Roberts said the "pull-through" effect is the creation of promotion slots at lower levels by promotions to higher ranks. A slowdown at one of the higher grades suppresses advancements in lower grades.

"We strictly promote to requirements," Roberts said. "That's why we have the roller coaster effect from month to month."

"December also looks low (for promotions)," Roberts said, "but as we go into the new year, they start to creep up. We'll be back on track by mid- to late winter."

Promotion projections are made on an annual basis, Roberts said, based on loss projections of the previous year. The annual rate of promotions is about on target despite monthly fluctuations.

Reserve, active mix to change

Courtney Brooks
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense is looking at changing the reserve- and active-component mix, according to its top civilian leader.

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld made that observation Monday to the Pentagon press corps amid questions of reports that Reserve and National Guard soldiers were being overtaxed with mobilization requirements since last year's terrorist attacks on this nation.

"There's no question that there a number of things that the United States is asking its forces to do," Rumsfeld said. "And when one looks at what those things are, we find that some of the things that are necessary, in the course of executing those orders, are things that are found only in the Reserves."

Within the Army, the Selected Reserve elements of the Army National Guard and Army Reserve comprise 54 percent of the force, as of September, according to the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Reserve Affairs. These units provide essential combat, combat support, and combat service support to the Army.

For example, by percentage of the Army, the Reserve provides the following capabilities: chemical brigades (100 percent), water supply battalions (100 percent), public affairs (82 percent), civil affairs (97 percent), medical brigades (85 percent), psychological operations units (81 percent), engineering battalions (70 percent), and military police battalions (66 percent).

Rumsfeld said that the DoD is considering how it might migrate some active activities that are not always going to be needed into the Guard or the Reserve and vice-versa.

Concerning the opinion that the Total Force Concept is at risk due to repeatedly calling back reservists, the secretary said soldiers would still have a Total Force Concept with a certain amount of active soldiers and a certain amount in the National Guard and Reserve.

"But you'd have it better allocated between the two so there would be less stress on Guard and Reserve on a continuing basis, since we now ought to be smart enough to be better able to see what those things are," Rumsfeld said.

Currently, 57,721 men and women have been called up in the National Guard and Reserve, according to Department of Defense statistics.

Classroom saves money, opens soon

The U.S. Army Infantry School's new video-teletraining 200-seat classroom is completed and will enable other posts to broadcast blocks of instruction live to Infantry Hall.

"A unit can link to another post to get instruction from a subject matter expert and save thousands of dollars on TDY expenses and keep families together," said Staff Sgt. Aaron Prowell, Nuclear Biological Chemical instructor with the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

"The classroom will eventually pay for itself."

The room features equipment to transmit and receive blocks of instruction from other service schools under Training and Doctrine Command, said Lee Capraro, multimedia integration manager, chief of Training Support Center.

This makes subject matter experts from all over the Army available to Fort Benning, she said.

"Students will be able to interact with the telecast instructors, ask questions and get an immediate response, similar to video conferencing," Capraro said.

The classroom is the first of its size and is a test classroom for TRADOC's distance learning program, which started in 1996.

"The project was needed to fill the gaps for instructors in some (military occupational specialties), like NBC," said Capt. Donald Patterson, former CATD NBC officer who spearheaded the classroom project. "Now, the NBC class will be able to receive blocks of instruction straight from the subject matter experts at Fort Leonardwood, the NBC mother school."

The first class is scheduled to begin late November.

29th Regiment champions repeat

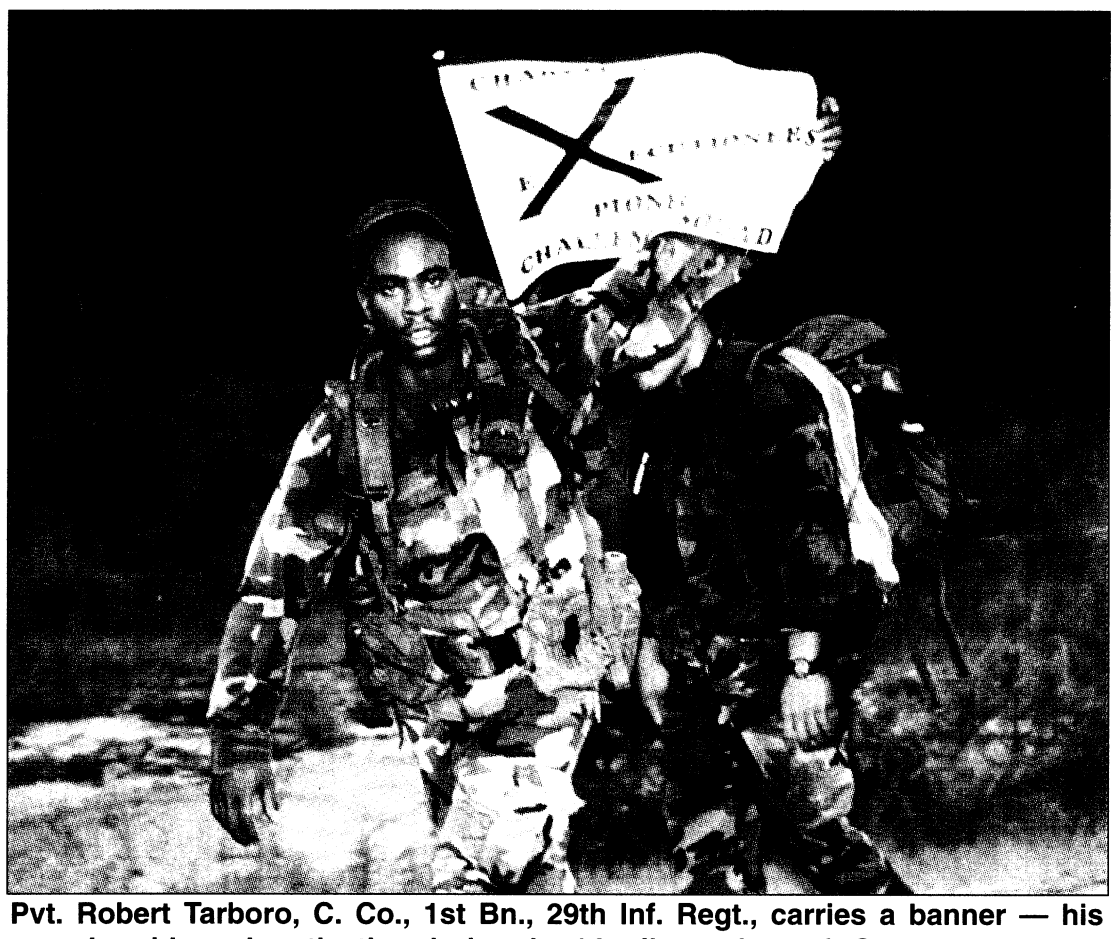
More than five squads from the 29th Regiment competed in the Pioneer Challenge, a biannual event established in 1998 designed to build esprit de corp, Oct. 29-31 to stake their claim as the best infantry squad in the regiment.

A squad from 1st Battalion's A Company dominated the competition to walk away the winner of the Command Sgt. Maj. Frank C. Plass Award for the second time this year.

"My whole squad is filled with studs," said Staff Sgt. Robert Allen, A Company's squad leader. "They're completely professional soldiers who are young and eager to learn.



"We dominated the competition and gave 110 percent in each event."

Squad members participated in events such as the Army physical fitness test, day and night land navigation, pugil sticks battles and a 14-mile road march.

While some teams chose to march together as a squad, other teams preferred to separate and march either individually or in buddy teams.

"We're only as fast as our slowest man," said Spc. Mario Wootan, B Co., 1st Bn. "Once all nine get across the finish line, the time stops."

Yet what works for some may not work for others, Allen said.

Pvt. Robert Tarboro, C. Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., carries a banner — his squads pride and motivation during the 14-mile road march Oct.30.

Of the first 12 soldiers to finish the march, more than half of them were A Co. soldiers.

"I just have to be the best," said A Company's Spc. Jose Matthews, who averaged a little more than 10-minute miles on the march.

Twice a year, events are switched around, added or dropped depending on the criteria the organizers wish to meet for the challenge, said Staff Sgt. Michael Ettman, training NCO.

Alternating the route of the road march and changing the PT test is part of the planning process, Ettman said.

"We do it so it doesn't become monotonous," he said.

"We identify the toughness of the competition," said Master Sgt. Franklyn Sterling, 1st Bn. operations sergeant. "It's our job to make the challenge safe but tough and demanding."

The Pioneer Challenge is planned, prepared and executed by NCOs, and the competition brings soldiers in the regiment together, said Lt. Col. Chris Lockhart, 1st Bn. commander.

"It's a great motivator for younger enlisted soldiers," Lockhart said. "It allows them to showcase their skills."

For the most part, the regiment supports the U.S. Army Infantry Center, so the soldiers rarely have the opportunity to train together, said Sgt. Maj. Anthony Johnson, 1st Bn.

"This takes them out of the Bradleys and lets them do the things they would as infantry foot soldiers," Johnson said. "It allows them to go through the physical rigors of infantry training."

The whole idea of the Pioneer Challenge is to pull soldiers together and be a family, Johnson said.

"Everyone had an excellent time and came together for the spirit of competition," Johnson said. "The regiment is a more cohesive unit than when the challenge started, and I'm proud of the men's performance."

OCS fights with double vision

Soldiers learn both sides through OPFOR

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Soldiers experienced a different perspective and "maximum realism" when they became the Cortinian Liberation Front, the opposing force for the Officer Candidate School field problem.

"An internalized (opposing force) makes training more fun and realistic," said Capt. William Moncrief, OPFOR commander. "With different weapons and uniforms, we're really playing the part. To achieve maximum realism, you need to do more than just flip BDU tops inside out."

A platoon, detached from D Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, played the OPFOR as part of the OCS 11-day field problem. They operated as a separate company, with different uniforms, weapons, rules of engagement and tactical operations center.

"I think the OPFOR mission is every bit as important as the U.S. force's mission," said Capt. Scottie Moore, D Company commander. "Anywhere the soldiers go in the Army, they will be expected to fight a savvy and capable OPFOR, and this gives them the chance to see both sides."

With continual missions and both sides adjusting to constantly changing conditions, the officer candidates seemed to react well, Moncrief said.

"It's total submersion — everything in our world revolves around this mission," said Officer Candidate Chris Distifeno. "The intensity level is higher than most of us are used to, but we've been looking forward to being OPFOR for a long time. We heard it was really good training," and it was, he said.

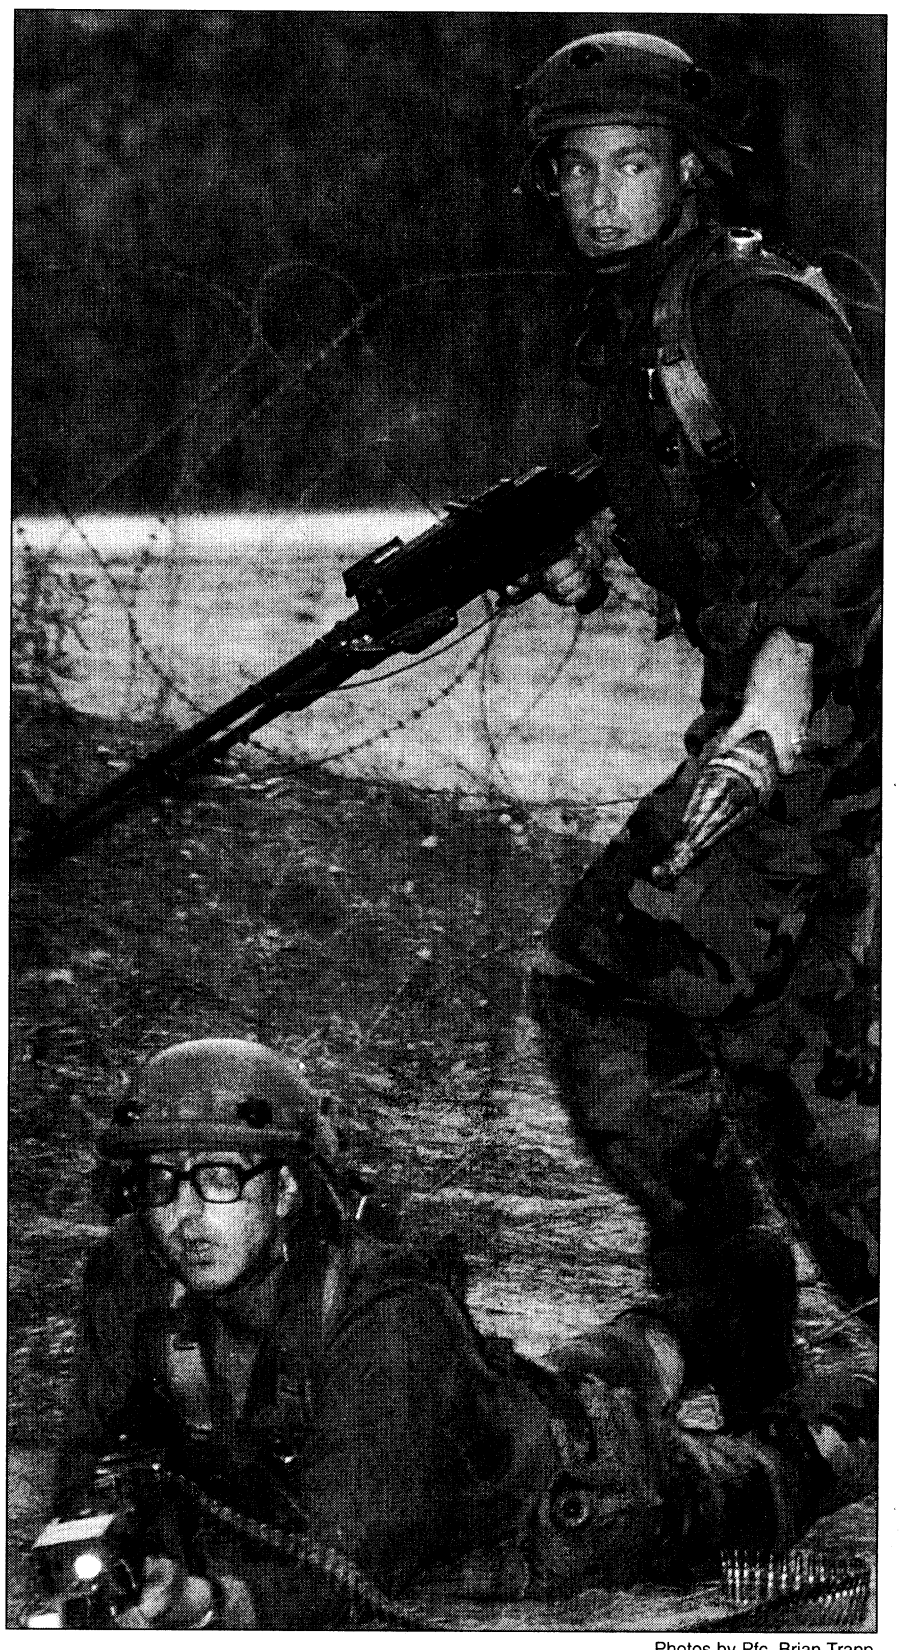
The only thing that changes for the OPFOR is some tactical differences, Moncrief said. The candidates still go through the standard doctrine, which is there to maintain realism and enforce good habits.

"Being on the OPFOR gave us a chance to hunt instead of being hunted, but it also helped me to see our weak points," said Officer Candidate Jason Hulsey.

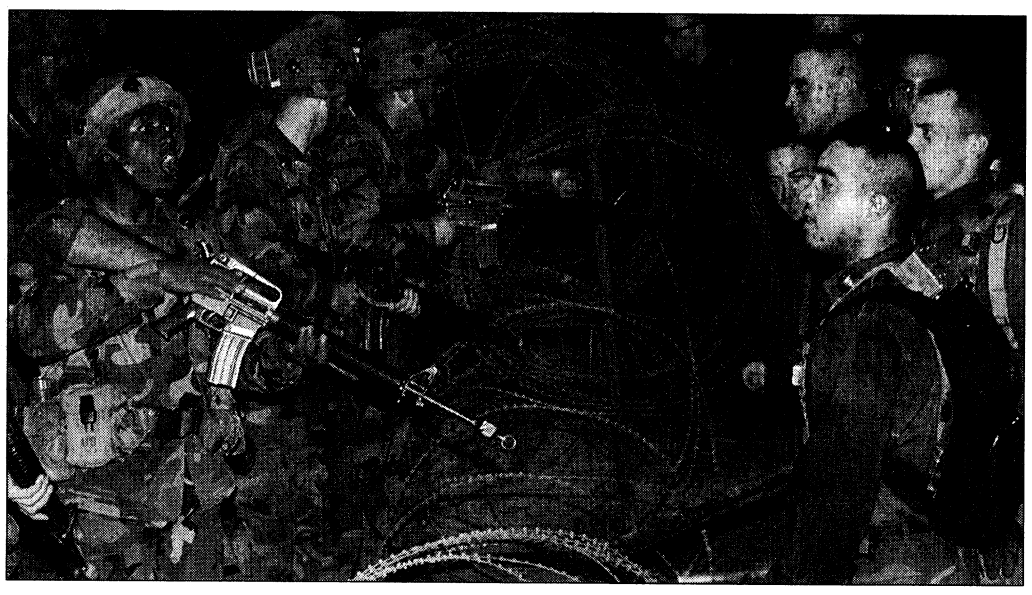
The Cortinian Liberation Front's mission was to probe the U.S. force's gate, try different scenarios to see how the U.S. forces react and find weaknesses. The scenarios were drawn from training and real-world situations similar to what is given to units in the Balkans.

"Captain Moncrief just spent six months in Kosovo as a company commander," Moore said. "He has a tremendous amount of experience, and he knows how to play OPFOR. He knows what it looks like."

The U.S. forces had to handle a series of encounters with civilians, some speaking foreign languages, and Cortinian Liberation Front soldiers.



"This is a normal deployment peace-keeping vignette using real-world situations, but we add our own little flare," Moncrief said.

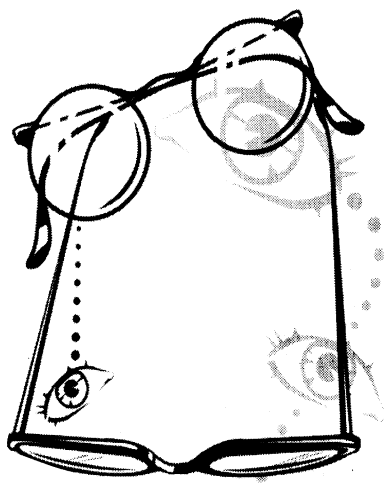


During one of the missions, a group of Cortinian civilians came to the U.S. forces gate as part of a mob protest, where the soldiers learned a vital lesson: "You have to control the situation or it will control you," he said.

"I learned things are never going to go as planned," Distifeno said. "I wouldn't want to be on the receiving end."

"The field problem is going really well," Moore said. "The continuous engagement uncertainty about whom the enemy is and the lack of sleep taught the officer candidates to adapt to a generally unpleasant field problem."

"Training in these conditions and testing our leadership abilities is harder than anything I've ever had to do," Distifeno said. "This is separating the proverbial wheat from the shaft."



The U.S. forces were at a standoff with a group of Cortinian civilians as a mob of protesters forced their way past the gate, during the OCS field problem.

Post prepares for protesters

Demonstration results in gate closing

"We want this to be a non-event, but make no mistake, if they come on post, they will be detained and processed."

Lt. Col. Laurel Wilkerson
Deputy staff judge advocate

Around 5,000 protesters are expected to gather at the Benning Boulevard Main Gate for the annual SOA-Watch protest that is scheduled for this weekend.

As a result of the protest, Benning Boulevard will be closed from 7 p.m. Saturday until 12:01 a.m. Monday, and there will be increased vehicle inspections so motorists should anticipate longer waits at the access points. People using the Riverwalk this weekend are recommended to have their ID card with them to get back on post.

The new 1,000-foot fence, which was completed last year, kept most of the protesters from breaking the federal law that prohibits partisan protests on military reservations.

All who violate the law will have to take responsibility for their actions.

"We want this to be a non-event, but make no mistake, if they come on post, they will be detained and processed," said Lt. Col. Laurel Wilkerson, deputy staff judge advocate.

Regardless, 80 to 100 protesters are anticipated to enter post illegally, said a Fort Benning official.

Last year, fewer than 100 protesters crossed onto federal

Fort Benning leaders, soldiers and civilians gathered with the rest of the tri-community on the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month Monday at Marshall Auditorium for Veterans Day.

Veterans Day is a holiday that honors the sacrifices soldiers made to ensure our country's freedom.

"On this day, we express our thanks to those who kept us free," said Congressman Sanford Bishop, of Georgia's 2nd District. "They made the sacrifice so that we could live the ideal life of today."

To celebrate the life Americans have today, the ceremony included patriotic songs like The Star Spangled Banner, God Bless America and God Bless the U.S.A.

There were also comments from Bishop and an interpretive reading by Lauren O'Neill, 14, entitled, "A Night of War."

In 1954, Congress designated a day for veterans to remember those who survived our nation's conflicts and those who didn't.

"We honor those veterans who passed the torch to us," said Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, commanding general. "Now it is our turn to preserve our way of life for those who will follow us, so that we too can pass the torch to them."

The ceremony concluded with an Armed Forces Medley played by the Infantry Band.

"The price of freedom is paid everyday," Bishop said. "Freedom isn't free."

Army to review jobs' functions

Third Wave to outsource jobs in less time

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

After nearly a monthlong delay, reduction in force letters are being distributed today since post officials received word that congressional notification occurred Thursday.

Meanwhile Secretary of the Army Thomas White wants a plan to streamline more than 210,000 non-core military and civilian positions.

Non-core positions are those not relating directly to a unit's mission or ones that are potentially eligible for private sector performance.

The reason for the study is threefold, said Dr. John Anderson, assistant deputy assistant secretary of the Army, Manpower. It will:

- Free resources for the global war on terrorism;
- Obtain non-core products and services from the private sector to help Army leaders focus their energies and talents on the Army's core competencies; and,
- Support President Bush's management agenda.

This effort to streamline government is called "The Third Wave" because of the first two waves of public-private competitions that preceded it.

The first wave in the '80s looked at 25,000 positions and the second, which began in fiscal 1997, looked at 33,000 positions, of which 375 people lost their jobs, said Jim

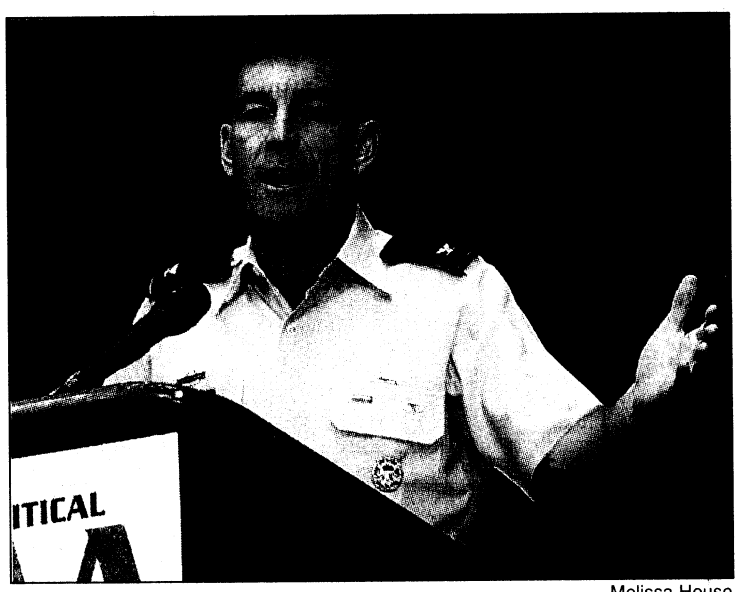
WHINSEC faces off with SOA Watch

Debate precedes annual protest on Benning Blvd.

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

In a calm prelude of things to come, Col. Robert Downie and Father Roy Bourgeois faced off Nov. 6 in a debate sponsored by Columbus State University's Student Political Awareness Association.



The debate represented the first time that Downie, commandant of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, and Bourgeois, founder of the School of Americas Watch, had met publicly to discuss the institute. At the heart of the debate was the SOA-Watch assertion that WHINSEC is connected to terror in Latin America, teaching from manuals that advocate torture.

The crowd of nearly 400 was decidedly in Downie's camp, giving him a standing ovation following his opening statement in which he presented facts about the institute, its courses and its goals.

Downie said WHINSEC provides education and training to civilian and military students throughout the hemisphere to promote security cooperation and democratic values.

The first pillar, Downie said, is to

SOA-Watch propaganda machine well-oiled

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

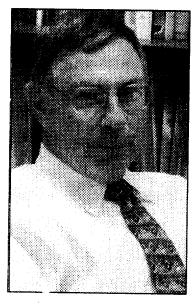
COMMENTARY

Joseph Goebbels, Nazi propaganda minister, believed that if you told a big enough lie, often enough, people would believe you.

SOA-Watch leadership has been practicing this for 12 years and is proving Goebbels right. Every year, more and more gullible people fall for their story, hook line and sinker.

Why the annual protests? They claim they want the School of Americas closed. What they really want is a change in U.S. foreign policy.

But SOA-Watch leaders are smart. They know if they tell the public to protest against American foreign policy, they'd get nowhere. So they picked on the U.S. Army School of Americas as their whipping boy.



They claimed the school taught torture and murder. They cited atrocities that Latin American soldiers committed. And yes, some of those were graduates of the School of Americas.

What they don't tell their followers is what courses those soldiers attended and how long ago they attended them.

How can attending a two-week radio repairman's course equate with committing an atrocity 20 years later?

If we closed every institution of higher learning that had a graduate who committed a serious crime, we'd have very few institutions.

Also, what the leadership doesn't tell the followers is that they don't believe torture and murder were taught there either, but why confuse a good story with facts.

Instead, they continue to besmirch the names and reputations of the outstanding men and women who teach at the school.

And guess what else they don't tell their followers — that the U.S. Army School of Americas closed two years ago — major news flash to some college students protesting here last year.

The protesters chant, "you can't teach democracy from the barrel of a gun," while bemoaning the fact the citizens of Latin America fear their armies.

What better way to improve a country's military and instill in them a value system that respects civil control of the military and respects the citizens of that country, than putting them in a setting where the finest, most respected army in the world provides that instruction?

The protesters say, "Close the school, let them learn at our colleges."

Who is a soldier going to listen to, some college professor who never served in the military or a soldier who's been there, done that?

I think if the protesters were to be honest with themselves, they would admit that the situation in Latin America is improving, not getting worse.

Can the School of Americas take credit? If the answer is, "No, 60,000 graduates who have gone on to serve honorably couldn't make a difference," then how can they think that a few hundred bad apples spread out over 50 years can ruin a military?

Now we have a new institute for a new century. It's the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. Its curriculum reflects the realities of the 21st Century. It will strive to teach soldiers, police and civil servants about nation building, civilian control of the military, human rights, war against terrorism and drugs and disaster relief — exactly the same thing the protesters claim they want for those nations.

As the protesters line up like sheep to beat their drums and chant their mantras, I leave them with this thought from Father Dennis Edward O'Brien, USMC:

"It is the soldier, not the reporter, who has given us the freedom of the press. It is the soldier, not the poet, who has given us the freedom of speech. It is the soldier, not the campus organizer, who gives us the freedom to demonstrate. It is the soldier who salutes the flag, who serves beneath the flag, and whose coffin is draped by the flag, who allows the protester to burn the flag."

This is what we are teaching at WHINSEC.

Be a great American, stop smoking

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

COMMENTARY

Did you know 10 million Americans will take up smoking this year? Unbelievable. Ten million.

I suspect 999,000 of them will eventually regret it. And statistics say at least one third of them will die from it.

How many will stop before it's too late? No one can say for sure, but the American Cancer Society is doing everything it can to encourage and assist those who want to kick the habit.

Thursday, Nov. 21 is the American Cancer Society's Great American Smoke Out.

The Smoke Out, now in its 20th year, is credited with helping thousands of smokers kick the habit.

My stepdad is one of them.

After nearly 60 years of smoking, Paul quit four years ago. Just like that. He simply decided to give it a try and succeeded in a big way. I believe it saved his life.

Within weeks of quitting, Paul was hospitalized with viral pneumonia. It looked really bad, so Mom called the kids home. I didn't even recognize Paul when I walked into that critical care ward. He was comatose, swollen beyond recognition, and fighting for his life.

But Paul had one thing going for him. His lungs had already begun to recover from years and years of abuse. He fought the good fight for 10 weeks and came out kicking. We've had four years with him that we'd likely not have had if Paul hadn't quit smoking. And it all started with the Great American Smoke Out.

So what's that cigarette worth to you? Would you give it up for four more years? Can you give it up for a day?

Go ahead, give it a try. Be a quitter. What have you got to gain?

NATIONAL RECYCLING DAY

Just do it — recycle

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

COMMENTARY

Finally, an event I can embrace wholeheartedly. Today is National Recycling Day, and I'm all for it.

I admit it. I am a recycling fiend. My husband uses another, less flattering word to describe my commitment to making the world a better place.

I recycle everything that the recycling truck will pick up, and even some things that the truck won't pick up, like plastic grocery bags.

I have a bin for cans, bottles and jars, one for newspaper, corrugated cardboard, non-corrugated cardboard, and household paper. At least I'm organized about it.

Thankfully, I have a large enough house this move that my recycling efforts don't take place in the kitchen. This has been a major bone of contention in the House house. And those of you who know my husband understand exactly why. You see, he's a neat freak, and any additional clutter is not to be tolerated.

You'd think that a man whose birthday coincides with the annual Earth Day observances would be more appreciative of my recycling, but that is one of my pipe dreams.

Our, well, my recycling efforts hit a bit of a snag this week. I recycled my fourth-grader's math homework. Once we figured out what had happened, I quickly retrieved the bin from the curb. Naturally, it was recycling morning, so anxiety was high. To complicate things, the bin had been rained on all night, so the contents were a bit soggy.

We eventually found the homework, and after a few minutes with the hair dryer, it was as good as new ... almost.

In defense of my compulsive recycling, I've reduced the amount of trash that our family of five has every week to a mere two 13-gallon bags.

And thankfully, I didn't have to dig through one of those to try to find the math homework.

Recycling. If you don't already, give it a try starting today. And I bet once you get started, you'll be hooked.

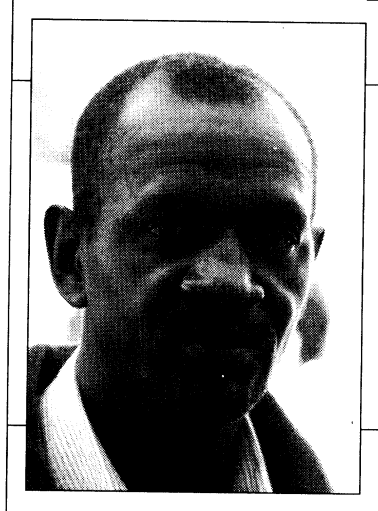
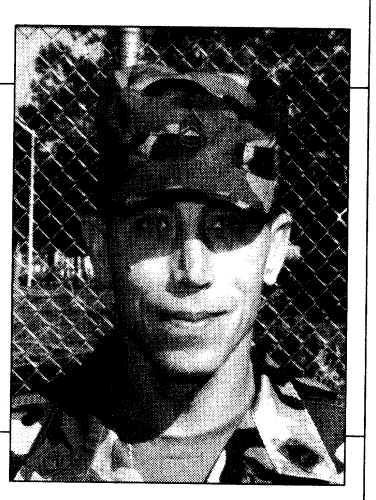
VARIOUS VOICES

Thursday is the Great American Smokeout. Why did you start smoking and have you ever tried to quit?

Sgt. Julius Marmito, BNCOC — "I started smoking in high school. Being around others, I picked up the habit. I stopped smoking in basic training and never started again."



Capt. William Byrd, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I started in high school. I worked around others who smoked. Then there's the Army and ranger training. I quit for two months when I was in Kosovo, then I went to Bulgaria and the cigarettes were cheap."



Jamie Shoup, family member — "I started smoking because of stress. I quit numerous times but was only successful when I was pregnant."

Sgt. 1st Class Yvonne Hicks, 14th Field Hospital — "I started smoking because my peers smoked. I quit in 1994. I quit cold turkey. But I tried three times before I was successful."

Leon Burns, Fort Benning Lodging — "I started smoking in 1980 when I joined the Army. I've quit a couple of times — the longest time was for six months. I'm hanging out with the wrong crowd."

Sgt. 1st Class Bill Bailey, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I started smoking because everyone else was. I quit once for three weeks. I had to for surgery. I started smoking again when I was playing golf."

Golden Corral says thanks with food

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Golden Corral had its second annual Military Appreciation Night Monday evening at all restaurant locations.

More than 2,200 veterans, active-duty, reserve and National Guard soldiers showed up at the Golden Corral on Manchester Expressway for a free dinner buffet and beverage.

"We offered this to show our thanks and appreciation for the job the military has done in the past and the job they're doing now," said Greg McNally, associate manager of the Manchester Expressway Golden Corral.

As the night began, the parking lot filled with cars, and the line to get into the restaurant weaved its way around the parking lot.

"It's a great turnout by all past and present military," McNally said. "It was great to see everyone come out and support each other."

Inside the restaurant was a lively atmosphere. Soldiers and families sat next to people they didn't know and carried on conversations about their time in service.

Golden Corral management thought last year's Military Appreciation Night was a major success and felt it appropriate to do it again.

"Being retired military, I know what it is like to be in their shoes," McNally said. "It's nice to feel appreciated and our goal here is to say "thank you" to all of the men and women who serve or have served in our military."

People waited up to 30 minutes to be seated. But once inside, guests piled their plates high with their favorite foods.

From macaroni and cheese to sirloin steaks, it didn't stay at the food bar very long.

"The food was outstanding and was worth the wait," said Spc. Daniel Cariker, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "Golden Corral did a great job putting this together. They took the time to put together a great meal. They just didn't slap everything together and say, 'here's dinner.'"

Retirees attend appreciation events

Attendees visit with soldiers, get information

More than 200 retirees and family members traveled to Fort Benning Nov. 7 to take part in the 20th annual Military Retiree Appreciation Day activities. A broken pipe and chilly weather did not dampen the spirits of those attending.

Following breakfast with the soldiers of 3rd Battalion, 47th Regiment, attendees had the opportunity to tour Roush Barracks to see how today's trainees live. For the battalion's cadre, this was a last minute mission they received after a broken pipe forced the closure of the Leonard Barracks' dining facility.

"We got total support from the unit," said retired Maj. Bud Sikes, a member of the Retiree Council and host for the day's events. "That's what I like about our Army. Flexibility. They just drive on like nothing happened."

Edward Bell and his wife, Helen, traveled from Cumming, Ga., to attend their first appreciation day. Bell served as a senior drill sergeant at Sand Hill in 1967, and for him, the trip was all about bringing back memories.

"We've really had a great tour," Helen said.

Command Sgt. Maj. Larry Conley handed out regimental pins as the retirees waited for buses to take them to the D Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, graduation ceremony. He invited them to come back and visit the battalion anytime.

"I wouldn't be here today if it weren't for you," he said, referring to the retirees' dedicated service to our nation.

After lunch at the Officers' Club, attendees browsed booths in the Supper Club.

The 50 booths had representatives from a variety of organizations both on and off post that were of interest to the retirees.

Roger Cortney, who retired in 1995, was among the large number of retirees attending the appreciation day for the first time.

He traveled from Montgomery, Ala., and took advantage of the vision screening and other services offered by Martin Army Community Hospital.

"I felt like I needed to come in," he said. "I miss the military, and I wanted to find out where we stood with benefits."

Cecil Harmon, from the Disabled American Veterans, was on hand to provide information for retirees.

Harmon takes disability claims and works with those transitioning from active duty.

"We're here to let people know who we are and what we do," he said.

Retirees walked away from the event with bags filled with pamphlets and free items from the commissary, hospital and other booths.

"This is our first (Retiree Appreciation Day)," Helen said, "but it won't be our last."

DENTAC helps kick smoking habit

Soldiers get dental check-up, drugs in one stop

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Most people will admit that trying to kick the nicotine habit isn't the easiest thing in the world.

For soldiers working long hours with many sleepless nights, the tobacco "high" can be a crutch.

"I've been smoking for the past year I've been in the Army," said Pfc Tremaine Price, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment. "Almost everyone in my unit is addicted to some form of tobacco."

Those addictions on Fort Benning became a little easier to target and possibly cure Tuesday, when the Fort Benning U.S. Army Dental Activity initiated a new Tobacco and Use Cessation Program, said Col. Lawrence Breault, chief of Periodontics at the Love Dental Clinic. For the first time, dentists at the Love Dental Clinic will be able to issue prescription drugs and other medications to help soldiers kick the habit.

"We've always counseled soldiers if we knew they were tobacco users, but this is kicking it up a notch," Breault said. "We can now give them the medication they need right then and there."

In the past, soldiers were referred to Martin Army Community Hospital for help to kick their habit.

Seeing a doctor could take weeks or months, and by that time, many soldiers would reconsider their decision to quit, Breault said.

> "We are the only dental clinic in the Army right now which has the authority to write prescriptions for tobacco use."
> Col. Lawrence Breault
> Love Dental Clinic

"I never really thought about taking any medication for my habit," said Price, who arrived at the Love Dental Clinic Tuesday for a follow up to his wisdom teeth surgery. "I walked in today and someone asked me if I used tobacco, and if so, did I want to try to quit.

"I said I would give it a try."

Price was counseled for a few minutes by the dentist and watched a 15-minute video on tips to kick the habit. He then walked out with a prescription for the drug Zyban, which is known to help kill tobacco cravings.

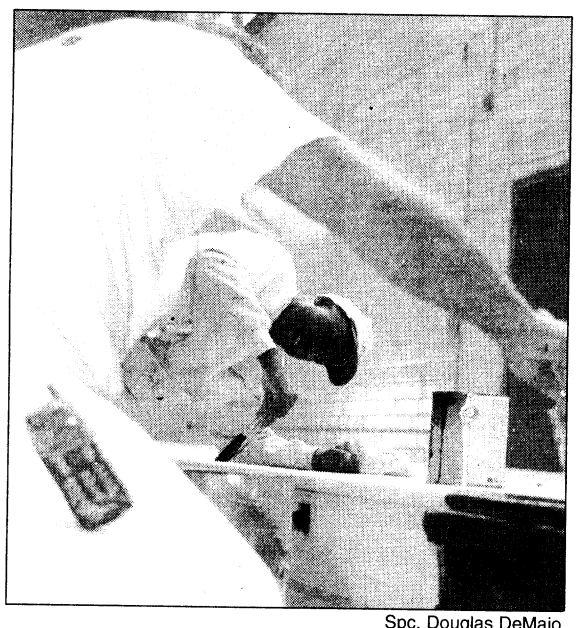
"I know a guy in my unit who took Zyban, and he doesn't smoke anymore," Price said. "I'm interested to see how it works for me."

The process Price went through takes less than 30 minutes and is typically what any soldier who is assigned to the Love Dental Clinic can do if they are interested in kicking their habit, Breault said.

Fort Benning's Love Dental Clinic is spearheading the Tobacco Use Cessation (TUC) program, which will eventually make its way to all of the DENTAC clinics by the summer, Breault said.

"We are the only dental clinic in the Army right now which has the authority to write prescriptions for tobacco use," Breault said. "We are responsible for keeping accurate records on the program to determine its effect on soldiers.

By the looks of the first week of the program, many soldiers are already taking advantage of prescription medication to kill their cravings.



"We've had several soldiers walk out of here already with hopes of changing their lives," Breault said. "We hope to only reach more."

Soldiers like Price are already thankful for the help.

"My girlfriend hates my habit," Price said. "To tell you the truth, I hate it, too."

Dentists may also prescribe nicotine patches and other anti-nicotine products. All of the medication is free through the Martin Army Community Hospital Pharmacy.

Debate: Explains truth about institute

strengthen democracy by making institutions that make democracies stronger and ultimately more viable.

"Father Roy will tell you that the military and police can't teach democracy," he said. "I disagree.

"Who better than fellow professionals who understand the situations?

"We don't just teach respect for civilian authority. We live it every day."

According to Bourgeois, the institute is bringing shame upon the country and causing untold suffering and death in Latin America. He hoped the debate would help the audience gain a better understanding of why thousands of people gather outside the gates of Fort Benning every year.

Following opening remarks by both sides, the moderator, Dr. Ray Gonzalez, professor of political science at CSU, opened the floor for questions from the audience. While questions to Bourgeois outnumbered those to Downie, neither side got off easily.

Individuals lined the aisles for a chance to pose their questions, wanting to know if anything short of closing the Institute would satisfy the SOA Watch and if the Institute had responded to the connection between its graduates and some of the atrocities in Latin America.

For Bourgeois, nothing short of closing the institute is satisfactory.

Students should instead be sent to universities.

"They need agronomics and health care," Bourgeois said, "not commando training and psychological operations.

"It is important to try to understand the implications of our country's foreign policy, to try to put ourselves in the shoes of our sisters and brothers in Latin America. The reason this school is so important is to provide muscle for large corporations who live off of the backs of the poor."

Downie countered by saying that the Institute teaches values the students can take with them back to their countries at the end of the course. Students learn respect for the rules for law.

"We are a tremendous impact in the region," Downie said. "We're making sure that the ones with the guns … respect the rights of everyone."

He said the courses in human rights help the students understand that in a democracy, the way to gain and maintain respect is by treating everyone fairly.

Downie categorically rejected the heinous crimes committed in Latin America, including the 1989 massacre of Jesuit priests in El Salvador that was the inspiration for the founding of the SOA Watch in 1990.

"We don't teach that," said Downie. "I don't believe we ever taught that."

Downie said the atrocities were committed by a small portion of graduates from the now defunct School of Americas.

"Those individuals did things in spite of their training," he said. "They took one, two, and three-week courses decades before they committed their acts. We can't guarantee anything."

Former School of Americas chief of staff John Bastone stood up to comment on the "chainsaw massacre" referred to in the SOA Watch leaflet. He took personal offense.

"I never taught anyone to use a chainsaw or a garrotte during my time," he said. "Why don't you go to Washington where real change should happen?"

A WHINSEC instructor was no easier on Bourgeois, asking him how he makes his living. SOA-Watch finances were of interest to several other audience members, but those pointed financial questions did not receive answers.

At the end of the evening, CSU students pronounced the debate a success.

"It went well," said freshman Jonathan Chapman. "We accomplished what we wanted. We got both sides out in the public.

Downie had kind words for the opposition.

"I believe that the SOA Watch is sincere and committed to its goal of improving the lives of the poor and disenfranchised in Latin America," Downie said. "I hope that one of these days, we'll be working together to achieve an objective we both share."

Army: Looks to trim jobs

Wakefield, deputy chair, Non-core Competencies Working Group, during a media roundtable Oct. 10 at the Pentagon.

"The Third Wave will differ from the previous two waves of public and private competitions in several key respects," Anderson said. "It will be bigger and faster, and it will involve for the first time functions other than base operations."

In a memo last month, White directed principal Department of the Army officials and major commanders to "develop and present to me your implementation plans for privatizing, divesting, competing using A-76, outsourcing using 'alternatives to A-76,' converting military spaces to civilian or contract, or transferring to other government agencies, non-core functions that fall under your purview."

White wrote, "Non-core functions, although important to the Army mission, must be reviewed for the best mix and provider, focusing on the total work force (military, civilian, contract) in the operating forces and infrastructure."

In a Pentagon press conference Oct. 31, White explained the Third Wave as an extension of the president's management initiative.

"We look at everything the Army does, decide the things that are core to the Army, set out the things that are not core, and for all the non-core activities see if there's a better way to do it," White said. "There may not be. There's a whole gamut of options of what might be a better way."

An example of alternatives to A-76 is partnering with a community to provide municipal services, like fire and police support, said Dr. Craig College, chairman, Department of Defense Business Initiatives Council executive directors.

"Out at (the Presidio of Monterey, Calif.) we're saving something on the order of $6 million a year," College said. "So our proposal was to expand that kind of process to other posts, camps and stations around the country."

German Memorial Day remembered

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Soldiers and civilians gathered Wednesday to pay respects to fallen soldiers during a wreath-laying ceremony at the Main Post Cemetery.

Lt. Col. Kurt Rotter and Sgt. Maj. Manfred Jerabek, German army liaison staff, held the annual memorial service in an effort to show recognition to not only fallen German soldiers, but soldiers from all countries.

The Fort Benning community, which included post leaders, German club members and representatives of POW and MIA organizations, stood together and remembered the sacrifices.

"Traditionally in November, people in Germany pause to remember and honor their soldiers, all victims of wars and those who lost their lives because of race, religion, ideology or their political convictions," Rotter said. "Celebrating a combination of Memorial Day and Veterans Day, called Volkstrauertag, we remember all soldiers and civilians who made the ultimate sacrifice while serving their country."

During the ceremony, Jerabek read off the names of the 44 German soldiers whose final resting place is on Fort Benning. The soldiers died while prisoners of war from 1944 to 1946.

"We read the names because we want to remove the soldiers from the anonymity of grave yard numbers and remember their names," Rotter said.

Michael Batholomey, guest speaker from the Consulate General of the Federal Republic of Germany in Atlanta, Ga., spoke after Rotter.

"The legacy of the dead is a constant reminder for those who preserve peace," Batholomey said. "Their legacy is not lost and will never be forgotten."

After a wreath was laid in the middle of the German graves, a lone bugler played "Taps" at the conclusion of the ceremony.

Hoax e-mail promises big bucks for retirement

Retirees fall prey to false information

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

There is a hoax e-mail circulating about civil service retirement system plans; some things are too good to be true because they are just that.

According to the e-mail, News of Interest: Two bills currently moving through Congress both have a common goal; insure all CSRS employees are retired by the end of fiscal 2003. The Senate version is the long awaited "50-50" bill, which includes five years no penalty time added to tenure and age with a $50,000 incentive bonus. The House version is a new approach, which includes the same five years addition to tenure and age but will include a 75 percent of basic pay plan that will be hard to refuse for most workers. The final draft is considered in House and Senate negotiations.

"There is no truth to the 50-50 portion of the e-mail," said Mike Slackman communications director for Representative Neil Abercrombie of Hawaii who introduced the bill to Congress HR2012. "It is a complete fabrication and also refers to nonexistent members of Congress."

The bill that Abercrombie introduced applies to dual status technicians in the Army Reserve and National Guard, not all federal employees, and doesn't have a $50,000 incentive.

