The two fought and prevailed over the enemy who had simply had enough and retreated.

Due to their efforts, the radar was able to continue serving the 3rd Brigade Combat Team.

"I was doing everything I could to keep myself from being 'killed' and to keep my team members from 'dying,'" Hughes said.

Hughes said he enjoyed fighting the enemy off because "it's what I came in (the Army) to do."

The two soldiers not only received certificates of achievement from observer controllers at NTC who witnessed the incident, but they were also given impact Army Achievement Medals from their company.

> "You don't get to see that in soldiers in everyday missions. What those two did shows me they're in the upper echelon of the soldiers we have in the Army today."
> Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Stevens
> Platoon sergeant, 3rd Military Police Company

"They did what we expected them to do, but you don't get to see that in soldiers in everyday missions," Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Stevens, 3rd MP Co. said.

"What those two did shows me they're in the upper echelon of the soldiers we have in the Army today," Stevens said.

"I would say it's almost immeasurable what the guys picked up at NTC. I don't think you could measure the value of what a young soldier picks up at NTC."

Hughes said he learned a lot from his rotation to NTC. Mostly, he said he learned that having to take charge doesn't always come when you expect it, and how to work with others more proficiently.

Pfc. Genaro Hernandez, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, is another soldier who was separated from his peers and made an impact on the mission at NTC.

Hernandez, a howitzer paladin cannoneer, claims he was "just doing his job," but many soldiers think otherwise.

After spending several mid-night hours verifying missions from the fire direction center on his own, Hernandez and crew began receiving fire missions.

During one hour of constant fire missions, the crew was attacked with chemical agents.

Forced to go to MOPP 4, Hernandez, continued to load every piece of heavy ammunition for each fire mission sent from higher headquarters.

At the end of the heated hour, Hernandez had single-handedly loaded 67 rounds into the cannon.

"When we get the fire missions, we're supporting everything out there," Hernandez said. "If we don't do our job, they can't do theirs."

Hernandez said he simply tries to do his job as best as possible because he hopes to be promoted to the rank of specialist soon.

He also said he feels his entire crew should have been recognized for the job they performed as well.

Hernandez received a coin and an impact Army Achievement Medal for his efforts during the rotation.

"I did well, but we're a team and we make each other look good," he said. "Without them, it wouldn't have been possible."

Kelley Hill unit learns NTC's valuable field lessons

Can Do soldiers return home from California

1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

Returning home from an arduous month of training at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., soldiers of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment bring with them experiences and training which will enhance the unit's ability to deploy anywhere in the world at a moment's notice.

The "Can Do" soldiers trained on areas of war fighting ranging from basic infantry maneuver techniques to advanced war planning for leaders.

The NTC uses three phases designed to simulate deploying to a foreign country: phase I, reception, staging, onward movement, and integration; phase II, force on force; and phase III, regeneration.

During RSOI, units simulated deploying to a foreign country where they trained on receiving necessary equipment into a host nation, force protection and basic rules of engagement training.

The main focus during this phase is the build up of combat power and ends with a peacekeeping mission known as a Stability And Support Operations mission.

The force on force phase trained units to perform basic war fighting tactics and techniques against a formidable opponent, the "Krasnovians."

This training event is designed to force units to perform critical missions under difficult conditions such as constrained timelines and disruptive enemy attacks pushing units to their limits.

Incorporated into the force on force training are two live-fire missions, one offense and one defense.

These live-fires are unique in that the range is not bound by normal range constraints and pushes units to demonstrate great attention to detail for safety while performing these missions.

The live-fire allows units to fire ordnance they would not be able to fire anywhere else, to include TOW missiles, Stinger missiles and mine clearing systems.

The last phase is regeneration. During this phase, units redeploy and continue training at the home station on lessons learned at NTC.

The "Can Do" soldiers returned home with the necessary knowledge and training, equipped for any conflicts that may arise and continue to carry on the Army tradition of excellence.

PT Physical fitness Training program slows aging

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

At the age of 85, retired Master Sgt. Finas Harris likes to do the same things most of his generation enjoy. When he's not cavorting with his grandchildren or puttering in the yard, he enjoys the beach and makes "annual donations" at his favorite casino.

"I don't call it gambling," he laughed. "I'm a tight-wad. I like my money, but I leave a little behind."

But there's one thing the Columbus resident won't gamble — his health. Though admittedly blessed with "good genes and longevity," Harris attributes his youthful energy and positive attitude to daily exercise and a healthy diet.

A regular fixture at Fort Benning's Briant Wells Field House, Harris "hits the deck each morning at 6," so he can be at the gym by 8 — first in line for the treadmill, nautilus equipment, sauna or swimming pool.

"I feel good. I exercise, eat right and drink plenty of water. That's the secret to living well," Harris said.

A Joelton, Tenn., native, Harris was "tired of farm work" when he joined the Army in 1934 on his 17th birthday. He served 33 years, as a combat engineer in the South Pacific during World War II, and later with the military police.

As a soldier, Harris said he took physical fitness for granted, never realizing the "true benefit" until suffering a mild stroke six years ago.

"The doctor said my physical condition was a great help overcoming it. I didn't have to go through therapy. I kept working out," Harris said. "To this day I don't have to take any medication at all, just a vitamin every day."

Just as soldiers don't realize the benefit of staying fit until they go to war, Harris said, senior citizens don't recognize the need to stay active until they battle the maladies inherent with age.

"Too many people my age sit at home and discuss changing doctors. I say they should get a little exercise," Harris said.

Lt. Col. William Rieger, commandant of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, agreed with Harris. Having spoken and written extensively on the subject of senior fitness, Rieger said there is no age limit to the benefits of exercise.

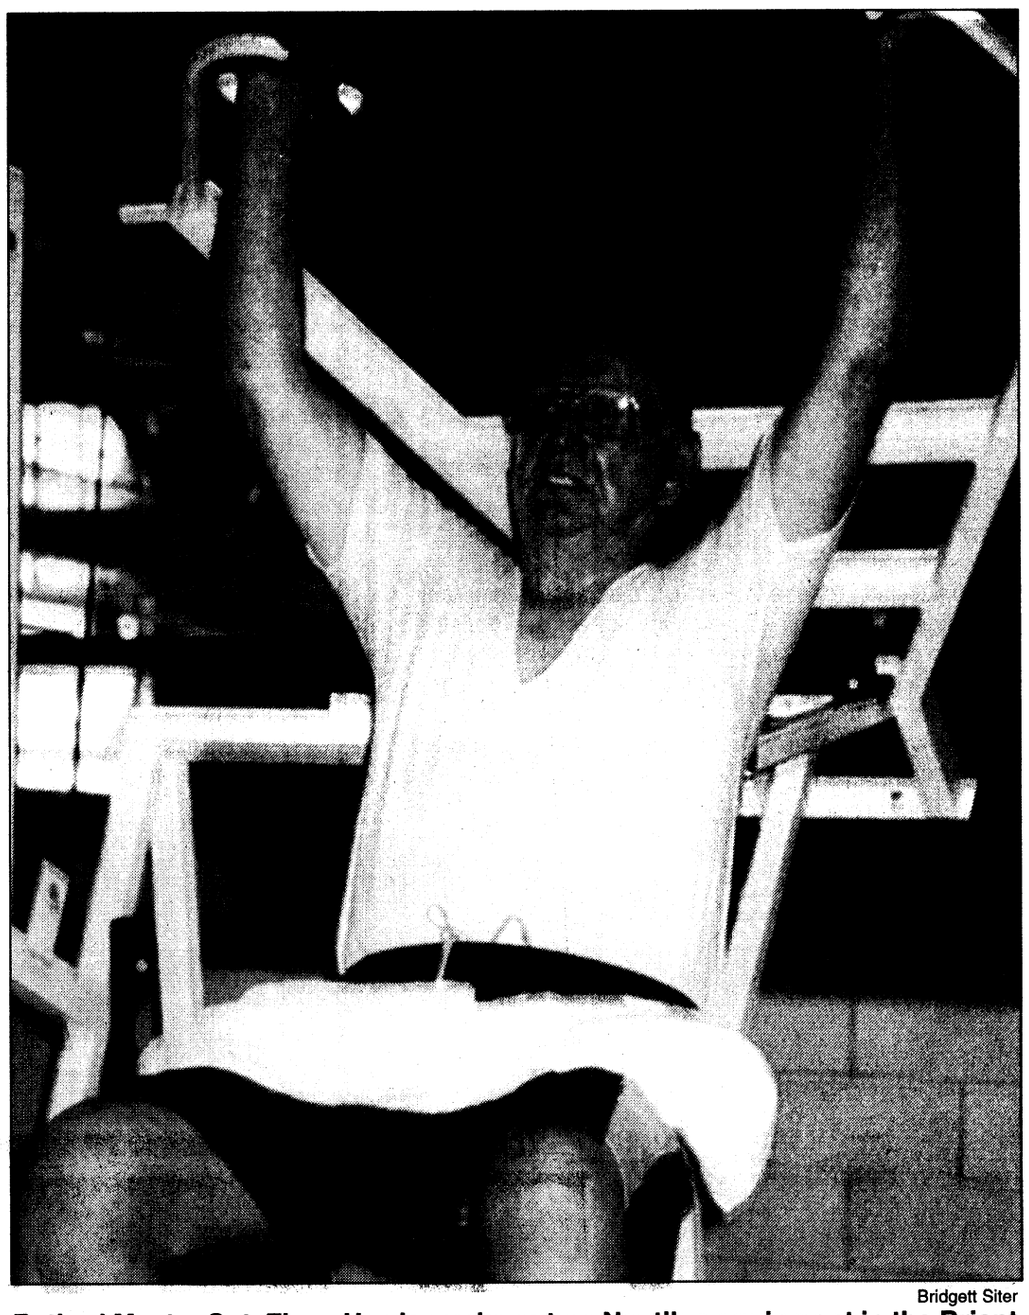
"Regular activity, in fact, can often slow or reverse the decreased mobility that occurs with aging," said Rieger, in The Exercise Antidote. "Research demonstrates that a program of aerobic, strength training and flexibility exercise helps maintain mobility, improve quality of life and prolong independence."

The most frequent complaints physicians hear from middle-aged and senior patients are musculoskeletal weakness, stiffness and pain, caused partly by genetics. But according to a study by the MacArthur Foundation, 70 percent of how we age can be attributed to lifestyle choices.

Though nothing can be done to reverse genetics, Rieger said there are ways to slow, prevent or even reverse the course of decreased mobility. He prescribes exercise.

"One study of healthy seniors aged 60 to 70 years found that a walking program, 45 minutes four days per week produced a mean increase of 24 percent in functional aerobic capacity," Rieger wrote, but "the most dramatic exercise benefits have been achieved through strength training."

Besides increasing muscular strength, studies consistently show that weight training helps improve balance, reduce blood pressure, stabilize blood sugar levels and lower cholesterol.



Weight-bearing – any exercises in which your feet and legs are bearing your weight, including jogging, walking, stair climbing and dancing – and resistance exercises, such as weight lifting, are also important to maintain and increase bone density, which lowers the risk of breakage. But the National Osteoporosis Foundation urges seniors to have their doctor conduct a bone-density test before beginning any exercise program. Osteoporosis, a disease in which bones become fragile, and therefore more likely to break, affects nearly 28 million Americans – two million of which are men.

If not prevented or left untreated, osteoporosis can progress painlessly until a bone breaks, typically in the hip, spine or wrist.

Age, genetics, bone structure, body weight and lifestyle are all risk factors, but the disease is largely preventable. The four steps to preventing osteoporosis are:

• maintaining a balanced diet rich in calcium and vitamin D

• a healthy lifestyle with no smoking or excessive alcohol

Bridgett Siter

Retired Master Sgt. Finas Harris works out on Nautilus equipment in the Briant Wells Field House.

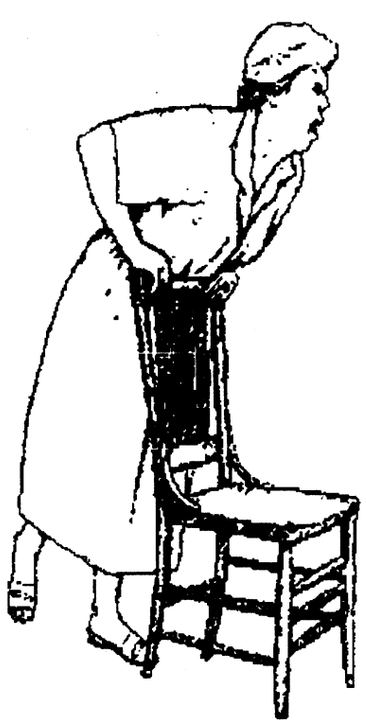
• regular bone density testing and medications when appropriate

• a regular, consistent exercise program, including weight-bearing exercises.



Rieger recommends beginners consult a physician before starting an exercise program and begin with light resistance training and stretching exercises. Progression is a matter of patience, he said, but it's reasonable to allow six weeks of regular, consistent activity before changes become physically noticeable.

But Harris said the start of an exercise regimen will produce one important result instantly.

"You'll feel better about yourself right off," he said. "And that's important at any age."

Self-help techniques save lives

The Heimlich Maneuver for choking

1. Make a fist and place the thumb side of your fist against your upper abdomen, below the rib cage and above the navel.
2. Grasp your fist with your other hand and press into your upper abdomen with a quick upward thrust.
3. Repeat until object is expelled.

Alternatively, you can lean over a fixed horizontal object, such as the table edge, a chair or a railing, and press your upper abdomen against the edge to produce a quick upward thrust. Repeat until object is expelled.

See a physician immediately after rescue.

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

CPR classes are offered on military posts and civilian communities across the globe. They teach everyday people how to become real-life heroes.

But how do you save yourself?

How to increase survival of a heart attack when alone:

Without help, a person whose heart stops beating properly and begins feel faint has only seconds before losing consciousness.

Victims can help themselves though, by forcefully coughing repeatedly. A deep breath should be taken before each cough and the cough must be deep and drawn-out.

Every two seconds, a breath and cough must be repeated without let up until help arrives or until the heart begins beating normally again.

It has been found that deep breaths get oxygen into the lungs and coughing movements squeeze the heart and keep the blood flowing. The squeezing pressure on the heart also helps it regain normal beating.

(Information taken from Health Cares, Rochester General Hospital)

Performing the Self-Heimlich:

Pvt. Mark Abdou, an emergency medical technician, recommended the following procedure:

Locate a fixed object, like a hardback chair, railing or table edge. Fall or press the area above the belly button (upper abdomen) to produce a quick upward thrust.

Repeat until item is dislodged.

OR

Make a fist and place the thumb side of your fist against your upper abdomen. Grasp your fist with your other hand and press into the area with a quick thrust. Repeat until item is dislodged.

It's a maneuver that saved one of his instructor's lives, he said.

"He was eating steak in his apartment alone and he started choking," Abdou said. "He saved himself because he knew what to do, he stayed calm and he didn't panic."

Another lifesaving technique Abdou recommended is calling 911, even if a victim cannot speak. Calls are traced within seconds and emergency units are dispatched to the address.

(Information obtained from The Heimlich Institute)

Heat Injuries:

Fort Benning disseminates heat injury information to thousands of soldiers a year. But senior members of the community can be more vulnerable to the heat, said Staff Sgt. Gary Newman, preventive medicine NCOIC.

Injuries can be avoided by drinking a lot of water if one knows they'll be outside. Light and loose-fitting clothing should be worn in warm weather.

"Try to conduct business in the early morning or after dusk," he said.

There are several types of heat injuries, from mild sunburn to a lethal heat stroke. Cramps and heat exhaustion can lead to the most severe form of injuries

Atropine, high blood pressure, cold medications, antihistamines, tranquilizers and some diarrhea medications are also risk factors in heat injuries.

For more information on heat injuries, call the Health Promotion Center at 545-2885 or consult your physician.

Get online, get an education

Steve Valley
Bisk Education, Inc.

The OPORD was in and the planning process was complete for the midnight assault on Fort Benning's Education Center Jan. 16.

If all went well, Sgt. 1st Class Joseph Sine and his squad leader would be first in line to reap the benefits of earning a free bachelor's degree from Saint Leo University offered through the new Army University Access Online Program.

Mission accomplished! Sine, a 14-year Army veteran stationed as the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity Career Counselor at Martin Army Community Hospital, was first in line when the Education Center opened its doors to hundreds of soldiers who were eager to take advantage of a free education and the chance to earn an accredited associate's or bachelor's degree free through distance learning.

"My friend and I showed up with our sleeping bags and a thermos of coffee and camped out in front of the door," said Sine. "During the night everyone kept coming from the back of the line and laughing at us because we were in sleeping bags, but come morning they weren't laughing anymore."

With more than 500 soldiers in line, the Education Office announced that it would only be able to enroll the first 100 soldiers that first day. The soldiers in line received numbers with a date to come back to the office. Sine had number one.

Of the numerous universities available through AUAO, he chose to enroll in Saint Leo University, a four-year school located near Tampa, Fla., that offers one of the nation's largest accredited online, multimedia based undergraduate degree programs.

AUAO is among a series of dynamic changes undertaken recently by the Army. Specifically, the mission of AUAO is to increase retention by allowing soldiers to earn credits, degrees and certificates at no cost while serving on active duty and to develop educated, information age-savvy soldiers who can succeed in the network-centric missions and battlefields of the 21st century. AUAO and its educational portal, eArmyU, provides eligible enlisted soldiers the opportunity to learn while they serve their country.

As a career counselor, Sine counsels soldiers on their professional development, civilian and military education and provides guidance for all aspects of their civilian and military life.

"I look at all avenues to obtain the best possible options for soldiers staying in the Army, and provide overall professional development for them," said Sine.

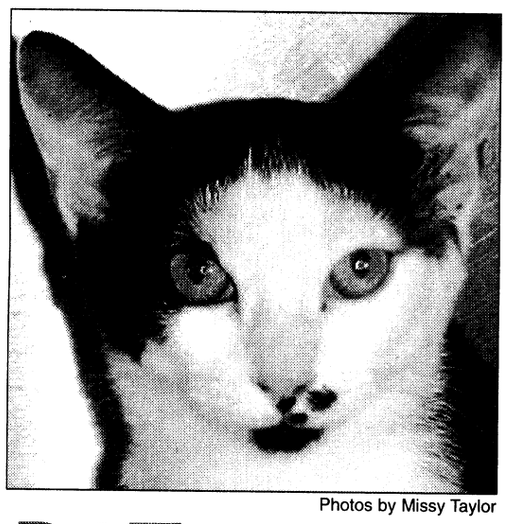
In 2000, Sine earned his associate's degree by attending night classes with his wife, Mary, an 18-year Army veteran, while they were both stationed in Korea. The Sine's have a 10-year old son Joey.

"My wife and I decided that we needed to continue on with our bachelor's degree, but it's very hard being in the military, defending the country and trying to get an education at the same time. It is something that you have to be committed to," said Sine.

In the program, students set their own hours and attend class in the comfort of their home or office, whenever it is convenient for them. The classes offered are designed so that students can conveniently balance the demands of their jobs and personal commitments with those of a comprehensive on-campus degree program.

"It was a struggle to work 12-13 hour days and then have to sit in a class for three hours at night like I did in Korea. Whereas now, I dictate when I do the classes. I am in control of my own destiny," said Sine.

In Sine's opinion, pursuing education is the primary factor why soldiers were leaving the Army.



"Most of the incentive to join the military is education driven. We provide soldiers the Montgomery GI Bill and give them loan repayment. Well, we were losing many of our soldiers so they could get out of the military and use these benefits to get their education. Now we have eArmyU where the soldiers don't need to get out of the military to take advantage," he said. "They can stay in the Army and receive a free education without even having to use their GI Bill benefits. Now with the incentive to stay in and get your education, eArmyU has created a tremendous program to keep soldiers in the Army."

Sine is leading by example and is spreading the word through his counseling about eArmyU.

"I wanted to be first in line and give firsthand knowledge of how the program works and to show all the soldiers I counsel that the program exists-and they need to take advantage of it," said Sine.

"As this program expands throughout the Army, soldiers need to be aware of it. Sometimes when someone offers you something that is too good to be true, it is not true. But I'll tell you in this case, this is beyond comprehension; that the Army is willing to give free education and not charge the soldier a single penny for it," he said. "I think every eligible soldier in the Army should take advantage of what the military has to offer them."

Pets of the Week

A 4-month-old male kitten and 9-month-old female Australian Shepherd need loving homes. Both are just two of the many animals available for adoption at the Fort Benning adoption clinic. For more information on how to adopt a pet, call 545-4444.

Pet Tips:

Female cats go in and out of heat constantly until pregnant. There aren't enough homes for all of them either. Please be a responsible pet owner and spay and neuter your feline friends.

Do your homework before adopting a dog. Learn all about the breed before you take home a new dog. Remember, dogs live on average of 8-12 years. Be certain you are ready to take on all that comes with the breed you decide on for at least that long.

Show has historic beginnings

Soldiers entertain military for more than 80 years

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Continuing for the 83rd season, the 2001 Army Soldier Show hits the local stage at 2 p.m. July 28 at the Columbus Civic Center.

Because completely different themes and casts each year are chosen, each season is unique.

The motto, mission and philosophy of the original show started with Russian immigrant, Sgt. Israel Belin during World War I. The initial show, entitled Yip Yip Yaphank, graced the Broadway stage in 1918.

Cast and crewmembers of the U.S. Army Special Services Company #1 comprised the Broadway show during a reincarnation of the show during World War II, under the title This is the Army. The productions' organizer was that same soldier, then known as Irving Berlin.

The 1943 film, carrying the same stage name, followed suit and featuring former President Ronald Reagan, Gene Kelley and Joe Lewis.

The modern version of the show originated in 1983 as an outgrowth of several soldier shows existing in various Army commands. And various commands still encourage aspiring soldiers to submit application packages each year to an audition panel each year.

Some of the same tunes that were heard during the multi-decade run of the show will be performed July 28, as well as current rock chart-toppers, movie tunes, soul, patriotic and even classic operatic pieces.

This year's show highlights the talent of 16 performers and six technicians. The 80-minute live, Broadway-style review showcases talents of the active-duty soldiers who are selected by audition throughout the Army.

Cutting costs to run the show, the cast and crew unload, assemble, dismantle and load out more than 15 tons of equipment needed to run the show. And the show flourishes off soldier dollars, generated from fees and charges in other MWR programs in addition to corporate sponsorships from USPA&IRA and the Army National Guard.

Fort Benning is the 20th stop on the six-month tour. The cast and crew of this year's show will stage more than 100 performances in 21 states in 57 installations.

Sally Ghent, Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Community Activities administrative officer, encouraged the community to attend the July 28 production.

The show is open to active duty and dependents, retirees, DOD civilians and the local community is.

"It's great entertainment. You'll be surprised with the talent of the soldiers," said Ghent.

For more information, call Sally Ghent at 545-1248.

Congress directs overseas benefits

Stateside program goes abroad

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — A government-sponsored supplemental food and health education program available to stateside military families will soon become available to families overseas as well.

The Special Supplement Nutrition Program for Women, Infants and Children, commonly known as WIC, will begin overseas in early 2001, said Roger W. Hartman, a Tricare health policy analyst.

"We've folks in the military stateside who are using WIC, but then get orders for overseas duty and lose the benefit. That's like taking a cut in pay," he said.

"Congress directed us to make WIC as available to personnel overseas as it is to those in the United States," he said.

"We're talking fundamentally about pay and money and making supplemental foods available to people where they are not available now — and improving the overall health, diet and nutrition of the family members in the process."

The Child Nutrition Act of 1966 authorized WIC. Benefits have been available to military families stationed in the United States and its territories since about 1972, Hartman said. A recent amendment to U.S. Code Title 10 allows DoD to extend the program overseas.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture administers the WIC program in the United States. The program focuses on low-income, pregnant women, new mothers, infants and toddlers, he said.

Participants receive vouchers at no charge that can be redeemed for specific food products prescribed by health care professionals. The program also offers nutritional education and health counseling services.

> a Tricare health policy analyst.

"WIC participants overseas will need to have access to military medical facilities to obtain nutritional screenings and eligibility determinations. They will also need access to a food supply, which overseas will be our military commissaries and Navy exchange markets," Hartman said. While stateside WIC beneficiaries can use food vouchers in any store that will accept them, DoD has no plans to arrange for voucher use in foreign grocery stores, he added.

Tricare, medical and Defense Commissary Agency officials will co-manage the overseas WIC program, Hartman said.

Tricare is only a co-manager —the WIC overseas program is not a new TRICARE benefit, he stressed.

WIC office locations on overseas military installations will be determined by the local commands, he added.

About 7 million people living in the United States and its territories use WIC benefits every month, Hartman said.

Program benefits will be available to U.S. service members, DoD civilian employees, DoD contractors, and their family members, he said.

Pentagon officials estimate up to 40,000 persons overseas may be eligible to use WIC.

Hartman said the program will be implemented in phases:

Phase 1: WIC begins early next year at Yokosuka, Japan (Navy); Okinawa, Japan (Marine Corps and Air Force); Guantanamo Bay, Cuba (Navy); RAF Lakenheath, England (Air Force); and Baumholder, Germany (Army).

Phase 2: WIC should be in place by mid-2001 at all remaining overseas sites served by military medical treatment facilities and commissaries and Navy exchange markets. WIC will be offered at remote overseas locations contingent on suitable medical facilities and commissaries and Navy exchange markets.

"Some people in truly remote areas won't have access to WIC," Hartman said.

WIC serves 45 percent of all infants born in the United States, Hartman estimated. The eligible populations served include:

- Women throughout pregnancy and up to six weeks after birth or after pregnancy ends.
- Breastfeeding women, up to infant's first birthday.
- Nonbreastfeeding women, up to six months after the infant's birth or after pregnancy ends.
- Infants up to their first birthday.
- Children up to their fifth birthday.

Hartman said income is a key determinant in WIC program eligibility. Participants' gross income must fall at or below 185 percent of the U.S. Poverty Income Guidelines, he said.

For example, he said, a family of four with an income below $31,543 would be eligible for WIC benefits.

An unmarried pregnant woman who has no other children and who has been determined to be at nutritional risk could qualify for WIC if her annual income falls below $15,448, he added.

The second major qualifier for WIC eligibility is a nutritional health risk assessment conducted at a medical facility, Hartman continued.

"Something has to be going on with the mother, infant or child that a health care professional identifies as representing a nutritional need or deficit," he said.

Health conditions that might be linked to nutrition or that might involve specific dietary needs include anemia, underweight, the mother's age, and a history of pregnancy complications or poor outcomes, Hartman said.

Diet is also considered, he added.

"This usually involves poor eating habits, eating too much of the wrong foods and not enough of the right foods," Hartman said. "It may even have to do with how foods are prepared."

Foods that can be obtained with WIC vouchers include iron-fortified infant formula and cereal, iron-fortified adult cereal, vitamin-C-rich fruits and vegetable juices, eggs, milk, cheese, peanut butter, dry beans or peas, canned tuna and carrots.

"They are all high in nutrients such as protein, calcium, iron, or vitamins A and C," Hartman said.

He called WIC's nutritional education and counseling invaluable, though overshadowed by the program's food vouchers.

"I think the educational and counseling pieces of the WIC program are overlooked. They're extremely important, especially if the nutritional deficit is mainly caused by poor dietary habits — this kind of problem often times can be corrected just through education and counseling," he said.

better business bureau

Better Business Bureau

Lenders often use automated "credit scoring" systems to help them make decisions on loan applications.

Credit scores have been around for some time, but what exactly is credit scoring and how can you improve yours?

According to the FDIC, credit scoring is a tool that is designed to enhance a lender's ability to determine the likelihood that a consumer will repay a loan, and to decide and set loan-repayment terms for the loan applicant.

It is based in part on credit scoring "models," which are computerized systems that look at a variety of factors, sometimes hundreds, relating to many consumers' credit histories and personal information such as age, income and level of outstanding debt.

Scoring systems collect this data to try to predict your willingness and ability to pay future debts. Credit scoring systems usually produce a numerical score — a credit score.

A low credit score does not automatically disqualify you from getting a loan. But it may prompt the lender to review your qualifications more carefully before granting you a loan.

Or, a low credit score may result in a higher interest rate or more stringent repayment terms than those offered to other consumers.

A credit score, however, can be an imperfect way to try to predict whether someone will default on a loan.

Among the reasons for the imperfections: the information that was reported to the company that developed the scoring model, perhaps a credit bureau, may be inaccurate or the statistical assumptions behind the program may be unsound.

You can improve a low credit score by concentrating on paying your bills on time, paying down outstanding balances and not taking on new debt.

It is a good idea to review your credit report periodically, to make sure it accurately reflects your credit history.

That way you can provide missing details or fix inaccurate information before it gets factored into your credit score.

True happiness comes from being yourself

Chaplain (Capt.) Leslie Forbes-Mariani
2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment

reflections

I was reflecting on the Declaration of Independence this past month. I was struck at the power in this great document, declaring the rights of Americans to "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

As Americans with the traditional things we do on holidays, gathered to eat, celebrating the joy of the holiday, being with family and friends, the goal is to be happy.

The principles of the Declaration of Independence affirm a belief in God, the power of the human spirit and the rights of all to pursue life, liberty and happiness.

So how is happiness found? Is it in what we possess or acquire? Is it in power, beauty or strength? How do we pursue such an elusive concept? How can we find happiness?

Happiness is being yourself, living at peace in reality. It is a great struggle to always be someone other than yourself. Always striving to be like others, wishing God made you different.

Dreaming away your life in the search for the better you, the thinner, taller, more handsome, stronger you is not happiness.

Self-improvement and perfecting your skills are all beneficial and important in personal development. At some point in life though, there needs to be an acceptance of how God made you.

Fear can keep someone from trying to develop abilities they have been given by God. Fear can also drive someone to obsession beyond reality.

The balance in life comes when you can accept the way God made you, by developing your natural abilities and learning new skills.

The inner peace of knowing you have been able to become all that God wanted you to be is the reward of being yourself.

Happiness is possible when your focus is not on indulging in personal pleasures (this is an illusion of happiness).

It happens when the focus of your life is centered on God. When your view of happiness is not over the conquests of other's joy, happiness is possible.

Happiness is the simple pleasures of life; the cup of coffee in the morning, the laughter of children at play, a hot bath, an accomplishment long waited, a sense of fulfillment.

The deepest happiness comes when we are giving ourselves to others, specifically to God.

It is when we realize God has a plan and purpose for us that joy, peace and happiness are obtained. Our creator desires us to experience fulfillment, happiness and joy.

Focusing or centering our happiness on ourselves or others and not on God is what leads to unhappiness. We cannot fulfill the expectations of our own hearts to bring us peace and happiness.

As a kid I remember looking at the piles of gifts given to me for my birthday, wondering what could be inside.

My imagination built upon the secret desires of my heart. With wrapping and the ribbon gleaming in my eye, truly, I thought, all my dreams were to be fulfilled.

Then as I tore away the outer glamour I discovered socks, a toy, a book. All of which are great gifts that I wanted or needed and actually thought were nice, but not as glamorous as the wrapping and my imagination.

Putting God first in our lives always brings peace, joy and happiness.

The knowledge that God loves me, has a plan for me and forgives me, is the hope I have leading to the peace which produces deep happiness.

The patriots of the past had it right. Happiness is pursued as we rely on the divine providence of God to fulfill the pledges we have made to each other.

It is not what we possess, or acquire, but when we look to the interests of others and rely on the supreme judge of the world to give our heart's liberty that happiness is found.

Children's values learned from parents

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Robert Coles, a psychologist at Harvard, observed, "Parents who want to give their children the best chance in life will give them a strong set of values."

Without values, life is chaotic and becomes an endless cycle of heartache and tragedy.

Most children spend 30 to 50 hours a week watching television, videos and movies.

Others spend another 10 hours on the Internet.

The media isn't known for its values.

George Barna reported that three out of four adults reject the notion of absolute truth.

They favor an approach that's personal and committed.

Josh McDowell stated nearly 80 percent of evangelical kids say that no objective standard of truth exists.

When children don't accept an objective standard of truth, they can run into a myriad of problems.

They are twice as likely to be involved with pornography, to steal, lack purpose, to be resentful and to be angry with life.

They are three times as likely to use illegal drugs.

They are six times as likely to attempt suicide.

If parents can help their kids develop solid convictions about truth, it will double or triple their chances of making moral choices in a very immoral world.

In a recent study of 100 happy families, nearly 90 percent pointed to spirituality as a significant, if not dominant, guiding force in their lives.

Of all the people in society who teach and care for children, only parents can provide the ingredients that effectively nurture people of quality.

It is the long-term relationship and commitment to our children, that afford us this singularly unique position to influence them.

Values are taught through personal example, a vibrant religious faith, close family and positive peer groups.

Would you like more help instilling values in your children?

Free Agents pound way to win

Team performs well despite player shortage

Spc. Mark Watson
Bayonet staff

A slow-starting HHC defense was the key to the Free Agents' 15-9 victory over Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, on Gowdy Field during Monday's intramural softball game.

The Free Agents, B Co., 2nd Battalion, 29th Inf. Regt., found the weak link, the HHC defense and made the most of it.

The game started off with a bang for the Free Agents as right-center fielder Fernando Nolasco belted the ball up the right field line for an infield homerun.

Shortstop Emilio Lopez reached third and drove in a runner after HHC third baseman Tammy Newman made a fielding error starting a string of bobbled and misthrown balls.

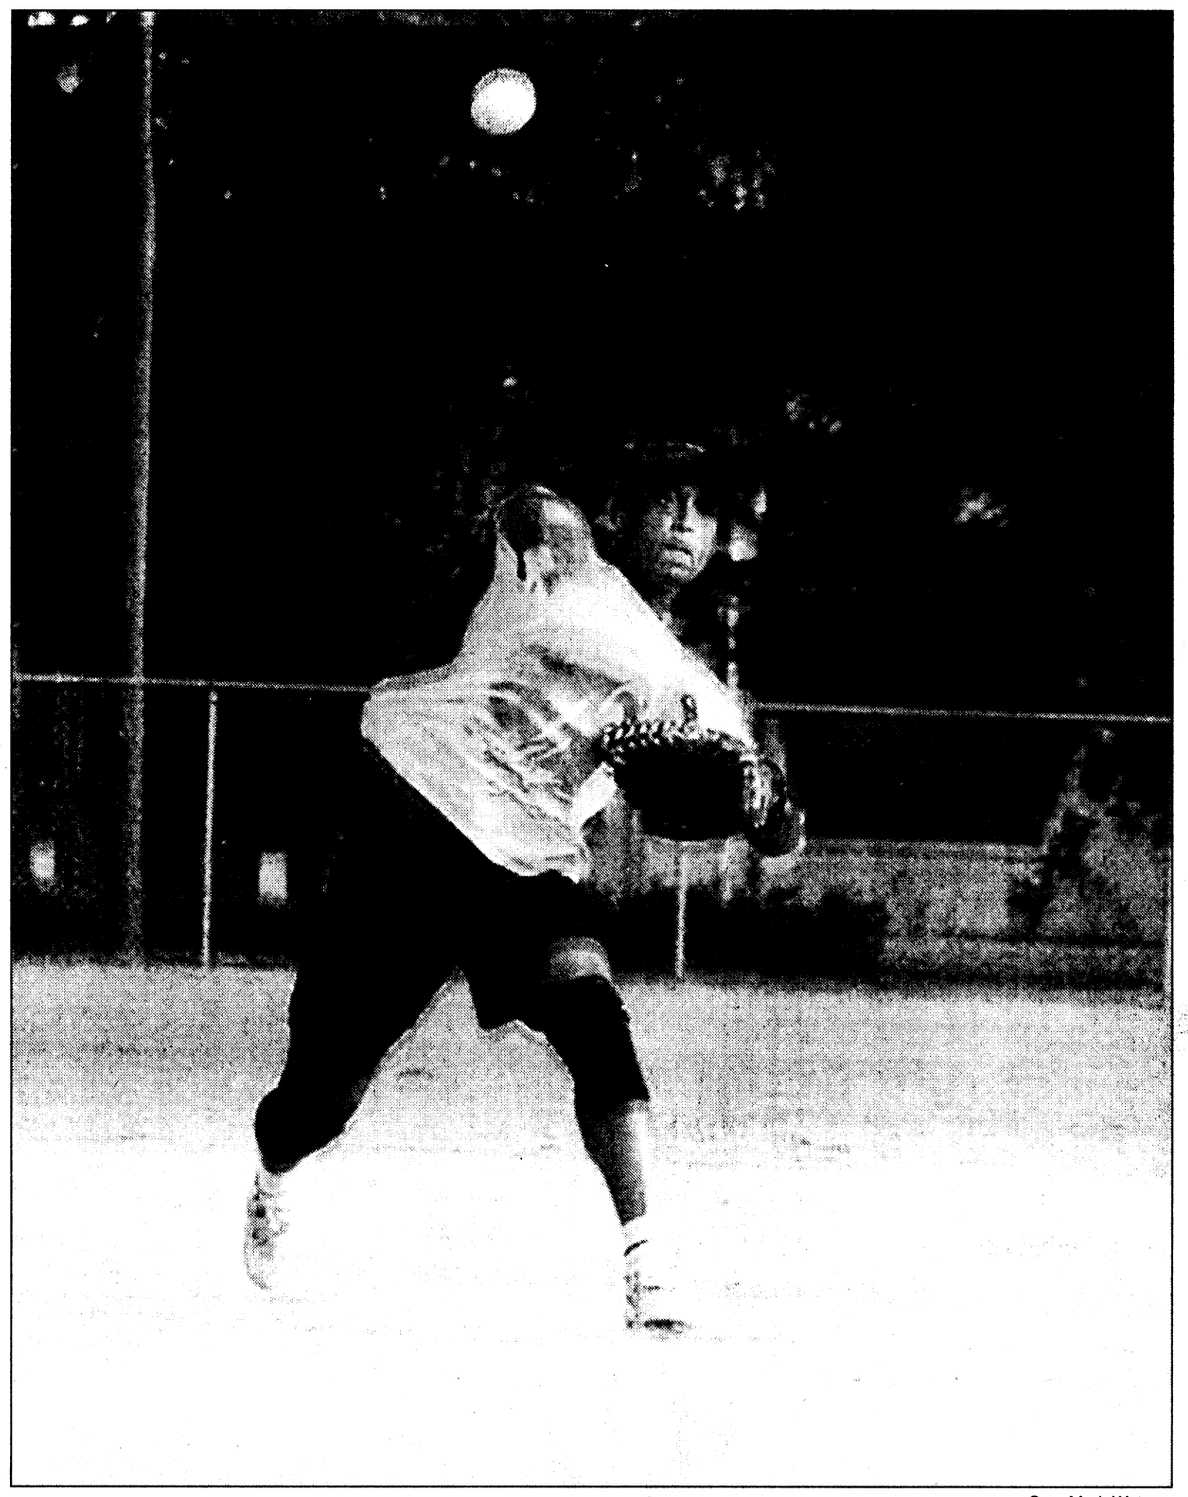
Agent's second baseman, John Oakley, hit a double off fielding and throwing errors that also scored a run.

Left fielder Nicholas Williams hit a dribbler and should have been out at first, but another error allowed him a single.

With two outs and one man on, pitcher Manny Rodriguez stepped to the plate and belted the ball to the fence for an infield homerun, the second of the inning and an RBI.

Nolasco, at the plate again, belted another down the right field line driving in a runner, the seventh run of the game, but then got caught in a pickle and was tagged out.

The Free Agents made short work of HHC in the bottom of the second. However, HHC scored once when shortstop Arther Taylor drilled the ball over the center fielder's head for an infield homerun.



Two other HHC batters reached base, but were left stranded when Agents' first baseman, John Oakley stretched out to snag a misthrown ball and forced the final out.

Free Agents' catcher, David Grey, smacked the ball deep into the outfield for an infield homerun starting off the second inning.

First baseman Enrique Acevedo tapped the ball out of the infield and was driven in when Oakley also doubled. Left fielder George Montano hit a single, driving in the runner for the last run of the Agents' at bat.

The HHC team picked up their offense and scored three runs.

The first came when left-center fielder Karyn Conners drilled the ball deep into the outfield for an infield homerun and an RBI.

Spc. Mark Watson

Headquarters and Headquarters Company's shortstop Arther Taylor throws the ball to first to stop a runner from proceeding around the bases. The Free Agents won the game, 15-9, despite HHC's four runs in the fourth inning.

Their final run of the inning came when Jermaul Hill, the right fielder, hit a triple scoring Harry Lassiter, who was walked.

Agent's Lopez powered the ball into the outfield for an infield homerun and an RBI followed by Acevedo who also belted an infield homer starting a rally.

The two homeruns were followed by a single and a double putting runners on third and second.

Montano took his at bat and singled, but drove the two runners in giving the Agents a 15-4 lead going into the bottom of the third.

HHC's only score in the third inning came when catcher Andy Freeman reached third base safely, scoring a runner, after Agents' Lopez misthrew the ball.

Although HHC's defense started slowly, they came alive in the fourth and final inning. The pitcher walked one man, then shut down three straight batters with a suffocating defense.

Although they were also slow getting started offensively, their bats woke up and began to work.

HHC began to chip away at the Agents' defense, and then with the bases loaded, second baseman Jason Moore belted the ball to the fence for an infield grand slam giving the HHC team four runs in the fourth.

The game ended with the Free Agents on top, 15-9.

After the game, Agents' players said that despite a shortage of players, they did well.

"We played real well in the first inning," Nolasco said. "Even though we had nine players, we played well."

Lopez agreed and said, "We hit when we needed it," Lopez said. "Our infield was doing good too. I think we have one of the best defenses in the league, or even the best. We really have a well-rounded team."

Although HHC picked it up in the end, it was too little, too late. "It took us quite a while to settle into things," Lassiter said. "That was probably from the lack of practice. We came off a win last Tuesday and haven't practiced since. We have two games left in the season and I think we should win both of them."

'Nose breather' discovers a whole new life

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the third story of a four-part series, which takes an in-depth look at a scuba certification course.

Becoming a mouth breather is a lot harder than I anticipated. I've spent nearly my whole life breathing in and out through my nose. Except for the occasions when I had a bad cold, my air supply has always been nasal.

However, when my nose is trapped in between tempered glass and silicone rubber it significantly limits air supply potential.

The whole point of scuba is to breathe comfortably underwater, so mastering airway control is a key step in the learning process. Airway control is not patrolling the friendly skies, it is an essential scuba skill. The purpose is to avoid accidentally breathing water in instead of air.

It's normal for a little bit of water to be in the snorkel or the regulator. Before I started scuba, I never would have guessed that I would learn to breathe around water. Inhaling a little water actually isn't that bad. Coughing still works very well, even underwater.

One of the core scuba skills I have to master in the pool is the complete removal of my mask, while underwater, while still breathing comfortably.

This is a lot harder than it sounds.

It is such an odd feeling to be casually breathing in and out while my nose is underwater. It seems completely unnatural.

Of course, I didn't get to that casual, relaxed stage right away. Nervousness got the better of me and as soon as I took the mask off I pinched my nose shut with my fingers.

Yes, I am a big sissy.

My fingers worked well in keeping out the water, but really defeated the purpose of the taking the mask off exercise.

Here's a little tip for future reference, I tried blowing bubbles out of my nose and that doesn't help.

It makes sense logically, if I blow bubbles out my nose, water can't go in. Right?

Well, that works for a little while, but once air stops going out, it is all too natural for it to go right back in.

This is the point at which I got to experience the totally unique sensation of water rushing in my nose and down my throat. I don't highly recommend it.

My dive instructor, Josh Blair of Planet Ocean, in Columbus, was very patient with me and reassured me to the point where I could keep trying. Even though I desperately just wanted to make a break for the surface and breathe clean, unchlorinated air.

He demonstrated, again, the easiest method for breathing without a mask. With my head tipped towards the bottom of the pool, the bubbles coming from the regulator in my mouth trickled softly up the sides of my cheeks and towards my ears rather than blasting up my nose and into my eyes.

Once I learned to relax and just focus on slow, continuous breathing, being maskless actually wasn't that bad.

It was kind of liberating actually. Learning scuba is mastering the techniques and the equipment you need to try to be the equal of a fish. Being able to do without one of those pieces made me feel a little fishier.

Another tricky technique Blair taught me was the giant stride entry. It's exactly what it sounds like. This is just one of many methods to enter the water. With the giant stride entry, all gear is worn. Hoses and other danglies are secured in the left hand close to the stomach and the right hand holds the mask and regulator in place.

Without hopping, jumping or skipping in any way, one big step is taken forward. "Big step" is key, because otherwise the tank may bang on the side of the pool or boat, or whatever is being exited in favor of the water.

My first entry was not very graceful or successful. After shuffling over to the edge of the pool, I took a deep breath and jumped in. Oops. No jumping. OK, so that's another thing to work on.

Maybe I can master that whole giant stride entry thing with a little more practice before this weekend. Sunday is the culmination of my scuba certification course.

Two days of open-water diving in Florida. Four dives later add I'm a certified scuba diver.

At that point, I'll be proud to call myself a mouth breather.

For more information on scuba, call Josh Blair at 464-8751 or at 563-8675.

Bombers edge out Raptors, 11-8

Precision shooting wins b-ball game

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Bomber Tyler Baker led his basketball team to a 11-8 victory over the Raptors with precision shooting, racking up six points Tuesday at the Youth Services Gym in their second game of the season.

The 6- to 7-year-old players battled it out in the first 6-minute quarter with neither team putting points on the board.

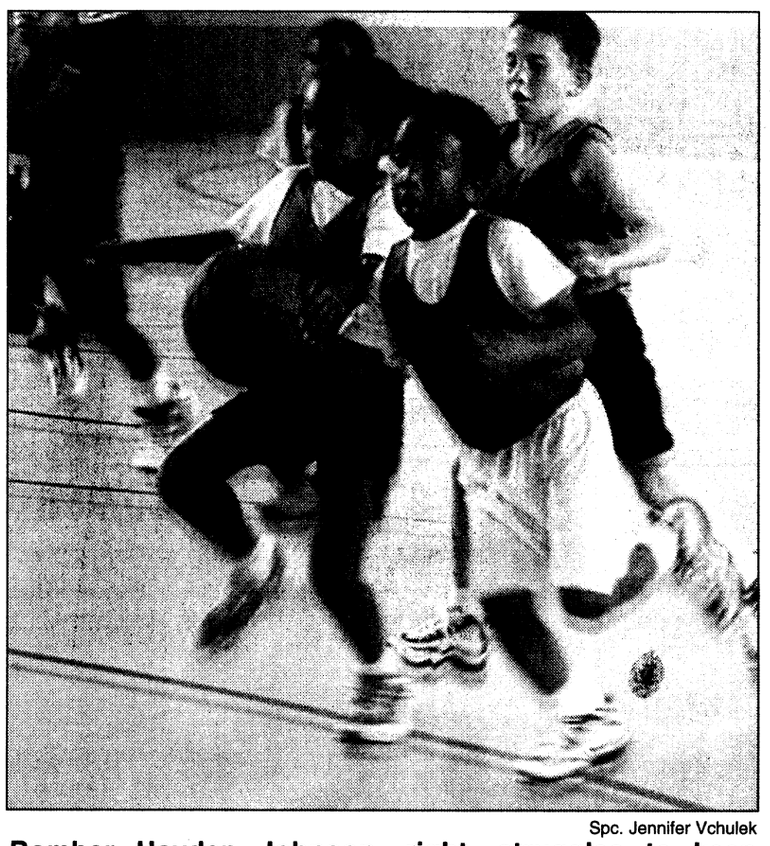
During the second quarter, Raptor's Deontray McKenzie sank the first hoop of the game, leaving his team leading 2-0 at half-time.

Although McKenzie continued to sink basket after basket, scoring all seven of the Raptors points, during the third quarter, the Bombers rallied behind the Raptors, 7-6. Bombers' Kiara Moore stepped in, helping her teammates by scoring three points within the quarter.

The fourth quarter proved the Bombers as victors when Tyler Baker topped his score off with six of the 11 game points. Hayden Johnson supported his teammates with two of the 11 points earned.

Bombers head coach, James Rorer, said he was very proud of his team and the effort they put forth, winning them the game.

"I knew the (Raptors) were going to be tough to beat," Rorer said. "I feel good and fortunate that we won. They were a little unfocused in the beginning, but got their head in there toward the end and won."



Raptors head coach, James White, said his team was progressing well.

"The kids are getting to learn the fundamentals of basketball," White said, which was the most important part of the game.

"As they grow, the more they'll learn and some of them may even be the future of the National Basketball Association."

In the second game of the evening, the Tigers beat the Lakers, 8-2.

The 6- to 7-year-old teams play at 6 p.m. every Tuesday at the Youth Services Gym.

University of Michigan Health System®

Patients and Families first.

This city has a big heart. Someone's got to take care of it.

Namely, OR professionals like you.

OPEN HOUSE Wednesday, August 1st
9:30am - 6:00pm,
Lenox Hill Hospital, Einhorn Auditorium
131 East 76th Street
(Refreshments will be served!)

New York lives at a whole different pace, and it shows. Fortunately, this city has Lenox Hill Hospital at its heart. But breakthrough technologies and state-of-the-art facilities alone didn't make us what we are. It's always been our people who have been the heart and soul of our success.

Everything's bigger and bolder here, including our opportunities for today's OR professionals. With 652 beds, 25 OR's handling 23,000 cases a year and an affiliation with Manhattan Eye, Ear, & Throat Hospital, there are many ways to to challenge your expertise. If you share a certain dedication to your profession, along with the desire to work in one of the state's largest and most progressive surgical settings, visit our open house.

Attend our Open House and learn more about what makes us the ideal setting for career minded caregivers. You can:

- tour our 25 OR suites featuring the latest technical enhancements
- learn about surgical specialties such as minimally invasive cardiac procedures, orthopedics and spine, obesity, and plastic surgery
- explore training and development resources like our Perioperative Nurse Intern program and 18-credit tuition reimbursement package for nurses
- meet the people responsible for creating a friendly community hospital atmosphere
- tour Manhattan Eye, Ear & Throat Hospital (Transportation will be provided)

You will also hear about current employment openings for OR talent:

• Nurse Managers/Head Nurses • Nurse Educators • Staff RNs • Surgical Techs

If you are unable to meet with us on August 1, please forward a resume to: Eileen Rowland, RN, Director of Nurse Recruitment, Lenox Hill Hospital, 1080 Lexington Avenue, New York, NY 10021. Fax 212-434-3915. E-mail: jobs@lenoxhill.net. Visit us at www.lenoxhillhospital.org. EOE.

Rangers inducted to Hall of Fame

Former rangers honored during ceremony

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Last week rangers honored their own and men who served with a ranger unit in combat by inducting thirteen former soldiers into the Ranger Hall of Fame in a ceremony held in Marshall Auditorium.

Among those inducted were three retired local residents, Capt. Richards O. Stewart Jr., Command Sgt. Maj. Donald E. Purdy, and Master Sgt. Milton 'Davey' Lockett Jr.

Stewart was inducted into the hall of fame for "epitomizing the Ranger Motto, 'Rangers Lead the Way!'" While serving in Vietnam as the Combined Reconnaissance and Intelligence platoon leader for 1st Battalion, 5 (Mechanized), 25th Infantry Division, Stewart lost both legs and his left eardrum as he attempted to lead his men out of a heavily booby-trapped area safely.

After his return, Stewart continued to serve the ranger community with active participation in preserving unit history and pride.

"Ranger Stewart has clearly led the way as a ranger in combat and in supporting rangers in its aftermath," his citation read.

For ranger Stewart, being named as a member of the hall of fame by his peers is a great honor.

"I was just doing my duty," Stewart said. "I am still trying to come to grips with it. This is incredible.

"This town is full of ranger heroes," he said. Stewart praised other inductees such as Purdy, who he said is as tough as woodpecker's lips.

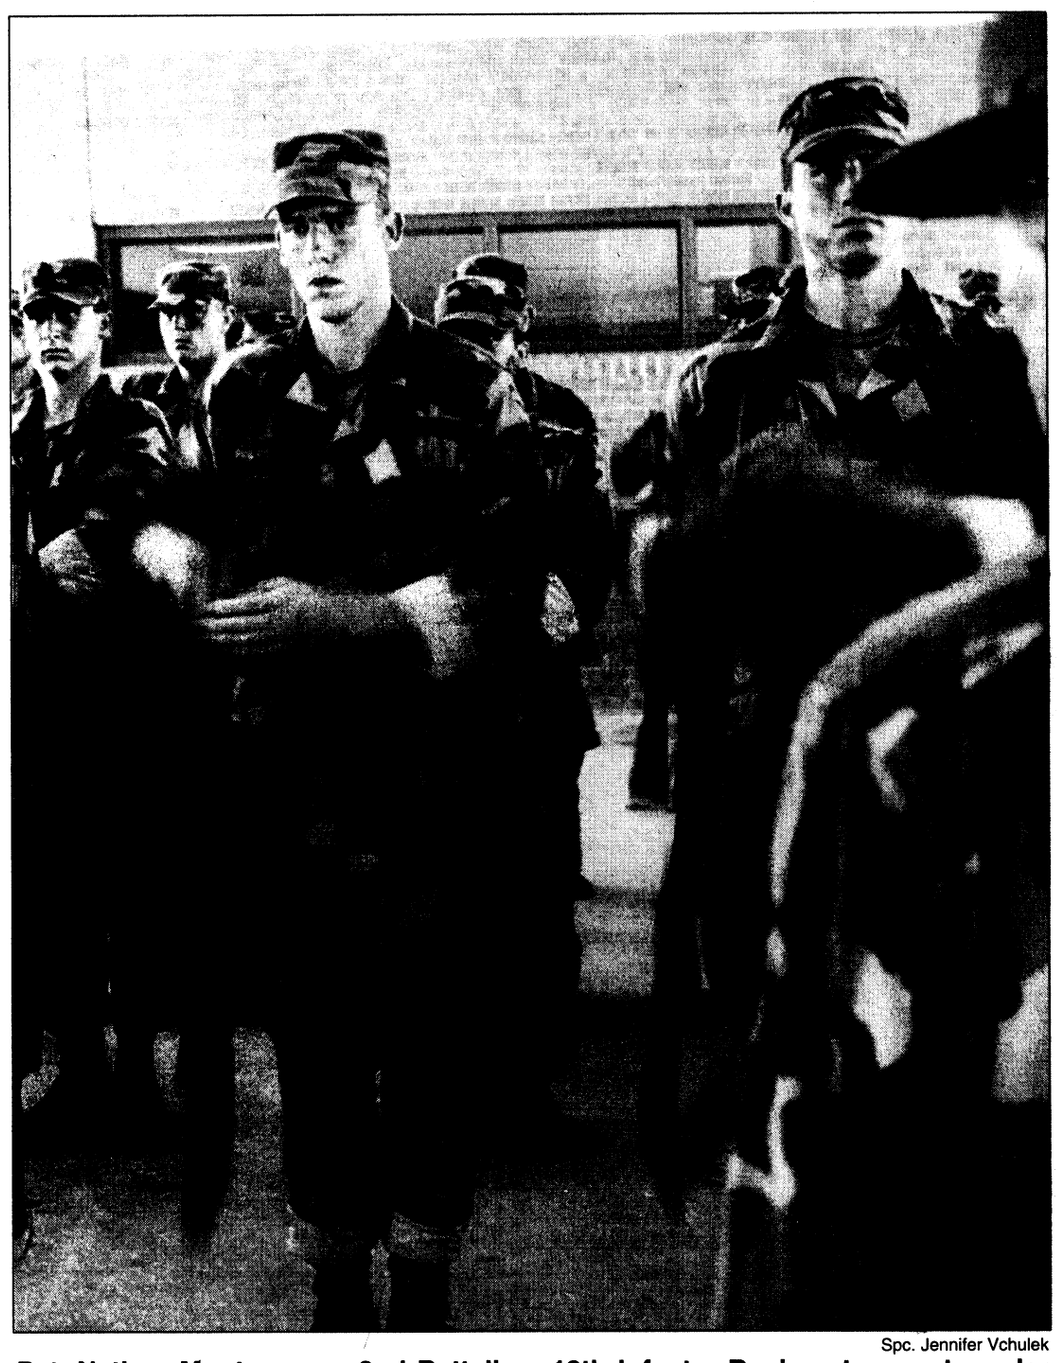
"He is the type of leader who believed in passing on knowledge to the younger guys," he said.

Purdy earned the honor of being added to the role the hall of fame for distinguishing himself in numerous engagements during the Vietnam War, with the activation of the first Ranger Battalion and in Operation Desert One.

During the Vietnam War, Purdy received the Bronze Star with a "V" Device and his unit was awarded the Presidential Unit Citation.

Stewart could not say enough about another local resident and inductee, Lockett.

"Lockett is maybe the toughest guy that was inducted," Stewart said.



Lockett was recognized for his service to the ranger community by leadership and expertise as a ranger instructor for more than twelve years, with four tours in the ranger department.

As one of the first members of Rangers-in-Action, Lockett was selected to demonstrate hand-to-hand combat skills to President John F. Kennedy at Fort Bragg, N.C.

In 1991, he served as commander

Event unites neighbors

National Night Out begins Monday, runs through week

Natasha Olivera
Bayonet contributor

Soldiers and family members on Fort Benning are always on the hunt for things to do on the weekend. This weekend there is a great opportunity to get out, get to know your neighbors and provide support for an important cause.

For the first time, Monday through Aug. 10, Fort Benning will join a tradition that has been part of communities for 18 years.

National Night Out is a crime and drug prevention event sponsored by the National Association of Town Watch. It involves communities, law enforcement agencies, civic groups, businesses, neighborhood organizations and local officials.

Sgt. 1st Class Jeffrey Cassell, project NCOIC for the Directorate of Public Safety, said the event was designed to heighten awareness, generate support and participation in anti-crime programs, strengthen neighborhood spirit and send a message to the local criminals that the neighborhoods are organized and fighting back.

"We want the community members of Fort Benning to turn on their lights, lock their doors, and get out to meet their neighbors," he said.

The military police were asked by the city of Columbus to be a part of their NNO and Cassell thought it would be

Objective Force needs high-speed strategic lift

Wargames provide insight for transformation

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Strategic high-speed air and sealifts will be essential to get the Army's objective force to a theater of operations within the 96-hour deployment goal.

And the current chain of command — brigade, division, corps and echelons above corps — will still be needed for the dispersed battlefields of the future.

The second Transformation Wargame held at Carlisle Barracks, Pa., earlier this year showed these are two areas that must be retained and developed to make Army transformation a reality.

The objective force will become possible when the future combat system has matured. Described as a system of systems, the FCS may not just be a single vehicle, like the Abrams tank. But whether it's one or more vehicles, crew protection and lethality will be at least as effective as the Abrams.

"This objective force would be a force that would be combat-configured, ready to fight off the ramp," said Bill Rittenhouse, director of wargames at Training and Doctrine Command headquarters. Rittenhouse oversees staging the annual wargames.

Solution to the deployment problem could be to develop shallow-draft, high-speed sealift and joint tilt rotor aircrafts, he said.

"We need something that doesn't have to arrive in a developed port," Rittenhouse said. "It will have the capability of landing the forces in a variety of different places within the area of operations."

> "This objective force would be a force that would be combat-configured, ready to fight off the ramp."
> Bill Rittenhouse
> Training and Doctrine Command

Objective Force units can operate widely dispersed because of powerful ISR (intelligence, reconnaissance and surveillance) communication networks. Commanders can concentrate devastating direct and indirect fires on enemy targets without massing forces.

The classic management concept of "span of control" is why the current command levels will be necessary on the new battlefield.

The Objective Force corps can serve as Joint Task Force commander or joint force land component command. It can't do both and still effectively command subordinate units, coordinate air and sea assets and provide expanded ISR data to field forces.

The division headquarters is required to coordinate and command the far-flung brigades, coordinate for air and logistical support and provide higher-level ISR to the fighting units.

Back to school not just for kids

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs

commentary

My daughter, who attends a "year-round" school, did not believe it when I started dropping subtle hints about her summer vacation drawing to a close last month. It would have been tough to miss the clues I was casting out.

"Good grief! School starts next week already? Where did I put that list of school supplies? Do you have any school clothes that still fit? When is registration? What did I do with your shot record?"

Her reaction was equally sedate.

"School starts next week? Hey! That means I don't have to go to Sports Camp any more — yes!"

And so, in our usual calm, orderly way, the new school year kicked off at our house. We've been back in school for several weeks now, and the dust still has not settled.

For those of you whose children haven't gone back to school yet, let me clue you in. We loved Week One. There was enough excitement and novelty to sail us through.

Week Two? The second week brought the reality of a whole new school year, complete with (horrors!) homework stretched out in front of our third-grader like a life sentence.

She and her dad have a routine they go through every afternoon.

He picks her up at school, they go home, share a snack, and proceed to squeeze 20 or 30 minutes of homework into two or three hours.

I'm not sure who the homework drill has been harder on, Malia or her dad. His Type-A personality is the opposite of her laid back, all-the-time-in-the-world style, and never the twain shall meet.

I get to join in the homework fray from time to time too, and I've figured out I'm better off staying out of the way and calling it "not interfering." Besides, it wouldn't be fair to double-team an 8-year-old.

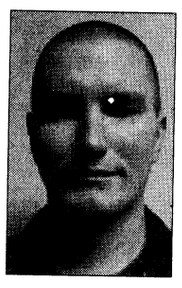
To tell the truth, I found third-grade homework hard enough the first time around.

I think that we're back in the swing of things now.

By the end of Week Three or Four, we may only need an hour or two to finish the 30 minutes of homework.

By the time we get to the three-week fall break (year-round school, remember?) we may only need 45 minutes.

For those of you counting the days until your children are back in school, hang in there.



It won't be long until the cries of "There's nothin' to do!" are replaced by those of "It can't be bedtime yet, I'm not finished!"

But watch out for Week Two. It's a doozy.

Course turns soldiers into leaders

Sgt. William A. Graves
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

No one is more professional than I. I am a noncommissioned officer, a leader of soldiers. As a noncommissioned officer, I realize I am a member of a time-honored corps, which is known as the backbone of the Army.

I will not forget, nor will I allow my comrades to forget, that we are professionals, noncommissioned officers, leaders!

Members of PLDC class 08-01 not only said this creed everyday prior to our graduation July 27, we lived it.

The harvested crop of leaders our class yielded will inevitably help our "Army of One" as it heads deeper into the 21st century. Like the hundreds of classes that had gone before us, we, too, graduated with honor and pride, and a heightened sense of excitement and vigor to head back to our units to train soldiers and accomplish various missions.

From rangers to journalists, and from engineers to parachute riggers, we all came together as a well-oiled, machine-like team — as an Army of one. All soldiers had something to contribute to their comrades' mission of walking across Marshall Auditorium's stage. We each used our knowledge, skills and abilities, be they cadence calling eloquence, field tactic proficiency, or drill and ceremony and map reading mastery, to help our brothers and sisters who needed a shot of motivation or a tactful critique.

The first three weeks of the course was classroom based. It wasn't the most thrilling, but it was one of the most thorough and compact blocks of instruction I've had in the military. Judging by the professionalism and discipline of my two instructors, Staff Sgt. Roland Sydney and Staff Sgt. Ramiro Ramirez, and the rest of the cadre, I'm positive everyone walked away from the course like a giant tree of knowledge that longed to shed its nourishing fruit.

Ramirez's upbeat, hard-charging energy and Sydney's calm, cool style complemented each other and led to five of 14 students attaining the Commandant's List. Still, they imparted more than the know-how to research regulations and manuals — they helped embed the backbone in each of us that will help us lead with candor and elements of each Army value as we stand tall in and out of uniform.

The fun week came next. Swamps, clackers, wild boars and water moccasins were all new to me and many others during land navigation, but we focused on our watchword — competence — and turned our inexperience into an opportunity to prove we belong in our time-honored corps. The ultimate test for entrance came for many in the middle of nowhere, where our points were supposed to be but were not. It was time to focus on what our instructors had taught us and just do it. We did. Our function within the NCO corps will rest undaunted on that same solid rock of discipline.

Excitement seemed to grow more each day of the culmination of the course — the field training exercise. Everything we had learned prior gelled into an unstoppable juggernaut.

Rucking miles through the woods, getting "killed" with lasers, and learning a multitude of infantry tactics in four days tested our intestinal fortitude, and the core of our being strengthened. Inexperience evolved into "Be-Know-Do," and a sea of confidence washed away a vast beach of doubt.

Now it's time for us to strengthen the corps. Our month long, unforgettable journey set us up for success, and we can all honestly say, "All soldiers are entitled to outstanding leadership. I will provide that leadership."

Volunteers make difference in schools

Dear parents, as we look forward to making School Year 2001-2002 the best one yet at Fort Benning, there is no doubt that it takes all of us — students, teachers, parents, administrators, support personnel, the military and post agencies — to make that happen.

I respect the tremendous knowledge and expertise we have at Fort Benning as sources of great energy for our school system.

I believe that by using all of our talents, we will produce world-class programs for our children.

There are many opportunities for volunteers to support the students in our schools. Reading to a child, listening to a child share a concern, helping a school improve its playground, working in the school media center, designing sets for a school play, teaching a child to shoot a basket or kick a soccer ball or serving on a School Improvement Team are just some of the opportunities that can make a difference in the life of a child.

Won't you please visit your child's school to find out how you can volunteer?

Even if you have no children in post schools, we need you too.

Please join us as we come together to make the Fort Benning Schools the best anywhere in the world.

Dell McMullen
Fort Benning
Schools Superintendent

As the Fort Benning community celebrates a new school year, I ask that you think very seriously about ways you can support our students.

Whether you are a parent of a Fort Benning student, a civilian or a single soldier, we need your help to make our school system the best it can be for our children.

There are numerous ways you can support the schools as a volunteer.

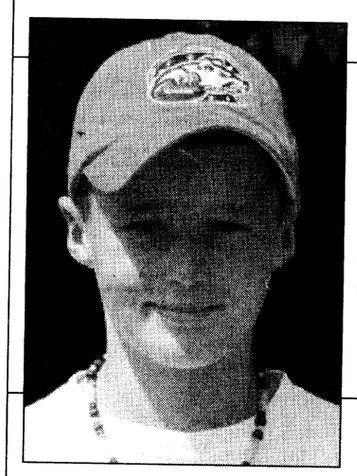
One of the best ways is through Partners in Education, a program that was initiated last school year when the schools and military units joined forces to support student achievement, support instruction and recognize student performance.

Our first year with Partners in Education was an outstanding one.

Soldiers from partner units served as mentors for students; participated in field day activities; created outdoor learning centers; served as guest readers and math and reading tutors; assisted students with Habitat for Humanity and Kids CARE projects; taught students about military vehicles and how they are used in battle; helped with Family Spaghetti Suppers and Family Night Picnics; helped with science experiments; served as chaperones on field trips; served as speakers at awards ceremonies and helped with landscaping school grounds.

The possibilities for volunteering in this program are endless.

We are proud of what has been accomplished, and we are committed to strengthening the partnerships we have.



Whether you are a parent, a soldier or a civilian, I ask that you seriously consider becoming a partner in making our schools even better for children.

Col. Jose A. Torres
Garrison Commander

Capt. Jose Larrea of the Ecuadorian National Police moves a detainee away from the drug lab. After suspects were processed, they were transported out of the area by counter-narcotics students.

Students bust drug lords

Exercise takes WHINSEC students on raid of drug lab

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Spanish dialogue and rifle clatter echoed past a veil of undergrowth no longer serving the suspected drug lab now in custody.

The five-day training stint in the woods and solid reconnaissance had paid off for counter-drug course students from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation July 27.

After neutralizing hostile drug lords, played by U.S. personnel, students (comprised of Latin American military and police) went through, and were evaluated on, procedures when detaining suspects and processing evidence — all while local media looked on.

Reporters and camera crews ventured alongside evaluators to get an inside perspective on how the institute's training helps prepare students for multinational counter-drug operations.

"I wanted to see for myself what the training was like," said Hong Dao Ngyuen, an intern staff writer for the Columbus Ledger-Inquirer.

The event was the culmination of a week-long exercise that required students from various backgrounds to traverse through the wilderness using maps and compasses and above all, teamwork, said Sgt 1st Class Jose Diaz, a course instructor.

Diaz evaluated students on everything from tactical movements to the proper treatment of detained personnel. He said, overall things went well.

"Their ability to come together in such a short time was a success in itself," Diaz said.

Course trainer and evaluator Capt. Keith Pecha said the gathering of intelligence through reconnaissance operations was probably the most challenging aspect overall.

"It's all a balancing act. If you get too close to the objective, you risk making contact and compromising the mission.

"On the other hand, if you can't get close enough and gather enough intel, that can be detrimental too," Pecha said.

While planning and strategy were important, the missions throughout the course were demanding.

"This course is inherently physical. It has to be. Look at their missions," Diaz said.

Volunteers dressed in civilian garb give students a realistic view of how hostile and uncooperative captured criminals can be.

To battle drug production and trafficking, police and military must be able to operate in all environments and under all conditions, Diaz said.

"It was a mental and physical test all week," said 2nd Lt. Ricardo Valdivieso of the Ecuadorian National Police, during an interview with local media.

During interviews, reporters asked students what it was like on the front lines of the drug war.

Valdivieso responded with the same question.

"What is it like for you?" he said, contending that society's drug problems are widespread and that "the front lines of the war on drugs" are everywhere.

"I know that I am but a mere grain (in the war on drugs), but I feel that we all have a role to play in the war on drugs," Valdivieso said.

He also mentioned to journalists how educational programs for children and adolescents are being implemented in Ecuador.

"In the end, society's drug problems will cease when there is no longer a demand. As long as there is a demand, all we can do is make it difficult for traffickers," Vadivieso said.

Post thrift shop is ship shape

Public invited to hunt for hidden treasure, bargains

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

From gold earrings to go-karts, the Officers' Spouses' Club Thrift Shop provides shoppers and consignors a chance to find golden deals and hidden treasure.

Run on a consignment format, the store is open to both the military and civilian communities.

While consignors must have a valid military ID card, anyone can shop the shelves in the 10,000 square foot building off Ingersoll Avenue.

The thrift shop has been open nearly a decade in Building 229, which once housed the post's NCO Club.

The store has undergone several changes throughout its history. Until 1998, the business was run without the aid of computers, when new technology was brought in to increase efficiency for the 300 shoppers who visit the store each day it's open.

While the shop has changed with the times, the philanthropic mission has never wavered.

After salaries and supplies are paid, the store donates profits to the Fort Benning community.

In addition to scholarships for military families, monies are donated to a variety of groups on post, including local Boy Scout and Girl Scout troops.

Nearly $2,500 is given back to the community each month.

It's the wide assortment of goods that draws in the customers, said Lori Lane, Thrift Shop manager.

In addition to an array of children and adult attire, shoppers can find jewelry, furniture, toys, kitchen items, sporting goods, fitness equipment and antiques.

The store also houses a craft corner, selling handmade creations and items unique to Fort Benning.

Only items deemed marketable by the management will be accepted into the store's racks. For instance, all clothing must be freshly pressed, cleaned, mended and spot-free before it will be offered to customers.

But sorting through potential products is too great a job for the five paid staff members the shop employs. It's just one job of many that Lane asks of the volunteer staff.

"They run the day-to-day operations of the shop. I couldn't run the store without them," Lane said.

Currently, a 15-person volunteer staff assists in the operation, including tagging merchandise, greeting new consignors, manning the office desk and helping customers

In return, the volunteer workers receive their own set of benefits.

Those working two hours or more each time the shop is open receive first pick of newly consigned merchandise and childcare reimbursement for up to two children.

Volunteers donating 12 hours or more during the previous month receive added incentives, such as no withdrawl fee on up to five items per day worked.

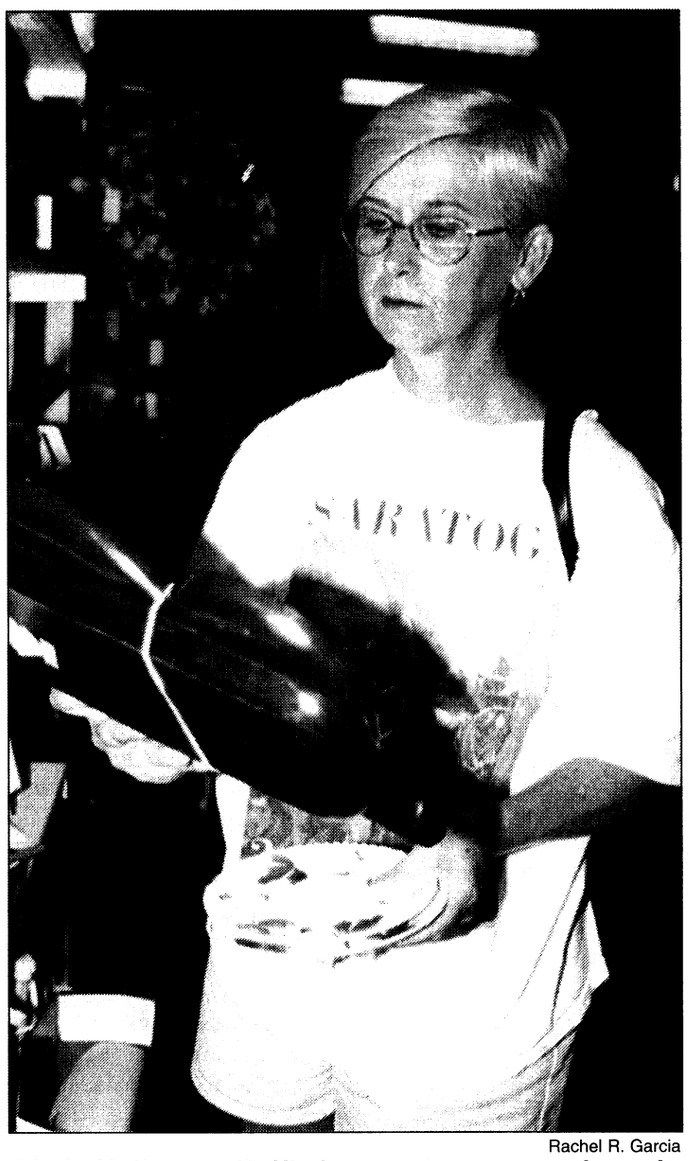
But more than that, it's a chance for the military and civilian communities to interact, said volunteer Ruth O'Riley.

"I've always loved the Army and the people associated with it," said O'Riley, who has been with the organization since 1974.

O'Riley and her volunteer corps continue to serve longtime customers like Linda Mathers. Mathers, a Columbus resident, said she has shopped at the store at least twice a month for years.

Her latest purchase, a wooden table set, will be a gift to her oldest daughter.

"I think it's a bargain," she said. "I tell all my friends about this place. A lot of people think you need an ID card to shop here. You just need an ID card to consign."



The thrift shop publishes a set of regulations for consignors to follow. Among the rules are specifics, such as consignment seasons and limitations on items.

Specifics include information like the shop deducting 25 percent as commission from proceeds on each item.

The store is open Tuesday, Thursdays and Fridays 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. and 5 to 8 p.m. the first Friday of every month.

Consignments are taken 10 a.m. to noon. The shop is always looking for new volunteers and consignments.

For more information, call the shop at (706) 687-4830.

Original family members visit historic Riverside

General's home full of heritage, memories

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Standing on the porch greeting guests as they arrived to her country home along the Chattahoochee River, Starlight Bussey would have been every bit the southern belle of the Old South.

Less than a century later, the former Bussey Plantation's country residence Riverside is now home to the commanding general at the home of the infantry.

Riverside opened its doors to the Bussey family descendants at the invitation of Maj. Gen. John and Marion Le Moyne.

The newest residents decided with all the restoration finally complete on the mansion, it was time to invite its original family members for a proper visit to the family home.

"The longer we are in your house, the more we appreciate and love it," Le Moyne said. "Because of the beauty of the house people now stop and take photographs."

Eleanor Woolfolk, 68, granddaughter of Arthur and Starlight Bussey, herself a 21st century southern lady, wandered through the entrance and admired the home. Though she could find no trace of her family's early American furniture, she was not disappointed with the Bussey family photos the general and his wife displayed in the atrium and along the walls.

"This was a working plantation," Woolfolk reminiscenced. "Grandfather was very enterprising. He had peacocks and dairy cows, all kinds of animals wandering everywhere."

Woolfolk, like most of the other family had not visited the old country home since it was placed on the National Register of Historic Homes in 1971. So when the invitation to hold a family picnic at the mansion arrived, Woolfolk and 21 members of the family were more than happy to accept.

"Grandfather was the first to own and use a mechanical milking machine," said Sally Bickerstaff Hatcher, 61, who is Bussey's granddaughter and cousin to Woolfolk. "I really do not have a strong family tie to the place, but it is great to see such wonderful people taking good care of (the house)."

Like Woolfolk, Sally's last visit to what is now Riverside mansion, was in 1971.

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Descendants of the Bussey family, the original owners of Riverside, pose for a picture with Commanding General Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne and his wife, Marion.

William Bussey Jr., Arthur Busseys' great-grandson, a local businessman living in the Columbus area said he shared the same family pride as Sally.

"It is a neat feeling, seeing a place such as this restored, knowing its personal history," William said.

The general and his wife served their guests a simple southern lunch and toured the home with family members, learning more about its rich history and some family secrets.

Riverside was a family country home built in 1909 by Arthur Bussey.

In 1918, the house was purchased for $439,000. In 1919, it officially became the residence for the commander of Camp Benning. Congress recently approved $600,000 to restore the residence — which took just over a year.

More information about the history of Riverside is available at the National Infantry Museum.

Dead trees pose safety risk to Fort Benning residents

Falling limb injures soldier during training

3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Look! Up in the sky, it's a bird, it's a plane! No, it's a dead tree limb!

Fort Benning residents need to be aware of their surroundings and be on the look-out for potentially hazardous situations resulting from dead trees.

Tree limbs or entire trees can suddenly head for the ground, resulting in personal or property damage.

Fort Benning is fortunate to have an abundance of wooded areas on the installation. The trees offer a necessary habitat for a wide variety of animal life on post, the red-cockaded woodpecker being one of the more prominent residents.

The trees are predominantly mixed deciduous, oak and pine make up the majority, said Bob Larimore, chief of land management branch.

The air is cleaner and the trees offer a small reprieve from the Georgia heat, but there are hazards associated with being near such a large tree population.

"About six months ago a tree fell and hit a soldier in the head," Larimore said. "Unfortunately, it really wasn't preventable. It was just a freak accident. He was about 50 feet away from the tree."

The soldier was on a bivouac with his unit when a storm, with wind gusts of 30 mph, blew through the site.

A dead limb, approximately 18 feet long fell from a dead pine tree and struck the soldier in the head.

The soldier received a closed head wound and was medically boarded out of the Army.

Larimore said dead trees that could be trouble are easy to spot.

"The problem dead trees would be the ones deteriorating. The bark is sloughed off, the branches are falling down and the leaves are withered or no longer there."

Tree limb problems aren't limited only to the field environment. The housing areas are also another area for concern.

Bill Lawton, supervisor for grounds maintenance, said it is a constant process to remove hazardous dead trees.

"Out in housing, I have a gentleman who's doing about three a week," Lawton said.

> "In housing areas especially, you may see something we all miss. The message we want to send everybody is, if you see something that appears to be unsafe, address it."
> Sgt. Maj. Scott Landy
> Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

Any resident who notices a dead tree can call in a work order to get it removed.

"We try to keep up with them. I think we're doing pretty good," Lawton said.

"It's just a safety issue for people in quarters," said Sgt. Maj. Scott Landy, directorate Sergeant Major for Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"In housing areas especially, you may see something we all miss. It increases the work load but it is definitely appropriate. The message we want to send everybody is, if you see something that appears to be unsafe, address it."

Force: On target for future missions, conflicts

program must also be revamped to train leaders to be able to command and operate in such an environment.

A "paradigm shift" must be made in the way officers, noncommissioned officers and soldiers are selected, educated, trained and assigned.

Fort Benning's Infantry School is right on track with the plans for an Objective Force, said Lt. Col. Timothy Cummings, chief of the mounted systems division of the Directorate of Combat Developments.

"The Army intends to begin fielding of the Objective Force this decade," he said. "The Infantry School is playing a pivotal role in defining the Objective Force through development of operational and organization concepts and insuring infantry requirements are incorporated in Future Combat Systems."

Cummings said some concerns have arisen during planning and development.

"A major Army concern is that technological breakthroughs that would make Future Combat Systems truly revolutionary will not be fully mature in time to begin fielding by 2008. In accepting this, the Army is planning for block upgrades every three or four years as advanced technological capabilities are provided by industry and Army Research, Development and Engineering Centers," he explained.

Noting and planning around the technological future is just a part of what will make the Objective Force possible, said Cummings.

"Future conflicts are won by peacetime preparation. Though development of warfighting equipment and weapon systems is vitally important to this preparation, it is the warrior ethos that will make the difference between victory and defeat," he said. "The Infantry School prepares daily for future dominance through training leaders who are technically competent and innovative, through development of doctrine and organizational and operational concepts which consider a thinking and adaptive OPFOR, and through realistic and demanding soldier training."

Rittenhouse said he feels the wargame has helped verify issues which had been Objective Force "emerging impressions" gathered from about five years of study.

"I think what we got out of this on the part of our senior players was some very strong insights that pretty much confirmed a lot of the impressions that we've been learning over the last several years," he said.

Initial findings have been published in an "Army Transformation Wargame 2001 booklet. The report can be read or downloaded at: http://www.tradoc.army.mil/whatnew.htm.

of the drug-fighting group, the Carver Heights Against Drugs. Under his leadership the group successfully countered the drug business within his community.

a great idea to bring the event to the communities of Fort Benning.

Each post community has been assigned a date in which the events will take place.

National Night Out kicks off Monday evening at 6 p.m. in Indianhead Terrace at Wilson Elementary.

Community mayors will be responsible for what goes on at each event.

Military police and post firemen, will provide much of the entertainment including parades of cars, trucks and motorcycles, a canine demonstration, a visit from McGruff the Crime Dog along with a photographer to take pictures of the children with him and a puppet show by the fire department staff.

Children will also be able to have their fingerprints taken and bicycles registered.

Adults can have their vehicles registered.

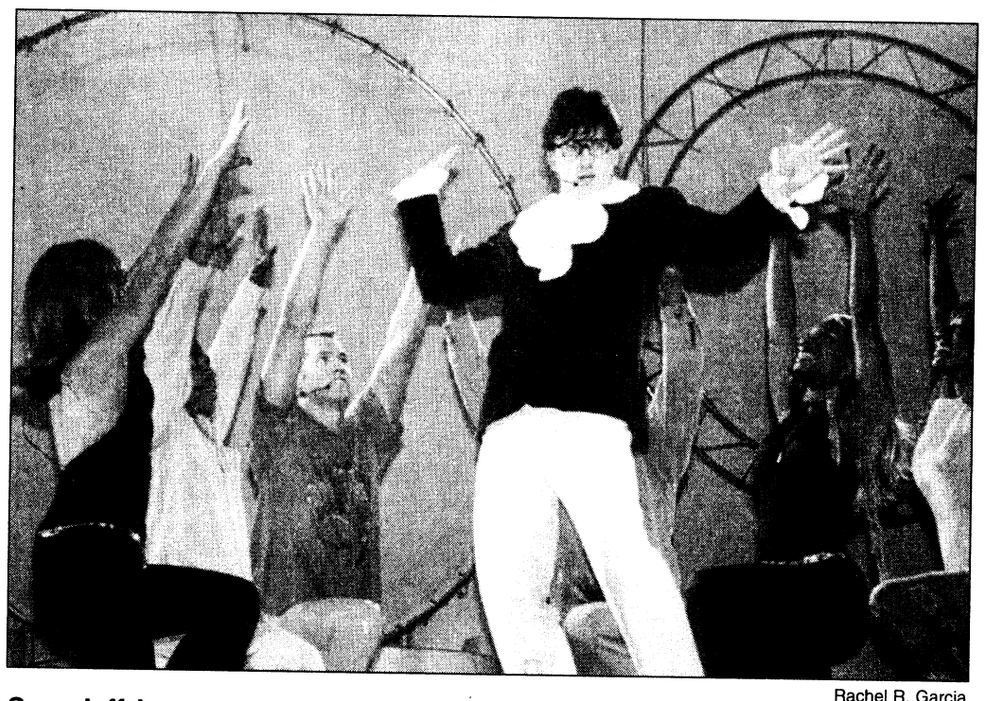
Cassell expects a good turn out and already is planning next year's NNO.

"Next year we plan on making it a bigger success with concerts and parachute demos and things of that sort," he said.

Community Life Officers and mayors of the communities said they are very excited about the event and the positive impact it will have throughout Fort Benning.

"This is a good event to give communities a feeling of unity, safety and crime prevention," said Master Sgt. Donald Blackmon, Community Life NCO.

The mayors are responsible for getting the word out to their individual communities and will be handing out flyers to help promote the event.



With a common goal in mind, to keep drugs and crime out of Fort Benning communities, every member of Fort Benning will reap the benefits this event will generate this year and in the years to come.

National Night Out begins at 6 p.m. each night.

The schedule for communities is:

- Monday — Indianhead Terrace at Wilson Elementary School
- Tuesday — Custer Terrace at The Shoppette
- Wednesday — McGraw manor at McBride Elementary School
- Thursday — Bouton Heights/Davis Hill at the Community Life NCO Building
- Aug. 10 — East and West Main Post at South Lumpkin Road in front of the Army Family Team Building, Building 359.

DoD tightens blood donor safety criteria

Restrictions reduce threat of mad-cow disease

Harry Noyes
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — To reduce further the risk of spreading "mad-cow disease" by way of blood transfusions, the Department of Defense is tightening its restrictions on blood donations by personnel who have lived in Europe for extended periods during the past two decades.

The stringent rules will cut the active-duty donor pool by 18 percent and civilian donors by about 5 percent. However, DoD can continue collecting the 105,000 units of blood that it needs annually by stepping up recruitment of donors to replace the 18 percent loss, according to officials in the Armed Services Blood Program Office.

This can only be done by increasing command support, hiring some additional blood-collection personnel, integrating DoD and service blood assets, and optimizing collection sites by putting them at large installations and training bases, the program official added.

The new donor restrictions, which are called deferral criteria, will be implemented by mid-September. They are in line with tightened U.S. Food and Drug Administration guidelines, said Lt. Cmdr. Rebecca Sparks, deputy director of the Armed Services Blood Program Office.

Under the new rules, DoD-affiliated personnel — whether active-duty military, civil-service employee or family member — will be barred from donating blood if he meets any one of the following three criteria:

• If, at any time from 1980 through the end of 1996, he traveled or resided in the United Kingdom for three months or more; or if, at any time from 1980 to the present, he received a blood transfusion in the U.K.

• If, at any time from 1980 through the end of 1996, he traveled or resided anywhere in Europe for six months or more.

• If, at any time from Jan. 1, 1997, to present, he traveled or resided anywhere in Europe for five years or more.

The FDA criteria distinguish between Europe north of the Alps and south of it, applying the more stringent six-month rule only to the 1980-1990 period in northern Europe. Convinced that many DoD people might have trouble remembering temporary-duty and travel days in various countries, DoD opted to apply the six-month rule to the whole 1980-1996 period in all parts of Europe, Sparks explained.

Both the FDA and DoD rules are less stringent than guidelines announced by the American Red Cross, which bar all donations from any person who has been in Europe for more than six months from 1980 to present.

The estimated difference in risk reduction between the two sets of criteria is very small. The FDA calculates that the new FDA criteria cut the risk of "mad-cow disease" by 91 percent. The Red Cross approach would reduce the risks by 92 percent.

The actual risk is small, according to officials. In three countries that have suffered human cases, less than a hundred people have been infected out of 122 million.

Mad-cow disease is a popular term for a disease called Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy in cows and variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease in humans. It is a fatal, brain-wasting illness caused by run-amok proteins called prions.

The rare human cases apparently have all come from eating infected meat.

None of the European victims caught the disease from blood transfusions, said Army Col. Mike Fitzpatrick, ASBPO director. He said there is no evidence that humans can get the disease that way.

However, animal testing suggests that there is a theoretical possibility of transmission via blood. Therefore, in view of the disease's devastating effects and the lack of any way to test blood for renegade prions, DoD and other health officials have opted to exercise extreme caution.

DoD veterinary officials say the risk of mad-cow disease for DoD personnel is even lower than the tiny risk that Europeans face.

That's because the Americans in Europe get most of their meat from American sources through military supply channels.

Rangers welcome new commander

New leader returns to take command

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

A rainbow hung beaming in the sky over York Field July 26 as more than 2,000 soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment gathered to celebrate the changing of command from Col. Ken Keen to Col. Joseph L. Votel.

Keen moves on to assume command of the military group in Colombia, South America.

He will be joined by his wife, Mary Ellen, and their children, Ryan, 21, and Jonathan, 18.

"I could go on endlessly expressing gratitude to those who have inspired me through these past two years," Keen said. "The ranger regiment is a special place, and having Joe and Michelle Votel here makes it easier to leave.

"God bless you and your family. You'll always be in our hearts. Rangers lead the way."

During the ceremony, Lt. Gen. Brian D. Brown, commanding general, U.S. Army Southern Command, took the opportunity to thank Keen for his service.

"Ken, you and Mary Ellen have been fabulous. You've weathered the storm," Brown said.

"You leave a regiment that is quite frankly ready (for any job any where). You should be proud of the job you did. I know you will relish the success of it. I will miss you."

In welcoming Votel to the unit, Brown said, "Joe, you now have the best job in the Army.

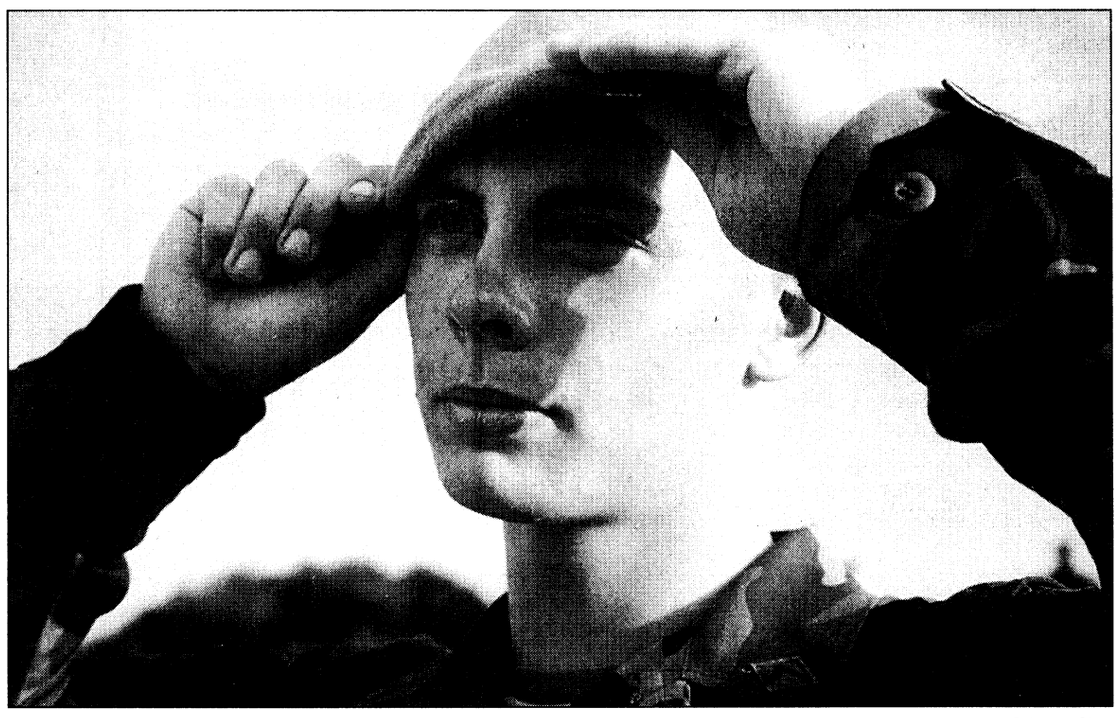
"You are, and will continue to be, respected by your opponents and feared by your enemies."

"Michelle and I are very happy to be back on Fort Benning and especially in the 75th Ranger Regiment," Votel said, who has been here three times before.

"I look forward to the challenges.

"You look absolutely magnificent and I'm very proud to be your commander. It is a distinct privilege to assume command from such a close friend. We wish them good luck, and Godspeed. Rangers lead the way."

After serving as a joint staff officer with Headquarters, Allied Forces Southern Europe, Naples, Italy, Votel returned to the U.S. to Fort Drum, N.Y. where he commanded 2nd Battalion, 22nd Infantry Regiment, 10th Mountain Division (Light Infantry) and later commanded 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regt. at Hunter Army Airfield, Ga. Most recently, Votel attended the U.S. Army War College, Carlisle Barracks, Pa.



Votel's awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal, with three oak leaf clusters, the Ranger Tab, the Combat Infantryman's Badge, the Expert Infantryman's Badge and the Master Parachutist Badge with a combat star.

Votel and his wife, have two children, Scott, 20, and Nicholas, 15.

Veterans don tan berets

Ceremony unifies old and young

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fifteen former rangers led the way.

A select group of veterans, representing rangers from every major conflict since World War II, were issued tan berets, July 26, in a private ceremony designed to usher in the "donning" of a new age.

Shortly afterward, the 75th Ranger Regiment followed suit.

Three hours before soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment donned their tan berets, a host of rangers gathered at 3rd Battalion's Keneally Hall to symbolically solidify the relationship between rangers past and present.

"The tan beret now serves as a symbol of that relationship," said Lt. Col. Marcus DeOliveira, the outgoing regimental adjutant. "The black beret has been the most visible symbol of rangers in the 20th century. In a few hours, the tan beret will become the most visible symbol of the rangers that will serve our nation in the 21st century."

DeOliveira said the tan beret "reinvigorates the historical and spiritual linkage throughout the history of the American ranger.

"It's the color of the buckskin uniform of Roger's Rangers, the genesis of the ranger lineage. It's reminiscent of the sandy beaches of the European Theater. It represents the khaki worn during the Korean and Vietnam eras, and the color of the sands of Grenada, Panama, Iraq and Mogadishu," DeOliveira said. "Tan is the universal color that transcends all ranger operations."

Col. Ken Keen, outgoing commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, presented a tan beret to retired Maj. Gen. Pete Spragins, the first ranger to authorize the black beret to a ranger unit, as the commander of the 10th Airborne Ranger Company in 1951.

"I'll tell you, when I heard about this decision, I didn't like it. But it's what you do that establishes your reputation, not what you wear on your head. Now it doesn't bother me a bit," said Spragins, the very first to don the tan beret.

But by and large, rangers echoed Spragins' sentiment in the hours and days following the veterans' ceremony, as the regiment and the Ranger Training Brigade conducted their own "beret" ceremonies.

"It's been said that the headgear doesn't make the ranger. It's what we do on a day-to-day basis that makes us different," said Staff Sgt. Osvaldo Martinez, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, 4th Ranger Training Brigade.

Col. Hazen Baron, Ranger Training Brigade commander, explained the purpose of the beret in the brigade's July 27 ceremony.

"The Army uses distinctive head gear to show that an organization performs a unique mission for the entire Army," Baron said. "It doesn't defy the Army's goal of unity. We're all in the same Army. It simply distinguishes a particular unit with a particular mission, and today, historically, the tan beret symbolizes the mission of the ranger. The training brigade is the ranger's "credential agency," Baron said.

"We've graduated 50,000 rangers since 1951. More than 14,000 are on active duty," he said. "The chief of staff has decided to award distinctive head gear — the tan beret — to the rangers. It all starts here. The Army and the rangers look to us to provide role models."

As more than 2,400 soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment's 1st, 2nd and 3rd battalions pocketed their black berets and donned tan, Keen presented tan berets to a party of eight rangers, including the regiment's youngest, Pvt. Jeff Rea, 2nd Battalion, who celebrated his 18th birthday with the donning of a tan beret.

"It's a good birthday present. This'll be a birthday I'll never forget," Rea said. "I think it's all good. This regiment will be great no matter what they wear."

A special thank you to our model students, Brittany Hayes, Asia Gibson and Julian Castro

The countdown is on — only 11 shopping days till school starts.

That's less than two weeks to bone up on what's hot and what's not with the junior fashion league — little more than a week to comb the sale racks for bargain buys on this year's "must haves."

Better hit the ground running, and the obvious place to start is the shoe department, where no-lace slip-on tennis shoes are outdistancing traditional sneakers in the back-to-school race. But "skate" shoe, like Vans and Sketchers, are following close on their heels.

"Sketchers are the big name this year for girls. Any of the name brands sell big, of course," said Helen Baugher, a shoe department sales clerk at the main PX. "And white. White shoes are going the fastest."

No-lace shoes are fine, but un-laced shoes are more than a fashion fax paus — they're a safety hazard, and therefore a dress code violation at post schools, where individual dress policies are determined by school principals.

Faith Middle School's revised dress code restricts untied shoes, house slippers, flip-flops or any other form of footwear that's unsafe or deemed inappropriate — a policy that also applies to all other forms of apparel.

A quick stop at the PX girls' wear department reveals an array of licensed promotional T-shirts, with the likes of Powerpuff Girls, N'Sync and Jurassic Park.

These kinds of logos or emblems are permissible, according to post schools' policies, as long as they're not considered obscene and don't promote irresponsible behavior.

So go ahead, take your pick from AAFES' wide assortment of character Ts. There are plenty to choose from, and they're priced reasonably, starting at less than $10.

But there's a reason they're available in abundance, said department manager, Shane Sellman.

"They're not real popular," he said. "Shoppers seem to be avoiding any kind of licensed character apparel."

Always popular, Sellman said, are AAFES proprietary brands, like Royal Manor, Passports, Laura Lee and R&R.

They're priced reasonably — a plus from the buyer's point of view, and they're fashionable — a must from the wearer's perspective.

AAFES brands feature current trends, like khakis, cargo and capri-cut pants, Hawaiian-prints and retro designs — all acceptable dress, according to Faith's policy, as long as they reflect "a respectful and positive attitude toward learning."

But first things first. Before they can focus on learning, high school scholars have to find the one item on the top of every teen's back-to-school list — the ultimate accessory — a set of wheels.

Book bags on wheels, ranging anywhere from $14.95 to $89.95, are about the most popular mode of transportation for books, said Lisa Pilcher, a girls' wear clerk at the PX.

And they come fully loaded, with separate compartments for water bottles, pencils, note books and cell phones.

Though mobile backpacks are the front-runner, "sling bags" — a cross between a purse and a back-pack — are gaining popularity, and BUM Equipment bags and backpacks, available in suede, denim, nylon and leather, are always a big sale, Pilcher said.

For the younger consumer, backpacks featuring licensed promotional characters, like Barbie and Winnie the Pooh, are still available at most retail stores. And for those who want to leave a lasting impression, backpacks are also available in animal prints, fuzzy neons, transparent "bubbles," and irridescents. Retailers like Target market avante garde back-to-school gear for less than $30.

Though Fort Benning schools have not formally addressed the issue of backpacks, parents and students should keep in mind that backpacks can become a nuisance if they're not used properly, said assistant principal Dr. Kimberly Crowell.

They're to be used only to transport school-related items, and like apparel, they should not be offensive or obscene.

Faith has adopted a "more lenient, common-sense approach" to the dress code, Crowell said — one designed to keep the school safe and learner-friendly, but convenient and practical too.

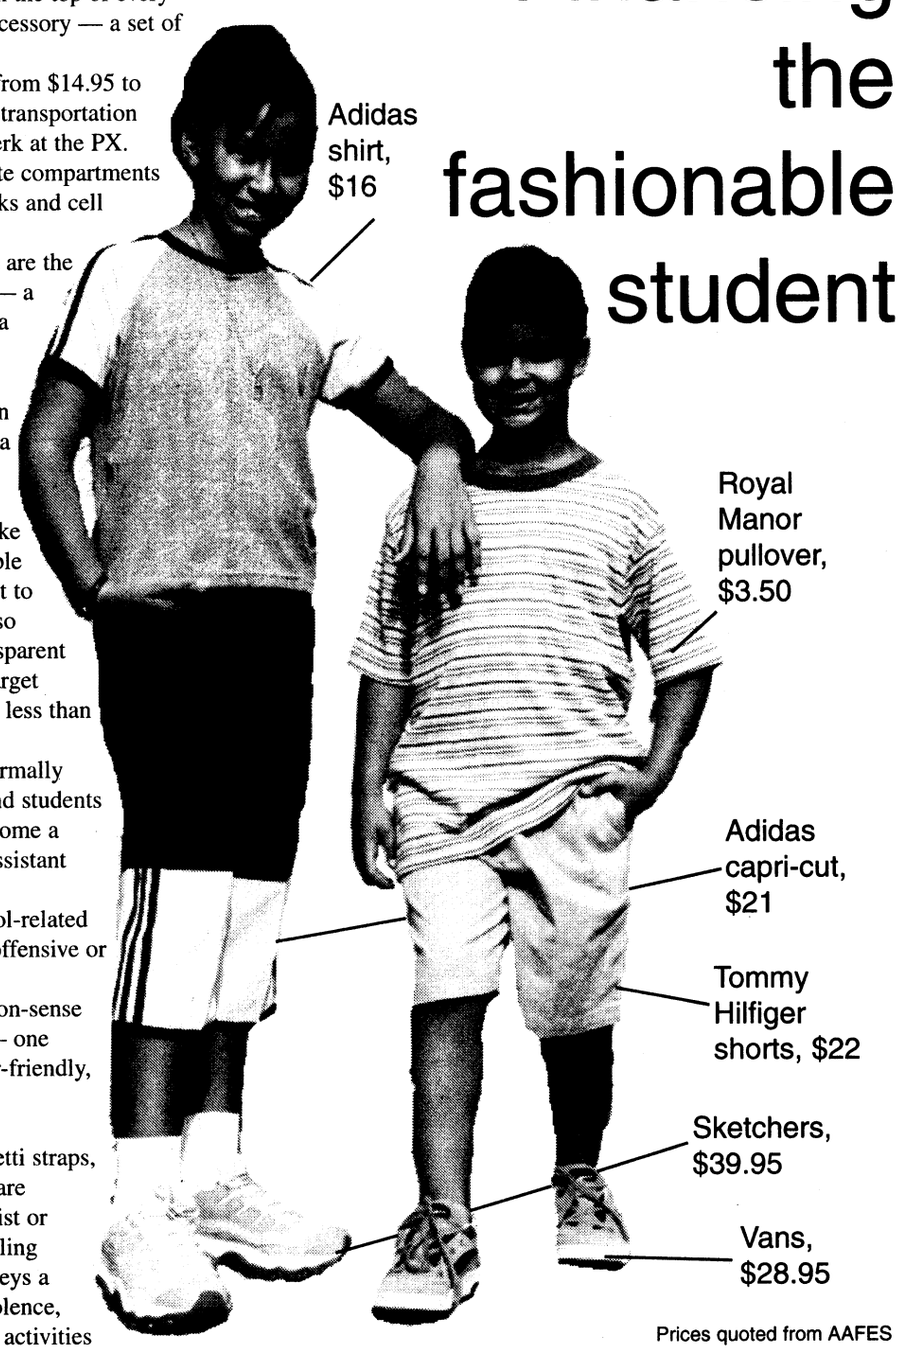
Faith's policy does not permit:

• see-through clothing, halter tops, spaghetti straps, backless dresses, tube tops, muscle shirts, bare midriffs, shirts or blouses tied above the waist or shirts that are too tight, too low or too revealing

• imprinted clothing that is obscene, conveys a double meaning, promotes drugs, gangs, violence, sex, alcohol or illegal, immoral or unethical activities

• dresses, shorts and skirts that rise above mid-thigh length or are excessively tight

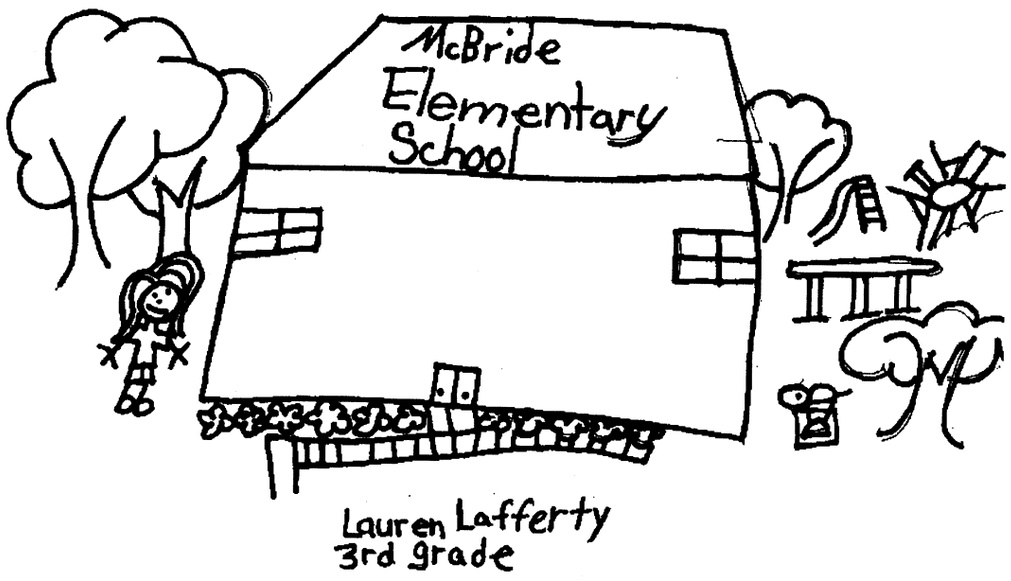
• pants that are not fastened at the waist, unless secured with a belt



• sunglasses, headscarves, hair nets, picks and hats

• oversized jewelry or jewelry worn in visibly pierced body parts, other than earrings

• coats and jackets worn in the building throughout the day



• any electronic communication devices (pagers, cell phones, etc.) or other item that disrupts the learning environment.

Fort Benning elementary schools welcome students, parents

McBride

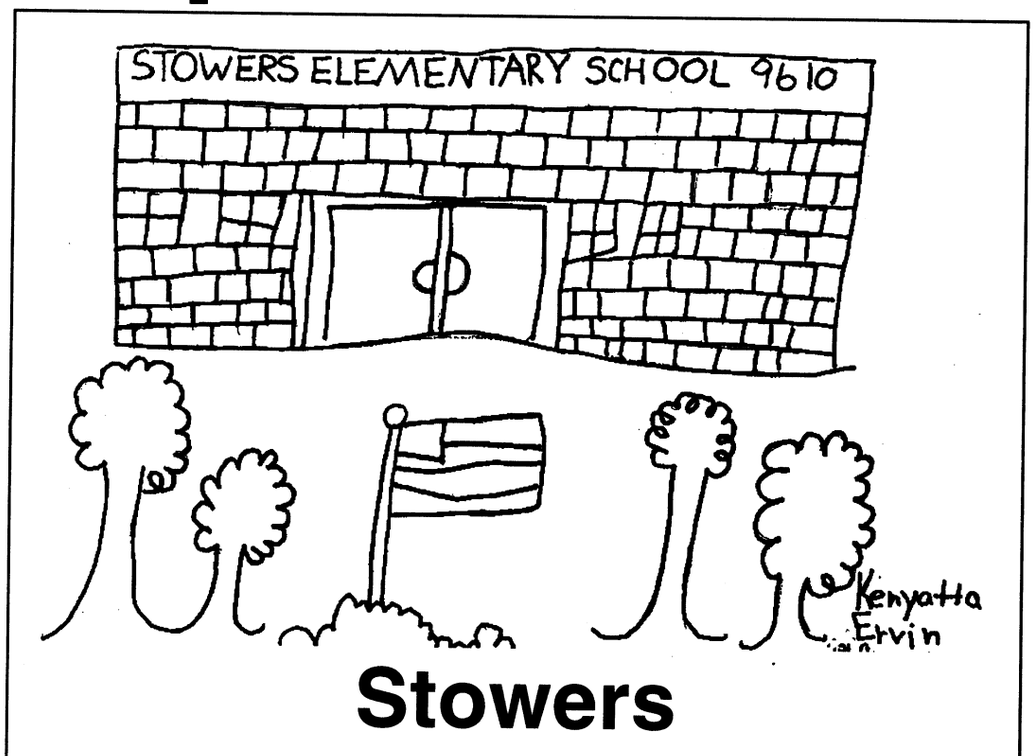
McBride Elementary School, 700 Custer Rd., is named in honor of Capt. Morris R. McBride, who was posthumously awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for heroism in Vietnam. The school was opened in 1965.



McBride serves pre-K through third-grade students from the McGraw Manor community.

The Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission presented McBride the KCBC Community Award for Urban Forestry for the school's Woodland Trail Project, a hands-on outdoor classroom open to the public.

Principal Del Hicks holds a bachelor's degree and a master's degree from Northern Illinois University and an educational specialist's degree from Troy State University.

McBride will host a "sneak-a-peak" open house for pre-K students Aug.13 from 1:15 to 3:15 p.m.

An open house for all students is scheduled Aug. 28, at 6 p.m., and a Lunch-and-Learn session will be held Sept. 28 at 11:30 a.m. to give parents an opportunity to learn about helping their children succeed in school.

Stowers

Stowers Elementary School is located off First Cavalry Division Road on Stowers Drive and serves more than 600 students from the Davis Hills and Bouton Heights communities. The school, which opened in 1994, is named in honor of Cpl. Freddie Stowers, the first African-American soldier to be awarded the Medal of Honor in World War I.

Stowers welcomes a new principal this year. Dr. Tom Dignan, formerly of Faith Middle School, who joins assistant principal Mike Starrett.

Former principal Glenn Hughes, the Department of Defense Education Activity's 2000 Distinguished Principal of the Year, has been named director of instructional technology for Fort Benning Schools.

Stowers teacher Millie Harris was selected as the DoDEA's 2001 Teacher of the Year, and music director, Lorri Blanchard was named the VFW Patriotic Teacher of the Year 2000-2001 for her annual schoolwide production of Celebrate America.

Stowers invites the parents of new students to an orientation at 8:30 a.m., Aug. 17. A schoolwide open house is scheduled for 7 p.m. Sept. 6.

White

White Elementary School, located at 300 1st Division Rd., was opened in 1962. The home of the Lions, White serves more than 300 student from the McGraw Manor, Main Post and Battle Park housing areas.

White is named in honor of Lt. Edward A. White, a Distinguished Service Cross recipient who was among the first of the 1st Cavalry Division to die in Korea in 1950.

Principal Dr. Tommy Lee has an undergraduate degree from Columbus State University, a master's degree from Georgia State University and a specialist degree and doctorate from Auburn University.

White students are invited to view class rosters Aug. 13, from 2:30 to 3:30 p.m.

An open house is scheduled Aug. 21 at 6:30 p.m.

Wilson

Located at 112 Lavoie Avenue, Wilson serves approximately 420 students from the Indianhead Terrace community. Opened in 1965, the school was named in honor of PFC Richard G. Wilson, who was posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor for acts of heroism in Korea where he served with the 187th Airborne Infantry Regiment.

A former classroom teacher and assistant principal, Phyllis Parker has served as principal at Wilson since 1990. She earned education and leadership degrees from Albany, Valdosta and Troy state universities.

Wilson students are invited to meet their teachers between 2:30 and 3:30 p.m., Aug. 13.

Parents are encouraged to attend The Wilson Hour, 8:45 - 9:15 a.m., Tuesday - Friday for coffee and refreshments and an opportunity to learn more about the school.

An open house is scheduled for 6:30 p.m., Aug. 23.

Dexter

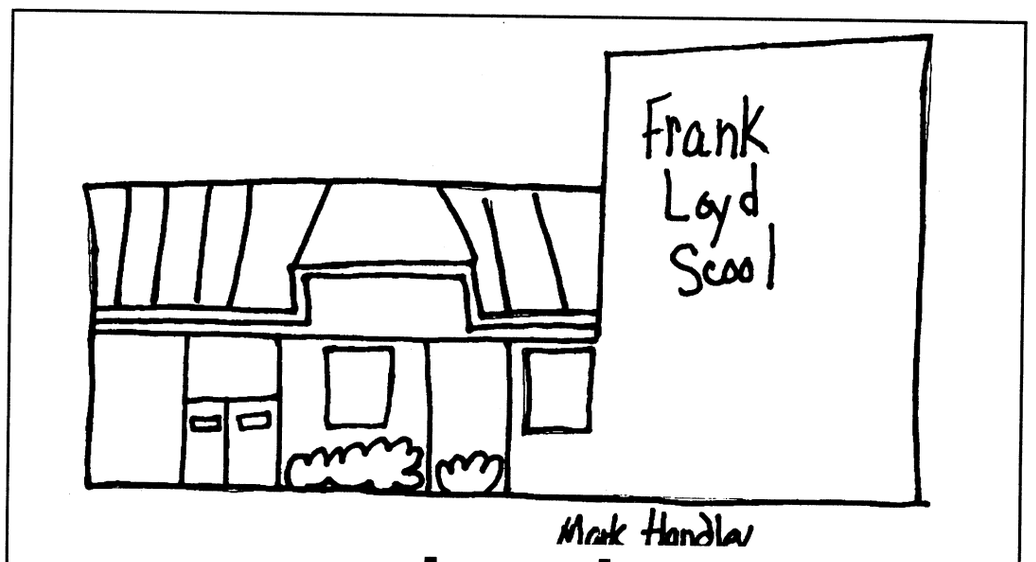
Dexter Elementary School, home of the Eagles, opened in 1969 and was renovated last year. The school was named in honor of Maj. Herbert Dexter, who was killed while serving with the 101st Airborne Division in Vietnam.

Located on Yeager Avenue, Dexter serves students in pre-K through grade five from various Main Post neighborhoods.



Principal Vicki Rogers has served Dexter students since 1990. She holds a specialist in education degree from the University of Georgia and was named Department of Defense Education Activity National Distinguished Principal in 1996.

Dexter's ecology club, made up primarily of kindergartners, was awarded the National Arbor Day Foundation's 2001 Education Award for its environmental service projects.

Club sponsor, Earnestine Ezekiel was selected by the Georgia Association of Young Children to receive the 1999-2000 Fan Brooke Award.

Cy Dietrich, Dexter's visual and performing arts teacher, was named Fort Benning Schools 1999-2000 Teacher of the Year.

