Military to receive pay raise

Average pay increases by 6.8 percent

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Soldiers will wake up to larger pay checks Tuesday morning.

"It's the largest pay hike service members have received in many years," said Sgt. 1st Class Stanley Doyle, NCOIC of military pay operations, Defense Military Pay Office.

The average increase in basic pay will be 6.8 percent and approximately 10 percent for Basic Allowance for Housing.

"The pay raise has put smiles on many soldiers' faces," Doyle said. "With the additional benefits approved by the president and Congress, more soldiers may stay in the military."

Other pay and allowances, such as drill pay and Basic Allowance for Subsistence, also will increase. The hikes represent about $7 billion more than the 2001 payments.

"I think it's great," said Sgt. 1st Class Gerald Fambro, NCOIC of personnel, Infantry Training Brigade. "I feel fortunate and blessed. You never look a gift horse in the mouth. You hold on to it and appreciate it."

Fambro plans to pay off bills with the extra $250 in base pay he will receive. For instance, he will double up on his car payment to pay it off early and give it to his 15-year-old son, Johran.

Although the $80 increase in BAH he'll receive will help pay his mortgage, it won't cover the entire amount.

"We need (the raise) to help offset the expenditures we have to live on the economy," he said. "We have other bills that people on post don't have. Now, we won't have to struggle as much."

As the raise helps senior soldiers pay off their typically higher bills, it will curb attrition of younger soldiers, Fambro said.

Seabees save WWII history

Project will take two years to complete

Columbus naval reservist Petty Officer 3rd Class John Shull prepares to haul away sheetrock from one of the six World War II buildings his unit is restoring.

Ensign Joe Santos doesn't mind the monthly three-hour drive from Tallahassee, Fla., to Columbus. Not only is he honing his engineering and construction skills with local construction projects, he's saving the National Infantry Association a lot of money.

Santos, a Navy reservist, has been helping the Army restore six World War II era buildings behind the National Infantry Museum. Those buildings include Gen. George Patton's personal sleeping quarters and the headquarters building where he commanded the 2nd Armored Division.

Santos is the civil engineer corps officer in charge of the Naval Construction Force Support Unit 3, Detachment D. Since last month, Santos' unit, also known as Seabees, have been busy.

Seebees are sailors who make up the Navy's construction force.

"We like staying busy and out of the classroom," Santos said. "The best way to keep our Seabees out of trouble is to put them to work. This is a great project for them."

There are 70 sailors in the detachment, with 20 from Unit 3 who will actually work on the two-year building project with tasks including removing electrical wiring, renovating

Uniform policy changes

Army regulation updated

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — More than 10 changes in the Army's uniform policy are currently being staffed for an update of Army Regulation 670-1.

Items being revised include hair, nails, contact lenses, cell phones, pagers, bloused boots, headgear, "camelbacks," desert battle-dress-uniform insignia, regimental distinctive insignia, physical fitness uniform wear during pregnancy, the explosive ordnance detachment badge and the black mess uniform.

Other items that will not undergo a policy change will have their wording changed to give a clearer picture of what the policy is, said Master Sgt. Kittie Messman, the uniform policy noncommissioned officer at the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Items that will be reworded include those governing tattoos and body piercing, identification bracelets, civilian bags, and uniform policy based on religious practices.

Army Regulation 670-1, Wear and Appearance of Army Uniforms and Insignia, was last revised in 1992, but in order to keep up with the pace of changing times the regulation is periodically reviewed.

"The regulation has to change with time," Messman said. "If not we'd still be wearing uniforms from the Civil War."

Until the revised regulation is signed by the secretary of the Army, Messman said, the regulation last updated in 1992 is still in effect.

A new policy regarding cell phones and pagers is one addition to the regulation that was generated by technology, Messman said.

Under the upcoming regulation only one electric device will be authorized for wear on the uniform in the performance of official duties. The device may be either a cell phone or pager — not both. The device must be black in color and may not exceed 4 by 2 by 1 inches. Devices that do not comply with these criteria may not be worn on the uniform and must be carried in the hand, bag or in some other carrying container.

At one time, cell phones and

Benning awards gas contract

United Cities to provide gas for Fort Benning

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

United Cities Gas Company will provide Fort Benning's gas services for the next 50 years, starting Feb. 1.

Mark Fincher, chief of Energy Management Branch of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, coordinated the privatization efforts.

"The intent of the Department of Defense and the Department of the Army for privatization is that they want us to get out of that business," Fincher said, "where it can be turned over to people who do that full time."

When Fort Benning put its solicitations out on the street for gas contractors, they had only one bidder.

A government estimate was completed for the cost to keep the system in order for 50 years.

"There was a big difference between the amount of money we were being provided every year and the amount of money it would take to go with United Cities," Fincher said.

As a result, TRADOC increased the budget by $381,000 to accept the United Cities bid.

Fort Benning published a decision paper in August announcing the decision.

"It helps solidify our company's position in the marketplace," said Tom Blose, Columbus United Cities president. "This has been a long process for us. It involved a lot of people from across our company."

The value of the gas system itself was taken into consideration during negotiations. The pipes, and other infrastructure do have value, so Fort Benning decided to sell the system to United Cities ... for $1.

"It's not like a car that you can pick up and use anywhere," Fincher said. "The value of system still resides here at Fort Benning. If we were to sell it to United Cities, for say, $4 million they would have to take out a loan to buy it from us. Then they'd charge us interest on top of that, so it would basically be borrowing money from ourselves."

Displacement of employees was not an issue for the gas distribution department on post, Fincher said. Staffing for United Cities is decided by its management.

Lose my baggage, tick me off

commentary

Being in the Army has taught me a lot about materialism and how little "stuff" I actually need. However, I haven't quite attained that Buddhist level of nirvana where I can be content with nothing.

So when my suitcase didn't arrive in Columbus with me last Friday, I was a little upset.

However, more frustrating than my lack of clothes and the charger for my cell phone has been dealing with baggage claim at the Columbus airport.

The 800 number I was given to the airline's claim service was always busy, and their web site claimed my bag had already been delivered, so I called the baggage claim office at the Columbus airport to try to locate my bag.

The local airline that handled the connections seemed to be outstanding at creating confusion and fostering frustration. Nineteen out of 20 calls to their number result in a busy signal. When the line finally does ring, it's only answered 30 rings later. When a real person actually does pick up the phone, they are ill-informed.

Every person I talked to through yesterday told me they couldn't find my bag. However, they tell me this is good news! Because that must mean that my bag is on a truck, zinging its way to me as we speak.

Hasn't happened yet.

I was fortunate to be able to spend the holiday season with my family this year. I know not everyone has this luxury, so I really appreciated all the time spent with my loved ones even more. And I wouldn't have traded that time just to have my bag of things in my hand. But trying to get it back has been a pain and a half.

It seems that everytime I try to get to Georgia from Michigan something flies in the works. When I was home in September, my flight to Columbus was scheduled for Sept. 12. Now I understand completely that my inconvenience is extremely insignificant in the grand scheme of things, but needless to say, I didn't fly until Sept. 14.

My best friend's wedding was Nov. 10, so I was again in Michigan for a four-day weekend. I flew back Monday afternoon, but Monday morning was another plane crash. This one wasn't terrorists, but everyone was still on edge, and it felt like deja vu.

I was hoping it wasn't a trend when I was on my way back to Benning Jan. 4, but unseasonable snowstorms decided to descend on the Southeast.

The flight crew for my hop to Columbus from Atlanta didn't show up in time because of the weather, so my flight was canceled. The next available was at 10:30 p.m., and I got put on standby. I made it on to the full little plane bound for Columbus, but it was midnight by the time I entered the airport, so all I wanted to do was grab my luggage and scoot home to bed.

No such luck.

My bag, along with about 50 other people's luggage from my flight, got lost, misplaced or misdirected along the way.

Now this isn't the first time this has happened. I lost luggage before, namely when I arrived at Fort Benning. It was four days later before my bags were delivered. So, I've learned my lesson, and all my gotta-haves I carry on the plane with me. So contact lens solution I have, but given the new flight restrictions, my disposable razor was in my suitcase.

I attempted to shave my legs by holding just a blade between my fingers, but that got old real fast. It's a lot harder than it sounds, so I decided to wait for a handle to clip in to.

I still don't have my bag, but my only consolation is the domestic baggage liability of $2500. But, of course, I don't have that yet either. That's six months down the line.

The only advice I can give is, don't fly the friendly skies when I'm scheduled to do so. My next trip to Michigan isn't until June for my sister's wedding. Maybe the jinx will have worn off by then.

commentary

Mothers — we all know they know how to take care of others. Even the last six letters of the word says it. But do they really know how to take care of themselves?

Many women spend so much time looking after the ones they love, they forget to take care of themselves. This can be a mistake, especially during pregnancy.

Take me for example. My husband spent an entire weekend this month ailing in the hospital. I spent four days running around — taking him an extra hamburger, cup of coffee or snack. When I wasn't at his bedside, my 18-month-old daughter insisted I spend every free moment chasing her ... and the diaper she just took off.

I thought I was going to fall out from exhaustion. I'm not ashamed to admit it — several times throughout the weekend, I ate nasty, greasy fast food.

But the sacrifices we make for others are more important — right? Wrong.

I know — you know and every other mother knows nutrition is important when it comes to survival of the fittest. We also know the importance of taking care of business now instead of later.

So, why don't we listen to ourselves, our mothers or our doctors?

Because we are supermoms — here to fight the evil ways of colds, flus, dirty diapers, potty training and report cards.

Well listen up, fellow super heroes — a sick mom isn't getting her work completed.

That's part of the reason The Bayonet is beginning the first of a four-part series this week geared toward pregnant soldiers.

We are taking a hard look at a few of the most important issues facing today's soldier-moms.

We will explore the difference between balance, moderation and overindulgence as it applies to good nutrition in the first story of the four-part series.

Then, we will hit on what I hope will be one of the most beneficial topics for today's leaders — duty limitations as they apply to pregnant soldiers. We'll also have experts address the Army Regulation which applies to pregnant soldiers.

After the New Year, we'll tell you the proper steps for enrolling a new family member in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System, better known as DEERS, and Tricare. We'll also tell you how to get your new baby's birth certificate, social security card, military ID and medical card.

And finally, we'll speak with some of Fort Benning's newest parents about their fight to beat the postpartum blues and get back in shape and on the fitness trail.

commentary

This is my last commentary. My time at Fort Benning is up, and I leave to attend the Public Affairs Officer Course at the Defense Information School at Fort Meade, Md.

It took me a while to figure out what to write without becoming too emotional or touchy-feely.

I arrived last February, fresh out of college and ready to start my career in public affairs as an intern in the Department of the Army's Career Intern Program. I learned quickly how much I needed to learn.

But I had great mentors, who were willing to work with me and encourage me. And I hoped they liked me, or at least they did a good job pretending. I gained self-confidence and honed my skills from them. I learned to write speeches, the ropes of media and community relations and more about the newspaper business.

The intern program is a great program for those who would like a career in Public Affairs. Not only will an intern have the opportunity to write, but he or she will learn public relation skills and have the opportunity to interact with the local community.

There are other federal internships available in areas such as engineering and human resources. I would suggest potential interns visit Web sites such as www.opm.gov, www.fedjobs.com and www.army.mil for more information.

The intern program is a lot like the Army. Interns must be flexible. They must sign a mobility agreement. Depending on the internship, most interns will spend a year or two training at an installation, which could be in another state.

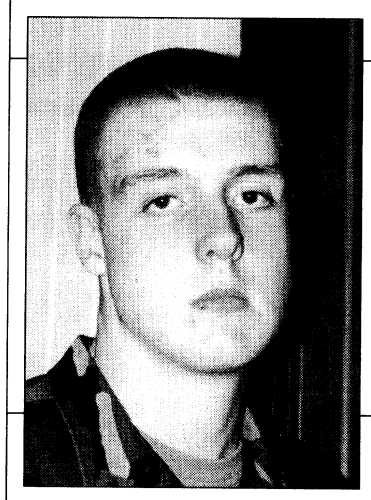
After that, they may have to move again for additional training. After all the training is completed, interns are promoted.

Being an intern isn't easy because one has to make sacrifices. I've met some interns who had to move far from home and leave their spouses and kids behind.

I'm single, but I had to make sacrifices, inlcuding moving from North Carolina to Georgia by myself. But I learned to become independent, because if I couldn't handle it myself, who would? I learned the parts of a car, how to cook and more.

This wasn't my first time working for the military because I interned with the Army News Service three years ago, but this was my first time working at a military installation.

I applied for the program based on my experience with the Army News Service, and I'm glad I decided to participate even though I had to leave North Carolina. I had never moved away for such a long period of time.



I have some fond memeories about Fort Benning. I will miss the Thrift Store where I found a lot of bargains. I will also miss having to not pay sales taxes anywhere on post. Most importantly, I'll miss the friends I made.

This experience taught me it's important to take risks. Whether trying a new hair style, a hobby or starting a new job (I did all of the above), step out of your comfort zone, at least once. I'll admit it's not comfortable at first, but life isn't meant to be smooth sailing. There are supposed to be some obstacles and challenges thrown in to make us stronger.

I'm glad to be moving closer to home because I miss my family and friends. But I won't forget the memories and people from Fort Benning. I wish all of you lots of luck and happiness.

Pay Raise: Closes gap between military, civilian sector work in vain," he said.

The hike reinforces security in an insecure world, he said.

"The Army offers a dependable job," he said. "This raise will help the Army stay competitive with the civilian population."

Pfc. Brian Shumaker, personnel clerk, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, said he was glad the military is taking care of its personnel, especially senior leadership.

"It's a great thing for all soldiers who have dedicated their lives to the service of their country," Shumaker said. "They deserve it."

As for attrition, it is more than about economics, he said.

"Money talks, but it's not just because of the money," Shumaker said. "Most soldiers are patriots. They just want to do their part. The money is icing on the cake."

Still, the 7.3 percent increase to that icing he will receive will help him take care of his family back home.

"My mom is disabled and can't work," said the 22-year-old, single soldier from California. "I got them a car, and the raise will help me make my car payment, too."

Shumaker is considering more plans with the extra money.

"I'm going to look into (the Thrift Savings Plan) more now," Shumaker said. "It sounds very interesting."

Theoretically, a soldier could contribute the max of 7 percent to the Thrift Savings Plan without a decrease in his or her standard of living because of the hike, said Ann Pratcher, manager, Financial Readiness Program.

"I hope soldiers will use (the raise) wisely," she said. "The most important thing is to think seriously about what you want to do with the money before you start to see it. Hopefully, soldiers did not go out and buy stuff on credit in 2001 in anticipation of the increase."

Instead, soldiers should use a three-pronged approach to allot pay increases. That is, they should consider three thing — savings, paying down debt and adding flexibility to monthly living expenses.

"New year, new pay raise, new way of thinking," Pratcher said. "Instead of thinking about what I can buy and how much I can borrow, start thinking about how I can best use the resources I have and plan for debt-free purchases."

Seabees: Help restore historic buildings on Fort Benning walls and replacing wooden floors.

The Seabees hope to preserve the buildings as much as possible and must be careful not to destroy the original lumber, Santos said. For instance, instead of pulling the nails straight out the wall, they are pulled out side to side to preserve the fragile wood.

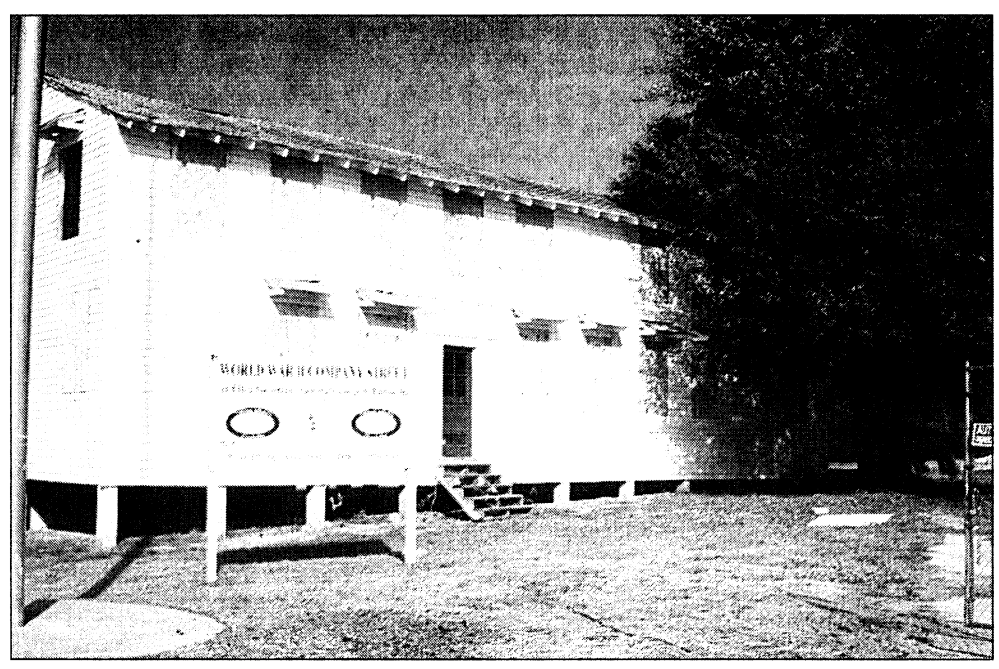
"They're saving the Army tens of thousands of dollars," said Randy Rivinus, principal engineer for the National Infantry Association. "If we hired a contractor, it would have cost a considerable amount of money."

After the renovation, the buildings, along with the chapel at Harmony Church, will be moved to a site off South Lumpkin Road where the new National Infantry Museum will be built. The buildings will be a part of a monument dedicated to the traditions and values of the World War II Infantryman, Rivinus said.

The naval unit has been working closely with the 718th Engineer Company, part of the 926th Engineer Group from Montgomery, Ala., stationed at Fort Benning.

"We're happy to work with the Seabees," said Staff Sgt. Kevin Peoples, training NCO for the 718th Engineer Company. "You can send them anywhere, and they can build anything. I worked with them when I was in Honduras, and they're amazing. Seabees do it all."

Seabees have a long and interesting history. They were established in December 1941 by Rear Adm. Ben Moreell, chief of the Navy's bureau of Yards and Docks with the motto "Can do."



Seabees have served in World War II, Korean Conflict, Vietnam War, Gulf War and currently in Afghanistan. During the Gulf War, 5,000 Seabees built 10 camps for more than 42,000 personnel, 14 galleys capable of feeding 75,000 people and 6 million square feet of aircraft parking apron.

Petty Officer 1st Class Gary Linder, also the building maintenance supervisor for Kelley Hill, said it's been worth his time restoring the buildings.

"I love doing this," Linder said. "I have been at Fort Benning since 1955, and since then I have seen too much history destroyed. When I saw a chance to preserve history, I knew I wanted to do this project."

Cmdr. Paul McElroy, commander of the Naval Reserve Center in Columbus, said restoring the buildings has been beneficial for both service branches.

"It's a win-win situation," said McElroy. "It helps my guys receive training and saves the Army money. With most projects, the costly overhead is manpower. Seabees wipe out that expense."

This is the headquarters building where Gen. George Patton commanded the 2nd Armored Division. While at Fort Benning, Patton was known as "The Green Hornet" and "Old Blood and Guts." This building was originally located on Sand Hill.

Policy: To be updated

pagers were only common practice for people in the medical field, but now the Army has downsized, and people are doing more than one job at the same time, said Lt. Col. Margaret Flott, chief of the Human Factors and Policy Division for DCSPER. Soldiers have to be able to go out and do their jobs without being tied to their desk, she said.

> "Our goal is to create a conservative, professional image and some of the more trendy styles will not accomplish that goal."
> Master Sgt. Kittie Messman
> Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Messman is the principal advisor for changes to the uniform policy, but she said the changes that are being staffed came from recommendations.

"We depend a lot on leadership in the field," Messman said. "They know the young soldiers of today. I get their input on when it's time to allow something that wasn't allowed before, or when something starts becoming a distraction and needs to be addressed."

The policy change authorizing braids and cornrows is an example of items that were once seen as inappropriate in the workplace, but now considered conservative and business-like, Messman said. And the policy clarification that prohibits two-toned manicured nails is an example of a growing trend that has no place in the work area, she added.

People usually have the hardest time accepting the grooming policies, Messman said

"We don't want to rob people of their individuality," Messman said. "But the Army has never professed to be a leader in fashion. Our goal is to create a conservative, professional image and some of the more trendy styles will not accomplish that goal."

Highlights of the changes are:

• Dreadlocks are prohibited for all soldiers. Prohibited hair dye colors include purple, blue, pink, green, orange, bright fire-engine red, and neon colors. Applied colors must look natural on the individual soldier. Women are authorized to wear braids and cornrows; baldness is authorized for males, either natural or shaved.

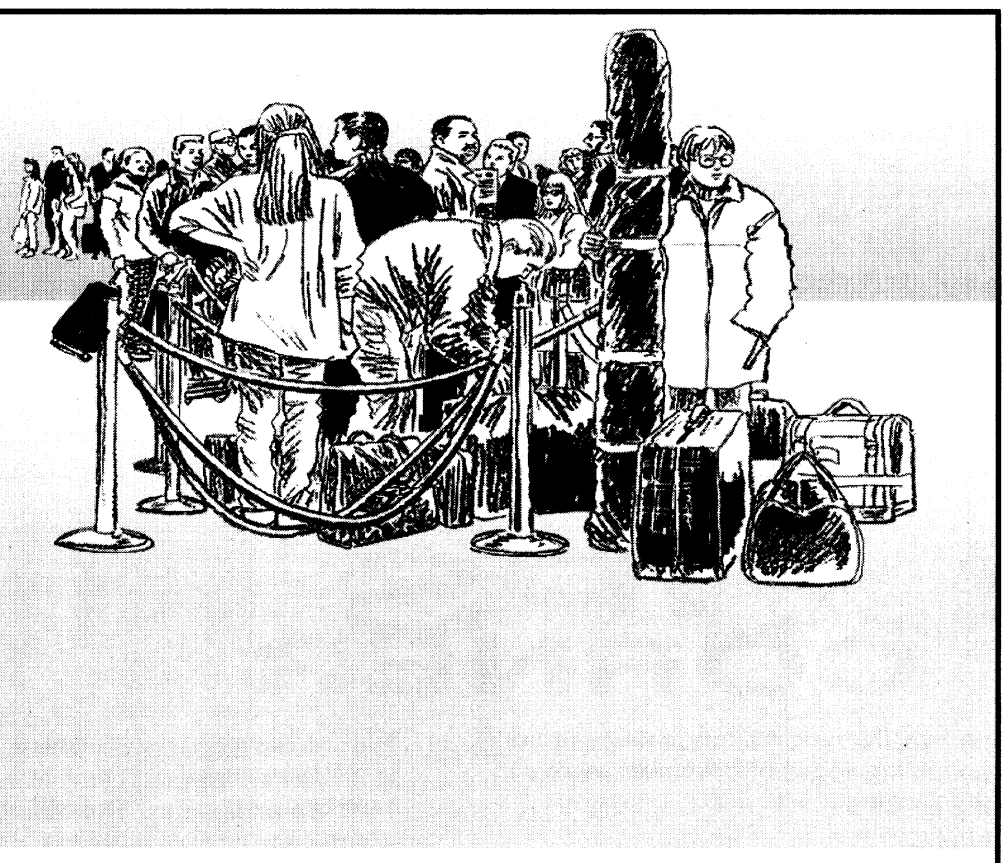
• Males are not authorized to wear nail polish and they must keep nails trimmed to the tip of the finger. Females must keep nails trimmed no longer than 1/4 inch, as measured from the fingertip. Two-tone or multi-tone manicures and nail designs are prohibited. Prohibited nail polish colors include bright fire-engine red, khaki or camouflage, purple, gold, blue, black, white, and neon colors.

• Tinted or colored contacts, and contacts that change the shape of the iris are prohibited, as they are not medically required. The only contacts authorized are opaque lenses (when prescribed for eye injuries) and clear corrective vision lenses.

• Cell Phones and Pagers: One electronic device is authorized for wear on the uniform, in the performance of official duties. The device may be either a cell phone or pager — not both. The device must be black in color and may not exceed 4-by-2-by-1 inches. Devices that do not comply with these criteria may not be worn on the uniform and must be carried in the hand, in a bag, or in some other carrying container.

• Bloused Boots: Soldiers will not blouse boots any lower than the third eyelet from the top of the boot.

• Males are exempt from wearing headgear to evening social events (after retreat). Black beret: The Army flash is the only flash authorized, unless authorization for distinctive flashes was granted (i.e., OPFOR) before June 14, 2001.



• Commanders may authorize the use of a camouflage hydration system (commonly called "camelbacks") for field duty or on work details. Soldiers will not use these devices in a garrison environment, unless directed by the commander.

• Sew-on insignia is now authorized for the desert BDUs; colors are khaki and spice brown combinations. Soldiers may wear the same insignia and awards as are worn on the woodland camouflage battle dress uniform.

• Soldiers who are pregnant should wear the PT uniform until the uniform becomes too small or too uncomfortable. At that time, pregnant soldiers may wear civilian equivalent workout attire. Leaders will not require soldiers to purchase larger PT uniforms to accommodate the pregnancy.

A wear out date for the black mess uniform is Sept. 30, 2003.

Bill to increase veteran's benefits passed by House

Bill awaiting Senate approval

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

The U.S. House of Representatives passed two bills Dec. 11 to improve veterans' benefits. It is awaiting Senate approval.

H.R. 2540, The Veterans' Compensation Rate Amendments of 2001, provides a 2.6 percent cost-of-living adjustment and will also increase funding of pension and compensation programs. The other bill, H.R. 1291, the Veterans' Education and Benefits Expansion Act of 2001, provides an increase in health care, housing and education benefits.

"I believe these bills will help many veterans," said David L. Randall, a retiree who served his country for 23 years in the Army.

"For me health care is always a concern and this bill will resolve some of those concerns," he said.

The steps being made will provide some resolution of the concerns veterans have about income, he said.

The funding will provide veterans with enough funds to cover the inflation rate and, in some cases, may exceed it, said Selby McCash, communications director for Rep. Sanford Bishop, D-Ga.

"Veterans certainly have earned these benefits," McCash said. "They fulfilled their oath, duty and responsibility to protect and serve the United States."

For serving their country, veterans deserve to receive these benefits that haven't been available to them in the past, Randall said

"America's freedom and security are the direct result of countless sacrifices, made by millions of men and women who served our nation in times of war and peace," said Rep. Chris Smith, R-N.J., Chairman of the House committee on Veterans' Affairs.

"We made a promise to care for them when they finished their service," he said. "Congress has taken a giant step forward in fulfilling our obligations to these brave men and women who have served."

Randall said the bills are encouraging.

"We were promised certain benefits when we enlisted and it's good to see they're taking the steps to achieve them," Randall said.

Although they meet throughout the year, the committee meets once a year specifically to re-establish a budget for the fiscal year.

"The committee feels they have done a good job increasing veterans' benefits," McCash said. "It's the fair and right thing to do."

Here is a breakdown of the legislation passed by the House:

• Basic educational assistance increases for full-time study, from the current $650 a month to $800, Jan. 1, 2002; $900 Oct. 1, 2002; and $985 Oct. 1, 2003.

• Increases the veterans home loan guarantee from $50,700 to $60,000.

• Increases the grant for specially adapted housing for severely disabled veterans from $43,000 to $48,000 and from $8,250 to $9,250 for less severely disabled veterans.

• Extends to Sept. 30, 2009 the authority for housing loan guarantees for members of the Selected Reserve.

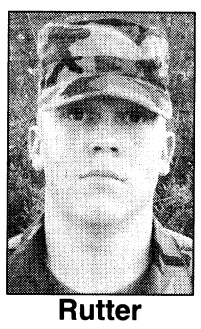
• Increases the automobile and adaptive equipment grant for severely disabled veterans from $8,000 to $9,000.

• Increases the burial and funeral expense benefit for service-connected veterans from $1,500 to $2,000 and the burial plot allowance from $150 to $ $300.

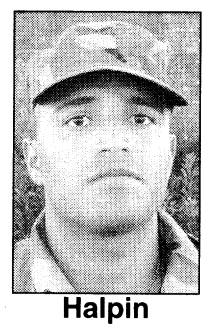
Americans find clarity in chaos

Why 9/11 made soldiers want to join

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff



Four months ago, recruiters received an increase in the amount of Americans interested in joining the U.S. military.



As the world witnessed the most costly attack in U.S. history, Americans began to sign their names on the dotted line.

"Americans want to serve their country because of what happened," said Staff Sgt. Derrick Braswell, Army recruiter in the south Columbus station. "There was an immediate response from Americans to see what they could contribute."

Sept.11 gave people feelings of doubt, anger and, in some cases, clarity.

"When I was in college, I was in ROTC, but September 11 made me decide where I want to build my future," said Pvt. John Rutter, a basic trainee with 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment. "I called my recruiter that day and shipped out for basic training the next week."

Rutter

Halpin

The U.S. is the enforcer of world freedom, and its freedoms were attacked because of its beliefs, he said.

"I joined to protect the freedoms we stand for, my family and my friends," Rutter said.

The Queens, N.Y. native was not the only person to make the same decision. In fact, one quarter of his company joined as a direct result of Sept.11.

Pvt. Kevin Halpin joined after seeing the devastation in Manhattan, N.Y., September 11.

"I was driving home from work and witnessed the clouds of smoke rising from where the twin towers once stood," Halpin said. "I knew at that moment there was no point for me to be a civilian anymore."

Both soldiers feel they're doing their patriotic duty and believe joining the military was an excellent life decision, they said.

"The adventure began September 11 with my decision to join the Army," Rutter said. "It has become a great experience for me. I'm excited about being here, and I love what I'm doing."

Halpin feels it is his turn to do his part of what he believes is a family tradition.

"My father, grandfather and uncle have all served in the military," Halpin said. "My uncle was a big influence in my life.

"I knew that on September 11, with me being 26 and an able body, it was the least I could do to contribute."

Ceremony celebrates leader's legacy

Post to observe MLK birthday Thursday

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The post will observe Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday with a commemoration ceremony Thursday in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

The Rev. Johnny H. Flakes will be the guest speaker.

"He is a well known pastor in the Columbus area," said Sgt. 1st Class Bobby E. Best, NCO Academy Equal Opportunity Office.

"Flakes has a weekly talk show on the radio and he was recommended as a speaker for the event."

The event will be held in King's memory, honoring him as a figure for human rights.

"We need to recognize him for his actions and keep the dream alive," Flakes said.

The theme of the ceremony and Flakes's speech is Remember! Celebrate! Act! A day on ... not a day off!

The commemoration will review the life and work of King and remind us that Jan. 21 has more meaning than just a day off from work, Flakes said.

Horace Wilson, with the Southeast Civilian Personnel Center, will read his original poem Keep the Dream Alive.

The World Change Tabernacle choir is scheduled to sing during the ceremony.

"What King stood for was good for the nation and the world," Flakes said. "Believing in brotherhood of all mankind to live together regardless of color, creed or religion, and these beliefs are what he sacrificed his life over."

King was assassinated April 4, 1968, during the civil rights movement.

Before his death, King was awarded a Nobel peace prize, for his use of nonviolent protests for civil rights.

The commemoration is a annual event.

"It is a very unique and good thing to do," Flakes said. "To practice racial harmony and to bring people together."

People's Parable: Veterans recount how they made American flag, flew it in Germany during World War II

Men's patriotism encourages them to display flag

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Editor's note: This article is the second in a seven-part series that will honor and explain the origin of some of our national symbols.

"I am an American Flag.

From where I fly, I can look down on the boys who made me. Fingers, that a few weeks ago were squeezing triggers and pulling pins from hand grenades, put me together. For a while I was just separate pieces of colored cloth scattered on the floor of a bombed out factory.

Now I am beautiful.

My stars are not exactly uniform and my stripes may be a little out of line, but to my boys, I am Old Glory ...

Yes, I am America."

— written by Norman A. Moore May 11, 1945, and dedicated to the members of I Company, 3rd Battalion, 394th Infantry Regiment, Ochsenfurt, Germany, makers of the first American Flag in the 99th Division in Germany.

"If they won't give us a flag, we'll make one!" vowed 1st Lt. Samuel Lombardo and his men of 2nd Platoon, I Co. And they did just that.

The soldiers had fought their way to the Rhine river without seeing a single American flag, and they read the letters in Stars and Stripes lamenting the lack of American flags and of American patriotism. According to the display of the flag at the National Infantry Museum, the men were "burned up" about it.

So they gathered scraps of red, white, and blue cloth as they swept the Rhine, and sewed them on a white German surrender flag.

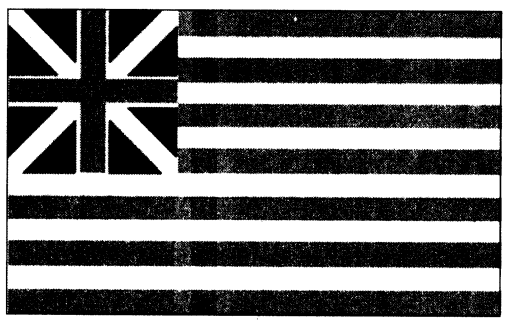
When the men crossed the Rhine at Remagen, their flag, one side of it completed, became the first on the east bank of the river. The flag was completed when the platoon reached the Danube in April.

It makes sense that not many, if any, U.S. flags were on display at that time, said Frank Hanner, director of the Infantry Musuem.

"During times of war, diplomatic relations are broken and American embassies closed," Hanner said. "If you were out waving the red, white, and blue in a country with anti-American sentiment, you were asking to be killed."

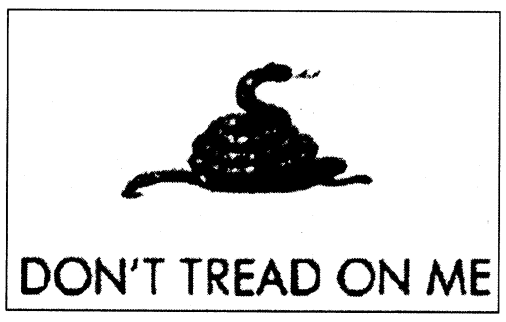
That didn't stop the soldiers of K Co., 260th Infantry Regiment, 65th Division, according to records at the Infantry Museum. When Gen. George S. Patton's 3rd Army swept into Linz, Austria, May 1945, he saw an American flag flying from the headquarters building.

As the story goes, Patton saluted the flag and then asked where the soldiers obtained it.



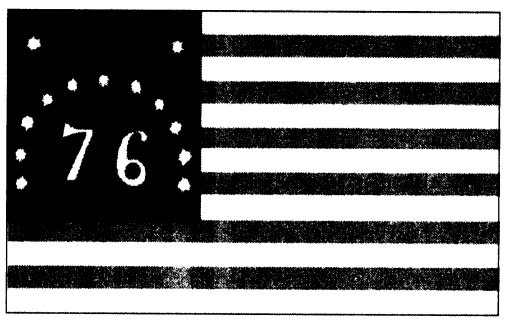
Sgt. Rollie Noble explained the men of K Co. wanted to display the U.S. flag but could not find one. They had tried to dye a bedsheet but met with little success.

The men soon located an Austrian tailor who was not thrilled with the job. When they unhooked their gun holsters, he was quickly convinced to make the flag. The tailor took pieces from the Austrian flag for the white, dyed pieces for the blue and used scraps of a Nazi banner for the red. The flag was completed in eight hours, and was hung in the predawn hours May 9, 1945.

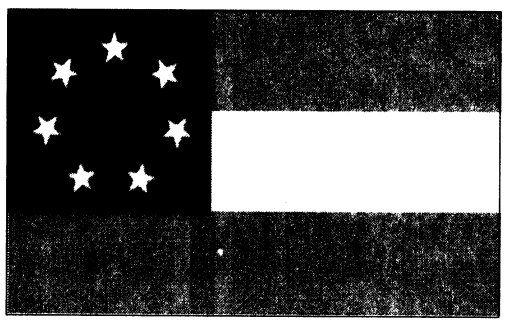


Noble saved the flag at his home in Newark Valley, N.Y., after returning from the war. About 40 years later, after watching the movie Patton, he recalled the events to a friend, and went to a closet and brought out the flag.

The flag is now on display at the Infantry Museum.



"As much as I love history, we will never be sure of what the exact truth is," Hanner said. "History is changed as time passes and new accounts are introduced. But they sure make for nice stories."



The Grand Union flag, known as the Continental flag, was the first true U.S. flag.

First flown aboard a colonial troop ship Jan. 4, 1776, this flag became a traditional symbol of the American Colonies.

The Bennington flag was the first flag to lead American forces into land battle.

The first official flag of the confederacy, the Stars and Bars was used from March 1861 to May 1863.

Flags stand for freedom

"Old Glory" embodies United States

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

The flag, through all of its evolution, has been a long-standing symbol of pride. During the Civil War, infantry color guards were formed of men of exceptional physique and demonstrated courage to protect flags from capture, according to a Civil War display at the National Infantry Museum. Many received Medals of Honor for protecting the colors after being severely wounded, and many died in defense of the colors.

Soldiers of any Civil War unit considered their regimental flag the reflection of their unit and worth fighting and dying for. It was considered a disgrace to the entire regiment if the colors were captured in battle. More Medals of Honor were awarded for capturing enemy flags than for any other heroic act, according to records at the museum. The museum displays captured flags from countries such as Korea, Japan, Panama and the Phillipines.

The museum houses several flags that represent momentous historical events. On display is a hand painted, 34-star flag recovered from the battlefield at Gettysburg, Pa. The flag was found July 4, 1863, one day after the largest battle ever to take place in the western hemisphere had ended. The battle cost 51,112 American casualties.

The D-Day flag with 48 stars was carried by the men of the 2nd Ranger Battalion June 6, 1944, as they scaled the cliffs at Pointe du Hoe, France.

A U.S. flag hand sewn by prisoners of war is also on display. The flag was raised April 6, 1945, over a German prison camp that had just been liberated by soldiers of the 90th Infantry Division.

The flag, more than just pieces of cloth, has long been the embodiment of a nation. The United States has several national symbols, but the flag, even through its many changes, was always meant to invoke a sense of pride, majesty and unity, characteristics that are truly American.

A CLOSER LOOK

The famous name was coined by Capt. Stephen Driver, a shipmaster of Salem, Mass., in 1831. As he was leaving on a voyage aboard the Charles Doggett, some friends presented him with a flag of 24 stars. As the banner opened to the ocean breeze for the first time, he exclaimed, "Old Glory!"

When he retired to Nashville in 1837, he took the treasured flag from his sea days with him. By the time the Civil War erupted, most everyone in and around Nashville recognized Driver's flag as Old Glory. When Tennessee seceded from the Union, rebels were determined to destroy his flag, but repeated searches revealed no trace of the hated banner.

On Feb. 25th, 1862, Union forces captured Nashville and raised the American flag over the capital. It was a rather small pennant and immediately folks began asking Driver if Old Glory still existed. Accompanied by soldiers, Driver went home and began ripping at the seams of his bedcover. As the stitches holding the quilt-top to the batting unraveled, the onlookers peered inside and saw the 24-starred original Old Glory!

As the story goes, Driver gently gathered up the flag and returned with the soldiers to the capitol. Though he was 60 years old, he climbed up to the tower to replace the smaller banner with his beloved flag. The 6th Ohio Regiment cheered and saluted, and later adopted the nickname "Old Glory" as their own, retelling the story of Driver's devotion to the flag we honor yet today.

Good nutrition vital to fetal development

DFAC serves healthy meals for moms-to-be

Editor's note: This is the first in a four-part series geared toward pregnant soldiers that takes a closer look at issues effecting them.

Eating healthy doesn't always mean a person has to starve herself, especially during any stage of pregnancy.

There are many ways to eat healthy, even in an environment where fast food restaurants and microwave meals are the staple of modern America's diet.

"There is no such thing as good food and bad food," said 1st Lt. Leah Usher, chief of clinical nutrition, Martin Army Community Hospital. "It's all in balance and moderation."

Often, pregnant soldiers who live in the barracks eat out at fast food restaurants more than they do in their unit's dining facility. But the best place for those soldiers to eat is in the DFAC, Usher said.

"Soldiers are going to hate me for it, but I have to support the Army on this one," said Arlene Bailey, chief of the Columbus Expanded Food and Nutrition Education Program. "(Pregnant soldiers living in the barracks) need to eat in the dining facility."

Bailey, who has worked closely with the Nutrition Clinic since her retirement from the military, said she strongly encourages pregnant soldiers to eat nutritious meals because their baby will be healthier.

"Pregnant women can eat fast foods," Bailey said. "But there are better choices."

Bailey recommends ordering smaller portions from fast food restaurants such as a child's meal, not skip the tomatoes, add a small side salad and opt for a milk shake or juice instead of a soda.

When eating at delis and popular sandwich stores, moms-to-be should be aware, Bailey said. Although these places may give the impression they are healthier, often the food they sell doesn't offer as many vitamins and nutrients as needed, such as protein.

Eating smaller, more frequent portions also helps an expectant mom stay closer to her recommended weight gain throughout the pregnancy, Bailey said.

Bailey and Usher both said they recommend pregnant patients eat small, frequent meals — up to six a day, and no less than three.

They also recommend eating energy boosting snacks such as crackers with peanut butter or yogurt throughout the day.

Doing simple things such as planning weekly meals, staying away from caffeine and increasing the amount of calcium taken daily can increase a person's health, the nutritionists said.

Caffeine not only binds iron, which is vital to fetal development, but it also makes it harder for the body to absorb other essential nutrients.

"The most important thing to get in is milk because of the calcium," Bailey said. "If the baby does not get enough calcium, then it will take the mother's."

Expectant mothers should get upwards of 1,500 milligrams of calcium a day, which is equivalent to three or four glasses of milk, she said. Without the proper amount of calcium, an expectant mother can get tooth decay or worse, the baby's permanent teeth may never form.

A CLOSER LOOK

The U.S. Department of Agriculture and U.S. Department of Health and Human Services developed a food guide pyramid which suggests everyone's everyday essential nutrients:

- Bread, cereal, rice and pasta — six to 11 servings — nine slices of bread, 9 oz. of dry cereal or 36 small crackers;
- Fruits — two to four servings — 3 cups of juice or 3 pieces of fruit;
- Vegetables — three to five servings — 5 cups leafy raw vegetables or 4 cups of chopped raw or cooked vegetables;
- Milk, yogurt and cheese — two to three servings — 2 cups of milk or yogurt, 3 oz. of natural cheese or 4 oz. of processed cheese;
- Meat, poultry, fish, dry beans, eggs and nuts — two to three servings — 4 to 6 oz. of cooked lean meat, poultry or fish or 1 cup of cooked beans; and
- Fats, oils and sweets — should be used very sparingly.

Pilot program cuts expenses

NCO courses offer Phase I closer to home

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — More schools in The Army School System will begin teaching the stand-alone common core for basic and advanced NCO courses in a pilot program beginning this month.

"Expanding throughout TASS gives even more soldiers the opportunity to complete the common core phase of BNCOC and ANCOC at or near their home installations," said Sgt. Maj. Steve Merrill, chief of the NCO branch for the Deputy Chief of Staff for Training at the Training and Doctrine Command.

The U.S. Army Reserve NCO Academy, Fort Lewis, Wash., and the South Carolina Army National Guard, Eastover, began teaching the stand-alone common core in classes Jan. 4. The 3747th USAR Multifunctional Training Brigade (Europe), Graffenwoehr, Germany, starts classes in late January.

In May, the NCO Academy in Alaska and the 25th Infantry Division NCO Academy, Fort Shafter, Hawaii, enter the pilot program and begin teaching the common core.

Branch-specific NCO academies began teaching common core basic leadership tasks as Phase I for both BNCOC and ANCOC courses last October.

Soldiers must pass this Phase I before taking the MOS-specific Phase II in residence.

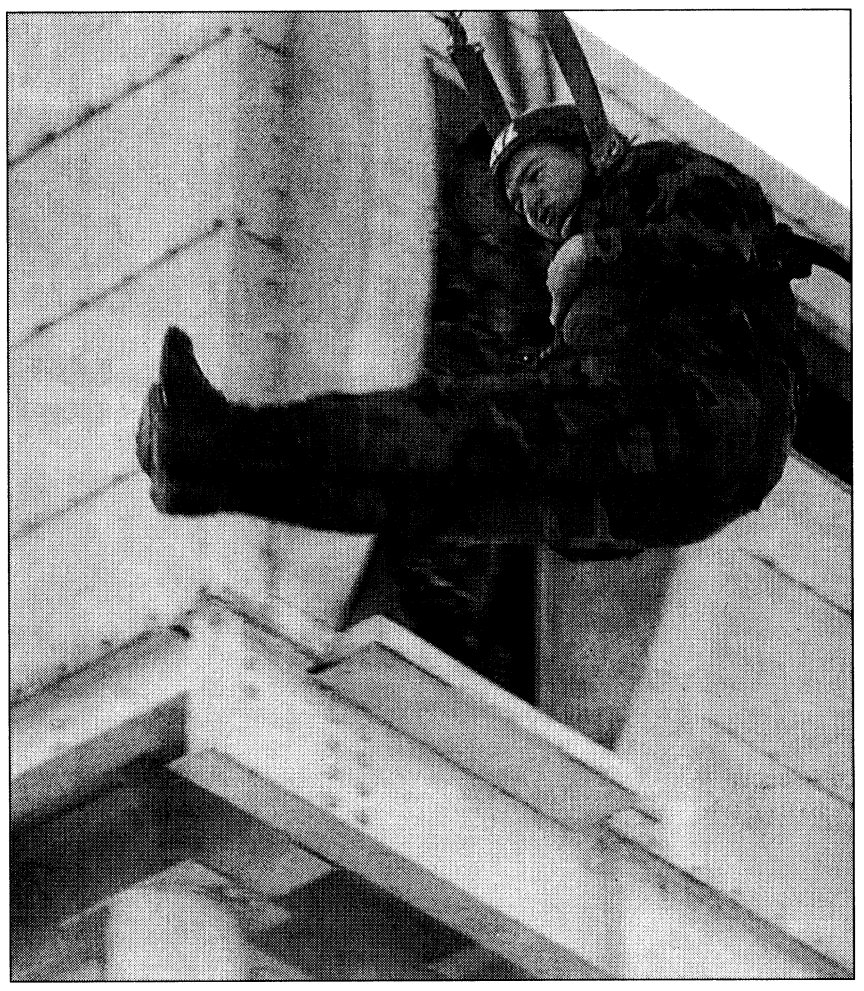
"NCOs selected by Personnel Command to attend BNCOC and ANCOC may take the stand-alone common core at any location that teaches it, regardless of military occupational specialty, so long as it's within 50 miles of where they're stationed," Merrill said.

Soldiers will not be reimbursed for mileage if they elect to take the common core at or near their home installation.

"If I'm an infantry soldier stationed at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., I have the alternative to take the BNCOC or ANCOC stand-alone common core at Fort Huachuca. Then I can go to my Phase II at Fort Benning," said Jeffrey Coliman, senior military analyst in DCST's personnel proponent directory.

That means that it will be two less weeks a soldier must be away from his family, Colimon said. It will also be two less weeks for which the Army won't have to pay temporary duty costs to send the soldier to his branch school.

To attend a branch school of another MOS on the same installation, an NCO must have been selected to attend ANCOC or BNCOC by Army Personnel Command, Army National Guard or Army Reserve personnel. The school also must have room in a class.



"The interesting aspect of the stand-alone common core training in Europe is that it will be done by distance learning," Colimon said. "It will be broadcast through video teletraining from Graffenwoehr to several locations in Germany and to other locations in Europe, such as Vicenza, Italy."

Merrill also said active soldiers can only take the stand-alone common core at Reserve Component Schools when the training is conducted as a two-week block of instruction. Active soldiers are not permitted to attend training that is done on scattered weekends, nights or during other RC training periods.

More TASS schools will be added each year so that by 2004 the stand-lone common core will be taught in schools convenient to nearly every soldier.

"The Army School System is one system, one standard so every soldier taking the stand-alone common core will receive identical training no matter which school he or she attends," Merrill said.

Task Force 1-30 gains M-1 tank experience in Kosovo

Soldiers put training to good use

Spc. Molly Jones
Task Force 1-30

Task Force 1-30 hit the ground rolling when the main body of troops, having been in country less than 24 hours, moved out to Ramjane Range to screen and familiarize themselves with the M-1 tanks and Bradley Armored Personnel Carriers that were there from the previous rotation.

"Just like any other vehicle, there are quirks that need to be worked out prior to their use. That's why screening is crucial this early on," said Capt. Thomas McNew, B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment commander, TF 1-30.

"It helps my soldiers gain confidence in the equipment, since what we have are not the tanks we normally use. Screening them to ensure they can hit the target is our goal early on, just in case they are needed during the mission."

McNew said the overall mission for the task force is to provide security, maintain presence patrols and KFOR presence.

The troops have spent months training prior to arrival and "are excited to finally be in sector and putting their training to use," Pvt. James Hendrix said.

The training at Fort Benning was very beneficial but quite different than what they have experienced here.

"There are more limitations on the ranges, with children and animals able to walk up at anytime," said Staff Sgt. Edward Westveer, TF 1-30 Battalion master gunner. "The range control guards have to keep them away, which they don't have to worry about at home.

"The roads through the towns to the range also pose a bit of difficulty to the soldiers, versus back at home station where we have plenty of room to roam around."

With such an obstacle, it's important to be aware of the environment.

"We just have to be a little more cautious of our surroundings," McNew said.

The soldiers are all in a new environment with much colder weather than in Georgia. Despite the limitations, Westveer said, "I'm happy, for one, and everyone I deal with is really excited to be here. We're just ready to make the mission happen."

"Focus on the mission, get it over, get back home to our families," Hendrix said.

TF 1-30 joint training with TMK begins with physical fitness

Soldiers helps teach the Kosovo Protection Force

Spc. Molly Jones
Task Force 1-30

One of the Army's core fundamentals is physical fitness. Everything the Army does revolves around being in good physical condition. A soldier cannot perform the mission at hand if he is not in shape.

Physical fitness, to many soldiers, is typically overlooked as a common task simply because it is done on such a routine basis. As part of their daily activities, the reasons behind doing PT can be forgotten, but it is the most logical place to start when training begins.

The soldiers of Task Force 1-30 were approached by the TMK, the Kosovo Protection Force, to help them train to become better soldiers, and who better to ask than some of the finest, most fit soldiers in the world. A few soldiers of TF 1-30 were selected to go out to the TMK site and begin instruction on becoming a quality soldier. Of course, the first block of instruction was physical fitness and its importance to every soldier.

"This morning we're going to be doing a little bit of physical fitness first to have fun, and second, and more importantly, to condition their bodies for the future when they go out and start fighting the fight," said Capt. Jorge Melendez, TF 1-30, the supervisor of the joint training. "They need to be in good condition to do that."

The training began with a block of instruction given by Staff Sgt. Edward Westveer, his demonstrator, Spc. Kristopher Barnette, and their translator, on sit-up and push-up circuit training.

Westveer explained while Barnette executed each version of the push-up and sit-up to Army standards. When the lesson was complete, the TMK split into groups and performed the eight different exercises at two minutes each.

The men of TMK seem enthusiastic and responsive to the training.

"They want to get exercise and learn how to increase their physical fitness level," Melendez said.

The soldiers of TF 1-30 were available while the TMK was doing the circuit training for questions and assistance in perfecting their form.

"The guys out here today are not in that great of shape, but that's why we're here to help them grasp the basics so they can continue the training on their own time," said Westveer, a TF 1-30 master gunner. "We're training them to be a stable army by the time the United States pulls out of Kosovo. So, just like our Army, they need to be in good shape to be able to handle the mission."

Right now the TMK "concentrates on humanitarian efforts such as firefights, rescue and search missions, construction, you name it, they do it for Kosovo, but one day they will have to step up when we turn our responsibilities over to them," Melendez said.

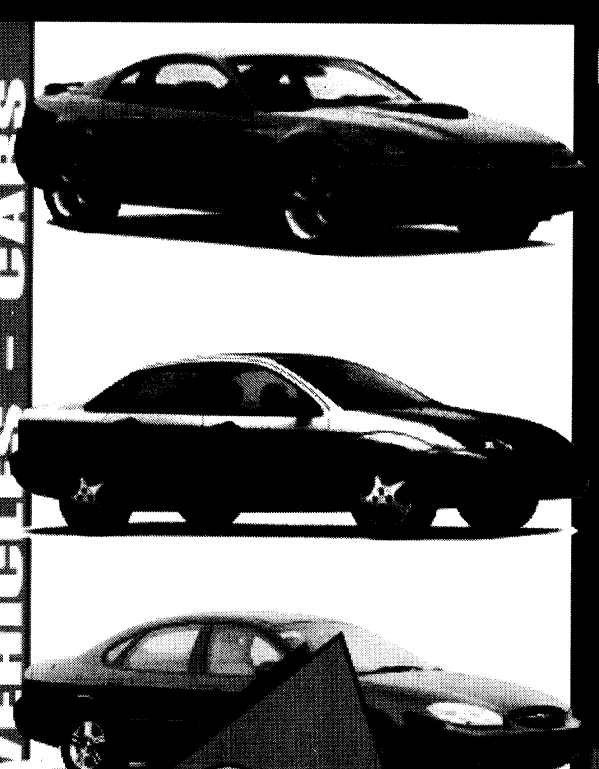
"That's why this joint training mission is so crucial, and they know they will benefit greatly from what we're teaching them," Melendez said, "because we won't always be here."

The training begins with common individual tasks, such as first aid training, and is built up all the way up to group tasks.

"An example of an individual task is to administer first aid to one person, and, as a group, to evacuate a building and administer medical aid," Melendez said.

The progress is in motion, but the results will not be seen overnight. It will take a long time to get the TMK up to par, but it can and will be done.

They have high spirits about learning what is needed to complete the mission, Melendez and Westveer said.



"They did very well today. A lot of them are observing Ramadan and have been fasting, so we couldn't go at the rate of speed we originally intended, but they are still learning," Westveer said.

They definitely have the potential of learning and understanding all our future plans, Westveer said.

Post freezes over

Winter snows came a little too late to Fort Benning for a white Christmas, but the snowfall wasn't exactly a present everyone welcomed. Snow began falling Jan. 2 at 6 a.m. and continued until Jan. 3 at 9 a.m. Lawson Army Airfield reported a two-inch accumulation. Fort Benning and the airfield shut down for two days to wait for the snow to melt.

Partnerships create ties for schools, community

Flint Energies encourages learning

This is the final installment of a five-part series that takes a closer look at the Department of Defense Education Activity's Community Strategic Plan, and specifically how it is being implemented in Fort Benning schools. This installment looks at CSP's goal four, Network of Partnerships Promoting Achievement, which states " ... the organization will develop, promote and maintain a network of meaningful partnerships and alliances to enhance social, emotional and academic growth and to maximize resources."

The organization that provides Fort Benning's electrical power believes knowledge fuels the future.

"Knowledge is power. At Flint Energies, we believe the education you're getting today is the key to your success later in life," retired Col. Randy Buck, Flint Energies district manager, told students at Faith Middle School Dec. 20. "The most important thing you can do right now is just what you're doing — learning and gaining knowledge."

Buck, a former director of public works, presented the school two 27-inch televisions on behalf of Flint Energies, the corporation contracted to provide Fort Benning's power and the middle school's partner in education since 2000.

The TVs will be used in The Achievement Program, the middle school's initiative to assist seventh- and eighth-grade under-achievers through smaller teacher-student ratios.

The post schools' participation in the national Partners In Education program is one way the Fort Benning Schools system is meeting the Department of Defense Education Activity's requirements for goal four of the Community Strategic Plan — creating and fostering partnerships that enhance educational opportunities for the children of soldiers.

Two years after the program was implemented on Fort Benning, Melissa Hayes, the partnership coordinator, said "doors are beginning to open, and we're seeing the results of caring, active partnerships."

"One of the biggest things we're seeing is that our students are noticing there are adults, other than their parents and teachers, who genuinely care about them and their education," Hayes said. "It's sending a strong message that education is important, and if someone else cares about me, I need to care about myself."

Gymnastics teach courage, coordination

New program offered to children

Basic training for a 3-year-old: run, tumble, flip and hop. Then clap, giggle and do it again. No sweat.

Fort Benning 3-year-olds are learning the basics of gymnastics at Youth Services classes.

Their classmates, all between the ages of 2 and 8, are mastering the art of forward and backward rolls, handstands, cartwheels, handsprings and balance bars.

"They're learning courage and coordination," said Shanna Pendleton, a former competitor and the gymnastics instructor for YS's new program. "And where else can they run and jump and not be told no? Where else can they fall down and not get hurt?"

More than 50 children are enrolled in 10 classes which meet twice weekly.

Toddlers are enrolled in Mom&Me, 45 minutes of tumbling and exercise, including the very basics of gymnastics, rolling and balancing.

"When they're tiny, everything is a learning tool," Pendleton said. "The gym is full of bright colors, and they're exploring new shapes and learning 'up,' 'down' and 'over.' Plus they're getting some one-on-one bonding time with their moms."

Students, ages 3 to 8, are divided into beginner, intermediate and advanced gymnastics classes. Beginners develop fundamental gym skills, like hopping, skipping and rolling. Intermediate gymnasts learn to do handstands, walk-overs and cartwheels, and advanced classes focus on round-offs, hand springs, the balance beam and uneven bars.

Camille Stephens said her daughter, Emily, 3, looks forward to her gymnastics lessons.

"I just wanted to get her away from the TV, but it's gone beyond what I expected," Stephens said. "She gets excited about going to class, and she's doing a lot more than I ever expected. I thought she'd be doing a lot of tumbling, but they're actually working on the bars, too. She loves it."

Fort Benning's tax center will open Jan. 15 at its new location — Building 880, the former NCO Academy on Ingersoll Avenue, across from the Wynnsong theater.

Tax center volunteers will process 1040EZ tax returns through the end of the month. All federal and state income tax returns, including 1040EZ, 1040A and 1040, will be processed beginning Feb. 1.

Tax center services are available free to all soldiers, retirees and their family members, 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., every Monday through Friday until April 15.

All clients are served on a walk-in basis, and the wait can sometimes be quite lengthy, said Anne Pratcher, manager of Fort Benning's

Students whip up winter wonderland, create polar paradise

White Elementary School's winter wonderland is on display in the school's fifth-grade pod. "Frozen Worlds" is a part of the JASON Project, a virtual learning environment.

Students learn talent though media

The snow at Fort Benning may have fallen and melted within 24 hours, but some little helpers on post are extending the frosty season with their very own winter wonderland.

Students and teachers at White Elementary spent the last few months creating their own polar paradise.

The elementary elves decked the halls of the fifth-grade pod with handmade creations typical of a polar environment.

Paper-mache penguins line the interior of a glacier, while hand-cut snowflakes and ribbons hang from the ceiling to add a flurried effect. Ceiling-to-floor sketches of polar bears and a life size paper-mache wolf are among several arctic inhabitants in the polar pod.

But the project itself is not just about creative interior design. It's "Frozen Worlds!," the 13th installment of the JASON Project, a "dynamic virtual learning community which provides the student with an interdisciplinary multimedia research expedition," according to the JASON Project content team.

The multi-thematic approach helps the students learn many lessons by making them more interesting, said Evelyn Braman, White's gifted education teacher.

And the tactic seems to be working. Eden James, a fifth-grader at White, showed off her penguin creation while describing the details of a penguin's life.

"The undercoat of a penguin is white to trick predators," she said. "Penguins live almost completely in the water, and the white belly confuses predators below them in the water."

The ever-changing atmosphere of the pod creates a greater interest in the subject matter, White said.

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Jan Gosnell

a kindergarten teacher at Stowers Elementary School.

Personal: The Tennessee native and her husband, Pete, a certified special education teacher, are both former military brats. They have one son, Matt, 17, who attends Columbus Technical College.

History and Education: Gosnell earned a bachelor's degree in English literature from Columbus State University and an associate's degree in accounting from Chattahoochee Valley Community College.

After a brief career in retail, she began volunteering at a local preschool. That's when Gosnell found her true calling.

"I started working with 2-year-olds, and I loved it," she said. "Then they put me with the 4-year-olds and I thought I'd died and gone to heaven. But the 5-year-olds cinched it. That's when I knew this is is where my heart belongs."

At the age of 36, Gosnell earned her teacher's certification from Columbus State University. She also earned a master's degree and an elementary education specialist's degree from Troy State University.

"I'm living proof that it's never too late, as long as you have the desire to learn something new," she said.

Career: Gosnell began teaching kindergarten at Fort Benning's Wilbur Elementary School 11 years ago and transferred to Stowers when it opened two years later.

"And I'll be here till they tell me I can't come back anymore," she said. "I'm in it for the long haul."

Gosnell said she enjoys working with children of all ages, but "kindergarteners are magical."

And challenging.

"I have 19 kids, all at different levels in their development, and it's a challenge to meet their needs individually and keep them moving forward as a group — to encourage the ones that are progressing quickly and help the ones who need extra attention," Gosnell said.

"But I don't think about what they can't do — I see the joy they feel when they learn."

Hobbies and interests: Gosnell is an avid reader. These days the English lit major enjoys the works of John Grisham and Mary Higgins Clark. She also enjoys crafts and sewing.

On teamwork in education: Gosnell said parental involvement is the key to success in school, and it should start in the earliest years.

She praised the school's VIP (Very Involved Parents) program as an example of successful collaboration between parents and educators.

"Parents are truly their child's first teacher. Their participation is vital to their children's success," she said.

"But parents and teachers have to work together. The team effort works best when they combine their talents."

Changes in education: "Every few years the pendulum swings in education," Gosnell said. "Something comes along that's supposed to be a new and better way to help them learn. And change is not always easy for me to accept.

"So I really struggled with the new reading curriculum — Literacy Place — when it was first introduced. I didn't understand how it could work because it was so foreign to how I'd been teaching all these years," Gosnell said.

"Fortunately, (the students) didn't have a problem with it, and when I saw the results I was sold. Now I love it. Literacy Place is a Godsend. It produces more readers and writers, and that's the bottom line. It works," she said.

What others are saying: "She has the kind of motherly instincts that attracts children to her, and it makes for a really good learning environment," said Cheryl Gibson, Stowers Parent Teacher Organization president and the mother of 5-year-old Ariel, a student in Gosnell's class. "She also has a really caring approach to parents' feelings."

Soldier Show slots available

Deadlines for auditions Jan. 15

Harriet E. Rice
U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The deadline for audition submissions to the U.S. Army Soldier Show is quickly approaching. The U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center's Entertainment Division has received very few audition packages.

The events of Sept. 11 tasked units heavily and soldiers may have not had time to complete their input. Therefore, while the official deadline was Dec. 31, Army Entertainment Division officials have extended a grace period until Jan. 15 to accommodate soldiers who need extra time to get their submissions together and mailed.

In 2001, this Army Morale, Welfare, and Recreation program entertained more than 110,000 people and brought military audiences a much-needed 90 minutes of escape to music and fantasy.

The 2002 season is the 19th year of the modern Soldier Show, a tradition of "entertainment for the soldier, by the soldier" established during World War I. The show is an opportunity for talented soldiers to represent their units, installations and the U.S. Army, in a show of unity, teamwork and a testament to American resilience.

For audition how-to information and a sample letter of release, visit the Army Entertainment Division Web page at www.armyentertainment.net.

School: Plans fuels student learning under the auspices of the Greater Columbus Chamber of Commerce, is designed to improve the quality of education by tapping into community resources — organizations or military units that are willing to devote time to local school children.

Fort Benning has nine partnerships, eight with post units and its first corporate partnership with Flint Energies. Soldiers spend time reading, mentoring and tutoring students and taking active roles in school activities and field trips.

"The teaching of children should be a collaborative effort," Hayes said. "It really does take a village to raise a child. We're all in it together, pooling our resources to give our students the very best opportunities to learn."

The liaisons have taken on a new meaning since the terrorist attacks Sept. 11, Hayes said.

"It's important to understand that these are partnerships, not one-sided relationships," she said. "They're designed to be mutually beneficial, and this year we're seeing our students have a greater opportunity to give something back to the soldiers who have been so wonderful about helping them."

Though the partnerships have always focused on literacy, this year's program calls for an emphasis on Army values. Soldiers have been visiting classrooms to explain the meaning of loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and courage — all key components of the school system's character education curriculum.

"Who better to teach our children about values then the people who live them every day," Hayes said. "And since September 11, our students have had the chance to reciprocate, to demonstrate caring, concern and selfless service by delivering snacks to checkpoints and writing letters that say 'Thank you for serving our country. We care about you.'

"It's a reciprocal relationship, and our students are benefiting from it by living the values their partners have been teaching them in the classroom," Hayes said.

information more meaningful," said Judy Little, fifth-grade teacher at White.

"The students are very proud of their work. They walk in here everyday and see what's new and wonder what's coming next," Little said.

"When you are surrounded by this environment every day, you can't help but learn something," Braman said.

The teachers incorporate the elaborate hall of art into many areas of study, including geography, biology, history, and culture of the Northwest, Arctic and Antarctic regions.

On Tuesdays, the students go into "activity mode," where they rotate through five teachers for 25 minutes each.

Each classroom focuses on a different lesson, which are tailored to the theme and the subject material at hand.

Not all students excel in all areas, so a variety of activities are planned for the students, Little said.

"When you work with children, you want everyone to be successful, and they each have their own strengths," Little said.

"We try to do many different kinds of activities so there's an opportunity for everybody to be successful.

"If you are a wonderful artist, and you never got to draw in math class, that teacher probably missed out on a great deal of creativity and design. This way, everyone gets to shine in their appropriate light," Little said.

Supplies for the project came from a variety of sources, from recycled computer boxes to sheets donated from local hotels.

In the works are an igloo made of gallon milk jugs and a wall illuminated as aurora borealis.

Lose holiday pounds safely

Balance diet key to losing weight boosting energy

Julie A. Hess
Martin Army Community Hospital

Still trying to lose those few extra pounds you put on during the holidays?

Along with the over-indulgence of holiday treats, many people take a break from exercising during the holiday season, resulting in weight gain. When January comes around, it is not uncommon for some to resort to drastic, extremely restrictive fad diets that can be potentially dangerous.

Losing weight doesn't have to compromise health if you follow these smart, healthy, weight-loss tips:

1 Never skip meals. Make sure you eat every three to four hours to keep energy levels up and to prevent from getting so hungry you stuff yourself when you do get around to eating.

2 Eat lots of fruits and vegetables, at least five a day. Fruits and veggies are generally low in fat and calories. They have a high water content, which will make you feel fuller.

They are also loaded with vitamins, minerals and disease fighting antioxidants and phytochemicals, which protect our cells from damage and boost the immune system.

3 Eat more beans, oats and whole grains. These foods are high in soluble fiber, which will mix with liquids in your stomach to form a gelatinous mass, reducing appetite by making you feel fuller and staying in your stomach longer.

4 Stay hydrated. Sometimes thirst is mistaken for hunger. Aim for eight to 10 noncaffeinated beverages a day.

5 Learn to listen to your body. Eat when you are hungry and stop when you are full. It takes your brain 20 minutes to register that you have eaten enough, so slow down, enjoy your food, and wait five or 10 minutes before going back for seconds.

6 Watch your portion sizes. Especially when it comes to meat. A serving is only 3 ounces, which is equal to a piece of meat approximately the size of a deck of cards. Eat leaner meats like fish and poultry or try healthy meat alternatives like dried beans, nuts, egg whites, tofu and peanut butter.

7 Stay away from diet pills. Especially ones that contain ephedra or ma huang. This popular herb is found in many sports supplements and weight loss pills and is not regulated by the FDA. It has many dangerous side effects, including nausea, vomiting, headaches, seizures, insomnia, irregular heart beat, coma and death. It can also cause dehydration and have a negative effect on your performance.

8 Avoid anything drastic. Set small goals, and stay away from fad diets that eliminate major food groups or require you to eat any single type of food. Your body needs a wide range of nutrients to function properly. If you eliminate major food groups, your diet may be deficient in important vitamins, minerals and nutrients, which can ultimately have a negative effect on your health.

Remember — the key to healthy weight loss is balance.

Eating a healthy, balanced diet will not only help you lose weight and boost your performance, it will also make you a healthier person and reduce your risk for disease.

Cut college cost with creativity

Art scholarship information available online

The Art Institute of Atlanta

There's a wealth of information on the Internet about college scholarships for every conceivable field of study. Still, many artistically inclined students in Georgia don't realize the opportunities to earn scholarships in the visual arts and design. The Art Institute of Atlanta offers the following tips to students and parents looking to fund a college education in the arts:

• Meet with a guidance counselor. Make sure your high school guidance office knows about your interest in art scholarships, since he or she receives numerous notices about all kinds of scholarships.

• Hit the Web. Try sites such as www.Artschool.com, www.Finaid.com, www.Scholarships.com and www.Fastweb.com to find scholarship information, including links and searchable databases. You can also try searching the Internet for "art scholarships" or other keywords that narrow down your search. Beware of Web sites that charge a fee — most information is free; you just have to find it.

• Research local arts, festival and community organizations. The Yellow Pages, city hall and the local convention and visitor's bureau will have a list of arts organizations in your area, and many of these arts groups offer scholarships to encourage college education in the arts.

• Check out professional associations. Local chapters of the American Institute of Graphic Arts (www.aiga.org), the American Society of Interior Design (www.asid.org) and other professional associations in your region often have scholarships to support students entering the field.

• Apply for scholarships from The Art Institutes. The Art Institutes, a system of 23 schools around the country, offers a variety of scholarships for art students. One of the most popular is the National Portfolio Review Competition for high school seniors (visit www.artinstitutes.edu for details). The school also offers several National Art Society Scholarships to be used at The Art Institutes location of your choice, as well as a variety of other scholarships for students. The closest location in Georgia is The Art Institute of Atlanta (www.aia.artinstitutes.edu).

• Make a list, check it twice. With all of the scholarships available, it's important to prioritize. Keep a notebook filled with scholarship opportunities and make note of the deadlines and requirements. Remember, deadlines for many scholarships are a year in advance, so it's crucial to plan early.

New year: Think with new perspective

Many people do not follow resolutions

Chaplain (Capt.) Michael L. White
2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

reflections

How are you doing with the New Year's resolutions you made for this year? Have you given up your resolve already?

I stopped making New Year's resolutions many years ago because I just couldn't seem to stick with them. Whatever bad habits I've accrued in the last year or during my lifetime, will likely stay with me the rest of my life. I've got to die of something, I suppose, so I may as well go happily.

White

Now there's a thought to consider for this new year — death.

Have you thought about dying lately? It's not a subject many people want to discuss too often, even people who believe in an afterlife. They're like the old fellow sitting in church one Sunday while the pastor got all excited about his sermon topic: "When We All Get to Heaven." He asked the good folks if they were all ready to go to heaven. Everyone raised a hand except one older gentleman in the middle of the congregation.

The pastor couldn't help noticing the man didn't have his hand raised. He thought perhaps the man didn't understand his question, so he asked it again, this time more directly. "Brother, don't you want to go to heaven with all of us?"

The man replied, "Why, sure, pastor, but I thought you was gittin' up a group to go right now."

Most of us are that way. We want to go to heaven, just not right now. Yet, from all the Bible has to say about heaven, it is far more desirable than this world.

I find as I get older that I look more and more toward that great PCS at the end of my tour on earth. In fact, I look forward to it some days more than others, particularly after a five-mile eagle run. That's when I really feel my age.

If the saying is true: "You're only as old as you feel," I must have one foot in the grave. Nevertheless, I keep waiting for that final change of station which will take me home.

Whether you're tired or retired, there's a better day coming.

As we continue this new year, let's try to keep everything in perspective with the blessed hope of an everlasting life where there will be no more sorrow or suffering, death or disappointment, or need for new year's resolutions, and certainly, no more broken resolutions.

Editor's note: White serves as the battalion chaplain in the Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill. He is married with two children, a freshman in college and a sophomore in high school.

Year's goals must be specific

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

The new year brings New Year's resolutions. What starts out so promising every year often ends in unreached and unfulfilled goals.

Do you want to stop smoking? Do you want to lose weight? Do you want to pay off credit cards and get out of debt? Do you want to save money for a new car or a college education? All these aims are worthwhile endeavors.

Goals to be reached must be specific, measurable and achievable. An automatic savings allotment will help to save money for something you want to buy. Cutting up a credit card will prevent further purchases and allow you to pay off the bill. Losing a pound a week is a good way to lose weight, and reducing the number of cigarettes smoked a day will help you to stop smoking.

Koop

Why then do people fail to reach their goals? One reason may be that, for some people, it takes more than willpower and determination to change. Unconscious fears, doubts and feelings may hinder us from reaching our objectives. In addition, some goals can only be achieved through spiritual means and divine power.

Some people struggle to turn over a new leaf, when what is really needed is a new life (II Corinthians 5:17). Human effort can't produce spiritual power and divine assistance.

Old habits are hard to break. In order to reach some goals, our human nature requires a supernatural intervention. What is impossible to accomplish through human effort can be accomplished in God's strength (Philippians 4:13).

Do you need additional help? If you do, please contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Raptors start Y.S. season with bang

Team defeats Ballers, 50-31, at Y.S. gym

Phillip Thompson
Bayonet correspondent

The Ballers couldn't keep up with the Raptors' fast-paced offense during opening day of Youth Services basketball Saturday at the YS gym, and fell short in the 11- to 12-year-old game, 50-31.

"That was a great game. We just had to get warmed up," said Raptors coach Lee Rowland.

The Raptors controlled all aspects of the game — shooting, rebounding, offense, defense. The first, second and third quarter belonged to the Raptors. Andrew Rowland and Jarret Myles hit key three pointers to run up the score.

"We had a great game plan," Myles said. "Coach had us ready to play."

Teamwork was an invaluable asset during the game, Myles said.

"We stuck together and passed the ball pretty well," he said. "Fortunately, we had a lot of open looks."

A late fourth-quarter push by Andrew Rodriguez and the Ballers kept the game close.

"Our entire team performed well, but the player of the game was Dominique McNeal," Rowland said.

McNeal said he owed it all to his teammates.

"They're a great group of guys," he said. "We did OK for it being our first game."

Rowland said the players had looked forward to the start of the season, and they are glad to play again.

"It's all about having fun and learning the great game of basketball," Rowland said. "We look forward to another good season."

USAIC sponsors Christmas tourney

Close game ends holiday tournament

Pvt. Brian Trapp

A team from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armored Regiment, the Crusaders, took home their second consecutive trophy with a 43-39 victory over the Ballhogs in the post's single-elimination Christmas Intramural Basketball Tournament championship Friday at Briant Wells Field House.

"We played an outstanding game," said Ronald Cummings, Crusaders' coach. "We kept fighting the whole game and never quit."

Intense defense from the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion., 11th Infantry Regiment's Ballhogs hampered the Crusaders' shooting ability and gave the Ballhogs an early lead.

A turnover from the Ballhogs and Crusaders' James Kendrick's three-pointer from just outside the line helped close the gap.

"We had a really good defensive game," said Joseph Thomas, the Crusaders' point guard.

Still, his team trailed, 24-18, at the half.

The Ballhogs' Clint Thomas led all scorers at the half with 8 points.

After the whistle blew to start the second half, the Crusaders spread the offense around and broke down the Ballhogs defense with a strong rally and turned the tables on the Ballhogs.

Midway through the half, the Crusaders scored four unanswered points and took the lead, 33-27.

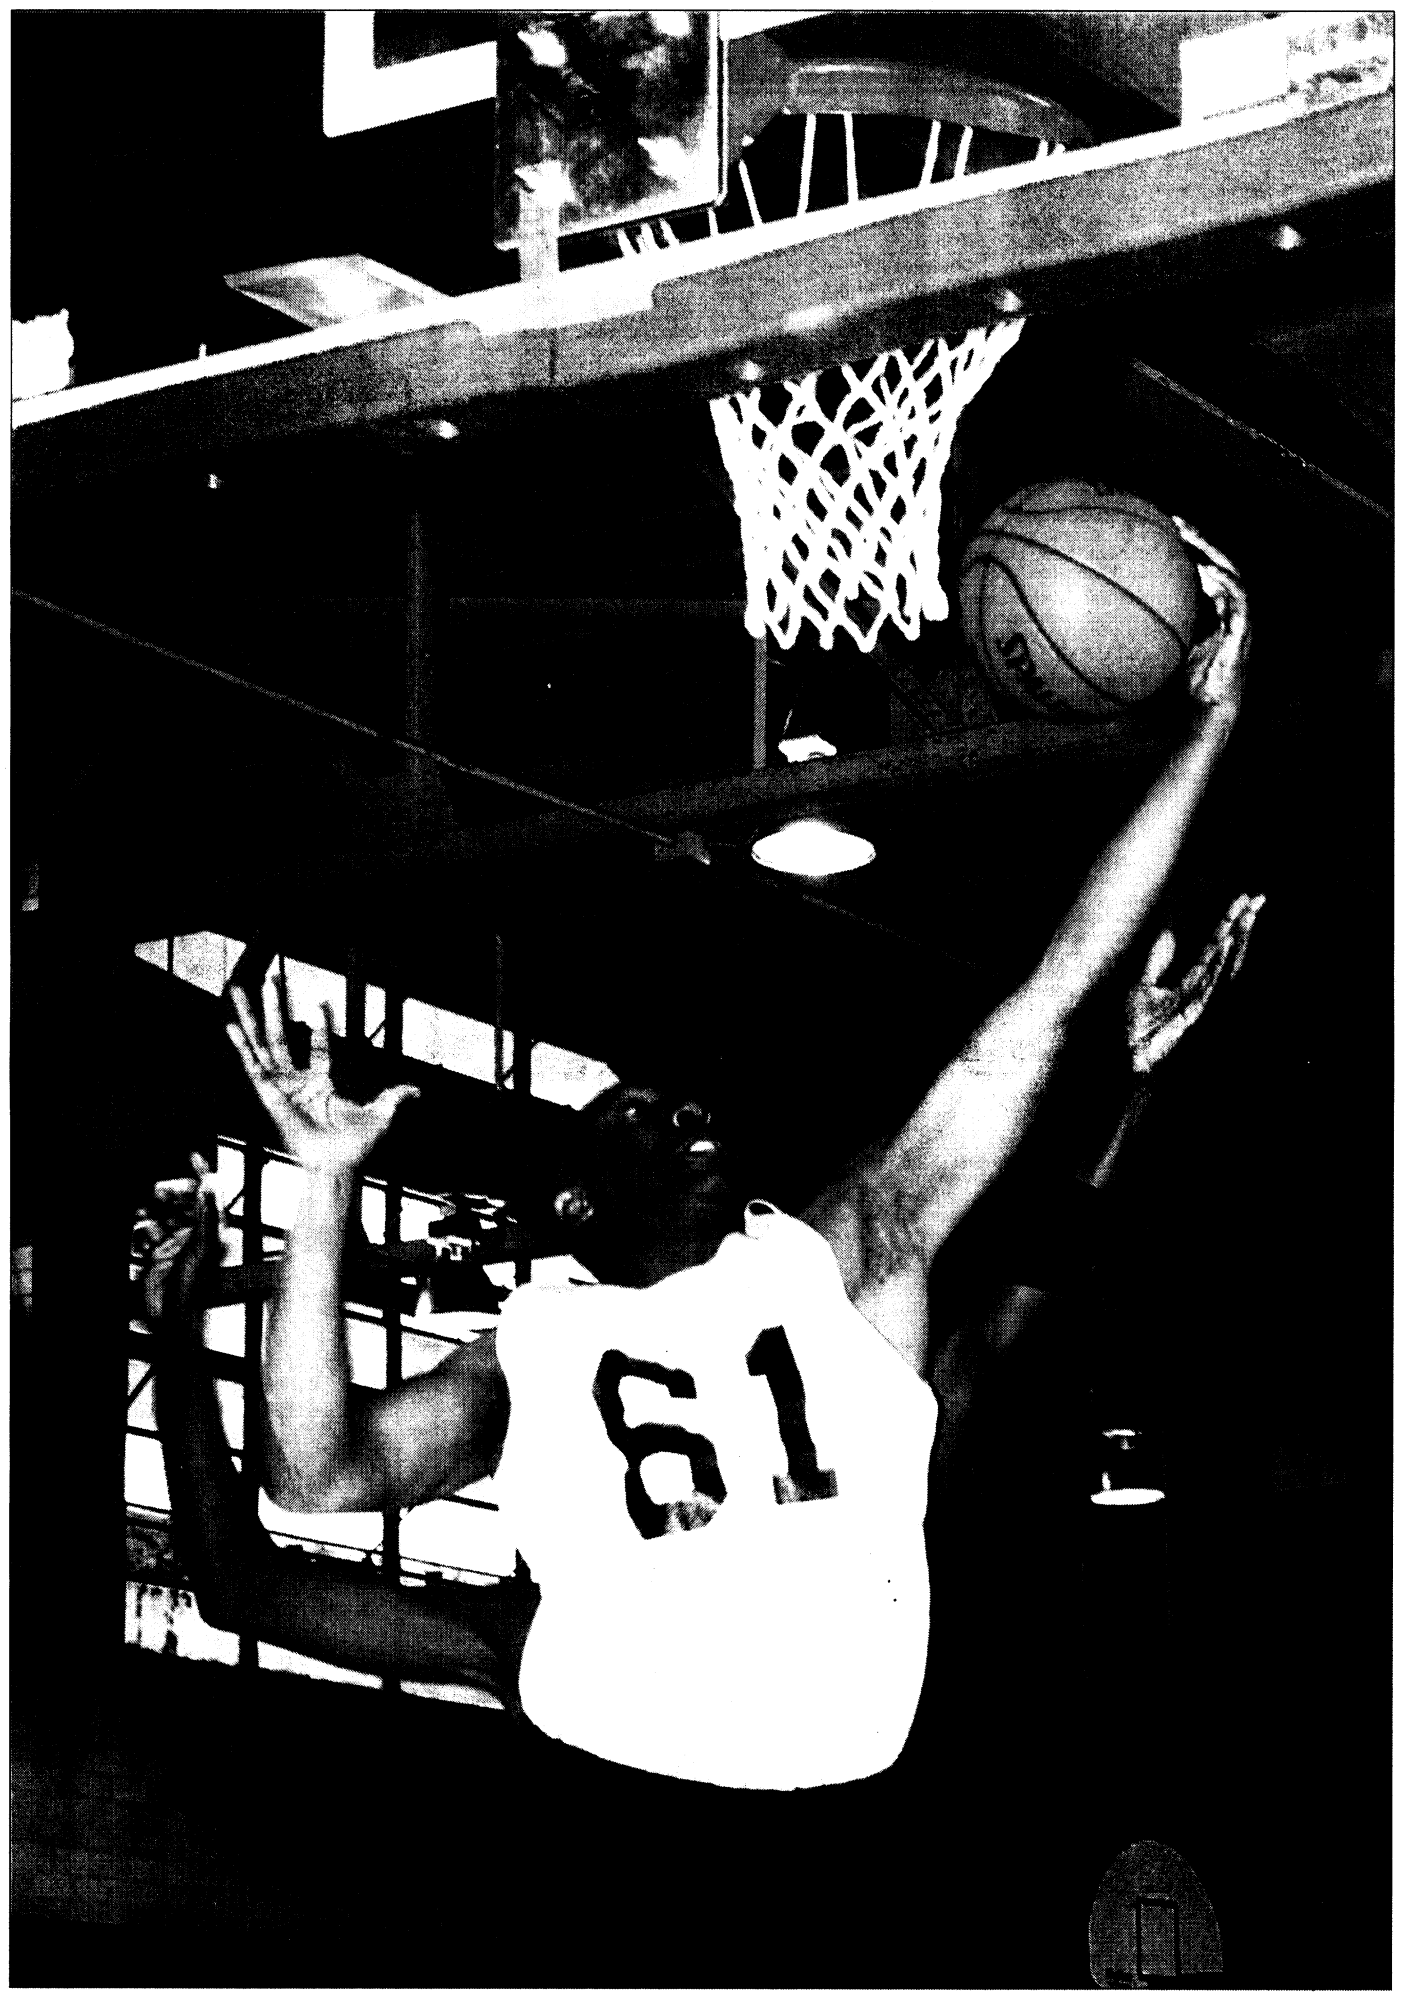
"We really pulled together as a team in the second half," Thomas said. "We came back out and opened it up, passing the ball in the middle more."

With less than five minutes left in the game, the Ballhogs Adrian Fleming stepped back and sank the ball from outside the three point line to close the Crusaders' lead.

As the minutes in the championship game dwindled, so did the point gap.

The Ballhogs came back with 1:20 remaining on the clock to cut the score to 38-37.

Several fouls from the Ballhogs slowed their momentum and gave the Crusaders the chance to clench the game.



"We did well, and I'm real proud of the team," Thomas said.

The game ended with the Ballhogs being whistled for nine fouls in the second half.

Strong defense and tenacious offense led to the fouls and, ultimately, to the crown, Cummings said.

He said his team fun.

"Playing in the tournament raises the team's morale and brings the whole battalion together," the coach said.

Youth Services needs coaches

Volunteers sought for spring season

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Youth Services is accepting applications for soccer and baseball coaches.

Individuals should consider volunteering because it is rewarding, said Master Sgt. Janice Goldsmith, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group.

"I have coached for a variety of youth sports since 1985," said Goldsmith. "I am currently coaching 8- and 9-year-olds in basketball. I love to spend time with the kids. It energizes me.

"My favorite part of coaching is to watch their skill level improve over time and see how well they play by the end of the season."

The number of coaching positions depends on how many children register in the program.

Still, Youth Services tries to use everyone who volunteers, said Dorrie Wagner, child and youth program assistant leader with Youth Services.

Volunteer coaches will have to attend a three-hour certification class by the National Sports Alliance. The class is geared toward helping the coaches teach the specific sport for which they volunteered.

A coach should have team practice about two times a week and play a game on Saturdays, Wagner said. It adds up to about six hours a week.

The main goals of a coach are to help the children with the basics of the game and to develop the children's skill in the game, Wagner said.

There will be a soccer coaches certification class Jan. 23 from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m.

The baseball coaches certification class is Jan. 24 from 5:30 to 8:30 p.m. Both classes will be held in Building 1055.

Camera unit shoots Army marksmen for television

History Channel crew visits USAMU

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

A film crew from the Digital Ranch production company of Sherman Oaks, Calif., visited the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Nov. 29 and videotaped U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit personnel for a documentary set to air on the History Channel in March.

Producer Tom Jennings of Digital Ranch and freelance video and audio specialists Rob Rainey and Mark Clark of Atlanta spent the day interviewing and filming the soldiers and civilians of the USAMU for a one-hour documentary on the history of the magnum for the History Channel's "Modern Marvels" series.

"The USAMU will be a major part of the show on magnums," Jennings said. "The images of the guys firing and a wonderful shot of the bullet flying down range will open the show. Then the entire story we shot with the unit — from the firing range to the construction of the guns — is currently slated for Act 5 of the show — the final act. In all, I'd say the unit will be about 8 to 10 minutes of the 45-minute show — an hour-long broadcast has about 15 minutes of commercials."

The crew spent the morning at the USAMU ranges filming members of the Service Rifle Team shooting the magnum.

After lunch, Jennings and the crew interviewed some of the USAMU ammunition technicians while they were producing magnum bullets and talked with USAMU gunsmiths who build the magnums for the Army shooters.

"I think everything went great," said USAMU Service Rifle Coach Donnie Heuman. "The crew members were highly professional and dedicated to their work. They were very excited about being around the guns and actually being able to film a bullet going down range; they thought that was pretty cool. They made us feel very comfortable and it was a real pleasure working with them. We're hoping to work with them again in the future."

Jennings said he enjoyed his time with the unit.

"The people at the marksmanship unit are a great group of people," Jennings said. "You can tell these individuals are top-of-the-line, both in their professionalism and how they treated our film crew."

Post Catholic Chapel burns

Electrical surge causes fire in WWII building

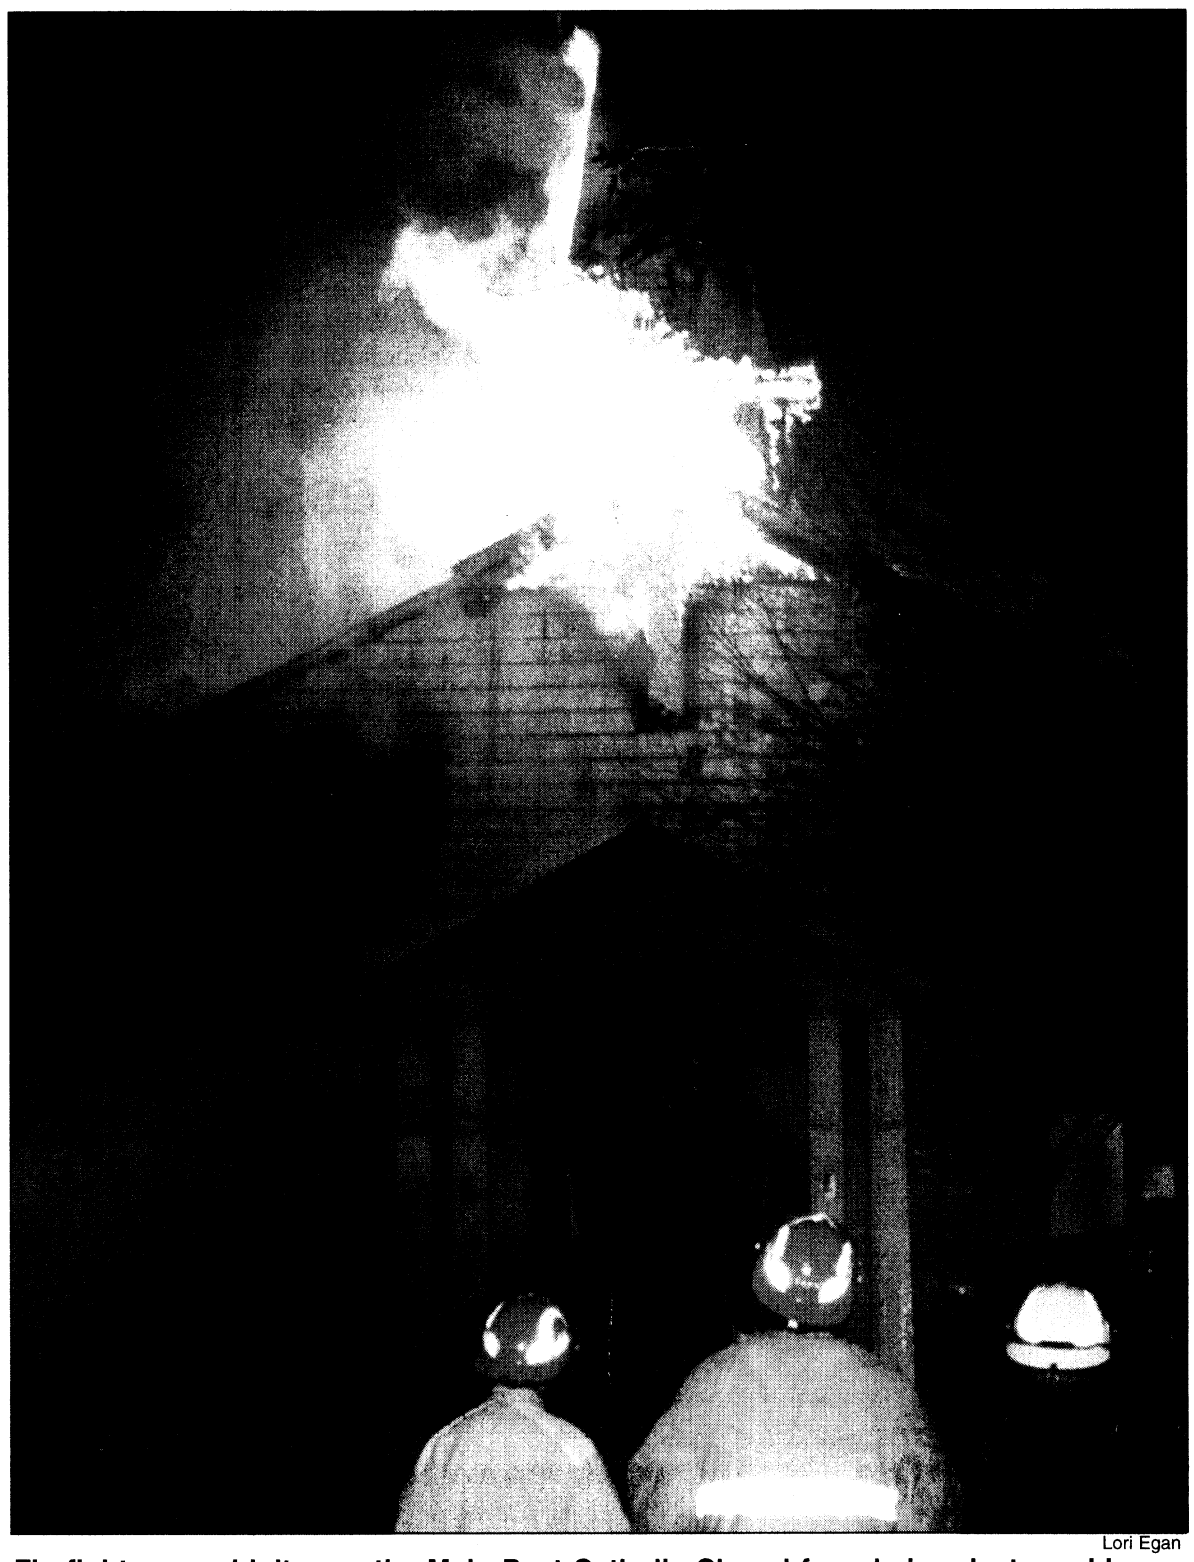
Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The Main Post Catholic Chapel caught on fire early Saturday morning, and only the charred front entrance remains.

The fire, caused by an electrical surge from a transformer across the street from the chapel, started just before 1 a.m., said Fire Chief Arthur Simmons.

"Flames were coming from the mechanical room at the rear of the building when we arrived," said Capt. John Boynton with Station 33 on Main Post.

"We thought we had it — that we could put it out," said Boynton who arrived on the scene within minutes of getting the call. Five truck companies from all three fire stations responded to the fire.



"We went inside. The fire was in the attic and between the walls," he said. "We could see the glow from the flames between the walls and the siding. Smoke was everywhere so we pulled out and went to the roof to ventilate the smoke. The roof started to sag and the fire weakened the rafters. I had to get the men off the roof.

"We tried everything we could, but we couldn't save it," said Boynton who was the acting district chief at the fire.

The timber was old and dry, generating a lot of heat, which contributed to how rapidly the fire spread through the large, open church, he said.

The chapel, built in 1942, was home to nearly 600 parishioners, said Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe who

Keep frequent flier miles with new law

President Bush signs new bill in December

Soldiers and Department of Defense civilians who do work-related travel can now keep their frequent flyer miles.

President George Bush signed the law, the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal 2002, last month. Section 1116 of the law authorizes federal employees to retain promotional items, including frequent flyer miles earned on official travel.

Before the new law, frequent flyer miles were considered government property and could only be used for official travel.

"This is a good thing," said Jay Mason, a financial systems analyst with the Directorate of Resource Management. "It keeps us aligned with the commercial industry because most companies allow their employees to keep their frequent flyer miles."

Now travelers with a lot of mileage can upgrade to first class or use their miles to take personal vacations. However, soldiers who upgrade to first class cannot wear their uniform.

"There's been a positive reaction from travelers," Mason said. "Before this, travelers had to have two accounts, their personal account and one for They've got questions, and they want answers. They are the Quality Management Division and the Inspector General's office, and the answers they get could change the way of life at Fort Benning.

The two offices partnered to create and administer a climate survey, which targets two broad areas of interest, work environment and quality of life on post. The survey comes per the request of Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, the post's commanding general.

"That's what makes this survey important," said Pat Porter, management analyst for QMD. "He asked us to do this with the specific needs of Fort Benning in mind. We can use this tool to assess problem areas on post."

But inquiring minds are looking for more than negative reports.

"We also need to know what's being done right, so the Free tax center now open for business on post

Soldiers receive electronic tax filing at no charge

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Fort Benning Tax Center grand opening was Tuesday.

The center is newly relocated on Ingersoll Avenue at Building 880, Room G131. The building across from the Wynnsong 10 Theater formerly housed the NCO Academy.

"This is a great service for soldiers, and it helps a lot of people," said Col. Lonnie Vona, chief of staff.

Last year the center helped 7,380 soldiers, said Capt. Angela Crisp, officer in charge of the tax center.

"It's not a pleasant event to do your taxes," Vona said. "But they make it a lot easier on the soldier."

The service is free.

"We're here to save the soldiers money," said Sgt. 1st Class Michael Murphy, NCOIC. "We're in the business of taking care of soldiers, and that's what we do."

Murphy has two assistant NCOs to help him keep things going smoothly at the tax center, Sgt. 1st Class Garry Kendrick and Sgt. 1st Class Juan Checa.

"This is a great program," Kendrick said. "Soldiers get to keep their whole return."

The staff at the tax center consists of 24 soldiers and 14 volunteers and civilian employees.

Beth Vaughn, the office manager, said the office is up and running and ready to go.

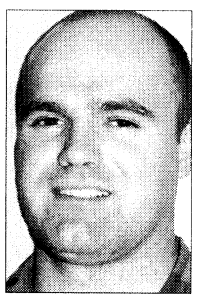
Spc. Christopher Robinson said the center is a great resource for soldiers to take advantage of.

"It feels great really, knowing that we're helping soldiers," Spc. Daisy Santos said.

The center has tax forms, offers assistance on filling them out and can also electronically file returns.

Things to bring to the tax center to facilitate filling out tax forms are: W-2 forms, 1099 INT, 1099 DIV, Form 1098, power of attorney, social security card, voided check and ID card.

The tax center will process 1040EZ tax returns through the end of the month. All federal and state income tax returns, including 1040EZ, 1040A and 1040, will be processed beginning Feb. 1.



When visiting the center, park only in designated parking lots. Parking in the circular drive in front of the center will result in a $45 fine.

The center is open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday. For more information, call 545-4267.

Civil rights, Army progress together

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

commentary

The civil rights movement is a great part of U.S. history my father had the opportunity to experience, but my knowledge comes from books and films.

Actually experiencing a time period can give a person an understanding of how or what was accomplished.

Each birthday, I reflect on the progress of my life. I believe this is a common practice, so with the celebration of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday, Jan. 21, and Black History month in February, I would like to reflect on the military and how it relates to the civil rights movement.

Sept. 11 and the war on terrorism brought Americans together, just like Dec. 7, 1941 did with the attack on Pearl Harbor. Before Pearl Harbor, Jackie Robinson hadn't even stepped on to a major league field.

I believe Pearl Harbor opened many doors for the civil rights movement.

During World War II, Thurgood Marshall and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People looked to bring the civil rights movement into the government mainstream.

This led to the Supreme Court's pronouncement on school segregation in 1954, which led to Brown vs. The Board of Education in 1955.

This Supreme Court case afforded citizens an opportunity to step over a barrier that held the nation from progress.

Overall, progress was a challenge for Americans, but everyone must crawl before they walk. Change takes time.

If you look at U.S. history, you will see this country almost always makes progress in civil rights around the time of a war.

After the Korean War the military started to integrate, and around the time of the Vietnam war integration was a way of life.

The progress of civil rights in this country started with the American revolution. It gave most Americans at the time freedom from oppression. It then progressed with the Civil War, which gave us the Emancipation Proclamation.

I believe civil rights leaders like John F. Kennedy, MLK, Jackie Robinson and Thurgood Marshall are like this country's founding fathers.

Leaders of civil rights and the military go hand-in-hand.

MLK fought a war with words and not weapons. Jackie Robinson fought a war with his athletic skills, confidence and mental strength. These wars were won for the progress of everyone.

Leaders of the civil rights movement are no different than the leaders of the American revolution, the Civil War and World War II. They are the presidents, generals, leaders and founding fathers of this country.

I see this nation as one, as Americans, and we will stand together.

Students win awards for MLK essay contest

Editor's note: The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office and the Fort Benning Schools held an essay contest in conjunction with this year's Martin Luther King Jr. Commemorative Celebration. More than 200 students from the five elementary schools and one middle school on post participated in the contest.

While the theme for this year's celebration is "Remember! Celebrate! Act! A Day On, Not A Day Off," the students were given different perspectives from which to write their essays. The areas they were given to choose from were:

- Would there have been a Civil Rights Movement without Dr. King's leadership? What would have happened?
- Is there equality in the United States for all races? Yes or no, then defend your views.
- What would life be like today in the United States if Dr. King had not been assassinated?

The first-place winners of this year's contest are published below:

The Civil Rights Movement

Yes, I believe there wouldn't have been a Civil Rights Movement without Dr. King's leadership because there were a lot of people who believed segregation was right at that time. But, it might not have come as quickly, due to Dr. King's leadership and strong desire for equal rights.

Remember! Celebrate! A Day On, Not A Day Off

What would life be like today in the United States had Dr. King not been assassinated? He would still be fighting for equal rights. He would still make speeches. He would still preach the word.

If Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was still living, he would fight for peoples' equal rights. By doing this, he would talk to many different political parties. He would lead nonviolent peace marches in all sorts of different places. Lastly, he would take a stand for all types of different people.

Many more of his wonderful speeches would be made today if he was still alive. He would talk out for all people. He would travel spreading his peace. Wherever he went, he would make many more aware of his dream for everybody to accept each other and to live in peace today.

People, world wide, would come to hear him preach. He would speak the words of God — singing alleluia, praise the Lord from way above. He would even hold hands with everyone and thank God for such a wonderful day to be alive. Lastly, he would hold big celebrations on Christmas Day and other joyous holidays.

Therefore you can see the world could be a better place if Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was still alive today. Furthermore, people would adore him for all the great things he would have done. That's what life would be like with Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. around today.

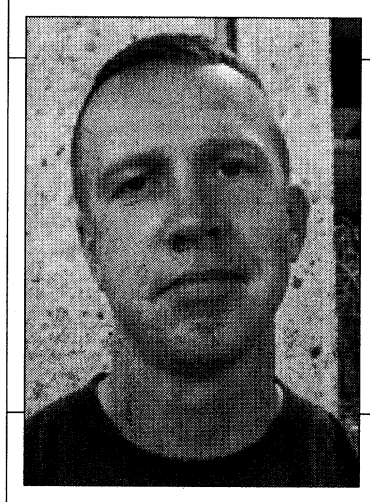
Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Essay

Would there be a Civil Rights Movement without Dr. King's leadership? What would happen?

Separate drinking fountains for whites and blacks. "Colored balconies" in movie theaters. Seats in the back of the bus. Soldiers called out to protect little children who were trying to go to school. It may be difficult to believe these were conditions in America less than 40 years ago. The struggle to change these conditions and to win equal protection under that law for citizens of all races formed the backdrop of King's short life.

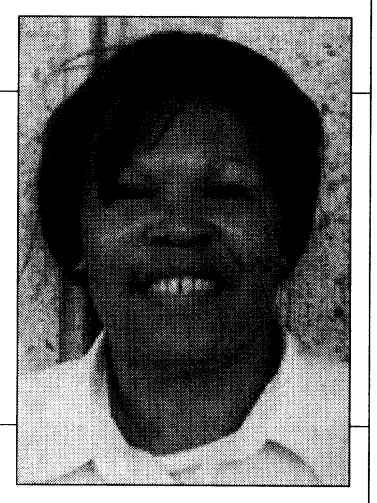
Nevertheless, I believe the Civil Rights Movement could have been established without the leadership of Dr. King, because of all of the other people in the world who felt the same way about this issue as he did. Surely, someone else in the world had the same courage and determination as Dr. King did, that he could fulfill the same accomplishments. I can say with confidence that, sooner or later, we would have had some sort of Civil Rights Movement without Dr. King, because of the intensity and importance of this issue.

Although, I also strongly believe that no other person could have carried out the job so peacefully. Other leaders who strived for the same accomplishments as Dr. King did are first hand proof that other people were so radical, yet Dr. King seemed as if he almost planned all of his movements and actions to be harmless, civilized and violence-free. No one else could have been so inspiring and understanding as Dr. King, because he had the patience and courage that anyone else would have lost in only a matter of time.



If anyone had taken the place of Dr. King, there would have been more deaths, harmful words, and an overall delay because of extended retaliations. President Johnson signed the Civil Rights Act on July 2, 1964, but I think this action would have been delayed had someone else been in Dr. King's shoes. If someone else would have accomplished what Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. did, they may have also been able to prevent the deaths of many, such as Medgar Evers (NAACP Leader) and Malcolm X, who died for their beliefs, dreams and skin color alone. I believe also that if someone would have waited a few extra years to present this issue to the nation, America as a whole would have been more ready and more mature about the circumstances, which could have sped along the process and dramatically reduced the number of deaths.

The majority of the people in our nation now have the same beliefs as Dr. King did, that all races are equal and deserve the same rights as one another. Some people know Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. personally. Others admired him from afar. All were inspired by him, and because of this I feel positive that the Civil Rights Movement could have been passed even without the help and leadership of Dr. King. It is still one of the most important and cherished laws of American, and because of that, the movement had a lasting effect on the elimination of discrimination and segregation.



— Jaclyn Bishop

Faith Middle School

James, third from left, stays in touch with many of the men he went to battle with in Mogadishu.

Bridgett Siter

Shane James keeps photographs of his Army buddies in his Columbus home. Pictured above is a photograph of Spc. Dominick Pilla, who died in Somalia.

Through the years of anger, guilt and depression, Shane James has always kept one thing in mind — he didn't join the Army to sit behind a desk.

"I've thought about it a lot, and we got just what we asked for when we became rangers," said James, a former medic with B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and a veteran of the bloody 15-hour battle between U.S. troops and a mob of Somalis on the streets of Mogadishu, Oct. 3, 1993 — a battle that left 18 U.S. soldiers dead, including six rangers.

"You go to battalion eager to fight because you've never been there, and you don't know the reality of it," James said. "I know guys who literally prayed for combat, and when it came, they wanted to be right in the middle of it."

James and his friends now know the horrible reality of war, short-lived but savage, and they gathered at a Columbus theater last week to see if Hollywood could get it right.

Nearly 50 rangers and former rangers, all veterans of the battle that inspired Mark Bowden's best-seller, Black Hawk Down, and the movie by the same name, attended a private screening of the film to see if their memories — still vivid and painful after more than eight years — translated to the big screen.

"I just had two concerns," said James. "Would it give an accurate depiction of rangers, and would the families of the deceased be satisfied? That's all that really mattered."

Despite a "few glaring discrepancies," James was satisfied with the movie — not pleased — just satisfied.

"We knew every detail of the fight, so of course we picked it apart. A lot of the embellishments were for theatrical value I'm sure," he said. "But the bottom line is, it gave the right message. It's a good movie."

The screening was a sort of reunion for the rangers, many of whom have left the Army to pursue other careers. When his enlistment was up in 1994, James went home to Texas to study nursing. Now married with a 1-year-old daughter, he's back in Columbus, working for a pharmaceutical company.

Jenny James attended the viewing with hopes of gaining a better understanding of the events that changed her husband's life and occasionally casts a pall over his otherwise easy-going disposition.

"He doesn't talk about it. Everything I know about it, I learned from the book," she said. "October 3rd is still a really hard day for him. He gets quiet and depressed."

Sunday, Oct. 3, 1993, started out like every other since B Co. arrived in country Aug. 26. The rangers had become accustomed to aborted missions and routine "fly-bys." So a quick in-and-out mission — the objective being the capture of two lieutenants of Somali warlord Mohammed Farrah Aidid — was a welcome diversion.

But something — "a series of unavoidable events," James said — went awry, and first one Black Hawk helicopter went down, then another.

And in the bloody frenzy that followed, James joined a rescue convoy that struggled against thousands of Somalis and "incredible odds" to save the rangers and Delta forces trapped within the city.

Though much of the day's events are a "hazy blur," James remembers being wounded when his jeep was targeted by three rocket-powered grenades. He dismisses his wounds as minor, and said he felt guilty for being awarded a Purple Heart and Bronze Medal.

He still deals with a myriad of emotions — guilt, frustration at the lack of mechanized support on hand, and depression when he thinks of his good friends who died, like Pvt. Richard Kowalewski, a fellow Texan who was looking forward to getting married, and Sgt. Lorenzo Ruiz, who spear-headed the company's betting pool during football season.

And he still experiences what he calls "90-to-nothing flashes of everything that happened, one right after the other," in no logical order.

"If I tried to make sense of it all, I'd go crazy," he said.

Viewing the movie was a milestone for James, a step forward in his search for peace. He finished reading the book last fall, though he purchased it in 1999.

"I just couldn't get through it," he said. "I wasn't ready to dredge it all up. It's an awesome book, very hard to follow because it's chaotic, like the battle itself."

James has also found solace in his faith.

"I turned to beer for a while, then I turned to God," he said.

But the one place James can't turn to for compassion is the brotherhood of rangers.

"I can't name a single guy who hasn't thought about it every day. But there's no place for self-pity. We were rangers, and we got what we wanted," he said.

"We don't sit around and commiserate about it. It's a really unsympathetic arena, but it's a brotherhood, and we'll never forget."

The story in Army Times about free admission to the movie, Black Hawk Down is not applicable to Fort Benning. The free admission policy only applies to theaters owned by AAFES.

CG to award Green to Gold scholarships

Application deadline is April 1

2nd Lt. Tanya Nessmith
Columbus State University ROTC

Maj. Gen. Paul D. Eaton is looking for three quality soldiers for a specific mission. That mission is to go to college and become an Army officer.

Earning a college degree as an enlisted soldier while serving in the Army is a difficult if not impossible task. It does not have to be that way.

The Fort Benning commander has three two-year scholarships to award this spring to qualifying enlisted members to start college next fall semester.

These scholarships pay all tuition, fees and book money and can be used at any university to complete a bachelor's or master's degree within the next two years.

Soldiers must take ROTC training while attending school and are commissioned as a second lieutenant upon graduation.

Known as the Hip-Pocket Scholarship, under the Army's Green to Gold Program, these scholarships allow Army commanders to personally select and reward their outstanding soldiers with a unique opportunity to improve their education and further their military career. Interested soldiers must apply before April 1.

Last fiscal year only two soldiers applied for the three Commanding General Hip-Pocket scholarships.

"I know there were more eligible soldiers out there who would jump at the opportunity if only they knew about it," said Capt. Richard Hoyle, enrollment officer for Columbus State University. "The CG's Hip Pocket Scholarship Program offers the best chance for a soldier to receive a two-year scholarship under the Green to Gold Program. A soldier only has to compete against a limited number of other applicants at his post versus nationwide."

Every year the Green to Gold Program allows enlisted soldiers to leave active-duty service early to attend college full time, take ROTC training and return to active duty as an officer. The Commander's Hip Pocket scholarship is just one part of the overall program.

Most enlisted soldiers do not take advantage of the Green to Gold Commissioning Program for two reasons. First, they do not know about it or are misinformed about eligibility requirements.

Second, many married soldiers elect not to participate since they are discharged from active duty and lose their monthly pay. There are many ways to help offset living expenses, said Lt. Col. Gery Truitt, professor of Military Science at Columbus State University.

"These soldiers are eligible to use their GI Bill and Army College Fund benefits while in this program and ROTC also pays them a $350 monthly stipend the first year and $400 the second year. Together these combine to more than $1,000 monthly for living expenses. Many universities have additional financial incentives available such a ROTC specific incentives and university sponsored scholarships they may be eligible for. Most cadets qualify for Pell grants and loans.

To make this program even more attractive CSU, Fort Benning and Raytheon Hughes Corporation have combined forces to provide free room and board for one of Fort Benning's scholarship winners if they attend CSU. This is an added value of $10,600 on top of the tuition money.

Last year Spc. Tirea Gamble, a supply specialist from the Army Marksmanship Unit applied for and received a scholarship. She's working on her master's degree at CSU and was the first recipient of this cooperative arrangement. Now she is attending a university full time at no cost.

"This has allowed me to pursue my degree worry-free of the financial aspect of my educational experience," Gamble said.

CSU ROTC is working to expand this offer to two scholarship winners this year.

Many might question why go the Green to Gold route when with two years remaining for a degree why not just go the Officer Candidate School route. The advantage to the GTG Program is it allows soldiers to earn their degree and then start out as officers. OCS graduates can lose valuable platoon leader rated time as officers having to attend college full time after completing OCS and the Officer Basic Course. If for some reason they fail to complete their degree in a timely manner they are at risk of not getting promoted to captain. The Green to Gold route, which can be a little harder financially, does provide a more stable progression of early assignments when learning their new profession is critical.

Training and Doctrine Command and the ROTC Cadet Command have tasked the ROTC Department at CSU to process all Green to Gold scholarship applications for Fort Benning soldiers no matter which university they desire to attend. CSU is also handling the applications for the CG's Hip Pocket Scholarships.

The application process can be time consuming. The biggest problems with the applications are getting all the required documents in a timely manner, items like past college transcripts, birth certificates, letters of recommendation from company and battalion commanders are relatively easy.

Applicants must also have a letter of acceptance from the school of their choice, ROTC commander and the admission department showing they will be granted admission.

"This is another advantage of dealing with a local university near a soldier's post in that they can take the time to personally visit and work the application process," Hoyle said.

Eligibility requirements for the Hip Pocket Scholarship are the same as the regular GTG program. A soldier needs to have a GT score of 110 or higher, a minimum of 60 credit hours with a 2.5 GPA or higher. Soldiers who have a bachelor's degree can apply for a master's degree. A soldier cannot have more than 10 years enlisted service and there are age restrictions.

"Too often soldiers receive inaccurate information and they never apply. We stand ready to help anyone who is interested," Truitt said. "CSU ROTC and Fort Benning are a great combination. Our training program is one of the top five in the Southeast region, while our cadets consistently rank in the top 30 percent of the national order of merit list.

"In 1999, CSU graduated the top cadet in the nation who was a former Green to Gold Fort Benning soldier. About 40 percent of our cadets are prior service personnel," Truitt said.

For those soldiers who lack 60 credit hours and want to receive a college scholarship and become an Army officer the regular Green to Gold Program offers three and four-year scholarships as well. These individuals need to contact the CSU enrollment officer. The application window also closes April 1 for these applications.

There are monthly Green-to-Gold briefings at Fort Benning. The next briefing is scheduled for Jan. 30 in Infantry Hall, Classroom 32B from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m.

For more information, call Hoyle at 568-2449 or the Gold Bar Recruiters at 568-2058.

Dial 5BOSS gives support to soldiers, family members

Phone line helps community solve problems

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Dial 545-BOSS line is the Commanding General's action line. It is an avenue available to soldiers, family members and civilians to address issues and bring attention to problems that cannot be resolved at the chain of command level or by the responsible agency.

"A lot of people walk around and voice their complaints but don't do anything about it," said Angela L. Sims, office coordination assistant with the Secretary of the General Staff. "I've seen a lot of problems resolved with the help of the phone line."

The Dial 5BOSS line is not a substitute to get assistance with Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics' areas of responsibilities, which include family housing, facility maintenance, utility systems and environmental matters.

If assistance is needed in these areas, call the customer service desk at 545-2118.

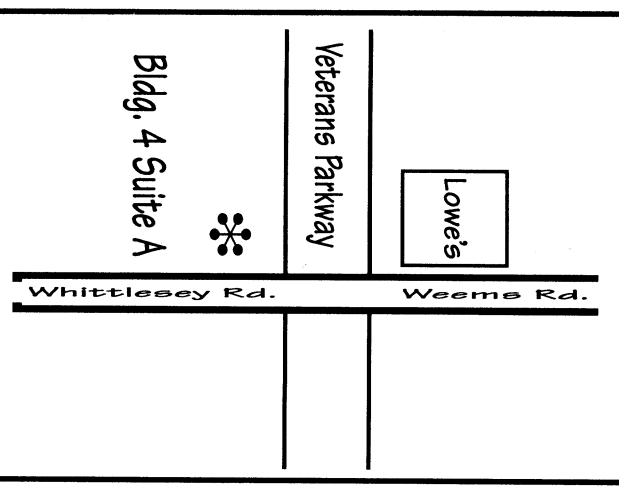
The Dial 5BOSS line is open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays, and all calls made afterhours or during the weekend are sent out the next working day.

"We give the responsible agency seven working days to begin action with the issue, or higher authorities will step in," Sims said. "General Eaton personally reviews all of the Dial 5BOSS call reports on a quarterly basis to look for repeating problems."

It is important people who use the line understand that if their chain of command or the responsible agency are working on the issue, calling the Dial 5BOSS line will not get the problem resolved any faster.

Also, customers should not call the line before trying to resolve an issue with the chain of command or responsible agency.

The Dial 5-BOSS line is not a substitute for Uniform Code of Military Justice, Equal Opportunity, Equal Employment Office, USAIC Reg 690-711 (Grievances), or current negotiated labor management agreements.



"I think it's a very useful tool, we get compliments and thankyous from people who have used the number and had their issues resolved," Sims said.

"It's hard to believe the apel could burn so quickly d completely," O'Keeffe said.

Not only did the fire gut the nctuary destroying the oak alls and a statue of the risen rist with his arms raised hind the altar, but also the ernacle, which probably elted in the fire, O'Keeffe d.

"I am just devastated ... ver in my life would I have ough it was the church that s on fire," said Sgt. Maj. lio Sanchez, 36th Engineer oup, referring to the sirens t woke his daughter during night.

"It was home to many ople," said Sanchez who rshipped at the chapel for the t six years.

As news of the chapel fire ead, community members hered to remember.

Sgt. Dorothy Bess-Moore, chapel's NCOIC, talked out how the community had led together to improve the rly 60-year-old building. w carpeting was laid in tober, the sound system was v and the organ replaced in tober 2000.

'The congregation had done a of work on this chapel," she said, remembering the self-help projects that included a fresh coat of paint.

Lori Egan

Firefighter Phillip Hill puts out hot spots Saturday morning. The chapel was completely destroyed by an electrical fire.

O'Keeffe said he was sad for the people who had lost their worship center filled with the memories of weddings, baptisms and funeral services.

Stephanie Mello and her husband, 1st Sgt. Mark Mello, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry, had planned on renewing their wedding vows in the chapel this spring.

Memories are often tied to a place and widows often come here to remember their loved ones, O'Keeffe said. People see the chapel as one of the centers of their community.

"This is sacred space and to lose that is devastating," he said.

O'Keeffe's office was also in the chapel, and he lost all of his vestments, uniforms, 23 years of Army memorabilia and his entire library.

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor, garrison chaplain, said there had been plans for a new chapel to be built adjacent to the annex behind The Infantry Center Chapel, but the plans had never made it past the funding stage.

"New chapels haven't been built in the Army for a number of years so we're hoping this will cause the Department of Defense to rethink it and allow us to build a new one," Taylor said.

In the meantime, the 5 p.m. Saturday mass will be celebrated in TIC Chapel and both of Sunday's masses, 8:30 and 11:30 a.m., will be celebrated in Pratt Hall, which is in the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

ng areas can be used to make models for ers that may be lacking," Porter said.

With a military career comes a lot of erwork, said one soldier who has taken at least surveys in his 13 year Army career.

'If you've been in the military for three nths, you've taken a survey," he said. "They ost all look the same and ask the same stions. But this one gets to the point. It's ch better than what I've seen before."

With vast test-taking experience under his belt, said the survey is more comprehensive than se taken at the company-command level.

"I don't remember seeing any questions like this before, like the question asking whether your job is interesting. That's important to get to because you have to like what you do in order to succeed," the soldier said. "This certainly hits all the points it needs to."

The 1,100 anonymous participants turned in the surveys yesterday. They received the 120-question test Jan. 4. Over the next few weeks, mission systems specialists at IG will compile and analyze the answers. They will release the results of the survey at the end of February, after examination by the post commander.

A CLOSER LOOK

Responses to the following statements were supposed to indicate to what degree a survey taker agreed or disagreed with them, or found them not to be applicable:

- People in my organization share responsibility for the success or failure of the work produced.
- I feel my work is useful.
- People in my organization do not have to rely on "the grapevine" or rumors for information.
- The distribution of work among the people in my organization is well balanced.
- A spirit of cooperation and teamwork exists within my organization.
- Participants were also asked to rate their level of satisfaction in other areas such as youth services, car washes, hospital patient care, and military pay problem resolution.

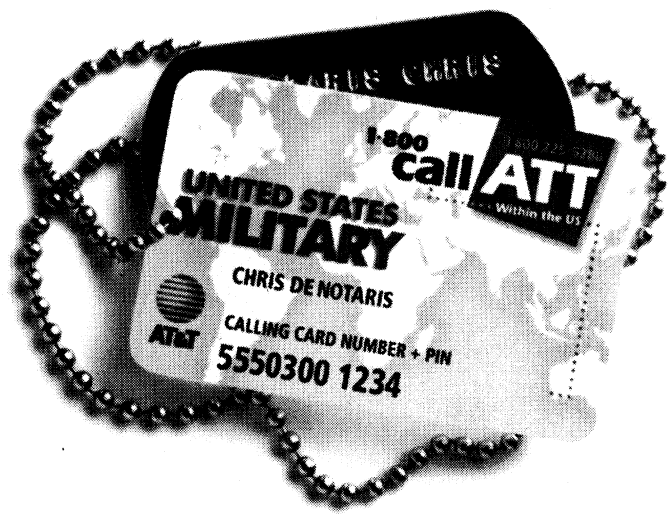
ernment travel. Two accounts ame too much for travelers because he administrative burden so most uldn't set up a government account. ot of miles were just lost."

Mason said he did not know if elers could combine previous miles n their personal and governmental ounts. Travelers would have to check with their individual airline.

Maj. Bill Harris, assistant TRADOC Systems Manager-Soldier, who takes a couple of trips a month, said it will take some time getting used to the new law.