CSRS won't be phased out anytime soon, like the e-mail said, according to the Office of Personnel Management's own projections.

There will be more than a million federal workers retiring between now and 2010, according to the National Association of Retired Federal Employees Web site. More than 68 percent of those retiring will be CSRS employees.

In 2000, 76,827 people retired from federal service, of which 83 percent were CSRS employees.

In 2004, they project 92,931 retirements, 75 percent will be CSRS workers, even in 2010, CSRS will make up more than half of the retirees.

"When you get information that sounds too good to be true you have to check it, and make sure it's factual," Slackman said.

"There are a number of Internet rumors out there and anyone can say anything. It gives a great free flow of information that's what makes this country great, but the downside is there's no guarantee the information is accurate.

It pays to check any of the information with authoritative source."

Murphy inductees epitomize Army

Soldiers say award motivates

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Two soldiers from Fort Benning were inducted into the Sergeant Audie Murphy Club at a ceremony in Marshall Auditorium Wednesday.

Sgts. 1st Class Randolph Fulcher, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, and James Carter, 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., were recognized for their professionalism and leadership.

"These men have proven to their peers and superiors that they're absolute professionals," said post Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso. "They embody the spirit and standards set forth by Murphy, who is considered the last American hero and the greatest combat soldier in U.S. history."

"It's a great honor to be inducted into such a prestigious organization," Fulcher said.

Inductees in the club stand for the total-leadership concept, said Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Bergman, 11th Regt. Being recognized and inducted into the club is more than just an award, it's a belief of being a teacher, coach and mentor to fellow NCOs and younger enlisted.

"It's everything we expect of a soldier," said Bergman, who was a member on the board the soldiers attended. It's about the caring, willingness and ability to go the extra mile for soldiers. They provide an example for others to emulate."

These men are highly professional and have shown qualities that represent the club, he said. The purpose of the club is to further the cause of NCOs developing professionalism in the corps.

"(The board) took a lot of preparation," Fulcher said. "You have to know the subject matter well."

In some cases during the selection board, the soldiers needed to recite the history of Murphy, he said.

"It's a challenging board," Fulcher said.

Being in the corps built a knowledge base from which he benefited during the board.

> Sgt. 1st Class Randolph Fulcher
> 1st Battalion, (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment

"The 14 years I've been in the military carried me to the top," Fulcher said.

Fulcher feels being inducted into the club will help him advance like Murphy did during his time in the service.

"It puts you a cut above your peers to make that next rank for promotion," he said.

Audie Murphy and the inductees epitomize what the Army looks for in a soldier, Bergman said.

"I know there are others like these men out there, and I encourage them to put their best foot forward, and join the club," Bergman said. "It is my challenge to them."

Carter was unavailable for comment due to his PCS.

Black Hat Competition to begin Monday

Trainers evaluate performance

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Instructors from the Airborne School will step up their performance a notch as the annual Black Hat Competition gets underway Monday.

The competition, spread out over a four-week period, will determine the best airborne instructors in the unit.

"Competition is always good," said Command Sgt. Maj. Jim Pickering. "It raises the level of performance because it makes people more conscious of their peers' performance."

Black Hats who volunteer to compete in the contest will be evaluated in the areas of fitness, professionalism, job performance and their knowledge of airborne training.

Knowing the material and mentoring students to earn their wings allows the battalion to single out the best instructor, Pickering said.

> master trainer and tower branch NCOIC

"There are people I would like to see compete, but they must have the initiative to compete," said Sgt. 1st Class John Styron, master trainer and tower branch NCOIC. "There are NCOs we have in this battalion who are by far some of the most professional instructors I've seen."

Traditionally, someone who's known by his peers as an outstanding individual wins the competition, said Capt. Christian Graff, battalion S-1.

"The primary character I see in a likely candidate is duty, that is, doing what he's suppose to do even in the absence of orders," Pickering said.

They're the instructors who take the time and effort to train soldiers who are having a difficult time during training, Styron said. They're the ones who genuinely care about the young 17- and 18-year-old soldier.

"What I look for in a candidate is confidence, poise, maturity and how well the instructor communicates with his students," Styron said. "When I look for an individual to represent me as a Black Hat and NCO, I want the best — the ultimate professional, one who's a technical expert."

And technically proficient is what competitors will have to be, Styron said. Contestants will select to be graded on a period of instruction in either ground, tower or jump training. They will take an Army Physical Fitness Test and a written and verbal exam to acquire points.

Master trainers will grade the events, and Pickering will declare the winner.

The winner will be announced at a 4 p.m. award ceremony Dec. 13 at the battalion.

Protest: To come

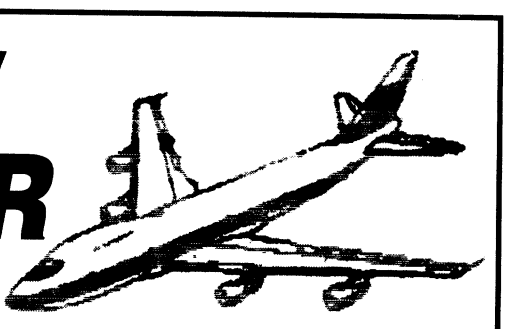
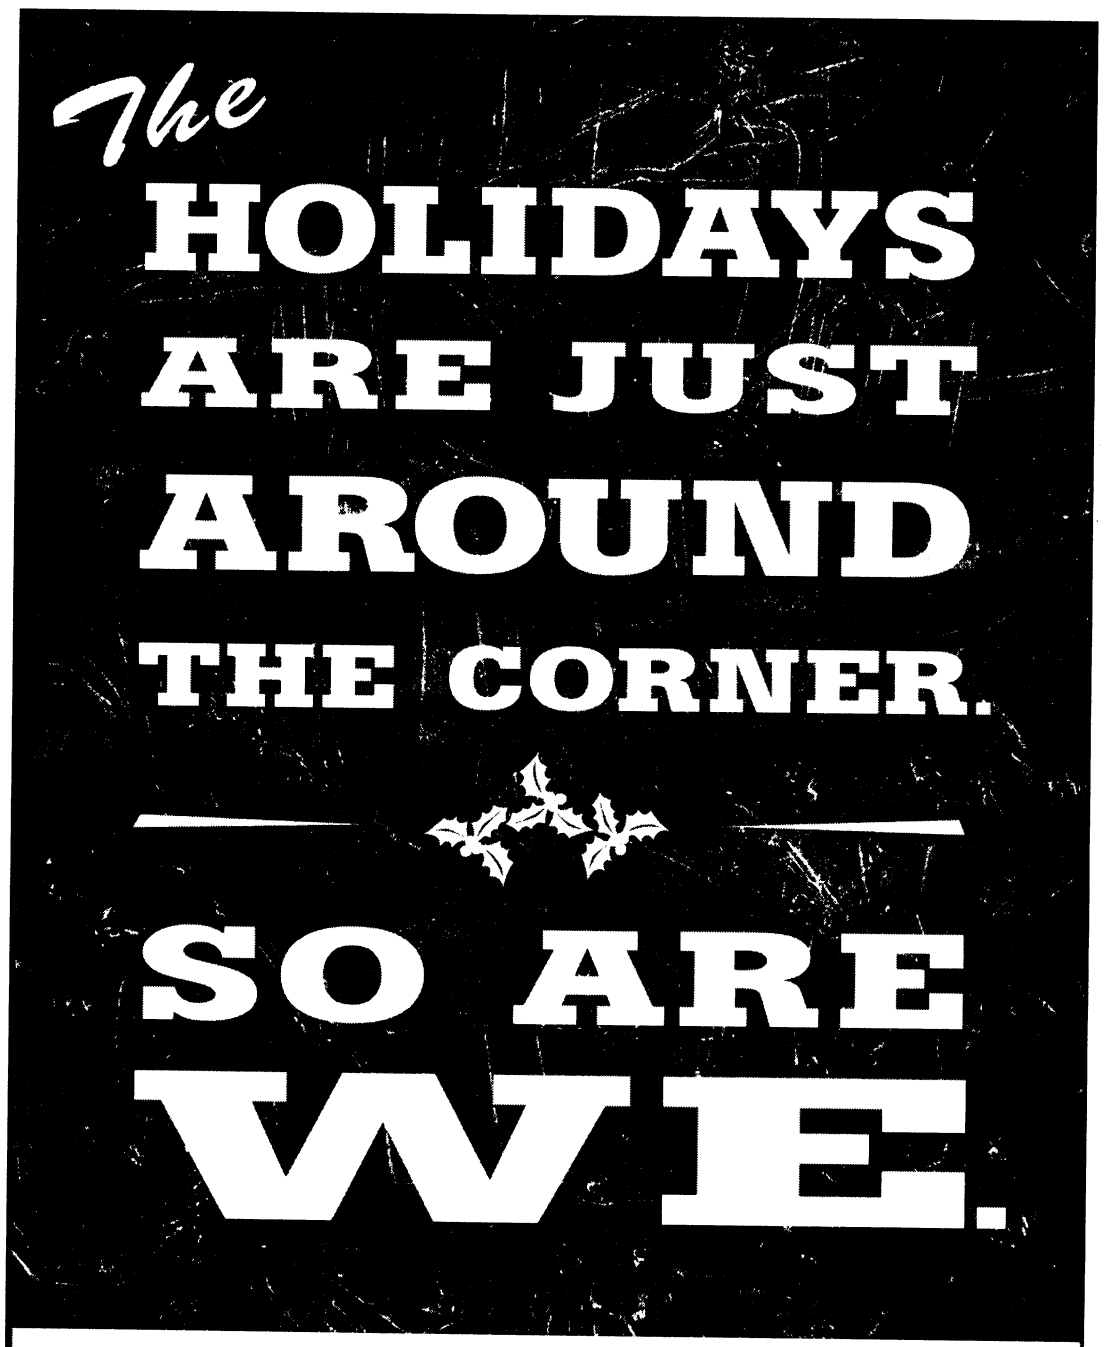
property. Most of the protesters were issued installation bar letters, taken off post and released. However, 36 protesters were convicted of criminal trespassing, they drew sentences ranging from probation to six months imprisonment and fines.

Imprisonment aside, people are demonstrating against more than just the SOA Watch. The protesters' causes vary from globalization, U.S. foreign policy and even a call for animal rights, Wilkerson said.

"This is a perfect example of why it shouldn't be on post — Fort Benning is not a public forum," said Capt. David Anglin, special assistant U.S. attorney. "They're not getting anything from marching on post, and we are constitutionally obligated to be neutral."



"They can protest all they want as long as they stay outside the gate," said Capt. Troy Brannon, operations officer with Military Police Activity.



SOA Watch, created by Father Roy Bourgeois, a Maryknoll priest and former missionary in South America, began demonstrating against the School of the Americas at Fort Benning in 1990. The school was closed in December 2000.

The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation opened in January 2001 as a Department of Defense organization. Its mission is to educate military, police and civilians from the Western Hemisphere about the proper operation of democratic governments.

HAVING OUR SAY

Supporters speak out on protest

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

"Me thinks thou doest protest too much."

— Hamlet

I confess, after three years of covering The Annual Protest, I'm frustrated. Like everyone else, I'm frustrated by the long lines at the checkpoints and the general disruption of daily routine for anyone who's accustomed to using Benning Boulevard. Each year I attend Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation "open house," in which several hundred protesters, mostly college students, visit the institute and meet with instructors and students.

I've grown tired of listening to the constant onslaught of verbal attacks on our soldiers, our policies and our way of life in general, all in the name of free speech and civil disobedience. I'm frustrated.

From the beginning, SOA Watch has made it its mission to close the School of the Americas.

But since the school closed nearly two years ago, the protesters keep coming, spewing the same tired rhetoric over and over.

They're good at asking questions, but they certainly don't want honest answers. That would undermine their real purpose, which is protesting for the sake of protesting.

"We're here to close the School of the Americas," one protester told a TV reporter last year.

"The School of the Americas closed last year," the reporter replied.

"Oh," said the befuddled co-ed, who then turned to her friends and asked, "Then why are we here?"

Shakespeare said it best, I'm sure, but up home we have a saying of our own — "Shuck it right down to the cob." In corn country, that means give it to me straight, don't doctor the facts, something SOA Watch officials have been doing ad nauseum.

One look at their Web site is oh so revealing. It's full of so much spin doctoring it should be sanctioned by the AMA.

Last week I attended the debate at Columbus State University, starring Col. Richard Downie, WHINSEC's commandant, and Father Roy Bourgeois, founder of the SOA Watch.

To my delight, Downie showed his teeth, albeit with a smile.

For every one of Bourgeois' accusations, Downie countered with a truth.

Two "SOA graduates" led a coup to oust Venezuela's President Chavez last spring, one SOA Watch lackey said.

Three WHINSEC graduates were instrumental in reinstating Chavez, Downie pointed out.

The institute's human rights courses are a farce, Bourgeois claimed.

WHINSEC students are required to pass a human rights course the equivalent of one college semester, Downie explained.

Yeah, well give us an in-depth course syllabus, Bourgeois said.

Better yet, come sit in on our classes, Downie offered. To which Bourgeois replied with a resounding, "No."

Everyone knows Manuel Noriega graduated from the School of the Americas, Bourgeois said.

Noriega attended one two-week course at the School of the Americas more than 30 years ago, Downie countered.

Truth be told, the number of former SOA students linked to human rights violations in Latin America is less than 1 percent of the institute's 60,000 graduates. The term "graduate" is, in fact, a misnomer, since the vast majority of the institute's students attend courses between two weeks and six months long. Like its predecessor, WHINSEC is not a degree-granting institution.

"The people of Latin America don't want our help, Bourgeois said. If we'll only listen, they're sending us a message.

"He never said what that message might be. I suspect it would be something like, "Send more boats."

"But those who attended the debate, the American soldiers who served in Latin America and the men and women who, like me, have become frustrated at the SOA Watch's bogus accusations and exaggerations delivered a message of their own Wednesday night.

"Rather than paraphrase here, I'll let them have their say:

"SOA Watch literature is peppered with statements that literally hold WHINSEC and the former SOA responsible for atrocities against civilians committed by members of the Latin American militaries who were SOA or WHINSEC graduates. One statement referred to a chain saw being used to commit brutal crimes against people.

"I served in the former SOA for three years as the director of the Department of Tactics and Combined Arms and as the chief of staff.

"I was directly involved in the training of nearly 1800 Latin American soldiers and policemen and never taught them, nor did personnel under my supervision teach them, how to use a chainsaw, garrote, stiletto, poisons, or any other type of weapon or device associated with murder or assassination.

"The statement that SOA and WHINSEC are responsible for the atrocities means, by implication, that I, and American soldiers like me, are responsible for training foreigners to commit those atrocities. I find such statements personally offensive to veterans who have served their country honorably.

"This rationale is preposterous and any clearly thinking human being realizes as much.

"The right to protest is guaranteed by the First Amendment and protected by our military.

"However, SOA no longer exists and WHINSEC is a Department of Defense School sanctioned by Congress.

"Col. Downie complies with policy. He does not establish it.

"Does it not therefore stand to reason that Bourgeois and his ilk are better advised to go to the source of policy, i.e. Washington, D.C., and protest, instead of bringing their '60s vintage carnival to Columbus and disrupting our community year after year?"

— John Bastone
Directorate of Operations and Training

"I to am for the movement to help Latin America, which is why I asked to be assigned to WHINSEC.

"I've worked in several Latin American countries during my service to the U.S. and have just returned from a two-year assignment to Venezuela as the infantry exchange officer.

"While assigned to the Venezuelan Infantry School, I worked with several SOA graduates. My immediate supervisor was a graduate of SOA.

"On many occasions I witnessed conversations among military officers regarding the state of the country and government.

"Not once did any SOA graduate even table the idea of a coup as a viable, plausible or legitimate course. However, let me assure you I overheard plenty of anti-government comments from non-SOA graduates.

"While I was in Venezuela, I volunteered and gave money to an orphanage, a church and a the Venezuelan branch of Youth for Christ.

"I asked how they would use my time and my money.

"Each offered some type of official financial report and a breakdown of activities in which they were engaged.

"Where can I find this information on SOA Watch? If I give my money to support SOA Watch, how will it be used? Besides protesting at the gate of Fort Benning, what activities is SOA Watch involved in? How do these affect people in Latin America?

"I'm confident WHINSEC affects Latin America in a positive way.

"We're doing the right thing, and everything we do is open for public exam.

"The mystery is what is SOA Watch doing and why?"

— Lt. Col. Boe Barinowski
Chief of Tactics
WHINSEC

"I respect the law and the people who enforce it. I've always been amazed at the respectful way the police and military have treated the protesters. Personally, I want to throttle them.

"When the protesters came to Columbus last year, after the terrorist attacks in September, I was angry and ashamed that our city didn't stand up for Fort Benning.

"But my husband said the solders at Fort Benning know we are on their side, and this is a wonderful lesson for the students at WHINSEC who come from countries where demonstrations are not tolerated. Here they watch civil disobedience in action and see the way it is handled.

"I choose to believe the best about WHINSEC.

"We are a society of checks and balances. We've had bad people and good people. Unfortunately it sometimes takes the bad to highlight the good.

"After hearing some of Father Roy's allegations, I visited the Institute to find out for myself the truth about what is being taught there. I questioned Col. Downie and heard enough to know I don't trust Father Roy and I don't believe him.

"He's marketing for the next video sale, and I'm sure the movie rights are something he thinks about every time someone from Hollywood comes to his protest.

"Who will play Father Roy?"

"Ana Isabel Casanova was murdered by the communist Farabundo Marti National Liberation front in El Salvador on Oct. 17, 1989. Ana's crime was that she was the daughter of Col. Oscar Casanova. Family members of Salvadoran servicemen were regularly murdered in the 'Cold War Hot Spot.'

"Six weeks after Ana's murder, a young American woman named Jennifer Casolo was arrested and charged.

"More than 2,000 pounds of explosives and munitions were unearthed in the 'safe house' Casalo was managing. Casalo was an American church lay worker associated with a group called Christian Education Seminars.

"The American Embassy pressured officials and won Casalo's release, but that was not unusual. During the course of the 12-year guerrilla war in El Salvador, many FMLA operatives were arrested and, despite overwhelming evidence, released for political reasons or hostage exchanges.

"Bourgeois stated in his debate with Col. Downie that insurrections like the one in El Salvador start with the poor and disenfranchised. El Salvador is not the poorest country in Central America.

"In fact, the leaders of the FMLN came from the upper strata of society. Their top comandante attended a prestigious prep school.

"The transplanted Nicaraguan, Comandante Jesus Rojas (real name: Antonio Cardenal) was from a very wealthy and politically powerful family.

"Communist combatants arrived from all over the world, including the U.S., Japan, Columbia and Bulgaria. Their strategy was to concentrate on El Salvador and continue the momentum of the Leftist victory in Nicaragua that occurred immediately before the Salvadoran conflict.

"The common people of El Salvador didn't flock to the banner of the FMLA. Instead they served in the security forces of their country.

"They came from the lower-middle class of the cities, the cowboys of the hills and the peasants of the fields.

"They faced the final offensive of the international communist world and broke the teeth of the communist momentum.

"In internationally supervised elections in 1989, Salvadorans rejected the extreme Left and the U.S. supported Socialist Left and gave a resounding victory to the conservative Republican National Alliance. The election results represented the will of the people but not the Maryknoll Order of Father Bourgeois.

"The Maryknolls prefer to get their information concerning the will of the people from the non-governmental Human Rights Commission and other FMLN front groups rather than the Salvadoran nation speaking at the ballot box."

— Robert Meachum

"For the past decade, Roy Bourgeois has been rallying good hearted and peaceful individuals at the gates of Fort Benning to protest the former SOA and now WHINSEC.

"Over the decade, his accusations against the Institute have changed, but he remains dedicated to severing the beneficial relationships that effective U.S. foreign policy is built upon.

"To try and distance the Institute from the U.S. military and the people of the U.S., Roy's rehabilitated accusation is that the Institute is a shame to the U.S. Army and a stain on the military's stellar reputation.

"The good people of the U.S. should oppose such a bad apple in the barrel of foreign policy, he says.

"This accusation should put fire in the bellies of all U.S. service members.

"It's ludicrous to believe, as Roy would have his followers believe, that the same professional military men and women who defend this nation can be assigned to this Army unit, change the patch on their shoulder, and somehow lose all values, morals and ethics, forget their training, civilian education and upbringing —many in a religious atmosphere — to teach torture to our guest students.

"As a 15-year civilian employee of the Institute, I would like to personalize the shame I supposedly have caused the defenders and citizens of this nation.

"I hold a masters degree in international relations and have taught as an adjunct professor of political science in the universities of Georgia and Alabama.

"Many of my former students are now serving as police and other public servants in the tricommunity area.

"Yet, Roy's message to me is clear; I'm a teacher of torture, untrustworthy, and of despicable character.

"I studied and earned a baccalaureate of science degree under the watchful eyes of the Catholic Benedictines at St. John's University. I lived in Latin America for many years as a dependent and again as a Peace Corps Volunteer serving alongside the poor of Guatemala. I have been a student of Latin American affairs since 1979 and understand well both the ills and goodness of Latin America.

"My wife is Guatemalan, and we have three lovely boys whose grandmother, aunts, uncles and cousins live in Guatemala. "For novice Latin Americanists, like those visiting Columbus during the protest, I like to point out that this is where the Central American Peace Accords were created and signed.

"In all my years visiting there, I have yet to see bus loads of U.S. peace activists worshiping at the monument built by the Central Americans to celebrate their peaceful solution to their protracted and vicious conflicts.

"Yet, I see thousands of them here at the gates of Fort Benning blaming the U.S. military as the primary factor in causing all the hurt and grief during those Cold War conflicts — folks who have traveled to the region on two-week junkets and now claim to represent the Latin American people. They decry the U.S. for destroying the region and repressing its poor.

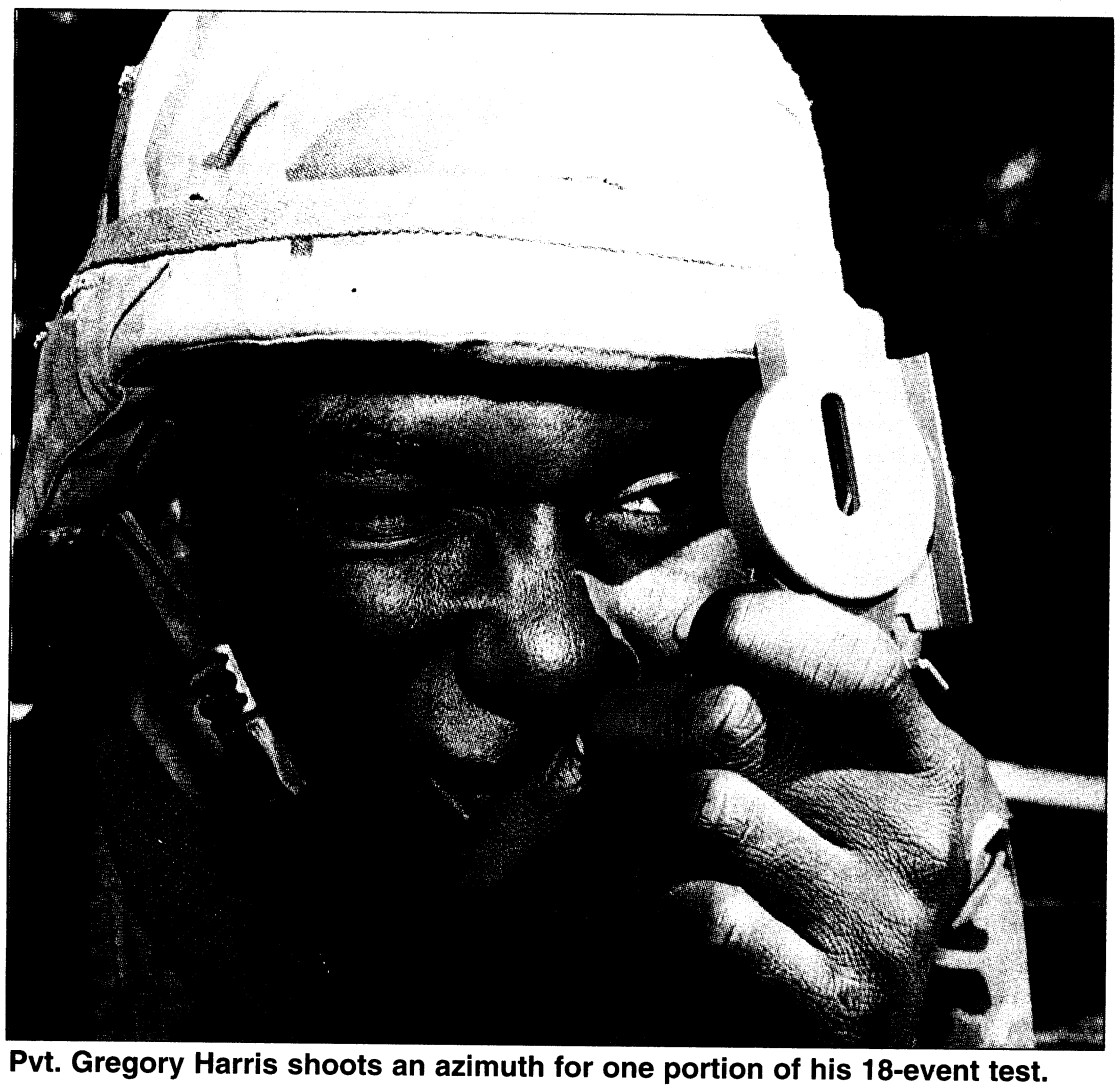
"When asked to come onto Fort Benning and dialog, they stutter and stammer that they already know the 'truth.'

"Many of these "open- minded" folks are good individuals, but are swept up into believing a myth that the U.S. Army teaches torture to our allies or that our foreign policy is a dastardly scheme to impoverish the world. Others are part of organized groups with varying special interests. Some simply want to believe in a conspiracy.

"As a thinking, moral person, if I ever thought this organization was doing anything that would make the lives of my relatives harder or jeopardize their freedom, I would be the first to denounce it.

"I am not a shame to the U.S. or the uniformed members of this nation. I am WHINSEC; just as are all my workmates that make up this great and noble institution.

"So, Roy, I say that you are the shame and disgrace to this nation as you use myths, half-truths and outright lies to manipulate good and honest individuals to follow your hate-filled rhetoric against the people of WHINSEC and this nation and all it stands for.



"I'm ashamed of you, Roy."

Soldiers take test

End of cycle testing shows skills

Pfc. David Foley

The soldiers of B Co. 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment were tested on their retention of military knowledge during end of cycle testing recently.

End of cycle testing is composed of 18 events, ranging from first aid to the set up and discharge of a claymore mine.

"This is like a final exam for the soldiers," said 1st Lt. Robert Hittenburg, commander of B Co. "The testing certifies that they are proficient in all the skills required to graduate Basic Combat Training and ensures they are prepared to go to the various schools they will attend for Advanced Individual Training.

"We don't want them to leave unprepared."

During the testing soldiers moved from station to station, having their military knowledge pushed to the limit at every check-point.

"It's a little stressful, but I just apply everything I learned in Basic and it comes easier," said Pvt. Algin Poteet. "I've really learned a lot here, and I know a lot more about weapons than I ever did before."

With only 14 days left until graduation, morale was high.

"It feels like I've won the lottery," said Pvt. Eric Clemons. "I can't believe training is almost over."

"I am ready to go to war," said Pvt. Gregory Harris, who wants to become a ranger. "I'm taking all that I can from this training so I can become a better soldier."

"This is a good group of soldiers, but we always get good soldiers," Hittenburg said. "They are all dedicated, and they are always eager to learn.

"The drill sergeants really work hard and the command climate gives us the latitude to train the soldiers the way we need to.

"All the soldiers will continue their individual training over the next few months on posts all over the country, and they know the training gets more intense, but they are ready."

High school cadets practice first aid

MEDDAC soldier trains JROTC

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Cadet Major Dominique Doyle never thought she'd have to use the first aid skills she learned in JROTC. But when a fellow student collapsed in front of her last spring, the Columbus High School senior was grateful for the training.

"I never thought I'd have to do it myself, so I was nervous at first," Doyle said. "But then the training kicked in and I calmed down and kept him calm and just did what I knew to do."

Doyle shared her story with more than 65 of her JROTC classmates last week, just before the cadets entered their biannual basic first aid and emergency response training with Sgt. 1st Class Guy Rex, operations NCOIC with the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity.

Doyle's story, and others like it, made the cadets sit up and take notice, Rex said.

"They realize these situations are not something you just see in combat," he said. "They may be the first one to arrive at the scene of a traffic accident. Their younger brother or sister may get hurt on the playground or start to choke. These are real-life scenarios."

Rex led the two-day classroom instruction on evaluating and treating casualties before taking the cadets to Weracoba Park, where they practiced their skills in litter relays.

JROTC cadets administer first aid to a "victim."

Two students were the "victims," wearing moulage wounds to simulate snake bites, fractures and head injuries. The cadets were separated into teams and timed on their response and effectiveness in treating and transporting the victims.

The course and relay was much the same as the one soldiers are required to pass to earn their Expert Field Medical Badge, Rex said.

"The idea is to teach them in the classroom, then bring them out here where they have to apply what they've learned under stress." he said. "It's easy to reel out the answers in class, but it's different when you're faced with a bloody wound in the field."

Emergency response and basic first aid have been a part of Columbus High's JROTC curriculum for as long as Sgt. Maj. Richard Pimental can remember, and "it's always been one of the classes they enjoy the most — one they know they may have to apply any day."

Pimental, a JROTC instructor, said the curriculum is designed to teach cadets CPR and the Heimlich Maneuver as well as the basic skills needed to treat burns, cuts, fractures, bites and hot and cold weather injuries.

"They enjoy this class. They have a lot of fun," he said. "But they get real serious and real competitive when it comes to the relays.

That kind of hands-on experience will help them retain what they learned. The idea is to give them the confidence they need to save a life, if necessary, or keep someone alive until help arrives."

Weather station helps post stay 'in the know' with vital updates

Airmen help Fort Benning mission

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Thousands of soldiers may deploy from Fort Benning if the U.S. declares war against Iraq.

Part of the post's Weather Station's mission is to help give those soldiers' pilots and Army leaders up-to-the-minute weather updates, said Air Force Lt. Col. Neill Fuller, director of Operations with the 17th Air Support Operations Squadron.

"Fort Benning is a designated force-projection platform for short-notice deployment of soldiers and units worldwide. Our weather folks play an important role in ensuring the flight crews, the deploying commanders and their staffs have the most complete weather and weather effects' picture possible," Fuller said. "The information they brief is necessary for all kinds of decisions that will need to be made in the employment of combat forces."

Three weather forecasters, Air Force Tech Sgt. Wallace Tumblin, Air Force Staff Sgt. William Malcomb and Jim Blossfield, and one weather maintenance man, Dave Helms, are the heart and soul of the Weather Station.

"We have the right people at the airfield to handle weather issues if a conflict breaks out initially," Fuller said. "They would need to be augmented after about a week with more personnel in order to keep up the increased taskings that I am sure would start to arise."

Major conflict or not, the forecasters have a vital mission here, Malcomb said.

For instance, if Fort Benning had been in the path of last weekend's storms that left many dead, injured and homeless, the post's Weather Station personnel would have been recalled and played a key role in disseminating warnings to post commanders, he said. When the station is closed and recalls are not necessary, forecasters at Shaw Air Force Base, S.C., keep staff duty at Infantry Hall informed of severe weather.

Helms said he enjoys working with the professional forecasters.

"Just watching these guys is awesome," Helms said. "The weather man on TV may say when and where it's going to rain, but (the forecasters here) will say when it's going to start and stop and give a storm's exact location."

For instance, when Hurricane Opal came through here in 1995, the station did an outstanding job helping to keep community members safe by providing key updates to post leaders.

"They nailed the times of the storm just like clockwork," Helms said. "It's probably the most impressive thing I've seen here."

Tumblin has been at Army posts for seven years and at Air Force Bases for four and half years. He has been here for three months.

"I enjoy working with the Army a lot more," he said. "There's more job satisfaction.

"There's not a big difference between the two (services). The Army gets out there and does it forward. I'm a more hands-on, get-your-boots-dirty kind of guy."

A tornado touches down in Ohio. Georgia averages 23.5 tornados a year.

While Tumblin doesn't go to the field here, he enjoys learning more about how the Air Force's sister service operates, he said.

"In the time of war, you could be working with everyone," Tumblin said. "By learning the limitations and strengths of each service, we are able to tailor our service to what our customers need, and the overall mission accomplishment will be greater."

The interoperability between the airmen and soldiers on Fort Benning boils down to communications, especially since tens of thousands of soldiers train in the field here every year, Fuller said.

"The communications between us and the soldiers in the field has improved dramatically," Fuller said. "This is especially important during the change of seasons when this area is susceptible to the effects of tornadoes and thunderstorms. We then put out weather advisories to all commanders and their leaders in the fields. We also look for feedback from the soldiers in the field for inputs to our weather observations."

Observing afternoon thunderstorms is one of the most exciting parts of the weathermen's position, Tumblin said.

"Weather changes every second," Tumblin said. "You have to sit there and constantly keep up on it."

Korea Chronicles

Retired Sgt. Maj. Gary G. Beylickjian
Office of the Chief of Public Affairs

He was our leader, a soldier we respected and admired, the kind of person we would have followed into hell. And on Hill 395, we did just that, and we made it back, thanks to him.

He earned our loyalty and trust the hard way; in the face of the enemy, he never flinched or looked back.

That's what we thought of Lt. William F. Strobridge, a former enlisted man who took a battlefield commission and became a second lieutenant, leading the heavy machinegun platoon, H Company, 2nd Bn., 7th Inf. Regt. 3rd Inf. Div., in battle.

Strobridge, a lean six-footer, was from my part of the country, New England. He came from New Hampshire and I from Massachusetts. When I joined the platoon in August 1951, the lieutenant was among the first to greet me and to lay out the facts of life in combat. He pulled no punches, and I didn't expect him to. I asked for a combat assignment as a machine gunner, and I was ready for anything.

By early September the platoon moved out of Reserve, an area behind the lines used for brief rests and replacements, to positions several hundred yards north of a railhead known as Chor'won. We were at the southern end of Chor'won Valley, a fairly level area dotted with rice paddies and farms.

About a half-mile in front lay three small hills and several miles further north, Hill 395, an imposing piece of terrain with steep slopes on its southern face. Unknown to us, Hill 395 was our objective.

We later occupied the three hills we dubbed the Three Sisters, and came under several nightly enemy probes, some heavy, including a few aerial shootouts with an enemy plane we called Bed Check Charlie, then the word: Next stop, Hill 395.

We moved to the hill before sunrise. Almost every move we made on the front lines was either in the middle of the night or in early morning before the sun's rays hit the ground.

Getting to positions on 395 was a major undertaking, heavy equipment and steep slopes made the move up extremely difficult. Men fell, many slipped and slid down to the foot of the hill, faces were covered with dirt and sweat and pain; bodies were exhausted.

We were carrying a weapon whose gun alone weighted more than 42 pounds and a tripod more than 50 pounds. Add belts of machinegun ammo wrapped around our necks, a can of ammo in each hand. And, of course, our personal weapons, grenades and weapon's belts packed with small-arms ammo and C-rations.

The trip up took several hours and once in location, Strobridge assigned each gun a sector of fire. Fields of fire set, our next task was digging a gun emplacement And after that, our personal positions: slit trenches. Nearly 13 hours passed since we left the Three Sisters, and now more hell.

The enemy spotted activity and began shelling us mercifully. For most of us, there was no shelter. We lay flat on the open ground trying to push ourselves into it while praying the incoming wouldn't find us.

And through all this chaos, Strobridge ran from position to position checking up on his men. Always the men. Thankfully, we suffered no casualties.

Amidst the shelling and trying to find adequate shelter, several men spoke about the beer we would win in the competition.

Strobridge had promised beer to the squad that could disassemble and assemble the machine gun the fastest while blindfolded. Imagine, beer! We craved just for a sip, but we'd have to wait. We'd get the chance to compete the next time we went in reserve. You'd think we would have had more pressing things to think about such as staying alive and safe from the shelling. Several rounds came close enough to lift us off the ground and cover us with dirt. And we were thinking about beer?

Later that day, while Strobridge was in F Company, a messenger brought him news from battalion that the machine gun platoon would support G Company clear enemy forces still occupying northern sectors of Hill 395, the very hill we were on. Once that mission finished, our platoon was to provide fire support during assaults on two nearby hills heavily occupied by Chinese troops. That mission was given to the machine gun platoon's second section, of which I was a member. The lieutenant prepared the platoon's battle plans and oriented us; we'd jump off early the next morning.

At 4:30 a.m. our section journeyed nearly a hundred yards in darkness to the staging area just a few feet from our firing positions. The attack, set at 6 a.m., went as planned. Objectives were taken, but again, the enemy's heavy guns found us and let us have it. The horrific pounding was so heavy some soldiers complained about difficulty breathing. The lieutenant was there as usual and encouraged everyone to stay the course, to hang in. And suggested we pray even harder, out loud if need be.

The incoming slacked off just briefly enough for us to make a quick withdrawal to an area on the southern slope of Hill 395, behind a huge mound. The lieutenant led the way as always.

Strobridge and I spoke many times about our hometowns, the war and the Army. Like him, I joined to fight in the war. I wanted to be like the men of World War II who were my heroes when I was a teen-ager. The lieutenant and I became friends and my respect and admiration for him grew even more. He taught me how to be a combat leader.

Santa's Castle helps post families

Organization looking for donations

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Christmas can be a stressful time for families, especially when funds are tight and there is more than one child in the house.

But when soldiers help soldiers, Christmas can be bigger and better than ever.

Fort Benning's Santa's Castle has been collecting toys for post families for more than 15 years, and this year won't be any different.

"We have quite an inventory already," said Sharon Torres, chairwoman of Santa's Castle. "We have toy ovens, dolls and trucks. We are really trying to keep the castle current so we have the toys kids like."

Santa's Castle spends all season collecting toys for children whose families may need a little help when the holidays roll around. As Christmas approaches, chosen parents will tour the castle and pick out three toys for each child in the family. On Christmas, the toys are wrapped and placed under the tree for kids to enjoy.

"My husband and I were dreading the holidays because we were financially broke," said Lisa, a Fort Benning spouse who shopped at Santa's Castle last year and wishes to remain anonymous. "Our first sergeant came to us and told us he was signing us up to shop in Santa's Castle. I was surprised to see how many people cared."

Volunteers at Santa's Castle do care and are determined to make sure each family in need has a special Christmas, Torres said.

"When I was growing up, my family went through hard times just like many families are going through right now," Torres said. "Families on Fort Benning can feel good knowing they can turn to their fellow soldiers."

Wilson parents talk values

Tools help tackle tough subjects

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Parents at Wilson Elementary school had the dreaded "sex" talk Nov. 1 as part of the First Friday parents program.

Chaplain (Maj.) Peter Frederich from the Family Life Chaplain Training Center spoke with parents about "Sex, Drugs, and You: Passing on Your Values to Your Children."

"Things are simple at 5 and 6," Frederich said. "But our most important work (as parents) happens between 8 and 12 years."

During that significant window, he said, parental influence is decreasing as peer influence increases. The elementary school years are the time when parents need to really get to work to influence values.

Frederich gave parents four steps:

1. Know your own values.
2. Talk about your values.
3. Make rules to support the values.
4. Get outside help if needed.

Frederich presented some issues in role playing scenarios with one of the parents that had the group involved in some frank discussions about talking to their kids about sex and drugs. The scenarios involved a relative introducing a child to alcohol, a young child singing along with a suggestive pop

Boy Scouts learn about military

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

As the band Kidd Blue played Born in the USA, a fireworks display lit up the sky to end an eventful Saturday for Boy Scouts at Camp Lumpkin in LaGrange, Ga.

"The concert and the fireworks were awesome," said Jeremy Kirby, 13. "Everyone was having a great time."

The Boy Scouts' Fall Encampment was Nov. 1 through Sunday, and featured public safety groups like the U.S. Army, LaGrange Police, the F.B.I. and the Forestry Service Commission.

"It was rewarding to see them discover new things they had never been exposed to. Some of them have never seen a soldier and this really opened their eyes to who protects our nation," said Staff Sgt. Ken Caruthers, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and also a Scoutmaster with Troop 46 in Columbus.

More than 1,000 Scouts, leaders and parents showed up for the weekend.

Among the military exhibits was a military working dog demonstration. The demonstration showed the Scouts what dogs do to suspects who ignore a military policeman's orders.

WW II cross returns to active duty

Army relic forged from shell casings

In a most unlikely setting, the Magnolia Manor Nursing Home in Americus, Ga., an American patriot was called back to active duty nearly 60 years after leading 8th Infantry Division troops into the Battle of the Bulge.

A brass cross that was forged by American soldiers preparing for combat in July 1944 was welcomed back to service by Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor, Fort Benning's garrison chaplain.

In a solemn "Passing of the Cross" ceremony at the nursing home's chapel, Taylor accepted the cross and two urns from retired Chaplain (Lt. Col.) James Reese and his family Nov. 1.

"This cross will serve as a symbol of the life and ministry of James Reese," Taylor told the four generations of Reeses who traveled from Maryland, Florida and Georgia to attend the ceremony. "But it will also serve as a tribute to the faith of the soldiers who used the rudiments of war to fashion a symbol of hope during perilous times, men who sought inner peace in the midst of battle."

A native of Midland, Ga., Maj. James Reese was a reservist in 1940 when he was called to active duty as the regimental chaplain for the 8th Division's 13th Regiment. He was sent to Europe in 1943, and soon after, his chaplain's kit was destroyed when a mortar shell hit his jeep.

It was in Northern Ireland, as the regiment prepared for the invasion of Normandy, that the men presented Reese with a new cross, its two-tiered base fashioned from 57 mm and 105 mm casings and the cross itself hammered and chiseled from damaged shells. Twin urns were forged from 105 mm casings.

"I was just a kid, but I remember the call to all Americans to bring your scrap metal, anything that could be used for the war effort," said Henry Reese, one of James Reese's five children. "And here the soldiers of Dad's unit were doing a little recycling of their own over there.

"It's not perfect," he said of the cross. "These were shells and casings damaged and unusable. But those men did what God would do. They took the imperfect, the damaged, and they created something uniforms and weapons include the M-16 A1 and A2 rifles, an armored personnel carrier and camouflaging.

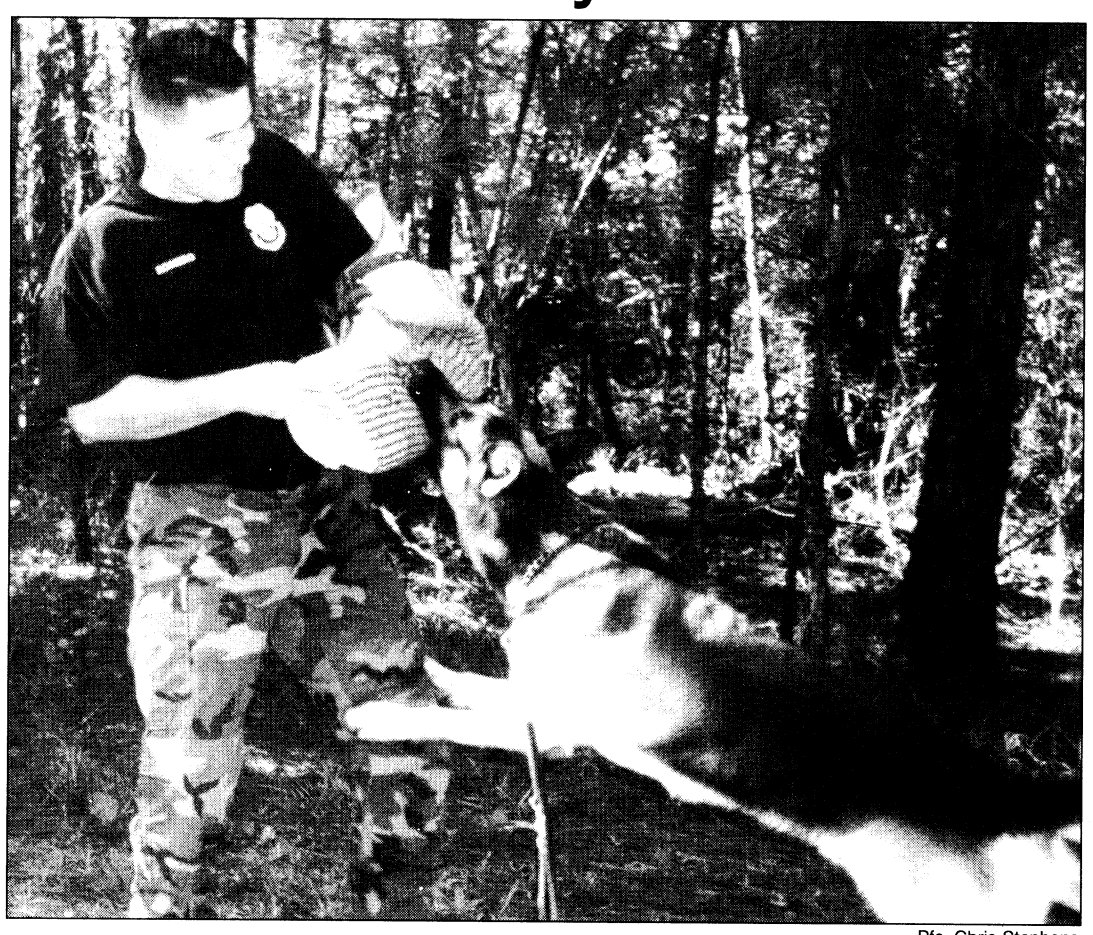
"When I saw all of the exhibits, I was like, wow," said Ronald Mahea, 12. "I never thought that they would have this much stuff for us to see. I learned about some things I never thought the military had."

The Scouts weren't the only ones having a good time at the encampment — the soldiers who volunteered their time spent the day laughing and joking with the Scouts.



"It was a lot of fun," said Spc. Pepper Eldridge, 988th MP Company. "This is the age where children are impressionable, and you always try to set a good example for them because they look up to you and what you do."

As night fell and a cool breeze came off of West Point Lake Saturday, Scouts filed into the amphitheater for a concert.

Kidd Blue played songs ranging from Jailhouse Rock to Sweet Home Alabama.

After the concert ended and the fireworks display was over, the Scouts returned to their campsites for their last night of camping before heading home the next day.

"I didn't want to go home," Mahea said. "I had a lot of fun during all of the activities and didn't want it to end."