Students and parents are invited to a "sneak-a-peek" open house at 2 p.m. Aug. 13, followed by a summer social on the school lawn.

Loyd

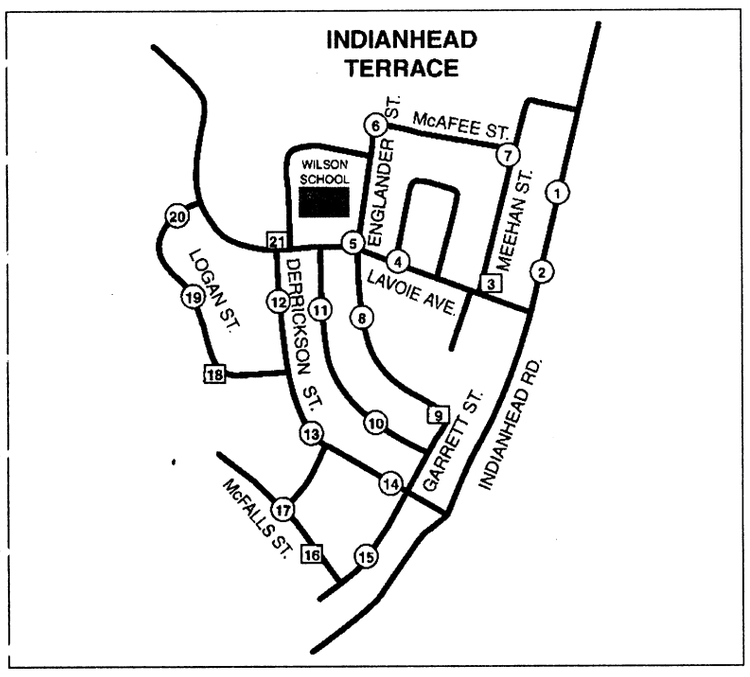
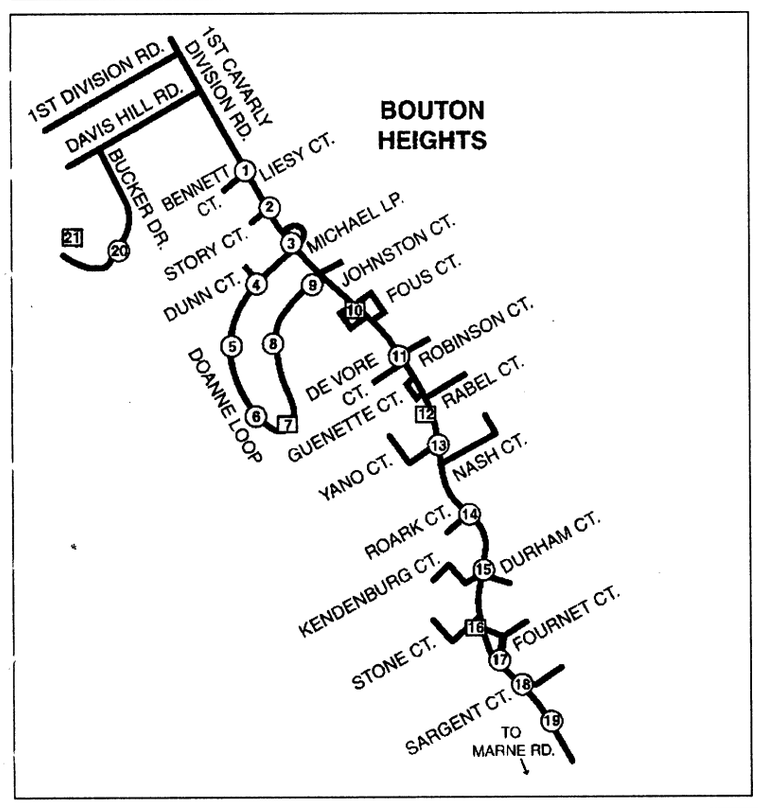
Frank R. Loyd Elementary School, home of the Panthers, is located at 900 Santa Fe Rd., and serves students in the Custer Terrace and Old Officer Capehart neighborhoods.The school was built in 1958 and dedicated to 2nd Lt. Frank Loyd March 26,1959. Following his graduation and commissioning from West Point, Loyd was assigned as a platoon leader in B Company, 35th Infantry Regiment, 25th Infantry Division during the Korean War. He was killed in action on September 26, 1950.



Angie McPherson is in her second year as principal of Loyd. She has nine years as a special education teacher and 10 years in administration. McPherson holds Master's and Bachelor's degrees in special education from the University of Alabama.



Loyd welcomes students and parents to orientation sessions Aug. 13. pre-K orientation is scheduled from 8:30 a.m. to 2 p.m., kindergarten at 8:30 a.m., first grade at 9:30 a.m., second grade at 10:30 a.m., third grade at 11:30 a.m., fourth grade at 1 p.m. and fifth grade at 2 p.m.

Loyd will sponsor an open house Sept. 11 at 6 p.m.

Faith introduces principals, programs

Wise

School announces curricular, extra-curricular changes

Fort Benning School's superintendent introduced the new principal of Faith Middle School July 10.

Dr. Gregg Mowen will fill the vacancy created when Dr. Tom Dignan transferred to Stowers Elementary School.

Stowers' former principal, Glenn Hughes, was named Fort Benning Schools director of instructional technology.

Mowen comes "highly recommended" for the position of principal at Faith, said Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent.

"He has a great deal of experience in standards-based teaching and learning, site-based governance, innovative mathematics education, middle and high school accreditation and parent-community partnerships," McMullen said.

Mowen left the position of superintendent of the Verona Area Schools in Verona, Wis., based on a desire to "be where the action is."

"I've been a superintendent for eight years. I miss the kids. I feel the need to be where the action is, and that's where the students are. I absolutely loved being a principal," said Mowen, who served as principal in Ludington and Davison, Mich., before his tenure as superintendent.

Mowen and his wife, Carol, who will teach music at both Loyd and Wilson elementary schools, have four sons. He said the move to Fort Benning was "a family decision."

"We reached this decision together, and we're all absolutely excited about it. We're looking forward to this adventure," said Mowen.

Faith also welcomes a new assistant principal, Clint Wise, a former special education teacher at Wilson Elementary School.

Mowen and Wise join Dr. Kimberly Crowell, who is in her second year as assistant principal at Faith.

Faith's administrative changes come on the heels of various curricular and extracurricular innovations.

Last spring the school was selected to launch a partnership between the Army and Global Learning and Observations to Benefit the Environment, known as GLOBE, a program designed to integrate science and environmental education with technology.

GLOBE implementation will begin this fall. Under the direction of Bridgette Colburn and Judy Hight, science teachers, Faith students will conduct scientific experiments and research soil, water, ground cover and atmospheric conditions and relay research results to GLOBE's up-to-the-minute data base, shared by more than 10,000 schools in 96 countries.

The end result, said Dr. Dixon Butler, GLOBE's associate director and chief scientist, will be "real-world quality scientific research and contributions" that will enthuse budding scientists and raise their environmental consciences.

Faith will also begin implementing a substance abuse prevention training, called Project ALERT, within the school's standard health curriculum.

Deemed an Exemplary Program by the U.S. Department of Education's Expert Panel on Safety, Disciplined and Drug-Free Schools, Project ALERT is an interactive curriculum developed specifically for middle schoolers.

It teaches students to recognize the internal and external pressures they face when confronted with drugs and alcohol and provides the skills and motivation they need to resist.

The program uses short video vignettes featuring real-life situations designed to encourage in-depth class discussions. It also incorporates role play so students can develop confidence in their ability to make healthy decisions.

Faith teachers, coaches and counselors attended Project ALERT training in Atlanta last fall.

"We viewed the lessons from the students' perspective so we could learn to understand the short- and long-term consequences of their choices," said Debra Mabry, one of Fort Benning's instructional support specialists. "We're looking forward to implementing this program and we expect it to help us guide students to make the best choices for their future."

Faith students will have the opportunity to create a school newspaper with the help of "Newspapers for Education," in conjunction with the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer.

Crowell said the newspaper will give students an understanding of the importance of print media and a chance to experience journalism first-hand.

Faith at a glance

Don C. Faith Middle School, home of the Mighty Falcons, has been serving the sixth through eighth grade students of the Fort Benning community since 1952.

The school was originally located where the Henry Caro Non-Commissioned Officers Academy is today.

Faith was relocated to its present site on Ingersoll Road in 1987.

The school is named in honor of Lt. Col. Don C. Faith, a Medal of Honor recipient mortally wounded in Korea while commanding the 1st Battalion, 32nd Infantry regiment, 7th Infantry Division.

Faith follows a traditional middle school concept, assigning sixth- and seventh-graders to "teaching teams" for literature, language arts, math, science and social studies.

Students also select from a menu of exploratory courses in band, chorus, art, industrial arts, Spanish, health and physical education.

Faith boasts intramural sports programs, student council, National Junior Honor Society, Big Brothers, Big Sisters Mentoring program and an Odyssey of the Mind problem-solving team, which has won worldwide competition six times.

Middle school implements universal gifted program

Faith incorporates Armywide plan

The Department of Defense Education Activity is implementing a universal gifted education program for kindergarten through eighth grade.

The new program replaces individual post programs, creating a consistency that will benefit the children of military families as they transfer from school to school, said Tommye Woods, Fort Benning School's director of student services.

Principals, counselors and a gifted education teacher from each of Fort Benning's seven schools were trained last year to identify gifted students and begin program implementation at the beginning of the 2001-2002 school year, though students enrolled in the previous enrichment programs will be "grandfathered" in, Woods said.

"My big concern, at this point, is that parents understand that if their child was in an enrichment program last year, he'll be enrolled in the new program," she said. "And from here out, a Gifted Review Committee at each school will determine eligibility based on the new requirements."

According to the DoDEA's gifted education guidelines, a student will be eligible for the gifted education program if he or she meets designated criteria in at least two of three standards: intellectual ability, achievement and performance.

Students coming from another DoDEA school will automatically be eligible if they were enrolled at their previous school.

Students coming from public or private schools outside of DoDEA will be referred to the Gifted Review Committee for a determination of eligibility.

The program replaces and expands upon Fort Benning School's previous enrichment program, Woods said. Though eligibility requirements change, the program will remain the same in post elementary schools for the next school year.

Honors classes in language arts, literature and math will continue to be offered to students at Faith Middle School who are currently enrolled in the program, but additional services to allow for extended learning projects across the curriculum will be available to students identified as gifted in middle school.

"We're taking a much closer look at what's defined as 'gifted,'" Woods said. "There's a difference between a high-achiever and a gifted student — they learn in different ways.

"DoDEA recognized the need to develop a program that addresses the interests and the needs of the gifted student, while ensuring our higher achievers are still being challenged in the classroom," She continued. "We'll be looking at each child individually and looking at the totality of the child, their performance, interests, test scores, IQ and capabilities."

Under the new guidelines, Woods said she expects enrollment numbers to decline in two or three years because less than three percent of the population are identified as gifted.

"But the services we're offering won't decline. We're just refocusing," she said.

"High-achievers will have their needs met through accelerated classroom learning and individual projects."

According to DoDEA guidelines, students will be enrolled in the new program only after a four-part identification process:

- Referral by a parent, teacher or someone who knows the student well.
- Parent permission is sought for the collection of information about the student's strengths.
- A committee chairperson prepares a folder containing all information and the committee reviews the student's profile to determine eligibility
- The committee makes it's determination and notifies the student's parents whether or not their child is eligible.

Easter Seals donates software to schools

Microsoft contributes encyclopedias, dictionaries

The West Georgia chapter of the National Easter Seals Society donated 2,500 copies each of Microsoft Encarta's Encyclopedia 2000 and World English Dictionary to Fort Benning schools.

Alice Skinner, computer specialist for Fort Benning Schools, said Easter Seal's donation provided enough copies of the encyclopedia and dictionary to load on every computer in the post's school system.

"What's so great about this gift is that each copy is the equivalent to, or better than, a complete set of encyclopedias," Skinner said.

"And they'll be available at every school for students to use at the school or check out and take home for research-based projects. That's an incredible resource to have available in such quantities."

The Fort Benning School System received the donation in April, but the software was not made available during the last school year because a check-out system had to be developed and implemented at each school.

"But they'll be ready at the beginning of the school year," Skinner said.

Besides the dictionary and encyclopedia, the software offers informational articles, clip art, pictures, photographs and audio clips — technology that can be integrated in school work at every grade level, Skinner said.

Sharon Borger, executive director of Easter Seals of West Georgia, Inc., said the donation was made possible by contributions from Microsoft.

"Microsoft has always been very giving to various charities, and Easter Seals has developed a relationship with them through the years," she said.

"But we've never received a contribution of this magnitude before."

Borger said Microsoft donated thousands of copies of Encarta to the National Easter Seals Society to be distributed to local affiliates throughout the country.

The West Georgia chapter donated to eight local school systems and United Way agencies, asking each to reimburse shipping costs.

"Their initial reaction was disbelief," Borger said. "It does sound too good to be true, but we're thrilled to be a part of it."

Borger said West Georgia Easter Seals, Inc., has copies available to the public for a small donation to cover the cost of shipping.

The Bayonet needs your help spotlighting Fort Benning teachers

Here on Fort Benning we're awfully proud of our schools, and here at the Bayonet, we stay very busy writing about the people and programs that make them the best.

But we think you'll agree, a school is only as good as it's teachers.

They're the bottom line, the heart and soul of our schools. So lets give credit where it's due.

The Bayonet is introducing a new column designed to spotlight the men and women who serve our children each day, inside the classroom — the ones who arrive each morning with a plan and a renewed purpose to give our children the very best education possible.

We'd like your input. Tell us about the teachers who have made a difference in your child's education. Let us know about the special teachers in your life and what it is that sets them apart.

You can reach the Bayonet at fbbayonet@mindspring.com or call 545-4622 or 545-3[illegible].

We look forward to hearing from you.

Striving for excellence important in all things

Bill Putman
USAIC Chaplain's Office

reflections

Today I have 49 years and 11 months with the U.S. Army, in some capacity.

In September of 1951, I enrolled in college, and in ROTC. Since then, I have served in the National Guard, the U.S. Army Reserves, the regular Army and as a Department of the Army civilian. And, I am not ending my association – I'm just retiring.

As I look back on the past 50 years, there are several things which have not changed. One is the Army's demand for, and need for, excellence.

I still like the old slogan, "Be all that you can be." This sentiment was instilled in me while in ROTC.

On entering Senior ROTC, we were given a test. The warrant officer who administered the test plainly stated, "Don't worry about this test. The Army is just trying it out – they might adopt it later as a test for entry into OCS. When you finish it, put your papers on the desk, and we'll see you next class."

We took the test, left our papers as instructed, and departed. Most of us forgot about it. In a couple of weeks a notice appeared on the bulletin board saying the personnel whose names appeared below the red line were dropped immediately from ROTC.

One person who was dropped told the Professor of Military Science and Tactics in class that the warrant officer had said that the test did not count. The professor said, "That's all right, the Army doesn't need anyone who does not do his best at all times." The subject was closed.

This need for excellence pertains to every aspect of Army life, and if "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," excellence is a close runner-up. To be excellent, one must devote his all to the task. To do that, he or she must be right with God, family, him or herself, finances, physical fitness and bearing, education (both military and civilian) and mental state.

In Deuteronomy 10:12-13, it says, "And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul. To keep the commandments of the Lord, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good?" It's here that we find what God requires of us, and our relationship with him.

Six of the 10 commandments are devoted to treatment of your family and your neighbor.

How we govern our finances is dictated to us in Mark 12:17, "... render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's ..." and in Romans 13:6-8, "... render therefore to all their dues: ... owe no man anything, but to love another: for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law."

Granted, in these modern times, there are few who "owe no man anything." But, if you have contracted to pay a certain payment each month, and you fulfill that contract, you are probably living within the spirit of these instructions.

When speaking of physical fitness, it is difficult to overrate a good physical condition whether in civilian or military life. This means keeping yourself in condition to perform whatever duties you may be assigned, and maintaining a level of health that precludes your being sick frequently, and not fit for duty.

Although I cannot immediately recall a passage in the Bible which talks about good physical fitness as such, Luke 2:52 states that "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature..."

One needs to only spend a day in the field in combat in an attack or on a patrol to know the absolute necessity for good fitness.

Education is essential. Everyone does not need a doctorate to perform in the army, but he does need all the schools and training that will make him an expert in his field, and optimally, in related fields. 2 Timothy 2:15 said volumes about education, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed..."

A good mental attitude is also essential. Wherever you are, and whatever you're doing, you must maintain a good attitude, and a good sense of humor helps.

Certainly, without striving for perfection, we will not and cannot do our best. So, "Be all that you can be." Do your best.

Love should be kind, not painful

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

In our culture the unthinkable is being practiced. Hazing, sadism, masochism and bondage are being tolerated and even advocated in some circles.

Initiation and promotion rites can become ugly and demeaning. Whether its encouraging someone to drink to excess, pounding the rank or badge into their body, dousing someone with a liquid other than tap water, or making them binge, strip or perform humiliating acts — these degrading acts must stop and must not be tolerated.

Inflicting pain on another does not make that person tougher. Discipline and punishment do not require inflicting pain. Any indication of redness, welts, depression marks, bruising, burns or bleeding is a clear sign of excessive force and physical abuse.

Lovemaking should be pain free. Any activity that uses pain or asphyxiation to heighten the experience is sadistic. The infliction of pain on yourself to heighten awareness or sexual intimacy is self-destructive and may become increasingly morbid. Love is kind, does not delight in evil, and always protects (1 Corinthians 13:4-8).

Treating individuals like animals or slaves is abhorrent. Tying them up, locking them in a room and preventing them from leaving are acts of humiliation and disrespect.

Bondage does not develop trust or submission. It creates fear, inflicts control and fosters domination.

True submission is working in harmony with one another (Ephesians 5:21). Perfect love casts out fear (1 John 4:18).

Army shooters dominate

USAMU soldiers prevail in annual championship

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

QUANTICO, Va. — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle Team of Fort Benning, Ga., dominated the 40th annual Interservice Rifle Championship July 17-24, winning most of the individual and team awards.

Hundreds of shooters from the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, Reserves and National Guard battled for the coveted championship trophies in humidity and temperatures well into the 90s.

USAMU service rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Grant L. Singley won the overall individual Interservice Championship as well as the Interservice Air Force Match.

Sgt. 1st Class Kevin B. McMahon won the Interservice Navy Match, followed by Singley in second place. Sgt. 1st Class Scott A. Boyd won the Interservice Coast Guard Match and Sgt. Robert M. Mango was third.

Sgt. Tobie L. Tomlinson won the Service Rifle Division of the 600-Yard Match in which Staff Sgt. Norman L. Anderson was third; Sgt. Emil Praslick III took third place in the Match Rifle Division. Sgt. Robby D. Johnson won the 1,000-Yard Service Rifle Match.

This was the second time Singley won the Interservice Championship, the first being in 1996 as a sergeant. This time, however, his score equaled the Interservice record held by USAMU Service Rifle Head Coach Donald L. Heuman who set the record in 1994 when he was in the Marines.

"Singley's performance was outstanding," Heuman said. "The match requires a lot of self-discipline and mental concentration. He's a seasoned veteran who can maintain his focus and keep a record pace."

Tomlinson won the Interservice Individual Service Rifle Long Range Championship and Johnson took third place. Young finished second in the Individual Match Rifle Long Range Championship and in the 1,000-Yard Match Rifle Competition.

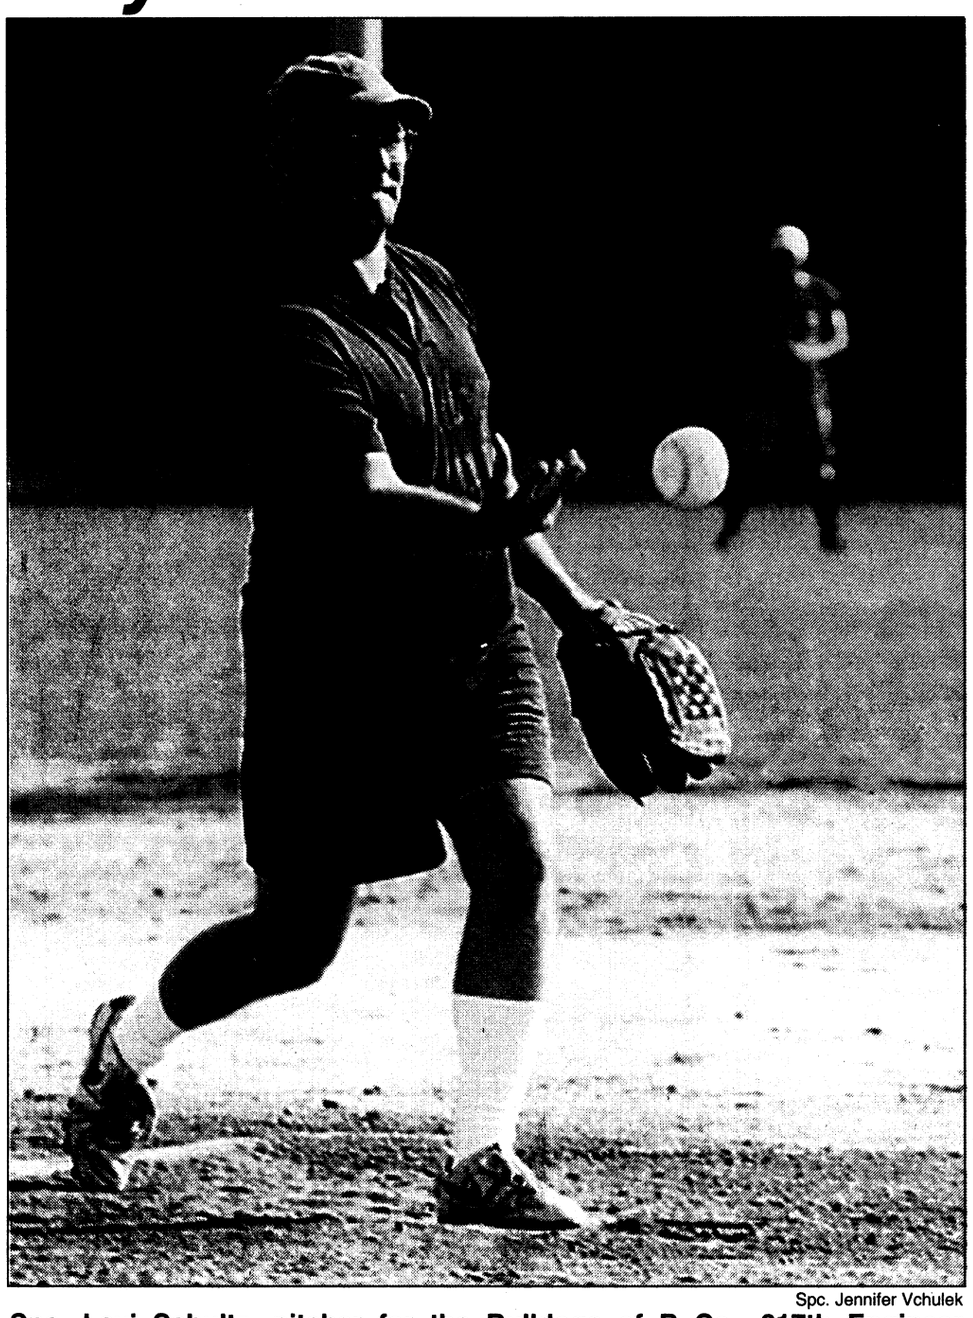
Sgt. Jason M. St. John was awarded the Third Silver Medal and Sgt. Michael E. Moore got the first Bronze Medal in the Excellence in Competition Match.

The USAMU Service Rifle Team, coached by Sgt. 1st Class Charles E. Coffey and Staff Sgt. Kyle A. Ward, won the Interservice Championship Team Match. Tomlinson won the Reynolds Trophy for being the highest scoring competitor in the match.

Team members, besides Tomlinson, were McMahon, Singley, Anderson, Mango, Praslick, Sgt. 1st Class Lance D. Dement, Sgt. Troy L. Alexander, Sgt. Erik A. Burge and Spc. Elisha M. Hoover; team captains were Sgt. 1st Class Steven C. Young and Sgt. 1st Class Gary D. Estes.

The USAMU Team, coached by Mango, won the 1,000-Yard Match Rifle Competition; Estes was the team captain and the shooters were Praslick, Singley, Dement, Young, St. John and Coffey. Coffey's team took second place in the Marine Corps Combat Development Command Match.

"The win was a total team effort with each individual shooter contributing to the success," USAMU Commander Col. Robert I. Hoidahl Jr. said.



USAMU Sgt. Maj. Scott S. Dickmann commented that this was his first competition and it was very interesting to see how the soldiers prepared for it.

"I'm very proud and excited for our shooters," Dickmann said. "I'm glad all their hard work paid off."

The shooters contributed the work of the gunsmiths and ammunition reloaders of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop on the their rifles and ammunition as a direct factor in the team's success.

"I won because everything flowed well and nothing went wrong," Singley said. "The rifle and ammo were great. My win is a big team effort of the Service Rifle Team, the gunsmiths and the reloaders."

ITB soldiers exhibit patriotism during run

Annual road race promotes unit cohesion

> "It made me feel like I was giving something back to the Army. That's the least I could do — give something back to the Army."
> Master Sgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr.
> ITB supply NCOIC

Fourth of July commemorates the country's forefathers, the military's commitment to keeping the people of this country safe, and inspires in many people across the United States, patriotism.

Eleven soldiers, including cadre and trainees from the Infantry Training Brigade, showed their patriotism when they embarked on a journey to Atlanta July 3, to run in the 32nd annual Peachtree Road Race.

Since the race's inauguration in 1970, it has become the world's largest, and one of the most famous, 10K road races with a prize purse of more than $79,000.

The idea for the race sparked in 1969 when several members from the Atlanta Track Club came here to participate in the post's annual Independence Day run, and decided Atlanta could use its own celebration event.

Now, more than 55,000 runners participate in the event every year.

"It was a great experience and was an overwhelming feeling of excitement," Staff Sgt. Donald Flournoy, drill sergeant, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, said.

Flournoy, along with Master Sgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr., ITB supply NCOIC, took charge of the group, calling cadence and leading the soldiers during the run.

McDonald said the point of the race was not to win, but to show Army cohesion and instill patriotism in the crowd, while keeping in formation with constant cadence calling.

"The soldiers were very professional. They were disciplined, well trained and they represented ITB and the Army to the highest military standard," McDonald said.

He said the race was "very motivational and inspiring" because "people were really looking."

Flournoy agreed with McDonald that the race was inspiring in that "it was the people and support that made it what it was."

He said the race was better than any Ironman triathlon or half-Ironman he had participated in before.

Both men said one of the most invigorating things for them during the race was the alliance that occurred between other runners and themselves.

People spoke with the soldiers, they ran beside them and they asked questions about the Army.

"It made me feel like I was giving something back to the Army," McDonald said. "That's the least that I could do — give something back to the Army."

The group finished the race in less than 40 minutes.

"We ran together, we finished together," Flournoy said. He said he intends to continue encouraging soldiers to take part in the Peachtree Road Race every year because he believes it promotes cohesion, esprit de corps and teamwork.

McDonald said he would like to "thank the Lord for another opportunity to do something positive," in the Army.

McDonald and Flournoy now are preparing for the Army Ten-Miler tryouts which will be held later this month.

Getting a jump on a great way to save money sounds too good to be true, right? Seems like you're always the last person at the office to find out about a good thing, especially when it comes to money. Well, not this time, because you've just discovered the Series I Bond from the U.S. Treasury. I Bonds are guaranteed to stay ahead of inflation for the next 30 years, so you can't lose. What's more, you can get this protection for as little as $50. And you'll love the tax benefits, too. To find out more about I Bonds, check out www.savingsbonds.gov, or write to

U.S. Savings Bonds Guide,
Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. And be the first in your office to get in on a good thing.

$5.9 million contract awarded

New system to modernize communication

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

The speed limit on Fort Benning's information highway is in the process of being raised thanks to a new contract and some new wiring.

Southwestern Bell was recently awarded a $5.9 million contract to install a new Lucent telephone switch system — replacing the old system which has been in place for the more than 10 years.

Fort Benning will benefit from the new technology in several ways, according to Paul Yates, chief of the Directorate of Information Management.

"With downsizing around every corner, the benefits will be in the features that will be available and the cost savings we will accrue," he said. "Many of our offices and functions on the installation have become one-person offices. While we have voice mail now, it's capabilities and functionality is limited since it's an add on product.

"We will now have an integrated voice mail capability which is a part of the telephone system; customers will now know who is getting the voice mail they are leaving," said Yates. "In addition, with the new switch will come access to new technology — the most visible being Desktop VTC capabilities.

"We currently have a limited amount of Desktop VTC systems on the installation; the limiting factor being the ability of the telephone system to support the number of customers wanting this service. The new telephone switch will have an expanded capacity to handle this type of service."

Money will also be saved as a result.

"The cost savings this new system will afford us will be in two ways," Yates explained. "First, the switch can process calls much faster and as a result fewer commercial telephone lines will be needed to support Fort Benning's telephone call load. Secondly, with this switch we will be implementing a Personal Identification Number process which will only allow long distance calls to be made if the caller has an active PIN.

"Given that long distance calls will be identified to a specific PIN we will know who (by name) is making long distance calls to where. With this level of visibility the number and length of long distance calls will be reduced, thus saving the installation money," he said.

Community comes together

Residents promote crime prevention, unity

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Despite cloudy skies and a few sprinkles, Fort Benning residents turned out in mass numbers Tuesday evening in the Custer Terrace housing area to take part in National Night Out.

National Night Out is a crime and drug prevention event sponsored by the National Association of Town Watch. It involves communities, law enforcement agencies, civic groups, businesses, neighborhood organizations and local officials.

While the event itself has 18 years of history, this was the first year for the program on Fort Benning.

National Night Out was originally scheduled to begin in the Indianhead Terrace community Monday night, but stormy weather conditions put a slight delay on activities until Tuesday.

Each post community is holding its own celebration each evening with the last NNO, Indianhead Terrace and East and West Main Post, taking place at 6 p.m. tonight in front of the Army Family Team Building office, Building 359.

Sgt. 1st Class Jeffrey Cassell, project NCOIC for the Directorate of Public Safety, said the event was designed to heighten awareness, generate support and participation in anti-crime programs, strengthen neighborhood spirit and send a message to the local criminals that the neighborhoods are organized and fighting back.

"We want to promote community awareness, to get people to come out and meet each other, see who they can turn to if they need something, and of course, have fun," said Deanna Holley, vice-mayor for Custer Terrace.

Rena Carl, the mayor for Custer Terrace, said help from the community helped make the event a big success.

"We've had a lot of people working on this and a lot of donations from various organizations. It's been great," she said.

Military police and post firemen, have been providing much of the entertainment at the events, including parades, canine demonstrations, visits from McGruff the Crime Dog and static displays.

Other than Mother Nature's sometimes lack of cooperation, the evenings have been a success, said Cassell.

"There has been an outstanding turn-out. I was hoping for the best and I think we got it," he said.

"The first of anything is always the hardest, but I think we started out real well. The whole community is working together well," Cassell added.

Bush changes IRA's name

Coverdell plan could benefit investors

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The average annual costs of 4-year public and private college are $11, 338 and $24,946, respectively, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education Web Site. These costs will rise at 4.4 and 5.2 percent annually. At these rates, today's costs could double in 16 years and 14 years, respectively.

To help combat this situation, the government has made available for investors Education IRAs, which President Bush renamed "Coverdell Education Savings Accounts" July 26.

"As with any financial decision, whether or not it is the best thing for any individual depends on the individual's circumstances, said Ann Pratcher, manager, Financial Readiness Program. "The CESA, like anything else, must be considered in the soldier's larger financial picture."

Some of the features of the accounts are:

• Contributions are not deductible for federal income tax purposes.

• Investors must use distributions from a CESA for qualified higher education expenses that include tuition, fees, books, supplies, equipment, and may include room and board.

Simple precautions prevent West Nile virus

Mosquitoes transmit disease from birds

3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Mosquitoes have never been high on anyone's list of popular critters and the West Nile virus certainly isn't helping things.

Georgia's first confirmed case of the mosquito-borne disease came early in July with a dead crow found in Valdosta. Fort Benning has not yet had any confirmed cases.

The virus itself has only been in the United States since August 1999, when it was confirmed to be in New York City. Sixty-two people became ill and seven died from the disease common to Africa and the Mideast.

The virus found in New York is genetically similar to Middle Eastern strains. Scientists speculate that air freight travel between New York and the Middle East brought it here.

Infection symptoms of the virus in humans include fever, severe headache, eye pain, drowsiness, extreme muscle weakness and enlarged lymph nodes.

For most people, the symptoms are mild. A small percentage of people, usually the elderly or those with weakened immune systems, become seriously ill, sometimes progressing to tremors, convulsions or death. The death rate is around three to 15 percent.

Humans become infected by mosquitoes, but the virus originates in birds.

The West Nile virus lives in birds, circulating in their blood for a few days. After this incubation time the virus can passed on via the mosquito. Although the virus infects many species of birds, only a few, notably crows, die from it.

A mosquito becomes infected when it feeds on an infected bird. The virus lives in the mosquito's salivary glands and after an incubation period of ten days to two weeks, an infected mosquito can transmit it to the next bird or other animal that it bites.

Because they often feed on several hosts in one feeding mosquitoes are particularly adept at spreading disease.

The breed of mosquito responsible for the New York outbreak can survive through the winter and

Advice not always easy to follow

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Time heals all wounds. Distance makes the heart grow fonder. If it's meant to be, it will be.

These are just a few basic truths that sound very cliche when offered. At some point, someone has offered us these words as an effort to console or encourage.

For some reason it is hard to accept these seemingly factual bits of information, especially when in the heat of anger or the deepest sadness.

The truth about advice is this: It's easier given than taken. It's in abundance when you don't want to hear it, and scarce when you need it most. It's an attempt to hear what we want to hear, regardless of whether that information is truly the most beneficial and healthy for us.

The best advice is often that which is most painful to follow.

Advice is truly superior when given from those who have gone before us, who have made the same mistakes that we are about to make. It is objective and unbiased when given by someone who is trained to do so.

Perhaps advice is best taken from a variety of sources, carefully weighted and balanced against one another.

Still, most of us go through life refusing to accept the advice of our elders because, after all, what do they know? Most of us choose to experience the world disregarding the wisdom of those who know better and simply learn the hard way.

Maybe it is better that way. Maybe that is part of the experience of life.

Advice, counseling, therapy. The truth is that we all need a little, in some form. Every couple can use a few tips to enhance their relationship. Every teen can use some advice on how to deal with a seemingly endless bombardment of change in his or her life. Every soldier can use a boost to his or her morale and pride, and tips on how to balance a demanding career and a happy family. Everyone can use some guidance in how to be a better parent, child or friend.

It is in this way that we are alike. We are all needy. We are all dependent. And that's not a bad thing.

It's okay to need your family and friends. It's okay to seek professional guidance. It makes us better people, stronger people, for we have swallowed our pride in order to better ourselves.

Each person's needs are different, thus the approach taken should be as well. The importance lies in knowing that we all have strengths and weaknesses. They are what make us unique.

Gift thrills, brings glee to giver, receiver

Elsie Jackson

commentary

My daughter just turned 8 years old. We celebrated, of course. I sent "goody bags" to school.

We threw a little party for her special friends. Her grandparents sent her care packages. And for several weeks before her birthday, I shopped for a birthday gift for her.

I admit, I dragged my feet, as if putting off her birthday would stop its arrival, and I didn't know why.

But I think I've figured it out. Since we're past Barney and beanie babies, shopping for her is not as easy as it used to be.

She tried to help, offering suggestions of her own.

"For my birthday, can I have my own TV and VCR for my room?"

"Yes, but not this birthday. That's a birthday present you give yourself. After you get a real job."

"How about my own phone?"

I thought that one was a real stretch since it takes some serious bribing to get her to say anything more than "Hi-grandma-I-love-you-bye" when her grandparents call.

"Laptop computer?"

"Right after I buy one for myself. And don't make me feel bad by asking for stuff that didn't exist when I was 8 years old."

"How about a camera?"

"Do you remember the vacation pictures you took with that one-use camera? When you kept popping up out of nowhere to surprise people and then snapping their picture?"

"Hey! You never developed those pictures."

"And I never will."

As much as I detest Barbie (height envy), I have to admit that she does make shopping for little girls a snap. And those boxes she comes entombed in sure are easy to wrap.

Plus there's the added gloat factor bonus that kicks in after she's played with for 10 minutes. It's always a bad hair day for Barbie once little fingers comb out her hair.

But I refused to cave in and take the simpler Barbie route. Somewhere out there was the perfect, age appropriate, reasonably priced, sure to delight gift. I ended up buying a low-end personal CD player and the soundtrack to "Rugrats in Paris."

My husband was mortified. "She's in the third grade and you got her a CD player?"

I didn't see it that way.

My daughter got a personal CD player and she was thrilled. I don't have to listen to Weird Al Yankovic squealing "The Saga Begins" and "Grapefruit Diet," the Band of the Week and the soundtrack to "Pokemon."

Oh, and there's one more bonus that came with her personal CD player.

I got mine back.

Tips offered to keep students on track

Dr. Gregg Mowen
Faith Middle School

As we stand at the door of a new school year, it is important to take a few moments and concentrate on how we can help students become more successful.

Success in school is like any other skill, it can be learned. During the middle school years, students will make important decisions about their careers and social interests.

It is very important that parents and school staff work together, so that focus and support can be aimed at school excellence.

Here are 10 specific ways students can boost performance in school and promote excellence.

1. Stay in school shape. You should train for school as you would train for any athletic sport. Eat the right foods, get plenty of sleep, and be sure to get some regular physical exercise.

2. Set the right priorities. Put schoolwork first. Remember that it is your primary responsibility as students right now. Give it your best effort, highest energy, and closest attention.

3. Set a schedule and stick to it. Set aside a block of time each day for schoolwork. Taking a break is okay and very helpful, but always come back until the time is fully used. When written assignments are completed, go over class notes, read, or work on getting organized.

4. Learn the difference between I can't and I won't. Do you find yourself putting off certain assignments or studying for a test? Recognize the signs of procrastination and don't give in. Remember that if you think you can't, you won't.

5. Ask for help. Poor test or homework grades signal a need for extra help. Never be shy to ask for help. Remember the only dumb question is the one you do not ask.

6. Study skills. If you're not sure where to start when a big test is coming up, you are not alone. There are specific proven methods for studying that you can learn. Ask your teacher or counselor for more information.

7. Organize, organize, organize. The web of assignments from different teachers can seem overwhelming. Keep a small notebook with you at all times to jot down assignments and test dates. Stick a big chart up in your room and keep updating it with a timetable for getting everything done.

8. Watch details. Careless mistakes and lack of attention to detail can cost a full grade or more on a project or homework. Make sure you know all the requirements for the assignment before you complete it. Give yourself plenty of time to work on it. Have someone else look it over before the final draft is finished to make comments and suggestions.

9. Rah Rah. Don't discount the advantage of school spirit. Participate on an athletic team or join a club or two. You will not only have fun and gain valuable experiences but you will keep more focused on your main job right now, which is doing well in school.

10. Keep your eye on the prize. Students who do well stand the best chance of achieving what they want after high school graduation. Making your teachers and parents happy is not the ultimate goal of education. Enriching your mind and increasing your options in life are the real points of school.

Soldiers save money at reclamation sale

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy

Staff Sgt. Lee Sirmans, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, peruses the BDU racks Aug. 3.

Shoppers pay 25 percent of original cost

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The crowd stretched around the corner of the building, sweating in the summer heat and waiting anxiously.

The excitement level rose as it got closer and closer to 10 a.m.

Finally it was time.

The gate lifted and the doorman let the first group in. The bounty within was made available to those who patiently waited all morning for their discount shopping opportunity.

Bins of boots, duffel bags and towels and racks and racks of BDU's, PT's and Class A items were waiting to be scooped up by value-conscious shoppers at the reclamation sale Aug. 3.

Once a month, the initial clothing issue for soldiers who did not complete initial-entry training, is made available at 25 percent of the original cost.

A pair of BDU's can be purchased brand-new from Military Clothing and Sales for nearly $30 a piece.

They were available at the reclamation sale for seven dollars a piece.

Class A jackets were the most expensive item at the sale, at a modest $25.

"The reclamation sale is the first Friday of each month. We try to catch everyone when they've got a pocket full of money," said L.C. Kirkpatrick, chief of the storage section, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"The items come from basic training and the Infantry Training Brigade. For whatever reason, if they can't make it through training and get put out of the service, the recoverable clothing has to be turned in," Kirkpatrick said.

"I've been here a few times before and it's definitely the cheapest thing going for uniforms," said Spc. Jonathan Galbraith, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized).

"We have about three to four hundred people come through in a four-hour period," Kirkpatrick said.

By 11 a.m. the line outside had died down, but the cashier line inside was still very lengthy.

At the Aug. 3 sale, $15,000 worth of merchandise was sold.

"The money from the sale goes back to the appropriations center. By law it has to go back to the original purchasers of the clothing. Fort Benning does not get a nickel of it," Kirkpatrick said.

"The resources to conduct the sale come strictly out of our hide. We do it just to provide a service to the soldier," Kirkpatrick said. "It's one of the most popular ones on the installation."

Anyone who can shop at Military Clothing and Sales can shop at the reclamation sale, but retirees are limited to Class A items only.

After the sale, leftover merchandise in the most popular sizes are retained for the next sale.

The rest of the items are gathered into lots and sold by the Defense Reutilization Marketing Office to commercial merchants.

The next reclamation sale is Sept. 7 from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m at Building 224.

For more information, call 545-1104.

Chaplain vacancies affect spirituality Army-wide

Army ministry serves unique segment on posts

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

They serve both their calling and their country in the same breath. But there simply aren't enough of them to go around.

Army chaplains — including rabbis, priests, imams, ministers and pastors — perform jobs similar to their civilian counterparts in addition to teaching education classes, leading workshops and counseling soldiers and families during deployments.

But the demand for Army chaplains is not being met, with a competing base in the civilian sector and a declining number of qualified spiritual leaders seeking their own congregations out of seminary.

The Army is experiencing a shortage of chaplains at the grade of captain with more than 100 vacancies needing to be filled over the next two years.

"We're about 65 chaplains short across the corps this year. We'll need to recruit that plus double that to meet our in-strength objective for the next fiscal year," said Chaplain (Col.) Richard Hartsell, USAIC chaplain.

"This presents a real problem in that these are the chaplains who are down in the front lines of ministry providing pastoral care to soldiers," he said.

He said a recruiting plan is in the works to help fill the vacancies.

"There is an initiative now called the Installation Recruiting Plan-75 which consists of bringing Major Army Command and installation chaplains together to network strategies, ideas and concepts on how we're going to recruit and retain chaplains in the Army," Hartsell said.

But chaplain recruiters face another challenge when scouting for spiritual leaders.

"We have a chaplaincy which is aging a bit more than we'd like," he said.

Appointment of reserve component officers, with or without concurrent active duty, is limited by age. Commissioning must take place prior to applicants turning 40 years old.

Prior service may adjust one's age for appointment. Due to severe shortages of Catholic chaplains on active duty, priests may be appointed until they reach the age of 50.

Fort Benning residents can see the impact of a challenged branch, with a noticeable absence of chaplains in areas like 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division. Three chaplain slots are presently vacant. Also, Jewish rabbis and Muslim imams are currently contracted to supplement leadership for services on post.

To combat the ongoing struggle, chaplain recruiters are hitting the streets hard. They're seen at denominational conferences, as well as colleges and universities nationwide.

"We just have to let people know what we're doing and what the opportunities are in the Army," he said.

Chaplain assistants are also an integral part of the unit ministry team, with a limited number of positions available in the Army.

Pvt. Kyle Miller, TIC Chapel, said he has expanded his own vision of what the Army does on a daily basis. Originally slated for an Infantry slot, Miller now works with Army chaplains.

Before taking the job, he completed a seven-week course at Fort Jackson, S.C., where he received the instruction on assisting in counsel, coordinating ministry functions in a combat environment and supporting a family team readiness program.

Miller, who admitted he didn't want to pursue a job in chaplaincy, said he has gained a deeper appreciation for the chaplain's role since arriving at Fort Benning.

"I'll definitely be more active in the community afterwards because of this," Miller said. "I've met so many people I never would have."

Until the needs are met, chaplains will be spreading the word of the recruiter as well as their own.

"We are hurting," Hartsell said. "We (Fort Benning) have never been that short without the prospect of replacements."

For more information about the chaplaincy, visit www.usarmychaplain.com, contact a chaplain recruiter, or stop by the Installation Chaplains' Office in Infantry Hall.

Students get longer to pass APFT

New school policy gives soldiers time to acclimate

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

In recent years DoD changed a policy for soldiers attending common core courses from taking and passing an Army Physical Fitness Test within 72 hours of enrollment.

Under the new mandate, soldiers who do not pass a fitness test within 72 hours after enrollment have seven to 14 days to retest.

The second chance applies to soldiers enrolled in NCOES programs such as PLDC, BNCOC and ANCOC, Battle Staff NCO Course, First Sergeant Course, Non-Resident ASMC Resident Phase, Reserve component CCC and WOAC.

The new regulation, fielded in February 1999, was a direct result of leaders' concern about the higher than usual number of soldiers being sent back to their units after failing their initial APFT soon after arriving at different locations to attend a course, according to Sgt. Maj. George Monk, NCO Academy commandant.

"What happened at the latest commandants conference is that (this issue) was addressed. We were sending people back to Germany, Korea and other places because soldiers were having problems acclimating," Monk said. "Especially with PLDC. We are one of 15 PLDC schools that serve the southeastern portion of the U.S. We felt that soldiers should not be sent back because they could not pass their APFT the first day."

As the home of the infantry, Fort Benning hosts all common core infantry courses. Soldiers must come here to attend courses such as BNCOC and ANCOC.

Soldiers coming from different climates did not have sufficient time to acclimate to the Georgia climate and had to struggle to perform their best, Monk said.

By allowing soldiers at least three days to become acclimated to the weather, altitude change and then giving the APFT, Monk believes soldiers will be able to perform their best.

However, if a soldier fails to meet the height and weight and body fat standards he automatically reports back to his unit, Monk said.

The NCOA implemented the new policy in 1999.

1st Sgt. Darrell Sullivan, Academy assistant commandant, stated the new policy does not affect training nor does he believe that the new policy adds stress on soldiers.

Soldiers will continue training if they fail the initial APFT, and within seven to 10 days (not to exceed the 14th day) of the course, another APFT will be given. If they fail, they are withdrawn from the course as an academic failure.

If a soldier fails due to a medical reason, Monk said his policy is to consider each situation individually. As the commandant, he will look at what is best for the soldier.

Monk said there are other reasons students are unable to pass the mandatory testing.

Sullivan said he realizes the soldier's current duty assignment may not conduct PT on a regular basis. These soldiers must ultimately take responsibility for maintaining their physical fitness.

"Some students are reporting to these schools unprepared due to lack of physical training," Sullivan said.

He reminds leaders that part of the commander's checklist includes an APFT.

"Our motto here is high graduation, low attrition. We have a very low attrition rate, less than one percent due to PT failures in any course," Monk said.

Under the new policy an APFT is no longer a prerequisite, but is now a graduation requirement.

Also the extended scale, for those scoring more than the 300 maximum, is used only to recognize the soldier with the highest APFT score. It is no longer used for unit APFT scores.

"Commanders and leaders have an obligation to make sure soldiers are properly prepared with the necessary knowledge, tools and competence to pass the course. So many soldiers come here lacking skills required to pass the course," Monk said.

The new policy does not affect soldiers reporting to Drill Sergeant School, Airborne or Ranger School, Special Forces Assessment and Selection, Officer Candidate School or Warrant Officer Candidate School.

Switch: Brings more communication options to post

Yates said the changes resulting from the contract with Southwestern Bell will not effect the average resdiential phone user.

"This new system will support official telephone service only and will not affect personal telephone service in government quarters or the barracks," he said.

"The way that our customers will be affected is in services provided," Yates said.

"This system will be capable of providing all of the capabilities that you can get from local telephone companies," he added.

The switch installation project is scheduled to take anywhere from nine months to one year to complete.

Fort Benning phone users won't see any changes in the meantime.

"All the equipment will be stationed and we will transfer everyone to the new system at the same time," Yates said. "It will be a complicated process and require patience of our customers but in the long run it will be worth the inconvenience."

CESA: Makes planning for children's college fund easier

• Current maximum annual contribution per beneficiary: $500 until the child is 18. Beginning in 2002, the maximum annual contribution limit per beneficiary will be $2,000.

• The beneficiary solely owns assets of a CESA.

• The custodian controls the account until the child reaches age 18.

• Earnings and withdrawals are not subject to federal income tax.

• Investors can fund a CESA with whatever they wish, be it certificates of deposit, mutual funds, stocks, bonds, etc.

"Some things to think about when deciding whether or not to use the CESA are what will happen if the child decides not to go to college, whether or not the CESA will prevent the child from receiving other financial aid for college (if it will be needed), and whether some other type of investment will provide a higher overall rate of return," Pratcher said.

Jason Dickinson, First Command Financial Planning, said soldiers should consider the plan for their children.

"You can avoid taxes and pay for an education early and have the aid of a little thing called a compound factor," he said.

He said the increase from $500 to $2,000 makes investing in the CESA more advantageous for soldiers because it will help them keep pace with the rising cost of higher education.

For more details, call Pratcher at 545-5485.

Virus: Found in Georgia; steps taken halt migration

continue to harbor the virus.

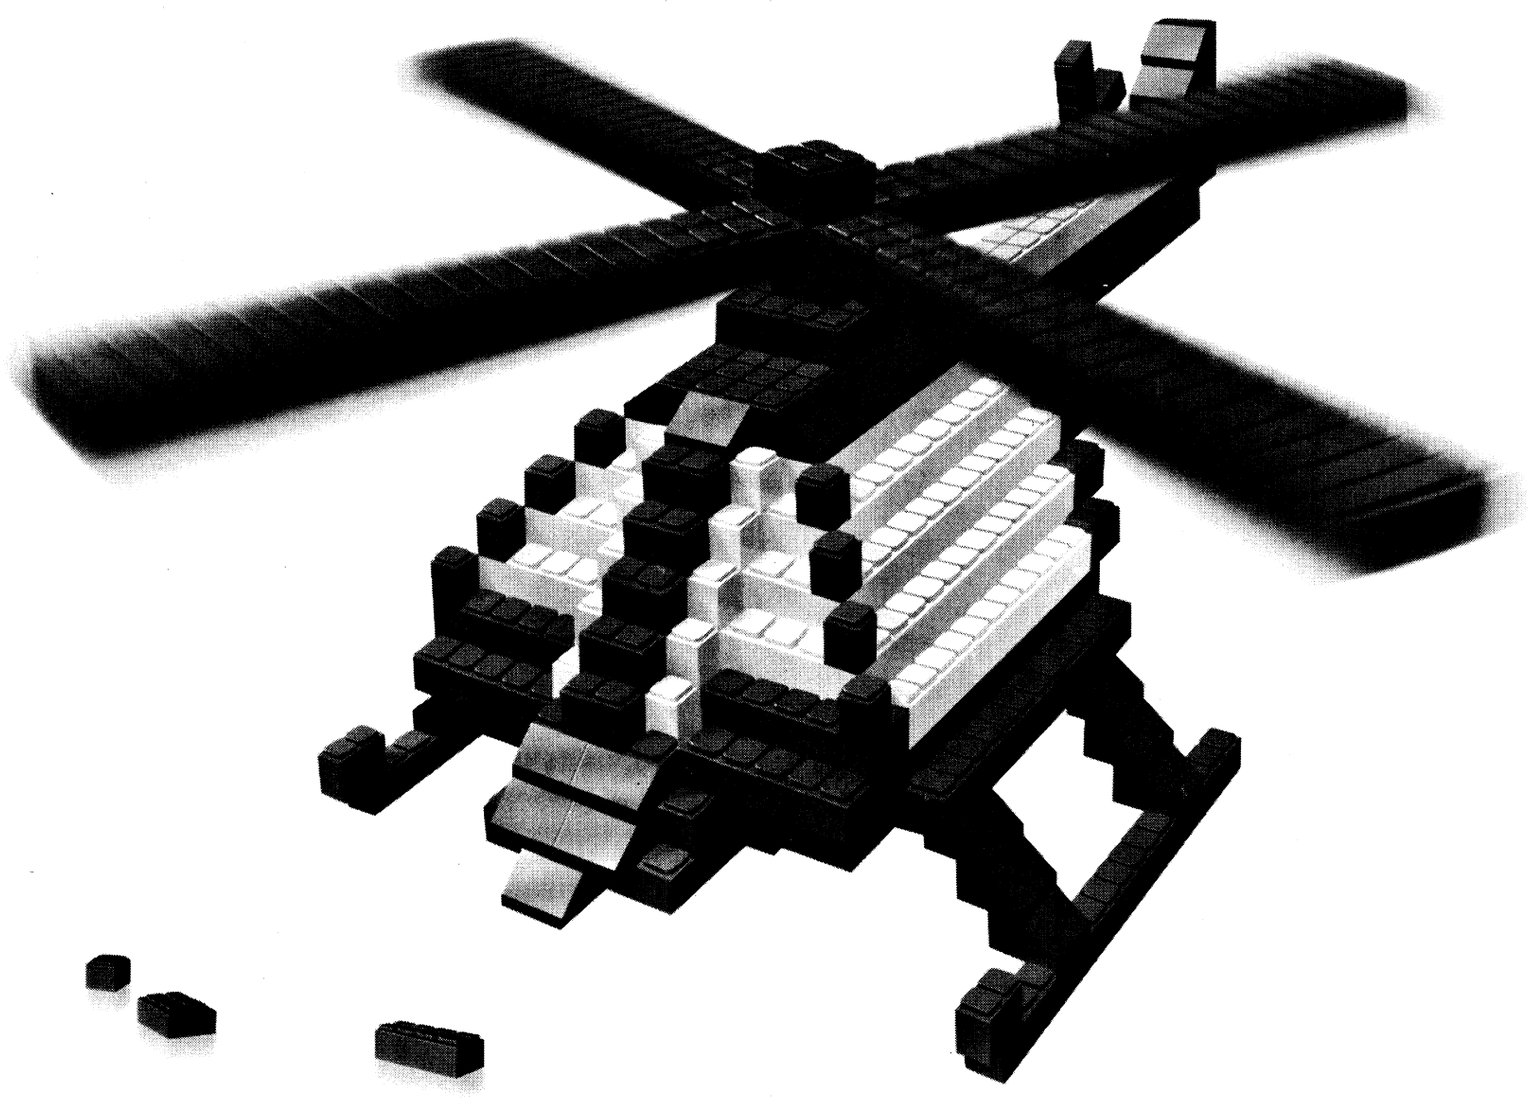
Mosquitoes aren't long traveling, but the birds they infect are. The migratory birds bitten by the New York mosquitoes brought the infection to New England, where it continued to cycle between birds and mosquitoes until the virus had built up enough to start affecting other animals.

Compliments of El Nino, the great outdoors have become an even greater mosquito factory than usual this year. State officials predict a bumper crop, making up for last year's relatively mosquito-mild summer.

It's clear that West Nile will now be a permanent fixture in the United States, said Dr. Stephen Ostroff a medical epidemiologist from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Ostroff was part of a news conference July 26 in Atlanta.

One-fifth of the world's population is affected each year by such mosquito-borne diseases as malaria, yellow fever or dengue, parasitic worms, and encephalitis.

In the United States, where pest control programs are well established, mosquito-borne diseases are relatively rare.



Shortly after the virus was identified in New York, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention began planning for its spread. It distributed more than $2.7 million to 19 state and local health departments on the Eastern seaboard and Gulf of Mexico and held a planning meeting in November 1999.

Perhaps the easiest way to keep mosquitoes off is to avoid them.

Stay inside, especially at dusk. Check porch and window screens for holes, patching or replacing torn screens with 16x16 or 14x15 mesh.

Inside, coils, candles, citronella, peppermint or clove oils are somewhat effective at keeping away mosquitoes, but only if they are used in confined areas.

For human health questions, call the Health Department at 1-800-942-7434.

Units' mascots boost esprit de corps

Dog-faced soldiers bone up morale

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

As the drill sergeant calls his unit to attention and present arms for Retreat, passersby can hear the distinct howling of ... a dog.

Cpl. Charlie, C Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, has been ending his days celebrating the age-old ceremony of Retreat in chorus with the trumpets.

Charlie, a six-month-old husky-lab, came to the company in April.

He was a wandering stray in the area, and many of the cadre thought it would be a good idea to adopt Charlie and make him the mascot.

"He is overall responsible for the morale of the (trainees)," Staff Sgt. Thomas Williams, training NCO and acting company executive officer said. "Charlie loves the soldiers, and he'll run to them before he runs to the drill sergeants or the cadre."

The corporal attends all training with his unit, except for weapons training and basic rifle marksmanship, and has kept soldiers on top of the world with his cuddly, loveable behavior, Williams said.

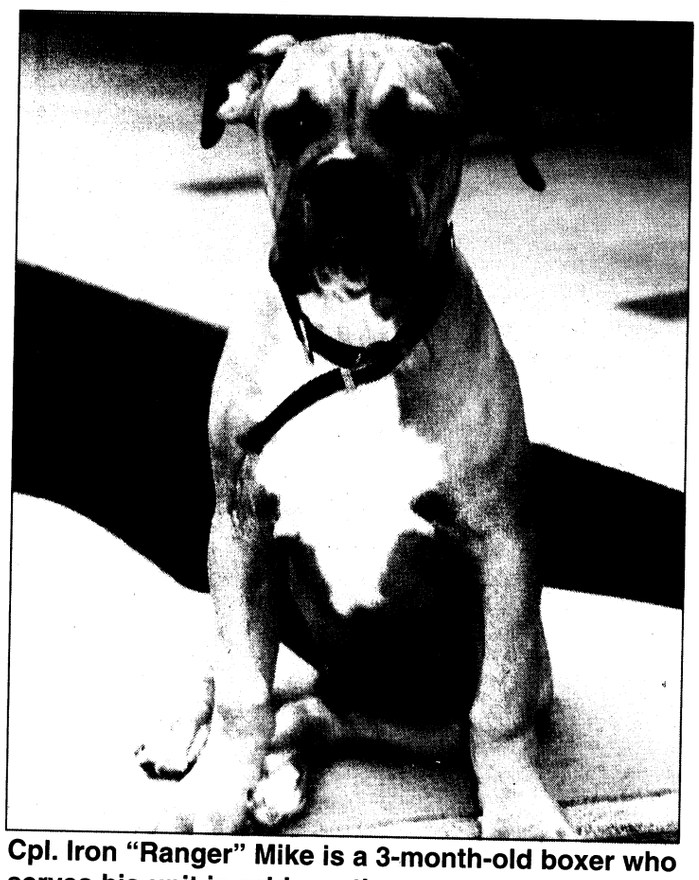
In fact, his own cadre photo hangs beside that of the rest of the company.

"Everybody has taken to him, especially the trainees," Williams said. "Who would you rather play with — a drill sergeant or a dog?"

Charlie is not the only mascot on the installation bringing morale and esprit de corps to the people he touches daily.

Cpl. Iron "Ranger" Mike, the company mascot for B Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, also fulfills the duties of a company mascot with ease.

Mike began his stint with B Company in early May when he was rescued from a breeder who no longer wanted the boxer. Mike was put on orders to the company, by order of the battalion commander, and since has performed his duties 110 percent everyday, said Capt. Patrick Workman, Mike's company commander.



"He's got the life now," Workman said. "He owns this company."

Workman said Mike spends much of his time in formation, inspecting basic trainees' uniform and boots, occasionally, letting them know how they are doing with a little yelp.

"The (soldiers) love him," Workman said. "It's a break for them to walk and play with him."

Workman said he and his drill sergeant cadre began looking for a company mascot earlier this year to help build esprit de corps and increase morale in the unit's personnel.

Cpl. Charlie serves as a morale booster for the trainees, cadre and drill sergeants in his unit.

Cpl. Iron "Ranger" Mike is a 3-month-old boxer who serves his unit in pride as the company mascot.

Mike has filled those duties, providing drill sergeants, cadre and trainees alike with a break from the daily grind, and an uplifting wag of the tail with every trainee he meets, he said.

Both company mascots are formally assigned to their units with orders, signed by their battalion commanders, and in cooperation with the post's Veterinarian Services.

Under Army guidelines, units are responsible for maintaining the health and welfare of their mascot, and Veterinary Service provides all necessary medical care.

Each animal that is brought into the mascot program is given a duty title, a rank (not to exceed staff sergeant) and other privileges through their command.

However, the animal is on a permanent duty assignment to the installation, Capt. Louis Huzella, branch chief, Fort Benning Veterinary Service, said.

"I think unit mascots are good for morale and ideal in the right units," Huzella said.

Huzella said he recommends units receive pre-assignment counseling from Veterinary Services before entering an animal into the mascot program.

"I just want units to realize there are a lot of considerations," he said.

"The problem I see is what's going to happen when that group (that adopted the mascot) is gone and there's new people that don't want it."

Huzella said he supports the current units that have mascots because they are very responsible for the animals, and someone is around 24-hours-a-day to ensure the animal's welfare.

Huzella strongly encourages units looking for mascots to contact him and his staff for guidance and pre-assignment counseling by calling 545-5660.

COMMUNITY

Center not just for do-it-yourself auto buffs

Shop provides right tools for customers

Laura Martinson and Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

From scoop to nuts — they've got it all. The Automotive Skills Center, open since November 1998, is a one-stop shop for Fort Benning's auto care needs.

Nearly three years and thousands of customers later, the center houses a complete line of accessories to help the self-help guru or paying patron get auto work done.

It's a benefit that saves soldiers money, said customer Ed Drake, civil service worker. The shop offers competitive pricing and services to those shops off post.

"The people here do very good work. I have brought two cars in over the past six months," he said.

Auto services were once offered at different locations on post. The shops combined in November 1998 and formed a new facility.

"This setup is much better. They have the most up-to-date equipment there," Drake said.

Thirteen employees, including five mechanics, offer patrons a variety of services.

The most requested service is oil changes, said mechanic James Marshall.

Other services offered by the shop include: computerized tire building, engine system steam cleaning, drum rotor turning, antifreeze recycling, computerized engine analyzer, engine and transmission rebuild exchange service, muffler and tailpipe replacement, general automotive repairs and a computerized automotive information center.

Marshall said the shop helps more than 40 people each day, both self-help patrons and those seeking professional advice.

"You think it will slow down eventually, but now our name is out there," Marshall said. "Lately it hasn't slowed down at all."

The 25,556 square foot center includes 42 bays, acetylene welding, 15 drive-on lifts, engine rebuild area, tune-up area, spray paint booth, tool room, and walk-in parts and accessories store.

For the antique auto enthusiast, space for restoration of vehicles is available. A yellow old model Ford currently sits in the back of the shop, under renovation by one of the shop's customers.

Money-saving coupons are offered each month for customers through Fort Benning's On the Go, an MWR newsletter that spotlights facilities. Do-it-yourself hours are from 1 to 8:30 p.m. Floor walkers are on the lookout to assist people during self help. Detailed step-by-step instruction is also available for reference, via the shop computer.

The Auto Craft Shop is open Monday through Friday, from 1 to 8:30 p.m. and from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. For more information, call 545-2337.

Reading program wraps up

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

On your mark. Get set. Go!

And they're off! Youngsters race to participate in a mini-mall scavenger hunt.

The Aug. 1 hunt marked the end of another race of sorts, the Summer Reading Program at Sayers Memorial Library.

Nancy Wahlstrom, a reference librarian at Sayers, officiated both events.

"This summer was about encouraging and promoting reading," she said.

That it did. The children, ages 5-12, were given reading logs to complete daily and then have their parents sign. Children could read books, magazines, comics and participate in family readings.

"It doesn't matter what they are reading, as long as they are doing it," Wahlstrom said. "Times were logged by minutes spent reading rather than how many books were read. This was done to make it fair for the slower readers."

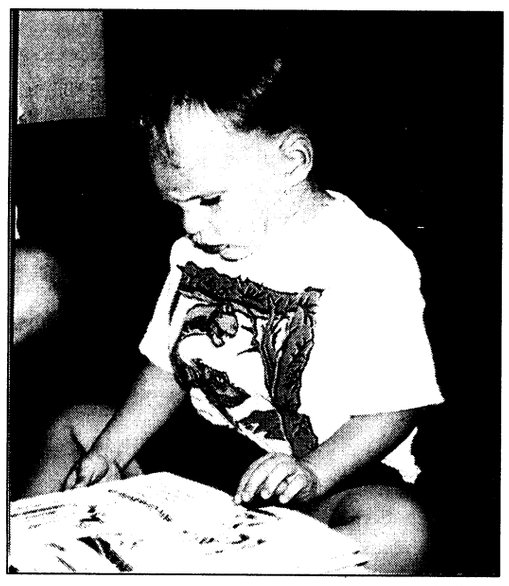
The theme for this year's reading program was the exploration of Native American culture. The group met once a week for seven weeks.

Activities included the creation of a rhythm drum and ceremonial mask, meeting a Native American dancer and listening to storytellers.

Jose Rivera, a 7-year-old summer reader, said he enjoyed the Native American theme.

"I liked doing the Indian crafts, especially the mask. My favorite part was the scavenger hunt," he said.

Rivera's parents were enthusiastic about his participation.



"We've been reading all summer long. This was a good way to get him back on track for school," said Sonia Rivera.

"This program was especially good for Jose, because we came here from Puerto Rico last November. It has helped his reading skills and given him confidence and discipline," said father, Asdrubal Rivera.

Jose finished third for his age group in the reading competition, with 1,560 minutes of logged reading.

Following the scavenger hunt, awards were presented according to age and number of minutes read.

Winners by age group were:

Laura Martinson

Evan Brown inspects a picture book at the Sayers Memorial Library.

• Ages 11-12: First place, Dominique McNeal, 2,080 minutes. Second place, Micah Wahlstrom, 300 minutes.

• Ages 7-8: First place, Bryan Brown, 2,235 minutes. Second place, Sam Vona, 1,102 minutes.

• Age 5-6: First place, Patrick Somerlot, 3,767 minutes. Second place, Kayna Steinbach, 2,497 minutes.

Diann McNeal said her entire family enjoyed taking part in the reading program.

"My kids had a good time learning about Native American culture, and their reading skills improved," said McNeal.

There were 75 participants this summer, up from last year's 45.

Wahlstrom said the theme for next year's reading program is going to be Rainforest Animals and Endangered Species.

Chief librarian John Cook thanked all of the volunteers for their help.

"This program would not be possible without the support of our volunteers," said Cook.

Wahlstrom added, volunteers are always welcome at Sayers Memorial Library.

"This is a good opportunity for high schoolers who need volunteer hours," said Wahlstrom.

For more information about upcoming events or volunteering, call the library at 545-4911.

Bayonet photo contest announced

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Are you a shutterbug? Looking for an opportunity to share some of your favorite Fort Benning memories with the community?

The Bayonet is holding a photo contest. The winners will be announced in the Sept. 7 edition of the paper.

All submissions to the contest should have a tie to Fort Benning — whether it's a training exercise or life in the housing areas.

Along with having your prize-winning photo published in the newspaper, the top three contestants will also receive prizes provided by The Montgomery Advertiser, the printers of The Bayonet.

Rules for submissions include:

• We will accept 3x5 to 8.5x11 photos,

• Black and white or color submissions are acceptable,

• Submissions must have ties to Fort Benning. (Examples include training pictures, MWR events, housing, graduations, etc.),

• Mail photos or drop by Infantry Hall, Building 4, Room 606, Fort Benning, Ga., 31905,

• Open to active duty military and their dependents, retirees and DOD civilians,

• You must be an amateur photographer,

• Photos will not be returned by mail. Entrants who wish to get their submission back can pick it up at the Bayonet office after winners have been announced.

The Bayonet staff will act as judges for the contest.

Any questions can be answered by calling 545-2201 or 545-3213.

Student transitions get smoother

New program eases stress from moving

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Moving is hard on everyone, young and old alike, but the normal issues of relocating are often magnified by the complexities of being a teen.

Besides transferring credits and maintaining academic class standings, high schoolers deal with tougher emotional and social issues typically associated with adolescence but complicated by transition.

Darryl Baker is a textbook example of a transitioning student.

He moved to Fort Benning in the middle of his freshman year, leaving behind friends and classmates he'd known since the third grade.

Baker ate lunch by himself for a month before he made new friends, he was frustrated by the block schedule — a concept he'd never encountered at his former school — and he was forced to repeat classes in subjects he's already passed with flying colors.

"That was the hardest part," Baker said. "I was ranked number 22 out of 400 students at my old school. Then I came here and things were totally different. Some of my credits wouldn't transfer, and I had to take the same classes again — civics, physical science and English. It was scary."

Beginning this fall, students like Baker — children of soldiers transferring from one school district to another — will travel a smoother road to academic recovery, thanks to an Army-sponsored study of mobile Army teens.

Results of the Secondary Education Transition Study, which were released in June, led school officials on nine military installations and school systems in their neighboring towns to develop and implement an agreement to assist transitioning military students — an agreement that becomes effective at the start of the school year.

"It's an excellent idea that should have been acted upon many years ago. It's wonderful," said Brenda Dozier, assistant superintendent of student affairs for Muscogee County Schools.

In essence, the agreement between school districts will improve predictability and determine the best ways to meet the needs of Fort Benning students attending Muscogee County schools, said Dozier, who worked hand-in-hand with Fort Benning officials on the plan's staff development component.

Some of the ways local schools will assist new students include:

• working with the student's previous school system to determine which credits are transferrable, and if necessary, allowing the student to graduate from the former school by meeting the school's graduation requirements while attending school in Muscogee County

• athletic and academic teams that conduct try-outs in the spring or summer will leave slots open for military students who arrive at the beginning of the school year

• the schools' chapter of national academic organizations, such as the National Junior Honor Society, will review students' records for possible acceptance when they transfer during the school year

• transferring students will meet regularly with counselors and will be assigned a sponsor or "buddy" to escort them until they're familiar with their surroundings

• allowing parents to hand-carry student records from one school system to another to prevent delays in scheduling

• post extracurricular activities on the school and installations Web pages.

> "It's an excellent idea that should have been acted upon many years ago."
> Brenda Dozier
> Muscogee County Schools

The formalization of a SETS plan is the culmination of four years of research on the social, emotional and academic challenges faced by "mobile" students, mandated in 1997 by former Army Chief of Staff General Dennis J. Reimer.

Initial findings showed high-school-age students suffer more than their younger siblings as a result of frequent moves, inconsistent records transfer, variations in school calendars and schedules, problems with clear and timely information exchange, coherent articulation of courses and credits, redundancy and the lack of formalized reciprocity between schools and school systems.

The Army partnered with the Military Child education Coalition to conduct research into ways to ease transition woes for high schoolers.

Delegates from each installation and it's neighboring school system were assigned to develop a plan of action, including suggested "best practices," for various components of the plan.

The results were assessed and compiled in the formal memorandum of agreement, signed in May by representatives from each participating school system, including: Muscogee County Public Schools, El Paso Independent School District by Fort Bliss, Texas, Cumberland County Public Schools by Fort Bragg, N.C., Killeen Independent School District by Fort Hood, Texas, Clover Park School District No. 400 by Fort Lewis, Wash., Lawton Public Schools by Fort Sill, Okla., and department of Defense school systems at Fort Campbell, Ky., Baumholder, Germany and the Korea School District.

Chaplains learn counseling skills

Course teaches chaplains to provide support

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Just when you think you know it all, you find out how much you have to learn. That was the message sent by Chaplain (Col.) James Buckner to Family Life Chaplains Aug. 2.

Buckner reflected on leaving for the Chaplain Officer Basic Course, assuming he knew all there was to know about counseling military families.

"I remember a man coming to me and saying, 'I am about to lose my marriage.' I felt a knot in my throat wondering how I would begin to help him," Buckner said.

That's why Buckner decided to attend the Family Life Chaplain Training Course. The course, which is unique to Fort Benning and Fort Hood, Texas, offers an advanced masters degree in counseling to chaplains.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) George Onstad is one of only four master trainers in the military and has been the program director at Fort Benning since 1997.

"This (course) is a unique opportunity that benefits soldiers, families, and chaplains Army-wide," Onstad said.

During 15 months of intensive training, chaplains are required to perform 300 hours of counseling.

Those hours are offered as an opportunity for those at Fort Benning to receive high-quality, confidential, and supervised counseling, Onstad said.

All services offered are free to the soldiers and families of Fort Benning.

Counseling through an outside provider can cost an individual $90 to $150 per hour.

Students in the course performed 3,581 individual counseling sessions during the past year — saving Fort Benning $187,200.

Onstad said without the help of students in the Family Life Chaplains Course, the majority of those helped would have had to go to unit chaplains or counselors who charge a fee for their services.

The focus of the counseling at the Family Life Course is just that — family life. New students in the course are trained in pre-marriage and marriage counseling, family counseling, and other relationship issues.

Chaplain (Maj.) David Baum, a new student in the Family Life Course, has great expectations of the course.

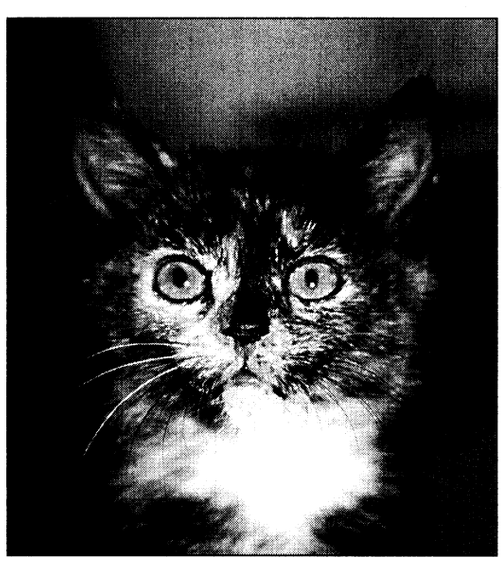
"I expect to receive high quality training for the purpose of better serving Army families," Baum said.

Upon completion of the course, the chaplains are stationed world-wide. They are then an expert on pastoral counseling and family wellness, so they serve as an advisor and instructor to chaplains at their installation.

Chaplain (Maj.) James Hartz, a recent graduate of the course, said that the course was an opportunity and a challenge.

"It required me to look inside myself and resolve issues that could keep me from better serving army families," Hartz said.

Chaplains who attend the course are selected through Department of the Army. They must be captains or majors, with six to 10 years of experience in assisting military families.



As a part of their pastoral training, they also already have a Masters of Divinity, which typically has a counseling component.

For more information, call the Family Life Training Course at 545-5301.

Pet Tips:

Dogs six months and older living on post must be on heartworm preventative medicine year-round. Heartworms, the cause of more than 50 dog deaths per year on post, are transmitted through infected mosquitoes.

See your veterinarian for heartworm testing and preventive treatment.

E-mail makes it easier to communicate

The Georgia Society of CPAs

There's no question about it; e-mail has replaced the interoffice memo as a primary means of business communication.

Used properly, e-mail is a powerful business tool that can facilitate communication within your company and improve interactions with outside vendors and customers. But e-mail can easily be misused or abused by uninformed users. The Georgia Society of CPAs provides the following overview of some of the common customs, courtesies and safeguards that can help employees make the most of this medium.

• Don't be a novelist.

Help the recipients of your e-mail by making e-mail messages brief and concise. If the reader needs to take some action as a result of your message, mention that fact up front. Be careful not to bury your call to action in the message.

• Label messages appropriately.

Subject headings that are unique, clear and purposeful help readers determine the e-mail's content and its urgency. Avoid subject headings like "my comments" which are too general to serve any purpose. And do not label messages as URGENT unless they truly are.

• Identify yourself.

It can sometimes be difficult to identify the originator of the message, particularly in the case of messages that have been forwarded several times.

E-mail messages should include an online version of your signature, that is, a sign-off at the bottom of your e-mail that includes your name, company name, phone number and fax number.

• Understand privacy and security standards.

Be sure you know your company's electronic privacy and security standards. It will give you some direction on the types of information that can and can't be communicated online and how that information is protected, i.e., through encryption and other means.

However, keep in mind that there is no such thing as private e-mail. Occasionally, things go wrong and if this happens, you may receive e-mail meant for another individual or your e-mail may go to the wrong person. For this reason, don't communicate confidential information in an e-mail.

• Use digital certificates.

One way to secure your e-mail is to obtain a digital certificate. A digital certificate is the representation of a digital ID. In plain terms, it is the electronic equivalent of a driver's license. Certificates reside in your internet browser and e-mail software, and are used to prove your identity, gain access to information and encrypt e-mail. A digital ID is issued by a Certification Authority and is signed with the CA's private key.

VeriSign Inc., a CA, is the leading provider of these services at www.verisign.com.

• Send attachments judiciously.

E-mail wasn't initially intended as a vehicle for sending megabytes of files, complex graphics and photos, which can tie up the company's network.

When you do send attachments that are large, be sure to tell the recipient.

Keep in mind, too, that not everyone has the latest version of Word, Excel and PowerPoint, so you may want to consider saving and sending documents in formats that most people can use.

It is important that you have the most up-to-date anti-virus software so you are alerted to any viruses in attached files that are sent to you.

Before forwarding any attachments, do a virus check. The last thing you want to do is inadvertently spread a virus through an attached file. Similarly, be careful not to open any suspicious messages or attachments, e.g., like the "I Love You" virus.

• Use the reply feature.

When you receive a message that requires a response, don't start a new e-mail message. This destroys the link or thread between the original message and your response and may require the reader to search for his or her original message to you. Also, keep in mind that it's not necessary that you reply to every e-mail message. Trivial responses like "thanks" just slow things down.

To make e-mail work for you, periodically clean out your "in" and "out" boxes and carefully file important e-mails and attachments.

The GSCPA is the premier professional organization for CPAs in the state of Georgia. With more than 10,000 members throughout the state, the purpose of the GSCPA is to promote the study of accountancy and applicable laws, provide continuing professional education, maintain high ethical and work standards and provide information about accounting issues to the membership and the public.

ask the judge

Capt. Angela L. Crisp
Legal Assistance Attorney

Q: I have an appointment with an attorney at the Legal Assistance Office. Is there anything I need to bring with me? What do I need to prepare for my appointment?

A: It all depends on what you are going to talk about with your attorney. Legal Assistance provides a broad range of services to military members, dependents and retirees.

Some of the most common issues clients bring to legal assistance concern problems they are having with automobiles.

If you need advice or help with any issues concerning the purchase of an automobile, you need to try to bring the bill of sale, title and registration, warranty documents and the name and address of the seller.

If you need help repairing your car, you need to write down and bring with you a chronology of events that have taken place. Attorneys need to know when, where and how many times the car broke down, how many times you tried to get the car repaired, who tried to repair the car, receipts showing how much you've spent, any documents concerning warranties of repairs and all estimates of repairs.

If you want to become a guardian of a minor child, you should pick up the guardianship worksheet at the Legal Assistance Office before the day of your appointment.

You need to try to find out if both parents of the child will consent to the guardianship. If possible, try to contact or locate both parents. If one or both parents are unavailable, let your attorney know why the parent(s) cannot be contacted. Then, the attorney will be aware that measures must be taken to ensure the legality of the guardianship.

The attorney will prepare the guardianship documents, but then you are responsible for filing the documents and paying all the court fees.

If you want to file for a name change and legitimation of your child, you should pick up the legitimation petition worksheet. You need to know the natural father's name and address, the name of the natural mother, the child's name, age, birthday and birthplace, the location of the mother and child, and how much monthly support is provided.

Once again, you are responsible for filing the necessary documents and paying the court fees.

If you are planning to separate from your spouse, you should consider having a separation agreement signed by both parties.

Before your appointment, you can obtain a separation worksheet by either attending the domestic briefing held every Monday at 9 a.m., excluding all holidays, or by just stopping by the Legal Assistance Office. Both parties must sign the separation worksheet before a separation agreement can be drafted.

Take your time filling out the worksheet and carefully discuss child support, spousal support, custody, visitation, debts and distribution of property with your spouse. These are issues that must be agreed upon before you sign the separation agreement.

Most importantly, a judge can take the separation agreement into consideration if you eventually decide to divorce.

If you want to get a will, you should complete a will worksheet before your appointment.

Carefully consider who should be your personal representative. This person will carry out your desires expressed in your will in order to settle your estate. You may have family heirlooms that you want to give to specific people, or you may have real estate that you want to pass to a particular person. You need to consider who you want to receive your property.

Often, people choose to set up a trust account for their children until they reach their early to mid-twenties. Just remember that this is a legal document that distributes your possessions and provides for your friends and loved ones.

Finally, bring all documents and information you think might be helpful. If you received any correspondence or court documents such as a summons or a court order, bring it with you. When you make your appointment, ask if you need to bring anything with you.

For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division or make an appointment to meet with a legal assistance attorney at 545-3281. Please call at 8 a.m. Friday to make an appointment for the following week.

Better Business Bureau

When you load up the car and hit the road for a vacation or for a long business trip, you don't want to make any unexpected detours to a repair shop. To help you stay safely on course, here are some tips from the Better Business Bureau.

• A pre-trip, preventative maintenance check by a reliable mechanic is your best assurance against unexpected breakdowns on the road.

This check should include the oil level, and the fluid levels of the brakes, power steering, cooling systems, battery, transmission and windshield wipers.

Check the car's tail and headlights and flashers. Also, have tire pressure adjusted and tires inspected, including the frequently neglected spare.

Despite your best preventative measures, however, your car may still break down while you are on the road.

If that happens, get the car off the road and out of the flow of traffic as quickly as possible, especially if your breakdown occurs at night.

Make a quick check of obvious, but often overlooked, causes of engine failure. Is the car out of gas or oil? Are there loose connections? Are there wet engine parts?

If you must have repairs done away from home, ask the mechanic for a written estimate itemizing the parts and labor before any work is started.

Specify that no repairs, other than what you originally authorize, should be done without your approval. Whenever possible, stay with your car while it is being serviced and don't be afraid to ask the mechanic questions. Insist on being given a repair order that lists all parts by description, number and cost, as well as the labor cost for each repair.

To best protect yourself, pay by credit card and be sure the credit slip contains the name and address of the business and makes reference to the itemized list or repair order you receive. Keep the receipts in a safe place in case problems develop later.

If you car breaks down while it is under warranty, you should have the repair work done, when possible, by an authorized dealer. However, some warranties do allow nondealer or do-it-yourself repair maintenance work.

Since it may not be possible to have your car serviced by an authorized dealer, you may wish to contact your manufacturer's representative before repairs are made. By contacting a representative, you will know exactly what to do to be reimbursed at a later date.

New commissary hours — The Fort Benning Commissary is now open for early bird shopping from 7 to 9 a.m. There's a purchase limit of 15 items or less.

For more information, call the commissary at 544-3965.

Preschool registration — Patch Preschool is now accepting registrations for the 2001-2002 school year.

Hours of registration are 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. Monday through Friday. Your child must be registered with the Central Registration Office.

For more information, call 687-2404.

Vaccination proof required — Fort Benning Schools follow the Georgia Department of Human Resources guidelines for immunizations and work cooperatively with Martin Army Hospital.

All students entering the sixth grade next year are required to have the varicella vaccine (chicken pox) or proof of immunity.

Proof consists of a physician's or health care provider's diagnosis of the disease or a statement of immunity.

Please check with your physician, clinic, or health care provider to be sure you have the appropriate documentation for school registration.

Mayors wanted — The East Main Post mayor's position and the vice mayor and the Indianhead Terrace vice mayor position are currently open.

Call Rosetta Darby at 687-7947 for more information on how to apply for these positions.

Grants available — The Hope Grant Program will pay all tuition and fees, and up to $100 per quarter for textbooks for all active duty, and their family members 16 years or older (with rare exceptions) stationed at Fort Benning and living in Georgia.

Fill out the required forms and register at Columbus Technical College.

Many classes are offered at Fort Benning and the main campus day and evening.

Programs offered include Management, Computers, Office Technology, Medical, Dental, Paramedic, Automotive, Carpentry, Welding and many others.

For more information, call 685-8549, or come by Building 2614 in Soldier's Plaza.

Volunteers wanted — The Family Advocacy New Parent Support Plus and First Steps Office at Martin Army Community Hospital is seeking follow-up phone callers.

Mothers of all descriptions are needed. Those who have had premature babies or multiple births, who were teen-age moms, single moms, and SIDS moms can be especially helpful.

The basic requirements are to be caring and willing to contact new mothers to give them helpful information, emotional support, and referrals to services they need.

For more information, call New Parent Support Plus and First Steps at 544-2020.

Brown Bag Lunch — CATD presents Retired Col. Robert Nett, Medal of Honor Recipient, who will discuss Pacific Operations during World War II, with a focus on Guam, the Philippines and Okinawa. Actual combat footage will be shown.

The presentation is scheduled for Aug. 29 at 11:30 a.m. in Infantry Hall, Classroom 10.

A history presentation is scheduled the last Wednesday of every month. Attendees are welcomed to bring their lunch.

Electronic check conversion becoming popular

Better Business Bureau

The next time you pay for merchandise by check, the cashier just may return your check to you. No need to be alarmed! According to the Federal Trade Commission, more and more merchants are using an electronic check conversion — a service that converts a paper check into an electronic payment at the payment of sale.

It works like this. When you give your check to a store cashier, the check is processed through an electronic system that captures your banking information and the amount of the check.

Once the check is processed, you sign a receipt authorizing the merchant to present the check to your bank electronically and deposit funds into the merchant's account.

You should get a receipt of the electronic transaction for your records. When your check has been processed and returned to you by the merchant, it should be voided or marked by the merchant so that it cannot be used again.

It is important to keep your processed checks, especially if you need proof of payment. Since these checks are never processed by a bank in the traditional sense, your bank may be unable to give you a duplicate copy.

Also, be aware that with an electronic check conversion, there may be no float on your check. That means if you write a check today, you need to have money in your bank account today to cover it. If you do not have sufficient funds, you check may bounce and you may be charged a bounced check fee by the merchant, your bank, or both.

How can you avoid this happening to you? The Better Business Bureau, along with the Federal Trade Commission, suggest:

• Keep track of deposits. Record all deposits to your checking account in your checkbook immediately. When you make deposits, save the receipts. They can help to get mistakes corrected. Remember to record all automatic or Electronic Fund Transfer deposits, such as your paycheck, in your checkbook.

• Keep track of withdrawals. Immediately record and subtract your transactions, including checks you write; ATM withdrawals; all automatic payments, including electronic check conversion, debit card payments at the point of sale, and other direct payments; and fees of service charges.

• Balance your account every time you get a statement from your bank. Reconcile the information you have recorded in your checkbook against your bank statement. Checks processed electronically may be recorded in a different place on your statement than your regular checks, such as "other withdrawals".

Review your statement to be sure checks were only processed electronically once.

If your account will not balance, and you cannot find the error, call your bank promptly for help.

'Houses' need to have strong foundations

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Scott New
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

In Matthew 7:24 the author writes about building your house upon a rock rather than sand. It is a curious illustration. Why would anyone build his or her house on the sand?

My wife and I bought a condo at Myrtle Beach a few years ago. It is a cement building built on a rock base. Our place is on the eighth floor.

I have seen several storms with a lot of power in the wind and the waves, but our condo weathered them all.

I have also observed many sand sculptures. The detail and size of some have been tremendous, but as the tide comes in, the grandest sculpture cannot stand up to the smallest and persistent series of waves.

Over the years I have seen a number of soldiers and their families build their "houses" on sand. Many marriages have been based on, "What's in it for me?" rather than, "What can I contribute?"

I have seen many officers and NCOs work long and hard to get promoted with the goal of obtaining a leadership position.

Once that goal is obtained sometimes the leader does not know how to network, or how to be a servant-leader.

When he or she only focuses on driving soldiers so the missions will be completed and having the unit look good, the hopes of a "solid house" often crumbles and the leader becomes frustrated.

How important it is to build your "house" or life on solid rock. We are all in the relationship business. We work and live with people and we need to treat each other with respect and dignity and honor one another.

That respect, dignity and honor starts with listening to those we are around. Listening to their thoughts, emotions, ambitions and fears are most important.

How essential it is to acknowledge and affirm the accomplishments of those we are closest to and encourage them to do what is right. Each of us can model what is right in our actions and conversations.

Starting in Matthew Chapter 5, the Sermon on the Mount talks about how God intended people to treat each other. It sounds so simple yet it can be a significant daily challenge.

Are you building your "house" or life on the rock of God or on the sand of something else.

I hope your house has been able to withstand the storms of everyday challenges.

May God richly bless you today as you face the sea of life.

Feast of Assumption — The Feast of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin Mary, a Holy Day of Obligation in the Catholic Church, takes place Wednesday.

Masses will be celebrated at noon in English and at 7 p.m. in Spanish. There will be no Vigil Mass Aug. 14.

Sunday school meets — The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at Edward A. White School on First Division Road from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m.

There are classes for students from 3 years of age through adults. Everyone is invited.

Childcare for children of parents who are teaching or attending Sunday school classes is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel.

If you need a ride, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Bilingual Mass — The Fort Benning Catholic community will hold an outdoor, bilingual Mass at Gowdy Field at 10:31 a.m. Sept. 9, followed by a parish picnic.

Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keefe and members of the congregation who have recently arrived on post will be welcomed.

Volunteers are needed to assist with this function. To volunteer or for more information, call 545-1452.

Rites of Christian Initiation — The Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults for Catholics will begin meeting in early September.

Anyone desiring to learn more about the Catholic faith, or to participate in the RCIA as a sponsor or team member can call 545-5508.

Applications being accepted —The Fund Manager of the Consolidated Chaplains' Fund is now accepting applications from interested personnel for fiscal year 2002.

All interested and qualified personnel should call Sgt. Michael J. Hall, Room 512, Infantry Hall, at 545-4960.

Rest, relaxation necessary for spirit

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Working smarter – not harder, and working better – not longer, are two maxims by which we should live.

Those who refuse to listen, those who work hard and long, are setting themselves up for burnout, decreased productivity or both.

Some workaholics love to work and are energized by the work they do. They don't like it when their employees want to go home to be with their families.

They take pride in the fact that they've never taken a day off due to illness. They boast that they have had to lose leave because they didn't take time off from work for a vacation.

They see normal people as seeking their own interests and lacking dedication. Organizations tend to reward workaholics with raises and promotions.

When married to independent or introverted mates, workaholics appear to have stable marriages.

Some spouses feel so alone and emotionally distant from their workaholic spouse that they terminate their marriage after raising their children.

The old saying, "All work and no play, makes Jack a dull boy," is still true. Interests and activities outside of work make us more interesting, insightful and creative. With proper rest, the average person comes to work refreshed and revitalized, ready and eager to begin the day.

Rest is needed to allow muscles to regenerate. Rest is needed to allow our brains to function properly.

The amount of rest necessary varies from person to person, but seven to eight hours tend to be the norm, with four hours of uninterrupted sleep being essential.

God recognized our need for rest when the seventh day, the Sabbath, was set aside for that very purpose (Exodus 20:8). Rest refreshes our spirit.

Are you a workaholic? Do you need to slow down and relax? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, located at Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Matthew 6:24 — No one can serve two masters. Either he will hate the one and love the other, or he will be devoted to the one and despise the other. You cannot serve both God and money.

the final installment

Soldier certified as scuba diver

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the fourth story of a four-part series, which takes an in-depth look at a scuba certification course.

I can proudly say I got "certified" this weekend and had a great time doing it.

The scuba certification course I was taking culminated with four open water dives at Morrison Springs, Fla.

The first two dives were pool dives to practice skills we learned in the classroom portion of the course.

The first dive was a swim around the pool to get used to breathing underwater and to get comfortable with our gear.

The second dive was to practice skills we would need in case of an emergency, such as losing our mask or regulator.

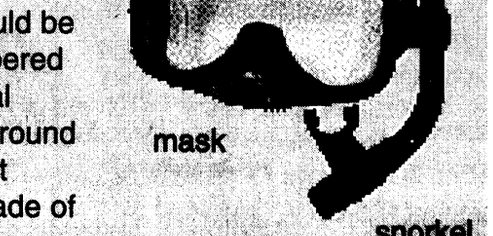
The third dive was to practice skills to do and then were free to swim around with our buddy and explore the spring.

My buddy and I followed around a little school of bluegills and took a closer look at a cavern in the middle of the spring.

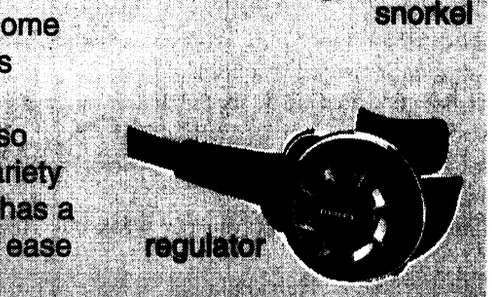
The cavern was by far the deepest point in the spring, at about 40 feet.

We didn't actually go in the cave, that requires more specialty training, but we did take a close look at the mouth of the cave.

We did four dives total and the first thing we did after each dive was to log the length of time and the depth that we dove. After proper documentation, we set up our equipment for the next dive.



level with an angelfish.



However, I've found that in scuba, hovering is a skill that takes a lot of time to master. With every breath in or out, personal buoyancy changes. Careful breath control helps. But even more important is being properly weighted to begin with.

Scuba diving is just one way to enjoy more of an outdoor.

Snorkeling brings me up close and personal with the upper 10 feet of the water. The abundance of [illegible] mask

snorkel

Scuba gear:

mask — should be made of tempered glass and seal comfortably around the face, most masks are made of silicone and come in many colors snorkel — also comes in a variety of colors and has a large bore for ease of breathing regulator

regulator — makes it possible to use the air that is stored at extremely high pressure inside the air tanks. The second stage, shown here, should allow air to flow easily and without much effort buoyancy control device

buoyancy control device — should fit well, have a large hose to deflate easily, have a quick release to prevent dumping air tank

air tank — a cylindrical metal container used to safely store high-pressure air, because the tanks are generally made of aluminum or steel booties

booties — help keep heat in the body as the feet

sports briefs

Army Ten-Miler — Fort Benning Ten-Miler team qualifications takes place Saturday and Aug. 25. Try-outs will be held at Santiago Fitness Center on Sand Hill.

Registration time is from 6 to 6:45 a.m. and the competition will begin at 7 a.m.

Selectees will compete in the Army Ten-Miler held in Washington, D.C. Oct. 14.

For more information, call Carol Gearheart at 544-9595 or 544-9486.

U.S. Army Military Academy Football — Fort McPherson Leisure Activities Center announces availability of reduced price tickets for the United States Military Academy vs. University of Alabama at Birmingham. The game will be played at 4 p.m. at Legion Field in Birmingham, Ala. Sept. 22.

Cost is $11 per person for seats located on the east side of the stadium behind the Army bench. The gate price is $18.

Deadline to order tickets is Sept. 14.

To reserve tickets by phone call (404) 464-4392. Visa, Mastercard, American Express or the MWR card are accepted.

Columbus Adult Soccer Association — Fall soccer season registration runs until Wednesday.

Registration cost is $50 for the fall season.

Divisions for summer play will be women's over 18, men's over 30 and men's under 30.

Two games will be played per week on Thursdays and Sundays at the Woodruff Farm Road Soccer Complex.

All games are officiated by state certified referees.

For more information, call James Murphy, 660-1334, or David Henke, 576-5008.

Pistol matches — There will be a Night Pistol Series shoot Saturday at the Rifle and Pistol Club on English Range.

This series of monthly matches is designed for both new and experienced shooters using stock handguns.

Entry fee for a new shooter (first match here) is $12.

Subsequent matches are $15 preregistered or $20 day of the match.

For more information, e-mail brpc@mindspring.com or visit English Range.

Youth Services gymnastics — The Fort Benning Youth Services gymnastics program has been delayed until further notice.

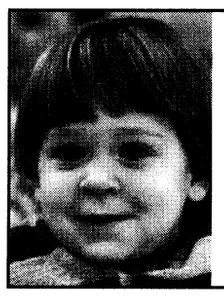
For more information, call 545-3070.

Hunter Safety Course — Anyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, who wishes to hunt in Georgia or on Fort Benning, must attend a Hunter Safety Education Course.

In order to enroll in a Georgia Hunter Safety Course, a person must pre-register by calling the Department of Natural Resources, Central Reservations System at 1-800-864-7275 or access the Web site at www.georgiawildlife.com or www.gohuntgeorgia.com. There is a $4 processing fee to register through the CRS, but registration through the web is free.

Registration will be cut off three days prior to class date or when the class is full. Class will be cancelled if there are less than 10 students pre-registered.

Once you've gained access to the CRS or the Web site check the hunter education class dates under Fort Benning for either hunter education classes or the review and test class.



Completing either course will meet the state requirements.

The hunter education class is an 8-hour course held in Infantry Hall on two different nights. Students must attend both nights and must fill our a home study guide. Home study guides can be obtained at Outdoor Recreation, Building 1707 and must be filled out prior to class.

In order to attend the review and test class, you need to pick up a CD from Outdoor Recreation and complete the requirements by answering the questions in each chapter.

CD's are available on or after Aug. 8. Students must then register for the test and review class, which is two hours. Students must do a printout of the answers to each chapter and bring them to class. Students without the printout will not be allowed to take the test.

For more information, call 545-7879.

The possibilities are endless.

Army approves new munition

New ammunition makes Bradleys more lethal

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

The mechanized threat of today has become a stronger, harder target to kill for the Bradley infantryman. But now that kill capability is packed into one 25 mm round, the M-919 an armor-piercing, fin-stabilized, discarding sabot, with tracer.

The U.S. Army Infantry Center recently gave its support to the Full Material Release of the M-919 cartridges.

"The M-919 Full Material Release now assures that the Bradley infantry soldier, in time of war or conflict, will be able to bring the world's best 25 mm armor-piercing ammunition on target, at extended range to defeat the threat," said Alan Farr, lead project officer and Combat Development Specialist of the Mounted System Division, Directorate of Combat Developments.

The development and fielding of the APFSDS-T is touted to have the capability to provide the mechanized infantry force the capability to face and defeat the threat on today's battlefield.

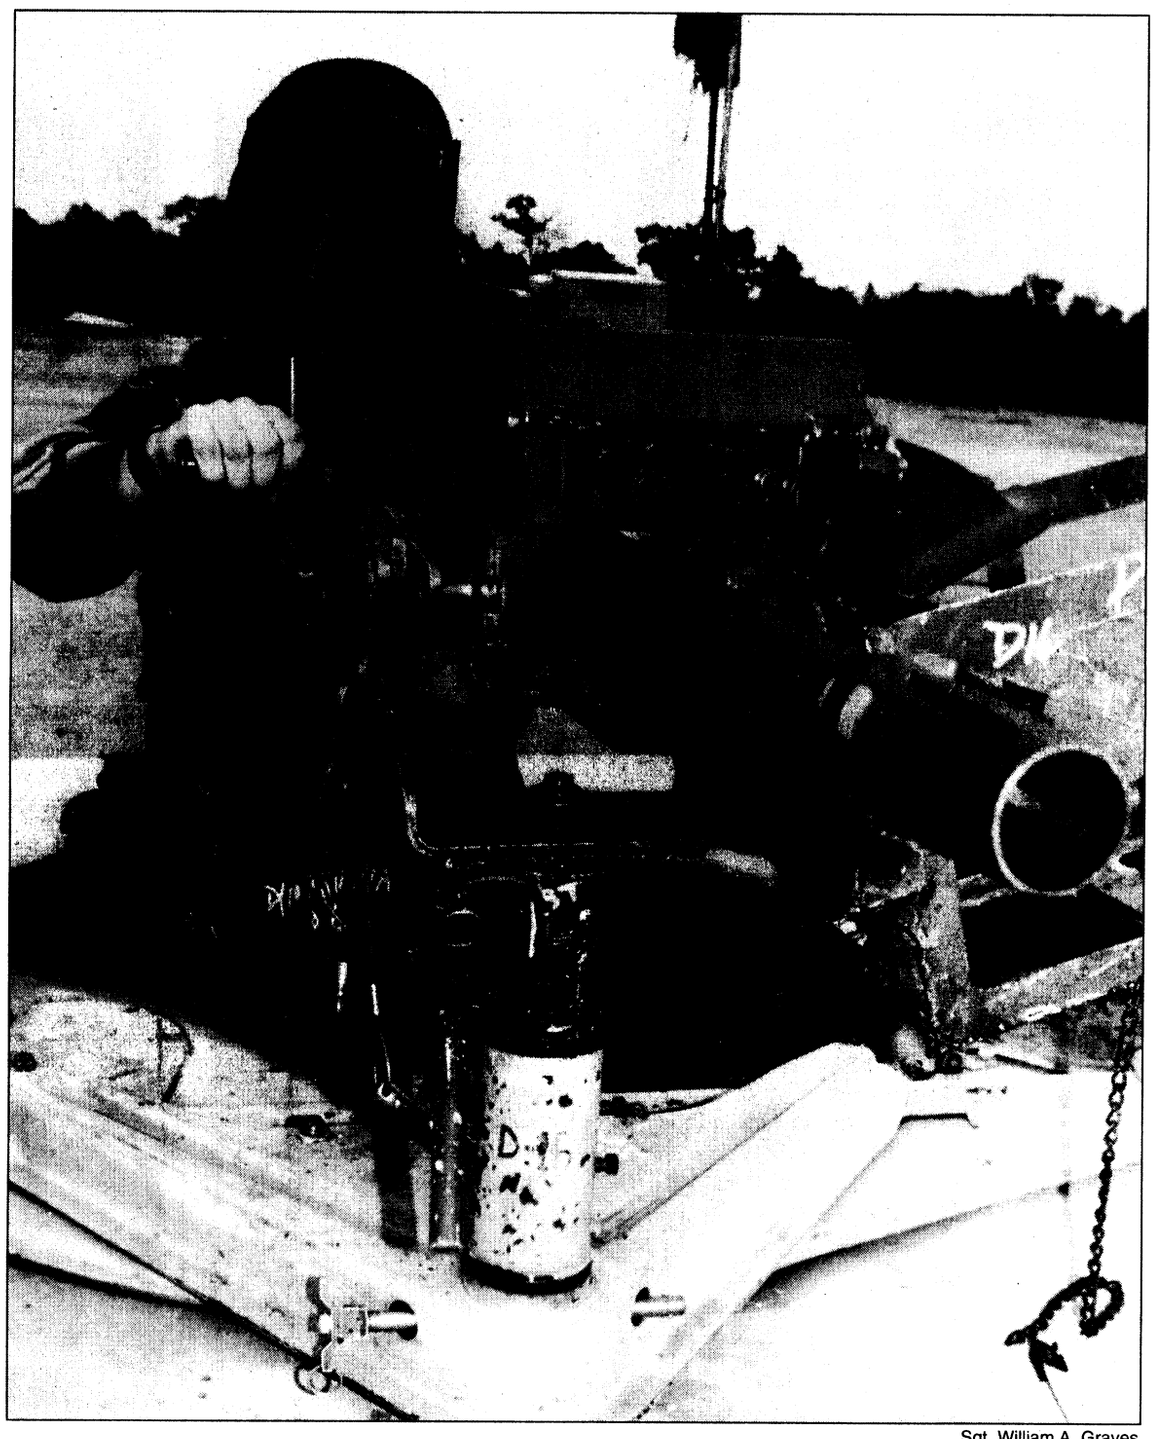
"This is a go-to-war and conflict ammunition only," Farr said.

With the movement toward a lighter, faster military force why would the government spend a quarter of a billion tax dollars in development, production and technical evaluation of a heavy armor piercing round?

The round advances the lethality of the BFV, which greatly increases the survivability of the infantry.

The collapse of the former Soviet Union has made BMPs, the opposition to the BFV, available on the world market.

This availability of BMPs caused concerns to our leaders to provide the Bradley soldier the needed capability to destroy the threat in areas where U.S. forces may be called upon to help stabilize, Farr said.



During testing, the new round doubled the threat defeat distance of the BFV and was capable of completely disabling a BMP.

The round is successor to the Bushmaster gun system's 25 mm M-791 armor-piercing discarding sabot with tracer round and has a flatter trajectory and a higher velocity.

The tracer has been designed to travel out to 2,500 meters, Farr said.

Post wins energy award

DFEL earns Secretary of the Army award

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning recently added yet another accolade to its history of being an award-winning installation.

The post took first place for Overall Energy Program Management in the 23rd annual Secretary of the Army Energy and Water Management Awards during a ceremony Aug. 1.

Fort Benning's commitment to energy conservation is what's led to this year's repeat achievement, said Mark Fincher, the chief of the Energy and Utilities Division of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"The success we've had in winning two years in a row is from sticking to our comprehensive plan to achieve energy savings," he said. "We are doing a multitude of things to keep us below the ever-declining energy goals set by the President in executive orders and monitored by the Department of the Army and the Training and Doctrine Command."

Staying under those established goals has been possible due to a variety of projects at DFEL. It also helped put Fort Benning in first place for the award.

"The decentralization of our central energy plants and putting boilers in individual buildings were the projects that decreased our energy usage enough that we had good visibility," Fincher said. "These impressive numbers where we were below the goals for a large installation got the evaluation team to decide to place us as a finalist and actually come to the installation to look.

"Then when you couple the smaller items we did like installing some solar lighting, negotiating lower utility rates with our energy suppliers, utilizing only high efficiency washers and dryers in our contracts, including energy in our Command Inspection Program, and hosting a DA sponsored Energy Awareness Seminar, we demonstrated a comprehensive program."

He said the evaluators were also impressed by the command group's level of knowledge of the energy items occurring on post.

Registering to vote means declaring residency in state

Soldiers should choose wisely when signing up

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Soldiers who are nonresidents of Georgia or Alabama should consider their options when registering to vote at licensing facilities.

"By registering to vote at a licensing facility, you are declaring that you meet the qualifications to vote," said Michael Lane, legal assistance attorney, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. "It follows that you then will owe ad valorem tax on your car, income taxes to Georgia, and so forth."

He said the Motor Voter Bill has made it easier for soldiers to vote.

"Absentee ballots are the only legal way to vote in your home state. Contact your voting officer for the specific address in your state."

According to the provisions of the Soldiers and Sailors Civil Relief Act, as amended, a soldier does not automatically become a resident of the state in which he is stationed for military service, nor does any member of his family.

"The law keeps each state from taxing military personnel who came from other states on their military income," Lane said.

The law does not protect a Georgia resident who is in the Army from paying taxes to Georgia. Such taxes include income taxes, property taxes, sales taxes, and ad valorem taxes.

"Under the law, a soldier who is not a Georgia resident pays no income tax on military pay earned while assigned in the state. The soldier also avoids ad valorem taxes (a type of property tax levied on an automobile driven in the state), if he or she can establish to the satisfaction of the state that he resides in another state."

Fort Benning had some interesting experiences with the interpretation of ad valorem taxes that unfortunately worked to the disadvantage of its soldiers and families, said Chuck Walls, deputy garrison commander.

"Thanks to the help of the Georgia Military Affairs Coordinating Committee, they were able to influence legislation that basically did right by our military," Walls said.

The Legal Assistance Office, Building 5, is responsible for issuing exemption forms for Alabama, and

Distance doesn't sever ties to home

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

commentary

I received an e-mail from my cousin this week with pictures of her 4–day–old baby attached.

Talk about shock. I didn't even remember hearing that she was pregnant.

To make me feel even worse, I was the maid of honor at her wedding. I stood right next to her while she said her vows, I hadn't even heard that she and her husband were expecting their second child.

Boy, am I out of the loop.

I chat with my mom about once or twice a week and she usually fills me in on all the family dirt, but it's still pretty hard for me to stay current, especially since I just got out of a training environment. All the stuff that's just common knowledge to everyone back home is late-breaking news to me.

Like my grandma's health and her varying surgeries and doctors' visits or my aunt's shoplifting charge — all the good family stuff that needs to be kept up on.

When my younger sister's boyfriend proposed, I got a call within the hour, but normally I'm the one calling my family. So the news is whatever's available from whoever's available at the time — which is good and bad.

Summer's a big time for my parents' house to turn into a giant revolving door of friends, family and other loved ones. Every time I called home to chat, someone different was sleeping on the pull-out couch.

It was great though, four former exchange students visited this summer alone, so I got a chance to talk to Masako, Inka, Babsi and Sofie without having to pay international charges.

I heard about my Dad getting Inka's fiance up on water skis for the first time. (It's a little chilly in Finland for that sort of thing.) Masako, Babsi and Sofie all filled me in on school and what their families back home are up to.

But it's still not the same as being there, laughing at TV commercials or cheering for the Red Wings together.

I may be a little behind in the family news department, but I'm still stuck in 1995 when it comes to news of Pinckney High School.

I actually ran into a former classmate when I was car shopping in Atlanta.

Talk about a small world. He and his younger brother work for a Nissan dealership out of Atlanta. We were never great friends, but it was still nice to see a familiar face.

The only person I still keep in touch with from high school is my best friend, Elizabeth. I talk to her about once a week. She keeps me posted on her job at the hospital, the house she's building and wedding plans for her and her fiance, Rob.

But I can't go over to her house and bake fat-free cookies or take aerobics classes through community education with her. We don't go out on Friday nights to visit her sister at the club where she works. It's just not quite the same.

It makes it hard when birthdays and Christmas roll around.

I can't see the color scheme she's got going on in her kitchen or know that she accidentally dropped her R.E.M. CD out of her truck and now needs a new one. All the little stuff you pick up on just by being around.

I don't read my hometown paper online or keep up with how my high school football team is doing, but I still feel like I'm a part of the little town where I grew up.

I'm curious to know what's going on with people in the community and what kind of changes the town itself is going through.

I know I've got a whole other life and a whole other family with the Army, but I hope I never lose track of the one that got me started and keeps me going.

Determination pays off for Repeat Pete

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Pete and Repeat went to Ranger School. Pete fell out. Who was left?

Repeat.

Pete and Repeat went to Ranger School. Pete fell out. Who was left?

Repeat.

Pete and Repeat went to Ranger School ...

It's the joke that never ends.

Until now.

Pete did indeed graduate from Ranger School. He's a card carrying member of Ranger Class 08-01.

For those of you feeling like an outsider to an inside joke, let me bring you up to date.

Last year at this time, I told the tale of Pete, a young soldier I met on the eve of his departure to Korea.

"So now that I'm leaving, are you going to do a story on me, Bridgett?" he asked.

"What's there to write about, Pete?" I replied. "Tell me about yourself."

Now any good journalist with an ounce of ink in his blood knows there's a potential "story" in everyone. If you ask the right questions and listen long enough, you're bound to discover what it is that makes an individual unique — that elusive 15 minutes of fame factor.

But try as I might, I couldn't find anything newsworthy about Pete, nothing to separate him from every other soldier. Nothing, not a thing, zilch.

Time and time again throughout the evening he asked the same question, growing more and more serious each time. And each time I tried, I really tried, to find "the story" in Pete.

I asked about his family. I asked about his childhood. I even asked if he'd ever experienced any really good traumas in his relatively short life — all to no avail. Pete's just your average Pete.

Well, I rationalized, it had to happen sometime. Feeling like a bit of a failure, I admitted defeat, shook his hand, and bid him adieu, good luck, Godspeed and all the best wishes on his journey.

"Oh, I'll probably see you in a few months when I come back to Ranger School again," Pete said, nonchalantly.

"Again?" I asked.

"Yeah," he smirked. "I've been five times actually, but I know I'll make it next time."

FIVE TIMES he said! Five times and he's coming back for more. Talk about stubborn. Talk about determined. This guy put the "Pete" in "repeat."

"There's your claim to fame buddy. That's got to be some sort of record," I laughed. "They should build a revolving door in your honor."

Pete looked extremely pleased with himself, and I was relieved that I'd discovered something special about him. On the way home I asked my husband, a ranger instructor, if Pete had what it takes to make it through Ranger School.

"Yeah, he's got what it takes," Tom said. "He's motivated. He wants it bad enough.

"He's just had a little bad luck in the past."

A little bad luck. I'll say. Poor Pete broke his foot, tore a tendon and injured his neck in his previous quests for the tab. Why, even his final, successful attempt at Ranger School was fraught with misfortune. He was waylaid in the final week by an allergic reaction to medication. He was laid up in a Florida hospital when his fellow graduates posed for a class photo. You'll not see Pete among the 143 new graduates pictured on the Ranger web site. But take my word for it, he made it.

Staff Sgt. Pete Armstrong is an official member of that steely-eyed, barrel-chested, freedom-fighters' club. Tabbed and tanned.

And I for one am real proud of him. No joke.

President honors paratroopers

Sixty-one years ago, 48 brave volunteer members of the U.S. Army Parachute Test Platoon pioneered a new method of warfare.

Their successful jump led to the creation of a mighty force of more than 100,000 paratroopers. Members of this force were assigned to the legendary 11th, 13th, 17th, 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions and numerous other units that fought in every theater during World War II.

The soldiers of the Parachute Test Platoon also forged a unique warrior spirit, a relentless passion for victory, and a reputation that still strikes fear in potential adversaries. Beginning with the first combat jump by the men of the 2nd Battalion, 503rd Parachute Infantry Regiment, over North Africa in November 1942, airborne and special operations soldiers have made a total of 93 combat jumps.

Since World War II, paratroopers have continually distinguished themselves in battle, earning 69 Medals of Honor and hundreds of other awards for valor.

Today, as we celebrate the anniversary of the first official Army parachute jump, I join all Americans in recognizing these heroes. We salute our nation's sky troopers, both past and present, for their great service and personal sacrifice in the defense of freedom and liberty around the world.

Best wishes to all for a memorable observance.

Sponsors introduce students to American lifestyle

Volunteer ambassadors needed

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

Forty years is a long time for anyone to hold the same job — even longer for those who aren't paid for their work. But the compensation for volunteers is the satisfaction of providing a home away from home to foreign visitors.

More than 500 students, representing nearly 90 countries, train through the International Student Training Detachment annually. And for most, that translates into the opportunity to learn more about the United States outside of the post's perimeter, while attending courses at Fort Benning.

Currently, 50 volunteers are enrolled as sponsors for the detachment. These volunteers aid in the cultural development of the international students.

Capt. Hector Fernandez, ISTD commander, said sponsors volunteer for various reasons.