"I have mixed feelings about the law," Harris said. "The government pays for the ticket, and therefore owns the miles. But if the government wants to let travelers keep the miles, then I'm OK with that."

Harris said he did not know if he would use the mileage for personal travel because he felt guilty.



"At my last command, we used the miles for government travel to save the government money," Harris said. "I feel uneasy using the miles to take a vacation or upgrade to first class. I really don't need the miles."

But Spc. Chris Bashaw, Land Warrior subject matter expert, is excited about the change.

"I like the change," Bashaw said. "In eight months, I've logged 90,000 miles. Some may think the change is unfair, but traveling isn't really a luxury. Some days I travel and work 20 to 22 hours a day, then I have to go to work again the next day and do the same thing.

"Traveling can be stressful," Bashaw said. "Now at least we can keep the miles, which eases the burden of traveling. When my year in the Army is over, I plan to use the miles to take a vacation."

For more information, travelers should contact their supervisor or contact Mason at 545-1046.

Battalion receives runner-up award

Competition grows fiercer each year

Tonya Johnson
Bayonet staff

The 1st battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment soldiers and civilians have something to smile about.

The battalion was recently named the Training and Doctrine Command runner-up in the large category for the fiscal 2001 Army award for Maintenance Excellence.

"None of this would have been possible without the soldiers and civilians," said Chief Warrant Officer Lee Franklin, battalion maintenance officer. "They work hard and put a lot of effort into their work."

The AAME is an annual award open to the active Army, Reserve and National Guard. Winners and runners-up are chosen in each major command in three categories — small, medium, and large. The winners from the major commands compete at the Department of the Army level for the Secretary of Defense Maintenance Award.

The battalion was judged on its readiness, maintenance programs such as its Quality Assurance and Hazardous Waste programs and community activities. Some of the battalion's community activities include mentoring Spencer High School students, giving local tours and hosting blood drives.

"The purpose of the award is to identify excellence," Franklin said. "Maintenance is training and training is maintenance. Both go hand in hand. You need both to train the infantryman of tomorrow on the most modern equipment."

Eighteen civilians and 65 soldiers are the mechanics who keep the 116 Bradley fighting vehicles, 95 wheeled vehicles and other equipment repaired and working. The battalion is the largest mechanized infantry in the Army with more than 2,000 pieces of equipment and 650 personnel.

"The professionalism of the soldiers and civilians is incredible," Franklin said. "They work hand in hand to get the mission accomplished."

The battalion has won the award in previous years, but the competition keeps becoming more intense.

"This is a fierce competition," Franklin said. "It's an honor to be the runner-up in the large category."

Sam Harvel, the maintenance supervisor, said the honor showed the importance of teamwork within the battalion.

"We all work together, and it shows," Harvel said. "We have learned to do more with less, and we believe in doing things right the first time."

Master Sgt. Elyon Zeigler, battalion motor sergeant, is also pleased with the honor.

"This gives us a chance to highlight the good things we do on a daily basis," Zeigler said. "We play a major part with keeping the infantryman equipped for combat."

Franklin considers his staff to be among the best in the Army and is ready to enter next year's contest.

"We'll continue to grow and learn from this year," Franklin said. "I'm confident next year we'll win."

Army needs physician assistants

Deadline for application is April 30

Capt. Henry Hathaway
Martin Army Community Hospital

The U.S. Army is looking for qualified enlisted soldiers to attend the Interservice Physician Assistant Training Program at the AMEDD Center and School, Fort Sam Houston, Texas. This is an intensive two-year course of study. Graduates of the course receive a commission as a second lieutenant and a baccalaureate degree from the University of Nebraska.

Army physician assistants provide a broad range of medical services traditionally performed by physicians.

They are the primary medical provider to soldiers in battalion and division level units and may also provide garrison healthcare to soldiers, family members and other eligible beneficiaries. The Army PA has served the nation in all conflicts and peacekeeping missions since the Vietnam War.

The Army trains approximately 70 enlisted soldiers a year alongside candidates from the Air Force, Navy, Coast Guard, U.S. Army Reserve, National Guard and U.S. Public Health Service. Candidates attend the AMEDD Center and School for the classroom portion of the program. Courses range from anatomy and physiology to orthopedics. During a year of clinical training at selected Army hospitals, the candidates participate in clinical rotations in such areas as surgery, pediatrics and dermatology.

Applicants must be enlisted soldiers with a minimum of three years but less than 12 years time in service. Other eligibility criteria include, but are not limited to: a GT score of 110 or greater, 60 semester hours of post secondary school education of which 30 hours must include six hours of English, six hours of humanities, six hours of chemistry, six hours of anatomy and physiology, three hours of algebra, and three hours of psychology.

Currently, there is a pilot program that accepts commissioned and warrant officers applicants to compete for seats in the program.

Applications for this program are accepted until April 30 of each year and are reviewed by a board in July of each year. Complete application procedures are found in AR 601-20, The Interservice Physician Assistant Training Program, and in yearly message updates found at the Web site www.goarmy.com/job/amedd/paqual3.htm. Local Army education centers can also assist applicants with procedures.

Maj. Bruce McLennan will hold a briefing from 10 to 11 a.m. and 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. Thursday at Infantry Hall, Classroom 30. This program is open to all MOSs and AOCs.

For more information, call McLennan at DSN 536-0386 or commercial 502-626-0386, or e-mail at bruce.mclennan@usarec.army.mil.

People's Parable: National symbol nests near Chattahoochee River

Bald eagles built nesting place on Fort Benning

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet

Editor's note: This article is the third in a seven-part series that will honor and explain the origin of some of our national symbols.

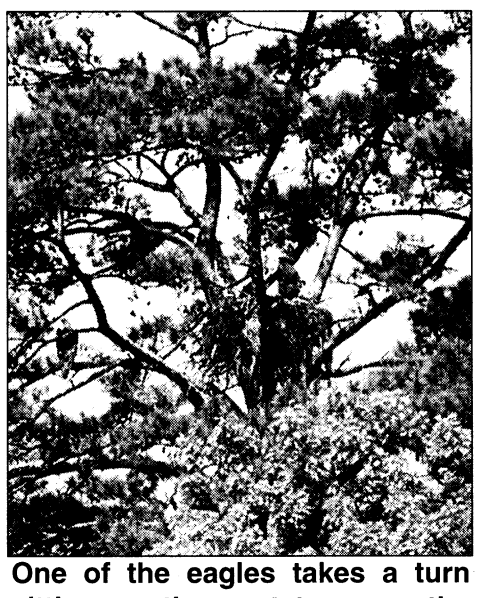
As far as national symbols go, Fort Benning boasts the birdiest. Two adult bald eagles nestle in their own riverfront resort on the Chattahoochee.

Eagles are thought to mate for life, and, for the last eight years, this couple has made the post their home. There are actually two nests, but the original, located in a ravine, has deteriorated with time. The pair recently made an upgrade to a tall tree overlooking the river.



Sightings of the eagles nesting and fishing on the river are frequent since the eagles prefer areas near water, and they feed on fish.

"It's pretty dramatic to go out there and see them bring in a fish or see the eaglets starting to get bigger and test out their wings," said Pete Swiderick, Conservation Branch chief, Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics. "That can be a pretty exciting sight."

The post's pair has produced at least one eaglet each year for the past eight years. They typically nest from the first of December until the end of May, when the eaglets leave the nest, Swiderick said.

"We've expected the eaglets to come back and make nests, but we've not been able to verify they've done that," Swiderick said. "There occasionally are sightings of three eagles together, including one sub-adult. But we've not seen more than three together at the same time."

The conservation branch's role is to protect the area in which the eagles live during the breeding season. This includes blocking boaters, closing two training areas, locking two gates that access the river, and blocking hunting in that area.

One of the eagles takes a turn sitting on the nest to warm the eggs. The eagles are free from predators in their tall tree home.

They have even coordinated with Lawson Army Airfield to keep flight patterns no less than 1,000 feet away from the nesting area. The branch's biologist checks on the nest weekly during the nesting season.

The bald eagle was selected as the insignia of the United States June 20, 1782.

There is a connection between the national symbol and the military installation upon which it thrives, Swiderick said, but not one that may be expected.

"The eagle is here because of the military, not in spite of it. They are here because the habitat is here," Swiderick said. "Fort Benning is an island in a sea of disturbance. The habitat outside of it has been altered to the extent that you won't find any eagles or red-cockaded woodpeckers. The military, whether they meant to or not, has created some semi-pristine habitat for the eagles to live in."

The Chattahoochee River Valley is a good example of high quality habitat for the eagle and several endangered species, Swiderick said. The quality comes as a result of the military's active involvement in a natural resource management program.

"The military provides an excellent habitat for many endangered species," Swiderick said, "and right now those habitats on installations are some of the best that exist."

A CLOSER LOOK

- The bald eagle was selected as the insignia of the United States June 20, 1782.
- Historians state the bald eagle was selected due to its long life, great strength and majestic looks. It was also then believed to exist only in North America.
- Another historical account gave added echelon to the choice of the eagle as the national symbol. They say at one of the first battles of the Revolution, which typically occurred early in the morning, the noise of the struggle awoke the sleeping eagles on the heights. They flew from their nests and circled over the heads of the fighting men, all the while letting out shrill cries. It was said the men exclaimed then, "They are shrieking for our freedom."
- It is now depicted on the silver dollar, half dollar and the quarter, as well as on the Great Seal of the United States.
- The average lifespan for a bald eagle is 20-50 years.
- The bald eagle is not really bald. It has white feathers on its head, neck and tail. Bald is a derivative of balde, an Old English word meaning white.
- The bald eagle can fly 20 to 40 mph in normal flight and can dive at speeds over 100 mph.
- Bald eagles can actually swim! They use an overhand movement of the wings that is very much like the butterfly stroke.
- More than 80 percent of the bald eagle population in the southeastern U.S. is concentrated within the state of Florida.
- The bald eagle has been moved to "threatened" status from being considered an endangered species. Considerations are now underway to remove the bald eagle from the list altogether, as they are now a recovered population.
- The Bald Eagle Protection Act makes it illegal for anyone to collect eagles and eagle parts, nests, or eggs without a permit. Possession of a feather or other body part is a felony with a fine of up to $10,000 and imprisonment, although federally recognized Native Americans are able to possess such emblems, which are traditional in their culture.

Wildlife conservation is the cat's meow.

The Paladin Operators Leader Course Class 01-02 engages in a live-fire exercise, firing high-explosive rounds from the Paladin M-109 at Bowman Range.

Students wrap up class with big bang

Paladin course students perform live-fire

Pvt. Brian Trapp

The Paladin Operators Leader Course class performed a live-fire exercise with the Paladin M-109, a fully-tracked, armored vehicle with a 155 mm Howitzer, Tuesday at Bowman Range.

The class is an 80-hour course geared for NCOs and officers to familiarize themselves with the equipment and give hands-on experience to take back to their crew.

"It is definitely a great class," said Staff Sgt. Anthony O'Baner, an instructor for the course, with 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment. "It is set up for people who have never used a Paladin before. We give detailed instruction on how everything works, so the students will learn all the major aspects of the equipment."

Students seem to enjoy the course.

"I think the class is pretty good overall," said Sgt. John Cruz, student in the course with 1st Bn., 10th Artillery Regt. "We get trained on the basics of the system."

During the class, students learn the history of field artillery, how to use the computer and other equipment with the Paladin, and the safety standards of operation.

"When they leave here, they will have the knowledge and confidence to take back to their crew," O'Baner said.

During the live-fire exercise, the students received coordinates of the target, adjusted aim and fired 99-pound, high-explosive rounds at the target during several aiming scenarios.

"The live-fire exercise is the best and most exciting part of the course," O'Baner said. "They put to use everything they learned over the week, and the students use that to shoot down range."

Cruz said he was glad to get out of the classroom.

"I think the hands-on experience is great," Cruz said. "Anyone can read books about doing this, but here we get the natural feeling how to use it."

Expanded Javelin course meets needs of Army

More soldiers will be able to attend gunners course

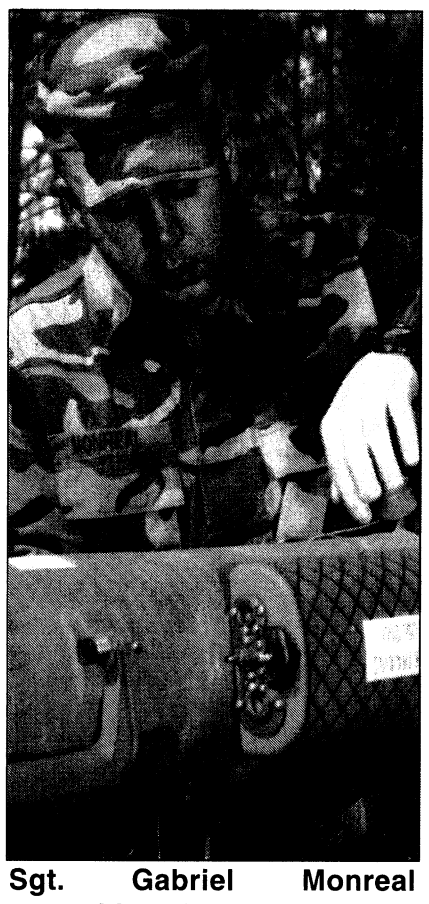
Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
Bayonet staff

The Army is stepping up its transformation to a faster, more lethal force. Part of that mission is fielding more trained Javelin gunners. The Javelin is a medium range, portable, shoulder-launched, fire and forget, antiarmor weapon system.

"The (Javelin) is relatively new to the Army," said Nelson McGahee, 29th Infantry Regiment training specialist.

His office is currently working with the Department of the Army to increase the number of student gunners in the Javelin gunners course, conducted at the U.S. Army Infantry School, in an effort to fill the growing number of gunner positions becoming available throughout the Army.

Last year, officials from the USAIC talked to DA to establish training loads for fiscal 2003 and 2004, McGahee said.



The final statement for the FY02 is 132 students. That breaks down into four classes, each with 33 seats, he said.

USAIC Javelin course leaders also anticipate the approval of an increased training load to 190 seats, adding five classes, each consisting of 38 students, later this fiscal year.

"DA recognizes the need for the increase in classes and for the facilities and equipment," McGahee said. "We are just waiting for the approval for the course increases."

During his visit to Fort Benning last year, Brig. Gen. William Webster Jr., director of training, Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Operations and Plans from Washington, was briefed by Javelin course leaders and agreed to work with the USAIC leaders to help the school receive adequate resourcing for the course.

It is just a matter of time before Staff Sgt. Daniel Duval and other Javelin gunner instructors see an increase in student numbers.

Sgt. Gabriel Monreal assembles the Field Tactical Trainer of the Javelin.

"This increase should have happened several years ago to help the Army fulfill its mission of fielding qualified and certified gunners and instructors," Duval said.

After all the meetings, school official are hopeful that they will receive the support.

"There is a growing need for trained gunners," McGahee said. "The school's mission is to support and train gunners."

"The number of weapons systems being fielded is growing," McGahee said. "More divisions are fielding the weapon system and that is just in the active duty component. The numbers are growing in the reserves, too."

Javelin course instructors are not discouraged nor are they slowing down their tempo. Courses are continuing as planned despite the current lack of funding and instructors.

There are still only 12 months in the year. More courses and larger classes will only help the Army meet its goal of filling gunner positions, Duval said.

Photos by Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Staff Sgt. Rafael Rodriquez fires the Javelin weapon system during a simulated firing exercise. The Department of the Army is working to fill gunner positions Army wide.

Training enough soldiers as gunners is not the only problem the Army is having in filling gunner positions. Once soldiers earn their additional skills identifiers, 2C, signifying them as Javelin gunners, Duval is concerned units may not put them in a gunner position.

"The leadership of the Army needs to use a soldier appropriately," Duval said. "Until there is more trained Javelin gunners in the Army, units need to place trained Javelin gunners in Javelin gunner positions, not in a rifleman or SAW gunners positions."

Infantrymen, engineers and scouts who successfully complete the gunners course receive the ASI, 2C, that can be confused with the Dragon gunner's ASI, C2.

McGahee warns soldiers to pay close attention to the difference in the identifiers.

"If a soldier is Javelin qualified, he should not fill a Dragon gunner or any non-Javelin gunner slot," McGahee said. "By doing so, the soldier and his command are defeating the mission of the Army by not filling the Javelin positions and using the soldiers' valuable skills."

TF 1-30 trains in multinational environment

Soldiers help Austrians in Kosovo

Spc. Molly Jones
Task Force 1-30

Ramjan Range, controlled by Task Force Falcon, is the only qualification range in Kosovo where large caliber weaponry can be fired.

Task Force 1-30 coordinated with the Austrians for the unit's weapons qualification. Master gunner Staff Sgt. Edward Westveer began planning with the Austrians in December shortly after they asked TF Falcon to help.

TF 1-30 provided personnel to help run the range for the Austrians.

"The main reason behind this is because their radio system does not talk to Falcon," Westover said. "They do not have the same frequencies that we do, so radio communication was just easier if we were working it."

"Task Force 1-30, being the heaviest unit here, with Bradley's and whatnot, we were chosen to assist in the process," said Capt. Matthew Neumeyer, assistant operations officer for TF 1-30. "We are only here to facilitate communications with Falcon. This is an Austrian range for the day; they are responsible for the set up, conduct, and tear down of the range.

Part of the Austrians requirement is to qualify their sections, but they combine the armored personnel carrier's qualification with their dismounted troops, Westveer said.

Their training scenario is to move two vehicles, the APC's, with personnel mounted in the back. Make contact, dismount and move to an over watch position, while the APC's move into their position and fire on their targets. Then they will break contact.

Neumeyer said this type of scenario is very much like the type of action that could happen in Kosovo "if we were ever under fire, maybe an ambush, but the same type of thing: return fire and break contact."

Westveer runs the targets for the 50-caliber machine guns in the control tower by a remote control box that controls the target lifters that are down-range. This is the first time this equipment has been used, which gives Westveer a good day to practice and time to work out any problems before his gunnery begins the next week, he said.

Overcrowding causes BCTB to train infantry soldiers

ITB transfer uncommon but necessary

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

One Station Unit Training soldiers started basic training with the Basic Combat Training Brigade in late November because the Infantry Training Brigade did not have enough resources during a two-week period to train the soldiers.

Two hundred and nine infantry soldiers began basic training Nov. 26 with BCTB's A Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, before being transferred to ITB's A Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

The soldiers did not begin their training with the ITB company because the ITB company had not finished its training cycle. Soldiers trained for three weeks with the BCTB before being transferred to ITB.

"ITB is really busy and backed up with soldiers at 30th Adjutant General Replacement Battalion," said 1st Lt. Kevin Gallatin, executive officer of the ITB company. "It worked out really well because BCTB slowed down with its amount of people."

ITB soldiers are assigned to one station unit training, which is 14 weeks of training, the first eight being common task training.

"Our soldiers in ITB learn how tasks are applied to the infantry," Gallatin said.

That's what makes this different because BCTB drill sergeants are from non-infantry military occupational specialities, he said.

> "The soldiers came to us exactly where I expect them to be."
> 1st Lt. Kevin Gallatin
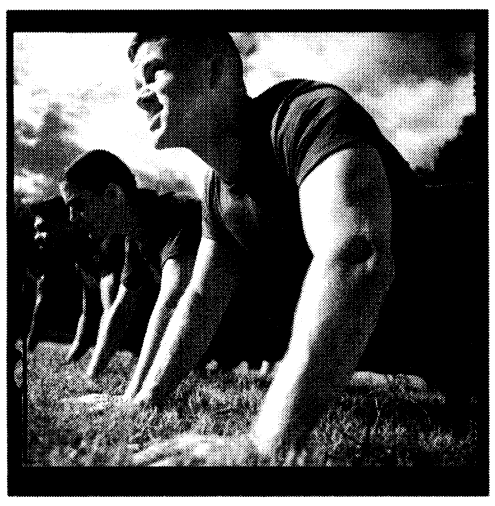
> 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment

"The BCTB drill sergeants are great," Gallatin said. "The soldiers came to us exactly where I expect them to be after three weeks of training."



The soldiers' transition from BCTB to ITB was well organized, said Staff Sgt. Peter Black, drill sergeant at ITB.

"We had all their TA-50 laid out for them when they came, which sped up the process, and we kept their roster number the same," Black said. "The transfer was smooth, and the soldiers already were familiar with their drill sergeants.

"I think the only difficult part about the transition is our standard operational procedure is different from BCTB's SOP."

"We keep our boots on top of our lockers rather than underneath our bunks," Pvt. Rodney Dean said. "And here we only call out at ease for the first sergeant, rather than for a drill sergeant who walks out of the office."

Overall the ITB company is very pleased with the training and transition, Black said.

"Service is a responsibility you don't take lightly."

G.I. Joe earns ranger tab

Fort Benning soldiers serve as models

Way to go Joe. America's favorite soldier has finally earned the ranger tab.

Since his debut in 1964 — the first action figure in the world for boys, with "21 moving parts and a Kung Fu grip" — G.I Joe has survived more conflicts and earned more medals than any soldier in history. But it's taken him 38 years to earn the tab.

"It's about time," said Staff Sgt. Christopher Jones, the assistant operations NCO for the 75th Ranger Regiment.

Jones and Sgt. Aaron Russell, the regimental schools NCO, served as "model" rangers for Hasbro, Inc., the producers of G.I. Joe.

Larry Selman, a free-lance illustrator contracted by the toy company, visited Fort Benning Jan. 10 to get a close look at the rangers in action with assorted weapons, uniforms and equipment.

He took pictures of Jones and Russell in various poses, and from the photos he'll paint the battle scenes that will appear on the Ranger Joe boxes.

"I like to get out and talk to these guys and learn how they work," said Selman, who frequently travels from his home in Waynesboro, Pa. "If I stay in the office all the time, I'd miss the details I need to make my work realistic. There are some things you can't get from books."

Selman, whose work has appeared on 65 G.I. Joe packages since 1986, including the recently released Pearl Harbor edition, said Russell and Jones will recognize

Diaper derby gets down and dirty

Laura Martinson

Babies, start your, uh, engines! Such was the battle cry heard Saturday morning at the Main Mall Post Exchange.

And crying there was as creepers, crawlers and some sure-footed walkers became junior competitors at the PX baby race.

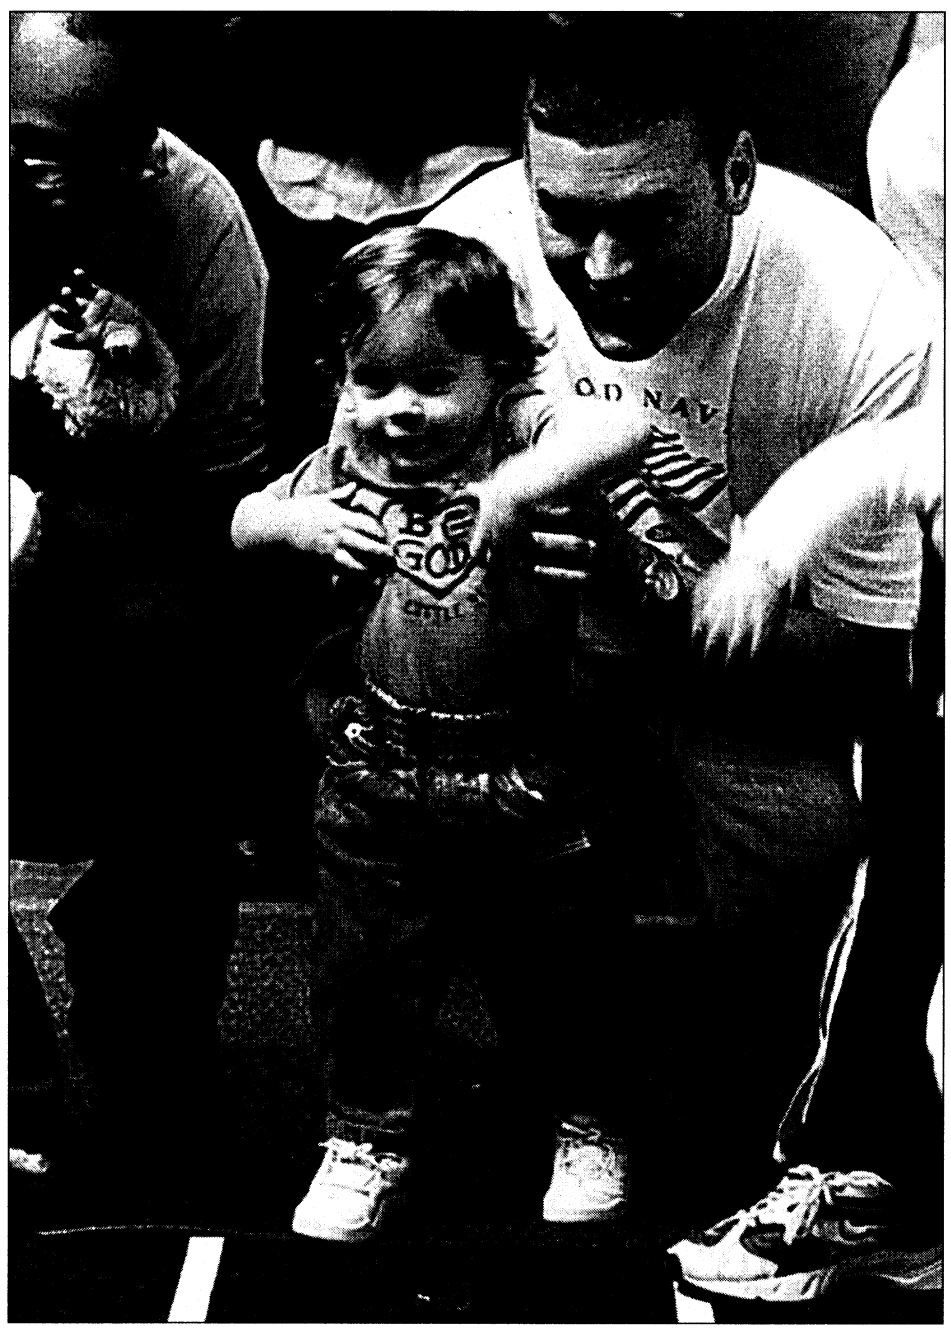
"Each month we try to promote excitement for the store, and this was just another way to do it," said Jerry Shugart, PX manager. "I was a little apprehensive, because I'm not a parent, so I'm hoping for feedback from those who are."

The children were divided into two age groups, 2 to 11 months, and 12 to 18 months.

The younger group of crawlers were judged by how far they got, while the older group, all walkers, were judged by how fast they made it to the finish line.

Parents, grandparents and big brothers and sisters hovered about the finish line with everything from favorite teddy bears, to a set of car keys, hoping to bribe their baby to leave fellow toddlers in the dust.

"We've got a pacifier, her favorite doll and mom at the finish line," said Spc. Thomas Fogger, 71st Military Police Detachment.



And their strategy worked, as baby Ana Kathryn, 15 months, darted straight for the goods to win the walking race.

Blake Pierce, 10-month-old winner of the crawling race, got a pep talk from dad, Sgt. Colby Pierce of 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, before the contest.

"I told him to win, and we did a little 'go, team, go' chant," Pierce said.

Winners received a plaque, a $25 gift certificate to the PX and a stuffed animal. A car seat was raffled, and every baby walked — or crawled — away with a box of baby wipes just for participating.

Amanda Brown heard the announcement while shopping in the PX and decided to enter daughter Emerald, 18 months. Although many parents were excited at the prospect of a little competition, Brown said, "It's just a way to have a little fun on a Saturday."

Schools sponsor contest

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning Schools want to see if you've been paying attention.

They're sponsoring a contest to see how much you know about the Department of Defense Education Activity's Community Strategic Plan, and specifically how it's being implemented on Fort Benning.

The CSP was the subject of a five-part series that ran in The Bayonet during December and January. The contest, which will be published next week, is based on the articles, the CSP handbook (available at all post schools), and the DoDEA Web site, www.odedodea.edu.

The contest, which will run for three weeks, is open to all Fort Benning residents, employees, military, retired military and family members, with the exception of employees of Fort Benning Schools and The Bayonet.

A list of prizes will be published next week, along with an entry form, which can be returned to any Fort Benning school, the administration office on Custer Road or The Bayonet office in Infantry Hall.

Now do your homework.

Magazine features students worries

Students' essays express fears, faith following crisis

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A Faith Middle School seventh-grader's concern for the crisis in America has caught the attention of a national magazine.

Brittany Tyson's response to a classroom assignment — "What are you thinking about during this time of sadness?" — following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the U.S., earned her a place in Sunday's Parade magazine feature article about America's youth.

"We think what she had to say will interest teen-agers and adults," said Lynn Minton, editor for the magazine's "Fresh Voices" column.

Tyson's seventh-grade language arts teacher, Lisa Madler, makes a point of having her students respond to the weekly queries Parade poses to teens across the country.

Madler submitted Tyson's reply to the "Crisis in America" assignment in September and received a reply earlier this month.

"Brittany has deep feelings, and articulates those feeling very well in her writing," Madler said. "I think she's just now beginning to realize she's good at it."

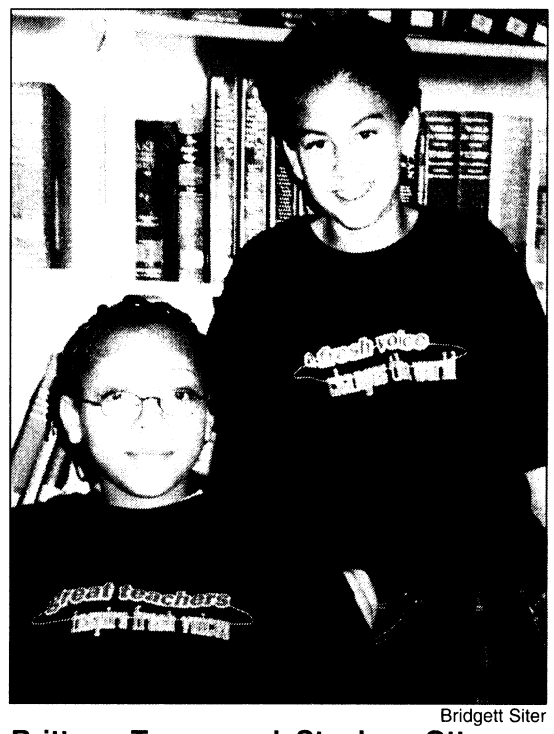
Tyson's essay focused on her concern for her family in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 tragedy.

She expressed fear for the safety of her mother, Sgt. Constance Brown, a petroleum, oil and lubricants NCOIC for Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, and dread over the possibility of deployment.

"My fears are that we'll have to go to war, and they'll take my mom away, and I'll never see her again," she wrote.

Tyson's essay also expressed sympathy for children who lost their parents in the attack.

"My mom was in Korea for a year," said Tyson, who has three sisters.

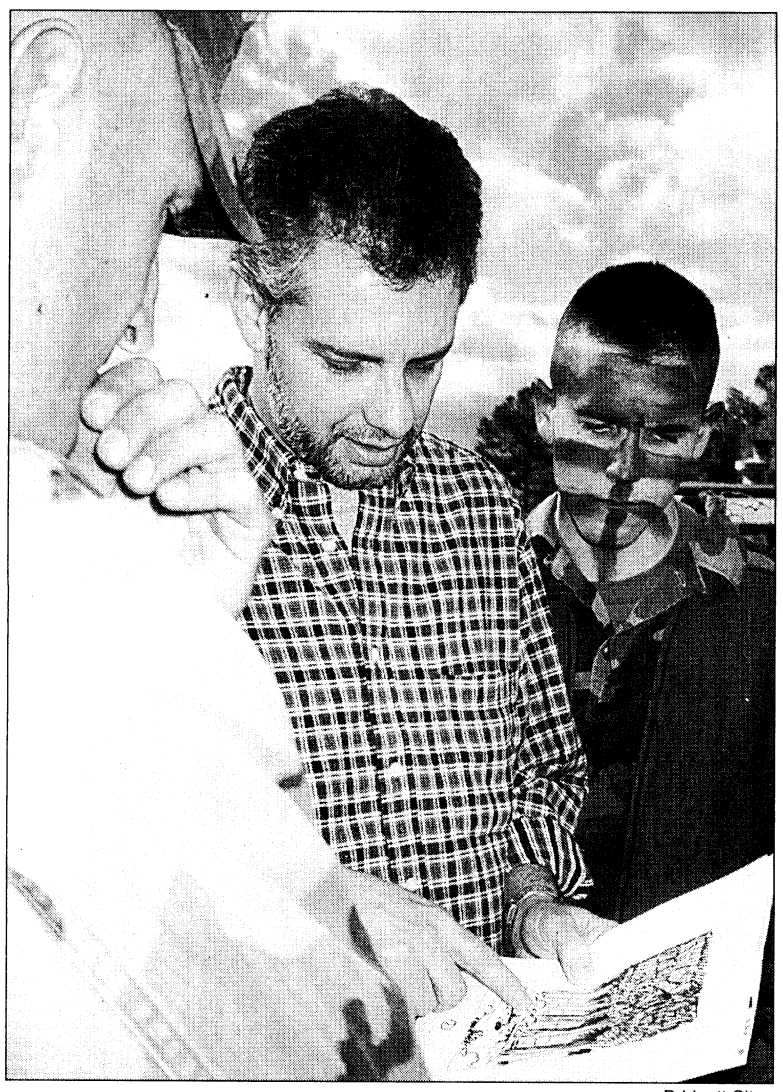


"That was a really hard time for us, especially my little sister. There were a lot of tears. I don't want that to happen again."

Tyson expressed hope that "everything will go back to the way it was before this happened," and faith that the American people will "come together and rebuild."

Parade also recognized Tyson's classmate, Stephen Ott. Minton lauded his essay as "so special," but space restrictions kept it from making the final print.

"I fear that my father will be needed to help (fight) terrorism, because if he does go, I (may) never see him again, and my dad means a lot to me," Ott wrote.



Tyson and Ott received T-shirts from the magazine for their contributions.

themselves in the finished product.

"I come here to learn about the uniforms and the equipment, but I don't change their faces," Selman said. "They'll know themselves when they see it."

Russell found the prospect of being immortalized on a G.I. Joe box humorous.

"I like to think I'm representing the regiment," he said with a chuckle. "But, yeah, it's pretty cool to think I'll be the face of G.I. Joe."

One of the packages will depict Ranger Joe in a ghillie suit and face paint. Russell and Jones vied for the honor of not wearing the suit, and they settled the matter diplomatically.

"Paper-rock-scissors," Russell said. "I lost."

The new G.I. Joes, tabbed and tanned, will hit store shelves in the next few months, Selman said. They will be released in a series of six, including a World War II ranger, a long range surveillance ranger, a sniper, a "midnight mission" ranger, a "tank buster" and a ranger on a motorcycle.

Lead leads to long-term health problems

Chipping, peeling paint can pose risks

Mignon Clarke
Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

Our society faces significant health and environmental problems as a result of lead pollution.

People are familiar with the use of lead in paint. Lead was a major ingredient in most interior and exterior oil house paints prior to 1950. Lead was still used, although in lesser quantities, until 1978 when the Environmental Protection Agency banned its use in house paints.

However, lead-based paint remains a top environmental concern because it continues to pose a potential health hazard to communities throughout our nation, including Fort Benning.

Because of their age, most housing and buildings on Fort Benning contain some form of lead-based paint.

Over the years the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics has removed lead-based paint in a number of units, however there is still a long way to go.

Lead-based paint is often found on the interior and exterior wood trim and windows, but it has also been found on floors, stairs and walls. Lead-based paint that is in good condition is usually not a hazard. It becomes a hazard if it peels, chips, or cracks. The resulting paint chips or lead dust can be serious health hazards.

We come into contact with lead everyday, mostly in our homes, yards and in the workplace. The lead must find its way into the body in order for it to cause health problems. The most common way is ingesting lead contaminated-dust or paint chips.

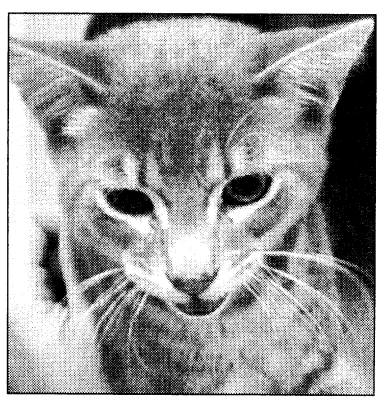
Lead contaminated dust can be created when lead-based paint is sanded or when lead-painted surfaces are bumped or rubbed together. The opening and closing of doors and windows painted with lead-based paint are examples of how lead dust can be made.

Lead-contaminated dust like any other dust tends to accumulate on horizontal surfaces, such as windowsills and floors.

Infants and young children commonly play in these areas and are very likely to put their hands and toys into their mouths after touching the dust.

Lead effects virtually every system of the body. These effects are more dangerous to children under the age of six than adults. At low levels lead may effect developing brains and nervous systems causing reductions in IQ and attention span. In adults, lead can lead to reproductive problems, nerve disorders, and muscle and joint pain.

Fort Benning Family Practice and Pediatric clinics conduct lead screening for children under the age of six. Beginning at about 6 months of age children brought to the clinics for a well-child visit are given a questionnaire to determine if the child is at high risk for lead exposure. Children found to be at high risk for lead exposure then receive a blood test for lead.



For more information, call the National Lead Information Center at 800 424-LEAD or visit: them on the Web at www.epa.gov/lead.

A CLOSER LOOK

There are some things that you should do on your own to protect your family:

- Report all peeling, chipping, or cracking paint in on-post housing to the DFEL Family Housing Office (545-8323) or Work Order Desk.
- Do not attempt to repair, scrape or remove paint in your quarters if you live on post. However, paint chips that have fallen onto exterior porches, decks and steps should be removed. Routinely clean these areas with a mop or sponge and warm water and a general all-purpose cleaner.
- Wash children's hands often, especially before they eat and before naptime or bedtime. Keep play areas clean. Wash bottles, pacifiers, toys and stuffed animals regularly.
- Make sure children eat nutritious meals high in iron and calcium. Children with good diets absorb less lead.

Pets of the Week

The kitten and puppy pictured here are just two pets available for adoption at the Fort Benning adoption clinic. For more information, call 545-4444.

Pet Tips:

Now that the weather is colder, it is important to remember our outside pets. Put an old blanket in their doghouse to help keep in the warmth. If the weather dips below freezing, bring them inside. Try getting a carrier for those pets who aren't house trained. This will help keep your house clean.

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Lisa Madler

a seventh-grade language arts teacher at Faith Middle School

Personal: Madler was commissioned in the Army in 1983 and served at Fort Benning until 1987.

"A lot of my friends in college were ROTC, and they talked me into taking a few classes," she said. "I went to jump school and loved it. I liked the discipline and structure the military offered, and I got to run a lot, which I loved.

"It just seemed to offer everything that I'm all about, and I looked good in green," she said with a chuckle.

Madler met her husband, Gerald, also a soldier, while stationed at Fort Benning. He's now a counselor at Faith.

Education and career: Madler was raised in Hendersonville, Tenn., and Tuscaloosa, Ala. She earned a degree in geography from the University of Tennessee and worked for the State of Georgia as an environmental health specialist after leaving the Army.

As an environmental health specialist, Madler spent a lot of time in schools, educating children and adults about health and environmental issues.

That's where I decided education is where I needed to be," she said.

So when restructuring threatened her job with the state, Madler went back to school for her teaching certificate.

She earned her master's degree from Troy State University and is currently working towards her education specialist's degree.

She taught at Baker Middle School for two years before coming to Faith last year.

"I've never looked back," she said. "This is where I need to be, and I love it."

Why middle school?: "I just seem to relate well to this age," Madler said. "There's so much give and take at this level. At the youngest grades, teaching is all about presenting information.

"Here there's so much communication, more interaction," she said. "They're limitless."

Hobbies and interests: Madler has been an avid runner since high school. Though she has competed in triathlons and half-marathons, she's training for her first marathon next month in Birmingham.

She also has a weakness for "pound puppies."

"I have three already, all terrier mixes, so the pound is off limits to me now," she said.

On teaching military children: "It's so different than teaching out there," Madler said. "In other schools there's such a 'sameness.' If you're different, you're ostracized.

"But it's not like that here. Every student brings something different to the classroom, and it's all acceptable.

"They don't put each other down for being different, because they've been all over the world and they accept cultural differences," she said.

"They also look out for each other — something you don't see in other schools. They readily accept the new kid and make him feel welcome, because they remember being the new kid themselves.

"In military schools, everyone 'fits.' It gives you hope when you look at the world as a whole," Madler said.

Plans for the future: "I'm looking forward to finishing my six-year degree," Madler said. "I'm learning a lot of exciting things, and I'm networking with teachers from all over who bring new ideas into the classroom.

"I want to make school fun. I think we've gotten away from rote learning, and our students are excited about participating, sharing their opinions and ideas and hearing their own voices."

The rewards of teaching: "That's when they begin to realize that one person can make a difference, and when they learn to work together," Madler said. "I'm most proud of them when they acknowledge each others' opinions and thank them for contributing — when they can see both sides of an issue and step outside their own little boxes."

What others are saying: "She makes everything seem exciting," said Brittany Tyson, one of Madler's students. "Now I like language arts, and I enjoy writing a lot. She's a good teacher."

Values taught

White Elementary School

Around White and in every classroom there are posters encouraging the building of good character.

"Character education is being taught to the whole group for the entire year and not in isolation," said Debbie Morgan, counselor, at White School.

"We want our students to develop good character through education, so we teach them what good character is and when they know the expectations they will be more successful," Morgan said.

Character words are introduced daily on our televised morning announcements. Teachers also have a list of character words for their classroom planning.

At the end of the seven-week lessons, each student earned an Army values card and a tag for knowing all seven Army values and their definitions.

In art, the students made creative use of their Army value tags.

"We used the tags to make necklaces," said Janie Pride performing arts specialist.

Dr. Tommy Lee, Principal at White School said this is a program he is proud of and students are, too.

"They are quick to show their Army value cards and necklaces," Lee said.

Buddy reading encourages students

White Elementary School

Reading orally, sharing books and engaging in active listening are all being used during "buddy time reading." Ann Lucas' first-grade and Shelia Brown's fifth-grade classes are working together to make reading fun.

Fifth-graders are excellent role models and provide positive reading experiences for the first-graders, Brown said.

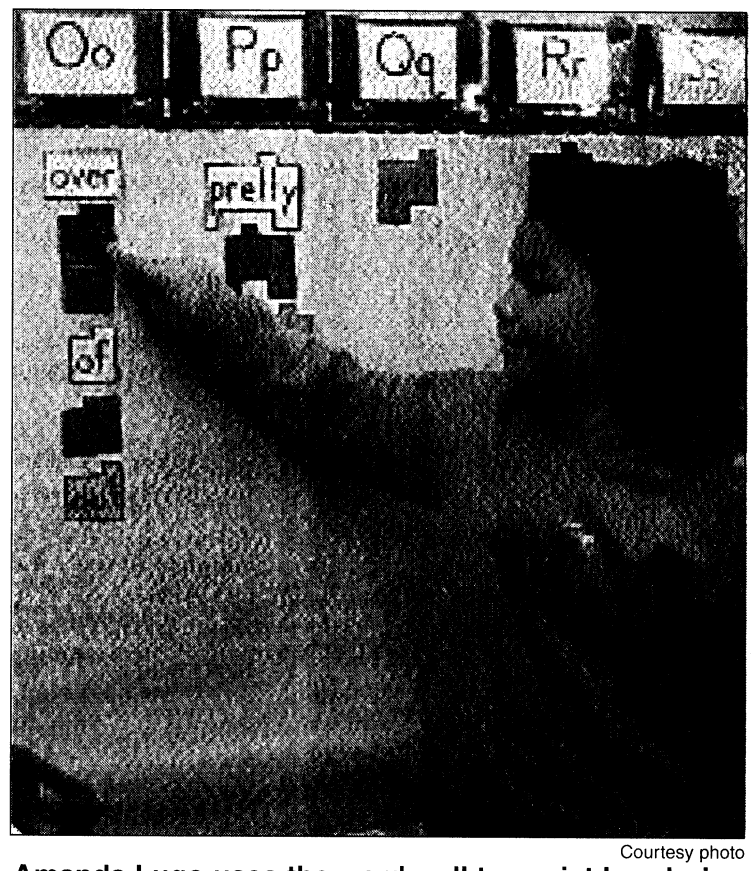
They enjoy working together on sight words, oral reading for fluency and expression, all while increasing their reading skills.

The fifth-graders are also mentoring their buddies as they take computer generated level tests on selected books.

"I love reading with my buddy," said Hannah Randall, first-grader.

"She tells me I'm a good reader," Randall said.

Interacting between the two grade levels is rewarding for the fifth-graders as well.



Students are constantly asking when they are going to read with their buddies, again, both teachers said.

Lucas is thrilled with the impact the older children have had on her students.

Not only has their self confidence increased in reading but in their writing abilities, as well.

They are becoming better risk takers in their thinking as they do journal entries and creative writing.

Using their word wall is now a natural part of their daily writing activities.

Amanda Lugo uses the word wall to assist her during creative writing skills class at White Elementary. The word wall helps teach word association.

Scrumptious snakes

Blayne Stine, left, and Steven Hobson, right, are learning about snakes and amphibians in Pam Anthony's pre-K class as they roll peanut butter play dough in cornflakes to create "scales" for their "snakes." This was especially enjoyable for Anthony's class because when they were finished, they could eat their creations. M & M's were added last to create eyes for their snakes.

Sticking to resolutions takes commitment, strength

Faith, relationships give meaning to life

Chaplain (Capt.) David Trogdon
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

What's the maximum effective range of a new year's resolution? For most, our best intentions for 2002 will last about three weeks. Those renewed commitments to lose weight, quit smoking, get out of debt or for more time with our families may already be in danger of falling by the wayside.

How can we stay committed and turn our resolutions into reality? The answer may not be more sweat, less sleep or greater sacrifice, but in a commitment to spiritual fitness.

Trogdon

"Spiritual fitness" is the Army's recognition of the importance of faith in the lives of soldiers and their families. Faith and a relationship with God give life meaning and purpose and sustain us through the hard times. Spiritual fitness impacts every area of life as God helps us to "be all that we can be." Trying to make life changes without God's help often leads to frustration and failure, but, with God's blessing, we can make changes and commitments that will truly last.

God provides us with a "guaranteed satisfaction or your money back" spiritual fitness program in his word. "Continue to work out your salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God who works in you both to will and to act according to his good purpose," (Philippians 2:12-13).

In this passage, "salvation" means spiritual fitness and includes all the implications of spiritual life in Christ. This spiritual fitness program includes three steps that will lead to success in 2002.

The first step toward spiritual fitness is a commitment to "work out." Spiritual fitness does require effort on our part. The apostle Paul encourages us to keep on doing the right things that make us spiritually stronger. This "work out" includes daily prayer and meditation, Bible study, public and private worship and living in a manner that reflects the character of Christ. Just as physical fitness requires effort and physical training, spiritual fitness requires discipline and determination as well. Don't stop working out.

The next step in our spiritual fitness program is God's promise to "work in you." Jesus said, "The spirit is willing, but the flesh is weak," (Matthew 26:41).

God knows that no matter how hard we try we often fall short of the mark. God knows our weakness and provides us with strength to succeed. God is at work on us and in us. He is our energy and energizer. God motivates us and then empowers us toward spiritual fitness and positive changes.

The final step in God's spiritual fitness program involves having confidence that God's purposes will work for us. Does God want us to lose weight, get in shape, quit smoking, get out of debt or strengthen our faith and families? We are guaranteed success in all that we set out to do or be whenever our desires match God's will for our life. We can say with confidence, "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me," (Philippians 4:13).

We may fail occasionally, but we will succeed eventually as God works in us and with us to accomplish His will for us. Our commitment to spiritual fitness provides us help for today and hope for 2002.

Americans grateful for new beginning

Nation turns grief into generosity, thankful for life

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Have you noticed Americans are giving thanks? As in the past, we are grateful for life, health, family, friends and freedom. This year, however, we are not taking these treasures for granted.

Americans have always given thanks to God. This year is different. Our lives changed Sept. 11.

Koop

Faced with international terrorism and fear of a long and difficult fight against it, Americans chose instead to live life and to give thanks.

Our grief turned to generosity. We opened our hearts and our pocketbooks to give to widows and orphans, who suffered and lost so much.

Our sadness turned to pride. We were reminded of the heroes: the firefighters, police, port authority, security guards and armed forces. New York City Mayor Rudy Gulianni and President George W. Bush symbolized our nation's tireless efforts to right the wrongs.

Our temporal worries turned to eternal concerns. Americans are turning to God, the giver of life and the provider of all our needs.

Yes, Americans are giving thanks to God. Are you?

Are you troubled and worried? Do you find it difficult to give thanks? If you are, contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

76ers squeak by Wizards at Y.S., 13-9

Children learn fundamentals, have good time

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

There was plenty of nail-biting tension during the 8- to 9-year-olds' 76ers and Wizards game Saturday at Youth Services Gym.

The 76ers led, 11-9, with 49 seconds left when Wizards' coach Lee Wagner called time out.

"There was a lot of sweating going on out there," said 76ers' coach Charlie Conners.

The two teams had gone the entire period without a point. After the time out, the Wizards charged up the court to try and tie the game. However, as the 76ers did most of the game, they stole the rock and countered with a Lewis Faust fast-break lay-up at the 34-second mark to seal the game.

"It was the toughest game we've played so far," Conners said. "The Wizards challenged us the entire game."

Turnovers plagued both teams. Traveling, double dribbling and bad passing kept the score low.

"Next time, we'll have to be more patient and look for better passes," the coach said.

Despite the sloppy play, Sixer Tony Davis managed all 6 of his points in the first half to help give his team an, 8-5, halftime lead.

"I took my time and had good shots," Davis said.

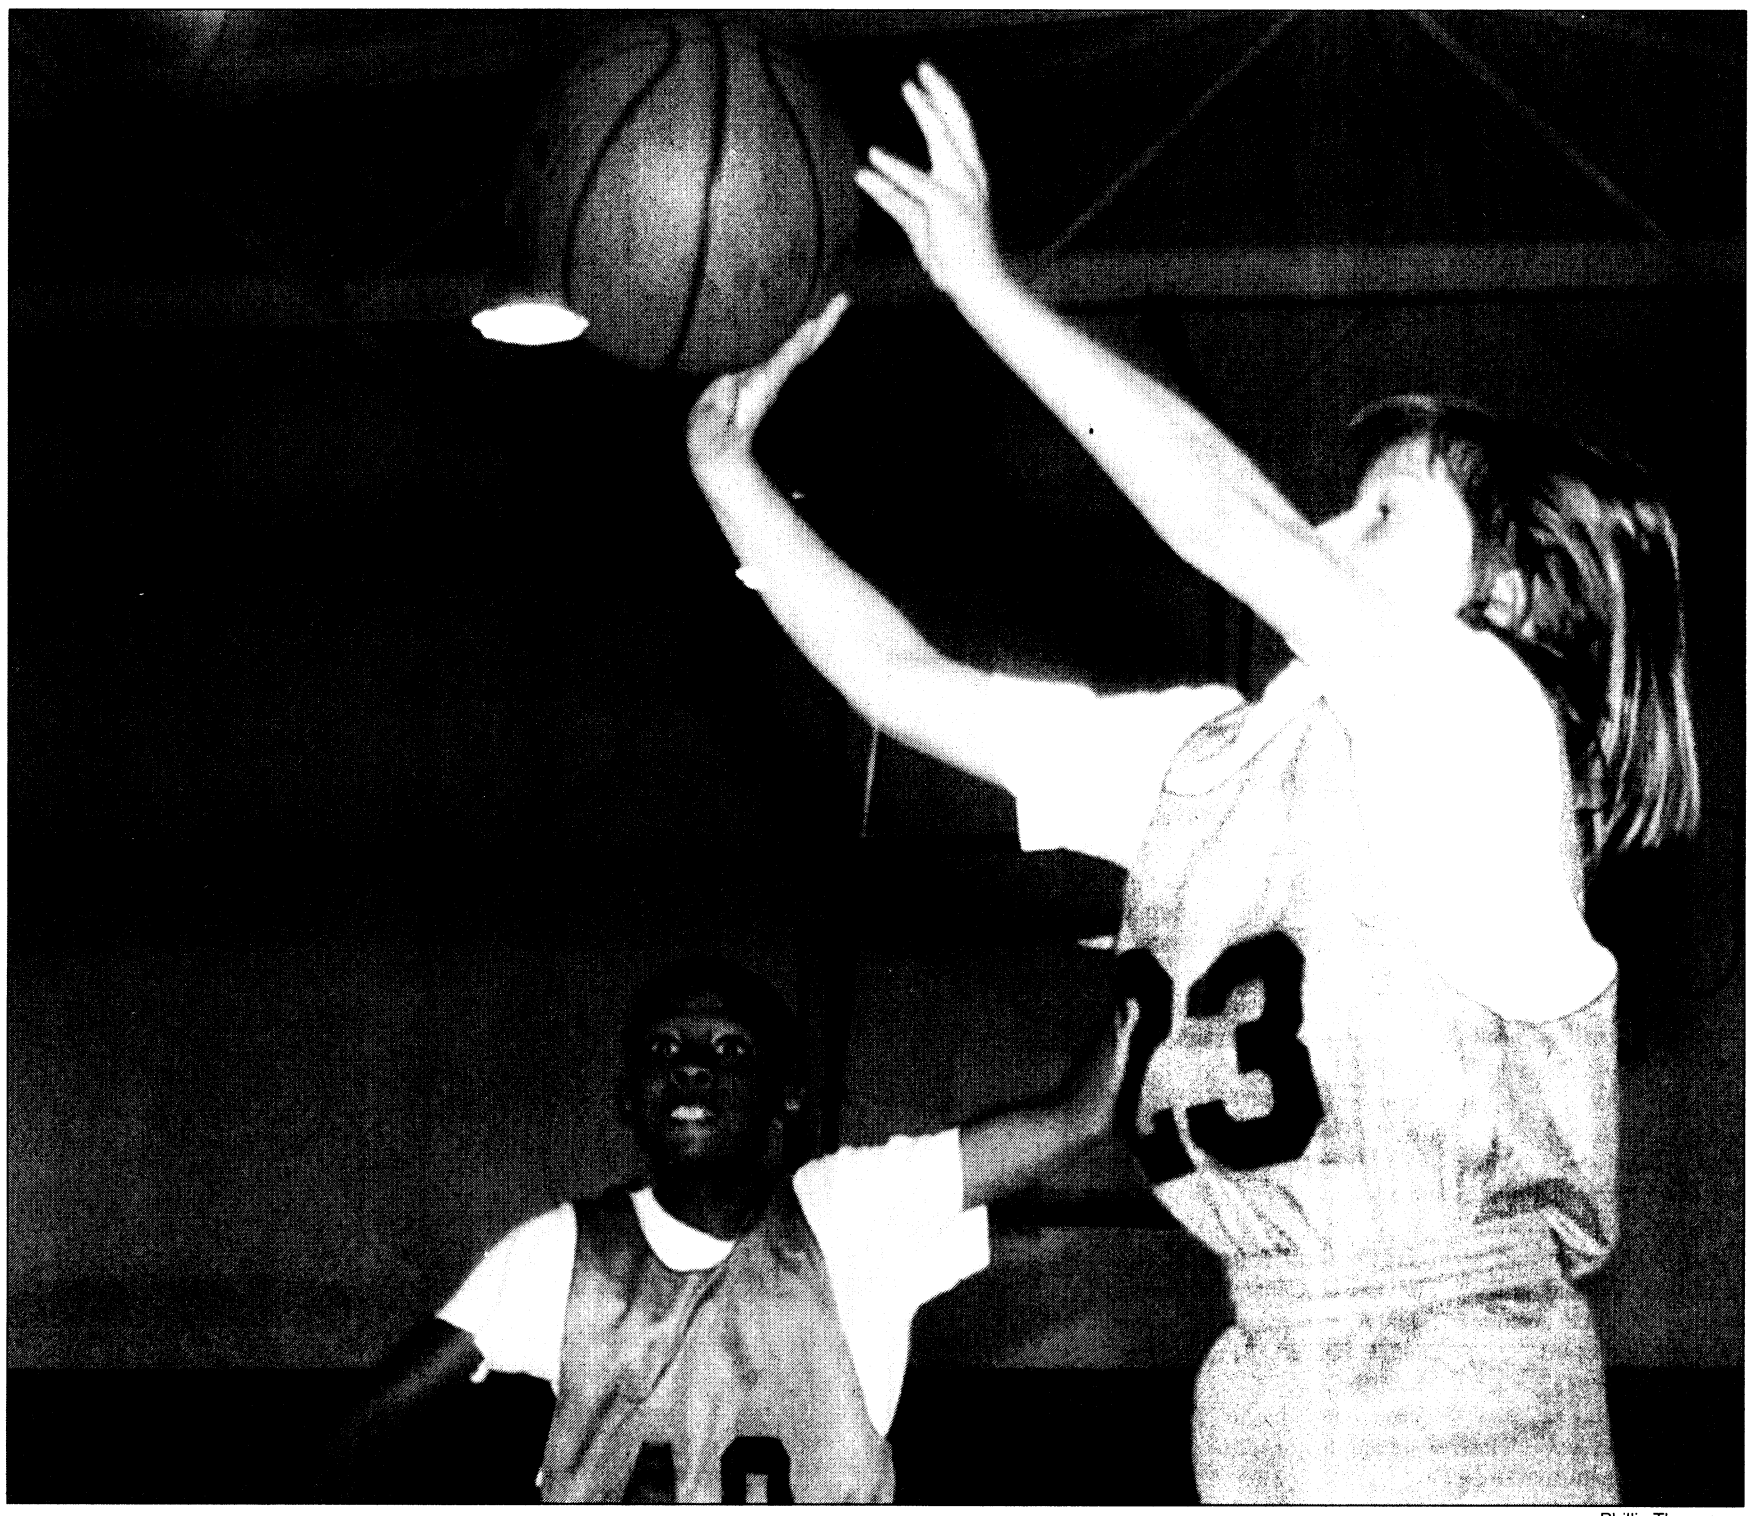
Sixer Katia Vaars also invigorated her team in the first half when she pick-pocketed two balls from the Wizards.

"I never did that in my other games," Vaars said.

The Wizards' play reminded her of a vital, basic principle of the game.

"You never hold the ball out in front of you," Vaars said. "You hold it tight and guard it."

Davis learned lessons, too.

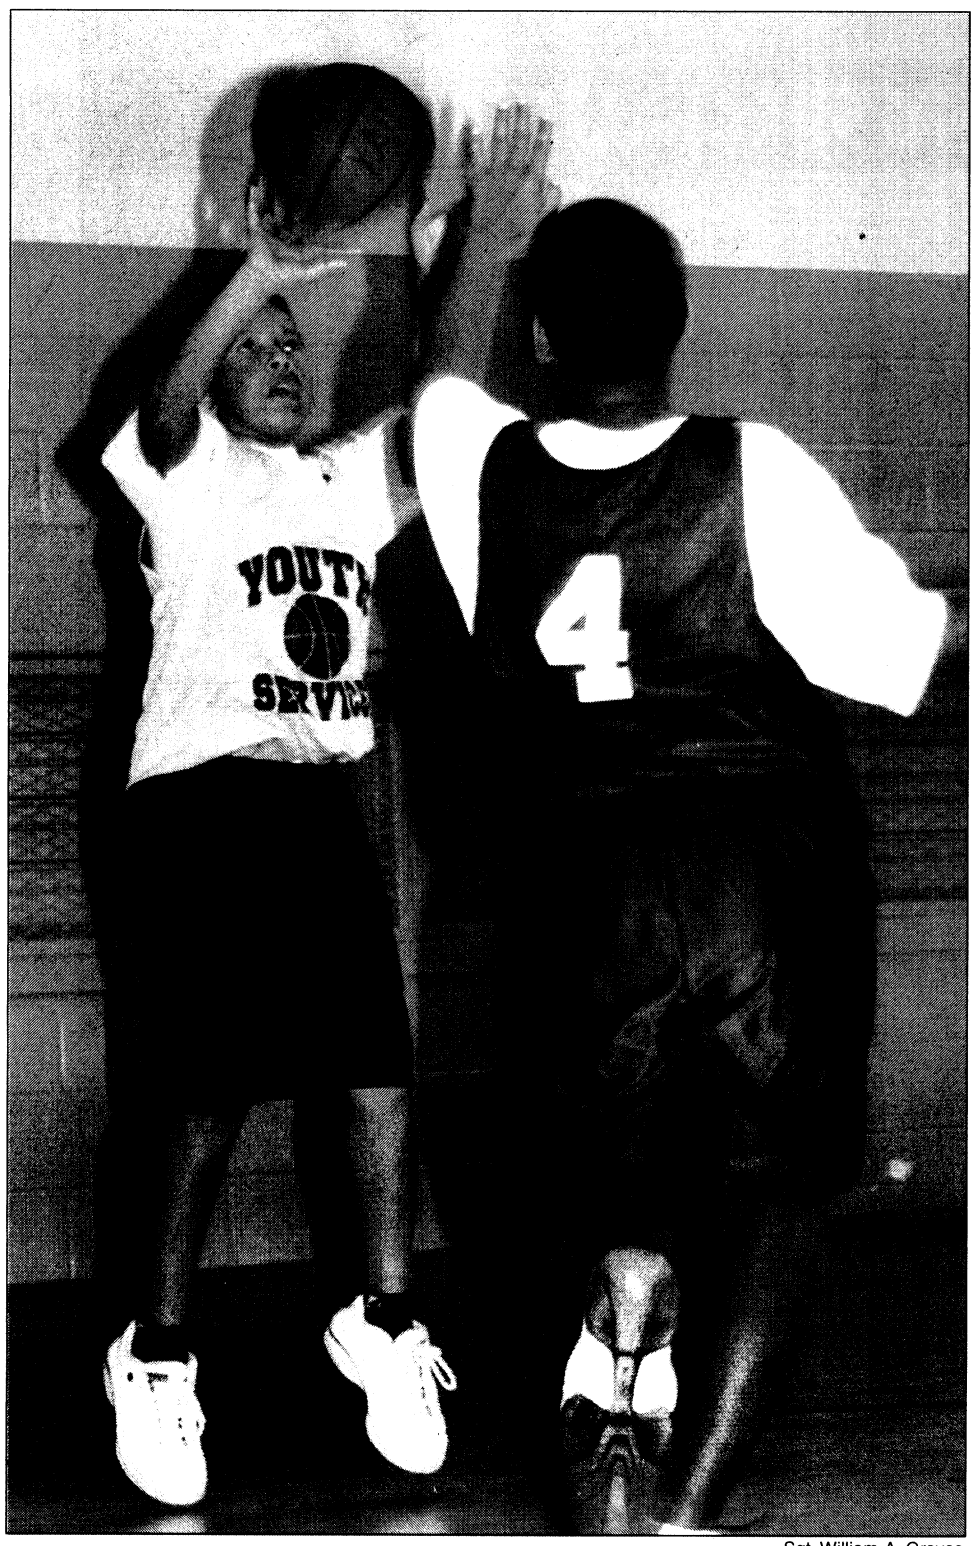


"You shouldn't always be a ball hog," Davis said. "Coach preaches teamwork, defense and rebounding in practice," Davis said. "That's what won the game for us."

The victory almost slipped away when the Wizards changed their game plan in the third period.

"They started to play man-to-man defense," Conners said. "That threw us off, but we stayed focused and kept up our defensive pressure."

The pressure resulted in more hard work for Vaars — this time on offense. She took the ball hard to the basket before a Wizard fouled her. She made an important free throw to give her team a 2-point lead.



Conners said he was proud of his 2-0 team and hopes they continue to improve.

Player scores 6 points late to help team win

Phillip Thompson
Bayonet correspondent

Andrew Rodriguez propelled the Ballers to a 29-23 win over the Hornets during their 10- to 11-year-old Youth Services basketball game at Y.S. Gym Saturday.

"I thought the other team was really good," Rodriguez said. We had to pull together at the end to pull out the victory."

The game was deadlocked at 19 at the end of the third quarter when Rodriguez stepped up in the fourth to give his team momentum.

"Early on, we had trouble guarding the three point shot," the center said.

Hornet Jeffery Todd sank two shots from downtown to help send his team to the half up 11-10.

Tremell Tyson extended the 1-1 Hornets' lead, 16-13, early in the second half, but key rebounds and steals by the Ballers kept the game close.

The stage was then set for Rodriguez's fourth quarter heroics.

The fourth quarter did come with its share of challenges for the star, though.

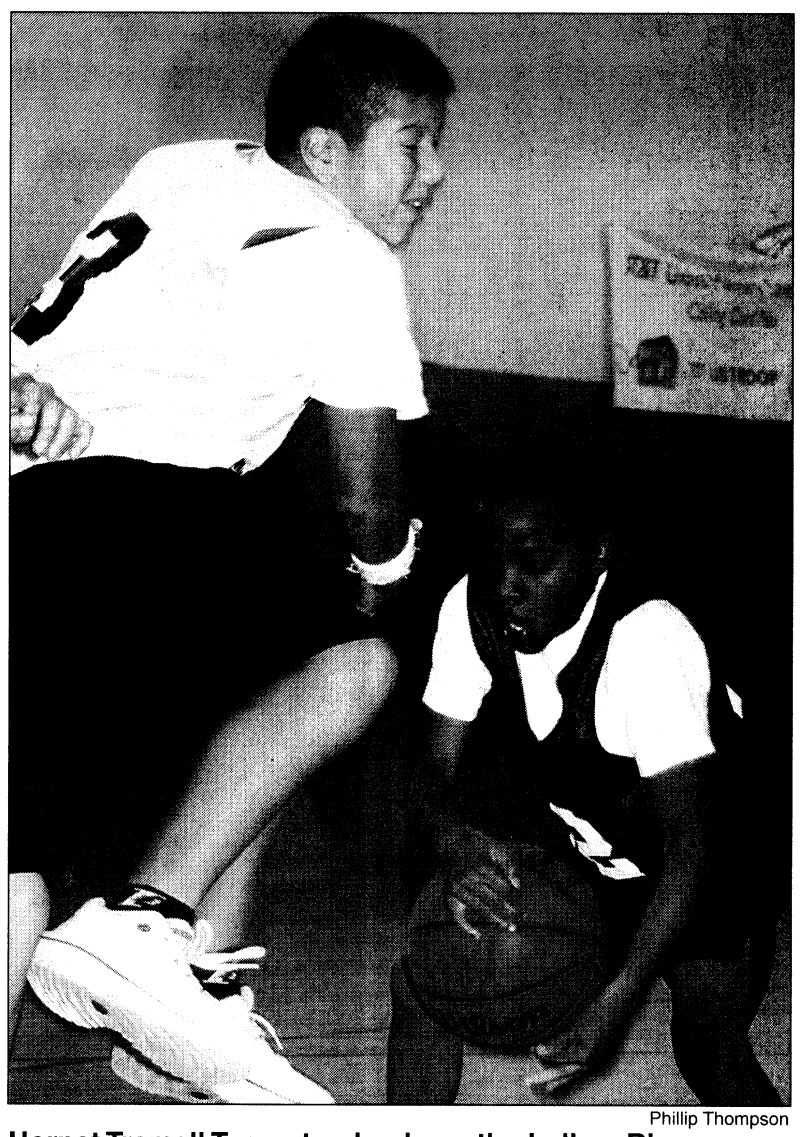
"I missed a lot of layups and had trouble concentrating," Rodriguez said. "We needed to pass the ball better, too."

Overcoming the struggles, he pounded in 6 of his game-high 17 points in the final period.

Trailing 29-23, the Hornets called timeout at the 2:15 mark to regroup, but neither team could score after play resumed.

"I'm proud of the team," said Ballers' coach Melvin McCullom. "They did a good job and kept playing hard on both sides of the court."

Still, there is plenty of basketball education remaining for the players.



"Our team continues to learn the fundamentals of the game," McCullom said. "For instance, we need to do a better job handling the ball."

If they continue to learn the basics, the 1-1 Ballers will go far," he said.

"We still have a tough schedule," the coach said. "The competition comes ready to play. We'll have to be at top form to do well this season."

The game also reminded Johnathon Hair of an important aspect of the game.

"You have use teamwork and have fun out there," Hair said.

Local Dealer Brings Back Expert to Help Sell Off Repossessed Cars

"Repo Joe" Back In Columbus Sacrificing Bank Repossessions And Lease Terminations To Area Buyers Through Sunday

Columbus, GA - Georgia car, truck and S.U.V. buyers are getting ready to be exposed to an entirely new way to buy nearly new vehicles at a discount. Through Sunday, with the help of a man called "Repo Joe," Carl Gregory Dodge will offer bank repossessed vehicles for sale to the general public.

This past August when "Repo Joe" was at Carl Gregory Dodge the response was overwhelming. "Repo Joe" is back and better than ever with extra, extra big savings!

"Repo Joe's" story is simple. After nearly two decades in the car business, Joe has seen everything a dealer has to offer. Yet he noticed there were always two types of vehicles that were far and away the best bargains: repossessed vehicles and vehicles that had been leased. The problem was, they were often hard, if not impossible, to find.

Fast forward to 1998. Utilizing relationships and contacts he had made with repo men, banks, credit unions and auto auctions over the past twenty years, Joe decided he would scour the nation looking for these vehicles. Now, he criss-crosses the country looking for the best buys out there. Then he chooses locations in each region of the U.S.A. to dispose of them. For Georgia, the exclusive location is Carl Gregory Dodge. In addition to the initial savings, Carl Gregory Dodge has secured financing that lets qualified buyers drive home by simply making a $27 down payment, then start making the payments.

General Manager, Jason Gregory of Carl Gregory Dodge, explained his store is prepared for the expected crowds.

"We have a fantastic selection of not just cars, but trucks, minivans, and yes, even sport utilities," said Gregory. "Plus, our sales consultants took days off earlier in the week so we'll be staffed to the fullest for this event. We just had a meeting where they were all briefed with a bit of history on each vehicle we'll offer for sale. We're ready!"

"Repo Joe will mark the payments you'll make on these vehicles right on the windshield of each vehicle Friday morning," added Gregory. "You'll know right away how much the payments you'll start making will be."

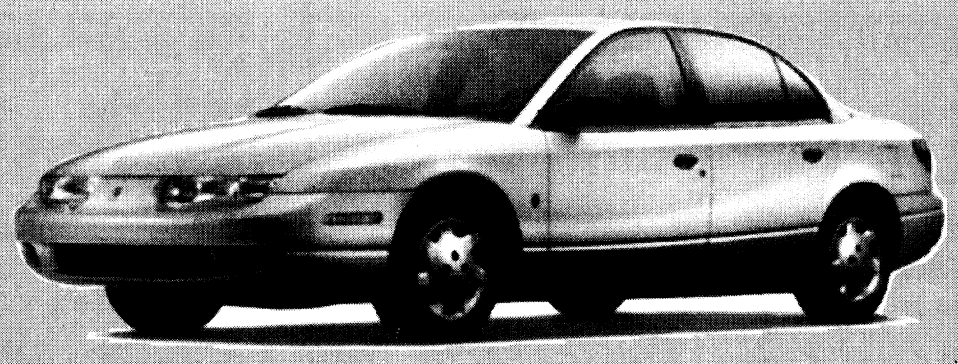
"And not only will you find repos at huge savings, we've accumulated and acquired dozens of lease terminations," said Gregory. "These '98 and '99 models have low miles and at least a year or two of the warranty remains. If you think Program Cars are a bargain, wait until you see these."

Repo Joe adds "The premise of this sale is simple, we're just looking for people that will make the payments on these vehicles."

Gregory warned that selection is good but limited. "We want everyone to know that this is a first-come, first-served sales event. At these prices, there will be a lot of great buys, but the really great buys will go fast!"

Realizing many car buyers use their current vehicle as a down payment, Gregory and his team have taken steps to make the trade-in process easy. "Extra appraisers will be here each day and have been given the order to pay any and every reasonable price for local trades," Gregory explained. "If a customer then chooses to use that cash as a down payment, their monthly payment could be even lower than the ones we've got marked on the windshield! Plus during this special event customers can use their W2's as a down payment."

Carl Gregory Dodge is located at 3000 Northlake Parkway at 2201 Victory Drive in Columbus. For further information call (706) 324-4161.



This event concludes Sunday, January 20th at 6 pm.

"We're just looking for people that will make the payments on these vehicles." - Repo Joe

Officer Candidate School grows

OCS to add fourth company June 2

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Officer Candidate School at Fort Benning is expanding from three to four companies.

"It is a go," said Lt. Col. Daniel Kessler, battalion commander for 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment (OCS). "The target date for the first class is June 2, 2002."

The fourth company will be housed in what was the Headquarters and Headquarters Company barracks for 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Inf., 11th Inf. Regt. The building is located behind OCS's C Co. barracks.

Modular barracks will be built to house HHC.

"We're moving units around to renovate the required billeting space for the OCS company," said Maj. Keith Robinson, executive officer for the 11th Inf. Regt.

The expansion of OCS comes at a time when the Army needs junior officers.

"OCS is expanding because the Army has increased OCS's mission to produce lieutenants for the Army from 1,040 to 1,485, per year," Kessler said. "To do that, we need another company."

Even though the mission is for more lieutenants, requirements for admission to the school will remain the same.

"OCS has always been looked at to produce officers in times of Course required for all new officers in 2003

Fourth program still in test stages

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

In 2003, all newly commissioned officers, regardless of their commissioning source will be required to attend the six-week Basic Officer Leadership Course held at Fort Benning.

Until then, the program is currently in the pilot stages. The fourth pilot started Jan. 14 and is run by A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

The course takes newly commissioned second lieutenants from all branches and all commissioning sources and brings them together for common skills training.

2nd Lt. Oliver Grover was commissioned as an infantry officer through the Oregon National Guard Officer Candidate School. "We're learning the new PT, which is really good and our instructors are great. We're working on refining basic skills."

B Co. ran the first pilot program using all males to determine the program of instruction. The second pilot program was run by C Co. and integrated males and females.

The third pilot incorporated something the first two pilots did not, living in the barracks. BOLC will use Building 2836, barracks previously used by the rangers, to house the new lieutenants.

Living in the barracks will also make a dining facility and a physical training field available to the students. The barracks have also had a lot of recent renovations, especially to the day room. The students can now enjoy a new TV and pool table when they're not training.

2nd Lt. Sha-Tamara Goldsby was commissioned a finance officer through ROTC.

"A lot of things are familiar, but this is a totally new experience, bringing all the branches together before OBC," she said.

2nd Lt. J.M. Phillips takes a swing on the horizontal bars as he works his way through the "Tarzan" obstacle at the Bolton Obstacle Course Tuesday afternoon.

A Co. is organized into six platoons with six cadre assigned to each platoon. Either a captain or a lieutenant colonel is assigned as a senior trainer. Majors are not assigned as senior trainers because captains and lieutenant colonels are responsible for training lieutenants when they are in company and battalion command positions. A senior sergeant first class is assigned as a platoon sergeant and four staff sergeants are assigned

American Indians visit post

Parties build relationship, discuss issues

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning continued its relationship with representatives of sovereign, federally recognized American Indian nations with ancestral roots to Fort Benning properties and consulted with them on current and future post projects Jan. 16-17.

Throughout the year, new projects and circumstances come up, and the consultation provides insight to which ones the parties may need to address or modify, said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

"The consultation is a process," Torres said. "It is a process today, and it will be a process 10 years from now. It's important we work together as partners to maintain and protect Fort Benning's many cultural resources as we do our training mission."

Cultural resource laws require Fort Benning to have these meetings. The Army alternate procedures were discussed as implementation of several federal laws that describe how Fort Benning could interact with the federally recognized tribes and conduct future consultations.

Still, the consultation between Fort Benning representatives and 11 tribal governments means more than the post's legal obligations, John Brent, chief, Environmental Management Division, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"As stewards of this installation, we work with the tribes and other interested parties as part of community outreach," Brent said.

ATM scams prey on unsuspecting users

Simple steps can reduce chance of fraud

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

At first glance, the culprit appears to be making a simple ATM transaction.

But in actuality, he's setting up the next customer for certain swindle. With the skills of a picklock and the appearance of a Good Samaritan, the crook quickly gets the job done.

Whether an actual occurrence or an urban legend, the idea is out there. E-mails containing videotaped footage of such card sharks in the act are circulating as a warning to the general public.

A series of video clips shows the perpetrator rigging the card slot of an ATM to physically capture a person's bankcard. The scammer, posing as a helpful passerby, then suggests the victim repeatedly enter his secret PIN in order to recover the stuck card from the machine. When the effort fails, the victim walks away frustrated, leaving the con artist to retrieve the card and use it with the now disclosed PIN code.

"We haven't heard of anything like this happening at Fort Benning, but that's not to say it hasn't happened," said John Mitchell, regional manager for military banking at Columbus Bank and Trust. "This particular scam does not seem very viable because it requires a face-to-face contact with the thief."

Mitchell recently alerted the local bank security staff to see if any additional measures to protect the post's ATM machines need to be implemented.

Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of Law Enforcement, Directorate of Public Safety, said rigging the ATM machine requires an isolated, well-hidden area similar to the one in the clips.

"That's essential to pull this thing off," Kelley said. "As far as I know, we don't have an ATM machine that isolated on post."

There are several ways to illegally obtain someone's ATM card or personal identification number, said Mike Paul, fraud and forgery investigator for TIC Federal Credit Union.

Bond forged by tab, creed

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

I remember the first time I realized how strong are the bonds of the ranger brotherhood.

My husband took a two-year break in service after his first enlistment. But he kept that ranger tab on the front of the car. And one day, while driving through a busy intersection and a sea of coeds at the University of Florida, Tom slammed on the brakes and threw up his hand at a total stranger in an oncoming car who did the same.

"What are you doing?" I yelled over the din of horns and irate pedestrians, as I peeled myself off the windshield.

"He's a ranger," Tom said as he pointed to the tab on the other fellow's front bumper, as if that explained or even excused their erratic behavior.

I've come to realize that rangers are a brotherhood as surely as this thing called motherhood creates a sisterhood. In fact — pay attention now — graduating ranger school is one of very few experiences that trump childbirth.

"Oh, honey, did you get a paper cut?"

"It's nothing really."

"You know last week I nearly sliced off my finger with a paper."

"Yeah, did I tell you I broke my arm delivering newspapers in high school?"

"I broke my ankle once running."

"I suffered a compound fracture playing football."

"I went through six hours of hard labor four times."

"I made it through ranger school."

"OK, I quit."

There was a time when I thought tab envy meant coveting a diet cola. But I've learned since that the fraternity of rangers share a common bond that is, and rightly so, enviable and desirable.

"It's a real close bond," said Shane James, who served with the rangers who fought in Somalia in 1993. "But it's more than that. It's hard to put into words."

But he tried.

Rangers don't just learn the creed, they live it. It's drummed into their heads from ranger school — "52 days of hell," he called it — and every weekday thereafter, when they stand in formation at 6 a.m. and repeat the words that define their purpose, ending with "I will never leave a fallen comrade."

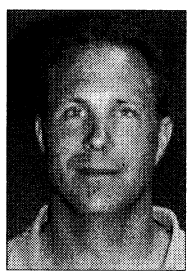
That doesn't just apply to the battlefield, James said. Nearly eight years after leaving the Army, he's confident he could turn to any of his brothers for help at any time.

"Other people talk about stepping up if needed, but very few will really put forth the effort," he said.

James said he took the ranger you-can-count-on-me attitude for granted, till he left the Army.

"I've come to realize that's not something the general public lives by," he said. "But neither is it something you can forget when you leave the Army. It's a way of life."

It's planted in your head and takes root in your heart," James said."You just don't shake it off when you get out."



Rangers are not a touchy-feely bunch, and they can be very unforgiving of failure when it comes to duty, but life, like combat, seldom goes as planned. Rangers are willing to make allowances for their brothers who err or fall on hard times, as long as they remember the creed they live by — "don't pervert it or lie" because it "cheapens the sacrifice" all rangers make, James said.

"The bond isn't easily broken, except by misuse of trust," he said. "'You can count on me' means you can count on me regardless."

Soldiers share more than uniform

Cliff Hughes
Directorate of Community Activities

commentary

The things that inspire us aren't always unique. Nothing was particularly special about this good deed on a chilly January morning. After all, I work on post and seeing soldiers in uniform every day is commonplace.

I was driving to work one morning, when I noticed a vehicle parked along side the highway. As I approached, a soldier jumped out dressed in battle dress uniform and a black beret. He quickly stuck his thumb in the air. Without hesitation I pulled over, rolled my window down and asked him if there was anything wrong.

He explained he had just run out of gas. I had a gas can in the back of my truck, so I told him to jump in.

We proceeded to Cusseta where he filled the can at a gas station.

When I returned him to his vehicle, he emptied the fuel from the can and said, "Thank you, sir. I hope I can return the favor someday."

I replied, "You are welcome," and was on my way.

Nothing really special about helping a fellow soldier, right? As I continued my drive to work I thought to myself, "Would you have done the same thing had this person been wearing civilian clothes?" Possibly not in this day with so many stories of people who are robbed, mugged or shot attempting a similar good deed.

I recently retired, and although I am enjoying civilian life, there are many things about the Army I miss.

I have always been concerned that people would be critical and judge me by the uniform I wore, and so I should have been. In many places I was stationed, people did not like soldiers, the uniform they wore or the sacrifices soldiers make everyday for their country.

This time I was the civilian — what was significant about this situation was I did not hesitate to pick him up. I knew that because of his uniform and appearance this stranger would do no harm.

I was not always proud of the uniform I wore because of the reaction I got from some people. Soldiers should be proud of the uniform they wear and that people do judge them by it.

The uniform and the person in it stand for many things and some day you will have to take it off. I only hope that when you take your uniform off as I have, seeing a soldier wearing the uniform will still mean the same thing.

Newest American warriors up to task

Lt. Col. Mark Fields
6th Ranger Training Battalion

commentary

Recently my command sergeant major and I had the honor of attending two reunions of some of our very best Americans and soldiers: the Alamo Scouts Association and the Florida Special Forces Association.

Men shared stories — bold reconnaissance missions in the Philippines, the daring POW rescue at Cabanatuan, direct action missions in North Vietnam and Cambodia and firebases defended to the last handful of men.

These stories were shared in an atmosphere of exclusive camaraderie — the kind forged by shared hardship and intense personal sacrifice for the greater good.

I couldn't help but think that I stood among giants — men who had taken on the prevailing evil of their generation and, at great personal sacrifice, defeated it.

Each veteran, using different words asked a single question: "Is the present generation of American soldiers better than the evil that confronts us? Are they tough enough, disciplined enough, trained enough for the challenges of ground combat? Are they capable of destroying our enemy on his own ground, in his lair?"

In each case absolute silence followed, neighboring conversations halted abruptly.

We have some experience regarding this present generation. We watch them endure the harshest training and conditions that exist in a peacetime Army.

We train Army rangers to lead men in ground combat. We give each platoon a very demanding task, offer some coaching and turn them loose to succeed or fail of their own accord.

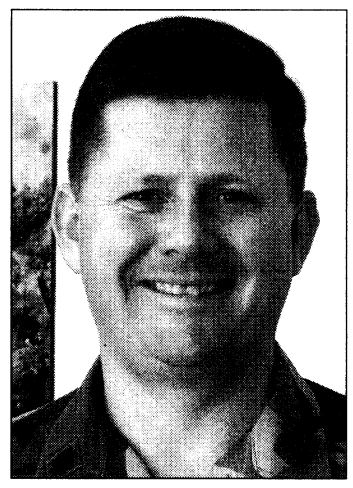
Having seen them at their worst and best, I can report that this generation is up to whatever obstacle is placed in its way.

They are SPARTAN — physically and mentally. They know how to work together. They are ingenious.

Perhaps most importantly, since Sept. 11, they are angry, and mixed in with some of that anger, they seem to recognize their place in history.

Are they up to the challenge — absolutely, unequivocally!

The fundamental reason for their success is the fact the blood running through their veins was forged by veterans of more senior generations — veterans who recognized evil and vanquished it.



Don't worry about the youth who defend our country today. We could not be in better hands. They will vanquish evil.

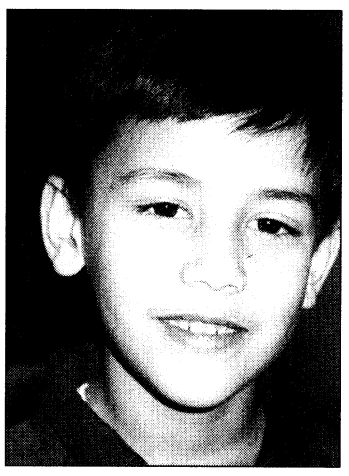
What are your fondest memories of the Main Post Catholic Chapel?

Lt. Col. E.J. Herold, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "We've been here three years, and from the first, the chapel was a very welcoming place. The building itself was warm, with lots of light streaming in through the stained glass windows. It was always a place of comfort."

Dianne Heckathorn, family member — "I'm going to miss the crucifix with the risen Christ. When I would sing the Our Father, I would always look into his face, and it seemed to help me sing better. When my son was in the hospital, I would kneel at that altar and find comfort."



Noelle Fox, family member — "Easter, two years ago, my kids and my husband were baptized there. The boys made their first communion and were confirmed there. We also had our marriage blessed last year. Those were the kind of memories that made it a sacred place."

Marielise Hiner, family member — "I'll miss the whole church. I had a special spot for my wheelchair next to the organ, and I took my first communion there."

Jean Campbell, family member — "There was a chalice there in memory of my father. I guess that's lost forever. My husband was buried from there in 1988. My youngest son was confirmed there. "

Anthony Schmoll, family member — "I helped decorate the Christmas tree, and I helped my mom decorate the inside. I was Joseph in the Christmas pageant."

as squad leaders.

There are approximately 40 students per platoon. Students for the course come from the International Student Training Detachment as well. Hossam Omran is a captain in the Egyptian army. Even with 12 years of service, he said he's always learning.

"I think this is a good idea, to bring all the branches together for one course," he said. "I will try to transfer this experience to my country's army."

Instruction received during the six-week course includes basic rifle marksmanship, individual movement techniques, land navigation, squad situational training and much more.

The focus of the course is fieldwork and FM 7-8. Four weeks are spent in the field. FM 7-8 is being used as a tool to evaluate the leadership of the lieutenants. Troop leading procedures are focused on rather than tactics.

2nd Lt. Patrick Levier was commissioned through West Point and is branched Armor said, "It's a good learning experience. I'm trying to learn all I can before I get to my first platoon."

need," Kessler said. "If you go back and you look at mobilization efforts during WWII, the Korean War, Vietnam, the bulk of the officers produced to support those efforts came out of OCS," Kessler said. "Right now with things the way they are in the world, and trying to meet assession goals, OCS is being looked upon again.

"It's again needed to produce the same quality of leader it has in the past to meet the challenges of the Army," Kessler said.

The will to accomplish the mission may be there, but the funds and personnel haven't completely arrived yet.

"We're still pushing to get the money to get the required furniture and other necessities for those billets," Robinson said.

"Now, we're just really pushing Training and Doctrine Command and Personnel Command to get the required manning.

"We've been told to do a mission faster than the Army system, so we're pulling resources from other areas to fill this company. We haven't waited for the money or the people. We're just continuing to drive on with the mission," Robinson said.

Progress on the project is coming at a steady pace, even with a lack of sufficient funding.

"The installation's got a pretty good handle on it, they just need the money," Robinson said.

Visit: Post, American Indians meet to exchange ideas

Fort Benning and the tribes have had an outstanding relationship with each other, and they have made much progress in the past, Torres said.

One of the major accomplishments the two made last year was at the land exchange signing ceremony, he said. It consummated the memorandum for agreement, discussed the desires of the tribes and the rules and regulations Fort Benning and Columbus will abide by.

The participants had to reference that agreement at the consultation due to inadvertent discoveries of cultural resources in December on the land the two parties exchanged, said Col. Keith Stelzer, DFEL director. Much of the meeting dealt with those discoveries. If they cannot be preserved, it is the tribes' desire they be reinterred at Fort Benning.

Participants also discussed the Lawson Army Airfield's black ramp expansion. It cost more than $1 million to conduct archeological surveys and excavation of the site.

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, post commander, kicked off the consultation and told the tribes members he was glad to be back and involved with the dialogue. He had worked with them closely as assistant commandant during his last tour at Fort Benning. He stressed the importance of the parties' relationship and offered the required resources to enhance it.

The event continued with various discussions of important issues and culminated in a field trip to some of the sites referred to in those discussions.

Representatives from six of the 11 tribes participated in the consultation. The tribe members, representing the Alabama Coushatta, Alabama Quassarte, Chickasaw, Kialegee, Muscogee (Creek), and the Poarch Band of Creek Indians, had began their discussion with Columbus representatives Jan. 15 at the Officers Club. They, too, discussed aspects of the land exchange. All 11 tribes will receive minutes of the meeting and other information the attending tribes requested.

"(The consultation) went well," Stelzer said. "It's a continuation and has grown through the consultation of the land exchange and has gone far beyond that in dealing with everything we do at Fort Benning. The post looks forward to continued progress and continued consultation."

ATM: Clever crooks use high-tech know-how to swindle

"In most cases, there is no way of knowing this type of crime has happened until the damage is done," Paul said.

One scam reported in New York, Florida, California and points in Canada involves 'cloned' debit cards, an ABC news report stated. The crooks use publicly available software to copy the account and PIN numbers temporarily in the machine, and then insert a blank card to copy the information. The card is then used to illegally access the bank accounts.

"The 'cybercrooks' technique is so clandestine that consumers often don't know they've become victims until they check their monthly bank statements, or when checks start to inexplicably bounce due to lack of available funds," the report stated.

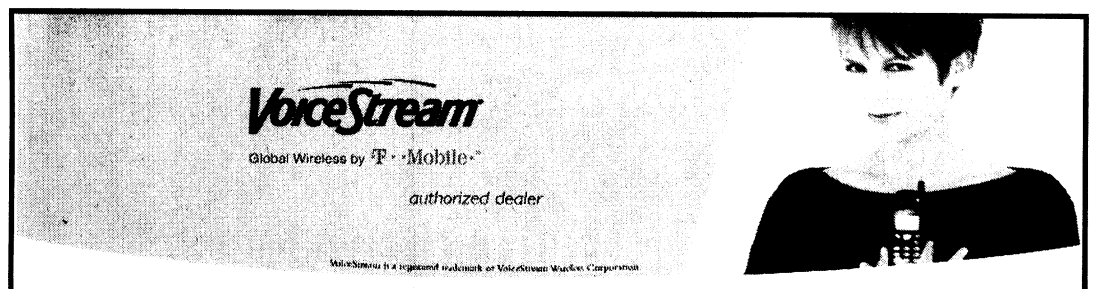
"People using ATM machines need to exercise common sense," Kelley said. "If something doesn't seem reasonable and prudent, then it probably isn't."

All sources give basic precautions to take to reduce the chances of being a victim.

• Always keep your PIN secure. Never reveal the number to anyone, and do not write the PIN on the back of your ATM card.

• Always go to an ATM in a well-lighted, high-traffic area.

• Be wary of nearby strangers that offer to help you if you are having difficulties with a particular ATM.



• Carefully examine an ATM before you use it. If you see something suspicious, like a discolored card reader or an unresponsive keypad, use another ATM. Also, report your suspicions to the bank or owner listed on the ATM.

• If an ATM machine "eats" your card, call your bank immediately and put a stop on the account.

• Check your bank statements regularly, even daily, if possible. The sooner you spot and report suspicious account activity, the better.

"The local community should remain security conscious," Mitchell said. "As long as there are people, there are going to be people trying to rip others off."

"Many people think these things can't happen to them," Paul said. "But they can happen to anybody."

Parish finds purpose in aftermath of fire

'We have to move forward,' priest says

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

As a Fort Benning fireman sifted through the smoldering remains of the Main Post Catholic Chapel, he found a plaque among the rubble and charred debris of Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe's office.

When he wiped away the soot, the words remained clear and legible: "Time is too slow for those who wait, too swift for those who fear, too long for those who grieve, too short for those who rejoice. But for those who love, time is eternity."

"I've been thinking why this plaque — one of 40 in my office —was saved," said O'Keeffe, as he stood before nearly 175 Saint Maurice parishioners at Sunday's 11 a.m. mass in Pratt Hall. "I've decided our time here is short. Our time is also precious. How will we use it — the time we have left on earth?

"We can flee — find another parish. Or we can wait for something to happen, for a new chapel to be built. We can grieve for the old days and rejoice with the memories of what has been," he said. "But all this keeps us looking backward, and it won't help us deal with the present and plan for the future."

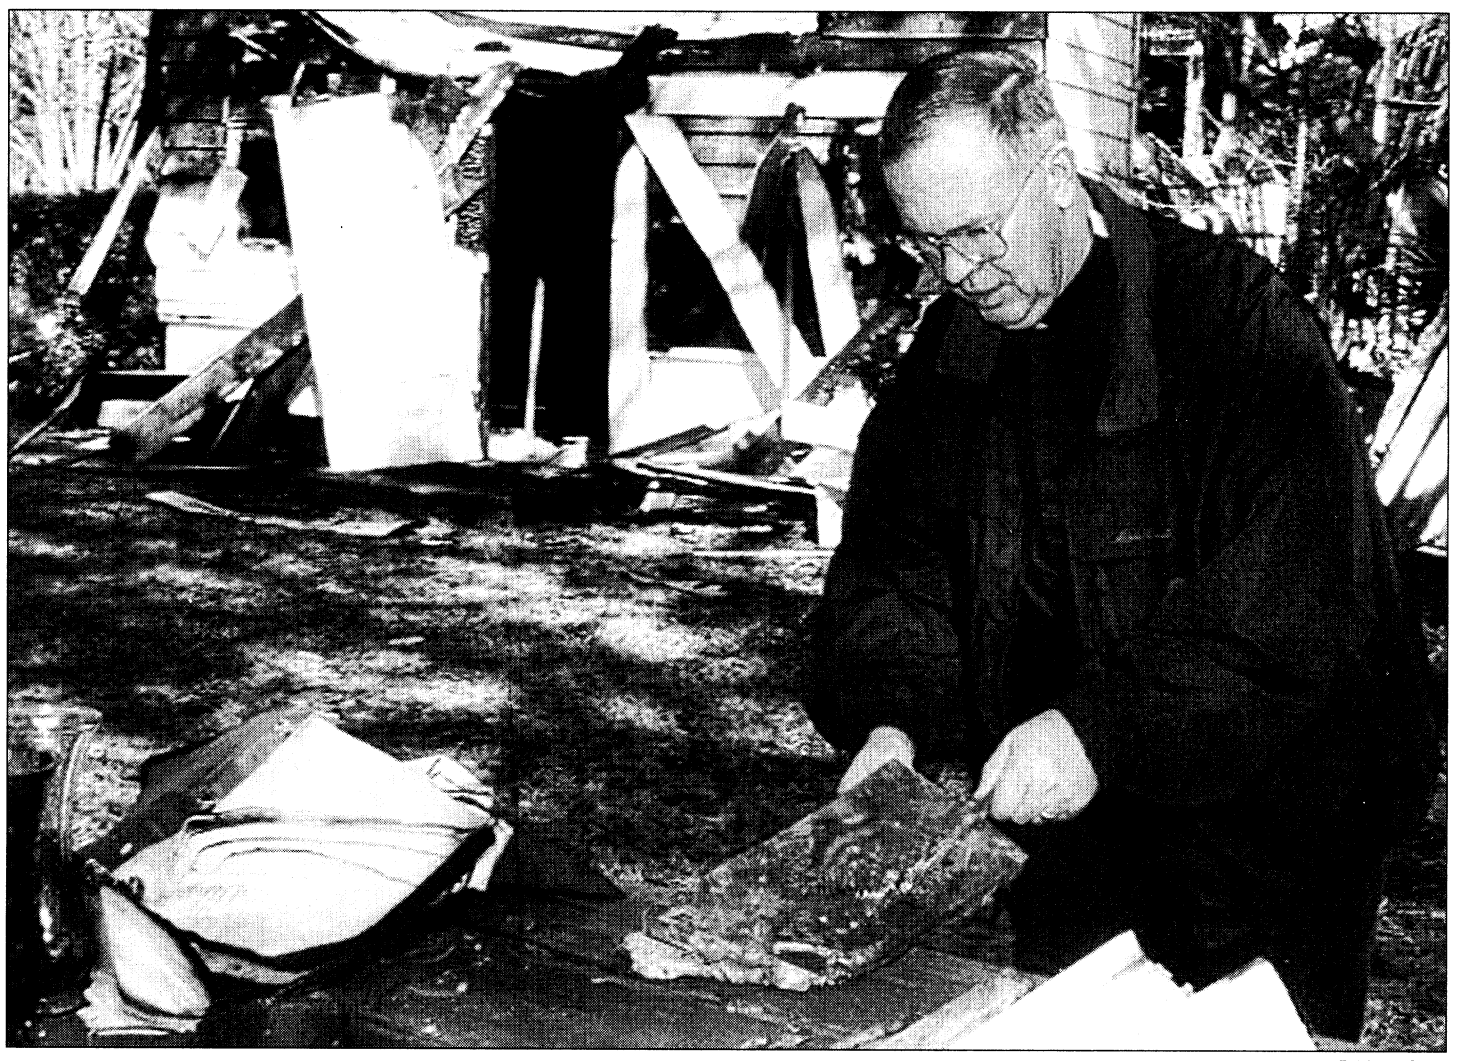
So where do those in Fort Benning's Catholic community find a vision for the future?

"In the gospel," O'Keeffe said, referring to Luke's gospel, chapter 24, where two of Christ's disciples met the risen Christ on the road to Emmaus. So consumed were they by their own grief over the crucifixion, they failed to recognize Jesus.

"When we focus on our own pain, we don't recognize others' pain," O'Keeffe said. "In the midst of our pain, can we recognize our purpose, to share the good news of the gospel with others?"

When the disciples took communion with Jesus, they began to recognize him and rejoice, O'Keeffe said.

"They returned to Jerusalem with the good news. They were changed forever. Can we be like them?" he asked.



"Hopefully, we'll go back to the world we live in and share the news — we have faith. We have hope. And we'll continue to be his followers."

One week after the 60-year-old Main Post Catholic Chapel, home to nearly 1,000 Saint Maurice parishioners, burned to the ground, the Catholic community counted their blessings in the midst of what O'Keeffe called "overwhelming total destruction."

"I came into this world with nothing, and the only thing I'll take with me is my faith in the Lord Jesus Christ," he said. "Everything else is just stuff. That's not to say it doesn't hurt, but we realize the church is not the building, the church is the body of believers, the family of Christ.

"We may have lost a building, but the parish is alive and well and continuing."

Deborah Donald has been a member of the parish for 12 years. She said she'll miss the structure that housed her church family, but she agreed with O'Keeffe.

Bridgett Siter

Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe examines the site for anything that can be recovered from the electrical fire that ripped through the Main Post Catholic Chapel in the early morning of Jan. 12.

"We, the people, are the church, not the building," she said. "But we'll miss it. It was such a warm, peaceful place. Everything was wood, and when you walked in, there was a sense of comfort and peace."

Ironically, the wood that added aesthetic warmth also fueled the fire that continued to smoke more than a week after the blaze. The World War II era building was constructed of oak and pine, which was "bone dry and brittle," said O'Keeffe, who received encouragement and consolation from the chaplain of Fort Leavenworth's Saint Ignatius Chapel, a 102-year-old structure which was destroyed by fire just four weeks ago.

O'Keeffe, who lives in Auburn, kept his military uniforms and church vestments in the church office. He often slept there when he worked too late to make the drive home.

"So you can see it could have been worse. There were no lives lost," he said.

Father Lawrence Lucree and the parish of Our Lady of Lourdes, in Columbus, provided vestments, sacramental wine and bread and other items for Saint Maurices's weekend mass.

Lucree said Fort Benning soldiers were instrumental in constructing Our Lady of Lourdes Church in 1958, and Fort Benning families were the first to attend the church's school in 1960.

"To this day, the soldiers and families of the Fort Benning community are an active part of our parish family," Lucree said. "You were there when we needed you 43 years ago. It's our privilege and honor to help you in your time of need. We are one faith and one family."

O'Keeffe said parish activities will not be hindered by the loss of the church.

"Just because we lost the chapel doesn't mean our parish comes to a halt. We have to move forward," he said.

Mass will be celebrated Saturdays at 5 p.m. at The Infantry Center Chapel and at 8:30 and 11:30 a.m. Sundays at Pratt Hall in the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. Regular mass celebrations will continue at 5 p.m. Sundays at Martin Army Community Hospital.

Spanish Mass will continue at 11:30 a.m. Sundays at the Airborne Chapel.

Couple cherish memories, mourn loss of chapel

Loss of Catholic chapel like 'losing family'

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Though Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe mourns the loss of the "stuff" he's accumulated in nearly 27 years of ministry — the stoles and diplomas and mementos of assignments around the world, he believes there are those whose loss outweighs his own — those whose memories were validated in the chapel he called "the spiritual home of the Infantry."

"For the elderly who retired here and have made this their center of worship for many years, the loss is incredible," he said. "I can replace diplomas and records and such, but their memories are directly connected to that chapel. There are those who came and sat in the same pew year after year and felt the presence of the loved ones they've buried from here.

"And as long as it's been here, spouses have turned to this chapel as a source of comfort and solace when their soldiers were deployed," O'Keeffe said. "Because it was on a military installation, it represented so much more than Sunday worship. It sent a message of peace, hope and strength in the midst of military operations. It said, 'You can be a soldier and a Christian — a patriot and a believer.'"

Retired Col. Robert and Frances Nett have many memories tied up in the little church. It's been their spiritual home since 1951, when Nett was attending the officers' advanced course here. It was a source of comfort for Frances when her husband was sent to Vietnam in 1963, and a place of celebration when the couple baptized their first grandchild in 1964 and celebrated their 50th anniversary in 1993.

"That was our only real wedding," said Frances, who converted to Catholicism in 1977, more than 20 years after making the chapel her home.

The Netts were married in 1943 in a simple ceremony in his parish priest's house. "Our 50th anniversary was really our wedding," He said.

The Netts celebrated their golden anniversary at the Main Post Catholic Chapel in 1993.

"We weren't of the same faith, so we couldn't be married in my hometown church the first time," Nett said. "We had to be married in the parish priest's house. So our 50th anniversary was really our wedding. We renewed our vows."

After a distinguished career as an infantry officer — Nett was awarded the medal of Honor for courage under fire as a company commander in the Philippines in 1944 — the couple retired in Columbus and returned to the chapel that "had always been home," he said.

From the beginning, Nett ingratiated himself into the parish, serving first as an usher and then the chapel's first Eucharist minister. He constructed a large cross for the front of the church, and on it was mounted a figure of the risen Christ with arms outstretched, considered by many parishioners to be an irreplaceable treasure.

Nett recalled the early days of his family's association with the chapel.

"Back then it was really small. It didn't have the wings on either side. People stood at the back of the church and sat on folding chairs in the aisle. Then we had to put a speaker on the outside because there was always 25 or 30 people outside who couldn't get in," he said.

Nett said the church has always been a "family of very special people," who embrace newcomers, students and retirees.

"We seem to blend together as one, with common goals and expectations," he said. "Airborne students, OCS and ranger students, retirees — it doesn't matter. Everyone fits, and the chapel was always the focal point of that unity."

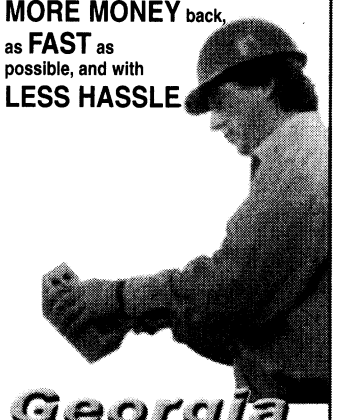
News of the chapel's destruction was a blow to the Netts — "like losing a member of the family," he said. They'll miss the little white church on the corner that "magnetized you whenever you went by it."



"You couldn't pass it without feeling like you wanted to stop and go in, if nothing more than to say hello to the priest," he said.

And though he's confident the parish will rebuild, Nett said nothing can replace what was lost.

"Sure it was just a building, but it was a very special building. What wasn't possible 50 years ago when we were married was made possible in that chapel," he said. "Did I tell you they gave us an honor guard out front?"

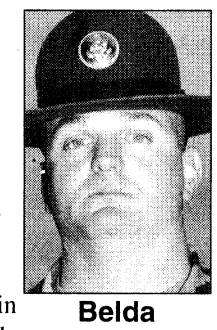
Hollywood's version of Mogadishu 'satisfactory'

Ranger says fighting 'part of the job'



Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Black Hawk Down, Paramount Picture's version of Mark Bowden's 1999 best-seller by the same name, opened last week at local cinemas, including Fort Benning, where three Wynnsong theaters accommodated hundreds of soldiers for a 2 p.m. showing, Jan. 18.

But those who were there — on the streets of Mogadishu during the bloody 15-hour battle between U.S. forces and a mob of Somalis, Oct. 3, 1993 — were invited to a private screening earlier in the week.

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Belda was among the former soldiers and family members of B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, on hand to see for themselves if Hollywood could accurately relay the story of the battle of Mogadishu — a battle that left 18 U.S. soldiers dead, including six rangers.

Sgt. 1st Class Mark Belda had given up hope of ever seeing combat when he was sent to Somalia, and he carried his disappointment like "a great big weight on (his) back."

Belda

He'd dreamed of being a soldier since he was a young boy growing up in Myrtle Beach, S.C., listening to his dad tell of exciting far-off places the Air Force had sent him. But he'd missed Panama and Desert Storm and figured the chances of another conflict were slim.

"I gave up on ever seeing any real action," Belda said. "I remember thinking the only way we'd get used was if it hit the fan. Well it did, and we got just what we wanted."

Belda was assigned to help secure the site of the first helicopter crash in the middle of Mogadishu. He crouched in an alley all afternoon, firing at anything that moved behind buildings and in windows.

"I couldn't even tell you if I killed anyone," he said. "All I can say was, when I fired they weren't there anymore."

After dodging a couple of hand grenades, he and a handful of rangers with him moved to a secure building to ward off an incessant onslaught of Somalis until the rescue convoy arrived the next morning.

Belda recalled feeling a strange kind of detachment during the heat of battle, "like my mind went into limbo, and my body just did what it was trained to do.

"I knew all the guys who got killed. I helped raise most of them from privates," he said. "So I had to detach myself from what was going on around me and what I had to do."

Belda employed the same tactic when he attended an early screening of the movie with his wife, Laura, the young bride he left behind in 1993.

"At the beginning of the movie, it said, 'Based on true events.' It should say, 'Very loosely based on true events," Belda chuckled. "But the discrepancies made it a little easier to detach myself from what I was seeing. It was just a movie — a good movie."

Though Belda was satisfied with the movie, he was quick to voice his disappointment with the book, Black Hawk Down, and earlier accounts of the battle.

"War stories are like fish stories. They sometimes get exaggerated," he said. "I didn't make it past chapter four because of the inaccuracies. It was frustrating."

Frustration, occasional bouts of sadness for his friends lost and irritation over what he called "too much Monday-morning quarterbacking" are a few of the emotions Belda has experienced over the years. Guilt is not one of them.

"I still feel we were justified in being there. As far as I'm concerned, I was where I needed to be and doing my job," he said. "There are things I think should've been handled differently, but I don't feel any guilt, and I'd do it again if they asked me. The Army's all I ever wanted to do. I always expected fighting to be a part of the job."

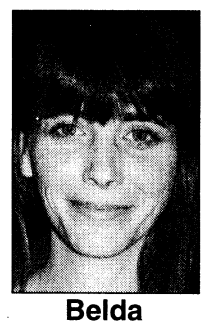
Belda feels there's an unspoken "don't ask, don't tell" policy among soldiers regarding the residual effects of war.

"My wife used to say I was heartless," he laughed. "I didn't show a lot of emotion, didn't feel the need to talk it out. (Rangers) get together and talk about what happened, but we don't talk about how we feel about what happened. That might get you punched."

Now Sgt. 1st Class Belda works as a drill sergeant on Sand Hill and uses his experience to help trainees "understand what they may have to face when they leave here." Otherwise, he's accepted the events of Oct. 3, 1993, as "a part of my history, not my everyday reality," and chooses to focus on the things he values most.

"Certainly it made me appreciate my family more," he said. "And of course my brothers. It is a brotherhood. I fought for them — they fought for me. I'd do it all over again if I had to."

Wife finds strength in support



Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Laura Belda was still a newlywed when her husband was deployed the first time. She hadn't had time to get accustomed to the Army way of life and she knew none of her husband's coworkers or their wives.

But when B Company's Family Support Group got wind of their husbands' deployment to Somalia, a civil war-torn country on the east coast of Africa, the news spread like wildfire. The women came together to encourage and assist one another, and they claimed Laura as one of their own.

"Everybody was so friendly," she said. "It didn't matter who they were or what rank their husband wore, they were genuinely concerned about what was happening and how we were all handling it. We leaned on each other."

Laura said the wives of her husband's platoon became a very close-knit group, sometimes talking on the telephone until the early-morning hours. She counts those women who helped her weather the worst during the early months of her marriage as life-long friends.

Belda

After their husbands returned from Somalia, they continued to be a strong, active FSG. And when Laura's daughter was suddenly taken severely ill and underwent heart surgery, the wives of B Co. were by her side.

Laura said she hasn't encountered another FSG as strong and active as that first one.

"That was my first experience, so that's what I expected to find everywhere. I was really disappointed," she said.

"But then I realized that group was so successful because of what we'd gone through together. So I believe, when it gets down to it, when it's needed the most, the support group comes through."

Soldier trains actors for accuracy

Black Hawk Down is good, realistic, ranger says

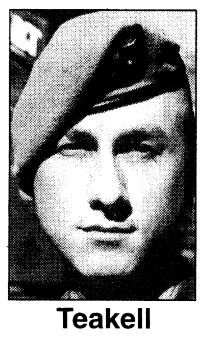
Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

CNN's Larry King called it "gripping ... maybe the most talked about war movie ever," and "one of the most extraordinary war movies ever made."

Herb London, a professor of humanities at New York University, said it's attempts to "reposition the events in Somalia as a heroic tale" misleads the nation about a tragic misadventure.

Could it be they're both right?

The movie Black Hawk Down is receiving rave reviews and festering old war wounds as the media dredges up the whys and wherefores of U.S. involvement in Somalia.



London called it a "tragic occasion that could have been avoided."

Staff Sgt. Reese Teakell is willing to concede the point. But he's a soldier, and it's not his place to question orders.

"It was my job, and it was their job," he said, referring to his friends and fellow rangers from B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, who died in Mogadishu. "They were doing what they trained to do and what they loved. I wouldn't disgrace their memory by saying we shouldn't have been there."

Teakell doesn't feel the need to question U.S. foreign military policy, past or present — "I'm not a politician. I'll leave it to them," he said. But he does feel compelled to set the record straight about the men who died and the brotherhood of rangers they represented.

To that end, he was in on the movie from the beginning, training the actors who would play the parts of Sgt. Dominick Pilla, Sgt. Lorenzo Ruiz, Cpl. Jamie Smith and others.

Teakell

Several actors, including Ben Foster, Ewan McGregor and Josh Hartnett spent a week last year, Feb. 12-16, with cadre from the 75th Ranger Regiment's Ranger Training Detachment, learning very basic soldiering skills, such as the correct way to address an officer or NCO, and various ranger skills, like marksmanship and MOUT training.

"It was a generalization of training," Teakell said. "We knew we couldn't make rangers out of them in a week. They just wanted to get enough training to assimilate the mannerisms of a ranger. There's a definite air about a ranger."

The actors wore desert BDUs with the names of the soldiers they were playing.

"I walked into the classroom and saw someone wearing Pilla's name, and it was a raise-the-hair-on-the-back-of-the-neck kind of experience — very unsettling," Teakell said.

"The last time I saw someone wearing that name tag was October 3, 1993."

Teakell said he had "to come to terms with those feelings" in order to do his job.

"Personally I wanted them to portray these guys as accurately as possible. To the rest of the world, this is who the 75th Ranger Regiment is."

Besides a few inconsequential inaccuracies, the finished product, the movie, does a pretty good job of representing the rangers, Teakell said.

"The realism was excellent, minus a few changes for cinematic reasons," he said. "They referred to each other on a first-name basis. That would never happen. And they use 'hooah' like it's religion. Rangers don't do that.

"But it was a good movie. It's very hard to portray the intensity of the fire fight in a book, but it came across on screen."

Teakell admitted watching the movie was not easy.

"It was unsettling to watch them die again." he said. "I don't mull over those feelings, but it took me back to those pictures I've stored away. It brought back a lot of memories."

He said he won't see the movie again, though he'll probably buy it "and put it on a shelf."

But he has no desire to forget about what happened in Mogadishu.

"I have to use what happened as a training tool, or I'm not doing my job," he said. "I have to pass it on to other rangers, so when they find themselves in that kind of situation, they'll know what to expect."

As for public opinion, Teakell believes the rangers understand something society may never understand. The rangers were there "for the greater good," he said, to help Somalis overcome the warlord responsible for the deaths of thousands of Somalis each day.

And though he admits to ambivalence about the events following the clash in Mogadishu — namely the withdrawal of U.S. troops — the battle itself was a success, he said.

"(Society) accepts the media's portrayal of what happened as a failure," he said. "For the rangers on the ground that day, it was an extraordianry success. We made it out against incredible odds."

Movie's perspective mirrors the book's

Erin A. Nash
Special to the Bayonet©

Just about three years ago, in The Bayonet office, I was handed an unedited copy of the book Black Hawk Down by Mark Bowden. The editor gave it to me because the book is about soldiers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and the fierce 15 hours of fighting they endured in Mogadishu, Somalia, on Oct. 3, 1993.

My husband has been in 3rd Bn. since 1996 so no, he wasn't there, but he does have buddies and co-workers who were.

I loved the book, and last year when I found out it was being made into a movie, I was thrilled. This is strange for me because I'm a total bibliophile and not a movie person, and I frequently am frustrated after watching a movie after I read the book.

Still, I wasn't quite sure I was ready to see the movie. My husband and his unit were the first combat troops on the ground in Afghanistan, and although it all went smoothly, I wasn't sure I wanted to see what could have or might have happened to him.

But I reminded myself this did happen, and that my husband is home safely, so I screwed up my courage and was actually very drawn to the movie.

The movie follows like the book — fairly confusing to a non-military person or even to a military spouse.

The best word to describe Black Hawk Down is "action," which, in reality, was what the 15 hours the soldiers had to endure was. The movie focuses on a few main characters, but mainly follows Staff Sgt. Matt Eversmann, portrayed by Josh Hartnett, who was the squad leader for one of the chalks doing the mission.

The best thing the producer did was focus most of the movie on those 15 hours, so if you're looking for romance, forget it. If you are looking for a dose of reality, this is for you. There are many graphic scenes, including Cpl. Jamie Smith's gunshot wound that Eversmann and a medic try to fix. If blood and gore makes you queasy, you may want to avert your eyes several times. If you enjoy seeing men do extraordinary things, be extraordinary soldiers and friends, I definitely recommend it.

The main difference between this and other war movies, is that it did happen, and those men involved in any aspect of it will never forget it. As someone who was not there, I cannot tell you how accurate it is. I can't tell you if that's how everyone felt, or how everyone reacted.

But, being a wife in 3rd Bn. now for almost six years, I was very surprised the actors actually looked like rangers and talked like them, down to their favorite curse word.

The real heroes are not the actors, but the men they are portraying, and even though it's a very watchable movie, I don't feel any movie or book can ever do justice to what these men went through and continue to live with, to this day.

Physical readiness training program on the way

PT emphasizes endurance, strength, mobility

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School has written new doctrine on how to help soldiers achieve or maintain their physical readiness.

"Over the past several years, fitness training has evolved to a point where leaders at all levels have taken actions they have deemed appropriate to meet the needs of the Army," said Stephen Van Camp, chief of doctrine at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

"The result is a less than optimized approach to fitness training and one that has caused considerable frustration throughout the chain of command," Van Camp said.

The Physical Fitness School came to the conclusion that basing physical training on Army Physical Fitness Test scores did not prepare soldiers for the needs of combat or for improving performance of critical soldier tasks.

Physical readiness is now being emphasized over physical fitness. The guiding theory behind physical readiness is the ability to meet the physical demands of any combat or duty situation, accomplish the mission and still have a reserve of strength.

Capt. Dennis Edwards, operations chief for the Physical Fitness School, said the goal of the Physical Fitness School is to align physical readiness training and the Army's current training doctrine.

"It will be more performance oriented, more 'train as you fight,'" Edwards said.

New doctrine is regularly introduced to keep the Army's training current, Van Camp said.

"Every time a major conflict occurs, we learn lessons to make training a little smarter," Van Camp said.

What we're focusing on is training harder and smarter, without hurting people. Too much, too soon hurts people, Van Camp said.

The three components being concentrated on for physical readiness training are strength and endurance and mobility.

There is a tendency to perform at greater intensities and duration than some soldiers are prepared for and that invites overuse injuries, Van Camp said.

The three principles to physical readiness training are progression, variety, and precision, Edwards said.

"The fitness that you gain is going to be governed by your precision," Edwards said.

"Precision prevents injuries," Edwards said. "It's not just throwing weight around. It doesn't leave things to chance."

Current Army training focuses mainly on long distance running. Physical readiness training looks to two types of running to develop cardiovascular fitness and neuromuscular and musculoskeletal balance in the total conditioning of the soldier. The two types of running are sustained running and speed running. Speed running is also known as intervals.

Physical readiness training is divided into two phases. The toughening phase is designed to increased mobility, strength and endurance. The sustaining phase is designed to maintain that level of readiness.

"You can get as fit and physically ready as you need to be," Edwards said. "This training is for everyone."

Institute celebrates, unveils gallery of liberators

Windows into history unveiled during first-year celebration

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

Windows into history were unveiled and a promise of hope was made to celebrate democracy at the first anniversary ceremony of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation Jan. 17.

Representatives from the 19 nations of the Western Hemisphere, including the U.S., uncloaked murals that captured icons and key events pivotal in their nation's independence, during the inauguration of the Gallery of Liberators.

"This is a special event that gives them (foreign students and staff) the opportunity to display the histories of their democratic nations," said WHINSEC Chief of Staff Lt. Col. Thomas J. Kee III.

Following the inauguration, Dr. Jorge Santistevan de Noriega, Peruvian human rights advocate, was presented the Simon Bolivar Democracy and Human Rights Award and Lecture Series for a lifetime devoted to the defense of civil liberties, support for democratic causes and conflict resolution in both Peru and Central America.

"I accept this award on behalf of my country, which has made tremendous strides in developing a democratic government, more than an award for my accomplishments," Santistevan said.

Santistevan was nominated by the Carter Center, in Atlanta, former President Jimmy Carter's organization for world peace.

"I will always support a promise of hope over dwelling in past accusations. I wish the School of the Americas Watch leadership would have accepted their invitations to this event and witnessed for themselves this promise of hope," Santistevan said.

The award is the highest honor bestowed by the institute, and selection of the lecturers is based on a lifetime achievement in promoting human rights, rule of law, hemispheric cooperation, humanitarian actions, peace-keeping and the virtues of democracy, said Joel Cassman, the institute's Department of State chairman.

During the academic year, students attending a number of courses at the institute tour Columbus and view various examples of local industry and government in action.

"We are very proud to be able to show them how it works and were very grateful to Mayor Bobby Peters and the City of Columbus for that opportunity," said Col. Richard D. Downie, institute commandant.

Peters, City Councilman Robert Poydasheff and Salvador Diaz-Verson, local businessman, were recognized as Honorary Ambassadors of Good Will for WHINSEC.

"This is our way of saying thanks," Downie said.

Leader's birthday observed at Infantry Hall

The post observed Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday with an annual commemoration ceremony Jan. 17 in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

"I would like to commend the stunning talent of all of the performers here today," said Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, post commander. "We are very fortunate to have Reverend Johnny H. Flakes as the guest speaker."

Flakes has been the pastor of the Fourth Street Missionary Baptist Church in Columbus since 1961.

"Let us remember the quintessential leader of African Americans, Doctor King," Flakes said. "We must not forget his sufferings and sacrifices, and today we must celebrate his life."

The commemoration reviewed the life, work and legacy of King.

"The ceremony was awesome," said Shirley Jarrett, from the Civilian Personnel Center. "Everyone played their role really well."

Horace Wilson, with the Southeast Civilian Personnel Center, read his original poem Keep the Dream Alive.

Sgt. Dorothy Bess-Moore with 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, sang Don't Move the Mountain.

The World Change Tabernacle choir also sang at the ceremony.

Staff Sgt. Charles Gregory Sr., with the 283rd Army Band, gave a rendition of King's I Have a Dream speech. The emotional speech was set to patriotic music, and the audience's standing ovation was proof of an excellent performance.

Before his death, April 4, 1968, King was awarded a Nobel Peace Prize for his use of nonviolent protests for civil rights.

"We have made a lot of progress, but the mission is long and more can still be done," Eaton said.

It could happen to any one of us. And if it did, wouldn't you pray for someone to help you put your life back together. We're here for Donna for as long as it takes.

Your donation could change a life. Please call us at 1.800.899.0089 or visit www.voa.org.

An Infantry squad exits the back of a Bradley Fighting Vehicle to engage in targets during the live-fire exercise at Red Cloud Range Jan. 17

Soldiers conduct live-fire exercise Jan. 17

Families get hands-on experience

Pvt. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment gave a live-fire demonstration Jan. 17 at Red Cloud Range.

The exercise is part of the Infantry Precommand Course, which trains infantry officers to get to the next level.