Castle: Helps with holiday spirit has contributed something to the castle, Torres said. The Chaplains' Fund the Field Artillery Association and the Officers' Spouses Club are just a few who have made donations in the past few months.

But the Castle is still in need of gifts.

"We accept any price range as long as it is a new toy," Torres said. "We need gifts for infants all the way up to 18 years old."

Gift cards are also a good idea, as well as a monetary donation, she said.

Volunteers have also received help from the local community.

"Stores like Toys R Us have given us a 20 percent discount when we told them what we were shopping for," Torres said. "It's been a great start to the season."

Last year, the castle served more than 1,100 children and 500 families. This year, the Castle wants to be ready to help just as many.

"It was nice to go in there and see exactly what was on your child's list," said a Fort Benning spouse who shopped at the castle last year. "This year, we are definitely in a better position and won't be shopping at the castle. Instead, we'll be repaying the favor and donating."

Soldiers helping soldiers is what the castle is all about, Torres said.

"It's heartwarming to see parents walk through the castle and realize their tree will be filled a little more than expected," Torres said. "In the end, it's all about the kids."

Wilson: Teaches families to talk

song, and a parent discovering an adult magazine.

"Most often, you're going to face these issues with no notice," he said. "These situations provide opportunities to talk."

Frederich said one of the biggest barriers to talk between parents and children is anxiety. Parents need to reduce their anxiety about having important discussions with their children. By reducing anxiety, they break the barrier.

"A non-anxious answer at 5 leads to open conversation and questions at 7," Frederich said.

"Talk works like a vaccine," he said.

Parents are able to give their children correct information about issues like sex, drugs and alcohol. Later, when the subjects come up among the children and their peers, the children have already been exposed and aren't ignorant of the truth.

Frederich said the best families are those run by adults and not by the children. The parents then set the rules the family will live by.

> "If you feel good about something, stand on it. Don't assume that you are going to fail."
> Chaplain (Maj.) Peter Frederich
> Family Life Chaplain Training Center

"I have a lot of values rolling around inside," he said. "Sometimes I feel my values more in my stomach. I need to be able to take them from my stomach to my head, and then they will finally end up in my mouth."

Once they go from gut feeling to mouth, he said, you can begin to communicate those values to your children.

"It's good for parents to trust themselves," he said. "If you feel good about something, stand on it. Don't assume that you are going to fail."

Frederich said values are dynamic and are not always the same values the parents grew up with. Parents should state their values with their actions, and if they find they aren't living up to what they want, then they should step back and reassess those values. That statement struck a chord with many of the parents in the room.

"Keep it honest, keep it real," said Katina Harris, whose three daughters attend Wilson. "It's important. As a parent, you don't want to be a hypocrite."

As the session ended, parents filled out comment sheets for Wilson Principal Phyllis Parker. The consensus among the parents was that the morning's presentation was just what parents needed.

Parker said the First Friday program began in August with ideas for parents on how to help their children get started in the school year. Parents then suggested topics they would like to discuss.

"I want to get Chaplain Frederich back for a night session," Parker said. "This was great. It's the parents' opportunity to learn. In doing so, they help their children and they help themselves."

Sgt. Mark Hammer, formerly with the 209th Military Police Detachment, took the opportunity to attend the parent session while on leave en route to Korea.

Hammer and his wife recently adopted their nephew and plan to use the tips to help talk with the five children in the family, ranging in age from 2 to 16.

"I wish more parents would come to these events," he said. "From an MP point of view, if parents instill the right things in their children, we don't have to deal with them later out on the street."

Cross: To be displayed in chapel

beautiful for Dad to carry for the troops."

Henry and his twin brother Harry were 7 when their father returned from Europe, and the cross became an integral part of their lives. When Reese returned to reserve status and resumed his ministry in the Methodist Church, the cross accompanied the family from home to home.

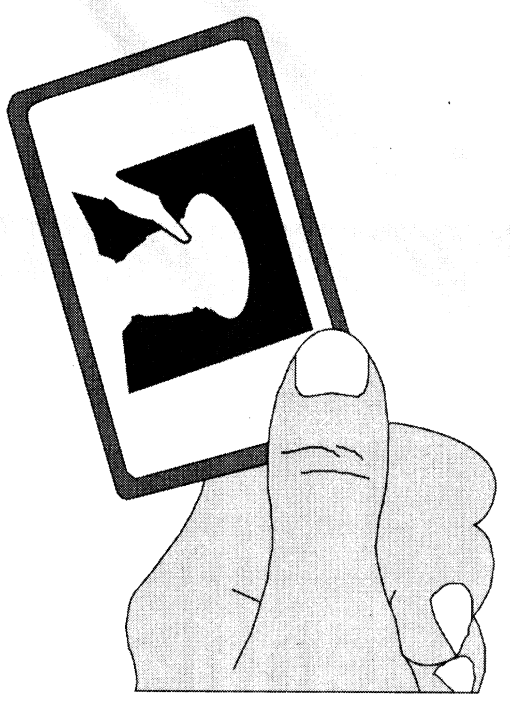
"It was always there," Harry said. "Sometimes it was in Daddy's office, sometimes on a bookcase in the house or on the mantel. Wherever it was, we admired it, but we knew better than to play with it or get our fingerprints on it. It's a sacred thing, very special, very sentimental."

Reese often told his children stories of the cross, its creation and its trek across Europe, the battles it saw and the men whose lives it touched. Later he told his grandchildren and their children.

Now, at 94, Reese is frail and has a difficult time hearing and talking. Just three weeks ago he buried his wife, Clifford. It's time to return the cross to active duty, he said. After all, "it's always belonged to the U.S. government."

But to the Reese children and grandchildren, the cross has always been a family treasure, one they never thought to part with.

"I remember the first time I saw it," Henry said. "Daddy was unpacking his footlocker, and he pulled it out and I fell in love with it. I said, 'I want it, Dad.' And I've always wanted it. I always thought it would be mine.



"Even though I knew it was Daddy's wish for it to go back to the Army, I just kind of ignored it," he said, a tear spilling from his eye.

It was a sermon, not unlike the thousands he'd heard from his father, that changed Henry's mind.

"The gist of it was, 'The first generation earns it, the second generation enjoys it, and the third generation loses it,'" he said. "I thought, this cross has changed too many lives to be forgotten, to become a knick-knack in someone's closet, or God forbid, be sold at a yard sale. When Daddy's gone, and we're gone, it'll eventually lose its significance, even in the family. Better for it to go back to active duty the way he wanted it to."

Toward that end, the cross and the urns will be displayed, probably in The Infantry Chapel, Taylor said, where they can "be used as they were designed to be used."

"They'll serve as a reminder that men like Chaplain Reese have served their God and their country faithfully for many, many years," Taylor said. "And they'll serve as inspiration to the young soldiers and trainees who pass through Fort Benning, a challenge to serve faithfully and to put their hope in God, just as Chaplain Reese and the men who made this cross did, no matter what comes their way."

AER scholarship applications now available online

Eligible students can apply for help for 2003-2004 school year

Army Emergency Relief

Active-duty soldiers and Army retirees with college or university bound children often wonder how to afford the costs of higher education.

Many people don't realize that part of the answer may be found with the Army Emergency Relief Scholarship.

The Maj. Gen. James Ursano Scholarship Fund administered by AER has a secondary mission to help Army families with the cost of undergraduate level education, post secondary vocational training and preparation for acceptance by service academies for their dependent children.

Scholarship Program Eligibility

Applicant must be:

- Children, stepchildren or legally adopted children of soldiers on active duty, retired or deceased while on active duty or after retirement.
- Must be registered in the Defense Eligibility Enrollment System (DEERS).
- Unmarried for entire academic year.
- U.S. citizen or permanent U.S. resident.
- Under the age of 22 on June 1, 2003 based on 2003-2004 academic year.

All eligible persons are encouraged to apply.

Scholarships for military children available

Bonnie Powell

DeCA

FORT LEE, Va. — The 2003 Scholarships for Military Children program opens for business Nov. 1 and the burning question is "how has being the child of a military service member influenced your educational goals?" That's the essay topic for 2003 and if the two previous years are any indication, it's a question applicants should consider carefully when applying for the $1,500 scholarships.

"According to program administrators, the essay has been a key factor in deciding recipients," said Edna Hoogewind, program liaison for the Defense Commissary Agency.

"Although the minimum grade point average to apply for these scholarships is 3.0, the average recipient has a 3.8 or better. The grades of the applicants are so high that factors such as community involvement, activities and the essay become extremely important."

In 2002, three students won scholarships through the Fort Benning Commissary, and they also received an unexpected bonus. "Commissary industry donations used to fund scholarships were up this year," said Gary Hensley, store director. "So each of the scholarship recipients received an extra $400 in his or her check."

The nonprofit Fisher House Foundation administers the Scholarships for Military Children program. They are best known for building family comfort homes near military medical facilities.

"We're certainly pleased to administer this program as it serves the military community exclusively and is rapidly becoming one of the premiere scholarship programs worldwide," said Jim Weiskopf of Fisher House Foundation. "We use the services of Scholarship Managers, a professional firm that has handled more than 400 programs. They do everything relating to the process of deciding who is awarded a scholarship and it's a very painstaking process when you have more than 5,000 applicants."

The Scholarships for Military Children program has awarded 920 scholarships and nearly $1.5 million in its first two years. All funds for scholarships are donated by the various manufacturers, brokers and suppliers that provide products for sale in military commissaries, which are recognized as a valuable quality of life benefit and an integral part of the military community. "Most of the scholarship recipients also participate in formal recognition ceremonies, which take place each spring and summer at local commissaries," says Hoogewind. Fort Benning Commissary's ceremony this year was held on May 30.

Applications for the 2003 program can be downloaded from http://www.commissaries.com or http://www.fisherhouse.org starting Nov. 1. They can also be picked up at any commissary. The deadline for returning applications by hand or mail to a commissary is Feb. 21, 2003. "That's in the store, not postmarked," Hoogewind said.

"There are very few changes from last year," said Hoogewind. "The essay topic is new and we have a two-page instruction sheet to make things easier for the applicants. The application can also be filled out on a computer, then printed and mailed or delivered to the nearest commissary. It should be an improvement over handwritten applications for both the student and Scholarship Managers."

The scholarship program is open to dependent unmarried children (under the age of 23) of active duty personnel, Reserve, Guard and retired military. Eligibility will be determined using the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS) database. Applicants should ensure that they, as well as their sponsor, are currently enrolled in the DEERS database and that they have a current ID card. All applicants must be citizens of the United States.

The applicant must be planning to attend, or already attending, an accredited college or university full-time in the fall term of 2003. Students attending a community or junior college must be enrolled in a program of studies designed to transfer directly into a four-year program. See instruction sheets for additional criteria.

The Defense Commissary Agency operates nearly 280 commissaries worldwide, providing groceries to military personnel, retirees and their families. Authorized commissary patrons purchase items at cost plus a 5-percent surcharge, which covers costs of building new commissaries and modernizing existing ones. Shoppers save an average of more than 30 percent on their purchases compared to commercial prices — savings worth more than $2,400 annually for a family of four.

A core military family support element, and a valued part of military pay and benefits, commissaries contribute to family readiness, enhance the quality of life for America's military and their families, and help recruit and retain the best and brightest men and women to serve their country.

Students learn about weather

McBride Elementary School

When you wake up each morning and wonder if you need to take an umbrella or wear a jacket, you could ask one of the second-grade students from McBride.

Second-graders at McBride School recently completed a unit on weather. During this unit, they were able to use various tools to help them become "self-made" weather boys and weather girls.

From using the Internet to watching weather forecasts on T.V. to reading the weather page in the newspaper to creating weather vanes, these students got plenty of hands-on experience during this unit of study.

They observed the weather daily and checked the weather forecasts using the Internet and by watching T.V.

They used the weather site to compare and contrast Fort Benning's weather with other locations in the United States and around the world.

They watched weather forecasts on television and read the weather page in the newspaper to give them a total look at the various ways that people find out about the weather in the area they in live and around the world.

As they learned to look for weather patterns, they began to make their own predictions about what kind of weather the Fort Benning area could expect.

Sharon Martz, second-grade teacher, said the children need to realize that the weather and its changes are important to people in everyday life.

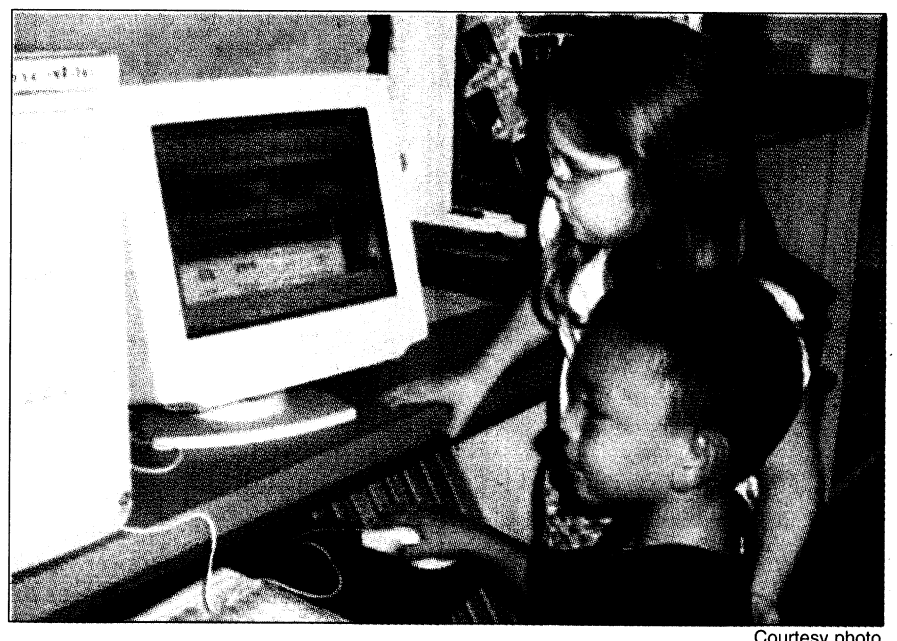
"We discussed severe weather events such as hurricanes, tornadoes, floods and typhoons and the effects they can have on people and on the land," she said.

She said the students came to realize the importance of understanding the many aspects of weather from sunny all the way to the seriousness of severe weather patterns in all areas of the world.

Overall the students enjoyed studying the weather and the effects it has on us.

"We don't want the same weather everyday because if it rained every day there would be a big flood," said P.J. Larkin.

"But if it never rained we wouldn't have flowers to pick or food to eat," said Akin Yates.



Yet some students feel the weather effects other things they value.

"Weather is important to us because we need to know the kind of weather so we can decide what to wear when we go outside," said Jennifer Fussell.

Students also learned how the weather can effect teachers lesson plans.

"Weather is interesting because we need to be prepared when we go outside," said Emily Temeyer.

"You need to know what the weather will be so you know if you can play some games outside or not," said Alex Natal.

Students observe natural surroundings

McBride Elementary School

The Woodlands program at McBride School offers many wonderful opportunities for students to engage in activities that enrich the areas of language arts and science.

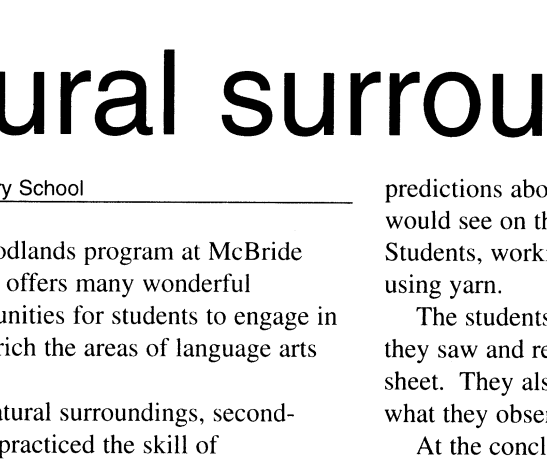
Using their natural surroundings, second-graders recently practiced the skill of observation.

Students completed a quadrat activity that focused on the skills of observation, prediction and data collection.

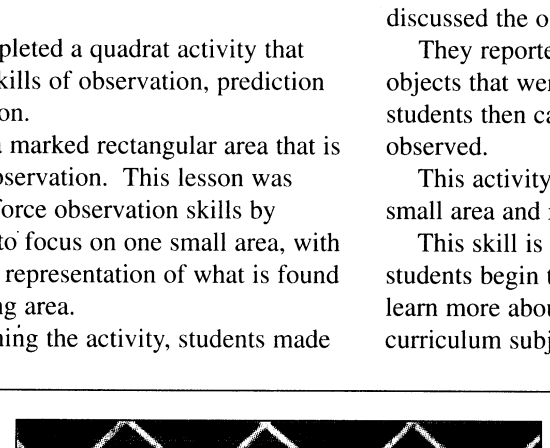
A quadrat is a marked rectangular area that is used for close observation. This lesson was designed to reinforce observation skills by getting students to focus on one small area, with that area being a representation of what is found in the surrounding area.

Before beginning the activity, students made predictions about the types of things that they would see on the ground in their quadrat. Students, working in pairs, created their quadrats using yarn.

The students then listed and counted what they saw and recorded the information on a data sheet. They also used the data sheet to draw what they observed.



At the conclusion of the activity, the students discussed the outcome of their predictions.



They reported the similarity and differences of objects that were observed and recorded. The students then categorized the objects they observed.

This activity required students to focus on a small area and reinforced the skill of observation.

This skill is an important one as McBride students begin to use their Woodlands area to learn more about nature and enrich the curriculum subjects.

Jesus had 'one of those days' in life, too

Scriptures teach of both valleys, summits

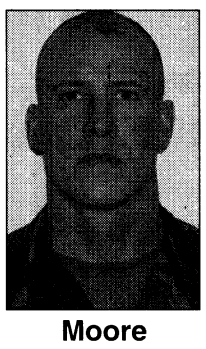
Chaplain (Capt.) Raymond E. Moore Jr.
Martin Army Community Hospital

Have you ever had "one of those days?" You know what I mean.

You're where you're supposed to be, doing the thing you're supposed to be doing.

It's the same thing you do most every day, have done the past several days and nothing has changed.

Then it happens!



Things are going well and then right out of nowhere you are under attack. It seems like everything that can go wrong is going wrong.

You say, "Why me, Lord?" yet it appears that no one cares or is even concerned.

Did you know that in the Gospel of Luke that Jesus had one of those days? In Luke 20:1-8, we are told, "Now it happened, 'on one of those days,' as he taught the people in the temple and preached the gospel, the chief priests and the scribes, together with the elders, confronted him and spoke to him, saying, 'Tell us, by what authority are you doing these things?

REFLECTIONS

Or who is he who gave you this authority?'"

Moore

Here Jesus is just preaching and teaching the gospel in the temple as he had been doing before, when he is confronted by the religious leaders questioning his authority or anything else they can.

It doesn't matter who you are or where you are. Everyone at one time or another will have "one of those days." That is just normal.

So here is some food for thought from a Christian perspective.

First, realize that going through the valleys helps us to appreciate the mountaintops.

"My brethren, count it all joy when you fall into various trials knowing that the testing of your faith produces patience," reads James 1:2-3.

Secondly, the people or problems will almost always, "reason among themselves," Luke 20:5, for justification of the confrontation.

In this case, to realize that they have just lost this battle and begin to fade away.

Finally, always remember what scripture teaches, no matter what the circumstances might be, to "draw near to God and he will draw near to you," reads James 4:8.

No matter what a day brings forth or how bad you might have it, there is always hope — hope in the mist of a stormy life and hope in the mist of a stormy day.

No matter how sudden storms come up, no matter how severe they may be, they are all submissive to the savior. I close with this passage from Psalms 91. "He who dwells in the secret place of the most high shall abide under the shadow of the almighty."

I will say of the Lord, "He is my refuge and my fortress; My God, in him I will trust." Especially on one of those days.

Marriage includes sensuality

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

According to Scripture, God designed marriage for oneness, which includes sensuality and physical union (Genesis 2:18-25). Couples should not deprive each other of marital intimacy (1 Corinthians 7:3-5).

Sensuality grows and blossoms in the warmth of emotional caring and from the fertile ground of safety, security, shelter, sustenance and health. A wise husband will both care for his mate and provide for his mate.

Sensuality includes, but is not limited to, touch. Kissing, hugging, caressing, massaging, cuddling and fondling are just one aspect of sensuality.

Koop

All the senses are involved to include sight, sound, taste and smell. So, "dim the lights, pour the wine, start the music," apply your favorite fragrance, and give flowers and chocolate. Be romantic.

Learn what brings pleasure to your mate and give of yourself to please your spouse. Communicate your desires.

Do what you both feel comfortable doing. Don't force your wishes on your mate. Be sensual simply to enjoy each other, rather than only as a means to have sex.

Make time to be sensual. Insure privacy by having a lock on the master bedroom, or ta-+king the kids over to a relative's or to a friend's house.

Anxiety and fear can destroy sensuality. Sensuality should never cause humiliation, fear or pain.

Would you like to be more sensual in your marriage? Free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries at 545-1760 or e-mail raymond.koop@benning.army.mil.

Do not deprive each other except for mutual consent and for a time, so that you may devote yourselves to prayer. Then come together again so that Satan will not tempt you because of lack of self control. — 1 Corinthians 7:5

Greenwaves pummel Red Jackets

Spencer gets first win of season

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Spencer High School changed the number in their win column from zero to one Nov. 1 with a 19-13 win over Jordan H.S. at Kinnett Stadium.

"I was happy the kids won," said Spencer coach Collins Jones. "It was very rewarding to see them pull together and pull off the victory.

"It was a team effort."

The Greenwaves running game looked like the Energizer Bunny as it kept going, and going, and going.

Spencers' Shamon Smith broke off a 69-yard run for a touchdown in the third quarter to secure a 16-0 lead.

"Smith can do anything on the field," Jones said. "He can catch, run, return and block.

"He's very coachable," he said.

Smith turned in a 315-yard rushing performance and is leading the region in rushing.

"I have to give credit to my offensive line," Smith said. "They make the hole, and I just run through them.

"It's a great feeling."

Smith scored two touchdowns and gave the Greenwaves a promising lead by the end of the third quarter, and the lead looked even better in the fourth.

When Spencer's kicker Doug Sparrow booted in a 29-yard field goal with 9:40 left, the game looked out of reach for the Red Jackets, but as the saying goes, it's not over until ...

It didn't take the Red Jackets long before they were right back in the game.

Jordan scored a touchdown at the 6:36 mark and took advantage of a Spencer turnover with 4:19 left in the game.

"We made a few mistakes," Jones said.

Forty-two seconds later, Jordan's Chris Wojciechowski caught the ball in the end zone, and the Red Jackets trailed by a mere six points.

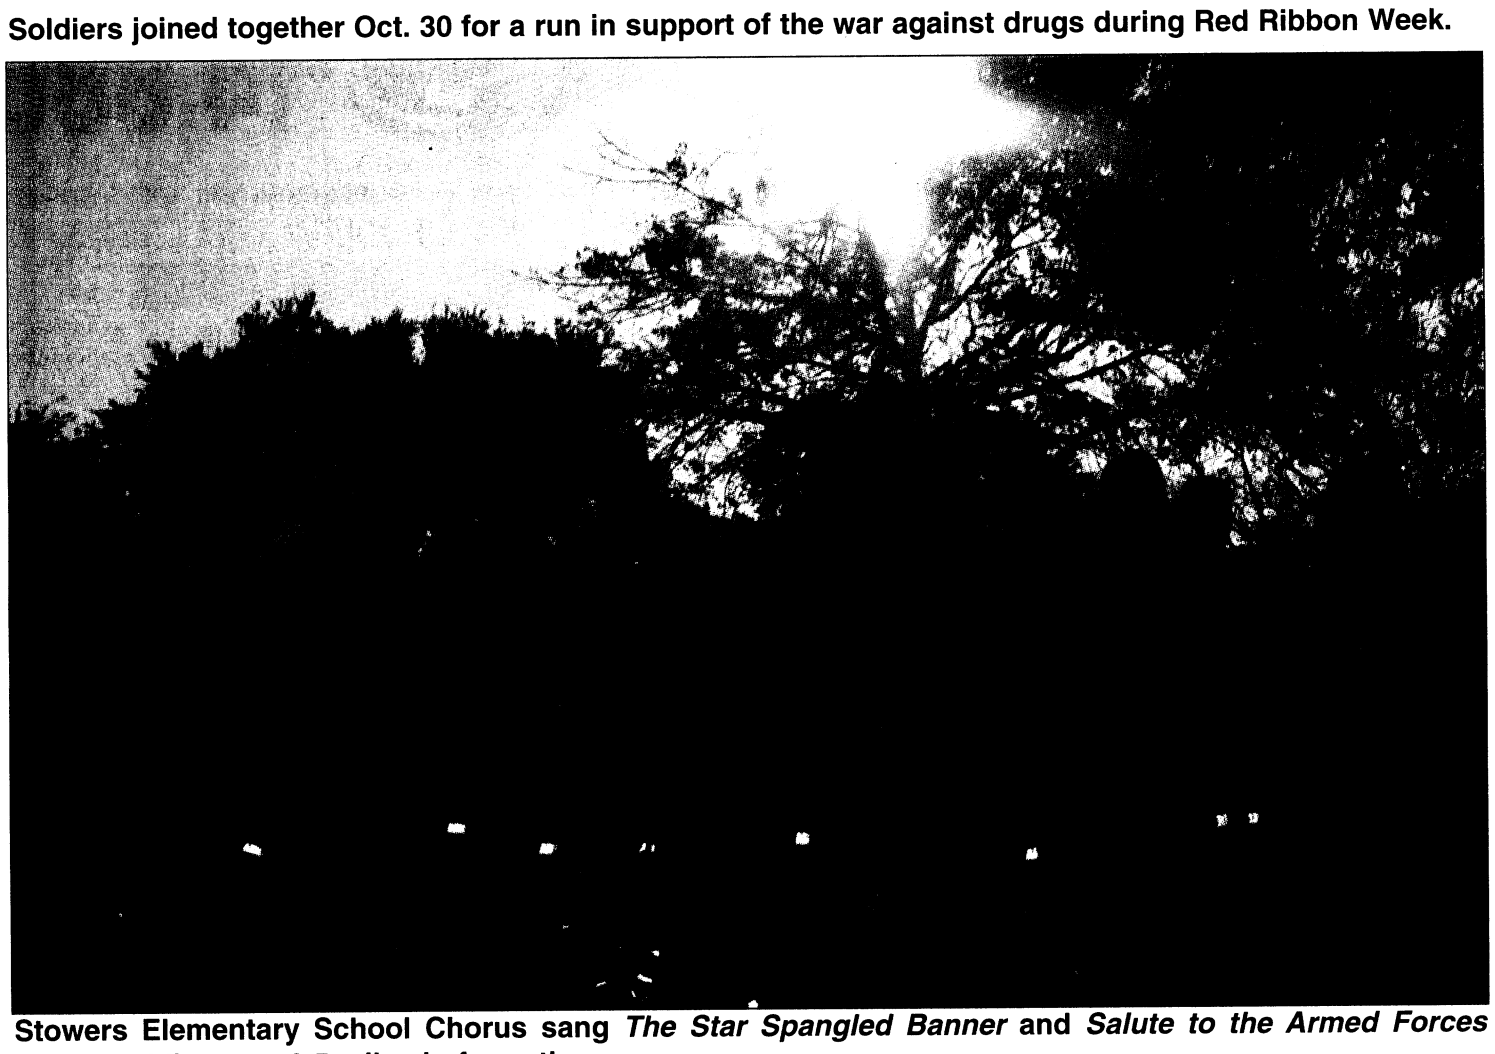
As time elapsed and desperation became apparent for the Red Jackets, Spencer coughed up the football and Jordan had the opportunity they were waiting for, but Jordan must have caught a cold as they coughed the football right back to Spencer with a fumble of their own.

Spencer ran the clock down to zero and had their first win of the season.

The Greenwaves learned a valuable lesson, Smith said.

"As long as we play hard and stick together, we can win."

Fort Benning runs for drug awareness



Red Ribbon week ends with run

Soldiers joined together Oct. 30 for a run in support of the war against drugs during Red Ribbon Week.

Stowers Elementary School Chorus sang The Star Spangled Banner and Salute to the Armed Forces before soldiers ran 2.5 miles in formation.

Maj. Gen. Paul D Eaton, commanding general of Fort Benning, lead three regiments and many guests on the first ever Red Ribbon Fun Run Nov. 1 in observance of Red Ribbon Week.

"The Fun Run was a good way to make the post aware that the command does not take drug use lightly", said Col Steve Sifers, 11th Infantry Regiment commander.

Before the run, Stowers Elementary School Chorus sang The Star Spangled Banner and Salute to the Armed Forces. Then Scott Bush, a volunteer from Phenix City, sang God Bless the U.S.A. as the sun peeked over the Ranger Memorial.

After the musical guests finished their performances, Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, presented awards to several units for outstanding leadership in drug prevention.

Eaton then gave a short speech about Red Ribbon Week and its importance to the military community before starting the run.

The Red Ribbon Fun Run was a 2.5-mile jog around Main Post.

Red Ribbon week began as a grass roots movement in honor of Enrique Camarena, Federal Drug Enforcement Agency agent, who was killed in 1985 while investigating Mexican drug traffickers.

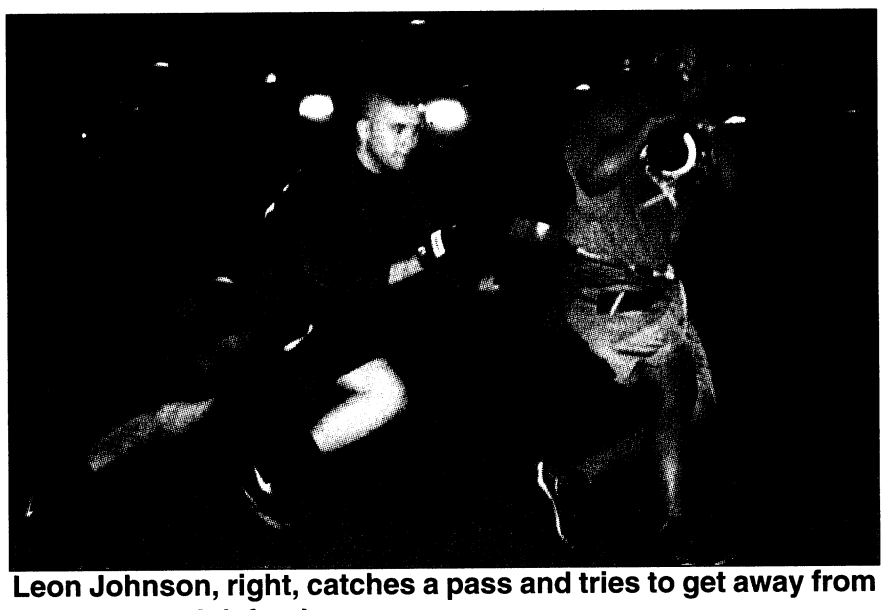
Today, the Red Ribbon celebration has grown to affect more than 120 million people and offers a positive influence for drug-free lifestyles.

"We've been celebrating Red Ribbon Week for 20 years, and over the last 10, we've had tremendous success," said Yvonne Wilbanks, alcohol and drug control officer for the Army Substance Abuse Program. "We give soldiers the tools and education to prevent drug abuse and stress the power of choice.

"We strongly encourage soldiers to make the right choice."

National Red Ribbon Week offers an opportunity for educators, military leaders, parents, students and others to focus on the work being done to stop the spread of illegal drugs, she said.

Many of the funds that come from drug trafficking are spent on international terrorism, Eaton said.



"The Army must continue to do our part to defeat this scourge," he said.

Infantrymen pound field artillery, 8-0

Teams penalized, only Bulls capitalize

Duane Stelzik, left, goes after Red Dawgs quarterback Eddie Holland during 2nd half action at Engineer Field Wednesday.

As the clock is winding down in the first half, the Bulls have the ball just past the midfield stripe. Then, a simple screen pass from Felipe Blanding to Leon Johnson turns into the games only score.

The Bulls of B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, defeated the 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regiment, Red Dawgs, 8-0, Tuesday at Engineer Field in Post Intramural Flag Football action.

"We just got back from a 30-day deployment to Fort Stewart, and we haven't practiced or played in that time frame," Blanding said. "So we wanted to come out and play aggressively and put ourselves in position to win the game."

During the first half, the two teams fought for field position.

However, everytime either team would have a good play, the referees called penalties for celebration, movement, offsides and language.

"We have to work on our discipline," said Keith Heath, Red Dawgs' receiver. "We had so many stupid penalties that should've been avoided."

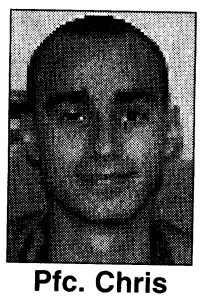
Toward the end of the first half, the Bulls drove down to the Red Dawgs' 20-yard line, but a 15-yard penalty took them back to the 35-yard line.

"We had to score on that opportunity," said Kenny Thompson, Bulls' receiver. "So we called our bread-and-butter play, the Atlanta pass, and we scored on it. It's just a simple screen pass and it always gets us a lot of yards."

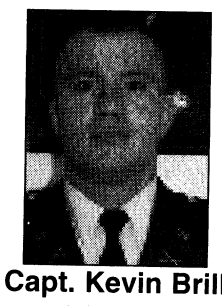
After scoring the touchdown, the Bulls ran a revers with Derek Hood and scored a two-point conversion, making the score 8-0 with three seconds left in the first half.

In the second half, it was again a battle of field position, with neither team gaining the advantage due to penalties.

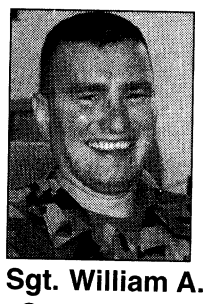
"The penalties just didn't stop," Blanding said. "But with each game, we learn more and more, and by the time the end of the season comes around, we shouldn't have anymore dumb penalties."



The Red Dawgs could not capitalize on field position given to them by the Bulls in the second half. With each spectacular play, there would be a penalty that would push them back.



"We killed ourselves in this game by not remaining disciplined and not taking advantage of the opportunities we had," Heath said.



With the win, the Bulls moved to 3-0. However, because of being deployed, the Bulls have games they have to make up.

"The key is staying undefeated," Thompson said. "We're back on track and on the prowl to win the post championship."

I found buried treasure in my attic.

More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you some Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. You were looking for old records when you found an unexpected treasure... those old Series E Savings Bonds. And even though your old bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value. So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US-BOND or write to Savings Bonds, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. Old Savings Bonds. They're a treasure worth digging for.

Event to honor families

Locals plan walk along Riverwalk

"Strong families are at the center of strong communities," said Columbus Mayor-elect Bob Poydasheff, a member of One Columbus, Inc., the organization sponsoring a local celebration of National Family Week Nov. 24-30.

For more than 30 years, National Family Week has focused on honoring and supporting the American family through awareness programs and family celebrations, such as the Family Walk on the River, a community walk along the Riverwalk Nov. 26.

The walk, between 6 and 8 p.m., is free and open to anyone. Participants are encouraged to bring nonperishable food items to donate to the Second Harvest Food Bank. The donations will be distributed to local needy families in time for Thanksgiving.

These kind of activities help "everyone in Columbus feel connected with the entire community," Poydasheff said. And that "makes for a stronger community."

The theme of this year's National Family Week is Connection Counts, and Fort Benning families are encouraged to reach out to the people and organizations that

OSC gets ready for annual sale

Benning Bazaar boasts best buys

The Fort Benning Officers' Spouses' Club is making the final preparations for the Benning Bazaar scheduled for 10 a.m. Dec. 7 at the Officers' Club.

Last year's bazaar had 75 vendors, said Renee Doyle, event coordinator. There are currently 47 vendors signed up to participate.

"Our deadline was Oct. 31," Doyle said, "but we still have space available, and we will continue to accept vendors."

The bazaar is the main fund-raising event for the OSC scholarship and welfare fund. Proceeds from the $2 admission fee and vendor registration will go into the fund.

After a poorly attended event at Spencer High School in 2000, the Bazaar moved to the Officers' Club last year, said Stacy Miller, OSC treasurer. The 2001 bazaar raised more than $5,000 for the fund. Miller estimated that more than 1,200 people shopped at the bazaar.

Among the items available to shoppers are woodcrafts, silver

A BOY AND HIS DOG

Veteran shares tales of dog days

Scout dog handler visits post

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

You can't put a price on friendship. That's the message retired Sgt. 1st Class Ray Eckel delivered to Stowers Elementary School students during their fourth annual Veterans Day celebration Nov. 8.

The Vietnam veteran and former dog handler told the students a tale of two dogs — scout dogs, whose dedication to service and companionship proved invaluable in the jungles of Vietnam.

Eckel was introduced to a German Shepherd named Rolf in 1967, when as a 17-year-old specialist he was sent to Vietnam to serve as a dog handler with the 1st Cavalry Division.

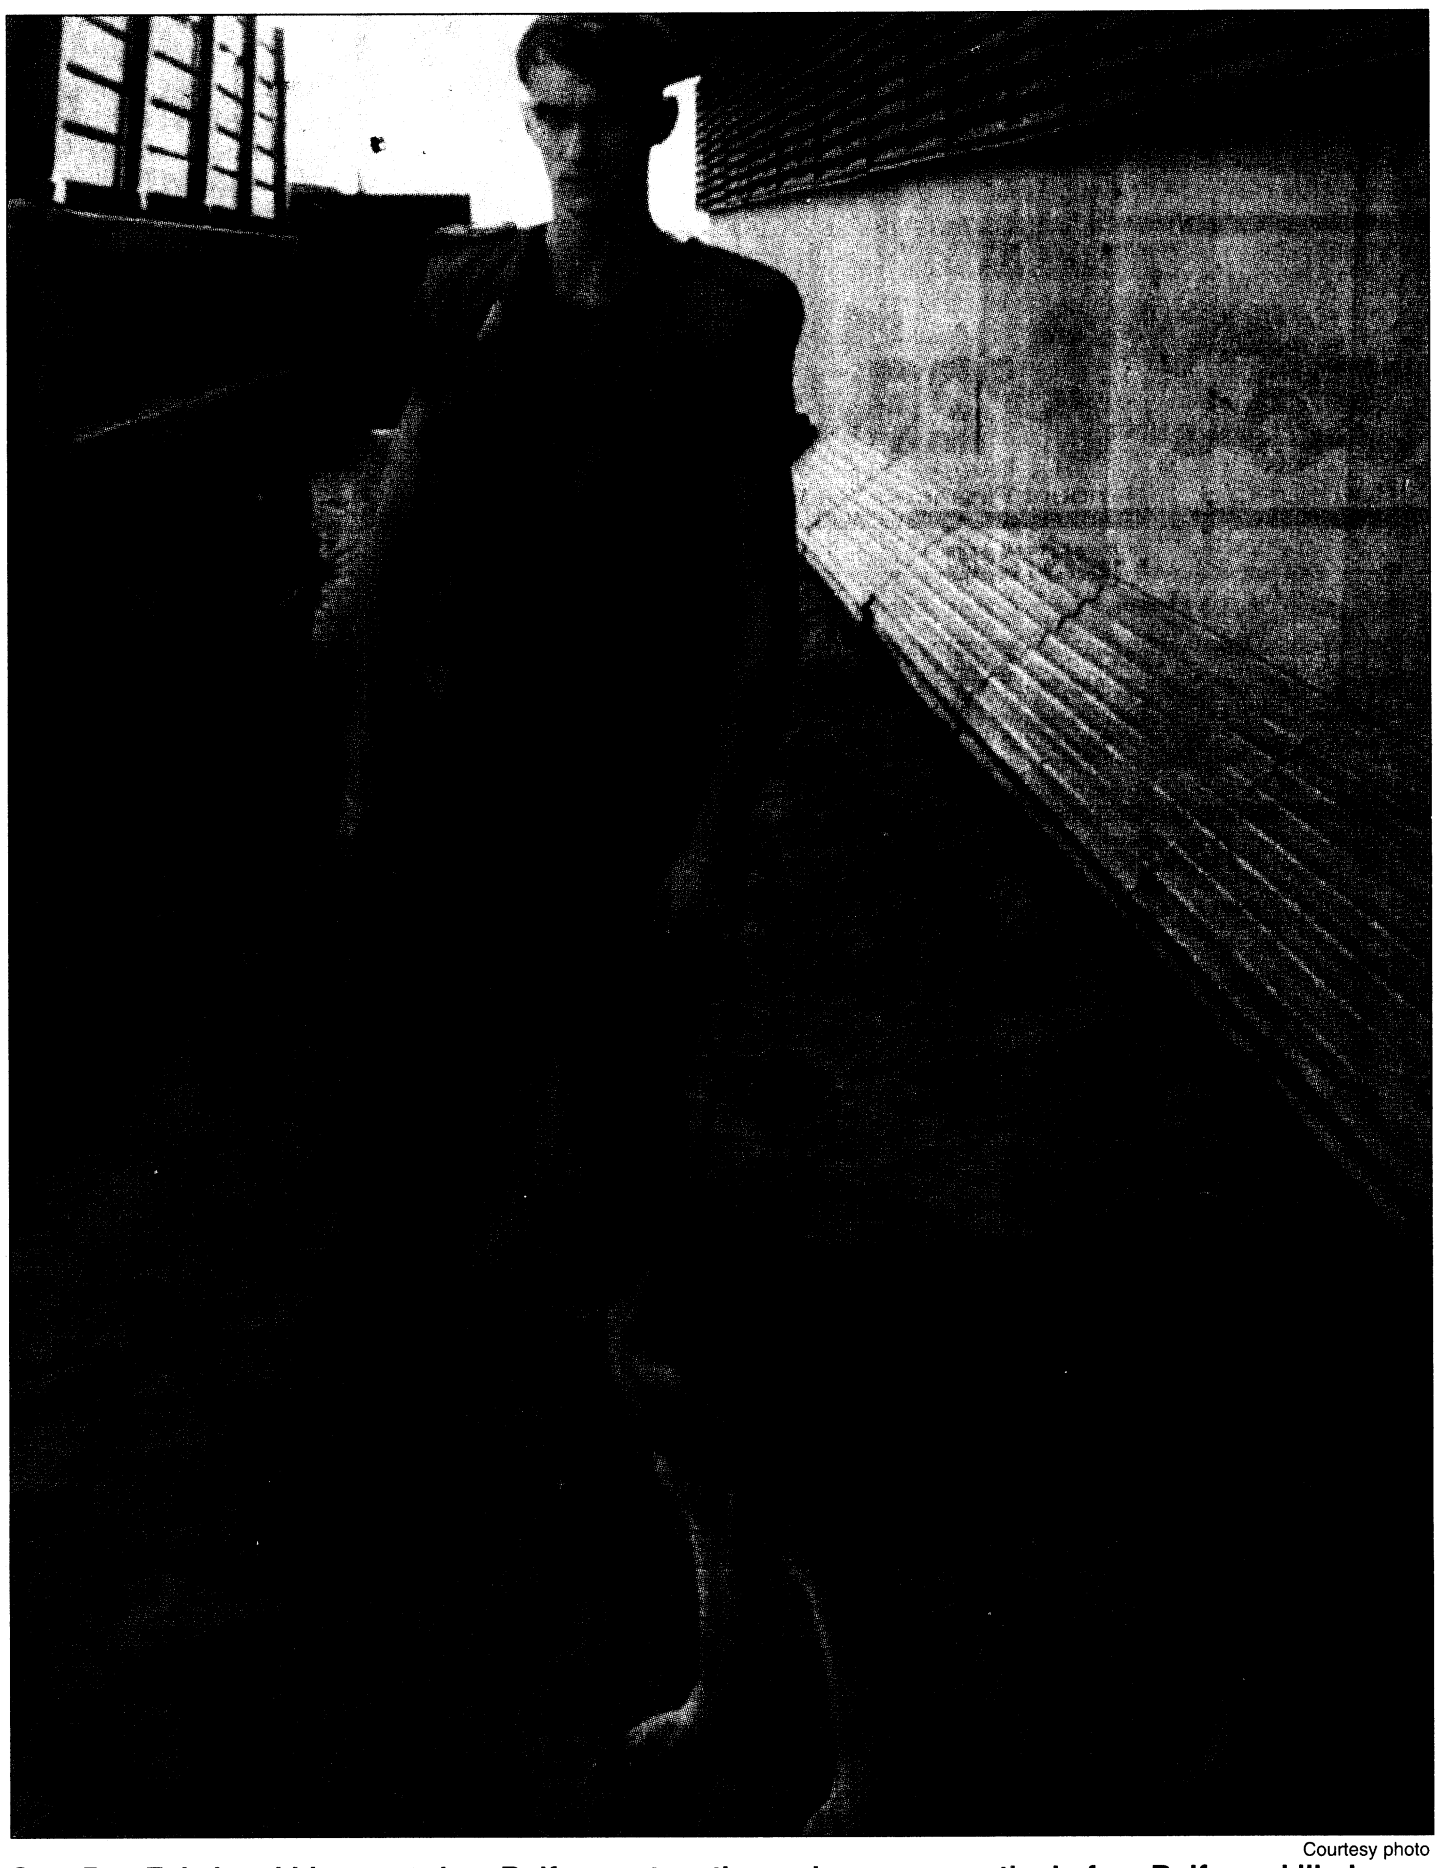
The Army valued Rolf at nearly $15,000. Eckel said he was priceless.

"Being a dog handler was a lonely, scary job. You were pretty much by yourself," Eckel told the students.

"Handlers and dogs go out in front of soldiers to spot the enemy, so we spent a great deal of time just the two of us. I relied on him. He relied on me. He became my best friend. I loved him."

Rolf and Eckel were inseparable. They shared C-Rations and water. Eckel tossed rocks for Rolf to fetch, and Rolf, in turn, curled up at the head of Eckel's mattress each night and offered himself as a pillow.

But it was in the jungle, where Rolf led Eckel in search of trip wires and snipers that the two bonded, Eckel said.



"There were 14 of us (handlers) that went over there together," he said.

"Only four returned. If they didn't believe in their dog, they paid for it with their lives.

"A dog's senses are so much better than a human's," he explained. "Rolf was my early warning system. I learned to read him and I trusted him completely. He could see movement a hundred times better than me, and he could actually hear a trip wire."

But Rolf's keen senses couldn't save him from the hand grenade a North

Children to model character, clothes

Fashion show to highlight good character

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

If how you look says a lot about you, the Fort Benning Children and Youth Services Middle School group is getting a lesson in dressing.