"Some do it for contact with different people, some may get the chance to visit the person's country in a cultural exchange and some want to be a representative of the United States," he said.

Sponsors have the option of requesting students from certain countries or becoming available as a local guide.

Due to the different durations of courses offered at Fort Benning, some sponsors may assist students for several weeks.

Columbus residents, retired Lt. Col. John Vollentine and wife, Shirley, have been assisting students for more than 40 years.

It's a job that is beneficial to them and the scholars they meet, they said.

"They come from other countries and for them to not see anything outside Fort Benning's gates would be a shame," the retired lieutenant colonel said. "There's so much to see."

One keepsake the Vollentines have been updating through the years is their guest book, which lists each student who has passed through their home.

Spanning five decades, the couple has helped men from countries like Chile, Thailand, Taiwan, France, Spain and the Philippines.

Besides hosting meals, the couple takes their guests to places like Lake Harding, President Jimmy Carter's home and Columbus-based attractions.

But more than that, the couple said they often fulfill simple requests to see Americans performing their daily activities.

"They're just amazed at our modern conveniences," his wife said. "Once a student from Nepal asked me to take him to a dairy farm and a bakery. He wanted to see how he could apply the lessons in his own country."

Fernandez said activities often range from a simple homemade dinner to a road trip in the southeast with the entire family.

"We have one sponsor who takes 20 students at a time to her house for food. It is great what some of these sponsors will do for students," he said.

But large-scale activities aren't necessary. It's the simple act of hospitality that is appreciated, Fernandez said.

"ISTD conducts weekend trips whenever possible. But without the sponsors some students would be sitting in Olson Hall," he said. "This is the first time many of these students have left their country. While they're here, I don't want to say the only thing they saw was a hotel and the classroom."

There are no specific requirements for becoming a sponsor, no minimal time frame and sponsors may be civilian or military.

For more information on volunteering to be a sponsor, call Fernandez at 545-4136 or e-mail him at fernandezh@benning.army.mil.

Soldiers put in spotlight through Army Theatre Touring Company

Actors can share talent through BRAVO program

David Barrette
U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center Public Affairs

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — There's no business like show business, even if your main business is being a soldier.

The Army Morale, Welfare and Recreation Entertainment Division is recruiting soldiers for the cast and crew of BRAVO!, The Army Theatre Touring Company. The all-soldier theater troupe brings live theater to soldiers, their families and military communities all over the world.

All active-duty and reserve component soldiers are eligible to apply for three male acting parts and two technical jobs.

Applicants must have their commanders' approval for a 179-day temporary duty assignment.

Application deadline is Aug. 31

The theater production scheduled to tour between November 2001 and March 2002 is "The Complete Works of William Shakespeare (Abridged)," an English professor's nightmare, in which three male actors play various Shakespearean roles of both sexes in a madcap, improvisational filled, energetic comedy. The actors race through all 37 of the Bard's plays in just 90 minutes.

"The actors highlight the plays in a very loose interpretation of course, wherein lies the comedy," said Tim Higdon, Army Entertainment Division producer.

"Imagine Othello in a rap scene or Romeo and Juliet performed at high speed and then in reverse," he said.

Supporting the actors is a stage manager, who will be responsible for production decisions on the road and for props and costumes during the performance.

The second crew member will serve as the lighting and audio engineer.

The inaugural BRAVO! tour, launched in December 2000, was "Play Ball," an original theatrical montage of songs, skits, monologues and dance paying tribute to America's national pastime, baseball.

The seven-member cast toured from December 2000 through March, entertaining more than 5,000 troops in eight countries, from the Balkans to Belgium, with a final performance in Washington, D.C.'s Studio Theater.

Higdon said he is looking for soldiers who understand the rigors of putting together, sustaining and touring a production of this type.

Soldiers need to submit an audition tape in addition to other paperwork.

Applications for all positions must include a technical or entertainment resumé, VHS audition tape or technical portfolio, references, official-length Class A uniform photo, a copy of the most recent efficiency report, and the commander's letter of release.

Selectees will travel to Fort Belvoir, Va., where they will rehearse Oct. 9-25 and open the show Oct. 26.

Those selected will tour the lower 48 states, Alaska, the Pacific and the Far East.

Mail audition packages and requests to host BRAVO! to Army Entertainment Division, Attention: Tim Higdon, P.O. Box 439, Fort Belvoir, VA. 22060.

Recreation Center offers place to recover, relax

Activities take minds off home during training

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

More than 28,000 trainees are scheduled to arrive and depart from Sand Hill every year.

Most of those 28,000 will want something to take their minds off of the daily grind and homesickness.

From pool tables to pinball machines, movies to DVDs, board games to electrical guitars and drums, the recreation center offers trainees entertainment they otherwise would not have been able to receive.

Renthia Robbins, a recreation assistant at the Luther H. Story Recreation Center on Sand Hill, said she wants the center to be a place trainees want to visit, which is why she tries to give everybody something they can take home with them.

Providing trainees the opportunity to feel a little more at home, as well as comforting those who feel they just can't take it anymore, is what Robbins prides herself on everyday.

"I've got to make them feel like I would want to if I were in their shoes," she said. "Making their day is making my day."

Robbins offers every trainee who enters her facility's doors the opportunity to kick back, relax and enjoy the time away from training.

"It's definitely beneficial (to have the recreation center)," Spc. Kevin Rinehart, trainee, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, said. "There's such a variety of interests here and there's something there for everyone."

Some of the services provided inside the center have been funded by Army Communities of Excellence award dollars.

All services go to a good cause, Robbins said.

"It's a nice job," Anne Welly, a cashier at the center, said. "(The center) is good for the soldier, and it's nice because their family comes here, too."

Welly said she views the center as a place, "you want to go to get away for a while to play pool and relax."

"I was impressed by the facilities," Pvt. Pietro Monticelli, trainee, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., said. "I didn't expect they'd have that much entertainment for soldiers.

"I was impressed by the tech rooms where they had all of the computers and the pool tables."

The recreation center is open to all soldiers, Department of Defense civilians and family members.

Hours are Wednesday through Sunday 10 a.m. to 7 p.m., and is closed Monday and Tuesdays.

For more information, call 544-9161 or 544-9324.

Money keeps improvements on track

ACOE funds used to improve quality of life

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Some improvements on post have been made possible in the last few months thanks to the $200,000 won from the 2000 Army Communities of Excellence program.

Of the 13 approved projects, four have been completed, according to installation budget office officials.

Pioneer Field's basketball court has been repaired, additional soccer equipment has been purchased for Dahlonega, Ga., White Elementary School has received two new basketball goals and the Kelley Hill Recreation Center purchased a new digital large screen TV for the soldiers with the ACOE winnings.

Remaining projects include repairing boat launch ramps at different recreational ponds on post, purchasing and installing new computers in the Sand Hill Recreation Center, and upgrading female shower and dressing areas in Infantry Hall are still under construction.

Still in the process of being completed are the playground equipment in housing areas, the library's being fitted with Internet capabilities as well as construction of a soccer field in Porter Village.

"Any program that gives back to the community and is helping improve it is great," said Pvt. Pietro Monticelli, trainee, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

The decision of where to allocate the funds was made public in April by the Fort Benning command group.

The money for every project on the list has been allocated, as required by regulation, Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said.

Walls said he believes the projects are progressing very well and, "we've got our eye on it, so we can make sure all of the money has been allocated."

Each project had to meet certain criteria before approval. It had to have a high visibility that would benefit the installation. The money could not be used on projects funded by other means, and it had to benefit as many people as possible, Walls said.

"I think it's a pretty fair process," he said. "In as much as you try to meet the needs of everybody, we've touched as many people as possible (with these projects)."

To make suggestions for future improvements, call Walls at 545-1500.

First nurse named to command Martin Army

Prior enlisted soldier makes Benning history

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

> "I want to ... make sure soldiers and families are taken care of. As long as the Army lets me take care of soldiers, I'll be a happy camper."
> Col. Gale Pollock
> Martin Army Community Hospital

There is a first for everything in the Army.

Col. Gale S. Pollock holds the distinction of being the first Army nurse to command U.S. Army Medical Department Activity and Martin Army Community Hospital here.

"I'm delighted. I've gotten to a place that I've always wanted to go," she said.

Pollock said she has known since she was 5 years old she was going to be a nurse because she always wanted to help people.

Over the first years of her iife, Pollock looked to a family friend who was a nurse for guidance in pursuing her own career.

The friend told her go to college, pursue her degree and never stop learning.

Pollock did just that.

At 17, she raised her right hand, and swore into the Army as a private first class and began her journey to achieving a life-long dream.

The Army provided Pollock a scholarship to get her degree in nursing, in return, she served her country in BDUs and boots.

By her own standards, she has never stopped learning, and continues giving her all to her patients and co-workers. Her Texas license plate reads: R1BCL, Read One Book, Continue Learning.

She encourages others wanting to pursue careers in anything to "keep studying, and keep learning," because of the fast changing world, no one can ever know everything.

"You need to be willing to continuously learn," Pollock said.

Until 1997, when the medical branch held its first branch immaterial board for Army medical department commands, Pollock had not thought she would get the chance to serve her country the way she wanted to. The board marked the first time for officers in other fields to compete against physicians for command positions and promotions.

Pollock received her first MEDDAC command as a result of the board and was sent to Fort Drum, N.Y., where she served two years, before coming to Fort Benning.

"She is a very dynamic, high energy visionary leader," Lt. Col. Derick Ziegler, MACH chief of staff, said. "Colonel Pollock interacts very well with the soldiers. She is a very soldier focused commander, a very visible leader and is very engaged with all of our staff — military and civilian.

"She embodies our 'One Team' concept."

Throughout her career, Pollock has worked to enhance her nursing skills as well as her leadership skills.

"The most important skills I've learned within nursing are communication and teamwork."

One of her personal goals is ensuring the people who take care of soldiers are also taken care of because teamwork is the best approach to everything.

"She is a visionary whose focus is on providing outstanding internal and external customer service," Ziegler said. "Her caring and concern for patients, a hallmark for the nurse profession, is evident in her decisions because her decisions are based on doing what is right for our patients and staff."

Pollock sees the future of MACH as becoming more convenient and customer friendly for the soldier and his family.

She wants her unit to provide the best patient standard of care and to pay great attention to teaching people how to be healthy.

"I want to continue to make sure soldiers and families are taken care of," Pollock said. "As long as the Army lets me take care of soldiers, I'll be a happy camper."

Officials recall cholesterol-lowering drug

Baycol withdrawn from market for potential problems

Martin Army Community Hospital

Bayer Pharmaceutical has voluntarily withdrawn Baycol (cerivastatin), a cholesterol-lowering medication, from the market.

This medicine was approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in 1997 and has been widely used throughout the world.

What is Baycol used for?

Baycol is a cholesterol-lowering drug belonging to a class of drugs known as "statins." It is prescribed to reduce your cholesterol and to reduce your risk of heart disease.

Why is the drug being recalled?

Bayer determined that the risk of one rare potential side effect, fatal rhabdomyolysis, is no longer acceptable and has voluntarily withdrawn the medication from the market. The FDA agrees with this decision.

What is rhabdomyolysis?

Rhabdomyolysis is a very rare condition where serious muscle damage results in release of muscle cell contents into the bloodstream.

On very rare instances, rhabdomyolysis may result in kidney damage and other organ damage, which may be fatal.

How do I know if I am having this serious reaction (rhabdomyolysis) to Baycol?

Patients who develop rhabdomyolysis often have muscle aches involving their calves, back, or their entire body. The pain may be accompanied by weakness, fever, nausea, vomiting, and passing of dark urine.

What should I do if I am taking Baycol and gemfibrozil (Lopid)?

If you are taking Baycol and Gemfibrozil (Lopid), discontinue the Baycol immediately and contact your physician for further advice.

If I still have Baycol tablets, should I stop taking it?

Since Baycol is no longer available, you will need to change to another cholesterol-lowering medication as recommended by your health care provider.

Often, patients will be changed to another statin. All patients taking Baycol are encouraged to switch to another cholesterol-lowering medication as soon as possible.

Will I have any problems if I stop taking Baycol?

If you were prescribed Baycol to lower your cholesterol, these levels may go back to where they were before you received the drug. These changes will not occur immediately but will most likely occur over a couple of days to weeks.

If you stop Baycol, be sure to consult your physician to discuss alternative therapies for lowering your cholesterol.

Do the other statins have the same safety concerns as Baycol?

All statins have been associated with very rare reports of rhabdomyolysis. These rare cases can occur when the drugs are used alone or in combination with another lipid-lowering drug such as gemfibrozil.

However, cases of fatal rhabdomyolysis in association with Baycol use have been reported more frequently than other approved statins.

How do I get a replacement for my Baycol?

This is accomplished by one of two methods.

If your prescription was written by a Martin Army Community Hospital physician, nurse practitioner or physician assistant, bring the remainder of your Baycol prescription to the MACH main pharmacy.

The pharmacist will offer to exchange the medication for an equivalent dose of another statin using an approved medication exchange list. You may receive up to a 45-day supply. This will allow for enough time to contact your primary health care provider by phone to discuss your situation, or to make an appointment to receive a new prescription to replace Baycol.

You may choose not to take the other medication until you speak with your physician.

As long as you get a replacement medication from your physician within a few weeks, it is extremely unlikely that you will suffer adverse effects from not taking Baycol during this time.

If your doctor is not a Martin Army provider, contact your primary health care provider to make an appointment to receive a new prescription to replace Baycol.

Tell them that Martin Army Community Hospital has Zocor (simvastatin) on the formulary.

For more information, contact Martin Army Community Hospital Pharmacy at 544-4771 or 545-1583.

Brigadier general achieves two notable firsts

Army JAG Corps names first female

Lt. Col. Randy Pullen

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army Reserve Brig. Gen. Coral Wong Pietsch achieved two notable firsts with her promotion July 20 at the Pentagon.

She became the first Asian-Pacific Islander female to be selected for general and the first female general in the Army Judge Advocate General Corps.

In uniform, Pietsch is the chief judge (Individual Mobilization Augmentee) for the U.S. Army Legal Services Agency in Falls Church, Va.

As a civilian, she is the senior attorney and chief of the Civil Law Division, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Headquarters, U.S. Army Pacific.

Pietsch supervises a staff of attorneys whose areas of expertise include administrative law, contract, environmental law, ethics, fiscal law, operational law and personnel and labor law.

She commutes from Hawaii to Virginia to serve as an IMA.

It is not uncommon for Army Reserve soldiers to travel long distances to serve in units.

Pietsch was selected for general for two simple reasons, Maj. Gen. Walter B. Huffman, the Army's judge advocate general, said.

"Coral is a great lawyer and a great soldier," Huffman said. "That's why she is here today."

Huffman said that Pietsch has had more assignments as a command staff judge advocate than almost any other officer in the Army.

One of her distinctions is being recalled to active duty from the Army Reserve to become staff judge advocate for one of the Army's major commands, U.S. Army Pacific, in 1996.

Huffman said that a situation occurred in February 1996 when the active Army staff judge advocate departed and there was no replacement available to take his place.

"The active Army did what the active Army always does in a crisis — it calls on the Army Reserve," Huffman said.

The Army Reserve in this case was Col. Coral Pietsch of the 9th Army Reserve Command, who came on active duty as the U.S. Army Pacific staff judge advocate for six months, from February to August 1996.

Pietsch has more than 26 years of active and Army Reserve service.

Her previous assignments have included tours with the Eighth U.S. Army, Korea, and Fort Shafter, Hawaii.

After leaving active duty in 1980, Pietsch joined the Army Reserve, and held several law positions at Fort DeRussy, Hawaii.

After her second release from active duty in August 1996, she served at the staff judge advocate for the Pacific Area Liaison Command, Fort Shafter, and then as the staff judge advocate for the 9th Regional Support Command, Fort Shafter.

Pietsch has had a great deal of experience as a civilian attorney, too.

After leaving active duty in 1980, she worked as a deputy attorney general for the State of Hawaii for six years, then became a civilian attorney for U.S. Army Pacific at Fort Shafter.

Pietsch is a member of the Commander-in-Chief's Environmental Roundtable, the U.S. Army Pacific Affirmative Action Panel, the U.S. Army Pacific Community of Excellence Team and the U.S. Army Pacific Command Career Development Forum.

She was selected for the Defense Department Leadership and Management Program and is also an active arbitrator for the State Certified Arbitration Program that hears cases involving disputes of the Hawaii Motor Vehicle Express Warranty Law.

Her military education includes the Judge Advocate General School's Basic and Advanced Courses, the Command and General Staff College and the Army War College.

She received a bachelor's degree from the College of St. Teresa, a master's degree from Marquette University and her law degree from the Catholic University of America.

Her awards and decorations include the Legion of Merit, two Meritorious Service Medals, the Joint Services Commendation Medal, three Army Commendation Medals and two Army Achievement Medals.

Editor's note: Pullen is a member of the Public Affairs and Liaison Directorate, Office of the Chief, Army Reserve.

Medical field begins transformation later this year

Change will increase training for medics

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Beginning this fall the enlisted medical field will start a six-year transformation to combine its low-density MOSs, and increase the level of training medics receive before and after they arrive at their first duty station.

"Army medics are good, but we're working to make them better," said Lt. Col. Richard Edwards, Army medical department personnel staff officer for the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. "Active-component soldiers will have to meet necessary requirements by 2007 or change their military occupational specialty.

Reserve components will have until 2009 to make the transition.

The Enlisted Personnel Management Directorate will reclassify five MOSs Oct. 1 and place them under the Career Management Field 91, medical. The most affected will be combat medics, 91B, and licensed practical nurses, 91C. Their jobs will be combined and reclassified as health-care specialists, 91W.

Medics who are reclassified as health-care specialists will be assigned a transitional Y2 Army skill identifier until they meet certain qualifications. Promotable sergeants first class and above will not receive the ASI, Edwards said.

"Senior enlisted soldiers will be grandfathered in because their roles are supervisory instead of functional," Edwards added. "Junior enlisted soldiers will be required to gain certification by the National Registry of Emergency Medical Technicians, Basic Trauma Life Support and Trauma-AIMS, which consists of trauma assessment, advanced airway, IV therapy, medication and shock management.

"They will also have to renew their certifications every two years."

A great number of the soldiers are already qualified, Edwards said. Once they turn in proof of their certification to Health Services Branch, Personnel Command for approval the Y2 identifier will be removed, he said.

Training for health-care specialists will be available from a variety of sources, and units will use a combination to best fit their mission and operational tempo, said Lt. Col. Patrick Wilson, 91W synchronization officer, Office of the Surgeon General.

Good units have been conducting much of this training for years, he added.

"Plans are underway for the Office of the Surgeon General to provide some funding to help units pay for test fees, workbooks and instructor training material," Wilson said.

"Also to help ease the unit workload of tracking the transition, OTSG developed a web-based tracking module."

The module is simple to use and is linked to multiple databases for automatic updating, Wilson said. Most significantly, he added, it allows command involvement by giving approved users the capability to view individual and unit transition and sustainment status.

"We've now established a new standard," Wilson said. "We've raised the bar for Army medicine at the most important level — that of the combat medic."

The need to restructure the medical field came after Operation Dessert Storm and Dessert Shield, according to Edwards. It was determined that medics needed to be more efficient after graduating from their advanced individual training, he said.

"In the past, medics received the bulk of their training when they arrived at their first unit, but during Dessert Storm it was no time for training.

They were expected to be able to function when they got on the ground," Edwards said.

The then surgeon general Lt. Gen. Ronald Blank decided to renew and revitalize the medic program to make it more viable, said Edwards.

Part of making the medical field more functional is improving their level of training.

The advanced individual training for healthcare specialists located in San Antonio, Texas, will be extended to 16 weeks instead of the current 12-week course for combat medics and licensed practical nurses.

There will be two 16-week pilot programs starting Sept. 10 and 24, said Sgt. Maj. Thomas Bannon, Army Medical Department Personnel Proponency Directorate sergeant major. The first 91W course will start Oct. 15, he said.

Another part of the transformation started in January when the Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery skilled technical score for combat medics increased from 95 to 105, Bannon said.

The required general technical score is still 110.

Other changes to be made Oct. 1 are: optical laboratory specialist, 42E, will be deleted and reclassified to optical laboratory specialist, 91H,; patient administration specialist, 71G, will be deleted and reclassified to patient administration specialist, 91G, and medical supply specialist, 76J, will be deleted and reclassified to medical supply specialist, 91J.

The healthcare specialist will be the base medic, but there will also be eight other ASIs medics can receive which will require more training, Bannon said. Those specialties are: dialysis specialist, licensed practical nurse, occupational therapy specialist, physical therapy specialist, orthopedic specialist, ear, nose and throat specialist and cardiovascular specialists.

When you're on the battlefield and wounded there, are several stages of care you can receive," Edwards said. "There's buddy aid and the combat life saver, but most people are going to be looking for the first medically trained person on the site, and that's our medics."

Round: Makes Bradley Fighting Vehicle more lethal

This capability translates directly onto making our Bradley soldier more lethal on today's modern battlefield and ensures that they remain a critical component of the Army's combined arms force.

The Infantry School Directorate of Training has implemented a Master Gunner, Bradley Leaders Course and the Conduct of Fire Trainer to train soldiers and leaders on this advanced lethality.

Training is also being implemented for Bradley Advanced Training Systems in the course currently being fielded. The difference with the new round is that kinetic energy rounds kill the target by force of impact, whereas high-explosive rounds kill by force of the blast, said Sgt. 1st Class John Hill, project NCOIC, and USAIC master gunner in describing the difference between the M-792 high-explosive incendiary with tracer and the M-919 APFSDS-T munition.

"The M-919 bullet is the perfect example of the acquisition and user communities coming together to develop, produce and stockpile the most lethal 25 mm armor piercing bullet in the world," said Maj. Jeff Bovais, Tank Main Armament System assistant project manager for Medium Caliber Armaments.

Registration: Could lead to possible residency problems

for Chattahoochee and Muscogee counties.

The counties cooperate on requirements for issuance of an exemption from ad valorem taxes.

In order to receive the ad valorem exemption, the soldier must:

• Provide proof of residency in another state by presenting an LES no older than 90 days at the SJA office.

• Be the owner or co-owner of the vehicle — one vehicle may be registered in both spouses' names; any others must be only in the soldier's name. The soldier must own the car, not lease.

To register to vote in Georgia, and most other States, applicants must meet this list of qualifications:

• Be a U.S. citizen.

• Be a legal resident of Georgia and the county in which you register to vote.

• Be at least 18 years old on or before the date of an election.

• Not be serving any sentence for the conviction of a felony.

• Not have been declared mentally incompetent.

The disability must have been removed.

"I would strongly emphasize that whatever state in which a soldier chooses to vote, he or she will enjoy the privileges as well as the responsibilities that accompany that, which include paying state taxes," Walls said. "Choose very carefully."

For more information on vehicle registration, call 545-3281.

Briefings will be from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. in Infantry Hall.

AER myths

Army Emergency Relief funds are not an entitlement.

Contributing does not grant automatic entitlement to receive assistance.

Assistance is to meet emergency needs, not to make people "feel good" or to express sympathy. AER assistance is not a solution to "all financial problems."

AER funds are not to support a particular "lifestyle, irresponsible actions, or consolidation of debts."

For details on what AER is for, call Al Deane, AER Officer, at 545-3530.

Child care accreditation

Fort Benning's four school-age services sites have been accredited by the National School-Age Care Alliance.

NSACA accreditation symbolizes a commitment to quality school-age care. They are focused on six keys to quality: human relationships, indoor environment, outdoor environment, activities, safety, health and nutrition and administration.

As one of the first school-age programs in the nation to be accredited by NSACA, School Age Services is recognized nationally as a leader in quality care for children before and after school.

The four centers are being presented certificates today at 11 a.m. in the Patch Hall cafeteria.

For more information, call Felicia McCord at 545-3605.

Change in hours

The Main Post ID Card Branch operational hours have changed.

The new hours are 8:30 a.m. to noon and 1 to 5 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday; 8:30 to noon Thursday.

The Main Post ID Card Section will be closed daily for lunch from noon to 1 p.m.

The Main Post ID Card Branch has an appointment system for more convenient service.

People with appointments have priority over walk-ins and are seen within five minutes of their scheduled appointment time.

Walk-ins for emergency situations are always welcome but appointments are highly encouraged.

The appointment desk phone number is 545-4068.

For more information, call Dollie Stutson at 545-1411.

Survey available

The Infantry School Course Feedback Survey is now available on the Fort Benning Web site.

Please complete this survey, six months after your graduation, and ask your commander or supervisor to participate as well.

All responses will be confidential.

The school's commanders, staff members, and instructors rely on your professional opinion of its effectiveness in producing graduates whose technical, tactical, and leadership skills and physical abilities meet the needs of the 21st century land warrior.

National Infantry Museum

Experience 30,000 square feet of exhibit space honoring the Infantry soldier and his two centuries of service to the nation at the National Infantry Museum.

The National Infantry Museum has new operating hours. The new hours will be Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and Saturday and Sunday 12:30 to 4:30 p.m.

The museum is located on Baltzell Road on Main Post.

Task Force 1-30 certifies gunnery teams

Soldiers ready for Kosovo deployment

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Task Force 1-30 certified its M-1114 humvee crews this week at Hastings Range in preparation for an 8-month-long deployment to Kosovo in October.

Each crew, armed with either MK19 40 mm grenade launchers or 50-caliber machine guns, excelled at target acquisition, identification and engagement at varying distances, said Staff Sgt. Brian Brusky, truck commander, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

"We're working well together as a cohesive unit," Brusky said. "We're all family. There's always a brotherly competition to see who shoots the best, but we're always willing to help each other."

He said that bond will help the scouts accomplish their convoy operation and out-post missions in Kosovo.

"I want to go," Brusky said. "It's what my country wants, and it's what I want to do."

Fellow soldiers said they share his passion about the deployment.

"It's going to be something new and exciting," said Staff Sgt. Branon Ryals, tank commander, 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt. "It'll be the experience of a lifetime."

He said, however, he realizes the trip is not a joke, and his crew, both gunner and driver, is tight.

"Whether on patrol or doing checkpoints, you have to have your head in the game at all times," Ryals said. "You must be prepared to react in the appropriate manner to any situation that arises. That is why I have total confidence in our scout platoon.

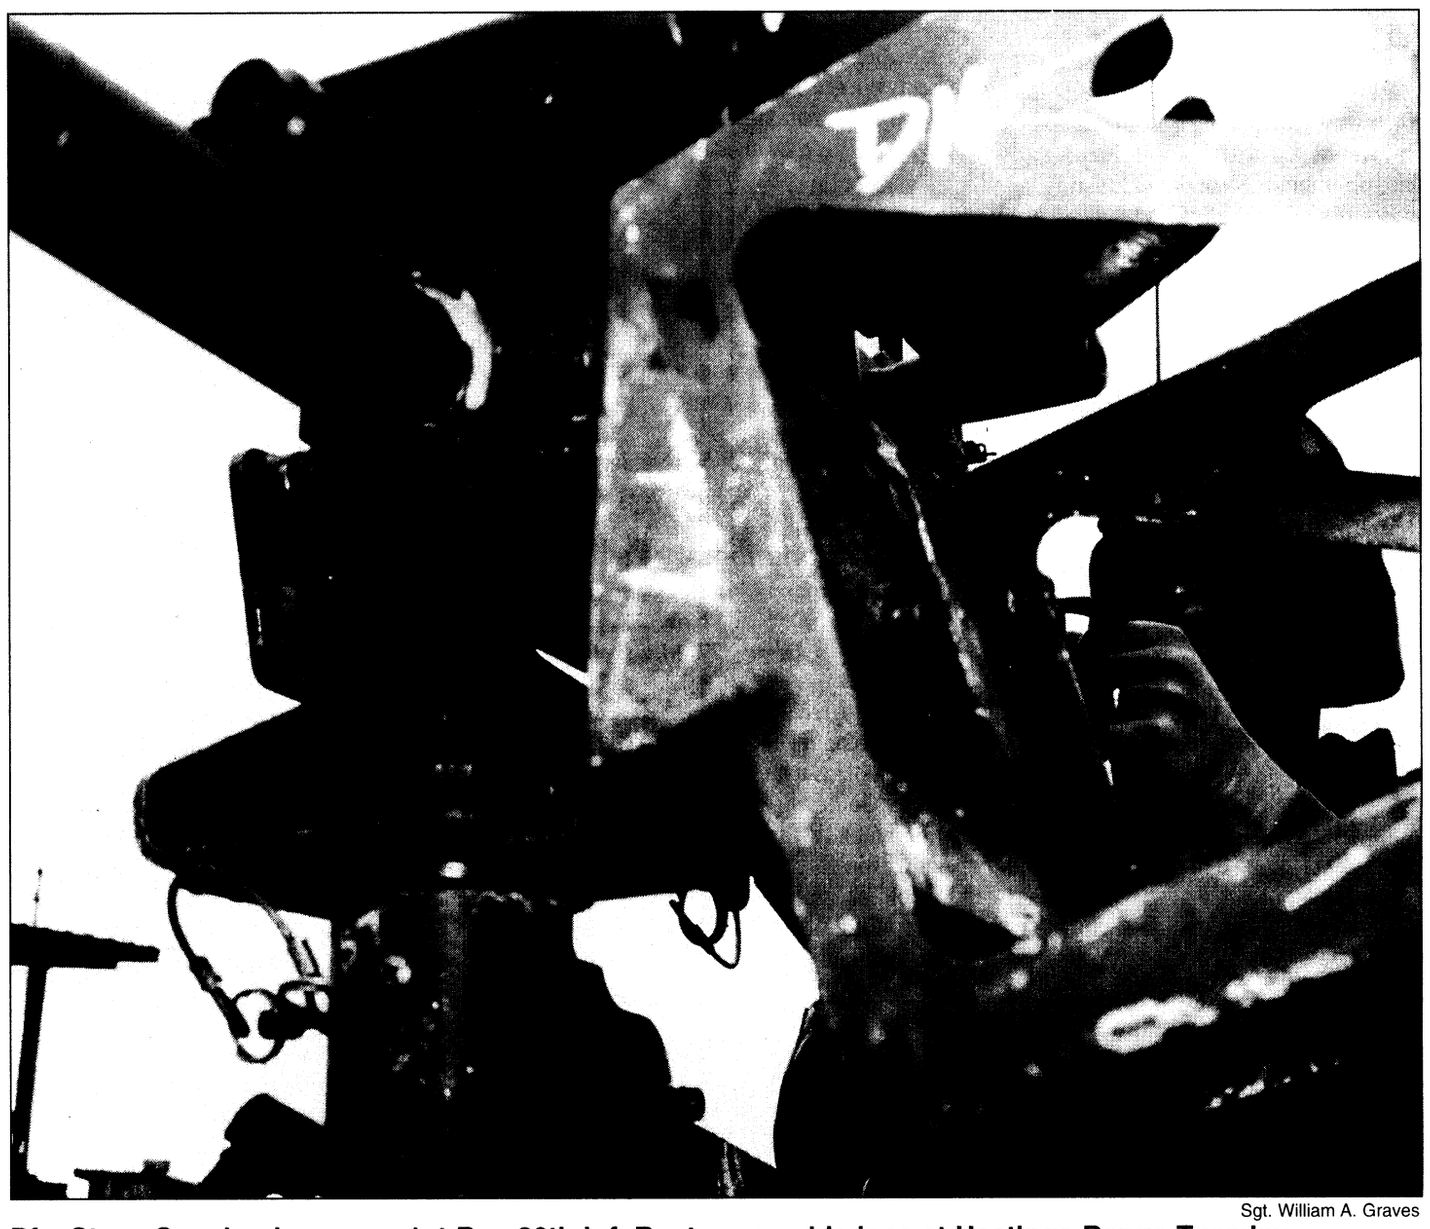
"We are receiving excellent training for this mission, and we have the best NCOs in the brigade to carry out our missions."

The inclement weather made the range more difficult to conquer, but his team adapted and overcame, he said.

"(From what I've heard), this is the kind of weather to expect," Ryals said. "It'll just be a whole lot colder."

The realism of the training encouraged him.

"What we did today was a blueprint for combat engagement that we may encounter in Kosovo," Ryals said. "No one ever hopes to kill anyone, but today reminded us we can do it with precision if we need to."



He said he is excited about the deployment.

"It's a trip from which you learn life lessons," Ryals said. "A lot of things we take for granted here are not there. I'm looking forward to learning about Kosovo's people and culture."

Gearing up for Kosovo, the task force successfully completed Hammer Focus earlier this year, he said.

He trusts the gunnery certification, ongoing Individual Readiness Training and soon-to-happen Mission Rehearsal Exercise at the Joint Readiness Training Center will help soldiers accomplish the deployment's mission to standard.

"All the guys are really excited about going," Ryals said. "They are saying things like, 'Finally, a real mission.' I know we are going to be awesome over there — great Americans in a great battalion making a difference."

ISTD: international liaisons to military schools, courses

African major: highly trained infantryman

> "We try to show the students America's true colors and that we are not all that people see in the movies. This program helps to ensure our allies are trained the same as we are. When we go to war, we don't go alone."
> Capt. Hector Fernandez
> Commander, International Student Training Detachment

Thousands of miles away from his home in Malawi, Africa, Maj. Chiku Nkha Soko is now one of the most highly trained international students to come through the International Student's Training Detachment at Fort Benning.

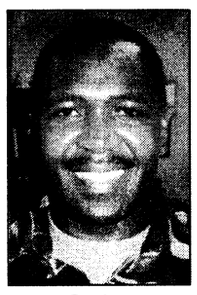
But he's not alone. The ISTD serves as a liaison between 15 schools at Fort Benning and the hundreds of international students attending them.

"We coordinate with embassies of countries across the globe for training of their soldiers," said Capt. Hector Fernandez, International Students Training Detachment commander.

Fernandez assists the soldiers in making living arrangements, ensures they get their pay and mail and helps them to learn more about the United States.

They do this by taking them on trips around the area, such as state prisons, soup kitchens and information tours to local attractions.

"We try to show the students America's true colors and that we are not all that people see in the movies," Fernandez said.



Soko's views of the American people have changed as a result of his experiences.

"When I initially came to the states, I did not understand the American sense of humor. Now that I have seen how the Americans live, I appreciate this sense of humor," Soko said.

Soko was born and raised in Malawi, located in Southern Africa, east of Zambia.

After three decades of one-party rule, the country held multi-party elections in 1994 under a provisional constitution, which took full effect the following year.

The country's legal system is based on English common law and customary law.

Soko

Soko said there are similarities and differences between the American and African military practices.

"Although the format is different, we are working toward a common goal, and that is to solve a problem," Soko said.

The training received by the international students is intended to enhance their country's problem-solving skills.

Soko has completed four of the Fort Benning courses, which include the Infantry Officers' Basic Course, Airborne School, and Ranger School.

He is currently in the Infantry Captains' Career Course at Fort Benning.

Soko's initial involvement in the military came when he was selected by his countrymen to attend U.S. Army Military Academy.

Soko competed against 19 other high school graduates to obtain a slot at the academy and graduated in 1992.

Fernandez said there are a few good reasons schools are offered to foreign students.

"This program helps to ensure our allies are trained the same as we are. When we go to war, we don't go alone," Fernandez said.

"This training also offers stability to countries who run the risk of being invaded.

"It defines war crimes to other countries, to decrease the occurrence of such crimes," Fernandez said.

Some international students get paid by the United States as well as their country for their time spent in training.

"Students who do get paid get enough money to cover living expenses while in the United States," he said.

Like other international students, Soko will take what he has learned and apply it both personally and to his work with the African Army.

About 85 percent of the soldiers sent here are officers, which is comparable in rank to officers in the United States Army.

For Soko, the most challenging military school that he has been to was the U.S. Army Ranger School.

"Ranger school teaches you to survive, makes you mentally tough, and provides intense physical training," Soko said.

His vast experience makes the African officer an example to fellow students in his detachment.

"Major Soko is one of the most highly trained international students that has come through here," said Fernandez.

Soko's wife, Grace, and two children, Stacy, 4, and Sean, 3 remain in Malawi during his training.

CSM NOTES

Post sergeant major talks about changes

I recently had the opportunity to talk with some hardworking soldiers in Alaska, and it reinforced what I already suspected.

Infantrymen across the span are keeping themselves informed about the changes and developments of today's Army. And they're asking good questions about issues concerning career and professional development. In my travels, it occurred to me that others might benefit from these comments.

Through this column, I intend to speak candidly about concerns from the field and address current topics affecting the infantry. I also view this as an opportunity for other command sergeants major to share information in their respective areas.

As I continue to travel to infantry units, I'll bring back comments, but I'd also like to solicit feedback from soldiers and get their perceptions. True or not, perceptions are reality.

Recently, we made the decision to consolidate the 11 series military occupational specialties.

My sense is that soldiers understand and accept this initiative, and realize it's still business as usual.

Soldiers will continue to train as they always have, but with the migration between light and mechanized infantry, soldiers will have more tools in their toolboxes.

Already, I've heard from NCOs who have served in light and mechanized units, and they are successful.

We must change the perception that there are five types of infantry. There is one infantry, with five different methods of delivery. I spoke with one ranger noncommissioned officer who successfully transitioned from mechanized to light, but admitted to hiding his mechanized past from his records. He dispels the myth the mechanized soldiers can't do physical training.

Combining the infantry MOS' will create infantrymen with greater knowledge and skills about combined arms warfighting (the way the Objective Force will fight) and allow them to train their soldiers under more demanding conditions than my generation of infantry sergeants major are capable of doing.

Another issue we need to address is the increased attrition rate in first term soldiers. As of today, 33 percent of first term soldiers do not complete their initial enlistment. That's bordering on catastrophic.

One solution is the buddy team concept, which will allow individuals to report to One Station Unit Training, complete basic training and then get assigned to the same company, and possibly platoon, for the first six months of service. We know that having a buddy during that transition time makes it easier to adjust.

As with all changes, it's essential the leadership understand and support these initiatives.

Furthermore, it's our responsibility to our soldiers.

We can make a difference.

Foreign training enriches

Soldiers earn German badge

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Today's military offers a wide variety of training. Multinational operations prompted many commanders to incorporate foreign training for their soldiers.

This makes them more familiar with weapons and weapon systems of other nations.

Soldiers who are interested in taking advantage of the additional training can be awarded foreign military badges.

German Sgt. Maj. Manfred S. Jerabeck, with the German Army Liaison staff, has begun a campaign to offer service members the opportunity to earn the awards. Though he is working under unique conditions as a German liaison, Jerabeck is offering American troops the opportunity to qualify using American weapons instead of German weapons to earn the German Marksmanship Badge, Schuetzenschnur. However, Jerabeck ensures the stringent requirements to qualify for both badges are not in any other way compromised.

"We have no German weapons or ammunition, but the standards have not changed," Jerabeck said.

Jerabeck has outlined these standards in a memorandum he hands out to units interested in achieving the foreign recognition and offers his expertise year-round.

He makes it clear that any military group of 10 or more who has access to ranges on post are eligible for the trials.

In the memo he outlines the three award levels, gold, silver and bronze.

For the marksmanship badge, units are responsible to coordinate ranges, provide range control, issue weapons and ammunition and provide personnel for range safety and first aid.

Soldiers must be able to qualify with a 9 mm pistol on pop-ups and the M-16A rifle from a supported and unsupported position.

"With a rifle, American soldiers are very proficient, but with the pistol, I notice soldiers are not as good," Jerabeck said.

The German Armed Forces Efficiency Badge offers more of a challenge for applicants, he said. Under German requirements, troops test on first-aid or provide proof of medical training, such as combat lifesaver. Next they must road march a minimum of 15 kilometers in two hours and 30 seconds.

Times and distances are based on age and gender. All times and age brackets are made available in the memorandum.

To earn the Efficiency Badge, applicants must also qualify under the same standards as the Marksmanship Badge.

"If a soldier earns the German Armed Forces Efficiency Badge, he is also qualified for the Marksmanship Badge," Jerabeck said. "If the applicant has earned the Marksmanship Badge within 12 months of competing for the Efficiency Badge, they are not required to test in the marksmanship portion of the trials."

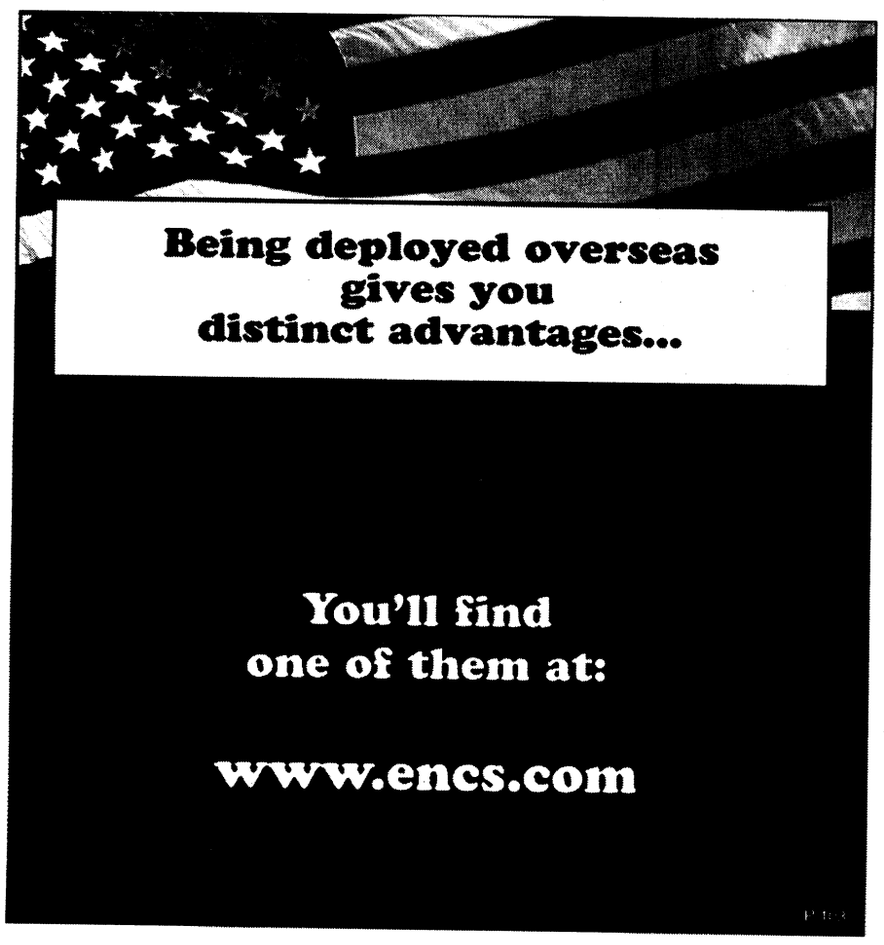
The second part of the trials requires five sporting events. This, too, is determined by age group and gender.

Applicants must compete in a 200 meter swim, sprint 100 meter, 400 meter or 1,000 meter Next they must show their agility in the long or high jump.

They must demonstrate their strength by throwing a shotput or elect another 100 meter swim.

To complete the sporting portion of the qualification, applicants finish off with a 500 meter run or 1,000 meter swim.

Finally, a service member must be rated by his commander on his professional performance as a soldier.



"Fifty-percent of applicants are weak in the swimming portion," Jerabeck said.

Jerabeck said personnel interested in earning the badge should coordinate through their S4 and then contact him at 545-6251.

According to Army Regulation 670-1, Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms and Insignia, Sept. 1, 1992, section 28-19, wear of foreign badges; no more than one foreign badge may be worn at any one time.

The German Marksmanship Badge may only be worn by enlisted personnel and will be worn on the right side of the uniform coat with the upper portion attached under the lapel.

Thinking outside the box

Choosy moms choose SPAM

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

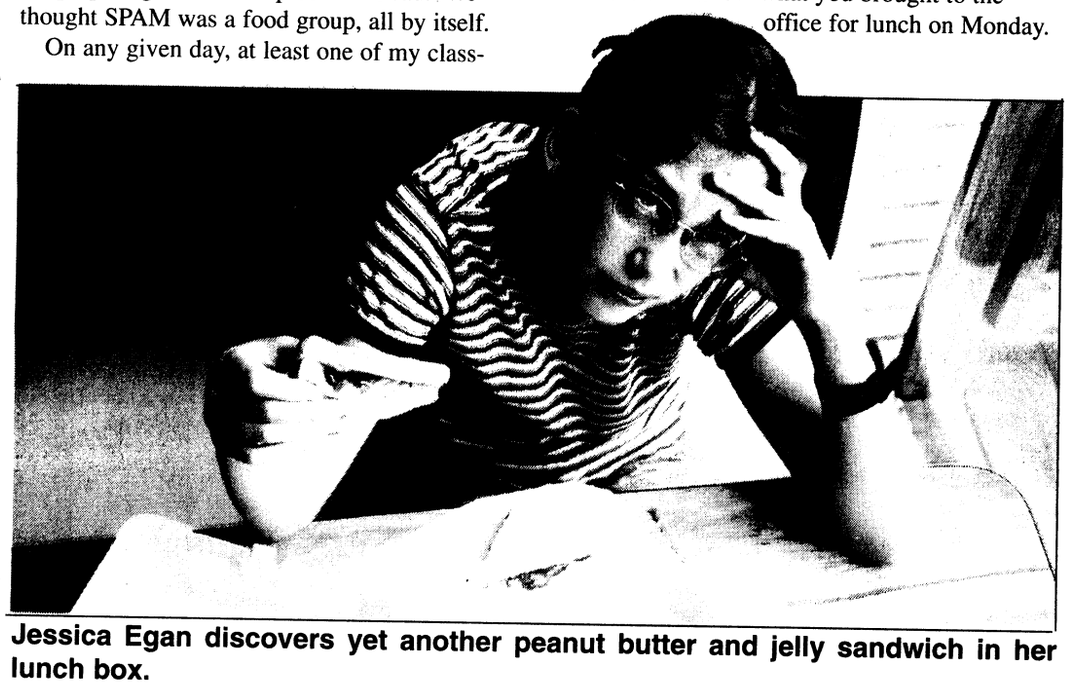
I don't remember how the conversation turned to what we carried to school for lunch, but when the issue of unwrapping (another) PB&J came up, I was floored. I grew up in Honolulu and my mom thought PB&Js were one step above sending your child to school with a sack of cookies for lunch.

The grade school where I was incarcerated didn't have a cafeteria and our survival depended on packing a lunch. Consequently, Half of the time we got other-than-PB&J sandwiches, the rest of the time we ate a lot of food that might be described as exotic. There were a lot of ethnic dishes, left over from dinner, served up as brought-from-home lunches. Takuan? Pancit? Manapua? Teriyaki? Kal Bi? You bet.

Of course, our moms couldn't always rely on leftovers and other-than-PB&J sandwiches. But they could always count on a little blue can of SPAM. To us "locals" SPAM was comfort food. We all liked it, and anyone who grew up in Hawaii can give you at least a half dozen recipes for preparing it off the top of their head. We thought SPAM was a food group, all by itself.

On any given day, at least one of my classmates feasted on a lunch starring SPAM.

By state, Hawaii is number one in SPAM consumption, to the tune of four cans per person annually. Nationally, a can of SPAM is eaten every 3.8 seconds. If it wasn't for Hawaii, it would probably take seven or eight minutes.



Just a few weeks ago I was invited to a luau at Uchee Creek. The local-style food wasn't limited to authentic kalua pig and lomilomi salmon. Those of us in the know had SPAM musubi too. Sorry if you missed them.

If you're wondering what a musubi is, pay close attention the next time you're watching "Pokemon." That rice ball Pikachu loves to grind on? They call it Pokechow. It's really a musubi.

Yep. Slap a piece of fried SPAM that's been simmered for a minute in teriyaki sauce on a musubi, wrap a strip of seaweed around it to hold it in place, and voila! SPAM musubi.

PB& J can't hold a candle to a good SPAM musubi. It makes me hungry just thinking about it and I've got lots of company. You know who you are. You were in the kitchen during the luau at Uchee Creek eating SPAM musubi as appetizers to the Hawaiian style chopped steak, spiced onions, kalua pig and lomilomi salmon.

And I bet I know what you brought to the office for lunch on Monday.

Jessica Egan discovers yet another peanut butter and jelly sandwich in her lunch box.

Creativity rounds out square meal

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Ask any member of the elementary lunch bunch — when it comes to appetizing lunch box fare, the typical "square" meal is just that — square. Uncool. Unappealing.

It doesn't matter how it's delivered — brown bag, metal box or thermal-insulated lunch "tote" — if it's not packed with care, chances are it'll come back to you.

But parenting experts and nutrition gurus say there are many ways to pack a little excitement, or at least a little variety, into every lunch box. With a bit of planning and an ounce of imagination anyone can stir up a noontime culinary success.

Constance Roberts, nutrition program manager for Women, Infant and Children Supplemental Nutrition Program, said nutrition is key, and the food pyramid you learned about in health class should still be your fundamental guide to preparing healthy meals. Lunch should include foods from the four major food groups: grains, protein, fruits and vegetables and dairy.

"The food pyramid is the same, but the serving sizes should be scaled down, depending on the child's age," Roberts said. "A bread serving for a child between 1 and 3 is only half a slice, but for a child between 4 and 10 it's a whole slice.

Roberts recommends allowing children to help shop for their own food. And keep the food pyramid posted on the refrigerator so kids can help plan lunch menus based on healthy choices. Kids who have an active role in planning their meals are more likely to eat them.

Lunch should also be visually appealing and quick and easy to eat. Mealtime is a social event, even for kindergarteners, and eating is secondary to talking and playing. So pack foods in easy to open containers and be realistic about the size of portions.

Rather than throwing away leftovers, consider serving half a of a sandwich or half of an apple. Pre-peel and slice fruit like apples and oranges and cut carrots into manageable portions. Finger foods are a kid favorite, and homemade mixes of dried fruit, granola and nuts are a healthy alternative to pre-mixed brands that are often packed with sugar, fat and sodium. Best of all, kids can create their own mix based on foods they like.

Desserts should not be forbidden, just selected with care. They're likely to be the first item consumed when no one's around to monitor the food flow, so make sure dessert has some nutritional value. Fruit and yogurt cups, granola bars, cereals, puddings, pretzels and air-popped popcorn are some alternatives to sugar-laden snack cakes.

Whenever possible, encourage your child to purchase milk at school. If he balks at that, select juices with real juice, not Kool-aids or fruit drinks. Freeze juice boxes the night before so they'll still be cold at lunch time.

Though variety is the spice of life for most folks, picky eaters may insist on the same meal every day. That's OK, Roberts said, as long it's healthy. Peanut butter and jelly five times a week? Fine, peanut butter is healthy. But it does have a lot of fat, so make sure the rest of the lunch is lean and nutritious.

For those who prefer a variety in their diet, here are a few alternatives to the standard lunch routine:

- Pita pocket — stuff half of a whole wheat pita pocket with chopped vegetables, add a small amount of shredded cheese and stir with mild salsa.
- Bagel — slice a whole-grain bagel, spread a bit of cream cheese and the fruit jam of choice.
- Personal pizza — slice an English muffin, spread with spaghetti sauce and sprinkle with shredded cheese. Add chopped veggies or pepperoni if you choose.
- Crunchy yogurt — Start with your child's favorite yogurt and stir in half of a cup of granola or crunchy cereal. Add raisins, chopped nuts or sunflower seeds if desired.
- Peanut butter classic — after all, it's full of protein, folic acid and magnesium. So spread it thick and add thinly sliced apples or bananas for a fun twist on an old favorite.

Lunch box selection offers many choices, challenges

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

I took my daughter shopping for her first lunch box last week. I liken the experience to buying a new car — too many models to choose from, and the sticker prices increase every year.

I preferred the cute little economy model — cheap, efficient and compact enough to park in the book bag.

She, of course, set her sights on the cadillac of lunch luggage — fully loaded, compartmentalized, reversible, indestructible, earth-friendly and just barely affordable. Room enough to store a Thanksgiving dinner for 12 with all the fixins, complete with a mini-microwave and a refrigerator-freezer combination.

I tried to distract her with a pink, neon Barbie lunch tote with an iridescent thermos.

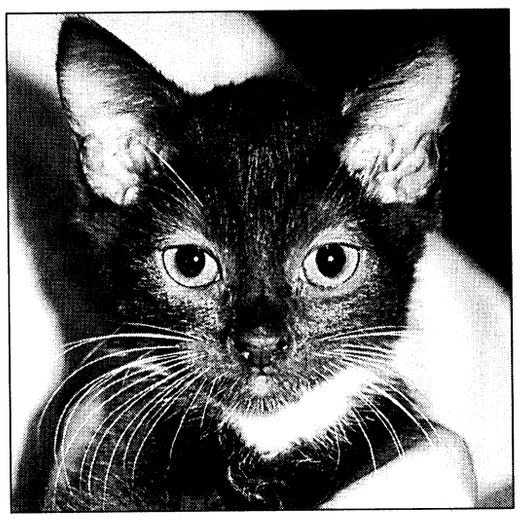
That's for babies," said my 5-year-old baby.

To my credit, we left the store without the canvas cadillac — albeit, we left without the fuzzy one, too.

We compromised.

We brought home a mid-size car — er, lunch box — one I'm sure she'll be happy with for a couple of weeks.

In retrospect I realize our lunch-bag shopping experience was vastly different than those I remember from my childhood, when my own mother would ask, "Now Bridgett, honey, make up your mind. Would you like the brown paper bag or the white paper bag."



And when my mother was a child, she carried her lunch in her hands. Times were tough, lunch was a luxury and a lunch "bag" was superfluous. Lunch was a potato, heated over a stove in the morning and carried to school to keep Mom's hands warm in the winter. Mittens were a luxury too.

So all things considered, I'll not complain about choices, be it choices of lunch boxes or choices of lunch. We're lucky to have them.

And I'll try to keep that in mind every morning as my daughter and I try to reach a compromise on what to pack in her new state-of-the-art lunch box.

Pet Tips:

Be a responsible pet owner and have your pet spayed or neutered as soon as they reach maturity, approximately 6 months old. One out of four puppies and kittens are euthanized due to lack of loving and responsible homes. Even though initially they find a home, most pets will end up at an animal shelter, stray facility by the time they are 7 months old.

Dental care, year-round lesson

Oral hygiene part of education

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Summer always passes so quickly. It seems like just yesterday the last bell rang and the children were running home for the summer.

Now, they're already back in school. Your time is probably filled with buying school supplies, choosing new wardrobes and filling out countless forms. Through it all, don't forget to schedule back-to-school dental visits for your children.

These visits are important for many reasons.

Cavities can be prevented — While tooth decay remains the primary cause of tooth loss in children, sealants have proven to be extremely effective in preventing cavities. These are clear or shaded plastic materials which are painted onto the decay-prone surfaces of children's teeth. They keep food and plaque out of the crevices of the teeth, reducing the risk of decay. It's too bad they weren't available when we were all growing up.

Gum disease strikes children too. Periodontal disease, in some form, affects about 40 percent of children and 70 percent of youths. Daily, effective brushing and flossing are the best ways to prevent gum disease.

When your children come in for an exam, we remind them how to properly brush and floss. We also check for gum disease so we can catch it at its earliest, most treatable stage.

Advances in orthodontics — If your child's teeth are crowded, crooked or out of alignment with each other, we may recommend orthodontic work. Misaligned teeth can create tension and pain in the jaw joints because of the excess stress placed on chewing muscles. When they're out of alignment, teeth are also more difficult to clean, and thus are more susceptible to decay and gum disease. Braces typically produce a more attractive smile but they also do important work behind the scenes when they move teeth into more functional positions.

In the last 10 years, there have been many advances in the field of orthodontics. Wearing braces isn't so bad today. There are invisible braces and brightly colored braces and even porcelain braces which absorb the tooth's natural color.

Maybe they'll listen to us — Chewing tobacco continues to be frighteningly popular among adolescents. While they probably won't listen to your remonstrations, children might pay attention when we graphically explain the hazards of smokeless tobacco. From ugly pre-cancerous lesions to periodontal disease and life-threatening oral cancer, the effects are devastating. Tobacco, in any form, can jeopardize your child's health and cause incurable damage. As a routine part of every dental exam, we screen for oral cancer.

Before you know it, Thanksgiving will be just around the corner. Before time flies any faster, call your dentist and schedule back-to-school visits for your children.

Immunization awareness month

Recent vaccination requirement for school attendance

Laura Martinson

Special to the Bayonet©

Are you up to date? Vaccinate!

The month of August marks the National Immunization Awareness campaign sponsored by the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services and the Surgeon General. The campaign is a reminder to people of all ages of the importance of timely immunizations.

The reminder comes at a good time, since Fort Benning schools require a certificate of immunization, Form 3231, to begin school. Parents have 30 days after the first day of school to comply with the requirements.

Robert Knight is a licensed practical nurse at the Pediatric Clinic at Martin Army Community Hospital. He deals primarily with maintaining records of immunization and keeping patients up-to-date and informed about the latest developments.

"I grew up in a time when there was no polio vaccine, no MMR vaccine. I have seen whooping cough," he said. "The benefits of vaccinations are so great, that there are actually doctors out there who have not seen a case of the measles."

It's for these reasons that Knight suggests everyone get vaccinated and stay up to date.

Due to the transient lives of military families, there are two major influxes of patients at Fort Benning. These typically occur from January to March and June to August, due to families moving from post to post.

According to Knight, this lifestyle can also contribute to some getting behind on their shots. He recommends an initial visit with a primary care provider when arriving at a new installation.

It's important to take medical records and immunization records, because they are often both needed to assess immunity.

Knight encourages parents to come to immunization appointments armed with a need for information, as well as a need for shots. This better enables the entire family to stay up to date.

What is up-to-date?

The answer to that varies based upon age. Typically babies should go through five rounds of vaccinations, or 16 shots, before the age of 18 months. Children between the ages of 4-6 have to have their vaccinations updated before entering school.

Beginning at ages 14-16, individuals should receive a tetanus/diphtheria vaccination once every 10 years. At age 65, they should ask their health care provider about the meningococcal vaccination.

This has also recently been recommended for college students, especially those going to live in the dorms, Knight said.

It's also important to know that different states have different vaccination requirements, he said.

"Different geographic areas have different needs. Georgia has one of the highest immunization requirements," Knight said.

Patients often ask him how he can stick little ones on a daily basis.

"I would rather do that than see them go through the diseases that the vaccinations prevent. It is better to watch them get a shot than to watch them be ill," Knight said.

For more information about immunizations, contact your primary care clinic.

Immunizations are given on a walk-in basis at all Martin Army Community Hospital primary care clinics during the following hours:

- Aviation Medicine Clinic, Tuesday and Thursday, 1 to 3 p.m.
- Family Practice Clinic, Monday-Friday, 9 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m.
- Pediatric Clinic, Monday-Thursday, 1 to 3 p.m.
- Victory Clinic, Monday-Friday, 7:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.
- Winder Family Practice Clinic, Tuesday-Thursday, 1 to 2:30 p.m.
- Allergy and Immunization Clinic, Monday-Friday, 9 to 11 a.m. (For those patients not assigned to any other clinic).

ask the judge

Michael Mejia
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I rent an apartment off-post and have a lease for one year. Last Saturday, the leasing agent came to my apartment and said that the owner of the property is tired of me making "noise" at 5:30 a.m. as I get ready for PT. The agent said that I had to leave the premises by next week or all my clothes and furniture will be out on the street. Can my landlord do this to me?

A: Generally, Georgia law that governs the management of residential rental property is found in the Official Code of Georgia, Title 44, Chapter 7. Georgia law does not control the actual details of the landlord-tenant relationship, but it does state the general rights and responsibilities. For the specifics, you should look to your lease.

Typically, a landlord can evict a tenant due to non-payment of rent, failure to vacate the premises upon expiration of the lease, or breach of the terms of the lease, where the lease provides that such a breach entitles the landlord to terminate the lease.

First, if you have not breached any of the terms of the lease, then before being evicted, the landlord must give you written notice, usually a demand, to give up possession to vacate the apartment. At this point, you can either voluntarily comply or if you believe you haven't breached the contract, you can refuse to give up possession.

If you choose to stay, then the landlord must go to magistrate court and file a dispossessory affidavit under oath. The affidavit states the name of the landlord, name of tenant, grounds of eviction, verifies that the landlord has demanded possession of the property and been refused; and amount of rent or any other money owed, if any.

The magistrate court will then issue a summons to the sheriff where the property is located. The sheriff will either personally deliver the summons to you at your residence, or if you are not home, then to an adult at the home, or tack it on the door of your apartment on the same day send the summons by first class mail, also known as "tack and mail."

The summons requires you to provide an explanation or an answer, which you may give either orally in the magistrate's court clerk's office or in writing within seven days from the date that the summons was served. If you fail to respond, then the landlord wins by default and the court issues a writ of possession; the sheriff can then legally remove you immediately.

If your answer is timely, then a hearing or trial will be set within a few days. You, as the tenant, will be allowed to remain in possession of the apartment until resolution of the issues at the hearing or trial. If the landlord also requested that you make your rent payment pending resolution, and the court so orders, then you will be required to pay your rent into the registry of the court.

At the hearing, if the landlord prevails, then you will be ordered to move within seven to 10 days, given the circumstances. If you, as the tenant, prevail, then you will be allowed to remain in possession of the premises. In addition, you shall be entitled to all foreseeable damages resulting from the landlord's wrongful conduct.

If the judgment was against you, then you can appeal. You must file your appeal within 10 days of the date such judgment was entered against you. You will also be required to pay rent into the court registry to remain in possession of the premises until resolution of the appeal.

You can call the Legal Assistance Division at 8 a.m. Friday to make an appointment to meet with a legal assistance attorney the following week. The number is 545-3281.

Customers: Beware of debt collectors

Myvesta.org

They send you letters in the mail. They call you at home, work and on your cell phone. There seems to be no escape.

They're debt collectors. And like a starving mouse that smells cheese, they are quite persistent.

"You don't have to let debt collectors treat you like a deadbeat," said Steve Rhode, president and co-founder of Myvesta.org. "There are laws to protect you from harassing and illegal collection practices."

The federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act limits how far collectors can go in trying to collect a debt.

One thing collectors can't do is to use insulting, obscene or profane language.

For a more in-depth look at your rights as a consumer, read the Myvesta.org publication How to Make the Debt Collector Do What You Want.

It contains information on taking action against harassing collectors, more collector restrictions and how to make collectors stop calling completely.

Post schools welcome back area students

Wilson Hour welcomes informs parents

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Smiling teachers waited to greet new and returning students. Children came from all around to return to their school, or visit it for the first time.

Parents clutched their children's hands as they walked them through the double doors that signify the beginning of an educational adventure.

Tuesday morning marked the official first day of school for all schools on post, and Wilson Elementary School teachers greeted students with smiling faces and bright red T-shirts that read "Every child a reader, every child a writer." The atmosphere was that of energy and excitement for both students and teachers alike.

Wilson Elementary kicked off the year with Wilson Hour, a "Back to School Pride" series designed to better acquaint parents to the many programs offered by the school. Tuesday's program featured "A Day in the Life" at Wilson School, and was produced by the school's Computer and Technology Society.

Wilson Hour took place each day through today, and highlighted such programs as instructional support, talented and gifted, counseling, PTO, and media and educational technology.

Breakfast and door prizes were a couple of added bonuses for those attending.

Phyllis Parker, Wilson Elementary's principal, said the program was about getting parents involved early in the year.

"We want to introduce the many programs we have for our children. This year's focus is on literacy and parental involvement," Parker said.

Being located in the center of Indianhead Housing Area makes getting that involvement that much easier.

"Being a neighborhood school has its benefits," said Margaret Koger, gifted education teacher.

"Because the students all live within walking distance, Wilson is better able to successfully conduct extracurricular activities for the children."

There is something for every child, Parker said. Whether they are interested in computers, reading, singing, or foreign language, the different clubs offer a variety of choices to the student.

The extracurricular activities at Wilson are not run solely by the teachers. Help from parents and the community help bring it all together.

Staff Sgt. James Henry, Basic Combat Training Brigade, said the brigade offers support to the school in many forms, ranging from one-on-one help in the classroom to tree planting ceremonies.

"We are their Partners in Education, and we come out to support the school's programs whenever we can," Henry said.

Volunteers are always needed on the education front. Michelle Allen, the instructional support teacher at Wilson, welcomed new volunteers Tuesday.

"This year the focus is being placed on the home-school connection. We are looking for great parental involvement and some new ideas," Allen said.

For more information about Wilson's extracurricular activities or volunteering, call 545-5723.

Young chefs learn to make candy treats from scratch

Rachel R. Garcia
Special to the Bayonet©

It was by far the sweetest class any student ever sat through.

Youth Services offered a one-day cooking class to its young members Aug. 9. The two-hour course highlighted candy-making using simple techniques and limited pieces of equipment.

Using terms like soft set and molding, program assistant Genna Tounsand led the course without the aid of stovetops or ovens.

Tounsand said she chose the topic in part so that children could make the treats with little aid from their parents. The confection was made using only candy casts, a microwave, bowls and spoons.

An avid cook, Tounsand said the idea to hold a candy-making workshop was an idea she concocted at home.

"I do this for my own kids," she said. "It's easy to make and fun to eat."

Tounsand's daughters, Hope, 9, and Dawn, 11, said they are willing reviewers in her test kitchen.

Besides making homemade pizzas and sauces, their mother often creates homemade confections, Dawn said.

"We get plain pretzels and make our own chocolate-covered candy at home," the older daughter said. "It saves us money."

And the lessons don't end in their house, Dawn said. Her mother enjoys teaching others to cook too.

"She always makes sure everyone has fun," she said. "It's always an experience."

Fifteen students attended the class, making candy molds in the shape of flowers and truffles with both white and dark chocolates. Students spent the afternoon making creative candy, in a variety of flavors, including cherry, mint and cinnamon.

Ken Harris, 12, said he knows a thing or two about cooking, but it was the first time he's made candy.

"We made tacos once here at the start of the summer," he said. "I also learned how to cook in school."

After the candies were made, the students left with more than just their edible souvenirs.

> "She always makes sure everyone has fun. It's always an experience."

"The kids don't realize the dyes will make their tongues turn color for a while," Tounsand laughed.

Tounsand said she hoped to continue instructing courses such as the one offered last week after the summer school break ends.

YS offers a selection of special programs throughout the year in such series as the middle-school curriculum.

"Things like this are basic learning skills. Sewing, cooking, anything you do on a daily basis," she said.

Kindness returns to those who are caring

Chaplain (Maj.) David Norvell
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

If you could have only 10 verses of scripture to carry with you and pattern your life by, Galatians 6:1-10 would be an excellent choice.

Read these verses carefully and consider how things would be around your neighborhood, church, and family if you applied and daily followed the principles in these few verses.

Practice aggressive kindness, verses 9 and 10 say. How far could you go toward making your world a different, better place following that principle?

Imagine you get up one morning and to your surprise your spouse has been up making you a beautiful looking, smelling and tasting breakfast.

As you start out of the house you realize your spouse in not in the house, but rather out front, shoveling snow off the drive and warming your car.

With a kiss you are on your way to work listening to your radio, but there is something different.

Every station you tune in is either playing soothing music or the announcer is sharing encouraging news from around the world.

The man at the tollbooth smiles, waves, gives change and a fresh mint as you pass through.

When you pull into the parking lot at work another driver motions for you to go ahead and take the last parking spot in a two-block area, even though he was there first.

Inside the office someone had warm coffee sitting on your desk. Your work mate apologized for his attitude the day before and offers to take your weekend duty for you.

What would be your reaction? Mine might be, "I have died and gone to heaven!"

Heaven may be that way someday, but your world, here and now, could have bits and pieces of heaven through these random acts of kindness. Maybe they will not all come together on one day, but you can do your part in offering a patch of green kindness in a cold, gray world.

Commit to start practicing aggressive kindness yourself.

Carry out the trash without being asked and spray the can with sweet lilac deodorizer.

Let two people ahead of you in the line at the food store and then secretly leave $20 with the clerk to pay the senior citizen's bill in the line behind you.

After church next Sunday, instead of taking a nap, go by the nursing home and help clean up after they serve lunch and sit around talking to some of the clients.

Aggressive kindness, according to the writer's practical principles will result in reward. It will come back to you.

That's not your motive for action, but it is a great benefit.

chapel notes

Protestant Women of the Chapel meet — The Protestant Women of the Chapel have resumed their Summer Bible Study series, "Jesus on Relationships."

The PWOC meet every Thursday morning from 9:30 a.m. to noon at Custer Terrace Chapel, on Craig Drive, which is off Custer Road. Free child care is provided.

For more information, call Susan Parks at 682-6551 or Janie Hodges at 317-4925.

Contract positions include organists, pianists, choir directors, childcare providers and supervisors, Catholic Parish Coordinator, Sunday School bus drivers and Sunday School and CCD custodians.

All interested and qualified personnel should contact the senior chaplain at each chapel facility, call the Garrison Chaplain Office at 545-2050, or call the Fund Manager at 545-4960.

Sunday school meets — Need a little Bible 101? The Fort Benning Sunday School meets every Sunday at White School on First Division Road from 9:30 to 10:30 a.m.

Child care for children of parents who are teaching or attending Sunday school classes is provided at The Infantry Center Chapel.

If you need a ride, call the Religious Education Center at 545-4715.

Bilingual Mass — The Fort Benning Catholic community will hold an outdoor, bilingual Mass at Gowdy Field at 10:30 a.m. Sept. 9, followed by a parish picnic.

Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keefe and members of the congregation who have recently arrived on post will be welcomed.

Volunteers are needed to assist with this function. To volunteer or for more information, call 545-1452.

Praising others, God develops right attitude

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Praise extols the virtues of another. By focusing our attention off ourselves, praise helps us and assists others in recognizing the character and behavior of another deserving person.

Praise helps us not to think more highly of ourselves than we ought to think (Romans 12:3).

We are put to the test when someone praises us, even as precious metal is purified in the smelting crucible of a furnace (Proverbs 27:21).

Some will allow praise to go to their head. They may exhibit a superior attitude and become egotistical, proud, domineering, micromanaging, always right and never wrong.

Others may become self-deprecating or apologetic. Few are able to say simply, "Thank you."

If we seek the praise of others, we will become popular. However the popular decision is too often the expedient decision and short sighted.

Rather than seeking the praises of others, we should seek the praise of God in the decisions we make and actions we take (John 12:43).

Self-praise is no praise at all. An ancient proverb gives sound advice about praise: "Let another praise you, and not your own mouth; someone else, and not your own lips" (Proverbs 27:2). If you're thinking about praising yourself, don't do it.

Even more important to maintaining a right attitude is praising God.

Praising God should be a daily occurrence. God appreciates praise from those who are holy and upright (Leviticus 19:24 and Psalm 32:1). The very act of praising God keeps us in a spirit of humility.

Would you like to develop a right attitude? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center, located at Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

"Let us not become weary in doing good, for at the proper time we will reap a harvest if we do not give up. Therefore, as we have opportunity, let us do good to all people, especially to those who belong to the family of believers," — Galatians 6: 9-10.

Rough Rider Lincoln Smith makes his move on Comanche Jarmale Brown Tuesday.

Rough Riders take game

Defense keys victory over Comanches

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The 63rd Engineer Company Rough Riders took the 598th Maintenance Company Comanches to school Tuesday at Audie Murphy Gym, 62-46.

"Their defense was intense tonight, and they got down the court quicker than we did," said David Odom, Comanche. "We could have done better, but we stuck together, kept our heads in the game, maintained our composure and kept putting forth 100 percent."

The lessons the 1-3 Comanches learned will help them win their next game, he said.

Comanche Raymond Jackson scored 10 points in the first half, but Rough Rider Michael Keys countered with 10 points of his own to build a 30-17 halftime lead.

The point spread did not change much in the second half. Rough Rider Lincoln Smith added 10 points to help offset Darrin January's 18-point scoring rampage and to kill the momentum of Jackson's thunderous slam dunk with 10:25 remaining.

"After we built the lead early, we kept working hard on defense and pounding the boards," Smith said. "We played our best game tonight."

The 3-1 Rough Riders had the crowd asleep and the game contained, 59-46, with 1:10 remaining, but a monstrous dunk by Keys woke them up at 0:15.

"I wanted to let them know and everyone else know about what kind of team we are," Keys said.

"We never stop hustling."

Sound rebounding and timely blocks helped the Rough Riders reach a season high in points and boost team morale and confidence, he said.

Rough Rider coach Ranaldo Allen's dedication to defense led to the blow out, said Julien Martin.

"We were 0-8 last year," Martin said. "He totally turned this team around. In practice and during games, he doesn't care about points on the board. It's all about defense. Without defense, there's no offense. Skill to build!"

Next up for both teams is the intramural summer league playoffs which kicked off Wednesday.

Soldier memorialized with post baseball field

Major league player: U.S. Army leader

Capt. Ed Gawlik
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Thirty-five years ago Aug. 1, Harry "Hank" Gowdy passed away.

A former major leaguer, NCO (during WW I) and an Army officer (during WW II), Gowdy was born Aug. 4, 1889, in Columbus, Ohio.

Gowdy grew up in a baseball friendly town and began his baseball career as a bat boy for the Columbus Senators' (American Association).

In high school, he would sweep out the stands in the early morning then take pre-game practice with the ball team after school.

Gowdy broke into organized baseball in 1908 in the Ohio State League as a first baseman, later becoming a catcher with Dallas of the Texas League.

In 1910, his batting skills caught the eye of John McGraw, the manager of the New York Giants.

McGraw bought out Gowdy's Dallas contract and moved him up to the majors, with the New York Giants, where his catching skills were refined.

Traded in midseason (1911) to the Boston Braves, he spent some time in their minor league system until called up to the major's again, late in the 1913 season.

In 1914, he was the first-string catcher of the last place Braves team heading into the midpoint of the season.

But the "Miracle" Braves didn't stay in last place. Catching in 128 games, Gowdy helped guide the team from last place to the pennant and to the 1914 World Series against Connie Mack's highly favored Philadelphia As.

During the World Series, Hank broke loose slugging a single, three doubles, a triple and the only homerun of the series for a .545 World Series batting average.

His offensive display still stands today as one of the greatest World Series performances.

Gowdy would go on to play in 1,050 games and compile a lifetime .270 batting average before retiring as a player. When his playing days ended, he remained in the game as a coach and manager.

He coached and managed several minor league teams as well as the Boston Braves, New York Giants and Cincinnati Redlegs.

While Gowdy loved the game labeled as America's favorite pastime, there was something else he loved even more — his country.

Gowdy led the way during World War I when he became the first major leaguer to hang up his cleats, put on Army boots and go to war for his country.

He volunteered and enlisted into the Army, joining the Rainbow Division's 166th Infantry.

Gowdy fought in some of the major battles of WW I.

After the war he put aside the boots, dusted off the cleats and went back to the diamond. Gowdy left baseball a second time to serve his country during World War II, and for a brief period, was stationed at Fort Benning.

In gratitude for his devotion to his country during WWI, a baseball field was built on Fort Benning and dedicated to him March 31, 1925.

More than 6,500 fans watched Gowdy lead his team, the New York Giants to victory over the Washington Senators during the dedication game.

He played the game with a broken nose sustained while giving baseball lessons to Fort Benning children prior to the game.

The ballfield still stands today at the corner of Ingersoll Street and Wold Avenue on main post. It still looks the same as it did on that date back in 1925 when fans filled the seats and stood around the fences.

If you sit in the stands in the evening time and listen you can still hear the fans yelling, "Hank!"

AMU announces victories

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Shooters with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories recently.

The following results are some of their accomplishments:

• National Highpower Rifle Championships, Camp Perry, Ohio, July 31 to Aug. 9 — USAMU service rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Grant L. Singley won the National Service Rifle Championship and placed second in the National Match Rifle Championship.

The USAMU Service Rifle Team of Singley and Sgt. 1st Class Kevin B. McMahon, Staff Sgt. Norman L. Anderson, Sgt. Robert M. Mango.

Sgt. Jason M. St. John and Sgt. Tobie L. Tomlinson won the National Trophy Infantry Rifle Match; the team captain was Sgt. 1st Class Charles E. Coffey and the team captain was Staff Sgt. Kyle A. Ward.

Anderson was the winner of the Mountain Man Trophy for having the highest aggregate score in the President's Hundred, National Trophy Individual and National Trophy Team matches.

He also won the Forces Command Trophy for being the highest scoring Army shooter in the National Trophy Individual and National Team Trophy matches and the 25th Infantry Division Trophy for being the highest scoring infantry competitor.

• Interservice Skeet Championships, Fort Benning Aug. 3-5 — USAMU 2000 Olympic Skeet Bronze Medalist Sgt. 1st Class James T. Graves won the Skeet Interservice Championship.

Graves set a new interservice record with a score of 293 points out of a possible 300 points; he held the prior interservice record of 291.

Pfc. Mark L. Weeks took second place with 292 points.

The 2001 Skeet World Champion Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery was third with 285 points.

USAMU hosts 2001 shooting tournament

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will act as host for the 2001 USA Shooting 300-Meter National Championships Thursday through Aug. 26 at the Pool International Shooting Complex.

USA Shooting of 1 Olympic Plaza, Colorado Springs, Colo., is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

Thursday will be an official training day.

The 300-Meter Free Rifle Prone and 300-Meter Free Rifle Three Position matches will be conducted Aug. 24-25 and the 300-Meter Standard Rifle Three Position competition will be Aug. 26.

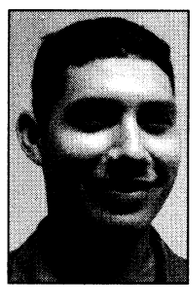
Award ceremonies will be Aug. 26 at the conclusion of the matches.

The National Championships will also chose the 2001 U.S. Team that will compete in the Championship of the Americas — called the CAT Games — to be held Sept. 30 to Oct. 7 at Fort Benning.

The CAT Games, Campeonato de Tiro de las Americas, is the shooting championships for the Western Hemisphere, which is conducted every four years.

The CAT Games is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and Pan-American Games — where shooters can win medals and set world records.

At the CAT games, the U.S. Team will compete against shooters from North, Central and South America for the title of being the best in the Americas.



For more information about the 2001 USA Shooting 300-Meter National Championships, call Paula J. Randall Pagán, USAMU Public Affairs officer, at 545-5436.

Sports reveal need to be near divine

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

commentary

The all-American — every guy wants to be his pal and every girl wants to be his gal.

Regardless of the high school you went to, everyone admired the kid who carried the team to a homecoming victory, the hometown hero, who with seconds left on the clock, pulled off a three-point jumper to win by one.

Always the center of barber-shop talk in America, sports and our idolization of its cast reveal much about American culture.

Super-heroes, or the closest we have to them, are what athletes are in America, and this reverence is a prime example of our need to place individuals in the category of titans or something more than human.

From Michael Jordan's acrobatic performance on the basketball court to Barry Bonds' uncanny bat speed, by placing super athletes in an elite hierarchy, we are able to escape the mundane and keep alive the flame of imagination.

Reality.

For an afternoon at the ballpark or an evening lighted by "Friday night lights" for a game of football, America leaves its everyday troubles outside the stadium.

On the field, ball possession is determined by the toss of a coin and not the color of your skin.

You're categorized a lineman or a receiver, not a Catholic or a Jew.

Maybe sports give us a glimpse of how society should be, or how we all know it should be, but can only come to terms with it on an even field of play.

For many people with vastly diverse backgrounds, sports sometimes is the only conduit to a civil conversation.

After all, those who cannot agree in politics, can certainly agree that the Chicago Bulls stink since Michael Jordan retired.

Family differences are usually forgotten, at least for the moment, when Emmitt Smith of the Dallas Cowboys hits paydirt down the sideline for a touch down.

In the end, sports reveal of American society, what religion has revealed of mankind for thousands of years — how the world should be and how it actually is.

And our need to be closer to divine.

"How Can A Dealer Sell Cars For Only $29 Down?"

VOLUME 4, COLUMBUS EDITION

'97 Dodge Laramie Ls 4 door 72 mo. $29 down $142 per mo., 6.9% APR, plus tax, tag & title. With approved credit.

Credit Rebuilders Are In Columbus Promising "No Credit Investigation" Car Loans.

Columbus, GA - Mr. Jimmy Peters of Credit Rebuilders of America will be hosting a mega-sales event at Bill Heard Chevrolet today, Saturday and Sunday that will surely have car buyers out in full force and talking about it for years to come. If you want or need a new, one-, two- or three-year old car, truck, family van or sport utility, then you need to pay close attention.

And best of all, The credit process is incredibly simple and fast. You present your $29 cash to Jimmy Peters, who is hosting the event for the Disposal company, and in less than 5 minutes he'll give you a list of vehicles to pick from. Payments range from $79 mo. And terms can be 6 months or less!

'98 Chevy Cavalier Ls 4 door $29 mo. $142, plus tax, tag & title. With approved credit

Even if your credit is totally ruined - I'm talking about people with previous bankruptcies, multiple repossessions, charge-offs, divorces, credit card difficulties, tax liens or just plain slow pay - Mr. Peters has a revolutionary new program that will, in almost every case, wash away all your previous credit sins and put you on the road to complete blue-chip recovery. And ,best of all, you get the new or late model vehicle of your dreams.

Well, you might say, "how much cash out-of-pocket will this fresh start and new or slightly-used dream vehicle require?" This is where the deal really gets sweet. Through Monday, credit rebuilders will only require a small amount of out-of-pocket - $29 to be exact! Yes, anyone who can raise $29 will, in all likelihood, drive a prestigious luxury Tahoe, Suburban, Silverado, Impala, Venture family van, Trail Blazer, Cherokee, Honda, Toyota, Explorer, Expedition, XLT, Laramie, Dakota, Mustang, Park Ave, or even a luxury Cadillac home this evening. Again, with only $29 down!

It only gets better. For those on limited budget payments, you can actually start in the $90 per month range. And finance rates, even for the credit-impaired, begin at an astounding 6.9% APR! A prime example of a deal of this magnitude would be a '97 Dodge Laramie SLT 4-door Club Cab pickup with the magnum V-8, automatic trans, power windows and locks, a CD changer in addition to a cassette player and, of course, air conditioning in addition to all the other comforts and utilitarian options. Priced at an unbelievable $8000, you pay $29 down, finance at 6.9% APR and make 72 payments of $142.60 each. Of course, the tax, title and license would be extra. Or if a small truck is your thing, perhaps this '98 Chevy Cavalier would hit the spot. You would simply make a $90 payment to one of the national banks hosting this event , spread over 72 months at 6.9% APR with the title, tax and license extra. As you might suspect, this 6.9% APR money is usually reserved for insiders and other blue-chip clients, so this opportunity may never, in fact, be repeated, so you must act now!

And if that wouldn't be enough to get anyone's attention, there is even more to excite savvy car shoppers. For a limited time, you may even delay payment start-up past normal vacation time, enabling you to put extra funds into summer vacation trips in your new or like-new vehicle.

For those who have been told they owe too much to trade, we have an even bolder program. Credit rebuilders vow to make special arrangements to pay off any vehicle, regardless of balance owed when they trade it in. You can trade your current vehicle, even if you believe it is a less-than-desirable brand. For any trade-in, you can expect to get an incredible amount over Kelley Blue Book Value. Even if your car is not running.

An event like this may never come to Columbus again and the lines are sure to be long. To avoid those lines, you may call ahead for a VIP pass. Ask for Mr. Peters at 322-8888 ext 108, or come to :

Soldiers to deploy to Egypt

Bright Star allows troops to practice support mission

Sgt. Michael Maddox
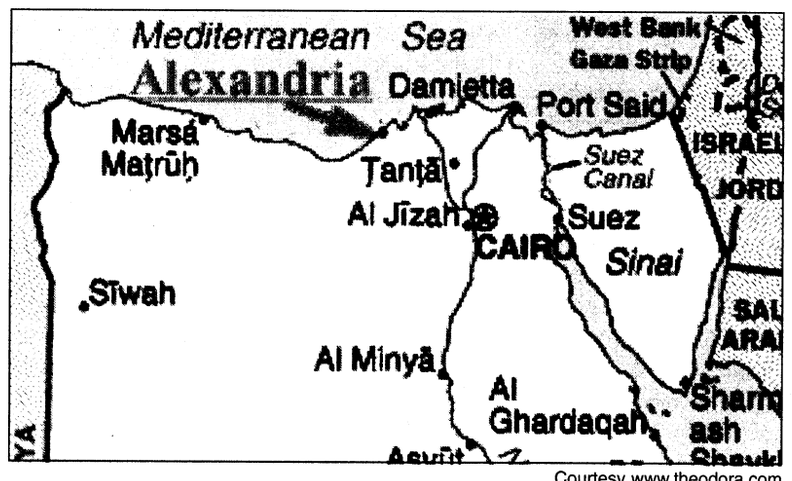
Bayonet assistant editor

More than 200 soldiers from various units in the 13th Corps Support Battalion are preparing for a two-month deployment to Egypt where they will work in support of Bright Star.

Bright Star is an annual training exercise in which American and Egyptian soldiers train with troops from European countries. The first was in 1980.

The main body of soldiers are scheduled to head out for an area near the city of Alexandria Sept. 16.

The battalion's mission during the training exercise is to provide base support for more than 4,500 soldiers.



That support will include duties such as force protection, dining facility operations, and providing tactical AAFES and MWR operations. The unit will also be responsible for providing field services like laundry, shower and textile repair services for U.S. forces.

Those duties will be divided among 13th CSB units, said 1st Lt. Tonia Horton, support operations officer for supply and services.

The unit will have two main missions during Bright Star.

"We have our HHC, with the 104th Transportation Company and the 608th Ordnance Company, they are going to run the Movement Management Control area where everyone comes in and out of," she said. "Soldiers from the 598th Maintenance Company will be doing direct support maintenance out in the field."

Inspector General visits post

General gathers information, inspects facilities

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The Army's top inspector general visited Fort Benning last week, inspecting facilities and talking to soldiers about issues concerning daily life in the armed forces.

Lt. Gen. Michael Ackerman spent four days observing the infantry way-of-life and gathering information to take back to the Army chief of staff.

During his visit, Ackerman ate lunch with company commanders and first sergeants from 3rd Brigade at Gibson Dining Facility on Kelley Hill.

"What I want to do is hear what's on your mind — the good and the bad," Ackerman said.

During the meal, many NCOs took the opportunity to talk to Sgt. Maj. Jeff Howard, Army IG sergeant major, about promotions and counseling, two things they said plague leaders the most.

His reply to the NCOs: Do the right thing.

"It's your integrity, it's your NCO corps. Do what you've got to do to be the gatekeeper to the corps," Howard

Army to receive new battery

New equipment to save military time, money

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

To operate a single-channel ground and airborne radio subsystem (SINCGARS) or a Javelin weapon system, it takes a trained soldier.

Something else it takes is power provided by a BA-5590 lithium battery.

Unfortunately, depending on the length of missions in the field, quite a few of these 2.2-pound energy sources may be needed.

Thanks to studies being done at the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, this could be changing in the near future.

The staff of the battle lab has been running tests on a new, zinc-air battery that is greatly outlasting the batteries currently used by the army, said Ron Akers, the project officer for soldier power at the battle lab.

During testing, battle lab personnel found that a lithium battery lasts about 24 hours in SINCGARS, and about four hours in a Javelin command launch unit. Tests have shown the zinc-air battery can last six or more days in SINCGARS and up to 20 hours in the Javelin.

As an added benefit, the zinc air can also be used to charge rechargeable batteries for the systems.

If the Army approves the zinc-air battery as a new power source, the extended use will benefit the Army in several ways, Akers said.

One of the major benefits would be cost.

A BA-5590 primary battery costs about $75.

To save money, the Army later adapted a rechargeable battery that could be refilled more than 500 times. Those batteries cost $270 each.

The zinc-air battery costs about $150, but can refill rechargeable batteries five or six times before being discarded.

Akers said that during a six-day training exercise, the new battery could produce a savings of up to $170 per radio. This could lead to millions saved Armywide.

Besides money saved, the new battery would lead to a lighter load for soldiers.

Benning to celebrate women's equality

Superintendent of post schools to speak Tuesday

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

"Celebrating The Tenacity of Women: Past and Present," is the theme for the Women's Equality Day luncheon at 11:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Fort Benning Officer's Club.

Sgt. 1st Class Loucious Hires, 36th Engineer Group Equal Opportunity advisor, said one of the main reasons for holding these events is to promote

Women's equality celebrated, promotes gender awareness

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

commentary

August is celebrated as Women's Equality Month. There's still much to be done if we're to span the difference between the sexes, but we should take this opportunity to look at how far we've come.

During the 1700s women did not attend the Continental Congress, and they weren't present when the state congresses convened to consider the deteriorating relationship with Great Britain. Most women simply accepted the political division of labor that demanded they take part in the struggle for freedom, but did not offer them the rewards.

It wasn't until the ratification of the 19th Amendment, Aug. 24, 1920, that women were guaranteed the right to vote.

Section One of the Equal Rights Amendment states, "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state on account of sex."

Written in 1921 by suffragist Alice Paul and passed in Congress in 1972, it failed to be ratified by the necessary 38 states by the July 1982 deadline, despite being ratified by 35 states.

Today women serve as members in Congress. We enjoy the right to an education at institutions that were exclusively for men until the late 20th century, when Congress ruled that any institution receiving federal monies must accept qualified candidates regardless of gender.

Women also have the legal right over their own bodies after the Supreme Court decision in the landmark case of Roe vs. Wade.

We have the right to serve our country as part of an integrated force. In the U.S. Army alone, there are 200 occupational specialities available for women to serve side-by-side with male counterparts.

Within the job industry, women are now employed in positions traditionally held by men, such as doctors, photojournalists, carpenters and executives.

A whole world of amateur and professional sports awaits female athletes atop snow covered slopes, raging rivers and highly buffed basketball courts. These women are even considered role models for boys and girls.

Women have a voice, and they sometimes roar.

Though Women's Equality Month is only recognized once a year, we exercise these rights year-round.

Remember, every woman has an opinion, a voice and a responsibility. We must ensure that women and men continue to forge ahead until it's no longer necessary to designate any amount of time to draw awareness to inequality between the sexes.

Shopping carts blocking aisles gridlock customer's movement

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

I was trying to barrel through a grocery store over the weekend and found myself hauled up short at every turn by carts parked in the middle of the aisles.

The gridlock was compounded by the cart drivers standing casually in what might have been passing lanes, oblivious to the gridlock developing behind them.

It was enough to make me wish I was wearing a T-shirt that read "Keep right, except to pass," although I doubt the gridlock gremlins would have taken notice.

They were too involved with choosing the best 16 ounce can of peas.

I've considered attaching my old bicycle bell to the handlebars of my shopping cart, but it wasn't terribly effective when it was on my bike so I doubt that it would have much effect at the market.

But I think I have an answer. Pave the aisle floors and paint a double yellow line down the middle.

Think about it. It's a much more durable surface than linoleum. It's a lot less slippery when wet. It would provide more traction for those slick, wobbly cart wheels. Clean up would be a snap. Just bring in a street sweeper.

And the double yellow lines might give some of the grocery store gridlock gremlins a clue.

Only some? Sadly, yes. Those double yellow lines wouldn't do much to discourage the other primary cause of grocery store gridlock, the dreaded gaggle.

These are gridlock gremlins, accompanied by at least two others, who effectively dam the aisle by standing abreast with their eyes locked in a direction at least 90 degrees away from anyone trying to pass.

I have two theories on grocery store gridlock gremlins.

One, the gremlins are secretly hired by store management. The gremlins' mission is to slow shoppers down in an attempt to make them stop and pick up extra items as they stand around waiting for the gridlock to break up.

Two, the music wafting throughout the store causes temporary brain damage. Maybe it's carrying a subliminal message that suspends all activity in the brain lobe governing reason and common sense.

Maybe it's a straightforward, to-the-point message like "Park your cart on a diagonal in the middle of aisle 5."

The music affects their hearing too. Have you noticed that you have to say "excuse me" really loud before you can get a gremlin's attention? And those are the ones without hearing aids.

I'm not always in a hurry when I'm at the market. But if you ever see me trying to move through the aisles at a double time, please keep right except to pass. I'll try to do the same for you.

Benning helps make National Night Out success

The Custer and Upatoi Terrace Community recently held our National Night Out in conjunction with a Block Party Aug. 7.

We are very pleased at what a huge success this turned out to be, but it wouldn't have been possible without the help and cooperation from the community.

We would like to thank Sgt. 1st Class Jeffrey Cassell and all of the MPs for their wonderful demonstrations; Fort Benning DPS; Shirlene Blanton (manager of the Class Six); Dorothy Mays (branch manager of the Custer Terrace Shoppette); Glennis Ross, Master Sgt. Paul Schreane and Sgt. 1st Class Jerry Ashworth, the Custer and Upatoi Terrace community life NCOs.

We would also like to recognize everyone else who contributed to this event, Fannie Knight, Albert Smith, Mike Juham, Johnny Bakers, Frito Lay, Georgia Crown, Coke, Sanrio Surprises, Baskets Plus, Papa John's Pizza, Camelot Music, Angel Jones for doing all of the face painting and anyone we may have left out.

A very big thank you to Master Sgt. Thomas Smith and the Basic Combat Training Brigade for all of their support, hard work and efforts that went in to making this such a successful event.

We were very pleased and honored to have you as our supporting unit! Last but not least, to everyone in the community who came and showed us their support.

Thanks again,

National Airborne Day: Members of test platoon attend graduation, celebrate history

Oldest living paratrooper shares history

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Sixty-one years ago, 48 service members of the Parachute Test Platoon performed the first official Army airborne jump on what is now Eubanks Field, Aug. 16, 1940.

In recognition of the success of the Parachute Test Platoon and the pioneering spirit of the armed forces that paved the way for a new method of warfare, the U.S. Senate enacted Resolution 16, designating Aug. 16, 2001, as National Airborne Day. The resolution sponsored by Senator Strom Thurmond (R) of North Carolina was passed and agreed to in the Senate unanimously July 23, 2001.

In honor of this occasion, the U.S. Army Airborne School held a ceremony in conjunction with the graduation for A Company,1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, Class 36-01, Aug. 17.

Invited to help celebrate the first National Airborne Day were three members of the original test platoon, Charles 'Swifty' Wilson, Benjamin C. Reese and Louie D. Davis, and members of the Airborne Walk Committee whose efforts have made the airborne memorial a reality.

School Commandant Lt. Col. Jeffrey Terhune, opened the ceremony by reading President Bush's presidential proclamation.

Part of that proclamation read, "The success of the Parachute Test Platoon led to the creation of a force of more than 100,000 paratroopers. Members of this force were part of the 11th, 13th, 17th, 82nd and 101st Airborne Divisions and numerous other regimental and battalion-sized airborne units."

Capt. Tony Thacker, A Co. commander, shared some history of the beginnings of the training for the first paratroopers.

According to the volunteer directive read by Thacker, all of the volunteers had to be unmarried men. Having no apparatus or training doctrine, they underwent an eight-week course, learned to pack their own parachute and practiced landing falls by jumping out of a moving trucks.

At Lawson Airfield the day before their historic jump, volunteers witnessed a 200-pound dummy being dropped from the airplane they would soon exit.

The parachute did not deploy and the dummy came crashing to the ground. Undaunted, the men performed the first airborne jump in the history of the U.S. armed forces the following day.

Guest speaker Wilson spoke of those first days of training. He talked about the leadership of then 1st Lt. William T. Ryder who was the first airborne paratrooper, leading his men on the first jump.

Wilson and other guests then took part in pinning airborne wings on graduates.

Bradley subsystem test succeeds despite nonfire

'Chafed wire' thwarts attempts to fire missile

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

"If we do not fire today we have not failed," Col. Charles Betack, TRADOC Systems Manager, Bradley, said to a small band of engineers and Bradley soldiers at Hartel Range.

The group met to witness a live fire to determine whether the M-2A3 Bradley Fighting Vehicle, with its improved self-diagnostic system and software, could eliminate the need to conduct a TOW verification. Those verifications. Verification requires the insertion of a missile test container and then simulate firing the missile every 180 days to ensure reliability.

"We are here for several reasons," Betack said, "To see if the system can perform a self test and fire a missile."

Second, the group was to verify if the system could properly identify the different types of missiles fired that morning.

System engineers from Raytheon, Improved Ballistic Acquisition Systems, Red Stone Arsenal and Close Combat Missile Systems waited as soldiers of B, Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment prepared two BFVs for the live fire.

"There should be no question about whether or not the Bradley's are ready for today," said Sgt. 1st Class Clarence Lovick, branch chief of the Bradley Transition Course. "These soldiers performed the necessary checks again and again."

Perched on a ridge, the two BFVs stood at the ready. But by noon both attempts were aborted because the two Bradleys had intermittent faults regarding the IBAS.

Betack and the engineers quickly regrouped and began inspecting the vehicles.

Later in a report by Mark Willhoft, A3 System Integration and Software assessment manager of United Defense Limited Partner, determined the fault was due to a "chafed" wire in the Day TV Field of View switching assembly.

The minor defect caused the self-diagnostic system to misinterpret information, but CCMS engineers were able to repair the problem.

"Coming out here provided an opportunity for engineers to perform onsite checks," Betack said.

Though the exercise did not result in missile firings, TSM members and the engineers learned more about the troubleshooting beyond the "Built in Testing" and the "Built in Testing Equipment" capability of the vehicle, he said.

The following day the 4th Infantry Division, Fort Hood, Texas, successfully fired 58 missiles from the A3 Bradley using the electronic circuit integrated repair test system.

A CLOSER LOOK

The following is a brief history of the Bradley Fighting Vehicle:

- In 1982 the U.S. Army was equipped with the Bradley M-2A0 Infantry Fighting Vehicle and M-3A0 Calvary Fighting Vehicle equipped with a 25 mm cannon, a basic TOW subsystem.
- During Desert Storm, engineers and combat developers integrated technologies and designs for the Bradley M-2A2 and M-3A2 equipped with a 600 horsepower powertrain, armor title designed to detonate when struck by a round, spall liners and armor able to withstand a 30 mm round.
- After the war, combat developers reviewed the the BFV's shortcomings and technologies. What they developed was the Bradley M-2A2 Operation Desert Storm and M-3A2ODS.
- Today the Army is fielding the M-2A3 and M-3A3 BFV equipped with the latest technology to include the core electronic architecture, second generation Forward Looking Infrared acquisition, command and control software a commander independent viewer, an NBC detection system.

Junior officers eligible for free law school

Army to fund legal training for 15 officers

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The Army is now accepting applications to fund law school for eligible lieutenants and captains.

"The Funded Legal Education Program is an excellent opportunity for those officers who are interested in becoming lawyers and staying in the Army to serve their country," said Lt. Col. Laurel Wilkerson, Fort Benning's deputy, staff judge advocate. "The Army pays for all law school expenses, and the officer continues to draw active-duty pay while attending law school (a three-year course of study)."

Under the FLEP, up to 15 active-duty commissioned officers may be able to attend law school in fall 2002, according to an Aug. 13 Army News Service release.

The program is open to officers in the grades of second lieutenant through captain. The Judge Advocate General will accept applications from Aug. 1 through Nov. 1.

Time is of the essence, Wilkerson said.

Applicants must have at least two but not more than six years of total active federal service when training begins, according to the release.

Interested officers should register immediately for the next Law School Admission Test, commonly called LSAT, and review Chapter 14, AR 27-1 (The Judge Advocate General's Funded Legal Education Program).

"There is no special allocation of slots to any installation," she said. "Selection is made on the qualifications of the individuals applying."

Officers accepted for the FLEP program incur two-year active-duty service obligations for each academic year in law school.

"This program is a win-win program for the officer and the Army," Wilkerson said. "The officer attends law school, paid for by the Army. At the end of three years, the Army gets a Judge Advocate with prior military experience."

All FLEP applicants must be personally interviewed by the Staff Judge Advocate of the applicant's command, Wilkerson added.

Interested officers can call 545-4611.

Intern program teaches mission, opens doors

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

A senior from Transylvania University became the first student to take part in the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's Internship Program designed to give visiting students and professors a better understanding of the institute's mission.

Amber Cason, a liberal arts senior at her school in Lexington, Ky., researched the institute's impact on Latin American female students and their professional lives.

"I was able to track the ascent or professional progression, if you will, of Latin American women by studying the change in the (Department of Defense) courses taken by these women over the years," said Cason, who is working on a paper she hopes to publish.

The program, part of the expanded role of the institute's aim to provide an academic forum with educational opportunities for undergraduate students that enhances and supports the understanding of democracy, human rights and cooperative relations within the Western Hemisphere, will welcome interns from Yale and Tulane universities before the summer's end.

"The internship program opens doors for the institute into civilian universities for undergraduates, graduates, professors, guest speakers and joint research programs," said Lt. Col. Olin Doss, director of the Civil and Military Studies Department at the Institute.

Interested applicants should send a brief letter outlining their interest and dates of availability, along with a copy of their resume, undergraduate transcript and two letters of recommendation.

courts-martial

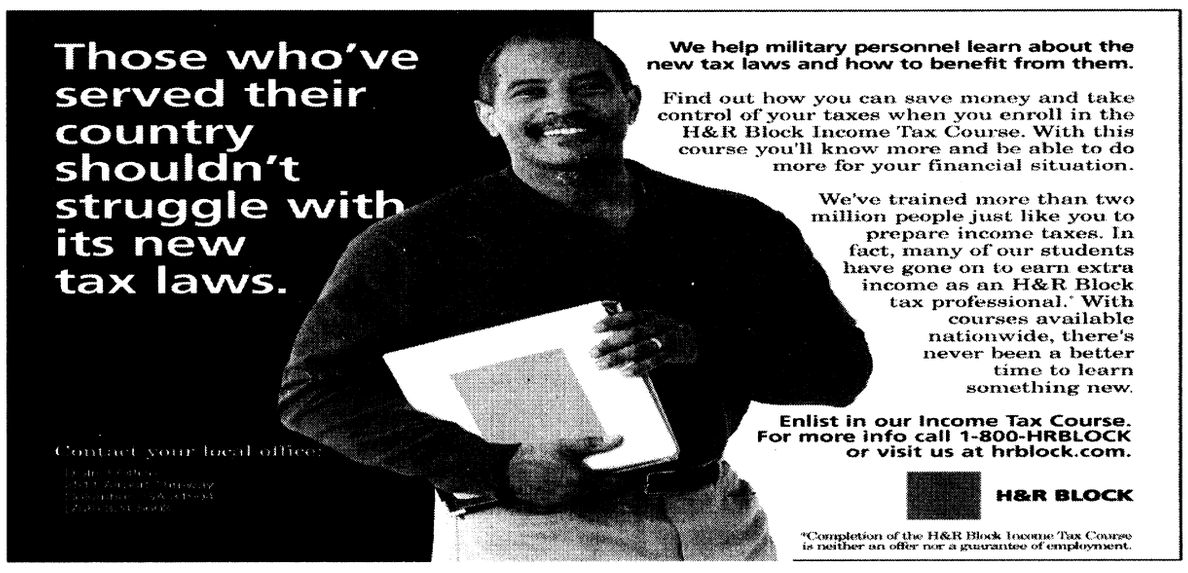
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

At a general court-martial Aug. 15, Spc. Nathan O. Puffinburger, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was convicted of receipt of stolen property, of conspiracy to conceal stolen property, and of attempt to conceal stolen property.



He was sentenced to be confined for six months, to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit $643 pay per month for six months, and to be discharged from the service with a bad-conduct discharge.

At a general court-martial Aug. 8, Spc. Nicholas N. Hammond, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, was convicted of fleeing the scene of a collision and of assault.

He was found not guilty of attempted premeditated murder, but found guilty of the lesser included offense of aggravated assault by intentionally inflicting grievous bodily harm. He was sentenced to be confined for a period of four years and 134 days, to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, and to be discharged from the service with a dishonorable discharge.

At a general court-martial Aug. 8, Staff Sgt. Alex M. Lankford, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, was convicted of three specifications of wrongful distribution of marijuana, of fleeing apprehension by a CID agent, and of willful damage to a military vehicle. He was sentenced to be confined for 30 months, to be reduced to the grade of E-1, to forfeit all pay and allowances, to pay a fine of $318 to the U.S. government.

At a general court-martial June 27-28, Staff Sgt. Keith B. Lafavor, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, was acquitted of one specification of rape, one specification of assault, and of indecent assault.

Engineers work on emergency system

Troops perform vital service for medical facility

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Six engineers from B Company, 249th Engineer Battalion (Prime Power), out of Fort Bragg, N.C., recently deployed to Fort Benning to work on Martin Army Community Hospital's emergency power system.

"We are here to assess the main emergency power system in the hospital and ensure the reliability of the system," said Sgt. 1st Class Mark Smeragliuolo, NCOIC. "Then we can make recommendations and provide necessary maintenance and repairs to the 25-year-old power system."

During a pre-site visit in late May, Staff Sgt. Carlos Rivera, project manager, met with hospital engineers to see first-hand what sort of equipment, repairs and the number of Prime Power troops required to carry out the mission.

After making recommendations, six engineers, two electricians, two mechanics, an instrumentation technician and an NCOIC were assigned to the project.

Russell Thomason, Fort Benning facility engineer for MACH, said he contracted the military engineers because of their accurate and nonbiased assessment of the emergency equipment and because they are military assets, the work is done at cost to the hospital.

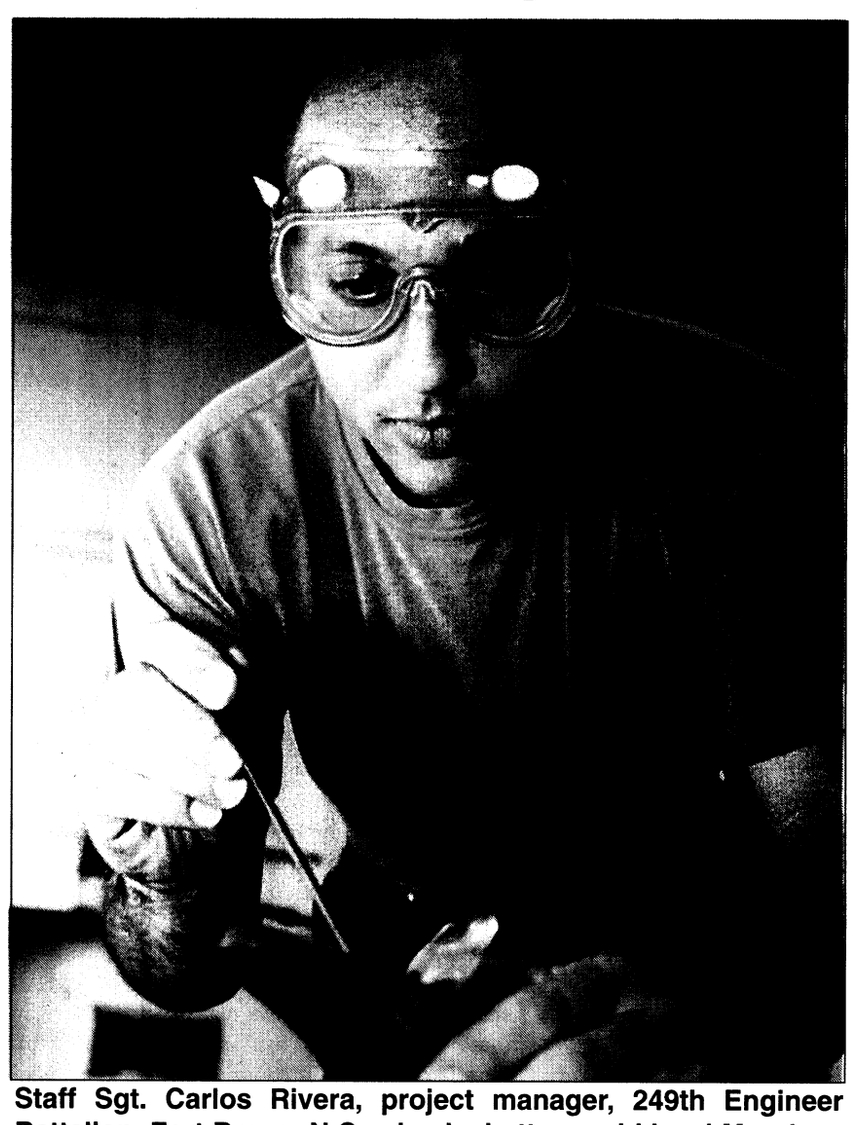
"We are required to test our emergency system monthly," Thomason said. "But we test it every two weeks and found that it improves the reliability of it if we run it more often."

Thomason said he is satisfied with the choice of going with a military engineer team because of the thoroughness of the report submitted by the unit to his office and the troops worked well with the MACH power plant supervisors.

The engineers are performing maintenance on the emergency power system. The system consists of two 600-kilowatt-hour diesel engines and generators.

The emergency power system is designed to automatically start 10 seconds after the main power supply cuts off in order to continue to provide power to critical life support, operating areas, emergency lights and an emergency elevator.

For safety reasons, the engineers isolated one generator at a time, never leaving MACH without emergency power.



"We are the only military unit that does this type of work, making it a very marketable skill," Smeragliuolo said. "We are also the only engineers that fall directly under the Army Corps of Engineers."

Dealing with emergencies and disaster relief is what these engineers are trained to handle beginning with the one-year school at Fort Belvoir, Va. The school is offered only to active-duty or reserve soldiers with at least four years of service and a GT score of 110. For more information in becoming a engineer, 52E, contact a branch representative at (703) 806-3904 or DSN 656-3904.

The group is scheduled to return to Fort Bragg at the end of the month.

Soldiers: To support Bright Star exercise in Egypt

While the work is a little different from what's done on a daily basis, the deployment will still be a good experience for the soldiers, said 1st Lt. Yvette Lachute, support operations ammunition officer.

"I think a lot of the soldiers are ready to go to get out and do something different. There have been an excess number of volunteers, among the NCOs and officers, almost everyone was a volunteer," she said.

A majority, 150, of the soldiers deploying from the 13th CSB are coming from the 598th Maintenance Company. Lachute said she thinks they will benefit tremendously from Bright Star.

"This will be a good opportunity for the soldiers from the 598th to get out there and do what they do," she said. "It will be a good learning experience for the people in the HHC as well because they will see how their mission affects the morale of the soldiers. This will be a new experience for many of them."

The soldiers are scheduled to return to Fort Benning in late November.

IG: Visits Fort Benning to inspect facilities, talk to soldiers

advised the senior NCOs.

Besides fielding questions and comments from the soldiers on everything from AWOL issues to retention, the IG spent much of his time evaluating the installation.

Ackerman said it pleases him "to see the really good work soldiers, NCOs and officers are doing everyday."

Howard Ackerman

As the Army IG, Ackerman performs the same duties as all IGs, his duties are only done on a higher level.

The IG mission is to provide assistance to anyone connected to the Army; to inspect units; to investigate inquiries; and to teach and train leaders to do the right thing.

Inspectors are unbiased and confidential in everything they do because they are the eyes, the ears and the conscience of the commander, Lt. Col. Selby Rollinson, Fort Benning IG, said. Rollinson said he spends much of his time combating the stereotype that the inspector general is bad and is there to cause problems.

"There's nothing bad that can come out of working with IG," he said. "I want to help people and I want to help units."

Soldiers seeking IG assistance should first use and communicate with their chain of command because the command is often not given the opportunity to solve problems, Rollinson said.

"Seeking IG assistance without fear of reprisal is the right of any soldier, civilian or family member," Rollinson said.

Battery: Will lighten soldier's load, save Army money

resupply for rechargeable batteries, you would need to have about six or seven of them. Multiply that by the weight, 3.8 pounds and you're carrying more than 30 pounds of batteries. The zinc-air battery is only five pounds for more than 72 hours of use."

He said offers many benefits.

"As a light fighter, a guy toting a rucksack, there are problems with carrying so many batteries during an exercise. They are heavy, battery performance is limited, where can you charge it in the field," he said.

"It created an amount of logistical problems for the whole dismounted infantry spectrum. If you do the math, these new batteries just make sense."

He admitted there are still a few minor considerations with the zinc-air.

"There are some obvious drawbacks to the battery, but it's give and take," Akers said. "It won't fit in the battery box for the radio, but the rechargeable battery will while it's connected to the zinc-air battery."

He said the inability to fit directly in the battery compartment of a Javelin should also be a part of battle planning.

"On the offensive where you have to run from point to point with a Javelin, you may want to use the current battery," he said. "But if you are in the defensive, you would want to have the zinc-air battery because it will last throughout the night."

Testing with the zinc-air battery has been ongoing this week as battle lab staff confirm battery stamina with Javelin command launch units.

Akers said units that would like to participate in the testing are welcome to volunteer by calling 545-8344.

cultural awareness and diversity throughout the military community.

"This specific event is to promote awareness of the struggles women have faced on the road toward equality and to explore the contributions that women have made in our society," Hires said.

Women's Equality Day has been celebrated since 1974 and will be celebrated this year by way of song, dramatization and guest speaker presentation.

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of the Fort Benning Schools, will be the guest speaker.

McMullen has served in the position since 1994.

"She (McMullen) is a great example of a woman leader who has helped to create an excellent educational system," Hires said.

McMullen earned a bachelor's degree and a master's degree in education from Columbus College, followed by a doctorate in education from Auburn University.

Her community involvement includes Boy Scout Board of Directors, The Family Center Board of Directors, Youth Orchestra Board of Directors and the Columbus College Alumni Association. She was also a Judge for the Ledger-Enquirer's Page One Top Teacher Award.

Nancy Engles Productions will bring history alive with characterizations of Emilia Earhart and Annie Oakley during the lunch.

Tickets for the luncheon cost $7.50 and may be purchased from committee members or brigade equal opportunity advisors.

The deadline to buy tickets is today.

For more information, call Master Sgt. Kevin Elliott at the Post Equal Opportunity Office at 545-6665.

Program enriches NCO understanding

Check-Ride focuses on policies

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Just as training for initial entry soldiers does not stop after basic training and advanced individual training, neither does it stop for drill sergeants graduating the U.S. Army Drill Sergeant School.

NCOs who report to the Infantry Training Brigade to serve as leaders, infantrymen and teachers to trainees are required to complete several days of additional job-specific training designed to aid them in their new assignment.

ITB's Check-Ride program began this year when Col. Thomas W. Hayden, ITB commander, and Command Sgt. Maj. Kenny LeonGuerrero, ITB command sergeant major, put their heads together in an effort to help NCOs make the transition into the IET environment.

"We have the Check-Ride to reinforce the commanders intent, policies and standards of training soldiers in the IET environment," LeonGuerrero said.