"This offers an opportunity to see the various tools of the infantry fired down range and for future brigade commanders and family members to get hands-on experience with the weapons," said Lt. Col. Christopher Lockhart, commander, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

"Some of the officers are coming from staff positions where they spent a lot of time in the office," Lockhart said. "This gives them the chance to familiarize themselves with some things they may have been away from and hands on training with equipment they may have never seen before."

Both students and family members seemed to enjoy the demonstration.

"This gives family members not only the opportunity to see what we do but also to get hands-on experience with the weapons," said 1st Sgt. Anthony Patriarca, organizer of the demonstration with 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

After the demonstration, everyone in the audience was given the chance to fire the weapons, including the Bradley Fighting Vehicle.

"I've never (fired the Bradley's 25 mm cannon) before, so it was a really good experience," said Cheryl O'Dell, family member.

"It was very impressive, well choreographed, informative and professional," said Scott Youngblood, a father of one of the squad leaders in the infantry squad. "I absolutely recommend others to come out here. I think most people aren't aware of the demonstration."

The demonstration started with an introduction from two speakers, then four Bradleys sped onto the range.

Information was given about the capabilities and characteristics of the Bradley. Then the infantry squads exited the Bradley and were introduced and the weapons they carried were described.

The squads reentered the Bradley, and the firing exercise began. It showed various firing scenarios and capabilities of the Bradley.

"It takes a lot of coordination," Patriarca said. "It's not something that you can just throw together. There is a lot involved. We have been rehearsing this for more than a week."

Basic trainees get 'ready' with revised physical training

Old PT manuals lay groundwork

Laura Martinson

Old Army manuals, WWII references, and extensive historical reports sound like the ingredients for a thorough American history research project. In essence, that's exactly what it is. But the end result is a physical training program suited to meet the needs of the entire Army.

C Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, is the first training company to implement the physical readiness training at Fort Benning. The company began its new cycle Jan. 16.

"In the past, the mentality of physical training was to break the body down and then rebuild it," said Sgt. Matthew Mobley, drill sergeant. "But now, we're taking what's there, building upon that, and using activities and movements soldiers will see on today's modern battlefield."

The physical readiness training is just what it says it is — readiness training. But Stephen Van Camp, chief of doctrine, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, said the question remains, what are we getting ready for?

"There's a long-standing assumption that the more fit you are, the better you'll be at your job," Van Camp said. "But the real question is, 'Fit for what?'"

Lt. Col. Bill Rieger and Staff Sgt. Matthew Billet demonstrate part of physical readiness training. Shown here is the "power squat."

"We're focused on enhancing common tasks that every soldier has to do in basic training. The best way to do that is to develop exercises that will train soldiers to better perform those activities," Van Camp said.

"Soldiers have to move quickly, over, under and around objects and they have to be able to manage their own body weight. They need a balance of strength, endurance and mobility to meet any combat situation," he said.

The PRT is nothing new, Van Camp said. The balance comes from a variety of exercises similar to those used in the pre-World War II era such as calisthenics, vertical and lateral drills, and more explosive movements like power skipping.

A new physical training manual gets turned over about every decade.

Efforts to revise the physical readiness training stemmed from the basic premise of injury reduction. Injuries have indeed decreased in test groups, and performance has increased.

The PRT is ramped, meaning there are logical progressions for people at different fitness levels. A phased approach, beginning with the "toughening phase," lays the foundation for future physical advancements in the "sustaining phase."

"For a long time, soldiers have focused primarily on PT test scores," Mobley said. "We've concentrated less on battle skills, and that means we're neglecting other necessary aspects of physical fitness. Variety is lacking."

That's exactly what basic physical fitness studies are stating.

"All research points to giving the soldiers the body strength they would need in a battle situation," Van Camp said. "We follow the basic Army principle, 'Train as you fight.' It just makes sense."

"We won't be able to evaluate the end product until the end of the cycle," Mobley said.

"People are usually resistant to change, but we are all motivated and anxious to see results."

C Company Cobras win Dragon Challenge

Soldier games culminate busy months

1st Lt. William D. Chesher
1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment

The Dragons of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, assembled on Essebagger Field to participate in the Dragon Challenge, a one-day competition that the Dragons hold each quarter to determine which is the best company in the battalion.

It was the culmination of a very busy past few months, between deployments for B Company, all three companies completing gunnery, and A and C Co. conducting day and night live-fire exercises — all while maintaining a two-hour recall to deploy anywhere in the world.

The games began with a 6-mile battalion run in battle dress uniform complete with combat boots. The events the Dragons participated in were the Army Physical Fitness Test, combat football, the Humvee push, stick wrestling and "King of the Pit." All participants, with the exception of the APFT competitors, participated in BDUs combat boots and ballistic armor. This added dimension provided the Dragons with a challenge but did not dampen their fierce spirit of competition.

The competition was close as Headquarters and Headquarters Co. took the APFT, followed by the Bushmasters, Gators and Cobras respectively. The Gators of A Co. were crowned the "Kings of the Pit."

As the day progressed, the lead changed hands a number of times. But, in the end, it was the Cobras of C Co who took home the honors. This makes it two in a row for the Cobras who also took top honors at the Dragon Smoker in September.

The Dragons of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment engage in the pugil stick fight to determine who is the "King Of The Pit."

Father and son hope to jump together

A family who trains together stays together

Maj. Robert Breeding, 42, has always wanted to attend airborne school throughout his military career. After spending eight years as an enlisted soldier in the Army, Breeding was commissioned as a second lieutenant in 1985. He was in his mid-20s and stationed at Fort Bragg, N.C., with his wife and two children. While at Fort Bragg, he saw an opportunity to attend airborne school. However, this opportunity quickly ended when his unit couldn't grant him leave to attend the course.

Twenty-four years in the Army and 17 years after his spoiled opportunity, Breeding is finally getting his chance to attend airborne school, this time with his son.

Robert

Joseph

Pfc. Joseph Breeding, 19, completed his advanced individual training in December, just in time to attend the course with his father.

The major inquired with the U.S. Recruiting Command to see if it would be possible to go airborne, he said.

"It took divine intervention and planning," the father said. "Somehow, it all came together."

Joseph grew up familiar to the military environment, and attended the Virginia Military Institute. He knew he would eventually join the military, but never thought he would be training with his father, Joseph said.

"I didn't think I would be jumping out of planes with my dad," Joseph said.

Robert was involved with his son's decision to join the military and even accompanied him to the Military Entrance Processing Station, he said.

The two would spend time at the dinner table discussing Army stories, politics, occupations and military stations, they said.

Joseph enlisted in civil affairs and made sure he could get assigned to an airborne unit.

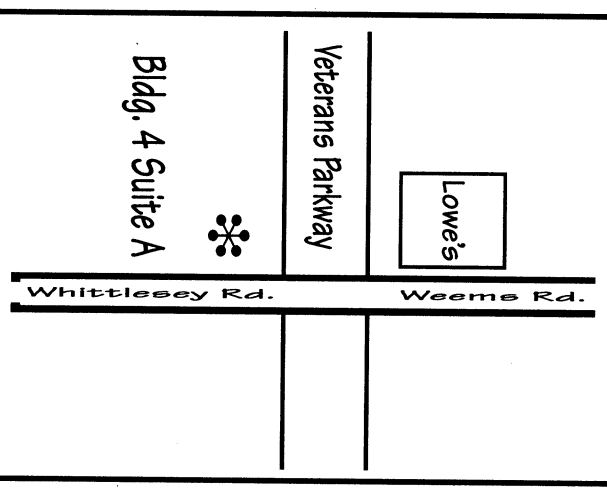
He will attend the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, Calif., to study Arabic.

Robert said his son plans on taking advantage of the educational benefits the military offers and to become a commissioned officer, a similar career path his father took.

Both of the men said they are in 'great shape' and excited to begin training.

Robert spent nine months preparing himself for airborne school, he said.

"I'm in better shape now than I was in my 20s," Robert said.



Training together adds a new dimension to their father and son relationship.

"I'll behave because he's around," the son said. "It's strange because I need to look at him as a 'sir' more than a father."

Robert sees it as a great way to build upon their relationship, he said.

"I think we can play that role," Robert said. "A lot of bonds have changed between us. He's a man now and sees this as a passing of the torch."

Retiree becomes victim of urban legend

Identity theft is fastest growing crime in America

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — An e-mail circulating about a retiree who had his identity stolen after filing separation papers at a county courthouse is no urban legend, according to Transition Center officials.

Soldiers separating from the military are now being advised to ignore the old recommendation to file their Department of Defense Form 214 (Military Discharge) with their local county courthouse. Instead, transition counselors are advising soldiers to safeguard their personal information to guard against credit fraud, said Deborah Snider, Transition Center personnel analyst at the U.S. Total Army Personnel Command.

Between 600,000 to 700,000 cases of identity theft were reported by the Federal Trade Commission in 2000. Identity theft is the fastest growing crime today, according to the FTC, and many victims don't find out that their personal information has been stolen until they are trying to buy a house or get a loan.

"I don't think anyone ever thought about this happening, which is the reason there are no provisions to 'unfile' records," Snider said. "This is a serious problem, and soldiers are a prime target because everything is tied to the soldiers' Social Security number."

The victims of identity theft suffer tremendously because the burden of proof is on them, Snider said. It's hard to believe that a person's life could be destroyed by this, she said, but it happens.

Tall tower jump starts family memories

Family reconnects with memories of its late father

Tricia Hall is only 7, and her memories of her father are few and fleeting, sometimes more of a sensation than a concrete picture.

"Like once we were in a swimming pool, and he tossed me up in the air," she said. "We have a picture of it, so I don't know if I really remember it or if I've just seen it a lot, you know?"

2nd Lt. Kelly Hall died when the reconnaissance plane he was piloting crashed in Germany in 1998. His wife and five children traveled to Fort Benning last week to visit old friends and recapture the Airborne spirit of the man who "loved the Army big time."

Shelly Hall and her daughters, Tyler, 9, Tori, 8, and Tricia, and her sons, Tony, 5, and Tanner, 4, flew from Muskegon, Mich., to spend the weekend with Staff Sgt. McKinley and Helen McWhorter, whom they met 12 years ago when McWhorter and Hall attended Airborne School together.

When Shelly and her children expressed an interest in jumping from the 34-foot jump towers on Eubanks Field, McWhorter made arrangements for the Saturday morning jumps.

"It was cool. It was sooo cool," said Tyler, who recalled a similar experience watching her father jump from a plane and parachute to the ground five years ago. "That was cool, too."

Shelly said her girls are "holding on to whatever memories they have," of their father.

"But the boys were too young," she said. "So this is a way of connecting with their dad, keeping him alive in their hearts. This morning one of them said, 'You know he'll be jumping with us today.'"

Hall enlisted in the Army in 1983 and attended Airborne School in 1990. After a two-year break in service, he served in Desert Storm before attending Warrant Officer School in 1992 and OCS in 1998.

In September of the same year, his family moved to Germany and Hall began preparing for deployment to Bosnia in November. While on a routine training flight two weeks before leaving, his plane went into a spin it couldn't recover from.

"I tell the kids we'll never forget him or replace him, and we're better people because we knew him," said Shelly, who now works as a victims' advocate for the Michigan Court System.

Tricia admitted to being scared before her first jump, but flushed-faced and grinning, she went back for more.

"I did it five times. It was fun," she said. "I think Dad's proud of me."

System improves for patrons at hospital

Callers reach 'live' person in minutes

Terry Beckwith
Martin Army Community Hospital

Tired and frustrated with the phone appointment system at Martin Army Community Hospital?

Don't despair — the hospital purchased and installed a new Automated Call Distribution system, which started Jan. 17.

The new system will enable patients seeking an appointment to reach a "live" person within two minutes, using the central appointment concept.

"Under the old system, patients calling in for an appointment often were caught up in a loop or placed in a hold pattern, and many times dropped out of the system," said Maj. Patrick Barrett, chief of the hospital's Healthcare Management Division.

Barrett said the new system was purchased to improve patients' access to care. Additionally, all primary care appointments will be made in the central appointments office except for Victory Clinic. The hospital's primary care clinics are Internal Medicine, Pediatrics, Family Practice, Winder Health Clinic and Aviation Medicine.

"We are quite confident that the improved system and equipment will increase timely access to the Primary Care manager for all appointments," said Carol Cain, chief, Beneficiary Services Branch. Appointments will be categorized as acute care (patient will be seen within 24 hours), routine (patient will be seen within seven days) and preventive (patient will be seen within 28 days).

"The new system will help support our promise to our Tricare Prime patients," Cain said.

"This will help MACH to meet the Tricare access standards," she said.

Patients are advised when calling in to listen closely to the new instructions, as some of the prompts have changed. Those with rotary phones will be instructed on how to access the system. The phone number will remain 544-CARE (2273).

Patients are also reminded to use the Primary Care manager toll free number, (888) 293-2148, for those times when they are traveling outside of the 50-mile Fort Benning area. The Health Care Information Line is also available at (800) 333-5331, and provides medical advice 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

Post youth honor MLK Jr., dream for which he stood

CDC celebration exposes children to new cultures

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Even the youngest of children have a dream.

The toddler group at the Main Post Child Development Center recently echoed that point by reciting with their teacher Martin Luther King Jr.'s famous "I have a Dream" speech.

The group recital, also including a birthday song for King performed by the pre-toddlers, was a tribute from the children to the man's life's work.

"We are doing this today to celebrate our differences and our diversity, and to remember Dr. King," said Mollie Floyd, lead education technician at CDC. Floyd has headed the celebration for the past 11 years since the center's opening.

"Martin Luther King Jr. reminds the children of the American system, because he spoke out for freedom, equality, and justice for everyone, " Floyd said.

Twanna Tyler, child and youth program assistant, sang Walk on and The greatest love of all to an attentive audience of youngsters. Ernestine Perry, child and youth program assistant, donned traditional African garb to add to the cultural experience.

"It's not always easy to get a group of children this age out into the community to take part in bigger events, so this is how we celebrate," said Meta Bush, CDC director.

Floyd said it's important to teach such lessons even to very young children.

"We try to teach children there are people in this world with different traditions," Floyd said. "We want to show them the joy of sharing other cultures."

The center boasts teachers and students from a variety of cultures, such as Germany, Thailand, and Spain. The youngsters will continue to study different cultures in February.

ID Theft: Threatens retiree's security

clerk at American Express saying that someone was trying to cash a $9,000 check in his name made out to a Muslim or Arabic-sounding name.

The clerk was suspicious and called the retiree because the address she had on file for him did not match the address on the check. After the retiree's case was investigated, he found out that a lawyer stole his identity. The lawyer also had a laptop with several thousand military names, Social Security numbers and other information on it. The common link between the veterans on the list was that they had filed their DD 214s with their county courthouse.

"Someone stole my identity, now I feel I am no longer me," said a victim of identity theft. "I reside in the pocket of a felon who can see that she is allowed to steal me without penalty. She carries me casually, and each time she pulls me out a small piece of me falls away."

To help guard against identity theft the Transition Center is no longer placing Social Security numbers on discharge and retirement certificates, Snider said. Anything that might be hung for display will not have a soldier's Social Security number on it.

When soldiers separate from active duty, Snider said the most vital document they receive is the DD 214. It contains their Social Security number and birth date. In the past, soldiers were advised to file the form with their local courthouse to ensure that they would always be able to get a certified copy. They need a certified copy to receive any Veterans Administration benefits.

Once the DD 214 is filed at a local county courthouse, however, it becomes a public record. Some courthouses have put this information online, and even more plan to do so in the future, Snider said.

"Our recommendation is to safeguard the form as you would any vital papers such as a will, marriage license or insurance papers," Snider said.

"A safe deposit box would be a good investment."

Forty-six states now have identity theft laws, up from just three in 1996, according to the Federal Trade Commission. And many state lawmakers are considering toughening laws already on the books.

Under a new Montana law that took affect in October, the maximum penalty for identity theft involving more than $1,000 in gains is a $10,000 fine and 10 years in jail. In Missouri, identity theft is punishable by up to six months in jail for the first offense; up to one year in jail for the second offense; and one to five years imprisonment for the third or subsequent offense.

Teachers build team skills

Bridge-building exercise encourages communication

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

There's no "i" in teamwork. That's the message a former Fort Benning soldier brought to Faith Middle School teachers Jan. 18, during a three-hour team-building exercise designed to encourage cooperation and communication.

Retired Col. Randy Buck, the former director of Public Works, now the district manager for Flint Energies, the company that owns and operates Fort Benning's electrical system, led the interactive activity, which focused on recognizing strengths and overcoming differences in personalities, opinions, values and agendas within a group.

"The bottom line is to build relationships that will help us better achieve our mission, which of course is in our students' best interest," Buck said. "By developing teamwork skills, or at least recognizing the skills they possess and need to channel, they're working toward fostering the kind of atmosphere that promotes learning."

Nearly 45 teachers and administrators participated in the activity, which Buck developed as a leadership training course for employees of Flint Energies, Faith's partner in education since 1999. This was the first time the course has been offered outside the company.

"It's not rocket science. Leadership, teamwork, communication — it's all common sense. It's a shared responsibility," said Buck, who taught a LEAD course for three years at Fort Benning. "I took a lot of what I used there and incorporated it into this course. The same principles of leadership and teamwork the Army uses can be applied in any business or corporation or classroom."

Following a two hour give-and-take dialogue about effective communication and teamwork skills, Buck led the group in a bridge-building exercise. Seven teams, each composed of staff members who wouldn't ordinarily work together during the school day, were given 40 minutes to design and construct a table-top bridge out of construction paper, tape, paper plates and paper cups, and design an advertisement for their "construction company."

Bridgett Siter

Robin Hughey, counselor, steadies a bridge support during the Jan. 18 team-building exercise.

Each bridge had to be free-standing, at least 48 inches long and 24 inches high and able to support and transport a light-weight ball from one side to the other. Each team presented a 30-second "commercial" about their company and product.

With names like SPAN — Superior Products Among Novices — and slogans like "We've been building bridges for 20 minutes," they cheered their successes and laughed at their failures as they presented bridges both top-notch and toppled.

"We're blaming it on substandard material," shouted one team, as their bridge crumpled under the weight of the ball.

During a short after-action review, the teams discussed the reasons for their successes and failures and recognized the qualities that strengthened or sabotaged their team.

"The bottom line is trust," said Gerald Madler, counselor. "One person or two couldn't do it all. No one took on the role of leader. Instead we concentrated on our job and trusted our teammates to do the same. If you don't have trust, everything else is irrelevant."

Though some of the bridges couldn't pass muster, Buck gave Faith's teachers and administrators an "A" for their final results.

"They arrived on their own at the real crux of the project," he said. "The bottom line is trust in any team activity."

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Kirven Boyce

a third-grade teacher at Loyd Elementary School

History: Boyce is a native of Columbus and lives near her parents, brother, sister-in-law, niece and nephew. When she was about 8-years-old, she thought she knew exactly what she wanted to be when she grew up.

"First I wanted to be a librarian, and then I decided I wanted to be a teacher. I even wrote it in my Dr. Seuss book," she said with a laugh. "But when I got to college, studying education never crossed my mind."

Education: Boyce went to college a little unsure of where her education might take her.

"A lot of people were going into business, and it seemed like a good field to get into," she said.

She earned a business degree in marketing from the University of Georgia, but after graduation, she returned home to Columbus, not quite sure of her career choice. She ran a tennis shop in town and began giving tennis lessons to children, which led to a change of heart.

"That's when I figured out what my true calling was," Boyce said. "I loved helping the children so much. It was like a light bulb went off."

She got her teaching certificate and later her master's degree in early childhood education from Columbus State University. She did her student teaching at White Elementary, and has taught in Fort Benning schools for the past 11 years. She has taught kindergarten, third and fourth grade, and has taught at Patch preschool and White, Wilson and Loyd Elementary Schools.

On transition: "Moving from kindergarten to the fourth grade was a huge change," Boyce said. "My work load changed and the children were far more independent. I had to remind myself that they were capable of more. Ella Jones was a teacher then and she took me under her wing and guided me through my first year. I surprised even myself."

Why she loves teaching: "I simply love helping children. It's so awesome to see the light go on when they understand something," Boyce said. "Just knowing I can make just a little bit of a difference every single day makes me happy."

Hobbies: Boyce still plays a little tennis, and enjoys walking and spending time with her niece and nephew.

Future plans: "I plan to keep on teaching the children and educating myself. I like to keep up to date so I can offer the best tools to the children," Boyce said.

Boyce said she's going to take it "one year at a time."

"You never know where your path might lead you," Boyce said.

Test your knowledge of CSP

Fort Benning Schools want to see if you've been paying attention. They're sponsoring a contest to see how much you know about DoDEA's Community Strategic Plan, and specifically how it's being implemented on Fort Benning.

The CSP was the subject of a five-part series that ran in The Bayonet during December and January. The questions on the contest entry form, below, are based on the articles, the CSP handbook (available at all post schools), and the DoDEA Web site, www.odedodea.edu.

The contest, which will run for three weeks, is open to all Fort Benning residents, employees, military, retired military and family members, with the exception of employees of Fort Benning Schools and The Bayonet.

The form can be returned to any Fort Benning school, the administration office on Custer Road or The Bayonet office in Infantry Hall.

Prizes include a weekend stay at Uchee Creek, Brunch Royale for two at the Officers' Club, free cart rental and greens fees at the Follow Me Golf Club and a free quick lube, tire rotation and balance at the Automotive Skills Center.

After-school reading aids classroom learning

Wishbone Club promotes peer interaction

Wilson Elementary School

A.J. Swienhagen, who is a member of the Wishbone Reading Club, reads to younger students at Wilson Elementary School.

The Wishbone Readers at Wilson Elementary School are helping to realize the Fort Benning School System's goal — Every Child a Reader, Every Child a Writer.

Students in grades three through five meet after school each Monday to practice their reading and writing skills.

The club, named in honor of the Jack Russell terrier on the popular PBS children's television program, is comprised of a group of dedicated students who are participating in a variety of activities to help improve their reading and writing skills. In addition, the students donate their free time by tutoring and reading to younger students in the school.

The purpose of the Wishbone Reading Club is to promote fluency and to provide a setting in which the love of reading is fostered and students are encouraged to learn about texts in various ways. The club helps to build a community of readers as students receive support from their peers and interact with others to develop good literacy habits.

Teacher sponsors Michelle Allen and Terra Good are instrumental in making the club a success. Carefully planning a number of stimulating activities each week for the students is vital to the overall success of the program. Students regularly engage in expressive and oral reading, author studies and interactive on-line sessions with authors. In addition, students are taught how to make appropriate book selections and are actively involved in book extension activities such as creative writing and book celebrations.

Sponsor Michelle Allen believes that the Wishbone Reading Club is a perfect complement to a balanced reading program.

"The research has repeatedly shown that for students to become better readers, they must be given many opportunities to practice reading and to do so in a setting where they are able to select books that are of interest to them," Allen said.

Having the club available as an extension to the regular reading class has proven beneficial for the students involved.

Phyllis Parker, principal, sees the benefits of the program.

"The club is not intended to replace the classroom-guided reading groups where specific needs are addressed," Parker said. "All students at Wilson have opportunities to meet in guided reading groups for explicit instruction with new learning. The Wishbone Reading Club just helps to extend that learning and to reinforce what the teachers have taught the students."

The best endorsement of all comes from the students.

"I love to be in Wishbone," said third-grader Morgan Jackson. "It's fun and I get to do lots of neat things with books."

Crafty kids make fun out of work

Students use imagination in Craft Club

Wilson Elementary School

Craft Club members at Wilson Elementary put the finishing touches on their projects. The club meets every Wednesday afternoon.

Add a little glue, a little paint and a little ribbon together and what do you get?

If you're in Wilson's Craft Club, you might end up with an angel, a flower pot or a picture frame.

Each Wednesday afternoon, fourth and fifth grade students gather in the school's media center to create useful and decorative items that have one main item in common — imagination.

Grounded in the belief that children learn best when they are actively participating in a learning project, the Craft Club began this year to encourage children to be involved in problem solving, design and construction while engaged in creating attractive projects that can be used as decorations or gifts.

At a glimpse, it may appear that students are simply cutting and pasting. But in reality, they are learning to measure, estimate and evaluate properties of materials, and other important skills.

Club sponsor Dr. Wanda Person said through crafts, students have a real-life outcome for the skills they use in class.

"In math class, students may learn to measure — in craft club, measuring takes on a whole new meaning."

"They are very careful with their work because they know that it's going to be a gift for someone or it is going to be used as a decoration in our school or in their home," Person said. "Our members take their work seriously, and they are very proud of their accomplishments."

So far this year, students have created patriotic flower pots, friendship photo frames, pumpkin treat bowls, falling leaf wind socks, clay pot turkeys and angels and faux stained glass sun-catchers.

There are lots of exciting, innovative craft projects still to come in the new year. Person said future projects will involve learning about other cultures through the crafts of different countries as well as more holiday-themed projects.

Teachers set example of good health

Faculty step out for wellness

Wilson Elementary School

A recent report published by the National Center for Health Statistics reported that 55 percent of American adults are considered to be overweight.

A similar report issued by the surgeon general stated that during the past 20 years, obesity has increased dramatically in the United States.

According to this report, more than half of all U.S. adults are considered overweight, defined as having a body mass index of 25 or more.

Keeping these findings in mind, a group of teachers at Wilson School decided to become proactive and make some positive changes in their lifestyles in 2002.

The Wilson Wellness Group was formed immediately after the teachers returned from winter break. The group, which meets after school four times per week, is dedicated to focusing on all aspects of getting in shape and living healthier, more productive lives.

The members of the wellness group, comprised of teachers, educational aides and administrators, participate in a variety of fitness related activities, from power walking to step aerobics. The focus of the group is to establish and maintain routines that will promote well being and result in higher energy levels among the participants.

Sherrie Nelson, pre-K teacher, and one of the initiators of the group believes that healthier teachers make better teachers.

"The job of a teacher can at times be very physically and emotionally draining," Nelson said. "It is important to remember that we can only be our best when we take good care of ourselves."

Phyllis Parker, principal, agreed.

"There are days when we all feel like going home and collapsing on the couch. We know, however, that the best thing to do when we experience that mental exhaustion is to engage in some type of physical activity," Parker said.

The Wellness Group will help teachers to do just that. Goal setting and accountability have been built in as part of the criteria for membership. There is even talk of exchanging the usual vending machine snacks for healthier choices such as vegetables and fruit.

The real test of the success of the group will come in time. For now the group of 21 committed educators are excited about getting back in shape and feeling great in 2002.

Q: After the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, I donated money to a relief organization, and I donated blood to the Red Cross to help with the efforts in New York and Washington, D.C.

I did not think about this when I made the donations, but I recently heard that charitable contributions can help people lower their tax liability. If this is true, and how do I document these donations on my tax return?

A: The terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, D.C., caused many people to reach into their bank accounts and donate incredible amounts of money to the relief efforts. Like you, most people made a donation without thinking of the tax benefit they will receive for their generosity.

The tax code provides incentives to encourage people to give to charities. However, under the current law, charitable donations are only deductible if you itemize deductions on your tax return. If you claim the standard deduction, you will not receive a tax benefit for your donation.

Most military personnel will not itemize their deductions because the standard deductions are fairly high. If your itemized deductions do not surpass your standard deduction, then you will not itemize. For tax year 2001, the standard deduction for a single person is $4,550. The standard deductions significantly increased from tax year 2000, and will continue to increase through tax year 2006.

If you do itemize, the amount of your contribution you can deduct next tax season will depend on the type of donations you make and whom the gift is made to. As you will see, some contributions can be deducted while others cannot.

Cash contributions can generally be written off for the full amount on your tax return. Cash contributions include anything from giving a few dollars to your church on Sunday morning to writing a large check to a relief organization. The only catch is that you must make the cash contribution to a "qualified charitable organization." Except for churches and governments, most nonprofit groups need to receive IRS approval to be qualified to receive tax-deductible donations.

Because of the Sept. 11 tragedies, the IRS expedited the process to provide tax-exempt status to new charities formed to assist relief efforts. To verify if an organization is qualified to accept tax-deductible contributions, you can check IRS Publication 78 on the IRS Web site at www.irs.gov/bus_info/eo/eosearch.html.

In the aftermath of the terrorist attacks, many people donated items needed to help rescue efforts, including medical supplies, tools, food and clothing. Contributions of property are eligible for charitable deductions. If the property is new, you can generally deduct what you paid for it. It is a good idea to keep your receipts with your records so you can easily reference how much the item cost. If the donated property is used, your deduction is generally limited to how much the item would sell for in a thrift shop.

Many Americans donated blood to the Red Cross and other blood banks in response to the terrorist attacks. Unfortunately, donations of blood are not eligible for charitable contributions.

If you volunteered for the relief efforts, your service is appreciated, but no tax deduction is available for the value of your time and labor. You also cannot deduct the cost of income you lost from your job while you worked as a volunteer. However, if you had to spend any money to complete your volunteer work, your out-of-pocket expenses are eligible for the deduction. Just make sure you keep good records of all your expenses.

A lot of people attend fund-raising events to help out with good causes. When you are calculating your itemized deductions, you will need to subtract the value of any benefit you received when you participated in the fund-raiser. Such benefits could include a dinner at a fund-raising banquet. Charities are required by law to supply donors with a written estimate of the value of benefits to be provided when selling fund-raiser tickets that cost more than $75. For more information, see Publication 526, Charitable Contributions.

Faith remains constant in world of change

Believers rely on 'the rock' for peace of mind

Chaplain (Capt.) Florio Pierre
2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment

If you were asked to name a few things that are constant, what would you say? Certainly you would not want to state the Army as one of your options. Within the fabric of this mega-organization, the only thing that is constant is change. This is no novelty to a soldier who glances at this article. But really, how do we cope with changes?

Our world is constantly changing. Every 365 days, save a leap year, we face a new one. Like that of a turning calendar, changes take place in all of our lives.

Pierre

For instance, the arrival of a new baby changes the lifestyle of the parents radically. When our daughter Abigail was born in France, we had to adjust how and when we slept, how to handle the fragile little angel, etc. The nurse handed the little 5-pound bundle of joy to my wife and our lives have not been the same since that day. Like Abigail, changes often come with many responsibilities.

In his book, 'Who Moved My Cheese?' Spencer Johnson depicts in a very simplistic way this very issue of how resistant we can be to changes. Cheese is a metaphor for what we want in life, whether it is fortune or happiness, a long lasting relationship, or spiritual peace of mind.

In this story, the characters are placed in a maze of unexpected changes. One of them deals with the changes victoriously through a positive attitude about the prospective to begin anew on a blank page.

Many soldiers get a chance to begin on a new page when they join the Army. However, the initiation process quickly gives them a rude awakening that there is, for many of them, a standard that is required of them that they never had before. Now that they are here, they must conform to that change.

Although all around us is changing, there is something that remains constant. Moses in Genesis 15:6 uses the Hebrew word "righteousness" to illustrate the principle of conforming to a standard.

How amazing it is that even in the evolution of ideas and books on how to deal with changes, we find one precious word and one savior that remain constant.

The author of the book of Hebrews states, "Jesus Christ the same, yesterday, today and forever" (Hebrews 13:8). Can such statement be true considering that not too many ideas and writings remain the same over a long period of time? Such is the question begged by a new mother who just lost her boy.

Will we allow the changes to rock our faith or will our faith demand that the instability of life be conformed to the stable word? Yes, the Psalmist in Psalms 46 does give us enough reasons to be still and know that He is God in the midst of all the changes that we will face this new year.

Resolve to know your God better this year, and you will find stability in an unstable world.

Editor's note: Pierre serves as the chaplain in the Infantry Training Brigade on Sand Hill. He is married to the former Helen Esmonde and they have a 16-month-old daughter.

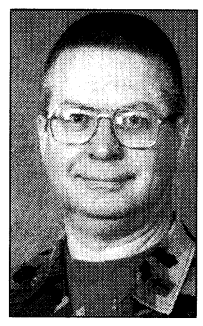
Priceless gifts give value for lifetime



Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

The importance of friendship was drilled into me from my childhood. I grew up in a factory town but worked during the summers on my uncle's farms.

Work on the farms was labor intensive, especially during harvesting. A farmer could not do it alone. Farming required the help of friends and neighbors to bring in the harvest.

During an injury, illness or death or after the tragedies of flood, fire or storm, the assistance of friends and neighbors got farmers through difficult times.

Payment was never accepted for services rendered. The words that were usually spoken during those times were, "I'm glad I was able to help a friend," or "I know you would do the same for me."

Koop

Friendships forged in battle are no different. Bonds are formed in war that are stronger than that with a brother or spouse (II Samuel 1:26). Such friendship endures and grows even in adversity though companions may fade away (NIV, Proverbs 18:24).

Making and developing friendships are still important qualities today and well worth the investment. To make friends requires you to be a friend to others (KJV, Proverbs 18:24). Friendship is more about giving than it is about getting.

As you move from post to post, take the initiative. Be a friend. Make lasting friendships with co-workers and neighbors. Don't let former friendships fade.

Friendships are priceless.

Do you desire to reach out and make new friends? Have you been hurt by past friendships? If you do or have, contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza for assistance. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail me at USArmyChaplain@aol.com.

Outlaws win post MLK tournament

Technical foul helps team survive, stops late comeback

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Everything was going the Outlaws' way at the end of the first half of the post's Martin Luther King Jr. basketball tournament championship game Monday at Briant Wells Field House.

Leading the Rock Force, 42-27, the team from 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, had its inside, outside game working to perfection.

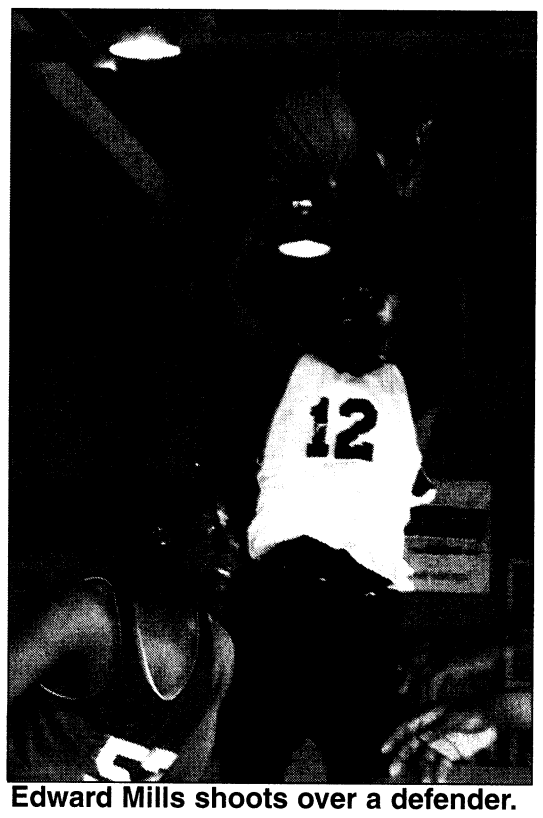
"We have a good combination of big men and guards," said Outlaw Adrian Lewis, the tournament's most valuable player. "Every time they focused on guarding our perimeter shooters, we went inside, and, when they keyed on the inside, we popped it out for the three."

Then adversity struck. The 2nd Bn., 49th Inf. Regt. Rock Force gradually chipped away at the lead, and, with 41 seconds remaining, coach Timothy Edwards went downtown to cut the score to 59-57.

The Rock Force immediately fouled and stopped the Outlaws from running out the clock. However, the referees said it was intentional, which meant the Outlaws would shoot two foul shots and receive the ball back. The Rock Force became irate, and a verbal attack on the referees resulted in a technical foul.

Outlaw coach Thelonious McLean-Burnell hit three of the four resulting free throws to extend the lead to 62-57. However, he missed two after another quick foul by the Rock Force.

Edwards then came up big again with his fourth 3-pointer of the game. His team tried to stop the clock with another foul but to no avail. McLean-Burnell took advantage of the Rock Force's over pursuit of the foul and nailed the door shut with an easy lay up with 14 seconds left.



The 64-60 victory was the most challenging game the Outlaws played, Lewis said.

"We could have played better as a team in the second half," Lewis said. "But when things got tough, we didn't quit," he said. "We came together as a unit and had the determination to win at all costs."

After a slow start plagued by turnovers and the inability to box out, the Rock Force came together, too, in the second half and spread the ball around well.

The Rock Force's Edward Mills knocked down four 3-pointers and led all scorers with 19 points. Edwards finished with 14 and Vincent Jones scored 9.

Lewis and Adrian Fleming combined for 29 Outlaw points, 15 of which came via the three. Big man Edward Thomas pounded in 11.

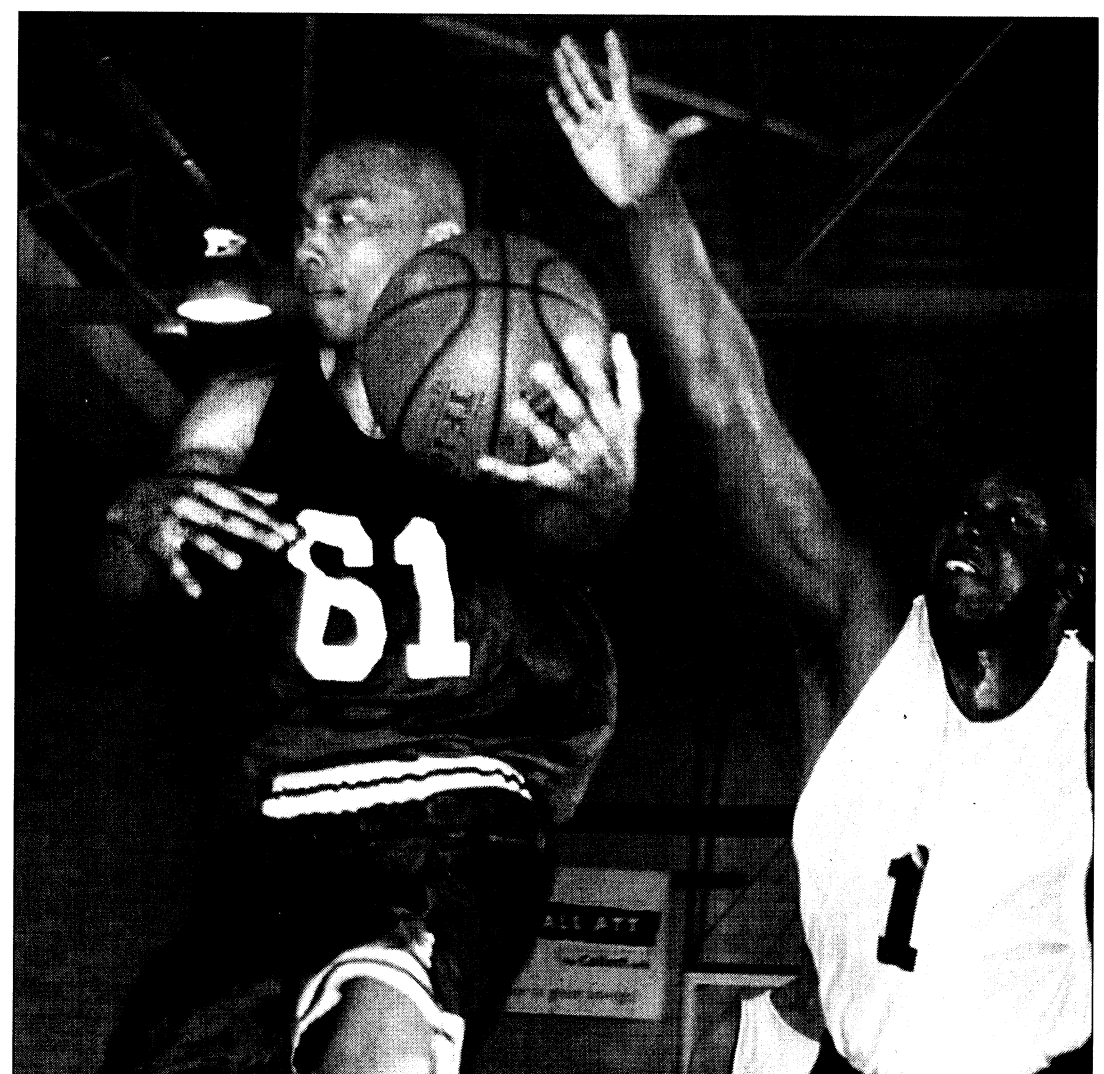
The game prepared the Outlaws for the intramural basketball regular season that starts Monday, McLean-Burnell said.

"We claimed our rightful place at the top," he said. "If any team had a question about who we are, we answered it today. Our challenge to the rest of the teams on post is to put it all out on the court — no more talk. They're going to have to come through us."

The coach's team has won four of the last six post tournaments.

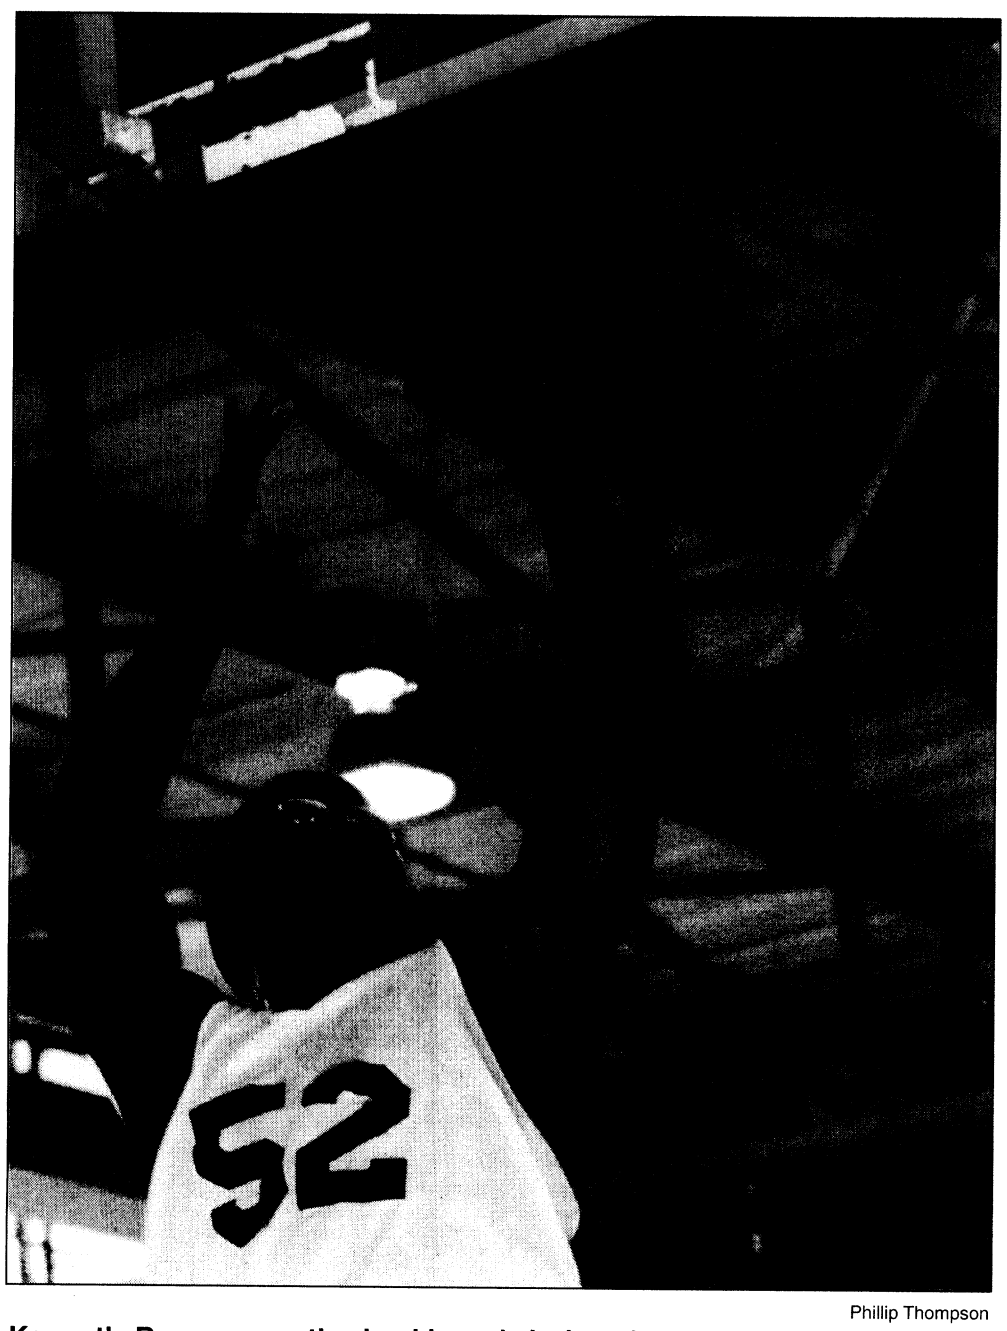


"You need teamwork and leadership to win championships," the coach said. "We got lackadaisical in the second half, but that's when true leadership comes into play. We know each other's strengths and weaknesses and can go to someone and address problems before they snowball."

The ability to comfortably approach teammates helped the Outlaws fend off the Rock Force's rally, he said.

The bond and good times the men share transcend the basketball court and, ultimately, help the mission of the battalion, McLean-Burnell said.

"(Basketball) is another professional extension of the unit," the coach said. "Each one of us works hard in different places around post, and it's good to come together and do something positive for the battalion."



The resulting cohesion and esprit de corps is the beauty of all sports, he said.

Outlaws defeat Bandits

Aggressive rebounding beats Bandits

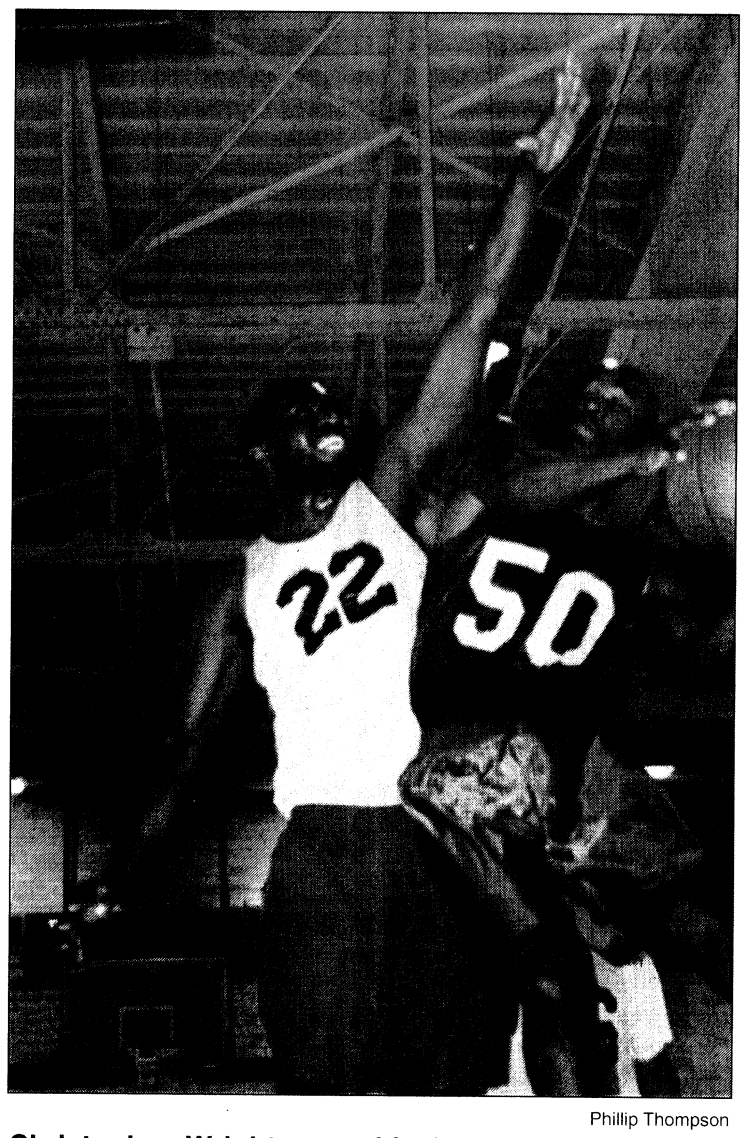
The Outlaws from 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, pulled off a come from behind victory, 56-41, over the Bandits from B Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., at the post Martin Luther King Jr. tournament Sunday at Briant Wells Field House.

"We are used to playing these kind of games," said Outlaw Adrian Fleming. "We've been doing this all year."

That was the case Sunday when the Outlaws went to the half trailing, 25-19.



The second half was totally different.

The Outlaws showed poise to overcome the deficit. They controlled the tempo and unleashed a barrage of rock 'em, sock 'em fast breaks.

Eventually they wore out the Bandits by spreading their defense around the court and keeping their opponents running back and fourth.

"That shows how we play," Outlaw Adrian Lewis said. "We showed endurance wins games, not pretty looking shots."

With 6:15 on the clock, the Outlaws took the lead, 40-39, and went on a 16-2 run to win the single-elimination game.

"I was really proud the team didn't give up," Outlaw Thomas Tucker said. "You could tell the other team wasn't ready for this kind of game at the end. They just started to give up and fade away like a fart in the wind."

The Outlaws had a fun time and were eager for the rest of the tournament, he said.

"We played our kind of basketball — fast paced, rough, no mercy kind of ball," Fleming said.

I found buried treasure in my attic.

More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you some Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. You were looking for old records when you found an unexpected treasure... those old Series E Savings Bonds. And even though your old bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value. So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US-BOND or write to Savings Bonds, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. Old Savings Bonds. They're a treasure worth digging for.

988th deploys to Guantanamo Bay

MPs to join operations at Camp X-Ray

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Nearly 80 soldiers from the 988th Military Police Company arrived in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba last week.

"We can say where they're going, but not what they'll be doing once they get there," said Col. G.T. Myers, Fort Benning's provost marshal, as a plane carrying the troops taxied the runway at Lawson Army Airfield Jan. 24. "They're going to be there until the job's finished or until they're replaced."

More than 150 al Qaeda, Taliban and other detainees from Afghanistan are now being guarded by military police units at Camp X-Ray, and that number was expected to increase by the time the 988th arrived in Cuba.

Donald Rumsfeld, secretary of defense, quelled any notion that detainees were being treated inhumanely.

"The allegations that the men and women in the U.S. armed forces are somehow not properly treating the detainees under their charge are just plain false," Rumsfeld told reporters Jan. 23.

Soldiers say they are prepared for the challenges ahead.

"I'm ready," said Sgt. Robert Eastman. "The biggest thing right now is getting my soldiers in line so they'll be ready to react."

Deploying in support of his country is nothing new to Eastman. He has served in Panama, and twice in Bosnia and Croatia. He once

Army to realign headquarters

Average soldier won't see any difference

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The Army will change the way it manages money Oct. 1.

Secretary of the Army Thomas E. White announced the change during a Pentagon press conference.

Instead of being channeled through major commands, moneys for the running of installations will come straight from the Pentagon.

White said the purpose behind the change is to standardize the amount of money each installation receives, and to allow MACOMs to focus on their primary missions.

"The average soldier, the average family will not see any deviation in the level of support they are receiving," said Garrison Commander Col. Joe Torres. "If anything, what we hope this does is improve what they see right now. What will be different is some of the management functions and administrative type activities that are done at the staff level; but those will be invisible to almost everybody on the installation."

The way money is distributed and accounted for are the areas that will be affected.

"If you take a look at what we have now," Chuck Walls, garrison manager, said, "An installation commander has the ability to take dollars that are intended for any number of things on the installation and use those as he feels appropriate. They can be used to either support training, or for infrastructure, like improving roads or barracks.

"He (the post commander) is the overall decider of how all those monies will be used on an

Soldiers injured in training

Hand lost, burns suffered by infantrymen

A Fort Benning soldier lost his hand in a training accident on Malone Range Jan. 24.

Sgt. Roger Keith Boaz's right hand was severed while conducting misfire procedures, after a 120 mm round failed to fire during a training exercise. The 23-year-old D Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment soldier also suffered perforated eardrums and gunpowder burns on his upper body.

Another soldier, Staff Sgt. Ricky Johnson, 37, also of D Co., suffered lacerations and a perforated right eardrum. Johnson was assisting Boaz at the time of the accident.

Preliminary reports indicate the soldiers were using correct misfire procedures with the weapon on "safe." The round slipped back down the tube and fired. As the round exited the mortar tube, it struck Boaz and shattered his hand.

Both soldiers were air medevaced to the Columbus Regional Medical Center, where Boaz remains in stable condition.

Johnson was released from the hospital Sunday and is expected to make a complete recovery, said Capt. Brian Schmanski, the battalion's personnel officer.

Purple Heart awarded 34 years late

Lost paperwork caused lengthy, upsetting delay

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Retired Sgt. 1st Class John L. Wright received his Purple Heart Jan. 25 in front of Infantry Hall, nearly 34 years after earning it.

Wright was assigned to the Military Assistance Command Vietnam as an infantryman.

While he was near the city of Duc-Hoa, Vietnam, his unit came under attack in July 1968.

"I was posting guard on our perimeter, when they suddenly started firing rounds at us," Wright said. "I was hit in the left hip by fragments from a rocket propelled grenade. I didn't go to a hospital. They just cleaned out the wound and bandaged me up. Then, I went back out on duty."

After some time, a doctor discovered the fragments were still in his leg. They still are to this day.

His records were lost somewhere along the line and caused the long delay in receiving the Purple Heart.

"I didn't feel too good about it," Wright said. "I was upset about being passed over. It was definitely worth the wait."

Wright medically retired from the Army in 1983, after serving 21 years, due to complications from his injuries and other problems.

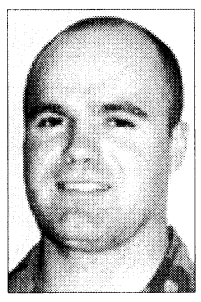
"I would like to add I really enjoyed my military career," Wright said.

He finally received the Purple Heart Decoration at the Command Awards Ceremony.

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, post commanding general, presented Wright the Purple Heart in front of the gathered crowd, which included congressman Mac Collins, (D) 3rd District of Georgia and Wright's 33 personal guests made up of friends, family and former platoon members.

"This is long overdue recognition for a man who was fighting over in Vietnam when I first swore an oath to serve in the Army," Eaton said.

Wright offered this advice to young soldiers.



"Never give up," Wright said. "Just hold on."

commentary

What a bizarre and unpredictable National Football League season this year!

Fans in Cleveland disgraced themselves by throwing bottles out on the field.

Most of them were empty, if you catch my drift.

San Diego led the American Football Conference West through the beginning quarter of the season and fell to the bottom of the pack by season's end.

The Chicago Bears defense lead them to a first-round bye in the playoffs, and the Raiders lost because of a rule change that took away the referee's ability to make on-the-spot judgment calls.

The Pittsburgh Steelers re-emerged and rode the whole season on the back of Kordell Stewart.

Last year, the fans didn't even want him around. They booed him for the past three seasons and when he finally had the opportunity to lead his team to the promised land, he threw the ball like Neil O'Donnell did in the Steelers' last Super bowl appearance.

Who would have thought New England would have won the AFC with quarterback Tom Brady?

They came back from a 10-point deficit to miraculously beat the Raiders. They scored two touchdowns on special teams against the Steelers and seemingly had everything go their way.

What's even more amazing is Drew Bledsoe is the Patriots' backup quarterback.

The Patriots certainly deserve to play St. Louis in the Super bowl.

St. Louis is about the only prediction sports magazines correctly made.

They are so stacked offensively, it would be hard not to pick them as a Super Bowl team.

Not only do they have the league's best running back in Marshall Faulk, but they have the league's most valuable player in Kurt Warner.

Since this season has been so unpredictable, I'm going to go out on a limb and predict the Patriots will win the Super bowl.

Why? Because I'm a Raiders fan, which makes me an AFC fan. Not only that, but if the Patriots win the Super bowl, it would be a fitting end to a year of patriotism.

One tooth lost, lesson learned

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

At the first sign of a wiggle, my 6-year-old was ecstatic at the prospect of losing her first tooth. It seemed as though every child she knew was missing at least one or two, and she couldn't wait for her turn.

"All I want for Christmas is to lose my two front teeth," she sang.

So last week, while sitting in a warm bath, she poked and prodded at the most likely candidate, one of two loose bottom teeth, until it seemed it was about to give.

She pushed, pulled, wiggled, and jiggled. She twisted and wriggled that thing and finally performed the tongue under tooth test. According to her dad, a tooth is not ready to come out until you can touch the bottom of it with your tongue.

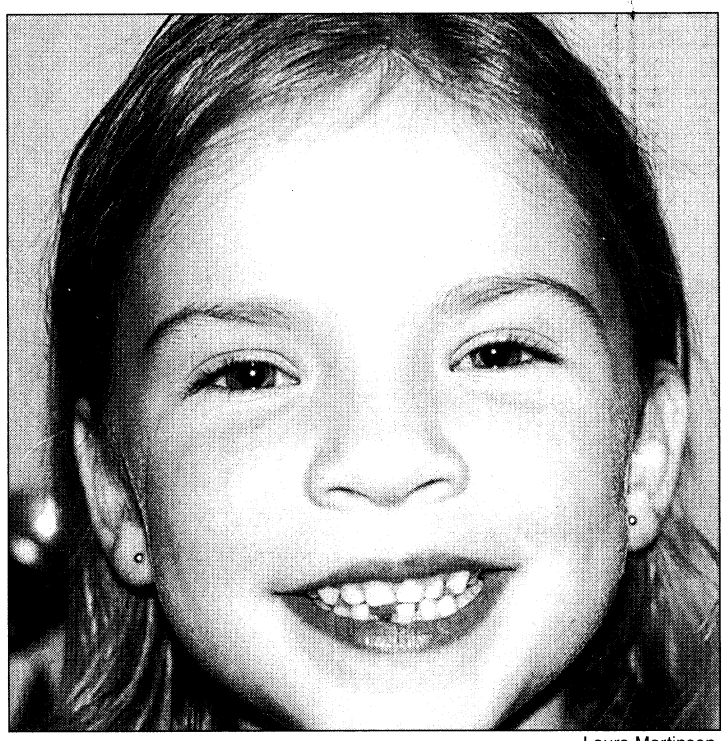
Although she said she wasn't getting out of the tub until she had one less tooth, I finally convinced her to get out, get dressed and let an apple finish the job.

After a few bites, it was time. She couldn't bear to pull it herself, so she asked me to give it the final yank. I figured there might be a little bleeding, so we headed to the sink for the final showdown.

One last tug, and there it was, between my fingers. But not for long. That slippery little sucker jumped right for the drain, and I frantically tried to pull the stopper and retrieve it, but to no avail.

Of course, even a lost tooth in my house must be surrounded by some added melodrama.

My babe stood crying, not because of the pain, but because the coveted tooth went down the drain. All she wanted was to lose that first baby tooth, but I don't think this was the type of loss she was hoping for.



My husband rushed in with salt water for her to gargle, and stared at me in disbelief, asking why I hadn't closed the drain in advance.

Well, isn't hindsight 20-20? My response was as rational as could be expected in that situation.

"Thanks for your support! I feel bad enough as it is!"

After all, the only teeth I had ever lost before were my own, and back then, it wasn't my job to worry about where they landed!

So, as I made a promise to my daughter to get that tooth back, I examined the pipes beneath the sink, and knowing the limits of my plumbing skills, I soon gave up hope. I was just imagining DFEL's response to a request for an emergency tooth retrieval, when something on the side of the drain pipe caught my eye.

Laura Martinson

Kaitlynn Martinson, one tooth down, 12 to go.

Could it be?

Right there, nestled comfortably, miraculously, in a little groove an inch down the pipe, was the tooth.

I tried first with my finger, but realized I only had one final chance to get it back without dropping it into the murky abyss below. I got the tweezers from the other bathroom and took a few practice shots before raising it from the pipe and making my daughter happy once more.

As they say, all's well that ends well. I reclaimed hero status in my daughter's eyes, and found a soft velour pouch to put the prized tooth in. As my husband and I tucked her into bed later that night, I asked what she thought the tooth fairy would bring. She said the tooth fairy would probably bring her three quarters.

Her prediction was right, and she awoke to a pouch with 75 cents in it and a missing tooth. She later informed me that three quarters is what everyone who loses a tooth gets.

Well, we both lost a tooth that night, but, for 75 cents, I got something far different, a hard learned lesson in parenting — pull the plug before you pull the tooth.

Considering the circumstances, I got off cheap!

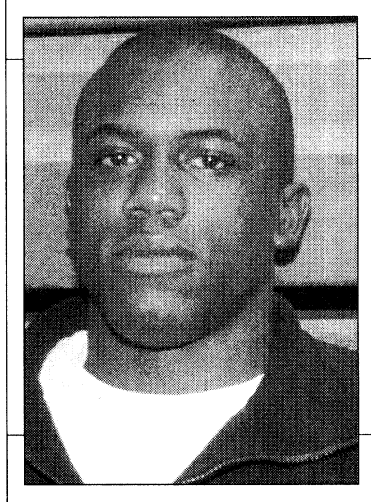
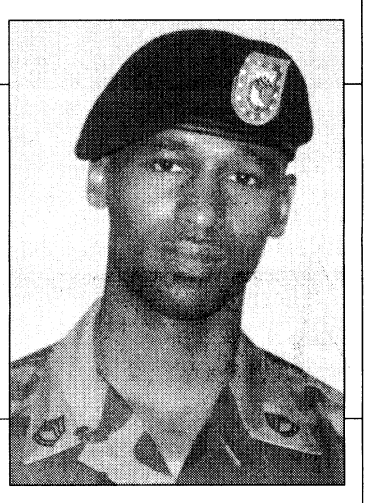
VARIOUS VOICES



Who's your pick for the Super Bowl and why?



Jim Armstrong, retiree — "St. Louis, because they're a dome team, and they're playing the Super Bowl on astroturf. They've been there before, and they know how to win."

Sgt. 1st Class Willie Harris, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "St. Louis, because they are the best of the best."

Spc. Dexter Henderson, 1st Battalion, 10th Infantry Regiment — "St. Louis, because New England is to much of an underdog. They aren't ready to be in the Super Bowl yet."

Sgt. 1st Class Demico Loper, 36th Engineer Group — "New England is going to win because they haven't been there in so long. They're young and hungry. St. Louis' defense saved them."

Natalie Woods, family member — "Rams are going to win because they are from St. Louis, and that's in the show me state."

Gwen Pleban, administrative assistant — "The Rams. I'm from Missouri, and it's an unwritten rule to root for St. Louis or Kansas City."

Airborne!

An Airborne student leaves the plane Monday above Fryar Drop Zone.

Pvt. Tae Lee, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, prepares for landing after his first jump with B Company Monday at Fryar Drop Zone.
"It felt a little queasy at first because I don't fly much," Lee said. "But after you jump, that's it. It was awesome — very peaceful coming down."
The jump seemed heady to many other soldiers, too. There were many "hooahs!" and other screams of excitement as soldiers dropped to the Alabama red clay.
Lee said he learned from the experience and hopes he'll perform better, especially on the landing, next time he jumps.

again said goodbye to his wife, Bianca, Saturday night.

"I'm not afraid. We're well trained, and that's what it comes down to," Eastman said.

Beverly and T.C. Hamby watched their son, Pfc. Raymond Williams, go through the U.S. Customs Service training Jan. 23. The training focused on prisoner escort techniques.

"I'm worried because he's 21 and he's my baby, but he's tough. He can handle it," Beverly said. "This is one of the hardest jobs in the country right now. I feel proud, because he is part of a noble cause."

Williams has been in the Army for two years, and returned from a six-month tour in Saudi Arabia just five days before the Sept. 11 attacks.

"We've been watching the news since we heard he was leaving. It makes you tense, when that's all you can see," T.C. said. "It's nerve racking, but we don't want anything like 9-11 to happen again. These people need to be controlled, and that is what we're doing. I think we're doing a good job, and I think they're going to learn that we, as a country, won't back down."

The MPs took the time to advance one of their own before leaving. Sgt. Theodore Taylor was promoted to staff sergeant Saturday night in the company of family and fellow MPs. After his new rank was pinned on, Taylor credited God, his family, and the men and women he works with for his accomplishment.

Two platoons and a headquarters company from the 988th will join two other MP units in Cuba, the 401st Military Police Co. from Fort Hood, Texas, and B Co., 1st Battalion, 2nd Marine Regiment, from Camp Lejeune, N.C. The three units make up Joint Task Force-160.

1st Sgt. Joseph Vitale, 988th, said his soldiers will align with the other MP units in support of operations at Camp X-Ray.

The uproar over the 158 detainees held at the U.S. naval base culminated last weekend with media reports that Secretary of State Colin Powell had asked President George Bush to reconsider a decision not to classify them as prisoners of war.

Rumsfeld, who recently got a firsthand view of the camp, dismissed the suggestion.

"They are not POWs; they will not be determined to be POWs," he told journalists.

Human rights groups and foreign politicians, including some of Washington's allies, criticized the United States for refusing to designate the men as prisoners of war, according to a Jan. 25 report by Reuters.

The designation would give the prisoners certain rights under the Geneva Convention.

But Rumsfeld assured reporters the detainees' needs are being met.

The detainees have warm showers, toiletries, water, clean clothes, and blankets.

They have regular, culturally appropriate meals, prayer mats, and the right to practice their religion.

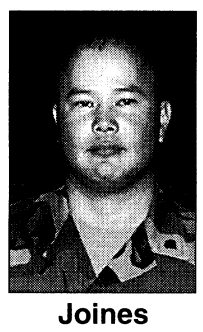
"They are being provided modern medical attention far beyond anything they could have expected in Afghanistan," Rumsfeld said.

Military guards at Camp X-Ray reported Saturday that the detainees may be plotting within the camp. Guards say they've noticed a command structure emerging among the terrorist suspects being held at the camp, and the leaders seem to emerge at prayer sessions. Prayer sessions are allowed five times daily.

Post recognizes stand-out soldiers

Soldier, NCO of Quarter named Jan. 25

Pfc. Brian Trapp



Bayonet staff

Post officials named the soldier and NCO of the first quarter at the Main NCO Club Jan. 25.

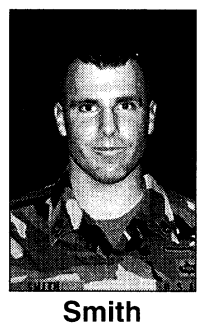
Command Sgt. Maj. Miles Retherford was the guest speaker for the ceremony.

"It's very important to recognize soldiers and NCOs," Retherford said. "We're developing the next generation of leaders."

Spc. Sakon Joines, a motor vehicle operator with the 104th Transportation Company, was named the Soldier of the Quarter.

Joines

"My initiative set me apart," Joines said.



"I volunteered to go to the board instead of waiting to be picked," he said. " You have to step up when the opportunity arises."

Joines said his platoon helped him prepare for the board.

"He is an outstanding soldier and represents all of the Army values to the fullest," said Staff Sgt. Ronnie Davis, Joines' squad leader.

"It's an excellent accomplishment for him," Davis said. "He set his goal and achieved it."

Joines' initiative and the way he presented himself set him apart, said Sgt. Kevin Shepherd, Joines' team leader.

Smith

"When I first met him, I knew he would excel," Shepherd said.

Staff Sgt. Greg Smith, a ranger instructor with the 6th Ranger Training Brigade, was named NCO of the Quarter.

"Every candidate had their strengths, but I was confident and assertive at the board," Smith said.

"The help and guidance from my NCOs set me apart," Smith said.

"He has a great work ethic and is a fine NCO," said Sgt. 1st Class Eric Bradely, Smith's team leader. "I wish I had 10 more like him. He's a credit to NCOs and excellent selection for NCO of the Quarter."

Realignment: Same support installation," Walls said.

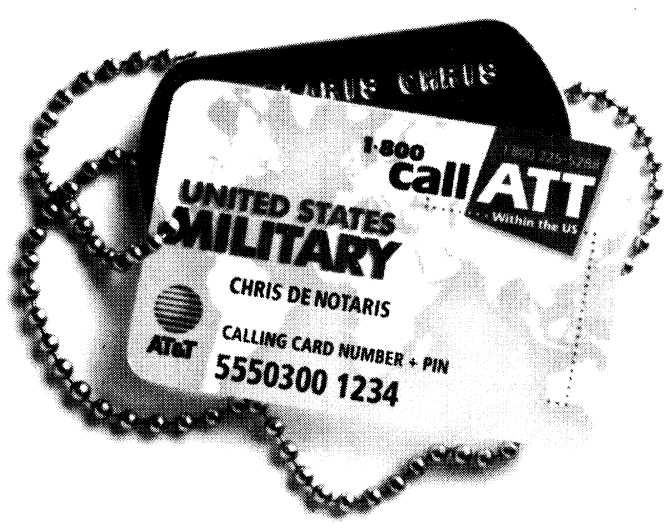
The restructuring is a way to keep track of how money from the Pentagon is being used.

"Because of diminishing dollars, compounded by aging infrastructure over the last 10-15 years, the Secretary of the Army has decided to get a better accounting of the money he has allocated out," Walls said.



Torres said the new organization will balance out installations in terms of available money.

"You won't have the have and the have nots," Torres said. "It won't be dependent on what type of mission you have."

The way business is conducted on Fort Benning will be slightly different, but the finished product will remain the same.

"I don't see any big change in our day to day operations and the way we do business," Torres said.

"People are still going to get the support they expect and they need."

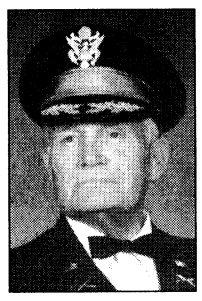
Soldier's passing marks the end of an era

Regiment says goodbye to one of their finest



Sgt. Bjiourn Bugayong
29th Infantry Regiment

Recently the 29th Infantry Regiment suffered the loss of their honorary commander, retired Col. John Cecil Hughes.

Hughes, 79, of Herrin, Ill., passed away Jan. 20, at the Veterans Affairs Hospital in Boulder, Colo.

Until late September, when he became ill, Hughes remained active in the 29th Infantry Regiment Association and a fixture at the unit's functions.

"He was, and still is, a source of pride for soldiers. They were attracted to him as a leader and a person," said Lt. Col. Arthur Tulak, 29th Regiment deputy commander.

Hughes

Through the support and admiration of his peers, Hughes was selected Sept. 23, 1996, as the honorary colonel of the regiment.

Tulak described the combat veteran of three wars as a humorous, outgoing and personable man armed with stories, frightening or funny, he would share with soldiers and their families.

He said, when Hughes was a commander in the Korean War, his soldiers called him "Corn Cob 6" because he smoked a corn cob pipe. It is only suitable that the colonel was buried with his pipe.

Hughes entered military service Oct. 19, 1942, as an enlisted infantryman. He was later commissioned as a second lieutenant in the infantry Oct. 23, 1943.

Then Sgt. Frank C. Plass first met then Lt. Hughes in Okinawa and served with him in Korea as part of the 29th Inf. Regt. from 1949 to 1950. After Hughes was promoted to captain and became commander of B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Inf. Regt., Plass sustained an injury and left the unit to recover.

Until Hughes' death, Plass again served alongside his old friend. Plass is the honorary sergeant major of the regiment.

"He is like a brother to me. He was an honest, giving man who loved his troops," Plass said.

Even while receiving enemy fire, Plass said, the commander would not stay at the command post.

"He would jump from foxhole to foxhole, acting as a radio operator and making sure his men did not need anything," Plass said.

Plass echoed the voices of past and present 29th Inf. Regt. soldiers by saying Hughes was an outstanding leader and soldiers would follow him "... to hell and back."

"As soldiers, we did not have to worry if he knew what he was doing. He was a leader," Plass said.

During his service, Hughes saw combat in World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War. He received many awards including two Distinguished Service Crosses, three Silver Stars, a Purple Heart with four oak leaf clusters and other numerous awards for heroic actions and meritorious service against an armed enemy of the U.S. during military operations of World War II, the Korean War, and the Vietnam War.

But it was the 29th Inf. Regt. where Hughes stabled his heart.

"He lived, breathed and slept the 29th Regiment," Tulak said. "He shared that enthusiasm with the soldiers."

Command Sgt. Maj. Anthony Johnson, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., praised the devotion Hughes gave to the unit.

"He was an inspiration to our soldiers, and I am proud to have had the good fortune to have known the man — a veteran from the greatest generation, as our honorary commander," Johnson said.

Capt. Robert S. Whittinham, battalion personnel officer, said Hughes will be deeply missed by the soldiers and families of the 29th Inf. Regt.

Funeral services were held in Hughes' hometown of Herrin, Jan. 25. Col. Gordon Mereness, 29th Inf. Regt. commander, Plass, Chaplain (Capt.) Shawn Connors, the regiment's chaplain and soldiers from the 29th Inf. Regt. attended the service and provided full military honors.

Plass said he had never before witnessed a whole community coming together to pay their last respects to one man.

"There were flags on every corner. People stood along the streets as he passed by," Plass said. "I knew he was a leader before he arrived in Korea. He was a hero when he came home.

71st MP Detachment earns top honors at ceremony

MP detachment named Stem award winner

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The 71st MP Detachment was named the recipient of the annual Brig. Gen. David H. Stem Memorial Award Jan. 10 for the best company-sized military police unit in the Training and Doctrine Command for 2001.

"I think it's a great honor," said Capt. Beth Diaz, detachment commander. "This just confirms what I had believed was true all along.

"We were set apart by our everyday law enforcement and the amount of training we've done," Diaz said.

Every military police soldier receives annual training on selected areas to include blood-borne pathogens awareness, first aid and first responder certification, field sobriety and certification for the Intoxilyzer 5000.

"It's a huge award for them to win for how long they have been activated," said Maj. William J. Hoy, executive officer for the directorate of safety.

The 71st MP Det. was activated as a deployable asset in June 2000 as support for Fort Benning's provost marshal

The 71st MP Det. helped in the police force during the SOA Watch demonstration against Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. Last year, more than 10,000 protesters demonstrated at Fort Benning's front gate.

During the last 45 days of each year where they increase the number of patrols on the road to catch DUI violators, they apprehended 71 DUIs.

The detachment also has encouraged all eligible personnel to enroll in Fort Benning's eArmyU program.

More than three-quarters of the unit took advantage of the program.

Soldiers need to update DEERS

Current data needed to keep care flowing

Army Community Services

Did you know that you or a family member could lose medical benefits if you do not update your information on the Defense Eligibility Enrollment Reporting System?

DEERS stores medical benefit data for military personnel, retirees, and eligible family members. Service members and retirees are the sponsors for their family members' medical benefits and are responsible for the accuracy of the DEERS information. Correct, up-to-date DEERS information is essential, since this data defines your medical benefits.

When an eligible family member receives a uniformed services identification and privilege card, or ID card, that information is deposited in DEERS.

However, the sponsor must ensure the information is correct. If you marry or re-marry, move, have a new baby, have an older child who becomes an adult, you must make sure that DEERS data reflects those changes, as well as any others.

If you marry but neglect to register your spouse in DEERS, that person is not eligible for medical benefits until the sponsor updates the information.

If you move but don't submit the current address of each family member to DEERS, your family may not receive essential messages regarding medical benefits, such as information about the mail-order pharmacy.

If you forget to register a newborn in DEERS, after 365 days, the child is not eligible for medical benefits until you complete the registration in DEERS. In addition, newborns can lose eligibility for Tricare Prime medical coverage after 120 days. In this case, you must enroll the child in Tricare Prime, as well as register the child in DEERS.

How to Update DEERS

Making changes to DEERS is easy to do. You can make changes through your military support office, the same office that assists you with your ID card.

If you are making changes, it's a good idea to take documentation with you, such as a marriage certificate or birth certificate.

You can locate your nearest military support office at RAPIDS Site Locator http://www.dmdc.osd.mil/rsl/ on the Web. To make address changes or to verify data, log on to the Defense Manpower Data Center https://www.dmdc.osd.mil/swg/owa/webguard.login?appl=9012&rule=02.

Local bell replicates original

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

On Market Street in Philadelphia, the same street that echoed the weighty footfalls of Benjamin Franklin and George Washington, resides the Liberty Bell. Part of the inscription at the top of this icon of independence tells the mission of the bell itself — to "proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."

When the steeple work of the newly constructed Independence Hall was completed in early 1751, a bell was hung in the new tower. Unfortunately, it could not be heard throughout all parts of Philadelphia.

So the Liberty Bell was ordered for purchase by the Pennsylvania Assembly in 1751 to be hung in its place. The Assembly requested their London agent, Robert Charles, to purchase "a good bell of about two thousand pounds weight."

Charles commissioned the Whitechapel Bell Foundry in London to cast the bell. It arrived in America in late August 1752, nearly one year later.

The new bell was set up in Independence Square to be tested prior to being hung. But to much dismay, the bell cracked on its very first test.

Philadelphia founders, John Pass and John Stow, were commissioned to recast the bell and strengthen its composition. The original bell was broken down and recast with additional metals added to it.

In March 1753, the newly recast bell was tested and hung in the tower of the State House. But when unsatisfied Philadelphians did not like the sound of the new bell, Pass and Stow completed a second recasting in June 1753.

The new bell was still of questionable sound in some minds. However, it was deemed acceptable, and it is the one that eventually became known as the Liberty Bell.

When the Liberty Bell, as we know it today, cracked is a much debated story, and one with many renditions. There is no document that definitely dates when the Liberty Bell cracked, but historians believe it was sometime between 1817 and 1846.

Several claims have been made as to when the damage was done. One report states the bell cracked while sounding for a fire, yet another stated it cracked when it was rung to announce the passage of the Catholic Emancipation Act of 1828 in Britain.

Perhaps the most popular and widely accepted story is that the bell cracked when being rung on Washington's birthday, Feb. 22, 1846.

The Liberty Bell was tolled for many historical events. It was rung upon the ratification of the Constitution, at presidential inaugurations, on D-Day, and during America's bicentennial celebration.

Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum, said bells were often used during Civil War times to make announcements for events such as funerals, celebrations, an attack on a city, and to indicate war had been declared or ended. In fact, local church bells were rung to warn the city of Columbus of the oncoming attack of Wilson and his raiders April 16, 1865.

The museum houses one such bell, cast in New York in 1860. The full history of this particular bell is unknown, but it was acquired through the museum at Fort Meade, Md. Each year the bell is wheeled outside of the museum where Fort Benning students take turns ringing it in honor of the signing of the Constitution.

"Bells Across America is a way to ring in the anniversary of the Constitution and our way of honoring the document that governs us," Hanner said.

In the belfry of the Infantry Center Chapel is the Liberty Carillon, presented to Fort Benning by Harvey Firestone Jr. A carillon is a set of fixed bells. In early times, the set usually consisted of four. Each bell is tuned to harmonize with the others. The inaugural playing of the carillon was during the Victory Day celebration Aug. 14, 1946.

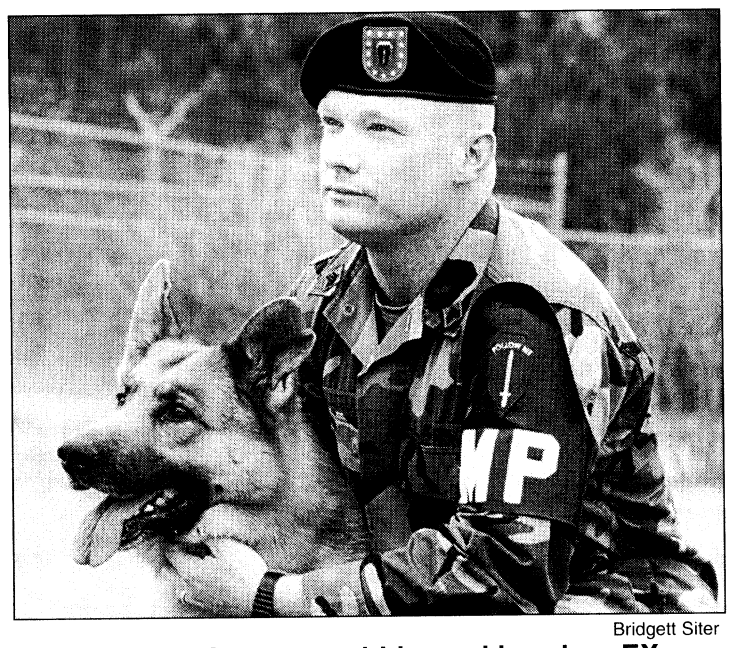
"The carillon has been playing at services from the end of WWII through Korea, Vietnam, Panama, and now while we have troops in Afghanistan," Hanner said. "It is a symbol of our freedom to worship as we please, or not to if we don't want to."

In 1950, the Department of the Treasury and several private companies commissioned a foundry in Annecy-le-Vieux, France, to cast 54 full size replicas of the Liberty Bell. The bells were intended as gifts to each state, U.S. territory and the District of Columbia to be displayed and rung on special occasions.

But what many may not know is that Columbus is the home of Georgia's Liberty Bell replica. The bell is nestled in a riverfront gazebo in downtown Columbus.

"The bell demonstrates the difference between our society and other countries and the progress we have made," Hanner said added. "You can try to be anything you want to be in America."

look CLOSER look look



■ On April 1, 1996, a full-page Taco Bell advertisement appeared in The New York Times announcing that Taco Bell had purchased the Liberty Bell in an effort to help reduce the national debt. The fast-food chain stated that they were renaming the Bell to the "Taco Liberty Bell." It is not surprising that many citizens found the hoax to be in bad taste.

■ Recognizable as the theme music for the Monty Python Show, the Liberty Bell March was written by John Philip Sousa for the Liberty Bell's visit to the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893.

■ The Bell weighs 2,080 pounds. The circumference around the bottom is 12 feet and around the top is 7 feet 6 inches. The yoke weighs 200 pounds.

■ The Liberty Bell is owned by the City of Philadelphia — not the National Park Service.

■ On April 6, 2001, a hammer-wielding tourist attacked the Liberty Bell with a hand-held sledgehammer. The attack caused only superficial damage, which was immediately repaired.

A Fort Benning soldier and his dog will attend the Super Bowl Sunday.

Sgt. Matthew Slusser, an MP with the 209th Military Detachment, and his working dog, EX, are tasked to help with security at the Super Bowl in New Orleans.

EX, a 6-year-old German Shepherd, is an explosives detector and patrol dog. The two will be checking bags and equipment entering the Superdome.

"We're there to work," said Slusser, who's handled EX for nearly two years. I probably won't get to see much of the game. But that's OK, I'm a Steelers fan."

This is the biggest event the team has participated in, Slusser said, though they're frequently tasked to patrol post and provide security at various events. They work together every day to hone their skills.

"It's not a five-days-a-week kind of job. We're together a lot," Slusser said. "Are we best friends? Gosh, yes. When we travel together, he gets the bed."

Slusser has been a dog handler for 13 years and has teamed with six dogs. He said he's never gotten accustomed to saying good-bye.

"You just have to do it. I guess it's like making any friend in the military," said Slusser, who expects to work with EX for two more years. "It's hard to say good-bye, but when the Army says go, you go."

For now, the Army says go to the Super Bowl, and neither is complaining.

63rd Engineers bring down Catholic Chapel

Old building conjures up old memories

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

For our light and momentary troubles are achieving for us an eternal glory that far outweighs them all. So we fix our eyes not on what is seen, but on what is unseen. For what is seen is temporary, but what is unseen is eternal. — II Corinthians 4:17.

Oswaldo Maxwell celebrated mass at the Post Catholic Chapel when he lived here with his family from 1987-1990.

Today, the 63rd Engineer Company second lieutenant is the officer in charge of the demolition of the chapel's burnt remains.

"(The chapel) meant a great deal to a lot of people," Maxwell said. "It hurts to see it like this."

Tearing down the church may be even more emotional for him.

"I have many fond memories and can relate to why it's high on the list of priorities the post has to accomplish," he said. "I remember when I came with a friend of mine and brought in the new year here. It was a special time for a 13-year-old."

Still, there is a mission to accomplish.

"It's a big task, but I'm confident we're up to the challenge," Maxwell said.

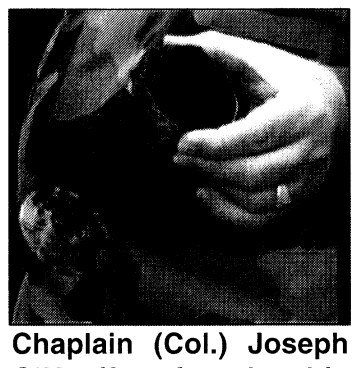
The company always performs superbly and saves the post many dollars in the process, said Glen Todd, chief, Work Coordination Section at the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"Their proven track record shows the professional standard by which they operate," Todd said.

There are three phases to the chapel demolition. The engineers removed everything above the chapel floor, but will have a contractor remove the floor because it is made of asbestos, and will remove the foundation of the church.

"Because we're working in a sacred place, there's a feeling of reverence," said 1st Lt. Darren Fraser, executive officer of the company. "We take particular pride in this project because it allows us to contribute to the religious community and the overall quality of life at Fort Benning."

As with all the missions the soldiers do for the post, it is mutually beneficial.



"It's an excellent opportunity for soldiers of the 63rd to work outside of their MOS (military occupational speciality) and learn new ways to use their equipment," Fraser said.

The company's mission is horizontal construction, which makes demolishing a vertical structure challenging, he said. The time soldiers spend using cranes, bucket loaders, bulldozers and other equipment in uncharted environments will help the soldiers combat readiness.

"We're trained, motivated and ready to do the mission," said Staff Sgt. Leon Williams, section sergeant and NCOIC of the chapel project. "In fact, the 63rd and entire 36th Engineer Group are here to do whatever the post needs us to do. We are skilled to build."

He said his soldiers are glad to have the chance to help the church.

"We want to show the Catholic community that someone cares," Williams said. "If we clear this place for them, it may pave the way for another place of worship."

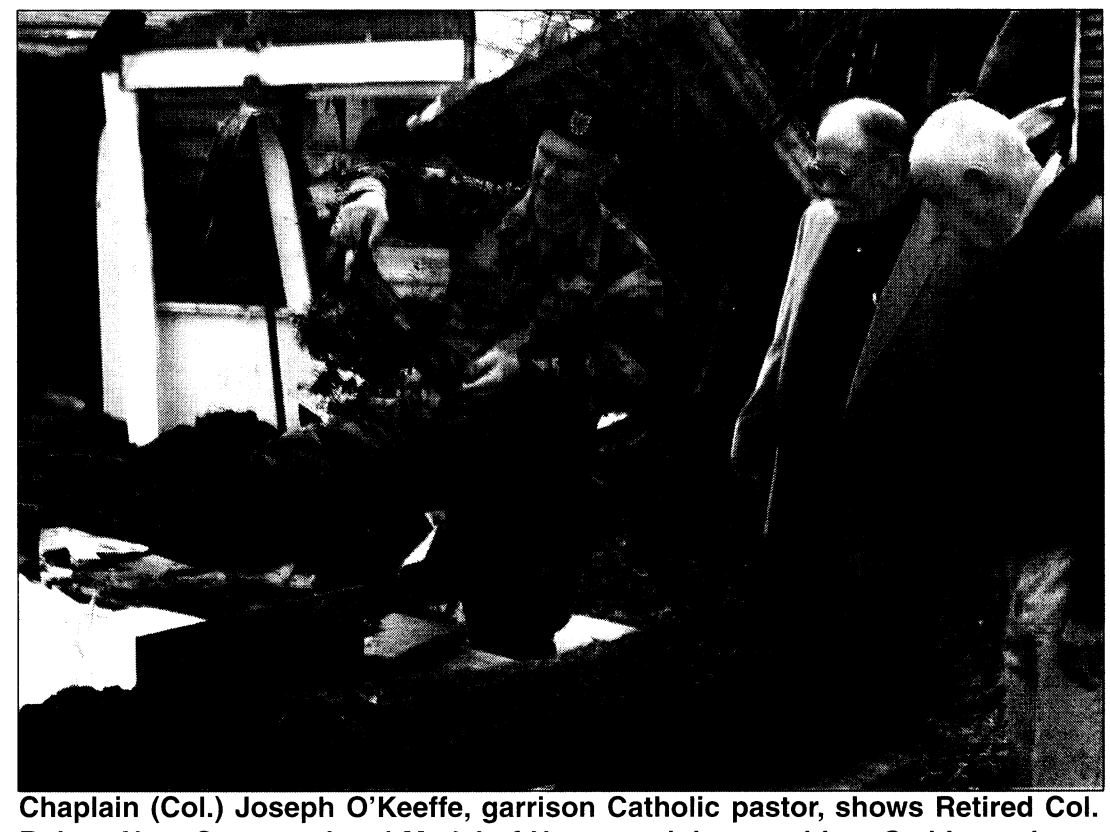
Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe found this communion cup from the chapel's scorched remains Tuesday.

It seems like he'll receive his wish.

Post leadership hopes to obtain congressional approval for the required funds and break ground for a new chapel within a year, said Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe, garrison Catholic pastor.

Community members understand what the engineers are doing, said retired Col. Robert Nett, Congressional Medal of Honor recipient and member of the chapel.

"We have to look at things realistically," Nett said. "(The chapel) is ruined, and we have to demolish it. It is a very dangerous thing for young exploring children, and this precludes them from being injured."



Nevertheless, Nett and many others will miss the old building. Many veterans who had reunions at Fort Benning celebrated mass there. Catholic graduates of Officer Candidate School celebrated after their graduation, too. Some widows even came to the chapel to feel closer to departed spouses.

"It's part of the family of thousands of people," he said. "I'm surprised how people came back here and reminisced. They were magnetized to this place."

Airborne school NCO retires after 24 years

sergeant major trades BDUs for suit and tie

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

After 24 years of service in the Army, Command Sgt. Maj. Efrain Hernandez is retiring.

Throughout his life, he has been a mentor to both soldiers and his family.

Now that he has retired, he says nothing has changed except for his military status.

"I'll always be a soldier," Hernandez said. "Once you're a leader, you will always be one."

Once again, Hernandez will find himself adapting to a new environment, he said.

"This is not the end of his mission," said Command Sgt. Maj. Jim Pickering, command sergeant major of 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment. "There's just a change in the mission."

Influencing soldiers is something for which Hernandez is well known.

"He's done a lot not only for the Army, but the country as a whole," Pickering said. "His influence on the Army is not going to stop because he's retired. The standards he has set for soldiers will be followed by all the soldiers he has trained. And those soldiers will hold their soldiers to the standards he set.

"Although he may not physically be in front of soldiers, his ghost will still be out there," Pickering added.

Hernandez felt his assignment with the airborne school was his best, he said.

"We had new soldiers every week, Hernandez said. "It was a great chance to influence many of them."

Pickering enjoyed when Hernandez gave his weekly speech to incoming airborne students.

"The in-brief he gave to every class would motivate the soldiers," Pickering said. "He has a great way of energizing soldiers who are coming into a tough situation."

When soldiers needed advice or moral support, Hernandez has been available for them, Hernandez said.

"I've been there to help soldiers when they have needed me," he said. "And I am still helping soldiers."

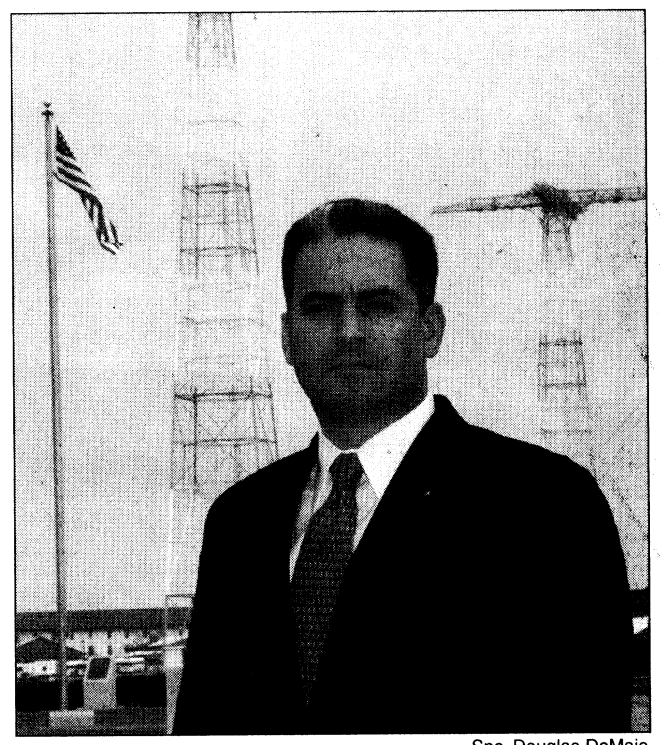
Hernandez is now an area manager for a financial service, Military Installment Loan and Educational Services, he said.

The service helps soldiers finance their education or purchase a vehicle.

It has always been important for Hernandez to make soldiers feel comfortable in their environment and confident with their surroundings, he said.

"I wanted to make soldiers feel special," Hernandez said.

The soldiers' role at airborne is to conquer fear, he said. When they face it, they feel good about themselves and they know, if they need to, they can do it again.

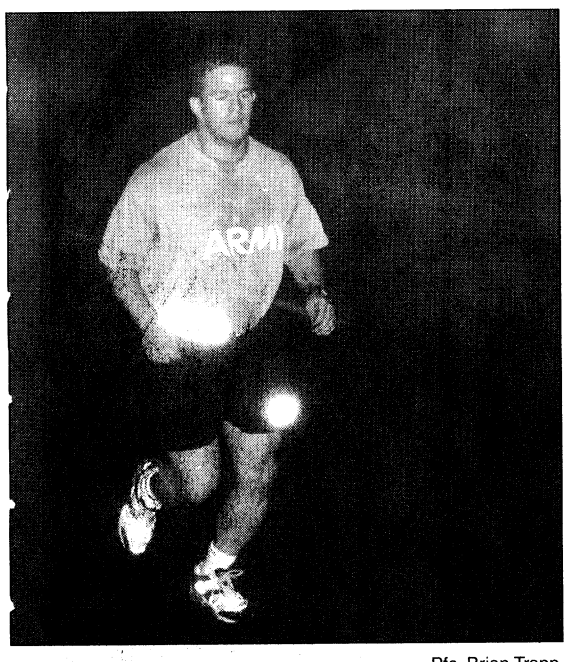


"The most influencing person in my career is my wife," Hernandez said. "She was always there for me and she is still. She is my strength.

"And, my daughters are the most important people in my life."

Pickering said he believes Hernandez will continue his path of success.

"He is transitioning into another phase of life," Pickering said.



"And he'll go into it with the same enthusiasm and dedication as he did in the Army."

Joggers must train with safety in mind

Jennifer Sztalkoper
Bayonet correspondent

The U.S. Army Infantry Center's chief of staff issued a safety alert for Fort Benning runners and joggers.

Col. Lonnie Vona emphasized post guidelines, under Operation Slow Down, that define the proper way to conduct unit runs and rules for individuals and groups.

Whenever possible, PT runs should be conducted in areas of little or no traffic, according to the guidelines.

Soldiers running in formation should only block one lane of traffic, and everyone should wear regulation safety gear.

Road guards must wear reflective vests and be positioned at the front and back of the formation by 50 meters. They should also have flashlights during dark hours.

A reflective waist belt or vest must be worn by anyone running to the left of the formation.

Regis Beighley, safety manager for the Directorate of Public Safety, said Operation Slow Down is simply a matter of common sense.

Beighley believes that some soldiers are "concentrating on (their) responsibilities and not themselves getting hurt."

He encouraged runners and joggers to stay in areas strictly designated for running. The best areas for running or jogging are housing areas, the track near Infantry Hall, the Riverwalk and Doughboy Stadium. He recommended staying in large groups because a single person is more likely to get hurt.

Vona requested commanders to notify their soldiers, family members and civilian employees about speed restrictions during PT hours. Between 6 and 7:30 am, the speed limit is 15 miles per hour, 10 miles per hour when approaching or passing a troop formation.

Solitary joggers, runners or walkers must stay on sidewalks or the shoulder of the road. They must wear reflective or high-visibility clothing, travel facing traffic, and never wear any type of headphone or earpiece.

Staff Sgt. Robert Burch, of the Directorate of Operations and Training, said Vona's safety alert reinforces rules soldiers and civilians should already be following.

"If drivers follow Operation Slow Down correctly, there would be no need for a safety alert," Burch said, pointing out the military police sometimes stop as many as six people a day during PT hours.

PT activities are prohibited in the following areas: Victory Drive, 10th Mountain Division Road, Sigerfoos Road from 10th Mountain Division Road to Vibbert Avenue, Lawson Army Airfield, including runways and taxiways, Sunshine Road, Sightseeing Road from Dixie Road to Sunshine Road, Dixie Road, except for the portion from Sightseeing Road to the airfield, Lumpkin Road from Dixie Road to Custer Road, Custer Road from Benning Road to Eisenhower Exchange and I-185.

Bumpy ride ahead for speeders

MPs use portable speed bumps to deter law breakers

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The people have spoken. And they said "Slow down."

"We get a lot of feedback from residents in the neighborhoods on post," said Chuck Walls, garrison manager. "And the issue which continues to come back to the front is speeding."

The military police purchased moveable speed bumps to encourage drivers to obey the speed limit. The 300-pound units require two people to set up and cost over $1,000 a piece.

"These are going to be under supervision when we use them," said Lt. Col. Terry Kelley, chief of law enforcement. "When we put one of these in place, we'll have an MP somewhere close with radar."

Fort Benning has 4,000 homes in six housing areas. While they are all unique, they are all also family housing areas, especially Custer Terrace and McGraw Manor, which are home to younger soldiers, many of whom have small children. Speeding through these areas can be particularly dangerous.

"We're doing this (using speed bumps) to protect our citizens, the members of our military and their family members," Kelley said.

"One of the problems we have is that all of us have very busy schedules and distractors that causes some of us to be in 'hurry-up mode,'" Kelley said. "I can not over emphasize traveling at excessive speed can not be justified when considering the dangers associated with speeding. When you are traveling on post, the time saved by speeding can be measured in

Quiltin' like crazy

BDU scraps recycled into treasured gifts

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Barring any unforeseen problems, 2nd Lts. Neil Hilderbrand and Jason Hansen will graduate from Ranger School Feb. 15.

But their wives were the first to pin on the tab.

Sally Hilderbrand and Nicole Hansen spent more than two weeks cutting, pinning and stitching Army quilts for their husbands and topped their work with Rangers Lead the Way.

The quilts will be graduation presents for their husbands.

"He'll be surprised, all right, especially when he finds out I cut up his BDUs," Nicole said.

Nicole and Sally work at TSYS and have known each other since their husbands attended West Point. They took a quilting class together in the fall and have worked nonstop on the ranger quilts to have them ready in time for graduation.

They took a lot of needling from their friends about their new hobby.

"They were like 'Quilting? What are you, 90-years-old?' Nicole said. "But it's really a popular art. A lot of people are doing it now."

Their instructor, LeAnn Volesky, said the two are enthusiastic and dedicated, necessary qualities for anyone undertaking such a task.

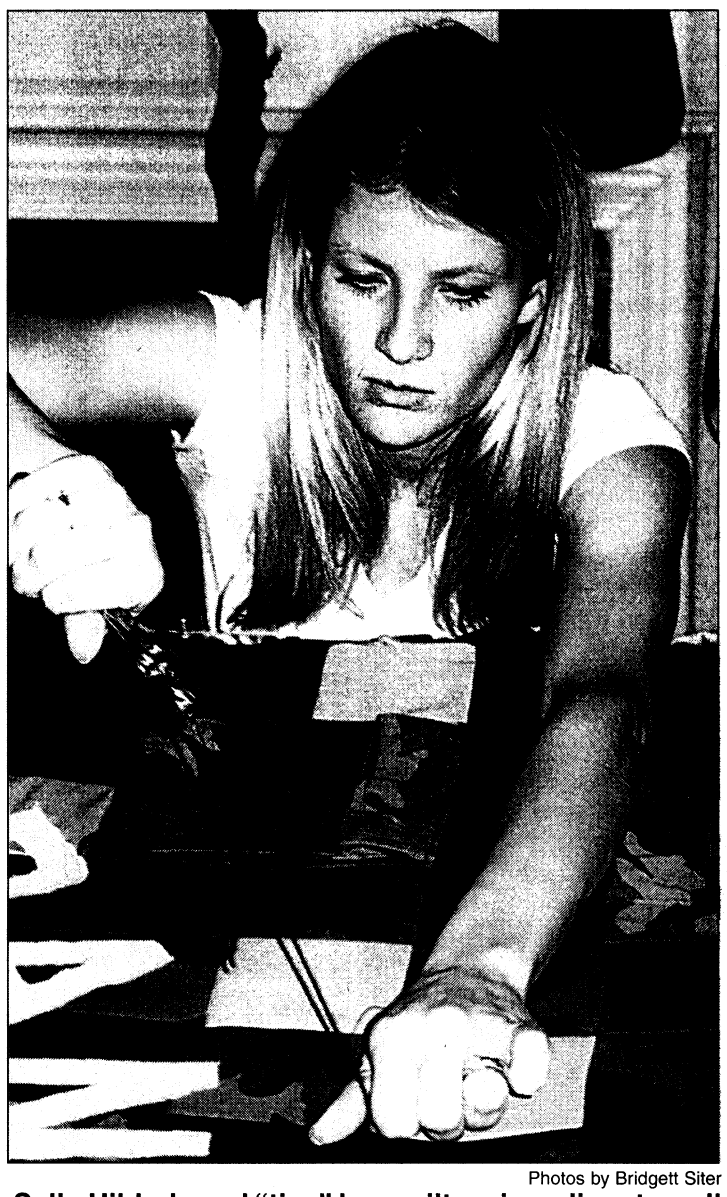
Quitters don't make good quilters, she said.

"It takes commitment. Most of their work was done on a machine, but it's still tedious and very time consuming," Volesky said.

"It's hard work," Sally said. " And you have to keep Band-Aids close. I stabbed myself a lot. You really don't want to get blood all over it."

Volesky offers quilting classes in her Fort Benning home and donates a portion of her profits to the Officers' Spouses' Club.

She said flag quilts and ranger quilts have surged in popularity since Sept. 11.



Ranger quilts are usually pieced from old BDUs, though some quilters prefer to purchase a camouflage-patterned material. Most of her students use unit patches, crests, buttons and pockets to personalize their work.

"It can be as unique and individual as you want to make it," she said.

Though Sally's quilt bears the ranger motto, with the word "ranger" arched like a tab, she decided against adding an actual ranger tab until after graduation.

"I don't want to jinx him," she said.

For more information about quilting, call Volesky at 682-7890 or e-mail usdream@msn.com.

Photos by Bridgett Siter

Sally Hilderbrand "ties" her quilt, using pliers to pull yarn through the heavy BDU material.

Sally Hilderbrand attaches the quilt top to a fleece lining. She chose a red, white and blue material for the backing of her ranger quilt, which was made from her husband's uniforms.

Nicole Hansen shows the product of two-weeks labor. Hansen's husband is scheduled to graduate from Ranger School Feb. 15. The quilt will be a surprise present for him.

Deserted dogs, forsaken felines present post problem

GC addresses pet problem on post

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Pets are being abandoned on post, and it's a problem the garrison commander intends to solve.

According to a memo from the garrison commander, about 20 to 25 pets are being held at the veterinarian clinic on post waiting adoption or euthanization.

"Everyone who brings a pet into their family should keep that pet with their family," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander. "There are certain circumstances where a person may not be able to care for their pets. When that occurs, they need to make every effort to find that pet a home, or take the responsible action and take them to the veterinarian, so they can be put up for adoption."

It's more humane to take the pet to the clinic than allow it to become a stray, he said.

"If they do survive, the dog will become wild, which poses a threat to everyone on post," Torres said.

According to the memo, the pets are being abandoned by military members who are moving.

Because of this behavior, the post is developing control measures to prevent pets from being abandoned, Torres said.

"We're putting pet ownership as part of our in and out processing," he said. "As a mandatory in and out processing, we will emphasize pets be registered and tagged."

When a pet is tagged, a microchip is inserted beneath the pet's skin with information about the pet's owner and shot records for the pet programmed on it, he said.

The microchip is a tool to trace the dogs owners or to identify a pet who is lost or abandoned, said Melissa Locke, an employee with the clinic.

"It's wrong to abandon pets," Locke said.

The clinic offers a kennel service for a small fee, she said. The service allows the pet owner and the clinic to determine what shots the pet has and what type of home is suitable.

"The pet could be held there until the pet is adopted," she said. "We'll let them go to the first people who would like to adopt the pet."

It is important to do the responsible thing, Torres said.

look CLOSER look look

The clinic receives 62 strays on average per month:

- 15 percent are returned to their owners.
- 55 percent are adopted.
- 23 percent are euthanized.
- The clinic spends on average $300 a month to euthanize abandoned pets.
- The clinic spends between $900 and $1,000 a month to care for abandoned pets.

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Carolyn Phillips, a kindergarten teacher at White Elementary

History: The Columbus native earned a teaching degree from Auburn University and a master's and education specialist's degree from Troy State. She taught in Pensacola, Fla., for a year before transferring to Fort Benning, where she's been teaching "a long time."

"Let's just leave it at that," she said.

Why kindergarten: "I love kindergartners. I could talk for hours about this age," she said. "It's exciting. It's spontaneous. It's unpredictable. There are never two days alike. That's what makes it so much fun. You do have to be flexible and creative to teach kindergartners. I guess I am, because I love it.

"These children are curious and fearless and anxious to learn. And they learn in a million different ways."

Teaching military children: "Here we have tremendous parental involvement," Phillips said. "You don't find this degree of involvement in a public school. But the greatest asset is that we have children from all over the world, students who've travelled far more than me. They bring so much into the classroom. That's the joy of teaching."

Hobbies and interests: "I love the beach all year round," said Phillips who frequents the gulf coast. "I guess I love it as much in the winter as I do in the summer."

Phillips has dabbled in many art forms and enjoys needlepoint and painting china. She's an avid reader, though she has no favorite author.

"I like it all. I know when it grabs my attention. And I need variety in my reading, just like in my classroom," she said.

Future plans: "I plan to continue teaching kindergarten as long as it's fun," Phillips said. "Eventually, who knows? Remember, I'm a spontaneous kind of person."

Housing receives repairs

Family Housing

For soldiers and their families residing in Family Housing, the government is responsible for two working phone-jacks in the quarters; one in the living room or kitchen, and one in the bedroom. If two or more jacks are working, the government is not responsible to pay for repairs to others.

Your local service provider and you are responsible for maintenance of the line that serves your home.

Generally, your local service provider maintains the telecommunications lines and related network outside your premises at no charge to you. You are responsible for maintenance of any additional lines inside your home and the telephone set or other equipment.

Many local service providers offer an optional plan or "phone insurance" to help maintain the inside wiring and jacks and to isolate problems inside your home.

It is a Family Housing occupant's choice to get the option or not. It is not required by the Family Housing office.

Since the government covers repairs to those basic lines provided within the quarters, the insurance is not necessary, except for additional lines that have been requested by the occupant.

Family Housing occupants who experience problems with their telephones not working should do the following:

• If the problem is in the telephone line outside your home, call your local service provider. For example, if Bell South is your provider, you call 611 for repair service 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

• If the problem is in the telephone line, wiring or phone-jacks inside your home, contact the Family Housing Office, Inspection Section, Building 1836, Mitchell Avenue, at 545-7312, 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday on duty days.

• If the problem is in your telephone or other telecommunications equipment, call the equipment supplier.

How do you determine what is causing the problem?

If you call your local service provider and your repair problem cannot be diagnosed over the phone, your local service provider may dispatch a technician to your residence to determine whether the problem is inside or outside your home.

If the problem is outside and in your local service provider's network, usually you will not be charged for the service call, but you should ask just to confirm.

If the problem is in the wiring, phone-jacks or telephones inside your home, you will be charged if you authorize the local service provided to do the repairs. The government will not reimburse you for charges you authorized because contractor repair services are provided through the Family Housing office.

Helpful list for checking problems.

• Are all phones out? The problem may be in the telephone line outside your home. Call your local service provider.

• Does the phone work in one phone-jack, but not another? Problem may be inside wiring or the phone-jack itself. Call Family Housing office.

• Is one phone out, but another one works in the same jack? Problem may be in your phone equipment. Call the vendor or manufacturer of the equipment.

• Do you have a cordless phone? Unplug it then try your other phones. The cordless phone could be the problem.

• Do you have a problem with your caller ID display unit? Check batteries first.

MP: Use new speed bumps

seconds, not minutes."

The speed bumps are not large, but they do serve to remind drivers to obey posted speeds.

"They're not huge," Walls said. "They're not six inches tall, so they won't bottom out a car, but they do serve as an attention getter."

In the past, the use of speed bumps on post was discouraged, Walls said, because they can have a negative effect on the mobility of emergency and public safety vehicles.

However, these new speed bumps are removable, and the problems associated with permanent speed bumps are eliminated.

"The MPs do a wonderful job patrolling the housing areas, but there are only so many MPs," Walls said.

"I'm very encouraged about the possibilities associated with these new speed bumps," he said. "It's one more step to help slow people down."

Kelley was encouraged about reducing accidents on post.

"Everyone should consider the consequences of their actions.

"It only takes a second, one moment, to change someone's life forever," he said.

"In a contest between a vehicle and a person, the person will lose every time. Speeding restrictions are there to protect everyone, not as a personal inconvenience," Kelley said.

"Be responsible; don't speed ... the life you save may be that of a child."

The speed limit in housing areas is 15 mph.

Dental hygiene important for tots

U.S. Army Dental Activity

New parents sometimes don't realize the importance of caring for an infant's teeth. Army dentists say serious tooth decay can affect very young children.

Although a child's primary teeth will eventually be replaced by permanent ones, the primary teeth are critical for proper chewing, speaking and appearance. Care should be taken to keep them clean and healthy.

The primary teeth of an infant or young child can be affected by baby bottle tooth decay, also called nursing bottle mouth.

This condition develops when a baby frequently receives a bottle of milk, formula, fruit juice or sweetened liquids, which are meant to serve as a pacifier.

Prolonged breastfeeding may also cause this condition. Although the teeth most likely to be affected are the upper front teeth, others may be affected.

Tooth decay is caused by bacteria, which are present in a thin film of plaque that constantly forms on teeth. The bacteria use sugar as an energy source and they produce acids that attack the tooth enamel. Frequent, lengthy exposure to sugary liquid can result in acids attacking the child's teeth. After many attacks, tooth decay can occur.

All types of sugar, including those in bottle and breast milk, formula, fruit juice and sweetened liquids can cause plaque bacteria to produce decay-causing acids. How often a child receives a bottle containing these liquids and for how long a time the child's teeth are exposed to decay-causing acids are two important factors.

Parents can help protect their baby's teeth by doing the following:

After each feeding, wipe the child teeth and gums with a clean, damp washcloth or gauze pad to remove plaque. Begin brushing your child's teeth as soon as the first tooth erupts (usually around 6 months).

Don't put baby to bed with a bottle of milk, formula, fruit juice or sweetened liquid.

If your child needs a comforter between regular feedings, at night, or during naps, fill a nursing bottle with cool water or give the child a clean pacifier recommended by your dentist or pediatrician. Never give a child a pacifier dipped in any sweet liquid.

Avoid filling a nursing bottle with liquids such as sugar water, sweetened gelatin or soft drinks.

Make sure your child gets the fluoride needed for decay-resistant teeth. Ask your dentist about recommended methods for obtaining the proper amount of fluoride.

Schedule regular checkups beginning by the child's first birthday.

Editor's note: February is National Children's Dental Health Month.

Army Family Action Plan encourages open dialogues

Program helps solve issues

Angie Bellamy
Army Family Team Building

In military life, there comes a time when issues arise concerning Army policy or quality of life.

Where do you turn?

There is a powerful source, and it's called the Army Family Action Plan.

What is AFAP? It is a sounding board for today's total Army family, to include active-duty soldiers, reservists, guardsmen, retirees, family members, and Department of the Army civilians.

The AFAP program is designed to improve the quality of life for the total Army family. This program encourages open dialogue among all ranks to solve pressing issues.

AFAP handles many issues of concern from entitlements, family support, housing, education, childcare, employment, medical and dental care, relocation, youth and numerous other issues.

There are many great ideas that have come out of this program. The Thrift Savings Plan now being offered to soldiers is just one example of the results of AFAP.

Every installation is required to have an AFAP Symposium every year and the one for Fort Benning is scheduled for Feb. 13. This symposium will be attended by a variety of soldiers of every rank, family members, retirees and DA civilians.

These groups of individuals discuss issues and brainstorm ways to improve the quality of life of the Fort Benning community. Some issues are handled on a post level. If this is not possible, it will be passed to the Training and Doctrine Command AFAP Conference. After review at that level, if the issue needs further review, it is forwarded to the Department of the Army AFAP Conference. This year's HQDA AFAP Conference is scheduled for March 11-15.

Would you like to make a difference? Would you like your voice to be heard? Fill out this issue form and return it to the AFAP office, Building 359, Ingersoll Avenue, on Main Post, or call 545-5377 for more information.

Spencer sponsors quiz bowl

Spencer PTSA

Spencer High School's Parent, Teacher, Student Association will give students an opportunity to make studying for the Georgia high school graduation test challenging and fun.

The purpose of the educational quiz bowl is to stimulate and motivate students to study for the test, which students are required to pass in order to graduate from high school.

The quiz bowl will feature questions from various academic curriculums and will have a written and oral exam.

It will be similar to the game show "Who Wants To Be A Millionaire," with questions starting off easy and gradually becoming more difficult.

The final round will be in the school auditorium at 6 p.m. Feb. 21. The final participants will be asked questions, much like a spelling bee, with the winner being determined through the process of elimination.

Prizes will be given to the top three finishers. Parents can help students study for the quiz at home. This event is free and open to the general public.

Students interested in participating in the quiz bowl can sign up on posters displayed throughout the school.

Travel research gives children job training

Dexter Elementary School

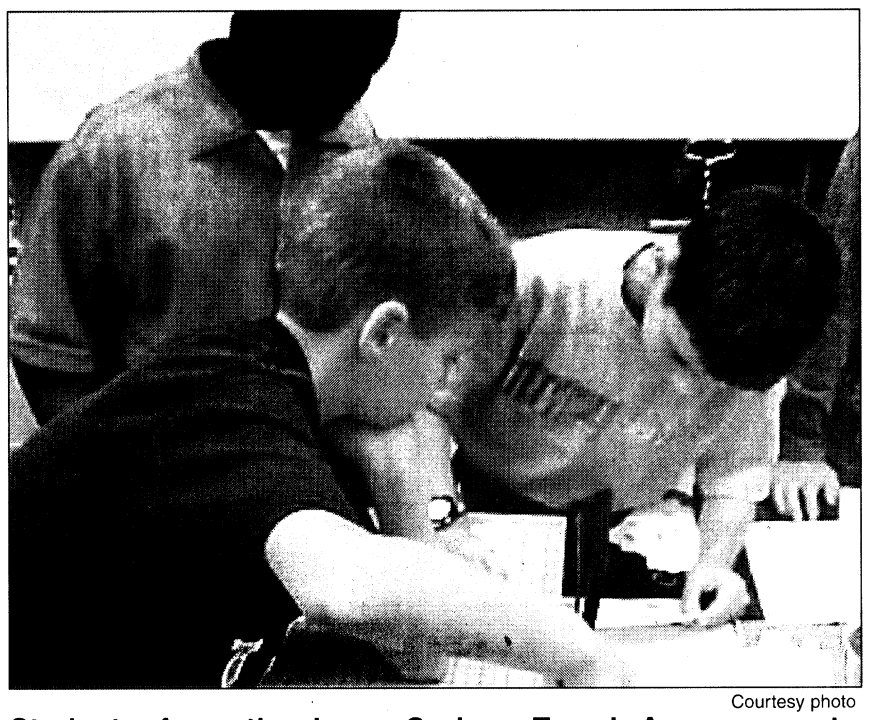
"Rain or shine, your trip will be fine!" is the promise of Vacation Paradise, just one of six newly created travel agencies at Dexter Elementary School. Fifth-graders at Dexter are taking their roles as travel agents quite seriously, and when you listen to one of their commercial jingles or sales pitch, you just might find yourself booking a vacation with them.

Teachers Joyce Flatt and Carroll Thebaud came up with the idea as they planned for the Voyagers Unit in the Literacy Place Reading series.

"The unit integrates curriculum standards in reading and language arts, math and social studies, and involves students in a performance-based task," Flatt said.

To prepare students for the project, they invited a travel agent to share with them the various aspects of his job.

"The agent offered tips on how to plan a trip — everything from booking flights and hotel reservations to planning an itinerary," Thebaud said.



Students divided into groups to form their agencies. They created business cards, complete with the company logo, designed banners and a company jingle to promote their agency.

The goal of the unit is for each agency to develop a proposal for a prospective group of teachers interested in taking a three-day weekend trip. Students first investigated possible destinations by polling the teachers to find out what kinds of trips most interested them.

Once each group decided on their destination, they spent time researching the weather and the appropriate clothing that would be needed, as well as locating sites of interest for tourists, and obtaining prices on lodging, transportation, dining and entertainment.

Using the information gleaned from online sources, each agency then developed a detailed itinerary for their clients.

When asked about how they planned the itinerary, Malia Fredrick, whose agency was featuring a trip to New York City, said her team looked for "good restaurants and museums."

Students from the Luau Cruises Travel Agency create business cards promoting their agency.

Katie Rakow, who was researching affordable hotels for the NYC trip, said, "The Best Western President's Hotel had the best price to fit the budget."

Devon Humphreys, an agent with Luau Cruises, was planning the itinerary for the Washington, D.C., trip. "We found the Lincoln Memorial, the Holocaust Museum and the Vietnam Memorial to be among the most interesting in our research," he said.

"It was fun," said Haley Moore. "I really liked it when we did our travel agency jobs because we could go online and do research."

Gigi Casselman agreed. "Yes, we get to find interesting sites and work as a team." she said.

Flatt agreed, noting the children got so involved in their roles as a travel agent that she frequently had to provide "reality checks."

"I would find myself reminding them that they could not actually book the flights and the hotel rooms," she said.

After doing their research for the various destinations — Boston, New York City, Washington, D.C., Denver, New Orleans, and Orlando, each agency created brochures to promote their sites.

Students are looking forward to the culminating activity for the unit, when they will do their sales presentation incorporating PowerPoint, student-created brochures, business cards and company jingles.

"Students were given a rubric (checklist) prior to starting the project to ensure that each component of their presentation had all the necessary requirements," Flatt said. "Their final presentation will be graded according to that rubric."

Students barter bracelets for bucks

Activities teach business world lessons

Dexter Elementary School

Fourth- and fifth-graders at Dexter Elementary have been experiencing another world of mathematics. They have been learning about business and economics by designing, manufacturing, marketing and selling friendship bracelets for BIZBucks.

Teacher, Marjory Brasfield, described the activity as a means to connect knowledge learned in core school subjects to the real world.

The advanced math students have been participating in the BIZWorld simulation, which teaches business, entrepreneurship and economic concepts as it reinforces math, science, art, language arts and communication.

Fourth grader Jacklyn Baillergeon said, "I was president of the company called Buddy Bracelets. I have learned a lot from what I did. If I ever do it again, I will try to know when to buy and sell stock. I really liked BizWorld because it teaches you about business and it's fun."

BIZWorld is team-based and encourages cooperation among students. The class was divided into companies and each chose company officers.

"Each officer had specific responsibilities within the company," said Brasfield, "and they learned to do business with venture capitalists, stock brokers and bankers while keeping business and personal financial records."

Members of the Buddy Bracelet team; Jacklyn Baillergeon, Mehgan McKinney, Matt Melhado, Adam Spencer, Danielle Terhune and Michael Upton won this year's competition by earning a total company equity of $2,093 BIZBucks.

Adam Spencer was the individual winner. He manipulated his company salary and stock transactions into a profit of $92.32 BIZBucks.

When asked to evaluate the activity, Jeffrey Terhune from Biz Bracelets summed up the activities with this statement.

"I loved BIZWorld. It helped me learn how to buy stock and use it wisely. We learned how to handle money and how to convince people to buy from our company. I was president, so I had big responsibilities to help other team members. That's why I love BIZWorld."

Chaplain calls for religious tolerance

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

commentary

Koop

Recently an Islamic man entering a local business was asked to remove his prayer cap, kufi, or leave. He chose to leave. Maybe he was confronted out of ignorance of Islamic dress and religious beliefs and practices. Maybe, but it seems incredulous the security guards confused the kufi with a do rag or a kind of cap worn by gangs.

If a college freshman wore a secular beanie cap, if a Jewish man wore a yarmulke or kippah, if a Christian cleric wore a zucchetto, or if an Amish or Mennonite woman wore a prayer cap, would a business ask these individuals to remove it or leave?

Some may argue that a prayer cap should only be worn during worship services. Such thinking contradicts common sense. People pray outside of worship services. Devout believers of all faiths pray quietly throughout the day when the opportunity or need arises and immediately and without notice to others. Jewish men and Anabaptist women wear their prayer caps throughout the day. Muslim men should not be treated any different.

The military policies permit the wear of religious clothing, such as prayer caps (DDD 1300.17; AR 600-20; AR 670-1; and AR Pam 600-75). Soldiers should consult with their command concerning religious accommodation. Not all items of religious clothing are approved for wear while in uniform.

Soldiers must meet the "neat, conservative, discrete, subdued and nonpermanent" criteria listed in AR 600-20, paragraphs 5-6.

> "... it seems incredulous the security guards confused the kufi with a do rag or a kind of cap worn by gangs."
> Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop

Articles must not substitute for, replace or interfere with the normal wear or appearance of items of the Army uniform, AR 670-1.

Prayer caps, when worn while in uniform, should fit under military headgear without showing. Usually prayer caps worn by soldiers are black in color or camouflage in markings. Soldiers are not required to remove prayer caps while inside a building.

