Pioneer Battalion receives new CO

Colonel glad to be back at Fort Benning

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

An airborne and ranger school graduate made his return to Fort Benning during 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's change of command ceremony Tuesday at York Field.

Lt. Col. Gregory C. Kane succeeds Lt. Col. Michael D. Winstead, whose next assignment will be as the joint experimentation officer at Joint Forces Command, Norfolk, Va.

"What a great day to be a soldier at the Home of the Infantry," Kane said.

Approximately 25,000 soldiers come through Fort Benning each year, and members of Kane's battalion do everything from running live-fire ranges to teaching sniper skills. The opportunity to lead soldiers at such an integral battalion excites him, he said.

"What they learn here today will keep them alive on the battlefield," Kane said.

Col. Gordon H. Mereness, 29th Inf. Regt. commander, presided over the ceremony and said the battalion was in good hands.

"This exceptional talented officer has done all of the tough assignments, and he has done them to the highest of standards," Mereness said. "Obviously, he strives for a challenge and has the patience of a saint."

He said he was confident Kane will continue to maintain the battalion's high standards that Winstead helped maintain.

"You (Winstead) have established a sense of teamwork in all that you do — from the great relationships with the commanders and units that support you to your peers and subordinates.

"I'm eternally grateful for your creativity in figuring out how to support one more commander in the field and maintain the quality training here with your already over-tasked resources. You have always done it safely and without fanfare."

Winstead thanked his family and fellow soldiers for everything they did for him and his soldiers. He told Kane he was glad he was there and pointed out an important part of Kane's new mission.

"The range control radio is right over there behind the tent," he said and drew laughter from the ceremony attendees.

"My sadness at leaving is your happiness and great good fortune. Those across the field are extremely fortunate to have you as their new commander."

During some of Kane's previous assignments, he was:

• Rifle platoon leader, company executive officer, and assistant training officer for 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment,

• Current operations officer and chief of the Emergency Operations Center for 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized),

• Battalion executive officer for 3rd Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment,

• Senior shift director in the Joint Operations Center at the Allied Forces Southern Europe in Naples, Italy.

Lt. Col. Gregory C. Kane, left, Maj. Scott P. Lopez, and Lt. Col. Michael D. Winstead inspect the troops during the 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, change of command ceremony Tuesday.

Congress commissioned Kane in 1984 when he graduated from the U.S. Military Academy. He went on to earn a master's in political science from Auburn University at Montgomery, Ala.

Kane has also graduated from Air Assault and Jump Master School, the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses, the Combined Arms Staff Service School, and Air Command and Staff College.

Some of the awards the colonel has earned include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Joint Service Commendation Medal, Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal and the Expert Infantryman Badge.

Kane is married to the former Jane Anne Coury of Fayetteville, N.C.

Millennium Challenge displays new capabilities

Advanced technology impresses many

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning soldiers participating in Millennium Challenge '02 were relatively removed from the battle making big news in recent issues of the Army Times over an alleged "scripted" win.

Their primary mission: to carefully plan and closely follow the movements of VIPs who flowed in and out of the Joint Visitors Bureau.

The JVB coordinated schedules for over 400 VIPs who spent anywhere from one to four days at Fort Irwin, Calif., the site of Millennium Challenge '02 and the Army Transformation Experiment.

More than 200 flag officers from all services and from foreign countries attended, including the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the Chief of Staff of the Army.

While Fort Benning soldiers in the JVB did not have time to track the events of the war game, they did have the opportunity to learn a great deal about the new technology, much of it overshadowed by the press surrounding the Stryker Interim Armored Vehicle.

"The Fort Benning soldiers worked very hard," said Lt. Col. Arthur Tulak, who served as the deputy commander of the JVB. The trade-off was the exposure to equipment they might not have ever seen otherwise.

Maj. Eric Heberling, safety officer at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, saw all of the new equipment in the JVB display area, including the Stryker and the XM-142, a high mobility artillery rocket system.

"The XM-142 is smaller than the current MLRS and operates with only a three-man crew," Heberling said. "The vehicle and the launcher are all one unit, which will make it much more deployable and a real advantage."

Maj. Gavin Guidry, operations officer for 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, praised the Common Remote Operating Weapons System on an armored security vehicle that can be used with a wide variety of weapons. The platform has thermal capabilities, is stabilized and can be fired remotely.

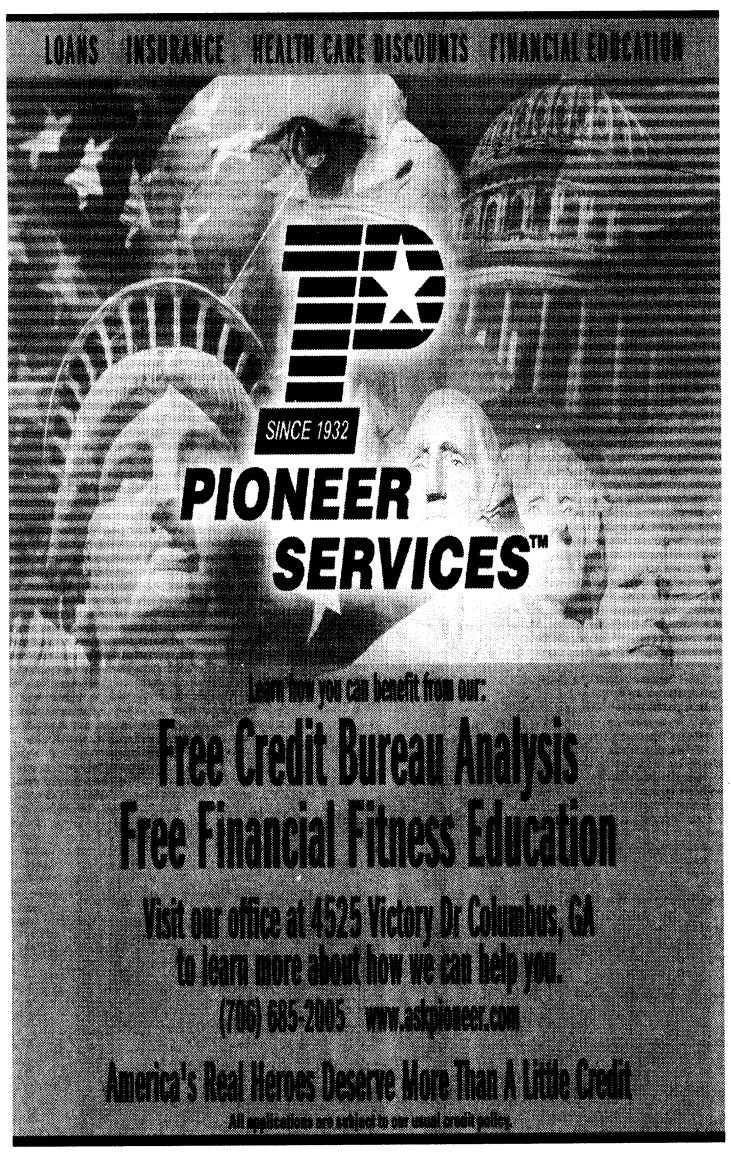
"This piece of equipment represents increased survivability for crews with weapons like the MK-19 and the .50 caliber machine gun," Guidry said. "The crew can operate a weapon at night, on the move, with the hatch closed."

Of the technology Tulak saw, he was most impressed with the new, high-speed vessel called the HSV-X1 Joint Venture, commercially made in Australia to ferry cars and passengers.

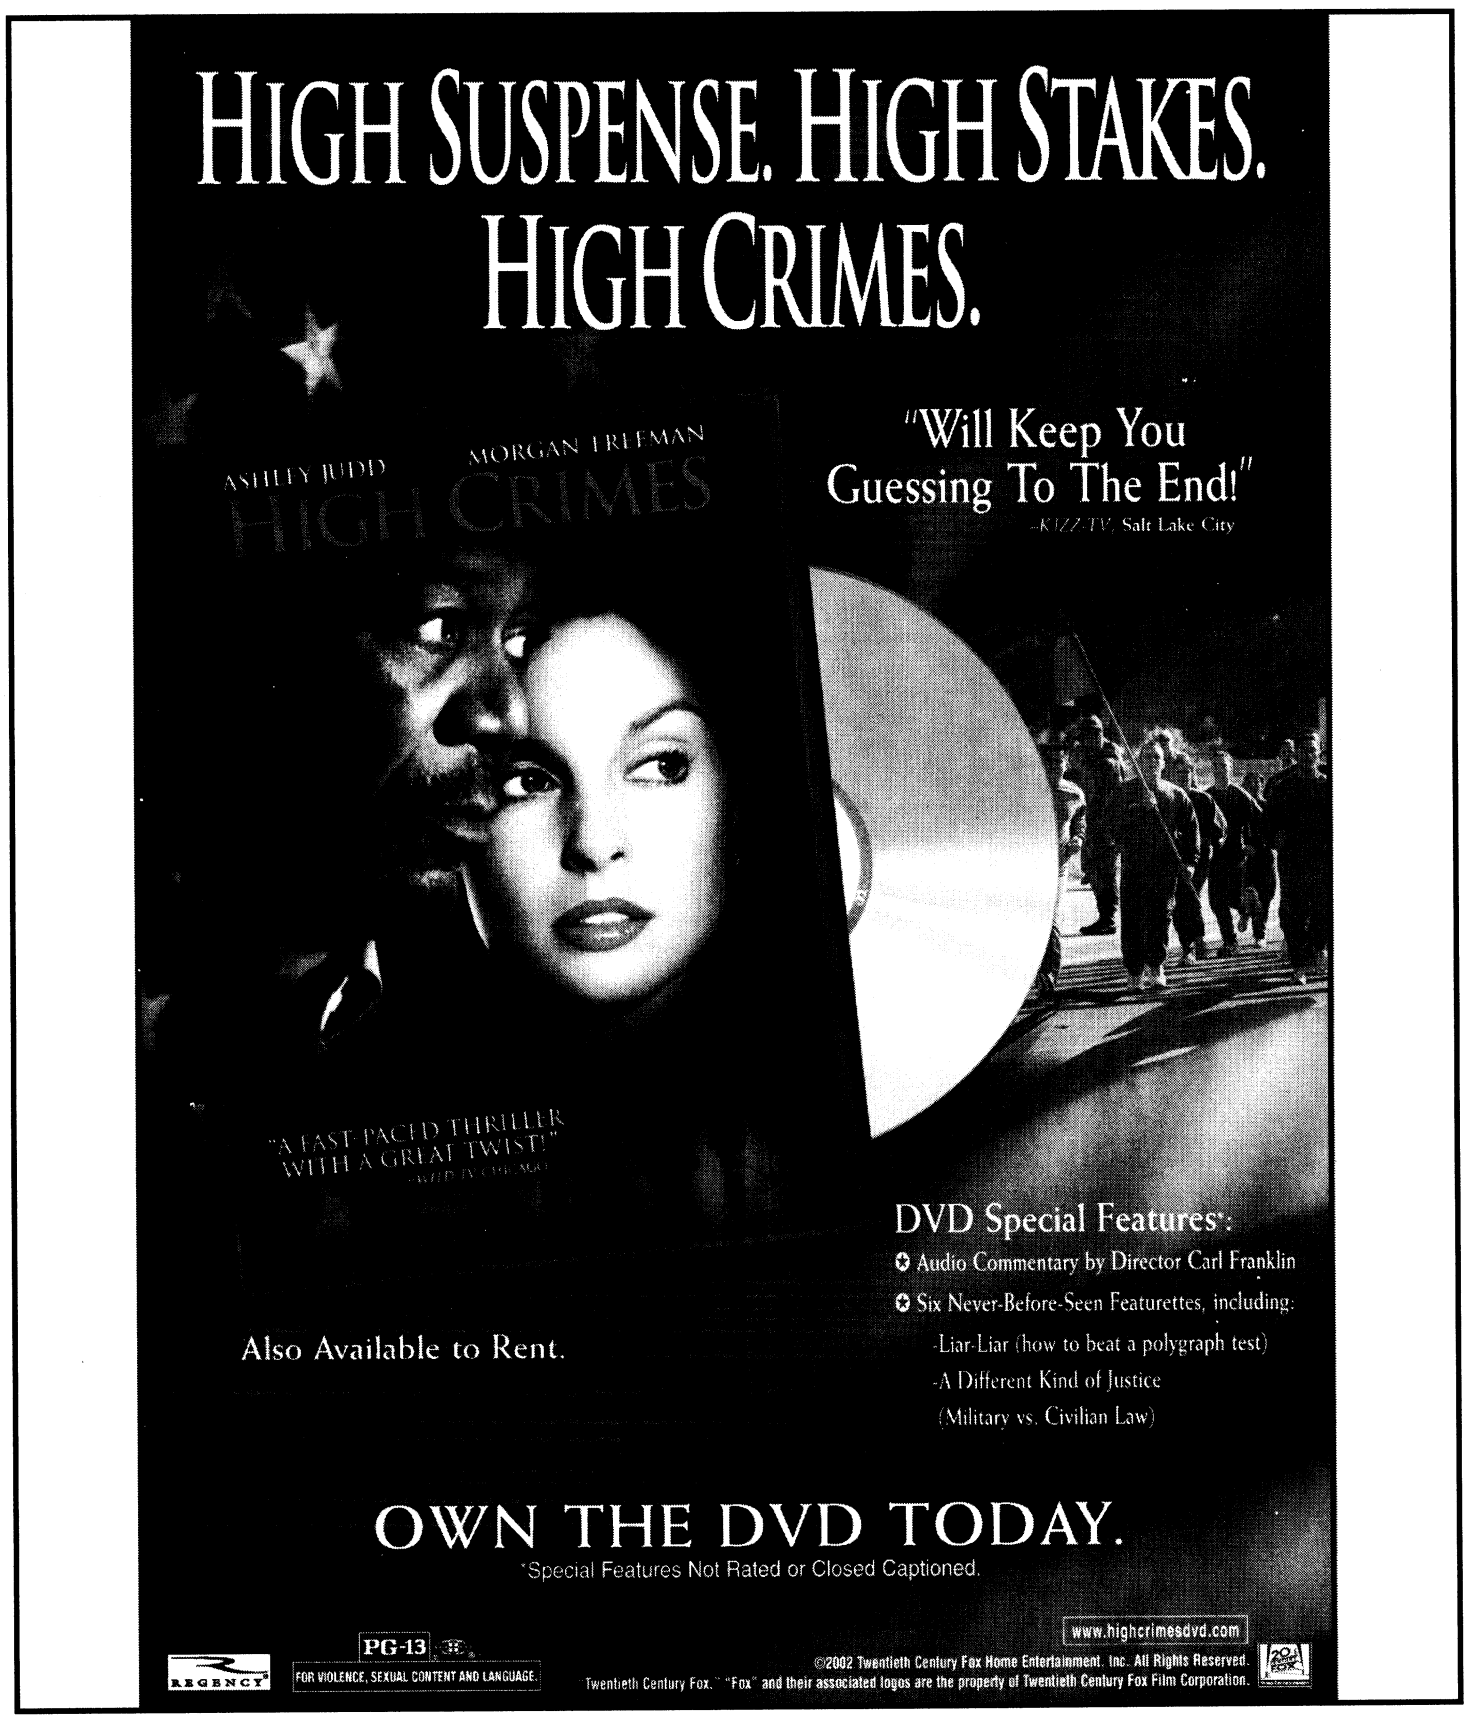
It represents a joint venture between services assessing its military value. The boat has a large cargo capacity and can operate in fairly shallow water.

"That technology would have been useful at Inchon, where the landings could only take place at high tide," Tulak said.

"It has amazing speed. It's not too exciting because it doesn't shoot anything, but with just a few of these, a commander could move forces and change the dynamics of the battle so rapidly that the enemy could not respond."



The Joint Venture is capable of speeds in excess of 46 mph, which represents a significant leap in speed for a boat that large, Tulak said.



The subject matter experts were available to talk with and answer questions about the technology on display a short distance from the JVB area.

Most individuals came away from the experience knowing as much as they wanted about the technical component of the Army and joint services transformation, Tulak said.

"This was a big officer and noncommissioned officer professional development opportunity," Tulak said.

Equality day luncheon celebrates women

Strong women fought for change to constitution

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

The fight for women's equality began long before Congress ratified the 19th Amendment to the Constitution Aug. 26, 1920. Women like Susan B. Anthony, Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott championed the cause in the 1800s, even though they knew that change would not likely come about during their lifetime.

These women and the radical changes they proposed were remembered Monday at the Women's Equality Day luncheon at the Fort Benning Officers' Club by Col. Gale Pollock, the first female commander of Martin Army Community Hospital.

After the invocation and welcoming remarks, the crowd was treated to a modern dance performed by the "Centurionettes," a trio made up of 1st Sgt. Cheryl Woodhouse, 1st Lt. Temarkus Caldwell and Sgt. 1st Class Georgia Perry. Woodhouse choreographed the performance to music by Janet Jackson.

Winnie Torain, the installation's Special Emphasis Program manager, presented the first Women's Equality Day Award to Elva Shoemaker, an equal opportunity specialist who demonstrated a "commitment to the cause of voting rights" through her volunteer work with the League of Women Voters and as a voter registrar. The SEP committee oversees various minority employment program and the Federal Women's Program.

Sgt. 1st Class Edward Amaker, the EO advisor who organized the event, was quick to note the contribution of Pfc. Bianca Clayborne, who came forward and volunteered a poem for the event. Clayborne originally wrote the poem, titled "Worth Unknown," for her mother on Mother's Day, but made a few changes to adapt it for Women's Equality Day.

"I'm glad to see the younger soldiers getting involved in these events," he said.

Clayborne was followed by Col. Steve Layfield, assistant commandant of the Infantry School, who introduced Pollock.

"It's a great day to be at Fort Benning and a great day to be talking about women's equality, to applaud it and to recognize what it is." Layfield said. "Colonel Pollock is a scholar, a professional and a true soldier at heart," he said, and referring to her biography and her background as an anesthesiologist, "she's the number one person to put you to sleep."

Far from putting the audience to sleep, Pollock gave an informative speech of the trials and tribulations faced by women like Anthony and Stanton and their relevance to women today.

Stanton and Mott organized a convention of more than 300 men and women and composed a Declaration of Sentiments that said "all men and women are created equal."

The radical changes proposed at that convention were for reform to allow educational opportunities for women, equality under the law and the right to vote. The convention provided an effective means to publicize issues.

> "We have a great obligation to imagine a future where the work of the past and the present creates change for our country and our world that our children can inherit."
> Col. Gale Pollock
> Martin Army Community Hospital commander

"We are celebrating today the conclusion of America's first Civil Rights movement," Pollock said.

Thirty-six states were needed to ratify the amendment, and after Tennessee ratified the Amendment on Aug. 18, 1920, Congress signed it with no fanfare, Pollock said.

Pollock noted Wyoming as an excellent and unprecedented example for women's rights, in spite of an all-male legislature. Congress would go so far as to deny statehood as long as it continued to let women vote in the territory. Wyoming had the first woman governor and the first female justice of the peace, Esther Morris, who educated many on the issues of women's suffrage.

"Some of the greatest symbols of America are women," Pollock said. "Lady Justice and Lady Liberty — one promising fairness, one freedom."

"As women, we get up each day balancing our hopes and fears for ourselves and our families," she said, and the women of the past helped to try and find that balance.

"We have a great obligation to imagine a future where the work of the past and the present creates change for our country and our world that our children can inherit," Pollock said.

Staff Judge Advocate office receives award

Free advice available to soldiers

> "What makes this office unique is that there is a mix of attorneys and assistants from all walks of life."

> Legal Assistance attorney, OSJA

The Fort Benning Office of the Staff Judge Advocate received the Army Chief of Staff Award for Excellence in Legal Assistance Aug. 21.

"What makes this office unique is that there is a mix of attorneys and assistants from all walks of life," said Michael Lane, a Legal Assistance attorney for OSJA since 1988.

The OSJA office is made up of 20 lawyers. 10 attorneys are military, and 10 are civilian. There are four legal divisions including criminal law, claims, a command advice office to help commanders with contracting and other legal advice, and the legal assistance branch to help soldiers with personal issues.

"Many of our attorneys were infantry soldiers themselves before becoming lawyers," Lane said. "This helps them relate with the men and women who walk in here."

The office offers free legal assistance to soldiers and families on everything from car accidents to adoptions.

"We can talk with soldiers about any kind of personal problem, whether it be civil or even criminal," Lane said. "We are here for soldiers and are committed to helping them through difficult times."

One Fort Benning officer who wishes to remain anonymous has contacted legal services on several occasions for advice in consolidating debts and paying off creditors.

"I wanted to find out from a legal perspective how I could save my credit," he said. "The attorneys at legal assistance were able to make some calls for me and help me get things worked out."

Approximately 65,000 retirees are also part of the clientele of the OSJA office, Lane said. They seek legal assistance for anything from wills, temporary guardianships and powers of attorney.

"The retirees in the local community face many challenges as they get older," Lane said. "They are often concerned with their family's financial needs if they die, and we help them sort through it."

One thing is for sure, legal assistance is only a phone call away, and attorneys say there is no need for soldiers to feel embarrassed about asking for help.

"The military poses great challenges and a lot is asked out of our soldiers," Lane said. "This office is here for the men and women — whatever their legal issue may be."

A legal assistance counselor is available from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Wednesday, 1 to 5 p.m. Thursdays and 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Fridays.

For more information about the free services OSJA provides or for an appointment, call 545-3282.

Nationwide Automotive Clearance Comes To Columbus This Week

Freeway Ford Named Area's Exclusive Disposal Point For National Disposal Of New and Used Vehicles

More than 37,000 new vehicles, program cars, auction vehicles, off-lease and rental vehicles, factory over-orders and more have been distibuted to locations across the country for immediate sale.

Columbus, GA -

If you've been thinking about buying a car sometime this year, you'll probably want to make that time this week. Why? Over 37,000 new and used vehicles have been sent to select dealers across the country for disposal, hundreds of which have been sent to Freeway Ford in Columbus.

"You can buy one with zero down and your payment is just $79 a month."

'96 Hyundai Accent, # 991100A $2990. Plus Tax, Tag Title, License and Doc Fees. With Approved Credit. Subject to prior sale. All Offers Stand Alone. See Dealer for Full Details.

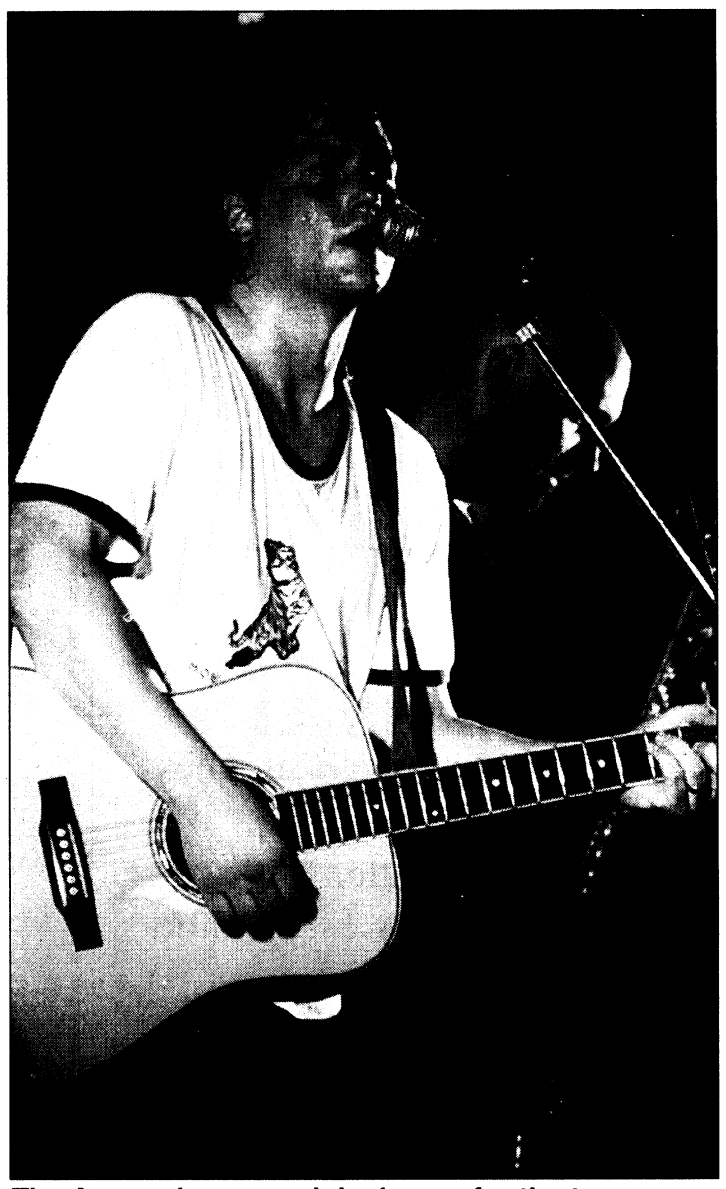
The National Vehicle Disposal has been organized to help deplete excess inventories of all types of automobiles. New cars, trucks, minivans and sport utilities as well as a vast array of previously titled vehicles are all available for purchase at incredibly discounted prices.

In addition to drastic discounts, participating dealers are offering many other incentives to insure these vehicles are disposed of before 7 PM Labor Day Monday, September 2nd. Buyers can secure financing on any Disposal vehicle without making a down payment. Plus, the first payment will not be due until January 2003.

Freeway Ford General Manager Will Johnston says Columbus residents should take advantage of this unique opportunity. " We feel real fortunate to have been selected as a disposal point for several truckloads of these vehicles." explained Johnston. "There were no other dealers in the state selected. This is the only place to be if you're buying a car this week."

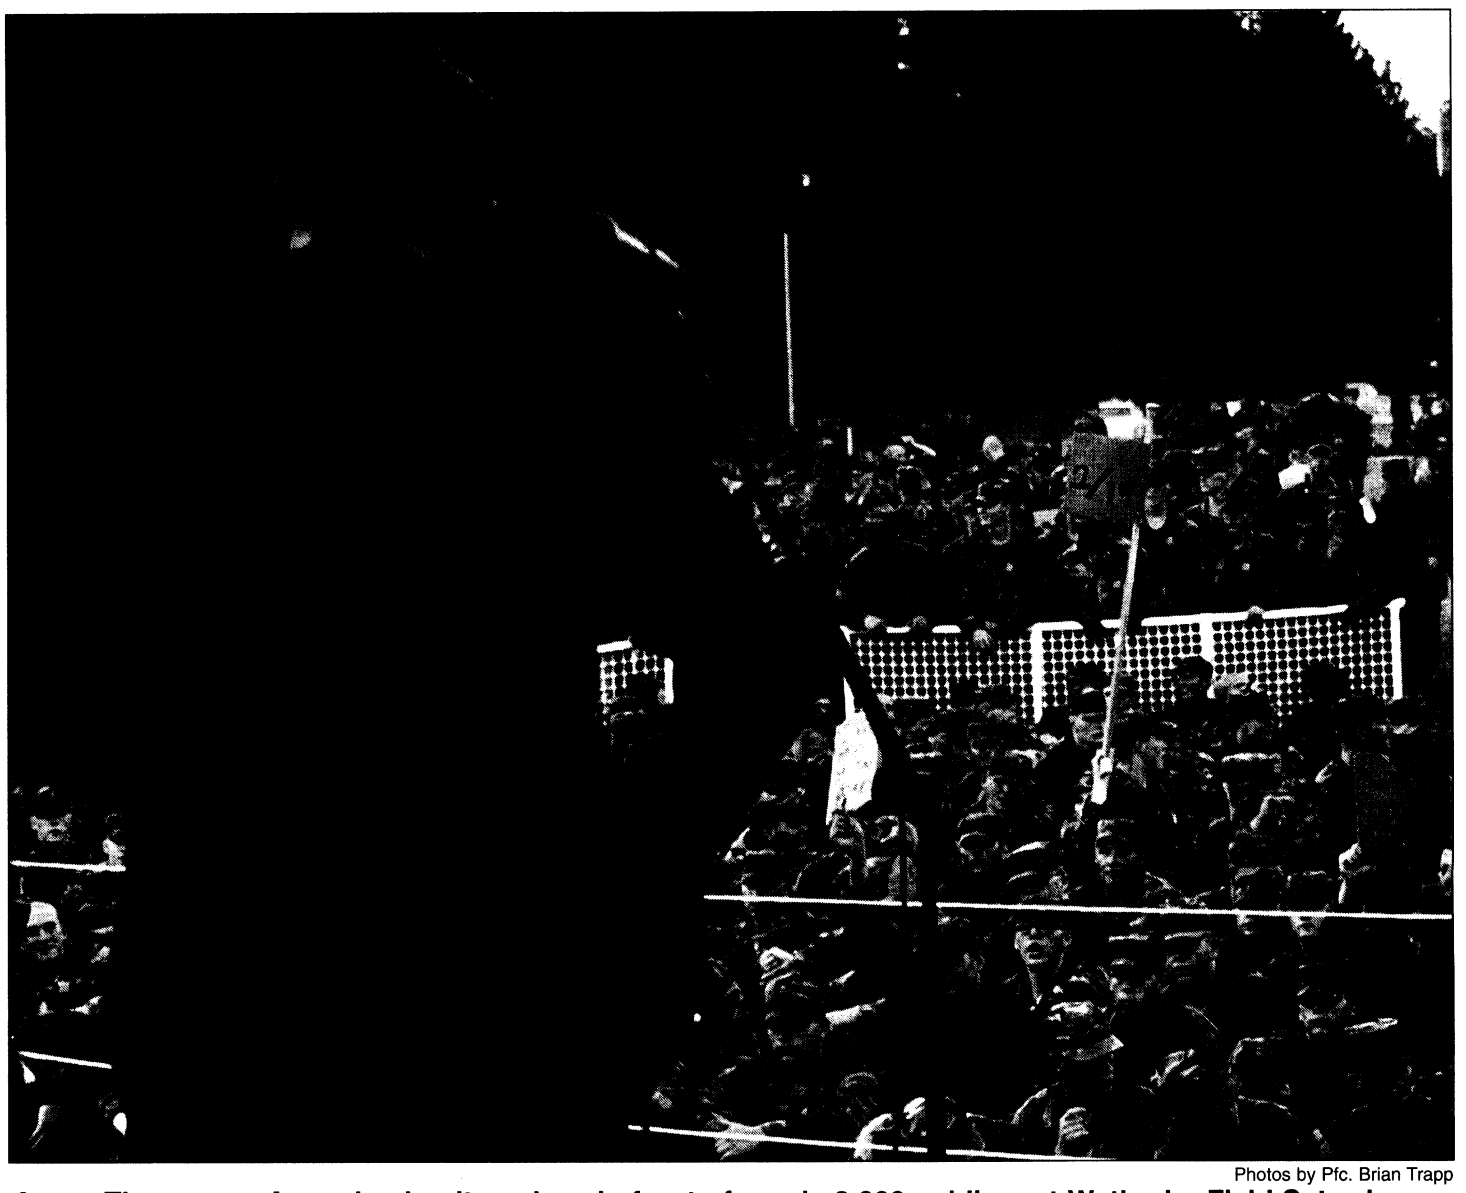
Johnston added his store has secured incredibly low 0% financing for this event. Johnston explained "Interest rates are going up. This could be your last chance to lock in financing this low. Plus, we've loosened all credit restrictions so everyone can get in on this event - no matter their credit history."

"The selection is excellent" according to Johnston. "I've been in the car business many years and I've never seen this many cars priced this low. You can buy one with zero down and your monthly payment is still just $79 a month. Imagine how low it would be if you put money down!"



"I've never seen this many cars priced this low."

While selection is good, the sooner you get there the better. Johnston explained "We're told this event must conclude 7 PM Labor Day Monday, September 2nd and it will not be held over".



Freeway Ford is located at 2025 Box Road in Columbus. For more information call (706) 563-3023 or go to www.nationalvehicledisposal.com.

The radio-friendly, pop-rock stylings of Acres returned to Wetherby Field for their second appearance in the MWR concert series, playing for nearly 3,000 soldiers from Basic Combat Training and Infantry Training Brigade Saturday.

There have been three concerts for Sand Hill soldiers played at the field since its opening in June.

"The first time we were out here was great," said Tim Acres, lead vocalist. "We're honored to be invited back."

"I love to come here and support the soldiers for what they are doing for their country," said Jen Lowe, percussionist.

The soldiers had some time away from training and their battalion areas to enjoy pizza, soda and the show.

"This is a good opportunity for the soldiers to break away from training and interact with other companies and have a good time, said 1st Lt. Ron Vargas, executive officer, E Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment.

For many of the soldiers, this was the not first time they had the chance to come to a concert, but not everyone supports the event.

"Events like these show a paradigm shift in the Army," said Command Sgt. Maj. George R. Monk, ITB command sergeant major.

"A lot of older soldiers say this is bad for training, but it's not," Monk said. "With what we expect these soldiers to do in the future, it's good to show that the military is more than just hard training.

It helps show the quality of life the Army has to offer. These concerts are a big shot in the arm for Fort Benning.

"I'm happy we're doing this for our soldiers," Monk said.

The soldiers seemed to have a good time, even though it was hot.

"The band was great," said Pvt. Aaron Emery, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf., Regt. "This was a real morale boost for me."

The concert went well, and all the soldiers were very appreciative of the opportunity to play on post, Acres said.

General fires future integrated weapon

Directorate proves weapon to be reliable

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Small-arms weapons used by soldiers during battle are invaluable for their survival.

With that in mind, Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, Directorate of Combat Development and Assistant Project Manager Soldier Weapons are moving forward with a program that is testing a new integrated weapons system with technological sophistication that provides more fire power. The XM29, an objective individual combat weapon, is an early prototype and will be integrated with the Land Warrior system. It's expected to be fielded by fiscal 2008.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton fired the weapon Aug. 23 during a training exercise at Red Cloud Range that demonstrated to the U.S. Army Infantry Center the revolutionary capabilities of the new weapon.

It takes away the enemy's opportunity to hide, Eaton said. It will deliver killing or incapacitating fires above foxholes, trenches or into buildings, rooms or bunkers.

"I thought it was a flawless demonstration," said Maj. Stuart Meyer, chief, Small Arms Division, DCD.

XM29 fires 5.56 mm rounds, but most of its lethality comes from the 20 mm high-explosive airburst ammunition it fires.

"The whole point is to add lethality to the infantry squad," Eaton said.

Compared to the M-203 grenade launcher, the fragment-airburst ammunition will provide more lethality and precision on targets, said Maj. Roy Manauis, APM-Soldier Weapons. During the late '80s, there was an advanced combat rifle study that determined the main cause of a missed target is due to aiming error exacerbated by combat stress.

"We had 100 percent reliability with experimental rounds (Aug. 22-23)," Manauis said. "Burst ammunitions will offset some of the aiming error, when the laze is correct."

The XM29 has a laser range finder, used to "laze" a target, a day and thermal optics and digital compass. Technological features on the weapon are integrated with a laser range finder that programs a ballistic solution into the ammunition fuse. Enemy movement during battle is from a covered and concealed position to covered and concealed position, and it's very hard to hit a moving target, Meyer said. The 20 mm rounds are programmed to reach a target distance and explode, which shoots fragments down on the target in a covered and concealed position.

"It's revolutionary," he said. "With this weapon, we are essentially telling our enemy there is no place to hide."

> "Weight is always an issue. We want to maximize lethality and optimize weight."
> Maj. Stuart Meyer
> Chief, Small-Arms Division, DCD

The laser inputs a distance to target solution for the ammunition. Then, the soldier re-aims a meter above the target and fires.

The process takes four to five seconds, Manauis said. The rounds are shot at a flat trajectory and are expected to have a maximum range of 500 meters.

"Our soldier will be a more lethal weapon system," Manauis said. "He will have an overmatched capability that no one can compete with.

There is a cost to be paid for increased lethality, Meyer said. In its first of a three block phase, XM29 weighs 17.5 pounds.

"Weight is always an issue," Meyer said. "We want to maximize lethality and optimize weight."

The first block is the evolutionary phase, which is what was demonstrated Aug. 23, he said. Each block will progress and add more lethality to the weapon and lessen the weight of the weapon. By the third block, the weapon should weigh 14 pounds and be more destructive than the current model.

"With this weapon, we are giving our soldiers what they need to make combat an unfair fight, so our soldiers can come home," Meyer said.

USAMU trains MEDDAC at rifle range

Medics learn way of gun from AMU

Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Three service rifle shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit provided primary marksmanship instruction to 47 medical personnel from Martin Army Community Hospital Aug. 22 at Roosevelt Range.

The doctors, nurses, dentists, lab technicians and medics — from the rank of private to colonel — received basic instruction and familiarization on the course of fire of the M-16 A2 rifle from Sgt. 1st Class Charles W. Herlth Jr., Sgt. 1st Class Rand D. Bentson and Staff Sgt. Michael E. Moore.

The USAMU shooters provided the training and assisted MEDDAC in zeroing their weapons and qualifying on the alternate M-16 course, which consisted of 40 shots prone at 50-meters.

"We asked AMU for the training so we could improve our scores and readiness," said Sgt. 1st Class Toni Lewis, MACH health care specialist. "We all work as one team — officer and enlisted — to accomplish our mission."

"We wanted the expertise of the Army Marksmanship Unit," said Master Sgt. Roberto Hernandez, the hospital's NCOIC of operations and training. "The AMU gave us a good class, providing a lot of good information and details and professional instruction we couldn't have gotten elsewhere."

Herlth, of the USAMU Operations and Training Section, explained the USAMU mission to the participants, stressing that Army Marksmanship Unit shooters do a lot more than compete and win in national and international competitions, but they also bring that experience to the rest of the Army through training classes and research and development.

"Shooting is nothing but sight alignment and trigger control," said Bentson, the NCOIC of the Army Adventure Shooting Package. He instructed the group and explained how to set the rifle's sights and windage knob. Before heading to their firing points, Moore, a service rifle shooter and armorer, demonstrated the correct shooting positions and how to use the sling for support when not using a sandbag. Then it was off to zero their weapons and try for the Expert Rifle Badges.

Shooting in high heat and humidity, all members of the medical activity were able to pass the familiarization and qualification course.

"I know the AMU instruction helped a lot; we were glad to have their help," said Sgt. 1st Class Guy Rex, a medic and officer in charge of the range. "Everyone did well, and everybody had nothing but good things to say about the AMU guys, who gave an excellent class."

MPs: Encourage motorists to slow down, stay alive

Weekend travelers heading to Florida will see an influx of police aligining the medians of Highways 280 and 431. MPs will be seen every few blocks off Dixie Road, Edwards Road, and 10th Mountain Division Road, Sparks said.

Some families have gone out of their way to prepare for the safety of their trip.

"We invested in a TV and VCR to put in the back of the van for the kids," said Fort Benning resident Wendi Delaney, who is driving to the Florida panhandle this weekend. "It gives us time to focus on the road while they watch quietly."

The National Highway Traffic Safety and Administration and UPS has released the Five Seeing Habits to help the driver be safe:

1. Aim high in steering: Look as far down the road as possible to uncover important traffic information to make appropriate decisions.

2. Get the big picture: Maintain the proper following distance so you can comfortably determine the true hazards around your vehicle. Don't tailgate others.

3. Scan — don't stare. Constantly shift eyes while driving. Active eyes keep up with changing traffic conditions.

4. Leave yourself an out: Be prepared. Surround your vehicle with space in front and at least on one side to escape conflict.

5. Communicate in traffic with horn, lights and signals to establish eye contact with motorists and pedestrians. Be reasonably sure of people's intentions.

"Our advice to soldiers is to leave early and prevent the temptation to speed," Sparks said. "You won't enjoy your holiday weekend if you're laid up in a hospital somewhere."

The idea of an empty wallet may also prevent drivers from taking the risk. Speeding fines on and around Fort Benning are as follows:

- Less than 10 miles over — $50 ticket,
- 10-20 miles over — $100 ticket,
- over 20 miles — $200 ticket.

Post: To honor victims of terrorist attacks Sept. 11 will begin at 8:45 a.m. Sept. 11, with remarks by Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton. Students from Faith Middle School will attend.

A display of police and fire department vehicles will flank each side of the stage on York Field.

Following the ceremony is a memorial 5K run and 3K walk beginning near the Ranger Memorial.

The Sand Hill ceremony will take place at the same time with Col. Steve Layfield as the guest speaker. All Basic Combat Training Brigade and Infantry Training Brigade soldiers will attend the ceremony.

Other scheduled events that week include a memorial service with Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell in Marshall Auditorium at 4 p.m. Sept. 10 and the Infantry Band concert at Riverside, 100 Vibbert Ave., at 7 p.m. Sept. 9.

Concert-goers are invited to dress in red, white and blue and bring blankets or chairs for an evening of patriotic and Broadway tunes.

As an example of consistent base operations throughout the Army, officials have talked about gym improvements. Plans are currently being written to have all gyms in operation for 90 hours a week. The square footage of the gym will be based on the installation's population and all programs run by the gym, such as intramural teams, will also be under the same guidelines.

TIM will cut back the day-to-day management responsibilities, giving more functional oversight of supporting missions of the post, like quality of life, than before, Torres said.

"Our intent is to streamline headquarters, create more agile and responsive staffs, reduce layers of review and approval and allow commanders to focus on their missions," said Thomas E. White, secretary of the Army.

Organization: To thank veterans with home repair

who'll tackle the repairs Reona's home needs to make it livable — minor electrical and plumbing repairs, a little work on the front porch and a lot of work in the yard.

"It's sad, the situation around her house," Anderson said. "She's as sweet as she can be. She reminds me of my mother-in-law, who died last year. We're going to get in there and help her out. We want her to feel comfortable."

Anderson's team will participate in the third annual House of Heroes Sept. 16-20 in Columbus.

The local nonprofit organization that honors veterans and their widows by repairing their homes, will work on 50 homes this year. Fort Benning teams will sponsor 10 of those, including Roena VonCloedt's.

"They fixed up my neighbor's house last year. She put my name in," Roena said. "I never thought they'd pick me. I didn't believe it till (Anderson) came out to see me. I was so surprised I started to cry."

Roena's home is one of several Oakland Park residents on the House of Heroes' list.

Forty years ago the neighborhood was popular with soldiers for its affordability and proximity to post. The once tidy neighborhood, home to hundreds of retirees — like VonCloedt, mostly veterans of Korea and Vietnam — began to decline several years ago, said Greg Camp, a former Fort Benning chief of staff.

"There are a lot of veterans in that community who gave their lives for this country. Now they're older, and they can't keep up with the demands of their aging homes," Camp said. "This is how we say thank you to these heroes."

Each team will consist of 10-15 members, men, women and teen-agers, willing to spend a day or two doing house work, lawn work and minor repairs.

"The kinds of chores a homeowner typically has to do. For these folks they become a major problem," Camp said.

"For the rest of us, it's just a little bit of elbow grease and a little bit of time. And the rewards are great. You get a huge sense of personal gratification. It's hard to tell who benefits the most."

Military kids get chance to finish year

"Moving affects more than learning ... what is a student supposed to do?"

Stabilization program helps Army families

Pfc. Brian Trapp

Soldiers with high school seniors who graduate in 2004 should start talking to their assignment branch now if they wish to be stabilized at their present duty station for their child's graduation, said personnel officials.

More than 1,300 soldiers, NCOs and officers have signed on to this program since its inception in April 2001.

"Moving affects more than learning," said Gail Wilson, director of accountability, Fort Benning schools. "There are other things, like graduation requirements that vary from state to state, like class rankings and recommendations for scholarships. If you live in a state where there is a requirement for only one year of physical education and move, senior year, to a state where there is a requirement for three years, what is the student supposed to do?"

This program will make a huge impact for all military high school students, and high school years are the most important, especially the senior year, she said.

"My family has made great sacrifices for me and my military career," said Sgt. 1st Class Raymond Almendarez, medical operation sergeant in Camp Casey, Korea. "So, it is only fitting that the military and I should reward my son allowing him to finish his senior year."

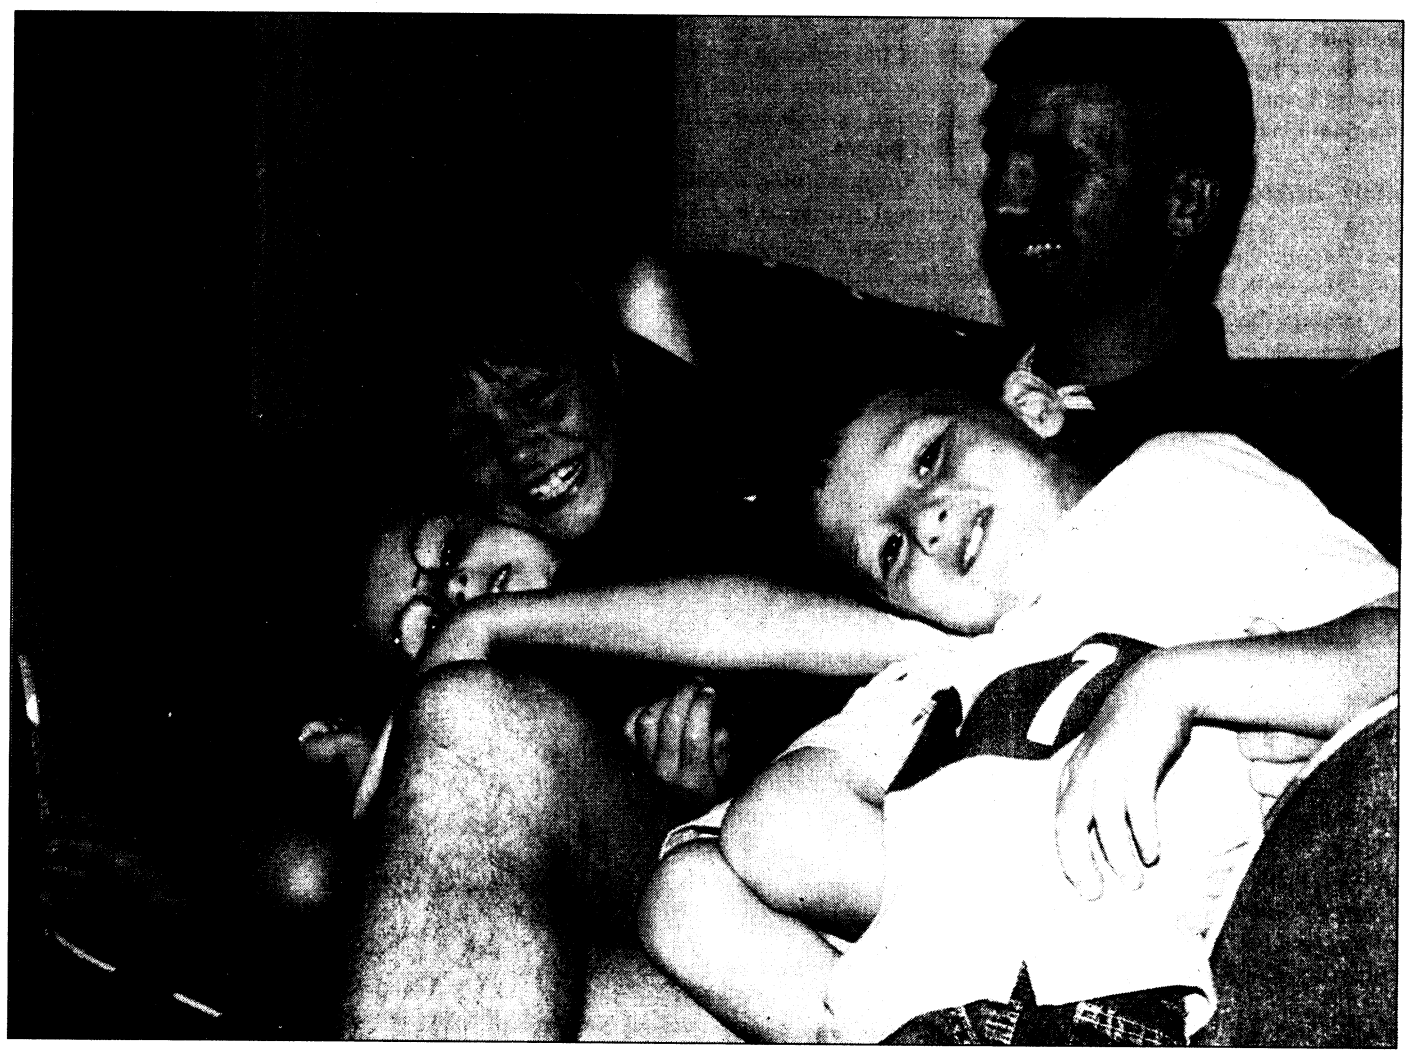
Amy Corsetto lived on Magrath Street 10 years ago. Back then McGraw Manor was a pleasant place to live, she said.

"Yards were always trimmed neat. Dogs were never a problem. I didn't have to worry about the kids," Corsetto said. "Things sure have changed."

The Corsetto family is back at Fort Benning, living just two doors down from their former home, in a neighborhood Amy said "hardly resembles the place we used to live."

Corsetto and four of her neighbors have decided to do something about what they call their community's "ghetto image." They've volunteered to participate in Fort Benning's newly revamped Community Life Mayors' Association.

"I'm tired of people asking 'Where do you stay?' And when you tell them, they say, 'That's the ghetto,'" said Amy Riley, who'll assume the position of mayor in McGraw Manor in September. "I'm tired of it. We've got to change that. It's only the ghetto if we let it be the ghetto."



With a nod to McGraw Manor's immense population — 952 families — Fort Benning's garrison officials have increased the number of vice mayor positions to lighten the load for the historically overtaxed mayor.

"We've never been able to keep a volunteer mayor in this position because it's just too much for one person to handle," said Evelyn Livermore, the association's president. "With a mayor and four vice mayors working together toward a common goal, we believe great things can be accomplished."

The mayors' association will induct eight new mayors and vice mayors Sept. 13 after a two-day training program designed to "empower the

'Almost nobody' adopts three

Neglected and abandoned by their parents, shuffled from one foster home after another — as many as nine — Destiny, Justin and Kyle were considered damaged goods.

Nobody actually called them that, but in the eyes of state welfare workers and potential parents, they were considered a bad bet — too much history, too much trauma and too many years between them.

At 9, 8, and 4, their chances of being adopted were practically nil.

"Everybody wants newborns. After the age of 3, chances of being adopted are cut in half. And nobody wants three kids. Two, maybe, but not three," Lisa Massey said.

Well, almost nobody.

"We couldn't pass them up," said Lisa, as 8-year-old Justin climbed up on her lap. "We just jumped in headfirst."

After years of sifting through red tape and legal loopholes, Capt. Eric and Lisa Massey have finally become the parents they always wanted to be. And Destiny, Justin and Kyle have the parents they never thought they'd find.

"How long will you be my son?" Eric asks 4-year-old Kyle, in a game they're both familiar with.

"60 seconds," Kyle giggles, his eyes dancing behind tiny round glasses.

"What? 60 seconds!" his dad says, feigning shock. Then the tickling begins.

"OK. OK. Forever and ever," Kyle shrieks.

"We told them from day one this is their permanent home," Lisa said. "They had separation and trust issues, of course. They've been through so much. But I think they finally feel that this is it."

High-school sweethearts, Eric and Lisa always assumed they'd have children of their own.

"When he came home from Desert Storm, he threw away my birth control pills," Lisa laughed. "We never thought we'd have problems conceiving."

After years of fertility treatments and deliberation, the couple decided to adopt. That was nearly three years ago.

From the beginning they suffered one setback after another. The certification process was lengthy and complicated and had to be repeated every time the Masseys moved, which was frequently, given Eric's profession as a ranger platoon trainer.

Even the move from Columbus to Fort Benning set the adoption process back several months.

"It was two steps forward, three steps back," said Lisa. "But when we finally got it all straightened out, we found out these three were available for adoption. We were lucky."

They met the children in May at a foster home nearby.

"When we left the house, we didn't speak to each other the whole way home. We knew this was it. They had to be ours. And it was like 'Oh my God. Three of them. They're amazing,'" Lisa said.

But the biggest battle of all was just beginning.

Though the state was ready to release the siblings into the Masseys' custody until the adoption becomes final, the process got mired in post regulations that are fuzzy on the issue of fostering and

Postwide yard sale: Don't throw it away, sell it

Bikes, chairs some items to sell Sept. 7

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Columbus residents may be hootin' and hollerin' over the recent arrival of store giants Bed Bath and Beyond, Marshall's, and Ross, but here on Fort Benning, shop-a-holics don't need to go very far.

The postwide yard sale is on the horizon, and Sept. 7 organizers expect at least a third of the yards on post to be overflowing with bargains.

"This is a time of year when new arrivals from the summer are getting settled in their homes," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "Residents will get the chance to meet their neighbors. It's a social event."

For some maybe, but there are loads of yard sale "professionals" who take this sort of thing very seriously.

"Most military families have a habit of accumulating too many things over the years. This is the time to streamline those items."

Chuck Walls,
Garrison manager

They'll be arriving at the crack of dawn and will make out like bandits, Walls said.

"A bunch of us get together every year and have a blast going up and down the streets hunting for bargains," said Evelyn Livermore, a Bouton Heights resident and president of the Fort Benning Mayors' Association. "I find the best deals are usually on furniture and clothing. You'll find a lot of antiques, also."

The tradition of the postwide yard sale was started seven years ago on Fort Benning to build morale and help families who are constantly moving every few years.

"We all move so often and there are always items we have to get rid of because of space," Walls said. "Most military families have a habit of accumulating too many things over the years. This is the time to streamline those items."

The postwide yard sale is usually held twice a year, once in May, and then again in September. However, last September, the post canceled the yard sale because of the terrorists' attacks.

"I know we are all going to be feeling a little down because of the anniversary of the attacks," Livermore said. "I am looking forward to this event to help us all take our minds off of it."

The yard sale has been

1,380 soldiers who have applied for the stabilization program. So far, 1,155 enlisted personnel have applied for stabilization, of which, 1,153 were approved.

Soldiers must submit requests no later than 12 months prior to the beginning of the senior year of school.

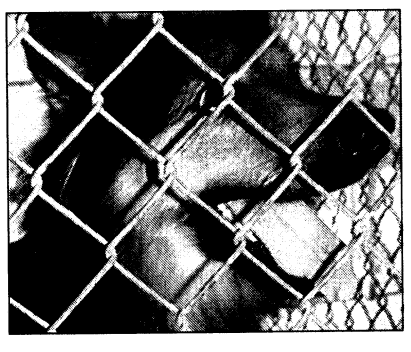
For example, if the student's senior year starts in September 2003, the request must be submitted to Personnel Command no later than September 2002.

Soldiers may initiate a request for stabilization by submitting a DA Form 4187 listing the family members name and social security number.

The family member must be enrolled in the Defense Eligibility and Enrollment Reporting System.

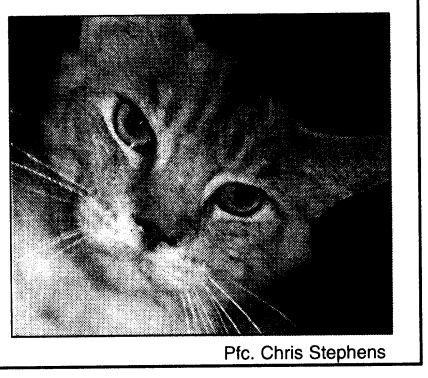
A letter from the high school stating when the family member is projected to graduate must be attached to the 4187.

Soldiers stationed overseas must state on the form that they will extend their foreign-service tour to meet the stabilization requirement.



Enlisted soldiers must also list any scheduled training, such as schooling or temporary duty en route, on the 4187.

Officers with scheduled training should contact their branch assignment officer to reschedule that training.



PERSCOM remains the approval authority for all stabilization requests.

advertised on post as well as off post.

"My children look forward to this as much as I do," Livermore said.

"They are planning on setting up lemonade stands to make a little extra cash.

"Last year I spent well over $200," Livermore said. "It's tough to resist once you see all that's out there."

The postwide yard sale runs from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. Sept. 7.

All items not sold can be donated to the Thrift Shop on Ingersoll Avenue after the yard sale.

Mayors: Bring ideas, action

mayors to empower their communities," said Livermore, the post's "senior" mayor with one year of experience under her belt.

"The mayors' association has always had a high turnover rate, because mayors and vice mayors get discouraged at lack of progress or lack of community participation," she said. "With proper training and continuous training, I think this group will succeed where others have given up because they have realistic expectations and the resources to accomplish what it is they want."

And what is it they want?

"I want to see it the way it used to be," Corsetto said. "I want to see neighbors helping neighbors, residents taking pride in the way their yards look, families coming out to do things together. Just a good old-fashioned neighborhood."

"We want the same things our residents tell us they want," said Ed Dechine, mayor of Custer Terrace. At 47, Dechine said he remembers when "neighbors were neighborly."

"I'm a little older. I know how it used to be, and I want to bring it back," he said. "I think that's what everyone wants. The question is how do we go about it."

According to the association's guidelines, the mayor's job is to be a "conduit of information," said Deborah Holton, Fort Benning's Installation Volunteer Coordinator. They're not a policing agency, but "an information and referral resource to let community members know what's available for them. It's about communication," she said.

Though the mayors work closely with MPs and Community Life NCOs, their job is to act as liaisons between the post and the residents, Holton said.

"They're here to let the residents know someone cares, and to point them in the right direction to get the help they need," she said.

"A social worker" is how Autumn Cyler defines her position as mayor of Indianhead Terrace.

"I'm a social worker by profession. It's always been my job to empower people with the knowledge they need to be successful at whatever they're doing," said Cyler, who served as community mayor and vice mayor at Fort Lewis, Wash., for four years. "That's what I'll be doing — getting the answers people need to live successfully on post, whether it's housing regulations or Army Community Services or whatever. It's my job to educate them."

Tiffany Wetherington figures to get a bit of an education herself. The 19-year-old Army wife said being vice mayor of Bouton Heights and Davis Hill will be "a growing thing."

"This is a big opportunity for me. I'm going to learn a lot about this whole Army way of life and get to know people around me," she said. "I figured the best way to do that was to get involved and volunteer."

The majority of the mayors and vice mayors are experienced volunteers, involved in their children's schools, the Red Cross, Army Family Team Building and family readiness groups. All but one are females married to soldiers. Dechine is the exception.

The former soldier calls himself "a house husband." He takes care of their 2-year-old son while his wife is deployed to Kuwait.

"I've got to meet people. It's not like I can go have a cup of coffee with my neighbor while her husband is at work. Imagine the rumors," Dechine said. "I figured being a mayor will get me out of the house and involved in the community."

Though all the mayors and vice mayors have their own ideas about how to bring their communities together, they'll all follow specific guidelines and meet certain requirements, such as distributing newsletters and conducting townhall meetings quarterly.

"We've established a program that each community can tweak to meet their own needs," Holton said. "If we follow some basic common sense practices and focus on attainable goals, we can accomplish just what we're setting out to do. We can create the kinds of communities we all want to live in."

adoption. With no liaison between the state and the installation, and no documented precedent, the Massey's tried time and time again to get approval from the post housing office, but they met with repeated resistance.

It was Lisa's persistence that finally paid off. She pored over 193 pages of regulations and unearthed an obscure policy that makes provision for "any child placed for the purpose of adoption."

"We weren't about to give up. These kids were ours from the minute we saw them," Eric said.

With the final hurdle behind them, the Massey's prepared to bring their family home.

With 10 days to prepare, the couple began "nesting," Eric said.

"All of a sudden we were running around like crazy trying to get everything ready. Lisa painted Destiny's room purple, because that's her favorite color. We wanted everything to be perfect, like most people do when they're preparing for a new baby, I guess."

"The house was ready for them," Lisa said. "We weren't."

"I'll never know how it feels to be a birth father, but that first night I laid there til 2 a.m. saying, 'What have we done?'" Eric laughed.

"We thought we understood the reality of it, but we didn't," Lisa said. "I'm sure it's difficult to birth a child of your own, but you grow together. Here we had three walking, talking children with established personalities and attitudes. It was chaos in motion."

The first few weeks were very difficult, Lisa said. The family focused on establishing boundaries and learning to live together. Justin suffers from attention deficit disorder, and Kyle was prone to bouts of anger.

"We made mistakes here and there," Lisa said. "But I told them they've always had parents. We've never had children. They've been very patient with us."

"We wanted them to want us as much as we want them," Eric said. "You can't make them love you. It just has to happen."

And it did happen, Eric realized, at a basic training graduation, where as guests of honor, the children were given reserved seats.

"Afterward I saw Destiny peeling the name tag off her seat," he said. "It said Destiny Massey. I guess that's the first time she'd seen it in print. She brought it home and put it on her bedroom door. That's when I knew."

Things have calmed down around the Massey home these days, as the family has adjusted to their new lives. A good day is a boring day, Lisa said, something she and Eric once scoffed at.

"We used to see these parents sitting outside watching their kids play on the playground, and we'd say, 'That has to be so boring.'

"Now we're doing it, sitting out back watching them jump on the trampoline, and loving every minute of it," she said.

The family sees a social worker periodically, though Lisa believes they'll soon end their sessions. A state social worker will continue to visit once a month until the adoption is final, probably by Christmas.

But the Massey's aren't waiting. They're a full-fledged family, Eric said, up to their ears in homework and soccer and cartoons.

"They're our own children, just as surely as we'd gave birth to them," he said. "There's no difference in the way we feel."

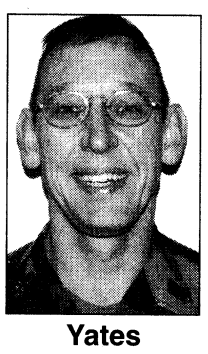
Believers find fulfillment, peace in shepherd

God is always with people no matter what



Chaplain (Maj.) Ken Yates
Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate

We are all familiar with the 23rd Psalm. David, who was the king of Israel as well as a mighty warrior, starts off this beautiful psalm by saying. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."

David acknowledges that since God is his shepherd, all that he needs is supplied to him. This opening statement summarizes the whole psalm. In the verses that follow, David explains how all his needs are met. He says the Lord makes him to lie down in green pastures and leads him besides the still waters. A sheep will only lie down when all his needs are met. The still waters picture not only thirst being quenched, but also the peace one experiences when he knows God is his shepherd.

David describes how God directs his steps. In God's word, David is told how to live his life. The Lord directs David in paths of righteousness. These paths lead to the blessings of God and the joy and peace that accompany these blessings.

REFLECTIONS

Yates

In addition, David says the Lord is always with him. Even in the valley of the shadow of death, David knows his shepherd is there. He protects him with his rod and his staff. As a result, David proclaims that he will fear no evil.

It is little wonder David says that since God is his shepherd he has everything he needs. God is the one who meets these needs, shows him how to live his life, and protects him from all harm. It is also easy to see why this psalm has become a favorite of many people and why it is usually read at funerals.

Even though it is not as well known, the New Testament has its own version of the 23rd Psalm. It is found in John 10:11. In this verse, Jesus says, I am the good shepherd; the good shepherd lays down his life for the sheep. Clearly, the Lord has the 23rd Psalm in mind.

As we saw in that psalm, God is the shepherd. Here, however, Jesus claims to be the shepherd. What a beautiful picture this is. In Jesus Christ, God the shepherd has become a man. He has entered into the experiences of the sheep. As Jesus says, he did it so he could lay down his life for the sheep.

Christ's death paid for the sins of his sheep. All who believe in Him receive eternal life and the forgiveness of sins. Here is man's greatest need. Christ, as the good shepherd, meets this need through faith in him.

In light of this verse in John 10, we can join David in his opening verse of Psalm 23 in a new and exciting way. The Lord is my shepherd. I shall not want!

Are marriage expectations realistic?

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

All of us have expectations. We innately know who is to do what in marriage, how money is to be managed, how decisions are to be made and how to be intimate in marriage. We get these expectations from our family of origin, culture and moral training. We also assume that our partner has the same expectations that we do.

When expectations are not met, disappointment results.

Happiness in marriage is based partly on our expectations being met. Dissatisfaction in marriage may result when our expectations are not met. A proverb says, "Hope deferred makes the heart sick, but a longing fulfilled is a tree of life" (Proverbs 13:12).

Koop

Unfortunately many partners do not directly express their expectations. They assume their partner already knows. If we are willing to tell God our innermost desires, shouldn't we also be willing to tell our mate (Psalm 38:9)?

In addition, many expectations are not realistic. It is unrealistic to expect that your partner will meet all your needs in life.

Hidden expectations cannot be resolved. Many people are unaware of their own expectations or the expectations of others.

Spouses should clearly state their expectations. For example: in my family my dad maintained the car. I do not feel comfortable maintaining a car. Would you be willing to take care of the car, or should I take it in to be serviced by a mechanic? Don't keep your expectations hidden from your partner.

Would you like to make your marriage communication better? Free counseling and support are available. Contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza at 545-1760.

Outlaws remain elite team on post

Team gives champs loss in midnight hoops tournament

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

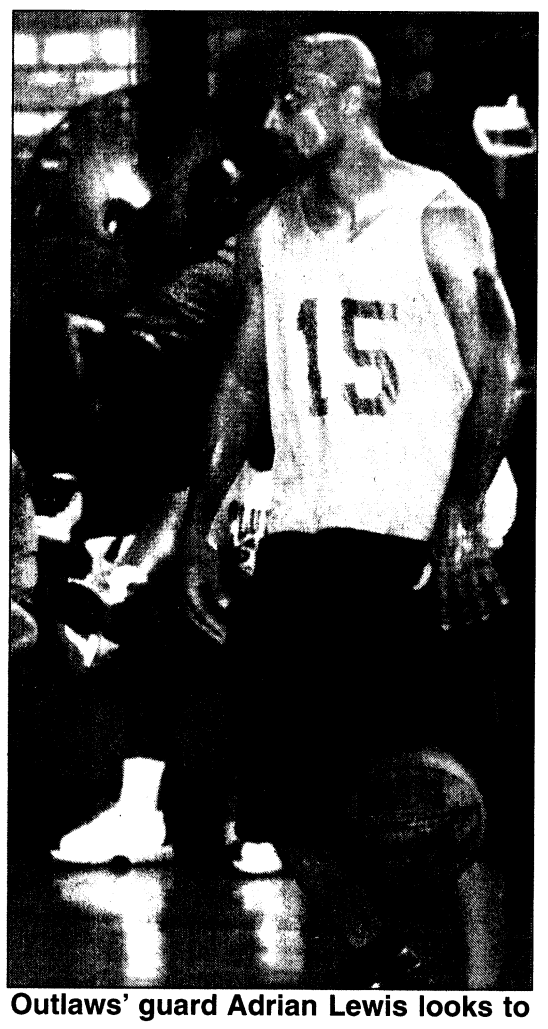
After their first loss during a tournament during a three-year period, the Outlaws showed their championship spirit in the second game of the double-elimination Midnight Basketball Tournament Sunday and defeated the Raging Bulls, 65-37.

The Outlaws of 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, lost the first of two final games against the Raging Bulls of 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regt., but beat them two out of three games they played.

"We don't accept anything less than being in the finals," said Outlaws' Adrian Lewis. "Knowing we don't want to lose and that everyone's against us drives us to compete even harder."



The Outlaws jumped out to an early 12-6 lead; doubling the score of the Raging Bulls seemed to be a common theme during the second final game.

Lewis, who lead all scorers with 16 points, and the rest of the Outlaws lit up the net with fast breaks buckets and shots from the perimeter.

"We felt pretty confident," said Outlaws' Christopher Robinson. "Once the team got focused, we were all good."

By halftime, the Outlaws held a commanding 18-point lead. The Outlaws broke out in the second half with a 6-0 run and doubled the Raging Bulls score once again at 48-24.

With five minutes left in the second, the Outlaws came a bucket away from doubling the score again at 60-31, and by that point, the Raging Bulls knew the game was pretty much finished.

Outlaws' guard Adrian Lewis looks to pass to a teammate.

The tournament served a purpose for the Outlaws, Robinson said. It gave the team a chance to get familiar with some new players on the team.

"(The tournament) gave the new guys a chance to get into the mix and to see how we play as a team," Lewis said. "Now they have a few games under their belt with us."

The victory gave the Outlaws their second Midnight-tournament title in three years.

Crossbow now legal for Georgia hunters

Sportsmen to use unique weapons

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Hunters looking to try something new this season may be happy to learn the crossbow is now a legal weapon in the state of Georgia.

Once only designated for handicapped hunters, the Georgia Department of Natural Resources has handed down a regulation legalizing the crossbow for all hunters.

"This is an exciting time for many hunters," said Pete Swiderek, Conservation Branch chief for Fort Benning Directorate of Facilities Engineering Logistics. "The crossbow will bring a new realm of competition to the sport."

The Georgia crossbows, longbows, recurve bows, and compound bows are allowed for hunting in any area designated for hunting. Crossbows will be legal during the archery season, which runs Sept. 14 through Oct. 11 and during primitive weapon and gun seasons.

"The crossbow is a convenient weapon for many people," said 1st Sgt. Billy Hogue, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment. "Women like the crossbow because it is easy to hold and aim."

Fort Benning hunters will also be allowed to use crossbows on post as soon as the seasons kicks off. A draft of the new Fort Benning regulation is in the works and should be completed within the next few weeks.

"It's going to be interesting to see how the new regulation effects the season," Swiderek said. "Crossbows have their fans and their foes."

In the past, only the traditional long bows were allowed, and now some archery fans fear throngs of crossbow hunters will disrupt the tranquility of the archery season. There are many misconceptions about the weapon, said Harley Chase, Hunter Safety coordinator for Fort Benning.

"People think these things can shoot 100 yards, and they can't," Chase said. "Crossbow accuracy and penetration are fine out to 35 yards. Beyond that, the hunter is taking chances on missing or losing game."

The complications of crossbows are addressed briefly in the Fort Benning Hunters Safety Course, which is being held over the next several months.

"We hope to add more information on crossbows as it becomes available," Chase said. "With the new law comes great responsibilities for everyone."

The average price for a crossbow runs between $300 and $600, but the ease and accuracy is worth it to many hunters, Hogue said.

"All you do is put the crosshairs on it, squeeze the trigger, and there you go," Hogue said. "The arrows are like bolts."

For more information on crossbows, call the Infantry Branch Safety Office at 545-4812 and ask about the Hunters Safety Course CD-Rom.

Youth sports requires conduct class for parents

Class teaches parents good behavior

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet

Fort Benning resident Cheri Meyer has enrolled her children in youth sports on Fort Benning for the past five years. She admits her 11-year-old and 6-year-old sons are quite competitive.

They are not nearly as competitive as some of the parents they've seen.

"We've witnessed adults get in each other's faces, screaming, cussing, and spitting," Meyer said. "It's a horrible example for my kids. It's pathetic behavior."

That pathetic behavior is exactly what the National Alliance for Youth Sports is trying to prevent by making it mandatory for all parents in the youth sports program to participate in a conduct class to review what is appropriate behavior during events.

"We are hoping to simmer down some of the conduct that we are seeing out there lately," said Dorrie Wagner, sports director for Fort Benning Youth Sports. "It has become uncontrollable."

When the Fort Benning Youth Sports Program became a member of the National Alliance for Youth Sports this year, the post was required to initiate a PAYS program, or Parents Association for Youth Sports. For starters, the program will make it mandatory for parents to view a video on sportsmanlike conduct.

"At first I didn't think the video would help," Meyer said. "But this summer parents involved in youth sports were required to watch it, and I did see an immediate difference."

Fort Benning parents with children enrolled in sports this past summer were the first required to watch the video.

Mom's and Dad's were also asked to sign a Parental Code of Ethics promising to be a positive role model for their children during games.

"These past few months parents kept their comments to themselves and were polite to the other teams," said Meyer, whose sons play on the Fort Benning basketball team. "The lack of distractions allowed the coach to focus."

More than 1200 children enroll in youth sports each year on Fort Benning, and the coaches are often overwhelmed when parents try and take over, Wagner said.

"Many parents admitted they didn't realize what they were doing and how it affected their children," Wagner said. "We're hoping the video will continue to change their actions."

The National Association for Youth Sports became concerned about the future of youth sports when it noticed a significant number of children were dropping out of sports when they reached middle school. Youth advocates blame the kids' exhaustion and lack of interest on pushy parents who often intimidate and embarrass their children.

"A child could be the best athlete on the field but will run away in tears because a parent is fighting with a coach or worse, hassling another child from the opposite team," Wagner said. "Kids are more aware of what their parents are doing then parents realize."

The Fort Benning Youth Sports program is determined to keep parents in line this season, Wagner said. MPs will be on alert and are ready to escort parents off the fields for even a minor incident.

"My husband and I often nudge each other in the bleachers to remind ourselves when we begin to cross the line," Meyer said. "After watching the video and talking with other parents, we realized how important it is to be a positive example."

The next parental conduct class will be at 11 a.m Saturday in Building 1055. For more information call 545-3070.

Unit seeking weapons experts

Competitive marksmanship position available

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is looking for a few good shooters.

The highly competitive unit is putting out its annual call for soldiers who are interested in competing in pistol competitions in the summer of 2003.

"We do this every year," said Sgt. 1st Class Charles Gibbs, NCOIC of the USAMU Service Pistol Team. "Soldiers who wish to represent the U.S. Army in pistol competition, marksmanship instruction and recruiting assistance are welcome to apply. This is a highly visible, fast-paced mission."

The Army Marksmanship Unit has been a part of the U. S. Army Recruiting Command since October 1999.

It was formed in 1956 by President Dwight D. Eisenhower to raise the standards of marksmanship throughout the U.S. Army.

The Marksmanship Unit trains its soldiers to win competitions and enhances combat readiness through train-the-trainer clinics, research and development. The world-class soldier-athletes of the USAMU also promote the Army and assist recruiters in attracting young Americans to enlist in the Army.

The Army Pistol Team is always looking for active Army soldiers who are highly motivated, disciplined and competitive by nature, Gibbs said, adding that no previous competitive shooting experience is required.

Soldiers in the rank of sergeant first class and below with less than 15 years of service who obtain approval from their commanders travel to Fort Benning in April at the expense of the Marksmanship Unit to participate in the initial training. The soldiers are trained in advanced marksmanship skills. Once that is complete, pistol team officials will select shooters to participate in the Interservice Championships in June and the National Matches in July.

After the three-month tour, soldiers return to their units with invaluable marksmanship training that can be harvested by unit trainers to improve the marksmanship skills of their soldiers.

Violators ground Boyz, 49-43, in tourney

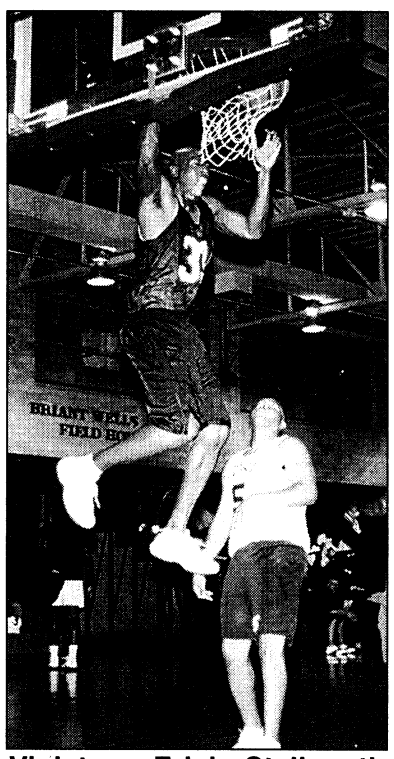
Infantrymen showcase skills during game

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

There was some high-flying dunking action in the first game of the double-elimination Midnight Basketball Tournament Saturday night at Briant Wells Field House.

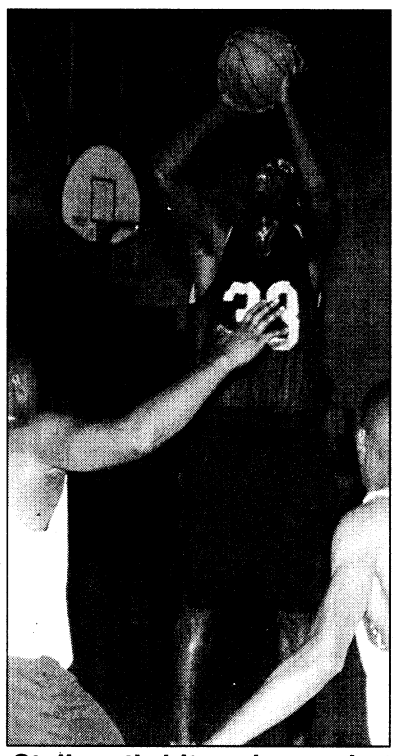
The tournament began 9 p.m. Saturday with eight teams.

"I think we have a real good chance of winning it all," said 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment Violators' player Erick Stallworth, who scored 19 points.



Both teams looked fearless in the beginning of the game as they exchanged baskets during the first seven minutes of the half.

Tied at 8-8, the Violators went to their inside game and took the lead by two. They never looked back.



"Our game plan was to play the inside-out game," said Violators' big man Henry Lewis. "It opened up the lanes for our guards to attack the basket."

The Violators put together a couple of four-point scoring runs to stifle any chance the 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf. Regt. Boyz had of climbing back into the game by halftime.

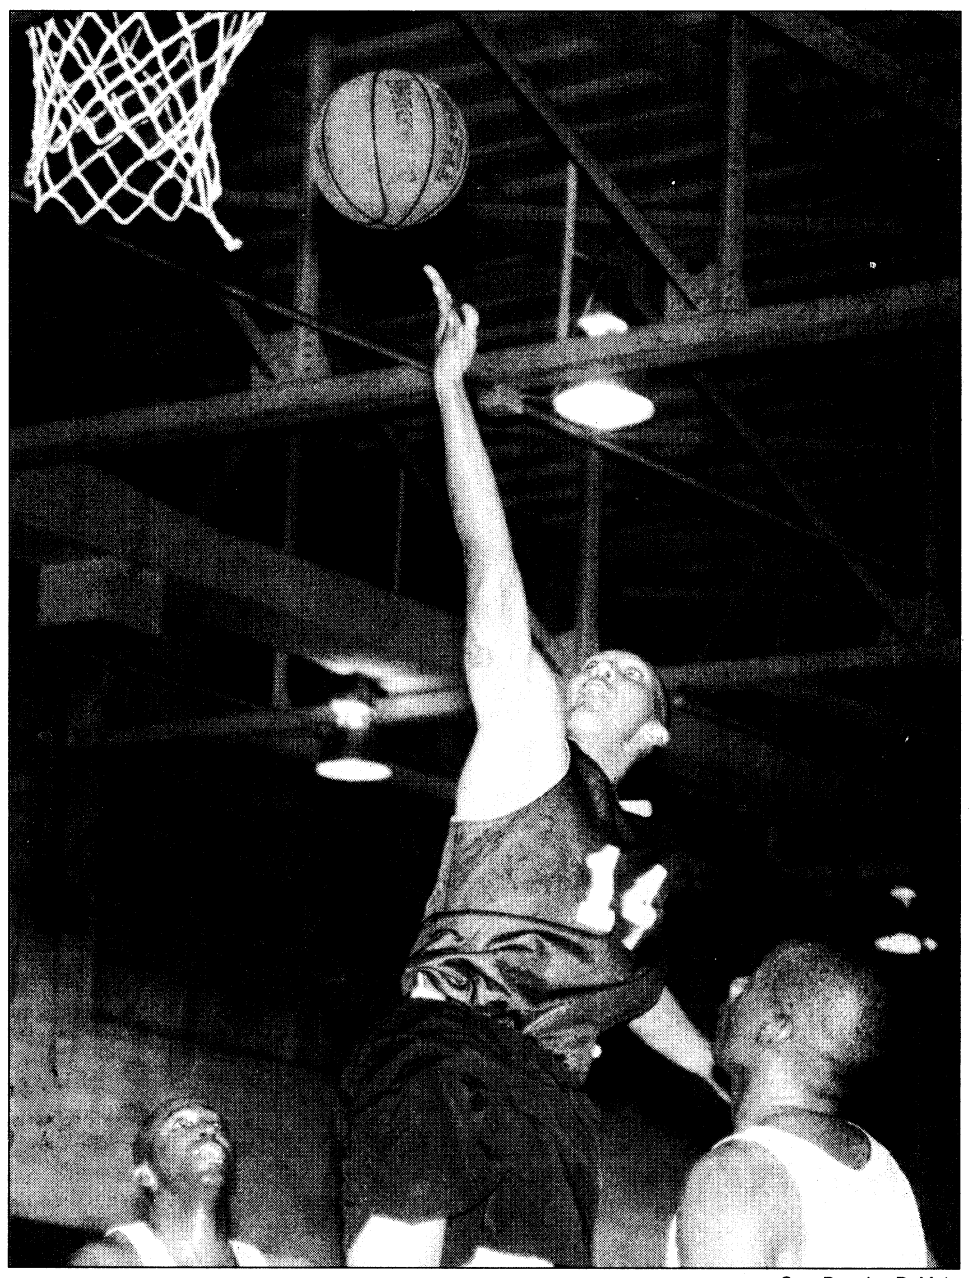
Leading 27-18 at the half, the Boyz rallied behind Tyrone Herman and Troy McBride to pull within two points, but the Violators went on a rampage, and Stallworth capped a 7-0 run with a monster jam.

Violators Erick Stallworth elevates above the rim.

Stallworth hits a jump shot in the key.

The Boyz relied on their quickness, speed and outside shooting ability, while the slower Violators dumped the ball into the low post and crashed the offensive boards.

Stallworth scored most of his points on medium range jumpers and powerful moves to the hole.



Dunks from Stallworth, reminiscent of Toronto Rapids' Vince Carter, discouraged the Boyz, yet no matter how hard they tried, the Boyz couldn't close the gap to within six points.

The two teams were on opposite ends of the spectrum when it came to style of play.

"I think we played pretty good," Lewis said. "We haven't gotten our game together yet, but we'll get it back."

The Violators missed last season because of a deployment to Kosovo.

Sgt. 1st Class Greg Ellerbee supervised and directed the 15-hour tournament, which all eight teams said they appreciated.

Vehicles Seized By Police To Be Sold Off To Local Car Buyers

Seized, confiscated and impounded vehicles result in unheard of low prices on like-new cars, trucks and sport utilities

Columbus, GA, While it's still true "Crime doesn't pay" for the criminal, it may turn out to be quite rewarding for some local area car buyers this weekend. Thru 7pm Monday, the criminal's loss is your gain as Rivertown Ford in Columbus, GA will be offering vehicles seized by law enforcement agencies for sale direct to the public.

Buying police and government seized property has long been a great way to get incredibly low prices on cars, boats, even planes and houses. The problem for the public has been finding the auctions and sales where these items were being sold. Plus, many of these events are not open to the public. But that's now all in the past thanks to the Police Seized Vehicle Selloff.

"There are no special permits or licenses needed to shop or buy."

Why are these such bargains? Simply put, it's because the law enforcement organizations that take possession of these vehicles aren't in the car business. The F.B.I., D.E.A., U.S. Marshalls, Government Auctions and local Police and Sherriff organizations all seize vehicles on a daily basis. Additionally, a surprising number of vehicles impounded by the Police for illegal parking or traffic violations are never claimed by their owners. As a result, these organizations must either pay to store the vehicles, or sell them off.

Now, Rivertown Ford has secured many of these vehicles and will pass the savings on to consumers. "We have been planning for this event for over six months. We've scoured auctions throughout the country for these vehicles plus we've become a regular at the local impound lots" said Brad Williams. He also stressed the dealership will make available plenty of other preowned vehicles so this event will include something for every buyer. "Hondas, Fords, Chevys, Toyotas, Dodges, Chryslers, Nissans, Volkswagens, virtually every make is represented here. Some are even still under factory warranty. But you should get here early because I'm sure the most popular vehicles will sell first."

The War On Drugs and "Three-Strike" laws have resulted in an overflow of vehicles becoming Police property.

Williams added buying one of these vehicles will be super simple. "There are no special permits or licenses needed to shop or buy. Plus, many buyers can just sign the necessary paperwork and drive home with no down payment. And with these incredibly low prices, some payments are just $97 a month."

"With these incredibly low prices, some payments are just $97 a month!"

"Many buyers can just sign the necessary paperwork and drive home with no down payment."

Williams concluded with a warning that this one-of-kind-event could be a one-time-only event. "It took a lot of work to put this event together and I'm not sure we'll be able to do it again. Make sure you come see us because missing the Police Seized Sell-Off would be a crime!"

Rivertown Ford is located at 1680 Whittlesey Road in Columbus, GA or call 653-7420. For further information and to reserve a vehicle, visit the official Police Seized Vehicle Selloff web site at www.PoliceSeized.com.

Kevin Mincio lost his life in the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center.

At 30, Mincio was one of Goldman Sachs' youngest vice presidents. A member of the firm's investment bank and technology group, he was a fast-tracker, a Wall Street wonder with everything money could buy — an apartment in Manhattan, a home on Long Island, a boat and an entourage of hired hands, including a personal assistant, accountant, housekeeper and masseuse.

Mincio lived by the Wall Street motto, "Work hard, play hard." He carried a laptop, cell phone and beeper around the clock. Weekends were spent partying in Miami or Hong Kong or London.

Mincio lived the life most people only dream about. Now, he says, that life is lost.

"It was very hard to let go, to come here and cut myself off from it all," Mincio said. "But ultimately, it wasn't making me happy."

"Here" is Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade, where Mincio graduates today from A Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

The New York native sold his homes, his boat and his car, said good-bye to the high life and traded in his business suits for a set of BDUs and a rifle after the Sept. 11

Post to observe anniversary

Fort Benning community to remember 9-11

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Sept. 11 was a day that changed the world and for that reason the community should come together to remember friends and reflect on those changes, said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

Fort Benning will remember the anniversary next week with a military band concert, a remembrance service and two ceremonies.

A concert by the Infantry Band is 7 to 8 p.m. Monday at Riverside, the home of the commanding general.

The community is encouraged to wear red, white and blue and bring lawn chairs or blankets to sit on. The lawn will be separated into two separate viewing areas, one side for blankets and one for chairs.

There will be a remembrance service at 4 p.m. Tuesday in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The service is to help the community make sense of all that has happened and to reconnect with faith, said Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell, U.S. Army Infantry Center chaplain.

"God's will doesn't fly planes into buildings, man's free will does," he said. "This wasn't God's will, and people are still trying to make sense of what happened."

Nearly 7,000 Sand Hill soldiers will gather at 6 a.m. on Kanell Field Wednesday, for an invocation and to sing the national anthem. There will be a short presentation and then Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, post commander, will speak.

The last official event begins at 8:45 on York Field in front of Infantry Hall. Eaton is scheduled to speak there also.

Following the ceremony, there will be a 3K walk and a 5K run beginning near the Ranger Memorial.

Torres said the reason for the differing events is because people grieve and remember in different ways.

"Remembering that tragic day ... we all will remember in different ways how that tragic day affected us," Torres said. "Some of us knew the victims; we lost friends and family at the Pentagon and at the World Trade Center.

"All of us were affected in one way or another, and we gathered as a community after the attacks, and we need to gather again as a community to remember."

Undersecretary visits Rangers

Former ranger reminisces with soldiers

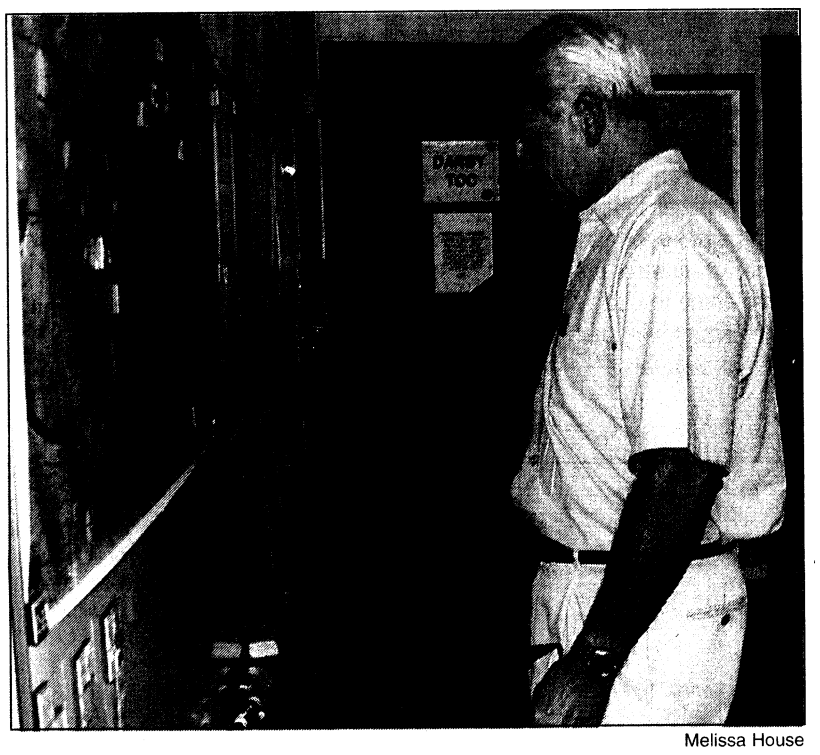
The Honorable Les Brownlee, undersecretary of the Army, visited Camp Darby Aug. 28. As he walked from the landing zone to Murray Hall, he asked Lt. Col. Greg Hager, commander of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, about a rock that Ranger students used to do push-ups on.

Brownlee, who retired from the Army in 1985, attended Ranger School in 1965 and was selected as the Distinguished Honor Graduate for his class.

"That was the biggest surprise to me," he said. "A lot of it was a great deal of luck."

Inside Murray Hall, the Camp Darby operations center, Hager gave Brownlee an overview of current ranger training and presented him with a picture of Brownlee's 1965 ranger class.



Ranger students Anthony Courtney and Brian Henderson were on duty when Brownlee came in. Brownlee offered words of encouragement to both students on land navigation.

"Study it. Learn it," he said. "I remember being the guy with the map and flashlight under the poncho in the rubber boat trying to navigate."

Ranger Training Brigade Commander, Col. Bill Kidd, gave Brownlee a command brief on the current ranger training program.

"These students are three-time volunteers," Kidd said. "They volunteer to serve in the Army, and then volunteer for airborne and ranger schools."

Ranger school continues to focus on training, leadership, teamwork and character, Kidd said, and he assured Brownlee that nothing about the course has changed to make it less valuable.

POSTWIDE YARD SALE

Bargains at Benning

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COMMENTARY

Is there anything better than the thrill of the chase? The adrenaline rush of the hunt? And what better time and place to track down that prize than at the postwide yard sale.

Yes, the postwide yard sale, that twice-a-year opportunity for one family's junk to become another family's junk. And it's happening Saturday, right here, all over post.

I love yard sales. Much to the relief of my family, I don't hit enough of them. At one yard sale recently, I passed up a Starter jacket priced at $2. It was way too small for me and way too big for my daughter. Besides, the Orlando Magic isn't our team. I did drop 50 cents on another jacket, quilted from Guatemalan fabric, and then found 20 cents in the pocket.

That's not anywhere near as good as our resident yard sale queen who once paid 50 cents for a pair of pants and then found a 20 dollar bill in one of the pockets. But I'm just an amateur next to her.

But I digress. I was talking yard sales, and the postwide yard sale is The Best. I've been to two postwide yard sales now, and there's nothing like them. I did pretty well at the last one. Of course I had help, especially from the yard sale queen.

Thanks to her, I now sport a really kicky denim jacket that set me back a quarter. I also brought home an Eddie Bauer briefcase that set me back a buck, three pairs of jeans that my 9-year-old would live in if I didn't watch her closely (all three for $5, her very favorite pair was a dollar), a Polartec vest for 50 cents and a stack of Goosebumps books (five for $1). I also scored on an unused, still in the box Singer "Tiny Tailor" for $10, a never-opened science set for $3 instead of the $19.99 it was marked and a still-new saddle pack for my bicycle, that holds way more than the old one did, for another dollar. And if that saddle pack can't hold everything I might need on the Riverwalk, I can stuff the excess in the brand-new fanny pack that I paid 50 cents for.

My shopping companions? One of them scored on a 20-gallon aquarium for 50 cents, an armload of Barbie stuff for $6, and that's just a fraction of what was loaded in the back of her minivan.

The other scored on a great hat (which I should have bought) for $2, an armload of shorts and shirts for her daughter for $10 and a mirror that looks great in her apartment for $15. The third's big bargain? A like-new, full-sized bed for $30.

It's too bad we didn't know anyone with a baby to dress up, because there were new and barely worn baby clothes everywhere for a song.

And that was just part of our haul. In between bargains, we visited with sellers and other buyers alike as we worked our way from one housing area to the next, one yard sale at a time.

My daughter, who detests shopping, can't wait for the postwide. It's the only time and place she will shop, probably because it's the only place her $5 allotment will stretch a mile. Or maybe she recognizes the postwide yard sale for the social and sporting event that it is.

And it is. See you tomorrow. Bring money in small unmarked bills ... (you won't need much).

Change is good for you?

COMMENTARY

Change is pain. Anytime change is involved, it's a given that in some way, shape, or form, it will be painful. I learned change is pain, firsthand during a three-day train-the-trainer session given by the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

The schoolhouse has developed a new "physical readiness training" program, (PRT as opposed to PT, for short) that is making it's way through the Army approval channels. The guiding theory behind PRT is the ability to meet the physical demands of any combat or duty situation, accomplish the mission, and still have a reserve of strength. It focuses on three areas of fitness: strength, endurance, mobility.

In theory, it sounds simple enough. You do some warm-up calisthenics, an activity, then a recovery drill to cool down. When our instructors told us that an entire PRT session could be conducted in 50 minutes, I was a little skeptical. How am I supposed to get a good work out in only 50 minutes?

The Army's very own sado-masochists ... I mean, those great guys from the Fitness School, soon educated me on the endless possibilities.

Half-way through our "warm-ups" the entire class was breathing heavily.

"Hey, we haven't even gotten to the activity yet!" Staff Sgt. Matthew Billet cheerfully reminded us. Billet and his fellow instructors ensured that our class learned the proper, if painful, way to do all the exercises correctly.

Precision is the name of the game for

PRT. Slow, slow, slow deliberate movements and exact positions reduce injury and increase the benefit of the exercises.

We learned calisthenic drills, climbing drills, dumbbell drills, recovery drills and activities to develop our bodies, increase our physical readiness and discover new muscles to be born in pain.

Physical training currently done by most units seems to be based on Army Physical Fitness Test scores. But this doesn't prepare soldiers for the needs of combat or for improving the performance of critical soldier tasks.

All of the exercises focus mainly on the front of the body and on moving in a linear motion; running in a straight line, and doing push-ups and sit-ups straight up and down.

However, the tasks soldiers do involve sprinting short distances, zigging and zagging, lifting and bending, twisting and turning. Essential tasks that require the whole body to work together, but that aren't adequately trained.

My muscles need to be familiar with how to jump in and out of the back of a Humvee, twist and bend to load and unload cargo, all safely, to prevent injury to myself or anyone else.

Muscles used for doing a push-up may help me when I need to elevate from the prone position. However, it is more useful to strengthen the muscles in my lower back so that I can maintain a proper prone position for a longer period of time.

There's no reason for me to be ineffective for my unit because I've hurt my back improperly lifting a load of pickets.

I've talked to a couple "old-school" soldiers about PRT. I usually hear the same question.

"Well, what about runnin'? How much you run in that new PT program?"

So, I usually respond the same way.

"You can still do ability-group runs and unit runs to build esprit de corps, but going out and running eight miles in less than an hour is not the goal.

"Intervals are the focus, to build speed and cardiovascular fitness."

Never fails, they don't even try to hide the skeptical look that begins with raised eyebrows and ends with a grunted "Hmmph!"

Just because this program is not out running soldiers five miles a day, doesn't mean it isn't a great work out.

It is. It is a great work out.

It's training harder and smarter, without hurting people. PRT is performance-oriented, train-as-you-fight, worth-your-time training that can actually make a difference when you do it right.

I would strongly encourage every commander, sergeant major, first sergeant, to call up the Physical Fitness School and ask them to come out and give you and your unit the low-down on PRT. Go out there and do the exercises for a couple days.

I guarantee that you will get a work out, and you'll feel better doing it.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Resident thinks homes reflect on those living there

I read with interest a letter to the editor Aug. 23 on housing.

I wholeheartedly agree with the writer's "disgust and disappointment" over the appearance of quarters on post, and I have come to one conclusion about why the quarters look like this — pure laziness.

Sure, everyone's grass might get a little taller than it should every now and then, but thigh-high grass is inexcusable.

My husband and I have lived in the same post quarters for almost six years.

We have been called compulsive about our grass, but we realize that living on post is a privilege, and not something we take for granted.

There is no excuse for grass a foot high, newspapers piled up outside the front door, trash cans left outside more than a day or cars that don't work sitting in the driveway.

Why does this happen? Because of laziness.

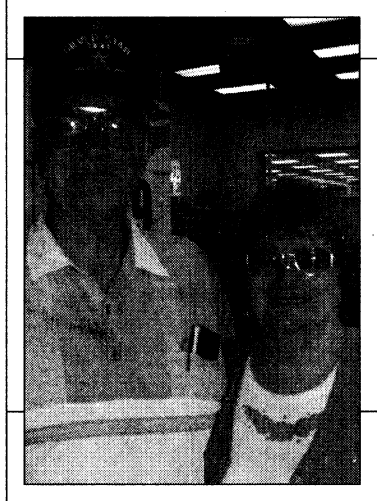
It's really not that tough and there is no excuse not to pick up your newspaper, even if you're not going to read it. Toss it in your recycling box.

There's no reason not to cut your grass when it needs it. I have cut my grass nine months pregnant.

Why? Because it needed it.

I didn't complain, I just did it.

Sure, it would be a lot easier to be lazy and let things go. From what I've seen, I wouldn't get in trouble.



But, I am a mature and responsible adult who realizes that the outside appearance of my house reflects on me and my husband and the kind of people we are.

We appreciate our housing, quirks and all, and do what we can to take care of it.

Military working dog hits the streets

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Military working dog, Robin, leaps over an obstacle during training Wednesday. Military working dogs receive training everyday to maintain understanding of handler's commands.

New dog, handler certify critical skills

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Staff Sgt. Brian Stammeyer's new partner is just out of the working dog equivalent of advanced individual training, and he's already qualified to hit the streets.

Rocky, a 3-year-old German shepherd, arrived this summer from Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, and was certified in patrol work and his specialty, explosives detection, on the first attempt last week.

Certification for new working dogs doesn't always happen on the first try.

"Dogs have personalities just like handlers," Stammeyer said.

Both dog and handler have to adjust to each other and try to make the partnership work, he said, but sometimes it may take some extra training. A handler learns what reward the dog works for, and then uses that reward during training. Rocky works for a Kong, a hard rubber ball that bounces erratically, instead of a food reward.

After certification, dogs and handlers continue to train regularly.

The minimum requirements are four hours of patrol work and four hours of detection work every week, Stammeyer said. The pair will go on a variety of real-world missions in addition to their local training. Next summer, Stammeyer and Rocky will undergo annual certification.

"The dogs and handlers do not do anything special to get ready for these tests," said Staff Sgt. William Lucas, Fort Benning kennel master.

Regular training throughout the year helps to keep the teams ready for the two-day annual certification, he said. Lucas monitors training for all of his teams.

"We won't try to do real intensive training prior, or we'll fail," Stammeyer said. "But the annual certification will be easier for us next year."

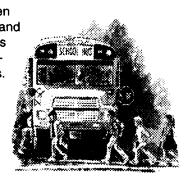
Certification is done locally, whenever possible, by an unbiased certifying authority with experience as a handler and as a kennel master.

Narcotics dogs must score 90 percent on the testing, explosives dogs must score 95 percent.

"If a dog misses some drugs, it's not too bad," Stammeyer said. "The guy who had them will get high again and eventually get busted. But if a dog misses some explosives, that's a biggie."

Spc. Howard Horn has been working with his new German shepherd, Lucky, for about two weeks.

"It's going to be a little while before we are ready for certification," Horn said.



Lucky replaces Horn's old dog, Solo, who was sent back to Lackland after his hips deteriorated. Solo, who had gone on Secret Service missions with Horn, was only 5 years old.

Most military working dogs come from Europe and have to have certain skills before the Army will purchase them. The dogs then go to Lackland for initial training that can last anywhere from two months to a year, depending on the dog. The process of assigning dogs within the Army is just like assignments for soldiers, Stammeyer said.

"Green" narcotics dogs right out of training at Lackland are worth about $10,000, explosives dogs $15,000, Horn said, and their value goes up each year as they gain experience and learn additional skills.

Improper disposal of MREs federal offense

MRE heaters cause dumpsters to burst in flames

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Meals Ready-to-Eat are packed full of protein-rich foods to give soldiers explosive energy while they're out in the field.

But it's the explosive bursts the meals may potentially cause after they're disposed of that has the Environmental Protection Agency fuming.

"MREs are extremely flammable when the heaters are not used," said Ted Williams, Hazardous Waste specialist for Fort Benning. "We need to make sure soldiers aren't just tossing them to the side, or the entire post will be in danger."

The flameless ration heaters inside the MREs contain powdered magnesium, iron and sodium, which produce heat when combined with water, Williams said. The chemical reaction also produces hydrogen, a flammable gas. If an unused heater makes its way to a dumpster or landfill, it becomes a fire hazard.

"We've had incidents of trash vehicles on post catching on fire because of MRE heaters left behind," Williams said. "The EPA is coming down hard on us, and we need to make sure soldiers are following the rules."

Fort Benning isn't the only post with explosive incidents. Last month, a Fort Lewis, Wash., building caught on fire because of a nearby dumpster filled with unused MRE heaters, Williams said.

Even with word of these incidents, soldiers continue to throw the flammable packages into the trash.

"It's my responsibility to educate the soldiers and make sure they are aware of the risks," said Staff Sgt. Erica Brinker, hazardous waste manager for 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment. "Soldiers come back from the field and dump their unused MREs without thinking about it."

Dumping the unused heaters is not only hazardous, it's illegal.

The Environmental Protection Agency requires soldiers who open their MREs to ignite the heaters even if they don't use them. Any unopened MREs should be turned in for proper storage.

"We walked through motor pool areas in July and found 40-50 instances of MREs disposed of improperly," Williams said. "Obviously the drill sergeants can't keep an eye on soldiers at all times. Soldiers need to be responsible enough to do it on their own."

If that isn't enough, state officials toured the post in May and found dozens of cases of MREs improperly disposed. Fort Benning was given an official Notice of Violation, and if the problem is still apparent when the EPA returns, each unit not in compliance can be fined $28,000, Williams said.

"It can be a lot to ask of soldiers," said Brinker, who often sifts through dumpsters for MREs to make sure her battalion is not in danger. "MREs are usually the last thing to think about when they are out in the field. I wish they would just pack the heater separate from the meal. If soldiers don't need them, they wouldn't take one."

The Pentagon is looking at several options to make complying with the federal regulations easier, including replacing heaters with more effective and easier to use units. The results of that effort are at least a year off, Williams said.

Until then, soldiers are going to have to comply with the federal regulations.

"It only takes a second for a soldier to mix the heaters with water and make sure it has been activated, " Williams said.

Reserves prepare to leave post

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

For more than 11 months, an Army reserve unit has served the Fort Benning community, and the time has come for them to leave.

Because of Sept. 11, the 2145th Garrison Support Unit was activated Oct. 1 to protect and patrol post.

"They have done an outstanding job," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "I enter post through most of the gates, and every time I've dealt with 2145th soldiers, I've seen them performing their mission with absolute professionalism."

For the first four months, the unit guarded four of the seven access control points to enter post.

"The people really took care of us," said Staff Sgt. Ralph Casselli, squad leader. "They were always catering to our needs."

Being deployed with active duty soldiers was a pleasurable learning experience, Casselli said.

"This has been a great experience for everyone in the detachment," said Capt. Matt Millar, unit commander. "Every day we are performing our mission as compared to doing it month to month."

Still, some soldiers' jobs, as civilians, are as police officers, Millar said. This provides an opportunity for soldiers to collaborate on law enforcement techniques, policies, procedures and activity that transfers across the spectrum.

"We've learned from training we've received at Fort Benning and brought our influence of the civilian sector to law enforcement at Fort Benning," Millar said.

"It's a win-win situation for everyone."

The post was very impressed with the company's experience and ability to improve performance enhancement, Walls said.

More than 75 percent of the company's NCOs and specialists promotable were able to attend career development courses while deployed to Fort Benning, Millar said.

"Our unit was able to take advantage of the opportunities the post provides," he said. "Fort Benning has a wealth of resources.

"As a result, we were able to promote soldiers faster than reserve components normally do."

Soldiers from the company were able to attend airborne school, Basic Noncommisioned Officers Course and the Primary Leadership Development Course.

"I went to BNCOC and was able to complete both phases of the course," Casselli said.

With the opportunity to advance in professional development courses, soldiers became more confident when leading soldiers and accomplishing missions, Millar said.

Also, the younger soldiers in the company have learned what it's like to be a soldier on the clock 24 hours a day.

The soldiers accomplished every task they were asked to do, Millar said.

"They meshed right in," Walls said. "We were very impressed by their ability to perform their mission.

"I hate to see them go."

Since April, the company's taskings included patrolling the post by vehicle and bike.

"We had a variety of jobs since we've been here," Casselli said. "We do more than just write tickets."

The Army reserve unit arrived with 56 men and women Oct. 3, 2001.

is the quality of the guys walking the lanes and the way they instruct," he said. "Hopefully, we can continue to keep the high quality of NCO."

Kidd said the ranger instructors are highly motivated to train aspiring rangers and go out and do good things in other units.

Ranger school also has a role in the Army's transformation vision.

"This is an example of man over technology," Kidd said. "We have to build someone who is ready to play."

Even with all of the technology, lessons learned from Operation Enduring Freedom highlight the necessity for leaders who can adapt to change in the operational environment.

"That adaptability is taught in ranger school," Brownlee said, "and that training carries through with soldiers for the rest of their lives.

"I graduated from ranger school in March and by July, I was assigned to the 173rd Airborne in Vietnam," Brownlee said.

He felt that his ranger training was "the best insurance policy for me and the men I was with.

"What you learned becomes indelibly ingrained in your mind," he said.

Although the push-up rock of Brownlee's day is no longer a part of the ranger experience, Brownlee was pleased to hear that the students still fight with sleep and food deprivation and the stress of trying to be prepared for random leadership position selection.

"Don't let it get easy," he said.

Fort Benning protocol chief retires

Bout with cancer inspires decision to call it quits

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

As chief of Protocol, Becky Langston is used to meeting the demands of powerful people, no matter how unusual.

Need a 10-speed bike during your stay at Fort Benning? No problem. Looking for a dog sitter? A running partner who can do a six-minute mile? How about a single red brick?

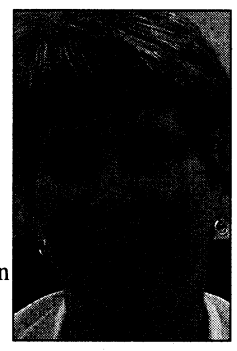
Just call Becky.

"A brick of all things. I don't ask why, I just do it," said Langston, recounting some of the more unusual requests visiting dignitaries have made during her 16 years in Protocol.

When presidents, heads of state, foreign dignitaries or military officials — more than 2,000 a year — visit post, Langston and her staff are the ones they turn to for accommodations — billeting, transportation, meals, briefings, news conferences and entertainment.

"We handle it all, as long as its legal, from start to finish," Langston said. "It's a full-time job and then some. At least 10 hours a day."

Now, after a bout with breast cancer last fall, Langston's re-evaluated her priorities, and the really important people in her life are the little ones.



"My grandchildren. I want to spend time with my grandchildren. There have been times where I haven't seen them for a three-week stretch. No more. They have so many plans for me," Langston said, explaining her decision to retire early from the position she's held for eight years.

Sept. 4 was her last day at work. "That's Wednesday. Thursday morning I'll be sitting on my front porch sipping cappuccino," she said. "Then I'll clean my closet."

In fact, Langston has a "retirement to do" list hanging on her refrigerator. Her grandchildren, Drew, Emily, Lindsey and Bailey, are at the top of the list.

"Lindsey said, 'Nana, when you quit work, I'm going to ride the bus to your house so we can talk.' So that's what we're going to do," she said.

Not one to "sit for very long," Langston said she'll take a couple of months off before looking for a position where she can "really make a difference in people's lives."

Langston

Those close to her say she's done just that for more than 30 years. After a brief stint with the FBI, Langston came to work at the School Brigade, now the 11th Infantry Regiment, in 1971.

"I've never known a finer person or a harder worker than Becky," said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley, the brigade's sergeant major at that time. "She always had a smile and a kind word for everybody. I know a lot of people have modeled themselves after her."

After three years with the School Brigade, Langston served as the chief of staff's secretary before transferring to the Ranger Department, a position she called "one of the best." She started working in the Protocol office in 1986, and was promoted to chief in 1994.

"It's been a heck of a ride. I've been all over this post. I guess you could look at it one of two ways, either I know a lot about Fort Benning or I just can't keep a job," she laughed.

> "(I'm here) because it was caught early. That's why I tell people it's so important to get your exams. The statistics are shocking. It affects so many women."
> Becky Langston
> Chief of Protocol

Though she'll miss the people she's worked with, Langston said she leaves without reservation. The Harris County resident, who's on the Ronald McDonald House board of directors and the Rotary Club's Literacy Committee, said it's time to "give something back to the community."

"I don't know just what I'll be doing. I'll leave that up to the Lord. Whether it's talking about the cancer, or whatever."

Though Langston's been given a clean bill of health, she's not forgotten the shock of discovering breast cancer during a routine exam last fall. Immediate and radical treatment was successful, and Langston said she was fortunate not to have to undergo chemotherapy or radiation.

"Because it was caught early. That's why I tell people it's so important to get your exams," she said. "The statistics are shocking. It affects so many women."

The cancer changed her life, Langston said, and made her "want to spend time on things that really matter."

"I've been really blessed. I've met a lot of interesting, important people," said the woman who's entertained presidents and movie stars. "But the most interesting person I know is right there at home," she said of her husband of nearly 34 years, Dwight.

The couple, who have two daughters, Beth and Alison, look forward to spending time on their boat and "scavenging for antiques," she said.

International journalist visits Fort Benning

Serbian visitor learns about U.S. military

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The editor of the biweekly newsletter, Defense and Security, in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, visited Fort Benning as part of the International Visitor Program, to see various activities and units around post.

Aleksandar Radic, a Serbian journalist, visited post Tuesday to see Basic Combat Training, Noncommissioned Officers Academy, Officer Candidate School and the Ranger Training Course.

"I'm having fun here," Radic said. "I'm learning many things about the new technologies in today's modern warfare."

As part of the program, Radic has focused on:

- U.S. military structure and organization,
- U.S. security policy-making process,
- Mechanisms of civilian control and oversight of the U.S. military,
- Relationships of the U.S. military with other federal government departments and security agencies,
- U.S. military commands that deal with southeastern Europe issues and American military journalism,
- How the media reports on U.S. military news and developments.

"Both Serbia and the U.S. have common interests, especially on the military side," Radic said. "The main goal of both is to stop terrorist activities around the world."

Radic said that it is time for things to change between Serbia and the U.S.

"The reason for the '99 conflict (in Kosovo) was because of bad politics," he said. "We just need to put all of that behind us and get to the task at hand, which is to stop the war on terrorism."

Radic is the first Serbian to come to the U.S. as part of the International Visitor Program. His three week visit included the Pentagon and now he's at Fort Bliss, Texas.

"I was ecstatic when I found out I would be coming to the U.S.," Radic said. "I knew of the high quality system of training and organization, and seeing it for myself is very interesting."

At the Pentagon, Radic attended briefings and discussions with various government departments and agencies, and private sector organizations and institutions.

Radic is the author of six books on military air power, the Kosovo armed forces and the Russian air force.

"The cooperation of both Serbian and U.S. troops in Kosovo is what is making this possible for me," Radic said. "Both countries know that we are united against terrorism, and uniting together will go a long way in stopping it."

Flames and debris explode from tower two in a deadly series of blows that brought down the 110 story towers.

Soldier: Changes life after Sept. 11 attacks attacks left him searching for something meaningful to do with his life.

"That kind of thing makes you re-evaluate your life," said Mincio, recalling that morning last fall when his orderly, success-driven life began to unravel.

Mincio's office was on the 11th floor of One Liberty Plaza, adjacent to the Twin Towers. He was in the middle of a meeting when a jarring boom shook the building. From the window, Mincio could see smoke pouring out of the north tower, but he couldn't tell what caused the damage.

"I grabbed my camera and ran outside. That almost cost me my life," said Mincio, shaking his head. "The second plane went right over my head. Debris was hitting all around. It was total chaos. I watched people jump. I saw people get trampled. They say nobody died after they got out of the building, but I saw it. Some of the older people just couldn't move fast enough."

Mincio insists the attack itself had little effect on his emotions. He went into immediate "training mode," he said, and went straight back to work.

"I wasn't traumatized. I just did what I was trained to do. That's how I dealt with it. I wasn't afraid to work. I had to," said Mincio, who bypassed security officers in One Liberty Plaza, now a makeshift morgue, to retrieve laptop computers so his company could continue working.

"I worked more from September 11 till the end of September than I ever did in my life. Obviously we weren't digging trenches, but we were trying to save the economy. I think most people don't realize how bad it was there for a while," he said. "While everybody else was home licking their wounds, here I was working night and day to keep our business afloat. It was crazy. Everything in this country is defined by money. It just didn't make sense anymore."