During the course of his welcoming in-brief to new drill sergeants, LeonGuerrero fields questions from the NCOs on everything from entry-level separation packets to trainees who are absent without leave.

Citing scenarios from his days as a drill sergeant, LeonGuerrero told the sergeants, "Your job as a drill sergeant is to train, you've got to make sure you work the system and you work it hard. You've got to make the system work for you.

"But it's the quality — the quality of training and the quality of our leadership (that makes you a good leader)."

He also tells them, "If you commit yourself to quality, you won't have any problems with soldiers," because those soldiers will see the work put into turning them into infantrymen.

In addition to welcome briefings from the ITB commander and sergeant major, drill sergeants are given classes on brigade policies, risk management, sick call procedures, non-judicial punishment, and proper ammunition handling.

"The Check-Ride gave a lot of information they didn't give in drill sergeant school," Staff Sgt. William McGovern, a drill sergeant with 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, said. "It teaches you about the different facilities and training areas."

"They're all things a drill sergeant needs to do," he said. "These are things that ITB has put together to help a drill sergeant be a better drill sergeant."

The six-day knowledge-enhancement session also covers counseling, team building, mail-handlers class, MILES instruction, hazardous material awareness, range validation and certification on the new rappel range, Eagle Tower.

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Clegg, a drill sergeant in 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, has been training soldiers in the IET environment since April, after graduating from drill sergeant school. Clegg said the Check-Ride program teaches what needs to be taught to new drill sergeants.

"The policies and regulations (classes) are one of the things that's more educational than everything else," he said. "We learn from the horse's mouth, not from hearsay."

Clegg believes Check-Ride helps younger NCOs more than older ones because "a lot of the older guys kind of understand (the policies and regulations), but the younger guys, all they see is the hat."

The program, Clegg said, enriches the younger NCOs understanding of what being a drill sergeant is all about, as well as about policies and regulations. The Check-Ride program occurs withing one month after each drill sergeant school graduation, and lasts approximately seven days.

Ranger wives negotiate obstacles

As her heart picked up speed, so did the questions of uncertainty that were running through her mind.

Leslie Christian, wife of an Army Ranger at the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Camp James E. Rudder, was facing the challenge of rappelling off a 60-foot wooden tower.

She placed her gloved hand on the rope, took a step back and placed her feet firmly on the tower wall. Slowly, inch-by-inch, she rappelled the wall and landed safely on the ground.

"It was fun!" Christian said. "I was looking forward to it."

Rappelling was just one of the numerous activities at the annual Florida Ranger Camp Wives' Swamp Walk at Camp Rudder Saturday in which 65 women, who were the wives of Army Rangers, experienced first-hand what it is like to be an Army Ranger in training.

The Ranger camp conducts the third phase, known as the swamp phase, of the Army Ranger course. Many Rangers say that the course is the toughest two months a soldier will face short of combat.

The Swamp Walk provides an excellent opportunity for the Rangers wives to learn about their husband's job, according to Maj. Steve VanStraten, 6th RTB executive officer.

"This is a team building event aimed not only at having fun but also to ensure that Rangers' wives understand better what their husbands do," VanStraten said.

Ranger wives are a unique group of women, said Lt. Col. Mark Fields, 6th RTB commander.

"Ranger wives are special," Fields said. "They operate the family and are unselfish, giving and always ready to try something new."

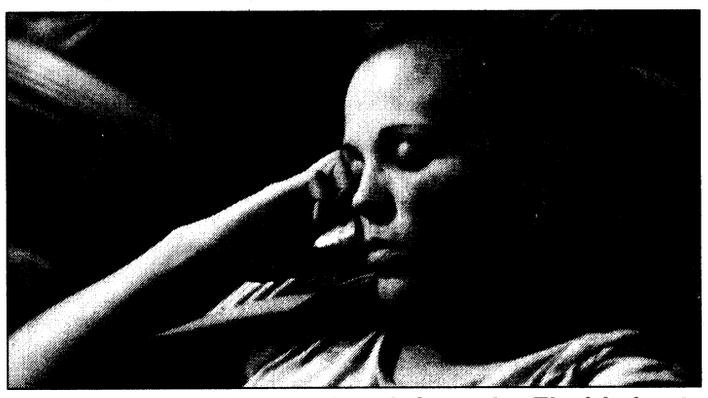
The event kicked off with a reptile familiarization class in which the wives learned about the snakes and alligators that inhabit the local area. Other activities included a weapons familiarization class, a mock emergency exit from an aircraft and a rope bridge crossing at a nearby river.

But perhaps the highlight of the event was the swamp walk during which the women had to cross a muddy, chest-high river littered with floating logs. Many of the women feared that alligators and water moccasins might be in the murky waters. However, all of the participants successfully made it across.

Toni Bailey, wife of Army Ranger Staff Sgt. Bill Bailey, said participating in the swamp walk helped her develop a great deal of respect for what her husband does.

"Now I understand why my husband comes home tired," Bailey said.

Sara Rollinson, wife of Army Ranger Lt. Col. Selby Rollinson, agreed.



"Participating in this event has made me more patient and understanding. There's a lot of teamwork, motivation, hard work and dedication involved," Rollinson said.

At the end of the day, the worn out but proud swamp walkers attended an award ceremony during which they each received a diploma which stated the challenges they had overcome.

Each diploma read, "...in testimony of having overcome alligators, mud, snakes, guns and Rangers."

When asked if she would participate in another swamp walk, Bailey said that she could not wait to do it all again. She has previously participated in a similar event called Jane Wayne Day, which is the first phase of ranger training in Fort Benning, Ga.

"Each swamp walk has a different experience," Bailey said. "It gives me the opportunity to make new friends, possibly meet old friends and take on new challenges."

RANGER SCHOOL

Students overcome heat, humidity in first week

Sgt. William A. Graves
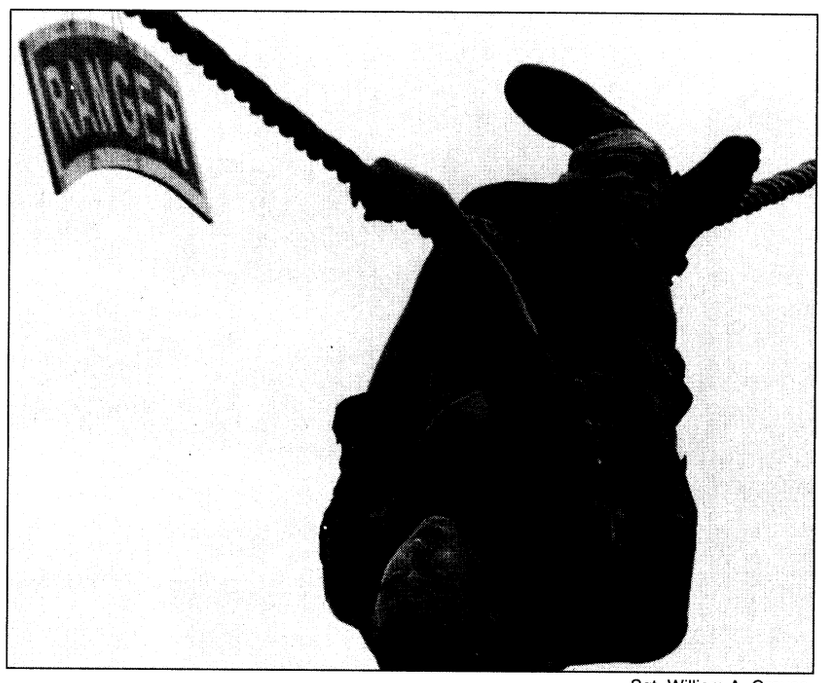
Bayonet staff

Since Robert Rogers founded the rangers in the 1750s, soldiers have known earning the ranger title is one of the toughest titles to earn.

The first week of Ranger school completed Aug. 16 gave its students an early indication of their chance to succeed, said Ranger Training Brigade Command Sgt. Mike Kelso who graduated Oct. 4, 1979. Then, as now, the first week of Ranger school focused on ensuring ranger students could meet the physical requirements of the school, Kelso said.

"The only difference between today and 1979 is the lack of intense mental and physical, in your face, training that RIs used to subject ranger students to," Kelso said. "But that's OK because ranger school is still not a walk in the park."

Only serious soldiers need apply, he added.



"Ranger school is tough so don't come out here if you are going to quit during the 5-mile run," he said.

The first week of the current 63-day school weeds out students who do not want to be there, said Staff Sgt. Scott Smith, ranger instructor.

"We determine how much heart, desire and determination they have," Smith said. "We see if they were told to do this or if this is something they really want to do."

Aug. 16 was the toughest day of week one, he said. Students began the day with the 2.5-mile buddy run, complete in BDU, boots, load bearing equipment and weapon, at 6 a.m. Students followed that with the Malvesti Confidence Course, Water Confidence Course and hand-to-hand combat.

"The heat and the humidity are the biggest obstacles for them to overcome this week," Smith said.

Sgt. William A. Graves

A ranger student strives to slap the "tab" on the rope traverse obstacle at the water confidence course. Ranger students negotiate the confidence course during their first week of ranger school.

"That first little step on the log walk (of the water confidence course) is a big mind (game), but the hardest parts of the course are yet to come."

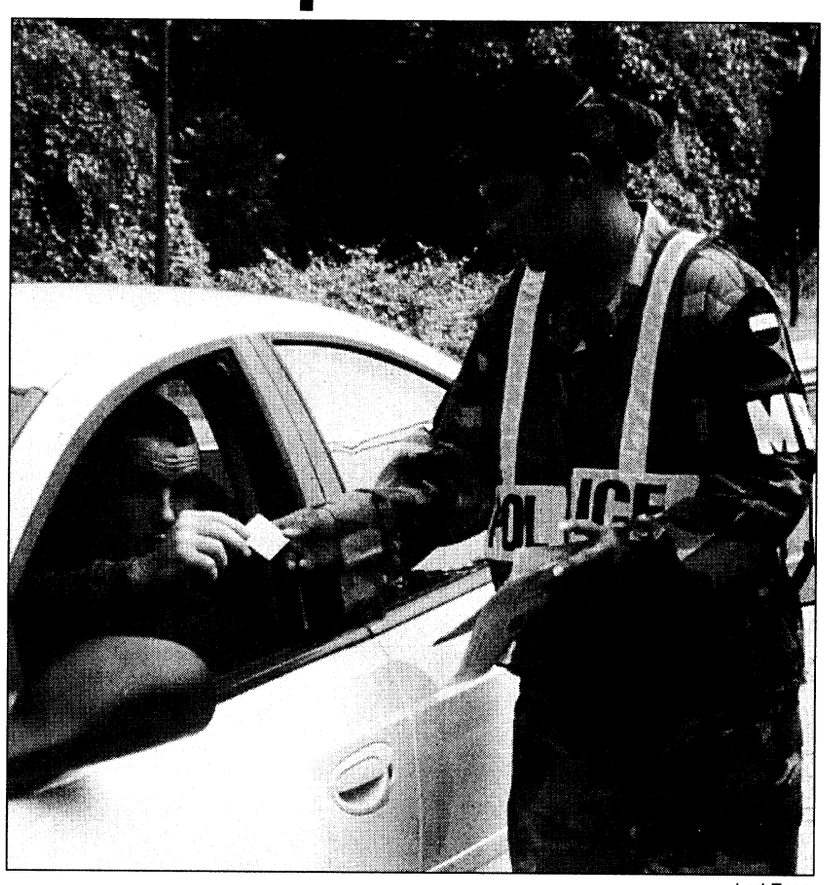
Still, the first week was how it was supposed to be — rigorous, both mentally and physically, said Sgt. 1st Class Todd Roman, a student in the class.

"If you don't have teamwork, the physical part of the course is harder," Roman said. "This week reminded us we need to rely on our buddies more — to the left and the right."

The 33-year-old said the water confidence course was challenging, but it was also the most enjoyable part of the week. Besides the 40-feet high log walk, students perform the rope drop and 75-feet high suspension traverse (slide for life).

"You get that funny roller-coaster-ride feeling. I'm sure I wasn't the only one with butterflies in my stomach."

The first-time Ranger school student said he is glad the RIs are there for the students.



"They are outstanding NCOs who take pride in their job," Romans said. "You can tell they love their job. They'll stay here as long as it takes and push us as much as they can to make sure we succeed."

He said he is confident he'll earn the ranger tab. "I'll make it as long as we come together as a team," Romans said. "In the field, out on patrol, your buddy can make you or break you."

The camaraderie and trust built between soldiers in week one not only made the rest of the course look less daunting, but also reminded him of why he is there.

"I love being here," he said. "This is what I always wanted to do."

Bulls squeak past 203rd FSB, 18-17

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek

Kevin Tarpley, 203rd Forward Support Battalion, strikes out during the first inning of the game Tuesday.

Team makes comeback in seventh inning

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

The Bulls from B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment squeaked past 203rd Forward Support Battalion, 18-17, in the Intramural Softball Post Championship third round of play Tuesday at Knappenberger Field.

"We played a better game than the rest of the season," Shane Stafford, 203rd head coach, said.

"It was a bad loss, but we'll get over it, and I wish (the Bulls) the best of luck."

The Kelley Hill game began slowly, neither team scoring runs until the third inning when 203rd FSB's Larry Walk put the first run on the board.

203rd FSB's Kevin Tarpley began a rally in the fourth, which ended in the team gaining 10 runs, and the Bulls were only able to score four runs in the bottom of the inning.

The Bulls tried to pull themselves out of a slump in the fifth inning, but to no avail. The score, 15-10, remained in the Bull's favor.

In a heated seventh inning, the Bulls narrowly pulled ahead of 203rd FSB, winning the game, 18-17. Bulls players James Brown, coach, Tyler Harper, Craig Garrison, Clayton Coleman and Shane Larkin helped bring their team to victory with one run a piece.

"Oh my God, I'm elated," Brown said about the win. "We knew we had a team that could do it, we played up to the challenge."

Brown said his team started off the night rusty, making "stupid mistakes, but once we got our head in it, we just jammed."

"We knew it was do or die," he said.

ARMY MARKSMANSHIP UNIT

NCO wins National Service Rifle Championship

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

CAMP PERRY, Ohio — A service rifle shooter with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit went head-to-head with hundreds of America's best competitive rifle shooters at the 2001 National Highpower Rifle Matches Aug. 1-14 and came out on top.

Sgt. 1st Class Grant L. Singley won the National Service Rifle Championship for the third time in six years; he was also the 1996 and 1998 National Champion and finished second last year.

This year's win makes Singley the first soldier ever to win the National Service Rifle Championship three times and ties him for the most wins by any shooter ever.

Shooting the USAMU modified M-16 A2, Singley also placed second in the overall National High Power Rifle Championship, shooting against more than 800 of the country's best shooters using highly sophisticated bolt-action competitive rifles.

The soldier said his goal now is to win the overall National Highpower Championship.

Singley also made history in 1996 by being the only shooter to ever win the President's Hundred Match, which he won in 1992, the Interservice Rifle Championship and the National Service Rifle Championship all in the same year.

Singley said the National Matches are the most important competition for service rifle shooters and are conducted once a year to determine who is the best in America.

"I feel great about winning and even better about being able to contribute to the success of the USAMU Service Rifle Team," Singley said.

"I thank the coaches and members of my team for their support and encouragement."

Singley added that the work of the gunsmiths and ammunition reloaders of the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop was a direct factor in his success.

Singley

"The shop gives our team a great amount of support throughout the season and my rifle and ammo performed flawlessly," Singley said. "I won because everything flowed well and nothing went wrong."

USAMU Service Rifle Head Coach Donald L. Heuman echoed Singley's comments.

"Our rifles are great; without the constant support from our gunsmiths, the shooters could not be the champions they are," Heuman said. "We have the two best gunsmiths in the world — Chris Murray and Gene Clark."

Last month at the Interservice Rifle Championship at Quantico, Va., Singley won the overall individual Interservice Championship as well.

That was the second time Singley won the Interservice Championship, the first being in 1996 as a sergeant. This time, however, his score equaled the Interservice Record held by Heuman who set the record in 1994 when he was in the Marines.

"Singley's performance was outstanding," Heuman said. "The match requires a lot of self-discipline and mental concentration. He's a seasoned veteran who can maintain his focus and keep a record pace. He's a very disciplined shooter who works very hard."

For more information about the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, call 545-5436.

USAMU service rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Kevin B. McMahon won the National High Power Service Rifle Long-Range Championship and the Porter Trophy. Spc. Elisha M. Hoover took third place in the Porter Match and Staff Sgt. Norman L. Anderson was second in the High Master Division.

Sgt. 1st Class Steven C. Young and Singley took second and third place in the Wimbledon Cup Match.

Spc. Aaron F. Rebout and Anderson took second and third place in the Farr Trophy Match and in the High Master Division, Hoover was the winner and McMahon was third. McMahon also was awarded a Silver Palma Pin for his performance in the Palma Individual Trophy Match.

The USAMU Team of Young, Singley and Sgts. 1st Class Scott A. Boyd and Charles E. Coffey took third place overall in the Herrick Trophy Match; the team coach was Sgt. Robert M. Mango and team captain was Sgt. Emil Praslick III.

In the match's Service Rifle Division, the USAMU team, coached by Staff Sgt. Kyle A. Ward, was the winner.

The shooters were McMahon, Hoover, Tomlinson and Anderson. The Ward Team also won the High Service Award in the Roumanian Trophy Team Match.

The USAMU Service Rifle Team of Singley, McMahon, Anderson, Boyd, Mango, Sgt. Jason M. St. John and Sgt. Tobie L. Tomlinson won the National Trophy Infantry Rifle Match; the team coach was Coffey and the team captain was Ward.

The USAMU team of Anderson, Singley, Mango and McMahon won the Enlisted Men's Trophy Match and set a national record; Coffey was the coach and Young was the team captain.

Anderson was the winner of the Mountain Man Trophy for having the highest aggregate score in the President's Hundred, National Trophy Individual and National Trophy Team matches; he also won the Forces Command Trophy for being the highest scoring Army shooter in the National Trophy Individual and National Team Trophy matches and the 25th Infantry Division Trophy for being the highest scoring infantry competitor.

Army Ten-Miler team to be chosen Saturday

Soldiers show they have desire to win

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

This time every year competition for slots on the post's Army Ten-Miler team begins.

Currently, with two time trials under their belts, two soldiers here have proven themselves worthy of a position on this year's team.

One of those soldiers is 2nd Lt. Stephanie Dempsy, platoon leader, 608th Ordnance Company.

Standing 5 feet, 8 inches tall, Dempsy has posted two time trials, running both in about 76 minutes, making her the top female right now, Master Sgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr., Infantry Training Brigade supply NCOIC, said.

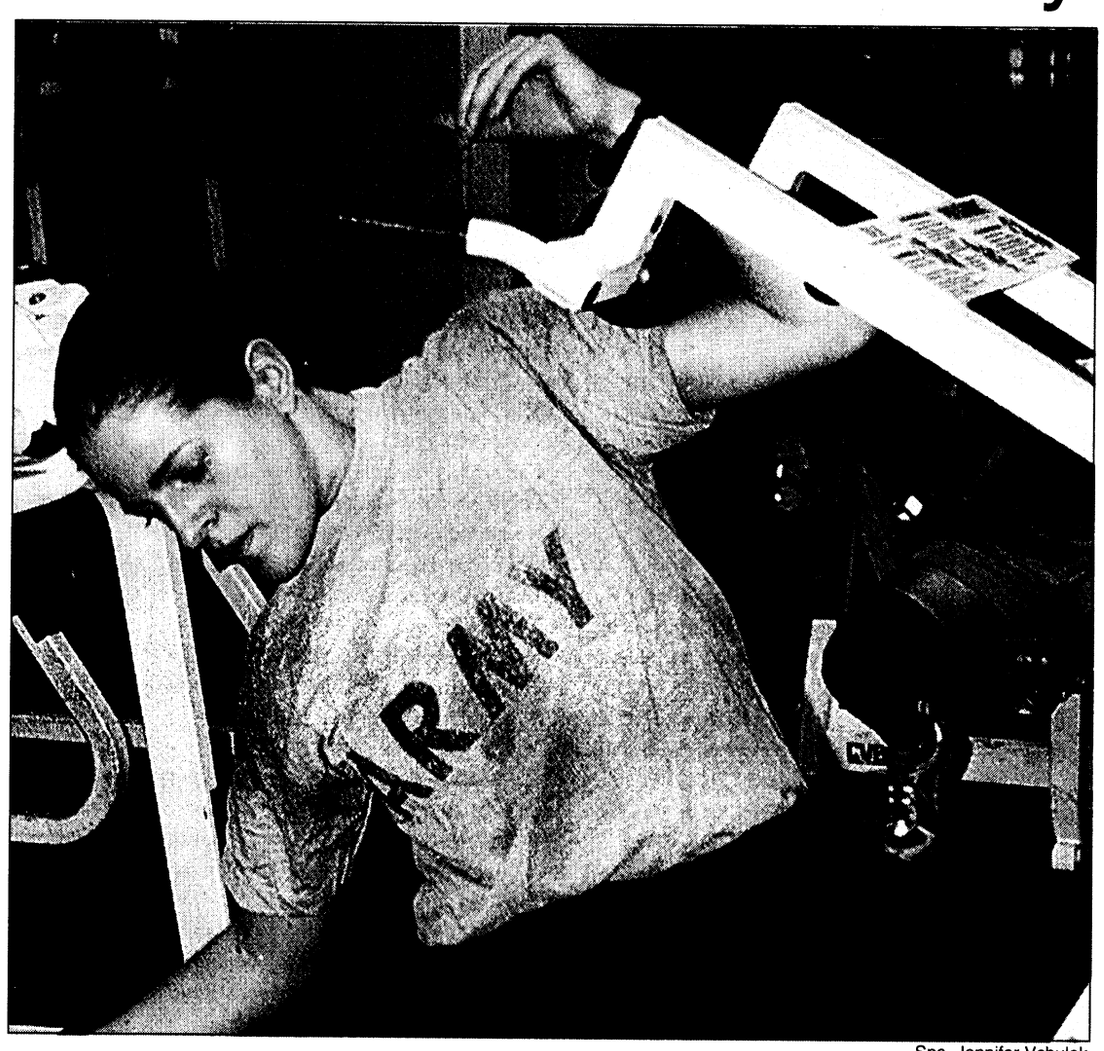
The 23-year-old Dempsy has been competing in everything from cross country to indoor track and swimming for the past 10 years.

"I'm competitive and have somewhat of a natural talent," Dempsy said. "What drives me is winning and striving to compete with others."

Competition, however, is not what drives Pvt. Greg Paris, Headquarters Service Company, ITB.

"I love running," Paris said. "It's freedom — going out and doing what you can do. It's peace."

Paris, at 29 years old, finished his last time trial running 59 minutes, one of his best times so far.

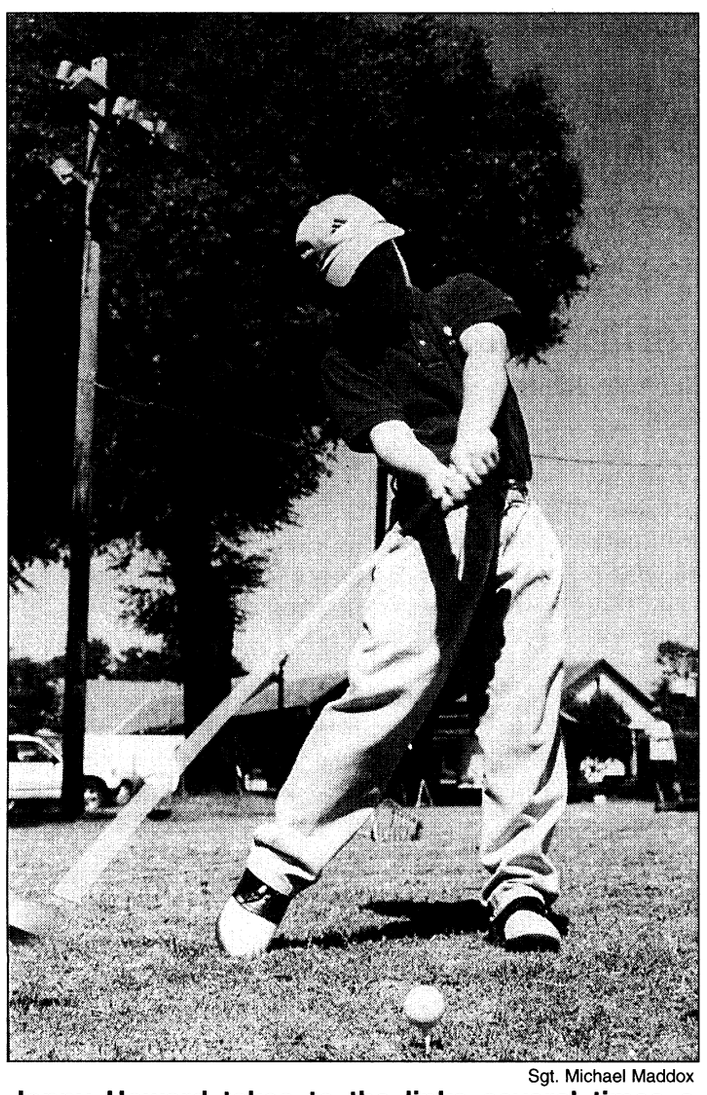


Paris, who is 5 feet, 10 inches tall, said he has made bigger strides in running by staying focused, staying in shape, and most importantly, by just running.

Neither soldier will know if they have been selected for the team until Saturday, when they complete the last time trial at 6 a.m. on Sand Hill.

There will be 16 runners selected to represent Fort Benning in Washington, D.C., Oct. 14.

McDonald encourages any soldier wanting to compete for a slot on the Army Ten-Miler team to make the trip to Sand Hill Saturday for the final time trials.



For more information, call Carol Gearheart at 544-9595.

8-year-old finishes fifth in tournament

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Jonny Howard takes to the links several times a week to keep up on his game.

Third-grade golfer places in world event

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

In the likes of some of golf's greatest, Jonny Howard is tearing up the greens with a mean pre-shot routine and a champion's long drive.

Unlike well-known athletes such as Tiger Woods and Vijay Singh, he is only 8 years old with an athletic talent that has placed him at several local events and most recently fifth at the U.S. Kids World Championship at Jekyll Island, Ga.

Jonny was born at Fort Lewis, Wash., and began to swing a club of sorts as a toddling 2-year-old. His father, 1st Lt. Tim Howard of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, reminisced about how it all started.

"I remember it well. We were stationed in Washington and it was raining. I started swinging my club inside and Jonny tried to copy me but the club was too heavy. So I handed him a yardstick ,and here we are today," Howard said.

Now Jonny's offering up some tough competition to young golfers around the globe.

At the U.S. Kids World Championship, his competition included 55 international players from countries such as Canada, Mexico and Sweden. Also participating in the tournament was Cheyenne Woods, niece of Tiger Woods, who has also recently given the golfing community something to talk about.

During the two-day, 18-hole competition, only six of the 55 finished under par. Jonny's final score at the tournament was a one under 71, just two strokes short of the lead.

"It was a great tournament. We fell two shots short of the lead with a 71. The winner shot 69, and when we look back, it's easy to find two shots we left on the course," Howard said.

The U.S. Kids World Championship includes 500 of the world's best golfers between the ages of 6 and 12. This is the second year that Howard placed in the top five. Last year he placed third in his age group and was the long-drive champion.

Although Jonny has found his niche on the golf course, there is much more to this not-so-typical 8-year-old.

"My favorite sport is golf, and my favorite players are Tiger Woods and David Duvall," he said. "I also really like football. I had to stop playing baseball because it was messing up my golf swing."

Howard's father said that when he's not golfing, Jonny uses football to wind down from a hectic season.

"Jonny golfs year-round. We wind down with football and get back into golf slowly in the summer," the senior Howard said.

Jonny said that he likes to compete, and his father added that he typically performs better during competition than at practice.

Jonny's short game coach, Jim Bishop of the Columbus Junior Golf Association, said Jonny's strengths are his long drive and the support of his family.

"Jonny definitely has a length advantage compared to other kids his age. Now we are working on his short shot, and fine tuning his game. He has natural ability, and his strength is how far he can hit the ball," said Bishop.

Jonny's father said the important thing now is to have fun and keep him grounded.

"We try to focus on keeping it fun for him and not too far off the ground," Howard said.

Jonny is just that — not too far off the ground. He still has interests that are typical of someone his age.

"I like school and playing outside with my friends, but sometimes practice keeps me from doing those things," he said.

Jonny keeps his head in the game, hoping he will accomplish his goal, "I want to be on tour," he said.

Given the amount he has accomplished in his very short life, Jonny has both the ability and the positive attitude that is par for the course.

"All credit should go to Jonny and his parents. He has good guidance and his father is very knowledgeable about the game," Bishop said. "He's head and shoulders above the rest, and with that good guidance, Jonny can go as far as he wants to with this."

Conditioning camp prepares youth for football season

Athletes work toward strength and agility

Michele E. Hanson
Special to the Bayonet©

Blue Field, prominent site for youth football, has remained dormant since last fall until Monday when more than 200 young athletes and their perspective coaches gathered for a yearly ritual … conditioning camp.

Conditioning kicks off football season, and according to Youth Services Director Linda Laine, the 10-day camp is designed to prepare the athletes for football and help prevent football related injuries.

"Safety is taken very seriously and is the main reason we hold the conditioning camp each year," she said.

Volunteers with an array of football experience were recruited to enhance the safety and the conditioning being conducted during the camp.

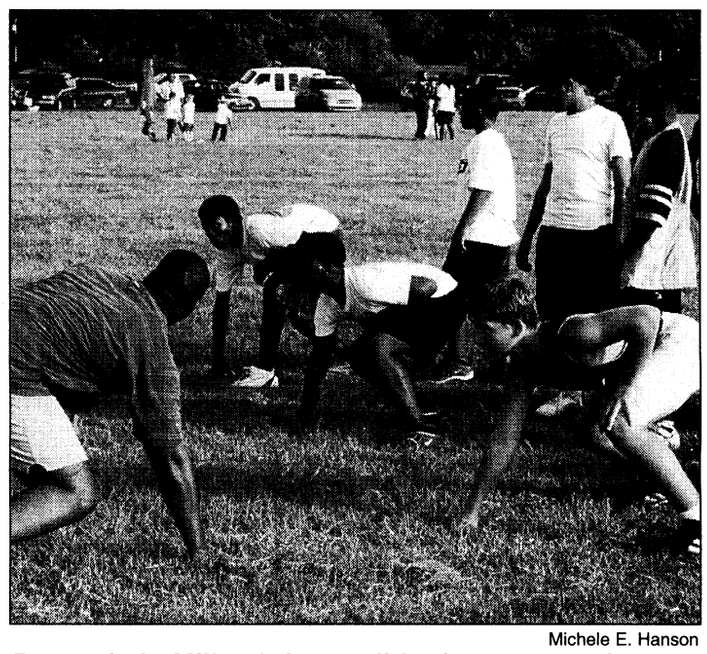
Camp coordinator Eric Hare said all the camp coaches were involved with football for most of their lives and they bring a wide variety of football experiences with them.

"The goal of this year's football camp is to get the players in good enough condition to minimize injury while focusing on safety, proper technique, strength training, and agility," Hare said. "Other than conditioning, the coaches will hone in on a few basic skills, including stance, tracking the football, angle speed and balance."

To further insure the safety of the players all coaches are required to gain certification through the National Youth Sports Association. Certification is valid for a year and can be used at any Army instillation in the world. The three-hour certification course will be held at 6 p.m. Sept. 11 at Youth Services.

The official football draft will be held Sept. 15 in the Main Post YS gymnasium.

"This draft is blind and the registration forms are closed to the coaches. The only information available to the coaches when they draw their teams is age, height and weight," Laine said.



She said that after the draft, all team rosters will be posted in the gymnasium and that practice will begin as soon as the coaches contact their players.

Games are scheduled to begin in early October.

"Playing football is a lot harder than it looks on television," said 10-year-old Raishaun Bennett after his first day of conditioning camp. "I hope to be a wide receiver, but I'll be just as happy to play anywhere."

Football, soccer and cheerleading are scheduled to begin in early October.

For more information, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

A BETTER OPPORTUNITY

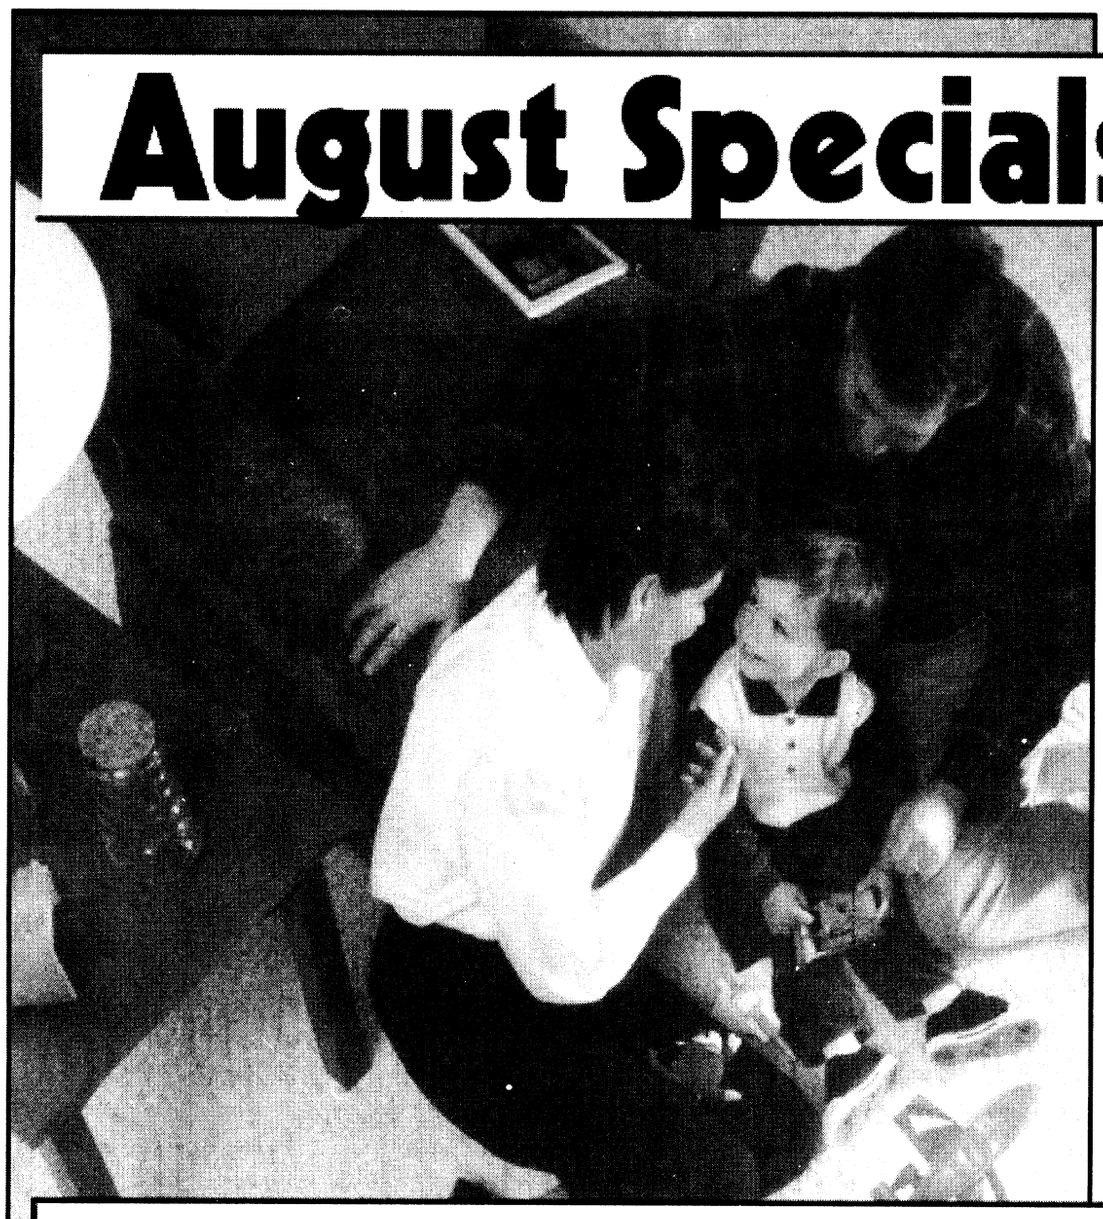
Saint Francis Medical Center, a leader in specialized healthcare, is conveniently located next to Interstate 55 in Cape Girardeau, Missouri, which is 115 miles south of St. Louis and 160 miles north of Memphis, along the Mississippi River. Founded in 1875, the 264-bed acute care facility now serves five states and has over 1400 employees. Major services include state-of-the-art Heart and Neurosciences Institutes, Orthopaedics, and a new Family Birthplace including private LDRP rooms and a Level III Neonatal Nursery.

With a population of approximately 40,000 people, Cape Girardeau is the largest community in Southeast Missouri, and has a blend of small-town charm with big-city amenities and easy access to the larger metropolitan areas. Historic homes and buildings complement the city's modern shopping, dining, and lodging. The citizens are proud of the excellent public and parochial schools, including Southeast Missouri State University. With it's low crime rate, Cape Girardeau offers a warm hospitality and family atmosphere to reside in.



Saint Francis Medical Center is pleased to offer career opportunities in the following areas:

- Registered Nurses
- Radiology Technologists
- Ultrasound Technologists
- Nuclear Medicine Technologists
- Medical Technologists (ASCP)

Saint Francis offers attractive sign-on bonuses, competitive salaries, and an excellent benefits program. Please contact the Human Resources for additional information at: (573) 331-5109, FAX: (573) 331-5010, cwoodfin@sfmc.net or bkeller5102@hotmail.com.

COMMUNITY

Club welcomes, assists international wives

Community benefits from organization

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

¡Hola y recepción! hallo und Willkommen! Bonjour et bienvenue! Ciao e benvenuto! Hello, and welcome!

No matter how you say it, it is always nice to hear.

Imagine moving your family to a country where everything is foreign to you — the language, the customs, and the ways of the people. For some, it is unimaginable.

That's why the International Spouses Club of Fort Benning has offered a warm, entertaining way to welcome and assist spouses from across the globe for 26 years, said Olga Kelly, club president.

Kelly, a native of Germany, was one of three founders of the club back in 1975, and is currently its president.

"With the military life comes a lot of change and frequent moves. The change can be especially stressful on family members from other countries,"Kelly said.

While the club has given many the gift of companionship, it offers a lot more than that.

"We try to help them with their language skills, translating important documents, and we conduct a citizenship course. However, most women today come here already knowing how to speak English, so language is less of an issue now than in the beginning," Kelly said.

"We also help with the little things like where to shop and who has good deals."

There are currently about 60 women from around the globe involved in the club.

Miriam Lang of Australia, a charter member, said much has changed since the club began in 1975.

"When we began, the Army offered much less in the way of support for wives than it does today, and we were trying to help in that area," Lang said. "This was during the time that soldiers were coming back from Vietnam, and the wives had little support in dealing with what their husbands were going through."

"It was especially hard for foreign wives because they already had to adapt to a strange culture," Lang said.

The club members meet monthly to sip a cup of coffee and catch up with each other. The club is open to all ranks and nationalities and consists of about 50-50 active duty and retired spouses.

A very important function of the club is to bring a little of the women's heritage to life here in the United States, Kelly said.

They do this by celebrating cultural holidays and taking part in Columbus' Annual International Festival.

This year the spouses set up camp at their booth and donned native dress. Members from Costa Rica entertained guests with a folk dance.

The club reaches out to international soldiers who are at here for training.

Each year, students from the International Students Training Detachment

Community kicks off campaign to help the Hooch

Clean up efforts keep river beautiful

Laura Martinson

It's that time of the year again, so slip into some clean up gear and come out and give back to the community.

The month of October marks the "Help the Hooch" campaign, the annual Chattahoochee river cleanup effort. Organizations and individuals come out each year to clean up the Chattahoochee River, Columbus and surrounding areas. The Help the Hooch program is in its sixth year and is a part of a statewide initiative called Rivers Alive. The program has grown dramatically since its beginnings in 1995, according to Dr. Becky Champion of Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center.

"We have been flabbergasted by the response from the community. The Columbus area has always had the largest turnout in the state," Champion said.

Last year's effort set a record-breaking high with 10,000 volunteers, up from 500 in 1995.

A planning committee coordinates to divide clean-up responsibilities among a group of Partner Organizations, including the Chattahoochee RiverKeeper, Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center, Fort Benning, and area schools.

"The schools have been an integral part of the clean up effort," said Jim Phillips of the Chattahoochee RiverKeepers. "Around 5,000 of the participants last year came from area schools."

Most of the student volunteers work on their local areas and tributaries because the river itself can be unsafe or inaccessible, Phillips said.

"The students clean up more in their local areas, such as playgrounds, neighborhoods and parking lots," Phillips said. "When it rains, the trash in these places gets carried to the sewer system and ends up in the river, so it

A CLOSER LOOK

Help the Hooch history:

- Help the Hooch was started in 1995 with 500 volunteers
- Local efforts set a statewide record in 2000 with more than 10,000 volunteers
- Began with five sponsors in 1995, now 35 sponsors donate either time or money
- Trash collection has gone from 20,000 individual items in 1995 to more than 87,000 items in 2000.
- Recycleables include glass, aluminum and plastic, as long as it is not too dirty .
- Some interesting river pick-ups include: carseats, refrigerators, tires, a telephone booth, a statue of the Virgin Mary and false teeth!

Golden opportunity: RedStixx team with Fort Benning residents to raise funds for hearing impaired infants and children

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

When the Columbus RedStixx take on the Wilmington Waves Saturday evening at Golden Park, they're offering Fort Benning residents an opportunity to score one for handicapped children.

A portion of each ticket sale at Saturday's game will benefit the Katie Elizabeth Turner Memorial Fund, which provides financial support for families of infants and children who need hearing aids and other assistive devices.

Katie was the daughter of Linda Turner, a first-grade teacher at Dexter, and Dave Turner, who retired from the Army in 1993. She died April 21, 2000, one month shy of her 24th birthday and just six weeks after being diagnosed with Burkitts Lymphoma, a rare form of cancer that strikes less than 100 people in the U.S. each year.

At the time of her death, Katie was pursuing a master's degree in pediatric audiology at the University of Georgia in Athens.

Katie's parents and the Department of Communications Sciences and Disorders at UGA established the fund in Katie's honor.

"We tried to make something positive out of this," Linda said. "We could set back and let (Katie's death) destroy us, or we could make something good come of it. When the college called us with the this idea, we knew it was the perfect way to celebrate Katie's memory."

The Turners spend evenings and weekends at the RedStixx ticket booth at Golden Park. When team officials learned about the endowment, they offered to sponsor a fund-raiser.

Saturday's game will begin at 7:15 p.m. Tickets are available at the gate, and military ID holders will receive a discount. For more information, call 571-8866.

For more information about donating to the Katie Elizabeth Turner Memorial Fund, call 542-4582.

DECA announces world savings for local shoppers

Commissary gearing up for annual sale

Bonnie Powell
Defense Commissary Agency

FORT LEE, Va. — Forget Mount Everest. Stacked end-to-end, the nearly one million cases of product ordered by commissaries in anticipation of the "World's Biggest Case Lot Sale," Sept. 8-9, would be about 400 miles high – higher than the space station orbits the earth.

The savings will be high as well. According to the latest market basket survey, using the commissary benefit saves military service members 29.2 percent on their overall grocery basket. Case lot pricing increases those savings significantly — as much as 50 percent or higher.

Commissaries have traditionally held case lot sales on a store-by-store basis. This is the Defense Commissary Agency's first attempt at holding a system-wide case lot sale on the same weekend.

"Mark your calendars. We're taking our mission to increase customer savings to the next level," said Robert Vitikacs, Chief of DeCA's Marketing Business Unit. The World's Biggest Case Lot Sale will feature everything from canned goods to paper goods, and a few items in between. "We'll have diapers, cereal, juices, soups, and health and beauty items as well as meat and produce specials," he said.

Shoppers planning on making a special trip for the Friday and Saturday sale should call ahead or simply log onto www.commissaries.com. Click on the store "location" button to access a favorite commissary's web page for information on case lot sale hours and some of the general items up for grabs. Stores normally open on Sundays will hold their sale on Saturday and Sunday, Sept. 8-9.

"I promise it will be worth the drive," Vitikacs said. "Participating commissaries have a list of about 300 items from which they can choose products that fit their customer base. Of 283 commissaries worldwide, nearly all of them are taking part in the case lot sale."

A few commissaries will not be able to participate due to size, location, or logistics involved in getting supplier support for the event. The second weekend in September was chosen to take advantage of generally good weather in most locations and to enable military families to stock up for back-to-school and the coming holidays.

"While shoppers are saving additional money during the case lot sale, we also want them to look around inside their commissary for all the improvements and conveniences we've added," said DeCA Director, Air Force Maj. Gen. Robert J. Courter Jr. "We always offer a wide range of groceries on sale. When people shop more often they get some great deals. We want our customers to know that the commissary isn't just their 'payday' store — it's their 'everyday' store!"

Sherrie Nelson

a preK teacher at Wilson Elementary School where she has taught for 23 years.

Personal: Nelson and her husband David, an AFLAC employee, live in Columbus with their three children, two sons who are in college and a daughter who attends Columbus High School.

Education: The Florida native attended Pensecola Junior College and the University of West Florida before earning her teaching degree in early childhood education from Columbus State University.

"In high school I took part in a pilot program, working with kindergartners. That's when I fell in love with the little ones and with teaching," she said. "I knew then that this was how I wanted to spend the rest of my life."

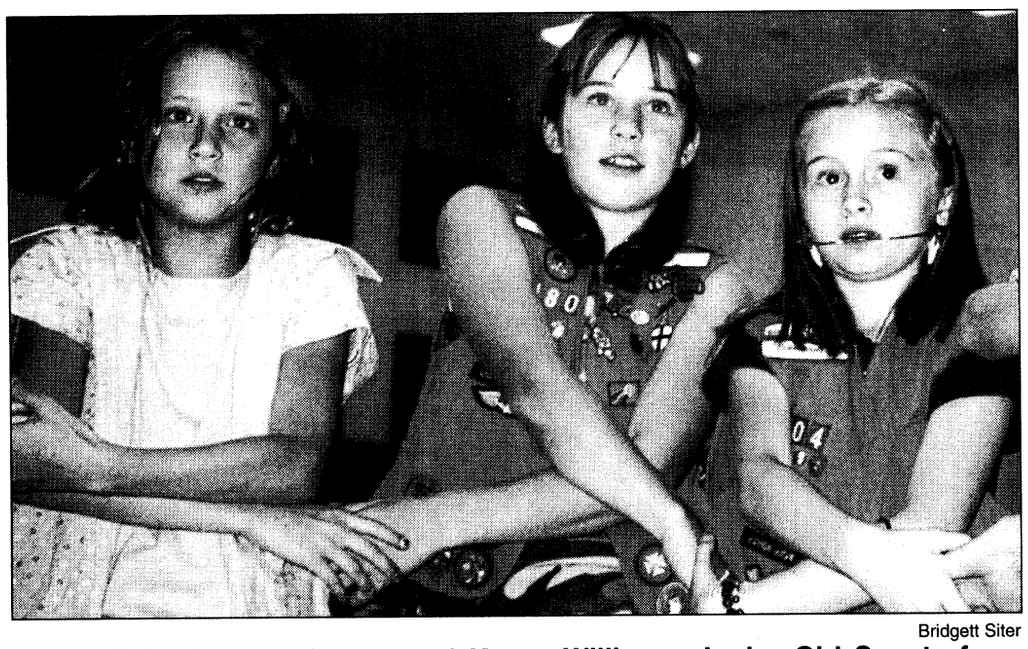
History: Nelson did her student teaching at Fort Benning's Wilber Elementary School, now McBride Elementary School. The following semester she began her career at Wilson, where she taught kindergarten for 20 years before becoming a preK teacher.

Hobbies and interests: Nelson enjoys travelling with her husband, whose job takes him on the road frequently. They visited Memphis, Tenn., during the summer, and took the whole family on a cruise to the Bahamas.

Nelson calls herself an "animal freak." She has three dogs, Penny, Lady and CiCi, a parakeet named Isabelle and a rabbit she plans to let her students name.

"Everybody knows I've a passion for rescuing animals," she said. "A few years ago I adopted a cat that had been abandoned at the school. Naturally we named him Wilson."

Plans and goals: "I want every child to be successful and to have a good feeling about themselves and school," Nelson said.



"That's why preK is so important. That's my opportunity to teach them that learning is fun.

"I hope I can meet each child where he or she is and help them each to grow and develop to their full potential."

What others are saying: Wilson's principal Phyllis Parker said is "dedicated to her students and a very sincere, nurturing person."

"She genuinely wants her students to learn all they can in preK," Parker said. "And she goes far beyond what is expected of her. I think Wilson is very fortunate to have her here."

Girl Scouts kick off round-up

Volunteers, leaders share in fun and friendship of Scouting

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Juliette Gordon Low was an avid outdoorsman and athlete at the turn of the 20th century, a time when girls were discouraged from team sports and camping.

But Daisy, as she was known to her friends, made it her life's mission to help girls become self-reliant and resourceful in the outside world as well as in the home and to bring more life choices to all girls — the rich, the poor and the handicapped.

She founded the Girl Scouts of the United States America in 1912, and nearly 100 years later, three million girls in America are following in her footsteps.

Since the beginning, the Girl Scouts have been a uniformed movement, because Low believed the outward appearance should reflect inward strengths and ideals.

Besides uniforms, today's Girl Scouts — Daisies, Brownies, Juniors, Cadettes, Seniors and adult volunteers — have their own laws, ceremonies, pledges, badges, pins and patches.

They promise to serve God and country, to help people at all times and to live by the Girl Scout Law, which requires them to be honest, fair, helpful and courageous and to respect others, to be resourceful and "to make the world a better place."

Kayla Chappell has been a Girl Scout for nearly seven years.

Now a Junior Scout and a sixth-grader at Faith Middle School, Chappell said Scouting has made her own little world a much better place.

"I've made a lot of friends and learned a lot about nature and first aid," she said. "I've had fun, but it's gave me a lot of self confidence too."

Chappell is a member of Girl Scout Troop 104, under the leadership of Irmgard Cordell, a 31-year Scouting veteran.

"There are times when I think I have more fun than the girls. I certainly wouldn't have stayed at it this long if I didn't like what I'm doing," Cordell said.

The Concharty Council of Girl Scouts on post conducted a Girl Scout Round-Up, Wednesday at Faith Middle School. Cordell and leaders from Fort Benning Girl Scout troops met with new Scouts, potential leaders and parent volunteers.

There are 9 troops on Fort Benning, but Graham hopes to double that figure in the next month. Girl Scout representatives will be visiting post schools in an effort to boost membership.

"We need leaders," Cordell said. "My advice to anyone thinking about this is just do it. Be a co-leader or assistant if you're not sure. See if you like it. Help these girls out and see if Girl Scouting is for you."

Andrea Graham, service unit director for Fort Benning, began volunteering with the Scouts six years ago when her daughter became a Daisy.

Graham, a former Girl Scout and the daughter of a Girl Scout leader, said scouting has given her family a sense of stability.

"When my husband went to Saudi, I went home to Mom," she said. "When he went to Korea, I stayed here because Alisha was in the Girl Scouts and I had responsibilities as a leader. While he was away, Scouting gave us a routine. It offered stabilization. It kept us busy and gave us a strong network of friends."

Like Cordell, Graham said she has as much fun as the Scouts, and she's garnered recognition and rewards as a leader. Twice she's been named Fort Benning Volunteer of Excellence.

"The Girl Scouts reward their adult volunteers, as well as the girls," Graham said. "They provide all kinds of training in leadership and first aid — the kind of training I wouldn't have had anywhere else. And it's helped me develop invaluable organization skills."

Graham said adult volunteers are needed in various positions, including "Green Knights" — fathers registered as Girl Scout volunteers.

The registration fee for girls, kindergarten through 12th grade, and adult volunteers is $7.

Centers offer social interaction

National Child Care Association

One of the most important decisions parents make on behalf of their young children is finding a quality child care provider.

Studies have shown that children who attend quality child care centers develop better social and problem solving skills, increased confidence and are more ready to learn upon entering school.

However, choosing the right child care center presents many difficult decisions for parents.

The National Child Care Association suggests that parents carefully weight their options when choosing a center for their child.

"Child care centers can offer children an excellent introduction to learning and the opportunity to interact socially with their peers," said Lynn White, NCCA executive director. "When searching for a child care center, I recommend that parents be prepared to ask a lot of questions."

White recommended that parents ask about staff and child ratios, staff qualifications, training and certification; safety provision, including immunization policies; and components of the center curriculum or programs.

Here are some tips parents can use to find the right child care center for their child:

• Consult other parents who have children in child care. What do they like and dislike about the center their child attends?

• Phone several centers convenient to your home or office and set up a time for you and your child to visit.

• Visit a few centers and encourage your child to become involved in his or her prospective classroom as you observe.

• Have a list of questions prepared to discuss with the center director. Don't forget to ask about school policies regarding holidays and late fees; staff liability, training and education; and tuition.

• Make sure that the center has adequate safety procedures and that it is clean, well maintained and offers adequate space for children to play.

• Check to see if the center is licensed by a respected accrediting authority such as the NCCA. This will ensure that the center is meeting high standards in all important areas, including disease prevention.

Make sure to check for visible safety provisions such as smoke detectors, fire extinguishers and emergency exit signs. In addition, remember to ask about less visible safety precautions, such as immunization policies.

Children easily pass infection to one another, especially in a close environment such as a child care center.

State Health Departments in several states now require children to be immunized with the newest recommended vaccine, Prevnar, prior to entering child care. Prevnar protects infants and young children from invasive pneumococcal disease, such as meningitis.

Many child care centers have enacted similar immunization policies on their own.

Child care can be a rewarding experience for both parent and child. Taking the time to find the right center can help a child grow socially and take the important first steps toward a lifetime of learning.

Group: Offers companionship, helpful information

are invited to the club's anniversary dinner.

This year they were entertained by a Middle Eastern belly dancer.

Pauline Espinoza of Panama said she has benefited from with the club.

"It has been a rewarding experience to meet ladies from other countries and learn about their cultures.

"Holidays, especially Christmas, are great because you get to see how other countries celebrate their religions," Espinoza said.

Lang said the club also offers the benefit of being a part of a much larger community, the Army community.

"In my opinion, people of military communities reach out to each other more than civilian communities. Military communities are less provincial and more dynamic, and they have really reached out to us," Lang said.

Now celebrating its 26th year, the International Spouses Club has paved the way for many cross-cultural friendships.

"The wonderful thing about these women is that we are all different in terms of language and culture," Espinoza said. "But beyond that, we are all the same, no matter what country, race or religion we represent. Although our members are from all over the world, there is a great sense of family. That is what it is all about."

Upcoming events for the International Spouses Club include a German Unification Day celebration, Octoberfest and free citizenship classes.

For more information about the International Spouse's Club and upcoming events, contact Kelly at 687-6471.

Program: Needs volunteers, improves environment

Terry Bond is a third-grade teacher at Dexter Elementary and an active volunteer in the program since 1998. She has formed an environmental group of third- and fourth-graders called the Earth Watchers.

"Each year we offer an open invitation to children and parents to come out and help. Keep Columbus Beautiful gives us the supplies, and we usually cover the creek in front of Infantry Hall," Bond said. "It is important to teach the children this lesson early so that they believe in taking care of the earth as adults."

"Our goal historically has been to build a base of awareness to try to keep people involved, and we have been overwhelmed by the response," said Phillips.

Awareness is definitely increasing, with numbers growing dramatically each year.

"We started out just doing the river, and it has now become a regional effort with clean-up happening everywhere. We had 3,400 volunteers two years ago, and more than doubled that last year with 10,000," Champion said.

The amount of trash picked up seems to be remaining stable, said Champion.

"We picked up around 87,000 individual items of trash for the past two years. With twice as many volunteers, one would expect twice as much trash. The numbers haven't changed much, so we must all be doing a better job at keeping the community clean," Champion said.

Polly Gustafson of the Fort Benning Environmental Management Division has been helping the "Hooch" since 1999.

"We began with 65 volunteers from Fort Benning, 15 of which were soldiers. We began with three sites in 1999, and now clean up six sites, including Eddie Bridge, Uchee Creek and Engineer's Island," Gustafson said.

Champion said Fort Benning's participation has been wonderful and continues to grow.

"The success of this program is due primarily to the true partnership we have with the community, and Fort Benning is one of those partners," Champion said.

The Help the Hooch program is not only a partnership, but has also become a family affair.

"This is a good community project and an educational experience for the children. We are all helping the river and it has become an outing for adults," said Phillips.

The clean-up day, always on a Saturday, culminates each year with a thank you bash. This year's party will be from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the soccer field at Columbus State University.

Refreshments will be served, and business sponsors will set up booths and displays. Clean up will be from 9 p.m.to midnight.

For more information, contact Help the Hooch at 653-4008.

Open house provides parents sneak peek

Parents join in for back to school fun

Katie Payne
Dexter Elementary School

There's something magical about the eve of the first day of school when everyone comes together in celebration of a new school year.

Students, parents, and even grandparents turned out in numbers for Dexter's Sneak-a-Peek Open House Aug. 13.

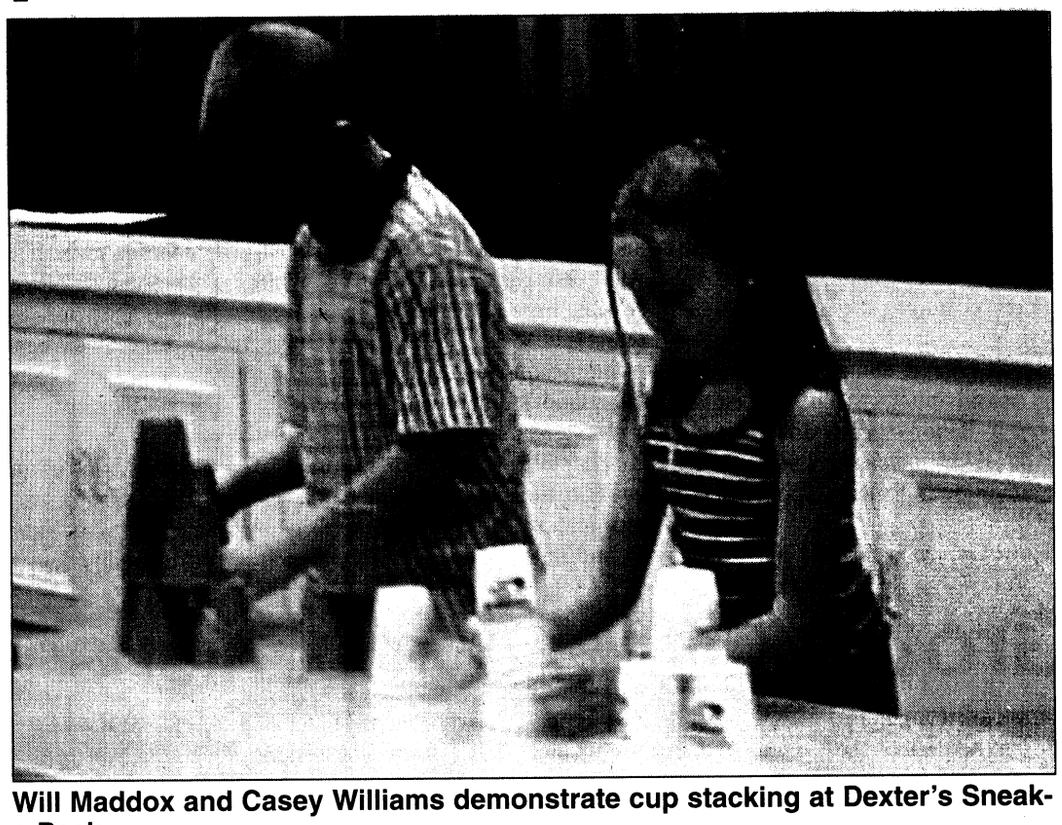
In the opening assembly, principal Vicki Rogers welcomed parents and students and shared the mission and goals of the new Community Strategic Plan.

"Literacy and critical thinking will be the focus of the school improvement plan, and the theme for the new year will be 'Every Child a Reader — Every Child a Writer,'" Rogers said.

She emphasized the importance of parental involvement and its effect on student achievement, encouraging parents to work together as partners in the educational process.

After the assembly, classrooms were opened for parents and students to visit. Parents and students met the school staff, received orientation packets from teachers, and had opportunities to ask questions, find their desks and put away school supplies.

"I liked Sneak-a-Peek because it gave me the chance to meet my teachers and prepared me for the first day of fifth grade," said Ayanna Fairbanks. "Getting my schedule ahead of time helped me a lot to be prepared for the first day of school."



> "It made me feel comfortable. My other school didn't have (this)."

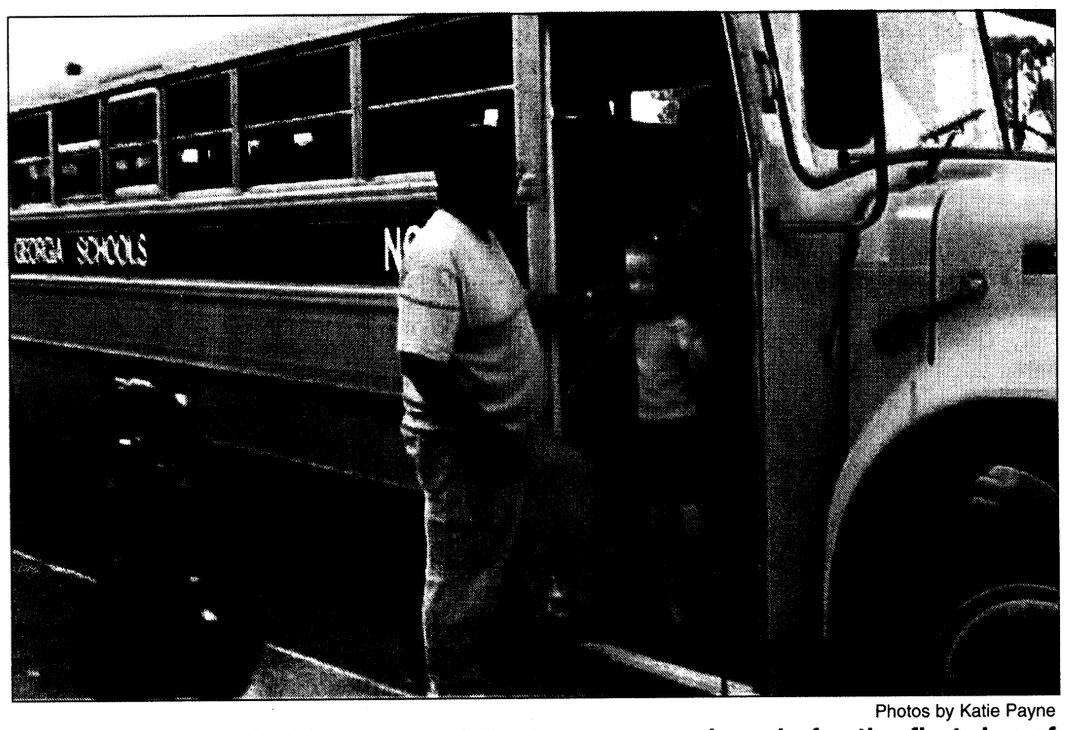
Newcomer Tyler Yanik agreed.



"It made me feel very comfortable. My other school didn't have a program like this, so I was a little nervous about the first day of school," he said.

Both students agreed the summer social on the front lawn also added a nice touch.

This event, sponsored by the PTO board, topped off a special afternoon. Families were treated to pizza and soft drinks, as well as fun and fellowship.

Parent meeting — success

Dexter Elementary School

Students were not the only ones going to class at Dexter on the first day of school.

Approximately 50 parents attended the new parent orientation Aug. 14.

The session opened with a Powerpoint presentation featuring highlights of the 2000-2001 school year to give new parents an overview of the school and its many programs.

School personnel addressed a variety of topics to include curriculum and instruction, extracurricular programs and clubs, the guidance and counseling program, the clinic, media and technology programs, and the parent volunteer program.

Michelle Beaton, PTO president, and principal Vicki Rogers shared projects and activities planned for the year and invited parents to get involved in their child's school.

"Research shows that parent involvement positively affects students' achievement and attitudes," Rogers said.

Great marriages sustained with love, hard work

Chaplain (Lt Col.) George Onstad
Family Life Chaplain Training Program

reflections

As a Lutheran pastor and Army chaplain, I have performed many marriage ceremonies in my career.

There is a marvelous line in our marriage liturgy which comes just before the pastor asks the couple to say their vows.

The pastor says:

"The Lord God in his goodness created us male and female, and by the gift of marriage founded human community in a joy that begins now and is brought to perfection in the life to come. Because of sin, our age-old rebellion, the gladness of marriage can be overcast and the gift of the family can become a burden. But because God, who established marriage, continues still to bless it with his abundant and ever-present support, we can be sustained in our weariness and have our joy restored."

Research has helped us identify some of those things that support our sin and cast the shadow over marriage. In their book, "Fighting for Your Marriage" by Markman, Stanley and Blumberg, the authors identify four powerful patterns that can ruin a relationship.

The first is "escalation."

This is when a couple begins and argument about something relatively small, like chores around the house, and the fight escalates to talking about divorce.

This makes even simple disagreements unsafe.

The second negative pattern is called "invalidation."

These are the "put downs" we tell those that we love in the heat of an argument that can go straight to the heart.

These are statements like, "You're so dumb," or other words that can invalidate your spouse or your spouse's feelings.

The third pattern we find mostly with men.

This pattern is called "withdrawal and avoidance."

This happens when one partner or the other does not want to deal with an issue and avoids the discussion by avoiding their partner.

They may get up and walk out of a room or they might simply shut down or turn off emotionally. You know this happens when a spouse says something like, "Yeah, yeah, whatever."

The fourth pattern is called "negative interpretations."

This happens when a partner believes the motives of the other are much more negative than they really are.

For example, a husband might tell his wife that he does not want to visit the in-laws over the weekend. The wife becomes angry and feels that the husband doesn't care about anything important to her.

A simple disagreement about weekend plans sometimes becomes a very serious issue about whether or not a spouse cares or loves their partner anymore.

These four patterns can tear a marriage apart if they are significantly present in a relationship.

This is not how God intended marriages to be.

We might never have the perfect marriage but with God's help "we can be sustained in our weariness and have our joy restored." You can avoid each of these destructive patterns in your marriages.

We are here to help. Our Family Life chaplain has a marriage enrichment program that will teach you how to avoid these deadly patterns.

If your marriage needs a bit more help, we have pastoral counselors who are trained to be your consultants, to work together in helping you restore the joy in your marriage.

For more information, feel free to call us at 545-1760.

Great marriages are made and sustained with love, a lot of hard work, and the grace of God.

Please feel free to use us to help you with that hard work.

Help available to overcome negativity

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Negative people are miserable people. Past hurts, disappointments and failures may be the cause of their negativity and bitterness.

Regardless of the cause of their pessimistic outlook on life, their dour demeanor wreaks havoc on those around them.

One person's negativity can pollute everyone else's positive outlook.

Their gloom and doom is infectious. They do not comprehend the devastation that they cause. Naysayers enjoy pointing out what's wrong with others or with another's proposal. They feel that they are being realistic and helpful by being critical.

When positive people identify a real or potential problem, they will also offer a workable solution.

Obstinate people like to remind others repeatedly of past mistakes and failures.

Positive people mentor others by encouraging and edifying them.

Positive people help others reach their full potential. They view mistakes and failure as stepping stones to success.

Disagreeable people can change.

First, admit that you are negative and don't excuse or rationalize your pessimism. If you say that this is your personality, that you were born this way, or that others must accept you like you are, you will not change.

Second, ask for forgiveness from those around you and forgive others for mistreating you (Matthew 5:43-46 and 6:12-15).

Third, refuse to use inclusive words and phrases like: all the time, always, and never.

Last of all, actively look for what is good. Stop and give thanks and praise to God and to others (I Thessalonians 5:15-16). View obstacles as challenges and look for solutions.

Do you want to become more positive in your outlook? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries enter at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance. You can also call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

MPs tighten installation access

Gates close to improve force protection

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

People traveling to and from Fort Benning might be taking a different route beginning Sept. 4.

"We are not closing the post, we are controlling access," Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of law enforcement, said. "This is to afford better force protection for military and civilians working on post."

Mandated by the Army chief of staff's office earlier this year, access to every installation will be controlled by the end of the year.

"It's just going to take time (to adjust)," Master Sgt. Robert Shives, access control project NCOIC, said.

As a result of the mandate, entrance points on South Lumpkin Road, Benning Boulevard, Interstate 185, two exits off of U.S. Hwy. 27 and 280 at the Eisenhower Interchange and Ala. Hwy. 165 will remain open.

Access points along U.S. Hwy. 27 and 280 will be gated and closed, with 10th Armor Division Road, Moye Road, Saint Mary's Road and Santa Fe Road affecting commuters the most, he said.

Installation officials chose which gates to leave open by their high volume of traffic and efficient accessibility, Shives said.

Drivers can move through access control points quicker by having post required decals on their vehicle.

About 20 percent of all vehicles stopped during routine MP checkpoints did not have post decals, Kelley said.

> "The important thing now is that if they don't have their vehicles registered, then they need to do it. There won't be that many problems if people just get their post decals."
> Master Sgt. Robert Shives
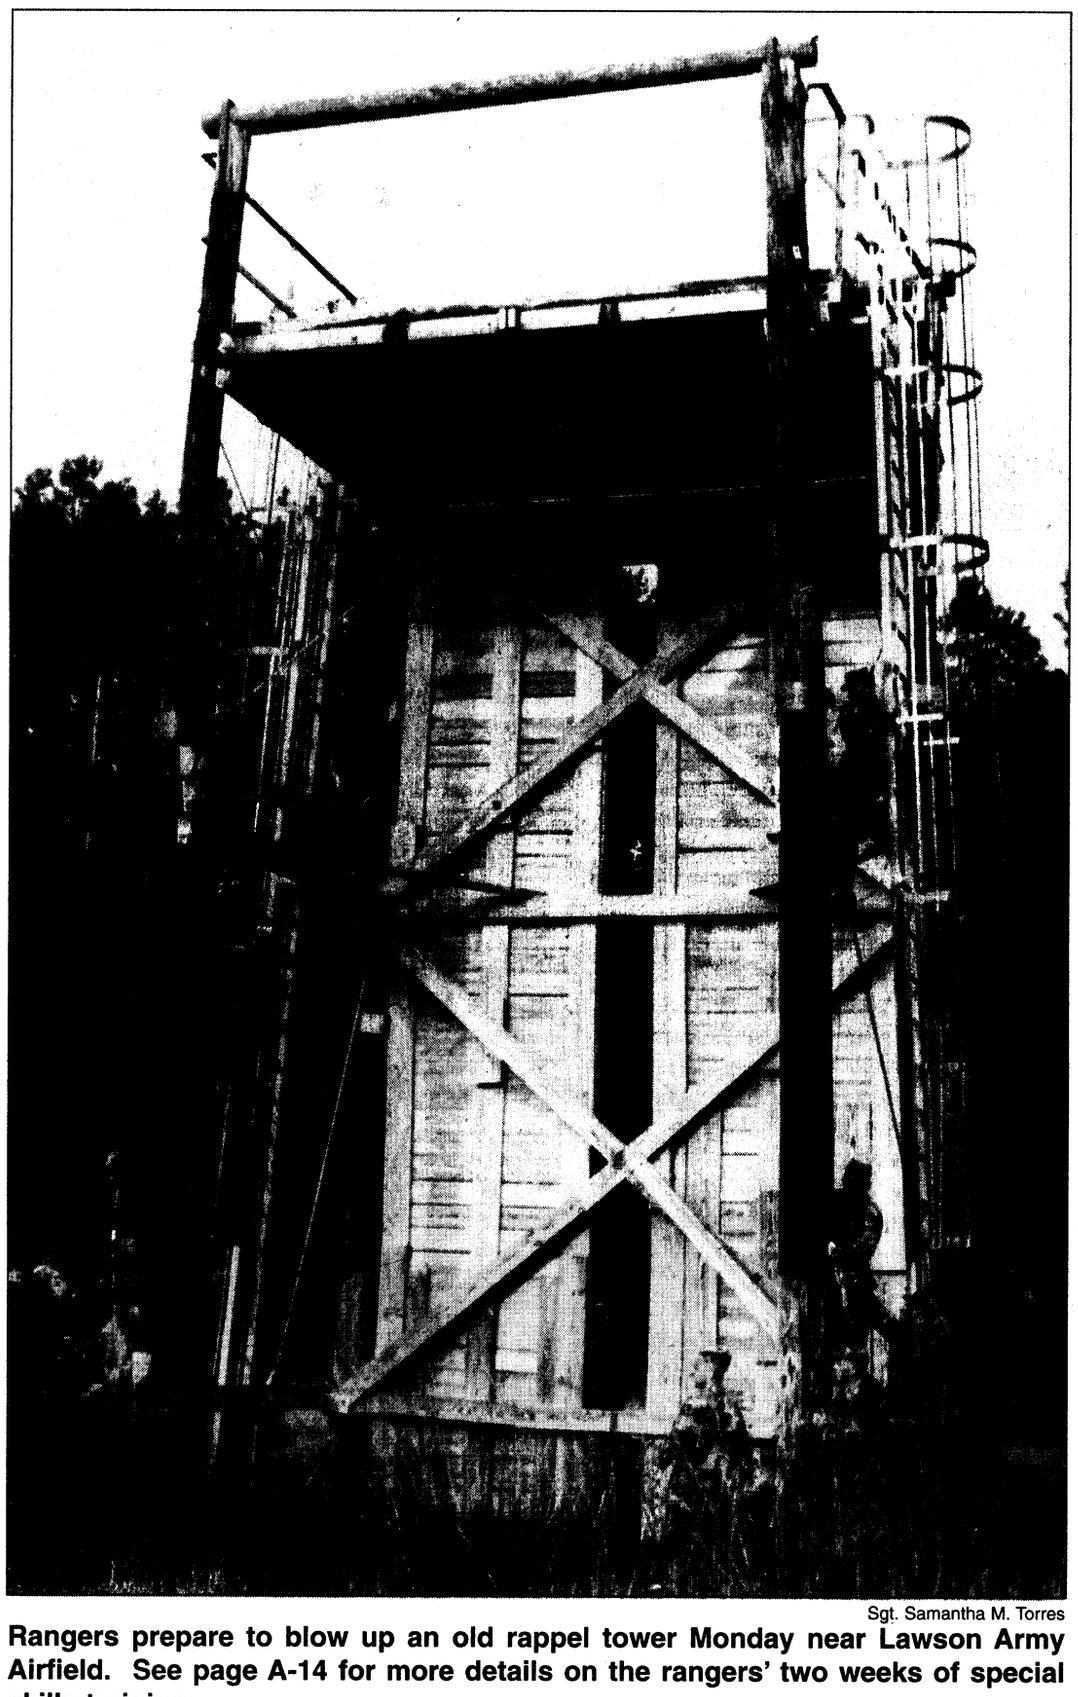
> Access control project NCOIC



Post regulations require that all privately owned vehicles must be registered and bear a post decal.

People driving vehicles with decals will be waved through entrance gates, and those without will be stopped, Kelley said.

"The important thing now is that if they don't have their vehicles registered, then they need to do it," Shives said. "There won't be that many problems if people just get their post decals."

People stopped will be asked to show a driver's license, proof of vehicle registration and proof of insurance, Kelley said. Kelley advises soldiers to ensure visiting family members know their soldier's name, unit and a telephone number to reach them.

What does an 11-year-old girl who was her brother's nurse have in common with a gun-totin' woman who toured Army installations teaching soldiers how to shoot or a little girl whose pigtails were tied to a school bus on her first day of school?

Tenacity.

Clara Barton, the founder of the American Red Cross, and Annie Oakley, the sharpshooter in the Wild Bill Cody Show, were tenacious in how they lived their lives, and their courage advanced women's rights, which Nancy Engle showed the audience through her

Officers revisit Calley trial

Lawyers question My Lai outcome at seminar

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The longest and one of the most publicized courts-martial in history took place 30 years ago in Winship Hall's courtroom.

Four of the trial's participants reflected on the My Lai massacre and the court-martial of 1st Lt. William Calley Monday during a Staff Judge Advocate seminar in the same room.

"I'm glad I didn't have to make a decision of guilt or innocence," said Reid Kennedy, the judge who oversaw the court-martial.

The jury rendered the correct verdict, but the punishment was too harsh because Calley was following orders, he said.

Other guests of the Officer Professional Development seminar were

Residents warned about virus

Columbus blue jay found to have West Nile

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

West Central Health District officials announced Monday the discovery of a dead blue jay found Aug. 10 in north Columbus infected with the West Nile Virus.

The virus has not been found in any dead birds on post yet.

"I suspect that the West Nile Virus is going to present itself here," Capt. Louis Huzella, Fort Benning veterinarian, said Wednesday. "It's no reason to panic."

Huzella said the virus is capturing a lot of attention in the media and in U.S. citizens because it is a relatively new disease to the country.

According to the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine, in Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md., anyone can become infected with the virus, but the elderly are more likely to become ill and develop serious symptoms.

If a person is bitten by a mosquito carrying the virus, they may not be infected. When some people become infected with the virus, they develop encephalitis.

Encephalitis symptoms are

Being Army spouse challenging

Erin A. Nash
Special to the bayonet

commentary

The other day I heard a statistic, how true it is I don't know, but I heard a man who stays in the Army for 20 years gets married an average of three times during that 20 years.

At first I was stunned, but as I got to thinking about it, I could understand how it could happen.

I met my husband two months before he left for basic training here on post. I had no idea what the military was like. I didn't even know it was a job, a possible career or that they even got paid. So when I'm told, "You knew what you were getting into when you married him," I tell that story.

Now, after five years of marriage, I feel much more knowledgeable about the military, but I also know there are plenty who had the same ideas I had.

The piece of advice I can offer is this: Be independent. I don't think any military marriage can survive unless the non-military spouse is independent and can do things alone or knows where to look for help. The spouse will be the one to pay the bills, keep food in the cupboards, take care of the children, remember birthdays and anniversaries, etc. Most of us will also be the ones to do the simple yet important things: cleaning the toilet bowl, refilling the sugar bowl and making sure there's plenty of laundry detergent for stinky PTs.

Most of us will do these things without fanfare. I don't expect my husband to do most of these things because I figure anyone who works that much shouldn't be expected to come home and mop the floor.

I do these things without getting a medal or gaining rank. I believe keeping a comfortable, stable home is very important. If my husband is at work worrying about overdue bills, a broken car or the such, how effectively can he do his job? He is responsible for a squad of men, and his attention needs to be focused on them and their welfare.

I don't profess to know the ins and outs of being in the Army. I also don't "wear" my husband's rank. He earned it, not me.

I have tremendous pride, even hubris, in my husband, his unit and all military personnel. I know I couldn't do it just as there are plenty of people who could not be a military spouse.

I've never been a big fan of change — not knowing of what's to come scares me.

The biggest challenge I've had to face yet has been the birth of my son two years ago. I am the main caregiver for my son, and there are weeks when it is just the two of us.

Yes, military life is hard, but life is hard. Military life might pose more challenges, but I can honestly say rising up and meeting those challenges has made me a stronger person.

I have learned valuable and lifelong lessons being an Army spouse, from how to cope with loneliness (cable television and good books) to how to decorate my quarters so it feels like a home.

I enjoy being a military spouse, and I take much pride in the fact that my husband serves his country. I will always be there with him, encouraging him and trying to be the best wife I can be.

Yard sale shopping stretches savings

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

I love shopping at rummage sales and garage sales. I always find something that someone else has cast out as "junk" that I just can't live without.

The best part is if it turns into "junk" for me down the road, I have very little invested in it which makes recycling it a lot less painful.

The last rummage sale I blitzed through was at my mother-in-law's church. My daughter found some Beanie Babies that she had to have. At a small fraction of their original cost, she could afford them, even on her budget.

My husband paid a dollar for some never used Lapize toe clips for the old road bike his dad passed down to him.

I bought a set of six great looking Asian soup spoons for $4.

For the princely sum of $3, I got a food dehydrator. It works just great, too, and since I only sank $3 in it I don't feel guilty when it sits for weeks between uses.

Last year at the postwide yard sale I bought Beanie Baby bears for $6 that delighted my sister-in-law at Christmas.

I bought several canvas tote bags for 25 and 50 cents that I put in to service that day and which continue to serve me well.

I saw some lovely girls' dresses selling for just a few dollars each and baby clothes that could be had for a song.

At bedtime we still read some of the children's books that I paid for with dimes.

My daughter stretched her $5 in to a velour top (25 cents), a stack of Goosebumps paperbacks ($1.50) and three stuffed animals that could have passed for new (less than a dollar each). She loved the headband with the cat ears she scored on for a dime.

She bought something else, too, which completely escapes me. All I know is it cost way less than a dollar, and for the price, she could afford the splurge. She even came home with change from the $5 she started with.

The best "steal" I ever got was a pair of unblemished Ray Ban sunglasses, in its case, for $2.

Of course, this leaves me in a real quandary because once I pay a price for something, I don't think I should ever pay more than that price for a similar object again. Ever.

I'm taking good care of those sunglasses because the odds of me finding another pair of Ray Bans for $2 are pretty dismal.

But don't think those odds are going to stop me from looking.

Editor's note: The postwide yard sale is Sept. 15.

Enlisted wives aren't invisible

At a party recently, a wife took a copy of Invisible Women from her purse. There was silence in the room. We were all enlisted wives. Most of the group were junior enlisted spouses, members of the Enlisted Wives Club.

The woman with the book was anything but invisible at that point.

We talked about the book and decided most junior enlisted wives felt anger that an adjective like "invisible" had been bestowed upon them in a half-inch booklet, which, in fairness, does bear a lot of truth.

But suddenly, in the midst of our frustration, a very typical Army-wife quality came upon our tired brains: a sudden burst of imagination, and creativity inherent to military wives — what if the reason why that book is so thin is because the other half is missing and got lost somewhere at the publishing company.

Bingo! That must be it! And we knew right there and then, that the missing part of the book is right here at Fort Benning.

It is missing the part of "Susy and Jill, sergeants' wives." Their husbands are former police officers who tired of the streets and decided to join the military police's criminal investigation division. Their skills are valued by the MP Corps. And they are thankful that the things they deal with in the Army are so much different than in the streets of downtown Nowhere. Their satisfaction is also visible.

The book misses the part of all the enlisted wives who came to Fort Benning and continued their education, training and careers despite the boundaries of time and distance.

I discussed with my good friend Sarah Hertig, a fellow enlisted wife and community leader, about one important truth about us: enlisted wives should openly celebrate their husband's careers. Many wives do not do it. There might be many or few reasons why, but it is all up to us.

It is our duty to do so, to celebrate them and to celebrate us, to celebrate the fact that a team leader, squad leader, platoon sergeant, first sergeant or command sergeant major, just like their superiors, are leaders too.

Your husband's rank should not be an issue. We are all soldiers' wives, and we must celebrate our soldiers.

When the 2001 EWC Board took office, I, as president, asked the board to share one goal with me — to increase morale. I think this is happening because our membership has increased from nine to 58.

It is also a fact that Fort Benning's own Officers' Spouses' Club president has altruistically offered her hand to us; an action that made me feel blessed, since it provided me with the friendship of a fellow military spouse who knows that we are indeed very visible, and very willing to be known.

Fort Benning owns the missing half of Invisible Women.

I invite you to come see for yourself the visible environment of leadership, optimism and esprit de corps that reigns when we meet every second Wednesday night of the month.

Learn the truth behind the lives of all military wives. You will realize that the "E" and "O" do not make a difference in the life of a woman married to the military.

Reservist suffers hardship, wins court case

Bank ignores Soldier's and Sailor's Relief Act

Maj. John Dahms
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — In a precedent-setting case for reservists, a U.S. district court judge in Louisiana signed a judgment favoring an Army Reserve soldier who suffered financial ruin while deployed to Bosnia.

The court found that the rights of Lt. Col. Stewart Cathey were violated under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act when his bank refused to lower his interest rate to 6 percent when he deployed in 1996.

The judgment allows Cathey to pursue his case against the bank in a civil trial. Cathey filed suit after the bank foreclosed on two convenience stores the reservist owned when he deployed.

"This case has far-reaching implications," said Lt. Col. Paul E. Conrad, legal counsel, Office of the Chief, Army Reserve. "The court has made clear that creditors cannot ignore requests by reservists to reduce their interest rates on loans and obligations, when properly presented upon activation, or they could face lawsuits for a refund of wrongfully charged interest."

"The role of the Department of Justice and the Department of the Army, in encouraging this ruling, indicates the importance that the federal government places on protecting the rights of reservists activated to support their nation as citizen-soldiers," Conrad said. "This ruling also amplifies that reservists who are small business owners are covered under the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act for personal guarantees and obligations where they are personally liable."

The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act allows military members to suspend or postpone some civil obligations so that they can devote their full attention to military duties

Military pay office handles soldier's money worries

Commanders first step to solving problems

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

While training for war, the last thing many of the 28,000 soldiers assigned to Fort Benning need to worry about is money.

That is why the people at the Defense Military Pay Office make customer service a top priority.

"We work with a couple of hundred people a day," said Donna High, military pay technician. "We treat everyone as an individual and with a smile."

A former infantry officer, Maj. Colin A. Weeks, chief of the Defense Military Pay Office, knows firsthand how pay problems can affect soldiers during day-to-day operations and training. And he encourages soldiers to use their personnel and administrative center and other resources to gather information to ensure that they do not suffer any stress because of pay problems.

Though his office will not turn soldiers away, Weeks emphasizes that soldiers with questions concerning pay, entitlements, advance pay, allotments and reimbursements should try to go through their units administrative office before going to the main DMPO.

"We have to take the time to listen to a customer and make sure he gets what he wants and deserves," Weeks said.

One example of this commitment to customer service comes into play during debt repayment.

If a soldier is overpaid or required to pay additional taxes, that amount will be taken out of the soldier's pay immediately after it is identified. However, if the amount exceeds $200, arrangements can be made through the Military Pay Debt Management Office to arrange a repayment schedule more convenient to the soldier.

Serving so many, the DMPO relies on first-line supervisors to help handle pay problems.

1st Lt. Danisha Morris, deputy chief DMPO, said unit commanders need to make sure their unit finance reports are correct, because they are the first line of defense in preventing any pay problems for their soldiers.

Warning signs of pay problem include:

• If after arriving at a new duty station, a soldier does not receive two consecutive leave and earning statements, then he should see the unit's PAC to fill out a pay inquiry, form 2142.

• If a soldier receives more money than he is entitled to he should inform the unit PAC office to help minimize the amount that must be repaid.

The pay office may not get it right all the time, Weeks said, and that is one of the reasons his office welcomes customer comments.

"My standards are high, and if there is a problem, begin with your PAC to let us know," he said. "We are here to for the customer."

Women: Celebrate equality at excellence luncheon

dramatic interpretation Tuesday at the Women's Equality Day Luncheon.

"Celebrating the Tenacity of Women: Past and Present" was the theme of this year's luncheon and the keynote speaker was Fort Benning's Schools superintendent, Dr. Dell McMullen.

Proving her own tenacity, McMullen described the excitement of her first day of first grade nearly 50 years ago. Her mother made her a new dress out of a pink feed sack; she had a new box of color crayons and the sleepless night before the first day of school jitters. She rode the bus to school and one of the boys sitting behind McMullen tied her pink-ribboned braids to the seat rail.

"I was too afraid to ask for help," she told the audience. But after the bus driver found her and set her free, McMullen walked into the schoolhouse on a path to a career in education. She talked about the changes in teaching and how corporal punishment is no longer the norm. Though knowledge is no longer beaten into children, students still learn. Why? Excellence.

"I don't believe excellence just happens," McMullen said. "Rather, I believe that it is a choice — just like mediocrity is — not always made consciously, but still a choice. I believe that unless we choose excellence, we accept mediocrity by default. When we make the conscious choice for excellence, we then become what we repeatedly do."

> "I don't believe excellence just happens ... I believe it is a choice."
> Dr. Dell McMullen
> Superintendent

And that's what the women who made a difference in history did, she said. They made the choice for excellence, making the world better.

Fort Benning's hidden history:

Home of the Infantry has deep roots in Columbus area

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet

Editor's note: This is the first of a five-part series.

Fort Benning has long been known as the Home of the Infantry. It has been so long that some may not know its beginnings. Nearly 83 years after its original formation, some may not know that Fort Benning almost never came to be.

The Home of the Infantry was first established in October, 1918, as a temporary military camp, intended to replace the infantry training establishment at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. The camp consisted of tarpaper covered wooden buildings and tents erected on 30 acres of land east of Columbus.

A city's fight

The city of Columbus had already been in hot pursuit of obtaining a military installation, and was more than excited about being selected as the honored city. Columbus began its campaign to host the Infantry School more than a year before the first tents were pitched.

On April 3, 1917, the day after Woodrow Wilson asked Congress to declare war against the Central Powers, a Columbus newspaper ran a story on the local Chamber of Commerce seeking to have an army camp set up here with at least a brigade of troops. The community was eager to be the home to American soldiers training for battle.

There was also widespread apprehension about the possibility that local transportation and power facilities might be attacked by German agents, according to Connie Bridges in an Oct. 8, 1993 article in The Bayonet. The apprehension was so great that the Columbus Guard was recalled back from their pursuit of Pancho Villa to patrol these facilities.

The Encampment Committee of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce made a trip to Washington, D.C., to promote Columbus as a site for one of the new camps.

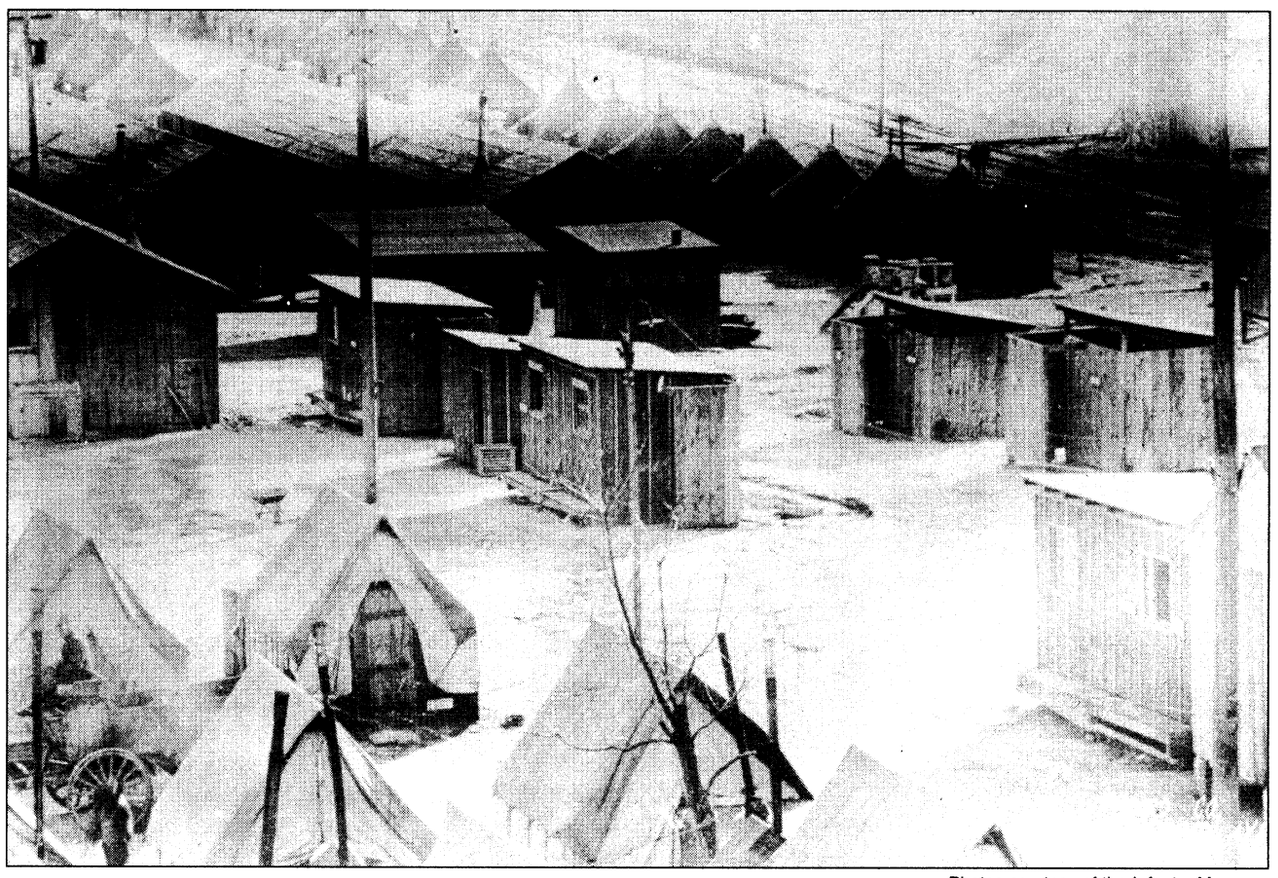
They met with no success. Several members remained in the nation's capital talking to War Department officials and members of Congress until February 1918, when they returned home convinced their efforts had been useless.

Attempts to obtain the army training camp were all but abandoned after months of vigorous efforts.

Unknown to the passionate lobbyists, Gen. John J. "Black Jack" Pershing sent a telegram to the War Department, dated October, 1917, directing every man who could shoot be sent to Europe to fight in WWI. The wire reinforced a need for a permanent infantry school to provide training for combat soldiers. The United States Army began to seek a place to train young men in the ways of the rifle and the bayonet.

As WWI drew to a close, the decision was made to move infantry and artillery training to other sites because Fort Sill had inadequate training space. Columbus rolled the dice at their chance to be the new home. The city had had good experience with Camp Conrad, which was located in northern Columbus during the Spanish-American war less than 25 years prior.

Thanks to the work done by the Chamber's Encampment committee, Columbus was selected as one of four prospective sites. A full-time representative was then sent to promote Columbus' cause.



After intense lobbying by John A. Betjemen of the area Chamber of Commerce, Columbus finished second to Fayetteville, North Carolina. The artillery chose Fayetteville and the infantry chose Columbus to be their future homes. Some of Betjemen's key points when lobbying were related to the virtues of training in the south, such as the mild weather, which allowed for year round training.

Victory at last!

On Aug. 17, 1918, Betjemen telegraphed home that the general staff of the U.S. Army had approved the recommendation for the Infantry School of Arms to be located near Columbus.

Although no funds had been allocated and nothing formally approved by the secretary of war, Maj. John Paul Jones received word on Sept. 20 that the Infantry School staff and trainees from Fort Sill were en route and would arrive on Oct. 1.

This gave Jones less than a month to complete the task of building the temporary camp.

Photos courtesy of the Infantry Museum

The first site of the Infantry School selected by Col. Henry Eames was located on Macon Road within three miles of the heart of Columbus. The camp was completed in seven days.

In late September, 1918, workers began building a temporary camp for the Infantry School of Arms on Macon Road. Where rows of cotton once grew, rows of tents were now erected. The home of the infantry was born on 84 acres of farmland where the Columbus Square Mall now stands.

Since no money was appropriated, and it would take $100,000 to build temporary mess halls, tent frames, bathhouses, and water supply installations, Jones' acquisition of the plumbing, electrical supplies and lumber is without parallel in military history, according to Bridges. The locals were so anxious to have the post here they willingly waived payment until proper authorization could be acquired.

A total of 400,000 feet of lumber was hauled to the campsite on Macon Road. With the assistance of a construction company and Columbus citizens, 300 tent frames, mess halls and warehouses were completed in just seven days.

A post christened

According to a 1918 newspaper article on display at the Infantry Museum, the Rotary club of Columbus pushed for the new military camp to be named after a native hero.

Rotarians unanimously passed a resolution asking the War Department to name the facility Camp Benning in honor of Confederate General Henry Lewis Benning.

"BE IT RESOLVED BY THE ROTARY CLUB OF COLUMBUS, GEORGIA, that we respectively request the War Department to name this camp 'Camp Benning' in honor of General Benning, a native of Columbus, Georgia, and who served under General Lee with the rank of Brigadier General, and whose career as a soldier, citizen, lawyer, and member of the Supreme Court of Georgia, was a splendid example of patriotic citizenship."

On Oct. 5, 1918, Col. Henry Eames was appointed commandant of the Infantry School of Arms and the first troops arrived at Camp Benning.

After an Oct. 7th ribbon cutting ceremony, the new facility was formally christened Camp Benning. Benning's daughter, Anna Caroline, raised the first flag over the post.

But it wasn't long before the location was deemed unsatisfactory for a military camp and Eames was commissioned to find a new site. Riverside, a 115,000 acre plantation south of Columbus, offered the topographic features needed.

On Oct. 30, 1918, $9,000,000 was authorized to begin construction at the new site with stations for 25,000 men.

This financial endorsement briefly appeared to confirm the permanence of the camp.

A post taken away

Camp Benning's future once again appeared doubtful soon after signing of the peace agreement in November 1918 ending WWI.

There was no need to continue building a school for the infantry when the war was over, some argued. In Washington D.C. and even in Columbus, many prominent figures contended that Camp Benning be abandoned. They won, but just for a little while.

On Jan. 7, 1919, an order from the War Department directed abandonment of all new construction and lease options, cancellation of all condemnation proceedings, and salvaging of all works already done.

A new start

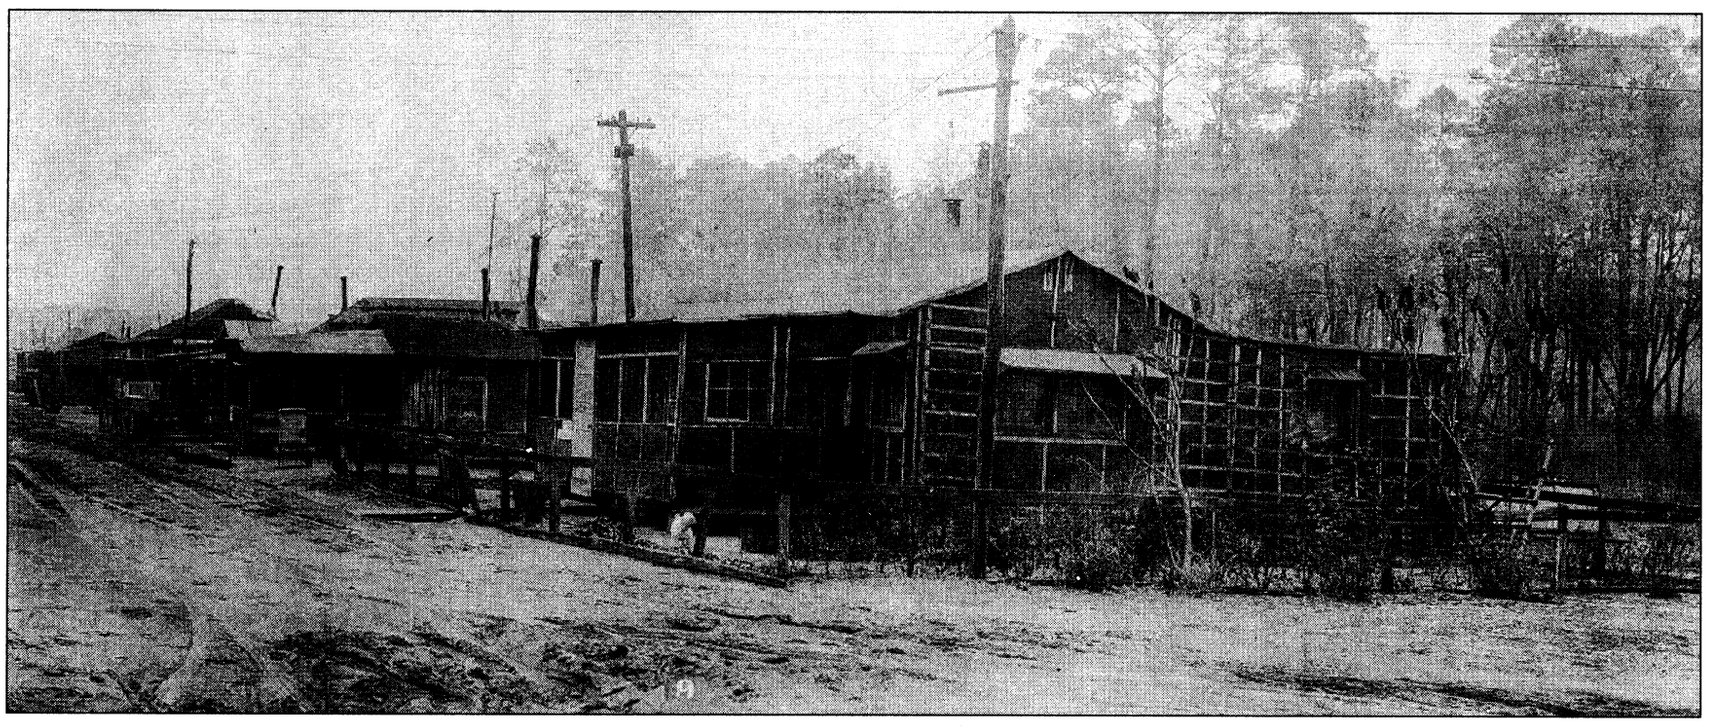
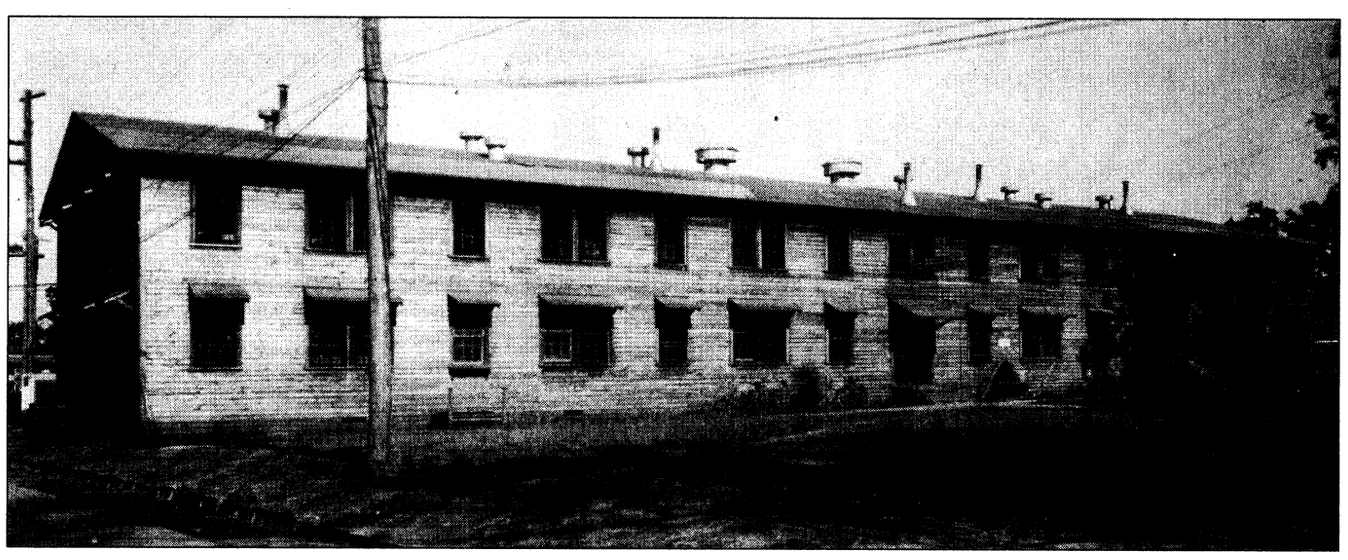
According to Fort Benning, the Land and the People, Jones was an "enterprising officer" and found some ambiguity in the wording of the command.

While the order called for an end to building and for stopping all condemnation procedures to acquire land, it also stipulated that construction materials and structures partially completed be salvaged in ways that best served the government.



In the interests of preserving Camp Benning, Jones interpreted this to mean that current projects under development should continue, and did just that.



In the meantime, Columbus Chamber of Commerce members headed back to the nation's capital. For the next three months, citizens and leaders of Columbus feverishly lobbied Congress in favor of continuing the construction of Fort Benning. In 1920, a bill to establish a permanent infantry school was defeated eight to six.

Several other members soon joined their colleagues in the capital and a second vote finally established Fort Benning as the permanent home of the Infantry.

In 1922, Fort Benning was designated as a permanent military institution.

The original site is commemorated at the corner of South Dixon Road and Mimosa Road in downtown Columbus. Nearly 83 years and many battles later, Fort Benning still proudly serves as the Home of the Infantry, Queen of Battle.

(Right) Camp headquarters in 1919. This building was lost to fire in the 20's, resulting in a loss of many early records of the post.

A CLOSER LOOK

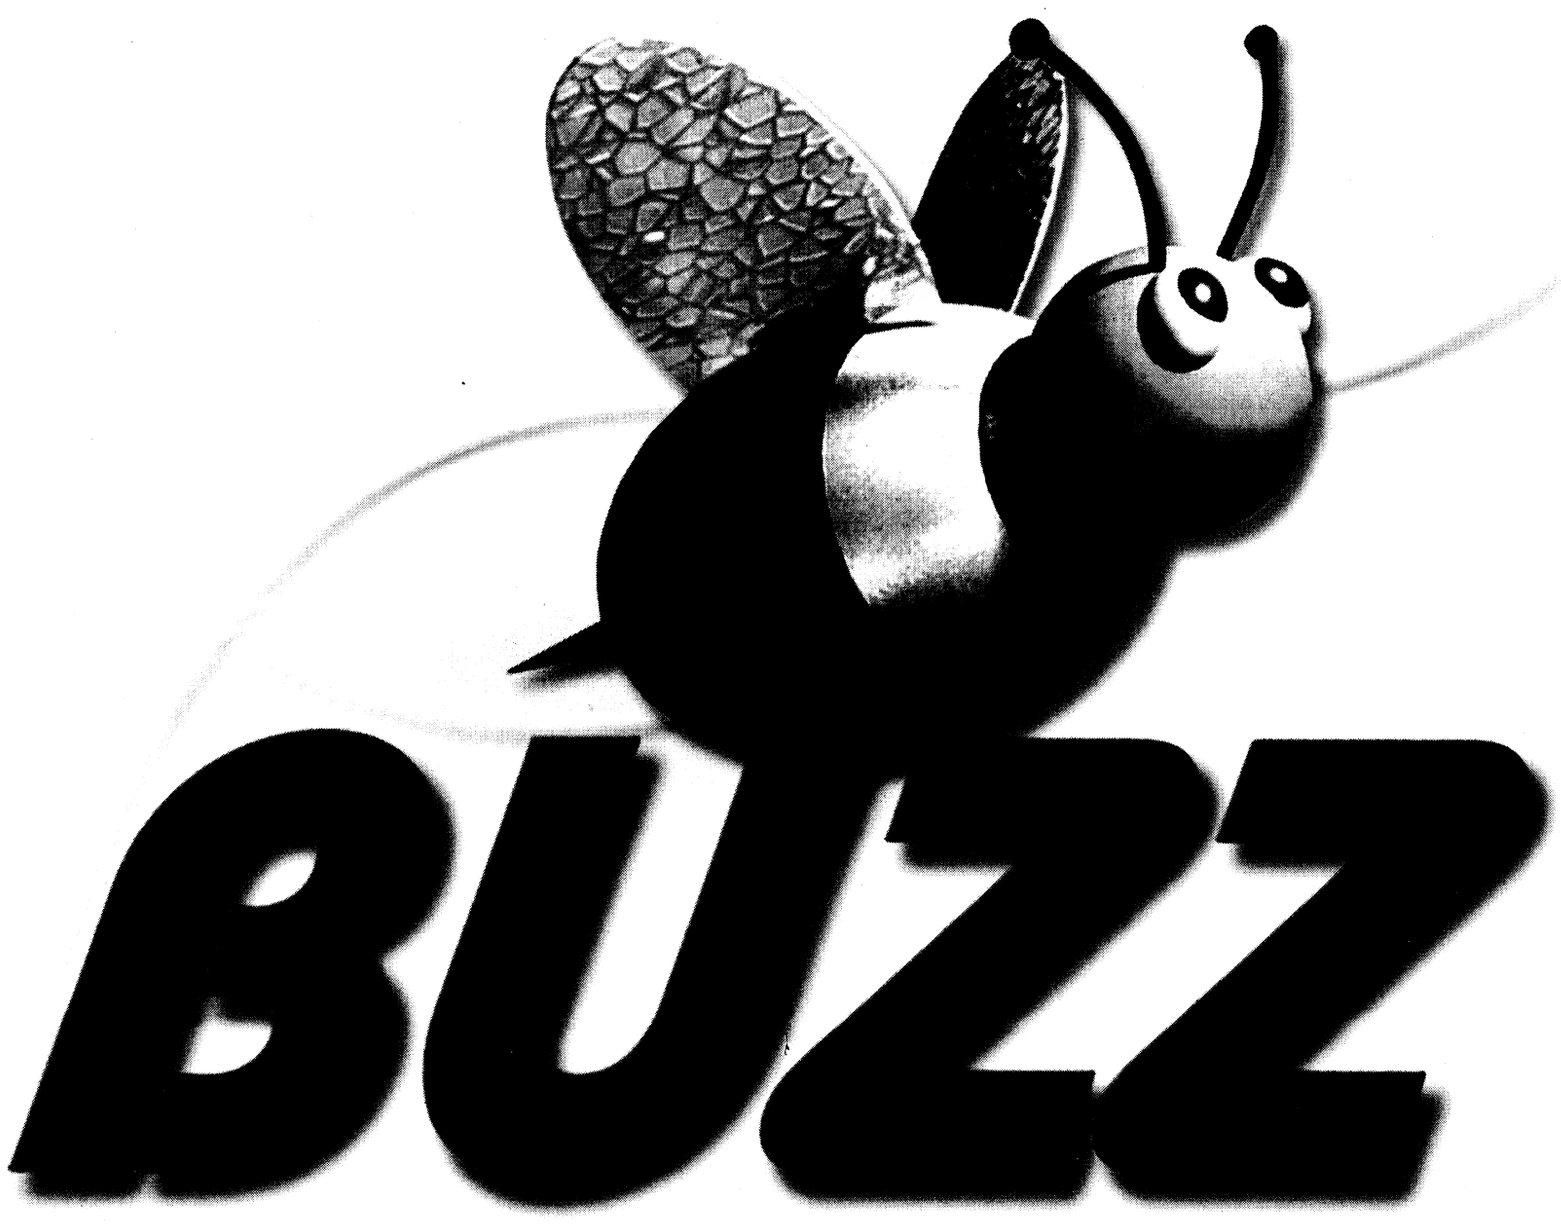
According to Fort Benning, the Land and the People, Maj. John Paul Jones was an ingenious leader who kept the wheels of fate turning for then Camp Benning. Two specific acts mark him as a key figure in the beginnings of Fort Benning.

When the War Department sent the order to stop work on Camp Benning, Jones interpreted the salvaging of all buildings to mean that work on those already under construction be continued. Work continued without official sanction from the capital.

When the Army needed train tracks laid to transport goods, there was controversy because the tracks would have to intersect a railroad owned by Seaboard Line, a Central Georgia rival.



Again, Jones pushed forward with his eyes on the prize. When the Seaboard superintendent heard that Jones had built a frame for the crossing of the tracks, he stormed into court and won a temporary restraining order.

With his characteristic persistence, he finagled a 4 a.m. hearing with a sympathetic judge and had the order lifted just long enough to lay the tracks.

A train loaded with rails and ties headed over the crossing and completed the process on the other side. To no surprise, there were no further legal challenges to the railroad.

Fire ants may cause allergic reactions

Insects infest Southern half of country

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

What has four teeth, six legs, two antennas and a single stinger?

Fire ants.

They attack with little warning, firmly grasping the victim's skin with their jaw.

Their prominent mounds are brown and often mistaken for sand by children.

"Disturbing the mound triggers a fury of action. Reactions vary, but treatment is identical to bee stings," he said.

Rarely life-threatening, fire ants are extremely aggressive and territorial, said Kenneth Franklin, Winder Health Clinic, OIC.

According to the WebMD Health Web site, fire ants, the reddish brown stinging cousin to bees and wasps, sting victims an average of eight times in a circular pattern, injecting a highly toxic venom causing burning pain.

Franklin advises people with fire ant bites to try home remedies and treatment before seeing a doctor, unless the patient has anaphylaxis.

Anaphylaxis is a condition of hypersensitivity to proteins and other substances in which exposure to or injection of the foreign matter results in attacks, sometimes causing collapse and death.

Home treatment includes applying ice to the area for 10 minutes, then taking the ice off for 10 minutes and repeating several times, use hydrocortisone cream, being careful to avoid the eyes and genitals, and not breaking the blisters.

The bitten area will itch, form a pimple-like blister, and a reddish hive will form around the bite. All of which is normal, according to WebMD Health.

The Web site suggests diabetics and others with circulatory diseases see their physician to monitor their condition and ensure infection does not occur.

Bugsaway.com recommends using bait stations only in the spring and early summer for controlling the pests. Contact insecticides such as sprays and granules are the quickest and most complete route to rendering a yard pest free.

Retreatment of areas is also important for remaining ant-free throughout the year.

For more information, visit the WebMD Web site.

A CLOSER LOOK

Home treatment for fire ants includes:

- applying ice to the area for 10 minutes, then taking the ice off for 10 minutes and repeating several times
- apply hydrocortisone cream to the affected area
- do not break the blisters

Watch bite victims for:

- anaphylactic shock
- abnormal swelling or bleeding

Institute fosters dialogue with media roundtable

Journalists visit WHINSEC course to help relations

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

"When you consider that a good soldier's state of mind is one of vigilance, and that a journalist's is one of skepticism, then any level of trust between them has to be considered a miracle of democracy," said Dusty Nix, associate editor with the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer, during his remarks at the Media Roundtable Symposium held for and hosted by the Command and General Staff Officer Course from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, Aug. 16.

Nix along with three other journalists formed a panel to discuss and answer questions from U.S. and foreign field grade officers attending the CGSOC at WHINSEC.

The event was an exchange of experiences between panel members and CGSOC students that brought to light issues that, in the past, have been problematic in fostering good relations between the media and the military.