Have you been hurt by religious discrimination? If so, contact the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers' Plaza. Call the center at 545-1760, or e-mail USArmy Chaplain@aol.com.

Hope springs from faith in goodness

Chaplain (Capt.) Leslie Forbes-Mariani
13th Corps Support Battalion

commentary

So often in our culture we use the term "hope" in a wishful negative. For example we say, "Well, I hope you feel better,"or "I hope it works out."

When used in the way it was originally intended, hope has depth and meaning. It communicates a confidence in the future, with the highest degree of success without a concrete basis. (Romans 8). Hope is not seen, it is not in sight. It is closely related to our faith, our expectation of the future and God's word.

Where does hope come from? It comes from the source of our belief. So what is the source of belief? Is it found in our accomplishments?

Forbes-Mariani

Hope that has confidence in the future has its source in something bigger then ourselves. It is what fuels us and helps us continue.

Our source of hope must come from God (Jeremiah 2:13). Hope in the future, in success, in the confidence that events will happen. It is not just a holy wish when the source is God. If hope comes from a belief in God, it is an acceptance to God's promises. Hope is for good in the promises of God to trust in the success of the expected event (Jeremiah 29:11). Hope in the blessings of God, your faith, the desire of God for you (Hebrews 11).

Life in the spirit of God proclaims the hope that Christians have of salvation found in Christ Jesus.

Hope helps enable Christians to endure suffering, witnesses to God's grace and guides the faith that preserves. In Romans 8, all creation is waiting in eager expectation, hoping for the fulfillment of God's promises.

What are you eagerly expecting?

Editor's notes: Forbes-Mariani is a native of California. She is an ordained minister of the International Church of the Four Square Gospel and is a graduate of Fuller Theological Seminary. She is married to Ronald Mariani who is also an ordained minister.

Deathstalkers start season with bang

Second half heroics secure victory Tues.

Phil Thompson
Bayonet correspondent

The Kefurt Gym Basketball League began Tuesday.

A last second three by 3rd Brigade Dining Facility's Blakley Jones tied the game 53-53, and sent its game with the Deathstalkers into overtime.

The fired up Deathstalkers went to overtime looking exhausted.

Still, the Deathstalkers scored the first three points, and it seemed they were pulling away with 1:04 on the clock.

A fast-break steal by DFAC's Blakley Jones closed the gap to 56-55, but that was the closest they would get. The Deathstalkers pulled away and went on to win, 58-55.

"I think the team performed pretty well even though we had only two practices," said Deathstalkers coach Jesse Ruffin.

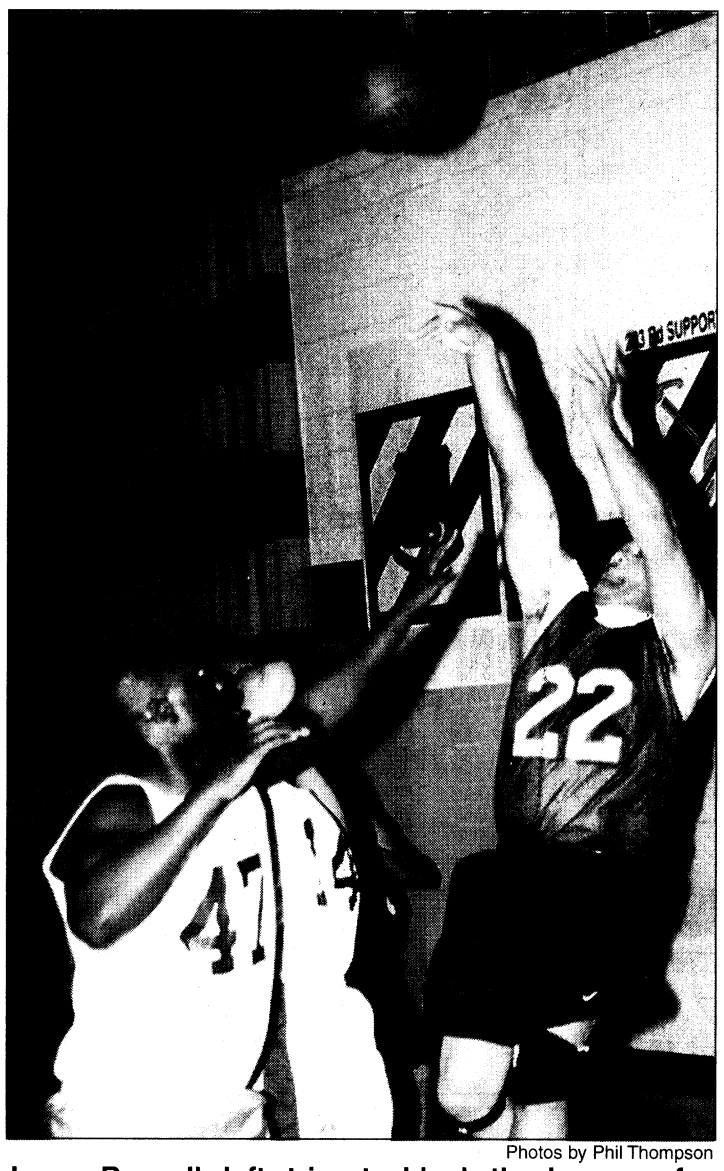
"We need to work on our inside game and passing abilities, too, but we still won," he added.

The B Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, Deathstalkers started the game with a whopping 10 - unanswered-point barrage over DFAC.

However, sloppy passing skills and a lack of a strong inside game allowed DFAC to bounce back and bring the score to 10-5.

"We needed to pass and rebound better and also play harder defense," said Deathstalker Garnet Taylor.

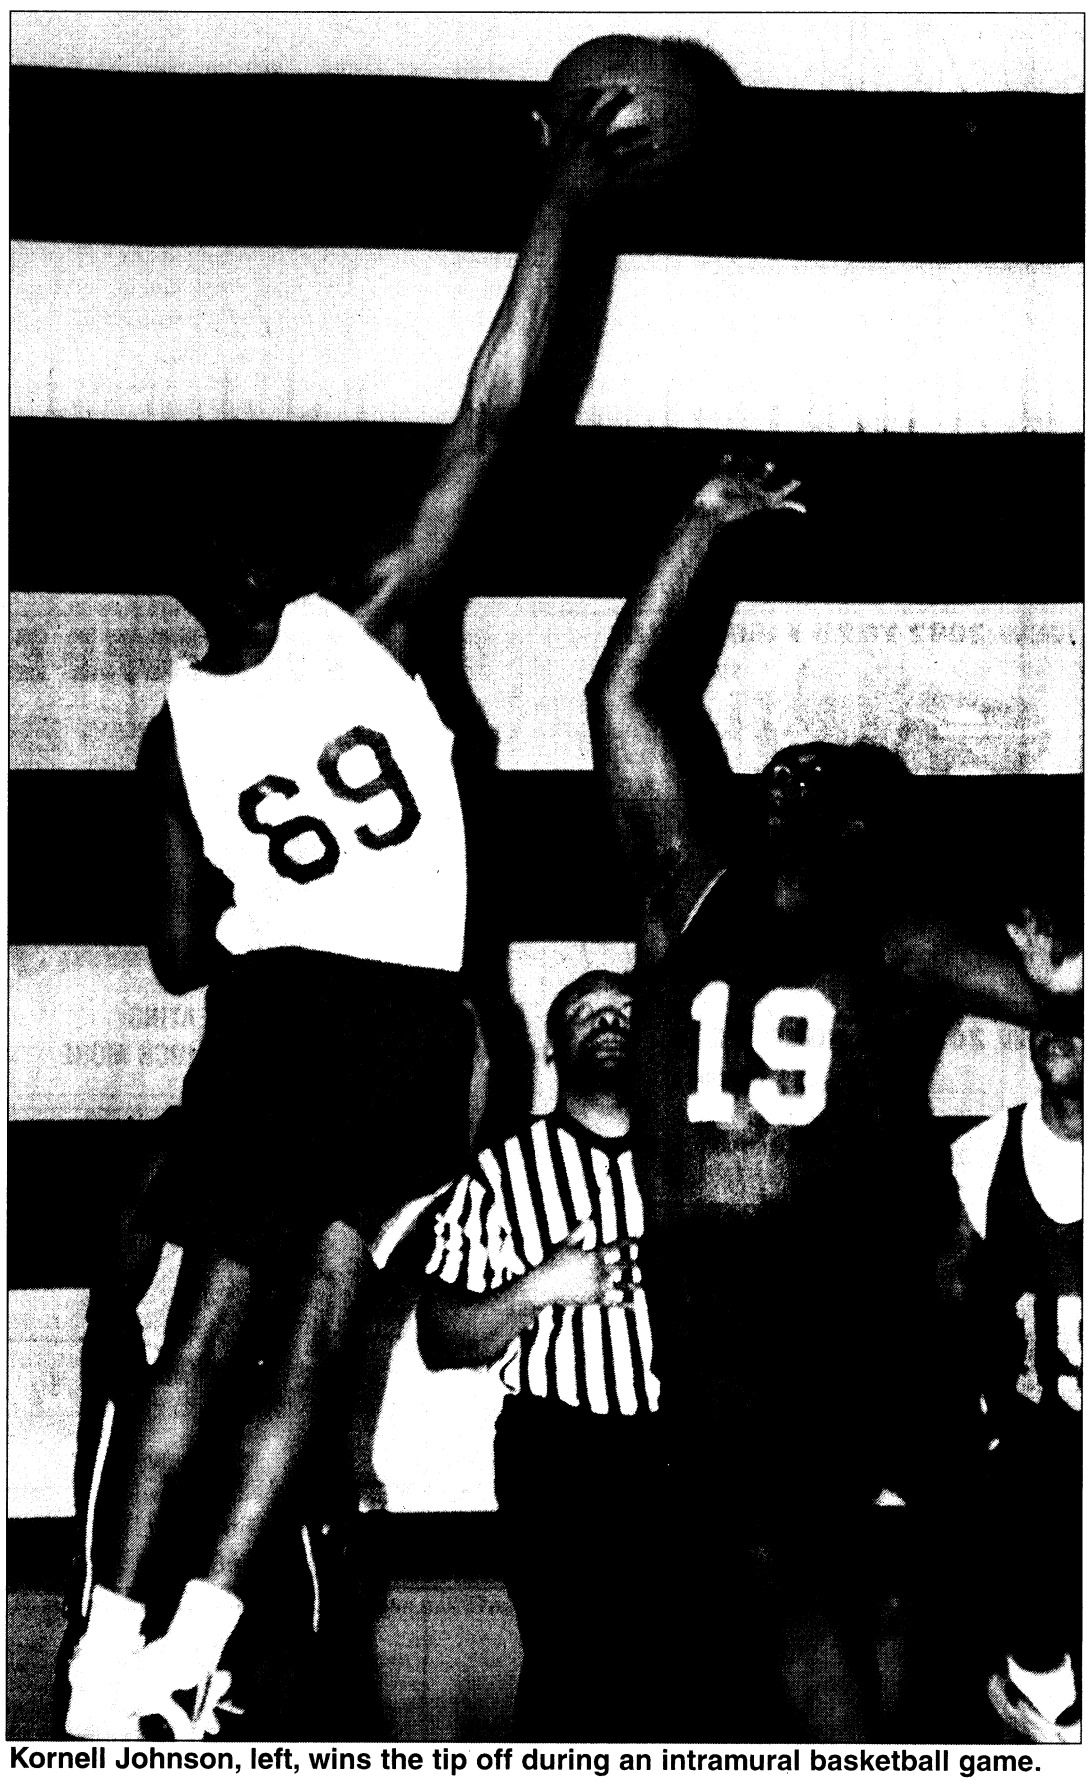
That was the case in the first half. Even though they went to halftime with a nine point lead, 29-20, the game was a lot closer than it looked.



"We came out flat and weren't performing the way we needed to, but we just needed to get warmed up," said Deathstalker Walter Battle.

The second half brought more of the same. The Deathstalkers came out slinging shots everywhere. Still they couldn't pass the ball, and they gave up many defensive rebounds.

The Deathstalkers compensated with back to back fast breaks to remedy their lack of strength in the middle and surged to an 11-point lead, 51-40.



The lead was short lived. DFAC sucked the lead up like it was a cool cup of water on a hot, June day in Death Valley. They produced eight points and held the Deathstalkers scoreless until 2:10 remains on the clock.

"I'm disappointed in the loss. I feel we should have beat these guys, but we had a lot of should of's, could of's, and would of's, but we couldn't execute,"said DFAC coach Jones. "All in all, I'm proud of my team. Better luck next time."

Hellcats sting Cobra Strike

Free throws prove key in late victory

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

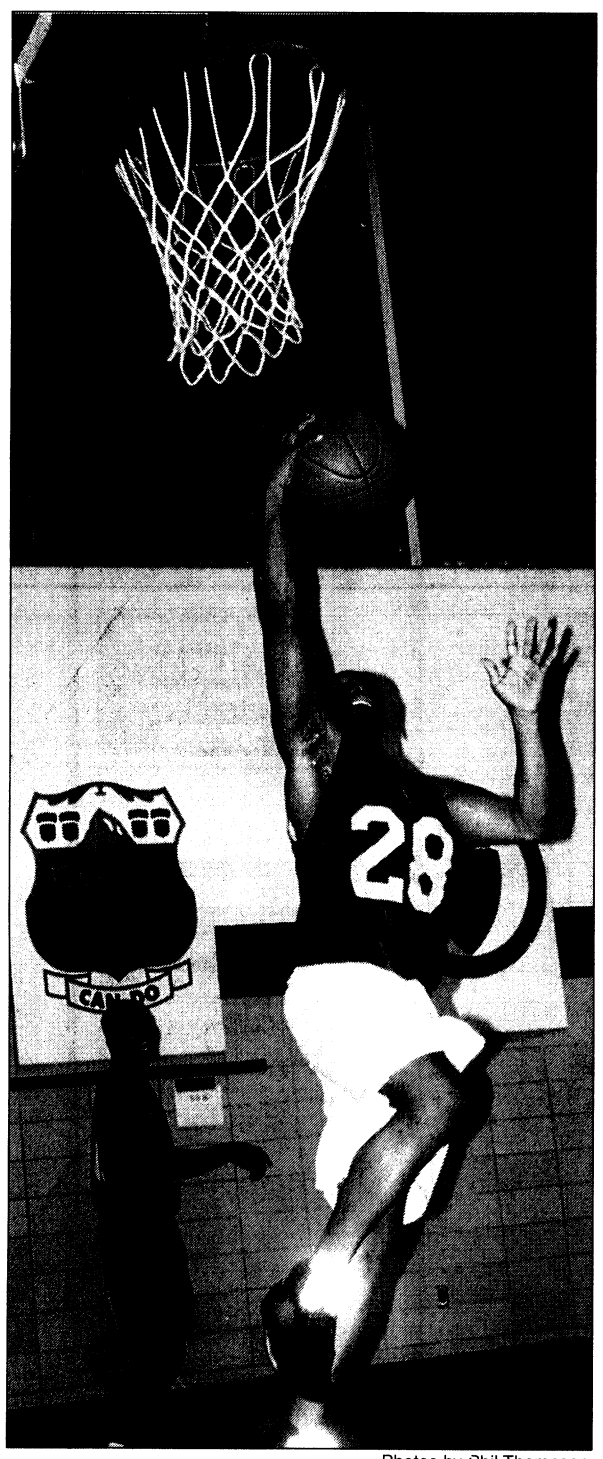
The Hellcats of Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, champions of the Post Christmas Basketball Tournament, continued their winning streak Tuesday with a 31-30 victory over Cobra Strike of Charlie Company, 1st Battalion, 10th Infantry Regiment in the second game of the Kefurt Gym basketball league.

"Everyone gave a good effort, and we were able to pull off the victory," said Hellcat Mario Parker.

The game began with a lot of turnovers and missed opportunities around the basket, but both teams settled into their offense and put the ball in the basket or got fouled.

The Hellcats made 6 of 14 free throws in the first-half. The Cobra Strike took advantage of the mistakes and led at half-time, 13-12.

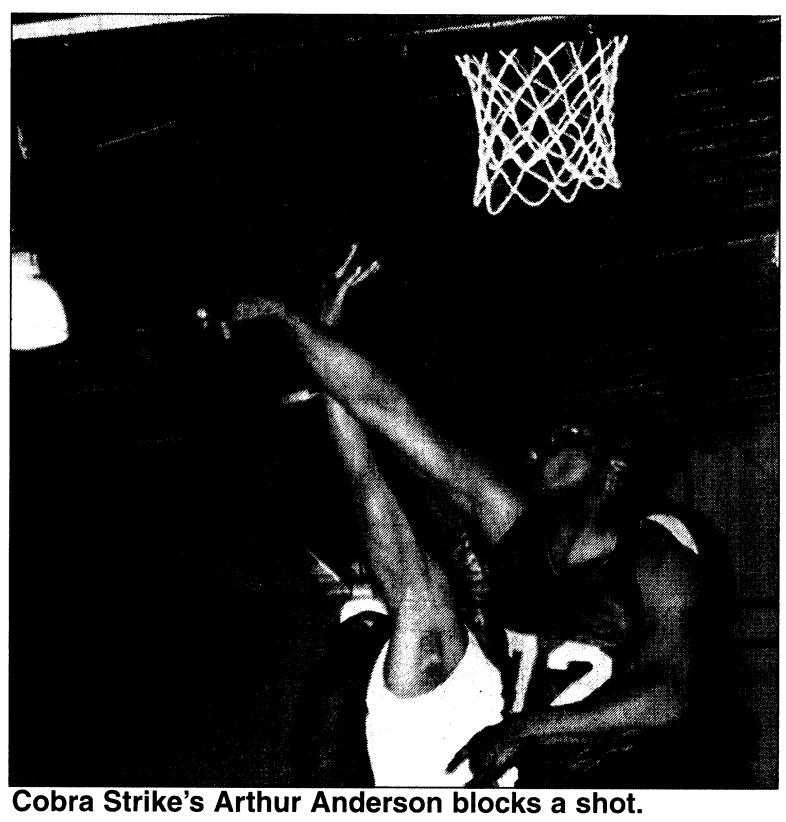
Early in the second-half, the Hellcats went on a 5-2 run to take a three-point lead.



Cobra Strike answered with a 6-0 run of their own to take a 25-22 lead.

With 4:37 on the clock, the teams were tied at 28.

Cobra Strike converted on a layup to take the lead by two.



The Hellcats then had an opportunity to tie the game when Parker was fouled.

But he missed the front end of a one and one.

Photos by Phil Thompson

Cobra Strike's Marcus Jackson goes up for layup Tuesday versus the Hellcats.

Cobra Strike's Arthur Anderson blocks a shot.

However, Preston Scott stepped up big and tied the game when Cobra Strike failed to convert off their possession.

The game was coming down to the wire when Cobra Strike's guard, Marcus Jackson, drew a player-control foul on one of the Hellcats' guards.

With about a minute left in the game, it seemed as if the momentum switched into the hands of Cobra Strike, but Jackson turned the ball back over to the Hellcats with a player-control foul of his own.

This gave the Hellcats the opportunity to hold for the last shot.

With eight seconds left on the clock, Parker drove the lane and was fouled.

"I knew I had to knock it down," Parker said. "I had been missing free throws all night."

Parker hit the first and missed the second, but that was enough to give the Hellcats the lead and the victory.

"It was a close game, but we did our best," said Hellcats' coach Ronald Cummings.

The Hellcats' leading scorer was Alonzo McCracken with eight points.

"We didn't play the way we should as tournament champs," McCracken said. "We still played team ball through out the whole game.

"We can play better," he added.

Thierry Miley of Cobra Strike was the game's leading scorer with 10 points.

Run benefits local scouts

Girl Scouts run sets off sales season

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The 22nd annual Girl Scouts Cookie Run kicked off the Girl Scout cookie sales Saturday in Phenix City.

The event involved a 5K, 10K, 2-mile walk and a carnival to raise money for the Girl Scouts.

"It's been a pretty long running event, and we usually get a pretty good turn-out," said Lori Finch, assistant race director. "We had a lot of involvement from soldiers this year."

A special grouping just for military members was made so they could also compete against each other.

About 530 people entered the race and approximately 15 of those entered in the military category.

"The reason for the new category was to get more participation from Fort Benning," said Rosimar Melendez, race director. "The 10K was added to attract soldiers because they were saying a 5K wasn't far enough. We definitely had a few more soldiers than last year, and there was an overall increase in participation."

The overall winner of the 5K was Tim Cornett, 17, a student at Columbus High School.

The 10K winner for the 35-39 age group and second place overall was Capt. John Detro, with the 3rd Ranger Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

"I run it every year. It's a great race to start the year off with," Detro said. "I come here to support the Girl Scouts and try to win some cookies; because, I'd rather win the cookies than a trophy."

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Capt. John Detro, a 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment soldier, participates in the Girl Scout Cookie Run Saturday held in Phenix City, Ala.

Wendy Olsen was the female first place winner in the 10K military category, and Min Choi took 1st place in the 5K military category.

"I hope we can continue to increase the military involvement over the coming events," Melendez said.

Prevention plan deters shoplifters

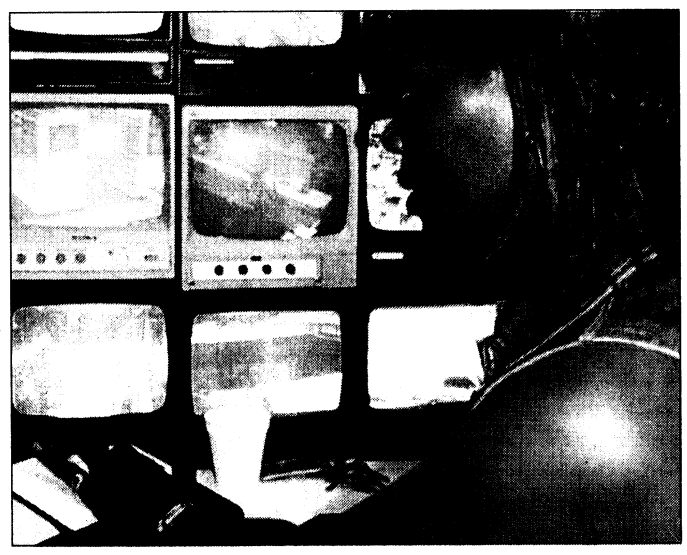
Police tell thieves to think twice or pay high price

Laura Martinson
Bayonet staff

A new loss prevention plan is being implemented at the Main Mall Post Exchange, and post officials are warning shoplifters to think twice before tucking away unpaid merchandise.

"Shoplifting is a crime, and there are people watching," said Donald O'Reilly, general manager, Fort Benning PX.

The deterrence action plan includes a monitor installed at the entrance of the PX, where the customers can see themselves coming into the store.



"This is just a reminder of what our detectives can see on their monitors," said O'Reilly, who said secret shoppers and plain clothed detectives add to the camera surveillance in the PX. "Some of our cameras are as small as a pen tip, so thieves never know when they're being watched."

Additional signage was placed throughout the store in high theft areas and at the PX entrance to serve as a reminder to potential thieves.

"Many of the adults who we catch don't even need what they're taking, but they steal," said O'Reilly, who said the demographics of the crime may surprise some.

Post welcomes soldiers

A platoon from 690th Medical Company returned to Fort Benning early Tuesday morning from a five-month deployment to Kosovo.

They were sent for Task Force Med Falcon and connected with the 86th Combat Support Hospital from Fort Campbell, Ky., as part of Task Force Falcon, a routine peacekeeping mission in Kosovo.

Returning home elated soldiers and family members alike.

"I'm very happy to see my family again," Spc. J Vanteslaar said. "It's the greatest feeling, there's nothing like it."

The feeling was the same on both sides of the ocean.

"I'm really excited my dad is coming back," said John Vanteslaar, 9. "Now that he's back we're going to go do cool stuff like go fishing."

Family members and fellow soldiers waited at the 690th Medical Co. Headquarters, into the early hours of the morning for their soldiers who haven't been home since Nov. 4.

Quality time with family will be very special after the separation.

Fort Knox steps into future

Branches responsible for team effort

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

The Army's transformation is relatively uncertain when looking at the Future Combat System. Nevertheless, there are defined plans as to how the Army's Legacy, Interim and Objective forces will be structured 20 years from now.

Fort Benning is a clear proponent for the interim forces and the Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab, said Col. Edwin Davis, deputy assistant commandant. Fort Knox, Ky., is the proponent for the objective force unit of actions, which is beginning to take shape.

Eight Fort Benning personnel will have temporary duty at Fort Knox to help with the Objective Force proponent and their mounted battle lab.

Fort Benning is supporting the efforts at Fort Knox by providing intelligence, temporary personnel and information about the land warrior as it may pertain to the development of the objective force warrior.

This will not affect the infantry and Fort Benning's responsibility for the individual equipment of all soldiers in a dismounted environment to engage the enemy, said Mike Tryon, deputy Training and Doctrine

New owner of Army posts to take over

Metamorphosis to enhance soldiers' lives

Jim Caldwell
Army News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — When the Transformation of Installation Management goes into effect Oct. 1, the responsibility for maintaining installations not only passes to one of seven regional commands, but the ownership of the land and facilities will pass to the Installation Management Activity.

"It's a significant change from how we have done business throughout my whole career," said Phil Sakowitz, Training and Doctrine Command Deputy Chief of Staff for Base Operations Support.

The IMA is the parent command for the seven TIM regions.

But the TRADOC training centers and schools will not become tenants, as it has been traditionally when an organization is on another MACOM's installation.

"That word, tenant, denotes that you pay for service in kind from the garrison," said Diane Devens, assistant DCSBOS. "That whole tenant-landlord relationship, in my opinion, will go away because those 'tenants' will not pay for services. They will get a standard level of service that is the garrison's mission to provide and is supported by (base operation's) funding."

At first some formal agreements between an organization and the garrison command may be required for services that exceed the standard level of services, Devens said.

She used an example of a notional standard: 90-minute periods for breakfast, lunch and dinner in dining halls. A TRADOC organization may require 120-minute dining periods to feed all of its students, ranging from basic combat training soldiers up through those in leadership courses. An agreement may be required initially to support the extra 30 minutes.

"Eventually that should be greatly minimized," she said. "A garrison's reason for existence is to be a base of support for all missions that are on installations."

While the senior commander on an installation is not responsible for running it, he or she will be the senior rater for the garrison commander on services provided.

Army leadership said the TIM regionalization will enhance quality of life for soldiers and their families. It will ensure that they receive the same high quality of services at nearly every installation.

TIM supports Army Transformation by allowing installations to become flexible enough to respond to any requirement. Mission commanders can now focus on the mission readiness, but still have some influence over support by the installations.

The four TIM regions in the United States are the Northeast, headquartered at Fort Monroe; the Southeast at Fort McPherson, Ga.; Northwest at Rock Island, Ill.; and the Southwest at Fort Sam Houston in San Antonio.

There are TRADOC training centers and schools in all four of those regions.

SPRING BREAK

Teens still too young

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

COMMENTARY

A few years ago I was commiserating with a group of gal pals about the problems full-time working mothers face.

"Yeah, but mine are almost teen-agers now," one woman said. "By the time they're teens, you've really done all you can do for them. You can't babysit them all the time."

I heartily disagreed then and more so now.

I have two teens, and as I've watched them grow, I've come to realize they need me now more than ever. Certainly their needs have changed — they're less physical. Long gone are the days they needed help reaching the toothpaste. Now they're taller than me. And they never ask me to help them with their shoes anymore, though they frequently ask me to drive them to the mall to buy new ones.

Now their needs are far less obvious.

One day several years ago, my oldest son stormed home after school, slamming every door in his wake — intolerable behavior in our house. I opened his bedroom door, ready to launch into a lecture, and found him strewn across the bed fighting tears.

"A kid at school has cancer," he sobbed.

My little boy with the size 12 feet. Facing questions he couldn't answer and feeling emotions he couldn't quite articulate. My heart broke for him, but I was ever so grateful to be there for him at that moment.

He was certainly old enough and big enough to let himself in from school, do his homework and grab a snack. He even knew whom to call in an emergency. But who would he have called to share this kind of pain?

Many times since then I've had occasion to recognize my own relevance in my teen-agers' lives. They need to venture out and test their limits, and they need me to reel them back in when they reach them. They need me to say no when they're not emotionally mature enough to do so. They need me to remind them they are loved totally and unconditionally, no matter what society says about love, friendship, faithfulness and popularity. They need me.

My son recently asked for permission to join a group of his friends on a spring break trip. "Why not?" he begged. "Everyone's going. Their parents are letting them."

Now a lesser woman might feel a little pressured by that last subtle jab, a thinly veiled attempt at parental peer pressure. But not I.

I remembered the horrible case of Andrew Guglielmi, an Ohio student, whose really cool parents bankrolled his spring break trip to Panama City Beach, Fla. An honor student with a good head on his shoulders, Andrew's parents believed he'd make the right decisions about alcohol and drugs. They'd raised a good kid.

Andrew died after falling from a balcony. His father rushed to his side, and found him in an intensive care unit that looked like a war zone, jam packed with young partyers whose parents either didn't know, didn't care, or chose the passive road to parenting, hoping their children would make it out alive.

A fully grown body does not indicate a mature mind. Teens need guidance. They need parents to be parents, not "buds." Good kids can make bad decisions. But then, so do good parents. How can we expect our children to adhere to a "just say no" policy if we're afraid to say no to them?

"No, I won't pay for you to go to Florida. It's dangerous.

"Yes I trust you, but I don't trust everybody else.

"No, and that's final."

Eventually I'll have to cut this cord and let my children go. But not yet. They still need me. They're just teens.

Until that time comes, I'll be content to be the mean mom who loves her children enough to say no.

World needs innovative cleaning products, not better mouse trap

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COMMENTARY

Whoever said, "Build a better mousetrap and the world will beat a path to your door" had a full-time maid. The world doesn't need a better mousetrap, that's what cats are for.

What I would beat a path to your door for are some new and improved housekeeping tools.

Forget mops, brooms and carpet sweepers. I need help, real help.

Something along the lines of a cross between a riding lawn mower and a backhoe. The deluxe model would be built over street cleaner brushes so you could shampoo your carpet as you bulldozed.

Or maybe, instead of the backhoe, a mulcher attachment that would crunch up last week's newspapers, last month's magazines and anything else smaller than a breadbox you choose to feed it.

You could bury the stuff from the indoor mulcher in your back yard and pass it off as a compost pile, earning yourself credit as an urban environmentalist.

And did I mention it was electric?

One overnight charge and you would be set for a whole day of heavy cleaning. Not that you'd need a whole day with that backhoe accessory pack.

If you didn't need a model quite that large, the economy version would be compact and operated by remote control. It would roll on tank-like tracks to help it get up and down the stairs.

Don't tell your kids they're vacuuming. Tell them they're playing with a remote control toy. Get two and let them race them around the house. The vacuuming would be done in record time.

Kitchen cabinets for storing dishes would be much more functional if they doubled as dishwashers. Clear the table, scrape the plates, put them right back in the cabinet, throw in some detergent and turn it on. Think of the time you could save if your cabinet did your dishes for you.

As for bathrooms, my vote is for watertight compartments with 100 percent ceramic tile on all surfaces and a drain in the floor.

Mounted in the ceiling next to the light fixture should be a sprinkler head. Seal the door and turn the sprinkler on for a minute or two. Then, as the water drained out the floor drain, flip an exhaust switch and let the room blow dry. Time crunch? Stand in there during the process to shower, shampoo and blow dry your hair while the bathroom got cleaned. Keep your houseplants in there and they'd be guaranteed a regular watering.

I know a self-cleaning house will never happen. I'll settle for serious modifications to appliances we already have.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Residents need to be part of solution, not problem

I recently attended the town hall meeting for my neighborhood. It's a great forum for residents to voice concerns regarding their community. I feel most of the residents and the community life panel are genuinely concerned about making the post community better. There are very few communities in the "civilian" sector that would give an ear to complaints.

Most complaints were about parking, trash, stray animals, speeding, and again, parking. These are concerns common to any neighborhood.

The next day the MPs had the portable speed bumps and an officer in front of the elementary school. Mark one concern off the long list.

But really, the MPs can only do so much. The responsibility of speeding lies with the individual. Once the speeders realize the MPs are no longer around, they will speed once more.

Parking is an issue in many areas. The newer dwellings were built during the 60s and 70s when families had two cars at most.

But in our neighborhood, there are some residents who have vehicles that haven't moved from the curb in more than a year and are filled with junk. Here's a tip: buy a storage shed.

Stray animals are always a problem in our area. People need to be held accountable for their pets and not be allowed to clear post until those responsibilities are met. And if they don't take care of them, well, send them to the pound to work for a day or two.

The past four duty stations we have lived off post, so this is my family's first time living on post. A few of the considerations that made us want to live here were convenience, safety and it being a bargain. I had heard that if you didn't mow your yard you got a nasty gram. If your garbage cans weren't put away, a nasty gram resulted. So we thought people had to follow the rules, and as long as you follow them, you'll be OK.

Well, it's just not like that. It seems there are not enough MPs, community life officers, and so forth to make people be responsible for what they should be. So, where does that leave us, those that are concerned and want to make a difference?

Those of us who don't care aren't going to be at the town hall meetings to hear the concerns of others. And if they were, would they realize they were part of the problem and not the solution?

63rd Engineer Company completes walking trail

Staff Sgt. Leon Williams, section sergeant, puts the finishing touches on one of the drainage culverts.

Post hospital receives shot of peace in arm

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

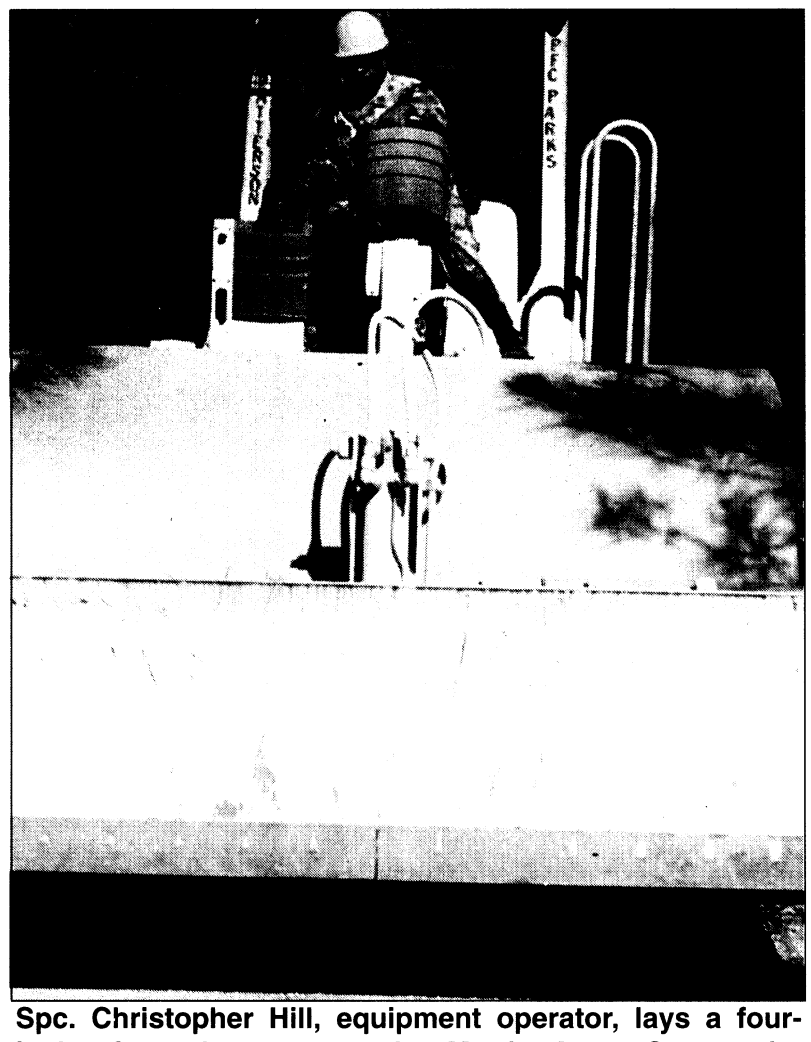
Sometimes the work force of Martin Army Community Hospital may find themselves stressed out, and their patients may be concerned about a medical problem. Many of them need a little peace and tranquility.

Now, thanks to the 63rd Engineer Company, they need only to step outside and take a relaxing nature-filled trip down the new 8-feet wide, half-mile long walking trail.

The trail's ribbon cutting ceremony is at 1:30 p.m. today near the trail's entrance.

"There are plenty of people in the hospital who may need to get away every once in a while," said Staff Sgt. Leon Williams, section sergeant, who was one of the leaders of the three-week project. "I'm glad we could do this for them. Exercise is a great way to relieve stress, and this will definitely give you a little workout."

The trail, open during daylight hours and not to horses, will have eight fitness stations built at various places along the trail. It will also have a gazebo near the entrance.



The engineers hope people will put the trail to good use, said Pfc. Stephen Ross, equipment operator.

"People who have a lot of problems can become one with nature here," Ross said. "It's a good place for praying and for God to talk to them."

Ross envisions many other uses for the trail, such as safe, quiet walks with dates and family outings.

Besides the internal satisfaction of knowing they made a beautiful addition to Fort Benning, soldiers also received good training in the process.

"The soldiers had a lot of hands-on manual labor and operator time on the equipment," Williams said.

Spc. Christopher Hill, equipment operator, lays a four-inch of crusher run on the Martin Army Community Hospital walking trail with a vibrating roller March 29.

The work may pay dividends in the future.

"When I get out in the civilian world, I can say I have plenty of experience and, hopefully, find a good job," Ross said.

Soldiers cut the trail, laid a four-inch lift of crusher run and installed drainage culverts.

"The 63rd Engineers did superb in working with our suggested design," said Lt. Col. John Collins, chief of Logistics, MACH. "They brought it to life."

"The Engineers maintained the naturalistic environment that we desired," he said. "Its construction is designed in a manner that has minimum physical and aesthetic impact on the existing environment."

Furthermore, they did it all without removal of trees.

A separate platoon from the 63rd Engineer Co. simultaneously completed a 50-spot parking lot for the Readiness Processing Center, Building 9224.

The hospital is appreciative to the 36th Engineer Group.

"Both projects were conducted with a perfect safety record and at low cost," Collins said.

"They added value to the relationship between the Medical Command and Forces Command units at Fort Benning. Without doubt, they have contributed to making MACH a better place to perform its function."

Huptoo by Justin Trenary hupptooo@cs.com

The Bayonet to lose "Huptoo" cartoonist

Cartoonist to move to Rucker

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The creator of The Bayonet's "Huptoo" has his marching orders.

Staff Sgt. Justin Trenary, the self-trained artist responsible for the newspaper's regular comic strip, will be taking his talent on the road, perhaps even into the sky, when he leaves for flight school at Fort Rucker.

A ranger instructor and dive team supervisor at the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, Trenary (rhymes with greenery) has been penning spoofs about Army life for just over a year.

"I've accomplished what I set out to," Trenary said. "I committed to a year, and I wanted to see if I could consistently come up with material for that long. It's been a great experience — a learning experience, but it's also very demanding and things are kinda crazy right now, so it's a good time to take a break."

"Kinda crazy" means extremely busy, Trenary said. He's gearing up to compete in the Best Ranger Competition later this month and making plans to move to Fort Rucker sometime this summer.

Bridgett Siter

Staff Sgt. Justin Trenary says good-bye to Fort Benning, hello to new possibilities.

> "It's an easy way to convey my ideas about the Army, to poke fun at it sometimes. I enjoy being a soldier. I take it very seriously, but I tend to see the humor in situations or issues soldiers deal with everyday."
> Staff Sgt. Justin Trenary
> "Huptoo" creator

And though he's taking a hiatus from his artwork, Trenary said he expects his Army career will continue to provide inspiration for Huptoo.

"I'll carry it on, eventually. It's too much fun not to," he said. "It's an easy way to convey my ideas about the Army, to poke fun at it sometimes. I enjoy being a soldier. I take it very seriously, but I tend to see the humor in situations or issues soldiers deal with everyday. There's a lot of humor in the Army."

Trenary grew up reading Marvel Comics and creating his own larger-than-life characters on paper. More than a year ago he began toying with the idea of creating a series of his own.

"I was in a really boring class one day and the idea hit me," he said. "That's when I do my best work I guess ... when I should be concentrating on something else."

For now Trenary plans to concentrate on his career, but he eventually hopes to see Huptoo published in other post newspapers and the Army Times.

"That's my goal, to be read regularly in the Army Times. And someday I think I'll try another venue, something that'll appeal to a larger audience," he said. "I don't know what that is, yet, but maybe I'll use some of my characters from Huptoo. The platypus was always my favorite."

The 26-year-old Oklahoma native, and his wife, Darcey, a Title One Reading teacher at Eastway Elementary in Columbus, look forward to "something new" at Fort Rucker, but they said they'll miss their friends and family at Fort Benning. Trenary's brother, Warrant Officer Chad Trenary, and his family are stationed at Fort Benning.

Anyone who wants to receive an e-mail copy of a Huptoo strip from the past year can e-mail Trenary at hupptooo@cs.com.

Concept brought to life

Robot hangs upside down, climbs walls

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

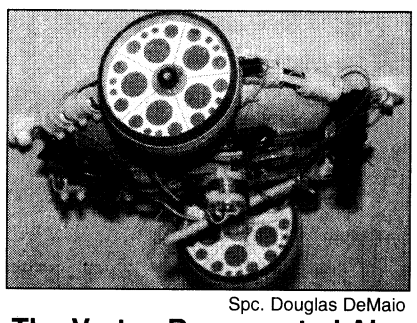
What if a robot could secure, analyze and report changes in an environment to support soldiers in peace-keeping missions or objective operations?

The concept is nothing new to infantry soldiers who spend many nights securing an area thinking of gadgets to help them perform their duties. What's new, however, is technology is beginning to catch up with this strategic concept.

Lockheed Martin and Avionic Instruments Inc. demonstrated the capabilities of the Vortex Regenerated Air Movement vehicle, a robot with the above strategic concept, to members of the Directorate of Combat Development March 27 at McKenna MOUT site.

The VRAM, a robot prototype, can climb walls and maneuver while hanging from a ceiling. The suction motor and design allows air to regenerate through a sort of cylinder, creating a hovering suction movement.

"DCD is interested in the capabilities of the VRAM for the infantry," said Sara Faye Anderson, project officer of robotics for DCD. "We would like to use it in a MOUT environment."



The robot has a lot of good concepts and capabilities, Anderson said. It's used for force protection, reconnaissance and security. It can be very useful to soldiers.

Lockheed Martin is developing the target acquisition system that will determine whether a vehicle is friendly or hostile and will then acquire the target for destruction, said Beth Whitmire, Lockheed Martin research and technology business development manager.

The acquisition system is a laser and guidance system.

"We like to put ordnance on targets," Whitmire said. "The software will filter all the excess clutter out and determine whether the object is a target or not."

The robot can do more than destroy the enemy, Anderson said. It can help save soldiers lives.

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

The Vortex Regenerated Air Movement vehicle as tested at the MOUT site.

"Any time there is something developed to keep soldiers out of harms way, we'll be interested in it," Anderson said.

Officials with Lockheed Martin and Avionic Instruments Inc. said testing the prototype at McKenna has aided their abilities to improve the prototype by providing performance data, insightful feedback and points of contact to help improve the product.

"Being here and doing experiments have really allowed us to advance our project and has helped us come up with new ideas," said Bryce Wiedeman, vice president of operations for Avionic Instruments Inc.

AKO provides access to personal files

Site gives users chance to check, update info

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Imagine trying to connect all 4,500 of the Army's computer servers in one.

Sounds pretty mind-boggling. However, the Office of Personnel Management Division is trying to do it by October for the Army Knowledge Online portal.

"Right now, the AKO portal allows us to send and receive e-mail, chat online, get information on almost anything in the Army and search for friends in the white pages," said Capt. Brandon Newton, assignment officer for the Infantry Branch. "We're in the process of improving the portal to where a soldier can get travel vouchers, DA photos, preference their duty assignments or look at their individual file."

The strategy is to transform itself into a network-centric, knowledge-based force, according to the AKO Web site. It's an integral part of Army transformation. The intent is, by July, the Army will conduct the majority of its internal business through the AKO portal, according to the Web site.

"Accounts will keep increasing and more and more soldiers will do their daily business on AKO," Newton said.

Currently, there are more than 890,000 AKO accounts. With the transformation, estimations on the Web site predict that by the end of the year there will be more than 1.25 million accounts on AKO.

"The future AKO will allow soldiers to access anything they need to on the Web," Newton said. "The information age is upon us, and AKO is leading the way into the future."

With all of the new changes being made to AKO, more people will get connected to it. In a few years, everyone in the military will be doing their business over the AKO portal, he said.

Fort Benning CRM receives Secretary of Army award

Post receives recognition for environment

Danielle G. Durante
Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

Fort Benning Cultural Resource Management won the Secretary of the Army Environmental Award for fiscal 2001. They are now competing at the Department of Defense level.

The award was a great honor for the installation, said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

Environmental stewardship is important to Fort Benning, Stelzer said. Through the consultation's with 11 federally recognized tribes, and the Historic Preservation Offices of Georgia and Alabama, the post has demonstrated it can meet its mission objectives while protecting, preserving and sharing the cultural significance of these historic lands.

Fort Benning will receive the award April 30 at the Pentagon.

Winning the award makes Dr. Chris Hamilton, Cultural Resource manager, proud.

"Receiving the highest award the U.S. Army can bestow for cultural resource management provides everyone with proof of Fort Benning's successful stewardship of our irreplaceable cultural heritage," he said.

Shoplifting: Doesn't pay

percent of all shoplifters in 2001, up from 34 percent in 1999. The next highest group was juveniles at 12 percent in 2001, down from 29 percent in 1999.

Active-duty military members made up 27 percent of all AAFES theft, and retirees made up only 3 percent.

One trend in the shoplifting cases was found in the category labeled "other," which were mainly made up of unauthorized juveniles being signed into the PX by a juvenile military family member.

"We deal with this crime on a daily basis," said O'Reilly, who came to Fort Benning in 2000. Since then he enacted a rule banning all family members under the age of 18 from signing in another person.

The "hot" areas, or those most likely to be a thief's prey, are music, cosmetics, cologne and electronics.

"There's a common misconception that the PX makes up for shoplifting losses by upping the price of goods, but that is absolutely not true," O'Reilly said.

What the thief is actually stealing are the dividend dollars that go back into the community, he said. AAFES put $2.4 million back into the Fort Benning community in 2001.

Shoplifters also shortchange the money that goes back to the Department of the Army. Those moneys are used to fund bigger projects on post, for instance, building a new bowling alley.

In 2000, all AAFES facilities put a combined $260 million back into the DA pot. To reduce the effect shoplifting may have on either fund, a civil recovery policy was enacted less than one month ago.

A fee of $200 is charged to each shoplifter, in addition to any criminal fines or imprisonment.

In order for a shoplifter to be detained, he must leave the store with the stolen merchandise. An undercover detective will then approach the thief and return him to the store for questioning. The real embarrassment comes when the shoplifter is handcuffed and escorted out of the PX and to the MP station where he'll be formally charged.

The red flag also goes up when shoppers ask for repeated refunds or exchanges without a receipt.

"The crime generates a criminal record, and it stays there forever," said Capt. David Anglin, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

Shoplifters will be prosecuted by a local magistrate and incur fines up to $1,000 and could face imprisonment. Their shopping privileges at the PX are also suspended for six months, but their names go into the AAFES system as a shoplifter indefinitely.

A soldier's chain of command may also take its own sanctions against offenders.

"If you're thinking about shoplifting, think again," Anglin said.

"I don't tolerate stealing because of my upbringing," O'Reilly said, "but we also have a mission to improve the quality of life for the people of Fort Benning.

"Think twice," he said. "It's not worth it. Think about your future."

690th: Comes home from deployments to Kosovo

690th Medical Company soldiers return by truck to the battalion headquarters.

This is our first deployment," said Julie Vanteslaar, family support coordinator. "It was very difficult in the beginning. Once we got through the holidays it flew by."

The deployment went great, said Capt. Derrell Humphries, company commander.

"We were a vital asset to the mission," said 1st Lt. Brande Campbell, platoon leader. "Without a ground ambulance unit there, you can't transfer the patients because it can rarely be done by air due to the weather conditions over there."

The soldiers also ran sick call and acted as emergency medical technicians. They performed ground evacuation missions and worked at a combat support hospital. They also logged 18,000 accident-free miles transporting between hospitals.

"We did a lot of good stuff and created new standards," Campbell said. "I think we have brought back a more mission focused group to help us on training for what's to come."

Before leaving, the platoon was part of Medical Proficiency Exercise, three mass casualty exercises and received advanced medical training.

"All of the training we did paid off," Campbell said.

"They all received a lot of hands-on training experience to take with them because you can't get that in garrison."

The soldiers trained with the United Kingdom, Sweden and Finland on a joint evacuation.

"The best part is when you brought a patient in close to death, then two weeks later take them back to their house because they received treatment and successfully recovered," Campbell said.

She said she was proud of her soldiers.

"My soldiers did a great job," Campbell said. "Everyone said they performed well, and I think the same standard will continue at the company."

Program: Explains how Fort Benning will lead Army

System Manger-Soldier.

"Battlefield functions will not change for the next 10 to 15 years," said Jim Stone, director Combat Development. "The tactics we've taught for years and years will not change. We still need to be able to execute, and we (the Home of the Infantry) will be busy for a long time."

Fort Benning is the subject matter expert and lead for the future soldier, Stone said.

"We will work with Fort Knox to get things right for the future of the Army," Davis said. "We have a say so about developments and will make sure our concerns are expressed. We want to enter the battlefield with the best equipment, soldiers and technology."

The objective force is a great step toward the Army's transformation and the Future Combat System, a series of systems across the entire spectrum of military operations, Stone said.

Developing the Army's Objective Force will require information to be transmitted between many installations to organize experiments, technologies and doctrine for Fort Knox.

"We will stay connected with the various branches across the nation," Davis said. "We can link with them and provide information in support of the operation."

The eight Fort Benning personnel are part of a team of 40 from all over the Army who will support the overall effort of the team, Davis said.

"They're going to do a good job for us," Davis said. "The Future Combat System will be the outcome of a team effort, and we'll support it."

TIM: Goes into effect in October, will improve Army posts

The three overseas regions are the Pacific Region at Fort Shafter, Hawaii, for Army installations there, Alaska and Japan; and in Europe and Korea.

TRADOC at Fort Monroe and Forces Command at Fort McPherson have large enough installation management staffs to transfer over to respective regional headquarters, Devens said.

However, the Northwest and Southwest Regions do not have those large staffs, so they will have to recruit those people.

The people working there at DCSBOS and Deputy Chief of Staff for Resource Management, whose positions are selected for transfer to the new organizations will, for the most part, become part of the region or the IMA without moving from their desks for the first two years. Devens said that's called "capitalizing in place," the Army's Assistant Chief of Staff of Installations' plan to minimize personnel turbulence.

Devens said the TIM Task Force is still working on Organization and Operations plan. That must be completed before personnel manning documents can be drawn up, and the functions that are considered to be installation management or mission are identified.

"The MACOM commanders still need staffs to carry out their missions," said Joe Jefferis, TRADOC DCSRM. "The mission organizations require many of the same functions as installation management. The question is how many people should be at MACOMs and how many at the training centers and schools to support the TRADOC mission."

One of the first things the regions must do is to prepare an operating budget for fiscal 2004-09, Jefferis said. "Until that is approved, the regions will be operating with money approved in the previous budget cycle."

The regions are supposed to be fully operable in two years after they're activated, Devens said.

While there will be opportunities for people who will move to compete for jobs at all regions, he urges patience.

"You'll see the bulk of the personnel actions after October," she said.

She also said that the current plan is for each stateside region to be led by a senior executive service civilian. The three overseas regions may be commanded by brigadier generals.

If an individual at TRADOC headquarters is working on a project for a former TRADOC installation in the Southwest region when he or she becomes part of the Northeast region, the project will move with the person, according to Jefferis.

"That prevents disruption and delays, and allows for control of the budget until the project is completed," he said.

> "The human resources plan will be employee friendly."
> Phil Sakowitz
> TRADOC base operations

"The human resources plan will be employee friendly," Sakowitz said. "It will probably include the traditional options of the Voluntary Separation Incentive Program and other programs."

Many people who have seen Saving Private Ryan remember when the American soldier engaged in a hand-to-hand struggle with the knife-armed Nazi soldier and the scene's tragic outcome.

Hand-to-hand combat is still a realistic factor in Afghanistan, the Philippines and other areas of conflict, and soldiers in the Infantry Officer Basic Course hope to be victorious if they find themselves face-to-face with the enemy.

They are learning combatives at the 11th Regiment Combatives Center to help reach that objective.

"The Army has long seen the need for a combatives program," said 2nd Lt. Thomas Scaife, combatives instructor.

Classes start with ground grappling from Brazilian Jiu Jitsu.

"Jiu Jitsu is learned with ease," said Scaife. "The basic techniques teach the strategies and movements required to learn more difficult standing techniques."

This training teaches soldiers what to do in any grappling situation, Scaife said.

"In time, they will know how to react on instinct, using what they have learned," he said.

The course is physically challenging, said 2nd Lt. Daniel Bugbee, a student in IOBC class 2–02.

"It makes a more well-rounded soldier, able to fight with his hands as well as his weapon," Bugbee said.

The course's goals are not only to make the officers better fighters, but to build their confidence as leaders.

"The reason these classes are important is it provides leaders with a fighting instinct that no other program can," Scaife said.

The classes are open to anyone who wants to hone their skills as a soldier, Scaife said. The course has staff on hand to provide technical support for soldiers during their free time.

"This unique combatives program is more effective than earlier programs," Scaife said. "It teaches a fighting strategy as well as technique."

The officers each receive 15 hours of instruction and more than 10 different classes, learning the fundamentals of combatives.

"Compared to old programs, this one is more believable," said 2nd Lt. Brian Collins, student. "Each move leads to another. It flows very fluidly."

Daily instructors try to improve the course.

"Combatives is a constantly evolving entity," Scaife said. "We are always open to new ideas."

Jiu Jitsu is not the only martial art with which the program trains.

It also uses techniques from other martial arts, such as Muay-Thai kick boxing, wrestling and Judo, to name a few.

Soldiers do not have to be in combat to use this training. They could be on duty in a garrison environment and need to detain an assailant, and this class sets them up for success.

"These skills can help in peace as well as in war," Collins said. "You can use them to restrain the enemy or take it further if need be."

This training is yet another example of why the American Army is the best prepared fighting force in the world, Scaife said.

"The defining characteristic of a warrior is the willingness to close with the enemy," said Sgt. 1st Class Mathew Larsen, master combatives instructor.

Basic trainees face challenges, defeat fears

Soldiers go through tough course

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Concentration is tough for soldiers when they are walking on planks 30 feet above the ground.

For other soldiers, it is harder to keep the nerve to complete the task.

For the soldiers of C Company 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, there was more to the confidence obstacle course than they expected, as they learned March 28.

"When you're 30 feet in the air, it's hard to focus on the obstacle," said Pvt. Jeremy Barnes. "You're too worried about falling."

"The hardest thing for the soldiers to do is take the first step," said 1st Sgt. Troy Bergeron, C Company first sergeant. "After they take the first step, it is easy for them to negotiate the obstacle."

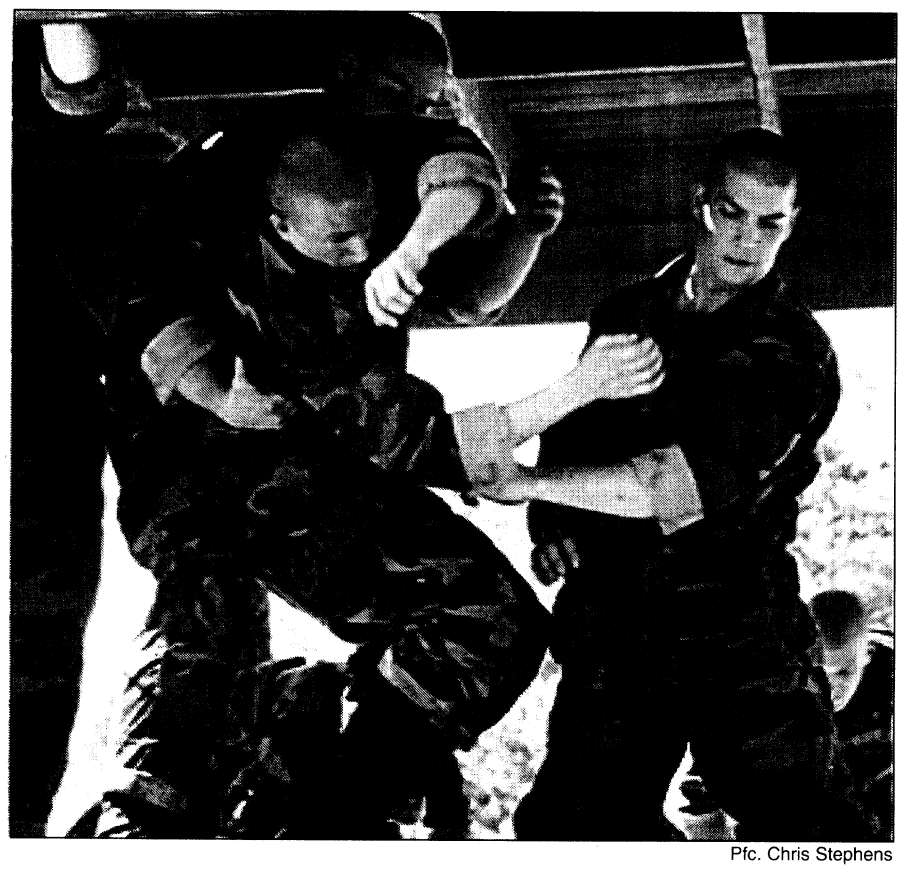
Once soldiers were on the obstacles, their buddies coached them through.

"We have to cheer each other on," Barnes said. "There are a lot of egos and by helping each other out and cheering each other on, we will come together as a team."

Teamwork is an important part of basic training. It is one of the keys to getting through the training, Bergeron said.

"We like for the soldiers to cheer one another on," Bergeron said. "But, when their buddies' cheering isn't helping them, it is time for the drill sergeants to do the talking."

Whenever the drill sergeant takes over the talking, he will do everything possible to push the soldiers' buttons to get them to succeed, which in this case is to negotiate the obstacle.



For the soldiers who complete the obstacles, there is nothing but pride.

"For some of us, we have a fear of heights, and when we can complete these obstacles, it feels good," Barnes said.

Some soldiers though, are not able to properly complete an obstacle because of physical or mental limitations.

However, it won't be their last chance at the obstacle course. They have two more chances later in training to finish what they started.

"We know what the course is like and what is expected of us next time we come out here," Barnes said. "We'll be ready to prove to the drill sergeants that we can do it."

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION

'Keeping children safe is everyone's business'

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

"That was a terrible decision for me to make. It was horrible, but I truly believed she was going to kill them," said one anonymous Fort Benning resident who called child protective services when the children she was baby-sitting showed blatantly obvious signs of physical abuse.

Of the three children living in the home, two were the woman's stepchildren, and both were objects of scorn in their stepmother's eyes, the source said. They were visiting their father for the summer, but he had gone away for a routine training mission.

"We were only vaguely acquainted when she asked me to watch her children, but I had heard rumors about the way she treated them," she said. She had, in fact, heard about the time the woman held her stepson's head underwater in the pool with her foot, and had also heard that the children, ages 2 to 6, were often left alone in the home, and that the home itself was all but unliveable. She had also heard, and thought absurd, that the woman had used some sort of sex toy to bind the children's ankles and wrists together as punishment.

But that was all hearsay. She had no real evidence, until the children came to her home.

"When she dropped them off at my house, the little boy had a sock duct taped to his arm to keep him from itching his ear," the source said. "She handed me a metal spoon and told me if he itched it to whack his knuckles with the spoon."

The 4-year-old boy had his ears pierced, and the obvious infection brewing there was causing him pain.

"They weren't at my house for an hour before I made the call," the source said. "They came and got the children almost immediately. When they questioned her, she said, 'Yeah, I did all of that, what's wrong with it?' She was crazy."

The end result was a woman, pregnant with her second child, in counseling, medicated and taking classes on how to keep a clean home. The father, returning early from his training, had to choose between a sick wife and custody of his children.

Beyond the mental and physical turmoil and a future of unknown memories for the children, the whole ordeal ended up costing a man his family, and some innocent children, their father.

While many people think that military communities are exempt from such atrocities, this happened at an Army installation.

More than 3 million children are reported abused or neglected each year, and three children die each day as a result of maltreatment.

And while many may think physical abuse is the only form of abuse, emotional and sexual abuse, as well as neglect can have lasting effects on a child as well.

Emotional abuse is the most difficult form to verify, said Becky Welch, Family Advocacy Program manager. It includes both verbal assaults as well as the withholding of positive emotional support.

"Although the scars may be invisible to the naked eye, emotional abuse wounds the spirit, frequently leaving its mark for a lifetime," Welch said.

The goal of the Family Advocacy Program is to educate families and direct them to services that will help the families solve their problems, not to create problems for them, Welch said.

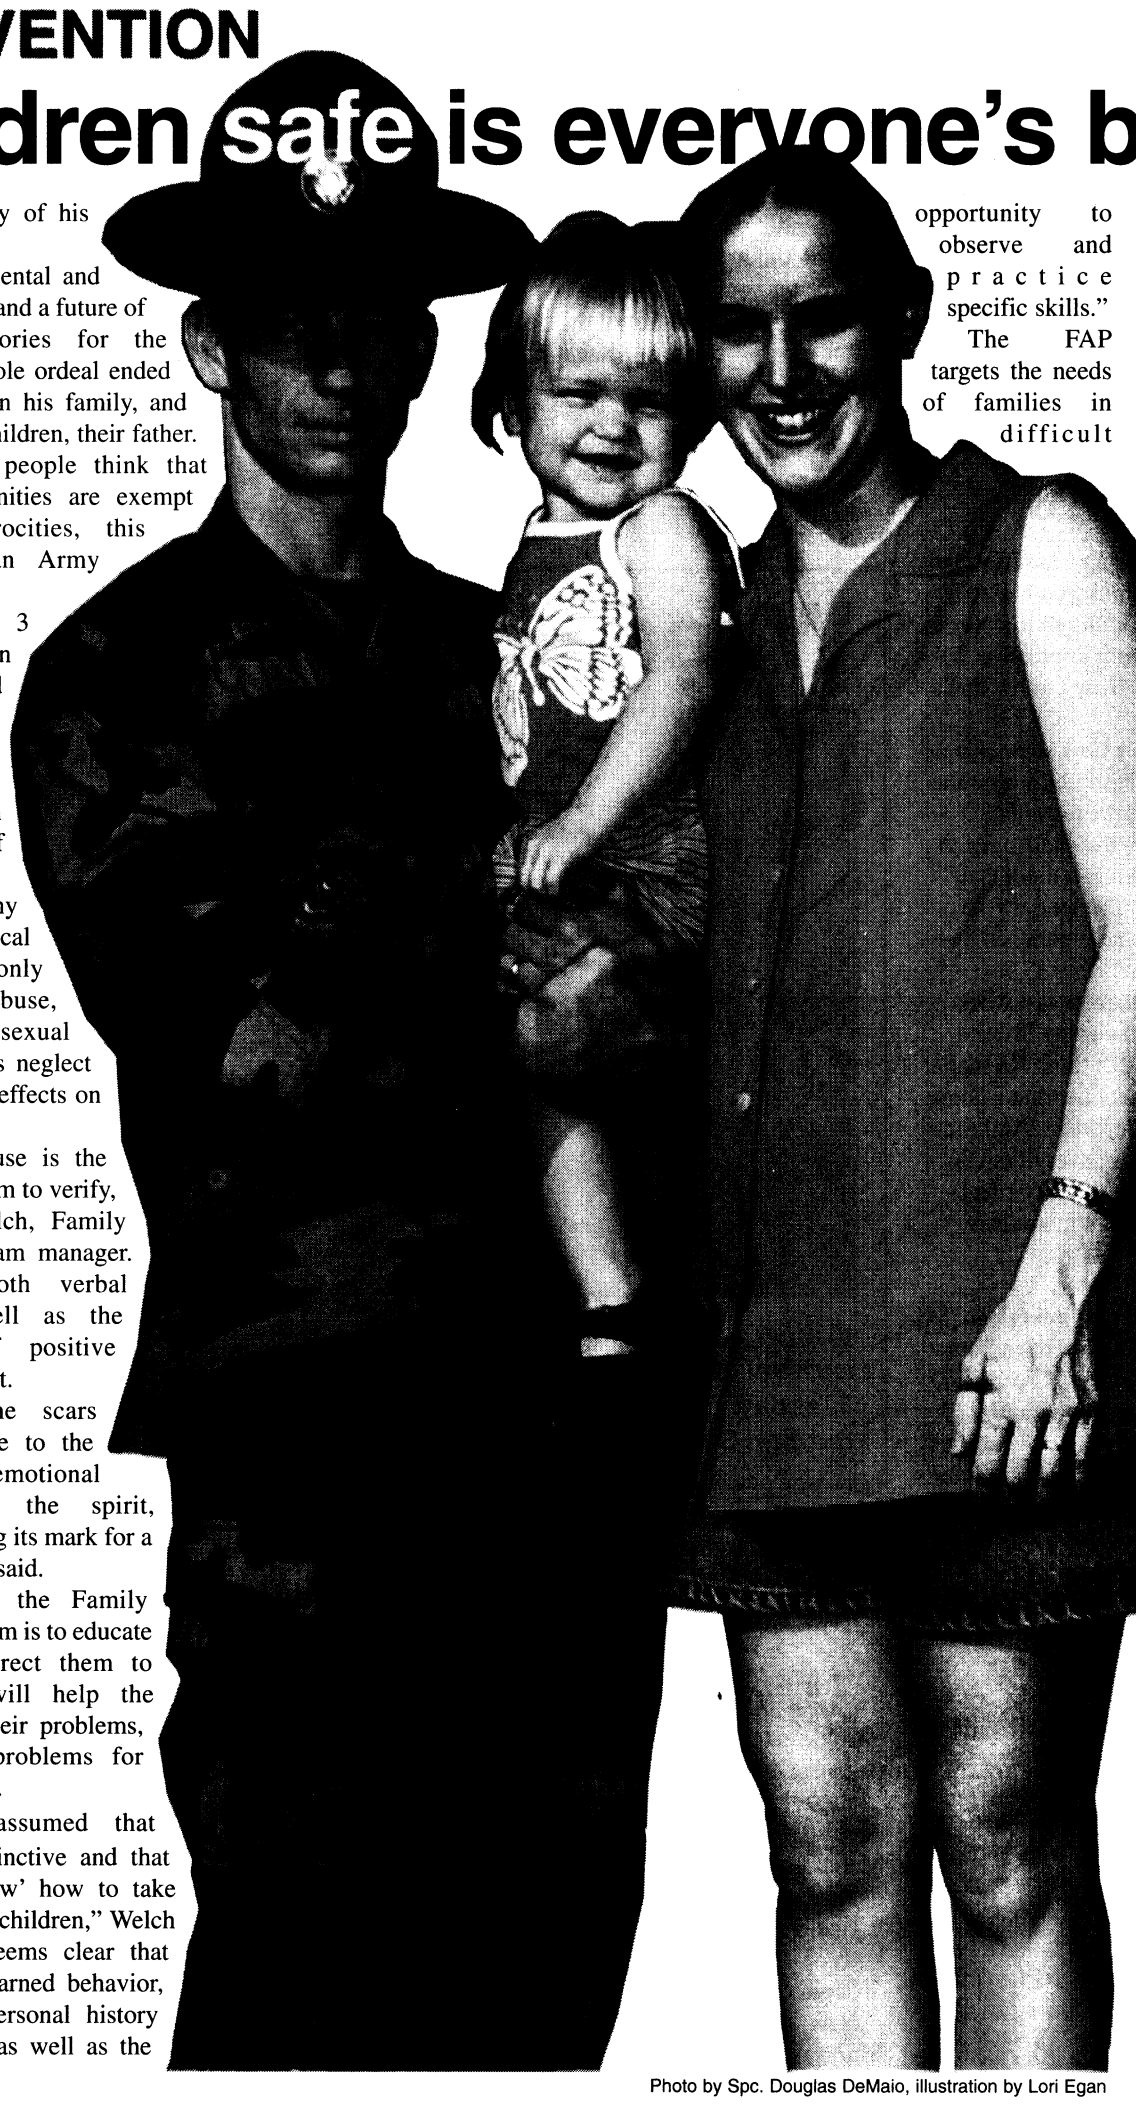
"It's been assumed that parenting is instinctive and that people just 'know' how to take care of and raise children," Welch said. "It now seems clear that parenting is a learned behavior, influenced by personal history and experience, as well as the opportunity to observe and practice specific skills."

The FAP targets the needs of families in difficult situations by providing educational tools and other resources to get back on the right track.

"There are a lot of pressures that soldiers have to deal with," said Lt. Col. Reginald Pugh, chief of Social Work Services. "Neglect has been found to increase when soldiers are deployed, and when soldiers return there is a rise in spousal abuse.

"We are here to help families resolve whatever problem they're having without resorting to physical violence."

A parent education course teaches parents how to interact effectively with their children and to create a safe home environment.



Respite child care provides temporary care for the purpose of relieving parental stress and providing a nurturing environment.

Spouse abuse shelters in the area provide 24-hour temporary accommodation to ensure there is a safe place for victims to stay. The shelters give emotional and material support to victims of spouse abuse and their children.

"A lot of people think we are out to punish soldiers and their families if an incident is reported or a call is made," Welch said. "This is a misconception."

"Keeping children safe is the responsibility of everyone," Welch said. "The more we know about the problem, the more we can do to prevent it. We must all do our part."

"Abuse that goes unreported can end up costing a life," Pugh said. "You never really know what's going on in a home, so make the call. It could end up saving someone's life."

Staff Sgt. James Vchulek, Audrey, 22 months, and Jennifer, who is expecting a son in August, are one of many military families taking a stand against child abuse.

TYPES OF ABUSE

Physical Abuse

The term "child abuse" can be defined as any behavior directed toward a child by a parent, guardian or caregiver that endangers or impairs a child's physical or emotional health and development.

What to look for:

• Unexplained injuries, especially those located on parts of the body not usually affected by normal childhood activities (e.g. eyes, mouth, back, thighs, buttocks or genital areas).

• Repeated injuries such as bruises, welts or burns, especially those where the shape of an object used to produce them is visible (e.g. an electric cord, hair brush, belt buckle, board, cigarette).

• Unexplained fractures (e.g. to nose, face, ribs)

• Denial on the part of the parents that anything is wrong, unlikely explanations for the child's injuries, delay in obtaining medical care or inadequate care given, injuries which occur with increasing frequency or severity.

Emotional Abuse

Emotional abuse is the most difficult form of child abuse to verify. It includes both verbal assaults and the withholding of positive emotional support.

Victims of emotional child abuse are "hit" every day with the power of words which are demeaning, shaming, threatening, blaming, intimidating, unfairly critical, or sarcastic in nature.

What to look for:

• The child displays behavior that is extreme. For instance, the child may begin a pattern of lying, stealing, fighting, is overly aggressive, or acts out inappropriately.

• The child may appear defensive, shy or overly dependent.

• The child may be verbally abusive to others by using the same language and demeaning terms she has experienced.

Neglect

Child neglect is the continued failure to provide a child with necessary care and protection including adequate shelter, food, clothing and medical care.

Children left without appropriate supervision, especially young children, for extended periods of time are included in child neglect.

What to look for:

• Child appears poorly nourished or inadequately clothed.

• Child appears consistently tired or listless and always seems as though no one cares. Attendance at school may be inconsistent.

• Child evidences a consistent lack of good hygiene, or an obsession with cleanliness.

• Child is left alone regularly over long periods of time, or in dangerous situations.

• Child shows evidence that medical needs are not being met.

Sexual Abuse

Many sexual offenders are adults with whom the child is familiar, and they may repeatedly abuse the same child.

The abuse can be nonphysical, for example, indecent exposure, obscene phone calls or 'peeping toms'; physical, including genital or oral stimulation, fondling and intercourse or rape.

Incidents may occur only once or be repeated many times, sometimes over the a number of years.

A single seemingly minor incident such as indecent exposure, can cause embarrassment, fear, confusion, guilt, anxiety, and a distrust of adults. A more severe incident can have a lasting effect on a child.

What to look for:

• Behavioral problems such as withdrawal, difficulty at school, aggression, running away, nightmares, extreme depression, or anxiety may result.

• Physical signs of sexual abuse may include genital swelling, cuts or bruises, venereal disease, or pregnancy.

• Symptoms arising from emotional harm often do not surface until adulthood.

What to do:

First and foremost, do not deny the problem.

Control your emotions. Let the child know that your feelings are not directed at her. Seek counseling for you and the child.

Never blame, punish or embarrass the child.

Reassure the child that he is safe and it was right to tell you. Let the child ask questions, and give understandable answers.

Delicately find out as much as possible about the events leading up to, during and after the incidents.

Immediately contact a physician for treatment.

Get counseling for you and the child.

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Tippie Ford,

a kindergarten teacher at McBride Elementary.

Personal: The Georgia native resides in Columbus with her husband, Eddie and her 16-year-old daughter, Tamara.

History: While in college, Ford was not sure of exactly what she wanted to do with the rest of her life, and changed majors several times. She had no plans to teach as a career until she took a job as a teacher's aide during her last year of college.

"I just took the job because it was something part-time that put a little money in my pocket," she said.

But when she was put into a classroom of what were then called "slow" seventh-and eighth-graders, her plans changed.

"These were kids who were all basically labeled as failures," she said. "One of them is a teacher now, and one of them was an eighth-grade nonreader, and I taught her to read. It was that experience that made me want to teach."

She graduated from Tift University with a double major in English and Spanish, and learned Arabic when she taught English as a second language to women from Saudi Arabia.

Ford later got her master's in early childhood education from Georgia Southwestern, and has taught kindergarten through eighth grade since she started teaching in 1978. She's been teaching at Fort Benning schools since 1984.

On small-town life: Ford's childhood was split between two small towns in Georgia, Butler and Reynolds, which are about seven miles apart.

"If you stuck your toe out the backdoor, it was on the front page of the newspaper," she said. "Everybody makes everybody else's business their own, and I'm a very private person.

"That's why I love the military community. People are so open-minded and less judgmental. In the little school I taught at before, a new child would be labeled as an outcast on the first day of school and remain that way for an entire school year. But I've seen new children come into Fort Benning schools, and the children welcome them and make them feel like they fit in by the end of the first day.

That's indicative of what the parents are doing.

"Education is teaching about life and respect for other people," she said.

On teaching kindergarten: "I used to think you had to teach older children in order to make a lasting impression," Ford said. "Now I know that's not true.

"I can see how some people might get frustrated from time to time, but the rewards overshadow the challenges, if you can even call them that," Ford said. "The longer I've taught, the more patience I've gained.

"I read a quote last week written by a teacher. It went something like this, 'No matter how bad I feel or what's going on in my life, when I walk into the classroom, everything is good.' That's the way I feel about it, but it's more than good, it's great."

Hobbies and interests: "My first love is children, and my second is animals," Ford said.

She has a 29-year old daughter, Angela, with whom she owns a local pet-grooming business.

"At one point in college, I thought I was going to be a veterinarian," she said.

"I also love poetry, and we use a lot of poetry in the classroom," Ford said.

"With my true profession of teaching, my second profession as a business owner, and running my 16-year-old around, most of my extra time is taken up."

Future plans: "I have no ambition of ever retiring," she said. "I just don't want to do that."

What others are saying about her: "My daughter is learning so much through Mrs. Ford," said Heather Jones, whose 6-year-old daughter, Miranda, is in Ford's class. "She takes the time and effort to work with each and every student. As she says, 'They are all my kids!'"

Red Cross recognizes volunteers

Red Cross sets example for helping others

In President George W. Bush's recent State of Union Address, he asked all youths in America to commit at least two years — 4,000 hours over the rest of their lifetime — to the service of their neighbors and their nation.

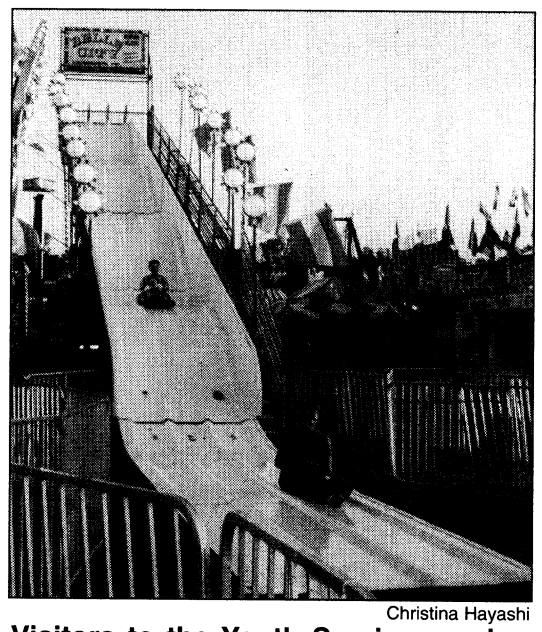
For the numerous volunteers at the Red Cross on Fort Benning, they take their duty seriously.

Ninety volunteers were recognized at Riverside, the home of the commanding general, last week for their efforts in keeping Fort Benning running.

"It's a chance to honor outstanding volunteers," said Lionel Grant, Red Cross station manager.

Martin Army Community Hospital is one beneficiary of Red Cross volunteers.

"It's a chance to help people who need help," said retired Col. Roy Brooks, the shuttle supervisor and driver at the hospital. His wife Reva is also a driver.



"It's one way to give back something after receiving so much," said retired Sgt. Maj. Calvin Morse, who is the hospital chairman.

First Steps is one program that relies on volunteers. First Steps provides mothers who give birth at Martin Army Community Hospital information and pairs them up with other women who have experience in raising children. These women follow up with the new mothers to see how they are doing, if they need assistance or just need to talk to someone who knows what they are going through.

"I like to volunteer (with First Steps) because it gives new moms a point of contact for comfort and support, especially for those who don't have anyone in the area," said Karen Nichols, family member.

After the ceremony, P.J. Eaton, the commanding general's wife, challenged the volunteers to bring one person on board to volunteer. For those interested in volunteering for the Red Cross on Fort Benning, go to Building 2626 in Soldier's Plaza from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

CELEBRATING STUDENTS' SUCCESS

Students learn about disabilities

One of the students tries to play basketball with his arm in a sling.

Loyd Elementary School

The week of March 4-8 was Exceptional Children's Week on Fort Benning. The theme of the week was "Celebrating Students' Success."

At Loyd School, we had several events planned for the week. A bulletin board highlighted people who have succeeded by overcoming their disabilities. These individuals include Franklin Delano Roosevelt, Tom Cruise, Christopher Reeves, Stephen Hawkins, Whoopi Goldberg and Goya.

A quiz was also included to match people with their accomplishments and disabilities.

The PE classes were set up for students who pretended to have disabilities. Special education classes were mainstreamed into the PE classes. The students drew a card to see what type of disability they were to portray. The students partnered off with someone who had chosen the same disability. One activity included partners putting on a blindfold, moving around crates, picking up a beanie baby, describing the beanie baby by feel, then putting the beanie baby in a crate — all with the minimal help of their partner. Other activities involved students tying their arms in slings, walking with crutches, hopping with one leg, and rolling in wheelchairs while trying to shoot basketballs, jumping rope, riding a scooter or throwing a Frisbee.

The students did find it difficult to do certain activities with their disability. They discussed what happened at the end of each class. Most agree they are now more aware and sensitive to those with disabilities. Because of this, they agreed not to make fun of people with disabilities.

At the end of the week, the Dawson Side Sliders, from Dawson Elementary School, performed at Loyd School. This group of line dancers is composed of third-, fourth-, and fifth-grade students. Three-fourths of the students are exceptional students of varying disabilities, and one-fourth of the group is from the general education population.

The Side Sliders performed seven dances, some involving the teachers of Loyd School.

Students simulate disabilities by restricting their physical abilities during the Week of the Exceptional Child.

The students from Dawson Elementary School were an excellent example of students succeeding despite disabilities. Not only have they shown talent in music and movement, but they also consistently show tremendous growth in math or reading. Loyd students were not aware that these students had disabilities because their talent was so outstanding.

These events at Loyd School allowed the students to experience disabilities and see success in disabled children. Our celebration helped us realize we are more alike than different. It was a wonderful learning experience shared by all our students.

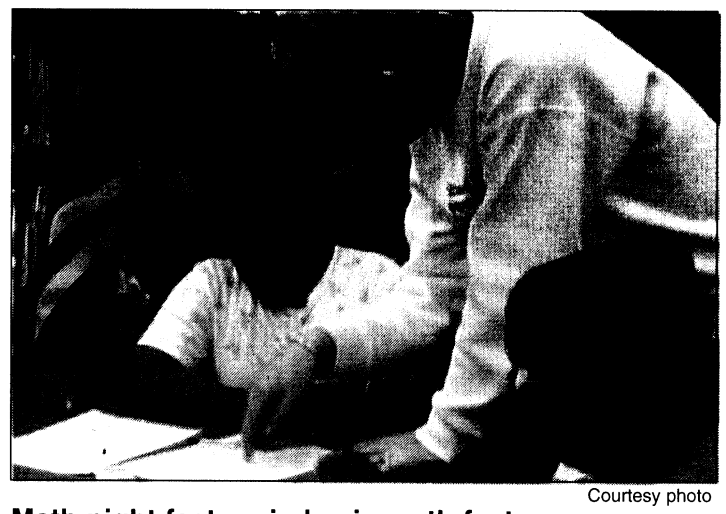
Students + parents = Loyd School math night

Loyd Elementary School

Whoever said math was boring was not at Loyd School's Math Night March 7.

Approximately 130 parents and students joined teachers, educational aides and the principal in an evening dedicated to math. There were hotdogs, chips, drinks, a variety of deserts. The cafeteria was filled with parents and children from kindergarten to second grade, while the media center was entertaining and educating parents and children in the third to fifth grade.

The younger children and their parents worked on solving unique math problems such as peanut addition. In one activity, children rolled dice to see what two numbers they needed to add together. Styrofoam peanuts were used to solve the problem, and answers were recorded on elephant shaped paper. After 15 minutes, the children and parents rotated to the next activity. By 7 p.m., they had an opportunity to complete four different and challenging math games.



Meanwhile, the parents and older children were working on different, more difficult math activities. Many parents suddenly realized how much math they had forgotten since grade school and were given quick review lessons by their children.

These activities were also on a rotation basis. After 20 minutes, parents rotated to another activity.

An example of one of the upper grade activities was the construction of a floor plan for a space station. Parents and children used specific guidelines to complete the station correctly using geometry, measurement, fractions and basic math computation.

By the evening's end, three challenging activities had been completed.

If the laughter and excitement was any indication of success, then Loyd School's Math Night was a huge success. Everyone who attended agreed, this was fun.

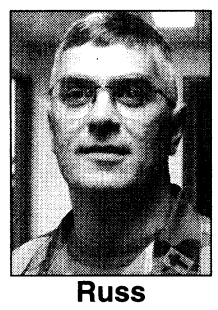
Take time to praise God for gifts

Praise family for all they do in your life



Chaplain (Maj.) Stephen M. Russ
11th Infantry Regiment

Each of us enjoys those moments when we receive praise. Those are uplifting times in our lives. They recharge our emotional batteries and give us a new spurt of energy. We reflect on that moment days or weeks later. It always feels good to be praised and thanked for anything we do. This is a neglected area in many of our lives.

How often do we praise our spouse, children, family, and friends for the unique things they do for us? We are impacted positively by the nurturing, providing and encouraging that is given to us each day by numerous people. Sometimes, it is the smile of a stranger, and at other times it is the arm on the shoulder and the words, thanks for the good job you did.

These small signs of praise bring joy into our lives. The military understands the impact of giving praise. We call them awards and promotions. Have you ever noticed how people will work harder after a few words of praise?

To receive is also to give, when it is needed. How are we praising others for the great things they do for us? We love to get praise, but how often do we return the favor? These are things to think about during this time of the year. What have you praised others for lately?

Russ

The front cover of the Upper Room for March-April 1995 provided a lovely picture of Jesus' triumphal entry into Jerusalem. The people for one brief moment were praising God and looking forward to a new ruler. They did not understand the full implications of that moment, but they knew they wanted a new way of living.

God provides a new way of living. It begins by learning to praise God for who God is. Then, it is expressed in our world by praising and thanking people who care for us. The Scriptures teach us God inhabits the praise of God's people. What have you praised God for lately? Is your attitude one of praise or pessimism?

During Holy Week, we were encouraged to re-examine our lives in the area of praise. It was the week of praise and thanksgiving for what God did for the human race and the creation. It was a time to pause and praise God for the wonderful gifts of reconciliation and redemption.

We have celebrated Easter. We now move through the Easter season and will discover how God continues to bless the creation. This is the time of revelation concerning God's power and love.

Take time this Easter season to praise God for the opportunities in your life and the people God provides to send blessings your way. The next time you see someone doing something good take the opportunity to thank him or her. During our prayers this Easter season, let us praise God for God's mighty acts of love in our lives. If we take the time to praise and encourage others, we will understand another level to this season of the Christian year.

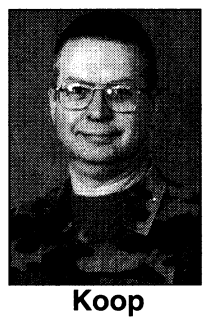
Humiliation not goal of discipline



Abusing children not method to discipline them

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

The pictures I saw of the bruises, lacerations and broken bones that the child received contradicted the statements by the parents.

They indicated they punished the child to drive away rebelliousness. Spare the rod and spoil the child is a popular saying, but it is not found in scripture.

In fact, physical abuse of a child by a parent is grounds for removal of the child from the custody of the parents. If a dislodged tooth or a damaged eye inflicted by a master, brought emancipation to the person hurt (Exodus 21:26-27), then parents should realize, there are biblical and social limits to what they can do as parents in administering corporal punishment.

Koop

Scripture states the rod of correction is for imparting wisdom (Proverbs 29:15). The rod of correction is not for venting parental anger and frustration, nor is it for inflicting pain and suffering. Bite marks, blisters from scalding, burns, bruises, welts or lacerations; and the dislocation, fracture or broken bone are all signs of physical abuse.

Some forms of corporal punishment demean the child. Having a child drop their drawers or remove their pants before spanking is inappropriate. Slapping a child in the face and yanking on a child's ear are embarrassing and demeaning. Unfortunately, some parents will even engage their child in degrading acts, such as rubbing their child in feces as a form of punishment and potty training.

Discipline requires the use of more than just corporal punishment. Positive reinforcement, rewards, time outs, just rules, natural consequences and the withholding of privileges are just a few examples.

Bulldawgs edge out Raiders to continue

Nailbiter game goes down to last second for team to remain in contention

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Bulldawgs squeaked out a 58-57 win over the Raiders in the postwide intramural basketball playoffs Monday night at Briant Wells Field House.

The B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Bulldawgs fought it out with the 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., Raiders in a blow-for-blow juggernaut battle for a chance at the championship title.

With 15 minutes left in the game, both teams played a more clean and concise game, fighting for every possession. The score continued to climb as they held it within one shot, the lead flopping back and forth like a fish on a dock.

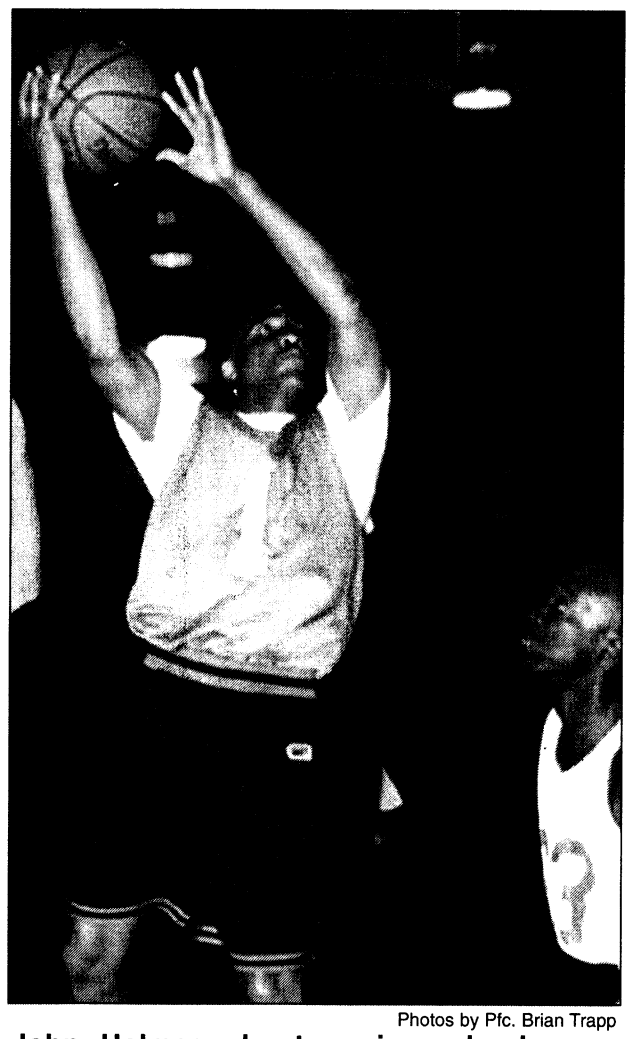
"We always start strong," said Buford Grigley, Bulldawgs' forward and highest scoring player with 21 points. "Once we get about a 10-point lead, we need to learn to take better care of the ball and not allow so many turnovers."

Strong perimeter passing by the Bulldawgs held off the Raiders, and the non-stop pressure forced many turnovers and gave the Bulldawgs the lead, 43-38, with 5:30 left in the game.

Then Bulldawgs' Thomas Wright took advantage of one of the turnovers and made a breakaway run for the hoop, Raiders' Dennis Hughes answered throwing in a shot from downtown and shortened the point gap to 51-41 with 3 minutes left in the game.

After a timeout, the Raiders regrouped and came back, to cut the score to 54-47 with 1:47 in the game. Hughes was fouled and went to the line, putting one in. The free throw was followed by a shot from the paint by the Raiders to bring the game back within reach and only seconds left in the game.

Wright was fouled on the way down the lane and went to the line, throwing down one to increase the lead 56-53 with 38 seconds left in the game.



The Raiders called a timeout to build a strategy for the final seconds of the game. A foul on Bulldawgs' Tereska Wattkins took her to the line, where she put in one more and started to build a lead.

"Wattkins is the only starting female left in the league," Orr said. "She started slow, but she picked it up in the end, and her 3 pointer and defense helped us win the game."

Another foul added one more point taking it to 10 fouls by the Raiders compared to five by the Bulldawgs, leaving 5 seconds in the game and 58-55 on the board.

A final shot from the paint was thrown in after three unsuccessful 3-point shots leaving Raiders trailing by 1 as the buzzer went off.

"This game lets us know even if we're behind, we can come in and earn a win," said 1st Sgt. Marvin Orr, Bulldawgs coach.

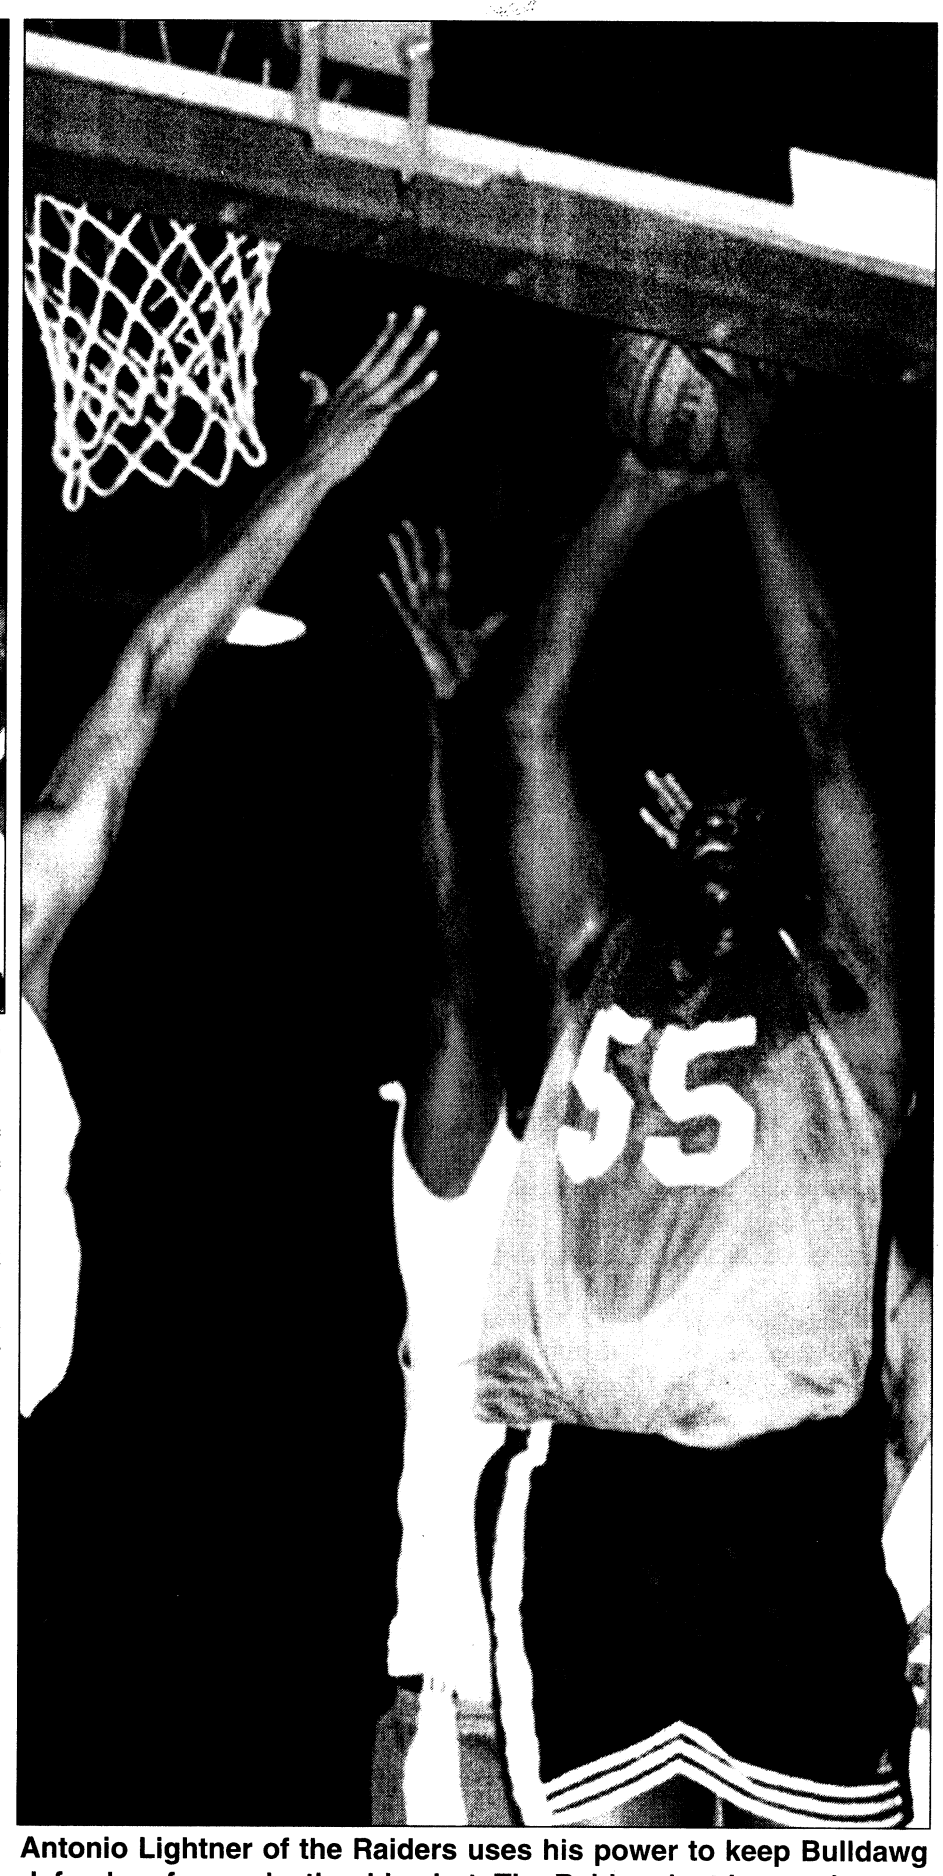
John Holmes shoots a jump hook over Bulldawgs defender Thomas Wright.

Having Orr as the coach brings more support to the Bulldawgs than other teams get, Grigley said. "He is the best first sergeant in the battalion for supporting company sports."

"He has been to everyone of our games, and you can't say that about other first sergeants," Grigley said.

The game started out in the Bulldawgs' favor, although heavy defense from the Raiders slowed them down. Their intense coverage clogged the middle like a fat man's artery. Still the Raiders edged up and took the lead going into half, 24-19.

"We always come to win, but we're out there to have fun at the same time," Grigley said.



Championship dreams were both met and broke Monday night as the Bulldawgs advanced in the playoffs.

"The team brings NCOs and their soldiers together, builds cohesion, and that carries over to work," Grigley said.

The Bulldawgs face a sizeable challenge having to win three consecutive games to take the post championship.

"We just have to keep doing what we're doing," Grigley said. "We get a lot of fast breaks and pound the ball on the inside."

Editor's note: See next week's edition for championship round coverage.

Antonio Lightner of the Raiders uses his power to keep Bulldawg defenders from rejecting his shot. The Raiders lost by a point.

Roughriders overpower Aces

Steals, rebounds help team win

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

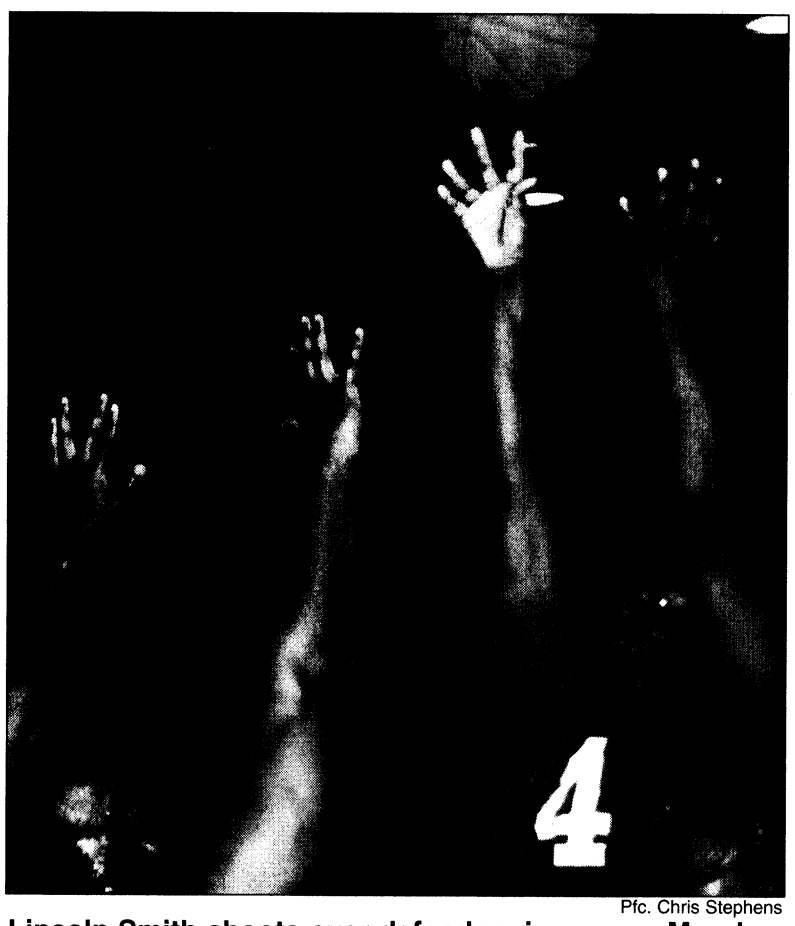
Behind a great defense throughout the game, the Roughriders beat the Aces, 52-41, in post playoff intramural basketball action Monday at Briant Wells Field House.

The 63rd Engineer Company Roughriders used their quickness to create turnovers and rebound the ball to beat A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Aces.

"Our defense was outstanding," said Michael Keys, Roughriders' forward. "We played defense as a team, and that put us on top."

The first half of the game went back and forth, neither team could put a run together to take a big lead.

However, at the end of the first half, the Roughriders got two quick steals on defense and converted them into two easy layups.



The Roughriders went into the halftime break with a 29-22 lead.

In the second half, the Roughriders came out with a 9-2 run.

The Aces answered the Roughriders and crawled back to within two.

It was the closest the Aces would get the rest of the game.

"We called a timeout when they were within two of us so we could get our heads back in the game," Keys said. "After the timeout, we just came back with a whole new burst of energy."

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Lincoln Smith shoots over defenders in a game Monday.

After the timeout, Patrick Roublow, Roughriders' guard, sank two three-pointers to put them back up by eight. The Roughriders had a 42-31 lead with eight minutes to go in the game.

The Roughriders burned a lot of time off of the clock, and the Aces had no chance at a comeback.

Patrick Smith, Aces guard, hit a three-pointer with a few seconds left. But, it was too late.

"We didn't do our jobs," said Terrence Garrett, Aces' guard. "We didn't play defense, go after loose balls, and we had too many turnovers. Defense wins games."

Smith led the Aces with 18 points and Freddy Wahington, Aces' forward, added 10 points.

Roublow led the Roughriders in scoring with 17 points and Lincoln Smith, Roughriders' forward, put in 14 points.

"We have to just keep playing good inside and getting the rebounds," Keys said. "If we can do that and keep pressuring the opposition, I look to do well in the next rounds."

Season in full swing

COMMENTARY

It's spring time again. Time for the flowers to start blooming and time for the weather to get warmer.

The beginning of April also signifies something dear to the American public — America's favorite pastime, baseball season.

The season began Sunday and got into full swing Monday.

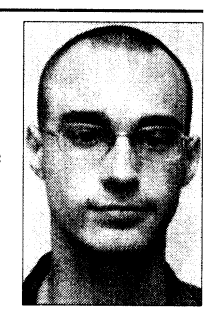
It looks to be a very interesting season this year.

There will be many surprises, but, in the end, there will be no surprise.

Starting off with the local team, the Atlanta Braves look to be the strongest team in the National League.

As always, the Braves will put forth a dominant starting rotation, and for the first time in years, a great bullpen. Greg Maddux and Tom Glavine lead the way with former starter John Smoltz closing the games.

The pitching staff is not the only thing to brag about. The outfield looks to be one of the strongest in all the majors.



With the addition of Vinny Castilla at third base, Chipper Jones moves to the outfield. Joining him is Andruw Jones and All-Star right-fielder Gary Sheffield, who the Braves acquired in an off-season trade with the Los Angeles Dodgers.

I believe the main contenders for the Braves will be the New York Mets and the Arizona Diamondbacks.

The Mets have the best catcher in all of baseball. It's hard to out do Mike Piazza. I look for him to produce 40 homers and 120 runs batted in.

The Mets' Roger Cedeno is a prominent base-stealer and should steal another 50 bases this year.

The Diamondbacks have two outstanding pitchers in Curt Schilling and Randy Johnson. However, with Matt Williams on the disabled list, their offense is going to have to really pick up for them to do anything.

The American League is a race between two teams, the New York Yankees and the Seattle Mariners.

The Mariners are looking to better their record-setting 2001 season. With the return of Rookie of the Year Ichiro Suzuki and outstanding second baseman Bret Boone, the Mariners will have no problem repeating as the American League Western Division champs.

The Yankees are, without a doubt, stacked with talent.

George Steinbrener went out again in the off-season and bought an exceptional player in Jason Giambi.

Giambi is not the only weapon the Yankees will have. All-Star shortstop Derek Jeter will yet again dazzle crowds with his spectacular defensive plays.

Then, there is the Yankees pitching staff. Without a doubt, three of the best pitchers in all of baseball are Roger Clemens, Mike Mussina and Andy Pettite.

Clemens will continue to be a dominating force and looks to capture another Cy Young award. However, Mussina will be nipping at his heals for the award.

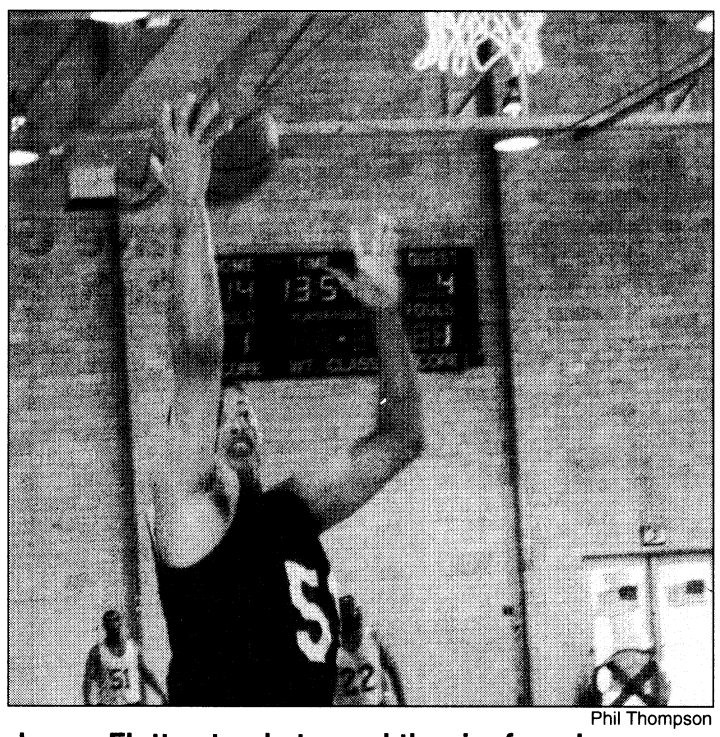
The Yankees will go onto the World Series to face the Braves, and my prediction is the Braves will win the World Series in six games.

I believe this is the year of the Atlanta Braves. They are a very strong team and have the weapons capable of taking it all.

Raiders advance in tourney

Zone 'D' stops Deathstalkers high-speed 'O'

Phil Thompson
Bayonet correspondent



The 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Raiders defeated 3rd Brigade Dining Facility's Deathstalkers, 68-62, March 29 at Briant Wells Field House.

The Deathstalkers quickly jumped to the lead and controlled the game with consecutive steals and defensive rebounds. Still, the Raiders hung around and gradually pecked away at the Deathstalker's lead.

With 1:09 on the clock, the Raiders took the lead 38-35.

"We started kind of sluggish, but we were just getting warmed up," said Raiders' coach Dennis Hughes. "We started to play our kind of basketball, using zone "D," and making the shots that needed to count."

The Raiders went to the half leading 49-41 and never turned back.

Phil Thompson

James Flott extends toward the rim for a lay up.

The Raiders' dominating zone defense completely shut down the Deathstalkers in the second half. The Raiders stayed one step ahead of the Deathstalkers, 54-50, never giving an inch. With 4:20 on the clock, the game was at a slow pace, but both teams were scoring. With less than one minute to go, the Deathstalkers staged a comeback to close the score to 64-60, but the Raiders closed the deal, scoring a lay-up as time ran out.

"Our defense needed to step up in the first half and grab more rebounds," said Raiders' Jonathan Holmes. "The team needed to hustle because we were kind of sluggish in the first half, but a win is a win."

Army imposes stop-loss for some

Needs arise due to Sept. 11 terrorist attacks

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army has just added 38 more career-management fields and military occupational specialties to the "stop-loss" program.

The program was first implemented for selected active-duty soldiers in November and then expanded with additional specialties and to the reserve component in December.

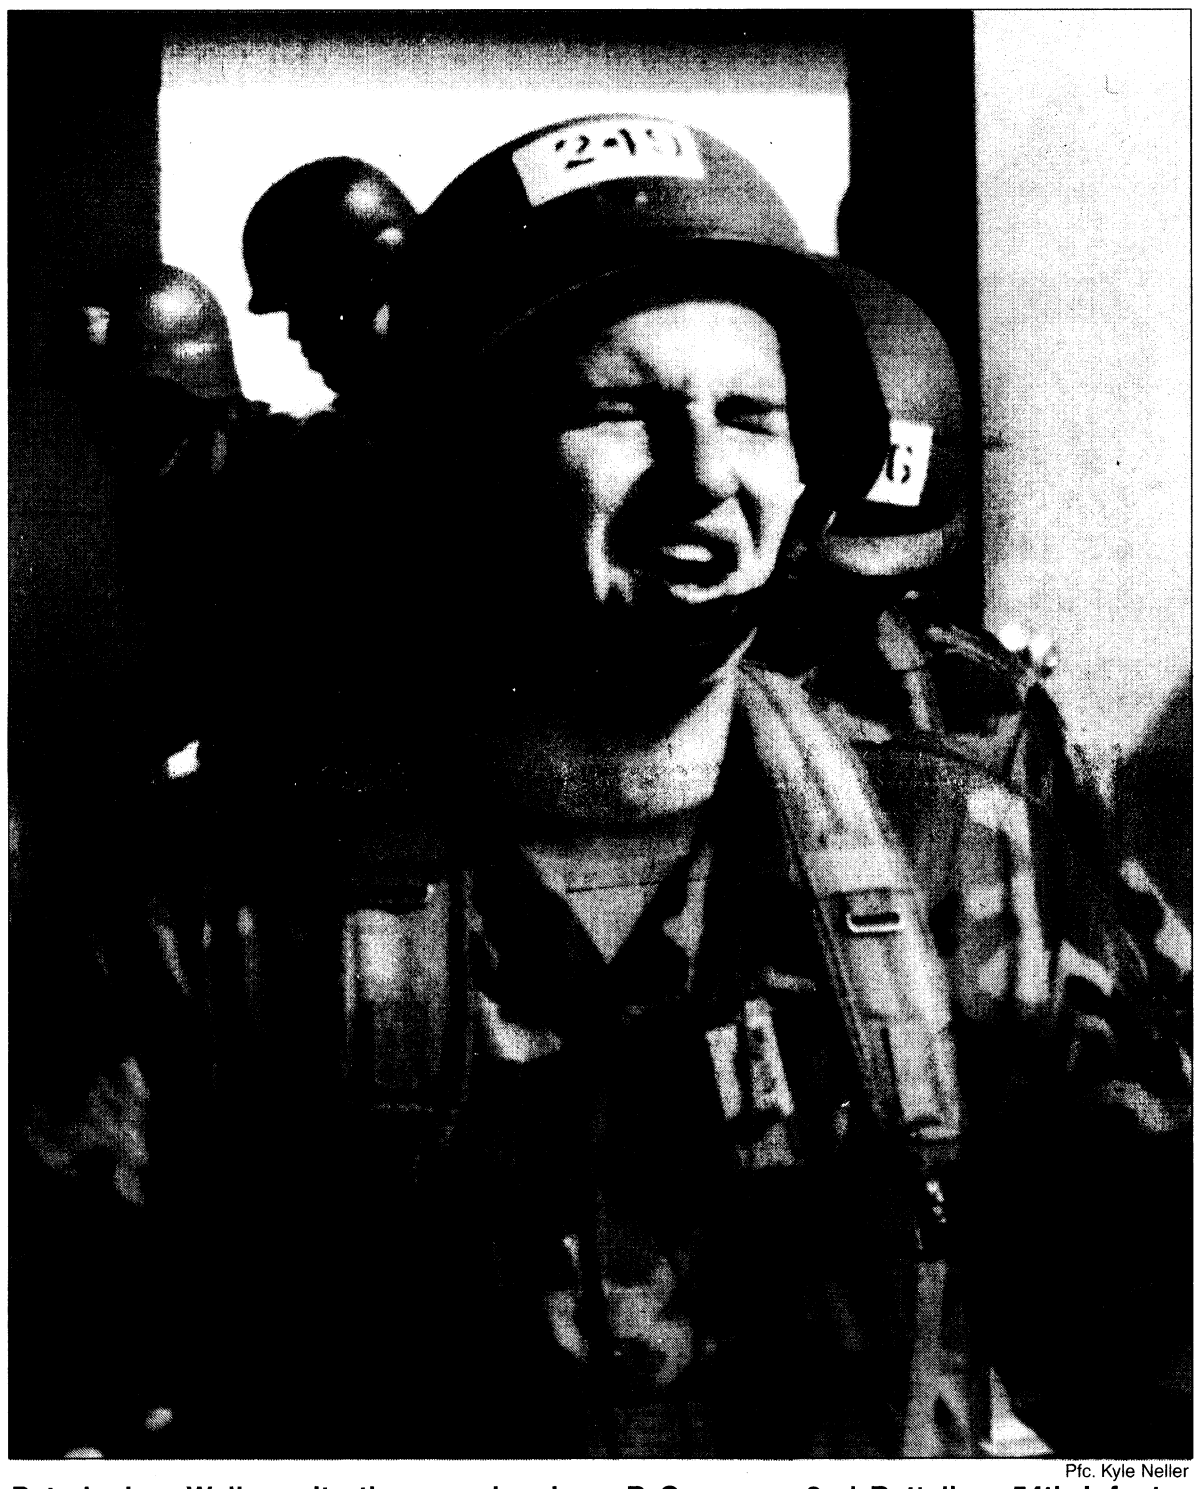
Army officials announced Tuesday the third stop-loss increment, affecting selected active, Reserve and National Guard troops by stopping voluntary requests for retirement or separation, effective Feb. 22.

This expansion is the largest to date. It will impact approximately 2,630 active-duty, 3,920 Reserve and 4,190 National Guard soldiers, said Lt. Col Bob Ortiz, chief of Enlisted Professional Development for the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff. Those numbers bring the total affected by the three stop-loss announcements to about 3,330 active-duty, 4,450 Reserve and 4,760 National Guard troops.

"Stop-loss is necessary to retain the critical skills needed in support of Operations Enduring Freedom and Noble Eagle," Ortiz said. "The key word is critical. These are skills where we have found a need to retain soldiers to support a myriad of operational requirements since Sept. 11th."

Stop-loss does not mean stop movement, Ortiz said. Normal personnel rotations for permanent changes of station and for schooling requirements will continue as scheduled, he said, unless individual soldiers elect to extend at their current duty stations.

Commissioned officers impacted by the latest stop-loss announcement are in the following CMFs:



- 15C35, Aviation All Source Intelligence, 31, Military Police, 35, Military Intelligence
- 45A, Comptroller
- 48E, Foreign Area Officer (Eurasia)
- 48G, Foreign Area Officer (Middle East/North Africa)
- 51C, Contract and Industrial Management

Warrant officers affected by this stop-loss include those with the following specialties:

- 155E, C-12 Pilot, 155G, O-

Budget money brings barracks

Post will also build urban assault course

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Fort Benning's soldiers will soon have a new barracks complex and an urban assault course. The proposed projects are part of the budget plan for fiscal 2003.

Details of the 2003 Department of Defense budget proposal to fight the war against terrorism, provide for homeland defense and accelerate changes to transform the U.S. military were released by President Bush Feb. 4. The budget proposes $369 billion for the DoD, plus an additional $10 billion, if needed, to fight the war on terrorism.

The fiscal 2003 DoD military Construction and Family Housing Program totals $9 billion and reflects the administration's emphasis on improving the quality of life for military personnel by providing better working and living conditions. The request includes more than 300 major construction projects at about 185 locations.

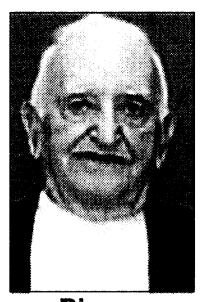
War veteran speaks with ITB soldiers

Retirees pay respect to Merrill's Marauders, listen to Piazza speak

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff



Philip Piazza, president of the Merrill's Marauders, spoke to soldiers from F Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, Infantry Training Brigade the morning of Feb. 8.

Piazza received a plaque of a replica black powder pistol as a gift of appreciation to the Merrill's Marauders for their selfless service and to thank Piazza for coming to speak.

The company finished "The Bayonet," a seven-day field training exercise. They listened to Piazza speak about his experiences when he served in 1944 with the 5307th composite unit, the Merrill's Marauders.

"Regular Infantry Training Brigade soldiers have not been able to be in his presence," said Pvt. Kwesi Hector. "He usually speaks to rangers, so I'm honored to hear him speak."

"I know he is in the Ranger Hall of Fame, so he had to do something special to receive that honor," he said.

Piazza

Piazza was lucky and blessed to be one of the few members of the Marauders to survive 35 missions, Hector said.

The Merrill's Marauders, a long range surveillance unit assembled during World War II for special operations, lost 90 percent of their men in the seven months they spent behind enemy lines in North Burma.

Many of the soldiers with whom Piazza served lost their lives to deadly diseases, Piazza said.

"Typhus killed a lot of our men," he said.

"I'm honored to be next to a man who went through what Piazza went through," said retiree Romie "Snuffy" McDaniel. McDaniel attended the speech with three other retirees he meets on the last Saturday of every month at the World wide Ranger Association meeting. "I think more people like him should be honored."

McDaniels said he and his fellow retirees attended the speech to show their appreciation and respect for the service of Piazza and the Merrill's Marauders.

"They won't be around much longer," McDaniel said. "They are a great source of education for these young soldiers."

Piazza shared some stories of combat education on survival tactics and informative combat experience with the soldiers. He said he was very impressed with the training the soldiers received.

The soldiers reminded him of what it was like to be prepared for battle, he said.

"I hope these men never have to go through what we did, but if they have to, they're ready," Piazza said.

"His men followed him because he's a leader," said Hector. "He can't stop a bullet, but he'll lead you in the best direction."

Tell-a-marketer to call me

commentary

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

I was a telemarketer once. There I said it. I'm not proud of it, but I was only 16 and desperate for mall money.

My sister and I responded to a classified ad for "phone-loving gals" willing to spend a couple of hours every evening harassing strangers from a safe distance.

We worked in a sleazy back-alley sweat shop hocking the Kokomo Shoppers' Sampler — "For just $39.95, you'll get more than 320 discount coupons for goods and services you'll never use. Now if I can just verify your address, credit card number and hat size ..."

It was an ugly job.

My sister, the soft-hearted, gave up on day three when a pitiful, lonely old man wouldn't let her hang up the phone. I knew her days as a phone solicitor were numbered when she called him back a second time, "just to check up on him."

Me, I'm made of sturdier stuff. I survived till day four, when some pervert with deep pockets agreed to buy one Sampler for every 10 minutes I stayed on the line and let him talk dirty.

So take it from me, one who's been to the dark side and back, telemarketers are people, just like you and me. (If we cut them, will they not bleed?) And truth be known, they do us all an invaluable service.

Case in point: Just the other evening, I cooked. That's cause for celebration around our house. So I set the fine china, dimmed the lights and lit some candles, put on some mood music (George Strait) and cattle-called the kids to dinner.

My Cleaver-esque evening was off to a good start.

Then Jake reached for the pickles, elbowed a candle and sprayed hot wax across the table and onto Brittney's plate.

She screamed.

The dogs howled.

Tom jumped up and knocked over his chair.

And George kept right on singing about all his exes in Texas.

Just as I was about to blow my top, the telephone rang, and salvation in the form of a broad named Bambi offered me a really good deal on children's magazines. (Now I ask you, would you buy children's literature from someone named Bambi?)

Bambi rambled on and on as the din in the dining room reached a fevered pitch, and my temper kept climbing.

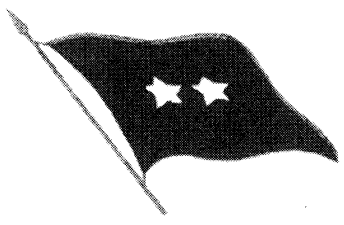
And then a beautiful thing happened.

I exploded. I said some awful things to Bambi. Unforgivable things — totally out of character. It was fun. It was wonderful. It was cathartic.

"So, does this mean you're not interested in the magazines?" she asked, when I paused long enough to catch my breath.

"No, I don't want the magazine. But thanks for calling. I feel much better. Can you call back tomorrow, about the same time?"

So now I hear the Federal Trade Commission is proposing a national "do not call" registry for those who don't want to be bothered by telemarketers. I've got a better idea. Just give them my number.



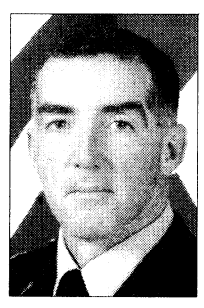
Tell them to call at 7 a.m., when Kenzie's lost her shoes, Jake's lost his homework and the dog's run off ... again.

Tell them to call at 6 p.m., when all the kids hate everything I've cooked, except dessert, which is burned.

Or better yet, tell them to call at 9 p.m., when the girls won't sleep, the dishwasher overflows and Tom tells me he needs three dozen cookies by morning.

Just, please don't take away my telemarketers. Or I'll have to start beating my kids.

Post celebrates diverse heritage



African-Americans have made an indelible impression on the fabric of our society.

They have played a central role in the development of our nation.

Through strength of will and unimaginable endurance, they survived the horror of slavery to become settlers, writers, artists and leaders in the religious, political and business world.

The traditions, values and strength African-Americans brought from their diverse countries of origin and difficult passages have not only reinforced the moral and political fiber of our country, but add beauty to our culture as well.

African-Americans today continue to enrich our culture and quality of life through contributions in every segment of society from business, education and politics to science, law and medicine.

They distinguish themselves and bring honor to our nation by serving admirably in its defense throughout the world.