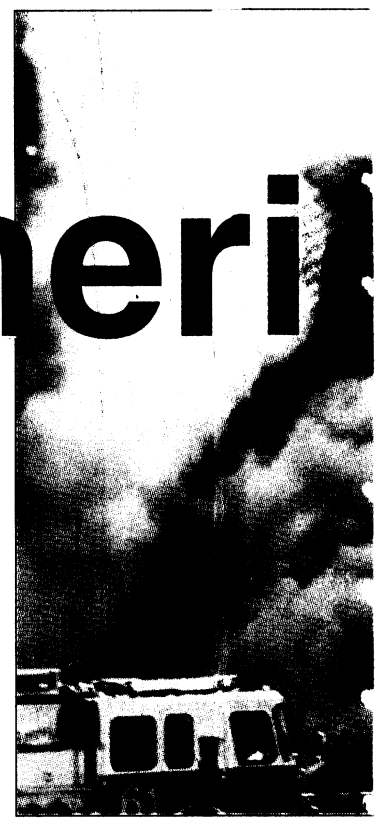
In the weeks that followed, Mincio said he realized the attacks had changed him subconsciously. He was angry.

"I was mad that the subways weren't working. I was mad that people were scared to get on with their lives. I was mad about the delays and all the attention downtown was getting," he said. "I was fed up. I started thinking, 'What the hell am I doing with my life?' I wanted to do something different, something that makes a difference."

Mincio had once toyed with the idea of attending West Point, and after graduating from the University of Connecticut, he'd planned to join the Air Force until Goldman Sachs offered him a position. Yet the decision to join the Army was a difficult one.

"I was on track to retire in a couple of years. It was really very hard to give all that up. It was scary. But I've always been competitive, always trying to better myself. I knew this would make me a better person," said Mincio, who sports a 9-11-01 tattoo on his left leg.

Basic training was "very humbling" to the man who once traveled the world scouting "team members" for Goldman Sachs. Though he calls himself "just an average soldier," the company's distinguished honor graduate proved as dedicated to his new career as his former, a work ethic he said his parents instilled at an early age.



"They're teachers. They taught me the value of a dollar," said Mincio, who started working in the fifth grade. "My parents packed my lunch, and I wanted to buy it at school, because that's what all the rich kids did. So I got a paper route to pay for my lunch."

Though Mincio refused to speak to the press — this was his first interview since arriving on Fort Benning — the company's cadre learned about his former career when representatives of Good Morning America requested an interview. Sgt. 1st Class Chris Smith, the company's acting first sergeant, said many of the drill instructors thought Mincio "must be crazy to give all that up."

"But he stood out from the minute he got here. He proved he was serious about what he's doing, and the more we watched him excel, the more we realized this is all about pride in his country and wanting to do something significant. You've got to respect him for that," Smith said.

And though Mincio "has nothing but praise for the cadre," their praise is secondary to the self-satisfaction he feels.

"Life was pretty complicated. September 11 put it all in perspective," said Mincio, who hopes to attend Ranger School, Airborne School and, perhaps, Officer Candidate School. "I wanted to do something meaningful with my life. This is it. This is meaningful. I know I'll probably have to go to war. I'm ready for it. I'm scared for the people I love, but I'm not afraid to die for my country."

"I saw what death looks like. I touched it, smelled it and tasted it.

During the search, Braman heard a clapping sound. As he followed the sound, he discovered a woman who couldn't speak because of intense smoke inhalation. She was clapping for help.

That woman was Sheila Moody, a civilian accountant and the only survivor of 40 people from her office. Later, Moody called Braman her "guardian angel." That title, Braman said, is all the reward he'll ever need.

"She told me she couldn't thank me enough. I tell her that seeing that smile on her face is thanks enough," he said.

Braman stayed at the Pentagon crash site despite orders from high-ranking Army personnel acting on information about another hijacked jet heading toward the Pentagon. Braman then volunteered to be the noncommissioned officer-in-charge of the morgue recovery team. He attributed his ranger training for thinking on his feet.

"I just reacted that day. The military trained me, and God kept me safe," Braman said, labeling the crash scene as the "most organized chaos" he had ever seen.

Rangers never leave a fallen comrade at any cost, Braman said. As far as he was concerned, his Army family lay in the Pentagon rubble.

After three days, Braman went home to begin his own recovery.

In the months that followed, the media picked up on his story.

In October, Braman was awarded a Purple Heart and Soldier's Medal for his wounds and bravery.

Army leadership, through the Recruiting Command, thought Braman should tell his story to Americans, young and old alike, across the country.

Braman agreed and has been on a nonstop speaking circuit ever since, making appearances in schools and on television.

"The story never changes," Braman said, "They want to hear what happened because they were all affected that day."

Braman said many questions will always remain unanswered. But, he has reaffirmed his relationship with God in search of inner peace and strength and his wife and two young daughters give him comfort.

"I look at life differently now. I was humbled that day and those three days I was there. "When you look at death, it changes you," Braman said.

Less than a month after the attacks, Hensel Phelps Construction Co. of Chantilly, Va. was awarded the contract to renovate, to rebuild what its workers had barely finished renovating.

The new project has many improvements over the first renovation, said Brett Eaton, a renovation project manager. There's now a redundant water supply system to ensure water in an emergency. Interviewed survivors said that exit signs were not visible because of thick smoke. Now, photoluminescent exit signs are located along the base of doorways so that in an emergency, personnel can see them if they are crawling under the smoke. Also, intermediate corridors have been added for more pathways of escape.

The new design concepts will also be incorporated into the rest of the original 10-year Pentagon Renovation Project, said Jean Barnak, Wedge 1 deputy project manager.

At the time of the attacks, the Pentagon was already three years into a multi-billion dollar renovation. Much of the section of the building attacked was empty at the time, as it was the first part to be renovated. Still, 183 Americans died there.

The outer walls of the new wedge are made of limestone One of the slabs is etched with the words of President Bush: "Terrorist attacks can shake the foundations of our biggest buildings, but they cannot touch the foundation of America."

Another stone, etched with the date Sept. 11, 2001, was set in a ceremony June 11, and a commemorative time capsule was placed behind it. The stone is one of the original, left charred on its exterior.

More than 1,000 workers worked 24-hours-a-day to get the Pentagon back on track.

Sept. 11 commemoration message

On Sept. 11, without warning or reason, the forces of hatred and fear attacked America. We all remember the pain and anger we felt in the aftermath of those attacks as we honored fallen comrades, colleagues, dear friends and loved ones who had been lost. Some who survived will live in agony for the rest of their lives. We embraced all of their families during the pain of their bereavement. In remembrance of the sacrifices made that day, we will pause on Sept. 11 for a moment of silence and quiet reflection at each installation and garrison throughout the Army. The times for this observance will be coordinated by each major command.

Our nation has provided, and continues to provide, the world leadership needed to bring to justice those responsible for these terrible attacks. In the year since, the Army, in concert with other services and our allies, has devoted itself to winning the global war on terrorism, providing stability in those regions of the world important to us, and training to defend the United States and its interests. These commitments have not been without further sacrifice by soldiers who have gone into harm's way on our behalf. The Army remains on point for the nation, as it has for more than 227 years. By protecting and preserving our way of life, soldiers are keeping faith with all Americans. The Army is strong; it is ready.

Secretary of the Army Thomas White and I, as well as the rest of the Army leadership, are privileged by your service and inspired by your examples of loyalty, duty, honor and integrity. Your courage, selfless service and respect for one another, and for others, make us the great Army that we are and enable us to fulfill our contract with the American people — to fight and win our nation's wars decisively.

So as we pause this Sept. 11 to remember the sacrifices of so many during those attacks — in Washington, in New York City and in Pennsylvania — it is appropriate that we reflect on what it means to be an American. God bless each and every one of you, God bless this magnificent Army of ours and God bless America.

America: Bring out flags, show colors with pride

COMMENTARY

When passenger planes were flown in to the World Trade Center towers and the Pentagon nearly a year ago, our lives were forever changed.

Or were they?

It takes a little longer to drive on post now than it did last year. We have to stop at the new guard shacks and flash a photo ID. Security at airports is tighter, or so we're told; I can't remember ever not having to stand in some kind of airport line. The media assaults us with warnings and continued reports on terrorism, unless there's something better to report.

Will 9/11 turn into another memory byte like the Millennium Bug, Pokemon and Beanie Babies? I hope not.

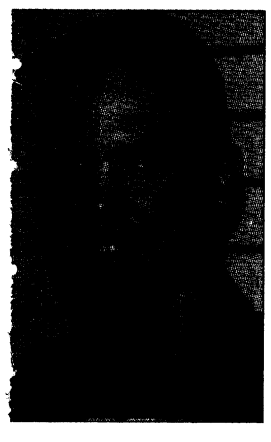
On Sept. 11, the anniversary of the attacks, we should stop and reflect on an event branded on our consciousness. We should remember those who lost their lives and those who lost the loves of their lives. We should plead for protection for the soldiers now guarding yet another line in the sand while we curse evil deeds and the villains who commit them.

And let's not forget the civilian heroes posted on another front line, right here at home. You'll find them in police cars, fire stations, hospitals, post offices, reserve armories and laboratories ... basically right next door and all around us.

The president asked that we citizens fight terrorism by going about our lives, business as usual, and I would submit to you that maybe we've taken his directive just a little too far.

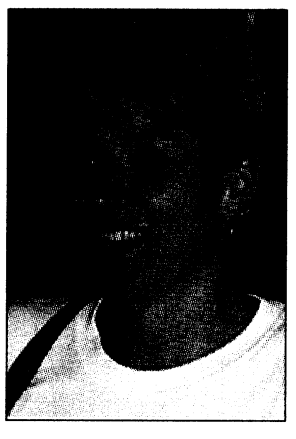
Other than having to stop to flash some ID before driving on post, how different is your day-to-day routine now than it was the day before the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon?

Sept. 10, 2002, shouldn't look just like Sept. 10, 2001 did. The traffic control points at the gates shouldn't be our only reminder that "things" changed last Sept. 11.



After the attacks last year, amid the confusion and fear, turmoil and sorrow, one thing was very clear. Patriotism was not dead. Americans defiantly raised every American flag we could get our hands on, openly flaunting our nationality. Red, white and blue were the colors of the day.

Where are they now?



I'm as guilty as the next person. My flag lapel pins languish at the bottom of a jewelry box. The flag that once fluttered proudly over my car faded and was removed but not replaced, though the window decals remain, mostly because they don't require any effort to be displayed.

Wednesday is Sept. 11. Pull those flags, lapel pins, ribbons and bunting back out. Start flying those colors again.

And after Sept. 11 this year, let's keep them flying.

"It didn't make any big changes in my life. It changed waiting to come on post. People are more cautious to invest now. It was the worst for people who were directly affected. We want to not remember, but we can't forget. I'm sad, but life must go on."
Giulieta McClelland,
family member

"It's hard to believe it's been a year. I've learned to expect the unexpected, but I don't think about it much. My husband's going over there to re-enlist soldiers. After it happened, everyone wanted to enlist.
It proves we live in a good country."
Lisa Walker,
family member

"I'm ready to go get him. I'd like to do it myself. I was in high school during World War II and joined the Army Air Corps.
It's a terrible thing what happened on September 11th. The pilots should have known what was going on, we need better security in-flight."
Sam Pelchar,
Columbus

Soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, road march back to the area of operation to prepare for their next mission during the Bayonet.

Mission brings realism to training

The water didn't flow red, but crossing the Upatoi Creek, soldiers quickly learned the dangers involved with negotiating an obstacle during battle.

They were 12 hours into their last field training exercise of basic training, The Bayonet, when soldiers from A Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, were given a mission to retrieve ammunition supplies across a creek more than two "clicks" away from their position.

"There's an obstacle and enemy to overcome," said Staff Sgt. Pablo Barrientos, drill sergeant. "They have to work as a team to accomplish the mission."

Two infantrymen established near-side security while while the rest of their squad moved into position to seize the munitions.

"It involves a little realism," Barrientos said. "This is a scenario they may encounter with their units in combat."

Being in the open without any cover or concealment is disturbing, but the mission needs to be accomplished, said Pvt. Mark Siapco, a member of the opposition force. In a situation like this, being aware of the environment, moving tactically and working as a team will save soldiers lives.

Soldiers train for missions like these because they apply to the realities of war, Siapco said. Casualties happen, and soldiers need to be prepared to react efficiently and effectively during times of adversity.

"One thing I've learned is that combat isn't easy," said Battalion Command Sgt Maj. Jay Brimstin, wearing his combat infantry badge. "There will be lots of times where they're physically and mentally challenged."

The missions soldiers perform during The Bayonet are gut checks, Brimstin said. There will be more to come.

After the soldiers accounted for all personnel and retrieved the ammo, they conducted an after-action review.

During the AAR, Staff Sgt. Billy Tharpe, drill sergeant, read aloud about Cpl. Mitchell Red Cloud, a Medal of Honor recipient.

"He made the ultimate sacrifice," Tharpe said. "Through his courage and honorable actions, he saved at least 70 to 80 men."

Soldiers sacrifice themselves for the greater good of their comrades to defeat the enemy, Brimstin said. It's not about God and country, the flag or orders.

"It's about fighting for your buddy," Brimstin said. "It's about fighting for the man next to you in battle."

This training is the culmination of all the exercises these soldiers have done, Barrientos said.

"It brings together everything the soldiers have learned through their fourteen weeks together," Barrientos said. "They have matured and become soldiers in fourteen weeks."

Other Army branches looking at Infantry's Buddy Team Assignment Program for initial entry soldiers Program helps men transition to duty station

Tesia Williams

WASHINGTON — A number of Army branches are showing an interest in the Infantry's Buddy Team Assignment Program, which has now paired more than 7,000 soldiers, officials said.

BTAP was developed two years ago, under the direction of Maj. Gen. John Le Moyne — then chief of infantry at Fort Benning — to reduce first-term attrition and provide new soldiers with a more positive experience during their first few months in the Army.

In week 10 of a 14-week training period at Fort Benning, soldiers are assigned as buddy teams to get used to each other before proceeding to their first unit, said Master Sgt. Russell Stokes, infantry senior sergeant professional development noncommissioned officer and Fort Benning liaison officer to the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command.

"By that tenth week, the soldiers that are still there are probably going to stay," Stokes said. "Most of the hard stuff that normally sends them packing, like road marches and PT tests, are done."

Drill sergeants and the chain of command solicit help of psychologists to profile the soldiers before pairing them into buddy-teams, which makes the program and match more effective, he said.

"I've personally heard from soldiers in Germany and Korea coming from small towns with nothing in common with other soldiers except being the new guy; however, when they get to their new unit, they have something in common with their buddy because they've spent 14 weeks with him," Stokes said.

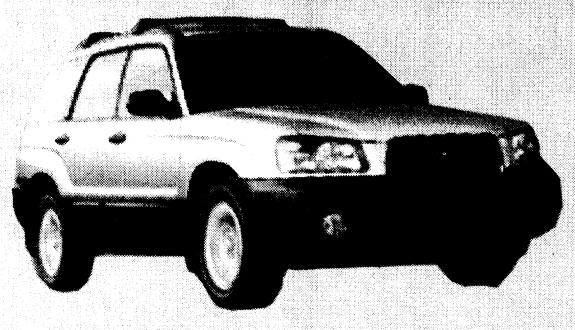
The Army Research Institute released a report in July 2001 indicating that buddy-teams enhance many aspects of the soldier's initial experience in the Army.

The majority of the soldiers agreed that assigning buddies to the same unit is a good Army practice, officials said.

The program is undergoing upgrades and modifications to further assist in making the soldier's experience at his first duty station more desirable.

"We're hoping to add a BTAP field to (the Enlisted Distribution and Assignment System), so that it will stay with him the entire time he is in the Army," Stokes said.



Currently, BTAP soldiers are tracked in a separate database using their social security numbers, he said.

"We want to make sure we have more efficient tracking methods before we start passing this on to other MOSs," Stokes said.

Moving out!

Sgt. William A. Graves

Soldiers from C Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, walk approximately two miles to the company area from the Land Mine Warfare Range during their third week of training Aug. 29.

"The conditioning walk helped acclimate the soldiers to the Georgia heat and humidity," said Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Clements, drill sergeant. "It served as a reminder that they need to watch out for their battle buddy and make sure he's drinking plenty of water — even during short maneuvers."

ITB soldiers earn German Efficiency Badge

Men compete in many tasks for honor

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Armies around the world train to meet and exceed physical standards. Most do not have the same style and structure of U.S. Army fitness training.

However, the German Armed Forces Efficiency Badge offers soldiers a chance to earn an award that the German army uses to asses their own physical fitness standards."

"It gives soldiers an understanding of what another allied army does for training physically," said Sgt. 1st Class Lance Burdette, intelligence sergeant at the Infantry Training Brigade.

Forty soldiers from ITB recently earned their efficiency badges, which are broken into three categories: gold, silver and bronze.

Thirty-one soldiers earned gold, one soldier earned a silver and eight soldiers earned bronze.

"This is the highest number of soldiers we have had to complete the efficiency badge," said German Sgt. Maj. Manfred Jerabek. "It is also the highest number of soldiers we have had to reach the gold level, since I can remember."

The soldiers earned the badges through many events. Events include a 100-, 400- or 1,000-meter run; a 5,000-meter run or 1,000-meter swim; 200-meter swim; long or high jump; shot put; basic first aid; rifle marksmanship and an 18.5 mile road march, which had to be completed in less than five hours.

Before the events, soldiers worked on events they knew they would have trouble with during the testing.

"The 200-meter swim was the toughest for me, both mentally and physically," said Capt. Cedric Burden, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment. "I'm not a strong swimmer, but the training I did before helped me go above and beyond the standard during the test."

Burdette said he was happy with the way all of the soldiers performed, and the way they carried themselves before, during and after the test.

"All of the soldiers are considered winners. They all set the goal of earning one of the three badges, and worked hard to achieve that goal."

> "All of the soldiers are considered winners. They all set the goal of earning one of the three badges, and worked hard to achieve that goal."
> Sgt. 1st Class Lance Burdette
> intelligence sergeant at ITB

Not only are all of the soldiers winners, but they also have gained another experience in life to look back on in the future.

"This is another stepping stone in my military career," Burden said. "I will look back on this later in life and be proud of what I have done and what I have accomplished."

No More Excuses.

Children cope with Sept. 11 anniversary

Initial stress may reappear with anniversary

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Many adults will have a tough time coping with the anniversary of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. But children and adolescents were also affected.

What should parents do to help their kids get through this period?

While the initial signs of stress in children will grow smaller or disappear as time goes by, this first anniversary may cause them to reappear.

Daniel Dodgen, an official with the American Psychological Association, said parents need to understand this is normal and they should not overreact.

Speaking at the Pentagon Aug. 28 at a seminar sponsored by the Pentagon Employee Referral Service, Dodgen said it is important that children feel safe. He said parents should make plans and communicate them to their children.

"They need to know what to do in the event of an emergency," he said. Parents need to help their children develop coping skills and encourage them to share their feelings about the event.

Parents should not be surprised if children regress during times of stress. This means they might act younger than they are. This, too, is normal and will pass.

Children, just like adults, may dream of the experience or have reawakened memories. They may go through anger, anxiety and sadness all over again.

As the anniversary of the attacks nears, parents should:

• Listen to your children. Find out how they are reacting and help them come to grips with it,

• Attend a memorial service or other community activities,

• Create your own family ritual to observe the anniversary,

• Monitor what your children are watching on television and set limits on the time spent in front of the tube,

• Maintain a schedule and take care that the children receive adequate rest and nutrition,

• Take care of themselves. Children learn by example.

Campaign kicks off Sept. 25

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Families who think they might be able to get along without that extra box of cereal each week might want to consider donating those few extra dollars to charity.

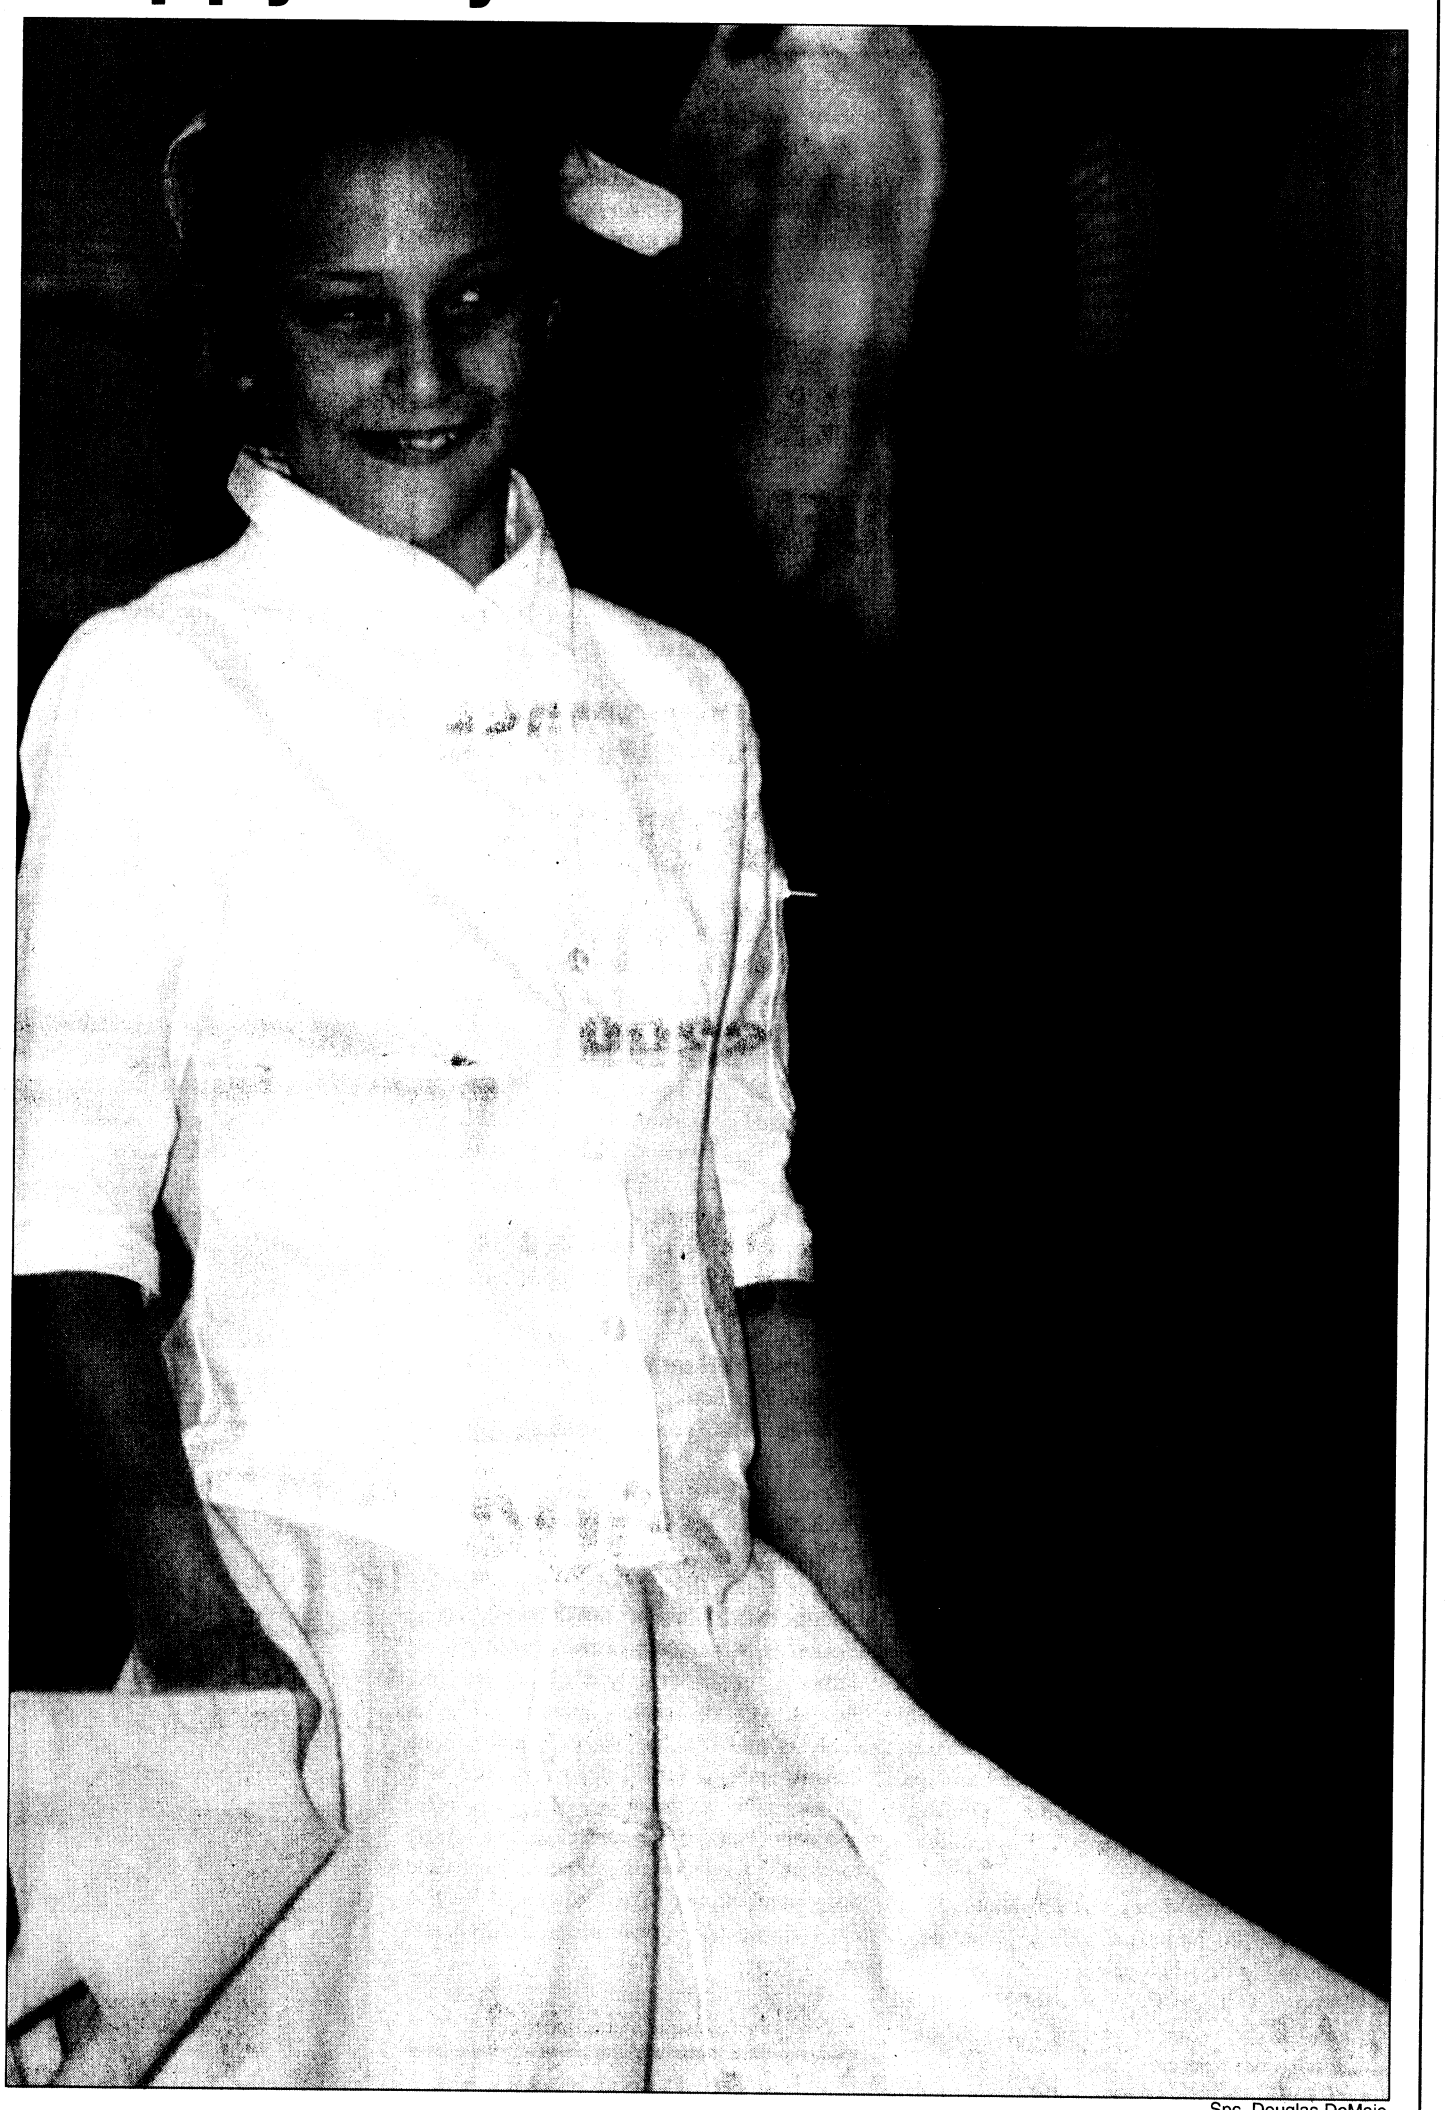
Fort Benning is set to take part in one of the largest national contribution campaigns, making it easy for soldiers and federal employees to make a difference in their community.

"If soldiers could see firsthand the looks on the kids faces when they are able to get new playground equipment, I think every family could find the spare change," said Pat Finley, director of the Patch Pre-School on Fort Benning, a school that receives donations from families each year. "Our kids deserve it."

The Combined Federal Campaign is an annual campaign that allows soldiers to jump on board and begin making contributions from their paycheck to their favorite charity.

Patch Pre-School, Santa's Castle, and other needy agencies like Big Brothers, Big Sisters and Goodwill are just some of the charities soldiers and government employees can choose from if they decide to take part in the campaign.

"It's a simple process," said Brian Smith, chief of marketing, Directorate of Community Activities. "There are so many different ways to take part in this campaign. A few bucks a paycheck makes a world of a difference."



Children attending pre-school on Fort Benning are examples of children who have benefited from past contributions. The school received new playground equipment last year, and this year the school will receive classroom security cameras.

"The cameras allow parents to watch what is going on in the classroom from a television in another room," Finley said. "It makes all of us more comfortable. We couldn't have done it without the contributions from the families here on post."

Families will receive brochures on the different organizations taking part in the campaign over the next few weeks. A point of contact for each unit will be designated to make sure each soldier and government employee is given

Program looking for mentors

Big Brothers, Sisters make difference

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

If you could make a difference in a kid's life just by spending an hour with them a week, would you?

Faith Middle School is hoping soldiers, spouses, government employees and anyone else interested in helping children will take the initiative and be a mentor to a needy child this school year.

"We have children here who are excited to have a friend they can turn to for advice," said Fred McCraw, sixth-grade guidance counselor at Faith. "Most of all, they just want someone they can have fun with."

The Big Brothers, Big Sisters mentor program is set to kick off at the school and there are plenty of children hoping for a match.

The problem is there aren't any adults who have shown interest in being matched with them.

"I'm shocked that we haven't even had one application turned in from Fort Benning," said Marian Slapikas, Big Brothers, Big Sisters director. "Military children need role models just as much as the rest of the children in this community. It's sad we haven't been able to help them."

Big Brothers, Big Sisters advocates have been targeting Fort Benning all year, talking with battalion commanders and other soldiers who can get the word out about the need for volunteers. But in the past nine months, the program has fizzled.

There are still at least 50 children on a waiting list, Slapikas said.

"I had a big sister mentor last year but then she had a change of orders and moved," said seventh-grader Megan Tabar. "I really miss having someone like her around. She helped me with my algebra, and we talked on the phone a lot."

There are scores of children who need a friend to turn to and this program helps, Slapikas said.

"The process to become a mentor is easy," Slapikas said. "Volunteers who are interested fill out an application. We then match them with a child who shares their interests or has a similar background."

The years between sixth and eighth grade are extremely critical in forming a child's confidence and getting them on the right track, McCraw said.

Is there a hero in the house?

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

I know you meant to, really you did. You promised yourself — gosh, was it really a year ago? — to turn over a new leaf.

To be kind to strangers.

To make the world a better place.

To volunteer.

You promised yourself you'd be an everyday hero every day.

I know you did. So did I.

And where are we now? Did you keep your promise, or did you let life's trivialities encroach upon your resolution, as I did?

Now's our chance to make up for lost time.

House of Heroes, the nonprofit organization dedicated to honoring our community's aging veterans, is rising to the president's challenge to volunteer. They're repairing 50 homes this year. And Fort Benning folks will tackle 10 of those.

This is where we come in. You and I can make a difference in the lives of these veterans — or in many cases, their widows — by sacrificing just a few hours of our time to help make their homes more livable.

I've met several of these true-blue heroes. They're humble people, but if you can keep them talking long enough, they'll tell you stories that will break your heart — stories about World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

These kind of heroes are few and far between these days. Better thank them while we can. So join me and the cast of hundreds who'll fix up homes for heroes Sept. 16-20. Call 545-1500 for more information.

Or better yet, just grab your tool belt and meet me at 8:30 a.m. at Asbury Methodist Church on Broadmoor Street Sept. 16, 17 and 19.

Before spending that tax refund ...

Soldier pays for mistake months later

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

A recent legal assistance case illustrates the danger of spending money that might not belong to you.

In this case, a soldier received a direct deposit of an IRS refund that differed from the amount he expected to receive — several thousand dollars more than what he had claimed on his income tax return.

He contacted personnel at his bank to inquire about the deposit, and was told that the deposit was properly placed into his account.

He waited 30 days before he used the money, then spent it.

Unfortunately, 18 months later, the IRS submitted a "reverse deposit" to the bank, which withdrew the entire amount of the erroneous refund from the soldier's bank account.

Because the soldier no longer had the refund in the account, his account ended up with a negative $5,000 balance. The bank has restricted his account and is threatening legal proceedings unless he repays the $5,000.

While the Legal Assistance Division is working with the bank in an attempt to assist the soldier, others can take two important lessons from what happened here.

First, an income tax refund should match the exact refund amount claimed on the taxpayer's income tax form.

If the refund received differs at all, even by one dollar, the taxpayer should contact the IRS and question the refund.

In this case the soldier contacted the bank, which could only verify that the IRS had deposited an amount into his account, but the bank had no way of knowing whether or not the IRS had made a mistake.

Second, taxpayers should be aware of the fact that the IRS takes an average of 18 months to conduct an audit.

Many taxpayers think that once a refund is received, the review process is complete. In the majority of cases however, the IRS issues refunds first and audits later, so taxpayers may receive inquiries about their income tax return many months after a refund was received.

This is why keeping income tax records is so important. Without proper records, a taxpayer may not be able to support a challenged entry.

It is also important that taxpayers claim only the credits to which they are entitled, as receiving a larger refund than permitted does not mean that the money will not be requested back later.

For more information, contact the Fort Benning Tax Center at 545-4267.

Campaign: Raises money for activities

the appropriate information on how to take part in the campaign.

By taking part in the campaign, soldiers can contribute to:

- A national fund that helps out agencies like the Muscular Dystrophy Association and others in need,
- The Soldiers and Family Support Association that distributes funds to Fort Benning organizations such as Santa's Castle, the Patch Pre-School, camps for disabled kids and the food locker,
- A local fund that helps community organizations like Big Brothers, Big Sisters, homeless and abuse shelters, and Goodwill among others,
- A specific organization of their choice.

"We suggest soldiers carefully look over the material they receive on the organizations and then make a decision," Smith said. "Families can also call the agencies directly or use the Internet for more information on where their contributions go."

Fort Benning soldiers and employees contributed a total of $687,000 last year, but the most important aspect of the campaign is making sure all soldiers and government employees are aware of how to get involved, Smith said.

"For anyone who has ever wanted to help out, this is the time to make the commitment," Smith said. "It doesn't get much easier than this."

Soldiers and employees will soon see paperwork that allows them to sign up and make contributions deducted from their paychecks. Anywhere from $10 to $15 a pay period makes a world of a difference, Smith said.

Just ask kids and teachers at the Patch Pre-School.

"The money soldiers contribute comes to us in quarterly payments throughout the year," Finley said. "Families who contribute can feel good knowing the money they contribute is going to those it is intended for. Our school is living proof."

The Combined Federal Campaign kicks off at 8 a.m. Sept. 25 with an informational forum at the Officer' Club. Families can also contact their company commanders and Family Readiness Group presidents for more information.

Mentors: Spend time with children, listen

Many of the children at Faith Middle School who are seeking mentors have only one parent at home and have moved around so often it's tough for them to make friends, he said.

"We are looking for soldiers and families who want to spend an hour or so a week with a child, help them with their homework, take them for a bike ride, anything really," McCraw said. "The mentor will get just as much out of this as the child."

Some children who have been involved in the program in the past brag to their friends about it.

"Most of my friends are like me and just looking for someone to play basketball with or joke around," said eighth-grader Michael Eberhart. "We want to be their friend and show them what it's like to be our age."

"I'm hoping I can meet a mentor who likes to give advice," said seventh-grader Chloe Favire.

That advice and assistance has made a significant difference in the academics of children in the past.

When the Big Brothers, Big Sisters program was thriving several years ago, counselors say they saw an increase in attendance rates and grade point averages among the children involved, McCraw said.

> "It's amazing what kids will do when they have someone they can relate with, showing them they are cared for and are special."
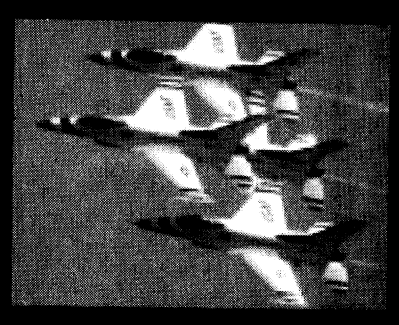
> Fred McCraw,
> Faith sixth-grade guidance counselor

"It's amazing what kids will do when they have someone they can relate with, showing them they are cared for and are special," McCraw said. "We've had older students tell us they have chosen certain career paths because of the advice and influence their mentor gave them."

But it's the children that fall through the cracks of the program that counselors are most worried about.

"Right now we need volunteers more than anything," McCraw said. "We don't want to look at these kids and tell them they can't be a part of the program. It's not fair."



Big Brothers, Big Sisters is looking for volunteers on post who will be here for at least eight months and can spend an hour a week with a child. For more information on how to get involved, call Slapikas at 327-3760.

Dexter students, parents feelin' good about fitness

Club gets members moving

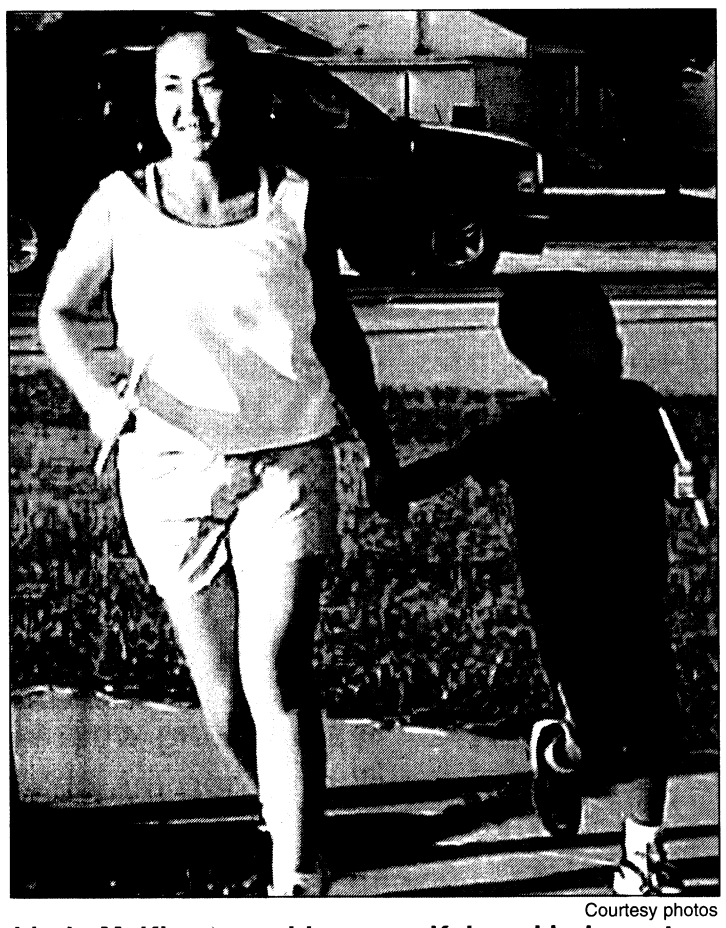
Dexter Elementary School

More than 125 Dexter students and 20 parents begin Tuesday and Wednesday mornings with a little extra zip in their steps — they are part of the Feelin' Good Mileage Club, an early morning running program. The number of participants grows each day.

Students and their parents meet the physical education teacher Pam Koon at the track at 8:10 a.m. twice a week. They run around the track until 8:25.

Participants earn toe tokens for every five miles and get a shoe charm to put on their shoelaces. When they reach the milestones of 25, 50, 75 and 100 miles, they get a mile marker token to add to their collection, Koon said.

"We are really feeling good about our running program at Dexter," she said.



The miles are cumulative from one year to the next in order to encourage students to continue to participate.

"I like to go to the Mileage Club before school because it is fun, and I get to exercise. Mrs. Koon gives us shoe charms when we get to 20 laps. That equals five miles! So far, I have earned five shoe charms. I had to run 100 laps to get them," said fourth-grader Joshua Peters.

Students who attend the Feelin' Good Mileage Club begin their day with a sense of accomplishment and are ready to focus on the tasks ahead, Koon said.

"My students who participate in the Mileage Club have an extra positive experience to look forward to each week at school. We have so many wonderful things going on for students at Dexter. This one helps focus their minds by waking up the body," said teacher Terri Bond.

Mileage Club participants agree that it is a great way to start the day.

Student mentors, along with their younger protégés, worked on a very special project this week at Dexter Elementary School.

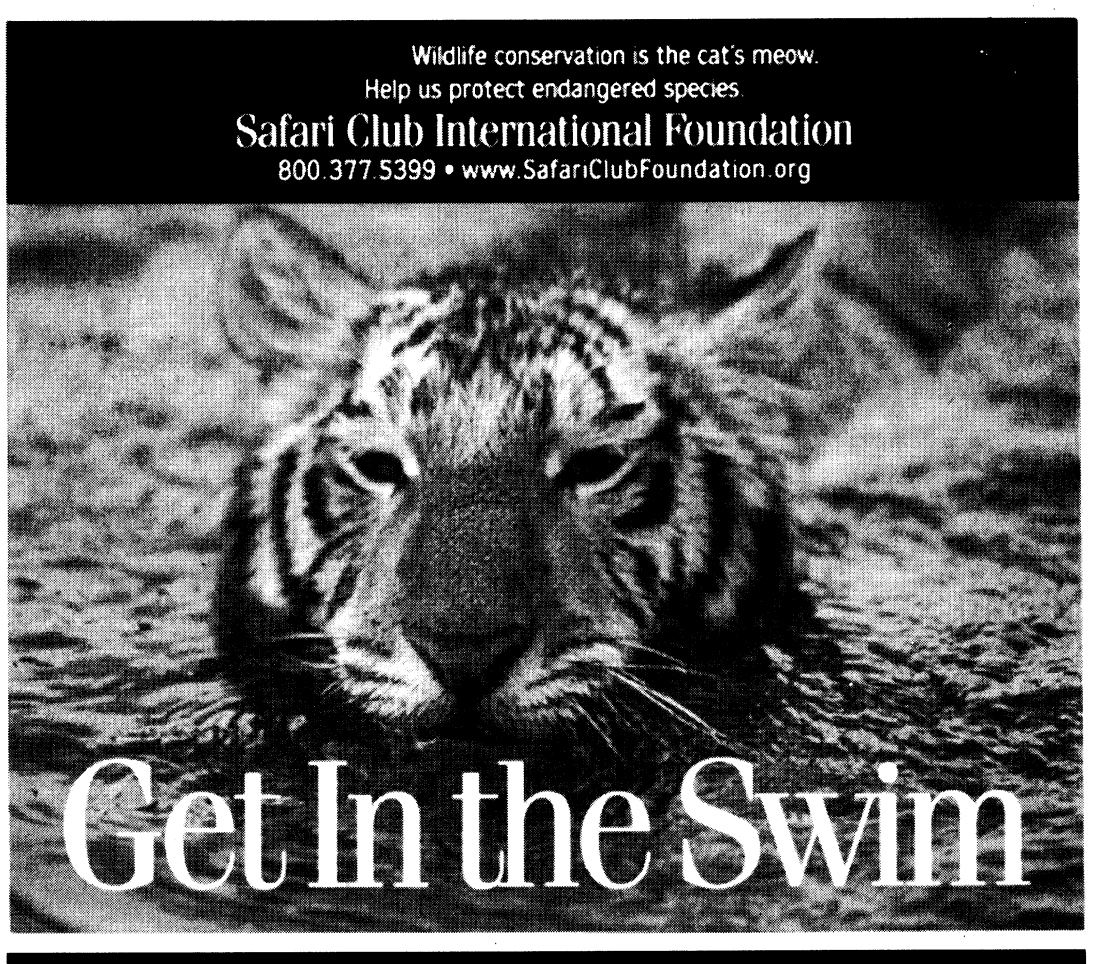
In a few weeks, Dexter's Partners-in-Education unit, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, will return from a deployment in Kuwait.

To welcome the nearly 500 soldiers back, Dexter students decorated goodie bags to be given to each returning soldier.

"We are glad that we got the chance to decorate the bags for the soldiers because we know they missed their families while they were gone," said fourth-grader Riley Graham.

Dexter students kept in touch with their partners through cards, letters and care packages.

"I hope the bags will cheer the soldiers up and let them know they were not forgotten while they were in Kuwait," said fourth-grader Kyle Gray.



Last year soldiers read to the students and brought vehicles to the school as part of field day.

"The students had the unforgettable experience of riding around the campus in the back of a 'real Army truck'," said Brenda Harding, one of the school's teachers.

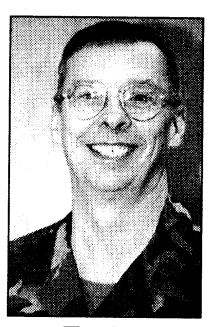
Believers look to God every day of year

Seeking to do God's will smartest choice

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor
Infantry Center Chapel

On Jan. 1, most of us broke out the party gear and celebrated the beginning of a new year. We made resolutions, most of which have long gone by the wayside, and looked forward in great anticipation to what God would bring our way.



The excitement of a new beginning gave us new enthusiasm and hope, and in many cases, a new dedication to do the right things even better.

Tomorrow is another new year: the Jewish New Year, known as Rosh Hashanah. While it may be short on the partying and celebrations, it is long on significance. Rabbi Menachem Schneerson sent the following greeting through our local rabbi to the Jewish soldiers on Fort Benning:

"These days at the end of the outgoing year, and on the eve of the new year, may it bring blessings to everyone."

Call for self evaluation in respect of the year about to end, and — in the light of this self-appraisal — for making the necessary resolutions for happiness for the coming year.

REFLECTIONS

Such a "balance sheet" can be valid only if the evaluation of the full extent of one's powers and opportunities was a correct one. Only then can one truly regret, in a commensurable degree, the missed opportunities, and resolve to use one's capacities to the fullest extent from now on.

The period of time before and during Rosh Hashanah is not only the occasion that demands spiritual stock-taking in general, but it also begs for a profound inner appreciation of the tremendous capacities which one possesses, as a man — the crown of creation, and as a Jew whom the creator has given his divine law of life (Toras Chayyim). For Rosh Hashanah is the day when man was created by the hands of God.

In these days of introspection, we are duty-bound to reflect that each and every one of us — through carrying out the instructions of the Creator of the world, which are contained in His Torah — has the capacity of conquering worlds.

Everyone must therefore ask himself, how much has he accomplished in this direction, and to what extent has he failed, so that he can make the proper resolutions for the coming year.

Those of us who are not Jewish can certainly take the admonition for introspection to heart.

For whether at the beginning of the year or the beginning of the day, seeking the will and wisdom of God is certainly about the smartest thing we can do.

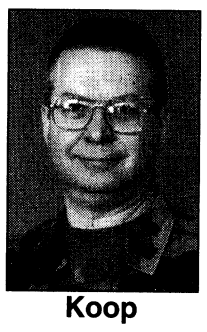
No marriage is without problems



Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

All couples have problems. The most common marital problems are money, jealousy, communication, in-laws, sex and child rearing.

Problems are best handled as a team. The Bible says, "Two are better than one, because they have a good return for their work: If one falls down, his friend can help him up."

Don't blame your partner for being the problem or creating the problem. Separate the problem from the person.

Quick fixes are not good solutions. Solving problems prematurely leads to inadequate solutions and poor implementation. Quick solutions trample people's feelings.

Koop

Learn to separate the discussion of the problem from problem solving. Use the three-phase model of problem solving.

Phase One: Problem Discussion. Thorough discussion reveals the deep and often hidden underlying issues that are not remedied with a quick solution. "If one gives answer before hearing, it is folly and shame," (Proverbs 18:13).

Phase Two: Break. Take a break after problem discussion to pray, reflect, meditate and stretch your muscles.

Phase Three: Problem Solution. Set the agenda for problem solving by focusing on one issue. Brainstorm to reveal possibilities and options. Find agreement through collaboration or compromise, then follow-up to ensure the implementation of the solution is working and still agreeable to both.

Remember, some problems do not have easy solutions, and a few problems can't be solved. Many problems can be solved by thorough discussion.

The Spencer Greenwaves storm Memorial Stadium field Friday to face the Carver High School Tigers.

Carver defeats Spencer to keep trophy

Quarterback kills team with big plays

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

There was good news and bad news for the Spencer High School Greenwaves during their game with the Carver Tigers Aug. 30 at Memorial Stadium in Columbus.

The bad news was Tigers' quarterback Jason Boykin averaged 27 yards a carry on seven attempts, ran for four touchdowns, and passed for 68 yards and one touchdown.

The good news was it was the last time Spencer will have to face him again this year.

Boykin helped his team rout the Greenwaves, 56-12, and win the Works-Sanders Trophy for the fourth consecutive year.

"He's a great athlete," said Collins Jones, Spencer coach. "I knew we weren't going to stop him so we just hoped to contain him."

There seemed to be a Star Trek-like force field around Boykin as he bobbed and weaved through the Greenwaves' defense like a pinball that can't be hit because of a tilt. Still, he deflected the accolades.

"I had mighty good blocking. Plus, I have so many great receivers that they have to play me evenly," Boykin said. "They can't just focus on me, and tonight, that opened things up."

Greenwaves' Shamon Smith breaks out of the pocket for some of his team-high 223 rushing yards.

Spencer's quarterback, Jerome Coverson, said the team beat themselves.

"Big plays killed us. Jason made good plays out of messed up plays," Coverson said. "If we kept him in the pocket, we would have done better."

They didn't, and Boykin was able to slither out of the pocket into the open field. Once he reached daylight, the Greenwaves seemed indecisive about how to bring down the star.

"We have to become more consistent and execute on defense," Jones said. "We have to play more fundamental football. We got away from that tonight."

A fireworks display may have lit up the night's sky during the third quarter, but the Tigers provided explosions on the field early in the first. Tiger Elbert Ash scampered 59 yards on a sweep to the left with 6:38 remaining.

Greenwaves' Jerome Coverson prepares to hand the ball off to teammate Ricky Graves.

Spencer responded and drove the ball to the Carver four-yard line. However, the Greenwaves fumbled, and the enthusiasm seemed to deflate on the spot.

Boykins proceeded to capitalize on poor tackling and busted coverage to score his first touchdown early in the second quarter to push the score to 14-0.

On a Carver fourth down at the Greenwaves' six-yard line, the Greenwaves' defense held, and excitement seemed to return to the sideline.

The offense countered, but after a Coverson 19-yard keeper, a Spencer fumble killed the drive and deflated their balloon that seemed to be filling with confidence.

Boykin then scrambled for a 33-yard touchdown at the 3:04 mark, and the Greenwaves' next drive stalled with a turnover on downs.

Not content to sit on the ball at the 1:19 mark, Boykin threw for a long gain and dazzled the crowd with a 42-yard touchdown jaunt.

The second half was not much different.

Carver scored two quick touchdowns to extend the lead to 42-0.

In spite of this, Spencer didn't pack it in. Shamon Smith broken through the Tigers' defense on a sweep for a 60-yard touchdown. The extra point was no good.

The Tigers answered with a Jamal Gardner 71-yard touchdown run and an amazing 54-yard Boykin touchdown to stretch the lead to 50.

Nonetheless, Coverson wouldn't let his team quit. He turned a botched play and fumble into a 30-yard touchdown scramble with 1:11 remaining. The extra point sailed left.

"This was my first game at QB," the junior said. "I'm confident I'm going to get better. There are always butterflies during the first game. Next game, we'll react better to situations, and we'll know what to look for."

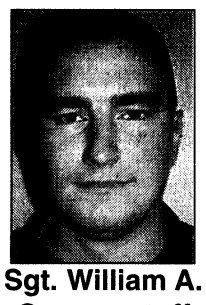
Moreover, there were positives during the game upon which to build, Jones said.

"We threw the ball well (tonight), and, at times, we ran the ball well," Jones said.

In fact, Smith rushed for 223 yards, and the Greenwaves racked up 349 yards of total offense.

The annual match up provided a spark to the thousands of community members who attended, Coverson said.

"The game's a classic," he said. "Everyone is always excited to come out and witness our rivalry. I'm sure they had fun. It was an excellent football environment."



And regardless of the opening night score, Jones said the Greenwaves will perform better than last season's 1-9 team.

"I feel real positive about the rest of the season. We're not going to have to face too many Jason Boykins this season. He's in a class of his own."

Shooter finds stardom at Junior Olympics

19-year-old earns respect in competition

Scott Engen
USA Shooting

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — A U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit soldier took the top spot and brought home the Gold Medal in the 2002 USA Shooting Junior Olympic Shooting Championships at U.S. Olympic Training Center Aug. 28.

Pvt. Matthew T. Wallace, who battled both a steady, bone-chilling rain and a strong field of competitors, emerged as the best young male international trapshooter in the nation today.

Wallace, 19, a native of Stanton, Tenn., came out of the rain-soaked qualifying round standing third with a score of 113 of a possible 125 targets, two targets behind Drew Denison, 18, of Hereford, Texas, and just one behind Joshua Richmond, 16, of Hillsgrove, Pa.

A score of 20 from Dennison and a 19 from Richmond in the medals final round could not match the powerful 24 of a possible 25 targets from Wallace, and the USAMU shooter won the Gold Medal with a total of 137.

Denison finished with the Silver, putting a credible 135 on the scoreboard in his first Junior Olympics competition, while Bryan Marshall, 20, of Troutdale, Ore., went 25 for 25 in the final and then won a tie-breaking shoot-off against Matt Scamardo, 16, of Bryan, Texas, receiving the Bronze Medal with a score of 134.

Nearly 100 of the nation's best young shotgun athletes participated in the 2002 Junior Olympic Shooting Championships.

The athletes for this invitation-only championship were selected based on their results in Junior Olympic qualifying events in their home states, by winning their state's American Trap Association junior 16-yard singles title or by competing at the USA Shooting National Championships.

All the athletes are 20 or younger, with this year's youngest entrant being just 11 years old. Winners of the National Junior Olympic titles in each event will be named to USA Shooting's National Development Team, where they will be eligible for additional competition and training opportunities.

Wallace joined the Army Dec. 19 after graduating from Covington High School of Covington, Tenn. After completing Basic Training and Infantry Training at Fort Benning, he was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit April 19.

The shotgun shooter has numerous marksmanship accomplishments.

After winning the Silver Medal in the Junior Trap Match at the World Championship Team Trials, he won a spot on the 2002 World Championship Team. Wallace was the 2001 Junior National Trap Champion and 2001 Junior Olympics International Trap Bronze Medalist. He also won a Silver Medal in the 2000 Junior International Trap National Championship and is a three-time Junior American Trap Association All-American. Wallace is single and lives on Fort Benning.

Competent coaches decrease overuse injuries

Fitness expert explains benefits of qualification

Lt. Col. Bill Rieger
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

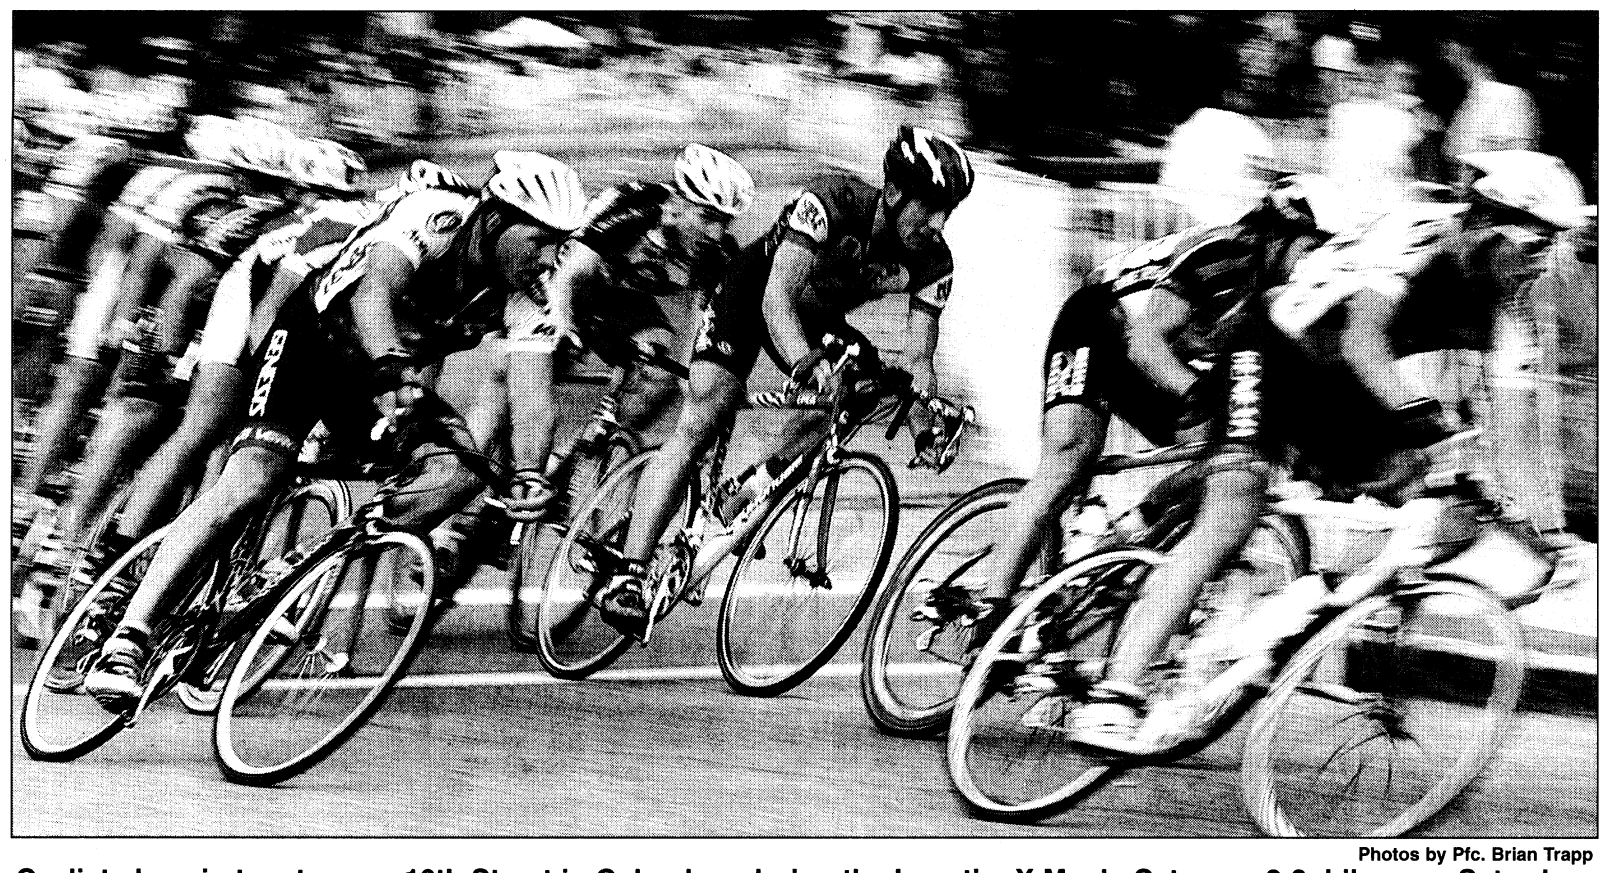
This is the first story of a three-part series that addresses the importance of a competent coach in youth sports.

Participation in organized sports has become a common rite of childhood in the U.S. In the early part of the 20th century, agencies began sponsoring sports and recreational activities to provide wholesome leisure-time pursuits, initially designed to keep boys out of trouble.

Schools sponsored intramural sports programs to provide instruction in sports skills, plus an opportunity to engage in controlled, competitive activities. Prior to 1954, most of the organized sports experiences for youth occurred within the social agencies such as the YMCA, YWCAs, Boys and Girls Clubs and Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts. Since 1954, the opportunities for youth to participate in sports have moved from social agencies and activities organized by the youth themselves to adult-organized programs. This movement toward adult-organized sports activities was associated with the advent of Little League Baseball by Carl Statz in 1954.

In the past 50 years, we have transitioned from "wholesome leisure time pursuits" designed to develop character into a "competitive combine" that reflects our nation's zealousness to win. Educators, parents and leaders of agency-sponsored sports programs do not always agree about the benefits and the objectives of youth sports programs, the notion of providing wholesome, character-building activities to occupy the leisure time of children and youth, or the role of sports to assist them in the transition from childhood to adulthood.

The term "youth sports" in American culture has been applied to any of the various athletic programs that provide a systematic sequence of practices and contests for youth. In reality, these sports experiences differ greatly in comparative level, length of season, cost to competitors, qualifications of coaches and officials and skill levels of athletes. The true magnitude of youth sport participation in the U.S. is difficult to measure. Approximately 35 million youth between the ages of 6 and 21 participate in sports, including 6 to 8 million in school programs. As parents, approximately 2.5 million adults annually volunteer their time as coaches of youth sports teams. Impressive as this work force is in its dedication to the needs of youth, it is insufficient in magnitude and competence to provide the knowledge, skills and supervision required by the youth in the level of competition so often demanded.



There is common agreement that the quality of the youth sports experience depends on the competence of the adult leaders; most specifically the coach. Thus educational programs for coaches, especially volunteer coaches, would seem to be in demand. But such is not the case. Generic programs for coaches exist at the national level and numerous sports-specific programs are in existence with national-affiliations (Cambell, 1993; Feigley, 1988).

Yet, the vast majority of youth sports coaches, estimated to be as high as 90 percent, have no formal education in coaching techniques, first aid, injury prevention or emergency care (Kimiecki, 1988; Milne, 1990; Partlow, 1995; Seefeldt, 1992; Sieget and Newhof, 1992). Clearly, the mandatory education of coaches to meet at least the first level of competency as stated in the National Standards for Athletic Coaches (National Association for Sports and Physical Education, 1995) should be required.

So what does this have to do with overuse injuries? The American College of Sports Medicine estimates that 50 percent of overuse injuries in youth are preventable (DiFiori, 1999). In summary of the research concerning athletic overuse injuries, the following recommendations are provided to assist parents of youth who participate in sports today and tomorrow.

Pre-participation physical examinations, required by most schools, should be encouraged for all youths involved in organized athletics. This is an excellent opportunity to identify sport-specific injury risk factors and to access youth maturity and motivation for the sport. Sports medicine physicians should take control of this vital role in the prevention of injury. This exam should not be regarded solely as a legal, bureaucratic or governmental issue. It is, in fact, a medical issue.

NATIONAL ASSISTED LIVING WEEK ❖ SEPTEMBER 8-14

HONORING THE SPIRIT OF OUR NATION

Dr. Jack and Gloria McCaffrey

For Dr. Jack and Gloria McCaffrey serving America stimulated a deep sense of patriotism. Jack, a Marine Corporal, served as part of the first ground offense in World War II and received the purple heart, while Gloria, a cartographer, developed maps and charts for the Navy. And from their example, their sons also developed a desire to serve–one joining the Marines and the other attending the Naval Academy. For the McCaffreys, honoring America through service is truly a family tradition.

GOD BLESS OUR COUNTRY

BILL HEARD CHEVROLET

For those who lost their lives on September 11, 2001, we .
Remember and honor your sacrifice.
Each victim has a family.
Each family is part of a community.
Day and night,
Our thoughts and prayers are with those who still suffer.
May you someday find peace.

Every day we remember those in uniform who
Nobly sacrifice to protect our homeland and secure our future.
Dear Lord, we ask that you grant them wisdom and courage
Until the day arrives when freedom,
Religious tolerance, and justice prevail.
Even in our darkest hour, the human Spirit has the capacity to hope.

Plan pays for nursing home, at-home care

Joe Smith sits in his $100,000 house in Orlando, Fla., smoking a cigarette and feeling confident in a $50,000 fixed-income mutual fund he just bought.

"I'm glad you're happy about the fund, Mr. Smith," his financial advisor says. "While I'm here, I want to talk to you about our long-term care plan, too. With your net worth at $250,000, you might want to consider purchasing a policy that would protect your estate from the $50,000-per-year cost of care."

"Long-term care?!" Smith says. "I'm never going to need that. I'm healthy as a horse. Thanks for your concern, but don't bring it up again, sonny."

Three years pass. Smith, who has tripped on his oxygen machine and broken his hip while going down the stairs, is stuck in his bed with emphysema. A nurse comes into the room to check on him, as the 67-year-old ponders how he'll pay for her services.

People can avoid the ramifications of this true story

COMMENTARY

Remember when, 'It's not whether you win or lose, but how you play the game,' meant just that? When 'hotdogging' was synonymous with 'poor sport,' and it was better to be a gracious loser than a poor winner?

Or maybe that was before your time.

My daughter played soccer two years ago when she was 4. She still remembers it fondly, though her memories are slightly skewed. To hear her tell it, they won every game, she scored countless goals and everybody went home happy.

That's not the reality of it.

Mckenzie only made contact with the ball when it hit her. She never scored a goal. Come to think of it, neither did anyone else on the team.

My daughter's a nurturer, not an athlete. She preferred to sit on the bench and serve drinks. She worried about the little guy on the team who couldn't speak a word of English and the one who cried nonstop. When she actually participated in the game, she ran down the field holding hands with her "new best friend" Brittany.

That drove Brittany's dad crazy.

"Quit holding hands. You're not here to play," he yelled time and time again.

Hello?

Then there was the mom (a teacher in one of our post schools) whose son refused to play. The whole concept of running and kicking and screaming didn't appeal to her preschooler. So she drug him off the field — kicking and screaming, of course — calling him names, like "dummy," and "big baby" and "brat."

That was my daughter's last season in soccer. Soccer parents are the worst.

Or maybe baseball parents are.

There was the time 6-year-old Jacob made a perfect throw from second to the catcher to get the runner out at home. Unfortunately, that's not the way it's done in T-ball.

"What's the matter with you, kid? What do you think you're playing here?" the dad right in front of me yelled.

I did a little yelling of my own.

Now I hear Fort Benning's Youth Services is requiring parents to attend a workshop to learn the fundamentals of good sportsmanship before their children can play ball. Three cheers for YS. It's time someone took a stand.

Statistics show that youth sports programs lose middle-school age kids faster than you can say, "Play ball!" Fort Benning's YS baseball program can't even muster up enough teens to fill a couple of dugouts.

Little wonder.

These kids are old enough to decide for themselves if they want to play. They've had it up to here with overzealous parents vicariously living their own unfulfilled athletic fantasies. Parents who have taken all the fun out of sports.

Those who make it to high school still participating in team sports are prone to stress over their performance. They've been conditioned to focus on the big goal — a college athletic scholarship and the big leagues. It's the stuff parents dream of from the moment their baby learns to lace his Nikes.

Maybe YS' PAYS class will teach parents to chill out, to let their babies play ball. Maybe it'll teach them to be cheerleaders for their children, instead of drill instructors. Maybe it'll teach them to play nice.

Draft dodger talks openly

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COMMENTARY

I am a draft dodger. That's right. A draft dodger. For now anyway. Don't get me wrong. I know the mechanics of the technique. I even survived, unscathed, a one-on-one drafting lesson from a bicycling acquaintance last year. It wasn't exertion that made me sweat bullets while I pedaled closely behind her.

And I do mean close. Any closer and we could have passed for a tandem bike. When I hit a bump and threw a water bottle from its rack, I took it as a sign that the lesson needed to end.

She's not available for lesson two right now. She does have my best wishes as she recovers from a broken collarbone, with a couple of cracked ribs for good measure. Probably a good case of road rash, too. I just hope she wasn't wearing her favorite jersey when she wrecked. They're never the same after sliding across asphalt.

I haven't heard firsthand what happened, but it was a cycling accident. You know what technique I'm blaming it on.

Oh, sure. I'd like to go faster while working 40 percent less. I just don't want to have to put my front wheel two inches behind somebody's back wheel to get it. I will admit to slipping behind Mr. Mileage from time to time, especially if there's a headwind. But he always catches me and pulls over to end the free ride.

No, you don't really have to get that close. Your wheels could be up to six inches apart and you'd still be close enough to the sweet spot. Although for me, it's more of a sweat spot than a sweet spot. Just the thought of riding cheek-to-cheek with lots of other bicyclists can make me break out in a cold sweat.

I made the jump to clipless pedals last year. That means to ride my bike I lock my shoes to the pedals just like the big boys. But until my handling skills (reasonable in dry conditions with no distractions), equipment (safe, but nothing spectacular) and support team (non-existent) rival the Posties, you'll have to look hard to catch me riding wheel to wheel.

Then again, working 40 percent less does add up to working 40 percent less. And practice does make perfect.

Coming up are a 31- or 62-mile benefit ride in Thomaston Sept. 28, and a 20-mile fundraiser Oct. 19 between Lumpkin and Louvale not to mention the "training" rides in between.

Perhaps you'd care to join "Team Bayonet" on one or the other.

If you do support one of the rides, don't overdress. There won't be much of a draft.

At least, not near me.

DFEL needs volunteers to help clean up 'Hooch

The fourth annual Fort Benning Help The Hooch will be from 8 a.m. to noon Oct. 11, followed by lunch.

We need volunteers this year to help clean up. The last three years volunteers collected 14 tons of garbage.

Help The Hooch is part of the Keep Columbus Beautiful Commission system and Keep America Beautiful, a national nonprofit public service organization dedicated to litter prevention, recycling and beautification efforts.

This year we plan to use our committed volunteers and clean up seven sites to maximize our efforts and achieve greater results.

These sites include Upper and Lower Pet Cemetery, Upatoi, Z-3 Engineer's Landing, Engineer's Landing at Lawson Army, Eddy Bridge and Uchee Creek Marina.

The Chattahoochee River runs through Fort Benning for approximately 17 miles. This beautiful river that runs through our neighborhood will benefit from a cleanup event.

Our waterways provide us with fresh drinking water, great recreational opportunities like canoeing and fishing and they serve as a pleasant respite from our busy day to day lives.

Everyone contributes to pollution in our streams. This is your opportunity to help by giving something back to the environment. Help us clean the Chattahoochee River by joining in support of Help The Hooch.

I would like to invite soldiers and civilians to volunteer at our cleanup on the Chattahoochee River. This is a wonderful opportunity to get out and get involved in a local community cleanup event.

Volunteers will be given a free T-shirt.

Benning helps make cycling event successful

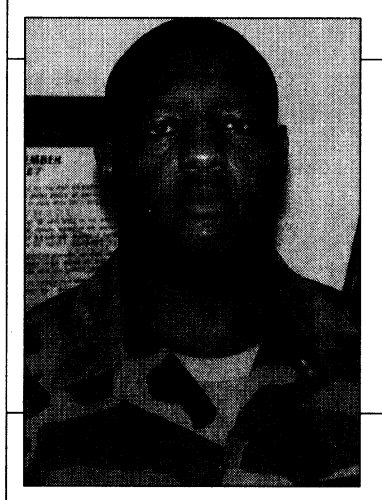
On behalf of the Chattahoochee Cycling Club and the Columbus Sports Council, I would like to thank Fort Benning's military police, EMS and fine staff.

We had a wonderful event, and the people involved on Benning that made it happen were a pleasure to work with. Foy Walker and Keith Metcalf were very helpful to us on the EMS crew. Thankfully, we had no injuries, but we sure felt better having them there with us. They were a pleasure to work with.

Also, I can't say enough about Spc. Brunelle, who helped us out with setting up the ride course and monitoring the area for the safety of our professional and amateur riders.

We put on 12 road races and couldn't have done it without his expertise on closing down the course.

We had comments from many of the professional riders who loved the course for its challenges and its relative safety. To have a closed road course is certainly a rarity and much appreciated.



The Fort Benning folks were professional and courteous all the way around. We look forward to working with you again.

Thanks for all you did to make this happen.

Gabe Denes, PhD
Chattahoochee Cycling Club president

Airborne son jumps into father's footsteps

Father, son continue tradition

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Following in the footsteps of airborne graduates who deployed to Vietnam 36 years ago, today's graduates deploy to Afghanistan and other areas of war.

As history repeats itself, Michael Willey, a former Army sergeant, watched his son, James, graduate Sept. 6 exactly 36 years to the week of his own graduation.

"I think God was looking out for us," said James, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment. "He had a plan."

Although James, the guidon bearer, received his wings from the battalion commander, Lt. Col. Aidis Zunde, he was proud to have his father in attendance at his graduation, he said.

"It feels good to follow in his footsteps," James said. The guidance and wisdom he received from his father gave him focus and determination.

"He told me to never quit," he said. "Whenever it gets hard, always do your best."

Hard work is what James is all about, Michael said.

"He's a hard worker and such a blessing to me," Michael said. "When he graduated airborne, I was very proud. I'm not one for crying, but there were tears that came along with his graduation."

James picks up on things quickly, Michael said. His drill sergeants said he's very knowledgeable of military tactics and applications.

A combat veteran with 1st Brigade (Separate), 101st (Air Assault) Airborne Infantry Regiment, Michael relayed those skills and tactics used during war to his son, he said.

James, a combat medic, will use his skills to save lives while working to become an elite soldier.

"I can't wait to go," said James, who will be heading for the Ranger Indoctrination Program next. "I look forward to the adventure of doing something hard and challenging."

His next assignment after RIP will likely take him to war, James said.

A pattern of heading to war after training is history in the making for the Willeys, just like history repeating itself with the airborne tradition.

Emancipation Proclamation on its way

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

It's been nearly a century and a half since President Abraham Lincoln issued the Emancipation Proclamation, formally proclaiming the freedom of all slaves.

Fort Benning soldiers, along with other residents in the Southeast, will soon have the opportunity to see the original document in its entirety.

As part of a traveling exhibition called American Originals: Treasures from the National Archives, the original signed Emancipation Proclamation will be on display Oct. 17-20 at the Jimmy Carter Presidential Library Museum in Atlanta.

"This original document is the raw stuff of history," said exhibition curator Stacey Bredhoff of the National Archives.

"This is a physical link to the past. They are pieces of history in the most unprocessed form, holding messages beyond their words."

For all the history buffs on post, the Emancipation Proclamation is just a highlight of the larger exhibition that will be displayed from Sept. 27 to Jan. 5.

> "This is a special opportunity for soldiers stationed down here and their families to see a part of history — a history they are a part of."
> Jay Hakes
> Carter Library director

The exhibit will feature 25 of the most important and compelling original documents that chronicle the development of the United States, said Jay Hakes, Carter Library director.

"This is probably the finest collection of major documents to leave Washington since the Freedom Train of 1948," Hakes said. "With subjects ranging from George Washington and Thomas Jefferson to John Wayne and Elvis, I think people will be stunned by the variety of the exhibition."

Some of the documents featured during the run of the exhibition include:

- Louisiana Purchase Treaty, 1803,
- Telegram regarding the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor,
- George Washington's statement accepting commission as commander in chief of American Forces, 1775,
- Instrument of Surrender (German High Command), signed at Berlin, 1945,
- Thomas Edison's patent application for the electric lamp, 1880,
- John F. Kennedy's handwritten notes for his inaugural address, 1961.

"Some of the documents will announce their importance with flourished signatures and wax seals, others are deceptively routine in appearance," said Caroline Clifford, spokesperson for the library. "All of these documents have passed through the most notable figures in our nation's history."

The archives exhibit is in the midst of a three year, eight-city national tour, and the Carter Library is the only venue in the Southeast where the exhibit will be on display.

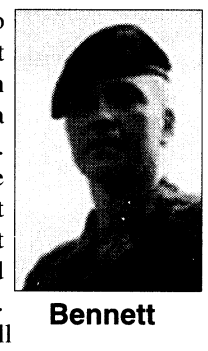
"This is a special opportunity for soldiers stationed down here and their families to see a part of history — a history they are a part of," Hakes said.

Admission to the Carter Library is $5 for adults, $4 for senior citizens, and free for children 16 and under.

For hours, directions and more information on the National Archives Exhibit, call 404-331-0296 or log on to www.jimmycarter.org.

Military police focus on combat support

Detachment receives recognition



Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

He doesn't complain or mention it to many, but Sgt. 1st Class Ken Bennett, 71st Military Police Detachment has been deployed 14 times in the past 16 years as an MP.

He has seen his share of destruction, from Operation Just Cause in Panama, to Hurricane Hugo in the Virgin Islands.

After the Rangers and Special Forces, MP units are the most deployable in the military, and Bennett bears the responsibilities of those missions firsthand.

"The men mean everything to me. This job means everything to me," Bennett said. "As an MP, I take a lot of heat. Some soldiers just don't understand what I do. They think all I do is write tickets. They're wrong."

Bennett

Bennett is one of 350 active duty MPs on Fort Benning. His day begins at 5 a.m., like many other soldiers. But what some don't know is that his weekends are also often spent on the job.

"MPs rarely get to enjoy the holiday weekends, like the rest of post," Bennett said. "Some of us work seven to nine days before we'll get a day off. You can't shut down law enforcement."

The hard work and excellence of the detachment has not gone unnoticed by Fort Benning, or the nation for that matter.

In only its first year as a separate unit, the detachment was selected as the top Training and Doctrine Command military police force in the Army this year. Soldiers were given the Brig. Gen. David H. Stem Memorial Award for their excellence Sept. 6.

"The Fort Benning police force undergoes more pressure and responsibility than any other Army police force in the country," said Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, commander of MP activity.

"They are controlling protests, providing security for world leaders, assisting troops and busting criminals. They deserve our respect."

Respect may not come easy, but the responsibilities of MPs continue to grow by leaps and bounds.

The DoD has ordered all three active duty MP units on post to convert to a deployable status this year.

Many MPs must be ready to deploy with troops within 48 hours.

"Our primary mission is to deploy in two- and three-man teams," Bennett said. "We've already sent teams to Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. We'll be sending more."

The responsibility of world missions is nothing new for Bennett. He has been a part of a deployable MP unit for most of his career.

"The units will deploy in their specialized tasks, riot control, accident investigations, criminal investigations, and any other combat support role deemed necessary," Bennett said. "Our soldiers are ready for the challenge."

> "I realize now, more than ever, the importance of my specialized training."
> Sgt. Anthony Foxworth
> Military Police

One of those soldiers is 23-year-old Sgt. Anthony Foxworth. In his four years as an MP, he has specialized in vehicle and traffic investigations. One of his many accomplishments includes investigating and arresting a wanted felon and cocaine trafficker on Highway 280 this summer.

"I realize now more than ever the importance of my specialized training," Foxworth said. "I could very well be using it in combat support."

MP units have already been assigned humvees, radios, global positioning systems and all of the standard deployable equipment, Bennett said.

"Within a few years, the law enforcement responsibilities of MPs will be phased out all together," Bennett said. "Soldiers will begin to see more civilian police on post as MPs focus on combat support and force protecton."

And by the looks of things, the force is ready.

"We have the skills and the dedication, as well as the experience, Bennett said. "That is where we need to be."

Gallery owners give painting to post

Mark Lupo, owner of Thomas Kinkade Gallery, presents the painting.

'Light of Freedom' at Infantry Hall

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

"The Light of Freedom" now shines in Infantry Hall for all to see.

Mark and Elaine Lupo, owners of the Thomas Kinkade gallery in Columbus, presented a copy of Kinkade's limited edition canvas lithograph, "The Light of Freedom," to Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton Monday. The painting depicts an American flag against the New York City skyline.

Mark Lupo said, artist Thomas Kinkade was so moved by the events of Sept. 11, 2001, that he secluded himself the next day and painted for three straight days. The resulting painting was originally made into 2 million paper copies that were sold to raise money for the Salvation Army. When the 2,950 copies of the lithograph were released in February, they sold out quickly, Lupo said. The original of 'The Light of Freedom' will be flown to Columbus Sept. 27 and will be displayed in the gallery over the weekend.

"This painting is filled with Kinkade's passion and love of his country," Lupo said. "I believe that this canvas belongs out here."

Eaton accepted the gift on behalf of Fort Benning and The Infantry Center.

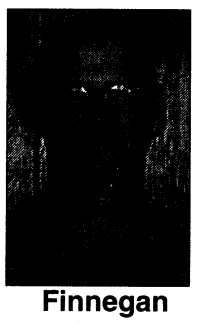
"We are truly grateful for this completely unexpected gift," he said. "It is a touching contribution to this installation."

Eaton spoke about the impact of the events of Sept. 11, 2001, and the fact that many people will remember different things about the tragedy.

He pointed to a spot on the painting where a Mariott Hotel at the base of the World Trade Towers would have stood. Eaton and his wife stayed at that hotel several times when they visited the city.

"It will take a while for all of us to get past this," he said. "The military is working aggressively to do our part."

New provost marshal comes home to Benning



Improvements to continue on ACPs

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

There's a new marshal in town, and he has been on the job since Aug. 1.

Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, Fort Benning's new provost marshal, brings his years of experience in the Army as a military police officer and much more.

"He's a great asset to Fort Benning. He comes with a lot of experience and is working and continuing to better the community at every opportunity," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

Finnegan

Finnegan has worn many hats in the Army. Enlisting at the age of 17 in 1969, too young to be an MP, he started out his career as an infantryman. Then he switched to MP, and served as an investigator, drill sergeant and recruiter. He was inducted into the Sergeant Morales Club and made sergeant first class in his 10 years as enlisted.

After that, he went through Officer Candidate School and was commissioned as a Field Artillery second lieutenant in 1980. He served as a fire direction officer and battery executive officer.

Two years later he branch transferred to the Military Police Corps, where he has stayed, serving in many different capacities including chief of Special Operation Branch and Defense Nuclear Agency.

"Doing all the different positions gives me a different perspective on the Army," Finnegan said.

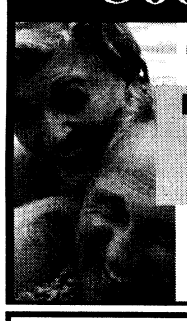
"I've enjoyed all those times, but it always made me want to go back to being an MP. The MP corps is the best branch in the Army. I always come back to it because it has the best soldiers, and they are a cut above the rest because of their sense of responsibility and duty."

The standard that Finnegan sets for the MP corps holds true with Fort Benning's own MPs.

"We have a great group of very professional soldiers and subordinate leaders, which make sure our law enforcement and force protection missions are done."

Finnegan is continuing the strong partnership with the surrounding communities and exchange of information between civilian and military departments to help reduce crime and terrorism threats.

"He's already noted as a key player in the tricommunity by its own members," Torres said.



The surrounding areas may be important, but it's the post that sits among the highest priorities.

"The largest long-term challenge we face is the build up of force protection," Finnegan said. "We will continue to do post improvement in force protection and access control points during next 18 months to two years with more permanent structures to better handle the flow of traffic, and continue to upgrade and secure critical and vulnerable areas."

Finnegan will protect the post and the surrounding areas because it truly is a homecoming for him.

"I lived on Main Post as a child, when my dad was a battalion commander here," he said. "It's fitting that I've come back to finish my career here.

Post: Remembers victims of Sept. 11, 2001

Eaton said.

"There was an attack on the nation unlike any other attack," Eaton said, calling it a low-tech, high-concept attack by a faceless organization. "And now the nation is in what promises to be a long fight."

Eaton said his message to Americans is this is the time to be prepared, to lose weight if necessary, to know how to fire a weapon accurately and to know first aid in order to save your neighbor's life.

"It is time for America to get on a war footing," Eaton said, telling the 7,000 troops on Sand Hill they represented the point of the spear.

Fort Benning officials planned three days of remembrance activities designed to ease the horror of the aftermath of the attacks and to honor a nation at war and soldiers dying in defense of freedom.

Those events included an Infantry Band concert on the lawn of Riverside Monday and a remembrance service in Marshall Auditorium Tuesday.

"We will always remember those who died," Eaton said Tuesday, "but the time for national mourning is over, and it is time to dedicate some action downstream."

"It is important to remember," Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell, U.S. Army Infantry Center chaplain, said Tuesday.

"There are images we can't forget, but we need to focus our remembrance on the good things that have happened since 9-11.

Lori Egan

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton speaks to the crowd during the Wednesday morning observance on York Field.

"In some sense, 9-11 was the worst of times, but it also brought out the best in many people," Hartsell said. "People ask me and other clergymen 'where was God when our world exploded?'

"He was in the people who were caring and serving and loving ... the firemen running up the staircases when everyone else was running down.

"God was in all four aircraft. He was in the Pentagon.

"He was with the victims.

"He was present in the tragedy."

"Last year we were all in too much shock to appreciate the enormity of what happened," said Lt. Col. E.J. Herold who was the post deputy chief of staff at the time of the attacks.

"Now there is a sense of firm resolve.

"These anniversary events allow us the opportunity to reflect on what these losses mean to all of us, and to steel our resolve not to be broken," Herold said.

Sept. 11 was designated Patriot Day by President George W. Bush and Congress and the nation observed a moment of silence in honor of those who died in the terrorist attack.

According to a proclamation signed by Eaton, Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters and Phenix City Mayor Sonny Coulter, observance of Patriot Day stands as a warning to those who intended to harm the nation that they should never again underestimate the strength, and resolve of the nation and the country will not be weakened by intimidation, fear or deadly acts of terror.

Residents of McGraw Manor gathered on Patriot Day to remember the tragedy a year ago.

Susan McGovern and Monica Portia organized the event because it was the right thing to do, they said.

"This was the biggest tragedy we've seen," said Monica Portia.

"We wanted to encourage those who might have to go and fight," said Susan McGovern.

"We won't forget."

patriotism) tonight is a testimony to the greatness and the resilience of this nation. We've proven we can take a shot, get angry and move on," Eaton said.

While the Infantry Band played traditional patriotic marches and classic show tunes, Fort Benning residents, decked in red, white and blue, picnicked on the ground or munched pizza by the slice, sold by Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers. Children lined up to get their faces painted and play putt-putt or hula hoop.

"It's fun," said Daniel McIntyre, 11, as the crowd finished singing God Bless America with a standing ovation to the band. "It's a celebration."

Daniel's mother, Kathy, said the concert was a positive experience for her children, who still worry about the possibility of another terrorist attack.

"I tell them, 'I can't say it'll never happen again, but I can assure you we'll do everything we can to keep you safe,'" she said. "They needed to see this, that people come together in bad times and good times. I want them to see that people are not staying at home and hiding in their houses. They're coming together as a memorial to the lives lost, sure. But also to say that we're strong and we're moving on."

Post dedicates OCS barracks

Post honors war hero with building

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Fort Benning honored a soldier who personified "leave no man behind" during a barracks dedication at Officer Candidate School Sept. 6.

Maj. Kern Dunagan was the commanding officer of A Company, 1st Battalion, 46th Infantry Regiment, during a battle near Quang Tin province May 13-14, 1969. Dunagan earned the Medal of Honor for conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity in action at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty, according to the citation.

Dunagan would not leave his men, behind during the battle. who saw him get wounded three times.

"It's a great honor to dedicate the barracks to a man who was a leader of character and had no equal," said Lt. Col. Daniel Kessler, battalion commander. "He served 28 years in the Army with two tours in Vietnam. He fought our nation's wars fearlessly."

During the battle near the Quang Tin province, Dunagan was leading an attack to relieve pressure on the battalion's forward support base when his company suddenly came under intense fire from a well-entrenched enemy battalion.

Despite continuous hostile fire from a superior force, Dunagan repeatedly and fearlessly moved around in order to locate the enemy positions.

During the evening, he was seriously wounded in a mortar attack but refused to leave and continued to supervise the evacuation of the dead and wounded.

Later on, Dunagan was seriously wounded for a second time while looking for critically wounded men. Dunagan rescued many men who were wounded despite his injuries.

Before being evacuated, Dunagan made sure all of his wounded men had received treatment and were removed from the area.

Dunagan's actions were a great inspiration to his men and were directly responsible for saving the lives of many of his soldiers.

"We're honoring a great soldier here," said Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, post commander.

Plan: Pays for long-term care

between the two companies.

"I think it may be a very good deal," said Ann Pratcher, manager, Financial Readiness Program.

"I think people need to research and compare before they commit. I think they need to seriously consider a long-term care plan as part of their total financial plan for their life."

She said everyone needs to remember Medicare and Tricare only cover limited amounts of long-term care costs.

Some people may look at their net worth and figure it is large enough that they can pay for the care themselves.

"I'm not convinced that that is a good bet because long-term care can be very costly, and most people over 65 will probably require some type of long-term care for one to five years," Pratcher said.

Elwin E. Gilchrist, Office of Infantry Proponency, agrees and plans to buy a policy.

"Most people are going to need long-term care in the future, and with my long-term medical problems, it is definitely a fact I will need it," Gilchrist said. The policy made the other policies he investigated pale in comparison, he said. "I think the plan provides a lot of services for the dollar," Gilchrist said.

In-home care availability, inflation protection, care coordination services for qualified relatives of employees, and waiver of premium while receiving benefits are some of the plan's features that attracted him, he said.

The program features group premiums, coverage for informal health care provided by friends or family members, international benefits and is guaranteed renewable, too.

Regardless of the bells and whistles, people should understand the long-term care issue is serious, Gilchrist said.

"People need to realize that someone has to pay these costs," he said. "If you don't have insurance to cover the costs, you are going to wind up destitute, living in a facility paid for by the state — more of my tax dollars at work." It is because of taxes, he said, the government will not socialize long-term care.

"The average taxpayer is not going to want to see additional money taken out of their paychecks to cover the costs," Gilchrist said. "We all know that if that is done, the government will shortly start looking at the money as a source of paying bills just like they are now doing with Social Security."

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

1st Lt. Christopher D. Pike
1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery

Maj. Eric Kail

1st Battalion 10th Field Artillery goes to work.

The 3rd Brigade completed its most challenging training event in recent memory with the entire brigade conducting an offensive live fire exercise.

At the heart of this event was Lt. Col. John Harding's 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Battalion, which was tasked to provide responsive and accurate fire support for forces on the move. This may seem easy to do, but it takes a well-trained and combat ready artillery unit to make it happen. Fortunately for Col. Daniel Allyn, his 3rd Brigade has the best artillerymen in the Army at their disposal who were more than ready for the test.

The 1st Bn., 10th FA was required to execute several types of artillery missions to facilitate reaching the brigade's objectives during the LFX that included an artillery raid, high explosive suppression, smoke, illumination and a simulated artillery emplaced minefield. For artillery soldiers, there is nothing better than putting rounds down range and this LFX gave them plenty of opportunities to do just that with over 900 rounds of 155 mm ammunition.

Because of the complexity and scale of the LFX, it required a significant amount of preparation and organization. It took combined effort from everyone to ensure that a mission like this was executed to the highest standards. The battalion staff was charged with producing a Field Artillery Support Plan of the utmost quality detailing the LFX's execution plan and batteries requirements. In turn, the batteries took this FASP and developed its training focus to prepare its men for battle. Once these tasks were completed, the next step was to rehearse the plan's implementation in the form of rock drills. These drills are simulations in a controlled environment that represent a unit actions on the battlefield to ensure that key personnel can solve potential problems before they manifest for real.

Although a unit can prepare endlessly for missions, it can't plan for the weather, and as always seems to happen during field problems, Mother Nature had her own plans for our training. She whipped up the worst sand storm that we had seen in five months. The winds reached 50 mph during the day and could only be described as standing in front of a hair dryer turned on high while someone threw sand in your face as hard as they could. The 120 plus degree temperatures ensured that we would not soon forget desert life. However, no matter what conditions our soldiers were faced with, they still maintained their mission focus and executed everything to perfection.

Just like the size of the operation, everything else involved with this event was done to a larger degree. The movement of our batteries to the initial tactical assembly area was more than 75 kilometers, and for Headquarters and Headquarters Battery it was done at night using night vision devices. After all the batteries occupied their assembly areas, the battalion put on its game face and prepared to show just how good it is at shooting artillery rounds. The day prior to the LFX our battalion conducted a limited live fire rehearsal to ensure that there wouldn't be any problems for us or the maneuver units. However, when the time came to execute the brigade's LFX, the batteries of our battalion were more than ready to do what they do best, "Unleash Hell."

The morning twilight was shedding its first light when the ground began to rumble with the movement of hundreds of vehicles crossing the desert as units moved into their positions. When the time came to initiate the LFX, the sounds of cannons echoed across the battlefield as the 1st Bn., 10th FA, sprung into action, and in an instant the ground erupted with explosion that could be felt for miles. For the next few hours, the battalion's batteries moved with the their maneuver brethren providing every fire support need they had with timely and accurate fires.

Two classes team up for MOUT exercise

Simmunitions give training dose of reality

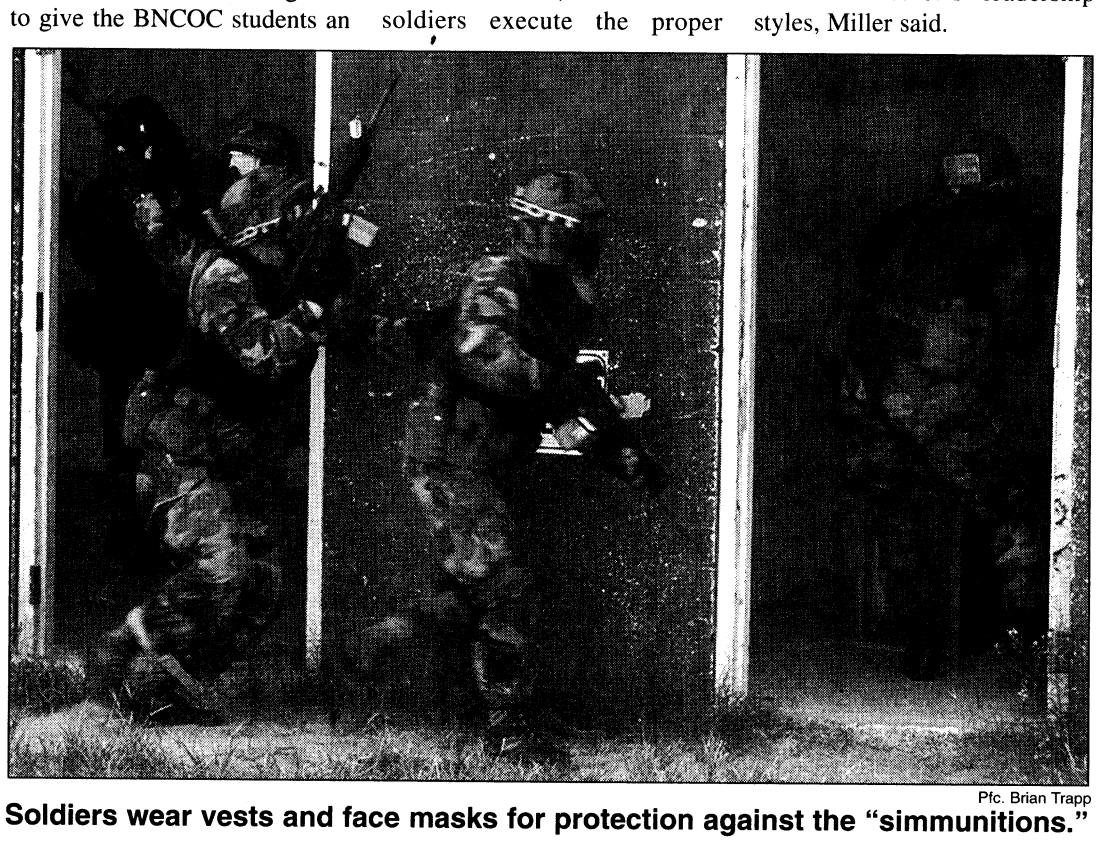
Training is a given at the Home of the Infantry. But now there is a twist.

NCOs acted as second lieutenants' squad leaders, and the training involved used "simmunitions" instead of the traditional MILES equipment. When the Basic NCO Course students joined with Infantry Officers Basic Course class 4-02 for an exercise at the McKenna Military Operations in Urbanized Terrain site Friday.

The exercise was integrated to give the BNCOC students an opportunity to do what they had been taught and find out what it is like to lead a group of relatively new soldiers, and the lieutenants gained experience with squad leaders, said Capt. Jody Miller, B Company commander, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"I think putting (the two classes together) was great," said Capt. Taylor Jordan, platoon trainer.

The "simmunitions," also known as simulated rounds, enhanced the training's realism, Miller said.



"Simmunitions sting when you get hit, so soldiers aren't willing to clear rooms 'John Wayne' style," Miller said. "Soldiers tend to take more risks with MILES because it is only a laser. However, with simms soldiers execute the proper techniques of room clearing so they don't get hit with a bullet."

"Simmunitions" are soap bullets that disintegrate on impact, similiar to paint balls, and are visible when fired, said 2nd Lt. Kristian Leibfarth who participated in the training.

"When the round is fired you can see something real coming at you," he said.

"This was much better than using MILES," Leibfarth said. "The gear is lighter and less cumbersome and actually works.

Miller said working with "simmunitions" allowed the trainers to reinforce MOUT doctrine and to effectively maneuver squads. Another advantage putting the two classes together for training is both classes gained knowledge about the other's leadership styles, Miller said.

Languages of comrades in battle may be different, but one trait is always the same — blood. With that in mind, government employees from South America used skills they learned from the medical operations course at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation during a training exercise Monday.

Seventeen Chilean soldiers and seven Colombian policemen were given 20 minutes to evaluate, prioritize and treat victims during a mass casualty exercise while under simulated enemy fire.

"We try to make this as realistic as possible for them," said Staff Sgt. Jorge Borboa, course NCOIC.

Each student had a lane with four casualties to evaluate. Injuries of the victims ranged anywhere from an open fracture to a sucking chest wound.

"Someone in pain is speaking a universal language," said Staff Sgt. Jovanni Reyes, instructor at the institute.

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Dummy arms were used for the IVs.

All the casualties' wounds were visible, so the language barrier between the students speaking Spanish and the victims speaking English was pretty much nonexistent, Borboa said.

"The situation and scenarios were a surprise," said Cpl. Miguel Espinoza, Chilean soldier. "My instructor told me to relax and complete all the requirements to standard.

"I thought the training was excellent."

The students were taught to treat and stabilize the casualties according to triage, providing the most medical treatment to casualties with the highest possibility for survival.

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Espinoza dives to cover the patient from a blast.

"It's doing the most good for those with the best survivability rate," Borboa said.

Expectations to pass the course are for the students to apply the concepts learned in a battlefield environment, said Capt. Daniel Fuentes, Chilean general surgeon. They need to know how to treat amputations, fractures, insert intravenous fluids and protect the sick and wounded from enemy fire.

The training, however, doesn't stop when the students fly back to their homeland Saturday.

Students will provide their fellow countrymen with knowledge they learned at WHINSEC to train other government agencies within their country, Reyes said.

"I'll be able to provide instructions to my soldiers the way I've been instructed here," Espinoza said.

Fuentes said the training went well.

"I don't see any problems of them remembering the things they have learned here," Fuentes said.

Exercise refines medical procedures

Field hospital works to build upon readiness

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

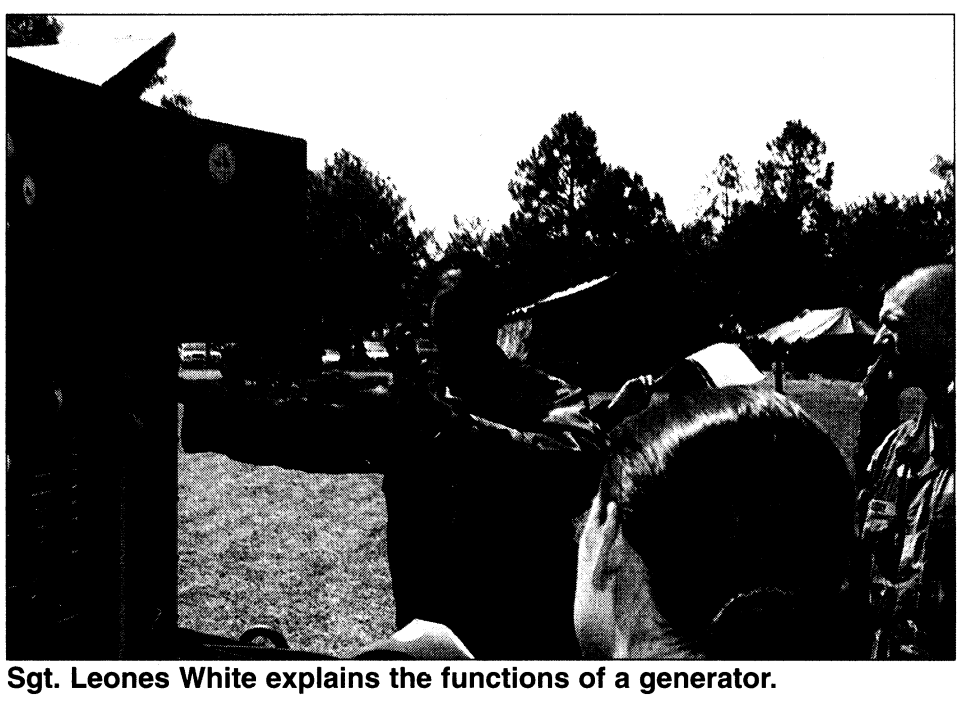
The 14th Field Hospital began a field training exercise in front of Martin Army Community Hospital Tuesday.

The purpose of the exercise is to prepare soldiers for an annual requirement for deployment readiness.

"We have to ensure soldiers are trained and have the knowledge necessary to operate a field hospital," said Sgt. 1st Class Yvonne Hicks, chief ward master for 14th Field Hospital. "It helps for a war-time situation."



It's the beginning of the crawl, walk, run phase of training, said Lt. Col. Glenn Iacovetta. 14th Field Hospital commander. This exercise is in the crawl phase of readiness.

"The more we do this at a basic level, the better prepared our soldiers will be if and when they are called upon to execute," Iacovetta said.

Iacovetta took command of the unit June 7, which had tactical Standard Operational Procedures more than two-years old, he said.

"We need to validate our SOP," Iacovetta said. "The goal is to have a new tactical SOP by the end of October."

The better the soldiers follow the SOP, the better they are going to be able to provide the medical support to the war fighters, said Capt. Jeff Hogue, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 14th Field Hospital.

Sgt. Leones White explains the functions of a generator.

The exercise is to refine and define plans of operation to increase survivability rates, Hicks said.

"It maintains individual and collective skills," Iacovetta said.

After setting up the tents, soldiers receive classes on nuclear, biological and chemical weapons, individual readiness training and battlefield situations.

"We need to know that the soldiers can take care of patients and secure the perimeter," Hicks said.

For right now, the 14th Field Hospital exercise is supported by MACH soldiers, but during deployment the Professional Officers Filler System, PROFIS, assigns 420 soldiers to the 14th Field Hospital, Hogue said. Soldiers from the MACH and other units in the Southeast region Medical Command join together to make up the unit when it deploys.

"We couldn't have done this exercise by ourselves," Iacovetta said. "This training is a joint effort."

Everybody is working together, said Spc. Colin Farrell, 14th Field Hospital.

"We do this stuff all the time," Farrell said. "Going to the field is a morale booster for us."

The planning, preparation and training the MACH provided to 14th Field Hospital was tantamount to the performance and outcome of the mission, Iacovetta said.

Advocates aid abused, neglected

CASA program volunteers help children in need

Sometimes it takes a village to raise a child.

Each year, thousands of children in Georgia, and even more nation-wide, become victims of abuse or neglect. A large number of them are taken from their homes and placed in the juvenile justice and foster care systems. Sometimes, these children get "lost."

Court Appointed Special Advocates serve as the eyes and ears of the juvenile justice system. CASAs are volunteers who are trained to provide individualized advocacy for children. CASA is a national program with more than 60,000 volunteers.

"The Chattahoochee CASA program was partially brought about by the efforts of a military spouse," said Ken Washington, CASA program director. "The first ten volunteers were trained and sworn in November 1997 and served a total of 18 children."

CASA, a program of the Urban League of Greater Columbus, has grown to 45 active volunteers serving in the best interests of more than 200 children in the area. Volunteers undergo criminal background checks and 40 hours of training before they are sworn in by a family court judge.

Washington, who retired from the Army 10 years ago after serving as first sergeant in 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, draws from his personal experiences in administering the program.

"I was a product of the system, the informal system," he said. "My mother died when I was young."

Washington and his nine siblings were raised by various aunts and uncles. He credits that "village" for getting him where he is today.

"It can hurt when you split siblings up," he said.

Women pledge sorority

Group reflects military background

Staff Sgt. Kathy Johnson was surfing the Internet when someone sent her a message asking if she had seen the Sigma Phi Psi Web site.

"I didn't even know who the person was," Johnson said.

Johnson, a licensed practical nurse and wardmaster of the recovery room at Martin Army Community Hospital, is a dedicated women's advocate, especially military women.

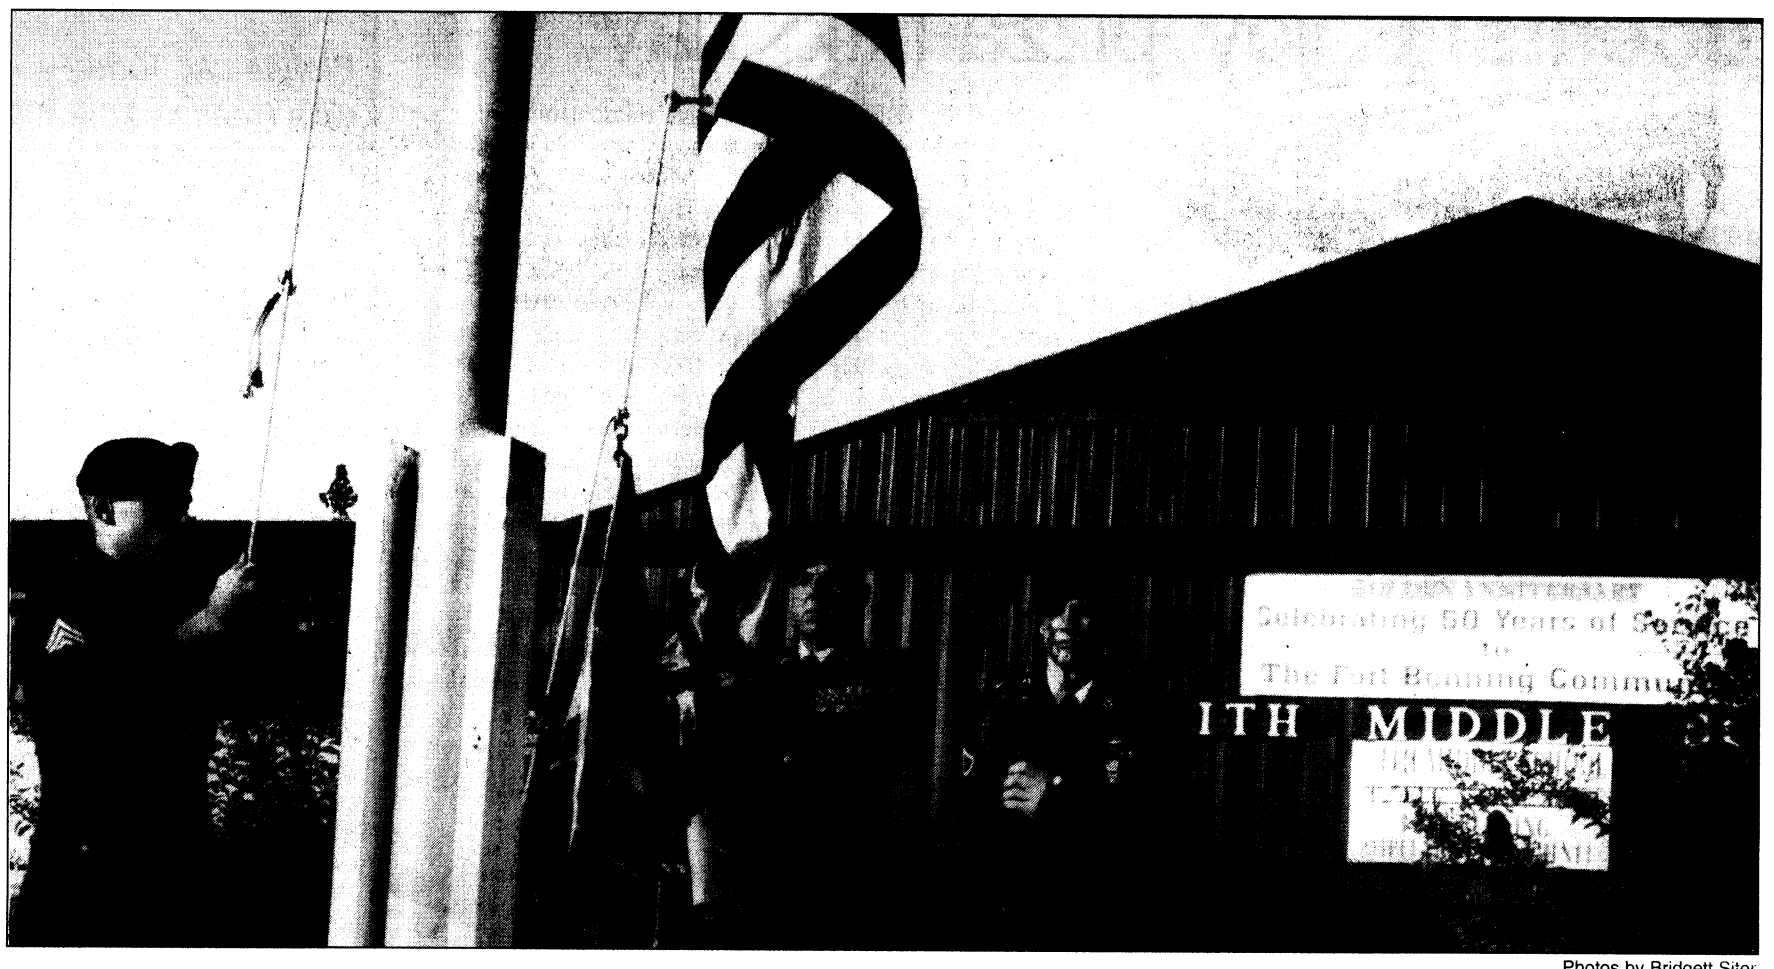
"I never gave much thought to joining a sorority," Johnson said. "I was never in one place long enough to join one, and I had heard horror stories about them."

The Sigma Phi Psi sorority was the brainchild of a group of military women in Texas. The sorority, founded in February 2000 is open to all women who have served in the U.S. Armed Forces.

Johnson sent in her application to become part of the first group of pledges on Fort Benning. Her essay, and the questions she posed, got the attention of the group's leadership. Johnson became one of the "Enlightened Eight," as the sorority founders are called, at the first induction ceremony in Houston in 2001.

"Our motto, sui generis, reflects what we are as military women," Johnson said. "We're 'one of a kind,' unique."

The sorority sisters rely heavily on their Web site to spread the news about the group.



"I was on the Internet looking for information for Women's History Month and clicked on the link," said Capt. Rimani Kelsey, a family practice physician at MACH.

Kelsey thought that the sorority offered an experience she could grow from and that the organization could grow from her as well.