Basic communication and language was one issue identified by the panel.

"The military could do a better job of speaking in plain English," said Mark Mazzetti, military editor at U.S. News and World Report, referring to military use of acronyms and jargons.

"Our staff's lack of experience with the military culture is reflective of most newsrooms around the country," said Charles Perkins, vice president for editorial content with the Manchester Union Leader, in Manchester, N.H.

Perkins brought to the forum the perspective of a community newspaper that covers little in the way of a military beat.

This highlights why military officials should be master communicators, he said.

Today more than ever, military leaders are in the spotlight and having to address tough issues.

Polls suggest the military is often seen as just another interest group, having to justify its funding and existence, Mazzetti said.

"Journalists have a responsibility of government oversight and that includes the military," Nix said.

However, balancing the public's right to know with operational security is a dilemma often faced by journalists and a bone of contention between military commanders and the press.

"If the press does not question authority, who will? Are we always right?" Perkins asked. "Of course not."

Still, "the question remains how much freedom should people give up to maintain order and vice versa," said Maj. Ronald Torres, Nicaraguan army.

This dilemma all democracies face must have a give and take relationship between factions, Torres said.

"We know that we anger people. If we didn't, we wouldn't be doing our jobs," Perkins said.

"Somehow, we all need to come to some sort of an accord, where there is more inclusion of the media on issues. In that way, the public, whom we serve and protect, will be informed of the good as well as the bad," Torres said.

"In a free society, we, in the news media, can use our power and our weapons with not much more accountability than dictators use theirs," Nix said.

> "When you consider that a good soldier's state of mind is one of vigilance, and that a journalist's is one of skepticism, then any level of trust between them has to be considered a miracle of democracy interest."
> Dusty Nix
> associate editor with the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer

"Our work can be shoddy, unfair, incomplete or just incompetent, and the military can't retaliate with force, no matter how tempting the idea might be. Freedom stacks the rules of engagement in our favor. It's part of the price a military pays for answering to civilian authority," Nix said.

Given the influence the news media carries, panel members and CGSOC students discussed how working together and communicating better is key in getting the story right.

"A story with only one side is only half a story," said David Fuller, assignment editor for WALB TV in Albany, Ga.

The panel emphasized the importance of dialogue between journalists and the military. They pointed out that anytime there is less than dialogue, the session becomes nothing more than a press conference, and information becomes vague and may yield an inaccurate story.

"We find that the government gets in trouble when it takes on a public relations role with the media," Perkins said.

"Be up front. Having good relationships helps out when something difficult comes along," Fuller said.

Calley Trial: Officers discuss world-famous trial Monday

John Partin, co-trial counsel, Kenneth Raby, lead trial defense counsel, and Robert Poydasheff, chief counsel for high-ranking officers involved with the case.

Capt. Aimee Hobby, an attorney with the SJA office, facilitated the seminar discussion and agreed with Kennedy.

It was proven, beyond a reasonable doubt, that Calley not only issued orders to kill noncombatants, but he killed them too, she said. He even said so at the trial. Therefore, the verdict was more than justified.

"The subsequent parole is a different story," Hobby said. "I think (Raby) said it best yesterday when he told us, 'The punishment simply didn't fit the crime.'"

As Calley's counsel, Raby said he was happy Calley was paroled. As a lawyer, he thought President Nixon acted prematurely in reducing Calley's sentence.

Although he feels justice was served, there was a deficiency in military justice at the time, he said.

"What happened was totally unsatisfactory," Raby said. "We need to do better in the future. We can't let it happen again. We need things in place to stop it."

Raby said the four ways to prevent what happened from reoccurring are:

- To impart integrity at the individual and command levels.
- To conduct training that is timely, repetitive and practical.
- To have a command emphasis in leadership.
- To conduct realistic maneuvers.

"What we learned from this was (we need) education, education, education — for the Army and the JAG," Poydasheff said.

He said this would further develop a sense of honor and responsibility and encourage prosecution of violators of the law.

The court-martial had a substantial impact on the military justice system, Hobby said.

"Many civilians, and even some soldiers, questioned how just the military justice system was," Hobby said.

"They saw the charges against almost all higher-ranking officials dropped 'in the interest of justice.' They saw former enlisted soldiers, who admitted their crimes on television, receive no punishment because the Army no longer had jurisdiction to pursue charges. And they thought of Lieutenant Calley as a scapegoat," she said. "So, inherently, they thought the system itself was unjust. This tarnished image is something the military justice system has had to overcome through the years."

The court-martial demonstrated just how precarious the jurisdiction of the military system was, Hobby said..

"Fortunately, the appeal of the Calley court-martial led to more definitive answers as to what jurisdiction the military justice system has," she said.

"It also illuminated the problems that such a limited jurisdiction can create, and gave the military the opportunity to address those problems.

"So, while temporarily weakened in the eyes of the public, I think the Calley court-martial strengthened the military system in the long run," she added.

Hosting the seminar was a unique experience, Hobby said.

"We were especially honored that so many of the key players in the court-martial were able to attend," Hobby said. "Having them all in one room, and hearing about their stories, was a once in a lifetime opportunity."

Preparing for the seminar was challenging because of the lack of consistent information, she said.

"This made hearing the stories of the people most intimately involved the most thrilling aspect of the seminar," Hobby said.

Poydasheff was in Vietnam, and said what happened at My Lai was atypical.

"We were not rapists and murderers," he said. "We were doing our job."

A CLOSER LOOK

A brief history of the trial's highlights includes:

- On March 16, 1968, U.S. soldiers massacred as many as 500 unarmed civilians — old men, women and children — in My Lai, Vietnam.
- Calley and his platoon shot Vietnamese civilians because he said his commander, Capt. Ernest Medina, told him to do it. Medina denied the charges at the trial.
- For the war crimes Calley's platoon committed, on March 28, 1971, a jury of Calley's peers convicted him of 22 counts of premeditated murder and one count of assault with intent to commit murder. He was sentenced to serve hard labor for the rest of his natural life.
- Opinion polls showed the public disapproved of the verdict and sentence, so President Nixon placed Calley on house arrest. Three-and-a-half years later, the Secretary of the Army paroled him.
- In 1976, Calley married, and still lives in Columbus.

Officials: Inform residents West Nile virus was found

commonly undetected, according to the center.

However, people may experience mild illnesses including fever, headache and body aches before recovering.

"In some individuals, particularly the elderly, the disease can be a much more serious illness that affects the central nervous system," according to the USACHPPM.

Symptoms generally occur five to 15 days after being infected, and range from having fever to disorientation, muscle weakness and in three to 15 percent of cases, death.

There is currently no specific cure for encephalitis; however, the symptoms and complications from the virus can be treated. Most people who get the illness do recover from it, according to the USACHPPM.

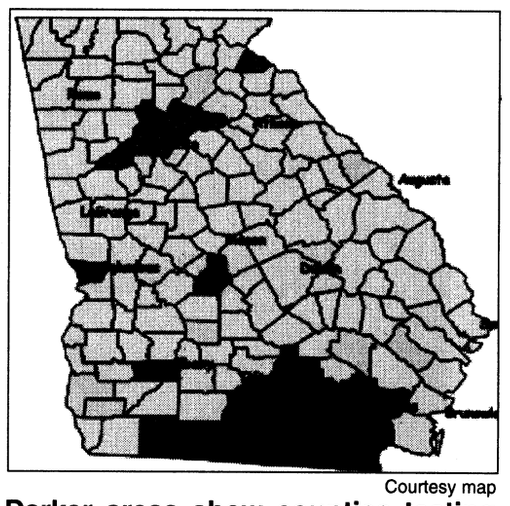
People can protect themselves from the virus by: staying indoors during dusk and dawn hours, wearing long-sleeved shirts and long pants if outside during these hours, using a mosquito repellent with the chemical DEET, and by mosquito-proofing their home, Huzella said.

Removing sources of standing water, such as buckets, old tires and small swimming pools will help eliminate mosquito's breeding grounds, he said.

Huzella advises anyone who finds a dead or dying bird on post to notify Veterinarian Services.

"There is no risk necessarily, but the recommendation is to use gloves or a plastic bag to handle any sick or dying animal," Huzella said.

Residents should also keep the bird cool in a refrigerator (not one used for human food) or a bucket of ice until Veterinarian Services can take the bird for testing.



For more information or to report a dead bird, call Fort Benning Veterinarian Services at 545-4444.

During weekends and off duty hours, call the Military Police desk at 545-5222.

A CLOSER LOOK

The West Nile virus:

- Has not been found in any dead birds on post.
- Can infect anyone.
- Can be much more serious in the elderly.
- Is spread by mosquitoes.
- Symptoms generally occur five to 15 days after being infected.
- Has no specific cure.

Rangers conduct special skills training

Soldiers learn various tasks during classes

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The NCO Corps of the 3rd Ranger Battalion trained 390 rangers in individual "special skills training" Aug. 20 through Thursday.

"Ranger battalions take great pride in doing the basics to standard," said Master Sgt. James Pippin, operations NCOIC, 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. "Most, if not all of the basics are individual ranger tasks. The overall intent of the training was to improve the battalion's individual training tasks."

The nine training events were:

• Demolitions Training — Rangers learned a many demolitions, firing systems and a variety of demolition charges unique to ranger operations.

• Driver's Training — Rangers drove Humvees, Ranger Special Operations Vehicles, Motorcycles and five-ton trucks, during the day and night in a tactical environment.

• Scout Swimmer — Rangers learned how to operate and maintain a Zodiac assault boat as well as tactical swimming operations.

• Advanced MOUT Techniques — Rangers learned advanced military operations in urbanized terrain techniques. They did this under live fire conditions at the new Ranger Shoothouse at Brann Range.

• Advanced Marksmanship — Four-time International Practical Shooting Confederation champion Jerry Barnhart taught rangers advanced combat marksmanship. The focus was to train primary individual trainers and ranger squad leaders on advanced "shoot on the move" marksmanship techniques.

• Higher education — Vincennes University afforded 40 rangers the opportunity to take English 101 or U.S. History.

• Lifeguard — Instructors from Carey Pool certified 10 rangers as lifeguards.

• General Technical Improvement — 40 rangers went through the General Technical Improvement Course on Kelley Hill.

Sgt. William A. Graves

Sgt. Jeremie Wickman, top, applies a hold to Spc. Jesse Johnson during combatives training Tuesday. Both soldiers are from 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"The class instills more aggressiveness and improves self-confidence," said Sgt. 1st Class Richard Sirry, platoon leader.

The different advanced choking techniques and moves rangers learned will give them another weapon for their vast arsenal, he said.

"We'll be able to control non-combatives better and clear rooms faster by using the various holds," Sirry said. "Missions will be quicker and run smoother."

"The combatives were all about training the trainer," he added. "We're going to get more qualified guys to teach during PT."

He said each of the nine special skills training events will provide subject matter experts from whom all soldiers in the battalion will learn and benefit, such as the advanced MOUT techniques and advanced marksmanship.

"We got the most from (advanced marksmanship training, and it will no doubt pay big dividends in future ranger marksmanship training sessions," Pippin said.

"It raised our level of marksmanship for targets of varying distances, by teaching us how to get in and out of alternative firing positions and other advanced techniques," Staff Sgt. Roy Young, squad leader.

The biggest challenge was breaking bad habits, but the rangers adapted and learned skills from which they will reap rewards for the rest of their career, he said.

"(All nine events) were a resounding success," Pippin said. "No doubt, the training received during the past two weeks has improved the morale, readiness and combat effectiveness of the battalion."

Rangers destroy deteriorating structure

Rappel tower demolitions provide training opportunity

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

During the past two weeks, NCOs from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment trained 40 members of their unit in demolitions during specialized individual skills training.

As an added bonus, the training was a hands-on practical exercise.

Range control officials contacted the regiment and requested help in removing a tower.

Sgt. 1st Class John Wear, battalion master breacher, described the demolition as "timber-cutting" because of the tower's wood construction. It took eight pounds of explosive to bring the tower own.

Wear and Sgt. 1st Class Lindsay Bunch, another battalion master breacher, showed the rangers how to strategically tape C4 explosives to the tower's four supports. A breacher or demolition specialist's job is to clear any obstacle using the minimal amount of force to provide an avenue of approach for soldiers.

A time-delay firing device with a six-minute burn time was set to allow rangers enough time to move 300 meters away from the site, and provide adequate protection from flying debris.

The blast was designed to simultaneously blow away the bottom of the two front legs, followed by the top portion of the legs and then the supporting brace in the middle was targeted. In less than a second, the legs of the tower were crippled, sending the rest of the tower crashing to the ground.

The same timber-cutting techniques could be used to clear a helicopter landing zone, remove a telephone pole or create an obstacle for ambush in an area of operation, Bunch said.

The tower demolition exercise benefited the rangers in different ways.

"(Demolition) is a practical application to have for a ranger mission," Pfc. Joseph Naylor said.

"This is a chance to receive good quality training that I can take back to my platoon and share with the others in my squad," Spc. Brandon Lighter said.

Learning more about individual skills and sharing it with other members of their unit is part of ranger training, Bunch said.

Demolitions training is just one of the specialized individual training tasks the regiment conducts to help soldiers learn skills they can take back to their squads, adding another vital dimension to the unit's combat effectiveness.

TRAINING: Students arrest criminals and maintain order

Sgt. Daniel Monroy

988th MPs train with WHINSEC at MOUT site

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

As dusk neared, two UH-60 Black Hawks disappeared below the tree line, only to emerge seconds later, after dropping off a squad of counter-drug course students to join their platoon already in place.

Saturday, the combined force of Latin American police and soldiers attending the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's Counter-Narcotics Course and Military Police from the 988th Company followed an azimuth set for a small town.

The objective was to neutralize and apprehend a suspected drug kingpin.

Meanwhile, at Fort Benning's McKenna Range, instructors, staff and volunteers from WHINSEC and their families prepared for the scenario as innocent citizens and as drug lord suspects resisting authorities.

"It's been an interesting course. The land navigation portion has probably been the most challenging for me and will really make the difference when I go back and do this for real," said Klever Flores, and Equadorian police officer.

Drenched in sweat, the combined force finally came to a ravine where music and light from the town echoed over and illuminated the edge of the tree line.

Once in position, the combined force waited for the signal to carry out orders to seize the suspected stronghold of the drug cartel, a two-story building in the center of town.

Military police officers, Sgt. Meawonna J. Floyd and Pfc. Shanta M. Strawter, provided security for the "fiscal," played by Capt. Moraima Vargas, a guest instructor from Venezuela, a fiscal is the equivalent to a district attorney in the U.S.

Floyd and Stawter were also part of the search team.

This marked the first time that 988th has taken part in such an exercise with WHINSEC counter-narcotic students.

Strawter said that the 988th would begin conducting similar training at McKenna in weeks to come.

"I think a lot can come from this type of training. It gives us an opportunity to expand on the training we have and learn new tactics that could prove useful in future operations as military police," Strawter said.

Floyd and Strawter said the exercise was physically demanding and very exciting.

"It was a real adrenaline rush when the pyro (simulated artillery) went off and we went to work," Strawter said.

"The initial raid was only half of the mission," Floyd said.

"The real work came after the fact, which was maintaining order in the town and processing evidence and captives."

Veterans needed to fill State Dept. jobs

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. State Department is seeking veterans and transitioning soldiers to fill badly needed positions as it engages in its largest expansion in decades.

The hiring drive, initiated by Secretary of State Colin L. Powell, will recruit 1,433 new careerists in fiscal 2002 — 43 percent above the fiscal 2001 level — in foreign and civil service positions.

To achieve these hiring goals, Powell established the Diplomatic Readiness Task Force with special authorization for wide-ranging recruitment efforts including a stronger focus on recruiting military personnel leaving service.

The department has many opportunities of potential interest to the military.

More than 500 former military personnel have entered the department during the last two years.

State Department recruiters are targeting veterans through on-site visits to military installations in specific areas — San Antonio, San Diego, Seattle and several cities in Florida, North and South Carolina, and the Washington, D.C. area.

Recruiters are also participating in military career fairs and employment panels, expanding cooperation with offices of the Transition Assistance Program, and targeted advertising.

More information on foreign service careers is available via the Internet at www.foreignservicecareers.gov, or by calling (202) 261-8888.

Individuals with technical and administrative skills should contact Foreign Service Specialists by visiting www.state.gov/m/dghr/hr/specialist/ or calling (202) 261-8851.

The State Department also offers a Mid-level Entry Program, for which the 2001 deadline is Tuesday.

More details are available at www.state.gov/m/dghr/hr/mip or by calling (478) 757-3090.

Current civil service job openings are listed on the Office of Personnel Management Web site at www.usajobs.opm.gov.

For more information, call Jacquie Clark at the State Department Office of Recruitment at (202) 261-8929.

CSM NOTES

The year is 1999. The Army stands at the gateway to Force XXI, a lighter, more lethal and deployable force.

Sgt. 1st Class John Brown is from Syracuse, N.Y. He wants the Army to station him at Fort Drum so he can retire close to home.

Spc. Joe White wants the Army to PCS him to Fort Hood so he can help his grandmother who lives in Waco, Texas.

Both are out of luck. Brown is an 11M. The 10th Mountain needs light infantrymen. White is an 11B. The 1st Cavalry needs mechanized infantryman.

Today, the world's best infantry is about to get better. Effective Sept. 30, light, mechanized and anti-armor infantrymen will all be 11Bs. Infantry mortarmen will remain 11Cs. All enlisted infantrymen of the rank of master sergeant and higher will be 11Zs.

What this means to the infantry is it will be able to destroy the enemy more efficiently and effectively.

What this means for the U.S. Army Infantry School is Basic and Advanced Noncommissioned Officer Courses will integrate multifaceted training into their curriculum beginning in early 2002. For NCOs who recently graduated from those schools, we have designed interim courses that will begin April 1. These classes will train those leaders new to the Bradley, anti-armor, or light environments for the next four years.

The transition can and will be done. Even our newest soldiers at one station unit training have tackled this concept for the past five months, and they have successfully completed training on selected mechanized and anti-armor tasks.

We will continue to set up our NCOs and junior enlisted soldiers for success — no matter what their background. This transition will be seamless for most infantrymen. They will still go to work, complete missions to standard and go home. The difference is infantrymen will be more:

• FLEXIBLE. They will have more choices for assignments just like mortarmen have had for years.

• ADAPTABLE. They will be able to head to any training exercise or real world mission without the constraints of specialization.

• VERSATILE. They will learn new skill sets — especially light infantrymen — and no longer be tied down to one job.

Consolidation is not a new concept. The Army had consolidated MOSs in the 1960s and 1970s. The 1980s brought about transformation, but we do not need to continue to specialize today's generation of infantryman like we did then. The current paradigm shift in thought is, again, major but simple — the Army and infantry are smaller, but the number of concurrent missions our country requires of us have grown. By cross-leveling the MOSs now, we will not only reduce our soldiers' operation tempo and their time away from loved ones, we will render a myriad of geographic choices for NCO re-enlistment.

Providing these choices and increasing morale will inevitably improve retention. Nothing has more of a positive impact on the professionalism of an infantryman than his current work situation and future opportunities. A content infantry is an infantry that turns over less.

Some of the questions soldiers have asked are:

• What is the process to cross over between the different types of infantry?

If you have at least 24 months time on station, you may submit a 4187 to cross over. The Army will select some soldiers.

• Will the Army automatically place me on assignment if I volunteer for one of the transition courses?

No. Only volunteers selected by Personnel Command to crossover will attend transition training.

• How will consolidation affect promotions to the senior NCO ranks?

The Department of the Army will base promotions on the current system, but competition will increase significantly.

• Will DA consider soldiers with special skills: like ranger or Bradley master gunner for crossover?

Yes. Enlisted Personnel Management Division will control assignments based on soldier requests and needs of the Army.

• Why are 11Cs not involved in the consolidation?

At this point, the mortar arms-room concept that requires proficiency on multiple systems led to the decision to keep the MOSs separate. In the future, technological and training innovations may allow the infantry to move to one MOS.

• Do you think the transition courses will prepare a light soldier for a mechanized unit?

Our NCO force is smarter than at any time in our history and will quickly adapt to these new challenges. They will improve their new units with the best aspects of their last unit.

Besides, Bradleys have a three man crew and nine 11M soldiers who ride in the back who are pure infantry. Sure it will be a struggle in the field and at the school to train quality crews who never stepped foot inside a Bradley, but I am confident our instructors — the best in the Army — will equip all of them with the knowledge, skills and abilities required to perform any mission the Army throws their way. The master gunner course will not change, but it will have a built in emphasis on platoon training to further help soldiers grasp the concepts.

We are embarking on an exciting journey and embracing the vast talent of the infantry. All infantrymen will go much further in the Army this century because of transformation if they have the desire. The means are there — better education and professional development, new technology, etc. — they just have to take advantage of the opportunities.

The year is 2006.

Brown is retired and White a full-time student. However, thanks to the MOS consolidation, thousands of infantrymen are content with their upcoming PCS.

Command Sgt. Maj. Miles Retherford
U.S. Army Infantry School

LEGAL NOTICE

The U.S. Army Infantry Center and Fort Benning requires an expansion of the Propane Peak Power Shaving Plant that is critical to the post's heating capability during extreme periods by the addition of nine 30,000 gallon propane tanks.

That undertaking is the subject of this public notice.

The Army reviewed the initial plan of the undertaking, and in coordination with the Georgia State Historic Preservation Officer and the consulting federally recognized American Indian Tribes, revised the plan to avoid impacts to archeological site 9Ce42 (Quartmaster Site) as then known, and provided for archeological monitoring of the installation of the tanks to assure avoidance of the site.

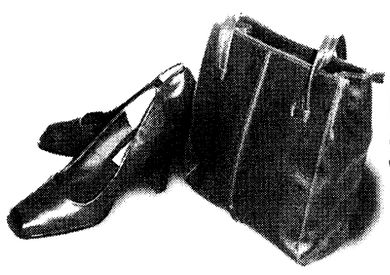
Archeological monitoring of the revised undertaking revealed that the undertaking might still impact previously unknown portions of 9Ce42, a cultural resource that is eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places. The Army has determined, and the SHPO agrees, that the undertaking will have an adverse effect upon the area without mitigation.

To mitigate the effects of the undertaking, the Army proposes to conduct data recovery excavations prior to and in coordination with the undertaking in areas where ground-disturbing activities might adversely effect portions of 9Ce42. More information regarding the Propane Peak Power Shaving Plant Expansion project is available from the Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, at Fort Benning.

Comments on the undertaking or related matters are invited in accordance with 36 CFR 800.

All comments should be made in writing and submitted to John J. Brent, Environmental Management Division/Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, Building 6 (Meloy Hall), USAIC, Fort Benning, Georgia.

Comments received two weeks after the date of this publication will be considered for the undertaking.



John Brent can also be reached at 545-2180.

ARMY VALUES
Soldiers to help teach students

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage — these are the U.S. Army values, intended to serve as a moral guideline for both life and duty.

These values are being instilled in individuals other than our Army's soldiers. They are being taught to our soldiers' children.

The students of Wilson Elementary are kicking off the school year with the Army Values program. The students will focus on one Army value per month throughout the 2001 school year. The first value, loyalty, will be introduced on Wednesday's Partners in Education kickoff.

"It is our goal to teach the children that the Army values are not just for soldiers, but for students as well," said Evelyn Montgomery, guidance counselor at Wilson. "We did Army values with our students last year and other schools have followed in suit. This year the values are being emphasized and developed more."

The Army values at Wilson are called Wildcat values and have the acronym of LDRSHIP (leadership). For each Army value, there is a Wildcat value that is a student affirmation to live by.

The unique part about the program is that Wilson's partner in education, the Basic Combat Training Brigade, helps to reinforce the values learned. Each month, a new Army value will be introduced during the school's announcements. A soldier from the BCTB will introduce what the value means to soldiers and then a student will follow up with what the value means to him.

Values are also reinforced during guidance classes taught by Montgomery. Each class spends 45 minutes per week in guidance discussing Army values, as well as other values such as perseverance, compassion, and kindness.

Montgomery said this program is good for the children because they can parallel what they learn at school with what their parents do at work and what they learn at home.

"It is necessary for the students to get this as early as possible, so that they can externalize it. They have to see it, hear it, and feel it to truly understand it," Montgomery said.

"The teaching of values has always been in place, but now the children can incorporate the Army values into something they know," said Margaret Koger, gifted education teacher.

Montgomery said for the program to be a complete success, parents and teachers must keep the lines of communication open.

"We are still in the thinking stages and need to focus on ways to get a partnership between the parents and the school. We foresee this becoming much more," Montgomery said. "It is important for parents to know that they are welcome in the schools at anytime."

Phyllis Parker, principal at Wilson Elementary, said the values are important to all of us because we are an Army community.

"Children need to have beliefs. They can learn the values at school and then talk to their parents who are practicing them at home," Parker said.

"Army values. Our values, too" — this year's program — is intended to teach the students that they have personal responsibilities, too.

"This program is so important because we want our children to be the best that they can be. We want them to be the most well-rounded they can be," Parker said.

WILDCAT VALUES

L: LOYALTY - I am a Wilson Wildcat. I will show my loyalty by being faithful to the Wilson School Creed.

D: DUTY - I am a Wilson Wildcat. I will fulfill my obligations as a student and I will do my best.

R: RESPECT - I am a Wilson Wildcat. I will treat others the way I would like to be treated. I will respect the rights of others

S: SELFLESS SERVICE - I am a Wilson Wildcat. I understand that there will be times when I put the needs of others before my own.

H: HONOR - I am a Wilson Wildcat. I will live up to the Wildcat Values. I will be honest and true.

I: INTEGRITY - I am a Wilson Wildcat. I will do what is right for myself and others. I will be a student of integrity.

P: PERSONAL COURAGE - I am a Wilson Wildcat. I will learn to face my fears with the help of those who are here to help me.

'Invisible' wives thrown headlong into spotlight

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"Junior enlisted spouses are often reputed to be young and immature 'big-haired, trailer-park babes with too many children' who do not know how to manage their money," according to a recent Rand report, authored by a social scientist who said those were the very words enlisted wives used to describe many of their own peers.

But those are fighting words, regardless of the source, say NCO wives, and the published report only exacerbates the problem of stereotyping military wives.

"We fight that stereotype on a daily basis," said Sarah Hertig, Fort Benning's Army Family Team Building program manager and the wife of a staff sergeant. "The book made me mad. It defines me by what my husband wears on his collar."

Invisible Women: Junior Enlisted Army Wives, by Dr. Margaret G. Harrell, a self-proclaimed Army brat, has received critical reviews from military wives and much of the mainstream media, including Time Magazine. But the author said the media has misrepresented the book and fueled the fires of discontent among enlisted wives.

"I've received a lot of negative feedback from many who've never read the book or read excerpts taken out of context," Harrell said. "Certainly the media hasn't covered it like I would have liked. If I'd read that article in Time Magazine without knowing the whole story, I'd hate me too."

Harrell neither purports to dispel or add credibility to the stereotypes of young enlisted wives. These stereotypes are part of a bigger problem and may interfere with the resolution of the concerns junior enlisted wives face, she said. Senior leadership and policy makers should be aware that the experiences of military spouses differ considerably among the ranks, and therein lies the basis for the book.

"The book evolved from a dissertation I was doing about the expectations and roles of Army spouses," Harrell said. "I didn't set out to capture the negative side of it, but what I discovered was a surprise to me — something I didn't see growing up in the Army — the complex issues that these younger wives face."

Invisible Women is based on a premise it never substantiates and offers little in the way of resolving stereotypes or proposing policy change, said Michelle Ossa, Fort Benning's Enlisted Wives' Club president, who called Harrell's work "divisive."

"I don't buy what she's trying to sell, literally," Ossa said. "I encourage no one to buy the book because it stereotypes the young enlisted wives who'll be our future leaders. They're strong and beautiful and smart and they're military wives, just like the rest of us. Yes, we need to support them, but I fail to see how this book does that."

The book, little more than a hundred pages, delves into the day-to-day lives of three junior enlisted wives, Dana, Jennifer and Toni, who've agreed to speak freely — albeit anonymously — about their experiences as military wives.

It takes an in-depth look at each woman's finances, education, family history and marriage, the extent to which their perceptions of the military are colored by these factors and vice versa — how their husband's careers affect their emotions, goals, plans and relationships.

Harrell interviewed more than a hundred Army spouses from Fort Drum, N.Y., and Fort Stewart, Ga., and selected these three women based on "their similarities and dissimilarities to the common stereotype, not because they're representative of all wives," she said.

"Junior enlisted spouses are typically considered to be young, immature, lower class spouses who are in financial difficulty and who have difficulty controlling their reproductive tendencies," she said. "These are not my words. They're the words that I heard from other enlisted wives. This is the stereotype that emerged from my research. I think people are angry about the book because they think I've created these stereotypes or that I'm saying they apply to everyone.

"No, I'm saying that these three are not representative of the whole military community, but they paint a picture of the problems and perceptions of so many young enlisted wives."

Of the three case studies, Dana most accurately reflects the invisible woman stereotype — she's very young, expecting her second child and living in a trailer.

The wife of a private first class. Dana believes herself to be generally invisible to the military community. Her story is one of debt spiraling out of control, and Harrell believes it serves as a cautionary tale for Army policy makers.

"There has been some positive feedback about the book," she said. "I believe there are those taking a closer look at allotment merchants who offer easy credit and trap young enlisted families in debt."

The second case study takes a candid look at Jennifer, a teen-age mother who left high school to marry a young soldier.

Jennifer fits many of the stereotypes of junior enlisted wives, Harrell said, but she's actively involved in her husband's unit's family support group and manages the family's very limited income "with more aplomb than most." With "solid financial guidance" from in-laws, Jennifer and her husband have managed to purchase a home.

"She struck me as remarkably savvy," Harrell said. "She had a tough past, but she's made very smart choices."

The third study, Toni, is "anything but a stereotypical spouse," Harrell said. "She is an older woman, in her mid-30s, who has a college degree and professional experience in the workforce."

Nonetheless, Toni deals with many problems typical to junior enlisted families. She's stymied and frustrated by her experiences with Tricare and financial difficulties and limited employment opportunities in her community have forced her to accept a minimum wage job in a laundromat.

"I've heard people say, 'If these women weren't so young and immature, they wouldn't have these problems.' They use the stereotypes to explain the problem," Harrell said. "But these case studies show that you can't simply explain it all away with a stereotype."

Harrell said she believes the military officer-enlisted structure mirrors the civilian society's social structure to a large extent. However, in the civilian world "there's room for class mobility."

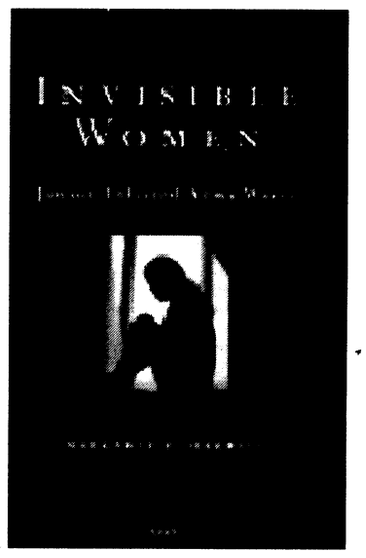
"Out there your personal attributes determine your place in society. You can 'better yourself,'" Harrell said. "But in the military your class is determined by your spouse's rank. Sure there are pediatricians out there married to E-3s, but when it comes to their place in the military, they're still an E-3's spouse."

Though Hertig agrees that spouses "are still defined by what their husbands wear on their collar," she said military wives have come a long way in disproving stereotypes, and Harrell's book "does more harm than good for the cause of junior enlisted spouses."

"Sure I've had to prove my worth," Hertig said. "When I took this position (AFTB program manager), I was told by another wife that, as the wife of an E-6, I had no business trying to accomplish anything on this post. I was furious and shocked.

"But overall, I think we're evolving. The younger generation of military spouses are comfortable with who they are, their self-esteem doesn't come from what their husbands do, and they're refusing to be pigeon-holed by society," she added.

Hertig believes the key to ending the stereotypes is involvement.



"We have to become more involved in our community, and we'll see those barriers quickly come down," she said.

But Harrell said shedding the stereotypes may be harder than resolving the "real issues" junior enlisted wives face.

"A stereotype is a hard demon to take on. How do you disprove it? By definition, as long as it exists in perception, it's real," Harrell said.

"But my purpose was to address the very real issues these women face. There are housing issues and finances and morale problems that can't be explained away by a stereotype," she added.

"I wanted to give these women a voice. For the most part, they're not empowered to tell their own story to policy makers. My goal was to provide a snapshot of their lives and to prompt discussion. I think I've done both. I've certainly prompted a lot of discussion."

What wives are saying:

Mary-Ann Rinaldi, teacher

"I am not an enlisted Army spouse. I am the wife of an enlisted soldier. I love a man who is an NCO in the U.S. Army. My husband's status does not define who I am."

Sarah Hertig, AFTB manager

"I think it's too bad enlisted wives are not encouraged to celebrate our husbands' careers. We all have a common goal, to support the soldiers who serve our country."

Jessica Plaut, teacher

"We have to value ourselves for our own accomplishments and successes. Our sense of self-worth should never depend on our husbands' choice of career. We are strong and capable women."

Inga Flores, volunteer

"We are too often stereo-typed as uneducated. No, we're not. I continued my education after my marriage.
Now my children are my priority. I chose this life for myself.
Just because your husband is in the military doesn't mean your life has to stop."

Cadre reaffirm marital vows

Unit rewards tough duty with family recognition

1st Lt. Jason Ballinger
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Battalion

Drill sergeants and other cadre members from 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, renewed their marriage vows during a ceremony held at the Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill Aug. 25.

This is one of many programs sponsored by the battalion in an effort to give something back to the drill sergeants and their families.

The ceremony was presided over by the battalion chaplain (Capt.) David Trogdon. He said every effort was made to create a special moment for all.

The ceremony was conducted in a traditional manner with many couples having family attend.

Couples marched down the aisle to the tune of, "Here Comes the Bride," and then recited their vows in unison.

Following the ceremony, there was a reception complete with food, drinks and wedding cake.

Participants were also given a wedding certificate and a marriage enrichment workbook.

"It was a great experience. The renewal reminded us of all the reasons why we married the first time. It helped rekindle that youthful romance and bring a greater sense of unity to the family," Staff Sgt. Kimberly Turner, battalion adjutant, said.

"Additionally, it made the family members feel that the chain of command was aware of the strain that the job placed on families and truly cared enough to try to do something to make up for it."

The unit tries to sponsor at least one event per quarter for cadre members and their families in order to relieve some of the stress and increase unit cohesion.

"We will have failed as a battalion if when we are done training infantrymen, it has resulted in the estrangement of cadre and their families," Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Steve Hawley, said.

Grand opening offers holiday deals

PX Toyland opens doors Sept. 15

AAFES Public Affairs

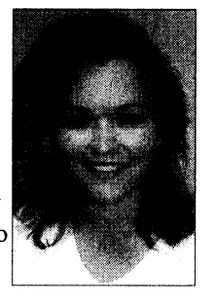
DALLAS — Exchange shoppers can mark their calendars for Sept. 15.

That's the grand opening date of Army and Air Force Exchange Service Toylands worldwide.

"Toyland openings in Sept. are an AAFES tradition," explained Matt Mennona, senior program manager. "This allows our customers to get a jump on their holiday purchases. For those who have children, it's a great convenience to shop early. This year, for opening day, we've added a free 'Toydroid Family' coloring book for the little ones."

Shoppers will find it worthwhile to shop early, Mennona said. They'll find game gear, such as skateboards, basketballs and backboards, at a 15 to 30 percent savings. Another grand opening special is a 20 percent savings on youth bikes.

Toylands will offer a wide assortment of toys from Hasbro, Mattel, G.I. Joe, Hot Wheels, Fisher-Price, just to name a few. Collectors should look for the AAFES-exclusive, "Paratrooper Barbie."



Other destined big sellers of the season are Hasbro's Bob the Builder, Bandai's Transforming Gundan action figure and Sony's Limited Edition Playstation2 GT3 Racing Pack plus free racing wheel.

In conjunction with the Toyland opening, AAFES is offering a special three-month, zero-interest, Military Star Card promotion from Sept. 15-21.

"Customers will enjoy great selection and terrific savings," Mennona said. "They won't want to miss the Toyland Grand Opening."

garden tips

Jennifer White
Bayonet correspondent

The heat continues in southern Georgia, but that's no reason your garden shouldn't be looking its best.

Annuals and perennials tend to fade during the long hot days of summer. To give them a much needed boost, start by cutting them back.

Remove as much as one-third of the growth from annuals and perennials. This pruning back should include the flower heads that already exist. It may seem harsh to cut the blooms off, but this gives the plants an opportunity to produce more, and often larger flowers.

With the longer growing season, summer annuals like petunias, begonias, impatiens and marigolds will flourish before the first frost. In addition to the rebirth that occurs from cutting back these plants, a good pruning often keeps their growth from getting sparse and leggy.

Perennials also flourish after a good pruning. Cutting back popular plants such as purple coneflower, Black-Eyed-Susan, and verbena allows the plant to send more energy to the root structure. This diversion of energy will aid these plants with next year's production of blooms and growth.

After cutting back your garden plants, water them well and fertilize with a water soluble solution. Give the foliage a good strong spraying of water to evict any pests that may be waiting to infest your garden.

Remember to save the debris for the compost pile. And while you're there, give the compost pile a good turn in the bin.

David Murray a fifth-grade teacher at Stowers Elementary School.

Personal: Murray lives in Buena Vista, Ga. He has three children, two sons and a daughter, one granddaughter, 7-year-old Paige, and another expected in September.

"Her name is Madison, and I've got a bassinet in the living room waiting for her," he said.

Education: The son of an Air Force nuclear weapons specialist, Murray moved frequently as a child.

"I never attended one school for a whole year until high school," he said. "I think that's why I came back to a Department of Defense school. I understand military kids and what they need."

He attended Evangel College, Northeast Missouri State University and Troy State University.

History: Murray has been teaching for 29 years. He began his career teaching in a mission school in West Africa and later served as business manager for a private high school in the Marshall Islands. After serving as an elementary school principal for eight years in Missouri, Murray moved "back home" to Georgia and served as assistant principal at Faith Middle School for eight years.

"But I missed being with the kids," he said. "As an administrator, I often saw only the negative. I missed the really fun times with the kids.

It's hard to be a disciplinarian when you have a teacher's heart."

Hobbies and interests: An avid outdoorsman, gardener and carpenter, Murray lives in a rustic pine-board home he built. He cut the trees for lumber and did all the electrical and plumbing work.

"It's really unique. I built the house around the trees and except for the ones I used for lumber, I only had to cut one tree that I couldn't use," he said. "It's built on a ravine and I have a creek running through the back yard — fantastic view."

Travel: "I like to travel, but I always love coming home," Murray said. He has traveled "millions of miles," and makes it a point to vacation abroad every year.

He's traveled all over Europe, South America, Central America and Micronesia, and is currently planning a cruise for his daughter's senior class.

Plans and goals: "I'm doing exactly what I want to do with my life," Murray said. "And I wouldn't want to teach anywhere else but here. I love Fort Benning. There's not been a single day when I've got out of bed dreading to come to work."

Faculty welcomes new teachers, classrooms

Loyd Elementary School

Loyd Elementary School's year has started off very well both for the teachers and the students.

This year Loyd is welcoming five new teachers: Becky Archilla, P.E.; Sherry Dignan, counselor; Kris Kreske, fifth grade; Carol Mowen, Music; and Anne Trawick, Gifted Education.

Mowen said she is enjoying teaching Loyd students.

"I love being at Loyd. It's a wonderful school," she said. "The students have enjoyed coming to music class. They are eager to sing and play the instruments.

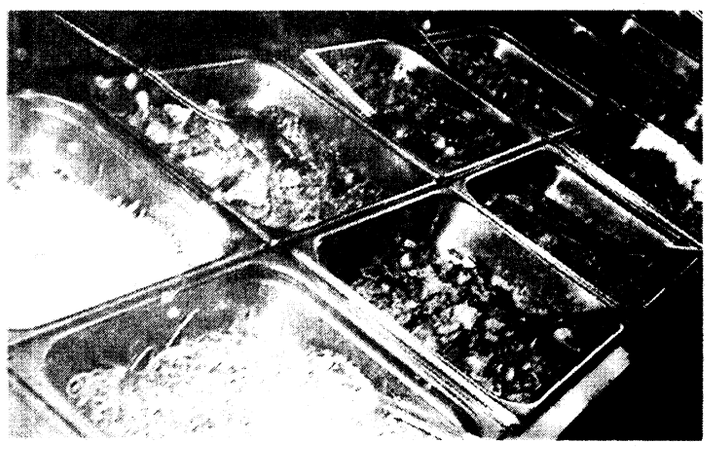
"I am proud to be part of the Loyd team."

Another change at Loyd this year includes character education for students focusing on the Army values: loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and courage, presented by Dignan.

Not only will she provide whole-class guidance at Loyd, but will also aid individual students and groups of students whose parents are deployed.

Loyd is also in the process of building four additional classrooms. The faculty hopes to be able to move into them after the Christmas holidays.

Fifth-grade classes are taking advantage of this building project by incorporating it into their curriculum. They are learning how important math is, especially when it involves construction.



Larshawna Morris said changes or no, she is just happy to be back in school.

"I like coming back to school because I can play and see all my old friends. I also like going outside and being in third grade," she said.

Michael McDonald said, "I like seeing old friends and meeting all the teachers. I also like seeing my old friends and reading the library books."

reflections

I recently heard a story about a man who was seeking employment.

Leafing through the classifieds, he saw an ad for the local zoo.

Thinking it must involve taking care of the animals or sweeping up, he figured there would be plenty of places to hide, maybe even take a nap, so he goes for an interview.

The zookeeper explains that the zoo had recently lost one of its main attractions, Magilla the Gorilla, and they couldn't afford to replace him. They needed someone to impersonate Magilla. The man asked if he could take a nap during the day. "Sure," the zookeeper said, "Magilla took naps all the time." That sealed the deal.

The next day, he drove to the zoo, put on his costume and got in the cage. He soon learned that in addition to taking a nap, he could swing on the tire, eat peanuts, pose for pictures and even spit water.

He was a big hit, and he loved the job.

Things went well until three weeks later when he fell into his old lazy habits. After a late night, the alarm didn't go off, and he was late. He threw on his costume, and realizing that there were already people at the front gate waiting for the zoo to open, he drove to the back, jumped over the back wall, ran to his cage, let himself in, and slammed the door shut to lock it.

Out of breath but still pleased with himself, he noticed there was some heavy breathing in the cage besides his own. He turned to see a lion sleeping at the other end of the cage.

He started screaming, "Get me out of here! Help, help!" This was not wise because that woke the lion. The lion shook his great mane, turned, and started towards the intruder. The lion pounced on this poor soul, one giant paw pinning each shoulder to the wall of the cage.

The fierce eyes of the lion fixed on him and the lion said, "If you don't stop that screaming, we're both going to lose our jobs."

One distinct aspect of our American culture is that we extol the virtues of hard work.

This country's greatness is due in no small part to the concept referred to as, "The Protestant Work Ethic."

The Protestant work ethic is a synthesis of two great movements, which changed the religious and political landscape of the world.

The 16th century reformation theologian, Martin Luther, emphasized the ethical value of this life and the sanctity of labor. His teachings, along with the other reformers, elevated labor to the level of a sacred pursuit.

Probably no political thinker influenced the American political system more than did the Christian philosopher, John Locke.

Locke firmly believed that every person has a right to his own life and to enjoy the fruits of his own labor. He reasoned, that applying our labor to the world God has made fulfills the creator's plan in aiding us to be more productive and more virtuous.

When the spiritual force of Luther's sanctity of labor met the spiritual and political reasoning of Locke, it produced an enormous outflowing of cultural strength called the Protestant Work Ethic.

With this as a backdrop why is there such animosity against hard work? Countless articles chide us to work less and pursue more recreation. Granted, all work and no play does make Jack a dull boy. But isn't it true that through our work we find our purpose for living?

What does this mean for the thousands of individuals in uniform today? I believe there is no greater calling than to be a defender of liberty and individual rights. All of us have a part in this noble endeavor.

All work, no matter how insignificant, is essential to the success of the Army's mission. The men and women serving in the military are this nation's most important asset.

This work is spiritual in nature; it is a holy thing. I firmly believe our labor is blessed of God; remember Luther's "sanctity of work" and Locke's "life, liberty and property?"

How then can we ever consider what we do for our nation as menial or inconsequential? Shouldn't we put our whole heart and effort into what we do? Instead of seeing how little we can get by with, why not go beyond what is expected of us?

Rather than fretting away our lives in a costume reminiscent of our friends the gorilla and lion, let's view our labor as not only meaningful but holy as well.

chapel notes

Sunday School — It isn't just for kids anymore.

Things are changing in the Protestant Christian Education Program. Not only are there some valuable classes for the children, there are also some important ones for the adults.

Beginning Sept. 16, you can take a class on enriching your marriage from a Christian perspective, you can get an overview of what the Old Testament is all about or take an in depth look at the highlights of Jesus' ministry: the miracles, the parables, and the Sermon on the Mount.

It's Christian education: for living and for life.

The book comes alive — A book of the Bible will come alive at TIC Chapel Sept. 9 at a special service beginning at 10:30 a.m.

Marquis Laughlin, a professional actor, will present the entire Gospel of John in a way that you will never forget. Reciting the text entirely from memory, Laughlin adds the talents of dramatic voice and action to make the book come alive.

The public is invited to this special service. There will be only one service that Sunday, and it starts at 10:30 a.m.

Protestant Women of the Chapel — The Protestant Women of the Chapel will have their fall kick off rally Thursday at Custer Terrace Chapel.

The PWOC, which meets every Thursday from 9:30 a.m. to noon, is a nondenominational group committed to Christian fellowship, worship, and study.

This year the theme is "Fix Your Eyes on Jesus." All women are welcome to attend and childcare is provided on site.

For more information, call Gigi Kail at 685-0739.

Catholic religious education registration — Registrations will continue following all masses. Religious Education Programs will begin Sept. 23.

• CCD classes for preK (age 3) through eighth grade and an adult enrichment program is held Sunday mornings from 10:10 to 11:10 a.m. at Wilson School.

• High school Bible study, followed by a Youth Ministry program of Fellowship and Service, will meet on Sunday evenings at 6 p.m. at Custer Terrace Chapel.

• Adult education classes will be held Saturday mornings at 9 a.m. at TIC Annex. Deacon Larry West will cover topics to include "The Liturgy Documents," Evangelization, Ecumenism, Christian morality and others.

• RCIA and RCIC meets Wednesday evenings at Custer Terrace Chapel Annex.

Volunteers are needed in all areas of Religious Education. Catechists, aides, bilingual teachers, RCIA and RCIC team members and sponsors, and sacramental preparation facilitators are needed.

Share your gift of faith with the community. To volunteer, register for any program, or for more information, call the Religious Education Center at 545-5508.

Bilingual outdoor mass — The Fort Benning Catholic Community will welcome Father (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe and all new members of the congregation at a Bilingual Outdoor Mass and Potluck dinner Sept. 9.

The celebration will include fellowship, games, and an opportunity to learn about and register for parish programs.

Mass will begin at 10:31 a.m. at Gowdy Field. Each family is asked to bring a salad or desert to share.

For more information call the Chapel at 545-1452.

Change requires transformation of mind

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

What we think is who we are and how we act (Proverbs 23:7).

The change that is taking place in the Army today is based on a new paradigm of strategic thinking and illustrates how an idea can transform a person, a soldier, a unit and the Army.

It will change the way we train and fight. It will require us to change our own way of thinking.

The "Army of One" is more than a beret. The beret is only a symbol of the transformation of the Army into a lighter, leaner, and more mobile and lethal force.

This change requires us to rethink who we are, what we do and how we do it.

The process of change begins with an idea. That idea then becomes a personal goal.

When that idea is effectively communicated, others take that vision and make it their own, and it then becomes reality.

We break free from the status quo, conformity and negative peer pressure by renewing our minds (Romans 12:1-2). Failure to make this transition will keep us stuck in the rut of obsolete thinking.

Transformation is also a spiritual metamorphosis, and is most evident when a person becomes a child of God (II Corinthians 5:17).

It is the change of the will. Many people fail to change not because they can't, but because they won't.

Do you want to make positive changes in your life? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries enter at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance.

Call the center at 545-1760, or send me an e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Darby's Rangers win over NCOA, 21-17

Sgt. Michael Maddox

Timothy Gardner, Noncommissioned Officer Academy, connects with a grounder during the game against the winning 4th Ranger Training Battalion Darby's Rangers.

4th RTB wins post softball tournament

Sgt. Michael Maddox
Bayonet assistant editor

Players from the 4th Ranger Training Battalion Darby's Rangers proved why baseball diamonds are sometimes referred to as "fields of dreams" as they made their dream a reality Aug. 23 by upsetting the Noncommissioned Officer Academy, 21-17, during an "if" game of softball play — winning the post championship for the second year in a row.

The Rangers, who came to the field with a 3-1 record, swept the favored 4-0 NCOA team in the first game of the evening, 25-19, allowing them to face off once more in a second game.

Going in as the underdog really didn't affect the players' mentality, Rangers' coach Tom Siter said.

"We went into the games more relaxed than when we had played NCOA earlier," he said. The Rangers only defeat during the tournament was at the hands of NCOA.

"We knew we were going to be competitive with them and that they were going to have to beat us," Siter added.

Siter said that he knew the team had it in them to pull out the victory.

"We were in this exact situation last year, and we were able to come back and win," he said.

"Several times during this tournament we would fall behind five or more runs, but we never gave up and were always able to come back."

A big key to the team's success lies in the players' hitting abilities, Siter said.

"Our hitters were there this year. We had seven players with averages better than .600," he said.

This was a little surprising as only three of the players for the Rangers were left from last season.

Siter said the bumper crop of new players didn't hurt the team at all.

"This year the hitting was just there," Siter said.

Michael Scarpula led the way during the tournament with a .692 batting average, followed by Randall Eggie with .667 and Willis Layne with .654.

Hitting was only one of the team's keys to taking the championship, Siter said.

"We had an explosive offense, and we played fundamental defense," he said. "Plus, we used our practice time wisely."

Going into the final games, there was a mutual respect between the teams, said NCOA pitcher Ed Grimm.

"Since we had just played and beaten them the night before, we knew we were going to be in for a fight. But we also knew that they (Rangers) always come out to play and that nothing is over until it's over," he said.

Grimm said as a result, being taken down by the Rangers wasn't a complete surprise.

"As it turned out, we just got outhit. They got hot and we got on the short end of the stick," he said.

But there is no shame in second place, Grimm added.

"Everyone was disappointed that we didn't win, but still happy that we made second on post," he said. "We were happy to be where we were."

USAMU dominates 300-meter games

Four-time Olympian sweeps national shooting tournament

Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit dominated the 300-Meter National Championships conducted at the Pool International Shooting Complex over the weekend.

The USAMU hosted the 2001 USA Shooting 300-Meter National Championships Aug. 23-26 at the Pool International Shooting Complex.

Dubis

USA Shooting is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

Four-time Olympian Capt. Glenn A. Dubis swept all the competitions, winning the Gold Medals in the 300-Meter Free Rifle Prone, the 300-Meter Free Rifle Three Position and the 300-Meter Standard Rifle Three Position matches.

Maj. Stephen C. Goff took second place in all three matches and Spc. Trevor D. Gathman placed third in the Standard Rifle Match. The USAMU Teams also swept all the team matches.

The National Championships also chose the 2001 U.S. Team that will compete in the Championship of the Americas — the CAT Games — to be held Sept. 30 through Oct. 7 at Fort Benning.

The CAT Games, Campeonato de Tiro de las Americas, are the shooting championships for the Western Hemisphere, which are conducted every four years.

The CAT Games are one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and Pan-American Games — where shooters can win medals and set world records.

At the CAT games, the U.S. Team will compete against shooters from North, Central and South America for the title of being the best in the Americas.

Dubis competed in the 2000, 1996, 1988 and 1984 Olympics.

He is a five-time World Military Rifle Champion, a three-time World Rifle Champion and recently was a member of the Conseil International du Sport Militaire Team that brought home the Gold Medal for the United States and set a new world record at CISM in Lahti, Finland.

The infantry officer has served in the U.S. Army for 19 years and is a veteran of Desert Storm.

DFAC dines on Wolfpack, 62-33

Killer defense, hot second half key to playoff win

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Soldiers from Gibson Dining Facility feasted on B Company, 203rd Maintenance Battalion Wolfpack, 62-33, Aug. 22 at Kefurt Fitness Center during an early round of the post's summer basketball intramural playoff game.

The DFAC held the Wolfpack to seven second-half points. The Wolfpack scored its first field goal with seven minutes remaining in the game.

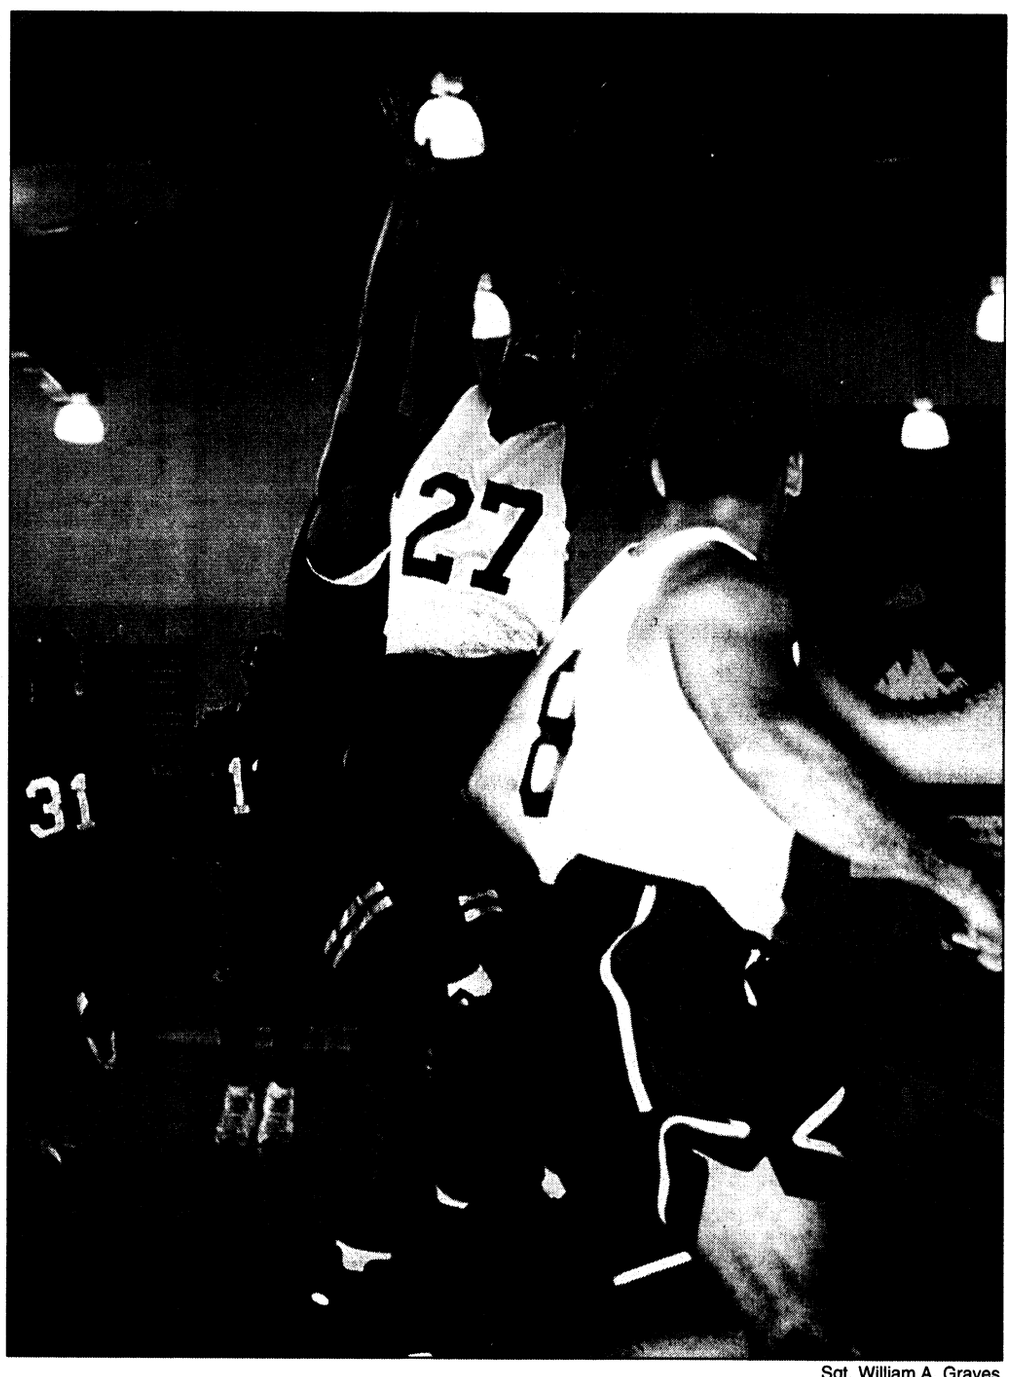
"It wasn't that they ran out of gas," said DFAC Coach Edwin Riley. "It was because once we stepped up the tempo — they weren't able to keep up."

He said the 5-0 DFAC concentrated on driving to the basket for layups instead of shooting jumpers like his team did in the first half. Confidence grew as a result.

Gregory Brooks of the DFAC scored all of his 17 points in the second half.

"Coach told me to calm down," Brooks said. "When I did, I was able to play my game."

He and the rest of the DFAC put on a defensive clinic, and the 3-3 Wolfpack couldn't buy a shot.



"Everything started to flow in the second half," Brooks said. "It was a total team effort. Everyone was on the same page, and we had a comfortable rhythm. No one can beat us if we play like this the rest of the tournament."

He said the key to victory and the second half massacre was a commitment to "in-your-face" defense and solid rebounding. Subsequently, they converted on numerous fast breaks.

The two halves were opposites. The teams exchanged buckets, kept fast breaks to a minimum, hit a few three-pointers and played tenacious defense in the first half.

Joseph Davis and B. Jones kept the Wolfpack in the game with nine first-half points each. Their team led 15-10 with 10 minutes left, but it couldn't sustain momentum. The Wolfpack spread the scoring around and finished the first half leading 29-26.

Things started to unravel for the Wolfpack when the DFAC scored two quick layups to start the second half and went on to score 11 more unanswered points. Wolfpack frustration grew, and referees called two technical fouls on them late in the game.

Sgt. William A. Graves

DFAC member, Antonio Hunter, drives for one of his team's many fast breaks in the second half of the game agains the Wolfpack.

"We're still getting used to playing with each other, but we're starting to gel at the right time," Riley said. "We hope to build on that the rest of the playoffs. The strong teams are still to come, but if we stay focused on defense, I'm confident we'll do well."

See next week's paper for championship game coverage.

Batting cages are inexpensive fun

Laura Martinson

Jason Netteler, a family member from Smith's Station, Ala., steps up to bat at the installation's batting cages.

Baseball offers break from training

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet

If you build it, they will come.

From around the country young men and women have come to Fort Benning to begin or further a career in the world's best Army. But during their stay, they may need a break from the intensity of training.

For many, a day at the cages is just what they need.

The batting cages on Fort Benning have become an outlet and a way to stay in touch with baseball for soldiers and family members. Pvt. Chad Johnson from Washington, is here in airborne school, and often takes to the cages to blow off a little steam.

"I played baseball in high school, and I would like to keep playing. Playing at the cages keeps me up-to-date," Johnson said. "There is not a whole lot to do without a car, so we come here to have something to do that is close."

Jason Netteler, a family member, drives from Smiths Station, Ala., to hang out with friends and brush up on his swing.

"I used to be a catcher at Spencer High School, and I have been coming here for three years. I have actually improved my swing, and did better at tryouts because of it," Netteler said.

The batting cages are frequented often by many trainees, family members and children with their parents or coaches, said Dennis Layman, a family member and an MWR employee.

"During the weekend there are a lot of soldiers, but during the week there are kids there with their parents or getting lessons from their coaches," Layman said.

The batting cages are open Wednesday to Friday, from 4 to 8 p.m., Saturday from 1 to 8 p.m, and Sunday from 1 to 6 p.m.

Two quarters buys 10 shots at improving your swing and bats and helmets are provided to keep you busy and safe.

The batting cages prove to be a source of entertainment for many who are just looking for something to do.

"There is not a whole lot to do around here. When you are a teenager on post, you find what you can," Netteler said.

A Couple of Weeks ago We Came To your Place of business With What We Thought Was a TRANSMISSION Problem. We were expecting To maybe even have To have you so into The TRANSMISSION at aN expensive repair bill. When you drove The Car + Told us it was a Fuse We were so relieved! When you didn't even charge us a dime we were even more surprised. As we Left We looked at The Cards you gave us + we began To see. We were dealing With a Christian. How wonderful To Know There Are Still People Like you IN This World of doubt + mistrust. We have Told everyone We Know about This incident. We were Stranded Away From home. you could have TAKEN Advantage of us + we wouldn't even have known. Thank you so much For your Kindness.

Sincerely

Credit Rebuilders Are In Columbus Promising "No Credit Investigation" Car Loans.

Columbus, GA - Mr. Jimmy Peters of Credit Rebuilders of America will be hosting a mega-sales event at Bill Heard Chevrolet today, Saturday and Sunday that will surely have car buyers out in full force and talking about it for years to come. If you want or need a new, one-, two- or three-year old car, truck, family van or sport utility, then you need to pay close attention.

Even if your credit is totally ruined - I'm talking about people with previous bankruptcies, multiple repossessions, charge-offs, divorces, credit card difficulties, tax liens or just plain slow pay - Mr. Peters has a revolutionary new program that will, in almost every case, wash away all your previous credit sins and put you on the road to complete blue-chip recovery. And ,best of all, you get the new or late model vehicle of your dreams.

Well, you might say, "how much cash out-of-pocket will this fresh start and new or slightly-used dream vehicle require?" This is where the deal really gets sweet. Through Monday, credit rebuilders will only require a small amount of out-of-pocket - $29 to be exact!

Yes, anyone who can raise $29 will, in all likelihood, drive a prestigious luxury Tahoe, Suburban, Silverado, Impala, Venture family van, Trail Blazer, Cherokee, Honda, Toyota, Explorer, Expedition, XLT, Laramie, Dakota, Mustang, Park Ave, or even a luxury Cadillac home this evening. Again, with only $29 down!

It only gets better. For those on limited budget payments, you can actually start in the $90 per month range. And finance rates, even for the credit-impaired, begin at an astounding 6.9% APR! A prime example of a deal of this magnitude would be a '97 Dodge Laramie SLT 4-door Club Cab pickup with the magnum V-8, automatic trans, power windows and locks, a CD changer in addition to a cassette player and, of course, air conditioning in addition to all the other comforts and utilitarian options. Priced at an unbelievable $8000, you pay $29 down, finance at 6.9% APR and make 72 payments of $142.60 each. Of course, the tax, title and license would be extra. Or if a small car is your thing, perhaps this '98 Chevy Cavalier would hit the spot. You would simply make a $90 payment to one of the national banks hosting this event , spread over 72 months at 6.9% APR with the title, tax and license extra. As you might suspect, this 6.9% APR money is usually reserved for insiders and other blue-chip clients, so this opportunity may never, in fact, be repeated, so you must act now!

And if that wouldn't be enough to get anyone's attention, there is even more to excite savvy car shoppers. For a limited time, you may even delay payment start-up past normal vacation time, enabling you to put extra funds into summer vacation trips in your new or like-new vehicle.

For those who have been told they owe too much to trade, we have an even bolder program. Credit rebuilders vow to make special arrangements to pay off any vehicle, regardless of balance owed when they trade it in.

You can trade your current vehicle, even if you believe it is a less-than-desirable brand. For any trade-in, you can expect to get an incredible amount over Kelley Blue Book Value. Even if your car is not running.

An event like this may never come to Columbus again and the lines are sure to be long. To avoid those lines, you may call ahead for a VIP pass. Ask for Mr. Peters at 322-8888 ext 108, or come to :

And best of all, The credit process Is incredibly simple and fast. You present your $29 cash to Jimmy Peters, who is hosting the event for the Disposal company, and in less than 5 minutes he'll give you a list of vehicles to pick from. Payments range from $79 mo. And terms can be 6 months or less!

Post steps up security measures

Force protection is everybody's business

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Working for force protection is a common goal for Fort Benning.

One of the soldiers at the main gate check point was Spc. Sean Gleason, 317th Engineer Battalion, 3rd Brigade.

"I feel like I'm doing something beneficial for the campaign we're in now," Gleason said.

"We're helping to protect Fort Benning and the security of our country.

"I'm an equipment operator, so I don't normally do stuff like this," he said. "This is really good training. It gets you in touch with the real world events the Army is dealing with. I'm just proud to be here."

Sgt. 1st Class Garry Kendrick, was the NCOIC for the eight hour shift.

"We've been briefed on what to do, and we've got the 'bolos' (be on the look out) from the MPs on suspicious vehicles and persons that

Dragons start weapons training

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy

This is the second story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

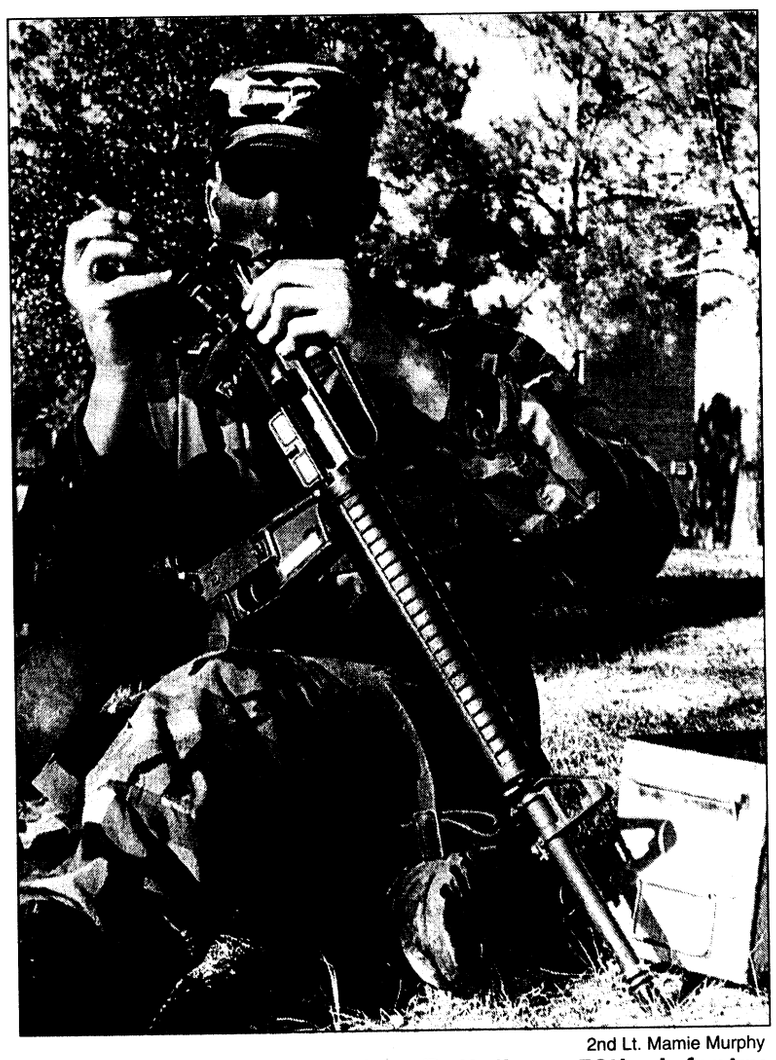
D Company trainees of 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, finish week four today.

If they were in basic training, they'd be at the halfway point. Graduation would be just around the corner. Families would be coming. They'd be moving on. But these future infantryman aren't even a third of the way done.



It takes a little more to become an infantryman. Their training is 14 weeks long.

Three weeks of that are devoted to basic rifle marksmanship.

Marksmanship was the reason for establishing what was to become the Infantry School at Fort Benning.

Concerned over the decline of good marksmanship, Lt. Gen.

Rumsfeld says country will deal with terror

Jim Garamone
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States will "disintegrate" the Al Qaeda terrorist network, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Sept. 30.

He said the Taliban leaders in Afghanistan have been uncooperative and have not met one of the demands President Bush made to them following the Sept. 11 terror attacks.

The world is going to have to do everything possible to "disintegrate" the Al Qaeda war plan, Rumsfeld said on the NBC program Meet the Press.

29th Infantry Regiment holds reunion

Veterans gather to reminisce, socialize, visit troops

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

A lot can change in 50 years.

The type of war, enemies, weapons, technology and economics are just some of the differences between now and then.

One thing hasn't changed — the fact our Army and its infantry are the strongest in the world.

The 29th Infantry Regiment Association echoed these sentiments during its annual reunion here Sept. 26 - 30.

"We had a great time," said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Plass, president of the 29th Inf. Regt. Association. "The regiment did an outstanding job. They gave us everything we asked of them and more."

He said he still appreciates his long-time friends, and it's an honor to visit with them.

"Our association is a real brotherhood," Plass said. "We did everything we could for each other during battle, and that love continues today."

Retired 1st Sgt. Rod Schueneman and his daughter came from Wisconsin for the reunion. He said he thoroughly enjoyed himself.

However, some topics of conversation were unavoidable.

He and his buddies revisited a Korean battle in which the enemy killed 313 and captured 100 of his battalion's men. There are 25 missing in action.

Sgt. William A. Graves

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Balbi (left), Jesus Rodriguez and Neal Vance, observe trainees' rifle marksmanship training.

"We were slaughtered," Schueneman said.

Current Army training should prevent that from happening again, said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Balbi, a former training brigade sergeant major.

"There's a big difference between how we trained and how they train now," Balbi said. "There's more emphasis on weapon qualification today. In contrast, during Viet Nam, when men fired, they were not that accurate."

Another difference is the war into which soldiers graduated.

"I don't know if we'll ever fight another Korea, Grenada or Desert Storm again. Today's war calls for a more specialized method of fighting.

"Still, it's the basic infantryman who's going to get the job done," Balbi said. "Those who graduate today will go on to better things — some may join specialized units. It's the training here and later in their career that's paramount to the success of the mission and to their survival."

Balbi said he had a terrific time during his third reunion. He caught up with four men who were in his company.

"It's hard to express the feelings I have," he said. "I saw our machine gunner who I hadn't seen in 50 years. It's amazing to be able to talk

Army encouraging awareness

Our Army-based campaign to prevent domestic violence is ongoing.

But each year, along with citizens and public officials across the United States, we declare the month of October Domestic Violence Prevention Month, in order to call attention to the problem and recommit ourselves to our goal.

Our campaign against domestic violence will succeed.

Several years ago all military services stepped up their efforts to end domestic violence, and the Army led the way.

As time goes on, we are beginning to see some results: the numbers of cases have been in decline since the mid-1990s.

There are good signs in the civilian population as well.

We note with cautious optimism that the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice Statistics has reported a significant decrease in domestic violence against women in the U.S. between 1993 and 1998.

This is encouraging, but we must remember that the problem is far from being solved.

The numbers remain terribly high — 1 million cases of intimate partner violence in 1998.

And the rate of domestic violence is also troubling, at 7.7 per thousand women and 1.5 per thousand men in the general population.

Our leadership is important. What we accomplish in the military can have positive results in the civilian community as well.

Everyone at this installation must be a role model for what is right and just when it comes to domestic violence.

We must continue to build strong partnerships with the civilian community, so we can use Army teamwork to share out best prevention efforts.

Our command commitment to domestic violence prevention is total. Violence that occurs in our military families undermines our military objectives. Children in 43 percent of all reported cases in the general population witness such violence. In other words, violence between intimate partners does violence to the children in the home. One more reason our campaign against domestic violence must succeed.

Our campaign for 2001, therefore, declares, "Domestic Violence: It is Your Business!"

To further our campaign, I hereby proclaim October 2001 as Domestic Violence Prevention Month at Fort Benning and call on every member of this community to join in the campaign.

Killer beer-loving bees attack?

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

I was sitting on the couch, watching the news when I heard it. A rattling, hacking cough, a cross between a deep, bronchial snort and an attack of asthma, a sound I had never heard before.

I'm told that my mind doesn't always work like "regular" people, which could explain why my first thought was, "That's probably not a death rattle, I would have heard him hit the floor first."

The hacking, gagging and snorting continued, followed by a fractured "Aaaack! A bee! It's a bee!" To be completely accurate, this is not a complete quote.

Aside from the positive specie identification, there were a lot of, um, adjectives thrown in as descriptors.

It seems that my husband had come in, popped open a beer and carried it with him out onto the deck.

He put it down for a minute while he refilled the wading pool that serves as a heat injury prevention station for our dogs. He had then retrieved the beer and come back in the house, where he took a swallow.

Somewhere in between, a beer-swilling bee had climbed into the can.

When Harry took a sip the bee took great exception at being washed out of the can and down Harry's throat. Well, not all the way down his throat.

That's where the snorting gags and hacking throat clearing came in.

"What kind of bee was it?"

I failed to recognize that his response, which started with "How the ..." was a rhetorical question and mustered on. "If it was a honeybee, it could only sting you once and then it would die."

This factoid was greeted by silence.

Thinking that perhaps more information would be equally comforting, I added "If you were allergic, or you were going into anaphylactic shock, you would be struggling to breathe by now."

I had obviously misinterpreted his moment of silence. One look said it all.

Talk about nonverbal communication.

My show of support was clearly not getting the reaction I had hoped for.

His nonverbal message was followed by "And what do you think I should do?"

I tried to be helpful. Instead of saying, "While you can still talk, where are the life insurance papers? Are you paid up?" I suggested "Why don't you take a Benadryl while you can still swallow?"

A dose of Benadryl, two Tylenol and a slug of Scotch later, he groaned and moaned his way to bed.

"You're going to skip supper?"

"What do you think?"

"I think I smell a commentary."

That was the most painful part.

Parenting skills grow with children

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

At some point we have all seen that family in the grocery store. You know the one — screaming kids, frustrated parents. Then, something snaps, the kids get smacked or yelled at and fellow shoppers shudder in horror. "My child would never act like that," they think to themselves. "I would never do such a thing to my child in public."

I don't believe in smacking a child in the head, or pulling her pants down in the middle of the mall to give her a spanking. I don't believe in berating or belittling a pre-teen in front of 20 people at the grocery store. I do believe this causes damage, both physically and emotionally.

Because I have two children of my own, I know that the "right" way to discipline is, more often than not, difficult to determine.

I have been on the receiving end of a 4-year-old's full-blown, middle-of-the-mall temper tantrum. I have had my 16-month-old smack me in the face and tell me "uh-uh" because it was time for bed.

You see, I am still an amateur at this parenting thing. My oldest just turned 6, and thinks that when she colors her lips with magic marker to make herself "pretty," I am going to believe her when she says, "Mommy, I only licked my lips."

The baby knows now that if she cries out from her crib long enough at midnight, mom and dad are so tired they will bring her to their bed, if it means a few more minutes of sleep. No matter how young or old, they put us to the test, daily.

At times, it is all quite comical. Yes, it was funny the first time the baby toilet papered the bathroom. Sure, we got a good laugh when she stripped her diaper off and ran naked through the house. And I couldn't help but giggle beneath my reprimand when my 6-year-old told me in her teen-age valley girl voice, "Mom, you just don't get it."

I am too young to "not get it."

And that is what they don't get. We parents get it. We have had it all along. We have already schemed our way through childhood and adolescence, so we know exactly what they are trying to pull.

There does come a time to draw the line, to let them know their limitations. That is why we are here, to teach and guide them. They throw the tantrums at the mall because somewhere inside they know we couldn't possibly spank them in front of all of those people. But there must be ways to discipline productively, without giving a swift kick in the behind.

At this point, I have yet to find all of the answers, but that will not stop me from searching. I have a lot to learn, but so do my children. By the time I have parenting perfected to an art, I will probably be a grandma, and then I can just impose — I mean offer — all of my wisdom to my inexperienced daughters. Of course, they will need all the help they can get.

Week four of basic training — the halfway point. Tired, frustrated and homesick, trainees often flirt with the idea of calling it quits.

But not this time.

The current cycle of trainees has "a level of dedication that far surpasses any I've seen in my 23 months here," said 1st Sgt. Billy Blackmon, of the C Company soldiers from the 47th Infantry Regiment's 3rd Battalion.

"Normally, by this point, I've got some of them begging to quit, wanting to go home," he said. "But not this group. They're focused, they're dedicated and their attention to detail is incredible. They're trying to take it all in, to soak up all the training they can get."

Blackmon said C Company's dedication is the result of the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, just two weeks into the new training cycle.

"We let them watch it on CNN, and the drill sergeants are keeping them abreast of what's happening," he said.

"I guess in the back of their minds they're thinking about the possibility of going to war, so they're paying close attention to everything we're teaching them. They want it all," he said.

And, Blackmon said, they're "giving all" — 100 percent — to their physical training, honing their bodies as well as their minds.

C Company's 200 trainees averaged 196 on their second Army Physical Fitness Training test, 46 points above the requirement.

It's also more than 20 points above the last cycle's average at this point.

But it's the company's strong sense of patriotism and determination to do something monumental that most impresses Blackmon.

In the wake of the terrorist attacks, they expressed a desire to do something for the victims.

The company pledged $9,200 to the Combined Federal Campaign, money earmarked for the disaster relief.

"When I think about the size of most of the units we have on post, this is a small group of soldiers in comparison," Blackmon said. "But these guys, some of them still teenagers, donated an incredible amount of money out of concern for these families."

The giving didn't stop there, Blackmon said.

The trainees participated in a blood drive Sunday, donating 110 pints to the American Red Cross.

And several trainees from the company's second and third platoons spent their free time — one hour each evening and weekends — creating the banner that now hangs above the entrance to Roush Barracks. It reads "Freedom isn't Free," flanked on both sides by American flags.

It was designed by Pvt. Bruce Corona, a Hanover, Ill., native who said art is his hobby.

He's designed and painted various murals and crests in the company's bay area, but the banner is significant because "it reminds us every day what it is we're here for," he said.

"We were in the field doing compass training when they told us about the attack," Corona said.

"I didn't believe it. I mean, I really didn't think it was real. I thought it was part of the training. I thought it was supposed to scare us. I had to see it on TV to believe it.

"That's when we got scared. We had guys calling home, breaking down on the phones — some of them crying. Then you know it's real."

One of those trainees, Pvt. Ernest Hodge, had three family members near the tragedies, two cousins who are flight attendants at Dulles Airport in Virginia, and one cousin at the Pentagon.

"When I first heard it, I got this feeling in my gut like my family was involved. I just wanted to cry out loud," he said.

Hodge's family was eventually accounted for, though his cousin at the Pentagon suffered minor injuries.

"Most of my family is in the Caribbean. There's not many of us over here, so we're close. I can't afford to lose any of them," he said. "Thinking of family at a time like this keeps me motivated."

It's that motivation that gives Blackmon a sense of security during this nation's troubled times, he said.

"I'll be taking this uniform off in a couple of years, but I know I'm leaving the Army in the hands of soldiers like these who'll keep this country free at any cost," he said.

"They're proud of what they do and ready to do whatever it takes to take care of their families and their country."

Depression screening available on post

Shock of tragedy can develop into depression

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

National Depression Screening Day is an annual event to increase awareness and treatment of depression. This year's screening falls on Oct. 11, one month after the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Lynn Volk is the assistant director of Screening for Mental Health, the national organization that began the program more than 10 years ago. Volk said the one month time lapse is particularly critical because of the attacks.

"For many, the initial shock and numbness of the tragedies may begin to wear off. But for some, grief may linger and deepen into depression," Volk said.

The one-month marker also often marks the initial onset of post-traumatic stress disorder, a set of symptoms including vivid memories, nightmares and guilt that may follow deeply disturbing events.

This is the second year Fort Benning has participated in National Depression Screening Day. The Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program and Martin Army Community Hospital cosponsor the event, which includes sites set up at seven locations on and off Main Post.

Screenings will be available from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. Oct. 11.

Locations on Fort Benning are at the Main Post Office, 36th Engineer Group Dining Facility, the pharmacy at Martin Army Community Hospital, 3rd Brigade Dining Facility, Infantry Hall, Santiago Fitness Center at Sand Hill and Audie Murphy Fitness Center on Main Post.

The screening consists of 13 questions regarding energy levels and feelings of sadness, etc., during the past two weeks. A mental health professional will be available at each site to answer questions and distribute informative materials addressing PTSD, depression, and suicide prevention.

Yvonne Wilbanks, alcohol and drug control officer and suicide prevention manager, said the national screening day targets the little problems before they become big ones.

"We want to make this a positive, upbeat and educational experience," Wilbanks said.

Wilbanks said the program is part of a bigger picture, the post's suicide prevention program.

"If we can catch the warning signs of depression, we may be able to prevent suicides," Wilbanks said.

Between 17 and 20 million Americans develop some form of depression each year. Untreated depression has been linked to suicide gestures and attempts.

Warning signs of depression can include: sadness, loss of pleasure in normally pleasurable activities, hopelessness, helplessness, relationship problems, changes in eating or sleep habits and thoughts of death or suicide. Other outward signs include a marked change in physical appearance or personality, perceived loss of a relationship or job, alcohol or drug abuse, self-destructive behaviors and suicidal gestures.

Suicidal gestures are self-inflicted injuries not intended to cause death. A suicide attempt occurs when a person actually wants to die, which may or may not be a successful attempt.

"An important message of this event is getting help is a sign of strength," Wilbanks said.

"People are accepting that and changing their lifestyles in response to Sept. 11," she said.

"Screening and education are the ultimate goals," Volk said. "If we can screen people, and get them help."

Drought continues despite flow increase

Post residents still need to conserve

Danielle Foerschler
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's Upatoi Creek flow has increased, allowing water restrictions to move out of Stage IV.

As of Sept. 11, Fort Benning entered into stage three of the water restrictions.

Watering days and times are: even numbered addresses water on even numbered days, and odd numbered addresses can water on odd numbered days from midnight to noon and 7 p.m. to midnight.

Residents are allowed to wash their cars and boats during the designated days and times.

Fort Benning has a Drought Contingency Plan that manages the water usage from Upatoi Creek based upon the level of supply.

Upatoi Creek is the water source for Fort Benning. The plan outlines different stages of water level usage.

The installation's officials use the plan to determine water restrictions.

There are five stages of water restrictions. Stage V is the highest stage, which is considered a state of emergency.

Fort Benning's Drought Contingency Plan states that before moving into Stage II we must sustain a creek flow range above 70 million gallons a day for 10 days.

This will depend on stable weather patterns.

The current Upatoi Creek flow as of Sept. 20 was 69 mgd, an increase from 50.4 mgd at the end of August.

Post celebrates Hispanic heritage

Cooperation, diversity encouraged

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The security of our country hinges on our ability to acknowledge, embrace and learn from our diversity.

That's the message Col. Lonnie D. Vona and Col. Richard Downie delivered to a crowd of nearly 300 Fort Benning soldiers, civilian employees and family members gathered to celebrate National Hispanic Heritage Month at the Officers' Club Wednesday.

"We are the most diverse nation in the world, and the Army has long been a leader in cultural diversity," said Vona, chief of staff, U.S. Army Infantry Center. "We take diversity very seriously, but we must remain vigilant. We must continue to grow, because our lives and the very security of our nation depends on it."

Downie, the director of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, said "our nation's Hispanic ties provide an important link to our Latin American neighbors."

He cited our need to foster a cooperative relationship with Hispanic communities at home and abroad, because we share a common interest in various 'intermestic' issues — international issues that affect us domestically.

"Immigration, trade, drugs, terrorism — these are issues we can't handle alone," Downie said. "We need the cooperation of our neighbors and we need to be able to share intelligence and assist one another in critical areas like drug control and trade practices.

"Liberty, peace and fraternity — that's our motto at the Institute," he said.

Staff Sgt. Luzmila George, of the 36th Engineer Group, opened the ceremony with an encouragement to "celebrate our heritage and pave the way for future generations."

She said National Hispanic Heritage Month, Sept. 15 — Oct. 15, is designed to "enlighten and educate" and encourage diversity.

Students from Spencer High School posted the flags of 19 Latin American countries, and Stowers Elementary School choir performed various songs in Spanish.

ALUMNI: Assemble for reunion, talk about change

and reminisce with him. We remembered the funny side of combat."

He said at his first reunion he began to think the enemy killed everyone he knew.

"These reunions remind me I wasn't the only one who got back," Balbi said. "At the same time, I realize life is short — you only live one time around,

"We've developed a great appreciation for each other. We even exchange Christmas cards. The camaraderie is unbelievable within the whole regiment, and our reunions strengthen that bound."

Pvt. Thomas Bottcher, a trainee with 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, said seeing the veterans together after such a long time apart encouraged him.

"Going to combat is something I'm sure I will never forget," Bottcher said. "The memories of combat the veterans share are very important. I see how special the time will be with my buddies if I had to do what they did."

Pvt. Barika Savage, a trainee with 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., BCTB, said it was an honor to have the vets watch them train.

"They're meeting friends they made 50 years ago when they were 18 and 19, just like we're doing now," Savage said . "It proves soldiers make lasting friendships in the Army. That's a good feeling."

Veterans show support for troops in training

'Old Army' meets new, and approves

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

More than 115 29th Infantry Regiment veterans took time out of their reunion schedule to observe training at Sand Hill and visit with the regiment's current leaders.

"We wanted to come out and show the soldiers we're interested in and appreciate what they do," said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Plass, president of the 29th Inf. Regt. Association. "They help reassure my faith in our country."

Plass said he was proud of how current 29th Inf. Regt. soldiers run the ranges. Without the 29th, soldiers could not adequately prepare for the war on terrorism, he said.

"This war will be different than the one we fought," Plass said. "Small groups will do the fighting, and the trainees here may end up in one of those groups.

"They're not going to make the same mistakes as the Russians did (during their war with Afghanistan)," he said. "They'll send a team here and team there and kill them systematically."

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Edward Balbi was a training brigade sergeant major for part of his 25-year career.

"Soldiers in the infantry do our country's most important fighting," Balbi said. "We wanted to come out and say, 'Thanks for helping keep it that way.'"

Retired 1st Sgt. Rod Schueneman said today's soldiers are ready for the war on terrorism.

"I'm confident they'll do well. Training today is more intensified — the Army leadership will not set them up for failure," Schueneman said.

Staff Sgt. Mike Menapace, a drill sergeant with 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, is part of that leadership.

He said he thought the veterans' visit went well.

"It showed the new soldiers the veterans care about them and their training," Menapace said.

"They'll support them wherever they are in the near future."

He said the vets sympathize with the privates' feelings of uncertainty.

"They knew when they completed training that they were going to war," he said. "These guys may or may not go."

He had the opportunity to visit with retired Col. Reed Suddaby who was a training company commander in 1951. Menapace learned current-day soldiers have more than twice as many leaders while they train.

"It's an honor to meet these guys who gave us a chance to do what we want to do," Menapace said.

"People take a lot of things for granted today," he said. "Back then, if people wanted to put gas in their car or get new tires, they may not have had the chance to do it. They sacrificed because these men were over there fighting in the freezing cold.

"Who knows where we'd be as a country without them?"

The veterans' visit encouraged the trainees, too, said Pvt. Barika Savage, BCTB trainee with 3rd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt.

"We're about to step into their shoes," Savage said. "It's like they're passing the torch."

MPs: Tighten security on post to avoid terrorist strikes

we're looking for."

Bolos are summaries of information put out by the MPs regarding vehicle type, number of persons and descriptions of those being looked for by the MPs.

Kendrick's company has the main gate shift until Sunday, when another company will take over for a week.

Sgt. Andrew Cherry, said that on a normal day he'd be doing command maintenance.

"It's good for us to help," he said. "It takes some pressure off other units. Like the MPs, they have to be out here all the time. We feel like we're helping make Fort Benning safe."

Pvt. Bobby Clark, recent graduate from 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, was one of the soldiers checking IDs at the main gate.

"We're doing our best to keep terrorists out of here," he said. "They gave us a brief before we got started on things to look for. We keep our eyes open for anything suspicious. I never really expected to do this kind of thing, but I'm here until they tell me to go home."

Another recent 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt. graduate, Pvt. Bradley Folston said, "I think it's a good thing we're out here. They might try to get on base, and we're here to stop them."

HIDDEN HISTORY

The Bayonet serves soldiers, families with news, humor for nearly 60 years

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Editor's note: This is the fourth article in a five part series

Each week it gives you the scoop on military training, primary education, and where to get your next pet. Unlike the previous features of Hidden History, Fort Benning's very own The Bayonet is not a geographical landmark. It is, however, a textual landmark that has been recording and reporting Fort Benning news and history for 59 years.

Founded in September 1942 by Maj. Russell J. Hammargren, then post public relations officer, The Benning Bayonet was named the official post newspaper. The Benning Bayonet replaced the Fort Benning News, the post's first newspaper, which began in September of 1923.

The paper was renamed simply The Bayonet in November 1943, and was printed by the Columbus Ledger Enquirer until September 1991, when the contract to print the paper was awarded to the Advertiser Company.

The post's official newspaper was born during the tribulations of World War II.

Original articles of The Bayonet on file in Donovan technical library offer a peek into the past of a post and a nation, the way it was.

Harpo Marx adorned the cover of the first issue in 1942 for his appearance on post in the USO's "Hollywood Follies." Many famous faces appeared in the paper that year, including Mary Martin, who posed as the official "Bayonet Girl."

A 50th anniversary edition of The Bayonet by Richard Brill highlights some of the earliest issues. The 1942 newspaper averaged about 10 pages, compared to today's 28. Like today's Bayonet, the original paper contained a variety of weekly features for the reader's enjoyment.

"'Through the Peepsight' kept readers up-to-date on the latest developments of the war, which was the topic of the greatest number of articles and cartoons during the first years of publication," according to Brill's article.

Like the present-day paper, weekly training articles demonstrated the post's role in training troops for battle. According to Brill, "Soldiers were reminded of the importance of buying war bonds, of conserving gas, oil and rubber for the war effort and of not divulging even the slightest information regarding military matters to anyone, not even their closest relatives."

"Sgt. McDonald's Wastebasket" was an advice column, often answering letters of "lovelorn GI's," while "Dayroom Duds" offered a weekly dose of humor to readers. Community events included radio entertainment, and the 1942 movie listings included "Sherlock Holmes and the Voice of Terror" and "Gunga Din."

According to Brill's article, "the most numerous advertisements included those for cigarettes, pawnshops, dancing girls and used cars." A 1941 Dodge Deluxe two-door sedan could be purchased for $150 at the McMurria Motor Company.

The first year in print also brought the story of Max, a boxer who became the first dog in history to earn his jump wings. When Max was hit by a car, letters and money were sent from people across the nation, and Max lived to jump again.

The final article of the first issue was intended to be a reminder to soldiers to always have their gas-mask ready for wear, as the narrator was supposed to be a soldier who failed to get his mask on in time.

History surely repeats itself, and the typewritten word may be one of the best ways to preserve and examine history. The Bayonet has been serving those who serve America for 59 years. Sept. 17, 2002 will mark the 60th anniversary of The Bayonet.

The Bayonet throughout the years

January 1944 — The Bayonet announced the activation of the "nation's first Negro parachute unit," the 555th Parachute Infantry Company.

February 1943 — The paper announced that all post soldiers would be issued khaki underwear by the end of the year, as the white underwear was a danger on the battlefield because they could easily be seen by enemy bombers when hung out to dry in combat zones.

November 1950 — The first Rangers since World War II graduated from the Ranger Training Center at Harmony Church.

March 1954 — The post suffered $11 million in damage from a tornado hit that killed two post residents and toppled one of the airborne jump towers. Lawson Army Airfield received the most damage.

August 1965 — The 1st Cavalry Division deployed to Vietnam. The unit was the first division-sized element to arrive in Vietnam, with more than 15,000 men from the division deploying.

June 1964 — Infantry Hall was officially dedicated. Construction of the $10 million project began in 1962, and the building was named in 1965.

January 1972 — The Bayonet featured the Fort Benning Coffee House, an enlisted club where soldiers could go to recite poetry, speak their minds, listen to music or drink free coffee. The club was decorated in "groovy" murals and was described as a place where soldiers could go to "scream, laugh, rap, sleep, cry or just create."

January 1982 — An inch of snow on post caused 32 car accidents.

January 1993 — Chairman of the Joint Chief of Staff Colin Powell visited Fort Benning, and had a street in Phenix City, where he lived in the 1960s, named after him.

Female earns Pathfinder badge

Airborne ops school trains variety of soldiers

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

When 1st Lt. Robin Goins-Colon graduated from pathfinder school, she became one of only a handful of females in the Army who are airborne, air assault and pathfinder qualified.

Goins-Colon graduated Sept. 28 with Class 12-01.

"A lot of people probably think I came here to make some sort of statement, that females can do this course too.

"But I didn't come here to be a better female. I came here to be a better soldier and a better logistician," Goins-Colon said.

Goins-Colon is currently assigned to Fort Campbell, Ky., with the 102nd Quartermaster Company.

"In my job, we set up hot refuel points, and we sling-load a lot of supplies forward," she said.

"It is essential I know how to set up PZs (pick-up zones) and CDSs (containerized delivery systems).

"Pathfinder school really helps me and my unit, because it taught me how to facilitate better resupply."

Students spend two weeks of pathfinder school in the classroom memorizing formulas, radio transmissions and sling-load operations.

The next week is then spent in the field with hands-on training. The field training includes several field problems and a parachute jump out of a UH-60 Blackhawk.

"I was nervous when we were doing that first jump. I was really grateful for the refresher training they offered," Goins-Colon said. "I hadn't jumped since I was a cadet at Airborne School."

Each pathfinder class is divided into three sections with three NCOs assigned to each.

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy

1st Lt. Robin Goins-Colon prepares to exit a UH-60 Blackhawk during training for Pathfinder school. Staff Sgt. Jay Johnston surveys the drop zone while waiting to give the "stand-by" command to Goins-Colon and fellow jumper Sfaff Sgt. Douglas Orr.

Sgt. 1st Class Eddie Ramirez, Staff Sgt. Jay Johnston and Staff Sgt. Jim Hughes taught Goins-Colon's section.

"They are the best cadre I've ever had in a military school. They are extremely knowledgeable," she said. "These guys are wicked smart, and I would take them as my platoon sergeant any day.

"Not only are they the most intelligent NCOs I've ever met, but they added a lot of humor to the classes as well.

"You really need that when you're in class from 7 a.m. until 5 p.m." she said.

"She was great to have in class," Ramirez said. "She was a good student. She studied hard and she was a real team player.

"She pulled her share of the weight and adapted real well to the training. She was squared away," he said.

Goins-Colon's classmates all supported each other throughout the class in their mutual quest for success and the pathfinder badge.

"There's no saluting in the company area, and you're all on a first name basis. It really is a rankless course. You're all pathfinders," she said.

"You sit in class in your brown T-shirts, so it's kind of symbolic of taking off your rank.

"Besides, pulling rank isn't an efficient way to get your team to help you out in the field," Goins-Colon said.

During the field work, the teams had to pull together and use each others' strengths to get through the problems successfully.

"Sling load ops were my strength," Goins-Colon said.

"You have to use a compass to place lights so the aircraft knows where to touch down.

"The instructors only allowed a three degree margin for error in the light placement, so you really have to be precise," she said.

Goins-Colon received her commission through ROTC at Ohio State, but she spent a year in the Ohio National Guard before joining the commissioning program.

"I was in high school when I swore into the Army. I actually swore in in my cheerleading outfit.

"My recruiter picked me up and drove me up to MEPS (Military Entrance Processing Station), then he rushed me off to a basketball game so I could cheer for my team," she said.

"Honestly, at the time, I had no idea what I was getting into. My grandparents were in the military in World War II, but my dad wasn't in the service, and I didn't have any older brothers or anyone else who was in," she said.

"My first assignment was Korea, and it was the best decision I ever made to go there.

"The Army in Korea is so focused. Plus, I had a great commander and great mentors there," Goins-Colon said.

"After Korea, I requested to go to Fort Campbell and I did air assault school while I was there," she said.

While at Fort Campbell, Goins-Colon requested pathfinder school.

"It's really hard to get the course," she said. "You've got to ask for it almost a year out.

"I wasn't scheduled to be with this class, but the original slot-holder went to Special Forces selection, then his back-up took a command in another battalion. So, my battalion commander gave me the go-ahead," she said.

The class was only a week away when Goins-Colon found out that she had the slot.

Her company's executive officer, 1st Lt. Amanda Fitzsimmons, who went through the course in June, offered notes and study guides to assist in the preparations.

"She really was a big help, she got me in the right mindset and got me motivated to do my best," she said. "She gave me some advice too, she said, 'study hard.'"

"Being around a bunch of infantry soldiers allowed me to learn how they fight, which allows me to support them more efficiently," she said. "That's my job."

317th prove good leadership keeps soldiers safe

Quick-thinking NCO takes steps to save lives of soldiers

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Good leadership is often hard to define. Throughout the years, many noncommissioned officers have separated themselves from their peers. The true talent and selflessness they demonstrate makes them a leader soldiers and colleagues admire.

Fort Benning NCOs are no different.

When Spc. Lekendrick Stallworth set out to help defeat the enemy by blowing up obstacles, he didn't anticipate his NCO saving his life.

Stallworth, the 317th Engineer Battalion commander's driver, had already fought beside his fellow soldiers earlier this year. The unit had participated in the first battle of Marne Focus.

Midway through the second battle of the yearly exercise, he faced a real life or death situation during the battle training.

Stallworth, along with another soldier from his unit, was sent into the field of battle to breach an obstacle. The breached obstacle would provide quicker access for the rest of the combat team.

Although the entire event lasted less than a minute, Stallworth said he felt as though it was a lifetime.

While the two soldiers set up the equipment needed for the breach, smoke began to roll from incorrectly pre-positioned smoke machines. The smoke enveloped the soldiers and left them seemingly invisible to the rest of the Task Force.

"It just got crazy," Stallworth said. "The squad leader couldn't see us, tanks started to move and (weapons) were firing."

Staff Sgt. Geoffrey Long served as Stallworth's squad leader during the exercise.

"I had two soldiers on the ground, the tanks were coming in way too fast and I called the task force commander," he said.

Long, without hesitation or fear of reprimand for hindering the mission, immediately put the call out on the radio, and warned the tank drivers of a potential disaster.

The tank commanders immediately slowed their heavy machinery and gave the soldiers the time they needed to move to safety.

"I was in MOPP Level Two — exhausted," Stallworth said. "But we both flew out of there with a quickness."

As quickly as it began, the entire situation was over, and the battle resumed — tanks leading the way.

"It was a unique situation where if I wasn't looking out, there was a possibility for serious injury," Long said.

"I felt at the time I did the right thing. It was a quick (reaction), and I though it was necessary," he said.

Stallworth said the entire event taught him a lesson that will remain with him for a long time.

"Mistakes can happen, and that's why we train — to make sure this doesn't happen in a real battle," Stallworth said. He will always remember that "you can't go anywhere without good leadership."

"When you have a NCO who will fight for you, you can go anywhere," he said.

Long, Stallworth's current platoon sergeant, stands out in the specialist's mind as being the type of leader who deserves recognition because he has taken the advice of other NCOs and learned to perform his job more efficiently. Long believes it is the leadership of others that has helped him become the NCO he is today.

"If you don't have good leadership, you're going to have a problem," he said. "I have taken a little bit from each experience and applied it to my leadership style."

It is this leadership style Stallworth believes helped save his life.

The leadership style Long exhibits is not only evident to his soldiers, but his senior NCOs as well.

Command Sgt. Maj. Nelson Slaughter, 317th Eng. Bn., hopes he has instilled in every leader the necessity of good leadership and performance.

"I try to teach them to react and do the right thing," he said.

"Leadership is learned. A good leader cares, is willing to learn and is always there for the soldiers," he said.

Long has learned and developed these three things very well, Slaughter said.

Unit continues mission; the training of deploying soldiers

CRC soldiers remain focused on task at hand

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Soldiers at the Conus Replacement Center have always been mission oriented, but with the events of the past few weeks, they are more focused than ever.

"Training for us is very essential because this is the last stage before a soldier deploys," Lt. Col. Dennis Turnage, CRC commander, said. "Our training is critical to soldiers."

Turnage said he believes every soldier and civilian deserves the best training available.

"Training is essential to mission accomplishment," he said. "Our mission is to provide the best customer support to our units who are going through here. We will continue that mission."

Although training is ultimately important to some deploying soldiers right now, Turnage said he feels it is important everyone realizes the replacement center's mission has not changed.

"We're not doing anything different," Turnage said. "The training goes on as scheduled."

The replacement center is the final stop for many soldiers preparing to deploy to operating theaters such as Kosovo, Bosnia, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

Approximately 200 service members from every branch, Department of the Army civilians and contract employees circulate through the replacement center weekly, Sgt. Maj. Robert E. Pearl, CRC operations, said.

Soldiers and civilians must complete theater-specific training such as land-mine awareness and react to fire, and be up-to-date on medical shots, personnel records and weapons qualification before they are sent to perform real-world missions.

Sgt. LeRoy Coe, instructor writer, 244th Quartermaster Battalion, Fort Lee, Va., has spent the last week preparing to deploy to Saudi Arabia for six months and said he feels soldiers have always been ready to fight as a result of the training they receive every day.

He said the events of the past weeks have affected his attitude towards training because he has paid more attention to common task skills he learned as a private.

"It must continue," Coe said. "Training can't stop."

CSM NOTES

11M, 11H infantrymen became 11B Monday

The future is here — 11M and 11H infantrymen went to bed Sunday night and woke up 11Bs.

The Army has combined the best aspects of the infantry into one MOS — 11B.

It is becoming increasingly obvious the infantry community truly believes consolidating the infantry MOS is the right thing to do.

The consolidation is the right thing being done at the right time, said Sgt. 1st Class Keith Askew who is stationed with the 2nd Battalion, 11th Cavalry Regiment, at Fort Irwin, Calif. He said the consolidation will provide better assignments, but is worried about promotion opportunities. Although with more jobs and schools, he thinks he'll have a better chance to make E-8.

Askew was one of many soldiers who shared their views on assignment, but few took his position on promotion.

I solicited feedback from soldiers regarding the consolidation, and all of the dialogue that followed the briefings at Fort Irwin, Calif., Fort Drum, N.Y., and Fort Bragg, N.C., was beneficial.

Based on the feedback, the U.S. Army Infantry Center is investigating the possibility of giving all specialists and sergeants who successfully graduate ranger school meritorious promotions to sergeant and staff sergeant.

Currently, AR 600-8-19 provides the following guidelines: rangers will be promoted on the first day of the second month following their graduation date or board appearance, whichever is later. The Personnel Services Battalion will enter 799 points in the system. This will fill the coded positions and give Ranger School graduates a promotion advantage.

MOS consolidation opens up more schools and promotion opportunities for soldiers who had an 11M background. The chain of command should recommend only soldiers who demonstrate the necessary skills and abilities to attend Ranger School and the Master Gunner Course so we can provide the needed skill to the units.

Schools must relate to what is needed in the field. The Infantry Center is looking at the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle System Master Gunner Course and the pathfinder course to ensure we do just that.

Command Sgt. Maj. Tarrence McWilliams, Fort Irwin's post command sergeant major, said it is about time we take a genuine look at what is needed in the Master Gunner Course and give the field a soldier who is trained on tasks that it needs now — not something he may be able to use in the future.

Command Sgt. Maj. Steven England, 18th Airborne Corps command sergeant major, spelled it out to his soldiers this way, "There is only one division command sergeant major position here on Fort Bragg. Be grateful for the doors of opportunity that the combined infantry has opened. It will allow your experience to shape the Army."

Aldous Huxley said, "Experience is not what happens to you. It is what you do with what happens to you."

If you have it in you to help shape the Army, listen to the voice of experience, but also make use of the assignment opportunity.

Trainees: Learn rifle marksmanship

Arthur MacArthur persuaded the Army to establish the School of Musketry at the Presidio of Monterey, in Calif., Feb. 21, 1907.

The school was transferred to Fort Sill, Okla. in 1913 and then to Fort Benning when Col. Henry Eames was appointed the first commandant of the Infantry School of Arms Oct. 5, 1918.

Marksmanship and fieldcraft have always been the heart of any infantryman. D Company trainees received their first class in BRM instruction Monday.

Staff Sergeant Michael Chambers, drill sergeant for third platoon, taught the class. With 12 years in the infantry and sniper school under his belt, Chambers used personal anecdotes to go along with a well fleshed-out PowerPoint presentation.

The training starts off simply, learning the four fundamentals of shooting. Breathe. Relax. Aim. Squeeze.

Each topic was covered in detail and then repeated to facilitate learning.

Looking down the barrel of a very large pistol being held by Keanu Reeve's character, Neo, in the movie The Matrix, helped to illustrate the theory of trigger squeeze.

Even though this essential information is critical to their performance as infantrymen, some trainees had a hard time maintaining their alertness.

"That's the worst part about class after chow," Staff Sgt. James Cook, drill sergeant for second platoon said. "They can't keep their eyes open."

Workmen next door helped a couple times, accidentally setting off the fire alarm with the dust they were generating.

Chambers shared shooting advice from his father.

"My dad told me, 'aim small, miss small.' That was his philosophy even before the movie (The Patriot) came out."

First Sgt. Andrew Lee stressed the importance of BRM to the training cycle.

"BRM really does set the tone for the cycle," Lee said. "Everyone who qualifies gets to put their kevlar cover on. That's a big day, they feel pretty good after that. They feel more like soldiers."

Oct. 13 is qualification day for D Company.

"Our goal is to get 90 percent or more as a first-time go," Lee said. Privates who shoot expert get a few more privileges after BRM, so that's a motivator for them."

"BRM is the biggest gate for the first eight weeks," Chambers said. "The drill sergeants are very competitive about who does the best during BRM, and we're trying to get the soldiers to be real competitive, too."

The trainees came out of "total control" last week, and are progressing to student leadership within the platoons.

The student leadership may be stepping up to bat, but the drill sergeants are still calling the shots.

Drill sergeant, Staff Sgt. Samuel Murphy, demonstrated this when he brought first platoon out to "the hill," for a little "front, back, go!" after class.

"I'm either going to make you smart or strong, it's your choice!" he said.

After a little dusting off, the platoon returned to the company area to continue their BRM training.

The company broke down into platoons for hands-on training with the M-16 A2. Topics for the training were, names and function of all parts, eight cycles of firing, identifying different types of rounds, the difference between a magazine and a clip, performing a functions check, remedial action and how to clean a rifle.

The classes motivated the trainees to learn more.

"I'm pretty excited," Pvt. Alan Hurtado said. "I've never shot an actual weapon before, so I'm a little nervous.

"We've gotten a lot of clear, precise instruction, but it seems like there are a lot of fundamentals to implement.""

Even those with some experience were looking forward to seeing what they can do on the range.

Pvt. Andre Meeks said, "I do a lot of hunting, so I feel pretty comfortable with a rifle. I'm going to try for expert once we get on the range."

Qualification day is more than a week away, and there is still a lot to learn. The drill sergeants will try to instill the key to BRM in the trainees.

"You will become one with your rifle," Murphy said.

Coalition: Will whip terrorists

Afghanistan, it's in 60 countries. It has to be disintegrated. It has to end, it has to go out of business," he said. Rumsfeld said the United States will work with those inside Afghanistan who oppose the Taliban.

"Unconventional approaches are much more likely and more appropriate than the typical conventional approach of armies and navies and air forces," he said.

Taliban officials announced over the weekend that Osama bin Laden is under their control. "It was just a few days ago, that (the Taliban) said they didn't know where he was," Rumsfeld said. "So I have no reason to believe anything a Taliban representative would say."

Rumsfeld said the goal in this war on terrorism is victory.

"The goal is to be able to have dealt with the problems that exist — in this case, the terror networks and the countries that harbor them —in a way that we have won," he said. "That they no longer are free to go out and terrorize the world. How that happens, the president's phrase was, 'We need to bring them to justice or bring justice to them.'"

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!
Famous U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members used the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right - 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important) while reducing. You keep "full" - no starvation - because the diet is designed that way. It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home. (For men too!)

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today! Tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $9.95 - add .50¢ RUSH service to: MIDWEST ASSOCIATES, 2733 E. Battlefield Rd., Suite 308, Springfield, MO 65804. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do.

Army offers families life insurance

Automatic coverage, free for children

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Family members of active-duty service members and the Ready Reserve of a uniformed service will automatically receive Servicemembers' Group Life Insurance coverage Nov. 1.

The $10,000 of coverage for servicemembers' dependent children is free.

The maximum amount of coverage for a spouse is $100,000, providing the service member has at least that amount of coverage. The age of the spouse determines the premium.

Premiums for the spouse will be deducted from pay Nov. 1. Prices can be found at www.insurance.va.gov.

> "When we're young, we think we're invincible. If we can help one soldier with this plan, it will be worth it,"
> Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald E. Klein, > post sergeant major

Service members who wish to decline spousal coverage or reduce their face amount must complete a SGLV 8286A form prior to Nov. 1.

"It is very important the information in your personnel and payroll files is accurate and up to date," said Janie L. Seldon, chief, personnel services branch.

"I think it's a great way to get inexpensive life insurance protection and well worth considering for many soldiers and families," said Ann Pratcher, manager, Financial Readiness Program. "It should be a part of the family's overall financial package."

The amount of coverage a soldier should buy depends on the individual.

"Families should examine their needs, based on life stage, and what needs to be replaced and protected in determining the amount of coverage to buy for spouses," she added.

Army Community Service has information to assist in making those calculations.

Students celebrate heritage, diversity

Song, dance wrap up festivities

Laura Martinson

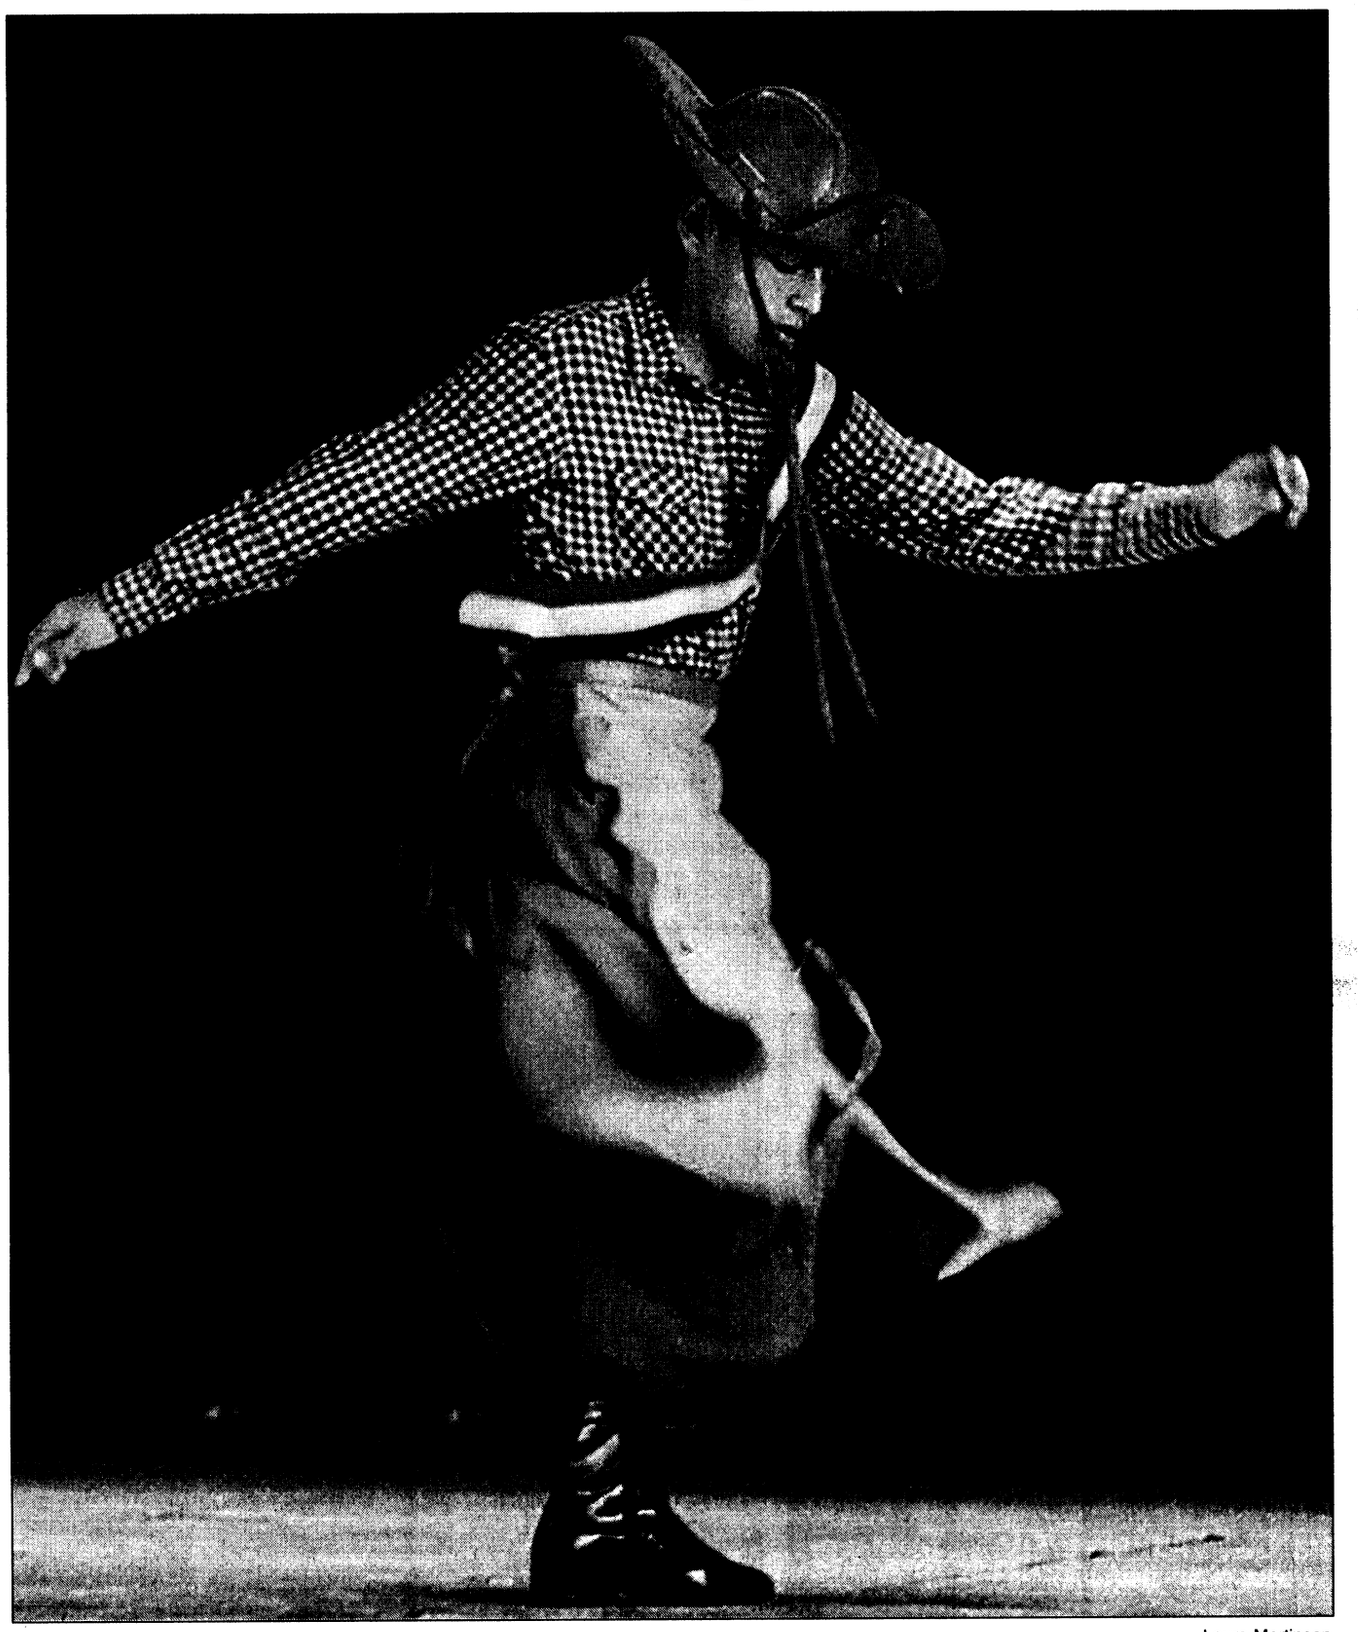
"Somos un arco iris" or "We are a rainbow."



