn't want to hear it," Broom said. "Now when it comes on, the kids are really into it."

The Wednesday night lessons afford YS members a chance to practice their moves with an instructor before the monthly pre-teen and teen dances, which cater to more than 150 kids per dance.

And according to 13-year-old Shante Smalls, everyone can use a little practice.

"There's always a lot of kids at the dances," she said. "I think the lessons are a great idea because some people don't know how to do it."

Smalls attends the dances with her friends.

She also takes tap, ballet and jazz dance lessons through the center.

Broom hopes children will have a good time at the weekly events and encouraged both kids and their parents to attend.

"It's just a good family get together," Broom said.

Parents are asked to remain with children who are younger than 6-years old.

Club Beyond visits Florida

Group finds fun, studies at beach

Bruce Mulford
Club Beyond

"That was the best week of my life!" "Can we stay another week?"

Those were some of the remarks Club Beyond members made as they wrapped up a week of summer camp June 11-15 in Laguna Beach, Fla.

All the activities, songs and discussion topics centered around this year's theme "Souled Out."

Although the group arrived in the aftermath of Tropical Storm Allison, the skies cleared and the week was filled with wonderful beach weather.

Each morning was filled with personal and group Bible studies and upbeat praise and worship.

In the afternoons, there was time for surfing, basketball, volleyball and crazy beach games.

The beach challenges consisted of slip'n'slide baseball, five-way soccer and more messy games involving M&M's, whip cream, and rice. Thursday, called "Pandemonium Day," the boys challenged the girls to a water balloon and shaving cream fight on the beach.

The evening rallies were energetic and life changing. Each night, the band members taught new songs and led the members in an intense time of worshipping God.

All Club Beyond members left renewed and refreshed in their faith.

Club Beyond, a youth outreach ministry for middle and high schoolers, will resume weekly meetings when school starts in the fall. We are looking forward to an awesome semester, with the addition of our "Teen Center" located on the corner of Wold and Brockmann avenues.

Volunteer helps candidates feel at home

Local women hand out free TLC to troops

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Every soldier knows the feeling. You're away from home. You miss your loved ones. You miss seeing a friendly face.

Imagine that when you show up at a new school, there is an individual there who goes out of her way to make you feel welcome.

From the moment you meet her, she makes you feel like a member of her family.

When you see her, you get life-long-friend hugs, thoughtful advice and the reassurance that someone understands what you're going through.

If you are fortunate enough to have attended Sunday services at the 11th Infantry Regiment chapel, then you know an individual who fits this description perfectly. You've seen her standing behind the dessert table every week handing out cookies and cakes to soldiers. Her name is Marianne Hilton.

Hilton has been a member of the Fort Benning community since 1962 when she and her husband arrived here from Fort Riley, Kan.

Her husband, Lige, retired as a command sergeant major in September of that same year. The Hiltons remained in the area.

"We stayed in Georgia because we liked it. We were in close proximity to Fort Benning and once a soldier, always a soldier," Hilton said.

Hilton knows what it is like to be away from home. She was born and raised in Bamberg, Germany, in northern Bavaria. It is there that she met and married Lige.

"I was introduced to my husband by my neighbor who was dating an American soldier. He came to see her on a weekend and brought a friend," Hilton said. "We were married six years and five days later.

"We were married on a Thursday. He went to work that morning and paid his soldiers. He was a first sergeant at that time, and they paid cash, so he paid his soldiers, came home and changed clothes. Then we got married. He went to work at four o'clock the next morning," said Hilton.

"I spent Thanksgiving 1955 on a troop ship, the William Darby, on the way to Fort Riley (Kan.)," Hilton said. "So our trip to Fort Riley was our honeymoon. It was an eight-day vacation."

Hilton began bringing desserts to church services after her husband passed away.

"People brought over cakes and pies, like they always do, and I brought the leftovers to church with me for the soldiers, said Hilton.

"Everyone really liked it and that gave me the idea. Before I used to just bring a big bag of candy to give to the soldiers. Because, you know, especially OCS — they aren't allowed to have any sweets or anything while they are in training," Hilton said.

Hilton

Hilton continues to bring treats for the soldiers and she has found the experience to be very rewarding.

"It gives me a purpose in life. I enjoy the sometimes surprised faces of the different students," Hilton said.

"It was just one way I felt like I could give back to the Lord. With the help of Edith Smith and Justine Vance, we keep it going."

Smith and Vance are key players at the 11th Inf. Regt. Chapel. They help keep the dessert table stocked for the soldiers.

The greatest beneficiaries of Hilton's open-arms attitude and actions have been the candidates of Officer Candidate School. While they are on lock-down during the first four to six weeks of class they look forward to attending church.

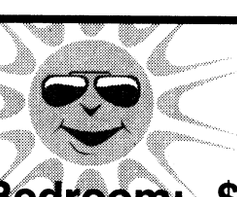
Hilton makes sure that coffee and treats are available to everyone who wants the caffeine and sugar they've been denied all week.

Hilton even offers friendly reminders to the candidates to dispose of all the candy bar wrappers before returning to the barracks.

"Make sure you throw away your wrappers! Don't get caught with contraband!" Hilton said.

Advice comes in more than one form. Hilton offered this advice for those who are separated from their loved ones.

"When you are apart from your family you have to write, phone, keep them in your prayers," Hilton said. "And make sure that they are keeping you in their prayers!"



Separation is still hard though and Hilton offers more immediate remedies for that.

"I can tell who needs a hug. We all need a hug. I need a hug!" Hilton said. "I had a student a couple cycles ago in OCS, he would come find me every week for his hug."

OCS graduate, 2nd Lt. Tammy Wade said, "Everyone loves Marianne. She is just fantastic, we are so lucky to have her here. I feel like I get to visit with a member of my family every Sunday. She's been like a mom to all of us."

The bonds that Hilton forms with the students that pass through the chapel are sometimes lifelong.

"Some of my students still keep in touch. I got a phone call from Korea last night," Hilton said. "He wanted to know how I was doing and just to talk."

better business bureau

Better Business Bureau

Juggling work and family life can become a whirlwind for many parents, and it can become even more so during the summer.

The question of what to do with the kids during the summer months is a big issue for a lot of families. Summer camp may be the answer. But with all the choices out there it can be difficult to find out just the right program for your child.

Before starting your search, it is important to know your child's personality and identify what camp program will benefit him or her the most.

When looking at camps, include your child in the decision-making process. Some camps have structured programs where camp staff schedules all campers' activities. Others are more flexible, allowing campers to choose some or all of their daily activities.

To assist your search, the Better Business Bureau suggests to consider the following:

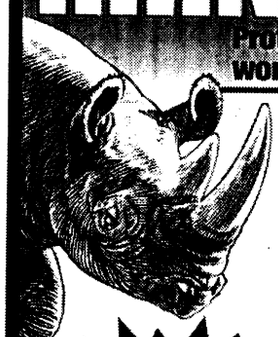
• Where is the camp and how much does it cost? How long does each session run?

• What age groups are represented and in what percentage?

• Is the program coed? If so, what's the approximate ratio of boys and girls?

• Who is the camp director and what is his or her background? How is the staff trained? What is the ratio of campers to staff members?

• Are medical facilities adequate? Is there a nurse or doctor on staff?



• If it is an overnight camp, what kind of living, eating and recreational facilities does the program offer? What is the daily schedule like? Is there enough free time or too much?

• What are the safety regulations? What kind of supervision is provided?

• Are visitors allowed? What kind of communication is allowed: mail, phone calls, e-mail, etc.?

• How does the staff handle homesickness? Look for camps that are certified by the American Camp Association. ACA accredited camps have met more than 300 nationally recognized standards.

Post officials warn residents about rabies

Recent rabies documentation raises awareness

2nd Lt. Sandy Mosley-Kuria
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

With cases of rabies documented in the local area, post officials encourage pet owners to vaccinate their animals to help prevent them from acquiring the deadly disease.

Keeping your pet vaccinated will virtually eliminate the chances of it acquiring the disease said, Capt. Louis Huzella, Fort Benning Veterinary Services.

Vaccinating animals for rabies at the Fort Benning veterinary clinic costs $3.50 and the vaccines are effective for one year.

Families with pets on Fort Benning are required to have their animals vaccinated.

Although cases of rabies have not been found on post, several animals in the areas surrounding post have been found to be infected with rabies.

"A rabies-infected fox was spotted off of Whitesville Road in March," said Huzella. "During the second week of June, two more rabies cases were reported in Harris County. The Harris County rabies cases were raccoons."

Rabies not only affects animals, but it can also be deadly to humans.

Last summer, a man in Taylor County died of rabies after he was bitten by a bat.

If you are bitten or scratched by an animal, post regulations require you to go to the emergency room of the Martin Army Community Hospital.

"If you are bitten by an animal you know has been vaccinated, bring proof that the vaccine has been administered, and no rabies vaccine will be administered to the bitten person," said Kelly Henderson, a registered nurse at MACH.

"If there is no proof of vaccination, patients are required to receive a series of five shots over a period of three weeks," Henderson said.

Huzella said there are several visible symptoms of an animal that has rabies.

- Confusion
- Foaming at the mouth
- Hyperactivity

If you do see an animal exhibiting unusual or threatening behavior notify the military police immediately at 545-5222.

Dedication: Pays tribute to lost family members

A short dedication ceremony was held earlier this month on the battalion headquarters lawn. The family of Shana Magnotti traveled from Florida to attend.

"I have never been part of something like this before," Cripe said.

Cripe said he and his wife put a lot of effort into the project because, "Good or bad, we are all part of a big family whether you like it or not. The Army is different, if something happens everybody is going to know about it."

Alison would like to see the Army become more involved by setting a policy on what procedures should take place after the death of a military family member.

"Housing and other offices were very sensitive to these soldiers' circumstances," Alison said.

However, she said she believes that there needs to be written policy in place, so that everyone involved will know what will happen after losing a loved one.

Taking yet another step, Col. Michael Ferriter, 11th Inf. Regt. commander, asked for donations from throughout the regiment. A total of $5,500 was raised and placed in a memorial fund established by David to help offset the cost of medical and funeral expenses for Magnotti. Cripe said that any remaining balance will be donated to a charity.

"(The recent events) gave us a moment to stop and consider what is important," he said.

that we really tried to encourage and to instill in all our kids. How important reading is," Angela said.

"Megan is always reading! She reads all the time. She went through the Harry Potter books like that," said Angela.

Reading is an important aspect of the Ferry family at a young age.

"We love books. We started reading to all of our children when they were babies, and we've always had books around the house," Angela said. "Now, we always take trips to the library."

Megan isn't the only award-winning author in the house.

Her younger sister, Merissa who is 8, had a poem published in the "Anthology of Poetry by Young Americans."

Megan's favorite reads are any kind of science fiction, but books by Timothy Zann in particular.

"I really like to read science fiction books. I like Timothy Zann's Star Wars books," Megan said.

Megan said she has future plans for the savings bond, once it matures.

"I'm going to set it aside and maybe put it toward a car or college," Megan said.

College is definitely in the future for Megan, who even has some ideas as to what she'd like to study and where she'd like to work.

"I'd like to study marine biology.

"If I could work for Sea World that would be good, something with marine biology."

Post: Tracks pollution

DFEL, said.

This study will eventually result in the knowledge of what is making up Columbus' smog.

Gustafson said it is important to be as educated as possible, and be aware of the forecast. On severe smog days people should adopt an ozone attitude.

The activities associated with this type of attitude are: car or van pooling to work; packing a sack lunch; riding a bus or biking to work; mowing your lawn after dusk; filling your car up with gas after dusk and running all your errands at once.

Local children take part in Bible school

2nd Lt. Sandy Mosley-Kuria

Katoria Palmer, 11, paints a Noah's Ark craft during Vacation Bible School at White Elementary School.

VBS marks summer's start

2nd Lt. Sandy Mosley-Kuria
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

More than 190 children attended Vacation Bible School at White Elementary School June 18-22.

This year's theme was Jesus to the Rescue.

"Each year, we are seeking Christian people who have a love for children and would like to help with various activities," Bill Putman, director of Religious Education said.

Autumn Cycler's fifth-grade class performed an end of summer school musical.

"The children participated in musical programs that consisted of age-appropriate Christian music taught with creative movement," said Renee Doyle, music instructor of Jesus to the Rescue Vacation Bible School.

Fifth-grade to high school aged children wrote their own songs for the program.

Vacation Bible School is a Protestant Vacation Bible School held for one week from 9:30 a.m. until noon buses pick up children in the Fort Benning housing area.

Children ages four years to high schoolers may attend Vacation Bible School.

A Vacation Bible school day includes singing and games.

For more information about Vacation Bible School, call Putman at 545-4715.

Summer fun can be ruined by accidents

Shepherd Center

As the summer heats up, so does the desire to cool off, but swimmers should make sure they know exactly what they are jumping into before taking the plunge.

Every year, more than 850 people suffer from spinal cord injuries as a result of recreational diving, according to the American Spinal Injury Association.

Of those injuries, more than 300 occur at home, in above- or below-ground pools. The majority of these pool-related spinal cord injuries result in quadraplegia, the paralysis of all four limbs.

However, most diving accidents can be prevented, according to experts at Atlanta-based Shepherd Center, the country's largest hospital that specializes in treating spinal cord and brain injuries and other neuromuscular disorders.

"People often dive head-first when going into the water for the first time," said David Apple, M.D., medical director of Shepherd Center. "But if the water is too shallow, your head can hit the bottom of the pool or lake with such force that it breaks the neck and damages the spinal cord. Worse yet, if the swimmer is unable to move or call for help, he can drown."

Apple recommends swimmers jump in the water with their feet first for the first time. This allows you to determine the depth of the water and decide whether it is too shallow to dive.

He also offered the following safety tips to prevent diving injuries this summer:

- Always test the water's depth before diving. Water should be at least nine feet deep for diving. More than 90 percent of pool-related spinal cord injuries occur in water that is less than eight feet deep.
- Check the water for obstacles on the surface or underwater debris.
- Never dive in unfamiliar areas. Remember, lake and river bottom depths can change from year to year. Three out of four diving accidents occur in such natural bodies of water.
- Only dive from a diving board, never from the side of a pool.
- Avoid the use of alcohol or drugs around water because diving requires precise coordination and judgment skills.
- When diving, make your dives simple, keeping your head up and your arms extended over your head.
- Never push or throw anyone into the water.
- Don't swim alone. Use the buddy system.
- Take a water safety and CPR course so you can take action if there ever is an emergency. In 94 percent of pool-related spinal cord injuries, no lifeguard was on duty.

If a diving or swimming accident occurs and the diver shows no sign of movement, Apple said gently take the victim out of the water face up, keeping in mind that you should not attempt a rescue beyond your swimming capabilities. Once the victim is on level ground, immediately call 911 and begin CPR, if needed.

"Just by taking a few minutes to judge your actions around water, you can prevent a day at the pool from resulting in a life-altering spinal cord injury," Apple said.

Give thanks on Independence Day

Chaplain (Capt.) David Arredondo
317th Engineer Battalion

reflections

Independence Day is one of the most celebrated days of the year. From one end of the country to the other, Americans attend large festive gatherings to celebrate the freedom and independence we enjoy in this country.

Independence Day is a day of commemoration, jubilation and appreciation. People from all walks of life, young and old, veterans, service members, diverse cultures and religious groups, all of us Americans, rejoice as we remember the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776 – the day which declared this country a free nation. Indeed, it is a day to appreciate our freedom.

As a Christian, I also remember the freedom that God gives us. I think one of my favorite texts, Isaiah 53:5; which states: "But he was pierced for our transgressions, he was crushed for our iniquities; the punishment that brought us peace was upon him, and by his wounds we are healed." This Bible text speaks of what Jesus Christ did so we could have freedom and independence.

Here we find that Christian freedom has a unique paradox. Jesus Christ gave up his freedom to ensure ours. This freedom or liberty is given to all, who by faith, become free to love, free to forgive and free to receive forgiveness from God.

The paradox remains; there are times when our freedom or individual rights are subordinated to the good of others. We are free to live as God calls us to live.

Just as Christ sacrificed to set us free our forefathers labored to establish the liberty that we cherish. It reminds me of what I read some time ago, that a young man who was killed in battle had a note in his hand that said, "I give this day for your tomorrow."

Every year my family chooses to join a festivity in celebration of Independence Day. In the past two years, we watched the fireworks display at Fort Benning and "Thunder on the Hooch."

This year, we'll do the same. We count it as a privilege and pleasure to rejoice with our fellow Americans as we honor the labors of those who penned the Declaration of Independence and the principles of freedom, liberty and justice. Indeed, it is great to take joy in our freedom, in our faith and love for our great nation. This is our heritage.

Independence Day is an opportunity to appreciate the work and faith of our pioneers and heroes of the past: George Washington, John Hancock, Thomas Jefferson, Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, Roger Sherman, Robert Livingston, Thomas Paine and all who upheld the principles of freedom.

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness." (From the Declaration of Independence.)

"As for you, my friends, you were called to be free. But do not let this freedom become an excuse for letting your physical desires control you. Instead, let love make you serve one another."

(Galatians 5:13) Our freedom enables us to reach toward the highest possible standards in our walk of faith and freedom. Happy Independence Day!

chapel notes

Catholic mass — The Catholic community will celebrate a bilingual Mass at 11:30 a.m. Sunday followed by a potluck dinner at The Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

This will be an opportunity for the congregation to bid farewell to Chaplain (Maj.) Don Blickhan.

There will be no 1 p.m. Spanish Mass that day. It is requested that each family bring two dishes to share.

Catholic masses suspended — Catholic weekday masses at the Main Post Catholic Chapel are suspended, excluding Wednesdays through early September.

Weekend services will continue to be held as scheduled. Confessions will be from 4 to 4:45 p.m. Saturdays.

Club Beyond takes recess — The Club Beyond Youth meetings have been recessed for the summer.

Watch for announcements concerning meetings after school begins in the fall.

For more information, call Bruce Mulford at 545-2359.

Meetings suspended — The Protestant Women of the Chapel will take a break during the month of June and will resume summer meetings July 12.

The Bible study series will be "Jesus on Relationships."

These meetings are at Custer Terrace Chapel from 9:30 a.m. until noon each Thursday.

All Fort Benning women are welcome.

For more information about the meetings, call Gigi Kail at 685-0739.

Spending time with children a necessity

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

When 1,500 school children were asked what makes a happy family, the children didn't list money, a big screen television or brand name clothes. The most frequent answer was "Doing things together."

How much time does a parent need to spend with children? Parents need to spend a lot of time with their children, and more than they think.

In two studies that recorded the conversations of fathers with their preschoolers, both recorded less than one minute a day that fathers were verbally interacting with their children. Yet, the average child spends 30 to 50 hours a week watching television.

To spend time with your kids, seize the moment. Be spontaneous. Set aside time your calendar to do things together. Pick them up early from school just to be with them. Talk with them when traveling in the car instead of listening to the radio. Attend their school and after school activities. Applaud them and cheer them on.

When spending time with your children, do fun activities. Build traditions. Have birthday parties. Read books aloud as a family. Have bedtime prayers and devotions. Have pillow fights. Go on mini-adventures. Take your child out to breakfast. Do what is of interest to your child. Help a family in need. Do household and yard chores together. Worship together.

Give your child your time. Spend an entire day with your child. Your son or daughter will treasure that day more than any toy, gizmo or item you might like to give. Would you like more help with parenting? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

"If the son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."

Soldiers push limits for satisfaction

Triathletes maintain high fitness level with constant work

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

What drives soldiers to swim 1.2 miles, bike 56 miles and run 13.1 miles, all in the same day?

"The same thing that drives me to be an infantryman," said Lt. Col. Steve Hawley, commander of the 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment. "Doing something hard, and doing it well."

Hawley, along with nine other soldiers from Fort Benning, participated in a half-ironman triathlon, the Gulf Coast Triathlon held in Panama City, Fla., May 12.

"All 10 of us trained (both) individually and in groups of two," said Lt. Col. Skip Davis, deputy commander, 3rd Brigade. "But we find ourselves (and each other) at these things all the time."

Davis said he believes there is a special subculture of soldiers, airmen, Marines and seamen that participate in triathlons, and he is one of the few.

"(The subculture) demonstrates the kind of folks military people are — it's the military mind that strives for challenge," he said.

Many of the 10 soldiers who took part in the May 12 triathlon strive to meet a self-set challenge each time they attempt yet, another, triathlon, marathon or any other competition.

At 40-years-old, 6 feet, 6 inches, 238 lbs, Hawley has participated in well over 100 triathlons, five marathons, and several five and 10K races.

In his mind, he has performed well in every race, too.

"I've won every one because I finish," Hawley said. "I've never won in terms of crossing the finish line first."

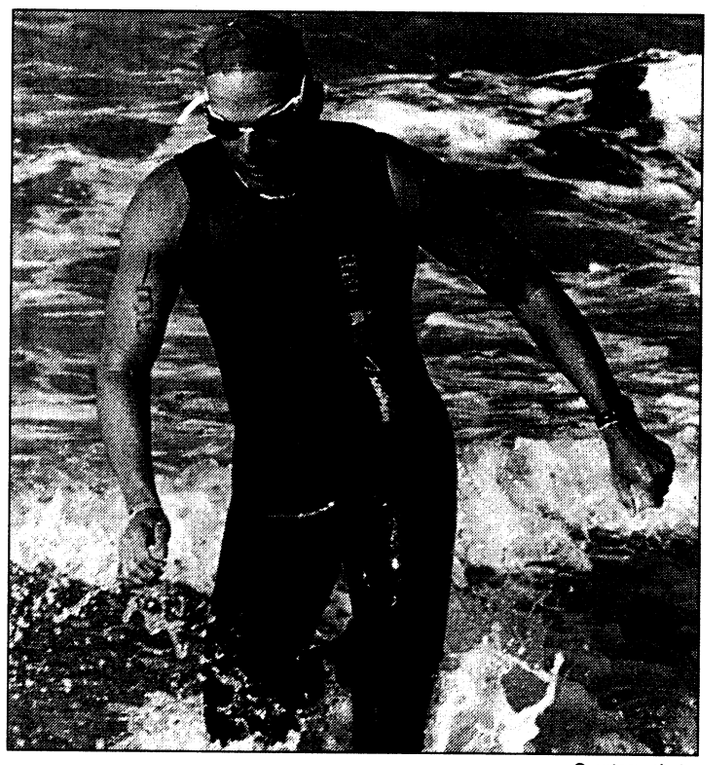
However, Hawley did place third in the nation in the Clydesdale category. His record shows he continually wins those categories. The Clydesdale category is a part of most races and is for those over six foot tall, and over 220 lbs.

"I'm not fast, but I've worked really hard," he said. "I'm just trying to go as fast as Steve Hawley can go."

Hawley completed his first race in 1985.

"I knew it was something I wanted to do," he said. "Sometime I've been hurt pretty bad, but I've always fought my way through under the ranger objective."

Master Sgt. George Gurrola, operations NCOIC, 4th Ranger Training Battalion, has been a triathlete since 1992. He has completed two full ironman races, two marathons and several half-ironman's.



"It's not just about running three miles and cycling 10. There's more to it," Gurrola said.

In order to maintain his high level of fitness, Gurrola said he has to spend several hours a day training as well as sometimes eating meals on the go, and even skipping the occasional breakfast or lunch.

Maintaining a high level of personal fitness helps motivate many triathletes to keep going, even through rough waters.

"It keeps me feeling young. Being an

Free Agents dominate softball game

Forfeiture does not stop softball games

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Free Agents, went up against the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Infantry, Tuesday night on Gowdy Field.

After a slow start, the Free Agents pulled off a 15-3 victory.

Fernando Nolasco, Free Agents right center, had a phenomenal game with two infield home runs with the first on the second inning and the second in the top of the fourth, driving in two runs.

He rounded the bases for five more runs during the team's second game of the season.

Shortstop Emilo Lopez crossed homeplate for three runs.

First baseman Enrique 'Ace' Acevedo rounded out the score after reaching home twice.

The Free Agents' defense was hot. Three double plays by the Lopez, second baseman John Oakley, and Acevedo combination, shut down any chance for HHC to come back.

The three errors by the Free Agents' defense allowed HHC a chance to score their only runs of the night.

After five innings, the game was called due to the one hour time limit.

"We are still in the building stages for our team," HHC's Beazer said.

With only nine hits for the game, he said that the team needed more practice before they could pull off a strong win.

Later in an exhibition game, A. Co., 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., devastated the Free Agents, 9-3.

Scheduled to play A Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., the team from the 11th Inf. Regt., accepted a win by forfeit when the other team failed to show.

Fresh from a win, the Free Agents took to the field again. But signs of fatigue soon set in.

With Sanders Masters on firstbase and Michael Cochran on second base, Lonny Erwin delivered a stand-up double to the outfield bringing in both teammates. Later in the line-up, Edward Calado, with a base hit, sent Stacy Picard and Erwin across homeplate for end of the inning score of 4-0.

Jamal Cummings, left center for A. Co., was definitely the star of the evening, starting the game with a solo shot home run in the top of the second inning.

But the lethal Lopez, Oakley, and Acevedo combination pulled through with another double play, shutting down A. Co.'s offense early in the second.

Defensively, Cummings continued to shine making one defensive play after another in the outfield. Over the shoulder, back against the fence, where ever the leather dropped in the outfield, Cummings was under it.

Chatter from the Free Agents bullpen was enough for Lopez to finally put his team on the board with an infield home run late in the fourth inning. But not enough for his teammates, who were unable to get on base.

Late in the game Picard, A. Co. pitcher, showed batters her pitching talent. In five pitches she struck out Free Agents' Carlos Cruz, with her underhand, fast-pitch style. No one else accepted her pitching challenge.

Regrouping in the fifth inning, Free Agents players, Acevedo and Julio Battistini scored two more runs.

After only six innings of play the game was called.

"We talked the talk," Acevedo said, "and we tried to walk the walk, the second time."

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Air Force wins Eco-Challenge

Airmen conquer Alaskan race

Army News Service

QUARTZ LAKE, Alaska — At 1:07 p.m., Saturday, Air Force Team Speedy Mail emerged from the woods and half-walked, half-jogged to the Armed Forces Eco-Challenge finish line at Quartz Lake, where the surrounding crowd cheered them on.

Exhausted, but definitely relieved, the four teammates embraced each other. They had just conquered a 150-mile adventure race over rugged Alaskan terrain and frigid rivers in 61 hours, 7 minutes. Total sleep time — 25 minutes.

Bonnie Carroll, president and founder of Tragedy Assistance Program for Survivors, joined in the group hug and congratulated them.

"You're going to New Zealand!" she said, reminding the team that their win earns them a slot at the global Eco-Challenge this fall.

The charity event began at midnight on the summer solstice last June 20.

The race featured 22 co-ed teams of four, from all branches of the U.S. Armed Forces, navigating through a six-leg route that featured 24 checkpoints along the way.

Cottonmouths move to East Coast Hockey League

Local hockey team announces promotion

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Skate faster, hit harder and give the fans what they're looking for — better hockey games in the East Coast Hockey League.

The Columbus Cottonmouths Hockey Club announced at a press conference June 21 that they are the newest members of the ECHL.

President of the ECHL, Richard Adams, said that Cottonmouth fans can expect to see higher quality hockey games this season at the Columbus Civic Center.

"What a tremendously exciting day this is," said Phil Roberto, president, CEO and General Manager for the Cottonmouths. "We're making another stride, moving up the ladder."

The Cottonmouths have played in the Central Hockey League since their debut season in 1997-1998.

The ECHL, now has 28 members from 14 states and is in its 13th season.

The Cottonmouths are affiliated with the Norfolk Admirals and Hamilton Bulldogs in the American Hockey League, and the Edmonton Oilers in the National Hockey League.

ECHL clubs have affiliations with 21 of 30 NHL teams.

Larry Kish, director of player development, said the ECHL is a step up from the CHL. The quality of players is higher, as is the opportunity for them to advance their careers.

"This is a developmental league. A significant portion of the roster of our teams have the ability to play on a higher level," said Adams.

Since 1988, the ECHL has sent 145 players on to the NHL. Last season, 70 ECHL graduates played in the NHL.

This is including the 1999-2000 winner of the Vezina Trophy for the NHL's top goaltender, Olaf Kolzig of the Washington Capitals. Kolzig played for the Hampton Roads Admirals, the franchise bought out to make room for the Cottonmouths.

The new ownership for the Cottonmouths moved quickly to establish themselves in the ECHL.

On Jan. 1, Shelby Amos and Salvador Diaz-Verson Jr. purchased the Cottonmouths. On June 7, they purchased the Hampton Roads franchise in the ECHL and one week later the ECHL's Board of Governors approved the transfer of the team.

Both owners expressed enthusiasm for new possibilities in the new league.

"We're really very excited. This is a great league to be in and it is all about giving our fans a great product," said Diaz-Verson.

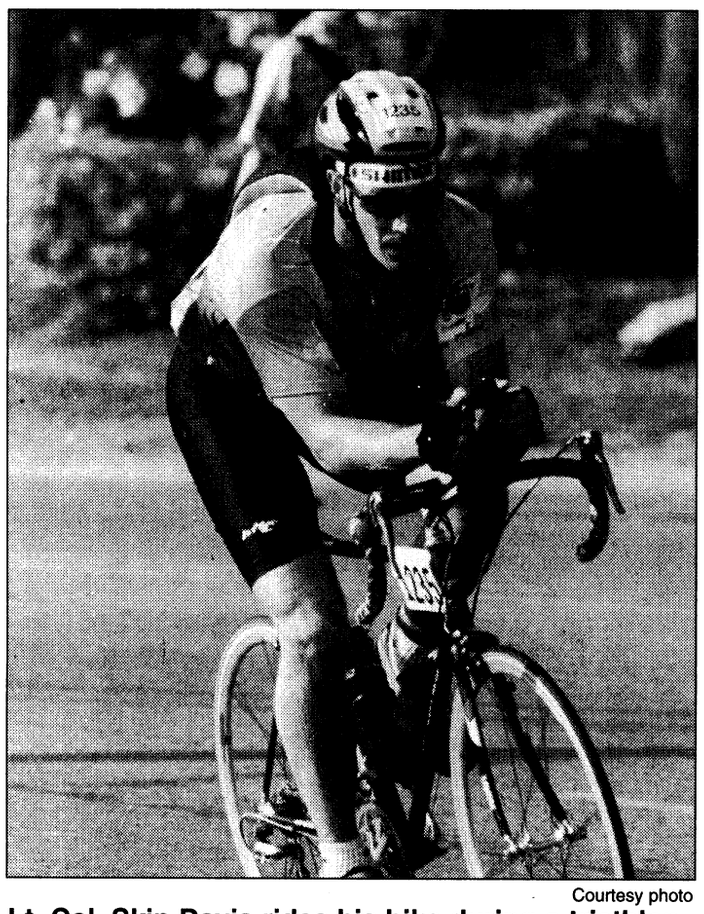
"Opposing teams are going to be more accessible for our fans. It's going to be a great thing for Columbus," said Amos.

The rest of the staff was looking forward to the new league as well.

"This is a team of development, a team of younger players. The great thing about this league is that these kids all think that they can make it. They're going to play hard because they think they've got a chance," Kish said.

The Cottonmouths also announced that they signed head coach Bruce Garber to a four-year contract extension.

"It's a pretty obvious commitment we've made (to the ECHL). This is a little different brand of hockey, it's a faster game.



"There is a real high level of athleticism. Our players have a legitimate shot to move on and maybe fulfill their dreams of the major leagues," Garber said.

In addition to the Cottonmouths, the new teams in the ECHL this year are; the Macon Whoopee, Macon, Ga., the Reading Royals, from Pennsylvania, the Columbia Inferno, from South Carolina, and a team from Atlantic City, N.J.

The Cottonmouths first home game is Oct. 19 against their in-state rival, the Macon Whoopee.

For more information on the Cottonmouths, call 571-0086.

Triathlon: Pushes athletes to max

infantry officer, I've been assigned to a lot of light units," Davis said. "It's been a priority to maintain a high level of performance."

The three soldiers said they follow very strict work-out regimens, on top of regular Army physical training, in preparing for competitions.

"Even when it hurts, even when I'm feeling worse than everybody else, it has never stopped being fun," Gurrola said.

All three said they have been influenced greatly by Lt. Col. Terry Hemminger, a veteran triathlete. Hemminger, the assistant Training Doctrine Command System Manager for Antitanks Division, has competed in several triathlons as well as the competition May 12.

Davis advised that anyone wanting to become a triathlete to read about the sport.

Learn about the technical aspects through books. Plan a training schedule, start at a low-level and work their way, and most of all, stick to the training schedule.

"(Racing) will be fun if you go in with an open mind, and willing to take on a challenge," Gurrola said. "Most of all, keep it fun."

Davis said he believes the next step for soldiers here is to begin a club for the triathletes.

In his mind, Davis said, there would be a combined Fort Benning and Columbus club where interested athletes could go learn more about the sport and to train.

Guerrola said he agreed with Davis that a club is possible, but there would be challenges such as maintaining a high-level of visibility and participation because of the high student ratio here.

He said that he believes just having someone permanent party here who's willing to run the club would aide in its success.

Race: Challenges competitors

News-Miner described the adventure: "As if taking three days to traverse 150 miles by foot, bike and boat isn't enough, throw in glaciers, rock cliffs, frigid rivers and blood-starved mosquitoes and it starts to get interesting."

Most of the teams accepting this challenge were competing in memory of a lost comrade. In fact, the competitors spent the past few months finding team sponsors and raising funds for TAPS, America's only veterans service organization dedicated to supporting the family and friends of service members who have died while in the armed forces, in addition to training for the race.