"This has opened doors to opportunities that I wouldn't

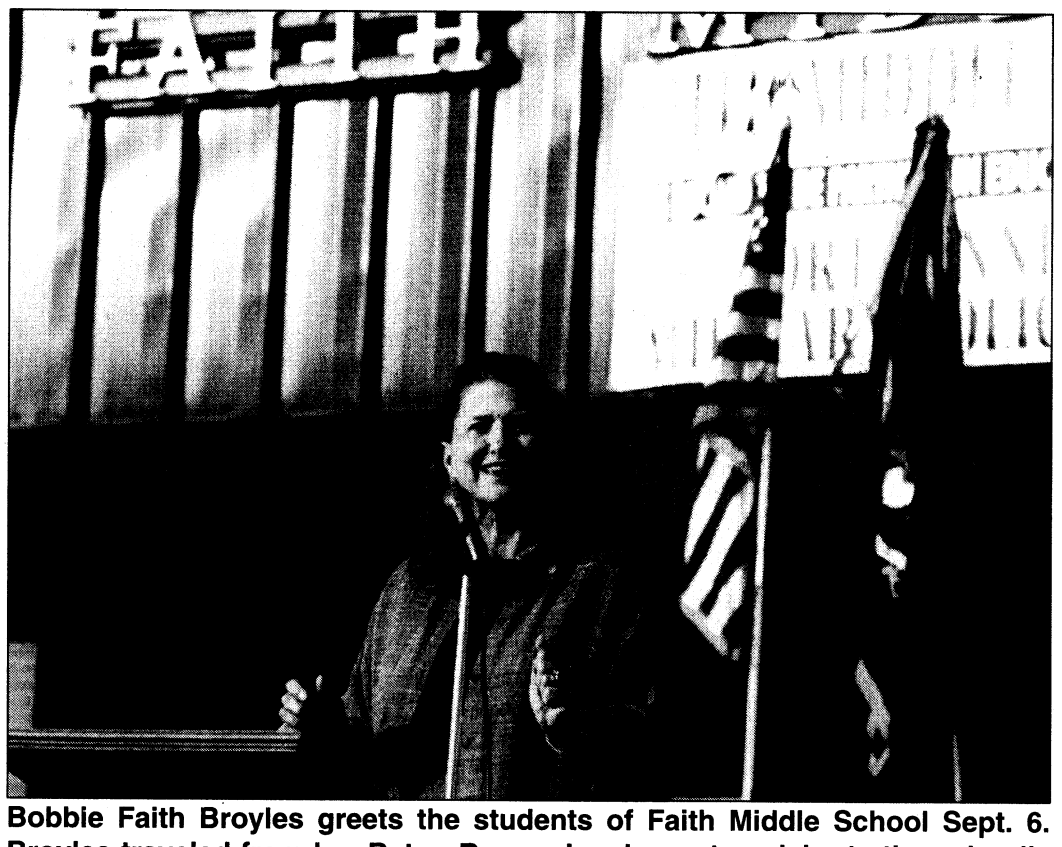
The Falcon has flown. In its place stands the Warrior Bear.

Faith Middle School, formerly known as the Home of the Falcons, changed its mascot in a 50th anniversary dedication ceremony Sept. 6.

The new mascot is a derivative of the units Lt. Col. Don C. Faith was commanding at the time of his death in Korea, Nov. 30, 1950: the 1st Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment's "Warriors," and elements of the 31st Infantry Regiment's "Polar Bears." The school is named in Faith's honor.



"It's a fitting and timely tribute to Colonel Faith and the men who fought and died for our freedom," said Dr. Gregg Mowen, Faith's principal. "This is something the students wanted because they understand and appreciate the sacrifices our veterans have made, and they're very aware that their own parents may one day have to make that kind of sacrifice. It's their way of saying thank you."

The students and faculty had the opportunity to say thank you in person Sept. 5, when they honored Korean War veterans at a reception at the Officers' Club.

Twenty veterans of the 32nd and 31st were presented lapel pins from the Korean War Commemoration Committee and medals of appreciation from the government of Korea, presented by Eugene Chin Yu.

"Young American men and women fought and died on Korean soil for people they didn't even know. It's time we Koreans who became American citizens to express our love for the people who made it possible for us to be here in America," Chin Yu said. "They call the Korean War 'The Forgotten War,' but

Children learn value of hard work

Talk to adults from generations past and they will likely say children these days just don't know the meaning of hard work.

The youth of today may very well be obsessed with instant gratification, but Dexter Elementary School is hoping its new social studies curriculum will teach kids the value of a hard days work.

"Children only see the end result of work," said Angie O'Bryan, Dexter Elementary School first-grade teacher. "They learn valuable lessons when they see the skills it takes to produce their favorite things in life, like toys or delicious foods."

Learning the skills of various employees around the community is the aim of the Fort Benning school system's new social studies curriculum this school year.

The standards include:

CASA: Needs more volunteers

Barbara Shehane, the CASA volunteer coordinator, tries to match cases with CASAs. The CASAs get involved with children within the first few days and provide support during the time the child is in the system up until adoption.

"Sometimes the best thing for the child is to remain in foster care," Shehane said. "But there are always lots of emotional tears in the courtroom when kids are placed back in a family that has worked through its problems."

"Folks will reveal things to us as CASA volunteers that they won't tell the police or even the social workers," he said.

CASAs use that information to make recommendations to the judge about what placement is in the best interest of the child. Their goal is to reduce the time a child spends in foster care.

Shehane and assistant volunteer coordinator Regina Armstrong recently conducted a home assessment for a woman living on Fort Benning. The grandmother is trying to obtain custody of her grandchild. The parental rights of the mother are being terminated by a family court in Indiana.

"It was a favorable visit," Shehane said. "We expect that the process will be finished within four to six weeks." The process is easier when dealing with family adoptions.

"We do see a lot of cases involving children at Fort Benning," said Armstrong, wife of Staff Sgt. Louis Armstrong. She has spent a number of years volunteering with the Red Cross and Army Emergency Relief helping military families.

"Unfortunately, a lot of the military cases could be prevented with just a little education," Armstrong said.

The Chattahoochee CASA program is expanding and expects to add five counties to the area it serves. To keep up with that expansion, CASA continually recruits new volunteers.

"We have our largest number of volunteers for the training that begins Saturday," Shehane said. "These 18 will increase our numbers by one-third." Fort Benning residents Ronald Vinson and Autumn Cyler have submitted their applications for the CASA volunteer training.

Cyler, a social worker learned about the program years ago in Pennsylvania while working with the family courts there.

"I'm excited about being involved, and I'm glad to know that the program also helps children on post," Cyler said. "I love working with children."

Ronald Vinson is new in the area and looking for opportunities where he could make a difference and devote his time to children.

"I'm impressed at the level of involvement of the volunteers and the extent of their duties," Vinson said.

Vinson, a trained certified electronics technician and former family child care provider, is anxious to start training.

"I hope that I can help change the system for the better to provide the total assistance that these children need," he said. The CASA program is greatly in need of a volunteer who signs.

"These standards are designed to get kids thinking about their futures and what they may want to contribute to society," said Janie Nesmith, curriculum director for Fort Benning schools. "It's wonderful to see them so interested in the outside world beyond the classroom."

The first step in taking kids beyond the classroom started with a field trip into the hot kitchen of the Fort Benning Little Caesar's Sept. 5.

Children seemed to have a blast as they learned firsthand how to prep the dough, choose the toppings, and create their very own pizza, one step at a time.

"Students learned that the food they see on their plates is not instant," said Kelli Accord, mother of a first-grader. "They learned the skills that go with each pizza. I think they appreciate it more now."

Both first grade classes, accompanied by O'Bryan and another first-grade teacher, Jeanie Anderson, as well as a handful of parents, shadowed employees for the entire production process.

"I liked flouring the dough and putting the cheese on," J.T. Accord said. "I especially liked seeing the cheese melt in the oven."

"I didn't realize it took so long to make one pizza," Toby Brummett said.

"I think it is the best pizza I've ever had because I know how to cook it."

The field trip to Little Caesar's is just one out of several activities that will get Dexter children thinking about the working world around them this school year. A career day was also planned that allowed children to dress up in the career of their choice. Students were then asked to write a book depicting their chosen professions.

"This is the first time we've centered the social studies program on careers and the benefits of working in the community," O'Bryan said. "The children are really starting to see that hard work can bring them what they want."

Sorority: Receives 12 pledges have sought out otherwise because of my busy job," Kelsey said.

Kelsey, who will depart Fort Benning next summer, plans to start a Sigma chapter wherever she goes next.

"The word will get out," she said. "Eventually, we will have sisters at every post."

The sorority platform emphasizes leadership, scholastic achievement, philanthropy, community service and social awareness. The Alpha Nu chapter, founded by Johnson, supports veterans in the area through their community service projects.

Master Sgt. Pat Liddell, a hospital administrator at Martin Army Community Hospital, will retire at the end of the year after 26 years in the Army.

"I always wanted to join a sorority," she said. "I kept telling Kathy (Johnson) to remind me to sign up."

Liddell pledged this year with 12 other women.

"Pledging takes a lot of teamwork and trust," Liddell said. "With our sorority, you know that you can trust the leadership."

Johnson also volunteers her time as a field representative for Women in Military Service to America.

The WIMSA memorial was dedicated in 1997 to honor the more than 1.8 million women who have served in the defense of America throughout history.

"This memorial was funded entirely by donations," Johnson said. "It provides a way for women to stand up and be counted.

Johnson attended the dedication ceremony at Arlington National Cemetery in Virginia as the Fort Polk, La., representative, an experience she said was eye-opening. Women who are registered with WIMSA have unique opportunity to record their story.

"This memorial is a way to make sure that our legacy lives on," Johnson said. "We can be put into the database while we are still alive and tell our stories in our own words."

Bridgett Siter

Retired Master Sgt. Lee O'Shaughnessy visits with students at Faith Middle School Sept. 6.

'Frozen Chosin' member recounts Korean battle

Veterans visit school named for leader

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A poor memory can be a merciful thing. Retired Master Sgt. Lee O'Shaughnessy remembers the temperature — 35 degrees below zero; the uniform — regular old fatigues, nothing for cold weather; and the man who led from the front — Lt. Col. Don C. Faith.

He shared these stories with the students and faculty of Faith Middle School Sept. 6, during the school's 50th anniversary celebration.

But much of what happened during the five-day Battle at the Chosin Reservoir remains a blur, O'Shaughnessy said. Thankfully.

"The first few weeks afterward I was in the hospital, with about 40 guys in my ward," he recalled. "It was bad. Everybody had nightmares every night. There were a lot of battles fought in that ward after dark.

"But that was 50 years ago. I don't dream about it anymore. I couldn't even think up a good story for you."

O'Shaughnessy was one of only 14 survivors of nearly 200 soldiers from A Company, 1st Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment.

A "buck private" from Michigan, he "didn't know enough to be scared" when his battalion and elements of the 31st Infantry Regiment were ambushed by Communist Chinese forces.

The battle that ensued was violent, O'Shaughnessy said, but surprisingly not bloody.

"When it's that cold out, you don't bleed," said O'Shaughnessy, who was awarded a Purple Heart for cold-weather injuries and a gunshot wound in his leg.

During the occasional lull in combat, weapons were fired every few minutes to keep them from freezing.

It's not known for sure how many soldiers lost their lives due to the cold — a "merciful death" compared to a brutal death at the hands of enemy forces, O'Shaughnessy said.

Surrounded and overrun 10 to one, the battalion lost more than 80 percent of its soldiers. Those who escaped the massacre walked across the icy reservoir to safety and have since been known as "The Frozen Chosin."

Survivors of the battle of the Chosin Reservoir and other Korean War veterans of the 32nd reunite periodically to honor their comrades and keep their stories alive for future generations. Friday's trek to Fort Benning was an opportunity to do just that.

"We all think the world of young people today. We admire them," O'Shaughnessy said. "Visiting with them made this whole trip worthwhile."

Faith: Honors veterans

I will never forget what you American veterans did for my family.

"General Douglas MaCarthur said, 'Old soldiers never die, they just fade away.' In the hearts and minds of the Korean people, those young men and women who fought for our cause will never fade away. They will remain forever young, vibrant and brave."

The 32nd Inf. Regt.'s 1st Battalion Honor Guard traveled from Fort Drum, N.Y., to take part in what Lt. Col. Robert Nye called a very special day.

"Here we have the past, present and future of our Army — heroes of the Korean War, soldiers representing the 32nd Infantry Regiment today and the students, the heroes of tomorrow," said Nye, the battalion commander. "We're honored to be a part of this event. Not a day goes by when we don't think of Colonel Faith and the legacy we represent as members of the 32nd."

Staff Sgt. Robert Hall, the guard's platoon sergeant, said the chance to honor the 32nd veterans was one "he just couldn't pass up."

"Meeting them and hearing their stories gives you a whole new appreciation for the battalion's history. Nothing I've done in nearly twenty years in the Army, and that includes Desert Storm, Kosovo and Haiti, compares to what they did over there," Hall said.

Veteran members of the 32nd had their turn at the podium Thursday night. They remembered their fallen comrades and Faith, the man they "would've followed anywhere."

Retired Col. Robert Jones removed his Korean War medal and presented it to Faith's daughter, Bobbie Faith Broyles.

"I'm not a veteran," Broyles said. "I don't feel I'm here to be honored. I just feel honored to be here. I want to say thank you, for your sacrifice. I believe if we fail to honor those of the past, we run the risk of devaluing human beings. We can't expect much of the soldiers of the future, unless we're willing to recognize the sacrifices of the soldiers of the past."

Legacy: Continues

"This is such a wonderful living testimony of peace and grace and gentle people," Broyles said of the school.

Broyles traveled from her home in Baton Rouge, La., to attend the anniversary, and along with it, the reunion of soldiers from the 1st Battalion, 32nd Infantry Regiment and the 31st Infantry Regiment, both of which her father was commanding at the time of his death.

Broyles came with a message to the students of Faith.

"Dad loved life. They tell me he played poker and polo and loved to have fun. But his greatest love was the infantry. He was a warrior. It's what he loved and what he wanted to do," she said. "He died doing what he loved to do, following his dream. Because of men like him, we live in a country where we have the opportunity to follow our dreams, too."

Her father loved the strategical and tactical challenges of his career, Broyles said. He trained for years for the relatively short periods of time on the battlefield.

"Much like students do," she said. "They have to study and work for many years to achieve what it is they want most out of life — to follow their dreams. It takes years of preparation."

Patrick Herold, a Faith eight-grader, studied long and hard to prepare for the anniversary celebration. Herold provided an overview of the history of the 32nd Inf. Reg. and Lt. Col. Faith.

"A lot of people don't know that Colonel Faith was a hero who was killed when he destroyed a roadblock with a pistol and a hand grenade while trying to evacuate the wounded," Herold said. He told the students about Faith's determination to join the Army despite early medical rejections.

Broyles said her father would be proud of "the caliber of students and staff" at the school named in his honor.

"I'm just blown away by it. I feel privileged to be associated with it in any way," she said.

Loyd teacher travels to Japan for workshop

Katherine Walker, right, presents a seminar on the importance of environmental education at the kindergarten level during a workshop in Shiozawa, Japan.

Students stay connected via Internet

Angie McPherson
Loyd Elementary School

Katherine Walker, a kindergarten teacher at Loyd Elementary School, attended the World School Network's Summer Environmental Workshop in Shiozawa, Japan, Aug. 1-8.

The workshop focused on developing projects to connect children worldwide on the Internet. The World School Network began in Japan in 1992 and has spread to a worldwide organization devoted to deepening learning and connecting the real experiences of children.

The theme for this year's workshop was "Connect with Nature, Connect with the World."

During the workshop, Walker presented a seminar on the importance of environmental education at the kindergarten level and was invited to visit a Japanese school where third-graders presented a production they had written about protecting their environment.

"The children in Japan have done a lot of research about the effects of pollution and pesticides on their food and the land around them," Walker said. "It was encouraging to learn that people on the other side of the world share the same concerns as we do and are doing so much to educate the children about these environmental issues."

As a result of this workshop, Loyd School will be conducting a World School Club this school year. Children will be linked via the Internet with children in Japan, France, Micronesia, the United Kingdom, Israel, South Africa, Vietnam and the rest of the United States. The projects for this year will focus on wetlands, food, culture and community.

Loyd students will be emphasizing literacy as they respond to reports from all over the world and create and report on their own projects from the Fort Benning area.

One highlight of the World School Network will be a World Symposium of children in February in Tokyo, Japan. The Loyd School children will share their environmental concerns and discoveries on a global scale with the symposium via a live teleconference.

Students ready for school

Loyd Elementary School

The new school year is well underway at Loyd Elementary School and the students seem happy to be back. They have settled into their new routines and are enjoying learning.

"It has been one of the smoothest openings of a new school year that I have ever experienced," said Loyd School Principal Angie McPherson.

Just to see what students are looking forward to learning and what they enjoy most about school, Laurie Nesbitt, educational technologist at Loyd, spoke to several students in various grade levels about their goals for the year and their favorite activities.

Here is what students had to say:

Katie Kinard, first-grader: I want to learn to read really, really big books.

Education reaffirms support of church

Church challenges leadership to enrich minds

Cathie Wampler
USAIC Chaplains Office

For many years, the month of September has been observed as Religious Education month throughout the United States Armed Forces.

Likewise, each year since 1935, the U.S. Catholic bishops have designated one Sunday in September as "Catechetical Sunday."

The bishops instituted this annual celebration to reaffirm their support for catechists and to challenge church leadership to continually improve and refine religious education efforts around the country.

The greatest challenges to religious educators today are the many secular distractions that compete for the time and attention of the people.

Not too many years ago, sports activities, social events and work schedules seldom interfered with Sunday school and religious education programs planned by the church.

Today the opposite is true for most everyone.

All too often, these distractions are excuses for people to avoid church services or religious education programs.

Religious education is the lifelong process by which a person develops a mature, faithful relationship with God the Father.

This process and the evolving relationship influence the choices one makes, the way one lives, the goals one sets and the values one embraces throughout their lifetime.

One's mind, energies and emotions are focused on the three elements of religious education: the message (in Christian faith, the gospel message that proclaims and teaches the word of Christ), worship, and service all within the context of community.

Religious education enriches the lives of individuals and families, thereby enriching and enhancing the community — building the kingdom of God.

Too many people think of Sunday school as being for children, or that Catholic catechesis ends with the Confirmation of a young teen-ager.

In almost all denominations, religious education programs continue through high school and adulthood. In the Catholic faith, Vatican II re-emphasized the importance of adult catechesis:

"Catechesis for adults, since it deals with persons who are capable of an adherence that is fully responsible, must be considered the chief form of catechesis," (General Catechetical Directory, Par. 20).

The Jewish, Protestant and Catholic religions place the responsibility of religious education for the child on the parent.

The 24 to 36 hours per year that children spend in Sunday school or religious education only serve to supplement and reinforce that which must be taught at home within the family.

Can parents be comfortable teaching children the intricacies of faith and church doctrine when they have little more than a third grade level of religious education themselves?

Can we as adults develop a mature relationship with a God we only know on a child's level?

Can we effectively profess and pass on a faith we have only understood as taught to us when an adolescent?

This year's theme, "Living for the Lord," is especially appropriate now. In light of world events we are forced to focus carefully upon our values and beliefs to get us through each day of our lives.

In the face of violence, we are challenged to trust in the creative love of God who has the power to "make all things new."

Teachers, parents, and faith communities "live for the Lord" in the ways they awaken, strengthen and encourage faith in others, and by giving living witness to their faith each and every day.

CHAPEL NOTES

Protestant Women of the Chapel — The PWOC meets weekly at 9:30 a.m. on Thursdays in Custer Terrace Chapel on Craig Drive. The theme for the new year is "Filled with the light of His glory." This year the ladies will focus on how God places treasures in jars of clay and uses them for his glory. The programs each week include a time of music and worship, fellowship and study, as well as the all-important refreshments. Childcare is provided.

For further information, please call Krista Moore at 323-0128.

TIC special service — TIC Chapel will have a special service at 10 a.m. Sept. 22 instead of the normal service times. Marquis Laughlin of Zion's Hope Ministry in Orlando will present the Book of The Revelation in its entirety from memory.

This unusual presentation by a trained and gifted actor will open up this mysterious book in a way never experienced by most people. The program is free and open to the public and a short reception will follow.

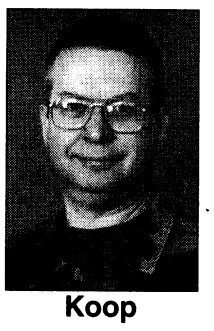
Catholic Women — The Catholic Women of the Chapel meet twice each month. They gather from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. on the first Friday of the month at the Martin Army Hospital Chapel. Mass is celebrated along with a special program.

They also meet from 7 to 9 p.m. the third Monday of the month at the Infantry Center Chapel Annex.

Potluck Dinner — The Fort Benning Catholic Community will welcome all new members of the Congregation at a Bilingual Mass and Potluck dinner Sept. 22. The celebration will include fellowship, games and an opportunity to learn about and register for parish programs. Mass will begin at 12:30 p.m. at Uchee Creek Recreation Center Lodge. Each family is asked to bring a salad or desert to share.

For more information, call the Chapel at 545-1452.

Rules help couples avoid conflicts



Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

You can protect your marriage through simple strategies that minimize potential marital conflict. Here are some strategies.

Anticipate problems. Conflict occurs during times of stress, when we are not at our best, and when we are tired. No one is perfect, except God.

Take responsibility for your behavior. Be polite and respectful even when your spouse isn't. Don't take accusations and criticisms personally.

Reinforce your mate's attempts to communicate. Positive reinforcement wins over negativity.

Koop

Use the six ground rules for conflict resolution. First, take a time out when you sense the problem is escalating. Stay in control as a couple.

Second, use the speaker-listener technique. "Let everyone be quick to listen, slow to speak, and slow to anger," (James 1:19).

Third, thoroughly discuss the problem before attempting to solve the problem. "It one gives answer before hearing, it is folly and shame," (Proverbs 18:13).

Fourth, talk when you have the time. Ask, "Is this a good time to talk?" or "Can I have forty minutes of your time?"

Fifth, meet regularly as a couple to discuss issues. Don't let problems pile up.

Sixth, take time to have fun, to deepen your friendship, to pamper each other and to develop your spirituality.

These strategies and ground rules work. Research has proven them to be effective ways for couples to handle conflicts and to "fight" fair. Will you agree to use them in your marriage?

Would you like to make your marriage better? Free counseling and support are available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760, or e-mail koopr@benning.army.mil.

Deadly disease poses risk to wildlife

Chronic Wasting Disease spotted in Midwest

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Georgia hunters need to be aware of a disease that is killing hundreds of deer in the Midwest.

The disease, known as chronic wasting disease, was first detected in deer in the 1960s but is causing growing concern since it began spreading rapidly among deer in Colorado, South Dakota, Nebraska and Wisconsin this past year.

"The disease is similar to mad cow disease because it is spread by the same infectious agent," said Pete Swiderek, Conservation Branch chief for the Directorate of Facilities Engineering Logistics. "There is still a lot we don't know about the disease, but we do know that it can be fatal if transmitted to humans."

While there haven't been any known cases of deer transmitting the disease to humans, dangers are lurking right around the corner as hunting season is set to begin Sept. 15.

"We haven't detected any cases of chronic wasting disease in the Southeast yet," Swiderek said. "Right now, we just want to warn hunters of the signs of the disease so they know what to look for should a local deer become infected."

The signs to watch for in a deer that may be infected with chronic wasting disease are:

- Salivating at the mouth
- Walking a repetitive course
- Head tremors
- Animal stays near water
- Shows a wide stance

"This is not cause for alarm, just caution," Swiderek said. "The danger surrounding mad cow disease has put us on alert because of the similarities between the two illnesses."

Both mad cow and chronic wasting disease are spread by prion, a protein that works as an infectious agent in the body. Hunters who touch contaminated animals or eat the contaminated meat are at serious risk.

Local hunters aren't taking any chances.

"I've been following the reports of cases in the Midwest," said John Stewart, a Columbus resident who plans to hunt on Fort Benning. "I know what to look for and I will take all precautions necessary to protect myself."

All 50 states have banned interstate transportation of live deer, elk and other deer-like animals, and Colorado and Wisconsin are already raiding forests and killing deer found in the areas of known outbreaks.

"Hunters should wear gloves at all times when handling deer," Swiderek said. "They also need to minimize contact with the brain and spinal chord regions because that is where the disease is predominantly spread."

For more information on chronic wasting disease, call the Infantry Branch Safety Office at 545-4812.

Columbus stops Greenwaves' drive to end zone

Thirteen seconds not enough to pull out win

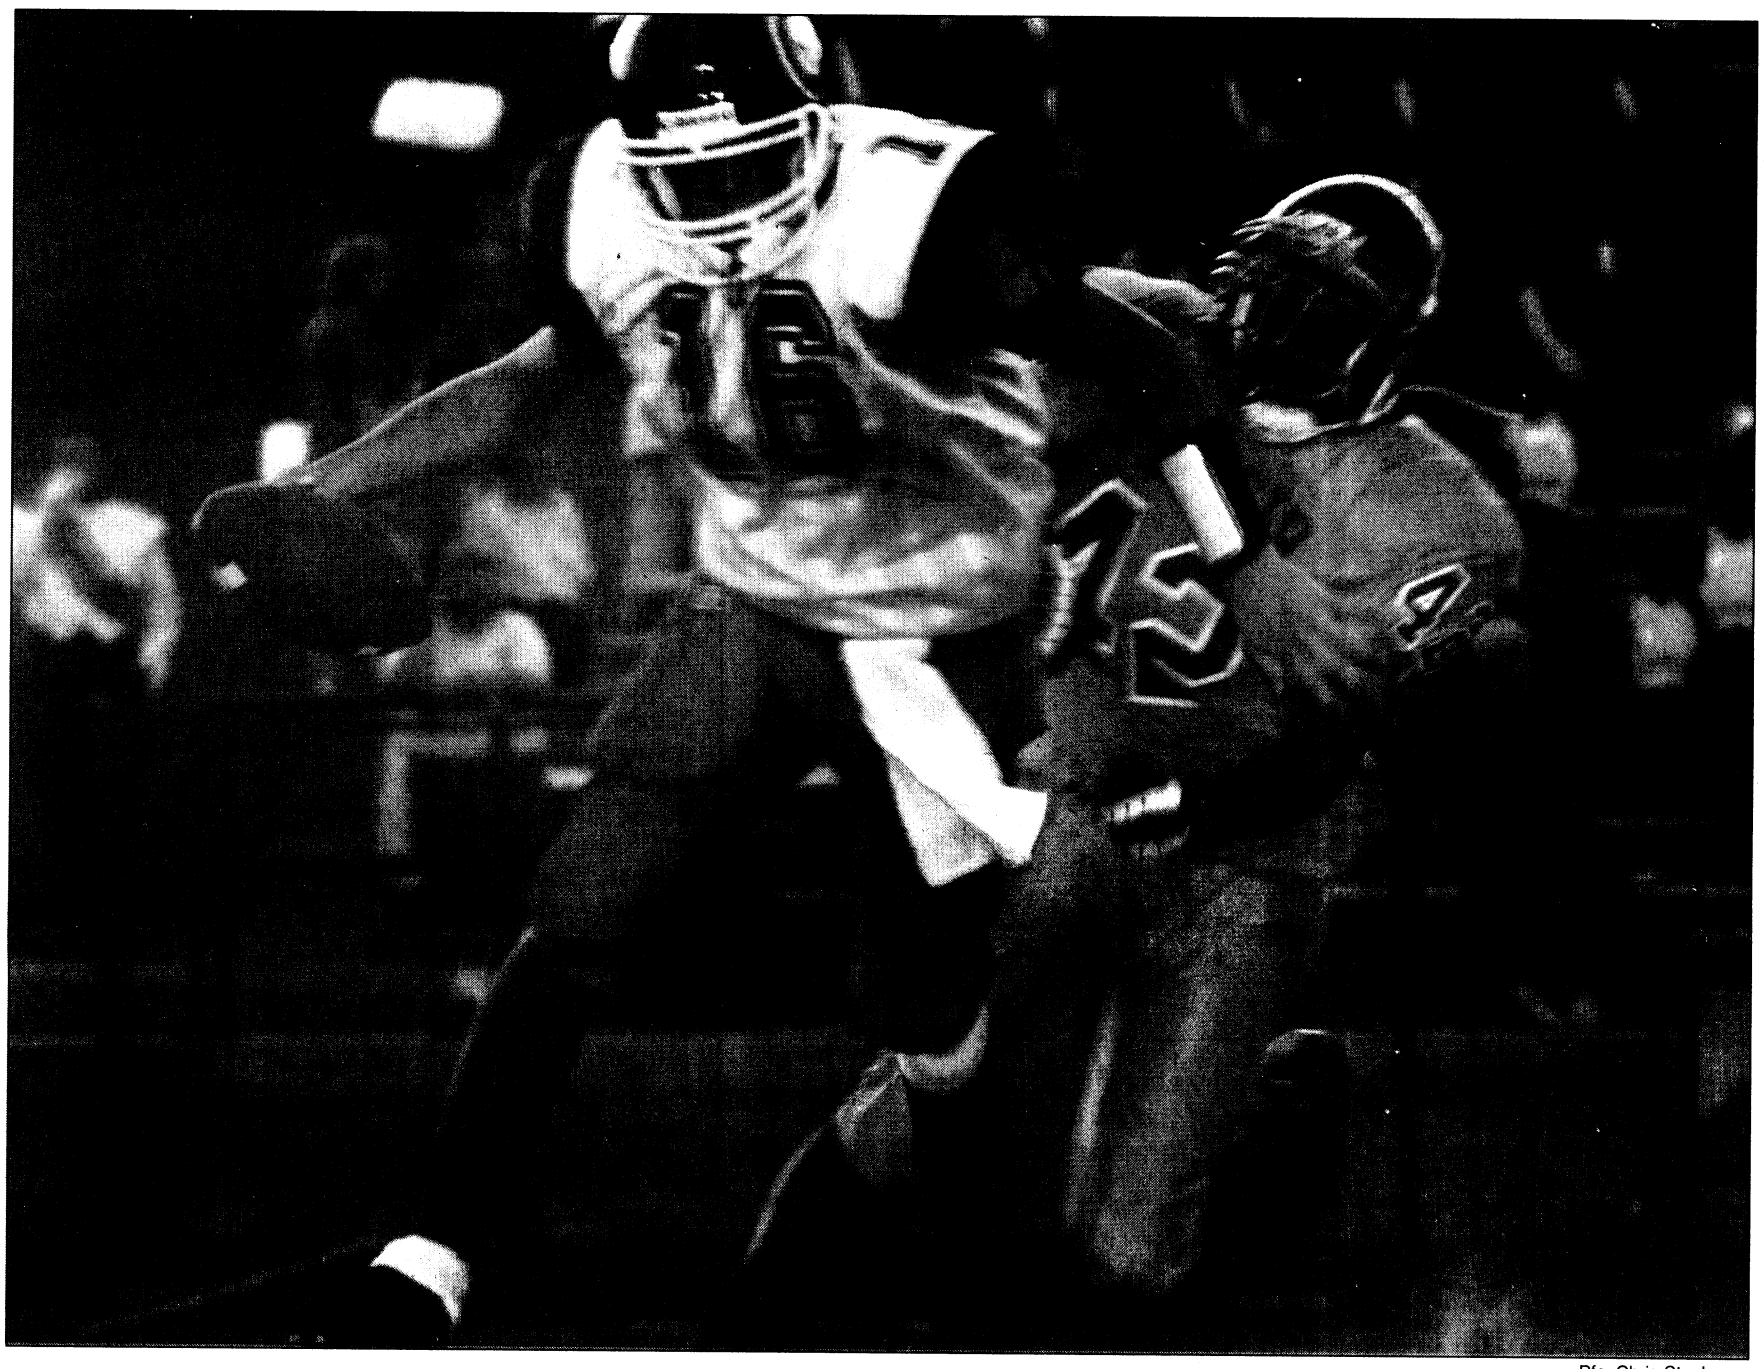
Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

With 13 seconds left in the game, Spencer High School had the ball on offense for two shots at the end zone to win the game against Columbus High School Sept. 6.

Both plays were incomplete passes by senior quarterback Jerome Coverson, giving the Blue Devils a victory over the Spencer Greenwaves, 27-24.

The game had great significance for Columbus.

"It's the first time in 11 years we have won our opening game," said senior linebacker Nate Schrader. "We're going to make some noise this year if we practice hard and eliminate our mistakes."



From the opening coin toss, both teams seemed to give it all they had.

During Columbus' first drive of the night, junior quarterback Ric Bishop was not able to do anything with the ball.

The Greenwaves defense were like magnets attracted to him. The Greenwaves forced the Devils to punt after sophomore linebacker Brandon Horton drug Bishop down for a seven-yard loss.

Immediately after the Greenwaves got the ball, they started their running game with great success. Alternating between senior tailback Shamon Smith and junior tailback Ricky Graves, the Greenwaves scampered down field, picking up big chunks of yards at a time.

The razzle-dazzle footwork of Smith confused the Devils' defense the whole night as the Devils needed two, three and even four guys to drag the senior sensation to the turf.

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Greenwaves sophomore linebacker Brandon Horton drags down Columbus' junior quarterback Ric Bishop for a 7-yard loss during the first quarter of the Columbus-Spencer football game Sept. 6. Columbus beat Spencer 27-24.

"I tried to create something for my team," Smith said. "My team depends on my abilities running the ball, so I do my best to keep going."

With eight minutes to go in the first quarter, Smith broke off runs of 40 and 35 yards to get the Greenwaves into the end zone, giving them a 6-0 lead.

At the 18-yard mark, junior tailback Trey McCants bobbed and weaved his way through the Greenwave defense before going off to the races for an 82 yard touchdown run. Senior kicker

Coaches knowledge reduces injuries

Fundamentals increase athleticism

Lt. Col. Bill Rieger
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

This is the second story of a three-part series that addresses the importance of a competent coach in youth sports.

Parents of youth participating in sports, should be assured that organizations governing athletics require the gathering, knowledge of, and accessibility of medical information essential to the safety and well being of our youth. Parents should also require that only medical personnel who have appropriate training perform the PPE. It should not be an issue, but only a question of what is best for the evaluation and administration of critical health information, and of whom can best help our athletes to compete safely and optimally.

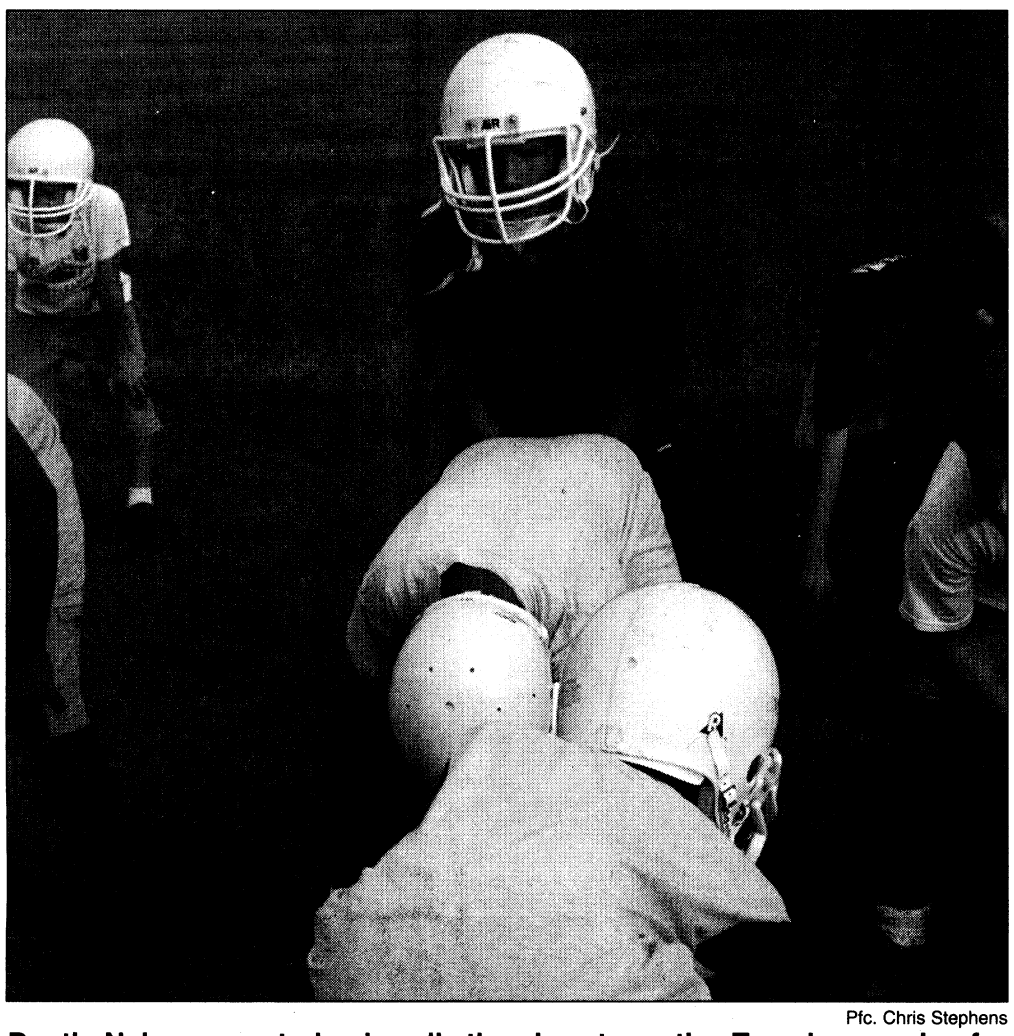
Parents should ensure that their youth receive proper supervision and coaching. They should lobby local organizations and schools to sponsor coaches' attendance at coaching and safety seminars. It was not long ago that water restriction and administration of salt tablets to athletes during training was commonplace. Parents should be wary of athletic programs that focus on early sport-specialization. Two generations of athletes have grown up specializing early, acquiring sport-specific skills with little regard for pre-requisite movement skills.

The impact of this approach, and the lack of proper preparation in general conditioning and fundamental movement skills, have caused our youth to play games they are not prepared to play.

Success is built on fundamentals and coaches must incorporate fundamental movement skills as routine. Only then will athletes have a firm foundation for sport-specific skills and the body management competencies to control injury. How can this problem be addressed? The ideal would be to re-institute mandatory physical education from Kindergarten through 12th grade. This is probably not realistic given the climate in education today.

If youth are to continue at the competitive pace of athletics today, coaches must possess the knowledge to develop motor skills in athletes. Once the athlete has a repertoire of motor skills to draw from, it is easier to acquire sport-specific skills and our athletes will be less prone to injury because their body is better prepared for the functional performance requirements of their sport.

Experimentation with different sports allows youth to develop fitness and motor skills, enjoy the social aspects of sport and choose the sports they prefer (not those of the parents).



Parents can be reassured that there are many examples of outstanding athletes who did not become involved in their sports until a relatively late age.

Bill Rodgers, four-time winner of the Boston Marathon, starting running cross-country at the age of 15.

Michael Jordan did not make his high school's varsity basketball team until he was in the 11th grade.

Youth rarely suffer overuse injuries when they control the intensity level. The rationale for the increased intensity of training and the extended duration of seasons in youth sports stems from the assumption that optimal performance can only be achieved after prolonged periods of practice. However, the data on burnout (Coakley, 1992; Rowland, 1986; Ward, 1982) and attrition (Burton, 1988; Gould, 1987) support the contention that for almost all of the athletes sampled, these periods of intensive training have no justifiable physiological, psychological or educational basis and served more to discourage rather than encourage continued participation. Coaches and other adults should avoid setting rigid expectations about training intensity. Gradual progression should always be foremost.

Football!

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Dustin Nelson, quarterback, calls the play at practice Tuesday evening for Youth Services football. The first game of the season for YS football is at 9 a.m. Sept. 21 on Blue Field. For more information, call 545-3070.

Post to hold USA shooting selections

Marksmanship matches begin Sept. 25

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Hundreds of athletes from around the country will test their shooting skills at the USA Shooting Fall Selection Match, which is the first selection match for the U.S. Pan-American Games Team.

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the matches Sept. 25 to Oct. 13 for all Olympic shooting events except Running Target, which will be conducted at the Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., Oct. 2-5.

The selection matches are being sponsored by USA Shooting, the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

The second and final selection match for the U.S. Pan-American Games Team is currently scheduled to be conducted in April at Fort Benning.

The Pan-Am Games will be in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic in August.

The Pan-American Games is an Olympic-style shooting championship for the Western Hemisphere, which is conducted every four years.

Not only can shooters win medals and set world records at the Pan-American Games, but the Pan-Am Games is the last chance for shooters from the Western Hemisphere to win quota slots for their countries to compete in the Olympic Games.

The selection match competition starts Sept. 25 with the Shotgun events.

Sept. 25 is the official training day for men's and women's Skeet. The Skeet matches will be Sept. 26 — 28.

Men's and women's Double Trap official training is Sept. 29, and the matches are scheduled for Sept. 30 and Oct. 1.

Men's and Women's Trap starts Oct. 2, the official training day, with the matches conducted Oct. 3-5.

Oct. 3 is the official training day for men's Air Rifle and women's Three Position and Prone Sport Rifle; the matches will be Oct. 4-5.

Men's Free Rifle Prone and women's Air Rifle training is Oct. 6 and the competitions will be Oct. 7-8.

The men's Free Rifle Three Position training days are Oct. 7-8 and the matches will be Oct. 9-10.

The official training day for Rapid Fire Pistol and women's Air Pistol is Oct. 6; the competition is set for Oct. 7-8. Oct. 9 will be the official training day for men's Air Pistol and women's Sport Pistol and those competitions will be Oct. 10-11.

Men's Free Pistol is the last event at Fort Benning with official training Oct. 11 and competition set for Oct. 12-13.

Media are invited to all events but must coordinate with Public Affairs Office before coming to post.

Greenwaves: Show promise in running game, defense

Brad Kinney added the extra point to give Columbus a 7-6 lead.

On the Greenwaves' first offensive possession of the second quarter, they made more noise.

Smith slithered through traffic, sprinting his way to a 60-yard gain, before being brought down at the Devils' 10-yard line.

Three plays later, Coverson threw a strike to senior wingback Brad Horton for the touchdown, giving Spencer the lead 12-7.

Neither Columbus nor Spencer could get anything done on their next possessions.

However, when Columbus punted, an errant bounce off a Spencer returner gave Columbus the ball on the Spencer 24-yard line.

The very next play McCants took the ball 24-yards untouched into the end zone.

The two-point conversion failed and the score stood in Columbus' favor, 13-12.

Another turnover in their own territory at the beginning of the third quarter hurt Columbus.

A vicious hit from Schrader on Graves caused a fumble, and Columbus pounced on the ball to gain possession.

"I play downhill and never give up on a play," Schrader said after the game in which he recorded 19 tackles and four assists.

Once Columbus got on offense, McCants took the ball untouched for a 45-yard touchdown run.

Spencer's next drive resulted in an emotional touchdown, a seemingly close call.

Brad Horton tried to stretch into the end zone, but fumbled the ball.

However his momentum took him into the end zone where he fell onto the ball for the touchdown, closing the Columbus lead to 20-18.

Horton finished the game with seven receptions for 79 yards and two touchdowns.

"When I fumbled I saw where the ball was going and immediately fell on it for the touchdown," he said.

The close gap would not last. Bishop connected with junior wide receiver Andreas Wright for a 40-yard touchdown score to give Columbus a 27-18 lead.

Yet, Spencer would not give up in the fourth quarter, scoring a hard-fought touchdown to close the gap to 27-24.

Spencer had opportunities to take the lead but failed to convert on third downs.

"We had a great team effort," Smith said. "We just came up a little short. We just need to practice harder and work as a cohesive unit, and we'll do great this season."

McCants finished the game with 166 yards rushing on nine carries and three rushing touchdowns.

Smith ended the game 227 rushing yards on 21 carries and two touchdowns.

"Our team loves this game as a whole and we always will give it our very best," Smith said. "That's what it is really about — the team."

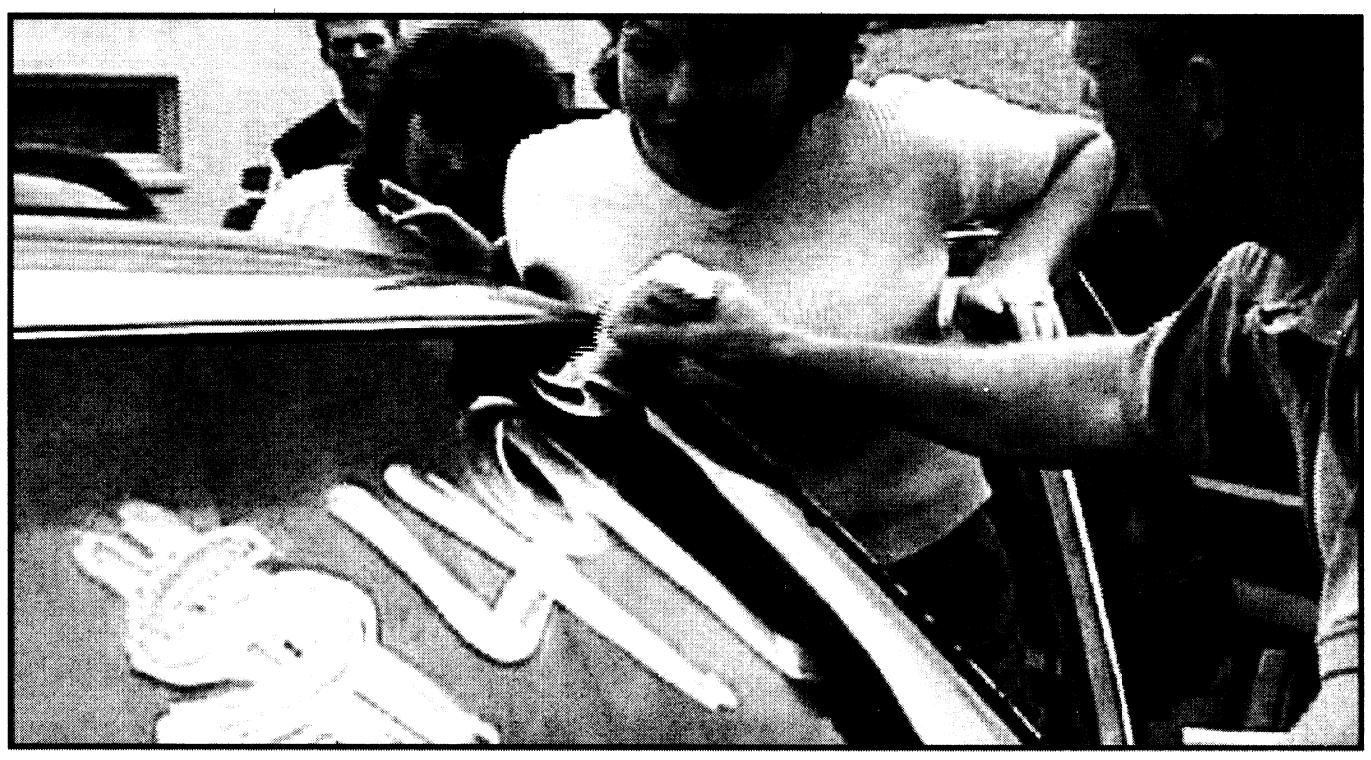
Local Dealer Waiving Down Payments

Rivertown Ford allowing buyers to take over vehicle payments after paying small acquisition fee



Columbus, GA- If you have been thinking about buying a new or used vehicle but thought you'd need thousands in cash or a trade-in for a down payment, there's good news coming to your area this weekend. Now through Saturday at 8PM., special financing arrangements have been made at Rivertown Ford that allow customers to simply pay a $49 acquisition sale fee, then take over payments.

This unique and exclusive finance plan eliminates the need for the consumer to produce a large down payment. All that's required is $49 to cover the administrative costs involved in setting up financing in your name. The payments that are to be taken over are clearly posted on every vehicle windshield. Prices are also clearly posted so shoppers can see the overall savings on each vehicle.

"Some of the payments on these vehicles are just $99 a month."

Stock # 2029251A '99 Mercury Sable. 66 months@7.5% APR. With approved credit, plus tax, and title. See dealer for details.

Used car buyers from Rivertown Ford searched across Georgia and surrounding states, buying up hundreds of lease terminations, bank repossessions, trade-ins, failed fleet sales and more in preparation for this one-of-a-kind event. They've now been transported to the premises of Rivertown Ford located at 1680 Whittlesey Road. Since these are vehicles other people have already made payments on, customers will save thousands once financing responsibilities are assigned to them. Some payments on these vehicles are just $99 a month.

Consumers that thought they needed thousands in cash for a down payment in order to get low monthly payments are being pleasantly surprised this weekend at Rivertown Ford. All that's needed is a $49 acquisition fee to drive home a new or used vehicle today.

Selection is a big part of what makes this sale so exciting, according to Rivertown Ford's General Sales Manager, Brad Williams. "Chevys, Fords, Dodges, Toyotas & Hondas... cars, trucks & SUVs... all the hottest selling names are here. No matter what kind of vehicle you're looking for, you could drive it home for a $49 acquisition sale fee, then you simply take over payments!"

New vehicle shoppers can also take delivery with just a $49 acquisition sale fee. "Thanks to the financing we've arranged, through 8PM Saturday, Rivertown Ford can offer brand new cars, trucks and SUV for a $49 acquisition sale fee, then take over payments!"

Why would a car dealer arrange financing to make this $49 Acquisition sale possible? Williams explains, "Our allocation of 2003 models will depend in part on how many new and used vehicles we can deliver in the next two weeks. The more we sell, the more we'll get. We've decided to sacrifice profits in an effort to really push our sales volume to the maximum."

Williams speaks from experience when describing his expectations for this event. "By finding a lender that allows us to deliver new and used vehicles with just a $49 acquisition sale fee, we think we're really going to see a big increase in deliveries between now and 8 PM Saturday night. When we've done this sale in the past, it's always been one of our biggest. It's really a win-win situation for everybody... we'll sell a record number of vehicles, and our customers will get some great bargains."

"We've decided to sacrifice profit to really push our sales volume to the maximum."

Because the special funds that make this offer possible are only valid through 8PM Saturday night, customers are encouraged to get here early for the best selection.
Sale absolutely ends Saturday at 8PM and the exclusive location is Rivertown Ford at 1680 Whittlesey Road, across from Hollywood Connection in Columbus. Call 706-653-7420 for more information.

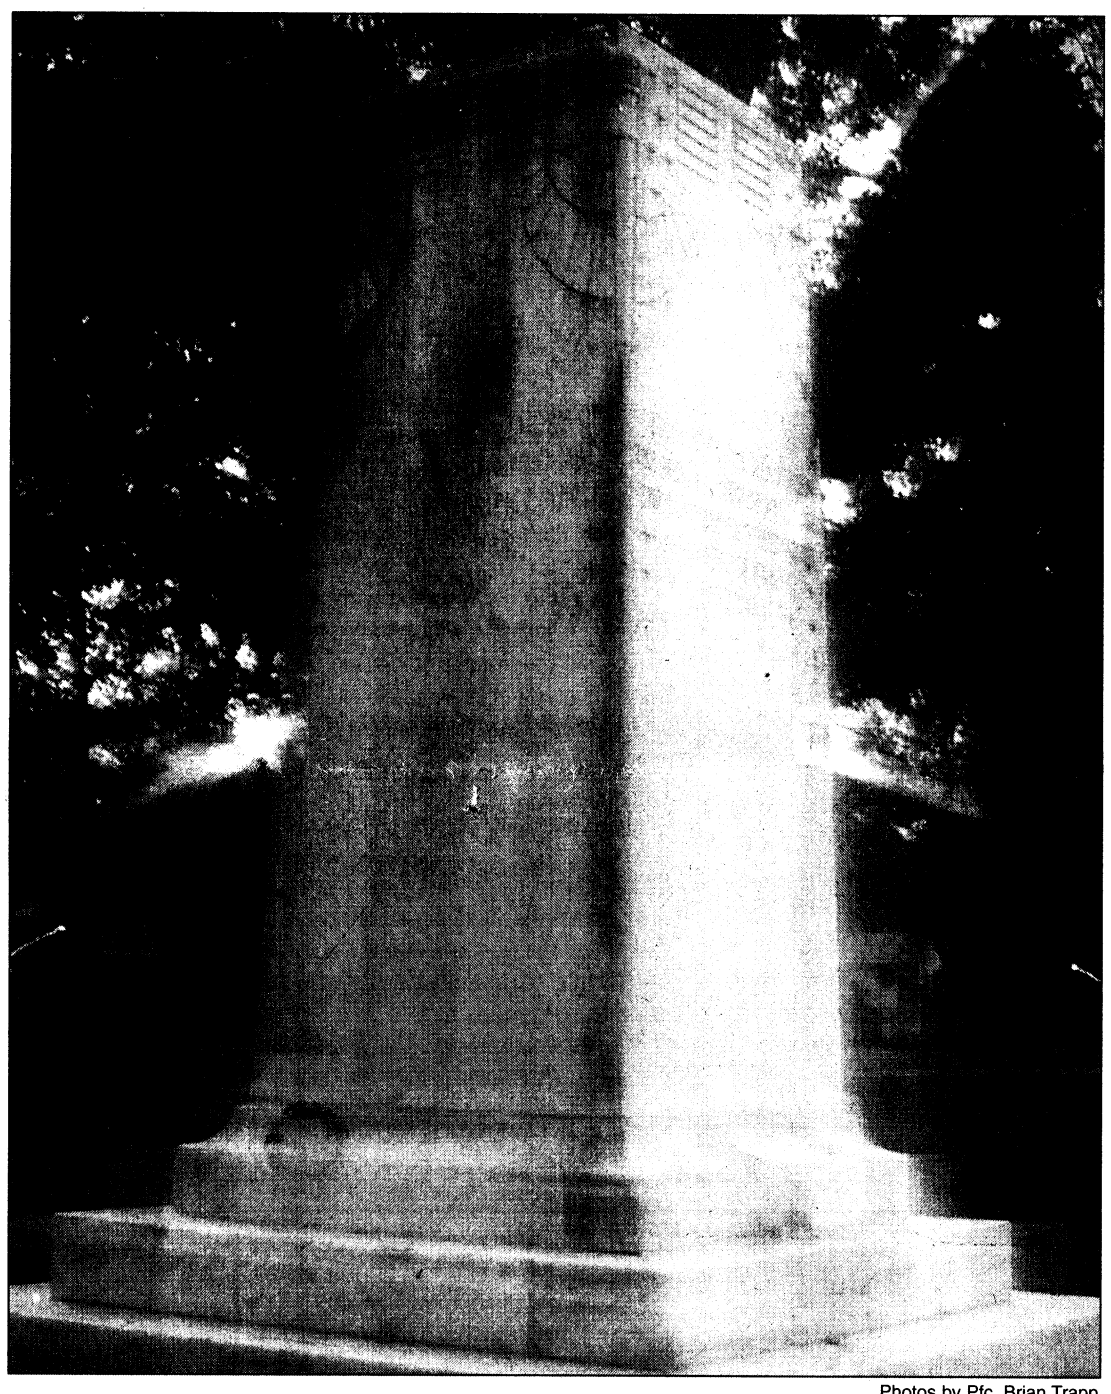
For anyone who's ever been a victim of domestic abuse, the idea of confiding in friends or even attempting to get help can feel somewhat shameful.

For 27-year-old Tina, a Fort Benning wife who wishes her full name to remain unidentified, the pain of an unhappy marriage with mental and near physical abuse was almost too much to handle.

"My husband had a way of making me feel inferior," she said. "He would often tell me I was no good. I started to believe it."

Tina, her husband and her three small children moved from Ft. Bragg, N.C. to Fort Benning last year. Tina thought the move would bring the family closer, but she was wrong. The abuse from her husband continued.

"He wouldn't want me to leave the house," she said. "He didn't trust me. I felt so trapped. I knew we needed help. I was afraid for myself and my children."



After hearing about the Army Family Advocacy Program through her family readiness group, Tina made the decision that would change her life. She walked into the Army Community Service building and asked for help.

"When Tina came to me, I knew immediately our services could help her," said Theresa Sanchez, Family Advocacy Program victim advocate. "I immediately started working on her individual case, and I knew from talking to her that her marriage was still important to her, so that was also important to us. Our first step was to make her a stronger, more confident person."

The path to rebuilding Tina's self esteem started with respite childcare, a free childcare service offered to relieve stress on a parent.

Gov. Roy E. Barnes declared today as POW-MIA Day in the state of Georgia, to recognize Georgians who became prisoners of war and those who remain missing in action. Barnes also encourages people to fly the POW-MIA flag as a tribute.

The day is to remember former American prisoners of war who suffered the hardships of enemy captivity and those missing in action whose fate is still undetermined now.

Garrison warns personnel to prepare

Pfc. Brian Trapp

More than 1,000 letters are projected to go out on or about Oct. 18, that are associated with the Jan. 25 reduction in force.

"I want to prepare people for the inevitable," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander. "We as human beings sometimes want to deny something that's on the horizon, and we say maybe it won't happen. Well it's going to happen; nothing is sacred."

The results of the Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics and the Adjutant General commercial activities studies, known as A-76, will abolish as many as 683 job positions to meet the target manpower level by Jan. 25.

"If people are in a job series identified as one of the functional areas of the RIF, they are all at stake because of the bumping and retreating," Torres said.

The study concluded contractors can perform a major portion of functions provided by DFEL and other activities more efficiently.

"This will affect every TRADOC activity on post," Torres said. "Fort Benning's work force will look different on January 26 compared to today's. On January 26, some individuals will be going to work as they normally have, others will find themselves in new positions and some of today's workforce will not be on Fort Benning's rolls."

We've implemented programs to minimize the upheaval," he said. "We are providing counseling and advice to employees being affected. Regulations are emplaced so everyone gets the same opportunity," he said.

People being affected will have the opportunity to apply for a position with the Shaw Group and have first right of refusal.

CFC begins soon, helps soldiers

Combined Federal Campaign money benefits others, too

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

The Combined Federal Campaign 2002 gets underway with a kickoff breakfast at the Officers' Club for Fort Benning leaders on Sept. 25.

The goal of this year's campaign is $550,000. Last year, Fort Benning soldiers and civilians contributed more than $680,000 through payroll deduction and cash contributions.

"This is the only authorized Department of Defense solicitation for charitable donations in the federal workplace," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

Fort Benning CFC officials work with members of the local United Way during the campaign, which runs through Nov. 6.

"This is the first time I have worked on the CFC," said Donna Fink, whose husband is deployed with 3rd Brigade. Fink works in the United Way marketing department and is lending a much needed hand this year during the six-week campaign.

Local agencies are included in the more than 1,600 represented in the CFC catalog.

"Individuals can designate the Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association as a recipient," Walls said. "The Army Community Services Food locker, Family Unit Network, youth programs and Santa's Castle are all funded by the association."

Walls said that people should consider giving to local agencies because the contributions stay in the area and can be of direct benefit to soldiers and their families.

CFC contributions helped with Sept. 11, 2001, recovery efforts.

As this year's CFC video explains, it is impossible to predict the future, but important to be prepared, and CFC is a great way to invest in the future of the community, the nation and the world.

BULLIES

Learn tactics early

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

COMMENTARY

Penny was my neighbor and my classmate. She was overweight and dressed in frumpy hand-me downs. She was taunted at school and abused at home, and I felt sorry for her.

But Penny was also the neighborhood bully, not an uncommon dichotomy if you look at the statistics. Most bullies have been bullied or abused. The abused often become abusers.

I tried to stay in Penny's good graces at school to avoid her wrath at home. It was a delicate balancing act, and I was never much of an acrobat. It was only a matter of time before she took her misplaced anger out on me.

It happened when we were in the sixth-grade, and it started on the school bus. She hurled at me all the ugly words she'd been called at school, and when that wore thin, she hurled threats. I knew she'd make good on them.

I stepped off the school bus, slid across the icy sidewalk and onto the snow-covered lawn for better footing, and headed home as fast as I could. Penny caught up to me quickly and shoved me down into the snow.

I laid there in the snow for just a moment, shivering, as cowardice battled with indignation. Indignation won. I stood up, shook myself off and shoved back with all my might.

Nothing happened.

There I stood in knee-deep snow, struggling to stay upright, while Penny stood stock still on the slippery sidewalk, the Abominable Snowman in a skirt. She didn't budge a bit.

I had a revelation just then. I couldn't win in this war of the weights. Pound for pound she could pound me into a snowflake. So I did the sensible thing. I ran.

Sorry, folks, some stories just don't have happy endings. Such is life. Only on Nick at Nite does the bully get what's coming to him and everybody else goes home happy, self-esteem intact. Real life isn't always just or fair.

I gave up trying to befriend Penny, and though she occasionally spewed her venom in my direction, I never tried to retaliate again. I had more brain than brawn.

But I learned a few lessons from my encounter with Penny the Terrible. I learned that:

• Victims and bullies sometimes wear the same face,

• Bullies suffer from lack of self-esteem,

• You can't save everybody single-handedly,

• Fighting back can be dangerous,

• Being bullied doesn't justify being a bully,

• Life's lessons don't always have a happy outcome. Learn from them.

You'd think in this age of rampant Columbine-style crimes, we'd all teach our children the lost art of kindness. Just last week the Ledger-Enquirer ran the headline, "Taunted 12-year-old stabs teen with kitchen knife." Once again, evil begets evil. Where does it end?

According to those who know bull, it starts in preschool and peaks in middle school. Let's face it, teachers can monitor classrooms, but they can't be all-knowing or all-seeing. They can't supervise every child on the playground or in the restroom. They're overtaxed as it is.

Fort Benning schools have taken it upon themselves to address the problem of bullying in house. They've begun educating our students on the realities and dangers of such behavior. Bully for them.

But unless parents are willing to step up to the plate, to drop the every-man-for-himself attitude and teach their children self-respect and self-restraint, it'll all be for naught. It has to start at home.

For more on the problem of bullying at school and in the workplace, turn to page B-1.

Hammers help heroes' homes

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COMMENTARY

Honestly. You borrow a man's hammer, bring it back to him in pieces, just once, and you never get to live it down.

How do I know this? I sat down at the dinner table one Friday evening and announced that I was taking the following Monday off to volunteer my services with the House of Heroes program.

"What," inquired my spouse of 20-something years, "is House of Heroes?"

I explained that volunteers would be descending on a number of homes belonging to veterans to take care of repairs that the elderly homeowners could not attend to themselves.

That's when his eyes narrowed and I was asked, ever so subtly, "Are you going to have to use a hammer?"

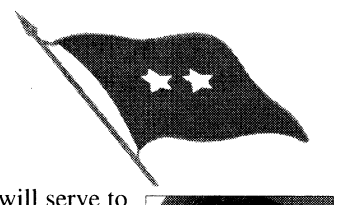
In my defense, let me say three things.

It was a long time ago. It wasn't my fault. And I brought all of the pieces back. There weren't a lot of pieces, just two. Or three, depending on how, exactly, you want to define "piece."

Besides, it's not like I really broke that hammer. It just happened to break while I was using it. There's a difference. A big difference. And it wasn't even the good hammer, it was an old hammer that had pounded more than a few nails in its time.

As it turned out, there was plenty to do that didn't require any hammering. (Not that there were any hammers in evidence. I suspect my team captain was tipped. The closest I got to a real tool was a screwdriver and a spackle knife).

But there were sheets of wallpaper to take down, nail holes to fill, walls to paint, windows to wash, leaves to rake and bag, bushes to trim and yards of stuff that needed to be carted to the curb. And that's just what the unskilled help like myself got to do.

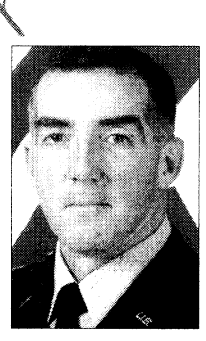


I did get to use the steamer to get the wallpaper down. I only burned myself twice, and only one of the burns was a third-degree.

In return, the volunteers got a cool T-shirt, a sack lunch, all the soda, water and Powerade we could drink and the gratitude of some very thankful veterans and their spouses.

"House of Heroes" is now a year-round program, and volunteers are always welcome. Taking on a home would be a very fitting community service project for any class or group.

For more information on volunteering with House of Heroes, call 494-1111.



Remembrance strikes chord

My compliments to all who worked so hard to make our three-day 9-11 remembrance so special.

From the band concert to the remembrance service to the events at Sand Hill and York Field, I think we touched the right chord in that we paid deference to our fallen comrades, in uniform and in civilian life — lost in ground combat in Afghanistan and in the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, while resolving to carry this war to our enemies.

Just like we remembered the Alamo, the Maine and Pearl Harbor, we must remember 9-11. It too is a date that shall live in infamy. On that day we were plunged into war. Recounting this anniversary will serve to remind us why we are at war and that we must be forever vigilant.

Sept. 11, 2001, many things changed — remember what happened, remember the emotions then, and keep the anger hot and focused against those who would try to change our culture, our lifestyle.

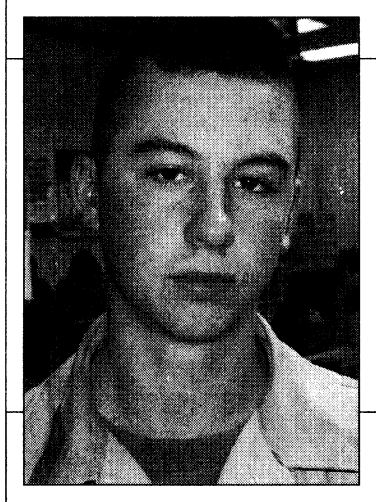
LETTER

Reader likes new flag

After a long day of running errands, our family was making our way back to Fort Benning via the Main Gate. Nearing the gate we were struck with awe. There just outside the entrance to the installation was a big, beautiful, brand-new American flag.

Pride, honor and reverence are just a few of the emotions that entering a military installation should invoke, and what better to portray those feelings than with our precious symbol of freedom.

Fort Benning has made its finest purchase yet. Hooah!



— Sgt. John and Melissa Givvines, and family

Editor's note: The new flag outside the Main Gate entrance is on city property and installed by the Columbus Mayor's Office.

Volunteers honor heroes, widows

Workers repair homes for elderly

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

It's hard to tell who the real heroes are around here. It's a matter of perspective.

More than 350 volunteers from the Fort Benning community might say they were honoring America's heroes when they went to work scrubbing, painting, trimming, mowing and repairing the homes of aging veterans and widows of veterans this week.

But the homeowners said their benefactors were the real heroes.

"They're just wonderful. I don't know how to say how grateful we are," said Isabel Engeldinger, as she watched more than 30 soldiers from the 13th Combat Support Battalion paint her living room and trim overgrown shrubs.

The Engeldingers home was one of 12 sponsored by Fort Benning teams and one of 50 refurbished citywide. Most needed minor carpentry and plumbing work, painting inside and out, and lawn work. Some had special requests for safety features, like shower rails or deadbolt locks.

The Engeldingers' home has been burgled twice, so when they requested a safety lock for their front door, volunteers showed up immediately to install one. Accommodating those "who sacrificed so much for this country," is what House of Heroes is all about, said Greg Camp, spokesman for the organization, which has been helping veterans for three years.

"These are men who gave years of their lives to serve this country. Most of them served in Korea or Vietnam," Camp said. "It's just a small way we can show our appreciation to these veterans while they're still with us or honor those who have died by helping their widows live more comfortably."

Though Monday through today was officially designated House of Heroes week, volunteers began visiting the veterans and scheduling repair last month. Nearly 200 soldiers from the Infantry Officers' Basic Course began working two weeks ago, and more than 100 Fort Benning employees and family members took leave from their regular jobs this week to join the effort.

Sheila McGill spent Saturday repairing screens for a World War II veteran's widow.

"See that flag over there?" McGill asked, pointing to the American flag hanging from the front porch. "That's what brings me here. This lady's husband and others like him paid a real high price so we can live under that flag. There's a verse in the Bible that says, 'To whom much is given, much is required.'

"If we did this kind of work every weekend of the year, we wouldn't make a dent in what we owe them. It's not much, but it's a start."

McGill called it a "privilege and a blessing" to be a part of House of Heroes.

"You always get more than you give out of this kind of thing," she said. "If just 10 percent of this nation would recognize the need to give something back to these heroes, we could turn this nation around."

LaVoy Powell, "captain" for a team of volunteers from Professional Enterprises, a Fort Benning lawn care contractor, said his crew would trim shrubs throughout the week in an effort to reduce the potential West Nile threat around the veterans' homes.

"My wife retired from the military, so I know what it's like to be an Army wife," Powell laughed, as workers removed overgrowth from a widow's yard in the Oakland Park community. "I understand what a military spouse has to go through, so I wanted to pay my respects to her. She can call on me anytime."

Staff Sgt. Steve Holder, U.S. Army Medical Activity, spent Monday pressure washing the outside of Irene Shafer's home in Oakland Park. The widow of a World War II veteran is blind, and regular chores have become nearly impossible.

"We've gotta take care of our own," Holder said, explaining his decision to participate in House of Heroes. "We owe them that much."

Woman, 80-years-young, queen for a day

Volunteers make widow feel like royalty

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"When I am an old woman, I shall wear purple ... and make up for the sobriety of my youth."
— from Jenny Joseph's Warning

Miss Wanda looked askance when asked about her age.

"Never, never ask a lady how old she is," she admonished in a thick Polish accent. "Ask how young she is. Me, I am 80 years young."

Miss Wanda insists on being called just that. It's the name she chose when she became an American citizen in 1953. But her last name is Polish, and the Polish still have enemies, she fears. Better to keep it to herself.

Miss Wanda has seen a lot of trouble in her 80 years, from the German concentration camp where she was forced into "slave labor" during World War II, to early widowhood and poor health.

"And now the stupid dog, he has stole my teeth," she shrugged, shaking her head. "I have troubles."

Some would say Miss Wanda has earned the right to be leery of reporters, the right to speak her mind, and the right to wear purple from head to toe. She wears a purple ring and a purple watch and by the end of the day Saturday, her bedroom would be purple, too.

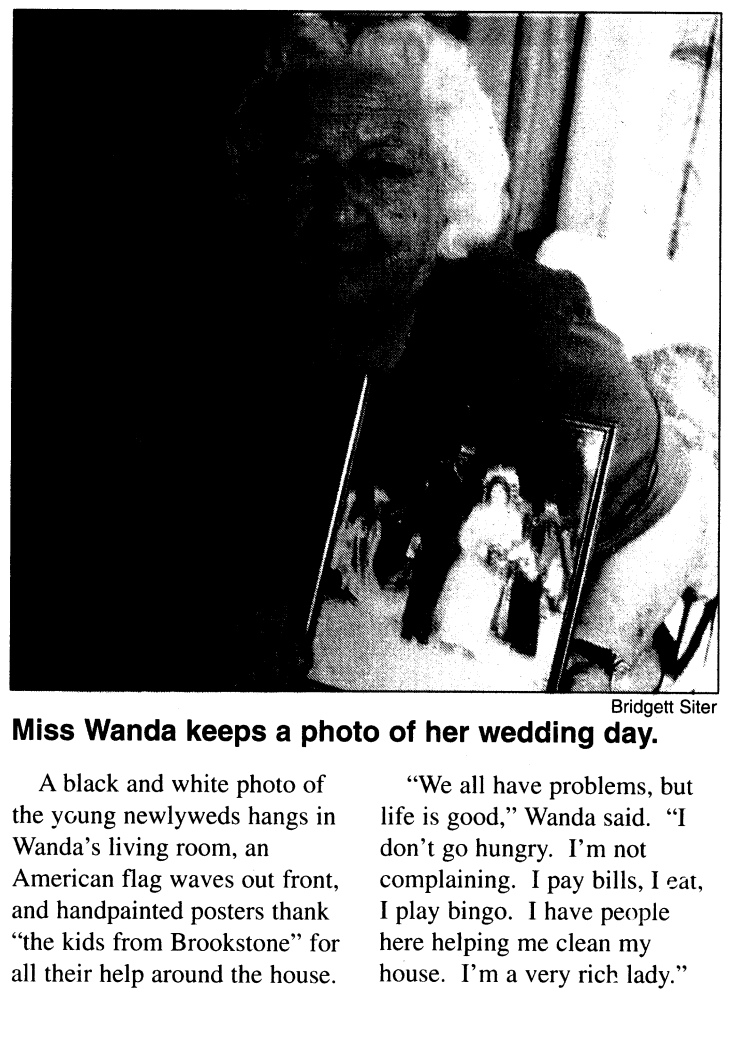
Purple is the color of royalty, Miss Wanda said, and she felt like a queen.

Nearly 30 students from Columbus' Brookstone Academy and their parents spent the day with Miss Wanda, repairing, painting and cleaning her home inside and out.

The team of volunteers, including Fort Benning family members, represented House of Heroes, the local nonprofit organization that honors veterans and their widows by repairing their homes.

"I tell you, I feel like a very rich woman. It makes me feel good," Miss Wanda said, as she watched workers come and go from her kitchen, where a recent fall left her confined to a chair. "I used to do this. I used to do everything here. Then I got down and the house started looking bad.

"You know, when your home's not nice, you sometimes feel like not coming home. Now it's like new. It's clean and pretty. It makes me feel better, you know."



Miss Wanda's daughter, Lillian Serna, a Fort Benning employee, read about House of Heroes in The Bayonet and contacted organization officials to find out if her mother qualified for the program, a weeklong initiative that included 54 homes, 10 sponsored by Fort Benning.

"And we couldn't say no," said Greg Camp, former Fort Benning chief of staff and House of Heroes spokesman. "Her story is so compelling. Here's a lady who's come through so much and whose husband gave his life for this country. This is how we show our appreciation."

Miss Wanda was living in a women's compound, forced to work in a German aircraft factory, when she met her husband, Edward, a U.S. soldier and the the son of Polish immigrants. Edward helped liberate Wanda, and the two were married eight weeks later.

Edward retired in 1962 and died shortly after from cancer, leaving Wanda with three young children to raise.

"For a long time, I still set him a plate," Wanda said. "You think I'm silly, but sometimes I still look for him. I know he's not coming back."

Bridgett Siter

A black and white photo of the young newlyweds hangs in Wanda's living room, an American flag waves out front, and handpainted posters thank "the kids from Brookstone" for all their help around the house.

"We all have problems, but life is good," Wanda said. "I don't go hungry. I'm not complaining. I pay bills, I eat, I play bingo. I have people here helping me clean my house. I'm a very rich lady."

Readjustment, reconnecting after return

How families are affected in deployment

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

A deployment's strain on a relationship doesn't end when the soldiers come home. Stresses of readjustment to family life can be tough on a family, too.

"While on a real-world deployment, soldiers deal with stresses of the unknown, being away from their family, and there is a "no-kidding" life and death struggle," said Lt. Col. John C. Chin, Ph.D., command psychologist, who has worked with special operations the majority of his career. "When soldiers get a sense of mortality, it wakes them up, and they realize it's their family and children who matter the most. If they maintain a solid foundation in those areas, it makes for a better life."

There are more concerns for younger marriages, Chin said. Spouses are faced with new challenges, like financial and child care concerns and become more independent and may feel contempt for the returning soldier for taking some of their independence.

During redeployment, family members typically deal with conflicting emotions. There is the excitement that the soldier is coming home. On the other hand, there is some apprehension, according to the Department of the Army study The Emotional Cycle of Deployment, a Military Family Perspective. Some concerns include "Will I give up my independence? Will we get along?" Ironically, even though the separation is almost over, there can be renewed difficulty in making decisions.

"Soldiers reconnecting with family are coming from profound emotional experiences, and the spouses also had these experiences, dealing with day-to-day issues by themselves, financial issues, taking care of the children and gaining independence, Chin said.

"Sometimes partners can't understand what the other was dealing with while they were apart," he said. "It's better to ease into the relationship maintaining a degree of independence and not to push spontaneous reconnection. It's a new relationship. Both partners have changed from their experience."

> "It's better to ease into the relationship maintaining a degree of independence and not to push spontaneous reconnection. It's a new relationship."
> Lt. Col. John C. Chin, Ph. D. > command psychologist

Many spouses also have a burst of energy during this stage, according to the study. There is often a rush to complete "to-do" lists before their mate returns — especially around the home. It is almost inevitable that expectations will be high.

Homecoming for the soldiers can be a joyous occasion, but also a frustrating one.

The date of return may change repeatedly. Despite best intentions, the spouse at home may not be able to meet the returning soldier — short notice, sitters can't be found in the middle of the night, unable to get off work. Soldiers may expect to be received as "heroes" and "heroines" only to find that they have to make their way home.

The reunion with the children can also be a challenge. Their feelings tend to depend on their age and understanding of why the soldier was gone.

Babies younger than 1 year old may not know the soldier and cry when held, according to the study. Toddlers may be slow to warm up. Pre-schoolers may feel guilty and scared of the separation. School age children may want a lot of attention. Teen-agers may be moody and may not appear to care.

In addition, children are often loyal to the parent who remains behind and do not respond to discipline from the returning soldier, according to the study. They may also fear the soldiers return if a parent says, "Wait till daddy gets home."

Eventually, soldiers will want to reassert their role as members of the family, which can lead to tension, according to the study. This is an essential task and requires considerable patience to accomplish successfully.

It is not realistic to return home and expect everything to be the same as before the deployment.

Reconnecting and understanding both have changed sometimes during the deployment is critical, Chin said. The soldier may become a control freak but must realize the spouse gained independence during their time apart, and that's a good thing. It helps take some of the day-to-day responsibilities off of the soldier.

Soldiers may not approve of privileges granted to children by the non-deployed parent, according to the study. However, it is probably best for the soldier not to try to make changes right away and to take time to renegotiate family rules and norms. Not heeding this advice, the soldier risks invalidating the efforts of their mate and alienating the children.

Soldiers may feel hurt in response to such a lukewarm reception, according to the study. Clearly going slow and letting the children set the pace goes a long way toward a successful reunion.

Post-deployment is probably the most important stage for both soldiers and spouse. Patient communication, going slow, lowering expectations and taking time to get to know each other again is critical to successful reintegration of the soldier back into the family.

The separation of deployment — unlike civilian couples — provides soldier and spouse a chance to evaluate changes within themselves and what direction they want their marriage to take. Although a difficult as well as joyful stage, many military couples have reported that their relationship is much stronger as a result.

"NCO and officer leadership need to know their people intimately," Chin said. "Family support groups need to reach out to the young folks, particularly the ones who don't participate, to prepare them for the stresses of deployment."

Fort Benning offers a wide range of service and support for soldiers and their families, Chin said.

People can receive counseling from Martin Army Community Hospital, Chaplains, Army Community Service and they can also be referred to local psychologists.

Reserve MPs to depart from Fort Benning soon

Soldiers enjoy support of Noble Eagle

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Since the attacks Sept. 11, 2001, reserve units from all over the country activated to support the war efforts of Operation Enduring Freedom.

Two military police units were activated Oct. 1 to support and guard the gates of Fort Benning.

In today's world where the Army professes a one team, one fight motto, the 157th West Virginia National Guard MP Company and the 2145th Garrison Support Unit, MP Detachment from Jacksonville, Fla., supported America in the job they were trained to do.

"These soldiers gave up time with their families and their civilian jobs to support Operation Noble Eagle," said Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, post provost marshal. "They did an outstanding job for the community and America."

While on Fort Benning, the units assisted with the access control points and the garrison law enforcement missions.

"I'm proud of the job we did here," said 1st Lt. Leonard Nida, platoon leader of the 157th. "We performed an important mission vital to the success of Operation Noble Eagle."

For one soldier, leaving Fort Benning had mixed emotions.

Staff Sgt. Kyle Jenkins was stationed on Fort Benning before he came off active duty Sept. 29, 2001.

"Two days after I ETSed from here, my unit activated and was placed here," Jenkins said. "So basically I had one day of leave before I came back here."

To the soldiers, Fort Benning was a great place to be.

"I had fun while I was here," said Sgt. Barbara McWilliams. "If I had to stay, I would accept it with open arms. But, now I will just have to get back on with my normal life."

At Logan's, we've been fixing food and drinks pretty much the same way since the day we opened our doors. That means hand-cutting every USDA Choice steak. Grilling up only fresh chicken breasts. Not skimping on portions. And always keeping a basket of fresh-baked rolls on the table. Some people call this value. We just call it dinner.

Post recognizes Hispanic contributions

Celebration starts with run, ends with food

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Hispanic Heritage Month began Sunday. To celebrate the Latin culture, the post's Equal Opportunity Office has organized two events Oct. 3.

A run will begin in front of Infantry Hall at 6:30 a.m., with prizes for first-, second- and third-place finishers in different age categories. There will be a luncheon beginning at 11:30 a.m. at the Officers' Club, featuring retired Maj. Gen. Felix A. Santoni as the guest speaker.

As a general officer in the U.S. Army, he shows the Hispanic communities in and around the area the possibilities available to them in the military, said Master Sgt. Kevin Elliott, installation Equal Opportunity Office NCOIC.

Cultural backgrounds have nothing to do with soldiers ascending in the ranks, said Spc. Jean Lopez, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

The luncheon is just one way to communicate to soldiers the important role the Hispanic community has played on the nation, Elliott said.

Hispanics have contributed a lot to the U.S. military, Lopez said.

"We're hoping to educate people on the different aspects and the heritage of the Hispanic culture," he said.

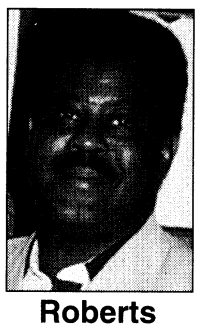
The month gives Hispanics a sense of pride, Lopez said.

"I'm proud of being Hispanic and in the Army," Lopez said.

In September of 1968, the Senate and House of Representatives named the week including Sept. 15 and 16 to be Hispanic Heritage Week. On the first day of 1989, the week was changed to a month long celebration.

"It creates more time for the community to hold events," said Sgt. 1st Class Pablo R. Padin, 11th Infantry Regiment's equal opportunity advisor. "It allows Hispanics to receive the recognition they deserve."

For more information about the run, luncheon or Hispanic Heritage Month, see your unit equal opportunity advisor or call 545-6665.



Retired CSM to receive AUSA award for his work

Man praised for years of contribution

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie L. Roberts will receive the Sergeant Major of the Army William O. Bainbridge Noncommissioned Officer Distinguished Service Award. The Bainbridge medal is awarded annually to the NCO contributing the most to the Army NCO corps.

"Whenever our chapter needs something, Eddie Roberts is the man who will do it if it involves helping soldiers," said Chuck Hunsaker, president of the Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning chapter of the Association of the United States Army. The chapter nominated Roberts to the regional office for the award. "Then the regional office added information to our award submission that we didn't even know about."

Roberts

Roberts received many awards for his outstanding service to Fort Benning and the civilian community, including the Muscogee County Rotary Club Community Volunteer of the Year Award for 1997.

"Eddie Roberts is the epitome of a noncommissioned officer," said retired Command Sgt. Maj. Jimmie Spencer, director of NCO and soldier programs, AUSA. "What sets him apart from his fellow NCOs is his extensive involvement in the civilian community."

Roberts said that it was an honor to be selected to receive the award.

"This was totally a surprise to me," he said.

The award will be presented at the association's annual meeting Oct. 21 in Washington,

People can prevent, prepare for attacks

Leaders call on everyone to help fight

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

"We want to be a nation that serves goals larger than self. We have been offered a unique opportunity, and we must not let this moment pass." — President George W. Bush, State of the Union

Many people have said that it is not a matter of "if" terrorists will strike again; it's a matter of "when and where."

In fact, Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, commanding general, recently said, "We are all combatants."

Given that, residents of Fort Benning and the rest of the country can benefit by learning what to do to help prevent and prepare for terrorist attacks, according to the citizencorps.gov Web site.

Alice W. Bass, Directorate of Intelligence and Security, offered this advice on prevention:

• Be alert to strangers on government property for no apparent reason,

• Write down license numbers of suspicious vehicles, noting the description of the occupants,

• Report anything unusual to your chain of command, report unusual or suspicious behavior,

• Avoid using your name and rank on answering machines,

• Don't open your door to strangers, use peephole viewer,

• Ask for ID for contractors assigned to work on your home and quarters,

• Brief family members on residential security and safety procedures,

• Instruct family not to provide strangers with information about you or your family.

According to the weprevent.org Web site, people should do the following to help do their part in the prevention of terrorist attacks:

• Know the routines. Be alert as you go about your daily business. This will help you learn the normal routines of your neighborhood, community and workplace. Understanding these routines will help you to spot anything out of place.

• Be aware. Get to know your neighbors at home and while traveling. Be on the lookout for activities such as unusual conduct in your neighborhood, in your workplace, or while traveling. Learn to spot suspicious packages, luggage or mail abandoned in a crowded place like an office building, an airport, a school or a shopping center.

• Take what you hear seriously. If you hear or know of someone who has bragged or talked about plans to harm citizens in violent attacks or who claims membership in a terrorist organization, take it seriously and report it to law enforcement immediately.

People can do much more to help with the war on terrorism, Eaton said. Some of his advice to people is to lose weight if necessary, to know how to fire a weapon accurately and to know first aid in order to save your neighbor's life.

According to the citizencorps.gov Web site, the Citizen Corps has many opportunities for people who want to volunteer their time or be proactive in the fight against terrorism. These include:

• Citizen Corps Councils, which help drive local citizen participation by coordinating Citizen Corps programs, developing community action plans, assessing possible threats and identifying local resources.

• The Community Emergency Response Team — A training program that prepares people in neighborhoods, the workplace, and schools to take a more active role in emergency management planning, and to prepare themselves and others for disasters.

• An expanded Neighborhood Watch Program, which incorporates terrorism prevention and education into its existing crime prevention mission.

• Volunteers in Police Service, who provide support for resource-constrained police departments by using civilian volunteers to free up more law enforcement professionals for frontline duty.

• The Medical Reserve Corps, which coordinates volunteer health professionals during large-scale emergencies to assist emergency response teams, provide care to victims with less serious injuries, and remove other burdens that inhibit the effectiveness of physicians and nurses in a major crisis.

• Operation TIPS, Terrorism Information and Prevention System — A nationwide program providing millions of workers who, by the nature of their jobs, are well-positioned to recognize unusual events with a formalized way to report suspicious activity to the nearest FBI field office.

What can people do to prepare for a possible attack?

According to the redcross.org Web site, they should:

• Create an emergency communications plan.

Choose an out-of-town contact your family or household will call or e-mail to check on each other should a disaster occur.

• Establish a meeting place.

Having a predetermined meeting place away from your home will save time and minimize confusion should your home be affected or the area evacuated. Be sure to include any pets in these plans, since pets are not permitted in shelters, and some hotels will not accept them.

• Assemble a disaster supplies kit. If you need to evacuate your home or are asked to "shelter in place," having some essential supplies on hand will make you and your family more comfortable.

• Check on the school emergency plan of any school-age children they have.

Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning schools, confers with the garrison commander to make a decision as to how post schools react. Administrators may keep children at school until a parent or designated adult can pick them up or send them home on their own. The schools should have updated information about how to reach parents and responsible caregivers to arrange for pickup. If people are unable to pick up their child, schools require proper identification to release a child to someone you designate.

Each Muscogee County high school has its own terrorist-attack-response plan. The systemwide plan is to hold students at the schools and wait until the Columbus Emergency Management Office, the superintendent of schools and the mayor confer with each other. The superintendent will then inform the schools of the decision to release students to their parents or maintain them at the schools.

To report suspicious activity, call 911.

look CLOSER look look look

According to the weprevent.org Web site, to help do their part in the prevention of terrorist attacks:

■ Know the routines. Be alert as you go about your daily business.

■ Be aware. Get to know your neighbors at home and while traveling.

■ Take what you hear seriously and report it immediately.

Survivors, families remember tragedy

Gathering honors men lost to the sea

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

More than 100 family members, friends and survivors of a disaster involving American infantrymen gathered Friday to remember the 763 men who lost their lives Christmas Eve, 1944.

The troop transport S.S. Leopoldville was headed across the English Channel to deliver reinforcements to fight at the Battle of the Bulge when it was sunk by a German U-boat only five miles from Cherbourg, France.

The sinking of the Leopoldville is one of the most controversial events in military history, according to a History Channel documentary. A series of miscues by both the British and U.S. governments prevented timely aid to the victims. Because of wartime censorship, detailed information was not available until the British government declassified documents pertaining to the disaster in 1996. Many families did not know what had happened until then.

"They sent a Purple Heart to my wife," said survivor Gerald Howard, "but she never knew exactly what had happened. The families of those killed were never told what happened."

Howard was hospitalized for almost nine months after being rescued.

"It seems as if I can remember it like it was yesterday," Howard said.

"The significance of this event will be etched in our minds and our hearts," said Jack Randles, who served in I Company, 262nd Regiment.

Randles, drafted after high school, later went to college and seminary and served as an Army chaplain in both Korea and Vietnam.

The grief of the survivors and families is now commingled with the events of Sept. 11, 2001, Randles said as he delivered a commemorative prayer during the ceremony. Last year's commemoration was canceled after the terrorist attacks and this year, tropical storm Hanna's rain forced the wreath-laying ceremony indoors.

Pfc. William Costa's daughter was 19 months old when he headed for France aboard the Leopoldville and died in the cold waters of the English Channel.

"He loved his family," said his widow Dorothy. "Deeply and forever — those were the last words he said before he left."

Dorothy Costa Sroga and daughter Elaine Costa Picard presented the wreath along with Rachael Ann Gallman, grandniece of Sgt. James Loftis.

For Mary Chesser of Tennessee, the trip to Fort Benning for the ceremony represented a healing step on behalf of her family. Her uncle, Robert Stills, was killed that Christmas Eve. He had turned 19 earlier that month, the average age of the men who died.

"Our family didn't really talk about it a lot," Chesser said. "We never really knew what happened to him."

By the end of the ceremony, the weather had cleared enough for Gerald Howard to help place the wreath in front of the monument on Sacrifice Field. Howard, along with survivors Antonio Martinez and John Carney paused to reminisce about friends whose names were etched on the memorial.

FAP: Helps soldiers, spouses fix marriages, offers services

The childcare offered Tina a few extra hours of time away from her children each week. The time allowed Tina to focus and take a deep breath.

"I remember feeling a sense of empowerment and that I was not alone after talking with the FAP program," Tina said. "It was the first time I began to see the light at the end of the tunnel."

As Tina began working with counselors at the FAP program, she began to rebuild her life and her marriage. She enrolled herself and her husband in parenting and marriage classes.

But one of the biggest changes was perhaps the way the family learned to handle anger.

"The classes showed my husband and I how to stay calm and think before we talk," Tina said. "We are learning to confront each other without being nasty toward one another."

Tina's family is just one of hundreds of Fort Benning families who have sought help from the Family Advocacy center and have seen their lives and their marriages turn around, said Becky Welch, FAP program manager.

"We are all trained professionals here with the resources to lend support to families in almost any situation," said Welch, who has a degree in social service and has worked with Fort Benning for 10 years. "Spouses can come to us in secret or with their husband or wife with them. We will be their support network and their friends until the problems are resolved and the family is where it needs to be."

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and the FAP program wants soldiers and spouses to be aware of the support and services available when they need them.

Services include:

• Victim Advocacy — a program designed to provide victims of domestic violence with the support and information necessary to make positive choices for themselves and their children,

• Violence Intervention — a FAP manager may provide crisis intervention in emergency situations,

• Parent Education — a program that assists parents in getting off to a good start to interact more effectively with their children,

• Respite Child Care — temporary child care for the purpose of relieving parental stress,

• Safety Education for Children — guidance on personal safety and child sexual abuse prevention, how to protect children from predators,

• Foster Care — providing 24 hour care and supportive services for children who cannot be cared for by their own families,

• Abuse Shelters — FAP contracts with Russell County shelters and the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women to provide a 24-hour residential facility in a safe, secure atmosphere,

• Debt Management – classes designed to help families work their way out of debt.

"As soon as I knocked on their doors, we moved very quickly," Tina said. "We didn't waste any time. I feel blessed to have been getting this information."

Because of the FAP program, Tina no longer considers herself a victim and has learned to stand up for herself in all aspects of her life, she said. Her husband, who witnessed physical abuse between his own father and mother as a child, is also changing for the better, she said.

"It took awhile for him to see the pain he was causing me, but the FAP program worked through it with us. We now go on date nights. I can't imagine where we'd be without the help of this post."

For more information on the Family Advocacy Program services, call 545-7517 or stop by Building 2624 in Soldiers' Plaza.

someone from Columbus or outside the government apply for the same position, it would be offered to the government employee affected by the RIF if that person qualifies for the job.

"The post has recently started a relationship and dialogue with the Shaw Group for the transition," Torres said.

The Directorate of Information Management and Training and Support Center studies are presently under appeal. We are awaiting TRADOC's official ruling on the appeals. For this reason Fort Benning could not include the positions affected by the A-76 studies in the Jan. 25 RIF.

"These are difficult times," said Willie Varner, director of Civilian Personnel. "We have an outstanding work force. They've consistently met the requirements, and now it's sad to see it's to the point of a RIF."

School learns how to 'act not react'

Fitness school qualifies for CPR, response

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"My message to the American people is this ... We are all combatants now. If you don't know how to save your fellow American by first aid, that's a skill you need to pick up."
Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton
commanding general

Soldiers and civilians from the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School rose to the challenge Wednesday on the anniversary of the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

Fifteen instructors and employees were certified in emergency response and CPR, a move the school's commandant said was a direct result of "9-11 lessons learned."

"Unfortunately, sometimes it takes a tragedy to wake us up," said Lt. Col. Bill Rieger. "You can have all the know-how in the world, but if you don't practice and train, you don't know how you'll react in a real situation."

Sgt. 1st Class Willie Rias, a Red Cross CPR instructor, taught the six-hour certification course on information he said should be "given out on a need-to-know basis — everybody needs to know it." He led the participants through various mock emergency scenarios, including a tornado evacuation.

Rieger said the students made several minor mistakes during the first scenario.

"Little things, but mistakes nonetheless. We carried the casualty down the stairs head first, without giving it a thought. That's not necessarily a bad thing, but in hindsight, we decided it would have been safer and certainly easier to go down feet first," Rieger said. "That's exactly why we do this kind of training. It's a systems check."

Steve VanCamp, the school's chief of doctrine, said there's nothing incongruous about fitness school soldiers taking a basic first aid and CPR course.

"To be physically ready to respond to any situation is one step above being physically fit for any situation," VanCamp said. "We assume when we see soldiers, that they're trained and qualified to be first responders. That's not always the case."

Training in emergency response is now a mandatory part of Red Cross CPR training, a result of last year's tragedy, Rieger said.

"If anything came out of all that chaos, it's the knowledge that there exists a need for first responders, people willing to take action and capable of keeping their cool and acting, rather than reacting," he said. "And the only way we can gain that kind of confidence is to train, train, train and practice."

Rieger called the training course "professional development in the area of homeland defense."

"God puts you in the place you're supposed to be for a reason. It's up to you to be prepared," he said. "You cannot stop a terrorist attack. You can't stop someone from having a heart attack or choking. You can't stop an emergency, but you can make sure you're prepared to respond."

Lou Tomasi has been acute-care certified for 30 years. The fitness school athletic trainer said last week's training was different than any he'd done before.

"Things have changed drastically. Techniques are different — everything from the way you position your hands to the way you move the injured person," he said. "Don't assume because you've had CPR training you're up on what's going on. If you haven't had training in the last year, it's time to do it again."

In fact, fitness school cadre said they've, collectively, performed CPR on more than 15 occasions, sometimes successfully, sometimes not. The message is about willingness, said Sgt. 1st Class Ivory Bourage, who was working at the Pentagon a year ago.

"It was a mass evacuation — complete chaos. They were yelling for anyone who could help — medics, nurses, soldiers ... anybody trained to help, even if it was just basic first aid. Everyone wanted to do something, but nobody knew what to do," said Bourage, a former Marine.

"I don't think you can ever be prepared for an emergency of that scale, but it comes down to this: Are you prepared to help? Do you know what to do?" Bourage said.

"You need the skills and you need to practice for the confidence, so you know you won't spaz in an emergency. You want to be able to act and not react to the situation. That's what training is all about."

Sand Hill soldiers move under direct fire

Men train for hostile situations

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Sand Hill soldiers spent some time in the field to learn one the infantry's most critical tasks, shoot, move and communicate, Sept. 13.

Grady moves under fire.

"Movement under live fire will be very important to an infantry soldier," Staff Sgt. Erasmo Evans, drill sergeant with E Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment. "Part of movement under fire includes seeking cover after moving positions."

The soldiers in four-man teams moved forward one at a time. While one soldier moved, his buddies covered him by shooting suppressive fire at the enemy.

"You have to depend on your buddies when moving in teams," said Pvt. Evan Carpenter. "If you lose one member of the team, then the rest could be in a world of hurt.

"We know what is coming up for our country, so we need to concentrate on what we're doing and know what to do in a real-world situation."

While going through the exercise, drill sergeants corrected the soldiers on their movements.

Pvt. Mike Kerr prepares to take out the enemy.

"We let the soldiers know whether or not they are on line with each other," Evans said. "We also critique each of their moves so they know what they did wrong and how to improve on it."

"It's almost absolute that as infantry soldiers we will deploy to a hostile area," Carpenter said. "But in that situation, we need to know what we're doing because we're not going to be on a field with drill sergeants ... the enemy will be out there trying to kill us.

"This is our job," Carpenter said. "We all enlisted to protect our family, friends and most importantly — our freedom."

Benning turns trash to cash

Recycling helps fund improvements to post facilities

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Recycling may not be the first thing on everyone's mind when it comes to cleaning the kitchen after dinner, but making sure paper, cans, bottles and glass get into the designated brown bin can make Fort Benning a better place to live.

"Fitness center renovations, child care improvements, and upgrades to the libraries have all been funded from recycling money," said Debbie Addison, plans officer for Directorate of Community Activities. "I don't think people realize how much the post benefits from recycling."

Fort Benning hauls in about 200,000 pounds of recyclables a month from residents. The post sorts it, breaks it down, and eventually sells it to outside companies. The cash from the trash funds facility improvements as well as saves the post millions of dollars by not dumping the recyclable trash in a landfill.

"We've done everything we can to make recycling an easy process for residents," said Olin Lott, supervisor, Fort Benning Materials Recovery Facility. "We'll do all the dirty work. All families have to do is dump their recyclables into one bin."

Fort Benning's aggressive recycling is attracting the attention of other counties in the Southeast looking to begin their own programs. The county manager from Harris County, the area north of Columbus's Muscogee County, visited Fort Benning just last week to get a close look at the program.

"We have several projects in the works that counties are looking at," said John Brent, chief of Environmental Division. "One of our goals is to create a system to utilize more of our waste on post."

Some of those projects include crushing recyclable glass into dirt for road improvements as well as turning waste into potting soil for residents to use when they need it.

"I think the post has made recycling easy for all of us," said Wendi Delaney, a Norton Court resident. "I recycle just about everything I can, and I'll probably be picking up an extra bin from Self-Help this week because the one I have isn't holding everything."

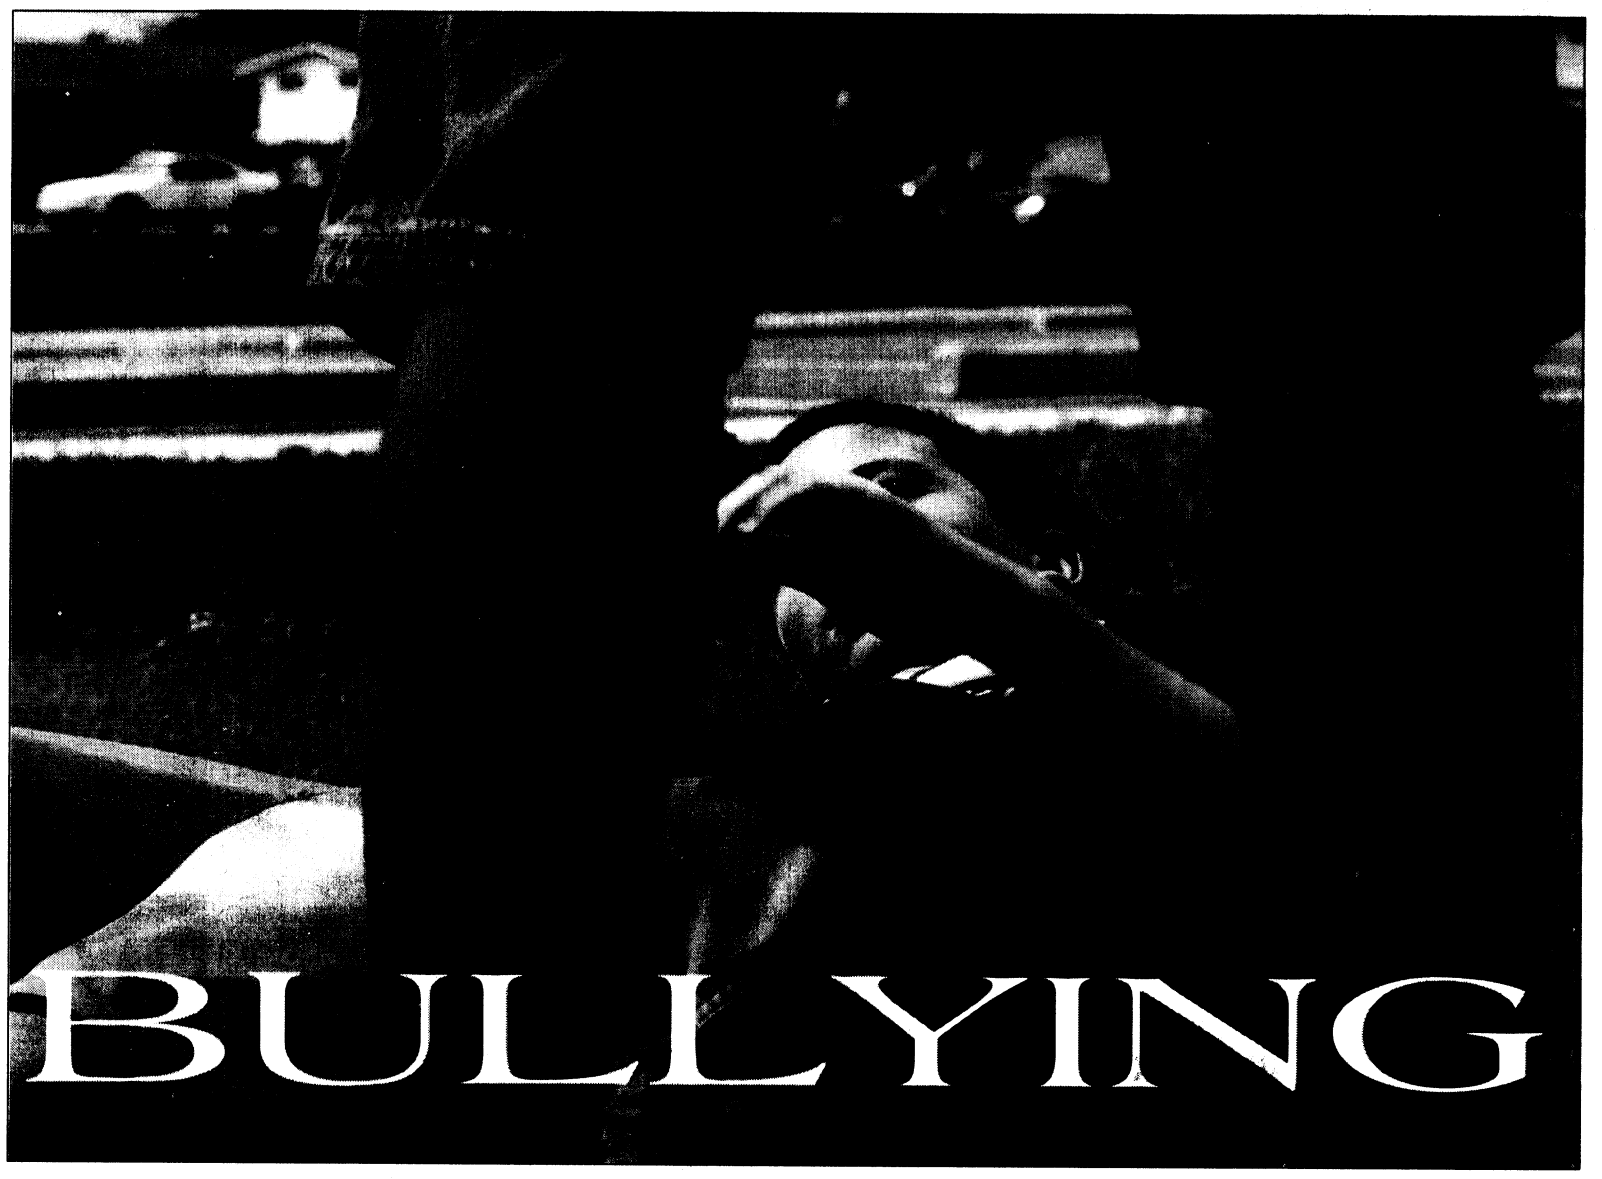
Items that families should be throwing in their brown bin are:

- Any type of paper, old books, phonebooks, newspaper and magazines,
- Plastic items with a number of 1-7 on the bottom,
- Glass bottles,
- Aluminum,
- Cardboard.

"People have misconceptions that it's tough to recycle and they will have to use their personal time to do it," Lott said. "Keeping the bin in a convenient place in the kitchen or near the back door makes it easy."

Soldiers in the barracks and at work can also recycle, Lott said. Containers and recycle dumpsters are placed throughout the barracks and behind buildings.

"We have 65 percent of families involved in some way or the other," Lott said. "We won't be satisfied until we have all the houses filling their bins with recyclables."



A recent mandatory recycling policy may be exactly what it takes to get residents to pay more attention to what they are throwing out.

Fort Benning is cracking down on uncooperative families, and will refuse to empty their trash cans if the designated brown bins aren't also left out.

"We've supplied the brown bins, and if residents want their trash cans picked up, they are going to have to attempt to fill the recycle bins as well," Lott said. "We can't make it any easier than that."

If post improvements and easy pick-ups don't persuade people to take part, maybe the possibility of living near a dump will.

"By recycling we are doing our part to prevent a landfill from being built around here," Lott said. "No one wants that."

Stories by Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

I'm fat,
I'm thin,
I'm short,
I'm tall,
I'm deaf,
I'm blind — hey aren't we all?
Don't laugh at me,
don't call me names,
don't get your pleasure from my pain.
In God's eyes, we're all the same.
Don't laugh at me.

— Don't Laugh At Me

Sticks and stones may break my bones, but words will never harm me.

Yeah, right.

Ask any child who's endured teases and taunts from his classmates. Words hurt, and there's no getting around the facts — most bullying occurs at or near school, where children spend the greatest amount of time with the greatest number of their peers.

It peaks in the middle school years, when students are typically experiencing in-school freedoms for the first time. No more single-file lines to and from class, no more eating lunch with the teacher at the table.

Sixteen percent of all students report having been bullied, though experts say the majority of bullying goes unreported. One in 12 students are regularly harassed, and one in seven admit to being bullies themselves.

Some would have us believe it's a normal, natural part of childhood. If that's so, why does it leave lasting emotional scars? Why do more and more children retaliate by striking back, often with horrific results? Remember Columbine?

I spoke with five Fort Benning middle-schoolers who talked candidly about their experiences with bullying.

13-year-olds Michael, Tony, Sakeisha and Kamilah and 12-year-old Ryan had this to say about bullying:

How do you define "bullying?"

Tony: "It's any means of harm, verbally or mentally or physically, not wanted by another child or adult by someone else."

Mike: "Some people call it teasing, but it's not really funny."

How do you feel when you see or hear someone bullying?

Sakeisha: "I used to think it was funny, and I'd just laugh. I used to do it myself, because everybody else was doing it. But I saw this boy look really sad, and he started to cry, and I started feeling pretty bad about it."

Kamilah: "I don't think it's funny. I don't like to watch it, but I usually don't say anything, cause I figure it'll start something worse. I just walk away."

Have you ever been bullied?

Kamilah: "All the time. Everyday. There's this group of girls who started saying stuff about me when I moved here. They spread rumors, they call me names. They never even gave me a chance to get to know them. I don't know why they hate me."

Workplace bullies cause costly problem

Though bullying typically peaks during the early teen years, statistics show it's becoming more and more of a problem in the workplace.

And like pubescent bullies, the number of female "professional" aggressors is increasing, even as male bullying, or harassment, is on the decline.

According to the Campaign Against Workplace Bullying, a nonprofit organization that conducts workshops on the subject, bullying affects one in five employees, it's more common than racial discrimination or sexual harassment, and 81 percent of bullies are bosses — half are women.

That comes as no surprise to Michelle, a Fort Benning resident who experienced workplace bullying firsthand.

"I wouldn't wish this on anyone," Michelle said, recalling her female bosses erratic, volatile behavior. "She had temper tantrums — 12-year-old behavior. Every morning I'd go in there wondering if the mood of the day was hot or cold."

Teen Advisors tackle teen issues

Group helps teens cope with peer pressure, stress

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Let's face it. Being a teen-ager is tough. You're starting your first year of high school, and you're plagued with all sorts of problems. Your parents aren't getting along, your face is breaking out, you want to fit in, and you want to be cool. Your best friend is running with a bunch of kids who smoke and drink. The peer pressure is overwhelming. You don't know what to do, but you can't talk to your parents about.

Enter Teen Advisors, groups of high school students in 10th through 12th grades, who are ready to talk to you about all of those hard subjects.

"Kids listen to each other," said Susan Barnes, the Teen Advisors national director at the Columbus office. "Through our program, we're trying to get positive peer pressure snowballing."

The Teen Advisor program started in 1987 at Pacelli High School in Columbus, and has expanded into 12 states, Canada, and the Cayman Islands. Students in the TA program sign a one-year contract stating they will not smoke, drink, take drugs or have pre-marital sex.

In November, 1992, the program received a boost after it was featured in Focus on the Family magazine. The following month, President George Bush recognized it as the 987th Point of Light. More than 1,500 requests for information reached the TA main office.

The mission of the peer counseling program is two-fold. Give students who are willing to take a stand on teen issues a peer support group to back them up and give those students an opportunity to reach out to other teen-agers. Seven teen-agers from Fort Benning are participating in the program this year.

Stephanie Koop, a senior at Calvary Christian, is starting her third year as a TA. As a freshman, a group of TAs came to her English class and presented a panel discussion on issues concerning teens. They talked about stress, friends, dating, and smoking, among other topics, Koop said. She found the TAs to be encouraging and helpful.

"Lots of teens think that TAs is just a

Upatoi Terrace road becomes two-way

Travel patterns to change in housing area

Bridgett Siter

Fort Benning's Upatoi Terrace residents will wake up to new road rules Sept. 29, when Terry Street opens for two-way traffic, a move garrison officials say residents have been clamoring for.

"It's come up time and time again in townhall meetings," said Sgt. Maj. Ronnie Porter, community life officer.

"No one knows for sure why they made it one-way to start with. It's been that way as long as anyone can remember, but it's been a major inconvenience for residents."

Community life officers are distributing flyers to educate residents about the change, and MPs will be on hand next Sunday morning to remind drivers to stay in the right-hand lane, Porter said.

Post safety officials took a close look at the change to make sure it would pose no threat to drivers or pedestrians.

Parents are encouraged to walk children to their bus stops until they're comfortable with the new flow of traffic.

Otherwise the reroute is a "quick fix," said Bill Bunt, Fort Benning's chief of range, roads and grounds. Bus drivers have been notified and streets are being restriped to prepare for the change.

"No big deal, just a little something we can do to make life more convenient for residents," Porter said.

Teens: Talk issues of taunting

Who are your friends?

Kamilah: "I don't have any. I had this one friend, my best friend, who lived in Columbus. I was so glad when she moved here, because she was my only friend. That group pulled her into their clique. She picked them over me. She's been cussin' and fussin' at me ever since.

"She hurt me more than they did, because she was my friend. It really hurt."

Anyone else bullied?

Tony: "I've been bullied since the fourth-grade. At first they picked on me because I used to sit by a girl who was my friend. They called me a girl. Then they started picking on me about stupid little things, like what I'm wearing. I used to like to swing instead of play ball, so everyone called me 'girl,' and said I was gay.

"It just keeps getting worse. No one ever has anything good to say about me."

How do you handle it?

Tony: "At first I just tried to ignore it. This year I started dressing different. I used to wear nice pants and stuff, kinda preppy. This year I changed to baggy jeans and T-shirts, because I figured they'd leave me alone if I looked like them. It didn't help. They still do it.

"I've gotten in trouble a couple of times for fighting. Once I threatened to shoot them to get them off my back. You know, it's like a soda bottle in a hot car. It can only take so much before it explodes."

Mike: "I've been suspended and got detention and stuff because I fight back. I used to get bullied, then I got tired of it, so I started bullying. I always pick on him (pointing at Ryan) and he doesn't do anything about it."

Ryan, do you get picked on?

Ryan: "Yeah, every day. They call me names and say nasty rumors. I'm waiting for someone to punch me. If I don't start a fight, I won't get in trouble."

Rumors?

Kamilah: "Yeah, rumors are bad, cause everybody hears them. I've had a lot of rumors about me, and none of them are true. But people want to believe them. It makes you really mad, but mostly it really hurts your feelings.

"I can usually handle it till I get home, but then I just lay my head on my mom's lap and cry. I don't understand why they hate me."

Mike: "A rumor is like a dollar bill — it's going everywhere."

Tell me why people bully?

Ryan: "I think they're just trying to make themselves feel better."

Kamilah: "Because they feel inadequate. They're missing something inside them."

Sakeisha: "I think people bully to defend themselves, I think. You bully to keep from being bullied, cause it's everywhere. If you don't, they're going to pick on you."

Peer pressure?

Kamilah: "I bullied someone once, because I wanted to fit in with the cool girls. This was at the school I used to go to. I put this girl down bad.

"It made me feel so bad, I had to go back to apologize. It's like, 'This just isn't me. Why did I do that?'

"I heard once that you reap what you sew. Maybe that's why I'm being bullied."

How does being picked on make you feel?

Sakeisha: "I just get mad."

Tony: "It feels terrible. I cry a lot."

Kamilah: "It's not right. It makes you feel ashamed, but there's no reason to be ashamed. It's the bullies that should be ashamed."

Have you tried to get help?

Kamilah: "I told my parents and the counselor. When (the bullies) found out, it just got worse. But I know I did the right thing."

Mike: "I just started fighting back. That's the only thing that works."