That was the theme of the Hispanic Heritage celebration at White Elementary School. The celebration ran from Sept. 24 to 28 and culminated with a display of songs and dances performed by students of White.

"This is a great way for the children and the community to learn about different cultures and history," said Taimy Velez, mother of Taiomys, 6, and Widalys, 4, students at White.

Ninety children represented 17 Hispanic countries in a week's worth of festivities, which included cultural exhibits and a sampling of Hispanic foods. On Sept. 26, parents visited the classrooms with stories of their native countries. A Hispanic art gallery featured student's drawings and posters, demonstrating pride in the Hispanic culture.

Not only did the celebration recognize Hispanic countries across the globe, it also inspired pride in the United States. Students, parents, and teachers took a moment of silence at the beginning of the performances on Sept. 28 to remember the families in New York and Washington, D.C. Kindergartner Andrew Wanovich performed The Star Spangled Banner, followed by a cheer for the U.S.A. from the audience.

Fourth-graders Kristin Wilson and Sheila Cruz recited a poem describing the similarities and differences of people in America and Hispanic countries.

"Are we as different as we think? I say sol. You say sun. But no matter how we say it, it is the same one."

Evelyn Braman, enrichment teacher at White, praised the children for hard work during the week, and courage in their performances.

"Today the children are sharing a part of themselves," Braman told the audience. "These songs and dances are a gift to you."

Children performed a parade of nations in native dress from countries such as Columbia, Panama and Nicaragua. First-grader Ana Maria Sanchez got the audience hopping with a dance to Shakuira, a

Local doc visits Nigeria

Philanthropist plans "Centers of Love"

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

What Dr. Gloria Johnson-Rodgers has in mind for the people of Nigeria is nothing sort of Herculean in magnitude.

"I found out that nearly a million children died of starvation last year, before the age of 5, in Nigeria alone," Johnson-Rodgers said. "And I was just hurt. I have four children, and I can't imagine a child dying from not having food. It just hurt my heart, so I said 'OK, there needs to be something done.'"

"Centers of love" are what Johnson-Rodgers wants to build in three locations in Nigeria.

"I want a place that will accommodate 10,000 people at one time," she said. "That way they can come in, get the goods they need and then go out. Rice, beans, things of substance that will sustain a family for at least a month."

That is an ambitious project for anyone, but Johnson-Rodgers is no stranger to accomplishing distant goals.

"I grew up in Shaw, Mississippi. We had one red light in town, and that was too much. They had to take it down," she said.

The small community was poor, but rich with emotional bonds.

"Everybody knew everybody, everybody loved everybody. Everyone was your mom and dad," she said. "If one person on the block cooked, the whole street ate. But if you did something wrong, the person down the street would spank you. Then when you got home, they'd tell your momma and she'd spank you."

From those humble beginnings, Johnson-Rodgers studied pre-med at Harvard and was the first black to graduate from the University of Iowa with a master's degree in radiation biology. She did patent work for DuPont on lighted diodes for watches. Her research at Brown University was on glucose in newborns.

Her accomplishments are as diverse as the friends she keeps. Lt. Col. Carolyn Drivers, chief of nursing branch, Martin Army Community Hospital, is one of the many volunteers doing anything she can to assist Johnson-Rodgers' endeavor.

"Whatever she needs me to do, I'm going to make myself available," Drivers said. "You just have to meet her to know the impact she can have on your life and the lives of others.

"If I had to pick somebody in the world to say, 'That's my hero,' I would pick her. I've never met anyone like her before," she said.

Johnson-Rodgers' husband is also a doctor.

New math: one plus one makes five?

California family welcomes two girls, three boys

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Oh baby. A former Fort Benning soldier and his wife of nearly 10 years have finally experienced the long awaited birth of their first baby ... and second and third and fourth and fifth.

Amber Brown, the wife of Spc. Steve Brown, a chaplain's assistant at the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, Calif., gave birth to quintuplets Sept. 26, in Palo Alto, Calif.

The babies, born nearly two months premature, remain in intensive care, but all five are "doing marvelous," said granddad Ken Scott.

Gabriel weighed 3 pounds, 1 ounce; Garret, 3 pounds, 10 ounces; Gavin, 2 pounds, 8 ounces; Crystal, 3 pounds, 6 ounces, and Cheyenne, 2 pounds, 11 ounces.

"It's a real miracle. They're all off the ventilators now and breathing on their own, and the doctor says the girls may be able to come home in a couple of weeks," Scott said.

"We're all excited and thrilled. These are our first grandchildren, so it's a real blessing to have all of them, and all of them healthy."

Amber and Steve discovered she was carrying quints in April, while he was assigned to 789th Explosive Ordnance at Lawson Army Air Field on Fort Benning. The couple tried to conceive for several years before using a combination of doctor prescribed fertility drugs, the first round in early March.

> "The Army's been good to them. They gave them a four bedroom house, and they've given Steve all the time he needs to be with her. It truly is a new Army,"
> Ken Scott,
> Grandfather of quintuplets

In June, Amber was transferred to the Stanford Medical Center in Palo Alto, the only hospital staffed with the 20-plus doctors needed to deliver the quints. Shortly thereafter, Steve received a compassionate reassignment to the Defense Language Institute.

"The Army's been good to them," Scott said. "They gave them a four-bedroom house, and they've given Steve all the time he needed to be with her. It truly is a new Army. They've received the very best of care."

Scott said Amber was released from the hospital Sunday, after more than six weeks of bed rest.

"They wanted this real bad, and she

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

Family Advocacy Program provides assistance through classes, counseling

Family Advocacy Program

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, a time when every person should consider what he or she can do to help end the epidemic of domestic violence that plagues our community and our nation.

The statistics are staggering. In the United States, nearly one-third of American women (31 percent) report being physically or sexually abused by a husband or boyfriend at some point in their lives, according to a 1998 Commonwealth Fund survey.

In 1998, 1,320 women — more than three women a day — were murdered by their husbands or boyfriends in this country, according to the U.S. Department of Justice.

Domestic violence is everyone's business. Abuse affects everyone in our community, and we must all come together to stop this epidemic. If you are a victim of domestic violence, help is available through the Army Family Advocacy Program.

The FAP is a specialized program designed to prevent child and spouse maltreatment. The main focus of FAP is to develop prevention programs that contribute to a healthy life for the soldiers and their families.

Program manager Rebecca Welch said a lot of people get the wrong idea about the program.

"Some soldiers think we are out to punish the soldiers and their families if an incident is reported or if a call is received for help on child and spouse abuse," Welch said. "This is a misconception. We provide training to help educate the families and direct them to services that will assist them in meeting their needs before an incident occurs or a problem arises.

"We are available to help the families solve their problems, not to create a problem for the families."

Services are provided to families who are vulnerable to the kinds of stress that can lead to abuse.

When families seek help or a problem has been identified, referrals are made to other treatment programs on and off the installation that provide services for soldiers and their families involved in family violence.

In order to strengthen the families and prevent the recurrence of abuse, voluntary self-referral is encouraged through education and awareness programs.

Listed below are programs designed to help prevent child and spouse abuse.

VICTIM ADVOCACY

The FAP Victim Advocate provides victims of domestic violence with the support and information necessary for them to make positive choices for themselves and their children.

For more information, call Theresa Sanchez, Family Advocacy Victim Advocate, at 545-4013 or 545-7517.

VIOLENCE INTERVENTION

The FAP manager may provide crisis intervention to soldiers and family members in emergency situations.

Cases involving family violence intervention that need long-term treatment and follow-up are referred to Social Work Services.

PARENT EDUCATION

Traditionally, it has been assumed that parenting is instinctive and that people "just know" how to take care of children.

It now seems clear that parenting is a learned behavior, influenced by personal history and experience, as well as the opportunity to observe and practice specific skills.

Parent support programs assist parents to "get off to a good start," to interact more effectively with their children and to create and maintain a safe home environment.

> "We are available to help families solve their problems, not to create a problem for the families."
> Rebecca Welch
> Family Advocacy Program

This program also teaches parents basic skills in physical care, supervision and psychological nurturing, appropriate to a child's age and stage of development.

Classes are offered through the Chaplain's Family Life Center at 545-1760. Families who need child care while enrolled in day-time classes can receive it free through Family Advocacy.

TROOP EDUCATION

Classes are mandatory and are provided on an annual basis for all military personnel on the dynamics of spouse and child abuse, the availability of treatment services and the Army's policies regarding family violence.

Units can schedule briefings by calling the FAP Training instructor, Terry Frye, at 545-6957 or 545-7517.

RESPITE CHILD CARE

Respite Care is temporary child care for the purpose of relieving parental stress and providing a nurturing and developmentally appropriate environment.

Respite Care can be provided for families when both soldier and spouse attend parenting classes or counseling.

Respite Care is not used in place of foster care or abandoned children. This program is designed to provide child care relief for families who are stressed because of a family problem and who are participating in treatment programs.

SAFETY EDUCATION FOR CHILDREN

The FAP has developed a post-wide safety education program which offers sensible guidance on personal safety and child sexual abuse prevention for children, their parents, and youth and child care staff.

This program emphasizes the important supervisory and protective roles of adults and the community members who interact with children. School counselors coordinating with the FAP conduct classes on a continuous basis.

COMMUNITY EDUCATION

The FAP provides education for the community regarding family violence, the extent and nature of child abuse and neglect and spouse abuse, reporting mechanisms, and available services.

Military community education involves making FAP services known, accessible and attractive to those who can best use the services to improve their family functioning. This program is designed to promote military community support and to encourage early referral.

The FAP promotes "Child Abuse Prevention Month," "Month of the Military Child," and "Domestic Violence Awareness Month," and participates in unit organizational days, unit support groups, health fairs, etc.

COMMAND EDUCATION PROGRAM

The FAP Manager and the FAP training instructor brief commanders at all levels on the nature of spouse and child abuse and the means to prevent domestic violence.

FOSTER CARE

Foster care is a voluntary or court-mandated program for abused/neglected children. It provides 24-hour care and supportive services in a family home or group facility for children who cannot be cared for by their own families and need substitute care.

The FAP has a memorandum of agreement with the Department of Family and Children Services to provide foster care. Families interested in becoming foster care parents may contact their local Department of Family and Children Services.

SPOUSE ABUSE SHELTERS

The FAP contracts with the Russell County Shelter and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women to provide a 24-hour residential facility or temporary accommodation to ensure there is a safe, temporary place to stay, with emotional and material support to victims of spouse abuse and their children.

The shelters also offer counseling, transportation and community services, including legal, medical, and financial help to spouses. Individuals may contact the shelters directly —Phenix City (334) 297-4401 or Columbus, (706) 324-3850 — for placement.

Vet makes house calls

Vet Services reaches out to community

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Making time to visit the doctor's office may not always be convenient.

The staff at Fort Benning's Veterinarian Services is making it easier for pet owners to keep their animals healthy, by making house calls.

Once a month, a veterinarian and two vet technicians venture out into the housing areas and set up a one-day Community Outreach Clinic. At the clinics, staff perform routine rabies and feline leukemia vaccinations, test for intestinal parasites and administer heartworm tests.

Capt. Louis Huzella, installation veterinarian, said testing for rabies is very important because there have been 11 confirmed cases of rabies this year.

"The customers who come to the clinics are those who may not be able to get to our office during regular business hours," Huzella said. "The clinics are a way to reach the community pet owners."

After the success of the first round of clinics during the spring, staff members scheduled the clinics again and rotated through the McGraw, Bouton Heights and Indianhead housing areas.

The clinics reinforce the dedication the staff have to the Benning community. Huzella and staff also held a horse clinic at the Fort Benning horse stables offering vaccinations.

In addition to clinics, they still offer the same services at the office.

Those services include spaying and neutering for dogs and cats, and shots. There is also an adoption program.

Pet owners can pay for the Avid microchip, a device that is placed under the skin and when scanned will identify a lost animal's owner.

The Columbus pet permit, which is required for all pets in the Columbus area, can be purchased at the office.

The Fort Benning Veterinarian Services is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., with sick call at 8 a.m. to 9 a.m. All pets must be on a leash or in a pet transport carrier.

The clinics are open to any pet owner with a valid military ID.

For more information on any veterinarian services or time and locations of the Community Outreach Clinics, call 545-4444.

FORT BENNING SCHOOLS

Children need hugs, lots of reassurance

Superintendent offers parents advice on comforting children

Dr. Dell McMullen
Superintendent, Fort Benning Schools

Never before have our children experienced anything like the events that occurred Sept. 11. Now they need the support of caring adults to help them deal with this national crisis.

I have often said that our children at Fort Benning have the advantage of caring parents who want to give them the very best opportunities.

I know that you are concerned about how your children are doing in light of what has happened.

I have a few ideas I would like to share with you:

1 Acknowledge your child's feelings. Children, like adults, cope much better when they share their feelings with someone who cares. Saying, "Don't cry, it's all right," does not validate a child's feelings and does not make them feel better.

2 Knowing what to say is not always easy. A simple hug and saying, "I know this is hard for you," will often suffice.

3 Recognize that your child may be concerned about his or her immediate safety.

Reassure your child that we have the best Army in the world, and you, his or her teachers and other adults are doing many things to keep us safe.

4 Sometimes children have trouble putting their fears into words. They may wonder what might happen to them without their mother or father. You may want to say, "You never have to worry because you will always be taken care of. You won't be alone. Let's talk about our plan should something happen."

5 Always express hope and faith that things will be all right.

The teachers and staffs in the Fort Benning Schools are committed to helping children through this difficult time.

If you notice changes in your child's behavior, whether he or she becomes a little rowdier or a little withdrawn, please do not hesitate to talk with your child's teacher about your concerns. We are here to help.

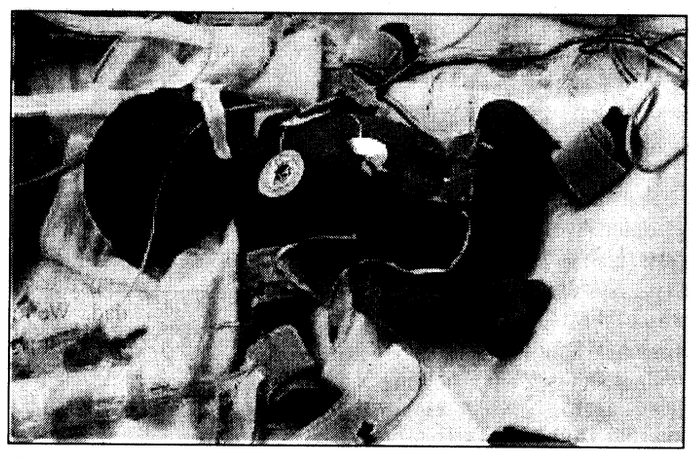
went through a lot to get (the babies)," Scott said.

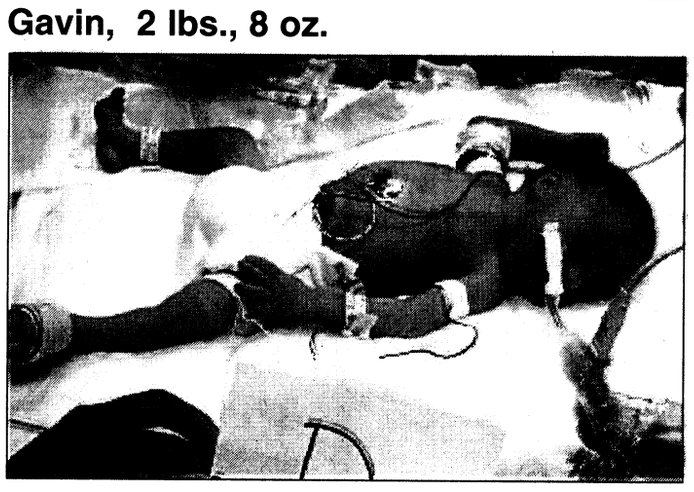
"She's a real trooper, a tough lady. She's doing great, up and around and enjoying every minute she can spend with them."

Amber and Steve commute 100 miles daily between their home at Fort Ord and Lucile Packard Children's Hospital in Palo Alto.



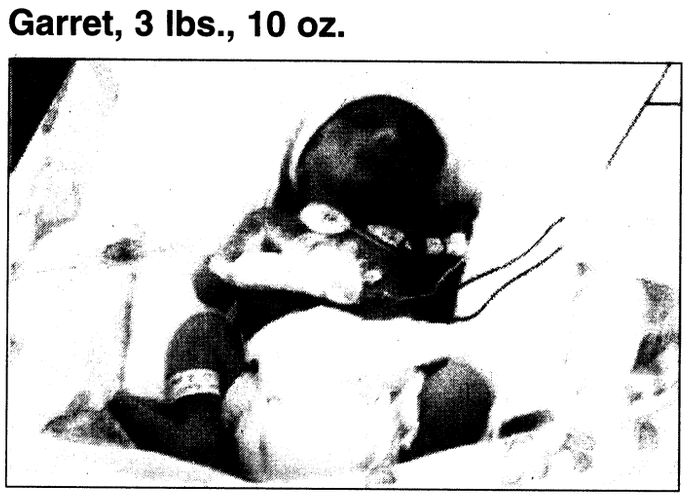
Although the Army has no specific programs for multiple births, the family will be enrolled in the Exceptional Family Member Program and receive federal subsidy assistance.

Two baby product companies have promised to supply a year's worth of formula and diapers, and the Navy Marine Relief Society provided an array of clothing and bedding for the quints.



"We get calls every day from people wanting to help out," Scott said. "It's going to be tough, financially, but they'll do fine with all this support. We're just happy they're all doing so well. We're just as proud as can be."

The number of multiple births nationwide has increased dramatically in the past decade, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, due to advances in reproductive medicine and the increasing age of mothers having babies.



The department recorded 67 cases of babies born in sets of five or more in 1999.

Maria Prieto,

Spanish teacher, sixth through eighth grade, at Faith Middle School.

Personal: Prieto is a native of El Paso, Texas. She is the oldest of six siblings.

"They always told me I was bossy, but as the oldest I was responsible for them and the house work," she said.

Family: She and her husband, Fernando, a retired master sergeant, have been married for 30 years.

"I met him on a blind date set up by a girlfriend of mine from school," Prieto said. "He was already in the Army and was completing his first term."

Fort Benning was her husband's last duty station so the family has remained here allowing Prieto to remain a Spanish teacher at Faith Middle School.

Throughout her marriage, she has taught in Department of Defense schools where her husband was stationed.

The couple have twin daughters, Anne and Frances, 26, and are proud grandparents of a 6-year-old granddaughter.

Education: Prieto is the first member of her family to earn a college degree. She earned a bachelor of science degree in education from the University of Texas at El Paso in 1972.

"My family saw how hard I was working to get my degree and realized just how hard it can be," she said.

She earned her master's degree in education at Columbus State University in 1996 and a remedial reading specialist degree last year.

Why teach? After 25 years of teaching, Prieto said she still feels a personal satisfaction in the profession.

"I love it when I see students light up and understand that they are learning something," she said. "Some even seem to dare me to teach them. I see it as a challenge to reach them. I know I can make a difference in someone's life."

She strongly feels Spanish should be incorporated into the regular curriculum.

"In this day and age, a second language helps better equip today's youth," she said. "Many employers seek bilingual and multilingual employees."

Prieto marvels at the language skills of children in other countries. She said when her family was stationed in Germany most students were bi- and trilingual.

On relating to students: "I use humor, it is a wonderful tool in the classroom," she said.

"It helps to diffuse potential discipline problems and sets children at ease when they may be going through a difficult time in their own lives."

Prieto said when students join her class she shares her personal information with them.

"I share information about myself with the students so they know where I am coming from. It opens the door to them and hopefully they feel they can let me in," Prieto said.

Prieto strongly believes that by actively using the language, her students gain a better understanding of the culture.

"If I were to try and just isolate the language, my students would not learn about the culture, the people or the philosophy of Hispanic people."

Another learning tool Prieto incorporates into her lesson plan is preparing easy-to-cook ethnic foods purchased in the commissary.

Hobbies: Prieto enjoys tending to her garden.

"I have yellow roses, they remind me of home in Texas," she said. "My family also enjoys reading and I read both Spanish and English to my granddaughter.

Would you recommend teaching to others? "Yes, it is a self-fulfilling job. But a person must like children, be very patient and be able to see the world through their students perspective," Prieto said.

Colombian singer.

"This is a great way for the children and the community to learn about different cultures and history," said Taimy Velez, mother of Taiomys, six, and Widalys, 4, students at White.

Velez, originally from Puerto Rico, said her children learned to speak English at White, under the supervision of Zoraido Roman, who teaches English as a second language at White. She is the only teacher to teach ESL on Fort Benning.

Students are bussed to White to get language training, giving White a higher number of Hispanic students than other schools on post.

SGLI: Families benefit from careful planning

The program is a great addition to professional soldiers' benefit packages, especially for young soldiers who may not have family member coverage and are vulnerable to financial catastrophes caused by the high cost of funerals and related expenses, said Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald E. Klein, post sergeant major.

"When we're young, we think we're invincible, and when tragedy strikes, we're ill prepared," Klein said. "If we help one soldier with this plan, it will be worth it."

Perhaps one reason for the Department of Defense's move to keep pace with its civilian employer counterpart is demographics, he said. More married soldiers in today's Army need the coverage.

The plan is a well deserved reward for those who wish to make the military a career, Klein said. Soldiers can't beat the premiums.

Dependent children coverage stops when soldiers leave active duty or the Ready Reserve, but spouses can convert their policy into a civilian plan. The kind of plan and its features depend on what is offered at the time.

For more information, other than that found on the Web, call 545-2872 for Main Post or 544-2542 for 3rd Brigade.

Mission: Helps doctor feed hungry in Nigeria

"My husband grew up very poor too. We both vowed we would give something back to the community," she said.

Johnson-Rodgers is the director of the Gwendolyn Wilkes Rainbow Center, which organized programs to fed and clothe more than 60,000 people last year.

Through Nigerian friends, Johnson-Rodgers learned the toll starvation was taking on Nigeria's 120 million people.

"The Lord put a vision in my heart about setting up three feeding stations in Nigeria in three different parts of the country," she said."I was able to acquire land in three distinct places in Nigeria. All of Nigeria will be able to come and find these areas."

Volunteers are willing to do whatever it takes to see that this project succeed.

"Certainly our help is needed," Drivers said. "Whenever you have someone who is willing to dedicate their time and effort like Dr. Rodgers, I have to commend that. I can't say enough about her. She's probably one of the most genuine people I've ever met."

Johnson-Rodgers hopes to return to Nigeria next summer to begin work on her project.

"I was thinking the other day 'What is it that you want?' It's not the recognition of man, I've had that. It's not money, I've had that. I just want to make a difference," she said.

How people pray not important as praying

Chaplain (Maj.) Randy Edwards
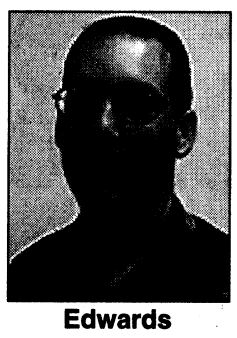
Family Life Ministries Center

reflections



Recently our nation has been called to pray for the victims, families, our country and its leaders, following the terrorist attacks.

I encourage everyone to continue to pray for the healing and strengthening of our nation.

When a national tragedy or an individual tragedy occurs, there are moments of confusion and disbelief. So too, when we call upon the Lord in prayer, there are moments of struggle to determine what to pray or how to say it. Even in those moments of distress and struggle there is comfort from being in the presence of God.

Curtis Mitchell, in his book Let's Live, penned this poetic answer to "how should I pray?"

"The proper way for a man to pray," said Deacon Lemuel Keyes,
"And the only proper attitude
Is down upon his knees."
"No, I should say the way to pray," said Reverend Mr. Wise,
"Is standing straight with outstretched arms,
And solemn upturned eyes."
"Oh, no oh, no," said Elder Snow
"Such posture is too proud:
A man should pray with eyes fast closed,
And head contritely bowed."
"It seems to me his hands should be
Serenely clasped in front,
With both thumbs pointing to the ground,"
Said Reverend Mr. Blunt.
"Last year I fell in Hodgkin's well

Edwards

" ... with both my feet a-stickin' up and head a-pointin' down ... I prayed hard, right then and there — Best prayer I ever said."

Farmer Brown, from Curtis Mitchell's *Let's Live.

Head first," said Farmer Brown,
"With both my feet a-stickin' up
And head a-pointin' down."
"And I prayed hard, right then and there—
Best prayer I ever said.
The prayingest prayer I ever prayed
Was standing on my head."

Of course, the correct posture is not the concern of the question 'How do I pray?'

The Biblical admonition is to pray in faith.

The Gospel of Mark, chapter 11, verses 22-24, says "Have faith in God," Jesus answered. "I tell you the truth, if anyone says to this mountain, 'Go, throw yourself into the sea,' and does not doubt in his heart but believes that what he says will happen, it will be done for him. Therefore I tell you, whatever you ask for in prayer, believe that you have received it, and it will be yours." (NIV)

Entering into God's presence with our hearts open allows God to guide, comfort and strengthen our lives.

Reinhold Niebuhr, a theologian, once expressed this familiar prayer:

"God, grant me the serenity to accept the things that cannot be changed. Grant me the courage to change the things that ought to be changed. Grant me wisdom to distinguish the one from the other."

Author Brian Harbour says pray for wisdom. Then, whatever comes in life, happiness or sadness, success or failure, health or sickness, money or poverty, we will be able to discern how these circumstances of our life can be used to develop our life and to glorify God.

May you be encouraged to approach the Lord in prayer having confidence from God's word in Second Chronicles 7:14, "If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then I will forgive their sin and will heal their land." (NIV)

Parenting develops from the heart

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Parenting is an attitude of the heart. Being a parent is more about giving than getting. Children know when their parents love them. They feel their parent's love.

Parents need to love their children unconditionally. Showing unconditional love is not always easy, but it is necessary. Parental love should always be available.

Do your children feel that they must earn your love or that it is conditional? Children are vulnerable to being tuned out or humiliated by parents. We must conscientiously provide a listening ear if we want them to come to us for the important things in life. We should seek to encourage them rather than exasperate them (Colossians 3:21).

Koop

In order to tune into your children, stop what you are doing. Get down at their level. Make eye contact, and focus your attention on them. You encourage your child with verbal praise (I Thessalonians 2:11), a pat on the back or a hug. Your gentle touch conveys safety and security to your child (I Thessalonians 2:7).

Parenting overwhelms us at times. Work may interfere with being a super mom or dad. We may become preoccupied with our own problems and concerns. Our behavior affects our children. Unfortunately they may assume they are the cause of our problems. Positive parenting changes, however, produces great benefits for children.

Would you like help in parenting? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance.

The Fort Benning 18th annual Body Building Open Championship is Oct. 20 at the Main NCO Club.

The competition director, Carol Gearheart, said she has been preparing for the event for several weeks.

"If you've never seen a body building competition, you'd be impressed by this one," she said.

Gearheart said competitors should start bulking up for this year's event because she is preparing something she hopes will remain in their memories for a long time.

From buying trophies to finding a body building "poser" for half-time entertainment and sponsors for this year's trials, Gearheart said she is very excited to be the hostess of the competition for the fifth time since its birth in 1983.

"I get very excited when it comes time to plan this event," she said. "This is a premier event, and it gives everyone an opportunity to see something different.

"It makes people happy, and I always look forward to the next year."

Gearheart said many participants in this year's competition were spectators in the past.

Spectators can expect to pay $2 to watch pre-judging, which begins at noon for females and 12:30 p.m. for males. Adults will pay $5 to watch the 7:30 p.m. final judging show, and children under 12 will pay $2.

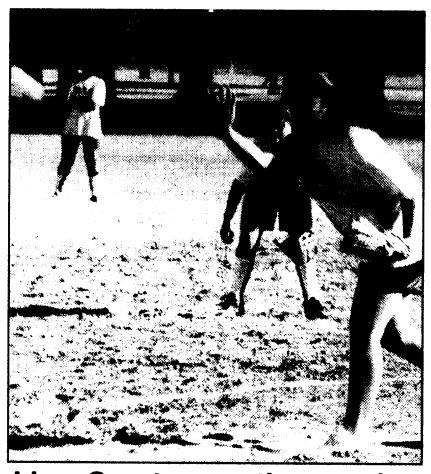
Gearheart welcomes everyone to the competition. Anyone from the surrounding community can enter any division of the competition except for Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning. The competitors for Mr. and Ms. Fort Benning must be active-duty military from the installation.

This year's competition divisions are: male lightweight, male middleweight, male heavyweight, masters, Mr. Fort Benning and male open.

There will also be female lightweight, female heavyweight, Ms. Fort Benning and female open divisions.

Registration and weigh-in for this year's event begins at 9 a.m. and runs until 11 a.m. the day of the competition.

Each competitor will pay a $40 entrance fee for the first division they enter and $10 for each additional division. There are no restrictions to age, nor is there any limit to the number of divisions any one competitor may enter, Gearheart said.



However, to compete in the "open" divisions, the competitor must be enrolled in another division.

To preregister or for more information about the competition, call 544-9486.

Faith's girls' softball team hosts first home game

Growing pains do not dampen team's spirit

Casey Newman delivers the ball during the game.

"We like the way you whack that ball," they screamed.

This is the first time in years that girls softball has taken place on the diamond behind Faith Middle School and parents and players were not about to sit quietly through it.

Thanks to the combined efforts of parents, teachers and players, the Faith Falcons hosted the Chattahoochee Lady Cougars in their first home game Sept. 27. However, too many walks and free bases helped the visiting team walk away with a 21-7 win.

The game began slowly with hits only by the Lady Cougars.

Faith Falcon starting pitcher, Lisa Grant, a seventh-grader, did her best but walked in several runs for the Cougars in the first two innings.

The Falcons had trouble fielding and covering home plate when they did see some action, but that was late in the game.

By the third inning Grant began to tire, so Coach Tammy Newman sent in relief pitcher, Amanda Williams.

Williams, a veteran of two seasons, pitched faster and controlled, which the Cougars could not resist chopping. Falcon fielding allowed three more runs to score. Third baseman Elizabeth Lowe and shortstop Danielle Marker, both sixth-graders, fumbled a hit and allowed another run for the Cougars.

However, mistakes are part of the game and to these girls, the game meant retribution on offense.

Keeping a keen eye on the pitch and steady grip on the bat, Faith Falcons were able to walk the bases for an easy seven runs by the top of the third inning, trailing the Lady Cougars by only six runs.

The next inning took its toll on relief pitcher Williams, and teammates cheered her performance as veteran Casey Newman, sixth-grader, took to the mound.

Newman came on strong, striking out her first batter. But her pitching was not consistent and she walked several Cougars and gave up a couple of hits. Still, Newman's experience showed through her defense as she covered home plate whenever a runner on third inched forward.

Finally, late in the sixth inning, referees called the game due to the two-hour time limit.

"This is the first year we have had a girls team," John Newman, team manager, said. "Now the girls have a chance to represent their school and post."

The girls have come a long way since last month when they began to practice, said Robert Lewis, acting after school activities coordinator.

The Falcon are 0-4 for the season.

West Point instructors train USAMU athletes

Shooters learn mental techniques

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The soldier-athletes of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit remain the best in the world in the sport of shooting through intensive training, top-notch equipment and world-class facilities. Now these shooters are also using mental management techniques to assist them in excelling in their sport, and instructors from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., are helping them do just that.

Capt. Gregory Burbelo and civilian David Czesniuk of the USMA's Center for Enhanced Performance visited with USAMU shooters Sept. 24-26 and conducted Mental Training and Peak Performance Classes. This applied sport psychology instruction shows participants how their beliefs, attitude and thinking habits affect their athletic performance and demonstrates various ways athletes can develop the confidence, concentration and composure they need to achieve their full potential.

West Point's CEP was established in 1989 and serves more than 1,000 cadets a year. Under the direction of Dr. Nathaniel Zinsser, the CEP program provides the cadets the mental edge for athletic, academic and leadership performance. CEP instructors also travel around the country providing mental management and team building training to soldiers throughout the Army. The CEP instructors have visited the USAMU on several occasions offering their brand of applied sports psychology to AMU shooters.

USAMU Service Rifle Coach Donnie Heuman spoke with members of his team before their CEP mental training Sept. 25 at Easley Range.

"Anyone can learn to shoot physically, but you win mentally. The mental game is there for us to conquer," Heuman said.

During the class, Burbelo talked about goal setting, visualization imagery, focus and concentration and managing stress and energy to maximize performance.

"You have to visualize what you want to accomplish to maximize your peak performance," Burbelo told the shooters.

The CEP instruction also includes body awareness, relaxation exercises, maintaining self-control and achieving self-confidence through effective thinking.

"I thought they were great; I'm very happy with them," shotgun shooter Sgt. Joetta R. Dement said. "They were able to help me in overcoming pressure. Now they are working on an individualized plan for me on what I need to do to overcome obstacles, break bad habits and achieve my goals. They're full of positive energy. After I spoke with one instructor, I wanted to rush right out to the range and shoot a record-breaking score."

CEP instructors told shooters they need to develop specific mental skills that are crucial to sport performance such as the concentration shown by Olympic champion Greg Louganis, the confidence shown by boxer Muhammad Ali and the motivation shown by basketball legend Larry Bird.

"The purpose of our training is to help athletes develop this level of confidence, concentration and composure," Burbelo said. "Having this mindset will allow athletes to perform at their maximum levels under any circumstances."

"I've worked with the CEP instructors several times," said USAMU running target shooter Sgt. Armando R. Ayala. "They've helped me, absolutely, in self-realization, how to focus on my goal, how to organize my plan for success and better my performance. It's the best program that I've ever worked with, and I'm confident that it will work for me."

Burbelo said he's been to the AMU about eight times and always enjoys working with the shooters.

"It's a privilege to work with these world-class professional athletes and have in-depth discussions about excellence; it's inspiring and fascinating," Burbelo said. "I help them make the most out of the mental aspect of their performance and maximize their full potential as an athlete.

"We're not psychiatrists or motivational speakers; we're educators," he continued. "We deal with the psychology of performance. We give people mental skills to overcome challenges. Stress at the World Championship and Olympic level is pretty large. We show them how to thrive under that level of pressure."

Weapons policy, boat safety explained

MPs require hunters to have license, register weapons

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

People who come on the installation to hunt must provide personal identification as well as a post hunting permit. Without the permit, hunting on the installation is illegal.

People fishing on the Chattahoochee River are also required to show the same documents as vehicle operators, said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, provost sergeant, 209th Military Police Detachment, Military Police Activity.

"We would like anyone bringing a weapon on post to register it," Snapp said. "Registering the weapon on post is beneficial to (the person)," he said, citing that if the weapon is stolen, there will be another way to identify it.

Weapon transportation is as important as licensing and registration. Ammunition and the weapon should be stored and carried separately, Snapp said. A proper example of this is ammunition stored in a locked box in the vehicle with the weapon stored in a locked case in the trunk.

Snapp advises people who come through checkpoints to inform the inspecting officer they are carrying a weapon.

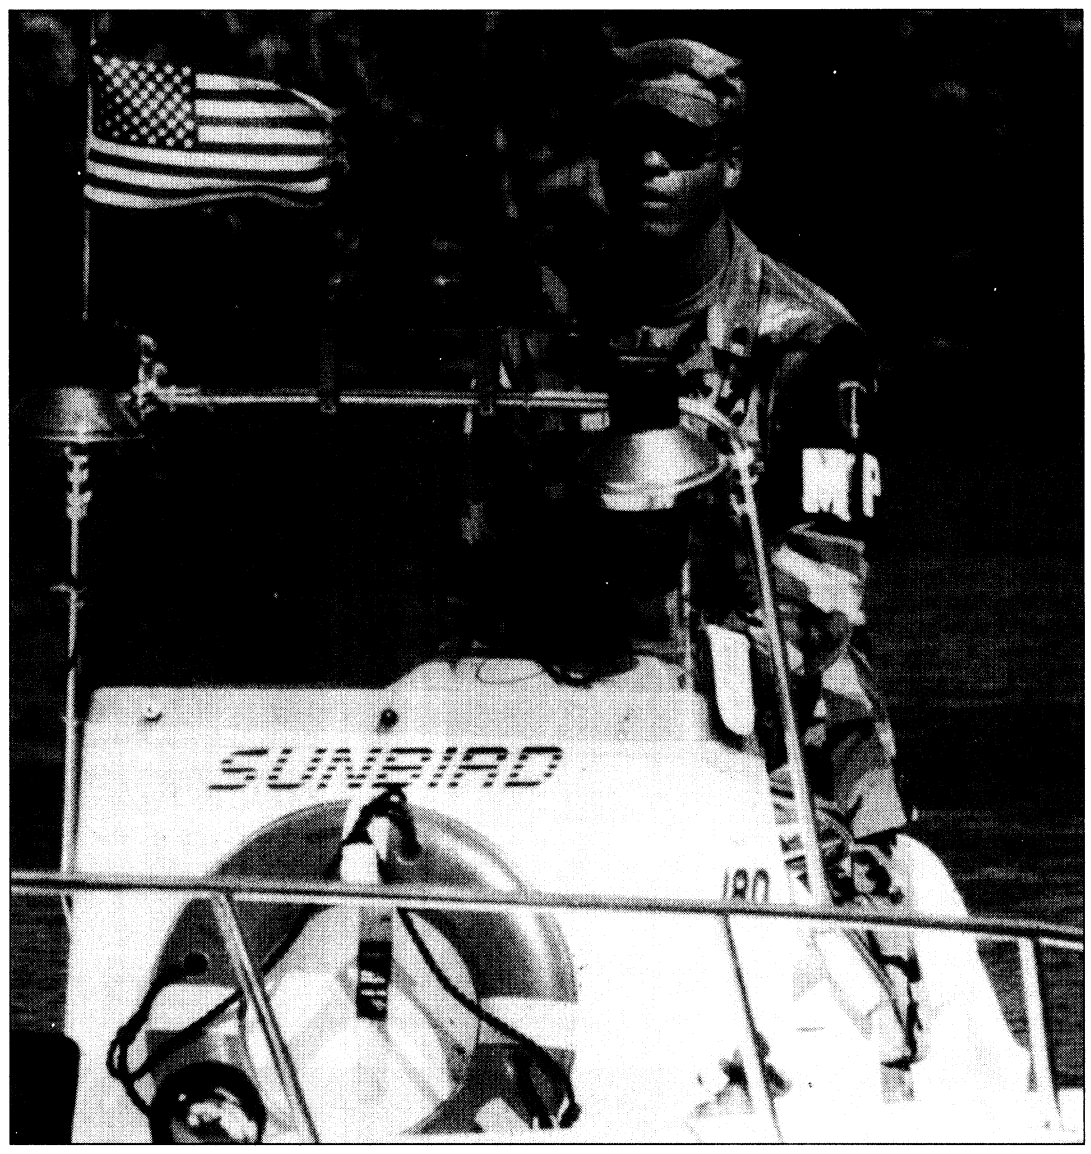
"You don't necessarily have to tell them," he said. "But if your vehicle is going to be checked, it might be a good idea. It will prevent any tense moments."

Although people are authorized to carry weapons on boats and canoes, hunting out of them is not advised, he said.

MPs patrol the length of the Chattahoochee that borders the installation and ensure no one does anything out of the ordinary.

While they patrol the water ways, the MPs watch for anything suspicious, out of place and for drunken boaters. They also check river patrons for proper identification and ensure each boat has the proper amount of water safety vests for each boater, said Staff Sgt. Robert Johns, 209th MP Det., MPA.

MPs patrol the water throughout boating season, but they have paid particular attention during the last several weeks because of the recent terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, D.C.



"We secured all the roads, but people tend to forget about the boat patrol," Johns said. "It's easy access (to the installation), and we provide a presence on the river."

Johns said even though there have not been any problems with river patrons so far, he asks them to "be patient with the security measures. Make sure all your paperwork and ID cards are up to date because it helps us."

"John Q. Public" should know the rules when transporting weapons onto and around the installation, Snapp said. All service members who reside on post are required to have their privately owned weapons registered at the MP office located in Soldiers' Plaza.

However, people who register weapons shouldn't take the weapon into the building, Snapp said. When registering a weapon, people are required to give a valid description of the weapon including: serial number, make, model and color of the weapon.

For more information or to register a weapon at Soldiers' Plaza, call 545-3223.

Boxing Smoker builds spirit

Dragons develop killer mind set

1st Lt. William D. Chesher
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regt.

The Dragons of the 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment gathered to participate in the 3rd Boxing Smoker Aug. 30 at Kefurt Fitness Center.

Boxers throughout the battalion volunteered to represent their respective companies to see who was truly the toughest company in the battalion.

The boxers spent close to two months preparing for their bouts. From roadwork, to the gym, and sometimes back to the roads, the boxers spent a great deal of their free time preparing to defend their companies' reputation.

As the Boxing Smoker drew near, the fighters were in the best physical condition possible. The result was clear, and the competition was tight as each fighter climbed into the ring for a three round bout. Most fights went the distance.

In the end, it was the Charlie Company Cobras who won the Streamer and Trophy.

Although the key focus of the event was to foster esprit de corps and emphasize the warrior ethos, safety remained the ever-present undertone. The battalion mandated compliance with the Safety Risks Analysis and guidance from the Fort Benning Safety Office.

For example, the battalion provided four physicians, custom fitted mouth guards, headgear, a comprehensive medical screening and weigh-in process.

However, not all of the performances took place inside the ring. The Family Readiness Group once again took the time to make sure their Dragons had everything they needed to make the evening a complete success.

The Columbus Blazers, local boxing experts, helped the Dragons get the smoker off the ground. They provided the regulation-boxing ring and staff to referee the bouts. They also provided the technical assistance.

All of the time and effort from the boxers, the Family Readiness Group, the Columbus Blazers, and the battalion contributed to the successful outcome of the 3rd Boxing Smoker.

The 4th Boxing Smoker is Nov. 30. For more information, call 544-3232.

Deadline approaches for all-Army boxing camp

Nov. 5 is deadline for soldiers

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers interested in being considered for Morale, Welfare, and Recreation all-Army boxing and wrestling trial camps must submit applications to their installation sports offices by Nov. 5. Women are also encouraged to apply for both sports.

For women boxers, the weight classes range from 95-pound featherweights to the 201-pound super heavyweights.

Weight classes for women wrestlers range from 101.25 pounds to 165 pounds. Although there has never been an Armed Forces Wrestling championship for women, women from the Marine Corps have wrestled in the national championships.

Female soldiers will participate in both boxing and wrestling as long as they have an opponent in their weight class from one of the other services. Since the number of slots available for women is yet to be determined, all interested women should submit an application.

The All-Army Boxing Trial Camp is scheduled for Jan. 4 through Feb. 10, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. The Army box-off will be held Jan. 22-25. The All-Army Wrestling Trial Camp will be held Feb. 4 through March 27, with the Army championships set for March 1-2.

Interested soldiers must submit a Department of the Army form 4762-R, Athlete's Application, through their installation sports offices.

Soldiers' participation is contingent upon their commanders' approval and release.

For more information about the camps, call the Fort Benning Sports Office at 545-4300.

USAMU: Learn mental shooting techniques

Numerous USAMU Olympians and Olympic contenders are using the CEP program to help them achieve their goals.

"The classes really helped me," said 2000 Olympian Maj. Michael E. Anti. "I plan on using them again for the 2004 Olympics because my shortcoming in Sydney was mental management."

Both the CEP instructors and the shooters agree the science of applied sport psychology is an indispensable element in athletic training. The trainers stress they are focused on helping individuals achieve "supernormal" levels of performance that can be attained by world-class athletes.

"It's exciting working with the AMU shooters," Czesniuk said. "It's great to see people so passionate about their sport to the point where mental training becomes important. The nature of their sport dictates perfectionism. They're striving to be perfect and that can put a lot of pressure on them. We try to focus them back to their performance and execution of their skills. They are excited about the program because they're willing to do anything to be the best. Our goal is to help them achieve their dreams."

"They help me reinforce my good habits in the game of shooting," said Staff Sgt. Lance S. Hopper, USAMU international rifle and service rifle shooter. "They made me aware of my good habits and let me realize that it was OK to not worry about bad things, because there's nothing you can do about it."

Members of the CEP are scheduled to visit the USAMU again and work with the shooters through the 2004 Olympics.

For information about how to join the unit, call Sgt. 1st Class Charles E. Gibbs 545-3893.

Reservists support post MPs

Unit provides installation protection

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Fifty-five reservists from a Florida reserve unit will be at Fort Benning for a year, assisting the post's military police in force protection.

The unit providing assistance is Detachment 1 of the 2145th Garrison Support Unit Military Police Detachment, which is headquartered in Jacksonville, Fla.

Most of the reservists arrived on post Oct. 3.

They will help in the day-to-day operations to include running the check points.

Many are involved with the local law enforcement in their area.

The reservists include police officers, state troopers and federal marshals.

The reservists were notified Oct. 1 they were needed at Fort Benning.

Sgt. Barbara McWilliams, who has 17 years of active-duty and reserve service, said she was initially shocked about being called to active duty.

"With the short notice, I got nervous. I thought I was going to have a heart attack," McWilliams said.

McWilliams, who is from Clarksville, Tenn., and works for the Department of Corrections in Nashville, Tenn., said what worries her the most is she is away from her 16-year-old son, Maurice.

He is staying with a neighbor while she is gone.

"I plan on making a lot of trips home to see him," she added.

Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Lambert, also from Clarksville will miss his family as well.

He missed his wife's birthday, and he misses playing with his 2-year-old son, Bradley.

Still, he's used to being deployed. This is his third time.

"I'm getting used to it. It's part of my career, and I'm proud of what I do," said the 12-year Army veteran.

Spc. Chris Moffett said he shouldn't have a problem being an MP considering he is a police officer in his civilian job.

He has been a police officer for two years with the Decatur, Ala., Police Department.

The similarities of both jobs will include keeping the peace and providing security.

But he'll have to adjust to the check points, force protection, and checking buildings.

Weapons training to wrap up

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the third story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

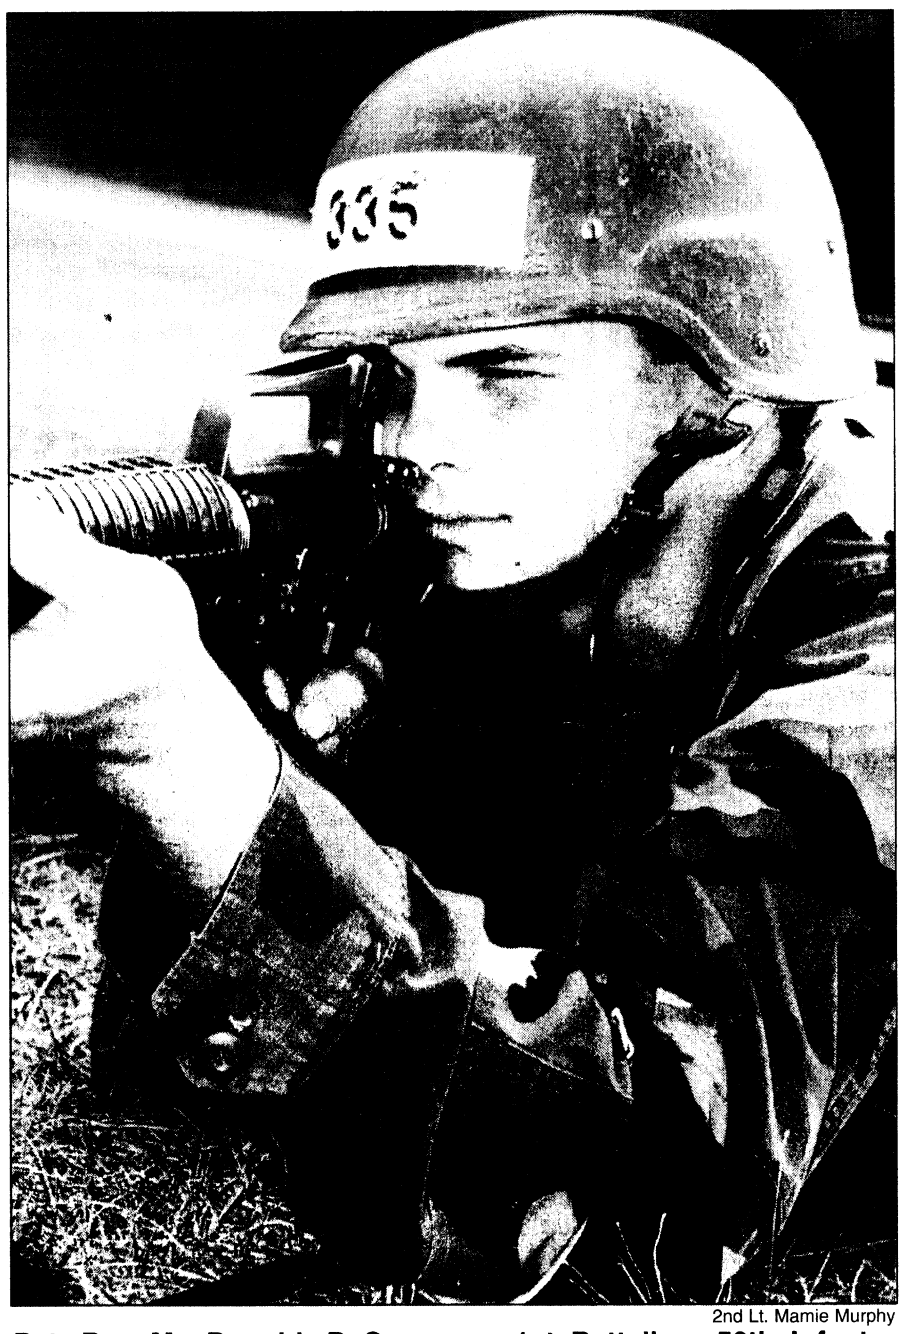
Tomorrow is qualification day for the future infantrymen of D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.



Qualifying means being able to put a camouflage cover on an olive-drab kevlar and looking like a soldier instead of a new trainee. Qualifying means getting to use the phone for the first time since Sept. 11. Qualifying expert means even more privileges.

D Company's goal is 90 percent "first-time go's" after tomorrow.

"The goal is to qualify, but my goal is to shoot expert," Pvt. Paul Greene said. "All the repetition of the drills and instruc-tion gets boring, but the drill sergeants say we need to do it, and they know a lot more than I do, so I guess we need to do it."

"I'm improving, but I still stink," Pvt. Justin

Aircrews assault terrorist structure

U.S. attacks Al Qaeda, Taliban

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — U.S. aircraft and Tomahawk cruise missiles hit 85 percent of their 31 targets during the first two days of strikes against the Al Qaeda terrorist network and Taliban support structure inside Afghanistan, DoD officials said Tuesday.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and Air Force Gen. Richard Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, told reporters at a Pentagon press conference that strikes continued in Afghanistan for a third day. All U.S. aircrews returned safely, they said.

They said the continuing strikes were the military side of the constant pressure the U.S. government and its allies are putting on Osama bin Laden's Al Qaeda network and its Taliban supporters.

The strikes hit terrorist training camps, airfields, anti-aircraft radars and launchers, communications nodes and some military concentrations. Myers said the initial strikes have given the United States "air supremacy" over Afghanistan, and the secretary said the United States can now conduct operations over the country "around the clock, as we wish."

The strikes set the stage for a sustained campaign against Al Qaeda and its Taliban supporters. Rumsfeld said conditions make it easier to deliver humanitarian rations.

Myers said U.S. forces hit 13 targets with five to eight land-based bombers and 10 to 15 Navy strike aircraft. In addition, two ships and one submarine launched 15 Tomahawk missiles at targets in Afghanistan.

Two C-17 transports also dropped 37,500 humanitarian daily ration packs to refugees within Afghanistan. DoD will deliver medical supplies to the Afghan refugees in the future. Rumsfeld said medical supplies would not be airdropped.

Rumsfeld and Myers would not give specifics about future campaign plans.

Rumsfeld said the air attacks would concentrate on "emerging

Bush names security director

Cabinet-level position created in wake of attack

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Former Pennsylvania Governor Tom Ridge became the nation's first director of the newly created Homeland Security Office Monday.

Supreme Court Justice Clarence Thomas swore Ridge into office at a White House ceremony attended by President Bush and other cabinet members.

Bush signed an executive order creating the cabinet-level organization in the wake of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the New York World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Bush remarked that Ridge and his office are "charged with strengthening America's protections" and developing a national strategy against terrorism. The Homeland Security Office will "take strong precautions aimed at preventing terrorist attacks, and prepare to respond effectively, if they might come again," the president said.

Bush said the HSO will:

- Obtain and use the best intelligence information available to fight terrorism.
- Strengthen and protect U.S. transportation, food and water, and critical infrastructure systems to make them less vulnerable to terrorist attacks.
- Respond effectively to terrorist actions if they come.
- Coordinate federal assistance with state and local efforts.
- Work in conjunction with new Homeland Security Council, chaired by Bush and made up of cabinet members and other senior government officials.

However, while taking efforts to prevent terrorism on American soil, Bush emphasized: "We will not sacrifice the freedoms that make our land unique."

After his swearing in, Ridge thanked the president and noted the Sept. 11 attacks "changed our nation in so many ways," from the thousands of victims killed to the U.S. military's men and women deployed in the fight against terrorism.

"Americans should find comfort in knowing that millions of their fellow citizens are working every day to ensure our security at every level — federal, state, county, municipal," Ridge said.

The job of his office, Ridge said, will be to "identify gaps" in U.S. anti-terrorism efforts "and work to close them."

Referring to Sunday's start of U.S and anti-terrorist coalition military operations against the Taliban in Afghanistan, Bush said, "the best defense against terror is a global offensive against terror, wherever it might be found."

Safety: everyone's business

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

commentary

We must all do our part to keep Fort Benning safe. This should be a place where we can be worry-free about working, going to school, living and playing.

If you notice anyone displaying suspicious behavior, notify the military police at once.

Suspicious behavior may include people circling an area several times, displaying aggressive behavior or asking questions about the post.

I've only worked here eight months, but I see how dedicated the MPs are to making sure we are all safe. We need to tell them, "Thank you for a job well done."

Very few people become upset when stuck in traffic or when they have to show their ID, vehicle registration, insurance, and driver's license to get through the check points, but we all need to remember the check points are there to keep all of us safe.

I must admit that after the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, I was nervous about going back to work.

But I was relieved to know the military police had implemented check points on post. After all, there are wackos out there, and you can never be too safe.

In addition to keeping Fort Benning safe, we should look after ourselves as well. Use common sense.

There are simple things we can all do such as know our surroundings, lock our car doors and doors at home and not walk alone at night.

Let's keep our eyes and ears open to make sure Fort Benning stays safe.

Force protection is everyone's responsibility.

Do your part. Be safe.

Benning plans 'Hooch cleanup

Danielle Foerschler
DFEL Public Affairs Office

commentary

Nearly 100 Fort Benning soldiers and civilian volunteers are volunteering in the third annual Fort Benning "Help the Hooch."

This year's event will take place 8 a.m. to noon today and 9 a.m. to noon on Saturday.

Help the Hooch is part of the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission initiative and Keep America Beautiful, a national nonprofit public service organization dedicated to litter prevention, recycling, and beautification efforts. It is important for Fort Benning to show our support in the tricommunity area by doing our part to clean up.

This year soldiers and civilians will clean up seven sites to maximize our efforts and achieve greater results.

The sites included in this year's Help The Hooch are: Upper and Lower Pet Cemetery, Upatoi Creek, Z-3 Engineer's Landing, Engineer's Landing at Lawson Army Airfield, Eddy Bridge, and Uchee Creek Marina.

The Chattahoochee River runs through Fort Benning for approximately 17 miles. This beautiful river that runs through our neighborhood will benefit from a cleanup event that stops any further down stream pollution.

Not only does this event clean up our waterways; it makes us aware of what does end up in our rivers. In past years, items as big as sofas, engines and washing machines have been found.

In the Houston, Texas, area during a similar cleanup program, dozens of fast food restaurant playground balls were found.

To stop further pollution, letters were written to prevent such items from leaving their area.

What we think of as innocent playground toys became pollutants with the potential to clog waterways and harm wildlife.

Our waterways provide fresh drinking water and great recreational opportunities, such as canoeing and fishing, and they serve as a pleasant relief from our busy day-to-day lives.

Everyone contributes to pollution in our streams. This is our opportunity to help by giving something back to the environment and our community.

Fort Benning residents can help in the cleanup by picking up around their homes (and not tossing it into the Chattahoochee).

The Solid Waste Material Recovery Facility, located on Old Cusseta highway, recycles any glass, metal and plastic that is brought into the facility.

Remember those fallen at Pentagon

Sgt. Nate Orme
Army News Service

Four weeks after the Sept. 11 terrorist attack, the gaping wound left in the south side of the Pentagon appears clean and sterile.

Gone are the teams of rescue and recovery personnel wearing breathing masks and bio-suits, sorting through the grim evidence of an unspeakable crime that left 189 dead.

Gone are the broken pieces of concrete, the twisted metal, the charred furniture.

Gone, too, are the Army engineers who constructed dozens of wooden box cribs to shore up the busted and damaged columns that hold up the floors of the five-story edifice.

The FBI has turned over the Pentagon to the military and the area is officially no longer a working FBI crime scene. But for America, it will always be the scene of a crime — a moment that will forever survive in our national consciousness, as do other attacks that now live on in infamy. Yes, we will surely remember the Pentagon and related World Trade Center attacks, just as we do the Alamo.

"The American people have been well represented here," said Maj. Gen. James T. Jackson, commander of the U.S. Army Military District of Washington, at the Pentagon hand-off ceremony.

"Tragedy has a way of bringing out the best in Americans. With great professionalism, many people and agencies came together to do a job that has never been done before."

Inside the undamaged majority of the Pentagon, soldiers, Marines, airmen, sailors and civilians continue serving as before the attack. One could hardly guess the calamity that had transpired here from viewing the seemingly normal operations in this massive complex. But one cannot see the knots of anger spawned by this bizarre and unfathomable attack.

Standing directly outside the impact area, the gap looks rather small in relation to the wide sides of the edifice. The collapsed floors have been removed, and the evidence of violence has been extricated. From a distance, it looks merely like a demolition zone. Only viewing up close begins to tell the full impact of the story now.

Walking into the building using the entrance created by the Boeing 757, telltale signs of a strange occurrence become apparent. Plumbing pipes hang from the ceiling, broken and shattered like a plastic cup. Wires upon wires drape down from the ceiling haphazardly, without direction. The walls deep within the building, away from the area of direct impact, are blackened and charred, evidence of the fire that raged on, fed by the fuel-laden aircraft.

Damp books, some singed around the edges, lie in a pile, gathered and placed by rescuers. Also salvaged, a two-foot-diameter cast-iron shield representing the Army Reserve is blackened by fire but hardly the worse for wear. Perhaps one day it will be placed as is, thoughtfully and appropriately, with a plaque of remembrance. For now, it leans silently against an unlit wall.

Eerily and thankfully, the destruction suddenly stops, and offices nearly untouched but for water damage adjoin offices almost completely destroyed. A desk remains in one, and on it an intact bowl of blackened fruit.

On the inside wall of the second ring of the Pentagon, a nearly circular hole, about 12-feet wide, allows light to pour into the building from an internal service alley. An aircraft engine punched the hole out on its last flight after being broken loose from its moorings on the plane.

The result became a huge vent for the subsequent explosion and fire. Signs of fire and black smoke now ring the outside of the jagged-edged hole.

There have been hundreds of truckloads of material carted from the site — amounting to approximately 10,000 tons of debris, said FBI agent John S. Adams, team leader for the evidence recovery team, part of the FBI's Washington field office.

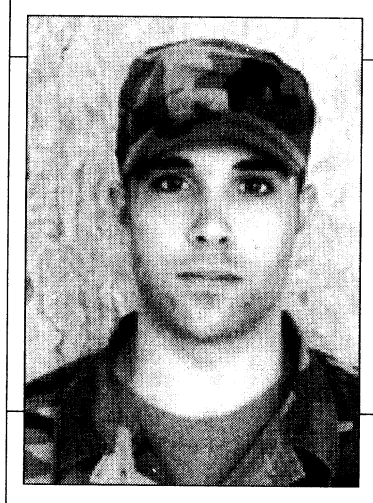
The recovery work continued for a time in the North Parking Lot, where various agencies, such as the 311th Mortuary Affairs Quartermaster Company, an Army Reserve unit called up from Puerto Rico, did the critical work of collecting personal effects and combing for evidence on the attackers. Now they, too, are gone.

The Pentagon is ready to be rebuilt. A new $145 million contract has already been granted to Hensel Phelps Construction Co. of Chantilly, Va.

For many, viewing the Pentagon now is an attempt to bring some type of understanding, if not healing. But it still does not begin to answer the question of why.

Was it insanity? Are these inherently evil minds? Or were those who destroyed their own spark of life and divinity through their act themselves victims of a twisted indoctrination by freedom's enemies?

"We are not deceived by their pretenses to piety," President Bush said. "We have seen their kind before. They are the heirs of all the murderous ideologies of the 20th century ... they follow in the path of fascism, and Nazism, and totalitarianism," Bush said.



May the murderous ideology of terrorism be defeated and be forgotten, and rest "in history's unmarked grave of discarded lies," as our president said in his address to Congress and the American people.

And may our dead always, always be remembered and honored. God bless America!

Speaker helps begin drug-free campaign

Bias to speak about dangers of drugs

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Dr. Lonise Bias will be the guest speaker at the Red Ribbon ceremony today from 7:30 to 8:30 a.m. in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

Bias is the mother of the late Len Bias, the University of Maryland basketball player who died June 19, 1986, two days after being drafted by the Boston Celtics. He died of a cocaine overdose.

After her son's death, Bias became a spokesperson against drug abuse. She travels nationwide as a lecturer and consultant to educate young people and adults about the dangers of drugs and alcohol.

Bias

"She's a dynamic speaker. This is her life now. This is what she believes in. When a mother speaks, it's a tear-jerker," said Melvin Burnett, the educational coordinator for the Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program.

Bias has lectured to many organizations, and has appeared on numerous shows, including the Sally Jesse Rafael show, CBS Morning News, and the 700 Club.

Red Ribbon Week was started in 1985 after the murder of Enrique Camarena, a federal drug enforcement administration agent, while he was investigating Mexican drug traffickers.

Fort Benning won't officially celebrate Red Ribbon Week until Oct. 22-26, but Burnett said one week isn't enough to spread the message. He said his office has designated the entire month as a drug-free campaign month.

"We need more than a week to get our message across. Kids need to learn to just say 'no' to drugs. That is the first step," he said.

In addition to Dr. Bias speaking, two performers will sing. Celeste Lee, who works in DOT, will sing the National Anthem and Can You Reach My Friend?, and Scott Bush will sing God Bless America.

Attending the ceremony counts for the yearly requirements for a Drug Free Workplace or other training.

Burnett hopes that many will attend the ceremony, which is open to anyone in the Fort Benning community.

"The Fort Benning community needs to establish a strong hold in the community to keep drugs out," he said.

Post BOSS program wins best in the Army

Video blows competition away

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

The post's BOSS program, or Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, brought home a first-time win from the annual Armywide BOSS conference Sept. 9 to 11 in Leesburg, VA.

Fort Benning's BOSS program won first place for Best Installation BOSS Program and second place for the Best BOSS event.

"We blew away the competition because of the events highlighted in our video presentations," said Sgt. Rob Brown, current BOSS president.

Three hundred representatives from each installation including post sergeants major, BOSS presidents and vice-presidents and MWR advisors attended the conference.

The competition is judged in two categories — best event and best installation — and allows each post's representatives to showcase their best materials by display board and videotape.

Judges view each post's displays and make their decisions based on presented material.

The competitions have only been added to the agenda over the past few years, said Tandi Cain-Morris, MWR advisor.

"The conference is not just about competition," Cain-Morris said. "It is held so representatives from each installation can come together and get up to date on training, regulations and policies, and to share ideas to better the BOSS program as a whole."

"We used to have to showcase what we had done throughout the year and that led to the competition," Cain-Morris said.

"One of our biggest competitors this year was Fort Lewis, Wash., and they ended up our best friends by the end of the conference. We brought back so many great ideas from them.

"The award is a nice feather in the cap, but the bottom line is we are here to learn from each other."

Quality of life is usually the main topic of discussion at the conferences, which often leads to discussion of barracks and the individual soldier's rights, Cain-Morris said.

This year's discussion led to the size of barracks and whether spot inspections should be allowed.

"A great deal of progress has been made in the quality of barracks in a very short amount of time," Cain-Morris said. "I am very proud of what has been accomplished."

Participants spent a couple of days locked down in the wake of the attacks on the nation, due to the large number of military participants and the location of the conference, which was held outside of Washington, D.C.

"Now more than ever do we need to ensure the program is being implemented at all military units on post," Cain-Morris said.

"We have family support groups to support our family members. We need a source of support for our single soldiers as well."

Future plans for BOSS include a return to the Muscular Dystrophy Association camp in Atlanta, a summer trip to Destin for deep-sea fishing and the opening of a Web site single soldiers can go to with questions and concerns.

BOSS meetings are 2 p.m. the fourth Wednesday of each month in the second floor conference room of Building 2783. The next meeting is Oct. 24.

Army Knowledge Online ready for users

Army favors use of AKO e-mail

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

The Army hopes that by the end of October, all of its 4 million soldiers and civilians will have registered e-mail accounts with Army Knowledge Online.

"This is not a negotiable thing. Every man or woman who services the Army should have an account," said Paul Yates, director of Information Management.

So far, approximately 545,000 people have registered, Maj. C.J. Wallington, a team leader for AKO, said.

AKO is a Web portal geared toward the military and it contains a wealth of military information. Its e-mail account is like a Hotmail or Yahoo account.

"This one's unique because it deals with the military. The goal of the Army is to be Web centric," Yates said.

"It's efficient," Wallington said. "Our senior leadership sees the efficiency and economy of scale we can achieve. There's some value to this. We're enabling people to send organized information that's easily accessible and convenient."

The Chief of Staff of the Army Gen. Eric Shinseki and Secretary of the Army Thomas White issued a directive earlier this year for everyone to have an account by Oct. 1, but Wallington said that there is no penalty for registering now.

"There's no punishment for registering now. They should continue to enroll. But if you simply ignore the directive, then you could be in trouble. It's up to your local change of command," he said.

AKO saves the government money by decreasing the amount of paper, postage, and work force involved to do certain tasks.

People who have not registered can go to www.us.army.mil.

Once there, they will be asked to input certain data including name, date of birth, and social security number. The process takes about five minutes.

Wallington said some may feel nervous about typing in their social security numbers, but he said the portal is secure.

"Everything is confidential. It's more secure than the average network. A common thief or hacker couldn't get into the portal," said Wallington.

The portal is also virus protected with every piece of e-mail screened.

Technical support is another feature on the portal. Users can call, e-mail or fax questions to the technical staff if they have any questions or comments.

Yates said he understands not everyone on post has access to a computer.

For those in that situation, they need to speak with their supervisor about setting up an account or go to one of the libraries on post.

Units can go to the Operations and Systems Division Office and register there.

People can also sign up from their home computers.

Once users log on, they have access to their e-mail, Early Bird News Service, and more. Users can forward their e-mail from other accounts to their AKO account, and they can keep their AKO e-mail address for as long as they are with the Army and even when they retire.

On Oct.15, a new version of AKO will be launched.

"The scope and magnitude of this is tremendous," said Yates. "I personally like it. I use it as my homepage."

In the future, Wallace said the AKO portal will let soldiers and civilians check their leave and earning statements, W-2 forms, submit travel vouchers, and download forms to change assignments.

"AKO has enormous potential. It decreases the amount of mundane things for a soldier to do. And why wouldn't you do it? It's free."

Army educates junior soldiers on insurance

Readiness training teaches financial savvy

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

The Department of the Army is placing a renewed emphasis on programs that teach junior soldiers how to recognize deceptive insurance practices.

Fort Benning's Financial Readiness Program instructs new soldiers during their mandatory eight-hour personal financial readiness training.

Before arriving here, enlistees have taken two hours of personal financial readiness training as part of the basic and advanced individual training curriculum.

The training includes information on Service-member's Group Life Insurance and commercial life insurance.

The Financial Readiness Program builds on that foundation and offers general information regarding insurance, such as what it is, what it does, the types of insurance and how to shop for it.

Education will protect soldiers from bad business, said Ann Pratcher, program manager.

She said soldiers should:

- Determine their insurance needs before they purchase.
- Not be frightened or pressured into buying insurance.
- Always seek information before you buy — on the insurance, the company and the agent.

Some sources of information are the state's insurance commissioner, insurance company rating services such as A.M. Best, Moody, and Standard and Poor.

- Comparison shop for coverage per $1,000, and ask about commissions and fees.
- Not buy policies that do not pay if they die as a result of an act of war.

Bernard Pfeiffer, a lawyer at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, said the most important things to tell potential purchasers are:

- Think about any decision involving purchasing insurance,
- Ask lots of questions,
- Don't sign anything you haven't read and don't understand,
- If you don't understand it — get someone to assist you — Legal Assistance Division, OSJA,
- If someone is doing something they don't think is right on Fort Benning — let the chain of command know.

Another step community members can take is to find out if the company they are dealing with is authorized to conduct business on the installation.

This can be done by calling the Commercial Solicitation Office at 545-3344, said Kaye Kyle, commercial solicitation officer, Directorate of Community Activities.

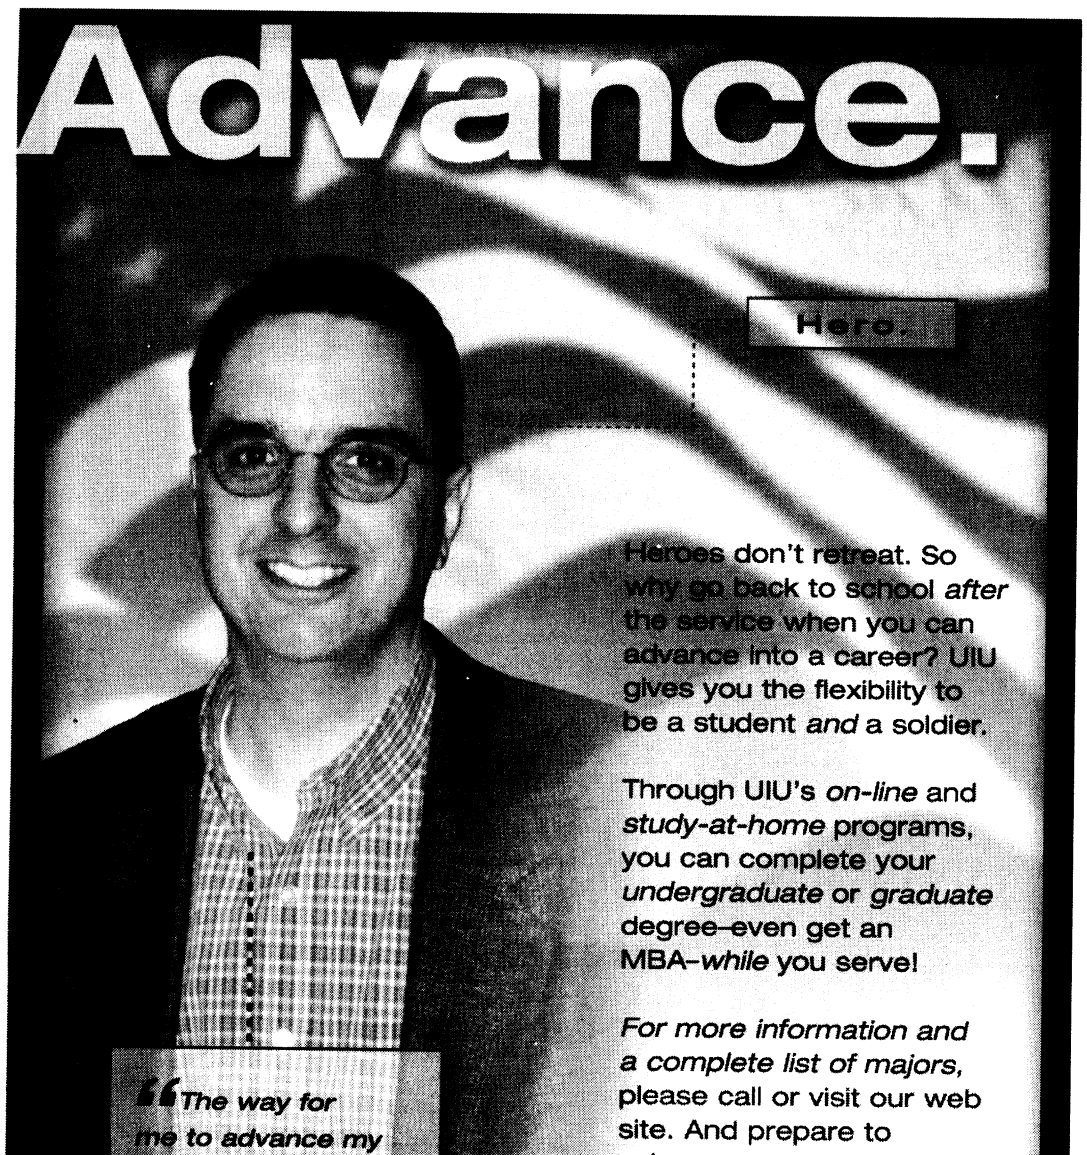
"Bad business practices and unethical agents are everywhere not just the DoD," Kyle said.

She gave the following instructions to help minimize scams:

- Solicitation is by appointment only; no one should just drop by or go knocking on doors,
- The agent must be personally invited to a residence, billets or barracks,
- It is important to note that commercial agents, with or without official permits, are not allowed to use the billets area or dayrooms for solicitation.

A prescribed area should be set aside at battalion level or higher headquarters for the purpose of soliciting soldiers, by appointment only, from 6 to 10:30 p.m. Monday to Friday,

- Solicitation of mass, group or "captive" audiences, such as scheduling a platoon in the dayroom for a sales pitch, is prohibited by Army Regulation 210-7,
- Solicitation in training units, such as the 75th Ranger Regiment, Ranger Training Brigade, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade, or Basic Combat Training Brigade, is prohibited.



"Violators stand a good chance of having their solicitation permits suspended or revoked for up to two years and on occasions, permanently," Kyle said.

For more information about deceptive insurance practices or financial readiness training, call the Financial Readiness Program at 545-5485.

A CLOSER LOOK

Soldiers should:

HIDDEN HISTORY

Retiree helps fill gaps of post's history

Memories paint picture of 'old' Fort Benning

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Editor's note: This is the fifth article in a five-part series.

Retired Lt. Col. John McLaurin has an avid interest in the history of Fort Benning, and why shouldn't he? The 82-year-old Columbus resident may very well be the oldest living retiree from the home of the infantry.

After reading the Aug. 31 edition of The Bayonet, McLaurin made a list and called the newspaper to put his memories to work.

McLaurin enlisted in the Army in May 1943 at age 24. He was initially assigned to Fort Benning in October 1945 and stayed with the Engineer Combat Battalion until July 1948. It was during this time he and his wife, Mildred, attended the very first Easter sunrise service at the Campbell-King Horseshow Bowl.

McLaurin and his wife once lived in the buildings now known as Soldiers' Plaza. The buildings were converted in 1946 from troop barracks to senior NCO quarters, consisting of four apartments, two on each level.

"The living conditions were a bit crude, nevertheless, they were a place to live," McLaurin said.

When McLaurin needed some leisure time, he would fish at what were once "experimental ponds," located somewhere along Dixie Road between Main Post and Infantry Hall.

"I have no idea what they were used for, but there were fish in them, so I fished," McLaurin said.

Jeff's Hole, located on Osswichee Creek southeast of Hook Range, appeared to be a place of leisure on Fort Benning at the time, but it was not open to the general public.

"Swimming pools were scarce on post at the time, so we had to use swimming holes," McLaurin said.

Much to McLaurin's dismay, Jeff's hole was reserved for the hospital nurses only, so the soldiers had to look elsewhere.

After receiving a direct commission from the Department of the Army during his tour in Germany, McLaurin returned to Fort Benning. In 1952, he was a lieutenant assigned to the 30th Infantry Regiment. It was during that time McLaurin helped integrate the last all black infantry battalion, the 3rd Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment.

The battalion was integrated in 1953, and he assisted in the transfer of the soldiers into other units in the Army.

McLaurin also frequented Gen. George S. Patton's old house, which was used as a branch of the officers' club after Patton left post in 1941. The general lived there while commanding the 4th Army Division.

The log house, once located near the Sand Hill area, was supposed to have been built for Patton by his engineers, McLaurin said. Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum, heard a similar story.

"It's been rumored that he built the house out of his own money," Hanner said. "He was known to be a wealthy man, and he never took any money for his service to the country."

Instead Patton sent all of his military pay to the Army Relief Agency.

When it comes to gathering information about what the post used to be like, there may be no better source than those who have lived here. McLaurin retired from Fort Benning in August 1968 after 25 years of service in the Army, and continues to live in the Columbus area.

McLaurin declined to have his photo in the paper, but was curious to know how many other retirees there are in the area who remember the post as it once was.

"I am not a hero like some of my contemporaries," McLaurin said. "I am a plain, ordinary soldier who just happened to live longer than the rest of them."

Did you know ...

Maj. John S. D. Eisenhower, son of then president Dwight D. Eisenhower, commanded a battalion at the 30th Infantry Regiment.

The large U-shaped buildings known as the Cuartels, which once housed the 24th Infantry Regiment, appeared in the 1941 edition of Ripley's Believe it or Not for the world's longest continuous porch.

The post finance building, built in 1939, originally served as the U.S. Army Cooks and Bakers School.

The area that is now Lawson Army Airfield used to be the town of Cusseta, and served as the Lower Creek Indians' capital until the signing of the Federal Indian Removal Act of 1830. The Indians gathered at Fort Mitchell, Ala., where they traveled to their new home in Oklahoma on the trail now known as the "Trail of Tears."

Quarters at 206 Austin Loop served as the home to Dwight and Mamie Eisenhower when he was stationed here as a major in the 24th Infantry Regiment from 1926-1927.

The kitchen at 500 First Division Road is where Major Harold G. Sydenham came up with the idea for the M-1 helmet. The helmet was adopted June 9, 1941, and was used for the last time by U.S. rangers in Grenada.

Quarters at 601 Baltzell Ave. were occupied by Gen. and Mrs. George S. Patton Jr., when he was stationed here as the commanding general of the 2nd Armored Division.

The original Doughboy Statue still stands in Berlin, Germany, where it was created after World War II by German sculptor, Ernst Kunst. Maj. Gen. Herbert Powell, post commander, commissioned a German firm to reproduce the original and deliver it to the U.S. The six stones the statue stands on are from the Remagen Bridge over the Rhine River.

targets" and hit them as necessary. He scoffed at reports that aircrews were running out of targets. "We're not running out of targets, Afghanistan is," he said. He said the United States and its partners would continue to exercise the utmost care in selecting targets to minimize civilian casualties.

"If you try to quantify what we're doing today in terms of previous conventional wars, you're making a huge mistake," Myers said. "That is 'old think' and that will not help you to analyze what we're doing."

Rumsfeld agreed, saying the war against terrorism is a "notably different situation" from those in the past. Before, the tonnage of bombs dropped was a measure of success. Other measurements having nothing to do with the Defense Department can be just as important.

"The Department of Justice and associated agencies in other countries have arrested literally hundreds of people and are interrogating them," Myers said.

"The Department of Treasury with cooperation from nations from around the globe have frozen a great many bank accounts and frozen millions of dollars of assets that are connected to terrorist organizations."

He said State Department negotiations with friends and allies continue the diplomatic pressure on nations. This has caused some nations to break off relations with the Taliban, while others "are looking to themselves and their circumstance and the extent to which they might be seen to creating an environment hospitable to terrorists and making an adjustment to the way they behave."

He also said intelligence communities worldwide are receiving, processing and sharing information.

"That is not going up on a scoreboard on Wrigley Field showing what's happening," Rumsfeld said. "But it is there, and it is growing, and it is adding pressure every single day. And what has been done ... by the Department of Defense is contributing to that. It's the aggregation of that, sustained over time, that will prove to be successful."

Reserves: Watch post

"This is an important job. We'll all adapt to being down here and getting the mission done. We're here to do a job, and I think we'll be successful," Moffett said.

All of the soldiers interviewed said that their employers were supportive of them having to leave their civilian job for a year to serve their country.

"My employer asked me to let them know if there was anything that they could do for me or my family," said Lambert. Lambert works for Triton Boat Company, a manufacturer of fishing boats, in Nashville,Tenn.

A local reservist also said that she didn't mind serving her country. Staff Sgt. Dawnika Thomas already lives in Columbus, so she doesn't have to make any major adjustments like her counterparts. The mother of two young daughters, she is a case manager for Southwest Key, an agency contracted by the Department of Justice.

"I'm glad I'm here because this is what we train to do. I'm glad that I can also help the others who aren't from around here adjust," she said.

Thomas added she hopes people realize reservists are highly trained and motivated to accomplish a mission, just like their active-duty counterparts.

"We're as dedicated as active-duty soldiers. Everyone just asked when and were to report.

"We're one Army, one team, one fight," Thomas said.

'F Troop' graduates first cycle since Vietnam

'Fluke' serves as prototype for future

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

F Troop, trailer-park trash, Bad News Bears — they've been called it all.

But the 185 graduates of the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment's F Company had the last laugh Oct. 5 at the Infantry Training Brigade's graduation ceremony on Sand Hill.

Dubbed a "one-shot wonder" by battalion cadre, F Company was activated for one cycle to alleviate the summer-surge congestion.

But by the end of the cycle, F Company secured a permanent position with the battalion, making it the only battalion in the U.S. Army to boast six companies, and served as a prototype for future F Companies in other battalions.

The company was activated June 19, the first F Company since Vietnam. The cadre began the training cycle July 5 with the understanding their positions, and the company itself, would likely be short-lived.

They were relegated to a handful of modular units — trailers — behind Conway Barracks, for training and housing.

Bridgett Siter

Acting 1st Sgt. Warren Youngblood leads F Company graduates' final pass and review on Kannel Field.

"They called us a fluke — the first Foxtrot since Vietnam and probably the last," said acting first sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Warren Youngblood. "We were supposed to be a short-term solution, so from the get-go we had something to prove."

Capt. Brian Reidy, company commander, said the company's new status is the result of an increase in the number of recruits being trained at Fort Benning and the successful coalition of cadre.

"We started this company from scratch, with three weeks to pull it all together from the day we were activated till we started training," he said. "By far the biggest challenge we faced was creating an atmosphere where these drill sergeants could feel like they were part of a team, when they really didn't know if they had a future with Foxtrot.

"Their professionalism and camaraderie — their ability to pull together as a group — determined the success of this company," Reidy said. "They refused to accept that they were here only temporarily, and as a result, they've made a place for themselves for a long time to come."

F Company cadre were drafted from the battalion's first five companies, much like "an expansion draft with the NFL," said Lt. Col. Don Sando, battalion commander. By picking and choosing, "we were able to balance experience and talents in all six companies," Sando said.

But F Company inherited something the others didn't have — the cadres' determination to overcome what Youngblood called the "stepchild" stigma.

"From the start we said, 'They can call us what they want — we will be the best,'" said Youngblood, the former senior drill sergeant of A Company. "And we told our trainees, 'Listen up. You are the first Foxtrot since Vietnam, the first one ever on Fort Benning,' and they loved it. It set them apart from everyone else and gave them the incentive to try a little harder."

The last F Company, 2nd Bn, 58th Inf. Reg., was a long-range surveillance unit for the 101st Airborne Division in Vietnam, reclassed as Company L, 75th Ranger Regiment in 1969.

Sando said the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, will activate an F Company in November.

Basic trainees guard teeth with dental protection

Mouthguards cost 32 cents, save thousands

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet Staff

Trainees at Fort Benning can give a sigh of relief knowing their teeth and smiles will be protected during strenuous training activities, thanks to their new mouthguards.

"Your teeth are one of your most important assets. Not only does it (the mouthguard) protect a trainee from an impact injury, but it also keeps the cost of dental care down," said Spc. Shawndelin Hall, acting NCOIC of the 30th Adjunct General dental section.

The mouthguards cost the government 32 cents each, quite a savings compared to the $1,500 it costs for a root canal and crown if a soldier's tooth is split or knocked out.

Not only will the mouthguards decrease dental injuries, but they'll also reduce head injuries. For example, if a trainee gets hit in the jaw while wearing a mouthguard, the energy from the hit will be spread over a wide area, not just to the base of the skull.

The mouthguards were given out two weeks ago. As of last week, about 800 had been distributed. Made out of thermoplastic, the mouthguards are bright yellow so that they stand out and make it less likely for trainees to lose. But if soldiers lose them, they'll get another, said Col. Robert Lutka, commander of the Fort Benning U.S. Army Dental Activity.

The dental device will be worn during bayonet training, pugil stick training, and the confidence course.

As a dentist for 19 years, Lutka has seen a lot of soldiers with dental injuries due to not wearing a mouthguard. He's seen soldiers with split or chipped teeth or get some of their teeth knocked out.

"It doesn't take much to cause damage," he said.

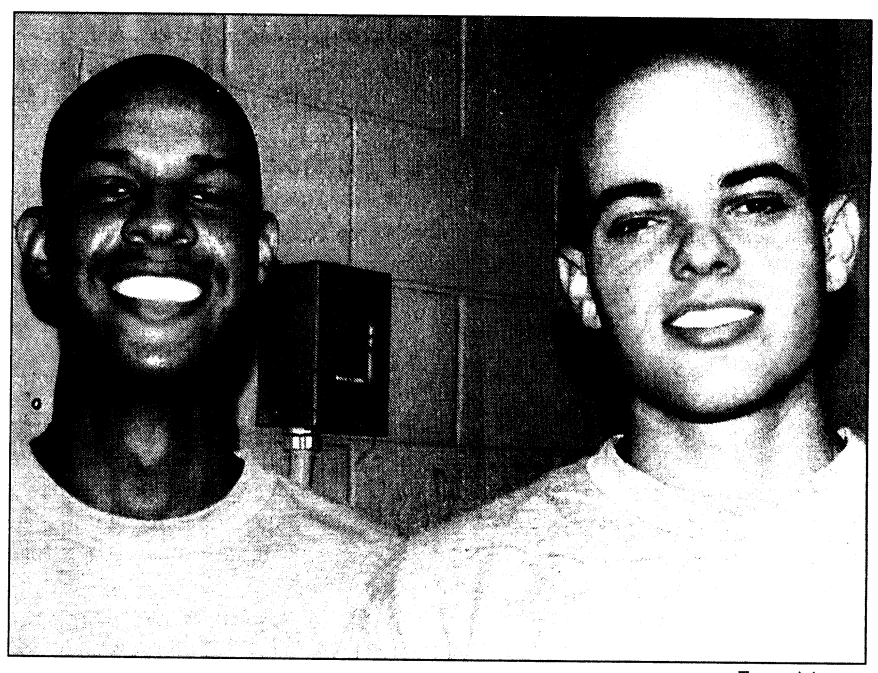
Initially the mouthguards were for soldiers in the Infantry Training Brigade, but Lutka pushed to expand the program for soldiers in the Basic Combat Training Brigade.

He hopes to include those attending Basic Officer Leaders Course.

Lutka is thrilled that the mouthguards have been implemented. "I'm a huge advocate for this program. As I came on board, I saw it as a deficit that needed to be addressed immediately," he said.

Fort Benning is one of three training sites where trainees are issued mouthguards. Fort Sill and Fort Leonard Wood are also participating.

Lutka said that approximately 30,000 trainees come through Fort Benning each year, and DENTAC already has 25,000 mouthguards waiting for them.



The U.S. Army Dental Command and U.S. Center for Health Promotion and Preventative Medicine paid for the mouthguards. Lutka said that each training site would save more than $200,000 in dental cost per year using them.

The mouthguards are issued to trainees while they are in-processing. They are placed in hot water for about 30 seconds then dipped in cool water for a couple of seconds.

Soldiers then put them in their mouths for about 30 to 45 seconds and bite down hard to create a mold of their teeth.

Once they take the mouthguard out, it is rinsed in cool water and put in a Ziploc bag for the trainee to keep.

The mouthguards should last for a couple of years and require low maintenance. All soldiers need to do is wash their mouthguards and put them in a dry place such as a plastic bag.

Tonya Johnson

Two in-processing soldiers from 30th AG Reception Battalion, Pvt. Troy Broadway (left), from San Bernadino, Calif., and Pvt. Ryan Bond from San Diego, Calif., show off their new protective mouthguards.

DENTAC fits soldiers for the mouthguards everyday. On average, DENTAC may process about 200 of them in a day.

It is too early to tell, but Cathy Hatfield, a community health dental hygienist, thinks that the mouthguards will decrease the type of dental injuries suffered in basic training.

"In the dental field, we promote the preservation of teeth and gums. We're now giving the trainees the protective gear they didn't have before," she said.

BRM: Teaches trainees basics of being infantrymen

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy

Pvt. Royce Masek, D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, sets a dime on the end of his partner's weapon to practice the dime and washer drill. The drill is part of basic rifle marksmanship training for the future infantrymen.

Kiyohiro said. "It took me 61 shots to group and 39 to zero.

"I am going to try to shoot expert," Kiyohiro said. "I want to go to sniper school and then work for the SWAT team in L.A. But right now, I just want to qualify."

After extensive classroom training, the drill sergeants moved on to using hands-on techniques to continue the learning process.

One of the techniques is the dime and washer drill. The purpose of the drill is to learn how to maintain a steady aiming point while squeezing the trigger.

The "shooter" carefully practices the four fundamentals (breathe, relax, aim, squeeze), with a dime balanced on the end of an unloaded M-16 A2. A washer is in place to keep the shooter from looking at the dime while squeezing the trigger. The "shooter's" partner replaces the dime when it falls or when the weapon needs to be charged.

If the dime stays on the muzzle after the trigger has been squeezed, the "shooter" was successful. If it falls, well then, he was not.

The company has already done grouping and zeroing using live fire.

Grouping is hitting the target in the same area, not necessarily the center of the target. Zeroing is mechanically adjusting the sights of the weapon so the group of shots does hit the center of the target.

The trainees still need to work on hitting moving targets, said drill sergeant for first platoon, Sgt. 1st Class Samuel Murphy.

Wednesday's transition firing exercise was the privates' first exposure to pop-up targets.

Another challenge to qualifying often comes from weapons malfunctions.

"The main problem the privates have is they'll just sit there and look at their weapon, raise their hand and say 'Drill Sergeant, my gun won't shoot,'" Murphy said.

The trainees will prove a lot on Saturday, when they qualify, but they still have a lot to learn.

A bark from a drill sergeant accompanied the distinctive clatter of an M-16 A2 hitting the grass.

"Drop with it!" said Sgt. 1st Class Ron Locklear.

A CLOSER LOOK

A quick study of linguistics reveals how the title "infantry" came about.

The actual root of the word was the adjective "infans," which meant "incapable of speech." In the Middle Ages, however, the sense of "infant" was expanded to include any young person. In Italy, a young soldier who followed knights into battle on foot was called an "infante" and collectively, as the "infanteria." It was this Italian "infanteria" which later became our English "infantry."

Tournament tests range of skills

Sniper school NCOs prevail at games

Capt. Mark Trott

Capt. Mark Trott

Staff Sgt. Justin Shaffer (right), takes aim, Staff Sgt. Thomas Dow provides support.

The image of the sniper as a lone gunman roaming the battlefield is a figment of Hollywood's imagination.

In reality, the U.S. Army sniper is one of the most versatile, intelligent and skilled assets a commander has at his tactical disposal, said 1st Sgt. Lewis Worrell, C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

A sniper is not only an expert long-range marksman, but is also well trained in stalking, camouflage and concealment and observation techniques.

All of these skills and more were tested in the Canadian Army's Fifth annual International Sniper Concentration held Sept. 7-14 in Gagetown, New Brunswick, Canada.

This year featured 36 competitors and when the dust settled, the U.S. Army Sniper School team of Staff Sgt. Justin Shaffer and Staff Sgt. Thomas Dow placed third overall and first place among American teams.

Snipers from the Canadian army took first and second.

In addition, Shaffer placed second overall in rifle shooting, and first overall in pistol shooting. The team was escorted by the Fort Benning Canadian liaison Maj. Gary Yuzichuk. Sniper school class 06-01 was in session when Shaffer and Dow left Fort Benning and traveled to Canada with little or no practice time.

In fact, they never had the chance to practice together as a sniper team.

Their standing on the final day of the competition is a testament to their professional excellence and commitment to the art and science of sniping, Worrell said.

The Canadian Master Sniper Cell originally started the Sniper Concentrations five years ago in order to evaluate sniper sustainment programs throughout their armed forces, as well provide a forum for the exchange of sniper training programs and equipment.

This year's concentration was built around a much tougher course of fire than last year's.

Events such as day and night urban shooting were added, as well as more engagements for the spotter's weapon.

Loose lips sink ships

Army leadership has recently expressed their concern about the apparent inattention to basic operational security procedures.

OPSEC is the responsibility of every soldier, civilian and contractor. Everyone should practice continuous OPSEC.

Information about unit strengths, operational capabilities and deployment intentions, in the wrong hands, can severely undermine unit safety and mission accomplishment.

All press inquiries should be directed to the installation Public Affairs officer.

For more information, call the PAO at 545-2237.

The Pentagon Victims Fund

Anyone wanting to make contributions for the victims of the Sept. 11 attack on the Pentagon, can call Al Deane, Army Emergency Relief Officer, Army Community Service, Directorate of Community Activities, at 545-4043 or 545-6969.

Tuition refund for activated soldiers

Refunds of tuition fees and the prorated refund of the unused portion of meal and residence hall fees will be made to Alabama citizen-soldiers in National Guard and Reserve units who have been activated in response to the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11 and who have personally incurred those expenses.

Through March 31, refunds of in-state tuition and fees will be made to active-duty military personnel who are enrolled at Alabama College System institutions and who are deployed in response to the terrorist attack and who have personally incurred those expenses.

For more information, call (334) 242-2900.

Scholarship fund

Anyone wanting to make scholarship donations to Master Sgt. Lloyd McDonald Jr.'s daughter, Rolanda V. McDonald, can do so in her name at any Region's Bank branch office.

For more information, contact the Region's Bank closest to you.

Office closes

The Trial Defense Service will be closed Oct. 15-19 because of the roof replacement and the TDS annual conference.

The office will be open for normal business Oct. 22.

In the event of an emergency, call the NCOIC at 545-2175.

Tricare for Life

Martin Army Community Hospital will conduct a town hall meeting and briefing for beneficiaries 64 and older 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. Oct. 17 in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall. Questions will be answered.

Tots teach trends

Students display milestones

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Earnestine Ezekiel's kindergarten class at Dexter Elementary School has been getting up-to-date on some of the latest trends in teaching, and this time the children get to be the teachers.

Students welcomed parents to their classroom celebration Oct. 5 to present a portfolio of their work from the last six weeks. Portfolios decorated in each child's finger painting contained recent accomplishments including a math folder, science journal, wordbook and writing folder.

"This is a purple sun and a purple cloud, Daddy," explained Olivia Sullivan to her father, Staff Sgt. Mark Sullivan, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

The celebrations are held in the classroom every six weeks, marking the end of each unit in Literacy Place, the language arts program taught at Dexter.

In preparation for their parents' visit, the students donned chef's hats and jackets and baked a cake to share during the student-led conferences.

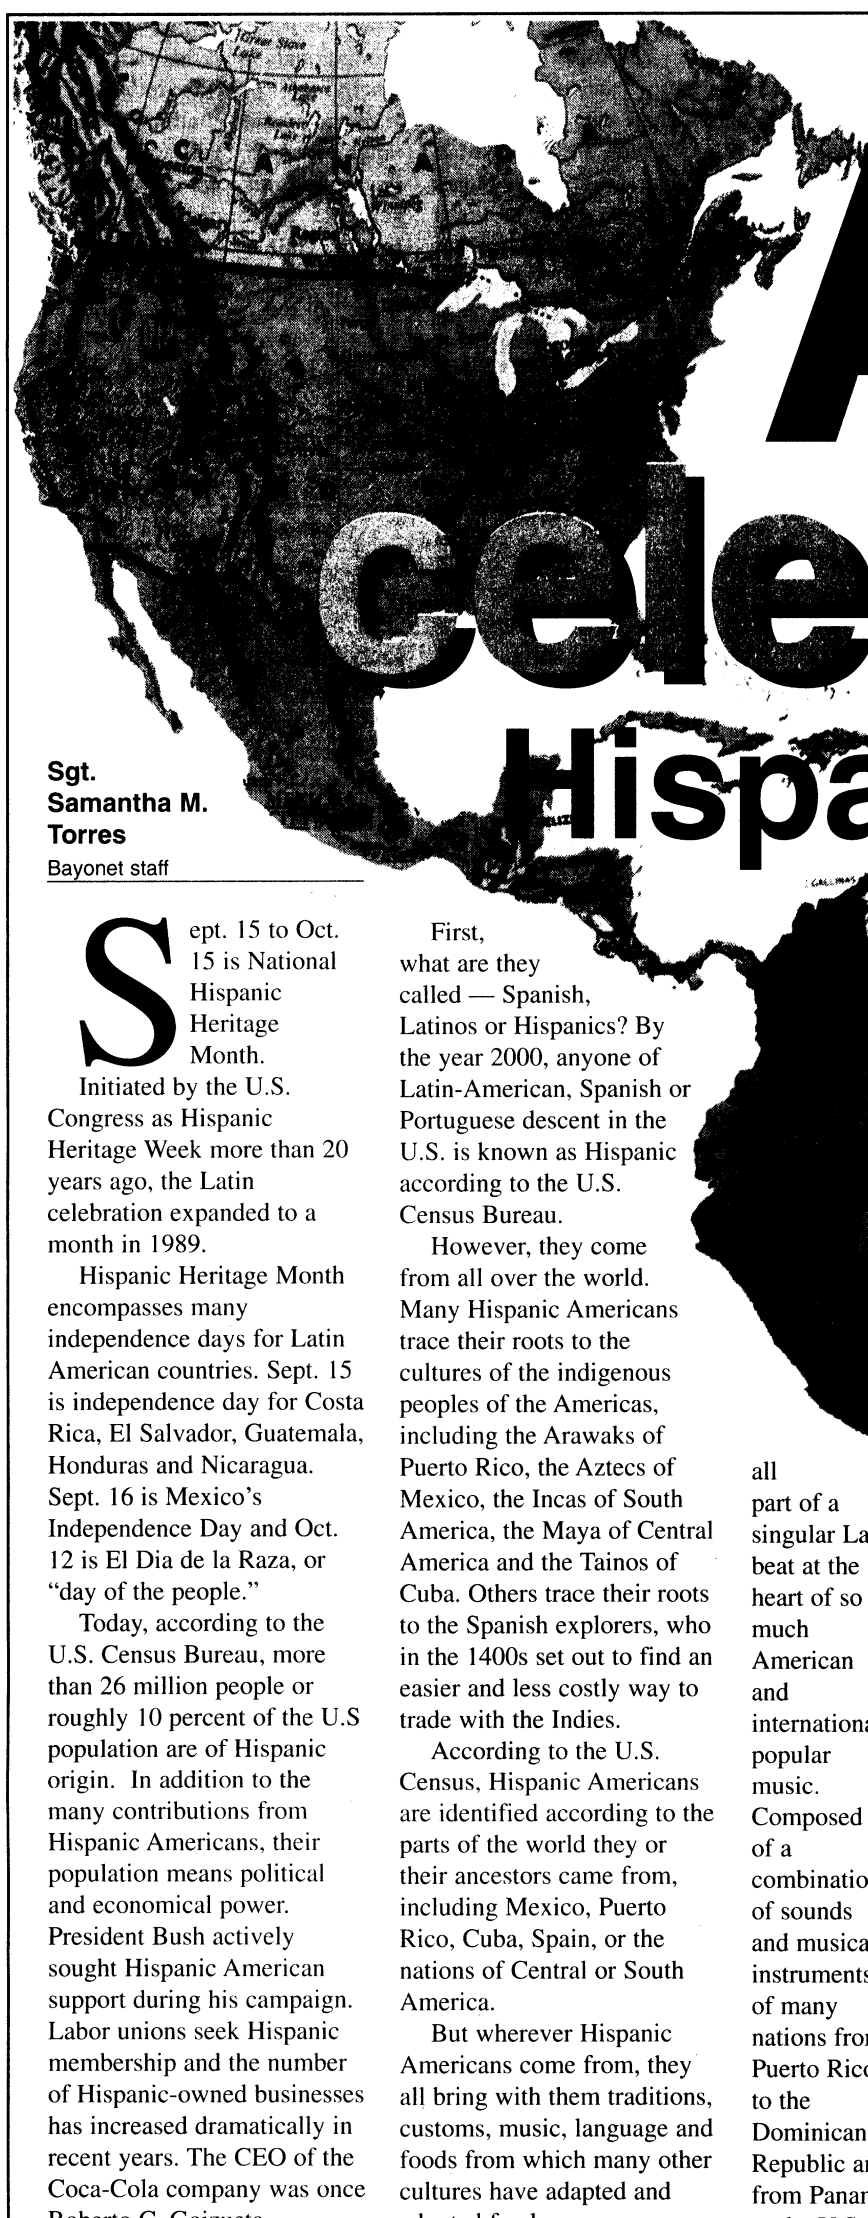
But being inventive in the classroom is nothing new to Ezekiel, who was recently named Fort Benning Teacher of the Year.

"The celebration is the high point for the students and the parents," Ezekiel said.

"The students started working on their portfolios the first week of school and created all of the folders and journals that go inside. This way the parents can see where their child was at the beginning of the six-week unit, and how far they have come."

Susanna Vigil-Shuck said she and her husband, Capt. Jeffrey Shuck, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, were excited when they received the invitation to the conference.

"This is a great experience for our family, because Hannah gets to show us all she's done," Vigil-Shuck said. "The educational experience here is what keeps us living on post."



Gail Wilson, director of staff development for Fort Benning Schools, said the student-led conference is a new trend in education that develops leadership skills by letting students take charge of the situation.

"Having to show the parents their work makes the kids become accountable for the work they have done," Wilson said. "It is more reinforcing to have the children explain how far they've come and how much they've learned."

"This gives the children the responsibility of explaining what they do in the classroom to their parents," said Vicki Rogers, Dexter's principal.

Ezekiel was especially excited about the turnout of the parents — 100 percent.

"We've never had less than 80 percent of our parents participate," Ezekiel said. "This works well for our class and is beneficial to the students. I wouldn't stop doing it for anything."

A nation celebrates Hispanic heritage

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Graphic by Samantha Mallory

Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 is National Hispanic Heritage Month.

Initiated by the U.S. Congress as Hispanic Heritage Week more than 20 years ago, the Latin celebration expanded to a month in 1989.

Hispanic Heritage Month encompasses many independence days for Latin American countries. Sept. 15 is independence day for Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua. Sept. 16 is Mexico's Independence Day and Oct. 12 is El Dia de la Raza, or "day of the people."

Today, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, more than 26 million people or roughly 10 percent of the U.S population are of Hispanic origin. In addition to the many contributions from Hispanic Americans, their population means political and economical power. President Bush actively sought Hispanic American support during his campaign. Labor unions seek Hispanic membership and the number of Hispanic-owned businesses has increased dramatically in recent years. The CEO of the Coca-Cola company was once Roberto C. Goizueta.

Hispanic Heritage Month offers an opportunity to learn about this country's ethnic diversity. It also offers a chance to integrate the cultures and develop an ethnic literacy fostering pride and building a respect and appreciation for the uniqueness of others.

Hispanic Heritage Month presents a piñata full of the contributions of people of Hispanic heritage to the U.S.

First, what are they called — Spanish, Latinos or Hispanics? By the year 2000, anyone of Latin-American, Spanish or Portuguese descent in the U.S. is known as Hispanic according to the U.S. Census Bureau.

However, they come from all over the world. Many Hispanic Americans trace their roots to the cultures of the indigenous peoples of the Americas, including the Arawaks of Puerto Rico, the Aztecs of Mexico, the Incas of South America, the Maya of Central America and the Tainos of Cuba. Others trace their roots to the Spanish explorers, who in the 1400s set out to find an easier and less costly way to trade with the Indies.

According to the U.S. Census, Hispanic Americans are identified according to the parts of the world they or their ancestors came from, including Mexico, Puerto Rico, Cuba, Spain, or the nations of Central or South America.

But wherever Hispanic Americans come from, they all bring with them traditions, customs, music, language and foods from which many other cultures have adapted and adopted freely.

Many U.S. names are derived from the Spanish language such as Arizona, Colorado, Florida and Montana. Some cities include El Paso and San Antonio Texas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Jose and San Diego California, Pueblo, Colorado and Santa Fe, New Mexico.

Latin rhythms, like mambo, salsa, conga, merengue and the cha-cha are all part of a singular Latin beat at the heart of so much American and international popular music. Composed of a combination of sounds and musical instruments of many nations from Puerto Rico to the Dominican Republic and from Panama to the U.S., the musica is said to have been a gift from Cuba to all people. It's roots are believed to be African, since the tambour, the conga and the bongo drums brought by African slaves are the corizon y alma of the contagious beat. Add the Spanish guitar, accordion, violin, trumpet, saxophone and some maracas, bells and claves to keep the beat, distinctively Spanish Caribbean.

Sikus, quenas, wankaras and charangos are Andean musical instruments. Mariachi comes from the name of the wood used to make the platform on which the performers danced to the music of the village musicians.

From Desi Arnaz to Carlos Santana to Julio Iglesias, millions have cut a rug or fell in love with the Latin beat.

What about the tango? Popular in the 1920s, the tango is a Latin dance derived from the milonga, a sexy Argentinean dance and the habanera, a graceful Cuban dance.

Hispanic Americans have also done well on the silver screen. Big names like Rita Hayworth, Gary Cooper, Raul Julia, Anthony Quinn and Raquel Welch are household names.

The sports arena hosts a large number of athletes and personalities like baseball's Roberto Clemente, Sammy Sosa, Pedro Martinez, boxing's Oscar de la Hoya and golf's Juan "Chi Chi" Rodriquez, Lee Trevino and Nancy Lopez.

Many holidays and significant historical dates are celebrated today by Hispanic Americans: Guadalupe Day, Cinco de Mayo, La Navidad, and La Posadas.

Perhaps one of the biggest mistakes many make is confusing Cinco de Mayo, or May 5, and Mexico's Independence Day which is actually Sept. 16. On May 5, 1862, Mexican forces defeated the invading soldiers of Napoleon in the town of Puebla. In Puerto Rico on Sept. 23 is remembered as El Grito de Lares.

Finally the food — the unique combination of flavors and colors ... aahh.

Traditional rice is anything but. Each nation uses its own blend of spices and cooking techniques. Add beans, tortillas and fajitas and even the pickiest appetite will be tempted.

With so much to celebrate, a month hardly seems long enough to enjoy Hispanic Heritage.

But never fear, Hispanic Americans are willing to celebrate at the drop of a sombrero.

4-H establishes club on post for local youth

Post joins program to foster skills, interests

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet

"I would like to learn how to go horseback riding and to take good photographs, and I don't want to sell any cookies."

Dawn Tounsand
4-H Club member

The 4-H Club has arrived at Fort Benning, giving young people ages 9-19 another way to add to their educational experiences.

The first meeting was held Tuesday at the post's Youth Services center. Students were enrolled in the program, and were given information about upcoming projects.

"The club offers a variety of projects to complete, based on what the students interests are," said Vonsuela Baker, 4-H agent of Columbus.

"I would like to learn how to go horseback riding and to take good photographs, and I don't want to sell any cookies," said 11-year-old Dawn Tounsand. "I want to help people when they need it."

Tounsand seems to have some of the goals of the club already instilled in her.

The 4-H's mission is to assist youth in acquiring knowledge, forming attitudes and developing life skills through "hands-on" learning experiences. These experiences range from agricultural and environmental activities to health and citizenship.

Quintella Thorn, recreation specialist at Youth Services, said students can then compete in their individual project area.

"The projects compliment the students interest and gives them the chance to compete in anything from forestry to fashion shows," Thorn said.

"They have to do community service in their project area to build a portfolio for competition," Baker said.

Members can also compete on 4-H judging teams. Judging teams include clothing, dairy, poultry and many more. All competitions are held on the district, state and national levels.

Although it is a common interest for youth to want to raise an animal, the post does not have the facilities available.

The club will conduct youth-led meetings twice monthly, and members will prepare exhibits of their project. Additional perks include awards, scholarships, and camping trips to one of five camp locations in Georgia.

Baker said the 4-H Club's focus has changed since she was a youth member in Alabama.

"The original focus of the club was primarily on agricultural and home economics," Baker said. "Georgia club members still visit dairy farms and orchards, but we also have projects in computer technology, photography, and public speaking. I began speaking in front of groups in 4-H in the fourth grade, so by the time I got to college, it was not a scary experience."

"This is an organization that focuses on developing leadership skills, and exposing our youth to Georgia's finest resources," Baker said. "We are trying to enhance what the children are good at and build upon those strengths."

Training program offers tuition, job

Agency seeks high school seniors

National Security Agency

It's an opportunity like no other.

It's a chance to bring your talents and your potential to one of the country's premier intelligence agencies. With the Undergraduate Training Program, you will not only learn from exceptional National Security Agency professionals, you can receive college tuition and have a guaranteed job with the NSA after graduation.

The program is open to students, particularly to minorities and the disabled. But only a select few of the nation's finest high school students will be chosen. So begin making your plans for application today.

How the program works:

Undergraduate Training Program participants will attend classes full time at their school, then work during the summer at the NSA in areas that are related to their course of study. If selected as a program participant, you are required to work for the NSA after college graduation for about five years, depending on the length of study.

If you should leave the NSA's employment earlier, you must make arrangements to repay the tuition and book costs. (Please note: eligible students must maintain at least a 3.0 GPA on a 4.0 scale each semester after their freshman year.)

Requirements:

While the eligibility requirements for the program are subject to change from year to year, you may be eligible if:

- you have a minimum SAT score of 1100 or a minimum composite ACT score of 25
- you maintain a high school GPA of 3.0 or higher
- you demonstrate leadership abilities, and
- you are a U.S. citizen.

The benefits and advantages:

- Four years of tuition at the college of your choice
- Reimbursement for books and certain fees
- Housing and travel entitlements during summer employment, if the distance between the NSA and school exceeds 75 miles
- a year-round salary
- a job with the NSA after graduation.

You may be qualified

At the NSA, we will consider any student, particularly any minority or disabled student, who meets the previously stated requirements for eligibility and chooses a full-time major in one of the following areas:

- computer science — Imagine having the chance to work as an NSA student computer scientist in such areas as applications programming, computer security and graphics, as well as the design and implementation of software involving database management systems, real-time systems, networking and distributed processing systems.
- electrical or computer engineering — The challenges and experiences in these areas span a wide spectrum, from pure and applied research, design, development and testing, to project management and systems analysis.
- languages — The NSA depends on linguists to perform an array of key duties like transcribing, analyzing, and reporting on foreign communications. You'll be able to use your language major on a daily basis while contributing to real-world problem solving.

Because our language requirements may change based on a variety of events, we suggest that students who are interested in a language major contact us to verify our special language needs at that particular time.

- mathematics — You will work with talented NSA professionals in a wide range of disciplines, provide technical assistance and conduct long-range research. You will have the opportunity to apply and generate advanced concepts from Galois theory and combinatorics, to probability theory and astrodynamics. Whether your focus is on pure math or creative problem solving, you will find exceptionally challenging with us.
- intelligence analysis — The intelligence analysis career field is one of several multifaceted cryptologic skills used by the NSA. Intelligence analysis involves research and analysis and presentation of the fullest possible signals intelligence picture to help US policy makers, military commanders, and members of the intelligence community make informed decisions. The intelligence analyst works with the most sophisticated tools and information technologies available and applies new techniques to solve analytic problems. Using knowledge of the communications environment and signal trends of targets, the IA assesses intelligence that can help predict the likely course of action of a specified target. The individual assignments and opportunities for the IA are varied and highly specialized, but they all share one important and exciting quality.