Team Force Recon Rolls-Royce, for instance, raced in honor of six Marines and one sailor who were killed in a helicopter crash on Dec. 9, 1999, during a routine search and seizure training mission off the coast of San Diego.

One member of the team in particular, Eric Kapitulik, held those fallen soldiers deep in his heart and mind as he trekked toward the finish line — he was platoon commander for the mission on board the downed helicopter. Miraculously, he awakened from being knocked unconscious, broke free from the submerged helicopter and swam 60 feet to the surface, despite a compound fractured leg and 85 pounds of gear still strapped to his back.

USA will air the race in October. For more information, visit the race's Web site at www.ecochallenge.com/armedforces/alaska2001/index.html or visit the TAPS homepage at www.taps.org.

sports briefs

Army 10-Miler T-shirt contest — The Army 10-Miler T-shirt design contest reopened Thursday and will run until July 13th after being temporarily halted due to technical difficulties and voting irregularities.

Action has been taken to correct system problems and to identify those who vote more than once.

T-shirt designs associated with voting irregularities have been disqualified. If multiple voting by single voters continues, the contest will be discontinued and the Army Ten-Miler office will select the winning designs.

Previous votes collected will not be included in the new results.

For more information and to vote, visit the Army 10-Miler Web site at www.armytenmiler.com.

Military Tribute Days — Pick up your free RedStixx tickets for Monday's game at Omega World Travel.

First pitch is 7:15 p.m., and the gates open one hour prior.

Omega World Travel is located inside the Main PX Mall.

For more information 685-1151.

Pistol matches — There will be Night Pistol Series shoots July 7 and Aug. 4 at the Rifle and Pistol Club on English Range.

This series of monthly matches is designed for both new and experienced shooters using stock handguns.

Entry fee for a new shooter (first match here) is $12. Subsequent matches are $15 preregistered or $20 day of the match.

For more information, e-mail brpc@mindspring.com or visit English Range.

Ranger Rendezvous Fun Run — There will be a 5K, 10K and one-mile fun run July 23 for Ranger Rendezvous at Stewart-Watson Field, across from Infantry Hall.

Race day registration begins at 6 a.m. and the race starts at 7 a.m.

Entry fee is $10 for pre-registration, $12 race day (T-shirts will be limited on race day).

The one-mile fun run is free, but participants will not receive a T-shirt.

Prizes will be awarded to the top overall male and female finishers in the 5K and 10K and the top finisher in each 10K age group and for the first place finishers in their age group for the 5K.

Ribbons will be given to all one-mile fun run participants, and a trophy to the top team in the 10K. Teams will consist of 10 runners in the 10K.

The 10K and 5K courses are generally flat throughout Main Post. The one-mile fun run is on the one-mile track.

The 5K and 10K begin at 7 a.m. The 1-mile fun run begins at 8 a.m.

For more information, call Tom Spahr at 545-7157 or 545-6126 or e-mail spahrt@soc.mil.

All proceeds from the race go to the Ranger Regiment Association to support the Ranger Army 10-Miler.

22nd annual Purple and Gold Golf Tournament — The local chapter of the Omega Psi Phi Fraternity, Inc. will host the 22nd annual Purple and Gold Golf Tournament. The tournament will be held at the Follow Me Golf Course Saturday and Sunday.

It is open to the public. The format for the tournament is 36-holes medal play with flighting after the first day's round.

Prizes will be awarded for the first, second, third, fourth and fifth in each flight including trophies. Ladies are invited to play. Flights will be based on entries.

Many other prizes will be awarded to include the longest drive and closest to the hole on all par threes for both days.

All contestants will have the opportunity to win two free round-trip tickets and hotel accommodations, courtesy of U.S. Airways Express.

In addition, the first hole-in-one Saturday and the first two holes-in-one Sunday win an automobile courtesy of Bill Heard Chevrolet, Freeway Ford, Jordan Woolfolk Insurance and Jay Buick.

The entry fee is $85 per person, which includes greens fees, riding cart and refreshments for both days, plus a pre-Tee-Off Reception at the Columbus Chamber of Commerce Today.

For more information, call Robert Anderson at 649-4789 or Howard Pendleton at 653-4529.

Youth Services gymnastics — The gymnastics program, to begin in late August, will be conducted at the existing Youth Services facility, Building 1056, on McIver Street.

The YS staff is in the process of modifying a room to meet required safety standards.

A contract will be awarded to a professionally established gymnastics company in order to provide experienced and knowledgeable instructors for the classes.

New state-of-the-art gymnastics equipment has been ordered.

For more information, call 545-3070.

Callaway Gardens membership offer — Buy a Callaway Gardens Golf Membership and be the envy of your golfing buddies.

Come play, daily if you like, where the pros play. Membership benefits include:

- one round of golf per day on one of four courses (cart is additional, tee times may be reserved 72 hours in advance based on availability)
- additional rounds of golf (if tee times are readily available)
- four "members-only" tournaments per year
- 10 percent discount in Callaway Gardens' shops, including the Mountain View Pro Shop

Membership rates for 2001 are: $725 plus tax for an adult, individual membership; you can also add-on a spouse membership for $325 plus tax or a junior membership for $200 plus tax (18 years or younger, living at home).

To purchase your golf membership, visit our Membership Office in the Virginia Hand Callaway Discovery Center during normal business hours or call (800) 628-8582.

Callaway Gardens is in Pine Mountain, Ga., 60 minutes southwest of Atlanta and 30 minutes north of Columbus.

For further information, call Callaway Gardens at (800) 225-5292.

Georgia Parks offers annual pass — Outdoor enthusiasts can save money at any of Georgia's 48 state parks this year by buying an Annual ParkPass.

The pass is $25 and provides unlimited access to Georgia State Parks without paying the $2-$4 daily parking fee.

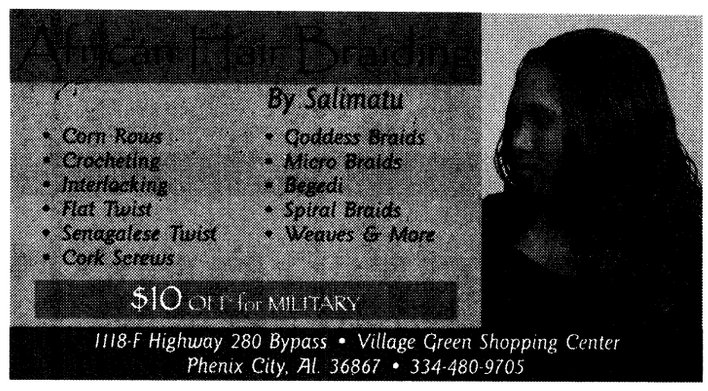
For more information about the ParkPass program, call (404) 657-9851 or visit www.gastateparks.org.

To join "Friends of Georgia State Parks and Historic Sites" call (800) 864-7275.

Second annual Wilderness Challenge — The second annual Wilderness Challenge will be held in Fayetteville, W.V., Oct. 4-7.

The challenge is open to military in all branches. However, only active duty participants will be allowed to compete.

There will be 80 teams from 20 states. The challenge includes seven highly physical competitions which include: whitewater rafting, mountain biking, kayaking, and mountain hiking.

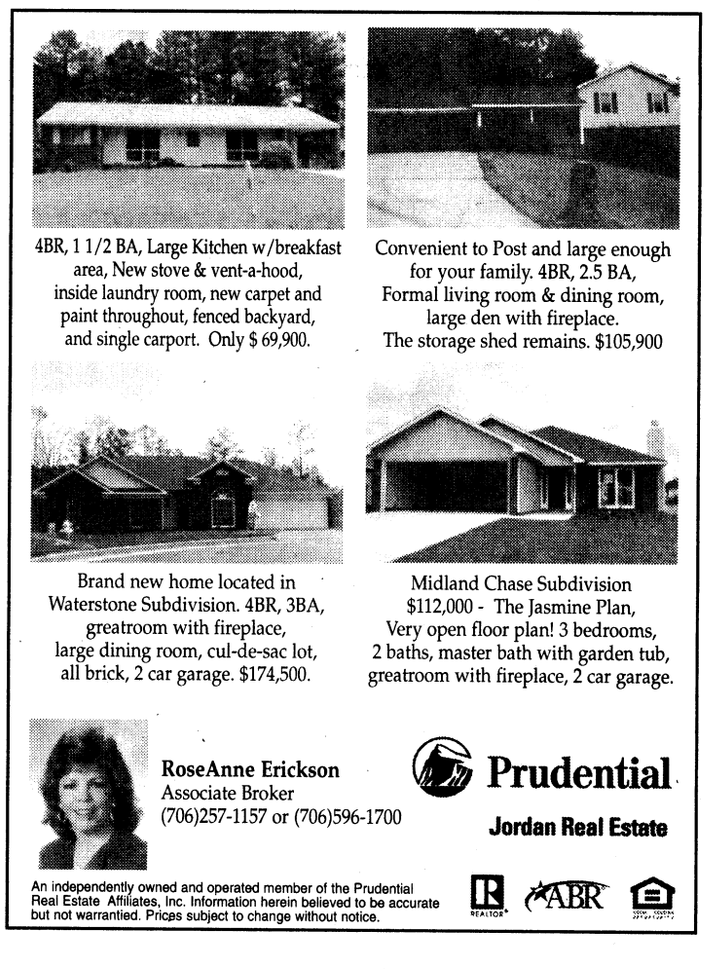


Be the best of the best in outdoor recreation and physical endurance.

Archery club — The Fort Benning Archers are now accepting memberships to the archery club located on Aldridge Road.

The yearly memberships allow archers full use of the facilities including a key to the indoor range.

Membership costs are $15 for military, $35 for civilians and $45 for families.



For more information please call A.S. Morgan, 327-8375.

LOCAL AUTO BUYERS EXPRESS DISBELIEF:

"How Can A Dealer Sell Cars For Only $29 Down?"

VOLUME 4, COLUMBUS EDITION

'98 Chevy Lumina Ls 4 door $79 mo, 9.9% APR, $29 down plus tax, tag & title. With approved credit

Credit Rebuilders Are In Columbus Promising "No Credit Investigation" Car Loans.

Columbus, GA - Mr. Jimmy Peters of Credit Rebuilders of America will be hosting a mega-sales event at Bill Heard Chevrolet that will surely have car buyers out in full force and talking about it for years to come. If you want or need a new, one-, two- or three-year old car, truck, family van or sport utility, then you need to pay close attention. Even if your credit is totally ruined - I'm talking about people with previous bankruptcies, multiple repossessions, charge-offs, divorces, credit card difficulties, tax liens or just plain slow pay - Mr. Peters has a revolutionary new program that will, in almost every case, wash away all your previous credit sins and put you on the road to complete blue-chip recovery. And ,best of all, you get the new or late model vehicle of your dreams.

Well, you might say, "how much cash out-of-pocket will this fresh start and new or slightly-used dream vehicle require?" This is where the deal really gets sweet. Through Monday, credit rebuilders will only require a small amount of out-of-pocket - $29 to be exact! Yes, anyone who can raise $29 will, in all likelihood, drive a prestigious luxury Tahoe, Suburban, Silverado, Impala, Venture family van, Trail Blazer, Cherokee, Honda, Toyota, Explorer, Expedition, XLT, Laramie, Dakota, Mustang, Park Ave, or even a luxury Cadillac home this evening. Again, with only $29 down!

And best of all, The credit process Is incredibly simple and fast. You present your $29 cash to Jimmy Peters, who is hosting the event for the Disposal company, and in less than 5 minutes he'll give you a list of vehicles to pick from. Payments range from $79 mo. And terms can be 6 months or less!

'98 Chevy Lumina Ls 4 door $79 mo, 9.9% APR, $29 down plus tax, tag & title. With approved credit

It only gets better. For those on limited budget payments, you can actually start in the $90 per month range. And finance rates, even for the credit-impaired, begin at an astounding 6.9% APR! A prime example of a deal of this magnitude would be a '97 Dodge Laramie SLT 4-door Club Cab pickup with the magnum V-8, automatic trans, power windows and locks, a CD changer in addition to a cassette player and, of course, air conditioning in addition to all the other comforts and utilitarian options. Priced at an unbelievable $8000, you pay $29 down, finance at 6.9% APR and make 72 payments of $142.60 each. Of course, the tax, title and license would be extra. Or if a small truck is your thing, perhaps this '98 Chevy Cavalier would hit the spot. You would simply make a $90 payment to one of the national banks hosting this event , spread over 72 months at 6.9% APR with the title, tax and license extra. As you might suspect, this 6.9% APR money is usually reserved for insiders and other blue-chip clients, so this opportunity may never, in fact, be repeated, so you must act now!

And if that wouldn't be enough to get anyone's attention, there is even more to excite savvy car shoppers. For a limited time, you may even delay payment start-up past normal vacation time, enabling you to put extra funds into summer vacation trips in your new or like-new vehicle.

For those who have been told they owe too much to trade, we have an even bolder program. Credit rebuilders vow to make special arrangements to pay off any vehicle, regardless of balance owed when they trade it in. You can trade your current vehicle, even if you believe it is a less-than-desirable brand. For any trade-in, you can expect to get an incredible amount over Kelley Blue Book Value. Even if your car is not running.

An event like this may never come to Columbus again and the lines are sure to be long.

To avoid those lines, you may call ahead for a VIP pass. Ask for Mr. Peters or Mr. Marx at 322-8888 ext 108, or come to :

12 TOP REASONS FOR ATTENDING THIS EVENT

1. Upgrade your life-style. A prestigious, dependable, new or like-new vehicle will do just that.
2. You get the benefits of insider 6.9% APR finance rates and pricing.
3. Rebuild your credit rating.
4. Get out of a car you hate, even undesirable models.
5. Get our from under an upside-down lease or loan where you owe more than your car is worth.
6. Hold onto your precious cash with only a $29 down payment required.
7. Tailor-make your payment plan to fit your income.
8. Get a prestigious new or pre-owned hot-selling luxury vehicle, like a Tahoe or Expedition. Even with terrible credit.
9. Keep your cash showing by delaying payment start-up.
10. Get real money, mega-bucks over Kelley Blue Book value for any car, running or not, regardless of your vehicle's age, condition or mileage. Your age-old car is worth more than you ever dreamed!
11. Go on a true 'fun vacation' with the comfort, security and peace-of-mind that only a new, high-tech vehicle can give.
12. Avoid credit investigation with a 599trw beacon score and sufficient income!

Agreement to help teens

High school transfers to get easier for teens

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Transferring between high schools may be getting a little easier for the children of soldiers — thanks to an Army-sponsored study of mobile Army teens.

Results of the Secondary Education Transition Study, which were released to the public Thursday, led school officials to develop and implement an agreement which lays out guiding principles to assist transitioning military students. The MOA was signed last May.

Current participating school systems are: Muscogee County Public Schools by Fort Benning, Ga.; El Paso Independent School District by Fort Bliss, Texas; Cumberland County Public Schools by Fort Bragg, N.C.; Killeen Independent School District by Fort Hood, Texas; Clover Park School District No. 400 by Fort Lewis, Wash.; Lawton Public Schools by Fort Sill, Okla.; and Department of Defense school systems at Fort Campbell, Ky.; Baumholder, Germany; and the Korea School District.

"The Army is committed to reducing turbulence in the lives of our soldiers and their family members and to doing the things that enhance their well-being and quality of life," said Secretary of the Army Thomas E. White. "The agreement between these school districts will improve predictability and enhance the quality of life for our soldiers and our families. We want to ensure no military child is left behind."

In 1997, an Army education team began collecting anecdotal experiences of transiting Army students to help senior leaders better understand the effects of relocating. Based on the team's findings, the Army partnered with the Military Child Education Coalition, a non-profit organization, to conduct a two-year qualitative research project into the challenges Army teens face in transiting from school to school and to provide recommendations to ease those challenges.

Specific SETS findings includes:

Military-connected students move from school system to school system about three times as often as other students. Records transfer and interpretation systems are neither consistently efficient nor effective.

Variations in school calendars add to the challenges of transition.

Variations in school schedules increase the probability of transition challenges.

Problems with clear and timely information exchange, understanding and interpretation, coherent articulation of courses and credits, redundancy, and the lack of formalized reciprocity have compounded to produce frustrations for parents, schools and youth.

Extracurricular experiences are important to the "fitting in" process.

It's tough, regardless of the student's age and circumstance, to be the "new kid" over and over.

3rd Brigade back at Benning

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

More than 4,200 soldiers returned home last week when 3rd Brigade redeployed from the National Training Center in Fort Irwin, Calif.

Troops from the 36th Engineer Group, Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Stewart, Ga., as well as the Redstone Arsenal, Ala., joined the Kelley Hill soldiers to conduct their annual training exercise in the Mojave Desert.

"It was an excellent rotation," said Col. Tony Cucolo, 3rd Brigade's commander. "It was definitely a successful rotation. There were no deaths or serious injuries, and we got better with every mission."

During the first week of the more than 30-day exercise, the brigade built its combat strength while being attacked several times by Fort Irwin's opposing force, Cucolo said.

The soldiers had to deal with unruly civilians, car bombs, snipers and chemical agent attacks, which were designed to disrupt their work.

Toward the end of the first week, the soldiers were forced into chemical protective suits and mask after a tactical ballistic missile attack, for four hours in 90 degree heat, he said.

Then the brigade soldiers went to war.

After a day in the defensive role, the soldiers went on the attack for nine days.

"Everyone did a magnificent job," Cucolo said. "So many good things were done."

Soldiers from the 317th Engineer Battalion employed two live minefields in two hours,

Drought plagues South

Residents need to conserve water use

Danielle Foerscheler
Directorate of Facility Engineering and Logistics

The drought that has plagued the southeast since 1995 is not over. Despite all the recent rain it has only put a dent in the recovery of water in lakes and streams.

During a 30-day period the Upatoi Creek water flow has both increased and decreased dramatically.

"We monitor the creek flow daily, recording its flow rate, as our drought contingency plan moves through stages based on the flow," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

The average water level recorded was 150 million gallons May 29. After a significant rainfall the creek flow was estimated at an average of 835 million gallons June 13. Even with the increase after only a week the water flow dropped to137 million gallons a day.

During an 11-day period in the end of June, the Upatoi's water flow fluctuated from 121 to 312

Researcher gets jump on rare frogs

Electronic tracking keeps tabs on frogs

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

In 1995 the dusky gopher frog was a candidate for the federal threatened or endangered species list. However, not enough was known about it at the time to justify the listing.

Johnathan Neufeldt hopes to change that. Working out of Fort Benning's conservation branch in the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, he is currently part of the team studying the red-cockaded woodpecker.

When he's not studying woodpeckers, he's working on his master's thesis research project for Columbus State University.

So far, Neufeldt has collected a year's worth of data on the gopher frog population at Fort Benning.

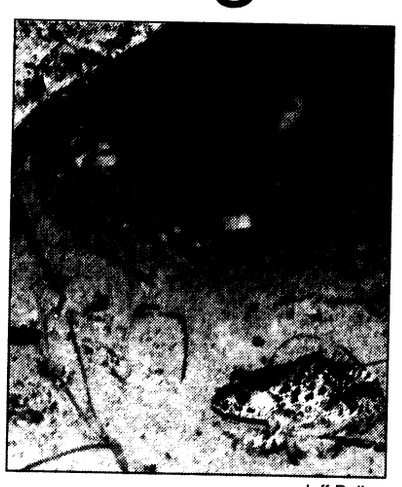
"To better manage and protect the habitat, it helps to know how far they range from the breeding pond," Neufeldt said.

By surgically implanting a tiny radio transmitter into the abdomen of adult gopher frogs, Neufeldt is able to track their movements and study their behavior on land.

"March is the high point of gopher frog breeding, so this is when most of the transmitters are implanted. I catch them as they're leaving the breeding pond. The frogs are put in a bath of MS222 (tricainmethanesulfonate) to anesthetize them, then my vet (Dr. John Bloszies of the Buena Vista Road Animal Hospital) does the actual surgical procedure to insert the transmitter," Neufeldt said.

After implantation, Neufeldt is able to determine the gopher frogs' location using a radiotelemetry receiver and hand-held antennae.

The transmitters are $85 each and use a battery that lasts an average of five and a half months.



The batteries are replaceable and the transmitters are reusable if something were to happen to the frog it was in.

Gopher frogs are mainly nocturnal and avoid the harsh light of day by remaining in the cool protection of burrows, holes or tunnels that are created by other animals.

"A lovable feature is that when you pick one up it's likely to put its hands in front of its face, like a child shielding his eyes from a bright light," Whit Gibbons, Savannah River Ecology Lab, senior research scientist, said.

These almost bullfrog-size amphibians often use gopher tortoise burrows, which is how they got their name.

After the burrows have been found, Neufeldt determines their exact location using a global positioning system.

Magical moments minus money

My parents, Phyllis and Bruce Rosen, are resourceful parents. Raising two children while balancing two or three jobs at a time, they were careful how they spent their money and minutes.

It's not that my sister Stephanie and I were lacking in monetary memories — yearly trips to Cape Cod, Mass., occasional seats to Broadway shows and the annual school shopping spree in September.

But the sweetest memories didn't involve much money. Mom would drive us to the duck pond in Brighton, NY, each spring armed with bags of stale bread and we would all sit for hours on the shores of the lake. Summer days meant gardening together in Dad's tomato patch and helping pick the raspberries from the creeping vines. Winter days we all would venture to the Henrietta Town Park in search of the perfect hill to sled down.

I still miss our drives each autumn out to the country to see the foliage at its peak.

And we didn't dare show up late to Mom's dinner table, the one time of day we all saw one another.

In a time where materialism rules the day, it's refreshing to look back on the (literally) priceless moments.

I watch my colleagues use their personal time in much the same way. They spend spare minutes with their children, their friends and their spouses. Even though Atlanta boasts hundreds of glitzy destinations only a few hours away, most of them would rather spend time around town.

Of course, I still hear about pricey interludes with children as I stroll the hallways. I wonder when monetary memories replaced simple, magical moments. Does shelling out greenbacks automatically mean great times?

One of my husband's fondest childhood reflections is turning off the radio and television while his father read stories aloud each night. It's a tradition he cherished so much that he prefers me reading a novel out loud on car rides instead of bopping to the radio.

Military families know spare time is a precious thing. It's a commodity that separation pay can't ever replenish. It's no small price people pay for their career — months away from their families, missing first steps and birthday cakes.

Last week was my birthday, the big 25. I chose not to tell anyone at work about my big day. And without them knowing it, my second family gave me more gifts than they could have ever bought. We laughed and shared stories, as we do most days. And it didn't cost a cent.

It's amazing how inexpensive a good time can be if you're with the right folks.

Once upon a time, if I wanted to talk to you, I would stroll over to your desk or pick up the phone and we'd chat. If you weren't there, I'd leave a message or call back.

People trying to contact me today send e-mails, leave voice mails or messages on my answering machine. They try to call my cell phone, or page me. Technology is a wonderful thing, but sometimes all of that accessibility can get in the way. So I've decided to cut back.

I'm going back to when my drives to and from the office, and running weekend errands solo were for re-grouping and decompressing.

I had a pager once. After it was lost, I meant to replace it, but after a while, I realized I didn't miss it. I still don't. Between it and the cell phone, it was like being under house arrest.

I do still have a cell phone. You can call me, if you have the number. The few people who do don't usually bother. They know it's in my car, probably switched off, because I'm a proponent of "hang up and drive."

I do check the voice mail messages people sometimes leave on it.

Eventually.

Don't get me wrong, I like my cell phone. I use it, and I use it a lot, but the only time I actually carry it is when I'm riding my bike. It's still off, so you still can't call me, but if there's an emergency I can call 911.

If I bonk and need a ride to my car, I can phone home (haven't had to yet, but there's always a first time).

If I break down, I can call Mr. Mileage on his cell phone and figure out how long of a wait I have before he rolls up to try an emergency fix.

Of course, his cell phone would have to be powered up, and when he's riding, it's usually not. It would be just as simple to find a spot in the shade and wait until an amateur bicycling mechanic rolled by.

I admit, all that high-tech commo comes in handy sometimes.

If I'm the after duty hours on-call person, I can leave the house because I can still be reached on a cell phone or the office pager.

During the annual Best Ranger Competition, I could reach other PAO and media types, and they could reach me.

And that's good enough for me. Technology is a wonderful thing when it works for you, and not the other way around. These days, I attach myself to an electronic leash when it's convenient.

For me.

Fire danger exists

I am writing because I recently found myself going from enjoying a barbecue to fighting a fire.

I have never had any formal training and neither did any of the parents that were helping. We did of course have two things in common we were all solders and concerned parents.

When I came upon this fire, one soldier was already fighting the fire. Three other soldiers came later and assisted in putting it out.

The fire was allegedly started by some teenagers. That is why I am writing — because I want parents to be aware that some children don't respect the unpredictable nature of fire and the damage it can cause.

Parents please go over some safety tips about fire with your kids.

1. Don't try to cook without mom and dad or light anything on the stove.

2. Don't play with matches or lighters and if you see someone doing this — Tell someone.

3. You can't hide fire. It will burn whatever is in its path.

4. Fire kills and destroys lives, homes, and property.

The outcome of our fire was minimal, only a few trees were burned. Had we not put it out before the fire department arrived, the damage could have been worse. For more information on fire prevention, go to Building 18. Special thanks to those who went above and beyond the call of duty.

Pets need TLC

A few weeks ago, four little kittens were left on the doorstep of the Vet Clinic where I work. They were left outside in the chilly night air to defend themselves from any wild animal that might happen along.

This past weekend they were joined by four new kittens. Someone "dumped" the four newborn kittens on our step yet again. The sad thing is these kittens weren't even a week old, too young to be away from their mother. Many mornings we come to work to find dogs tied to a pole with no food or water. Sometimes, we even find one just running around outside the clinic, begging someone to feed it. We find cats in boot boxes. No food, water, or litter. Sometimes the owners will leave a note. I guess this makes them feel better about what they are doing to their pets.

The fact is the Stray Facility can't hold all these animals. We have a limited number of cages. And we have to follow rules and regulations like everyone else. Every animal that goes through the Stray Facility gate is guaranteed five days there to find a home. If the animal is found to be non-adoptable (i.e. aggressive or sick) we euthanize it.

I love my job, I can't see myself doing anything else. But like every career, there is its down side. And euthanizing is one of them. Every time an animal is put to sleep, I wonder where its owner is at that moment. I wish I could call them and tell them what just happened to "Fluffy." I wish they could feel the sadness and the tears that we fight back when we have to take a life before its time. But then I remember that in our society, that animals aren't seen as part of the family anymore.

Rain delays fireworks until Sunday

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Although the fireworks were delayed a day because of rain, the weather didn't dampen the spirits of the more than 7,000 soldiers bussed from Sand Hill for the pre-July Fourth festivities on York Field Saturday. Waiting for the soldiers were carnival rides, an inflated slide, climbing walls, the opportunity to knock a buddy off a two-foot column with a giant pugil stick and plenty of food.

Almost 19-year-old Christopher Moffett, who is a private with 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, was just one of the soldiers who took turns with children jumping, leaping and sliding down the inflatable slide.

The native of Palm Bay, Fla., admitted to being "a little too old" for the slide but was glad to experience the carnival-like atmosphere.

"It is great we get to come out here; this is a lot of fun," Moffett said after jumping and bouncing down the slide.

Pvts. Andrew Hall and Jason Gillis took a ride on the Spin Out, a smaller version of the Octopus ride. The "Charlie Rock" soldiers with 2nd Bn., 19 Inf. Regt., said the afternoon gave them a chance to relax after five weeks of training.

"We've been a little cut off for the last five weeks and this is a great way to build morale," said Hall, who said he was looking forward to the live music and "breaking it down to the dance."

When the band, Cornbread, took to the stage, an audience, which was mostly wearing camouflage, sang along to the band's rendition of the punk band Sublime's hit Love is What I Got.

In addition to the live music and carnival rides, the Sand Hill soldiers had plenty to eat. Jesse Carter, the Officers' Club general manager, said there was enough food to feed an Army or at least 5,000 soldiers. Some of the food for sale included 9,000 hamburgers, 2,000 hotdogs, 1,000 barbecue sandwiches, 1,500 cases of soda and 4,500 bars of ice cream.

During last year's festivities, the food lines were really long, Carter said, and staggering the arrival of the trainees helped to alleviate the long food lines.

The only long lines were for pizza. Sgt. Rob Brown, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, said the organization was selling the pizza faster than it could be made. BOSS soldiers manned the pizza booth and raised more than $1,000 for the organization.

"The volunteers were working to raise money but they also had a good time," Brown said.

Not only did the Army's newest soldiers get the opportunity to relax for the day but some of them also had the chance to visit with family.

Pat Siter, from Lake City, Fla., displays the tattoo she purchased for $3. She traveled to Fort Benning for the pre-Independence Day celebration.

Maura Allison drove from north of Atlanta with daughter Emma to see her husband and the 3-year-old's father, Pvt. David Allison, who will graduate from one station unit training Aug. 31.

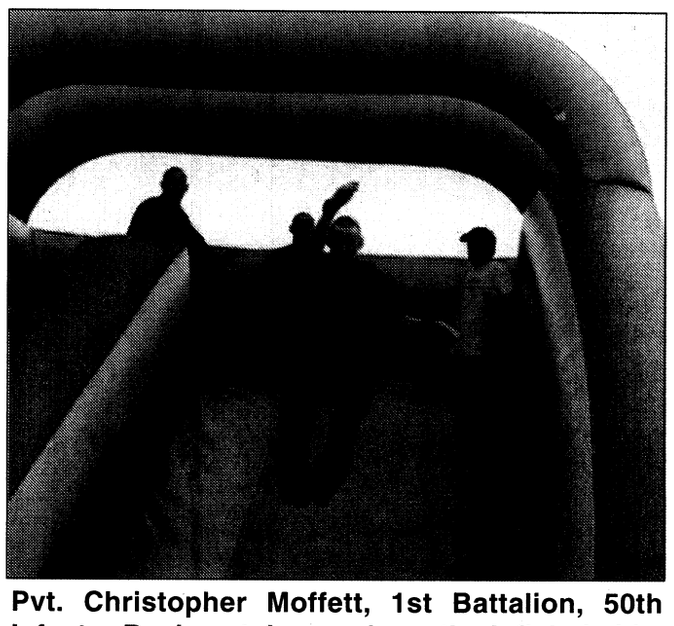
"I am fortunate that I live close enough that my family can come down and visit," said the soldier with the 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

Even the soldiers working the day appreciated the early celebration.

Spc. Jessica Shields with the 71st Military Police Detachment, said although she would enjoy the fireworks while directing traffic, on the Fourth she planned to remember the nation's birth by barbecuing with friends.

As families started arriving for the later events — the flag pageantry and Infantry Band performance, the forecasted rain arrived. Almost 1.25 inches of rain fell causing the fireworks to be postponed until Sunday night.

Nearly 3,500 people gathered at York Field and the surrounding area to view the fireworks the next night. The rain delay gave Anita Petit the advantage of watching the fireworks with her two small children and husband, Kevin.



"I had to work last night so this is great," she said. "We got here early and played football until dark. The fireworks were really great."

Benning grooves to Cornbread's sound

Local band returns to post for performance

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning festivities, like Saturday's Independence Day celebration, serve up family fun with a hefty helping of Cornbread.

A local eight-member pop rock band, Cornbread has become a post favorite, with a mass appeal to Fort Benning's diverse audience, said Tandi Cain-Morris, Fort Benning's MWR marketing assistant.

"We try to please a lot of different ages and musical tastes," Cain-Morris said. "And Cornbread seems to have a message for everyone."

Keni Thomas, the band's lead singer and songwriter, believes the appeal lies in the group's style.

"If we had to be compared to anyone, I'd say we're a modern John Cougar, but we could pass for friends of country rock," said Thomas, who founded the group in 1995, while stationed at Fort Benning with the 75th Ranger Regiment.

"On weekends I'd hang out at 'The Loft,' in Columbus, and play a little acoustics. I met others like me who were interested in starting a band of our own. We've evolved a lot since then," said Thomas, the only remaining original band member. "But from the beginning I think we did everything right — we put out a good product and put on a good show."

A native of Gainesville, Fla., Thomas joined the Army in 1991 during the Gulf War. Despite the loss of six soldiers from his company during Task Force Ranger in Somalia in 1993, Thomas said he's never regretted his time in the Army, and in many ways it gave the band direction.

"I never planned to stay as long as I did, but I was having such a good time," said Thomas, who left the Army in 1997, after nearly seven years of service, to pursue his first love full time. "In fact, that's where the name 'Cornbread' came from. I was the only one who liked the cornbread in the K-rats, so one of the guys nicknamed me Cornbread and it just stuck."

Though candid and enthusiastic about his love for the Army and his music, Thomas spoke soberly about the experience that inspired the song Hero, with lyrics like "Momma lost a little boy, but his country gained a hero."

"Originally I wrote it about a young soldier who died in Somalia, but it's come to mean a lot more than that," Thomas said. "Those of us who came back, came back changed. In a sense we all lost that little boy in us."

By 1997 the band was "paying the mortgage," so Thomas left the Army to promote Cornbread full-time.

He said the band's receiving a lot of radio play on the east coast and video airtime in London.

They've opened concerts for notable names like Sister Hazel, Dexter Freebush, Joe Diffie, Ty Herndon and Toby Keith. And recently national recording labels have shown an interest in Cornbread's future.