Kamilah: "You can't fight, because that's probably what they want. You have to be better than that. Besides, if you fight, you get the reputation as a bully yourself."

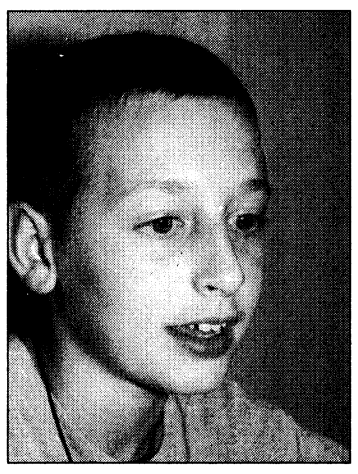
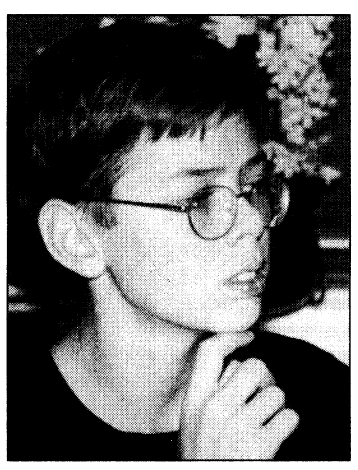
Fort Benning Schools will institute a bully prevention program called Kindness — Pass It On, said Gail Wilson, director of accountability.



The program is designed to increase awareness and provide strategies for students and teachers to deal with the problem of bullying.

"It's a problem everywhere. We can be the tool to educate our children, to put a stop to bullying in school, at home, on the playground and even in the workplace," Wilson said.



The Fort Benning community is invited to the program kick-off at 7 p.m. Thursday at Faith Middle School. Illusionist Eric Reamer will present Too Cool to BULLY.

Employees: Confront bullies at work

Michelle's boss ridiculed employees in front of one another, intercepted e-mails and yelled at customers. She criticized employees about their job performance, appearance and personal lives.

"I became real isolated, because I felt singled out. I just stayed in my (office)," Michelle said. "It got to the point where I was coming home crying. It affected my whole life."

After two years of abuse, Michelle sought guidance from union representatives and transferred to another office, this time with a male boss.

"I'm not saying it's a woman thing, but the difference is amazing," she said. "Things are so much better now. I wouldn't put up with that kind of behavior again."

A study by Dr. Gary Namie, author of The Bully at Work, showed women are more likely to be targeted by bullies at work and the vast majority of bullies hold a higher position than their targets.

Namie defines bullying as "the deliberate, repeated, hurtful verbal mistreatment of a person by a cruel perpetrator."

The clear message, Namie said, is that women are more likely to be harassed, more likely to be the harassed by a woman, and increasingly more likely to be the aggressor.

"As a man, I'm surprised by those figures," he said. "But I'm surrounded by women who say, 'What's the big surprise?'"

Namie said workplace bullying results in loss of employee morale, reduced productivity, high turnover, law suits and potential violence — costing American businesses up to $5 billion each year.

Four of Michelle's coworkers asked to be transferred within a year, she said, but the perpetrator has not been removed.

That's because workplace bullies are typically perceived as high-achievers and aggressive performers in today's success-driven society, Namie said, when in fact, they're detrimental to the efficiency of their colleagues and subordinates.

"It's the aura of high level bullies that make them seen as performers. Truth be told, they don't do any of the work, they squeeze it out of everybody under them," Namie said.

"I became isolated, because I felt singled out. It got to the point where I was coming home crying. It affected my whole life."

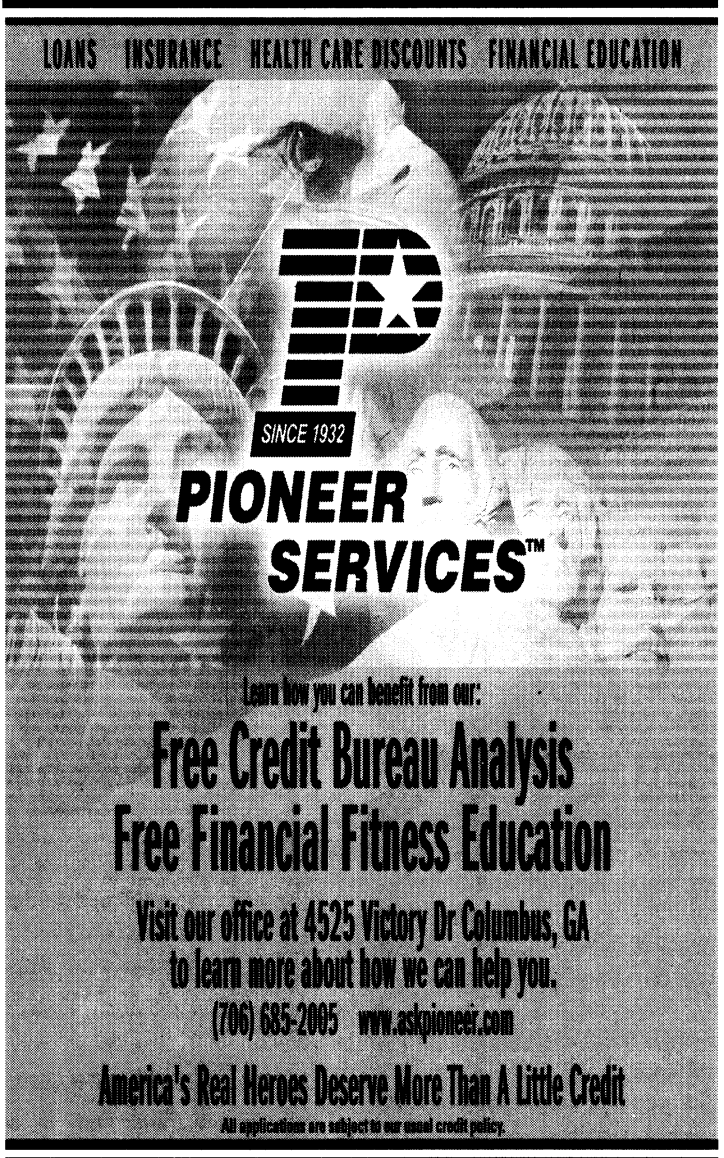
Michelle
a victim of workplace bullying

According to the Campaign Against Workplace Bullying, Michelle handled her boss in an appropriate, safe manner. She confronted the bully when her personal correspondence was invaded and documented grievances as they occurred. When the problem escalated, she turned to her union for assistance and reported the problem to her bosses boss.

Workplace bullies, like schoolyard bullies, prey on those they perceive as weak. The Campaign Against Workplace Bullying recommends the target:

- Speak up for herself calmly
- Refuse to be interrupted
- Be firm. Don't soften the message with "I'm sorry," or "This might not be a good time, but ..."
- Document everything
- If co-workers are also victims, solicit their help. Encourage them to document and pay a visit to the bosses boss together.

Unfortunately, there's no law against being mean. Harassment is only illegal when it's based on age, gender, race, disability and other classes protected by law. It's difficult to prosecute on the grounds of emotional distress.



That's why Michelle chose to transfer, she said. The problem has been acknowledged by upper management. It's up to them to make a change for the good of the company.

"For my sanity and the good of my family, I had to leave. It's not right or fair, but that's the way it is," she said.

Actor to bring Bible to life

Orlando man to perform Revelation

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

The Bible's book of Revelation is filled with enlightening passages, and throughout time there have been many opinions to what the meaning is behind those passages.

For soldiers and families interested in learning about the book of Revelation, a word for word performance of the book will be presented in its entirety this Sunday at the Infantry Chapel.

"People need to see the emotions behind the words, not just the paper," said Marquis Laughlin, program coordinator and sole performer in the production.

"These are some of the most powerful words we can ever hear. I hope this production speaks to everyone who sees it."

Laughlin is a former Los Angeles actor, who in 1992 decided to use his talents to bring the words of the Bible to life.

In the past five years he has traveled the country performing John's Gospel and the books of Genesis, Daniel and Ecclesiastes.

"I couldn't believe he was doing an entire presentation, word for word from the Bible, purely by his memory," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Daniel Taylor, deputy post chaplain who first saw the production while visiting a church in South Carolina. "I knew we had to bring the performance to Fort Benning. Soldiers are moved by his presentation."

Laughlin first performed John's Gospel last year to a crowded chapel on Fort Benning, and he looks forward to inspiring even more soldiers with the book of Revelation performance this year.

"The book of Revelation is a complicated, but true piece of the Christian religion that is important for all of us to understand," said Laughlin, who lives in Orlando and often performs at the Holy Land Experience Biblical Theme Park. "Many people who have seen my show are surprised on how near the book of Revelation is to coming true."

The presentation will be performed in two 45-minute acts, with a short remission in between. All families are invited to attend the free production, which begins at 10 a.m.

Hospital helps teach children smoking dangers

Maj. Dana K. Renta
Martin Army Community Hospital

It's that time of year again — the time when children go back to school and family physicians from Martin Army Community Hospital go to both on-post and local community schools to teach the fifth-graders about healthy choices.

Tobacco use continues to hold the center of attention for many of our youth.

Currently in the United States, more than 4 million children younger than 18 years are regular smokers. Nearly 90 percent begin smoking by the age of 18. Each day more than 60,000 children smoke for the first time, and another 3,000 become daily smokers.

Annually these statistics add up to more than 1 million new, underage smokers; approximately one-third will die prematurely from smoking-related illnesses. An additional 15.5 million children are exposed to secondhand smoke in their homes.

Tar Wars is a national, pro-health tobacco education program developed by physicians for fifth- graders. It was developed in response to this growing, yet preventable, health crisis.

Since its inception in 1988, this program has reached over 2.5 million children worldwide with physicians at Martin Army Community Hospital having taught more than 5,000 local students since 1995.

The Tar Wars program focuses on why children begin using tobacco products, the health risks involved in using tobacco, and understanding marketing strategies used by the tobacco industry to attract young smokers as well as discovering other options for healthier lifestyles.

The program culminates in a national poster contest.

The hospital invites fifth-graders to join our Tar Wars effort in the fight against tobacco and help our children make the pro-health choice!

For more information about Tar Wars, check out the Web site at www.tarwars.org.

ADVISORS: Tackle issues

nonsmoking club," Koop said. "But we're a group of people with the same beliefs who are involved in freshman class outreach and trying to help them make the transition into high school.

"We have the opportunity to reach out to the community, and also spend some time looking inward at ourselves and our peers."

Koop knows she has had an impact on someone when they come forward to talk with the TAs after their presentations.

Although the principles of the program; integrity, character, and leadership, are based on Judeo-Christian beliefs, the program does equally well in secular settings. The TAs, whether Christian or not, are all bound by the same contract and are held accountable for their actions.

"We have a TA honor council," Barnes said.

Students who fail to abide by their contract are held accountable by their peers and the younger students they interact with.

Ross Boston is a sophomore from Columbus High getting ready to join the TA program. He was introduced to the program last year at the TA weekly Bible study group.

Boston said he is looking forward to this weekend's Teen Advisor retreat in Alabama. During the retreat, new TAs learn more about the program as well as some of the nuts and bolts of preparing for and conducting classroom sessions with the freshmen. At the end of the retreat, TAs sign abstinence contracts.

"I have heard that you can gain a lot personally from the retreat," Boston said. "I'm also looking forward to making some new friends and being part of the TA support group."

TAs in Columbus get together for monthly social activities to relax and have some good old fun.

Meghan Doyle, a sophomore at Christian Heritage Academy is ready to be a good role model for the community.

Doyle's school does not have a formal program of its own, but that isn't stopping her from getting involved in TA. She and two others from CHA will attend the retreat and will have the opportunity to go to other high schools to participate in freshmen sessions.

"The program gives freshmen people to look up to and provide good influences for them," Doyle said. "The upperclassmen can have a way to help younger people."

The TA program is expanding this year to include the newly opened Northside High and an outreach to the middle schools.

A TA team presents assemblies for eighth graders on what to expect in high school. A grant from Chattahoochee Valley will enable a pilot middle school TA program where seventh- and eighth-graders advise sixth-graders in classroom sessions.

"It is awesome and inspiring to watch these kids stand before their peers and say they are drug and alcohol free and to watch the ripple effect of the positive peer pressure from year to year," Barnes said.

The third grade students were given an assignment to write a short description of their opinions of how they feel about this year at McBride School. The following is a sample of some of those writings:

Third grade at McBride is the best place to be in the whole world. This is my first year here, and I have the nicest teacher. She lets us eat sesame noodles with chopsticks when we read a story about a girl from China. We get to go to the computer lab everyday! I am glad we moved here.

This year in third grade is very exciting because we get to learn cursive handwriting. Third grade has the most wonderful teachers. I really think I am going to like this year.

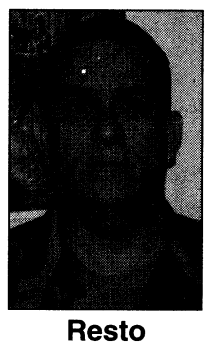
Jesus helps believers cope with stress

God is in control when burdens heavy to bear

Chaplain (Capt.) Jose Resto
29th Infantry Regiment

Come to me all you who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn from me, for I am gentle and lowly in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. My yoke is easy and My burden is light. (Matthew11: 28-30)



Stress is a fact of life. God has made us as complex spiritual, physical, intellectual and emotional beings.

And today's reality is that stress affects every area of our being. No matter how well prepared we are intellectually, physically, emotionally and spiritually, stressful situations will occur at any place, any time.

What is stress? Stress is the response of the body to any demand made upon it.

We live with serious stress because of unexpected changes. When unexpected changes are devastating, we often feel that God is nowhere to be found. Events happen that change our lives drastically: a death, an accident or a sickness There is no way we can control these things. But it helps to remember that God is in control and aware of every detail.

REFLECTIONS

Resto

Technology provides a convenient lifestyle. We have televisions, microwaves, washers, dryers, computers and cars. But life seems to move at a much faster pace these days. We don't have time to rest, eat, and to enjoy life, to worship God or to spend time with our family any more.

Are you experiencing a great deal of stress? God's powerful presence may always be counted on and especially at those points in life where people feel most pressure and anguish. Jesus will give you rest from fear, rest from depression, rest from worry. He will give you the necessary rest no matter the problem.

His presence and help is available at any time. The only requirement is to ask in prayer. In the midst of our busy lives, we can find rest in him.

A lot of people cope with stress by trying to forget about their troubles by drinking alcohol or by taking sleeping pills at night to have some rest. Many are heavy laden — some with the cares of life, some with pain and sickness and some with the consciousness of sin. Jesus invites all who are carrying heavy burden of life and sinners to come to him to have the desire rest and peace that every person looking for.

The invitation itself is, "Come unto me." Jesus alone can give you peace and rest. Jesus can gave you the freedom from stress.

He can refresh your soul and give you peace to the mind distracted by doubts. None can give you rest, but only Jesus. But in order to find the true peace and rest, we must come and take the yoke of Jesus Christ.

Remember his yoke is easy and his burden is light. Amen.

Expectations affect marital bliss

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

We all have expectations. Expectations affect every aspect of a marriage.

According to Dr. Savanna McCain, "Expectations are beliefs about the way things will be or should be — including behaviors, roles, and relationships." Unmet expectations lead to sadness, disappointment, frustration and anger.

Our culture, ethnic background, and moral upbringing influence the answers to these questions. Who will do what work inside and outside the home? How will decisions be made? How will closeness, intimacy, and distance be maintained? How will spiritual beliefs be put into practice? Who will pay the bills, and how will financial decisions be made?

Koop

Some expectations are unreasonable. It is simplistic to think that a relationship will never experience strong disagreements. It is naive to think that couples are able to sustain intense passionate feelings for each other throughout their marriage. The honeymoon stage of marriage does not last forever.

Unfortunately many spouses are either not aware of their expectations or do not voice their expectations to their mates. If you want to have your expectations met, then you must voice them to your partner. Bring your expectations out into the open. Talk to your mate. Discussing your expectations allows you to manage them more effectively.

Unmet expectations produce irritation and disappointment. Proverbs 13:12 reads, "Hope deferred makes the heart sick, but a desire fulfilled is a tree of life."

Would you like to make your marriage better? Free counseling and support are available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 545-1760.

Therefore do not worry about tomorrow, for tomorrow will worry about itself. Each day has enough trouble of its own — Matthew 6:34

Sergeant competes in tournament final

Soldier among best in world in martial arts

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

A soldier from 3rd Brigade placed second in two events and third place in another event at the Battle of Atlanta world martial arts competition in Atlanta Sept. 6-7.

After his green belt wins in weapons, form and sparring in the 30-39 age category, 1st Sgt. Michael Tyree, 203rd Support Battalion is now ranked among the world's best with a ranking of second in the world in weapons and form and third in sparring.

"He's definitely dedicated to his training," said Cathy Bouzo, instructor at Fiama's Martial Arts Academy, Columbus. "He trains five to six nights a week."

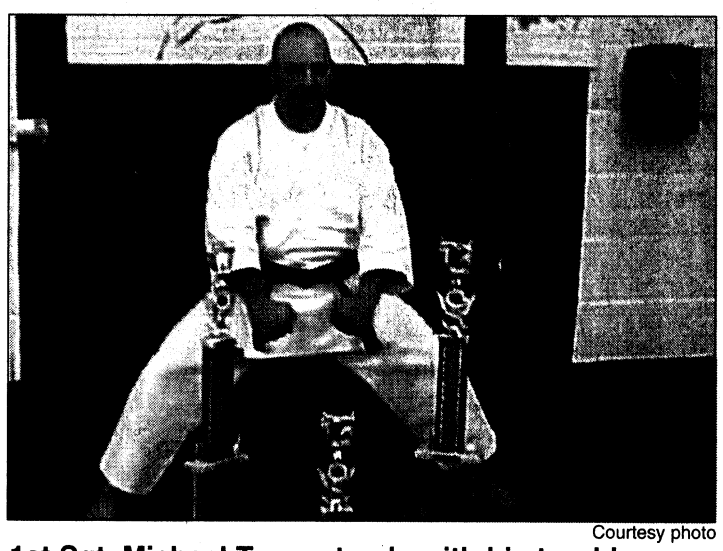
Tyree attributes his success to training he received in Yoshukai, a Japanese style of martial arts, from David Bouzo, Cathy's husband.

"He's the reason I've been able to do so well," Tyree said. "I've learned a lot from the school."

Placing in the events was a great accomplishment for Tyree, but obviously he wanted to place first, he said.

Tyree has been involved in martial arts for eight years.

He's received training in tae kwon do, Korean karate, and aikido, Japanese self-defense, which uses an opponent's momentum against them to gain an advantage. The instruction in Yoshukai from David, a five-time world champion, has helped give Tyree the ability and confidence to progress in martial arts.



Tyree returns the favor by helping kids gain confidence.

"It (Yoshukai) tests your character," Tyree said. "I've seen very insecure children come into the academy and after a few weeks they are confident and secure with themselves."

He works great with children, Cathy said.

Next up for Tyree is the national championship in Phenix City, Ala. Sept. 29.

"If I'm not in the desert next year fighting for this country, I'm going to be back there and win the title," Tyree said.

Bears' running storms past Greenwaves, 27-0

Special teams controls tempo of game

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

As a storm rolled into Columbus from the southwest Saturday night, the Bears of Griffin High School rolled in from the northeast to devastate the Greenwaves of Spencer High School, 27-0, at Memorial Stadium at South Commons.

Spencer, 0-3, searched to find an answer to their array of mistakes as fumble after fumble and flag after flag fell to the marshlike turf.

"It's upsetting," said senior Ricky Graves. "Especially getting shut out."

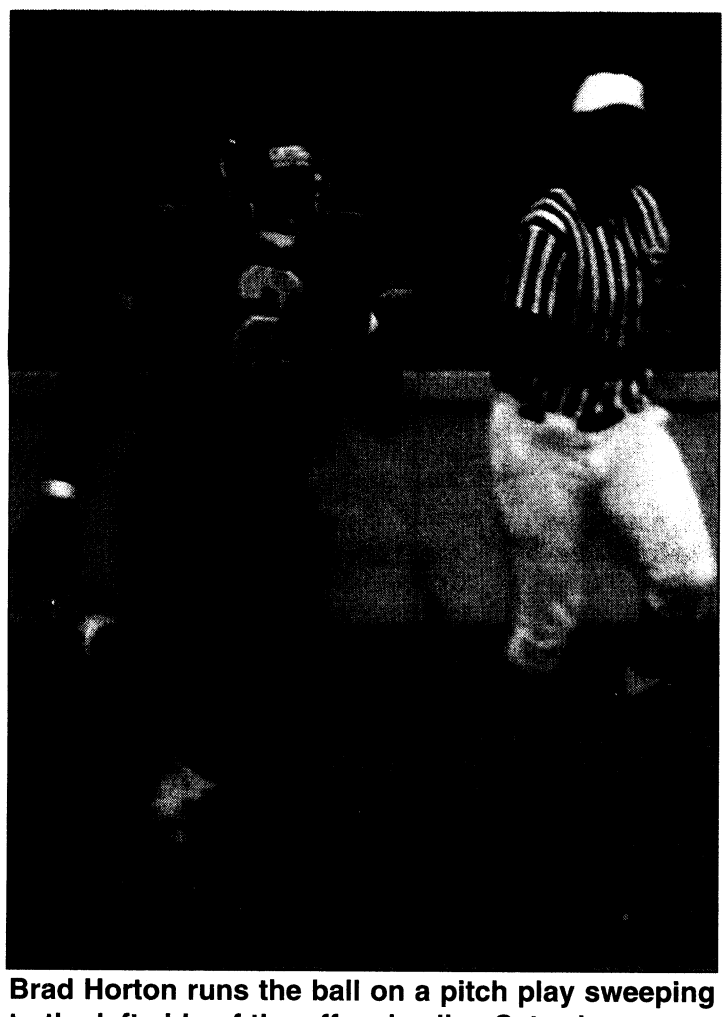
Things went bad from the beginning when Bears' Sherrod Martin intercepted a Jerome Coverson pass and took it to the house for six in the first minute of the game.

"They did a really good job scouting us," Graves said, who hasn't fumbled a ball all season. "Our offense didn't play the way they're used to playing."

The Greenwaves were expected to dominate the ground game, especially since the rain would limit the amount of passing both teams would do, said Greenwave's tailback Shamon Smith, who gained 227 yards Sept. 6. However, the weather seemed to frustrate the Greenwaves and take them out of their game.

"I would see the holes open, but they closed up really quick," Smith said, who ran for 120 yards Saturday night.

After having good field position for most of the first quarter, Griffin's Martin established himself as the leader of the Bears' special teams.



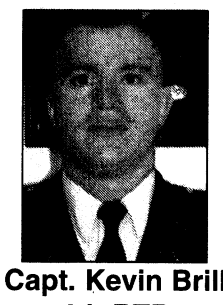
Returning punts, Martin maneuvered his way through the Greenwaves like a surfer paddling to the break, and even when he was hit by a wave, he plowed right through it.

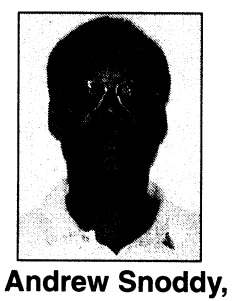
Changing the field positioning in the Bears favor, the Greenwaves defense couldn't hold the offensive juggernaut.

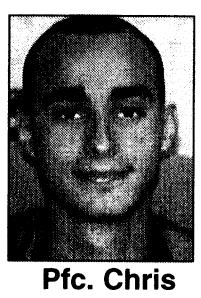
"Their defense looked good," Smith said. "They kept us on our toes."

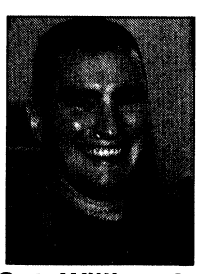
Both teams slid all over the field because of the rain, yet for second straight week, the Greenwaves have had 27 points scored on them.

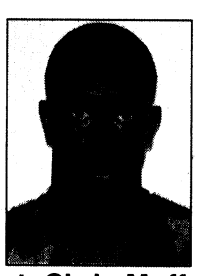
"We have three weeks to think about this and prepare for our next game," Graves said. "We'll workout out the kinks and be ready to win our next game."











Brad Horton runs the ball on a pitch play sweeping to the left side of the offensive line Saturday.

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Spencer High School's Shamon Smith runs for eight of his 120 yards during Saturdays' loss to Griffin High School 27-0.

Overload, rest keys to PT performance

Overuse, intensity may lead to injury

Lt. Col. Bill Rieger
U.S. Army Physical Fitness School

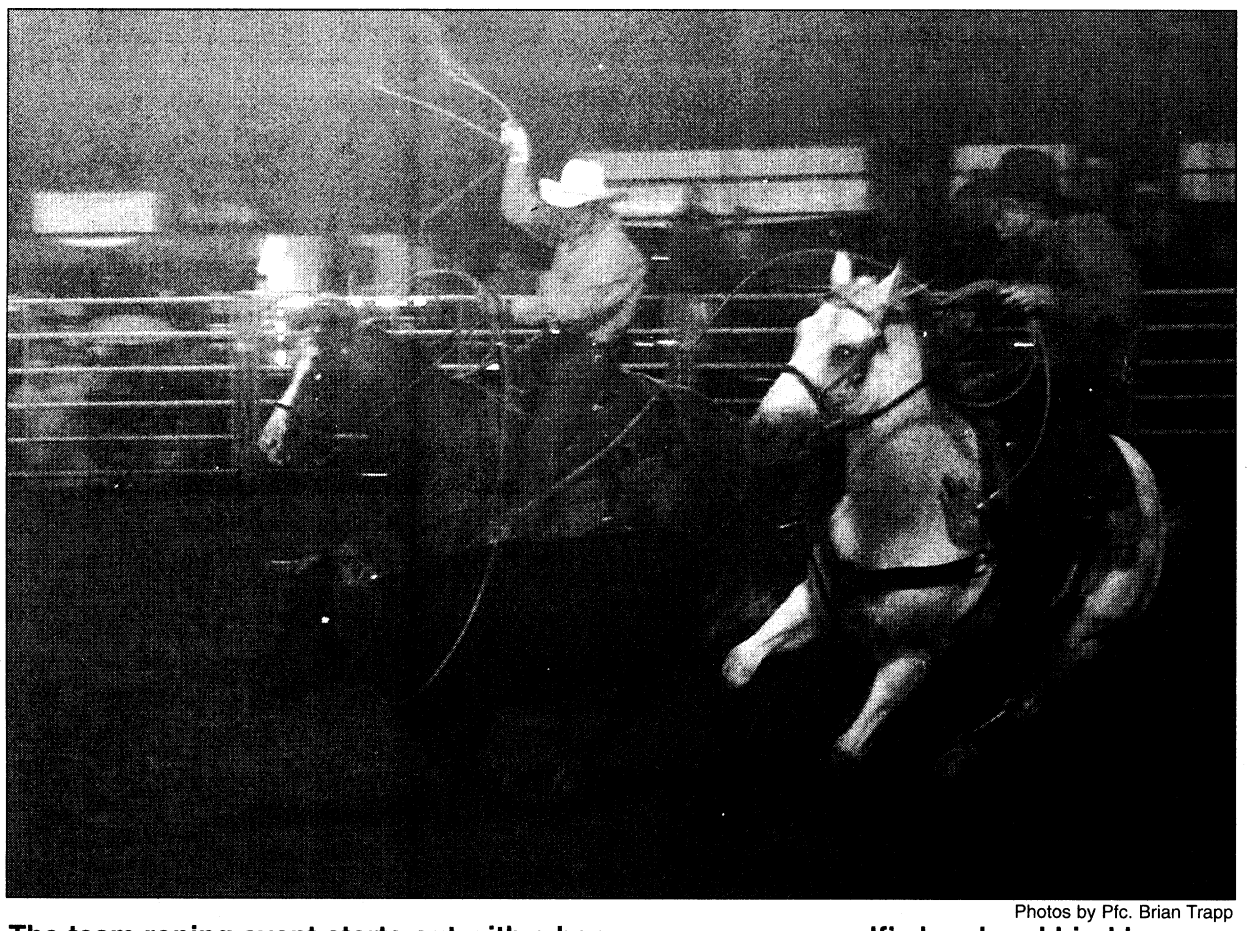
This is the final story of a three-part series that addresses the importance of a competent coach in youth sports.

Thorough understanding about intensity, duration and frequency in the preparation and execution of conditioning programs can "make or break" an athlete as well as determine success or failure of a season, but periodization can also help to reduce overuse injuries and prevent over-training. This principle involves the systematic cycling of training loads over set periods of time with well-defined rest periods.

These concepts are fundamental to successful coaching and supervision of youth.

Employing then will allow our youth to enjoy the many benefits of "organized play." Seriously addressing them is a must.

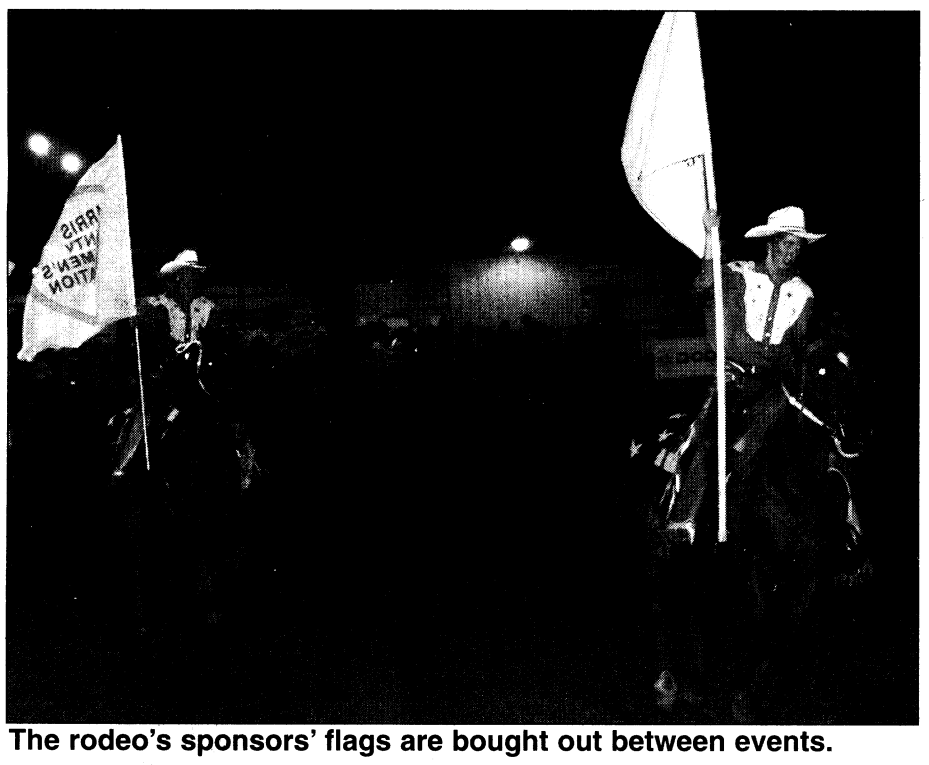
The problems of overzealous coaches and parents are so prevalent in youth sports that dozens of books and countless articles have been written to counteract this undue influence. The list of books ranges from teaching parents and coaches how to assess talent (Arnot and Gaines, 1986), to teaching pediatricians about youth sports injuries (Micheli, 1984), to information about the epidemiology of sports injuries (Caine, Caine and Lindner, 1996).



In addition, no fewer than 20 position statements have been issued by professional organizations (American Academy of Pediatrics, American College of Sports Medicine, American Heart Association, American Medical Association and the National Strength and Conditioning Association) addressing precautions that should apply to the sports participation of youth.

It has always been recognized that participation in youth sports by children resulted in tremendous benefits for the individual and for society in general.

It is also clear that sport is a double edge sword in that negative consequences may result if programs are not planned and executed correctly.



Proper education of coaches, limiting the influence of overzealous promoters and paying attention to important guidelines outlined by various professional organizations are all factors which can help youth sports achieve the optimal benefits for our youth that they were originally

Rodeo entertains Hamilton

The Hamilton rodeo bucked off Sept. 13 with roping, riding and some displays.

The night was filled with bronco riding, calf wrestling, bull riding and several other events, including a children's calf chase.

The rodeo didn't have the expected turn out because of rain, which eventually turned into a downpour. The events continued on into the night but with many less spectators.

The rodeo's sponsors' flags are bought out between events.

Car Buyers Finally Have Wish Come True

Rivertown Ford brings original "Price Slicer" and $99 car prices to Columbus thru Saturday Only

Columbus, GA- What would make a car dealer sell perfectly good used cars for as low as $99? Even sell new Fords at thousands off normal manufacturer's suggested retail prices? Rivertown's General Sales Manager, Brad Williams gives a simple answer: "Desperation."

"We're really, really pinched for space," Williams explained further. "New car sales are the best they've ever been. Plus, the last couple of years have seen a huge increase in leases. Now, those leases are expiring and they're coming back by the dozen. We have literally run out of room for all the used cars."

This desperation has prompted Rivertown to fly in a team of professionals to assist his managers to prepare for this weekend sales event. This weekend only, the "Price Slicer" team will be at Rivertown Ford evaluating the prices on a record number of preowned vehicles to be drastically sliced to move them out...right before the customer's eyes.

This is the "Price Slicer" sales event that has been written about in newspapers across the country. While other local dealers have hosted lesser knock-offs of the "Price Slicer" concept, Rivertown is the first to bring the "real deal" to Columbus.

"These guys are serious," Williams says. "We've instructed the Price Slicer Team to determine the best prices to move the most vehicles in just one day."

Obviously, the dealership being overloaded with inventory means a great selection for consumers. "No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here. Mini-vans, and sport utilities if you need room for a big family. Used Nissans, Fords, Mitsubishis, Hondas, Toyotas, Nissans, Mazdas, Chevys, Dodges, you name it... there's a great selection of everything from 87's through 2002! Plus tons of full size work trucks, four by fours, even extended cab models."

The "Price Slicer" and his team travel the United States disposing of excess dealer inventory via dramatic price cuts.

"No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here"

Here's how it works: The "Slicer" and his team have been in town figuring bottom-line pricing since Monday. Sale prices are placed on the windshield of every vehicle before the sale day.

Wednesday, the fun begins. Pre-registration begins at 9 AM and Rivertown recommends customers arrive early for the best selection. In fact, the public can register even faster by visiting www.priceslicersale.com. After a brief registration, customers simply choose the vehicle they want. Then the "Price Slicer" begins slicing the price on the windshield thousands of dollars. And, it is true, new and used cars that normally sell from $5000 to $20,000 will be marked down thousands below MSRP, with some perfectly good used cars to be sold for as low as $99. Even brand new 2002 Fords are included.

All the cars that will be offered during this event will be on display for customer inspection. You can also pre-register for the sale by going to www.priceslicersale.com.

"If credit problems have been in your past, that's no problem," Williams said. "During the 'Price Slicer' sale you can get financing for the car you want with no hassle. Just bring in a valid drivers license, a payroll stub, and a bill from your utilities." Bank representatives will be on hand to assist all credit customers needs.

Shaw Group gets ready

Opportunities may ease sting of RIF

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Pat Kenny is no stranger to Fort Benning. The retired army officer last served at Fort Benning in 1992 in what was then called the Directorate of Engineering and Housing.

A number of things have changed since then.

Kenny is now the project manager for the Shaw Group, a nationwide company that recently won the contract to take over all Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics housing functions at Fort Benning starting Jan. 26.

Thursday Kenny presented information about the company and job opportunities that will be available within the Shaw Group. The two sessions were attended mainly by DFEL employees who expect to receive reduction in force letters next month.

"Things change. Nothing stays constant. This is a brand new ball game."

Pat Kenny
Shaw Group project manager

During the next several months, the group will conduct inventories, sign for buildings and equipment, develop standing operating procedures and hire a work force of 500.

"The objective is to have no significant hiccups during the transition period," said director of DFEL Col. Greg Kuhr. "It's going to be a difficult process because of the enormity of the task."

3rd Brigade comes home

1,300 soldiers return to open arms

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Approximately 1,300 soldiers from the 3rd Brigade returned from Kuwait this week to excited crowds of wives and children.

Family members attended ceremonies at Kefurt Gym to welcome soldiers who arrived in waves from a six-month training mission as part of Operation Desert Spring.

"These soldiers represented the Army, the community and their families well," said Brig. Gen. Lloyd Austin, assistant division commander for Maneuver. "They completed their peacekeeping mission, while their families took care of things back home. I'm very proud of both the families and the soldiers."

Hours before the soldiers arrived on Kelley Hill, families started gathering.

"We're all excited about them coming back," said Shannon Buchanan. "The wait has been long, and we're all just ready to get back to the way things were before they deployed."

As time for the soldiers to arrive got closer and closer, children were jumping up and down asking their moms when their dads would be back.

"I'm so excited my daddy's home," said Daryl Newton, 7. "The first thing I'm going to do is drag him to the TV and play video games with him. That's what I missed the most about him."

While the soldiers were away children did their part to help on the homefront. Most children said they helped their mothers with some of the chores around the house.

"I helped my mom out so she

14th Field Hospital soldier dies

Alcohol, speed cause death of sergeant

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

A 14th Field Hospital soldier died Saturday morning after he fled from a policeman on his motorcycle and crashed into a fence at the corner of Manchester Expressway and Hamilton Road in Columbus.

Sgt. Raymond Zeliff, 23, died with a blood alcohol level of .14 at The Medical Center, according to Muscogee County Sheriff's Capt. J. McCray, in a Columbus Ledger Enquirer article.

A deputy saw Zeliff, an operating room technician, and another motorcyclist speeding on Veterans Parkway prior to pulling up behind them at a red light. The two saw the police officer and ran the light. Zeliff hit a bump in the road and flew off his bike. The other man escaped.

Family and friends gathered at a memorial service for the 36th Engineer Group NCO of the Quarter Wednesday.

His unit will miss him, said Lt. Col. Glenn Iacovetta, 14th Field Hospital commander.

"Sergeant Zeliff was a great soldier," Iacovetta said. "He was a pivotal player in the hospital's mission, and he helped make it more efficient and successful with his hard work and dedication to duty."

Zeliff was single with no children. He was attending the

They only want to honor heroes, to leave a legacy more meaningful than the brass plaques and the cannon they shine as part of their morning duties.

And if Paul Ramsey, armor soldier, William Trevathan, owner of a recycling business, and Chad Neibert, a landscape contractor, found themselves involved in an "ambush" with the Columbus city council last week, it wasn't because they actually planned it that way.

The three men are the driving force behind a memorial now under construction along the Chattahoochee Riverwalk near the future site of the Infantry Museum. The memorial is Officer Candidate School Class 06-02's idea of a voluntary class project.

"No other class in the history of OCS has ever done anything like this," said Capt. Cecil Henry. "Normally, a class project involves volunteering in the community with Habitat for Humanity or with veterans."

The memorial garden is based on an Italian formal design that was modified to fit the site, said Neibert, project manager.

Ramsey, Trevathan and Neibert have been working on the project for a little more than a month, and spent two weeks

COMMENTARY

I remember the moment we arrived here three years ago, greeted by a sign welcoming us to "The Best Army Installation in the World."

"Prove it," I thought, and who could blame me. We'd just left a post with so few redeeming qualities I doubted any duty station could renew my faith in the Army way of life.

By golly, Fort Benning has, and when I hear people bemoaning the fickle fates that brought them here, I have to wonder where the heck they've come from.

It's all about perspective. Just as every military installation has its challenges, so too it has its charms. If I fail to find them, who can I blame?

Fort Benning's charms just happen to be a bit easier to spot than most. I've loved this post from the beginning, warts and all, and I'm not alone. Just look at the number of retirees who remain in the area. Of course the hospital and commissary have their draw.

No, there's something special about Fort Benning. Lots of somethings special. But for the sake of brevity, I've narrowed it down. With apologies to David Letterman, I've compiled my own Top Ten list of reasons Fort Benning is the best installation in the world.

•10 — Location, location, location. We're smack-dab in the middle of the sunny South. Three hours to the north will get you to the mountains, three hours south will get you to the beach, and three minutes in any direction will get you to a really good barbecue restaurant.

• 9 — We're forever preserving history and making history at Fort Benning, and we have more statues, monuments, historical sites and veteran reunions than you can shake a stick at. If you're not moved by what you see on Sacrifice Field or the Infantry Museum — if you just don't "get it" — I challenge you to attend just one veterans' memorial ceremony. You'll be a better person for it.

• 8 — Rangers, rangers and more rangers.

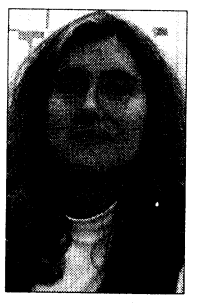
• 7 — The annual parade of freakish, perturbed pseudo-intellectual hippies in November. Who needs Mardi Gras?

• 6 — It's raining men ... and the occasional woman. I still get a kick out of watching soldiers plummet from the 250 foot jump towers. Even unoccupied, they're a constant reminder that the best of the best are trained here at Fort Benning.

• 5 — Ticks, snakes and alligators (oops, that's from the list of things I hate about Fort Benning)

• 4 — Did I mention rangers?

• 3 — The very best schools in the world, bar none.



• 2 — If it's culture you're looking for, look no farther. It's right at your doorstep. You can visit the Possum Trot Auction on Friday night and the Springer Opera House on Saturday. Eat lunch at The Cock of the Walk and supper at the Garlic Clove.

• And the number one reason Fort Benning is the best installation in the world is ... drum roll, please ... it's 496.2 miles from Fayetteville, N.C.

Eh? What did you say?

COMMENTARY

Sometimes what we hear isn't what was said. Case in point: A couple of weeks ago I was talking with a ranger about this summer's high attrition rate at ranger school.

We started out talking about the weather and how hot it was.

The conversation went something like this:

"So why do you think the students are falling out?" I asked.

"Nosy aren't we?" was what I heard. I thought to myself, "Of course I'm nosy! That's why I'm in the business I'm in." But instead I said, "Yes, but you can tell me."

Once again the ranger replied, "Nosy aren't we."

I agreed with him. "Of course I'm nosy. This isn't a secret. Is the reason for the high attrition a secret?"

"Nosy aren't we."

Three strikes. I gave up and started talking about something else, but my curiosity was piqued. And since there is more than one way to gather intel and national security wasn't at risk, I asked his wife. I told her about the conversation since she is as inquisitive as I am.

Nosy aren't we!

Later she called me and told me I didn't hear what I thought I heard.

The reason for the high attrition — no zero week.

No zero week, nosy aren't we!

Hellooooooo Lori! Is anyone home? Boy did I feel stupid. I took part in a conversation and didn't have a clue what the other person was saying. I wasn't hearing what was said, but what I heard made sense to me.

I am nosy. So what was said made perfect sense even though it wasn't what I wanted to hear. I am nosy. And now I am working on being a better listener ... even though I followed one of the rules for effective communication: Repeat what you heard and make sure it was what was said.

Obviously I need to work on that because Tuesday morning when I asked a coworker how she was feeling, her reply was "Fine now that I'm sleeping better."

My reply, "You aren't sleeping well?"

"I'm sleeping fine. What I said was I am seeing better. I had eye surgery yesterday."

I was blaming the revving engines and the lawn mowers for the "nosy aren't we" conversation. There's no excuse for the "sleeping better" miscommunication.

It is time to get my hearing checked but until that happens, What did you say?

CG recognizes Hispanic Americans contributions

In recognition of Hispanic Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, the period from Sept. 15 to Oct. 15 has been proclaimed National Hispanic Heritage Month. The theme for this year's observance is "Strength in Unity, Faith and Diversity."

During National Hispanic Heritage Month, we reflect on the history of a people who are an important part of the American population. Hispanics were among the earliest European settlers in the New World, long before the birth of the United States. Hispanics as a people share a rich and diverse history. With roots extending from Europe, to South America, the Caribbean and Central America. Hispanic culture has strengthened our national character with invaluable perspective, experiences and values.

Hispanic Americans' commitment to the principles of freedom and democracy are reflected through their numerous military contributions over the years. This community has given us heroes, soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen and has supported this country in combat in all conflicts from the Revolutionary War, through World Wars I and II, to the peace keeping deployments in the Balkans today. Hispanic Americans have been recognized for their service in combat; remember the 65th Infantry Regiment, "The Boriqueneers," from Puerto Rico who bravely fought during the Korean War. Recall the 38 Hispanic Americans, who were awarded the Medal of Honor, many making the ultimate sacrifice.

Hispanic Americans play an integral role in our nation's success in government, business, science, the arts, entertainment and every other field of endeavor. Their talent, creativity and achievements continue to energize our nation.

National Hispanic Heritage Month provides the opportunity to increase awareness of the history and continuing contributions of Hispanic Americans. I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and in the surrounding communities to participate in this observance through the activities planned by their units, staffs and other post agencies.

LETTER

Recycling benefits everyone

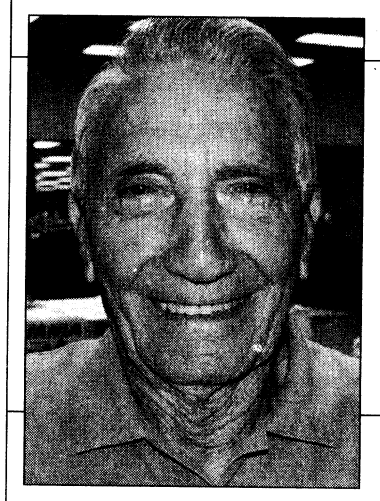
I would like to comment on the article Sept. 20 "Benning turns trash to cash." I think Fort Benning is doing an outstanding job with our recycling program.

Of all the places I have lived, they make it absolutely the easiest.

With our trash bin full to the brim by trash day each week, I am grateful to be able to toss recycle-friendly items somewhere else! And it does not require any extra of my time since they do the sorting for me, which is a real plus.

I was not aware the funds from this program were used for improvements on post.

That's enough to motivate me even more to really sort through my junk and see what can go into my brown bin instead of to a landfill!



Who could complain about using a recycle bin when the program benefits EVERYONE involved?

I hope everyone on Fort Benning will take a second look before taking out their trash now.

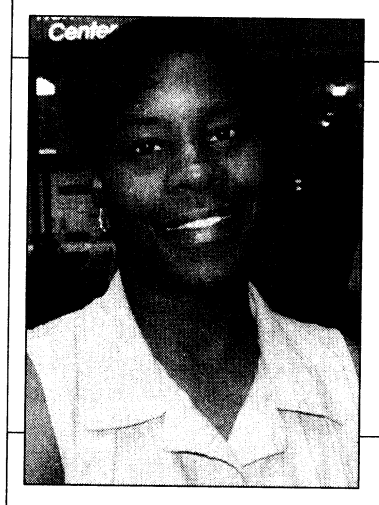
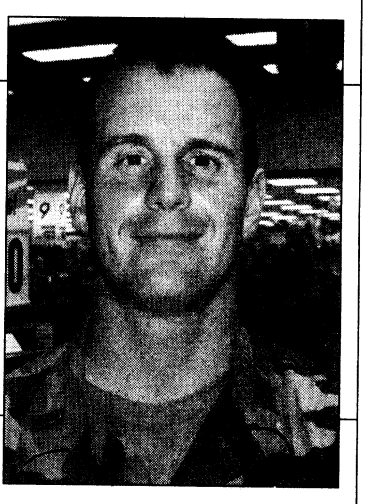
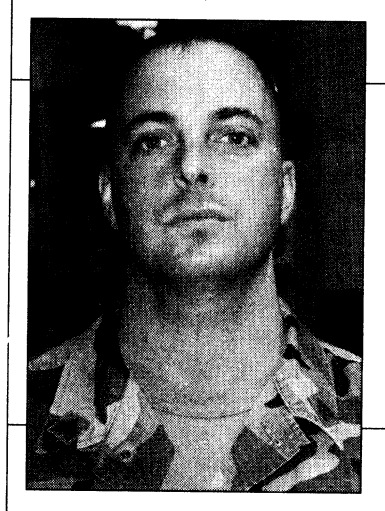
VARIOUS VOICES



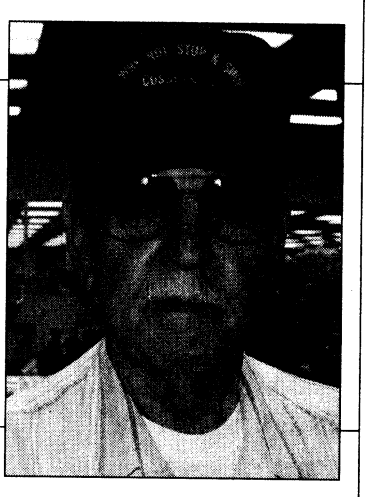
What is your favorite duty station and why?



Retired Command Sgt. Maj. John Robinson, Columbus — "Fort Benning was my favorite because it has a wonderful hospital for the military, the PX and commissary have great employees, and it is a great climate to be in."



Spc. Sarah Weiss, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I loved Hanau, Germany. There were a lot of opportunities to travel all over Europe, and the cultural diversity of the area was great."



Theresa Flowers, family member — "I like being stationed on Albany Logistics Base. It's closer to my home and my family."

2nd Lt. Justin Ririe, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I liked Fort McNair in Washington, D.C. We were on the Potomac River, so the scenery was nice. Also, we were right down the street from all of the national monuments."

Sgt. Robert Sherry, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment — "I liked Camp Walker, Korea. I learned so much about the culture over there. That's one of the reasons I joined — to broaden my horizons."

Retired Staff Sgt. John W. Lynn, Cusseta, Ga. — "Tokyo was my favorite duty station. There was a lot to do there, and I enjoyed learning about the culture."

Shaw: Gets ready to go to work on Fort Benning familiar with the workings of Fort Benning, he's not going to take anything for granted.

"Things change. Nothing stays constant," he said. "This is a brand new ball game."

Kenny is encouraged by the amount of interest shown by individuals who have walked into the office.

"We have 80 to 100 applications here already," Kenny said. "Our goal is to have 100 percent of the required work force ready to work Jan. 26."

Information that the group was hiring has spread by word of mouth to individuals in Phenix City and Columbus who have no connection with the workforce of Fort Benning, Kenny said.

Robert Lowery, a corrections officer, attended a session to learn about jobs being offered by Shaw.

"I'm just looking for other opportunities," he said.

Kenny said current DFEL employees have priority for jobs within the Shaw group and that the goal is to fill a minimum of 92 percent of the 500 positions with incumbent government personnel. Positions will also be available for former Fort Benning employees and new hires, and there is no requirement for an applicant to be a member of a union.

Bonnie Dale and Elsie Horn are among those affected by the RIF. Their jobs in the Installation Property Book Office will be part of the Shaw Group contract.

"We were all upset and distraught at the beginning," said Horn, who has 37 years of civil service at Fort Benning under her belt. "Now, we've accepted it."

The women attended the session on Thursday and were somewhat encouraged by reports from the morning session. Dale and Horn said.

Horn said that retirement is an option for her, but not one she is really looking forward to.

Bonnie Dale has 20 years of civil service, but can't retire because she is not 55 years old. With 20 years, she said she is "very junior" in her office.

"I'd like to stay in civil service, but if not, I want to work for the contractor," Dale said. "I will definitely apply for a job and keep my options open."

"These are the employees that the Shaw Group really wants to hire," Kenny said. "We want to be good partners with the Army and the Fort Benning community."

OCS: Breaks ground on memorial next to Riverwalk

of that time in the field.

"We've had three phones going at the same time in 'Command Central One,'" said Ramsey, pointing to his Ford F150 in the parking lot alongside the Riverwalk as they prepared to break ground Friday. The men have done the majority of the planning by cell phone, working around the normal OCS schedule.

"Captain Henry has given us 225 percent support and direction," said Ramsey, class president. "He told us that the sky is the limit."

"He gave us zero constraints," said Trevathan, class vice-president. The only catch is that the students must still complete all OCS training requirements while working on a project that Neibert said will take approximately 1,000 man-hours to complete.

The candidates originally wanted to build the memorial on post, but the project would have taken as long as a year to complete. To complete the construction on the eight and a half week schedule, they turned to Biff Hadden, senior vice president of the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, for assistance.

"This is the most significant project I've seen in about 40 years," said Hadden. "Captain Henry ought to be proud of these candidates. This is as close to real world mission training using troop leading skills as you are going to get."

Having the memorial along the Riverwalk will provide a great link from the Oxbow Meadows area to the site of the new Infantry museum, Hadden said. The site has easy access and will not be affected by future expansion in the area.

Under normal circumstances, the Riverwalk Committee would first review the plan and then make a recommendation to the city council. Because of the scheduled delivery of materials and the Oct. 17 OCS graduation date, the project would not have gotten off the ground had it gone through the normal approval process, Hadden said.

"They took the initiative and went straight to the city council," he said.

The dedication of the candidates was evident over the weekend following the groundbreaking. Paul Ramsey slept at the Riverwalk site to make sure that nothing happened to the 42,239 pounds of red bricks and the carefully placed leveling stakes.

"If someone pulled those stakes out in the middle of the night, we would have been set back a few hours on Saturday morning," he said.

Officer Candidate Miguel Aquino worked at the site 14 hours Saturday and was on his eighth hour Sunday, stopping to talk only when the donated construction equipment wouldn't start. Aquino, a personnel management specialist, wanted to do whatever he could to help with the project. Two of his wife's relatives were killed at the World Trade Center.

Aquino's brother owns a construction company in Puerto Rico, and he had the phone number on speed dial.

"I called my brother and he gave me some instructions on how to work this," Aquino said from the seat of the small bucket loader. "It stops running about every 20 minutes."

For every candidate who just shows up to work and lends muscle to the effort, it seems as if there is someone in the class with a piece of the skills and talents needed for the project.

Officer Candidate Chris Spaulding asked a hard question about how his classmates were going to know when the ground was level. Spaulding, a signal corps soldier, learned skills in using a transit and tripod from his father, a surveyor and civil engineer. Someone arranged to have the equipment donated, and Spaulding was immediately put to work.

Officer Candidate Brett Bean, formerly a commercial real estate developer, had worked with contractors on similar projects.

"I'm the guy who knows a little about a lot of stuff, Bean said. "We're just building a big patio here. The hardest thing is getting it level."

didn't have to do all of the work," Newton said. "I took out the trash, cleaned my room and helped take care of my brothers and sisters. I loved helping out."

When the band started playing God Bless America, the families in the gym knew that their soldiers were home. As the soldiers entered the gym, a thunderous roar rose up from the stands.

"It was nice to come into the gym hearing everyone cheer," said 1st Lt. Jason Rissler. "It really put into perspective how much we love our families and how much they love us."

The soldiers said they regretted missing family milestones while they were away.

"Before I left, my daughter wasn't walking. Now she is," said Staff Sgt. Leroy Russell, holding 11-month-old Tymina. "It's sad that I missed that, but it's OK because I'm home now. I have a lot of time to spend with my family and nothing makes me happier."

Severe weather plan in place on post

Center tracks weather around clock

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

With the threat of tropical storms hitting the Fort Benning area, many families wonder what the post is doing to protect the post should severe weather take its toll.

"We have a very secure system in place," said Sgt. William Malcomb, chief of Weather Operations for Fort Benning. "We are well connected with Shaw Air Force Base in North Carolina. The weather watchers at Shaw feed us information, warnings and any other alarms we need to be aware of."

The Weather Operations Center on Fort Benning has a detailed plan of its own should severe weather occur, Malcomb said.

The detailed plan includes sounding sirens, designating shelters and assigning safety and evacuation roles to each unit on post.

"Units are well aware of their responsibilities in the case of a weather emergency," Malcomb said. "We contact units within minutes of our severe weather warnings."

The weather station signals units of the weather warnings through remote activation modules, to which all units are connected, Malcomb said. The installation operation center is also notified and in turn sends brigades an automatic phone call warning them to take action.

"Commanders, 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division and the 36th Engineer Group will all furnish emergency teams," Malcomb said. "Each of those teams have already been required to prepare a plan listing organization and equipment that will be used."

Responsibilities assigned to units include food service, medical teams, rescue squads and a damage assessment team.

Other units will be designated to safety shelters, Malcomb said.

"We have designated shelters that all families will have access to if the weather is severe enough to call for an evacuation," Malcolmb said.

Shelter priorities are as follows:

- Barracks,
- Gymnasiums,
- Schools.

"In addition to designated shelters, the post has designated equipment in place should a weather emergency occur," said Al Harvey, deputy director of Intelligence and Security.

Equipment requirements include:

- Sleeping mats,
- Blankets,
- Sleeping bags,
- Tents,
- Folding cots,
- Beds.

> "We contact units within minutes of our severe weather warnings."
> Sgt. William Malcomb
> Chief of Weather Operations

"The last time our post was put under alert was 2-years ago when we received several inches of heavy rain from Hurricane Camille," Malcomb said.

"We had flash flooding, severe lightning, and many roads had to be closed."

The Weather Operations Center contacted the post officials and recommended soldiers stay inside their homes because the weather was so dangerous, Malcomb said.

"Every year around this time, we all get very nervous," Malcolm said. "We are ready for the worst."

A professional from the Weather Operations Center is available to talk with families from 6 a.m to 10 p.m.

Command teams learn about community

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning commanders and command sergeants major had the opportunity to learn more about the community outside the gates Tuesday during the annual Leadership Benning program.

The program acquaints leaders with the many different facets of the Columbus and Phenix City communities.

"The downtown folks have really done a great job putting this together for us," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

"The first year we did this, it was a great success, Walls said. "So we decided to include the spouses the second year."

Having the program in the fall after the summer turnover gives the new leaders the opportunity to get oriented to what is out there in the community, Walls said. Fort Benning families live, work, and conduct day-to-day business off post.

"This has been a fantastic day," said Martin Army Community Hospital Command Sgt. Maj. Ronnie Borel. "I have been here more than two years and am just learning what Columbus is all about."

Borel and 44 other Leadership Benning attendees were treated to lunch with a number of community leaders after a tour of the Port Columbus Civil War Naval Museum.

Bruce Smith, the museum's executive director was impressed by the number of his volunteers who showed up to don period costumes for the weekday tour.

Department of Labor to sponsor job fair

Fort Benning job program offers help

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

"... people come to check out requirements for jobs when they leave the military."

Mark Mills
Program manager

The Army Community Service Employment Readiness program is sponsoring a job fair Oct. 3. Although geared for military veterans, retirees and family members, the fair is open to anyone seeking jobs.

The event is sponsored by the Georgia Department of Labor, VFW Post No. 665, the Fort Benning ER and Army Career and Alumni Programs.

"This is a smaller fair than the one held in Infantry Hall in the spring," said Mark Mills, program manager, "But we expect to have at least 31 businesses represented."

Mills said that the event is always well-received by both prospective employers and employees. More than 1,200 people attended the fair last fall.

"This fair isn't just about finding a job right now," said Mills. "A number of people come to check out requirements for jobs for when they leave the military."

A number of hospitals and police departments in the area will be represented, as well as Blue Cross/Blue Shield, Tyson Foods and the Muscogee County School District.

The fair will be held at the VFW Post No. 665, 1824 Victory Drive from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Job seekers should bring 15 copies of their resumes for possible on-site interviews.

World War II veteran visits Sand Hill soldiers

'Doc' gives American flag to battalion

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

"We ... honor the flag that flew over the cemetery where so many American soldiers lost their lives in the landings on the Normandy beaches and in the liberation of northern France. Their graves are a permanent symbol of their heroic devotion and their sacrifice to the common cause of humanity."

Capt. Charles Hayes
1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

Taps played as the American flag was lowered at the Normandy American Cemetery in France.

The flag that came down that day will never again be flown over the cemetery. It has a new home at Fort Benning's 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, courtesy of Ralph W. Widener Jr.

It was Widener's idea to send an American flag to France to fly over the cemetery. Once flown and lowered, it was sent back to him to present to the battalion at a ceremony Sept. 21. Widener, otherwise known as "Doc," has historical ties to both Normandy and the battalion.

Born in Tulsa, Okla., Widener was drafted into the Army in 1943. Less than a year later, he was on his way to Great Britain to take part in the invasion of Normandy.

"We weren't scared at all," Widener said. "But, when we got 300 yards off shore and the bullets started hitting the sides of the landing craft, that's when we got scared."

American troops were greeted by an onslaught of German fire.

The soldier next to Widener was killed instantly.

"I didn't react," he said. "I just continued on with the mission, and that was to take the beach."

By nightfall almost all German positions were seized by the Army in Widener's sector, and eight days later, Widener and his platoon were on a road about 40 miles from shore, flanked by berms.

"Next thing I knew they were shooting at us, and I got hit," the 80-year old said. "I don't know where they came from. After that, I don't remember anything until I woke up in the hospital."

Widener was hit with six machine gun rounds that went from the back of his head down his back. A doctor told him that he would likely be paralyzed from the waist down, and he was sent home to Charleston, S.C., where he underwent 22-hours of surgery.

"When I woke up, the doctor told me he had good news and bad news," Widener said. "He said the good news is that you'll walk again. The bad news is that it is going to take you a year to do so."

Widener said he couldn't accept that year time frame.

"I got up and tried to start walking," he said. "I had nurses on each side of me to balance me. The first time I took five steps and felt a lot of pain. But I kept working at it."

Widener walked out of the hospital in November 1945.

He earned his bachelor's degree in history from Eastern Illinois State University and accepted a teaching position at the University of Mississippi. A year later, he earned his master's degree in history from the University of Oklahoma and a few years later, his Ph.D. from the University of Southern Illinois.

Widener taught at many colleges. Among them were: the University of Texas, the University of Arkansas and Florida State University. He retired in 1993.

In 1985, Congress allowed veterans to spend two weeks with a training unit to observe training and to write articles about it for their hometown newspapers.

Widener asked permission to go through the 13-week training with the recruits.

"I was given three words from a general," he said. "He said, 'go for it.'"

Widener went through the full 13-week course with the Infantry Training Brigade and said he had a great time.

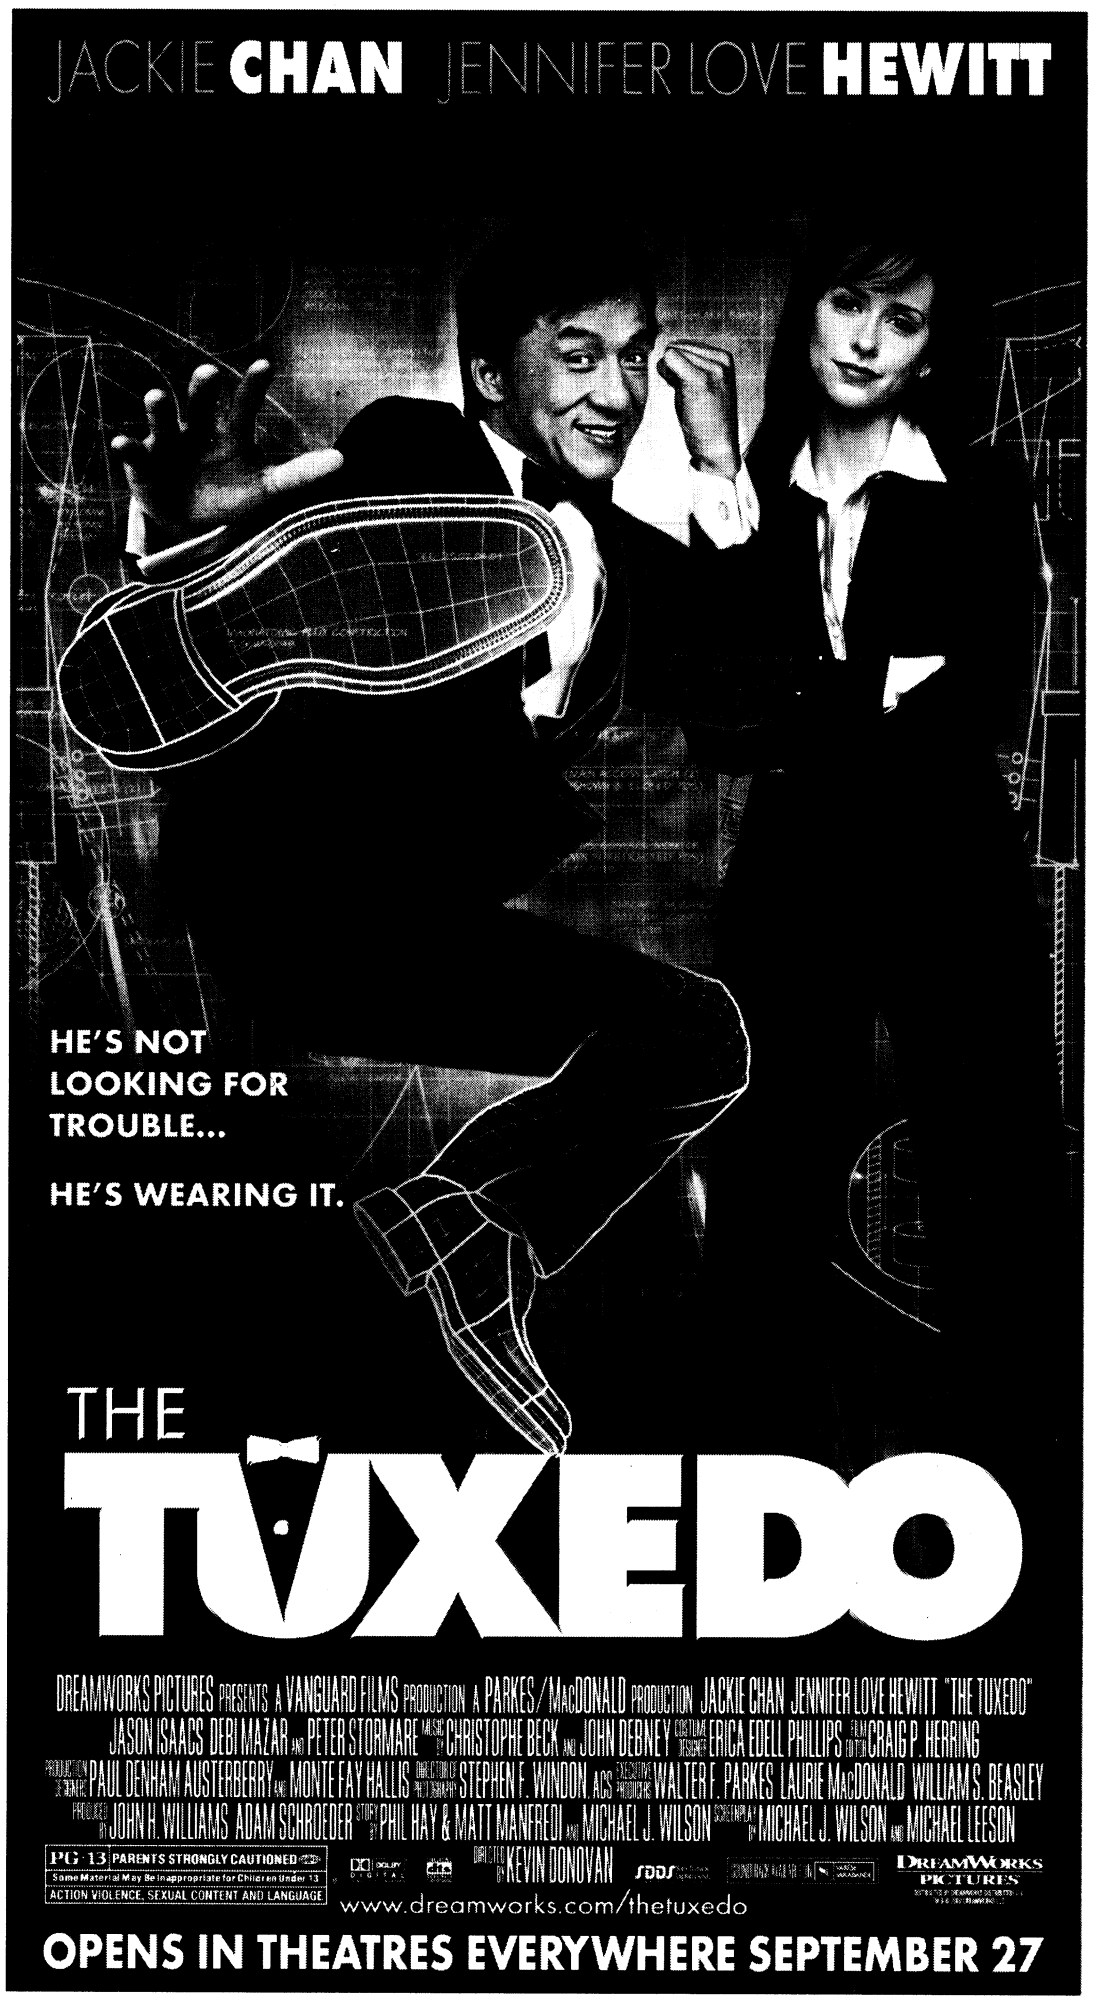
"I loved every minute of it," he said. "I ate, slept and talked with the soldiers, and it was the time of my life."

Widener was recognized as the oldest infantryman to ever go through one-station unit training.

While there, he also got funding for and established the Audie Murphy Infantry Award to be voted on by the soldiers in each platoon.

"I wanted to give the soldiers a chance to vote for who they thought was the best out of their platoon, because they were the ones that spend the most time with each other," Widener said. "There are four separate awards, one for each platoon."

Widener comes to Fort Benning four times each year to present the Audie Murphy Infantry Award.



"It's a great honor to have a great man like this be part of our battalion," said Capt. Charles Hayes. "He's a D-Day survivor and can really relate to the soldiers."

Widener presented the flag to the battalion Saturday, on the 138th anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga, where the 19th Infantry Regiment earned its nickname, the "Rock of Chickamauga," by holding fast against the Confederate Army.

"This is a great day for the 'Rock Steady' Battalion," Hayes said. "Not only do we honor the anniversary of our namesake, we also honor the flag that flew over the cemetery where so many American soldiers lost their lives in the landings on the Normandy beaches and in the liberation of northern France. Their graves are the permanent symbol of their heroic devotion and their sacrifice to the common cause of humanity."

Columbus Dealership Lands Huge Sell-off Of Repos And More

Famed "R.E.P.O. Team" coming to host area's largest disposal of repossessed, program and lease terminations in Columbus this weekend.

The R.E.P.O. Team travels the United States selling off repossessions and other bargain vehicles that are in high demand. The Team will work with only one select dealer in any given market. In Columbus, that dealer is Bill Heard Chevrolet.

Columbus, GA - A slowing economy and increasing consumer debt has ironically created a wealth of bargains for car buyers. Literally tens of thousands of repossessed cars are now on the market and dealers nationwide have been scurrying to offer them for resell to the public. Now, a local Columbus dealership has hit pay-dirt by landing the foremost team of repo experts for an exclusive four-day sale of these vehicles.

The R.E.P.O. Team will be at Bill Heard Chevrolet this Thursday, September 26th thru Sunday, September 29th offering some of the finest and most affordable pre-owned cars available to the general public. This is the local car buyers' chance to purchase vehicles at unbelievable prices. Used Car Manager, Mark Hall, explains that unlike many other "repo"sales, this event promises a superior and wider selection of vehicles. The "R.E.P.O." represents a lot more than just repos. Yes, the "R" stands for Repossessions, but the "E" is for Early lease terminations - vehicles that, like repos, have already had dozens of payments made on them. They're even better bargains and much harder to find but we have plenty available for this event."

So what about the "P" and the"O"? Hall continued "The R.E.P.O. Team also will be selling off dozens of Program Cars. For those that don't know, those are vehicles that were driven by factory executives. They have extremely low miles and most are all still covered by the factory warranty."

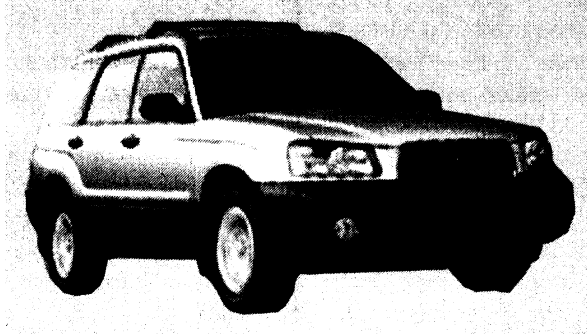
"Then finally, the "O" simply stands for Other bargains" said Hall. "From cars that were in rental fleets to dealer demos, there are a couple of dozen of miscellaneous vehicles that have nothing more in common than just being good buys."

This is the local car buyers, chance to purchase these vehicles at unbelievable prices.

Hall added such a wide array of vehicles mean there's something for most everyone. "Toyotas, Fords, Hondas, Pontiacs, even luxury cars, we hired the R.E.P.O. Team because they know the hottest new vehicles are also what everyone wants to buy pre-owned."

Hall concluded with what he described as "saving the best for last." "Other dealers have had repo sales where there are really only a couple of good buys. During this event, you can buy any vehicle with just $18 down payment. All you need to do is sign the R.E.P.O. release form and drive one home. Plus, monthly payments start at a mere $90 a month, and yes, that's with $18 down payment required."

Monthly payments start at a mere $90 a month, and yes, that's with just $18 down payment.
#2330621 '98 CADILLAC CATERA $18 DOWN 60 mos. 6.75% APR. PLUS TAX, TAG, TITLE. WITH APPROVED CREDIT.



Hall added prices are some of the lowest he's ever seen. "The prices on these vehicles start at just $999, an example of this is a 1991 Chevy Cavalier. It's been a long time since you've been able to buy a car for under $1000 and it will probably be a long time before you see it again, if ever. I'd hurry in now for the best selection."

Further details are available and you can search for a vehicle at www.TheRepoTeam.com. Bill Heard Chevrolet is located at 3615 Bill Heard Pkwy. next to Peachtree Mall, call toll free 1-888-719-8888.

Fort Benning BOSS program No. 1

Post sweeps competition in its category

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Fort Bennings' Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program swept the field at the BOSS convention in Virginia Sept. 8-14.

The post program took first place for best event and best installation, in the large installation category, winning trophies and $2,000.

"When I got the phone call saying we won both competitions, I knew we were going to take best event, but we had some strong competition for the best installation," said Sgt. Jessica Pisa, BOSS president.

"To see my idea for the presentation come together and win — I had a great feeling of accomplishment for both myself and the program."

The installations were evaluated on static displays for the best event. Soldiers attending the conference judged the displays. Best installation was decided by a two to three minute video presentation.

The event displayed in the competition was the Fort Benning BOSS partnership in progress with Franciscan Woods Assisted Living Community Center. Soldiers with the program volunteered time with the elderly, visited with them and other activities. On Memorial Day the center was presented with a flag, for all of the veterans, retirees and widows, Pisa said.

"(These awards) show single soldiers' commitment to the community, both on and off post," said Command Sgt. Maj. Bob McCord, garrison command sergeant major. "It also displays the leadership support soldiers receive from the commanders down to their platoon leaders, to give them the opportunity to be involved in the program."

Fort Benning gets the recognition that it has the best in the BOSS program worldwide, Pisa said. Next year Fort Benning will be one to beat.

Even though Fort Benning took home first place, the program is not perfect, Pisa said. Getting the word out is biggest obstacle. Other problems include equal participation in all of the BOSS events. Also, getting feedback from the soldiers on activities they would like to do is key.

The program normally does a cycle of activities, a community service project, a revenue generator and a recreation and leisure activity, Pisa said. There is an average of about 30 soldiers a month, but more for recreation and leisure.

"If the people who attend the trips could come back and volunteer just one day it could make a big difference," Pisa said.

"All the money soldiers put into the program will eventually come back to them through services or programs."

There are some upcoming trips being scheduled — Falcons vs. Panthers game Oct. 20 and Hawks vs. Bulls Nov. 2.

MPs enjoy time, choose to stay here

Reservists to build lives in local area

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

The Fort Benning area is different things to different people. For many, it's where drill sergeants screamed at them for the first time. For others, it's where they went to accelerate their careers. For some, it's where they shot their first wild boar.

For two members of the 2145th Military Police Detachment who spent a year on active duty following the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, the Fort Benning area is now home.

While members of their unit officially came off duty and went back to their former lives Saturday, Sgt. Bonnie M. Himes and Spc. Barbara Gomez drove back to their Columbus residences.

Himes

Gomez

"I like the Fort Benning area a lot," Himes said. "The people are a lot more friendly than what I was used to, so I decided to look for a job here."

Himes found a position as a Department of Defense police officer and started work Wednesday.

"I look forward to staying and building a life here," Himes said. "There are a lot of opportunities to grow and things to do. Atlanta is only an hour away. I'm a big NFL fan, and it will be convenient to be so close to the Falcons. I go up there a lot."

When Himes of Meadeville, Penn., is not out on the town, she'll be checking IDs and keeping the post safe.

"I'm happy to be a part of (helping to fight the war on terrorism)," Himes said. "As MPs, you're always thinking about security, but I'm proud to be part of the first-line defense at the access points."

It was during the year here on active duty she found out about Columbus hospitality.

"Before (the 63rd Engineer Company) built the sprung shelters, we performed our access-control mission in the elements," Himes said. "I remember it snowed in January. That was funny. But lots of complete strangers brought us coffee and cookies as they came onto post."

Himes had experienced Southern hospitality before while attending Armstrong Atlantic State University in Savannah, but not to such an extent. She plans on finishing her bachelor's degree in criminal justice at Columbus State University.

Besides all the intangibles that attract Himes here, she enjoys the fact that bad traffic is virtually nonexistent compared to bigger cities, and crime is relatively low.

"It's pretty safe here," Himes said. "The big joke is we're the big dog catchers on Fort Benning. You're always going to have some crime here but not as much as other towns."

Gomez finds the North Columbus safety attributes attractive, too, she said. Her husband, David, son, Andrew, 14, and daughters, Kayleigh, 11, and Jessica, 7, take comfort in the statistics and the fact police frequently patrol their apartment complex.

"(David, who has his own masonry business,) gets paid a lot more here, too," said Gomez, a New Brighton, Penn., native, whose family lived in Ormand Beach, Fla., prior to moving to Columbus. "He promised to build me a nice, big house.

"Plus, I like living next to post," she said. "We take advantage of plenty of military discounts, and sometimes having the PX and commissary to shop at helps too."

The family's transition here did come with some obstacles.

"The children found out the schools are much more advanced here than in Florida," she said. "They failed at first, but they adjusted, and they're all doing well now."

"As for (David), he came here in January and hated it," Himes said. "He couldn't find any work, but around May or June, the jobs began to come and now his business is growing."

Gomez herself doesn't have a job lined up, but she's confident her family will do well here, she said. She may do security work as both she and Himes stay in the reserves. They both look forward to joining their friends from their old detachment from Jacksonville, Fla., once a month and two weeks a year on Command Sgt. Maj. Donovan Watts, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, found out about the women's plans during a chance, lunchtime conversation.

"I think that anyone who has a zest for a homey feeling can't help but like this tricommunity," Watts said. "I'm happy to hear these soldiers and their families chose to stay but not surprised. Fort Benning is a post with a great deal of professional, as well as personal assets to offer.

"The hospital here is fantastic. There are all kinds of units and duty assignments available, and the school system here seems to be top notch."

63rd Engineers give ASP makeover

Face-lift was greatly needed

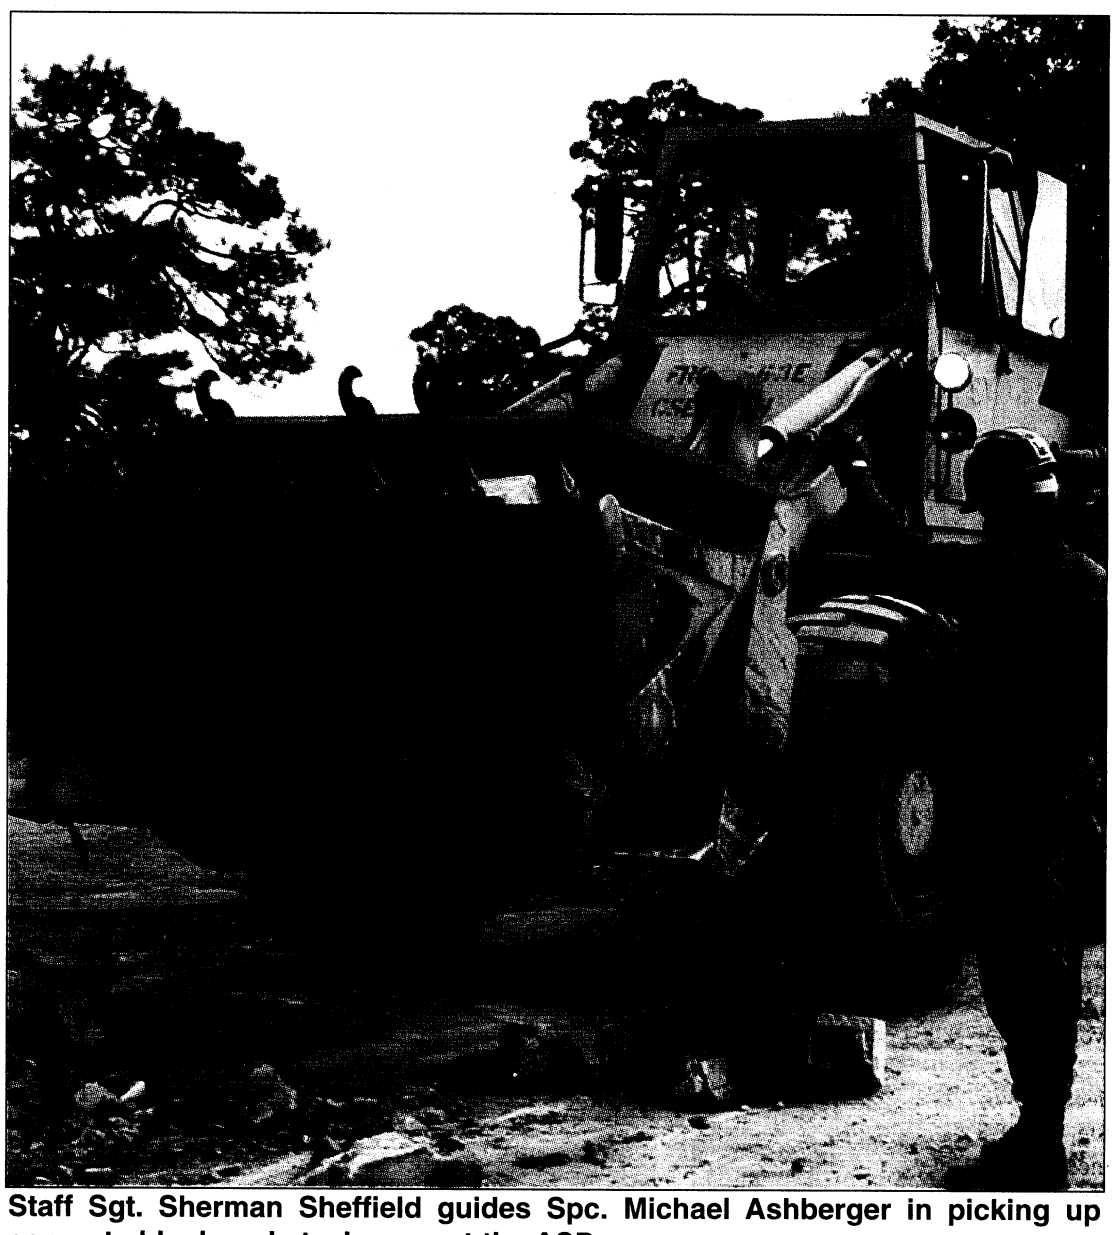
This is my rifle. There are many like it, but this one is mine.

My rifle is my best friend. It is my life. I must master it as I must master my life.

My rifle, without me, is useless. Without my rifle, I am useless. I must fire my rifle true. I must shoot straighter than my enemy who is trying to kill me. I must shoot him before he shoots me. I will ...

Maj. Gen. W. H. Rupertus, USMC



Although those words were meant to inspire and motivate Marines, they can be taken to heart by anyone who wears the uniform of the armed forces of the United States. Being able to use one's assigned weapon effectively is one of the basic soldier skills that is crucial to a well-maintained force.

However, an implied task is the necessity of having ammunition to fire from those weapons. Enter the Ammo Supply Point.

Fort Benning could not function as an active Army training post without the support of the ASP. The ASP is run by soldiers from the 13th Combat Support Battalion and staffed by civilian personnel from the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

Pfc. William Morgan hand loads a bucket loader for disposal.

Staff Sgt. Sherman Sheffield guides Spc. Michael Ashberger in picking up concrete block and steel scrap at the ASP.

Basic trainees couldn't learn basic rifle marksmanship, and the soldiers who are stationed here would not be able to qualify with their primary weapons, or conduct real-world missions, when the occasion arises, if there was no ASP.

The ASP works very hard for Fort Benning, and now they're getting a little help in return.

The 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group, is actively changing the work place environment for the soldiers working at the ASP. Since the beginning of September, major changes have been taking place there.

The scope of work for the project involves knocking down the existing metal Quonset hut that was used for storage, improving the road to and from the drop-off point, laying a concrete pad, providing overhead cover for the loading dock and part of the new concrete pad, clearing a 30-foot-wide path around the entire fence line, and installing a small building to use as an office on site. The soldiers will have shelter from the sun and rain, and an air-conditioned office as well once the construction is completed.

The mission is not only great for training, but also gives the the 63rd an excellent opportunity to show their stuff and help the post by saving money and improving the working conditions for their fellow Rugged Seahorses of the 36th Engineer Group.

Staff Sgt. Sherman Sheffield is the noncommissioned officer in charge of the 63rd's mission at the ASP.

"This is a good project for us to be working on," Sheffield said. "It's great training, and the soldiers are learning a lot."

Army Research Institute to test simulator

Commanders to use game for training

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

A complete working simulation for Full Spectrum Command is projected to come out by the end of October, and a full test is scheduled for January with the Infantry Officers' Basic Course.

Full Spectrum Command is a simulator for leading a company, where the platoons can be broken down into squads.

"This is a new, unique training tool. There is nothing else like this in the Army or commercial sector," said Capt. Brent Cummings, small group instructor with Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate. "Battle simulations aren't new. They are historical vignettes, doing them on paper, but this is some of the first stuff for (personal computers)."

The Army Research Institute is scheduled to start evaluating the educational value of the simulator for commanders.

"I think someone who plays this will be better prepared," Cummings said. "It's a company in a box. This will help commanders become more adaptive. I believe the program will change field training by giving experience in class then going and using it in the field."

> "It's a company in a box. I believe the program will change field training by gaining experience in the class then going and using it in the field."
> Capt. Brent Cummings
> Small group instructor

The program brings Hollywood-type effects to Army training, Cummings said.

"I think it has a lot of potential to be a valuable tool for company commanders," said Capt. Andre Takas, course graduate. "It uses commercial logic that many of us are used to."

FSC will bring fun to training, merging Army culture with the gaming industry, Cummings said.

The student is drawn into the world of the game and forgets he is even in a classroom, he said.

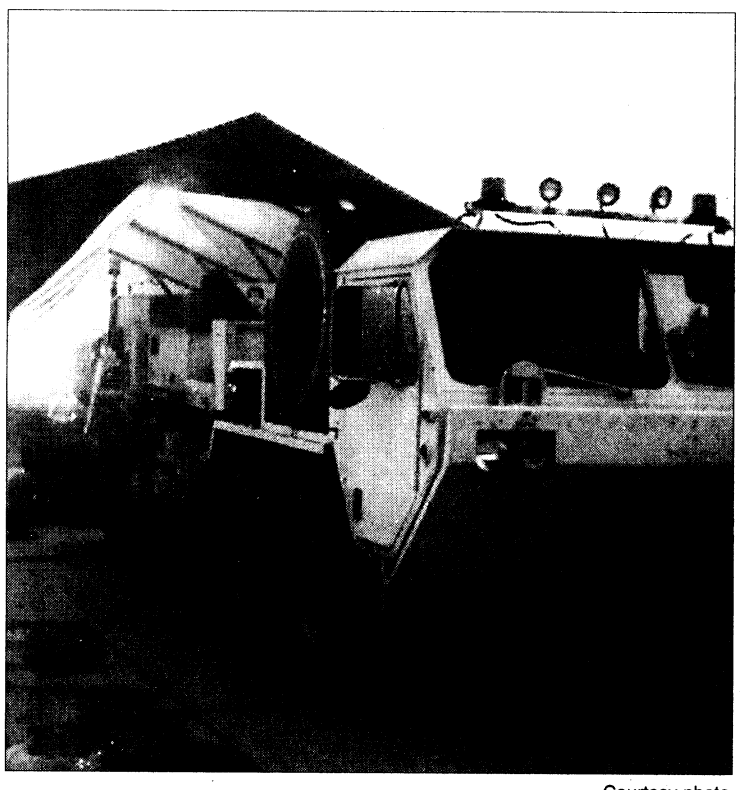
The game has many variables — the intelligence of the opposing forces, weather, soldiers' aim, and experience level of the squad leaders that will affect the soldiers' actions and outcome. The exercise wraps up with a dynamic after-action review, so the students can see where they went wrong and correct it the next time.

This is like a digital The Defence of Duffers Drift, a book based on a British lieutenant who had dreams about mistakes he makes in an upcoming battle that he repeatedly loses, but learns from. When he goes into battle for real, he wins, Cummings said.

This program gives an opportunity for self-learning and executing a mission over and over on the simulator so the students are more successful in the field.

Cummings said the simulator is not to replace "muddy boots" training but to augment it. A company isn't commanded with a mouse and keyboard, but the program can help prepare students.

Average games use 4 percent of their processing power on artificial intelligence, but FSC game developers have been working with Artificial Intelligence specialists from the Institute of Creative Technologies and FSC to use 60 percent of the processing power on explainable AI.



"I think we're really just scratching the surface with this," said Rob Sears, project leader from Legless Productions.

A simulator for squad leaders, similar to FSC, is currently in development.

13th CSB gives support at JRTC

13th CSB soldiers issued more than 139,000 gallons of JP-8 during their month at JRTC.

America's sportsman's paradise recently converted itself into the 13th Corps Support Battalion's playground. Louisiana recently churned 350 Log Warriors from Ft Benning through its Joint Readiness Training Center Rotation 02-09. The unit, which included Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, the 104th Transportation Company, the 598th Maintenance Company, 110th Supply Services Company, and an ammunition platoon from 608th Ordnance Company, transformed into the 13th Logistical Task Force in the field. Their mission — to provide outstanding and timely support to the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment and 10th Combat Support Hospital — started from the moment the unit touched down July 25 through the moment they left August 26.

These soldiers accomplished more in a month than most do in a year by issuing more than 3,000 cases of MREs, providing more than 34,000 meals, more than 139,000 gallons of JP-8, more than 500 short tons of live and replicated Class V ammunition and producing and issuing over 105,000 gallons of water. The 598th Maintenance Company processed 70 Direct Support work orders and over 125 Class IX requisitions, while conducting force protection measures for an impenetrable front gate. The 104th Transportation Company Road Dawgs — always on the go — deployed the 10th CSH to Peason Ridge and conducted approximately 70 separate transportation logistics personnel and administration center missions. They accumulated more than 65,000 accident free miles.

The 13th LTF operated an Intermediate Staging Base and then deployed to Peason Ridge to establish the Logistical Support Area. From the LSA, they simultaneously conducted their missions and force protection operations by fighting the Cortinian Liberation Front. The fights resulted in less "paradise" for the sportsmen, but better training for the soldiers. Civilians on the battlefield kept the unit busy when the CLF took their naps. The mission in JRTC's "Cortina" showed the

Soldiers qualify for EIB in Kuwait

Spc. Jimmy Allen, stakes the wire for a claymore.

Six months ago the 3rd Brigade Combat Team deployed to Kuwait for Operation Desert Spring. The soldiers participated in platoon, company, and battalion level training exercises as well as live fire exercises.

The brigade live-fire exercise tested the soldiers skills; however, for some soldiers it would not stop there.

As the operational tempo decreased soldiers of the Sledgehammer Brigade to include Task Force 1-15, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, the brigade's headquarters company, D Troop, 10th Cavalry, and a battalion of soldiers from TF 1-41 Infantry from Fort Riley had an opportunity to earn the Expert Infantryman Badge, which Col. Daniel B. Allyn, Brigade commander called "our Infantry's toughest peacetime individual training event."

The Secretary of War approved the Expert Infantryman Badge Oct. 7, 1943. It was adopted as the official infantry branch insignia in 1924. It is coveted throughout the infantry community and represents excellence in infantry skills.

Nearly 200 soldiers began the weeklong task of conducting train up on the individual stations required to earn the EIB Aug. 31. During the planning phase for EIB, it was thought that the extreme temperatures and intense wind would keep soldiers from wanting to train past noon each day. A start time of 5:30 a.m. would be ample time to train the soldiers prior to the heat reaching its peak.

However, this was not the case. The lure of receiving the EIB is a stronger force than the hot and windy weather, said Command Sgt. Maj. Mark Baker, brigade command sergeant major. "It's an honor to wear the badge," he said. Many soldiers trained until 6 p.m. to hone their skills.

The soldiers spent six days rotating through three different lanes. Each lane contained six different stations ranging from mines to radio operations, night vision to estimate range, and first aid to NBC. The soldiers must complete 36 tasks to earn the EIB, but they must qualify to even participate.

In years past, soldiers had to qualify expert with their weapon to meet one of the prerequisites to compete for the EIB, but starting in June of 2002 the prerequisites changed. Candidates must not only qualify expert, they must also complete the 12-mile road march within three hours, complete day and night land navigation courses, and score 70 percent or better on the Army Physical Fitness Test. These tasks were even more difficult due to the extreme weather conditions in the desert, with the temperature reaching close to 130 degrees. Soldiers' weapons became extremely hot and difficult to handle. Windy conditions contributed to the difficulty of qualifying as the winds reached 30-35 knots causing sand storms while the soldiers were qualifying. Testing for the 199 candidates began Sept. 7.

Spc. Jimmy Allen, A Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry, was the first candidate to test at the hand grenade station.

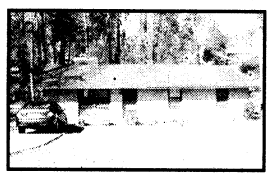
As he threw his fourth of five grenades into the fighting position and received a GO, he let out a yell and was visibly excited.

"It was a big sigh of relief to get a 'go' at the station," Allen said. "I chose it first because it was my biggest concern and wanted to get it knocked out so I could focus on the rest of the tasks." Allen went on to earn his EIB.

During the first day of testing, 35 candidates were eliminated. On the second day, 38 more candidates were eliminated from testing. Thirty of the 126 remaining were "bladerunning." Bladerunning is a term used when a candidate has received two "no go's" and one more would eliminate him from testing.

Only 98 candidates, less than half survived the rigors of the EIB test and earned the right to wear the EIB. For Baker, it was a special day,

"This year's EIB definitely takes on a different meaning for 3rd Brigade as we earned more EIBs in the history of the brigade," Baker said.



"The training had a dual purpose," Braxton said. "One was sharpening skills for combat, and the other was to achieve something that many do not get."

"Soldiers are used to the media talking of war," Baker said. "This is our job, and the ability to execute multiple missions is what makes our military the best in the world."

Pfc. Vincent Austin, HHC, 3rd Brigade said, "It gives me the confidence to go out and train soldiers." However, the 98 soldiers who received their EIB were not the only ones who benefited.

"Although only half our EIB candidates earned the EIB, every soldier who accepted the challenge, all 199 of them, are today better infantrymen as a result of the great training they received over the past two plus weeks," Allyn said.

Spouses look to support group for help

Post chaplains' ministry broadens role

Angela Sachitano

Fort Benning military wife, Michelle Steinbach, is trying her best to be a strong role model to her children as she struggles through her husband's first deployment since the two were married.

"I've been able to talk with him on the phone about once a week," said Steinbach, whose husband is a sergeant deployed with the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment in Kuwait. "Of course some days are harder than others. He wants to come home so bad. I can hear it in his voice, and that saddens me even more."

When Steinbach's husband deployed in May, she knew she was in for an uphill battle, a battle that would not end for at least six months. But it only took Steinbach a few weeks to realize it was a battle she would not have to bear alone. She would soon have the help of the Deployed Spouses Support Group through the Chaplain Family Life Ministry.

"The Chaplain Family Life Ministry is centered around helping spouses deal with the pressures military life can bring," said Chaplain (Maj.) Ray Koop, chief of the Fort Benning Chaplain Family Life Ministry Center. "We have support groups for spouses, no matter what the situation."

These are some of the support groups now available on a year round basis:

- Blended Families Support Group,
- Couples Communication Support Group,
- Spouses of Deployed Soldiers Support Group,
- Spouses of Returning Soldiers Support Group,
- Recovering from Divorce and Separation Support Group,
- Parents of Exceptional Children Support Group,
- Survivors of Sexual Abuse Support Group.

Steinbach and the deployed spouses group meet once a week on post. The women she has met through the group have helped her through the most difficult period in her life, she said.

Teacher receives honor

Schools name Teacher of the Year

Stowers Elementary School first-grade teacher Barbara Culwell was named the Fort Benning Teacher of the Year Sept. 20.

Culwell

A 13-year teaching veteran, Culwell was lauded as an innovative teacher and a "compass whose needle is always pointed true north," by Stowers' assistant principal Mike Starrett, who endorsed Culwell's nomination.

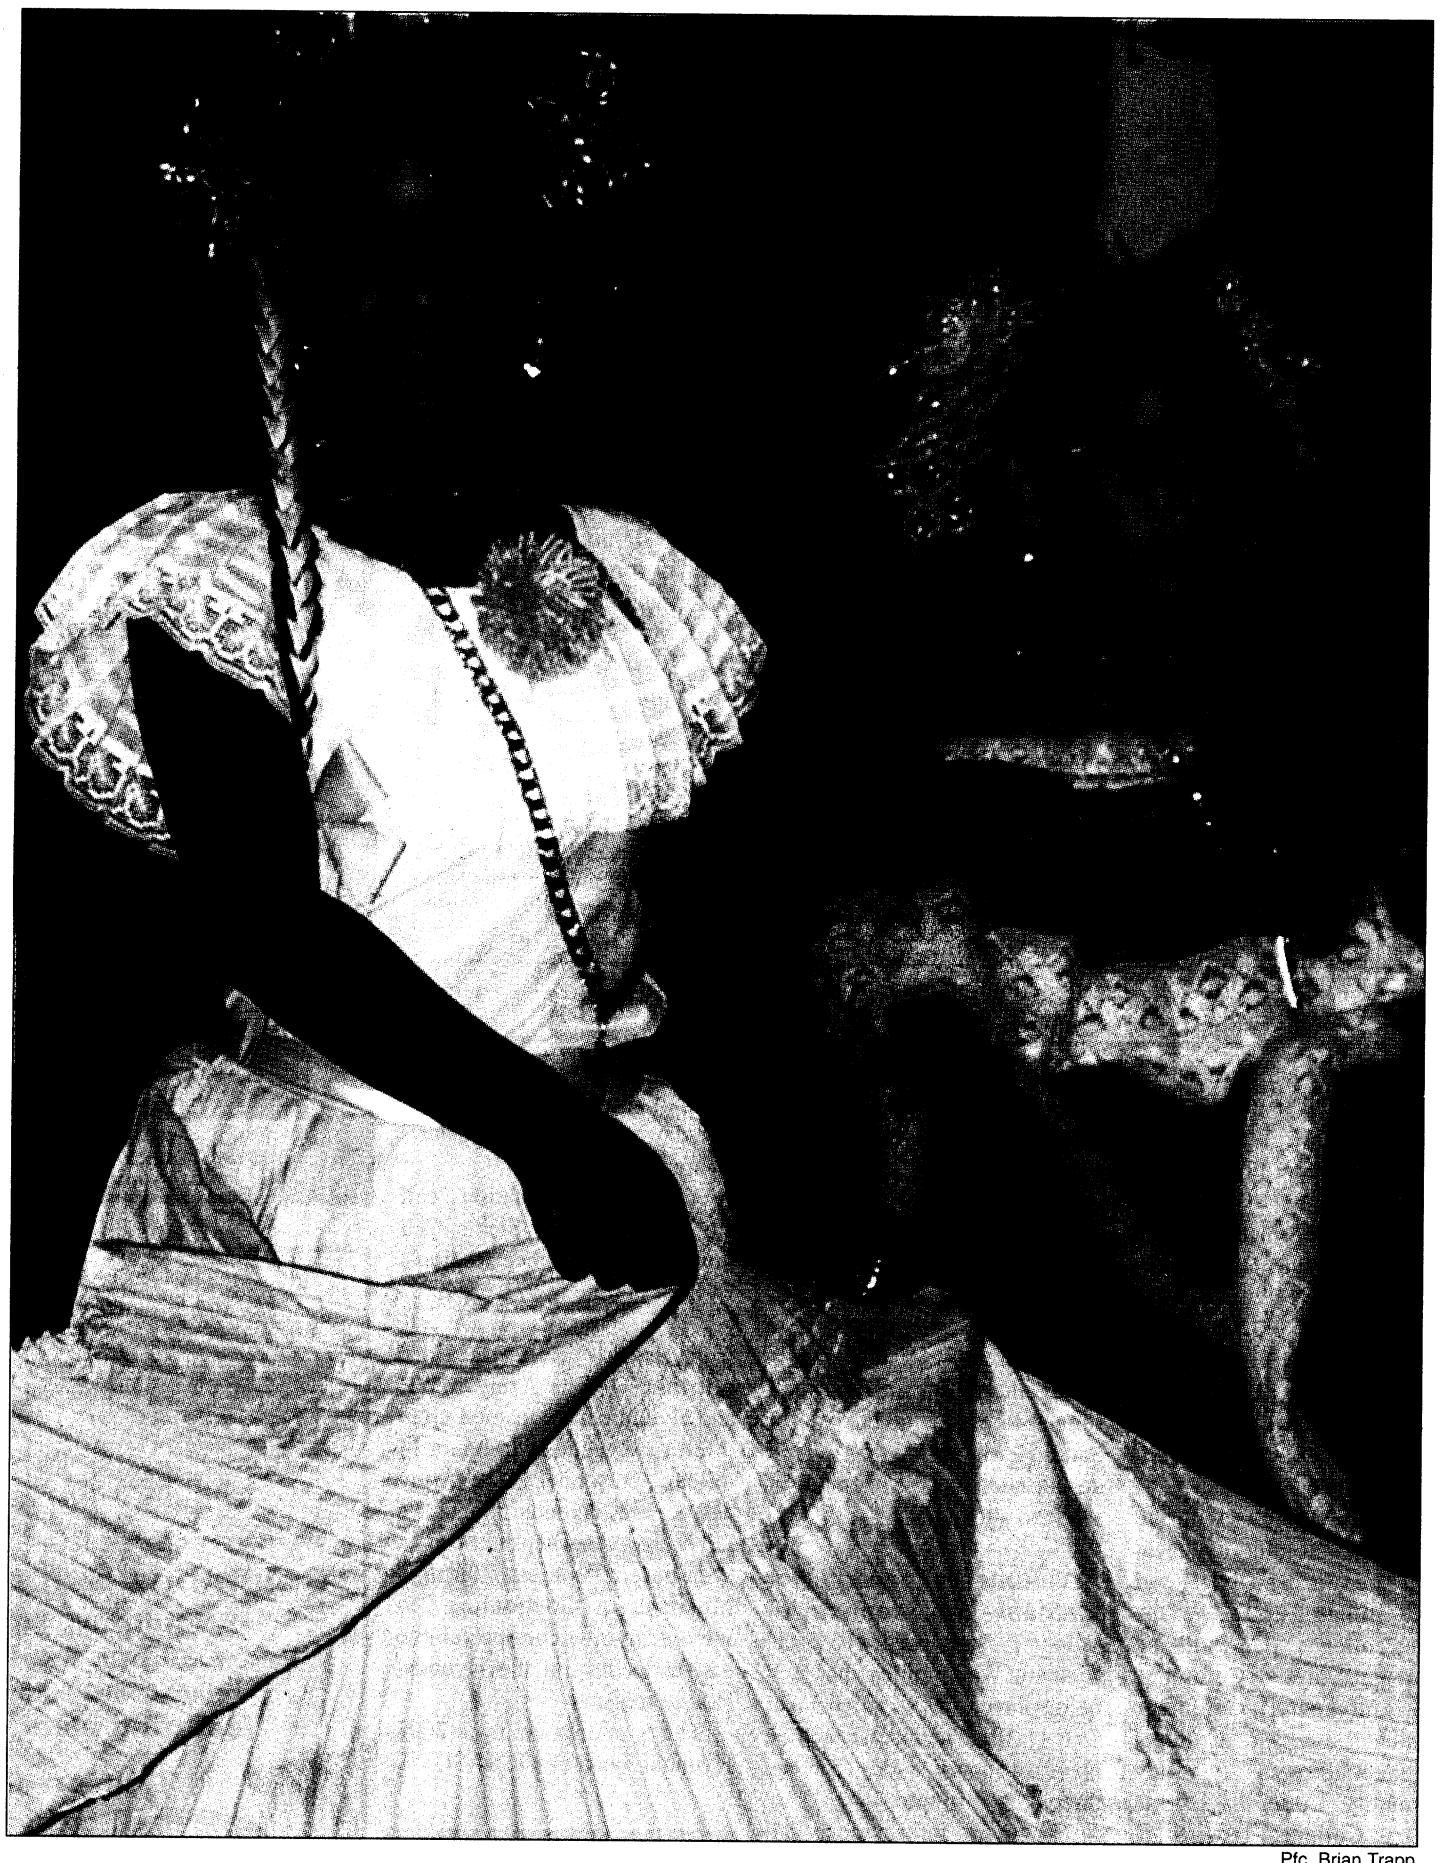
Culwell said being named Teacher of the Year is both an honor and a responsibility she can't take lightly.

"I'm the kind of person who prefers to stay in the background," said Culwell, a Hardy, Ark., native who's married to a former ranger. The couple live in Smiths, Ala. "I hope I can represent the teaching profession in a positive, exciting way."

Culwell credited another Fort Benning educator's enthusiasm for inspiring her own career. Former assistant superintendent, Suzanne Williams, spoke at Columbus College when Culwell was a student.

"She was such a joyous speaker," Culwell said. "It was so easy to see that she loved working with children, and she spoke so highly of the profession that I knew I had to become a teacher."

Williams was stricken with Multiple Sclerosis and is now confined to a nursing home in Columbus.



"I want her to know that this is her legacy. There are those of us in the profession, dedicated to what we do and loving every minute of it, because of her," Culwell said. "I'd like her to know that her commitment to teaching lives on in the lives of the teachers she inspired."

Culwell began teaching at Fort Benning's former Wilbur Elementary after graduating from Columbus State University. She earned master's and education specialist's degrees from Troy State University.

Fort Benning reads

Fort Benning Schools launched a postwide initiative to encourage families to read.

Fort Benning Reads! is a community literacy program designed to provide a reading experience that can be shared and enjoyed by all ages, said Dr. Jaynie Nesmith, Fort Benning School's director of curriculum. It's part of the yearlong Armywide program DoDEA Reads!

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, Fort Benning's commanding general, and Army Librarian Ann Parham were on hand to kickoff the program at Wilson Elementary School Wednesday. They visited classrooms and read America: A Patriotic Primer, by Lynne Cheney, wife of Vice President Dick Cheney. Copies of the book were distributed to every classroom in the school system.

Parham, a Columbus native who was working at the Pentagon during last year's terrorist attack, said the historical picture book integrates valuable history lessons into the program.

"The events of September 11 made us all realize how important it is to be an active participant in our democracy," Parham said. "And that means reading to stay informed and learning about where this nation came from and why we have the freedoms we do."

Parham said the focus on

Area families adopt abandoned animals

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Loneliness caused Spc. Joseph Williams, 209th Military Police Detachment, to go to the Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic Tuesday to adopt a dog.

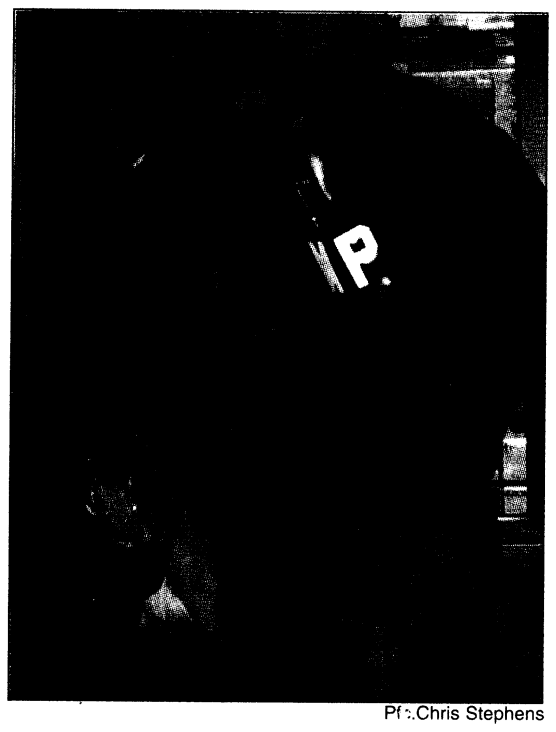
"I had my last dog stolen from me, and I need one to keep me company," Williams said. "When I went to pick out a dog, I knew immediately the dog I wanted. She had a nice coat, and she looked like a great dog."

The dog Williams adopted is a red-nosed pit bull and was abandoned by her previous owner.

There are many dogs that are abandoned and brought to the clinic each year, said Missy Taylor, veterinary technician.

"We have many animals that are in need of adoption all of the time," Taylor said. "All they need are loving families to take care of them."

However, the vet clinic stresses that taking care of any animal is a long-term commitment.



"Having a dog or cat is just like having another child," Taylor said. "You have to care for them and give them emotional and medical support."

There is a quick process for adopting an animal from the vet clinic.

"The first step is always the hardest step," Taylor said. "The people have to pick out a dog or cat that fits their lifestyle and their family.

"Sometimes that can be hard because you

Change W-4 form to gain extra monthly income

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Would you like to take home another $100 each month?

Does $150 sound better? Even more?

It may be possible to take home more money each month simply by adjusting your IRS Form W-4.

The W-4 form has a worksheet that all working persons use to claim their marital status and how many personal allowances they are entitled to. Based on these entries on the W-4 form, the employer withholds a certain amount of money each month toward federal taxes for that year. The more allowances claimed for example, the less money withheld each month. Overwithholding occurs when soldiers do not change their W-4 form when they should.

Let's use an example. During inprocessing, a single soldier with no children fills out a W-4 form, and claims Single and one allowance.

What happens when the soldier marries?

Because income tax rates are more favorable for married persons, the soldier should adjust her W-4 form from single to married, and raise her allowances from one to two, so there is less withholding from her monthly paycheck. As there is less withholding, she gets more of her money back each month. But many soldiers fail to do this, and overwithholding begins.

Continuing the example, let's say the soldier has two children. Once again, she should adjust her W-4 form to claim the allowances of the children.

If the soldier fails to do so, the difference can add up.

The difference between withholding at single and one allowance versus married and four allowances can be as much as $2,000 a year, which translates to more than $150 a month.

All soldiers should adjust their W-4 form so that their wages are not overwithheld. Soldier's wages are typically overwithheld between $1,000 to $2,000 a year.

The goal of your income tax return should be to get as small a refund as possible without having to pay at the end of the year.

Some soldiers argue, "Well, there is no harm in getting a big refund check. I don't have to pay any penalty, and it is a way for me to save money."

But there is financial harm. The government does not pay interest on money that is overwithheld.

Banks however, do pay interest on savings accounts. So, if you want someone to hold your money for you, put it in the bank.

Almost all soldiers and spouses we encounter through the Legal Assistance Division use their income tax refund check to pay off loans.

Companies charge interest to loan money however, at rates usually between 18 to 28 percent a year, so if you can use that extra money each month to pay off a loan, you will save money every month.

W-4 forms are available at your PAC. For more information, call the Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Shop sells crafts, collectibles

Special gifts for Army families available on post

Angela Sachitano

For all the military wives wondering where they can pick up their own "Home is Where the Army Sends You" personalized wooden house, a new shop is right around the block offering an array of Army collectibles and crafts.

The shop is called "A Bit of Benning" and is sponsored by the Officers' Spouses Club.

Polish pottery, American Flag wall decor, quilts, candles and wreaths are just some of the items families will find in the creative craft cabana located next to the Thrift Store.

"It's a one stop shop here to find those Army knick-knacks you just can't find anywhere else," said Jeanna Larsen, co-manager of A Bit of Benning. "We have things here that are unique to our love for our country and our military life."

Well into its third month, the craft shop is brimming with crafts created by people right here on Fort Benning. The store is divided into sections, including a seasonal section, a baby's corner and a jewelry table.

"These are the items we all see in each others' homes and wonder where we can get them, too," Larsen said. "You'd be surprised how many requests for specific crafts we receive."

The idea for the craft shop is not unique to Fort Benning. Many posts including Fort Campbell, Ky., and Fort Bragg, N.C., have similar shops. Larsen and co-manager Renee Doyle came up with the idea when they transferred from Fort Bragg to Fort Benning and realized there was a need for the shop on post.

"Before the shop opened, crafts and collectibles were displayed in a small corner in the Thrift Shop," Doyle said. "It just wasn't enough space so we decided to create our own store."

Doyle, Larsen and several other wives decided to renovate the room next to the Thrift Shop. They spent weeks ripping up the old carpet, painting walls and turning the room into a patriotic store dedicated to the families on Fort Benning.

"There really is something in here for everyone," Larsen said. "This is the perfect place to find farewell gifts, welcome gifts, and hostess gifts."