How to apply

Program applications are available until Nov. 30. Semifinalists will be named by Feb. 28. Finalists will be named by April 30.

For more information, write the NSA, Attn:: Undergraduate Training Program Office of Recruitment and Hiring Suite 6779, 9800 Savage Road Fort George G. Meade, MD 20755-6779 or call 800- 669-0703.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

Program dispels myths about domestic abuse

Violence everybody's problem

Family Advocacy Program

Some commonly asked questions about domestic violence:

1 Is domestic violence really such a big problem?

In this country, a woman is more likely to be assaulted, injured, raped or killed by a male partner than by any other type of assailant. Domestic violence is believed to be the most common, yet least reported crime in our nation.

An estimated 3 to 4 million American women are beaten each year by their husbands or partners. The U.S. surgeon general has identified domestic violence as a major health problem to women. It results in more injuries that require medical treatment than rape, auto accidents and muggings combined.

Each year, more than 1,000 women — about four per day — are killed by their partners. Domestic violence is indeed a serious national problem that affects not only victims, but the entire community as well.

2 Isn't domestic violence mostly a low-income or minority issue?

Domestic violence occurs among all racial, economic and religious groups. However, low-income battered women are more likely to seek assistance from public agencies, such as shelters and hospital emergency rooms, because they have fewer private resources than middle- and upper-income women. Therefore they are more likely to be counted in official reporting statistics.

3 Aren't husbands and wives equally violent?

In about five percent of reported domestic assaults, the offender is the male victim's wife or female partner.

Women generally resort to physical force in self-defense.

Men who batter deny and minimize their acts of violence. Moreover, males commit more than 80 percent of violent crimes that occur outside the home.

4 Don't most women ask for it?

No woman wants to be emotionally or physically abused by her partner. Staying in the relationship has much more to do with emotional ties, traditional values about marriage and parenthood, fear, money or the lack of it, and religion.

Choosing not to leave an abusive partner does not mean a victim is stupid, weak or naive. It does not mean they are asking for anything, except to have a loving, fulfilling relationship with someone they care about and choose as a partner.

5 If the abuse is so bad, why do women stay in these relationships?

Actually, many women do leave their abusers.

In one study of 205 battered women, more than 50 percent left the relationship.

Moreover, we will never know about the countless number of divorced women who choose not to identify abuse as the reason they ended their marriages.

Battered women do not passively endure physical abuse, but actively seek assistance in ending the violence from a variety of sources, including police, lawyers, health care personnel, family members and clergy. Frequently, it is the failure of these individuals and systems to provide adequate support that traps women in violent relationships.

A study of more than 6,000 battered women in Texas found, on average, the women had contacted five different sources of help prior to leaving the home and becoming residents of battered women's shelters. Certainly, many battered women also suffer in silence. These women endure physical abuse for a variety of reasons:

- A battered woman frequently faces the most physical danger when she attempts to leave. She may be threatened with violence and death or attacked if she tries to flee. She fears for her safety, her children's safety and the safety of those who help her.
- Leaving may not be an option. There may be nowhere to go and little or no resources in the community to help.
- Because of religious, cultural, or socially learned beliefs, a woman may feel that it is her duty to keep the marriage together at all costs.
- Many women want the violence, not the relationship, to end. They may take many steps to try to stop the abuse. Leaving is the last resort.
- Some women will endure physical and emotional abuse to keep the family together. Very often, it is when violence is directed at her children that she will take them and leave. More than half of the children whose mothers are battered also are victims of physical abuse.
- A woman may be financially dependent on her husband.

She will probably face severe economic hardship if she chooses to support herself and her children on her own.

6 Aren't battered women's shelters just band-aids for the problem?

Battered women's shelters are not "band-aid" solutions to domestic violence, but important life-saving responses to the problem, just as ambulances and hospital emergency rooms respond to medical crises.

Shelters are a critical component of the community's efforts to ensure the safety and protection of victims. Making available safe havens for battered women and their children is essential to ensure such protection, particularly for low-income women who may lack the resources to find safety elsewhere. Shelters not only offer women refuge, but other essential supportive services, including legal, economic, housing and medical advocacy; court accompaniment; employment and job training assistance; support groups for residents and nonresidents; and child care and special children's counseling programs.

Beyond performing crisis intervention and providing essential victim services, shelters are an important grassroot effort toward effecting the social change necessary to prevent and end domestic violence.

For example, advocates for battered women, working through shelter programs, have worked to pass important state and federal legislation on domestic violence. In addition, shelters also are focal points for educating the community about critical issues, training of law enforcement, and other professionals who often confront domestic violence in their work, and for establishing and monitoring counseling and education programs for abusers.

Cynthia Maisano
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I'm going to be deployed soon. Do I have to give someone power of attorney while I'm gone?

A: Giving someone a power of attorney is not a requirement. A power of attorney is a legal document giving another person the authority to act for you. It gives that person power to "step in your shoes" and do everything that you can do.

There are two types of powers of attorney — general power of attorney and special power of attorney. Both give the person the authority to act for you and are legally binding. Powers of attorney should only be given to a person you trust and only when absolutely necessary.

A general power of attorney gives the person you choose the right to conduct almost any business transaction that you could do yourself. It allows that person to write checks, pay bills, borrow money and sign contracts in your name. However, in some states, a general power of attorney cannot be used to conduct real estate transactions.

Also, the law does not require a business to accept a power of attorney. But if it does, the courts will enforce the power of attorney against you.

A special power of attorney is limited. You can give a special power of attorney for certain transactions or purposes such as registering or selling your car or shipping household goods. It is better to give a special power of attorney than a general because it limits the actions and conduct of the person you give it to.

Powers of attorney can be given for a period of up to two years. However, you can revoke a power of attorney before its expiration date.

The only truly effective way to revoke it is to retrieve it and destroy it. If this is not possible, you should complete a revocation form — available at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate — and deliver it to the person.

Provide the revocation form to any business where the person may conduct transactions, such as banks or creditors. However, if a particular business is unaware of your revocation and allows the person to enter into a contract on your behalf using the power of attorney, you will still be liable.

If you live in a state that requires a power of attorney to be filed with the court, you should also file your revocation with the court.

Powers of attorney are done on a walk-in basis at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate located in Building 5 on Vibbert Avenue.

feature teacher

Marianne Smith,

a kindergarten teacher at Wilson Elementary School

Personal: Smith is a Georgia native married to retired Lt. Col. Guy Ashton Wilson, a former Fort Benning adjutant general. They have two children, Leigh and Michael, and a granddaughter, 9-year-old Sarah.

Smith has been teaching 28 years, 23 at Wilson. She took time off when her children were young and the family was "on the move."

She enjoys cooking — desserts are her favorite — walking, needlepoint and reading nonfiction. She calls herself "a sucker for children's books."

Education: Smith earned a bachelor's degree from North Georgia College and a master's degree from Columbus State University.

Parenting and teaching the military child: "So much moving around! My daughter attended a different school every year until high school," Smith said. "But we always tried to make it sound like fun, so they'd look forward to it — even when I felt like I'd die if I had to move one more time.

"Now my children tell me they appreciate the experiences and the opportunity they had to live in so many places.

"I see it in the children I teach. They adjust so well, so much better than adults. If we encourage them to look at it as an adventure, they grow from it and learn to be more adaptable as adults."

On teaching: "I guess I was born to be a teacher. It fits wonderfully with having a family, and it helps you keep in touch with what your own children are doing in school," she said.

"I can't think of anything more rewarding or more demanding. Certainly it's not something you do for the money, and it is never easy. It takes a lot of time and effort, but it's worth it."

On how young children are coping with the terrorist tragedy: "There was some discussion in the classroom after it happened, and I'm sure there was some anxiety, but for the most part, my students don't understand," she said.

"I think it's important that we don't tell them more than they need to know. Answer their questions, of course, but keep those answers simple. So many times we think we need to say something profound, when all they really need is reassurance."

Officers help Big Brothers, Big Sisters

2nd Lt. Trey Tindoll
2nd Battalion (OCS), 11th Inf. Regt.

The 5th Platoon, C Company, 2nd Battalion (IOBC), 11th Infantry Regiment, joined Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Columbus Sept. 29. They played games with 35 children at Lake Bottom Park and took them to a pizza party at Stevie B's.

"This was a great opportunity to help less fortunate kids by being a role model and friend," said 2nd Lt. Michael Traugutt. "Seeing the kids smiling and laughing brought a feeling of fulfillment for our platoon's goal to help out the community. The sports and games were a great way to relate and interact with kids."

The officer in charge of the community service event, 2nd Lt. Andrew Wild, said, "I'll confess, at first I was slightly skeptical as to how much mentoring would actually occur. However, after seeing the guys in my platoon interact with the children, I'm convinced they all have promising careers as professional role models if the Army never works out."

The day not only provided the children a chance to grow as people but also a chance for the lieutenants to grow as officers.

"After the outing, I think it would be virtually impossible to participate in a service project that is more rewarding than mentoring underprivileged children," Wild said. "I think the greatest outcome of the whole experience is that we learned volunteering can be fun. I know for certain that Columbus has 35 more civic-minded individuals than it had one month ago."

At the end of the day, the children left happy and the officers left with the feeling of having made a difference.

Leadership reflects respect, dignity

Chaplain (Capt.) Deirdre M. Stokelin
29th Infantry Regiment

reflections

In all I read about today's Army, I hear the core values stressed. You know the ones, "loyalty, duty, respect" and the rest. Often I find these values get lost in the attempt to look good in the eyes of peers and superiors.

For some time I thought I was the only person who recognized this until I read an article in this very paper that stated, "I have seen many officers and NCOs work long and hard to get promoted with the goal of obtaining a leadership position ... When he or she only focuses on driving soldiers, so the mission will be completed and having the unit look good, the hopes of a 'solid house' often crumbles ... We need to treat each other with respect and dignity and honor."

It is obvious that these statements are out of context, but my point is that the facts are evident.

Stokelin

As an officer who was once a NCO, I know what it feels like to be misjudged because of my rank and position. I recognize the importance of being honest with others and myself.

It's not always easy to stand alone on "personal courage" and defend what is right. But I am the one who looks at my reflection in the mirror every morning.

Proverbs 27:19-21 reads: "As in water face reflects face, So a man's heart reveals the man. Hell and Destruction are never full; So the eyes of man are never satisfied. The refining pot is for silver and the furnace for gold, And a man is valued by what others say of him."

What Solomon, in his God-given wisdom, is saying to us, is that our true character is revealed to us in our own conscience, thoughts, affections, intentions and by what others say about us. Men seek praise, and when they receive it, they reveal who they really are. A man, according to Solomon, is a vain fool if he takes glory that should be transmitted to God; but if a man is thankful to God and diligent to do good to others, he will reflect as a wise and good man.

We as "loyal" officers and NCOs have a "duty" to ourselves, our peers, subordinates, the world, and most of all to God, to show "respect" to those we "serve." We should not vainly work to look good seeking honor and promotion. We should "honor" those whom we are here to serve no matter their rank or position. We should reflect "integrity" every day of our lives in all that we do.

In the words of my mentor, "Respect, dignity, and honor starts with listening to those we are around, listening to their thoughts, emotions, ambitions and fears."

Day after day I talk to soldiers who are hurt, confused, frightened and have little hope for life or a future in the military.

Well, I have several questions for all of us leaders who espouse the Army core values.

What are we doing to serve these soldiers? Do we look beyond the fact that they are late to work, failing PT, not paying their bills, abusing their families, picked up for DUIs and hot for drugs?

If these are their issues, then there is almost always a deeper problem.

Did you know that young soldier just found out that his or her mother died?

Were you informed that one of your male or female soldiers was beaten and raped last night by some of his or her peers?

Have you talked with that soldier who is constantly on sick call to know he or her is suffering from depression and is one step from suicide?

The Army values we stand on are not about making oneself look good and elevating oneself to promotion. These values are about service to God and country, service to that "one" broken disregarded soldier that no one cares about.

The waters of the soul reflect the true leader. When we look into the mirror of our souls, what reflections do we see?

May God give us wisdom and may we reflect him as we serve.

Editor's Note: Stokelin, a native of Savannah, Ga., is an ordained National Baptist Church minister.

She graduated from Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary of Pittsburgh, Pa., and served as an enlisted medic from 1984-1989.

chapel notes

Club Beyond — Club Beyond, under the direction of Bruce Mulford, has been working hard to prepare a special place for chapel teens to meet and welcomes others to join in with them. Building 239, the old gas station beside Gowdy Baseball stadium, is being renovated into a teen center and meeting facility. Parents and teens are invited to an Open House at 2 p.m. Oct. 20 to see the facility that will be used by Club Beyond and other chapel youth programs. Come see what God is doing for our teens.

Operation World Series — Fort Benning chaplains are conducting an operation using former and present professional baseball players for several events Oct. 15 - 22.

The ball players participating are: Bryan Hickerson (Giants, Cubs, Rockies), Doug Bochtler (Dodgers,Padres, Expos, Oakland A's, Royals), and Tim Hulett (White Sox, Cardinals, Orioles). These players are part of Unlimited Potential Incorporated, a Christian organization of professional baseball players who minister around the world. They will conduct several baseball clinics, spiritual values classes, prayer breakfasts, work site visits and speaking engagements. Players will be speaking at the 11 a.m. Sunday service at Sightseeing Road Chapel and Kelly Hill Chapel.

For more information, contact your unit chaplain or call Chaplain (Maj.) Tim Bedsole at 545-2169 or 545-3716.

Protestant Women of the Chapel — Every Thursday from 9:30 a.m. to noon at Custer Terrace Chapel, women from across Fort Benning come together to worship and study.

Child care is available on-site. For more information, call Gigi Kail at 685-0739.

Spanish Mass — The Spanish mass will change time and location. The Spanish mass will meet at 11:30 a.m. each Sunday beginning Oct. 14 in the Airborne Chapel. The change allows the parish to consolidate the Spanish and English CCD programs more efficiently. The Airborne Chapel is located off Indianhead Road.

Hope, faith, love empower

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

When stripped of our resources, we are forced to rely on our inner strengths and divine empowerment. When tragedy strikes, when illness reigns and when our friends forsake us, faith, hope and love see us through.

Hope swells when police officers, fire fighters and emergency medical teams rush to provide assistance to those in need. Hope is regained as the dawn breaks, the birds begin to sing, and the sun shines on a new day. Hope inspires when citizens like you and me proudly display the American flag during times of adversity and when the American flag is hoisted above the rubble of terrorism.

Koop

Faith grows when our nation unites against a common foe. Faith is renewed as we enter our place of worship, seek divine forgiveness and recommit ourselves to God. Faith comforts us as we read God's word and pray for God's intervention and blessings.

Love blossoms when Americans generously respond to those in need. Love is manifested as Americans reject hate and vengeance, reach out and join with their neighbors to work for the common good. Love endures, for love is victorious over evil.

Faith, hope and love endure; yet, the greatest of these virtues is love (I Corinthians 13:13).

Do you want to increase your faith, hope and love? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza, for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760 or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Army Ten-Miler, other events canceled

State of war, runners security lead to action

Army News Service

The Army has canceled the 2001 Army Ten-Miler race.

While a specific threat to Washington, D.C., has not been identified, the United States is at war and the security of our runners, volunteers and spectators is our primary concern. At this time, there are no plans to reschedule the race.

"We hope all our runners will understand our support of Operation Enduring Freedom, our heightened awareness of the current situation, and our concern for the security of everyone associated with the race," said Jim Vandak, Army Ten-Miler director.

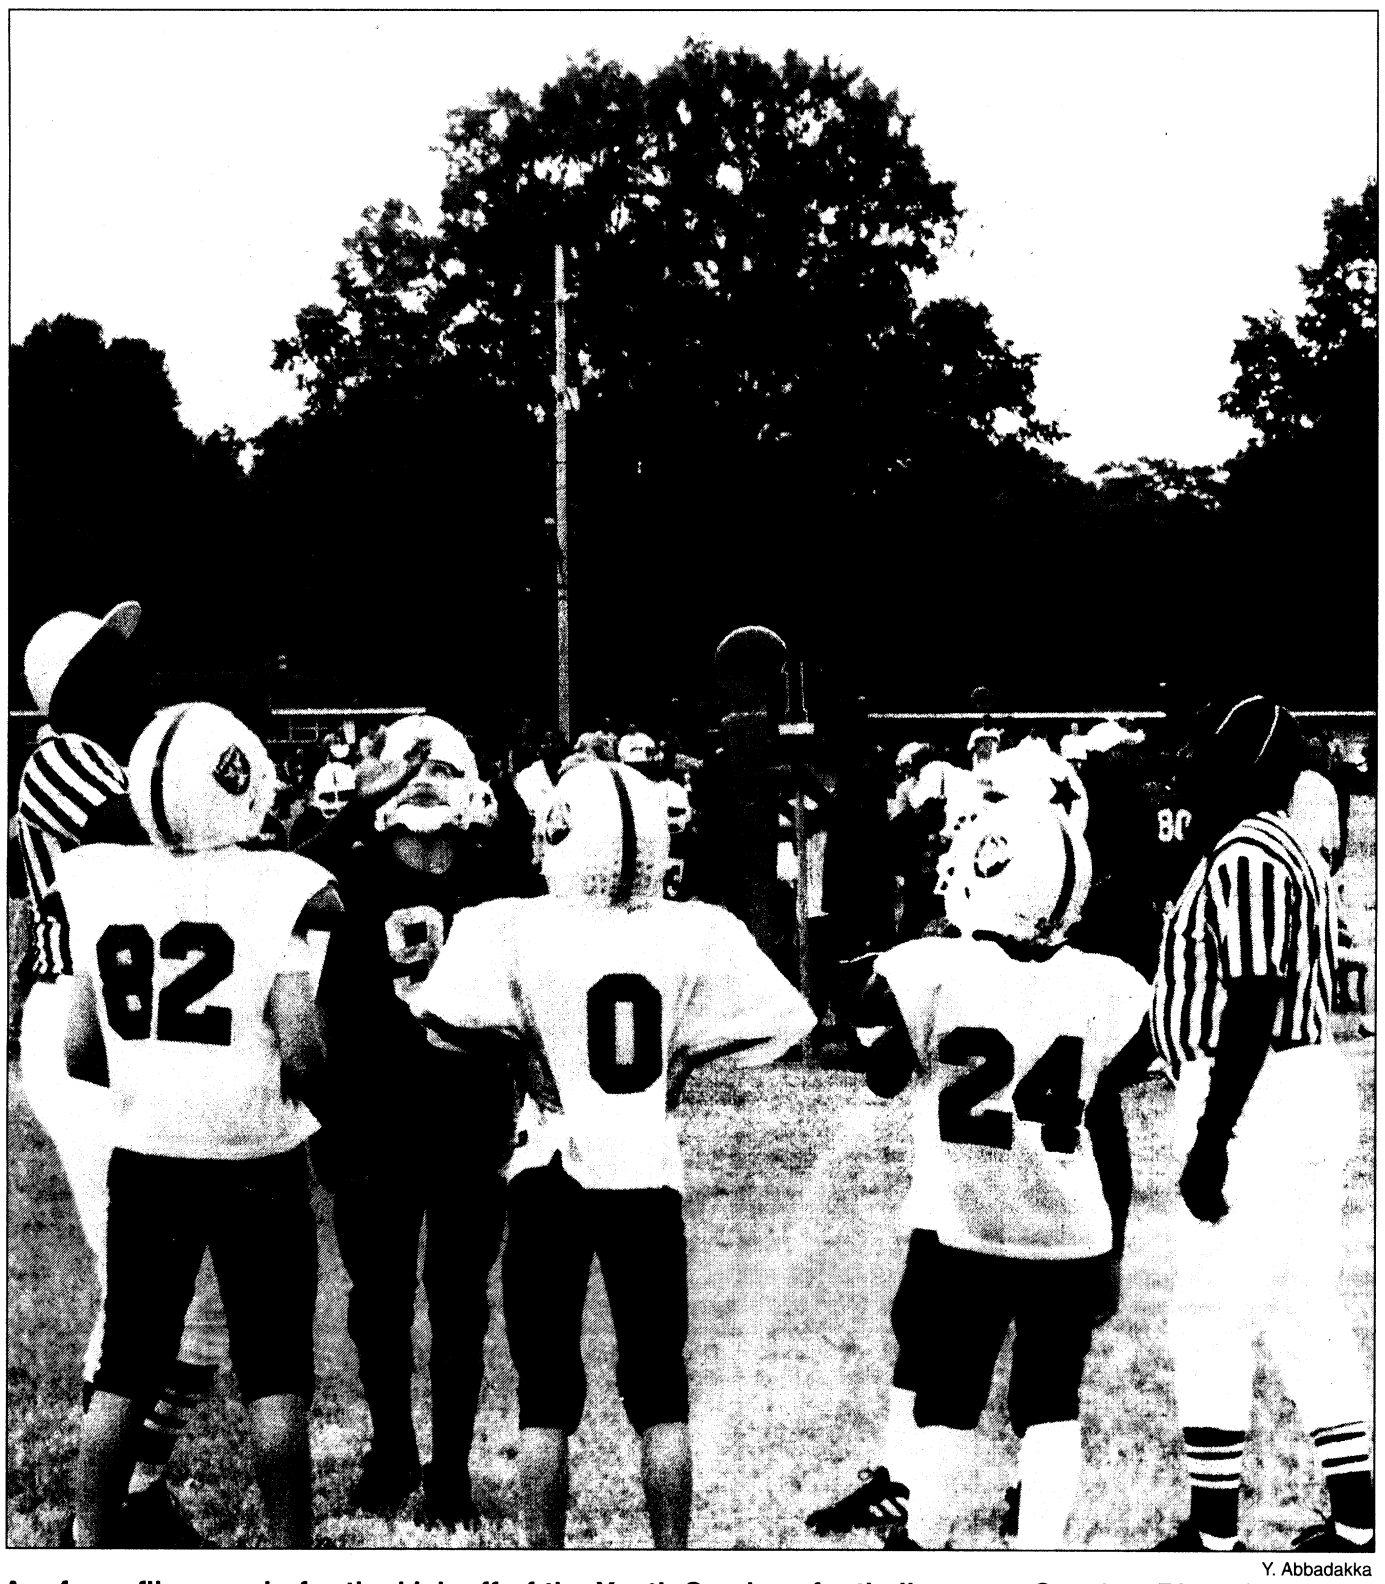
"This move also allows the U.S. Military District of Washington to concentrate its soldiers and resources on supporting Operation Enduring Freedom."

All events associated with the Army Ten-Miler are canceled, including the race expo, pasta dinner and Junior Ten-Miler.

Also, the Association of the U.S. Army annual meeting, slated to start Oct. 15, has been canceled.

In light of the ongoing operations, and plans being developed for the war on terrorism, it has become impractical, if not impossible, for the Army to support the largest gathering of the Army family at the annual AUSA meeting in Washington, according to an AUSA press release.

The decision to cancel both events was made in conjunction with senior Army leadership discussions.



Retired Gen. Gordon Sullivan, AUSA president, said it was imperative there be no distraction for Army leaders as the execution of Operation Enduring Freedom continues and enters a new phase for America's Army. Instead, the Association's full focus and energy will be in support of the troops and famiiies from the Army and the other services in this campaign.

> "We hope all our runners will understand our support of Operation Enduring Freedom (and) our concern for the security of everyone associated with the race."

More information on cancelation policies and procedures are forthcoming and will be made available on the Web site at www.armytenmiler.com/home.htm.

Buick Challenge returns to Callaway

Yearly event to appreciate soldiers, post

Ann Ragsdale
Buick Challenge Public Relations

The Buick Challenge returns to Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga., Oct. 22-28, where some of the world's best professional golf will be witnessed by thousands of spectators.

Held at one of the nation's best courses, as ranked by both Golf Digest and Golf Magazine, the Mountain View Course is noted for its challenging par-5 15th hole, where water hazards intimidate both tee and approach shots.

"Our field continues to build and could surpass our 2000 field, which was one of the best on the tour last year," said Dick Ellis, executive director for the tournament. "Last year, the Buick Challenge was delighted to put $174,000 back into the hands of the local charities that we support. With this year's organizational enhancements, we have strengthened our regional community support, to assure that we exceed our 2000 donation."

Proceeds from the tournament benefit a number of area charities, including The Boys and Girls Clubs. Since Buick became a sponsor of the event, more than $1,200,000 has been raised for area charities.

The week begins Oct. 22 with the Larry Mize Pro-Am, which is held on the Mountain View Course, with an 11:30 a.m. shotgun start. Spectators can follow their favorite PGA Tour golfer, like last year's winner, David Duval, during practice rounds, which are Oct. 22 and 23 and are free to the public.

Duval

The Wednesday Pro-Am takes place Oct. 24 on the Mountain View Course. The morning shotgun start is at 8 a.m., followed by the afternoon shotgun start at 1:30 p.m.

Championship play is Oct. 25-28. ESPN will broadcast from 3 to 6 p.m. Oct. 25, 3 to 6 p.m. Oct. 26 and 4 to 6 p.m. Oct. 27.

Military Appreciation Day, presented by the Association of the U.S. Army, is Oct. 26 and all military and their families, whether active or retired, will be admitted free of charge with a valid military ID.

The Coca-Cola and Buick Family Golf Experience is 2 to 4 p.m. Oct. 27 on the number one tee of the Garden View course.

The tournament moved to Callaway Gardens in 1991 and was named the Buick Challenge in 1995.

Advance daily tickets are $20 each, individual season badges are $85. Group or sponsorship packages are available.

Tickets can be purchased by writing to the Buick Challenge Offices, P.O. Box 2056, Columbus, Ga., 31902, by telephone at 324-0411 or 1-888-4CHALLENGE or on the Web at www.pgatour.com or www.ticketmaster.com.

Army Marksmanship Unit dominates CAT games

Team takes 116 of 193 possible medals

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Old Glory waved and The Star-Spangled Banner played as the United States of America took the majority of the medals won in the Championship of the Americas Oct. 1-7.

USA shooters won 116 of the 192 medals awarded, bringing home 64 Gold, 40 Silver and 12 Bronze Medals from the competition, more than three times as many as any other country. Canada finished second in the competition, winning 27 medals and Guatemala was third with 13 medals.

More than 230 athletes from 13 countries competed in the Championship of the Americas — called the CAT Games. Originally, nearly 400 people from two dozen countries were scheduled to compete. However, because of the terrorist activities of Sept. 11, many countries were unable to participate.

The CAT Games were hosted by the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit and sponsored by USA Shooting, the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

"On behalf of USA Shooting, we thank the countries as well as all of the athletes and officials who participated in the 2001 Shooting Championships of the Confederation of the Americas de Tiro," said USA Shooting Secretary General Bob Mitchell told the crowd at the Oct. 7 closing ceremonies.

"This competition had special challenges resulting from the terrorist activities of Sept. 11th. It was through the work and cooperation of many people, that travel to Columbus was pleasant and access to Fort Benning was convenient. We thank the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit for providing the ranges and assistance in conducting the competition."

The CAT Games, Campeonato de Tiro de las Americas, is the shooting championships for the Western Hemisphere, which is conducted every four years. The CAT Games is one of four big international matches — along with the Olympics, World Championships and Pan-American Games — where shooters can win medals and set world records.

The following are the USAMU soldiers who won medals.

• Spc. Shane M. Barnhart: individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, Air Rifle; and individual Bronze Medal and team Gold Medal, 300-Meter Standard Rifle.

• Sgt. Jason A. Parker: individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, Three-Position Free Rifle.

• Capt. Glenn A. Dubis: individual and team Gold Medals, 300-Meter Standard Rifle; and individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, 300-Meter Prone Rifle.

• Maj. Michael E. Anti: individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, Three-Position Free Rifle; and team Gold Medal, Free Rifle Prone.

• Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski: individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, Air Pistol; individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, Center Fire Pistol; and individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, Standard Pistol.

• Sgt. Armando R. Ayala: individual Gold Medal, 50-Meter 30+30 Running Target; individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, 10-Meter Mixed Running Target; individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, 50-Meter Mixed Running Target; and individual Bronze Medal and team Gold Medal, 10-Meter 30+30 Running Target.

• Sgt. 1st Class Lance D. Dement: individual Silver Medal, 50-Meter 30+30 Running Target; and individual Bronze Medal and team Gold Medal, 50-Meter Mixed Running Target.

• Sgt. 1st Class James T. Graves: individual Silver Medal and team Gold Medal, Skeet.

• Staff Sgt. Joseph D. Buffa: team Gold Medal, Skeet.

Besides winning most of the medals, the U.S. team also set several world records in the competition.

The rifle team of Dubis, Barnhart and retired Maj. Stephen C. Goff not only won the Gold Medal in the 300-Meter Standard Rifle Match, but they also broke the world record by 11 points. Dubis also set a new world record for his individual Gold-Medal-winning score. The Three-Position Free Rifle Team score of Parker, Anti and civilian Matt Emmons exceeded the world's record by 2 points.

Lenders Agree To 0% Financing & Loans To Those With Less Than Perfect Credit.

ON ALL NEW 2001 & 2002 CHEVROLETS. RATE IN LIEU OF REBATES.

A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of reliable transportation.

Columbus, GA. Milton Watts, Chief loan officer at Bill Heard Chevrolet, has exciting news for responsible people who, because of unfortunate circumstances, have had to resolve overburdened indebtedness through alternative means. A National lender has agreed to a pilot program that will extend a second or even third chance to those who have a job and a sincere desire to repair their reputations and have need of a new or slightly used car, truck or van either for their family or a business venture. These are prime, in demand vehicles, that are either repossessed, overaged or a terminated lease situation.

Kevin Thompson, Representing the dealership, has arranged for special low payments and even deferred payments for those on budget and needing a delay in payment start up because of the cash crunch at the vacation season.

In some cases these payments are ridiculously low. When pressed for an example, Thompson replied, "Well, here is a '95 Elantra 4 door #HS002. With $1 down payment to validate the transaction, your payments to be taken on would be $55 for 60 months at only 9.9% APR with a credit approval process that can take as little as 20 minutes. An incredibly low sale price of only $1,995. Adding only tax, tag, title and WRA make this payment arrangement possible. "Or, if a truck is your thing, then here is a '96 Toyota Tacoma #HS003. # Agents investigate Pentagon site

CID helps with recovery at crash site

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Five of Fort Benning's criminal investigation agents were among those called to serve at the Pentagon during the rescue and relief operation following the Sept. 11 attack.

The general crimes team, which specializes in death investigations, joined special agents from U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command units around the country to "augment the FBI crime scene investigation at the crash site," said Special Agent K.C. Baney.

"We carry CID credentials that have a picture of the Pentagon emblazoned on the back," he said. "This attack hit home, we took it personally. We were glad for the opportunity to be there."

Baney joined agents Edgar Collins, Martin Garcia, Marie Gray and Chuck Ames, who were assigned to various tasks Sept. 11 through Oct. 1 at the Pentagon, an on-site temporary morgue, and the Dover Air Force Base mortuary, where victims' remains were taken for identification.

Collins, a forensics scientist, worked at the Dover mortuary, separating human remains from air plane fragments that had to be collected for the investigation.

"I've been doing this for 10 years," he said. "I've seen a lot, but I've never seen anything like this in my life. Nothing compares to it in sheer magnitude of human loss."

Agents at the crash site worked 12-hour shifts, sorting debris and collecting evidence in a "very systematic approach, like a grid search," Baney said.

In some areas the debris was piled to the ceiling, and with the tedious job of sifting through it piece by piece, it often took hours to clear a small section. And structural Rifle qualification was Saturday for D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

The trainees received two solid weeks of basic rifle marksmanship instruction and it all came down to the 40 rounds fired from their M-16 A2 rifles. Either the pop-up green targets would fall, or they wouldn't.

"We left the range at 1 p.m., 100 percent qualified," said Staff Sgt. Michael Chambers, drill sergeant for third platoon.

The company had only seven trainees who were not first-time goes, and all seven qualified on their second attempt.

Overall, the company had a 97 percent first-time go rate, the highest in the brigade. A Company completed BRM just before D Company started, and

Secretaries push for closures

Congress plans another round of base closures

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — A group of former defense secretaries signed a letter to Congress calling for another round of base closures.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld has called for another round of closures beginning in 2003. The legislation, called the Efficient Facilities Initiative, is part of the DoD budget request for fiscal 2002.

The letter, signed by all the living former defense secretaries save Vice President Dick Cheney, underscores the need for further base closures. The signers are William S. Cohen, William J. Perry, Frank C. Carlucci, Caspar Weinberger, Harold Brown, James R. Schlesinger, Melvin Laird and Robert S. McNamara.

"While we understand the sensitivity of this effort, our support for another round is unequivocal in light of the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001," the former secretaries said in the letter.

"The Defense Department must be allowed to review its existing infrastructure to ensure it is positioned to support our current and evolving force structure and our war fighting plans."

The Base Realignment and Closure Commission last announced closures in 1995. Since then, DoD has determined it has between 20 percent and 25 percent more infrastructure than it needs. Rumsfeld has said the money the department spends on this infrastructure could be more useful helping transform the U.S. military.

The former secretaries, many of whom fought similar battles to close excess installations, agree. "We are concerned that the reluctance to close unneeded facilities is a drag on our military forces, particularly in an era when homeland security is being discussed as never before," the secretaries said in the letter.

"The forces needed to defend bases that would otherwise be

Benning change of command set for Oct. 29

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public affairs Office

The U.S. Senate confirmed Tuesday the President's nomination of Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne for a third star.

With the promotion comes a new assignment. Le Moyne will become the deputy chief of staff for Personnel in Washington, D.C. Prior to his assignment to Fort Benning, Le Moyne served as the assistant deputy chief of staff for Personnel.

Le Moyne succeeds Lt. Gen. Timothy J. Maude who was killed in the Pentagon on Sept. 11.

A change of command ceremony is scheduled for 11 a.m. Oct. 29 on York Field, in front of Infantry Hall.

Brig. Gen. Paul D. Eaton will assume command of Fort Benning, the U.S. Army Infantry Center and U.S. Army Infantry School, at that time.

Eaton's last assignment was the deputy commanding general for Transformation for the Training and Doctrine Command, in Fort Lewis, Wash. Prior to that, he served as the deputy commanding general of Fort Benning from July 1998 to August 1999.

The number of active-duty soldiers is on the rise.

Since the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, the president has called up numerous National Guard and reserve soldiers, and patriotism has spawned a surge in enlistments.

"The Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 is designed to protect service members entering or called onto active duty regarding certain legal actions and financial obligations, allowing them to fully devote their attention to the mission at hand," said Michael Mejia, legal assistance attorney, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Too much info for kids?

Televised images of attacks too intense for small children

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

A friend told me that after watching the news almost nonstop on Sept. 11, her 6-year-old child began making crashing noises as the planes smashed into the World Trade Center.

That caused me to think twice before letting my own 6-year-old plop down in front of the news.

Television is surreal to young children. Images of planes crashing into buildings, protesters in Arab garb and bombs dropping on foreign lands look like one big Play-station game to a population of already desensitized children.

Such images may lead to fears of war, and in our military community, saying good-bye to loved ones who may have to fight in that war.

Local children have written letters stating they are scared of being attacked in their schools and elsewhere in their communities.

Now we can add the more recent fear of catching a disease that seems to be popping up somewhere new everyday.

Bomb-dropping images may also give the impression that our soldiers and government are doing something inhumane to others, as opposed to defending our great nation and ridding the world of evildoers.

It is for these reasons children's viewing of recent ongoing news coverage has been strongly discouraged by both educators and religious leaders.

I do not believe that we should keep our children entirely in the dark, and I do not intend to do that with my own children.

They are going to hear the news at school and from their friends.

It is better to clarify the facts than to let them form impressions based upon what other children tell them.

Children should be given enough information, in an age-appropriate way.

That information should come from parents who can tailor the details to the needs of their child.

But in peacetime and in war, parents should reconsider before giving impressionable children free rein of the remote.

Children have a right to know about consequences of terrorism

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Parents need to inform their children about the recent terrorist attacks. They cannot be protected forever.

You don't have to get into graphic details, but kids need to know there are bad people in the world.

Yes, our kids need protection, but parents also need to talk to them about world events, especially this one. We're in the midst of history.

Children have probably talked about the attacks in school, so why not talk about it or let them watch the news at home?

It's sad because our children watch violence on television everyday. Cartoons and video games are prime examples. Now is the perfect time for kids to know the consequences that can result from violence.

Obviously, children of different ages require different conversations and amounts of information.

It's time to teach our kids history and patriotism. Teach them about America, our laws and military. Teach them the great things about this nation.

With the recent terrorist attacks, now is also the perfect time to teach your kids about geography and other people's cultures.

Parents can also tie into these lessons the fact prejudice is wrong. All too often, people judge others without knowing all the facts.

Parents need to be open-minded and talk to their kids.

Holding back isn't the answer. Keep the doors to communication open.

Educate kids by sharing information with them. Talk with them, encourage them to watch the news, listen to the radio and read the newspaper to stay informed. It makes them better citizens.

Once they learn staying informed is necessary, hopefully this will be a habit they keep for the rest of their lives. I would rather have a child read the news-paper or watch the evening news than play video games.

Education, not fear, should come as a result of the terrorist attacks.

Can a dollar make a difference?

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

commentary

The president has asked American children to each send a dollar to the White House to help feed Afghan children.

This will not be the first time that American children have been recruited for a grass-roots drive to raise money for a cause.

Most of us have benefited from the first, hich raised money that funded research and led to the development of a vaccine that prevented polio. That fund eventually grew to be the March of Dimes.

Many baby-boomers will remember "trick-or-treat for UNICEF" campaigns that raised money for the United Nations' World Health Organization. The WHO has helped control, and even eradicate, diseases around the world.

Shortly before the North Carolina Zoo opened it was announced that there would be no elephant for a while because the new zoo couldn't afford one. Some mastermind engineered an animal cookie sale. I was sold boxes of animal cookies by every child I knew. More than once.

And when the zoo finally opened there were two elephants in residence thanks, in great part, to North Carolina schoolchildren selling 50-cent boxes of cookies.

A few years before I bought all those cookies, my friend Bonnie was collecting dimes as part of a schoolchildren's contribution to bring the USS Alabama home to Mobile. Years after she collected and dutifully recorded her 10 dimes, she presented the card at the gangplank of the USS Alabama. As promised during the fund drive, she was granted free admission for her part in helping to bring the Alabama home.

This time it's not as trivial as buying an elephant for a zoo, or bringing an old warship home to be a tourist attraction. This time children are suffering. This time children are dying.

One in four Afghan children die before they are five. Half suffer from chronic malnutrition. One in three is an orphan. Their suffering can be relieved and with enough help, prevented. It's only a dollar, you might say. How can it make a difference?

Remember the story of the little boy who was walking along a shore just after the tide went out, stranding dozens of fish?

He started picking them up and throwing them into the water. A passerby saw what he was doing and asked why he was bothering.

"You'll never get to them all in time. What makes you think you can make a difference?" he asked.

The child picked up another fish and hurled it back into the water.

"Well," he said "I made a difference to that one."

How much of a difference can a dollar make? I don't know. I know I'm blessed enough that sending one to the White House won't even make a small dent in our budget.

How can you be sure that your child's dollar will get to the Red Cross, which will administer the fund, and not in the pocket of a mail clerk? You can't. It's a gamble.

And I'm willing to take that dollar bet on the chance that it will make a difference.

If you, or your child, want to make a difference too, send your dollar to America's Fund for Afghan Children, in care of the White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20509-1600.

Motivational speaker turns grief to action

Dr. Lonise Bias says drugs ruin futures, shatter families

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

"I've been to hell and back, and I will take nothing for that," Dr. Lonise Bias, a motivational speaker, told her audience. "When Len died, I wanted to die. But I decided to take this tragedy and turn it into something beautiful."

Bias is the mother of Len Bias, the University of Maryland basketball player who died from a cocaine overdose June 19, 1986, two days after the Boston Celtics drafted him. If alive, he would turn 36 next month.

She spoke to the Fort Benning audience in Marshall Auditorium, in Infantry Hall, Oct. 12 during the kick-off campaign of the "Real Life is Drug Free" month.

An estimated 1,200 soldiers and civilians attended the ceremony.

Bias turned her grief into something positive by traveling across the United States speaking to people about the dangers of drugs and alcohol. She has spoken to numerous groups, including the NBA, NFL and Major League Baseball teams.

Sadly Bias had to bury another son after Len's death. In 1990, her son, Jay, was murdered in a drive-by shooting. Still, Bias doesn't want people to feel sorry for her.

"Don't cry for me," she said. "Len and Jay did more for this nation dead than they ever could alive."

She emphasized there will be struggles in our life, but we must conquer them and move forward.

"Hardship comes to strengthen and perfect you," she said. "You must maximize your potential. You have to learn to press past barriers. Press on."

Bias said when you're confident and happy with yourself, you're less likely to turn to drugs and alcohol for comfort. Therefore, people must stay sober against drugs and alcohol, but also in attitude.

> "Don't cry for me, Len and Jay did more for this nation dead than they ever could alive."
> Dr. Lonise Bias
> motivational speaker

"You cannot use another person as an excuse to fail," Bias said.

Most people, she said, spend too much time whining and complaining about situations without coming up with solutions.

"Every storm you go through in your life, the winter season, remember you have another season around the corner, spring," she said. "Spring is a time for another beginning.

"It's time to grow up. Growth starts in the heart. Learn to appreciate yourself. There is good inside each of you, but it must be developed. It takes time and patience," she said.

Melvin Burnett, educational coordinator for Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program, said Bias's speech was one of the greatest speeches he's ever heard.

"It was one of the most inspiring," he said. "This is the type of information we need at Fort Benning to reduce the effects of drugs in our community."

Sgt. Adriane Corrington, who also works in ADAPCP, said, "This (speech) should be the cornerstone for a soldier's life. This gives us all something to think about."

ADAPCP will continue to promote Red Ribbon Week, which promotes awareness and education about the dangers of drugs, Tuesday through Oct. 31, by providing a convoy for the seven schools on post. The convoy will visit the schools on Monday and Tuesday.

The convoy will consist of different organizations, including the Columbus Police Department, Department of Public Safety, Georgia State Patrol and the Harris County Sheriff Department.

Red Ribbon Week was started in 1985 in response to the murder of Enrique Camarena, a federal drug enforcement agent, who was killed while investigating Mexican drug traffickers.

ITB: Prepare for next phase

they had an 89 percent first-time go rate.

All of the drill sergeants took great pride in the accomplishment of their trainees.

"We got through 10 or 11 firing orders before we had our first no-go," Chambers said. "They did outstanding and really set a fantastic tone for the rest of the cycle."

The company finished with 15 experts (35 to 40 targets hit out of 40), 89 sharpshooters (30-34) and 114 marksman (23-29).

Pvt. Todd Adkins shot a 29 on Saturday but was hoping to do better.

"I've never shot before," he said. "But I was still trying to get expert."

Third platoon had the most experts of the company, with eight, but first platoon won the BRM streamer with only one first time no-go. The rest of the platoons had two each.

Qualification meant kevlar covers for the trainees. They also celebrated with a pizza party when they returned from the range Saturday and a Sand Hill pass from 1 to 6 p.m Sunday.

"It was so nice to be able to leave the company area for a little while and just relax," Pfc. Jeff Chartier said.

Now that BRM is over, the trainees get a chance to breathe just a little bit before training resumes its previous intensity.

Monday, the trainees who are scheduled to go to airborne school after graduation had their physicals. The rest of the company had rifle and bayonet training and ran through the obstacle course again.

Although for some, this was their first opportunity to get down and dirty at the obstacle course.

2Lt. Mamie Murphy

Pvts. Vernon Bordes, right, Kevin Brandon and Morris Hallyard clean weapons at the solvent tank.

"I was on KP duty last time the company did the obstacle course," Pvt. Joshua Butler said. "So I had to give it all I had today to make up for it. It was great out there. I loved it."

Pvt. Adam Hughes also enjoyed getting dirty on the obstacle course.

"It was really muddy today. I think they waited until after it rained to get us out there again, but it was a lot of fun."

Sgt. 1st Class Ron Locklear, third platoon drill sergeant, knows how much his platoon enjoys the physical challenges of training.

"Anytime they can play in the mud and get dirty, they love it," he said. "They were all real motivated on the course today."

Competition among the platoons continues to heat up. Physical fitness test scores and BRM are not the only ways to size each other up.

Third platoon took bragging rights and the streamers for the bayonet assault course and the obstacle course.

The next challenge for the trainees lies in drill and ceremony. Now that they have all qualified with their weapons, they can focus on manual of arms and how it relates to D and C.

This week's training also included U.S. mines and learning how to use the AT-4, an antiarmor, shoulder-mounted weapon. Two trainees were selected to detonate a live claymore mine and two more had the opportunity to fire live rounds from the AT-4.

This special privilege is usually reserved for those who qualified expert on the range or have the highest PT score in the company, Chambers said.

Soldiers receive tuition refund

Aid available for school missed

Spc. Jennifer Vchulek
Bayonet staff

Soldiers who attend Alabama's Department of post-secondary education classes will receive tuition refunds.

The Alabama State Board of Eduction approved tuition aid Sept. 27 for service members whose ability to attend classes has been hindered due to the war on terror launched by U.S. Congress in September.

Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman and members of the state's Board of Education approved the resolution to aid service members on active-duty, National Guardsmen, Reservists and family members, according to a press release from the Department of Post-secondary Education.

"The members of the Alabama National Guard proudly serve our state and our nation, and for this, we are grateful," Siegelman said in the release. "I am hopeful that today's action will serve to support members of our military who will be working protect and preserve the freedoms we so dearly love."

The refunds for tuition and fees, textbooks and refund for the unused portion of meal and residence hall fees will be made to soldiers activated in response to the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, personally incurred those expenses and attend Alabama's two-year colleges, according to the press release.

Family members will also receive refunds if they are forced to relocate because of the service member's deployment.

The refunds will be made to students through March 31.

Soldiers who attend the partial list of colleges are affected:

- Ayers State Technical and Gadsden State Community at Fort McClellan and Anniston Army Depot,
- Bessemer State Technical, Jefferson State Community and Lawson State Community at Birmingham IAP AGS,
- Bishop State Community at Mobile Naval Station,
- Calhoun Community and Drake State Technical at Redstone Arsenal, NASA and Marchall Space Flight Center and U.S. Space and Missile Defense Command,
- Central Alabama Community at Alabama AAP,
- Chattahoochee Valley Community on Fort Benning,
- Enterprise State Junior at Fort Rucker,
- Trenholm State Technical at Abston AGS, Dannelly Field AGS, Maxwell Air Force Base and Gunter Air Force Base, and
- Wallace Community College-Dothan at Fort Rucker and Hall AGS.

This is not the first time Alabama has offered tuition aid to its citizen-soldiers, another resolution was also passed to aid soldiers and family members during Operation Desert Storm, said Bob Romine, assistant to the chancellor of the Alabama College System.

"In Alabama, it's something we feel is our patriotic duty to show our appreciation," Romine said.

Romine said the refund will cause some financial burdens for the colleges affected, but "the people at the colleges are willing to make the sacrifice, since the people who are going to make the ultimate sacrifice are mostly affected."

Aside from tuition refund and monetary aid, licensed mental health professionals are available as well as financial planning services and other support services, he said.

Students should request refunds through the students faculty advisor or dean of students. Requesters are required to fill out the proper paperwork before the request will be processed.

Refunds should only take two to three weeks to receive, Romine said. Anyone who does not receive their refund in a timely manner should contact their dean of students immediately.

"I think it's an excellent idea, and I don't understand why colleges across the country don't (refund fees)," she said. "I wish we could do more."

Academy teaches MPs basic skills

Reservists take classes for job

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Reservists from the 2145th Military Police Detachment spent this week learning more about their duties as MPs on post by attending the Law Enforcement Academy.

The reservists learned how to apprehend a subject, respond to an alarm or bomb threat, and become certified in CPR. They practiced scenarios on how to react in domestic disturbances, larcenies and fights.

The academy was started last year, said Staff Sgt. Troy Sutton, NCOIC of the academy. The purpose of the academy is to teach new MPs about Fort Benning law enforcement policies.

"We want to get everyone on the same sheet of music. With reservists, they're used to the civilian side of the house. We want to make sure they do it the military way," he said.

The academy is normally two weeks long, but was condensed to a week for the reservists.

It was intense training, but Sgt. Livingston Bradshaw said it was worth it.

"It has its stress points like anything else. But I think it's been informative, educating and motivating for all of us," he said.

For many reservists, the training wasn't anything new. Some have been MPs while on active or reserve duty and some work in law enforcement in their civilian job.

"The academy reinforced some of the skills we have already learned. It was a refresher for a lot of us," said Sgt. Dawnika Thomas, who has been an MP in the reserves and active duty for seven years. "But if you don't use it, you'll lose it."

Class demonstrations were a big part of the academy.

Students got hands-on training by learning handcuffing procedures and searching a vehicle.

The hands-on training allowed the reservists to become proficient in their techniques.

Students picked up useful tips from their instructors.

"Treat everybody in a kind and courteous manner. Verbal persuasion is the first level of force," said Staff Sgt. Patrick Coiner, senior patrolman in the Community Oriented Police Squad from the 209th Military Police Detachment. "'Ma'am, please don't do that' is an example."

Sgt. Anthony Gulli, an MP from from the 209th Military Police canine detachment, spoke to the group about responding and reacting to an alarm or bomb threat and about narcotics.

"You're in charge of the well-being of these people," he said. "Assess the situation, and make sure everyone, including yourself, is safe."

The instructors brought in Ex, a dog from the unit, to show what the dogs can do when there is a bomb threat.

"The dogs can sniff around and tell in a few seconds if there is a bomb device inside the building," said Gulli.

Gulli stressed to the reservists the importance of being professional on the job.

"Think safety. Use your head, and be smart."

Staff Sgt. Ernest Davis, with the help of Spc. Barbara Gomez, demonstrates the proper way to subdue and handcuff an individual.

Reserve MPs adjust to call for duty, new job

Soldiers have different jobs in civilian world

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Sgt. Bonnie Himes, 30, used to spend her days attending classes and working as a research assistant in the Criminal Justice Department at Armstrong Atlantic State University in Savannah, Ga.

Himes is a senior majoring in general studies with a minor in criminal justice.

Now the once full-time student is on active duty again as a military police officer after leaving active duty last February.

Himes is one of many reservists from the 2145th Military Police Detachment from Jacksonville, Fla. who have civilian occupations completely different from working as an MP.

"When I joined the reserves in February, I didn't expect to be called," she said.

"I don't think anyone does. But I didn't have to adjust to anything since I've only been out eight months."

Himes, who is scheduled to graduate from college in May 2002, was relieved her professors would work with her so she could graduate on time in May.

When she's not working as an MP, she's busy faxing and e-mailing her assignments to her professors.

Himes is one of the 55 reservists from the 2145th Military Police Detachment who have put their lives and careers on hold to protect their country and Fort Benning.

One of her fellow soldiers, Sgt. Ernest Oats, 44, was also shocked to be called back to active duty.

A truck driver for nine years, Oats has traveled to 37 states. The Cataula, Ga. resident is now gearing up to be an MP again.

"It shouldn't be too hard since I've done this before," said the 16-year Army veteran.

"I'm more happy here than driving a truck," he said.

Sgt. Webner Hernandez, 31, would prefer to be at home with his family, but when duty calls, he knows he must go.

Hernandez has been a reserve MP for six years. But Hernandez said most of his co-workers didn't picture him as an MP.

"My co-workers were in shock," he said.

"They said you don't look like the 'MP slash soldier' type."

That's probably because they have never seen him wear his military uniform.

They're used to seeing him wear a suit and tie to work everyday as a senior underwriter examiner for Blue Cross/Blue Shield insurance in Jacksonville, Fla.

Hernandez said the two jobs were similar in some ways.

"With both jobs, you have to work with people and you have to communicate effectively," he said.

Still, both jobs have their differences.

Hernandez said in his civilian job, he communicates indirectly, through the telephone and the Internet.

As an MP he uses a lot more personal contact.

Hernandez admits he's a little homesick.

He misses his job, his 7-month-old son, Austin and seeing his house being built.

"But I've got to do my job," he said.

Spc. Josué Hernandez, 29, agrees with Hernandez.

"I have to do this. It's my duty," he said.

Hernandez has put his job as a fruit inspector in the eradication program with the Department of Agriculture in Sunrise, Fla., on hold.

Hernandez's job involves inspecting citrus trees for citrus canker, a disease that kills citrus trees.

He said that while being an MP requires more attention to detail and paperwork, both jobs are similar. He worked long hours before and he continues to work the long hours required of an MP.

Hernandez said that being at Fort Benning will help prepare him to become a civilian police officer.

That, of course, will be put off for at least a year, but he's OK with that.

"I love being an MP," he said.

Sgt. George Kerner, 44, also loves being an MP and serving his country.

"If you're taking care of your country, you're taking of your family," he said.

Kerner's civilian occupation is as an operator technician with Saturn in Spring Hill, Tenn. He's used to working 10 hours a day loading and unloading cars and doing quality checks. Next week, like the rest of the reservists, he'll be working at the check points and patrolling the post.

Kerner misses Saturn, but feels at home at Fort Benning.

"The Army is a team environment like Saturn," said the 15-year veteran of the active, reserve, and National Guard.

CID: Investigation continues at Pentagon crash site

damage made the job dangerous at times. But with no day off, the agents had little time to reflect on the macabre nature of their task, Collins said.

"Our focus was our mission — it had to be. We couldn't let ourselves dwell on the deaths. Nothing can really prepare you for this. But the training kicks in, and you just do what you have to do, because you can't let your emotions cloud your judgment or you'll miss a critical piece of evidence," said Collins, who admitted to "brief moments of pain" when he unearthed personal property, like jewelry, name tags or photographs.

"I found an e-mail next to someone. It said he was looking forward to his next assignment — Germany I think. His kids were excited," Collins said. "That's when you stop and think 'This was a person who no longer exists.' I still have trouble when I think about the kids."

Gray worked at the make-shift morgue near the Pentagon, where visitors erected a memorial during the days immediately following the attack.

"The fences and the walls were plastered with letters from children all over the country. I couldn't read them. I couldn't handle that," she said. "That was the most touching part of the whole thing — the outpouring of love and support from everywhere."

Baney said it was the memorials and the support of relief workers that kept him focused on the meaning behind the mission.

"They were a constant reminder that the nation was pulling for us," he said. "It made me more determined to accomplish what I set out to do — to find every bit of evidence, every little thing I could find that would bring these families some closure. We were there to help the families."

Collins said the agents received "incredible support," at home and away.

"We wanted for nothing — sweatshirts, socks, food — you name it, every day, all day long. We only had to ask. It was amazing," he said. "And my friends and neighbors were here to support my family while I was gone. They mowed the grass without even being asked. Everybody wanted to help out in some way. I'm proud of the way U.S. citizens came together on such a huge scale."

Baney recalled the first moment he had to relax and reflect on the mission.

"I was back at the hotel, standing on the balcony overlooking the city. Across the street was an office building, and in nearly every window someone had hung an American flag," he said. "It made me realize that everyone wanted to do their part to help, and I felt fortunate, in a strange sort of way, to be able to help, hands on, in the whole operation. It was almost an honor."

Relief: Act helps soldiers when duty and country call

soldiers," Mejia said. "All of a sudden, the nation calls them into service. They're willing to take their ties off, pick up an M-16 and defend this country."

The act is a way that federal law ensures the rights of service members are protected and provides them a measure of temporary relief from certain financial and civil obligations.

"It is a small step toward this great nation saying, 'We recognize and value the sacrifices you and your family are making to defend this country ... thank you,'" he said.

Mejia said the act helps every soldier equally, but it is especially beneficial to those soldiers whose income is significantly less while on active duty, most notably those professionals in the medical field.

The U.S. Supreme Court summed up the act in 1948 during Le Maistre v. Leffers. One must read the act with, "an eye friendly to those who dropped their affairs to answer their country's call."

For community members who need help with financial aspects of the act, the Financial Readiness Program is available.

"I think these protections are good for the soldier," said Ann Pratcher, program manager, FRP. "The area on which most people focus is the reduction of the interest rate when the soldier's military income is less than his or her civilian income."

Congress enacted the law to protect soldiers, so they should take advantage of it, she said.

The protections generally begin on the date of entering active duty and terminate within 30 to 90 days after the date of discharge from active duty. The following are areas from which soldiers can benefit:

• Rent — The act prohibits eviction, without a court order, of service members and their dependents from rented housing where the rent does not exceed $1,200 per month. The court may delay eviction proceedings for up to three months.

• Installment contracts — The act protects service members who enter into an installment contract prior to entering active duty if military service effects the members ability to make payments.

• Maximum rate of interest — If, prior to entering active-duty service, a member incurs a loan or obligation with an interest rate in excess of 6 percent, the member will not be obligated to pay interest in excess of 6 percent per year upon application to the lender.

• Stay of proceedings — Courts have the discretion to delay a civil court proceeding when the requirements of military service prevent the member from either asserting or protecting a legal right.

> "It's a small step toward this great nation saying, 'We recognize and value the sacrifices you and your family making ... '"
> Michael Mejia
> Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

• Life insurance — The act protects a service member's private life insurance policy against lapse, termination or forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums for a period of military service plus two years. Mejia said soldiers should consider this carefully because they have to pay the accrued premiums back at the end of the two-year period.

• Health insurance — Companies need to reinstate any health insurance in effect on the day before active military service commenced without waiting periods or physical condition restrictions.

• Taxation — A service member's state of legal residence may tax military income and personal property. A member does not lose legal residence solely because of a transfer pursuant to military orders.

For more information, visit the OSJA staff members at Building 5, or call the office at 545-3281 or 545-3282, or call the Financial Readiness Program at 545-5485.

They also said money spent on the unneeded installations takes away from equipment modernization.

The letter, dated Oct. 15, went to Sen. Carl Levin, chairman of the Senate Armed Forces Committee; Sen. John Warner, ranking member of the committee; Rep. Bob Stump, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee; and Rep. Ike Skelton, the ranking member of the committee. The former secretaries also made their letter available to committee conferees when they are chosen.

The Senate passed the Efficient Facilities Initiative in its version of the DoD budget.

Membership has its price

At 14 Justin Twine became a member of the Black P-Stone Rangers, one of South Chicago's biggest "band of brothers," because they offered a sense of belonging.

Too late he learned "belonging" meant sacrificing his freedom. Belonging to the Rangers meant, literally, being owned. Gang life quickly lost its allure.

"This is how it goes. When you're a kid, you see all these guys hanging out on the corner having fun. You don't know what they're doing, but they look like brothers and you want to be a part of that," he said. "But then when you find out it's too late. You belong all right — you belong to them. You're all tangled up, and they tell you there ain't but one way out — you die."

Twine attended high school sporadically, managed to graduate, and even took a few classes at a local college. But mostly he spent his days and nights drinking, selling drugs and fighting.

"When you're in a gang, that's your job — selling drugs. And when you're making money, you've got opposition. Someone wants your spot so you defend it. One of your brothers hands you a pistol and says 'Take care of it,'" Twine said.

Though he admits to doing many things he now regrets, Twine said he never killed anyone. But the longer he stayed, the greater the odds he would kill or be killed. So at the age of 21, after the death of two friends, Twine felt an urgency to escape the gang's grip. He visited a local recruiter and decided the Army was his "out," his only way out alive, and the infantry was a natural choice.

"I've been running and hiding and ducking all my life, and I'm used to the shooting. The Army just showed me how to apply it in a combat situation," said Twine, who graduated from Fort Benning's 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, a one-station training unit, Oct. 5.

Now he looks forward to a future filled with new promise. He married his hometown sweetheart Oct. 13, and the two plan to "enjoy one long honeymoon" in Hawaii, where they'll be stationed for three years. Twine said he'll attend college while on active duty, and afterward he hopes to become a U.S. marshal, "somewhere in New York or Washington — as far from Chicago as possible."

But Twine said his worries are not over. The oldest of seven, he now fears for his brothers' and sisters' safety. The gang may decide to retaliate by harming one of them, or they may end up on the street.

"I had to find it out the hard way," he said. "I hope they learned from me. I don't want to see them mixed up in any gang. It's no walk in the park. If I stayed there I'd probably be dead by now. I just don't want that for them."

Twine said he's certain he'll never revert to his old way of life, because the Army has given him a "new perspective on things."

"My girl's dad was in the Army," Twine said. "He told me 'You're going to feel on top of the world when you graduate.' He was right. It wouldn't make sense to go back. I'm bigger than that now."

The Army gave Pvt. Justin Twine a "second chance at life, a second chance at an education."

Twine's tattoo serves as a constant reminder of the life he left behind.

Policy prohibits gang-related tattoos, brands

Though Army policy prohibits active gang members from joining, they're not always easy to identify. Recruiters are required to do an extensive background check, and they're trained to recognize tell-tale signs, such as tattoos or brands (like cattle, gang members are often required to have the gang's brand burned into their skin.)

Still, the interpretation of a tattoo can be subjective. After all, a five-pointed star, like the one tattooed on Pvt. Justin Twine's arm, can be just that — a star, with no implied significance. Or it could symbolize the bearer's allegiance to a gang.

Unless there are other factors indicating gang activity, a recruiter has no valid reason to deny enlistment.

But enlistment doesn't guarantee the recruit will make it through basic training with the tattoo intact. Officials at the Reception Battalion and basic training cadre check body art on every trainee. Eightballs, the ace of spades and three tiny dots on the hand are the more obvious symbols, but officials often refer to a detailed tattoo manual to translate the more complex symbolisms.

If a tattoo or brand is deemed "prejudicial to good order and discipline," according to the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command regulation, the trainee is required to appear in "tattoo court," where the battalion commander decides if the tattoo must be altered or removed.

If he refuses to have the tattoo altered or admits his ongoing involvement in gang activity, the trainee is chaptered out of the Army. If he agrees, he is taken to a reputable, licensed tattoo artist in Columbus, where, for a reduced fee — usually between $30 and $60 — the objectionable words or symbols are blackened or covered with another image.

But for a gang member hoping to escape the confines of gang life, starting over is often far more difficult and more costly than altering a tattoo.

"My first month here, back in '99, we had a soldier who chaptered out so he could go back to the gang," said 1st Sgt. Wanda Blackmon, C Company, 30th Adjutant General (Reception) Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade. "He wanted out, but he didn't leave the right way, so the gang attacked his wife. He had to go home and be 'beat' out of the gang, or they might kill her. He was terrified, but he didn't have a choice."

And occasionally there are gang members who join the Army to hone their skills, Blackmon said.

"We had a soldier who was the gang leader's bodyguard. He came here to get better training," she said. "His tattoo was a giveaway, so we did an in-depth interview — even called his family. He finally admitted it, and we chaptered him."

Even Twine's five-pointed star didn't escape close scrutiny at reception.

"The first sergeant showed it to me in the book," he said. "She read what it means — love, truth, peace, freedom and justice. I told her that's not what it meant, but that's exactly what it meant, word for word. It was all there in the book."

It's this by-the-book approach to gang awareness that has brought about a decline in the number of gang members joining the Army, Blackmon said.

"At some point you have to trust the system, and I believe it's working," she said. "A recruit goes through the recruiter and MEPS before he gets to us. There's only so much we can all do, but we're all doing it, and the numbers are receding. We don't have a gang problem."

It's a gang thing

You wouldn't understand

They're counting on it — the secret language, hand gestures, tattoos and graffiti ... the aura of mystery and danger. Gang members are counting on them all to confuse and intimidate parents and teachers.

But they also depend on these same trademarks to appeal to potential recruits, typically high-schoolers, but more and more frequently, middle school- and elementary-age students.

Gangs, by definition, are groups of people who engage in disruptive or criminal behavior. They choose a name, logo, color or method of dress to distinguish and identify members, and they have some form of government and a method of recruitment. They're territorial by nature, and now more than ever, schools are their territory.

Sgt. Herman Miles, of the Columbus Police department's gang task force, gang-related activity is a growing concern in several Muscogee County schools, including Carver, Kendrick and Jordan high schools and Baker Middle School. The task force has identified more than 30 gangs in the past 10 years, mostly spawned from big-name gangs like the Crips, Bloods and Black Gangster Disciples who have established affiliations all over the U.S.

Muscogee County schools have responded by adopting a hard-line zero tolerance policy, including a strict dress code prohibiting a variety of symbols, styles, logos and color combinations.

But the best defense against gangs is a strong offense, Miles said. That starts with a working knowledge of gangs, past and present. Included below is a brief look at the history of gangs in this country. As for their future, that's up to parents, teachers and law enforcement officials, Miles said. Parents must arm themselves with a basic knowledge of gang behavior, the characteristics of gang members and the warning signs that their child may succumb to gang pressure.

not so fast! Myths about gangs

- Gang members are usually young males. "Hard-core" or O.G.s — original gangsters — range in age from 25 to 40. They're typically the gang's nucleus. And though 90 percent of gangs are male, statistics show more and more females are joining.
- Gangs just harm each other. Most attempts of violence committed by members toward other members fall on innocent victims. And more and more gangsters are using the threat of violence to recruit new members.
- Graffiti is a form of art. The purpose of graffiti is to claim territory, communicate with other gangs or brag about kills.
- Imprisonment destroys gangs. Gang activity thrives in prison, and many leaders rule from behind bars.
- "Turf" is a gang's neighborhood. Not necessarily. Gangs are expanding their turf to include schools, parks and rec centers.

gang activity indicators

Here's what to look for if you suspect someone is involved in a gang or succumbing to gang pressure:

- sudden poor academic performance
- marks himself with tattoos or burns
- sudden change of friends
- uses a nickname, begins referring to new friends by nicknames
- uses graffiti on book covers, folders, hands
- sudden change of style in dress, wants to wear all one color
- excessive jewelry
- uses hand signals
- argumentative, rebellious
- sudden desire for more privacy
- tobacco, alcohol, drug use
- sudden affluence (money, clothing, car, etc.)
- excessive disciplinary referrals
- sudden, consistent use of slang
- sudden negative attitude toward police
- tattoos

Army continues corporal recruiting program

One-year duty helps Army meet mission

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

The Army has extended the U.S. Army Recruiting Command's Volunteer Corporal Recruiter Program through the end of fiscal 2003.

The program, which began in 1999, seeks young privates first class and specialists for one-year recruiting tours.

During their tours, the young recruiters share the Army's story with citizens considering joining the armed forces.

"A lot of young people who consider joining the Army are very concerned with what they perceive it takes to get through basic training," said Cpl. Peter Hines of the Baltimore Recruiting Battalion. "I think they can relate easier to my experiences of basic training from four years ago than to an older recruiter who might have gone through it 15 or 16 years ago."

Hines, who worked as a pharmacy specialist at Fort Story, Va., prior to joining the program, said that in addition to correcting misperceptions of basic training, he promotes the great educational opportunities the Army offers and the time management skills all soldiers learn.

"A lot of young people end up going to college not because they really want to, but because their parents push them into it," Hines said. "Many end up working several jobs to help pay their way in addition to going to college and find they can't juggle all their responsibilities because they never learned how to manage their time.

"The Army teaches time management and soldiers have many opportunities to go to college while at the same time serving their country," he said.

Again, Hines can relate to possible recruits through his own education accomplishments. He has completed 60 credit hours of a bachelor of science biology degree during his nearly five years of Army service. His goal is to become a doctor.

Recruiting duty requires some long hours, Hines said, but he doesn't mind because he enjoys working with young people and has a lot of independence in accomplishing his mission.

"I've had a great time being a recruiter — going to sporting events and concerts while the Army pays me to do it," he said.

Many Army recruiting offices, like the one in Columbus, do not have corporals in their midst, but they do believe in the program.

"It works because you get someone young — about the same age as the people we're looking for," said Staff Sgt. Kelly Price, a recruiter from the Atlanta Recruiting Battalion who works out of the Columbus Army recruiter's office.

Price said the program provides many benefits for the soldiers who take advantage of it.

"They get a chance for accelerated promotions, to gain pride and share their knowledge (of the Army,)" he said. "(The corporal) came in the Army for a reason, and he gets to share that reason with others."

Aside from accelerated promotions and gained pride, Price said the program offers the corporals a chance to get out in the community and tell the Army's story. He thinks it is a story every member of the community needs to know.

The corporals also offer unique perspectives on the Army's new motto, he said. "The 'Army of One' is a good concept. You're one person, but you're still part of a team. The corporals help fuse the idea together for incoming soldiers."

The volunteer program is open to privates first class and specialists who meet recruiter qualifications as outlined in Army Regulation 601-1.

The application process includes an interview with the first colonel in the soldier's chain of command.

Application forms are posted on the Web at http://www.usarec.army.mil/recruiter/corporal.

The U.S. Army Total Personnel Command makes final corporal recruiter selections.

Once selected, applicants attend the six-week recruiting course at Fort Jackson, S.C.

"It's a great experience, if you're qualified to do it, by all means, sign up for it," Price said.

Corporal recruiters are assigned to recruiting areas near their hometowns. Other incentives include 38 promotions points for completing the recruiting course, $375 a month in special-duty pay and the opportunity to select their next overseas assignment or assignment to any U.S.-based installation with a corps or division.

For more information about corporal recruiters, call (703) 325-5819 or (703) 325-5868. The Columbus Army recruiter's office can be reached by calling 323-5674.

Education open house and free cookout

The post will host its annual education open house and free cookout at from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. today outside Building 2602, Soldiers' Plaza. For more information, call 545-5725.

Loose lips sink ships

Army leadership has recently expressed their concern about the apparent inattention to basic operational security procedures.

OPSEC is the responsibility of every soldier, civilian and contractor.

Information about unit strengths, operational capabilities and deployment intentions, in the wrong hands, can severely undermine unit safety and mission accomplishment.

All media inquiries should be directed to the installation Public Affairs Office.

For more information, call the PAO at 545-2237.

Water system flushing schedule

The Fort Benning Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics began flushing the water distribution system Oct. 3. It will continue through Feb. 28.

The workers will open fire hydrants to flush out sediment that has collected in the mains during past years. This flushing program is a standard operating procedure and ensures no distribution biofilm has a chance to develop in the water mains utilized by water departments nationwide.

Flushing the mains may cause some slight but temporary reduction in water pressure and possible water discoloration. However, your water remains safe for drinking.

The post suggests you refrain from doing projects that may be impacted by temporary impurities in the water while the water lines are being flushed in your particular area.

The schedule for flushing is as follows:

Zone 1 — Water treatment plant to Upatoi Terrace area from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. began Oct. 3 and ends Nov. 16.

Zone 3 — Water treatment plant to McGraw Mannor is from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, Oct. 26.

For more information, call the DFEL plumbing shop at 545-4141.

Delta briefing

The 1st Special Forces Operational Detachment-Delta unit (Airborne), 1st SFOD-D, will visit Fort Benning to accept applications for duty with Special Forces Detachment-Delta unit.

The team will be at Infantry Hall 9 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m. Oct. 29 to Nov. 2 in Classroom 9.

All interested sergeants through sergeants first class and captains through majors will be briefed on opportunities as a 1st Special Forces Delta team member.

For more information, call Master Sgt. Irizarry, Operations NCO, Installation Retention Office, at 545-8771.

Luncheon

Fort Benning will announce the NCO and soldier of the fourth quarter at a luncheon 11:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Main NCO Club.

Soldiers should see their command sergeant major or first sergeant no later than Monday to purchase tickets.

Army recruiting team

The Army recruiting team from Headquarters, U.S. Army Recruiting Command, Fort Knox, Ky., will brief NCOs on opportunities to become Army recruiters.

The briefings will be held Tuesday and Wednesday from 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. in Classroom 9 at Infantry Hall.

Pentagon survivor tells of narrow escape

Soldier relives Pentagon crash

Beth Reece
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — As Pentagon survivors prepared for an Oct. 11 memorial service for those killed by terrorists, burn scars still blemish the face of Spc. Michael Petrovich.

His body has healed and much of the emotional residue has faded enough that Petrovich now speaks openly of the chaotic seconds when hijackers rammed a passenger-filled jet through his Pentagon office Sept. 11.

Petrovich drew the attention of lunch goers at a deli last week as his arms jerked through the air to imitate a startling, angry shake. People discreetly listened.

"The floor, the ceiling, the air ... everything rippled as if reality itself rippled, just like a shock wave," Petrovich said, holding a paper-napkin diagram to show where he sat when the plane hit his office.

"Right behind the crash, an orange glow soared over my head," said the administration specialist with the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. "The lights kicked off and smoke swarmed around the room."

As the debris settled and panic set in, Petrovich felt his way to the next cubicle, occupied by Dalisay Olais.

"Everybody get down, get down, get out of the smoke," Petrovich remembers yelling. Olais dropped to the floor and crawled from her cubicle. Gasping for breath and inviting others to follow, Petrovich crawled to the nearest door, but flinched as his hand felt the heat blazing behind it.

Bent on survival, he led his coworkers across the long, open-bay office. "We kept bumping into barriers, having to back out and crawl forward again." Other groups frantically scrambled in the same direction.

Voices beckoned from hidden corners, but the rubble and overturned cabinets made rescue difficult in the darkness. Halfway across the room, Petrovich felt Olais clutching his belt. "Hold on," he said. "Don't let go."

Two meters from the wall, they spotted a window through the smoke. Though the blast had knocked the frame off its hinges, the gap was too small for a body to slip through it.

"I grabbed a laser printer and started beating on the window while someone helped kick it. Eventually the gap was big enough for us to climb through," he said.

Soliciting help from below, Petrovich threw the printer into the courtyard. Sailors escaping the first floor answered by gathering beneath the window to catch the two or three coworkers Petrovich lowered into their arms.

"But then the smoke began to bother me so much that I couldn't breathe and almost passed out." Petrovich climbed out.

Hours after the crash, Petrovich's six brothers and sisters rallied in their parent's living room. "Have you heard from Michael?" each asked, afraid. Avoiding the doom of newscasts, they watched movies and clung to the hope that their mother, Linda, believes comes naturally to families as large and as loving as hers.

"But I was nervous. The hairs were standing up on the back of my neck," Linda said, accustomed to hearing her oldest son's voice about once a week. "I have this sixth sense when the kids are in trouble or when they're doing something wrong."

Twelve hours passed before Linda heard Petrovich's voice, raspy from smoke inhalation and coughing. She had fretted over his safety so often in Bosnia, when he flew on airplanes, and when he moved to an overseas assignment but never at the Pentagon.

Medics waiting in the courtyard doused saline over the first- and second-degree face burns that Petrovich can't recall suffering. Maybe they came from the orange flash, or the heat at door number one, or prolonged exposure to the boiling air.

Shock numbed Petrovich's pain. "I wasn't thinking about being hurt. I was actually hoping to go home that day," he said. But the driver in his car pool, a close buddy who worked on the same end but opposite corner of the office, never left the building.

Later, after cutting his pain with morphine, doctors took a loofah sponge to the dead skin and char on Petrovich's face. "It felt like a gentle massage. It was nice, like getting a facial," he said with praise for painkillers.

At 2 a.m. Sept. 12, in a strange bed at Walter Reed's intensive care unit, Petrovich finally began to assemble the day's broken fragments. Confused, he scanned TV stations for a connection between his fate and that of victims in the World Trade Center attack. "I was trying to understand how I fit into all of this and how my coworkers were affected."

Minutes before terror rocked the Pentagon, Petrovich and his carpool buddy had huddled around an office TV to watch the first reports of the World Trade Center crash. Even if they had feared the Pentagon would be a follow-up target, Petrovich doubts anyone would have dashed for the door.

"The minute the Trade Center was hit meant the military had work to do," he said. "We had a crisis, a mission, things to take care of. I thought about all the things we needed to get moving on, not that we were next."

Army Vice Chief of Staff Gen. John M. Keane approached Petrovich's bedside three days after the attack with cold facts and a map. Pointing to where the plane's nose pierced the building's western walls, the general explained that Petrovich's escape defied logic.

"Luck. Plain old dumb luck is how I got out. Plus the fact that I kept moving," Petrovich said, grateful for a courage he'd never before needed. "Some people lost it. I don't know why I didn't lose it. I should have."

The survivor can list favorite treasures he lost to the fire: a pair of sandals, pictures of his wife and 6-year-old daughter, six military coins. Gone, too, are his Class B uniforms, his cell phone, wallet and identification cards.

"I guess that means I don't exist on paper anymore," he joked. Then his bright voice sunk to a solemn tone. "But that's small stuff. My best buddy didn't make it out of the building."

The two friends shared their daily commute between Fort Belvoir, Va., and the Pentagon. They shared cigarettes and an occasional lunch. On the evening of Sept. 11, they would have finished listening to Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets while inching home to their families through rush-hour traffic.

On a Sunday after his hospital release, Petrovich went to see his buddy's wife.

"We're both angry at him for not getting out, angry at the terrorists, angry at me for not getting him out. These feelings are normal, and they're also irrational."

Life is fragile, he said. "I knew at least 20 other people who died that day."

Since then, he's spoken with reporters who ask too many questions, with generals who give lots of praise, and psychologists who console. The White House sent flowers, and America raised Old Glory in remembrance of the people who had died.

What does the attention mean to Petrovich, a lucky survivor? "It makes me love the Army that much more," the soldier said.

Army introduces 21st century EIB

Updated for transitioning Army of one

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

The Expert Infantryman Badge is a hallmark of the infantry, and the way it's earned, like the Army itself, is about to receive a face lift.

"The merger of the infantry 11B, 11H and 11M MOSs proved we must bring our EIB qualifications in line with the new infantry," said Sgt. 1st Class Adrian Fleming, EIB project NCOIC.

Army transformation designers knew it was necessary to update the qualifications and design for the smarter, faster and more lethal Army of one, said Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein, Fort Benning command sergeant major and EIB board president.

To accomplish the task, leaders at the home of the infantry contacted infantry units Armywide to gather information on their units' training needs and mission essential tasks lists.

"After receiving feedback, we incorporated the information into the development of a program that will test the strengths of the newly aligned MOS," Fleming said.

"The outcome has proven to be more in line with infantry units' missions and training," he said.

"In the past, training was difficult to accomplish due to time and resource constraints. Often, units were convinced EIB tasks did not support their unit's METL," he said.

Earning the EIB is now an eight-day event, consisting of five days of hands-on training and three days of testing.

Soldiers are tested on 63 tasks at 22 different stations.

Annually only 22 percent of the tested soldiers earn the badge.

As a result, the badge is the mark of an expert infantryman; younger soldiers who see this badge recognize the accomplishment and knowledge of the bearer, Fleming said.

The Army will maintain the badges' reputation through changes and additions.

One test change is soldiers can now test on certain tasks, such as daytime land navigation and first aid, at unit level prior to arriving at the EIB test site.

"This method also increases training efficiency by allowing infantry units to meet EIB requirements as part of the METL training," Klein said.

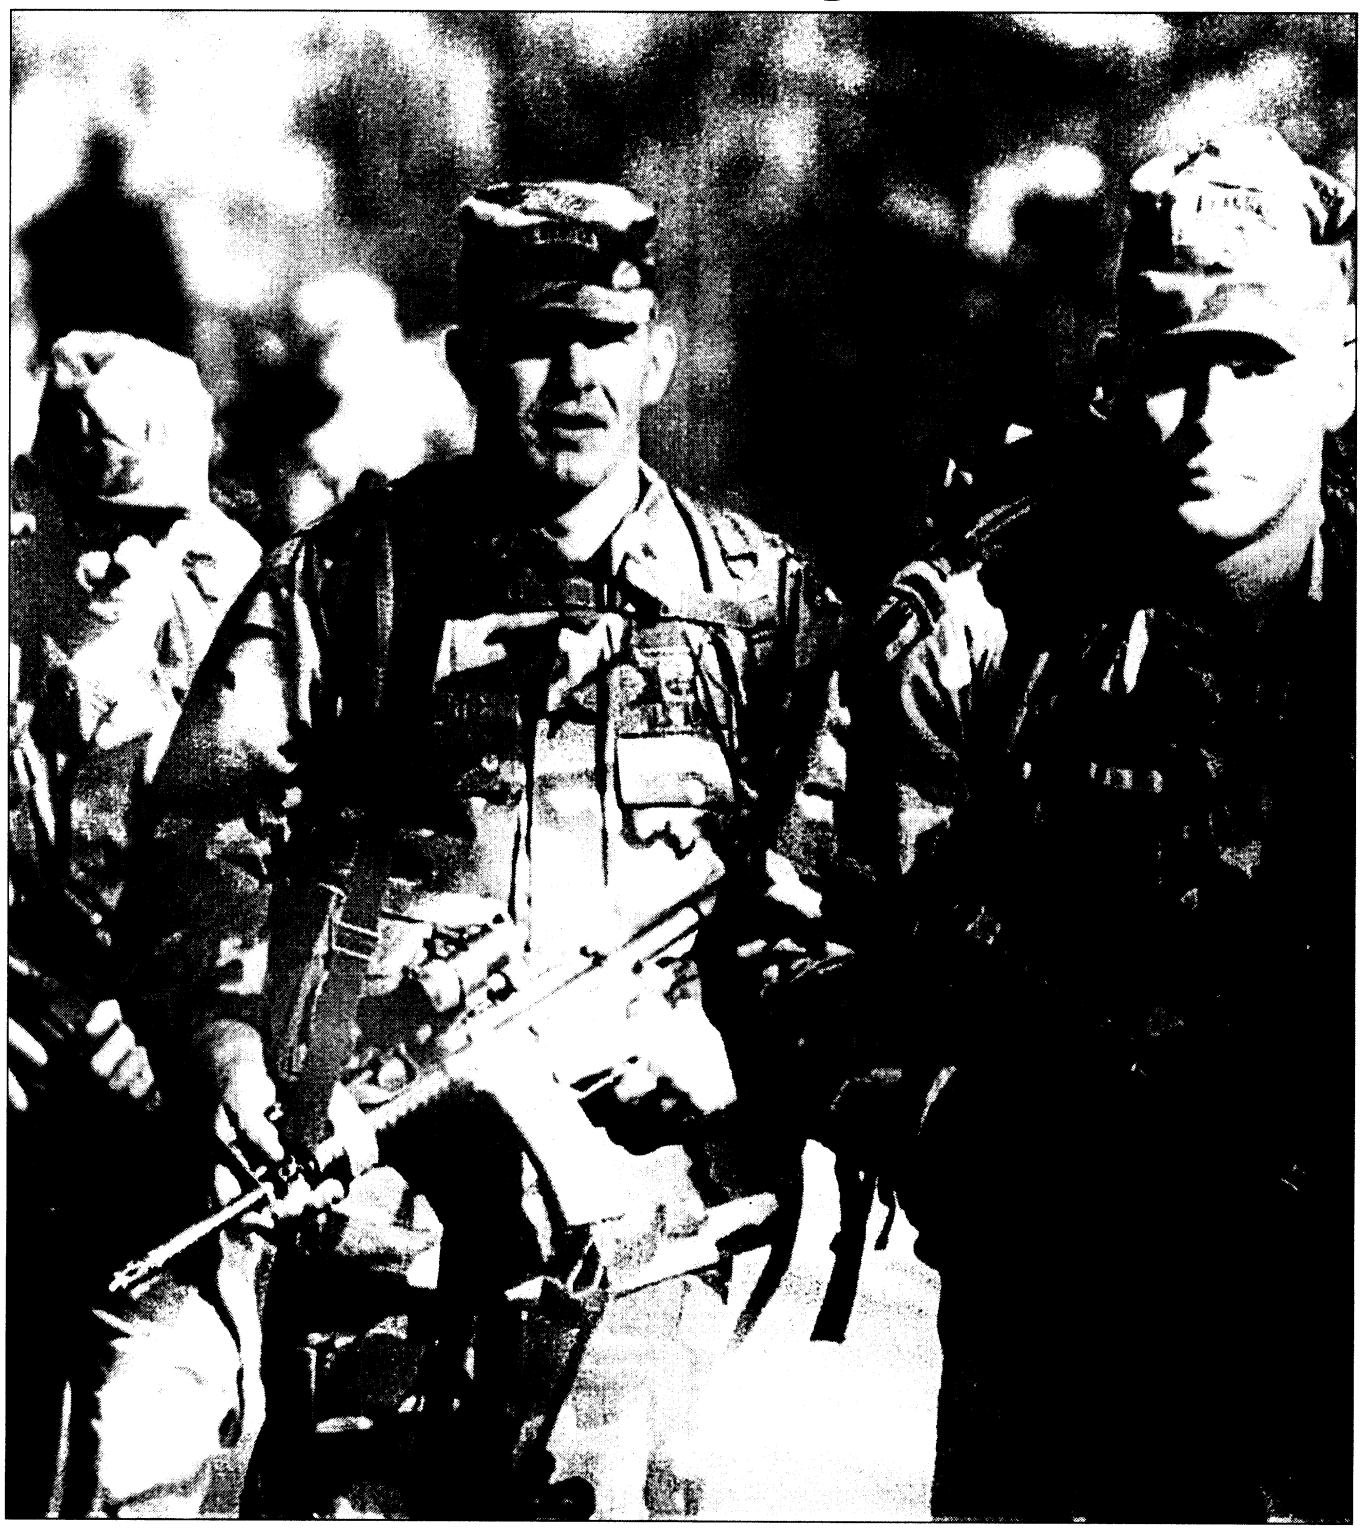
The prerequisite tasks have decreased the testing portion from five to three days.

Some of the additions are:

• proficiency with the Javelin, a portable anti-armor piercing device;

• operating the ASIP radio, a device that keeps troops in contact with each other and their higher command;

• maintaining M-9 pistol;



• hand and arm signals for mounted and dismounted troops;

• completing a day and night land navigation course using a AN/PSN-11 plugger;

• qualifying with the PVS-7B night sight and the PAC-4 laser designation system. This will prove the infantry still owns the night, Fleming said.

Basic infantry tasks such as the 12-mile foot march and weapon systems qualification are still part of the testing.

"Today's 21st century Army of One EIB holders will retain infantry tradition and be high-tech experts," Fleming said.

Buddy Team Assignment Program helps soldiers

Infantrymen will transition smoother with new program

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

By the end of the first quarter of 2002, all new infantry soldiers will have the assistance of a new program to help them adapt to Army life faster.

The Buddy Team Assignment Program allows infantrymen to graduate from one station unit training with a fellow soldier whom they know and trust.

In addition to their unit sponsors, soldiers will be with their buddy for a minimum of six months at their initial duty station.

Units will assign them to the lowest level possible, preferably to the same squad.

"Our intent is to reduce the attrition rate among first-term soldiers, empowering them to adapt to Army life with the help of a friend," said Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald E. Klein, post command sergeant major.

Soldiers will also perform better under the program.

"They will have less stress and distractions," Klein said. "They will tackle missions more efficiently and become tactically and technically proficient knowing they're not the only ones who are going through the challenges of initial assignments.

"A shared trial is one that soldiers conquer with ease," he said.

He had the opportunity to see how well the program works while at Fort Carson, Colo., in September.

One team's members had rapidly advanced from its Bradley Fighting Vehicle squad to its BFV crew — one soldier as the driver and one as the gunner. This accomplishment is rare.

Needs arise and emergencies occur, so the Army does not guarantee this togetherness for all, but the intent is to provide soldiers a conducive environment to become independent soldiers, Klein said.

The program will help buddies in combat as well, said Sgt. Maj. Joshua Simmons, Office of Infantry Proponency.

"The program teaches them to trust and rely on each other," Simmons said. "Buddy team members will head to combat with more confidence, knowing they have a trusted buddy who will secure their left or right flank."

The program will also pay dividends to units in the field.

"When new soldiers perform better, the units they are assigned to win," he added. "Teams become stronger, missions become easier, and success becomes virtually guaranteed."

Moreover, as units see the attrition rate fall, they will embrace the program more, he said.

In five years, it will be the norm.

"So far, units have adapted to the change very well," Simmons said. "They're putting forth the additional effort to make sure they place soldiers in the smallest unit element."

While units take care of soldiers, the Army will manage the program's administrative challenges, he said.

The Infantry Training Brigade, OIP, and Enlisted Personnel Management Division will work together to track all infantrymen for the first 36 months of a soldiers' career, or until the end of their initial enlistment, in order to assess the program's true value.

They will be proactive and have open dialogue with each other to help solve any of the programs' shortcomings.

Soldiers who want to know more about the BTAP can visit the Web at http://150.226.56.245/home/PERSONNEL%20PROPONENCY/mosconsolidation.html.

Sgt. William A. Graves

Pfc. Jeffrey Scott and Pfc. Donald Belcher, brothers-in-law and Battle Team Assignment Program buddies prepare their duffle bags for Kosovo. The soldiers have been together since basic training.

Brothers-in-law help each other

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

When Pfc. Donald Belcher enlisted late last year under the Battle Team Assignment Program with his brother-in-law Pfc. Jeffrey Scott, he never dreamed the two would be in the same unit now preparing for a six-month deployment to Kosovo.

"It sounded too good to be true, but we're still together," Belcher, 18, said. "It shows the Army really keeps its promises."

The Bradley Fighting Vehicle drivers from B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, met in Scott's hometown of Swainsboro, Ga., when Belcher and his sister, Lauri, moved from St. Augustine, Fla.

The 1st platoon soldiers will continue to work together in Kosovo. The bond they share will help get them through the monotony and home-sickness that comes with deployments, Belcher said.

Neither soldier has traveled past Fort Polk, La., and Scott has never flown in a plane.

"The program has definitely worked well for us," Scott, 28, said. "It's definitely better than coming in alone."

"Since basic training, we've always had someone to relate to. If I missed something or had a problem, he would be there to correct me or help me through the situation. I did the same for him."

The buddies also encourage one another to pursue their studies through the Army University Online.

Scott is working toward his bachelor's in health care administration and Belcher, home schooled through high school, is a criminal justice major.

Belcher said they are positive they will spur each other on to excel in the military. They both look forward to a promotion from driver to gunner and then Bradley commander.

"I always have someone there who I can count on to watch my back," Belcher said. "Not only is he my buddy, but he's family, too. We build each other up. That's what it's all about."

The unit and Sgt. Maj. Edward Martinez, battalion sergeant major, have facilitated the program well, Belcher said.

"They really push the program and help ensure buddy teams stick together," he said.

Belcher is a prime example of the program's worth, said 1st Sgt. Joe Garza, first sergeant, B Company.

Belcher's leaders moved him to driver in April, just two months after he arrived in the platoon.

He also won the battalion's Soldier of the Month board Oct. 9.

Garza said Scott and Belcher are two of the best young soldiers in his company.

"Their standards are always high. They are both very dependable and always have a positive attitude."

Garza said he can tell the BTAP helps the soldiers in their daily routine. They stick together and help each other in all facets of their duty.

For example, during a recent TA-50 inspection, they both had all their gear dress-right-dress, and it all looked outstanding, he said. Attention to small details, such as that, gives him confidence the two will exceed the standards in Kosovo.

"I need more soldiers like them," Garza said.

Physical therapy speeds recovery

New program gets soldiers up, running

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Bn., 11th Inf., Regt

Soldiers now have a new resource to get them back to full strength following an injury.

First Lt. Andrew Contrares, a physical therapist for Martin Army Community Hospital, organized a new program to help soldiers recover from an injury or surgery.

"The physical therapy has always been there to get patients from the injury or from the surgery back up walking," Contrares said. "But there has been a missing link from that point to the point where they can pass a PT test or get back into airborne or ranger school.

"These are patients with high needs that we're trying to get back up to speed," he said.

The Sports Medicine and Rehabilitation Therapy, or SMART program, as it's known, is Tuesdays and Thursdays from 9 to 11 a.m. in the Briant Wells Fitness Center.

The focus of the program is on functional activities, such as running and cutting drills and using medicine balls, ropes, cords and hoops.

"The bottom line is to get people back to where they want to be," Contrares said. "This is not a first step – this is to get back to 100 percent."

First Lt. Evette Hunter had partial reconstructive surgery on her knee March 21 and was having trouble regaining her former strength.

"They told me I should be able to get up and run after three months and, five and a half months later, I still wasn't able to run," Hunter said.

"But this guy (Contrares) is great," Hunter said. "I started working with him Sept. 20, and I took a PT test today (Tuesday). Usually I score a 300, but I got a 235 today. I'm just happy I passed."

Before joining the Army, Contrares was a civilian sports therapist. After coming to Fort Benning, he recognized a need for a program to bridge the gap in current physical therapy programs.

The program has been very successful so far. More than 80 percent of Contrares' patients return to functional status.

Families look for support during war

Support groups educate families about Army

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

As the U.S. embarks upon the "war on terror," service members nationwide are maintaining a state of readiness. But they are not alone in the challenge of getting prepared. Family members are looking more than ever to their FRGs, or family readiness groups, for support.

"The FRGs do not operate differently during war, but they do have a better audience," said Deborah Holton, installation volunteer coordinator. "The information provided is available to family members at all times, but in peace time there is no extra concern of 'what if my spouse is involved?' These concerns are here now."

"Some families are facing the stress of having a loved one deployed, while others are dealing with spouses who are working longer hours to support those deployed," Holton said. "Just because they are coming home every day doesn't mean that they are not carrying a burden."

FRGs are intended to provide a sense of security and direction to those who have family members deployed, Holton said. The groups are intended to educate family members to make them able to function independently, and to equip them with resources they need to survive.

Laura Campbell has been a military spouse for seven years, and said getting information has not always been that easy.

"When I was a new Army wife, I was pretty much on my own, and lucky

Safety patrol uses Army values

Children learn about selfless service, duty

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

"I promise to do my best ... perform my duties faithfully ... obey my teachers and officers of the patrol ... and strive to earn the respect of fellow students."

Last week, another chapter of student safety patrol was inducted at Dexter Elementary School. After the induction, soldiers from 30th Adjutant General's Office spoke to students about the Army's core values.

Twenty pupils took a pledge accepting the responsibilities of student safety patrol officers. The group recited the patrol pledge before teachers and peers promising to uphold monitor duties and keep their school grounds safe and preserve orderliness on the premises before, during and after school.

Technician Bruce Robinson, safety patrol supervisor, Muscogee County Police, affirmed the young enforcers in a brief ceremony. Each student was then introduced to school leaders and students seated in the gymnasium.

"(As patrol members) they must set the example for other students," Robinson said

Teachers supervise the patrol teams. Dexter's school safety patrol, all fifth-graders who volunteered to undertake the training and responsibility for the school year. The school has a waiting list of students who would like to serve on the patrols, said Bammi Cofield, student counselor and patrol supervisor.

The Army's core values are another part of the training for patrol members.

"Because we incorporate the Army core values into our program we asked soldiers to join us and talk to students," Bammi said.

After the new sentries were named, three NCOs from 11th Infantry Regiment were introduced to the faculty and students to discuss the Army's core values; loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage.

"These core values can be applied to everyday life," said 1st Sgt. Wanda Blackmon, C Company. "They do not only apply to the Army."

Blackmon stimulated discussions with a question and answer session. She asked students about loyalty. The students responded with definitions and examples were faithfulness to their families and loyalty to their country.

Master Sgt. Norman Farlow and Staff Sgt. Christopher Allen, from 30th AG, discussed the remaining six values with the young audience.

Captain of the School Safety Patrol, Michael Iocco, 10, said he thinks duty and loyalty are the two values he would use most during his tour of duty.

Demetrius Boulware, 10, said he would employ selfless service more often because part of his duty was caring for others.

"I am happy I was chosen to be a member of the patrol," Boulware said. "I am ready for the hard work and the responsibility of caring for others."

Students join national celebration

Wilson students raise flag, honor Pledge

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Parents joined their children at Wilson Elementary for a flag-raising ceremony on the school's front lawn Oct. 12. The gathering was part of Pledge Across America, a nationwide, synchronized Pledge of Allegiance that occurred at 2 p.m. at schools and communities across the U.S.

"We are honoring the flag that represents our soldiers and our country, and that makes me very proud to be here," said Zach Arabinko, fourth-grader at Wilson.

Children paraded onto the lawn waving American flags high.

After the school flag had been raised, the student body sang God Bless America and You're a Grand Old Flag. Four Wilson students did their part by leading the entire school and guests in the simultaneous Pledge.

Lori Haidu, mother of 5-year-old Nadia, joined fellow parents to show her support.

"Nadia is just getting to the age where she is gaining a realization of patriotism for our country, and I am here to support that," Haidu said.

Lindee Johnson has two children at Wilson, Keaton in pre-K and Morgan in third grade.

"I have so much pride as an American and of my husband and others who serve our country," Johnson said. "I am here because parents need to show leadership and be a good example for children to look up to."

Students were joined by the superintendent of schools, Dell McMullen, and by soldiers from the Basic Combat Training Brigade, the school's partners in education.

"This is a sad time for our country, but also a precious time," McMullen said. "What makes it precious is the way everyone keeps coming together."

The Oct. 12 event came about per the request of U.S. Secretary of Education Rod Paige, who contacted more than 100,000 public and private school principals to encourage participation of America's almost 52 million students.

Destiny Lee, in pre-K, waves a flag during the Oct. 12 remembrance celebration.

"Teachers in every community in America have been working with students to help them understand what happened Sept. 11 and to overcome their fears and concerns," Paige wrote to the principals. "They have also worked to teach them more about our proud and rich national history and the foundations of our free society."

According to Paige, goals of the event were to emphasize youth as America's future leaders, to pay tribute to those brave men and women who proudly serve the country, and to remember the many brave heroes who have died in service to our nation.

Phyllis Parker, Wilson's principal, said the faculty had been thinking of ways to have a remembrance ceremony, and Pledge Across America provided the perfect opportunity.

"Since the tragedies of Sept. 11, we have been teaching our children the history of patriotic songs such as The Star Spangled Banner," Parker said. "These songs have given the children confidence during this time, and we take pride in that. The children also need to know the history of The Pledge, and that is what today is about."

Six wives of soldiers from the 988th Military Police Company's family support group attended the 12-hour course Oct. 2-11 at the former NCO Academy.

Charlene Tallman said the information she gleaned from the course would have come in handy when she was accosted by a stranger in San Fransisco.

"If I had it all to do over again I wouldn't allow myself to be put in that kind of situation," she said.

"This class taught me to recognize the warning signs of a potentially dangerous situation, so I can avoid it. And if I can't avoid it completely, now I know how to extract myself from it."

Volunteers 'Help the 'Hooch'

Hundreds come out for cleanup

Danielle Foerschler
Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Facilities

More than 100 civilian workers and soldiers turned out for Fort Benning's third annual "Help the 'Hooch" cleanup Oct. 12.

This was the largest clean up Fort Benning has had in the last three years.

The cleanup not only promotes a cleaner environment, but makes the community aware of the river's contaminates. It also promotes recycling, litter prevention, beautification efforts, neighborhood cleanups and community pride.

Nearly 27 miles of shoreline, 17 along the Chattahoochee and another 10 along the Upatoi Creek, benefitted from the volunteers efforts, Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, said. "We're delighted with the results that plucked between 2.5 and 3 tons of solid waste from the banks and floating on the two water sources."

Some of the items picked up this year include a stove, a washing machine and tires.

Along with Fort Benning employees, 400 students and 18 teachers from Dexter, Lloyd, McBride, Stowers, White and Wilson participated around their schools in the clean up on Friday. Amanda Orlando a third-grader from Lloyd Elementary said, "This has been fun, but our school's not that dirty because we keep it clean."

On Saturday, Columbus had more than 10,000 volunteers who helped the 'Hooch. Columbus has the most participants in the state of Georgia even compared to Atlanta. "Participating in this community event helps instill a sense of ownership that we can do our part in the community," William Kent, Environmental Programs manager at Columbus Water Works. "Help the 'Hooch also brings the community together in fellowship and makes them aware of what goes into the river."

Lori Egan

Brittany Starr picks up trash during Help the 'Hooch cleanup.

The number of volunteers in the tricommunity area has gone up while the number of tons of trash has gone down. This shows that the clean up effort is working, someone said.

to have a few friends to give me information," Campbell said. "I was isolated from my family, and I assumed that my military family would take care of me. Now I get more from the FRG than I need, but that may be because of experience and knowing where to get the information."

Campbell did offer suggestions to help FRGs better serve family members, especially in times of war.

"FRGs should provide more support to newly married couples and check up on them. They should work harder at making sure everybody knows someone to go to, and to put faces with names," Campbell said.

"They should also be far less political, because we do not wear our husband's rank."

Marilyn Wallace, Army Community Service chief, said FRGs should serve as a guide for family members to the many resources available on post, such as classes in stress management, conflict resolution and financial readiness.

> "We want military members to feel like one big family and come together and share so they don't feel isolated."
> Deborah Holton,

"It is our responsibility to arm the FRGs with survival skills so they enable family members to cope with deployment," Wallace said.

ACS is responsible for operating a family assistance information center for those who live at Fort Benning, as well as those who live elsewhere in the country.

The Army Family Team Building also provides training to family members on meeting the challenges of military life. Training is provided at different levels.

Sarah Hertig, AFTB program coordinator, encourages family members to be active in the information gathering process.

"Members of family readiness groups should share the information they have with other wives, and especially encourage new or young wives. The groups need to educate one another," Hertig said.

While knowledge and skills are the biggest resources FRGs can offer, some people just need someone to talk to.

"We want military members to feel like one big family and come together and share so they don't feel so isolated," Holton said.

What qualifies rape?

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Scenario 1: A man and a woman go out for the evening. They have dinner, see a movie and go back to his place for a drink. He rapes her. Society calls it date rape.

Scenario 2: A man and a woman go out for the evening. They have dinner, see a movie and go back to his place for a drink. He kills her. What is this called — date murder?

Murder is murder by anyone's standards, said Lawrence Nadeau, the author of Rape Aggression Defense Systems, Inc., and the above scenarios. But society often allows the circumstances leading up to a sexual assault to qualify it as a lesser violation than a 'stranger' rape. Yet it is estimated that 85 percent of all sexual assaults against high school, college and single women are committed by someone they know.

Nadeau would like to see the term 'date' and other trivializing qualifiers stricken from the context of rape-prevention and rape-awareness education.

"As if 'date' rape is any less a rape," Nadeau said. "Phrases like acquaintance rape, social rape and cocktail rape have no place in the mindset of a potential target. There are those who treat the victim of date rape differently than someone who was 'really' raped. We must develop the attitude that all rape is equally criminal."

Unfortunately date rape is a difficult crime to prosecute, and victims often fear the court room experience — reliving the rape — so much so they decide against reporting the crime.

If we can't take the assailant off the street, we must remove his opportunity to attack, Nadeau said in his book. Education is key, and now more than ever, rape prevention education begins with alcohol and drug awareness.

Though the media frequently spotlights date rape drugs like gamma-hydroxybutyrate (GHB) and Rohypnol, alcohol is still the number one date rape drug of choice. Of the five reported rapes on Fort Benning this year, the victims knew the assailant, and in most cases, both consumed alcohol before the assault.

Intoxicants of any form diminish the victims ability to make wise or quick judgements or to defend herself from an attacker. But some date rape drugs, like GHB, also known as Liquid Ecstasy, affect the central nervous system, rendering the victim unconscious within minutes. They frequently have no memory of the assault. GHB has been linked to more than 60 deaths and 5,700 overdoses, according to the Federal Drug Administration

The the use of drugs, mostly alcohol, by sex abusers to sedate their "prey" has been practiced for centuries, but rape drugs are more sophisticated, affordable, accessible and harder to trace than ever before.

The best defense against date rape and drugs is a good offense. The following is a list of preventive measures:

•Monitor how your drink is prepared.

•Don't drink from a punch bowl or open container.

•Don't leave your drink unattended.

•Don't share or exchange drinks.

•Accept drinks only from a waiter.

•Don't take beverages from someone you do not know well or trust.

•Never leave a bar or party with someone you don't know well.

•When leaving with a date, make sure a friend knows who you're with, where you're going, and when you'll be home.

R.A.D. centers on the "triangular principle of victimization." The crime of rape requires an assailant, a victim and an opportunity. Take away the opportunity or remove the victim from the equation, and there can be no rape.

Author gives safety strategies

FBI projects 1 in 3 women will be sexually assaulted

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"Rape is something like a pebble dropped into a pond. Its impact is so visible at first but it quickly diminishes and society forgets, leaving the victim alone with her pain."

That's how Lawrence Nadeau, author of the Rape Aggression Defense System Handbook, sees society's attitude about rape — oblivious to its magnitude and dismissive of its consequences.

"Until it happens to them or someone they know and love, its just another headline, just another crime that happens to someone else," said Nadeau, in his R.A.D. handbook for class participants.

Nadeau founded Rape Aggression and Defense Systems, Inc., in Virginia, to increase public awareness and educate women on the rape aggression defense.

The FBI projects one out of every three women will be sexually assaulted in her lifetime. In the United States, a rape occurs every seven minutes. About 90,000 rapes are reported to the police each year, and it's estimated that almost 90 percent of all rapes or attempted rapes go unreported.

Sexual assault is such a common occurrence, society has become desensitized to its victims, Nadeau said.

"Rape has been called, by many victims, unfinished murder. It's a vicious crime. Surviving it is not only a physical and legal matter, it also includes emotional survival," Nadeau said.

There have been five reported rape cases on Fort Benning this year — far below the national average, per capita. But post officials encourage residents to practice the safety precautions Nadeau teaches.

> "Rape has been called, by many victims, unfinished murder. It's a vicious crime,"
> Lawrence Nadeau,
> Founder R.A.D. Systems, Inc.

"We certainly don't have a problem with rape here on Fort Benning, but if there's only one case a year, that's one too many," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement Division. "We never want to become complacent about safety here on post."

Below is a list of strategies to help reduce the risk of assault, abduction and rape at home, in the car or on public transportation:

•Try "casing" your own home. Attempt to enter when locked and secured.

•Close blinds and curtains and, from the outside, see if you can track movement in your home.

•Install outdoor lighting around doors and windows. If you live in barracks, carry a flashlight to and from the parking lot.

•Keep shrubs and bushes trimmed 6 inches below the window ledge.

•Lock screen doors and windows, even on the second floor.

•Do not hide a spare key at your home.

•Use your peep hole. If you must answer to a stranger, such as a delivery man, let him assume there is someone with you. Call "I'll get it, honey," before opening the door.

•If you get a harassing phone call, hang up immediately and report it to the police.

•Leave lights on if you'll be returning after dark.

•Get to know your neighbors. Give them emergency contact numbers.

•When approaching your vehicle, check underneath.

•Before getting into your vehicle, give it a visual check — in the back seat and the floorboards.

•Keep bags and purses out of sight.

•Be wary of mechanisms that automatically unlock all four doors at once.

•Keep at least a fourth of a tank of gas.

•Don't give your key ring to a repairman or valet. Remove the key.

•If you think you're being followed, drive to the nearest police department or fire station. Don't stop at isolated intersections.

•If you're stranded with a disabled vehicle, place a sign in the window requesting police assistance. Stay in your car and lock the doors.

•If you are "bumped," consider continuing to a populated, well-lighted spot to contact the police.

•Park in a well-lighted spot. Avoid parking next to vans or large vehicles.

•Be ready to use your keys for self-defense. Poke them at the assailant's eyes or throat.

•On an elevator, stand close to the control panel. Familiarize yourself with the position of the call buttons.

•Don't label luggage with your home address — use an office address or post office box, if possible.

•Try to sit next to the driver on a bus. Don't sit in the back. Avoid isolated stops.

•When calling a taxi, ask the driver's name and cab number. Give them to a friend.

•When meeting someone you'd like to see again, ask for his phone number, instead of giving yours. Giving a cell number is preferable to a home number.

•Meet him at an agreed upon location, and make sure a friend knows your plans.

•Say goodnight at the car, not at your door. Don't feel pressured to invite him in.

•Be careful how your name is listed on your mailbox and in the phone book. Use your first initial.

•Avoid vanity plates with identify you or indicate your gender.

•Wear nonrestrictive clothes.

Class: Teaches women warning signs

R.A.D. centers on the "triangular principle of victimization." The crime of rape requires an assailant, a victim and an opportunity. Take away the opportunity or remove the victim from the equation, and there can be no rape.

The course is designed to refute the four myths about rape: Women are physically powerless against men; women secretly want to be raped; only young, attractive women are raped; and only women with bad reputations are raped.

McManus said the class gives women the confidence they need to recognize their own strengths.

"Self-defense is not about size — it's about technique," he said. "It's all leverage and mechanics. I compare these women to welter-weight boxers. They may be small in size, but if they know how to defend themselves, you don't want to mess with them."

More than 100,000 women across the country have been trained in the R.A.D. Basic Physical Defense Program since 1989. The Virginia-based company encourages class participants to take refresher courses periodically.

"These are perishable skills. If you don't use it, you lose it," McManus said. "We have a lifetime return and practice policy. Once you've taken the course by a certified trainer, you can take it again to brush up on your skills anytime, anywhere."

For more information about the R.A.D. course, call McManus at 649-7892, ext. 111.

feature teacher

Iris Kimbley,

a third-grade teacher at McBride Elementary School.

Personal: A native of Ironton, Ohio, Kimbley is the seventh of eight children. She is married to Capt. Bill Kimbley with the 11th Infantry Regiment. They met while attending Austin Peay State University in Tennessee. Though both were studying to be teachers, Bill enrolled in the ROTC program and accepted a commission in the U.S. Army.

"I know education is important to Bill because he is excited to hear about what we are working on in class," she said. "We both have the 'teacher' in us."

They have two sons, Tyler, 9, and Blake, 5.

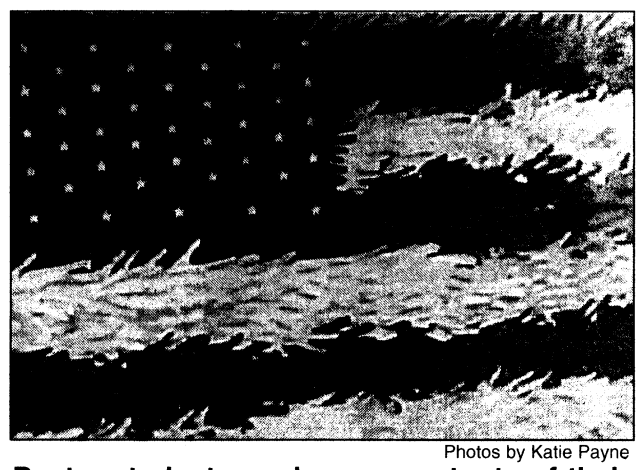
Pets: The Kimbleys share their home with a dog, a cat, a hermit crab and a salt water aquarium filled with a colorful assortment of fish and corral.

Education: She has earned a bachelor's degree in education from Austin Peay State University and a master's degree in education from Troy State University. Kimbley plans to begin her education specialist's degree next year.

History: Kimbley knew she wanted to teach as early as the second grade, when her second-grade teacher made learning so much fun. She has enjoyed teaching for 10 years, eight at Fort Benning.

Kimbley embraces technology in the classroom. She teaches in a discourse classroom , where each student uses a studycom, much like a laptop computer, to answer questions and participate in the lessons.

Hobbies: Kimbley enjoys outdoor activities with her family. They frequently swim and hike along Georgia trails.



When she's not outdoors, Kimbley settles down with a good book or reads aloud with her sons.

Goal: "I hope my students go away feeling that they like learning and realize the importance of learning, and that they never want to stop learning," Kimbley said. "I hope they learn to accept each other's differences and work together."

Kimbley credits the Department of Defense school system, the parents and the dedication of her collegues for the success she has had in the classroom.

Personal style: "I never stop being a mom. I never stop being a teacher. I incorporate both into my classroom, because both are a part of me," Kimbley said. "I hope everyday that my students get something out of the lessons and go home feeling good about themselves."

You're a grand ol' flag

Photos by Katie Payne

Dexter students made paper cutouts of their hands to form this American flag, which is on display at the school.

Glad to be an American

I'm glad to be an American.
I'm as happy as can be.
I like to see the stars and stripes flying freely over me.
I'll stand up for what's right
even if I'm only 53 inches in height.
Because everyone has a right to fight no matter how big or small even if they're only 4 feet tall.
In some countries you don't get to fight for what's right if you're really, really small.
That's why I'm glad to be an American.
The greatest country of all!

— Brittany Starr

Dexter students celebrate diversity

Katie Payne
Dexter Elementary School

Researching and writing, speaking and listening, singing and dancing, cooking and eating and making pinatas and flags are but a few of the many ways that Dexter students celebrated cultural diversity during September and October.

Students in Marge Brasfield's classes researched Hispanic countries and presented oral reports, which included visual aides such as maps, flags, artifacts and native dishes. Tasty treats ranged from tangy, homemade salsa to delicious sweet potato bread and flan.

Pre-K children joined their older literacy buddies for a host of activities planned by teachers and parent volunteers. These activities ranged from making maracas to dancing the Mexican hat dance to making (and breaking) pinatas. The celebrations even included a tasting party, with a smorgasbord of dishes for sampling.

The celebration culminated Oct. 5 with a musical of many cultures. This musical, orchestrated by Cy Dietrich, performing arts teacher, opened and closed with a lovely rendition of It's a Small World After All. Performed by fourth-graders, the musical featured small groups of students in songs and dances from other countries, including China and Israel. They sang a greeting song in English, Spanish, Swahili and Japanese.

Students from White Elementary School also performed in the program, sharing costumes and dances from Columbia, Puerto Rico and Mexico.

Many struggle for meaning every day

Chaplain (Maj.) Steven Russ
11th Infantry Regiment

reflections

All of us, at times in our lives, have struggles we must deal with.

For some it is work or home life. Others have to struggle in the community for acceptance.

Still others struggle to keep the faith when they are confronted with trauma. We will always be faced with doing the right thing, or taking the more popular easy choice of self-convenience. All these are part of this existence we call life.

God and our faith community do not abandon us in our struggles. We are reminded in the scriptures of the great promises. Stories are written about individuals who overcame tremendous odds and regained balance in life. Others suffered through the pain of loss and discovered new life to experience.

Russ

The person of faith does not confront struggles alone. There are many persons available to assist in time of struggles. The key to assistance is a simple request. When the individual is unable to ask for assistance then we go to him or her.

While I write this article, the events of Sept. 11 are still fresh in the minds of the majority in America. Even now, a month later, it still seems unreal to me. The tragic loss of life is beyond my comprehension. Yet I have seen the best begin to come out of many this past week.