> "Those of us (Rangers) who came back (from Somalia), came back changed. In a sense we all lost that little boy in us."
> Keni Thomas
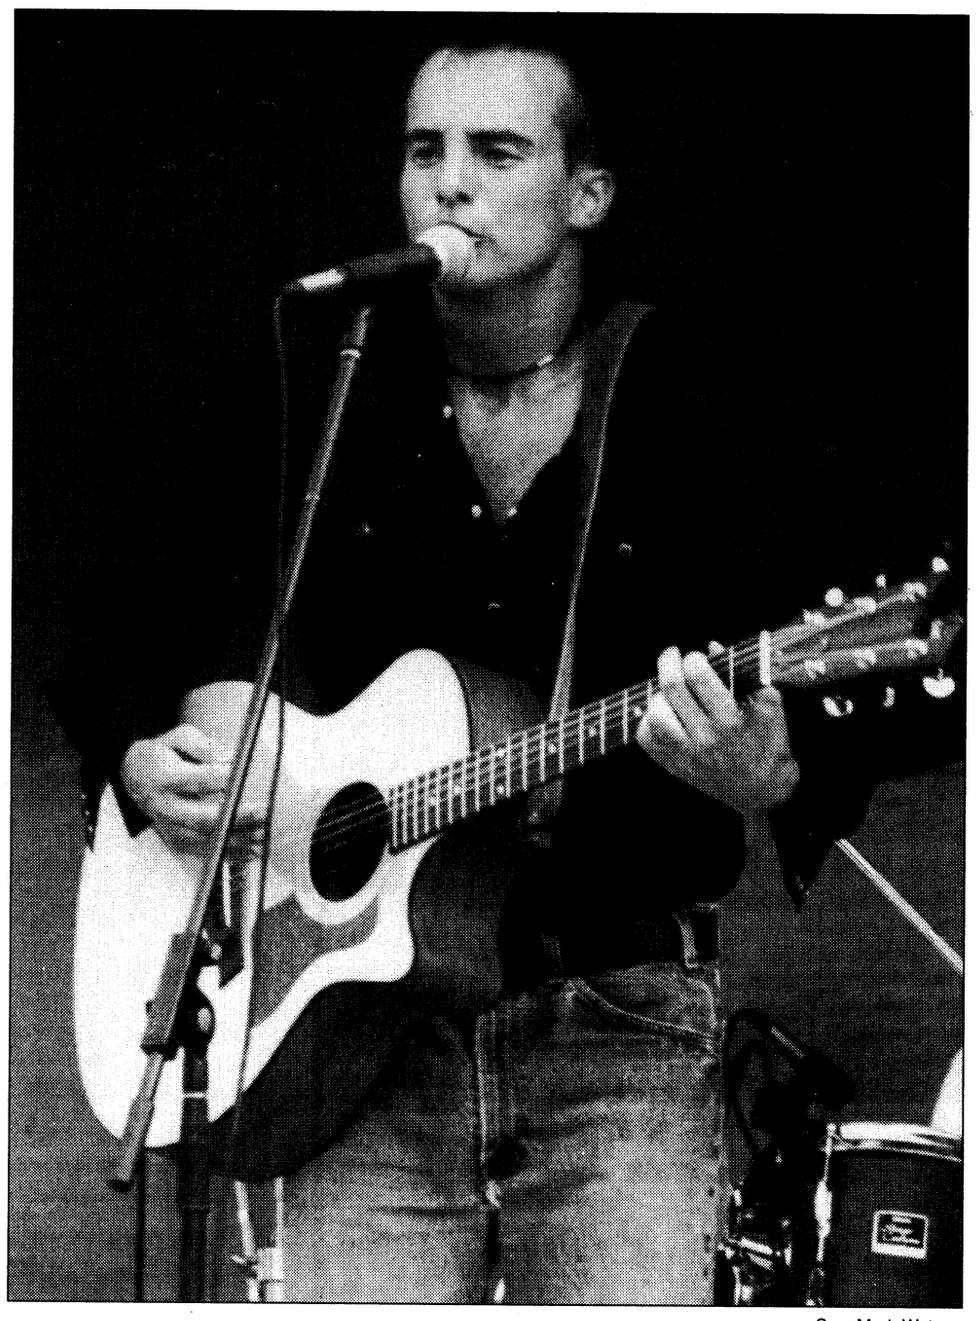
> Cornbread lead singer



"I'm expecting big things," Thomas said.

But in the meantime, Thomas and his bandmates are content to enjoy performing on Fort Benning.

"We're an American band, so we love performing here," said Eddie Whalen, who plays base guitar. "It just fits with the whole vibe of the group.

"We love the craziness of the soldiers. They're wild and loud and like to cut loose. Loud and proud — that's the perfect Cornbread audience."

Besides Thomas and Whalen, group members include backup singers, Kelli Franklin, Andrea Martin and Jeanne Forehand, lead guitarist, Alex Jacobs, drummer, Robbie Wilson, and guitarist, Marcus Pitman.

SETS: Program includes Muscogee County schools

Professional development and adequate staffing are an on-going need to provide caring and sensitive educators.

Army installations, parents and school systems need to work together to keep each other informed and ease transitions.

Fixes to the majority of these problems are identified in the MOA. These include:

Allowing parents to hand-carry student records from one school system to another.

Developing virtual orientation tours of schools for school and installation Web pages.

Posting extracurricular activities on school and installation Web pages.

Communicating requirements for enhanced or alternate diplomas, options and opportunities for earning graduation credit and information about required state testing.

Modeling what should be in a student portfolio.

Including senior-level military representation as an ex-officio member or adviser to the district school board advisory council.

SETS examined 39 high schools in nine school districts on or surrounding selected Army bases, according to the study's executive summary. More than 420 military students who had transitioned at least once during high school and more than 230 educators participated in interviews.

After research was gathered and analyzed, school board officials, high school principals and installation commanders met in Washington to hear the results, said retired Lt. Gen. H.G. "Pete" Taylor, MCEC chairman.

"The meeting allowed the educators to see beyond just their schools into a much broader community," Taylor said. "As they talked, they saw they had common transitioning student problems with school districts across the nation. The memorandum of agreement they developed was just a natural progression to address those problems."

Dr. Bill Harrison, superintendent of Cumberland County Public Schools, participated throughout the research collection and MOA processes.

"The research data gave us clear evidence mobile youngsters face serious issues as they move from school to school," Harrison said. "I think sometimes we have the tendency to miss the obvious. The meeting the Army hosted allowed us to focus on the obvious and work toward making life a little easier for transitioning students and their families."

The MOA is likely to include more school districts in the near future, said Maj. Becky Porter, special assistant to the chief of staff of the Army for education.

"The agreement has enormous potential for growth to hundreds of other school districts," Porter said. "Not only to those by Army and other military installations, but to ones without a military connection, because the research it is based upon speaks in a language educators readily understand. Another reason it will grow is because it makes sense to society at large which has become increasing mobile over the past 20 to 30 years."

Copies of the SETS executive summary and MOA are being distributed to all Army installations commanders and school liaison offices. The executive summary will be posted on the World Wide Web in mid-August.

Frogs: Undergo study

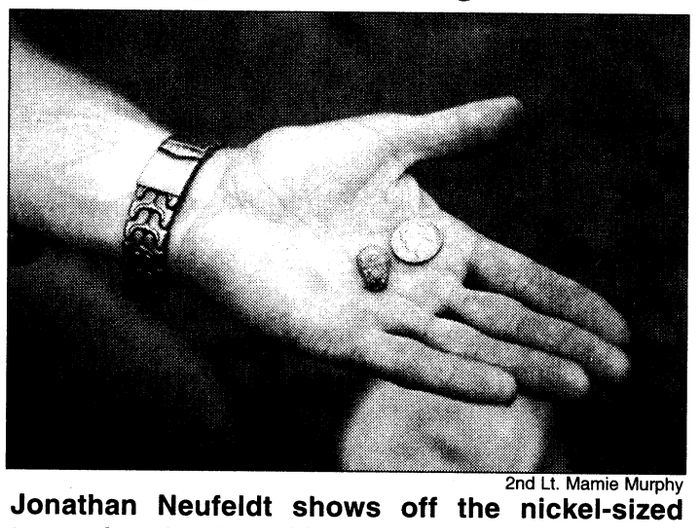
Twelve frogs were implanted with the transmitters last year. Two returned to the breeding pond, both males. Only eight have been implanted so far this year.

This short, stubby, nocturnal frog uses temporary ponds to breed. When it rains and these natural ponds form, the frogs jump at the occasion to breed.

There are three breeding sites on Fort Benning. The primary site is near Hastings Range. The other two sites are located in the same immediate area.



Gopher frogs seem to be rare, but their secretive nature makes it difficult to determine their true population status.

Gopher frogs once ranged from North Carolina to eastern Louisiana, to most of Florida. But the number discovered in the past few decades is much lower. Few frogs have been found in Louisiana since the 1960s. Only one breeding population is now known to exist in Mississippi.

Our perception of rarity hinges on the difficulty of determining the presence of a species. The chances of discovery are low for a frog that stays beneath the ground.

Most frogs are located by listening for calling males at night at a breeding pond or catching the tadpoles with a dip net.

The reasons for concern about the destiny of gopher frogs vary. Most center around environmental protection issues, ranging from legal aspects to an interest in preserving our natural heritage of native plants and animals.

Jonathan Neufeldt shows off the nickel-sized transmitter implanted into the frogs' abdomen.

An encouraging sign is that the organizations and industries that can have the greatest influence on survival of these species care about their fate.

According to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, 644,000 acres of wetlands were lost between 1986-1997.

The estimated wetland loss rate is now 58,000 acres annually.

This represents an 80 percent reduction from the previous decade.

Freshwater vegetated wetlands continued to decline, while freshwater ponds continued to increase by nearly 13 percent in the last decade.

"The gopher frog is an animal that has environmental problems and for the most part these are problems that have been created in great part by us, by humans. So I think it's important that we take responsibility to do what we can to remedy the situation," Gibbons, said.

"The public doesn't realize what a big service the defense program does. The irony is that the defense facilities are set up to protect the country, but they also protect the environment and the gopher frog is an example of that," Gibbons said.

Large military bases and other government lands serve as vital havens for both rare and common species.

They protect wildlife habitats by limiting public access and commercial development. They also protect the field research that increases the ecological understanding of various species.

Gibbons recommends, listening for snoring in the dark woods next time the opportunity arises, it might be the sounds of a gopher frog.

"The gopher frog is one of the cutest, big frogs I know. A calling male sounds exactly like someone snoring, a loud and marvelous noise you can actually enjoy, when it's a frog," Gibbons said.

thirty minutes, shattering the previous record of five hours, he said.

Troops from 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment and tankers from 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., with an airborne antitank missile company, each faced a regiment worth of targets. with a combined total of 44 combat vehicles, the two individual groups "destroyed" 88 tanks and 150-160 armored fighting vehicles, he said.

"Everyone did a great job." Cucolo said. "What impressed me the most was their discipline. The OPFOR would come up to me and say, 'Even if there was one man left with a rifle, you guys never let go. You fought us all the way.'"

The exercise also went well and was a good learning experience for the soldiers in the heat of the battle.

"It went great," said Sgt. 1st Class John Saulsbury, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "We had a whole new crew and equipment. We had to learn to work well as a team. We were short strengthed and it was over 100 degrees everyday, but no one went down from the heat."

Although the OPFOR did manage to slip around 3rd Brigade's forces on occasion, Cucolo said his soldiers did an outstanding job and got better every day.

"I love these guys," Cucolo said. I give them an 'A plus,' but we always can do better.

"We brought home the knowledge to become even better here."

million gallons.

"Even though there has been a significant amount of rain lately, the water in our environment has not been safely replenished to the point we are out of the drought," said Joe Wilkins, an environmental specialist with DFEL.

According to meteorologists there is no end in sight for the ongoing drought, which is approaching the end of its sixth year.

The worst months for drought are July and August, said Staff Sgt. William Malcomb, weather forecaster for Fort Benning.

He said the maximum average rainfall in June is around 3.37 inches a day, but during the past three years it has only reached up to 1.45 inches a day. And this year the greatest amount of rainfall was June 12 when 1.26 inches of rain fell.

Fort Benning residents use between 8.2 and 10 million gallons a day and last year in July the flow rate dropped below 60 million gallons a day triggering the post to take a more restrictive response to water consumption.

This year Fort Benning officials are asking residents and workers to not only conserve outdoor water use but also indoor use.

Lessons learned in desert still timely

Chris Bray
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

It'll never be what you expected. You'll never have what you need. And you'll have to do things you've never even thought about.

That was the message delivered by Maj. Daniel Stempniak June 27 during a Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate's Brown Bag luncheon.

He spoke on his experience as a young platoon leader during Operation Desert Storm. Despite the widespread perception of that war being a mass exercise in accepting a hapless enemy's instant surrender, Stempniak and his troops saw intense and sustained fighting that involved tanks, Bradleys, and dismounted infantry. And those who came home brought back a lifetime of lessons learned.

"Communication always fails," Stempniak said. "Combat is loud, disorganized, inefficient, and ugly. People ask me, 'what were you thinking?' And I say: I wasn't thinking."

Stempniak, a former small group instructor for the Infantry Captains' Career Course and the outgoing commander of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was serving in a unit scheduled for decommissioning when Iraqi troops crossed the border into Kuwait; today, the 3rd Battalion, 41st Infantry Regiment no longer exists. He reported to the battalion as a newly commissioned graduate of the U.S. Military Academy on June 20, 1990, and was immediately on his way to the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif. The unit was to do several months of training before being shut down in November.

But then the soldiers were called in early from the field during their final training exercise, and surprised with a four-day pass.

"We were told to enjoy our weekend," Stempniak said. "Then we got back, and we were locked down."

The battalion shipped to Saudi Arabia in October, one month before their scheduled decommissioning date — and the first time the unit had deployed since World War II. That experience, the major said, offers a lesson that soldiers should never forget.

"No matter what you're doing today," Stempniak said, "you could be at war tomorrow."

But the lessons were just beginning. Officers and NCOs put all their time and energy into ensuring their soldiers were ready to go, Stempniak said, then discovered that the focus on leadership tasks left them personally unprepared; leaders, he warned, "will be the last ones to get ready."

Sudden, urgent deployment to war also comes with a burden not often considered, Stempniak said. When an active duty unit heads to the fighting, a reserve unit is frequently activated right behind them — and they move into the barracks and offices the regular army troops just left behind. That means an added set of responsibilities for already harried soldiers who have to prepare their work space and living area for someone else.

Once they arrived in Saudi Arabia, ostensibly for a six month tour in defense of that country attached to the 2nd Marine Division, Stempniak and his soldiers began to see massive shipments of heavy munitions — including row upon row of 500-pound bombs.

"There were some very good indicators we weren't just there for the defense of Saudi Arabia," Stempniak said.

A problem emerged as the mission changed from a defensive role to an offensive one, and as the soldiers sat in the desert for six months waiting for a logistical infrastructure to be built in support of the coming fight. The battalion's leaders thought they were rushing their men to combat — so they hadn't wasted time gathering up training aids like MILES gear and blank ammunition. That meant training for war with improvised tools.

It also meant training while weak from dysentery, in a desert swarming with flies, with nothing but slit trenches for human waste and nothing but a kevlar helmet for doing laundry. In that environment, Stempniak said, there were never enough medics to go around; that's a reality that soldiers need to prepare for before they need the skills.

"If you haven't ever stuck anybody," Stempniak said, "you need to do it now."

Then the war began; B-52s rumbled in over the desert, close enough for U.S. troops to count the bombs as they fell, and began to rip the Iraqi positions apart.

Stempniak said he could feel heat on his face from some of the bomb blasts.

"And it just made me think, 'thank God I'm an American,'" he said.

Then came the ground war.

"When it's for real, when it's game time — it's amazing what you don't have to tell your guys, anymore," Stempniak said. "Everybody's head is in the game. Everybody pulls security to standard."

The challenges of the ground campaign began before the troops even moved out. Soldiers lost to illness were replaced with whoever was on hand; Stempniak's platoon received a combat engineer to take the place of an infantryman. The new soldier showed up with an M-16 A1 — the rest of the unit was armed with the M-16 A2 — and no body armor. Stempniak put the engineer on his own Bradley, and prepared to move out.

"Some of us good Catholic boys had already received our last rites," Stempniak said. "This is part of the mental and emotional transition — there was a body bag for every man in the battalion."

Stempniak's platoon might have appreciated a few more engineer replacements; when they started moving, they quickly realized they didn't have the combat engineer support that they needed. They frequently had to do engineering tasks themselves.

"That's the most critical training you can do, is demolition," Stempniak said. "It's critical. Because you're going to have to go through the minefield."

The paths they cleared through those minefields were so narrow they could see mines sticking up out of the sand on either side of them as they drove through; it was, Stempniak said, some pretty slow going, and a passage always made in total silence.

"I'd rather get shot at," he said. "I'll take my chances with your marksmanship."

The Iraqis were happy to oblige that desire.

"You see white flashes out there, you may want to pay attention to those," Stempniak said. "I was a second lieutenant. I'd never been shot at."

The shooting taught all kinds of lessons, quickly, one right after the other.

"The 25 mm chain gun is highly effective against dismounted troops and bunkers, Stempniak said, all the way out to 3,000 meters — and this was with Bradleys built in 1981 and 1982 — but the depleted uranium anti-tank round can cause a surprising problem in battle: The round penetrates an enemy's tank or personnel carrier, kills everyone inside, and zips right through — and the troops who fired the round, sitting 2,000 meters away, can't detect the kill. Stempniak said his troops found themselves switching from armor-piercing to high explosive rounds just to confirm the impact.

Another weapon on the Bradley, the TOW missile, has greater-than-advertised utility, Stempniak said. When dismounts or bunkers need to be destroyed outside of the range of the Bradley's other weapons, the TOW "can be used for more than just killing tanks."

On the third day of the ground war, Feb. 26, Stempniak and his men attacked the Al-Mutla police post. Tankers leading the assault buttoned up and killed all the vehicles at the Iraqi post, Stempniak said, then opened the turret hatches and used their .50 caliber machine guns to provide suppressing fire. Bradley fire added support for the unit's dismounts as they cleaned out the post's buildings.

"Twenty-five mm through the windows is very effective," Stempniak said. "Very effective. What saved our day was supporting fires."

Dismounted combat is a reality lost on mounted troops, Stempniak said; the turret and the CVC helmet cut a leader off from the sights, sounds, and smells that form the chaos of a riflemans experience.

"If you put men on the ground, you belong there with them," Stempniak said. "That's where the fight is worst."

Stempniak stressed the value of hand grenades in the task of clearing buildings; soldiers are at an enormous disadvantage if they lack grenade training and are afraid to use one of their most valuable tools.

Finally, Stempniak said, one of the most important lessons of combat is the need for absolute flexibility and a will-do attitude.

"This stuff about 'that's a company objective, that's a battalion objective' — that's not cuttin' it," he said. "Platoons win battles. ... When you move — if all else fails, they will follow."

Col. Tim Melody, Combined Arms and Tactics director, said after Stempniak's presentation that the realities of combat illustrated by the fight in Kuwait represent critical knowledge for infantry soldiers. No matter how much military technology advances, he said, the truths of war will remain the same for men who fight on the ground.

"It will not just be hot spots on the screen for us, in our branch," Melody said.

TRADOC units receive accolades

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — Training and Doctrine Command headquarters and many of its centers and units have been awarded the Army Superior Unit Award for helping to get Army Transformation underway.

The award, from former Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera, was official in January. The public announcement was made in TRADOC when the award citation was read at opening ceremonies of the command's annual Organization Day activities June 29.

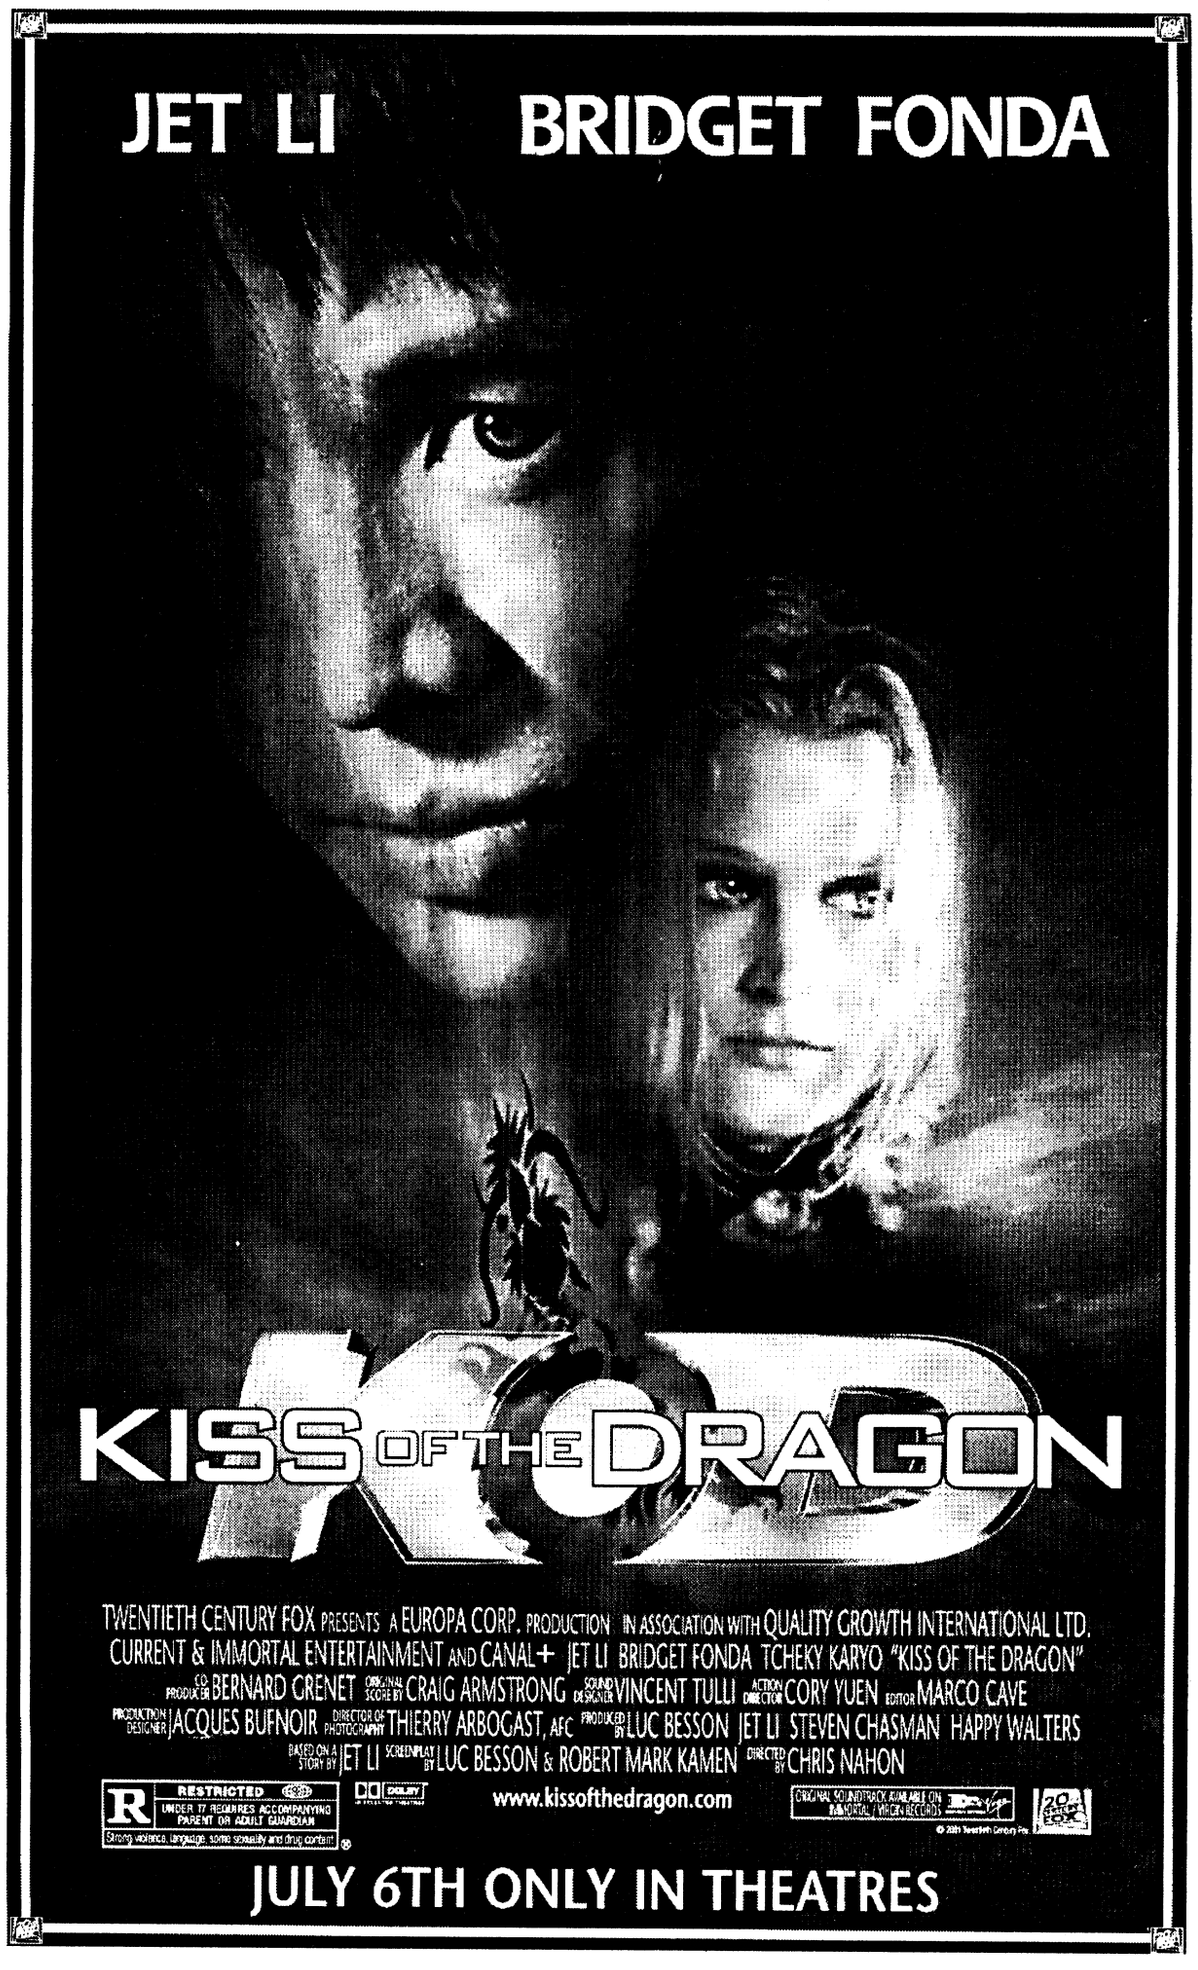
"During a uniquely dynamic period in the Army's 225-year history, Headquarters, TRADOC, and numerous other organizations and commands developed and implemented a comprehensive campaign plan to dramatically transform the Army to better fulfill its role in the National Security Strategy for the 21st century," the citation reads.

"Members of this command were faced with significant challenges to support Army Transformation initiatives while at the same time accomplishing worldwide operational missions."

Forces Command, Army Materiel Command and TRADOC along with their organizations were also recognized for their part in making Transformation a viable program.

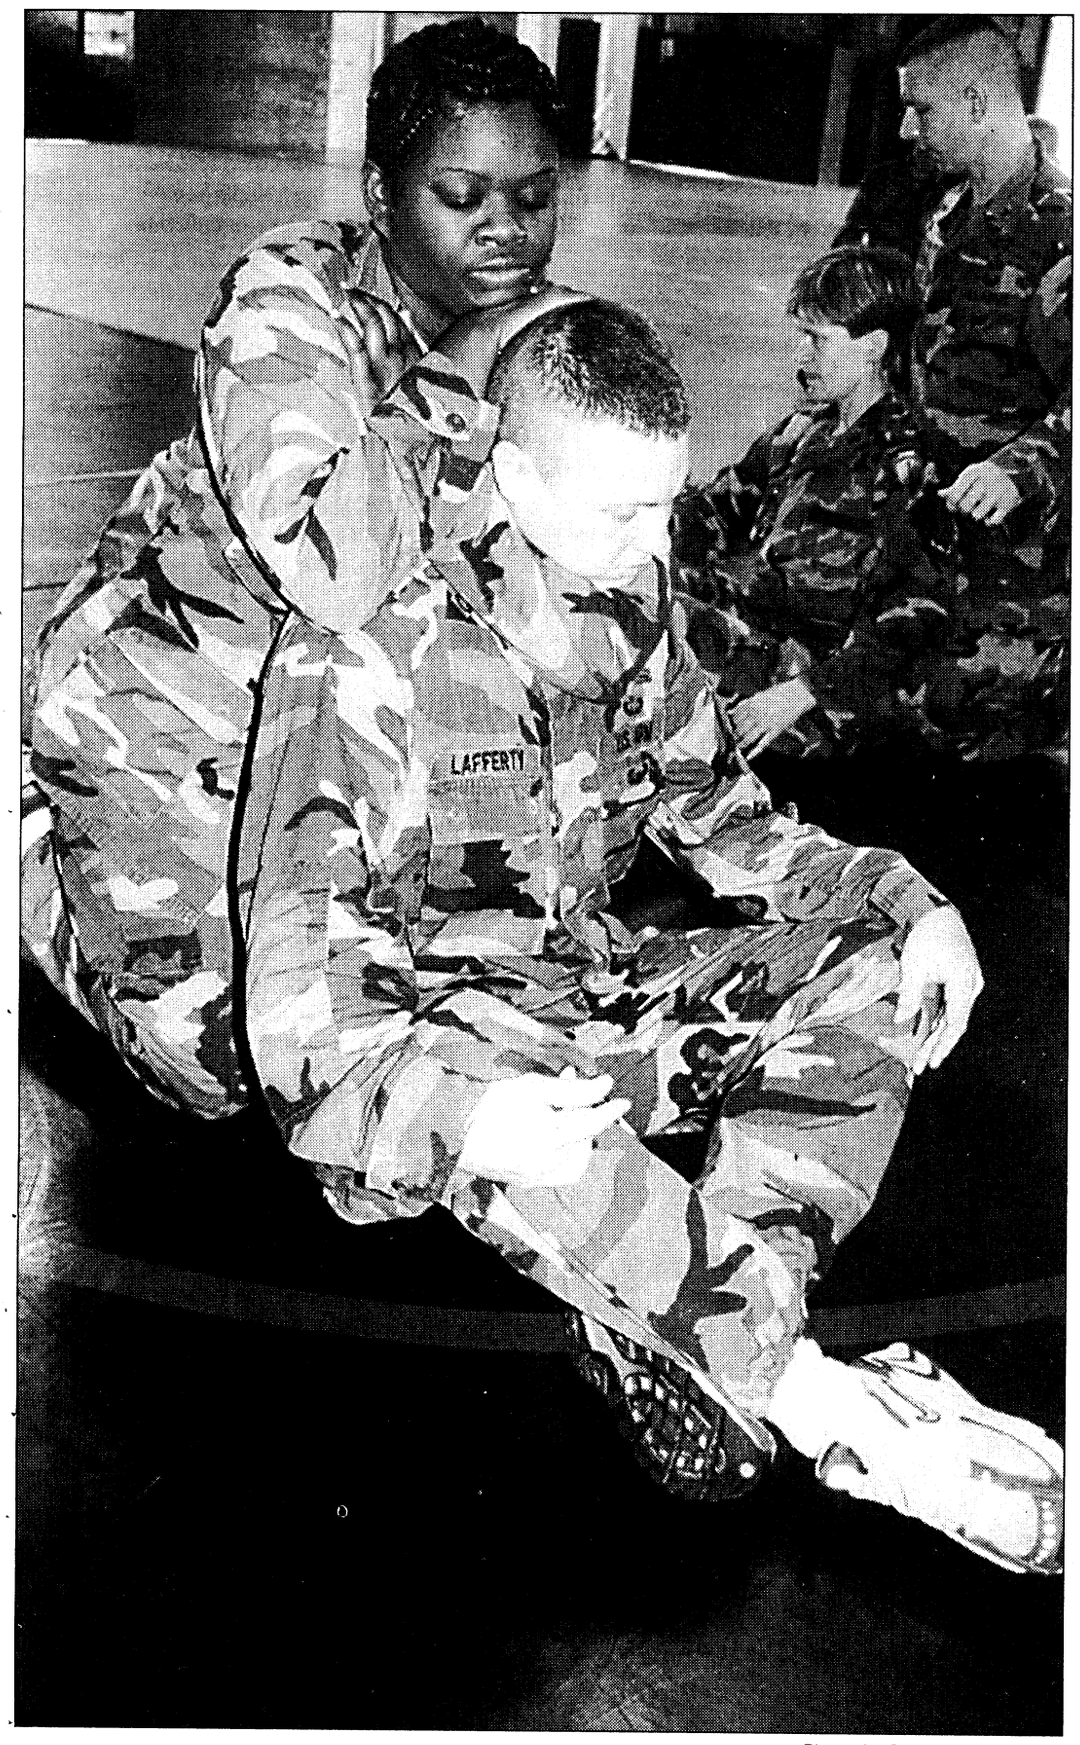
"Award of the Secretary of the Army's Superior Unit Award on this scale is a rare event," said Angie Saucier, team leader, Personnel Actions in TRADOC's adjutant general organization. "Normally unit award applies only to TO&E and TDA organizations of battalion size or equivalent."

Centers and units at eight TRADOC installations have won the award.



They are Forts Huachuca, Ariz.; Benning, Ga.; Rucker, Ala.; Knox, Ky.; Sill, Okla.; Leonard Wood, Mo.; Leavenworth, Kan.; and Gordon, Ga.