"It's important for kids to take pride in their appearance," said Quin Thorn, a recreation specialist at Youth Services.

As part of an ongoing lesson on character education, the Fort Benning YS Middle School group will hold a Fall Fashion Show Nov. 22 following the theme "Character in the Way I Dress."

During the show, children will strut the catwalk to display their unique fashions while messages about character will be delivered over the microphone.

"The clothing is respectable and not revealing," said Kim Rowland, a mother of three children involved in the fashion show. "My kids are seeing you can still be cool and not have to dress like a hoochie."

The idea behind the fashion show is to help kids form good habits about dressing appropriate and feel confident about who they, Thorn said.

The six pillars of character the fashion show will focus on are: trustworthiness, respect, responsibility, fairness, caring and citizenship.

Children have been studying the importance of the different pillars of character all year long, Thorn said.

"We've performed plays and welcomed guest speakers to talk about the habits which lead to a strong character," Thorn said. "The children are learning valuable lessons."

Some of the outfits kids will be showing off include sportswear, formal wear and casual wear.

"The girls are having a blast playing dress up, and even my son is enjoying being on stage," Rowland said.

"This is the right idea to motivate them."

Motivating children to be more responsible is exactly the message behind the performance, Thorn said.

"We are hoping even more children will come and watch the show," Thorn said. "The performers will get the audience's attention and teach them a lesson they can take home with them."

The fashion show begins at 6 p.m. at the Youth Services Center.

For information, call YS at 545-3070.

Families: Spend time together

have made a difference in their lives.

Here are some ways One Columbus, Inc., encourages families to celebrate National Family Week:

• Write a letter to thank someone who has made a difference in the life of your family.

• Discover different ways to spend quality time together, such as volunteering.

• Hold a "family supper" with your neighbors or the families of your childrens' friends.

• Visit a local community or youth center and learn what kinds of family activities are available.

The Family Center of Columbus offers these suggestions for reaffirming your family's commitment to one another:

• Start a family tree.

• Take on a family project, such as adopting a needy family for the holidays.

• Adopt a senior citizen.

• Make a family prayer or affirmation and say it before a meal.

• Take your kids on a tour of your workplace.

• Visit your local library.

• Care enough to show it. Try a hug of approval, a pat on the back, or say, "You did a great job."

• Plan your Thanksgiving meal together.

• Limit TV and Internet use. Spend more time together.

Vet: Shares dog stories with kids

Vietnamese soldier lobbed into the trench where he and Eckel lay sleeping. Eckel escaped serious injury, but Rolf died four days later.

"It was real hard," Eckel told the students. "I lost my best friend."

After a brief ceremony and burial, Eckel returned to duty, this time with a dog named Duke, who was less inclined to mix business with pleasure.

"He bit me six times the first day. It didn't look like we were going to be friends," Eckel said. "But he was always ready to work. He took his responsibility very seriously. He was just naturally suspicious. That's what made him such a good scout."

Though Duke was never as affectionate as Rolf, he was very loyal and dedicated, Eckel said. The two forged a friendship in a very short time, hastened by the intensity of combat.

Duke was assigned to another handler when Eckel returned to the states in 1969.

The 55-year-old Illinois native, who was awarded a Purple Heart after being shot in the leg, said he still thinks about his dogs from time to time.

"I loved working with them. I'd do it again in a minute, but I'd wear a different kind of uniform now."

Eckel is an officer with the Columbus Police Department.

jewelry, handmade cards and baskets, and a variety of Christmas items.

"Our focus is on handcrafted items," Doyle said, although several commercial vendors will also have booths.

Kathy Bolar is one of two vendors offering handmade woven baskets.

Bolar recently learned basket making from a neighbor and will offer baskets in different sizes and shapes, both stained and unstained.

"My first was a patriotic basket," Bolar said, "and I just tried to create a basket to hold a 9 by 13 dish.

"It didn't quite work, but it's cute."

Bolar will offer a basket making class through the Bit of Benning shop Dec. 11.

A recent addition is a table for donations for Santa's Castle, where shoppers can drop off new, unwrapped toys or make cash contributions.

"Last year's bazaar was a big success," Miller said, "and it should be even better this year."

For more information call 682-6212.

CPAC will provide two orientation sessions for employees affected by the RIF at 1 p.m. Nov. 18 and 8:30 a.m. Nov. 19 in Classroom 6, Infantry Hall. Shaw will conduct a briefing for employees interested in employment with Shaw, ITT or Sikorsky at 1 p.m. Nov. 20 in Marshall Auditorium.

Fort Benning recycles today

Recycling saves energy, resources landfill space

Danielle Foershler
Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

Georgians will join in the sixth annual observance of America Recycles Day today.

The national event is held to raise consumer awareness of the need to recycle and to "close the loop" by purchasing recycled content products and packaging.

Events will be held in local communities throughout the state and nation asking people to pledge to renew their commitment to recycling.

Fort Benning's Material Recycling Facility is asking that the Fort Benning community take part in this nationwide recycling day.

The MRF is placing several recycling bins throughout the Fort Benning Housing areas today.

The recycling bins will be located at the following locations: Indianhead Housing Area on Lavoie Street by Wilson School; White Elephants on 1st Division Road by TOT Town Day Care; Kelley Hill located by Building 9070, 36th Engineer Group between Buildings 2883 and 2882 in front of the ball field; Custer Terrace at the end of the Post Office building; and Davis Hills in front of building 9608.

The average Georgian throws away 6.6 pounds of household garbage a day, which adds up to nearly 9.4 million tons a year.

By recycling, we save energy and conserve natural resources and landfill space.

"Every citizen in our state should take this time to evaluate opportunities for recycling in their community and take action to reduce waste and conserve resources," said Gloria Hardegreestate, ARD coordinator.

Fort Benning's MRF is asking the community to help in the recycling efforts by taking five minutes out of your day today to drop off your recyclable items.

Fort Benning offers free finance class

Six part class teaches families to save

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

This is the first in a six part series that explores what soldiers learn at the financial readiness course.

The first session in a six class financial readiness course, Investing in your future, covered topics that include retirement planning, investing and overcoming debt.

The classes are designed to help people become debt free and stay that way while building a solid financial platform.

"I'd rather help people before they have a problem, but most people wait too long before getting help," said Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program. "Even if they do get into trouble before they contact us, we can still help them though."

Tuesday's class offered tips on debt control and building a financial base through cash and credit management, budgeting, financial checkups and focusing on the financial management pyramid.

The financial management pyramid outlines the steps required for wealth protection, wealth accumulation and wealth distribution.

Wealth protection can be obtained by budgeting, building an emergency cash reserve, insuring personal assets and understanding tax laws.

Wealth accumulation is derived by setting smart financial goals, lowering the total amount of debt and choosing good investments.

Wealth distribution gives people an opportunity to pass on their wealth to loved ones or favorite causes at the end of their lives.

One method of reaching a financial goal is to place a reminder somewhere it will be seen on a daily basis, Pratcher said.

"It's the same as putting a picture of yourself on the refrigerator as a reminder to diet.

"People need to stay focused on their goals, and that is what the financial readiness class is all about. It is also important to set attainable goals so you don't get frustrated," Pratcher said.

"There are many factors that can affect financial stability and cause success or ruin," Pratcher said. "The most important thing, however, is building a solid base. With a solid base, you have something to build on."

"This is a great class," said Spc. Kyle Neller, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "I'm glad the sergeants in the office suggested I go. I learned a lot about money management and investment strategies.

"I now see the importance of searching for the best deal possible by comparing apples to apples and oranges to oranges. I also learned that if something is on sale, and I wouldn't buy it otherwise, it's not really worth buying.

"I am looking forward to the next class."

The second class in the series will be Tuesday in Building 359 and will focus on equity investments, fixed income investments and mutual funds.

Stowers School has book character parade

Stowers Elementary School

Amelia Bedelia, Viola Swamp, Dr. Doolittle and Harry Potter were alive and well at Stowers Elementary School Oct. 31.

As a part of Stowers Reads, the faculty, staff and students held a Book Character Parade in which everyone in the school dressed as a character from a favorite book.

Students and teachers, led by the principal and assistant principal — Dr. Doolittle and a grown-up Harry Potter — marched in a circle inside the school holding their book and viewing the other students in costume.

Students marched through the media center where judges selected the students in each grade who best represented their book character.

Winners included Belle from Beauty and the Beast, A Wizard from Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone, the Croc Hunter from The Crocodile Hunter, Amelia Bedelia from Amelia Bedelia, Dorothy from The Wizard of Oz, the daughter from Mufaro's Beautiful Daughter, Alice the witch from Alice and Greta, Harry Potter from Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets, and Viola Swamp from Miss Nelson is Missing.

Stowers' students use fun to stay in shape

Stowers Elementary School

Thirty-eight students from the third, fourth, and fifth grades at Stowers School spend an hour after school two days a week keeping in shape and having fun. The Walking/Fitness Club, directed by fifth-grade teacher David Murray, is a fun way to help kids keep in shape and have a great time doing it. After stretching exercises each day, the club hits the trails or walking paths around the school for an hour of fun and fitness. Parents and other teachers often join in.

"I like our walking club because it helps me exercise and that's my hobby," said fifth-grader Hasani Brown.

Students at Stowers have parents that stress fitness, and this is a fun way for them to keep in shape as well. Students earn tiny florescent feet that are added to a neck chain each time they complete five miles. After 25 miles they earn a medal for their chain as well.

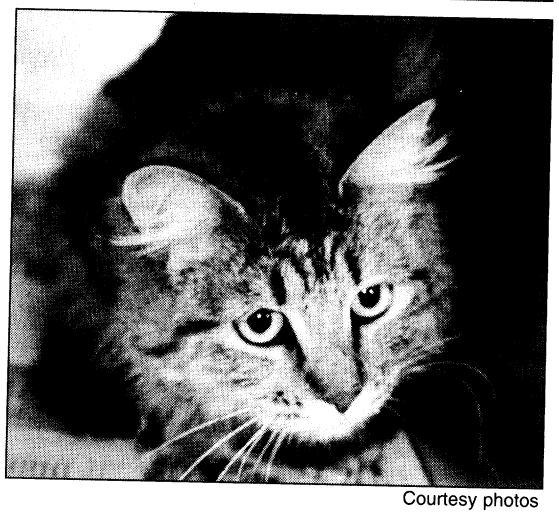
Second graders, parents dissect owl pellets



Stowers Elementary School

What can be exciting, enlightening and educational? Second graders and their parents in Kris. Clemons' and Susan Lapp's classrooms at Stowers School found out during V.I.P. (Very Involved Parents) this week. As a culminating activity for their study of animals, the students and their parents dissected an owl pellet. Owl pellets are indigestible bones and fur that are regurgitated.

By dissecting the pellets, the students discovered fascinating information about an owl's diet.

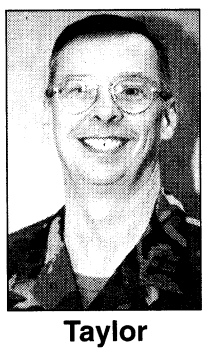
Elections put new focus on spiritual things

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Daniel Taylor
USAIC Chaplains office



The elections are finally over, unless you happen to live in Louisiana. I am certainly happy to see the campaigns end.

This year it seemed that the number of negative ads, the mudslinging, was more pronounced than ever. The political pundits debate the effectiveness of those ads but most people I talk with say that kind of campaigning really turns them off. The credibility of the candidates becomes a focus of the debates instead of anything positive.

In some areas of the country, voter turnout was greater than in others. Some candidates surmise they lost their elections because of low voter turnout. I guess that is true at least as far as the voters who supported the positions of the losing candidate. Many people stayed home. Many did not mail in their ballots.

For whatever reason, many citizens just did not exercise one of the fundamental rights we have in this country. Even though the choices may not always have been very good, at least we had choices. Compare ours with the recent elections in Iraq.

REFLECTIONS

Taylor

We delight in the freedoms we have, but sometimes exercising our rights to those freedoms is something we take for granted. We tend to be comfortable with the reasons for not using those freedoms. It is easier not to vote than to take the time to stand in line at a polling place. Despite the narrow margins of victory in many elections, we still feel our contribution won't make a difference.

Most Americans look at the freedom to worship in much the same way.

There are usually more reasons available for not going to church than for taking the time to exercise that right. Some reasons sound legitimate enough: resting, spending time with the family, doing necessary chores.

Those, like most of the weaker ones, are really just excuses. If meeting the spiritual needs in our own lives and the lives of those close to us was really a priority, we would be in church at the appointed hour.

It is often said that if you don't vote, don't complain about the performance of those in office. Maybe the same could apply to those who seem to have little interest in spiritual growth.

If you are not willing to take the time to meet with God in the company of others, then don't complain when he brings things into your life that you don't like!

We all like the idea of preserving the freedoms we have. But it is all too easy to not take advantage of those same freedoms.

Make time to vote, we are told. Good idea. Make time for church also! It is a precious right that nearly half the people of the world don't have. Exercise it!

Foster spirituality in marriage

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Reflect on this: A single strand is easily snapped. Two twisted strands are better. "A cord of three strands in not easily broken," (Ecclesiastes 4:9-12).

In a similar fashion, the husband and wife team is considerably strengthened when both invite God to join forces with them. In a Psalm attributed to Solomon, King of Israel, Solomon observed, "Unless the Lord builds the house, its builders labor in vain," (Psalm 127:1).

The frame of a house is built with vertical studs and horizontal joists and rafters. Likewise, the essential elements of spirituality in marriage consist of being in a right relationship with God (the vertical) and in a right relationship with one another (the horizontal).

Koop

Scripture sums up the whole law of God in the same way, to love the Lord our God and our neighbor (Mark 12:28-31 and Leviticus 19:18).

Spiritual couples read and apply God's word to their lives. They pray. They worship together, and they minister together.

The Bible implores us to "act justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with your God" (Micah 6:8). Moses exclaimed, "Love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul and with all your strength. These commandments that I give you today are to be upon your hearts. Impress them on your children. Talk about them when you sit at home and when you walk along the road, when you lie down, and when you get up," (Deuteronomy 6:5-7).

Strengthen your relationship and your home. Make God a part of your lives.

Free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail raymond.koop@benning. army.mil.

Every day they continued to meet together in the temple courts. They broke bread in their homes and ate together with glad and sincere hearts.— Acts 2:46

YS season opener showcases skill

Warriors defeat Tigers in 8-3 victory

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Practice may not always make perfect, but it does wonders for Youth Services baseball teams.

The Warriors drew upon what they learned in their three weeks of practice to defeat the Tigers, 8-3, in 12- to 15-year-old, winter-league action Saturday at the YS Baseball Complex.

"Everyone loves to win, but there can be only one winner," said Tigers' coach Leroy Coronado, who inherited the team Nov. 7 after two coaches left and did not have a chance for a team practice. "The thing is, we had a good time today and learned from our mistakes. Let it show for the record, I'm confident we'll be 6-1 this season."

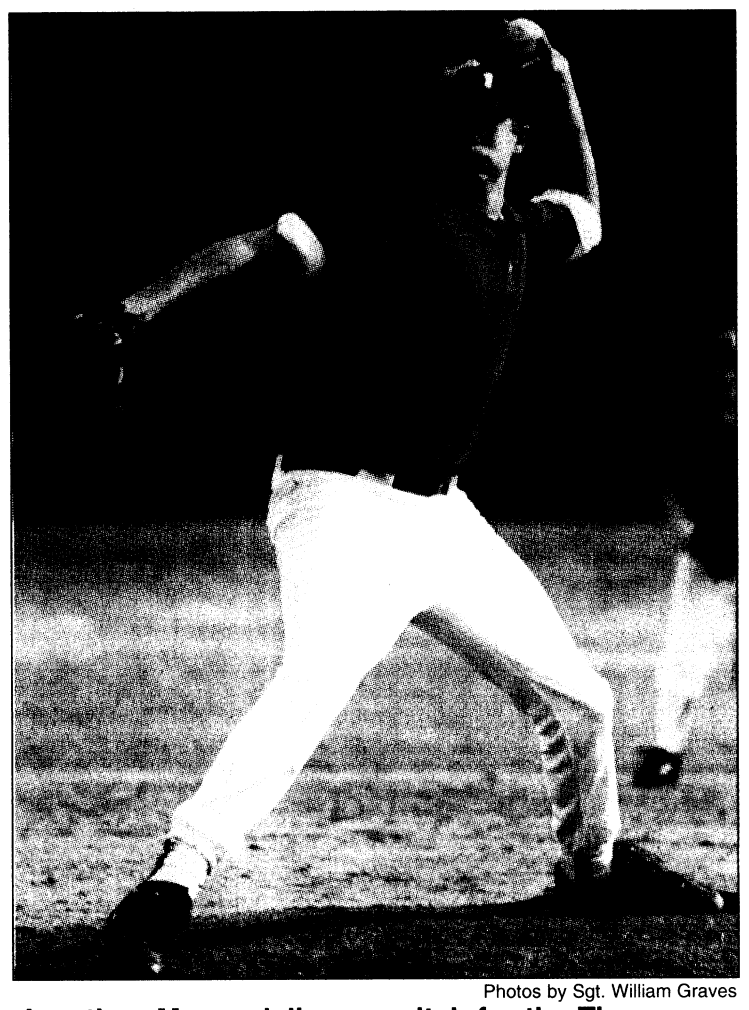
Both teams looked a bit rusty to start the game. There were many passed balls, errant throws and indecisive at bats. The difference was that the Warriors' sloppy play stopped after pitcher Michael Cantrell allowed Jay May and Brian Coronado to score in the first. Tigers' pitcher Jonathan Moore and his team didn't settle down until after allowing 8 runs in the first two innings.

Warriors' Jon McGhee, Mike Cantrell and Josh Taylor scored two runs for the Warriors, and Andrew Gerber and Aubrey Harris scored once. Taylor also added two singles, two runs batted in and five stolen bases.

The Tigers' Joshua Toole scored in the fifth inning, but the referees called the game due to the hour-and-a-half time limit.

Moore throws hard and couldn't throw his hardest until Coronado made a catcher change in the third inning, Coronado said.

"He couldn't let her rip, and that cost us," he said.



The game seemed to be a learning experience for both teams.

"We need to focus on where the ball is at all times to avoid constant steals by the other team," he said. "Also, we have to throw to the person, not at the person."

"I feel pretty good," said Jermie Gardner, Warriors' coach. "The kids started to pick up on a lot of the fundamentals. This was a great confidence boost for them."

His team has a few first-year players, but some of their teammates served as mentors in teaching fundamentals like setting their feet when throwing, keeping the ball in front of their body, and turning to run for balls in the outfield, not shuffling backward, Gardner said.

"Our communication improved as the game went along," Gardner said. "The kids started slapping each other on the back and encouraging each other more."

Jonathan Moore delivers a pitch for the Tigers.

The games mean a great deal to the children, he said.

"It builds team and school pride," Gardner said. "When Spring ball comes around, they'll be gelled and ready to play."

Until then, the Warriors are confident they'll play well, said Cantrell, 12.

"We have a good team," he said. "We work together and have a lot of hustle."

Still, the shutout he pitched in the second, third and fourth innings was a surprise.

"I didn't think I'd pitch that well," he said. "I pitched my fastest and got the ball in the strike zone. Even though I did well, I still have to improve my accuracy."

McGee, 13, gave much of the credit for the victory to the Warriors' coaches.

"They really want us to win, and they push us hard," McGee said. "They prepared us well in practice and helped us build the confidence we need to win."

Blue Devils crush Red Jackets

Running back attacks Jordan defense

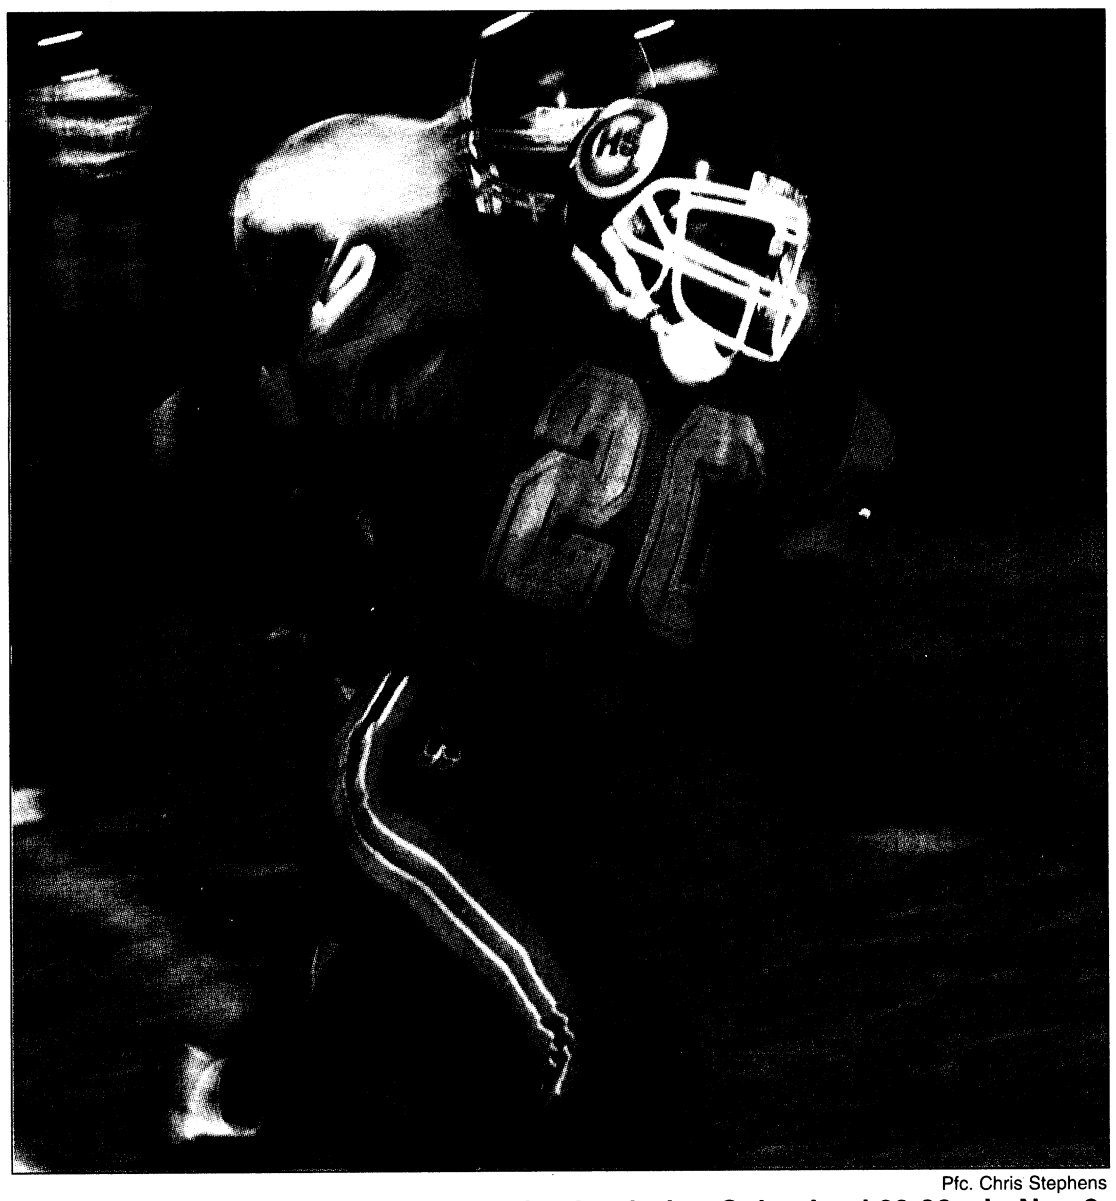
Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Columbus High School Blue Devils defeated the Jordan H.S. Red Jackets, 60-36, in high school football action Nov. 8 at Columbus' homecoming game.

From the opening kickoff, the Blue Devils defense enveloped the Red Jackets, and didn't allow them any breathing room the whole game.

Columbus sustained a long drive after a Jordan punt to take the lead, 7-0, on a Doug Hardman 1-yard touchdown carry.

"The first drive was very important to us," said junior quarterback Ric Bishop. "We had to set the tone for the game."



However, Jordan answered right back on their next drive with a six-play, 50-yard touchdown drive of their own, with junior tailback Dantrell Savage taking it in from two-yards out.

Columbus didn't let Jordan's drive outdo them though. Columbus responded with another long drive to take a 14-7 lead.

The scoring didn't stop there. Once again, Columbus made Jordan punt, and on the second play of the Blue Devils' drive, Bishop found junior wide receiver Andreas Wright downfield for a 50-yard touchdown pass.

From then on, Columbus poured on the offense and defense.

Jordan earned one more trip to the endzone on a Savage 64-yard touchdown run, but it was not until midway through the fourth quarter that the Red Jackets hit paydirt again.

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Trey McCants runs past a Jordan defender during Columbus' 60-36 win Nov 8.

Columbus capped off a 70-yard drive with junior tailback Trey McCants taking it to the house.

"It was kind of discouraging that I would break for a big gain, and they would stop me a few yards before the endzone," McCants said. "The important thing is that I get in for the touchdown, whether it be on a 20-yard run or a four-yard run."

Just before the end of the first half, junior defensive lineman Robert Isabel blocked the Jordan punt.

McCants took it to the house on the next play for a 12-yard touchdown to bring the score to 33-14 by half.

The romp didn't stop at halftime though.

The Blue Devils came out of the locker room with the idea of putting more points on the board, and the points were falling like rain for the Blue Devils.

After scoring on their first possession of the second half, the Blue Devils senior defensive back Bradley Clark recovered a fumble on defense, of which the offense in turn took advantage midway through the third quarter.

With the score 47-14 and the game way out of reach for Jordan, Columbus put in their junior varsity squad to give them some playing experience.

"We had a lot of motivation coming into this game, being it was our homecoming game," said junior offensive lineman Andy Young. "Usually teams will put us as their homecoming game, thinking they're going to beat us. Now, it's our turn to do that.

"We're proving we're not a stepover team. You better come to play when you play the Blue Devils. We're back, and we're on the attack."

Arizona going down 'Sooner or later'

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Ah! Winter is in the air, football season is close to ending and the rich, whiney baseball players are relaxing in their million-dollar mansions, wondering how they can get more money the next year.

But on the college side of things, college basketball season is starting with some non-traditional powerhouses at the top.

No longer are Duke, North Carolina, Kentucky and UCLA at the top. It's Oklahoma, Texas and Arizona.

This year, there are many strong teams. But, the question is, who is going to get hot at the right time and make their run into the Big Dance? And, who can keep that momentum through the tournament and earn the right to be called the best team in all the land?

Last year's NCAA champion, Maryland, lost key players in Juan Dixon, Byron Mouton, Chris Wilcox and Lonny Baxter, and will not likely find themselves going far this year.

Arizona is ranked number one in the preseason polls. With all five starters back, they look to be the team to beat.

But, hold it right there! Let's not go ahead and give them the championship. The last team to be ranked number one in the preseason polls and to win the championship was Kentucky in the 95-96 season.

Personally, I don't see Arizona getting past the Elite Eight, much less the National Championship Game.

This year, I foresee two teams contending for the national title.

Oklahoma and Alabama show promise with their core group of unknowns returning.

Oklahoma has what it takes to win the championship. With stars like Hollis Price and Ebi Ere, they have the look of a champion. Can they back it up though?

Of course they can. They not only surprised people by coming out of nowhere last year, but they beat up on their Big 12 competition.

They're hungry to show people that last year was no fluke, and they look to be the team that will come out on top.

Alabama is another team that looks strong. However, coming out of the SEC is not an easy task.

With five teams ranked in the top 25, the SEC looks to take over the dominance of college basketball. Look for Georgia, Florida, Kentucky and Mississippi State to give them trouble. If anyone in the SEC is going to stop them, it will be either Kentucky or Georgia.

Kentucky is a team that is always poised and ready to make a run for the championship, and this year is no different. Tubby Smith has his Wildcats ready to go.

Then there's them Bulldogs — the school that everyone loves to hate. You've gotta give it up to them though. They can really pound it inside and shoot the ball outside.

With the false charges placed on Steve Thomas and Tony Cole exposed, Georgia looks to put all of that behind them and go far this season. But the Bulldogs will only get as far as Jarvis Hayes, N.C. State transfer Damien Wilkens, and Ezra Williams will take them.

So as the season starts, I predict Oklahoma will win the NCAA championship, bringing the Big 12 their first title in more than a decade.

Major shoots perfectly in competition

Unit takes advantage of home turf

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning have scored some major victories recently. The following results are some of their accomplishments:

Fall 3200 Conventional Prone Classic, Fort Benning Nov. 2-3 — USAMU international rifle shooter Maj. Michael E. Anti won the Gold Medal as he shot a perfect score of 3,200 points with 272 Xs out of a possible 3,200 points and 320 Xs — an X is a bull's eye used in tie breaking.

Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas took the Silver Medal with a score of 3,200 points and 266 Xs and Spc. Shane M. Barnhart got the Bronze Medal with 3,197 points and 264 Xs.

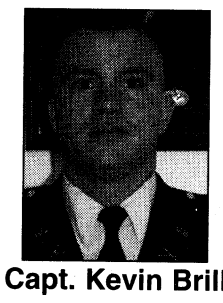
Tall Pines Skeet Championships, Fort Benning Oct. 24-Nov. 3 — Shotgun shooter Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery received the Silver Medal in the men's Skeet Championship.

Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson won the Gold Medal in the men's Double Trap Championship, followed by Sgt. 1st Class James T. Graves with the Silver Medal and Pvt. Matthew T. Wallace with the Bronze.

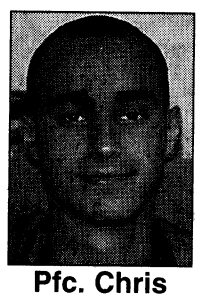
Staff Sgt. Joetta R. Dement won the Gold Medal in the women's Double Trap Championship.

Wallace also received the Silver Medal in the men's Trap Championship and Sgt. 1st Class Theresa E. DeWitt won the Gold Medal in the women's Trap Championship.

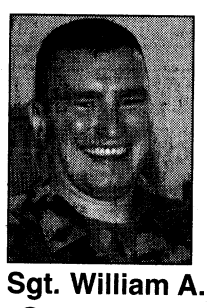
Monthly Open Pistol Tournament, Columbia, Tenn., Oct. 27 — USAMU service pistol shooter Staff Sgt. Thomas A. Rose won the overall competition with a personal high score of 2,660 points out of a possible 2,700 points.



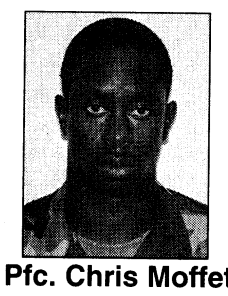
Sgt. 1st Class Roger C. Jacobson took second place overall with a score of 2,650 points and Staff Sgt.



Gregory S. Wilson finished in third place with 2,641 points. Rose also won the .22-Caliber match, in which Wilson took second place, and the Center Fire competition, in which Jacobson was second and Wilson third. Jacobson won the .45-Caliber match, followed by Rose in second place and Sgt. Adam E. Sokolowski in third.



Georgia State Championships, Conyers, Ga., Oct. 19-20 — Action pistol shooter Spc. Maxient J. Michel beat 215 other competitors to win the Georgia State Championship. He also won the Military Division and Junior Division.



U.S. Infinity Open Championships, Las Vegas, Nev., Oct. 17-21 — Action pistol shooter Staff Sgt. Julie A. Goloski took the Silver Medal in the Military Division and finished fourth in the Women's Division.

Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

Infantry tests new weapons

Crew weapons have air burst capabilities

"You can rain steel down on the enemy. You get first round hit capabilities with this weapon."

Maj. Stuart Meyer
Chief small arms division, DCD

The chief of infantry was the first soldier in history to fire the XM307, a prototype machine gun.

During a training exercise designed to demonstrate the revolutionary capabilities of the future Army weapon, Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton fired the XM307 at Red Cloud Range Nov. 14.

He also fired the MK47, a possible replacement to the MK19. He hit 100 percent of his targets with the 25 mm ammunition he sent 1,500 meters down range with the XM307.

"It was a very positive experience," Eaton said. "I'm privileged to be able to have fired the XM307 and the Striker 40 (MK47)."

The objective crew-served weapon, XM307, is an early prototype weapon of Army transformation, and the Army will integrate it as part of the future combat system, said Maj. Stuart Meyer, chief, Small Arms Division, Directorate of Combat Development.

"The plan is to field it with objective force warrior and the FCS," said Maj. Roy Manauis, Assistant Project Manager, Soldier Weapons.

The new integrated weapons system offers soldiers more firepower and accuracy, Meyer said.

The XM307 high-explosive airburst ammunition will provide more lethality and precision effects on targets, Manauis said.

"You can rain steel down on the enemy," he said. "You get first round hit capabilities with this weapon."

Many gather to protest

MPs arrest nearly 90 protesters

Department of Defense police stand watch Sunday.

The School of Americas closed two years ago; apparently, the estimated crowd of 6,000 Sunday outside Fort Benning's main gate didn't get that message.

Thousands crowded the street Saturday and Sunday for the 13th annual SOA-Watch protest. The 12-foot high fence didn't stop nearly 90 people from coming on post and being arrested by DoD and military police. The protesters were restrained with heavy cable ties, loaded on a bus and processed, after breaking the federal law that prohibits protests on military installations.

The crowd cheered each time someone was taken into custody, and the speakers solicited the audience to commit the crime of trespassing on post, praising those who were detained and challenging the crowd to have more people cross than the previous year. People were in the crowd to assist and show the way across the fence.

Part of the draw for the protest was a publicized performance by the Indigo Girls, a progressive folk rock band, and a number of other musicians and

Shaw to hire 500

Applications for right of first refusal in soon

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning announced Nov. 15 that the Army will cut 900 civilian jobs on post, but Shaw Infrastructure Inc. plans to hire 500.

"Now that the letters are out, we're excited to start hiring," said Pat Kenny, project manager for Shaw Inc. "We need individuals in order to perform the contract work."

About 180 people have already submitted applications for the first right of refusal. To gain that right, applications must be submitted by Dec. 1. Workers can drop them off in a box in Infantry Hall, Room 111.

The cuts are part of the privatization of the Army's civilian work force.

"We've been anticipating this for some time, and the letters arrived (Nov. 15)," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander. "Fort Benning will make every effort to help those affected by the reduction in force."

"I plan on using some of the programs offered," said Harold Alexander, aircraft repairmen with Directorate of Engineering Facilities and Logistics. "I was looking for other positions around the country, and I'm hoping the priority placement program will help me find a job."

Out of the 900 positions being cut, 181 will be eliminated, 131 will be assigned to other jobs at the same pay level, 57 will receive positions at lower grades and 289 people have accepted an early retirement package.

BCTB prepares for more soldiers

Possible 'plus up' for January classes

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

January may bring a little more business than usual to the Basic Combat Training Brigade at Sand Hill.

Earlier this month, Training and Doctrine Command officials requested that Fort Benning provide input concerning costs and other issues associated with a possible BCTB "plus up." The plus up would consist of an additional 1,000 BCTB soldiers who would report for training beginning Jan. 10.

If the plan is implemented, the first 500 soldiers will arrive Jan. 10 and the second 500 arrive Jan. 17, said A.J. Luke, senior scheduler in the Directorate of Operations and Training.

The 1,000 soldiers have already been identified, Luke said. They will be from low density military occupational specialties who go on to other installations to receive their advanced individual training.

"The plus up affects all of TRADOC, not just Fort Benning,"

FAMILY VALUES

Similaties to Army

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

COMMENTARY

One of the best things I've done recently is sit in on the Wilson Elementary School First Friday Program.

I was there just to listen, take notes and write an article on Chaplain (Maj.) Pete Frederich's presentation on values. Within a few minutes, I found myself right in the middle of the discussion with parents who all had children the same ages as my own. By the end of the session, my head and my notebook were filled with thoughts and ideas to help me identify my own family values and how to communicate them with my kids.

And then, when I was sitting in a waiting room, idly reading the posters on the walls, I discovered that our family values are actually a lot like the Army values. So much for thinking that anything we're trying to do is original or even revolutionary. Since my husband and I are Navy and Army brats, I guess I'm really not surprised.

If you're a parent wanting to start trying to identify your values and trying to define them, you don't have to look very far.

L — We've been working on loyalty by encouraging them to find ways to get along with each other, to stick up for each other when needed. They can't see it right now, because they are too busy sometimes with name-calling and practicing head-lock maneuvers. But there will come a time in their lives when brothers may be all that they have.

D — Duty. Now that's one of the tough ones. It's that mysterious force we hope to see when it comes to doing daily chores and homework. When you're part of the under-10 crowd, it's hard to be a self-starter, to be able to do what needs to be done without being asked.

R — The tough issues of sex, drugs and alcohol can be wrapped up easily in respect. Respect your body by not doing things that will harm it. I'm hoping my kids don't have to tackle these three issues until they are much, much, much older. My most immediate challenge is trying to teach them the tricky aspect of respecting others, and their property. We've worked for years to get them to share; now we have to teach them to respect someone who doesn't particularly want to share the new toy just purchased with their own, hard-earned money. Show respect for the youngest? Ha. Maybe if we step up our efforts and start playing tape recorded reminders while they sleep.

I also have to throw the word "tact" in here with respect. We've been throwing our nonsmoking value at them since, well, since forever. Every now and then we have to reinforce that it isn't polite, respectful, tactful to point to a smoker in public and yell, "Mom, look! That guy's smoking! That's gross!"

S — Service is another toughie, but ... I think most parents are great models of service. We're used to putting the welfare of our children before our own. We show our children through our actions, even in everyday chores like laundry and cooking. We just need to realize that it may be quite a few years before anyone actually "gets" it.

H — Honor is living up to all of the family's values, or at least bringing credit upon yourself for trying your best. We're trying to teach our guys that everyone is going to have times when he falls short. The important part is being able to see where you went wrong, admit it, and start working on it for the future.

I — Integrity is ranked right up there with duty and honor. Do what's right. Be truthful. If you can only be known for one thing, it ought to be your integrity.

P — Personal courage. This is what we hope they will have when it comes to dealing with peer pressure. It's that quality our kids will need to have in order to live up to any of the values at any given time. We need personal courage as parents to put all of these values into action. We may need personal courage just to bring up the subject of sex. We'll need it when it comes time to enforcing the family rules.

ACS takes note of Military Family Week

Rebecca Welch
Army Community Service

COMMENTARY

Celebrated for more than 30 years, National Family Week is the week of Thanksgiving. It provides everyone a chance to honor the connections that support and strengthen families, both within them and throughout their communities.

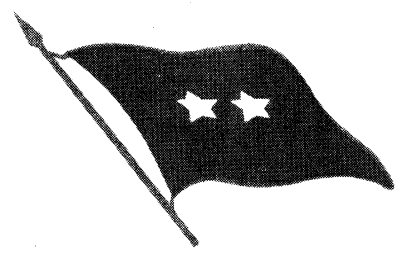
The Army Community Service Family Advocacy Program wants to remind everyone that Military Family Week is celebrated during the Thanksgiving holiday period. We would like to take this time to express our appreciation for the dedication and sacrifices that are made by service members and their families in our community.

In the daily press of activities, which characterizes our modern lives, we often overlook opportunities to express our appreciation to those who make special contributions. To amend that oversight, we take this opportunity to salute all military families.

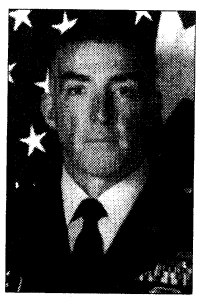
Military families, who live in our community — both on post and off — are separated from their hometowns and friends. They are also frequently separated from each other because of military duties.

We, as civilians, should value and commend every soldier's contribution and celebrate during this week. To show our appreciation, ACS Center will display educational materials for soldiers and family members Nov. 24-30 in Building 2624.

Topics will include: Togetherness Tips for Families, a Family Togetherness Test Sheet, Helpful Hints for Healthy Parenting, Building a Successful Marriage, Military Life Style, etc.



ACS is joining with the Family Counseling Center off post in the Family Walk on the River event Tuesday.



Bring your family to the Riverwalk anytime from 6 and 8 p.m. There will be no registration or sign-in. Just the beauty of the Riverwalk and company of your loving family.

It will be an opportunity to say hello to your neighbors and make a statement that your family is part of this great community. Bring a nonperishable food item and place it in a Second Harvest Food Bank Barrel. The food will help feed many families on Thanksgiving.

For more information, call 545-7517.

CG notes contributions

In recognition of Native Americans and our nation's ethnic and national diversity, Nov. 1-30 was proclaimed "National Native American Indian Heritage Month" by Public Law 102.188, in March 1992.

The theme for this year is "Honoring Life, Honoring Elders, Honoring Heritage."

The strength of our nation comes from its people. As early inhabitants of this great land, the native peoples of North America played a unique role in the shaping of our nation's history and culture. Native Americans have made remarkable contributions to our national identity. Native American soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen have fought heroically in all of this century's wars and armed conflicts. American military leaders as early as the 18th century have recognized the courage, determination and fighting spirit of Native Americans. Today Native Americans continue to carry on their centuries-old warrior tradition-serving with pride, courage and distinction.

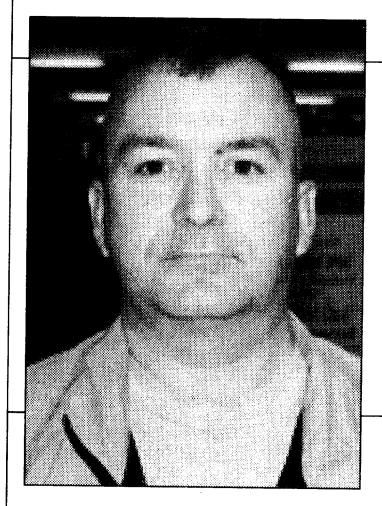
National Native American Indian Heritage Month provides the opportunity to learn more about the history and heritage of the Native peoples of this great land. This opportunity will allow us as a nation to show our appreciation and respect for the Native American traditions and way of life and can help to preserve an important part of our culture for generations to come.

I encourage all personnel on Fort Benning and the surrounding community to participate in this observance through the planned activities of units, staffs, directorates and other agencies.

— Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton
Commanding General

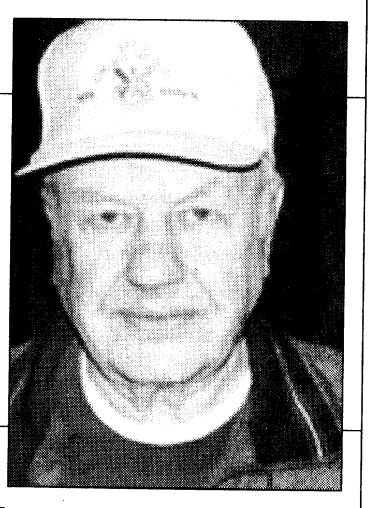
HEADS UP!

Several close calls between vehicles and runners have been reported on Dixie Road and on Sightseeing Road. The chances for a serious accident are also increased by darkness and fog.



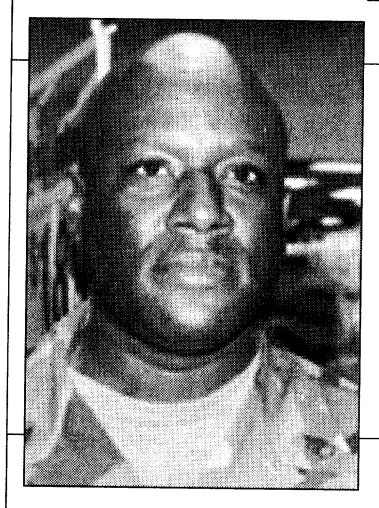
In order to prevent injuries and possible fatalities, commanders are reminded to:

- Select lightly traveled vehicular routes for PT runs.
- Not block more than one traffic lane with troop formations or units. This includes anyone running to the left of the formation.
- Exercise straggler control (use formations and safety gear).
- Have road guards with reflective vests posted 50 meters to the front and rear of formations. During darkness, road guards will carry flashlights. Anyone running to the left of the formation will also wear a reflective waist belt or vest.
- Commanders also need to brief soldiers, family members, and civilian employees on the following:
- Not to exceed 15 miles per hour speed limit during PT hours (6 to 7:30 a.m.) or 10 miles per hour when meeting or passing a troop formation.
- Individual joggers or walkers, at all times, are confined to sidewalks or road shoulders (facing traffic). They must wear reflective waist belts or vests and high visibility clothing, and are prohibited from wearing headphones.



— Col. Charles Cornwell
Chief of Staff

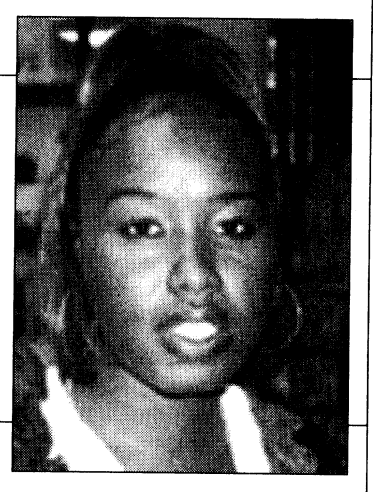
VARIOUS VOICES



What is the most important value you've received from your family or you've shared with them?

Sgt. 1st Class Douglas Philips, CONUS Replacement Center — "Honesty. It leads to integrity and tells what a person is all about."

Roy G. Von Boker, Columbus — "Respect. If you expect respect from other people, you have to be able to return it."



Staff Sgt. Eddie Young, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "Take care of others. As long as you take care of others, it comes back to you, and it feels good to do the right thing."

Lois Crawford, family member — "To love one another while you have the chance. You don't have all the time in the world. They can be taken away at any time."

Pfc. Jessica Brown, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "To be independent. As a female, I shouldn't depend on a man. I should be able to support my family."

Denise Washington, family member — "Perseverance. Keep striving for success so you can do something you are happy with."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Soldier tired of protesters

I am a soldier who puts a uniform on every day to defend Father Bourgeois' right to peaceably assemble and voice different views than my own. However, I don't believe he has the right to disrupt the lives of the soldiers stationed at Fort Benning, which is exactly what continues to do. This weekend's protest caused me grief.

The main gate was closed, which limited my ability to travel freely about my own community. The larger issue was that the entire protest was based on lies and half-truths.

Bourgeois' contention that the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation is the same school as SOA, and that SOA taught torture to Latin Americans, who used that knowledge to oppress their people, is absolute fiction. WHINSEC is a congressionally mandated institute formed with a very specific charter — http://www.benning.army.mil/whinsec/institute_charter.htm.