Individuals give time, blood, money and prayers for everyone involved. People come together to aid their neighbor in time of a great struggle between good and evil. People struggle together to overcome the terrorist attack on innocent persons.

Individuals are turning back to their faith as they struggle to give meaning to that senseless act of violence. Many will find their answer through faith. They will come out different people. Their struggle for meaning will provide them a source of strength.

The terrorists will discover they have lost again in their attempt to destroy the idea of personal freedom.

What are you struggling with this day? What difficult issue or person are you trying to give meaning to? You are not alone. Look around and ask for assistance. God and the communities of faith are available.

No one has to suffer alone in life.

The people of faith are representatives of God who showed us the path to honest and moral behavior.

I cannot promise you will never struggle for meaning again. I affirm you will. I share with you, however, that the struggle for meaning produces mature disciples who are committed to change the world for the good of all.

Our struggles in life can and will reveal our weaknesses. It is up to us to take advantage of those moments and become stronger in our faith. We cannot give up on our struggle for meaning.

Remember, we have a "great cloud of witnesses" around us. It is their example, that we the living, find strength in moments of confusion and doubt. They made it, so can we.

Let us continue our journey to find meaning from our struggles. If you are having difficulty with an area of your life, contact a chaplain or counselor.

Editor's note: Russ is the 11th Infantry Regimental Chaplain. He is ordained by the United Methodist Church. He is a native of North Carolina, is married and has three children.

Who controls your emotions?

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

We control our emotions or our emotions control us. It's that simple.

Some advocate that we should give vent to our emotions through primal screams. Rather than bottling up our emotions, we are encouraged to "let it all hang out." Such admonitions are detrimental and destructive.

Giving full vent to our anger produces heartache and regret. A proverb states, "The fool rages and scoffs, and there is no peace. A fool gives full vent to his anger, but a wise man keeps himself under control." (Proverbs 29:9, 11)

Koop

Our co-workers, spouse, and children remember the words spoken in the heat of the moment. Once spoken, like chaff tossed into the wind, our words can't be retrieved.

Some people are quick to argue and fight. They tend to be rigid, uncompromising, always right and never wrong. Rather than being obstinate and bullheaded, we should seek peace. "It is to a man's honor to avoid strife, but every fool is quick to quarrel." (Proverbs 20:3)

Giving vent to our emotions makes us reckless and causes us to do foolish things.

"A wise man fears the Lord and shuns evil, but a fool is hotheaded and reckless. A quick-tempered man does foolish things." (Proverbs 14:16-17)

Hotheaded people may become physically abusive. Rather than controlling their rage, they frequently strike out at those who love them the most.

Would you like help in controlling your emotions? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail to USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Callaway to host military weekend

Duval, top golfers to compete in tournament

Ann Ragsdale
Buick Challenge Public Relations

The 2001 Buick Challenge is Monday through Oct. 28 at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga.

Instead of having Military Appreciation Day Oct. 26, Callaway Gardens will host Military Appreciation Weekend, presented by AUSA, Oct. 26-28. All military and their families, active duty or retired, will be admitted free of charge with a valid military ID.

Duval

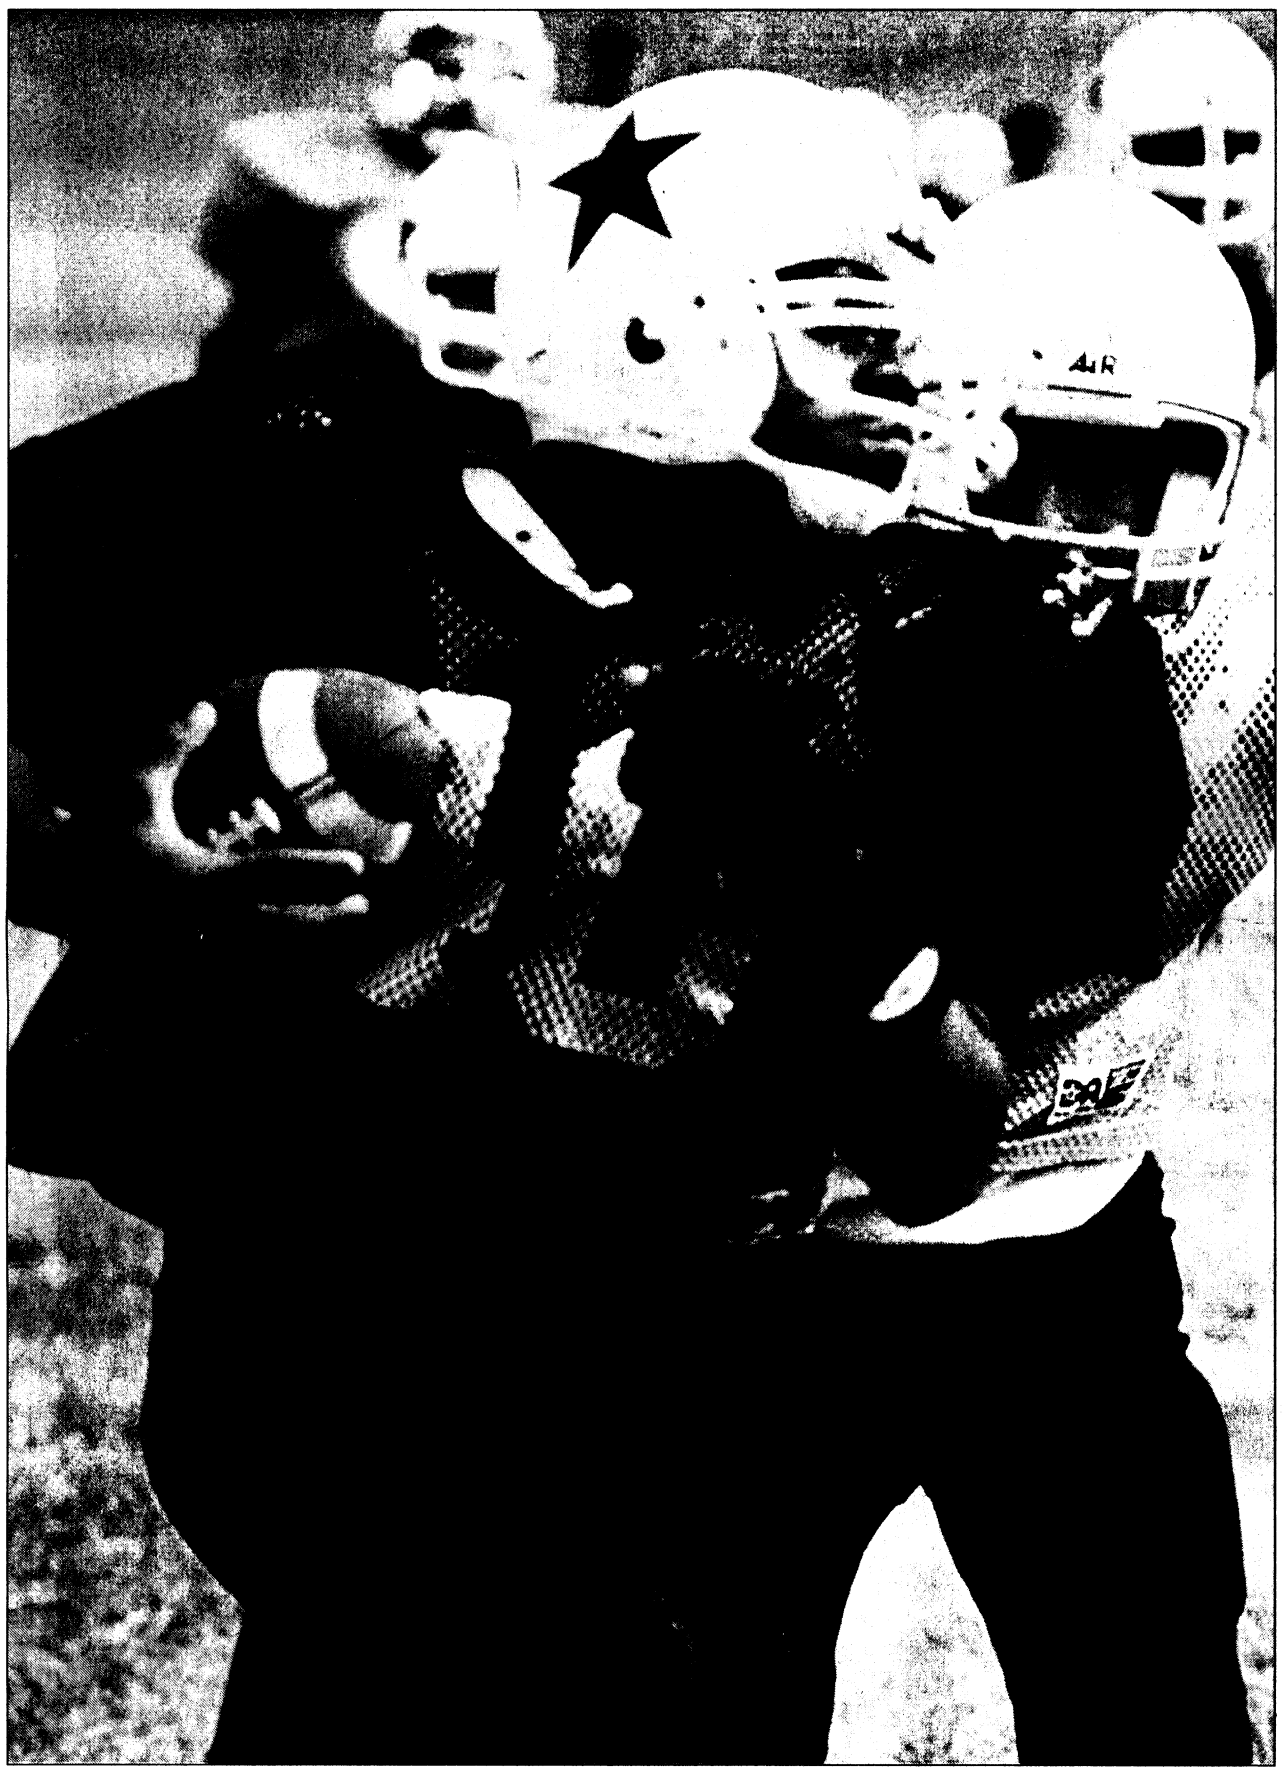
With a purse increase to $3.4 million, the tournament attracts many of the top players on the PGA Tour, offering guests the chance to watch and to participate in some of the finest golf available.

"To play in a pro-am with a PGA Tour golfer, on an official course in a tournament setting, is probably the closest that ticket holders get to playing in a professional tournament," said Dick Ellis, Buick Challenge executive director. "Then they get to watch the pros for four days on the course they actually played."

The week begins Monday, with the Larry Mize Pro-Am on the Mountain View Course. It has an 11:30 a.m. shotgun start. Spectators can follow their favorite PGA Tour golfer during practice rounds Monday and Tuesday. This is free to the public.

The Wednesday Pro-Am takes place on the Mountain View Course. The morning shotgun start is at 8 a.m., followed by the afternoon shotgun start at 1:30 p.m.

Championship play is Thursday through Oct. 28. ESPN will broadcast from 3 to 6 p.m. Thursday, 3 to 6 p.m. Oct. 26 and 4 to 6 p.m. Oct. 27.



The Coca-Cola and Buick Family Golf Experience will be Oct. 27 from 2 to 4 p.m. on the number one tee of the Garden View course.

David Duval returns this year to defend his title from other top PGA Tour players in pursuit of the winner's purse of $612,000 and a 2001 Buick Rendezvous.

Many area charities are beneficiaries of the proceeds generated by the Buick Challenge. Since Buick became the title sponsor in 1990, more than $1,200,000 has been raised, including $174,000 in 2000.

Advance daily tickets are $20 each individual season badges are $85. Group or sponsorship packages are available. Tickets can be purchased by writing to the Buick Challenge Offices, P.O. Box 2056, Columbus, Ga., 31902, by telephone at 324-0411 or 1-888-4CHALLENGE.

Players bang heads in YS games Saturday

Rico Nesmith (black jersey) of the 11- to 12- year-old Cowboys breaks into the open field as Steeler, Andrew Rodriguez closes in for the tackle. The Cowboys and Steelers tied, 6-6, in a hard-fought grid iron battle. Hard hits, big plays and long drives highlighted the game.

Cody Milligan (red jersey) of the 9- to 10-year-old Falcons pulls in a pass as two Cornhuskers tackle him. The Falcons prevailed, 14-6, in week two of the Fort Benning Youth Football game.

YS games take place at Blue Field from 9 a.m. to noon Saturdays. Several teams have open spots. Anyone interested, call 545-3070.

The Fort Benning Athletics scored four runs in extra innings to beat the Rockies, 8-7, Oct. 10 at Golden Park in Columbus.

The Rockies are currently the number one team in the league.

The Athletics trailed all game long and tied it up at the end of the seventh inning to force the game into extra innings.

In the Chattahoochee Men's Fall Baseball League, games are seven innings long, as opposed to games in Major League Baseball, which are nine innings in length.

During the extra innings, the Rockies started out by scoring three runs. But the Athletics came back and scored four. Carlos Velazquez scored the winning run for the 5-6 Athletics.

The start of the game was delayed while the Athletics waited for more of their own to show up so they could play baseball.

After a 30 minute delay, the game started with barely enough players to cover all the positions.

"We've really been struggling to get our players out here," said Ed Gawlik, coach of the Athletics. "They're all pretty tasked out with force protection."

Sunday at 4:30 p.m. the Athletics play the Braves at Golden Park, with a good chance to bring their record up to .500.

All of the games in the CMFBL are played at the home of the Columbus RedStixx at Golden Park.

The season consists of 15 regular season games followed by single-elimination playoffs.

The Fort Benning team placed second last year in the league and is hoping to continue to grow this season.

sports briefs

Golf tournament — The Basic Combat Training Brigade will host the Sand Hill Invitational Golf Tournament at 1 p.m. today on Pineside at the Fort Benning Golf Course.

The entrance fee is $25. All proceeds go toward refreshments and prizes.

The tournament is open to active-duty soldiers, family members, Department of Defense civilians and retirees.

For more information, call Capt. John McLaughlin at 544-8583.

10K, 5K and one-mile walk — The Columbus Symphony Orchestra will present its second annual Footnotes Fun Run Saturday in Uptown Columbus. There will be a 10K, 5K and one-mile race.

The proceeds raised will benefit the symphony's educational programs.

For more information, call Patty Cardin at 323-5059.

Body building championship — The 18th annual Fort Benning Body Building Open Championship is Saturday at the Main NCO Club.

This event is open to everyone.

Registration and weigh-in is from 9 to 11 a.m. Female pre-judging will be at noon. Male pre-judging will be at 12:30 p.m. Final judging will be at 7:30 p.m.

Registration fees are $40 per single division, and $10 for each additional division.

The divisions are divided into male lightweight, male middle-weight, male heavyweight, masters, Mr. Fort Benning, and male open.

There will also be female lightweight, female heavy-weight, Ms. Fort Benning and female open divisions.

For more information, call Carol Gearheart at 544-9486.

Walk and run — The American Cancer Society will hold its Making Strides Against Breast Cancer walk and run at 8 a.m. Oct. 27 at the Columbus Riverwalk. This national event is the single largest breast cancer fundraising program in the U.S.

For more information about organizing a team or registration information, call 324-5614.

Amateur Fall Golf Classic — The Fort Benning Golf Club's third annual Amateur Fall Golf Classic is Oct. 27-28 at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The tournament is open to all male amateur golfers and is a 36-hole individual stroke play. The fee is $110 and includes all tournament play, golf cart rental and a player social and dinner Oct. 26.

Pay-out is five places per flight. Entrants must have a verifiable handicap. All others will play with a handicap of zero.

Starting times for tournament play will be posted at the club Thursday. No starting time or pairing requests will be honored.

Practice rounds will be Oct. 26 and the cart fee for the practice round is $12 and includes range balls. This fee is not included in the tournament fee and is the responsibility of the player.

Entries must be received by Saturday and can be obtained by calling 687-1940.

YS Registration — Youth Services basketball registration for 6- to 15-year-olds will be held from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Oct. 29 through Nov. 9 at Youth Services, Building 1056. Coaches are needed.

For more information, call 545-3070.

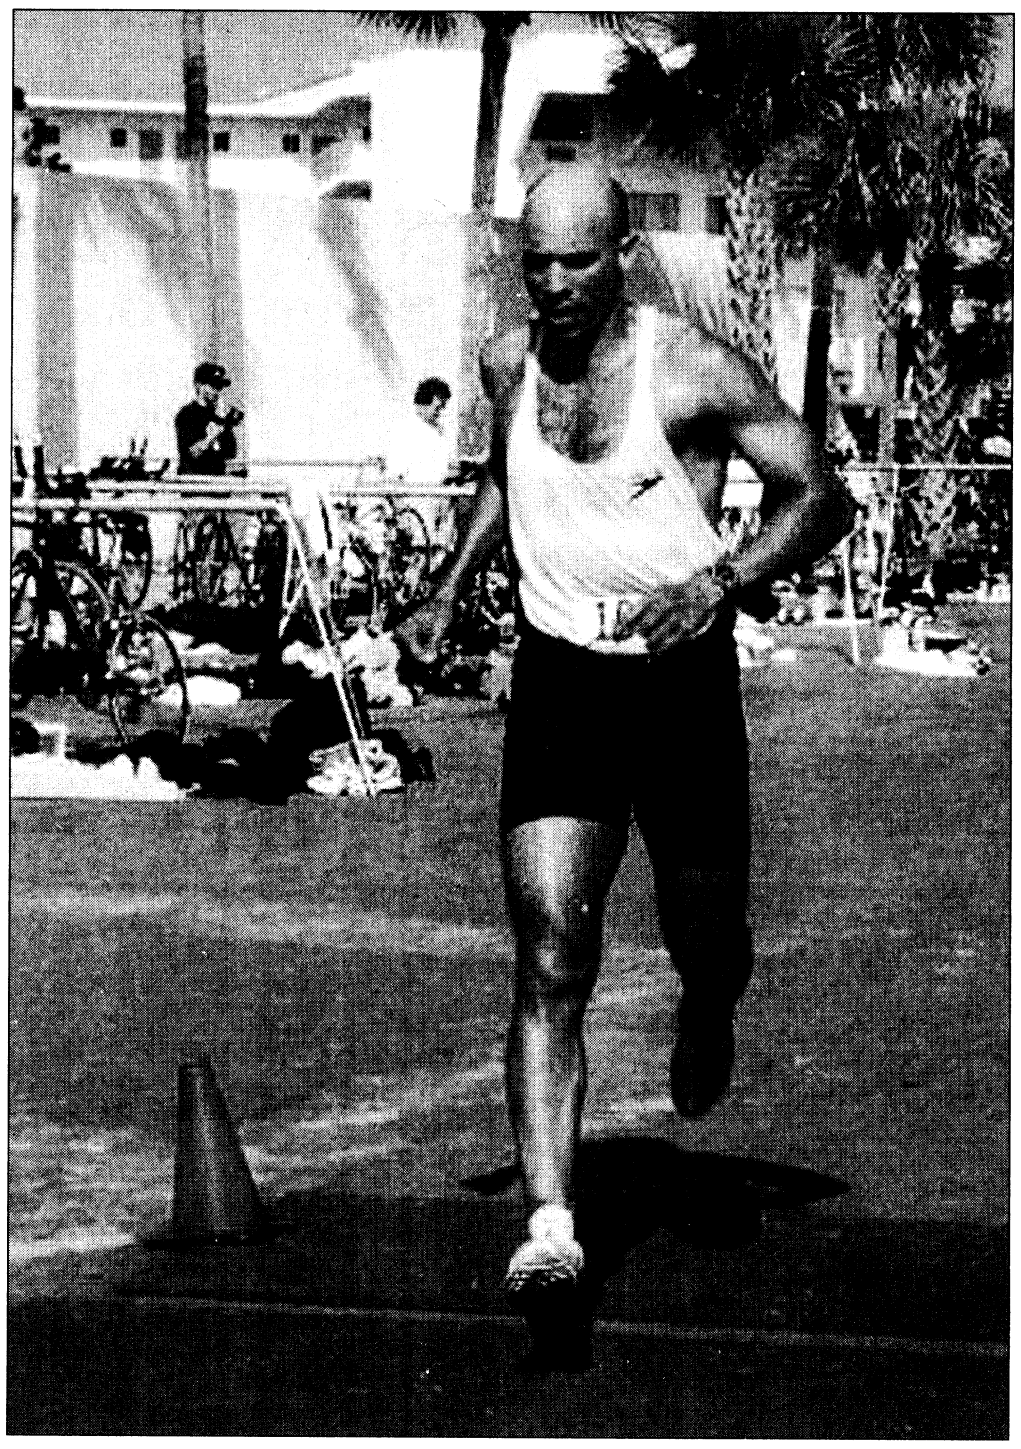
Preservation run — The 24th annual Historic District Preservation Society will present its Preservation Run at 9 a.m. Nov. 3 through the Historic District. The race is the oldest and longest foot race in the Columbus area.

There are 5K and one-mile races. There are numerous age groups and corresponding medals and gift certificates for each race.

For more information, call Richard Judice at 323-2314.

Boxing and wrestling camps — Soldiers interested in being considered for Morale, Welfare, and Recreation all-Army boxing and wrestling trial camps must submit applications to the installation sports offices by Nov. 5. Women are also encouraged to apply for both sports.

The All-Army Boxing Trial Camp is scheduled for Jan. 4 through Feb. 10, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz. The Army box-off will be held Jan. 22-25. The All-Army Wrestling Trial Camp will be held Feb. 4 through March 27, with the Army championships set for March 1-2.



Soldiers' participation is contingent upon their commanders' approval and release.

For more information about the camps, call the Fort Benning Sports Office at 545-4300.

Pistol shooters wanted — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol Team is recruiting soldiers who are interested in competing in pistol competitions in the summer of 2002.

For more information, call Sgt. 1st Class Charles E. Gibbs at 545-3893.

Benning rangers killed in crash

First combat casualties in war on terrorism

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Two Fort Benning rangers became the first combat casualties of the war on terrorism Oct. 19, when the Blackhawk helicopter they were riding in crashed in Pakistan.

Spc. Jonn J. Edmunds, 20, of Wyoming, and Pfc. Kristofor T. Stonesifer, 28, of Montana, were soldiers of B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, engaged in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

Col. Joseph Votel, commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment, lauded the soldiers' outstanding service in a statement read by deputy commander Lt. Col. Mark Ritter.

"As stated by the president, John and Kristofor's deaths will not be in vain," Votel said.

"They embodied the indomitable spirit of the American ranger, looking fear in the face and executing their orders flawlessly. We all feel their loss and mourn their passing."

Edmunds leaves behind his wife of two years, Anne. The couple, married by a justice of the peace, was planning to renew their vows in a church ceremony in November.

Edmunds joined the Army in July 1999 and became a part of the 75th Ranger Regiment five months later.

Stonesifer attended the University of Montana before joining the Army in 2000. A former regimental soldier called the deaths of Edmunds and Stonesifer "a total loss."

Spc. Hiromi Cota served with both soldiers until May, when he transferred to 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"I knew Edmunds for nearly two years, and I was just getting to know Stonesifer," Cota said. "Edmunds always had a joke, always had a way of lightening up the situation. He had a quick wit.

"Stonesifer was the new guy, always willing to do whatever was needed. He was extremely motivated, really driven. He was totally focused on being a soldier," Cota said.

Cota learned the identity of the soldiers Sunday.

"Someone told me. I just couldn't believe it," he said. "I went online to CNN to see for myself. The first thing I thought was this is so wrong. They're gone much too early. Edmunds was a real asset and Stonesifer had so much ahead of him," Cota said.

Red, white, blue, pride on parade

Children from the Santa Fe Child Development Center, ages 6 months to 5 years, participated in a red, white and blue parade Oct. 19 for their parents followed by the singing of "God Bless America."

After the parade, in which 130 children participated, the parents were invited into their child's classroom for an all-American picnic of hot dogs, chips and sodas with apple cake for dessert.

Organizer Carolyn Harris said, "We just wanted to show our military parents how much we appreciate them. We're developing our curriculum around the Armed Forces. Normally we do seasonal things, but we're trying to broaden that area a little bit."

WASHINGTON — "We are happy, eager and willing to do what we can to help seek out and destroy the Taliban and al Qaeda forces," Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld told reporters during a Monday Pentagon press briefing.

Rumsfeld emphasized that the reason for the air attacks is to destroy Taliban and al Qaeda forces. To that end, the United States and coalition partners have been seeking out troop concentrations and are increasing air attacks against them in northern Afghanistan.

"It happens that they're arrayed against, for the most part, Northern Alliance forces in the northwest portion of the country," he said. "Our efforts from the air clearly are to assist those forces on the ground in being able to occupy more ground."

Success in finding Taliban and al Qaeda positions has been mixed, he said. "To the extent we have excellent ground to air coordination the success improves," he said. "To the extent the forces move forward against Taliban and al Qaeda forces, our success improves because it flushes them."

Fort Benning currently has four commercial activities (A-76) studies in various stages of development, covering 1,354 positions (1,255 civilian and 99 military).

The study regarding the directorates of Logistics and of Public Works showed 1,077 positions (1,064 civilian and 13 military) and the initial decision resulted in a contract win Aug. 25, 2000.

As soon as the final decision report is approved and Congress is notified, dates will be established for Fort Benning's contract with IT Corporation of Monroeville, Pa.

IT Corp. was the winner; however, a competing contractor, Johnson Controls, protested the win. The General Accounting Office upheld this protest and instructed TRADOC Acquisition Center to resolve the protest.

A second protest by Johnson Controls was filed with GAO May 17 following TRADOC's attempts to resolve the matter. The second protest was denied by GAO Aug. 19 and Johnson Controls formally withdrew from contract bidding.

Fort Benning is currently preparing a final decision report to submit through TRADOC to the Department of the Army in early November.

Upon approval of the report, the Department of the Army will notify Congress.

After Congressional notification, Fort Benning will formally announce a contract award date and a contract start date.

The period of time between the contract award date and the contract start date is expected to take at least 150 days.

"The protest process has stretched this out for a year," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

We've been hit. Our home has been hit by a ghost, for goodness sake.

One night last week, shortly after 10 p.m., someone rang our doorbell and ran, leaving behind a bagful of candy and a note.

My son and I were the only two awake at that time. I arrived at the door a millisecond before him and reached for the package.

"Whoa, Mom. Don't touch that chocolate. It could be covered with anthrax. I'll take it from here," said my son, my hero.

While Tom was checking out the goods (read 'eating'), I read the note, which was actually a poem explaining the nature of the gift.

It's loosely based on the pay-it-forward principle. Once we were hit, we were obligated to leave a Halloween gift for three other families, who would in turn pass it on to nine more families and so on.

Well naturally I thought about the terrorist scare. Is this game something I really want to perpetuate, knowing how skittish people are right now?

For the record, I was never really afraid the candy was tainted with anthrax. (But I had a horrible fear it was laden with a gazillion calories, and, if I should come into contact with even one, it would surely homestead on my thighs, get too cozy with its neighbors and reproduce at lightening speed.) So while I avoided the candy like the plague itself, I decided to trust my instincts.

And my instincts tell me my friends and neighbors are tired of the general hysteria surrounding this whole anthrax thing. We're sick and tired of being haunted by the unknown. We're taking all the necessary precautions, using our God-given common sense and avoiding the kind of situations that could jeopardize our safety, but we're not willing to sacrifice our personal freedoms on the altar of fear.

So I made up my mind to play the game and to take it beyond my own neighborhood. The kids and I delivered not three, but five, bags of goodies to our friends around post, hoping to encourage a spirit of goodwill and good faith at a time its sorely needed.

Many thanks to you, whoever you are, who left that little bag of goodies on my doorstep. Cross my heart, I didn't eat a single bite, but I enjoyed something far sweeter than candy — a renewed sense of unity with my neighbors, tempered by a healthy dose of reality of course.

We'll continue to be cautious, but not paranoid. We'll keep an eye out for each other and our children.

We'll perform all the usual precautions on Halloween and for a long time to come. But we'll not be the victims of doubt and fear.

I hope you'll all be "hit" by the ghost of Halloween happiness, and I hope you'll spread it around.

Happy haunting.

'God Bless America' not a prayer

commentary

Connie R. Lund
Bayonet correspondent

I've recently become very angry over a story I watched on a national cable news station. The specifics of the story have escaped me, but the gist of it goes something like this: An elementary school in middle America displayed a patriotic sign outside of the school which read "God Bless America."

In our recent time of pain, after the tragic events of Sept. 11, Americans are seeing and hearing this phrase all over the place. I feel proud every time I see such display of affection for our great country.

However, what concerned and angered me about the news story was that a chapter of the ACLU, prompted by a student's parents, was considering a lawsuit against the school district for displaying the "God Bless America" sign.

The family claimed the sign and specifically the use of the generic word "God," violated and offended their First Amendment right to freedom of religion, specifically a separation of church and state.

I am appalled that during this time of healing and unity within our country, there are still individuals who are more concerned with raising trite legal issues, than concentrating on the larger picture of protecting and helping our nation.

Now, do not misunderstand me, I do not take the Constitution or the freedoms granted us in the Bill of Rights lightly. I am a licensed attorney and have read numerous books, cases and excerpts on the Constitution.

I have read many books on the life and ideals of Thomas Jefferson, one of our founding fathers. I have defended individuals in criminal cases protecting their rights guaranteed under the Constitution.

I fully believe in the right to practice whatever religion one chooses. I believe that neither the government nor public schools have the right to teach religion to children. However, I believe the individuals mentioned above are going too far.

A public school displaying this sign is not forcing anyone to believe or not believe in any form of religion. In fact, the 1st Amendment reads: "Congress shall make no laws respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise there of ..." This public display of patriotism is not anyone's attempt to force a religion on any individual.

Furthermore, I am not aware of any rulings by the U.S. Supreme Court restricting schools from displaying such patriotism.

The phrase "God Bless America" has become a catch phrase used by all. To take the absurdity further, the use of the word "God" is very common in our government and patriotic life.

Consider many of our favorite patriotic songs: "God Bless America," "America the Beautiful," "America" or "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," all contain the word God in them.

Are we to stop teaching our children these great songs in the name of the 1st Amendment?

Or, on another spectrum, reach into your pocket and pull out a coin. Money minted by the federal government contain the phrase, "In God We Trust." Are we to change our money to appease those few who may be offended?

The point being, the use of the word "God" in signs, songs or coins is not a violation of any individual's freedom of religion.

In a time when many of us may be saying good bye to friends and loved ones about to embark on dangerous missions in Afghanistan and other nations, we as a country should be concerned with supporting each other, and loving America, not raising trivial lawsuits. We should not be complaining about an institutional phrase we have all come to love as a unifying theme.

I am comfortable our founding fathers never intended their confirmation of the Bill of Rights to be used as a target against what is just and good. It is my opinion that George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and James Madison would join our president, George W. Bush, in proclaiming, "God Bless America."

Former student offers condolences

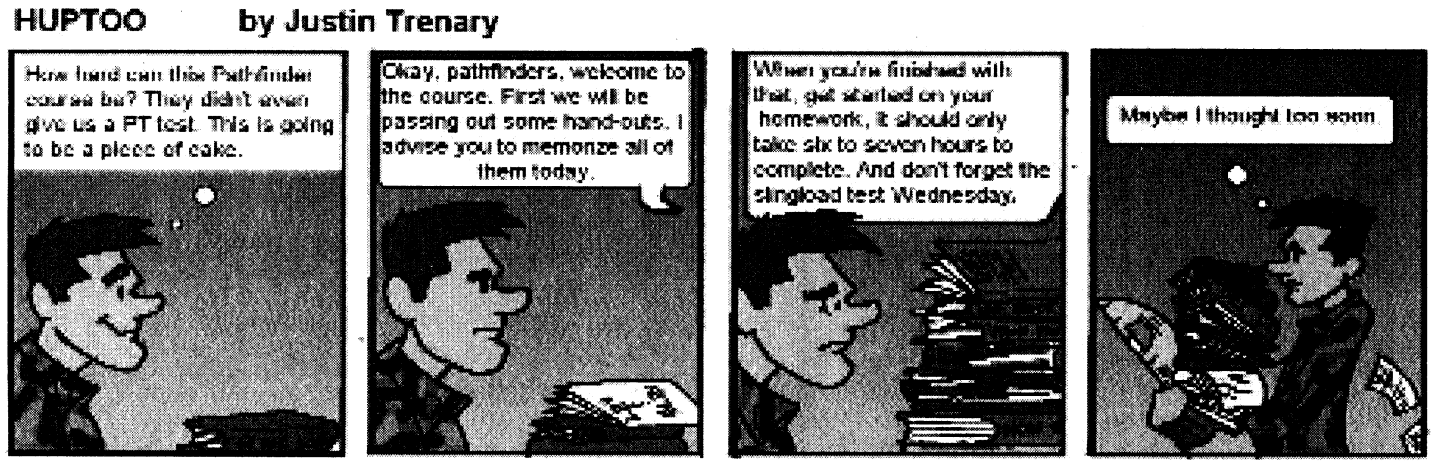
To all staff and other members of Fort Benning: I was very much shocked when I heard of the barbaric acts on New York and Washington, D.C. by terrorists, so my condolences for you and the families of the victims.

The reason of my condolence is because I was one of the students of Fort Benning, and I am proud of that.

On my way to Fort Benning, the first city I saw was New York. I also enjoyed the beautiful and unforgettable sight of Fort Hamilton on transit.

After I visited Fort Benning, I was also very much privileged to visit Washington as part of the school's program.



It was at that time that I also visited the Pentagon, a magnificent building and also the nerve center of the armed forces of the American nation.

With all this in mind, I felt very sorry for what has happened in New York and Washington and I hope you will recover soon.

God Bless America and God Bless Fort Benning, Home of the Infantry.

West Nile virus found on post

Two horses at Hunt Club have mosquito-borne disease

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Tonya Johnson

Capt. Louis Huzella, chief of Veterinary Services, vaccinates Bob and Debra Greer's 25 year-old horse, Pollyanna, against the West Nile virus Tuesday at the Fort Benning Hunt Club.

Two horses tested positive for West Nile virus last week at the Hunt Club off Marne Road.

One horse was asymptomatic, while the other exhibited symptoms, including slight muscle twitching and problems with hind and limb coordination.

"Just because a horse has West Nile doesn't mean that it will be put to sleep," Huzella said. "In this case, it was a quality of life decision. The horse was put to sleep because it was suffering."

Mosquitoes are the primary carriers of the disease, and Huzella thinks they infected the horses.

Horses can have West Nile and show symptoms or not. These are the first confirmed cases at Fort Benning.

There is no medication to give a horse that has the virus, only supportive care. Supportive care includes giving the horse fluids and keeping the horse on its feet whether in slings or straps, said Huzella.

The mortality rate is almost 40 percent for a horse that becomes clinically ill from the virus.

The recovery time for horses with West Nile is three to seven days or even longer depending on the horse, Huzella said. Once infected, the horse isn't contagious and cannot spread the virus to other horses.

Precautionary measures have always been in place to minimize a potential outbreak on post, and additional measures have been stepped up since the virus was found on post, said Lt. Col. Joaquin Oronoz, chief of Preventative Medicine, Martin Army Community Hospital.

Before the West Nile virus was confirmed, there were five mosquito surveillance traps around post, which were emptied twice a week. The mosquitoes were sent to the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine and analyzed. None of them tested positive for West Nile.

Now there are four traps located at the stable, and Oronoz said none of the mosquitoes have tested positive for West Nile nor does the post have a huge mosquito population. Some posts may have 150 mosquitoes from their traps, while Fort Benning has never had more than 30.

Humans have a slim chance of contracting the disease from an infected mosquito.

"A regular healthy soldier, even if bitten, won't have any symptoms or may have mild flu-like symptoms," Oronoz said.

He said a soldier's uniform would protect him or her because the fabric contains permethrin, a substance that acts as a mosquito repellent.

Symptoms for West Nile in humans include fever, severe headache, eye pain, drowsiness, extreme muscle weakness and enlarged lymph nodes. For most people, the symptoms are mild. Moderate to extreme symptoms usually occur in the very young or elderly, who typically have weakened immune systems.

Humans can prevent contracting the virus by wearing long sleeve shirts, pants, boots and insect repellent.

To prevent a horse from contracting the virus, Huzella recommends minimizing mosquito breeding grounds, which includes removing stagnant water and changing the water every one to two days.

An insect repellent approved and labeled for animal use is also recommended.

There is a vaccination available for horses, and Huzella started vaccinating the horses at the stable Tuesday.

The asymptomatic horse is continuing to do well, and the horse which displayed symptoms has been improving.

It's important not to overreact to the virus being found at Fort Benning.

"The disease is here, and we need to come to terms with it like any other mosquito-borne disease," Huzella said. "There are worse mosquito-borne diseases than West Nile."

DoD introduces savings plan

Plan offers many options for soldiers

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

Active and reserve service members can now participate in the Thrift Savings Plan.

"This plan is attractive for young soldiers planning at least five years of service," said Maj. Colin Weeks, chief of the Defense Military Pay Office.

The TSP, a retirement savings and investment plan, is not an automatic deduction from soldiers' paychecks. Soldiers must sign-up for the plan. It is designed to provide participants with pre-tax, tax-deferred investment earnings similar to a private corporation's 401(k) plans.

Previously the DoD offered the opportunity only to federal civilian employees.

The Floyd D. Spence National Defense Authorization Act of fiscal 2001 extended the program to members of the Army, Air Force, Marine Corps, Navy, Coast Guard and uniformed members of the Public Health Service, and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. Service members must register with their service.

Service members can download Thrift Savings Plans Election Form, TSP-U-1 forms off the www.TSP.gov Web site or fill out a form at their personnel administration center.

Registration for the plan is happening now until Jan. 31, 2002. Afterwards, members will only be able to register, disenroll or change the amount of their contribution during annual "open seasons." These periods are May 15 through July 31 and Nov. 15 through Jan. 31.

Initial entry members will be briefed on the plan within 60 days of arrival to Fort Benning.

Uniformed members can contribute up to 7 percent of their basic pay in any of five TSP funds:

- The conservative G Fund that consists of investments in short term, nonmarketable U.S. Treasury securities specially issued to TSP.
- The F Fund, TSP's bond market index fund.
- The C Fund is the plan's large-company U.S. stock index fund.
- The S Fund is a medium and small company stock index fund.
- The I Fund is an international stock index fund, concentrated in Europe, Australia and Asia.

The G Fund is the only fund that investments and earnings are back by the government against loss.

Participants may also contribute any amount of incentive or special pay to include bonus pay.

"This plan is another investment vehicle for soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class Stanley Doyle, NCOIC, DMPO. "But before investing in this or any plan, people should do their homework. This plan is not a guarantee to an easy retirement."

Participants will not receive matching funds from the government except those in specialities designated critical by their service secretaries. However, those members will be obligated to serve a six-year active duty commitment.

The TSP, administered by the Federal Retirement Thrift Investment Board, is separate from and in addition to the military retirement system. The military retirement system is a benefit program that is based on the number of years of service and rank held at the time of retirement.

The TSP is a contribution plan that depends on how much of pay is contributed to the account during the working years and the earnings on those contributions.

Members separating from the services have several options for withdrawing from their TSP accounts. One, all or a portion of the account can be transferred to an Individual Retirement Account or to another eligible retirement plan.

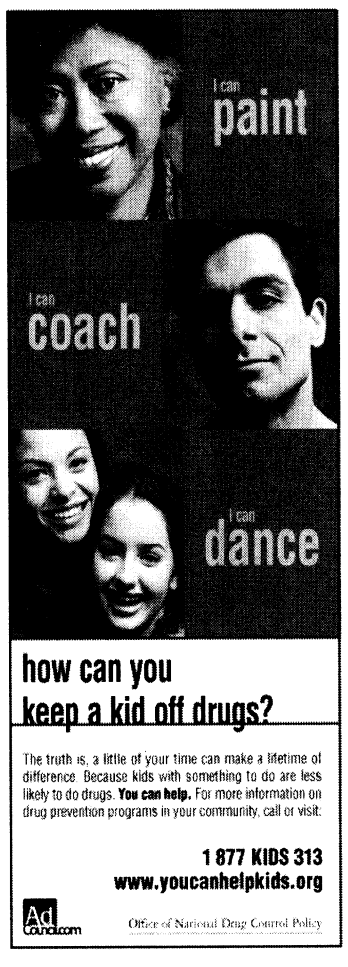
Second, individuals can request a series of monthly installments based on a dollar amount, a number of months or his life expectancy.

Third, request a TSP annuity, but members must have at least $3,500 in the account in order to purchase an annuity.

Last, individuals can leave their money in the TSP where it will continue to accrue earnings. Although no more contributions can be made toward the TSP, interfund transfers will still be possible. Still, owners must begin withdrawing from their account no later than April 1 of the year following turning age 70 and a-half.

Service members can withdraw anytime from their TSP but with penalties. As a service member, any withdraw before the age of 59 is subject to IRS 10 percent early withdrawal penalty and regular income tax.

After separation from the services, other rules apply.



"We will provide all the insight and assistance to anyone having questions concerning this new plan," Weeks said.

The Army Community Service Financial Readiness Program is available to counsel service members about the plan and provide classes to units and Family Readiness Groups on investment aspects of the plan.

Service members interested in the TSP can attend a Financial Counseling Intake Mondays at 8:15 a.m. in Building 2624. Unit and FRGs can call 545-5485 for more information.

Donation earmarked for Cancer Society

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Pvt. Levarr Chism donated $504 to the Combined Federal Campaign Oct. 17. Base pay for an E-1 in today's military is $964.80 a month.

"You've got to spend it somewhere, you might as well give it to CFC," Chism said.

Chism is currently at the CONUS Replacement Center awaiting deployment to Bosnia.

Chism did basic training here, but is stationed out of Fort Bragg with 4/159 Aviation.

Chism feels that donating to the CFC is something that everyone should do.

"Everybody's got to do their part, you never know when it might be you on the other side," he said.

Chism's donation went to the American Cancer Society.

"My mom died from brain cancer last December," he said.

"I just want the money to go somewhere where it can do some good."

Sgt. Missy Martin, CFC campaign officer for the CONUS Replacement Center was very impressed with the donation Chism made.

"It means a lot to see someone young recognize how important CFC is. Especially now, following the attacks, the response has been tremendous," Martin said.

The CRC's battalion Sgt. Maj. Randy Corey was also approving of Chism's generosity.

"He is a good example of the selfless-service embodied by today's soldiers," Corey said.

Chism plans to continue his generous donations.

"Once you start, it's just a habit, you just keep donating. Better to give somebody the money than to just go out and waste it on junk," Chism said.

A CLOSER LOOK

The Fort Benning Combined Federal Campaign continues through Nov. 2.

- The post's goal this year is $500,000.
- Fort Benning soldiers and their families received more than $400,000 in agency services in one year.
- Contributions made to Code 9001 directly benefit Fort Benning soldiers and their families while Code 9000 funds go to the tricommunity.
- Donations may also be split among more than one charity, up to a minimum of five.
- Immediate gifts of cash or check can be made or donors may choose to have small amounts deducted from their paychecks.

DoD wants more vaccine

Bioport given second opportunity

Gerry J. Gilmore
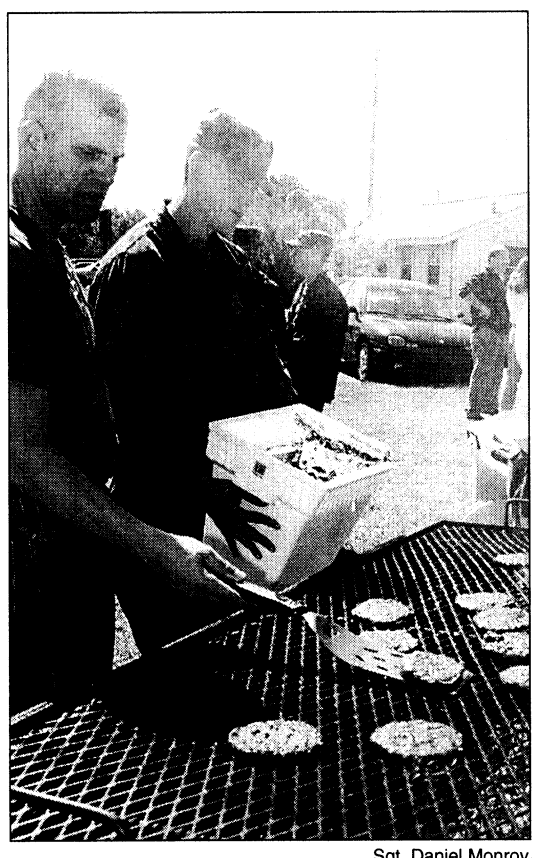
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — DoD will look at ways to kick-start U.S. production of anthrax vaccine that, up to now, has been manufactured by just one company in Michigan, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Oct. 19.

Rumsfeld remarked to Pentagon reporters that DoD is going to try to save its anthrax vaccine program with manufacturer Bioport. He noted that other efforts to produce anthrax vaccine for the U.S. military had "failed over a period of years."



DoD's business relationship with Bioport to acquire anthrax vaccine may or may not be savable, he added.

Bioport was DoD's sole contractor for anthrax vaccine. The company has had quality control problems and hasn't produced any vaccine for some time. Its manufacturing operations lack Food and Drug Administration approval.

Rumsfeld said he discussed the vaccine issue today with S.C. "Pete" Aldridge, defense undersecretary for acquisition, technology and logistics, and David S.C. Chu, defense undersecretary for personnel and readiness.

He said they or their representatives will meet with Department of Health and Human Services officials to discuss the vaccine situation.

Rumsfeld said DoD would try to fashion an arrangement that would give Bioport one more chance at supply an FDA-approved anthrax vaccine.

College reps answer questions about education

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Broadcasting live from Soldiers' Plaza, MAGIC 98.3 and the Fort Benning Education Service Center were "getting the word out on education," said Rasheeda K. Ali, MAGIC 98.3 program director.

More than 600 people showed up to get a fast track on education with seven colleges on-hand to answer questions and assist with registration.

"It's never too late to get an education," said Elaine Livingston, Education Services officer at Fort Benning.

While the event was geared mainly for the military community, Livingston wanted to inform the public that classes on Fort Benning are also open to them.

Representatives from Troy State University, Columbus Technical College, Georgia Military College, Vincennes University, Columbus State University, Chattahoochee Valley Community College, Embry Riddle University and eArmy University set up booths with brochures, registration forms and general information about their school and the programs offered.

From two-year and four-year degrees to post-graduate programs, the range of educational opportunities covered the needs of most prospective students.

Some soldiers are looking to expand on college they already have, like Sgt. David Best, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, who is considering a second masters degree in education. Others are just getting started, like Pfc. A. O' Neil of the Georgia National Guard who is working on the basics at Georgia Military College.

"I like this college. The classes are small and instructors really work with soldiers on a personal basis," O' Neil said.

RANGERS: 'Put their lives on line'

Gen. Richard B. Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, called Edmunds and Stonesifer heroes.

"They and all who are participating in Operation Enduring Freedom are heroes,"

Myers said in a statement. "They put their lives on the line on behalf of freedom and on behalf of America, and they do it each and every day. I'm so proud of them and their comrades in arms."

Though the cause of the crash has not been announced, officials say hostile fire has been ruled out.

Three other soldiers suffered minor injuries in the crash, which occurred about 60 miles from the Afghanistan border. They since have returned to duty.

The bodies of Edmunds and Stonesifer were flown to Ramstein Air Base in Germany before being returned to their families in the states.

The families are planning memorial services in their home towns.

Lieutenants research terrorism network

Everyone doing their part in war on terrorism

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Compiling information and conducting informative briefs are something all soldiers need to learn to do well.

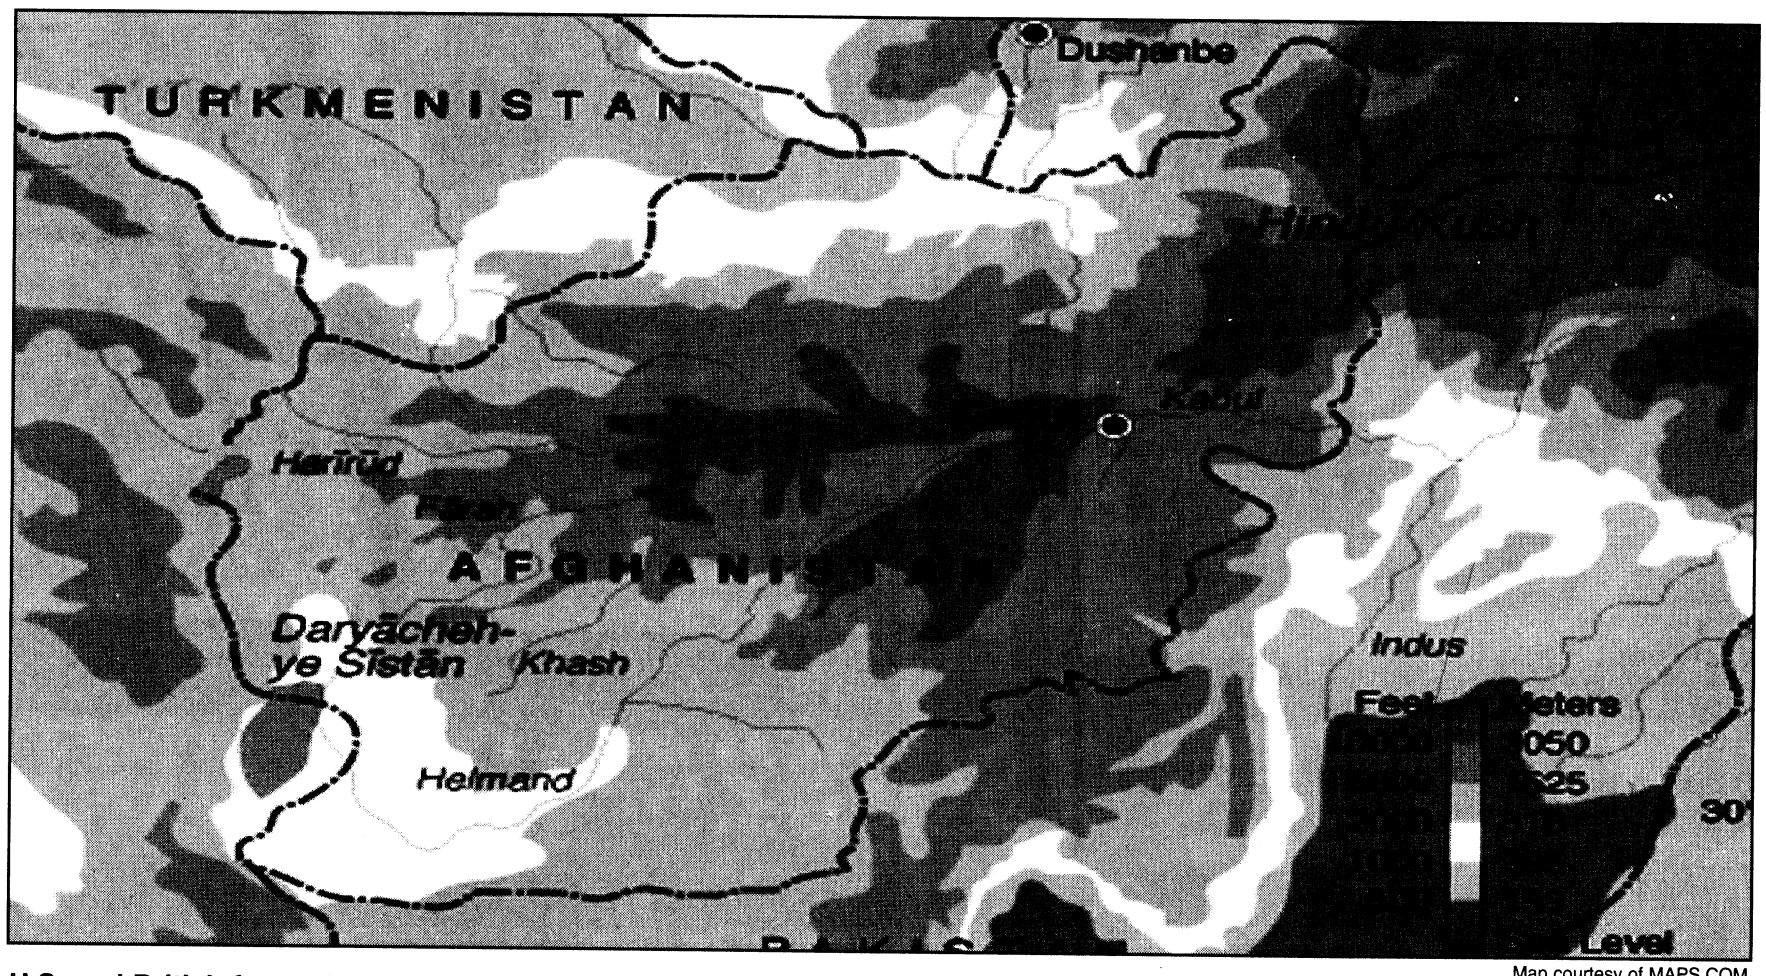
Capt. Ed Gawlik, HHC commander, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS), gave the recent Officer Candidate School graduates in his holdover company a tasking to learn about the Sept. 11 attacks and the attackers responsible.

They were tasked out in two-man teams to learn more about the incident and the information surrounding it.

"I wanted them to get a bigger picture understanding of what is going on here," Gawlik said.

"The second part of this is to develop a plan of action for what they would do as a platoon leader," he said. "I want them to ask themselves, 'What do I, as a platoon leader, need to be aware of, what is my mission here?'"

The researchers found the undertaking to be rewarding in more ways than one.



"It gave me more insight on the Taliban and I learned more information than the media was putting out," 2nd Lt. Mason Wilson said.

"It's also a good start on how to do briefs," Wilson added.

After researching their given area, the lieutenants came together for an all-inclusive PowerPoint brief.

Information covered in the brief included a definition of terrorism, a personal biography of Osama bin Laden, the doctrine and capabilities of al Qaeda and much more.

The FBI's definition of terrorism is "the unlawful use of force or violence against persons or property to intimidate or coerce a government, the civilian population, or any segment thereof, in furtherance of political or social objectives."

A CLOSER LOOK

Here is a brief summary of Osama bin Laden's personal history.

• Born in 1957, bin Laden graduated from King Abdul Aziz University in Jiddah, Saudi Arabia, with a degree in civil engineering.

• He left Saudi Arabia in 1979 to join the Afghan resistance, the Mujahedeen.

• In 1988, bin Laden established al Qaeda which consisted mainly of ex-mujahedeen members.

• Bin Laden returned to Saudi Arabia a hero in 1989 and became intensely involved in opposition movements in his home country.

• In 1991, his opposition to the Saudi alliance with the United States against Iraq forced him to flee Saudi Arabia.

• Bin Laden's involvement is suspected in attacks all over the globe. Intelligence officials believe the first attack involving bin Laden and his associates was in December 1992. U.S. troops were targeted in a car bomb explosion in Aden, Yemen.

• Bin Laden is also suspected in the first attack on the World Trade Center, Feb. 26, 1993.

• Oct. 3-4, 1993, U.S. forces battle bin Laden trained Somalians on the streets of Mogadishu.

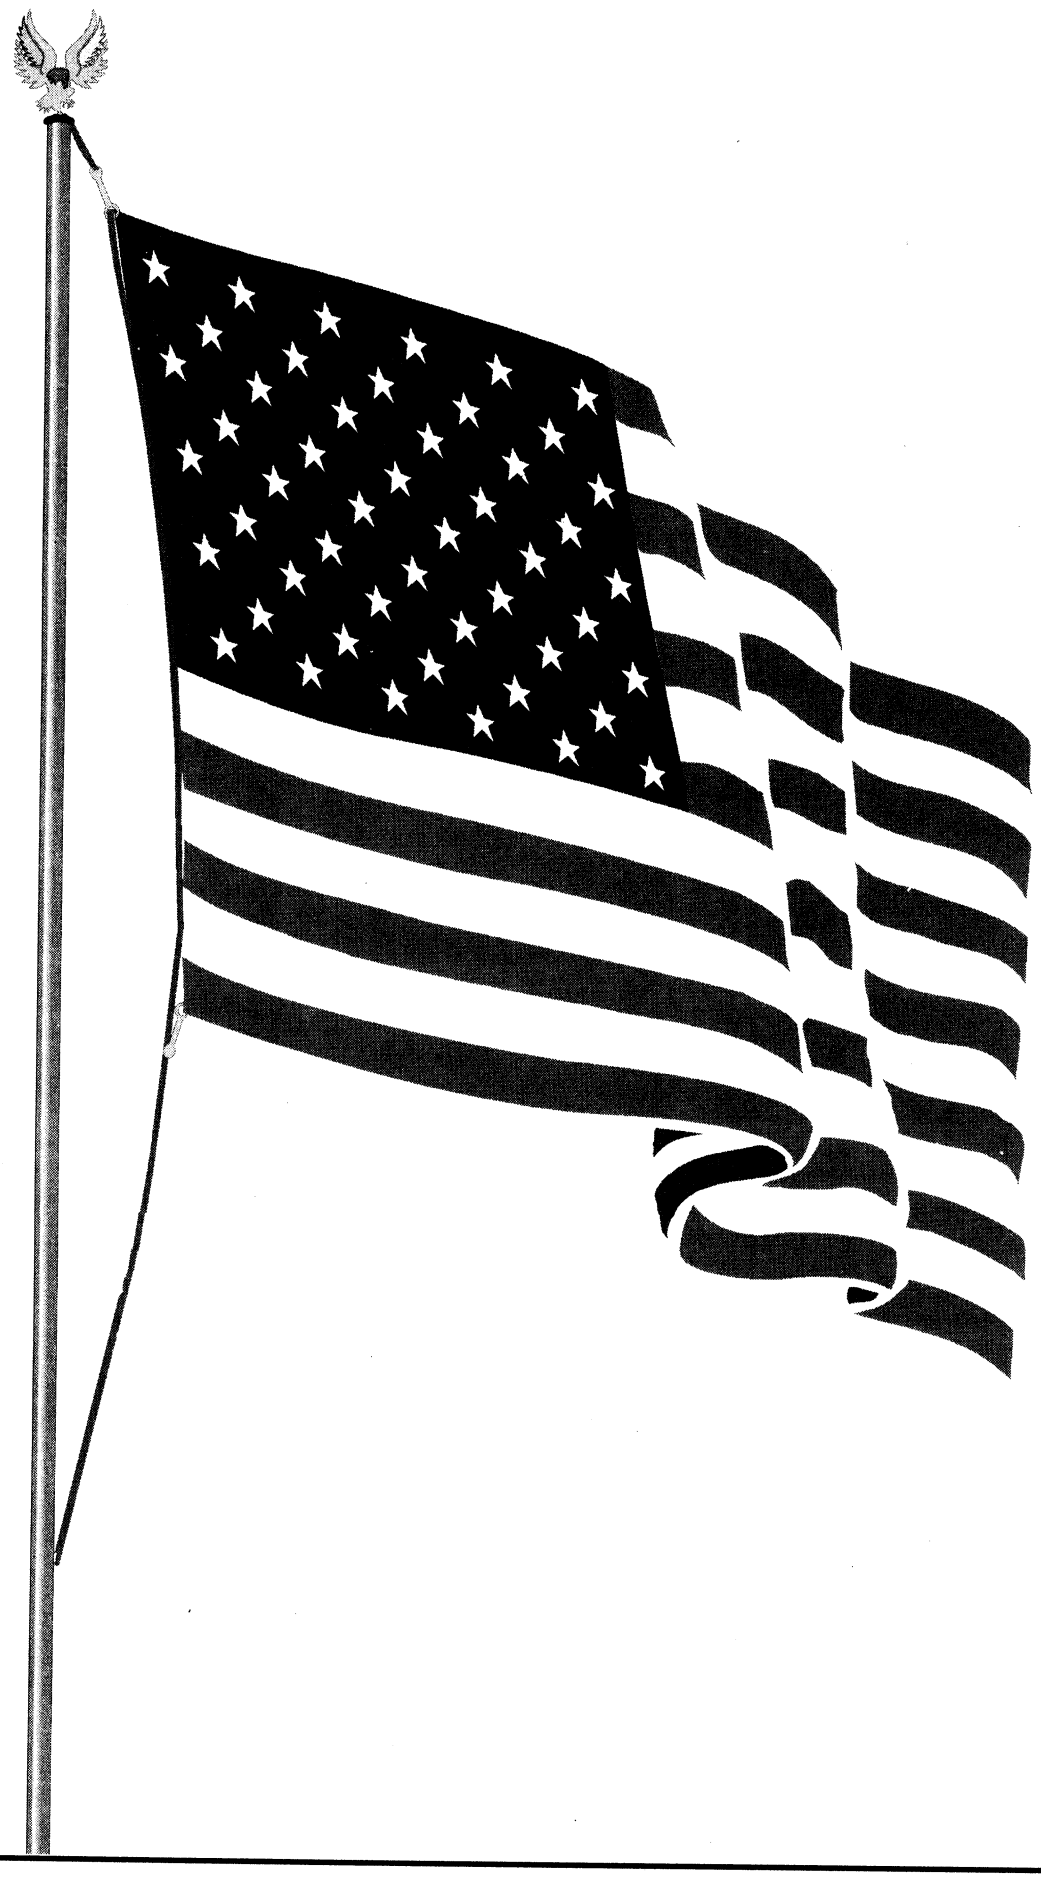
• The Saudi government revoked bin Laden's citizenship April 4, 1994 and froze his assets because of his support for Muslim fundamentalists.

• Ramzi Yousef is arrested in 1995 for the Feb. 1993 World Trade Center bombing and is linked to bin Laden.

• Bin Laden is expelled from Sudan in May 1996 and he moves to Afghanistan.

• June 25, 1996, a truck bomb kills 19 servicemen in Dharan, bin Laden is linked.

• Bin Laden declared jihad (holy war) Aug. 1996.



• The goals of his jihad are to drive U.S. forces from the Arabian peninsula, overthrow the Saudi Arabian government, liberate Muslim holy sites and support Islamic militant groups around the world.

• The jihad has led to multiple attacks that can be linked to bin Laden:

• Two explosions were set off at U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania, Aug. 7, 1998.

• The USS Cole was attacked Oct. 12, 2000 in Yemen.

• Sept. 11, 2001, the World Trade Center towers and the Pentagon were attacked. Intelligence agencies link bin Laden and his al Qaeda terrorist organization.

To the men and women of the 3rd Battalion 75th Ranger Regiment:

It makes me proud that many of you like to read what I write. You make America proud by being who you are. May God bless you and go with you. You are in my thoughts, and in my prayers.

Bombings: Purpose is to destroy Taliban targets

volunteers, Rumsfeld said no. He then said he answered only that question because it's a good example of the kind he won't answer in the future.

"In war, things are confused," he said, noting the Taliban and al Qaeda may not know exactly what happened — and that's the idea.

"Our goal is not to demystify things for the other side. This is a very complicated set of problems. The goal is to confuse, make more difficult, add cost, to frighten and to defeat the Taliban and the al Qaeda," he said.

Air Force Gen. Richard B. Myers, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, summarized weekend action for reporters and showed videotapes of bomb strikes on Taliban armored vehicles. He said U.S. forces on Saturday struck six planned target areas, including airfields and air defenses, command and control facilities, terrorist forces and camps. About 85 of the 90 aircraft used were tactical jets, primarily from carriers. The others were long-range bombers.

On Sunday, about 85 fighters and bombers struck eight planned target areas, including airfields, command and control facilities and Taliban forces.

Humanitarian airdrops continued with four C-17s delivering about 52,000 rations, bringing the total delivered to date to about 700,000, Myers said.

Leaflets were dropped Saturday in northeastern Afghanistan and Sunday in the north, south and west. Radio broadcast missions were also flown in conjunction with the missions.

Taliban spokesmen have accused the United States of bombing a hospital, killing more than 100 people. "We're not quite certain about that yet, but we're going to continue to look," Myers said. "The last thing we want to do is to cause any civilian casualties. We don't have any evidence yet."

A reporter began asking for comment about broadcasts by Al Jezeera television, the Arabic language network in Qatar, that purportedly show children and old people injured in U.S. air attacks. Rumsfeld responded instantly, before the question formed.

"We have seen, repeatedly, things that are not true put out by the Taliban," he said.

"We've seen them escort people to things they wanted seen. We've seen the things they wanted seen and the lies they've been putting forward carried across the globe on television and in the press.

"Now, what can one do about that? All one can do is to answer directly when we know for a fact it's true and say so," he said. "When we know for a fact it's not true, we'll say so. And when we don't know, we'll say so. And that's what we just did. We have no evidence that that's the case at the present time."

Rumsfeld responded obliquely to a question whether the United States would stop bombing during Ramadan, the monthlong Muslim religious holiday that starts in mid-November.

"We have great respect for the views and many countries that are cooperating in this effort. The sensitivities and perspectives vary from country to country," he said. Muslim nations throughout history have fought among themselves or with others during holy days, he noted. "It has not inhibited them historically."

Town hall: Answers questions on Tricare benefits

Retired military members, spouses and retired government employees filled the auditorium and hoped to have their questions and concerns addressed about the changes in insurance coverage.

"I came today because I am considering whether I should stop my private insurance," said retired Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie Mitchell. "More than likely, I will wait to see if people get the care they need and expect before I make my final decision."

This concern echoed throughout the auditorium as many of the retirees and beneficiaries read through brochures and handouts they received both by mail and at the meeting.

"As a widow, I am also concerned about how the changes will affect how I can choose a physician," Frances Spencer said. "Now that I have to go to Columbus for primary care, I do not know where I can go."

After addressing the crowd Pollock explained the different program changes made by Congress and the Department of Defense.

One of those changes centers around Tricare for Life.

Tricare for Life is the:

• Primary payer when a service is a Tricare for Life benefit, but not a Medicare benefit.

• Secondary payer if the service is a benefit of both Medicare and Tricare for Life.

• Third payer when the benefit is covered by Medicare supplemental policy or other health insurance.

If the medical care received is a benefit of Tricare for Life, but not a benefit of Medicare, Medicare pays nothing. Tricare for Life will pay only the allowed amount for the service and the patient must pay the applicable cost shares and deductible.

This comprehensive package is dependent on whether individuals have Medicare Part B, Pollock said.

"As long as the care given is a Tricare benefit ... there should be no out-of-pocket expenses," Pollock said.

There is no enrollment fee or an additional monthly premium for Tricare for Life.

Clients pay only the Medicare Part B premium. This is an expense about 99 percent of clients pay regardless, Pollock said.

There is no additional ID needed. Patients should have their Medicare card showing they have Medicare Part B and their retiree cards to show providers.

Another benefit for patients is insurance claims are filed automatically.

Eligibility for Tricare for Life is the same for Medicare clients.

Another program Pollock discussed during the town hall meeting was Tricare Plus.

At Fort Benning, fewer than 2,400 are enrolled in Tricare Plus, a plan which allows retirees over 65 to receive primary care at Martin Army Community Hospital. Unfortunately, that number is limited because active-duty soldiers are the priority when it comes to patient care, Pollock said.

Tricare Plus covers a number of specialities such as urology, cardiology, internal medicine and pulmonary care. Tricare Plus clients cannot transfer that benefit to any other military or civilian location.

Pollock and panel members addressed Tricare questions afterwards.

For more information on Tricare for Life, call the Tricare service center at 685-3053. For more information about Tricare Plus, call 544-1811 or 544-4066.

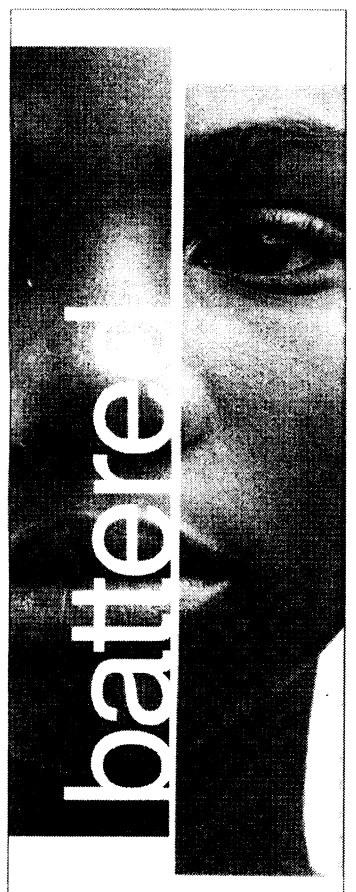
occurs, we can't do anything about the actual contract start date or contract award date," Torres said.

"There will be a lot of changes. Dealing with a contractor is going to be very different than dealing with GS (government service) employees," Chuck Walls, garrison manager said.

"My number one priority is to do the best job we can to take care of the civilian employees here; either with placement or other actions to make sure they're taken care of," Walls said.

Other contracts still in the various stages of development include the Directorate of Information Management, Directorate of Operations and Training Support Center and Adjutant General. Awarding of these contracts has yet to be determined.



The DOIM A-76 study announced 57 positions (50 civilian and 7 military) for review in November 1998. The Source Selection Evaluation process began in July 2001 at TRADOC. Phase one of the DOIM selection process concluded on July 31, 2001 and is currently scheduled to reconvene during January 2002. The earliest the bid opening is expected is late January 2002 to mid-February 2002.

The TSC A-76 study announced 50 positions (41 civilian and 9 military) in December 1998. The selection process began in July 2001 at TRADOC. The second phase of the process is expected to being in late November 2001. Bid opening will be scheduled when the selection process is complete. The earliest bid opening at TRADOC is late January 2002 to mid-February 2002.

The AG A-76 study announced 170 positions (100 civilian and 70 military) in March 1999. The selection process began in August 2001 at TRADOC and concluded on Aug. 23. Bid opening is planned as soon as the source selection evaluation board gives its recommendation.

Course infuses 'warrior spirit'

Basic leadership class creates common base for new officers

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The training of young officers continues to change with the Army.

In 2003, all newly commissioned officers, regardless of their commissioning source will be required to attend the six-week Basic Officer Leadership Course held at Fort Benning.

"This is going to change the course of the Army — how our leaders, how our officers are taught," said Capt. T.J. Siebold, company operations officer for BOLC pilot number three.

The program is currently in the pilot program stages. The third pilot starts Sunday, and A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment runs it.

B Company ran the first pilot program using all males to determine the program of instruction.

The second pilot program was run by C Company and integrated males and females.

The fourth pilot program is scheduled to begin Jan. 14.

A Company is organized into six platoons with six cadre assigned to each platoon. Either a captain or a lieutenant colonel is assigned as a senior trainer, a senior sergeant first class is assigned as a platoon sergeant and four staff sergeants are assigned as squad leaders.

There are approximately 40 students per platoon.

"What we're trying to do is to instill a warrior spirit," Siebold said.

"By pulling all branches from all the commissioning sources together, it gets them on same sheet of music."

Instruction received during the six week course includes basic rifle marksmanship, individual movement techniques, land navigation, squad situational training exercises and much more.

The focus of the course is fieldwork and FM 7-8. Four weeks are spent in the field. FM 7-8 is being used as a tool to evaluate the leadership of the lieutenants. Troop leading procedures are focused on, rather than tactics.

"You really need to know yourself to become a leader," said Maj. Thomas Boccardi, company commander. "They need tough, galvanizing situations to make them more self-aware, more introspective."

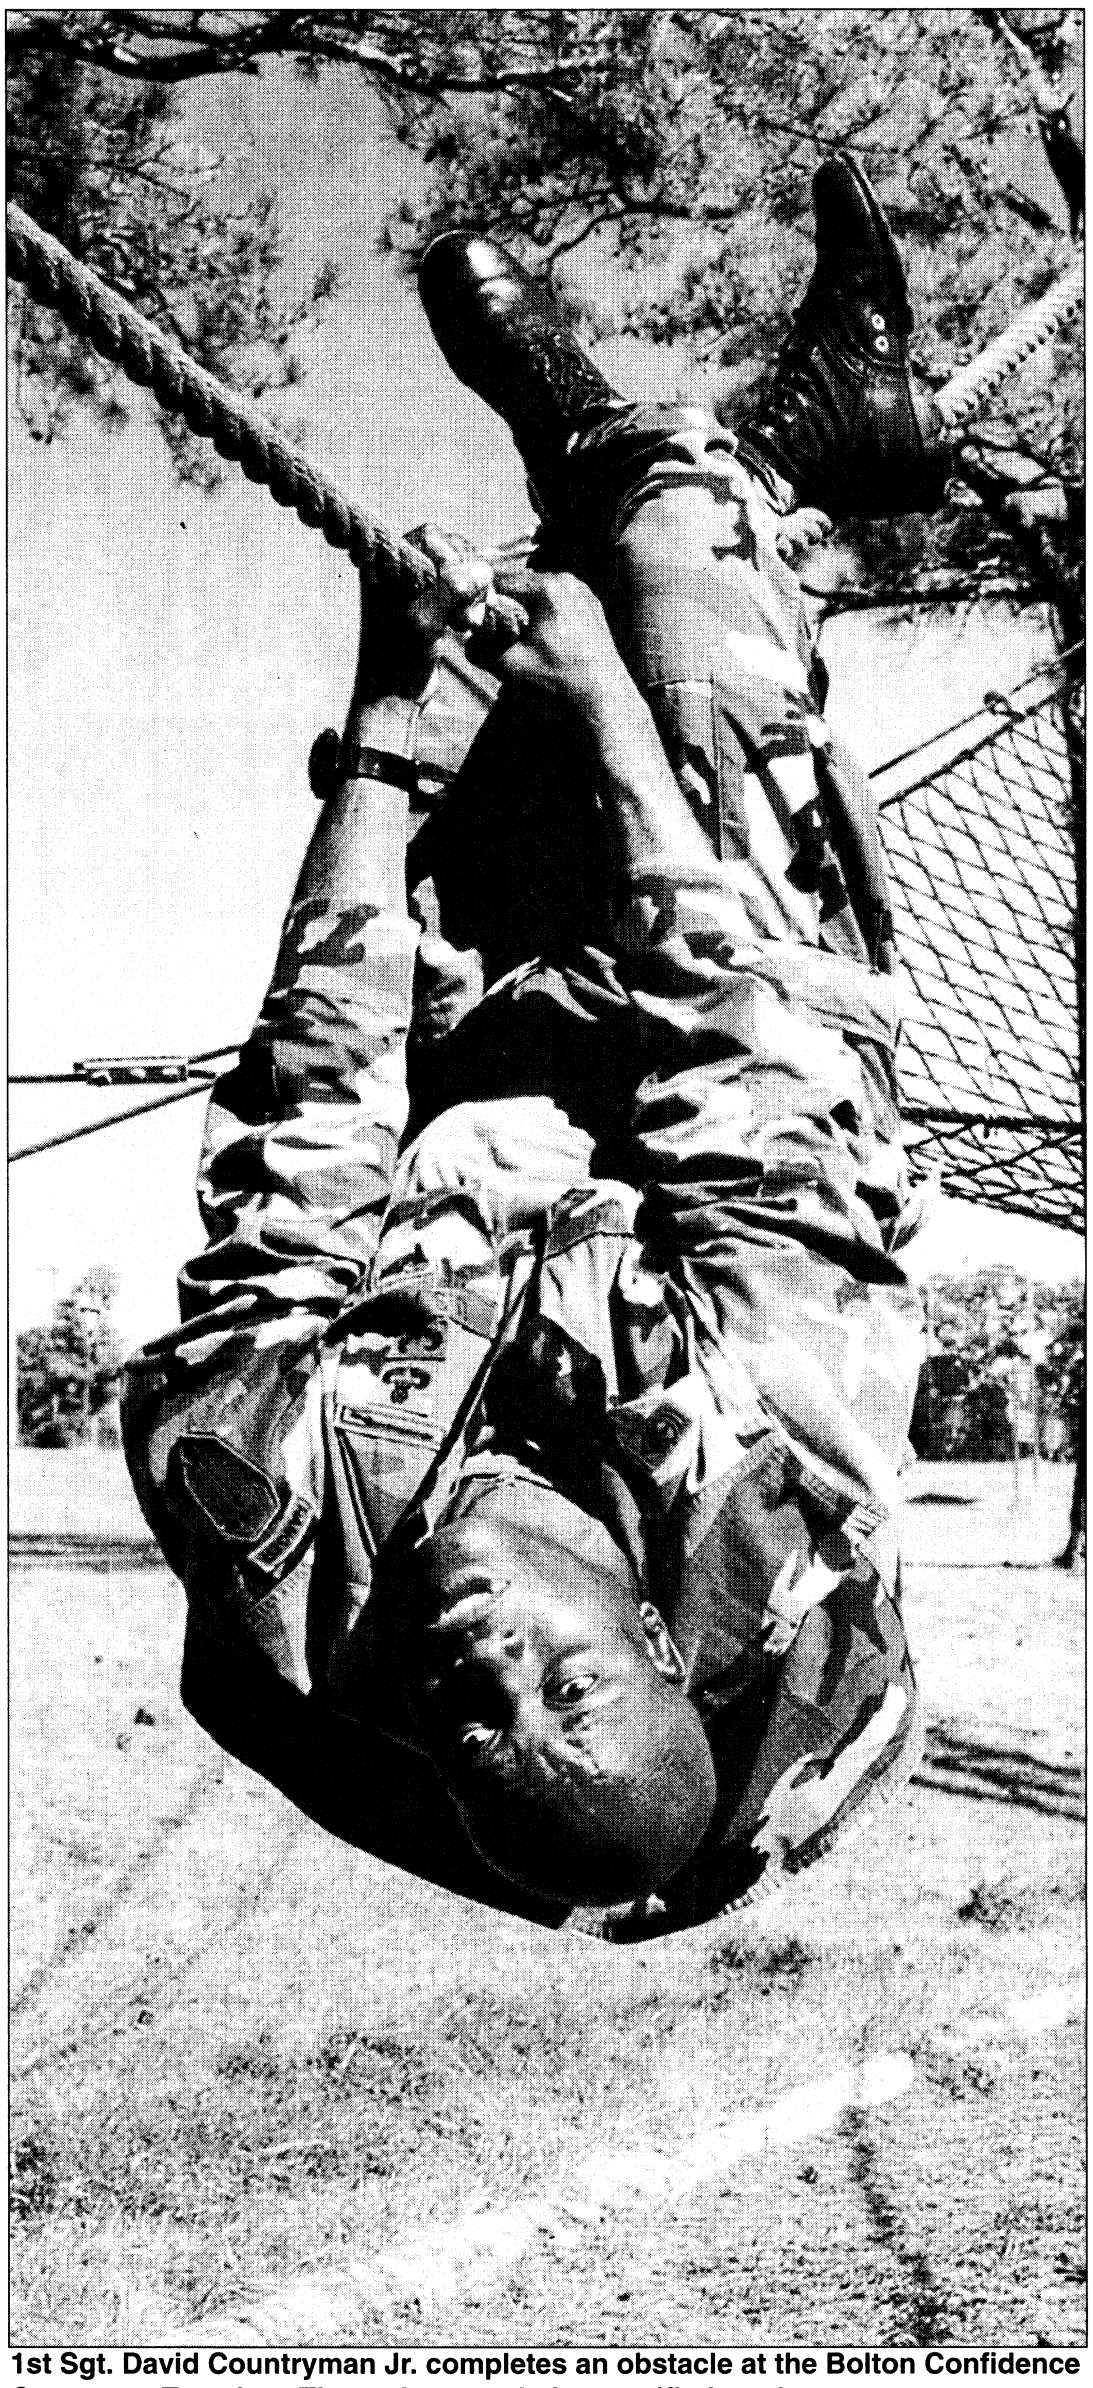
The cadre for the third and fourth pilots for the Basic Officer Leadership Course are finishing up their certification before the students arrive on Sunday.

"We're out here doing everything the students will be doing," said Maj. Thomas Boccardi, company commander. "We're checking things for serviceablilty and safety. But it's also for our cadre. To be safety officers they need to know what challenges these obstacles pose."

The cadre completed all the courses the students will have to complete; including the Bolton Confidence Course, the combat water survival test at Briant Wells field house and the water confidence test at Victory Pond.

"We're motivated, we're excited," said 1st Sgt. David Countryman Jr. "These cadre are extremely professional."

With two pilot programs already completed, A Company can proceed with ironing out the details for the BOLC.



"Now we have a little closer to the design of how we're going to do it," Countryman said. "We're balancing out the branches and including international students as well."

Pilots 3 and 4 will be incorporating something that the first two pilots did not — living in the barracks.

BOLC will use Building 2836 to house the new lieutenants.

"There will be different challenges, different types of feedback and leadership challenges," Countryman said.

Living in the barracks will also make a dining facility and a physical training field available to the students.

Peer leadership steps out in front for infantry trainees

Tactical training next on the block for D Company

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

This is the fifth story of a 12-part series, which takes an in-depth look at the Infantry Training Brigade.

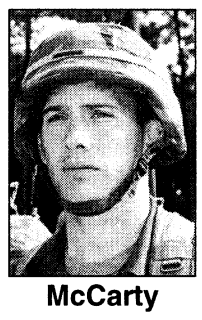
D Company can move on to the tactical training that is the meat and potatoes for the infantry now that basic rifle marksmanship is over.

"There are three points of focus that I stress for the battalion, PT (physical training), BRM (basic rifle marksmanship) and tactical training," said Lt. Col. Steve Hawley, battalion commander, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment.

Tactical training includes everything from individual movement techniques, and instruction on hand grenades, to camouflage and concealment.

The continued training also includes leadership training for the trainees selected by the drill sergeants to be platoon guides.

The platoon guide is responsible for organizing his platoon and having them ready for training.



He also marches them short distances and decides how to task the platoon out to accomplish missions handed down from the drill sergeants.

"Having the platoon guide in place makes life a little easier for the drill sergeant," Hawley said. "But we're also picking out peer leaders to give them a step up towards becoming a leader in the Army."

Halyard

The platoon guide has squad leaders to assist him, but he's basically responsible for more than 50 of his peers.

McCarty

First platoon's platoon guide is Pvt. Daniel Washington. He said his favorite part about being the platoon guide is assembling the platoon.

"I like calling them to attention, I like the way they sound off," Washington said.

However, learning how to march the formation has been a challenge.

"It's hard to get on the right foot and call cadence at the same time," he said. "When I first started I had the whole platoon correcting me whenever I messed up."

A highlight so far has been the high percentage of first-time goes the company had for BRM.

"Getting 97 percent on BRM was really exciting, the drill sergeants loved us for that," Washington said.

"But we're back to being just privates.

Second platoon has Pfc. Jeramy McCarty to help them along the way.

"After the fourth day of training my drill sergeant made me PG," McCarty said. "The squad leaders change out pretty quick though."

"I like the responsibility," McCarty said. "If I wasn't PG, I'd be out there trying to help them out anyway. It feels good when we win something or the platoon does something well.

"I love it so far, even though some of it is just like being a big baby-sitter," McCarty said.

"It's hard though, because I have to lead by example, and I can't have a bad day. I have to set the standard, but I have less time — last one to eat, first one out, last one upstairs, first one back down," he said.

For third platoon, Pvt. Morris Halyard, is leading the way. Halyard qualified expert during BRM and has a 274 PT score.

"It has it's ups and downs," Halyard said. "Once I get everybody squared away, everything gets done. The platoon is getting used to me, and things are starting to work out."

The most difficult part about being the platoon guide for Halyard is keeping motivation levels high.

"Getting everyone up in the morning is probably the hardest part," he said. "Everyone's cold and just wants to sleep. But, I try to lead by example. I'm not going to tell anybody to do anything I'm not going to do. I'm just trying to keep myself highly motivated."

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy

Pvt. Ben Guerrin applies camouflage for his buddy, Pvt. Brandon Retlewski, during individual tactical training.

Halyard also appreciates all the effort his squad leaders put into the job.

"I have excellent squad leaders. I relay information to them, they pass it on to the squads, and it gets done," he said.

Fourth platoon's Pvt. Joshua Campbell is the third platoon guide to step out in front of his platoon.

"It's a harder job than you expect," Campbell said. "When you're in the platoon, it seems like the PG has control over everything. But it's hard because your platoon doesn't want to listen to someone who's their rank.

"You're not trying to be a drill sergeant, but you're trying to communicate what the drill sergeants are telling you," he said.

"Keeping people motivated is the hardest part, the best thing to do is keep yourself motivated, to lead by example," Campbell said.

NCOs to be rated on Army values

NCO-ER will change, first time in 11 years

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A change to the Noncommissioned Officer Evaluation Report will require soldiers be rated on the Army's seven core values beginning in November.

The current Army values that were instituted in June 1998 — loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage — will be listed on the new NCO-ER in Part (IVa), Values and NCO Responsibilities.

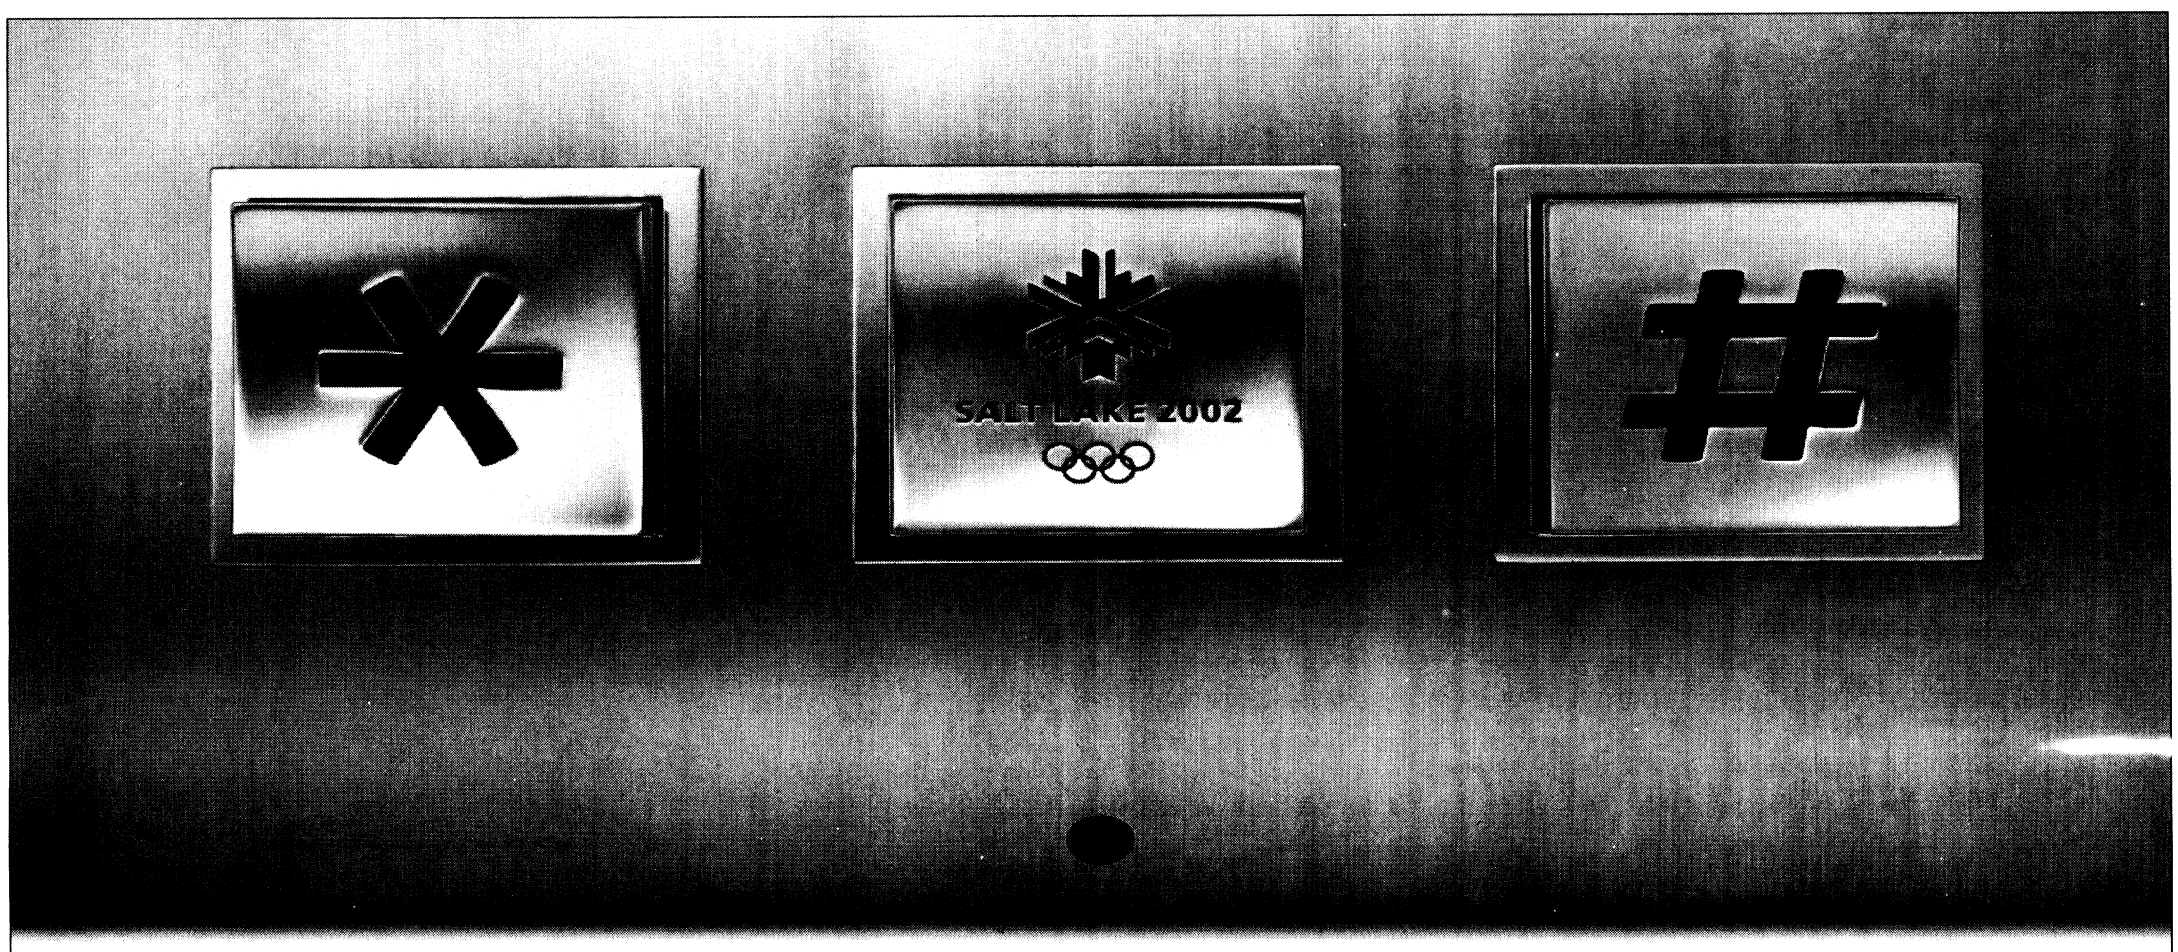
Next to each value, raters will check either "yes" or "no" to indicate whether the soldier demonstrates that quality. Most of the time the block checked is yes, said Sgt. Maj. Anthony Everette, the chief and policy maker for the Enlisted Evaluations Branch.

"Even though the raters are not required to write comments if they mark "yes," they should take that time to highlight the soldier's strong points," Everette said. "Also if the rater determines that a "no" check is warranted in one or more Army values, then he must clearly explain what the deficiency or shortcoming is."

Values are the moral, ethical and professional attributes of character, Everette said. Unquestionably, a "no" check will result in a non-selection for promotion for the rated NCO, Everette said.

This is the first revision to the form in 13 years, which is the longest an NCO rating system has gone without being revised. However, the change to the current rating system is minor, Everette said, because this is one of the best systems the NCO corps has had in evaluating its soldiers.

"The current NCO-ER is working very well," Everette said. "It gives a pretty good snapshot of an NCO's performance and contribution. Therefore, we decided to adjust the system only to address the current Army values."



The NCO-ER will change to Department of the Army Form 2166-8, and the NCO Counseling and Checklist, which is used in conjunction with the NCO-ER, will change to DA Form 2166-8-1. Both forms are currently available online.

> "Also if the rater determines that a "no" check is warranted in one or more Army values, ten he must clearly explain what the deficiency or shortcoming is."
> Sgt. Maj. Anthony Everette
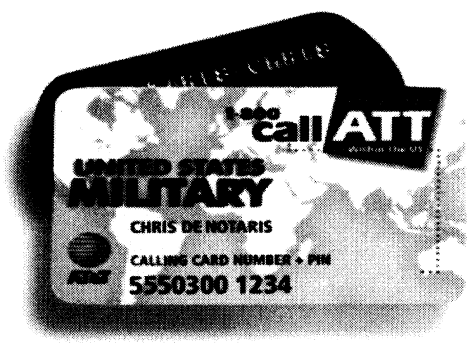
> Enlisted Evaluations Branch



When the rater and soldier sit down for a counseling session with the revised worksheet, the Army values will be a prominent topic, Everette said.

"We all can recite the Army values, but that doesn't mean we all fully understand what they mean," Everette said. "So I expect for the rater to sit down face to face and one by one go through and explain to the soldier what is expected of him to demonstrate those values."

Anthrax scare creates tighter security

Postmaster encourages use of common sense

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

It is on the television 24 hours a day and in the newspapers daily. It is anthrax, and new reports of letters containing the bacteria emerge almost daily.

Wednesday on NBC's Today show, Postmaster General John Potter told the public he couldn't offer a guarantee of safety.

"There are no guarantees in life," Potter said. "You know, if you just look at the preponderance of mail, we have some very isolated incidents of anthrax in the mail. And so the majority of mail is safe. Could I guarantee it? No."

But the U.S. Postal Service has stepped up security measures, is conducting random facility checks, and is making plans to purchase irradiation equipment to kill any biological agents in the mail.

"We in the Postal Service are at war, a war against terrorism," Potter said. "Our job is to win that war."

The Postal Service is sending out postcards to all U.S. addresses in the next week to let mail recipients now how to detect a suspicious parcel.

There are certain characteristics that should trigger suspicion of a parcel, including those that:

- Are unexpected or from someone unfamiliar to you.
- Have excessive postage.
- Have handwritten or poorly typed addresses.
- Have misspellings of commonly used words.
- Are addressed incorrectly or to someone no longer at the address.
- Have no return address or have one that can't be verified as legitimate.
- Are of unusual weight given their size, or are lopsided or oddly shaped.
- Are marked with restrictive endorsements, such as "Personal" or "Confidential."
- Have protruding wires, strange odors or stains.
- Show a city or state in the postmark that doesn't match the return address.

According to the U.S. Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine, many facilities across the country have received anthrax threat letters, most of which were empty envelopes, and some of which contained powdery substances.

In response, the center has listed guidelines how to handle suspicious parcels, such as limiting exposure to the parcel, washing hands with soap and warm water, and calling 911.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has also put out an advisory, stating what one should do with a suspicious letter or package. The safety steps include:

- Handle with care, don't shake or bump.
- Isolate the package.
- Don't open the package, or smell or taste contents.
- Treat it as suspect — call 911.

According to the Center for Disease Control, direct person-to-person spread of anthrax is extremely unlikely, if it occurs at all. In persons exposed to anthrax, infection can be prevented with antibiotic treatment.

Potter said the Inspection Service and all federal, state and local law enforcement agencies are working together to find those who have sent anthrax through the mail.

"We're offering a $1 million reward," Potter said. "We want the public to help us find the perpetrators of these crimes."

Potter also said USPS is aggressively pursuing anthrax hoaxes that cause fear in people and divert valuable resources away that could be used to bring criminals to justice.

"What we are seeing across America is hypervigilance, or a heightened sense of awareness," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement Division. "Things that would not have caused concern before Sept. 11 are now causing us to stop and think.

"People should be concerned, but not alarmed. Detection techniques are becoming greater, and protocols are being put into place to identify these things before they become an issue.

"I wish I had the magic word to put people's minds at rest, but there may not be any," Kelley said.

"We are all working to keep Fort Benning a safe and secure environment. But it takes a community effort to do that.

"Keeping Fort Benning safe is everyone's job."

Change of command

Brig. Gen. Paul D. Eaton will assume command of Fort Benning, the U.S. Army Infantry Center and U.S. Army Infantry School during a change of command ceremony at 11 a.m. Monday on York Field in front of Infantry Hall.

Eaton will succeed Maj. Gen. John M. Le Moyne who will become the deputy chief of staff for Personnel at the Pentagon.

CATD speaker

Islam: Much too often misunderstood is the topic of Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate presentation at 8:30 a.m. Monday in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The speaker will be Dr. Daniel E. Spector, Ph.D. He will review the history of Islam's development, explain its religious tenets, relating them to both Judaism and Christianity, and delineate the great diversity within Islam.

ID card section closure

The Main Post ID card section will be closed Monday from 2 to 5 p.m. Normal hours will resume at 8:30 a.m. Oct. 30.

For more information, call Dollie Stutson at 545-1411 or 545-4068.

Free dinner

Golden Corral's across the country will offer a free dinner buffet with choice of beverage to any veteran and active-duty personnel Nov. 12.

Military identification is not required. All that is necessary is that they identify themselves at the register.

Golden Corral is located on Manchester Expressway in Columbus.

Water system flushing schedule

The Fort Benning Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics is flushing the water mains, which may cause some slight but temporary reduction in water pressure and possible water discoloration. However, the water remains safe for drinking.

For more information, call the DFEL plumbing shop at 545-4141.

Delta briefing

The 1st Special Forces Operational Detachment-Delta unit (Airborne), 1st SFOD-D, will will answer questions, make presentations and accept applications for duty with the unit 9 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m. Monday through Nov. 2 in Infantry Hall's Classroom 9.

For more information, call 545-8771.

CG Two-star Breakfast

The Commanding General's Two-star Excellence Breakfast and awards ceremony is scheduled at 7:30 a.m. for Thursday at the Officers' Club.

Tickets are available until Monday.

For more information, call 545-4729 or 545-5607.

Italian Memorial Day services

A memorial service will be held 10 a.m. Nov. 4 at the Fort Benning Post Cemetery in honor of Italian Memorial Day.

The public is invited to attend.

West Point briefing

Capt. Cliff Hodges, from the West Point Admissions Office, will inform interested soldiers in the academy's application process at 2 p.m. Nov. 5 in Classroom 30 at Infantry Hall to give admission briefs for soldiers applying.

For more information, call 545-8771.

Loose lips sink ships

Army leadership has recently expressed their concern about the apparent inattention to basic operational security procedures.

OPSEC is the responsibility of every soldier, civilian and contractor. Everyone should practice continuous OPSEC.

Information about unit strengths, operational capabilities and deployment intentions, in the wrong hands, can severely undermine unit safety and mission accomplishment.

All press inquiries should be directed to the installation Public Affairs Officer.

For more information, call the PAO at 545-2237.

Wreath laying

The Fort Benning NCOA is paying tribute to Command Sgt. Maj. Henry Caro, the academy's namesake, at 10 a.m. Nov. 6 at the Fort Benning Main Post Cemetery. Representatives will lay a wreath at his grave.

N.Y. youngster sends thank-you to military

5-year-old uses art to show soldiers her appreciation

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Since the Sept. 11 tragedies, there's been an outpouring of support for the fire fighters, police and grieving families. But this week, Katie McLean, a kindergartner at St. Pius X School in Loudonville, N.Y., sent a small token of appreciation to the soldiers at Fort Benning — her own artwork.

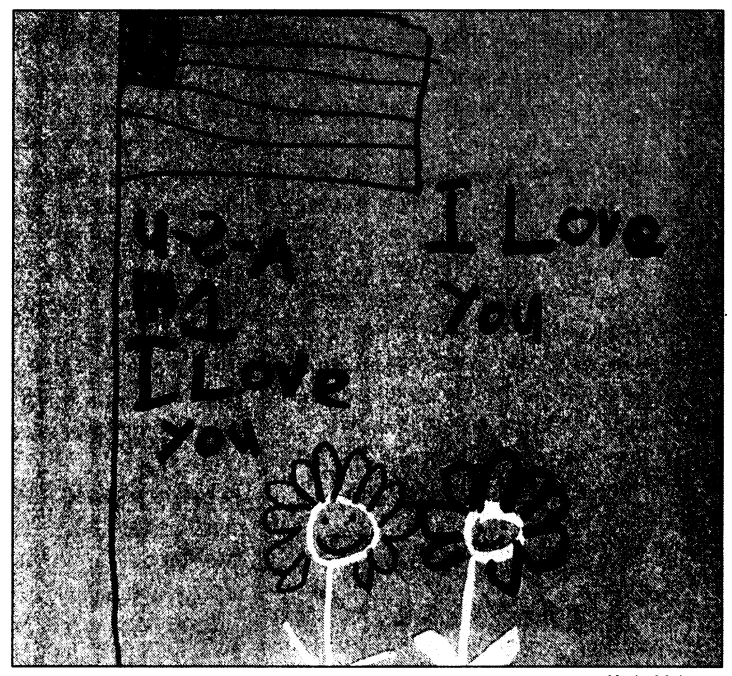
Katie's dad, Ron McLean, a strategic consulting support manager for the New York State Credit Union League, said Katie asked him, "Are any more buildings going to fall?" He reassured her the president and the nation's soldiers were doing all they could to protect her and the country.

McLean

When he asked if she wanted to send a letter to the soldiers, she answered with an emphatic "Yes!"

Katie drew two pictures and sent one to Fort Benning and another to the Naval Sea Command "to say thank you for protecting America." Her dad chose Fort Benning because he knew there are special operations troops here that may have to go to war.

"Young children need a way to express themselves," he said. "It is difficult for a 5-year-old to comprehend the magnitude of what's happened to our country. It's important for her to learn to appreciate other people's sacrifice. It was a small measure, but easy for her to do."



The company McLean works for had two offices in the World Trade Center Towers, and he recently visited "Ground Zero."

"The experience was incredible and hard to comprehend. It looked like a war movie," he said.

The McLean family lives about 200 miles north of New York City in Latham, N.Y. When Katie is not creating her own thank-you notes, she likes playing with her 3-year-old brother, Colin, dressing up as Disney characters, reading and writing, and pretending to be a teacher and a mommy. She recently began riding her bike without training wheels.

"Being a father of young children, it makes me happy and more comfortable to know there are service members out there protecting our country," McLean said.

Some say the best gifts come in small packages. In the words of 5-year-old Katie McLean, "I sent the picture to the Army because I thought it would be nice."

Rules laid out for trick-or-treaters

Allowable hours will be 6-8 p.m. Wednesday

Directorate of Public Safety

Princesses, action heroes, sports stars and ghouls will have to play by the rules if they want to trick-or-treat on post.

Fort Benning will observe Halloween from 6 to 8 p.m. Oct. 31 (the only day trick-or-treating is permitted.)

Children under 13 years old are allowed to trick-or-treat. An adult must accompany children.

Limit trick-or-treating only to the housing area in which the participants reside, and approach only residences with lighted entryways.

Children should wear light-colored, fire-resistant costumes, short enough to prevent tripping. Costumes can be marked with reflective tape or "glow" spray paint so they can pick up auto headlights and other lights.

Observe all basic safety precautions. Use sidewalks and crosswalks; don't cut through yards. Look in all directions before walking across the street.

Wear masks or head coverings that do not restrict vision. Use colorful facial makeup as much as possible.

Pet owners should take measures to prevent pets from being a nuisance or a menace to children. Caution children about the wrongs of vandalism and causing damage to the property of others.

Children should carry flashlights after dark. If a child carries a pumpkin, it should be lit with a battery device, not a candle.

Never let your child eat anything until you have inspected the treats. Give your child a full meal before he or she goes trick-or-treating.

Have a safe and happy Halloween!

Soldier survives breast cancer

Master sergeant celebrates one year cancer-free

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Bridgett Siter

"He was my strength, my reason for living, and if one good thing came out of all this, it's strengthened my relationship with my son,"

Master Sgt. Janice Goldsmith, of her son, P.J.

Master Sgt. Janice Goldsmith is waging war on breast cancer, and she's looking for a few good women to fill the ranks. The first foe they'll have to conquer is fear.

"Every soldier knows the most dangerous enemy is the one you can't see," said Goldsmith, the community activities NCO for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group.

"If you let fear blind you, you're as good as dead. If you want to beat breast cancer, you can't bury your head in the sand."

That's what Goldsmith did the first time she felt a lump in her breast.

"I was a real 'hooah' soldier. I lived for this stuff," said Goldsmith, who's airborne, air assault, drill sergeant and master fitness instructor.

"They used to call me Superwoman. My PT scores were always over 400. I was doing everything right. I was going to be the first female sergeant major in my MOS, as a heavy equipment operator."

"Then I found a lump. I thought 'Oh, God, not now.' I cried. I skipped my annual exams for two years and just kept praying it would go away," she said.

Goldsmith's fears were confirmed in July 1999, when she could no longer ignore the pain and disfiguration in her breast. She was stationed in Alaska at the time, a single mom with no family around to offer support.

"My first thought was for my son — 'What am I going to tell P.J.?'

"I prayed for the strength to make it through it, but it never crossed my mind that I might die. I had too much to live for. I couldn't even think about the possibility of P.J. being motherless," the Mississippi native said.

Goldsmith sent her 10-year-old son to live with his father in Germany, with a vague explanation of her illness, and she began a series of radiation and chemotherapy treatments.

"When I started the treatments I weighed 118 pounds," she said. "I ballooned. I lost all my hair and fingernails. It was devastating. Here was a woman — a soldier — who's totally in control of herself physically, and then it's all gone. I didn't even look like the same person."

Six months into treatment, P.J. learned the true nature of his mother's illness and begged to come home.

"He said 'I want to be there to take care of you, Mom.' And he did — that's exactly what he did," said Goldsmith.

"When I blacked out, he called the ambulance. He held my hand till they got there, and he didn't cry. He was my strength, my reason for living, and if one good thing came out of all this, it's strengthened my relationship with my son."

Goldsmith and her son moved to Fort Benning in February, one year after her final chemotherapy treatment.

Two days before her birthday in July, she celebrated a major milestone in her battle with cancer.

"One year cancer-free — that's the best birthday present I could get," she said. "My friends put a sign in my yard that said 'Congratulate Janice. She's 43 and cancer-free.'"

Now after 24 years in the Army, Goldsmith is looking forward to retirement soon. She'll devote more time to her second career as an Avon representative.

"Avon is the biggest contributor to the American Cancer Society's breast cancer research. I wanted to be a part of that. All my proceeds go back to the American Cancer Society," she said.

And Goldsmith continues to warn other women about the dangers of complacency. She often spouts the kind of shocking statistics she hopes will jar others into joining the fight.

According to the American Cancer Society, nearly 200,000 women will be diagnosed with breast cancer this year.

More than 40,000 will die. Breast cancer is the number one killer of women between 45 and 50.

"You think it'll never happen to you, but the numbers don't lie," Goldsmith said.

Saturday Goldsmith and her son will lead a team of 30 friends and coworkers in the American Cancer Society's eighth annual Making Strides walk in Columbus.

The nationwide fund-raiser takes place each year during October, which is National Breast Cancer Awareness Month.

P.J. and his friends will sport T-shirts with his mother's picture and the words "I'm a survivor."

"It's her job to warn other people now," P.J. said.

"It's my job to support her. So I'm going to be with her because I'm proud of her. She's strong."

Convoy, McGruff visit Fort Benning schools

Post officials support Red Ribbon Week

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

Students on post received lots of goodies and a chance to hug McGruff, the crime dog, earlier this week.

A convoy consisting of post and local area public safety agencies visited the schools on Monday and Tuesday to let students know who to contact if they have questions about drugs and when emergencies occur.

The convoy was in celebration of Red Ribbon Week, which educates students about the dangers of drugs.

The week was started in 1985 after Enrique Camarena, a federal drug enforcement agent, was killed while investigating Mexican drug traffickers.

Melvin Burnett, Alcohol Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Program education coordinator, said the purpose of the event was two-fold.

"We wanted to get the public safety officials together and combine them in the fight against drugs," he said.

"We also wanted to bring the community together. It gives the kids a chance to become familiar with the police officers and other public safety officials."

Members from the military police, ADAPCP, EMT, fire department and safety office participated. Area public safety agencies included the Georgia State Highway Patrol, Columbus Police Department and the DARE cars from the Harris County Sheriff's Department.

This was the first convoy, and Burnett was pleased with the results.

Staff Sgt. Patrick Coiner, senior patrolman for the community-oriented policing services, said he was excited about participating in the event.

"I love kids," he said. "I came because I wanted to let kids know they don't have to be afraid. They're people they can go to," Coiner said as he was passing out whistles, rulers and pencils to the students.

Stringer Bryan, a fire fighter with the Fort Benning Fire Department, Station 33, agreed with Coiner.

"We're here to help them and rescue them in times of need. We want to be their friend and for them to be ours."

Bryan and Capt. Eddie Saxton let the children look inside the fire truck and blow the horn.

Kaitlyn Bly, a second grader in Foy Walker's class at Wilson Elementary, said she enjoyed the event.

"It was cool. My favorite thing was looking inside the ambulance at the little bed."

Her classmate, Diamond Davis, also had a good time.

"I liked the ambulance, but I liked McGruff the best," she said.

Students had the chance to collect lots of goodies, including water bottles, bookmarkers, bubble pens, rulers, safety bracelets and coin pouches.

"I might share some of my things with my brothers, but only if they don't break it," Davis said.

Burnett already has plans for the convoy next year. He plans to expand the area of agencies participating to include Alabama.

Saxton said he hopes students had a great time, but he also hoped they realized the dangers of drugs.

"I hope they understand the dangers and harm of what drugs can cause to their body and brain," he said. "And when you're on drugs, it affects not only you, but also your friends and family."

ADAPCP also sponsored a bumper sticker contest for the students.

A chance of a ghost?

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Does a love-lorn ghost haunt the halls of Riverside? Has the spirit of a British officer come back to search for peace? Does a young soldier keep a nightly vigil from the Upatoi bridge — more than 70 years after his death?

While skeptics scoff at the mere mention of ghosts, there are those who believe Fort Benning has a hidden history of another sort, that local urban legends are somehow rooted in reality.

Some, you'll read, are willing to share their stories — and their ghosts — while others choose to remain anonymous. And some believe there are logical explanations for unbelievable, illogical occurrences. Others simply believe.

In the end, you'll decide for yourself if you believe Fort Benning hosts haunts of the supernatural sort ... or are tales of Benning boogeymen completely bogus?

School of hard knocks?

While pulling staff duty one night at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, Staff Sgt. Georgiana Johnson heard a loud, rapid knock at the front door. No one was there when she opened it.

Johnson dismissed the episode — "The building is old, it settles." But it happened again and again, sometimes accompanied by the sounds of footsteps and slamming doors.

"The next day I told someone about it at work," she said. "He said 'Oh, yeah, that's the ghost of The School of the Americas. Everybody's heard it.'"

Johnson still pulls staff duty on occasion, but admits she sometimes locks herself in the staff duty room when the ghost is particularly active.

Not Staff Sgt. Luis Davila — he's chased the ghost on three occasions.

"When I'm doing security check, I can feel it behind me. Sometimes I can hear it walking, and sometimes it slams doors. I've tried to track it down," said Davila, who calls himself a believer.

One employee claims to have seen the ghost, whom he calls "the General," on several occasions. Yamill Collazo, information specialist, said the spirit frequents the school's John B. Amos Library.

"I've seen his silhouette, always during the day, and it's dark like a shadow, but very distinct," Collazo said. "He's wearing a cape and carrying a saber. That's why I think he's an old general. I know he's real. He moves chairs and rearranges books, but otherwise he's harmless."

Little girl ghost

The big white house near the end of Baltzell Avenue seemed to offer all the charm and warmth the Morris family hoped for when they moved to Fort Benning six years ago.

But it wasn't long before Kim Morris realized her new home had never been completely relinquished by its former residents.

"It was little things at first," she said. "Cold spots that moved from one place to another, even when the heat was on. The sounds of a little girl playing when there's no one else at home. The cat staring off into space or running away."

Kim said the little girl ghost is a "friendly entity," never scary but occasionally mischievious, moving toys or turning on the stereo.

Katie, the Morris' 13-year-old daughter, even tries to communicate with the ghost. She believes it's the spirit of a child who lived in or near the house in the early part of the 20th century.

"I'm not scared. I think it's really neat that we can coexist," Katie said. "She's in my room a lot, and some of my friends have been here when she's playing."

Katie once asked the ghost to "leave us alone for a while," and the mysterious activity subsided for a time. But Kim and Katie believe the house is now inhabited by more than one spirit.

"There's a nurse or a nanny, I'm not sure which," Kim said. "She wears a long black skirt and a white apron, and she came around when Robert was born."

Kim believes the birth of her son 18 months ago "stirred up the spirit" of a governess or nurse who may have once tended children in the home, possibly even the little girl whose ghost still lingers.

"When Robert was about 9 months old, we moved his crib mattress to the bottom rung. I put him to bed one evening, and came back to check on him a little while later," Kim said. "He was sitting in the middle of the floor. There's no way he could have climbed out of that crib."

Still, Kim's certain the spirits are friendly, "drawn by our family or reaching out to us for some reason I can't explain."

Kim's husband Bob, commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment's 1st Battalion, doesn't believe the home is haunted, though he's had occasion to doubt his own convictions, Kim said.

"One night around 1 a.m., we were both awakened by the sound of someone playing Old Suzanna on the harmonica," she said. "He can't explain that one."

Out with the old ...

"You know how if you close your eyes when someone's in the room, you can still feel their presence? That's exactly what it felt like. We knew a ghost was here, and now it's gone."

A new Davis Hill resident feels certain she chased away a ghost that had taken up residence on Hartstock Loop.

"The house set empty for a long time before we moved in," said the resident, who asked not to be identified. "I think it probably moved in here because it was empty."

The ghost hung around for a couple of weeks, perhaps willing to share the space as long as the new family didn't intrude upon his late-night wanderings. But when the young wife and mother of two woke to feed the baby at 2 a.m., she met the reclusive spirit in passing.

"I was half asleep. I didn't realize it was there till I passed right through it," she said. "It was white, and I could only make out the legs, but I felt a sort of resistance when I went through it.

"I think I must have ticked it off, because we haven't felt it since. I kind of wish it had hung around till Halloween."

Scapeghost