Soldiers who were assigned to those units for at least 30 consecutive days during the period between Oct. 1, 1999, to Oct. 1, 2000, are eligible to permanently wear the ASUA ribbon. Civilians meeting the criteria are entitled to permanently wear a lapel pin. Personnel assigned after Oct. 1, 2000, may wear ribbons and pins for the duration of their assignments.



Saucier said that anyone unsure whether they are eligible for the award should contact their local AG.

Soldiers learn ground fighting techniques

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The master trainer at Fort Benning's Basic Instructor Certification Course for ground fighting techniques, Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larsen, has fought to turn soldiers into ground fighting warriors.

However, many units have not caught on to the fact the course caters to all military occupational skills.

"This course is open to everyone," Larsen said.

The course instructors train about 15 soldiers per five-day class with one class approximately every two weeks.

The warrior ethos, Larsen said, is what he believes will help soldiers win battles. Battles that will be fought on the ground.

Larsen said he builds his course leading philosophy on training everyone equally, as soldiers.

"Size and strength are sometimes a crutch," he said. "People with less physical strength tend to focus on technique and win.

"It just so happens the females we have are smaller and focus on technique."

Soldiers who have gone through the course said they agree with Larsen that smaller people with better technique tend to win more matches.

Focusing on technique and learning to execute each move almost perfectly, he said, are what will allow soldiers to win battles.

The modern Army combatives, skill level one course, focuses on training the trainer, and is designed around training the leaders of soldiers.

"We're teaching the basic rifle marksmanship of hand-to-hand combat," Larsen said.

Soldiers taking what they learn in the course and study to perfect it, as well as pass their new knowledge on, Larsen said, is just as important as learning the techniques themselves.

"I learned a lot," said Spc. Shawnese Purnell, C Co. 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "I'm sore and aching. But I have technique in my fighting."

Purnell said she also feels more confident in herself because, "I can actually accomplish something. If I am in a fight, I have confidence."

"We don't (discriminate.) This course is for the Army. In our opinion, there is no difference between the sexes, it's all about the warrior ethos," Larsen said.

"I think (the course) is really good because ... my experience is that (people) fighting end up on the ground," said 1st Lt. Babette Lindsey, platoon teaching, assessing and counseling officer, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who completed the course last week.

Larsen recommends that soldiers wanting to take the course be physically fit. "It's a very physically demanding course and you should be in shape before you come here."

Training NCOs wanting more information about the course should call 545-2811.

MEDDAC begins new unit history chapter

Nurse takes command of hospital

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The U.S. Army Medical Department Activity started a new chapter in its history during a change of command ceremony Tuesday at Martin Army Community Hospital when Col. Gale S. Pollock assumed command from Col. James L. Beson.

Beson will serve as the deputy commander for clinical services at Brook Army Medical Center, Fort Sam Houston, Texas.

Beson addressed the audience during the ceremony.

"You honor Maura and I with your presence here today," Beson said. "Maura and I love you all and will miss you."

Beson wished his successor well by saying, "Fear not, you're commanding the best MEDDAC in the Army."

During the ceremony, Brig. Gen. Darrell R. Porr, South East Regional Medical Command and Eisenhower Medical Center commander, thanked Beson for his service.

"Today, you lose a great command team. You couldn't have been more fortunate to have a better command team watching over Fort Benning," Porr said.

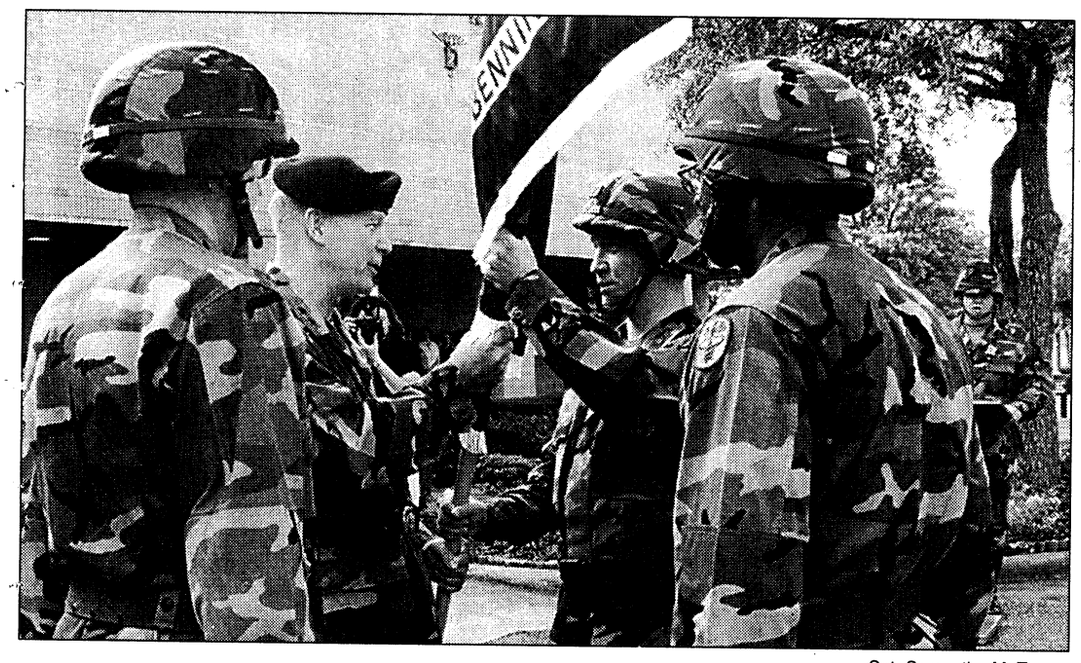
"On behalf of the South East Regional Medical Command, we offer you sincere thanks and Godspeed."

In welcoming Pollock to the unit, Porr said.

"This command team will take care of the health care needs of Fort Benning, but more importantly, they will take care of the people."

"There's nothing more important to me each day than keeping the soldiers that serve this great nation healthy," Pollock said. "God bless each of you and God bless America."

Pollock most recently served as the MEDDAC commander, Fort Drum, N.Y. She has also had assignments at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, Washington, D.C., and Letterman Army Medical Center, San Francisco, Calif.



Pollock is married to Lt. Col. Douglas L. McAllaster, who is stationed at Fort Lee, Va.

Former dentistry chief returns

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

In a change of command ceremony Monday Col. Robert W. Lutka took command of the U.S. Army Dental Activity from outgoing Col. David B. Clem.

This is not Lutka's first time to Fort Benning. In 1986 to 1990, he served as the chief of General Dentistry at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Clem addressed the crowd and expressed his gratitude to leaders for their support in helping his unit raise the dental readiness of Fort Benning troops from 75 percent to 95 percent in less than three years during his command.

"Command is truly a team event," he said. He credits his wife, Ann, together making the "Clem team," as being his inspiration and said there were "no words that allow me to properly thank her for her love and support."

Clem, Ann their two sons, Sean and Jeremy move on to Fort Campbell, Ky.

Lutka gave brief opening remarks and said he and his family were ecstatic to return to Fort Benning

"I am definitely honored to take command of this wonderful unit, it is second to none," Lutka said. "I would like to thank the 'Clem team' for bringing this to the leading edge of Army dental corps."

Lutka told post leaders and clinic staff to expect an emphasis on family values during the next two years.

"My goal in the command philosophy most of all, remember, we are only here to do everything possible for the soldiers of Fort Benning to be successful in their mission. If we lose that focus, if we lose that selfless service and dedication to the soldier then we have no reason to be here And we definitely do not have a right to be here," he said.

Lutka is coming from Fort Polk, La., where he commanded the Dental Activity.

Lutka is joined by his wife, Donna, and three daughters, Brittany, 15, Sarah, 12, and Mary, 9.

Engineers return home from California

598th comes home from NTC rotation

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The 598th Maintenance Company, 36th Engineer Group returned home from a 30-day rotation at the National Training Center, in Fort Irwin, Calif.

Headquarters, Headquarters Detachment, of the 598th and 608th Ordnance Company, 36th Engineer Group and attachments from Fort Bragg, N.C. and Fort Stewart, Ga., deployed with 3rd Brigade for their turn at NTC.

Battalion Commander, Lt. Col. Scott Fabozzi, summed up the unit's mission while at NTC.

"We replicated an MSB, main support battalion. We provided reinforcing and back-up support to the entire 3rd Brigade for all classes of supply, water, fuel, ice, everything," Fabozzi said.

"We ran our log convoys three or four times a day, once the actual exercise started," Fabozzi said.

As time progressed, Fabozzi noticed the improvements that experience brought in his battalion.

"We definitely got better, you can't help but get better. It's a unique training environment — the terrain, the environment is like no other," Fabozzi said.

"It was a good opportunity for everybody to learn a lot of new things. These are skills that you can't learn in the garrison environment," 1st Lt. Patrick Evans, operations officer said.

The unit took full advantage of their time at the training center and logged a lot of valuable experience.

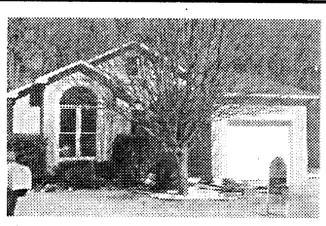
"While we were at NTC, we drove more than 1,400 miles and delivered 177,000 gallons of fuel and 14,000 gallons of water," Fabozzi said.

The challenges the field environment presented were confronted head on by the unit.

"Having half the battalion back here (at Fort Benning), created a challenge," 1st Lt. Tonia Horton, personnel officer said,

"There was a lot of paperwork that needed signatures back here, so we mailed and e-mailed documents back and forth."

Evans said the unit's time was well spent.



"It's really good training, it's the closest thing we're going to get to war," Evans said. "It's really a good test of a unit's readiness."

Fabozzi was in agreement.

"You can't do it anywhere else. It's just NTC, that's why they send you out there, to really test you," Fabozzi said.

Local soldier leads field in competition

TRADOC names top instructor

Capt. Jacqueline Guthrie
84th Division Public Affairs Office

MILWAUKEE, Wis., — He scored a touchdown, but he couldn't have done it without the team.

"It's a win for the whole division," said Sgt. 1st Class Wayne McPhillips, 84th Division (Institutional Training) and Training and Doctrine Command's Reserve component 2001 Drill Sergeant of the Year.

McPhillips is an 84th Division drill sergeant, currently assigned to the Drill Sergeant School, 6th Brigade (Professional Development) headquartered in Milwaukee, Wis., and a former member of 2nd Battalion, 339th Regiment, 2nd Brigade (Basic Combat Training) in Madison, Wis.

However, this Columbus resident spends all his drill weekends training young soldiers in 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment at Fort Benning and works full-time as an account manager at TSYS.

"Drill sergeants are in the business of bringing heart and spirit to young Americans," said Lt. Gen. John Van Alstyne, Training and Doctrine Command deputy commanding general for initial entry training, during a ceremony June 26 honoring McPhillips and the newest active component drill sergeant of the year, Sgt. 1st Class Debra Thorn, Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

"I have seen hundreds ... of drill sergeants, and in every case I have come away impressed with their motivation and their dedication and their competence that they display every day, day in, day out," Van Alstyne said.

It was McPhillips' dedication and competence that got him recognized as an outstanding drill sergeant at battalion, brigade and division level before competing against the Army's top 21 NCOs for the title.

The three-day competition included completing a physical training test, teaching common soldier tasks and appearing before a board of sergeants major.

"It's kind of like a wedding," McPhillips said. "Six months of preparations for three hours of performance."

For McPhillips it was six months of intense preparation that he couldn't have done without the help of several people including Sgts. 1st Class Thorn and Blaine Huston and 1st Sgt. Robert Priest.

"They pumped me and they prepped me and prepped me and prepped me," McPhillips said. "I don't think the evaluators could have caught me off guard."

Huston, also a member of 2nd Battalion, 339th Regiment, 2nd Brigade, is the 84th Division's 2002 drill sergeant of the year and one of McPhillips' battle buddies.

The two spent hours, days and weeks preparing for the competition. McPhillips said, they would spend 15 to 16 hours a day just asking each other questions.

The pair trained with 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., and at Leonard Wood's drill sergeant school. Huston also accompanied McPhillips to the TRADOC competition to provide encouragement and to see what's in store for him when he competes for the national title next year.

McPhillips met Thorn in May when he and Huston traveled to Leonard Wood to prepare for the competition. Thorn is also Fort Leonard Wood's drill sergeant of the year and she and staff members at the drill sergeant school helped McPhillips get ready for the competition.

Thorn and McPhillips bonded and used e-mail to continue training together. Their families have also become friends.

"It was frosting on the cake to know we both won," he said.

Before becoming a member of the 84th Division team, McPhillips, an airborne infantryman, spent four years with the 82nd Airborne Division at Fort Bragg, N.C.

He comes from a military family and has five brothers and sisters.

His father, retired Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald McPhillips served six years on active duty and 24 in the Army Reserve.

Despite his own military experience, Gerald McPhillips encouraged his son to go right to college, "but my life was the Army," McPhillips said. "As a kid, my friends played with Star Wars toys. Of course, I had G.I. Joe. As a middle school student, my friends were playing with BB Guns. I had an AK-47 training aid with LAW rocket launcher training aid to play with."

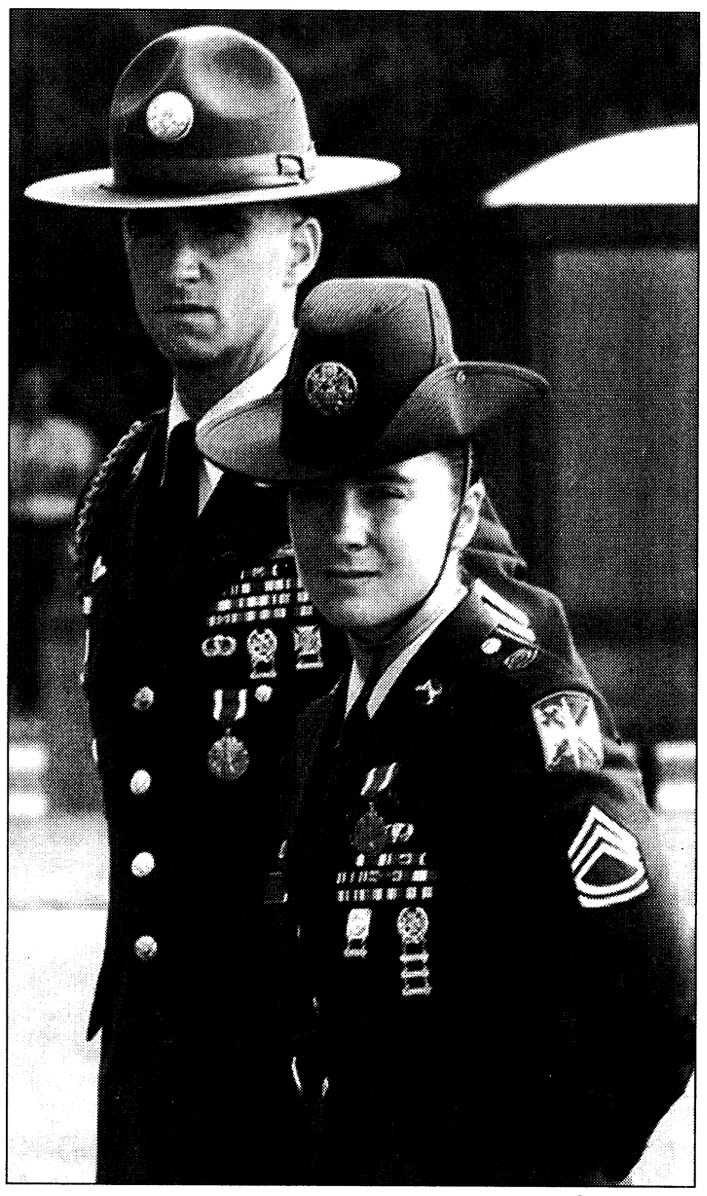
Two of his brothers also found homes in the Army.

"Matt, my older brother, served in Desert Shield and Desert Storm and then headed to the 82nd Airborne at Bragg where I joined him in the spring of 1993. By God's providential hand, we were assigned to the exact same company," he said. "My little brother, Tim, joined the Wisconsin National Guard in the spring of 1997."

"Despite my father's desire for me not to join the Army, he had raised me to be a soldier," McPhillips said. The best part about being a soldier and a drill sergeant is the overwhelming satisfaction that comes from being a part of the transformation process of changing civilians into soldiers, he explained.

"To be a part of something so life-changing in the life of another is amazing. These soldiers will never forget the impact that you have had on their lives ... the thought of that would humble anyone," McPhillips added.

"I didn't want to leave active duty," McPhillips continued. But he knew that if he didn't he would never attend college. While a student at Maranatha Baptist College, Watertown, Wis., he joined the Army Reserve.



He admits that he originally wanted to be a drill sergeant because he planned to go back on active duty and thought serving as a drill sergeant would advance his career.

"It's also every private's dream to emulate his or her drill sergeant one day," he added. But it became more than a career enhancer or fulfillment of a dream.

It became part of his life. He found great satisfaction in being a citizen-soldier.

"I realized I could have the best of both worlds as a Reserve component soldier," he said. After earning his business degree, McPhillips became an account manager with TSYS, a credit card processing company in Columbus.

But as a member of the Army Reserve, this 84th Division Railsplitter puts on his uniform and teaches basic combat skills to active duty soldiers at Benning.

McPhillips' move to Georgia could have also moved him to a different training division, but his dedication and commitment remains with the 84th.

Instead of traveling to Milwaukee to perform his drill weekends, he travels 15 minutes to Benning. He gets more hands-on time with soldiers and, because he is always there, McPhillips is able to help coordinate annual trainings that 84th Division units perform at Benning.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric Shinseki will present the Ralph E. Haines Jr. Outstanding Drill Sergeant of the Year Award to McPhillips in a Pentagon ceremony later this year.

Infantry consolidation approved

Three MOS's merge into one later this year

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

WASHINGTON — Three military occupational specialties will soon be consolidated into one infantry MOS.

The 11H, anti-armor infantry and the 11M, mechanized infantry, specialties will be merged into the 11B MOS.

The consolidation will take place between July and the end of September, officials said, adding that the initiative should provide better assignment, schooling and promotion opportunities for all infantrymen.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki approved the Infantry Career Management Field consolidation June 13 and messages were sent to the field June 18.

"The infantry has taken it upon itself to transform with the chief's initiative," said Lt. Col. David Goehring, infantry personnel systems officer for the Army's Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. He was speaking of the Army's overall Transformation to a more "strategically responsive" force and said the consolidation is also "in sync" with a study by the Army Development System XXI task force to attain "multi-skilled" and "multi-capable" soldiers.

The consolidation will also expand the 11Z MOS to master sergeants, Goehring said. That capstone MOS for skill-level-five infantrymen was previously limited to just sergeants major. He said the change will allow E-8s to become first sergeants of any type of infantry company.

"It provides the opportunity for everybody to cross-train in the 11 series," Goehring said of the consolidation. "It will provide the Army with a better-trained soldier."

> "It (consolidation) provides the opportunity for everybody to cross-train in the 11 series. It will provide the Army with a better-trained soldier."

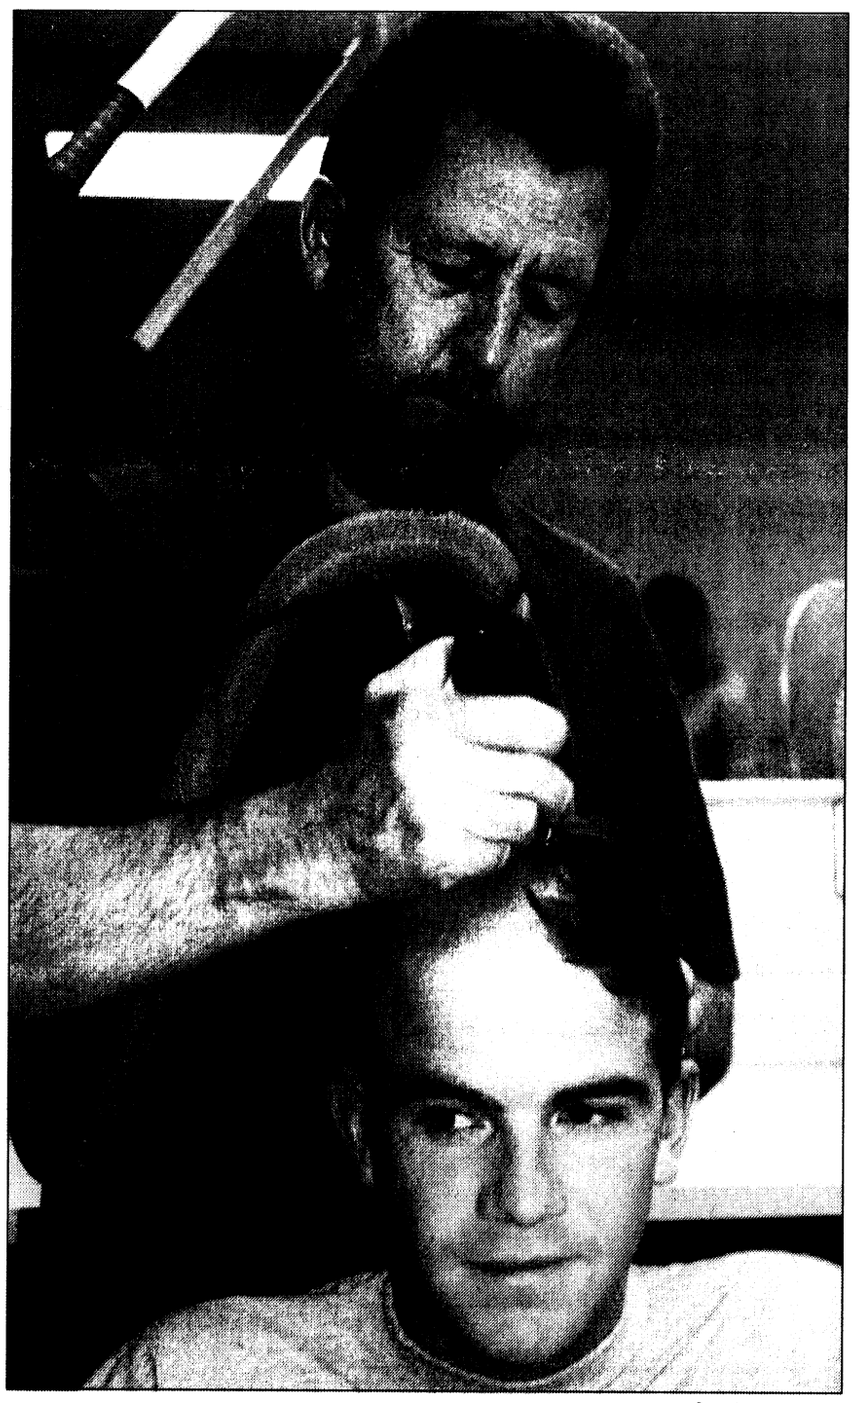
When soldiers transfer from one type of infantry unit, such as light, to another, such as mechanized, they will attend a three-week transition course, Goehring said.

Three new courses are being developed by the Infantry School here at Fort Benning and classes will tentatively begin in April.

The Bradley Transition Course will be for light infantrymen transferring to mechanized units.



The Anti-Armor Leaders Course will be for those being assigned to anti-armor companies in the light force, Goehring said.

And third, a proposal has been made to bring back the Light Leaders Course, Goehring said, for mechanized soldiers moving to the light infantry.

"This is to provide credentials to those young NCOs," Goehring said,

Special to the Bayonet©

They're not professional entertainers, but they are performing 109 shows in more than 20 states.

The 2001 Soldier Show will hit the local stage at 2 p.m., July 28 in the Columbus Civic Center.

The 80-minute live Broadway style musical review showcases the talents of active duty soldiers. These amateur artists are selected by audition from throughout the Army.

This year's theme is "We Are One," building on the new "Army of One" recruiting slogan.

The road to stardom began months back, when interested applicants submitted their application packages to an audition panel consisting of soldier peers, senior Army leaders, Army Community and Family Support Center directors and an artistic staff. Submissions included personal videos, photos and letters of recommendation from their commanders.

Live auditions took place April 1 as 23 finalists traveled to Fort Belvoir, Va. Sixteen entertainers, plus six audio and lighting technicians, emerged from the final cut.

After six weeks at Fort Belvoir, the soldiers hit the road for a six month tour. The soldiers' jobs actually become those of a star, working 14-hour days, 7 days a week for more than six months.

It's these 22 soldiers who will make their debut to the Fort Benning crowd in two weeks.

Among the list of crew and cast members are several from Georgia. Spcs. Jeffrey Larson, James Pittman and Jennifer Sennhenn are assigned to Fort Stewart, Ga.

And by no means, is this assignment a break for the soldiers. The members were reassigned to CFSC-Army Entertainment Division for up to eight months. Soldiers are still expected to adhere to military fitness and appearance standards.

They even retain some of their rank status by being assigned specific military responsibilities and show duties that mirror their rank, in addition to their roles in the show.

Besides learning fresh dance steps, performers had to memorize new melodies.

More than 50 songs comprise the 80-minute show, ranging from current country, R&B, rap and rock tunes to Broadway, movie and patriotic songs.

The show is not funded with tax dollars, but with specific funds for soldiers, generated by programs through MWR and sponsors.

For the fifth year,

Transition to interim brigades on track

Posts named as homes for new units

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Forts Richardson and Wainwright, Alaska; Fort Polk, La.; Schofield Barracks, Hawaii; and the Pennsylvania Army National Guard will be the homes of the next units selected to transition into Interim Brigade Combat Teams.

"Land power remains an indispensable element in furthering America's enduring interests and provides an essential component of global engagement," said Secretary of the Army Thomas E. White during a press conference today. "These interim brigades will help us move towards a force that is more strategically responsive and dominant across the spectrum of military operations. Their improved deployability and lethality will enhance deterrence and meet an operational requirement that does not currently exist."

Army officials said they are coordinating with the contractor of the Interim Armored Vehicle to determine appropriate ways to accelerate IAV fielding for the two IBCTs at Fort Lewis.

The Army plan is to complete fielding of the IAV for the other four brigades within three years after the Fort Lewis brigades are fielded. Once the new fielding dates are set, the Army will announce the planning dates for the other brigades.

The latest brigade selections are conditional on results of an Army Program Environmental Impact Study currently being conducted, officials said. That study is slated to wrap up in the fall.

The first brigades to transform — 3rd Brigade of the 2nd ID and 1st Brigade of the 25th ID, both stationed at Fort Lewis, Wash. — started the transition to IBCTs in 1999. They are scheduled to finish the process in fiscal year 2003 and 2004, respectively.

"The Interim Force is a bridge to the Objective Force. The capabilities of the IBCTs fulfill an immediate requirement by substantially improving the lethality, survivability and tactical mobility of light forces while retaining the strategic deployability advantages of those forces," said Army Chief of Staff Eric K. Shinseki. "We believe the IBCTs will significantly contribute to the joint warfight as maneuver forces until technology has advanced enough to provide the Army with a lighter, more lethal and survivable Objective Force capable of rapid deployment."

Family keeps traditions alive

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

commentary

There's been a lot of talk about family traditions in our office lately.

We've discussed everything from old wives' tales to superstitions and traditions that people carry on from one generation to the next.

Take Sgt. Samantha M. Torres, for example. Her family celebrates a quinceneria, a coming of age party for all the women at 15. This is an old Hispanic tradition that her family keeps alive with each girl.

Whenever Rachel Garcia moves to a new home, she ties a red ribbon on her bed post for good luck. This is a tradition that her mother passed to her.

These two beliefs, along with others, made me think about the traditions my husband and I have begun to pass on to our family.

Traditions are the little things that make life interesting.

On her first birthday, my daughter, Audrey, had her first real taste of sugar with a strawberry cake, strawberry icing and fresh strawberries on top.

This was the same as my first birthday cake.

When she turns 16, Audrey will get my pearl ring. This was given to me by my step-mother, Connie. In her family, the women in each generation pass a pearl ring to the women in the next when they turned "sweet 16."

Every year at Christmas, until Audrey turns 18, her grandmother, Diane, will add more pearls to the string she started last year. Diane began giving pearl necklaces to her nieces in hopes that it will become a family tradition.

Whether it's turkey at Thanksgiving, or ham at Christmas, all our traditions are important. They promote our family's cohesion and togetherness — two things we strive to instill in Audrey every day.

Another tradition Audrey will always be able to look back on, is both my husband's and my military careers.

Like both of my grandfathers, I joined the Army straight out of high school.

And James, like his father and his father before him, serves his country proudly.

One of the most important traditions I carry with me every day serves as a reminder to myself of the devotion and never-ending love I have sworn to my husband — my wedding ring.

It's perhaps one of the most prevalent of traditions, and many people wear them without thinking about their real meaning. The true symbolism and meaning of a wedding band is one thing I will teach Audrey.

All in all, I believe traditions were originated to instill faith and trust in a certain belief and have evolved over time into something many of us cherish.

It is my goal that my daughter grows up knowing that the traditions in our family came from, and continue in our ever-lasting love for her and our family, and that she passes that same love onto her own family.

Commentary prose flows freely

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

I like to write, and it's a good thing, because it's not always easy to crank out a commentary.

I'm at an advantage because I'm not really on a weekly deadline. Anything I write is almost a bonus when it comes to filling the space on the opinions page. And that's a good thing for me because, well, it's not always easy to crank out a commentary.

Sometimes I get lucky and the Muse sees fit to send me not just a topic, but the words and phrases to flesh that topic out. When this happens, I can sit down at the keyboard and just let my fingers do the writing.

I once wrote a commentary about how my husband builds model airplanes and the lengths he will go to insure the little planes are completely to scale. In my opinion, it wasn't really creative writing. I didn't make any of the details up.

He really does trim paint brushes down to a few hairs so he can paint the tick marks on the dials and gauges. All I had to do was describe a few of the models and document the events leading up to their completion.

If it was always that easy I'd quit my day job and make my living as a full-time writer. Sadly, it's not. It's just not that easy to crank out a commentary. For the time being, I'll be continuing my career as a civil servant as I double as a frustrated writer.

It would be helpful if I could capture the Muse in my keyboard, but, free spirit that she is, there's no telling where and when inspiration will strike.

I'm not usually even at the computer the Muse visits. On one occasion, I was on the Riverwalk and saw one too many examples of one of my pet peeves (bicyclists and rollerbladers who don't wear helmets) go by. The Muse must be a proponent of helmets, too, because I didn't really write that commentary. I put my fingers on the keyboard and the commentary was delivered. I didn't write that commentary, I just took dictation.

But it doesn't always work like that; it's not always easy to crank out a commentary.

I make it a point to routinely empty my computer desktop's recycle bin. What I'm really doing is destroying the evidence of all the times it wasn't easy to crank out a commentary. No one will ever see the started and half finished products that would have wasted reams of paper and overflowed my trash can if I was using a typewriter and real paper to write.

I had an English professor once who described the periods when the Muse refuses to call as "blue funk." "The only thing you can do when you're in a blue funk," he would say, "Is try to work through it."

"Keep trying," he said. "And when you can't come up with anything to write about, play it safe. Stick to the familiar. Write about what you know."

What I know? What I know is, it's not always easy to crank out a commentary. And how do you get a commentary out of that?

Swimmer unhappy with pool closure

This is a message of complaint about the complete stoppage of the indoor swimming for no reason whatsoever at Briant Wells pool.

The ostensible excuse is for the engineers to perform maintenance work, but engineers deny this to be true.

The real problem is poor organization and poor supervision.

On the best post in the U.S., command presence is needed at this Field House.

The indoor pool is in excellent condition and should be kept available for reasons of physical fitness and good health.

Policy helps soldiers advance

Jennifer Wingfield
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Since the provision for conditional promotions was announced in May, less than 1,000 soldiers have been promoted under the new policy inclusive through June 18.

"We thought we would get a higher response with this program," said Sgt. Maj. Franklin Raby, outgoing personnel policy integrator for the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. "This is a program that all the major command sergeants majors signed up for.

"Word hasn't gotten down to the unit levels as well as it should have. The information is supposed to be pushed down the command channels to the sergeant majors who are ultimately and deeply involved in this," Raby said. "They in turn recommend to the commander or the first sergeant the names of the soldiers that fall in the conditional promotion category.