Not only has Congress required that WHINSEC be formed but also that there be a Board of Visitors to oversee the institute to ensure that it follows the law. I'm quite certain that Col. Richard Downie, WHINSEC commandant, would not do or allow anything to be done that would be in violation of that law. He said at the open house on Saturday, which I noticed Bourgeois did not attend, he was not about to do anything that would put his career or family in jeopardy.

WHINSEC teaches many courses such as the Command and General Staff Officer Course and Captains Career Course, which is identical to the course I am currently in at Fort Benning, with two exceptions: It is taught in Spanish and the Latin American officers receive more human rights instruction than I receive. I most certainly have not been taught torture tactics or anything like it at my career course.

Manuel Noriega was a graduate of SOA and one of the most vicious people in Panama. The fact is, he was there for a short course 15 or 20 years ago, before he became the dictator and drug dealer he is currently in prison for. Bourgeois says that WHINSEC is the exact same school as SOA and there is no difference. Yet he knows that this is not true because I know he has the facts about WHINSEC.

There is only one truth that I know that cannot be denied, although he is welcome to try.

This truth is, Bourgeois' whole movement is based on these lies and that he, a man of the cloth, makes his living off this movement, which is based on lies. The fact is WHINSEC and Downie have bent over backward to present the facts. However, he has steadfastly denied these facts to further his cause.

I would ask Bourgeois to leave this place and take the argument to Washington, D.C., because WHINSEC has a very important job to do, and the protest only hinders the rest of the soldiers and civilians who work and live on Fort Benning, not WHINSEC. Or better yet, Bourgeois should go to WHINSEC and teach what he believes is missing from the curriculum.

— Capt. Ralph Barnes
Fort Benning

Protesters wore out welcome

Without a military, there will be no law and order, and there will be no civil liberties for any nation.

The major purpose of Fort Benning is to provide our nation with a highly skilled force of ground troops, called infantry.

As Secretary of State Colin Powell has said again and again, we can best defend our freedoms by chilling the desires of those who would seek to engage us. A free state can only defend against terrorism, preserve peace and provide security to its people by having a prepared, organized, highly motivated, visible and well-equipped defense capability.

With military training activities, such as are provided by the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation, our military goes far beyond merely providing a force of arms.

We indoctrinate military trainees with a moral force of will and with training in the principles and ideals of our democracy that guided those who founded this great nation. This notwithstanding, if we as a nation so proudly purport to have the answer to our world's problems, then we must first get our act together and promote democracy and peace in our hemisphere.

Just as our U.S. citizens cannot feed the world fish, but can teach it to fish that neither starves, so neither can we personally provide military or police controls for every country.

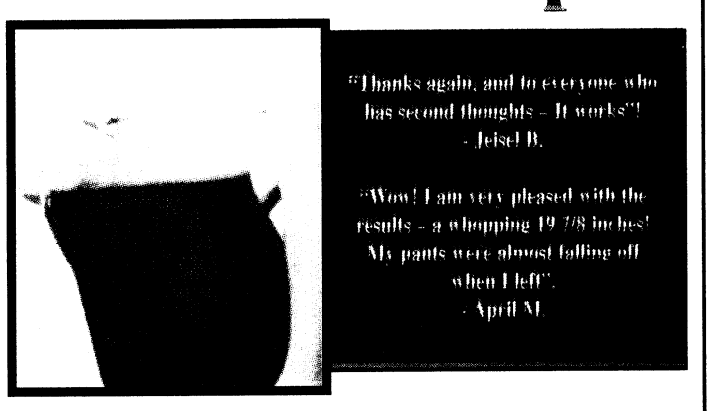
We can, however, share what we have learned about what works and what matters with others, especially our ideals and principles. And that is what WHINSEC is all about.

Father Roy Bourgeois, of the out-of-touch SOA Watch, has refused time and time again to even tour WHINSEC.

The protest is a great expense to the citizens of Columbus — the cost of police protection and local taxpaying businesses having the streets closed to traffic just so these visitors can demonstrate.

There is also another great expense not so immediately visible. And that is the chronic loss of morale of the troops who year after year are at risk of having their faith chiseled away.

The families of deployed soldiers who are back here at home are having their morale assaulted as well by these unappreciative demonstrators, but even more so by their fellow citizens of Columbus, who by their passivity in not coming to their support in the face of this annual invasion are really showing tacit approval of this "cause," irrespective of whether it founded on truth or not. Columbus citizens have been invited by WHINSEC leadership to come and see for themselves what WHINSEC is teaching, and locals can readily go see for themselves.



Deal with the truth directly.

I suggest that Bourgeois and his followers do the same with regards to WHINSEC by going out there, touring the facility and getting updated first hand on the real truth. Someone among us must discriminate against ignorance.

speakers.

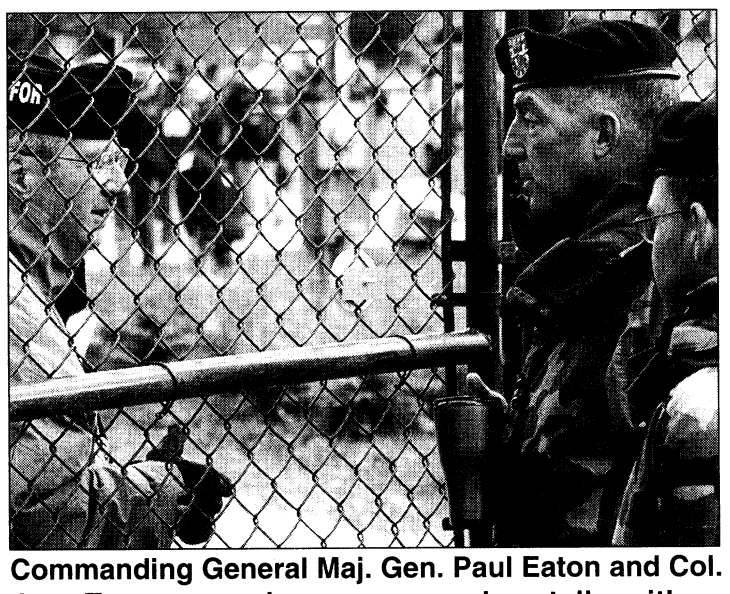
The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation opened in January 2001 as a Department of Defense organization. Its mission is to educate military, police and civilians from the Western Hemisphere in how democratic governments should be operated.

"We're not their target, we're just their meal ticket," said Lee Rials, WHINSEC public affairs officer. "We don't doubt the sincerity of protesters, but the real issues are something they should be taking up with the government.

"They should be protesting in the appropriate venue, like Washington, D.C., or writing their congressmen, not down here outside an Army post in southwestern Georgia."

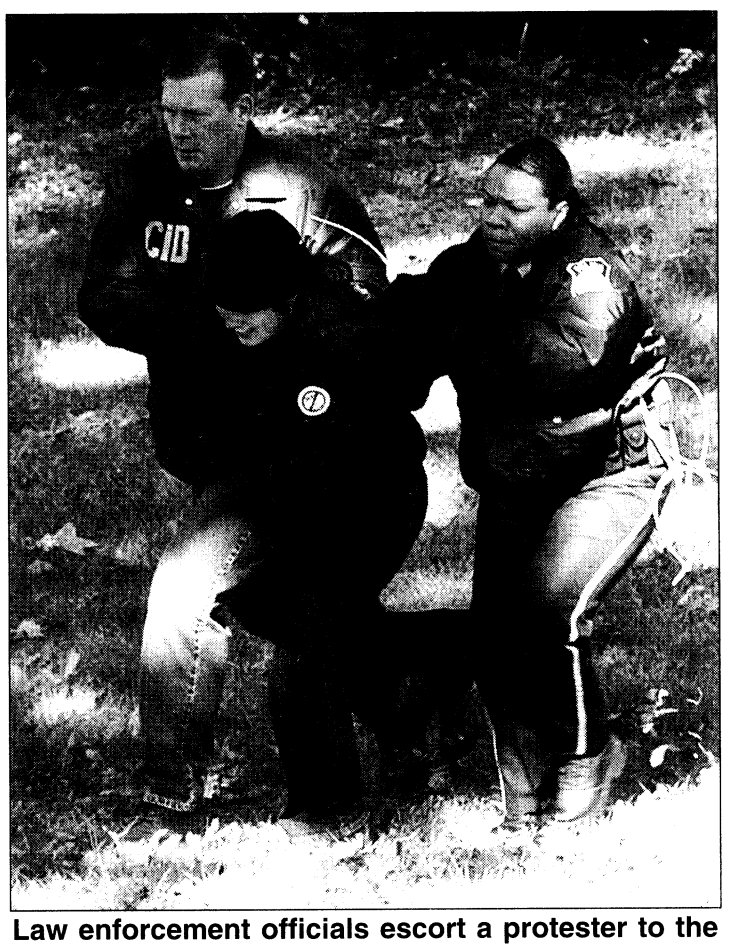
"I'm just here doing my job," said Spc. Jamie Wynn, 988th Military Police Company. "I've only heard things about (the protesters) being peaceful, the ones that want to break the law just come on post and sit down."

"We're following the directive of the U.S. magistrate," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander. "If someone trespasses on post to protest, they are breaking a federal law, and they go downtown under custody of the U.S. marshals."



The culminating event of the protest was a funeral procession with people wearing black shrouds, carrying mock coffins and placing white crosses in the fence with the names of people who died during political upheaval.

"This is America at it's finest," said Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton, commanding general. "Every American has the right to protest, although this movement has been diluted by other organizations."



The crowd was promoting more than just closing WHINSEC. They were demonstrating for and against a variety of issues, from the end of all war to the legalization of hemp.

"When the U.S. marshals put the shackles on, it made a big difference in attitude with the protesters," Eaton said. "I asked an elderly nun who was detained how she was being taken care of, and she said everyone was treating her wonderfully."

During the weekend, 89 people in connection with the protest were arrested. Four were juveniles, so they were processed and released. The remaining 85 spent a night at the Muscogee county jail. They were released after posting a $500 bond.

Fort Benning rally supports school, soldiers

Protest, rally side-by-side, peacefully

Special to the Bayonet©

This year's SOA-Watch protest took a decidedly different turn, as more and more flag-waving Army supporters made a show on both sides of the parade route.

An estimated 300 supporters passed through the "We Love Fort Benning" rally in the parking lot of Express Automotive on the south side of Benning Road, while the Freedom House Christian Service Center quietly served refreshments to law enforcement officials and soldiers on the north side.

"The military is a major part of my business," said Bill Cornelius, owner of Express Automotive. "I've gotten to talk with the soldiers and get to know them, and I'm proud of them. I've always loved the Army. So it's time we show our support."

Cornelius has operated the automotive shop at the Benning Road site for seven years. Business drops drastically during the week of the protest, he said, and that's always been an aggravation.

But this year, he's taking the protest a little more personally. His son, Billy, will join the Army in June.

Billy was 12 when his dad opened the shop. He watched the soldiers come and go and developed an avid interest in the Army.

"He said, from the time he was 12, it was what he was going to do, and there's no changing his mind," Cornelius said. "I'm proud of him. I believe in the Army. You think I'd let him join if I believed the lies they're telling about the school?"

When Miriam Tidwell, wife of Dr. Jack Tidwell, a Columbus physician and former Army doctor, asked Cornelius for permission to rent his parking lot to stage the rally, Cornelius refused to accept money.

"I do it gladly, and wish I could do more," he said.

Law enforcement officers maintained a constant vigil around the rally, encouraging supporters to stay in the parking lot while denying protesters access — a necessary evil they said. But protesters shouted at supporters waving flags and banners and singing patriotic songs.

Just down the road, closer to "ground zero," protesters seemed oblivious to the steady stream of soldiers, mostly in civilian attire, and law enforcement officials who came and went from the Freedom House, "an oasis of support and peace" in the sea of frenzied protesters. The Freedom House, which regularly feeds Fort Benning soldiers, is located in the former SOA-Watch storage building.

"We're pro-military and anti whatever's going on out there," said Bob Ingram, who operates the center with his wife, Becky. "We do support their right to protest, but we have a right to take care of our soldiers."

Pfc. Josh Ost, a 29th Infantry Regiment soldier, took a break at the Freedom House. He and several of his buddies attended the protest out of curiosity.

"A lot of them are oblivious as to why they're here. I went on their Web site to learn what they're about, to hear their side, but when you talk to them, they're not willing to hear your side. They just expect you to listen," he said.

His friend, Spc. Jonathon Alvarez, also of the 29th Inf. Reg., shrugged off any real concern about the SOA-Watch movement.

"They're mostly just young college kids. It won't last. They'll grow up, get a job, dress normal and vote Democrat."

Institute opens doors

WHINSEC gives tour to protesters

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Fort Benning and Columbus officials speculate the annual SOA Watch protest is losing its focus, if not its momentum.

"It's different this year," said Columbus Mayor Bobby Peters. "It seems to me, the numbers are down and it's losing its emphasis. It's more about foreign policy than WHINSEC."

Though the number of protesters who attended Saturday's open house at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation was up this year — more than 300 — the number who attended Sunday's rally outside the post's main gate was down. A SOA Watch spokesman said more than 10,000 protesters were on hand for the event, but Columbus police officials put the number at nearly half that.

One can't help but wonder if the increase in one has a direct correlation to the decrease in the other, as "more and more of (the protesters) are taking time to educate themselves on both sides of the issue," said the Institute's commandant, Col. Richard Downie.

Downie and Gina DiNicolo, a contractor for the Army Public Affairs Office in Washington, D.C., led a series of four one-hour sessions Saturday, inside the Institute's Pratt Hall. After a brief explanation of the school's mission to prepare leaders for the hemispheric challenges of the 21st century, namely counter-narcotics operations, antiterrorism, natural disaster relief and the interagency cooperation of military, law enforcement and civilian organizations, the protesters were introduced to a panel of school officials, instructors and students.

As the protesters, mostly college students, asked questions and the panel responded, DiNicolo repeatedly directed the discussions back to WHINSEC when it veered into the realm of U.S. foreign policy in general and allegations against the former School of the Americas in particular.

"We're here to talk about WHINSEC," DiNicolo said.

But a high school guidance counselor from Ohio doggedly pursued the subject of SOA.

"How can we clear up the disconnect between the people in here and the thousands of people outside the gate? There has to be a truth telling," he said. "Tell us why SOA has been replaced by WHINSEC. If you really want to cut with the past, admit what the past was so we can believe in what WHINSEC is."

DiNicolo agreed that it's imperative to address the past if the Institute wishes to move forward.

"I think that's the bottom line for a lot of people," she said. "When allegations surfaced, they weren't addressed and they grew and grew until the swell of public opinion demanded answers.

"Yes, we're willing to agree that former SOA graduates were linked with these atrocities in Latin America. But look closely. Of the 63,000 graduates, less than 1 percent were accused. Less than half that were convicted," DiNicolo said.

"So yes, in answer to your questions, we freely admit there were SOA graduates who went on to do bad things. But we deny that there was a connection between their actions and what they learned at the school years and sometimes decades before. One has nothing to do with the other. The problem was we didn't speak up in time."

WHINSEC is a "new Institute for a new century," and it's time to move beyond the SOA Watch's fixation with the past, said Lt. Col. Andy Stewart, dean of Admissions and Student Affairs.

"The SOA had a Cold War mentality, so the decision was made to close it and open an institute that focuses on 21st century issues," Stewart said.

But what about the "smoking gun," the "training manual that taught torture techniques," a student asked.

Downie addressed that question. Of the 11,000 pages in the manual, there were 26 passages that referred to torture, and each one emphasized the use of torture "as illegal and immoral," he said.

The manuals themselves were distributed to 48 students for supplemental reading — they were never required reading — and not one of those students was accused of human rights violations, Downie said.

The manuals were removed from the shelf when school officials deemed them outdated and inappropriate, long before SOA Watch knew they existed.

So how has the curriculum of the Institute changed, a student asked?

Maj. Tony Raimondo, the Institute's chief of Human Rights Division and a former student of the SOA, said there's "a lot more focus on human rights now."

Each student, whether here for two weeks or a year, must have at least eight hours of human rights instruction. Most get much more than that, he said.

"We're now teaching our students to go back to their countries and teach others to teach others," Raimondo said. "I've never seen so many students as interested in learning and applying what they learn. It's always a positive experience because they're committed to doing the right thing."

Most of the protesters remained amiable, even thanking school officials for allowing them to visit, and agreed to disagree about the effectiveness of U.S. involvement in Latin America.

And that, protesters said, more than WHINSEC, is the real issue.

XM307: Uses 'airburst'

takes away the enemy's ability to hide and delivers killing or incapacitating fire above foxholes, trenches or into buildings, rooms or bunkers, Eaton said.

The XM307 has a laser range finder used to "laze" a target and uses infrared, day, night and thermal optics.

Technological features on the weapon are integrated with a laser range finder that programs a ballistic solution into an ammunition fuse. Then, the soldier re-aims fires, and the ammunition detonates above the target.

After the 25 mm rounds pass the tip of the magnetic barrel, the speed it passed through the barrel is calculated, and the ammunition reprograms its distance to the target and comes up with a solution of when it needs to explode.

"The objective is to give the soldiers the best fighting weapon."

Dave Steimke
Project engineer for General Dynamics

On explosion, it shoots fragments down on targets in covered and concealed positions, Meyer said.

"Airburst allows you to take out a lot of dead space," said Sgt. Denis Rigsby, an antiarmor weapons instructor for 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, who provided General Dynamics feedback on the weapon the following day.

It's important to get information from the people who will be using the weapon, said Dave Steimke, project engineer for General Dynamics.

"That's why we're constantly refining the weapon," Steimke said.

The objective is to give soldiers the best fighting weapon."

Program Manager-Soldier Weapons, from Picatinny Arsenal, N.J., General Dynamics, designed the weapons.

The Dismounted Battlespace Battle Lab and Directorate of Combat Development put the demonstration together.

BCTB: Accelerates classes

he said. "AIT sites will have to accelerate AIT, and some stations will have to accelerate their one station unit training."

Classes will be accelerated to eight weeks from the standard nine weeks by cutting some of the administrative hours and conducting more training on Saturdays and in the evenings.

BCTB leaders are ready to do the mission if the plan is implemented.

"We're prepared to do this next week, if needed," said Cpt. Thomas Rascon, BCTB operations officer.

Three of the four companies needed to train the additional soldiers are already scheduled to begin training on the target dates.

The fourth company will be trained by cadre from a reserve unit, most likely from the 84th Division from Wisconsin, Rascon said.

The 84th Div. was at Fort Benning this summer and conducted three full cycles of basic training.

As part of the plus up, soldiers who were originally scheduled to attend basic training during this time frame will report to Benning and be held until they can be placed into a company conducting the normal nine-week program of instruction.

"We normally fill 235 soldiers per company," Rascon said. "We're going to fill all the other companies at 250 to absorb the folks who get bumped."

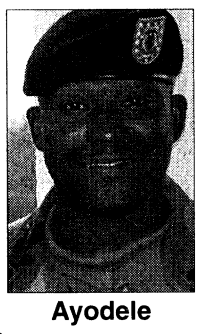
'Citizen' soldiers meet mission

Soldiers describe trail to citizenship

Cara Aidone
Bayonet correspondent



Sitting outside the Main Mall Post Exchange recently, Spc. Erica Kerry Ann Grant and Spc. Tunde Ayodele each had a big grin on their face. After months of paperwork, they — along with 15 other Fort Benning soldiers — became naturalized U.S. citizens at a ceremony at the Immigration and Naturalization Service offices in Atlanta Nov. 8.

"I was ecstatic," said Grant, 23, who was born in Antigua, West Indies, but has lived in the United States since she was 6. "It was unbelievable."

Grant, who works as a radiology technologist at Martin Army Community Hospital, is waiting admission to the Army Medical Department Program to become a commissioned officer — a goal that provided the impetus to finally become a U.S. citizen.

Ayodele, 33, came to the United States from his hometown of Ibadan, Nigeria, in 1997 after winning a so-called "Green Card lottery" there.

Shocked but delighted, Ayodele, a mechanic with 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, decided to take his chances and moved to Brooklyn, N.Y., where he worked as a security guard while attending the School of Nursing and Physicians there.

Ayodele

"At that time, we were having a political problem in Nigeria," Ayodele said. "So the chances of graduating (from the university) were very slim. I was in college for a good five years but never graduated because of the political problem."

An election that was happening during that time was causing chaos in the entire country.

He joined the Army after talking to a local recruiter and reported to Fort Knox in January 1998 for basic training. There, he said, he had no idea what to expect — and even brought all of his belongings with him.

But, "It was a great experience for me," he said.

Yet despite President George Bush's executive order signed July 3 that expedited citizenship applications of noncitizen soldiers, Grant and Ayodele — who submitted their applications in April and September 2001, respectively — both waited anxiously through what they say was a mostly frustrating experience in dealing with the INS.

"My file was sitting in a box somewhere," Grant said.

But when Nancy Guyer, military human resources assistant, stepped in to help, Grant and Ayodele started to see some progress.

Both soldiers' paperwork had problems, Guyer said.

When Grant applied for citizenship, she filed with her parents and not as a soldier, complicating the INS' background check. As for Ayodele, he had somehow obtained two Social Security numbers.

"We made arrangements to expedite the process (for them)," Guyer said.

Guyer worked closely with a contact at the Atlanta INS office to bump up the process.

"They're soldiers," she said. "They serve our country, and they should be citizens. They're entitled to it."

Soldiers' applications can take six to 12 months to be processed, said Sgt. Junea Oates, who works in the Office of the Adjutant General, Directorate of Military Personnel.

"And our record so far is very good," she said. "If their chain of command is behind them, it can be mailed, start to finish, within three days."

But as for Guyer, Grant and Ayodele said they owe her a world of thanks.

"She's awesome," Grant said.

AG employee dies

Cause of death under investigation

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

A Department of the Army civilian died Monday on his way to his routine morning workout at Infantry Hall.

Bob Killingsworth, chief of student officer branch, Adjutant General, lost consciousness around 7 a.m.

Military police responded to a call of a possible cardiac arrest, and CPR was performed on Killingsworth until emergency medical services arrived.

He was transported to Martin Army Community Hospital where he was pronounced dead at 8:23 a.m.

The funeral was Thursday at St. Mark United Methodist Church, Columbus.

Killingsworth was a comical guy, said Angela Cokeley, Trainee and Student Division, AG.

"He was a consummate professional, always ready and willing to help either his fellow employees, or officers who were attending courses at Fort Benning," said Danny Wilson, chief of Most Efficient Organization, AG.

"He stayed involved in the business of taking care of soldiers and his subordinates."

Officers would come by all the time and offer to take him to lunch, said Chief Warrant Officer Kenneth Frech, chief of Trainee and Student Division.

Killingsworth, 55, worked with officers as they went through training at Fort Benning.

He'd make sure their records and certifications were updated, Frech said. He cared for the needs of soldiers.

"Captains and majors who he helped out when they were lieutenants would come by years later just to say hello to him," Frech said.

"He was greatly appreciated by our military establishment."

He will be missed, Cokeley said.

Killingsworth worked at Fort Benning for more than 35 years.

He is survived by his wife, Pat.

The cause of death is under investigation.

We're talking turkey here. Lots and lots of turkey.

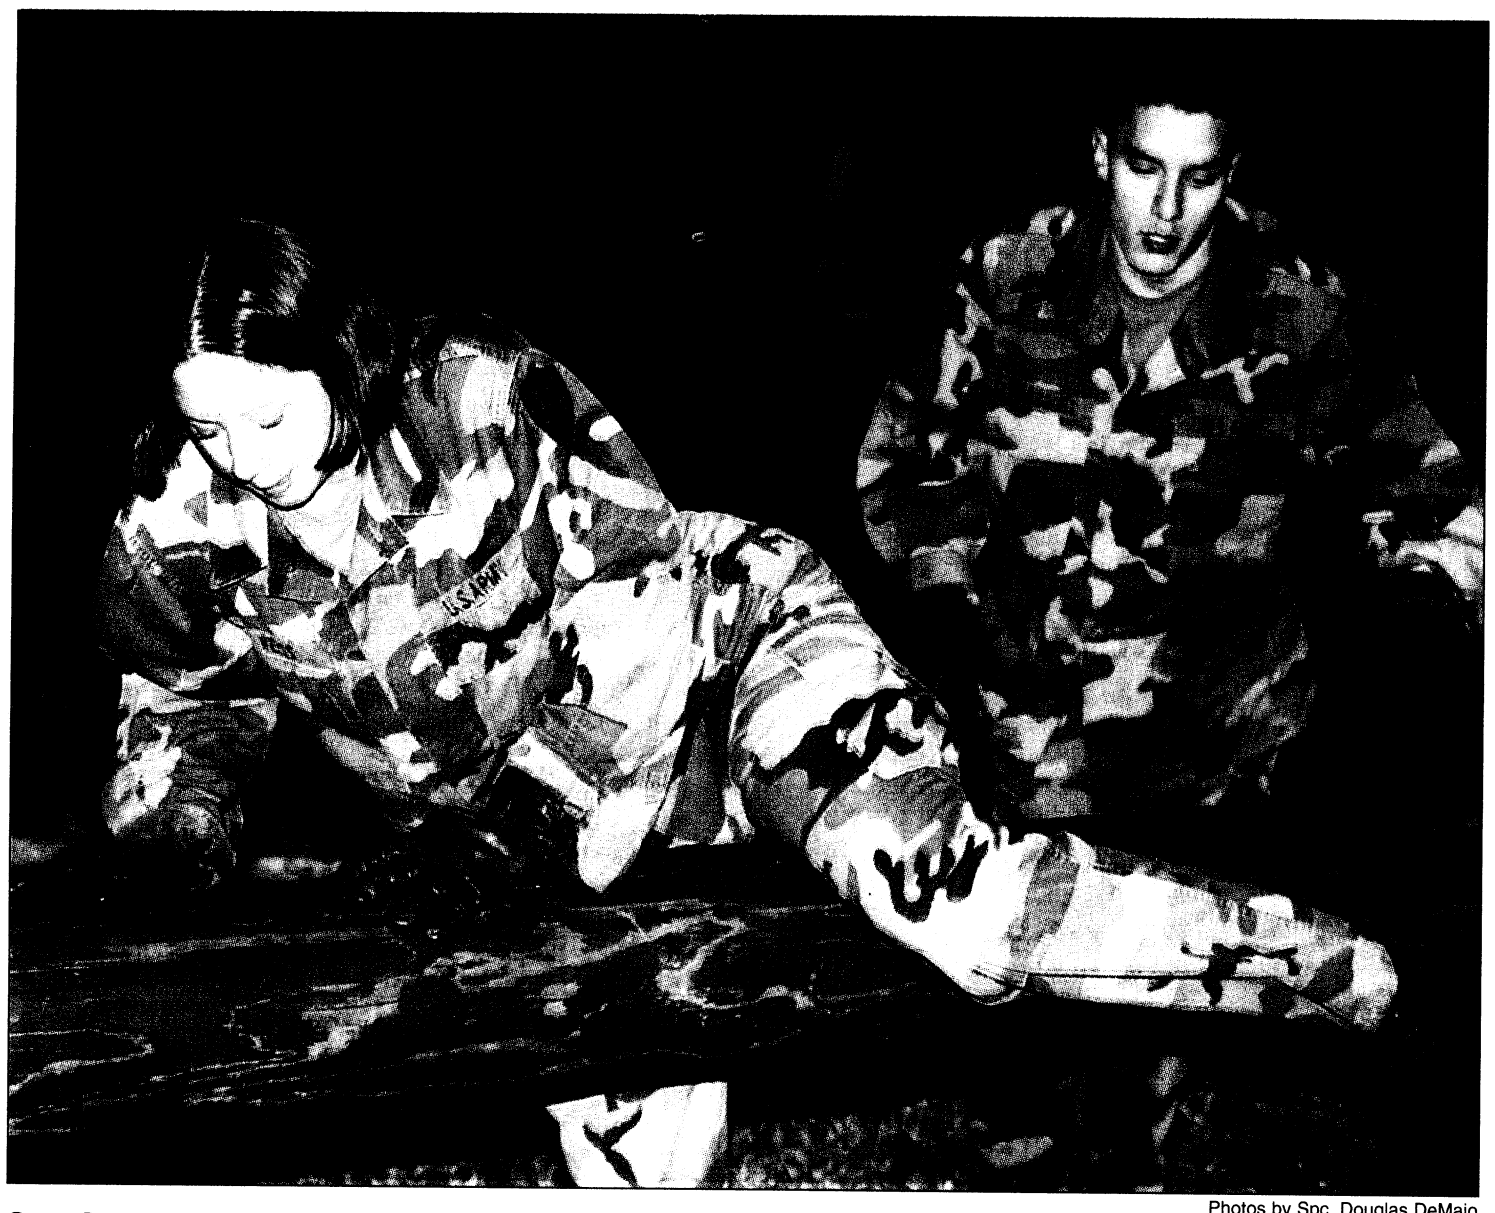
James Jenkins, the contracting office representative for Fort Benning's Food Services estimates at least 300 turkeys will be served to more than 14,000 soldiers at the post's 19 dining facilities on Thanksgiving Day.

"At least 15 at each facility, or a whole herd," Jenkins said.

But don't dally and expect to find dinner waiting. Though most facilities will maintain regular hours, between 11:30 a.m. and 2 p.m., they vary from facility to facility.

And some facilities will be closed Thursday. The Airborne, Follow Me and 36th Engineer Group facilities will serve Thanksgiving dinner a day early.

"It's just best they check with their respective facilities to see when they'll be open," Jenkins said.



The Freedom House Christian Service Center, just outside the post's Main Gate at 2400 Benning Road, will also be serving up turkey and all the fixin's. The meal will be free to soldiers. Dinner starts at 3 p.m., but the center will open at 10 a.m. for "fellowship and football," said Bob Ingram, who runs the center with his wife, Becky. Ingram offers a free ride to and from the center. Call 221-5730.

The NCO Academy Dining Facility, Building 2760, will be serving soldiers and retirees 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. The meal will cost $5.25 for adults and $4.55 for spouses of E-4 and below. Reservations are required. Call 545-7970.

Gibson Dining Facility, will be serving a Thanksgiving meal from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Directorates finish Downing Mile

Variety, mud motivates soldiers

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

Every Friday morning, nearly 100 soldiers from 13 directorates of A Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, fall in at zero dark thirty for company physical training.

Nov. 15 was no different, except for the BDUs and boots the soldiers were wearing.

"Variety in PT keeps soldiers motivated," said Spc. Derek Snyder, with the Command Group. "I don't feel like so much of a robot when there's change in routine physical training."

Company 1st Sgt. Thaddeus Maholick and 1st Lt. Stacy Picard, company commander, came up with the idea to negotiate the obstacle course and run the Downing Mile, a mile-long dirt path on Main Post filled with obstacles for cross training.

"I believe the training went extremely well," Picard said. "Our soldiers were motivated, challenged, and it gave them a one-of-a-kind experience in A Company."

The objective of the training was to build endurance and esprit de corps and to physically challenge soldiers, Maholick said.

"The only goal we set up front is for everyone to finish," Picard said. "It was incredible to see all of the soldiers motivated and excited to have made it through.

"I'm certain there were a few soldiers who were wary about the training when we began. Still, everyone finished and did a great job."

It wasn't just the soldiers in the directorates who were having fun.

"As infantrymen, we're expected to get dirty," Maholick said. "In this job, we don't get to do it as often as we'd like."

Command Sgt. Maj. Donavon Watts and Maholick led by example when they jumped into a mud pit and high crawled under barbed wire.

"To see those two jump in there was a great motivator," Snyder said. "It shows soldiers the character of our leadership and the uniqueness of our unit."

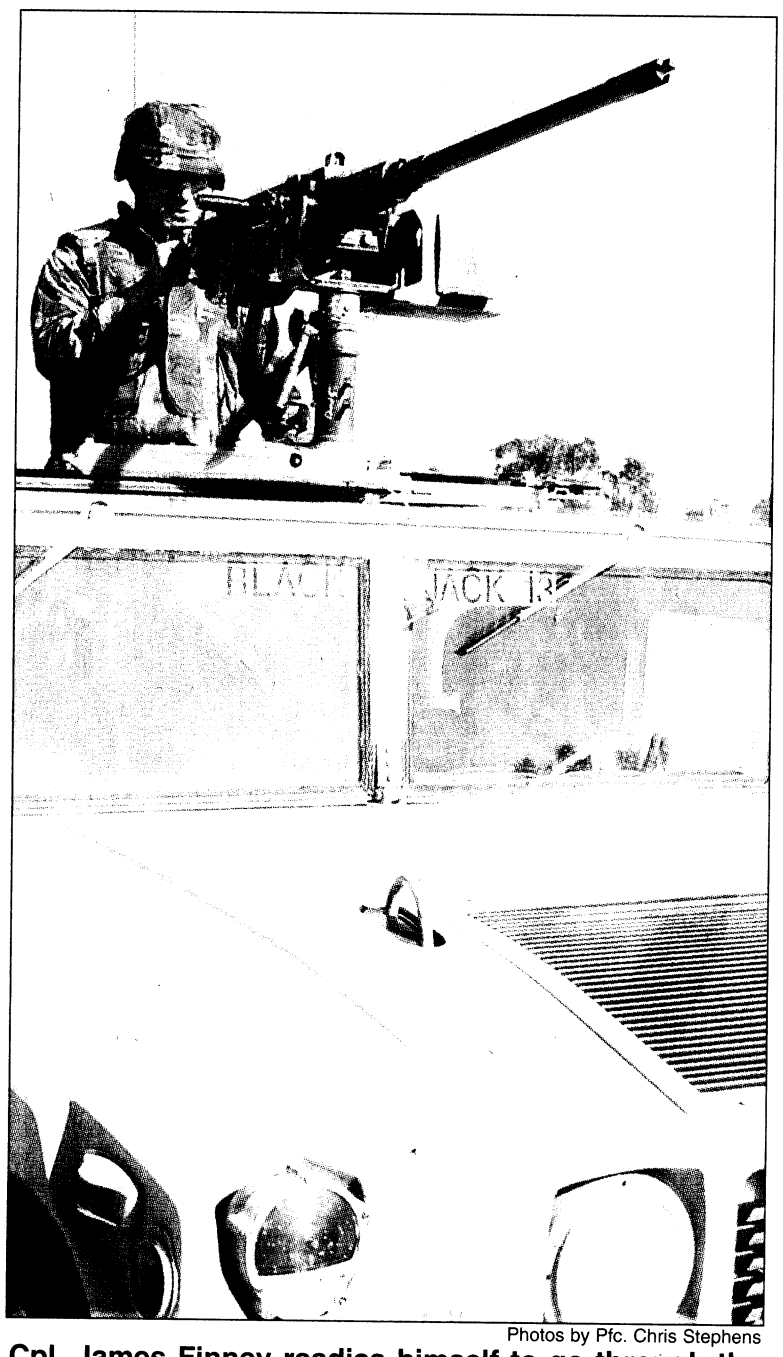
Soldiers went through the course in buddy teams just like Watts and Maholick did.

"Today we reinforced the importance of working as a team and never to leave another soldier behind," Picard said. "We challenged our soldiers to overcome their insecurities and rely on their battle buddies. It's essential for soldiers to rely on them in battle."

All soldiers must be physically fit to accomplish any mission, at any given time, regardless of their occupational specialty, Maholick said.

"This training caused our soldiers to dig deep and push themselves beyond their normal physical limits, which is a necessity on any battlefield," he said.

The first sergeant and commander came up with a great plan to replicate obstacles and build muscles soldiers would normally use in battle, Snyder said.



For example, some of the movements that challenged soldiers were climbing, jumping and crawling under obstacles.

"It brought our soldiers together as one unit, which isn't always easy because their directorates are spread out across Main Post," Picard said.

Soldiers qualify on humvees

On today's modern battlefield, many different types of weapons are used to destroy the enemy. Whether the weapons are shot from the ground, by remote control or from a vehicle, every soldier wants to be one of the ones with, "one shot, one kill."

Soldiers from 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, are no different, although their "one shot, one kill," has a different meaning for them, said Sgt. Sherman Jones.

"As a cavalry scout, our goal is to gain target acquisition and kill the target in the shortest time possible," Jones said. "Our job is not to be seen, so the faster we kill the enemy, the less time we are facing the brunt of their firepower. So in a way, that's our 'one shot, one kill.'"

Soldiers from the unit participated in pre-qualifications on humvees at Hastings Range Monday. The qualification period consists of encountering four engagements during the day and four engagements during the night.

The first two engagements included two targets coming up at the same time. The only difference between the first and the second engagement is that the first is a defensive engagement, and the second is an offensive engagement.

A three-man crew fires rounds down range to qualify.

"The first two (engagements) on the qualification course are the toughest," said Cpl. James Finney, gunner. "It sets the tone for the rest of qualification."

After the first two engagements, the driver receives directions from the truck commander to move forward to the next position to engage the next target.

The third engagement is against moving targets, while the fourth engagement is the same, but it requires the team to don their protective masks.

"It's different firing the .50 cal with the gas mask on," Finney said. "It's harder to be accurate."

After engaging all of the targets, the team, which consists of the truck commander, gunner and driver, returns to home base to learn the results of their score.

"The crews are graded on crew commands, vehicle ID and different drills," Jones said.

"I'm pretty happy with the way we qualified," Finney said. "I only used about 80 of the 125 rounds, and I felt as though I destroyed all of the targets.

"We really worked together as a team and got through it as a team," he said. "The teamwork aspect of it is huge. Each member has a vital role on this three-man team, and we depend on each other to do our job to complete what we hope is a successful mission."

At the end of the qualification day, the soldiers talked about what may happen to them in the very near future as far as being deployed.

"For all we know, we can be sent to the Middle East to blow up some things or many things next week," Jones said. "As cavalry scouts, we need to always expect the unexpected and be ready of it."

"The term, 'one shot, one kill,' may mean something different to us in laymen's terms, but in truth, it all means the same as that of an infantry soldier," Finney said. "Our main goal as a whole is to get rid of the enemy as quickly as possible."

Group trains for possible mission

Conducts predeployment exercise

As tensions mount in the Middle East, and the threat of terrorism continues to increase, so does the possibility of deployment for American soldiers.

For many soldiers, the idea of being sent to the dusty streets of some far-off country to fight in the war on terrorism is only a passing thought. However, for the 36th Engineer Group, the possibility of deployment is a constant reality.

"I really don't know if we will be called up, but I'm getting myself ready just in case," said Pvt. Christopher Delavern, 104th Transportation Company. "If they do send me, I want to be prepared."

Preparation was the word of the day Nov. 14 as the group conducted its third predeployment training day of the month.

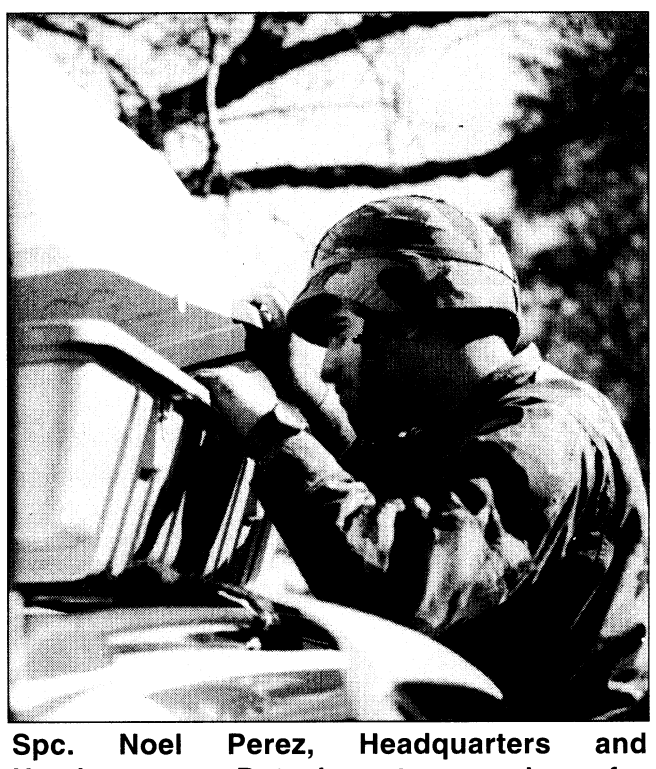
Soldiers spent the day improving their ability to operate under less than accommodating conditions, such as those experienced in a deployment situation. They traveled from point to point, receiving instruction and some practical training at each station.

The training covered ways to avoid many of the hazards a support unit may face in a deployment situation.

"The 36th Engineer Group is highly diversified and highly deployable, so this sort of training is very important to our mission," said Staff Sgt. Darrell Denson, operations sergeant with Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment. "We conduct this training regularly just to stay familiar with the tasks, but with the possibility of deployment increasing, we've decided to go ahead and knock it out so we will be ready if they call on us for the war effort."

Soldiers searched personnel for weapons, booby traps and sensitive items such as maps and documents. All can be paramount to an operation, said Spc. Derek Neeley, 104th Transportation Company.

They also conducted security checks on civilian vehicles that had weapons planted in them, ranging from a pistol to an antitank weapon.



"The soldiers did a good job finding all the weapons," said Staff Sgt. Abraham Abrazado, 104th Transportation Co. "In a deployment situation, the soldiers need to know how to conduct force protection. They need to protect the compound."

The soldiers also got a refresher course in moving under direct and indirect fire as well as reacting to artillery.

"As combat service support, we don't do too many patrols, but if the vehicle breaks down, we could find ourselves in a situation where we need this sort of training," said Sgt. Jermaine Toney, transportation specialist with HHD.

All of the soldiers have had some degree of training in these areas during basic combat training. The monthlong predeployment training program is designed to refresh the knowledge they already have and teach them to work together, said Pvt. Mona Thomas, 608th Ordinance Company.

"We're ready for the call."

AAFES gives 'cash back'

Swipe card, get cash fast, easy

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Have you ever stood in a long line waiting to get your check cashed? Have you ever wondered if there could be an easier way to get money rather than waiting all day in those long lines?

The Army and Air Force Exchange Service implemented a Debit Card Program to provide soldiers a faster, more convenient alternative to writing checks.

"This is an outstanding program," said 2nd Lt. David Williams, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "It's much easier than to go through the hassle of writing a check."

The program allows soldiers and their families an opportunity to pay their bill more efficiently with a debit card than with a check.

"The main goal is to increase the service to the customers," said Donald O'Reilly, general manager of the Fort Benning Post Exchange.

"Right now, the only way to acquire cash back is through a check. But the debit card program will allow soldiers and their families to get cash back by just swiping a card."

However, there is a limit on how much money can be given back during a transaction.

At the Main Mall Post Exchange, $100 is the maximum amount of cash back people can receive. At the smaller branch exchanges, $50 is the limit.

"This is also on a funding available basis," O'Reilly said. "I foresee no problem with it at the main exchange, but at the smaller exchanges, it could be."

The convenience of the new system will shorten the time a soldier or family member will spend in line trying to get cash back, he said.

Benning to stop indoor smoking

MWR complies with federal policy

Pfc. David Foley

All of Fort Benning's Morale Welfare and Recreation buildings will be smoke free Dec. 7 in compliance with federal policy.

In an effort to protect federal employees from exposure to tobacco smoke in the workplace, President Clinton passed a bill stating that smoking would be banned in all federal buildings as of Aug. 9, 1997.

However, the Morale Welfare and Recreation department was granted an extension until Dec. 7 of this year, in light of their unique position.

Many of the MWR buildings were not equipped with outdoor smoking areas and would need time and money to construct separate smoking areas and still provide the smoking patrons with the same hospitality they ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Float across a lazy river, watch the sun set from a rooftop, dance the salsa on a starry night.

The Army's Theatre BRAVO will bring these images to life in a 70-minute show called "Lift Up Your Hearts, America" Nov. 29-30 at Fort Benning.

The only show open to the community is 7 p.m. Nov. 30 at the Sand Hill Recreation Center. The show is free.

"The performing arts — theater — is a perfect vehicle to carry the message of hopes, dreams and love," said Tim Higdon, Theatre BRAVO producer for the Army Entertainment program. "We (Army Entertainment staff) feel that, as a country, we are in a period in which we need to focus on our sense of pride and patriotism and what we cherish about America."

Fort Benning residents who are eager to get into the holiday spirit should not be disappointed with this year's offerings.

The holiday season kicks off at 5:30 p.m. Dec. 3 with the annual tree and menorah lighting ceremony at the Field of Four Chaplains, adjacent to the Infantry Center Chapel. The Infantry Band will provide holiday music followed by a chorus concert by post school children.

At 5:30 p.m. Dec. 4, everyone is invited to a Christmas visit with Santa at Riverside, home of post commander Maj. Gen. Paul and P.J. Eaton. The Fort Benning tradition includes a number of family activities led by volunteers from Faith Middle School and the post Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program.

The family activities include face painting, Christmas karaoke and a reading corner. Two groups from Faith, the dance team and the choral group, "The Entertainers," will perform twice during the evening.

"It's going to be three hours of fun and games," said Linda Laine, Youth Services director. "We did this last year after a break of about five years, and we had more than 1,000 people attend. We absolutely expect to have that many again this year."

Children will be able to personalize their own link for the festive chain to decorate the Riverside Christmas Tree.

Those interested in venturing off post for holiday activities can participate in the third annual Night of Lights at 6 p.m. Dec. 5. along the Riverwalks of both Columbus and Phenix City.

Sponsored by Keep Columbus Beautiful, the Night of Lights offers a twinkling winter wonderland to capture the magic of the holiday season. As part of the event, the Infantry Band brass quintet will perform holiday music in the Phenix City Ampitheatre.

The Infantry Band is also offering a free concert at 5:30 p.m. Dec. 8 at the River Center.

Previously held at the Three Arts Performing Arts Center, this is the first holiday concert held in the new River Center, said 1st Sgt. David Ordway of the Infantry Band

Ordway said the band started practicing holiday music a month ago to get ready for their busy concert schedule.

The band will also march in the Bi-City Parade at 10 a.m. Dec. 14.

Band members will travel around post and perform four Christmas Carol Concerts in the housing areas. Concert times are 6 to 7:30 p.m. on the following dates:

- Dec. 10 — McGraw Manor,
- Dec. 12 — Custer Terrace,
- Dec. 17 — Bouton Heights and Davis Hills,
- Dec. 19 — Main Post and Upatoi Terrace.