As our African-American communities grow along with our nation, we share a deep pride in their culture, traditions and values; recognizing the key role they play in the progress of our democratic system.

It is important to recognize the contributions African-Americans have made to the social, political and moral strength of the United States.

I challenge each of you to learn more for yourself about the many accomplishments of our African-American citizens and to discover more about their rich culture and triumphant history.

In doing so, you will gain a greater understanding not only of the heritage of African-Americans but of our national heritage, which are one and the same.

In recognition of Black History Month and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, I proclaim the month of February as Black History Month for Fort Benning.

This year's theme is: "The African-American Legacy: Contributions and Service in America's Defense."

During our African-American Heritage Observance events, you will have an ideal opportunity to learn more about African-American culture. Enjoy the music, food and entertainment.

But, take time to learn as well. Look at the exhibits, read the material provided and ask questions of your African-American friends. Celebrate African-American Heritage!

Community celebrates contributions

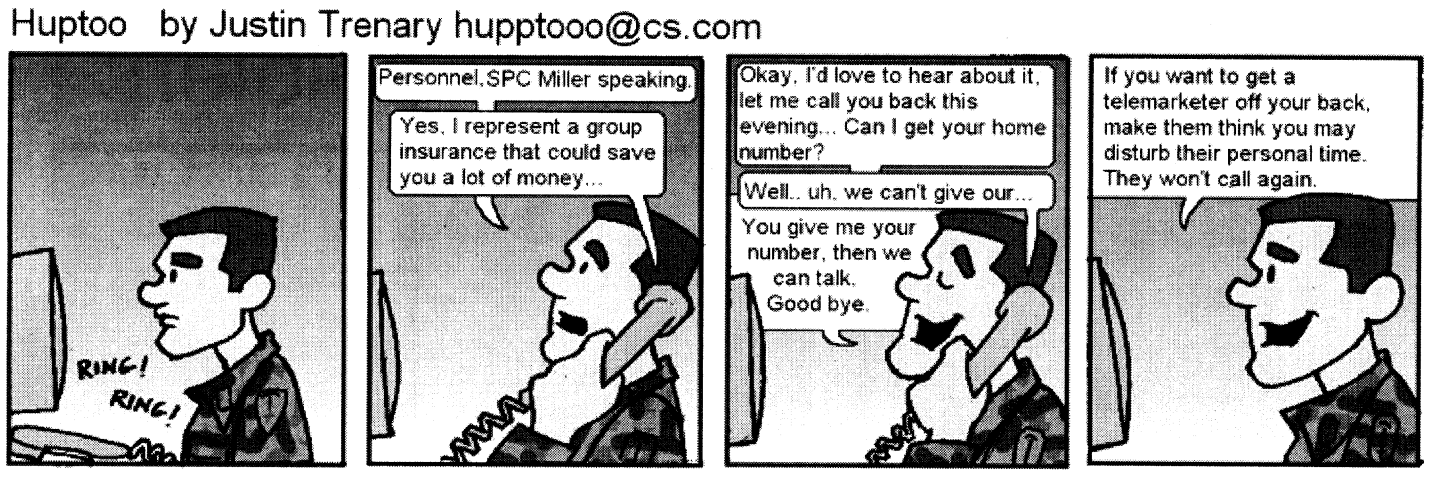
What began as Negro History Week in 1926 has become the celebration we now know as Black History Month.

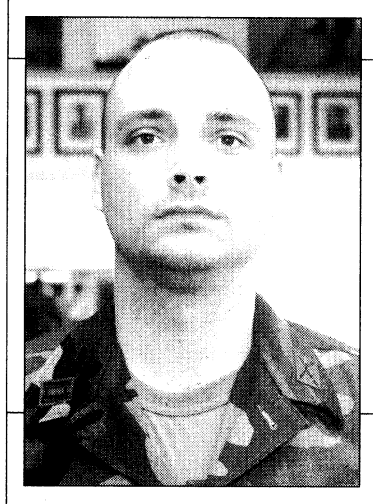
Dr. Carter G. Woodson brought about this celebration of history, achievements and contribution. Woodson founded the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History (now called the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History) in 1915 to illuminate the history of African Americans. To bring additional attention to the contributions of blacks in American history, Woodson initiated Black History Week in February 1926.



Woodson chose February for a number of reasons. February is the birth month of both Frederick Douglass and Abraham Lincoln, two men heavily involved in Black history. February is also the birth month of W.E.B. Dubois, a civil rights leader and co-founder of the National Alliance for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP). The NAACP was also formed in the month of February, 41 years later, in 1909. It is also the month that the 15th Amendment was passed, granting African Americans the right to vote.

In 1976, Negro History Week was expanded and renamed Black History Month. Every year since, by presidential proclamation, this month has been observed.

The theme for this year's observance is "The African American Legacy: Contributions and Service in America's Defense."



Join with the Fort Benning community as we celebrate Black History Month. The installation luncheon is 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Wednesday at the Officers' Club. The guest speaker is Senator Ed Harbison. Other observances include: the 29th Infantry Regiment breakfast at 7 a.m. Wednesday; the 36th Engineer Group will highlight events, music and clothing of the 1960s, 1970s and 1980s Feb. 26; the Basic Combat Training Brigade will rotate educational and informational displays during the month and have a luncheon (potluck) 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Feb. 28 at the Regimental Chapel on Sand Hill.

How do you deal with telemarketers?

'Hollywood finally got it right'

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"Hollywood got it wrong every damned time, whetting twisted political knives on the bones of our dead brothers,"

— Retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore, in the prologue to We Were Soldiers Once .. and Young

Retired Lt. Gen. Hal Moore had plenty to celebrate Wednesday. It was his 80th birthday, and Hollywood presented him with a film version of We Were Soldiers Once ... and Young, the book he co-authored with journalist Joe Galloway about the first major battle of the Vietnam War.

Moore celebrated the occasion with hundreds of Vietnam veterans, friends and family members at a special retreat ceremony at Infantry Hall.

He was joined by Galloway and Randall Wallace, the screen-writer, director and producer who transformed the bloody Ia Drang battle into Paramount Pictures' big screen epic We Were Soldiers, which opens March 1.

Moore invited his guests to a sneak preview of the movie following the ceremony, but warned, "It's very intense, " and the "whup, whup, whup" of the Huey helicopter blades would "raise the hair on the back of the necks of every Vietnam vet in the audience."

"It's a multidimensional film. It will show you the intensity of ground infantry battle and the emotions back home when those heartbreaking telegrams arrived," Moore said. "Memories will come flooding back."

Moore said the release of the movie was the realization of a dream, and it accomplished what he once doubted Hollywood could ever do.

"When I was writing a chapter, The Lost Platoon, in 1985, I thought to myself 'This would make one hell of a movie one day.' But I never thought Hollywood would get it right," he said.

"But they did, and Randall Wallace was the only director in Hollywood who could do it."

Wallace, Moore and Galloway shared stories of their endeavor to capture the true essence of the struggle between less than 400 7th Cavalry Regiment soldiers and thousands of North Vietnamese forces.

And they spoke glowingly of the great respect they've developed for each other in the eight years since Wallace approached Galloway with a proposal for the movie.

"I got a call from Randall one day, and he said 'I've read this book, and I'd like to make a movie out of it,'" Galloway recalled. "I said to him, 'This book is our heart, so I have one question for you, Mr. Wallace. Do you believe in heroes?'

"And he said 'I do. I really do.' And from the start he was as passionate about this story as General Moore and I were," said Galloway, who did four tours in Vietnam as a war correspondent and now serves as a special consultant to Secretary of State Colin Powell.

> "This book didn't just speak the truth, it shouted it. For many it was a time of division and cowardice, but for the men of the 7th Cav, it was a time of courage, sacrifice and honor."
> Randall Wallace
> Producer, director We Were Soldiers

Galloway said Wallace "hewed fairly close to the book, choosing to see this more as a love story — the love that soldiers find for one another in the heat of battle — than a war story."

He said the film, which stars Mel Gibson as Moore and Barry Pepper as Galloway, is sometimes overwhelming.

"My wife Karen and I sat at a screening in November and saw her dad, Captain Tom Metsker, give up his place on a medevac chopper to another man," Galloway said. "Then he falls to a sniper's bullet as he stepped down, just as he did in real life."

Wallace said he was both honored and challenged by the co-authors faith in his ability to tell their story.

"This book didn't just speak a truth, it shouted it," Wallace said.

"For many it was a time of division, of cowardice, but for the men of the 7th Cav, it was a time of courage, sacrifice and honor.

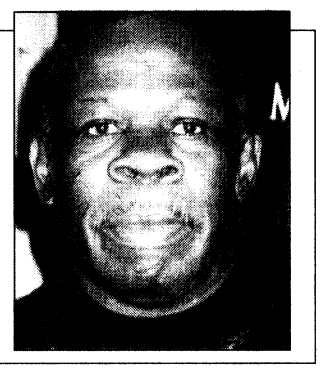
"I was inspired by them, and every person who worked on this film, no matter what their job, was determined that it would be true and faithful to these men."

Wallace said the movie, much of which was filmed at Fort Benning last year, was meant to be a "moving monument" to the heroes of the 7th Cavalry Regiment's 1st Battalion and the heroes at home, the wives and children they left behind.

And the development of these hometown heroes is where the movie deviates from the book. The film spends a good deal of time developing story lines about the soldiers' families, much more so than the book.

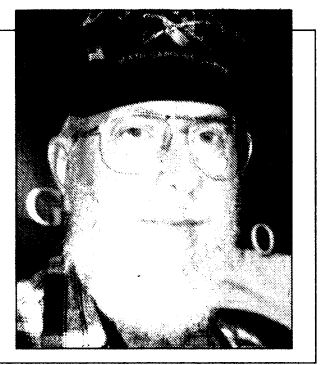
"But it's not a documentary. It's important to show that not all the heroes were on the battlefield," Wallace said.

What veterans of the battle of Ia Drang are saying about the movie:



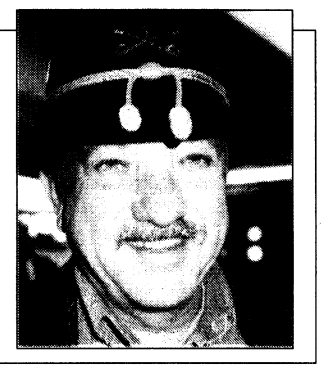
"It was a real good movie. He did an outstanding job of telling the story, but there was quite a bit of Hollywood in there."

— Retired Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley



"It was gut-wrenching. Very factual. I'm so proud the true story was told. Let America be the judge, but we who were there know it was true."

— James Dubois



"It had a lot of Hollywood in it. But I was there, and I doubt there's anybody who could do it justice."

— James Comer

"Wonderfully good. The first time I saw it I was looking for my friends, the heroes, so I couldn't follow the story. It was much better the second time."

— John Wallenius

Movie review

Film delivers message, falls short on acting

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

It seems to me a movie review is both a pompous and presumptuous task. Who am I to say if the movie hit its mark? According to those in the know, the heroes who were there — at the preview and at Ia Drang — it was a qualified success. Qualified, I said.

"There was quite a bit of Hollywood in it." That's the refrain I heard time and time again. "But it was good. It told the story — got it right — finally."

I read the book and I cried. Me, the only person I know who didn't cry at Saving Private Ryan, didn't shed a tear at Pearl Harbor — I cried over Hal Moore's and Joe Galloway's very straight-forward account of the Ia Drang blood-bath. Sobbed like a baby as he recounted his wife's own personal hell back home.

So when Randall Wallace said "Better grab a hanky," I figured I'd better grab three.

Now here I sit wondering, Is it me, or is it the movie? I didn't shed a tear. I laughed out loud a time or two, but I didn't so much as sniffle. Call me heartless.

The book being my paradigm, I'll concur that the movie did tell the story. It spoke volumes about all that went wrong and all that went right in that battle. And if the overwhelming sense of chaos and confusion I felt during the battle scenes was anything like the reality, it did a good job conveying that war is hell, and this was a hell of a war.

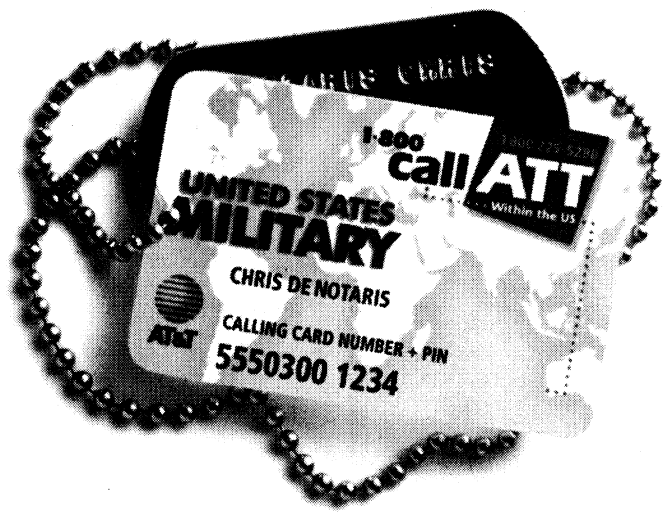
There are moments when you have to go with the momentum of the battle. It's no use trying to keep pace. It's a relentless pummeling of gore and guts, as war must surely be.

And the cinematography! Three thumbs up (Somebody give me a hand here.) The special effects, the flashbacks, the slo-mos, the black and white and in-your-face battle scenes were awesome.

But, and here I go with the pompous, presumptuous part, the acting was a disappointment. Gen. Moore once remarked that, when it came to casting his character, since John Wayne wasn't available, "Mel Gibson will have to do."

Ironically there were moments in the film when I wasn't sure if Mel was playing Hal Moore or John Wayne.

There were frequent moments of brilliant, classic Mel. But there were also brief glimpses of this swaggering, drawling cavalry cowboy that didn't do Moore justice.



And the slack-jawed deer-in-the-headlights portrayal of Sgt. Ernie Savage was, well, savage. Unbecoming a hero.

At times the movie seemed hell-bent on portraying the men of the 7th Cav. as accidental heroes, instead of the brave, determined warriors they were.

And here's the crazy part. The one character that seemed outlandishly, illogically exaggerated — the hard-nosed, foul-mouthed bigger-than-life portrayal of Sgt. Maj. Basil Plumley was right on the money.

Sam Elliot got it right. He captured the spirit of Plumley with his one-line zingers and no-holds-barred honesty.

So two out of three ain't bad. The movie told the story — got it right and the cinematography was excellent. It's all good, unless you happen to think character counts. And I was counting on those characters.

Awareness key to stopping sexual harassment

Training focuses on defining, decreasing

2nd Lt. Mamie Murphy
3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

There is no room for sexual harassment in today's Army, and current leadership is emphasizing training and awareness to decrease occurrences.

Last year on Fort Benning there were 10 formal EO complaints, according to Master Sgt. Kevin Elliot, NCOIC for the Equal Opportunity office. Five of these were sexual harassment complaints. One was a substantiated case.

All of these cases were females complaining about male subjects.

"To my knowledge, there hasn't been any cases at Fort Benning with a male complainant against either a female or male subject," Elliot said.

Training emphasis focuses on establishing what behaviors are considered sexual harassment, how to deal with it in the work place and steps to reporting it.

A survey conducted in 1995 by the Department of Defense polled active-duty members of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Air Force and Coast Guard. Fielded from February through September 1995, 41,900 surveys were completed.

According to the survey, between 1988 and 1995, the percentage of military women who reported they had received uninvited and unwanted sexual attention from someone at work during the last 12 months declined from 64 to 55 percent. The percentage for men dropped from 17 to 14 percent.

More than 80 percent of respondents reported being trained, and 60 percent indicated the training was moderately or very effective. Nearly 90 percent of respondents said they knew the process for reporting sexual harassment, and 60 percent said leaders were making honest and reasonable efforts to stop sexual harassment.

More than half, 52 percent of women said they experienced behaviors they considered to be sexual harassment. Of those who experienced unwanted behavior, 88 percent of said it occurred on base, 74 percent said at work and 77 percent said during duty hours. Military co-workers were the perpetrators 44 percent of the time, and 43 percent said it was someone of higher rank or grade.

In 1995, 40 percent of women and 17 percent of men indicated they chose to report an incident, compared to 1988 when 8 percent of the women surveyed and 10 percent of the men said they had done so. Of those who reported an incident, 83 percent said it would not affect their military career.

The survey came to several conclusions. First, that sexual harassment is declining, but it still happens much too frequently. Second, there is a perception that it isn't being taken seriously enough. Third, the effectiveness of training programs must be continually monitored in order to be successful.

According to figures from June 1, 2001, women are 16 percent of the Army. Of those, 15.3 percent of active duty, 24.9 percent of the reserves and 11.9 percent of the national guard are women.

In terms of Army occupations, 91.4 percent of jobs and 69.9 percent of all individual positions are open to women.

The Army will evaluate stop-loss needs on a monthly basis and use it as a tool to maintain unit readiness, Ortiz said. Additional stop-loss actions for other officer, warrant officer and enlisted specialties are possible, he said.

While the Army evaluates stop-loss needs, it is also starting to plan for when the measure is eventually lifted.

"What we want to avoid 'bathtub effect' of a lot of soldiers being flushed out of any particular unit due to separations and normal PCSs when stop-loss is no longer necessary," Ortiz said. "We want to maintain unit readiness in a post stop-loss Army."

Prior to Operations Noble Eagle and Enduring Freedom, the Army last used stop-loss during Operation Desert Shield and Desert Storm in 1990 when President George H. Bush used it.

Stop-loss does not affect most involuntary separations or retirements, nor does it generally limit laws, regulations, or policies that may lead to involuntary separations, retirements, or releases from active duty.

Budget: Renders cash for new barracks, assault course

The barracks project replaces the current soldiers' living accommodations found in Cuartel Barracks, Building 17, which was built in 1929 as an open bay and gang latrine barracks. It was renovated in the '70s to single room units. Building 17, once vacated, is planned for use as non-Airborne student billets.

The barracks complex will be the new Army's standard design for barracks and will be the new home for the 11th Infantry Regiment, Medical Department Activity, Dental Activity, 988th Military Police Company, 209th MP Detachment, 71st MP Detachment, U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit and Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation permanent party unaccompanied enlisted personnel. The project also includes one small battalion headquarters for the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment with a classroom and troop aid station and one small company operations facility for MEDDAC.

Location of the new barracks is on the south side of Dixie Road on McAndrews and Easley Ranges.

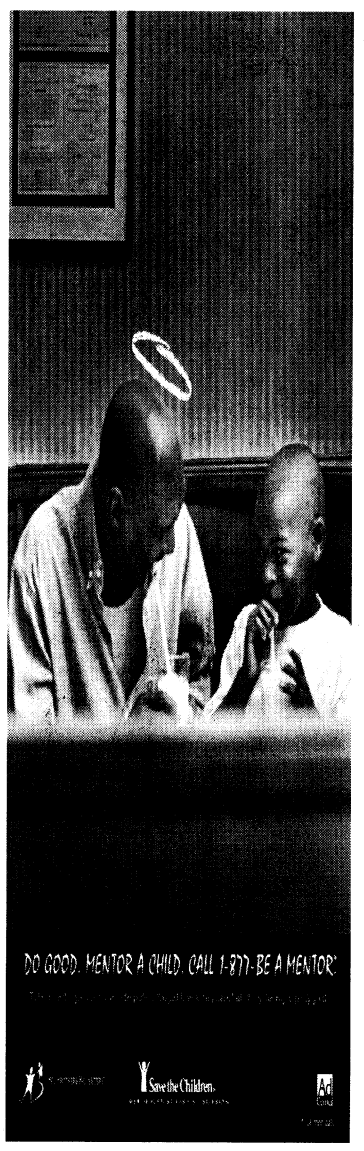
This is the eighth in a series of projects required to complete Fort Benning's long-range plan for barracks renewal and modernization. The intended maximum capacity of the barracks will be 492 soldiers.

To comply with the Army's current urban operations training strategy, an urban assault course is also scheduled for fiscal 2003.

The urban assault course consists of, five stations: individual and team trainer, squad and platoon trainer, grenadier gunnery station, urban offense and defense building and an underground trainer.

"The urban assault course will be used primarily for individual training, with some limited collective training," said Robert Jordan, deputy director of Operations and Training for the U.S. Army Infantry School.

"The intent of the combined arms training strategy is for the urban assault course to be like a step or a gate that soldiers go through before they do collective training at a MOUT (military operations in urban terrain) site," Jordan said.



Part of the project includes a one story, bullet-proof structure to be used as a shoot house, with no ceiling, a catwalk mezzanine and a roof over the whole facility that will house a crane system to remove and replace wall panels as needed.

Support buildings for the urban assault course include an after-action review building and covered shelters. In all, the project includes five single-story wood buildings, (four of which are interconnected), one adjoining two-story wooden building, a two-story wooden facade, a two-story cinder block building with basement, an underground tunnel system with two access tunnels and four manhole covers, the shoot and three single-wall facades with doors and windows.

PEOPLE'S PARABLE

- The Statue of Liberty stands 300 feet 1 inch from the pedestal to the tip of the torch, which is a symbol of enlightenment.
- There are 25 windows in the crown, which represent the natural minerals of the earth.
- The seven spikes, or rays, on the statue's crown represent the seven continents and seven seas.

The cornerstone for Lady Liberty was laid on then Bedloe's island Aug. 5, 1884. Her chains underfoot represent crushing the chains of slavery. She weighs in at a slim 225 tons. There are approximately 4,000 square yards of fabric in Liberty's dress. Her nose is four feet long, her index finger eight feet, and length of her sandal is 25 feet. That equals a U.S. women's shoe size of 879.

There are 354 steps from the base of the pedestal to the top of the crown. On a crowded day, the trip can take three hours.

What does it take to be an AMERICAN?

Changes to immigration laws speed up process

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Most Americans come by citizenship naturally. Naturally born, that is.

But a citizen of the United States can be a native-born, foreign-born, or naturalized person who owes allegiance to the United States and who is entitled to its protection, according to the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

In addition to the naturalization process, the U.S. recognizes the citizenship of individuals according to two fundamental principles: jus soli, or right of birthplace, and jus sanguinis, right of blood. What this means to the layperson is if you're born in the U.S., you're a citizen because you were born here, or if you're born to American parents outside the U.S., you also have the right to American citizenship.

Information on who is a citizen or national at birth is defined in the Immigration and Nationality Act.

During fiscal 1999, more than 2.5 million naturalization applications were completed. Olga Kelley, president of Fort Benning's International Spouses Club, is one of nearly 6.9 million immigrants who applied for citizenship from 1993 to 2000, more than the total in the previous 40 years combined.

Kelley was a German national who had lived in the U.S. for nearly 15 years before applying for U.S. citizenship. The average wait time for an application is about six to nine months, but Kelley got her response back in only two weeks. She flew to Atlanta two weeks later to be sworn in. Total wait time — one month.

"I guess I was just really lucky," Kelley said.

Lucky and well-versed in American history, which is critical in passing the citizenship exam. The study guide for the exam has 100 questions for examiners to choose from. She had to answer only 10 of the 100 questions.

"The tricky one was about the legislative branch of the government," she said, laughing.

Kelley found some study buddies in her friends at the International Spouses Club. The club conducts citizenship classes as a service to its members and the community.

"I would never have been able to answer those questions if I hadn't taken that course," she said.

She also had the advantage of being in the U.S. legally on a regular visa, which changed her waiting status.

Attorney General John Ashcroft announced just last week a "reorganization" of current immigration laws to ensure better protection for the U.S. from terrorist attacks. Ironically, speeding up the process is one of the key elements in his plan.

"A critical part of our mission is enforcing our immigration laws — enforcing them fairly, deliberately and without delay," Ashcroft said.

Any questions?

What types of questions might I expect at the citizenship exam? Well, only the basics of American history and government, right? Judge for yourself. And for all you naturally born citizens, see how many you can answer.

1. What are the colors of the American flag? Simple enough.

2. Who is the president of the United States? We better know this one!

3. Who said, "Give me liberty or give me death?" Is it Kenneth Lay?

4. For how long do we elect senators? 100 years (Way to go, Strom!)

5. Can you name the two senators from your state? Uuuhhh, let me get back to you.

6. Name the requirements a person must meet to be eligible to become president. Are you qualified?

There are currently more than 34,000 pending immigration cases over a year old, and more than 10,000 cases over three years old.

The backlog leads to further problems in the process, including frivolous lawsuits that "allow individuals who are here in violation of our laws to remain here even longer."

For more information on citizenship classes, scheduled to begin Feb. 26, call Kelley at 687-6471 or 689-1739.

Lady's light a beacon for freedom

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

—"Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free ... send these, the homeless, tempest tost to me, I lift my lamp beside the golden door!"

— Emma Lazarus,
Jewish immigrant.

Lady Liberty greeted twelve million immigrants between 1892 and 1954. She still stands as the hostess with the most, greeting just as many tourists each year.

"From her beacon hand glows world-wide welcome," says her inscription, written by Emma Lazarus in an attempt to raise money for its construction.

The statue was a gift from the French, who admired the American way of life enough to dedicate to the country this steel beauty.

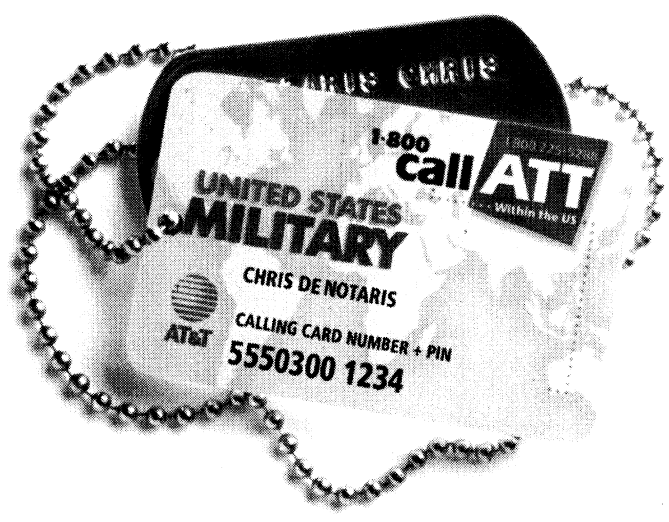
Steel and copper were the chosen mediums because the statue needed to be light enough to be shipped to the U.S., and she was broken down into 350 individual pieces for shipment.

Liberty Island, originally the home of Mohegan Indians, was later used to house a New York hospital effective for quarantine. The statue stands on what was Fort Wood, used as a fortress for protection of New York Harbor in 1811.

1875 — Auguste Bartholdi began sculpting "Liberty Enlightening the World."

June 1884 — After extensive funding efforts, Auguste Bartholdi completed the statue.

July 4, 1884 — "Lady Liberty" was completed and presented to the U.S.



Oct. 28, 1886 — President Grover Cleveland officially accepted the statue on behalf of the U.S.

Oct. 15, 1924 — The statue was designated a national monument.

Oct. 28, 1986 — The statue was rededicated by President Ronald Reagan.

Sept. 11, 2001 — The Statue of Liberty was closed because of the terrorist attacks on the World Trade Center

Dec. 20, 2001 — The first boatload of visitors arrive at the statue since Sept. 11.

EO takes awareness on road

Community visits local historical black university

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Sgt. 1st Class Frank Miranda, tenant unit Equal Opportunity advisor, welcomes soldiers and civilians to Tuskegee Institute.

Four buses transporting 172 "road scholars," from Fort Benning made a trip to the first black institute of higher education Feb. 7.

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office staff sponsored a trip to Tuskegee Institute National Historic Site, Tuskegee, Ala., as part of the Army's program for cultural awareness and celebration of Black History Month. Private to lieutenant colonel, Department of Defense employees and family members made the trip to the school in Muscogee county for a glimpse at black American achievements during a time when blacks did not receive the same education opportunities as other Americans.

The EO staff schedules events like this to increase cultural awareness and educate the Fort Benning community, said Sgt. 1st Class Frank Miranda, EO advisor for Fort Benning Tenant Units.

This is the second consecutive year the EO office sponsored the trip to Tuskegee due in part to the overwhelming response of last year's trip, Miranda said.

After arriving at the home of the Tigers, visitors were divided into two groups. The first group was escorted by a Tuskegee student around campus and given a brief account of the school's leaders, architecture and academia. He told on-lookers the buildings were built by university students in the 1880s.

The second group began their visit at the George Washington Carver Museum with a viewing of a short video about the life and career of Carver, the institute's most famous and accredited instructor.

Carver, a noted scientist, botanist, artist and innovator, added to the curriculum agricultural studies for students whose academic studies comprised mainly of math, grammar and reading until he joined the faculty.

Carver once said success is measured in the service to others. He spent his life sharing his knowledge with students, the surrounding community and much of the South.

The EO staff hoped visitors would enjoy learning firsthand about the accomplishments of these famous Southern black educators.

"Coming to where it all happened means a lot more than just reading or hearing about it," said Lt. Col. James Larsen, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity. "Two years ago, my daughter did a report on Carver, so I am thinking of bringing my family here."

Sgt. Manuel Rodriguez, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, said his interest in the trip was sparked by the movie, The Tuskegee Airmen.

"I wanted to see if the treatment of blacks in the movie was accurate," he said.

Seeing truth in the movie's portrayal of treatment toward blacks, Rodriguez said he was surprised by the respect and friendships enjoyed by the school's founder, Booker T. Washington.

Washington regularly socialized with icons such as Andrew Carnegie, Collins P. Huntington and John D. Rockefeller at a time when most former slaves struggled to survive.

The group then made its way to Washington's home. Christine Biggers, National Park Service ranger, told visitors all about the rich history of "The Oaks." Like all of the original buildings on campus, Biggers said, it was built by students as part of the work-ethic curriculum and completed in 1889.

After lunch at Tompkins Hall, a cafeteria built in 1910 to accommodate 1,600 students and 185 faculty members, the two groups changed escorts and continued the tour.

In the early afternoon, visitors made their way back to the buses. Sgt. 1st Class Michael Simpson, Basic Combat Training Battalion, said he enjoyed the focus of the tour on accomplishments of black Americans, not on segregation or discrimination issues.

"We all have a lot to be thankful for to this foundation of black education and society," Simpson said. "We can learn what each of us can accomplish by learning from their struggles, their suffering, their dedication to be successful.

"This EO program proves it continues to give everyone the opportunity to learn about the proud heritage of different races, and, by not focusing on only one or two, we all benefit," Simpson said.

Post gyms to ease sign-in process

New program aids in data access

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning fitness facilities will begin using a recreational tracking system for electronic sign-in starting March 1.

"The way the Army is headed you need data at your fingertips, and this is a way of getting that quick access," said Debbi Addison, an information technology officer with Directorate of Community Activities.

The facilities affected are Audie Murphy Fitness Center, Briant Wells Field House, Infantry Center, Kefurt Fitness Center, Outpost Harry Fitness Center and Santiago Fitness Center.

Identification cards will be scanned upon entering a fitness facility.

The new system, or RecTrac, is an automated program that captures customer information. When people come in to a facility, it can track demographics — male, female and rank. This information will help justify program budget requirements and the need for new facilities, Addison said.

"The data gathered will help determine utilities and equipment upgrades based on usage," said Andrew Snoddy, DCA sports director.

In the long run patrons of the facility will see more improvements, he said

"The program was initiated by the Department of the Army a number of years ago, and now it's at the installation level," Snoddy said.

"The manufacturer recently upgraded the program to solve some of the security concerns we had."

Authorized facility users will complete a USAIC RecTrac data information sheet to be entered into the system. This will let them access all post fitness facilities.

The data sheet can be picked up at any fitness facility.

The new program speeds up the access process and will help fitness facility managers execute USAIC intramural sports and recreational programs, Snoddy said.

Soldiers must choose retirement option by March 1

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The first soldiers eligible for a $30,000 bonus must decide by March 1 whether they want the new Career Status Bonus/REDUX retired-pay plan.

Under the CSB/REDUX plan, soldiers essentially receive $30,000 of their retirement pay early, at least five years before hanging up their uniforms, a personnel official said.

The March 1 deadline for the bonus applies to soldiers who began their service after July 31, 1986, and before March 1, 1987. They must select between either the High-Three or CSB/REDUX retirement options.

Many soldiers are unsure which retired-pay plan they are covered by, personnel officials said. They explained that three different plans are currently in use. The plan a soldier uses is determined by his or her DIEMS, or Date Initially Entered Military Service.

Soldiers with DIEMS before Sept. 8, 1980, receive a percentage of their final basic pay. Those with DIEMS on or after Sept. 8, 1980, receive a percentage of the average of their highest 36 months of basic pay, referred to as the High-Three formula. Soldiers with DIEMS after July 31, 1986, may choose between the High-Three and Career Status Bonus (CSB/REDUX) formulas.

Each formula begins with the number of years of creditable service, officials said.

A notice will appear on qualifying soldiers' Leave and Earnings Statements alerting them that they must choose a formula. The choice cannot be changed once made, officials said.

Soldiers choosing the CSB/REDUX option receive a $30,000 career-status bonus during their 15th year of service and agree to serve five more years.

Retired pay then equals the number of years of creditable service multiplied by 2.5 percent, minus 1 percent for each year of service under 30, multiplied by the average of the soldier's highest 36 months of basic pay.

At age 62, retired pay will be recomputed under the High-Three formula, but will not be retroactive. Under CSB/REDUX, the longer one stays on active duty, the closer the percentage multiplier is to what it would have been under the High-Three formula, up to the 30-year point at which the percentage multipliers are equal.

The $30,000 career-status bonus is subject to federal and state taxes. According to the Internal Revenue Service's elective deferral limit, citizens may shelter up to $11,000 in tax-free savings programs such as the Thrift Savings Plan in 2002.

Post conducts controlled burns

Burning helps prevent fires, causes smoke

Bob Larimore
DFEL

"Frequent burning enhances the ecosystem."

Bob Larimore
Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

The Land Management Branch's prescribed burning is in full swing. Most of the burning is between now and May.

The Land Management Branch currently burns 30,000 to 35,000 acres each year depending on the weather conditions and training activity. The goal is to burn each training compartment on a two- to three-year rotation. Frequent burning not only enhances the ecosystem and training areas but also reduces the amount of smoke generated when forest fuels or litter are consumed by wildfires.

Smoke is the biggest problem the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics' Land Management Branch encounters during our prescribed burns. Smoke is not only a health hazard, but it also reduces visibility, which can cause driving problems. Strict smoke management guidelines are followed to minimize smoke hazards.

The size of the area to be burned and the amount and type of fuel present are the biggest factors determining smoke production.

Weather conditions will influence where and how the smoke dissipates. Wind direction, wind speed, humidity, days since rainfall, changing temperatures, mixing height and transport wind speed all influence smoke dispersion. At night, due to temperature inversions, fog potential, calm winds and higher humidity, the ability for the atmosphere to disperse smoke is greatly reduced, causing smoke to settle in low lying areas.

The Land Management Branch considers all of these conditions to determine how far the smoke may travel and which areas may be impacted. Smoke impacts can not always be eliminated from personnel, roads, or cantonment areas due to their close proximity to the area being burned.

For this reason, when prescribed burns are conducted in areas that are within the smoke impact distance, the branch notifies those units or facilities of a potential smoke problem. When a main road or highway is within the smoke impact distance, smoke-warning signs are posted to alert motorists. These signs are strategically placed to alert motorists of the smoke ahead so they have time to react, slow down and exercise extra caution.

Even if there appears to be no smoke in the area during the day, nighttime weather conditions may cause the smoke to move into these areas.

The Fort Benning officials request that all personnel take precautions when they experience smoke in the area. The Land Management Branch is doing its best to minimize it or eliminate it.

Baptism by CS gas for new soldiers

Pfc. Kyle Neller

Pvt. Larry Wilson experiences CS gas at nuclear biological chemical defense training Tuesday.

Bushmasters taught to trust equipment

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Soldiers in their second week of basic training with the Bushmasters of B Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, were introduced to Nuclear, Biological and Chemical defense Tuesday at the gas chamber

This is the soldiers first introduction to any type of chemical training, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Clegg, senior drill sergeant for the company.

The training is very relevant to soldiers in today's Army. More and more countries have chemical and biological capabilities, and the risk of an NBC attack for soldiers is very real.

The soldiers were exposed the effects of a possible chemical attack when they went through a gas chamber filled with CS gas. The chamber gave them confidence in their equipment and it also gave them a harsh lesson in how potent chemical warfare can be.

Soldiers exiting the chamber were red-faced, runny nosed and coughing.

"Some of these soldiers may be heading to Kosovo, Afghanistan or Kuwait and it will be for real, so they need to have a basic knowledge of NBC defense," Clegg said.

The experience is a clear message to the soldiers for why this training is vitally important, he said.

"I feel more knowledgeable about what this stuff feels like," said Pvt. Dave Wortman. "I feel we need this training in today's world."

> "This is only a taste of what could happen."
> Pvt. Keith Collins
> ITB soldier

The day in the gas chamber allows drill sergeants to show soldiers a valuable lesson about being proactive. By taking care of their protective mask, keeping it serviceable and making sure it is in working condition, they can protect themselves from a chemical attack, Clegg said.

As an instructor, it is important to make lessons as lifelike as possible, he said. Reactions in real-world situations will depend on the training received by the soldiers.

After coming out of the chamber, Pvt. Keith Collins said he felt really confident in his equipment.

"The faster you get your mask on, the better," Collins said. "This is only a taste of what could happen."

For Wortman, this day of training wasn't one he would soon forget. He said if he ever found himself in a similar situation he would avoid the effects learned in the chamber by putting on his protective mask as quickly as possible.

The gas chamber also showed the soldiers how a very small amount of a chemical agent can adversely effect their nervous system, and make them extremely uncomfortable in the process.

"This is an attention getter," Clegg said. "This is the real stuff, and if you don't pay attention, you may be a victim of a chemical attack."

Members of the 598th Maintenance Company exchanged their wrenches and screwdrivers for litters and field dressings Feb. 7 near Lawson Army Airfield.

They and the other members of the 13th Corps Support Battalion conducted medical evacuation exercises during a mock scenario — some of their comrades became "casualties" when one of their trucks "exploded" during their mission on the island of Cortina.

The soldiers' mission was to establish and secure a local perimeter, evacuate the casualties and call for a MEDEVAC.

"Even though they were in the walking phase today, in the crawl-walk-run concept, they did great," said 1st Lt. Moises Ramirez, officer-in-charge of Supply and Services at the battalion. "It's a tribute to their leadership who did what they needed to do — lead from the front. There's no doubt in my mind these soldiers can walk into a situation and execute to standard."

Soldiers worked well together and knew the key elements of the mission — the security team, first aid and litter team, and command and control — even though it was the first time most of them performed a MEDEVAC, Ramirez said.

"We still have to get the cracks out, but practice makes perfect," said Pfc. Antwon Smith, a mechanic with the company. "We performed fine for it being our first time out."

One of the technical aspects of the mission soldiers learned was the nine-line MEDEVAC report, which gives the helicopter pilot such information as the soldiers' location, the type and amount of patients they have, the kind of special equipment they need, and how they will mark the landing site.

During the after action review, the 13th CSB leadership who organized the mission told the soldiers how they did. The soldiers used good procedures during the litter carries to the landing site. However, to improve for next time, they could set up their security and prioritize their casualties better.

"Once the vehicle exploded, it took us too long to get to the casualties, but, after the litter team came in and accessed the casualties, it went like clockwork," said Spc. Kevin Power, a mechanic with the company. "I was on the security team, and we had the landing zone set up up before the (observer-controller) looked at it. We did pretty well."

A key focus of the mission was the "soldiers first" mentality.

"In order to save our soldiers in time of combat, we have to prepare for it," Smith said. "This was a good experience. You can read a book all day, but you don't get a true feel for it until you go out and do an actual mission. More units should do this."

Saving your fellow soldier is a terrific method to build team cohesion, he added. The mission also reminded him of the correct way to evaluate a casualty. He learned how he should and should not carry a litter and the right way to establish a 360-degree perimeter.

Not only did the mission teach the soldiers life saving skills, it afforded them the opportunity to get out of the motor pool.

"I had a good time," Power said. "It was definitely a good change of pace.

"Being in a maintenance company, this scenario probably won't happen to us in the real world," he added.

"But if it were to happen, I'm glad we did this mission. We'll be ready."

Delegates seek resolutions to family issues

Volunteers address quality of life issues

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Recreation is important. But then again it's not.

A panel of delegates from all walks of Army life sent a message to the garrison commander that playgrounds and youth activities are a major concern for Fort Benning folks. However, the golf course, Uchee Creek and the bowling center were among those services deemed least important to the quality of life on post.

Nearly 150 volunteers, including children, retirees, family members, officers, enlisted soldiers and Department of the Army civilians participated in the eight-hour Army Family Action Plan symposium Wednesday at the Officers' Club. By the end of the day, they hammered out possible resolutions from many of the issues they felt warrant a closer look by post officials and listed those services they consider invaluable or expendable to the Fort Benning community.

Those issues included: PX pricing policies, immigration and naturalization assistance, lack of activities for youth in housing areas, unsafe, outdated and inadequate playgrounds in housing areas, assignment of quarters by rank versus family size, work order procedures, educational opportunities for soldiers, outdated, undefined garrison regulations and overtasked, understaffed medical services.

"As community members, we're all really good at complaining, not so good at finding a solution," said Sarah Hertig, AFAP coordinator. "This is the forum for that kind of positive action. We've brought together a broad demographic of folks, all here in civilian clothes, addressed by first names, to keep all things equal and to give everybody an equal opportunity to voice their issues and opinions."

The event, which will be conducted annually at all installations according to new Army Community Services guidelines, is designed to identify and resolve community issues at a local level and forward information, when necessary or beneficial, to higher commands. A DA-level symposium will be conducted in March.

Hertig said the program, now in its 17th year, has had a major, far-reaching impact on Army policy. It was at post-level AFAP symposiums that issues like stabilization for high school seniors, Thrift Savings Plan and improved dental care were first broached.

"These are just a few of the ways AFAP has impacted the Army and the Department of Defense as a whole," Hertig said. "What we talk about here today, what we propose or resolve has the potential to affect the quality of life for all service members."

> "What we talk about here today, what we propose or resolve has the potential to affect the quality of life for all service members."
> Sarah Hertig

The delegates were divided into workgroups, each assigned to prioritize issues in one of six areas: consumer issues, family services, housing and relocation, youth and education, community services and medical services.

Each group, chaired by a staff of volunteer facilitators, voted on the top three concerns and formulated three possible solutions for each problem. These conclusions will be presented to the post garrison commander and the post commander.

Any issues deemed unresolvable at a local level, or any proposals that may be beneficial to the whole will be forwarded to the Training and Doctrine Command or DA.

"So it's my only real chance, as a teen-ager, to help make decisions that could affect the whole post, or the whole Army," said 13-year-old Holly Bellamy, who lobbied for more sports-related activities in post housing areas.

This was the second AFAP for Isabelle Engeldinger, the wife of an Army retiree.

"After the last one I saw some real improvements in Uchee Creek," she said. "So I know this works. That's why I'm here."

As for Uchee Creek, it was one of several post resources delegates listed as "least valuable" to the Fort Benning community, including the florist and the BOSS program.

The five most valuable services included Martin Army Community Hospital, post schools, housing, commissary and medical services like United Concordia and Tricare.

Students send cheer overseas

Kids support deployed soldiers

Dexter Elementary School

Third-graders at Dexter Elementary School made and sent Valentines to soldiers deployed in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

This isn't the only time the third-graders have shown their support.

In December "Operation Holiday Cheer" was a service project organized by parents and students in Dexter's third-grade class as part of the Giraffe Program, which is a service learning and character development program.

"The culminating activity of the Giraffe Program was for the students to do some type of helpful and caring project," Terri Bond, third-grade teacher, said.

"We chose our project because we knew the soldiers were away from their families for Christmas and needed to be cheered up," third-grader Kyle Gray said.

"All the kids at our school made cards and some gave us candy to send to the soldiers," said Elizabeth Hernandez. "Lieutenant Colonel Banach told us the soldiers really liked getting the boxes.

"I am glad we helped them feel better," she said.

The battalion commander, Lt. Col. Stefan Banach, presented the students with the certificate because of their participation in Operation Holiday Cheer this past December.

"It really meant a lot to the soldiers to receive the treats and cards from Dexter students," Banach said. "They were in a not-so-nice place where they didn't have the comforts of home. The treats really helped cheer them up."

"I'm glad the soldiers liked what we sent them," Gray said.

Rangers in the battalion recently returned from service in Operation Enduring Freedom.

Dexter students intend to continue sending cheer to deployed soldiers, said principal Vicki Rogers.

"There are still many soldiers participating in Operation Enduring Freedom so support from home is still needed," she said.

True love waits ... 25 years

Couple's nuptials a quarter of a century in the making

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

It was the day Faye had been waiting 25 years for — the day Faye Lewis Strong became Mrs. Wayne Boyer.

"Not Faye Boyer. Not Faye Strong-Boyer. Just Mrs. Boyer. That's all I ever wanted to be," she said.

The Faith Middle School music teacher married Maj. Wayne Boyer in a private ceremony on Valentine's Day.

The celebration that followed was anything but low-key. Hundreds of family, friends and coworkers helped celebrate the culmination of a star-crossed courtship that spanned three decades and finally required something akin to divine intervention.

Faye, the daughter of an Army sergeant major, was a freshman at Alexandria University in Louisiana when she first laid eyes on Wayne. He was an enlisted soldier from nearby Fort Polk, visiting the campus with friends to attend a gospel concert.

They spent most of the evening stealing glances across the crowded auditorium, but neither was willing to make the first move.

"I was so shy — little ol' introverted Faye. And he was the best-looking thing I'd ever seen," she said.

The two met several months later at an Easter Sunday worship. It was Spring break and Faye was visiting her parents at Fort Polk. A talented singer, she was asked to perform a solo with the post's chapel choir.

Wayne was in the choir.

This time he approached her, and for the next two weeks they were inseparable.

"Before I went back to school, he came to see me every day — walked seven miles to my house," Faye said. "We'd talk and talk and talk, 'til all hours of the night. Then he'd have to walk through the night to get ready for PT. It didn't matter. We just wanted to be together."

The following summer Wayne proposed and gave Faye an engagement ring he called "diamond dust" because the diamond was so tiny.

They decided to wait until Faye graduated. Wayne left the Army to attend Fort Valley State College in Georgia.

But time and distance took its toll on the relationship.

"Everybody wanted us to slow down, date other people — experience what was out there before we settled down," said Faye, who eventually returned to Columbus where she was born.

"And we bought into it. We didn't want to break up — we both cried. But we'd convinced ourselves everyone must be right and it was for the best."

Wayne continued to stay in touch with Faye's family, attending weddings, funerals and reunions. Faye even pinned on his bars when he was commissioned with the Army Reserves. But eventually he married and fathered two sons.

Faye did the same. She has twin sons, Abraham and Jeremiah, who are 10 years old.

Both marriages ended in divorce.

Then one day nearly two years ago, Wayne followed what he called "a hunch" — a response to his prayers for direction, and drove to Columbus to visit his former fiance.

"I was on the phone with a couple of friends, counseling this young lady about marriage," Faye recalled. "I told her 'Don't settle. Find someone who makes you laugh, someone who supports you, someone you know you really love.'

"And I said 'I had that kind of love once, with Wayne.'"

Faye abruptly ended the telephone conversation when she heard someone at the front door.

"And there he was — Wayne," she said. "He asked me out to dinner, and it was just like old times. It was like we were never apart. He still makes me laugh. He's still gorgeous. He's still the smartest man I know."

They renewed their relationship, despite the distance between her Columbus home and his in Peach County, and soon set a wedding date — May 1, 2001, Wayne's birthday.

"We knew it was right. It's God's will, and time is fleeting," Wayne said. "We'd already lost a lot of time."

But the road to wedded bliss took another detour.

Now a major with a Forces Command augmentation unit, Wayne was called up for special assignment, and the wedding had to be postponed.

"We called it off and had a big tearful good-bye. Had no idea where he was going or for how long," Faye said. "Then he showed up at my work one day. He'd been sent to Fort Benning of all places."

The couple rescheduled the wedding for June of this year. But Wayne finished the house he'd been building for his new family, and the couple "just plain got tired of waiting."

So they finally made it to the altar Thursday.

Abraham and Jeremiah lit the unity candle. The four of them exchanged rings to symbolize their commitment as a family. And then they joined the party at the Liberty Theater, where Mayor Bobby Peters proclaimed Feb. 14 "Wayne and Faye Boyer Day" in Columbus.

Teens reach out to younger students

Youngsters expand cultural knowledge

White Elementary school students recently got a lesson from their elders when the Kendrick High School Freedom Fighters visited the school Feb. 7.

"They're tremendous," said Judy Little, fifth grade teacher. "It's amazing what they can do."

The Freedom Fighters began in February, 1994, and use song, dance and character representation to celebrate African American heritage. The group puts on about 25 shows for churches and schools in February in honor of Black History month.

The group highlighted the historical journey of African Americans from slavery to freedom for a group of elementary school students.

"African Americans are just one group of people that have dramatically contributed to the success of our country," Chandra Roundtree, senior, told the young children.

The students' goal was to expose the children to events they may not get from their current history lessons, which they say have been written from a primarily white Anglo-Saxon point of view.

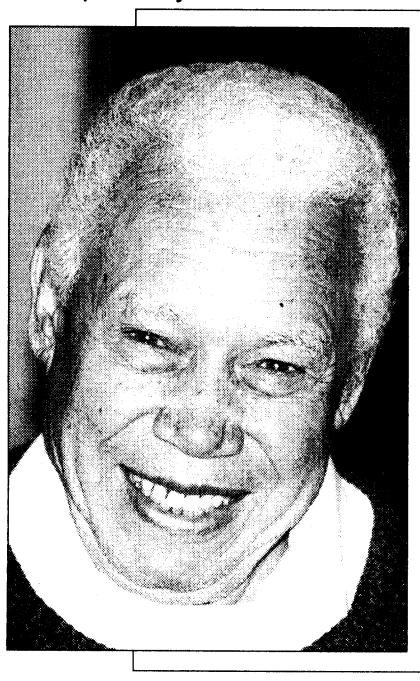
"We have produced our own history," Roundtree said. "But we've also been central in creating the history of the United States. African Americans have fought and died alongside white soldiers, and have earned the right to be called Americans."

Students from first to fifth grade competed in a poster contest, where the students picked a famous black figure to study and depict on the poster.

"I hoped the children would learn about a famous black person they didn't know of before," said Kathy Kirkland, second grade teacher at White. "There's a lot that's not in our text books, and I felt it important to have the children learn about the contributions African Americans have made."

Other teachers are integrating black history into their curriculum this month. Shelia Brown, fifth grade teacher at White, is introducing famous black Americans to her students by using a bulletin board. Her students will write descriptive paragraphs about the figures on the board, and then use clues from the paragraphs to play a mystery game.

The students will make peanut butter when they learn about George Washington Carver, and will do a 3-D book report of a famous black American.



Jessica Plaut, first grade teacher at Wilson Elementary, is using a month-long calendar with a famous black American featured each day.

"These students are going to hear for their entire life about famous white figures. There are so few people who know about the accomplishments of black inventors because it was not publicized at the time," Plaut said. "Garrett Morgan, for instance invented the traffic light, which keeps us safe and the gas mask, used in World War II. Madame C.J. Walker was a self-made millionaire, and that was when it was hard for any person to be a millionaire. She did it in the midst of great oppression.

"There are 14 black students out of 20 in my classroom," Plaut added. "It's important they know the accomplishments made by people of their race, and be able to identify with them."

'Get in a line and follow me'

Compiled by Laura Martinson and Bridgett Siter

Some consider Alfonso Biggs Columbus' leading authority on black history. At 98, his hearing isn't what it used to be, but his eyes are sharp, and his smooth tan skin looks like that of a man half his age.

Most notable, though, is Biggs' memory, his knack for retelling the tales his grandmother told and reciting the names and dates and events that shaped the local black community.

Biggs' great-grandmother sailed on a slave ship from Africa to America. His grandmother learned to read in a local cemetery.

"Education was forbidden," Biggs said. "But there was a teacher, Miss Pauline Blackma, who wanted to teach. She got the children together and said, 'Get in a line and follow me,' and she took them up a hill to Linwood Cemetery, where there was one tombstone with all the alphabet on it. My grandmother learned to pick the letters of her name off that grave."

After the Civil War, Columbus' free blacks actively sought an education, and by law were permitted to do so. But whites were discouraged from helping in any way. Those who were willing had to do so surreptitiously.

"They had a password they'd use," Biggs said. "'Quaker.' It meant 'I am your friend. I've come to help.' White folks would use it to let blacks know they were there to help."

Biggs tells stories of his own schooling "in the piney woods," sitting on nail kegs and writing on cardboard. He was luckier than most. The third child of 15, he helped his mother in the kitchen when the field work was done, and he learned to be a good cook. At night he went to school and earned a certificate of college training.

His education and culinary talents led to work on Camp Benning and eventually Fort Benning, where he cooked for five post commanders at Riverside and presidents Roosevelt, Eisenhower and Truman.

"I was a master cook, the best there was. I had a rough life, but things got better. I've come a long way," said Biggs, who owned a catering company for 45 years.

Biggs keeps stacks of binders, each full of hand-printed articles he copied from newspapers, some dating back to 1836. Each documents milestones in the history of Columbus, and "Black Columbus" in particular.

"Yes, we had a Black Columbus," he said. "We had a volunteer fire department, a bank, doctors, schools, libraries, churches and a YMCA. We had everything the white people had, and we were happy. There was segregation, but we broke them bars a long time ago.

"I think some young people don't appreciate that. Can't they see the progress? Can't they see there's some white people tryin' to tell them the password — 'I am Quaker. I am your friend.'"

All they wanted was a glass of water. But not a single restaurant in all of Fayetteville, N.C., would oblige. More than 300 black students from Fayetteville State College staged a march on the city in the fall of 1962. Then 18-year-old Carolyn Thomas, now a Fort Benning schoolteacher, said every single student was turned away.

"We split up and went into restaurants and soda fountains and ordered a cup of coffee or a glass of water. They called us names, told us 'We don't serve coloreds here.' One store owner even pulled out a snake," she said.

But at the group's first meeting, kept secret, student leaders warned those who were scared to stay home.

"We were afraid of the unexpected," Thomas said. "But I felt brave enough. If Rosa Parks could do it, why couldn't we?"

After her first march, Thomas said the thought of anything bigger never crossed her mind, until she visited her sister in Washington, D.C. Her sister was making a poster to carry at the March on Washington.

"I was in awe," Thomas said of the prospect of marching with King. "I kept asking her, 'Are we really going to march with Dr. King?'"

And march they did, nearly three miles from Pennsylvania Avenue to the Washington Monument.

"There were people as far as the eye could see," Thomas recalled. "All colors, shapes and sizes, people from all walks of life, and there was such a feeling of unity."

"I don't think I breathed through the entire speech," she said. "I marched with him. I heard him. I was there, and all I could think was 'This is history.'"

Venice Kerr remembers Memphis as a city of great prejudice. There were areas where blacks were not allowed to live. Hers was the first black family to move into a white neighborhood.

"I'll never forget the little boy next door," she said. "He came over to play one day and said, 'My dad says we're moving out because the niggers are moving in.' I'll never forget that."

Kerr, a supply technician at Wilson Elementary School, remembers when Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. came to Memphis. She remembers his final march as starting peacefully.

"I was 8-years-old when Dr. King came to town. We were all holding hands and singing songs when we heard a window break. The next thing I knew a riot had broken out," she said.

Kerr was swept up in the crowd and separated from her mother and her sister. In the middle of the mayhem, women and children sought safety in a church, which was soon filled with police and then tear gas.

"I remember just crying because the gas was hurting my eyes," Kerr said.

She and her family did manage to reunite and later went to the Mason Temple to hear Dr. King give what would be his last speech, "I've been to the mountaintop."

"I was probably playing more than paying attention, but I still cry every time I hear that speech."

It was after dinner the following night, April 4, 1968, that word of King's death began to circulate.

"Women were coming out of their houses crying, falling to the ground," she said. "My mother cried like it was her own brother. It was the only time I ever saw her cry."

The entire city was immediately put on curfew. Many felt it was intended to squelch any backlash from the black population.

"They said if he came to Memphis, they were going to kill him," Kerr said, "and they did."

Debra King was 16 when she first attended an integrated high school.

Her father enrolled her against her wishes. It was a matter of principle, he said.

"He always taught us that we were first- class citizens," Mabry said. "But I still didn't want to go. I was scared."

The day after Martin Luther King Jr. was assassinated, two white classmates approached her.

"We got your man last night," they said.

"I didn't reply," said Debra Mabry, now Fort Benning schools' curriculum coordinator. "I was so hurt. I just didn't understand the hate."

Mabry recalled the day students across Birmingham "just got up out of their seats" and marched into downtown Birmingham.

"The momentum was so high because everyone knew Dr. King was coming to town," she said.

But fond memories turned sad as she recalled her classmates being attacked by police dogs. Many people were injured or taken to jail.

Mabry's memories of that era are detailed and many. But perhaps her most vivid is of the explosion at the 16th Street Baptist Church, and the death of her dear friend, 10-year-old Denise McNair, one of four young girls killed in the attack. McNair was in the basement getting her choir robe on when the bomb went off.

"We didn't go to church that Sunday, but my mother and I heard the blast from across town," Mabry said. "It was devastating."

Many churches were used to hold secret meetings, making them targets.

Black families moving into white neighborhoods were also targets of violence.

"A hill in our neighborhood got the nickname Dynamite Hill because there were so many bombings," Mabry said. "We had to set up neighborhood watch shifts from dusk until dawn."

Mabry remains optimistic, believing her trials to be part of a larger plan.

"I understood then there were those who didn't want us to have any rights," Mabry said.

"But we're here on this earth for a purpose, to fulfill a dream. There will be ups and downs, but we have a goal to meet."

"... you can be anything you want to be. And it's got nothing to do with the color of your skin."

Young black Americans were practicing the "just do it" philosophy long before it became the catch-phrase of athletes and advertisers, said LaMar Crittenden, a retired soldier who describes himself as a "bit of an artist, a bit of an educator."

Crittenden was a teen-ager in the 60s, when racism and riots made headlines daily. The Columbus native chose the path of passivity over activism, believing change would come eventually.

"Once you knew you couldn't ride up front, you just had to deal with it," Crittenden said, with a shrug. "I knew sooner or later things would change."

But by the time Crittenden enlisted in the Army in 1974, when black soldiers "still had a hard time achieving the goals and rank they desired," he'd made up his mind to face racism head-on.

"All I ever wanted to be was a soldier," he said. "So I went in with the attitude, if I studied and did my job well, I'd move up, or they'd have to give me a good reason why not."

Crittenden did "move up" though he occasionally encountered — and challenged — the issue of racism.

"One time I failed a mock promotion board for no reason at all. They said I didn't make eye contact. I knew that wasn't right — I was taught to look a person in the eye," he said. "I wasn't going to give them any excuse to fail me. I studied a stack of books a foot high. Then I went back and passed it with flying colors."

The 10th Special Forces Support Group soldier retired in 1994 after "20 short years" in the Army. But he continues to practice his second love — a combination of art and education. He creates folk art style posters designed to educate and entertain, each featuring famous and not-so-famous successful black Americans.

Each February Crittenden shares his work with area students. His posters rotate between local schools, libraries, churches and civic organizations. He believes he can help shape the future by teaching about the past.

"I want these students to know more than just Booker T. Washington and Martin Luther King," he said.

"I want them to know about people they can relate to — black military officers, athletes, community leaders, musicians — you name it. These are everyday people who accomplished great things.

"Maybe they didn't rock the world. Maybe you never even heard of them before. But they set out to do something and they didn't let anything get in their way — not the color of their skin or somebody else's prejudice," Crittenden said.

"That's what I want kids to know. If you put your mind to it, study and work hard, you can be whatever you want to be. And it's got nothing to do with the color of your skin."

Angela Seawright believes racism would be just another chapter in the history of black Americans "if the older generation would leave it alone."

"I do believe it's a big problem with the older generation, black and white. They can't let it go, can't get past what happened long ago or get past their old prejudices," she said.

Seawright remembers what it felt like to be a black student in a predominately white elementary school in Louisiana, where black children were held to a stricter standard than their classmates and "when one black child got paddled they all got it."

But the daughter of a minister, Seawright was taught to forgive and forget. She forgave past grievances and raises her own son, Bobby, to be oblivious to matters of race.

"I can't hold all white people responsible for what happened years ago any more than you can stereotype me because of the color of my skin," she said. "That's what I tell Bobby. Don't judge people by their color and don't assume people are judging you by your color."

Still, at 11, Bobby has already encountered racism — overheard racial slurs and disparity of treatment among classmates. But Seawright doesn't blame the children.

"Kids learn it from their parents," she said. "I believe our kids are much more color blind than we were, but there's always going to be racism if parents pass it on to their children. It's the parents and grand-parents, black and white, that carry it on."

Seawright said race is less of an issue in the military community, where common needs and experiences "make us one big family." But with the certain knowledge that her son won't always have this safety net, she's teaching him three principles she feels are critical to his success — "Life is not always fair, skin color doesn't matter, and nobody owes you anything — get a job and work hard."

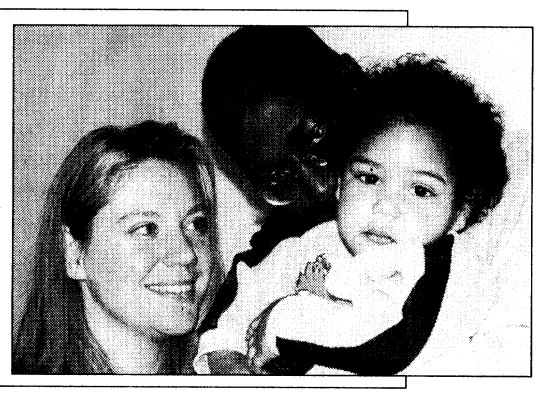
"The bottom line is, there are white people out there who hate blacks simply because they're black," Seawright said. "And black people who think the white man owes them something because of what happened years and years ago. It's time to get over it and move on."

Tracey Youngblood enjoyed a special bond with her oldest brother. They were close, despite a 10-year age difference.

He even allowed Tracey to hang out with his friends, including Warren, a young black Army recruiter. But when Tracey married Warren, he didn't speak to her for more than five years.

"It was OK as long as we were friends, but he was angry that I married him," Tracey said. "Because he's black."

It took a brush with death to make Tracey's brother "realize what was really important," and the family has since reunited. But the experience was an eye-opener to Tracey, who grew up naively believing racism was a thing of the past.



Warren, who works at the 30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception) Fitness Training Unit, was less surprised by the antagonism, though his own family supported the marriage from the start.

"My parents' parents were sharecroppers, so they had some stories to tell," he said. "I learned what racism was all about from them."

The couple is determined to raise their children to be "colorblind," Tracey said.

"Colby's 4. He asked me the other day 'Mommy, who do I look like — you or Daddy?' I told him, 'You have the best of both of us, and you're perfect,'" she said.

"I don't want them growing up seeing people as black or white, everybody is equal."

Sealants help protect teeth

Dentists apply plaque barrier to back teeth

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Dentists have long helped patients in the prevention of tooth decay. One of the tools in the war against decay is the dental sealant, a plastic material the dentist applies to the chewing surfaces of the back teeth — the premolars and molars. The sealant forms a barrier that protects teeth from plaque, a sticky film of bacteria that constantly forms on teeth.

The bacteria in plaque use sugar and starch in food as a source of energy. They convert this food into harmful acids that attack teeth and may cause cavities.

Thorough brushing and flossing help remove food particles and plaque from smooth surfaces of the teeth. Pits and fissures, however, are places that are extremely difficult to clean. Toothbrush bristles cannot reach all the way into the depressions and grooves to remove food and plaque. The normal flow of saliva, which helps clean food particles from other areas of the mouth, cannot adequately cleanse the pits and fissures. They become places that are especially prone to decay. Most cavities form in pit and fissure areas, and permanent molars are extremely susceptible to this form of decay.

Applying dental sealants takes only a few minutes for each tooth. Sealants hold up well under the force of normal chewing and usually last several years before a reapplication is needed. As long as the sealant remains intact, the tooth surface is protected from decay. The dentist checks the condition of the sealants during the dental examination and reapplies them as necessary.

Sealants are an investment in maintaining a healthy smile.

Hospital schedules screenings for families

The Preventive Medicine and Health Promotion Center initiated the Family Medical Inprocessing Program to provide medical assessment through the use of the Health Enrollment Assessment Review. It includes blood pressure and cholesterol screening, counseling, Tricare enrollment and timely access to medical care. It is a proactive program designed to maximize soldier readiness by minimizing medical concerns a soldier's family member may have and provide that family member with timely access to medical care, according to health care officials.

"It is imperative that a good balance is maintained with physical, mental and spiritual wellness," said Brig. Gen. Lester Martinez-Lopez, commander of the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine.

"The family is also an extension of the soldier and must be included when preparing soldiers for the new world Army mission."

The FMI Program is the first three Mondays of each month at Youth Services, Building 1056, McIver Street. The next one is 12:30 to 3:30 p.m. Feb. 25.

Free child care will be provided. In-processing time is approximately one hour.

To sign up, call the Health Promotion Center at 545-1987.

feature teacher

Miriam Aiken

a first-grade teacher at Stowers Elementary School

Personal: Aiken, a native of Orangeburg, S.C., went to school in her hometown from the first day of kindergarten until her last day of college. She graduated from Claflin College with a degree in elementary education.
Aiken is the second of six children, four of whom are now teachers. She has four children. and "25 new grandchildren every year."
Aiken began her teaching career in 1969, and has taught first grade at Fort Benning for 25 years.

On first graders: Aiken considers herself "blessed" to teach first grade.

"I'm so excited to meet my students each year," she said. "They want to read. They want to learn.

"It's like getting a blank sheet of paper and watching it fill up through the school year."

Her teaching style: "I'm not one of those traditional teachers who does it by the book," she said. "If the students show an interest, we're going to talk about it. We can make a lesson out of anything."

"I don't think of teaching as a job," she said. "It's just so much a part of me."

Aiken firmly believes that children need lots of love, and has no problems with stopping class to resolve hurt feelings.

"Children this age are so hard on each other," she said. "In our classroom, we apologize to one another."

What others are saying: "She is phenomenal," said Jessica Plaut, first-grade teacher at Wilson Elementary. Plaut did her student teaching in Aiken's classroom.

"She really meets the children's needs," Plaut said. "I don't know how she does it, but her parents are so involved in the classroom."

"My parents know I expect a lot from them," Aiken said. "I let them know I will do all I can in the classroom, and they do all they can at home."

Reading counts at Loyd Elementary

Angie McPherson
Loyd Elementary School

Loyd School uses reading to make its students famous. (Well, at least they are famous at Loyd School.) The children get an 8" by 10" glossy placed on the Reading Counts Wall of Fame whenever they reach a reading milestone.

The Reading Counts program allows children to earn points for each book they read independently and demonstrate comprehension by passing a computerized test. Books are assigned points according to their difficulty, with points ranging from 1 to 22, with the average point range being 2 through 8.

To reach the first milestone, a student has to achieve 25 points, the second milestone, 50 points, third milestone, 75 points, etc. Out of approximately 225 students (first through fifth grade), 133 have already earned their first milestones and their pictures and points are displayed. There are 12 students pushing the 200 mark.

The remarkable aspect of the program is how eager students are to have their pictures displayed on the Wall of Fame located just outside the media center for the whole school to see. They meticulously keep up with their points and immediately inform the media specialist, Mitzi Crow, when their points change so they can move to the next level.

When children were asked how it felt to see their pictures on the Wall of Fame, Chris Campbell responded, "It makes me feel famous."

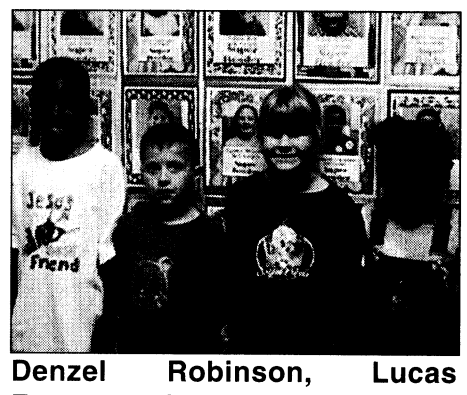
Malik Turner said, "Seeing my picture on the wall makes me feel powerful."

"It's exciting, " answered Toya Carter.

A second aspect of the program is that children can convert the points they earn from reading into tangible rewards. During designated "shopping days" throughout the school year, children trade the points they have earned for jewelry, toys, school supplies, no homework passes, and the most popular prize (and costly in terms of points), is Lunch with the Principal.

Lunch with the Principal is no ordinary lunch. It is a catered affair with pizza, drinks, and dessert.

"One of the rewards of this job is being part of the children's excitement about Reading Counts," said Angie McPherson, principal. "The Wall of Fame, the shopping days, the certificates, and lunch with the principal have fired up independent reading at Loyd School. I am proud to be part of the literacy momentum that is happening in our school."



The Reading Counts program keeps the Media Center hopping. Students are constantly checking out books, returning those after they pass the Reading Counts test for each book, then checking out more books.

"I love seeing children develop a love for reading and will do whatever it takes to foster it," Crow said. "Hopefully, reading will become a lifelong passion for these children."

F.B.I. promotes dads reading to kids

Fathers' involvement comes together with literacy focus

Angie McPherson
Loyd Elementary School

A new program at Loyd Elementary School this year is F.B.I., Fathers Being Involved. The purpose of the program is to get dads more involved in their children's education by volunteering their time at school. The focus this year for the F.B.I. program is reading, which meshes with Loyd's focus on literacy.

Jan. 25 was proclaimed "F.B.I. Day at Loyd." Dads were invited to come anytime between 8:30 and 3 p.m. to read to students. After signing in, they chose books they thought students would enjoy and headed down the hallway to a classroom to read. Some of the dads had so much fun that they read to several classrooms. In all, 25 dads spent time reading at Loyd on F.B.I. Day. One day per month for the remainder of the school year will be designated as F.B.I. Day. February's F.B.I. Day for grades pre-K through second is today.

Sheila Cousin, a first-grade teacher at Loyd who spearheads the F.B.I. program, was elated with the response.

"I was afraid we wouldn't have much response since the program is so new, but the turnout was overwhelming," she said. "We even had several dads show up who had never attended a school function because of their work schedule. They were a little nervous at first, but once they began reading and saw how much the children were enjoying it, they became comfortable with being in the spotlight."
Students whose dads read to their class beamed with pride.

Having fathers come in to read coincided perfectly with the sleepover in Gail Stafford's pre-kindergarten classroom. The class read Ira Sleeps Over last week and decided to have their own sleepover. Students (and Mrs. Stafford) were dressed in pajamas and cuddling with their favorite stuffed animal or blanket. Dads dropped in throughout the day and read "bedtime" stories to them.

The best thing about their sleepover was that they enjoyed several dads reading some of their favorite books to them, and they didn't even have to go to sleep!

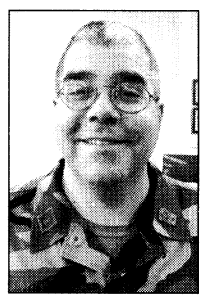
Confession of sins helps bring absolution



Chaplain (Capt.) Joseph Angotti
Basic Combat Training Brigade

commentary

As a Roman Catholic priest, I am frequently asked about why we have the tradition of confessing our sins to a priest or bishop.

I find a good answer is found in John 20:21-23.

In this passage of scripture, Jesus says to his apostles, "Peace be with you. As the Father sent me, so I am sending you." After breathing on them, he says, "Receive the Holy Spirit. If you forgive men's sins, they are forgiven; if you retain men's sins, they are retained."

Angotti

During the holy season of Lent, Roman Catholic, Eastern Orthodox and even some Protestant Christians frequently take advantage of a ritual whereby sins are confessed and absolution (forgiveness) is granted.

While many people think of confession as a "Catholic thing," both the Lutheran Book of Worship and the Book of Common Prayer (Anglican) offer rites for the private confession of sin and absolution by the confessor.

So what are the benefits of confessing one's sins?

Personally, I always feel like a load has been lifted from my shoulders after I have gone to confession. I feel more free and energized.

But sacraments are about more than feelings. They are methods by which we encounter a living God who desires to make contact with humanity.

After making a good confession, I am more conscious of my need for his grace in my life.

I am also made more aware of how free and unearned this grace really is because it comes through no merit of my own, but completely through his generosity.

A popular TV nun named Mother Angelica once had some advice for people who are preparing to receive the Sacrament of Penance.

Like most religious leaders, she recommended a thorough examination of conscience and firm purpose of amendment to avoid future sins.

The zinger comes after the penitent leaves the confessional.

"After you've confessed your sins," she said, "go out and treat yourself to a great big ice cream cone."

This year, I think I'll take her advice.

Editor's note: Angotti is a Catholic Priest from the Diocese of Gary, Ind., and was ordained in 1991.

He entered active duty June 2000, and is currently serving with 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade.

Post soldier named Army Athlete of Year

Sharp shooter to receive award in March

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs

Staff Sgt. Jason A. Parker of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit has been named as the 2001 U.S. Army Male Athlete of the Year. Parker will receive his award at the Pride of the Nation banquet hosted by the U.S. Military Sports Association March 22 at the Crystal Gateway Marriott in Arlington, Va., along with Spc. Kara Salmela, a 2002 Olympic biathlete with the Army National Guard of Duluth, Minn., who won the Female Athlete of the Year title.

Parker, a 2000 Olympian and world-record setter, won the World Military Rifle Championship at the 2001 Conseil International du Sport Militaire Shooting Championships in Lahti, Finland, as well as being a member of the overall winning U.S. CISM Team.

Parker

He was also a member of the CISM Rifle Team that won the Gold Medal for the USA and set a new world record in the Standard Rifle Three Position Match and the team that won the Silver Medal in the Military Rapid Fire Match, in which Parker was awarded the individual Silver Medal.

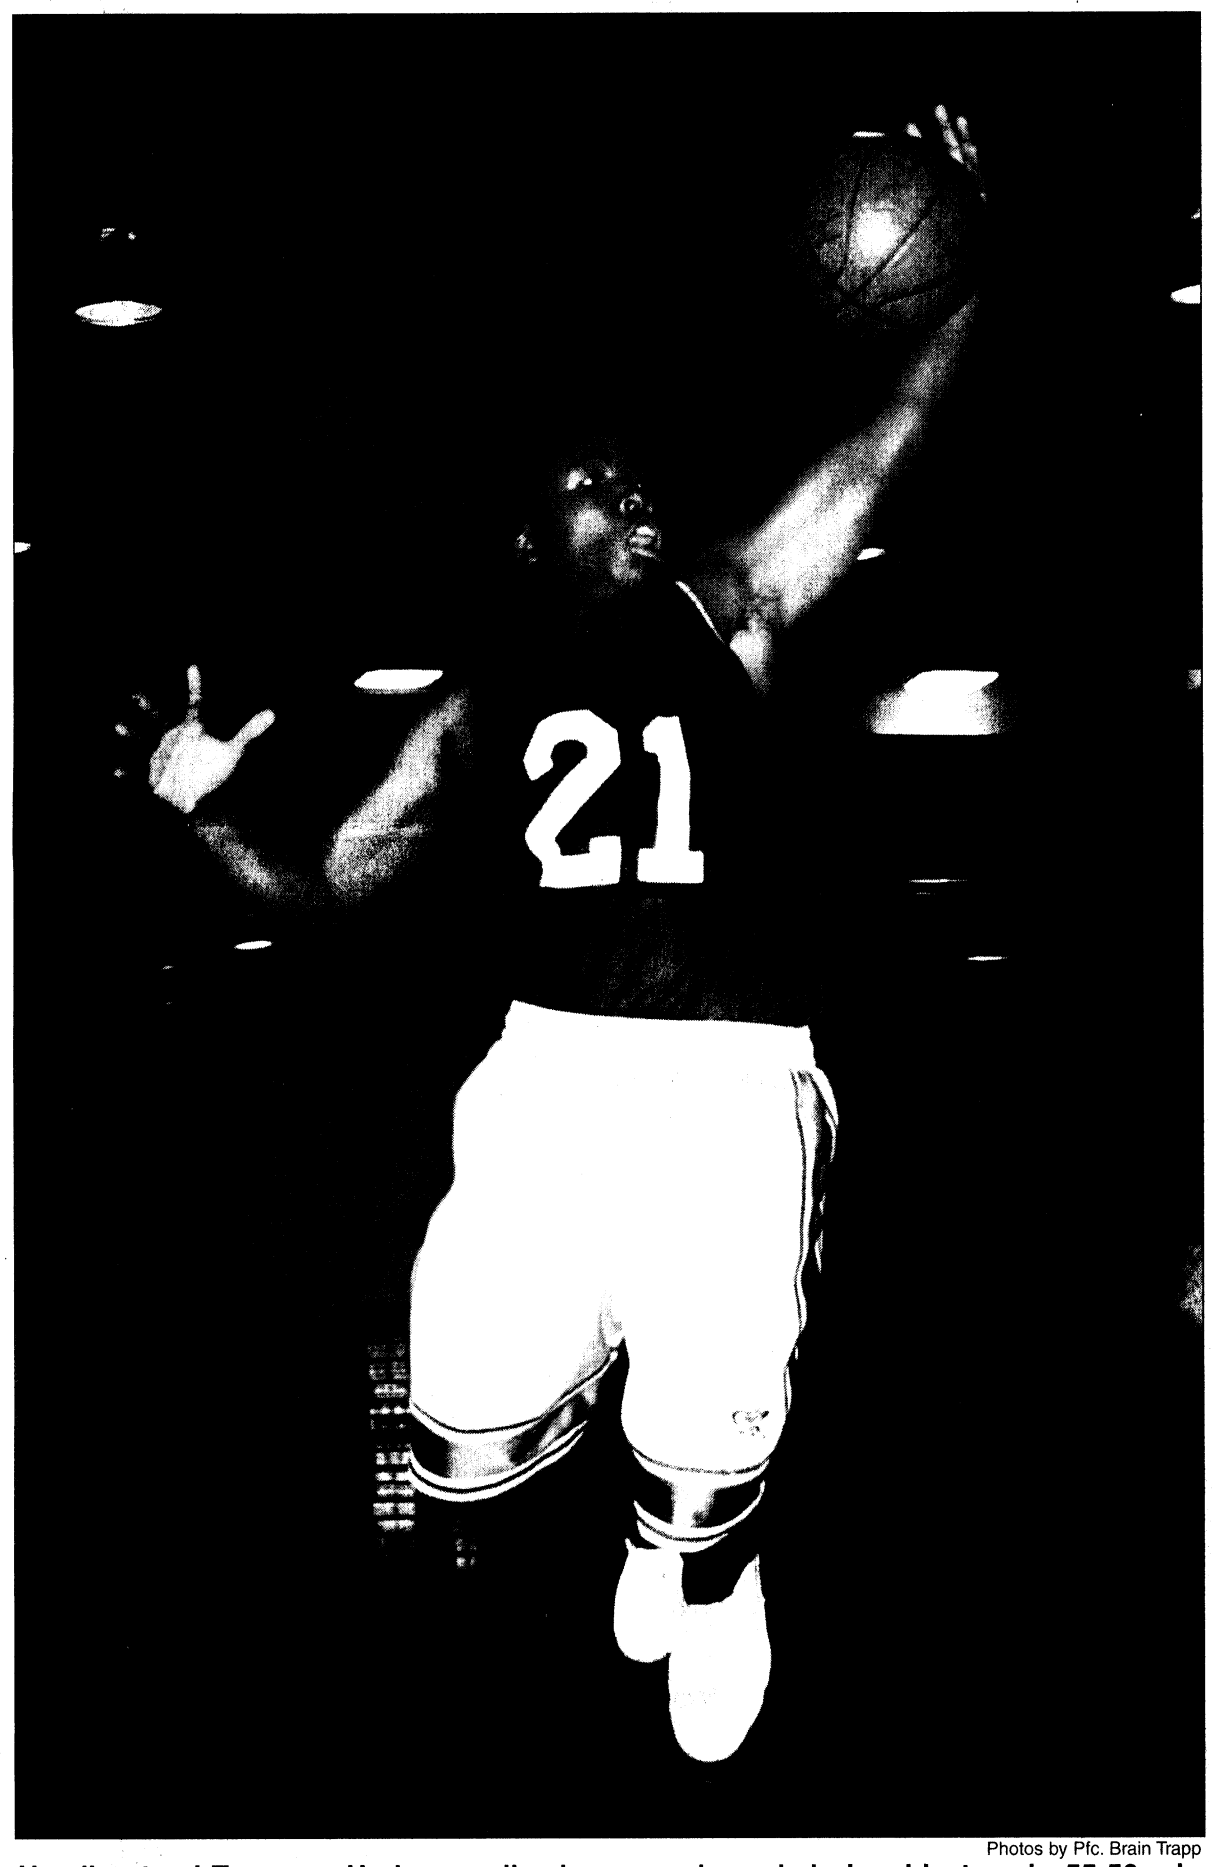
Some of Parker's other accomplishments this year included: a Gold Medal in Free Rifle at the Milan, Italy, World Cup; a Team Gold Medal in Free Rifle at the National Championships; individual and team Gold Medals in Air Rifle and Free Rifle at the Masters de France; Gold Medals in Air Rifle and Free Rifle at the Rocky Mountain Shooting Championships; two Silver Medals in Air Rifle at the Stavanger, Norway, Championships; and a Silver Medal in Air Rifle at the National Sectionals. He was also named as the 2001 Military Marksmanship Association Soldier of the Year.

"It's a nice feeling to be chosen as Army Athlete of the Year," Parker said. "I know a lot of the past recipients, and it's an honor to be thought of in the same class as they are. This award ranks among the best awards I've received."

Parker, who attributes his success to his parents, was raised in Omaha, Neb., and graduated from Bryan High School of Omaha in 1992.

He received a degree in psychology from Xavier University of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1996, where he shot on the university's rifle team. He enlisted in the Army in January 1997 and was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit International Rifle Team in April 1997 after he completed Basic and Infantry Training at Fort Benning.

"I couldn't be where I am today without the Army or the Army Marksmanship Unit," Parker said. "They provided every resource I needed to be where I'm at. To me, being a soldier means doing the right thing, and I would recommend the Army as a career to others."



In 1998, Parker set two world records in Air Rifle and was listed in the Guinness Book of World Records.

At the 2000 Olympics, he competed in the Air Rifle competition and was one of the few shooters to make it to the finals. He ended up in fifth place, just missing an Olympic medal by seven-tenths of a point.

"My three greatest shooting achievements are setting two world records, being the best CISM shooter and becoming an Olympian, and my present goal is to make the 2004 Olympic Team," Parker said. "Becoming an Olympian had been a dream of mine since I was a teen-ager, and the Army gave me everything I needed to attain this goal.

"I tell young people who want to make it to the Olympics, 'Once you have a dream of what you want to be, make a plan and stick with it, and remember it takes hard work and a lot of discipline.'"

Headhunters take Warriors down in last 30 seconds

Headhunters' Terrance Hudson pulls down a rebound during his team's 55-50 win Monday night game against the Warriors at Briant Wells Field House.

Last minute run defeats Warriors in close battle

The Headhunters beat the Warriors, 55-50, in an intramural basketball game Monday night at Briant Wells Field House.

With 3:18 left in the game and the Headhunters leading by 1 point, the Military Police Activity Warriors called a time out to regroup and stage a come back.

After the break the Warriors hit a basket to take their first lead of the game. A rebound and a fast break by the Headhunters, from with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, almost took the momentum away from the Warriors.

The Warriors made a shot from downtown and forced a turnover taking the ball in for another 2 points, leaving the score 49-48 with 1:41 on the clock.

"The team really pulled together, we pulled it out by working together," said Chris Allen, Headhunters point guard and team captain.

The Military Police Activity Warriors' Jason Cooley makes a shot for the basket.

Allen got the ball on the outside and had time to knock down a shot from downtown leaving the score 51-50 with one minute left on the clock.

"We kept playing hard, and we switched from a zone defense to man-to-man, and that seemed to turn it around," said Eric Williams, the Headhunters' highest scorer of the game with 22 points.

A last second steal by Allen and a Warrior foul put the Headhunters' Robert Furr on the line where he put in one shot.

With the game still in reach for the Warriors and less than 30 seconds on the clock, Allen grabbed another rebound. A quick foul sent him to the line again, and he sank both baskets to clench the game for the Headhunters.

"In the last part of the game, we put in our heavy guns and closed it out," Allen said.

He gave them the time for Furr to knock down the final basket to end it for the Warriors.

"I took my time and focused on the game, and the free throws at the end of the game gave it to us," Allen said.

The Headhunters came out to an early lead with an overwhelming amount of rebounding and strong inside passing.

"Last game, we came out with a slow start, so this time we came into this game ready to attack," Williams said.

The Warriors' Jerry Sonnier was a strong 3-point threat, but the Headhunter defense held him to only 1 shot from outside the line.

Quick defense from the Warriors forced a few turnovers to keep the score close, but the Headhunters surged to the half with a seemingly comfortable 29-20 lead. Williams led all scorers with 10 points.

The Warriors started to grab more rebounds at the start of the second-half , and closed the gap to 2 points 43-41, with five minutes left in the game.

The Warriors may have had more points in the half, but the free throws broke up the momentum of the game and didn't allow the Warriors to stay in the groove they needed.

Warriors' Dion Weaver was the high scorer for the Warriors, blowing up in the second half and ending with a 20-point game.

They made 9 points on fouls, but sloppy play in the final minute also brought 7 points from the line to the Headhunters.

"We're coming with a vengeance. The Headhunters are going to take the championship this year-no questions asked," Williams said.

Soldiers ready for Kuwait mission

Deployment to gulf region regular rotation

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

The 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, and the 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, are deploying to Kuwait along with several other units from Fort Stewart's 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized) as part of Operation Desert Spring.

The operation, once called Intrinsic Action, is part of a regular rotation that has been ongoing since the Persian Gulf War. It maintains security and stability in the gulf region against any future aggression.

Operation Desert Spring provides a continuous U.S. presence that rotates about every six months, said Lt. Col. Joseph Southcott, the 3rd Brigade's executive officer. The troops will be part of Camp Doha, a forward presence that exercises command and maintains control and force protection in Kuwait.

"I have no doubt in my mind we are trained and ready to execute our mission," he said.

Pfc. Jack Jackson, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., said he has mixed emotions about deploying and looks forward to the experience.

"It will be a good experience for me," Jackson said. "I'm excited, but I also have a few jitters."

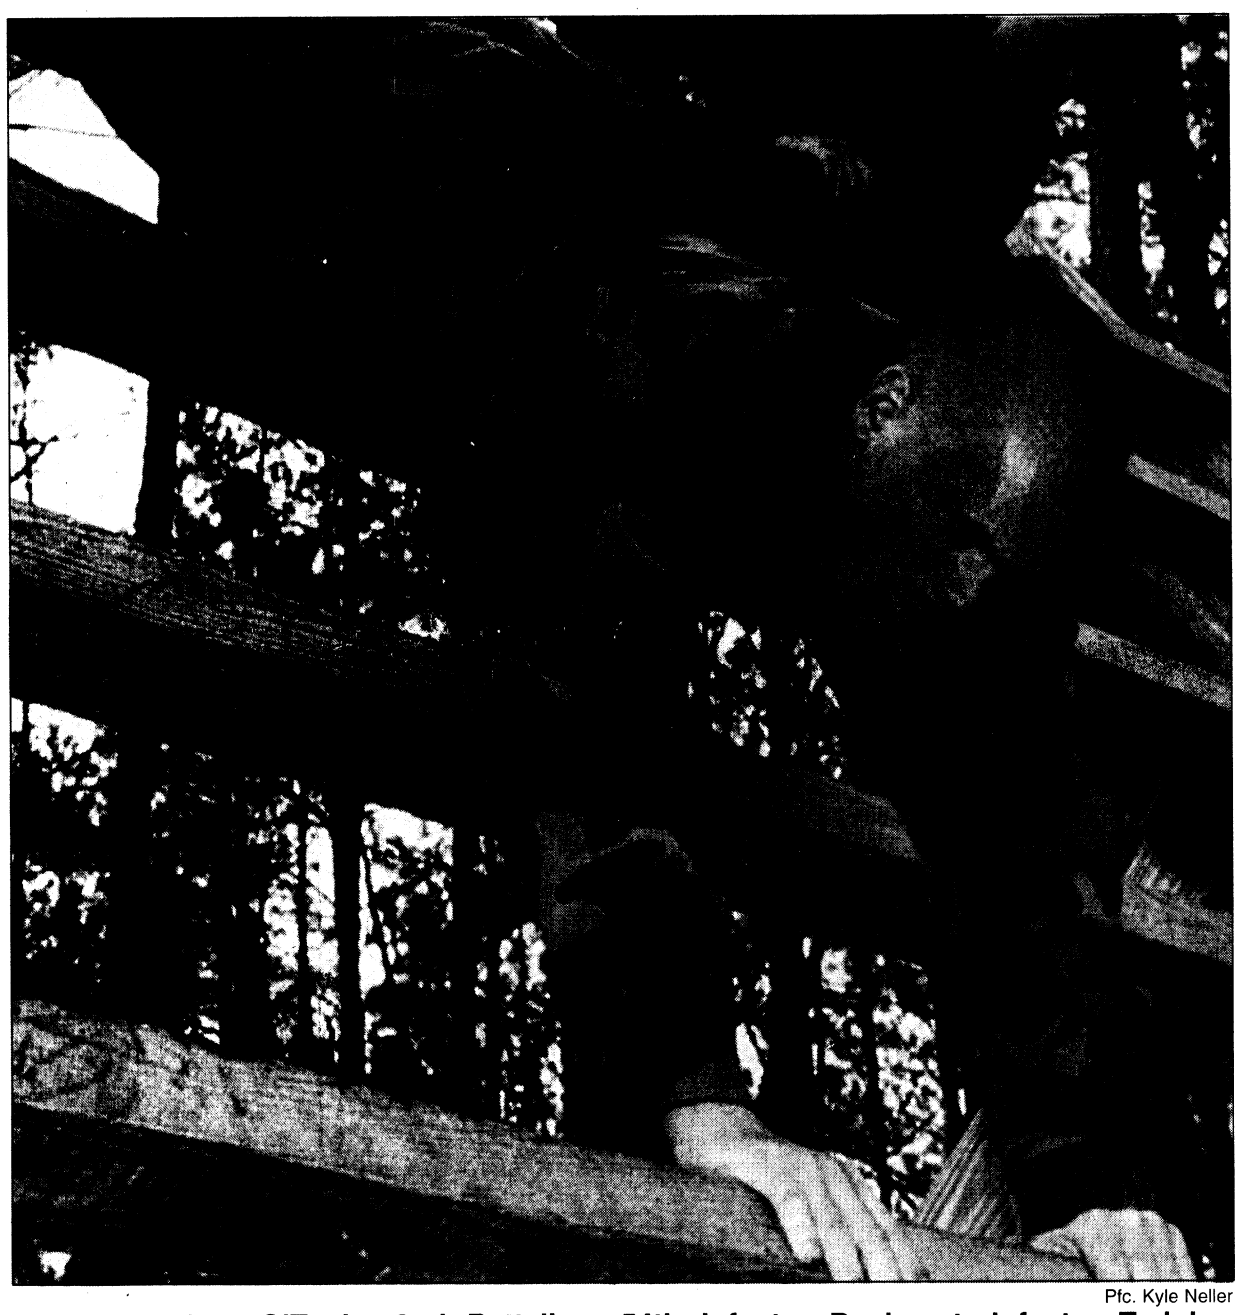
The troops have prepared for their deployment by receiving mandatory preparation classes, Southcott said. They have received hands-on training in both the field and the classroom.

The battalion leadership is helping all soldiers with their financial matters, he said.



Some of the training the troops are doing focuses on hot weather and cultural awareness to better prepare the soldiers for their change of environment.

"The cultural awareness class taught me a little of what to expect about the people there and certain things I should avoid while I'm there," Jackson said.

CAMP MONTEITH, Kosovo — Kosovo was to be the last adventure in Sgt. Balthasar Lopez' time in the Army. The Bradley turret mechanic planned to leave the Army in April, as soon as he returned to Fort Benning after his six-month deployment in the NATO peacekeeping mission.

But Lopez is one of more than 75 soldiers in Task Force 1-30 who have re-enlisted since the unit arrived in Kosovo in October. The re-enlistment will move Lopez and his family to Fort Hood, Texas, closer to their home near Dallas. It also earned him a tax-free bonus.

"This is the best move for my family at this time," Lopez said. "Units at Fort Hood are highly deployable, but it's closer to home and whenever I have the chance, that's where I'll be."

One of the benefits for service members serving in Kosovo and other designated areas is that re-enlistment bonuses earned while deployed are exempt from federal taxes. This tax exemption has been a big incentive for deployed

Demand for dogs more than doubles

K-9 teams face steady travel since Sept. 11

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

If this is a dog's life, it ain't half bad.

EX, a 6-year-old German Shepherd, is an explosives detector and patrol dog assigned to Fort Benning's 209th Military Police Detachment. The pay's not much, but the perks are great.

EX recently attended the Super Bowl in New Orleans where he was fawned over by the athletes and entertainers. And he's frequently called on to assist in Secret Service operations, like protecting the vice president, in various parts of the country.

But wherever he goes, along with his handler, Sgt. Matthew Slusser, he's greeted with gratitude and treated like top dog.

"Wherever we go, people stop us to say thanks," Slusser said. "They're always glad to see us around. I guess it makes them feel more secure."

K-9 teams are a hot commodity since Sept. 11.

"There's been a great increase in the demand for dogs, especially explosives detectors, since the attacks," said Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Dawson, the military working dogs program manager for the Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe, Va.

In fact, requests for dog teams have more than doubled.

"At first it took off like wildfire. All the dogs were overworked," he said. "But now it comes and goes. We had 15 missions in January alone. That's the same number we had for the entire first quarter."

Army K-9 teams are typically called on to assist the Secret Service, protect visiting foreign dignitaries and provide security at

Though Army K-9 teams have been overworked since the Sept. 11 attacks, "it ain't all that bad," said Sgt. Matthew Slusser, left, who met his favorite football player, former Steeler quarterback, Terry Bradshaw, at the Super Bowl game in New Orleans.

A UNIVERSAL TRANSFORMATION

Getting older not easy

Master Sgt. Jon Connor
Army News Service

commentary

One constant of the universe is change. For most things that's good. But for human beings, this translates into getting old if we live long enough.

I've now reached a point in my life that from a physical standpoint, my best days have passed.

That doesn't mean I've given up trying to improve myself. It simply means my body is changing, but not for the better.

For my peers aged 40-45, these are significant times of change. It's a time of self-realization and begrudging acceptance.

For people in their 20s, the concept of ever being in their 40s is nonexistent.

For people in their 30s, getting "older" wasn't any big deal because they're wiser, have more disposable income and still look young.

But, when you actually hit the 40s, the aging process can't help but show its negative signs.

At 42, I'm coming to terms that I don't look the same anymore.

It's not that I'm looking for that fountain of youth. It's just that being middle age brings with it certain things that I never looked forward to.

While I don't wear bifocals yet, my hair is graying on the sides and I have some puffiness underneath my eyes that gives a tired appearance.

And, despite that I'm well within Army weight standards, I long for the days in my 20s when I weighed 155 pounds.

On my last Army Physical Fitness test I scored a respectable 261. I felt satisfied, as the average American my age probably couldn't even run one mile, let alone two for time.

Besides, at this point in my life, achieving a 300 isn't my goal.

What matters most now is being fit and healthy. In that arena, I have been truly blessed.

I don't smoke and the days of partying are over. When I do drink, the alcohol is probably doing me some good, as recently publicized medical studies have indicated.

A look at the 2002 Soldiers magazine almanac reveals that the average enlisted rank, age, and service time upon retirement is sergeant first class, 41, and 22 years respectively. For officers, it's lieutenant colonel, 43 and 22 years.

Another interesting statistic is those soldiers ranked from sergeant to sergeant first class make up 92.1 percent of the active-duty NCO Corps.

And, out of the 482,000 active-Army personnel, 221,765 are ranked specialist and below.

Not surprisingly, I find no comfort in the fact t that I'm in the senior 8 percent of the force.

We've all heard that age is a state of mind.

However, I remember my mother when she was in her early 60s telling me that she didn't recognize herself in the mirror anymore, but that she internally felt the same. I'm starting to "see" what she meant.

Another thing about aging is that it's all a matter of perspective.

Standing next to a 20-year-old, I don't look so young. Standing next to a 60-year-old, I'm "young" again.

With 4-year-old twin daughters, my life has been a three-ring circus since they were born.

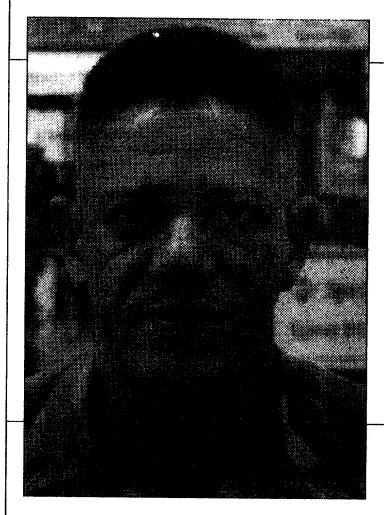
My wife and I find peace only when they are asleep. But, all this craziness of raising a family I believe helps me stay young.

The good news about aging is that it's not all a lost cause. Aging is both genetic and environmental.

Since there's not a lot we can do about genetics, environmental changes are our last line of defense against time.

This means having a lifestyle that involves eating right, working out and reducing stress.

It also includes wearing sunscreen and protective clothing from the harsh aging effects of the sun, and getting enough sleep.



Some people, usually those who have extra money, will gladly pay thousands of dollars for cosmetic surgery. For some celebrities, it seems their careers depend on it.

Remember, you reap what you sow.

Likewise, there's a saying that goes something like this: The face you have at 20 is the face God gave you. The face you have at 50 is the face you deserve.

What a drag!

Someone's totin' trash to the trees

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

commentary

Psst. Come closer. I'm going to let you in on Fort Benning's dirty little secret.

The best Army post in the world has a nasty problem.

I didn't go looking for it, didn't even want to know it was there, but I stumbled on it quite by accident.

We're talkin' trash here.

Not the stray candy wrapper variety, either.

No sirree. This is big stuff — major appliances, automotive parts, screen doors and recliners. Dumped all over post, but well-hidden, in the wooded areas one might never visit unless one happens to be trailing a 13-year-old with a nose for adventure.

My son Jake has explored every nook and cranny on Fort Benning that hasn't been posted off limits, and probably a few that are.

He brings home coke bottles dated 1925 and rusty old keys that make for great conversation.

And he tells me tales of "really cool" old trees and beaver dams, someplace called "Rainbow Canyon" and, of course, exploring Russ Pond.

So, last week I finally asked him to show me, to take me on a tour of Fort Benning's great little getaways.

I was amazed at what I found.

There really is a cool old tree. If the graffiti carved in it is to be trusted, it's nearly 200 years old.

And there's a massive beaver habitat less than a mile behind what was once known as the Cambell King Bowl.

Then we went to Rainbow Canyon. I have no idea who named it, but I suspect it was the kids who discovered it there, right smack dab in the middle of the wooded area beside the golf course, encircled by the fitness trail.

Venture in a little ways and you'll find a canyon indeed, deep and wide, carved out of thick, gooey Georgia clay that sparkles and shines with iridescent purples and pinks. The rainbow effect.

The canyon is awesome. The garbage is awful.

Why would anyone bother to drag a washing machine basin or a car muffler or a screen door out to the middle of the woods rather than drag it to the curb?

Dropping a gum wrapper by accident is forgivable. Dragging garbage to the woods is unacceptable.

Kids, you say? Well, who's minding them?

And then there's the recliner we found in the thicket that borders the River Walk on Main Post. A real conversation piece.

Jake and I spent a good deal of time speculating how it might have gotten there, and most of our suggestions started with. "Well, some idiot must have ..."

Jake's not one for discussing the ramifications of polluting our ecosystem or the benefits of ecological conservation — it's all "tree-huggin' hippie crap" to him.

But loving nature is second nature to Jake. And somebody's polluting his playground.

"There should be a jail for those kind of people," he says. "And it should be a garbage dump."

I guess that's one way to put trash where it belongs.

In last week's Bayonet, the wrong phone number was listed in a story for soldiers to call for more information about their retirement options.

Soldiers should call their battalion personnel clerk or visit the Web site www.odcsper.army.mil/directorates/retire/retire1.asp.

Luncheon marks successes of nation

Black history intricate part of Army history

"Stay busy and be obedient."

Such were the words of advice from Alfonso Biggs, Columbus resident and well-known black historian, to Chuck Walls, Fort Benning garrison manager at the Black History Luncheon Wednesday.

Biggs' tips for a long and happy life came at an appropriate time, as the local community gathered to celebrate the history and successes of a nation. The theme of the luncheon was "The African American legacy: contributions and service in America's defense."

"It was kind of like a birthday party," said Biggs, who turned 98 Feb. 14.

"Black history is not a separate event, but is a part of our nation's history," said Senator Ed Harbison, guest speaker at the luncheon. "Race and nationality doesn't matter. And it didn't matter on Sept. 11 when we all came together as one. We are a strong and vibrant nation because of all races' contributions."

Harbison, a former Marine with five tours and 22 months in Vietnam, recalled how the people of his hometown, Montgomery, Ala., overcame segregation.

"Those were dedicated people with nothing but dignity to live for," he said. "You can't find that kind of dedication today except in our military units.

"In combat, it doesn't matter what race you are. All that matters about the man next to you is his proficiency as a soldier," Harbison said, calling his own combat comrades "brothers."

Miriam Berry and Lawrence Davis, eight-grade students at Faith Middle School, entertained the crowd with the story of the Tuskegee Airmen.

"They were battling two wars, one against the enemy and one against segregation," Berry said.

The Fourth Street Baptist Church drill team, ranging in age from 11-17, delivered a stomp and slaphappy message about overcoming obstacles.

Col. Lonnie Vona, Fort Benning chief of staff, told the crowd he has witnessed changes in race relations during his career.

Alfonso Biggs, 98, shares his secret to longevity with Chuck Walls, garrison manager.

"I'm proud to say the Army has been a leader in interracial relations for a long time," Vona said. "But we must remain vigilant and not take any steps backward. We all need to rely on one another."

Vona thanked Harbison for his continued service to the nation.

"You who fight for this country are all that stands between us and terrorists," Harbison told the crowd. "And we thank you. We know you'll take care of business."

Black History Month began as Negro History Week in 1926, when Dr. Carter Woodson began to write black Americans into the nation's history.

He established the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History in 1915, and a year later founded the Journal of Negro History.

In 1926, he started Negro History Week to bring national recognition to the contributions of black people throughout history. Woodson chose the second week of February for Negro History Week because it marks the birthdays of two men who greatly impacted the American black population, Frederick Douglas and Abraham Lincoln.

Latin Americans tour Georgia, learn history

Sgt. Daniel Monroy
WHINSEC Public Affairs

To familiarize international students with the workings of city, county and state government, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation conducted a two-part tour of Atlanta and Columbus Feb. 13-14.

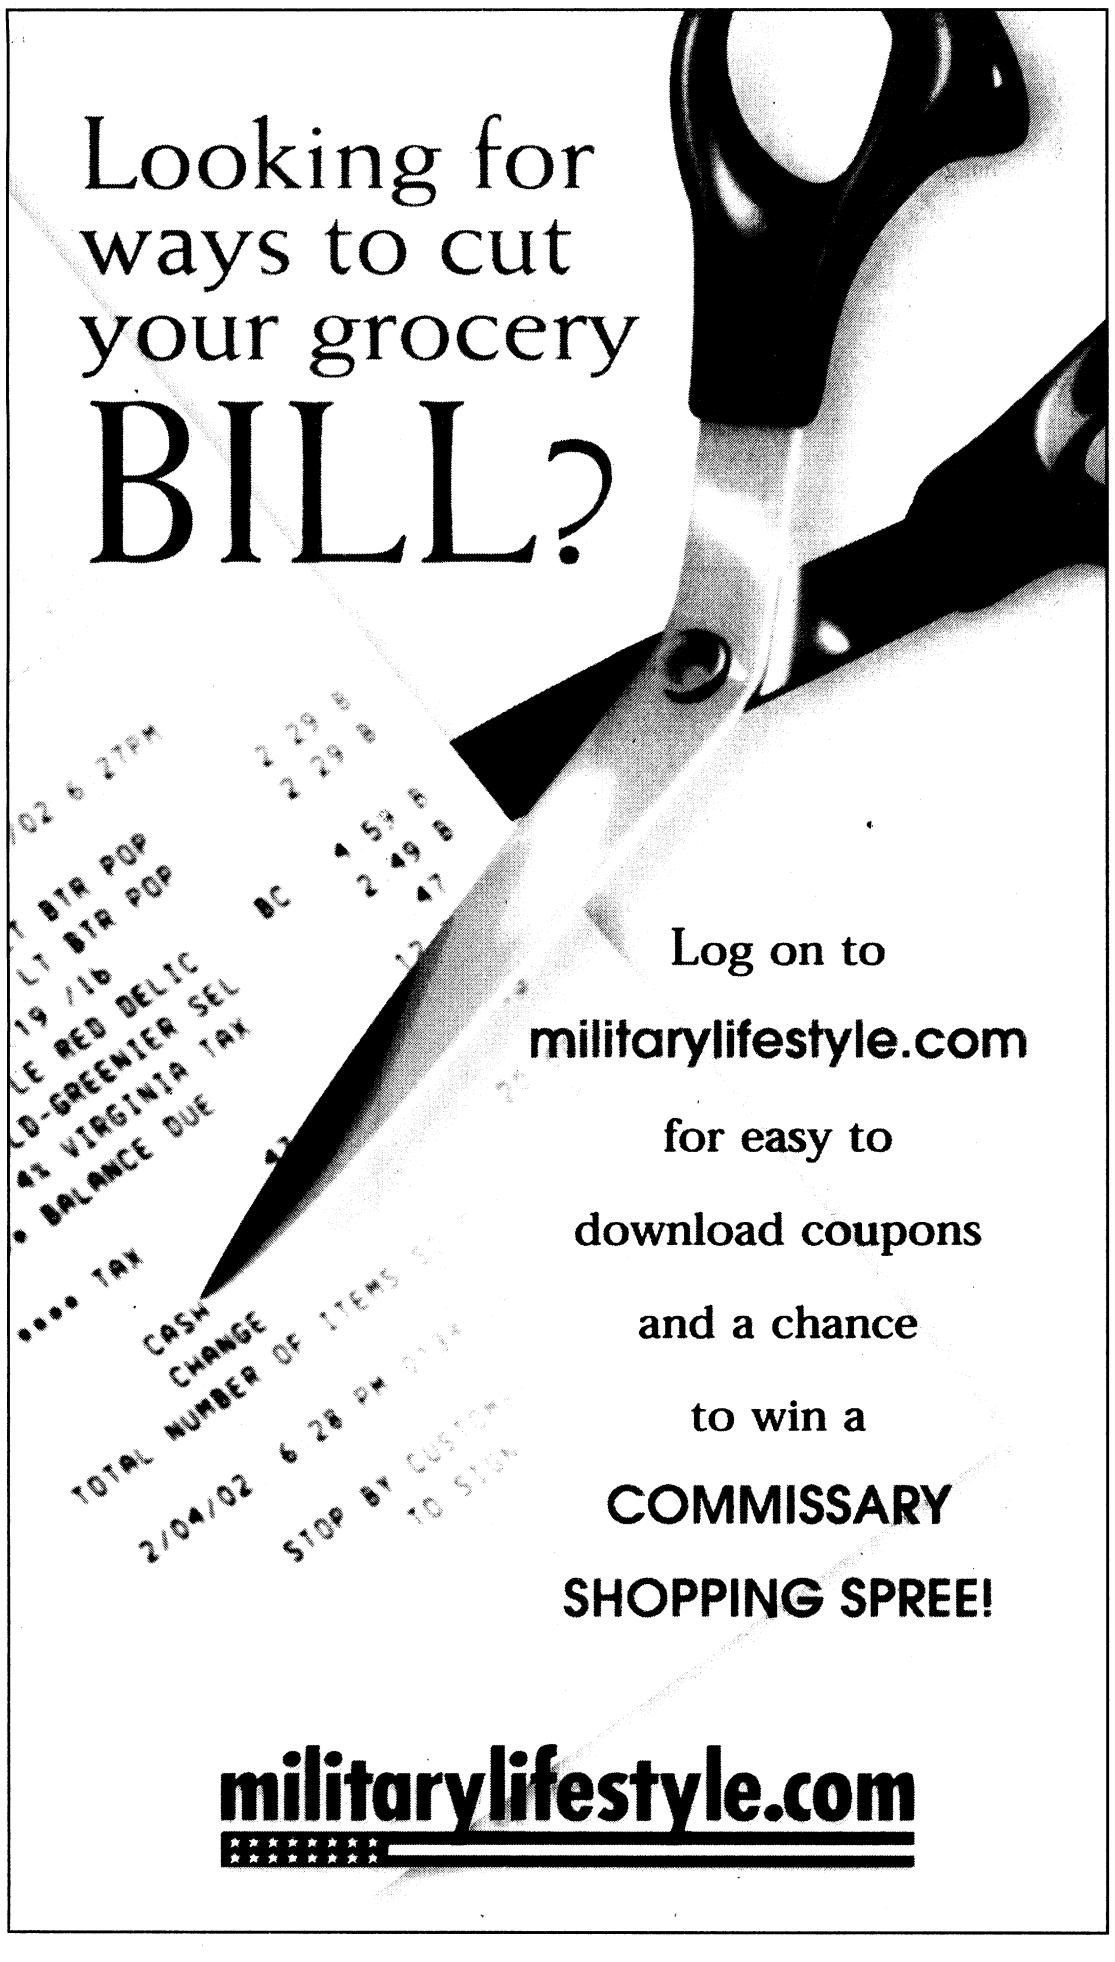
Facilitating the tours, Cecilia Alexander, WHINSEC Information Programs coordinator, said the tour is an education lesson outside the classroom, imparting structures and fundamentals of American civics.

The tour began in Columbus as students from the institute's Command and General Staff Officer Course met with Mayor Bobby Peters and other city council members. Students were made honorary citizens of Columbus and were given a tour of the Columbus Public Safety Center.

"We here in Columbus are unique in the fact that we have a consolidated government. Actually we're Georgia's first consolidated government," said Peters, explaining the benefits of having county and city government centralized.

"It was very informational, especially for the Latin American students learning the workings of a fairly large city," said U. S. Army Maj. Alcides Lugo, CGSOC student.

At the Columbus Public Safety Center, students observed how local and state law enforcement and emergency services work together to serve the public.



"We learned about the workings of the 911 computer systems and how they route everything," said Lugo.

On Feb. 14, the CGSOC class was bused to Atlanta to tour the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center and was given a history of the American Civil Rights movement and the legacy of Dr. King.

"Most of us were very enlightened, especially the 'Pool of Reflections' where he (King) is buried," said Maj. Rami Rodriquez, a student from Venezuela.

After touring the monument, students were given a guided tour of the home that King was raised in, just blocks away from the Center.

Downtown, Georgia Governor Roy Barnes posed with CGSOC students for a photo opportunity at the state capitol. A guide briefed students on the construction of the capitol building and the history of Georgia. The tour ended with a visit to the Atlanta City Council Chambers and a briefing from city representatives.

Army transformation needed for infantry

Fort Benning leads way for future

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

The Army's transformation to strategically respond and dominate every point of the military operations spectrum is now in full stride and ready to expand.

The initial two Interim Brigade Combat Teams, a major part of the transformation, are located at Fort Lewis, Wash., and four more are preparing to form in Alaska, Hawaii, Pennsylvania and Louisiana.

These brigades are known as interim forces, said Ross Goode, chief of Transformation Task Force, part of the Directorate of Combat Development. They will bridge the gap between today's Army, legacy force, and the ultimate goal of an objective force - one that is responsive, deployable, agile, versatile, lethal, survivable and sustainable.

The interim brigades possess many of these characteristics, but, for the most part, are light, agile, combat capable task forces capable of deploying in 96 hours.

"They are an early entry force," " Goode said. "One that can exit a C-130 and immediately perform a combat mission.

"Gone are the days of movement to contact," Goode said, referring to search and destroy missions from the Vietnam era and movement to contact through Desert Storm. "Soldiers will know where their team members are, where the enemy is and what is around them.

"They'll be able to choose the best time and place to attack and defeat the enemy."

These soldiers are called land warriors, the infantryman of the interim force, said Maj. Jason Stine, chief of Concepts, Analysis and Integration Division.

The reason why the transformation of the infantryman is so important is because the infantryman will evolve into the objective warrior, the successor to the land warrior.

"The warriors are provided more fire support and information than they have access to in today's warfare," Stine said. "There will always be a need to close in on the enemy and defeat them man to man.

"In the short-term, Fort Benning is the proponent of the IBCT and the Infantry of the future."

This means the post will play a major part in training the soldiers for the interim force and eventually the objective force, he said.

"Fort Benning will play the lead role of the infantryman," Stine said.

The Directorate of Operations and Training submitted the paperwork for new courses and to adjust courses on Fort Benning to meet the interim force needs, Goode said.

"I have no doubt it will be funded," Goode said.

"I feel comfortable we will have the people to train and adjust the soldiers for the mission." Goode said.

> "Gone are the days of movement to contact. Soldiers will know where their team members are, where the enemy is and what is around them. It's the proudest day when we hand over the keys to the homeowners. They're usually speechless."

Deployment: Family brief

The command is providing the soldiers an additional way to relate with the people of Kuwait.

"The soldiers will receive a sort of smart book to give them phrases and greetings," Southcott said.

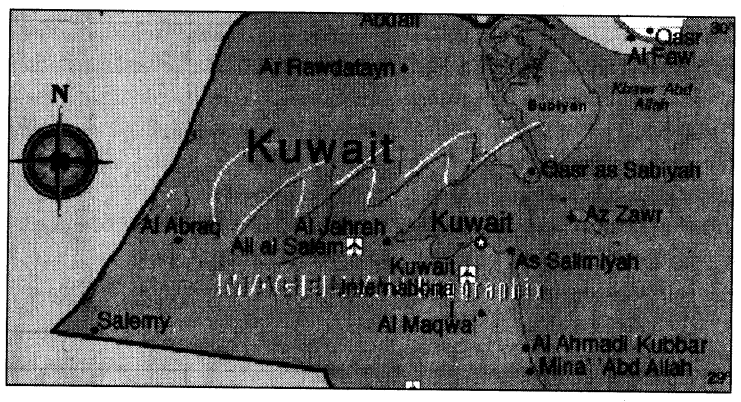
Each unit will also have a linguist to help the soldiers communicate effectively, he said.

"A lot of the life support is done by the local nationals," Southcott said. "And, if there is an issue, the linguist will be able to effectively communicate the issue needing to be resolved."

Along with communicating needs effectively, the units deploying at Fort Stewart and on Kelly Hill are effectively addressing the needs of family support groups, Southcott said.

"Our families will be well cared for because we have the best family support and readiness groups in the Army," he said

"We have a great amount of historical knowledge to effectively support our family groups.



"We have monthly meetings we sustain throughout the year, and now we are preparing for deployment briefings."

Jackson's wife will move home with her family while he is deployed, he said.

"She's not really comfortable about me deploying, but she understands we have a mission to do," Jackson said.

He and other soldiers said they will communicate with their wives as often as they can and would write them often.

The soldiers who are deployed will be able to communicate with their families by telephone, e-mail and mail.

Re-up: No tax on bonus soldiers to re-enlist, said Sgt. 1st Class Anthony Jackson, TF 1-30 career counselor. The relevance of their peacekeeping mission has also been a factor, he said.

"Retention doesn't stop just because we're deployed," Jackson said. "Here, soldiers have the opportunity to do their jobs and they get away from the details and taskings we have in garrison.

"Some were thinking of (leaving the military), but changed their minds. They have job satisfaction and time to think; and this influences their decisions."

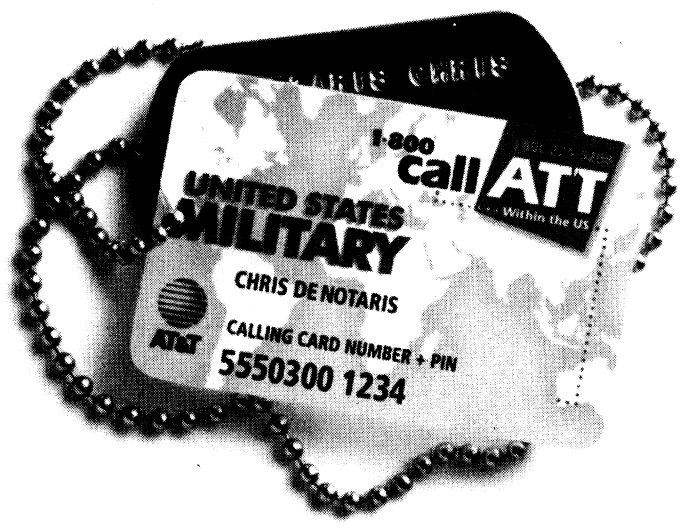
Sharing a room with Lopez on the U.S. base camp near Gnjlane, Kosovo, Spec. Steven Moore echoed his roommate's feelings on staying in.

"I wasn't planning on re-enlisting, but I did for job security," Moore said. January's pay raise also sweetened the pot for Moore, a light truck mechanic who will report to Fort Irwin Calif., as part of his re-enlistment deal.

So far, re-enlistments within TF 1-30 have paid more than $400,000 in bonuses for eligible soldiers Jackson said. With a little less than three months to go until the unit returns to Fort Benning, Jackson hopes to re-enlist more than 100 soldiers during the deployment.

The events of Sept. 11 also made soldiers want to continue serving in the military said A Company first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Nelson Johnson.

"Soldiers who had their minds made up to get out have been knocking on my door. They tell me they would re-enlist if they knew they were going to Afghanistan or Kuwait," Johnson said.



"All of this makes them feel like they are doing a real world mission and that has paid great dividends in our re-enlistment programs."

Fuel handler Spec. Rodney Pugh planned to re-enlist, but waited until he was deployed to raise his right hand. He may have wintered over in the Balkans, where 72 inches of snow have fallen since the beginning of the mission, but he will soon be moving with his wife and two children to sunny Hawaii, with a hefty bonus to boot.

"This was the best decision for me and my family. I had no plans to get out, but I had no time to re-enlist (before we deployed) so I did it here," Pugh said. "It's really nice for the bonus to be tax free."

Army to contract recruiting duties to civilians

Former soldiers, recruiters sought by contractor

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Military veterans will be suiting up in civilian attire to recruit for the Army beginning this spring.

This month the Army awarded two civilian companies contracts totaling $172.4 million to hire and manage recruiters for 10 different areas across the nation. The civilians will recruit for the active Army and reserve components in Jackson, Miss.; Oklahoma City; Dayton, Ohio; the Delmarva Peninsula or Eastern Shore of Delaware; Tacoma, Wash.; Harrisburg, Pa.; Wilmington, N.C.; Salt Lake City, Utah; Granite City and Homewood, Ill.

Neither the companies nor the recruiters they're hiring are strangers to the military. Both companies — Military Professional Resources Inc. and Resource Consultants Inc. — are located in Virginia and have been recruiting for the Army reserve components since 1999. They are currently looking to hire recruiters who have honorably served in the Army.

Former soldiers who were recruiters by military occupational specialty are the most sought after in the hiring process, said Don Tarter, recruiting operations vice president for MPRI. Next are veterans who spent three years as detailed recruiters, or recruited for any of the other military branches. Finally, he said all individuals who have served in the Army and who are sharp, smart and energetic would be considered.

In May, recruiters for MPRI will take over companies in Delmarva and Tacoma and recruiters for RCI will take over recruiting companies in Wilmington, N.C., and Homewood, Ill. Vice presidents at both companies said that they are still in the process of hiring recruiters, and training for those hired will be conducted by the end of March. Station and company managers will be trained by the end of February.

Training for station and company managers may be similar, but both companies operate independently of each other, said Cardell Hunter, recruiting operations vice president for RCI.

Besides the initial training, which will include enlistment eligibility, current enlistment incentives and U.S. Army Recruiting Command policies and procedures, recruiters will have sustainment training to meet the needs of the individual recruiter, Hunter said. They will also receive annual refresher training to stay abreast of Army and USAREC policies, he added.

The contracts were awarded in accordance with the 2001 National Defense Authorization Act, said Douglas Smith, the public affairs officer for U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

"The Department of Defense has said that we will conduct this multi-year test, and we are complying," Smith said.

The contract recruiters, which will be referred to as community-based recruiters by RCI because of their planned visibility in the community, will occupy the remaining stations by the end of October. The test will run through Sept. 30, 2007.

The biggest challenge for the recruiters will be to convince the skeptics that civilians can successfully recruit for the Army, Hunter said. His company's past success should prove that it can be done, he said.

"We have demonstrated excellence in a number of Army programs," Hunter said. "In 1990 the Army awarded us a $168 million Army Career and Alumni Program contract. We also have provided transitional counseling to 1.1 million soldiers. We have recruited over 20,000 young men and women into the Army Reserve or National Guard. Our help desk, which provides counseling to soldiers who are leaving one state Guard unit to go to another, has reduced the attrition rate of Guard soldiers from 16 percent to under 2 percent."

MPRI also claims success in its recruiting efforts for the Army Reserve and National Guard. Since 1999, MPRI has peaked at 85 recruiters augmenting efforts at the U.S. Army Recruiting Command, Tarter said. And the company retains about 60 guidance counselors, who are responsible for qualifying the recruits, he added.