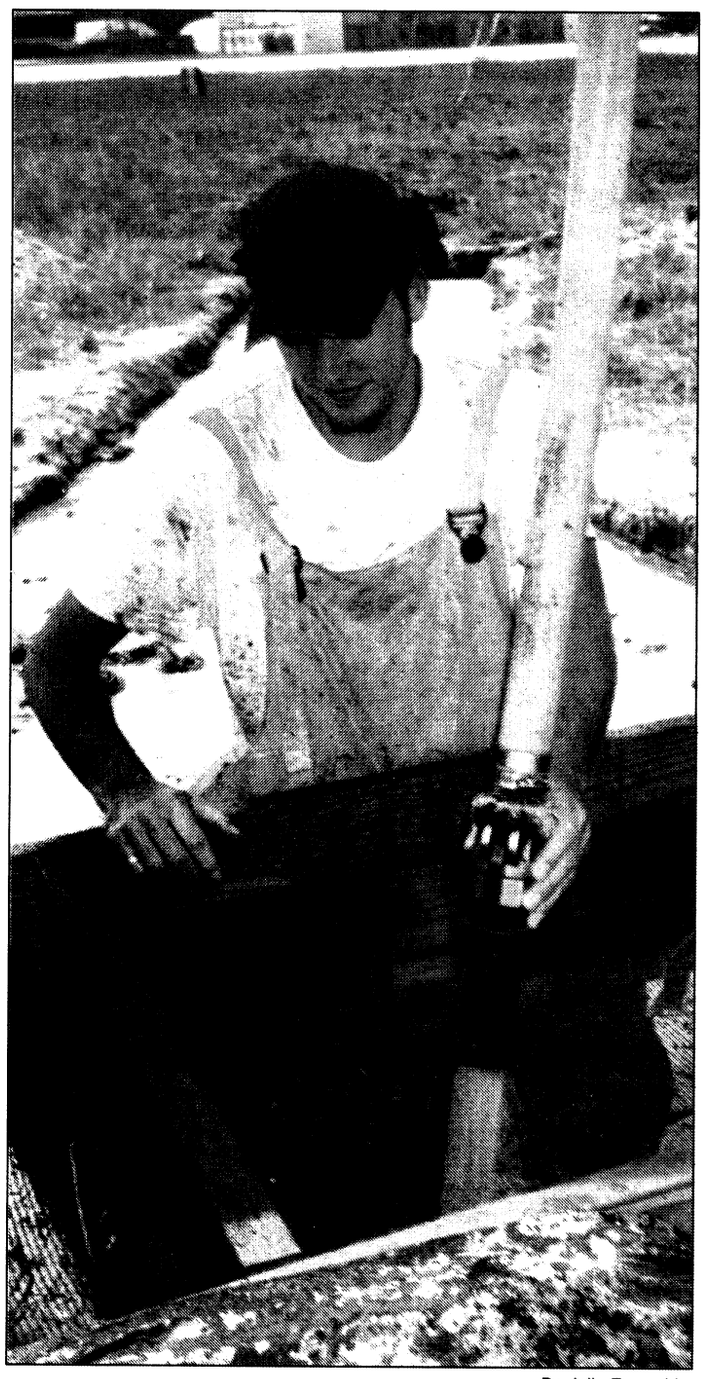
"There are three categories of conditional promotional," Raby said. "Deployment to an operational area, such as Bosnia or Kosovo, in which the soldier has met the cutoff but cannot attend the Primary Leadership Development Course; having a temporary profile; or having been scheduled for attendance at PLDC are all reasons for early promotion."

"The object is to get them promoted if warranted," he said.

The initial policy change was submitted by way of a military personnel message sent out to the field personnel offices and support battalions at the different installations. Yet there are still some commanders and senior NCOs who do know that this policy exists.

The delay in promotion ultimately contributes to the readiness of the units, Raby said. Correct soldiers need to be placed in the correct military occupational specialty, and of course, at the correct grade. If there is a shortage of sergeants, this is a means to correct the shortage.

"If a soldier falls into one of these categories and not promoted, it is costing him time in grade that applies to his eligibility for his next promotion and ultimately his or her pay," Raby said.



But not all the news is bad. The breakdown for the July's pending 4,483 NCO promotions includes 15 sergeant major's, 317 master sergeant's, 498 sergeant's first class, 1,153 staff sergeant's, and 2,500 sergeant's.

"There are only 36 STAR military occupational specialties for July," said Raby's replacement, Sgt. Maj. Gerald Purcell. "There are only 1586 vacancies in that area."

Raby commended the field for doing an excellent job in getting those figures down continuously for the last four months.

Raby will soon bid farewell to his position in the Pentagon and "Aloha" to his new one awaiting him as senior enlisted adviser of the Pacific Command.

His replacement, Purcell, was formerly assigned to the Personnel Command in Alexandria in the enlisted personnel management division. Under his direction, he hopes to eliminate some of the workload on those in the personnel system and make it easier for soldiers to compete for the E-5 and E-6 positions.

Airfield site of excavation

Former Indian town to be rediscovered

Danielle Foerschler
Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

The largest excavation in the Fort Benning area since 1933 is taking place at Lawson Army Airfield.

Archeologists will excavate more than 30,000 square meters of the Creek (Muscogee) Indian town of Kasita on the airfield this summer.

The excavation has been coordinated with the Georgia Historic Preservation Division of the Department of Natural Resources and with eleven Indian Tribes in Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Alabama, and Florida whose origins stem from the area.

In 1715 after the Yamasee War the Creek Indians reestablished the town of Kasita. The most recent occupation of the land by the Indians from 1715 to 1836, is known by the archeologists as the Lawson Field Phase, after Lawson Army Airfield.

The town of Kasita stretches four miles long and the widest part is a mile and a half, according to Hunter Johnson, laboratory director with Panamerican Consultants, Inc. Kasita has a sister town called Kawitta.

Kawitta was known as the Red town, red signifying war, and Kasita as the White town, white signifying peace.

The Creek Indians labeled Kasita a peace town because the village was rooted in their distant past and hidden in mystery.

This did not mean the villagers avoided war when general agreement favored conflict.

The Creeks associated peace towns with culture, wisdom, and knowledge as well as the color white, which the Indians related to purity and that which was old, traditional, distinguished, and holy, according to author Billy Wynn.

They may have also thought of a peace town as a place for mediating disputes, suggested anthropologist Charles Hudson.

Kasita was special because it served as the "head peace town" where leaders from many villages gathered to deliberate peace proposals.

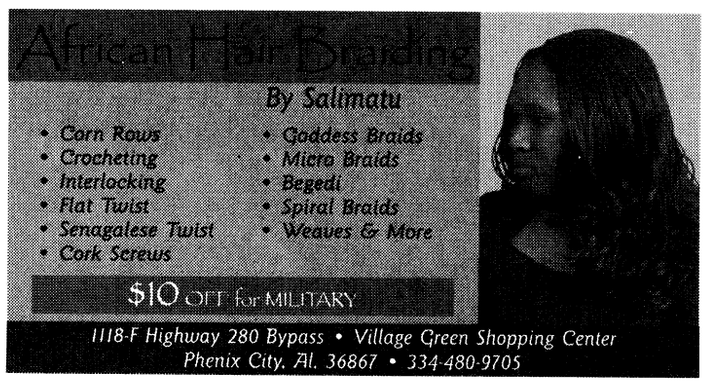
James Edward Oglethorpe, an English officer, negotiated with various chiefs at Kasita.

A peace treaty was signed on August 21, 1739.

The treaty guaranteed a wide section of land along the Atlantic coast belonged to the colonists, although the Indians still would maintain exclusive hunting rights in some of the area. Oglethorpe agreed that the colonists would never settle farther west and would never again intrude on lands the Indians considered exclusively theirs.

It was not common for executions to take place in Kasita, although with war tradition was sometimes abandoned.

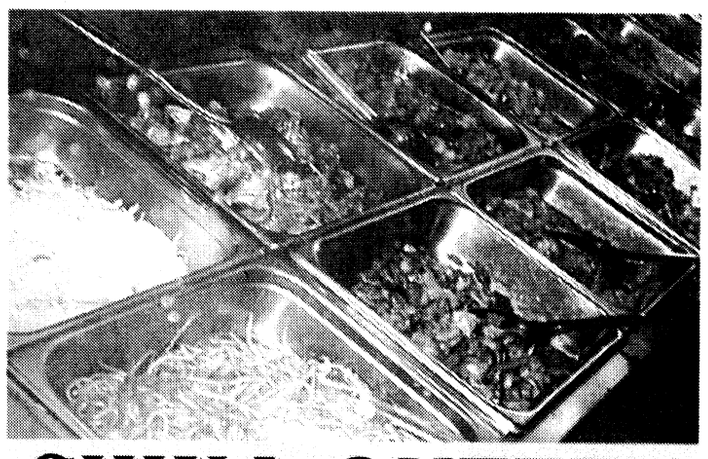
Colonial traders knew to flee to peace towns during hostilities and sometimes-found sanctuary.



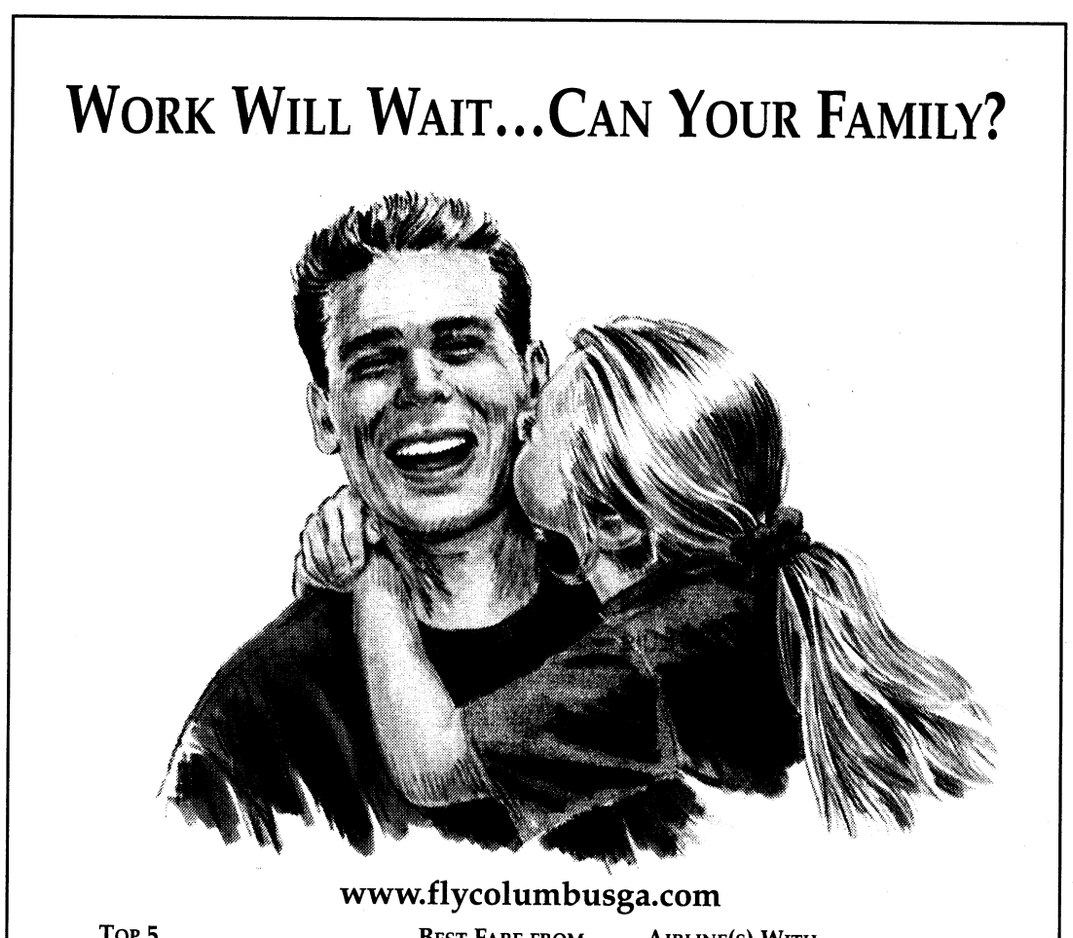
Adam Hodgson, a missionary, visited Kasita in 1820 and wrote that the town "appeared to consist of about 100 houses, many of them elevated on poles from two to six feet high, and built of uncut logs, with roofs of bark, and little patches of Indian corn before the doors."

Although Creeks had adopted many European ways during the 18th and 19th centuries, there was increasing pressure from Georgians to "remove the Indians westward to Oklahoma." A commonly cited reason for their removal was the desire to use rich floodplain soils for the establishment of cotton plantations.

By the end of the 1830s, the removal was almost complete, thus ending 10,000 years of Native American life in Georgia.



To read more about the history of the Creek Indians and the town of Kasita, pick up the book, "The Land and The People," by Sharyn Kane and Richard Keeton.



It's available at the Columbus Library.

Post commander completes milestone 250th jump

Spc. Mark Watson

Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander, waits at the door of the C-130 before making his 250th jump.

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

As airborne trainees sat on their cramped net seats aboard a C-130 July 3, they witnessed an accomplishment one Fort Benning soldier thought would never happen.

As the plane flew over Fryar Drop Zone, Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, commanding general, leaped out for his 250th jump.

"It's a milestone in 36 years of jumping," Le Moyne said. "I never thought I'd jump 250 times out of a military aircraft."

Le Moyne jumped for the first time in February 1965 as a 19-year-old private.

"It's something I would never be able to do in the civilian life," Le Moyne said. "I figured if I didn't do it now, during my first tour in the Army, I'd never do it."

So Le Moyne enlisted and made sure airborne school was part of the bargain. He said he has loved jumping ever since.

"It's challenging and a thrill," he said. "Either you like it or you don't. It's a reason I stayed in the Army.

"I've been jumping now for 36 years," he said. "When I go to the door of the airplane, I still feel like a 19-year-old private. The adrenaline rush is still there."

Le Moyne jumps for more reasons than just his personal enjoyment, he said.

He jumps nearly every week to help ensure the quality and safety of training the future paratroopers receive.

"I have a professional responsibility to find out what they are doing and how they are doing it, and I have a personal responsibility to make sure the standards are there."

During his weekly jumps, Le Moyne takes time out to talk with the airborne students.

Before he puts his parachute on he will walk up and down the rows of students talking to the students and shaking their hands, said Capt. John Hanson, aide-de-camp.

"He truly is a throwback to the old paratrooper," Hanson said. "He loves to jump and interact with future paratroopers."

As the plane lifted off for his 250th jump Le Moyne continued to talk to the soldiers surrounding him. Then it was time.

Le Moyne and Hanson, who accompanied him on the jump, stood up, hooked their static lines to a cable inside the plane then stood by, ready to jump.

With a "go" pat, the two leapt out and floated to the ground.

"Today was what makes jumping fun," Le Moyne said. "It was perfect. There was a light wind, a short flight, there was no heavy combat equipment and a soft drop zone. It was a vacation jump."

By the time the students were on their way out the door, Le Moyne was already packing his chute.

"It's a thrill to watch them go out the door," he said. "You know the emotions they are going through, you know what they are feeling and hearing.

"When you go out that door, you overload on your senses," he said. "All you can hear is your voice counting to four, and you see the tips of your boots get caught in the prop blast, so when you stand on the ground and watch them come out of the door you know exactly what they are going through.

"It's fun. It's worth it. It's part of being a soldier."

Rapid Guardian begins in Kosovo

Weapon confiscations continue

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. troops from Germany and Italy deployed to Kosovo for an exercise this week as American soldiers already there continued their confiscation of weapons on the Macedonian border.

A training exercise named "Rapid Guardian II" began July 10 as about 200 soldiers from the Army's Southern European Task Force (Airborne) in Vicenza, Italy, parachuted into the British sector of Kosovo.

The exercise is designed to test the U.S. European Command's capabilities to quickly deploy forces into the region, officials said.

On the ground, the soldiers will participate in training and orientation patrols with soldiers already in the region, according to officials. They said the operation is expected to last about 10 days.

U.S. soldiers already in Kosovo last week seized a large quantity of weapons near the Macedonian border.

Soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division interdicted five horses laden with weapons July 6 in a mountainous area of Kosovo near the border.

While patrolling along suspected smuggling routes, soldiers from the 2nd Platoon, C Company, 2nd Battalion, 502nd Infantry Regiment interdicted five personnel traveling with five pack animals over mountainous terrain approximately four kilometers south of Sasare along the Kosovo and Macedonian border in the early morning.

As the soldiers drew near, the suspected National Liberation Army members panicked and fled. One of the suspects was captured along with the five pack animals laden with weapons.

"Over the past several weeks our soldiers continue to enjoy success with these interdictions," said Maj. Randy Martin, spokesperson for MNB(E). "KFOR remains committed to ensuring a safe and secure environment in Kosovo."

The captured pack horses were weighted down with 23 anti-tank weapons, six 9 mm rocket launchers with rockets, 25 AK-47 assault rifles, 43 rocket propelled grenades, 19 small rockets, 100 40mm high explosive rounds, one 9mm magazine with ammunition, one 90mm recoilless rifle with eight rounds of ammunition, one 7.62mm magazine with 29 rounds of ammunition, 51 flares, three cell phones, miscellaneous clothing, medical supplies, food, cigarettes and other items.

"This was a significant interdiction. We caught them as they were headed for the border," said Staff Sgt. Kenneth Chaney, squad leader for 2nd Plt., C Co., 2nd Bn, 502nd Infantry. "Our soldiers are working hard to stop the spread of violence along the border. At least these weapons won't fall into the hands of the NLA."

The suspected NLA member was sent to the Camp Bondsteel detention facility and the horses were relieved of their load and set free, officials said.

Commander has mixed emotions about leaving

Col. Carter Ham relinquished command of the 29th Infantry Regiment to Col. Gordon Mereness Wednesday during a change of command ceremony on York Field.

Ham served as the regiment's top officer for the past two years.

During his farewell speech, Ham said he had mixed emotions about leaving command.

"It is a bittersweet morning for me," Ham said.

"I'm sad to leave this great unit, to leave Fort Benning one last time, and most importantly to leave friends who've made these past two years so very special.

"But I leave here taking a lifetime of memories," he said. "Mostly I'll remember soldiers. I wish I could have found a way to thank you each personally."

He then thanked each of his directorates that serve under him. He said they often times go unnoticed, but their contribution is vital.

"It's not very glamorous, they are most often behind the scene. They are the quiet professionals of an incredibly diverse and talented unit. I am proud to have served with them and I will cherish these many memories."

Ham will move to Florida where he will serve as the deputy director of J-8 at Central Command.

Ham and his wife have two children, Jennifer and Jonathan.

"It's not the great facilities or the continual progress that makes this the best Army post in the world," Mereness said.

"It's the world class people who work and live here in this community that make this the best Army post in the world.

"Shari (his wife) and I are honored to join this great regimental team and I look forward to serving with you as we continue our mission of training and supporting the greatest soldiers in the world."

His most recent assignment was as the commander of Operations Group Alpha, Battle Command Training Program in Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

He is accompanied by his wife and two children, Brieanna and Brett.

Florida ceremony bids farewell to commander

Members of the 6th Ranger Training Battalion bid farewell to Lt. Col. Mark A. Johnstone and welcomed Lt. Col. Mark Fields July 5 in a change of command ceremony at Camp James E. Rudder, Elgin Air Force Base, Fla.

During his farewell address Johnstone thanked his staff, family members and the community for their continued support to the battalion throughout his two-year command.

"It is important that we gather to recognize the contributions and service of those who have made it possible for the 6th Ranger Training Battalion to flourish in all of its endeavors," Johnstone said.

He compared the efforts of the local command, soldiers and community as that of one working agent for the accomplishment of a single goal.

"(This) battalion is like a body, each of us has an important contribution ... to everyone who makes up that body, your efforts have exceeded the ranger standard," Johnstone said.

He ended his speech by thanking his wife, Elizabeth, and families of the battalion members.

"Behind most of the rangers there is a ranger wife and some children. Both Elizabeth and I thank you all," he said.

Johnstone moves on to attend the Army War College at Carlisle Barracks, Pa.

During his address Fields stated that he knew of the battalion's great reputation known around the world. And with that he added that soldiers should expect no less than 100 percent from him. He said that as a ranger battalion they will continue to take, "America's sons and turn them into warriors."

In his last two assignments Fields has served as the Special Operations Division Chief at Joint Task Force Six in El Paso, Texas and as the Chief of the Office of Infantry Proponency at Fort Benning.

Fields awards include the Master Parachutist Badge with combat jump device, the Expert Infantryman Badge, the Combat Infantryman Badge and the Ranger Tab.

Fields is accompanied by his wife, Maureen, and their three children Matthew, Carli and Joseph.

Berets spur questions as to former headgear status

Jennifer Wingfield
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — With the Army's recent adoption of the beret, many soldiers are asking what is to be done with their other headgear.

The answer is nothing out of the ordinary — at least not right away, according Master Sgt. Kittie Messman, Army uniform policy officer, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

"When the policy for the black beret was published, we said the green service cap (or) hat would be worn for official duties as prescribed by the commander," Messman said. "At this time, no one will be required to buy or maintain the service cap (or) hat for ceremonial or official duties. As far as the garrison cap is concerned, the only soldiers who can wear it are those who have not been issued the beret."

Because not all Army installations or units have been issued the beret yet, installation commanders will determine when their installation will transition from service cap and hat to the beret, said Lt. Col. Jerry Swanner, chief of personnel readiness, ODCSPER. The beret will eventually be the standard headgear for the Class A and B uniform, and will also replace the Battle Dress Uniform cap in garrison, he said.

The blue and white service caps will still be worn with the Dress Blues and White uniforms respectively.

Soldiers who travel from a unit that has the beret issued will wear the beret while on temporary duty, Swanner said. However, soldiers making a permanent change of station move from a unit with the beret to one which has not been issued the new headgear will wear the garrison cap, unless the installation commanders allows otherwise.

The bottom line is that anyone who has a garrison cap should hold on to it for at least the next year, Messman added

As far as the BDU cap, it is considered a utility cap and will continued to be issued, Messman said.

"When soldiers perform activities that are very work oriented, where the beret would become soiled, damaged, or where it is just not appropriate, the commander of the unit can direct wear of the BDU cap," Messman explained. "Such situations would exist when the soldiers are out on a field exercise. Normally soldiers wear the Kevlar helmet but when they are not doing actual training, the commanders can tell them to take the helmets off and in that case, they would wear the BDU cap."

Messman gave other examples of work in the motor pool or on post detail where the BDU cap would be more appropriate than the beret.

"The beret is not a utility type of headgear," Messman said. "It is not meant for work activities, and also, we do not have a lot of them. We don't want them worn in situations where they can get really dirty. Right now we don't have enough of them to turn in for replacements."

ODCSPER is currently working on an update of AR 670-1, Wear and Appearance of Army Uniform and Insignia, to include specific guidance on the wear of the beret, Messman said. The revision is slated for release by the end of the calendar year.

Infantry: Consolidation will lead to more versatile soldier

explaining that when NCOs show up at a unit, all the soldiers will know that they are trained and ready to serve.

The MOS reclassification should begin in August, Goehring said, and be finished by the end of September. The reclassification will be done at local military personnel offices, he said.

Goehring said the consolidation should be "transparent" to all infantrymen.

"We want the young infantryman to realize there is no impact to him," Goehring said. "It's just going to make him more well-rounded."

"It will give him more assignment opportunities," Goehring said.

For example, Goehring said that until now most positions in Germany, have been for mechanized infantrymen. Now light infantrymen will have the chance to go to Germany, he said.

The consolidation will be a change for the better, said Lt. Col. Mark Fields, former chief of the Office of Infantry Proponency at Fort Benning.

The purpose of the change is to transform the Infantry in step with the army, Fields said.

The consolidation will make the infantry more flexible in several ways, Fields said.

"This consolidation means that PERSCOM will be able to assign soldiers in these skill levels according to the needs of the Army," he said.

"It used to be if you are coming out of the 82nd Airborne Division, you might go to drill sergeant school and then go back to the 82nd.

"Now, a soldier can grow up in the 82nd, when it's time to re-enlist, he can re-enlist for Fort Carson, Germany, Korea, places where there's mechanized infantry. That's a pretty good deal for the infantry," Fields said.

The assignment process will be more flexible to support the changing demands of Army Transformation, Fields said.

"This is something that's long overdue," said Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein, Fort Benning command sergeant major. "I think it's being done for all of the right reasons."

"We need a more proficient infantry that can deploy heavy and light forces. Infantry is infantry, it's only in how we get to the battle that there's a difference," he added.

Klein said he thinks the consolidation will make infantry soldiers more versatile to accomplish their mission.

Klein plans to visit a number of installations over the next three months to explain the consolidation.

He will go to Alaska tomorrow, to Germany July 31, and Korea in August, along with a number of continental U.S. posts.

"In one station unit training, we are going to maintain emphasis on basic infantry tasks. There will be a little exposure to mech and anti-armor," Fields explained.

"At skill level two and three, we'll have training for Bradley gunners and TOW gunners, and Bradley commanders and anti-armor leaders at skill level three."

"The Basic Noncommissioned Officer Course and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Course will train mechanized and anti-armor collective and individual leaders tasks," he said.

Fields said the consolidation will make promotion opportunities in the 11 series "more even across the board and will level promotion discrepancies."

Other career management fields are also considering consolidations, according to Mike Carty, a management analyst for enlisted actions in DCSPER.

"Ordnance right now is going through a reorganization," Carty said, explaining that proposals are being developed. "Aviation is looking at doing an aviation restructure somewhere down the road."

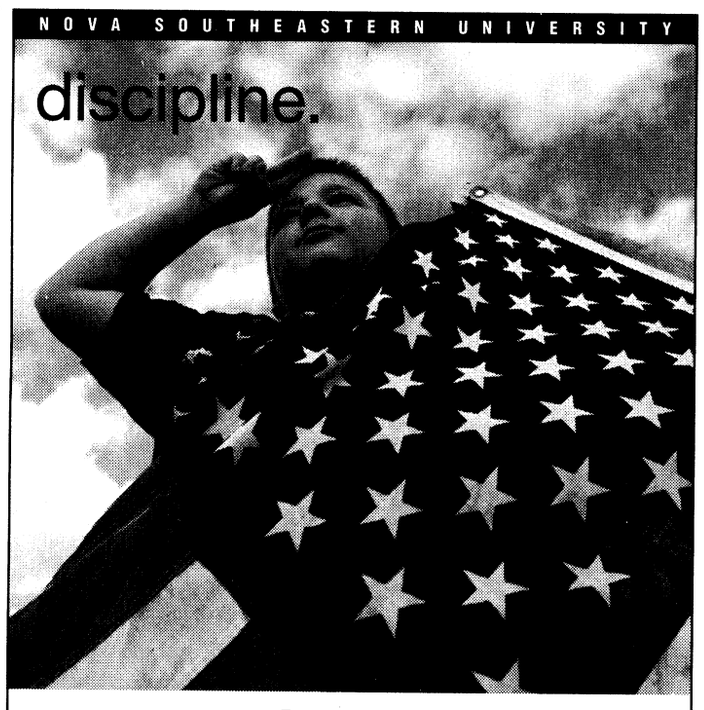
officer, Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Community Activities.

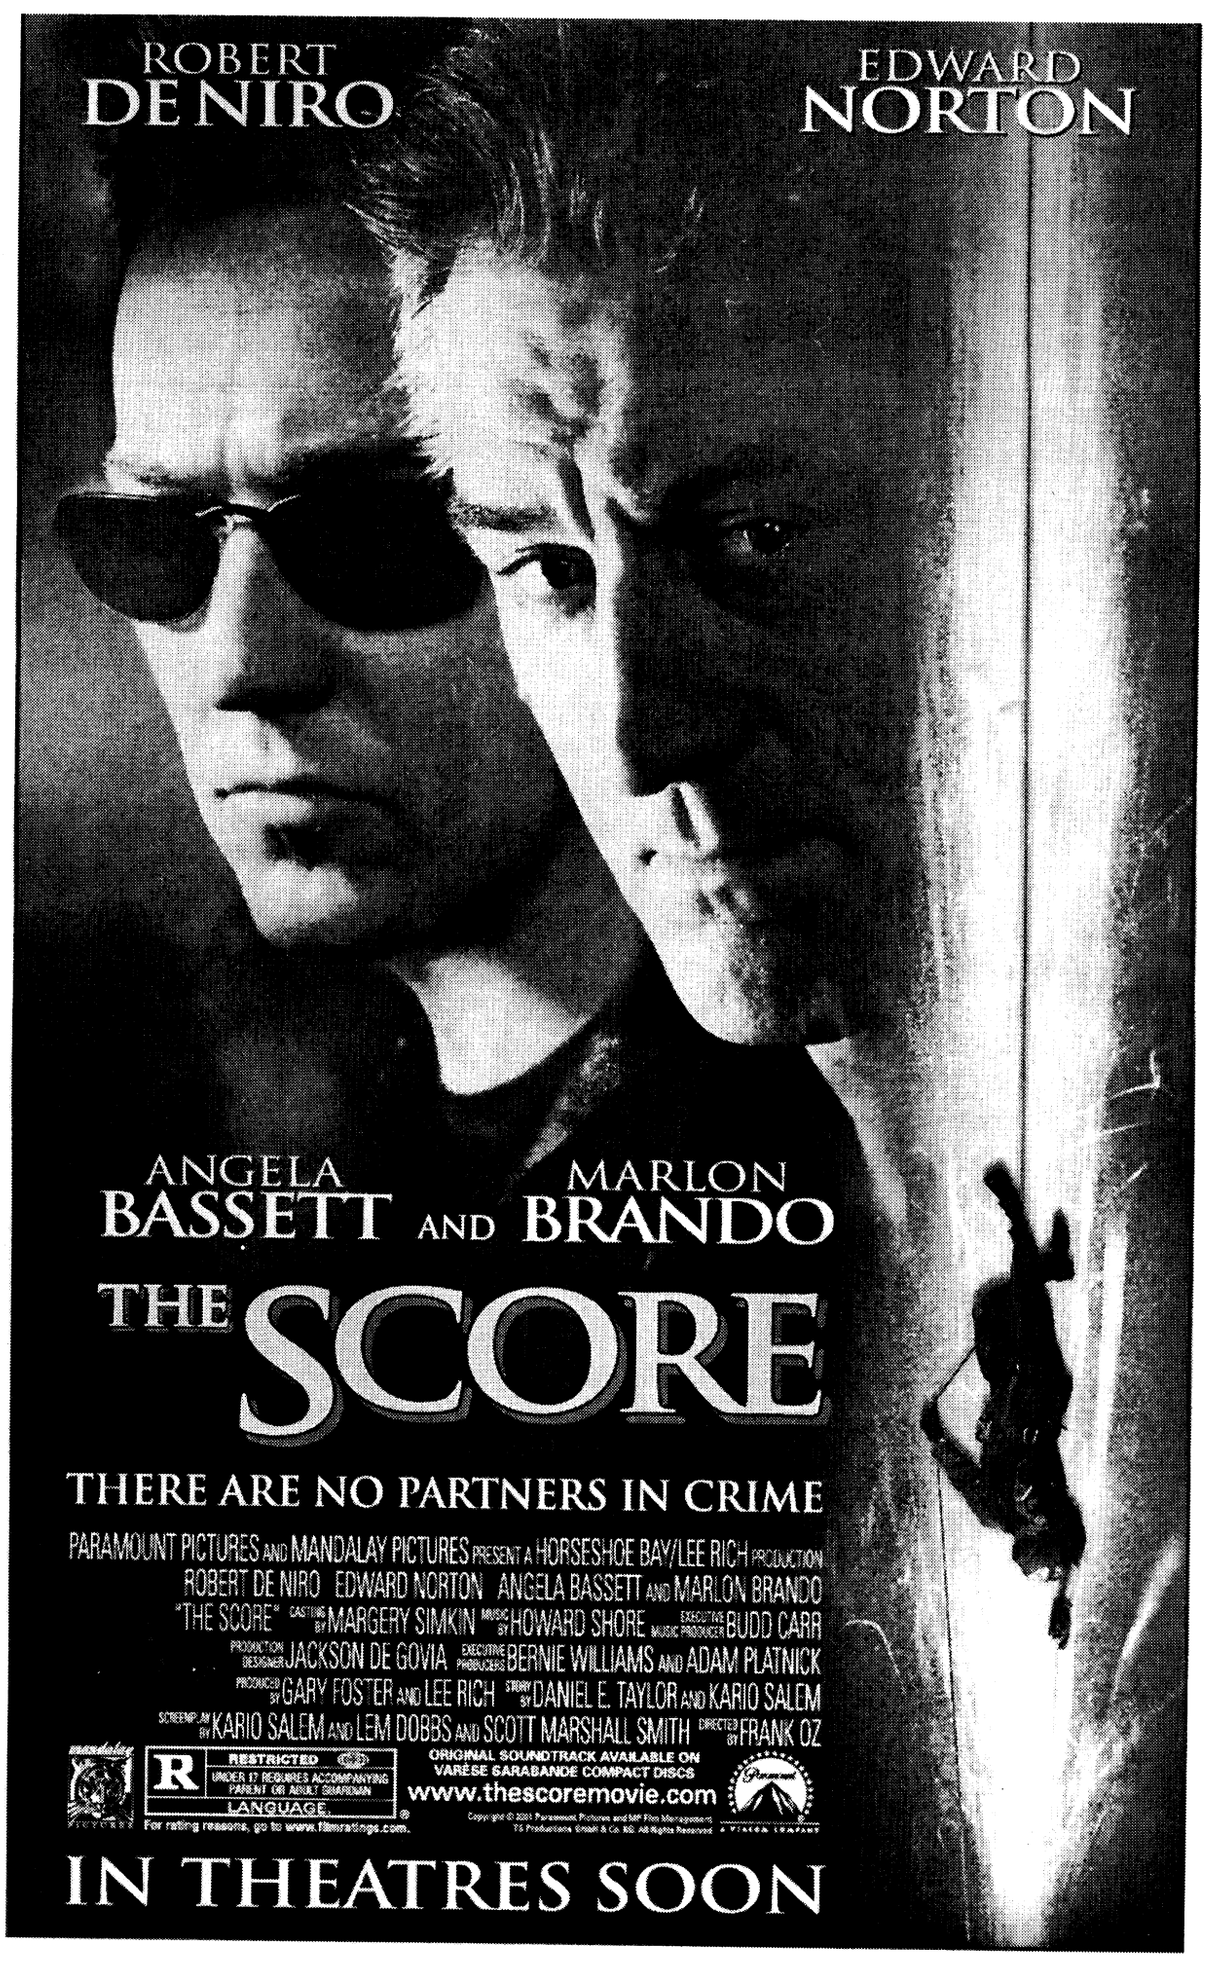
"The show was once performed at Sand Hill's theater. But since the theater was demolished, we've had to find another location," she said. "No other facility on post has the necessary logistical requirements."