Rounding out the holiday events is the Airborne Tower Lighting ceremony at 3:30 p.m. Dec. 19. Following a holiday sing-along with the Infantry Band, Santa will jump from the 250-foot tower.

Shoppers hoping to find the perfect gift for that special someone won't need to look very far.

The Benning Bazaar will offer a wide variety of items from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Dec. 7 at the Officers' Club. Admission to the bazaar is $2.

The Fort Benning Officers' Spouses Club counts on the proceeds from the bazaar to fund the Scholarship and Welfare Fund.

Shoppers will also be able to purchase tickets for chances to win a quilt or any of more than 50 door prizes

Event coordinator Renee Doyle said the vendor list continues to grow as the date of the bazaar approaches. In the past week, Doyle said, she registered 13 new vendors and sent out information to another five.

"I'm hoping we'll have 80," she said.

Although the main focus for the event is on handcrafted items, the bazaar will also offer items from a small number of commercial vendors as well.

Doyle said the OSC is also looking for volunteers to work the day of the event to help the bazaar run smoothly.

OSC member Jeanna Larsen moved to Fort Benning in May and immediately got involved volunteering at the Bit of Benning shop.

"I like to help out as much as possible," Larsen said. "These events are fun".

Larsen set up the contract with Tot Town that will provide child care for volunteers which will be paid for by the OSC. Volunteers who would like to make reservation for childcare should contact Larsen by Dec. 4 at 494-2777.

Tot Town will be open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. the day of the bazaar. Prospective shoppers needing child care may also take advantage of Tot Town services.

"Shoppers can make their own reservations with the center by calling Tot Town directly," she said, but they must pay for their own child care based on the arrangements they make.

Free finance class offers soldiers investment advice

Second class investigates equity investing

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

This is the second part of a six part series that explores what soldiers learn at the financial readiness course.

During the first class of the series, soldiers and federal employees were shown the importance of retirement investing and ways to find money to invest by building a sturdy financial base.

The second class offered information about equity investing.

"Before deciding on any particular investment, you have to do your homework," said Patti Herron, finance counselor. "First you have to decide how great of a risk you are willing to take, and then you need to investigate the investment possibilities that fall into that category."

The investing portion of the class was divided into two categories: ownership and loanership.

Ownership focuses on investing in property, such as a house, land, collectibles or a private business, whereas loanership focuses on investing in stocks, bonds, commodities and other business investments.

People use both to help reach financial goals they set.

The next step is to match them with equity investments, then read about those investments and compare them to at least three other specific products. This way investors compare apples to apples.

Another consideration is risk.

People who aren't willing to take a big risk and want to save for retirement should consider investing in the Thrift Savings Plan by dividing their investment among low risk funds such as the government and bond funds, Herron said.

People who are willing to take a chance in order to get a larger return should consider investing in small companies mutual funds or buying individual company's stock, she said, and keep in mind that historically, stocks have out-performed all other investments.

"The two most important things to know about investing are: Start early and keep your investments diverse," she said.

But before investing in any business, investors should actually investigate the company themselves to see if the service they provide is something that people will want, Herron said.

The class also covered ways to learn about stocks by reading magazines, newspapers, Web sites, prospectuses and other written materials.

"When investing in stocks, especially if they are moderate to high risk, diversity is the key to success," Herron said. "If one company goes through a slump or takes a nosedive, you won't lose your entire investment.

"When investing in property, you need to be sure the purchase cost and maintenance fees don't outweigh the value of the property," Herron said. "If you plan on making a profit off the property by renting it out or selling the crops or minerals on the land, be sure the cost of upkeep isn't more than the revenue."

Investing can be complicated, she said. The role of the financial readiness course offers a wider variety of investment advice than any of the classes soldiers are required to take at their first duty station, and it gives the student opportunities to ask questions about anything they don't understand.

"This class has really been an eye opener," said Master Sgt. Carmen Vazquez, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. "I've been to all the mandatory finance classes and didn't learn nearly as much as I have in this one.

"This course is what younger soldiers need. It should be mandatory," she said. "Someone who joins the Army without too much debt can take this advice and be set for life."

Smoking: To stop in MWR facilities beginning Dec. 7

had experienced before the transition.

"Rather than look at this as a problem, we decided to take the opportunity to enhance the areas outside the buildings," said Al Gelineau, director of Community Activities. "Instead of building the typical bus stop style smoking area off in the parking lot, we've made decks with tables, which enable the patrons to enjoy a meal, the beverage of their choice and a smoke in a casual, outdoor environment."

Each of the smoking areas cost around $10,000 to construct except for the one at the Benning Brew Pub. "It cost a bit more," Gelineau said.

"At first, we were afraid it would be bad for business and really hurt us, but after talking to other businesses that have made the transition, we are optimistic," Gelineau said. "I think it's a positive thing. I believe a lot more families will come to the bowling centers and restaurants now that they don't have to worry about their children being around all the smoke.

"We've started a marketing campaign to attract more of the family crowd while striving to accommodate the smoking patrons as well."

This is a significant change for the MWR and soldiers will have to adapt, said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander.

"Those who smoke will feel their lives change. In fact, everyone will feel their lives change — some for the better, some for the worse — but it's a federal law that we have to accept."

BRAVO: To put on show Nov. 30

To that end, Bonnie Daniels and Liz Bell Young, participants in the Army's community theater program, used their playwriting and choreographic talents to assemble a montage of songs, writings and poetry that reflect Americana and is designed to leave audiences uplifted.

The cast members, two signal systems specialists, a tank gunner, a combat medic and a mental health counselor, have set aside their military duties for six months to bring smiles, laughter and maybe even a tear or two to the faces of soldiers, families and deployed troops from Georgia to Germany.

Selected from live auditions in October, sergeants David Yoder, Maylan Thomas, and Hali Joi Picciano, along with Spcs. Vanessa Bradchulis and Armando Correa bring their vocal, dance, theatrical, leadership and soldiering skills to this production with enthusiasm and a new appreciation for the hard work needed to stage a show.

"Our show goes through a variety of emotions," said Bradchulis, from Vilseck, Germany. "It's a rainbow of colors, so I think the biggest challenge was being able to change (characters) quickly."

"You have to have discipline and patience," said Sgt. Kenneth Carden, a Lakeridge, Va., resident assigned to the U.S. Southern Command in Miami, Fla.

"If you don't have discipline and patience in the theater, you're not going to get anywhere, because you have to be able to take criticism from people."

Carden is responsible for the lighting and audio systems that support the show and also serves as an understudy to the performers.

The six soldiers are assigned to the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center, the agency responsible for more than 200 Morale, Welfare and Recreation programs, of which Army Entertainment and this production is one.

Music in "Lift up Your Hearts, America" includes songs by Billy Joel, James Taylor, Carly Simon, Roger Miller, Woody Guthrie and George M. Cohan. Threads of poetry by Robert Frost and Maya Angelou and the dramatic word by Sam Sheperd, John Steinbeck and Rita Dove are woven into the fabric of the show. Original monologues incorporating the life experiences of cast members alternate with snappy choreography, funny improvisation and tender moments.

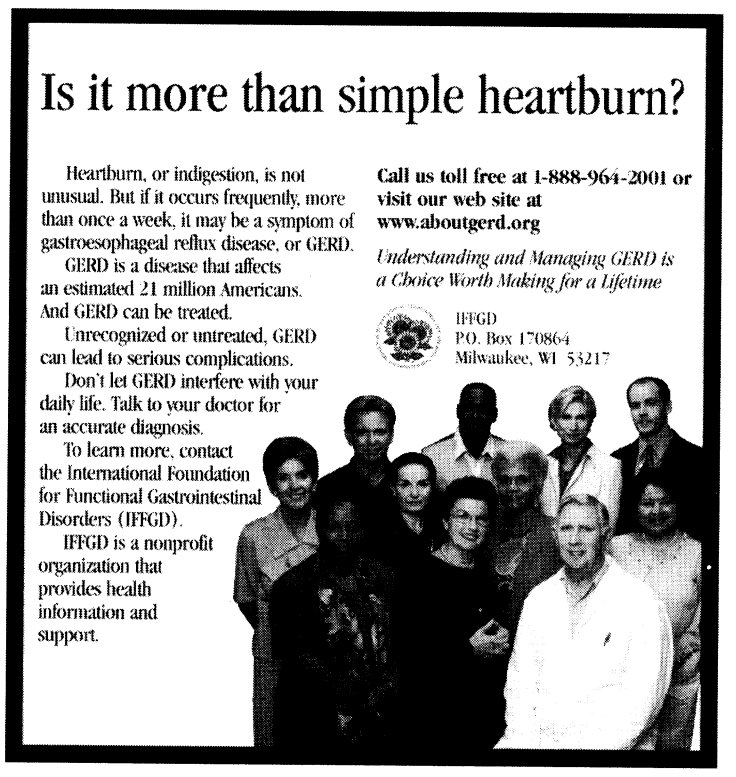
"My monologue — that's me, that's from my life," said Picciano of Walter Reed Army Medical Center's dental clinic. "The part about living in a campground for seven months: I really did that. As a soldier, I'm performing for soldiers, reminding people what they're out there fighting for. When we go overseas, we're reminding soldiers what they're doing and why."

"The 'Roadside America' segment is a hoot," said Higdon. "We highlight some of the unique and sometimes bizarre attractions you find along the highways of America, such as the world's largest ball of twine and the Spam Museum."

When soldiers perform music from Big River, they share Huckleberry Finn's thoughts about the mighty Mississippi, bringing the audience along to share what the river means to him. There are familiar patriotic tunes as well as the new rhythms of city life.

CFSC/Army Entertainment staff members Sgt. Tobin Atkinson, stage manager, and Sgt. Robert Anderson, NCOIC, complete the ensemble, which is entirely self-contained, travels light and can set up and perform under any conditions.

They will tour from November through March, staging more than 80 shows at 40 locations in 16 states in the U.S., Germany, Italy, the Balkans, and, if conditions allow, the Middle East. With less than six weeks of rehearsal, the troupe is pumped up and ready to hit the road after opening weekend.



"I hope by being part of this production, I can show soldiers that there are people out there working hard, actually concerned about more than that soldiers just have food and a roof over their heads," said Sgt. David Yoder, whose home is in Breezewood, Pa.

"Soldiers are Americans, and they're important people as well as just being soldiers. I hope I can take that with me and let them know that."

AAFES: Accepts cards

"It's just like an ATM machine but with someone behind the counter giving you the money," O'Reilly said.

"A simple swipe of the card, and people can have the money directly taken out of their checking account with no worries on a returned check or credit limit on their credit card," O'Reilly said.

"Instead of worrying about sufficient funds in your account, a person will be able to know at the checkout counter, because if it's not there, it will not accept the card and some other means of payment will be needed to complete a transaction."

The program will increase security of soldiers' bank accounts by providing them the security of putting in their pin numbers and the amount of cash they want to receive back.

"It's great to have the security of putting the information in myself," Williams said.

"That way I ensure the information entered is correct."

There is another benefit to the change, O'Reilly said.

"Annually, AAFES contributes $2.4 million to the community," O'Reilly said.

"With the retailer and handling fees being lessened, more money will go back into the community, which will help programs such as Morale, Welfare and Recreation, and Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers."

O'Reilly said AAFES worldwide expect to have the program in effect by Thanksgiving.

"Almost all of the AAFES located on Fort Benning have been implemented with the new system," O'Reilly said.

'There are just a few systems we are still working on, and we should have all AAFES locations, postwide, at full capabilities soon."

Students set records

Program emphasizes fitness

During the week of Nov. 5-8, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and White Elementary School collaborated and implemented the first "Focus on Fitness" week.

WHINSEC volunteers manned four stations as the children rotated through the stations during their regularly scheduled physical education classes.

Events included the standing broad jump, one-lap run, Frisbee disk throw for distance and obstacle course.

Staff Sgt. Giorgiana Williams-Johnson provided the motivation at the broad jump station and produced a school record 6-feet-7-inch long jump by fourth-grader Orlando Collazo and 5-feet-6-inch effort by fourth-grader Cortney Parker.

Sgt. 1st Class Julio Miranda's one-lap station resulted in a tie between fourth-grader Brandon Stephenson and fifth-grader Phillip Nelson. Miranda's guidance and encouragement produced a 41 second lap by both Brandon and Phillip.

Maj. Eric Heberlig and Sgt. Jean-Pierre Lopez directed the Frisbee disk throw for distance and motivated fifth-grader Levi Lewis to a record throw of 100 feet.

The obstacle course produced incredible results with record runs by Phillip Nelson (10.98 seconds) and Taylor Bentley (12.24 seconds). Master Sgt. Michael Valdez's enthusiasm and technique demonstration proved to be a key factor in the children's success and excitement during this activity.

"Focus on Fitness" week culminated with an awards ceremony Friday morning with certificates presented by Col. Richard Downie, WHINSEC commandant, and Dr. Tommy Lee, White School principal.

It was a great week for the children of White and the role models from WHINSEC.

Art, essay contests open to military kids

Community and Family Support Center

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The Armed Services YMCA seeks both artists and readers for two annual contests.

Art Contest 2003, in its eighth year, seeks artwork from children of military members in kindergarten through sixth grade depicting their active-duty, Reserve or Guard families.

Top prizes are $500 U.S. Savings Bonds and the winners' artwork is used on posters for next year's Military Family Month.

Children of Defense Department and Coast Guard civilians may enter in an honorary category.

The deadline for the contest is Jan. 27.

With the goal of promoting reading among children, the seventh annual Armed Services YMCA Essay Contest is open to first through 12th grades, with prizes up to $1,000 bonds.

Children and teens family members of the armed services — active-duty, Reserve, Guard and retired — and civilian employees of the DoD and Coast Guard and families, can enter the contest.

Essays should be on any subject related to reading. Deadline for contest entry is March 17.

Full guidelines for the contests can be obtained from the Armed Services YMCA web site www.asymca.org — or by e-mailing essaycontest@asymca.org ; or by calling (703) 303-9600.

Since the Civil War, the Armed Services YMCA has provided educational, recreational, social and spiritual programs to military members and their families. Celebrating 141 years, the Armed Services YMCA, an affiliate of the YMCA of the USA and headquartered in Alexandria, Va., has more than 80 program locations around the world.

Newspaper program starts at White School

White Elementary School

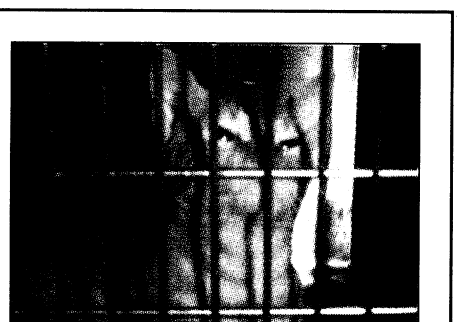
The Newspaper In Education program at the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer is partnering with White School to familiarize students with the newspaper and increase test scores on standardized tests.

"Part of my responsibilities are designing appropriate activities for all grade levels that support what the students are already learning," said Kimberly St. Clair, Ledger-Enquirer.

"For instance, in Michelle Reasoner's fourth-grade social studies class, we worked on averaging the high and low temperatures of international cities," St. Clair said. "The first-grade classes of Anne Anti and Ann Lucas identified shapes in the comics, and Mel Vaillant's second grade students found compound words.

"It was fun for the students, and it's always rewarding for me when they understand concepts and get excited about reading," St. Clair said. "I've been working with Newspapers In Education programs for about 10 years now, so I've seen and worked with lots of school systems, and Fort Benning is one of my favorites. The children are so attentive, so they learn easily. It reminds me what a really fun job I have."

Newspaper In Education at the Ledger-Enquirer is a nonprofit organization that works with school systems in the 28 counties the newspaper serves.



"I was fortunate to be a presenter at the Fort Benning Social Studies University in October, and several teachers from White attended my sessions.

"I was glad to hear from Dr. Tommy Lee that the teachers thought the program would be valuable in the classroom, and that they're willing to share their students with me," St. Clair said.

St. Clair will visit White every month throughout the school year, working with grade levels kindergarten through fifth.

Praising God nourishes soul, relationship

Jesus taught to give thanks everyday

Chaplain (Maj.) Shawn Connors
29th Infantry Regiment

As the Thanksgiving season is upon us, I look around and ask the question, "Are people truly thankful?"

I feel that as a society, we truly do not take time from our busy schedule to reflect on how good God has been to us during the year. The Psalmist David wrote in Psalm 95:2, "Let us come before his presence with thanksgiving, and make a joyful noise unto him with psalms of praise."

David is telling us that we should be ever so grateful to God for blessing us.

God does not have to bless us with anything. He does not owe us anything, but because he loves us, he blesses us.

I feel this is the attitude we must have when we come into the presence of God.

REFLECTIONS

We should be forever grateful for the many things God has blessed us with, so as the season approaches, let us let him know. I feel we take so much for granted or do not even consider the many simple things of life.

How many of us thank God for waking us up every morning or even giving us breath to breathe or eyes to see or ears to hear or feet to walk?

There are so many everyday blessings that we are aware of, but for some reason we neglect to thank God for them.

The word "thankful" is used 138 times in the Bible. Why do you think this is so?

It is because the biblical writers realized that God was the "one" that was blessing them everyday.

David wrote in Psalm 69:30, "I will praise the name of God with a song, and will magnify him with thanksgiving."

God wants all our praises. He wants us to realize that it is he that is blessing us everyday. God created us to be a blessing to him and to fellowship with him.

What does it mean to fellowship with God?

It simply means to spend time in his presence. This was the reason why you and I were created. God wants to hear from us.

God wants us to be a blessing to him as well as give blessings and thanks back to him.

He wants us to magnify him, which means "to lift him up."

The Apostle Paul writes in Ephesians 5:19, "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."

Have you thought why Paul wrote those words?

I feel he was trying to tell us that as we praise God in spiritual songs, we are making melody in our heart, and if the heart is happy, we are happy because truly God wants us to be happy.

Are you truly thankful? If so, you must let the Lord know by praising, serving and singing spiritual songs in your heart. We must be thankful people today because tomorrow is not promised to us.

CHAPEL NOTES

Carols by Candlelight — The fourth annual Carols by Candlelight will be presented at 7 p.m. Dec. 8 at the Infantry Center Chapel.

The program will present music of the holidays. In addition to choral and youth group presentations, Cy Dietrich, music teacher at Dexter Elementary School will sing, as will Joy Dillow of Columbus.

The program will last about an hour and is free to the public.

Protestant Women of the Chapel — The PWOC meets at 9:30 a.m. Thursdays in Custer Terrace Chapel on Craig Drive.

The program each week includes a time of music and worship, fellowship and study.

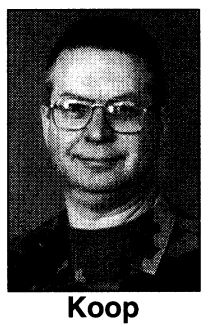
Child care is provided. For more information, call Krista Moore at 323-0128.

Club Beyond — The Chapel youth group sponsored by the Protestant Chapels meets from 4 to 6 p.m. every Sunday. All teens are invited to the programs, which include group study, recreation and worship.

Many special activities are provided on other days. The club meets at the chapel youth center beside Gowdy Baseball Stadium.

For more information, call 545-2359.

Sunday School — Protestant religious education classes for children and adults are at 9 a.m. Sundays at White Elementary School. Transportation from the housing areas is available and watch care is provided.



For more information, call 545-4715.

Why buy the cow?

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

Linda wants to get married, but Bob only wants to move in. Linda feels she has to be intimate with Bob, or he will leave. She is contemplating premarital sex in order to keep the relationship.

Bob isn't sure that he wants to be married. Some may say that he has a fear of commitment. Others might say it's the Peter Pan Principle. He doesn't want to grow up. Or it could be that Bob feels women are here on earth to fulfill the sexual appetites of men. Like the song says, "I want you, I need you . . . two out of three, ain't bad."

Koop

Bob's reasoning goes something like this: "Linda, I'm fond of you. I want to be with you. I don't want to go through a divorce if we decide to break up. Let's live together to find out if we are meant for each other."

Why women are willing to accept such incredibly insulting statements as love is beyond me. To think a woman needs to be intimate prior to marriage to keep the relationship is bad thinking. Grandma was right, men won't buy the cow if they can get the milk free.

Good morals protect women from being the prey of selfish men. The Bible helps safeguard women from predatory men by promoting faithful commitment and agape love.

The missing ingredient, the third element of the song, is love. Love is more than sex. Love is devoting yourself to providing safety, security, shelter, sustenance and health for your partner. Without commitment, love becomes self-centered and narcissistic.

Do you feel pressured to give in to the demands of your lover? Free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail raymond.koop@benning. army.mil.

He lifted me up out of the slimy pit, out of the mud and mire. He set my feet upon a rock and gave me a firm place to stand. He put a new song in my mouth, a hymn of praise to our God. Many will see and fear and put their trust in the Lord. — Psalm 40: 2-3

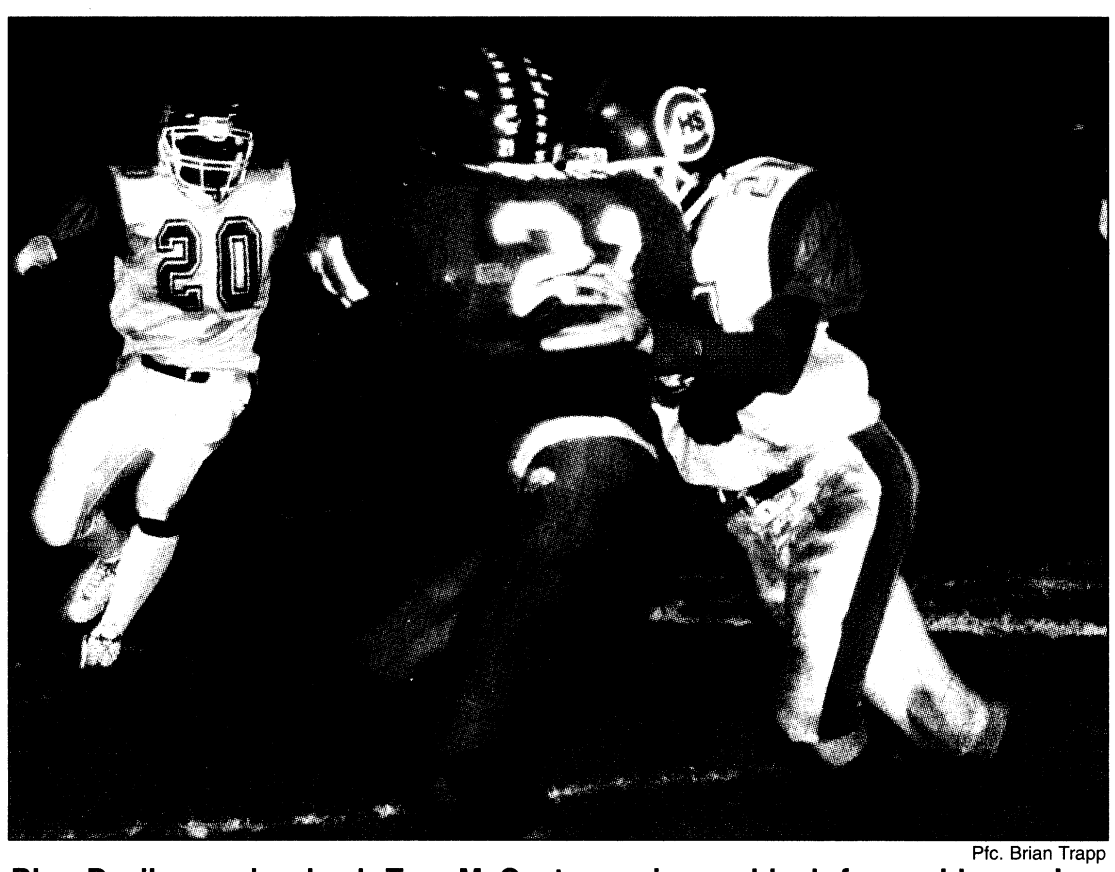
Columbus ends season with victory

Team looks forward to next season



Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Columbus pulled out their fourth win in the final game of the season against Hardaway with a 35-32 victory on a rainy Friday night.

"This game meant a lot to us," said Paul Cates, Columbus head coach. "There's been a big rivalry with Hardaway for a long time, and this is the win we needed to turn the corner for next season. Our record is 4-6 this year, but it's a step in the right direction for this team."

In the final minutes of the fourth quarter, the Columbus Blue Devils drove their way down the field, but Hardaway Hawks' defensive back, Doug Hardman, broke up a pass in the endzone. The Blue Devils gave the ball up on the Hawks' 18-yard line.

"The game turned into an offensive slug fest," Cates said. "We did really well, and the defense came up with some big stops."

Pfc. Brian Trapp

Blue Devils running back Trey McCants receives a block from wide receiver Mike Sims to gain a few extra yards on a running play.

After Columbus forced a fumble and regained possession, they began to work their way back to the endzone when the Hawks were called for roughing the passer, putting Columbus in a first and goal situation. Blue Devils' Ric Bishop pushed his way into the endzone regaining the lead at 35-32.

Then Columbus held the Hawks from making a first down to end the game.

"We caught a couple breaks on defense, and they really stepped up holding the Hawks on their last drive," said Bishop, who rushed for 133 yards and passed for 75.

The game ended with the same quick tempo that was there in the beginning when Columbus scored early with a quick drive down field for 7-0 lead.

"We knew we had to work hard. We did in the last few games, and the talent was there. Now, we have the confidence to come back big next year," Bishop said.

The Columbus defense shut down the Hawks and forced a fumble on the 50-yard line but failed to capitalize on the turn over.

The Hawks pushed their way back down field but had to settle for a field goal.

On a fourth and three situation, Columbus drew an off sides call for a first down, which gave Columbus the chance to drive in for another touchdown.

"We were firing on all cylinders and executing really well," Bishop said. "Everyone played their A game."

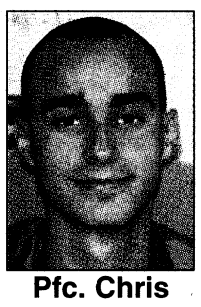
Hardaway answered with seemingly unstoppable running back, Kelvin Moore, as he broke away and rushed for nearly 50 yards for a touchdown on the first play of the Hawks position, leaving 14-10 on the scoreboard.

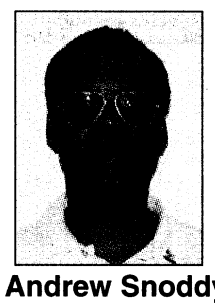
Blue Devils' Bishop came back and rushed for a big gain, and he was dragged down on the 7-yard line. On the next play, he finished what he started when Bishop rushed in for a touchdown with less than a minute left in the half to extend the score to 21-10.

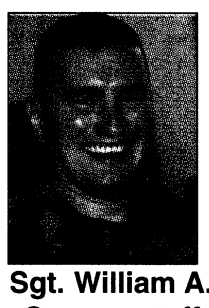
In the start of the second half, the Hawks made a rally for the lead and started it when running back, Johnnie Jackson, rushed in for a touchdown at the end of drive, and snagged a toss for the two-point conversion.

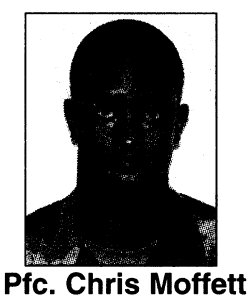
Later, the Hawks' Webster rushed in three yards to score, and Hardaway took the lead for first time in the game 23-21.

"Bishop played outstanding, he did a great job in both passing and rushing," Cates said. "He was a real leader in this game."









Bishop used his leadership skills to put more points on the board to retake the lead.

Columbus answered back with a touchdown pass to Rory Carter, bringing Columbus back to the top with 28-25.

Then Hardaway took the lead back, only to lose it in the final minutes of the game.

"We showed what we can do," Bishop said. "We're going to be practicing a lot during the off season. It will give us a chance to set a good example for the underclassmen and a good pace for next year."

Geisinger GENERAL PSYCHIATRIST
Geisinger Medical Center
Geisinger is seeking a BC/BE general adult psychiatrist as a colleague in a medically oriented practice. Join an expanding 7-member tertiary care group practice in the Danville/ Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, area. Our main facility, Geisinger Medical Center, is a 437-bed teaching hospital with 75 specialties. This very diverse practice contains a good deal of variety. It encompasses inpatient psychiatry with 50 beds, consultation/liaison psychiatry, a busy outpatient practice, adult and adolescent partial programs, and community outreach. We offer unique opportunities for teaching within our multi-disciplinary mental health team. This is a very flexible position, as our new partner will have the opportunity to incorporate creativity and ideas into the group practice, blending the needs of the group with the talents/interests of the applicant.
Central Pennsylvania offers a scenic, secure lifestyle near the Pocono Mountains. There are many colleges and universities that lend a blend of culture and numerous activities to the area. We are just off I-80 and only 2-to-3 hours from New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, D.C. Geisinger offers a competitive salary and excellent benefits, including generous vacation, 3 weeks CME with a CME stipend, and full medical malpractice coverage. AAE-M/F/D/V- 0207.mn

Central Intelligence Agency

Security Protective Officers

The CIA is currently seeking applicants for the Agency's Security Protective Service. Responsibilities will include the protection of Agency personnel, facilities and information through the enforcement of Federal laws and Agency regulations. Once hired, new appointees will be required to attend training at the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center.

Applicants must be United States citizens and have a high school diploma or equivalent, plus a minimum of 5 years of continuous work experience. Applicants must be at least 21 years old, physically fit, possess a valid driver's license and qualify for a Top Secret security clearance. Applicants must also have at least one of the following:

- Military experience (Military Police or Marine Security Guard preferred)
- An associate's or bachelor's degree in criminal justice or a related field
- Police or significant security experience

Because of our national security role, applicants must be able to successfully complete medical examinations and security procedures, including a polygraph interview.

The CIA is America's premier intelligence agency, and we are committed to building and maintaining a work force as diverse as the nation we serve.

Please apply online by visiting our website at www.cia.gov, or send your resume to: Recruitment Center, L100 LF7, Dept. AMIC1102, Washington, DC 20505.

Big rig to replace 'cattle car'

Melissa House

This is the first of several trucks that will soon transport soldiers training at Sand Hill.

New troop transport offers comfort, safety

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Move over "cattle cars" — there's a new troop-mover in the motor pool.

The new system was developed specifically for the Army to transport soldiers during basic combat training by Lifeline Shelter Systems of Columbus, Ohio.

Called a personnel carrier van, the system consists of a tractor and an 80-passenger trailer that has a climate control system, interior lighting and numerous safety features not found in the old cattle cars.

Fort Benning received the first van earlier this month. Three more are due at the end of January, and the remainder will be filled by fiscal 2006, said Ron Johnson, installation transportation officer. The new vans, at a cost of $283,000 each, replace the aged fleet of cattle cars.

Welcome home!

Pfc. David Foley

Spc. William Rich gives his daughter, Shanaya, a kiss after the welcome home ceremony Monday. Rich is one of nearly 800 soldiers who composed Task Force 1-15. The soldiers were deployed to Kuwait for six months as part of Operation Desert Spring, a regular rotation to maintain security and stability in the gulf region.

CFC reaches goal

Community members give thousands

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

The Combined Federal Campaign exceeded its monetary goal before it ended Friday.

"We reached our goal of $550,000 thanks to all your hard work and dedication," said Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander. "This is an accomplishment we can all be proud of.

"The money we collected these past weeks will provide an invaluable benefit to countless families everywhere."

The mission of the CFC is to support and to promote philanthropy through a program that is employee focused, cost efficient and effective in providing all federal employees the opportunity to improve the quality of life for all.

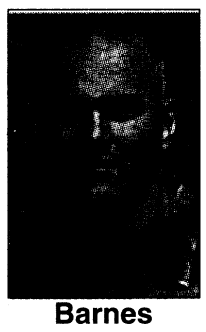
Fort Benning employees helped the campaign perform its mission well, said Capt. Robert Ashbaugh, post CFC project officer with 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"I am relieved because I didn't think we'd make it, but as usual Fort Benning continues to surprise me," Ashbaugh said.

He had doubts because numerous unit deployments and reduction in force letters curtailed contributions.

"Still, we did an outstanding job," Ashbaugh said.

"It shows people, down deep inside, are good and willing to help others."



Fort Benning employee saves soldier

Special to the Bayonet©

After a brush with death on a Fort Benning back road, one post soldier is grateful for the simple things in life, like a quiet Thanksgiving dinner at home with his wife and kids.

Sgt. 1st Class John Barnes suffered a heat stroke during a routine PT run Oct. 4 on Sightseeing Road by Lawson Army Airfield. He was found unconscious shortly before 7 a.m. by an AAFES employee on her way to work at the exchange headquarters office on Indianhead Road.

"It was pitch black out. I came around the curve, and he was right there lying in the road," said Colleen Belcher, who now works in the Main Mall's visual merchandising department.

Barnes

"I'm just glad we got to him in time. If someone had come around that corner fast, they would've never seen him."

Apparently others did see Barnes. Passersby, including one of Belcher's coworkers, saw him crawling along the side of the road and assumed it was part of his PT.

"I guess that's understandable, the Army does some strange training," Belcher said. "But me, I stop for anything, just to be sure."

Belcher found Barnes unconscious and lying in what she called a "pushup position," with his upper body cradled on his forearms "as if he'd just laid down, not fallen."

Belcher

She was getting out of her van when another vehicle pulled up. Spc. Mark Baldwin, a mechanic with the 498th Medical Company, helped Belcher carry Barnes to her van. The two took Barnes to the Airfield's medical center, where they were met by an ambulance.

Barnes was taken to Martin Army Community Hospital, where his condition — with a body core temperature of 107 degrees — was determined to be critical. He was flown to Eisenhower Medical Center in Fort Gordon, Ga. There he stayed for five days, having developed kidney and gall bladder complications.

Barnes remembers very little about the incident, only showing up for formation feeling a little out of sorts and heading out for a solitary run around the airfield shortly after 6 a.m. He doesn't remember trying to crawl to safety or lying down in the middle of the road.

"I was feeling a little sick the night before, and I probably didn't drink enough water either. I let myself get a little dehydrated," he said.

"The next thing I remember was waking up in the hospital and the chaplain was standing over me."

Today, Barnes is back at work as an equal opportunity counselor with the 75th Ranger Regiment, awaiting

COMMENTARY

People never cease to amaze me. We sold our house last year and moved out Dec. 21. That day was a recycle day in our neighborhood, so I left our blue bin on the curb, just knowing that the new folks would use it for recycling as I had done.

Guess what? It's still there where I left it 11 months ago. In my mind, it's become an icon for what ails this nation, to include some of the people who live on Fort Benning.

I'm referring to the whiny butts who complain to the Community Life NCOs or at the mayors' meetings about The Bayonets stacking up in neighbors' yards.

Sometimes they stack up because there is no one living there. At other times, they stack up because the resident doesn't have the energy or inclination to pick them up.

"I ain't gonna read it, so why pick it up."

The reason we pick things up is to maintain the appearance of our housing area. Now I know it must take a great deal of effort to pick up a newspaper on someone else's yard and carry it to the recycle bin. But I also know that if you are in the Army, there is a minimum fitness standard you must meet and bending over and picking up a newspaper doesn't exceed that standard. I also know that if you've been in the Army long enough to get quarters, you've been on a few police calls during your time, so you know the drill.

Still, I agree you shouldn't have to do this, even though it won't hurt you. We are asking the carriers to not drop off newspapers where others are already on the ground.

But bear in mind that when the carriers come around at oh-dark-thirty, visibility is at a minimum, so they are not always going to see these papers.

One solution is to stop making home deliveries. We'd do a survey to see what people thought about that, but we don't believe we'd get good feedback since filling out a survey and getting it back to us takes energy and initiative. Probably the most effective survey would be to stop delivery and wait to see if anyone complained.

OK, I'm being sarcastic here, but you whiners are making me lose faith in the men and women who serve our nation.

So here's what I'll do. If there are more than two newspapers on your neighbors' lawn, call me — 545-3283 — and I'll come out and pick them up for you.

Season inspires thanksgiving

COMMENTARY

It's turkey time again and that question arises once again — what are you thankful for?

There are many people in my life and many things that have happened to me that I am thankful for.

The biggest thing I am thankful for are my parents. Growing up it was never easy on them to support me and my sister. They always made ends meet, but we never lived in luxury. My clothes were usually bought at Sears or Wal-Mart, and they were usually high-water jeans and plain color shirts.

My first car was a hand-me down that my parents bought brand-new in 1988. There I was in 1999 with the same car, after my sister got ahold of it. It looked like it had been through a demolition derby five times over. Everything on that car, except for the frame and the engine, had been replaced. But it got me where I needed to go during high school. Though it visited the shop every once in a while, overall the engine ran well. I suspect it is still going strong today, with 400,000 miles on it.

Because of not getting expensive stuff and always buying inexpensive stuff, I appreciate a lot of things more in life. It has taught me to save my money and spend conservatively.

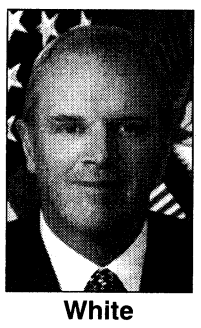
The other thing I am really thankful for is my sister.

We always fought as children. What brother and sister don't? But, no matter how much we fought, no matter how much we said we hated each other, we were always there for each other.

My sister is still the only one I can tell anything to. Even though I am really close to my parents, she has always given me the advice I've needed and made sure I got through it OK.

Since I've joined the Army, I've learned not to take what you have for granted. There are soldiers who will celebrate this holiday season without their loved ones for the first time.

I know that no matter what happens to me, where I go or what I am doing, my family will be with me. Maybe not physically, but mentally, spiritually and emotionally.



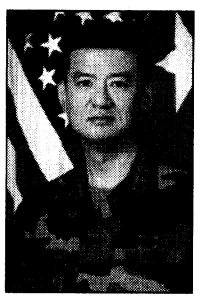
THANKSGIVING

Holiday time to reflect on blessings

Thanksgiving is a time for the Army family to pause and enjoy a day of rest, relaxation and fellowship. As families and friends gather, Thanksgiving also provides an opportunity to show our gratitude for the blessings we enjoy in a free and prosperous nation.

Soldiers, Department of the Army civilians, veterans, retirees and all of their families can take pride in the fact that their service and sacrifices preserve the privilege of living and working in a free society characterized by the highest ideals of liberty.

Almost 140 years ago, Abraham Lincoln reminded Americans, "We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of heaven, we have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity; We have grown in numbers, wealth and power as no other nation has ever grown." Those words were spoken in 1863 during the Civil War. Our nation emerged from that conflict stronger than ever before. And today, as the Army fights the war on terrorism as part of the joint team, those words still ring true as we enjoy the privileges and unparalleled freedoms that soldiers have helped secure for more than 227 years.



White

And so on this special day, we offer our appreciation to you, the soldiers and civilians of the Army, who serve our nation with a level of devotion and selfless service unequalled in any other profession. As you willingly step forward to defend the American people from all enemies and animate the values and principles that we hold dear — loyalty, duty, respect, selfless service, honor, integrity and personal courage.

Thanksgiving is also a time for families to join in celebrations and reunions. Families have long provided strength and values to our soldiers, our Army and our nation.

We know we do not soldier alone. For just as soldiers sacrifice and dedicate themselves to honorable service, their families also sacrifice and make invaluable contributions to the well-being of our Army and our nation. We give you our thanks and a grateful nation thanks you as well.

We are proud of the Army family. And so to all of you, the dedicated men and women of the U.S. Army — uniformed and civilian — we offer special thanks for the difficult and dangerous work you are doing for the citizens of our great nation.

Shinseki

We wish all of you and your loved ones a safe and happy Thanksgiving holiday.

— Honorable Thomas E. White
Secretary of the Army

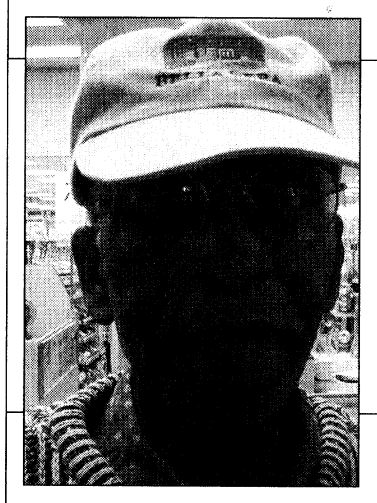
— Gen. Eric K. Shinseki
Army Chief of Staff

Myers

Thanksgiving is a uniquely American holiday dating back to colonial times. Each November, Americans gather family and friends to give thanks for the many blessings we enjoy as citizens of this great land.

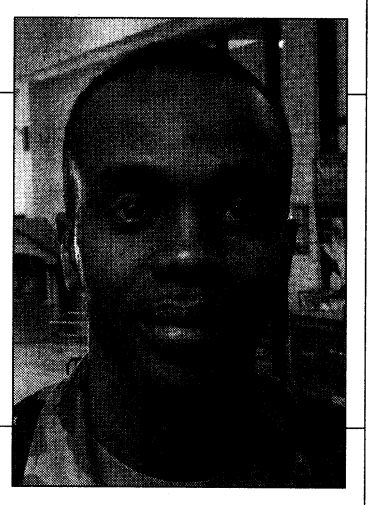
This past year has been exceptionally poignant in realizing all that America is and will remain. We are blessed to live in a nation that values freedom and the sanctity of life.

And as we rally friends and allies from around the world to eliminate terrorism, we must carry those values with us. We should also give thanks for the brave American men and women — soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines, coast guardsmen and DoD civilians — active duty and reservist alike — deployed around the world. Many are spending yet another holiday away from their homes and families. They are protecting the freedoms that every American treasures so dearly. Their dedication to duty and selfless service are truly a blessing to us all.



On this special American holiday, the Joint Chiefs of Staff join me in sending you and your families best wishes. You are in our thoughts and prayers and in those of each citizen of our nation as well.

May God bless you and may God bless America.



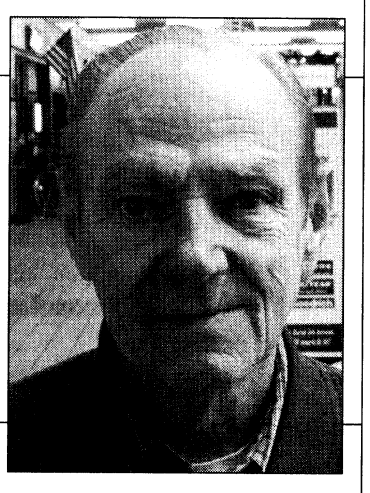
— Gen. Richard B. Myers,
Chairman,
Joint Chiefs of Staff

VARIOUS VOICES

What are you thankful for?

Retired Master Sgt. Bill Allen, Columbus — "I am thankful for my wife. We've been married for 37 years, and I still love her as much as the first day I met her."

Sgt. 1st Class Willard Johnson, 608th Ordnance Company — "I'm thankful for having a great wife and outstanding kids. I'm also thankful for waking up each day."



Connie Johnson, family member — "I'm thankful for my country and the American troops that sacrifice their lives to serve this great country."

Tyrell McGraw, 10, family member — "I'm thankful for my family because they help me with my homework and chores, and they give me advice when I am going through tough times."

2nd Lt. Luke Schmidt, 1st Battalion, 145th Aviation Regiment — "I'm thankful for the constant love and support my family has shown me throughout my whole life."

Retired Air Force Tech Sgt. Joe Sparrow, Abbeville, Ala. — "I'm thankful for this great country of ours and the opportunities we have to be free because of the outstanding service our soldiers provide us."

Soldiers from the Antiarmor Light Leaders Course fire the improved tube-launched, optically tracked, wire guided missile acquisition system.

Course gives infantrymen chance to excel

Students learn doctrine, train to kill armor

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

A new course for officers and NCOs is teaching infantrymen how to employ and engage armor with various weapons used in antiarmor units.

The first class of the Antiarmor Light Leaders Course is underway, and more than 10 to 13 classes are expected annually.

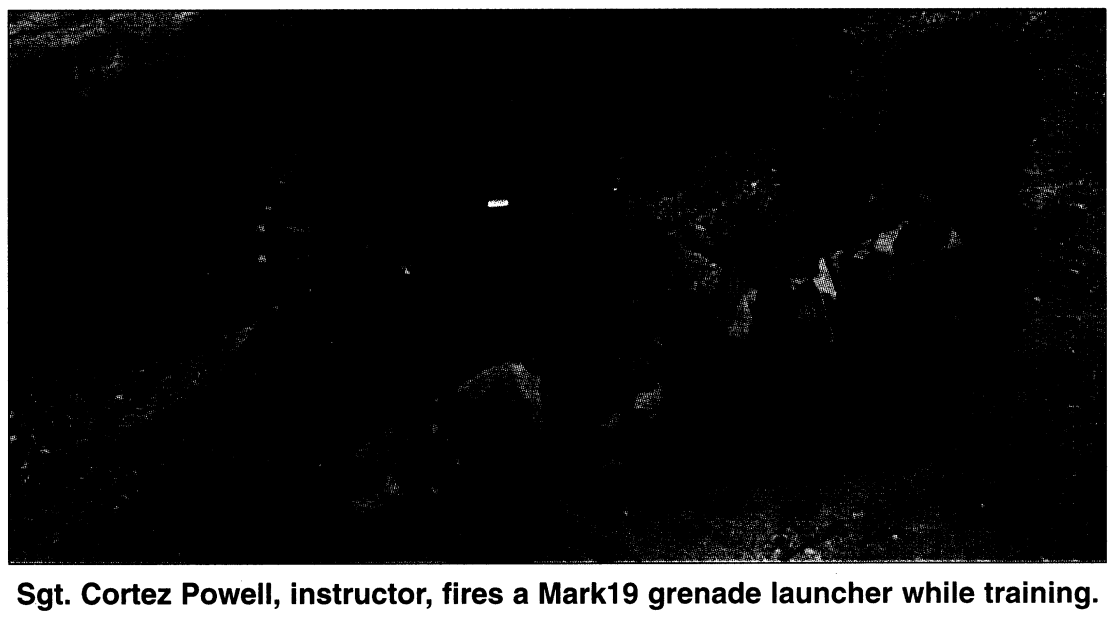
"It's imperative for soldiers to try to enroll in this course," said Sgt. 1st Class Caral Easley, course NCOIC. "It's primarily designed for leaders, E-5 and above."

Infantrymen who learn how to employ the tactics taught in this course will be part of an awesome killing force, Easley said.

During a live-fire exercise Nov. 21 at Coolidge Range, students put their course-acquired knowledge to use.

"There's a lot of information to learn in a short period of time, but it's useful," said 2nd Lt. Carlos Oquendo, student.