Past success got both companies in the door, but they know that the non-believers will watch their recruiters closely.

"Initially we will lose the advantage of the advertisement that the uniform gives, but once initial contact has been made with our recruiters, the Army experience and sincerity will show through to the prospects," Tarter said. "Then the differences between our recruiters and the traditional recruiters fade.

"We will be responsible for the same quotas and we will recruit the same qualified people," he said

Another benefit the community-based recruiters will have is administrative assistants to help eliminate paperwork distractions.

"Our recruiters will be afforded the opportunity to make sales presentations at high schools, colleges and stay deeply involved in the community," Hunter said. "They will know the educators, moms, dads, clergymen and other centers of influence in the community. When the town's sons and daughters go off to basic, our recruiters will still be there when they get back to help facilitate their transition back into the community."

Meeting recruiting quotas and being successful as civilian recruiters are inherent, Hunter said, because failure is not an option.

"The Army realizes that there are a number of jobs that can be outsourced to civilians, and done successfully," Tarter said. "It doesn't have to take well-trained NCOs out of their primary military occupational specialty for detailed tasks."

More guardsmen arrive to help at Fort Benning

Unit deploys for homeland security

The 178th Military Police Company of the Georgia Army National Guard from Monroe, Ga., arrived at Fort Benning Feb. 14 to support Noble Eagle and Operation Enduring Freedom.

The 159 soldiers of the National Guard unit were sent to fill in for the post's 988th MP Company, which deployed to Cuba. The 178th will eventually take over the 190th MP Company's job of controlling the access points and law enforcement because the 190th is going to Fort McPherson,Ga.

Members are expected to help in various aspects in keeping the base running, like traffic control and community oriented policing.

"Between a third and half of them (the National Guardsmen) are civilian police officers," said Capt. Matthew McKinney, who is in charge of personnel. "They have a lot more experience. These guys are well trained not just in the military aspect but in the civilian aspect as well. "

1st Lt. Jonathan Adams, acting commander of the 178th MP Company and the 3rd platoon leader was supposed to graduate law school in May from Mercer University School of Law and works at the Districts attorney's office in Macon, Ga.

Adams said that his civilian job will help him in his job at Fort Benning,

"Being a student teaches you to listen to those who know more than you and try to develop your own sense of how to do what ever they are trying to teach you," Adams said.

"Being a prosecutor, you learn the dangers of not learning well."

1st Lt. Pervis Brown, platoon leader for 2nd platoon, will leave with his platoon in a few weeks to Dahlonega, Ga., to help with access control.

Members of Guard and Reserve units are usually called for duty for one to two years.

Dog: K-9 teams provide homeland security, post patrol events where their presence is deemed vital to national security.

Five Army K-9 teams are currently working with 35 teams from the Navy, Air Force, Marines and civilian sector at the Winter Olympics in Salt Lake City, Utah.

When they're not "tasked out," teams train daily and conduct random check-point patrols.

"It's not a five-days-a-week kind of job," said Slusser, who has worked with EX for two years.

"You get to know your partner real well. You have to because you depend on each other, and everybody else is depending on you."

EX and Slusser are one of 14 dog teams at Fort Benning, eight explosives detectors and six drug detectors. Dawson would like to see at least 16 teams here.

In fact, Dawson expects to see an increase in the number of working dogs everywhere.

He currently manages 70 teams from nine installations, but hopes to see those numbers increase to 94 dogs at 16 installations within a year.

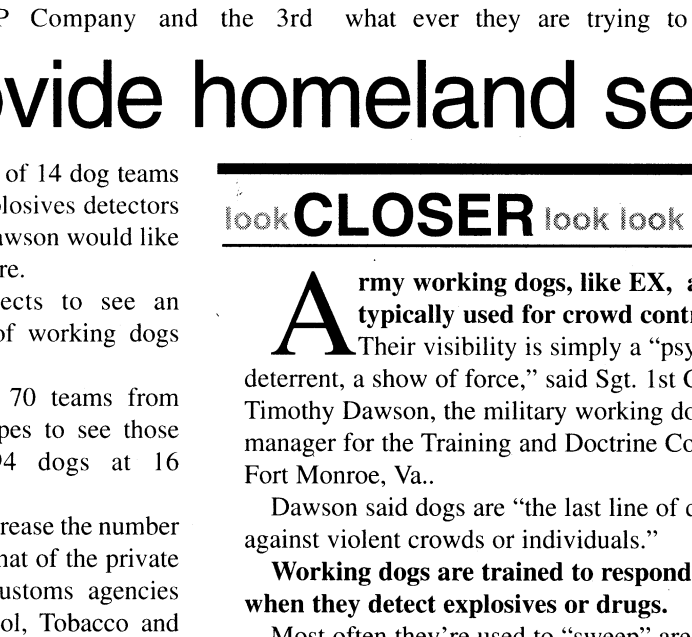
The Army's move to increase the number of working dogs mirrors that of the private sector, Dawson said. Customs agencies and the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms are also beefing up their K-9 programs.

look CLOSER look look look look look look look look look look look look

Army working dogs, like EX, are not typically used for crowd control.
Their visibility is simply a "psychological deterrent, a show of force," said Sgt. 1st Class Timothy Dawson, the military working dog program manager for the Training and Doctrine Command in Fort Monroe, Va..

Dawson said dogs are "the last line of defense against violent crowds or individuals."

Working dogs are trained to respond passively when they detect explosives or drugs.



Most often they're used to "sweep" areas where bombs or drugs could be hidden, such as parking lots or stadiums, and they sit when they encounter a tell-tale odor.

When traveling by plane, they're accompanied by an MP, muzzled and led by a military police harness.

However, dogs can be aggressive when they feel threatened, so it's never a good idea to approach a working dog without consent, said Sgt. Matthew Slusser, a dog handler with the 209th Military Police Detachment at Fort Benning.

"Always ask if he's social, if it's alright to pet him," Slusser said.

"In fact, you should keep a 6- to 8-foot distance until you know it's OK to approach."

Keeping the peace in Kosovo

Soldiers mission keeps peace, supports ideals

Master Sgt. Sally Toomey
Bayonet staff

Soldiers serving in the NATO peacekeeping force in Kosovo learn quickly that bringing peace to the region doesn't come easily or swiftly. But they do know that their efforts, no matter how small they seem, contribute to a huge international effort to restore political and economic stability following years of struggles and bloodshed between the ethnically divided people of Kosovo.

Every day since leaving Fort Benning in October, soldiers in Task Force 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry routinely go about their business in Kosovo. Daily patrols, convoy escorts and other military tasks allow the Kosovars to rebuild their lives knowing that their towns and villages are safe and secure.

But not all missions are routine for soldiers. They also visit local schools and even teach classes in English, math and physical education.

They train the newly established Kosovo Protection Corps in disaster response and rescue operations. Medical personnel bring basic medical care to local civilians, particularly those in remote villages.

Those actions and many more allow NATO and the United Nations to guide Kosovo to establish functioning government institutions, rebuild its economy, reduce crime and violence and heal wounds that divide its citizens along ethnic lines.

"Our presence here and our military missions support democratic principles and soldiers understand that they are important to this process," said Lt. Col. Audy Snodgrass, TF 1-30 commander. "The local perception is that U.S. soldiers are disciplined, fair in how they administer justice, respectful and diligent in their daily tasks."

Approximately 700 Fort Benning soldiers serve in Task Force Falcon, the U.S. contingent of the NATO's Kosovo Force. They serve in a force of 50,000 men and women from 30 nations. The U.S.-led Multinational Brigade-East operates in the southeast sector of Kosovo which borders Serbia and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

Since NATO airstrikes against Serbia in 1999 brought an end to the violence in the region and allowed the Kosovo Force to establish peace and security, U.S. soldiers have served in the mission. KFOR's presence has enabled hundreds of thousands of refugees to return to their homes. KFOR supervised the demilitarization of the Kosovo Liberation Army and contributes to the retraining of former combatants to serve as emergency response, rescue and civil police. Crimes such as murders, arson, smuggling and looting have declined tremendously.

Programs to collect and confiscate illegal weapons are administered by KFOR soldiers as well as the disposal of mines and other explosive ordnance.

KFOR's presence allows non-governmental organizations to rebuild schools, utilities, medical facilities and distribute humanitarian aid.

But the average soldier isn't thinking of those issues while patrolling in a village or running a basic sick call for local civilians.

"I'm glad I got the opportunity to come here. It makes me appreciate what we have in America," said Pfc Baxter Tisdale, a TF 1-30 medic.

Tisdale and other medics regularly visit local civilians through the Medical Civil Assistance Program, or MEDCAP. They communicate through local interpreters who help explain the patient's aches and pains to the medics and physicians assistants. Most often the complaints are routine. The soldiers hand out supplies of pain relievers, children's and pre-natal vitamins, cold medications and antibiotic ointment.

"People here treat us like we're heroes, but we're just doing our regular missions. Anyone who complains about all that should come here and see how much these people don't have," Tisdale said.

At a Forward Operating Base near the border with Serbia, Pfc. Jeffrey Latimer, A Co. TF 1-30, describes his daily presence patrols through villages that dot the hilly terrain…"like going back in time."

"As long as they know we're here, we are making a difference," Latimer said. "We impress upon them that if we just up and pulled out, things could easily go back to what they were."

The battalion is scheduled to return to Fort Benning in May.

The flags represent where each of the five multinational brigades are supporting NATO and the United Nation in its mission to guide Kosovo.

Personnel chief shares vision

Former post CG reveals goals for transformation

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — When terrorists flew a commercial jetliner into the Pentagon Sept. 11, the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel suffered about 20-percent casualties in dead and wounded, yet the surviving personnel work force was back functioning the next day and its sections working 24/7 within a week at the Hoffman Building in downtown Alexandria, Va.

That was the first thing Lt. Gen. John Le Moyne had to say about his organization during his first press interview since becoming the Army's top personnel chief in November. The interview was given to Army News Service Feb. 4.

Le Moyne assumed the duties of Lt. Gen. Timothy J. Maude, the most senior officer to die during the Pentagon attack. The Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel has recently been renamed the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff, G-1, under a Headquarters, Department of the Army reorganization plan.

"Most combat units suffering 20-percent casualties would be pulled from the line immediately," Le Moyne said. "It is a source of pride for me, and at the same time humbling, that the G-1 staff sections are filled with heroes — compassionate, quiet and sincere. Look at the casualties and you will find the Army of One well represented. They are soldiers, Army civilians, contractors and retirees of varying ages, ranks and religions."

One of the goals the G-1 has set for himself is to get Personnel Transformation so far down the road that its momentum cannot be stopped.

That transformation includes keeping the warfighting force fully manned, meeting all recruiting goals and completely revamping an outdated personnel information technology system.

Le Moyne

The Army's combat units — its divisions and armored cavalry regiments — have been manned at 100-percent strength and at about 93-percent by military occupational specialty and grade this past year, Le Moyne said. The disparity between the two figures is good news, he explained, as it reflects grade imbalances due to healthy promotion rates.

Keeping the warfighting force at authorized strength hasn't come without losses in other areas, he continued, as other Army units and organizations were manned between 83- and 96-percent strength last year.

"There has been some pain in places, but we didn't break the Army to man the force," Le Moyne said.

The personnel chief said he is proud of the recruiting force that has accomplished its mission during the past two years. To those who question the Army's policy of recruiting some young people who have not graduated from high school, Le Moyne said he would point them to a brigade commander he knows who entered the Army without a high school diploma and yet now holds two graduate degrees and continues to serve the nation well.

"Our goal is to recruit quality people and keep quality people," he said.

With about 320 different personnel automated systems running more than 1,100 personnel programs — many of which cannot "cross-talk" with each other – modernizing personnel information technology is a big challenge, Le Moyne said.

"Some of the programs are written in outdated computer languages nobody has used in years," he continued. "We want to move to more efficient systems without degrading what we currently have in place. Ideally, the IT Personnel Transformation will be invisible to the rest of the Army."

The IT Personnel Transformation has already started. Soldiers who will be considered at the next sergeant first class and lieutenant colonel promotion boards can now review their official records online under a test program. Eventually, the program will expand to all soldiers and save the Army about $300,000 a year in administrative costs, Le Moyne said.

About 4,600 computer servers have recently been consolidated down to 43 centralized super servers. The G-1 estimated this eliminated about 50,000 errors a day across the Army caused by changes as information came up through several bureaucratic layers.

"The estimates of cost savings are up to more than $20 million during the budget life cycle," Le Moyne said. "Most important is the better service this means to units and soldiers."

As far as his leadership philosophy goes, Le Moyne said he will continue the ethos of service and caring for the Army and the people in it he learned from when he first enlisted as an Army Reserve Special Forces soldier in 1964.

"This is a damn good Army, filled with good people, doing good things for good reasons," he said.

Commissioned in the Infantry out of the University of Florida ROTC program, Le Moyne has served in command positions from platoon to brigade level and served as the commander of the Infantry Center, Fort Benning, just prior to assuming his current duties as the G-1.

He previously served on the Army Staff as the assistant deputy chief of staff for Personnel from 1997 to 1998.

Korea ... 50 years ago

Feb. 21 — President Harry Truman tells a group hosting a luncheon in his honor in Washington that "just between you and me and the gatepost, I like" being president. And that's despite taking political and sometimes personal verbal abuse and the presidency being "an all-day and nearly all-night job."

French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman tells the NATO Council meeting in Lisbon that Viet Minh guerrillas in Indochina are using American weapons captured by the Chinese in Korea.

Feb. 21-27 — The communists begin a new propaganda campaign, charging the U.N. with germ warfare.

North Korean Foreign Minister Pak Hon Yong says on a Pyongyang radio broadcast Feb. 22 that the U.N. has dropped "fleas, lice, bugs, ants, grasshoppers and spiders" on North Korea.

There had been rumblings before from the reds about alleged germ warfare by the U.N., but this time it appears to be a stronger, longer lasting campaign. Chinese Premier Chou En Lai joins in on Peking radio Feb. 25, saying the U.N. has used "callous, brutal germ warfare" against North Korea.

A statement from the U.N. Supreme headquarters in Tokyo Feb. 27 claims the communists' germ warfare propaganda is an attempt to cover up the fact that wounded red soldiers are dying because the enemy is using contaminated bandages, has a shortage of medical supplies and issues its soldiers spoiled food.

The communists also charge the U.N. Feb. 23 with committing "massacre and brutal inhumanity" in putting down a prisoner of war riot Feb. 18 on Koje Island, where a new camp is located. The camp, originally meant to hold 30,000 people now contains 150,000 Chinese and North Korean soldiers, South Koreans captured and pressed into the North Korean Army and civilians.

The communists in the north have a method for directing orders to their captured soldiers. North Koreans allow themselves to be captured and imprisoned with POW camp leaders. Information is exchanged in the medical clinics, as well. The goal is to embarrass U.N. negotiators and put them on the defensive at the truce talks.

South Korean officials have been screening and classifying the civilians until only those in Compound 62 are left. Communists dominate this group, and it refuses to let the ROK screeners in the compound.

So Feb. 18, 3rd Battalion, 27th Infantry Regiment, are in position early in the morning. The four companies enter the compound with bayoneted rifles and divide the compound into four areas. Then between 1,000 and 1,500 prisoners, unimpressed by the American soldiers, rush out of the barracks using tent poles, rocks, pick handles, axes, flails and knives made in the machine shop built for the prisoners.

The GIs try to stop them with concussion grenades, but it doesn't work. Then they open fire, immediately killing 55 rioters; another 22 will later die in the camp hospital. Around 70 others are wounded. One American is killed and 38 wounded.

Soldiers beware: Telemarketer

Residents not aware of scams

Ann Pratcher
Financial Readiness Center

"Stop, Look, and Listen" before you pick up the telephone to order something you've seen advertised on television.

First, read all the small print that is flashed on the television screen prior to calling to order.

Second, check out the company. Contact the local Better Business Bureau at 324-0712 to see if they have any information on the company. Checking with the Better Business Bureau in the city where the company is doing business is also a good idea. Other resources for checking on a company's record are the Governor's Office of Consumer Affairs, the state attorney general's office, and the Federal Trade Commission.

Third, when ordering, give only the personal information necessary to place the order. One of the fastest growing types of fraud is identity theft. Though most people who work in call centers are honest, there are those out there who will take your information and use it maliciously.

When using a credit card, money order or check to pay for the purchase, there will be a record of the transaction. If using a credit card, one may be protected by the Fair Credit Billing Act. Under the Fair Credit Billing Act, if finding an error on one's credit statement, one may dispute the charge and withhold payment on the disputed amount while the charge is in dispute. If one disputes a charge because one was charged an incorrect amount, one did not accept the merchandise once shipped, or the item was not delivered as agreed, one must do so in writing.

The company must ship one's order within the time stated in its ads. If there is no time specified in the ad, the company should ship within 30 days after receiving it, unless one is applying for credit to pay for the purchase. If one is applying for credit to pay for the purchase, the company has 50 days to ship the merchandise after receiving your order. If, for some reason, the company cannot meet the shipment date, they must give one an option notice. The option notice gives one the choice of agreeing to the delay or canceling one's order and receiving a prompt refund.

If one has problems with mail or phone order purchases, one can contact the Georgia Governor' Office of Consumer Affairs, the consumer protection office in the state where the company is located, the postal inspector, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Federal Trade Commission. One may also contact the Direct Marketing Association at DMA Mail Order Action Line, 1101 17th Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20036.

Often, when one responds to one ad, one will start to receive mailings and telephone calls from other telemarketers. If one wants to be deleted from receiving unsolicited calls and mail, there are things you can do. To reduce telemarketers' access, one can ask the members of the Direct Marketing Association remove one's name from telephone and mail lists. Simply send one's name, address, telephone number, and the request to:

Direct Marketing Association, Telephone Preference Service, Mail Preference Service, Post Office Box 9014, Farmingdale, NY 11735-9014.

One can contact one's credit card companies and request that they not sell one's credit information to other entities. One can also call 1 (888) 5-OPT-OUT (1 (888) 567-8688) to stop the (all three) credit reporting agencies from selling one's information to telemarketers for a period of two years. This will stop those pesky pre-approved credit offers from coming to your mailbox.

Of course, when one responds to television ads, one accepts the risks involved. One's best protection is to do one's homework.

Above all, pay attention to one's own information. Check credit card and bank statements monthly to ensure that no erroneous charges or debits have been made. Check one's credit report from each of the three credit reporting agencies AT LEAST once a year EVERY year to ensure that it contains accurate information. That will give one early warning to any mistakes or fraud.

The three major credit reporting agencies are Equifax (800) 375-2500, Experian (888) 397-3742, and TransUnion (800) 888-4213. Because ones live in Georgia, one is entitled to two free copies of one's credit report each year from each credit reporting agency. Take advantage of one's Georgia address, and do something good for oneself.

If one has any questions or feels that one has been the victim of fraud, one can contact the Army Community Service Financial Readiness Program at Building 2633, Soldiers' Plaza, or call 545-5485.

Al Qaeda still threat, but hurt in many ways

Al Qaeda suspects more difficult to find after breakdown

Sgt. 1st Class Kathleen T. Rhem
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Coalition actions in Afghanistan and around the world have hurt the Al Qaeda terrorist network in many ways, but the organization remains a threat to America and its allies.

Al Qaeda was most severely hurt when the coalition forced them from Afghanistan, its safe haven.

"That was the one place it could do basically all of the business it wanted to do in one safe, controlled spot," a defense official explained. "(Al Qaeda) had freedom of action, freedom of training, freedom of movement, freedom to meet (in Afghanistan)."

The official spoke to Pentagon reporters on the condition of anonymity. He said it would be next to impossible for Al Qaeda members to set up a new centralized command and control element such as they had in Afghanistan.

"They have not found a spot that would give them the same support as Afghanistan," he said.

Osama bin Laden set up his terrorist organization in Afghanistan in 1996 and basically had free rein to run terrorist training camps and to direct global terrorist operations. Bin Laden hasn't been caught, but he and his key deputies have a harder job of directing Al Qaeda operations while they're on the run, the official said.

This will force Al Qaeda to spread out many of its key operations.

"We believe the leadership is going to be more decentralized, ... more of a franchise-type thing," the official said.

But bin Laden's propensity to plan ahead makes it harder for law enforcement and intelligence officials to get a handle on how dangerous Al Qaeda still is to the United States.

"Bin Laden basically always thought three steps ahead. He'd have plans in the works, multiple plans, not just one," the official said. "Some of those plans, we believe, are still out there."

Forcing the organization to decentralize may, in some ways, make it harder for law enforcement officers to foil Al Qaeda's plots. The official explained that lower-level groups tend to be less organized and their plans less grand, but they tend to leave smaller footprints, which makes them harder to find and track.

The U.S. response to the Sept. 11 attacks had many other less obvious effects on Al Qaeda as well.

"Shutting down the Taliban and Al Qaeda in Afghanistan has ... put on notice some countries that may have been (considering) supporting Al Qaeda," the official said. "It's put those countries on notice that basically that's not a good idea."

He also said he thinks it will be harder for Al Qaeda to recruit. After a string of "victories," including the 1998 bombings of two U.S. embassies in East Africa, the 2000 bombing of the Navy's USS Cole in Yemen, and the Sept. 11 attacks, Al Qaeda may have been feeling pretty invincible.

The defense official said he thinks coalition successes in Afghanistan have taken away some of that "air of invincibility." The effectiveness and speed of coalition military actions knocked the terrorists down a peg or two, he said.

He said some potential recruits may think twice. "The ones who were borderline thinking of joining the organization may back off a little bit, saying, ... 'I don't want to end up in a body bag,'" the official explained.

U.S. officials believe Al Qaeda won't go quietly, but will try to "reconstitute" in a form different from before. In whatever form they end up, Al Qaeda will be a threat to Americans for some time.

Senior Al Qaeda leaders are on the run, the official said. Killing and capturing others has disrupted the organization, he added, but not shut it down or killed it.

"This is a long-term process," he said. "It's not going to be done in a month or two months."

USAIC demonstrates weapons

Soldiers show new weapon system

Sgt. John Lewis
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

The Infantry Center showcased a 30mm cannon live-fire and transformation technology demonstrator exhibition during the B Co., 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Hands-On Training Exercise, also known as a HOTEX, at Red Cloud Range.

With the support of the Marine Corps, the Directorate of Combat Development and the TRADOC System Manager-Bradley teamed with the defense industry to view a 30mm Gun Weapon System that had been integrated onto the Bradley Fighting Vehicle. During the live-fire exercise, a team of experts from United Defense Limited Partners, demonstrated the lethality the new system could provide the BFV. Currently, all Bradley Fighting Vehicles use the 25mm Bushmaster II weapon system. Whereas, the 30 mm is the next generation Bushmaster III Chain Gun system, manufactured by Boeing and being evaluated by the USMC.

The new weapon system employs munitions equal to or greater than the current 25mm ammunition in current warstock.

Rounds fired during the exposition were the 30mm target practice round currently in warstock for the GAU-8/A weapon system on the A-10 Thunderbolt II Air Force aircraft.

In addition, soldiers were able to observe a UDLP TTD, a design prototype track vehicle. Demonstration rides were made available to showcase the urban enhancements the vehicle provides. First in its class, the TTD implements "band track" technology, which aims to yield smoother rides comparable to privately owned vehicles. Operating on its batteries or diesel generator the prototype has no need of an engine. This allows more passenger room and storage capacity inside the vehicle. When running simultaneously on its batteries and diesel generator, at a maximum weight of 20 tons, the TTD delivers 450 hp, making it faster than any combat vehicle in its class.

> "Soldiers are able to prepare and accomplish the mission on short notice."
> Staff Sgt. William Dixon
> HOTEX NCOIC

Taking advantage of advanced weapon station technology, the new vehicle offers a sophisticated weapon system that can adapt to the M-240 machine gun, M-249 machine gun, M-2 machine gun, or MK-19 Grenade Launcher. Once a weapon is mounted atop the vehicle the gunner inputs the applicable ammunition type. Using a joystick, the gunner sits inside the vehicle under armor protection, viewing a display screen scanning for enemy objectives. Upon sight of enemy targets the gunner uses the joystick to lock the reticule (cross-hairs) on to the target and the weapon system automatically creates a firing solution by calculating all firing variables, to include: weapon characteristics, range and elevation of target and weather conditions.

Meanwhile, the company rehearsed and conducted a BFV live-fire HOTEX where shooting crews demonstrated the Bradley Fighting Vehicle's capability of engaging targets with the current 25 mm cannon.

"Soldiers are able to prepare and accomplish the mission on short notice," said Staff Sgt. William Dixon, HOTEX NCOIC.

Included in the display were soldiers executing BFV drills and infantry soldiers firing their weapons. Officers in the Infantry Pre-Command Course observed the HOTEX and dignitaries viewed the exercise, with the chance to participate and fire various infantry weapons.

Soldiers continue to prepare for deployment

Kelley Hill tankers ready to go

Pfc. Kyle Neller

Members of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, continued preparation for their upcoming deployment to Kuwait by conducting preventive maintenance checks and services and other concurrent training Tuesday at the battalion motor pool.

The battalion is ready to go, said Staff Sgt. Curtis Watson, tank commander.

"I feel confident in my crew and company," Watson said. "There are a lot of new soldiers, but there is also a lot of experience and good training."

The training has paid dividends, he said. The battalion has qualified new crews to accomplish its mission.

While in Kuwait, soldiers will take part in Operation Desert Spring, which provides a continued U.S. presence that rotates about every six months.

The operation, once known as Intrinsic Action, is part of a regular rotation that has been ongoing since the Persian Gulf War.

Given the importance of the operation, soldiers understand the need of accomplishing simple tasks, especially the PMCS, said Spc. Theothilus Nah, driver.

"Every day we conduct preventive maintenance checks and services," Nah said. "But, now, it's even more important with the deployment coming up."

He said he is confident he will perform his mission in Kuwait to standard.

"We have a great company, and our NCO leadership is excellent," Nah said.

"They have led from the front and set us up for success."

Battalion soldiers are prepared for any circumstance they may encounter while in Kuwait, said Pvt. Lanis Roberts, loader.

"As a company, we are motivated and ready to fight," Roberts said.

TF 1-30 teaches Kosovo children

Soldiers leave legacy with children of Kosovo

Spc. Molly Jones
131st MPAD

STUBLINA, Kosovo — 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, (Task Force 1-30) plans to leave an impression on the children of Kosovo, one that will last long after these soldiers have returned to Fort Benning.

The soldiers visit the schools, interacting with the Kosovars, teaching them trust and English along the way.

Capt. Scott Anderson, commander of A Company, TF 1-30, said that it is very important to be present at the schools as often as possible so the children can know that a KFOR soldier is someone they can trust if they need help.

"We focus on English and some kind of activity. But the main thing is to stay engaged and to interact with the kids," Anderson said.

Lt. Col. Audy Snodgrass, the battalion commander, got the idea going of the school program, he said.

A Company has nine schools within the sector, and they are divided into three areas of responsibility for the three platoons.

"Each platoon will get the chance to go to every school. That gives the kids a chance to be exposed to all of my soldiers, as well as the soldiers to all of the kids," Anderson said.

The largest school has 400 students and the smallest school may have only 20 students, Anderson said.

"We go to each school every other week, five one week and four the next," Anderson said. "I'd like to go to all nine every week, but that's very hard to do."

A curriculum has been designed to carry them through the rotation, but Anderson encourages the soldiers to come up with their own ideas.

Recently Anderson and a few of his platoon leaders had the opportunity to give the children at a school near the Serbian border new school supplies that were donated by a church in Tennessee.

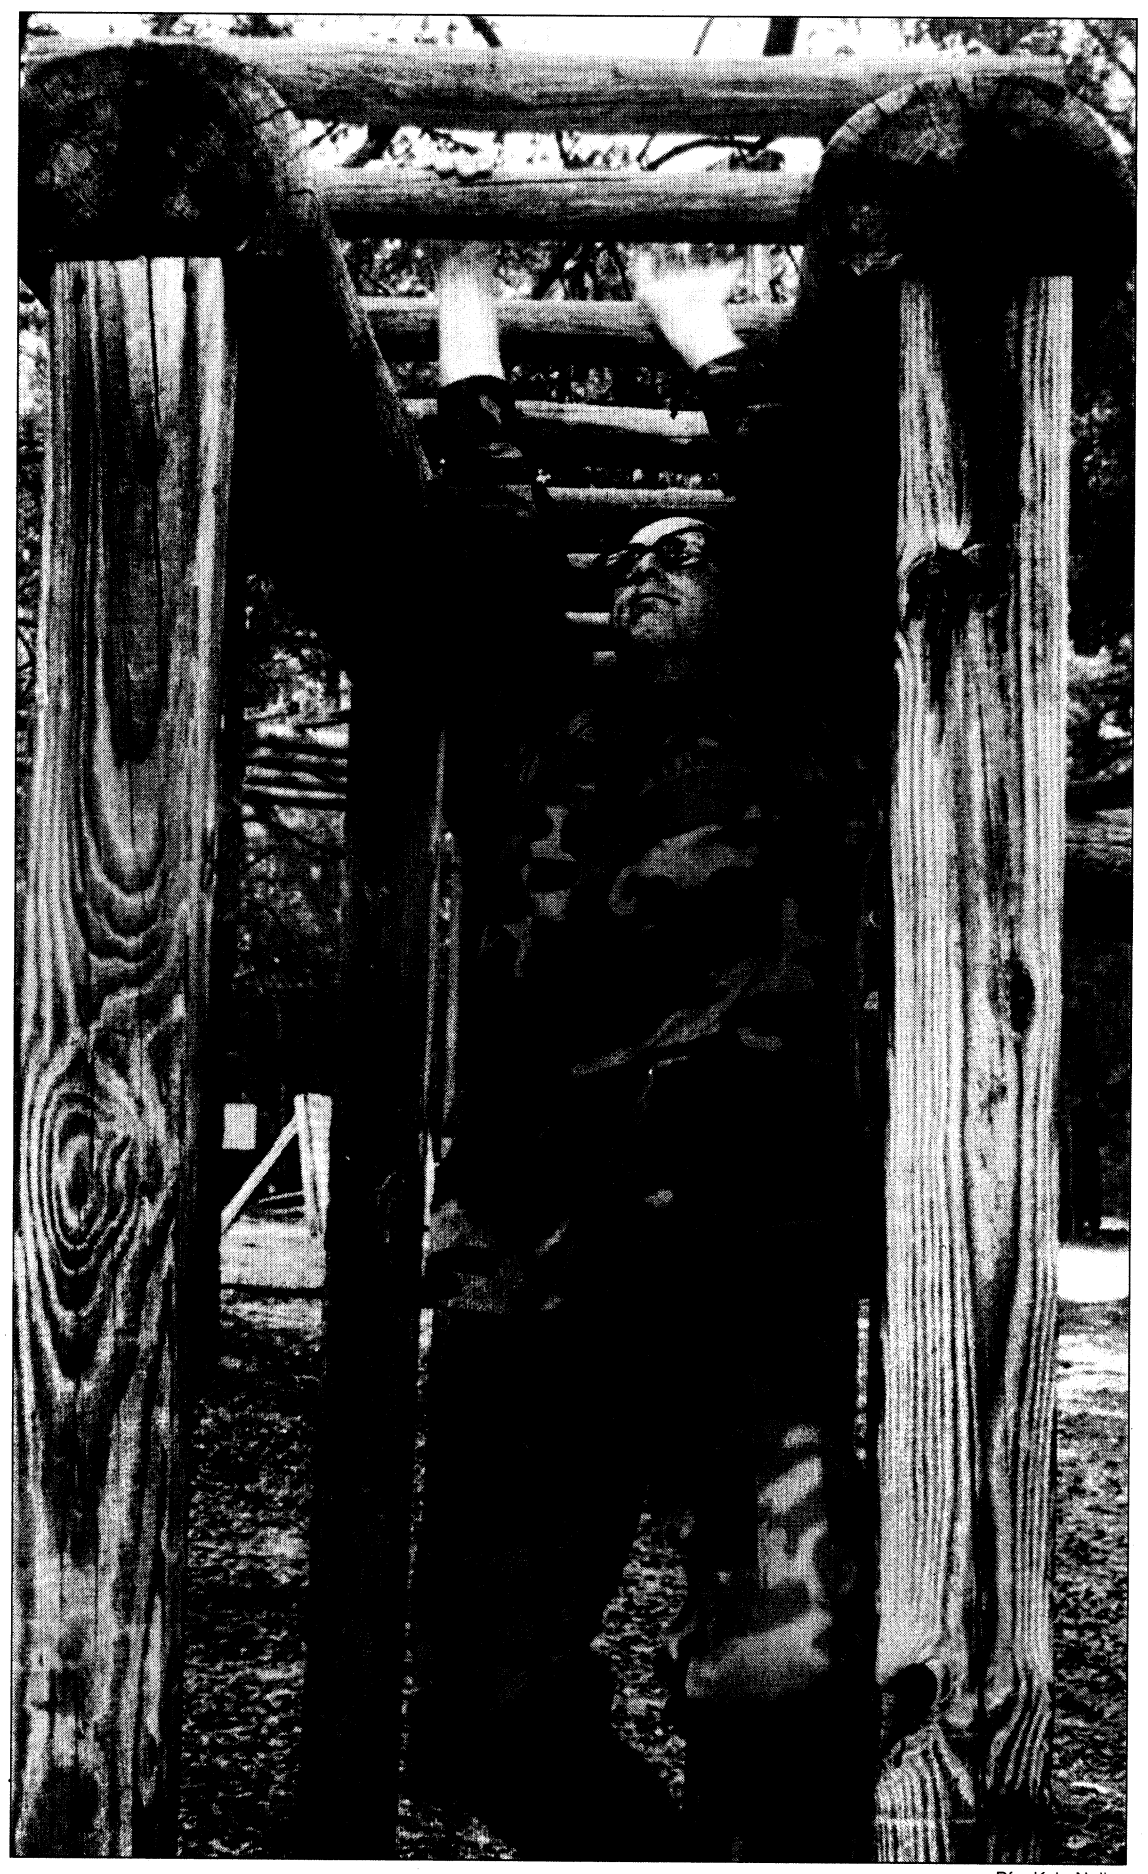
"You know, Americans are all so generous. So many have heard that we were in need of school supplies and have been more than happy to send things over," Anderson said.

Anderson said he loves to watch the joy that comes over each child's face when he or she receives new items.

"Although we are here to provide a safe and secure environment, and are doing much political good, putting a smile on a kid's face makes the whole six months worthwhile," he said.

"Kids are kids no matter where you go, and they just want some attention. They respond so positively to that, and that's one thing we are here for, to leave a positive and lasting impression on these children, the future of Kosovo," Anderson said.

"We could come over here and do the same thing, rotation after rotation, with patrols and check points, although it's all necessary and good to do.



"But some of these kids have been exposed to horrors we can't imagine, and if we can bring some of that innocence back and let them be kids, then I feel like we've accomplished something."

Top teacher tackles training, shortages

Teacher of the Year visits post schools

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

It's a great day to be a teacher. That's the message Michele Forman, the National Teacher of the Year, delivers across the country.

As a spokeswoman for America's teachers, Forman travels the nation advocating stricter teaching requirements and encouraging potential teachers.

Forman

"As the National Teacher of the Year, I am a symbol, a stand-in for all of you," she told a group of nearly 300 teachers gathered at Fort Benning's Faith Middle School Tuesday.

"I've had the opportunity to see how important and how critical is the role we play in our students' lives.

"I've seen the fruition of our hard work and dedication, and I'm here to tell you, today is a great day to be a teacher."

Forman said teachers are "given the opportunity and the ability to make a real difference" more than any other time in history.

"We live in a time of rapid transformation in the classroom. There are deep changes taking place in the way we educate," she said. "We are leading and living the educational reform movement of the turn of the 21st century. How exciting to be blazing trails."

Forman was named teacher of the year in a White House ceremony in April.

She was selected from a pool of 5,000 local and state teachers in the 50-year-old competition, sponsored by Scholastic, Inc.

The Middlebury,Vt., high school history and social studies teacher was a 21-year-old Peace Corps volunteer when she discovered the rewards of teaching.

"I'm going to come clean and tell you, I never got a degree in teaching the way most of you did," she said. "Oh, I'm not a total fraud — I've taken those courses since, but my introduction to teaching came in Nepal in the 60s.

"I didn't know how to teach Nepali, but they said they'd teach me, Forman said. "I didn't know a thing about health, but they said they'd teach me. And I didn't know how to teach, but they said they'd teach me,

"That's how I came to teach health in Nepal, and that's how I discovered the rewards of teaching I never knew existed. And that's how, two years later, I knew I was meant to be a teacher."

Forman will return to the classroom next fall, but for now "she's a full-time spokesperson for educational issues," said Dr. Dell McMullen, Fort Benning Schools superintendent. "She shares her enthusiasm with teachers and students and parents all over the nation."

Forman said she's been called "the

Students read for fun, points

Riverdragons congratulate third-graders

Third-graders at McBride Elementary School piled into the school cafeteria Valentine's Day to see the Columbus Riverdragons basketball team.

The team visited the school to congratulate the students on reading more than 10,000 books since September for the Reading Counts program.

"Our goal is not just how many books you can read, but how well you understand what you have read," said Principal Del Hicks.

The Riverdragons were pleased to be there as well to show their support of the reading program.

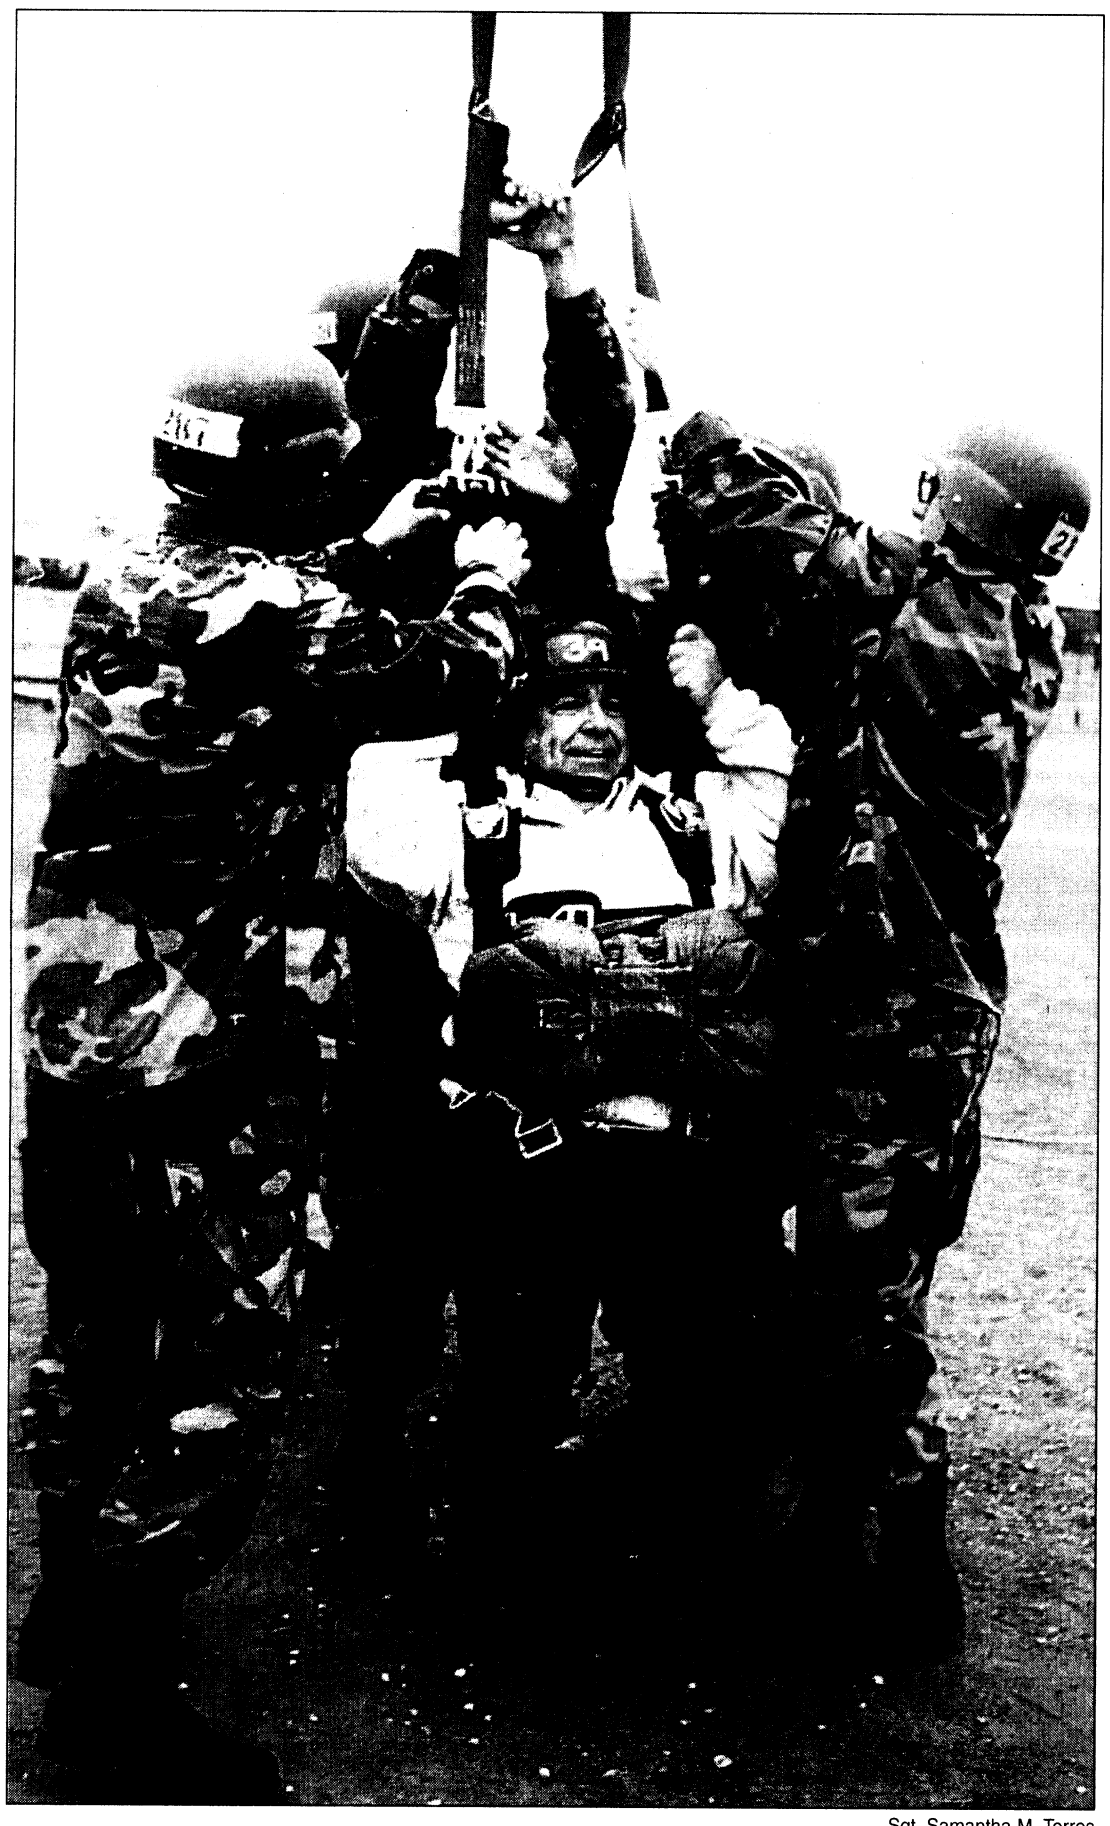
"It feels good to be a positive influence," said small forward Tremaine Fowlks.

During the question and answer session the team told the students what they liked reading.

Newspapers, said guard Nate Johnson who is currently reading a book by Michel Basiden.

The Reading Counts Program tests students on their reading comprehension. Students score points for each book read.

Teachers incorporate the program into their curriculum by giving their students time in class to read and use the Reading Counts books to help illustrate lessons in other subjects. The books are also part of the Literacy Place reading program.



At the beginning of the year second-grade teacher Karen Martz's students had to read one book a week. They now average five books a week.

"My favorite part is just reading and enjoying the book," said third-grader Michael Young.

Third-grader Jorge Cintron has read more than 674 books. His ultimate goal is to read almost all of the books in the program by the end of the year and receive a trophy for reading the most books.

"I like reading a lot!" Cintron said.

Teens, teacher shadow soldiers

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres
David Funderburk, a career focus instructor at Central High School in Phenix City, fulfills his childhood dream of being an infantryman ... for just one day.

Students live one day in the life of an infantryman

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Like many young men, David Funderburk dreamed of defending his country. But family and other responsibilities led him down another path. So when officials at Fort Benning agreed to participate in a nationwide job shadowing day, the career focus instructor joined students for a day in the Army of One Feb. 13.

Helping to make that dream a reality for a day, members of the 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, invited the counselor and five local high school students to live one day in the life of a Fort Benning infantryman.

National Ground Hog Job Shadowing Day is an opportunity for students nationwide to visit job sites, such as Fort Benning, to get a firsthand look at a job to help them decide if it is something they would like to pursue.

These teens are some of the 400 students from Phenix City, who took part in the job shadowing day.

"Many students wanted to visit Fort Benning," said David Funderburk, Central High School career focus instructor. "But we brought a small group, this way they could get a closer look at the infantry."

He said he knows the visit will have a positive impact on the students, two of whom are already considering the military as a career.

Bringing students to experience a day in the Army's infantry was not the instructor's only goal.

"It was selfish of me, too. I wanted to join the Army when I was young," Funderburk said. "I love the Bradleys, and today we will all get to ride in one and see them fire."

Students were escorted by Capt. Robert S. Whittinham, battalion personnel officer, to Red Cloud Range where soldiers from the 29th Inf. Regt. were participating in a live fire, hands-on training exercise.

The students had the opportunity to see eight BFVs fire and maneuver toward targets as 175 mounted and dismounted soldiers engaged their targets while supported by and attacked by snipers from 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

After receiving a briefing, on the Bradley Infantry Fighting Vehicle, visitors were given a chance to take the gunner's seat. Staff Sgt. Jeffrey Ivey explained how to zero weapon on the targets downrange.

Spaceman invades Fort Benning schools

Astronaut visits, talks about NASA

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Retired Col. Jim Voss, a NASA astronaut, visited Fort Benning schools Wednesday.

"I really enjoy speaking with children," Voss said. "They are very receptive to learning different ideas."

He spoke to pre-K through fifth grade at Dexter Elementary school and students at Faith Middle School.

In his presentation, he showed a video of his experience at the International Spacestation and talked to the students about what it is like to live in space.

The speech was designed to encourage the students to study hard and do the best they can, because they are capable of accomplishing whatever they want, Voss said.

After the presentation, Voss answered questions about being an astronaut and what it was like to live in space.

"We are really thrilled to have a real astronaut come here and speak with the children," said Viki Rogers, Dexter principal.

The children prepared for the visit in their classrooms.

The visit correlates with their lessons on space, Rogers said.

The students seemed to really enjoy the presentation, and the colonel's visit gave them something to think about as a career.

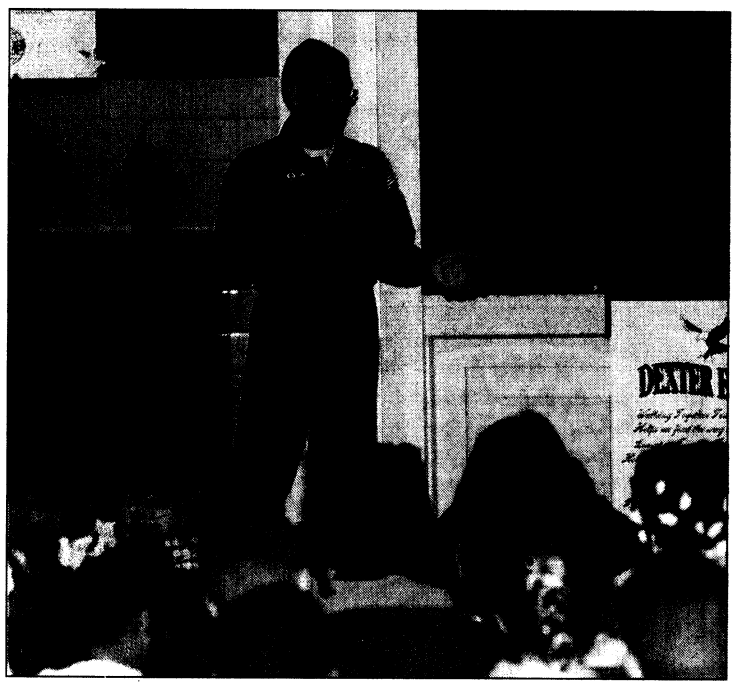
"I think it was a great visit because I got to learn more about space," said Brittany Starr, 9.

"Now that I know more about it, I want to be an astronaut when I grow up," said Liz Lockhart, 10.

This was not Voss's first visit to Fort Benning.

He attended several military courses here, including the Infantry Officers Basic Course and the Airborne and Ranger Schools.

"Fort Benning was a very important part of my life," he said.



"I had some wonderful times and very fond memories of this place. I was an infantryman and always will be.

"Going to space can be physically and mentally challenging, and the Army prepared me for that with the schools I attended," said Voss, who served as a back-up crew member for two missions to the Russian space station Mir.

He also lived and worked on the International Space Station as a member of the Expedition-2 crew.

A veteran of five space flights, Voss has logged 201 days in space, including four space walks.

Later in the day Voss presented framed crossed rifles and a ranger tab he took into space to Fort Benning's assistant commandant, Col. David Rodriguez.

Q: What is identity theft and why should I worry about it?

A: Identity theft is when personal or financial information about you is stolen in order to take your money, purchase goods or receive credit in your name. It is a crime in Georgia and most states. Personal and financial information includes your date of birth, social security number, driver's license number, credit card numbers and billing addresses and bank account information and PIN numbers.

Once a thief has stolen this information, he can use your existing credit by charging goods and services to your credit card over the phone or the Internet.

He can steal your cash by using ATM machines to make withdrawals, or even in person at a bank, if a teller is not paying close attention. He may also use your information to apply for new credit cards and or checking accounts in your name.

Most victims are unaware this has even happened until the thief is long gone and creditors start trying to collect from the victims.

In yet other cases, the thieves have obtained driver's licenses when arrested for other crimes. Imagine not only receiving bills for thousands of dollars worth of items you never bought, but also getting arrested on a warrant for a crime you didn't even know occurred.

Q: How can I protect myself from becoming the victim of identity theft?

A: The State of Georgia and consumer credit watch groups recommend that you do the following in order to prevent yourself from becoming a victim of identity theft:

• Do not display your social security number on your personal checks.

• Do not use your social security number as your driver's license number.

• Shred or destroy any credit card application you receive in the mail, even if you are just throwing it away. Thieves can obtain the application with preprinted information about you from the trash and then submit it for credit.

Consumers can "opt out" or request credit reporting agencies to cease selling their names to companies who sent them unsolicited credit card applications. To inform the credit reporting agencies of your desire to have your name removed from lists of consumers sold to telemarketers, call the toll-free number (888) I OPT OUT (888-567-8688).

• Be cautious about disclosing your credit card, checking account or social security numbers over the telephone.

• Keep PINs a secret. Statistics show that in one-third of ATM card frauds, cardholders wrote their PINs on their ATM cards or on slips of paper kept with their cards. Also, do not hesitate to ask a person to step back if you feel he is too close behind you at an ATM machine or a pay phone.

If you have questions about how to protect yourself from identity theft, call the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Legal Assistance Division, at 545-3281.

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Joyce Flatt

a fifth-grade teacher at Dexter Elementary

Personal: The Columbus native lives in Stewart County with her husband Curtis, who is a gardener at the school. She has two sons and three grandchildren.

History: Flatt always knew teaching was "something she could do," but she didn't go back to college to finish her degree until her children were grown.

"It was probably best that way," Flatt said. "Teaching and child development made a lot more sense to me then."

She earned bachelor's and master's degrees in elementary education and an education specialist degree from Columbus State University. She has been teaching at Fort Benning for 11 years.

On change: "I don't stay in the same role for very long," said Flatt, who has taught third, fourth, and fifth grade and gifted education. She was also the education technologist at Dexter for two years.

"I don't like change for change's sake, but I do like to start fresh and new every year," said Flatt, who returned to the classroom to prove that the suggestions she made as an education technologist could be used effectively.

On technology: "The computer is a tool, just like a pencil," Flatt said. "It's not a novelty. It's so much a part of what the students do. Sometimes the best tool for them to use is the computer, and sometimes it's a pencil. "

Several Dexter students are now involved in a Web-design project called ThinkQuest. Students worldwide compete to create the best educational Web site, which requires her students to be able to work together.

"Working together is important later in life, and in any job setting," Flatt said. "They're going to have to work with people they don't like, so they should learn to move beyond that now."

Her philosophy: "You can't just teach content nowadays. It changes every minute," Flatt said. "We need to teach students how to find the answers, so we can make them life-long learners."

Hobbies: A self-proclaimed homebody, Flatt enjoys gardening and spending time with her grandchildren.

Future plans: "I'm going to teach until it's not fun anymore," she said. "I love Fort Benning. I'm going to stay until they make me leave."

What others are saying: "She is the kind of teacher who's willing to stay after school to help her students," said one parent.

Oral piercings can be health hazards

Mouth jewelry can lead to serious injuries

U.S. Army Dental Activity

It's not a surprise these days to see some people sporting a pierced tongue, lips or cheeks. The surprise for some of these folks, however, is that piercings can be dangerous. Visits to the emergency room or doctor's office are not usually on the minds of those who are electing to have piercings.

There are some things that should be considered, however. The human mouth contains millions of bacteria, and infection is a common complication of oral piercing. Other side effects include pain and swelling. The most popular piercing site in the mouth — the tongue — could swell enough to close off an airway. Regardless of how "experienced" the person doing the piercing claims to be, piercing can cause uncontrollable bleeding and nerve damage.

Piercing can be extremely painful and result in swelling and increased saliva flow and even drooling. Healing may take six weeks or longer, especially if there are complications.

Even if the piercing injury doesn't cause any trouble, you should be aware of the potential hazards that mouth jewelry presents:

You can easily choke on any studs, barbells or hoops that come loose in your mouth.

The jewelry can chip or crack your teeth.

Jewelry worn in the mouth can hinder your ability to eat, not to mention your speech. It's hard to be cool when you can't pronounce your words or when pieces of your lunch are stuck to that tiny barbell.

Piercing is a fashion statement that involves more than just deciding what jewelry will be attached to the body and where. This decision could have major consequences for your oral health, too.

Infantry: Students visit soldiers

After the briefing, the group was treated to a ride in the Bradley by soldiers of Bravo Company, 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt.

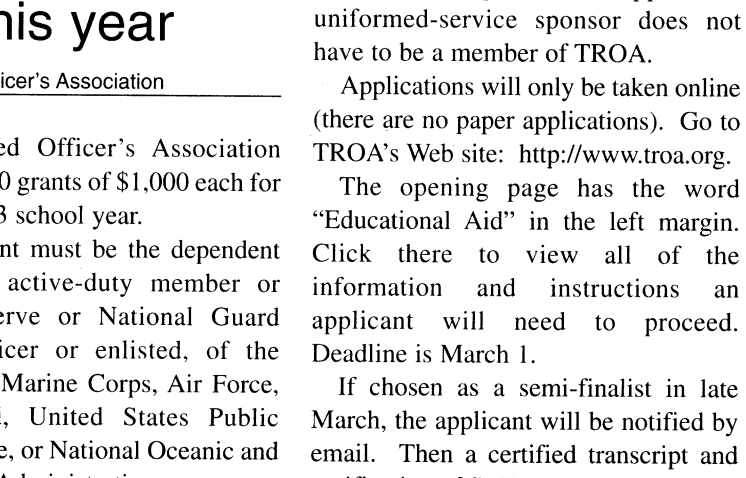
"This is great," said high school freshman, Josh Hallmark. "I didn't think (the Bradley) would be fully automatic."

Hallmark, a weapons enthusiast, said he enjoyed seeing the BFV but was more excited seeing soldiers use their M-16 A2 rifle.

Derrick Lawson, a high school junior, asked soldiers about the Bradley.

"Today is a real chance to see everything and get a better idea of what it is like to be in the Army," Lawson said.

The students' day in the Army continued with a visit to the Airborne Walk to get a crash course in airborne training. After a briefing by airborne instructors, Staff Sgt. Robert Carlisle and Sgt. 1st Class John Styron, each one, including Funderburk, who admitted he is afraid of heights, leaped out of the 34-foot tower several times.



"The harness was extremely uncomfortable," said Sam Ny, high school freshman. "But it was not too scary."

After all this training, the "Day Soldiers" stopped for chow with soldiers at the 30th Adjunct General (Reception) Battalion dinning facility.

Afterward, they traveled to 29th Inf. Regt. headquarters to use their knowledge of the Bradley on the close combat simulator.

After honing their skills, the youths made full circle as they returned to Red Cloud Range where they were met by other students and instructors to witness the HOTEX in full scale and real-time operational tempo.

"Today was an opportunity to show them, today's youth, tomorrow's soldier, what we really do," said Staff Sgt. William Dixon, range NCOIC. "When there is an opportunity when they can interact with Fort Benning, we like to be a part of it."

Sgt. Samantha M. Torres

Teacher: Advocates strict standards

plain-spoken teacher from rural Vermont," and asked her audience for the opportunity to speak plainly about the issues and rewards of teaching.

"To be a teacher is to be an optimist, because every day we stand in the presence of the very best of what (students) can be," Forman said. "We serve as a catalyst. Research shows teachers are the single greatest variable in student learning."

Forman said schools face a severe teacher shortages across the nation. Half of all teachers, kindergarten through grade 12 are older than 45, and 20 percent of new teachers will leave the profession within three years.

"We need between 2 million and 2.4 million teachers in the next 10 years, and we have no idea where they're coming from," she said.

It will take an aggressive initiative to resolve the shortage, Forman said, and teachers can help by promoting public awareness of the "important, complex and demanding job they do."

But lowering standards is not the answer, said Forman, who is alarmed at the national trend to recruit teachers and substitute teachers who aren't qualified.

"We must insist every young child deserves a caring, qualified, competent teacher," she said. "Do you know that 54 percent of all history teachers don't even have a minor in history? It is critical that we have standards and work to eliminate wavers for those teaching with inadequate training.

"I don't want to drive across a bridge built by an engineer who is working on a waver, and I believe our students deserve to know their teachers have the correct credentials."

Forman encouraged teachers to "remember the idealism that led you to choose teaching as a profession."

"We are part of something momentous, and I wouldn't trade my job for anything in the world," she said. "It's up to us to educate others about the importance of the work we do."

Students celebrate 100th day of school year

Kids reflect on what they have learned

McBride Elementary School

The Fort Benning schools reached yet another "Day 100" of a school year. McBride used the event to reflect on the 2001-2002 school year as well as celebrate the wonderful things still to come Jan. 30.

"The first 100 days of this school year have been outstanding," said Principal Del Hicks. "I am so proud of our students' accomplishments in reading this year. They have read more than 10,000 books and passed tests on them using the Reading Counts Program."

"The second- and third-grade students have worked hard on reading and we are looking forward to rewarding them with a special ceremony that involves representatives from the Columbus RiverDragons."

Hicks also commented on how well the kindergarten and first- grade classes decorated the hallways for the Day 100 celebration using the many skills that they have accomplished this year.

Hicks said, "This school year is going very well due to our wonderful teaching staff, students, and parents all working as a team.

I am looking forward to the rest of the year."

The following are some comments made by students either about the Day 100 celebration or a reflection of the first 100 days of this school year:

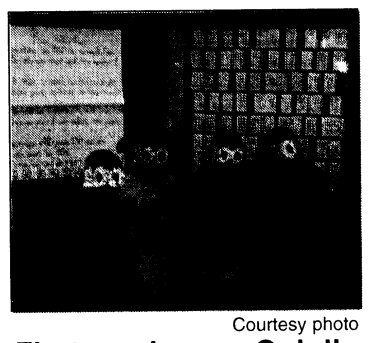
"I had lots of fun at our 100th Day celebration. It was fun to make glasses shaped like the number 100."

Anthony DeMarco

"I liked our 100th Day projects. We stacked 100 blocks on our desks and it almost touched the ceiling!"

Danielle Hood

"The 100th Day of school was so much fun. We wrote about what we would do with 100 dollars. I would buy a house, a car, and every kind of pet."



Nathan Hattfield

"In the first 100 days, I learned how to count by 5's and I can read better."

Mark Camillo

"Now I know what a compound word is."

Jalesa Reynolds and Dominque Austin, third graders from McBride, show off their map skills using cookies and candy to create land forms that can be found in the United States.

"I liked popping popcorn on Day 100 and counting out the kernels."

Emily O'Berry

"Day 100 was fun when we did different things for 100 seconds. We whistled, jumped, balanced on one foot and rested."

Jennifer Fussell

"I liked counting out 100 gummi bears and then eating them."

McBride students write about their future careers

Third-graders research dream jobs

McBride Elementary School

The third-grade classes at McBride have been busy thinking about their future while learning about the many career choices they will have as adults. Using the theme, "Today's Children Are Tomorrow's Leaders", the students have used the Internet, books, magazines, and newspapers to research careers that they may want to pursue in the future. Once the students completed their research, they turned their notes into paragraphs about that particular career. Samples of the career choices for these students are below:

My Future

By Hugo Sanchez

When I grow up, I want to be a baseball player. Baseball players play games. To become a baseball player, I may have to go to college to learn how to be the greatest baseball player ever. I want to be a baseball player because it is fun. By watching professional baseball players and my Dad always practicing with me, I decided that I want to be a baseball player.

My Future

By Nakeidra Devereaux

When I grow up, I want to be a lawyer. Lawyers are smart. He or she must use computers to find the facts they are looking for to help with their cases. Lawyers work mostly in offices. About half of all lawyers work 50 hours a week or more. To get a license the person must go to college for 4 years. The person must then go to law school for 3 years. I would like this marvelous job because it sounds like so much fun and sounds very interesting. I want to help people that are in trouble. I've wanted to be a lawyer for a long time. I think that I would be very good at this job because I am smart and I like to help people.

My Future

By Susan Strickland

When I grow up I want to be a librarian. Librarians help people find facts. They organize information and help people locate what they need. Librarians generally work in nice places. They spend most of their time at their desks or computers. Librarians help people find the books that they want. Some times they can't help people because the library doesn't have what the people want. In that case, the librarian can help the people find another library that may have what they are looking for. Being a librarian should be a lot of fun. I like to read and I think it would be neat to be around books all day.

A Zookeeper

By Jacob Colvin

I want to be a zookeeper because I like animals a lot. Most zookeepers that work in larger zoos have a college degree in biology, animal science, or something similar. Animal caretakers feed, water, brush, bathe, and exercise animals. They check on them to see if they are sick or hurt. I think it would be a fun job to be a zookeeper and get to be around animals all of the time.

I want to be a singer because I like to sing. Singers can make between $13,980 and $54,200 a year.

You must have musical talent to be a singer. You could play in a band and go on stage in front of people. Singers record songs and music videos in studios. They also appear live on radio and TV. Singers get to travel a lot.

Believers can find peace with God

Slow down, give some time to God

Chaplain (Capt.) Shawn Connors
29th Infantry Regiment

We live in an ever-changing society filled with many demands and responsibilities.

Society demands much of our time that we are pulled and stretched in many directions. We place demands and responsibilities on ourselves that make it seem as if society is the culprit, but in reality we are to blame.

Then we begin to wonder is there any peace or contentment anywhere. As I observe people, they remind me of ants. Ants seem to be always moving and staying so busy that I wonder if they ever rest.

Some people even think while they are sleeping.

Why is it that we as a human race find it hard to take time to smell the flowers, or to look at the beauty that is everywhere around us? Maybe it is because we let people and things control our lives to the point that we are living just to fulfill their wishes instead of fulfilling ours.

Everybody should, from time to time take a step back and reflect upon what is going on and who is in control.

Can peace be found?

Yes! Peace can only be found in God. God is the only source of true happiness, contentment and peace.

The Apostle Paul was a person just like anyone of us in today's society. If we were to look at his life, before his conversion experience, we would find that it was the influence of people and rules that controlled his life.

It was not until his conversion experience that he could truthfully say, "Not that I speak in regard to need, for I have learned in whatever state I am to be content." (Philippians 4:11)

This is when Paul began to understand that he could truly be at peace within himself, knowing that God who made this universe is now the controlling agent in his life.

The reason he could be at peace was now he was no longer controlled by people or rules.

It is not until we come to the understanding that there is one greater than us who is able to lift us out of our circumstances. Only when we recognize who is truly in control will we be able to speak like Paul and say, "In whatever state I am I have learned to be content." Our trust will then change from things and people to God and when once that has been established we will be able to rest knowing that everything will work out right. It reads in Romans 8:28: "And we know that all things work together for good to those who love God, to those who are called according to His purpose." Then and only then will we be able to find true peace and happiness in the meaning of life. Peace cannot be found in things or people, only in God.

> "Peace can only be found in God."

E-mail offers simple lessons

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor
11th Infantry Regiment

Life can be hard! The responsibilities, the pressures, multiple duties — all pulling us in varying directions. And then there are the people: some with demands, some with needs and some just acting foolish that get in our way. Life is surely complicated.

Sometimes we make it even harder by doing dumb things ourselves to muck it up. A leading radio talk show personality has written a couple of books dealing with dumb things people do to mess up their lives. Forgetting the simple rules and lessons of life usually gets us into more complicating situations than life deals us on a regular basis.

Taylor

Some time ago, a friend e-mailed me an analogy based on the life experiences of Noah from the Old Testament. I have no idea where it came from and I cannot take credit for it, but I liked it nonetheless. It is called Everything I need to know I learned from Noah's Ark.

One: Don't miss the boat.

Two: Remember, we are all in the same boat.

Three: Plan ahead. It wasn't raining when Noah built the ark.

Four: Stay fit. When you are 600 years, someone may ask you to do something really big.

Five: Don't listen to the critics; just get on with the job that needs to be done.

Six: For safety's sake, travel in pairs.

Seven: Speed isn't always an advantage. The snails were on board with the cheetahs.

Eight: When you're stressed, float awhile.

Nine: Remember, the ark was built by amateurs. It was the professionals that built the Titanic.

Ten: No matter the storm, when you are with God there is always a rainbow waiting.

Soldier drives to historic Gold Medal

Home field helps soldier to triumph

Brian Lepley
Olympic correspondent, CFSC Public Affairs

PARK CITY, Utah — The first gold medal in women's bobsled Olympic history hangs around the neck of a soldier.

Spc. Jill Bakken drove the USA 2 sled to a two-heat total of 1:37.76 (48.81 and 48.95) to win the gold by .3 over Germany 1's 1:38.06 at Utah Olympic Park Tuesday.

The Army World Class Athlete and Utah National Guard member teamed with pusher Vonetta Flowers in women's bobsled's Olympic debut in front of 14,956 mostly-partisan, screaming fans.

"This is an amazing feeling," Bakken said. "It was a lot of fun today.

"There was a lot of tough competition so we definitely had our work cut out for us because of the Germans. They're tough teams to beat."

On their first run, Bakken and Flowers set a track push record (5.31 seconds) and a track record (48.81). After 15 teams completed the first heat, USA 2 led Germany 1 by a healthy margin of .29.

"I knew we had a good lead but it doesn't matter," Bakken said about her record first run. "The second run is a different run and you just have to stay focused. Any one of the other teams could have moved up and had an awesome run."

With the top time, Bakken and Flowers were the last team to race in the second heat.

Germany 1, driven by Sandra Prokoff, was next to last. Prokoff and pusher Ulrike Holzner set a new push record, 5.29, en route to a 48.96.

U.S. coach and WCAP Spc. Bill Tavares knew Bakken had a .29 advantage as they readied for the last run. He also knew that his driver always puts in excellent second efforts.

"Jill always slows down the least on the second run," Tavares said.

"When everybody else slows down about a half second, three-tenths, Jill slows down the least. She was doing it during training so we knew it."

With the Germans in at 1:38.06, USA 2 needed a 49.24. Bakken responded with another sub-49, 48.96, to lengthen her lead and make history.

The subplot to her Olympic record runs is that she had never cracked 49 seconds before Tuesday, the biggest races of her life.

"I knew I had it in me to get a 48," Bakken said. "Others had put them up before so I knew I could. I just had to drive well, focus on that, because I knew the start would be there."

"We always knew it was there," Tavares said. "I thought it was unbelievable. Jill has been a little inconsistent but when she's on, she's on, and she was on tonight."

When both women emerged from the sled, their families and friends mobbed them. Cheers from nearly 15,000 throats crashed over them.

During the press conference Flowers was overcome, crying, while Bakken, an eight-year veteran of U.S. women's bobsled was jubilant.

"I'm so blessed to be here. To win a Gold Medal for your country is awesome," she said. "I wasn't nervous, I was anxious to get out here and race. We've been so excited to race ever since we moved into the village."

For the first-ever women's bobsled event in the Olympics, Bakken and Flowers piled up the records: track and Olympic push start (5.31, broken by the Germans), track and Olympic record (48.81), track and Olympic event record (1:37.76), Flowers became the first black athlete to win a gold medal in the Winter Olympics, and they won the first Olympic bobsled medal by an American in 46 years.

The only other soldiers ever to medal in Olympic Winter Games since 1948 were members of the U.S. men's hockey teams that won Silver in 1972, Gold in 1960, and Silver in 1956.

The Army World Class Athlete Program of which Bakken, Tavares and seven other Winter Olympians are members is one of 200 Morale, Welfare, Recreation programs the Army provides soldiers and families worldwide under the guiding philosophy that soldiers are entitled to the same quality of life as those they defend.

Mailed Foot victorious

Teams build esprit de corps, camaraderie

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

It's no secret drill sergeants on Sand Hill work hard and long hours away from loved ones while training tomorrow's leaders.

So when Valentine's Day evening comes around, one may expect to find them with their wives at a nice restaurant or home eating by candle light. Right?

Wrong. The Centurions of 30th Adjutant General and the Mailed Foot of 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment were on the basketball court at Santiago Gym representing their unit and building esprit de corps.

"A lot of guys might be in the dog house tonight," said James Jones, the Mailed Foot center.

The Mailed Foot 52-48 victory that improved them to 1-2 was not their only consolation.

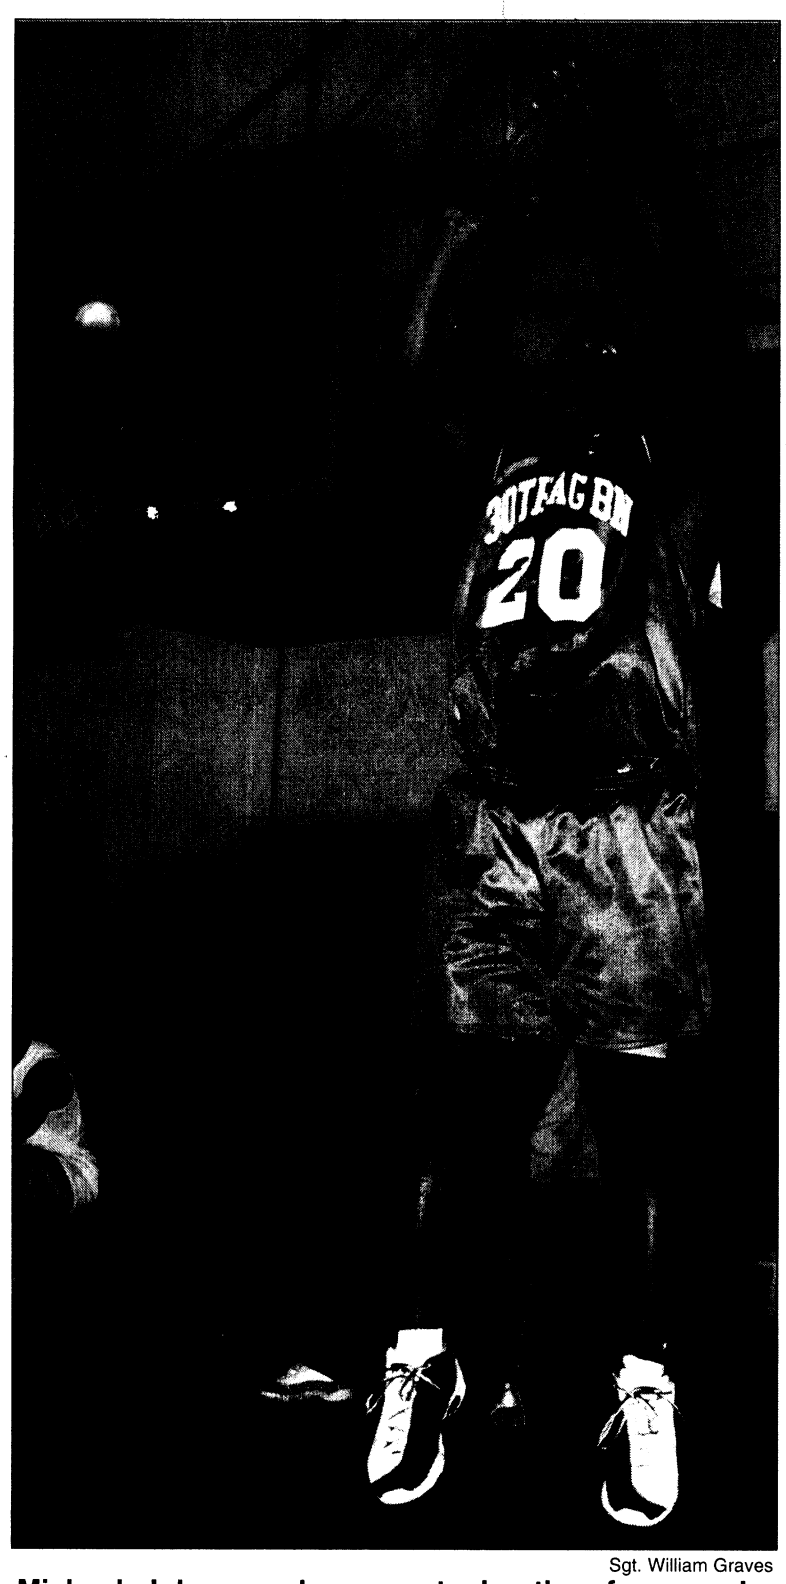
"This is an excellent opportunity to do something different and break away from our hectic schedules," Jones said. "Basketball is an easy way to get to know each other and build relationships."

Many soldiers went to Drill Sergeant School together but have not seen each other for two years, said Joseph Richardson, Mailed Foot point guard and coach.

"This brings them together and allows them to catch up with each other," Richardson said.

Sand Hill leadership has supported the players well, he said.

"They realize this breaks the monotony of training, and it's a good morale builder," Richardson said. "Not only does it build camaraderie within the unit, it builds it within the whole brigade."



The final score did not reflect the Mailed Foot domination of the Centurions. The Mailed Foot led by as many as 17 with 12:36 remaining on the clock and 10 with 1:42 left.

Jones battled all night with rival big-man, Michael Thomas, to score 10.

"He a big, strong guy," Jones said. "He's pretty mobile for his size."

Jones and Thomas forced much of their opponents action outside.

"We're learning each other's tendencies, and our continuity is improving every game," Jones said. "Our shooting percentage was better, and we're starting to click and feel the touch. I'm sure it will continue to pay off later in the season."

Sgt. William Graves
Michael Johnson show great shooting form as he shoots a jump shot from just inside the 3-point line.

The Mailed Foot could work on matching their offensive aggressiveness and intensity to the defensive side of the ball, he said.

"They were getting too many second shots," Jones said.

Still, Richardson's, who scored 15, and Jones' production was enough to counter the 15 by Darrick Menzie, 11 by Michael Johnson and 9 by Warren Youngblood.

The pivotal point of the game came at the end of the first half. Trailing 21-18, the Centurions controlled the ball and the opportunity to hold for the last shot. Instead, they shot with 10 seconds on the clock, missed, and the Mailed Foot sank one from downtown at the buzzer.

The situation became worse for the Centurions at the start of the second half. Centurion turnovers and deadly three point shots by Richardson propelled the Mailed Foot to an early 13-point lead.

Subsequently, Richardson called time-out and took himself out of the game.

"I was getting tired," Richardson said. "You have to know when you're helping your team and when you're hurting them. I had to get some fresh legs in there."

He said his team's performance encouraged him.

"We knocked some of the rust off tonight, and we're looking forward to a promising season," Richardson said. "If we play as well as we did tonight, no one can beat us."

Couples win tourney

18-year-old helps team to victory

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

The Follow Me Golf Course sponsored the Couples Valentine Golf Scramble Sunday, and Dan and Robin Mims along with teammates Arch and Cordy Arnold combined to score a 58.00 to win the competition.

To win the 18-hole tournament, the foursome had to rely on the play of one another. The teams of four all shot from the best placed ball out of the four to combine for the fewest strokes during the tournament.

"We were lucky," Arch said. "And we had fun."

The winning foursome had an excellent player in Robin, 18.

"It was a very enjoyable time," said Dan, father of Robin, a four-year high school golf player. "Robin was our secret weapon."

Robin said the tournament was great and she enjoyed spending a Sunday afternoon on the course.

Arch said he was happy with the win, and they will all enjoy their $30 gift certificate they received for winning the tournament.

He also felt the scores were really close in the competition.

"The best score to the worst score was not much of a difference," Arch said.

"The golf course is in excellent condition. The tournament brought a lot of people together. We have people in this tournament from age 18 to 80 plus.

"What other sport can people of varying ages come together and compete?" he asked.

Jennifer Thomas, Tom Thomas, Dottie and Dan Pasion placed second with a score of 58.50.

Driving

Golf tips by the post golf pro, Larry Cruise

"While practicing to perfect your drive, it is important to focus on balance and weight shift throughout the swing. The most common mistake golfers make is distributing their weight on their toes. By focusing on your balance and weight shift during your drive, it will help you develop muscle memory for consistency in your swing."

Here are some steps to follow for improving your drive:

(1)— Find a comfortable distance from the ball, as demonstrated with the ruler. The ball should be lined up with the inner thigh of the front foot. Setup with a slight bend at the waist and at the knees. Weight should be evenly distributed on both feet. Make sure your weight is not on your toes.

(2)— On your back swing relax and allow 80 percent of your weight to transfer to your back foot. Allow your hips to turn with the movement.

(3)— As you begin your downward swing, transfer 90 percent of your weight to the front foot and place an emphasis on maintaining a spine angle of 30 degrees. Maintain your balance and spine angle through impact.

(4)— On the follow through, finish with your chest and belt buckle facing the target.

"Balance and weight shift are an intricate part of a good drive, but so is driver selection. Ninety-five percent of your drive is based on the proper flex of your driver. Get the right shaft to fit your individual swing speed. Try the club out before you buy it to make sure you are getting the right club for you."

Knowledge of history is our bridge to the future.

William Spencer believed in the power of knowledge. Primus King fought to cast his vote. Horace King aspired to bridge rivers. Eugene Bullard reached for the clouds. Ma Rainey sang from her heart. Albert Thompson believed in justice. Amos Sherald believed in himself. Alma Thomas spoke through her canvas. Mildred Terry loved the printed word. Thomas Wiggins had faith in his music. Thomas Brewer believed in the ultimate goodness of the human spirit. Because all of these and countless more African Americans made their own selfless contributions, our community and all Americans can look forward to bridging a future rich in opportunity and promise.

It's not a machine. It's our nurses.

They are the vital link of support not only for the patient but for all loved ones involved. That's why it takes a special type of person to be a Lenox Hill nurse. The demands can sometimes be overwhelming. So, as far as we're concerned, they're priceless. That's why we provide a support system of our own--an atmosphere that ensures that our nurses get the same levels of respect, care and comfort that our patients do. Ask any of our nurses why they work here and you'll get a lot of the same answers. "Management is on a first name basis with us and they value our opinions." "There's a sense of comfort here that I've never experienced in any other hospital." These are the actual words of our nurses. And they speak more powerfully than anything we could author.

Who needs this kind of support? You do. You owe it to yourself to explore a different kind of nursing. One where your voice is heard, your well being cherished, and your comfort assured.

Program helps stabilize soldiers

Plan lets soldiers stay for a while

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Two programs have been revised to help stabilize soldiers returning from Korea and other dependent-restricted tours.

The Deployment Stabilization policy, along with the Homebase and Advanced Assignment Program — known as HAAP —have been expanded, the Army G1 recently announced.

After completing a tour in Korea or other dependent-restricted areas, soldiers will now be stabilized from operational deployments for six months at their new duty station. Before the most recent revision, the Deployment Stabilization policy only affected soldiers who had participated in "Operations other than War" deployments for a period of at least 30 consecutive days.

Personnel officials said the stabilization program — which applies to both officer and enlisted personnel — was expanded to allow soldiers time to reacquaint themselves with families and provide time to readjust to home station. It also rewards soldiers for arduous periods of duty in which they were separated from family members, officials said.

The Homebase and Advanced Assignment Program is expanding to specialists and corporals who have re-enlisted at least once, beginning March 1. HAAP participants can return to their current duty station after completing a dependent-restricted tour or get orders to their follow-on station before leaving the country.

HAAP was established in the 1970s for officers and noncommissioned officers to reduce permanent-change-of-station costs and increase stability for soldiers and their families, according to Kenneth Emerson, chief of the specialized support team for Enlisted Personnel Management Directorate, U.S. Total Army Personnel Command.

There are two options for soldiers under HAAP: either homebase assignments or advanced assignments.

Under the homebase assignment option, soldiers can leave their family members at their current installation and then return for

The U.S. Customs Service seized more than 22 million dollars worth of drugs, charged an 81-year-old man with smuggling ecstasy and confiscated tens of thousands of fake Olympic apparel all in the month of February — not to mention keeping its employees on the highest state of alert since the events of Sept. 11. For the guardians of the nation's borders, it's all in a days work.

With more than 15,000 employees worldwide, Customs is responsible for ensuring everyone and everything that comes into and goes out of the country is legal. It's the only border agency with an extensive air, land and marine interdiction force with an investigative component, supported by its own intelligence branch.

So it's quite fitting they share their knowledge with the soldiers of the U.S. Army. Last month, instructors form the local U.S. Customs Firearms and Tactical Training Division came to Fort Benning to teach soldiers of the 988th Military Police Company a thing or two about prisoner transport.

"Any time you're working one-on-one with prisoners, there's a certain level of risk involved," said 2nd Lt. David Walters before deploying with 80 other MPs to Guantanamo Bay, Cuba last month. "That's why we're doing this, to be better equipped for our job there."

The MPs learned the basics of prisoner transport: how to put leg irons, belly chains and handcuffs on a prisoner.

"We equate that to shackling dangerous criminals to take to court," said Paul McManus, senior inspector, U.S. Customs. "The difference is we transport one murderer a month. The MPs in Cuba are doing it everyday."

Customs instructors provide Fort Benning soldiers training whenever possible, McManus said.

"When we have a slot available, we call the MPs," said McManus, a

DFEL contract moves forward

MACOM wrestles to set takeover date

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

The contract that transfers base operations from an Army civilian work force to private industry is moving forward.

The Department of the Army conditionally awarded the contract to IT Corporation in August 2000, but a protest by a competitor and the appeal process kept the contract in limbo until now. The timeline the installation established for IT Corp. to take over operations such as facilities, automotive and aviation maintenance, transportation and supply from the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics is January 2003.

During a DFEL town hall meeting Feb. 22, post officials squashed rumors and discussed the transfer's timeline. The Secretary of the Army's initiative to stand up regional centers for installation management by October 2002 will not impact the transfer, nor will IT Corp.'s parent company, The IT Group, filing for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection. According to the company's Web site, www.theitgroup.com, the company announced the Chapter 11 filing along with the company's sale to The Shaw Group Jan. 16.

Filing Chapter 11 protects IT Corp.'s contract with the government to provide the base operations, post officials said. Because the company is still financially solvent and can perform the contracted functions, the contract will go forward.

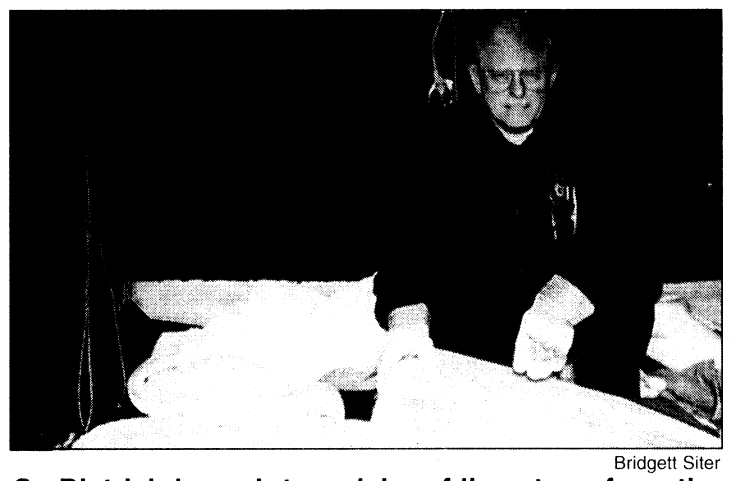
Piece of Pentagon will be displayed

Limestone slab to be used as base of sculpture

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©



A chunk of the Pentagon has a new home at Fort Benning's Dexter Elementary School.

The 400-pound slab of limestone, once part of the Pentagon's E-wing wall, will be used as the platform for an iron and steel eagle sculpture which is expected to be completed and dedicated mid-May.

"There's a feeling of extended family here at Dexter, because of the Army affiliation at the Pentagon," said Cy Dietrich, the school's visual and performing arts teacher and the director of the K Club, the service-oriented kindness club that helped fund the sculpture.

The idea for using rubble from the Pentagon crash site came to Dietrich in September, while returning from Washington, D.C., where he delivered 1,000 bags of food from the K Club to

ROAD RAGE

Bridgett Siter

commentary

I'm not comfortable with the term "road rage." Like all buzzwords, it's become a catch-all, a diagnosis for bad behavior.

It's not quite realistic to call OJ's run-in with another motorist road rage, anymore than we can call Nicole Simpson the victim of "sidewalk rage." Crime is crime, no matter where it takes place or what triggers it.

There are angry drivers on the road just waiting for an excuse to explode, but they're the same ones who overreact in any situation, real or imagined, where they feel they've been slighted.

I wouldn't want to cut in front of OJ in the supermarket line.

Road rage, by definition, is when a driver's reaction becomes more of a problem than that which triggered it. It's crime on wheels.

If a driver cuts you off on the highway, you have a problem. If you act quickly, brake, and move carefully into another lane, you have resolved the problem.

But if you respond with anger, you have a bigger problem, and if you assault the driver or break the law of the road — i.e. chase, tailgate, speed and cut — you are a criminal. Bottom line.

Now I'm no Pollyanna. I've had my share of bad driving experiences, and one that instantly comes to mind is the time a driver cut me off in bumper-to-bumper traffic outside an airport in Jacksonville, Fla., right after the kids and I said good-bye to Tom.

Losing Daddy for a few weeks was killing Brittney. She sat directly behind me wailing at the top of her overly developed 3-year-old lungs. The boys sat directly behind her, exacerbating the situation, of course, by screaming at her to "BEEE QUIEEET!"

The temperature outside the van was 105. Inside it was climbing.

And there I was, seven months pregnant, manuevering a minivan in gridlock, with a tenuous hold on my sanity, when a cute little sports car swerved in front of me and forced me into the median. The driver looked back and grinned.

There was a moment of complete silence in the back of the van, while, I assume, the kids were all building up a full head of steam. Then they all let loose a gawdawful scream.

I saw red. I knew rage.

But I also knew better than to react the way I really wanted to. So I counted to 10 — "One, #^#, two, #&~, three, #~%, four, ..." You get the idea.

Then I eased back into traffic and did the mature, responsible thing. I took the kids to Dairy Queen and buried my anger in a banana split.

The world would be a better place if we all buried our anger in ice cream. We'd all be fat and happy and the roads would be a much safer place.

You think I jest, but experts agree. You see, road rage peaks between the hours of 5 and 6 p.m. That's also when most people experience a significant drop in blood sugar levels — five to six hours after lunch — which is directly linked to irritability and stress.

Low blood sugar, coupled with the stress inherent to rush hour traffic, can trigger our overzealous reactions to minor traffic problems. So take a snack along for the road.

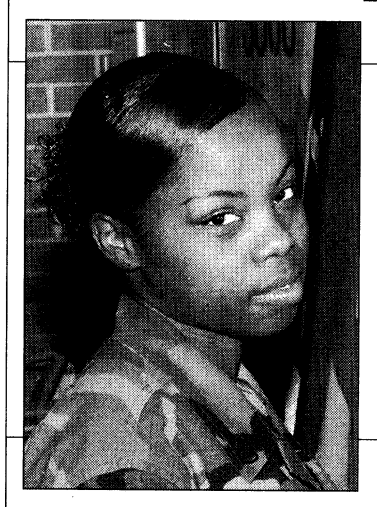
And while you're at it, turn off the radio.

According to Beat Stress Together, by Wayne Sotile, PhD., the noise of the radio simply adds to stress. But it's soothing, you say? By 5 p.m., you're not at top speed, figuratively speaking, so you don't need soothing music to lull you into a stupor during danger hour.

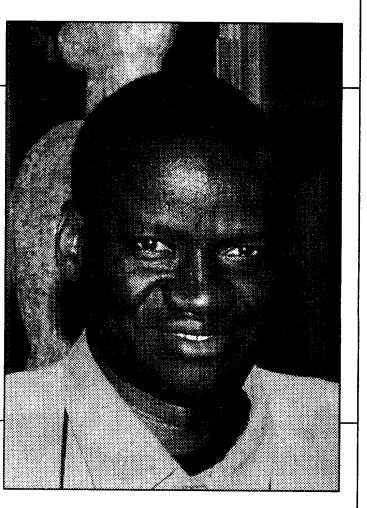
So do whatever it takes to avoid becoming the victim or the instigator of a dangerous situation. In the immortal words of the late-great James Dean, "the life you save may be mine."

Thanks.

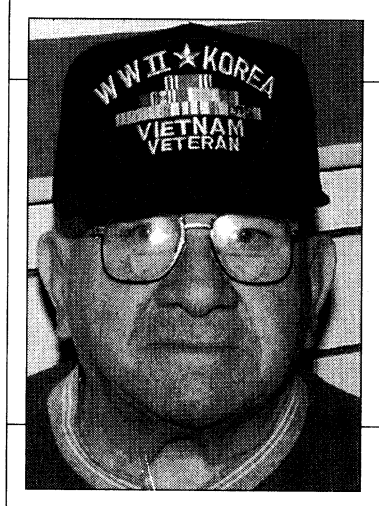
VARIOUS VOICES



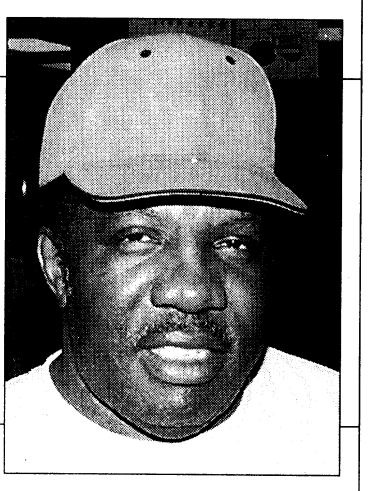
When driving, how do you diffuse a potentially dangerous situation?



Vickie Lawrence, U.S. Army Dental Activity — "I pull off the road and let the other drivers go past. Aggressive drivers and tailgaters can have the whole highway as long as I am safe."



Brenda Gamillion, U.S. Army Dental Activity — "I apologize even if I am right. I give them their way and avoid a scene."



Pfc. Ashley Brown, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment — "I am courteous and think about how other people feel. I do whatever I can to avoid an accident."

Ndiaga Niang, AAFES contractor — "I avoid danger by respecting other drivers, following traffic laws and keeping my vehicle well maintained."

Retired Master Sgt. Arthur Croce, Columbus — "I see mistakes every day, and it's because people don't watch out for other drivers. Drive defensively, use turn signals and lights. Do your part to avoid

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Eddie Jackson, Columbus — "I educate myself and get experience, because a lot of drivers may have experience, but they don't use it."

I.D. card policy at commissary

My wife and I went to the commissary to purchase groceries Feb. 2 and Feb. 11. Upon entering the commissary, there wasn't anyone to check ID for authorization to enter.

Again today there wasn't anyone to check ID.

On one visit to the commissary, there were several women standing and talking and the children were playing in the aisles, preventing the customers from purchasing the items needed.

Today there wasn't anyone at the entrance to check IDs.

I strongly recommend that a person be at the entrance to check IDs to prevent further experiences described.

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Chester A. Bush
Fort Mitchell, Ala.

Commissary's response:

The Commissary Operating Board, comprised of general officers from all the service branches, decided some time back to stop checking ID cards at the entrance.

ID cards are now checked at the register before any purchase can be made.

This change in policy was made to allow authorized patrons to bring visitors into the commissary and still protect the shopping privileges of our patrons. The change in procedures has allowed single soldiers to bring in parents, who pay the taxes that provide this benefit, and has allowed those with disabilities to bring in a relative for assistance. The policy has also allowed our many thousands of patrons who have visitors to bring them along when they do their grocery shopping.

We are required to "spot check" ID cards at the entrance several times each month to make sure visitors are accompanied by authorized patrons. This ID policy has been in effect for almost two years. There has not been a noticeable difference in sales, theft, overcrowding of aisles or any other problems.

I strongly disagree that checking ID cards at the door will stop customers from stopping to talk to friends that they happen to meet at the commissary.

Nothing gives me more pleasure than to see our customers, along with their families, enjoying the shopping experience here at the place the staff works so hard to make the best possible.

We get many favorable remarks from patrons and many bring guests when shopping.

I invite all customers to stop by anytime to see me. I will do all I can to make a shopping experience a good one.

— Gary D. Hensley
Fort Benning Commissary

Soldiers helping soldiers

Today we begin the Army's annual fundraising for the Army Emergency Relief. This campaign will be conducted through May 15.

For 60 years, your AER has assisted more than 3 million soldiers and their families in time of financial emergency. They have been available for us, whenever we were stationed around the world, whenever we needed assistance. Last year, our contributions enabled AER to assist more than 57,000 of our fellow soldiers with almost $39 million in emergency assistance.

On Sept. 11, our Army Emergency Relief was one of the first relief organizations to begin providing assistance to the families of our comrades killed at the Pentagon. AER has continued this mission daily since then.

As we are committed to winning the war against terrorism, so also are we committed to taking care of soldiers in their time of need. Therefore, I'm asking you to support the one organization whose only mission is to assist you and your family when you have a financial crisis. Please read the AER information brochure you received and join me in contributing to help soldiers.

As it has always been said, and will remain, soldiering is an affair of the heart.

Gen. Eric K. Shinseki
Army Chief of Staff

CORRECTION

In last week's Bayonet, Ross Good, Directorate of Combat Development, was misquoted in a pulled quote about Army transformation.

His quote should have read:

"Gone are the days of movement to contact. Soldiers will know where their team members are, where the enemy is and what is around them."

The Bayonet apologizes for the error and regrets any inconveniences it caused.

Prayer breakfast nourishes body, soul

POW's faith helped him survive horrors

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Food for the body and food for the soul. That's what retired Col. Ben Purcell, guest speaker at the annual Prayer Breakfast Feb. 21, wanted his audience to take away from their meeting.

"Spiritual food is necessary to sustain life," Purcell said.

And he would know. Purcell said it was his faith that sustained him while being held as a prisoner of war in Vietnam for more than five years.

"The experience was a struggle for food, water, and life itself," he said.

Purcell was captured as a POW when his helicopter was shot down over North Vietnam in 1968. During the crash, one of his fellow soldiers was burned so badly on his hands and face that his eyes were swollen shut.

"He said, 'Are you a Christian?' and I said 'Yes, I am.' He said, 'Have a prayer with me,'" Purcell told the audience. "Prayer had always been important to me, but at that moment, it held the shattered pieces together."

When the young soldier's captors decided his injuries made him a burden, Purcell pleaded with them for his release. But they denied him.

"All I could do was say another prayer," he said.

While walking away, he heard a shot fired and knew the bullet was for the soldier.

"It was the most dreadful sound," Purcell said. "We never heard from him again, but I know he was ready to meet his maker."

Purcell talked about several occasions during captivity when prayer kept him going. When Purcell couldn't see the path in front of him as he marched with his captors, he said, "Lord, I need a light." Within 30 seconds the man in front of him turned on his flashlight.

"The Lord does answer prayer," said Purcell, who made a practice of always hanging a handmade cross in his cell.

He also recalled his 40th birthday, spent in the company of his captors. When a local cabin owner offered him an egg — a break from his strict diet of rice and water — in honor of his birthday, Purcell took that as a good sign.

"That bit of compassion in the enemy was a message," he said. "God was telling me we were going to make it."

"In prayer, we share something universal," said Chaplain (Maj.) Dan Payne. "In times of war especially, it's a source of comfort for everybody."

It was, in fact, a source of comfort for Purcell's wife, Anne, who stayed in Columbus and cared for their five children.

"I finally realized there was nothing I could do to change the situation," Anne said. "I've been a Christian since I was 10 years old, so I knew I had to give it to God. I told him, 'I love Ben, but I know you love him more.' That lifted a heavy burden."

Upon his return in March 1973, Ben and Anne flew to Dallas to tell the family of the burned soldier about the last 24 hours of their son's life.

"There was so much uncertainty for families of POWs," Anne said. "I really admired Ben for doing that. If he hadn't returned, I pray that someone would have done the same for me."

Program: Provides stability for troops another tour after completing a dependent-restricted tour. Families residing on post will be able to remain in housing.

Homebase is the option used most, said Lt. Col. Noble Lugo, a finance action officer with the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Personnel.

Soldiers who receive a homebase assignment must sign a statement indicating that they understand the intent of the program and know that they are expected not to use their dependent PCS entitlements unless the assignment is cancelled, according to AR-614-200 Enlisted Assignments and Utilization Management.

The second part of HAAP is advance assignment. Along with their assignment notification to a dependent restricted tour, soldiers will also receive the location of their follow-on assignment before leaving the country, Emerson said.

"In the past, soldiers had little input into their follow-on assignments and those that tried relied on DA Form 4187s to inform PERSCOM of assignment preferences," Emerson said. "Now through the Assignment Satisfaction Key, ASK, soldiers have the opportunity to influence their next duty assignment."

ASK is an Internet tool that allows soldiers the capability to post assignment preference information directly onto the Total Army Personnel Database. Soldiers will need to use their Army Knowledge Online account password to gain access to the information. Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki has directed that all soldiers get an AKO account.

In many cases families who are moved to the follow-on location are not granted on-post housing, Lugo said. It's an installation decision, he added.

The decision to extend HAAP to eligible specialists and corporals came after senior leadership in Korea requested that all soldiers be included in HAAP, Emerson said. However, it would be difficult to manage and would hinder readiness flexibility if expanded to the entire enlisted force, Emerson said.

"Our goal is to provide stability by making an assignment commitment to the soldier and family prior to the soldier's departure."

PERSCOM's goal is to match HAAPs with soldiers' assignment preferences, officials said, but added there will be cases where the soldiers' preferences cannot be met because of Army Manning the Force priorities.

The expanding of HAAP to selected specialists and corporals will not apply to soldiers currently in Korea or placed on assignment instructions prior to March 1, officials explained.

Airborne Test Platoon soldier dies

'Swifty' Wilson lauded hero, father, friend

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

A legend has passed.

Retired Capt. Charles Wilson died of a heart attack Saturday after going out for his morning walk.

Better known as "Swifty" by colleagues, Wilson was a member of the original Test Platoon at Fort Benning.

"My dad always told me the members of the Test Platoon were my uncles, even though they were issued by Uncle Sam," said Debbie Martin, Wilson's daughter. "His love for them was just remarkable."

"He loved the Army. He lived for it," said Martin, known to the airborne community as Swifty Junior.

"We're going to miss him," said Lt. Col. Jeff Terhune, 1st Battalion, 507th Parachute Regiment.

"He's a legend," Terhune added. "The Test Platoon members were very important to the history, aura, and mystique of the airborne community."

"He was a fine gentleman, very likeable and congenial," said retired Master Sgt. Louie Davis, fellow Test Platoon member. Davis said it was the efforts of Wilson that kept the original Platoon in touch for more than 60 years.

"He tried to hold us together and keep us informed," Davis said. "He kept our brotherhood refreshed and renewed for all those years."

Viewing hours will be from 1 to 3 p.m. and 6 to 9 p.m. at Wages Funeral Home, Snellville, Ga. Funeral Services will be at 11 a.m. Saturday. Wilson will be buried in College Park, Ga.

Wilson is survived by his wife of 25 years, June. The family requested that all donations be sent to the Airborne Museum in Fort Bragg, N.C.

'Soldiers Forum' gives soldiers a voice

Soldiers are invited to submit stories

Amy News Service

WASHINGTON — Soldiers worldwide are now invited to submit stories, commentaries and other articles to the Army News Service under a new program called "Soldiers Forum."

The best of the articles will be posted on the "ArmyLINK News" Web page at the end of each week and they will also be sent to Army newspaper editors at installations and commands across the globe for use on their commentary pages.

The purpose of the program is to "give soldiers a voice on ArmyLINK," said Col. Stephen Campbell, chief of Command Information at Department of the Army.

The articles should be more than just "complaint columns" Campbell said. He explained that if problems are brought up, suggested solutions should be included in the article.

On the other hand, Campbell said the letters "can't just be peaches and cream either." He explained the forum is not just looking for laudatory comments, but insightful discourse on subjects of interest to the entire Army.

First-person accounts of combat in Afghanistan or duty in the Philippines are examples of articles that would be considered for publication, Campbell said.

But those are the exceptions, rather than the norm, he said. Tthe column is looking for reflections and recommendations regarding everyday Army life.

Observations about Family Team Building programs, the NCO Education System, or Common Task Training are just a few examples of relevant topics.

More controversial topics affecting soldiers and their families might also be discussed, such as: drug abuse, domestic violence, street gangs, suicide prevention, retention, single-parent soldiering,

Post wins DA-level award for management

Army praises environmental efforts

Christina Hayashi
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning has won the Department of the Army award for the best installation for environmental management.

This is the first time the post has won the award of the Department of the Army level, and will now go on to the Department of Defense level.

Installations nominate themselves by submitting what it has done over the past year and summarizing its best asset.

"To be considered for the award, you have to have a program. You have to demonstrate you're meeting requirements expressed in various laws and regulations and have gone beyond that in some degree," said Dr. Christopher E. Hamilton, cultural resources manager and coordinator of Native American Affairs at Fort Benning. "Making sure our stewardship of cultural resources is some of the best managed in the system of the service."

"A major factor that helped to set Fort Benning aside from other posts is its ability to work closely with 11 different Indian tribes to keep Fort Benning as historical as possible," Hamilton said.

Fort Benning also has the unique experience of having to work with not only Georgia officials, but Alabama and Florida environmental officials as well.

Through the years, Fort Benning has not changed much, historically. However, times have changed and upgrades have been needed. Before making any major changes, it is up to the archeologist's to excavate the site and record what they find.

"Soon we will have an entombment facility formally open and all of the materials, human remains, associated artifacts that might go along with them will be entombed at a selected location," Hamilton said.

> "You have to demonstrate you're meeting requirements ... and have gone beyond that in some degree."

The preservation has not gone unnoticed. Recent films Black Hawk Down and We Were Soldiers have featured sections of the post.

DFEL: To transfer base operations to private industry

"There is no good time, but there is a bad time," said Col. Keith Stelzer, director of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"With all that is going on now — the war on terror, and Fort Benning's role in force projection: sending troops to Afghanistan, the Philippines and 3rd Brigade's rotation in Kuwait; summer surge and installation access control — this is a very busy place. The commanding general sent a letter to (Training and Doctrine Command) stating that the mission would be seriously impacted if the transition occurred before January 2003."

The timeline also takes into account civilian pay periods — so the actual date the contractor takes over base operations will be Jan. 26, Stelzer said.

Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, said the "trigger point" of January 2003 considered mission requirements and the best interests of the civilian work force.

The contractor's bid requires 492 positions, and current government workers will not fill all of those positions, Stelzer said referring to the contractor filling some of the jobs with current IT Corp. employees.

Post officials anticipate sending reduction in force letters this fall, and it is the responsibility of the civilian work force to make sure their records are up-to-date, Stelzer said.

"The time to get Resumix right is now," he said. "There will be only one RIF, and it will deal with all the agencies under the A-76 studies including the Directorate of Information Management and Training Support Center."

There will not be another mock RIF, said Mary Loudermilk, Directorate of Civilian Personnel. Mock RIF letters, which identify employees most at risk of losing their jobs, were sent November 2000.

She said the Priority Placement Program is not available until the RIF begins.

Stelzer said the installation will ask for Voluntary Early Retirement Authority and may ask for the Voluntary Separation Incentive Program, but right now funding for these personnel initiatives is not available.

"We are going to contract. We now know when, and we will do everything possible for our civilian workforce," Torres said.

Rumsfeld says Strategic Influence Office 'closed down'

Rumors about disinformation make news

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Office of Strategic Influence will be closed, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said Tuesday.

"I met with Undersecretary (of Defense for Policy) Doug Feith this morning, and he indicated to me he's decided to close down the Office of Strategic Influence," Rumsfeld told Pentagon reporters.

The OSI, under Feith's purview, was created last November to aid U.S. efforts to influence countries overseas to help or at least support the war against global terrorism.

The office has been under criticism since a New York Times report that the office would plant false press releases in foreign media outlets to manipulate public opinion.

The media have asserted that such false stories — or disinformation — could eventually find their way into American news reports.

Such a scenario, Rumsfeld has said in recent days, would be entirely contrary to DoD's policy on the dissemination of information to the public.

The secretary remarked on the "many stories about this office, and commentary, some portion of which has contained inaccurate speculation and assertions, that the office could become involved in activities that the department, in fact, has not done, is not doing and would not condone."

> "(OSI) clearly was so damaged that it's pretty clear to me that it could not function effectively. So, it's being closed down."
> Donald H. Rumsfeld
> Secretary of Defense

OSI, Rumsfeld remarked, "clearly was so damaged that it's pretty clear to me that it could not function effectively.

"So, it's being closed down," he said.

DoD has performed information operations missions targeted to Afghans, Rumsfeld said, adding, "We will continue to do that in the future."

The department defines information operations as "actions taken to affect adversary information and information systems while defending one's own information and information systems."

"We've told people where they can get humanitarian assistance, we told people about the difference between cluster bomb packages and food packages," the secretary said.

Asked by a reporter if the practice of disinformation is a DoD activity, Rumsfeld said: "It most clearly is not."

Pedestrian-vehicle accidents on the rise

Six cases already reported in February

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Traffic violations are on the rise on Fort Benning, and a decrease in common vehicle courtesy has caused the MPs to take action.

There has been a 500 percent increase in vehicle-pedestrian accidents, jumping from one case reported last year to six in February alone.

"The cause of the jump in the accidents may be related to the word about Operation Slow Down is not getting out fast enough to new soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class Ken Bennett, Traffic NCOIC.

Operation Slow Down is the 15 mph speed limit during PT hours — 6 a.m. to 7:30 a.m. — or 10 mph when meeting or passing a troop formation.

Also, some people have not been following the rules stated in the running and jogging safety alert, Bennett said.

Most of the accidents are occurring during PT hours.

"The use of road guards is only a request for right of way and not a given," Bennett said.

"There was a person whom was injured because he jumped out in front of a car to stop traffic while he was road guard."

Runners and joggers must use reflective waist belts or reflective vests at all times as stated in the safety alert.

Just using a reflective arm or ankle band isn't enough for some drivers to see especially during dark PT hours, Bennett said.

There was also a 50 percent increase in DUIs from last year in the "Loaded 45" campaign (Thanksgiving through Jan. 6). Going from just 60 DUIs last year to 91 this year, Bennett said.

About 60 percent of the DUIs came civilians and 40 percent came from soldiers, which is around the same breakdown as last year.

"I hate seeing a soldier come into the MP station with 19 years in the Army, just one year left till retirement and flush it all down the toilet with a DUI," Bennett said.

The result of a suspended license, depending on the infractions, is the driver could be prohibited from driving on post for one to five years.

"Not only have other numbers gone up since I've been here, the lack of common vehicle courtesy, cutting people off for instance, has increased," Bennett said. "This kind of driving causes accidents or the potential for one."

"The post has had its fair share of speeders in (January and February), too," said Staff Sgt. Patrick Coiner, senior squad leader for the Community Oriented Policing Services platoon.

"Speeding to save a couple minutes is just not worth it," Coiner said. "The fine and the raise in the insurance can really add up."

To combat the problem, the MPs are going to start a crackdown on speeding.

Verbal warnings for driving infractions will be limited, and more tickets will be given out.

"People have problems obeying the rules of the road, and we need to change what's happening," Bennett said.

"I'm looking for support from all the officers and NCOs of Fort Benning to talk to their soldiers and stop the disregard for the rules of the road," Bennett said. "Also they need to do their part to assist in reducing drunk driving and increase common vehicle courtesy."

Pentagon: Limestone used to construct memorials relief workers.

At that time, plans were already in place for ironworks sculptor Marvin Gardner, of Cataula, Ga., to create a 5-foot eagle to be placed in a flower garden beside the school. "Herbie the Eagle" is Dexter's mascot.

"From the start, we wanted a touchable, kid-friendly piece of sculpture," Dietrich said.

"The idea for limestone at the base came later, but it's appropriate because of the timing, of course, and our military connection to the heroes at the Pentagon."

The finished artwork will include a poem written by Dietrich and a tribute to those who died and relief workers at the site of the Sept. 11 terrorist attack.

"It will be a sort of memory garden," said Dietrich, whose poem, The Eagle's Nest, begins:

"What solace lurks within this place?
What quiet peace enchants the face?
What random kindness finds embrace?
It's more than just a barren space."

Dietrich traveled to the Pentagon Monday and returned Tuesday with two slabs of stone, each approximately 3 by 2 and a half feet and 6 inches thick.

The second slab will be used by Officers' Candidate School students.

It will be used in a monument erected in front of the OCS barracks, said Maj. Richard Crowther, the OCS Battalion's executive officer.

Plans have not been finalized for the design.

MH-47 helicopter crashes in Philippines, 10 dead

Death toll largest since declaration of war

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Eight soldiers and two airmen are dead following the crash of an MH-47 Chinook helicopter Feb. 22 during a joint training exercise in the Philippines.

The chopper crashed into the sea en route to Mactan Air Base after inserting Special Forces soldiers onto Basilan Island.

The accident occurred about 150 miles north-northeast of the city of Zamboanga on the island of Mindanao in the southern Philippines.

There was no sign of hostile fire, according to military officials.

The service members on the helicopter were supporting the U.S. effort to train and advise Philippine forces in their fight against global terrorism, said U.S. Pacific Command officials in Hawaii. There were no Philippine troops on board.

The following soldiers are assigned to the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment from Fort Campbell, Ky., and are presumed to have been aboard the helicopter:

Maj. Curtis D. Feistner
Capt. Bartt D. Owens
Chief Warrant Officer 2 Jody L. Egnor
Staff Sgt. James P. Dorrity
Staff Sgt. Kerry W. Frith
Staff Sgt. Bruce A. Rushforth Jr.
Sgt. Jeremy D. Foshee
Spc. Thomas F. Allison

The two missing airmen are assigned to the 353rd Special Operations Group, Kadena Air Base, Japan: Master Sgt. William L. McDaniel II and Staff Sgt. Juan M. Ridout.

Search and rescue efforts continue with the U.S. working closely with the Philippine navy and coast guard units, officials said.

The cause of the accident is under investigation.

The helicopter crashed at 2:30 a.m. Friday, local time, approximately 30 minutes after take off.

Another Chinook helicopter that was flying with the downed chopper immediately searched the area for survivors.

Other U.S. aircraft and Philippine forces have been assisting in the search, officials said.

This was the military's single largest loss of life since President George Bush declared war on terrorism.

Loose lips sink ships

Army leadership has recently expressed their concern about the apparent inattention to basic operational security procedures.

OPSEC is the responsibility of every soldier, civilian and contractor. Everyone should practice continuous OPSEC.

Information about unit strengths, operational capabilities and deployment intentions, in the wrong hands, can severely undermine unit safety and mission accomplishment.

For more information, call the PAO at 545-2237.

Equality helps Army readiness

Program enforces fair treatment

Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Buffett
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va.— Is it the same old tune?

Are they the "bad guys?"

Those are the sorts of questions the Equal Opportunity Sergeant Major for the U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command fielded on a recent Thursday afternoon at historic Fort Monroe, Va.

"It's probably no big surprise to anyone that our program has been hindered a bit by generalities and misconceptions," said Sgt. Maj. Burley W. Gardner. "But, on the other side of that, I can also say with certainty that EO has made enormous strides over the past 20 years."

Army readiness is a term Gardner used often, not only in describing the importance of EO, but in explaining why he felt it's high time EO be given some press.

"Where we're at right now — we're in this high OPTEMPO state — soldier readiness has become crucial to combat readiness," Gardner said. "Part of that readiness is maintaining an understanding of the equal opportunity program and why it's as important to the Army as it ever was."

Typically catalogued in most soldier's minds as "those folks who throw together ethnic observances like Hispanic Heritage Month," the instigators of many a mandatory training session, and the reason some important leaders of the past are no longer in uniform — EO is about maximizing human potential and ensuring fair treatment of all persons based solely on merit, fitness and capability in support of readiness, Gardner said. Ethnic observances, training, complaint procedures, surveys and assessments, etc, help them to "stay on course."

"Fair and equitable treatment — whether it's the motor pool or the front line — is the constant of our program. Commanders conduct ethnic and special observances to enhance cross-cultural awareness among all soldiers, civilian employees and their families. While these observances recognize the achievements and contributions of specific groups and women, the end goal is to promote understanding, teamwork, harmony, pride and esprit among all groups, not just within the specific group being recognized," Gardner said.

During the last 20 years the Army has made much progress in terms of equitable treatment in the ranks and human relations overall, Gardner said. This progress is the result of better education, training, enforcement and leadership.

"As our leaders state time and again, people are in fact the cornerstone of readiness," the sergeant major said. "We've learned that our Army is made of individuals of many diverse racial, ethnic and gender backgrounds and that we must take the appropriate steps (to understand that diversity) to ensure continued success of the Army. We have truly gone where no other nation has gone before – we are making it work."

Even more success could be achieved, Gardner noted, if commanders and leaders across the board made it a habit to talk regularly with their local equal opportunity advisers and their unit EO representatives.

"EOAs and EORs serve as eyes and ears of their respective commanders and see things at the ground level," he said.

"They pretty much know when a person in the unit is going through hard times. In many cases, they know what their fellow soldiers are saying and if there are any perceptions or situations in the unit which could become a big problem.

"Leaders must also model dignity and respect and enforce the Army standards," Gardner said. "That's why we focus most of our attention on proactive, positive programs that help improve cohesion and organizational effectiveness."

Gardner also encourages effective counseling and mentoring of enlisted soldiers and officers. The Army now and in the future needs leaders who are capable of leading soldiers and civilians of varying racial and ethnic backgrounds or gender. Gardner also said that leaders must do more to make sure counseling, especially developmental counseling, takes place at all levels.

Even the Equal Opportunity field itself could benefit from more diversity, according to the sergeant major. Percentage-wise, there are far more minority and female EO advisors than male Caucasian advisors — quite possibly leading to some mistaken perceptions that EO is "a minority and female program."

"Equal opportunity is an operational necessity for the Army – we can't get the job done any other way," Gardner said, noting that the Army is working to fix the imbalance.

"Actually, every one of us in uniform is an equal opportunity representative in some way, shape or form," Gardner said.

"That may seem cliché, but it's actually an impressive responsibility if you really think about it. We as an Army have made great strides in equal opportunity and share part of the responsibility for improving readiness and making our Army the envy of nations.

The same old tune? … Perhaps.

But the sergeant major said equal treatment in the workplace is a message that bears repeating time and again.

"We are constantly bringing in new soldiers and civilians — many with a lot of baggage who have had little interaction with someone who looks different than they do and whose knowledge of others may be limited to what they've seen in the movies, television, and even at home. They have to be trained and led in an appropriate manner."

Gardner also said he's extremely proud of the young women and men who decide to become a part of the Army family and willingly hazard their lives for freedom and liberty. These individuals will help ensure America remains a great and free nation.

"We're getting a lot more of America's spotlight these days. I can't think of a single soldier who wouldn't want mom and dad back home to view us as a professional organization full of opportunity in which everyone gets an equal chance and is treated with dignity and respect."

As for the question — "Are you the bad guys?" — the sergeant major acknowledged that one of their many responsibilities is to help educate folks on some of the consequences for not adhering to Army policy as it relates to discrimination and sexual harassment.

The "bad guys," he said, are the individuals who illegally discriminate against others, sexually harass others and refuse to uphold and live the Army values.

"No, we are not the bad guys. We are the ones who believe in treating everyone with dignity and respect. We are the ones who hold the Army values in high esteem. We are the ones who fully support readiness. We are the good guys."

> "Fair and equitable treatment – whether it's the motor pool or the front line – is the constant of our program."

Pentagon closes victims' fund

Fund receives $4.4. million for victims

Bill Roberts
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon Victims' Fund, administered by Army Emergency Relief, has received $4.4 million and is no longer accepting donations.

"We set up the fund with two missions: to meet the emergency financial needs of the families of those who died in the attack and to set up a scholarship program for the 35 children of the victims," said Gregory W. Mason, deputy director for finance and treasurer, Army Emergency Relief.

"We have received pledges and donations totaling $4.4 million, which is adequate funding to meet both of these missions and we had to be honest with the donors to be sure their money went to meet the needs of the families," Mason said.

One of the larger donations to the Pentagon Victims' Fund came from Lockheed Martin Corp. Secretary of the Army Thomas E. White received a $500,000 check from Dr. Vance Coffman, CEO of Lockheed Martin in late January. The money was donated by Lockheed Martin employees from around the world and by the corporation.

Army chaplains around the world had also been collecting donations for the victims and donated $177,000 to the fund in November. The donations came from chapels around the Army with $100,000 specifically coming from chapels in U.S. Army Europe.

"The amount of the donations isn't the biggest factor; the smaller ones from people around the country are just as important as the large corporations," Mason said. "Some of the letters we received with the donations were amazing. One little girl sent us her allowances that she had been saving and money she made from a lemonade stand," Mason said.

"We have never seen this level of generosity before in any fund drive. The outpouring of gifts and support has been absolutely overwhelming," Mason said.

Other donations came from Army Staff Sgt. Christopher Braman, who risked his life to help others Sept. 11. His story has been told on Oprah Winfrey's television show and he was selected to be an Olympic Torch Bearer at a special ceremony at the Pentagon Dec. 21. He now does speaking engagements and donates any money received for them to the Combined Federal Campaign.

Money received for his speeches prior to Feb. 1 was given to the Pentagon Victims' Fund.

Braman's actions on that day cost him a great deal. He has, among other things, chemically induced asthma from the toxins he inhaled making numerous trips back into the burning Pentagon to save his friends and co-workers.

"Even though I got sick, I have no regrets, none whatsoever," Braman said. "My parents taught me what is right and wrong and the things I stand for. I did what I knew was right."

The Army is currently allowing Braman to speak at various events.

"I have to stand up for what I believe in. I believe it is important to help people wherever and whenever I can," Braman said.

"We do a lot of training with them," said 1st Sgt. Joseph Vitale, 988th MP Co. "We're used to doing riot control and stuff like that, but the prisoner transport training is relatively new to me.

"The MPs and Customs have a good working relationship," Vitale added. "It was a last minute idea to do this training, and they came out within an hour of getting the call."

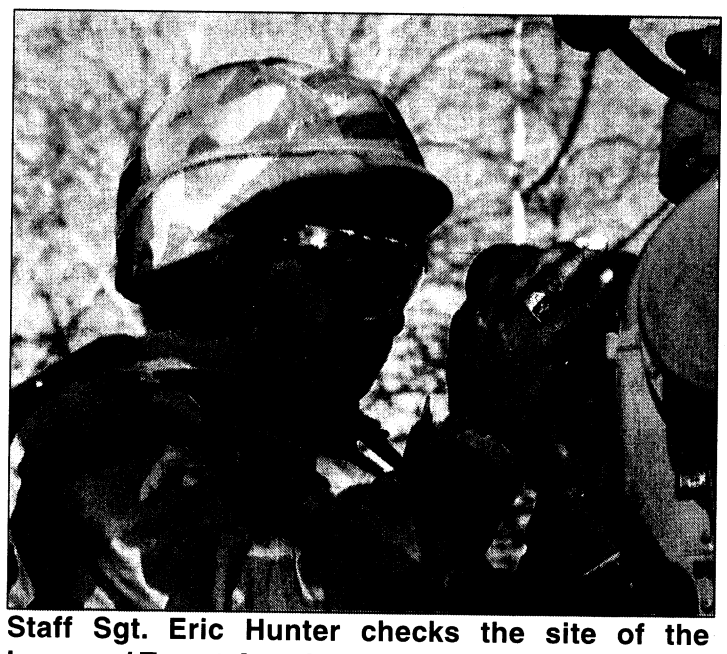
Anti-Armor Leaders Course fires ITAS



Consolidation give soldiers new training

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Infantrymen are gaining new opportunities from the Army's transformation and the 11 series consolidation through a pilot course.

The Anti-Armor Leaders Course is training soldiers to be more knowledgeable and proficient with the M-2, Mark-19, Improved Target Acquisition System and the tubed-lunched, optically-tracked command-linked wire-guided missile. It allows the soldiers to have more of a variety in their choice of permanent change of station.