The Thrift Shop is always accepting homemade crafts and collectibles on a consignment basis. The shop is also looking for volunteers to run the store. Wives coffees' can also be held in the shop.

Craft shop hours are 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Tuesday through Friday. For more information, call 687-3537.

Groups: Help cope with emotions who is also a member of the Deployed Spouse Support Group.

"Even as a company commander's wife, the support group has really made a huge difference in the way I am able to lead the family readiness groups," Long said. "I bear a lot of the emotions of the women in my husband's company, and the support group allows me to talk about some of my own fears."

"We meet and talk about our concerns and our fears in a confidential manner," Steinbach said. "We also learn about what our husbands are going through as well. The more information the better so we can better accept the separation."

Last week, rear detachment officials met with the Deployed Spouses group to inform them of their husband's current situation and training responsibilities, Steinbach said.

"The best part is knowing you are not alone," Steinbach said.

The Chaplain Family Life Ministry is well aware of the importance of support groups in the Army and has broadened the scope of the center to reach even more people.

"In the past, support classes were available only a few months out of the year," Koop said. "This year, support groups will be meeting weekly, and they will continue to meet as long as there is a need."

The need is growing according to the latest statistics from the Chaplain Life Ministry, which show 65 percent of soldiers are married and the pressures on families continue to rise as the situation in the Middle East heightens.

"Our support groups allow spouses in similar situations to rely on each other for advice and friendship," Koop said. "We advise all spouses to take advantage of them."

Most of the support groups meet once a week, and child care needs can be met by calling the respite care service through the Army Community Service office.

"I'm counting the days until my husband comes back," said Steinbach, who found out she was pregnant a week after her husband deployed. "Until that day comes, I will look forward to my meetings with the spouse support group. They are making the time bearable."

For more information on the support groups offered by the Chaplain Family Life Center, call 545-1760.

Teacher: Integrates technology, fun

Culwell integrates "brain-based" teaching techniques in her classroom. Students are encouraged to keep water bottles at their desks, because a "dehydrated mind can't learn." And Culwell integrates technology into every area of study. Her's is the school's "technology prototype classroom."

"At first it seemed like an overwhelming amount of technology, especially at a first-grade level. But these children are not intimidated a bit," she said.

"I don't let the technology run the curriculum. It has to enhance. It's become a real part of everything we do."

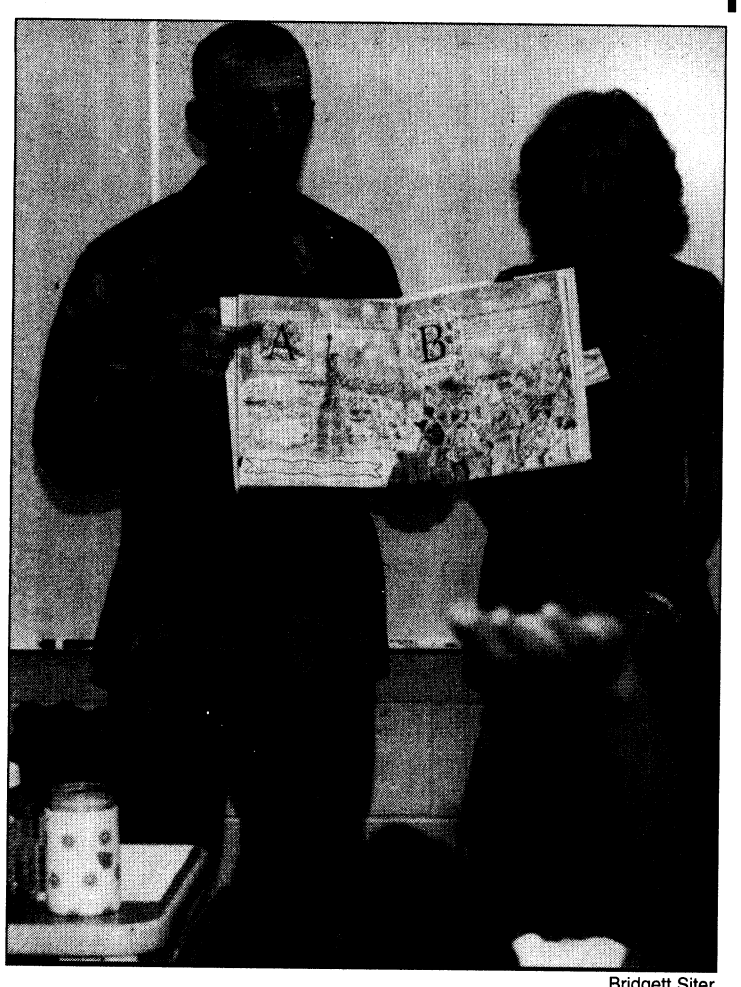
By the end of the first grade, Culwell's students are proficient in PowerPoint and laserdisc technology.

"When I was a child, I experienced the traditional approach to education. The 'sit still and learn' way. It was very regimented and very unappealing," Culwell said. "I want to make learning exciting for my students. I want them to want to learn.

"At this age, they're interested in everything and everything is a potential lesson," said Culwell, who recently turned a rainy morning into an exciting exploration.

"There were toadstools on the playground. They were fascinated by them," she said. "So we came back in the classroom and did online research on where they come from and why they grow. They loved it."

It's that kind of enthusiasm and willingness to explore new teaching opportunities that makes Culwell an exemplary teacher, said her coworker, Millie Harris.



"She's created a safe learning environment in which risk taking and original ideas are valued, where children feel free to explore and make mistakes and learn from them," Harris said. "She has certainly been my mentor, and only the future will tell how many children she's encouraged to be life-long learners."

Culwell, who enjoys reading, crocheting, sewing and gardening, has been a foster mother for 12 children. She called herself "the adventurous type" who likes to bring excitement into the classroom. And one who's "still excited about coming to work each day."

"Some people are called to teach. I love it. There are no down sides to teaching," she said.

"It's a lot of hard work, but it's a lot of fun, and when you look forward to coming to school every morning and you work with the incredible team of professionals I do, it's hardly fair to call it work."

Reads: Connects program nationally

Bridgett Siter

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, post commanding general, and his wife, P.J., answer questions about the new reading program that kicked off Wednesday. The community book is America: A Patriotic Primer.

nationwide reading programs is part of a bigger initiative to rejuvenate a national interest in history.

"This (book) delivers a message about American history while encouraging children to develop the reading skills that are critical for success," she said. Eaton read to students in Margaret Love's first-grade class, pausing occasionally to quiz them.

"Who here is a very important person?" Eaton asked, and hands shot up all over the classroom.

"Absolutely right. You are the most important people of all. You are wonderful, great Americans," he said, encouraging them to read more about this country their "great great grandparents fought for."

Nesmith said copies of America: A Patriotic Primer will be available at school book fairs and local retailers.

The hardback book, illustrated by noted children's artist Robin Preis Glasser, was published in May and has been on the New York Times list of best-selling children's picture books for 15 weeks. It retails for $16.95.

"A is for America, the land that we love," then book begins, and continues through the alphabet to Z, "the end of the alphabet, but not of America's story."

"This book is excellent because it reinforces civics. It's important to start young with children so they understand that along with rights come responsibilities," Parham said.

The Fort Benning Reads! program partners the schools with Children and Youth Services, Congressman Mac Collins' office, Donavan and Sayers libraries, the Officers' Spouses Club and Command, Staff Group Wives.

The community will be invited to participate in program events throughout the year, including book fairs, book drives, veteran celebrations, videos, reading nights and a parent academy in the spring.

Animals: Find homes with adoption want the cutest one or the smallest one available," Taylor said.

"One thing we stress to potential adopters is that if they live in an apartment, it is best to get a smaller animal. If they live in a house with a yard, then a big animal would do them good. But, overall they make the decision for what they think will be best for them."

After picking out the animal that they want to take home, the dog or cat gets vaccinations, a microchip and a brief exam.

"The microchip is put under the skin and it holds information like the identification number, and the owner's name and phone number," Taylor said. "The microchip is put there because if the dog or cat turns up at any vet clinic nationwide, the clinic can scan the chip and find the exact information to reunite the dog or cat with its owner."

The cost to adopt a cat is $55 and to adopt a dog is $65.

Included in the price is an update of vaccinations, heartworm and heart guard treatment, medical exam and spaying or neutering.

Georgia law requires animals be spayed or neutered before adoption, Taylor said.

"We really stress to families that adopting a pet means at least six to 12 years of responsibility," Taylor said. "You can't just say that 'well I'm here for four years, so I'll get a dog and leave it when I leave.' That doesn't work.

"Pets are not for disposal at a person's leisure," Taylor said. "They have feelings just like we do, and they need love just as much as we do."

Taylor brags on the well-being of one dog that caught the hearts of many of Fort Benning residents.

In March, The Bayonet ran a story on a mixed-breed dog named Kane who was locked in a room in a Fort Benning residence, severely malnourished and neglected.

Kane was adopted by a loving family that lives in Phenix City, Ala., and he's doing well.

"All it takes is some love and care for the animal and everything will be all right," Taylor said.

The vet clinic is open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. and is open until 6 p.m. on Wednesdays.

"Anytime the clinic is open, adoptions are available," Taylor said.

For more information on adopting a pet, call the vet clinic at 545-4444.

GOING TO THE DOGS

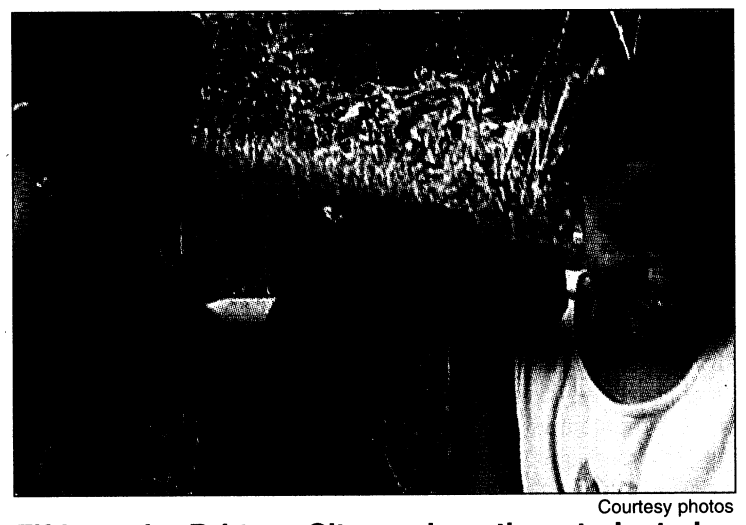
Stowers students visit humane society

Stowers Elementary School

Students from Stowers Elementary School volunteered to perform community service at the Muscogee County Humane Society.

The students were given a tour of the facility, which is home to more than 400 animals. The director of the facility explained to the students that the shelter has a "no kill" policy, which means that the animals live at the shelter until homes are found.

The students were responsible for walking the dogs and feeding them treats.



"It was a learning experience for all of the students who participated and several of the students were very saddened by the number of animals with no home," said Lorri Blanchard, teacher at Stowers.

"All of the animals are well cared for and are very sweet," said fifth-grader Killian King.

"The most enjoyable part for me was playing with my dog at the shelter, I wanted to take him home," said Kelif Sykes who is also in the fifth grade.

The shelter is in need of newspapers; they use them for the kennels. Stowers Elementary School will accept newspapers to take to the shelter.

"I will always remember the experience and if people adopt a pet they will have a friend for life," King said.

Fifth-grader Brittney Siter and another student play with one of the dogs at the Muscogee County Humane Society during a recent field trip. The students toured the shelter and learned that more than 400 animals live there. The shelter needs newspapers for the kennels. For more information, call the shelter at 563-3647.

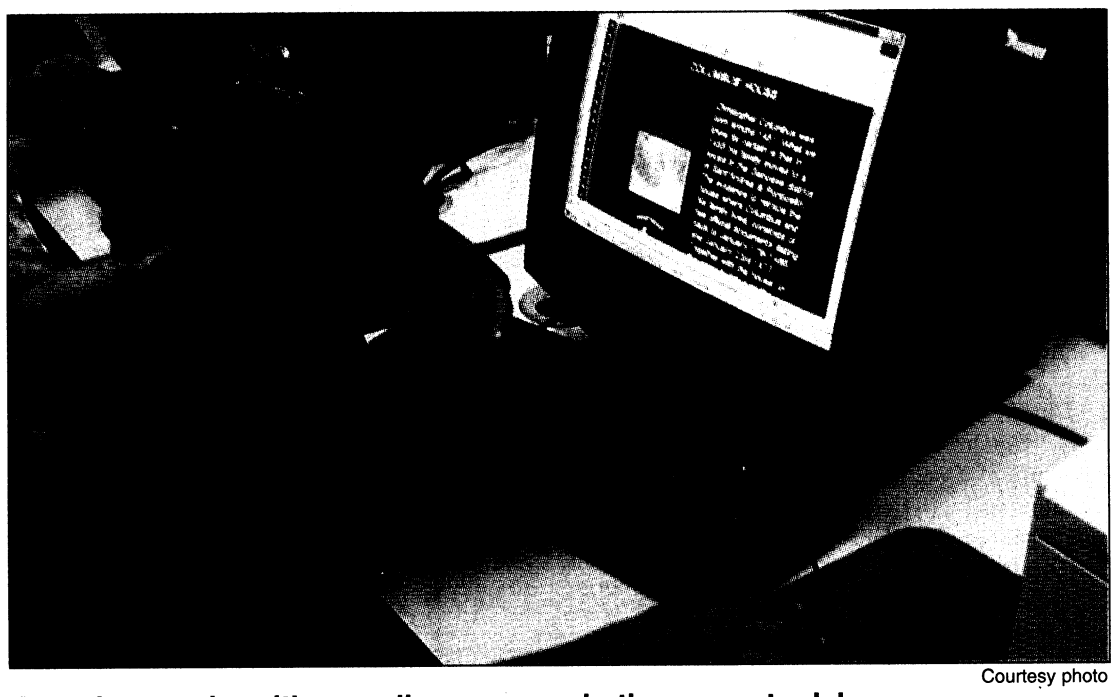
Cup stacking exercises both sides of brain

Becky Archilla
Stowers Elementary School

Stowers Elementary School students are excited about the sport of Cup Stacking. This unique activity that is popular throughout the Fort Benning schools, is an exciting individual and team sport where competitors stack and unstack 12 specially designed plastic cups (Speed Stacks) in predetermined sequences.

Cup Stacking is a sport that not only develops important physical skills, such as hand-eye coordination, quickness and focus, it also promotes self-confidence, teamwork and good sportsmanship. When students are cup stacking they are using both sides of their bodies and brains to develop skills needed for growing children.



Students at Stowers Elementary School work on their Cup Stacking skills with the physical education teacher before school in the Morning Cup Stacking Program and as a part of physical education classes.

The students are excited about working hard to improve their times and are looking forward to the second annual Fort Benning Cup Stacking Tournament.

Internet provides edge

Kids to decide whether Columbus hero or villain

Stowers Elementary School

DoDEA has purchased one-year subscriptions to Classroom Connect and the Quest channel, which are online services for all gifted education students and teachers of the Department of Defense Schools to give school and parents an exciting resource to challenge these students.

Teachers can access lessons through Classroom Connect on practically any subject at any grade level that align with DoDEA performance standards and offer assessment of student progress. Students can use their passwords to log online in their regular classrooms and at home to complete teacher assignments or to explore and research their own areas of interest.

The Quest Channel offers two online adventures each year. Columbus Quest, this fall's adventure, will follow Christopher Columbus' sea route through the Bahamas to Cuba. Students will help the quest team solve one of the great mysteries in the history of exploration: Where did Columbus first set foot in the New World? While learning about Columbus' voyage, they will study the history of exploration and navigation, explore the cultures and traditions of both the modern and historic Caribbean people and learn about the ecology, animals and weather of the islands. Finally, they will use critical thinking to determine if Columbus was a hero or a villain.

In preparation for Columbus Quest, many Fort Benning youngsters are already engaged in Classroom Connect activities. They are researching such questions as what the early explorers learned about currents, tides and winds and the role of the compass in early navigation. This service gives children interesting learning choices such as writing online biographies of early explorers, learning about the lives of early sailors, reading about navigational tools, making their own compasses and model ships, learning about underwater archaeology through visiting ship wrecks, creating online maps and visiting online mariner museums.

Fort Benning teachers, students and parents can attest that technology is a powerful tool. It helps teachers tap the resources to meet gifted students' diverse needs and interests while forming a partnership between school and home learning.

Choose life when death seems preferable

Chaplain (Capt.) Rick Brunson
USAIC Chaplains Office

REFLECTIONS

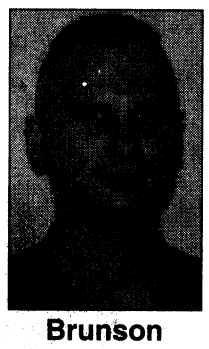
"Can you help me die?" I swallowed hard as I gazed into the eyes of a man in the final phase of one of the most horrible diseases ever contracted by human beings, amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, Lou Gehrig's Disease.

I looked to his wife, searching for a possible answer for the man I had just met.

Fifteen seconds seemed like an hour. I tried to understand the man's request.

Was he asking me to "pull the plug" on his ventilator? I desperately searched for an answer, but found none.

In all of my training, I had not received any preparation for such a moment as this.



So I searched my heart and found a response.

"I can't help you die. But I can help you live. And I will be with you and your family until death comes."

This man had been a faithful servant in the church his entire life. But the horrible disease caused him to slowly deteriorate to the person I met. Unfortunately the nerve endings weren't crippled. His nerves were hypersensitive and they surged constant, chronic pain throughout his body.

I visited the family almost daily for 10 days.

I entered the life of that family, and they became my own. I listened, laughed and cried as the family members shared their stories and memories of a true hero of the faith. When the man died a part of that family died — and a part of me died, too, because I allowed myself to become close.

Brunson

But in the midst of suffering and death, I experienced renewed faith, dignity, honor and even joy.

That was more than a decade ago, but the memory still burns in my mind and heart as I reflect on a recent mission.

This call came to the installation chaplain's office— a chaplain was needed to accompany a casualty notification officer.

Our mission was to inform an unsuspecting mother that her son had taken his life.

As we drove to the home, I tried to prepare myself for the worst case scenario. I now have a new experience to define "worst case scenario."

Unlike the other death, this one had no faith, dignity, honor or joy. I saw degradation, disgrace, and grief.

A soldier wanted to terminate the pain in his life instantly. Unfortunately, he didn't bring an end to his pain.

He escalated it to an unimaginable level for his family, friends and fellow soldiers. That's because suicide is the most brutal act of selfish cowardice a person can commit.

There are no easy answers for people who suffer from unexpected losses.

There are no pat solutions for those who agonize over self-inflicted shame.

There are no instant spiritual or emotional anesthetics for those whose pain seems stuck in an eternal loop.

There's no quick fix for the barrenness of loneliness a person might experience.

But a bottle of liquid courage and a rope (loaded gun, razor blade, pills, etc.) is not a resolution. It's an escape.

After years of pondering, I think I finally understand what the man meant when he asked, "Can you help me die?"

He was asking, "Can you help me strengthen my faith and commitment to God because I'm struggling right now? Can you help me hold up my family because I can't do it by myself anymore?I don't want an escape and I don't want anyone to pull my plug. I want life to the end!"

What more can I say? Choose life.

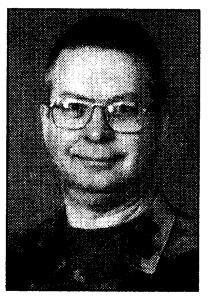
Don't allow unplanned events to ruin marriage



Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Expect the unexpected in marriage. A bill may remain unpaid at the end of the month. The bank may charge an overdraft fee.

A promise may not be kept. An in-law may arrive at your doorstep unexpectedly. A pregnancy may not be planned, or a promotion may not come.

Unexpected events trigger negative emotions that explode into arguments with spouses. These unplanned events detonate the fuel stockpiled by underlying and often hidden issues that have remained unresolved in a marriage.

Underlying issues are hidden expectations, needs and issues that when left unexpressed wreak havoc in a marriage. A couple that argues about what to watch on television may be overlooking the needs for intimacy and independence in a relationship.

Koop

Common hidden issues are power and control, caring and respect, recognition, commitment, integrity, and acceptance and belonging.

Some common signs that a hidden issue are involved are: spinning your wheels around a topic, avoiding the discussion of certain topics, triggers that unleash an avalanche of emotions, and keeping a record of wrongs (1 Corinthians 13:5).

Events tend to erupt at the worst time to resolve an issue. At those times, couples react rather than operate in a proactive and preventive mode.

Couples can handle both events and issues well.

Separate the event from the deeper issues. If needed, take a time out to remain calm.

Deal with the specifics of an event as it happens and move forward. Plan regular weekly conferences to handle the deeper underlying issues before they are triggered by events. Use the speaker-listener technique.

Would you like to make your marriage better? Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760.

Youth Services' football season begins

Reds best Whites in dog-eat-dog game

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

The 11- to 13-year-old Red Bulldogs used a stellar defense and a bone-crushing offense to defeat the White Bulldogs, 24-0, during the opening game of the Youth Services' football season on Blue Field.

"This morning showed that their hard work — two weeks of conditioning camp and two week of practice — was worth it," said Eric Hare, Red Bulldog coach.

Red Bulldog coaches stressed the importance of fundamental tackling for about half of the team's practices, he said, and it seemed to work to their advantage. The White Bulldog team struggled all morning and picked up a minimal amount of offensive yardage.

As the Red Bulldogs defense pitched a shutout, their offense had a great start to the season.

"We don't try to throw it down their throat," Hare said. "We use a methodical, ball control offense.

"It's a well-meshed team. There's no superstar. They all have a part to play in the offense, and if one or two of them don't do their jobs, the team won't win. Today, everyone stepped up."

Red Bulldog Anthony Jones opened the season's scoring with an impressive 67-yard sweep to the right for six points.

After the White Bulldogs botched a punt, the Red Bulldogs' Brandon Shannon broke off a 40-yard run that set up his six-yard touchdown carry.

Penalties prevented the score from escalating for the Red team, as referees nullified two of their long touchdown runs.

The Red Bulldogs continued to stick with a ground attack until late in the first half when quarterback Eric Hare Jr. hooked up with Andrew Rodriguez for a 30-yard reception. However, the White Bulldogs' defense held, and they went to halftime trailing, 12-0.

The second half was a virtual mirror image of the first. Jones added another touchdown and hauled in an interception on defense that set up a Rodriguez 25-yard touchdown scamper.

"It felt good," Jones said. "I hadn't scored a touchdown in a long time."

The reason why his team won was simple, the 12-year-old said.

"We had teamwork," he said. "We didn't fuss at each other about making mistakes. I think we're going to keep winning and go to the championship."

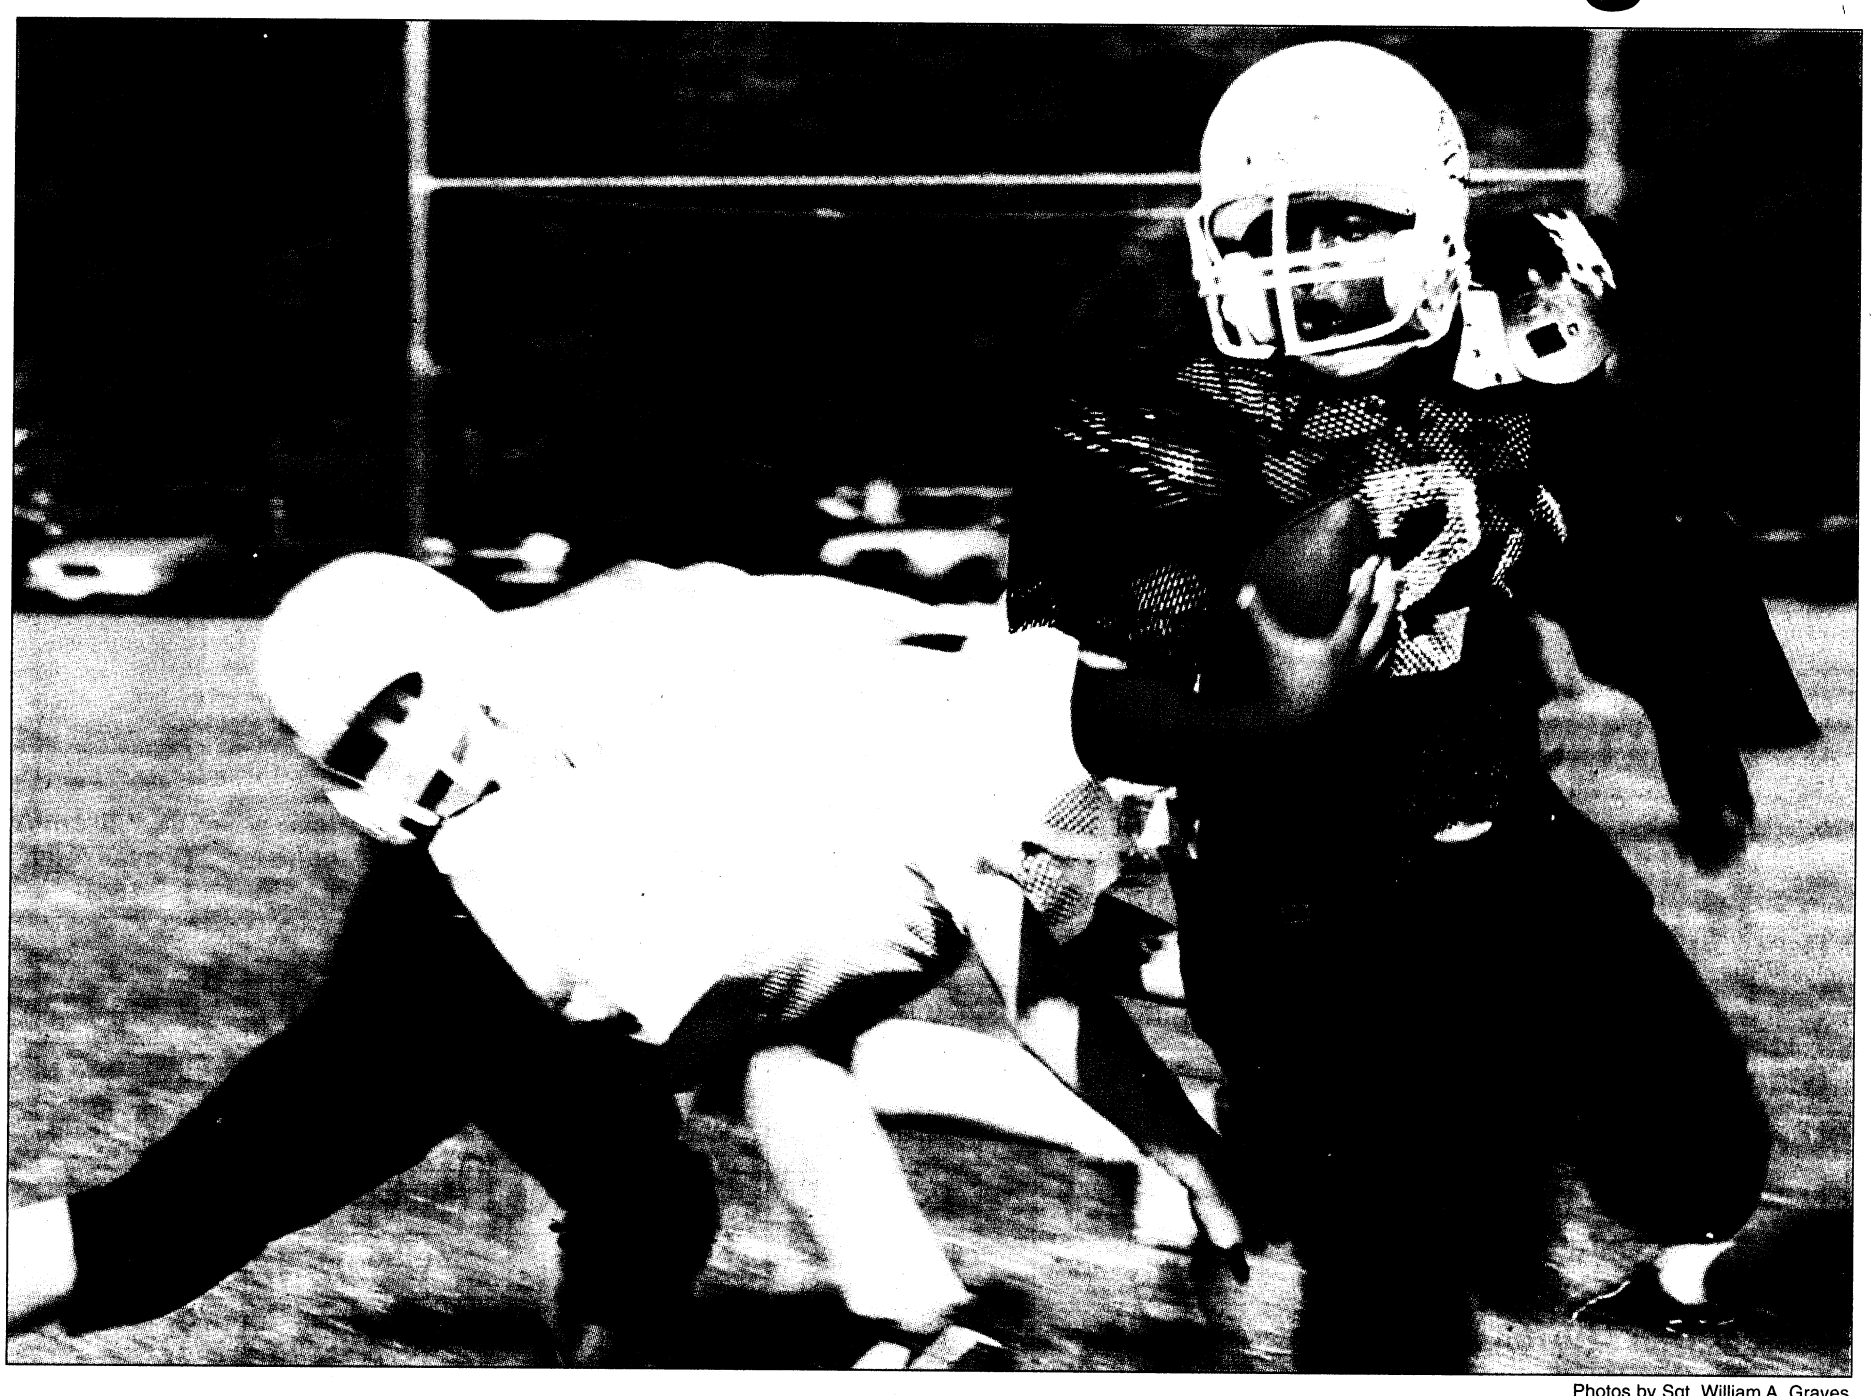
A pivotal player on defense agreed.

"We made everyone scared – the team we played and the team that watched," said Michael Charlton, who also plays tight end on offense. "They're going to have to think about what they're going to do to beat us."

The 13-year-old said the key to the shutout was execution.

"We did everything pretty much to the letter," Charlton said. "No matter which way they went, we were there to shut them down."

It's a long season, and the team can still improve on some aspects of the game, he said.



"Blocking assignments," he said. "Sometimes our guys missed their blocks."

He said he's certain the team will improve, and they'll have fun and remain competitive in the process.

"It's a mixture of both (fun and competition)," Charlton said. "You want to have fun, but you want to win, too, because the more you lose the harder coach is going to make you practice."

The coach feels confident the team will meet its other objectives for the rest of the year — instilling a strong sense of teamwork and developing player skills.

"The key to the season is that every player gets better," Hare said. "Even if we lose every game, if we achieve that goal, the season will have been a success."

Both teams still had some players deployed the first night of the intramural flag football season.

Comanches' quarterback Alfred Thompson ran in the game-winning touchdown with seconds left on the clock.

Games are 6:30, 7:30 and 8:30 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday.

Vehicles Seized By Police To Be Sold Off To Local Car Buyers

Seized, confiscated and impounded vehicles result in unheard of low prices on cars, trucks, vans and sport utilities

Columbus, GA, While it's still true "Crime doesn't pay" for the criminal, it may turn out to be quite rewarding for some local area car buyers this weekend. Thru Saturday, the criminal's loss is your gain as Rivertown Ford in Georgia will be offering vehicles seized by law enforcement agencies for sale direct to the public.

The War On Drugs and "Three-Strike" laws have resulted in an overflow of vehicles becoming Police property.

Buying police and government seized property has long been a great way to get incredibly low prices on cars, boats, even planes and houses. The problem for the public has been finding the auctions and sales where these items were being sold. Plus, many of these events are not open to the public. But that's now all in the past thanks to the Police Seized Vehicle Selloff .

"There are no special permits or licenses needed to shop or buy."

Why are these such bargains? Simply put, it's because the law enforcement organizations that take possession of these vehicles aren't in the car business. The F.B.I., D.E.A., U.S. Marshalls, Government Auctions and local Police and Sherriff organizations all seize vehicles on a daily basis. Additionally, a surprising number of vehicles impounded by the Police for illegal parking or traffic violations are never claimed by their owners. As a result, these organizations must either pay to store the vehicles, or sell them off.

Now, Rivertown Ford has secured many of these vehicles and will pass the savings on to consumers. "We have been planning for this event for over six months. We've scoured auctions throughout the country for these vehicles plus we've become a regular at the local impound lots" said Williams. He also stressed the dealership will make available plenty of other preowned vehicles so this event will include something for every buyer. "Hondas, Fords, Chevys, Toyotas, Dodges, Chryslers, Nissans, Volkswagens, virtually every make is represented here. Some are even still under factory warranty. But you should get here early because I'm sure the most popular vehicles will sell first. "

"Many buyers can just sign the necessary paperwork and drive home with no down payment."

Brad Williams, General Sales Manager, added buying one of these vehicles will be super simple. "There are no special permits or licenses needed to shop or buy. Plus, many buyers can just sign the necessary paperwork and drive home with no down payment. And with these incredibly low prices, some payments are just $97 a month."

"With these incredibly low prices, some payments are just $97 a month!"

Williams concluded with a warning that this one-of-kind-event could be a one-time-only event. "It took a lot of work to put this event together and I'm not sure we'll be able to do it again. Make sure you come see us because missing the Police Seized Sell-Off would be a crime!"

RivertownFord is located at 1680 Whittlesey Rd. in Columbus, GA or call 706-653-7420 . For further information and to reserve a vehicle, visit the official Police Seized Vehicle Selloff web site at www.PoliceSeized.com.

Fort Benning wins ACOE

Post represents TRADOC, DA on-site visits next year

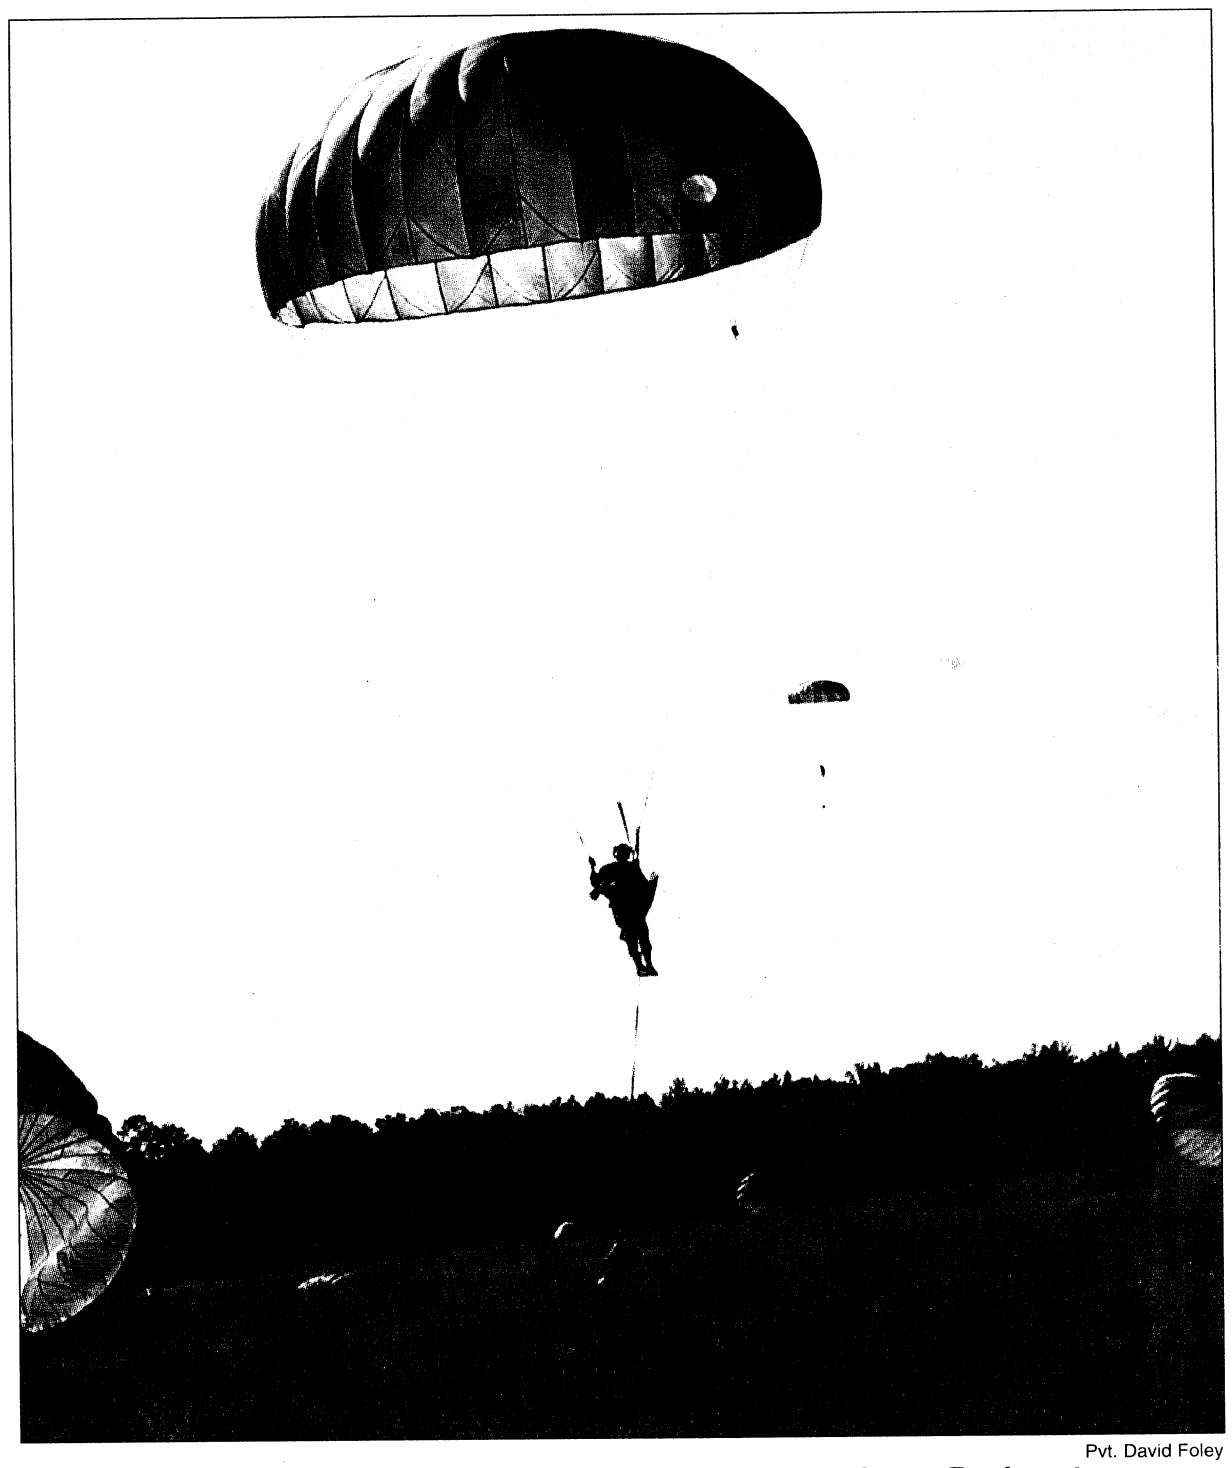
Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning was selected to represent Training and Doctrine Command in the Department of the Army Communities of Excellence competition.

This distinction automatically entitles the post to receive $500,000 at the beginning of fiscal year 2004 and makes it eligible for the Department of the Army top prize of $3 million. Each installation in the competition will receive on-site visits in January and February.

"We hope this will show everyone that Fort Benning is serious about working to improve its processes, products and services and relationship with its customers and employees, which is what ACOE is all about," said Sara Hodges, chief of Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.

After winning the Chief of Staff of the Army, Army Communities of Excellence Award for eight consecutive years from 1993-2000, Fort Benning was not selected to represent TRADOC in the 2001 competition, said Patricia Porter, senior analyst, Quality Management Division, Directorate of Resource Management.



"It feels great to be selected," Porter said. "This is very exciting for Fort Benning. It shows the post's continuous improvement efforts are being recognized."

With the award money, Fort Benning will be able to continue to make quality of life improvements for the soldiers and their families.

The post invested money from previous awards in projects such as upgrading and repairing parks, fitness centers and trails, the library, developing a chapel program, and providing equipment for Youth Services and equipment for the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program.

History comes to Atlanta

Carter Library to showcase paperwork

It's a traveling scrapbook of American history, a collection of the nation's greatest, rarely seen documentary treasures.

American Originals: Treasures from the National Archives is a touring exhibition of some of America's original masterpieces. It's on display at the Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and Museum in Atlanta through January 5.

That's plenty of time to get a close-up look at the Louisiana Purchase Treaty, the U.S. marshal's order to arrest Susan B. Anthony for illegally voting in 1873, a telegram about the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor, a memo for President Nixon regarding a meeting with Elvis Presley, handwritten notes from John F. Kennedy's inaugural speech and much more.

But time is short if you're set on catching a peek at the original and final Emancipation Proclamation, signed by President Lincoln in 1863. Because of the document's fragility, it will be displayed for only four days, Oct. 17-20, and reservations are required.

Buckle up — car safety saves lives

Drive Safely Work Week begins soon

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

There are more than 3.9 million miles of road in the United States and more than 300 million vehicles travel those roads every year.

With all of that road and all of those cars, transportation fatalities rank third as the cause of lost years of life in the U.S. behind heart disease and cancer. Monday through Oct. 11 is Drive Safely Work Week, used to raise awareness about seat belt usage, driving distractions and drunken driving.

"The leading killer of soldiers is vehicular accidents," said Regis Beighley, post safety manager. "That's not just Fort Benning but Armywide. Many of those fatalities may have been prevented if the drivers were wearing seat belts."

Safety belts are credited with preventing 11,900 fatalities and 325,000 serious injuries annually, according to 2000 data from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. If all passengers were to wear their safety belts, an additional 9,200 fatalities and 143,000 serious injuries could be prevented each year.

"Even if you're a good driver someone else may not be. Our highways are overcrowded with people, and some of them have no regard for other people's lives," Beighley said.

Alcohol was a factor in approximately 41 percent of all fatal traffic crashes in 2001, according to a NHTSA study. That year approximately 17,500 people were killed and 275,000 people were injured in alcohol-related crashes.

That's an average of one alcohol-related fatality every 30 minutes.

But it's not just adults who are killed in the accidents; the victims come in all ages.

Between 1985 and 1996, more than 5,500 children were killed in alcohol-related crashes, according to a Journal of American Medical Association study.

Approximately 64 percent of those children were passengers in vehicles driven by impaired drivers. Alcohol isn't the only contributor to car crashes. Distractions cause them, too.

Each year an estimated 284,000 distracted drivers are involved in serious crashes, according to a study by the University of North Carolina Highway Safety Research Center.

"We found that 15 percent of drivers in the study were not paying attention, and more than half of these were distracted by something inside or outside the vehicle," said Dr. Jane Stutts, manager of epidemiological studies at the UNC center and author of the study.

The study found that drivers were most often distracted by something outside their vehicle, followed by adjusting a radio or CD player, talking to other passengers and adjusting climate controls.

If people drive 60 mph when they look down for just two seconds to choose a CD or adjust the climate controls, they'll travel blindly 180 feet, or more than half the length of a football field, according to the Navy safety center Web site.

"Fort Benning has cut traffic fatalities in half every decade for the last 30 years," Beighley said. "It has dropped from 140 in the 70s to 35 in the 90s, and we'd like to cut that in half, too. Every life is precious."

STOP DOMESTIC VIOLENCE

COMMENTARY

As a result of the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, 2001, I believe that it is more important now than ever before to acknowledge the strength and hope that comes from joining together with friends and allies to end violence and promote peace.

October marks Domestic Violence Prevention Month at Fort Benning and Armywide. However, the campaign to prevent domestic violence can and must be a year-round concern.

Without a communitywide commitment to end violence in our homes, we will only find ourselves back here a year from now measuring the hurt.

The violence must stop. Not only are our families threatened, but the fundamental mission of readiness is being undermined. Batterers who fail to come forward for assistance are causing a great burden on families and the military.

We know that prevention is the key.

First, we need to prevent violence from continuing.

Second, we need to recognize that every military couple lives under the risks that can, if not addressed, put families at higher risk for battering.

Finally, prevention will be successful when the entire community understands that family violence is unacceptable, and that positive support for couples and families is what is needed.

Prevention of this kind takes partnership. The partnership must include leadership, the helping system, the media, all military and civilian personnel and their families.

Get involved in the move to prevent domestic violence. Prevention of domestic violence is everyone's individual responsibility.

A display will be set up at the Army Community Service Center, Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza, during the month of October.

Items to promote the program will be free to military families. Educational materials to include brochures on improving marriage and a list of treatment programs and classes offered through Social Work Services will be available. The services and information are right here. Do not wait, use them today.

For more information, call the Family Advocacy Office at 545-7517 to speak to the Family Advocacy Victim advocate for prevention information and referral.

COMMENTARY

This is an open letter to the soldier who was running in the rain on the median of Manchester Expressway at oh-dark thirty Sept. 25.

First, I hope you're still alive. I also hope you aren't being suspended from various contraptions in some hospital while your neck, arms, legs and back try to heal.

My good man, which gene pool did you step out of?

Do you think your reflective belt deflects cars and trucks?

Or did you think that because the symbol on the back of your gray Army T-shirt looks like the S on Superman's costume that you are invincible?

One hundred, eighty pounds of flesh and muscle stand no chance against 2,000 pounds of metal and plastic traveling at 75 mph.

Or do you just like to scare people out of their wits and see how many accidents you can cause.

I was in the far right lane and when I saw you, I nearly jumped out of my skin.

I can imagine what would happen if the driver of a car or truck in the left lane saw you at the last minute.

That driver would veer sharply to the right. Then one of three things could happen.

He or she might be able to regain control and stay on the highway.

Or, the driver might skid all the way across the highway into the bank or three, and could end up sideswiping another vehicle.

You must be new to these parts of the woods if you place your faith in local drivers.

Every time I've been on the expressway, even in broad daylight, and it's been raining, I see at least three cars either off the road or in the median. And sometimes two cars are in the same location because one car tried to fit into the other car's space while the other car was occupying it.

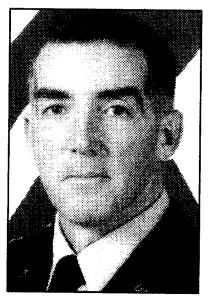
I don't know where you live, but let me suggest some alternatives to the Manchester Expressway.

You can run on Mehaffey or Old Warm Springs Roads, which run parallel to the expressway on either side of it. You can run on County Line Road. But best of all, run on post, or try one of the parks — Flat Rock, Cooper Creek or Weracoba (Lake Bottom). They all have running trails you could try out.

You might even try the Riverwalk — I don't think you'll have to dodge bicycles at that time of the morning, but if you do get hit by one, you might actually win. Your head is certainly harder.

If you escaped injury, then what they say is true: "God protects children and idiots."

Community works together to prevent domestic violence



Our Army-based program to prevent domestic violence is ongoing. But each year, along with citizens and public officials across the United States, we declare the month of October as Domestic Violence Prevention Month, in order to call attention to the problem, and to re-commit ourselves to our goal.

Our campaign against domestic violence will succeed. Several years ago all military services stepped up their efforts to end domestic violence, and the Army led the way. As time goes on, we are beginning to see some results: the numbers of cases have been in decline since the mid-90s. There are good signs in the civilian population as well. We note with cautious optimism that the Justice Department's Bureau of Justice statistics has reported a significant decrease in domestic violence against women in the U.S. between 1993 and 1998. But the numbers remain terribly high — every 15 seconds a woman in this country is beaten by her current or former husband or intimate partner. Studies report a range of between 2 and 4 million women are being abused annually.

Our leadership is important. What we must accomplish in the military can have positive results in the civilian community as well. Everyone at this installation must be a role model for what is right and just when it comes to domestic violence. We must continue to build strong partnerships with the civilian community, so we can use Army teamwork to share our best prevention efforts.

Our command commitment to domestic violence prevention is total. Violence that occurs in our military families undermines our military objectives. Children in 43 percent of all reported cases in the general population witness such violence. Children who witness violence against their mothers are 10 times more likely to abuse their female partners as adults, than boys raised in nonviolent homes.

In other words, violence between intimate partners does harm to the children in the home. One more reason our campaign against domestic violence must succeed.

In American society, real men treat the women in their lives and the women in our society with great dignity and with respect.

I have zero tolerance for perpetrators of domestic violence.

Our campaign for 2002, therefore, declares, "Domestic Violence: Peace Begins at Home!"

To further our campaign, I hereby proclaim October as Domestic Violence Prevention Month at Fort Benning and call on every member of this community to join in the campaign.

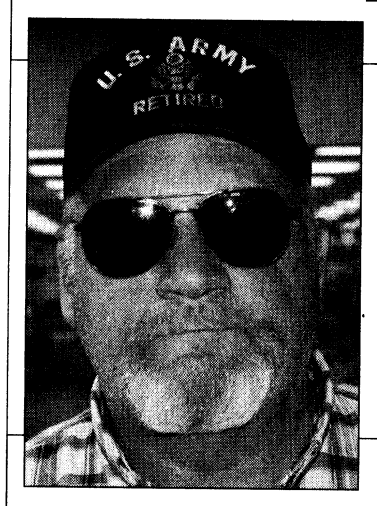
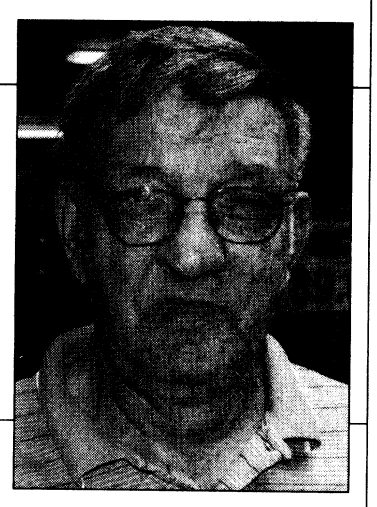
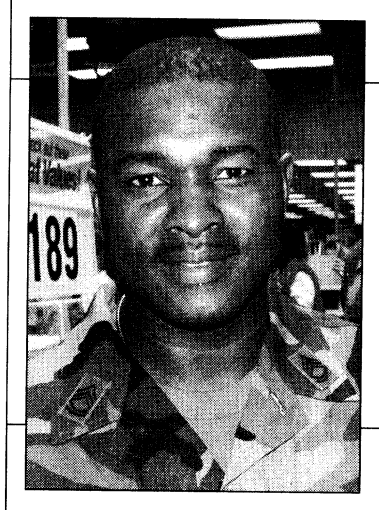
VARIOUS VOICES



How would you help someone you suspected was in an abusive relationship?



Sgt. Shelton Johnson, 203rd Forward Support Battalion — "I would get them reference material. However, I would not counsel them, because the guilty party would be in denial thus causing more problems. You can only fix one thing at a time."



Officer Candidate Angela Pollock, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I would be a friend to them and talk to them about the situation. I would also help them find a counselor."

Retired 1st Sgt. Carlos Santiago, Columbus — "I would talk to them personally and advise them to seek help."

Retired Staff Sgt. Darvin Linn, Columbus — "I would get them separated because it takes two to make an argument happen."

Sgt. 1st Class Stacy Linder, 160th Military Police Company — "I would refer them to professional help, because you shouldn't handle a domestic situation yourself."

Phyllis Bailey, family member — "I would send them to the Family Advocacy Program and be there as much as possible for them."

Troops to Teachers eases soldiers' transition

Program helps Georgia produce more teachers

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

When Georgia's governor Roy Barnes introduced the 2001 education reform bill, skeptics scoffed at his proposal to enact an alternative certification program for teachers. "Microwave teachers" they called them.

Two years later, the Teacher Alternative Preparation Program — TAPP — has earned the respect of naysayers statewide.

"If they keep turning out teachers of this caliber, we can only succeed. I'm so impressed," said Vanessa Biggers, principal of Marshall Middle School in Columbus, where TAPP interns are in their second year of teaching.

The Georgia TAPP was designed to encourage middle-aged professionals — engineers, mathematicians, scientists, soldiers, etc. — to bring their expertise into the classroom. Georgia suffers from a severe teacher shortage, producing only 4,000 of the 13,000 needed annually, primarily in middle and high schools in the areas of math, science and special education.

"We're looking for people who can bring maturity, commitment and valuable real-life experiences into the classroom," said Bill Kirkland, state program manager for Troops to Teachers, a military initiative to help soldiers transition into the teaching profession. "It takes guts to be a teacher, and it takes guts to change careers."

It also takes money.

Therein lies the problem for some professionals, who can't afford to give up their day jobs to attend the classes necessary to earn a teaching certificate.

Problem noted and solved, Kirkland said. Troops to Teachers, which provides funding for soldiers seeking a teaching career, is collaborating with Columbus State University's Intern Teaching Team Program to accommodate Fort Benning soldiers, retirees and family members who can't attend traditional classes. Beginning in January, weekend classes will be offered at Fort Benning.

CSU's intern program, now in its second year, qualifies applicants to be employed as teachers during the two years it takes them to earn their teaching degree. They're "monitored and mentored" all the while, said Charles Cumiskey, spokesman for the program.

"We're not just going to throw anybody to the wolves," he said. "This is about finding individuals who have what it takes to be great teachers and giving them the opportunity to teach while they complete the requirements necessary for a traditional teaching certificate."

And career soldiers typically have what it takes to be successful teachers, Kirkland said.

"It would be hard to find a senior NCO or officer who hasn't spent a good deal of time instructing," he said. "They already know what it takes to maintain control of a classroom, to develop a lesson plan. Essentially they have been teachers. And let's be honest, a 41-year-old with 20 years in the military is in many ways way ahead of a 21-year-old fresh out of college. Second career folks bring with them a whole package of life experiences that benefit the teaching profession."

Through the Troops to Teachers program, soldiers can receive up to $10,000 in tuition and bonuses if they agree to teach in a public school anywhere in the U.S. for three years.

With funding and an alternative route to education, Kirkland said, there's nothing to stop a soldier from pursuing a teaching career.

"Imagine a soldier with a year or less until retirement. He participates in this program, gets funding through Troops to Teachers, takes classes on weekends, right here on Fort Benning, and makes a seamless transition into the classroom next fall," Kirkland said.

"These are people who feel they can make a difference in the life of a child and they're anxious to do it," Cumiskey said. "That's the beauty of this (program). They have the maturity and the desire to succeed and we remove any obstacles that might have hindered them a few years ago."

Representatives from CSU, Troops to Teachers and Fort Benning's education center will be on hand for an open house at 10 a.m. Oct. 10 in Room 32A, Infantry Hall.

"If you're interested, come ask questions. Don't disqualify yourself," Kirkland said. "We don't want anybody to give up on their dream of becoming a teacher because they think they can't get there from here."

Applicants must have an undergraduate degree from an accredited institution, a 2.75 grade point average (with some flexibility) and must pass the PRAXIS 1, a national standardized education test, which is offered weekly at CSU and Fort Benning's education center.

Kirkland said he hopes to see partnerships of this kind develop around the state.

"This is a prototype of the kind of relationship I'd like to see established between the seven military installations in Georgia and local universities and colleges," he said. "That's my goal, and I'm super excited about it's potential."

For more information, call the education center at 545-7118 or Kirkland at 1-800-745-0709.

Army needs chaplains

Program helps units gain God's support

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

At any given time of the day, Chaplain (Capt.) Rick Brunson keeps a pocket full of little green army men in his pocket, just in case his soldiers need a boost.

"When they are down and a little stressed, I pull one of these men out of my pocket and hand it to them," Brunson said. "I tell them the little soldier is their Army guardian angel and remind them they are being watched over."

Brunson hopes the message behind the little men will bring soldiers a sense of peace. As a three-year reserve chaplain who recently joined the active-duty ranks, it is the soldiers who are Brunson's heroes.

"I know this is what I want to do for the rest of my life," Brunson said. "I want to be right next to our soldiers in combat. If we go to war, I'll request I go with them first."

Brunson began his military career assigned to the 7th Support Battalion, 87th Regiment in Dothan, Ala., three years ago. He built strong relationships with the soldiers there, encouraging them in everything from morning physical training to pep talks and prayer before deploying. In January of this year, Brunson became an active-duty chaplain at Fort Benning, something his family and he decided would likely be a lifetime commitment.

"The best part of my job is interacting with soldiers," Brunson said. "They are the most amazing people I have ever known. I love what I do. I feel I make a difference."

Brunson was recruited to be an active-duty chaplain through the Finders Keepers chaplain-recruiting program Fort Benning is supporting.

Many battalions are operating without a religious influence because of a shortage of chaplains. An extensive recruiting effort is now underway at colleges, seminaries and posts around the nation, with hopes of influencing people to follow a calling into the chaplaincy.

> "I've had men use their only phone call while they are deployed to call me and talk. I've already made a commitment that I will never let them down."
> Capt. Rick Brunson
> Chaplain

"We are especially interested in soldiers who are interested in becoming a chaplain," said Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell, Installation Chaplain for Fort Benning. "Soldiers who even feel the slightest bit of interest should take the initiative and find out more about the program as soon as possible."

Soldiers interested in becoming a chaplain must have a bachelor's degree and be willing to attend a seminary of their choice. Soldiers will then work on achieving their master's degree in divinity or theology, which can take three years, Chaplain (Maj.) Ken Yates said.

"During time at the seminary, chaplain candidates are also working with units," Brunson said. "You never actually lose touch with the men, you stay well connected." The connection is one that will only grow as the role of a chaplain is needed now more than ever.

"As a chaplain, you have to be right there with your soldiers," said Brunson, who is working as the chaplain resource manager now, but is hoping to head out to Sand Hill to work with the basic training unit as soon as he can.

"I've had men use their only phone call while they are deployed to call me and talk. I've already made a commitment that I will never let them down."

For more information on becoming a chaplain or finding out more about the chaplain program, call 545-2288.

Fort Benning to offer free depression screenings

Six screening sites to help people keep it together

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

If you have a few minutes during lunch on Thursday, take time to answer a few easy questions. The answers may change your life.

Between 17 and 20 million Americans are affected by some form of depression every year. Common symptoms of depression include feeling sad, having difficulty sleeping and maintaining relationships, or even thoughts of suicide.

Thursday is National Depression Screening Day, a program endorsed by the American Medical Association. The program is sponsored on Fort Benning by the Army Substance Abuse Program, Martin Army Community Hospital department of psychiatry and the Infantry Center chaplains.

"This is a positive event," said Yvonne Wilbanks, Suicide Prevention manager. "We want to educate people about disorders that can be treated, let them know what the symptoms are and get treatment referral information."

Wilbanks has organized the screening day program at Fort Benning for the past three years.

"We picked screening sites where we thought people would be, and lunch is a great time," she said.

"The chaplains are heavily involved this year and are very committed to being a part of the program."

The questionnaires, developed at Harvard University, are designed to identify signs of depression, mania, Generalized Anxiety Disorder and Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. Commanders want soldiers to identify issues and get help, Wilbanks said.

"It's well-known within the military community that soldiers experience things that the general population does not."

Screening sites will operate Thursday from 11 a.m. until 1:30 p.m at six sites on Fort Benning: Infantry Hall (Room 30), Main Post Post Office, 36th Engineer Group Dining Facility, Main Post Exchange, 29th Infantry Regiment Motor Pool, and 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division Dining Facility.

Replica of wall to arrive soon

240 foot replica will be open Oct. 11-13 24 hours a day

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The traveling replica of the Vietnam Wall will arrive Sunday and be open to the public Oct. 11-13.

The foundation for the wall at Sacrifice Field is completed, after the arrival, it will be assembled and open to the public Oct. 11-13.

"We want as many people to come down to see it as possible," said Angela Garnto, special event coordinator for Striffler-Hamby Mortuary Inc. "The wall will be traveling all over the country, and it may not be able to come back to Fort Benning for a few years."

The opening ceremony is 11 a.m. Oct. 11 on Sacrifice Field. Congressman Sanford Bishop and retired Col. Robert Nett, Medal of Honor recipient, are scheduled to speak at the event.

Retired Col. Ben Purcell, who spent five and a half years in a Vietnam prisoner of war camp, will be the keynote speaker for the Oct. 12 ceremony. The Rolling Thunder motorcycle club, an advocate for POW-MIA and veterans issues, is scheduled to hold a rally Oct. 12 and stay to volunteer until the closing of the memorial.

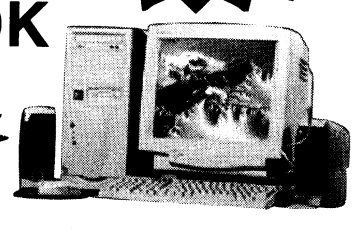
"Every Memorial Day for the last 15 years (Rolling Thunder motorcycle club) goes to D.C. to visit the wall, and it's grossly crowded and hard to get to," said Stanley Adams, Rolling Thunder Georgia chapter president.

"Veterans in other parts of the country who can't travel to see it get a chance to with this," he said. "Making a traveling wall is an excellent idea. Even though it's a replica, it's still very moving to see."

The closing ceremony is scheduled for 5 p.m. Oct. 13 with a candlelight vigil beginning at 6:30 p.m.

Rolling Thunder will be at the site around the clock after the rally, Adams said.

"During the night shift, around 2 and 3 a.m. a lot of Vietnam era veterans may come to visit, and we wanted to be the ones there if they need counseling or someone to talk to," he said.



Visiting the wall is free of charge. There will also be POW-MIA information, and the Red Cross will be on site, Garnto said.

The Infantry Museum is also extending its hours to 8 a.m. to 7 p.m., Oct. 11 and 9 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Oct. 12-13.

Post Internet experiences problems

Web surfing causes Net problems

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's network bandwidth has reached its peak and if Internet users on post don't limit their time online, the system could be at risk for overload, said director of Information Management Paul Yates.

"Recreational surfing, streamlining audio and video, and soldiers downloading extensive files from the Web are slowing the system," Yates said.

Information management became aware of the network overload Sept. 19 as engineers converted the post e-mail system to new hardware. That's when the post noticed network traffic was running at 100 percent capacity.

"Our officers and other key Fort Benning leaders involved with the safety of our country need quick access to the Internet now more than ever," Yates said. "When the bandwidth is full, users can wait several minutes to hours for response time and can even be kicked off of the Web in the middle of their work."

> "There are plenty of computers in the library for users to spend as much time as they want to surfing the Web."
> Paul Yates
> Director of Information Management

Users who need graphics and other visuals for work are also having a tough time pulling up those files. When that happens, users can call the Internet help desk on post for help.

"We get our fair share of complaints," said Hank Slavico, supervisor of the Information Management help desk.

"The most common complaints are by users who can't pull up their e-mail instantly. They could be waiting on an important message from higher up, and they can't access it."

The Fort Benning computer system operates on seven megabits of bandwidth, and financially the post can't afford to upgrade anytime soon. That means all access on the Net must be business, not pleasure during the peak hours of the day, from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Yates said.

To minimize the problem, information management is requiring soldiers and government employees to use the computers at the post library after work for their recreational use.

"There are plenty of computers in the library for users to spend as much time as they want to surfing the Web," Yates said. "But getting on the Net for anything except business is strictly prohibited."

If the problem persists, penalties may be necessary. Engineers are able to track users by name and pinpoint what they are downloading and where they are surfing, Yates said.

"We don't want to make a bigger issue of this," Yates said. "We aren't the police, and we don't want to have to track people down for not following orders. But something has got to give, and we definitely don't want it to be the network."

The issue only applies to employees and soldiers working from the office, not residents using the Internet from home.

For problems relating to the Fort Benning Internet, call the help desk at 545-2178.

Treasures: Exhibit displays Emancipation Proclamation

Call (404) 223-6700 for reservation.

The preliminary Emancipation Proclamation, in which Lincoln announced his plan to free slaves in the Confederate states, will remain part of the display in its entirety, which has been called "the finest collection of major documents to leave Washington since the Freedom Train in 1949."

"It's a collection of historical jewels," and "a showcase of documents that have charted the course of American history."

"Original documents hold messages beyond their words," reads the library's guide for tourists, who should be on the lookout for "the raw stuff of history ... the glorious and the inglorious, in its most unprocessed form."

In 1863, at the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation, Lincoln expressed concern that his hand be steady, lest the generations that followed should doubt his resolve. The result was a clear and steady signature, a "message beyond words," the brochure explains.

Dr. Milton Gustofson, senior archivist with the National Archives, said his favorite display is the Louisiana Purchase.

"(President) Jefferson was going to buy New Orleans for $10 million, but France offered him all of Louisiana for another $5 million," Gustofson said. "$15 million for all of it. What a bargain. That's the kind of thing that makes this (exhibit) so much fun. It's amazing, yes, but it's fun, too."

To see raw American history, and "such a wide range of it, is incredible," and to have it come to you, that's an opportunity you don't want to miss, Gustofson said.

The exhibition was created by The Foundation for the National Archives and the National Archives and Records Administration, the nation's official record keeper, which houses 300 years worth of the nation's most valuable documents, letters, maps and photographs. The yearlong tour, which is scheduled to appear in eight locations around the U.S., coincides with the renovation of the National Archives Rotunda in Washington, D.C. The Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and Museum is located at 441 Freedom Parkway, exit 248C on Interstate 85 in downtown Atlanta. It is open from 9 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. Monday through Saturday and noon to 4:45 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $5 for adults, $4 for seniors, 16 and under free. Military, veterans and their families will be admitted free on Veterans' Day, Nov. 11.

Soldiers start new Army careers

Company sends Sand Hill soldiers 'down range'

Pfc. Brian Trapp

During basic combat training, civilians make the transition to soldiers through nine weeks of intense training — the result, a disciplined, respected person with more confidence.

B Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, graduated Thursday, giving its soldiers the start to their military careers.

"Now that we're at graduation, I feel a real sense of accomplishment," said Pvt. Mark Fisher, soldier of the cycle. "It's great to finally see the end result."

"From day one, these soldiers have come a long way," said Staff Sgt. Eddie Lewis, drill sergeant of the cycle. "When the soldiers get here, you have to teach them how to walk with drill and ceremony. Most don't know their left from their right. They'll make you upset, but you realize the accomplishments they've made at graduation when they march out on the field."

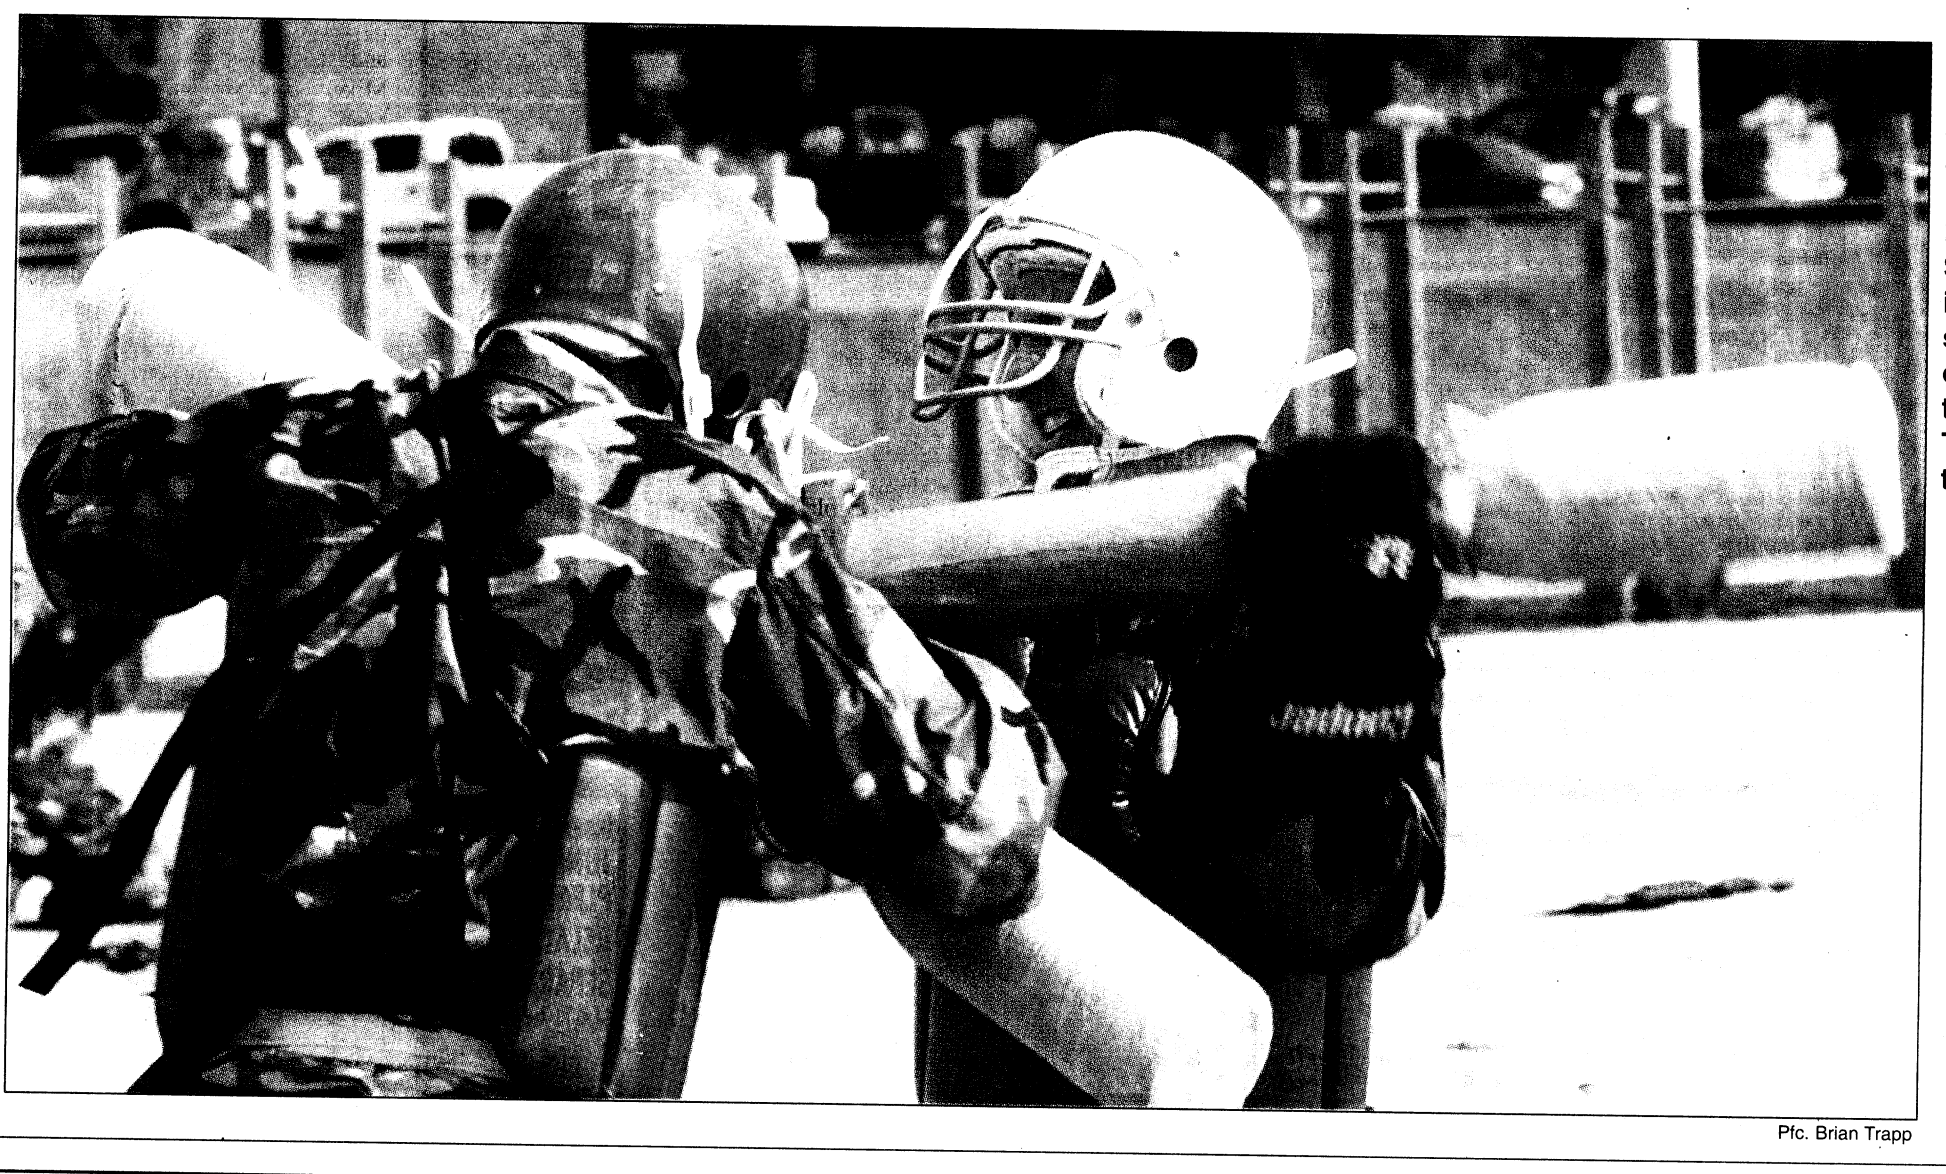
Fisher, 26, a former carpenter from Portland, Ore., enlisted for six years to become a wire systems installer. He also had to say goodbye to his wife for his training, and "can't wait to see her."

"I'm proud to be distinguished honor (graduate), but I just did what the drill sergeants told me to do," Fisher said. "You reap what you sow. When you put in 100 percent you'll get 100 percent."

Fisher said he deserves to be soldier of the cycle as much as 20 other soldiers in the company.

His teachers were excellent examples of military bearing, Fisher said.

The company practiced the movements for their graduation ceremony at a dress rehearsal Tuesday on Pomeroy Field.



The soldiers can't show their family members what they have learned in basic rifle marksmanship or grenades, Lewis said. The only thing they can showcase is their marching.

KOREAN WAR — the forgotten war remembered

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

Oct. 3

Lee Hak Do, North Korean leader of riots on Koje-do in June, instigated the uprising as a way of impressing his bosses back home, non-communist POWs tell their captors. North Korea condemned Lee to death for surrendering his troops to the Americans, they say.

Great Britain explodes its first atom bomb in the Monte Bello Islands 50 miles off northwestern Australia. It is the 35th atomic explosion after 31 U.S. and three Soviet blasts. Only a small group of officials from within the United Kingdom sees the explosion. News media speculate the weapon could be used in artillery.

The Soviets, in a note to the U.S. government, demand that U.S. Ambassador to Russia George F. Kennan be recalled for his "slanderous attacks" on the Soviet Union. What got the communists upset again at Kennan was his lumping together the restrictions placed on Americans by the Nazis before WWII with those enforced by the communists these days.

Secretary of State Dean Acheson says Oct. 3 the Kennan's remark about foreigners being isolated in Moscow "will be recognized in most parts of the world as a truthful one."

Kennan is not recalled but he is in Germany with his wife and is not ordered to return to Moscow.

Oct. 3-9

A Chinese deserter lets the Eighth Army know Oct. 3 that the Chinese communists plan to attack White Horse Hill on the ROK 9th Infantry Division line about five miles northwest of Chorwon.

The hill is the crest of a two-mile long forested hill mass extending northeast-southwest. It dominates the allied approach to Chorwon through the Yokokchon Valley. If White Horse is lost, IX Corps would have to withdraw its forces to the high ground south of the valley. They could no longer use the Chorwon Road, and the enemy would have an opening for an attack.

After the deserter's information is verified by other intelligence sources, IX Corps gives the 9th ID extra tanks, artillery, rocket launchers and antiaircraft weapons adapted for ground use. Maj. Gen. Kim Jong Oh, division commander, places two infantry battalions on White Horse and keeps a regiment with an additional battalion in ready reserve.

The tanks and antiaircraft guns are placed on the flanks of the hill to cover valley approaches.

The Chinese begin their battlefield preparation by opening the floodgates of the dam on the Yokokchon River Oct. 6, hoping it will prevent the 2nd Infantry Division from coming to help the 9th Division. The river floods several feet but never interferes with military operations.

Then about a battalion of Chinese attack the French battalion attached to the 2nd ID on Arrowhead (Hill 281) to keep the division occupied. The French holds the hill and gives the enemy a pasting. The communists attack Arrowhead again Oct. 9 and receive the same battering.

In the meantime an intense artillery and mortar barrage tries to soften up the ROK defenses on White Horse. When it lifts two Chinese battalions fail three times to break the ROK lines. It costs them around 1,500 casualties to the Koreans 300.

The survivors of the first three attacks are reinforced with two more battalions Oct. 7. This time the offensive drives the ROK 30th Regiment off the top of White Horse.

Less than two hours later it's dark and two battalions from the 9th's 28th Regiment counterattack and clean the Chinese from the 30th's positions.

The enemy losses are extremely high. A Chinese prisoner will later say that after the first two days less than 20 men remain the in the companies that first attacked the hill.

By Oct. 8, diversionary actions are largely discontinued and the Chinese rearranges its forces to concentrate on White Horse. Two more fresh battalions are thrown at the hill and parts of the force make it to the crest, only to be thrown back by another nighttime attack by the 28th Regiment.

Gen. James A Van Fleet, Eighth Army commander, tells reporters Oct. 8 the Chinese had been "clobbered" by U.N. forces but might still continue "limited" attacks for the next week.

Another enemy battalion joins the fight Oct. 9. Gen. Kim sends two battalions from the 29th Regiment to strengthen the 28th. All day long and into the night the fighting seesaws back and forth across the crest of White Horse. The week ends with the situation still in doubt.

The Air Force reports Oct. 3 that U.N. pilots shot down nine MiG-15s over the past seven days, while one F-86 and an Australian Meteor were lost in dogfights.

U.S. Navy carrier planes hit a supply dump at Hoeyang on North Korea's east coast Oct. 7.

On Oct. 9, the Air Force reveals that a B-29 Superfortress disappears from radar near the Soviet-held Kurile Islands after it was intercepted by another aircraft.

The truce talks in Panmunjom are recessed indefinitely after the two sides meet Oct. 8 and the communists reject the three options presented by the U.N. to break the deadlock of prisoner repatriation.

Lt. Gen. William K. Harrison, U.N. truce team chief, tells Lt. Gen. Nam Il, his North Korean counterpart, that the U.N. has no more proposals to make on the prisoner exchange issue. They can discuss any alternative the Reds have. However, he says the U.N. will attend no more meetings that the communists use for propaganda purposes. Harrison blasts the Reds' "unprincipled, cruel" policy of treating individual POWs as "so many sheep," for being willing to forego the return of all POWs if the U.N. delivers a specified large number.

Gen. Mark Clark, U.N. supreme commander, tells reporters in Tokyo also on Aug. 8 that he has concluded that the communists "do not sincerely desire an armistice."

Secretary of State Dean Acheson supports the two generals the same day and says the U.N.'s extended recess is "an affirmative step toward obtaining an armistice." He says it's now up to the enemy to make a sincere effort and "the communists must now recognize the position of the U.N. Command is firm as well as right" on the prisoner exchange issue.

U.N. Secretary General Trygve Lie says Oct. 8 that a truce with the existing battle line would represent "the first great victory for the principle of world collective security" under either the short-lived League of Nations or the United Nations.

Oct. 7

The New York Yankees win their fourth consecutive World Series with a 4-2 victory over the Brooklyn Dodgers at Ebbets Field to take the Series 4 games to 3.

The Defense Department puts American losses in Korea through Oct. 3 at 120,269, with 21,062 dead.

VEAP converts to GI Bill may lose benefits

Soldiers have 18 months to make payment

Tesia Williams
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers who converted from the Veterans Educational Assistance Program to the Montgomery GI Bill are at risk of forfeiting their contributions and losing their benefits, officials said, if they don't make their payments.

Soldiers have 18 months from the time they signed the Montgomery GI Bill, Department of Defense Form 2366, to pay the mandatory contribution of $2,700, personnel officials said. Many of the 5,000 soldiers who signed up for the program may have already missed their deadline, according to officials at the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command

"Program participants need to contact their finance office and make sure the contribution will be paid within the 18-month deadline," said John Rizkallah, chief of the Education Incentives and Counseling Branch at PERSCOM.

If soldiers are not able to pay the $2,700 in time by using monthly allotments, they have the option of combining the allotment with a lump sum or they can make a single lump sum payment, Rizkallah said.

"The law states that if participants don't pay the contribution in full within the deadline, they forfeit anything they contributed to VEAP and will not be eligible for any education benefits through the Veterans Administration," Rizkallah said.

It is imperative that soldiers look at the date they signed their DD Form 2366 and ensure that they have the contribution paid in full within 18 months of that date, Rizkallah said.

"To date, the VA has not made any exceptions to the deadline," he said.

VEAP was first enacted by Congress for post Vietnam-era soldiers. It was designed to attract high quality men and women to the all-volunteer armed forces. Congress signed the VEAP conversion law on Oct. 30, 2000, making it the second conversion opportunity since October 1996.

Fort Benning command sergeant major retires

Integrity — NCO's favorite value

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

After 30 years of service to the Army, Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein will officially retire at 4 p.m. Thursday at the Ranger Memorial.

Klein, originally from Cold Spring, Minn., was drafted into the Army in September 1972, after eight Israeli athletes were massacred at the Olympic Summer Games in Munich, Germany.

"I originally came in saying that I would only do two years and get out," Klein said. "But after serving with some certain noncommissioned officers, I decided to stay in."

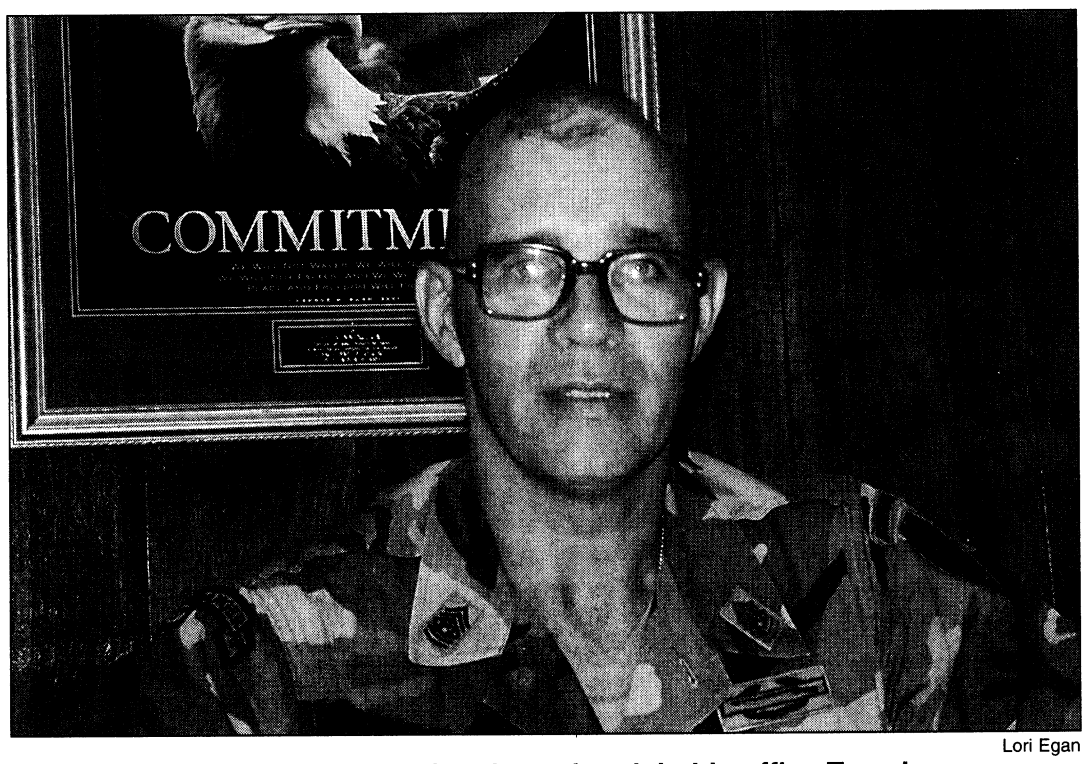
Throughout his Army career, Klein has served as a drill sergeant at Fort Leonard wood, Mo., first sergeant with the 9th Infantry Division in Fort Lewis, Wash., and Command Sgt. Maj. of both 2nd and 3rd Ranger Battalions, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"My favorite part of the Army was the time I spent in the Ranger bats," Klein said. "They refused to accept failure, and they always strived to be the best."

Klein is a Ranger, Airborne, Scuba, Pathfinder and Drill Sergeant School graduate.

He also has hundreds of hours invested in correspondence courses.

"The schools and the correspondence courses got me ready for being a leader in the Army," Klein said. "I know that I can retire and look at myself and say I did the best I could."



Klein will retire in the Columbus area and will work for Wexford Group International.

However, some things won't change for Klein once he gets out of the Army.

"I'm still going to get up every morning to do PT," Klein said. "PT sets the tone for the day.

"If I ever stop doing PT, I'll die.

"The Army has been my lifestyle," Klein said. "I'm proud of what I have done and what the men who have served under me have done."

Lori Egan

Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein takes a break in his office Tuesday.

Some of Klein's comrades have spoken highly of the way he leads and by what means he leads.

"Command Sergeant Major Klein is what I would call a soldier's soldier," said Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso, incoming post Command Sergeant Major. "No matter how complicated a situation is, he uses common sense to reach an answer.

"If I could describe him in one word, it would be 'soldier.' "It's a simple word, but yet it means so much.

"If someone looks at you and says, 'Now that's a soldier,' then there is no higher accolade than that," Kelso said. "Klein loves being a soldier.

"If the Army would let him, he would stay in and set the standards until the day he died."

"Klein is a standard bearer for all," said Lt. Col. K.K. Chinn, 75th Ranger Regiment, deputy commander. "Our unit was never surprised and always ready because of his foresight."

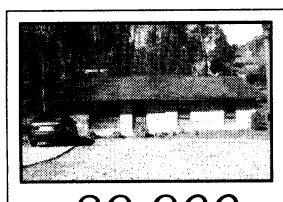
Klein now has a new job to always be ready for.

"Retirement is going to be something different for me," Klein said. "I'll probably sleep through the whole night and not wake up every three or four hours."

Klein will also have some time to spend with his two grandchildren, Cody, 3, and Abigail, 11, who live in the Columbus area.

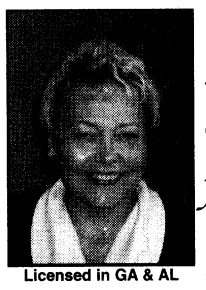
"I'm looking forward to spending more time with my family," Klein said. "They have supported me my whole life, and I don't know what I would do without them."

Klein and his wife, Patty, have been married for 30 years and they have three children, Mike, 27, Megan, 26, and Melissa, 25.



As Klein's Army career ends, the values he has lived by will not change.

"The most important value to me is integrity," Klein said. "When I say I'm going to do something, I do it, and I expect the same from everyone else.



"That won't end when I'm out," he said. "Values are something we as Americans should live by.

"They are the backbone of our society."

STOP ABUSE Program provides services

Family Advocacy Program

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, a time when every person should consider what can be done to end the epidemic of domestic violence that plagues our families, community and our nation.

The statistics are staggering. Every nine seconds a woman is beaten. In fact, battering of women by a family member results in more injuries that require medical attention than rape, automobile crashes and muggings combined. In 2000, Georgia's law enforcement agencies reported 56,339 incidents of domestic violence and 48 domestic violence homicides in the state, according to the Georgia Commission on Family Violence.

Domestic violence is everyone's business. Abuse affects everyone in our community, and we must all come together to stop this epidemic. If you are a victim of domestic violence, help is available through the Army Family Advocacy Program.

The FAP is a specialized program designed to prevent child and spouse maltreatment. The main focus of FAP is to develop prevention programs that contribute to a healthy life for the family, said Rebecca Welch, program manager. A lot of people get the wrong idea about the program, she said, because they think the soldiers and their families will be punished if an incident is reported or if a call is received. This is a misconception.

The program provides training and services to help families, not to create problems for them. Services are provided to families who are vulnerable to the kinds of stress that can lead to abuse.

When families seek help or identify problems, referrals are made to other treatment programs on and off the installation. In order to strengthen the families and prevent the recurrence of abuse, FAP encourages voluntary self-referral through education and awareness programs.

Listed below are programs that have been designed to help prevent child and spouse abuse:

• Victim advocacy — provides victims of domestic violence with the support and information necessary to make positive choices for themselves and their children. For more information, call Theresa Sanchez at 545-4013 or 545-7517.

• Violence intervention — provides crisis intervention in emergency situations. Cases involving family violence intervention that need long-term treatment and follow-up are referred to Social Work Services.

• Parent education — Parent support programs assist parents to "get off to a good start," to interact more effectively with their children and to create and maintain a safe home environment. This program also teaches parents basic skills in physical care, supervision and psychological nurturance, appropriate to a child's age and stage of development.

Classes are offered through the Chaplain's Family Life Center at 545-1760. Families who need child care while enrolled in daytime classes can receive free child care through Family Advocacy.

• Troop education — Classes are mandatory and are provided on an annual basis for military members on the dynamics of spouse and child abuse, the availability of treatment services and the Army's policies regarding family violence. Units can schedule briefings by calling 545-6057 or 545-7517.

• New Parent Support Plus, First Steps Program — provides emotional support, parenting education, referrals to community resources and follow-up contact to parents with newborns, thereby helping to develop healthy family relationships to reduce the risk of child abuse and neglect.

Students learn about bullying

Children get message with stage magic at school assemblies

Mary Poppins had the right idea.

A spoonful of sugar really does help the medicine go down.

And Eric Reamer gets his message about bullying and violence through to kids in the most delightful way.

He uses magic.

"Stage magic has become hip and popular again," Reamer said. "Kids are instantly attracted to it. Once we establish the right to be heard, the kids key in on the message."

Reamer, a professional illusionist, performed eight shows at Fort Benning last week to pass the message to kids and parents that nothing good can come from bullying and violence in schools.

Gail Wilson, director of staff development for the Fort Benning schools, was looking for something to kick off a systemwide program on bullying and was impressed with Reamer's ability to talk with both adults and children.

"Twenty-five years of experience have taught me that we have to do creative things to get and hold children's attention," she said. "This approach was just what we were looking for."

"Bullying is a critical issue," Reamer said. "Statistically, the number one place bullying occurs is on the bus. The number two place is at home."

Reamer broadens the definition of bullying to include intimidation, fear, manipulation, as well as emotional and physical abuse.

In late 1998, Reamer was working with Randy Wiler, a top police authority on bullying and violence prevention, to hammer out a plan for presenting his message through school assemblies. The program was to start in early May, 1999.

Two weeks before the scheduled launch, the nation watched in horror as the events at Columbine High School unfolded on television. That tragedy, Reamer said, became the real impetus for getting the program out to kids.

"Kids need to know the truth about bullying," Reamer said. "They need to know that they are all

The Chattahoochee River stretches 540 miles from its beginning in the mountains of northern Georgia. Seventeen of those miles pass through the boundaries of Fort Benning as the river makes its way to the Gulf of Mexico.

Those 17 miles are the focus of "Help the 'Hooch," a program in its fourth year on Fort Benning. Help the 'Hooch is one of several local efforts that are part of the nationwide "Keep America Beautiful" campaign.

"We expect to have more than 150 adult and 300 child volunteers working on post on Oct. 11," said Mark Thornton, who is with the Environmental Branch, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, and is the local coordinator of Fort Benning's participation. "The official date is Oct. 12, but we do ours a day early. About 50 percent of our volunteers are soldiers, and we have a number of return volunteers." Volunteers receive a T-shirt and are treated to a picnic lunch at Uchee Creek Marina at the end of the cleanup.

Students from the elementary schools will be making contributions to the cleaning effort. Third-graders from White Elementary will be making a "clean sweep" of their school campus instead of going to the river sites, said Nan Boyett, third-grade teacher.

The community cleanup effort will take place from 9 a.m. to noon at seven primary sites on post: Uchee Creek, Engineer Landing, Bradley Landing, Eddy Bridge, Upatoi Creek, Russ Pond and the Fort Benning pet cemetery.

During the last three years, the Fort Benning Help the 'Hooch effort has collected more than 14 tons of debris from the river and along its banks. That amount did not go unnoticed by Georgia state officials, Thornton said.

Not all debris is trash, either.

"Our volunteers separate the recyclables as they pick them up," Thornton said. "The post recycling center helps us out by putting dumpsters and trucks out at the sites." Other assistance comes from the Keep Columbus Beautiful program, which provides gloves and trash bags for the volunteers.

In the past, members of the Fort Benning Bass Club have brought their boats to the cleanup. Those boats, combined with volunteers in canoes, can reach places along the riverbank not easily accessed on foot.

While it is difficult to measure what impact the cleanup has on the wildlife that live in and around the river, Thornton said that there is a great aesthetic improvement.

"We have picked up tires, shoes, a car bumper, and even a washer, a

Balloons popped, pennies fell, and in the distance, a mysterious chicken clucked. Stowers Elementary School participated in "Science Day" Sept. 25 during "Sci Fest" week sponsored by Georgia Southwestern University.

"This is a nice experience for the students," said Margi Bertlesen Brown, a fourth-grade teacher. Around the room, students from two fourth-grade classes were immersed in 12 different activities, each one involving a specific scientific concept.

Bertlesen Brown arranged the visit by Lynn Larsen, director of the Chattahoochee-Flint Georgia Youth Science and Technology Center.

Formed in 1989, the GYS&TC is a private, nonprofit educational organization that is designed to increase interest and enthusiasm in science and technology. The primary focus is on elementary and middle school students and teachers.

"I'm a hands-on science teacher, and I love working with the kids," Larsen said. "There are a lot of rewards from this job.

"The kids try these activities and then want to explore science on their own," Larsen said.

At one table, students James White and Brandon Matthews lifted the fingerprints from their own fingers with clear tape. After they transferred the tape to a piece of paper, they were able to compare the prints against a reference sheet.

"My print had a 'loop,'" Matthews said.

Laura Moore, a student teacher from Columbus State University, supervised the "pop rocket table."

"Anything they can make a mess with and get their hands on is great," she said, as a rocket lifted off of the table, leaving a trail of water.

> "Anything they can make a mess with and get their hands on is great."

> Fourth-grade student teacher from Columbus State University

The rocket was made with an empty film canister.

"I filled half (of the canister) with water, put Alka-Seltzer in it and shut the lid real quick," said Tayler Dorroh.

"I had to thump it a little bit, and then it popped."

Most of the students couldn't wait to get to the rocket station, but Amy Beard had a different favorite activity. She held up a paper cup with a string hanging underneath.

"It makes a loud noise," she said. "You rub a cloth on the string, and it's supposed to sound like a clucking chicken."

Mystery solved.

Payday loan fees add up

Cash charges create concern

Anthony Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Would you borrow money at 300 percent interest?

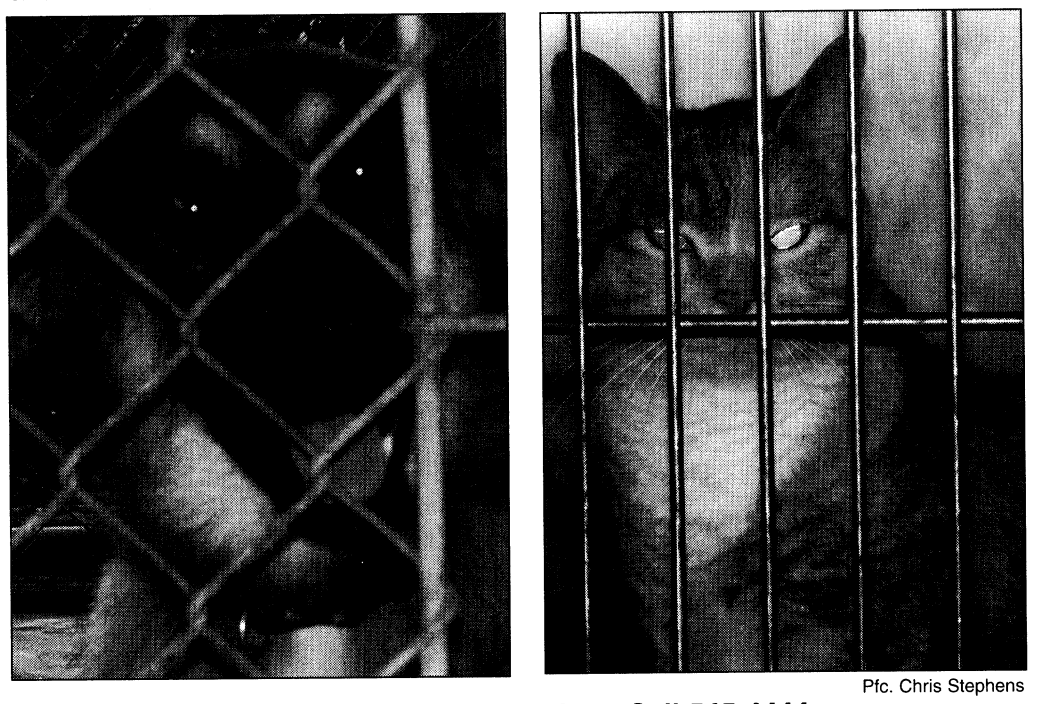
If you obtain a "payday loan" through a check cashing company, this may be exactly what you are doing.

Let's examine the concept of payday loans using the fictitious example of Spc. Trenton.

Trenton is a bit short of cash, and he needs $100 to get him through to next payday. He can't get a bank loan for such a small amount, and his buddies in the barracks won't spot him the money, so he goes to a check cashing company.

For a fee, the check cashing company agrees to loan him the $100, in return for his post-dated personal check for both the loan amount and the fee. A commonly advertised check cashing fee in the Columbus area is $12.50 per $100, so that for $100 cash in hand today, Trenton ends up paying $112.50 at his next payday.

A $12.50 fee may seem small, but if the loan is renewed repeatedly, those $12.50 fees add up to a much higher amount. If a $100 loan were repeatedly renewed for a year, the 26 two-week fee loan fees of $12.50 each would amount to $325. That equals an annual percentage rate of 325 percent!



While many states have usury laws that limit the amount of interest a lender can change, many of those states exempt check cashing companies from such laws. In other states, the check cashing companies call the check cashing charge a "fee" instead of "interest," and thereby avoid interest rate limitations.

Many soldiers fall into a cycle of being short of cash, then taking out a payday loan, and when the amount borrowed and the fee are taken from the soldier's bank account on payday, the soldier finds himself again short of cash. So, he takes out another payday loan, and so on and so on.

Financial planning is key to avoid this vicious cycle. As discussed in a companion article, many soldiers can increase their take-home pay by more than a hundred dollars a month simply by adjusting their income tax withholding form (IRS Form W-4).

Program: Hits on bullying

important, and that they can change their world."

Working with ropes of different lengths, Reamer talked to the children about the fact that the bully forgets to ask who is important. His three ropes represented different categories of people. The third and fourth grade students at Wilson Elementary School shrieked as Reamer tossed the "wacky" short rope into the crowd.

"I believe with all my heart that we are all equally important," he said as he magically made all the ropes the same length. "But the bully thinks that he or she is important."

Reamer gave the children a simple formula for life, illustrated with magical multicolored scarves.

"In order to have a happy life," he said, "you have to know the truth and make the right decisions."

Reamer has taken his message on the road, more than 100,000 miles each year since the program started. He said that 85 percent of schools that he visits invite him to come back again. When he makes a return visit, a large number of kids can finish his sentences during the program because they really heard the message.

His stop light analogy works particularly well. The green light represents going to school with a good attitude. The red is putting a stop to violence and bullying before it starts, and the yellow reminds the kids that there is no middle ground with bullying. He also passed along simple instructions for dealing with a bully

One: Tell the bully to stop

Two: Go to your teachers, parents, or even the police

Three: Walk away

Four: Surround yourself with friends.

"Don't give up," he said. "If you need help (with a bully), don't stop asking. Don't quit. Try again."

Hospital kicks off PT program

Lt. Col. Andrea Crunkhorn
Martin Army Community Hospital

In recognition of National Physical Therapy Month, the Martin Army Community Hospital Physical Therapy Service is kicking off new services both in the clinic and out in the community. These services will initially focus on injury prevention.

The cornerstone of the new injury prevention program is a direct link from you to us via a new e-mail address: physical.therapy@se.amedd.army.mil.

We want you to send us your specific training or injury prevention questions and concerns. We will respond to you directly, but will cull the most common questions and concerns for constructing new classes or for articles in The Bayonet. Specific questions and responses will be kept confidential.

See your primary care manager for acute injuries, or for concerns that you do not wish to be addressed via electronic mail. Remember, if you don't want to see it in The Washington Post, don't send it by e-mail.

Capt. David Wright is the lead therapist for the new program. He will be available on Tuesdays and Thursdays; contact him through the e-mail address.

Injury prevention tips:

One of the most frequent injuries we see in the training population is stress reaction or stress fracture, particularly in the shins (tibia.)

Some great new research has come out linking tibial stress reactions with tightness in the soleus muscle.

The soleus muscle sits beneath and below the gastrocnemius in the calf, with both muscles joining to form the Achilles tendon.

If you are not performing both knee straight and knee bent calf stretches, you are not adequately stretching your soleus, and you are at greater risk for tibial stress reaction.

Current literature also challenges how we stretch. You need to stretch after you warm up (defined as breaking a sweat or five to ten minutes of light exercise) to create long-term changes in tissue length.

At least one research article found a higher number of injuries with stretching cold versus not stretching at all. Once warmed up, you should hold your stretches for thirty seconds, and repeat 4-6 times.

'Hooch: Help keep it clean

dryer and a fridge," he said.

Polly Gustafson, who works in the Environmental Management Division, has participated in Help the 'Hooch since 1999. She had done similar volunteer cleanup work in Houston, Texas, in the past.

Gustafson said that she personally hadn't unearthed anything unusual during past cleanups, but has found some useful items.

"One year, my husband and I canoed the week before (the event) and now my dog has all kinds of balls to play with."

The event is not just about cleaning up the Chattahoochee and the surrounding area once a year, Gustafson said. It's also about pollution prevention and getting people to think about what is going to happen when things get into the storm drains and the sewer system.

"Storm drains eventually empty out into the river," she said. "Don't ever pour anything down those drains."

Russ Pond, Fort Benning's children's fishing pond, was a last-minute addition to the site list, Gustafson said.

The pond, originally built as a naturally fed swimming hole, feeds into Upatoi Creek and then into the Chattahoochee River, so things thrown in the pond end up downstream and downriver as well.

All in all, Gustafson said, the Help the 'Hooch is a fun time.

"You get really dirty sitting in a canoe with trash, but it washes right off."

Course teaches English as second language

Students learn more than just language

Zoraida Roman
White Elementary School

English as a second language teacher Zoraida Roman, left, reads to Jessica Lara and her class. There are nearly 50 students who participate in the ESL program at White Elementary School.

The Department of Defense Education Activity provides an English as a second language program for students whose native language is not English.

The goal of this program is to develop students' English language ability as quickly as possible so their academic performance is equivalent to native English-speaking students of the same age and grade level.

The program serves both students who are beginning to learn English as well as those that have already developed a good command of spoken English but are performing below grade level in reading and writing.

Depending on the age and proficiency level of the student when entering the ESL program, the process may take one to several consecutive years. Acquiring social and academic (school) language is a complex process.

On the surface, the ESL students may appear fluent in English yet struggle to read and write.

ESL students are constantly facing the challenge of learning a second language as well as acquiring the language skills required by each grade level and each subject area.

As ESL students progress through school, the language, content and skills continue to get more difficult. Although a student may gain proficiency in spoken communication in approximately two years, it can take up to six or seven years for that same student to gain proficiency in academic language skills that include reading and writing.

With the active support of parents and teachers ESL students, with time, will acquire the skills needed for academic success.

White School's ESL program serves family members of soldiers at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and the regular Army. WHINSEC students stay in the school from one to two years depending on their parent's Army status.

This year there are about 50 students in the program. In the ESL classroom, sometimes the teacher is faced with students from 20 different countries and four different languages. Most of the students are of Hispanic descent.

The students learn together in a regular classroom with "buddies" to facilitate the language learning process. English speaking students assist the new students with the English language.

When it is time to go back to their own country, these students have learned about our democratic society, practiced English during their stay here and learned about our American culture.

Lt. Col. Dan Kessler, commander, 3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment, reads America: A Patriotic Primer to a second-grade class. Officer candidates read to all of the classes Sept. 25.

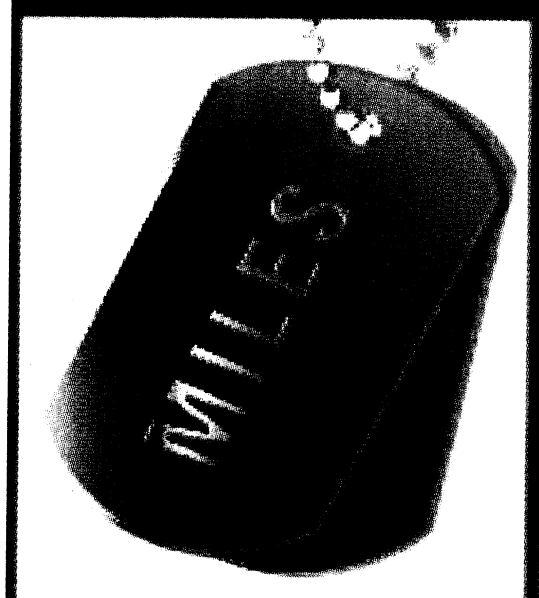
Teachers, students and officer candidates kicked off White School's participation in the "Fort Benning Reads!" celebration Sept. 25 with every class having a special guest reader.

The Officer Candidate School is one of White School's Partners in Education, and a candidate visited each classroom to start the day by reading to the boys and girls.

They also delivered a copy of this year's featured book, America A Patriotic Primer by Lynne Cheney, to each class.

In the book, each letter of the alphabet is illustrated with a patriotic word or idea

There is enough information presented on each page to allow teachers to integrate the book into discussions about almost any subject at any grade level. As a follow-up to the kick off, a page from the book will be featured on the school's morning broadcast each day until the entire alphabet has been covered.



Another program at White School that encourages reading is the Reading Counts program. In this, students read books, then take a computer test which awards points for number of correct answers and the difficulty of the selection.

Students are working toward a goal of 30,000 points schoolwide.

Reaching the goal earns them a day of military activities at Red Cloud Range in the spring.

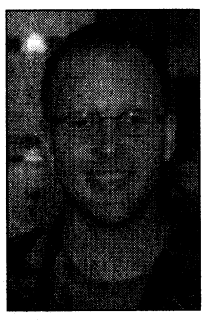
God provides help during time of change



Jesus Christ provides peace for believers

Chaplain (1st Lt.) Christopher Offen
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

I am new to the Army. Five months ago I was a civilian, a parish pastor in rural Texas. So it should be obvious that there are many new things in my life right now. I am new to Fort Benning. I have a new unit, a new commander and new co-workers. My unit takes new soldiers and teaches them new skills. My son goes to a new school. We have a new house. We have a new church, a new phone number and new neighbors. You might say that there is a lot of newness in my life.

Despite all that newness, however, I am starting to discover that my life really is not all that different. Despite the new surroundings and situations, some things never change. No matter where we work, we have duties, and we are responsible to others. No matter where we live, there will be those we are close to and others that we just know. Everywhere there are people who experience life's same old concerns of family, work, money, church and health. The pattern continues; the pattern repeats.

Did you ever have a change in your life that brought with it lots of new challenges? At first it can be very exciting and interesting but before you know it's the same old stuff. I suppose that all people, even if it takes decades, eventually discover that ancient Biblical truth, "What has been will be again, what has been done will be done again; there is nothing new under the sun," (Eccl. 1:9). The scriptures firmly proclaim to us that as humans try to create something new and better in this world they routinely discover that nothing is new. Everything we do tends to lead us to a point where we were before.

Offen

It's interesting to me to look at what scripture attaches to the idea of something being new. The Bible teaches us that if something is truly new then it will be something God has given us.

God created a new world; he makes us new again each day when he reminds us through his word that we are his children and that we are forgiven. When we believe in him we become new creatures ready to embrace an old world desperately looking for something new.

As a chaplain and a Christian minister, I try to daily teach and demonstrate that the only source of newness is God. It is he that takes away the old things of our life like sin, like guilt, like doubt and lays them upon his son Jesus Christ. When we are forgiven and know that we are loved by our father in heaven, then we truly experience something new.

I am enjoying all the new things in my life; a new assignment, new environment, new people but soon they will all be old.

The greatest newness comes every day when the sins of yesterday are forgotten and when the pain of the past is wiped away by God's forgiveness in Jesus Christ, truly a new thing. Turn to God in Christ — he can truly provide you with something new.

Commitment keeps relationships together

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Dedication and obligation form the main ingredients of commitment. Commitment is the keystone of the marital union. According to Dr. H. Norman Wright, "Commitment is the glue that holds a marriage together."

Marital obligations constrain couples to remain together. Friends and family, children, finances, moral and legal issues, concern for our partner, and negative alternatives all work to keep a couple together when things get tough in a relationship. Scripture says, "What God has joined together, let no one separate," (Matthew 9:6).

Koop

Dedication forms the covenant basis of marriage. By an act of the will, a couple pledges to love and nurture each other. To love one another is a great privilege and responsibility.

Dedicated couples want and expect their marriage to last. They view themselves as a couple, rather than as two singles living together. Their marriage relationship has priority. They don't allow themselves to reflect on what it would be like not to be married or to be married to someone else.

Dedicated couples are personally willing to do without in order to benefit their partner. They are willing to give themselves completely to each other with an unselfish sacrificial (agape) love.

Passion comes and goes, but committed love endures (1 Corinthians 13:7). Committed love provides trust, contentment, and immense satisfaction to married couples. A great marriage requires energy and effort; yet, it can be the most personally rewarding investment ever made.

Would you like to make your marriage better? Free counseling and support are available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760, or e-mail koopr@benning.army.mil.

Therefore, if anyone is in Christ, he is a new creation; the old has gone, the new has come!

Nationwide Automotive Clearance Comes To Columbus This Week

Freeway Ford Named Area's Exclusive Disposal Point For National Disposal Of New and Used Vehicles

More than 37,000 new vehicles, program cars, auction vehicles, off-lease and rental vehicles, factory over-orders and more have been distibuted to locations across the country for immediate sale.

Columbus, GA -

If you've been thinking about buying a car sometime this year, you'll probably want to make that time this week. Why? Over 37,000 new and used vehicles have been sent to select dealers across the country for disposal, hundreds of which have been sent to Freeway Ford in Columbus.

"You can buy one with zero down and your payment is just $79 a month."

'96 Hyundai Accent, # 991100A $2990. Plus Tax, Tag Title, License and Doc Fees. With Approved Credit. Subject to prior sale. All Offers Stand Alone. See Dealer for Full Details.

The National Vehicle Disposal has been organized to help deplete excess inventories of all types of automobiles. New cars, trucks, minivans and sport utilities as well as a vast array of previously titled vehicles are all available for purchase at incredibly discounted prices.

In addition to drastic discounts, participating dealers are offering many other incentives to insure these vehicles are disposed of before 7 PM Monday. Buyers can secure financing on any Disposal vehicle without making a down payment. Plus, the first payment will not be due until January 2003.

Freeway Ford General Manager Will Johnston says Columbus residents should take advantage of this unique opportunity. " We feel real fortunate to have been selected as a disposal point for several truckloads of these vehicles." explained Johnston. "There were no other dealers in the state selected. This is the only place to be if you're buying a car this week."

Johnston added his store has secured incredibly low 0% financing for this event. Johnston explained "Interest rates are going up. This could be your last chance to lock in financing this low. Plus, we've loosened all credit restrictions so everyone can get in on this event - no matter their credit history."

"The selection is excellent" according to Johnston. "I've been in the car business many years and I've never seen this many cars priced this low. You can buy one with zero down and your monthly payment is still just $79 a month. Imagine how low it would be if you put money down!"

"I've never seen this many cars priced this low."

While selection is good, the sooner you get there the better. Johnston explained "We're told this event must conclude Monday and it will not be held over."

Freeway Ford is located at 2025 Box Road in Columbus. For more information call (706) 563-3023 or go to www.nationalvehicledisposal.com. Dealers and wholesalers are prohibited.