The Civic Center houses more than 10,000 seats, although a majority of them are reserved for Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade trainees.

Last year, the center was filled to capacity with interested viewers.



While priority seating is given to the trainees, nearly 7,000 of them, the show is open to the public.



"It was the largest crowd the Civic Center had experienced. Both soldiers and civilians had a fantastic time," said Brian Smith, DCA marketing division chief. "The show is fast-paced, exciting and suits a variety of tastes."

Program offers post information

Packets help decrease stress before PCSing

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

What a novel idea — access to information on military installations for soldiers and their families before they arrive at their new homes.

It comes in the form of a government-sponsored program deemed Information and Standard Installation Topic Exchange Service or SITES. It's available through relocation centers across the world.

It's a way to "get the skinny" on posts and bases, whether to grab commonly referenced numbers like police stations or schools or reporting procedures.

The site also contains information about the local area, such as community overviews and state agency listings.

The SITES name is one Carmen Rivera utters at least four times a week, at in- and out-processing briefings for Fort Benning soldiers.

It's a popular program, Rivera said, and one that can make transition times transpire with less stress.

"The whole idea is to make people prepared before they leave Fort Benning," said the relocation assistance manager.

It's a benefit Staff Sgt. Michael Jackson, a soldier inprocessing into Infantry Training Brigade, taps into when traveling to a new post.

"I've used SITES coming from Germany to Fort Campbell, Ky., and it came in very handy. It had all the information I needed, like housing in the area and relocation," Jackson said.

While a price tag usually isn't put on such information, the savings for families doing their homework through SITES could reach in the thousands. The average moving cost for a family of four is nearly $3,000.

"If they don't plan their moving carefully, they can run into using their savings," Rivera said.

About 60 requests are filled for SITES each month from the local office, though more than 600 soldiers are told about the program within a month's time.

It's a service Rivera provides even to isolated servicemen, like one sergeant major who called her while on deployment to Saudi Arabia.

"He was PCSing to Fort Lewis, Wash., from Fort Benning and wanted to have all the information ready when he returned from his deployment. We provided him with the SITES packet, as well as driving directions across country," she said.

The center also offers videotape viewings to locations both overseas and domestically. Although customers can stop by anytime and catch a glimpse of their new home, mass viewings are given every second and fourth Thursdays:

1 p.m. - Germany
2 p.m. - Italy
3 p.m. - Korea

Computer savvy soldiers and family members can log on to www.dmdc.osd.mil/sites.

Rachel R. Garcia

Carmen Rivera and Sgt. Charmanie Level, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, review a SITES packet at the relocation office.

Users can print their own SITES booklet directly from their computers.

The website, sponsored by the Office of the Secretary of Defense and the Defense Manpower Data Center, compiles updated information.

The link also answers questions about hard to locate installations. Satellite or geographically separated units associated with primary installations are sometimes linked to other installations.

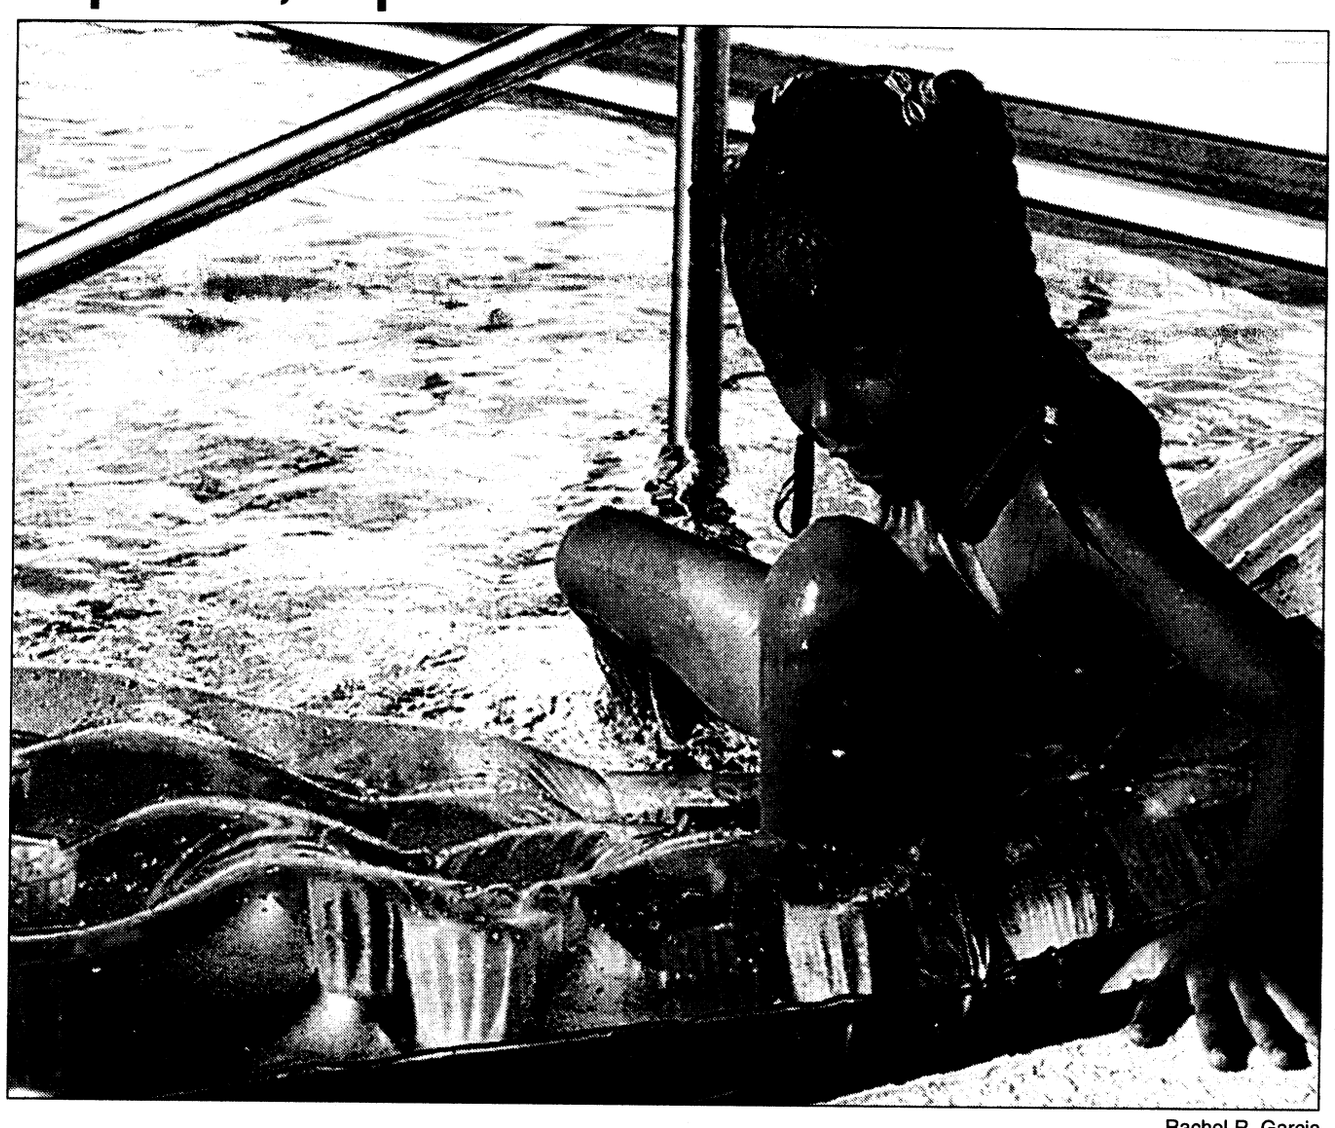
The president of Fort Benning's Volunteer Mayors' Association is recruiting perspective mayors and vice mayors to fill vacancies in several post housing areas.

Rosetta Darby, the association's president and the mayor of McGraw Manor, said the organization typically experiences vacancies during the summer months when families relocate, but those vacancies afford incoming family members the opportunity to get involved in the community and meet post residents.

"I've met a lot of wonderful people and learned a lot about networking and organization through my involvement," said Darby, who joined the program in 1999. "This is a job for someone who takes pride in his or her home — someone with a desire to help improve the community and a willingness to learn."

Regina Small, the mayor of Indianhead Terrace, said she volunteered for the position out of a desire to make her neighborhood a better place to live. Small has served as a volunteer mayor at three installations.

"Wherever we're stationed, I want our area to be a place I feel comfortable living in and a safe place for the kids to play," Small said. "The only way I can really do that — the only way I can make a difference — is to get involved."



Small said she's seen an increase in community involvement and an improvement in the overall appearance of her community in the past year.

"But I desperately need help. I need a vice mayor," Small said. "It's a big neighborhood and a big job, but we're seeing positive changes taking place."

The mayor and vice mayor positions entail various responsibilities, but their overall purpose is to act as a

Repairs needed for pool

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Usage of the pool at Briant Wells Field House was recently suspended due to scheduled minor repairs to the facility.

According to Craig Taylor, chief of buildings and grounds division, Andrew Snoddy, chief of the sport branch and Nancy Collins-Hadley, facilities manager, it was time for a number of repairs to the aquatic facility.

"Most of the repairs will be aesthetic," Taylor said.

Flint Energy has been contracted to replace an electric transformer that supplies electricity for the lighting and filtration system in the pool.

As technicians began to make repairs they discovered that other facilities in the area were also connected to the transformer. An agreement was worked out to postpone any repairs until after regular operating hours. This will not extend the facility's scheduled closure.

DCA officials planned to use this scheduled closure period that began June 15 and is slated to last through Labor Day, to also take care of the badly needed maintenance and repair.

Employees from the Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics will paint the pool area. Other repairs include minor tile work along walls, depth markers and the removal of the no smoking signs painted on the walls.

The facility is 52 years old. Snoddy said because of that fact, repairs are necessary due to safety concerns for pool patrons.

According to Snoddy, black lines painted along the bottom of the pool and at each end are barely visible.

"Most pools are 50 meters, so these faded lines pose a danger because swimmers could misjudge the length because Briant Wells pool is 25 yards," Snoddy said.

As far as other repairs, Taylor stated that no company has yet been contracted for the more

More than fish biting in Russ pond

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Russ Pond fish have company. Turtles have made their presence known in the fishing pond on Main Post.

Pete Swiderek, chief of conservation branch, environmental development, Directorate Facilities Engineering Logistics, said there are about 30 turtles living in Russ Pond.

Common turtles number about 20-25. There are, however, about four or five snapping turtles that are approximately 20-25 pounds each.

Snapping turtles have an unjustified bad reputation for being aggressive. If given an opportunity they will retreat from any situation they find hostile. Of course, if they feel threatened, they will hiss menacingly and maybe bite.

"I don't feel they're any real threat to anybody," Swiderek said. "But, when the kids are in there fishing, they can get caught on the line."

The snapping turtles found in Russ Pond are just plain snapping turtles. Alligator snapping turtles, which are a threatened species in Georgia, can be found in the Chattahoochee River.

The turtles are getting to be a little bit much for the limited space in Russ Pond.

"They're getting very crowded in there," Swiderek said. "We're thinking about moving them, just so there won't be so many in there."

Russ Pond is a children-only fishing pond that is kept stocked with catfish.

Bass, bluegills and other panfish are also available naturally to be caught by anyone less than 15 years old.

The pond is stocked with catfish every year just before the Kids Fishing Rodeo, administered by Directorate of Community Activities.

The Georgia Department of Natural Resources donates the catfish in the fall. Volunteers feed them commercial catfish food until June.

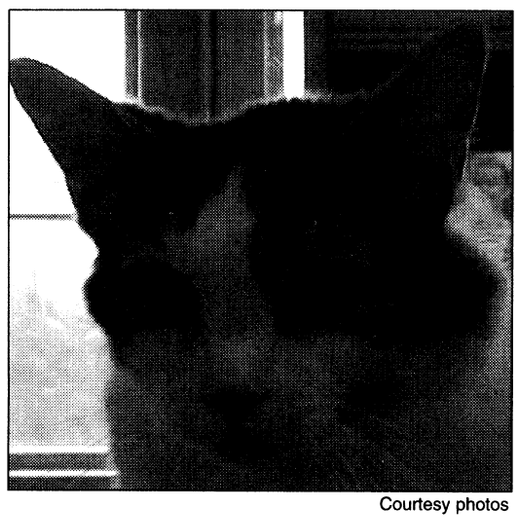
By June, the catfish are usually half a pound to a pound in weight, and can put up a good level of resistance for the young anglers, said Swiderek.

After the rodeo, the pond is open anytime for children to fish in it.

Russ pond has been a hot spot for fishing at Fort Benning for many years.

December 8, 1967, Maj. Gen. John Wright, Jr. was at Russ Pond for the opening day of trout season.

He started the children fishing with a shot from his revolver. At that time, Russ pond was stocked with 6,000 rainbow trout.



After opening day, anyone could fish in the pond.

Now, adults can be with the children to assist, but the children are supposed to catch the fish.

The adults are just there to lend a hand if they need help baiting their hook or taking the fish off.

Questions about life in Russ Pond can be directed to the Conservation Branch at 544-

YS dancing — Moms, dads and kids are invited to join Youth Services for Dancing Wednesdays. Each Wednesday night at 6:30 p.m., learn a new dance at Youth Services, Building 1056. An instructor will be on the ballroom stage to provide guidance. The schedule is as follows:

• Wednesday — Salsa and merengue dance

• July 25 — Learn dances from the '60s, '70s and '80s

• Aug. 1 — Come and do your own thing. Show what you have learned.

For more information, call Quintella Thorn at 545-3070.

Preschool registration — Patch Preschool is now accepting registrations for the 2001-2002 school year.

Hours of registration are 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Your child must be registered with the Central Registration Office.

For more information, call 687-2404. Register early before all classes are filled.

Vaccination proof required — Fort Benning Schools follow the Georgia Department of Human Resources guidelines for immunizations and work cooperatively with Martin Army Hospital. All students entering the sixth grade next year will be required to have the varicella vaccine (chicken pox) or proof of immunity.

Proof consists of a physician's or health care provider's diagnosis of the disease or a statement of immunity.

Please check with your physician, clinic, or health care provider to be sure you have the appropriate documentation for school registration.

Mayors wanted — The East Main Post mayor's position and the vice mayor and the Indianhead Terrace vice mayor position are currently open.

Call Rosetta Darby at 687-7947 for more information on how to apply for these positions.

Grants available — The Hope Grant Program will pay all tuition and fees, and up to $100 per quarter for textbooks for all active duty, and their family members 16 years or older (with rare exceptions) stationed at Fort Benning and living in Georgia.

All you have to do is fill out the required forms and register for classes at Columbus Technical College.

Depending on the program, classes are offered at Fort Benning and Main Campus day and evening.

Programs offered include Management, Computers, Office Technology Medical, Dental, Paramedic, Automotive, Carpentry, Air Conditioner Repair, Welding and many others.

For more information, call 685-8549, or come by Building 2614 in Soldier's Plaza.

Volunteers wanted — The Family Advocacy New Parent Support Plus and First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking follow-up phone callers.

Mothers of all descriptions are needed. Those who have had premature babies or multiple births, who were teen-age moms, single moms, and SIDS moms can be especially helpful.

The basic requirements are to be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support, and referrals to services they need.

For more information, call New Parent Support Plus and First Steps at 544-2020.

Counselors needed —The Muscular Dystrophy Association needs volunteer camp counselors for Camp Walk N' Roll for the week July 28 through Aug. 3. Camp is held at Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga., which is about 45 minutes east of Atlanta.

Applications are available through Sgt. Rob Brown, Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers president, Infantry Hall, Room 550. For any questions concerning camp responsibilities, call Joanie Rosenbaum, camp director, at 322-7573 or (770) 621-9800.

Counselors needed — The Hemophilia of Georgia Summer Camp needs male volunteers, 18 years of age or older, for the weeklong overnight camp program. Responsibilities include being a positive role model for young people with bleeding disorders, providing supervision and care for children in his group, and most importantly, having fun.

The camp will be held July 21-27 at Camp Twin Lakes in Rutledge, Ga.

Counselors will help children with hemophilia make new friends, overcome fears and share new experiences. Activities include: canoeing, mountain biking, arts and crafts, outdoor living skills, swimming, basketball, soccer, baseball, tennis, archery and a high ropes course.

For more information, call Cheairs Graves, director, Camp Wannaklot, at (770) 518-8272.

Reunion — The Army's First Infantry Division will conduct its 83rd annual reunion in Nashville, Tenn., from Aug. 17-21. The reunion is sponsored by the First Infantry Division located in Blue Bell, Penn.

The Big Red One is the Army's oldest and most famous divisions. It has fought with distinction in four wars in the 20th century: World War I, WWII, Vietnam and Desert Storm. Presently, the Division has units deployed on peacekeeping and military support missions in several countries in eastern Europe.

More than 1,000 veterans of the Big Red One and their guests are expected to attend the reunion which will feature a memorial service to remember the nearly 13,000 First Infantry Division soldiers who have given their lives in the service of their country. Everyone who ever served in the First Infantry Division is cordially invited to attend the reunion.

For more information, write the Society of the First Infantry Division, 1933 Morris Road, Blue Bell, PA, 19422, or call (888) 324-4733 or E-mail Soc1ID@aol.com.

better business bureau

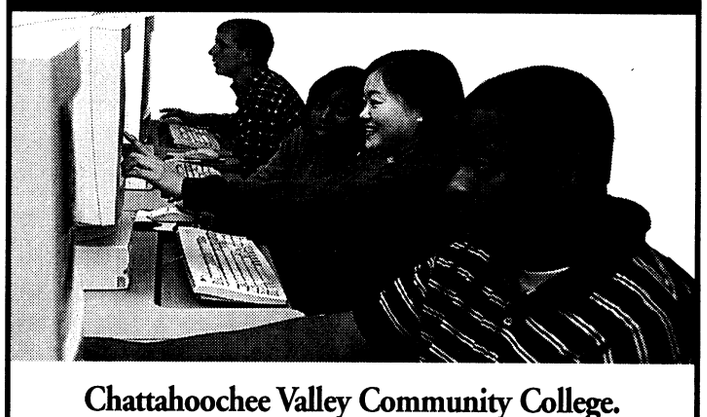
Better Business Bureau

As a businessperson, you may want to contribute to law enforcement or firefighter groups in your community or purchase advertising in publications sponsored by these nonprofit organizations. When giving back to the community that supports your business, you are responding to a fundraising appeal.

Are your local police officers involved? Most police and fire departments are funded by your tax dollars. However, you may be asked to contribute to their professional associations or labor unions at the local, state or national levels. These groups typically use paid fundraisers to solicit funds on their behalf. Be cautious; simply having the words "police" or "firefighter" in an organization's name does not necessarily mean that local police and firefighters belong to the group. Many police and firefighters groups do raise funds that support worthwhile activities that benefit their communities. If in doubt, call your local police or fire department to verify the fundraiser's claims.



Support through advertising: Your organization may be solicited to buy advertising in publications that appear to be sponsored police or firefighter associations.

The publication might be a journal, magazine, calendar, yearbook or even a souvenir program to be given out at a circus, variety show or dance. But while the words "police" or "firefighter" may appear in the title, the publication may have no official connection with any genuine public safety organization or local distribution.

If you are considering buying ad space from a nonprofit group, ask these questions: How many copies of the publications will be printed and how often will it be published? Who is the intended audience? Where will the publication be distributed? Ask to see a copy of the previous edition.

Special events: Sometimes, police or firefighter groups hire professional fundraisers that produce traveling circuses or variety shows as special fundraising events. Typically, the fundraiser sells tickets for a show over the phone or in person to benefit the nonprofit organization. In many cases, the solicitor will say that if you are not interested in attending the show, your tickets can be given to handicapped or underprivileged children.

If such claims are made, ask how many children will benefit and how they will be distributed; and whether transportation for the children is included. In addition, depending on the terms of the agreement between the public safety group and the promoter, the group may receive only a small portion of the total event money raised once the promoter covers the costs associated with producing the event and collects his fee. Many charities use donations wisely. Others may spend much of your contribution on administrative and fundraising expenses. Some may misrepresent their fundraising intentions or solicit for questionable causes. Before you write the check, find out more about the organizations causes and find out more about the organizations programs. Find out more about its finances and check out the organization with the Better Business Bureau. Helpful contribution tips can also be found by visiting the BBB Wise Giving Alliance Web site at www.give.org.

Beware of unauthorized phone charges

AHA Home Tip

Beware of Unauthorized Phone Charges. Does your monthly phone bill seem a little inflated these days?

Take a closer look. Buried somewhere in the stack of line-by-line charges could be bogus payments that you never authorized.

"Consumers need to watch out for a practice called 'cramming'," says Richard Roll, president of American Homeowners Association. "It has nothing to do with your regular telephone service but a slick marketing operation that placed unauthorized charges on your bill."

According to the Federal Trade Commission, the telephone billing and collection system has become a new alternative to credit cards and checks as a way of paying for certain services.

This innovation may benefit consumers but, unfortunately, it also means that unscrupulous operations are getting access to the local exchange carrier billing and collection system.

The practice becomes illegal when a company "crams" recurring payments for a service onto your telephone bill without your consent. These practices are all deceptive, and you should dispute the charges.

For example, the FTC recently fined a company for charging consumers for prepaid phone cards that people never ordered or agreed to purchase. To add insult to injury, the cards were never mailed or when the card did arrive, consumers found out they had already been billed for two or three months.

How do they do it? Most of these scams occur through the use of an 800 number while some use contests or sweepstakes. Say you call an 800 number advertised as a free date line, psychic line or other adult entertainment service.

With the right technology, companies can immediately detect your phone number using a process similar to caller ID, and start cramming charges onto your phone bill.

How do you avoid it? Carefully read the fine print before you fill out contest forms and before you place a call to a sweepstakes promotion, especially if they ask for your phone number.

Be cautious about calling unfamiliar 800 or 877 numbers. Be especially wary if you're told to enter codes, leave your name, or answer "yes" to prompts.

Also, check your phone bill every month for unfamiliar charges. Look out for recurring monthly charges that appear as "Miscellaneous Charges and Credits."

For information call the FTC's Cramming Information Line at (202) 326-3134.

Mayors: Help deal with local community concerns

liaison between the community and the garrison, Darby said.

"We are not the police. It's not our job to enforce regulations or patrol neighborhoods. We don't issue warnings or handle disputes," she said. "Our job is simply to be the voice for the community — to improve the quality of life in post housing areas."

It is the mayors' responsibility to distribute welcome packets to new residents, organize volunteer beautification projects and community activities, attend monthly meetings with garrison officials and plan biannual community townhall meetings. They also work closely with community life NCOs to make sure neighborhood concerns are resolved in a timely manner.

"They're a vital link in maintaining a dialogue between the families on post and the installation," said Chuck Walls, Fort Benning's garrison manager.

Darby said perspective mayors and vice mayors can expect to devote between 15 and 20 hours a week to the position. The organization pays for childcare services at Tot Town.

Though the mayors association is a private organization, it's sanctioned by Fort Benning's Directorate of Community Activities and receives funding from nonprofit organizations like the Soldier and Family Support Association, which receives funds from the Combined Federal Campaign's code 9001.

Fort Benning needs mayors in the East and West Main Post housing areas.

Vice mayor positions are available in Indianhead Terrace, McGraw Manor, West Main Post, East Main Post and the Bouton Heights and Davis Hill area.

Applicants must be willing to provide references and submit to a background check.

Training will be provided by the installation volunteer coordinator and the Army Family Team Building.

For more information contact Darby at 687-7947 or pick up an application at Building 359.

Pool: Undergoes minor repairs and maintenance

extensive repairs at the time of this interview.

He said the contract will be signed late Friday afternoon if all goes well. These repairs include replacing ceiling tiles that have begun to crumble and fall, replace insulation in the ceiling, though not a health hazard it must be replaced due to age.

A new plastic-coated drop ceiling is planned to replace the old porous tiles.

As the only indoor pool facility on post, the pool's closure did bring about discontent from a small number of its patrons. DCA and DFEL are working to insure that the facility will reopen prior to closure of the outdoor pools Sept. 4.

There are five outdoor pools at Benning, plus pools at Destin and Uchee Creek, all in operation serving the training and recreational needs while this pool is closed.

Carey Pool is closed Monday and Tuesday for military training. It is open for community lap swimming Wednesday through Friday from 6:30 a.m. to 8 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m.

The pool is open for recreational swimming Wednesday through Sunday 1 to 8p.m.

The Custer Terrace Pool is closed Wednesday and Thursday. But offered recreational swimming for everyone Friday to Tuesday 1 to 8 p.m.

Kelley Hill Pool is closed Tuesday and Wednesday for military training.

The pool opens for lap swimming for all swimmers Monday through Friday 5:30 to 8 a.m. and again at 11:00 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The pool is again opened to everyone for recreational swimming Thursday to Monday 1 to 8 p.m..

Military training continues Monday, Thursday and Friday from 8 to 11:00 a.m. and Tuesday and Wednesday 5:30 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Vacation provides time to recharge spirit

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

reflections

How many times have we said, "It's too much trouble to go on vacation, or leave, you have to do your work ahead, and then catch up on what was not done when you return?"

This is a common feeling and many times we are already in the car and starting to drive away from home, when we get that good feeling of relief and take that big relaxing breath, that we are finally on our way.

We look forward to the chance to get far enough away so that we can forget the work left behind and pay attention to relaxing and enjoying a few days without work.

The need for a vacation is not only recognized, but the military and most civilian employers give leave time, and, understanding its value, insist that workers take it.

The military is careful to remind personnel that they have so many days to "use or lose," and commanders are required to ensure that personnel use leave time if at all possible.

Getting away from the normal routine is by no means a new concept. When Moses received the Ten Commandments from God, Moses went up onto a mountain away from the other Jewish people he was leading.

You might argue that this was a TDY trip for a business conference with God, instead of a vacation, and I would not deny that. However, Moses was getting away from the day-to-day problems and routine work, and going to a place where he could concentrate on business at hand.

Before Jesus began his ministry, we are told that he went up onto a mountain and fasted and prayed, to prepare himself for his work which was to come.

On another occasion, Jesus was tired after preaching and teaching, and desired to escape the great crowds, and he got into a boat and crossed over from Capernaum to the other side to get away from the crowd.

Mark 1:35 states that "...in the morning, a great while before day, he rose and went and went out to a lonely place and there he prayed."

In Mark 3:7, we find "Jesus withdrew with his disciples to the sea..." Mark 3:13 states "And he went up on the mountain, and called to him those whom he desired;..."

There are also accounts of Jesus visiting in the home of his friends Mary, Martha and Lazarus. None of these trips were world cruises, of course, but they do show that Jesus knew the value of taking time to get away from regular work.

This summer as you take your block leave, or regular leave, do it in good faith.

That it is a good way to keep yourself fit for duty, mentally and physically. Enjoy your vacation!

Love important part of partnership

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

The most influential thing you can do for your child is to love your spouse. "No one can serve two masters" (Matthew 6:24); yet, parents who oppose one another cause children to align themselves with one parent or the other. Children can easily manipulate parents, who are divided.

Parents should not give conflicting messages to their children.

By consistently speaking with one voice parents prevent their children from being in the midst of a terrible dilemma. A house divided will not stand (Luke 11:17).

Two things that children want are the unconditional love of their parents and parents who love each other.

Their two greatest fears are: violent crime against a family member (56 percent) and the breakup of their parents (38 percent).

Unfortunately, 2,750 children a day will see their parents divorce.

More than one million children a year have to weather the storm of their parents' divorce.

Divorce does not need to be an option for you. A wonderful gift a father can give his children is to love their mother. Yet many wives feel abandoned by their husbands. Common concerns are: "My husband is no longer my friend; I hurt all the time because I feel alone and abandoned; He doesn't show any interest in me or what I do unless he wants sex."

Be a partner with your spouse. It's not your job as spouse to analyze your spouse. It's not your job to reform your spouse. Leave that to the Holy Spirit.

It is your job to love your mate. This kind of love is radical, sacrificial and life changing.

Would you like more help in partnering with your spouse? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries, located at Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

"For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whoever believes in Him should not perish but have everlasting life,"
John 3:16

11th Regiment dominates with combatives fighting skills

Brazilian Jiu Jitsu tournament seeds over 40 athletes

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The 11th Infantry Regiment hosted a Brazilian Jiu Jitsu tournament Tuesday at The Briant Wells Field House.

More than 40 competitors turned out for the double-elimination tournament to fight their way to being named best of the best on Fort Benning.

"The purpose of the tournament was to enlighten everyone about the competitive value of our combatives program," said Sgt. 1st Class Troy Thomas, a master trainer for the Basic Instructor Certification Course for ground fighting techniques.

"We believe that competition is the key to our success because it spurs on further training, which leads to more competent fighters.

"Fighting and the warrior spirit are very important to soldiers, and if we can promote these virtues through friendly and controlled competition, we will increase our overall warfighting skills."

Trophies were given to each team which fought their way to first through third place, and medals were presented to soldiers who placed first through third in their weight category.

The winners by category were:

Team —

1st place — 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

2nd place — 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

3rd place — 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade

Lightweight —

1st place — Capt. Rick Gonzales, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

2nd place — Capt. Pete Jensen, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

3rd place — 2nd Lt. Mehdi Sheikholeslam, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Middleweight —

1st place — Capt. William Corty, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

2nd place — Capt. Harold Miller, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

3rd place — Capt. Kevin Hill, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Cruiserweight —

1st place — 2nd Lt. Charles Boldt, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

2nd place — Spc. Hirorni Cota, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

3rd place — 2nd Lt. Chris Guderski, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Heavyweight —

1st place — Staff Sgt. Paul Bauermeister, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

2nd place — Capt. Marc Daniels, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

3rd place — Capt. Rob Robinson, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

Superheavy —

1st place — Staff Sgt. Timothy Seeber, 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt.

2nd place — Capt. Jonathan Kupka, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

3rd place — 2nd Lt. David Smyth, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"I though the first combatives tournament was a success. I think it brought a good sense of esprit de corps to the units that participated and I'm looking forward to the next tournament," said heavyweight division first-place winner, Staff Sgt. Paul Bauermeister, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt.

Thomas said that he and the others involved with making the tournament happen are appreciative of the turnout and would like to thank all involved.

Soldiers who missed the tournament may look forward to the next which is tentatively scheduled for later this year.

For more information about the Basic Instructor Certification Course for ground fighting techniques or upcoming tournament dates, call 545-2811.

Softball team rallies behind leader for win

HHC 1st-29th pounds A 1st-11th

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Led by center fielder Karym Connor's three hits, three RBIs, and three runs scored, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment pounded A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment at Gowdy Field Tuesday night, 18-6.

HHC's smoking bats and numerous Alpha fielding miscues mixed to give HHC an 11-1 lead after only two innings. Harry Lassiter, the HHC pitcher, and Connor, combined for four RBIs during the second inning to generate seven runs in the inning.

HHC's onslaught continued in the third with two A Co. errors pushing runs across for HHC.

After a brief respite during a non-typical scoreless fourth inning for HHC, the team delivered the coup de grace during a six-run fifth inning that saw all of HHC's hitters come to the plate.

Alpha managed four runs in their half of the fifth, but it was not enough to stop the game being called for the 'mercy rule.'

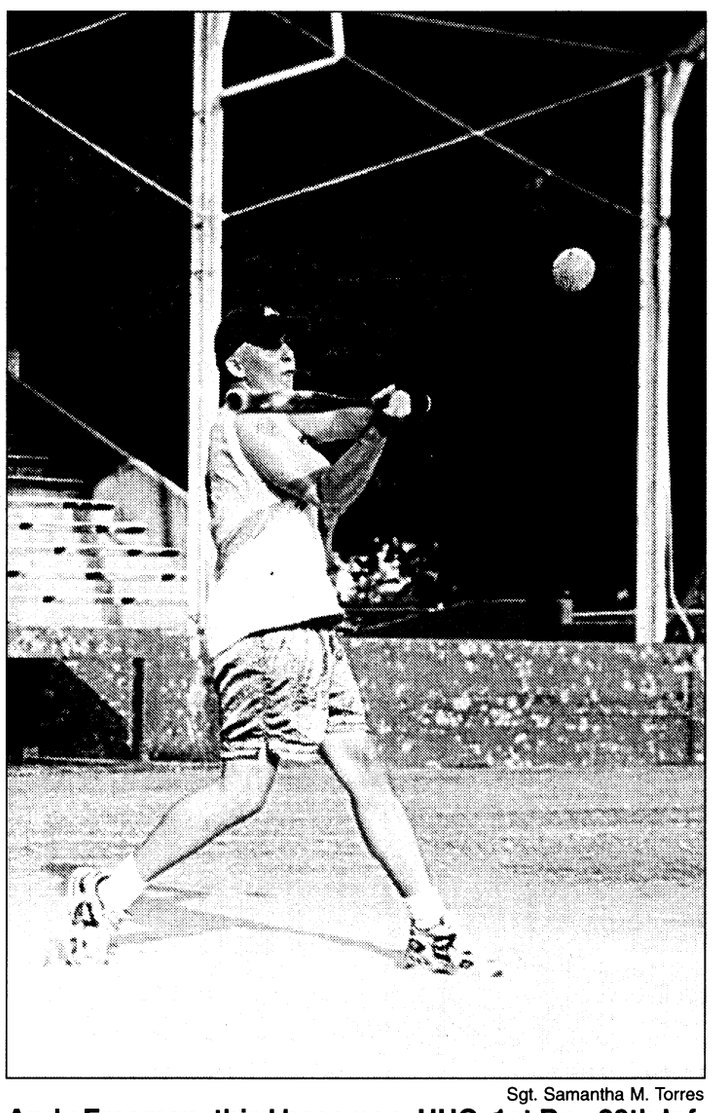
Standouts for HHC included Lassiter with 3 for 5, 2 RBI, 4 runs scored, Robert Heffington with 3 for 5, 2 RBI, and Jason Moore, who reached base on all five at bats.