There used to be less than a handful of posts at which Staff Sgt. Michael Emmer, a course student, could be stationed because of his military occupational speciality, but now the course has given him the ability to PCS to almost any post, he said.

Staff Sgt. Eric Hunter checks the site of the Improved Target Acquisition system.

Spc. Jason Crubaugh keep the ITAS on target downrange to hit the target.

"It's given us the basic tools to aid in the transformation," Emmer said. "It has shown us the mechanics of the equipment and has given me more flexibility to be able to integrate into a new unit."

The transition and consolidation of the MOS helps soldiers to transition from a heavy unit to a light unit, and it gives them the necessary training to sustain their proficiency in multiple weapon systems available to the Infantryman, said Sgt. 1st Class Styles Underwood, course instructor.

The course gives the Army more power because there are more soldiers capable of using the weaponry systems, said Staff Sgt. Manuel Rodriguez, course instructor.

"The training gets the soldiers familiar with the equipment of an anti-armor specialist," he said.

For instance, training with the target acquisition system on the ITAS teaches soldiers to focus in on a target, day or night, and to put the cross bars where they need to be too destroy the enemy, Rodriguez said.

"Even if I'm not stationed with an anti-armor unit, this training will give me a perspective of what the tools to my left and right are capable of doing on the battle field," Emmer said.

The pilot course is really designed for both the student and the instructor at this point in the developmental process, Rodriguez said.

"We made a few improvements on the time we spend on the ITAS," Rodriguez said.

Emmer said the course is going really well and the communication between the instructors makes their after action reviews effective.

718th Engineer Company gets ready for drill

Soldiers prepare for reservists' drill, learn new methods

Pfc. Kyle Neller
USAIC Public Affairs

Approximately eight active-Reserve soldiers from the 718th Engineer Company on Harmony Church made final plans and performed maintenance at the company motor pool in preparation for their company's drill Saturday and Sunday.

During drill weekend, the reservists from the company will perform various training, such as road construction and defensive position construction for a number of tactical vehicles.

"What ever needs to be done, we help out," said Staff Sgt. Iran Cruz, assistant platoon sergeant.

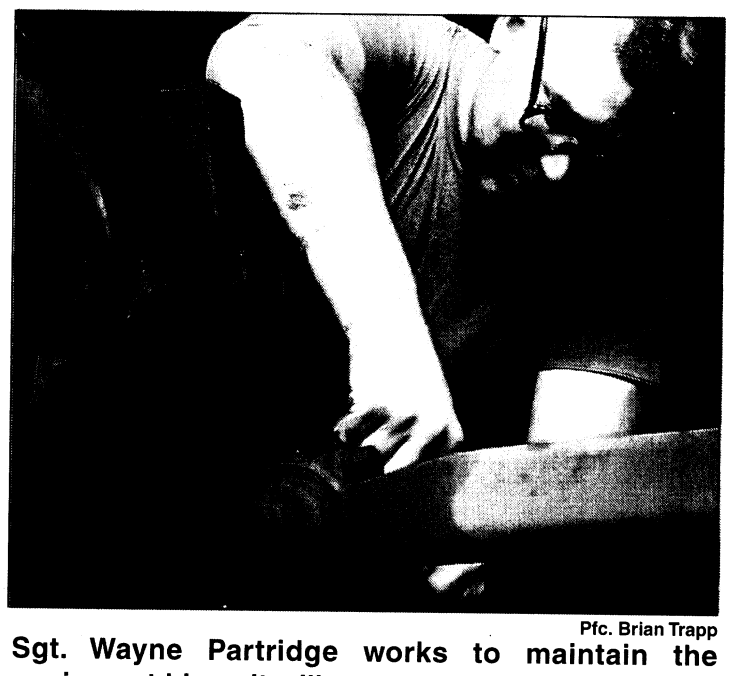
Not only is the training good for the engineers, it is a conduit for projects like new Fort Benning parking lots, such as the one at Harmony Church's Hurley Hill, the site of the Rangers In Action Demonstration.

"We are lucky to have a lot of state-of-the-art equipment and outstanding soldiers," Cruz said. "They are well-trained and always excited about drill. They bring with them a unique set of knowledge, skills and abilities from their civilian positions and share it with their fellow soldiers. I always learn something new."

The training is mutually beneficial for drill soldiers, Cruz and the other active Reserve soldiers.

"We coordinate and make it easier for them," Cruz said. "Without us, they would walk into a situation not conducive to accomplishing the mission to standard."

Sgt. Wayne Partridge, construction equipment repair, said he enjoys working at the unit, too.



"There are more people to work with than at my last duty station," Partridge said. "They help lighten the load and keep operation tempo held in check."

Having many mechanics on the ground to accomplish fire missions helps the entire company.

"Construction equipment has a tendency to break down out in the field, and you need personnel to respond quickly," Partridge said. "Here, we're always on the ball."

The company's tactically and technically efficient soldiers are just one reason he enjoys the active-Reserve unit lifestyle, he said.

"It's one thing to drill at a great post like Fort Benning," he said. "It's another to have a full-time well-paying job here you enjoy."

Ranger to receive military intelligence award

Soldier performs well in Afghanistan

An imagery analyst with the 75th Ranger Regiment will be awarded the Command Sgt. Maj. Doug Russell Award for the most outstanding Military Intelligence junior enlisted soldier in the world.

Spc. Ario Sanchez will receive the award at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., March 11 during the command sergeant major and sergeant major conference.

He was nominated for his actions in Afghanistan.

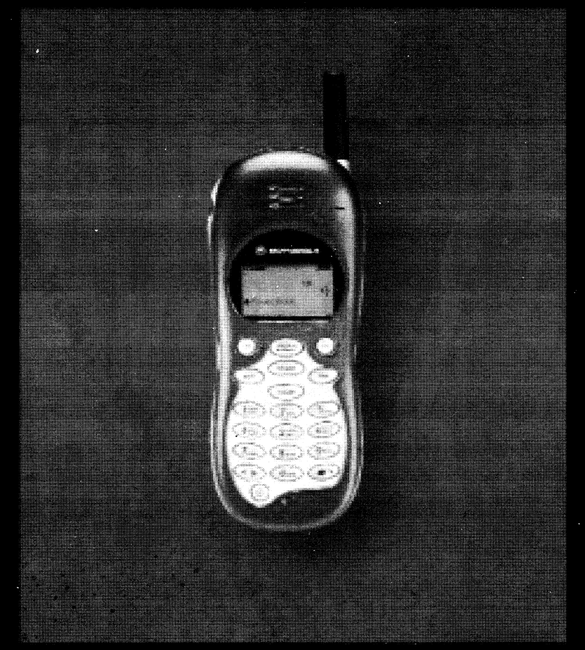
"Specialist Sanchez flew on a Navy P3 surveillance aircraft over Afghanistan on numerous occasions, directing the aircraft to get surveillance on suspected enemy locations and targets," said Staff Sgt. Kenneth Duncan, NCOIC of regiments imagery analysts. "He also acted as the senior imagery analyst on the ground."

Sanchez's fellow rangers find his ethics to be inspiring.

"Ario is a very dedicated worker. He puts in lots of extra hours above and beyond what is expected of him. He tries to do his best at all times," said Spc. Joseph J. Madrid, intelligence analyst with the 75th Ranger Regiment.

"I think the regimental commander described Specialist Sanchez as the busiest junior ranger during the war," said Lt. Col. Robert Whalen, Regimental Intelligence Officer for the 75th Ranger Regiment. "People told me Specialist Sanchez sometimes went to bed, but I don't recall seeing this myself."

The award not only reflects Sanchez, but the ranger regiment as well.



"Ranger Sanchez is a great example of how we view all soldiers assigned to the Ranger Regiment. Every man is a Ranger first and everyone plays an important role in the whole team succeeding," said Col. Joeseph Votel, regimental commander "The fact that a ranger may also happen to be an infantryman or an intelligence analyst is secondary to the fact that he is focused first on supporting the team and accomplishing his mission to the highest standards. This is what makes us successful."

Service center establishes school consistency

Fort Benning staff members join center

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

A new service center in Peachtree City, Ga., means Fort Benning families can expect continuity between stateside schools.

The Department of Defense Education Stateside Service Center opened in January, after officials decided the 12 school systems, located in the eastern and southern states, would work more efficiently and cohesively with a centrally located support center, where curriculum, staffing, training and standards will be governed for all schools.

"Though DoD schools overseas have always worked as a unit, DeDESS schools have always worked independently," said Kathy Einhorn, Fort Benning School's former director of curriculum, who joined the service center staff as an instructional support specialist.

"This will establish a system with common links among the schools stateside, so they will all be held to the same standards and expectations. That's a huge advantage for military parents and kids."

The center will have 48 staff members, including six curriculum coordinators, like Einhorn, who will train teachers to establish the consistency among schools DoDEA officials say military families have requested. The bottom line, Einhorn said, is students can expect the curriculum to be the same when they transfer from one school system to another.

Einhorn

Einhorn began teaching special education at Fort Benning in 1990 before becoming the school system's curriculum specialist. She worked in Utah public schools and overseas before transferring to Fort Benning with her husband, who served in the Army.

Nesmith

"I've loved it here," she said. "Leaving was an extremely difficult decision, probably one of the most difficult of my life. But this position gives me the opportunity to do what I love to do, train teachers and students, on a much broader basis."

Einhorn is replaced by Dr. Jaynie Nesmith, whose position as the former assistant superintendent of Harris County Schools and the Dean of University College at Columbus State University, allowed her to work with Fort Benning Schools on various occasions.

"Everyone I've known who has worked on Fort Benning has loved it. They obviously enjoy what they do, and I wanted to be a part of the team," said Nesmith, who has nearly 30 years of education experience. "My philosophy in life is I want to be a lifelong learner, and I believe this position, and particularly working at Fort Benning, will be a wonderful growing experience."

Fort Benning's lead administrative technologist, Alice Skinner, and technologist Keith Porter, also joined the service center staff. Their replacements will be announced in the next few weeks.

Girl Scouts help build houses

Fort Benning troop volunteers at homes in Columbus

Stephanie Mello
Bayonet correspondent

Although Girl Scouts are known for selling cookies this time of year, the Fort Benning Cadette and Senior Scout Troop 135 raked sand for foundations and cleared debris from lots for future Habitat for Humanity homes.

The girls cleared trash, tires, car parts, strollers and a wide variety of weeds, trees and other debris from three lots in downtown Columbus.

"I thought we were going to paint flower boxes and plant seedlings," said Anet Montgomery, Cadette Scout, "but we ended up doing a lot more work than we planned on."

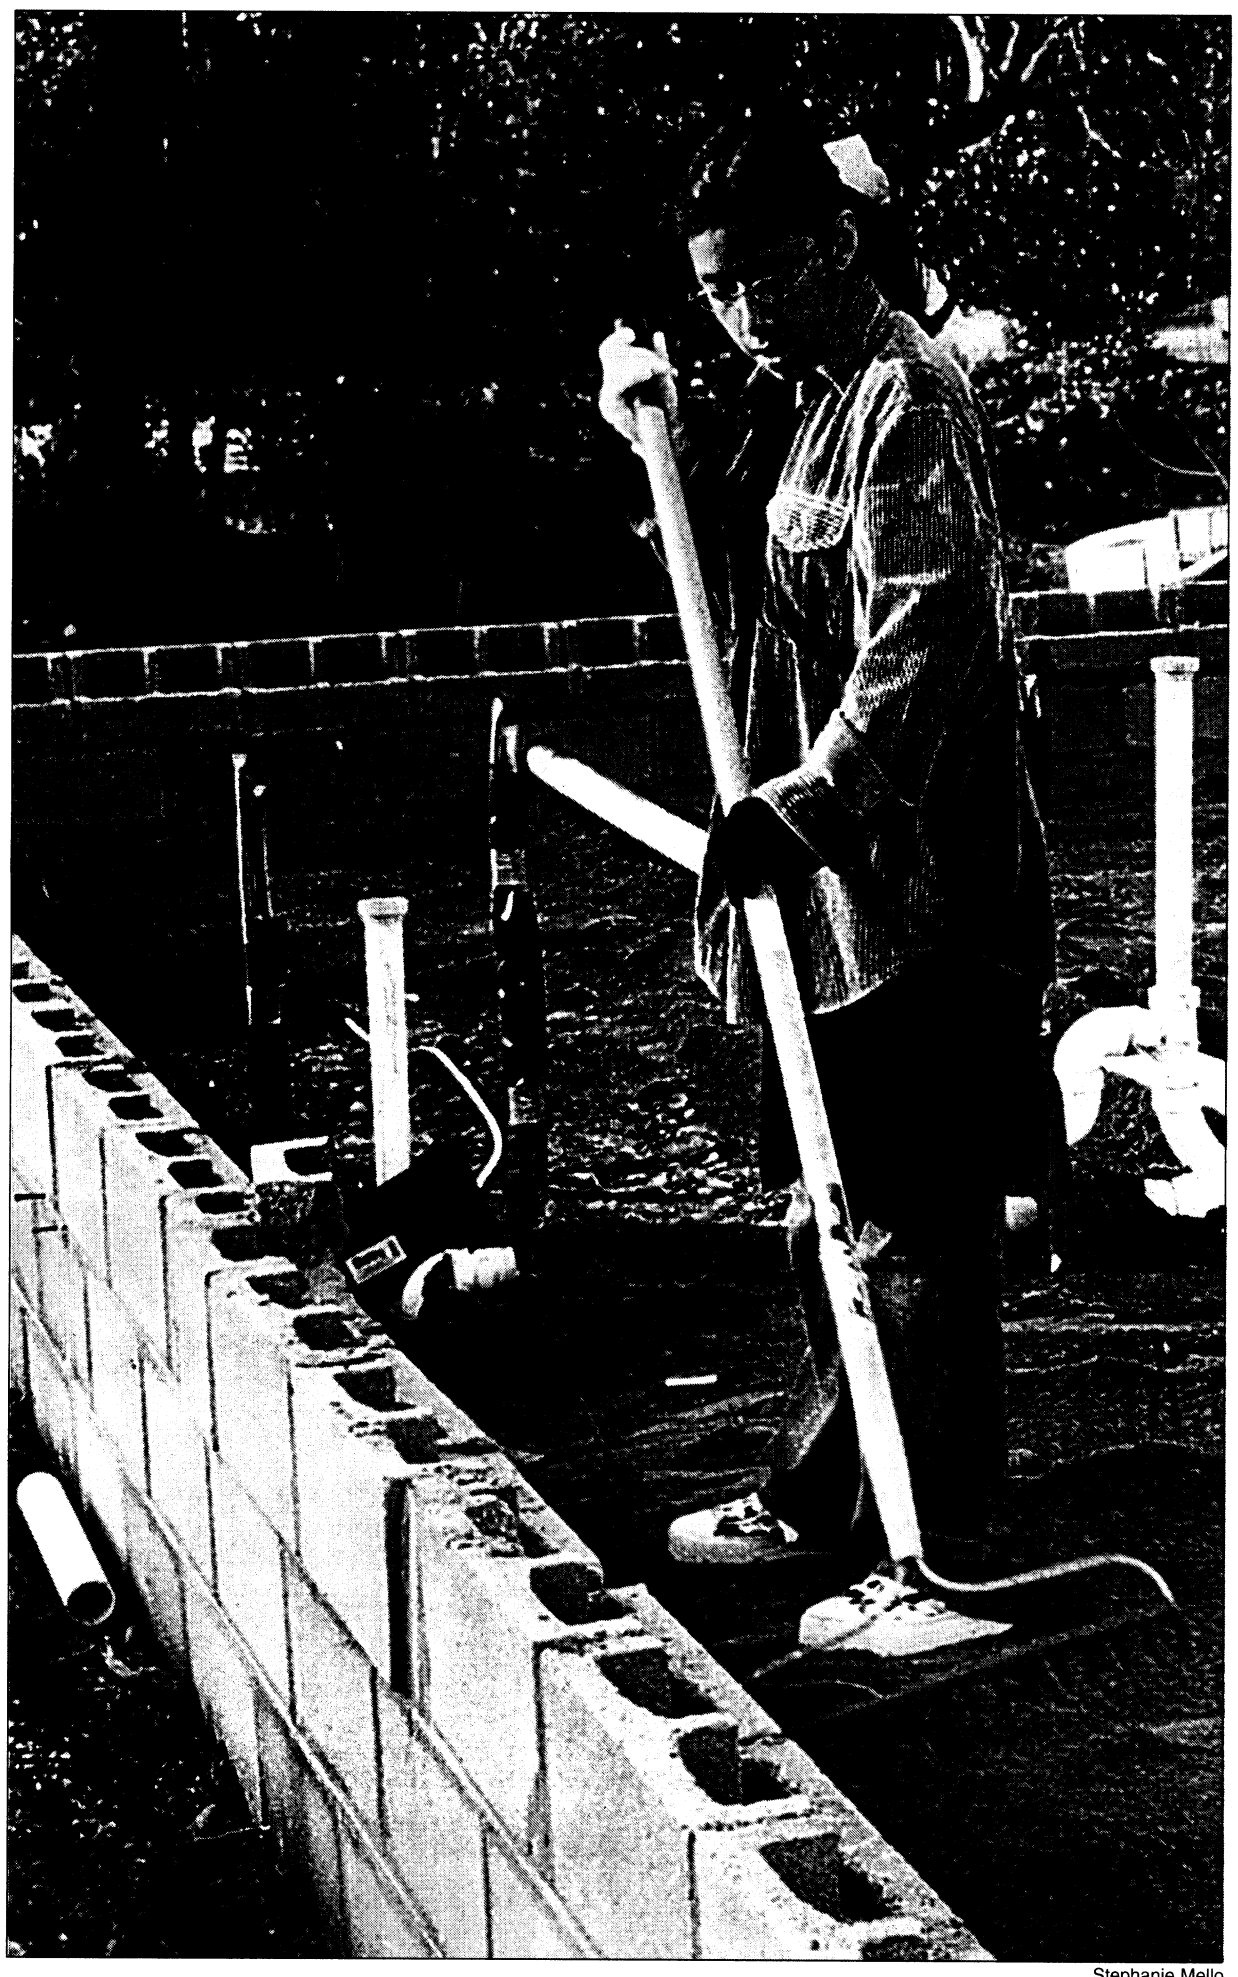
Montgomery, along with the 14 other volunteers found out quickly just how much they really would be doing.

"We must have filled 30 or more bags just with bottles, cans and junk," said Sarah Chappell, Senior Scout, "and that was just the little stuff. It was a lot of work, but fun too."

Cathy Walker, with Habitat for Humanity, coordinated the volunteer effort.

"Most of our sites can accommodate any age volunteer," Walker said. "Habitat has very strict rules about who can work where and for how long, depending on their age. Those volunteers who are too young to actually work on the sites can help in other ways: painting mail boxes, planting seedlings, raking leaves or even just passing out water to the workers. We really do have something for anyone who wants to do something that will make a difference in the lives of those in need."

After five hours, two sites were basically clear of trash and a third lot was partially finished.



"I couldn't believe it. We even found an old soda machine on the back of the lot," said Christine Rozina, Senior Scout.

"I never knew it took so much work before a house got built. I thought a tractor or something would come in and clear it all out and then the house came next," said Raechel Inbody, Cadette Scout.

The Cadette and Senior scouts have already volunteered to help out with the next phase of construction in March 2001. Habitat for Humanity will be running a 15 house building marathon.

"Next time they agreed to let us paint and teach us how to lay tiling on the floors," said Rozina. "Now that will be a lot more fun!"

For more information about volunteering, call Walker at 653-6003.

Foundation provides opportunity

Junior, senior scholarships available

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Fort Benning students have a wonderful opportunity staring them in the face.

Each year, two teen-age students are awarded a full two-year scholarship to attend one of America's most prestigious boarding schools during their junior and senior year.

The Richard R. Hallock Foundation, established in 2000 to honor World War II hero Col. Richard R. Hallock, who passed away two and half years ago, and his wife, Myriam Johnston Hallock, offer two scholarships to West Nottingham Academy, the oldest boarding school in America, established in 1744.

"He was one of the people to get the M-16 approved for the Army," said Lt. Col. E.J. Herold, deputy chief of staff. "The man he became was a direct result of his education at West Nottingham Academy."

Hallock, from the class of '37, has been a strong supporter of his alma mater and was a strong advocate for education.

"He left this foundation because he believes education is the foundation of success," Herold said.

According to the Web site, www.wna.org, one student from a foreign service family, and one student from a military family will be awarded the scholarships to attend the academy.

"It represents our careers and the fact we wanted to give something back," said Myriam, a longtime American Foreign Service officer. "Education is essential for every American."

The academy is looking for assertive students.

"We want somebody who can truly appreciate and understand an education in an international atmosphere," said Vince Watchorn, associate head of school. "We want somebody who can be a community and academic leader."

NASA picks post youths' experiment for flight

Carver students' work part of shuttle mission

Andre Wolf plans to travel into space someday. For now he's content to share a little piece of space science history.

An experiment designed and developed by Wolf and his classmate, Jake Kirkwood, was selected by NASA to be included in a space shuttle mission sometime next fall.

"It's mindboggling," said Wolf, 18, the son of Staff Sgt. Chris and Karin Hancock.

The students, both Fort Benning residents and seniors at Carver High School's Integrated Math and Science Technology magnet, began developing their theory about the conduction of heat in space two years ago.

Last year it placed in the top 10, and the boys and their teammates, sophomores Ashley Brantley and Candace Phillips, spent a year reworking and fine-tuning to develop a final submission "a lot more complex and focused" than the original, said Kirkwood, 18, the son of Maj. John and Nancy Kirkwood.

"But we never really anticipated winning. I just enjoyed continuing the work," he said. "Winning came as a total surprise."

Wolf and Kirkwood are interns at the Columbus State University's Coca-Cola Space Science Center, under the direction of Luther Richardson, who is also their physics teacher at Carver. Richardson learned of the award last week and arranged for his students to hear the news from NASA astronaut, retired Col. Jim Voss, who visited the school Feb. 19.

"It's just incredible that kids in high school could do this kind of thing," Voss told the students.

Ailing educator reads to students

Former teacher visits Dexter via TV

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning's former assistant superintendent of schools visited Dexter students this morning, via television, from her hospital room at Muscogee Manor.

Dr. Suzanne Williams suffers from advanced multiple sclerosis, a debilitating disease of the central nervous system that cut short her 20-year career as an educator.

"It's not a fun disease, but I'm doing alright. I still consider this just a hospital stay. This isn't my home," said Williams, who, along with her husband, owns a farm in Seale, Ala., where they raise horses and Jack Russell terriers.

Brittany Starr, a fourth-grade reporter with Dexter's WDEX television station, interviewed Williams and invited her to participate in today's celebration of Dr. Seuss' birthday by reading to the school's student body.

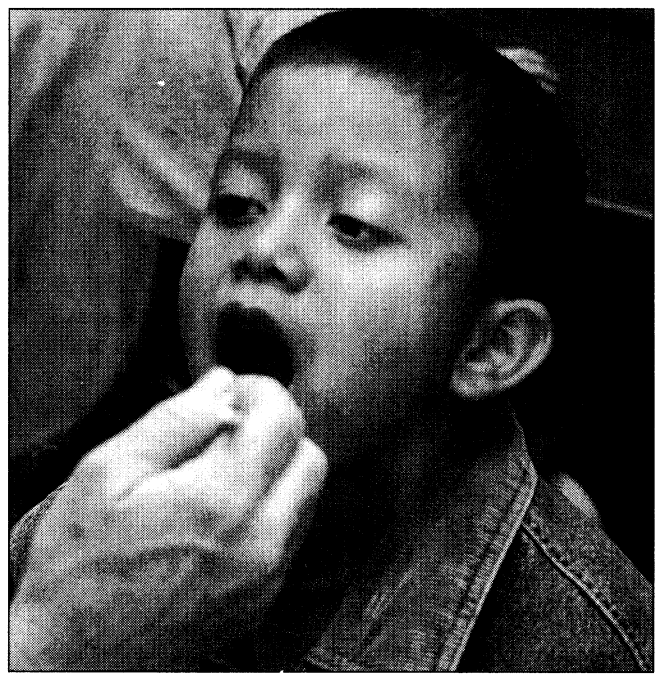
Afterward Starr made Williams an honorary member of the school's Kindness Club.

"I have really fond memories of Fort Benning," Williams said. "I still feel like part of the family."

Williams, who holds a master's degree as a reading specialist, began teaching at McBride Elementary in 1969 before transferring to Wilson Elementary, where she taught first grade for six years.

She served as a reading specialist and assistant principal at Faith Middle School and the assistant superintendent of schools.

It was in that capacity she developed the Reading Recovery program at Fort Benning.



"It's such a great program, and she's the one responsible for bringing it to us," said Vicki Rogers, Dexter's principal. "She was a great asset to our schools and we miss her."

NASA: Impressed by students' ideas

Wolf said he was thrilled by the news and enthralled by Voss' video presentation of life aboard a space station.

"I could just see myself there," said Wolf, who plans to attend the Citadel in the fall. He hopes to join the Air Force to become a pilot and eventually become an astronaut.

Kirkwood plans to major in engineering at Georgia Tech.

"The theory being Jake will build it and I'll fly it," Wolf said.

Until then, they say they'll continue to follow the progress of their experiment, titled Predicting Gaseous Heat Flow in Microgravity, which was one of four experiments, out of nearly 3,000 entries, selected for the mission.

The team spent hundreds of hours researching and collecting data from resources such as The Fundamentals of Low Gravity Fluid Dynamics and Heat Transfer, and designed and scrapped six prototypes. But the hardest work is yet to come, Kirkwood said.

The team must finalize the design of the experiment, build the final experiment apparatus, calibrate and test the final apparatus and design and maintain a Web site for the project — all before presenting the final project to NASA in June.

"We have actually got a lot more work ahead of us," Kirkwood said.

The final experiment must meet weight and energy restrictions and pass vibration and G-force testing. NASA will provide many of the materials, but corporate sponsors will help pick up the tab. It costs $10,000 per pound to send the look CLOSER look look look look look look

Here's a quick explanation of Kirkwood and Wolf's experiment:

- Background: Heat rises on earth — the flame of a candle will rise and taper. In space, it dissipates in a sphere — the flame of a candle will form a sphere, a ball of fire. This lack of direction makes it difficult to predict the rate heat dissipates (spreads and cools).
- Purpose: Since it costs $10,000 dollars per pound to send something into space, NASA wants to limit its weight load, such as heating and cooling units. This experiment is designed to reduce the size and weight by predicting the amount of energy needed to maintain comfortable temperatures.
- Design: The 13-inch-long rectangular box contains an electrical heat source at one end and a copper wall at the other. The other walls are insulated. Probes placed along the box record the temperature during a series of timed experiments.
- Theory: The students are applying Newton's equation of cooling: The rate of energy dissipated equals the thermal conductivity multiplied by the cross-sectional area of the chamber and the temperature gradient over the length of the chamber.
- Result: The experiment indicates a linear relationship between the amount of energy dissipated and the equilibrium temperature in microgravity.

Academy: Offers aid

The Academy requires a 3.0 grade point average to be considered for the schools.

"Hallock scholars must have good grades, a strong character and be leaders," Myriam said.

The full tuition for the two-year scholarship at the academy exceeds $50,000, which includes the cost of room, board and tuition.

Students can apply for the scholarship and other financial aid through the school. A $50 application fee is required to gain acceptance to the school but will be waived for the recipients of the Hallock scholarship.

Contrary to the qualifications listed on the Web site, applicants do not need to be from a family stationed overseas. This is a recent change in policy.

The scholarship offers students on Fort Benning a great educational opportunity, Herold said.

Q: I read your article about identity theft and I think I may be a victim. How can I be sure, and what should I do about it?

A: There are several ways to check to see if you have been the victim of identity theft. Here is how you can verify whether or not your personal information has been stolen and what you can do about it to protect yourself from further damage.

Check your credit card bills and bank statements. Make sure that the recorded activity on your account statements matches your actual usage. If discrepancies appear, immediately notify the company, bank or credit card firm of the problem.

1) Federal laws, such as the Fair Credit Billing Act and the Electronic Fund Transfer Act, offer protections to consumers whose credit cards or ATM cards are lost or stolen. For credit cards, if you report the loss before the cards are used, the FCBA prohibits the card issuer from holding you responsible for any unauthorized charges. If a thief uses your credit cards before you report them missing, the most you will owe for unauthorized charges is $50 per card. That $50 maximum liability is true even if the thief uses your credit card at an ATM to obtain cash advances on the credit card account.

If you report an ATM card missing before it is used without your permission, the EFTA prohibits the card issuer from holding you responsible for any unauthorized withdrawals. If unauthorized use occurs before you report the missing ATM card, your liability depends on how quickly you report the loss.

For example, if you report the loss within two business days after you realize your card is missing, you will not be responsible for more than $50 for unauthorized use. However, if you don't report the loss within two business days after you discover the loss, you could lose up to $500 due to an unauthorized withdrawal.

If you fail to report an unauthorized transfer or withdrawal within 60 days after your bank statement is mailed to you, you risk unlimited loss. That means you could lose all the money in your bank account and the unused portion of your line of credit established for overdrafts. If unauthorized transactions show up on your bank statement, report them to the card issuer as quickly as possible. Once you've reported the loss of your ATM card, you cannot be held liable for additional amounts, even if more unauthorized transactions are made.

2) If you do see discrepancies on your bills or bank statements, notify the three national credit reporting organizations immediately and ask them to place a fraud alert on your name and social security number. The alert means that any company that checks your credit knows your information was stolen and they have to contact you by phone to authorize new credit. This will prevent thieves from obtaining new credit in your name. The numbers for the national credit reporting organizations are: Equifax, (800) 525-6285; Experian (formerly TRW), (888) 397-3742; Trans Union, (800) 680-7289; and the Social Security Administration fraud line, (800) 269-0271.

3) Even if you have no reason to believe that your information has been stolen, periodically obtain and review copies of your credit report to assure that the report is an accurate reflection of your credit history and credit usage. Under the Fair Business Practices Act, you can obtain two credit reports per year free of charge from credit reporting agencies listed above.

If you think you may be the victim of identity theft, call the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Legal Assistance Division, at 545-3281 for more information or to schedule an appointment.

The Bayonet's

feature teacher

Terri Bond,

a third-grade teacher at Dexter Elementary

Personal: The Conyers, Ga., native is married to her high school sweetheart, Chief Warrant Officer Paul Bond, who has served in the Army 19 years. They have two daughters, Meggan, 13, and Shelli, 9.

Professional history: Bond became an inhome day-care provider when the family moved to Fort Benning eight years ago.

"That was the hardest thing I've ever done," she said. "I found myself wanting to teach those little ones. I was making lesson plans, when I realized I really wanted to do this — to teach.

Bond earned her teaching degree from Columbus State University. She's earning a master's degree online through Walden University.

Bond has taught at Dexter four years.

"I love it here. It's a big, loving family," she said. "I'm so spoiled."

On returning to school: "That was a big decision, but I like that my kids got to see me studying. It was a good influence on them. There's no doubt in their minds that they're going to college," Bond said.

On balancing motherhood, teaching and school: "I think it helps that my children are very structured and independent," she said.

"The biggest problem we have is sharing the computer."

Hobbies: Bond enjoys running, step aerobics and riding bikes with her family. She also enjoys reading medical thrillers.

But the family has a new hobbie of sorts. "House-hunting. My husband retires in a year, and we're so excited about having our own home. We look all the time," she said.

On retiring: "I think I'm going to miss the security. The Army has been really good to us," Bond said. "It's kind of a scary step."

Plans: Bond plans to stay in the classroom for five or six more years. Eventually she'd like to teach on a college level.

"And someday I want to write children's books," Bond said. "I have a whole series in my head. If I could just find the time to get it on paper."

Fifth-graders create ABC books

Books allow students to be creative

Stowers Elementary

The following articles are written by three Computer Club students at Stowers Elementary School regarding the creation of ABC Books.

Thursday morning, January 24, 2002, the Computer Club at Stowers went to the Kindergarten classes to give them "ABC Books." It was cool because we made them ourselves! We went to each Kindergarten class and handed the books to the teachers. I really liked it when we got to take a picture with the classes.

Edward Mitchell
fifth-grader

Thursday morning Mrs. Dixon's Computer Club gave "ABC Books" to the Kindergartners. The ABC Books were the ones we had made in our Computer Club. It took us a month to make them and have them laminated. When we presented the books to the teachers, they were grateful. The teachers thanked us and made us feel like we had done a great thing.

Paul Miranda
fifth-grader

The Computer Club at Stowers made "ABC Books" for the kindergarten. They were filled with pictures and words. I think they were great! The Kindergarten classes were so amazed when we told them that we did them on the computer. Then they all clapped.

Turn other cheek? Not in every case

God allows us to defend our nation in crisis

Chaplain (Maj.) Ken Yates
11th Infantry Regiment

Whenever our nation goes to war, there is a debate on whether this is the right course of action.

Those who oppose war sometimes appeal to the New Testament to support their view. They say Jesus taught we should "turn the other cheek" (Matt. 5:39), "love your enemies" (Matt. 5:44), and forgive those who sin against us (Matt. 18:22-35).

Some "letters to the editor" in newspapers express this view as people discuss the current war in Afghanistan.

Do these statements of Jesus support the argument that a nation should not go to war? Some Christians, and even some religious leaders, seem to think so. Upon closer inspection, however, we find that these statements do not.

It is very important to notice to whom Jesus is speaking. In all of the above verses, where Jesus speaks of non-retaliation, he is addressing individuals. We can even be more specific. In each of these contexts he speaks to individuals who are his followers.

The New Testament teaches Jesus gives eternal life to anybody who believes in him for it. Jesus Christ then calls that person to walk in obedience to him. The teachings of Christ on nonviolence are part of what it means to engage in that "walk."

Jesus tells his followers they should love their enemies. They should not retaliate against those who wrong them. They should forgive their fellow Christians who sin against them. He, of course, is the supreme example of these teachings. He did not retaliate when people wronged him. He even forgave those who nailed him to a cross.

This is how he acted as an individual. He taught his followers to follow that example. Nowhere, however, does Christ apply these teachings to nations. He never tells a nation to turn the other cheek when attacked.

In fact, the New Testament teaches something completely different when it comes to the government of a nation. In Romans 13:4, it says a government "bears the sword" and is "an avenger who brings wrath upon the one who practices evil." From these and other statements we learn that God has ordained governments to punish evil doers. This applies to internal police forces as well as waging war when attacked.

Simply put, we cannot apply the teachings of Christ to his individual followers to a nation.

There is a difference between a Christian and a country. A Christian is called, in his or her individual dealings with others, to forgive sins and turn the cheek when personally attacked.

A nation has been given authority by God to punish those who do evil.

We should all be grateful that we live in a country where we are free to express different views. Personally, I am glad people in this nation can argue that we should never go to war. That is their right. They just shouldn't use the New Testament to support their argument.

Ecstasy: Bitter pill to swallow

God gives people bodies to glorify his almighty name

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Ecstasy is becoming the drug of choice among teen-agers and college students. More high school teens are taking ecstasy than marijuana.

Viewed by young people as a love drug, ecstasy is not loving to those who take it. Each pill costs between $10 to $25. The substance increases the heart rate and body temperature. Profuse sweating of the palms, soles of the feet, and other body areas are common. Dehydration and hypothermia can occur with deadly results if left untreated.

Koop

Ecstasy is a hallucinatory drug. People who take the drug describe a fascination with light and touch about an hour after taking the drug. They like the loving feeling that surrounds them. Sexual predators find ecstasy users to be easy prey to their advances.

When the drug wears off, ecstasy users crave more of the substance and will continue to take the substance if it is available. Ecstasy also damages brain cells. Death by overdosing on ecstasy is increasing at an alarming rate.

Users of ecstasy may ignore users who have collapsed on the floor. Rather than seeking medical help for their friend in need, they keep on partying, oblivious of their dying friend. This lack of concern by ecstasy users for friends in need is not love.

The Bible tells us God created us. As such, we are to glorify God in our bodies. Ecstasy users abuse the bodies God has given them.

Are you using ecstasy? Call the Army Substance Abuse Program at 545-4415 or the Chaplain Family Life Center for help.

For more information, call 545-1760; visit the Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers Plaza; or e-mail me at usarmychaplain@aol.com.

Four soldiers win Olympic bobsled medals

Soldiers bobsled, capture medals for the U.S. team

Brian Lepley and Master Sgt. Bob Haskell
National Guard Bureau Public Affairs

PARK CITY, Utah — An Army Reserve lieutenant won a silver medal in men's bobsledding Feb. 23 and three other soldiers took bronze as the USA captured its first Olympic bobsled medals since 1956.

Army Reserve 2nd Lt. Garrett Hines was the brakeman on USA-1, the four-man bobsled that took second place Saturday in front of 15,000 cowbell-clanging spectators at Utah Olympic Park.

Three of the four bobsledders were soldiers on bronze-winning USA-2.

Virginia National Guard Spc. Mike Kohn and regular Army Spc. Doug Sharp were pushers on the sleigh and Oregon Guard Spc. Dan Steele was the brakeman.

Civilian driver Brian Shimer, a five-time Olympian, has been competing with the soldiers for two years on their sleigh, provided by the Army World Class Athlete program.

The driver of USA-1, Todd Hays, finished his fourth and final run a cumulative .30 seconds behind the gold-winning German team. USA-2 edged out the Swiss team for bronze as the United States won its first bobsled medals since the 1956 games when Arthur Tyler drove to a bronze in Cortina, Italy.

"Forty-six years, and we just ended it today with two medals," said Kohn about ending the United States' long bobsled drought with Shimer, who locked up the bronze on the last run of his last Olympics.

> "There's no better time to be an Olympian and to represent your country than right now. This has been a phenomenal Olympics, and this is the perfect way to end it."
> Spc. Mike Kohn
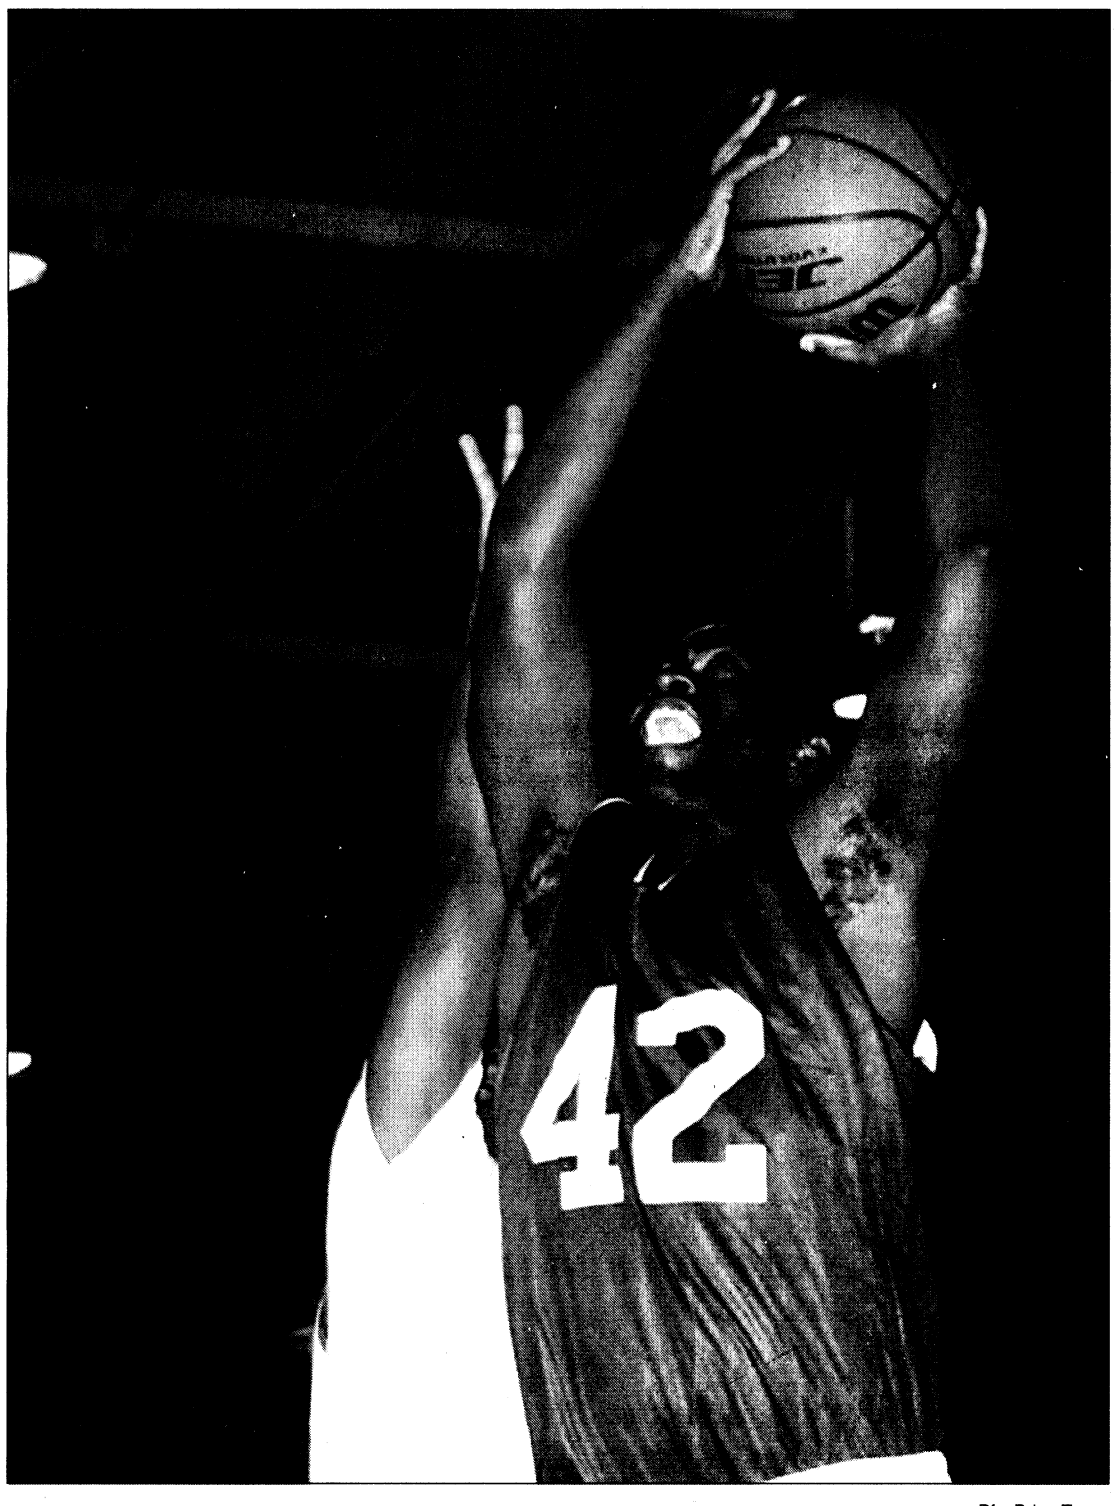
> Bronze Medalist

"There's no better time to be an Olympian and to represent your country than right now," Kohn said. "This has been a phenomenal Olympics, and this is the perfect way to end it."

Kohn from Chantilly, Va., and Steele from Eugene, Ore., became the Army Guard's first bobsled medal winners, along with active Army pusher Sharp from Jeffersonville, Ind. They rode in the jet-black USA-2 sled that Shimer from Naples, Fla., rocketed from fifth to third on the next-to-last night of the Salt Lake City Games.

Kohn, 29, and Sharp, 32, are members of the U.S. Army's World Class Athlete Program.

Army Reservist Hines from Atlanta, Ga., was the brakeman on the bright red USA-1 sled that Hays drove to the silver medal during the four-man event's second day that abruptly turned from fair weather to foul between the final two decisive runs.



That made Hines, 32, one of just three African American athletes to ever win a Winter Olympics medal. Civilian Randy Jones from Winston-Salem, N.C., was another African American on the Hays team.

The Germany-2 team of Andre Lange won the gold medal with a combined four-run time of 3 minutes, 7.51 seconds. USA-1, which led the field after the first two runs on Friday, finished second in 3:07.81. The Shimer team charged from fifth place on Friday to the bronze medal on Saturday in the combined time of 3:07.86.

Shimer put together Saturday's second-fastest combined runs of 1:34:21. Only the winning German team roared down the eight-tenths mile

Outlaws come back with vengeance, destroy Aces

Outlaws Edward Thomas goes for the jump shot against the Aces for the Monday night intramural basketball game at Brian Wells Field House.

Team loses by 30, taught lesson from post champions

The Outlaws dominated the Aces with a 77-47 victory Monday night at the intramural basketball game in Briant Wells Field House. The Outlaws were taller, faster and forced the turnovers they needed.

The Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment Outlaws, came out to an early lead and kept the momentum going the whole game to crush the A Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment Aces,

"We had a flat start the last game we played," said Adrian Lewis, Outlaws' point guard. "We came into the game playing hard, and we didn't want to lose again."

The first half started out evenly enough, 7-2, five minutes into the game, but the Outlaw defense continued to spread the gap and led to 10 unanswered points.

As they left for halftime, the 37-14 score seemed to weigh heavily on the Aces' shoulders.

Edward Thomas and the Outlaws' continued to hold the Aces in check with an in-your-face defensive stranglehold in the second half.

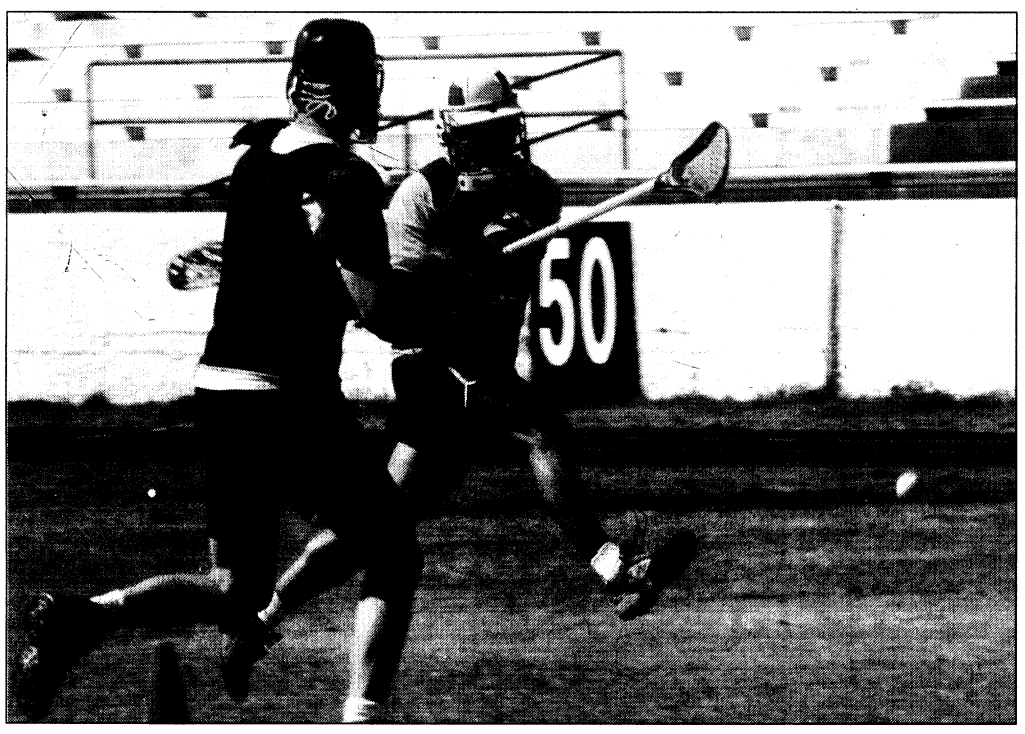
"We pushed the ball, and put pressure on their offense before they could get a chance to setup," Lewis said. "We wanted to make them play at our tempo to play a faster game than they're used to."

With 15:40 left in the game, the Aces continued to make valiant attempts to close in on the Outlaws' lead, but they never made it.

As the Outlaws settled into a comfortable lead and time on the clock began to wind down, they began to give the audience a display of their skills. Lewis went up twice for a 180 degree dunk, to only complete one.

Lewis ended the game with 33 points and posed as a lethal threat from downtown making eight 3-point shots in the game.

"The teamwork and everyone giving 100 percent is how we win the games," said Thomas Tucker, center for the Outlaws.



Thelonious McLean-Burrell helps stretch the gap in the 77-47 victory.

"We just keep on bringing our 'A' game to the court every time, and we take it one game at a time," Tucker said. "It's all about winning. We only want the gold."

The teams confidence is at its appex, said Lewis.

"Most of our team has been playing together for the last three seasons, so we have the experience and cohesion," Lewis said. "We have only lost three games in the last three seasons. Coming into this season, we're the defending league champs for the last two years.

On the run!

Marathon training pays off in race

Life-long goal fulfills dreams, aspirations

Capt. Joe Reap
2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Running takes strength, endurance and a will to continue over time and space.

What started out as a good idea turned into reality. On a chilly December day, Maj. Chad Sullivan, the commander of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, challenged his cadre to compete in the Blue Angel Marathon in Pensacola, Fla.

Sgt. 1st Class Carlos Figueroa, Staff Sgt. John Keen, and 1st Sgt. Clyde Glenn stepped up and took the challenge. The four began an intense train-up lasting from December to February in preparation for race day.

The four "marathoners" ran approximately 30-50 miles a week in preparation. Sullivan, who completed the Blue Angel Marathon last year, developed the plan.

"We did a combination of interval, tempo, and long slow distance runs preparing for race day." Sullivan said. "We used a program straight out of Runner's World Magazine."

The three marathoners gradually increased their mileage until they completed a 20-mile run three weeks prior to the marathon.

"The hardest part of the train-up was the last three weeks, mostly because we were 'tapering down' our mileage," Sullivan said. "My legs had become accustomed to the high mileage and it took more discipline to refrain from running long and hard each day.

"Tapering down allows your leg muscles to recover, and build back up for race day. If you continue to run long distances right up to race day, you'll be running on tired legs."

When asked why he decided to challenge the cadre, Sullivan said, "I've always enjoyed competing, and stepping up to new challenges. The marathon is the ultimate challenge for a runner. I've also always fostered a physical training ethos in each unit I've been in."

Figueroa, first time marathoner, said, "It was something I always wanted to do."

Glenn just couldn't let the commander get away with the challenge. The three runners established their own goals for the race. In the end, each achieved their number one goal, they all finished the race as a team.

Sullivan finished the marathon in 3 hours, 46 minutes, Figueroa finished in 4:47 and Glenn finished a half

Lady Magic build confidence

Tammy Newman, coach of the Lady Magic, winds up for the honorary pitch at a college softball tournament.

Post parents teach girls softball basics

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Teen-age girls living on Fort Benning are learning the basic fundamentals of fast-pitch softball through a committed parent who is sharing her knowledge and experience of the game.

Tammy Newman, the coach of the Lady Magic, a girls softball traveling team with players of ages 14 and younger, has always loved the game of softball.

"Many of the girls on Fort Benning wanted a chance to play during the summer," Newman said. "This is a way for me to enjoy time with my daughter and support the community."

Her husband, John, helps Tammy with scheduling games, getting sponsorship for the team and teaching the girls the fundamentals of the game.

"She amazes me with her commitment to the girls and the game," John said. "She spends her evenings teaching the girls the basics of the game and helps them gain the knowledge to win.

"She is trying to give back to the community and pass on her knowledge and experiences of the game she loves."

The girls seem to be very receptive to the quintessence Tammy is passing on to them.

"I think what she is doing is great," said Alyssa Maldonado, one of the players for the Mighty Assume Girls In Cleats (Magic). "Without softball I don't know what I'd be doing.

"I think this will effect girls on Fort Benning in a positive way. I know the competitive environment has helped my confidence. It makes me love the game so much more. When I learn something and do it right, it makes me feel good, and then I can help my teammates learn it."

This type of camaraderie is embedded into the hearts and minds of these girls, Tammy said.

"We work together as a team and take care of each other even off the field," she said.

"Playing softball is something for them to do besides sit around the house and play video games," Tammy said. "Parents must get their kids involved in something constructive."

Tammy's players understand what she is trying to accomplish with her assertive efforts.

"She's given girls on post the opportunity to play," Maldonado said. "There is not much opportunity on post for girls to play."

Growing up in a military family, Tammy can easily relate to how many of the girls do not get collegiate exposure they deserve.

"Military kids are at a disadvantage because they travel so often," Tammy said. "Many of these girls have the potential to play college softball."

Students have 'Cuptacular' tournament

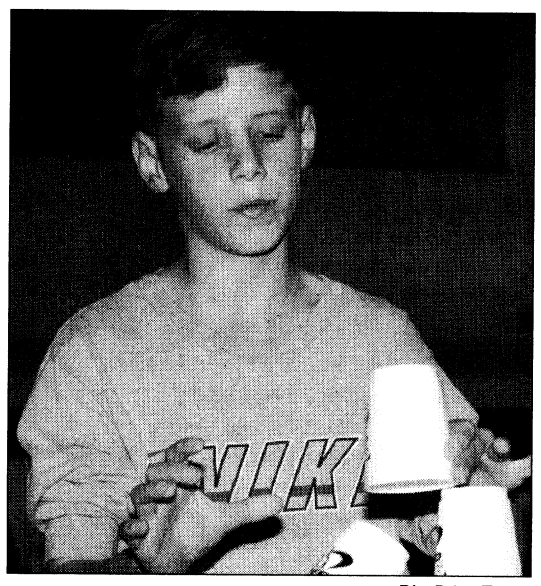
School district tourney draws big crowd in cup stacking event

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The first Fort Benning schools districtwide cup-stacking tournament was sponsored for pre-K through sixth-grade Tuesday afternoon at Faith Middle School.

Cup stacking is a game of skill and speed where competitors take 12 specially designed cups (Speed Stacks) and stack them in predetermined pyramids. Then they downstack them with even more speed.

"This is the first cup stacking tournament in Georgia," said Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning schools. "The students really enjoy it. It's great fun, but it's not easy. They're much faster than I am."



Cup stacking is both an individual and a team sport. More than 500 students participated in the event. They students competed in two types of stacking, the 3-6-3 individual and relay and cycle individual and relay by grade level.

"There were about 800 people here total," said Glen Hughes, director of technology for Fort Benning School system. "I was really surprised at the number of people who attended."

McMullen said she was glad so many parents came to the event.

"Cup stacking helps improve hand-eye coordination and using both hands also develops fine motor skills," McMullen said. "I think everyone had a good time."

The students seemed to be having a fun time competing against each other.

Pfc. Brian Trapp

Ashton Thomas stacks his cups.

"It's really cool, and the competition is pretty tough," said Raymond Nimox, 12, Faith Middle School student. "It helps your hand-eye coordination, so you get better at sports, like basketball."

Pam Koon, Dexter Elementary School physical education teacher, organized the event and introduced cup stacking to the Fort Benning schools.

"I found out about it from physical education newsletters on the Internet, and the kids loved it," Koon said. "I taught it as part of physical education class."

"I think the tournament was a big success," said Viki Rogers, Dexter Elementary School principal. "Ms. Koon put a lot of work into organizing this event, and one of this magnitude takes a lot of coordination."

The tournament ended with the winners being awarded medals.

Stowers Stampede starting soon

Registration underway for fun run

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Stowers Stampede is planned for April 20 and will feature several events, the 1-mile fun run, 5K run and 5K wheelchair race.

"This event pulls together students and the community together in something that is fun and physically good for you," said Dr. Tom Digman, Stowers Elementary school principal. "Even I will be running in the 5K race."

The run has been an annual event going for more than 20 years, with Faith Middle school as the Faith Race, and two years with Stowers Elementary school as the Stowers Stampede.

"The run promotes health and physical fitness," said Adam Weinbaum, physical education instructor with Faith Middle School.

The teachers and the Parent Teacher Organization make the race possible by volunteering their time to help set up and register the runners, Weinbaum said.

"I think it's a great event," Weinbaum said. "It's a good way to get people to go out and enjoy fitness."

Awards will be given to the male and female winners in each age group.

An awards ceremony will take place following the final race. The top-two wheelchair finishers will also receive awards.

Race day registration begins at 7:30 a.m. at Stowers Elementary school.

The registration fees are $6 for children and $12 for those 15 and older. All participants will receive a T-shirt with the registration fee.

Registration on race day will cost an extra $2.

Olympian: Win medals

Continjued from C-1

track faster — in 1:34.16.

Utah Army Guard soldier Jill Bakken, another Army world class athlete, set the stage the previous Tuesday by driving her two-woman sled to a gold medal in the first Olympic bobsled event for women. Her brakeman, civilian Vonetta Flowers from Alabama, became the first African American to ever claim a Winter Olympics medal.

Overall, the five soldiers made up nearly half of the U.S. bobsled team's 13 men and women competitors, and all five take home medals following Sunday night's closing ceremony.

Hines, a two-time Olympian, nearly won a bronze with Hays in the two-man event earlier last week, but they finished fourth, .03 second behind the Swiss-2 sliders.

Shimer and Hines were also .02 seconds from a bronze medal in the 1998 Nagano Olympics.

But an injury two years ago left Shimer without a team. He explained that equipment is issued by the national team by rank, and because of injuries, he couldn't compete well enough to merit a sleigh.

So the Army's World Class Athlete Program stepped in and picked Shimer to compete with the soldiers.

U.S. Olympic team coach Janis Skrastins came up to Shimer after the race and said "This is like the miracle on ice, you coming back; this is like the U.S. beating the Russians, you medalling here."

Steele, a former WCAP soldier and 1998 Olympian, was among the doubters of his team's success at the 19th Winter Games.

"Very few people gave Brian a chance to be here. When we first started together I didn't think we had much of a chance," he said. "Brian Shimer, fifth Olympics, going out with a medal, you can't write that kind of thing."

When Sharp came to bobsled in 1998 after a collegiate pole vaulting career, he sought out Shimer.

"When I stepped on a track in 1998, I went right up to Brian Shimer and said, 'Hey, sign this hat if you would.' And he said 'Man, I'm not going to sign that for you, you're going to be a bobsledder,'" Sharp recalled. "I said, 'I want you to sign it so I can remember this on a day-to-day basis: That I will be racing with you in the 2002 Winter Olympics and that we will win a medal.'"

The medals the soldiers helped claim increased the United States' total to 34 for the XVIII Winter Games in which U.S. Olympic Committee officials originally hoped to win only 20.

Editor's note: Brian Lepley was in Utah reporting for the Army's World Class Athlete Program and the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center. Master Sgt. Bob Haskell is a member of the National Guard Bureau public affairs team.

Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

Post sets fires to prevent them

Red-cockaded bird in danger of extinction

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

There were 587 wildfires in 1985 when 7,600 acres were burned as part of the post's prescribed-burn program.

Last year, there were 45 wildfires when 27,000 acres were burned as part of the program.

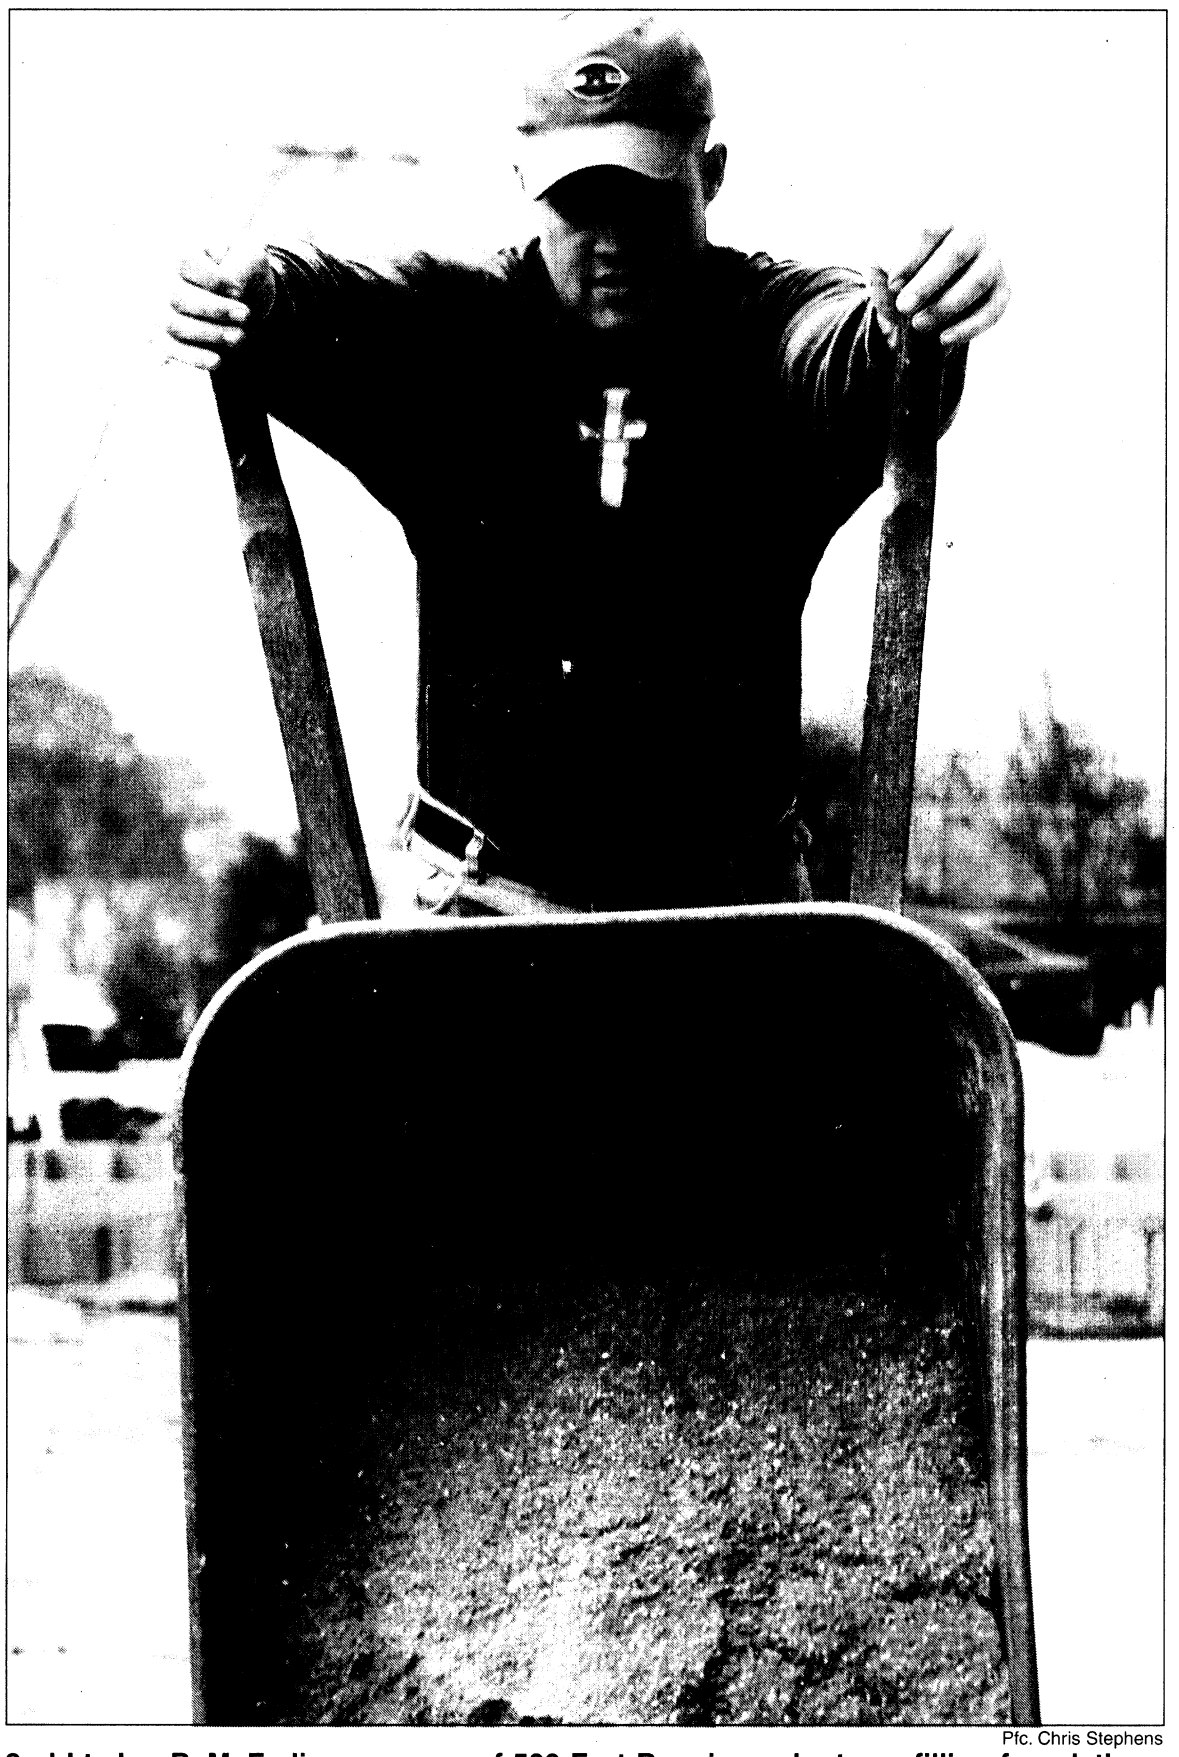
"We've cut (the average number of wildfires from 1981 to 1993) in half, easily," said Jack Greenlee, the supervisory forester in charge of Fire Management Program, Land Management Branch, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics. "(The prescribed burning) is a win-win for all of us. Not only are we preventing wildfires, when they do occur, they aren't burning as intensely.

"Plus, we're improving the visibility and accessibility for troops to train as well as recreation — mainly hunting," he said.

One of the main reasons the post conducts prescribed burns — this year's goal is 33,000 acres — is it reduces fuel, which helps prevent future catastrophic fires, Greenlee said.

These burns help control the midstory growth of the forest, which is in between the ground and crowns of trees. Burning occurs from Dec. 1 through August. Most of it happens before May 1.

An equally important reason the post has prescribed burns is it enhances the long-leaf pine ecosystem, which is home to several threatened and endangered species, Greenlee said.



The red-cockaded woodpecker is the number-one species. In 1994, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service gave the post a jeopardy biological opinion that said the management practices of the post were not compatible to the woodpecker's survival.

The opinion stated the bird habitat required more frequent burning, preferably one that is on a three-year burn rotation. This practice helps keep the understory open and park-like and deters cluster abandonment, which occurs when birds leave their area because of growth that reaches into the midstory, Greenlee said.

A cluster is a group of four to 20 woodpecker cavities, or nesting holes, that are within a 10-acre area, said Michael Barron, wildlife

AER campaign kicks off

Goal set for $170,000 in contributions

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Army Emergency Relief provides soldiers stationed at Fort Benning the financial assistance they need during unexpected hardships, which is why it is important for the post to exceed $170,000 in contributions.

The AER campaign began March 1 and will run until May 15.

The goal of the post is to have 100 percent participation, said Col. Lonnie Vona, Fort Benning chief of staff, at a briefing for representatives of each commander on post.

Post pets confiscated from owners

Two dogs found unfed, unkempt at residence

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Two dogs were taken to the post veterinary clinic for treatment Feb. 28 after being confiscated from a Fort Benning residence.

Kane and Foxy, both mixed breeds, were found by military police. Both were found locked in a room, neglected and severely malnourished.

"The conditions the animals were living in were appalling," said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, non-commissioned officer in charge of operations, Military Police Activities. Details of the living conditions and action taken against the pets' owners were not available since the case is still under investigation, but ownership of the animals was surrendered to the vet clinic.

"They looked like they just came from a concentration camp," said Missy Taylor, veterinary technician. "This is the worst case of neglect I've seen on Fort Benning."

Special to the Bayonet©

"We call them dumb animals, and so they are, for they cannot tell us how they feel, but they do not suffer less because they have no words."

— Anna Sewell

Somebody let the cat out of the bag — in my neighborhood. And now it's reproducing.

I'm not talking about secrets. It's all out in the open, sleeping on people's porches and dropping litter everywhere but in a litter box. But it, the cat, is not to blame for being an uninvited houseguest.

Neither are any of the strays, both cats and dogs, frequently spotted lounging in the sun, chasing squirrels and celebrating freedom on our streets.

Some were abandoned by their owners when they moved off post, like the pregnant tabby cat who paces in waiting for her new babes.

Others, like the always-loose-but-never-friendly trophy dog, escaped from the yard, pen, chain, you name it, once again. He, of course, will run wild, play in the trash and visit the schoolyard until one of his owners gets home from work.

What else is an animal to do?

Better yet, what's a neighbor to do?

I guess we could call animal control, but the one-man crew is up to his ears in strays.

The vet clinic will house them if they have space available, but it's not their responsibility to pick up forsaken animals, even if they really want to.

And you can bet I won't be outside with my cat catching kit, because I follow the lesson I teach my children. Don't approach animals you don't know. A case of cat scratch fever is not worth the fight. And let me tell you, that soon-to-be-momma has a serious aversion to people. Can't imagine why.

I, like many of my friends and neighbors, made the decision to live on post because there's supposed to be a higher standard of living. That is, we assume our fellow residents will be held to the letter of the law. Instead, it's many of the same people — some gone, some still around — who caused or contributed to our out of control pet population.

Last week, Fort Benning saw one of its worst pet neglect cases. Animals so malnourished that their bones showed through their skin and their muscles had dwindled. The poor things were in such bad shape they could hardly move, and one wasn't expected to live through the weekend.

This week we residents have the chance to look hindsight in the face.

There is no excuse for the appalling, inhumane treatment of animals, here or anywhere. It's time to hold those guilty parties accountable, and take the only action we can — responsibility.

If you don't want your pet or you can't care for them, there are many avenues to explore before locking the door and leaving them for dead.

Euthanasia is a fate far more merciful than neglect and malnutrition.

Better yet, practice a little prevention. If you have a pet, have it spayed or neutered. Heard this somewhere before? Well, I'll tell you again because apparently the word has not reached everyone. The minimal time and money it costs far outweigh the consequences of more unwanted animals.

And if you're moving and you don't want your pet, what makes you think your former neighbors want it AND its offspring?

How irresponsible. How cruel.

This might sound like another lecture you don't want to hear. But it's really all common sense. So before you kick the cat or lock your dog in a pen half his size, think twice. Take care of your pets. If you do, they might just be the best friend you ever had.

Abuse needs to be reported. Do the right thing.

EUTHANASIA

Kinder than abandonment

commentary

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs

Most of my family and a lot of my friends (OK, all of my friends) will tell you that I can turn into a cold-hearted witch at the drop of a hat.

It's true. And, in the opinions of some people, it's especially true when it comes to pets.

During the last 20 years, I have unhesitatingly chauffeured a string of aging, infirm animal companions to the vet on their last rides.

One of our recent losses took his last ride early. At 13, and tipping the scales at 15 pounds, he started picking fights with his two canine companions. Other than being senile he was in relatively good health, but I had him euthanized because I knew it would be a painless end compared to the fate his new hobby would bring.

Some people think this is cruel. I think it's part of the responsibility that comes with being a responsible pet owner. Saving your pet from suffering caused by age, illness, or as was the case of my former senile terrier, death by stupidity, is not cruel.

Cruel is deciding that keeping your pet is inconvenient and dumping it somewhere. Cruel is not caring enough to be a responsible pet owner and letting your pets run the streets.

There are two dogs at home now. Smoke was 2 when she came to live with us. She had lived half her life in a kennel because her first family was unprepared for the trials and tribulations that life with a young border collie can bring. At the kennel, she was fed and watered, kept parasite free and reasonably clean and she got some basic obedience training. Not a great life, but she was safe. She's well adjusted and a great pet. Her former owners gave up on her about six months too soon.

Floss was picked up by the dogcatcher after he saw her running the street. Her owners abandoned her at the pound rather than pay a hefty fine to get their puppy back. The fine was high because it was not their first offense. Her former owners started off with two puppies. The other disappeared and we try not to dwell on her fate.

When we brought Floss home, she was half the size she should have been, wormy, flea-ridden, hand shy and had never had a bath. It was weeks before she was back on track physically and months before she could be trusted around children. She's almost 2 now and she still shies from strangers who just want to pet her.

She's come a long way but she'll never compete in obedience or agility competitions or see service as a therapy dog visiting patients in hospitals and nursing homes. She's probably the brightest dog I've ever had the pleasure of knowing but her early beginnings nearly destroyed her and ruined the dog she could have been. A mind is a terrible thing to waste.

If you have a pet, it's your responsibility to keep it healthy, confined, trained and neutered. If for any reason you can't keep it, take it to someone who will see to it that the animal will be safe until its fate is decided. Being euthanized would be kinder than being abandoned.

Don't be cruel.

CORRECTIONS

In last week's Bayonet, one of the nominees for best supporting actor was left off of the contest form. The actor nominated for best supporting actor is Jon Voigt for his role as Howard Cosell in Ali. The corrected contest form is on page D-5 in this week's paper.

Also, the postwide Spring Eggstravaganza is not sponsored by the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, but by Youth Services. BOSS is looking for volunteers to help run the event. Call 545-6800 to volunteer.

High school magnets plan showcase at Peachtree Mall

With the opening of Northside High School in Columbus this fall, Muscogee County School District will have eight high schools. Two of the eight have established magnet programs — Columbus High School Liberal Arts and Carver High School Integrated Math, Science, and Technology. Columbus High is the only school that is a total magnet program.

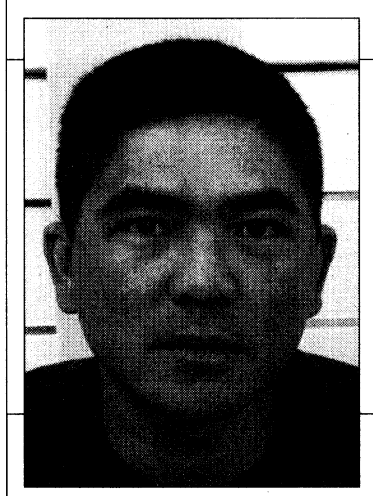
Each high school magnet program has its own admission criteria and application.

Information and applications will be available today and Saturday at the High School Showcase at Peachtree Mall (in front of the old Montgomery Wards) or by calling the schools. Friday's showcase is 5 to 8 p.m. and Saturday's starts at 11 a.m. and continues to 9 p.m.

Each school will also have its own brochure and representatives to speak with students and parents.

On Saturday, schools will have presentations beginning on the hour at noon in alphabetical order until the last presentation at 7 p.m.

With the exception of Columbus High School which is expected to admit between 300 and 350 freshmen, each of the other schools is recruiting 200 students. One hundred from the attendance zone and one hundred from outside the attendance zone will be selected.



Application deadline is June 1, but schools will begin accepting applications earlier and stop when they have filled the classes. Since the selection will be done based on meeting selection criteria and then by date of application, students are encouraged to apply as early as possible.

Logistics on transportation and attendance zones have not been finalized. There may be changes in times to accommodate busing.

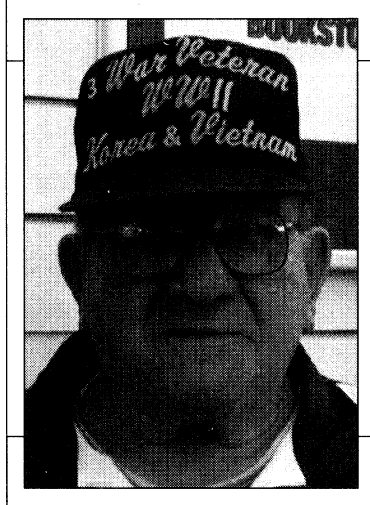
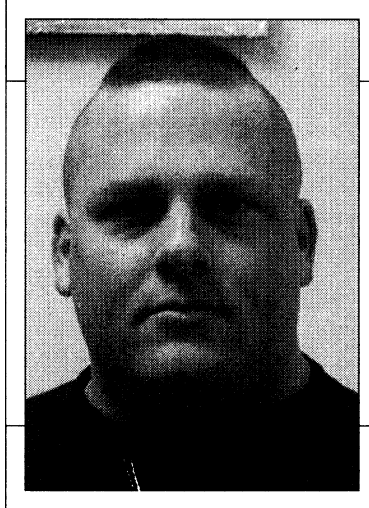
VARIOUS VOICES



What do you think should be done to residents who violate post pet policies?

Sgt. 1st Class Bayani Apuya, 63rd Engineer Company, 36th Engineer Group — "They should be fined, maybe $150 the first time, and $250 the second. The best way for them to learn is to have money taken away from them. "



Camille Hatch, family member — "If they're repeat offenders, they should have their pet taken away. The animal should be put in a better home if its owners don't want to take care of it."

Retired Master Sgt. Arthur Croce, Columbus — "Unless they have a license to sell, there should be a mandatory spay and neuter policy enforced. People don't take care of their animals. If I'm 76 and I can take care of mine, they can too."

Patricia Campbell, family member — "If you abandon a pet, there should be legal action taken or have your chain of command contacted. That animal is your responsibility."

Sgt. 1st Class Brian Arabinko, 4th Ranger Training Brigade — "They should be thrown off post. Living on post is a privilege, not a right. Let them live off post and pay to take care of their pet."

Eva Epting, family member — "They should do community service. They should have to go clean the vet facility for a day, so they can learn the responsibility of owning a pet."

Educational budget cuts are result of war

Thousands cut from supplies and contracts

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning school system has suffered a $204,000 budget cut.

As federal departments across the board are taking budget cuts to help put more money into the war on terrorism, the schools are no exception.

"We've had other budget years where we had to tighten our belts even more than this year, so negative effects on the schools will be minimal," said Richard Skinner, assistant superintendent for Fort Benning schools.

There is a $157,000 cut in the supplies and equipment budget.

The majority of the cutbacks will be made on supplies used for the central office to minimize the effect it will have on the school level, Skinner said.

There will also be a $47,000 cut in contract services such as school buses. The cut was mostly absorbed by excess from the estimate made for the 2002 budget.

"We anticipated this cut," said Dr. Dell McMullen, superintendent for Fort Benning schools. "We made our leadership team (principals and central office) aware of the probability, but we were afraid it was going to be worse than it is."

Fortunately, only the two areas were affected by the cuts, Skinner said. Pay, benefits and utilities for the schools will remain at the target budget made for fiscal 2002.

> "Our children will not suffer as a result of the cuts. We always want as much money as we can get, but we can also manage with these cuts."

"Our children will not suffer as a result of the cuts," McMullen said. "We always want as much money as we can get, but we can also manage with these cuts."

The timing helped a little too, the schools are already five months into the fiscal year, so it won't have as large of an impact as if this came earlier, Skinner said.

Fires: Help protect endangered bird, prevent forest fires biologist, Conservation Branch, DFEL. There are 313 clusters on post, and the post's goal is 450, which would put it over the U.S.F.W.S's recovery goal. Only Apalachicola National Forest, Fla., has reached the goal. If Fort Benning and 14 other areas reach 450, the bird would come off the endangered species list.

To reach that objective, post officials help make the birds happy by creating a dense, yet structured, population, he said. Burning helps maintain a forest structure that the birds prefer.

Barron offered a specific example of why the prescribed burns are so important. The woodpeckers live in family groups, with a male, female and mature sons. The sons wait for the father to die so one of them can take over the nest, at which time the mother leaves to look for a new mate and nest. She can accomplish her mission quickly when there are many birds across the landscape. Burning helps create a forest where many groups can exist, densely packed across the landscape.

"They like to be in a population-dense subdivision, not out in the country far away from other neighbors," Barron said.

The birds are territorial, but the 200-acre forage area is enough to keep most birds supplied with needed food (insects), he said.

Monitoring, which involves, among many other techniques, placing bands on birds' legs so officials can identify each bird, has helped track the woodpecker's population growth, Barron said. In 1996, the year post officials took over monitoring, there were approximately 135 groups of birds. There were 193 groups in 2001.

"We're doing pretty well," Barron said. "We're on a definite upswing and have received accolades from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. We're making sure what we're doing is helping the birds."

Still, the post has had to conquer obstacles.

"It's more challenging on a military post," Barron said. "We're trying to balance training and minimize the conflict between the birds and troops."

Another reason why the Fort Benning population of the red-cockaded woodpecker is growing is the placement of an average of six man-made clusters per year, each with four cavities, he said. This is an enormous help to the bird. It can take a woodpecker up to a year to build a cavity on its own. The government has it done in 45 minutes.

Officials monitor artificial cavities for five years after a bird inhabits it and inspect every cluster on post at least once per year.

The prescribed burns, though, remain the most important catalyst to the red-cockaded woodpecker contentment. Post officials try to burn at least one third of all cluster areas each year.

Like all burns on post, these, too, have other ramifications, namely smoke.

"Our first and foremost concern is the smoke impact of these burns," Greenlee said.

Post officials undertake a vigorous smoke screening process, part of which is the use of a Smoke Dispersion Index, he said. A high index means smoke disperses better into the atmosphere. In other words, when the index is high, the distance the fire's smoke travels is less.

When the index is low, the smoke travels further. Many factors determine the index number, such as atmospheric stability transport winds and mining height.

A member of the Fire Management Program, Land Management Branch, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, sets a prescribed burn.

"Based on the size of the burn and the SDI, we can determine the smoke impact distance," Greenlee said.

With accurate knowledge of the smoke impact, officials can identify smoke sensitive areas, such as highways, housing areas, the hospital and the airfield, within the smoke impact area.

However, smoke impacts can not always be eliminated in these areas.

"For this reason, when prescribed burns are conducted in areas that are within the smoke impact distance, the (Land Management) Branch notifies those units or facilities of a potential smoke problem," said Bob Larimore, chief of the branch. "When a main road or highway is within the smoke impact distance, smoke-warning signs are posted to alert motorists. These signs are strategically placed to alert motorists of the smoke ahead so they have time to react, slow down and exercise extra caution.

Larimore said he requests all personnel take precautions when they experience smoke in an area.

"The Land Management Branch is doing its best to minimize it or eliminate it," he said.

Rangers, families honor fallen soldiers

Memorial lauds service, sacrifice of two killed

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The families of two Rangers killed in the war on terrorism attended a dedication ceremony at the Ranger Memorial in Fort Benning's Dawson Barracks Complex Feb. 28.

The names of Spcs. Jonn Edmunds and Kristofor Stonesifer were added to the memorial, which honors the 3rd Ranger Battalion soldiers who have died in training and combat since 1984.

Edmunds, 20, and Stonesifer, 28, were killed when the Black Hawk helicopter they were riding in crashed while providing mobile reserve support at Camp Rhino, a remote airfield in northern Pakistan Oct. 19.

"That was when we began to understand the sacrifices we face in this war," said Lt. Col. Stefan Banach, battalion commander. "They set the example for us to follow, and today their names are added to this monument as an eternal reminder of their selfless service and sacrifice."

The parents of both soldiers, Edmund's wife, Anne, and Stonesifer's brother attended the ceremony, along with more than 700 soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment's 3rd Battalion.

"Jonn and I were always proud to be part of the ranger community," Anne Edmunds said. "He always told me, 'There's nothing the Army can give us that we can't handle.' I still believe that."

Anne thanked the rangers for their support and said she draws comfort from knowing her husband's spirit lives on in the ranger community.

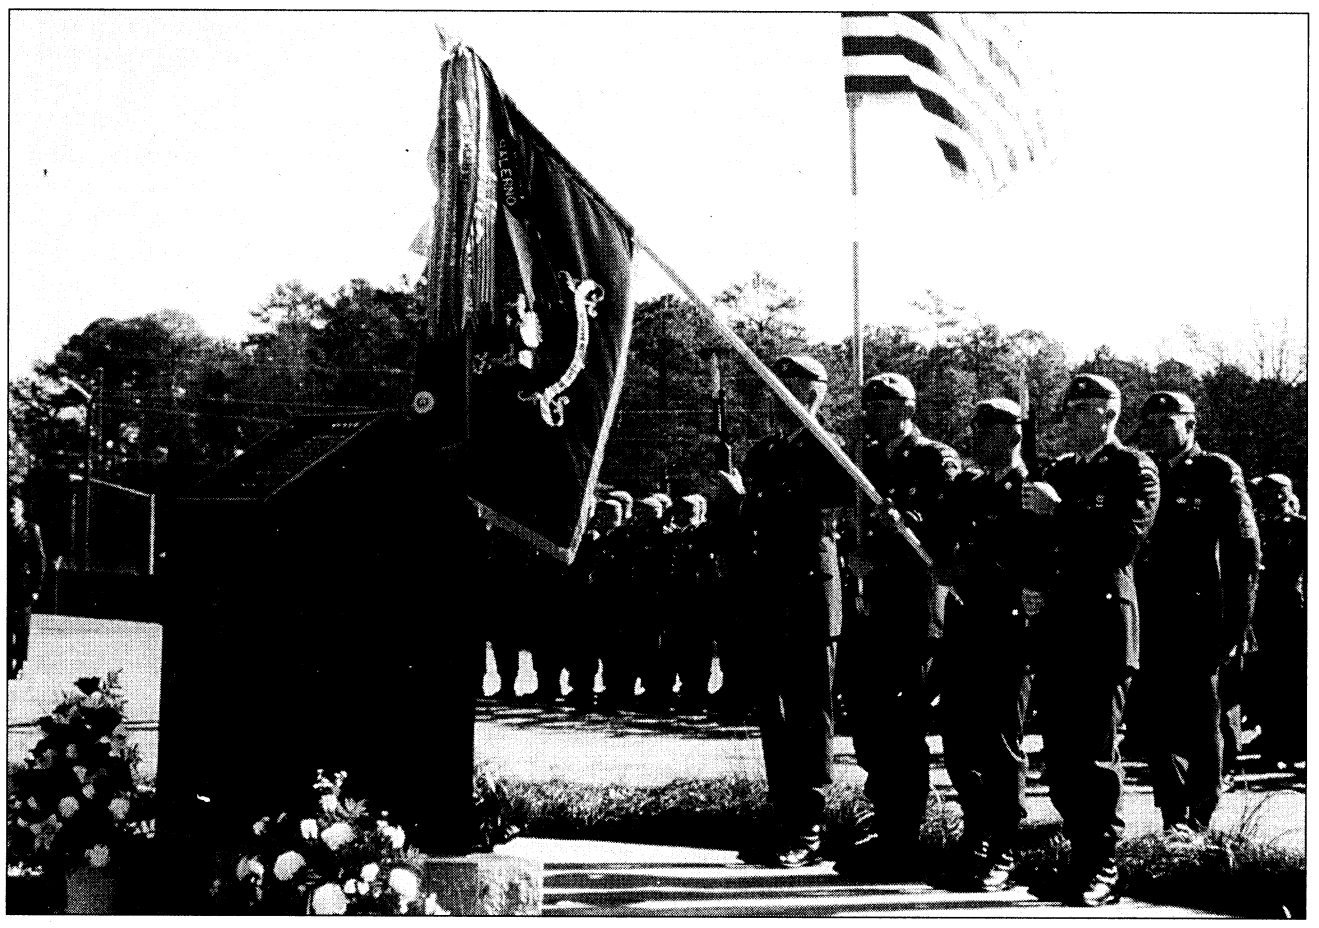
"And we'll see him again. Jonn is on deployment, a very special assignment," she said. "And he'll be waiting when we get our orders."

Donn Edmunds said his son "became complete" when he joined the ranger battalion in 1999.

"These were the happiest times of his life. As a father, it was one of the greatest things in the world to see. He was so proud," Edmunds said. "And I can see here, he made the ranger family as proud as he made this family."

Ruth Stonesifer said her son "wouldn't understand all the fuss being made over him.

"Total strangers have written to me that he's an American hero. He wouldn't define his death as a sacrifice to his country," she said. "It was just another day for him to do the best job he could."



Ruth described Kristofor as a shy and unassuming young man who "listened more than he spoke and enjoyed verbal debate," a deep thinker who studied philosophy and yearned to test his survival skills in the Montana wilderness.

"He strove to find his purpose in life. He came into his own by becoming a ranger," she said, before reading a passage from her son's last letter:

"I'd like to think I died for something important or vital to the mission here. But I don't think it is. It's just a 'gravy' mission, and I fully expect to come back without firing a shot. So if you're reading this something went terribly wrong or it was just bad luck. I've had a good life, and I'm happy to have spent it with all of you."

Stonesifer died without knowing his sister-in-law had given birth to his namesake, Kristofor Scott Stonesifer, five days before his death.

Both Stonesifer and Edmunds were awarded the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart.

Eight soldiers die, many wounded in battle

Operation Anaconda largest to date

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — More than 2,000 U.S., Afghan and coalition troops have been working since March 1 to destroy a pocket of Taliban and al Qaeda forces operating near the Afghan town of Gardez.

Eight U.S. soldiers have been killed in action and about 40 wounded in the first four days of Operation Anaconda, according to initial reports.

They include Chief Warrant Officer Stanley L. Harriman, 3rd Special Forces Group; Sgt. Bradley S. Crose, 27, Orange Park, Fla., Spc. Marc A. Anderson, 30, Brandon, Fla., and Pfc. Matthew A. Commons, 21, Boulder City, Nev., all from 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment. Sgt. Philip J. Svitak, 31, Joplin, Mo., was a member of the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment.

Navy Aviation Boatswain's Mate-Handling Petty Officer 1st Class Neil C. Roberts, 32, Woodland, Calif., was assigned to a Seal command outside of Norfolk, Va. Air Force Tech. Sgt. John A. Chapman, 36, Waco, Texas, was with the 24th Special Tactics Squadron, and Senior Airman Jason D. Cunningham, 26, Camarillo, Calif., was with the 38th Rescue Squadron.

Contrary to initial civilian media reports March 4, the most recent U.S. deaths did not result from helicopters being shot down.

In the first reported incident, a Navy Seal fell from an MH-47 helicopter when it was leaving a landing zone under fire early March 4.

In the second incident, another MH-47, operating in the same area a little later, came under fire as it approached another landing zone. A number of U.S. soldiers were killed immediately after leaving the aircraft or while attempting to disembark.

Neither helicopter crashed or was destroyed by enemy fire, according to officials.

"As I've said repeatedly, the task is far from over — not all Taliban and al Qaeda forces have been defeated, substantial pockets of resistance remain," Rumsfeld said during a March 4 Pentagon press briefing. "They are determined. They are dangerous. They will not give up without a fight.

"They are hiding in the villages and in the mountains and just across the borders, in a number of directions from Afghanistan, and they're waiting for opportunities."

Gen. Tommy Franks, commander in chief for U.S. Central Command, told reporters in a separate briefing via teleconferencing from Tampa, Fla., March 4 that intelligence could give no firm numbers on the enemy combatants currently operating in the mountains south of Gardez. He said it could be anywhere from just a couple of hundred to more than 1,000 fighters.

Franks described the enemy as fighting from fortified positions in groups as small as three individuals up to a group of 20 using small arms, machine guns, rocket propelled grenades and mortars.

He said the most effective means of destroying those groups has been a combination of direct ground fire and air power.

In the Pentagon briefing, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Richard Myers said more than 350 bombs had been dropped against enemy positions as part of the operation through March 4. Through the same period, an estimated 200 enemy fighters have been killed by air power or direct fire from forces on the ground.

Of the 40 reported wounded U.S. soldiers, Franks said about half received only minor injuries and were already back on duty.

Asked when Anaconda might conclude, Franks said, "I don't mean to sound trite, but it will be over when it's over."

Both Franks and Rumsfeld said that Anaconda would not be the last ground combat operation in Afghanistan, as many Taliban and al Qaeda combatants remain at large in other parts of the country.

"Going on the offensive is the only successful defense against terrorism," Rumsfeld said.

Army names interim armored vehicle 'Stryker'

Name taken from soldiers who died in different wars

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — The Army named its first 21st century combat vehicle in honor of two enlisted soldiers who posthumously received medals of honor for risking their lives fighting for their country.

The Stryker, the Army's new wheeled armored vehicle for its interim brigade combat teams, was unveiled Feb. 27 by Sgt. Major of the Army Jack Tilley and Robert Stryker, the brother of one of the medal-of-honor recipients. The unveiling of the vehicle took place during the Association of the U.S. Army's winter symposium at Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

"I've been a soldier for a very long time," Tilley said. "While I would occasionally wonder where and how vehicles I served on got their names, I never once envisioned myself participating in a ceremony such as the one here today. It would be an honor to simply be present at an event like this one."

The vehicle is named in honor of Pfc. Stuart S. Stryker, who served in World War II, and Spc. Robert F. Stryker, who served in Vietnam. Both soldiers were separated by a generation and fought on battlefields on opposite sides of the globe, Tilley said.

But both soldiers made the ultimate sacrifice for their country and their fellow soldiers, Tilley said.

Robert Stryker served with the 1st Infantry Division and was awarded the Medal of Honor for saving the lives of his fellow soldiers near Loc Ninh, Vietnam.

Stuart Stryker served with the 513th Parachute Infantry and was given the Medal of Honor for leading an attack near Wesel, Germany.

It was that attack that led to the capture of more than 200 enemy soldiers and freed three American pilots.

The Stryker is a 19-ton wheeled armored vehicle that bridges the gap between light and heavy forces, according to Army officials.

The interim armored vehicle possess the deployability and sustainability associated with the Army's light forces, and the lethality and survivability common to the heavy forces, officials added.

The Stryker will have 10 variants: the Infantry Carrier Vehicle, Mobile Gun System; Anti-Tank Missile Guided Vehicle; Reconnaissance Vehicle; Fire Support Vehicle; Engineer Squad Vehicle; Mortar Carrier Vehicle; Commander's Vehicle; Medical Evacuation Vehicle; and a Nuclear Biological and Chemical Reconnaissance Vehicle.

The IAV family is the first new armored vehicle that the Army has acquired since the Bradley Fighting Vehicle.

The Army plans to field six interim brigade combat teams with more than 300 Strykers in each.

In October 1999, the Army announced its first two IBCTs would be 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Divisions and the 1st Brigade, 25th Infantry Division both located at Fort Lewis, Wash.

The next brigades to transform will be 172nd Infantry Brigade (Separate), Fort Richardson, Alaska; 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment (Light), Fort Polk, La.; 2nd Brigade, 25th Infantry Division (Light), Schofield Barracks, Hawaii; and the 56th Brigade of the 28th Infantry Division (Mechanized), Pennsylvania Army National Guard.

Shinseki: Transformation more than vehicles

Fort Lewis first to receive interim armored vehicles

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Transformation is underway, but the momentum has to be picked up to meet aviation and logistics challenges, said the Army's top soldier at the annual Association of the U.S. Army Winter Symposium.

"I'm very appreciative of where Transformation is today," said Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki. "Two and a half years ago people couldn't spell transformation, but today it's a term recognized and used to describe ... a large organization challenging itself to change."

More than 100,000 soldiers and civilians attended the two-day symposium in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., where the Army unveiled its interim armored vehicle Feb. 27 to March 1. The Stryker, named in honor of two enlisted Medal of Honor recipients, is a wheeled vehicle designed to give light forces mobility and sustainability.

Transformation, however, is more than combat vehicles and Shinseki said his focus will change to the modernization of aviation and logistics.

Shinseki has always contended that 80 percent of items deployed are repair parts, fuel and ammunition. In order to successfully transform into the Objective Force, the logistics load has to decrease, he said.

The Stryker, which has 10 common variants, was designed to reduce the transport of repair parts, officials said. Interim brigade combat teams at Fort Lewis, Wash., will be the first units to receive the IAV family, and Shinseki said that soldiers are re-enlisting and extending to get to Fort Lewis to be where Transformation is taking place.

Forces Command, which is the major command that Fort Lewis falls under, is vital to Transformation, said Gen. Larry Ellis, FORSCOM's commanding general. Troops are the primary executers of Transformation, he said. FORSCOM is the higher headquarters for stateside deployable divisions.

The 4th Infantry Division at Fort Hood, Texas, is the Army's first digitized division, which means the division will be equipped with technology that generates, stores and processes data.

A lot has been done, but more has to take place before the Army reaches the Objective Force, Shinseki said. However, pay raises and housing and stabilization incentives are being made to transform the Army's personnel practices, he said.

"I would encourage both soldiers and family members to read the Army's Vision Statement," Shinseki said. "The Vision is people, readiness and Transformation. Right now we're taking care of the people who keep the Army at the quality it is today."

Dozens of leaders stood at podiums explaining their role or thoughts on Transformation. One of the newest senior leaders to take office said that with Transformation there are risks.

"There are two types of risk we must contend with ... and that is to remain ready while we transform ... and to field systems on time and within the budget," said Les Brownlee, the Army's undersecretary.

Brownlee, who has been in office since Nov. 11, spent Christmas with troops in Afghanistan.

Families prepare for Kuwait deployment

Group shares readiness responsibility

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

The family support group is a thing of the past. The new wave in family assistance is the family readiness group, and it's not just for spouses anymore. Leadership starts at the command level.

"We're very upfront with our soldiers," said Lt. Col. Pete Baer, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment. "It's their personal responsibility to ready their families for separation."

As soldiers from the battalion gear up for deployment to Kuwait, they are ironing out final details on the home front for the families they leave behind. The soldiers play an active role in the support net for their families — a strong family readiness group.

The key to involvement, said Lauren Baer, FRG representative, is having multiple events so everyone has a chance to get information. But the most important thing, she said, is making functions fun.

"If you have a potluck, people are more apt to come than if you just have a 'meeting'," she said. "We put the information they need out very quickly, then we relax and have a good time.

"Spouses need activities they can use to network and meet other people," she said. "If they don't know faces within the unit, who are they going to call when they have a problem?"

It's the soldier's responsibility to introduce their spouse to others in the unit, Lauren said.

"The soldier is the one who's leaving. Shame on them if they haven't taken their wife out to meet other people," she said. "The spouses need to gain as much information as possible so they can take care of business while the soldier is deployed."

One way they gather information about family members is through a mandatory pre-deployment checklist. The list screens for "high risk" families, or those who may have special needs, such as disabled children or an upcoming birth. But the list has uncovered more than they expected.

"It's been a phenomenal way to get information that we wouldn't have gotten otherwise," Lauren said. "There are spouses without driver's licenses, who don't speak English, or who didn't have access to their checking account. Those people could have been stuck without help for months."

When units deploy, this type of information is left with the rear detachment commander, Baer said. He can then pair those with special needs with someone else in the unit with a special skill, like knowledge of a second language. The battalion has even sent platoon leaders to the homes of some families to observe their living conditions.

> "The spouses need to gain as much information as possible so they can take care of business while the soldier is deployed."
> Lauren Baer
> FRG representative

"It's a little old-fashioned," he said, "but it works. We need to be sure they can sustain themselves while we're gone. A soldier can perform his job better if he knows his loved ones are taken care of."

The "Task Force 2-69" FRG group includes three companies from the 69th Armor Regiment, C Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, and B Company, 317th Engineer Battalion. Dispersing information happens at the company and platoon level, depending upon the size of the group.

"I think what we're doing is the absolute best we can do for our families," said Kimberly Hetzel, FRG representative for 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. "It's never easy to be separated, but the battalion made this a really easy transition for us."

AER: Assists soldiers

"This is a good deal," Vona said. "This program belongs to the Army people, and your contributions are needed."

AER also provides assistance to retirees, orphans, families and widows.

It is a nonprofit organization founded in 1942 during World War II. Since then, it has helped more than 2.6 million Army personnel with more than $685 million in financial assistance.

"The purpose of this program is to raise additional funds in order to assist eligible personnel," said Al Deane, installation AER officer. "Nine out of every 10 who apply will receive assistance."

In the past three years, Fort Benning has contributed more than $583,000 to AER, Vona said. During the same time period, post soldiers have received more than $2.5 million in assistance.

"It serves a good purpose, and soldiers need this program," said Master Sgt. Gayle Lewis, acting command sergeant major for the the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics. "We really received more than we have contributed."

The briefing allowed representatives to gather campaign materials and to allow them to make soldiers aware of AER, Lewis said.

"I'm going to make contact with every soldier in my unit and get the word out," she said. "I have no doubt in my mind we will achieve the goal of 100 percent."

According to the AER Web site, www.aerhq.org, AER can provide emergency financial needs for:

- Food, rent or utilities,
- Emergency transportation and vehicle repair,
- Funeral expenses,
- Medical and dental expenses,
- Personal needs when pay is delayed or stolen.

When seeking assistance from AER, one should bring the following items:

- Military ID Card,
- Leave and Earnings Statement,
- Leave or Permanent Change of Station orders,
- Substantiating documents (car repair estimate, rental agreement, utility bills, etc.).

"Each post has additional requirements," Deane said. "That is why it is important to visit, or call the center before you seek assistance."

For more information, visit the post AER or call 545-3530.

General: Pins star

general.

He was promoted in front of the Follow Me statue at Infantry Hall. His wife, Ginny, and the 18th Airborne Corps' Commanding General Lt. Gen. Dan McNeill pinned the star on his lapel.

Rodriguez was McNeill's assistant chief of staff prior to becoming the assistant commandant.

McNeill thanked Rodriguez for asking him to be a part of the ceremony and addressed Rodriguez's parents with gratitude and respect for raising such a great American.

Rodriguez spoke about doing his part as an American and what being a member of the Army really means.

"Titles and our lives will pass. The only thing that will stand is the truth of our cause," he said.

More than 300 guests attended the ceremony where Rodriguez was presented with a one star flag, a pistol and 11 gun salute.

During his speech, he thanked his wife for her commitment and involvement in the community and his children for their sacrifice of moving from station to station.

The general said he felt lucky to be promoted and was delighted to earn a star.

"Becoming a general is a great accomplishment," he said. "My mother has been telling me for years how great I am. Now, I think I've given her a reason that I can actually believe her."

Rodriguez is a graduate of the U.S. Military Academy. He was commissioned as a second lieutenant in 1976.

He served as a company commander for B Company, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment on Fort Benning.

Rodriguez also served as commander for both the 2nd Battalion, 502nd Infantry, at Fort Campbell, Ky., and the 325th Airborne Infantry Regiment at Fort Bragg, N.C. Rodriguez also served in the 18th Airborne Corps in 1989 as a war plans officer.

He earned a master's degree in strategic studies and national security affairs from the Naval War College in 1997 and became the assistant commandant of the U.S. Army Infantry School Oct. 12, 2000.

Army Knowledge Online unveils chat room

Collaboration center will ease soldier's fear

Patrick A. Swan
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — A "collaboration center" to let Army Knowledge Online customers hold Internet conferences with other users became a standard AKO feature in February.

The center serves as a "chat room" for users to discuss specific Army issues. Such conference rooms enable AKO user and other individuals to talk to each other simultaneously.

"This is part of the continuing evolution of AKO," said Col. Robert L. Coxe, G-6's chief technical officer. "We wanted to give soldiers a place to gather exchange concepts and ideas or be able to discuss a particular document online."

Since chat is a part of AKO Instant Messenger, users must be running AKO Instant Messenger to chat. By creating a chat room as a "moderated" room, only operators and moderators can participate, or "speak," in that room.

"When you create a chat room, you decide who does what," said David Hale, AKO's chief technician.

Coxe added the collaboration center is both secure and persistent. Thus, when a given chat is completed, its text does not vanish.

Rather, the chat room administrator can edit, save and archive the session as a text document for later viewing by anyone given access.

A systems administrator with the 1st Armored Division in Germany recently praised the AKO collaboration center as, "pretty cool."

"Tell the gang (AKO folks) that put it up 'Good Job!' and pat them on the back," said Spc. David A. McLemore, of 1st Brigade, 1st AD. "My guys used the (heck) out of AKO-S (the secret-level AKO site) at the recent Victory Focus (V Corps exercise). A lot of them like using the Web mail there better than having to use their SIPRnet (secret-level, organic) e-mail accounts. (With AKO-S), they can go to any SIPRnet machine and check their e-mail. And since they don't have to go through my shop to get an account, they can move a lot faster.

"I can see it now," McLemore added, "entire chat channels dedicated to exercises and new computer systems so that when soldiers run into a problem on the systems they can put a "shout" out for help."

While the collaboration enter was designed to help soldiers in coordinating documents, concepts or information papers, Coxe said he really had no preconceived notion on how it might be used in practice.

"We are going to be surprised," he said. "Soldiers have an amazing way of figuring out practical uses for themselves independent of what we designers might think."

For instance, Coxe said, soldiers are using the chat rooms to conduct after-action reviews. He also described how some military police use it for briefing off-duty shifts online. Soldiers in those off-duty shifts participate from home or remote computer workstations, rather than assembling en masse at the MP station.

The collaboration center's conference rooms complement the AKO Instant Messenger, which allows users to communicate through a Web browser with other Bantu Messenger users (the AKO default standard), and users of ICQ, Yahoo! Messenger and MSN Messenger on Windows, Macintosh and Unix. An instant message is a private, two-way communication online between a user and others.

Hale said AKO Instant Messenger is the only instant messenger that allows users to send instant messages to users on ICQ, Yahoo! Messenger, MSN Messenger, and Bantu.

"AKO Instant Messenger requires no software to install, and all settings are stored on AKO's servers, making it the easiest Instant Messenger solution for users who move between computers often," he said.

AKO Instant Messenger is a secure means to maintain privacy, Hale said, because it uses an encrypted protocol between client and server, so users can be sure messages sent between AKO Instant Messenger users are not being read by other people.

Nevertheless, AKO Instant Messenger works unbelievably well through firewalls and proxy servers, Hale said.

"In many cases, AKO Instant Messenger is the only way to connect to ICQ, MSN, and Yahoo," he said.

The AKO Instant Messenger contact list is similar to other instant messenger contact and buddy lists. It also automatically synchronizes with one's MSN Messenger and Yahoo! contact list whenever connected to their networks.

In addition, Hale said any changes a user has made to his contacts or blocked list from another client will automatically be updated. The exception is ICQ, which stores it's contacts list on a user's computer, and not on a central server. As a result, there is currently no way for AKO Instant Messenger to import ICQ contact lists.

> "This is part of the continuing evolution of AKO."
> Col. Robert L. Coxe
> Chief technical officer

A user's contact list is a list of people to whom one can easily send instant messages. They could be co-workers, relatives or other people one knows. By running AKO Instant Messenger, users can see if their contacts are online and available for a conversation.

A contact list can contain people from any instant messaging network which one is connected.

There is no limit to the number of AKO Instant Messenger contacts. Users may have up to 1,000 contacts per group, and an unlimited number of groups.

Pets: Found neglected in Fort Benning residence

Kane weighed only 37 pounds — 20 30 pounds less than what's normal r his frame — and has a severe case heartworm.

His muscles were so deteriorated d weak when he got to the Vet Clinic at he could hardly lift himself off the ound. He was not expected to live rough the weekend.

The vet staff fed him every few urs during the weekend, which was either dog could handle due to runken stomachs.

Kane had regained three pounds and a little energy by Monday.

"If they had registered them with us six months ago, this all could have been avoided," Taylor said.

The animals, in fact, were never taken to the Vet Clinic, although their former owners lived on post for more than six months.

The appropriate agencies are investigating this matter and will take appropriate action, said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

"I cannot tolerate actions like these," Torres said. "When actions like this occur, I will investigate the incident and take appropriate actions at my level or provide a recommendation to the person's chain of command."

Officers and NCOs should put the word out in their respective units that pet neglect is a serious offense and persons who do it may be subjected to a full range of administrative or judicial actions, he said.

All domestic pets on Fort Benning require registration through the vet clinic within 14 days of arrival on post.

The two dogs would have been screened for rabies, distemper and heartworm, and had all vaccinations updated. There is no fee for registration.

"Neglect is in the eye of the beholder," said Capt. Louis Huzella, post veterinarian. "Some people don't know how to care for their pets due to a lack of education or information. But we can try to help them and give them a course of action.

"The course of action now is to make the animals well and find them a new home," Huzella said.

Making Kane well will require more extensive treatment due to the severity of the heartworm disease, Huzella said. The very expensive treatment could have been avoided by a simple heartworm preventative given once a month.

Pets allowed on post, which include cats, dogs, small caged animals and horses, are required to have updated vaccinations. Dogs on post are required to be on heartworm preventative year round.

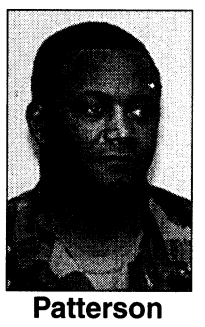
Soldier receives medal

Volunteers in Nicaragua for those in need



Christina Hayashi
Special to the Bayonet©

A soldier with the Combined Arms and Tactic Directorate, received the Military Outstanding Voluntary Service Medal Tuesday for his service to the children of Nicaragua.

Capt. Donald Patterson has been spending his Christmas vacation serving the basic needs of Nicaraguan children.

"He exemplifies many soldiers today. He always continues to volunteer," said Col. Jeffery Yeager, CATD's deputy director.

"The reason why I work in Nicaragua is because there are no U.S. forces there except for the embassy," Patterson said. "I have seen the devastation firsthand."

Patterson

Patterson deployed to Nicaragua after Hurricane Mitch in 1996 on a humanitarian effort.

Since then he, with the support of his chain of command, has helped children experience the joys of being a child.

"It takes a pretty unselfish person to go to the lengths that Don goes to in order to help less fortunate people," said Capt. Jeremy Godwin with CATD.

Patterson works with two churches; Mohavia and Blue Fields in Corinto, Nicaragua, to help pick the children whom are most in need of basic items like clothes and toys.

"The reason why I work with the church is so I don't single out any one individual or any one family and help them," Patterson said.

"My chain of command helps me by writing a letter to ensure that the excess baggage I carry can go over there," Patterson said.

"I also contact the embassy when I am going over, so they know I'm coming. When I get to customs, it helps. I don't have to pay for excess baggage."

Patterson also gets some help from the Fort Benning Main Mall Post Exchange.

"They'll help me out by telling me when the sales and discounts are. They'll help me with additional discounted items, but no more than usual because their policy is that they have to help the agencies here on post," Patterson said.

Patterson is currently working to refurbish computers to take to the children.

He is also working with a company called River Deep to buy interactive computer programs for education purposes.

"With that program they will be able to learn different skills," Patterson said. "75 percent of the country is in poverty, so many of the children will never go to school."

Orientation good way to get information

Many learn about post at briefing

AER, DeCA, PX. Do you find yourself wading through a river of acronyms? Do building numbers have you confused? Help is on the way.

The answers to these questions can be found by attending the Newcomers and Spouses Orientation.

"It gave me a lot of information. They also explained health care and gave a point of contact," said Sheila Sheils, a recent attendee of an orientation.

"It's also a good way to meet people."

The orientation is usually held on the second Friday of every other month from 8 a.m. until noon, at the Family Unit Network Center in Building 356, on Ingersoll Avenue.

All military card holders, soldiers and their families are invited to attend, as well as civilian employees of Fort Benning who want to know more about the community.

Carmen Rivera, the Relocation Readiness Program manager with Army Community Service encourages newcomers and spouses to come find out what Fort Benning has to offer and for locations and times of operation for services.

"We focus on being able to become independent and know what the installation has to offer," Rivera said.

Newcomers and spouses will receive a canvas bag filled with information on various groups on post, activities in Columbus.

Representatives from groups will give a generalized overview — approximately 10 to 15 minutes in length — on what their organization is, what they stand for and how they can help with the unique aspects of the military lifestyle.

Some representatives include those from Martin Army Community Hospital, the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, Housing, and Volunteer Coordinator's office. Members of the Columbus Visitors Center will also give a presentation on activities going on in Columbus.

Child care will be provided by Tot Town. Parents must register their children prior to the orientation. They will receive a voucher after the meeting to redeem when they pick up their children. Time to get to and from the FUN Center is allotted.

Clear Creek Pond under control

Soldiers tackle complex task for post

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Members of the 63rd Engineer Company have been busy as beavers at Clear Creek Pond since Feb. 8.

2nd Platoon is replacing an antiquated and rusted culvert that sat under Pine Tree Road spillway with a new, concrete culvert through which overflowing pond water will traverse.

"This is a college-level project," said Col. Michael W. Biering, commander, 36th Engineer Group. "They're fighting the elements, and for 20 to 30 years, it was patched but never fixed right. It was a mess."

The complex project involved soldiers building a sand bag wall off a beaver dam to slow down the flow of pond water and, ultimately, stopping it.

The wall directed the water flow away from the original culvert and allowed that area to dry. Soldiers are in the process of laying down sand, rock and geotextile, a substance that prevents erosion. When done, they will compact it and place the new culvert.

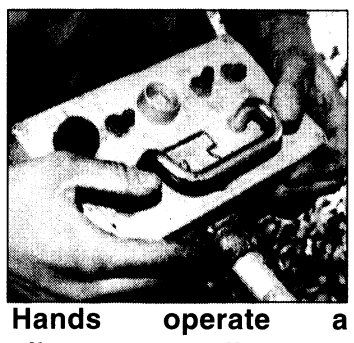
Once the culvert is in its correct position, soldiers will take away the sand bags to allow the water to flow into the new tunnel.

Later, they will build another head wall for a new bridge and, lastly, construct the road over the culvert.

"It's not an easy job, but they called on us to do it, so it feels good to know they have trust in our abilities," said Sgt. Johnny Johnson, squad leader.

Soldiers are working 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, in rotations, to get the job done.

"The long hours and equipment familiarization are helping us prepare for war-time missions," Johnson said. "Plus, we're getting hands-on experience with the civilian equipment we borrowed."



Soldiers are using a civilian excavator and back hoe along with the company's air compressor, crane, light set and Small Emplacement Excavator truck. Later, they will use its bulldozers, road graders and compactors.

"Not only does this training set us up for success in the future, it helps the post save money and benefits the pond's surrounding wildlife and entire ecosystem," Johnson said.

The project did come with its share of challenges.

The first was to build the sand bag wall.

"We had to jump in the water to lay the sand bags, but even though it was wet and cold, we all were motivated and getting along because everyone was suffering through it," Johnson said.

Hands operate a vibratory roller, a machine that compacts and smoothes ground.

Another challenge was to keep the new culvert area dry to continue to work. For instance, during the weekend, heavy rain pushed water levels over the wall and onto the work surface to set the soldiers back a few days.

"It's a major learning experience," said Spc. Casey Lenker. "I've upgraded roads, but I've not done culverts or anything to this extent."

"No matter how hard you try, you can't stop water," he said. "You can slow it down dramatically, but it always finds a way to seep through."

One consolation to the trials and tribulations the soldiers are experiencing is the amount of operator time, or stick time, they are receiving on the dozers, cranes and other equipment,

Calhoun and Lenker shovel dirt away from an area in order to place a culvert.

Lenker said.

Soldiers are enjoying their time, said Pvt. Mark Calhoun, who is participating in his first real project.

"When we look at what we accomplished so far, it can only increase our confidence level," he said.

Another interesting aspect of the mission is all the new information soldiers are learning, which gives them a more diverse skill set, he said.

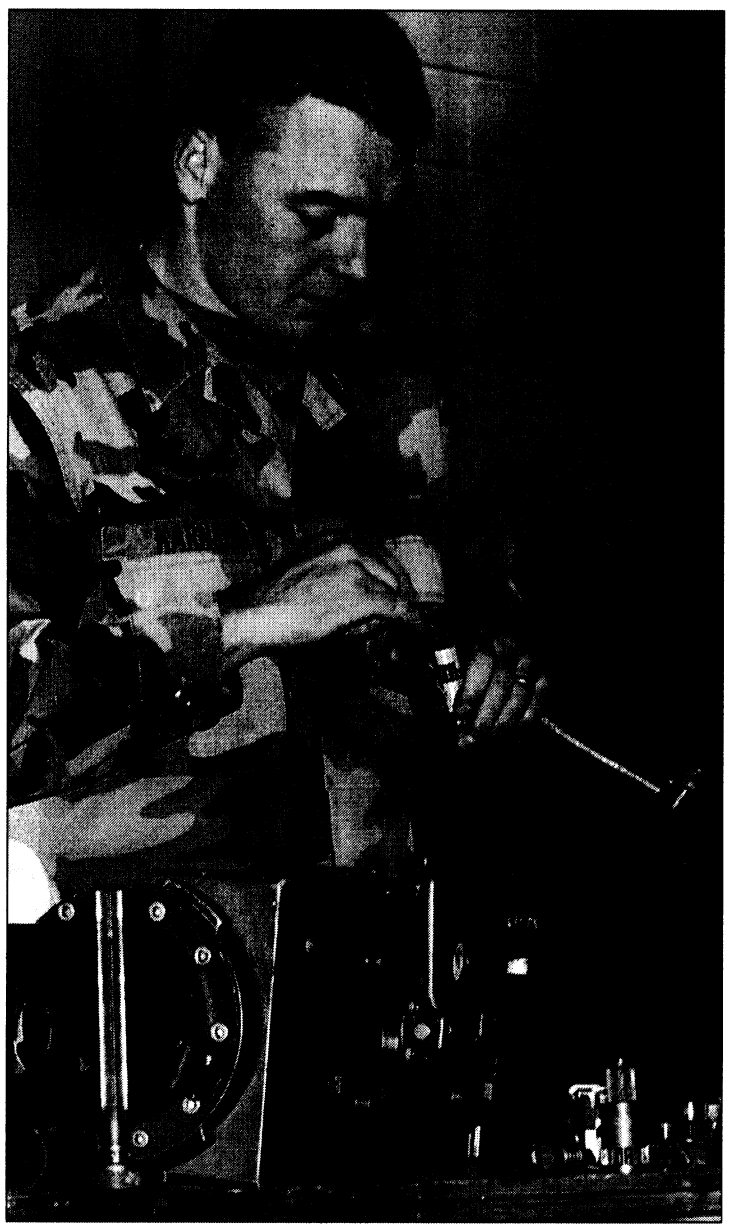
"This is great training," Biering said. "They get to do what they signed up for when they joined the Army."

As with all the company's projects, this one is mutually beneficial.

"This is a great opportunity to contribute to the installation," Biering said. "There's no value added to so much equipment sitting in the motor pool ... This saves the installation precious dollars."

Biering said he was glad the post called on the company.

"We intend to be visible, active and good stewards of Fort Benning," Biering said. "The 36th Group has a representative (in the 63rd Engineer Co.) that's responsive to the post's needs, and the 63rd is the only show in town, so we're going to work them hard."



If all the other projects, such as the Post Catholic Chapel demolition, hospital parking lot and walking trail, the group's physical readiness training facility, and Garnsey trench line, are any indication, busy as a beaver they have been.

And eager as a beaver, too.

"Although we're a (Forces Command) unit on a (Training and Doctrine Command) installation, we are one community," said 1st Sgt. John S. Johnson.

"We are always happy to contribute to the quality of life on Fort Benning."

Soldiers of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, performed command maintenance and systems checks Monday to prepare their Bradley Fighting Vehicles to ensure everything was ready for storage during their upcoming deployment to Kuwait.

C Company and 2nd Bn., 69th Armored Regt. will deploy to Kuwait as part of Operation Desert Spring.

The operation, formerly known as Intrinsic Action, is part of a regular rotation that has been going on since the Gulf War to maintain security and stability in the gulf region against any further aggression.

"The training has been good, and we are ready to go," said Ryan Limbaugh, BFV driver. "In Kuwait, we will be able to get some real world training."

The company qualified crew, trained on force protection and family readiness, and qualified on their weapon to prepare for deployment.

"The training we've done has

Spc. Chris Mumma performs systems checks with Pvt. Ryan Limbaugh.

greatly enhanced our readiness," said Maj. George Fredrick, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., executive officer. "The brigade developed a time line for our training. Each day and week that goes by, the more we are prepared to deploy."

This deployment is also a training opportunity for the soldiers, said Fredrick.

"Fort Benning is a great post for training; however, Kuwait offers a tremendous opportunity for maneuver training," Fredrick said. "Our last desert training was (the National Training Center) in June 2001. We are excited about the opportunity to maneuver and conduct live-fire exercises in a different environment."