PGA members to play Buick Challenge

Admission free to military, families

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

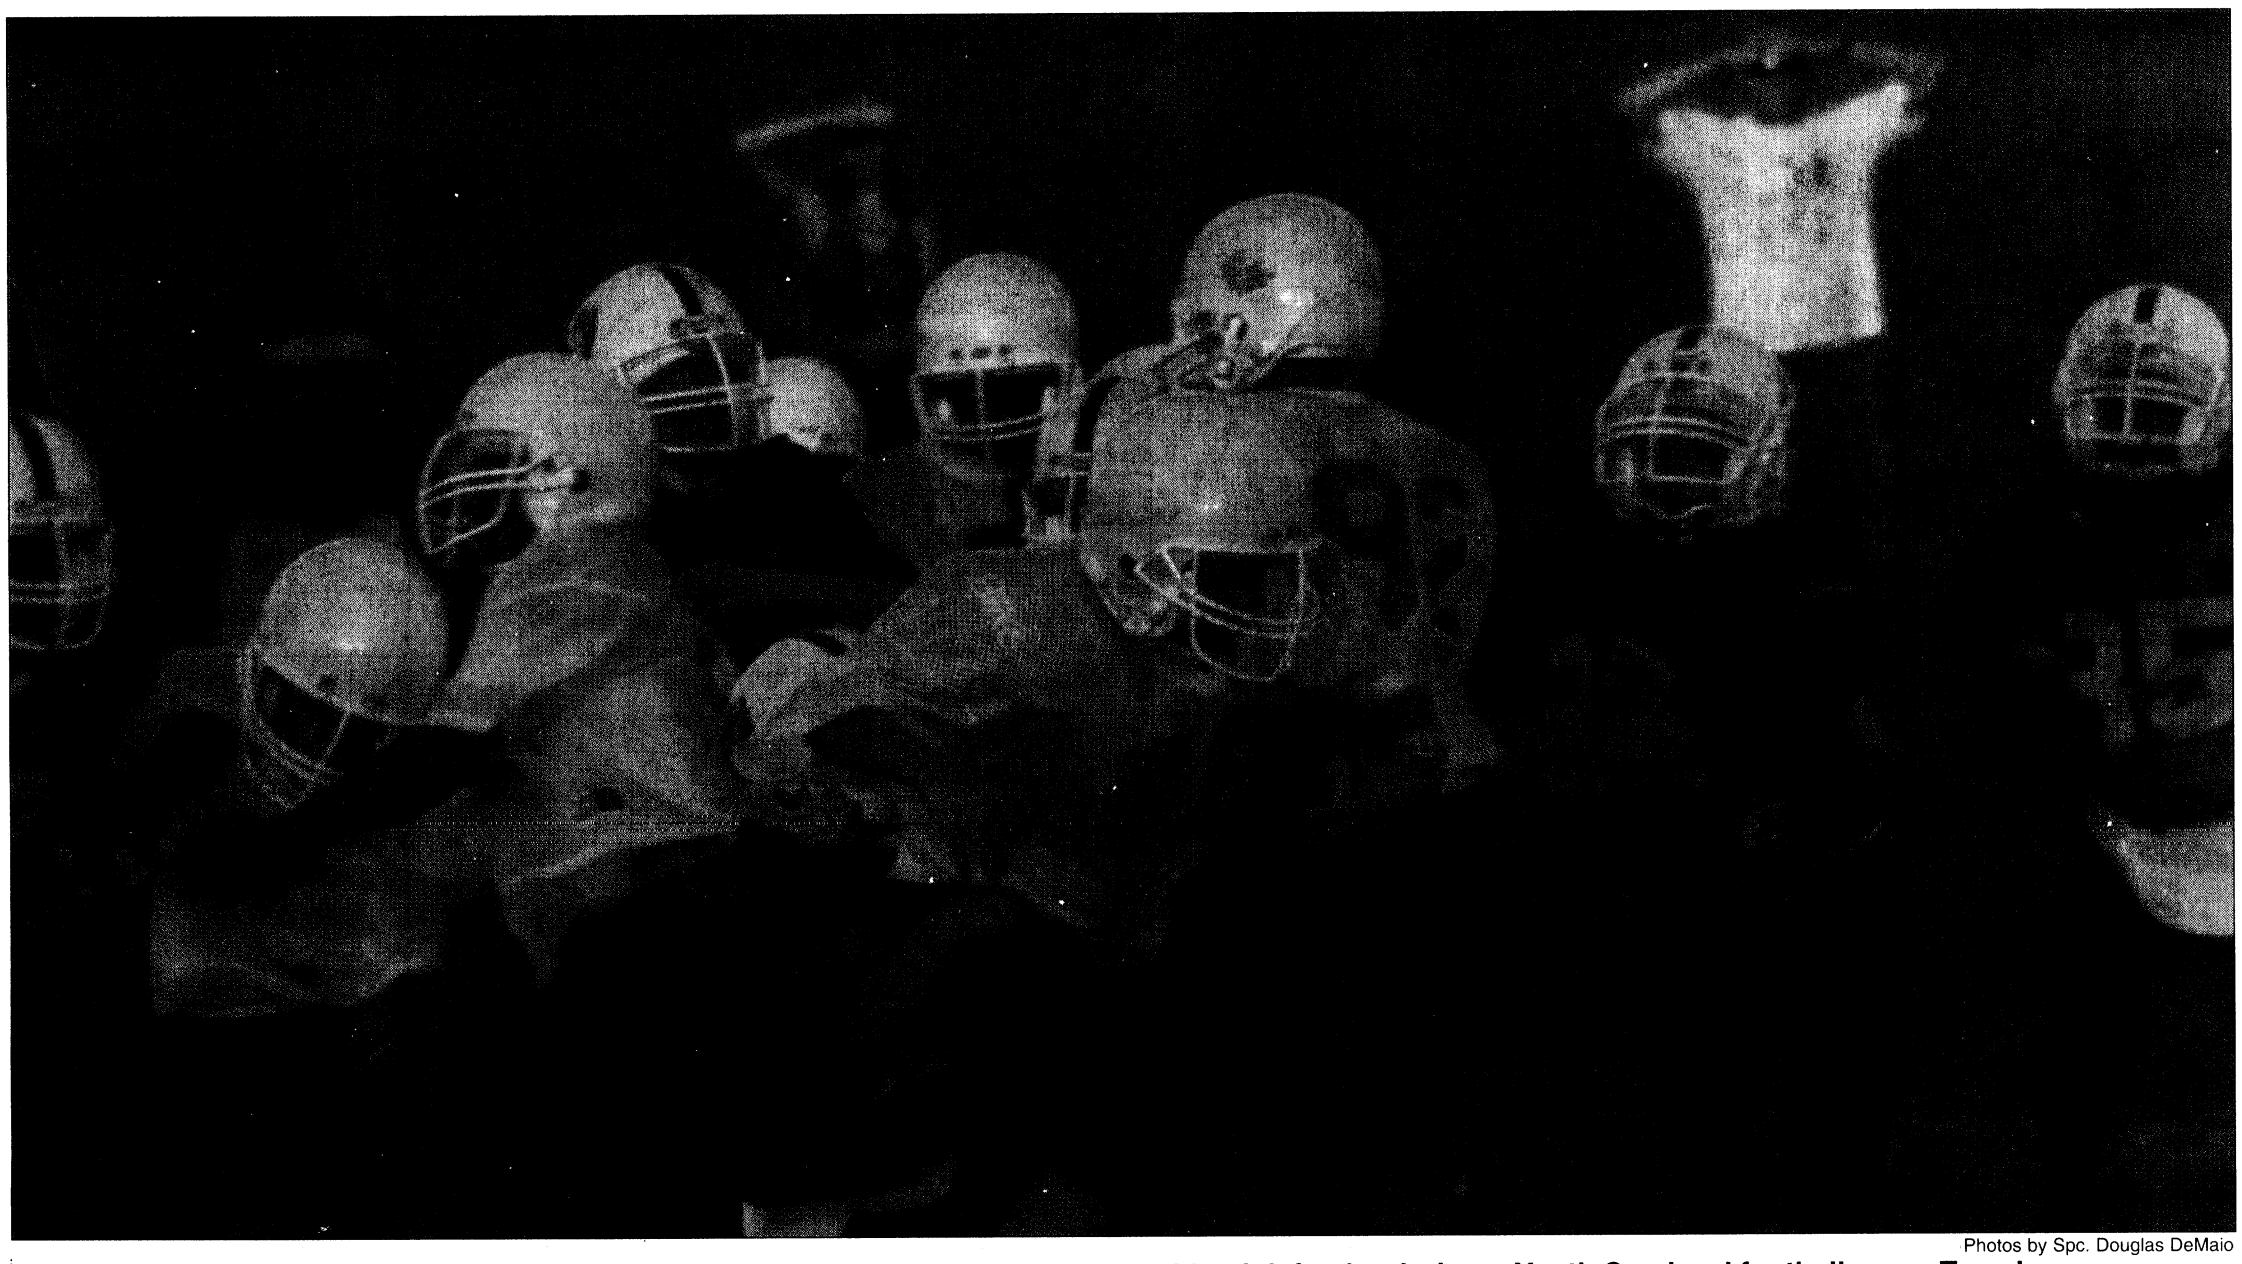
Some of the best golfers in the world will play in the 2002 Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga., about 60 minutes from Fort Benning, Oct. 24-27.

Returning to defend his 2001 title, Chris DiMarco, ranked 15th in the world on the Professional Golfers Association Tour, will compete against a field of golfers on the tour like Davis Love III, Justin Leonard and Nick Price, all of whom are in the top 25 of the 2002 money leaders.

"There are some outstanding golfers playing in the event," said Dick Ellis, executive director for the Buick Challenge. "Many of these guys played in the Ryder Cup."

Golfers like Paul Azinger and Love represented America in the Ryder Cup, and they will be playing in the tournament.



The PGA is showing their appreciation for the support military members have provided for Americans, Ellis said. Oct. 25-27 all military members, with valid identification, and their families will be admitted to the tournament free of charge.

"It's our way of saying thanks for a great job," Ellis said.

In addition to seeing some outstanding golf, Fort Benning personnel will have an opportunity to show their appreciation to the PGA and assist with the tournament, said Richard McDowell, hole captain. Traditionally Fort Benning signs up people to marshal the course every year. McDowell, the post Public Affairs Officer, is still looking for volunteers to man holes, carry score boards for the Pro Am, Oct. 21 and 22, and measure ball distances from the holes.

"This is a wonderful opportunity for soldiers to see a professional tournament," McDowell said.

For more information on volunteering for the Buick Challenge, call the Public Affairs Office at 545-2211.

Raiders take advantage of Rams' offensive mistakes

Key turnovers significant in victory

The Raiders marched down Blue Field time and time again during their game Tuesday to defeat the Rams, 32-0, in the 9- and 10-year-old division of Youth Services' football.

Their dominance began quickly as Raiders' tailback Roderick Pertillo exploded through the defense and carried the ball to the one-yard line.

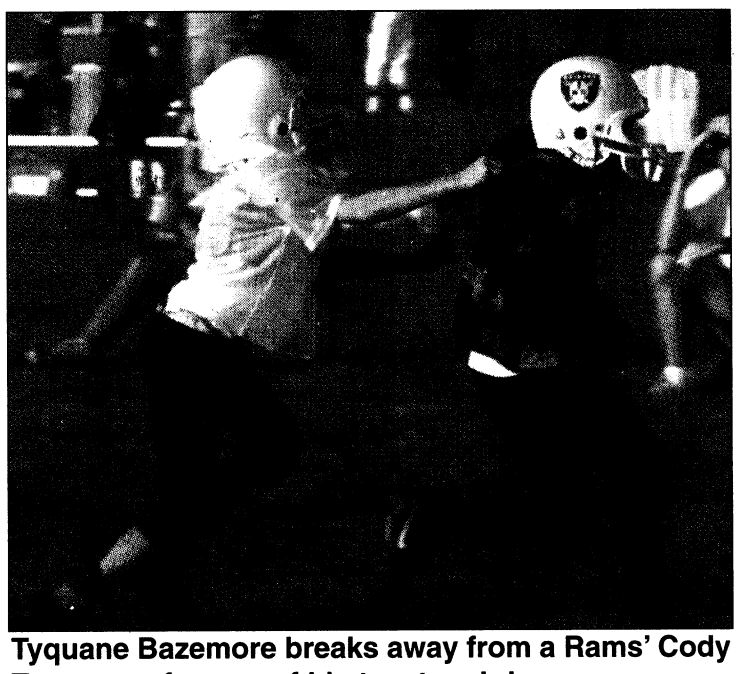
"I found the holes in the defense," Pertillo said. "I ran faster once I got through the hole and gave a few stiff arms."

Although it was Raiders' quarterback Adam Rickard who took the ball in for the score and early 6-0 lead with a quarterback sneak, Pertillo was the workhorse of the drive.

The extra-point attempt fell short.

On the Rams first play from the line of scrimmage, there was a fumble during the exchange between the quarterback and running back, and Raiders' cornerback Jerome Brown recovered the ball on the Rams' 24-yard line.

"Our defense kicked in, but our offense wasn't all that great," said Raiders' coach Thurman Reynolds.



Or not. Raiders' tailbacks Tyquane Bazemore and Pertillo sliced through the Rams defense like a knife through butter.

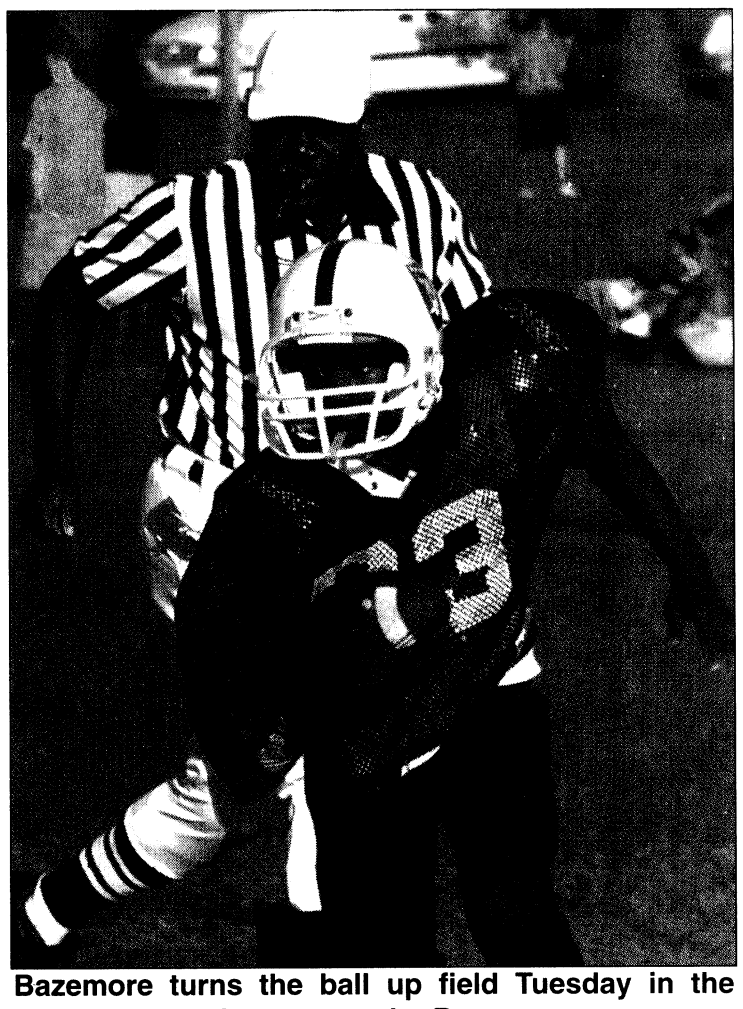
While the Rams struggled to find their composure, the Raiders took advantage of four first half turnovers.

"Turnovers always help," Reynolds said. "Their offense was a little nervous and we rattled their cages early."

During the first half, the Raiders were nearly flawless and left the field at halftime with a 20-0 lead.

Yet the Rams would not be denied a moral victory.

Tyquane Bazemore breaks away from a Rams' Cody Torgerson for one of his two touchdowns.



The Rams controlled the ball for most of the third quarter, and held the Raiders scoreless during that time. Instead of turning the ball over on fumbles in the second half, the Rams moved the chains.

The Rams showed resilience in their defense. Especially when Rams' cornerback Brandon Fields intercepted a Rickard pass in the right slot.

Still, the Rams couldn't recover from the enormous deficit.

Bazemore took the ball in for his second touchdown of the game to cap a 32-0 victory.

Pertillo finished with three touchdowns.

Bazemore turns the ball up field Tuesday in the Raiders' 32-0 victory over the Rams.

Briant Wells to transform to world-class fitness center

Wellness team begins health promotion process

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Briant Wells Field House is covering up the hardwood floor, raising its basketball hoops and transforming into a world-class facility.

The field house is in its preparation phase, the first of three phases to transform the facility into a fitness center capable of more uses and equipment for workouts that will be in full swing well into the next calender year.

Customer feedback is the reason the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, Directorate of Community Activities and Martin Army Community Hospital formed a wellness team under the directive of the garrison commander, Col. Joe Torres, to improve the fitness centers on post.

"We have had extensive feedback from customers about our fitness facilities," said Al Gelineau, director of Community Activities.

In response to customer demands, the team chose Briant Wells as the site for transforming a facility on post to improve the fitness and quality of life needs of soldiers, family members, retirees and Department of the Army civilians, Gelineau said.

"After careful consideration, the team recommended Briant Wells to the garrison commander because of its location, high use, resources and historical significance," said Lt. Col. Bill Rieger, fitness school commander.

With the addition of an aerobics room and added equipment for resistance training and cardiovascular workouts, the center will provide optimum use to customers, Rieger said.

By remodeling the facility and adding world-class equipment and personal training programs, the fitness center will address the Army chief of staff's well-being concept for the Army, Rieger said.

The partnership of the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, Directorate of Community Activities and Martin Army Community Hospital is unique to Fort Benning and provides an opportunity to deliver the lead concept for the Army, he said.

There will be more diverse equipment for soldiers to work on and a variety of different styles of training to meet the fitness needs of post personnel, Rieger said.

During the last phase, fitness programs will be available to people who seek to achieve personal goals, and professional instructors from the fitness school will be able to provide people with the proper feedback to maintain a safe fitness environment, Rieger said.

"Health promotion cannot be accomplished without education," Rieger said.

The resources and concepts are centralized to Fort Benning, Gelineau said.

Rieger said Fort Benning is fortunate to serve as the benchmark for wellness transformation.

The center is not scheduled to close any time during the transformation, Gelineau said.

Local Dealer Waiving Down Payments

Rivertown Ford allowing buyers to take over vehicle payments after paying small acquisition fee

Columbus, GA- If you have been thinking about buying a new or used vehicle but thought you'd need thousands in cash or a trade-in for a down payment, there's good news coming to your area this weekend. Now through Saturday at 8PM., special financing arrangements have been made at Rivertown Ford that allow customers to simply pay a $49 acquisition sale fee, then take over payments.

This unique and exclusive finance plan eliminates the need for the consumer to produce a large down payment. All that's required is $49 to cover the administrative costs involved in setting up financing in your name. The payments that are to be taken over are clearly posted on every vehicle windshield. Prices are also clearly posted so shoppers can see the overall savings on each vehicle.

"Some of the payments on these vehicles are just $99 a month."

Stock # 2029251A '99 Mercury Sable. 66months@7.5% APR. With approved credit, plus tax, and title. See dealer for details.

Used car buyers from Rivertown Ford searched across Georgia and surrounding states, buying up hundreds of lease terminations, bank repossessions, trade-ins, failed fleet sales and more in preparation for this one-of-a-kind event. They've now been transported to the premises of Rivertown Ford located at 1680 Whittlesey Road. Since these are vehicles other people have already made payments on, customers will save thousands once financing responsibilities are assigned to them. Some payments on these vehicles are just $99 a month.

Consumers that thought they needed thousands in cash for a down payment in order to get low monthly payments are being pleasantly surprised this weekend at Rivertown Ford. All that's needed is a $49 acquisition fee to drive home a new or used vehicle today.

Selection is a big part of what makes this sale so exciting, according to Rivertown Ford's General Sales Manager, Brad Williams. "Chevys, Fords, Dodges, Toyotas & Hondas... cars, trucks & SUVs... all the hottest selling names are here. No matter what kind of vehicle you're looking for, you could drive it home for a $49 acquisition sale fee, then you simply take over payments!"

New vehicle shoppers can also take delivery with just a $49 acquisition sale fee. "Thanks to the financing we've arranged, through 8PM Saturday, Rivertown Ford can offer brand new cars, trucks and SUV for a $49 acquisition sale fee, then take over payments!"

Why would a car dealer arrange financing to make this $49 Acquisition sale possible? Williams explains, "Our allocation of 2003 models will depend in part on how many new and used vehicles we can deliver in the next two weeks. The more we sell, the more we'll get. We've decided to sacrifice profits in an effort to really push our sales volume to the maximum."

Williams speaks from experience when describing his expectations for this event. "By finding a lender that allows us to deliver new and used vehicles with just a $49 acquisition sale fee, we think we're really going to see a big increase in deliveries between now and 8 PM Saturday night. When we've done this sale in the past, it's always been one of our biggest. It's really a win-win situation for everybody... we'll sell a record number of vehicles, and our customers will get some great bargains."

"We've decided to sacrifice profit to really push our sales volume to the maximum."

Because the special funds that make this offer possible are only valid through 8PM Saturday night, customers are encouraged to get here early for the best selection.

Sale absolutely ends Saturday at 8PM and the exclusive location is Rivertown Ford at 1680 Whittlesey Road, across from Hollywood Connection, off Bradley Park in Columbus. Call 706-653-7420 for more information.

New Army agency activated

Agency focuses on garrison functions

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

The Army Installation Management Agency opened its headquarters Oct 1. in Arlington, Va. The centralized agency, part of the Transformation Installation Management program, is designed to manage Army installations and distribute funds for soldiers and their families.

In his speech at the IMA agency activation, Secretary of the Army Thomas E. White said the transformation effort represents the Army's commitment to people, readiness and transformation.

"Fort Benning is a very unique installation. We do everything here. We are probably the best example of a cross-section of Army units."

Chuck Walls
Garrison manager

The program is essential to providing standards of support for soldiers and families and the Army's ability to project power globally from installations, and has never been more important than it is today, White said.

As part of the transformation, the agency will standardize the level of service and quality of life for soldiers and families by giving all city management tasks to the Community rallies behind local project

If you build it, they will come.

Anyone who saw the original state of the Officer Candidate School monument site on groundbreaking day knew that the candidates of Class 6-02 had their work cut out for them. To turn their "field of dreams" into reality would not only require hours of labor by the candidates, but also a tireless fund-raising effort.

Much of the money and materials needed to build the $150,000 memorial have come from donations.

At the center of the memorial site is a laser-engraved monument, honoring three OCS graduates killed Sept. 11, 2001.

Laser Imaging of Lebanon, Ohio, a company with one of only three lasers in the country that can etch the granite, waived the $20,000 etching fee.

"The actual stone should be here by Friday, said William Trevathan, class vice-president.

"Only one guy in the class will look at it before the dedication."

Photographer Gregg Brown, who gave the candidates permission to use his photograph, "Fallen Hope" on the stone, is scheduled to attend the dedication.

The greater Columbus community has also rallied in support of the memorial project in a most generous way.

"Biff Hadden and the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce have been outstanding," said Senior Officer Candidate Paul Ramsey, class president.

Class vice-president William Trevathan waters new sod at the OCS memorial site Wednesday.

"Lowe's has been one of their biggest supporters," said Capt. Cecil Henry, OCS company commander.

"Lowe's basically provided us with whatever we needed," Trevathan said. Trevathan estimates that Lowe's donated more than $9,000 in materials for the project.

"With the current crisis in the Middle East, this dedication couldn't happen at a better time," Trevathan said. "We have invited all of our sponsors, and we hope they will be able to come and see the finished project."

The monument will be dedicated along the Riverwalk near Oxbow Meadows at 10 a.m. Oct. 14.

Soldier dies in crash

1-10 F.A. NCO leaves behind three children

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

A 34-year soldier from 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, died in a motorcycle crash Tuesday.

Staff Sgt. Willie L. Robinson Jr., battalion communications NCO, was traveling from Kelley Hill to the Main Mall Post Exchange on Marne Road when he lost control of his bike, hit the back of a slowing vehicle and flew into oncoming traffic. He died at the scene. He was wearing a helmet and other required protective clothing.

The memorial service was yesterday at Kelley Hill Chapel.

"He was always upbeat and didn't let things get him down," said Staff Sgt. Mario Money, battalion schools NCO. "One of his mottos was, 'Life could always get worse — if you let it. He didn't."

Robinson joined the military in 1987. He arrived on Fort Benning in February from 1st Battalion, 15th Field Artillery, in Korea.

Robinson made his mark at the battalion during his short time here, and his fellow soldiers will miss him, Money said. As part of the battalion's rear detachment that faced a tight budget, the NCO and his fellow soldiers benefited from Robinson's coordination with other units to gain mission necessities.

Robinson is survived by his daughters, Aye-Ren, 4, Amarii, 6, and son, Brandon, 13. His mother and father, Johnnie and Willie Sr., live in South Carolina.

The accident is under investigation.

Sugar substitute kills bacteria, protects teeth

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

In a perfect world, sugar would be a health food. In a not-so-perfect world, there are substitutes.

Fort Benning's top dentist believes one artificial sweetener is not only a safe alternative to sugar, but a healthy one as well. Col. Robert Lutka, commander of the U.S. Army Dental Activity, would like to see it added to MREs and sundry packs.

Xylitol, a naturally occurring sugar alcohol, kills the bacteria that cause cavities. Military dentists have been prescribing it for more than 10 years. Now Lutka is spearheading a joint-service initiative to have xylitol products stocked on commissary shelves and issued for all deployable military personnel.

Research shows that chewing gum with xylitol three times a day for 30 days increases cavity protection for as long as six months after it's discontinued, even without regular brushing, Lutka said, and that has "great implications for any soldier who deploys and can't brush regularly or for anyone with a history of tooth decay."

Canada and European countries have been using xylitol in candies, gums, foods, beverages, nasal sprays and cosmetics for years with incredible results, Lutka said. Not only is it marketed as a dental aid, it's also shown to reduce inner ear infections by 40 percent, help prevent skin infections, assist in treating cystic fibrosis symptoms and reduce sinus infections. European researchers are currently studying its potential to treat glaucoma and reduce muscle tissue breakdown after strenuous exercise.

"When you factor in all that (xylitol) does and all that it has the potential to do, and the fact that it has no negative side affects, it's safe to say this is the best alternative sweetener, hands down."

Robert Lutka
U.S. Army Dental Activity commander

Xylitol also increases the body's absorption of calcium and is synergistic with fluoride, Lutka said.

"By themselves, they're both great products. Together, they're even better. They actually increase each other's effectiveness," he said. "When you factor in all that (xylitol) does and all that it has the potential to do, and the fact that it has no negative side affects, it's safe to say this is the best alternative sweetener, hands down."

Xylitol is considered a food additive, not a drug, and was therefore met with little enthusiasm when it was introduced in 1976 to a U.S. market already inundated with sugar substitutes. It found a modest market with diabetics, because it can be used as an effective energy source without insulin. But most Americans simply weren't interested in another sweetener, particularly

COMBINED FEDERAL CAMPAIGN

Money for everyone

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COMMENTARY

For anyone who just crawled out from under a rock and the guy who jogs on the Manchester Expressway median, we are in the midst of the Combined Federal Campaign.

By now you've probably been contacted by your key person and were given the 20 and a half page booklet that lists 130 agencies that will gladly accept your donations.

That's a lot of organizations to peruse, but as a public service I did so. I'd like to tell you what I think about several of the organizations, but being politically correct, I can't.

However, I have selected a few that sums up the width and breadth of CFC.

Starting with the letter Z, we find the Zigen Fund. Who can guess what that funds? Why it promotes education, social and economic development (I think all charities do that) in rural China. Don't ask me how they plan to get there and get past the communists, but it's there for you.

Speaking of China, there's the Tibet Fund. While I have no reason to support the exiled Dali Lama or even the people over there, I do like the fact they only spend 1.6 percent on admin costs.

By the way, my rule of thumb is — if the amount they spend on administration is in the double digits, I go on to the next charity.

For instance, I'd love to donate to the Center for Military Readiness. It sounds like they believe in the same things I do — military readiness. But they spend a whopping 44.7 percent of their income on self-aggrandizement.

Probably the most pessimistic fund out there is the Zero Population Growth. They believe in one person, one replacement. I don't think we should go overboard with children, but I also believe there's enough room and resources to take care of future generations.

One that caught my eye was Help Abolish Legal Tyranny. I can't think of any legal tyranny right off hand, so I guess they're doing a good job and can abolish themselves.

Then there's the SETI Fund. This of course rhymes with Yeti which stands for abominable snowman and the search for both is about the same except SETI does its searching in space. It stands for Search for Extraterrestrial Intelligence.

My vote is to search for intelligence here on this planet.

I found one that I thought offered Dolphins scholarships, then found out it was just the name of a fund to give scholarships to family members of submariners.

The Baseball Hall of Fame is asking for your donation. I thought they charged admission. And besides, it's one of those double digit, 34.9 percent, organizations.

And next thing I know federations supporting rugby, chess, fencing, badminton, baseball, boxing, cycling, racquetball, waterpolo, weight lifting and wrestling are looking for our money.

There's also an organization called English First. They say bilingualism has failed, it doesn't work. Yeah, I know we Americans go to other countries and expect people to speak English, but we don't care enough to learn another language to reciprocate.

Hey, how about Ally Cat Allies. I wonder if these are the people who put up fences in alleys for the cats to sing on. And then there are the Vegans (no not witches) who are against eating meat. I guess they're afraid we'll eat our pets. Yuck.

Again, there are more off the wall organizations listed, but I don't want to get the Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting folks (another fund) after me, so I'll skip them.

I will tell you though, to keep your head from spinning and to get your money where it will do some good, pick some of the local organizations that you are familiar with.

The 9001 Fund for Fort Benning Soldier and Family Support Association happens to jump readily to mind.

It supports our youth and handicap programs, our chaplains' enlisted outreach, lending closet, food locker and the like.

I'm also partial to the Oxbow Meadows Environmental Learning Center. I believe we need to support the environment and while there are tons of other organizations out there that claim to do the same, such as the green people, reef people, the surfers, etc., at least with Oxbow I can see my money at work.

I can say this, no matter how esoteric your passions are, there's a charity out there waiting for your money. So when the key person comes along dig deep. If a soldier who just graduated from the Basic Airborne Course can pledge $1,200, I think the rest of us can come up with some dollars of our own.

Housing explains foster care, adoption policy

Foster care and adoption issues can and do get confusing when applied to on-post housing.

These are two separate and distinct issues which, unfortunately, are often used interchangeably by off-post state agencies.

It is important for interested soldiers to clarify the terms with the state agency they are working with and ask them to provide a memorandum or letter of the proposed action for use by on-post activities that may require documentation.

Children placed in a home in anticipation of legal adoption by the service member may be considered the member's dependent for purposes of many benefits, including housing.

Children placed in the home solely as part of a foster care program do not qualify as "dependents," and as such, are not entitled to most military benefits, including medical care under Tricare, the use of the commissary and post exchange, and are likely not entitled to enrollment in on-post schools. Additionally, since foster care children are not considered dependents under the housing regulations, their presence does not entitle the member to additional housing space.

As such, foster care is generally not permitted in on-post government housing. Under Army Regulation 210-50, para 3-17, the installation commander may approve written requests for 'other than family members' to reside in government quarters if he finds that it is equitable and will not adversely impact the health, safety, morale or welfare of the installation.

In general, foster care living arrangements will not meet this test.

First, the sponsor will be unable to effectively provide the necessary care for the children in many instances because of the lack of medical care and school facilities, and because the quarters may be too small with the additional individuals.

Additionally, since foster parents are usually compensated, their actions can be construed as a home-based business operation. Because of these factors, approving foster care arrangements without close scrutiny can create an incentive to volunteer as a foster family here on post that is not necessarily in the best interest of the child or the command.

Children who are legally adopted (including a child placed in the home of the sponsor by a placement agency for the purpose of adoption) are, by definition, dependents of the soldier.

This status permits the children to reside on-post when accompanied by the appropriate legal documents.

Soldiers considering adoption should inform the Family Housing Office of their plans (Meloy Hall, Building 6, Room 121 or call 545-2990).

The paperwork should include all legal documents indicating the children have been adopted or are pending adoption. Soldiers considering foster care should submit a written plan and an exception to policy request through Family Housing to the garrison commander.

When approved, the family should update the new family members on their family housing applications to ensure they do not encounter problems when using post facilities or enrolling in programs.

Spencer's layettes available through Red Cross

Earlier this year, Spencer's Children's Clothing Company formed a partnership with the American Red Cross to provide complete infant layette sets to the families of American soldiers.

The program allows a service member who deployed in support of Operation Enduring Freedom to request a gift set for his or her child born after Sept. 11, 2001. Eligible deployments include the Caucus Region (Afghanistan, Uzbekistan and Pakistan), Kuwait, the Philippines and Saudi Arabia (PSAB). The program expanded to include military personnel deployed to Guantanamo Bay, Cuba — a large number of whom went from Fort Benning.

The layettes include a variety of infant apparel appropriate for the size, age and gender of each baby receiving the gift. Several who have received the gift set have said they were impressed by the number of items in the package, and they were most touched by an enclosed note that thanked them for their many sacrifices made in support of our nation's freedom.

The Fort Benning station of the American Red Cross hopes to help many more families in this community receive their gift sets. The program is retroactive to Sept. 11, 2001. To request a layette, contact the American Red Cross at 545-5194.

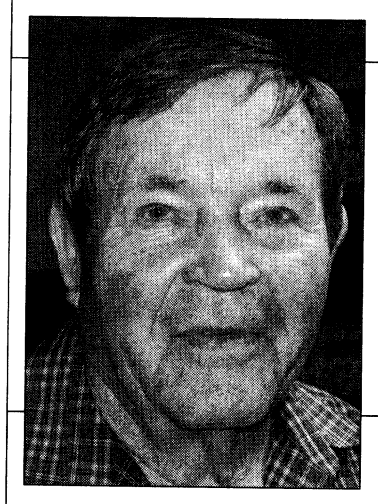
Postman says thanks



I would personally like to take a minute to thank a certain kind of people. They are the soldiers and spouses on Fort Benning. I am a letter carrier for the United States Postal Service. Sometimes during the heat of 100 degrees plus, I was greeted very often with a cold glass of water in hand, I was asked or given cold Gatorade, PowerAde or a cold soda numerous times.

I was even asked if I wanted to eat lunch or take a snack with me. I've shared cake from birthday parties and other snacks from graduation parties. Fort Benning soldiers and spouses are truly one of a kind people, so I just want to say thank you from the bottom of my heart. Thank you!

Fall Fest to come to Fort Benning

First annual event features much for many

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

It wouldn't be Georgia in October without an oompah band.

Or a volksmarch.

Or a beer garden.

Or maybe it's just someone's idea of how to have a good time.

Fort Benning's inaugural "Fall Fest" will be at Wetherby Field Thursday through Oct. 20 and will feature a carnival, fest tent, beer garden, volksmarch, live music, Kiddie Corner, and, of course, great food.

"The Soldier Show (Wednesday) is tied in to the Fall Fest, too," said Georganna Rapaport, Directorate of Community Activities marketing assistant.

The show, a 90-minute live revue at Wetherby Field, starts at 7:30 p.m.

The U.S. Army Soldier Show features talented active-duty soldiers from throughout the Army.

The show is created in only six weeks, and then the cast goes on tour for 100 performances in six months.

"We have wanted to do the Fest for a long time," said Brian Smith, Directorate of Community Activities marketing director. "Since this will be the first stateside outdoor Soldier Show, we knew that it was critical to have an outdoor event along with it. This is going to be an interesting event. And it is happening at a pretty time of the year."

Among the featured events is The Infantry Band on duty as the "oompah" band Oct. 19.

"We will play traditional German festival "beer" music," said bandmaster Chief Warrant Officer Paul Clark.

"This music is new for some of our newer band members," Clark said. "But if you ever toured with an Army band in Germany, your main public relations events were playing at various Oktoberfests."

Staff Sgt. Mark Hedges said the band has had some practice with the music, playing for the German liaison officer for Benning and for the German liaison at Maxwell Air Force Base.

For those who enjoy healthy activities, a 10K Volksmarch will kick off at 9 a.m. Oct 19 at Wetherby Field. Walkers can pay the $5 registration fee the morning of the march or ahead of time at the Sports Branch Office at Briant Wells Fieldhouse.

Each participant will receive a Volksmarch medal at the finish. Leashed pets are also welcome.

Since this is the first year for the event, organizers aren't exactly sure what the attendance numbers will be. Smith and Rapaport are hoping to draw big crowds by putting out a lot of information about the event to the community.

"We are certain that we will do this again next year and do it even better," Smith said.

'Three amigos' come together after 22 years

Platoon members reunite

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

For many soldiers, making the Army a career will bring many friendships. However, with frequent permanent changes of station, it's rare to see soldiers stationed together only once or twice in their careers who are able to extend those friendships even further.

Col. Thomas Cole, Basic Combat Training Brigade commander, Command Sgt. Maj. Douglas Greenway, BCTB command sergeant major and Post Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso took the odds and threw them out the window.

It all started at Hunter Army Airfield in Savannah, Ga., as part of the 1st Battalion (Ranger), 75th Infantry Regiment, in 1980. Cole was a platoon leader, Kelso was a squad leader, and Greenway was a team leader in the company. Kelso and Greenway met a few months before being assigned to the unit.

"I was going through the Ranger Indoctrination Program, and Kelso was one of the instructors," Greenway said. "I remember my first real contact with him was when he threw me out of a CH-47 helicopter."

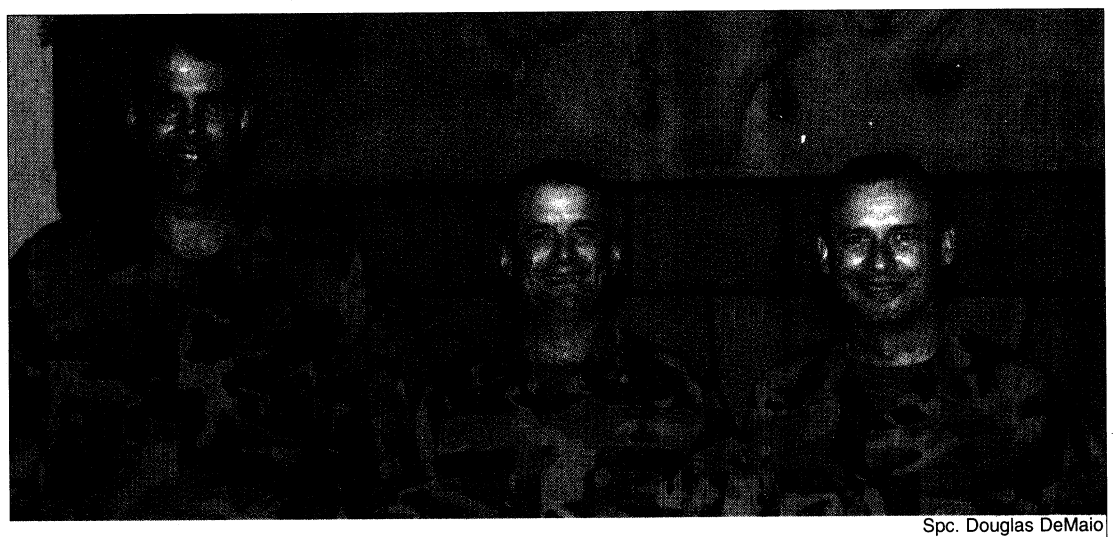
Out of RIP, all were together in the platoon. While there, they became like brothers.

"You only have one life to live," Greenway said. "You have to make the most of it and develop those friendships that you will keep through your lifetime."

"You only hope that one day your paths will cross again," Kelso said.

In 1992, Kelso's and Greenway's paths collided. While working in RIP, Greenway ended up meeting a new first sergeant in the regiment.

"Lo and behold, it was Kelso as I came to find out," Greenway said. "It was nice to see him again."



Again, changes in duty stations separated the two.

In 1996, Cole crossed paths with Kelso again at Fort Richardson, Alaska, as part of the 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment.

"It was unusual to see Cole again," Kelso said. "Somehow our paths crossed, and I ended up being his battalion command sergeant major while he was the battalion commander."

Finally the paths of the three reached an ultimate high on Fort Benning.

"It's funny how many years ago back at first battalion we would have never fathomed that 22 years later, we'd be brigade commander, brigade command sergeant major and post command sergeant major on the same post at the same time," Kelso said. "It's weird how things work out."

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

The relationship of the three goes beyond just that at work.

"We've always been great friends, and we'll always be great friends," Greenway said. "We're grateful for each other, and we'll never take that for granted."

"We've watched each other's children grow up, and we've seen each other's children get married," Cole said. "It's a lifetime experience, and I wouldn't trade it for anything in the world."

"I would share a foxhole with both Greenway and Cole," Kelso said. "I know I've got their back, and they've got mine. We're a 'Band of Brothers.'"

Soldier Show coming to Fort Benning

Variety show to be performed at Wetherby Field

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The 2002 U.S. Army Soldier Show is coming to Fort Benning to entertain soldiers and their families with an hour-and-a-half singing and dancing extravaganza.

"Freedom" is the theme of this years show, and soldiers will perform 7:30 p.m. Wednesday on Wetherby Field. Admission and parking are free.

"I've seen every Soldier Show for the past 10 years, and I've always enjoyed it," said Jim Shoemaker, program manager with Morale Welfare and Recreation.

The Soldier Show is a high-energy, live musical review showcasing the talents of active-duty soldiers who are selected by audition from throughout the Army, according to the Soldier Show Web site. They are amateur artists who have a passion for music, dance and performing. The gates open at 6:30 p.m. People are welcome to bring blankets or lawn chairs

"There's always something for everyone," said Sally Ghent, administration officer, Community Recreation Division, Directorate of Community Activities. "They sing gospel, pop, country — there's a little bit of everything.

"Families are invited, and I don't think anyone will be disappointed."

> "They sing gospel, pop, country — there's a little bit of everything."
> Sally Ghent
> Community Recreation Division

The modern version of the show originated in 1983 as an outgrowth of several soldier shows existing in various Army commands with soldier talent selected from worldwide competition, according to the Web site.

The soldiers will perform on a 60-foot stage.

There will be a "jumbotron" type screen so even the people in the back will be able to see, Shoemaker said.

POWs visit post, rekindle memories of war

Group celebrates freedom

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

More than 40 World War II prisoners of war toured Fort Benning during a reunion Oct. 4 more than 57 years after being liberated.

POWs of Oflag 64, an officers' prison camp in northern Poland, spent the day touring Harmony Church, airborne training and the Officers' Club.

"I thought Fort Benning would be a great place to go and rekindle some memories," said Bill Warthen from Vidalia, Ga., organizer of Oflag 64's 2002 reunion. "Some of these men haven't been back here since they left for war."

Marv Chevalier of Coralville, Iowa, hasn't seen Fort Benning since he left in 1943. Chevalier remembers how he valued his training.

"I really didn't see much of the post while I was here," Chevalier said. "I stayed here three months and kept my nose to the grindstone."

Chevalier said the training was necessary and important to learn so he could survive the war, he said.

Poland's winter weather was extremely cold, he said. Food was sparse.

Opened in December 1942, most of the POWs held at Oflag 64 were captured in Africa, from the 1st Armored Division and 1st Infantry Div.

Joseph Barrett, captured during the invasion of Italy, spent 26 months in the camp.

He remembers how the Germans would try to spread propaganda to the POWs, but the group was able to build a radio, known as the bird, and monitor world news, which was a big morale booster, he said.

The camp was a 19th century boys school. One of the camp's building was a three-story white library.

It was on the third floor of "The White House" the POW leadership organized lookouts for "goons," German prison guards, so they could hide and listen to the radio.

"Each night the bird would sing," Barrett said.

The news was passed through the camp, keeping the prisoners informed of the war's progress.

"It was vital for morale," said Bob O'Neill from Scottsdale, Ariz. "It kept the Germans in check."

They couldn't get away with telling lies, O'Neill said.

"We knew from the news we heard on the radio that they were lying to us," he said.

On the morning of Jan. 21, 1945, 1,300 POWs were escorted from the compound, while others hid in tunnels the POWs built for an escape, Warthen said.

While the German guards were busy with escorting the prisoners, others began to escape, Kellahan said.

The rest of the POWs traveled to either Luckenwalde or Hammelburg, Germany, where they were liberated in the spring of 1945.

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Bob O'Neill, above, spent three weeks at Oflag 64 before escaping to Russia.

POWs of the Oflag 64 organization were spread throughout Europe and Asia, Kellahan said. All the men of the Oflag 64 made their way back to America in 1945.

In 1947, a group of Oflag 64 POWs started informal meetings, Barrett said, forming the nucleus of the Oflag 64 organization.

The annual reunions became a way to celebrate their lasting freedom.

The reunion was exciting and successful, Warthen said. It reminded the group of what brought them together, the struggle for survival and American freedom.

Xylitol: Protects teeth, bones, fights infections

one that cost up to 10 times as much as others.

But the Navy took note of early research and began prescribing xylitol to sailors to prevent cavities. The other services soon followed. By the early 90s, xylitol products, gums, toothpastes and mints, were standard treatment in the services' efforts to control cavities and gum disease.

Xylitol products were reintroduced in the U.S. a few years ago, with better results. Gums, like Carefree Koolerz, Nicorette and Starbucks, and candies, like SMINTs and Victoria's Secret Mints, can be purchased through established outlets, like Wal-Mart, Target, Starbucks and Victoria's Secret. Xylitol, which is as sweet as sugar with one-third the calories and no aftertaste, can now be purchased in granular form in most health food stores.

Lutka believes the demand for xylitol products is increasing and will continue to increase as more and more consumers become aware of its potential and its endorsement by the National Institute of Health last year. He'd like to see more xylitol products "readily available for all servicemen and women and their families in every PX, BX, every AAFES outlet and every DECA store out there."

And he's not alone.

Gail Cooke calls herself "a believer." Lutka introduced her to xylitol-based gum nine months ago.

"I've been plagued with sinus infections all my life," said Cooke, the DENTAC administrative officer. "I've suffered from sinus infections as much as 10 times a year, and since I have chronic asthma as well, the infection often caused more serious lung infections.

"I was on the last, strongest antibiotic the doctor could prescribe. So I figured I had nothing to lose, I started trying the gum. And I have not had one infection since. It's amazing."

Lutka believes it's just a matter of time before xylitol products are available on post. Marketers have "shown an interest," he said, as have AAFES and DECA officials. Until then, Lutka said consumers may have to look closely to spot products that contain xylitol.

Some, like Arm & Hammer Advance White and V6 Dental Chews, are marketed in the dental care section, but others can be found throughout the store. Some Atkins Diet Advantage Bars contain xylitol, and Hersheys Carefree Koolerz Gum can be found "right beside the Bubblicious," Lutka said.

"Forget everything your dentist ever told you about chewing gum," Lutka said. "And if you don't want to chew, find a mint or candy that suits you. Ask your grocer to stock it or go to a health food store, but don't wait for it to come to you."

look CLOSER look look look look look look look

Xylitol is a naturally occurring sugar alcohol found in plums, strawberries, raspberries and certain hardwoods. The human body produces up to two grams of it each day.

It was discovered in 1861 and introduced as a sugar substitute during World War II.

Spoon for spoon, xylitol is as sweet as sugar and can be used in recipes or to sweeten coffee or tea exactly as sugar is used.

Unlike other sugars and alternatives, xylitol is composed of five carbons, and therefore can not be digested by the bacteria that cause tooth decay, Strep mutans. The bacteria ingest the xylitol and use all its energy in a futile attempt to digest it. Bacteria can mutate after an extended exposure to xylitol, but the mutants do not produce acid and therefore do not cause decay.

Though readily available in other countries, xylitol products are still scarce in the U.S.

Look for these products in the candy, dental care, or health food isle: Arm & Hammer Baking Soda Gum, Hersheys Carefree Koolerz Gum, Biotene Dental Gum, Starbucks Gum, Mint-flavored Nicorette, Intense mint or spearmint- flavored SMINTs, Toms of Maine Natural Mouthwash, Crest MultiCare Coolmint toothpaste, Toms of Main toothpastes, First Teeth for infants, Gerber Tooth and Gum Cleanser for infants, Xylichew gums and mints, V6 Dental Gum and Xclear nasal wash.

garrison commanders.

Mission operations and base operations funds will no longer be allowed to migrate from account to account, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager.. This gives commanders resources for mission training separate from garrison managers' funding for improvements in living and working conditions on posts.

Just as units have standing operating procedures for jobs and missions, base operations services will also get SOPs.

These base ops services include child care facilities and gyms. Fort Benning is part of the Southeast region, headquartered at Fort McPherson, Ga., which includes Fort Campbell, Ky., Fort Bragg, N.C., Fort Rucker, Ala., Fort Knox, Ky., and Fort Jackson, S.C. The region is a mixture of troop posts and training posts.

Garrison commander Col. Joe Torres and Walls met with their counterparts and the regional director at the Southeast regional office Monday and Tuesday.

"We had some great sessions," Walls said, "and we look forward to getting the people down here to see what we do here."

Walls said the regional officials are still wrestling with several issues, including the recipe for reorganization and the future structure of the garrisons.

"We needed to get some of our issues out on the table," Walls said. "Fort Benning is a very unique installation. We do everything here. We are probably the best example of a cross-section of Army units."

The top-down review began in June 2001.

Full implementation of the program will not occur until fiscal 2004, when the budget issues should be resolved and money will start to come in to the installation.

"We are really interested in the projected funding," Walls said. "We want to know if things are going to be better or worse? Can we fix more things or not?"

Walls does not foresee any change in the way the garrison does business yet, but he anticipates receiving a lot of information about new reporting requirements in the next month or two.

"Right now we just need to flow with it and be flexible," he said.

Retired general addresses Hispanic's heritage

Post luncheon celebrates history, culture

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Soldiers and community members of Columbus joined in celebrating Hispanic Heritage Month Oct. 3 at the Officers' Club.

Retired Maj. Gen. Felix Santoni was the guest speaker at the luncheon, which recognized the accomplishments and important role of the Hispanic community in the nation.

Hispanics demonstrate their impact on America through education and history, Santoni said.

"Education leads to understanding," said Col. Charles D. Cornwell, U.S. Army Infantry Center chief of staff.

Hispanics have played a major role in American History, Cornwell said.

"We have grown to be a big part of this civilization," Santoni said. "We are Americans. We are proud of where we've been, where we are and where we're going.

"We are no less American because we are Hispanic and no less Hispanic because we are Americans."

Santoni explained his thoughts on what the future of the military will look like.

"The 21st century will be called the Latino century for America," Santoni said.

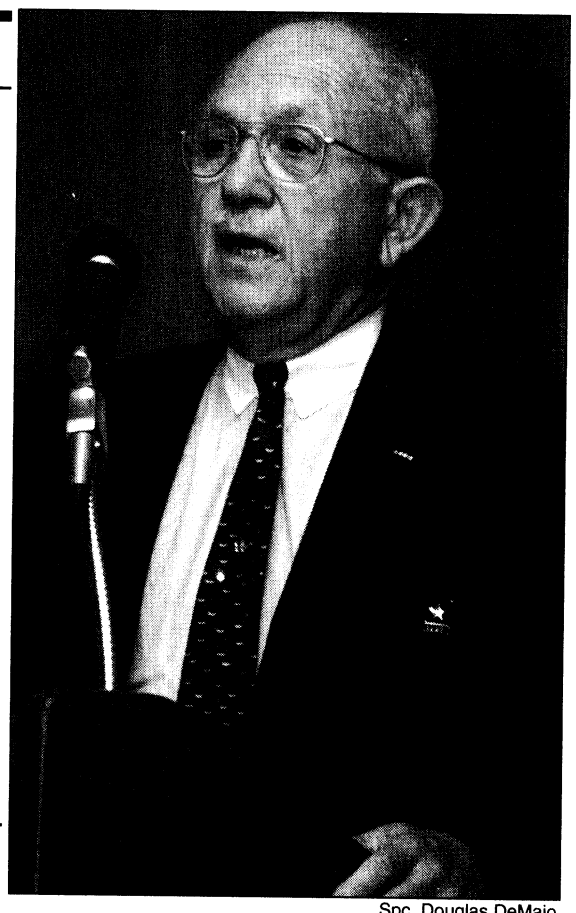
Currently Hispanics represent 7.5 percent of the Army, and 2.1 percent are officers, he said.

"There's a need to increase Hispanics in the military, so there will be a balance between Hispanic military population percentage and American population percentage," Santoni said.

He said increasing the number of Hispanics in the military and promoting them will help the military understand issues of Hispanic heritage and give Hispanic soldiers the tools to grow and develop in the military.

"The United States can't learn to lead the world unless they learn to lead the western hemisphere," he said.

look CLOSER look look look look look look



Facts about Hispanic heritage:

- About 27 million Americans are identified as Hispanic, and 3.6 million reside in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. Puerto Ricans have held U.S. citizenship since the First World War following an act of Congress.
- An estimated 250,000 to 500,000 Hispanics served in the armed forces during World War II.
- In July 1950, there were about 20,000 Hispanics in the armed forces. Over the next three years, nearly 148,000 Hispanic-Americans volunteered for or were drafted into military service. Of these, approximately 60,000 Puerto Ricans served in Korea.
- Nine Hispanics were awarded the Medal of Honor during the Korean War, and more than 100 others received Distinguished Service Crosses and Silver Stars for acts of combat bravery.
- In 1989, David Barkley was the first Hispanic recipient of the Medal of Honor and was recognized in a ceremony during Hispanic Heritage Week.
- Some 20,000 Hispanics served in Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm.
- Hispanics have been awarded 39 Medals of Honor.

Santoni thanked Fort Benning and the organizers of the luncheon for the opportunity to address and educate the community about Hispanic heritage.

In September of 1968, the Senate and House of Representatives decreed the week including Sept. 15 and 16 Hispanic Heritage Week.

On the first day of 1989, the week was changed to a monthlong celebration.

Lawson Airfield nears completion

Ramp, runway construction continues

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Construction on Lawson Army Airfield has nearly reached the 75 percent completion point and is projected to be complete by the summer of 2003.

"This will give the airfield the capability to have airplanes take off fully loaded with cargo and fully fueled, which couldn't be done before," Campbell said. "They could fly from here to Europe and never stop for gas."

The project is extending the runway from 8,200 feet to 10,000 feet and expanding the black ramp, a heavy aircraft parking area, to increase the weight and number of aircraft it will be able to hold.

"The changes will enhance the airfield's force projection platform and rapid deployment force responsible for the surrounding five states including active, national guard and reserve," said John Campbell, airfield manager, Chief Aviation Division.

Several years ago the airfield was named as an airport port of entry and deployment.

"We're ahead of schedule, the weather has been good for construction work, we're working diligently, and the quality of work is outstanding," said Ron Sibold, quality control manager with R.C. Construction Company.

On average, more than 1,000 cubic yards of concrete are placed every day, weather permitting.

There has been a tremendous amount of concrete placed at 20 inches thick, Sibold said. To prepare for the black ramp, tons of dirt had to be moved and 3,000 feet of pipe were laid for drainage and an underground fueling system.

Before digging began, an archeological survey was done to ensure no native American artifacts and burial sites were disturbed, said Chris Hamilton, cultural resource manager for Fort Benning.

"The field work is done and analysis is ongoing," Hamilton said. "We discovered about five burial sites and repatriated to the tribes for reburial."

After the site was prepared for the tons of concrete to be placed, it opens the opportunity for increased usage, Sibold said.

New law to cost DoD millions of dollars

Concurrent receipt causes much concern

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — A little-known pay measure, set to become law, could turn into a budget-busting problem for the Defense Department, officials said.

At issue is "concurrent receipt." If enacted, the legislation may cost DoD around $58 billion extra over the next decade.

Concurrent receipt is sometimes called "double dipping." Since the 1890s, Congress has prohibited the receipt of two pays for the same purpose. The specific instance of concurrent receipt at issue deals with Veterans Administration disability payments and military retirement.

Currently, military retirees who receive VA disability payments have their retired pay reduced dollar-for-dollar by the VA payment. So, for example, if retired pay is $1,000 a month and the VA disability payment is $500 a month, the member receives $1,000 per month — the entire VA payment and $500 in retired pay.

Retired pay is fully taxable; VA disability payments are not taxed.

Charles Abell, assistant defense secretary for force management policy, saids the theory behind the current system is that if a service member completes military service and receives retired pay, and then also receives a VA payment for a condition related to that service, "it is two pays for the same event."

The U.S. government has always treated this as double dipping. According to a study commissioned by DoD, VA disability compensation is intended for veterans who separated from military service without retirement, but who suffered service-connected conditions that affect their earnings.

Alternatively, service members "receiving military retired pay are considered to be fully compensated for their service, including any disability."

The concurrent receipt legislation, part of the fiscal 2003 National Defense Authorization Bill, would allow retirees receiving 60 percent disability or more to receive their full disability and their full retirement.

Money spent on this, the Office of Management and Budget argues, would be better spent in developing warfighting capabilities.

The 10-year, $58 billion cost estimates floated by OMB and Congressional Budget Office are soft, Abell said. The amount is based on the idea that 700,000 to 800,000 veterans would qualify. The number could go as high as 1.2 million, he said.

"We don't know," Abell said. "Right now, some don't put in for this because there is no benefit to them. They might apply if there is a benefit." There are more than 25 million veterans in the United States.

DoD research shows that the small number of veterans who would benefit from such a repeal are already doing well financially, Abell said. He maintains that the money to pay the double-dip will come from accounts now going to readiness and quality of life programs.

"Active duty soldiers, sailors, airmen and Marines will live in substandard quarters and work in hangars where the roof leaks or try to perform the mission without all the spare parts they need because $58 billion will flow over to a group that, when measured against the American population at large, is certainly well-off," he said.

Abell said he could find nothing in the public or private sectors with a truly analogous pay situation.

DoD has made its position on concurrent receipt known to the House and Senate authorizers.

"In our view, this is not good government," Abell said. "We should know in the next 30 days what Congress will do. When the legislation gets to the White House, advisers will look at it and provide their recommendations to the president, and he'll decide what to do."

Flag flies from France to Fort Benning

Veteran donates flag to Rock Steady battalion

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Taps played and a solitary figure in a wheelchair saluted as the American flag was lowered over the Normandy American Cemetery Aug. 16.

There, overlooking Omaha Beach, and surrounded by the graves of the men he fought alongside on D-Day, the veteran chose to remain anonymous in deference to the 1,557 men whose bodies were never recovered.

But he paused for a photo after asking permission to carry the flag, which was folded and prepped for the flight home to Fort Benning.

Here, it was raised over Sand Hill's "Rock Steady" battalion Sept. 21 in a ceremony marking the 138th anniversary of the Battle of Chickamauga, where the 19th Infantry Regiment earned its nickname."

Lt. Col. Brad Nelson, commander of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, said the flag will fly on holidays, special occasions and remembrances to "perpetuate the stories and the memories of the men who fought in World War II, so today's soldiers and tomorrow's soldiers will appreciate the significance of this flag."

The flag was a gift from Ralph W. Widener, who, like the disabled veteran who carried the flag, was wounded in Normandy.

Widener has made it a practice to visit Fort Benning periodically and speak to Sand Hill soldiers since he went through 13 weeks of training with D Company, 6th Battalion, 1st Infantry Training Brigade in 1986 while researching an article he was writing for his hometown newspaper in Dallas, Texas.

Widener's idea was to send the flag to Normandy where it flew over the graves of 9,386 American servicemen before presenting it to the battalion "in appreciation for all that has been done for me since 1986."

> "We want our soldiers to know ... they represent the future of this country, and their service is important."
> Lt. Col. Brad Nelson
> Commander, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

Nelson said the flag will be flown and its story told to each new cycle of trainees.

"We want to honor our veterans and remember our past. We want our soldiers to know that, just as this flag represents those who've gone before them, they represent the future of this country, and their service is important."

An unidentified veteran asked to carry the American flag that was raised over the Normandy American Cemetery in France Aug. 16. The veteran, who was wounded at Omaha Beach, was visiting the cemetery and overheard cemetery officials talking about raising the flag, which is now flown at Fort Benning.

Post benefits from EPSQ system

Hard work, computer help process soldiers

Sherry Wade and Pat Weekley
Directorate of Intelligence and Security

As national security becomes more and more important, so does the processing of security clearances for personnel.

The Electronic Personnel Security Questionnaire Processing Center is just one step in the process of protecting the nation's secrets.

The Directorate of Intelligence and Security established the EPSQ Processing Center to handle the initial Infantry Training Brigade national agency checks and to process questionnaires for Basic Combat Training Brigade trainees with military specialties that require security clearances.

The EPSQ is the electronic version of the questionnaire for National Security Positions, Standard Form 86.

This questionnaire must be completed before an individual can obtain a security clearance.

The EPSQ Processing Center opened in May 1999 and was originally located at the 30th AG Battalion.

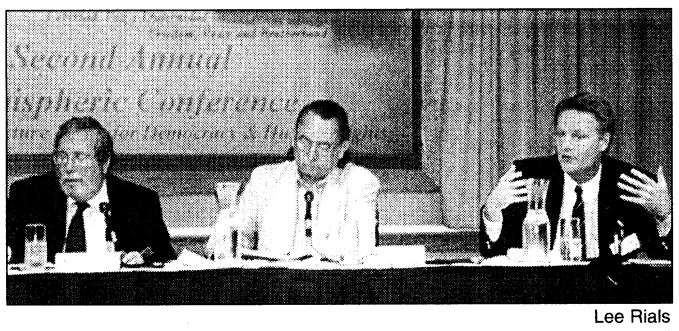
At that time, there were only 11 computers. After several moves to temporary locations, the EPSQ Processing Center found a permanent home in August 2000 in Building 3355 on Sand Hill.

Now there are 27 computers. Bob Mejia and Spc. Kevin McSwain process ITB soldiers in order to preclude holdovers for suitability reasons.

The number of ENTNAC holdovers totaled 455 when the task was given to the Security Division.

However, because of the hard work and determination of Personnel Security specialists as of this date, the number has decreased to zero.

The people responsible for processing BCTB trainees are Annie Whipple and Pfc. Joshua Burnes.



There are approximately 2,080 trainees per year processed through this facility. There is always the potential to have holdovers if the EPSQ is not completed accurately and within time constraints.

Therefore, the EPSQ Processing Center is a vital stop for trainees in-processing.

The 36th Engineer Group, 29th Infantry Regiment, Ranger Training Brigade, and 11th Infantry Regiment have used the center to process their permanent party and student population for security clearances.

For more information about the EPSQ, call Whipple at 544-8760.

Engineers build foundation for future

Driver's course trains users, builders

Pfc. Brian Trapp

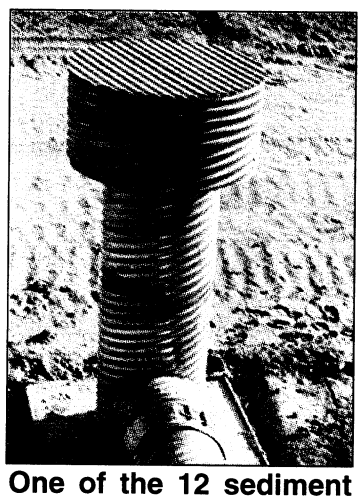
FORT PICKETT, Va. — The 36th Engineer Group deployed in early August to construct the Virginia State Public Safety Driver's Course.



The group deployed as part of Joint Task Force 6, a military unit that works in partnership with law enforcement agencies to deter domestic production and reduce the flow of illicit drugs. The Rugged Seahorses will return Nov. 15. The project will take the next four years to complete.

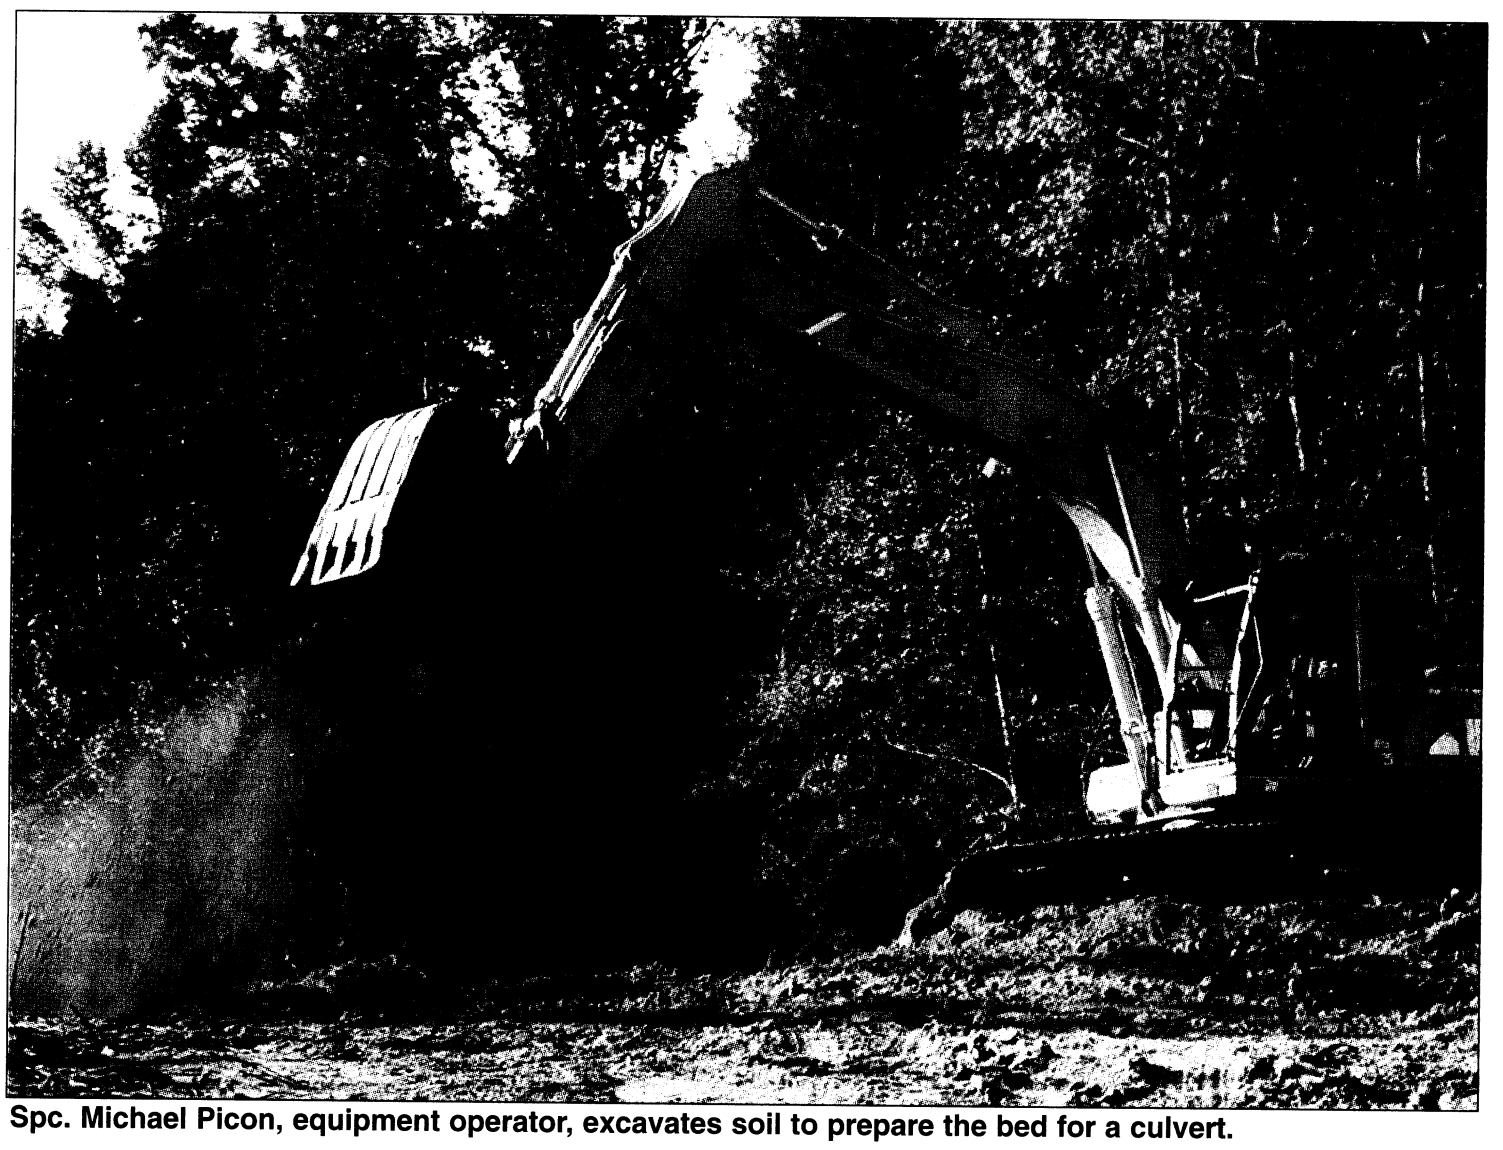
"We're out here changing the landscape everyday," said Capt. Daniel Segura, mission commander. "When we leave the soldiers will look back and be proud of all we accomplished."

Soldiers are clearing and grubbing 160 acres of land, putting in 12 sediment basins, a half-mile of road and 1,000 feet of concrete ditches. The sediment basins prevent silt and sand from disturbing the untouched areas outside the construction site by filtering out the runoff, then only clean water flows back into the surrounding woodlands.

"This is a great training opportunity. We never have the chance to do a mission this big on Fort Benning," Segura said.

"Working with JTF 6 helps us get the training we need by coordinating through another agency," said 1st Lt. Corie Huff, platoon leader. "It prepares us for wartime missions."

One of the 12 sediment basins that were constructed.



It helps soldiers know what to expect during a wartime mission, using different equipment and working long hours, said Sgt. Gerardo Bazan, team leader.

"We're doing pretty well, and we're ahead of schedule," he said.

The soldiers' training will eventually give way to the Virginia state troopers having the chance to train, and they are grateful for the soldiers' hard work, Lt. Col. Don Martin, deputy superintendent of the Virginia State Police.

"Driver training is our number one mission. Currently law enforcement agencies are using makeshift training areas," Martin said. "After this track is completed, many other agencies will be able to come here to use the course — not just the state troopers. We've been working 10 years to see this happen. Once completed, this will be the best training track in the U.S."

The driving course will have a high-speed track, an urban environment course with precision driving areas, and an open area for more basic maneuvers.

Spc. Michael Picon, equipment operator, excavates soil to prepare the bed for a culvert.

Graders prepare a road bed for a three-mile track.

"During a pursuit, officers have to drive and make quick, tactical decisions," Martin said. "This course will better train the officers for that kind of decision making."

"We're out here changing the landscape everyday. When we leave the soldiers will look back and be proud of all we accomplished."

Dental program helps doctors, community

Dentists receive world-class education

Pvt. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The next wave of promising young dentists arrived at Love Dental Clinic Sept. 9 to begin their yearlong residencies with the Army.

The officers are a product of the Health Professions' Scholarship Program that pays their dental school tuition in return for a commitment to the Army. The first year they take part in the Advanced General Dentistry Program here or at seven other posts worldwide. They spend the remaining commitment working where the Army needs them.

"This is a great experience," said Capt. Nicole Mitchell, a dentist in the program. "We're building on what we already know in order to treat patients in all areas of the field. This (program) prepares us to work in a clinic in an isolated area without outside assistance. I look forward to treating patients from start to finish without the help of a specialist."

Most civilian programs have only two general dentists, said Col. Lee Covington, director of the program. The Army program uses mentors in every specialty area of dentistry and has experienced senior officers who help the interns with everything they need to excel.

"The AGDP is one of the top residency programs in the country," Covington said. "It gives them immediate experience and advanced technical knowledge that increases their confidence and efficiency in providing more types of procedures. They can diagnose and manage complicated cases much better than if they had gone into a civilian practice right after school."

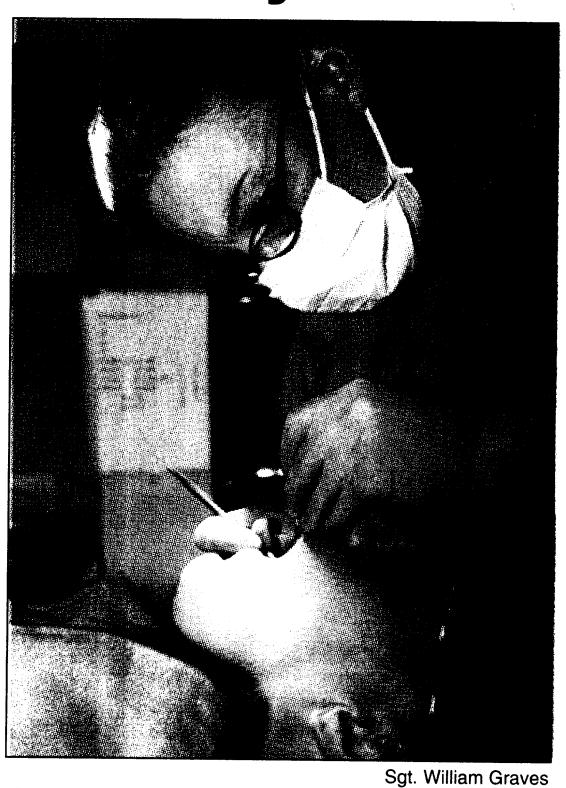
Furthermore, the doctors receive training on how to manage a practice, instruction from visiting doctors and the latest research and development information on new products and procedures.

"They are well-trained," Covington said. "The term "resident" is kind of a misnomer.

The dentists work on "Class 4" patients who require examinations and "Class 3" patients who have a dental problem that could become a hindrance to their mission within the next six months. Both classes are nondeployable, and therefore, could slow down Fort Benning's mission.

Besides helping the post's state of readiness, the dentists offer seven additional sets of hands that render more types of specialty care than the post would otherwise receive.

"They provide comprehensive dentistry," Covington said. "They help patients with everything they need without having to send them somewhere else. The residents build more of a relationship with their patients as a result."



The dentists also help the Dental Activity's short-suspense cases, such as those that arise with reservists or last-minute deployments.

"(The program) is functioning well," Covington said. "They learn more in one year here than in four years of dental school, easily. In return, Fort Benning soldiers receive faster and better dental care."

Patients seem to agree.

"The program is wonderful, the dentists are friendly and the service is the best on Fort Benning," said Sgt. 1st Class. George Frazier, training NCOIC for the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

For more information about the program, call Love Dental Clinic at 544-2052.

The Fort Benning Fire department started visiting local schools Thursday and will continue through Oct. 24 to promote fire safety awareness in observance of fire safety week.

The children will get a close-up look at the fire trucks during these visits, and the firemen will play a fire safety trivia game with the students so they can have an active role in the learning process.

All the schools in the area have plans for fire safety week.

The teachers at Loyd Elementary School will develop their lessons about fire safety on an individual basis which allows them to focus on the needs of each particular class, said Angie McPherson, principal of Loyd Elementary School.

The teachers at McBride Elementary School will focus their lessons on fire safety for the week, but fire safety has always been a constant concern in the education process at the school, said Del Hicks, principal of McBride Elementary School.

Smokey the Bear visited McBride in September, and the school has monthly fire drills.

"Any time you can teach people about safety, it's a good thing and the sooner the better," Hicks said. "It's great that the fire department is willing to come out and help teach the children. I just can't say enough good things about Mr. Brown and the rest of the department."

The main goal of fire safety week is to educate the community of potential fire hazards and ways to escape a fire.

Each year about 3,285 people die and about 25,000 people are injured in fires, according to the Fort Benning Fire Department. Last year, Fort Benning had 36 structural fires, none of which resulted in death.

"As far as I know, no one has ever died in a fire on Fort Benning," said Hollis Brown, chief of fire prevention.

Nearly all of the fires that occurred here could have been prevented, Brown said. Most of the fires here were caused by improper storage of combustible materials or overloaded extension cords.

"The most important thing is to make sure everyone knows to have a smoke detector," Brown said.

President Woodrow Wilson proclaimed Oct. 9 National Fire Safety Day in 1921 to mark the 40th anniversary of The Great Chicago Fire. In 1922, President Warren Harding inaugurated fire safety week as the Sunday before Oct. 9 to the Sunday after.

The Great Chicago Fire started in Patrick O'Leary's barn and burned for 72 hours, spreading throughout the city, killing 250 people and leaving 100,000 homeless.

To find out about fire safety or the Great Chicago Fire, visit the National Fire Protection Agency Web site at www.NFPA.org.

Cyclists to ride in country

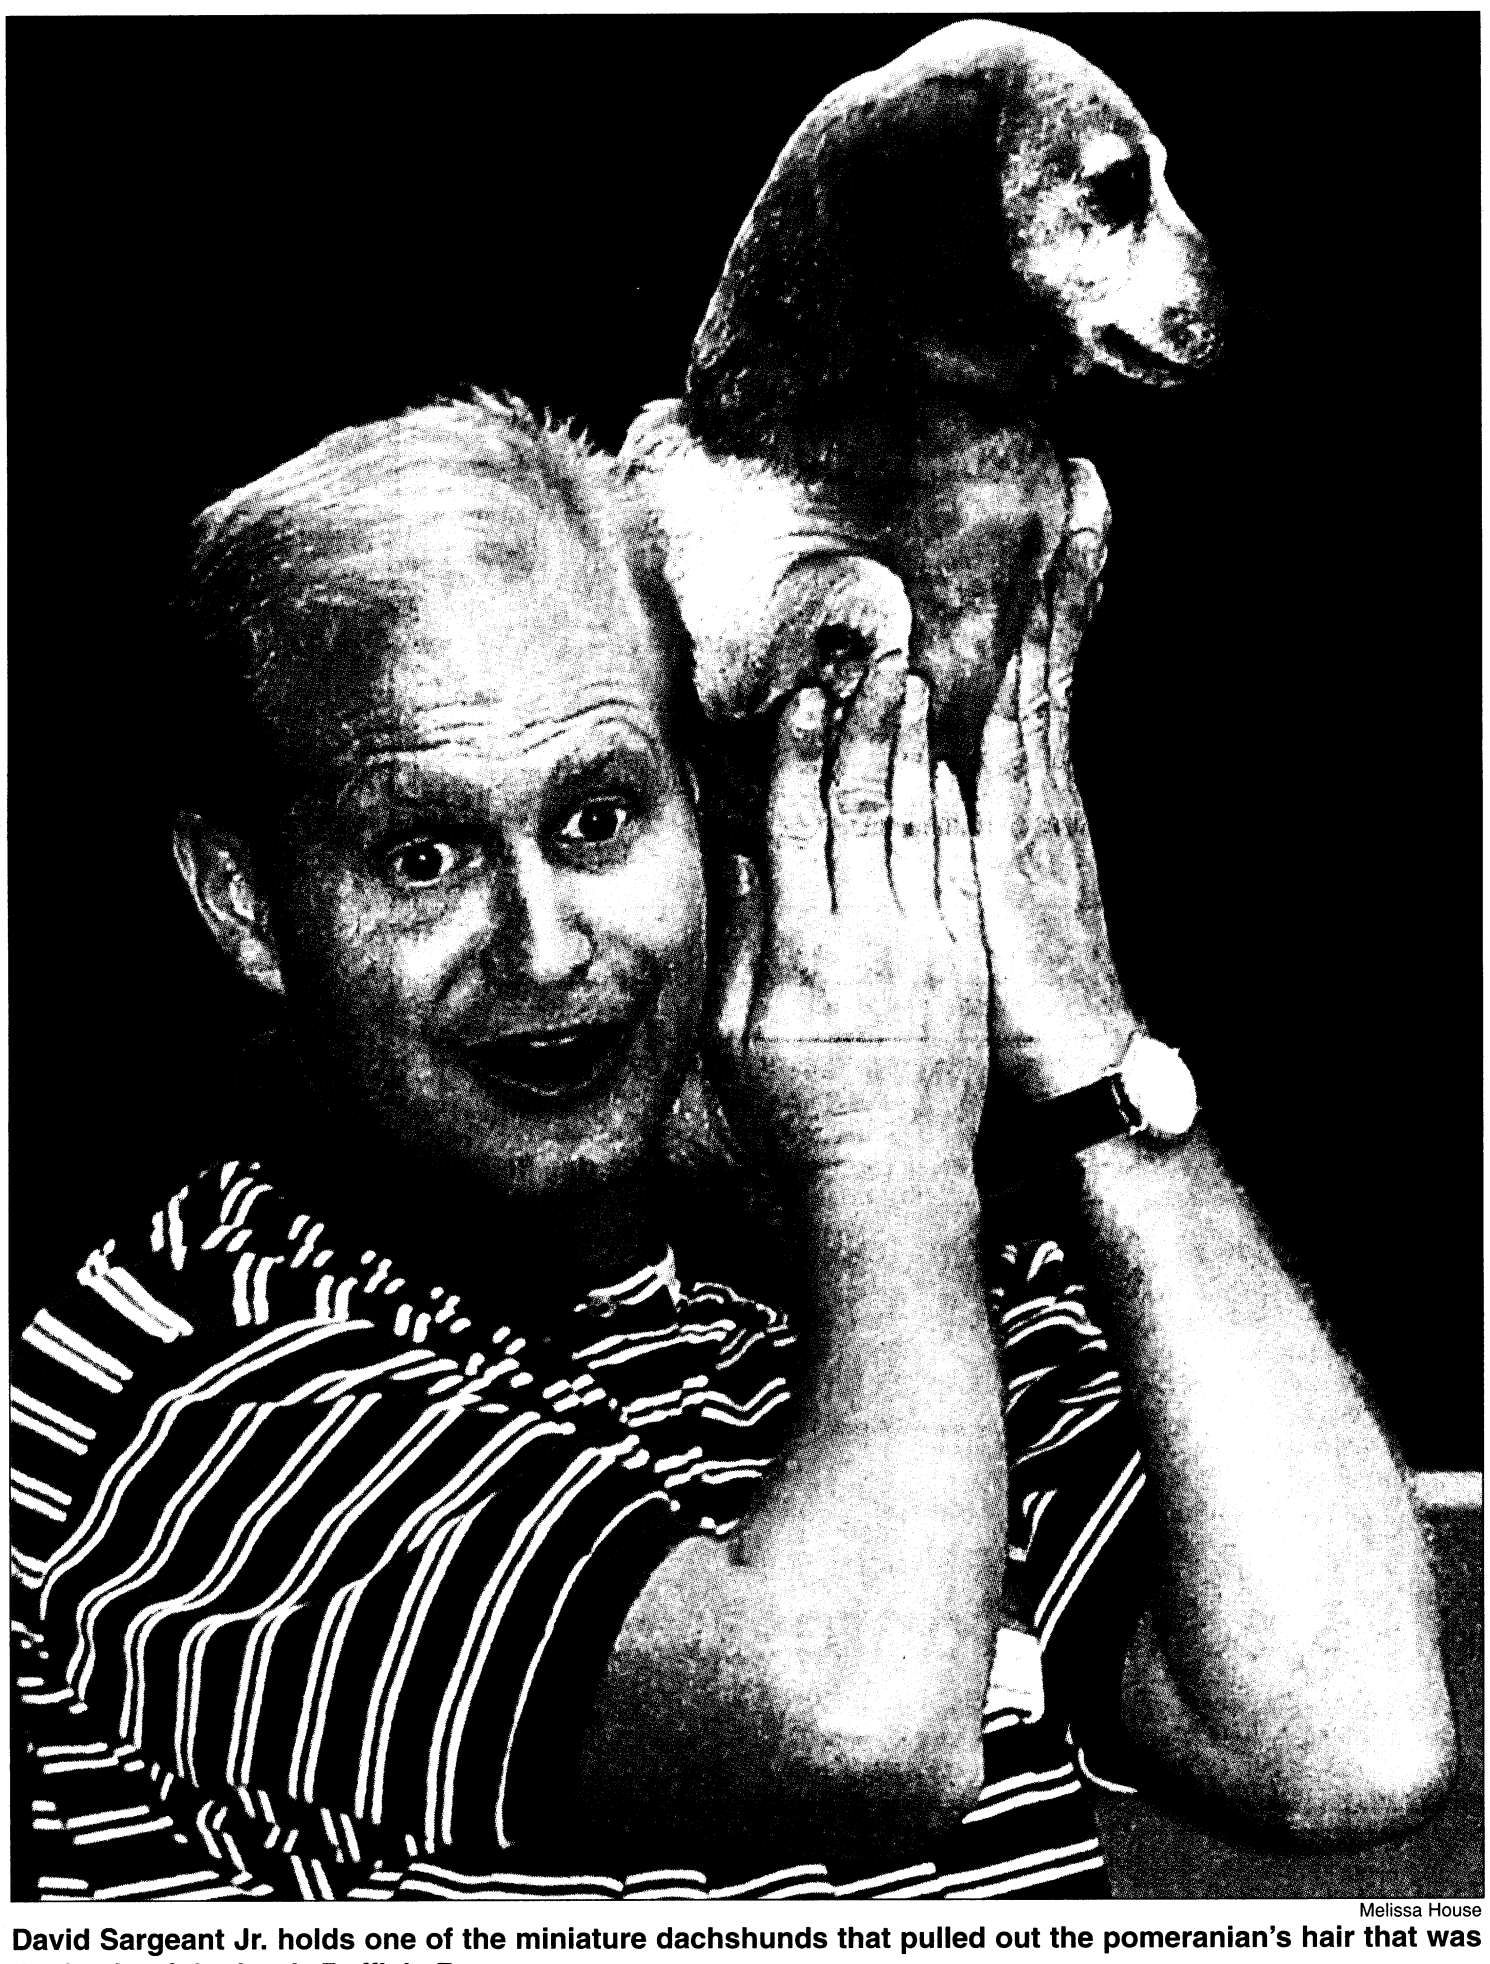
There will be a 20-mile bicycle ride Oct. 19. The Lumpkin to Louvale ride is in conjunction with the 30th annual Lumpkin Fair on the Square. The course is set on the rolling hills of Highway 27's bike lane.

"The lane recently opened and is completely paved, and it has a really nice rural setting with rolling hills," said Gail Lynch, event coordinator.

The turn around point is set at the site of three historical churches. Free tours of the churches will be offered.

"The ride will be part of a great family weekend," said Woodward, ride co-coordinator. "It will also give people a chance to see the rural heritage of the surrounding small towns that many people at Fort Benning usually don't get a chance to see."



Registration is $10 for 13 years and older and free for children 12 and younger. Registration starts at 8 a.m., and the ride starts at 9. T-shirts will be provided as part of registration.

The Fair on the Square is an arts and crafts fair put on by the Stewart County Historical Commission. The parade will begin at 11:30 a.m. There will also be food, live music, tours of a historic inn and children's activities.

The registration and starting point will be just off the square in front of Michelle's Restaurant on Main Street.

For registration information, call 327-9015 or e-mail glynch@knology.net.

Vera and Mary were the picture of innocence at Dexter Elementary School Oct. 4. No one in the audience would have guessed that the girls with puppy-dog brown eyes and perfect manners were actually big bullies.

And the Dexter kids loved them for it.

Vera, Mary and their friend Buffie made an appearance at Dexter as part of the Fort Benning Reads! program. The dogs — yes, dogs — are characters in a series of children's books by author David Sargeant Jr.

Sargeant read Buffie's Revenge to the children before introducing them to the characters. In the book, Vera and Mary, both miniature dachshunds, are jealous of Pomeranian Buffie's beautiful fluffy hair, so they pull some of her hair out. Buffie gets her revenge by being nice to the other dogs and by growing new hair even more beautiful than before.

A collective gasp of surprise went through the crowd of children and adults alike as Sargeant explained that the book was based on real events. He showed photographs of Vera caught in the act of holding Buffie down and pulling her hair out while Mary watched. Sargeant reassured everyone that it doesn't hurt her when it happens.

"Even though you can use real characters and events when you write," he told the children, "don't stop using your imaginations."

Army launches Web-based science competition

Contest open to all middle schoolers

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — If America's middle schoolers accept the Army's challenge to compete in its new Web-based science, math and technology competition, the nation's future pool of scientists, mathematicians and engineers should swell.

"Accept the challenge" is the tagline for eCybermission. Senior Army leaders launched the education initiative at Edgar Allen Poe Middle School in Annandale, Va., Oct. 1.

"In America, so many of the privileges and comforts we enjoy were made possible through advances in math, science, engineering, and in the technologies they enable," Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki said. "From the automobile to the space shuttle, from the telegraph to the Internet, our progress has been marked by leadership and innovation in the disciplines of math, science and engineering. Incredibly, however, there seems to be decreasing interest in these subjects."

Shinseki cited statistics of a shrinking science and technology workforce — 45 percent of that labor pool is more than 45 years old, 19 percent is currently eligible for retirement and 35 percent will be eligible for retirement within the next five years. eCybermission is about reversing that trend, he said.

The Army began working on the eCybermission concept about a year and a half ago when Shinseki told his staff he wanted the Army to support the president's push to stimulate math, science and technology interest among American youth, said Suzanne Carlton, a special assistant to the chief. He also told us he wanted to give something back to the communities that give the young men and women who man the Army's formations, she said.

"This competition is not your standard, typical science fair competition that is geared for just the best and the brightest students," Carlton said. "It is inclusive of a broad range of students, whether they makes As or Cs or whatever their background is. It is about showing that science, math and technology are a part of their daily lives and stimulating their interest to learn more about those areas."

The Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Acquisitions, Logistics and Technology and Army contractor Booz-Allen & Hamilton developed and implemented the eCybermission concept.

Teams of three to four seventh- or eighth-graders register online at www.ecybermission and then select a project that impacts their local community from the categories of Health and Safety, Arts and Entertainment, Sports and Recreation, or the Environment. eCybermission allows teams to collaborate online through the use of a secure instant messaging system. Volunteer CyberGuides provide online assistance by providing guidance on where to find research material online, answering questions and keeping the students on target.

The Army conducted a beta test of the program last spring. Forty-one teams representing seven school districts participated.

The winning project of that test was

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

Recognize signs of abuse

Agency helps families deal with issues

Family Advocacy Program

Families are supposed to take care of each other and protect one another from harm.

But what if the harm is within the family?

When someone you love:

- Puts you down;
- Calls you names;
- Humiliates you;
- Exposes you to hate crimes, racism and immigration problems;
- Threatens to hurt or does something to hurt you;
- Hurts your pets;
- Destroys the things that are important to you;
- Keeps you away from friends and family;
- Controls what you do, who you see and talk to, what you read, where you go, limits your outside involvement or uses jealousy to explain actions;
- Intimidates you with fists through walls, thrown chairs or broken doors;
- Slaps, hits, pushes, holds you down, chokes, pulls your hair or uses a weapon on you; or
- Forces you to have sex;

they are not loving you — they are controlling and abusing you.

Some people believe that they have the right to control the person they love with emotional abuse, threats, intimidation and physical and sexual force.

One way to hold on to that control is to keep it a secret within the family. This silence is more likely to be kept if you do not trust anyone to understand your situation or if you fear the outside world is just as harmful as what happens at home.

If this happens to you, find someone you can trust.

The abuse is not your fault and you do not have to keep it a secret. A strong person does not always have to stand alone. Break the silence. Tell someone you trust.

For more information, call Theresa Sanchez, Family Advocacy Victim advocate, Army Community Service, at 545-7517.

Experts help deal with risks

Leaving violent partner not always easy for abused

Family Advocacy Program

Why do battered women feel trapped? Simply, because they often are trapped. However, there are many obstacles to achieving safety or to ending a relationship with a violent partner, and the choices women confront are not risk-free.

Risks of seeking help or deciding to leave:

Physical violence and psychological harm

- Risk of escalated threats and physical violence, resulting in harm to victim, children, friends or family
- Risk that batterer will follow through on suicide threats and harm himself
- Risk of continued harassment, stalking and verbal and emotional attacks, especially if batterer has ongoing contact (such as during court-ordered visitation)
- Risk of serious physical harm and or death.

Children

- Continued risk to children of emotional and physical harm; possibility of increased risks to children if batterer has unsupervised visitation
- Risk of losing children by parental kidnapping or as the result of a legal custody decision
- Risk of negative impact on children as a result of "breaking up the family"

Financial

- Risk of reduced standard of living — possible loss of home, possessions, neighborhood
- Risk of losing income or job — may lose partner's income, may have to quit a job in order to relocate or to fulfill the responsibilities of single parenthood, may be prevented from working because of threats and harassment.

Relationship

- Risk of losing partner, losing the relationship
- Risk of losing help with children, transportation, household
- For elderly women or women with disabilities, risk of losing caretaker.

Responses from friends, family members and helping professionals

- Risk of not being believed or taken seriously, being blamed, being pressured to do something she's not ready or able to do
- Risk of being judged as a bad wife, partner or mother
- Risk of being pressured to maintain the relationship based on religious and or cultural beliefs or because the children "need a father"
- Risk that actions of "helpers" may increase danger

Under the best of circumstances, it is difficult to end a relationship with an intimate partner. Love, family, shared memories and a sense of commitment are bonds that are hard to break. Battered women face the additional risks of physical, emotional and psychological harm.

In addition, many battered women want the violence to stop, but they don't want the relationship to end.

Seeking help, getting an order of protection or deciding to leave only makes sense to a woman when, on balance, it reduces the overall risks that she and her children have to deal with.

There are risks attached to every decision a battered woman makes.

Safety planning is the process of evaluating the risks and benefits of different options and identifying ways to reduce the risks.

native, has a connection with Fort Benning. His father was stationed here in the early 1960s.

"I was supposed to be born here on post," Sargeant said. But doctors told his parents that he would be born early and probably not survive, so his father took his mother home to Fayetteville, Ark., to be with family.

"My dad was Sergeant Sargeant (at the time)."

"I received a call from Mr. Sargeant's representative asking if we would like to have him visit," said Roger Ingram, media center specialist at Dexter. "It played right into our program, as another way to promote reading. Once we got permission, we got excited as everything fell into place."

Children from Chris Holcomb's third-grade class read all of his books, and then appeared with Sargeant on Dexter's Friday morning school TV show.

"Buffie's Revenge was my favorite book," Brandi Kilgore said.

Sargeant and his father have written a series of 20 children's books together. His mother, Pat, a retired fourth-grade teacher, has also written several books.

Sargeant credits his mother with starting his writing career.

"Vera and Mary are my dogs," he said. "They have been pulling Buffie's hair out ever since my mother brought her into the family.

"I wrote the book as a joke. I was just teasing my mom."

His mother sent the book to someone to read, and then the next thing Sargeant knew, he had a contract to write more. He's been writing now for seven years and will add six new dog adventures next year.

"The books are easy to write," he said, "because the dogs are always doing something. The hardest part is picking the words to rhyme."

Sargeant estimates that he visits at least 300 schools every year and a number of public libraries in the summertime.

"I have fun," he said. "I can't do anything else and have as much fun. I get to play with kids and dogs all day."

about building safer swimming pools through the use of polyethylene tiles inside pools to avoid abrasions, polyvinyl around pools to soak up water and avoid slippery surfaces, and underwater cameras to allow lifeguards to see anyone who might be having problems under the surface.

Registration for this year's competition opened Oct. 1 and runs through Nov. 28. Judging will occur in May.

Project scores will be determined based upon four weighted categories: application of science, math and technology — 40 percent; innovation, originality and creativity — 20 percent; benefit to the community — 20 percent; and collaboration and communication — 20 percent.

The competition is open to seventh- and eighth-graders in public and private schools, those being home schooled, and from overseas Department of Defense schools.

Prizes range from a $2,000 savings bond per team member for category winners to a $5,000 savings bond per team member of the national winner. Regional team members get a $3,000 savings bond each.

Those not interested in competing in an online math, science and technology competition can still have fun with eCybermission's Mission Max section, Carlton said.

Mission Max is a Web-based interactive game that has players explore a range of planets. As players explore, they are exposed to different problems that require the use of math, science or technology to solve.

ABDOMINAL TRAINING

Therapist offers crunch advice

Capt. Jason Silvernail
Martin Army Comunity Hospital

Crunches. Sit-ups. The dreaded flutter kick. If thoughts of these exercises for your abdominal muscles do not excite you, you are not alone. However, do not despair, this article is for you.

One of the Army's core tenets is "Train as you fight." Let us apply this to the exercises we do to train our abdominal muscles. Have you ever done a sit-up with someone holding your ankles while you were in the field? How about when you were playing sports? Or just during daily life? You probably cannot think of one time you used your abdominal muscles like that. Why is that?

The most important job your abdominal muscles do is to stabilize your spine, that is, to keep it still when there is pressure, or force on it.

Creating movement, such as doing a sit-up or crunch, is merely a secondary function. For example, your abdominals stabilize your spine when you lift something heavy. This stabilizing effect is what the abdominals do best, yet crunches and sit-ups do not improve this ability.

Therefore, the question remains: How can we use our abdominals this way?

Let's do an experiment. Sit straight in your chair as you read this. Tighten your abdominals and push out against your waistline, as if you were blowing out candles. You should feel your stomach push out.

This is the wrong way to engage your stabilizing muscles.

Now, pull your abdominals straight in as if you were sucking your stomach backward. Do not hold your breath! You should feel your stomach pull inwards.

This is the correct way to activate your deep abdominal muscles that stabilize your spine.

Now you just need to activate your muscles like this when you do your abdominal workouts. Try doing that with your crunches!

Alternatively, try the exercise pictured above, it helps build your ability to stabilize.

Make sure you pull your stomach in, and you should really "feel the burn" when your arm and leg are straight out.

Hold for 5 seconds.

Wilson's Partners in Education kick off year

Partnership program plans projects

Wilson Elementary School

As Wilson Elementary School and the Basic Combat Training Brigade enter their third year together in the Partners in Education Program, the partnership promises to be stronger than ever.

Soldiers from BCTB have committed much time and effort to a variety of activities at Wilson School. From serving as class mentors, designing a team development course to be constructed on the school campus and helping develop students' self-esteem, soldiers from BCTB are helping to enrich the lives of Wilson students, school officials said.

At the PIE Kickoff Celebration, Oct. 2, members of the brigade pledged their support to the school and its programs.

Brigade leaders Col. Tom Cole and Command Sgt. Maj. Doug Greenway were on hand to sign the Partnership Pledge. Helen Johnson, chairperson for the Partners in Education Board for the Columbus and Fort Benning area, said the award-winning Wilson-BCTB partnership was a model for other schools in the area to follow.

Many activities are planned between the school and brigade for school year 2002-2003. BCTB plans an "Incredibly Terrific Kid Day" for Wilson students Nov. 21.

Brigade members will also be on hand that day to receive the commemorative video on patriotism that students are producing during the month of October.

Once again, the partnership will sponsor the PAL program. PAL is an acronym for Partners and Adopted Learners. During the course of the school year, each class will be mentored by a drill sergeant from BCTB.

Another major project for the year is the completion and dedication of the Team Development Course. Developed with the help of soldiers from BCTB, and built by parent volunteer Staff Sgt. Chris Binion, the course will help develop leadership skills in the Wilson student body.

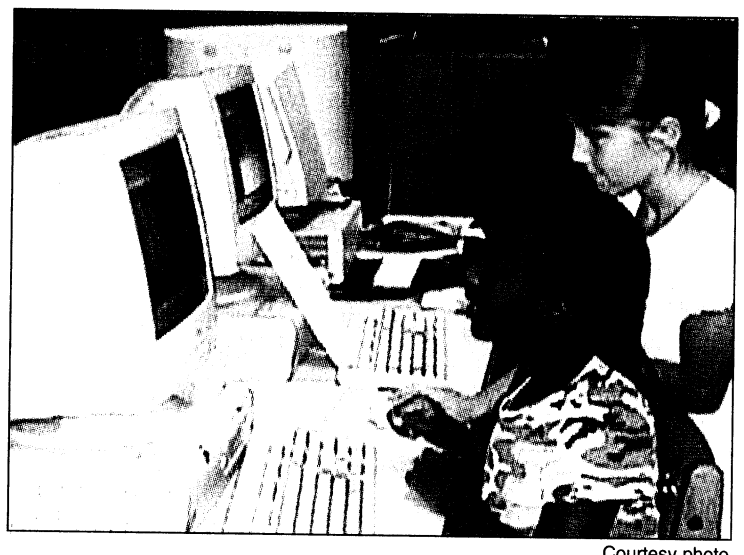
Both the students and brigade members look forward to a busy, productive year.

Students investigate history

Internet offers online quest opportunities

Wilson Elementary School

How were the great pyramids of Egypt built?



Do black holes exist?

Who really shot President John F. Kennedy?

These and other questions have been the topic of research for Wilson School gifted and enrichment students for the past few weeks. Students became super sleuths as they selected a phenomenon or mysterious event. Using the research process, their task was to either prove or disprove the theories surrounding the mystery.

During the Unsolved Mysteries project, the students evaluated the reliability of sources of information found on the Internet and in reference books. The facts and opinions of the mysteries were examined, and students used critical thinking skills to form their own reasoned judgments about the mysteries.

Topics included the Salem Witch Trials, Bigfoot, UFOs, The Lost Continent of Atlantis, Stonehenge and many more. As students completed their research, they created PowerPoint presentations to share with their fellow classmates. Audience participants were invited to draw their own conclusions to the mysteries based on the information presented in the slide shows.

Alexis Harris and Teresa Brunnelson use the Internet for research.

Gifted-education teacher Margaret Koger believes that having students look critically at Web sites and other reference materials provides a valuable tool for researching.

"The Internet is a great source for information, but students have to be able to differentiate between legitimate Web sites that contain factual information and those that may contain erroneous information or that are purely fiction."

"Anyone can make a Web site," said fifth-grader Laura Brunnelson. "Just because something is on the Internet doesn't make it true. Doing this project helped me to figure out which Web sites are good for research and which ones are not."

The "Unsolved Mysteries" project will be beneficial as the students embark on their next venture. Through Classroom Connect, a Web-based learning program, the students will participate in Columbus Quest. This project will follow Christopher Columbus' sea route through the Bahamas to Cuba. Through online communication, the students will help a team of scientists as they try to solve one of the great mysteries in the history of exploration: Where did Columbus first set foot in the New World?

WILSON READS!

TV program features new book

Wilson Elementary School

The Fort Benning Reads kickoff signaled the beginning of an exciting reading program for Wilson students. After their partners in education, the Basic Combat Training Brigade, delivered America: A Patriotic Primer to each classroom, students and teachers began to explore this exciting book. The vivid drawings immediately stole everyone's attention, and readings from the book were heard throughout the school:

"A is for America, the land that we love.

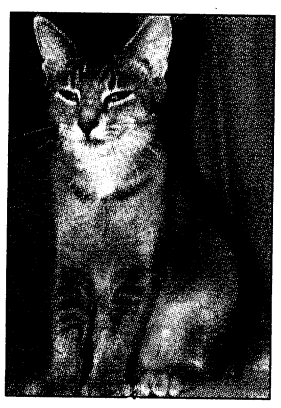
"E is for Equality.

"Q is for America's quest for the new, the far, and the very best."

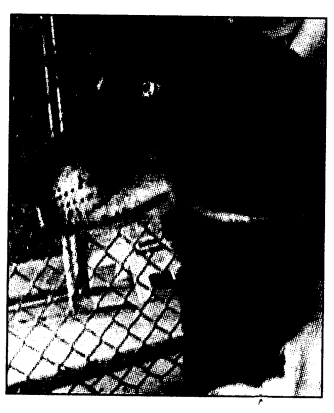
Activities have been planned for the coming school year to reinforce the concepts presented in the book.

On the daily Good Morning, Wildcats TV program, a page from the book will be presented on the first of each week, and information about that idea will be spotlighted each day following.

For example, following the "A is for America" broadcast, students learned about symbols of our nation, including the flag, the Statue of Liberty and the bald eagle.



In addition, students will take a field trip to the Moving Vietnam Wall Oct. 11 to reinforce the concept that "V is for the valor shown by those who've kept us free."



Students also plan to make a video presentation about their heroes — veterans and active-duty soldiers who exemplify American ideals and have so much to teach us all about patriotism.

Reading celebrations, author visits, writing opportunities, and lots of creative exploration are on the agenda for the remainder of the school year as students and teachers alike continue to take part in all that this exciting book has to offer.

For more information about this project, visit the Fort Benning Reads Web site at http://www.benning.army.mil/library/ and click on "Fort Benning Reads."

Pause to reflect on key dates in history

Remembrance brings out best in us

Chaplain (Maj.) John Molina
WHINSEC

Last month our nation and others throughout the world paused to observe the Sept. 11 anniversary of the terrorist attacks on our country.

Taking time to remember important dates or something meaningful brings out the best in us.

When we look at history, with its myriad events and personalities, we seem to awaken an important part of us.

We are human beings with an unbelievable track record.

Our joys, heroic acts, fears, patriotism, dreams, faith or even disappointments all join to simultaneously point us to the past, the present and future … creating a reflector for us to see our own image on the mirror of time.

Here we can, at leisure, contemplate what we have been and done, what we are today, and what we can aspire to be.

Sharing and learning from our human experience activates the powers of mind and spirit which lie dormant within us.

On a recent trip to Bolivia in South America, I traveled to the world's highest navigable lake, Lake Titicaca. This large and extremely beautiful body of water — at 12,507 feet above sea level — showed me something I did not expect.

On a big sign, by the side of a road, in a small Bolivian navy base, there in Spanish, were the words once spoken by John F. Kennedy: "Don't ask what your country can do for you, but what you can do for your country."

REFLECTIONS

I was pleasantly surprised by the fact someone had taken time to remember and also to remind me of such inspiring and courageous words.

Because I lived in Cuba during the 1962 Cuban missile crisis, which brought the entire world to the brink of a major war, Kennedy's words hold a lot of meaning and memories for me.

From Havana Harbor, I had watched the U.S. destroyers blocking any further introduction of nuclear weapons into Cuba by the Russians. I also knew that it was President Kennedy who had made the brave and risky decisions to stand up for freedom and protect United States citizens from the direct threat of nuclear weapons.

There, in a young boy's mind and heart, were planted the seeds that today inspire and motivate me to proudly serve in the armed forces of the United States.

October is a month filled with significance and meaning. I challenge you to take time to see what is being celebrated, observed or commemorated this month.

Or should I say, what is it that has happened during October throughout the ages that is worth us remembering?

Study the vision of Christopher Columbus or talk with a Jewish person about Shemini Atzeret, which literally means "the assembly of the eighth (day)" or the day after the seventh day of Sukkot (a festival commemorating the wandering in the desert and the final harvest).

Rabbinic literature explains the holiday of Shemini Atzeret this way: God is like a host, who invites us as visitors for a limited time, but when the time comes for us to leave, he has enjoyed himself so much that he asks us to stay another day. In Israel, Shemini Atzeret is also the holiday of Simkhat Torah.

Outside of Israel, where extra days of holidays are held, only the second day of Shemini Atzeret is Simkhat Torah.

Simchat Torah takes place a few days after the Feast of Tabernacles or Sukkot, in October, and is a thanksgiving day for the Torah given to Moses, a feast of joy.

You can also meet Theresa of Avila, Spain (1515 – 1582), whose inspired teaching can still awaken in us a longing for true holiness.

The church calendar offers us every month the opportunity to learn from individuals who have made our world a better place.

These are the stories about people of faith and courage, of vision and character.

Revelations can teach togetherness

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

You do not need to endure an unhappy marriage. Couples can rekindle their passion and love for each other through a three-step process based on Revelation 2:4-5.

First, remember. Recall the way your relationship used to be. Recall what you did to start the relationship, and what you did to enhance it.

Second, repent. Ask God and your partner to forgive you for doing those things that sabotaged the relationship and for failing to do those things you should have done to enhance the relationship.

Koop

Decide together to turn things around. Commit yourselves to doing the things that will improve your marriage.

Third, renew. Do the kind of things that you did when you were first in love. Acts of love will produce feelings of love. If you wait until you feel loving to do loving deeds, your relationship will continue to grow cold and distant.

Become your mate's heart-friend and soul mate. Listen to each other. Validate and encourage each other. Share your goals and dreams. Have fun together. Work to handle conflict better. Develop a spiritual walk together.

You can choose to be committed to your spouse. Your love can be for a lifetime.

Do your best to make the relationship work well. Don't focus on what your partner needs to do, but focus on what you need to do. Take responsibility for your part in the relationship. You can keep it strong and vibrant.

Would you like to make your marriage better? Free counseling and support are available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760, or e-mail koopr@benning.army.mil.

Comanches swipe Free Agents, 12-0

Sgt. William A. Graves

Comanche Robert Scott of 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, avoids Free Agent Jeffery Burdin and turns up field during the Comanches' 12-0 victory.

Ball control, intense defense lead to victory

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Lotan Jones is a natural Comanche — a warrior with killer instinct. The 598th Maintenance Company soldier swiped three interceptions during his team's intramural football victory over the Free Agents Oct. 3 at Engineer Field.

"I stay low and make the quarterback think the receiver is open, but he's not," Jones said. "It's all about timing."

After encroachment penalties and interceptions kept both teams between the 20s during the first half, the 3-0 Comanches used a ball control offense in the second half to score the game's only 12 points and defeat the soldiers from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"It started off a little rough, but once we got the other team thinking we were going for the deep ball, we started to establish the running game and short passes," Ron Lawson, Comanches' coach.

Comanche quarterback Alfred Thompson hooked up with tight end Armond Bonseigneur on a short pass in the flat for a 20-yard touchdown to open the scoring.

Later as Jones seemed to make more catches than all the Free Agents combined, the Comanches went deep into Lawson's relatively complex playbook.

Thompson faked a handoff to Robert Scott and flipped the ball to wide receiver Jay Brumfield at the Free Agent 15 yard line on a reverse, as Lamar Williams cut to the corner of the end zone to catch Brumfield's touchdown toss.

"Coach has some good plays up his sleeve," Thompson said. "We were shaky learning his schemes at first, but we're starting to come together. We had been working (on the reverse), and we thought that we had nothing to lose with 30 seconds to go in the game. We gave it shot, and it paid off."

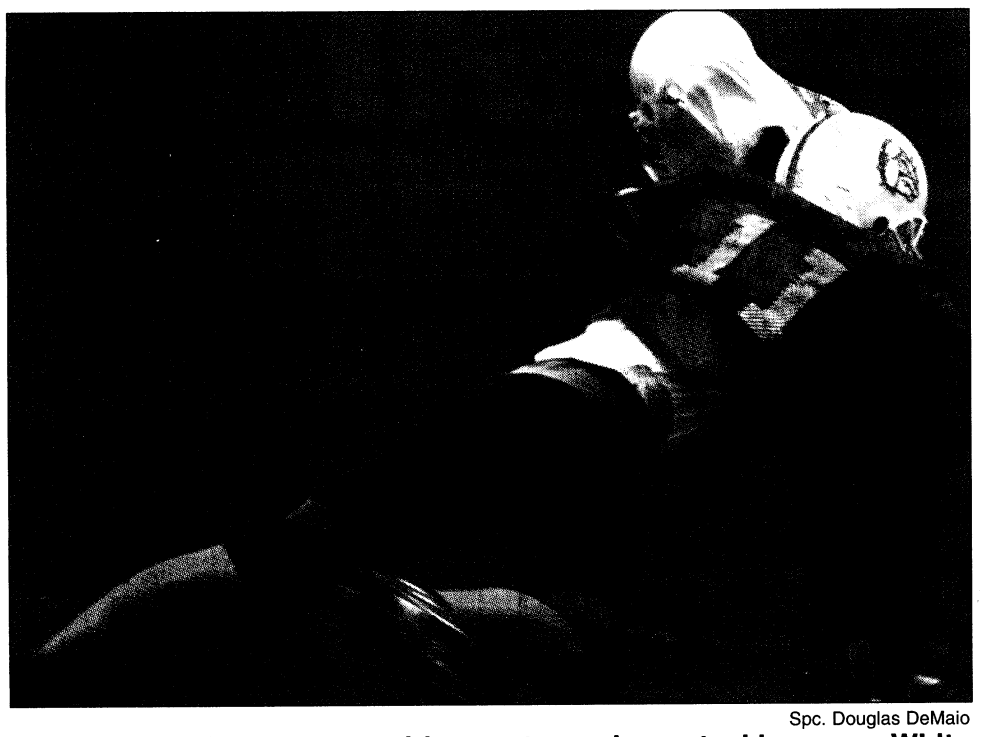
The quarterback said he felt good about the game.

"Our defense was key," Thompson said. "They gave us a short field to work with so we didn't have to march the length of the field.

"We need to execute a little better on offense. Our timing on deep passes has to improve. But after the first touchdown, we hit them with short passes and ran the clock down."

The Comanches' hard work delighted their coach.

"I feel real confident (about the rest of the season)," Lawson said. "We lost a couple players to school and a lot of the guys are rusty, but as we go through the season, we'll perfect our passing game.



"We haven't been really challenged yet. We've shown we have a stellar defense, but our offense has to get better."

As the Comanches strive for that objective, other teams may want to take note of defensive philosophy.

"Deeper than the deepest man," Lawson said. "If a team is going to beat us, they are going to have to beat us down low."

With Jones' play and interceptions at the free safety position, that may not happen much this season.

Defense looks like crash-derby competition

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

In a rematch of an 11- to 13-year-old Youth Services football game Sept. 21, the Red Bulldogs defeated the White Bulldogs, 26-0, Saturday on Blue Field.