A Co., contributors were Leland McFayden with 2 for 3, 1 run scored, and Billy Marseglia with 2 for 3, 1 RBI.

After the game, members of A Co., acknowledged that lack of practice was a major contributing factor in the evening's disappointing performance.

"There was too much time between games and we have not practiced in two weeks," said A Co., team coach and third baseman Michael Cochran.

"Confusion in the outfield caused us to miss to a few major defensive plays," A Co., left fielder, Lonny Ervin said.



Injured while sliding into third base during the second inning, HHC team coach Lassiter said his teammates are beginning to settle down and play well.

"They are versatile players who can play various positions well," he said.

"They rallied behind me because I am the old man and team leader."

In the second game scheduled for the evening, B company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment team, the Free Agents, was to battle A Co., 1st Bn, 29th Inf. Regt.

But due to lack of players, A Co., 1st of the 29th was forced to forfeit the game to the Free Agents.

Scuba hits the books

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the second story of a four part series, which takes an in-depth look at a scuba certification course.

Learning something new is a little like falling in love. The initial rush of adrenaline, the charge of excitement, knowing the possibilities are limitless.

Of course, we all know that puppy love doesn't last forever. All too quickly it gets replaced by the daily grind and finding his socks in the living room.

Such is the case for me with my scuba certification course. I've had a lot of bookwork to wade through before I can get back to the pool.

The Professional Association of Diving Instructors publishes the manual I'm studying. Honestly, it's not bad for an instructional guide.

There are a lot of pictures (essential) and the key points are summed up in easy-to-understand boxes at the end of each section.

I had a general idea before I started the scuba course with Josh Blair at Planet Ocean, what kind of equipment I'd be using.

I'd need a mask, so I don't have to keep my nose pinched closed. Fins, so I can go faster underwater and maybe chase down some fish. An air tank, so that I can actually breathe underwater and consider myself a scuba diver.

That's all I really need, right? Well, I soon found out that there is a lot more to it than that.

A mask doesn't just keep me from having to hold my nose plugged. Light behaves differently in water than in air. Eyes focus according to how light behaves in air, so the mask creates an air space so they can focus.

I've gone snorkeling before and I figured a snorkel was one piece of equipment I'd never use again once I learned how to scuba dive.

Wrong.

Snorkels are essential for scuba diving because they save air from the tanks when swimming at the surface.

Fins are pretty straight forward, more ground can be covered with less effort by using them.

The buoyancy control device was a new one for me. It's a little like a life jacket that controls how much I float. It can be inflated or deflated depending on the situation.

A tank is what makes scuba diving unique. This marvelous tank is used to safely store high-pressure air.

The last and most essential piece of equipment for safe and enjoyable scuba diving is something you can't purchase at your local dive shop. A buddy! A buddy can be a true lifesaver underwater.

OK, so maybe going through PADI's Open Water Diver Manual isn't as bad as finding his socks in the living room, but puppy love it's definitely not.

Just wait until I get back to the pool, I think we're talking second honeymoon here.

For more information on scuba call Josh Blair or Planet Ocean at 464-8751 or at 563-8675.

AMU to compete in Finland match

Shooters take part in militaire championships

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Sixteen military shooters left Wednesday to compete at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire Shooting Championships in Lahti, Finland. CISM, the World Military Shooting Championships, consists of men's and women's rifle and pistol competitions.

Approximately 50 countries will send about 650 shooters to compete for the World Military Shooting Championship Trophy.

The CISM opening ceremony takes place today and the shooting competition runs Sunday through Thursday.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit hosted the U.S. CISM Rifle Team Selection Matches April 12-14 and the U.S. CISM Pistol Team Selection Matches April 27-29.

The U.S. CISM Shooting Team is made up of five male and three female rifle shooters and five male and three female pistol shooters.

The CISM male rifle shooters are USAMU international rifle shooters Maj. Stephen C. Goff, Capt. Glenn A. Dubis, Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas, Sgt. Jason A. Parker and Spc. Shane M. Barnhart and the CISM female rifle shooters are Spcs. Mary K. Elsass and Karyn E. Manges of USAMU, along with Navy Midshipman 4th Class Marta Jung.

The men's CISM Pistol Team is made up of U.S. Army Reservist Lt. Col. Terry M. Anderson and USAMU's Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski, Staff Sgt. Eric G. Daniels, Staff Sgt. Carl W. Trompeter and Spc. Grant E. Saylor. The women's CISM Pistol Team members are U.S. Army Reservist Maj. Rhonda L. Bright, Marine Chief Warrant Officer Roxane Conrad and Navy Reservist Petty Officer 3rd Class Sandra Uptagrafft.

Accompanying the U.S. Shooting Team to Finland will be: USAMU Commander Col. Robert I. Hoidahl Jr., as the CISM chief of mission; USAMU gunsmith Sgt. 1st Class Charles P. Gartland as the women's team captain and gunsmith; USAMU International Rifle Team Coach Richard N. Hawkins as CISM rifle coach; USAMU International Pistol Team Coach Frank Briggs as CISM pistol coach; Sgt. 1st Class Dennis Newby, a member of the CISM Pistol Jury; and USAMU Chief of Competition Michael J. Behnke as the men's team captain and a CISM 50-Meter Classification Jury member.

"We have the strongest team that we've fielded in several years," Behnke said. "Several of the services are well represented in this Department of Defense-wide team."

According to Behnke, the strongest competition for the United States this year will come from Russia, Norway, Sweden, Finland, France and Switzerland.

For more information about AMU, call Pagan at 545-5436.

WHEN YOU'RE WAITING FOR A TRANSPLANT, WHAT'S MORE IMPORTANT: YOUR MEDICAL STATUS OR YOUR FINANCIAL STATUS?

André Weiss/Nonstock/Picture Quest
Contrary to rumors you may have heard, the transplant waiting list is completely blind to wealth or celebrity status. Once you're on the list for a donor organ, what really counts is the severity of your illness, time spent waiting, blood type and other important medical information. Call 1-800-355-SHARE or visit www.shareyourlife.org for honest information on organ donation. And remember, if you want to be a donor, you must tell your family or it may not happen.

Fort Benning units win award

Post one of eight installations to receive accolade

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Fort Benning has further justification to its claim of "The Best Army Post in the World!"

Training and Doctrine Command headquarters and many of its centers and units were awarded the Army Superior Unit Award for helping to get Army Transformation underway.

Fort Benning was one of eight TRADOC installations with units awarded the ASUA.

The other installations are: Forts Rucker, Ala., Huachuca, Ariz., Gordon, Ga., Leavenworth, Kan., Knox, Ky, Leonard Wood, Mo. and Sill, Okla.

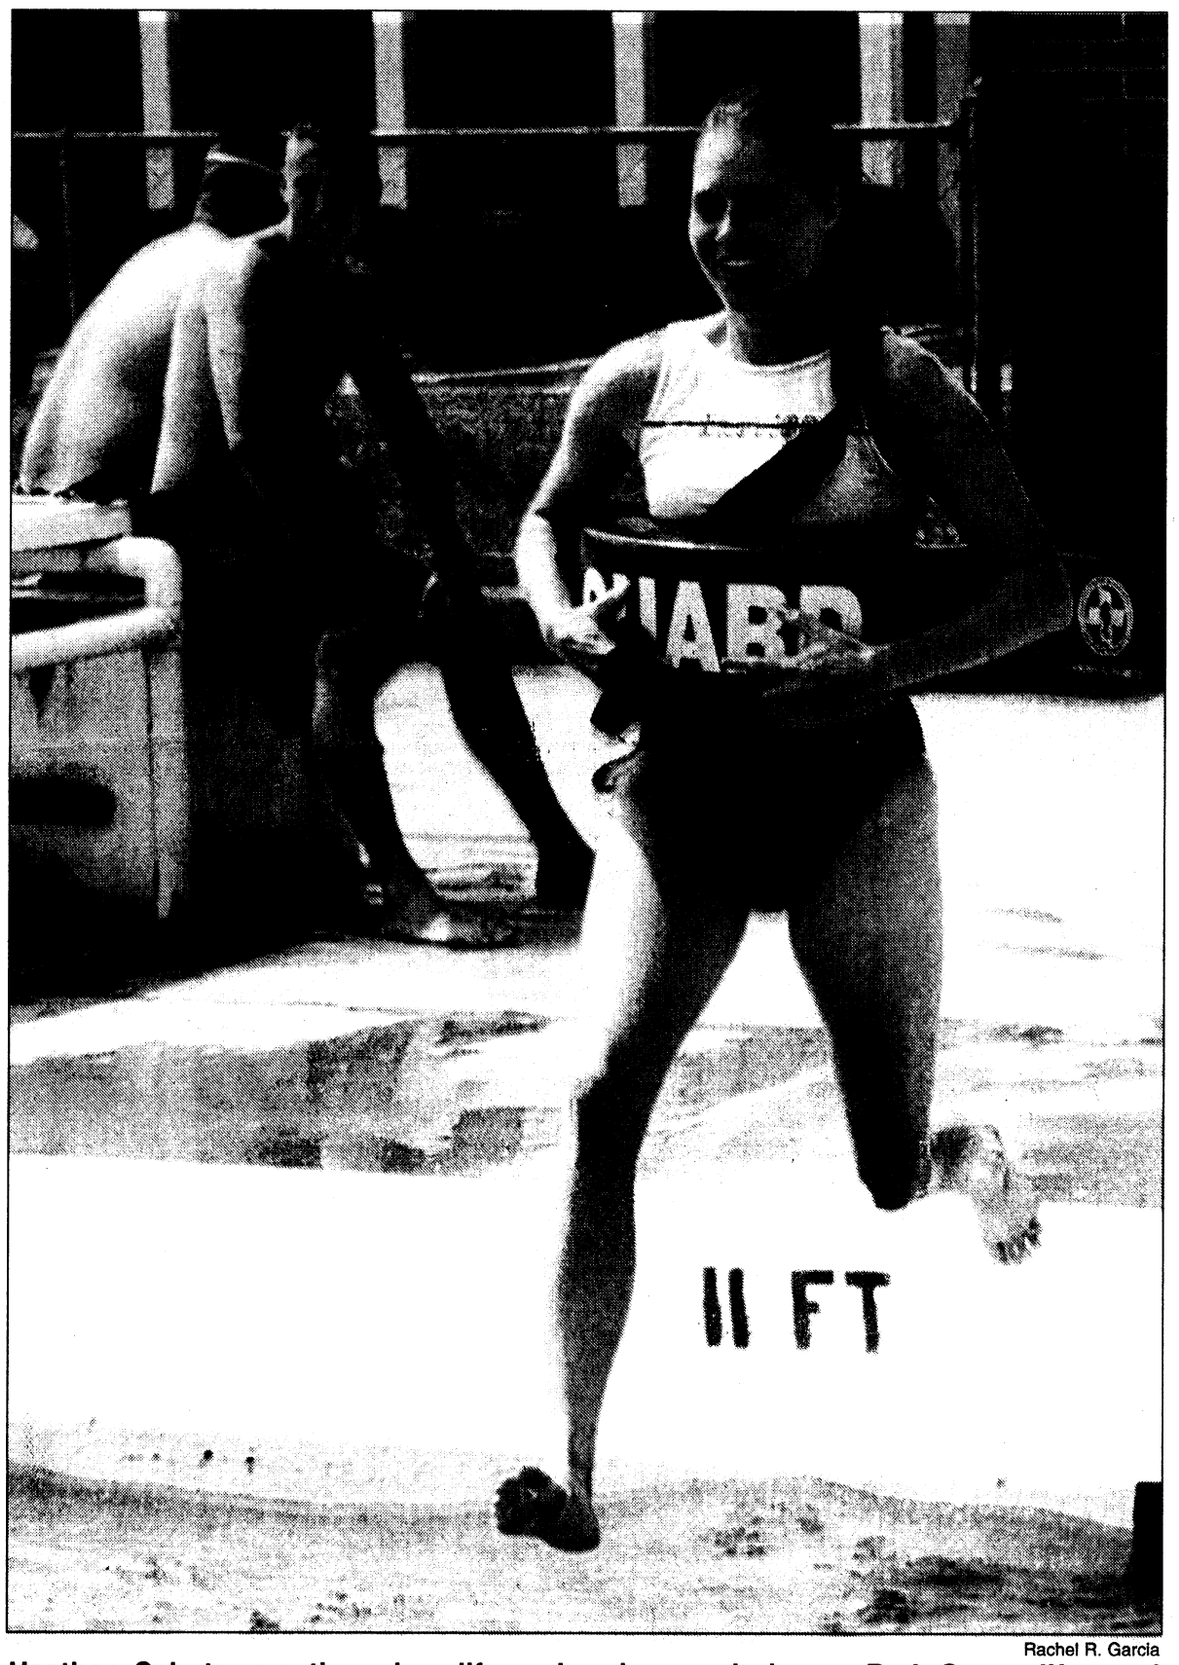
Col. Jim Stone, director of combat developments, said, "This has been a team effort across the Army and especially throughout TRADOC.

"Transformation is here to stay and in some areas we're about to pick up the pace."

The award, from former Secretary of the Army Louis Caldera, was official in January.

The public announcement was made at TRADOC when the award citation was read at the opening ceremonies of the command's annual Organization Day activities June 29.

The citation reads, "During a uniquely dynamic period in the Army's 225-year history, Headquarters, TRADOC, and numerous other organizations and commands developed and implemented a comprehensive campaign plan to dramatically transform the Army to better fulfill its role in the National Security Strategy for the 21st century."



"Members of this command were faced with significant challenges to support Army Transformation initiatives while at the same time accomplishing worldwide operational missions."

Stone said, "We should be thankful that we're able to do it in other than a national emergency.

"A few times in our brief history, we've had to construct, reorganize, train and equip our Army while we were already committed to ground combat on a large scale – so unlike many of our redesign efforts in the past, this transformation initiative

Retired soldier receives Medal of Honor

Ia Drang veteran recognized

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs and Nicholas J. Carter
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Retired Maj. Ed W. Freeman was awarded the Medal of Honor for his valor as a pilot in Vietnam by President George W. Bush Monday.

More than 50 Medal of Honor recipients attended the White House ceremony. Also present were Vice President Dick Cheney, Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, Army Secretary Thomas White, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki and Sen. John McCain, as well as family, friends and fellow unit members who served with Freeman.

"This moment is well deserved and it's been long in coming," Bush said. "To be in the presence of one who has won the Medal of Honor is a privilege. To be in the room with a group of over 50 is a moment none of us will ever forget."

The memory of talking to Bush is something that Freeman said he will also hold dear. "I don't know how I expected the ceremony to be, but it exceeded any expectations I could've had," said Freeman. "The president was so easy to talk to. My wife is named Barbara, and he told her that he was partial to

House representative visits WHINSEC students

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

U. S. Representative Henry J. Hyde, Chairman of the International Relations Committee, addressed the first graduates of the Democratic Sustainment Course at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation July 13.

Hyde's membership in the International Relations Committee goes back to 1982. Additionally, a recent profile in The Washington Post stated, "In his 24 years in the House, (Hyde) has built one of the highest profiles in Congress. He has put his mark on almost every aspect of national policy and starred in every role that has come his way."

Col. Richard Downie talks to U.S. Representative Henry Hyde July 13 during the WHINSEC graduation ceremony.

This reputation is what prompted officials at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation to seek Hyde as the guest speaker for its Latin American graduates of the course, which explores the role of the military within a constitutionally derived democratic society, said Maj. Milton Mariani, the Institute's public affairs officer.

"I am a believer … a proponent … and advocate of the Institute," said Hyde about the educational organization that has caught avid opposition in recent months by activists protesting U. S. foreign policy.

"We wouldn't be doing our jobs if we didn't reach out and touch others in the militaries of Latin America; this (the hemisphere) is our home," Hyde said, in a briefing with local and military officials shortly after arriving.

commentary

Back in my lifeguarding days, I worked at a small housing complex called Surrey Hill.

I spent hours in the sweltering sun each week, ensuring the safety of the community's swimmers.

Our young crew rehearsed rescue scenarios and practiced our skills daily. And, except for a few times when overconfident children wandered into deeper waters, I didn't have to use any of the well-practiced moves.

In fact, the most memorable aspect of that job was the people I had a chance to chat with over the course of the summer.

There was outspoken Anne, mother of three children and Edith, an established realtor who often yelled at any child so much as knocking a drop of water her way. But clearest of all, I remember Charlotte Lewis.

Charlotte, in her 70s at the time, was very sophisticated. The lady, always so dapper, swapped fashion tips with the young guards. She would share stories of her college days at the University of Rochester and anecdotes of her days growing up in a world we had never seen outside the television.

What impressed me most though, was just how fit Charlotte always looked. Now in her eighties, she remains a picture of health with rosy cheeks and bright blue eyes — not to mention she could still stop a few swimmers in their tracks when she dons her swim attire.

I distinctly recall her telling me that one of her secrets to staying healthy was in what she ate. She chose a well-balanced meal, three times a day. It's not that Charlotte didn't sneak in a piece of cake or some cookies every so often, but she adhered to her regimen and encouraged us all to do the same. And we encouraged her to show us how, by sharing her lessons (which hungry young lifeguards will always accept).

She still takes her walks and swims laps in the pool. She paints beautiful pictures and reads new novels through her book club. (Until recently, she volunteered weekly at a literacy program too.) She goes to church, goes shopping and still gets her hair "done up" weekly. And Charlotte just bought a new car, a sharp looking, golden two-door Saturn, with a spoiler.

Moreover she's taught me that staying fit is just as much a mental exercise as it is physical.

She's like my very own emotional sports trainer that way.

commentary

I hate to admit it but when I realized I would be going on 30 days of convalescent leave after foot surgery June 26, the main thing I was thinking was that I was going to get a month to rest and take it easy — and best of all, it doesn't come out of my leave days.

It's funny, but I didn't quite get the kind of "free vacation" I thought I would.

The first couple of days were like I had figured — lying around, popping pain pills for the three-inch wound on my foot and watching TV. It was great, I wasn't missing work a bit.

As the days of my leave progressed and the pain lessened, my boredom increased. I found that lying around wasn't all it was cracked up to be.

It was time to start using my crutches for something besides dragging the TV remote to where I was resting — it was time to move around a little. I found crutches can be a learning experience all to themselves — not in how to use them, but the effects on your body from using them.

After days of crutching along, the palms of my hands began to ache from doing something they were unaccustomed to, holding me up.

It was time for Plan "B." I still had one good foot, so I decided hopping short distances wouldn't be so bad and would save my hands.

Everyone who has seen me moving through the house said I was getting pretty good at it, and apparently enjoyed it from the jokes they cracked as I passed.

Just when I thought I had solved my pain problems, another arose. Hopping on one leg as a replacement for walking starts to take its toll on you — or in this case — on my hip socket.

I was still determined not to just sit around and do nothing while I recuperated, so it was time to enact Plan "C" — crawling from spot to spot around the house.

This one didn't last long just because I found it really embarrassing to be crawling on the floor unless I'm practicing low or high crawling. Plus, I already had sore hands and a hip socket from the two prior plans!

This leave was becoming more of a pain than I had originally planned. I just couldn't settle for sitting around twiddling my thumbs doing nothing, so I was driven to continue trying to find ways to maneuver around.

As the weeks passed, I did finally get a handle on things. I began to rotate the ways I would get around.

I would get up and try to do things around the house to help out. My crowning achievement was being able to cut the grass last week, one of my favorite chores.

All in all, convalescent leave hasn't been that bad. It sure hasn't been what I had thought it would be though.

And now it's almost up and I'll be returning to work on a full-time basis.

Am I happy to be going back to the grind? Sort of. I think I've been gone long enough to learn you can actually get tired of "resting."

commentary

If you are the parents of two little boys who ride their bicycles from Austin Loop to Miller Loop, crossing Lumpkin Road in the process, this commentary is for you.

On July 10, at 5:15 p.m., I was on my way to the Information Center for the daily meeting of the Ride at Five Club. It was a weekday, and I had lots of company as I made my way off post.

I was driving down Vibbert Avenue near Austin Loop when I first spotted your fledgling bicyclists on my left.

They were on the grass, pedaling for all they were worth, when they suddenly jumped off the curb and in to what would have been a head-on collision had someone made a right turn from Lumpkin on to Vibbert.

Having cheated death once, the older of the two made an attempt to move to the right side of the cars waiting to turn left.

He decided against weaving between the (moving) cars and slowed down enough for the little rider to catch up with him in the middle of Vibbert Avenue.

Picture your children bicycling along the left side of vehicles making left turns from a "left turn only" lane during rush hour. That's what they were doing.

When they reached Lumpkin Road they slowed down. I was certain that they would stop, dismount, wait for a break in traffic and walk their bikes across.

I was wrong.

All they saw was the break in the Lumpkin Road traffic. They zipped straight across, completely oblivious to the vehicles on their right making left turns.

Their helmets would not have saved them from the injuries they would have sustained had they been hit broadside by a car making the left turn.

Bicyclists on bike paths are near the top of the food chain. On a road, even though they have the same rights as the cars they are riding next to, they're near the bottom. In the traffic food chain little bicyclists going straight from the left side of cars turning left aren't even tadpoles.

A bicyclist has a much smaller margin for error than someone in a car and when you're less than ten years old riding against traffic, only extremely alert drivers and a lot of dumb luck is going to save you.

Your boys had both going for them as I helplessly watched, cringing, that afternoon.

I hope you didn't mean it when you sent them outside to play in traffic. You almost got your wish.

Atlanta group tours working dog facility

Unit receives attention from local club

2nd Lt. Sandy Mosley-Kuria
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Members of the Atlanta German Shepherd Club toured the 209th Military Police Detachment and K-9 Dog Monument on Sacrifice Field July 13.

Sgt. Kristopher P. Upton, 209th Military Police Detachment, said the visit was a great opportunity for the club members to see how military police dogs work since all of the training aids used are real, including real drugs.

Keeping the training as real as possible is necessary to maintain the dogs' skills, said Upton.

"We train them on all kinds of illegal drugs. The dogs are trained to find odor, not actual substance," he said.

With the use of voice commands, police dogs are trained by handlers to take down suspects as an alternative to the use of deadly force.

Spc. Edward Smart, also a military police dog trainer, donned a bite suit to demonstrate the police dog's training in detaining suspects. The suit provides protection for the dog handler while allowing the dog to practice takedown techniques, said Sgt. Robert Thomas.

"The bite suit is there to protect the handler or decoy. The bite suit drill is conducted to keep the proficiency level up on the dog because that is what the dog is trained to do.

"Police dogs are trained to patrol and detect illegal drugs," he said. "We use the dogs to detain a person until we are able to apprehend the person. For the dog, the training is controlled aggression training."

Ann Cranford, an Atlanta German Shepherd Club member, also put on the full body suit and became a decoy during the tour.

"It was fun, I knew the dog wasn't going to hurt me," she said. "In that suit, you know the dog is not going to bite through. It was a cool experience with a well-trained dog."

During the tour, the club members also got to meet Retired Sgt. 1st Class Jesse Mendez, one of the chief instructors of the first war dog training units held in 1966. He also shared some of the history of military dogs with the group.

"Scout dogs accompanied patrols and were trained to alert on friendly or enemy patrols, he explained. "In the areas where scout dogs were used, the death rate went down 65 percent.

"Scout dogs were credited with the capture of over 6,000 enemy whether they were killed, captured, or suspect. When the enemy planned an ambush, they would kill the dog first, then the handler second, and then everyone else," Mendez said. "Many soldiers had prices on their heads but the biggest effort was put on the dog and the dog handler."

Dixie Whitman, club member, said meeting Mendez was a real treat.

"The entire tour was great, but the highlight was meeting Mr. Mendez. He is a living legend."

Mendez has fought in World War II, Korea, and Vietnam.

Excavation uncover Creek Native's underground secrets

30,000 square meters being excavated

Danielle Foerschler
Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics

The largest excavation in several years is currently taking place at Lawson Army Airfield.

July 4, archaeologists began to excavate more than 30,000 square meters of the Creek Indian town of Kasita. Forty people are working by hand and machine to investigate a small portion of this large Creek town.

The excavation has been coordinated with the Georgia Historic Preservation Division of the Department of Natural Resources and with the eleven Indian Tribes in Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Alabama and Florida whose origins stem from this area.

"This excavation is a major contribution to Southeastern archaeology," Tom Lewis, field lab supervisor said.

The reason for this excavation is to protect burial sites and record and remove cultural materials threatened by the expansion of the black ramp on Lawson Army Airfield.

The expansion of the black ramp is just one part of the upgrading of Lawson Army Airfield.

The expansion of the black ramp is required to provide adequate parking and loading space for the increased number of large aircraft, both Air Force and civilian, expected during mobilization.

"The expansion should allow a minimum of six, with the potential of seven, large aircraft to park," Kenneth Holloway, chief of the real property master planning branch for DFEL said. Currently the black ramp can hold five large aircraft.

Holloway explained that "part of the project is putting aircraft fueling lines under the concrete which will eventually tie into the bulkpool storage facility located on Indianhead Road. This will allow a fueling station where the planes park, so fueling trucks will no longer be used."

Before starting the expansion of the black ramp, measures must be taken to protect cultural sites.

"The military is doing this excavation to preserve history and avoid unnecessary disturbance to possible burial sites, with the consultation of the tribes following to move any burial sites respectfully," Dr. Chris Hamilton, cultural resource manager said.

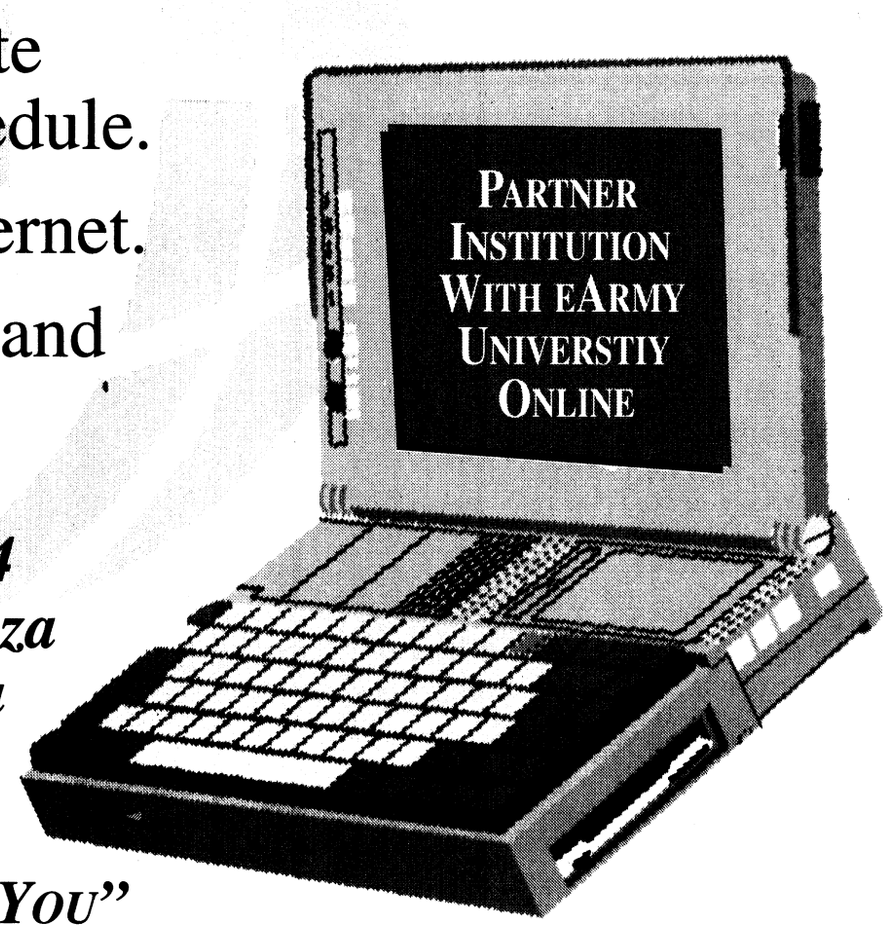
The excavation will last for at least three more months, Patrick Smith, Panamerican Consultants Inc. said.

"The excavation is going well, better than hoped, and we have a good group of people that are working" Lewis said. "You can learn a lot from what someone throws away."

After the artifacts are removed from the ground they are washed, analyzed and curated or stored for further research and possible museum display.

Should they be found, burial items or items of cultural patrimony will be subject to the wishes of the tribes. Fort Benning works with the tribes to place these items in a safe place.

In November 2000 initial investigation was started to determine if the site was eligible for the National Registrar of Historic Places; this would protect the site. To investigate the site, PCI used remote sensing technology to identify possible undisturbed cultural areas and dug 10 test units that were one-meter square holes to confirm the remote sensing data.



PCI found trash pits and six postholes that suggested some type of structure. Hundreds of artifacts were found including such things as a hand axe and beads. The artifacts are from the late 1800s and early 1900s.

Programs help prevent suicide attempts

Workshops teach suicide first aid

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Suicide is the the third leading cause of death in peacetime, claiming more than 30,000 lives in the U.S. annually. An estimated 750,000 people will attempt to kill themselves this year, and according to the American Association of Suicidology, 40 percent of those who succeed have tried previously.

Whites are twice as likely as minorities to attempt suicide, and though women are more likely than men, generally by nonviolent means, men are three times as likely to complete the act and typically use more violent means to do so.

Alcohol is a factor in a third of all suicides, depression accounts for nearly 80 percent and half of those who kill themselves have recently experienced some sort of loss, be it divorce, death or unemployment.

Though these kinds of national statistics and psychological profiles give health care professionals a means of gauging progress and probability, if not kept in the proper perspective, they can also make laymen complacent gatekeepers, said Fort Benning's chief of family life ministries.

"We have to be very careful of what conclusions we draw from statistics and risk factors. They can be deceptive and make us overconfident," said Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop. "I use the analogy of a river. Some of it moves slowly and predictably. Some move very swiftly, giving no indication of how risky it really is.

"Trying to pinpoint who's at risk for suicide is a lot like that. Some people exhibit all the textbook indicators. But even in cases where there are no typical warning signs, we have to be willing to ask, 'Are you thinking about suicide?'"

Koop and Chaplain (Capt.) Christian Biscotti,1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, recently completed the advanced Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training qualifying them to teach others to detect potential suicidal behavior and intervene by seeking the proper professional assistance.

Faced with a recent rise in active-duty suicides, a 26 percent increase between 1997 and 1999, the Army announced its suicide prevention campaign in February.

ASIST is just one of many combative steps involved in the "Soldiers, Leaders and Communities Saving Lives" campaign.

The campaign calls for two ASIST-qualified trainers at each installation.

"Chaplains have been receiving training on suicide prevention for a long time, but ASIST will give everyone that receives the training a common ground," said Lt. Col. Gregory Black, staff chaplain for the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine, in an Army News Service release.

The most widely used suicide intervention resource worldwide, ASIST was started 30 years ago by LivingWorks, a Canadian-based public service corporation with a mission to "create learning experiences that help communities prevent suicide."

"It's the best training I've ever had — superior than anything else out there because it's 80 percent application and only 20 percent lecture," said Biscotti. "That's what makes it such an affective module — the fact that you're constantly engaged in the material."

ASIST workshops are designed to teach caregivers "suicide first aid," so they can recognize the potential suicide threat and competently intervene. The workshops include interactive discussion and role play structured around four modules: knowledge, skills, resources and attitude.

Biscotti said the training challenged him to "deal with deep issues" he thought he'd resolved since his own stepfather committed suicide 15 years ago.

"We've all been affected by suicide in some way. Everybody knows of someone who's taken their own life. Well, I experienced it first hand and thought I knew it all," he said. "But this training really rocked me. It was a life-changing experience. It made me take a real close look at my own attitude. I think that's what makes this the premier workshop. Scientific research shows that to reach people for the mission of preventing suicide, you first have to make them reevaluate their own attitudes about suicide."

Biscotti said thoughts and acts of suicide are often met with little sympathy.

"You can have all the knowledge in the world, but you'll never be able to successfully apply it if your attitude gets in the way. There's been a pervasive attitude among soldiers that suicide is weak and threats of suicide is whining. There's a common misconception that those who talk about it don't do it," he said. "The truth is it does happen, but we don't believe it till we walk up to that casket. Then it's too late. We have to be willing to believe before the fact."

Biscotti and Koop will begin training workshops on Fort Benning in September, with an initial drive to train chaplains, assistants, commanders and first sergeants.

Biscotti said the two-day workshop has the potential to "revolutionize the Army," by making it a better place.

For more information about ASIST, call 545-1760.

Gatekeeper helps rate drop

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Despite an alarming increase in the number of active-duty suicides Armywide, Fort Benning has experienced a decline, thanks in part to Gatekeeper suicide prevention training, designed to help soldiers recognize the warning signs of suicide.

A Gatekeeper workshop will be conducted from 1 to 3:30 p.m., Tuesday, at the Sand Hill recreation center. The workshop, open to all soldiers and civilians, is the third offered by Fort Benning's Alcohol and Drug Prevention and Control since the program was implemented last year.

"Since September we've had no successful suicide attempts and a drop in the number of suicidal gestures overall," said Yvonne Wilbanks, an alcohol and drug control officer and Fort Benning's suicide prevention manager.