"A commander needs to understand how to employ these weapon systems to improve the lethality of his unit and be a more effective commander," Oquendo said. "The course will enable me to better use the equipment in my unit."



Eighteen students are assigned to the three-week course that teaches leaders how to understand, setup and fire the tubed-launched, optically tracked, wire-guided missile, MK19, .50 caliber machine gun and the Improved TOW Acquisition System.

The course is for soldiers who are transitioning from one assignment to the next, Oquendo said.

Commanders like to have soldiers report to their next assignment trained and ready for war.

With the merger of the 11 series, infantrymen who transfer from light infantry don't have certain tactical and weaponry knowledge they need to cross into a mechanized units, Easley said. This course teaches them about antiarmor units and makes their transition into those units easier.

"For example, a sergeant first class may transfer from light infantry to a mechanized unit and not have the knowledge he needs when he's expected to lead troops," Easley said. "He's being set up for failure."

Sgt. Cortez Powell, instructor, fires a Mark19 grenade launcher while training.

This course eliminates that cause for concern, he said.

Not only is the course important for soldiers transitioning from one side of infantry to the other, it's valuable for infantrymen looking to climb the ladder of success. It has been slotted as professional development for infantrymen and will help them for promotion, Easley said.

Since students who attend the course have to be registered through the Army Training Resource Requirement System, soldiers need to enroll through their operations student section, Easley said.

598th to deploy soon

Mechanics to support war effort

Soldiers from the 598th Maintenance Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, are packed and ready to deploy in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

The mission is to provide technical support and repair on electronic and automotive equipment.

"Every member is highly motivated and proud to be doing their part to support the fight against terrorism," said Chief Warrant Officer Thomas Esposito, officer in charge.

During the past year, the company has traveled to Fort Polk, La., to train at the Joint Readiness Training Center and to Fort Irwin, Calif., to train at the National Training Center.

"We're going to do what we're trained to do, which is to fix and repair equipment in support of the war on terrorism," said Sgt. 1st Class Ernest Harvey, automotive section NCOIC.

This mission is a chance for the 598th to put their training to use, Harvey said.

"We have the best training and equipment, and our soldiers know that," he said. "Overall, I think we have great soldiers to accomplish our mission."

Of course, the hardest part of performing the mission will be leaving families behind, said Capt. Melissa Eslinger, commander.

"Being away from their families will be one of the most stressful things they go through," she said.

It's going to be hard not being home for the holidays, said Spc. Lonnie Strodtman, a single soldier who has been with the unit for more than 20 months.

"I've been married for 17 years," Esposito said. "We have a typical military family. They're used to me deploying and are well capable of taking care of themselves.

"As a result of being part of an Army family, my daughter is a strong girl. She has always been a straight A student, and I have my wife to thank for having the wonderful daughter I do."

Prior to deploying, soldiers and families prepared for being apart by attending family readiness groups.

"I've been in the military for 19 years," Harvey said. "My family understands my job, and I have their full support."

Spc. Amber Miller, a supply specialist, planned to travel to Illinois for Thanksgiving but was unable to do so because of the deployment.

"I'm doing what I must. It's just another deployment and a place to tell my family and friends about."

The key to deployments is to keep soldiers' spirits up and bring them back home safely, Harvey said.

"I have nothing but faith in my leadership and how they will perform," Strodtman said. "They would do anything they possibly could for us."

"The sooner we deploy, the sooner we'll get back," Miller said.

Miller's family will make Thanksgiving dinner here when she gets back, she said.

'Loaded 45' saves lives

Police help reduce drunk driving

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

With the holiday season beginning, traffic accidents are expected to increase, so Fort Benning police are working to reduce those numbers with a safety campaign, "Loaded 45."

Loaded 45, which begins Friday, increases driver awareness by providing additional traffic patrols and informing the public of the hazards during the holiday season.

"Our goal is to make Fort Benning roads safe for all those who travel on our post roads during the holiday season," said Sgt. Donna Pearce, 71st Military Detachment and traffic accident investigator.

"We're on the roads to protect innocent bystanders from reckless drivers and to let people know if they drink and drive, they are going to get caught", she said.

More than 12,200 police agencies around the country are having similar safety campaigns.

Last year, the safety campaign reduced the number of accidents to 75, which is down from more than 100 the prior year.

"We are going to continue to make a difference," said Capt. Andrew Sullivan, operations OIC. "There's an increased number of parties due to the holiday season, and we need to make soldiers and civilians aware of the dangers involved with drinking and driving."

Driving home while intoxicated is not an option, Sullivan said. People need to be responsible and find a safe, sober ride.

According to Georgia state laws, drivers with a blood alcohol concentration of .08 milligrams of alcohol per 210 milliliters of blood are over the limit to drive and are subject to arrest.

That means if a 180-pound person has five drinks in two hours and drives home, he or she would be subject to arrest.

Sobriety tests will be issued for those suspected of drinking and driving, Pearce said. People convicted of driving under the influence of alcohol are subject to 10 days to 12 months in jail, losing their license for up to one year and a fine of $1,000.

Beginning Dec. 10, soldiers who have been drinking or don't have a safe ride home can get a free cab ride to their residence through Safety Cab.

It's the right thing for everyone, Sullivan said. Not only is Safety Cab helping soldiers get home safe and giving them a cost-free option, it's keeping Fort Benning roads safe.

This year alone, more than 320 service members from around the world have been killed in crashes involving their personal vehicle.

Some tips to reduce traffic accidents are to:

- Drive sober.
- Ensure vehicles are in safe operational condition.
- Buckle up.
- Obey all traffic laws, especially the speed limit.
- During adverse weather, drive slower than normal.
- Drive a safe distance from vehicles when following.

AAFES to create 'all stars'

New program to provide incentives

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Army and Air Forces Exchange Service begins its new customer service All Star program Sunday, which provides a visible means of recognizing associates who provide outstanding service.

"We want AAFES to be the customers' first choice to shop," said Donald O'Reilly, Fort Benning exchange general manager. "We realize the importance of superior customer service, and we'll do our part to ensure that. We ask people for their help to tell us how we are doing."

The program will reward all AAFES employees for excellent service with a point system.

They receive stars for each good customer service report, and the associate receives tokens of appreciation for the more stars they earn. The six-month program will reward the associate who earned the most stars with a dinner from the regional-senior vice president from the Dallas office.

"A lot of our associates are military dependents," O'Reilly said. "When they go to work they are trained in customer service. Sometimes, no one tells them they are doing a good job, and this program gives them the chance to know it.

"If a customer just says a verbal comment to the greeter or a manager how they were helped, the associate will be recognized. The better an associate feels about their job the better their service will be."

Customers will also be able to see the number of stars earned by the associate by their status displayed on their name tag or uniform.

"I have filled out a customer service card before," said Connie Hughley, family member. "I think it's good there's an easier way to recognize someone now. People (at the Main Mall Post Exchange) always help me find products and answer my questions about them. I like the service here."

The program is not the result of poor service, O'Reilly said. The associates do a good job, and this will help them know just how good of a job they do.

"I think the program is a good idea. It will give employees incentive to give better customer service," said Gloria Walker, senior sales associate. "I always try to greet the customer and assist them if they need it, and this program will enforce that."

AUSA president visits Benning

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Association of the U.S. Army president spoke to members of the local chapter about issues before Congress Thursday.

Retired Gen. Gordon Sullivan, Army chief of staff from 1991 to 1995, told soldiers at breakfast and lunch.

"Our main issue at Congress is the pay of the military," Sullivan said.

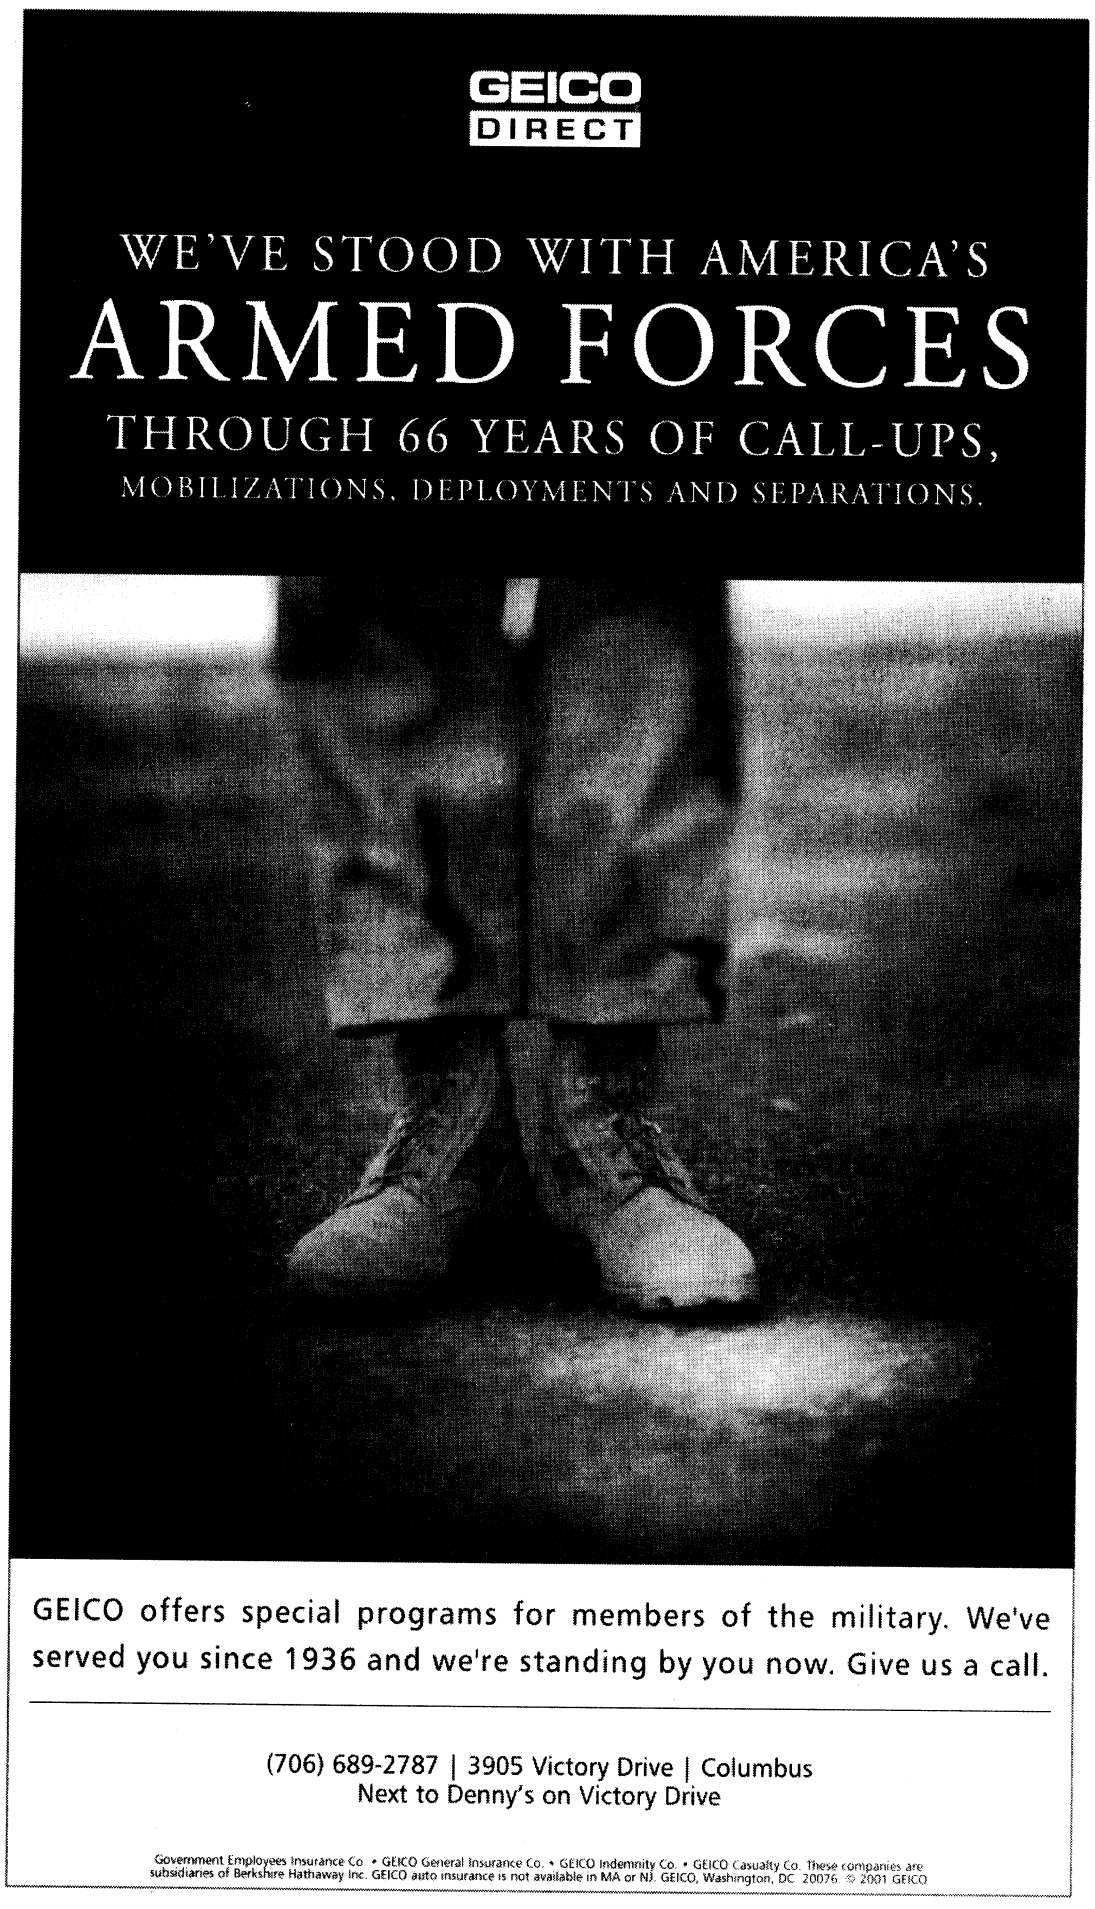
"Our goal is to significantly close the pay gap between military and their civilian counterparts by 2006.

Starting next year, he said, when soldiers will get a 4.1 percent pay raise.

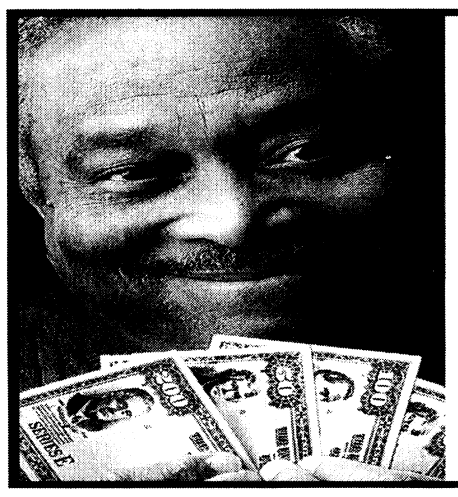
"It's recognition that is long overdue," Sullivan said.

"The capabilities of soldiers have tripled over the past 15 years," Sullivan said.

"It's a stronger, faster and smarter force than it was in the 80s."



Every service has made a huge contribution to our country, he said.



From the seamen who died on the USS Arizona in 1941 to the Marines who fought on the sands of Iwo Jima, and from the airmen who ran a successful Berlin Airlift after World War II to the soldiers who fought valiantly on D-Day at Normandy, Sullivan said.

"The United States would not be where it is today without their contributions.

"It's time for us to pay tribute to them and the cause they fought for," Sullivan said.

Engineers share day with JROTC

Students get up-close look at soldier life

"We want them to spend time in our shoes, learn about our responsibilities and what to expect when they get into the Army."

Spc. Warren White
36th Engineer Group BOSS representative

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps cadets from Spencer High School traveled to Fort Benning Friday for a day of information-sharing and fun. The 74 students were the guests of soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program.

Spc. Warren White, group BOSS representative, welcomed the cadets and gave them an overview of what the BOSS program is all about. The students watched two videos that detailed some of the BOSS events and their involvement with the residents at the Franciscan Woods Assisted Living Center.

Before beginning a tour of the group barracks and offices, the group's training Sgt. Maj. Julio Sanchez offered words of encouragement to the cadets and praised them for their involvement in the JROTC program.

"Stay motivated, stay focused," Sanchez said. "You are our replacements."

Throughout the tours of the barracks, offices and motor pools, the cadets asked questions covering all aspects of soldier life.

Cadet Staff Sgt. Darryl Porter, a junior in his third year in the JROTC, thought the BOSS volunteers had put together a good program for the students. The students were able to watch engineer soldiers participating in military stakes training with protective masks.

"This is really worthwhile for people who don't have a military background," Porter said. "They can get an idea of what it is like."

BOSS volunteers took the cadets to the 104th Transportation Company motor pool where soldiers showed the cadets heavy equipment and took them into the bays where mechanics repair military vehicles in support of various units on post.

The majority of the 183 cadets in Spencer's JROTC program come from military families and are interested in military service after high school and college, said retired Lt. Col. Thomas Jones, Spencer's head JROTC instructor.

Partnered with both the 29th Infantry Regiment and the 36th Engineers, Jones said his students "have the best of two worlds." Through the program, Jones and his staff and the soldier volunteers try to help the cadets become better citizens.

Junior Keisha Gibson is one of the JROTC students not from a military family. She credits the program with teaching her a lot about respect and discipline. Both Gibson and senior Serena Thomas said the JROTC program is all about "being the best that you can be."

Thomas, in her third year in JROTC, is getting ready to take her enlistment physical and wants to be an X-ray technician.

"JROTC has really changed some of my friends for the better," she said.

White and the more than 18 volunteers hoped that the day's events would be informative for the students.

"We want to make this an enlightening day," White said. "We want them to spend time in our shoes, learn about our responsibilities and what to expect when they get into the Army."

Before heading off to lunch with the soldiers, ninth-grader Brandeeka Storr gave her stamp of approval on the JROTC program.

"The soldiers seem very experienced," Storr said, "and they're nice."

Free Falcons game open to single soldiers

44 soldiers have chance to visit Atlanta

"The Army can be a lonely place, and BOSS is a great way to get out there and be introduced to new faces."

Sgt. Jessica Pisa
BOSS president

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program is offering a free trip to 44 single soldiers to the Atlanta Falcons-Seattle Seahawks game Dec. 15 at the Georgia Dome. Transportation and tickets will be provided. There is a mandatory meeting for those attending the trip at 6 p.m. Dec. 11 in Infantry Hall's Classroom 2A. Soldiers who volunteer for upcoming BOSS events will have priority for selection to go on the trip.

"I'm thankful for everyone who comes out for the events because that's what we're here for," said Sgt. Jessica Pisa, BOSS president. "The Army can be a lonely place, and BOSS is a great way to get out there and be introduced to new faces." BOSS offers community programs and recreational and leisure events for single soldiers. It needs soldiers to participate to continue the program's success.

"Without soldiers, there is no BOSS program," Pisa said. "We want to get soldiers out there doing something positive for themselves and the community — to keep them away from things that get them in trouble."

One of the programs BOSS set up is the award-winning Fort Benning BOSS ongoing partnership with residents of the Franciscan Woods Assisted Living Community Center.

Soldiers with the program volunteer time with the elderly. On Memorial Day, the center was presented with a flag for all of the veterans, retirees and widows.

"Volunteering is a good experience for soldiers," Pisa said. "The chances to see the reaction from children and adults alike is great — it's a win-win for everybody. Soldiers also have the opportunity to show their support to the community."

The upcoming events for volunteering are:

• Christmas at Riverside — Santa's annual visit to the general's house, 5 to 8 p.m. Wednesday at the Riverside. BOSS is looking for volunteers to help serve refreshments and dress in costume.

• Tricommunity Night of Lights Celebration — A variety of choral groups will perform Christmas songs. The celebration will be 6 to 7 p.m. Dec. 5 at the Phenix City Amphitheater. The first 1,000 children 12 and younger receive a free ornament. The event is free to the community. BOSS is looking for volunteers to pass out refreshments.

• Free Infantry Band concert — The concert starts at 5:30 p.m. Dec. 8 at the RiverCenter. BOSS is looking for volunteers to act as ushers. Uniform is dress greens.

For more information about upcoming events or to volunteer, call 545-6800.

Car Buyers Finally Have Wish Come True

Rivertown Ford brings original "Price Slicer" and $99 car prices to Columbus thru Saturday Only

Columbus, GA- What would make a car dealer sell perfectly good used cars for as low as $99? Even sell new Fords at thousands off normal manufacturer's suggested retail prices? Rivertown Ford's General Sales Manager Brad Williams gives a simple answer: "Desperation."

"We're really, really pinched for space," Williams explained further. "New car sales are the best they've ever been. Plus, the last couple of years have seen a huge increase in leases. Now, those leases are expiring and they're coming back by the dozen. We have literally run out of room for all the used cars."

This desperation has prompted Williams to fly in a team of professionals to assist his managers to prepare for this weekend sales event. This weekend only, the "Price Slicer" team will be at Rivertown Ford evaluating the prices on a record number of preowned vehicles to be drastically sliced to move them out...right before the customer's eyes.

This is the "Price Slicer" sales event that has been written about in newspapers across the country. While other local dealers have hosted lesser knock-offs of the "Price Slicer" concept, Williams is the first to bring the "real deal" to Columbus.

"These guys are serious," Williams says. "We've instructed the Price Slicer Team to determine the best prices to move the most vehicles in just one day."

Obviously, the dealership being overloaded with inventory means a great selection for consumers. "No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here. Mini-vans, and sport utilities if you need room for a big family. Used Nissans, Fords, Mitsubishis, Hondas, Toyotas, Nissans, Mazdas, Chevys, Dodges, you name it... there's a great selection of everything from 87's through 2002! Plus tons of full size work trucks, 4x4s, even extended cab models."

The "Price Slicer" and his team travel the United States disposing of excess dealer inventory via dramatic price cuts.

Here's how it works: The "Slicer" and his team have been in town figuring bottom-line pricing since Thursday. Sale prices are placed on the windshield of every vehicle before the sale day.

"No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here"

Customers can come get a "sneak peak" preview Friday, November 30th from 3-9pm Saturday, the fun begins. Pre-registration begins at 9AM and Williams recommends customers arrive early for the best selection. In fact, the public can register even faster by visiting www.priceslicersale.com. After a brief registration, customers simply choose the vehicle they want. Then the "Price Slicer" begins slicing the price on the windshield thousands of dollars. And, it is true, new and used cars that normally sell from $5000 to $20,000 will be marked down thousands below MSRP, with some perfectly good used cars to be sold for as low as $99. Even brand new 2002 model Ford are included.

All the cars that will be offered during this event will be on display for customer inspection. You can also pre-register for the sale by going to www.priceslicersale.com.

"If credit problems have been in your past, that's no problem," Williams said. "During the 'Price Slicer' sale you can get financing for the car you want with no hassle. Just bring in a valid drivers license, a payroll stub, and a bill from your utilities." Bank representatives will be on hand to assist all credit customers needs.

Post celebrates Native American heritage

Post honors code talkers role in war

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Americans suffered many casualties during World War II. Many tactics were used by U.S. intelligence to throw off Japanese surveillance. Some succeeded and some failed.

An operation by Native American code talkers succeeded so well that the U.S. carried it over to the Vietnam War.

"Very few people realize the significance of the Native American Indians in World War II and the Vietnam War," said Eugene Mowatt, Comanche descendent and nephew of several WWII veterans. "My uncles still have physical and mental wounds from war. Their role in keeping our country safe was an important one."

The annual Native American Heritage Luncheon was Nov. 20.

The ceremony celebrated the contributions Native Americans have made to the U.S. military.

"Our tribes still talk about the service other tribe members gave to the country during the wars," Mowatt said. "The stories our uncles told us of their experiences will be passed down by word of mouth so that our descendants can know about and remember their contributions to this great country."

> "Native Americans and Alaskan native cultures have made remarkable contributions to our national identity."
> Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton
> Commanding General

Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton spoke of contributions Native Americans have made to the U.S.

"The strength of our nation comes from its people," Eaton said. "As early inhabitants of this great land, the native peoples of North America played a unique role in the shaping of our nation's history and culture."

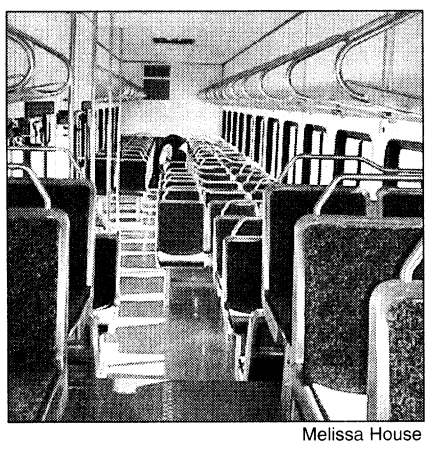
After Mowatt spoke about what his family went through during the wars, he introduced his uncle, Berkey Monoessy, who in turn spoke about code talkers and how the government tried to oust their language.

"Back in the 1920s, the government tried to force us to learn English and to get rid of our native language," Monoessy said. "Boy are they glad they didn't.

"When the Japanese were breaking all of the codes the Americans were using, the government called on us to use our language as a means of communication," he said. "It really threw off the Japanese. They couldn't figure out what we were saying because they had never been exposed to our native language."

After speaking, Monoessy and a group called the Plainsmen showed the audience a few traditional dances.

The dances included a Women's Traditional Dance, Southern Straight Dance and the Eagle Dance.



"The eagle is held in high regard by the Native American people," Mowatt said. "Every time an eagle feather touches the ground, we believe a Native American veteran has passed into the next world."

The ceremony ended with 1st Lt. Ludia Welch, 13th Corps Support Battalion, singing Colors of the Wind.

"Native Americans and Alaskan native cultures have made remarkable contributions to our national identity," Eaton said. "Native American soldiers, sailors, Marines and airmen have fought heroically in all of this century's wars and armed conflicts.

"American military leaders as early as the 18th century have recognized the courage, determination and fighting spirit of Native Americans," he said. "Today Native Americans continue to carry on their centuries-old warrior tradition — serving with pride, courage and distinction."

Soldiers: To receive more comfortable rides to, fro

Melissa House

The interior of the big rig fits scores of soldiers comfortably and easily.

"The cattle cars served their purpose, but this is one of those things that you just have to see to believe," Johnson said.

The interior of the van is stainless steel with indestructible "monster board" panels and space-age fabric seat covers. Each trainee has a seat in the new van, where most had to stand in the cattle car.

Among the safety features are a steel frame with roll bars, two ceiling escape hatches and window escapes. The driver cannot move the rig unless the doors in the passenger trailer are closed, and a two-way communications system gives cadre riding in the trailer the ability to talk with the driver. The van is also equipped with carbon monoxide and smoke detectors.

Johnson is certain the new system will hold up to the demands of hauling trainees and their personal equipment to and from the field.

A group of transportation officers went to see the prototype at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., Johnson said.

"We were like a bunch of monkeys," he said. "We were hanging from the equipment racks, banging the walls with hammers and trying to cut the seats. Nothing happened."

Soldiers will not begin riding in the new van until it is presented to the command group and until the transportation motor pool completes driver training.

The carrier took a "spin around the block" at Sand Hill Friday, turning heads left and right, and making seemingly impossible turns. As it pulled to a stop alongside a group of Basic Combat Training Brigade cadre, they tried to peer into the tinted windows.

Driver Marty Worley, one of two drivers currently trained on the new van, opened the doors to give the drill sergeants a better look at the inside of the trailer.

"Wow," was the common reaction.

The drill sergeants stood in the two doorways and commented that loading and unloading would be much quicker than a cattle car. Reaction was mixed on whether or not trainees should be able to enjoy such comfort.

Three vans will transport a company of trainees comfortably and safely. Since the van has been approved for use on the highway, it can safely transport the same amount of soldiers as two buses.

"We just took a bunch of soldiers up to Callaway Gardens by bus," Worley said. "The van would have made it easier."

Hero: Finds soldier unconscious on post back road

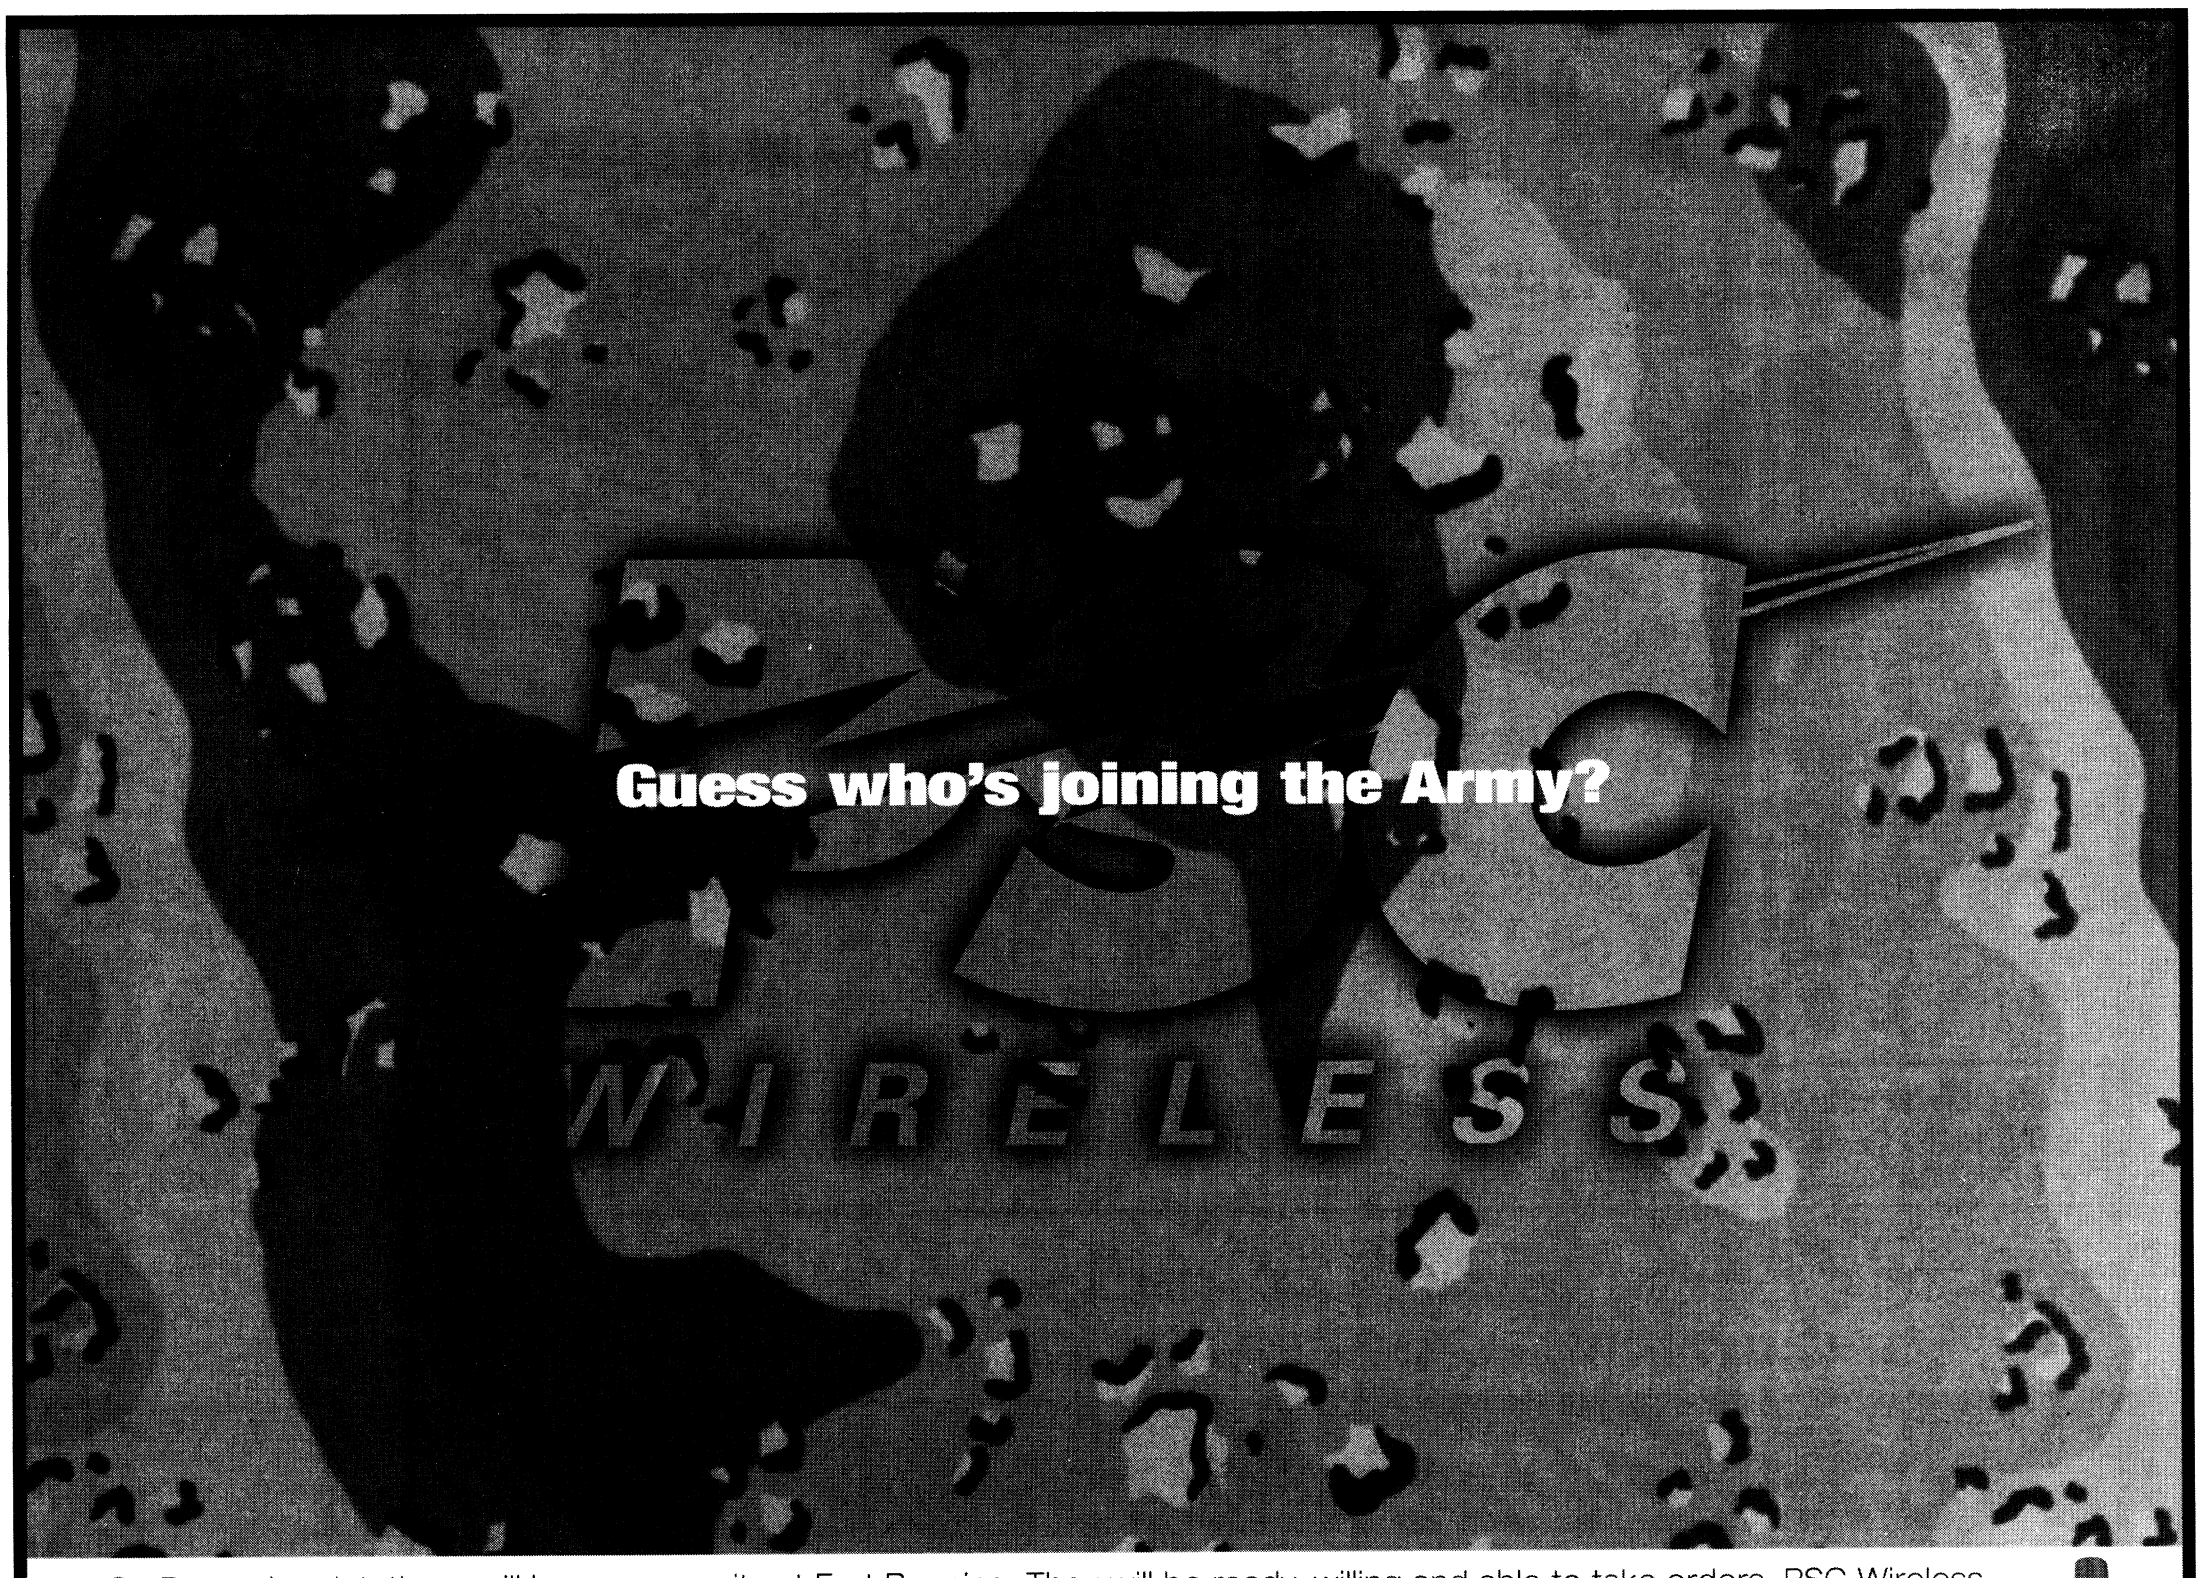
the go-ahead from his doctor to resume moderate PT. Last week he met Belcher for the first time when he dropped in at her office to say thank you.



"He said 'I just want to thank you. I'm so grateful to have more time with my daughters.'

"I didn't do anything anybody else wouldn't have done," she said with a shrug. "My husband was a soldier for 22 years. I just did what I'd hope someone else would do if it were him."

But Barnes isn't taking Belcher's actions quite so lightly.

The father of two, a 6-year-old and an 11-month-old, said he thanks Belcher for giving him the opportunity "to stay in their lives, to watch them grow."

"My doctor said it was that serious. If she hadn't stopped when she did, I probably wouldn't be here," he said. "Everything's pretty much back to normal now, or getting there anyway, but everyday I'm a little more thankful to be alive."

On December 1st, there will be new recruits at Fort Benning. They will be ready, willing and able to take orders. PSC Wireless has a lot to offer: 300 anytime minutes, unlimited nights & weekends, and unlimited mobile-to-mobile. For only $34.99.

One Team gives soldiers an edge

New program focuses on education

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The soldiers at Martin Army Community Hospital are blazing new trails in military excellence through a program known as One Team.

"This is the best program I've seen in all of my assignments," said Col. Gale S. Pollock, commander of MACH. "It's an honor to work with a sergeant major who cares so much about soldiers. The training they are receiving now will pay dividends for years to come."

Sgt. Maj. Ronnie P. Borel, sergeant major of MACH, came up with the program that ensures the education of soldiers through the use of the Noncommissioned Officer Development and Junior Leader Development Programs, preparing them for success in the Army and the civilian world.

All 256 soldiers assigned to the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity are required to attend college classes or Army correspondence courses in addition to regular common-task training.

"The goal of the program is to drive the soldiers to excellence while combining all three aspects of the hospital: civilian employees, Army officers and enlisted personnel," Borel said. "All three aspects need to work together like a football team, each playing its own part."

The idea came to Borel when he attended the Sergeant Major Academy. He received a different sort of training than he had ever experienced in his Army career.

At the Sergeant Major Academy, the soldiers were given assignments that required a higher level of intellect than any of his previous military schools, such as book reports, country briefs and thought papers.

Once Borel graduated from the academy, he continued to pass on the training and knowledge he received by exposing the soldiers of Martin Army Community Hospital to the same sort of training.

"I couldn't understand why soldiers weren't getting this training earlier on in their careers," Borel said "It's an excellent way to help the soldiers get a head start in life. That's why we started the program.

"We did make a few modifications to the original program by allowing them to do reports on different topics, such as capital punishment, women in the military and other topics that appear in the news."

The soldier who produces the best thought paper gets a trophy to display for the month.

The unit purchased a set of comprehensive study manuals the soldiers can borrow to study for their board reviews.

"We are taking a step forward in education," Borel said. "We also invest in the education of children through a program called Visit Your Child At School. We've asked the supervisors to allow soldiers to take time off to visit their children at school because the most important aspect of child development is parental involvement. Furthermore, we have an excellence in education program that recognizes the two soldiers who excel the most in their academic endeavors. Those soldiers receive awards at the holiday ball.

"I think it's great what the soldiers have done with this program because the NCOs are the ones who mentor the soldiers," Borel said. "I only gave them the guidance. They took the ball and ran with it.

"The soldiers are responsible for the success of the program because they are the ones who actually make it work. The NCOs give the classes, and the lower enlisted are performing well."

"It's a lot of hard work, doing the reports, but it benefits us in the long run," said Spc. Luther Coleman, MEDDAC.

"You learn a lot from the book reports, and sometimes you even go buy the book," said Spc. Toni Stevenson, MEDDAC. "I think it's great he wants us to advance and become better NCOs."

Moving pets overseas can be daunting mission

Local shelters overpopulated with animals

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Many families moving overseas may run into obstacles when deciding whether they should take their pet with them or adopt them out before they leave.

Soldiers looking for homes for their animals will find that local shelters are overpopulated, and many are not accepting pets this time of year.

The Fort Benning Veterinary Clinic also has limited space and can only guarantee an animal a place to stay for three days before euthanizing the pet.

"We have soldiers who call us stressed out because they are heading overseas and don't know what to do with their pet," said Melissa Locke, an employee with the Fort Benning Vet Clinic. "A lot of the time , they only have a few weeks to find them a home."

Families like Jill Zweibelson and her husband, Capt. Ben Zweibelson, a student in the Infantry Captains' Career Course, were given orders to the 173rd Brigade in Italy this month and are debating on what to do with their dogs and cat.

"The brigade commander over there told us that many Italian landlords don't allow pets," Zweibelson said. "The problem is our animals are adults, and it's been tough finding them a home. We only have a few months to figure this out."

Zweibelson called local animal shelters and searched animal rescue sites with little luck. She's even resorted to standing at the local Petsmart store with the dogs to see if there is any interest in them.

"Deciding on what to do with a pet is a very emotional time for families moving overseas," said Renate West, an assistant with Fort Benning Transportation. "We try to give soldiers all options before they make a decision on what to do with them."

Moving a pet overseas with a family can often be just as complicated as trying to find the pet a home, West said. The cost to fly a pet is about $90. Any pet weighing over 70 pounds can cost double that price.

"Germany and Italy both require pets to be up to date on all of their vaccines," West said. "The shots must be given at least 30 days prior to leaving."

Hawaii is an even bigger nuisance, requiring all pets to be quarantined for at least 30 days.

"Each country has its own set of rules when it comes to animals," West said. "Germany and Italy have eliminated the quarantine requirement, which eases a lot of families concerns."

Germany does, however, have restrictions on what kinds of dogs are allowed in the country. Families with pit bulls and other bull terrier mixes may not even have the option to bring their pets with them.

"Many soldiers wait until the last minute to tell transportation they want to bring pets with them," West said. "We need to know immediately when they receive their orders so we can help plan the best course of action for them."

The Zweibelsons are doing everything they can to find their pets a good home before they leave.

Four hours standing out front of Petsmart has paid off for them, as one of their dogs already has a home. But the options for the other animals are slim.

"I don't want to leave our pets with anyone," Zweibelson said. "They are like part of the family. If we can't secure them a good home, we may end up taking them with us."

Soldiers gain confidence to fight war

New infantrymen tackle tower, overcome fears

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

"People sleep peacefully in their beds at night because rough men stand ready to do violence on their behalf."
— George Orwell

Rough men from all across Sand Hill may soon battle terrorists in the mountains of Afghanistan or help overthrow an evil president in the streets of Baghdad, and they will need personal courage to overcome their fear.

Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, built upon that necessary courage at Eagle Tower Monday, said Sgt. 1st Class James Kates, senior drill sergeant with 1st Platoon, A Company.

"If I report to my next unit as their platoon sergeant, I have confidence they'll do well, and that's what this training today is all about — it helps give them the basic skills they need to function well at their first duty station," Kates said.

Soldiers, who first visited the tower 10 weeks ago and graduate Dec. 6, seemed to develop more confidence with each facet of the course — the one-, two- and three-rope bridges, rope climb, cargo net climb, rope swing and rappel tower.

"I find it pretty fun — not too hard," said Pvt. Jonathan Gray, a 19-year-old from Greenville, S.C. "It's a challenge on a mental and physical level, and it lets the other soldiers know — if they are afraid of heights — that nothing is impossible."

That will be key when they enter combat.

"What I learn here will help me remember to relax and not tighten up — just conquer another mission the Army throws at me," Gray said.

Not only was the tower fun, it was safe, he said.

Kates agreed the Infantry Training Brigade makes safety a priority.