"They did better than the last time they played us," said Red Dog defensive lineman Daniel Cardiel. "They shut us down a little and had an interception."

However, in the second, the air and ground assault of the Red Bulldogs ripped Whites' defense apart like a school of piranhas eating lunch.

"We had some good passes and a few long runs," said Red Dog Matt Melhado.

In the forth quarter, Red Bulldogs' Andrew Rodriquez caught Eric Hare's 15-yard pass and ran 30 yards for a touchdown. Brandon Shannon extended the lead with an extra point. The Red Dogs led, 19-0.

Yet Shannon was not finished. On defense, he delivered a ball-jarring blow to the quarterback and recovered the fumble.

"It felt good to hit the quarterback," Shannon said. "All the fumbles I made got me down, and the hit gave me a lift."

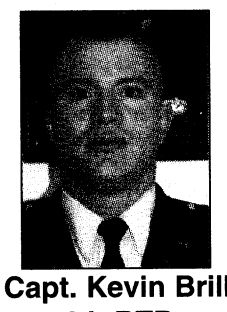
Shannon fumbled the ball twice in the first half, but he made up for it in the second half with the fumble recovery that led to an Anthony Jones' touchdown.

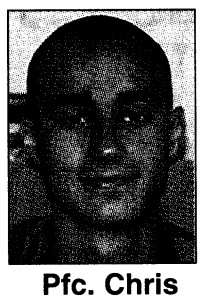
"White stepped up and played hard," said Coach Dan Cardiel. "We had to adjust; we had too many turnovers in the first half.

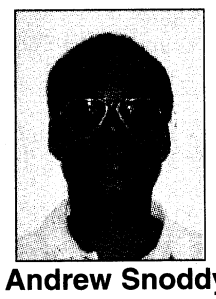
"Once we held on to the ball, we moved down the field."

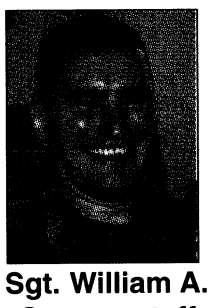
White's offense began the game by moving the ball down the field, but the Red Bulls' defense stopped the White Bulldogs on offense.

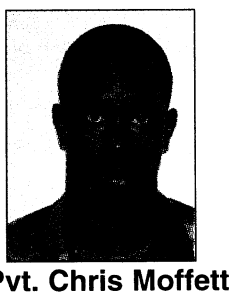
"Our defense was shutting them down," Daniel said.







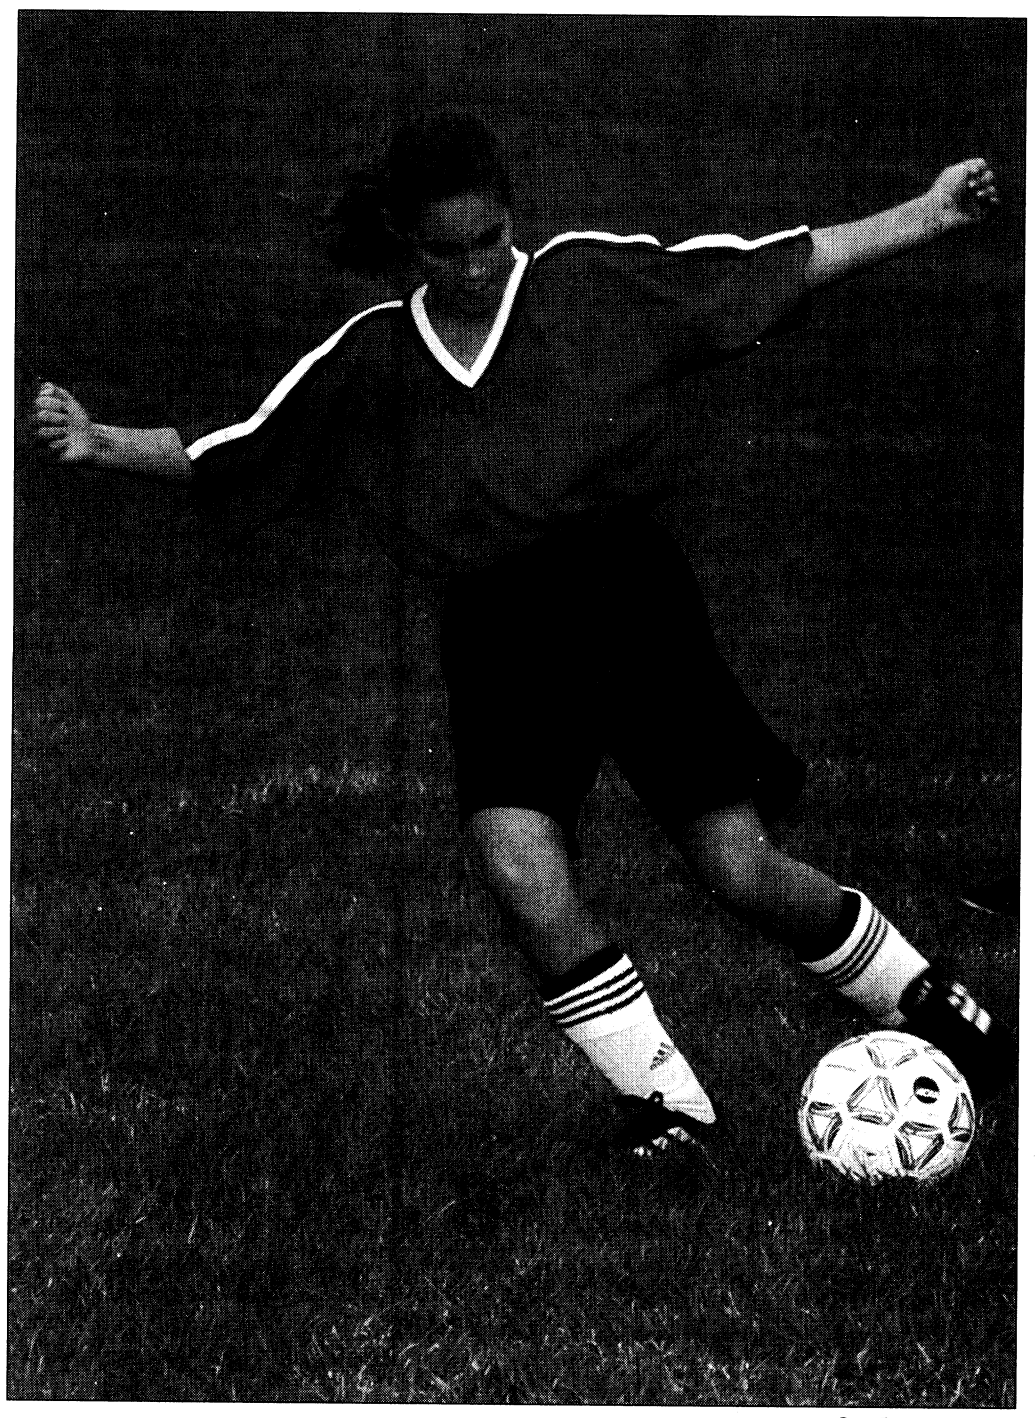




Time and time again, the Red Dogs' defenders looked like they were having a crash-derby competition.

Bodies flew everywhere. The Red Dogs stopped the opposition in their tracks.

Hare started the scoring spree by squirming his way into the endzone on a quarterback sneak. Leading 6-0, the Red Bulldogs never looked back.



"The win felt good," Shannon said. "We came back in the second half and played like we should."

UK team prepares for competition

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs

Members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle and Service Pistol Teams provided rifle and pistol instruction and assistance to 22 members of the British Army Combat Shooting Team Sept. 28-30 at Easley and Phillips ranges.

The 10 pistol and 12 rifle shooters from the United Kingdom came to Fort Benning to train for the Armed Forces Skill at Arms Meeting, an international combat-style shooting competition being held at Camp Robinson, Ark., Saturday through Thursday.

"We're training here to adjust to the climate and so we can train on a similar range as used in the AFSAM competition," said Lt. Col. Richard T. Hoole, of England who is the secretary of the British Army Rifle Association. "I had been to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit before and enjoyed training here."

"It's a world-renowned facility, and the instructors definitely know what they're talking about," said Cpl. Robert Doak, a pistol shooter from Northern Ireland. "This facility is to die for; we have nothing as nice or comprehensive as this."

USAMU Service Pistol shooters Staff Sgt. Gregory S. Wilson and Staff Sgt. Nathaniel S.D. Seltenreich provided the training to the British Pistol Team, which included techniques on barricade shooting, effects of lighting on iron sights and familiarization with the AFSAM course of fire and range commands.

"Anytime I can train with somebody else, especially good shooters like the British Team, I always learn something from it," Wilson said.

USAMU Service Rifle shooters assisted the British Rifle Team, which included soldiers from Nepal, with coaching and running the range.

"The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has been superb to us," said Lt. Col. David J. Elsam of the British Rifle Team. "We always enjoy training here."

The team was a pleasure to work with, Wilson said.

The golfers playing in the Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens in Pine Mountain, Ga., are skillful golfers, who will provide excellent sports entertainment while competing for part of the $3.7 million purse.

members to attend this event.

Callaway Gardens and the PGA even added some extra incentives for soldiers to go. It's free! That's right. There will be free admission Oct. 25-27 for all military members, with valid identification, and their families. Chances like this one don't come around too often.

The tournament is about 60 minutes from Fort Benning, and it's an opportunity to see some of the best golfers in the world.

Sure there will be other opportunities to attend a PGA event in the future, but nothing is certain, and depending on where a soldier is stationed, he may or may not have a chance to attend.

Duty on the island of Oahu gives soldiers a chance to see the Mercedes Championship in Kapalua, Hawaii, but that requires a trip to Maui with a 15-minute flight and 45-minute drive.

The opportunity is available, but I would rather spend a day in Maui doing something else.

Another opportunity for soldiers stationed at Fort Carson, Colo., is to see The International in Castle Rock, Colo. The drive is less than an hour, but who knows if it's free for soldiers. Make the right choice and check out the Buick Challenge. Maybe Tiger Woods will show.

I found buried treasure in my attic.

More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you some Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. You were looking for old records when you found an unexpected treasure . . . those old Series E Savings Bonds. And even though your old bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value. So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US-BOND or write to Savings Bonds, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. Old Savings Bonds. They're a treasure worth digging for.

Creating a New Century of Savings U.S. SAVINGS BONDS

Do you have old Savings Bonds? Check out the Savings Bond Calculator at www.savingsbonds.gov to discover their value.

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered "yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you could be approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self-employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you could qualify for". Credit manager Jimmy Peters or his assistant, Brian Hebebrand can be reached at toll free 1-888-719-8888 Open 7 days a week.

Tank killer helps infantry

System first to use kinetic energy

Things are looking good for the Army's light infantry soldiers. On Tuesday, the first Line-of-Sight Antitank weapon system rolled off the assembly line in Dallas, Texas. The vehicle will be part of the rollout of new equipment at the Association of the United States Army's national convention this month.

The LOSAT, billed as the "sledgehammer solution for the anti-armor battle" was developed by Lockheed Martin to meet the needs of light infantry units

"We spent about a year writing the requirements for this system for the infantry," said Maj. Brad McDonald, who has been working on the LOSAT project for the past three years. "Then we identify the requirements and the program manager provides the materiel solution in order to builds what we need to meet the identified threat." The LOSAT is one of nearly 400 programs being developed at Fort Benning.

At first glance, the LOSAT system looks very similar to the standard Humvee. The four ready-to-fire missiles are housed on the top of the Humvee. The real difference is in the kinetic energy missile whose development was originally a joint Army and Air Force program in the early 1980s.

"We were trying to capture the shock power of kinetic energy for warfighting," said Sanford Parr, senior technical advisor.

The KEM uses kinetic energy, the energy associated with motion, instead of chemical energy produced by explosive warheads like those found on the new Javelin. The missile relies on hypervelocity speed of 5,000 feet-per-second to destroy targets.

On a video of the LOSAT firing on tanks at a target range, there appeared to be a small explosion as the missile hit the target. Not so, McDonald said.

Deaths spark concern

Common sense key to families getting benefits

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

With Fort Benning having lost a few of its own recently, some may wonder what happens to the soldiers' estates and families after they die.

"A line of duty investigation is conducted when a soldier dies on active duty from other than natural causes," said Tony Tempesta, chief of Legal Assistance at the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. "If the soldier's injury or death is determined to be 'not in the line of duty, due to own misconduct,' then some Veterans Administration benefits will be in jeopardy."

The benefits the VA pays depends on a case by case administrative decision, according to the VA Web site.

One benefit is Dependent Indemnity Compensation, a monthly, tax-free payment to the soldier's immediate family (surviving spouses who don't remarry with children under 18 years old, or 18-23, if students). It is not payable if a soldier dies while on active duty, for example, if there is "willful misconduct" on the part of the soldier, Tempesta said. What constitutes willful misconduct would be determined

Congress passes bill for chapel

Worship center to provide more features

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The only thing standing between Fort Benning building a new chapel is the president's signature.

The U.S. House of Representatives passed the Military Construction Conference Report (H.R. 5011) Oct. 10. Included is $6.5 million for a new chapel.

"We're looking forward to building the new chapel," said Cathie Wampler, director of religious education.

"We miss our old chapel, but we must look toward the future in the sense that the new chapel will allow us to have more religious programs and activities."

The proposed chapel will seat 400, but can be enlarged to a 600-seat capacity. There will be 12 classrooms for religious education programs.

"There are many groups that need a place to meet, and the new chapel will provide that for them," said Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe. "There will also be offices for the chaplains and chaplains' assistants."

On Jan. 12, the post's Catholic Chapel was destroyed by an electrical fire. By morning, the only thing left of the chapel was the charred front entrance.

The fire was caused by an electrical surge from a transformer across the street from the chapel.

White Elementary School is currently being used for religious education.

"It's what we call Sunday School in a box," O'Keeffe said.

"Right now we have to take down whatever we put up on Sundays in the classrooms," he said. "With the new classrooms being built with the chapel, we will be able to leave up scriptures, drawings and other religious things."

The Protestant Religious Program is from 9 to 10 a.m. Sunday and the Catholic Religious Program is from 10:30 to 11:30 a.m. Sunday.

"This (new chapel) will help the two major religions (Catholic and Protestant) have their religious education programs and their worship services at the same time," O'Keeffe said.

With the addition of the chapel, it will give the many support groups on Fort Benning a place to meet at during the week.

The chapel will allow the various religious activities to center around the two main chapels.

The location and the name of the chapel have not been decided.

However, the site of the new chapel will not be on the site of the old Catholic Chapel, O'Keeffe said. It will be closer to family housing.

"The goal of the new chapel is to make it a visible place for people to come for religious education, worship services and counseling," O'Keeffe said.

COMMENTARY

"So what do your children do?" a young mother asked just the other day.

What do they do?

They go to school, they play, they read, they eat — a lot — and they occasionally argue over the remote. They're kids. That's what kids do.

Of course I knew full well what she meant. In the virtual yearbook of life, what will come after their names? Soccer? Ballet? Gymnastics? Piano? Scouts? What are they doing with their lives?

This young mom (No, you don't know her, she lives far away. But I bet you know 10 just like her.) was lamenting her 3-year-old's busy schedule. She has swim lessons and playgroup twice a week and takes ballet and gymnastics at a cost of more than $500 for eight months of once-a-week 30-minute classes.

$500! To learn how to point her toes and tuck and tumble.

"It's crazy," she said, feigning exasperation.

"So, who's twisting your arm," I asked. OK, I didn't, but I wanted to. Because I've played this game before. Sorry to say, I probably initiated it more than once. The winner is the biggest whiner.

We taxi toddlers from tumbling class to tap dance to stroke our own egos and complain about it all the while.

This kind of megalomanic mentality was unheard of in our mothers' day. Moms weren't social activity directors and children weren't "scheduled," unless you were one of the lucky few who could get them to nap consistently.

For all our accomplishments as women, we've seemingly become slaves to the need to validate our existence by sheer busyness. We cook and clean and kick-box. We volunteer everywhere. (God help us if we have a J-O-B, too.) As if that isn't enough, we stretch our poor children so thin, they've no idea what to do with a spare minute. They've had so few.

Our mothers' cry was "You've come a long way, baby." Ours' might well be "Now get busy!"

What's that you say? Team sports teach important lessons in life like sportsmanship and competitiveness? Dance and gymnastics and aerobics and cheerleading build confidence?

Sure they do. But moderation is key. Too much of a good thing is not a good thing. Sportsmanship and confidence can also be learned while playing Monopoly or Checkers or Uncle Wiggly. Board games are less expensive, less stressful and you can still get dinner on the table and the kids in bed by nine.

Lest I sound self-righteous, I confess I've fallen prey to mommy peer pressure time and time again. I'm learning. And seeing myself, or at least my former self, in the eyes of a young mother hell-bent on becoming a maternal martyr, I've renewed my commitment to the simple life.

Admit it, you've done it yourself. And you swore you'd not let it happen again. You bought into the whole rug-rat race. If her children are taking karate and basket weaving and hang gliding lessons, shouldn't mine?

The answer is no.

Stop the insanity. Let kids be kids. Let them join a team or the Scouts or take piano lessons or whatever. The operative word here is "or."

Life is short. Let them play.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Chaplain's article evokes response

I am writing this letter in response to Chaplain Rick Brunson's remarks about choosing life. Quite frankly, I was very surprised and disappointed by what I read. My experience with military chaplains has always been positive. I find they are the most tolerant and accepting of the clergy I have ever known. I was taken aback by Chaplain Brunson's column, mostly because of its judgmental and suppositional context. I will explain:

He says of a soldier who committed suicide: "Unlike the other death, this one had no faith, dignity, honor or joy." He goes on to say: "Unfortunately, he did not bring an end to his pain." Both of these statements are perceived as judgmental, whether that was the intention or not. Chaplain Brunson did not know the soldier, save what others told him.

We have become so pre-occupied with the "other-worldliness" of eternal punishment and reward that we don't stop to think about what a great responsibility we have to each other as human beings.

This responsibility includes unconditional love and acceptance in all things as taught by Elhoim, Jesus, Mohammed, Buddha, Gandhi, Mother Theresa and other spiritually enlightened people of the ages. These types of judgmental comments are usually spoken from someone spiritually immature like myself, not a chaplain.

The other thing that confounded me was the supposition of a dying man's words. "Can you help me die," was the question from a man riddled with Lou Gehrig's disease. "After many years of pondering," the answer came as a litany about strengthening faith and his commitment to God and about wanting the end to come naturally. I really don't think that this is a reasonable opinion on this one.

Unless you have experienced pain so excruciating that no amount of drugs or prayer will help, I don't think you should put these words in a dying man's mouth. Maybe he was comfortable with his spirituality. Maybe he did not believe in cosmic ramifications to bringing nature's course to a quicker end.

We need to be careful in an age of technology what we wish for. We have figured out how to prolong life well beyond that of quality in a lot of cases, sometimes to the point of absurdity. We as a society need to give some thought to the quality part now, before scientists figure out how to "help" us live for 500 years, 250 of which will be spent with absolutely no hope for self-function. It sounds far fetched, but in 100 years, who knows?

Although I refuted the chaplain's opinions, please don't think that I am rejecting him. He has a very important job, and I respect his work very much. I admired the honesty in the column about his own emotion. However, one must always remember to accompany honesty with temperance and wisdom. Most of all, I think members of the clergy have to work harder than everyone else on the tolerance for others so that members of your faith and congregation will follow your example. Think what the world would be like if we all (including me) remembered that more often.

Teacher's death causes reflection

I have two friends with very different views on life — one says that if you stick your fist in a bucket of water, remove the fist and look at the hole left behind you will see how much you will be missed when you are gone. The other friend says — drop one drop of water into an ocean and watch the ripple — it moves from one tiny spot to reach out infinitely — affecting all the other water it moves.

No one likes funerals. They remind us of our own mortality and bring to light the pain and loss of someone near or dear to us.

As mortal beings we often doubt the impact that we have on this world. Will we be remembered when we are gone? Did we do any good? Did we make a difference? But in their own right they also afford us the opportunity to deal with the impact that we make on this world.

In the past year I have attended more funerals than I ever imagined I would, but none impacted so much upon my heart as the one I attended with my daughter Oct. 6. My daughter lost a teacher and the community lost a fine person — a son, husband, father, volunteer and friend.

Mark Turner was only 41 when he was taken from this world. Born on Fort Benning in 1962, he remained in Columbus and taught history at Spencer High School for 19 years.

He created an unimaginable impact on those he came into contact with. I was stunned as I walked into the small chapel on Macon Road with my daughter — the number of people there took my breath away. There was standing room only as attendees filled the chapel, overflowing into the waiting area — to say good-bye to him. I remember thinking to myself "What did this man do that made such a difference?" And then I looked at the faces of the students touched by the life of this one man.

The number of students there impressed me. It is one thing for peers to pay tribute, but the mass of students and former students there amazed me.

Tears flowed freely as the minister paid his last honors and the memories of this man who had affected so many lives were exchanged. The students, in a wide range of ages, held onto each other, unashamed by their tears, demonstrating freely their sense of loss.

While many teen-agers were spending the weekend concentrating on fun and temporary freedom, these had chosen to take the time to recognize someone who had affected their lives beyond the norm.

If there was ever any question of the impact Mark Turner made on their lives, it was all evident in the faces of the young and old who stood to say good-bye.

It made me realize that no matter how small, everyone who enters the door of our lives leaves an imprint and we in turn leave an imprint on them. We should strive for that imprint to be one that people want to remember — not work to forget. Fort Benning lost a son. Columbus lost a citizen. My daughter lost a teacher, but gained so much from his presence in her life that he will never really be gone.

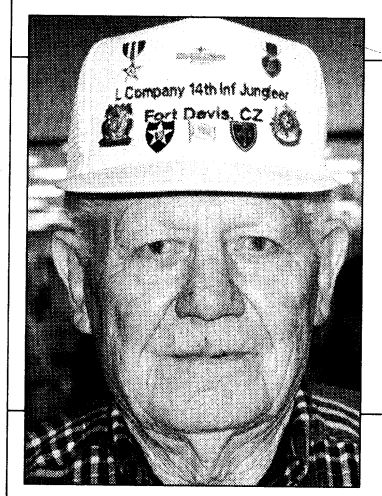
Command addresses uniform policy

Soldiers may wear utility BDUs and selected organization uniforms off post during the duty day to eat breakfast and lunch, or to purchase items at convenience stores and gas stations and for other personal business that may be rapidly transacted (i.e.: vehicle registration, dry cleaning, car repair drop or pick up).



The Class A, B uniforms and BDUs are appropriate for wear off post to attend meetings or for any other business.

Soldiers will not wear the PFU short or long sleeved T-shirt and trunks or sweatshirt and sweatpants to Burger King, post exchange, Mini-Mall, commissary or as a casual, off-duty garment while on or off post.

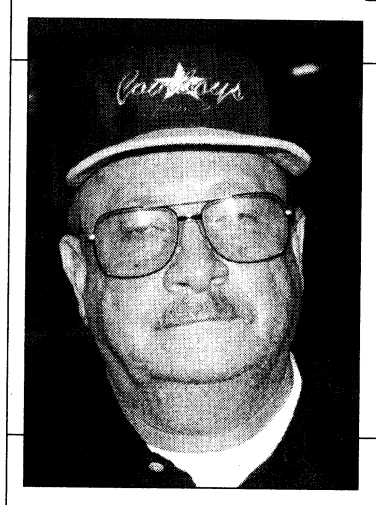
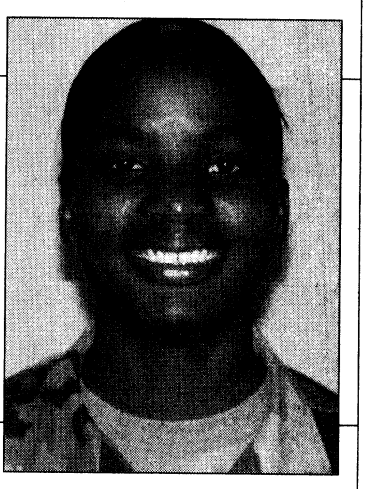
VARIOUS VOICES



How do you avoid scheduling overload for children?

Retired Master Sgt. William Braddock, Columbus — "I keep them under control, but still let them enjoy being young. Also, I don't let them be involved in a lot of activities. They have to have time to be kids."

Staff Sgt. Algie Lawrence, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I let my kids pick some activities they want to do, but with my guidance. If it's positive, then I support what they want to do."



Retired Staff Sgt. James Grimmett, Columbus — "I keep track of their schedules and try not to overdo it. You've gotta let them be kids."

Sgt. 1st Class Calvin Grubbs Jr., 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I make out a week-by-week schedule on the computer so they know what their jobs are. As far as sports, I let them choose what sport they are happy participating in."

Betty McDaniel, family member — "I play games with them and with some of the chores around the house I try to make it a game. Too much scheduling is not good for kids."

Spc. Abina Riley, 13th Combat Support Battalion — "I don't schedule them for so much, plain and simple. As they grow older I let them choose the activities they want to participate in."

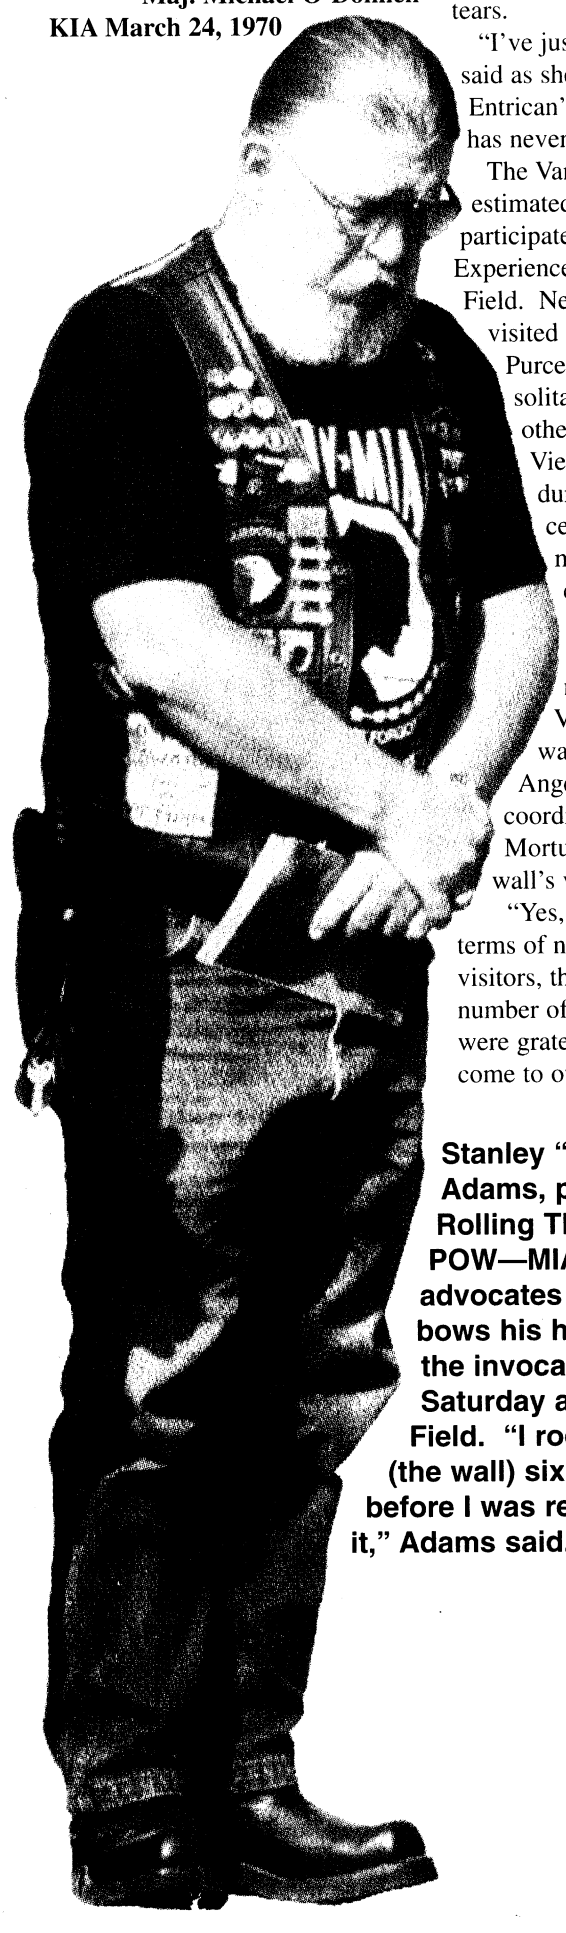
Thousands flock to wall to honor fallen heroes



'It helps,' say vets of Vietnam Wall Experience

"If you are able, save for them a place inside of you and save one backward glance when you're leaving for the places they can no longer go.

Be not ashamed to say you loved them, though you may or may not have always. Take what they have taught you with their dying and keep it with your own.

And in that time when men decide and feel safe to call the war insane, take one moment to embrace those gentle heroes you left behind."

— Maj. Michael O'Donnell
KIA March 24, 1970

"It was a confusing, anxious time," said Justine Vance, of the months her husband spent in Vietnam. "But he made it home."

Silas Vance made it home safely, but he brought his wife a bracelet engraved with the name of one who didn't, Capt. Dan Day Entrican, listed as missing in action.

Justine kept the bracelet for more than 30 years. She and her husband, a retired master sergeant, brought it with them when they visited the traveling Vietnam Wall at Fort Benning Saturday.

After a brief search, they spotted Entrican's name on the west wall, panel 3, line 39, and Justine burst into tears.

"I've just always wondered," she said as she traced the star beside Entrican's name, signifying his body has never been recovered.

The Vances were among the estimated 25,000 visitors who participated in the Vietnam Wall Experience last weekend at Sacrifice Field. Nearly 2,000 school children visited Friday; retired Col. Ben Purcell, who spent more time in solitary confinement than any other American POW in Vietnam, greeted hundreds during a Saturday morning ceremony; and, hundreds more returned for a candlelight vigil Sunday evening.

If success can be measured in numbers, the Vietnam Wall Experience was indeed a triumph, said Angela Garnto, special events coordinator for Striffler-Hamby Mortuary, Inc., who sponsored the wall's visit to Fort Benning.

"Yes, it was certainly a success in terms of numbers — the number of visitors, the number of tears and the number of comments from people who were grateful to have this exhibit come to our community," Garnto said.

> "You know, some (veterans) prefer to come out here after dark, way into the night, because it's a very intensely personal experience. Not everybody's ready to face their demons in the daylight."
> Stanley "Puff" Adams
> President of Rolling Thunder

More than 50 bikers from Rolling Thunder, a POW-MIA advocates group, opened Saturday's ceremony. Stanley "Puff" Adams, president of the Waverly Hall chapter, said members of the group stayed on site around the clock to keep it secure for late-night visitors.

"You know some (veterans) prefer to come out here after dark, way into the night, because it is a very intensely personal experience," Adams said. "Not everybody's ready to face their demons in the daylight."

Adams said there was a "steady trickle" of visitors throughout the night, many of whom weren't ready to approach the wall.

"I understand that. I rode up to (the wall) six years before I was ready to see it," he said. "But we're here if they want to talk, and you can usually tell. If they hang back or walk past it or shake their head, they don't want to be disturbed. If they stand there, touch it, talk to it or walk away and come back, they're usually ready to talk. You can pretty much tell."

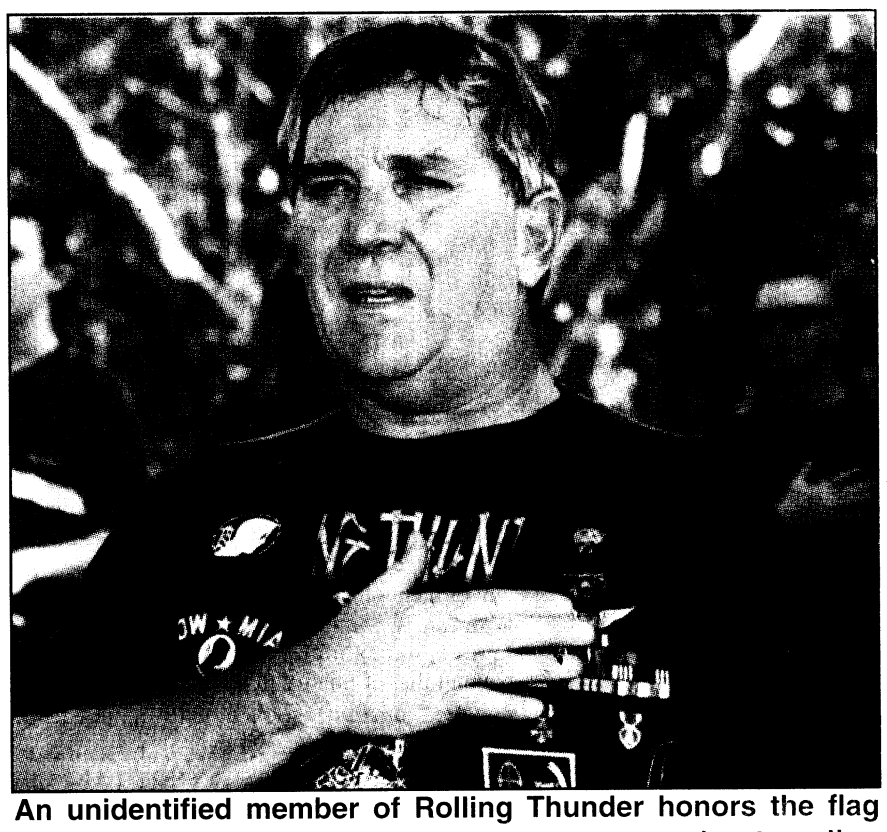
It took Kenneth Goss four tries before he could get close enough to read the names on the wall.

"The first time I just drove past slowly. The next time I sat in the truck an hour before I drove away," he said. "We live in an instant society. We want everything fast. We want a reunion or a trip to the wall to give us instant closure. It doesn't happen that way. It helps. It's part of the process, but it's a very long process."

Now he anticipates his trips to the wall with a mixture of dread and relief.

"Each time you go there you heal a little bit, but it's still like walking up to an open grave. You're not ready to let go," he said. "And every time you turn to walk away, it feels like you're turning your back on them."

Still, Goss said the wall has been instrumental in healing the wounds that divided the nation after the Vietnam War.



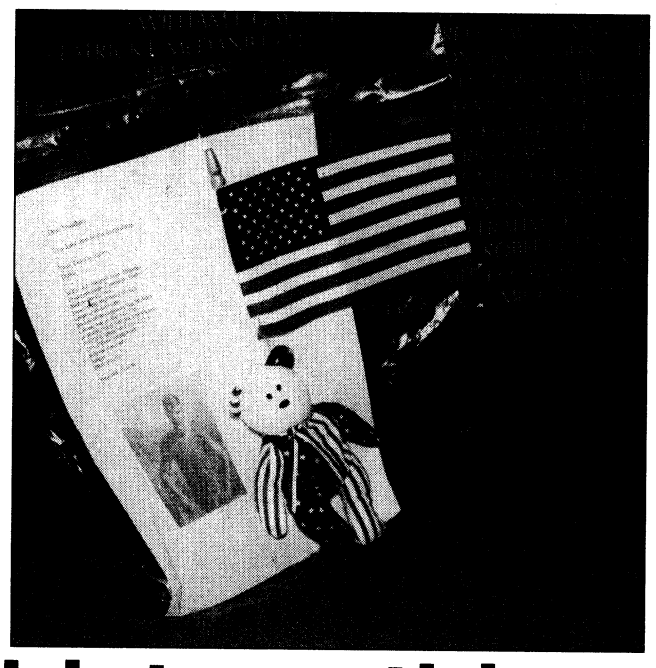
"We weren't allowed to grieve properly when we came back. There's still a lot of bitterness," he said. "But it helps to see others grieving with us. It helps that millions and millions of people look at that wall and see 58,000 names and feel a little bit of the overwhelming sense of futility we did."

Retired Lt. Gen. Ben Register, keynote speaker at Saturday's ceremony, said the wall is etched with both pain and healing for those who lost loved ones in Vietnam.

"It's about remembering and being remembered," said Register, who deemed it was "more than appropriate" that the wall should visit Fort Benning, "Home of the Infantry and keeper of the warrior spirit."

"This (wall) serves to honor fallen heroes who loved, served and sacrificed for the freedom that makes this country the greatest in the world. Tell a soldier 'Thank you for serving our country.' Tell a Vietnam veteran 'Welcome home,'" he said.

"And never forget."



An unidentified member of Rolling Thunder honors the flag during the Saturday morning ceremony at the traveling Vietnam Memorial Wall on Fort Benning's Sacrifice Field. More than 50 members of Rolling Thunder participated in the opening parade.

Russell County High School ROTC cadets conduct a POW-MIA Remembrance ceremony Saturday at the wall. The four hats represent U.S. military servicemen from each service who are unaccounted for. The single rose represents the blood shed to ensure freedom in America. The red ribbon represents ribbons wo[illegible] by those who demand a proper account of POWs and MIAs.

Stanley "Puff" Adams, president of Rolling Thunder, a POW—MIA advocates group, bows his head during the invocation Saturday at Sacrifice Field. "I rode up to (the wall) six years before I was ready to see it," Adams said.

It's a moving wall indeed. The traveling Vietnam Memorial Wall is a three-quarters scale replica of the wall in Washington, D.C. Visitors often leave mementos at the wall. Flags are common, as are notes, flowers and photographs, but visitors also leave medals, ribbons, crosses, stuffed animals, newspaper clippings and jewelry. The site of the moving wall is always considered sacred ground, said Angela Garnto, special events coordinator for Striffler-Hamby Mortuary, who spearheaded the effort to bring the wall to Fort Benning. As such, all items left at the wall at Fort Benning will be enshrined in a vault in the veterans' section of Lakeview Memory Gardens in Phenix City.

Wall of history, thing of mystery

Veterans say wall a healing place

Story and photos by Bridgett Siter

There are 47 trainees in Jose Mojica's platoon, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment. A handful of them, like Mojica, received passes Saturday to visit the Vietnam Memorial Wall on Fort Benning's Sacrifice Field. Their assignment: Gather "rubbings" of the names of the 47 soldiers from A Company, 2nd Bn. 47th Inf. Regt., who lost their lives in the Vietnam War.

The irony wasn't lost on Mojica.

"It's hard to believe, but then it's hard to fathom anything about this wall," he said, as he scanned the length of granite to his right. "I can't say I can truly comprehend it, because I wasn't there, but it helps me appreciate the fact that there were so many willing to die for what they believed in. These days there aren't many people who can understand that kind of devotion."

As Mojica and his comrades continued their search for names, Kenneth Goss arrived after a three hour drive from his home in southern Alabama. His mission, he supposed, was nearly impossible.

"I don't even know where to begin. I lost seven buddies, and I can't even remember their names," the Vietnam veteran said. "I told myself to forget it when I came home. Now I want to remember."

Goss had very little information to go on. All he knew was his buddies' unit, he told a volunteer — A Co., 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt.

The volunteer looked at Goss in amazement.

"Come with me. I just might know someone who can help you," she said, and steered him toward one of the soldiers from 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt.

In no time at all, Goss began his search with a list of his own. He shook his head, tears streaming down his face, and tried to explain the mystery of the wall.

"These things happen. You hear it all the time," he said, referring to the morning's fortuitous turn of events. "The wall is a healing place. Strange things happen here. You can't really explain them, but you can't deny them."

Others agree.

Time and time again during the wall's three-day stay at Fort Benning, veterans, friends and family members shared their stories, the unexplainable twists of fate that take place at the wall.

"I used to say my name was supposed to be up there," said Stanley "Puff" Adams, who earned his nickname in a nasty divorce — "Puff, it was all gone," he said with a snap of his fingers.

Adams, the president of the local chapter of Rolling Thunder, a POW-MIA advocates group, said he visited the wall six times before he could approach it.

"My whole platoon is on that wall. Their names are right there together. There's the one my son was named after," he said.

"When I finally talked myself into finding their names, there it was, five rows above — the name Puff. I don't know why, but it helped."

U.S. Representative Sanford Bishop shared his "wall experience" with more than 200 people at Sunday's closing ceremony. Bishop said he first visited the Vietnam Memorial Wall in Washington, D.C., in search of the name of a childhood friend, Thaddeus Williams.

"He was the big boy in my neighborhood, Creek Circle. He taught me how to hold a tennis racket and a baseball bat," Bishop said. "When he didn't return to Creek Circle, the circle was broken."

Bishop later traveled to Vietnam as a member of the joint task force on POW-MIA accountability in search of Georgia soldiers whose remains were never returned.

"And I brought Thaddeaus Williams home to be buried at Arlington National Cemetery. I delivered his eulogy. All these years later, friends and family came from all over to say good-bye to Thaddeus, and the circle was complete once again," Bishop said.

Fort Benning's assistant commandant, Col. Stephen Layfield, said "miraculous things happen at the wall."

"There's the story of a vet at the information booth trying to locate his buddy's name. He knew it had to be there because he was the one who loaded him on a chopper badly wounded, but he couldn't find the name," Layfield said.

"While he was searching, another man came to look for his buddy's name," Layfield said. "He couldn't find it, he said, but it had to be there. He'd seen his platoon take devastating mortar fire as he was being medevaced out of there.

"It was then, right there at the wall, those two gentlemen realized they'd been searching for each other," Layfield said. "That's the power of this wall."

WHINSEC teacher's life begins at 40

Blind woman overcomes challenges

Bridgett Siter

A part-time employee with a passion for linguistics was named the Fort Benning Disabled Employee of the Year.

Angela Hacking, who teaches English to Spanish-speaking students of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, was recognized for her "willingness to tackle new challenges, to face obstacles head-on" at the the Commanding General's Two Star Excellence Breakfast Thursday.

Hacking suffers from congenital optical atrophy and is legally blind, a condition she once believed made her dream of teaching an impossibility.

Hacking

"My mom discouraged it. I guess she didn't want to see me get hurt," said Hacking, who lived with her parents until their deaths in 1991. "They were my everything. I sat around for a whole year, totally lost and confused. I didn't know what to do."

One day Hacking heard a country song on television, Billy Can't Read, about a father's inability to read to his son.

"When it was over, there was a message — 'If you want to help, call this 1-800 number,'" Hacking recalled. "I called and said 'I want to do something now.' That's when everything changed. My life took off at 40."

Hacking began teaching basic reading skills at the Tillinghurst Adult Education Center in Columbus, where she remained for seven years. She began volunteering at WHINSEC in 1998 and became a part-time employee in 1999. "I'm teaching, I'm learning Spanish, a language I've always loved, and I'm helping others learn to speak English. I'm living my dream," said Hacking, who also speaks German, her mother's native tongue.

Her supervisor, Cheryl Buttler, said Hacking "deserves to be recognized, because she's taken on every challenge she's ever been given with great enthusiasm and a good attitude."

"Angie's not disabled. She has a disability. She's more able than a lot of people I know who work 40 hours," Buttler said. "She's never turned down a challenge. She's never said 'I can't do that.' She's amazing."

Hacking teaches English as a second language to students at WHINSEC's Captains' Career Course and Command and General Staff Officers' Course twice a week. She also teaches a "Follow Me To America" course to the students' family members. Hacking uses a computer attachment that enlarges text to grade her students' work and create tests. Many of her students don't realize she's disabled because she recognizes voices and uses the stairs instead of the elevator.

"I count steps. I know exactly how many there are," Hacking said. "I need the exercise. I do just fine unless someone speaks to me and I lose count. Then look out."

Hacking, who enjoys bridge, reading and fishing, recently added a new skill to her repertoire — ballroom dancing.

"A friend of mine was taking informal lessons last year, so I said I'd go. I really didn't want to, because I had to take a cab and that cost $10. Turns out that was the best $10 I ever spent," said Hacking, who met her husband Donald that evening.

"He was one of the instructors, and the others were partnered, so he said, 'I guess you're mine.' I told him he'd better never forget that," Hacking laughed. "We were married in July." Hacking, whose father retired from the Army, said she's found a home at WHINSEC and a second family in the students and staff.

"It's wonderful here. I'm doing what I dreamed of," she said. "I can't imagine being anywhere else."

Fort Benning to honor military retirees Nov. 7

Veterans to catch up on services

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

For 20 years, military retirees from all branches of service have come to Fort Benning for Military Retiree Appreciation Day. This year's activities will be Nov. 7 at various locations across post.

The event, sponsored by the commanding general and the Fort Benning Retiree Council, serves several important purposes. Retirees receive updated information on benefits and entitlements, learn about the latest Army operational developments and have a chance to renew old friendships, said Joan Odoms, retirement services officer.

The retirement services office personnel mailed "Still Serving" newsletters to approximately 19,000 retirees from parts of Alabama, Florida and Georgia. They also placed flyers at Martin Army Community Hospital and the ID Card Section to help get the information to retirees from other services.

Registration begins at 6:30 a.m. at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. Retirees and family members will then travel to Sand Hill for breakfast with the soldiers of the Basic Combat Training Brigade and a tour of Leonard Barracks. All will be special guests at the D Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, graduation ceremony.

"The retirees love to interact with the soldiers," Odoms said, "and we want them to be able to see how soldiers of today live."

The guest speaker during lunch at the Officers' Club is retired Sergeant Major of the Army Robert E. Hall. Following Hall's remarks, retirees will be able to obtain up-to-date information on a wide variety of subjects during the "County Fair" and "Health Fair" activities.

At the County Fair, retirees can talk with representatives from selected federal, state, local and post agencies. Representatives from the Social Security Administration and the Retired Pay Center of the Defense Finance and Accounting Center in Cleveland, Ohio, will be able to assist retirees with pay inquiries, Odoms said.

Other booths will be staffed with personnel from the commissary, Post Exchange, Omega World Travel and the Installation Volunteer Coordinator.

Retirees may take advantage of one-stop shopping to register vehicles, obtain military ID cards and receive legal counseling and assistance in the County Fair area. The Legal Assistance Office will provide will and power of attorney services.

The health fair will include representatives from the medical and dental activities on post. A list of services offered by MACH should be published next week.

Retirees interested in the breakfast and lunch events should make reservations by the end of today. Reservations are not required for any of the County of Health Fair activities.

Memories hit home at retirement ceremony

Top NCO remembers friends, past

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

During a retirement ceremony at the Ranger Memorial Oct. 3, post Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein said farewell to his position at Fort Benning with more than 250 friends, family members, colleagues and fallen comrades.

"It couldn't be more fitting than to retire here on Fort Benning at the Ranger Memorial," Klein said.

After 30 years of service, Klein retires with memories both pleasurable and painful.

"With the exception of my wife, the Army has been the greatest thing that's ever happened to me," Klein said.

But his fallen comrades, whose names are inscribed at the memorial, conjure up memories that touch his soul, he said.

"They're all great soldiers I've had the pleasure of serving with," he said. "I'll always think about soldiers because they have made the sacrifice for America's freedom."

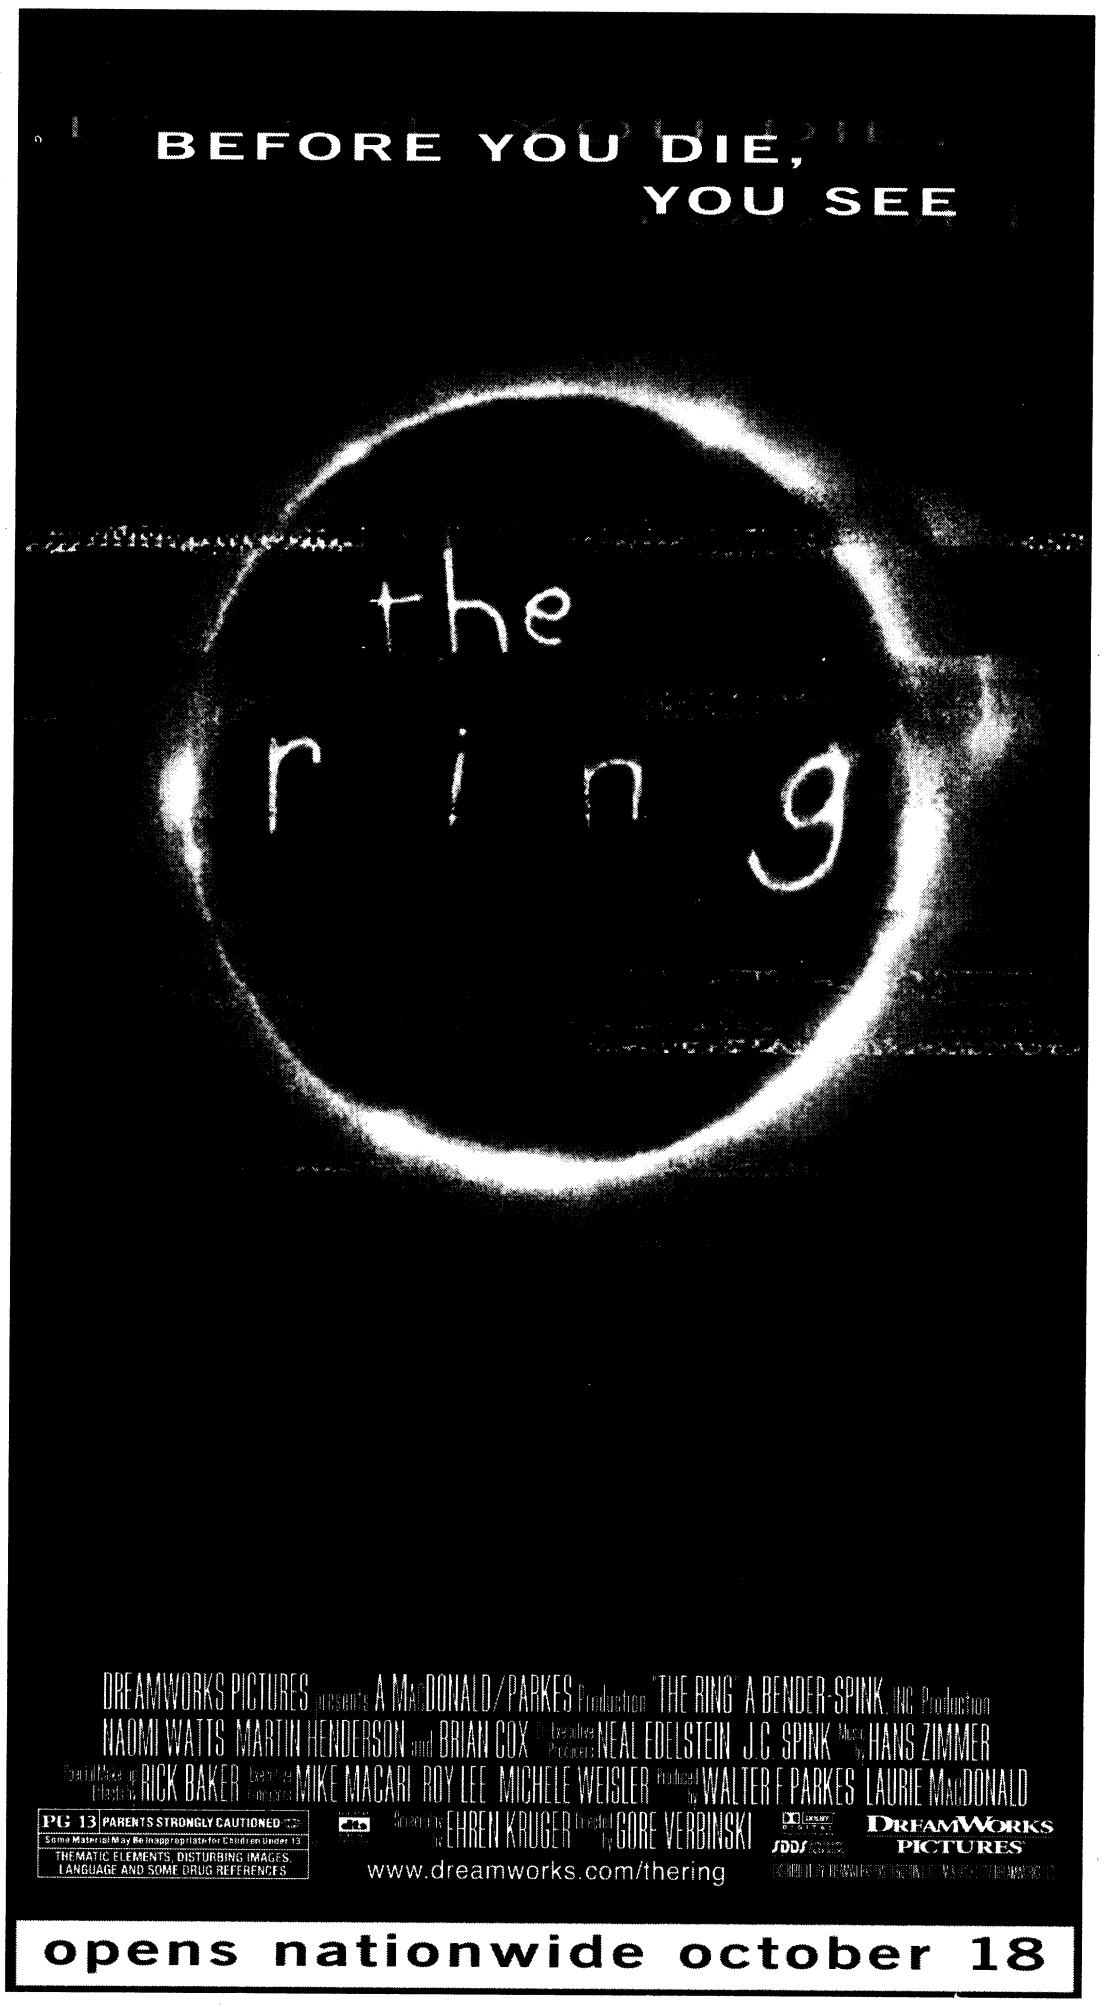
Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Standing along side his wife Patty, Command Sgt. Maj. Gerald Klein is presented the Order of St. Maurice by Col. Joseph Votel, 75th Ranger Regiment commander.

Known as a soldier's soldier, Klein will be missed but not forgotten, said Col. Joseph Votel, 75th Ranger Regiment commander.

He is a man of wisdom who has served his country well, he said.

"I spoke to one of his old company commanders," Votel said. "He said 'he was the best I ever saw.'



"He's a man of few words, but when he speaks, people listen and learn," Votel said. "He is simply the very best."

Klein was presented the Order of St. Maurice, a letter of appreciation from President George W. Bush and an American flag.

Officer candidates dedicate memorial

Oxbow Meadows home to new monument

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

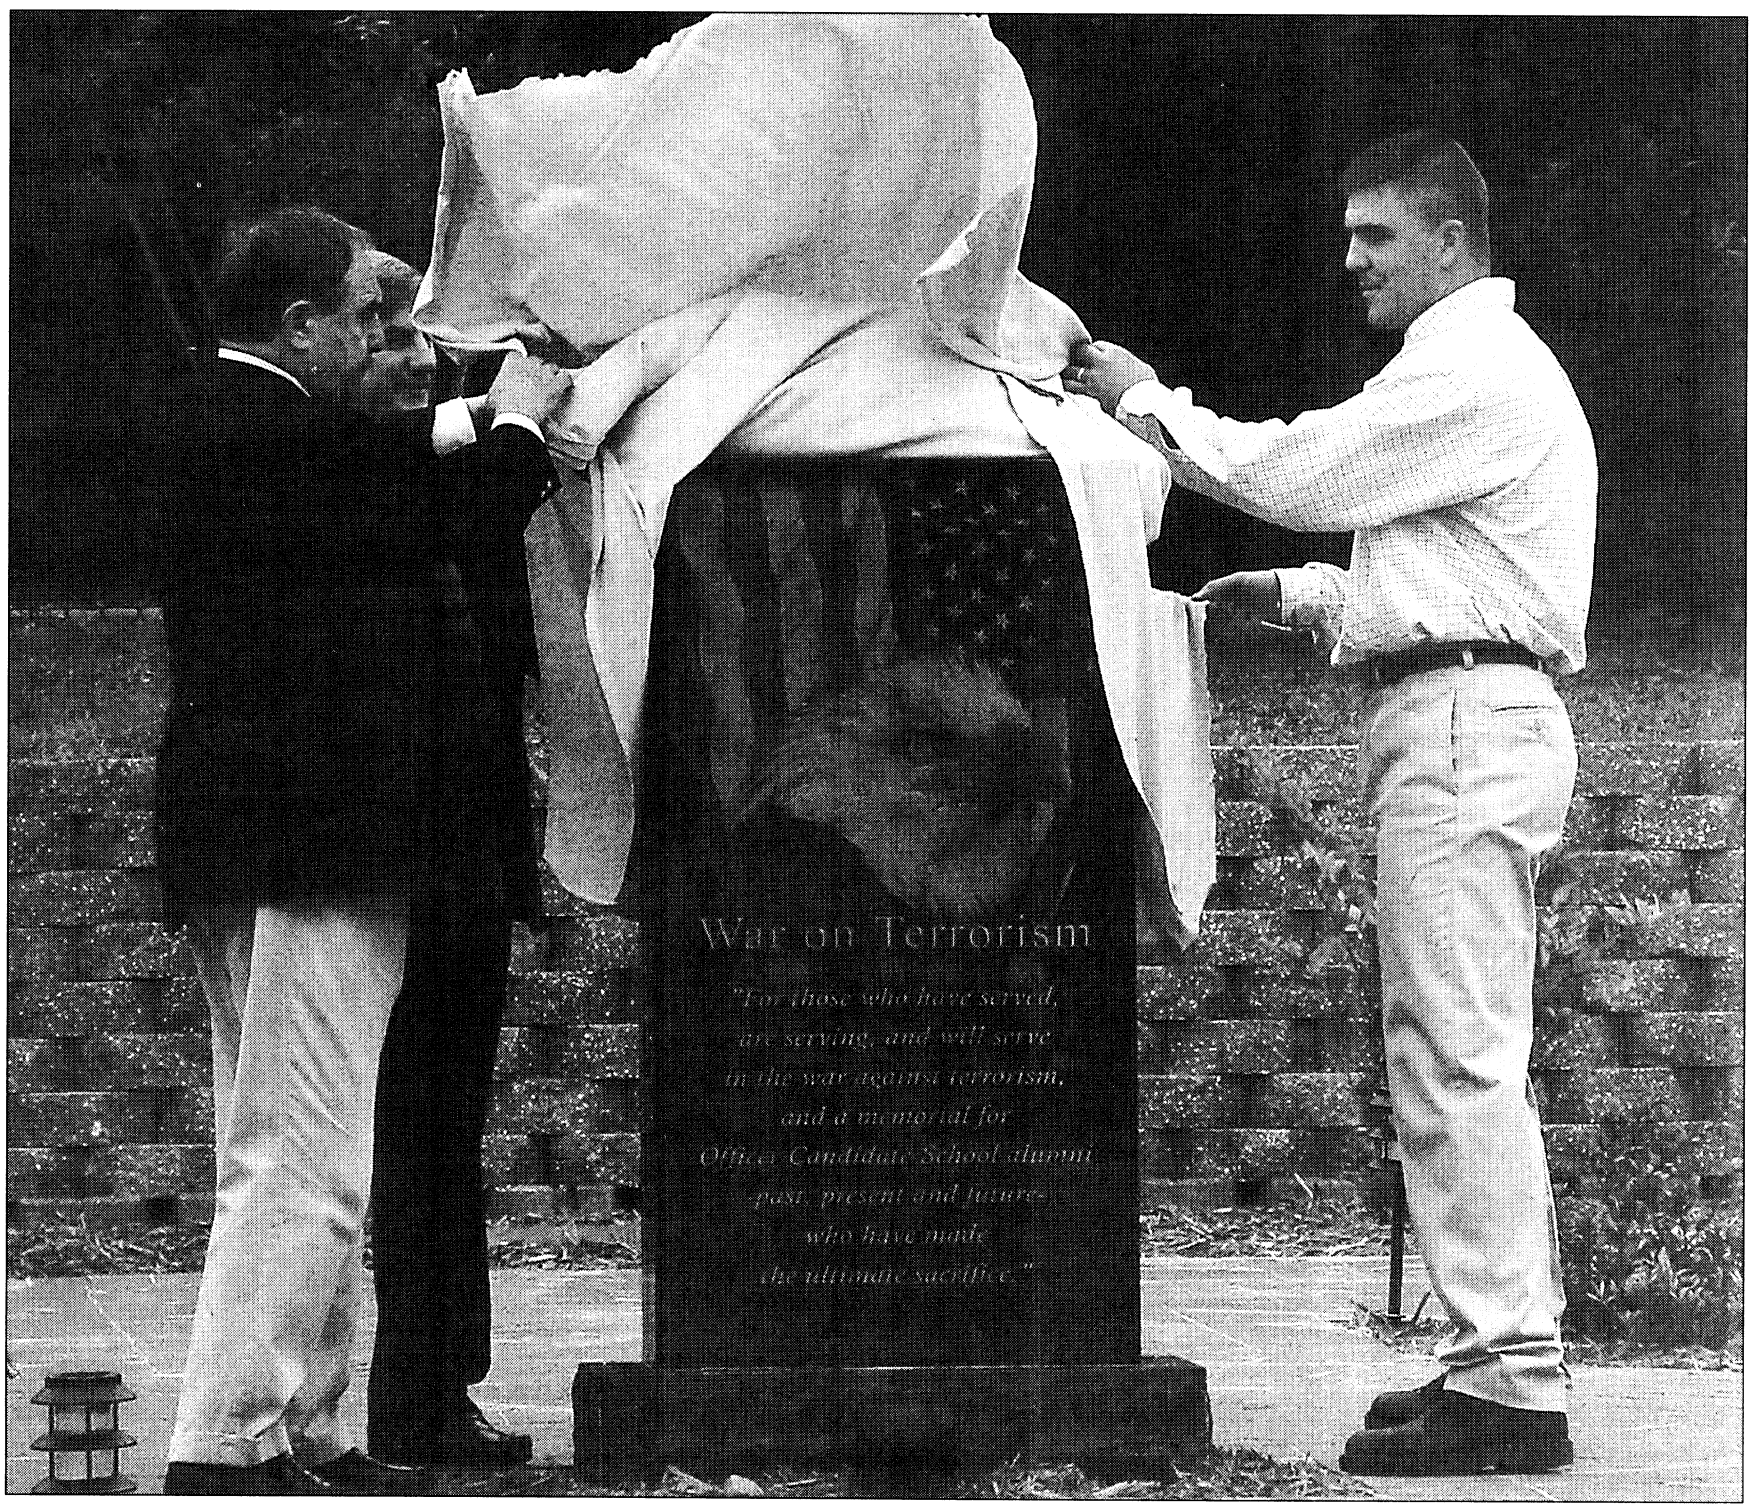
There seemed to be a feeling of great anticipation and excitement throughout the crowd gathered Monday for the dedication of the War against Terrorism memorial on the Riverwalk near Oxbow Meadows in Columbus.

After many weeks of tireless effort on the part of the entire Officer Candidate School Class 06-02, the bricks were in place, the sod was laid, the bushes were mulched and the monolith was ready to be unveiled.

Family, friends and curious bicyclists gathered to help the class pay tribute to three OCS alumni who died on Sept. 11, 2001, at the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. The names of Lt. Gen. Timothy Maude, retired Col. Richard Rescorla, and Lt. Col. Stephen Hyland Jr. are etched on the back of the monolith.

For OCS battalion commander Lt. Col. Daniel Kessler, the monument had special, personal meaning. He had worked for Maude, but Hyland was his friend.

It was difficult for Kessler to contain his emotions as he tried to tell the audience the importance of the monument.



"The reputation of OCS was built by men like Maude, Rescorla, and Hyland," he said.

"They were the epitome of the OCS ideals. They were warfighters, servants to their country, masters of their profession of arms and leaders of character."

Kessler spoke of Maude's contributions to the new Army recruiting campaign, and of Rescorla's heroism in the Ia Drang Valley in Vietnam.

Some graduates may achieve what Maude and Rescorla did, he said.

"But the majority of the candidates will be like Hyland," Kessler said. "They will be the man behind the scenes and outside of the limelight."

Melissa House

Mayor-elect Bob Poydasheff and Mayor Bobby Peters help Senior Officer Candidate Paul Ramsey unveil the monolith.

Kessler had a chance meeting with Hyland in the Pentagon on Sept. 5. He said that Hyland was pleased and proud that Kessler was commanding the OCS battalion. Hyland told Kessler that he expected that the OCS standards would be upheld.

The two made plans to meet again in October, but Kessler would not have the chance to see his friend again.

"We must remain committed and vigilant," Kessler said.

"We must remember the victims and always fulfill our duties.

"This memorial is a true testament of what can happen when you have a tricommunity that can come together to make things happen."

Kessler thanked the memorial's supporters on behalf of the OCS.

Photographer Gregg Brown, whose photograph is etched above the names of the three OCS heroes, praised the OCS students for their hard work.

"They did an incredible thing with next to nothing," Brown said.

LOSAT: Helps infantry defeat advanced armor systems penetrating rod ignites the steel, much like a welding rod, from the displacement of kinetic energy," he said. "Those are just steel hulks on the range; there is no fuel or anything else in them."

"It causes catastrophic failure to the tank," Parr said.

McDonald said that the previous trend in weapons development was one side building a better bullet, then the other side developing better armor, then an even better bullet, followed by even better armor. The LOSAT represents an end to that cycle.

"There is nothing you can do to stop this thing," he said.

The LOSAT can acquire two targets simultaneously and defeat high priority targets out past 4 km.

The system can be transported by C-130 or delivered to the ground commander by helicopter. "This is not a replacement system," McDonald said.

"It's one of the first digitized weapons systems for the light infantry."

Units do not have to give up any current weapons systems in order to receive the LOSAT. In fact, McDonald said, the infantry gets more than 330 additional soldiers in a LOSAT battalion.

Lockheed Martin will deliver the first firing unit to Fort Bragg, N.C. later this year.

Army: Performs investigation to render death benefits on a case-by-case basis. Simple negligence is normally not a bar to payment and benefits, but "gross negligence" would be.

"For example, a soldier is traveling 65 mph in a 55 mph stretch of road, and he looks down to switch the radio station and doesn't see the bend in the road, and he crashes the car and is killed; yes, he was negligent under the circumstances, but his family would still get DIC.

"On the other hand, if it is gross negligence, such as is characterized by recklessness, then DIC will not be paid. (For instance, this would occur) if the soldier was driving 92 mph in a 55 mph zone, on a moonless night, and it was raining, and he was trying to run away from the MPs."

Soldiers should keep this in mind because DIC payments can be significant, he said. A surviving spouse with two children would receive more than $1,000 per month.

"I would think it is a very uncommon occurrence that DIC is denied. The overwhelming majority of soldiers who die on active duty do not die as a result of their willful misconduct," Tempesta said.

For more information on DIC, visit https://www.perscomonline.army.mil/tagd/cmaoc/benefits/benefitDIC.htm.

Servicemen's Group Life Insurance does not consider the cause of death, so even suicides are payable.

However, this may not be the case in civilian, commercial life insurances policies, as most have a "suicide clause" barring payment in the event of a suicide for the policies' first two years.

"If a soldier dies on active duty, the Army will pay a $6,000 death gratuity to the next of kin," Tempesta said. "Condition of payment is death on active duty, so as with SGLI, the cause of death is not a consideration."

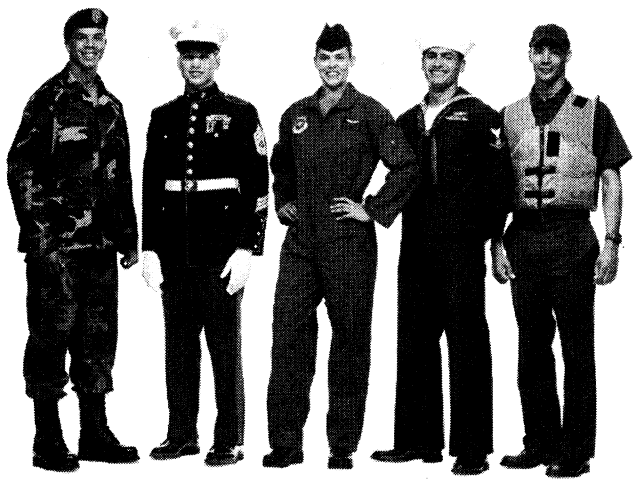
The primary next of kin of soldiers who die are assigned a casualty assistance officer, and this individual takes the family member(s) from place to place on post to handle matters.

"The CAO has this as his or her primary duty, and the CAO ensures the PNOK gets the right information from the right office, and in a timely manner," Tempesta said.

From a preventive law perspective, the best advice he gives to people is that they have a will if they need one, and if someone passes away, their families should come in and talk to OSJA about legal considerations, Tempesta said.

Legal Assistance does not advise people on ensuring they get the full range of VA benefits, because the VA representative outlines all of that. Legal Assistance does discuss the decedent's will, or lack thereof, the ownership of property, whether or not probate is necessary, contacting creditors, etc.

"Another factor (in certain death cases) may be the liability of the estate," Tempesta said. "For example, if the soldier falls asleep at the wheel of his vehicle and drives into a house, killing himself and injuring several occupants of the home, the soldier's estate may face liability for the damage to the house and injury to the individuals."



Soldiers should use common sense when it comes to being safe and staying alive, said Regis Beighley, post safety manager at the USAIC Safety office. For instance, stay sober when driving, wear a helmet and other protective gear on a motorcycle, swim only where a lifeguard is on duty and always wear a seatbelt.

"That's when accidents happen — when you don't take the necessary precautions," Beighley said.

Soldiers should keep in mind the details of Army Regulations 385-10 and 385-55, which cover the Army Safety Program and motor vehicles, he said.

"Now, when it comes to any soldier issue, the Army takes care of its own," Beighley said. "Still, we have to hold soldiers accountable for their actions, so we have to ensure they are doing the right thing."

TSP increases retirement income

Government offers plan to workers

Pvt. David Foley
Bayonet staff

As a result of today's modern approaches to fitness and medical science, people are living longer and healthier lives. Therefore, the need for extra retirement coverage is of growing concern for Americans of all ages.

"Tax-advantaged savings plans like the Thrift Savings Plan can help people retire earlier and give them more money to follow their dreams," said Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program.

Open season for the TSP , which started Tuesday and ends Dec. 31, gives service members and federal employees an opportunity to increase their retirement benefits.

TSP offers the same type of savings and tax benefits as the 401(k) plans that many private corporations offer their employees.

This is the second year the government has offered TSP to uniformed personnel. Service members and civilian government employees can contribute to TSP and receive its benefits as well as those acquired from their primary retirement plan.

Unlike the Federal Employees' Retirement System and the Civil Service Retirement System, the contributor decides how much he wants to contribute and how his money is invested.

No one is automatically signed up for TSP. Contributions are strictly voluntary.

The five investment funds to choose from when contributing to TSP are:

- Government Securities
- Fixed Income Index
- Common Stock Index
- Small Capitalization Stock Index
- International Stock Index

"People should start with low risk investments such as the government fund or the bond fund," said Pratcher. "Once the stock market begins to improve, people should look into the stock funds to increase the payoff, keeping in mind that a diverse • portfolio is more reliable."

FERS participants can contribute up to 12 percent of their basic pay into the TSP, and after the first year, their agency will contribute 1 percent even if the participant stops paying. However, if the participants continue to pay into TSP, their agency will match their contribution.

CSRS participants can invest up to 7 percent of their salary but they will not receive any agency contributions.

Service members can invest up to 7 percent of their base pay and will have the option of increasing their investment by one percent each year until they reach the maximum contribution of 12 percent.

However, the military does not match any percentage of the service member's contribution.

"The TSP is a great opportunity for soldiers to invest in themselves," said Command Sgt. Maj. Donovan Watts, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"I believe that all soldiers should be saving, investing and preparing for the future. The TSP is the simplest plan I know of. It's too easy a real no brainer"

There are special guidelines for service members who would like to invest bonuses or combat pay that allow for contributions of up to 100 percent as long as their investment does not exceed the maximum IRS limit.

TSP does not affect a person's Social Security benefits or FERS Basic Annuity.

TSP benefits can significantly increase a person's retirement income, but starting early is the key to success, according to the Thrift Savings Plan Web site.

Still, the TSP is not a savings account that can be withdrawn at any time.

It is specifically designed as a retirement plan, and there are penalties for early withdrawal. Therefore, it is important for investors to consider their other needs before committing to an installment plan.

The Army Community Service Financial Readiness Program will give classes on the TSP from 9:50 a.m. to noon Oct. 28, Nov. 25, and Dec. 9 in Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information about TSP, visit its Web site at www.tsp.gov, or call the Financial Readiness Program at 545-5485.

War College officer pleads guilty to murdering wife

Colonel uses pestle, cord to kill

Florence Peace
Army News Service

FORT MEADE, Md. — Lt. Col. David P. Bartlett pleaded guilty Sept. 30 to the unpremeditated murder of his wife, Suzanne.

In his court-martial at Fort Meade, Md., Bartlett said he killed his wife by hitting her about the face and head with an iron pestle approximately 20 times and strangling her with a computer cord.

The crime occurred at their home at the Carlisle Barracks, Pa., March 19.

By pleading guilty, Judge Ronald White said the maximum sentence Bartlett could receive is life in prison without parole.

Before accepting the guilty plea, entered by his civilian defense attorney Mary Hall, White said Bartlett would be placed under oath and questioned to determine and satisfy the guilty plea explanation.

That explanation, White said, had to include the following elements: Suzanne Bartlett is dead, death occurred as a result of Bartlett hitting her about the face and strangling her, the killing was unlawful, and he intended to kill or inflict great bodily harm.

White instructed Bartlett, "Tell me why you are guilty."

Under oath, Bartlett answered, "My wife is dead, her death resulted from my actions and at the time she died, I was intent on killing her."

The judge then told Bartlett to recount the events of the crime.

Bartlett said he and his wife started arguing on March 16 after she discovered he had been looking at pornography Web sites on the computer, something he had promised in April 1998 that he would not do again.

Continuing the argument off and on throughout March 17 and 18, Bartlett said, his wife was trying to upset him and embarrass him by calling him names — like pervert, he said.

The 46-year-old officer said he came home around 9:35 p.m., but the discussion did not began again immediately so he decided to go for a run around 10:30 p.m. Bartlett said his wife walked toward the computer room around 11 p.m., and he put his arm out to stop her, but she swung her elbow and hit him. Getting angry, he said he went upstairs to try to compose himself.

His wife called for him, and when he did not come, she started screaming obscenities.

At this point of his recounting, Bartlett said he had no intentions of hitting his wife.

"In the 17 years I knew Suzanne, I never hit her," he said. "I never threatened her. I never took action against her in a physical way."

Bartlett said he picked up a six-inch iron pestle on the dresser and went downstairs with it, thinking he would threaten to damage the computer.

Entering the computer room, his wife asked what he was doing with that, but he said before he could say anything, "she pushed me backward with both hands. At that moment," he said, "I swung the pestle and began hitting her repeatedly."

White asked, "Were you able to stop, pause and reflect on your actions?"

Bartlett said, "I did not stop and reflect. I don't believe — I was angry and did not stop."

The struggle and beating continued into the dining room with Bartlett's wife lying on the floor, at which time, Bartlett wrapped the computer cord around her neck twice and strangled her.

After strangulation and while he was still on top of his wife, Bartlett said he reached for the pestle, which he had dropped earlier.

"I hit her four or five more times, striking her face," he said. "At that time, I knew I was killing her."

Bartlett went on to say that he believed she was alive until the last blows.

After considering Bartlett's testimony, White accepted the plea.

Unpremeditated murder means that the crime was not planned, but having time to pause and reflect, the accused knew he was killing the victim but could not stop himself.

Represented by Hall and two Army lawyers, Bartlett elected to be sentenced by a panel of officers, who must be peers in rank or senior to him.

Bartlett's sentencing hearing is set for 8 a.m. Oct. 28 at Fort Meade.

Other charges stemming from the murder against Bartlett were dismissed as part of the plea agreement.

Selected soldiers get bonus pay

Fort Benning soldiers reap rewards

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Special Forces and career counselors asked for it, and as of Oct. 1, they are receiving increased bonuses based on their contributions to the Army.

"Special Forces and career counselors, both active and reserve, have been receiving special pay for several years," said a spokesman from the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel. "Both communities were granted increases based on an analysis conducted during the biennial review of the Army's Special Duty Assignment Pay."

SDAP is a monthly incentive to enlisted soldiers who have assignments that are extremely demanding or require a high degree of responsibility, according to the Personnel Command Web site. There are five pay tables under SDAP that range from $55 to $275. More than 7,300 enlisted soldiers will see the increase on their monthly LES, Personnel officials said.

All regular Army career counselors in the rank of master sergeant and below whose primary military occupational specialty is 79S, and all reserve-component retention and transition noncommissioned officers whose PMOS is 79V will receive an additional $220. Sergeants major will receive $165. About 1,748 career counselors will see the change in pay. Special Forces who are currently receiving SDP pay level 2 of $110 will receive level 4 monthly payments of $220. About 3,947 Special Forces under the Career Management Field 18 will receive the extra pay, the spokesman said.

Rangers in the rank of sergeant and above who are airborne ranger qualified and assigned to the 75th Ranger Regiment no longer have to be on station a year before receiving the bonus. All soldiers who are "V" coded (airborne ranger) at the 75th and 4th Tactical Psychological Operation Group at Fort Benning will receive $110 special pay.

About 1,659 Rangers, both active and reserve's pay will increase, the spokesman said.

Orders must be generated to award, change, terminate or reinstate SDAP, stated a MILPER message on the Personnel Command Web site. For more information go to MILPER Message 02-249.

Veterans Education Assistance Program to Montgomery GI Bill Conversion

To the greatest extent possible, soldiers who converted from VEAP to MGIB last year need know it is their responsibility to individually check and ensure that they have paid the full $2,700 within the statutorily required deadline (that is, 18 months from the date entered on their DD Form 2366). Meeting this 18-month deadline is critical.

Soldiers have no education benefits to utilize until the required $2,700 is paid in full. Furthermore, soldiers who fail to pay the $2,700 in full by the deadline will forfeit all contributions made to that point and will not be eligible for any MGIB benefits.

Many soldiers have had problems with their local finance offices erroneously stopping the reduction in pay when it reaches $600 or $1,200.

Finance has erroneously refunded some payments to soldiers. These are finance problems and errors and must be immediately resolved. Defense Financial Association will send out a message to finance offices for corrective action. Soldiers, however, are ultimately responsible for initiating action to discover and correct any finance mistakes. Soldiers may have to make lump sum payments to ensure the full $2,700 is paid within the required 18 months.

Soldiers enlist for Special Forces

Adventure, training get underway

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Army's elite fighting force has opened the doors of adventure to junior-enlisted soldiers.

The first wave of junior-enlisted Special Forces recruits are expected to graduate next fall via a program making Special Forces training available in their enlistment contract. More are going through infantrymen's training at Sand Hill and will also enter the program.

"You usually don't get a chance to go (to Special Forces) right off the bat, and I want to fight with the best of the best," said Pfc. Christopher Foerster, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment.

The junior-enlisted soldiers attend a two-week Special Operations Preparation Course. The course, originally a National Guard program, will focus on land navigation and physical training to prepare soldiers for the rigors of selection, said Master Sgt. Steven Kurlowicz, Special Forces liaison, U.S. Army JFK Special Warfare Center and Schools.

Once the soldiers finish the Special Forces qualification course, they will also be Primary Leadership Development Course qualified.

"Basic training and airborne are just a stepping stone for these soldiers until we take control of their training at (Fort) Bragg," Kurlowicz said.

The program was reinstated to increase the number of Special Forces soldiers. Because of Army cut backs and soldiers retiring from the Special Forces community, numbers have dwindled.

It was projected only 40 to 50 percent would be picked from selection, but there has been a 35 percent pass rate for junior enlisted in the Special Operations Preparation Course and a 76 percent pick up rate at selection. The program will help get the Special Forces community back to full strength by 2007, Kurlowicz said.

"I think it's a great program," said Staff Sgt. Scott Ross, drill sergeant, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt. "I wish they would have had it open when I came in. I've been beating my body for 10 years, and the soldiers straight out of basic will be fresher than me.

"I think it's a great recruiting tool for the soldiers who want to do extra," he said. "The Special Forces community will get some great soldiers."

Still, the junior enlisted will not be sent out to do the mission of a more experienced soldier without any guidance.

"The soldiers will have a senior person on the team to help guide them along once they graduate," Kurlowicz said. "The new soldier may be immature, but they're going to have to grow up quick once they reach their team."

Nearly two years of training will have passed from the first day of basic until the day soldiers reach their team.

"Since I saw the program was available, I just jumped at the opportunity," Foerster said. "It's tough knowing you won't be able to see your family, but it's a great opportunity to do our training commitment up front."

Infantrymen soar to new heights

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Basic training soldiers from C Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, met the drill sergeants' challenge Oct. 11 to conquer fear while accomplishing the mission of negotiating obstacles at Sand Hill's confidence course.

It's all about mind over matter, said Pvt. Ryan Witt. If a soldier has fear, telling himself he can overcome fear will allow him to vanquish fear during conflict.

"If you have enough confidence in yourself, you can accomplish anything," Witt said.

Witt's commander, Capt. Brian Kaiser, couldn't agree more, he said.

"Soldiers can overcome their fear," Kaiser said. "It's all right to be scared; it's natural, but soldiers need to drive on and accomplish their mission."

Accomplishing the mission is how they overcome fear, he said. It gives them confidence.

As infantrymen, the soldiers can be confident the skills they've learned on the course will be useful to them in the future.

"I think we'll use what we've learned here," Witt said.

For example, soldiers fighting in Military Operations in Urbanized Terrain will crawl under and climb over obstacles on their way toward accomplishing a mission, said Pvt. Daniil Rulin.

"Getting used to this will help out soldiers going to 10th Mountain Division," Witt said. "It will get them used to climbing ropes."

The course prepares soldiers for all kinds of things they may use in the Army, and the physical and mental aspects are not the only things soldiers can apply to the training, Rulin said. The training will help soldiers use the infantrymen's creed.

"The training allows us to fight through the objective and be courageous during times of adversity," Rulin said. "We know that by working together as a team we can accomplish more than just being a team of individuals."

There is a bond developed with soldiers when they work to achieve a common goal, Witt said.

"During battle, you must work with and trust your buddy," Witt said. "Out here, on the course, it's no different."

SF NCOs get bonus

New retention program saves skills

Courtney Brooks
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Selected Special Forces noncommissioned officers near retirement can now get a cash bonus if they choose to remain on active duty.

Under the Army's first-ever Critical Skills Retention Bonus program, certain SF soldiers with 20 to 25 years of service may apply for the bonus beginning Oct. 1.

Soldiers with various specialties are eligible to receive an $8,000 to $10,000-a-year bonus if they sign on for two or more years of service, according to a military personnel message issued Sept. 27.

The CSRB program arrives on the heels of the September announcement that soldiers who had been affected by Stop-Loss for a year would be allowed to request voluntary separation from the Army.

Stop-Loss, which allows the Army to retain soldiers in the service beyond their date of separation or retirement for an open-ended period, was instituted in support of Operations Noble Eagle and Enduring Freedom Nov. 30, 2001. Additional Stop-Loss announcements Dec. 27, Feb. 8 and June 6 expanded the pool of impacted soldiers.

Under the policy announced Sept. 5, soldiers will generally be subject to Stop-Loss for no more than 12 months.

Since Stop-Loss was partially lifted, some personnel officials were concerned that the Army would lose some of its retirement-eligible soldiers in military occupational specialties which are already short.

Stop-Loss is an operational tool, and the CSRB incentive is a retention tool, said Sgt. 1st Class Ronald Nordin, professional development NCO, Special Forces Enlisted Career Management Branch.

Master Sgt. Robert Allyn, senior career adviser for the Special Forces Enlisted Management Branch, said it's imperative to retain as many Special Forces NCOs as possible right now. They have the crucial skills necessary to fight the war on terrorism.

"CMF (career management field) 18 Special Forces NCO's numbers are critically lower than the acceptable Army standards," Allyn said. "The vast majority of Special Forces NCOs who stay past 20 years separate between the 20-21 year mark. We're doing everything possible to try and retain these Special Forces NCOs past the 20 year mark."

The enlisted specialties eligible for the program include Special Forces soldiers with the following military occupational specialties: 18B, weapons sergeant; 18C, engineer sergeant; 18D, medical sergeant; 18E, communications sergeant; 18F, assistant operations and intelligence sergeant; and 18Z, senior sergeant. Funding for the SCRB limits the number of MOSs that can receive the bonus, the MILPER message said.

Special Forces sergeants first class may receive an annual bonus of $10,000, while first sergeants and master sergeants are eligible to receive $8,000.

Payment of the CSRB will be computed by multiplying the years of additional obligated service by the amount payable for each year of obligated service, said Ron Canada, chief of Retention Management Division.

Canada said how a bonus could be calculated: A sergeant first class who is willing to obligate for an additional three years at the amount of $10,000 per year receives the total amount of his bonus of $30,000 paid in a lump sum (minus taxes when applicable).

Eligible soldiers interested in applying must submit a CSRB request memorandum through their local retention NCO, no earlier than 19 years, 6 months of service, Allyn said.

A soldier may not request the CSRB for more than 25 years of active federal service, Canada said.

Parachute rigger changes life with freefall

Sgt. Mellissa M. Novakovich
U.S. Army Parachute Team

Staff Sgt. Celia "C.C." Elliott comes from a unique background. And she's chosen a unique career as one of the Army's Goodwill Ambassadors to the world.

Born in Mexicalli, Mexico, Elliott is the eighth-born of nine children, and no stranger to hardship.

Though her father worked hard to make ends meet, Elliott's mother was plagued with health problems, and the family struggled to survive.

When Elliott was 8, her family moved to Calexico, Calif., a few miles across the Mexican border, where the children attended English-speaking schools for the first time.

"I spoke no English, and I couldn't understand it," Elliott said. "Times were hard. My mother was constantly in and out of the hospital,and Dad had to care for my little brother and myself."

Elliott's mother died just a few months prior to her youngest daughter's high school graduation.

"I had to do something," Elliott said.

"I knew I had to help myself before I could help anyone else."

An Army recruiter visited her school in 1993, and Elliott was intrigued at the prospect of becoming a parachute rigger.

She told her father she was going to visit her brother and boarded a bus to Fort Jackson, S.C., for Basic Combat Training.

"I couldn't tell him, because I knew he wouldn't want me to leave home. I was the youngest girl. I knew he would worry," Elliott said.

After basic training, Elliott was sent to Fort Benning for airborne training.

"I didn't even know that being a rigger meant jumping out of airplanes," she laughed.

"My first time ever in an airplane, and I had to jump. I was scared to death."

But Elliott enjoyed jumping and was intrigued by a free fall parachuting demonstration she saw at her graduation.

"The men in black jumpsuits ... watching them gracefully fly those square parachutes and land so softly. I told myself that one day I was going to do that," she said.

Elliott was assigned to E Company, 1st Battalion, 507th Infantry Regiment, where she performed the basic tasks of an Army rigger: packing and repairing parachutes and performing regular maintenance on air items.

"I liked my job as a rigger, and I moved up fast. The only thing I knew was to say 'yes, sergeant,' work hard and stay in the best shape," Elliott said.

> "I didn't even know that being a rigger meant jumping out of airplanes. My first time ever in an airplane, and I had to jump. I was scared to death."

But while her career was taking off, Elliott's home life grew more difficult.

"My father was struggling to keep my little brother in school. Dad wasn't doing that great and trying to work was beating him down," she said.

Elliott's siblings had families of their own to support, so Elliott sent money home every month to help pay the bills.

Finally, she decided to bring her 15-year-old brother to live with her.

"I didn't know how I was going to raise him on a specialist's pay, with no place to stay, but the Army supported me," she said.

"When I watched him graduate from high school, I knew that the Army had helped me accomplish another goal."

In 1997, Elliott's became a member of the Silver Wings, the same parachute demonstration team she saw jump into her Airborne School graduation.

She traveled with the team, conducting presentations throughout the United States, where she met "a lot of nice people," including her husband, Sgt. 1st Class Michael Elliott, who was also a member of the Silver Wings.

The two "shared a love and inspiration for freefalling," Elliott said, Even their wedding ceremony kicked off with a free fall.

In 1999, the Elliotts moved to Fort Bragg, N.C., where they began diving with the 82nd All-American Free Fall Team. Elliott was the only female member the team.

"In small towns the heads turned at a woman landing under a canopy and it made me feel unique," she said.

But Elliott had a loftier goal.

"My husband and I decided it was time to try out for the best of the best, the U.S. Army Parachute Team 'Golden Knights,'" she said.

Both Elliotts were selected to attend the Golden Knight Assessment and Selection Program, but she sustained an ankle injury and was medically dropped from the program.

In the winter of 2000, Elliott was nearing the end of her enlistment when the re-enlistment NCO requested proof of her citizenship. Elliott was shocked.

"Becoming a U.S. citizen is a process that could take years and without it, I wouldn't be able to re-enlist after eight years.

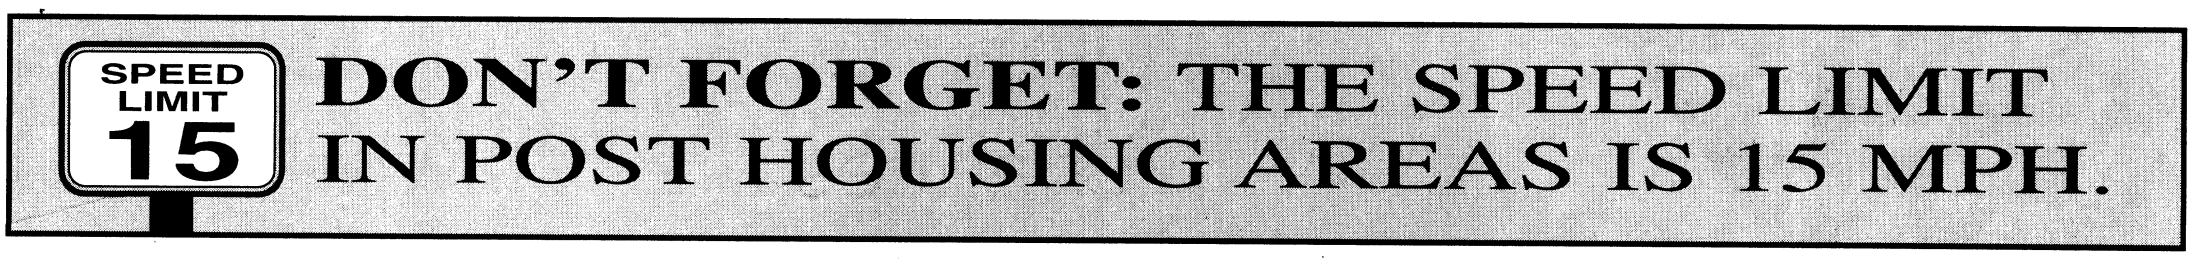
"This could cost me my military career, something I worked hard for," she said.

"Life in the U.S. had been my reality for over 20 years, I always thought of myself as a citizen, now I had to prove it."

After months of phone calls and paper shuffling, Elliott was notified that she could become a legal citizen.

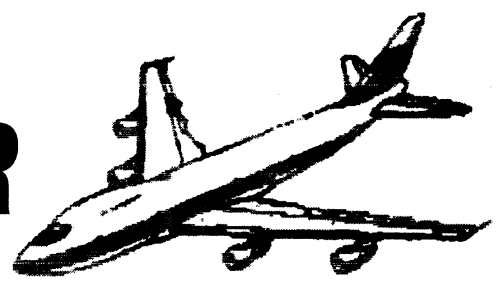
"I signed the papers and took the oath of citizenship on my birthday, January 3, 2001.

"I re-enlisted for six more years and made my first jump since my surgery.



"It was the best birthday present I ever had," she said.

Elliott resubmitted a packet and was selected to attend the Golden Knight Assessment and Selection Program again.



After six weeks of demanding evaluation and 200 free fall jumps, she was "knighted," one of only nine to survive the selection process.

Elliott is now enjoying her first show season with as a Golden Knight.

"After 65 military jumps under round parachutes and more than 750 free fall jumps I wouldn't change a thing. It always reminds me of where I came from."

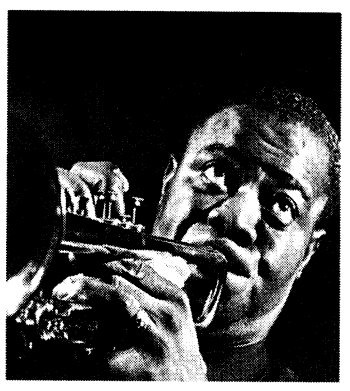
THERE'S NOT ENOUGH ART IN OUR SCHOOLS.



NO WONDER PEOPLE THINK

LOUIS ARMSTRONG

WAS THE FIRST MAN TO WALK ON THE MOON.

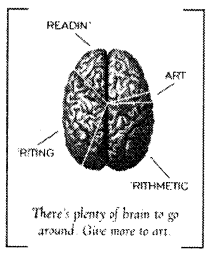
It's a long way from the Apollo Theatre to the Apollo program. And while his playing may have been "as lofty as a moon flight," as Time magazine once suggested, that would be as close as Louis Daniel Armstrong would ever get to taking "one small step for man."

Instead of a giant leap, Louis Armstrong delivered one giant free-form crazy jazz groove for mankind

But as the jazz musician of the 20th century, giant leaps were simply a matter of course for Satchmo. For no one has ever embodied the art form the way he did. It was he who helped make virtuoso solos a part of the vocabulary. It was he who was honored with the title "American goodwill ambassador" by the State Department. It was he who was the last jazz musician to hit #1 on the Billboard pop chart.



Armstrong left his footprints on the jazz world, wearing lace-up oxfords.

Not bad for a kid whose first experience with the trumpet was as a guest in a correctional home for wayward boys. If only today's schools were as enlightened and informed as that reformatory was.

Alas, the arts are dismissed as extravagant in today's schools. This, despite all the studies that show parents believe music and dance and art and drama make their children much better students and better people.

If you feel like your kids aren't getting their fair share, make some noise. To find out how, or for more information about the benefits of arts education, please visit us on the web at AmericansForTheArts.org. Just like the great Louis Armstrong, all you need is a little brass.

There's plenty of brain to go around. Give more to art.

ART. ASK FOR MORE.

Dinner theater sets stage for entertainment

Post families to be actors, stagehands

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

The idea of spending a romantic night dining in a fancy dinner theater on post, with live music and theatrical performances might have seemed like a far-fetched reality a few months ago.

That was then.

Now it's only a matter of months before a dinner theater will be part of the weekend entertainment on Fort Benning.

"I've been on other posts where a dinner theater has been a success," said Peggy Cornwell, theater organizer and wife of Fort Benning Chief of Staff Col. Chuck Cornwell.

"I knew we could make it happen here, it was just a matter of time."

A plan is in the works to transform the Kelley Hill Recreation center into an upscale dinner theater, showcasing some of the most popular and well-known plays right here on post.

Fort Benning will not only set the stage for the proposed theater, but the performers, stagehands and set designers will all come from the military community.

"We have so many talented people right here on post, there is no need to look anywhere else," Cornwell said. "The best part about the theater is it will be our own ideas, from start to finish."

Cornwell, who has acted in several television commercials and community theater productions over the years, began working on plans for a theater when she moved to Fort Benning in June.

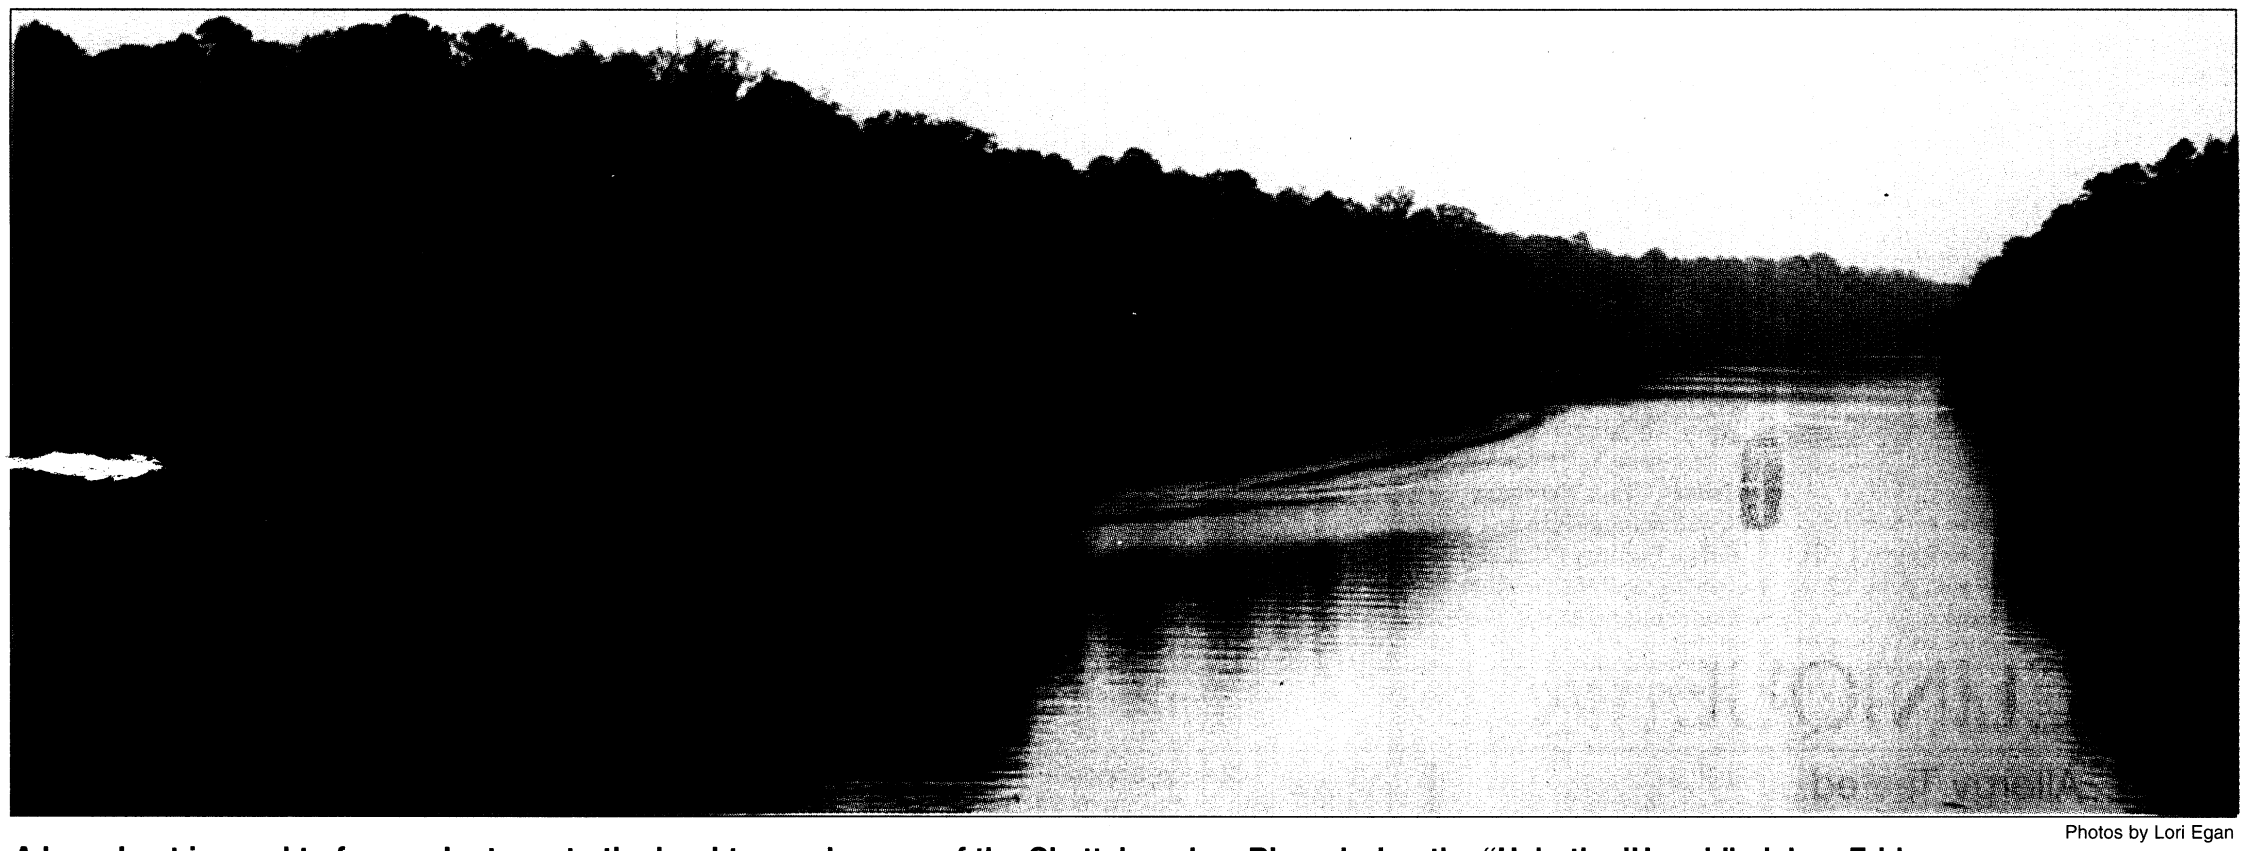
"The toughest part was finding a location," Cornwell said.

"I envisioned a room with plenty of space for dinner, live musical entertainment and a stage for the theater. I think we found exactly what we were looking for."

The Kelley Hill Recreation Center will likely seat 50-60 people.

The commanding general, Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, has endorsed the idea, and the Directorate of Community Activities has already approved the funding.

"We are certain we will have no problem finding corporate sponsorship for the theater," said Tandi Cain-Morris, Commercial Sponsorship and Advertising coordinator for DCA.



"There are many businesses in the community who have been on board with Fort Benning for years and are excited about the opportunity to support us."

Theater organizers are busy preparing for opening night, which is scheduled for Feb. 14.

Helping the 'Hooch

A bass boat is used to ferry volunteers to the hard-to-reach areas of the Chattahoochee River during the "Help the 'Hooch" pickup Friday.

You load 14 tons, and what do you get?

Officer Candidate Phillip Murrell carries trash out of the wood line in the upper pet cemetery area on post.

Tires, automobile parts, drug paraphernalia among trash collected

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

More than 200 people took advantage of the training holiday Friday to Help the 'Hooch.

Help the 'Hooch is an annual event to pick up trash along the Chattahoochee River and its tributaries.

It seems to be working. There's not as much trash this year as there was last year, said Felix Seda, who picked up trash around the upper pet cemetery area both years. Seda works with the Environmental Division of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics. DFEL was responsible for organizing Friday's volunteer and clean up efforts on Fort Benning.

Officer Candidate Phillip Murrell was one of 75 officer candidates with 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, who helped clean the river that flows through the military reservation for approximately 17 miles.

"It's sad that people don't pick up after themselves," Murrell said, picking up a discarded red plastic bucket and filling it with empty drink containers and plastic bags. The University of Nevada, Las Vegas, graduate has picked up trash for years, both as a Boy Scout and when majoring in recreation and leisure.

"There's better involvement now — more people picking up trash, but there is still trash to be picked up," Murrell said.

Climbing up from the Eddy Bridge area, Staff Sgt. Dennis Barry, 30th AG Battalion, said he almost found a whole car — tires, battery, oil filter and a license plate. Other volunteers found a van's bucket seat to go with Barry's car and Officer Candidate Brian Stiller helped load tires abandoned in the upper pet cemetery.

"People should be personally responsible for picking up their own stuff," he said. "Then this wouldn't be necessary."

Nearly 14 tons of garbage was collected during the last three years, said Mark Thornton, Conservation branch, DFEL.

This year the haul included 258 bags of trash and four trucks filled with large items, Thornton said.

He said the most unexpected find this year was a crack pipe near Bradley's Landing.

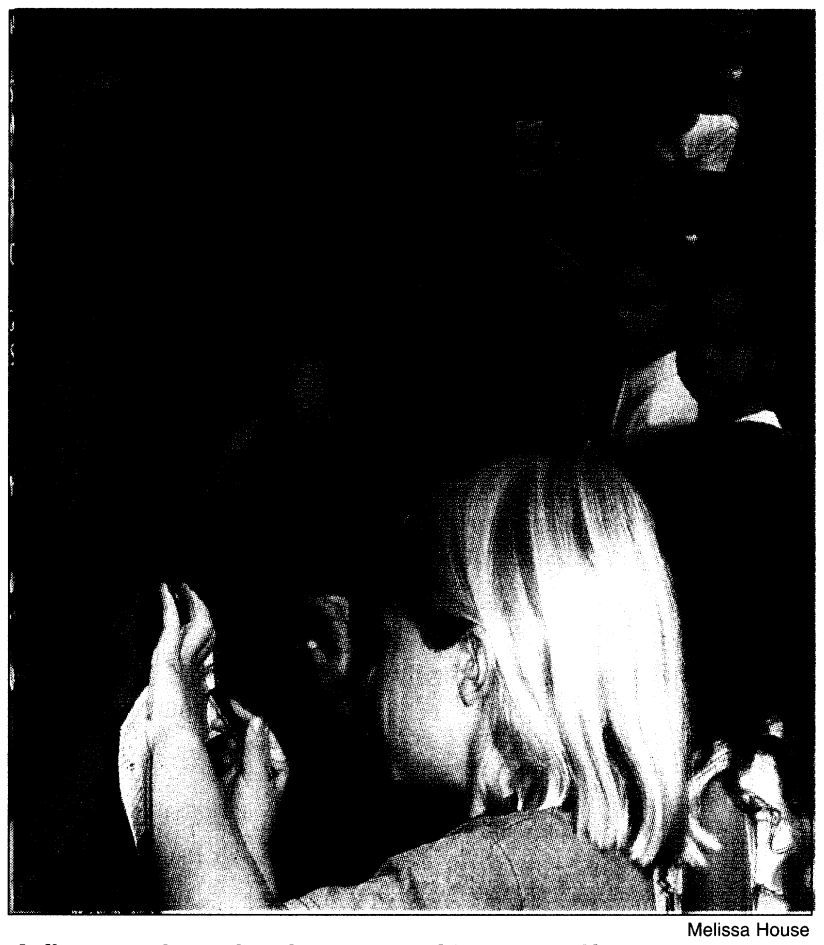
Walk to Vietnam Wall unites pen pals

First-graders put 'social' in studies

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

White Elementary School students waited anxiously to begin the short walk to Sacrifice Field Oct. 11 where they would meet their pen pals and attend the opening ceremony at the replica Vietnam Wall.

The students from White wrote letters last week to first-grade classes at Dexter taught by Jeanie Anderson and Angie O'Bryan. Anne Anti and Ann Lucas, E. A. White teachers started the project and extended an invitation to the Dexter students to meet at the wall and have lunch together at White. The teachers see the pen-pal project as a way to incorporate language and writing skills into the social studies curriculum.



"We have a brand new social studies curriculum this year," said Lucas, "and there is a lot of time devoted to America, American symbols and citizenship. Our visit to the wall today ties right in."

Throughout the remainder of the school year, students will continue to write to one another and take joint, walking field trips to the fire station, post office and bank during the community unit.

Lucas, who has done pen pal projects in the past with students at Stowers Elementary, thinks that the proximity of the two schools will make it easier for the students to enhance their friendships on the field trips.

"They have been so excited about meeting their pen pals," said Anderson. "Since it is so early in the first-grade year, it inspires them to write. They also want to be able to read what their pen pal wrote to them."

The students' next trip together will be to the Main Post Fire Station Nov. 1.

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE AWARENESS MONTH

Children learn violence at home, authority says

Family Advocacy Program

Violence is passed on from one generation to the next in homes where battering takes place. Children first learn about the adult world in their families. What are your children learning if you are a battered woman? They could be learning that violence in the home is a way to deal with conflict.

What effects does domestic violence have on children?

• In homes where domestic violence occurs, children are at high risk of suffering physical abuse themselves. Regardless of whether children are physically abused, the emotional effects of witnessing domestic violence are very similar to psychological trauma associated with being a victim of child abuse.

• Children in homes where domestic violence occurs are physically abused or seriously neglected at a rate 1,500 percent higher than the national average of cases reported in the general population.

• Children may "indirectly" receive injuries when household items are thrown or weapons are used. Infants may be injured if being held by their mother when the batterer strikes out.

• Children from violent homes have higher risks of alcohol and or drug abuse and juvenile delinquency.

Possible signs of a batterer:

• A batterer is often extremely jealous and possessive.

• A batterer's anger is frequently disproportionate to the problem that arises.

• The batterer's anger is often displaced and exaggerated, with the objects of violence often being small animals and property as well as family members.

• The batterer often describes the alcohol abuse as the cause of the battering.

• The batterer blames the battered woman for the violence and the alcohol and other drug abuse.

• The batterer has ineffectively or not dealt with his abuse as a child.

• The batterer has hit or been abusive with a partner in the past.

Possible signs of a battered woman:

• She is frightened of her partner's temper.

• She is often compliant in order not to excite the batterer.

• She apologizes for her partner's behavior.

• She drinks heavily or uses other drugs to cope with the violent situation.

• She has visible bruises, or other temporary or permanent injuries without appropriate explanation.

If you, or someone you know, is involved in a domestic violence situation, call for help. The violence rarely stops without outside intervention.

For more information, call Rebecca S. Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager, or Theresa Sanchez, victim advocate, at 545-4013 or 545-7517.

Theater: Provides acting roles for community

Couple," Cornwell said. "The play has a large appeal."

Most of the actors, stagehands and set directors will work on a volunteer basis, but the theater would like to hire an outside director with plenty of experience.

"I've been paying close attention to the Columbus community theater, and I already have several potential directors who are interested in directing our first performance," Cornwell said.

The cost for families for both the dinner and the performance will be under $20 per person, she said.

"We want these performances to be affordable for everyone," Cornwell said. "This theater will be built for our families, and we want the entertainment to be shared by all."

It's just a matter of time before the first performance is brought to life.

"We are on our way to making this happen," Cornwell said. "After the success of the first one, who knows what the future holds. We hope to make the dinner theater an ongoing outlet for entertainment."

Auditions for the female version of The Odd Couple will be in early January. A contest is also underway to create a name for the theater. The prize is $100 gift certificate from the post exchange. If you have ideas to name the theater or are interested in performing on stage, call 545-7357.

Adoption: Finds working dog new home, family military working dog named Petra.

Petra, a 12-year old Belgian malinois, had served her time as a narcotics detection dog but was no longer fit for duty. Military working dogs must complete annual certification in basic patrol skills and specialty skills.

"She has hip trouble," Johns said, "and she lost her aggression. She just wasn't into biting anymore."

Under Public Law 106-446, the Department of Defense is making former working dogs like Petra available for adoption. The law, which went into effect in 2000, allows working dogs to be adopted at the end of their "useful working life." Decisions about a dog's suitability for adoption are made by the commander of the unit the dog is assigned to in conjunction with a thorough veterinarian's evaluation.

For Johns, the whole process took about six months once he started the paperwork.

"There was a lot of paperwork," he said. "I had a huge stack to fill out and had to answer a questionnaire."

They want to fit the dog to the adoptive family and make sure the dog isn't going to be used as a guard dog, Johns said. Adoptive families also must sign a release of liability and be willing and able to care for any health problems the dog may have.

Because of her hip problems, Petra must take her "Motrin for dogs" daily and have regular visits to the vet. Some days are worse than others for her.

"At a dollar a pill a day, the medication is expensive," Johns said, "but worth it. She's a real sweetheart."

Johns had the opportunity to form a relationship with Petra while he was working as the MP desk sergeant. Her handler would bring her into the station.

"She's the only dog I would let into the station because she was cool," Johns said. "I don't trust some of the younger dogs much, but Petra would put her head in my lap."

Petra's retirement ceremony was, well, unceremonious.

"I just picked her up, and we got into the car."

> "... she lost her aggression. She just wasn't into biting anymore."
> Staff Sgt. Robert Johns

Now that Petra is at home with Johns, she has settled into her new life. She has the run of three fenced acres with her new buddy Spike, a beagle mix. Petra and Spike spend a great deal of time racing the neighbor's dog along the fence line.

"I thought that she might be an inside dog," Johns said, "but she likes it outside."

Johns' sons, Michael and Christopher, like Petra as much as their father does. They weren't nervous about having the former working dog as their new pet, but decided to keep their fingers out of the way at first, just in case.

"I'll throw the ball to her, but she won't do anything." Michael said. "She knows she's retired."

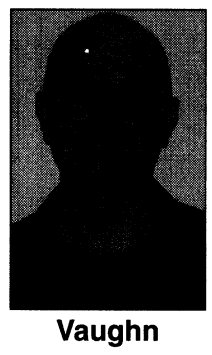
Being careless often leaves scars

Paying attention goes long way in eyes of God

Chaplain (Capt.) Tommy Vaughn
2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

REFLECTIONS



When I was 9, I made the mistake of putting my hand somewhere it shouldn't be and nearly lost the top of my middle finger.

At first glance (or handshake), you wouldn't know I ever had a problem. And yet, a scar is there, visible to anyone who looks close enough a thin white line running around my finger surrounded by stitch marks.

The skin on the side of this finger is still slightly numb after all these years, the damage done all because I wasn't paying attention. I made a mistake. I was careless.

Many people have scars in their lives that aren't visible to others at first glance.