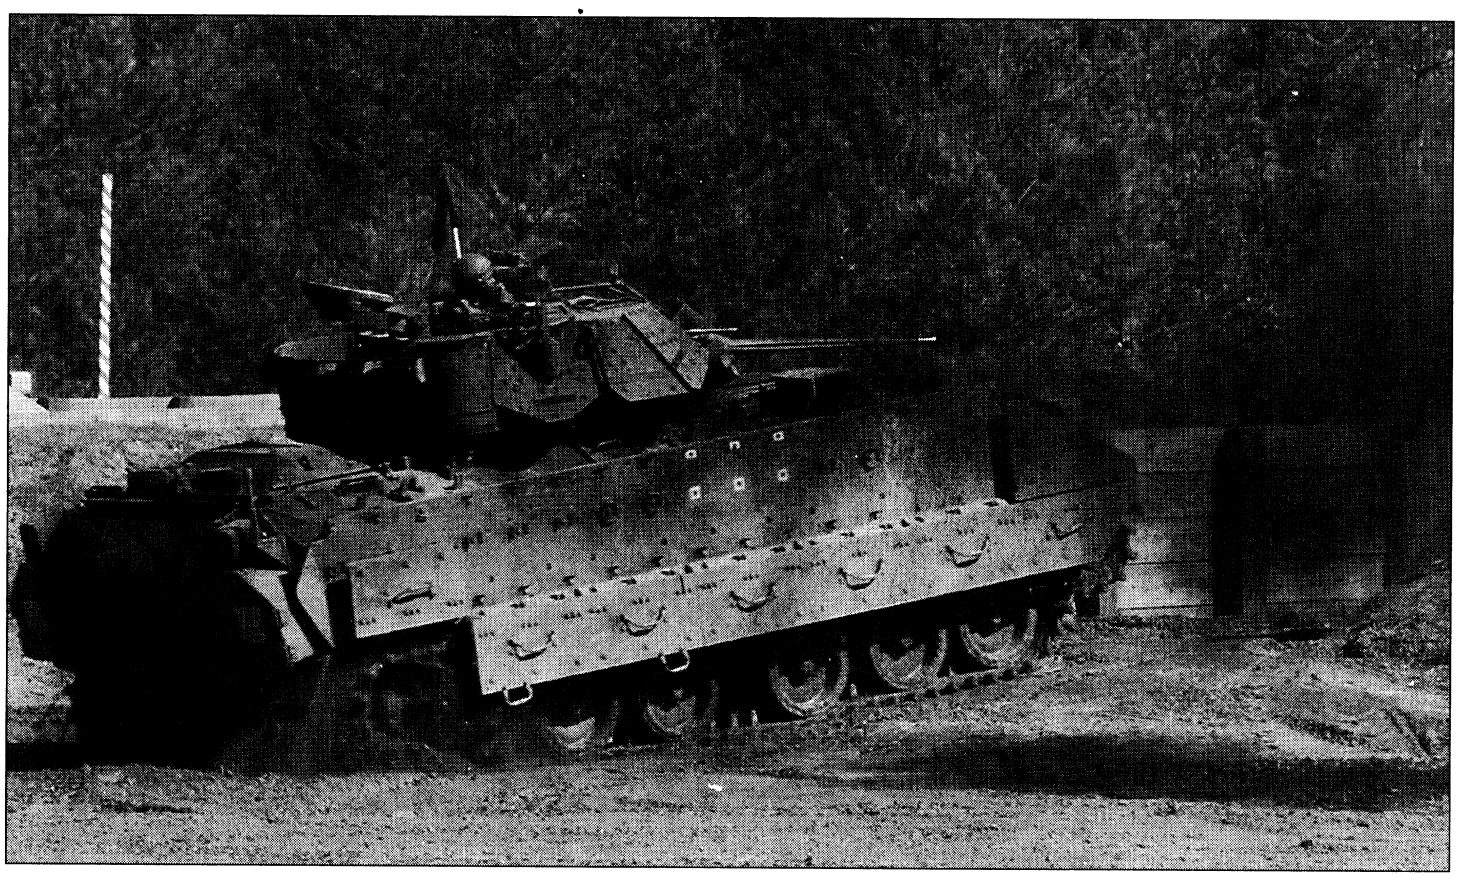
Executing live-fire exercises and maneuvering in a different environment will be beneficial, Fredrick said.

"It's going to be a great experience for people to see a different culture and way of life," said Spc. Chris Mumma, senior BFV driver for 1st platoon. Mumma said he was excited to go.

Soldiers understand the ramifications of their duties, and they are ready to make some sacrifices.

"I'm not happy about leaving my family, but you have to accomplish the mission," said Staff Sgt. Dennis Karns, BFV commander.

Soldiers practice for HOTEX demonstration



Training shows capabilities

Members of the 1st and 2nd Infantry Battalions, 29th Infantry Regiment, conducted a hands on tactical training exercise — known as a HOTEX — with Bradley fighting vehicles, small arms weapons and other equipment Tuesday at Red Cloud Range.

"HOTEX is great training for soldiers and officers alike, but it also gives the foreign dignitaries who observe the demonstration a good idea of the fire power a mechanized infantry squad can bring to the battlefield," said Staff Sgt. Lezlie Perkins, range safety officer.

"It's a great chance for the officers and dignitaries to see the Bradley's M-240-C co-axle machine gun and 25 mm cannon laying down suppressive fire while the dismounted troops move down range," Perkins said. "It gives everyone watching an idea of how the mounted crews and dismounted squads work together on a small scale."

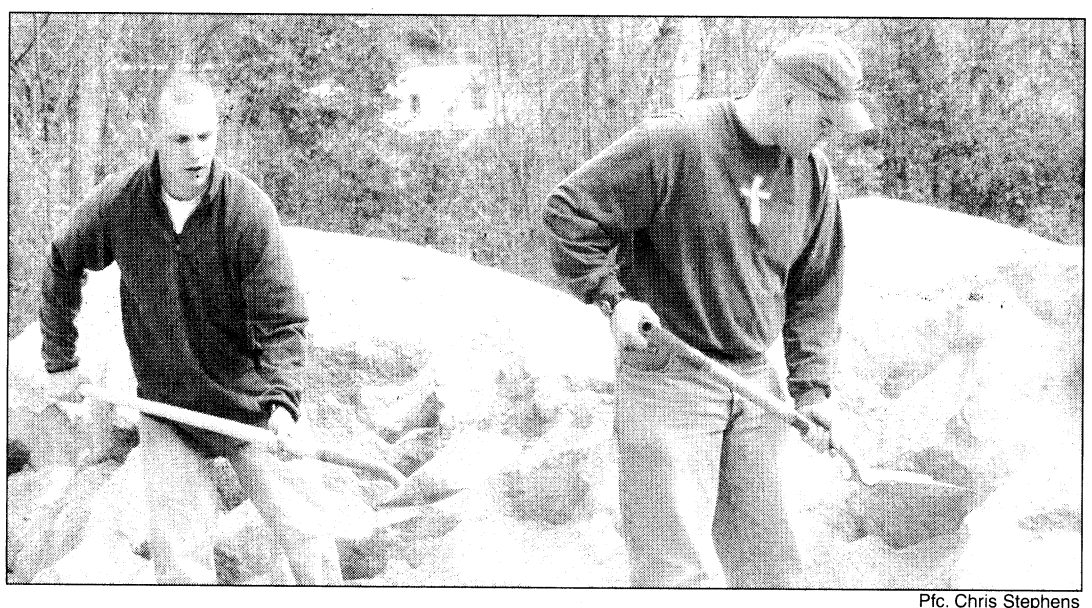
Pfc. Kyle Neller

A Bradley Fighting Vehicle engages targets during the hands-on training exercise Tuesday. The exercise showed future mechanized battalion commanders weapon systems their soldiers will use.

Another purpose of the HOTEX was to familiarize future mechanized infantry battalion commanders with the weapon systems their soldiers will use.

"It is very important that commanding officers know the capabilities of the weapons their soldiers wield," said Lt. Col. Chris Lockhart, 1st Bn., 29th Inf Regt., battalion commander. "It helps them make tactically and technically sound decisions while commanding a battalion during battle."

The rehearsals and demonstration are also good for building Bradley crew cohesion, said Spc. John Lechner, narrator.



"We get a lot of NCO support," Lechner said. "The sergeants have to get down and dirty with the rest of the soldiers. It also gives gunners a chance to put some rounds down range, 'steel on steel and metal on metal.'"

The HOTEX also keeps crews ready for gunnery.

"This training helps to sustain gunnery capabilities," said Staff Sgt. Wright Mitchell, Bradley commander. "The more live rounds our crews put down range, the more prepared they are to qualify."

After each HOTEX and rehearsal soldiers conducted an after action review, which helped the soldiers even more.

"It helps us to prevent problems we may face in the future," Perkins said. "The HOTEX was a very exciting and informative demonstration as well as outstanding training for the mechanized infantrymen."

Officers help build homes for community

Officers from Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, helped the Columbus community with Habitat for Humanity March 1.

They helped lay concrete slabs for homes being built as part of their community service project.

"It feels great to come here and help out the community," said 2nd Lt. Jon B. McFarling. "It also gives us a chance to get out of the garrison and have fun."

The company decided as a group to get involved with the organization because of the need for volunteers.

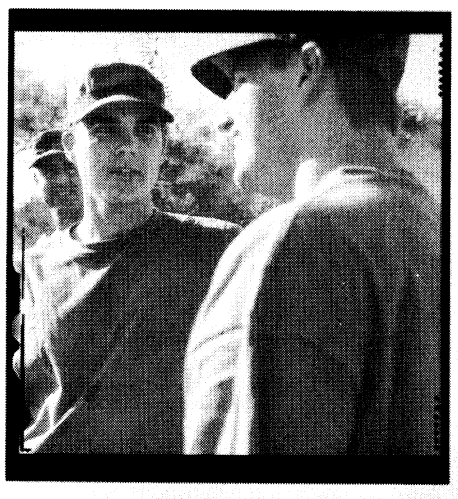
"There is a group of permanent volunteers out here," said 2nd Lt. Giao T. Do. "They are the ones who should be praised for their work because they are here everyday doing this."

The soldiers job was to fill in the foundation of the house with fillen gravel and smooth it out.

"It feels good to know we are out here helping to provide housing for needy people who wouldn't be able to afford it," McFarling said. "I would like for us to get out here more often."

By the end of the day, the officers achieved all their goals. Another house is ready to be built on the foundation they helped make.

"The Fort Benning community is our largest supporter in this area," said Cathy Walker, Habitat for Humanity volunteer coordinator.



Habitat for Humanity had 4,000 volunteers from the Columbus area, and 500 of those volunteers were from Fort Benning, Walker said.

"The outreach we receive from Fort Benning is great," Walker said. "It really shows the military cares."

Habitat for Humanity is a nonprofit, nondenominational Christian housing organization.

COMMUNITY

Long may it wave

commentary

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Sept. 11, 2001. A tidal wave of terror rolled across the U.S., leaving in its wake fear, suspicion, pockets of hysteria, and anger.

Anger spawned a new generation of patriots who rose up with righteous indignation and cried, "You won't get away with this."

And the nation went to war with terrorism.

Monday marks the six-month anniversary of the terrorist attacks on the U.S. Do we celebrate or mourn? Do we toast to our resilience? Weep for our dead? Reaffirm our conviction to root out evil?

Just where do we go from here?

I expect we'll collectively march onward, looking to the future while casting furtive glances over our shoulders.

I'd like to think we've matured, given up our obsession with sex scandals and character assassination. Certainly we can never recapture our innocence, or what little of it we could claim, but perhaps we've learned to embrace the values of more innocent times, before reality TV, when entertainment was more vaudeville than vulgar, when family was sacred.

And when patriotism was the norm.

Just the other day, while searching through The Bayonet archives, I came across very old photos of a young Fort Benning. I was struck by how much of Main Post still looks as it did 70 years ago, when America was riding the wave of patriotism that carried it through the first world war and into the second.

"I wish we lived back then," said my son.

"We do. Everything old is new again," I replied.

The nation's at war, flags are flying high and we're all practicing patience, "the new form of patriotism," at checkpoints and airports and ball games. But how long can it last?

If America lost its innocence with the invention of the television, it can be said we lost our patience with the invention of the microwave. We want everything fast. When we want to eat, we want to eat now, so we drive through. When we want to talk, we want to talk now, so we carry cell phones. When we want long hair or nails, we visit a salon. We want it NOW. Instant gratification.

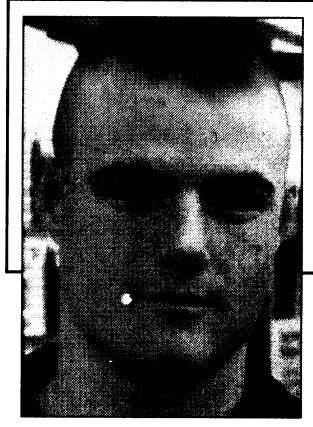
The war on terrorism promises to be lengthy and tedious. Do we have what it takes to stick it out? Will we still be waving flags a year from now? Or two? Or 10, if it takes that long? Or will our patience wear thin, our fervor flag?

Military families, more than any others, must be patient. When news of the war effort no longer makes the front page, and the nation shifts its focus elsewhere, it's entirely likely our soldiers will still be searching in far-off lands for an elusive enemy.

When once again, the heroes who make headlines are athletes and entertainers instead of firemen and soldiers — we'd be naive to think it won't happen — military families will still be fighting on the homefront, kissing our soldiers good-bye and crossing our fingers.

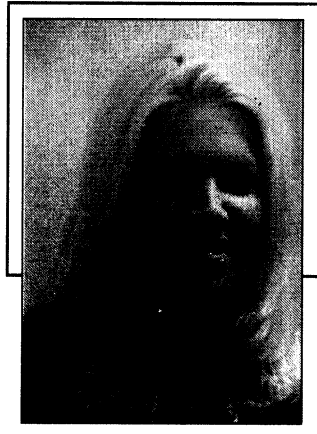
Will our hearts be in it?

Will our patriotism stand the test of time?



Six months after the terrorist attacks, how has your life changed?

1st Lt. Stacy Picard, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I've seen more support of our nation's leaders and Armed Forces. I hope it continues. People have been more wary about travel, but security measures have been increased."



Greg Ratliff, AAFES vendor— "The economy has changed for the worse. I'm in a business that was growing every year up until September. Things are getting a little better, but sales aren't where they were before that."

Pvt. Dylan Cronin, 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment — "Security has gotten tighter on post. We have more checkpoints, more MPs and longer waits. But the wait isn't too long, and it's worth it to be safe."

Jodi Dillon, family member — "I find myself being more suspicious of people since September 11, and it has only gotten worse over the past six months."

Laura Campbell, family member — "I feel the nation as a whole initially became stronger as a result of the attacks. But as the show of flags has faded, so has the unity."

Pvt. Johnny Christian, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "People were more patriotic after September 11, with flags flying everywhere. But that's all dying down now. It's a shame it takes something like that to get people to show their patriotism."

Fort Benning celebrates the week of the exceptional child

'She's good for my spirit'

'Team' meets challenges head on, finds success

Rhonda Scott remembers the first time she met Marielis Hiner. The 6-year-old was confined to a wheelchair with limited use of her arms and hands as a result of cerebral palsy, a nonprogressive chronic disorder that hinders movement and nerve functions.

But the first-grader was all smiles and giggles, eager to make new friends.

"My heart just went out to her," Scott said. "I just wanted to help her."

That was four years ago. Now Scott, a 48-year-old grandmother of seven and an ordained minister, still wants to help Marielis, but the 10-year-old has a strong streak of independence and tends to "give as good as she gets," Scott said.

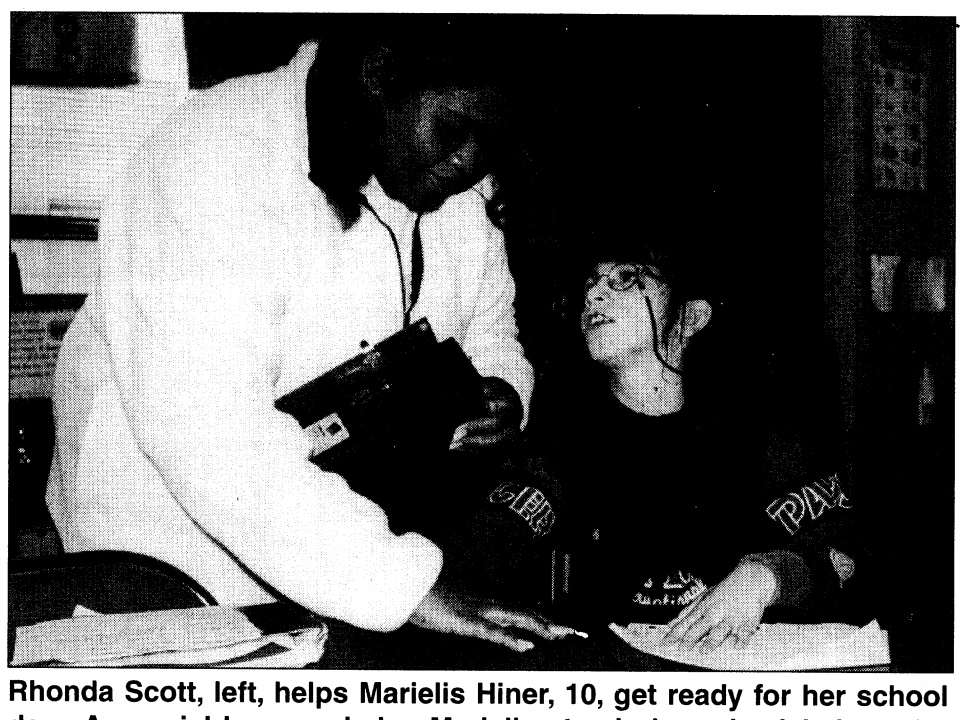
"Marielis gives to me. She's always happy, always smiling. And every time she achieves — even the smallest thing — it blesses me. She's good for my spirit," said Scott, who pastors a church in Phenix City and ministers at a local nursing home.

Scott is also an education assistant at Stowers Elementary School, where Marielis attends fourth grade. The two have worked together for four years, and they've developed a special bond.

"She's very nice," Marielis said of Scott. "She's helped me for a very long time. We're a team."

"My desire is to see her do everything she wants to do," Scott said. "She has dreams — she wants to walk, and I want to see her do it. Once it looked like she wouldn't be able to write, only with a typewriter, but now she can write her name.

"I tell her she can do what other kids do. It may have to be modified, may be slower, but she's doing it and she's proud of herself. I tell her everyday, 'Look in the mirror. You are beautiful,'" Scott said.



The working relationship between Marielis and Scott stems from Department of Defense Education Activity policy, which requires special needs students to receive individual assistance to the extent necessary.

Scott is with Marielis most of the school day, except for lunch breaks. She helps her with her school work, lifts her in and out of her wheel chair and "Rifton" chair, a modified desk that holds Marielis in a standing position, and assists with her most basic needs.

But Scott's services go beyond the call of duty. She calls her job "a ministry," and her relationship with Marielis "more than friends." She attended Marielis' first communion and birthday parties, and Marielis has visited Scott's home.

"From the start it wasn't just a job to her," said Marielis' mother, Lis Hiner. "She wanted to learn to help Marielis. Her main concern has always been Marielis. She's her best advocate. They have a wonderful rapport."

Through Fort Benning School's individual learning program, Marielis is "streamlined" into a general education classroom, where she works with Scott's assistance in standard fourth-grade subjects like math and social studies, her favorite.

Rhonda Scott, left, helps Marielis Hiner, 10, get ready for her school day. A special harness helps Marielis stay in her wheelchair, and a wrist brace helps her control the movement of her right hand. Marielis also uses a special desk, contoured to fit her body, that holds her in an a standing position.

> "I remembered what it was like when I was a kid. Kids with disabilities were outcasts. I had a fear it would be that way for Marielis."
> Lis Hiner
> Marielis' mother

But Scott also takes Marielis to "resource classrooms," like speech, special education, physical therapy and occupational therapy.

Though Marielis reads at a second-grade level, she comprehends written material above a fourth-grade level and completes math and writing assignments on her laptop computer. She speaks both English and Spanish fluently, and serves as an interpreter for her grandmother, who lives with the family.

"When Marielis started school, I remembered what it was like when I was a kid," her mother said. "Kids with disabilities were outcasts. They were isolated. I had a fear it would be that way for Marielis.

Rhonda Scott watches as Marielis Hiner practices vocabulary words with her speech therapist.

"But I was amazed. She has always been given the same opportunities as the other students. From day one, they've welcomed us, and encouraged my husband and I to go to the school to see what she's working on and how she's doing it so we can implement the same strategies at home."

Natasha Bailey, Marielis' special education teacher, said this method of "team teaching" and the social interaction Marielis enjoys in the classroom makes for a well-rounded education.

"There's so much at work here, and so many people contributing. And of course Marielis is eager to learn, very enthusiastic. She's the only student I know who asks for homework," Bailey said. "She's naturally social, but keeping her in a general education classroom and pulling her for resources helps with social skills, and that's important for anyone who's dealing with the challenges of a disability."

Lis said her fears of ostracism have also proved unfounded. Her daughter's classmates, though genuinely concerned about her condition, accept and embrace Marielis without reserve.

"There again, I credit the school," she said. "They involve Marielis in the classroom, and involve the other students in helping with her. They get to push her chair or help her at recess. It brings out the caring nature in them.

"They love Marielis and she loves them. It shows."

Stories and photos by Bridgett Siter

look CLOSER look look look look look

Marielis Hiner is a typical 10-year-old. She likes to play dominoes and basketball and something called "Monkey in the Middle." She loves to whisper and giggle and tease. And she loves movies and pizza.

But there's something different about Marielis. She "drives" a chair. It's a cool new chair with "one hand drive," and it reclines. She's pretty proud of it, and she doesn't mind showing it off.

So just ask. That's the way Marielis likes it. No need to point, whisper or sneek a peek. Feel free to approach, as long as she's with her parents and not obviously preoccupied.

And here's a few more tips Marielis would like you to keep in mind when you see someone with a disability:

• Don't pretend it isn't there, whether it's a chair, a brace or a breathing device.

• Always ask before you touch.

• Don't "talk around" a disabled person. When you have a question or comment, look directly at the person you're talking to.

• And don't "talk down," speak excessively slow or use baby words. A speech impediment doesn't indicate a problem with hearing or comprehension.

• Don't admonish children for their curiosity. Allow them to ask questions.

• Don't be afraid to invite a disabled child to visit your home. Ask his or her parents what special accommodations the child will need, (i.e. foods, assistance to the bathroom, etc.)

• Ask if they need assistance. Don't assume.

Program helps families with special needs

Enrollment mandatory for qualified

> "It's a big benefit, underutilized, because there's been ... a stigma attached to the EFMP label."
> Marsha Collins
> Exceptional Family Member Program

Fort Benning's Exceptional Family Member Program is designed to prevent hardships and offer resources to the families of those enrolled, said Marsha Collins, EFMP program manager at Fort Benning.

"It's really a simple matter of looking at the family member's special considerations to prevent hardships, medical or educational, with each assignment," Collins said. "It's a big benefit, underutilized, because there's been a misconception, a stigma, attached to the EFMP label. It doesn't cripple a career, but when a soldier's family has to deal with special needs without the assistance of EFMP, that definitely does affect his family and his career."

An exceptional family member is defined as a child or adult dependent with any physical, emotional, developmental or intellectual disorder that requires special treatment, therapy, educational considerations, training or counseling. Special needs range from mild learning disabilities to medical conditions such as asthma, Down Syndrome, blindness or other severe disabilities.

More than 50,000 are enrolled in the program Armywide. Of those, 36,157 are special needs children. Enrollment became mandatory in 1986.

Active duty, reserve soldiers in the Active Guard Reserve, reservists on active duty exceeding 30 days and AGR personnel serving under authority of title 10 United States Code with exceptional family members are required to enroll and update their records every three years.

Collins said enrollment information is "very private." It's not available to selection boards but is entered in a data bank available only to DA EFMP and installation managers.

Enrollment allows Army assignment managers to review the medical and educational needs of exceptional family members during the assignment process.

Enrollment does not change a soldier's eligibility for worldwide assignment. Soldiers with family members who qualify for the program should contact the EFMP medical enrollment section at 545-4043.

League offers fun for challenged children

Marielis Hiner once dreamed of being a basketball star. But these days she has her eye on a new sport. The 10-year-old is a member of Challenger Little League Baseball, especially for disabled children and their families.

With the help of team "buddies," volunteers who hold hands, swing bats or push wheel chairs, children with various physical and mental disabilities can participate in America's favorite pastime.

"I've been coaching ball for 25 years," said David Crouse, the league's co-president. "I've been coaching Challenger League for six years, and this is the most fun I've ever had. It's been great."

Registration will take place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday at Columbus State University's Woodruff Gym. A $10 donation is requested, but not required. Proceeds will go to the league.

Challenger League opening ceremonies and first game will be at 10 a.m. April 6 at Golden Park.

Countrys BBQ will provide meals at $5 a plate. Players, coaches and buddies eat free.

To learn more about being a Challenger League volunteer, or to learn more about registering for Challenger Little League, call Crouse at 545-3449 or 562-9403, or Wanda Clayton at 563-2125.

OSC helps community

The Officers' Spouses' Club is more than just coffees and chit-chatting about shopping.

Fund-raisers such as the annual bazaar ornament sales, cookbooks and proceeds from the Thrift Shop provide financial assistance to individuals and organizations within the tricommunity area.

One way the OSC helps is through the welfare fund.

Last year the committee awarded $8,900 and so far has given $3,000 in aid.

Kay Beasock, OSC Welfare chairperson, listed some examples of how the funds have been used in the past: Purchasing eyeglasses for Fort Benning students who would not otherwise be able to afford them; training materials for the Fort Benning Leadership Seminar to help young military wives develop leadership skills; medical equipment for Columbus Regional Hospital's high risk nursery.

Girls, Inc. was a recipient of the welfare funds. They used the money to build a mobile Literacy Library that serves low income girls. The traveling library spends six weeks at five different centers in the Columbus area.

To receive the funds, organizations must submit requests by April 1. Requests must indicate the amount desired, how it will be used, how they are active in the Fort Benning community, the number of participants who will benefit, pertinent information and a point of contact.

Another way OSC helps the Fort Benning community is by giving scholarships. The awards, which vary in monetary amount based on merit and leadership, can be used for tuition and books at any college and university.

To be considered for the scholarship, applicants must be current military dependent ID card holders who live in the tricommunity area.

Applications can be obtained at the Thrift Shop, Sayers Library, and at area high schools' guidance departments. Applicants must have their applications submitted by March 22. Awards will be announced sometime in May.

For information regarding the scholarship, call Catherine Herold at 682-5636.

For more information on the Welfare Fund, write The Officers' Spouses' Club at P.O. Box 51905; Columbus, GA 31905; ATTN: Welfare Chairperson.

The cat came back

Christina Hayashi

Characters from Dr. Seuss' books roamed the halls of Fort Benning schools March 1 in celebration of the author's birthday.

At Wilson Elementary School Principal Phyllis Parker dressed as the Cat in the Hat and periodically unleashed Thing 1 (Melanie Keating, the school's educational technician) and Thing 2 (Dr. Wanda Person, the media specialist) to wreak havoc in the school.

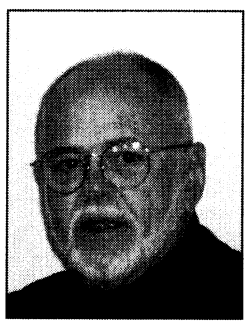
The students wore black and white clothing, made red and white striped hats and were given red ties so they would resemble the Cat in the Hat, Person said.

Soldiers from the Basic Combat Training Brigade visited the school to read to the children and the students decorated classroom doors in honor of Read Across America day. The day remembers Seuss's birthday and his passion for reading and writing.

Students at Loyd Elementary School celebrated his birthday with a birthday cake decorated with the Cat in the Hat's hat and sang happy birthday to Seuss.

Before the cake they spent the morning reading comfortably with pillows brought from home.

"Sometimes students and adults look at mandatory reading differently than reading for pleasure," said Kris Keske, fifth-grade teacher at Loyd. "We try to make reading the same as at home to make reading more enjoyable."



"On Read Across America Day, we get to rest our brains and read good books," said Timothy Hall, a fifth-grader at Loyd.

"We love Dr. Seuss Day!"

Students celebrate Dr. Seuss' birthday

Guests visit school for Read Across America

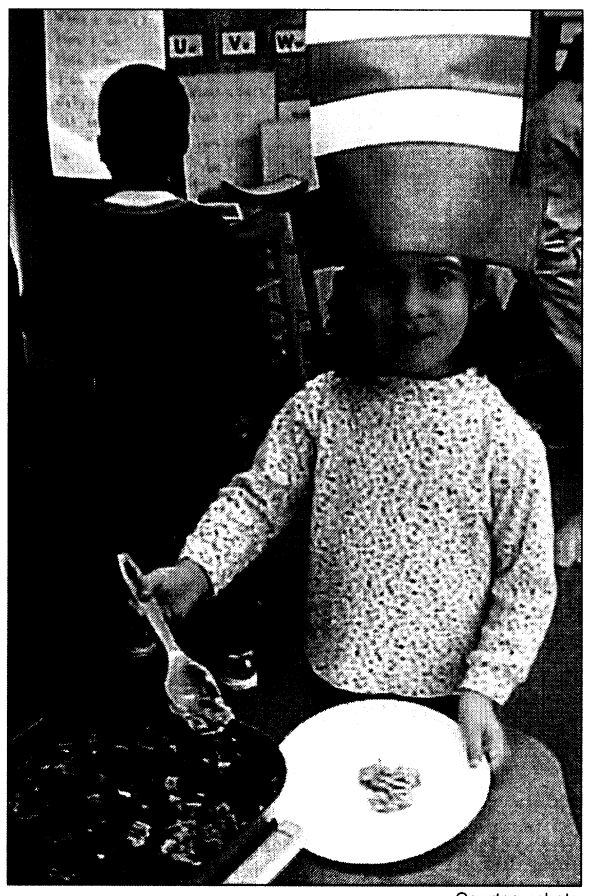
White Elementary School

Cats were in hats, eggs and ham were green, and gooey ooblick fell from the sky last Friday as students, teachers and guest readers celebrated Dr. Seuss' birthday as part of the national "Read Across America" program.

The day started out with everyone in the school, to include students, teachers, administrators and staff dropping everything and reading.

Activities continued throughout the day. Guest readers included post fire fighters, military police and parents.

There were three birthday cakes for the students at lunch, served by cafeteria staff in hats inspired by Dr. Seuss characters, and Barbara Proctor's kindergarten class made green eggs and ham to eat along with "Cat in the Hat" shaped cookies.



Several classes made ooblick, a green, gooey substance that falls from the sky in Matthew and the Ooblick and Ann Anti's first-grade class practiced rhyming words by trying to describe "The Thing" from another book. In Ann Lucas' first-grade class, the students read The Foot Book. They then painted the bottom of their feet, and made footprints which they autographed and assembled in a big book.

The students in Joyce King's fourth-grade class brought in their favorite Dr. Seuss book, hat or other related items to share. One boy, Nick Burbaugh, has a collection of 47 different Dr. Seuss titles, 11 more than the school media center.

English as a Second Language teacher, Alice Martin, had her students make a booklet of activities about the The Cat in the Hat. They drew a picture of the cat and used sight words to list some of the characteristics of the cat. They also made a one-page picture dictionary of some of the nouns in the book.

Art teacher Janie Pride had her fourth- and fifth-grade students make circle books, round, folded creations that show a new page of the story they wrote and illustrated each time another fold is opened.

One of the objects of Read Across America is to get parents to spend more time reading with their children. Each student that brings back a participation form signed by the parent gets a certificate.

4th-grader owns 47 Seuss books

Student has library by author

Owen Ditchfield

White Elementary School

Nicholas Burbaugh, a fourth-grade student in Joyce King's class at White School, has a special interest in celebrating Dr. Seuss' birthday. In fact, he is a connoisseur of Dr. Seuss. Burbaugh has just acquired his 47th title by Dr. Seuss. These books are in mint condition, and he has duplicates for everyday reading.

Anything you want to know about Dr. Seuss, the pen name for Ted Geisel, Burbaugh can tell you. From Seuss's first book to the inspiration for How the Grinch Stole Christmas, Burbaugh knows the details.

"From the very first book I read, I really liked it and read it over and over again," Burbaugh said, "and so I figured there must be other good books by Dr. Seuss."

His favorite from the time he was a little boy was The Foot Book and he would keep begging his mom to read it again and again. In addition to the books, Burbaugh has cups, hats, photos, and articles about Dr. Seuss.

"I'm thinking about starting my own Web site on Dr. Seuss," said Burbaugh, an honor roll student.

Kindergarteners learn about money

Kids make piggy bank pottery

White Elementary School

Kindergarten students at White School exude creativity. The students enjoyed a fun day creating clay piggy banks with Inez Gardener, a local potter and this year's artist in residence.

The kindergartners are learning about money so the project of making piggy banks fit right in with their learning activities.

"I thought it would be hard, but it wasn't," said student Hannah Watkins.

Children first created their pigs using clay. After the pigs were fired, the children added more creativity to their pigs by applying a glaze.

"Everything they make is cute," Gardner said.

She said it is easier to work with the younger students because they are better listeners and are willing to take risks and just create.

During Lent, Christians rediscover baptism

Look to God for strength through trials

Chaplain (Maj.) John Molina
WHINSEC

For many Christians, Lent is a 40-day journey where the call of their baptism is rediscovered. Others are preparing to be baptized during the Lenten season, but regardless of where one is; it is suggested that the important thing is to see a link between Lent and baptism.

If we do this, then the Church's selection of Bible readings and symbols during Lent will make much sense.

Take this Sunday's Gospel reading for example (Fourth Sunday of Lent, John 9:1-21). This is the reading about the man who had been blind since birth, walking in a literal darkness all his life, but finding healing and "light" when he encountered Jesus.

"Illumination" is a reminder of an old name for Christian baptism. Baptized Christians, who have been washed (baptized) in Christ, have been illumed and by faith can now see things in a new way.

The Bible reads, "For all of you who were baptized into Christ have clothed yourselves with Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free person, there is not male and female; for you are all one in Christ."

The story about the man born blind reminds us of a common belief in the first century Jewish culture that reasoned suffering or calamity was the result of some great sin.

But in the passage, Jesus used the man's suffering to teach about faith and to glorify God. And just as Jesus enabled the man to "see" the world and everything around him for the first time, so also today, those who encounter Christ experience a "re-birth" — they learn to look at the world with the eyes of Christ.

Baptism is the Christian's connection to a new life in Christ. And as Lent encourages us to do, it behooves Christians to think long and hard as to what it means to be a baptized believer.

We live in a world where good behavior is not always rewarded or recognized and bad behavior not always punished, and it is often allowed to become the norm. Therefore, innocent people sometimes suffer. God doesn't always take the pain away when we ask him. If he did, it is possible we would then follow him for comfort and convenience, not out of love.

Regardless of the reasons for people's suffering, Jesus has the power to help us. If and when we suffer from disease, tragedy, or a handicap, we think of our baptism and ask God for the strength to make it through our trial, then we can let him give us a deeper perspective on what is happening.

As baptized Christians, do we actually see things differently? Does hearing the Gospel on Sunday after Sunday make a difference in the way we live and see our world? Does the poverty of others bother us? Are we hurting for those suffering from drug and alcohol abuse — do we care? Are we troubled by laws which to do not protect or care for the unborn? Are our minds so flooded by the myriad of images that make us greedy for more possessions, illicit sex, or power, that we cannot hear the Word of God?

In answer to these questions and others, we should let our Christian baptism illumine us.

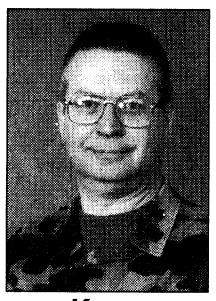
Letting go tough on parents, children



Parents should prepare children for challenges

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Parents spend the first 18 years of their child's life helping their child become increasingly independent. It is not easy for parents or their children (Ephesians 6:4).

Ideally, parents should gradually foster independence along with responsibility. The more responsible a child is, the more freedom the child can have.

During the teen years, teen-agers will vacillate between being responsible and being irresponsible. They will, at times, want more freedom independence than they can handle.

Koop

Children will not always demonstrate responsible behavior. This is normal, and occasional lapses shouldn't be seen as a failure on the part of the parents or the child.

Parents should discuss with their child what happened and what the child could do when faced with the same or similar situation (Proverbs 1:8-9ff).

Moms and Dads should decide together when their teen-ager must be home at night, can go on a single date, can drive a car alone or with friends, and many other parenting issues. Moms and Dads who don't make these decisions together open themselves up to being manipulated by their teens.

Working together, parents prepare their children for college, career and for marriage by fostering responsibility with independence.

Moms and Dads take pride in their children's achievements and independence; yet, parents are also saddened to see them leave home. By gradually giving teen-agers more freedom with responsibility, parents develop maturity in their teens.

Do you desire help with parenting? Call the Chaplain Family Life Center for help. Call 545-1760; visit the Center at 2606 Dixie Road, Soldiers Plaza; or e-mail me at usarmychaplain@aol.com.

Ammo Dawgs crush Devils, 51-31

Press defense gives team big victory

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Behind a great defense, the Ammo Dawgs destroyed the Devils, 51-31, in intramural basketball action Feb. 28 at Audie Murphy Gym.

The 608th Ordnance Company Ammo Dawgs came out early with a full-court press and didn't allow the 4th Ranger Training Brigade Devils a chance to get in the game.

"We came out and we played great defense, and our press was successful," said Marcus Green, Ammo Dawgs point guard. "We didn't give up on any plays."

The first-half stayed even for the first 10 minutes, but when the Ammo Dawgs forward Kenneth Burns added a strong dunk, the Ammo Dawgs got hyped up and stretched their lead to 27-15 by halftime.

In the second half, the Devils came out scoring the first five points.

"We knew we were behind, but we weren't going to give up," said Michael Brown, Devils' forward. "We had to keep the Ranger spirit up and keep going."

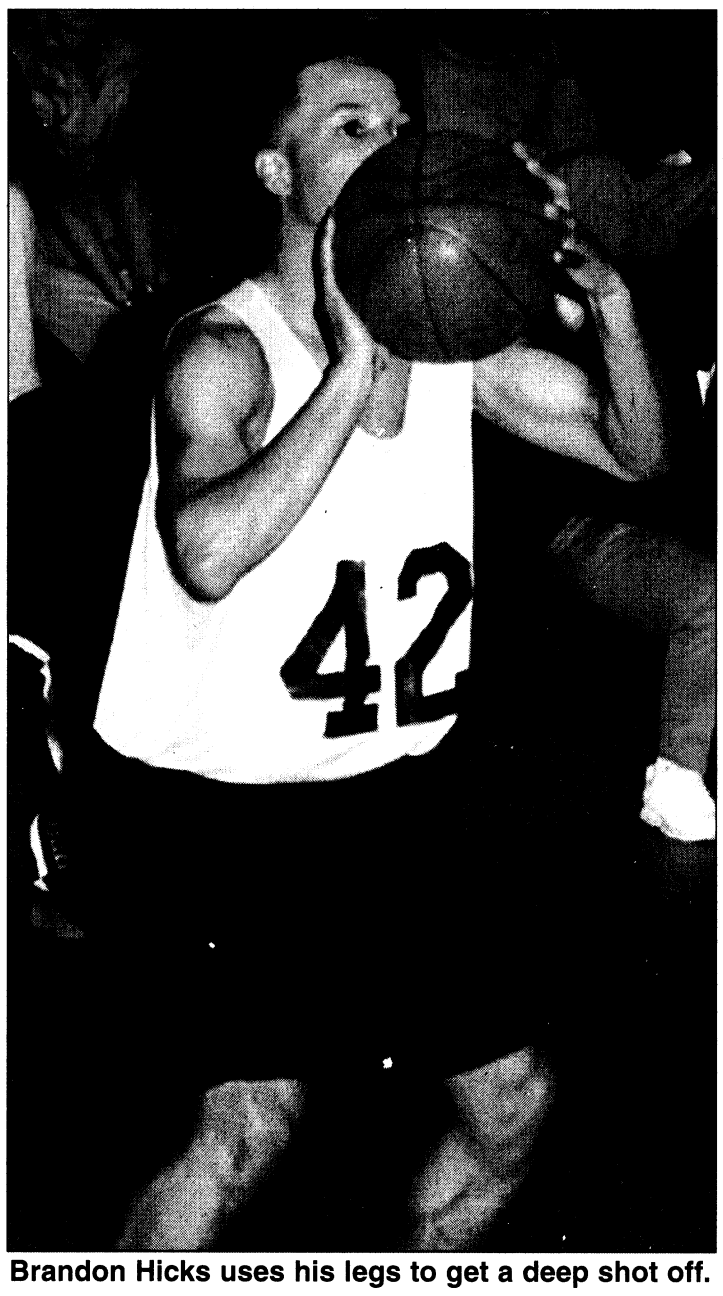
William Ray led the Devils in scoring with 10 points while Richard Robinson added seven points.

With the score 27-20, Burns took over the game almost single-handily.

With eight unanswered points from Burns, the Ammo Dawgs took a commanding lead and never looked back.

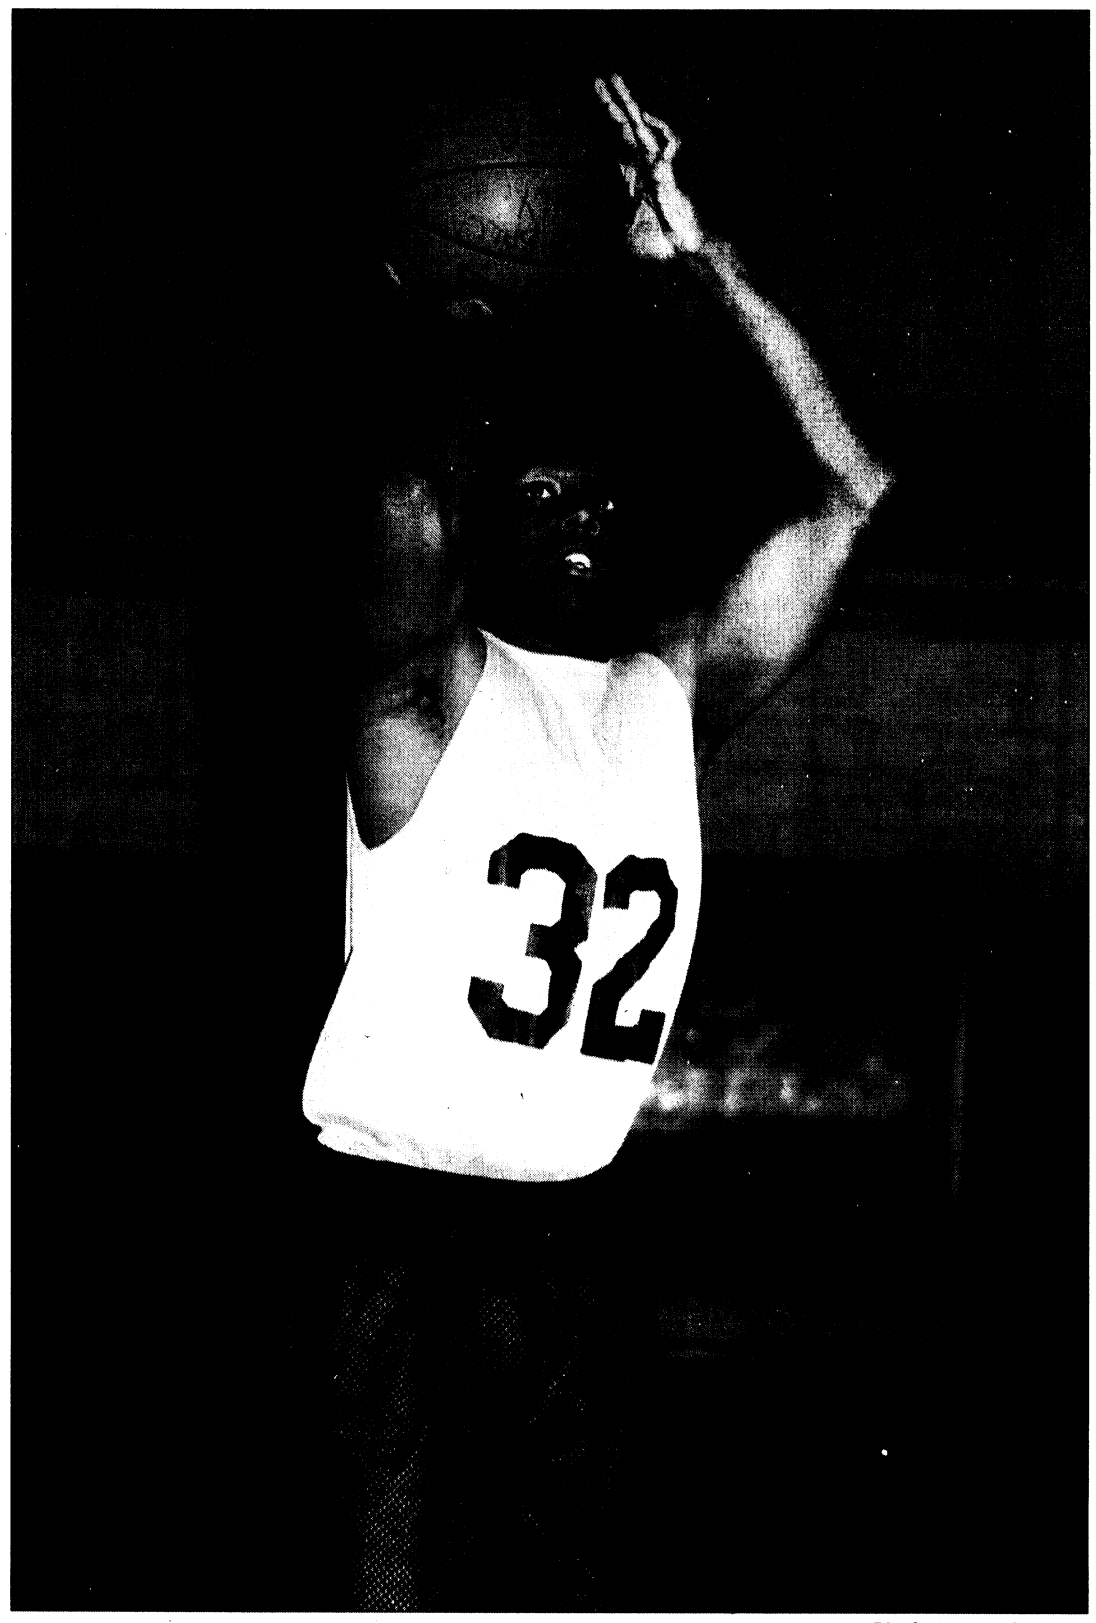
Throughout the second half, the Ammo Dawgs kept pressuring the ball and creating turnovers.

"The press kept us full of energy," Green said. "We kept getting steals and then doing what we had to do on offense."



The Ammo Dawgs showed off their skills to the audience late in the game.

"We figured since we had a big lead, we should play for the crowd," Burns said.



Burns ended the game with 25 points to lead the Ammo Dawgs attack, while Steve Giullory and Ernest Smith each added six points.

"I just put the ball in the hole," Burns said. "My shots just kept falling."

"Our strongest aspect was our defense," said Steve Giullory, Ammo Dawgs' forward. "As long as we keep playing the way we are, nobody can stop us."

Brandon Hicks uses his legs to get a deep shot off.

Bulldogs hold off Rangers

Comeback falls short for Rangers

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Bulldogs used their speed and quickness to beat the Rangers, 49-37, in intramural basketball action Feb. 28 at Audie Murphy Gym.

The U.S. Army Medical Department Activity Bulldogs came out early with a big lead over the 75th Ranger Regiment Rangers.

"We got up on them and contested their shots," said Jason Parker, Bulldogs' guard. "We didn't allow them anything inside."

The Bulldogs played killer defense the first half, not allowing the Rangers many second shot opportunities.

At halftime, the Bulldogs seemed confident with a 23-13 lead.

In the second half, the Rangers came out on an offensive rampage.

The Rangers shot threes every time down the court.

If the attempt wasn't made, Carlos Brinsor, Rangers' forward, would be there for the rebound and would then pass the ball back out to one of his teammates.

With 13 minutes left in the second half, the Rangers took the lead 28-27 on a three-pointer by Will McCoy, Rangers' forward.

However, the Rangers didn't get back on defense, and Parker put in an easy layup, and the Bulldogs never looked back.

"We came back and took the lead, but we lost all of our energy," said Barth Payne, Rangers' forward.

McCoy led the Rangers with 13 points and Payne contributed eight points.

Still, it wasn't enough. Parker and Randy Chambers, Bulldogs' forward, took over late in the game.

"My shots weren't falling, so I adjusted my game and played down low," Chambers said.

Parker scored 17 points and Chambers added 12 points.

"Team ball is what won it for us," Parker said. "We could've easily given up when they came back in the second half, but we didn't."

Golfers improve lie

Spencer team plays first match on post against Pacelli

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Spencer High School golf team played their first match Tuesday against Pacelli High School at the Follow Me Golf Course.

The individual match play was a nine-hole event. The golfers could improve their lie within a club's length if their ball landed on the fair way.

Spencer finished with a score of 239 and Pacelli 204.

Pacelli improved to 1-1 and Spencer fell to 0-1.

"I think it was good to get out there," said Douglas Sparrow, who moved to Spencer from Africa, where his father was stationed. "We didn't play great, but it was a learning experience, and I made some new friends."

Golf is a sport that has many benefits to it, said Spencer Coach Bill Graddy. It relates to peoples lives, business and social functions.

It teaches sportsmanship, honesty and fair play, he said.

"Most of these kids will be playing this game for the rest of their lives," Graddy said. "This sport teaches many life values."

"Golf is really a sport where you can't blame anyone but yourself," said Donovan Williams. "It is a learning experience."

Spencer has six golfers on the team and three of them play other sports.

"I have to pull kids from other teams just to have enough to field a team," Graddy said. "I have some new guys on the team this year, so their is a lot of room for improvement.

"This is a fun game, and it helps to learn it while you're young."

Williams finished with a 55 and Sparrow a 57.

YS needs coaches

Mentors make difference

Christina Hayashi
Special to the Bayonet©

Youth Services is looking for a few good coaches and assistant coaches for their summer basketball program. It needs 15 head coaches and 15 assistant coaches.

Cindy Walker, a baseball, basketball, and soccer coach who has been at Fort Benning for a year said she would encourage everyone to become a coach.

"It's fun. I enjoy it and enjoy working with the kids. Basically, we're looking at the future," Walker said. "This is an opportunity to take an insecure child and bring them out."

The teams consist of 6- to 7-year-olds, 8- to 9-year-olds, 10- to 11-year-olds, and 12- to 15-year-olds. Each age group will have two to three teams depending on the number of children who sign up for the program.

To become a coach or an assistant coach, one must pass a background check and complete three hours of certification.

Certification classes will be in April and June.

Each team will have two one- hour practices during the week as well as one game that will take place on a week night after duty hours. Practices will start June 10 and go until the second week in August.

Parents can also help out by attending Parent Alliance for Youth Services (PAYS).

This is a 30-minute seminar that teaches parents how to demonstrate proper behavior at their child's games.

The cost is $5, which will put them on a mailing list to receive discount tickets for Disney World and other like activities.

To become a coach or assistant coach or to sign up to attend the PAYS program, call Dorrie Wagner, Child and Youth assistant lead of Youth Services at 545-3070.

Fort Benning soldiers receive recognition

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Thirteen Special Operation soldiers were honored along with others by President George W. Bush in a ceremony to remember the attack on America six months ago.

America will not forget the lives that were taken, and the justice their death requires, Bush said. Every civilized nation will take part in the war, and U.S. troops will not fight every battle, but will help train others to do so, he said with a thunderous applaud afterward.

Soldiers from Fort Benning, Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Campbell, Ky., who served in Afghanistan in support of Operation Enduring Freedom were invited to the White House for recognition. Special Operation military personnel in the Air Force and Navy, local law enforcement, firefighters, Pentagon survivors and family members of Pentagon victims were also among those honored.

The ceremony was "extremely great," recalled some of the visiting soldiers. However, they said that they still don't quite understand why the honor was bestowed upon them.

"I was speechless when I found out that I was chosen to come to the White House. I'm

Neglected dogs getting better

Animals overcoming bad times

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

Two neglected dogs taken from a Fort Benning residence Feb. 28 are now on the mend. Kane, a 4-year-old mixed breed, and Foxy, a 10-month-old pedigreed Rottweiler, were both brought to the Veterinary Clinic after repair workers reported a foul smell coming from the residence.

Military police arrived at the home to find both dogs locked in an upstairs bedroom, unfed and lying in their own excrement.

The neglect resulted in life-threatening malnutrition, muscle atrophy, and for Kane, a severe case of heartworm.

But this week, their prognosis is looking up, and Foxy was adopted and will go to her new home Friday.

LIVING IN QUARTERS

Loud music gets bad rap

Spc. Clyde Snively
Bayonet columnist

commentary

Family life in quarters is an adventure. It's not only an eye-opening experience, but can also be an ear-splitting proposition.

Now don't get me wrong, the rent is right and the neighbors are nice, well, there's that weird guy who walks in and out of the yards with his two dogs, and the dude who sits in his car all night, but hey, live and let live I always say.

My only problem is with the rapper kid and the Salsa player.

The rapper kid is a high school student. He comes home from school, props his boom box in his window and then he and his friends use the window to get in and out of the house and listen to his box reverberate off the walls in our complex.

He'll turn the noise down when asked, but why do we need to ask?

Then there's Jorge. A really great guy, will do anything for you, but he thinks that when he washes and waxes his new SUV, he also has to max out on the vehicle's speakers.

So if we're not getting rapped to death, we're getting our earwax loosened by Latin music.

Again, if asked, he tamps the sound, but I shouldn't have to ask him. He should know that while music is great stuff, some of us might want to listen to our own.

Elsie, the office wag, has a solution, put on Mantovani and crank it up. Well, there's torture, and then there's torture. And besides I don't have speakers that could compete. I have an AM radio in my pickup with two speakers that measure about 2 by 2 inches and no boom boxes in the house.

Furthermore, guess who would get nabbed by the MPs for noise violation — moi. I get in trouble for anything and everything others do. It's just that I have a perpetual guilty look about me.

I've stopped flying since 9-11, not because I'm afraid, but because I know I'd be the one frisked and detained.

Now you're wondering why the MPs would nab anyone for playing a radio, or whatever else you want to call stereos on wheels.

How about a simple thing called the post regulation which states that if someone of normal hearing (ha, there is no such thing anymore, that's why everyone plays their piece too loud) can hear your instrument at 15 feet, then it's too loud and you can be cited.

Not sure what the punishment is, maybe they don't let you listen to your music for 10 days, or make you do police call every night after work, but there is a reg.

Clyde Snively

It might not be realistic, because 15 feet is quite near, but there is one.

My issue though is "Hey, we're all in the same Army, let's respect each other and keep the noise down."

Also, playing music at 110 to 130 decibels can damage your hearing and mine. All it takes is 30 minutes of exposure a day. And oh by the way, this can lead to deafness. Even the rock guys are starting to realize this and they're starting to wear hearing protection.

So if you have to yell to be heard, then the music is too loud. If you're wearing a Walkman (then you aren't out jogging or riding a bike) and others can hear the music, it's cranked up too loud.

So do yourself a favor and others around you a favor, tone down the notes.

Watching cars "breathe" because the bass is cranked way up might look funny, but I always wonder what it's doing to the brain waves inside the occupant's cranium. Probably turning the brain cells to mush.

Stay alert, keep your property

Sgt. 1st Class Robert Kelley Directorate of Public Safety

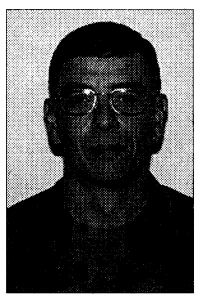
commentary

Spring and summer are rapidly approaching, which usually means that families are venturing out more, kids are playing outdoors, there is increased socializing with neighbors. Overall, it is a great time of year.



Unfortunately, it is also the time of year when we tend to let our guard down. We pay less attention to crime prevention.

Every year, about this time, the Military Police Activity gears up to handle additional calls about prowlers, stolen bikes, missing lawn equipment and damaged parked vehicles.

We do the best we can with our resources.

However, the occupants of family housing can also serve as deterrents to such losses. Here are a few tips to help you keep your belongings more secure:

1 Secure your windows and doors. Check before you go to bed in the evening or leave the house for a visit with friends. If you feel the need to leave a window open for fresh air, put a block or nail in the window guide so it cannot be opened enough for a person to slip through.

Kelly

2 Watch out for your neighbors, especially when you know they are gone. If you see something unusual, be inquisitive, or call the military police to check it out. Being a neighbor means more than living next door.

3 Secure your yard equipment and kids' toys when you are finished with them.

Every year, many lawn mowers, toys and bicycles are stolen. The number one reason for this occurrence is that the items were left unsecured in the yard.

These crimes are committed because of opportunity. It takes so little time to grab a bike, or other item, left in the yard. As the old saying goes, "it is like stealing candy from a baby."

Check behind your kids; they are having so much fun living in the moment they often forget to put toys and bikes away.

4 Teach your children not to ride in and around parked vehicles.

Many scratches found on parked vehicles can be attributed to the handlebars of a bicycle. If the child rides out into the street from between parked cars, this can also be a great danger to a child. The driver in an approaching vehicle may or may not see the child and be able to respond to this situation before it's too late.

5 Record serial numbers, manufacturer model numbers and a brief description of your equipment and belongings.

If the item does not have a manufacturer serial number, find a way to mark your belongings. If you become the victim of a crime and your property is premarked, then there is an increased chance for recovery. Without this information, recovery and compensation are not likely to occur.

Enjoy this exciting time of year! But remember, a little attention to security can mean a better time for you and your family.

HOSPITAL UPDATE

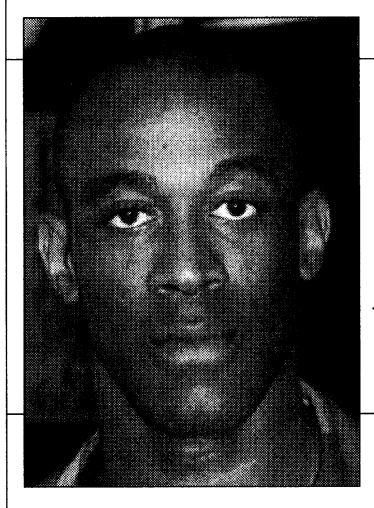
Phone lines improve access

Lt. Col. Derick B. Ziegler
Martin Army Community Hospital

Patients need to remember only one telephone number now, 544-CARE, to schedule an appointment or reach other patient services.

Martin Army Community Hospital implemented a new patient appointment telephone system Jan. 22 to improve access. Along with this phone system, we centralized patient appointments for the primary care clinics (MACH Family Practice, Internal Medicine, Pediatrics, Winder, and Aviation Medicine) to decrease the amount of time spent waiting on the telephone to speak to an appointment clerk.

Since then, the central appointment office has handled an average of 792 calls per day with an average response time of 50 seconds. We recently expanded the central appointment office hours of operation from eight to 12 hours per day. The new central appointment office hours of operation are 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday through Friday. These changes have made it easier and more convenient to schedule appointments at MACH. The Adult Primary Care Clinic, formerly the Victory Clinic, is separate from the central appointment office and books its own clinic appointments. We also want to remind patients all primary care clinics are appointment clinics only.

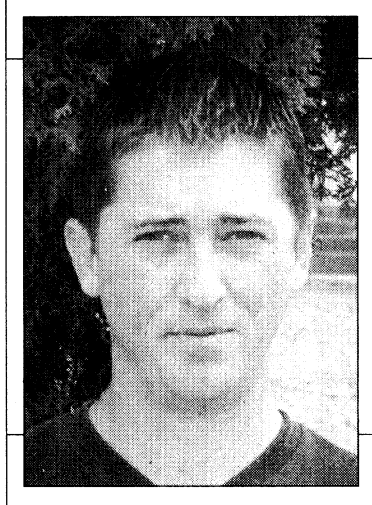


There are no walk-in primary care clinics. The Tricare access standard is 24 hours for an acute appointment (i.e. non-emergency urgent care), seven days for a routine appointment (i.e. new health care problem not considered urgent), and 28 days for a wellness or preventive appointment (i.e. well-woman and physical exams). Patients need to remember only one telephone number now, 544-CARE, to schedule an appointment or reach other patient services.

We encourage patients to use the Health Care Information Line for health care advice or questions by calling (800) 333-5331, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Registered nurses staff the advice line and they can help the caller decide whether to treat minor illnesses or seek professional care.

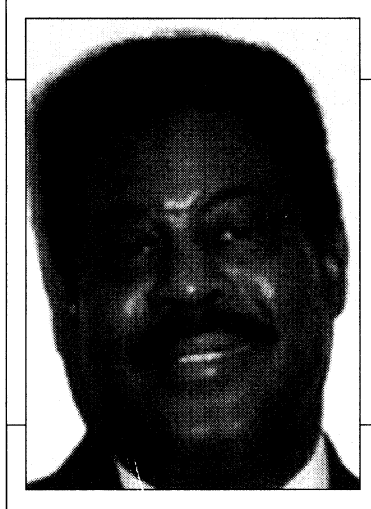
The emergency room is for a true emergency or urgent care. If you present to the emergency room with other than a true emergency or urgent care needs, the Central Triage and Emergency Room staff will schedule a suitable appointment with your primary care manager within the Tricare access standards.

VARIOUS VOICES



What's your biggest complaint with your neighbors, and how can it be fixed?

Staff Sgt. Mark Charles, Henry Caro NCOA — "My biggest gripe is people who move off post and abandon their pets. I have stray cats sleeping on my car, and one just had babies. There needs to be better control of strays on post."



Helen Mesiarik, family member — "People should not use sprinklers on their lawn when we're on water restriction. It's the water our children drink and bathe in, and when it's gone, it's gone."

James Hughes, family member — "There's a lot of trash left in the neighborhood playgrounds. Trash cans need to be put there if we want the kids to throw trash away. Military units assigned to clean up duties need to do that, and parents should be more active in the clean up effort."

Missy Taylor, family member — "Some people don't take a lot of pride in their home. They leave trash sitting by the curb for a week and then stray animals spread it all over the neighborhood."

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Eddie Roberts — "I wish there was more camaraderie and getting together. Everyone needs to make the time to communicate and say 'Hey, how are you doing?' "

Sgt. Dorothy Bess-Moore, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I have no complaints. My neighbors and I work together to clean our yards, and we help each other out when needed. We even decorate our quarters together at Christmas. I guess I'm lucky."

Interviews and photos by Laura Martinson. To suggest future topics or questions for Various Voices or to volunteer your opinion on upcoming questions, call 545-4622.

History Channel crew visits Fort Benning

Team films snipers' camo tactics

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Snipers are receiving due credit by the History Channel for their tactics and lack of visibility.

Two camera crews, subcontracted by the History Channel, filmed students at the U.S. Army Sniper School for a Modern Marvels program about progression of camouflage and a four-hour, four-part series about the history of snipers.

The school has a big reputation for success, said Greg Goldman, producer of the series. Snipers are a major influence on the outcome of wars.

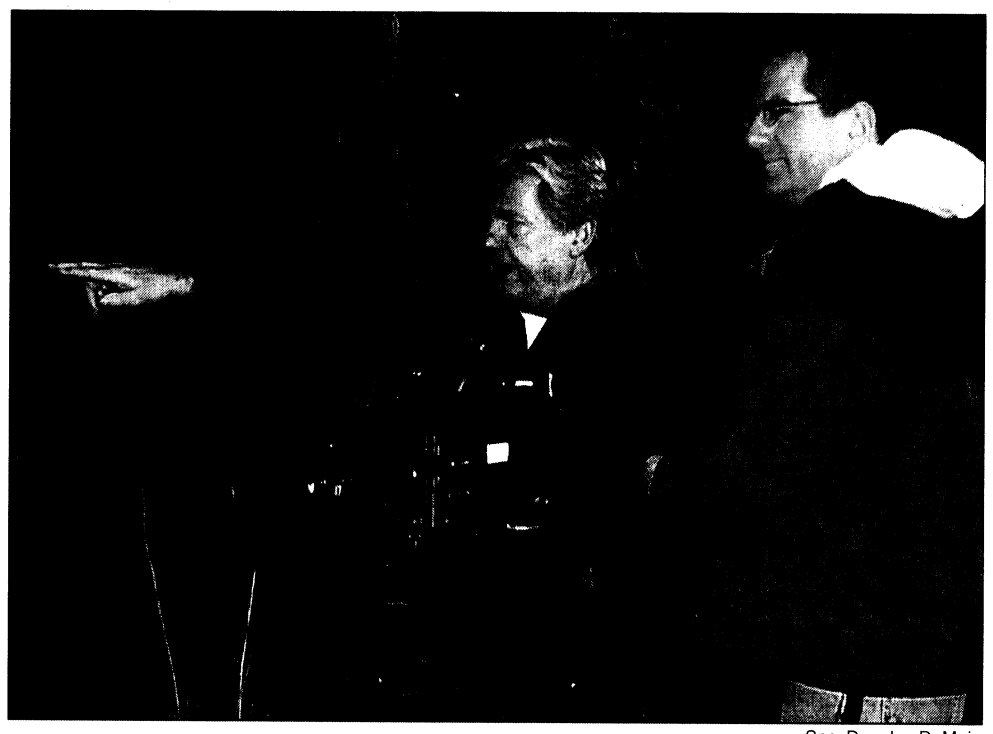
Research estimates that, during the Vietnam War, snipers fired only 1.3 rounds to get one kill, and Viet Cong officials changed their missions to seek out U.S. snipers because of the large number of casualties the snipers had on key targets, according to an Infantry Magazine article.

"Having the crew here is a chance for the public to see the capabilities of a sniper," said U.S. Army Sniper School's first sergeant Lewis Worrell.

Students receive 192.5 hours of instruction in marksmanship, mission planning, use of snipers, movement and engagement, and camouflage and concealment.

"The key to the success of the sniper is to sneak up to the target without being seen," Worrell said.

These elements are a direct result of coalescing with the environment, he said.



The school spends 39 hours on instruction of camouflage and concealment, Worrell said.

"Camouflage is a way to optimize cover and concealment," said Mike Cyristy, producer and writer of the Modern Marvels program about camouflage. "Camouflage is a fascinating field."

It's a fashion, people collect it, and its history dates back well beyond the Roman days, Cyristy said.

The crew also is visiting with historians and has talked with Frank Hanner, the curator of the Infantry Museum.

Both crews said the soldiers were very cooperative, and filming at Fort Benning has given the crews a greater understanding of snipers and camouflage they said.

Special Ops: Honored at White House by President

just pleased that I can be here to represent female soldiers," said Sgt. Amy Crownhart, senior radio operator in the 3rd Psychological Operations Battalion, Fort Bragg.

Crownhart spent more than four months in Afghanistan providing communications support to an Air Force unit. With Crownhart were other soldiers who had no idea that while they were deployed, America was heavily concerned about their plight.

"The whole time we were in Afghanistan, we didn't really grasp the scope of our accomplishments," said Staff Sgt. Greg Melancon, a Special Forces medic with Operation Delta Alpha 572, 3rd Battalion, 5th Special Forces Group, Fort Campbell.

Last November, Melancon's team took part in the bombing campaign in Tora Bora, and they were the first to do cave explorations in areas that were solely occupied by the al Qaeda, he said.

"Sitting at the White House in a ceremony to honor military forces seems strange because just a month ago I was sitting in Afghanistan," Melancon said. "Now I'm meeting Pentagon survivors who want to thank me for what I'm doing. Until I came home I hadn't even realized the impact we were making."

During the ceremony Bush listed some of the accomplishments the United States is making in liberating Afghanistan.

Next week, schools will open in Afghanistan to everyone, Bush said.

The Taliban has been removed from power and it has lost its home base for terrorism, hundred of trained killers are dead, have been captured or are on the run, he said.

The war on terror will be judged by its finish, not by its start, Bush said.

The milestones that are being made and the lives that are being lost in this global war are shared between the United States and its allies. Seventeen nations have forces deployed in the Afghan region, Bush said.

Soldiers have died from Australia, Germany, Denmark, Afghanistan and America, he said.

America and its allies have moved into the second stage of the war on terror, Bush said, and they are consulting with friends about rogue nations' possible use of biological, chemical or nuclear weapons.

"Here is what we know," Bush said. "Some states that sponsor terror are seeking or already possess weapons of mass destruction. And we know that these weapons, in the hands of terrorists, would unleash blackmail, genocide and chaos. These facts cannot be denied, and must be confronted."

Men with no respect for life must never be allowed to control the ultimate instruments of death, Bush said.

On Monday ceremonies took place in Washington, D.C., New York and Pennsylvania noting the six-month mark. On that day Bush unveiled a Sept. 11, U.S. postage stamp of three firefighters lifting "Old Glory."

This stamp will cost 45 cents. A portion of the sales, eight cents, will go to a victims' fund to help those family members who are coping in the aftermath of 9-11.

Soldiers: Begin deploying to Kuwait, others preparing prepared to fulfill their mission," said Capt. James D. Brinson, commander, B Company, 317th Engineer Battalion.

Brinson's battalion leaves later this month.

"We're ready to go," said Brinson. "We've done the proper training and prepared the soldiers for the mission."

The mission is to deploy rapidly to a contingency area by air, sea and land; protect the force, and conduct continuous combat engineer operations for mobile, combined arms offensive and defensive operations worldwide.

To prepare, soldiers went through an Engineer Qualification Table, weapons qualification, and nuclear, biological and chemical training.

"We were also given the opportunity to have block leave and spend time with our families," Brinson said. "It's really good for the soldiers, especially the young ones, who will be going overseas for the first time."

One soldier deploying is a 17-year-old mechanic.

"I'm happy to be deploying," said Pvt. Zack Woods. "I get to experience some adventure early in my life and know that my family is supporting me."

"The family is important in a soldier's life," Brinson said. "They are there with the support in times of need. So, before deploying, it helps the soldiers being able to spend time with family members."

Not only was spending time with family good for the soldier, it was good for the family, too.

"Our families are worried about us.

"They realize the situation the world is in right now, so they understand," Brinson said.

"No matter what the case is, though, we are going over there to accomplish our mission and to do what is best for our country."

Music: Played loudly by some disturbs peace of many encourages neighbors to try to resolve such problems themselves before calling the MPs. If that does not work, residents can call the MPs. Once the MPs arrive, they will instruct the individual to turn down the music, and they will log a report.

On a second violation, the person will be put on a police blotter report, which is a report to the garrison commander that goes to the post commander and will also go though that person's chain of command. After two to three reports for the same thing, one will be charged with a violation. In most instances, the company commander may recommend an Article 15.

Residents can ultimately be asked to leave government quarters for not "living in harmony with neighbors or failing to comply" with policies according to Fort Benning Regulation 210-5.

"It should be one blotter, and, if that fails, on the second, the individual should be counseled. On the third, (Uniform Code of Military Justice) action should take place," said Master Sgt. Donald Blackmon, NCOIC of Community Life.

Post policy states that when playing the radio or other sound devices in a car, the music must not be heard more than 15 feet away. While at home, the music should not be heard through the wall. The 15-feet rule also applies to those walking or running who are not wearing earphones.

"At Fort Benning, loud music, especially music with profanity, which is prohibited on post, will not be tolerated. Offenders can and will be pulled over and ticketed," Blackmon said. "We (soldiers) are role models."

With summer coming and residents washing their cars and conducting other outdoor activities, they should keep the noise level down, he said.

Fighters: Recount Operation Anacoda battle's first days terrain.

Operation Anaconda began March 2 at first light, and the mission was to block al Qaeda forces from entering the southern part of Shalinkot Valley, while soldiers from the 101st Airborne Division were to block the northern part, said Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Grippe. Grippe is in the 10th Mountain Division and serves as the 1st Battalion, 87th Infantry Regiment's command sergeant major.

Grippe told reporters in a telephone conference the mission changed, however, when his platoon-sized element landed right at the base of an al Qaeda stronghold.

"Just moments after the helicopters dropped us off we started taking sporadic fire," Grippe said. "After about the first 10 minutes of combat, I guess the al Qaeda came out of their caves and their well-fortified positions, and we experienced a heavy volume of fire from the actual mountains above us."

Luckily the enemy weren't accurate shooters and the troops were able to take cover, said Sgt. 1st Class Robert Healey, a battalion operations sergeant with the 1st Bn., 87th Inf. Bn.

"The leaders took over," Healey said. "We all ducked ... got in there, got organized and we started returning fire."

As the day progressed the troops started receiving mortar fire, rocket-propelled grenades, heavy-machine-gun fire, light-machine-gun fire, small-arms fire, all from the hills above them, Grippe said.

The valley Grippe and his troops were engaging the enemy in was surrounded by mountain peaks and very rugged terrain, he said. Within the first 30 minutes of the firefight, Grippe said they called in close air support. That quieted things down.

By midnight, 12 U.S. casualties had been extracted out of the battle, including Grippe who jokingly said he would be setting off airport metal detectors for the rest of his life.

Grippe and Healy received shrapnel wounds, but both said that they were ready to get back in the fight. The Anaconda firefight is not the first for those senior noncommissioned officers. Healy said terrorist attacks on America is keeping them focused and motivated for the young soldiers who are fighting for the first time.

"September 11 has motivated a lot of the guys," Healy said. "The injured ones (younger soldiers) are healing up and they're ready to get right back in the battle."

All the injuries sustained by soldiers have been from shrapnel, Healy said. Their body armor protected their torso area, resulting in no one sustaining bad wounds around the chest or stomach area, he said. Most of the injuries were to the legs and arms.

Four soldiers and two Air Force servicemen were killed at the beginning of the operation, March 4, when their MH-47 helicopter landed and they disembarked under direct enemy fire.

A Navy SEAL was also killed in action in a separate helicopter incident March 4.

Pets: Recovering from Fort Benning resident's neglect

"They are both gaining weight and getting stronger," said Missy Taylor, vet technician, "and all we've been doing is feeding them."

The weight gain is a good indication the dogs' health is improving, Taylor said. Kane will not begin heartworm treatment until he gains a sufficient amount of weight.

When the owner surrendered the dogs to the clinic, he appeared indifferent to the health conditions of the animals, Taylor said. But the health of the dogs was not the only concern.

"The unhealthy living conditions posed a health hazard to the family as well," said Sgt. 1st Class Mike Snapp, noncommissioned officer in charge of operations.

Owners of animals on post are responsible for preventing their animals from becoming public health concerns, according to USAIC Regulation 40-905.

Actions taken against the owner have not yet been decided, said Capt. Richard Henry, trial counsel for A Company, 11th Infantry Regiment. Possible punishments include termination of post quarters, an Article 15 and ensuring the soldier pays for any treatments needed due to the neglect. A hearing with social work services may also occur, since the living conditions could have adversely affected the health of the soldier's family.

Vet employees said that while the two dogs get along with one another, Kane does not respond well to other animals. He is a product of his environment, Taylor said.

"It's the way he was raised," she said. "Any dog can be trained to be aggressive. It's a lack of pet education on the owner's part."

It will be at least another month before Kane will be released. Both animals will be neutered before leaving the clinic.

According to Georgia law, all animals are to be neutered within 30 days of adoption, but the vet clinic isn't taking any chances with these two.

"They will absolutely not be used for breeding purposes," Taylor said. "They're going to good homes."

Infantry school CSM retires

30-year veteran glad to have served

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

After being an enlisted infantryman for 30 years, some people would probably sit back and relax when they retire, but Command Sgt. Maj. Miles Retherford will continue to work as a contractor with the interim armored vehicle project.

"This is a significantly better Army than it was when he joined in 1972, and the improvement is partly his doing," said Brig. Gen. David Rodriguez, assistant commandant.

Retherford retired surrounded by family, friends and colleagues March 8. His wife stood by his side as he was awarded the Order of St. Maurice and a Legion of Merit award.

"The legacy I'm leaving is the soldiers and non-commissioned officers with whom I've worked and influenced over the years," Retherford said.

He also refocused the training support packet for basic rifle marksmanship. By doing away with individual training techniques, it got down to the core of marksmanship training. As a result, the new training raised the number of first-time qualifiers.

"It has been a very rewarding experience," Retherford said. "I never expected to get to where I am. I have had fun at every assignment. Working with professionals was probably the most rewarding part of the job and the great camaraderie that comes with it."

Retherford also played a role in the consolidation of the infantry military occupational specialties. He collected information and research for the final decision and performed a combat critical task review.

"This is a one of a kind occupation," Retherford said.

"No one else does what the infantry does. It's great to belong to an organization where everyone contributes and you're not limited to what you can accomplish."

Retherford left some advice for all of the soldiers coming up through the ranks.

"Set realistic goals, challenge yourself everyday and stay focused on the mission," Retherford said. "Make sure the organization does well, then you will do well and will be recognized for your individual efforts as part of a team."

"If I had to do it all over again, I wouldn't change one decision I've made along the way,"he said.

Two honored as finalists for position

Local soldiers may receive White House job

Christina Hayashi
Special to the Bayonet©

Every year, 11 to 19 people are chosen from thousands of applicants to become White House fellows. This year two applicants who are regional finalists are from Fort Benning.

Capt. Antoinette Gant, commander, 63rd Engineer Company and Maj. Barry Blackmon, executive officer for the 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga., are two regional finalists.

"It's truly an honor to be one of the 105 regional finalists," said Gant, who has wanted to be a fellow since she was a first lieutenant and read about the program on the www.whitehouse.gov/fellows Web site.

According to the Web site, White House fellows are men and women who have demonstrated remarkable achievements in the early stages of their careers, and their leadership skills and growth potential in those skills. They will also be judged on their commitment to public service, writing ability and organizational and management skills. The strength of character, a positive attitude, ability to work with others are also taken into consideration.

White House fellows work as aides to cabinet members and senior presidential advisors. They participate in an educational program to help develop as a leader. They also work with Supreme Court justices, senior White House officials, members of Congress and other high-ranking officials.

"I expect to improve my leadership skills," Gant said "(I want to) learn how the government does business and be able to explain to others in a sense that they can understand."

After being chosen as a regional finalist, applicants will go to Washington to participate in a three and a half-day interview. They will also undergo background checks for a security clearance. The commission then will make the final recommendations to the president on the best-qualified applicants.

"I applied to learn about how the government operates and to get hands-on experience and to explain it others, " Gant said.

Former fellows from the military include: Secretary of State Colin Powell (1972-1973); Gen. Wesley Clark (1975-1976), Army Supreme Allied Commander in Europe; Adm. Dennis Blair (1975-1976), Navy Commander in Chief for the U.S. Forces in the Pacific; and Commanding General Clifford Stanley (1988-1989), U.S. Marine Corps Air &Ground Center at 29 Palms, Calif.

Battalion makes 200 percent of re-enlistment goal

Soldiers re-up as economy, needs change

Laura Martinson
Special to the Bayonet©

After what its career counselor called a "slow start," the 317th Engineer Battalion went above and beyond its re-enlistment expectations, more than doubling its quarterly goal. The unit re-enlisted more than 200 percent of its eligible soldiers as of March 8, with three full weeks left in the quarter.

The secret to their success, said Sgt. 1st Class Dustin Williams, career counselor, is loving what you do.

"I love my job," Williams said. "That's part of it — loving the Army.

"Job satisfaction is better than pay. If you're satisfied and motivated, everything will work out."

A trick of Williams' trade is holding more than 75 percent of re-enlistment ceremonies in front of a company formation.

"When the soldiers see two ceremonies a week, it makes re-enlistment not so taboo," he said. "It's a lot of fun to get the ones who have been saying 'no' all along out there in front of the soldiers. That shows them they, too, can change their minds."

Williams does, in fact, encourage his soldiers to keep open minds, as changes in the world are often unpredictable.

"There's so much going on right now — war, stop-loss, the economy. Everybody gets unexpected bills and changes in their family situation. They need to be reminded of that, and to never say never," Williams said. "Life changes so frequently. You can't count anything out."

"The benefits the military offers won't be seen in a regular civilian job," said Sgt. Matthew McReynolds, who renewed his contract this quarter. "I know several people who got out only to find they had a better thing going in the Army."

A change in the economy was just part of the reason McReynolds, company armorer, renewed his contract this quarter. After seven years in the Georgia National Guard, he came on active duty in 1996 to further his military career.

"I wanted to follow in my grandfather's footsteps," said McReynolds, whose grandfather was an Army infantryman. "The Army is a great opportunity to make a difference in the world."

Maj. Eric Conrad, executive officer, thinks soldiers want to stick around due to a comfortable command climate and good leadership.

"Our leaders really do care," said Conrad, who believes the ceremony surrounding a re-enlistment makes his soldiers want to come back for more.

"We make any re-enlistment a special day for the soldier, and that really makes a difference. Re-enlisting is a good thing, not bad."

> "The benefits the military offers won't be seen in a regular civilian job."
> Sgt. Matthew McReynolds
> 317th Engineer Battalion

While the career counselor's job entails keeping his soldiers motivated, Williams must do the same for himself. One way to do that, he said, is through good old-fashioned competition.

"It's a numbers' game," said Williams, whose efforts recently won the Fort Benning Commanding General's Retention Award of Excellence and the Command Retention Excellence Award, given by the engineer commander at Fort Stewart, Ga.

But Williams' greatest reward is not of the tangible sort.

"We still have a lot more to do," said Williams, who's already looking ahead to the next quarter. "But because of our over-performance, our brigade is in the running. For me personally, I feel like I'm making an impact on the unit."

RTB inducts honorary colonel, sergeant major today

Soldiers re-up as economy, needs change

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

The Ranger Training Brigade will induct its first honorary colonel and sergeant major at a Rangers In Action demonstration this morning on Hurley Hill.

Retired Col. Robert "Tex" Turner and retired Sgt. Maj. Robert Spencer will provide a link between the rangers of yesterday and the rangers of tomorrow, said Col. Hazen Baron, the RTB's commander.

"It's appropriate to designate an honorary colonel and sergeant major who can perpetuate the history and traditions of the Ranger Training Brigade, thereby enhancing the morale and esprit de corps," he said.

Turner and Spencer both began their service in 1959, and collectively bring nearly 60 years of experience to the role of honorary leadership for the brigade.

Turner served two tours with the Ranger Department, now the RTB, as an instructor and chief of the Patrolling Committee from 1966 to 1968 and as the department director from 1982 to 1985.

"I always wanted to be a ranger, ever since I was a little guy, about 6 years old, during World War II," Turner said.

"Sure enough I got my chance, and I stayed in ranger-type jobs most of my career. All my dreams came true. Now, being named the first honorary colonel is simply the ultimate.

"I guarantee you there are those more qualified and deserving than I am, but I'm so thankful, just delighted at the honor."

Turner served two combat tours in Vietnam with the 101st Airborne Division and the Military Advisory Command Vietnam. He served as the director of military instruction at the U.S. Military Academy from 1985 until his retirement in 1990.

Spencer served several tours with the department as an instructor. He served as the department's sergeant major from 1981 until his retirement in 1985.

"I have a lot of fond memories of the ranger department, and it's an honor to be chosen," Spencer said.

"Now it's up to me to do my part. Too often we train and leave and take with us that institutional knowledge that could benefit those who follow, so maybe I can help in some small way by interjecting my own experiences and observations when they're needed."

Spencer served in Korea with the 1st Cavalry Division and twice in Vietnam with the 173rd Airborne Brigade and the Military Advisory Command Vietnam.

Join winning team, become Army recruiter

Soldiers receive many rewards for tough duty

Julia Bobick
U.S. Army Recruiting Command

FORT KNOX, Ky. — Two recruiters are visiting Fort Benning Monday through Wednesday to dispel the myths about recruiting duty and encourage soldiers to join the winning team of Army recruiters who have achieved their active and Reserve missions for the past two fiscal years.

The Recruit the Recruiter Team is presenting briefings on the challenges, benefits and opportunities that come with serving as an Army recruiter.

"Soldiers' anxieties about recruiting duty — 'Can I make it on recruiting duty?' — are often compounded by negative word of mouth. That's why we are conducting these installation tours and have established a Recruit the Recruiter Web site at www.usarec.army.mil. We want to give soldiers factual information to dispel the rumors in a non-threatening environment. We think that when soldiers have more information, they will be pleased at what recruiting duty can offer them," said Master Sgt. Jack Miracle, the NCOIC of the Special Missions Recruiting Team for the U.S. Army Recruiting Command.

This fiscal year, the Recruiting Command must identify about 2,600 new detailed recruiters through Department of the Army selections, or through soldiers volunteering for recruiting duty.

To entice more soldiers to volunteer, there is also a new incentive this year. Volunteers can identify their top three choices for their recruiting company assignment from the more than 200 recruiting companies across the states.

Soldiers who volunteer for recruiting duty serve a 36-month tour.

They first attend the Army Recruiter Course at Fort Jackson, S.C. The 53-day course has five major segments: introduction to recruiting, management, eligibility, prospecting and sales techniques, and communications skill.

Following the Recruiter Course is a nine-month nonrated new recruiter program, during which the new recruiters sharpen the skills they learned in the course.

Recruiting duty involves long hours and hard work, but the rewards are worth the effort.

Recruiters live and work in the civilian community. They build networks with schools, universities, local government agencies and other organizations. They interact and network with community leaders and become very experienced in sales and management.

Promotions are faster for recruiters than for peers without this experience. Recruiters who convert to MOS 79R have much higher promotion rates to sergeant first class than the Army average.

Opportunities for personal recognition are great. In addition to the Army awards program, recruiters are eligible to earn the Recruiter's Silver Badge with gold stars, the Gold Badge with sapphires, the Recruiter Ring, and the Sergeant Major of the Army Glen E. Morrell Medallion. Recruiters can also compete for induction into the USAREC Sergeant Audie Murphy Club.

Recruiters receive an extra $375 each month in special duty assignment pay and up to $75 per month in allowances for authorized expenses.

Currently 23 percent of detailed recruiters are volunteers; the Army selects the remainder. Volunteers will receive their recruiting company assignment before reporting to the Army Recruiter Course; DA-select recruiters do not learn their recruiting duty assignment until about the fourth week of the course.

Miracle encourages soldiers to attend the volunteer recruiting briefings 9:30 a.m. or 1:30 p.m. Monday through Wednesday in Building 4, Classroom 51, or visit the Web site. Either way, soldiers can learn more about the eligibility requirements to become a recruiter and the benefits of recruiting duty.

For more information, call Master Sgt. Jose Irizarry at 835-8771.

Soldiers may also call the Recruit the Recruiter Team at (502) 626-0271, DSN 536-0271, or go to the USAREC Web site at www.usarec.army.mil and follow the link to Recruit the Recruiter.

First IBCT expected ready in December

Group to be operationally tested

Ann Zeterstrom
Army News Service

FORT LEWIS, Wash. — Fort Lewis, the place the Army chief of staff calls the 'Cradle of Transformation' may be watching its first Initial Brigade Combat Team take its first steps sooner than expected.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki announced in a press conference Feb. 21, that 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, may be operationally ready minus one battalion in December.

"We think by Dec. 2, we will have had the IBCT — two battalions, less the third, operationally tested," Shinseki said.

"We will have a good feel about the formal (Initial Operation Capabilities) in May, but we will have pretty good confidence in our capabilities by December."

December isn't soon enough.

Army officials have said on numerous occasions that if an IBCT were operationally capable after the events on Sept. 11 it would have been one of the first on the ground in Afghanistan.

"Sept. 11 has raised the additional interest in us looking into ways to accelerate the transformation process," Shinseki said.

"I am not sure what those opportunities are, but we continue to press."

Although December is the goal for the IBCT, the decision will not be made hastily.

"There are a number of conditions that have to be met before the unit can be certified IOC," said Lt. Col. Mick Nicholson, a strategist on Shinseki's staff.

"The vehicle has to be certified and the brigade has to be evaluated by the (Forces Command) commander," he said.

Nicholson explained a vehicle certification process normally takes years, but since several military forces have already fielded the basic platform, the time is compressed.

The first external demonstration of the IBCT's capabilities will be Millennium Challenge 2002 at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., an experiment to test concepts and refine emerging doctrine, officials said. It will also allow the military to better focus its efforts on developing the Objective Force.

"This is an important event for Transformation," Nicholson said.

"The Army has been transforming for two years. This gives us a chance to showcase the IBCT in the joint arena and experiment with other forces."

The 18th Airborne Corps will act as the Joint Task Force in the experiment with the 82nd Airborne Division as the Army Component Command. The IBCT will act as an early entry force.

Experiment officials say lessons learned during MC '02 will help the Army more effectively and efficiently work with the other services.

Transformation is not an option, rather a necessity for the Army being able to function as an equal partner in the joint force of tomorrow, they said.

High speed training at Eagle Tower

Soldiers face fears on rappel tower

Pfc. Kyle Neller
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers of the 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, conducted confidence building drills like rope ladder climbing and rappelling on Sand Hill's Eagle Tower Monday.

"In all the training new soldiers experience, they will be instilled with an understanding of the Army values," said Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Clements, senior drill instructor. "Today's value is personal courage. Overcoming the fear of heights is very important for an infantryman."

For example, a great number of the new soldiers have plans for airborne training, and this helps them to suppress their fear, he said.

"Even the smallest obstacle on this coarse teaches me how to overcome my fears and accomplish the mission," said Pvt. Kevin Allen.

The rappelling on Eagle Tower also gives soldiers experience useful to air assault.

"I would definitely go air assault if I had the chance," said Pvt. James Maiden. "Rappelling from Eagle Tower was extremely intense.

"I can only imagine what rappelling out of a helicopter is like."

Along with mental conditioning, there are other benefits the Eagle Tower offers.

"This coarse prepares me for war. Not only does it teach me fear and stress management, it also builds physical strength and endurance," Allen said.

Teamwork is key to successfully finishing the tower's course, Maiden said.

"Training like this also teaches me and my fellow soldiers how to work together," Maiden said. "Working with each other builds our motivation and friendship, and strengthens our battle buddy cohesion."

Invaluable realizations such as that may enable most of the solders to graduate.

"We still have a lot to learn about being soldiers, but, by the time our drill instructors get done with us, we will be ready," Allen said.

Expert Infantry Badge test on horizon

Infantrymen to try to earn rite of passage

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The challenge of accomplishing both a physically and mentally exhausting test is about to start for Fort Benning soldiers.

Soldiers are constantly training for the Expert Infantry Badge, but, for the last two months, they have been dedicating more time for preparation, said Sgt. 1st Class Joe Dickson, test coordinator, 29th Infantry Regiment.

The studying is well worth it.

"Anyone who sees the rifle (EIB badge) immediately knows you can accomplish the mission," Dickson said.

The respect badge wearers have is driving 1st Lt. Jason Slutsky, EIB candidate, 29th Inf. Regt., to go the extra mile when studing.

"I feel confident I can pass," Slutsky said. "I've been doing some roadmarching on my own time, and we've been doing some roadmarching and training on hills during PT."

The most important reason soldiers earn the badge is it reminds them and their soldiers that they are ready for war, he said.

"As a leader, when I walk out in front of a formation, this will show my soldiers I have the knowledge to lead them in battle," Slutsky said.

The commander of the U.S. Army Infantry School will conduct the postwide 2002 Expert Infantryman Badge test in April.

The train-up will be April 4, 5 and 8, and the testing will be April 9-11 at Burroughs Range.

"This is incredibly important to a soldier, a lot of pride comes with earning the EIB," Dickson said.

The EIB will aid in promotion to sergeant first class, first sergeant and sergeant major, said Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, U.S. Infantry School command sergeant major.

Participation is expected from 200 to 300 candidates.

This year the land navigation, weapons qualification, the 12-mile timed foot march and physical fitness test will be tested by the participants companies as a prerequisite to entering the test.

By frontloading the sections of the test with the highest attrition rate, it may lower the number of people who need to be tested, Dickson said.

"It's important to do well. You only have one shot a year to earn this," Dickson said.

During the train-up portion, soldiers are shown the exact standards they will be held to when they do the test.

The skills tested are skills all infantrymen know, but the test requires precise sequence, accuracy, time and attention to detail, Dickson said.

The tasks tested for the EIB will also reinforce life saving skills.

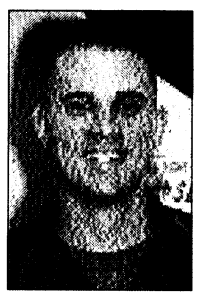
"It will let everyone know I'm infantry, and I know what I'm talking about the EIB is credibility," Slutsky said. "I've been waiting since last year to get a chance at it."

Navy works with Army

Lieutenant prepares work for soldiers

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

The new millennium has brought with it a new war — one in which Army, Navy, Air Force and Marine service members fight and die side by side.



The military calls it joint interoperability. Laymen call it being one big team in the fight against evil.

One can see parts of that team on Fort Benning.

Navy Lt. Jeffrey D. Brancheau, deputy design engineer and plans officer, 36th Engineer Group, is a vital part of the group's and post's mission, said Lt. Col. Archie Pollock, design engineer with the group.

"Seabees (the Navy's construction force) have a reputation of being highly competent professionals," Pollock said. "(Having Brancheau here) is a win-win situation, not only for interoperability sake, but he brings a real complement of technical skills to the table. He makes the unit better, and we're better able to support Fort Benning because he's here."

Brancheau, who is here as part of the officer exchange program, has designed the new hospital walking trail and other 63rd Engineer Company projects like the new culvert installation at Clear Creek Pond. He also worked on the design of a shoot house for the Atlantic City, N.J., Police Department and a rifle range and shoot house for the San Marcos, Texas Police Department.

Brancheau

Another part of Brancheau's mission is to help train soldiers in the group.

"Our designer's skill level is (getting better)," Pollock said. "It's a good swap," Pollock said. "I'm sure it benefits the Navy, too."

The joint interoper-ability Brancheau helps to solidify is key in the construction world, he said. For instance, Seabees worked for the Army in Bosnia.

"(Having him here) helps us see how we can work better with the Navy and Marines and gives us peacetime experience for future war-time missions. It broadens our perspective of the total force."

Brancheau, who will leave in December after two years with the group, said he enjoys being here.

"The opportunity to serve beside Army Engineers has been very rewarding," Brancheau said. "This tour has given me a better understanding of the Army and the tools they bring to the fight.

"I joined the Navy to lead troops, and I enjoy construction so it's the best of both worlds," he said. "The Army has been fun."

He also likes the PT he does with the group's officers.

"In the Bees, we PT but do not run to the extent that I have here in the 36th Group," Brancheau said. "It was a challenge at first, but now I hold my own."

In fact, he scored a 296 on a recent Army PT test.

Still, there have been things to grow accustomed to for the former enlisted, Operation Desert Shield and Storm sailor.

"This is a huge post," Brancheau said. "We (in the Navy) don't have bases this big or vast training areas like Fort Benning. It's challenging to maneuver out there. You need a (Global Positioning System) with you."

Learning the Army language was another challenge when he first arrived here.

"But when you boil it down, you do the same as we do so, once you learn the language, it's no problem," Brancheau said.

The difference in officer rank structure took getting used to, too, he said.

There is a difference between Army and Navy decorum, expectations and social interaction.

"In the Navy, an O3 and below are junior officers," the Seabee said. However, there is a big difference between an O2 and O3 in the Army. You go from knowing a little bit to, 'You're the man.'"

Differences aside, one thing has remained a constant at every ship, base and post at which his military leadership has stationed him.

"Everyone is together when it comes time to take care of the enemy," Brancheau said. "Fort Benning has been no different. The Home of the Infantry's resolve and determination to win this war has encouraged me."

Officers use program

Soldiers use new firing strategies

Capt. Joe Reap
2nd Bn. 11th Inf. Regt.

The days of Infantry Officers Basic Course lieutenants going to their units having trained on antiquated equipment are over.

The new marksmanship strategy includes three days of Advanced Infantry Marksmanship Strategies and Standards and two days of reflexive and discriminatory fire.

The 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, made a step in the right direction with the implementation of the AIMSS training strategy, said Maj. Chad Sullivan, 2nd Battalion, 11th Inf. Regt.

The 2nd Bn., 29th Regt. commanded by Lt. Col. Michael Winstead is responsible for the development of the training strategy.

"We worked hand-in-hand with the 29th Infantry Regiment ensuring the training is on line with the most current AIMSS training doctrine available," said Capt. Christopher Nicolaus, primary instructor for AIMSS training, 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. "Lieutenant Colonel Winstead assisted us in the development of our program and with the train-up of our cadre."

"We made the decision to integrate the latest sights, night aiming devices, and training strategies because our instruction must be equal to or ahead of what our leaders will use in the field," said Lt. Col. John Carothers, the commander of 2nd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. "We will use this equipment at the individual and collective levels constantly building upon the skill-sets learned throughout the advanced marksmanship week."

Many of the OCS students in C Company have already used the equipment and conducted advanced marksmanship throughout their careers.

"This training will most definitely prepare us for combat. It's some of the most realistic training I've done, especially the reflexive and discriminatory fire," 2nd Lt. Scott Smith, an OCS graduate who served in 4th Ranger Training Battalion. "The training took us all the way from the basic to the advanced. As a leader, I'm going to get into the books so I can train my platoon the same way."

"I'm surprised IOBC has caught up with the times. It's not what I expected," said 2nd Lt. Michael Washburn who served 12 years in the 75th Ranger Regiment. "The training builds confidence and experience we'll use in combat,"

For many students in C Co., the training was the first exposure to the M68 Close Combat Optic, AN/PVS-14s night vision device, and AN/PEQ-2As laser aiming device.

Prior to shooting, each lieutenant received classes on the capabilities, and employment of each piece of equipment. Following the classes, the lieutenants spent countless hours on the range honing their new skills.

"This is the best training I've ever done," said 2nd Lt. Colin Kelly, commissioned from Seton Hall University. "I especially liked the reflexive fire; having done it on the range over and over I started to gain the necessary muscle memory to accurately engage targets. Given the current world situation, reflexive fire and discrimination fire is the way warfare is going. When I was out on the range I was able to put myself in a combat environment."

"I've never used the equipment or M-4 rifle before. It was good to get familiar with the equipment," said 2nd Lt. Brett Baily.

Vandals, thieves spring into action

Crime increases with warm weather

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Ahhh spring — when a young man's fancy turns to thoughts of breaking and entering.

As bicycles and lawnmowers emerge and windows and sunroofs are lowered, more and more post residents are becoming the victims of robbery. Fort Benning's military police urge residents to take precautions against the kinds of criminal behaviors that typically flourish in the spring.

"With the warmer weather, we see more crime," said Sgt. 1st Class Norman Molder, Military Police Investigations NCOIC.

Molder said there's been an increase in vandalism postwide. Though houses have been damaged, the largest number of reported cases involve vehicles. Typically, the perpetrator appears to be trying to steal, Molder said.

"Stereo components mostly. Make sure you're rolling up windows, locking doors, parking in a well-lit area and hiding things like purses or CDs," he said.

Outdoor lawn equipment and bicycles have also been reported stolen. Unfortunately there's little authorities can do unless the victim has taken steps to mark his property.

"If you take the time to pick out the perfect bike or a new mower, take the extra time to flip it over and copy the serial number," Molder said. "Otherwise it's just your word against theirs if a neighbor shows up with a new mower just like the one you had stolen."

> "We saw the signs — the door left ajar with the safety chain still on, the back doorknob loosened. But we just kept excusing it."

Former All-American carries torch

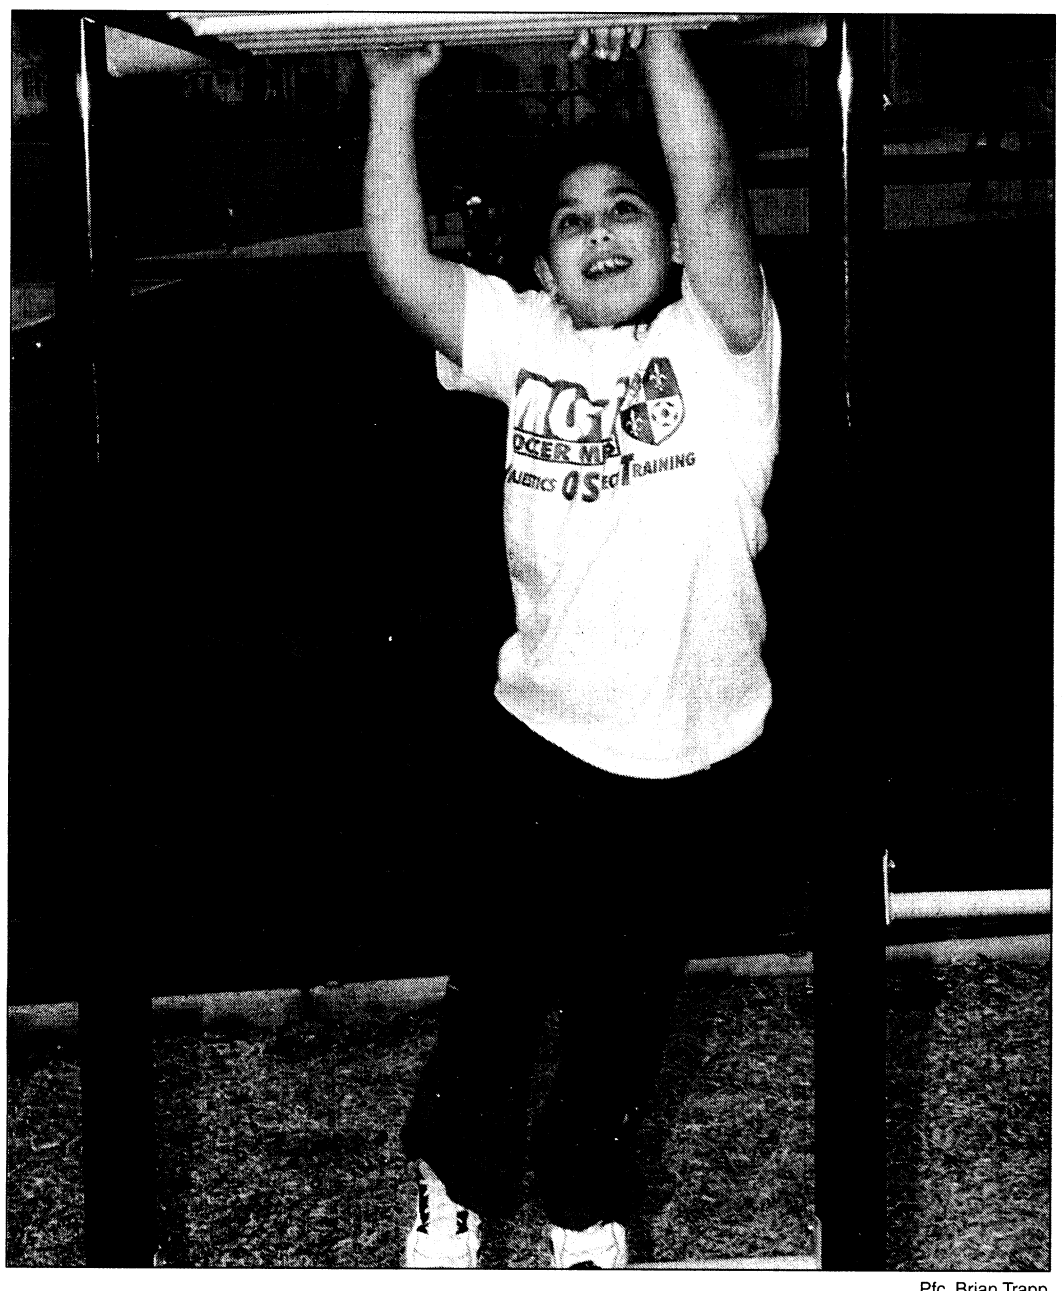
The Olympic torch began its journey to Salt Lake City, Utah, Dec. 4, 2001, in Atlanta. It went more than 13,500 miles and through 46 states in 65 days to make it to the opening ceremony Feb. 8.

Annabel Cieply, whose husband, Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Chris Cieply, is stationed at Fort Benning, was one of the more than 11,500 Olympic Torchbearers.

She carried the torch through Grand Junction, Colo., for nearly two-tenths of a mile.

Cieply was chosen because her husband e-mailed family and friends and asked them to go to the Coca-Cola Web site to nominate her.



It was her brother's nomination that stood out. He wrote about her work with at-risk children and her all-American background in track and cross country.

"It was a huge honor to be selected amongst all of the applicants," Annabel said. "It was too short for a lifetime opportunity. It went by too fast."

Torchbearers were provided uniforms from the Salt Lake Olympic Committee, so there was no expense to the bearer. The torch that bearers carried could be bought for the cost of about $350. Coca-Cola bought the torch for Cieply, which she left with her parents in Grand Junction so it would not break.

"I will always remember the individuals in the group with me," Cieply said. "I'll also remember they selected ordinary people who help inspire others."

Post plans Easter celebration

Service to culminate observance of Holy Week

Christina Hayashi
Special to the Bayonet©

The Easter Sunrise Service will be 7 a.m. March 31 at Doughboy Stadium. The guest speaker will be Chaplain (Capt.) David Trogdon with the 317th Engineer Battalion.

The blessings of Easter, what the resurrection of Christ does for us is the day's message, Trogdon said.

"Because Christ is risen, we have hope and help," he said. "The message will be the difference a living savior makes in our lives."

The service is a Protestant service and is open to the public.

The Infantry Band, the Post Chapel Choir and the Gospel Choir will perform. Also Celeste Lee with Directorate of operations and Training will sing In Harm's Way.

"People have long found Easter Sunrise services to be specially meaningful," said Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Chris Cieply. "The service represents the culmination of the Holy Week when Jewish people celebrate deliverance from bondage in Egypt and Christians celebrate the resurrection of Jesus Christ."

After the service, attendees are encouraged to go to the Annex next to The Infantry Center Chapel for a continental breakfast.

If it should rain, the service will be held in The Infantry Center Chapel.

Students lose HOPE for financial assistance

Residency policy unclear for dependents

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

An ambiguous policy on college scholarship eligibility requirements has some military family members losing hope for financial aid.

Peniel and James Vinegas both met the academic and residential requirements for the Georgia HOPE scholarship when they enrolled in Columbus State University in 1999.

The brothers, sons of retired Staff Sgt. Victor and Teresita Vinegas, moved to Columbus in 1998 and graduated with honors from Spencer High School.

But when Victor retired last year and moved to Virginia, his sons lost the HOPE and were forced to withdraw from the university and enroll in a local community college.

> "They said we aren't residents. I live and work here. We have a home — we pay taxes. How can this be?"
> Teresita Vinegas
> Local preschool teacher

"They said we aren't residents. I live and work here. We have a home — we pay taxes. How can this be?" said Teresita, who teaches at a local preschool.

The HOPE scholarship — Helping Outstanding Pupils Educationally — was founded in 1993 to provide financial assistance to Georgia students in public and private colleges and universities.

But the children of service members are finding the HOPE has no definitive policy addressing their unique situation.

According to the Georgia Student Finance Commission, which administers the scholarship, once a student qualifies for the HOPE, he or she will continue to be considered eligible "even if his or her parents or legal guardians stop being legal residents of Georgia."

But schools are interpreting the policy at will, some say.

Silver Award can earn $10,000 scholarship

Stephanie Mello
Bayonet correspondent

Sarah Chappell was recently awarded the Girl Scout Silver Award, the second highest award a Girl Scout can achieve.

Earning the award took more than a year to finish, including completion of strict community service, leadership, career exploration and interest project requirements.

But Sarah doesn't plan to stop with the Silver, she's going for the Gold … literally.

Sarah is a 16-year-old high school sophomore and, although still two years from graduating, she has taken steps to increase her chances of paying for her own education. It won't be just her grades or sports abilities that will help her though. It also will be the more than 10 years she has spent as a Girl Scout.

"I have always enjoyed being a Girl Scout and have encouraged other girls to join. Being involved in your community, doing something positive with your time, instead of just 'hanging out,' makes you a better person I think. When the Silver and Gold awards were introduced I knew I wanted to try for them. Now that they (the awards) can help girls get money for school, I think all Girl Scouts should try to complete them," Chappell said.

By completing the Silver Award, Sarah has finished the first leg on her journey to qualify for more than $20,000 in college scholarships.

Hundreds of colleges, institutions and private agencies offer scholarship opportunities to high school seniors who have earned the Girl Scout Silver or Gold Award, the highest award available to Girl Scouts. Some of the opportunities for scholarship funds for girls who commit and complete these award levels include:

Magnets offer variety

Bridgett Siter

Fort Benning students entering high school in the fall have a broader choice of magnet programs in the Muscogee County School District.

The system's eight public high schools will each offer a specialized curriculum designed for students who wish to concentrate on a particular area of study while fulfilling Georgia's regular academic requirements.

Three area schools, Carver, Columbus and Hardaway, already have magnet programs. The remaining four and a new school scheduled to open in the fall, Northside, will also offer magnet programs.

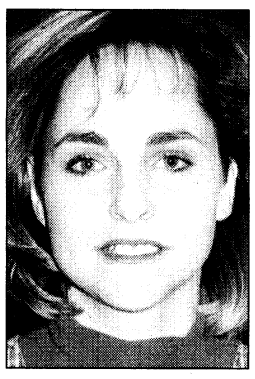
The programs have various entrance requirements, including a designated number of hours of community service and specific academic and citizenship standards.

"Nothing is changing for the students of Fort Benning, as far as privileges go," said Gordon Stallings, the district's assistant superintendent of instruction. "We're actually offering more opportunity. Each program will accept no more than 200 students, and half of those students should come from within the school itself. So there will be at least 100 openings per school, and certainly Fort Benning students are encouraged to pursue the program of their choice."

The deadline for application is June 1, Stalling said.

The following is a rundown of Muscogee County's magnet programs and the requirements for each:

Hardaway High School is the only high school in Southwest Georgia with an International Baccalaureate Diploma Programme and one of only 1,000 schools worldwide.



The IB program is a rigorous pre-university course of study chartered by the International Baccalaureate Organization, with headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland. The IBO has established a curriculum especially for geographically mobile students, with an

Kristin Glenn
a fourth-grade teacher at Stowers Elementary

Personal: The Michigan native is married to her high-school sweetheart, 1st Sgt. Clyde Glenn. They have two daughters, Kayla, 9, and Carra, 7, and a 5-month-old son.

"Carson was a big surprise," she said. "It was difficult getting back into the baby mindset, but the girls have been a big help. They still fuss over him and argue about who gets to take care of him. They've helped me adjust a lot."

Education and career: Glenn said it "took forever" to earn her teaching degree, because the family moved so often. She graduated from the University of North Carolina Pembrook five years ago and began teaching in Muscogee County. She taught pre-K and first grade at Stowers before transferring to the fourth.

"Fourth grade is so unique," she said. "Some are still huggers, some are more independent. I love that you can tease and joke with them."

On becoming a teacher: "I was held back in kindergarten, because I couldn't see the chalk-board. I needed glasses," Glenn said. "I told my teacher, but she just ignored me. I remember feeling so frustrated. I never wanted that to happen to anybody else. My children will never feel uncomfortable in my classroom. I get to know them. That's my philosophy."

Favorite subject: "I love writing. That's my joy," Glenn said. "And fourth-graders are so creative. I learn so much about them through their writing."

Glenn is particularly fond of a Fort Benning School's policy that prohibits writing as a form of punishment.

"We want them to like writing, not feel negative about it. I agree 100 percent."

Hobbies: "What's that?" Glenn laughed. "There's not much time left after school and shuffling kids between soccer, dance and softball and late-night paperwork.

"But we do have a boat and we like to ski and wake board, which is like slalom skiing," she said. "My husband does 360s and flips. I don't go there."

Theft: Increases with warm weather

"The best thing you can do is keep it out of sight, , but if it has to be outside, lock it up," he said. "Use a bicycle lock and secure it to a permanent fixture."

Some Davis Hill residents are doing just that, after someone attempted to break into their home four times last week. Sgt. 1st Class Charles and Jennifer Manchester installed deadbolts, motion detectors and surveillance cameras after police chased an intruder from their home.

"And he'd attempted to break in at least three times before," Jennifer said. "We saw the signs — the door left ajar with the safety chain still on, the back doorknob loosened. But we just kept excusing it."

Then a noise woke Charles March 8, and he interrupted an attempt to break in a side door. MPs were on the scene within minutes, but the intruder escaped.

"This should never happen to anybody, losing sleep in your own home," Jennifer said. "My fear is it will happen to someone else if they don't do something to prevent it. Everybody needs a deadbolt. Everybody needs to get to know their neighbors."

Modler said post residents should, in fact, know their neighbors and be alert to strangers in the neighborhood. A strange vehicle parked near an absent neighbor's home may be a sign of intrusion.

Modler offered these tips for additional home security:

• Draw the curtains and shades at night and when you're away. Lock all the windows and doors.

• Take a mental snapshot before you leave the house. If things have been disturbed when you return, do not touch anything. Leave immediately and call the police from a neighbors home or a cell phone.

• Never enter a home you suspect has been burglarized.

• Whether you're leaving for a week or weekend, cancel the newspaper and mail or have a neighbor pick it up.

And register with Fort Benning's military police home watch program.

MPs will periodically drive by and do a periphrial check of your quarters.

• Leave keys only with someone you're absolutely certain you can trust.

• Use a timer for lights whenever possible.

"The bottom line is security — secure everything, inside and out," Modler said.

"You want to attract as little attention as possible to your home or property."

HOPE: Wanes for military students

"We're getting a terrible runaround. It varies from school to school," said Margaret Kerchief, whose daughter Kathy plans to attend North Georgia College in the fall. The Kerchiefs have lived in Columbus for five years, but Margaret can't get a straight answer about her daughter's eligibility for financial assistance.

"In fact, it varies from office to office. We get different answers from financial aid offices and admissions offices. No one seems to know. It's a very gray area," she said.

Mary Elliott, a financial aid assistant at Columbus State University, agrees.

"There's such a fine line here. While the regulation seems straightforward, we have to look closely at every individual situation. Ultimately, it's up to the school's admissions office to determine residency," Elliott said. "We really do want them to have this money. It's there for them. But we have to verify their eligibility, and that means different things in different situations."

In Jake Kirkwood's situation, it means he'll likely lose the HOPE and several other state scholarships when his father, Maj. John Kirkwood, transfers to another state. Jake, Carver High School's highest scorer on the SAT, plans to attend Georgia Tech in the fall.

"Jake's worked very hard to get where he's at, and he'll lose it all if we move," said Nancy Kirkwood, Jake's mother, who is a registered voter in Georgia, pays state taxes and carries a Georgia driver's license. "It's like they're punishing military children. There needs to be a standardized regulation for military kids, an exception to policy if need be."

The Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia governs the state's public colleges and universities. For tuition purposes, the Board of Regents policy considers 12 months to be a "reasonable period" to determine state residency.

"If a person is 18 years of age or older, he or she may register as an in-state student only upon showing that he or she has been domiciled in Georgia for a period of at least 12 months immediately preceding the date of registration," the policy states.

But that's not the bottom line, Elliott said. If the student is a dependent of a nonresident soldier, he or she may not qualify for residency when the soldier moves out of state, even if another parents remains.

That's frustrating and unfair, said Teresita Vinegas, who's now trying to sell her Columbus home.

"I stayed for the sake of the boys, but what good has it done," she said. "We can't afford to pay out-of-state tuition and keep the house. Now we have to move. There's nothing left for us here."

FLAT STANLEY

Book character visits Benning

Students read, write, mail stories

Wilson Elementary School

He's flat. He loves to visit friends, and he doesn't mind traveling via the mail! He is Flat Stanley, the fictional character in Jeff Brown's popular children's book.

Second-grade students at Wilson Elementary School are participating in the International Flat Stanley Project. The project, named for Brown's book, is an incentive program that provides students with real audiences for their writing.

In the book, Stanley is squashed flat by a falling bulletin board. One of the many advantages is Flat Stanley can now visit his friends by traveling in an envelope. This premise provides a reason for students to keep in touch with each other. Students' written work goes to other places by conventional mail and e-mail.

After reading the book, the second-grade students made paper Flat Stanleys and began keeping a journal with him for a few days. Next, the Flat Stanleys and the journals were sent to other participating schools where students there are instructed to treat Flat Stanley as a guest and complete the journal. Flat Stanley and the journal are then returned to the original sender. The students plot his travels on maps and share the contents of the journal.

Students in Mary-Ann Rinaldi's class were thrilled when they recently received a Flat Stanley from Australia. Their visiting Stanley came with photographs from the participating class.

Aaron Walker took the Aussie Stanley home for the weekend. He and Stanley played video games and explored outside. At night, Aaron read to Stanley, who slept next to him. This Australian Flat Stanley will be sent back in a couple of weeks.

"Writing in Flat Stanley's journal was fun. I hope they like my writing in Australia," Aaron said.

Andrea Takemoto is also excited about the project.

"We are learning about different cities and countries. I want to mail my Flat Stanley to the Dominican Republic where my mother and grandparents are from."

The teachers agree that the project is an excellent way to incorporate writing skills and geography.

"Anytime students have a real audience, they are much more motivated to write. This project integrates so many of the skills second-graders need, and it does it in a fun way. Students are eager each day to see if a new Stanley has come in or if any of their Stanleys have returned from their travels," Rinaldi said.

Wilson students go medieval

Wilson Elementary School

Where did heraldry originate?

What was the Feudal System?

Who was Charlemagne?

How did the Magna Carta influence modern government?

These and other questions related to the Middle Ages can be answered by gifted and enrichment students at Wilson School.

Visitors to the enrichment room may feel like they have stepped back in time as they enter the castle that adorns the wall outside of the classroom.

The students, with the help of educational aide, Myra Barber, assembled the castle, constructed out of large refrigerator boxes and sponge painted to look like stone.

The inside of the castle is lined with shields that each student created after studying heraldry.

Students have learned about the feudal system and the code of chivalry and have created their own versions using reference books and the Internet.

Students are also researching famous people in the Middle Ages.

The grand finale of the unit will come in late March. After learning how to prepare medieval food, students will host a magnificent Medieval Feast.

At the feast, which will be attended by parents and students will showcase their research findings.

In addition, they will provide the entertainment for their guests. Students will role-play jugglers, jesters and traveling minstrels.

Teacher Margaret Koger believes learning about this part of history is instrumental in understanding the Renaissance and the motives of early European settlers in North America.

Students have been enthusiastic about the unit as well.

"Learning about medieval times has been fun." said Brittany Bullock, a fourth-grade student.

"I always thought it sounded exciting to live back in those days, but now I know there were a lot of hard times, too."

Wilson Elementary School

What changes over time? Hairstyles, clothing trends, what's cool.

What can't time change? Friendship, memories of classmates, and all the good times the past year brought — all of the things that a school yearbook memorializes.

Wilson's photography club is in the process of making final preparations for The Trailblazer, the school yearbook.

The photography club, which consists of fourth- and fifth-grade students, was given the responsibility for creating each year's memory book by Principal Phyllis Parker, when the club was founded in 1999.

"I believe our students have the talents and skills necessary to create a top-notch memory book," Parker said.

"They've done some great photography, and I believe this is going to be one of our best yearbooks ever."

The students are proving Parker right.

They have created a new format for this year's book, and they've gone to great lengths to include even the most recently registered students.

In addition to individual photographs, students will enjoy seeing candid shots and group pictures of clubs.

Yearbooks will remain on sale until March 18.

The cost for the soft-bound book is $8.

commentary

Chaplain (Capt.) Daniel Petsch
Ranger Training Brigade

When I was a civilian pastor in California a number of years ago, I came across a story that really touched my heart. I would like to share with you a true story about 13 baldheaded boys (12 who chose to be bald and one who did not choose his baldness).

The story takes place in San Diego. During the school year, a particularly virulent form of cancer, called lymphoma, struck a young boy named Timmy.

The standard treatment for Timmy's ailment was 10 weeks of chemotherapy. These treatments were very difficult on Tim. Besides the severe nausea and listlessness brought on by the treatments, Timmy also suffered the indignity of losing all of his hair.

Petsch

While Tim was recuperating at home, his best friend John came to visit him. John was aghast at the sight of his best friend without hair.

Timmy knew how odd-looking he was and dreaded the day he would have to return to school to the laughs, ridicule and snide remarks he would receive from others. (We all know how insensitive children can sometimes be, and adults for that matter, when someone appears very different from himself.)

Timmy shared his fears with John concerning the treatment he would receive once he returned to school.

Empathizing with his best friend's dilemma, John approached 11 other boys in his homeroom class and revealed to them his plan to help Tim feel accepted. They all agreed this was the best thing to do for Tim.

That afternoon, all 12 boys made their way to the local barbershop and told the barber about wanting to have their heads shaved.

When the barber inquired as to why, John relayed the story about his best friend Tim. The barber was so impressed with the dedication and self-sacrifice of these boys that he shaved all of their heads for free.

The next morning Tim was quite apprehensive about returning to school. With much fear and trepidation in his heart, he reluctantly got into the car as his mother drove off. He waited until all the school buses dropped off their students and slowly made his way to his homeroom class. With a trembling hand, he opened the door to his classroom.

He just knew all the other kids would poke fun at him and tease him because of his baldness. So can you imagine his surprise and yes, his joy and relief to see 12 other boys with bald heads sitting in the classroom? Instantly, his fear and self-consciousness melted away. He felt he belonged there and he understood the meaning of true friendship.

As I reflected upon this very moving story, I remembered a text from the Bible these boys knowingly or even unknowingly put into practice: Carry one another's burdens and therefore fulfill the law of Christ. (Galatians 6:2)

What a wonderful principle for us to adopt in the Army.

Can you imagine how effective your unit would be and how enjoyable and fulfilling our lives would be across the board, if everyone shouldered each other's burdens?

Unfortunately, all too often, we are so preoccupied with our own cares and burdens that we fail to notice the struggles others are going through. The apostles' admonition is for us to come out of ourselves and be a blessing to someone else.

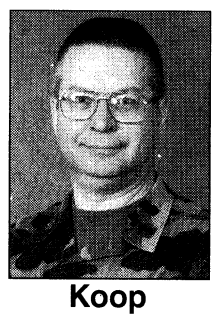
Control your passions or they will control you



Use your senses to praise God and his direction

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Forty Days and 40 Nights is the name of a movie that was recently released.

A teen-age boy seeks to avoid any sexual contact for 40 days: no kissing, no hugging, no petting and no sex. He wants to prove to himself and to others that he can finish what his mind sets out to do. He desires to gain mastery over his natural instincts and passions.

One of the things that separate human beings from the rest of the animal kingdom is our ability to suppress our instincts and passions.

Koop

Anger can be channeled into positive action. Fear can be turned to courage. Hunger can be suppressed, and our libido can be expressed in the lasting love of marriage.

Faith helps believers to control their natural instincts, passions and lusts. Faith helps to distinguish need from want. Faith helps to channel our natural instincts and passions into positive actions and relationships. The spiritual dimension is essential. The mental dimension alone is not sufficient.

The Jewish faith practices fasting. At designated times and religious observances, they fast to purify the body and to restrain the body's natural instincts and passions by giving up certain foods or activities.

During the month of Ramadan, Muslims fast during the day. One of the pillars of Islam is to gain mastery through jihad, an inward struggle, over the body's natural instincts and passions.

During the 40 days and nights of Lent, Christians are encouraged to give up certain foods or activities prior to Resurrection Sunday. Scripture exhorts Christians at all times to remove their old sinful habits and lusts and to begin a new way of living. The change is for a lifetime, not just for 40 days and 40 nights.

Do you desire to control your natural instincts and passions? Contact the Chaplain Family Life Center for help or call 545-1760.