Gatekeeper training is "designed for those on the frontlines everyday — the platoon leaders, first sergeants, drill sergeants, squad leaders and company commanders — anybody who is in a position to identify high risk behavior and get help to the soldier who needs it," Wilbanks said. "The Army is all about helping the soldier in good times and bad. No one is immune to problems, so it's important that our leadership is trained to spot potential suicidal behavior and intervene."

Intervention in the form of referral is the gatekeeper's goal, said Staff Sgt. Stephen Darling, ADAPC's education NCO.

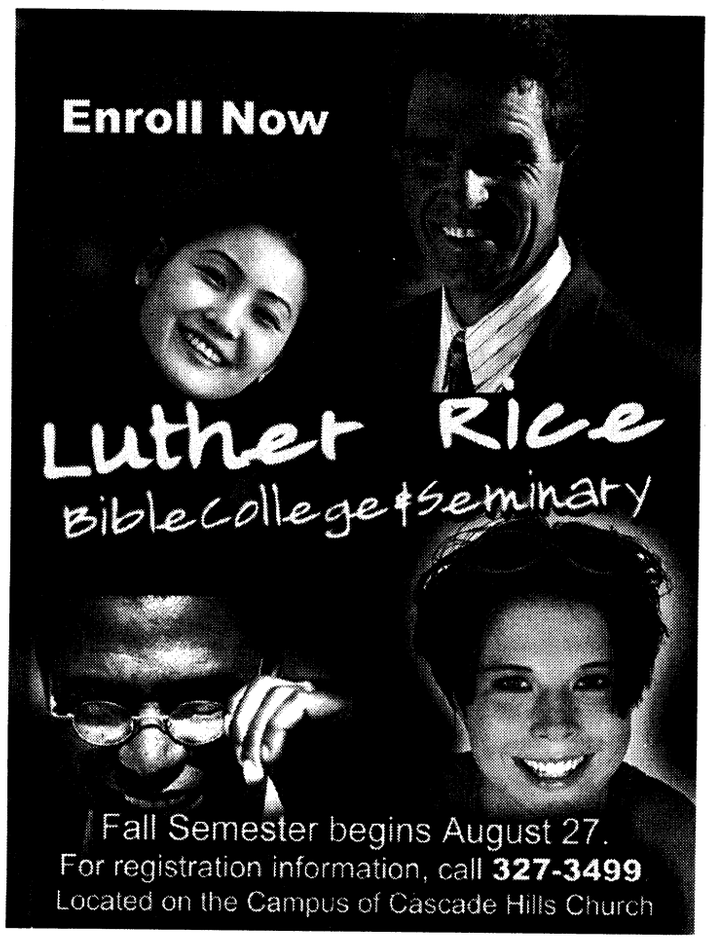
"It's not our intent to make you a therapist," Darling said. "We're training the soldier to recognize the signs and symptoms of suicide and make a referral. The medical term for this kind of intervention would be triage. You're simply trained to stand at the gate and open the gate to behavioral medicine specialists who can then give the soldier the kind of help he needs.

Darling said suicide prevention is everybody's business.

"Every soldier is taught to be observant of his fellow soldier. We're simply building on the principal we've already instilled in our soldier. We're taking the concept of watching out for each other and expanding on it psychologically," he said.

Wilbanks said more than 300 Fort Benning soldiers have already been trained as gatekeepers, including alcohol and drug specialists in every unit on post.

"Ultimately we want to get this training to every soldier," she said.

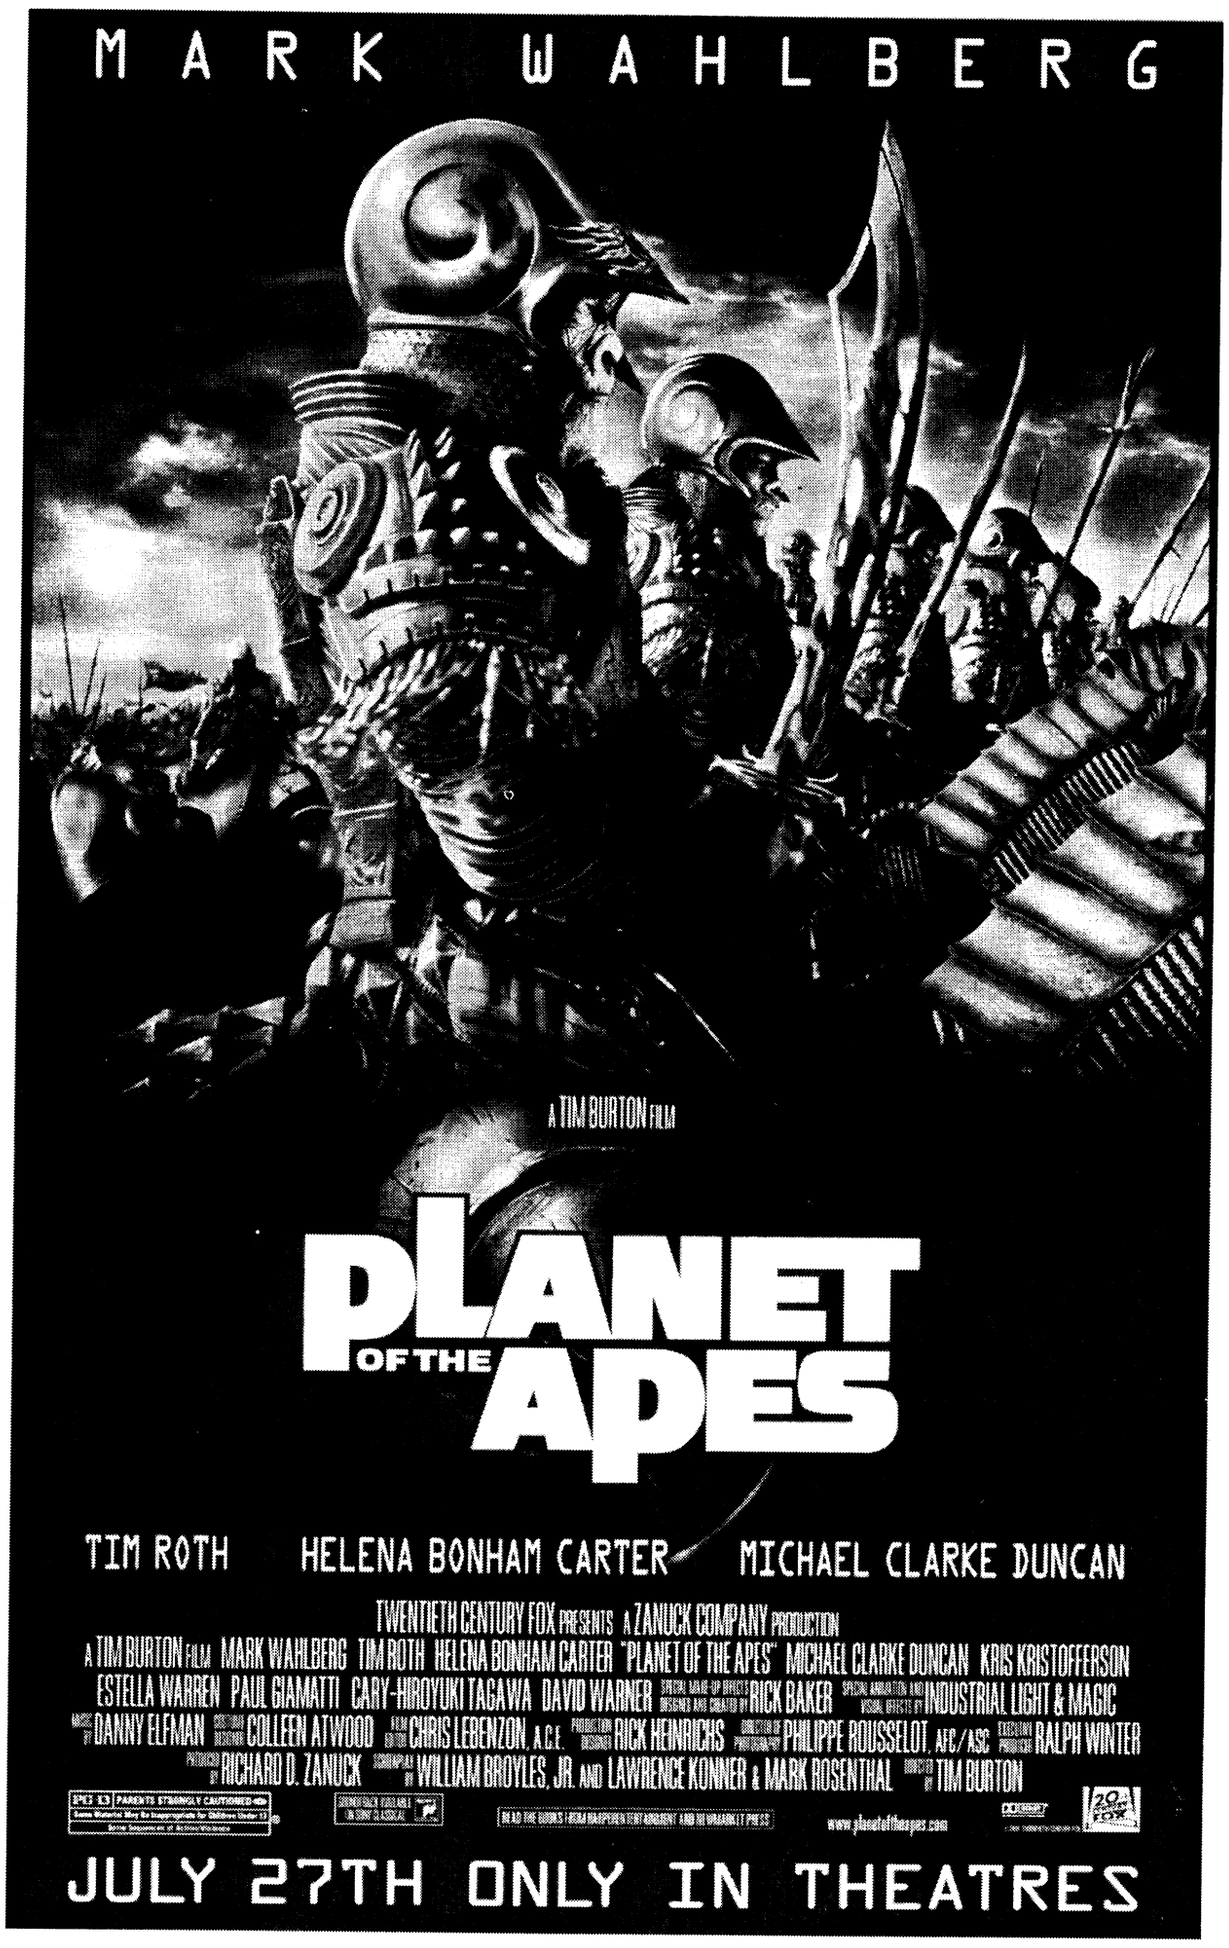


The training covers suicide risk factors, warning signs and "nontherapeutic intervention."

"Keep in mind that there are indicators to look for, but that doesn't mean someone who's contemplating suicide will exhibit all or any of this behavior. You have to keep an open mind and not be afraid to ask tough questions, like 'Are you thinking about killing yourself?'" Darling said. "Then you have to know that it's not disloyal to tell someone else. That's the main thing. Don't attempt to treat this person yourself."

Darling also cautioned soldiers and family members not "to buy into the myth that people who talk about suicide don't do it.

"It's a mistake not to take a gesture or an ideation seriously," he said. "Don't discount the sincerity of someone who casually mentions suicide. That's a warning sign that they've already begun to consider the possibility. That's the time to intervene."



For more information about suicide prevention, or to register for the Gatekeeper workshop, call 545-1138 or 545-4415.

Rangers gather for rendevous beginning Sunday

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

More than 2,000 rangers from 1st, 2nd and 3rd Battalions, 75th Ranger Regiment will gather at Fort Benning, Sunday through Thursday for this year's Ranger Rendezvous.

The rangers will display their soldier and athletic skills during the yearly weeklong competition beginning with a mass tactical airborne assault 4:45 p.m. Sunday onto Fryar Drop Zone.

During the five-day reunion, rangers will participate in everything from sporting competitions to changing command to donning the tan beret.

"It's a very important time for rangers in the regiment and for them to spend time with ranger veterans," Col. P.K. Keen, 75th Ranger Regt. commander said.

The schedule of events for the week includes:

Monday

• 6 a.m. — 10K, 5K and 1-mile fun run registration at Stewart Watson Field. Soldier and NCO of the year physical fitness test.

• 7 a.m. — 10K and 5K runs begin at Stewart Watson Field. Warren Evans Team Test begins.

• 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. — Basketball, softball, flag football and soccer competitions.

• 8:30 a.m. –- 1-mile fun run begins at Stewart Watson Field.

• 10 a.m. — Soldier and NCO of the year boards held at ranger headquarters conference room.

• 1 p.m. — Welcome and State of the Regiment briefings in Building 4, room number to be determined.

• 3 p.m. — Tug-of-war competition begins at Peden Field.

Tuesday

• 6 a.m. — Change of command full dress rehearsal at York Field.

• 1 to 7 p.m. — Boxing and combatives competitions.

• 1 to 9 p.m. — Best shot competition.

• 7 p.m. — Boxing and combatives finals .

Wednesday

• 6 a.m. — Regimental physical training at York Field.

• 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. — Static displays and open house at 3rd Bn., 75th Ranger Regt. compound.

• 4:30 p.m. — Ranger Hall of Fame ceremony at Marshall Auditorium.

Soldiers being inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame include Capt. Dick Stewart, Master Sgt. Milton Lockett Jr., Master Sgt. John D. Minatra, Staff Sgt. James D. Geer, Sgt. Maj. Sisto Cicuzza, Brig. Gen. Wes Taylor, Lt. Col. Ronald Ray, Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Purdy, Col. Charles Beckwith, Sgt. 1st Class Albert Atkins, Capt. Marvin Roberts, and Master Sgt. Mike Smith.

• 6 p.m. — Barbecue at Lawson Army Airfield.

• 9 p.m. — Awards ceremonies for competitions at Lawson Army Airfield.

Thursday

• 9:30 a.m. — Soldier and NCO of the Year ceremony at Ranger Memorial.

• 6:30 p.m. — Donning of the tan beret and regiment change of command ceremony at York Field.

The public is invited to all events. Participation in the runs Monday is open to everyone. The 24-hour Ranger Visitors' Bureau opens at noon Saturday at Peden Field and stays open until the end of the rendevous.

Keen said the best advice he can give to spectators and competitors alike is to stay cool and have fun, but most of all, "take advantage of the opportunity to associate with the distinguished veterans."

that name."

On Nov. 14, 1965 Freeman spent 14.5 hours flying water and ammunition to an infantry battalion heavily engaged in a battle at Landing Zone X-Ray in the Ia Drang Valley, Republic of Vietnam. He is credited with saving more than 30 lives by providing medical evacuations.

"It was a long day. For the longest (time) it was just a blur," Freeman said. "I didn't even know it happened on a Sunday until 20 years later. In war, days don't count."

During the 14.5-hour rescue mission Freeman said they never turned off the helicopter. They refueled it while it was running, and he remembers at one point eating half of a can of beanie weenies. It was in and out all day with water, ammunition, wounded and body bags, he said.

Freeman was a pilot in A Company, 229th Assault Helicopter Battalion, 1st Cavalry Division (Airmobile), when he volunteered to fly his helicopter through enemy fire to support the rescue mission.

"I had a tool that the Army provided me with, and that was my helicopter," Freeman said. "It's an amazing piece of equipment and with that tool I saved many lives."

"Freeman, who stands 6 feet 4 inches, was two inches taller than the Army's maximum height for pilots. He said he loved what the helicopter was able to do for the Army, and just hates that he couldn't have saved more lives.

"I was a professional soldier, and I was just doing my duty," Freeman said.

However, others consider his actions going above and beyond his duties.

"He's even more than a soldier because he did more than his duty," Bush said. "He served his country and his comrades to the fullest, rising above and beyond anything the Army or the nation could have ever asked."

The Medal of Honor is not the first award for heroism Freeman has received. The Medal of Honor is an upgrade from the Distinguished Service Cross. The initial award has been revoked because a soldier cannot receive two awards for the same action.

Freeman said he knew when he was 14 that he wanted to be a soldier. After two years in the Navy, Freeman returned to his hometown, Neely, Miss., and finished his last year of high school. He then enlisted in the Army in 1948.

During the Korean War, he was one of 14 men out of 257 assigned to B Company, 36th Engineer Battalion to survive the initial fight for Pork Chop Hill.

After his term in Vietnam, Freeman was assigned to Mineral Wells, Texas, as a flight instructor. At the completion of that tour he retired from the Army in 1967.

Freeman said his experiences in the Army has helped him appreciate life and to value freedom. He said he has tried to instill that in his children and grandchildren.

"This nation was born under revolution and rebellion, but we grew up with freedom. That's very difficult to take away once you have it."

In 1967 at the end of Freeman's Army career, he celebrated his first retirement. He was able to celebrate another one in 1991 after retiring from the Department of Interior.

"For 20 more years I worked for the government fighting wild fires and herding wild horses — very un-risky work," Freeman said. "I retired 10 years ago with 18,000 flight hours in a helicopter and 8,000-plus fixed wing hours, and I haven't flown since."

These days for Freeman are filled with spending time with grandchildren, attending reunions and fishing. Freeman said he considers himself a professional grandfather.

Hyde spoke of a "collective responsibility" between neighbors of the hemisphere in setting a model for the world in keeping security and ensuring democracy.

"This will sound new to some ears due to the old stereotype of a powerful U.S. imposing its will on the smaller states to its south. The truth, however, is that the U.S. now is as much acted upon as acting," he said.

The congressman referred to the North American Free Trade Agreement as a prime example, "I cite the NAFTA both as a model for a broader cooperation and also to emphasize that every country has a role to play in setting the common agenda.

"Contrary to popular imaginings, NAFTA was not a U.S. initiative, but a Mexican one, not a U.S. device to exploit Mexico, but an embrace sought by Mexico to advance its entry into the modern world," said Hyde.

Hyde mentioned that "our fates are joined together" within the hemisphere and that there is a definite role that the U.S. must play in promoting security and political freedom.

"I have a keen appreciation of having a training facility like the Institute to train our foreign militaries," said the congressman, a former commander in the U.S. Naval Reserve and World War II veteran.

"Any assistance we provide should be aimed at promoting the private sector and strengthening the institutions of civil society, without which, there can be no stable democracy or economic progress," said the congressman.

Hyde presented diplomas to the graduating class that represented eight different Latin American countries. The class was made up of military, police and civilians working in the Ministries of Defense and Public Safety.

comes at the right time."

Angie Saucier, team leader, personnel actions in TRADOC's adjutant general organization said, "Award of the Secretary of the Army's Superior Unit Award on this scale is a rare event."

Soldiers who were assigned to those units for at least 30 consecutive days during the period between Oct. 1, 1999, to Oct. 1, 2000, are entitled to permanently wear the ASUA ribbon.

Civilians meeting the criteria are entitled to permanently wear a lapel pin.

Personnel assigned after Oct. 1, 2000, may wear ribbons and pins for the duration of their assignments.

Saucier said that anyone unsure whether they are eligible for the award should contact their local adjutant general.

Riggers play key role in airborne operations

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Inside the pack shed at Lawson Airfield, members of the pack platoon work long days packing parachutes for the U.S. Army Airborne School and Ranger Indoctrination Program.

Lining the walls are stacks of canopies, aviation kit bags, harnesses and deployment bags. The center of the large room is filled with 26 pack tables lined up 13 deep on either side. At each table is a rigger working quickly and carefully packing parachute after parachute to the rhythm of the music wailing in the background.

"We put our careers on the line every time we pack a chute," said Spc. Nathanael Goodgame, parachute rigger for 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment,

"Each parachute packer packs it as if they are going to jump with it themselves," said Sgt. Troy McBride, parachute packer, inspector. "Everyday each rigger must pack 25 parachutes," Goodgame said that riggers are the only military occupation specialty that must become airborne qualified prior to their MOS training.

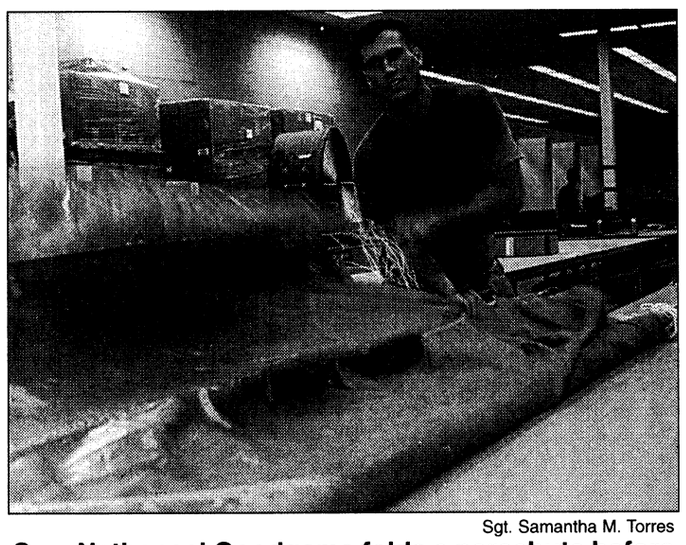
"If we are not on jump status, then we cannot pack. If we cannot pack, then we have to reclass," Goodgame said. "We do not get any extra pay for putting our careers on the line, but we do get airborne pay,"



The second round of inspections happens simultaneously as initial inspectors perform checks as riggers pack the parachutes. One for every four tables, IPs shuttle back and forth carefully examining each parachute system as it is laid out on the 40 foot tables and as the system is packed into the harness pack trays. In assembly-line fashion, riggers initiate the 12.5 year lifecycle of a parachute after they remove it from the shelf and pack it.

Parachute riggers work with the T10-C, the basic parachute. Lyons said the military employs this parachute because it is designed to bring its cargo, of up to 500 pounds, straight down at a rate of 18 feet per second. Because this parachute is not equipped with control toggles, it is not as maneuverable as the MC1-1.

Riggers also pack Modified Improved Reserve Parachute Systems, more commonly known as the reserve parachute. The canopy of the MIRPS is 24 feet in diameter, smaller than the canopy of the T10-C, which is 25 feet in diameter. MIRPS are also spring-loaded so that they will deploy faster, because if the airborne soldier must use the reserve, he is closer to the ground and needs that MIRPS to open much quicker than his main parachute, Lyons said.

After IPs have signed off on a parachute, a final inspector, a senior NCO, will perform another inspection of the equipment.

"The job can be very monotonous," Sgt.1st Class Phyllis Moore said, "that is why we have a rigger of the month and present that rigger with a certificate signed by the colonel." Moore has received the award twice. She knows that to achieve that recognition a rigger must report to work despite injury.

Spc. Nathanael Goodgame folds a parachute before he loads it in the pack tray at Lawson Army Airfield.

Injuries such as carpal tunnel syndrome, tendonitis in the wrists and even an occasional rotator-cuff damage are par for the course in this physically demanding job, McBride said.

"If we fall through, then the airborne mission fails," McBride said. "Leaders will look at us, the riggers, for answers."

Former airborne commander takes reins

11th Inf. Regt. welcomes new leader

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Members of the 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment bid farewell to Col. Michael Ferriter and his family, during a change of command ceremony on the lawn outside Infantry Hall Tuesday.

Post leaders and regiment members put on a welcoming ceremony fit for a general to hail incoming commander, Col. Steven C. Sifers.

"It is hard to say goodbye," Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne, post commander said. "This regiment trains the leadership of the Army. Quietly and professionally, these people show up (to work) everyday and give their best. Mike, that is your legacy, it will carry for a long, long time."

In his speech Ferriter thanked post commanders and leaders for their support during his two years as regimental commander.

"This has been my most rewarding and challenging position," Ferriter said.

Ferriter is credited with night shooting in the Infantry Officer Basic Course and the introduction of the Basic Instruction Certification Course for ground fighting techniques in lieu of hand-to-hand combat training Armywide.

"It is truly a great day to be a soldier here at the home of the infantry, the home of the American, airborne, Army's Officer Candidate School, Infantry Officer Basic and Captain's courses," Ferriter said.

His next assignment takes him and his family to Joint Forces Command, Norfolk, Va., where he will serve as deputy director, plans and operations, J-3.

Le Moyne welcomed back Sifers and his wife, Deborah, their two children, Nikolaus and Hannah. Three years ago Sifers commanded the U.S. Army Airborne School.

"The Sifers are very happy to be back at Fort Benning. It does feel like home, it does feel like family, we appreciate it all," Sifers said.

His awards include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, and the Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters.

New week brings new commander

Members of the 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment welcomed a new command team during a change of command ceremony at Kanell Field.

Lt. Col. Roy Krueger assumed command of the battalion as Lt. Col. Douglas McCallum moves onto Washington D.C.

In his opening address, Col. Thomas Hayden, brigade commander, remarked that the battalion's mission, "to transform civilians into infantrymen was met under McCallum's command.

"(It was) no easy task but McCallum has made it look easy. After being shaped and molded by this battalion, more than 5,000 infantrymen, over the last two years, have made our infantry better today because of the work that has been done under his leadership," Hayden said.

In his farewell speech McCallum thanked the post command group, members of the battalion and their families and his family for their commitment, support and memories.

"Thanks for the teamwork," McCallum said.

Returning to Fort Benning to assume command of the battalion is Krueger, with his wife Debbie and their son, Steven.

"I appreciate the turnout of the old friends and new friends," Krueger said, "I very much appreciate your support.

"To the officers, enlisted and family members, as well as the veterans, I am humbled and thankful to have the opportunity to serve as battalion commander. I am honored by your performance and your professionalism. I will give you everything that I've got," Krueger said.

Krueger's awards include the Meritorious Service Medal with five oak leaf clusters, and the Army Commendation Medal. He has earned the Ranger Tab, Parachutists Badge, and Expert Infantryman's Badge.

The ceremony was attended by Korean War veterans who served with the 19th Infantry Regiment.

CRC gets new leader

Soldiers bid commander farewell

Spc. Mark Watson
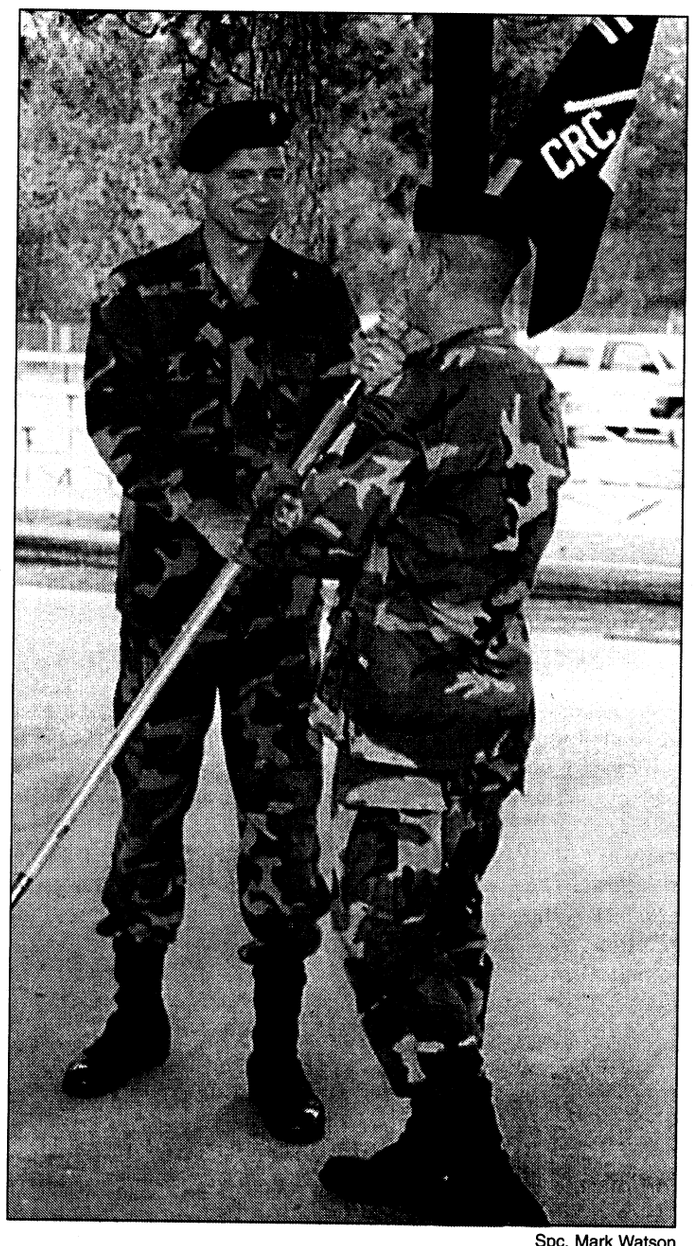
Bayonet staff

Soldiers from the CONUS Replacement Center said "goodbye" to one commander and "hello" to another July 13 when Lt. Col. Stewart Goesch relinquished command to Lt. Col. Dennis Turnage during a ceremony at the CRC.

Goesch, who has served as the battalion's top officer for the past two years, said his experience with the CRC has been the highlight of his military career.

"To have served for two years as an active duty battalion commander on Fort Benning far exceeds anything I ever thought I could do," Goesch said.



"Most soldiers spend their career training for a contingency that may never occur," he said. "It is the unusual privilege of the soldiers of the CRC, not to train, but to execute a real world mission of the United States of America.

"I am very proud to have served with the soldiers, NCOs and officers of the CRC. And make no mistake, I know who does the mission around here. It is not me — it is them."

Goesch and his wife, Milli and their children, Seraph, Gordon, Bergen and Greta, will move to Washington D.C. once again, where he will work in the Pentagon.

During his speech, Turnage said he was proud to assume command of the CRC.

"This indeed is an honor for me today to assume command of an organization that has a real world mission," Turnage said. "I look forward to the challenges. My wife, Barbara, and I look forward to our stay here, and to the personal and professional relationships we will gain here."

Spc. Mark Watson

Turnage most recently served as the deputy commander of the 1394th Deployment Support Brigade.

His awards and decorations include the Meritorious Service Medal, the Army Commendation Medal, the Army Achievement Medal, the Southwest Asia Service Medal, the Armed Forces Reserve Medal, the Army Service Ribbon, the Overseas Service Ribbon, the Kuwait Liberation Medal and the Airborne Badge.

He and his wife have four sons, Matthew, Jordan, Israel and Seth.

317th changes command

Buffalo Sappers hail new leader

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

Buffalo Sappers said "farewell" to one commander and "hello" to another Tuesday as Lt. Col. Stephen Hill relinquished command of the 317th Engineer Battalion to Lt. Col. Robert Tipton during a change of command ceremony on Essebagger Field.

During his speech, Hill said he was proud to be a member of the battalion.

"This is a great day ... to recognize and show off the best combat engineer battalion in the Army," Hill said. "Yes, I am a bit biased, but this outfit is not the best because of my actions, or simply because of the great commanders, NCOs and soldiers, but because of our system and military way of life. Our system and senior leaders provided an opportunity and environment so we can learn and be tested in the most rigorous conditions. So today I wanted to say thank you to our soldiers.

"I love these soldiers and what they stand for," he said. "They have performed magnificently in all conditions, all around the world, and I am proud of them. I am proud to have been a part of their team."

Hill and his wife, Susan, and son Ross, 13, will move to Fort Irwin, Calif.

During Tipton's speech, he said he is honored to assume command of the battalion.

"I am deeply humbled and honored to be given the trust of the citizens of the United States to lead their sons and daughters assigned to the battalion in service to the nation," Tipton said. "

To the soldiers of the 317th Engineer Battalion, you look great, which is no surprise as I truly believe you are the best sapper battalion in the Army. I pledge all my effort and energy to ensure our collective readiness to deploy and execute any mission assigned. I am honored to join your ranks today as a fellow Buffalo Sapper."

Tipton's most recent assignment was with Headquarters, U.S. Forces Japan where he served as a joint engineer staff officer.

He and his wife, Carol, have two daughters Laura, 13, and Sara, 10.

Soldiers prevail at NTC during "war"

Battlefield heroes praised for actions

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Every major field operation produces soldiers who deserve, above many others, to be recognized for the effort they put forth to harness their warfighting abilities.

Most recently, soldiers from three units made others take notice when were separated from the rest during a deployment to the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

Staff Sgt. LaJun Cole, 317th Engineer Battalion, leads one of those squads that excelled beyond most expectations.

His squad's objective: when on the offensive, breach obstacles, and on the defensive, create them.

That's the exact rule his squad followed when they had to create a passage way for the entire task force during the deployment.

After more than half of his platoon, including the commander and platoon leader, had been "killed" by enemy attack, a call came out to create a breach to allow the task force better access to the enemy.

The squad arrived at their objective less than 20 minutes later where they manually breached their obstacle.

After completing the manual breach, they popped smoke, completing the mission, allowing the task force to proceed to its destination.

Every member of Cole's squad received a coin after a change-of-mission for their job well accomplished.

"That was a really proud moment because we weren't expecting it," Cole said. "It makes you feel good when you train the guys and they perform."

Cole has completed six NTC rotations and said one of the major things he learned from this rotation is the value of having other squad leaders who are as technically and tactically proficient as himself.

Pfc. Benett Wilburn, 988th Military Police Company, and Pfc. Jahrell Hughes, 3rd Military Police Company, proved themselves to be quality soldiers.

They lost most of their squad members after coming under enemy attack during the defense of a Q36 radar site.

The two soldiers secured their weapons, moved to a ridgeline, and began perimeter protection, just as a large enemy armor force moved in to attack the radar.