But if you take the time and look close enough, you can see them. Hearts and lives that have been injured, emotions still slightly numb, though years may have passed since the damage was done all because someone wasn't paying attention. Someone made a mistake. Someone was careless.

Vaughn

With time and proper treatment, most physical damage can be repaired. Medical technology continues to improve by leaps and bounds. Doctors and surgeons are able to use their expertise to not only patch us up today, but cover up their work in the process. Emotional damage can also be repaired but often is more difficult to deal with. Broken relationships, bruised egos, and fractured families require much more in the way of time, effort and treatment to heal. The scars, though, may remain.

Fortunately, God is the great physician and can heal all of our hurts, pains and mistakes.

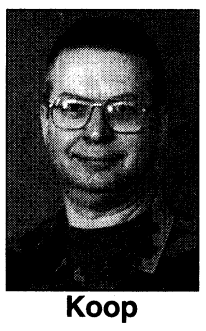
No matter how much damage has been done, he can repair it if you'll allow him to.

Under his loving and guiding hand, even old scars can be made to fade away.

But what if they don't fade? Then allow them to serve as a reminder. As I look at my finger and rub it from time to time, I don't remember the pain anymore. Instead, it reminds me to be more careful in the future. Recognize the scars in your life. Learn from them and be more careful in the future.

Remember that carelessness can scar you and those you love.

Forgiveness isn't easy to receive



Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Forgiveness is not easy to get. Persons seeking forgiveness are still responsible for their actions.

Being sorry isn't enough. Some people are only sorry they were caught. True sorrow leads to acknowledging that you were at fault, that you made a mistake or that you were wrong. Contrition is insufficient.

Admitting guilt alone is insufficient. Guilt and sorrow must move from confession to repentance, that is, returning to right behavior and speech, before forgiveness can be complete. If at all possible, restoration should be made.

The offender must try to undo the damage and right the wrong if forgiveness is to be fully granted.

Koop

Forgiveness is not easy to give. The offended person is responsible to forgive.

The person who forgives gives up the right to get even. I Peter 3:9 makes it clear, "Do not repay evil with evil or insult with insult, but with blessing."

The person who forgives doesn't hold the wrong over the person's head, doesn't keep a record of wrongs, and doesn't bring up the past (I Corinthians 13:5). People may not forget the wrong, but they can choose not to dwell on it.

If you have been wronged, don't withhold forgiveness from someone, even though you may still be hurting or grieving. Don't withhold forgiveness, even if you suspect they may do something else to offend you. Forgiveness frees us from the bondage of hate, revenge and self-pity.

Work together to restore the relationship, to rebuild the trust and heal the hurts. Move forward together toward reconciliation. In those cases where the offender does not seek repentance, you may wisely refrain from reconciliation.

If you are interested in learning more about forgiveness, free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail raymond.koop@benning.army.mil.

Then Peter came to Jesus and asked, 'Lord, how many times shall I forgive my brother when he sins against me? Up to seven times? Jesus answered, ... not seven times, but 70 times seven.
Matthew 18: 21-22

Losing streak continues with 45-14 blowout

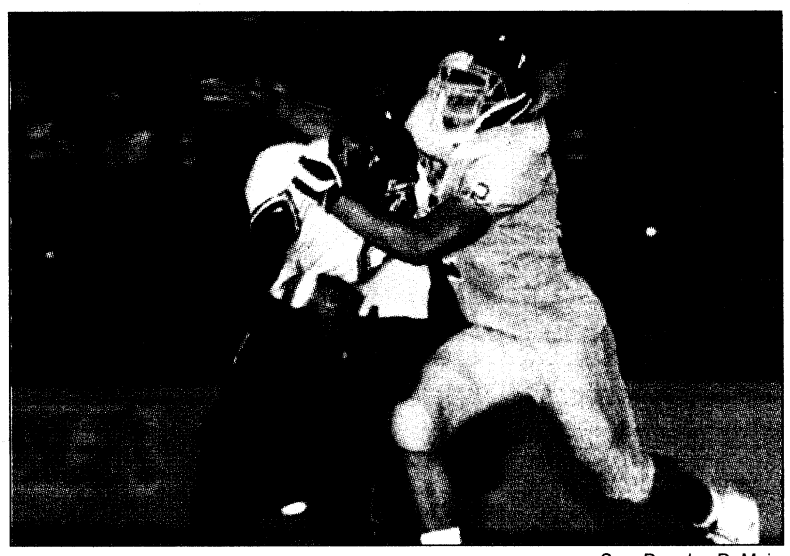
The Upson-Lee High School Knights routed the Spencer High School Greenwaves in a 45-14 blowout Oct. 11 at Memorial Field.

"We played pretty well, but we had some little mistakes that lead to big plays," said Shamon Smith, Greenwaves' running back, who ran for 136 yards.

The game started as a defensive midfield battle. Neither team broke too far into the opponent's territory, but the Knights slipped by the Greenwaves' defense with seconds left in the first quarter for a touchdown.

"We had some bright spots, but when we were down, the (other) team continued to play," said Collins Jones, Greenwaves' head coach.



Then a 35-yard punt return by Robert Brownlee, Knights' punt returner, left them on the 10-yard line. Carey Darden followed that with a rush to the end zone. The score was 12-0 after a missed two-point conversion.

The Knights kicked off to Nick Bass, Greenwaves' wide receiver, for a 25-yard return and the start of a slow drive down the field. At the 1-yard line, Jerome Coverson, Greenwaves' quarterback dived over the pile to put the Greenwaves on the board.

"(The team) plays hard," Jones said. "Even though we look skilled out on the field, a lot of the players don't have more than a couple years of experience in football."

Terrell Terry, Knights' running back, returned the punt for nearly 80 yards down the sideline and was pulled down by the Greenwaves at the 6-yard line.

The Knights ran a bootleg with 15 seconds left in the half and put 6 more points on the board, leaving the field at 25-7.

During the second half, the Knights put up 14 more unanswered points. With six minutes left in the game, after a 40-yard drive, Smith ran in for a touchdown, taking the score to 39-14.

To finish off the game, the Knights drove the ball back down the field to put up 6 more points.

"We are going to keep our head in the game and work harder in practice to overcome this losing streak," Smith said.

The Greenwaves play at 7:30 p.m. tonight at Memorial Stadium.

Seahorses gallop past Free Agents, 21-14

Strong defense, quick offense lead to victory

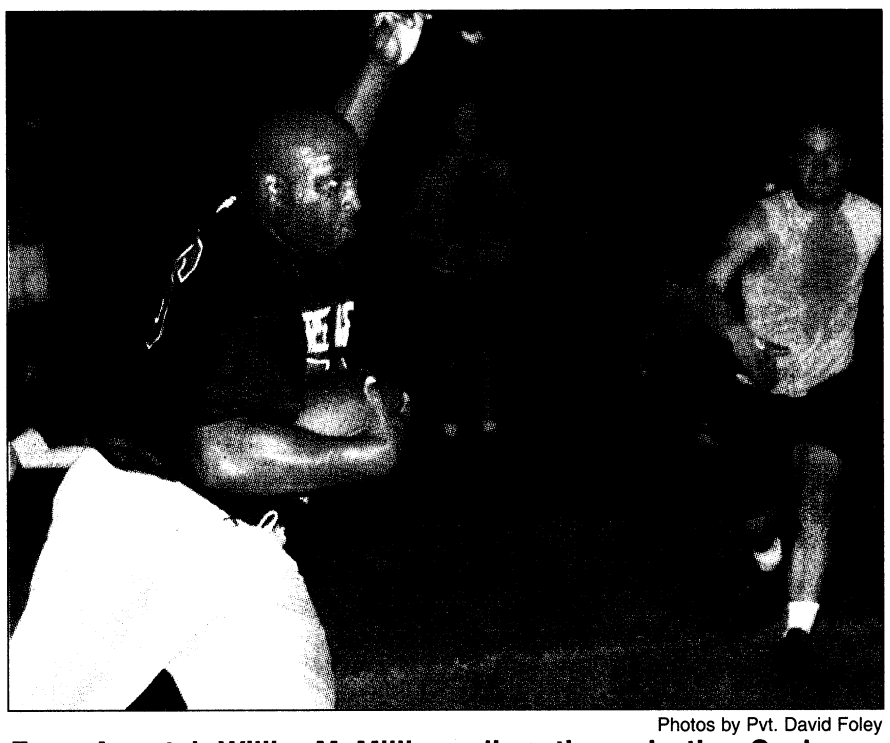
The Seahorses defeated the Free Agents, 21-14, in intramural football action Oct. 10 at Engineer Field.

"We can't be beat," said Montrell Bethea, wide receiver of the 36th Engineer Group Seahorses.



The B Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment's Free Agents came out of the gate strong. They plowed their way to the 5-yard line in the first three plays, which opened the door for Manfred Malone to slip past the Seahorses' defenders to score the first touchdown.

The Seahorses answered the Free Agents in the next play with a Chad Shier rocket to Montrell Bethea who broke away from the heap and sprinted to the end zone.

Blanketing field coverage by the Seahorses and several incomplete passes by the Free Agents gave the Seahorses possession on their own 20, but they couldn't make the drive. The score was tied 7-7 at half time.

"They have to recognize our defense. They had some little guy on me. It was too easy," Bethea said.

After facing strong resistance in the second half, Bethea lead the Seahorses to another touchdown just after halftime.

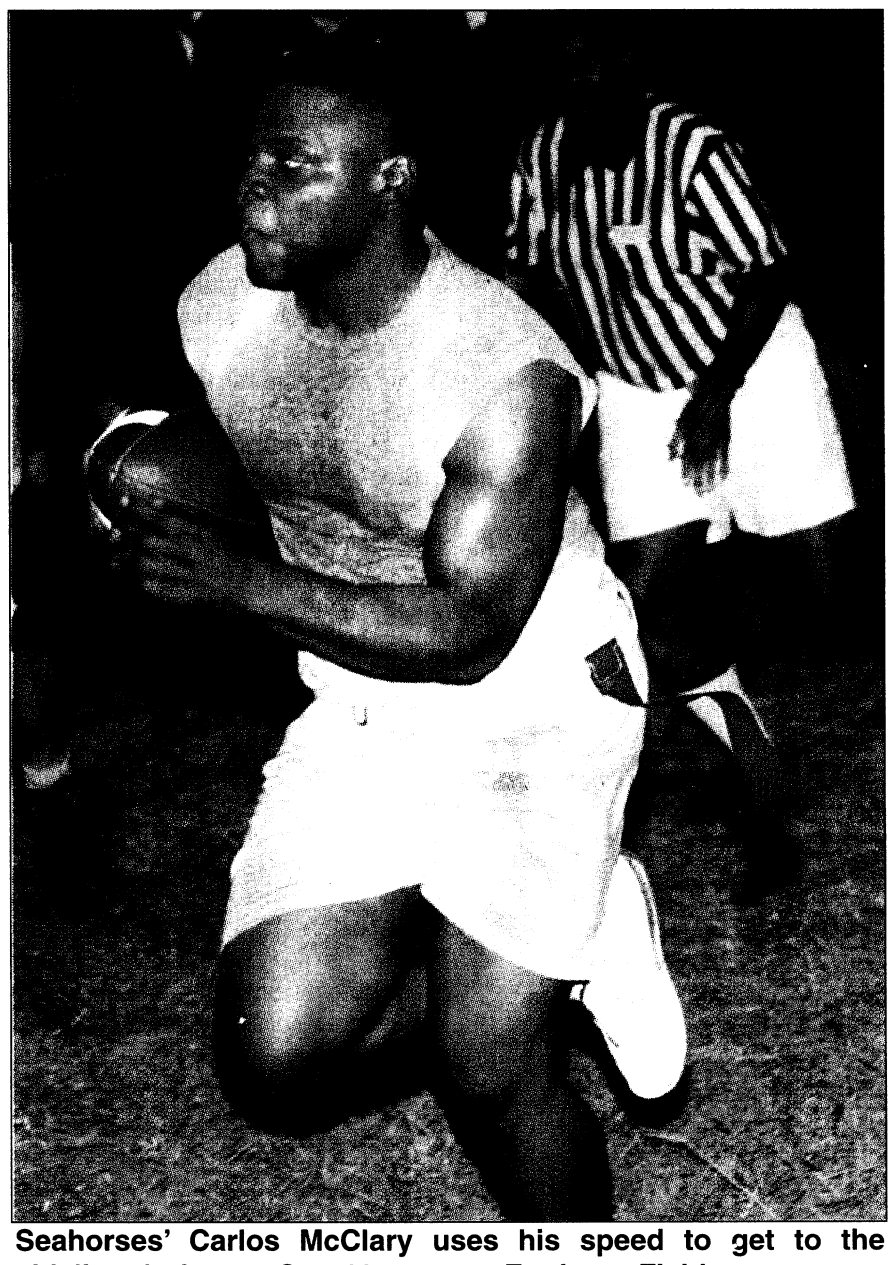
Free Agents' Willie McMillian slips through the Seahorse defense for a first down.

The Free Agents fought tooth and nail to the Seahorses' 15-yard line only to be stopped by the Seahorse defense.

After the turnover, Shire threw a shotgun pass to McClary, who found a hole and ran 50 yards only to drop the ball out of bounds on the 1-yard line.



The Seahorses recovered from the errant fumble, and Shier scored on a quarterback sneak.

On the next drive of the Free Agents, Malone scored a touchdown, bringing the score within 7 points.

Free Agents' Jeremy Spencer then intercepted a pass on the Seahorses' 20-yard line with 15 minutes to go. However, the powerful opposition was able to withstand the Free Agents' drive, and the game ended in a victory for the undefeated, 4-0, Seahorses.

This was only one more page in the book for the Seahorses, who don't plan on losing anytime soon, said Chad Shier, quarterback for the Seahorses.

"Our strong defense is the key. We hope to get the rest of the way with no losses. We're going to stick with what gets us the wins."

Seahorses' Carlos McClary uses his speed to get to the sideline during an Oct. 10 game at Engineer Field.

Vehicles Seized By Police To Be Sold Off To Local Car Buyers

Seized, confiscated and impounded vehicles result in unheard of low prices on cars, trucks, vans and sport utilities

Columbus, GA, While it's still true "Crime doesn't pay" for the criminal, it may turn out to be quite rewarding for some local area car buyers this weekend. Thru Saturday, the criminal's loss is your gain as Rivertown Ford in Georgia will be offering vehicles seized by law enforcement agencies for sale direct to the public.

The War On Drugs and "Three-Strike" laws have resulted in an overflow of vehicles becoming Police property.

Buying police and government seized property has long been a great way to get incredibly low prices on cars, boats, even planes and houses. The problem for the public has been finding the auctions and sales where these items were being sold. Plus, many of these events are not open to the public. But that's now all in the past thanks to the Police Seized Vehicle Selloff .

"There are no special permits or licenses needed to shop or buy."

Why are these such bargains? Simply put, it's because the law enforcement organizations that take possession of these vehicles aren't in the car business. The F.B.I., D.E.A., U.S. Marshalls, Government Auctions and local Police and Sherriff organizations all seize vehicles on a daily basis. Additionally, a surprising number of vehicles impounded by the Police for illegal parking or traffic violations are never claimed by their owners. As a result, these organizations must either pay to store the vehicles, or sell them off.

Now, Rivertown Ford has secured many of these vehicles and will pass the savings on to consumers. "We have been planning for this event for over six months. We've scoured auctions throughout the country for these vehicles plus we've become a regular at the local impound lots" said Williams. He also stressed the dealership will make available plenty of other preowned vehicles so this event will include something for every buyer. "Hondas, Fords, Chevys, Toyotas, Dodges, Chryslers, Nissans, Volkswagens, virtually every make is represented here. Some are even still under factory warranty. But you should get here early because I'm sure the most popular vehicles will sell first. "

"Many buyers can just sign the necessary paperwork and drive home with no down payment."

Brad Williams, General Sales Manager, added buying one of these vehicles wil be super simple. "There are no special permits or licenses needed to shop or buy. Plus, many buyers can just sign the necessary paperwork and drive home with no down payment. And with these incredibly low prices, some payments are just $97 a month."

"With these incredibly low prices, some payments are just $97 a month!"

Williams concluded with a warning that this one-of-kind-event could be a one-time-only event. "It took a lot of work to put this event together and I'm not sure we'll be able to do it again. Make sure you come see us because missing the Police Seized Sell-Off would be a crime!"

RivertownFord is located at 1680 Whittlesey Rd. in Columbus, GA or call 706-653-7420 . For further information and to reserve a vehicle, visit the official Police Seized Vehicle Selloff web site at www.PoliceSeized.com.

Post delays RIF letters

Effective date for RIF remains Jan. 25

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The reduction in force letters post officials planned to deliver to civilian employees Oct. 18 were delayed.

The RIF letters can't be delivered until Congress is notified, said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

> "We need the knowledge of the current work force — we want that knowledge, but we can't hire anyone until the RIF notices are published."

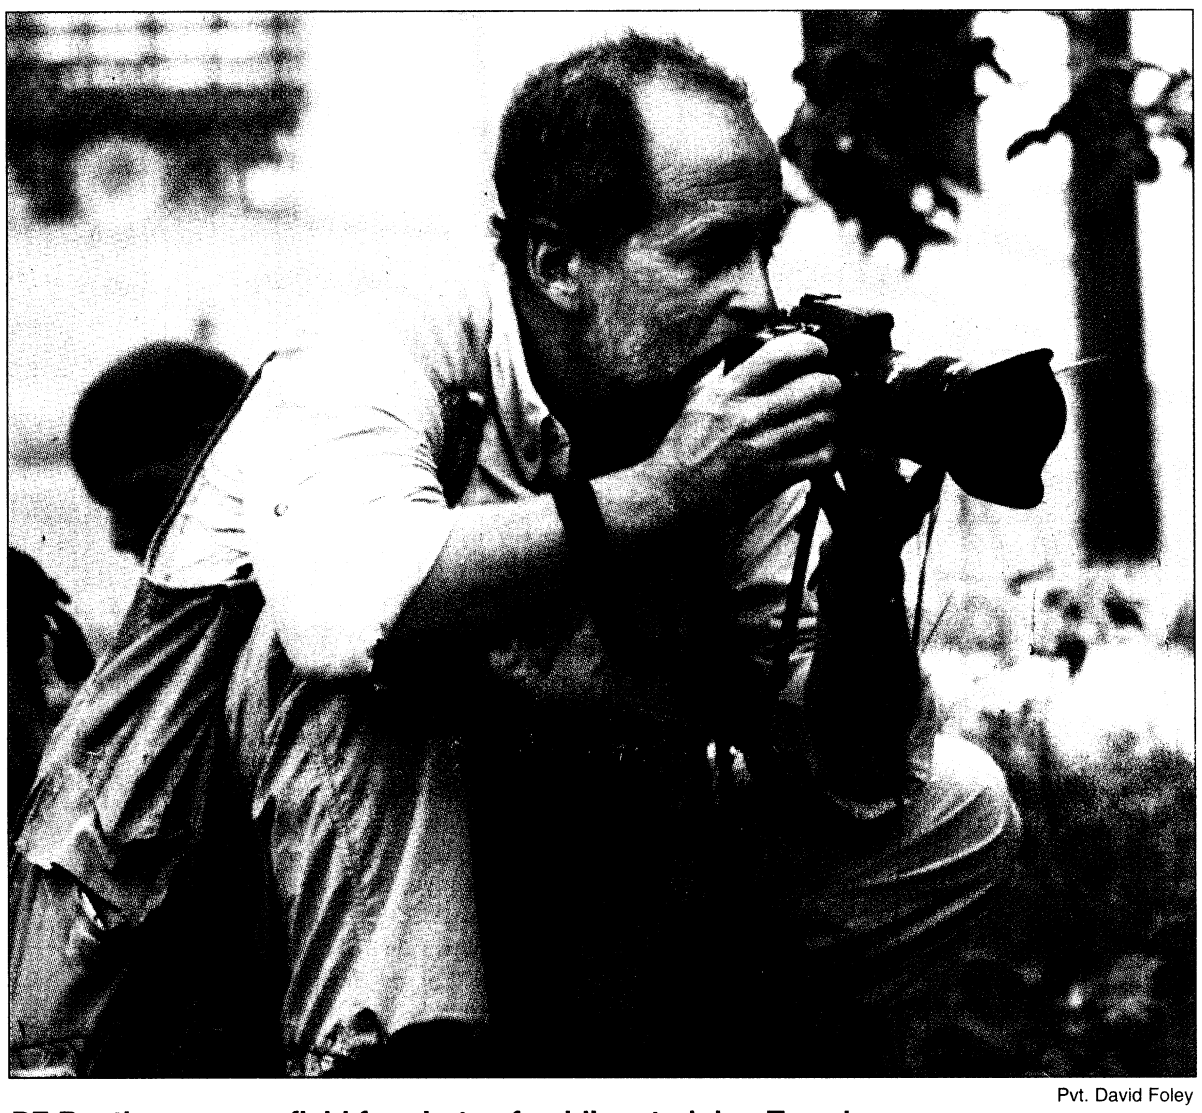
The packet submitted by the Training and Doctrine Command headquarters hasn't cleared the Department of the Army or Department of Defense — two steps in the congressional notification process.



The RIF is associated with a contractor taking over the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics functions and the Adjutant General, Directorate of Military Personnel continuing to provide services as the result of a A-76 commercial activities study.

More than 650 job positions are being abolished in January, which affects nearly 500 employees, said Robert Hight with the Directorate of Resource Management.

As soon as congressional notification occurs, directors and commanders will be advised quickly of the delivery date of the letters. At Photographer PF Bentley visited Fort Benning Tuesday to shoot photographs for a book titled A Day In The Life, which will be a pictorial view of life as a service member.

Bentley is one of 125 photographers who photographed service members on military installations all over the world for a global project.

The project goals are to produce a television special, a museum-quality photographic exhibition, a Web site and a book, which will be published in the spring of 2003, Bentley said.

Bentley spent 24 hours traveling around post taking pictures of everything from soldiers pulling fire guard duty to airborne training.

Buick Challenge free today

Tournament offers rest, relaxation

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Thursday marked the first day of the final Buick Challenge at Callaway Gardens as tournament officials announced Buick will no longer sponsor the tournament after this year.

Located in Pine Mountain, Ga., about an hour from Fort Benning, the Buick Challenge has many things to offer soldiers, including team building opportunities or a day for rest and relaxation on the golf course.

"Soldiers are really looking forward to the tournament," said Lt. Col. Robert Freehill, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, commander. "(The tournament) is an excellent opportunity for us to build esprit de corps and increase morale."

More than five Infantry Training Brigade companies will attend the Buick Challenge today for Military Appreciation Day.

Getting soldiers involved in community activities makes them more well-rounded people, said Freehill, who has three companies in his battalion going to the event.

"I'm proud of my men," said Capt. Beau Hendricks, B Company, 2nd Bn., 58th Inf. Regt, commander. "They've done an outstanding job during training, and they deserve the reward of going to the tournament and

Check points snag drunken drivers

I.D. checkers protect post, catch DUIs

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The access control points have been helping post with more than force protection; they have also increased the number of DUIs caught on post.

"The people at the access points don't have a glamorous job, but they are good at it," said Maj. William Hoy, Military Police Activity executive officer. "Every time they apprehend someone driving under the influence, it's like they saved a life." Since August 1, about 38 drunken drivers were caught at the checkpoints and an average of eight to 15 drunken drivers are caught every month.

"I pulled one person aside and asked her if she had been drinking alcohol tonight, she said 'No, I've only been drinking beer,'" said Sgt. William Gardner, team leader with 414th Military Police Company from Joplin, Mo. "That one was solved pretty quickly."

Some drivers play the part very well, but even they can be caught after further investigation, he said.

"The people who get DUIs don't just pull up and say 'I'm drunk,'" said Gardner, who averages apprehending one DUI every Friday and Saturday night.

All of the personnel at the check points go through a Fort Benning school for access control before they go out to the ACP, Hoy said.

"I don't know if people think, because we are reservists, we don't know what we're doing, but many of us are police officers in our civilian lives," said Sgt. Ronny Houdyshell, team leader with 414th MP Co.

> "I pulled one person aside and asked her if she had been drinking alcohol tonight, she said 'No, I've only been drinking beer.'"
> Sgt. William Gardner
> Team leader

"The MPA has benefited more than anyone from them being here," Hoy said. "The reservists who have five to 10 years of law enforcement experience are teaching the younger MPs some street savvy and other things they typically wouldn't learn in the schoolhouse."

One checkpoint isn't "safer" to go through than another, Hoy said. The personnel at the checkpoints are regularly rotated, so all of the checkpoints have been successful in identifying DUIs.

"You may think you have a high tolerance and be as straight as an arrow after 10 beers, but people can't depend on their tolerance," Hoy said. "If alcohol is detected, either you're over the limit or not."

Those who attempt to get on post while under the influence can expect to be identified, apprehended, processed and charged, Hoy said. Then the car will be towed at the owner's expense.

"It's our job to make it safe to drive around on post," Houdyshell said. "People know they have to come through an access point full of police to get on post. Just don't drive if you've been drinking."

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME

Saving time or shifting it?

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

COMMENTARY

Someone asked me last week how I felt about Daylight Saving (not SavingS) Time. My reply was immediate. I hate it. As a parent, it's the biggest pain in the rear next to Halloween, but I won't digress.

Sunday officially marks the END of DST, where we revert back to standard time. OK, so if I just spent all summer saving time, where is it? And where will it be in the middle of the winter when I think the world needs it the most?

To me, there is nothing worse than having an extra hour of daylight in the morning when I'm asleep, and then not having it during the evening. When it is dark at 5 p.m., it means that my kids are on each other's nerves because they can't play outside and it's still three hours until bedtime. You'll hear my screams of frustration within a five block radius. I guarantee it.

I decided that it was time to do a little research on the whole mess. I found an interesting Web site, seven pages worth, which told me everything I needed to know about DST from the beginning of time.

It appears as if our beloved Benjamin Franklin, way back in 1784, is actually to blame. He proposed the idea while in Paris as an American delegate. Some of his friends in the oil lamp business rather liked the idea.

But the first serious advocate of DST was a Brit named William Willett who published a pamphlet called A Waste of Daylight, in 1907. Whoa there. Didn't we go to war to free our country from absurd British notions?

We first dabbled with an official law back in 1918, but it proved to be so unpopular, that it was repealed the following year. After many more years of random clock switching that got us through World Wars I and II, our Congress finally passed the Uniform Time Act of 1966. Yee-haw!

Again, there was great dissension, after which provisions were made for states not interested in saving time. Those states could be exempted from DST by passing a state law.

By now, you are probably on the edge of your seats, just waiting to hear what comes next. Want to know who is in charge of DST? Sure you do. It's the Department of Transportation. Interesting. I'm guessing that the DOT involvement in DST began about the time someone discovered that they went through SEVEN different time zones in a 35 mile stretch of highway between Moundsville, W. Va. and Steubenville, Ohio in 1964.

According to the DOT, people like DST because they have more light in the evenings and can do more. It also saves a whopping "less than 1 percent of energy per day," except, of course, for the four darkest months of the year: November, December, January, and February.

But are you ready for this one? DST has a small public health benefit. During the summer, you are less likely to be hit by a car while walking near a road.

So when we fall back to standard time, it's just like what happens when you play a country song backwards. Instead of getting your wife back, your truck back and your dog back, you now have less light in the evenings, and are more likely to be hit by a car. But on the bright side, we should save more than 1 percent of energy per day if you follow my logic.

Since I always thought that daylight was just like sleep and couldn't be saved up, I was encouraged to read that the DOT says the term "saving" is inaccurate, and should really be "shifting" time.

Aha! What a brilliant statement! And to top it off, the DOT reports that only a whopping 70 countries on our planet even use DST. I guess it's making a big difference in life down there in Antarctica.

As for me, I'm more confused now than I was last week. I'm trying to figure out if it is DST that I hate, or is it standard time?

I think I'm just going to take a personal exemption and not "fall back," since the Georgia legislature hasn't gotten around to passing that state exemption yet. I'm going to call it HOT (House Operating Time) and next week when I'm an hour late for everything, my boss and office mates are just going to have to work around me.

Accidents make writer wonder how healthy bicycling really is

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COMMENTARY

Bicycling, they say, is good for your health. Good aerobic work out and easy on the knees.

I got my first bicycle when I was 9 years old. It was a black and white Schwinn and was a Christmas present, so I learned to ride it in the basement, circling the support beams. Once the snow pack melted we kids used to play cops and robbers with the bikes, cutting one another off to make the stops.

In Germany I got a three-speed German bike. I used to bounce it along the cobblestone roads and race through the Schwartzenwald. When my Dad was reassigned to the Presidio of San Francisco, the bike went along.

The bike almost became a permanent part of my anatomy when a car pulled out in front of me as I raced down Taraval Street. I hit both hand brakes so hard the cables snapped. I managed to avoid hitting the car but learned that metal was harder than flesh when I slammed both feet on the ground to bring the bike to a stop and nearly ended my chance to procreate.

My next bike was a Peugeot that I bought when I was stationed in Germany. I kept it for 25 years and never had an accident.

But they stopped making parts for it, so I graduated to a Miele, supposedly French for honey.

And that's when I learned to appreciate helmets.

My first crash came at 5 a.m. one fall day as I screamed around a dark intersection and startled a black cat that ran under my wheel and flipped me over on my left shoulder — broken collar bone, broken rib and smashed Bell Helmet. Forty-seven years of bike riding and my first bad accident.

Pretty good percentage, I thought, as I waited to mend and get back on the bike.

I managed to do OK for two years with only a minor spill on a railroad crossing. But a little over a month ago, I challenged the hairpin curve on the Riverwalk and lost.

No broken bones, but I left a lot of flesh on the bike path. Also, I had to replace my Giro Helmet, which was cracked on the left side where I hit the tarmac.

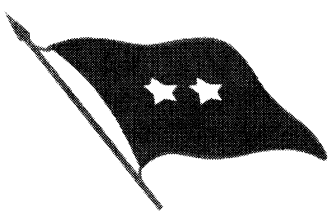
The skin healed and I was soon back in the saddle, vowing to take it easy. I want to live to see 60.

But there I was cruising along, heading for the water treatment plant and two dogs appeared as if by magic. I yelled as they stepped in front of the bike, and I used the rib cage of the big one as a ramp to launch into space.

Unfortunately I didn't clear the dog, nor did I manage to do a 360 degree back flip, instead landing on my right shoulder and of course, head.

I think Giro stock just went up this time it's a separated shoulder.

The lesson here is skin and bones heal, but a blow to the head can lead to serious disability and death. Yes, I rode for more than 40 years without a helmet and never hit my head in a fall.



But why tempt fate? Any of my three accidents could have led to a cracked skull, but my helmet saved me. That's why I cringe when I see children and even grownups riding their bikes without a helmet. You might be the safest cyclist out there, but you never know what awaits you around the next corner.

Editor's note: Former Fort Benning soldier Timothy Otis Whitted, 23, died Oct. 8 after he lost control of his mountain bike. He was not wearing a helmet at the time of the accident.

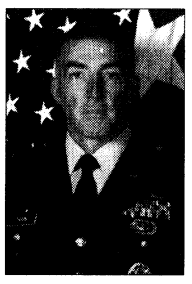
CG notes Red Ribbon Week



The problems associated with illegal drugs have become prevalent in every community regardless of size or location, and Fort Benning has a responsibility to our soldiers, family members, civilian employees to create an environment free of illegal drugs.

The National Red Ribbon Campaign held each October, calls attention to the devastating effects of illegal drugs on individuals, families and communities.

Businesses, schools, law enforcement officials, service organizations, religious institutions, governments, sports teams and individual soldiers will show and demonstrate their commitment to drug-free, healthy lifestyles by wearing and displaying red ribbons during Red Ribbon Week.

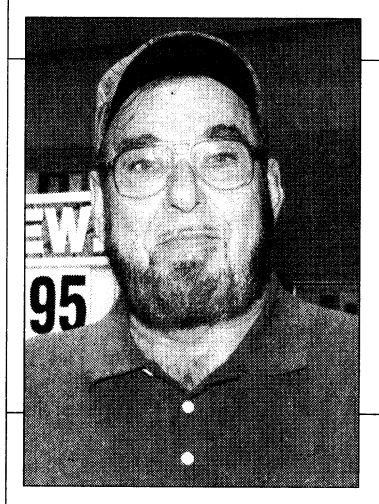
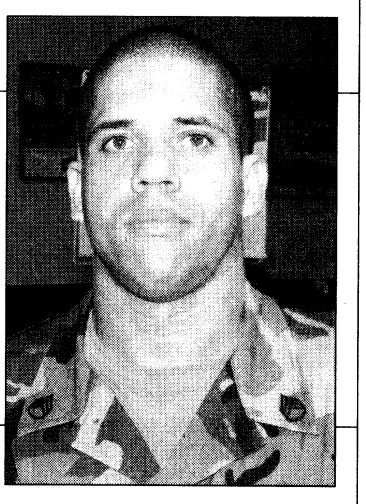
I proclaim Oct. 28-Nov. 1 as Red Ribbon Week on Fort Benning.



I direct all Army leaders to educate their soldiers, family members and civilian employees on the destructive results of illegal drug use.

The drug culture continues to adapt — and worsen. The Army must continue to do our part to defeat this scourge in our society.



— Maj. Gen. Paul D. Eaton
Commanding General

Fort Benning boasts CID agent of the year

War mission leads to recognition

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's own Chief Warrant Officer John Welch is the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command's Warrant Officer of the Year. Welch, the Special Agent in charge of the 86th CID Detachment, received his award Oct. 18 at Fort Belvoir, Va.

Welch returned from a 340-day deployment to Uzbekistan, Afghanistan and Kuwait Oct. 7.

"He was selected for the award because of his selfless service," said Lt. Col. Deborah Geiger, Benning CID battalion commander.

Welch was instrumental in getting the team from Fort Benning ready to deploy on various missions that arose after the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, 2001.

"I gave SA Welch the toughest mission," she said, "And he was the first to deploy.

Before deploying, Welch and the other agents received three days of training on communications equipment and other tactical skills.

Welch used his training on the ground in the caves at Tora Bora, while paired with special forces troops.

"We initially went into Uzbekistan to set up CID operations," Welch said. "A week later, we tore everything down in order to go to Afghanistan."

While in Afghanistan, Welch and teammate, Sgt. Kyle Buckout from Fort Stewart, took care of logistics and helped the warfighters with battlefield investigations and other battlefield issues. They went into the caves to collect DNA evidence and other evidence that could be used against al-Qaeda leaders.

"While we were there, we really solidified our relationship with the (SF) warfighters," Welch said. "We took care of the things they didn't have time to do."

> "I walked into the CID office in Kuwait and someone congratulated me. I didn't believe him ... It was truly a surprise."
>
> John Welch
> U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command

Although this was not the first deployment in Welch's 18-year career, he said it "was absolutely the best."

Welch said the CID agents were not the only ones trying to map out their course.

"Every day there was a new obstacle to figure out," he said

Welch lost almost 20 pounds while in Afghanistan eating three MRE meals a day and hiking up and down the hills of Tora Bora with his equipment.

"We weren't around any of the encampments. The mujhadeen soldiers we were with would cook some of their local food, but it wasn't very sanitary and there were a lot of intestinal problems."

To blend in with the locals, Welch had to wear a cap pulled down low to cover his red hair.

Welch and Buckout walked 10 to 20 kilometers daily, and occasionally rode donkeys.

Both men took the unusual mode of transportation in stride.

"I was in the high school rodeo association," Welch said. "I grew up on a farm in Winona, Miss., so riding was second nature to me."

Buckout also had riding experience as a former infantry soldier with the Old Guard's caisson platoon.

After 30 days in Afghanistan, Welch went back to Uzbekistan to re-establish their CID office.

"The folks in Uzbekistan thought we had left for good," Welch said. "They had given away our commo equipment. Welch returned to Afghanistan two to three days a week until he left for Kuwait in March 2002.

"He was pulled because of his abilities to be the operations officer in Kuwait," Geiger said.

When soldiers started rotating home, Welch volunteered to stay on and complete the mission, she said.

"He probably has the CID record for days deployed."

Welch filled in as the personal security officer for the Coalition Land Forces Component Commander, traveling with the general around the theater.

The CID battalion leadership did a good job in keeping news of the award secret while Welch was deployed.

"I walked into the CID office in Kuwait and someone congratulated me," Welch said. "I didn't believe him, so he pulled up the e-mail from the CID data terminal to actually show me."

"It was truly a surprise," he said.

Welch started his career as a military policeman at Fort Bragg, N.C., followed by a tour at the Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kan.

"I quickly realized that corrections was not what I wanted to do," Welch said. "I thought about getting out."

Welch's commander at the Disciplinary Barracks had previously been in the CID and talked him into giving it try. The switch worked well for Welch. After 12 years with the CID, Welch said the best part of is job is being able to see things through to the end.

"As an investigator, we are there at the beginning, we walk through the investigative process and get to see the end product whether it be good or bad," he said.

Welch received his award at the conclusion of the annual CID leaders' convention.

"I've done nothing that I feel is above and beyond what any other CID agent would have done under the same circumstances," Welch said.

"The support from this battalion is the best I've ever seen for a deployment. I would have stayed longer."

DA honors family advocacy manager

Sterling Award winner makes progress

The "commanders' best friend" received a Department of the Army award for outstanding service to Fort Benning and neighboring communities.

Marilyn Wallace, Fort Benning's Army Community Service chief, said Rebecca S. Welch, winner of the Sterling Performance Award and post Family Advocacy Program manager, is command's best friend because she supports them through the ACS programs she has developed and implemented.

"I was honored to be selected," Welch said. "It's a very prestigious award."

Once a year, the DA selects a winner of the award based on their improvements in mission support, military and civilian teamwork, customer service and productivity.

"When you look at all the nominees in the Army worldwide, it's a tremendous achievement," Welch said.

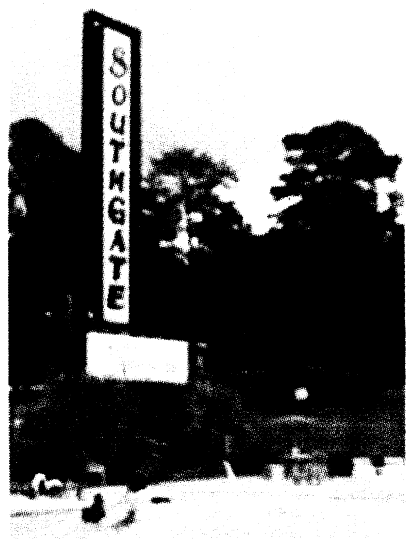
Welch, who's been the program manager since 1988, prides herself on making a difference for children and families, she said.

"Welch is a true visionary — always looking for ways in which to improve the status quo," Wallace said.

She has a way of bringing people and resources together, Wallace said. Her experience and determination to make a difference are invaluable to Fort Benning, commanders and the surrounding communities.

With the help of Joann Cavis, Muscogee County extension agent, Welch co-foundered the Child Abuse Conference in Columbus, a biennial conference focused to decrease system abuse of children.



"It's been my initiative to come up with programs for the good of the community," Welch said.

She's the recipient of the Commander's Award for Civilian Service, the Superior Civilian Service Award, and in 1999, the Soroptimist International of Columbus, the world's largest service organization for executive and professional women, awarded Welch the Woman of Distinction Award in human rights and status of women.

As board member for both the Health and Wellness Key Support Team and the Advocacy Case Review Committee, Welch looks out for the well-being of soldiers and their families, so commanders have more time to resolve other issues.

"(Welch) is sensitive to the growing concerns about the many stressors families face," Wallace said. "Her contributions have enriched the lives of countless individuals — on and off the installation of Fort Benning."

Fort Benning to welcome trainers

Twenty countries' representatives to visit post

Lee A. Rials
WHINSEC

The Conference of American Armies will hold its ninth Training and Education Conference at Fort Benning at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation Tuesday through Nov. 1.

Fort Benning's commanding general, Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, will preside over the gathering of senior trainers from the armies of 20 countries. In addition to the member nations represented, three other nations' armies will be represented, as will two invited organizations.

TEC is one of four specialized conferences of the CAA that focuses on "the American armies and their contribution to the formulation of defense policies in the context of new challenges to continental security."

The conference will address the "addition of topics related to new threats and defense policies within the Military Education System."

Participants will analyze the programs, materials and content that member armies could incorporate into their systems of military education to ensure a current and relevant response to emerging risks and threats such as terrorism, narco-trafficking and others."

A board of officers has been designated for the conference, including the president, Eaton and two officers from the Canadian army, which is the CAA's permanent executive secretariat for the 25th cycle — Maj. Gen. Rick Hillier and Col. Ian Nicholls.

Col. Richard D. Downie, commandant of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, will be the secretary.

Delegates from the following 20 member armies are expected to attend the conference: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Perú, Trinidad and Tobago, United States, Uruguay and Venezuela.

The three observer armies sending delegates are Barbados, Jamaica and Suriname.

The Inter-American Defense Board and the Conference of Central American Armed Forces will also be represented.

The aim of the Conference of American Armies is the analysis, debate and exchange of ideas and experiences related to matters of common interest in the field of defense so as to heighten cooperation and integration between the Armies and to contribute from a military thinkers' point of view to the security and democratic development of member countries, according to its Web site.

AAFES, NCO Club making strides for soldiers

Diverse delegates bring change

Anyone who walks past the Main Mall Post Exchange furniture store will likely notice a new display of sofas, love seats, lamps and other luxury furniture.

The spread of stylish furniture is the result of issues raised at the 2002 Army Family Action Plan symposium in February.

"Many soldiers wanted to know about our prices and how we can make things more affordable," said Jacqueline Tucker, learning facilitator for AAFES. "We listened and took notes. We immediately began making the necessary changes."

AAFES has already addressed several issues, including:

•AAFES prices are being checked with local competitors and marked 5 percent below the average price.

•The furniture store has been remodeled to allow for a larger selection.

•The electronics department was expanded and updated to provide a variety of products in different price ranges.

"Our goal at AAFES is to provide the lowest prices possible to our customers," Tucker said. "We also want to know how our customers feel about our service. We have placed customer comment boxes around the store and we will respond to those comments within 24 hours."

Other changes around post have also occurred because of requests made at the symposium:

•The Directorate of Community Activities will conduct a feasibility survey for a "Sports USA" facility to be built at the NCO Club.

•An concert series has begun for basic trainees on Sand Hill.

•An October festival was implemented and planned. Other season festivals will follow.

"Delegates really stressed the need for a broader range of low-cost entertainment and activities for soldiers and families on post," said Marilyn Wallace, director of Army Community Service.

"They also talked about the importance of properly marketing the activities so families are aware of what is happening on the post around them."

Delegates at the symposium represented all walks of life on Fort Benning, including spouses, commanders, enlisted soldiers and veterans.

"We like to have a good mix of delegates involved from units, family readiness groups and other factions of Army life," Wallace said.

"The AFAP symposium is a vital part of keeping soldiers and family members involved with what matters most to them."

Some of the most important changes on post have come as a result of AFAP.

Spouse support groups and improved education have all resulted from previous symposiums, Wallace said.

"I enjoyed how the symposium went," Tucker said. "I thought each group of delegates really took their time to think about what they wanted to present to AAFES and other agencies represented there. We felt we all communicated very well."

Fort Benning will also participate in an Armywide AFAP symposium in Virginia in November.

President signs bills to increase defense funding for troops

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

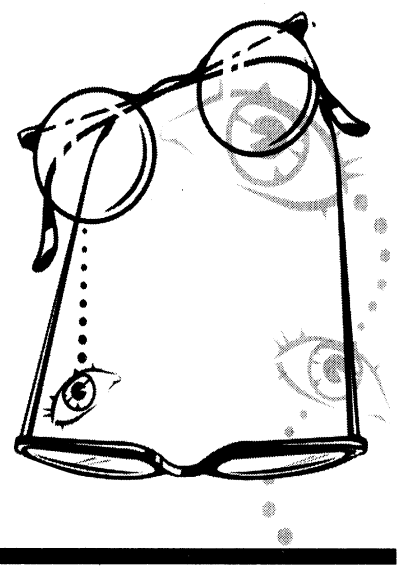
WASHINGTON — President George W. Bush signed two bills that will give service members the resources they need to serve America at home and abroad during a ceremony Wednesday at the White House.

"We've asked our military to liberate a captive people on the other side of the Earth. We've asked our military to prepare for conflict in Iraq, if it proves necessary. We owe them every tool they need to fulfill their missions," Bush said.

The first bill signed was the Defense Appropriations Bill, which is nearly $335 billion — a $37 billion increase from fiscal year 2002. The defense bill will go toward a 4.1 pay increase, additional full-time support from the National Guard and Reserve and increased funding in research and development of weapon systems, Bush said.

"This legislation begins development of the next generations of weaponry," Bush said.

"We ended the Crusader artillery program, a program that was designed for a different era.



"Instead, we will fund new systems, systems that will enable our military to do a more effective job at defending America and our freedoms. Systems such as the unmanned aerial vehicles like the Predator and the Global Hawk that we've used so effectively in Afghanistan."

The Military Construction Appropriations bill, the second one signed, adds $10.5 billion for building and upgrading military installations and for military family housing.

"We're taking care of our people," the president said. "We want the people who wear the uniform to know America appreciates their service."

Thousands attend outdoor Soldier Show

Nearly 7,000 soldiers and family members attended the annual U.S. Army Soldier Show Oct. 16 during its worldwide tour of Army installations.

The show, performed for soldiers by soldiers, included a Fort Benning soldier from the 13th Corps Support Battalion who is touring as a performer with the group.

"I've been in 18 years, and this is a little going away present to myself. I love singing, dancing and entertaining soldiers. It's been really fun," said Staff Sgt. Gregory McPhee, a cook with 608th Ordnance Company. He also toured with the show in 1989.

Being in the show does more than give him the chance to entertain, McPhee said. It has helped him be a better soldier.

"Doing the tour has given me a lot of different opportunities that have helped me grow as a NCO," he said.

The show was performed at Fort Benning's Wetherby Field and was the Soldier Show's first outdoor performance in the U.S.

Thousands of Sand Hill soldiers attended the concert Oct. 16.

"I think an outdoor show was imperative to reach all of the soldiers at the same time," said Victor Hurtado, artistic director with the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center. "There was a great energy coming from the crowd. It went beyond our expectations."

Thousands of basic training and one-station unit training soldiers took a break from training to watch the show.

"It makes the show better knowing they're soldiers you could serve with, instead of a bunch of civilians who may not understand what we are going through," said Pvt. Brian Moseley, 2nd Battalion 58th Infantry Regiment.

Life on the road is no vacation for the performers, who also help set up up before the show and tear down afterward. Some performers had to take a physical fitness test the next day.

Volksmarch will become annual event

Pfc. Brian Trapp

Nearly 65 people participated in a 10K volksmarch Saturday morning on Sand Hill in conjunction with the Fall Fest.

"Volksmarching is big in Germany," said Chuck Hunsaker, president of the Association of the U.S. Army, which sponsored the event. "Anyone stationed there has probably been on one. We thought it would be a fun event for the community."

Participants had the opportunity to spend a fun Saturday morning on Sand Hill, he said.

"It's a great morning to be out and hike through the woods and have a look through the Fall Fest," said retired Sgt. 1st Class Daniel Young. "When I was stationed in Germany, I went on volksmarches all the time."

There are plans to make both the Fall Fest and the volksmarch a larger, annual event, said Brian Smith, chief of Marketing for the Directorate of Community Activities.

"The march was well-liked, and all participants received a medal at the end," Smith said. "We had a limited amount of time to get the information out about the volksmarch and anticipate it to be much larger next year."

The Fall Fest kicked off Oct. 16 with the first outdoor Soldier Show concert in the U.S.

There were a variety of rides, craft booths and food vendors at the weeklong event.

"No one here can remember the last time we've had a multiple day event like the Fall Fest," said Jim Shoemaker, DCA's program manager. "There are plans to continue doing more and larger events at Wetherby Field."

In honor of National Physical Therapy Month, the MACH physical therapy staff will be holding a health fair at Stewart Watson Field on 31 October from 0700 to 1030. All members of the community are welcome to attend for general information and to ask questions. In case of inclement weather, the health fair will be moved to Bryant Wells Fitness Center.

Tax forms to be available online

LES access saves money, time

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Defense Finance and Accounting Service is putting pay information at the fingertips of the military community.

Beginning in January, the 2002 W2 tax forms will be available online through the DFAS myPay system.

A personal identification number is needed to access personal accounts. Service members, retirees and civilian employees who do not remember receiving their PIN or do not remember the number can go to http://www.dfas.mil/, and click on myPay, which is under the "Money Matters" heading.

Due to security reasons PINs are mailed to the recipients, and it could take from three to seven days to get the number after the request has been made, Ferguson said.

"We decided to put the W2 form online because we get a lot of phone calls from soldiers who are deployed, have lost their originals or for some reason need another copy," said Catherine Ferguson, a DFAS spokeswoman.

Troops can concentrate on their mission when they are not worried about pay and benefits, said Dennis Eicher, Electronic Commerce, Military and Civilian Pay Services director. That is why DFAS is providing innovative and reliable tools, he said. Troops can take charge of their pay accounts online.

Some of the other finance actions that can be performed online to date are: purchasing savings bonds, managing allotments, viewing and printing travel vouchers.

Customers can review leave and earning statements online as far back as three months and stop delivery of the hard copy , an option which can save money, Eicher said.

If civilians receive an LES electronically, the Department of Defense would save more than $6 million annually, Ferguson said. A hard copy LES costs 34 cents, she said.

Eliminating customer service activities also cuts costs, Ferguson said.

"One of our goals is to allow customers to do online anything that they previously had to stand in line or wait on the phone to accomplish," Ferguson said.

MyPay was formerly known as Employee Member Self Service system. The system changed, but an individual's PIN didn't, Ferguson said.

Customers with questions about myPay can call customer support at (800) 390-2348, Monday through Friday between 7 a.m. and 7:30 p.m. EST.

representing the U.S. Army.

"They've earned it."

Soldiers will represent the Army in their finest attire, Hendricks said. It will be their first chance to wear their Class-B uniform.

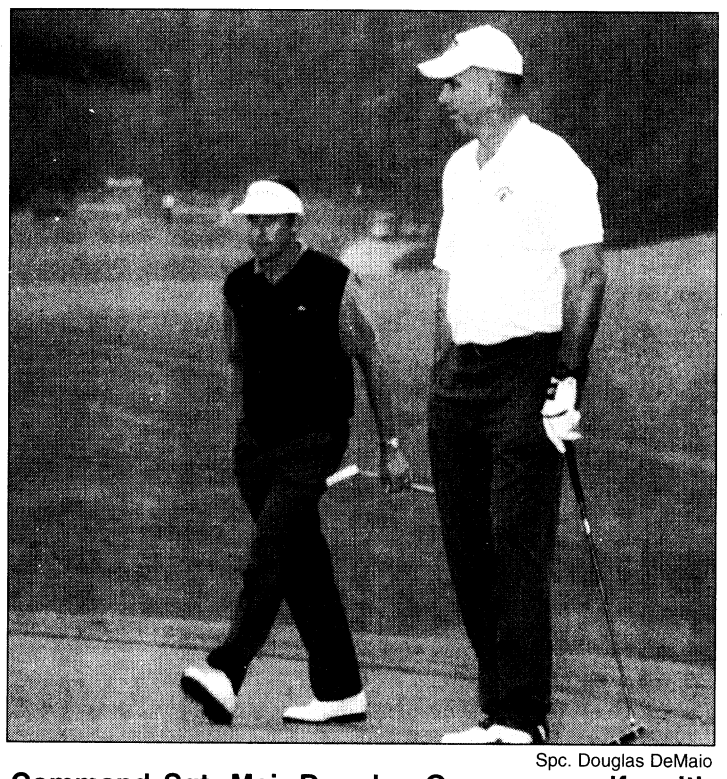
"They'll be looking sharp and standing tall," he said.

As for the rest of Fort Benning's soldiers, today is a training holiday so military personnel can attend the Buick Challenge.

"It's a day to give back to the soldiers and their families for all their hard work," said Sgt. Maj. Douglas Greenway, Basic Combat Training Brigade.

Military Appreciation Day offers all military members, with valid identification, and their families free admission.

There will be unit picnics and games for soldiers, Hendricks said.



Saturday and Sunday soldiers will also be admitted to the tournament and the gardens free of charge.

It's an awesome thing the Buick Challenge and the people at Callaway Gardens are doing for America's military, said Greenway, who played for Maj. Gen. Paul D. Eaton in the Buick Challenge Pro-Am Wednesday.

Golfers like Paul Azinger and Davis Love III, who represented America in the Ryder Cup last month, will compete for a purse of $3.7 million, with the winner taking home $666,000.

Chris DiMarco, who finished in second in Sunday's Disney Classic, will defend his 2001 title against a field of top 25 leading money winners.

This is a great opportunity for soldiers to see the best golfers in the world, Greenway said.

like Pearl Harbor," Bentley said.

Every Oct. 22, photographers all over the world join forces from midnight to midnight for the sole purpose of documenting A Day in the Life.

This will be the 10th Day in the Life book Bentley has worked on, but it will be the first one based on military life. The books normally focus on the cultural aspects of different regions and countries. However, the topic of military life is unusual because it focuses on a culture within a culture.

Other Day in the Life projects he has worked on include: Hawaii, Japan, Ireland, Vietnam, Spain and several other countries. Bentley's credentials don't stop there. He is known and respected by photographers, journalists and the broadcast community for gaining unprecedented access to presidential candidates, heads of state and Capitol Hill.

Bentley was the first photojournalist to shoot on the House floor while in session, and he has covered every presidential campaign since 1980.

Bentley now spends his time working for Newsweek, and he films and edits television programs for Ted Koppel.

He thoroughly enjoyed his visit to Fort Benning, despite a five-hour power outage that made it nearly impossible for him to charge his equipment for the shoot, he said. He looks forward to coming back to have a more in depth look at the training snipers receive.

RIF: Letters to be sent at undetermined time that time, the Civilian Personnel Advisory Center will deliver the associated letters with instructions to the directors and commanders.

"We will do this as expeditiously as possible," Torres said. The effective date for the RIF remains Jan. 25.

All affected employees will be given "right of first refusal" status in the hiring process as long as applications are submitted by Dec. 1, said Pat Kenny, Shaw Group project manager. Shaw Group will take over base operations Jan. 26.

"We need the knowledge of the current work force — we want that knowledge, but we can't hire anyone until the RIF notices are published," Kenny said.

Tankers mobilize for force protection

Reservists guard post gates

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Thirty-five soldiers from Detachment 1, Troop E, 31st Cavalry Regiment, arrived at Fort Benning last month.

The Alabama National Guard soldiers will help man the numerous access control points around post for the next 11 months.

"They are one of my platoons now," said Capt. Lon Widdicombe, commander of the 71st MP Detachment. "We have integrated them fully into the detachment. They are now one of my nine sections, and their lieutenant is my executive officer."

Widdicombe said the armor soldiers increase the strength of his unit by more than 30 percent.

Prior to reporting to the gates Monday, the armor soldiers attended the Law Enforcement Academy on post and had two weeks of on-the-job training.

"We put them through the same training that MPs do before they go out on the road," Widdicombe said.

At first glance, there didn't seem to be anything different about the soldiers guarding the gates Monday afternoon. But upon closer inspection, the soldiers didn't have the usual military police brassards.

Instead, they wear blue and yellow reflective vests with "security" on front and back.

"This is not a mission that we would have expected to do," said 1st Lt. Jeffrey Hampton, officer-in-charge and now executive officer of the 71st MP Detachment. "We'll be glad to go to the desert if they need us, but we know that we have a real mission here.

"We're glad to be here."

Each ACP will be manned by the tankers, but they will have one MP on duty as well.

"The MP on duty will be the one to handle citations and apprehension, if needed," said Sgt. Michael Nelson from the 414th MP Company from Joplin, Mo. "We trained these guys, but it helps to have the MP at the gate to provide the technical expertise."

Hampton said the training his soldiers received was excellent.

"Fort Benning is a large installation with a lot of access control points," he said. "It takes a lot of work to do this. We're amazed at the MP schedule."

Hampton said his soldiers will be at the gates seven days a week. Even with the busy schedule, he said, the soldiers expect to have the opportunity to attend some of the professional development schools offered at Fort Benning.

All of the Detachment 1 soldiers live within a 250-mile radius of Fort Benning, making it possible for them to go home to visit on a regular pass, Hampton said.

"This isn't the first time we have mobilized," said platoon sergeant Sgt. 1st Class Thomas Bowen.

"But this one has been different. We went through a lot of changes getting ready for this," he said.

"But the guys have taken it all in stride. Morale is high."

Field training exercise gets soldiers wet, muddy

Men complete rite of passage, begin careers

Pvt. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Soldiers with E Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, had a chance last week to use all the skills they learned during Basic Combat Training.

The field training exercise is a three-day test of endurance, skill and military knowledge designed to push new soldiers to their limits and beyond.

During the FTX, the soldiers perform basic squad drills, use hand and arm signals, and react to flares, gas and ambushes. They also dig fighting positions. There was heavy rain on the first day of FTX, which caused the soldiers' fighting positions to fill with water as soon as they were dug.

"Everything was wet, and we were freezing," said Pvt. Philip Becker. "Once we marched out here and dug our hasties, they told us to pack everything up and get ready to go back home. Then the next day we marched out here and did it all again."

The second time the soldiers went out, the weather was slightly better. It was still cold and wet, with temperatures in the 40s.

"We were ambushed several times during the exercise, but we also ambushed the other platoons," said Pvt. Ramon Soberanes. "We even ambushed the van that was bringing in the MREs."

The drill sergeants got into the spirit by tossing CS grenades at them during breakfast.

"After they threw the CS at us, everyone was saying, 'That's not gas. It's just smoke.' Then everyone started coughing, but I already had my mask on, so I was fine," said Pvt. Jarod Howard.

The soldiers spent the rest of the day tracking down other platoons trying to ambush them before getting ambushed themselves.

"We learned a lot about squad movements and camouflage," said Pvt. Michael Jones. "We also had to pay attention to footprints and other tracks so we could find the 'enemy'."

All the soldiers seemed to enjoy the exercise despite the road marches and the less than accommodating weather.

"FTX was the best part of BCT," said Pvt. Nelson Acosta, who was awarded Soldier Leader of the Cycle. "I also enjoyed basic rifle marksmanship, but I really like being in the woods. Besides, FTX is a rite of passage that every soldier goes through, and now that it's almost over, I feel like I've really done something."

Many of the soldiers found out their bodies are capable of much more than they had ever imagined, said Pvt. Kevin Cooper.

During those cold, sleepless nights and long, hard days, the soldiers learned to overcome pain, hunger and sleep deprivation in order to complete the mission, the soldiers said.

"I learned that I can push myself further than I ever thought I could," Cooper said.

"This is a good bunch of soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class Ramon Lozano, a drill sergeant with 3rd Platoon. "They were more educated coming in. They were eagerly willing to learn, and they did real well."

Once the soldiers completed the 10K-road march back to the battalion area, they participated in the Cold Steel Ceremony, signifying the completion of FTX.

"These soldiers did an outstanding job, and they stayed motivated the whole way," said Sgt. 1st Class Spencer Miller, head drill sergeant of E Co.

KOREA CHRONICLES

'No one will cry for me'

Retired Sgt. Maj. Gary G. Beylickjian
Office of the Chief of Pubic Affairs

When the guns are silent and the heavy bluish cloud of spent gunpowder dissipates, the horror of war once again becomes a reality. We had just repelled an enemy attack, and as in all armed conflicts, the outcome on both sides were not pretty.

Death and destruction are the constant. Both are ugly sides of war.

No beauty is born in battle, only savagery. Yet, among the collapsed bunkers, the half-buried trenches, the destroyed foxholes and demolished gun emplacements, there are miracles galore. Men emerge alive, some unscathed, some wounded and some clinging to life, yet alive.

Uniforms are filthy; hands and faces, dirty. Facial expressions are frozen by numbness. The men not only fought an armed enemy, but death itself and won on both counts. Ironically, life and death share the same stage in war. Both are key players.

Participants in battle have little time to reflect or ponder about living or dying; there's no time when shells explode around you and machine guns chatter with each burst of six rounds and chaos abounds. Kill or be killed rarely enters the mind; defending, protecting, surviving reign.

An officer who had served in World War II told me during my early days in combat that destiny rules. Some soldiers go through battles with few scratches. Others see only a brief moment of war's horrors and succumb. And for still others, destiny carries them through the horrors and deposits them into old age. They become combat veterans. The pages of destiny's book, the captain told me, can't be torn out, replaced or rewritten. And the ink is fast.

After a certain age, a combat soldier who lives to old age is left only with what was. Some of us would wish that certain memories would fade or go away. But, that won't happen. It would be rewriting destiny's book.

Much of what I saw and heard along the battle lines of Korea are still with me — some in living color.

I learned early that battles are fought by the young; the wars are planned by the elders. The young always suffer the most; they have more time to suffer. To see men in their late teens and early 20s struggle to survive in battle and to remain whole is the most heart wrenching, and the most encouraging.

I saw firsthand as one soldier struggled while his friend fought for life after both took part in the battle I noted earlier.

I wished for quite some time that I had not been a witness to their plight because of its emotional drain. But, on further reflection, I was thankful I did. It fortified and certified what I had been told about the bond that unites soldiers who live and die while in harm's way.

In war a soldier's soul is in heaven; his body is in hell.

Battles can last an hour or many hours or even days, and once ended, NCOs and officers have an important responsibility: to assess damages to men, equipment and fortifications. Priority is always the men. Everyone must be accounted for and cared for whether or not they are injured, wounded or dead.

The attack that day, although not fierce compared to others, caused severe damage from heavy shelling. Several fortified bunkers collapsed, some weapons were made unusable, trenches dug to seven and eight-feet were now four or five feet. Telephone lines severed.

A check of my platoon revealed: one man injured, two damaged emplacements. The injured soldier was treated and later opted not to be evacuated.

Ammunition was low and trips to the ammunition supply point to replace spent ammo was a must. There's always concern the enemy would regroup and attempt another assault, and we'd be low on ammo. After checking my platoon, I headed to the rifle company command post to give my report.

On my way along what remained of one of the trenches, I came across several men kneeling by a soldier who was on his back. A medic was bandaging his abdomen. I recognized one of the men as a squad leader, a sergeant. The wounded soldier had a tight grip of the sergeant's left sleeve.

It appeared the wounded man had a sucking wound, a wound to the abdomen that often makes a sucking sound with each breath. Not a pretty sight, especially when the wound is large and blood is everywhere.

I didn't know the sergeant's name; we wore no name tags on our uniforms back in that Army. I thought I had seen him before. I offered help, but the medic preferred I just talk to the soldier to calm him. There wasn't much to say.

What I saw and heard in that chance meeting, however, impacted me emotionally.

The wounded soldier holding tight to the sergeant's sleeve — kept saying something about a "promise." Puzzled, I looked at the sergeant, who said he was the soldier's squad leader. They were good friends he said.

He had promised the wounded man he'd get him back stateside safely and in one piece. A promise he made several times, he said shaking his head.

The soldier, the sergeant said, had been in the wrong place at the wrong time. He had occupied a firing emplacement he shouldn't have.

"Doc," the medic, was busy trying to dress and redress the wound, working feverishly to stop the blood, which had now covered the entire field uniform, and not getting better. There was blood everywhere.

And then I heard the wounded soldier utter a statement that lives with me to this day: "I can't die, sarge, he said softly, "No one will cry for me!"

That gripped me with emotion. My eyes swelled with tears. The sergeant was going through the same emotions. He turned to me and said the soldier had no family. The Army was all he had. That's why he joined; he was RA (regular Army). As I turned my head to one side to get a firmer grip of myself, the soldier grabbed my hand and said that his squad leader couldn't let him die. It was a promise he had to keep. I assured him his sergeant would do his best.

By then the stretcher bearers arrived and I helped place the soldier on the stretcher. He was now covered with red.

The sergeant was truly depressed, muttering as he went along with the stretcher and helped hold the IV bottle as they moved away from me.

By late afternoon, members of the heavy machine gun platoon worked quickly to restock each gun position with ammo. We had fired nearly 15,000 rounds.

As I went about rechecking the gun emplacements, I couldn't help but think about that soldier and his squad leader. And I thought about my friend Lyle who was killed in 1951 by an artillery shell that wounded me. I understood the pain the sergeant was going through. It's not easy!

As leaders, sergeants are responsible for their men — their well-being, welfare, health, training, morale and everything else. The troops expect that! They want that! But, some things are beyond a sergeant's grasp and control. Miracles that are both life and death on the battlefield go beyond those who wear stripes, bars, leafs, eagles or stars. They belong to the divine spirit almost all frontline soldiers pray to for help and guidance. And, I don't mean destiny.

> "In war, a soldier's soul is in heaven; his body is in hell."
> Retired Sgt. Maj. Gary G. Beylickjian
> served with Heavy Machine Gun Platoon

By late afternoon, by chance, I met the sergeant as I and several men worked on one of the positions.

He told me his friend was dead. And as he did, he looked at his left sleeve. Without a second breath he said: "He was wrong, you know, when he said 'no one will cry for me!' I did!" And I told the sergeant I did as well. It was a really tough moment for us both.

Come May and November, I told the sergeant, an entire nation will cry for all soldiers; your young friend will be among them.

He nodded his head and thanked me. We shook hands and said, "See ya later!"

Several weeks later, I was told the sergeant had been killed in action. He too will be among those for whom we'll grieve and cry. I have for nearly 50 years.

Like many who fought in the Korean War, I continue to remember fellow soldiers who gave their lives in a conflict called, "The Forgotten War." How can we ever forget those courageous men who fought and died on the mountain slopes and in rice paddies of far-away Korea: "... to defend a country they never knew and a people they never met!"

Editor's note: Beylickjian served with Heavy MachineGun Platoon, H Co., 7th Inf. Regt., 3rd Inf. Div., during the years 1951, 1952, 1953, two tours with the same organization and platoon. He served as squad leader, section leader.

Kendrick holds Spencer scoreless

Cherokees, Greenwaves fight on gridiron

Pvt. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Several long passes, interceptions and fumble recoveries led Kendrick High School to a 52-0 win over Spencer High School during Kendrick's Homecoming game Feb. 18.

First year quarterback James Murray led the Cherokees to victory.

"We had to develop his skills in the middle of the season, and it wasn't easy, but I give him credit, he found the pocket," said Cherokees' coach Oliver Davis. "We have two good receivers (Keith White and Frank Williams), and as long as he gets (the ball) to them, they'll catch it."

The Cherokees took full advantage of the rookie quarterback's passing ability with one long pass after another, totaling 184 yards.

"The coaches told me to pass because their cornerbacks aren't that good, so I did and it worked out," Murray said.

Murray was able to hit his target with precise accuracy, resulting in first downs on nearly every play.

By the end of the first quarter, the Cherokees had already shown their dominance with a 12-0 lead over the Greenwaves.

In the second quarter, the plot thickened as Greenwaves' quarterback, Jerome Coverson, fumbled the ball and threw two interceptions, which the Cherokees easily capitalized on, leaving the field with a 31-0 lead at halftime.

During halftime, Murray, the up-and-coming quarterback, was named Homecoming King with Monica Pearson as his queen.

Early in the 3rd quarter, Spencer did put up a fight, but not for possession of the ball. Players from both teams were ejected after a scuffle had been subdued.

The scoring trend continued through the second half, as White landed two interceptions and one touchdown.

White's performance, multiplied by running back Russell Chambers' 16 caries for 98 yards, resulted in another 21 second-half points for the Cherokees.

"This win really felt great," Davis said. "We've been dry for about three or four weeks, and it felt good getting the water for a change.

"It really quenched the thirst."

Falcons seal victory, remain undefeated

Running back scores three touchdowns

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Behind three touchdowns by Dequavious Barbin, the Falcons defeated the Rams, 34-12, in 9- and 10-year-olds Youth Services' football action Saturday at Blue Field.

"I felt good about making the touchdowns for our team because we don't want to lose any games," Barbin said. "If we lose, the other teams might think we stink or can't play football."

With one game remaining for the YS teams, the 5-0 Falcons probably don't have to worry about that.

"Our coach said we can win every game if we try hard and do our best," Barbin said.

After the teams exchanged fumbles to start the game, the Rams defense held the Falcons and earned the ball on downs.

"(We're learning) if you fumble, the other team will try to get it and score a touchdown," Barbin said. "We need to fall on the ball."

On the next possession, Barbin picked off the first pass of the game and raced in for a score. The conversion failed.

"I saw the ball in the air, jumped in and caught it and had nothing but open field in front of me, so I ran in for a touchdown," Barbin said.

He said everyone on the team had fun, and each game is the highlight of the boys' week.

"I look forward to coming out to show the other team we can beat them," Barbin said.

Competition aside, Falcons' defensive coach Dave Pindell said the games were about something more.

"They learned the concept of teamwork," Pindell said. "They win as a team and lose as a team. Yet, it's not so much about winning as it is about learning the game of football and good sportsmanship."

He said the coaches were proud of the children.

"We have well motivated kids that listen and learn fast," Pindell said.

The Falcons executed well on defense, he said.

"We made good tackles and rushed the quarterback well," the coach said. "That's the key — to push their offensive line back, reach the quarterback and break up the play."

That's exactly what the Falcons did after Barbin's first touchdown. Then the offense began to step up.

Aaron Scott rushed for a 30-yard touchdown and gave the Falcons a 12-0 lead. The conversion failed.

After Walter Thompson put the Rams on the board and made it 12-6, Darryl Williams scampered 20 yards to set up his 2-yard touchdown plunge.

The Rams started a good drive, but the halftime clock caught up with them. The teams went to the break with the Falcons leading, 18-6.

The Falcons came out flying in the second half as Bardin sailed in for a 70-yard touchdown jaunt. Michael Turner bobbed and weaved for two-points to make the score 24-6.

Still, the Rams did not give up. Cody Turlington swept right for a 20-yard Rams' touchdown to cut the Falcon lead to 14.

Time was not on the Rams' side, however, and Bardin's 15-yard rushing touchdown and Williams two-point conversion sealed the Falcons' victory.

Cottonmouths help youth hockey league begin

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Move over soccer. Ice hockey has gained a foothold in the South.

Noting the surge in popularity, the Columbus Hockey League is sponsoring a youth hockey league.

"There's a lot of kids playing roller hockey in the community who wanted to play ice hockey," said Steve Orenstein, president of Columbus Hockey Association.

After Wayne Gretzky moved to play for the Los Angles Kings, popularity of the sport grew. Teams like Ottawa and Quebec moved to places places like Denver or Nashville, Tenn., and a pattern to move south continued to develop with minor league teams and expansion leagues.

"The popularity of ice hockey in Columbus is coming from the Cottonmouths," Orenstein said.

It was pure blood, sweat and determination to get the ball rolling for the youth league, Orenstein said. The Cottonmouths kept the ball rolling for the league with a $2,500 donation to the league Oct. 16.

"The bottom line is that it could not have come at a better time," said Vance Robinson, CHA vice president of the league.

The donation helped decrease coaching certification costs, insurance for players and membership fees, Robinson said.

"Hockey is one of the most popular sports in North America," Orenstein said.

The 2002 season is the foundation for what the leagues want to become, Orenstein said. By the third year, the league has set a benchmark to begin a traveling team.

"Our number one goal is to teach the kids to understand the game of ice hockey," he said.

Registration for the league began in September and will run until Thursday.

More than 75 players have signed up already, Orenstein said. And with the amount of soldiers in transit in and out of Fort Benning, the numbers for the league are expected to increase.

"We expect to increase our customer base 50 percent by next year," he said.

The membership fee is $211, which includes insurance, jersey and membership fees to USA Hockey.

The league is a nonprofit organization and is designed to promote the growth of youth ice hockey. Columbus Hockey Association is affiliated with USA Hockey, the national governing body for U.S. youth ice hockey.

Former soldiers receive honors

Senior official speaks at 46th reunion

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs

More than 300 members, past and present, of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, gathered together Oct. 18 and Saturday to celebrate the USAMU's 46th Reunion.

The reunion honored the shooters and staff of the Army Marksmanship Unit and provided an opportunity for the shooters of the past to meet the shooters of the present. The highlight of the reunion was a ceremony inducting three former USAMU shooters into the Marksmanship Unit Hall of Fame.

Inducted into the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Hall of Fame Saturday were retired AMU members Lt. Col. John Foster, Master Sgt. Bonnie D. Harmon and Sgt. 1st Class Hershel Anderson. These three men joined the 17 other former members of the USAMU who are in the Hall of Fame.

Foster, a rifle shooter, won 15 Gold, 14 Silver and one Bronze Medal in international competition in both Running Target and International Rifle events, which places him in fifth place in all-time medal count for American shooters. The two-time Olympian, four-time world champion and world-record setter also served as a sniper instructor during two tours in Vietnam.

A former service pistol shooter and coach, Harmon served 30 years in the Army, including three tours in Germany, one tour in Vietnam as a sniper instructor and one tour in Korea as a first sergeant. He was a four-time national pistol champion, five-time interservice pistol champion and the 1968 President's Hundred Pistol Champion. Harmon also won two medals at the 1974 World Shooting Championships and was a two-time champion at the Conseil International du Sport Militaire Shooting Championships.

Anderson was a two-time national pistol champion, a three-time interservice pistol champion and won the President's Hundred Pistol Match twice. The two-time Olympian earned five medals in three Pan-American Games as well as the Distinguished International Shooter Badge and Distinguished Pistol Shot Badge. A tanker, Anderson served in the Berlin Brigade and with the Americal Division Sniper School in Vietnam.

USAMU Commander Col. Robert I. Hoidahl Jr. introduced the guest speaker at the Hall of Fame Ceremony Joel B. Hudson, the administrative assistant to the secretary of the Army.

"Over the years, I have watched both marksmanship training and competition. At those matches, I have observed the difficulty and the hard work necessary to become champions among the finest competitive shooters," Hudson said. "Today, we are here to induct three former members of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit into the Hall of Fame. These individuals were not only great shooters and champions, they served their country admirably as soldiers, whether that be in Germany, Vietnam, Korea or here in the United Sates.

"Although match competition is important, even more important to the Army is the goal of maintaining combat effectiveness," Hudson continued. "Through their hard work, today's inductees helped the Army accomplish this goal. They and other soldiers like them have heightened public trust and confidence in the Army.

"While the 21st century has already presented us with many difficult challenges, I am confident that the soldiers of today and of the future will meet these challenges and that the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will continue its unparalleled success."

Also present at the ceremony were: Charles Maddox, Florida civilian aide to the secretary of the Army; retired Lt. Gen. William B. Caldwell; Fort Benning Deputy Commander Col. Stephen R. Layfield; and former USAMU members retired Lt. Col. Robert Mitchell, director of USA Shooting, and Olympic Gold Medalist Gary Anderson, director of the Civilian Marksmanship Program.

Marksmenship Unit needs shooters

Assignment offers fast-pace living

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is looking for a few good rifle shooters. The highly competitive unit is putting out its annual call for soldiers who are interested in competing in rifle competitions in the summer of 2003.

Proof of sharpshooter or expert M-16 rifle qualification is required and soldiers must be sergeant first class or below with less than 15 years of service and at least two years retention.

"Soldiers who wish to represent the U.S. Army in rifle competition, marksmanship instruction and recruiting assistance are welcome to apply," said Staff Sgt. Kyle A. Ward, noncommissioned officer in charge of the USAMU Service Rifle Team. "This is a highly visible, fast-paced mission. We're inviting highly motivated active Army soldiers stationed at Fort Benning to try out."

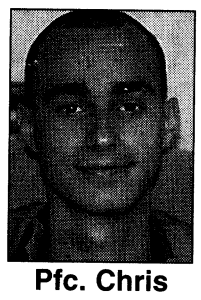
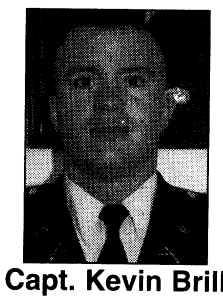
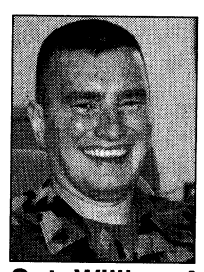
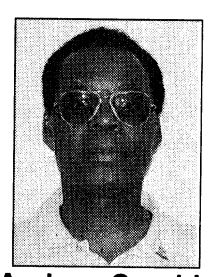
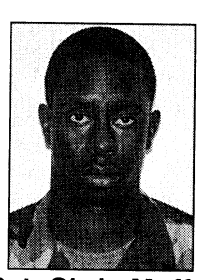
> U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit











Every year the USAMU Service Rifle Team holds a tryout. This year the tryout will be conducted March 24-30. During the tryout week, soldiers are trained and evaluated in advanced marksmanship skills.

Once that is completed, rifle team officials select shooters who will remain from March 31-Aug. 22 to compete at the Interservice and National Championships.

At the end of the four-month tour, soldiers will return to their units with invaluable marksmanship training.

All applications must be in by March 3. For more information, call 545-3250 or 545-5614 or e-mail kyle.ward@usarec.army.mil.

CAR BUYERS WITH MONEY WORRIES MAY QUALIFY FOR LOW-INTEREST LOANS

Loans: Lender loosens its requirements for car buyers who need money now.

Have you been turned down for a car loan? Do you need a better vehicle for any reason? Are you "unable to afford" more than 10% interest?

If you answered "yes" to any of these questions, they can tell you over the phone and without obligation what kind of car you could be approved for. Shop as a cash buyer!

High credit card debt? Less-than-perfect credit? Self-employed? Late house payments? Financial problems? Medical bills? IRS liens? It doesn't matter!

If you have a steady job there's an excellent chance you will qualify for a loan - usually within "10 minutes".

You can find out over the phone and free of charge - "how much you could qualify for". Credit manager Jimmy Peters or his assistant, Josh Marx can be reached at toll free 1-888-719-8888 Open 7 days a week.

All Vehicles: All Rebates & Discounts Included In Sale Price Or Payment. Just Add Tax, Tag, Wre Fees & License. Due To Advertising Deadlines, Some Units May Be Sold. All Offers Are Exclusive, With Approved Credit.

3rd Division fields Javelin

Missile system increases squad lethality, accuracy

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

The 3rd Brigade and some 3rd Infantry Division infantry squads will have more lethality to destroy enemies now that they're receiving the Javelin and the knowledge to use it.

The Javelin, a man-portable, fire and forget antitank weapon, allows soldiers to be elusive after firing the weapon, and it doubles the firing distance of its predecessor, the Dragon, a tube-launched, wire-guided, antitank missile.

"It's like comparing a major leaguer to a peewee league player," said a special forces weapons instructor, who participated as a student in the Training Device Course.

Soldiers from Fort Stewart, Ga., and Kelley Hill attended the course designed to train NCOs and key leaders to be proficient with training devices

TRADOC receives new CO

Abrams retires after 35 years of Army time

TRADOC News Service

Lt. Gen. Kevin P. Byrnes became the new commander of Training and Doctrine Command in a ceremony Thursday at Fort Monroe's Continental Park.

Gen. John N. Abrams, TRADOC commander, retired after about 35 years of Army service.

Abrams came to TRADOC in August 1997 as the deputy commanding general for "futures." He became the commander in October 1998.

He enlisted in the Army in February 1966 and received his commission through OCS in February 1967.

Byrnes was the director of the Army Staff in the Pentagon since November 2001. He was commissioned an artillery office after completing Officer Candidate School in April 1969.

Military schools Byrnes has attended are the Field Artillery Officer Advanced school, the U.S. Army Command and General Staff College, and the U. S. Army War College.

He received a bachelor's degree from Park University, and a master's degree from Webster University.

His awards include the Defense Distinguished Service medal and the Defense Superior Service Medal.

Time honored tradition put on hold

'Sweet Sixteen' pave way for 82nd Airborne

A 20-year Veterans Day tradition has been put on hiatus. The annual Triple Nickel memorial ceremony at Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum was canceled this year, a victim of dwindling membership, said retired Sgt. 1st Class Larry Estell, president of the local chapter of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association.

"There's not enough of us left. We lost three this year," Estell said.

That brings the local membership to 14, mostly black World War II and Korean War veterans who remember well the prejudices they faced as black Airborne soldiers in a white man's Army.

The 555th, or Triple Nickel, arrived at Fort Benning for Airborne training in 1943, at a time when the Army, like the country, was completely segregated, and blacks were traditionally assigned jobs as cooks, drivers and laborers.

"Black men can't jump," was the rule of the day, but under the War Department's "Special Troops Policy," an all-black parachute Infantry Test Platoon was activated at Fort Benning, and 16 black soldiers took to the air.

VETERANS DAY

How to say thank you

COMMENTARY

"How do you honor the people who served as our (soldiers) served? How do you honor the people who made … our land the land of the free? How do we show our appreciation? Is it in the monuments, the scholarships, the buildings or gardens?"

I read those words just the other day, an excerpt from a sermon delivered by retired Chaplain (Lt. Col.) James Reese. (You can read more about him on page B-1.) It wasn't a Veterans Day sermon, but it might well have been. The words he wrote are entirely appropriate for this occasion. Read on:

"Frankly, I think the very best we can do is … be the kind of citizens that fulfill the highest ideals they served and died for. Our comrades have not died in vain. They've left us a challenge. They've called us to something greater and nobler than we've ever experienced.

"I hear so much talk today about how bad our world is … about corruption and deceit. I know you're thinking about the things we've all been reading about, crime in our cities, snipers, the dangers that have risen the last few months.

"Yes, we're living in a time when there is a lot of bad in our world, but do you realize that we are living in a time when we have the greatest opportunity to do good, to leave a better world for our children and grandchildren?

"We can do a little bit, right where we live. We can start with our next door neighbor, the people we work with … We can begin by talking about terms like honesty, integrity, responsibility. Instead of erecting a marble statue or a building, we can strike at the very heart of our troubles (by exemplifying) loyalty, respect, devotion and commitment."

Perhaps it sounds like a lot of speeches you'll be hearing this Veterans Day, but it's worth noting that Chaplian Reese delivered this sermon in 1967 at a memorial for Georgia's fallen firemen.

Ironic, isn't it?

More than 30 years later, we're still eulogizing the firemen, policemen and soldiers killed in the terrorist attacks and the war that ensued. We're once again reading headlines about snipers. We feel danger in our own streets. To borrow from the good book, there truly is nothing new under the sun.

Reese is 94 years old, a veteran of World War II. His regiment was nearly obliterated in the Battle of the Bulge. It was Reese's job to comfort the dying and console those who survived. The worst, he said, was supervising the loading of bodies, one right after another. His friends.

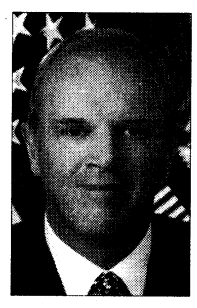
Reese tells the story about a young soldier he came upon in Mecklenburg, shortly after the Germans surrendered. The soldier was standing with his back to the chaplain, his shoulders heaving, staring up at the hill where the American flag flew atop the Temple of Justice.

When he heard the chaplain's footsteps, the young man turned, and with tears streaming down his face, a Purple Heart on his lapel, he pointed toward the flag.

"Chaplain, ain't it beautiful?" he cried.

I can't even begin to comprehend what soldiers go through in combat. I can't fathom what they go through afterward. But I appreciate it, truly I do. How do I show my gratitude? How do I pay tribute?

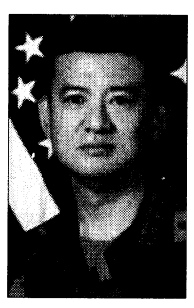
I figure I'll take my cue from one who's been there.



If Chaplain Reese says my life can be a tribute to the men and women who made this land the land of the free, I'll see to it that it is. I'll do my best to be the kind of citizen who fulfills the highest ideals they served and died for. Care to join me?

Remember veterans sacrifices

On Veterans Day, we pay tribute to the American men and women who have served in our nation's armed forces.



Through their sacrifices, they have purchased for us the privileges of freedom, democracy, and unmatched opportunity that we enjoy in the United States today, and they have set the conditions for the United States' place as global leader, with the world's strongest economy, and the most respected and feared military in the world.

And as we celebrate the contributions of our veterans, we also take this opportunity to salute and to honor you, the soldiers serving in the Army today.

Your determination and your readiness to go where you are needed whenever you are called are potent symbols of liberty, justice, and hope for freedom-loving people the world over.

Today, soldiers build upon the 227-year legacy established by veterans who have gone before. From the first battle of the American Revolution to our ongoing war against terrorism, in conflicts around the globe and in humanitarian missions at home and abroad that have saved countless lives, soldiers have provided the sword and shield that protects our nation. And they are doing so today- over 190,000 soldiers deployed and forward stationed in 120 countries around the world.

Each day you serve, you voluntarily forego comfort and wealth, willingly facing hardships and deployments away from family and loved ones. Sometimes you confront danger and face death in defending the nation's security. To all of you on point for the nation, whether far from home or here in the United States, thank you for your contributions and your countless sacrifices. It is an honor to serve with you.

And so on Nov. 11, a day of reflection and tribute, we salute you, and we pledge to you our tireless efforts to ensure that the Army remains the world's preeminent warfighting land force — the most esteemed institution in the nation, and the most respected Army in the world.

The story behind Taps

It all began in 1862 during the War Between the States, when Union Army Capt. Robert Ellicombe was with his men near Harrison's Landing in Virginia. The Confederate army was on the other side of the narrow strip of land.

During the night, Capt. Ellicombe heard the moan of a soldier who lay mortally wounded on the field. Not knowing if it was a Union or Confederate soldier, the captain decided to risk his life and bring the stricken man back for medical attention.

Crawling on his stomach through the gunfire, the captain reached the stricken soldier and began pulling him toward his encampment. When the captain finally reached his own lines, he discovered it was actually a Confederate soldier, but the soldier was dead. The captain lighted a lantern.

Suddenly, he caught his breath and went numb with shock. In the dim light, he saw the face of the soldier. It was his son. The boy had been studying music in the South when the war broke out. Without telling his father, he enlisted in the Confederate Army.

The following morning, heartbroken, the father asked permission of his superiors to give his son a full military burial despite his enemy status. His request was partially granted. The captain had asked if he could have a group of the Army band members play a funeral dirge for the son at the funeral. That request was turned down since the soldier was Confederate.

Out of respect for the father, they could give him only one musician. The captain chose a bugler. He asked the bugler to play a series of musical notes he had found on a piece of paper in the pocket of his dead son's uniform. This wish was granted. This music was the haunting melody we now know as Taps that is used at all military funerals.

In case you are interested, these are the words to Taps:

Day is done, Gone the sun.
From the lakes, From the hills,
From the sky. All is well.
Safely rest. God is nigh.

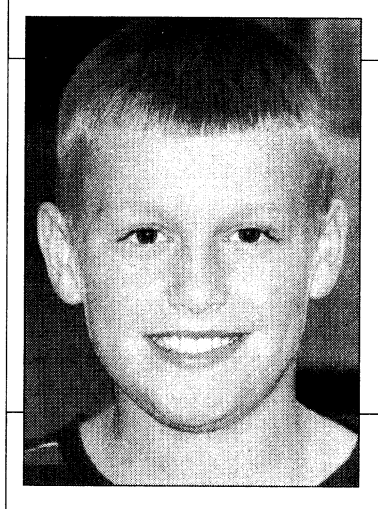
Stay safe

With two national holidays this month, now is the time to alert our soldiers to the very real threat of motor vehicle accidents and instill in them a general sense of safety awareness.

The most common causes of traffic fatalities are: speeding, not wearing seat belts, driving after drinking beer or other alcoholic beverages and fatigue.

Commanders and directors will ensure:

- All vehicles are in safe operating condition, insured and registered;
- All drivers receive a personal safety briefing to include the serious penalties for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs;
- Motorcyclists attend a motorcycle rider training course and wear a high visibility reflective jacket or vest, a Department of Transportation approved helmet, leather gloves, leather boots or over-the-ankle shoes, long-legged pants, long-sleeved shirt or jacket and eye protection (shatter resistant glasses, goggles or face shield).



Our soldiers, families and civilians deserve no less than your best effort in preventing accidents.

Identify the high risk soldiers and work to help them understand their value to us.

Eye surgery available for soldiers

Laser surgery is combat multiplier

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Laser eye surgery, the newest type of refractive eye surgery, is now available to soldiers through Walter Reed Army Medical Center.

Clinic policy gives top priority to combat arms soldiers or soldiers assigned to combat units. Other soldiers can get on a waiting list to have the procedure done.

According to the MCG Eye Care Associates in Augusta, Ga., LASIK, or laser-assisted situ keratomilleusis, has become the procedure of choice for individuals wanting to rid themselves of glasses or contact lenses.

Bill Swisher, Walter Reed public affairs officer, said that the goal is to have 1,000 LASIK or PRK (photorefractive kerotectomy) patients a year at Walter Reed, which translates to 2,000 surgeries.

"About 20 soldiers from Fort Benning have had either LASIK or PRK done at Walter Reed," Swisher said. "We expect a group of 15 the first week of Dec."

The 15 are cadre from the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Eglin Air Force Base.

LASIK uses a "cold" laser to change the shape of the cornea and correct the eye's focusing power. The procedure can be used to treat both near- and far-sightedness and even astigmatism.

Among the benefits of this type of procedure, eye care associates said, is that healing begins almost immediately. Patients experience little or no discomfort during or after the procedure.

> "I had confidence in the laser. It's all programmed into the laser. It's not somebody sitting there with a scalpel."
> Staff Sgt. Shane Pospisil
> NCO for 4th Ranger Training Battalion

Staff Sgt. Shane Pospisil, schools NCO for 4th Ranger Training Battalion, had a variation of the LASIK procedure done at Walter Reed in August.

His unit was given several slots for the procedures, and he was able to take advantage of the opportunity.

"It was definitely something I had thought about doing," Pospisil said. "But it costs a lot of money. (Through the Army), I only had to pay my own temporary duty costs."

After going through a screening process here at Fort Benning, Pospisil went through screening at Walter Reed before the surgery to make sure that he was a suitable candidate.

"I was nervous about it," he said. "I had confidence in the laser. It's all programmed into the laser. It's not somebody sitting there with a scalpel."

Patients are awake through the procedure, which generally only takes 10 minutes per eye. In less than 10 percent of cases, an enhancement, or further reshaping, is needed.

Pospisil is experiencing one of the possible side effects of the procedure.

"I'm fine during the daytime, but I have trouble with the lights when I'm driving into work in the dark," he said. "The doctors said that it might take six months for it to clear up."

Col. Mike Beasock, TRADOC System Manager for Close Combat Misile Systems. just went in for his 30-day checkup after undergoing the LASIK procedure at Walter Reed. Beasock, whose vision was 20/400, needed contacts to correct his distance vision as well as reading glasses. Now, with his vision corrected to 20/15, he needs neither.

"I'm very pleased with the surgery, Beasock said. "No, I'm elated."

Beasock did a great deal of research on the advantages and disadvantages of LASIK refractive surgery. In the end, he asked his doctor.

"My doctor told me that it is an individual decision," he said.

The end results of LASIK are identical to PRK, or hotorefractive kerotectomy, he said. Both procedures are discretionary, not cosmetic, but hava great benefits to military readiness.

Beasock attended the annual Association of the U.S. Army meeting last month and had the opportunity to meet Lt. Gen. James Peake. Peake, the Army Surgeon General, is the man who signed off on the the program and who allocated the resources to make the procedures available at Walter Reed and five other centers throughout the Army.

"I thanked him," Beasock said. "This program makes our soldiers better."

Credit card misuse leads to UCMJ

Government charge cards can be costly

Pvt. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The U.S. Army has entrusted many soldiers and Army civilian employees with government charge cards to make it easier for them to pay for travel expenses while on official government business.

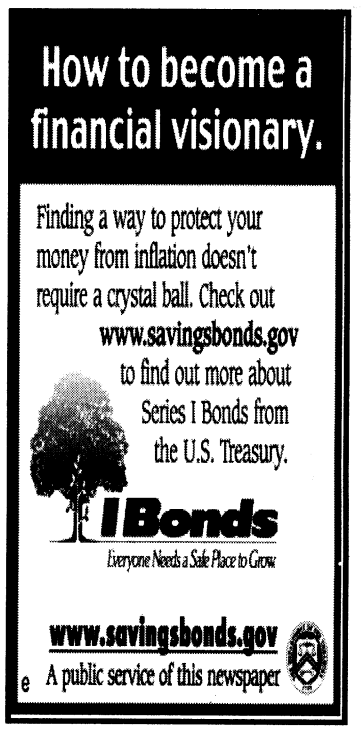
However, people are misusing the credit cards. Some people are using the cards for personal expenses and failing to repay their debts.

"Most of the problems with government credit card bills occur when people use the cards when they aren't on TDY, and there is no reimbursement," said Bobby King, director of Resource Management. "Problems also occur when people use the cards correctly but spend the reimbursement money instead of paying the credit card bills."

Although the Army is not responsible for paying back the money to American Express or Bank of America for unpaid debts, it does pay a monetary penalty, in the form of lost rebates, for maintaining negative charge-card balances, King said.

In an effort to reduce the unnecessary loss of funds, the Army is cracking down on these credit card abusers. People who continue to abuse government travel cards and are delinquent on paying their credit card bills can ruin their credit and their careers, according to a press release from the Department of Defense Inspector General's office.

After Feb. 1, military and civilian employees who misused their cards were subject to disciplinary action, according to a Military District of Washington resource management information paper.



Those who became 60 or more days delinquent in paying their government card accounts had their cards suspended, causing them to apply for an advance of TDY entitlement or pay for all travel expenses out of their own pockets.

Soldiers who were 120 days delinquent in their payments had the money for their debts removed directly from their pay accounts.

"When soldiers used their cards for something other than travel expenses they may have been punished for dereliction of duty under the Uniform Code of Military Justice, even if the soldiers paid their bill on time," said Maj. Amilcar A. Hernandez, chief of Criminal Law, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

"If a soldier fails to pay their debt, they can face a dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of their pay and up to 10 years confinement.

"It's just not worth giving into temptation."

Operation uplink helps troops phone home

Wal-Mart to give away phone cards

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army news service

Troops stationed overseas will be provided free phone cards during the holiday season thanks to a partnership between Veterans of Foreign Wars, Wal-Mart and other multi-million dollar corporations.

Wal-Mart has promised to furnish all military personnel serving overseas with a 60-minute AT&T phone card between Thanksgiving and Christmas, said Mike Meyer, the administrator of corporate development for VFW Foundation.

Each phone card will be enclosed inside a Hallmark greeting card and transported free of charge by Federal Express, Meyer added.

Through Operation Uplink, the phone-card project that began three years ago, 500,000 cards will be delivered this holiday season, Meyer said.

"Since the inception of Operation Uplink, one million cards have reached military personnel worldwide and hospitalized veterans," Meyer said.

"We want to show our men and women in uniform that we support them," Meyer said. "So Operation Uplink is to boost morale and relieve the burden that expensive phone calls can cause."

This year the VFW is receiving support from corporate sponsors, but in the past, funding has come from donations raised mainly by its ladies auxiliary and VFW members, Meyer said.

Those interested in contributing to the fund, or who would like to request phone cards, visit the VFW Web site at http://www.vfw.org/

MPs take 5-month detour on way home

Soldiers leave Guantanamo for Benning ACPs

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The work of the military police never ends, especially when they do double deployments.

The 414th Military Police Company, from Joplin, Mo., will take home nearly a year of real-world experience from Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and Fort Benning when they leave post Nov. 20.

"We didn't know we were coming to Fort Benning until 10 or 12 days before we were scheduled to go home," said Capt. Adina Sanchez, platoon leader, 414th MP Company.

The unit started their deployment Feb. 8 in Guantanamo Bay, at Camp X-Ray.

It was an important mission for the unit and an interesting experience, Sanchez said.

During off time in Cuba, several soldiers became scuba certified.

"I already had my certification, so I had my gear sent down to me and had the chance to log 25 dives," said Staff Sgt. Robert Hogue.

A number of soldiers even started college while there, but no one could escape the tropical weather or the animals.

"Everywhere you went there were iguanas and lizards," Sanchez said. "There was one three-legged iguana that used to hang around the mess tent who we called Stumpy."

With their reptilian encounters and deployment winding down, everyone packed their bags to return home. Then just days before leaving Cuba, the unit learned they were doing a follow-on mission at Fort Benning.

"When we found out there was a follow-on mission, it was tough for many of us with families and children at home," Sanchez said.

"I have a 3 and a 5-year-old, and they didn't really understand why I couldn't come home. While I was in Cuba, I made a little storybook to help explain it to them."

After the company arrived in Fort Benning, they were granted two-weeks block leave to return home.

Everyone was happy to be back in the U.S. and be able to have better telephone access, television and current newspapers, Sanchez said.

After the break, the soldiers performed their new force-protection mission at Fort Benning.

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Sgt. Wesley A. Shultz, 414th MP Company, checks IDs at the Benning Boulevard gate.

"It's important we maintain diligence in the fight against terrorism," Hogue said. "Right now we are one of Fort Benning's best defenses against terrorism."

The unit has made Fort Benning safe by taking drunken drivers off the road, Hogue said. Many soldiers benefited from time at the gates with increased experience in detecting drunken drivers.

With the experience gained from the deployment, the soldiers with 414th MP Co. are preparing to go home, again, hopefully this time for a long while, he said.

"Fort Benning has been really nice, but we are ready to go," Sanchez said.

New training doctrine to hit streets

Manual updates 1998 doctrine

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

The Army has a new field manual designed to help units meet the challenge of a wider range of threats.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki announced the new manual Oct. 22 at the annual meeting of the Association of the U.S. Army. The manual, "FM 7-0 Training the Force" updates the old training doctrine from FM 25-100.

When FM 25-100 was first published in 1988, it represented a revolution in the way the Army trained. Now, 14 years later, the new doctrine integrates lessons learned from recent military operations and synchronizes Army training doctrine across all segments of the Army, from civilians to reserves, to active-duty soldiers.

In his speech, Shinseki said that interviews with commanders and soldiers showed the old training doctrine could be improved. FM 7-0 retains all of the fundamentally sound tenets of FM 25-100, but updates them to reflect the current Army operating environment as well as Army transformation and technology.

According to FM 7-0, "All leaders are trainers. This manual is designed for leaders at every level and in every type of organization in the Army."

FM 7-0 is not an infantry-specific manual, but senior infantry leadership had the opportunity to read the document and then submit their observations and suggestions on it, said Lt. Col. E.J. Herald, deputy Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

"This is essentially the manual by which we will conduct our training for years to come," he said. "It has absolute relevance to soldiers here at Fort Benning."

Herald said FM 7-0 is one of three key manuals that serve as commanders' references for development of mission essential task lists and training plans for those essential tasks.

"It needs everyone's buy-in," he said.

The manual is broken down into six chapters that cover the spectrum of Army training from training at the Army and Joint level, to planning, execution and assessment of unit training.

"This tells us how to organize and execute training whether we're infantry, field artillery or armor," Herald said. "This is the doctrine by which we will train."

World War II veterans recount 'costly mission'

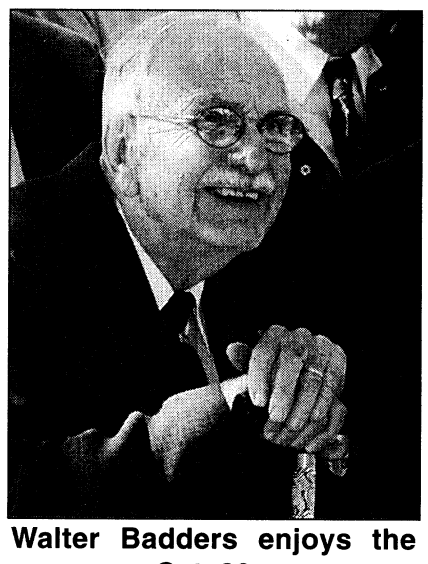
"The rifleman fights without promise of either reward or relief. Behind every river there's another hill — and behind that hill, another river. After weeks or months in the line, only a wound can offer him the comfort of safety, shelter and a bed. Those who are left to fight, fight on, evading death but knowing that with each day of evasion they have exhausted one more chance for survival. Sooner or later, unless victory comes, this chase must end on the litter or in the grave."

— Gen. Omar Bradley



"All those cities and towns, all those hedgerows and fields and muddy moors, in that awful, awful fall and winter — the coldest in 50 odd years. In all that time we just kept going."

Donald Van Roosen recounted the relentless assault of German fire, the unending hedgerows — 6 feet deep — and subzero temperatures during the seven weeks it took his division to advance from Omaha Beach to St. Lo, a mission they expected to complete in seven days — a mission that cost them 10,000 men.

"We thought we were ready for combat. It was a profound shock to all of us. And costly," said Van Roosen, who joined 30 of his cohorts, World War II veterans of the 29th Infantry Division Oct. 30 at Fort Benning's National Infantry Museum to dedicate a monument to their fallen comrades.

By the war's end, the 29th Division suffered more than 20,000 casualties, the greatest loss of any American division in the war. More than 5,000 were killed.

Despite their losses, 29th Division. soldiers kept up their battle cry, "Let's go!" Van Roosen said. They successfully crossed the Rhine and captured Munchen-Gladbach, the largest German city taken by the Allies at that time, and in doing so, they were awarded a Presidential Unit Citation — only one of seven garnered by the 43 infantry divisions who served — and left a legacy of determination and triumph for their successors.

Walter Badders enjoys the ceremony Oct. 30.

"Now future generations will know how we served and suffered and died. It's a legacy carved in stone," he said, as the granite monument was unveiled. "It's a costly legacy, one that was burnished in fire in the hell that was Omaha Beach."

When elements of the 29th Division landed on the beach alongside the 1st Division on June 6, 1944, the "Blue and Gray Division" had already established itself as a war ready force, comprised of National Guard units from New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia.

The division, which was federalized shortly after the onset of World War I, chose to wear the colors of the North and South to symbolize the unity of the states from which it was birthed. Indeed, the 29th Division units that fought together in World War I had been divided during the Civil War.

Though elements of the 29th were among the first to land on Omaha Beach, others came later — hours and days later.

Pvt. Walter Badders, a 24-year-old Maryland native who'd been drafted into the division's 75th Regiment, landed after sunset.

"I don't remember a lot. I'm 84," Badders said, explaining what he called a faulty memory.

"But it was dark, and there were all these bodies stacked against the wall," he said, shaking his head.

Badders traveled from Maryland to attend the ceremony, but he recognized very few faces. Most of his friends have gone.

"They're all upstairs now," he said, pointing his cane toward the sky.

The 29th Division is now a 10,000 man mobile division, under the command of Brig. Gen. Daniel Long, who traveled from Virginia to participate in the ceremony.

"You're looking at history here today," he told the 300 soldiers, veterans and family members in attendance. "There's no stone or grand gesture that can equal their sacrifice, their commitment to country and duty."

Long came to Fort Benning on a mission, he said, to deliver a handful of sand from Omaha Beach and to thank his predecessors for their "legacy, the gift they've given this generation."

"Certainly times have changed," he said, noting various improvements in combat weaponry. "But one thing hasn't. There's still danger. You had your Stalin and Hitler. We have our Hussein and Bin Laden.

"I hope my men never have to make the sacrifice you did, but if need be, we're ready to follow your lead," Long said. "And I promise you we will not squander your legacy."

Soldiers: Receive Javelin, become more combat ready associated with the Javelin.

Students also learned basic gunner skills related to the firing of the weapon.

"We're giving soldiers the knowledge they will need to use the weapon properly and the understanding to train their soldiers correctly," said Staff Sgt. Richard Funke, Javelin instructor and New Equipment Training Team NCOIC.

"The Javelin is a combat multiplier," said Jerry Niggemann, Directorate of Operations and Training. "It gives infantry squads the confidence and ability to defend against all known armor."

Once soldiers are properly trained on the devices associated with the Command Launch Unit, a target acquisition system, and the missile, which combined to form the Javelin, it's about 98 percent accurate on a locked target, Niggemann said.

"If I were an enemy in a tank, it would make me nervous," the special forces student said.

With a maximum effective range of 2,000 meters and the ability to search for a target rather than being guided to the target, the Javelin allows soldiers to avoid enemy detection because it's not wire-guided like the Dragon.

"Anytime you can fire a weapon and leave so the enemy can't identify your position, you have unmatched capabilities and an advantage over the enemy," the special forces instructor said.

"The best thing about the Javelin is its fire and forget capabilities," said Sgt. Dustin Hawkins, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment. "It's good for us because it gets us a great distance from the enemy."

The CLU loads a picture of an image into the missile, and when it's fired, the missile looks for the picture of that image.

In 1998, at Fort Greely, Alaska soldiers fired six Javelin missiles at stationary tanks during a three-day testing. The result was a perfect six-for-six.

"It's just as easy to hit a moving target as a still target," Niggemann said.

Veterans: Keep parachuting, war memories alive

Known historically as "The Sweet Sixteen," those soldiers paved the way for the 555th Battalion, and four years later, the 505th Airborne Infantry Regiment of the 82nd Airborne Division.

Since 1984, members of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association have been conducting Veteran's Day memorial services on Fort Benning.

In the early years, it flourished, Estell said, and when inclement weather drove the ceremony indoors, it was standing room only in the National Infantry Museum's auditorium.

Attendance has dropped drastically the last few years, as more and more aging members — vestiges of "the greatest generation" — pass on.

With today's Army embracing soldiers of every race, Estell said young soldiers are no longer interested in preserving the history of black soldiers.

"And that's a real sad thing for everyone, black, white, male or female," he said. "The association is about camaraderie. It's about history. It's about soldiers helping soldiers. Color doesn't matter."

The Triple Nickel memorial ceremony is "down but not out," Estell said. "God willing, We'll be back. We just can't let it go."

Toward that end, the association will begin actively recruiting members this month. Veterans, active-duty soldiers of all races, male and female, are encouraged to join, Estell said.

The ceremony is only one of many activities the association sponsors. The national chapter offers annual scholarships, and the local chapter supports the Boys and Girls Clubs of America.

For more information about the 555th Parachute Infantry Association, call Estell at 689-0149 or 689-7408.

Comanche to speak on tribe's military role

Luncheon to discuss contributions

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

It's tough enough for veterans to get respect from the average citizen, and even more so for the Native American veteran, said Comanche descendent and nephew to several World War II veterans, Eugene Mowatt.

"Very few people realize the significance of the Native American Indians in World War II and the Vietnam War," Mowatt said. "My uncles still have physical and mental wounds from war. Their role in keeping our country safe was an important one."

American Indians across the United States have been recruited by the American Armed Forces in almost every war since the 1940's, Mowatt said. Commanders would often assign American Indians to teach their native tongue to soldiers, and in turn communicate messages in their language across the airwaves.

"They would describe enemy tanks and where they were located," said Sgt. 1st Class Andrea Pratt, Equal Opportunity advisor for Fort Benning. "Those messages would be almost impossible for the Japanese to crack. The enemy was not familiar with the Native American language."

> Eugene Mowatt
> Comanche descendent, nephew to several WWII veterans

These and other American Indian contributions will be the focus of a luncheon Nov. 20 at the Officers' Club to celebrate Native American Heritage Month.

"It's an honor to come to Fort Benning where my uncles were stationed back in 1941," said Mowatt, who will be speaking at the event. "My family is very proud of our link to the military, and I'm excited to share those stories with soldiers and their families."

Tribes including Comanche, Cherokee, Apache and Choctaw tribes have all played important roles in the history of the military, and Mowatt said he is looking forward to further spreading the word. Along with his presentation, there will be American Indian dancing and costumes, and relatives of Native Americans who served in the Army will speak.

"Soldiers, whether they have a Native American heritage or not, will be intrigued by these stories" said Master Sgt. Kevin Ellitot, NCOIC of Fort Benning's Equal Opportunity Office. "It's an important part of our military history and our military present."

Many American Indians are still being recruited from their reservations, Mowatt said. Members of the Navajo tribe are already stationed in Kuwait, helping fight terrorism.

"The country doesn't know a lot about us, especially in the south," Mowatt said. "Believe it or not, some people I've run into in this part of the country don't even know we still exist."

The cost to attend the Native American Heritage luncheon is $7.50, which includes lunch.

History project captures veterans' stories

Organizers encourage participation

Courtney Brooks
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The great wars are usually remembered for their bloodiest battles, most decorated brass and historic treaties — rarely do the soldiers and civilians on the home front have an opportunity to voice their individual experiences.

The Veterans History Project is giving soldiers a chance to relay these personal stories. Project organizers are encouraging Americans of all ages to participate in a mission to capture and chronicle oral histories from America's war veterans. The stories will become a collection in the Library of Congress' American Folklife Center, located in Washington, D.C.

Volunteers interview veterans, collect letters, photographs and journals from former service members of World War I, World War II, and the Korean, Vietnam and Persian Gulf Wars, as well as the civilians who supported them.

Most importantly, the project seeks to honor the individual's experience, said Ellen McCulloch-Lovell, director of the Veterans History Project at the Library of Congress.

"We're not attempting to patch together a complete history of every war," said McCulloch-Lovell. "We're trying to let people talk about their experiences and what meant the most to them."

The personal wartime accounts have preserved history that may have otherwise been forgotten, said Charlie Mendoza, vice president of membership and member services for the American Association of Retired Persons, a founding sponsor of the project.

"In New York, I witnessed an interview with a young man from a college interviewing a man who used to use Navajo code (a Navajo code talker) with the Marine Corps in World War II," Mendoza said. "I thought, 'That's terrific.' That's something that might have been lost."

Mendoza said that the U.S. is losing 1,600 veterans a day and before long, there won't be any memory to collect. Wartime accounts are an important part of America's history, he said.

"Not only does war change a lot of countries; it changes nations, it changes people," Mendoza said. "With every war that has taken place, changes take place on the home front."

Mendoza not only encourages members of the AARP, but all Americans to become involved with interviewing veterans. He believes everyone, particularly youth, have a lot to benefit from the project.

Eleven-year old Edward Litten has taken it upon himself to interview some 20 veterans since April. He said that young Americans should participate in this program because they don't know what they're missing.

The "Young Marine" has conducted the interviews at the Southeastern Michigan Veterans Service Center near his home in Monroe, Mi. Litten volunteered three days per week the entire summer and after school every day during the school year, hoping to catch a veteran to interview.

"I think it's really cool to hear all the veteran's stories and just know the fact that they're not going to be forgotten," Litten said. "Some of the stories are really sad because not everything in the war was really cool. There were a lot of sad parts."

Veterans have also gleaned new understanding from interviews by a younger generation.

A Korean and Vietnam veteran himself, Mendoza was interviewed by his youngest daughter. He said that the experience helped bridge generational gaps, which he said is one of the goals of the project.

"It has gotten us a lot closer, honestly," said Mendoza. "They wanted to know, 'Why was dad gone so much?' and 'Why wasn't dad around?' when they were younger."

Capturing civilians' stories from the wartime eras are also important, Mendoza added.

"Even though this project is concentrating on veterans themselves, I think another important part is working with the veterans who stayed at home," Mendoza said. "That's an important part of our collective memory ... not just the people who went off to service."

Authorized by Congress through the enactment of Public Law 106-380 and signed into law by President Clinton on Oct. 27, 2000, the Veterans History Project has chronicled histories of approximately 1,500 veterans to date.

> "I just feel like I'm doing my part in history and making sure that people remember all the stories and all the wars."
> Edward Litten
> 11-year-old

McCulloch-Lovell hopes to reach much larger masses for the historical collection. The project will be ongoing with goals of reaching literally millions of people, she said.

Although she missed out on the opportunity to interview her own father, who served in the Navy in World War II, she was able to help her mother make 1,800 copies of his letters to her. She realized how precious this opportunity was and invites others to share in the experience.

"You can do it (interview)," McCulloch-Lovell said. "It's a wonderful experience. I've done a number of these interviews myself and they're unforgettable."

Litten agreed that the experience has been worthwhile, even though he has spent quite a bit of time going to Michigan's Flat Rock Speedway picking up deposit bottles to pay for the postage and videotapes for the interviews being sent to the project's headquarters.

"I just feel like I'm doing my part in history and making sure that people remember all the stories and all the wars," Litten said. "There are only two wars in my history book anymore — the Revolutionary War and the Civil War — and there's not too much on those wars at all."

McCulloch-Lovell said that other youth and adults can get involved in the ongoing project by accessing the Veterans History Project Web site or calling a toll-free number, which provides guidelines for partners and volunteers. A project kit, with instructions, for people who would like to interview veterans is available on the Web site.

The oral histories and documents collected will be part of the national Veterans History Project Collection at the Library of Congress and other recognized repositories, McCulloch-Lovell said. Eventually, portions of the material will be available digitally on the Library of Congress Web site, she added.

For more information, visit the Veterans History Project Web site at www.loc.gov/veterans or call the toll-free number at 1-888-371-5848.

Army to promote fewer NCOs this month

Soldiers stay in, slow down promotion process

Dan Hassett
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army will promote fewer mid-level noncommissioned officers in November than it did in the last two months because more sergeants first class chose to stay in the Army.

The Army projects 2,541 promotions to the ranks of sergeant through sergeant major Nov. 1, down from nearly 4,800 in October and more than 5,100 in September.

"Promotions are down because we are retaining more E-7s," said Lt. Col. Jenelle Roberts, chief of the Enlisted Professional Development Branch at the Pentagon.

"The enlisted strength is up at that grade, so we don't need to promote into that grade," Roberts said. "When that happens, we don't get the 'pull-through' effect on the next lower grades."