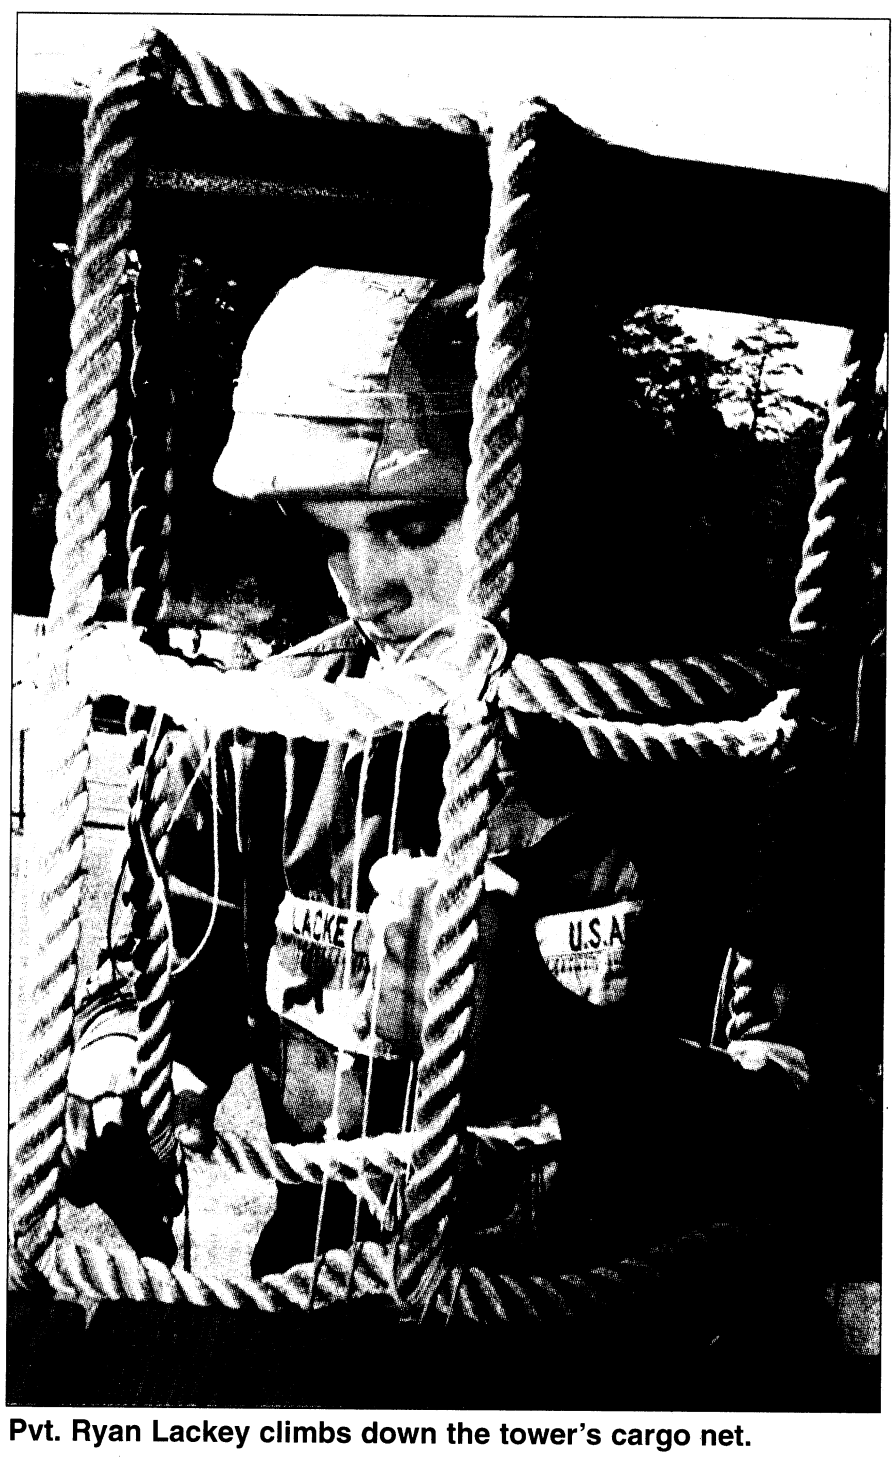
For example, the figure eight rappel gear the soldiers used while rappelling is much safer than the snap link, or D ring, other more experienced soldiers use. It applies more tension on the rope as soldiers rappel and slows their descent.

Pvt. Matthew Rhoades, begins his descent at Eagle Tower, as Sgt. 1st Class James Kates, senior drill sergeant for A Company's 1st Platoon, helps provide motivation and safety.

Furthermore, all the safety nets on the tower are double netted, and range personnel check them routinely. Soldiers also have to stay on all fours — not near the edges — and there is a drill sergeant at every obstacle who gives encouragement.

"It's usually a thankless job for the drill sergeants," said Capt. Carlos Lago, A Company commander. "They work long, hard hours. They throw their hearts into their jobs to help these soldiers play an important part in their (future platoon).

"Even though our country is at war, being here training the soldiers like the drill sergeants are doing today at the tower is the most important place to be because they're training the soldiers who will be on the front line and in the trenches — beside their fellow NCOs in line units who need quality soldiers to accomplish missions to standard."



Infantrymen reflect back on difficult missions they overcame to help them accomplish what lies ahead of them, Kates said.

"If it's miserable and cold, we'll say, 'I remember when it was 10 times colder than this,' suck it up and drive on," Kates said.

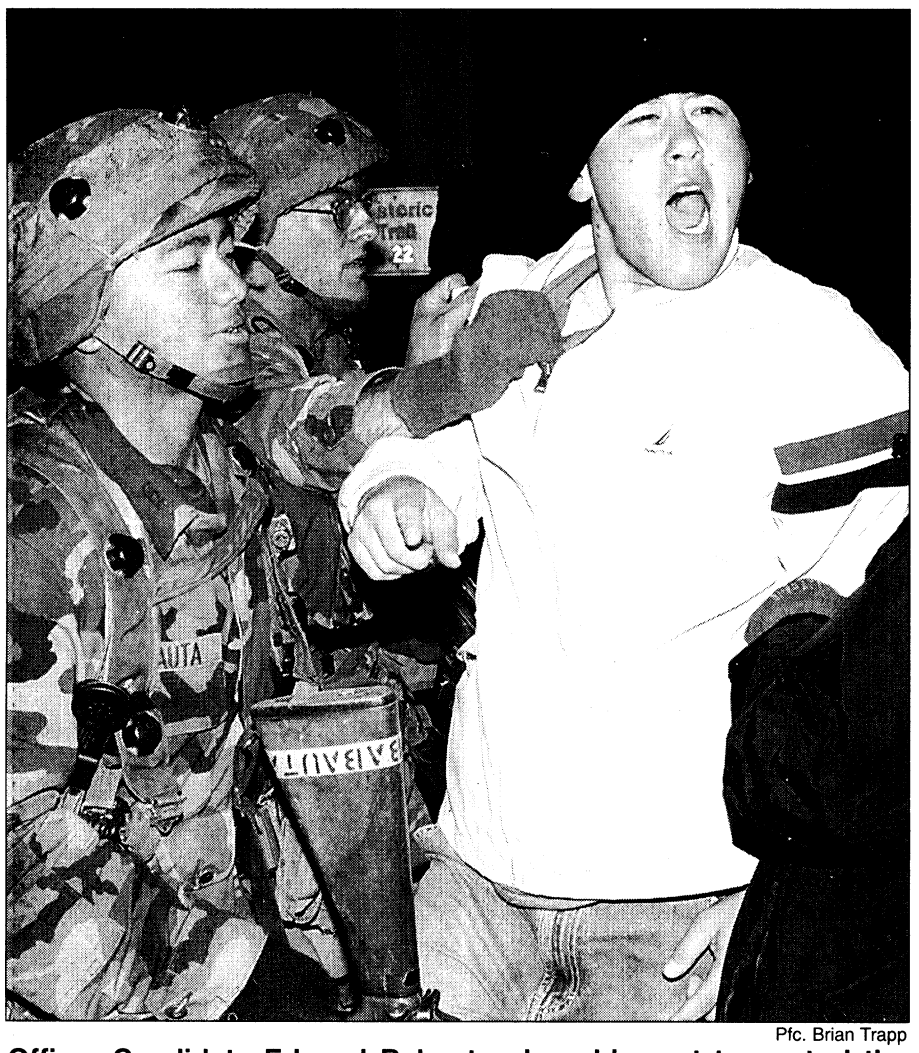
Eagle Tower is a positive reflection and motivator, he said. Soldiers may have to move from a covered position to another covered position under direct fire. They'll subconsciously call upon the confidence they gained at the tower and use it to help kill the enemy.

The tower training will pay other dividends, too, Kates said.

"In a (Military Operation in Urbanized Terrain environment like the soldiers may face in Iraq), they'll usually be flown in and enter from a higher position and go down in order to give the enemy a way to run away," he said. "This is opposed to entering from the bottom, going to the top and having to face a trapped enemy who has nothing to lose. One of the things on which the former hinges is the soldiers' rappelling skills, and (the tower) gives them a small taste of what that may be like."

Pvt. Ryan Lackey climbs down the tower's cargo net.

Another dividend will be the soldiers' trust in teamwork, he said.



"The soldiers say, 'Come on, you can do it,' or, 'If I can do it, you can do it.' They need that encouragement."

Trust in the team inevitably strengthens, too, Kates said. For example, a soldier relies on his belay man if he makes a mistake to pull the rope tight and stop his fall.

Adding all the benefits of making soldiers negotiate the tower together will help develop them into what America expects them to be — warriors who will handle any enemy in Afghanistan, Iraq or other country around the world, he said.

"When they leave here, they will do what they're supposed to do," Kates said. "They will help support our way of life."

OCS quells mock riot for evacuation

Candidates train in their own backyard

Soldiers from the Officer Candidate School came back from the field to find their barracks converted into a hospital and 130 people rioting outside early Friday morning in the final mission of their 11-day field exercise.

"Just because you don't have the resources doesn't mean you can't have excellent training," said Capt. Timothy Hill, A Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment commander. "We didn't have any ammunition or a training area in which to do the mission. The props, music, people and the transportation didn't cost us anything — it was all imagination."

The company's mission was to evacuate casualties and personnel from the Doctors Without Borders program because of growing terrorist activity and crowds inciting riots in the area.

The site was converted to simulate third-world conditions with huts, tiki torches, fires and even blaring Latin music to make communication more difficult. Inside the barracks were stretchers and hospital beds, and cadre made good use of their moulage kits.

"It was a big surprise to see that many (opposing forces)," said Officer Candidate Lonnie Johnston, D Co. 3rd Bn., 11th Inf. Regt. "When we were told they were inciting riots, I was expecting just a handful of people. The props and loud music made it even more realistic."

"It turned out really well — everything went just as the cadre described," said Senior Officer Candidate Matt Barger, opposition force.

The OPFOR was there to distract and stress the candidates. At one point, the soldiers even set up a human chain in front of the transportation to stop the evacuation, but the soldiers worked around it.

The soldiers sealed the area off quicker than their leaders expected. They completed the evacuation in 15 minutes and looked like professionals doing it, Hill said.

"We had a week of squad stakes with an emphasis on (nuclear, biological and chemical) and medical evacuation, and when we were evacuating the casualties, I saw people evaluating them and using the proper carries, so our training paid off," Johnston said.

"This type of mission causes people to rely more on their head instead of the end of their barrel," said Officer Candidate Chris Eidman. "Not knowing what course of action to take forces a leader to think on his feet and make decisions on the spot. It's a dance out there, and you have to work to keep balance."

Doing a mission with civilians on the battlefield is a lot different than what is normally encountered. Usually it's done while hunting an enemy in a uniform. With this exercise there was no telling who the hostiles were, Johnston said. There weren't field manuals or SOPs to teach these things. It's good for soldiers to get exposure to this. Until now, the only time they would get this is on the job.

"The soldiers were pretty motivated and did a good job," Hill said. "Hopefully, this will teach the soldiers, once they get their own platoon, they can train in their own barracks without the traditional resources. I think we will continue to do missions like this because the candidates and the cadre get more into the mission."

ITB soldiers build defensive fighting positions

Sand Hill men learn art of foxhole digs

Pfc. Chris Stephens

In the infantry, a defensive position can be the soldier's most important weapon. Without it, he's an open target to enemies and their deadly firepower.

Soldiers with D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, were given hands-on experience in digging effective fox holes during a three-phase training exercise on Sand Hill recently.

"We're trying to get them to understand the basic principles of building a defensive fighting position," said instructor Staff Sgt. David Minchew, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment.

"We're having them build two-man fighting positions with built-up overhead cover so they can grasp the basic principles of digging a position while in combat."

The soldiers performed the task to standard in accordance with Field Manuals 7-8 and 5-34, Minchew said.

"We first discussed what the fighting position was, the tools and equipment that needed to be used, and how to build it during a war-time situation," Minchew said.

"Then, we walked through it with them, showing them how to build a good, protected foxhole."

After the walk through, the soldiers split into eight-man teams and dug the defensive fighting positions.

However, not all soldiers dug in the foxhole or filled sandbags at the same time.

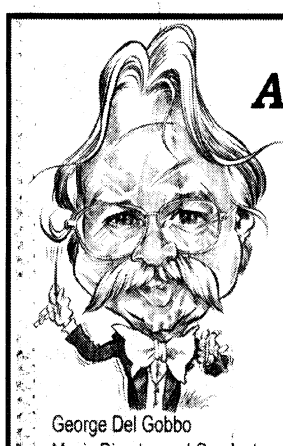
Half of the soldiers in the team pulled security while their teammates were digging.

"There always needs to be protection when building a foxhole," said Pvt. Michael Victorino.

"It's so easy for the enemy to walk by and take out all of the members of the team," he said.

"So, providing security ensures the safety and well-being of the team during the task and the mission itself," Victorino said.

"This is, without a doubt, one of the most essential tasks of a soldier," Minchew said. "The defensive position is a stronghold for not only the soldiers, but their equipment and property.



"If the basic techniques are done properly, the enemy can't take advantage of them or their equipment for their own use, and it increases the survivability of the soldiers," he said.

Holiday events kick off next week

Tree, menorah lighting set for Tuesday

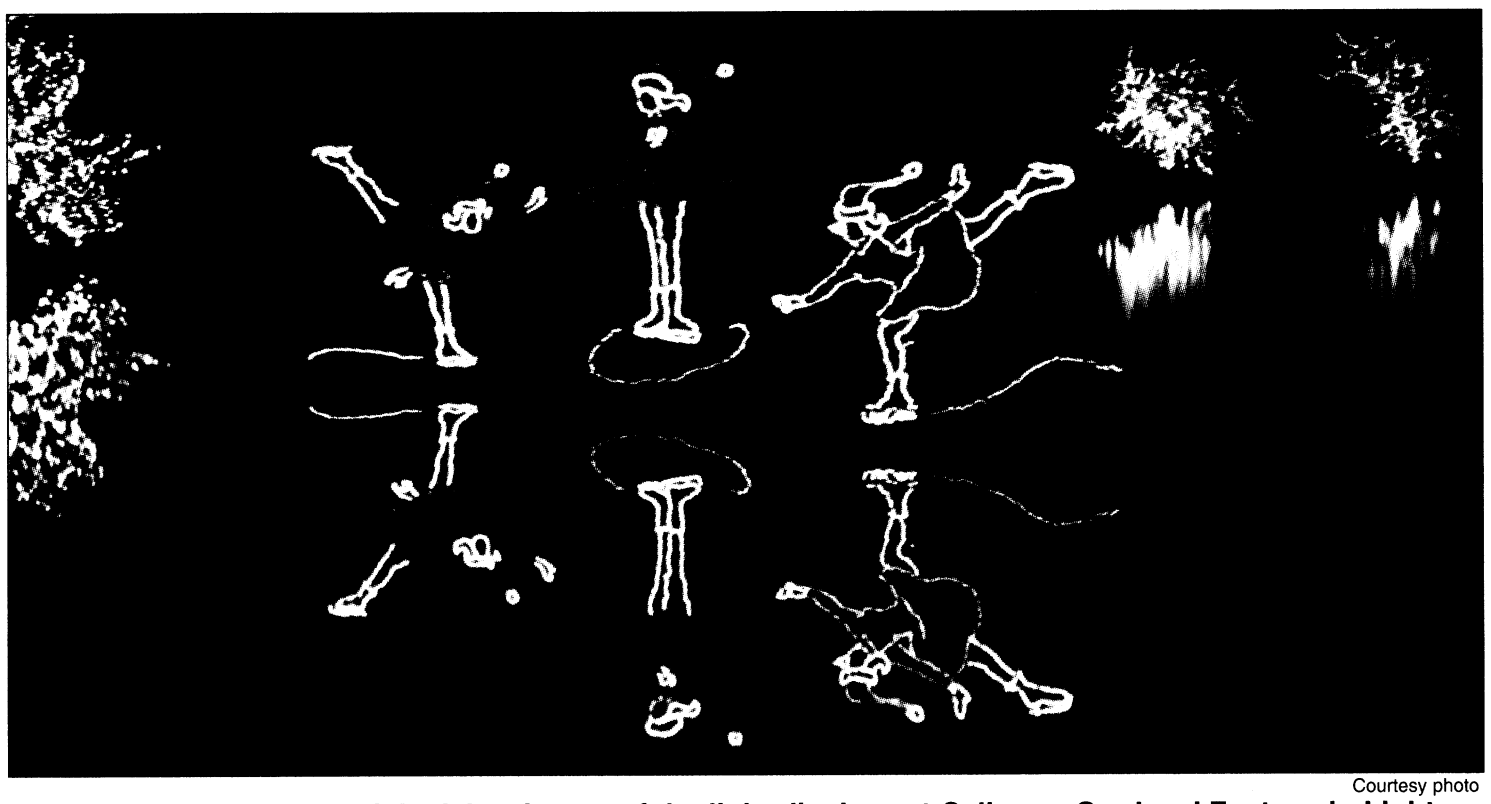
Special to the Bayonet©

Next week marks the beginning of holiday celebrations across Fort Benning and the tricommunity.

The annual tree and menorah lighting ceremony will take place at the Field of Four Chaplains adjacent to the Infantry Center Chapel, at 5:30 p.m. Tuesday. The multifaith ceremony will feature holiday music by the Infantry Band and songs by post school children.



"Last year's ceremony was very emotional," said Chaplain (Maj.) Timothy Bedsole, 36th Engineer Group chaplain.

At 5:30 p.m. Dec. 4, Santa will make his Christmas visit to Riverside, home of post commander Maj. Gen. Paul and P.J. Eaton. The Fort Benning tradition includes a number of family activities led by volunteers from Faith Middle School and the post Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program.

BOSS volunteers will dress as Scrooge, elves and other holiday characters, said Sgt. Jessica Pisa, installation BOSS representative. Soldiers will

Callaway's Fantasy is trip through winter wonderland

Light display includes holiday music

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

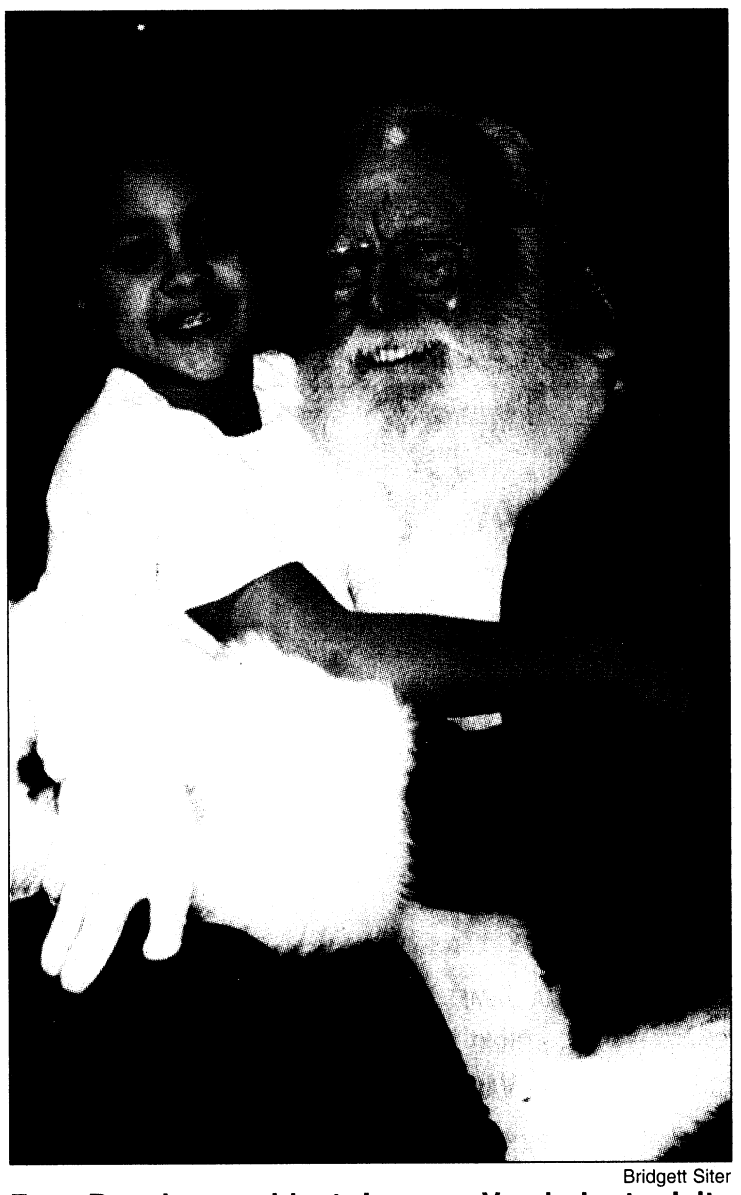
Callaway Gardens' Fantasy In Lights is, in a word, delightful.

Named one of the South's top 20 events by the Southeastern Tourism Society, Fantasy In Lights features a six-mile trolley tour through five acres of wooded wonderland. Here in the South, where dreams of snow go unrequited, it's truly a venture into Christmas fantasy.

Located 30 minutes north of Columbus, on U.S. Highway 27 in Pine Mountain, Callaway Gardens' 11th annual "light fantastic," which boasts 8 million lights, give or take a few, is a must for Fort Benning families who run the risk of letting Georgia's tepid temperatures put a ho, ho, hum in their holiday. But hey, it's a real crowd pleaser, even if snow isn't on your wish list.

Be sure to arrive early — the park opens at 4 p.m. — to explore Callaway's Christmas Village, an indoor arena of vendors offering handmade wares of various sorts, including ornaments, jewelry, artwork, clothing, books and music.

The Village has a bevy of Christmas characters-come-to-life, like the Gingerbread Man and the Wooden Soldier, who're always willing to pause for a hug and a photo with the little ones.



There's a food court offering the usual fare — pizza and sandwiches — and the fairly unusual, like a mammoth Flintstone-size turkey leg that, pound-for-pound, is probably worth every bit of $5. Just try wrapping your mouth around it.

And yes, Virginia, there's even a Santa Claus — the Santa Claus, I might add. Where he finds time in his schedule to put in a personal appearance is anybody's guess, but let me assure you, this is the real McCoy. I swear his eyes twinkled. Be sure to bring your camera.

The Village also features various kids' craft centers. The wee ones can decorate cookies at Mrs. Claus' Kitchen, paint their own ornaments or make someone (preferably someone else) a sandscape in a bottle.

OK, food, photos with Santa, sand in a bottle for Grandma and a souvenir ornament for the tree. Time to head outside for the main event.

En route, between the Village and the trolley stop, there's plenty to enjoy. Grab a toasty funnel cake and wander over to the beach to watch Callaway's orchestrated light shows, The Nativity and The Night Before Christmas, which alternate throughout the evening.

Benning Bazaar approaches

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

The Fort Benning Bazaar will offer something for everyone from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Dec. 7 at the Officers' Club.

This year's bazaar features more than 70 vendors and crafters from Fort Benning and the surrounding area. Shoppers will find military jewelry, antiques, Christmas decorations of all kinds, food items, baskets, coin holders — and a variety of other woodcrafts and handcrafted items.

There will be regular drawings for door prizes as well as the opportunity to win a handmade, full-sized quilt.

The quilt drawing has become a featured part of the annual bazaar.

CB&T donated the materials for the 2002 quilt, said event coordinator Renee Doyle, and the quilt was assembled and finished by volunteers Karen Cook and Ann Bingham.

Alabama resident Evelyn Ecton won last year's quilt, a throw-size log cabin design.

"I was very pleased to win it," she said.

Ecton, who took up quilting when she retired 15 years ago, decided to donate a quilt to the Officers' Spouses' Club. She made a Christmas tree wall-hanging that will be one of the door prizes given away at the bazaar. After attending numerous quilting classes and seminars, she now teaches quilting at the Phenix City Senior Center and is a member of the Georgia and Alabama Quilt Guild.

BCTB cadre deliver letters to students

Families praise 'incredibly terrific kids' with program

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

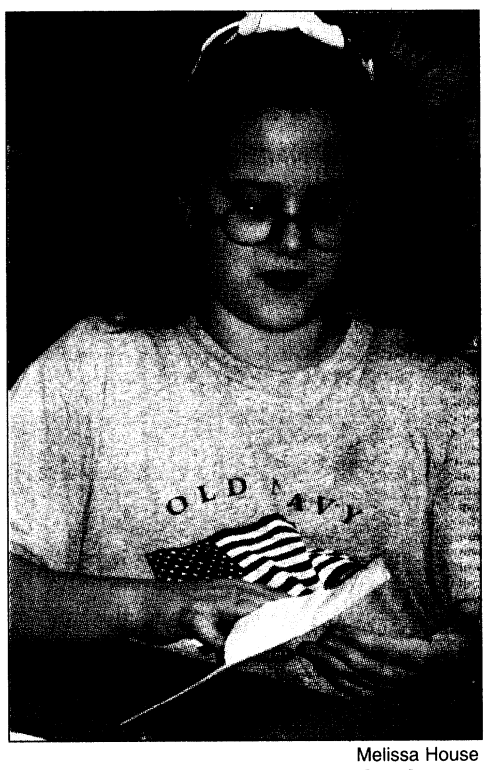
The Wilson Elementary School media center was filled with cadre from the Basic Combat Training Brigade waiting for their assignments.

Eighteen soldiers volunteered to visit Wilson Friday as part of the second annual "Incredibly Terrific Kid Day" to read letters. Once the soldiers received the packets, they delivered them to the classrooms; everyone watched the Veterans Day video produced by Wilson students.

The video, dedicated to U.S. veterans from all branches of the military, featured student interviews with veterans who spoke of the hardships of war and the emotional aspect of returning home without some of their friends.

The veterans illustrated ways students could show their patriotism through learning, community awareness and preparing themselves to serve the nation.

At the end of the video, post commander Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton told the children they too could serve the nation "in any capacity, whatever your skills, whatever your interests."



All of the veterans spoke of responding to the call of duty and of having a strong sense of being a part of history and of wanting to do their part right.

After the video, the students waited anxiously to hear the letters written by their parents, grandparents and siblings. No child was without a letter.

In Kim Barrera's third-grade class, the children clapped and cheered as their classmates were called up to hear the letters read by Lt. Col. Brian Dyer, deputy brigade commander. The letters praised the children for their hard work at school and at home for helping with younger siblings and for doing chores.

Dyer gave each student a pencil commemorating the Wilson-BCTB

Lawyer shares car buying tips

Read warranty before signing all contracts

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Before you buy a car, remember the two Ws: warranty and written terms of the contract.

Most automobiles come with a warranty, which is a contract that sets out the seller's liability in the event that any mechanical problems develop. An example of warranty coverage might be that the car's transmission will be repaired or replaced if problems occur during the vehicle's first 36,000 miles or 36 months of ownership, whichever occurs first.

A new car will always have a warranty. A buyer of a new car needs to read the warranty carefully before purchasing the vehicle to ensure that it provides significant protection.

Buyers often also purchase an "extended warranty," which is an additional contract that will extend the period of protection on covered repairs. For example, an extended warranty might extend coverage on the vehicle's transmission from 36,000 miles or 36 months of ownership to 60,000 miles or 60 months of ownership.

A used car may not have a warranty. If there is no written warranty, the vehicle is presumed to be sold "as is." "As is" means the vehicle comes with no guarantees. If it breaks down a month later, or a week later, or even on the way home from the used car lot, the seller is not responsible.

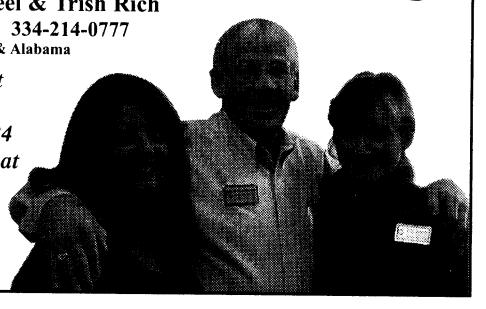
As a result, buyers must be extremely careful when purchasing a used car. Most consumer advocates recommend that an interested buyer have an independent mechanic check any used vehicle before signing the sales contract.

This leads to the second point, which is that the written terms of the contract that govern the transaction.

While an oral, or verbal, contract can be binding, the law of contracts states that any writing takes priority over anything spoken. This means that if you verbally agree to something with the salesperson, such as a sales price of $5,500, but the terms of the written contract differ, such as a sales price of $6,000, the written terms control.

It also means that any oral promises that are not in the written contract may not be enforceable. An oral promise by a new car salesman for 10 free oil changes, but a written contract stating one free oil change, means that only one free oil change is guaranteed. For this reason it is extremely important that the terms of the final, written contract are accurate and complete.

A common myth among car buyers is that there is a "three day" or "72-hour rule," meaning that you can return the vehicle to the dealer within 72 hours and have the contract set aside.



This is not true, however: there is no "three day" or "72-hour rule" on car sales. Once you sign the contract, you are obligated by its terms.

Another common myth among car buyers is that there is some sort of hardship protection if an unexpected event occurs. Suppose the buyer's spouse loses her job, and the family income is cut in half. Or suppose the buyer has a baby, and her ability to pay on her car note is reduced due to the increase in family spending. Isn't that a hardship that can justify canceling the contract? The answer is no. Since contracts are drafted by the seller or finance company, language that would protect the buyer's interests is almost certain not to appear in a standard contract.

Make sure that before you sign the final contract on a car sale, you fully understand the vehicle's warranty, and that the terms of the contract are accurate and contain all of the agreements between the buyer and seller.

Night of Lights — The annual tricommunity "Night of Lights" celebration for Fort Benning, Columbus and Phenix City will kick off the holiday season at 6 p.m. Dec. 5 at the Phenix City Ampitheatre. Admission to the event is free and concessions will be available. The Infantry Band and school groups from all three communities will provide music for the evening. The first 1,000 children (12 and younger) will receive a free Christmas ornament.

Military Appreciation Days at Dillard's — Dillard's recognizes the sacrifices military and their families make daily; therefore, Dillard's is extending a 20 percent discount to military personnel on purchases made at the store Dec. 4-5. Appliances and electronic merchandise may be purchased with a 10 percent discount.

Guests from the military are asked to save their sales receipts. Upon completing their shopping, guests are asked to take receipts for those two days to Dillard's customer service area and show their valid active or full-time I.D. (Immediate family members shopping on behalf of full-time or activated members of the military who are not present will be asked to present their I.D., which notes they are family of such military personnel.)

Dillard's will deduct the discount from participants' total purchases in the same form of payment they chose to use for those purchases.

Scholarship Pageants — Young women in the Columbus area will have a chance to compete in the Miss Columbus Scholarship and the Teen Miss Columbus Pageants Dec. 7. Both pageants will be held in Legacy Hall at the River Center for the Performing Arts beginning at 7 p.m.

Competition will include talent, evening gown, swimsuit and interview. Those who wish to compete must be between the ages of 17 and 24 and reside or work in Muscogee, Harris, Talbot, Chattahoochee, Taylor, Troup, Meriwether, Stewart, Quitman, Marion and Randolph Counties, Fort Benning or attend school at Columbus State University or Andrew College.

There is no entrance fee to compete. The winner will go on to compete in the Miss Georgia Pageant held in June.

General admission is $12 and the public is invited to attend.

For more information or an application to participate, call Mike Owens at 718-2414, Hugh Gregory at (404) 378-7141 or e-mail misscolumbusga@aol.com.

Curator to deliver exhibit lecture

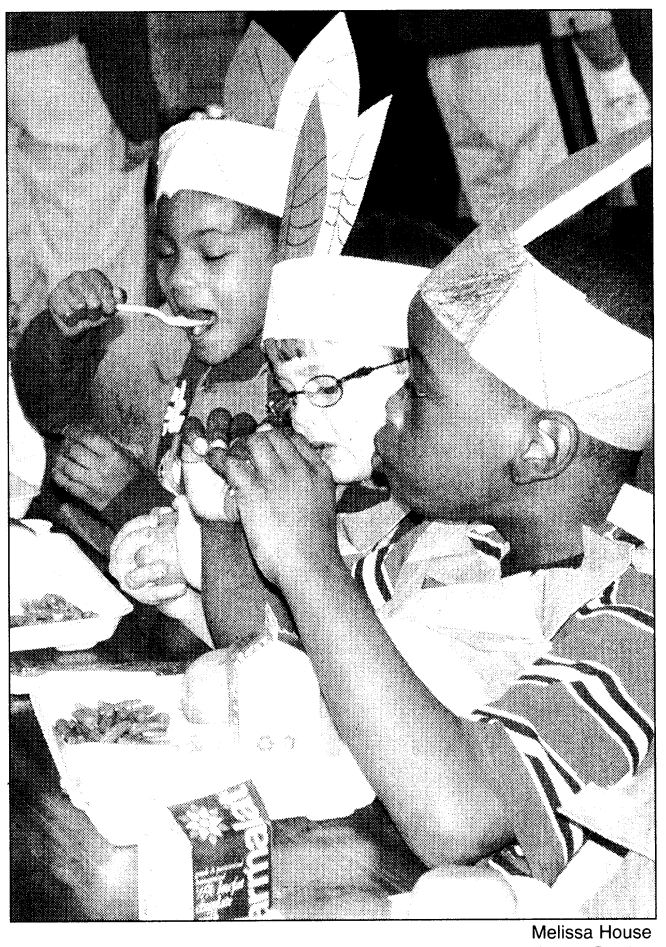
National archives expert to discuss documents Dec. 5

Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and Museum

The public is invited to learn more about the landmark documents in "American Originals — Treasures from the National Archives," the major traveling exhibition now on display at the Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and Museum.

Stacey Bredhoff, the curator of the exhibition, will deliver a special lecture at the Carter Library and Museum at 2:30 p.m. Dec. 5.

Admission to the lecture is included in the museum admission fee.



As a curator on the exhibits staff at the National Archives in Washington, D.C., Bredhoff has sifted through the vast holdings of the National Archives to select some of the most compelling and significant documents from American history.

The result is a traveling exhibition of more than 20 of America's most notable documents. Bredhoff will relate the personal and sometimes surprising stories behind such documents as the Louisiana Purchase, the Preliminary Emancipation Proclamation, Thomas Edison's patent for the light bulb, the German Military Surrender from World War II and John F. Kennedy's notes on his inaugural address.

"American Originals" will be on display through Jan. 5. Atlanta is the only venue in the Southeast for this major exhibition. The Jimmy Carter Presidential Library and Museum, one of 10 Presidential Libraries administered by the National Archives and Records Administration, is located at 441 Freedom Parkway in Atlanta. The Museum is open from 9 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. Monday through Saturday and from noon to 4:45 p.m. on Sunday. Admission to the Carter Library is $5 for adults, $4 for senior citizens and free for children 16 and under. Parking is free. Additional information is available online at www.jimmycarter library.org.

"American Originals" was created by the National Archives and Records Administration, Washington, D.C., and The Foundation for the National Archives.

Prepare chitlins properly to prevent pain

Bacteria can cause diarrhea

Georgia Department of Human Resources

If you, like many Georgians, enjoy chitterlings (also called chitlins) at holiday time, you know that cooked chitterlings are safe to eat — but you may not know that bacteria from raw chitterlings can cause severe diarrhea, especially in infants.

Every year in Georgia, children get sick in homes where chitterlings are prepared, even if they didn't actually eat them.

"Although most people know that chitterlings must be carefully cleaned, few realize that the bacteria from raw chitterlings can cause illness by spreading to other foods and to baby bottles, pacifiers and toys.

Infants and small children are at greatest risk of becoming infected," said Kathleen E. Toomey, M.D., M.P.H., director of the Georgia Department of Human Resources Division of Public Health.

"You can prevent this very easily by boiling the chitterlings for five minutes before you clean them, and then by washing everything that touched the chitterlings while they were raw."

Raw chitterlings may contain bacteria such as salmonella or yersinia.

Unlike most bacteria, yersinia survives cold temperatures and can grow inside the refrigerator.

Even those chitterlings sold as "pre-cleaned" need more rinsing and cleaning at home before they are cooked.

While raw chitterlings are being cleaned, bacteria can easily spread to refrigerators, sinks, counter tops, cooking utensils other objects and other foods, either directly or from the hands of the person who is cleaning the chitterlings.

Infection with bacteria from raw chitterlings can cause a disease called enterocolitis, whose symptoms are fever, appendicitis-like stomach pain and bloody diarrhea.

Infants and children with enterocolitis can become severely dehydrated and may need to be hospitalized. The symptoms usually begin three to seven days after contact with the bacteria.

Here are five easy steps to prevent illness from bacteria in raw chitterlings:

Step 1: Boil raw chitterlings for five minutes before cleaning them. This does not affect the taste and will kill harmful bacteria, preventing them from spreading around the kitchen.

Step 2: Always wash hands after touching raw chitterlings and before touching anything or anyone else.

Step 3: While the chitterlings are boiling, wash everything in the kitchen that the raw chitterlings have touched. For cleaning the kitchen, use one tablespoon of bleach mixed in a gallon of water.

Step 4: Clean the chitterlings only after they have been boiled for five minutes. Boiling for five minutes will also make it easier to clean them.

Step 5: Cook cleaned chitterlings as always, and enjoy.

Bazaar: Nears

Doyle said shoppers must be present to win the door prizes, which will be drawn at regular intervals throughout the bazaar. With more than 100 door prizes, many shoppers will go home with free items.

Serious shoppers can take advantage of child care services available at Tot Town by calling 698-2772 or 698-8698 for reservations. Child care for volunteers is free.

All proceeds from the bazaar go into the OSC Scholarship and Welfare Fund, which provides scholarships for military family members and donations to various organizations on Fort Benning and in the local community.

Santa's Castle will have volunteers manning a table where they can accept donations of new, unwrapped toys. The Bit of Benning Gift Shop will also be open during the bazaar.

For more information, call 682-6212.

also serve refreshments to the guests at Riverside.

The family activities include face painting, Christmas karaoke and a reading corner. Two groups from Faith, the dance team and the choral group, "The Entertainers," will perform twice during the evening.

Families can support the BOSS program by purchasing photos of their children with Santa and Mrs. Claus.

Events in the tricommunity area begin with the third annual Night of Lights at 6 p.m. Dec. 5 along the Riverwalks of both Columbus and Phenix City.

The Night of Lights offers a twinkling winter wonderland to capture the magic of the holiday season.

As part of the event, a brass quintet from the Infantry Band will perform holiday music in the Phenix City Ampitheatre.

The Infantry Band is also offering a free concert at 5:30 p.m. Dec. 8 at the RiverCenter. Concert goers must have tickets for the event. Tickets are available at the RiverCenter box office and at the Omega Travel Office at the Main Mall Post Exchange.

The band will march in the Bi-City parade at 10 a.m. Dec. 14.

Band members will also perform four Christmas Carol Concerts in the housing areas.

Concert times are 6 to 7:30 p.m. on the following dates:

- Dec. 10 — McGraw Manor,
- Dec. 12 — Custer Terrace,
- Dec. 17 — Bouton Heights and Davis Hills,
- Dec. 19 — Main Post (includes East and West Main Post, Indianhead and Upatoi Terrace).

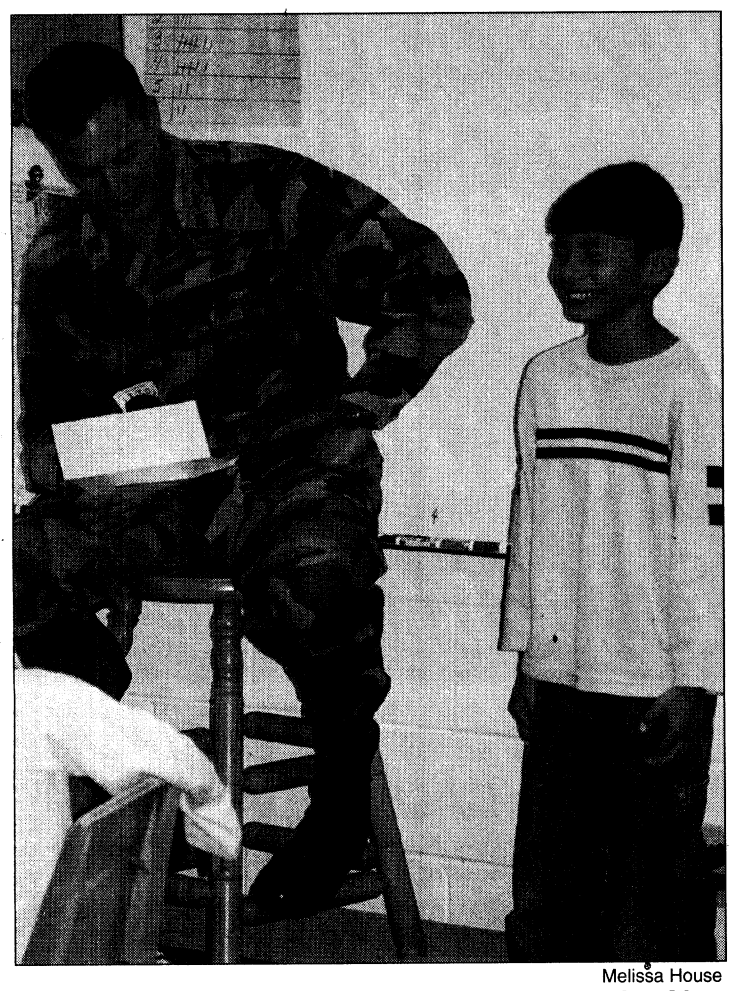
Twelve Days of Christmas, Nature's Wonderland and Callaway's newest scene, The Enchanted Rainbow Forest, where pixies sprinkle magic dust and transform a winter landscape into a springtime flower garden.

Over the river and through the woods, the tour winds through 18 animated light displays, rivaling anything Disney ever produced.



In between scenes, trolley riders join in rousing rounds of Christmas carols. For just an hour, all the world is a stage, and you're right smack-dab in the middle of it. It's take-you-back-to-your-childhood fun.

Even here in the South, where the weather's mostly mild, it can bit a bit nippy on the open air trolley. Be sure to bundle up accordingly and take along a lap blanket.

Callaway's Fantasy In Lights is open through Dec. 28. Tickets to tour in your own vehicle are $12 plus tax for adults and $6 plus tax for children 6-12. Trolley tickets are $14 plus tax for adults, $7 plus tax for children. Children 5 and younger are admitted free but require a "free child" ticket. Group rates are available.

Though Fantasy In Lights is open all week, reservations are required Friday through Sunday and Dec. 13-28. Call (800) CALLAWAY.

partnership as he handed them their letters and gave the students a short pep talk.

"You are great kids," he said, "and you can all be patriotic by doing well in school and by being respectful to your parents and teachers."

Back in the media center, the cadre members shared their feelings about the video and the letters.

"I was touched," said Sgt. 1st Class Paul Oden, the brigade security manager and partnership in education coordinator.

"These kids put together an awesome video. It's the best one I've seen, and the kids did it."

The soldiers shared experiences from the classrooms they visited. The children expressed their gratitude to the soldiers by saluting them, offering nickels, hugs and even presenting one reader with a toy car.

"This is a good thing for the kids," said Margaret Koger, Wilson's gifted education teacher.

"Even the toughest of boys were touched by what their parents wrote to them."

Oden said that the BCTB volunteers have some form of contact with the students monthly.

The cadre adopt individual classes, he said, and work on building a good soldier-child relationship.

The Wilson-BCTB partnership earned a gold award at last year's regional Partnership in Education meeting.

Video honors veterans

Wilson Elementary School

Gifted education students from Wilson School presented a video to their Partners in Education, the Basic Combat Training Brigade, in honor of Veterans Day. The video, entitled, "What Is This Thing We Call Patriotism — Lessons In Valor," included interviews with veterans and active-duty soldiers.

"We have wanted to do a special tribute to our veterans for several years," said Margaret Koger, gifted education teacher. "This year, the timing was right. The students have learned so much from our Partners through our Army Values emphasis, and they have come to an appreciation of what our veterans did for us in the past.."

Students began their work on the project by interviewing soldiers, including Major Gen. Paul Eaton, post commanding general and Col. Tom Cole, BCTB commander, as well as many members of BCTB.

The students asked these soldiers three basic questions: What is patriotism? How can children demonstrate patriotism? In what ways are children today more or less patriotic than in the past?

This observation led students to question whether people who had served in the military still felt patriotic after having been exposed to dangerous, combat experiences.

The next step was to gather film footage of veterans who shared their thoughts about having to leave their families.

Students were impressed with the comments of World War II veterans Jack Gill and John Hagler. Gill said that while combat had been rough, seeing the flag waving "still brings tears to my eyes.

Hagler spoke of love of country and went on to say that, "Even now, if another nation threatened us, I wouldn't mind at all — even though I'm a lot older — doing my part again, doing whatever I could to harass the enemy."

Through interviews with Jan Beer and Wayne Andrews, Vietnam veterans, and John Mitchell, veteran of Grenada, students learned that duty enhances patriotic spirit and is a sign of maturity.

Through his interview, Eaton explained how students can demonstrate their patriotism.

"I want our students to be ready," Eaton said. "I want you to be physically fit, morally straight, and I want you to get the most out of school that you can."

This will help students, when they become adults, Eaton said. To be prepared for service to their country through whatever capacity they may be called.

"I am very pleased with the outcome of the project," said Wanda Person, media specialist.

"The video brings together a lot of things that have been happening in our school. It ties together our work with Lynn Cheney's book, America, A Patriotic Primer, with regard to ideas of patriotism, valor, and heroes; and it demonstrates that our students have internalized the messages that they get from the soldiers of BCTB who talk with them monthly about Army values."

Student dreams of being astronaut

Wilson Elementary School

Wilson Elementary School fifth-grade student Brittany Bullock, daughter of Sgt. Joe and Patricia Fieldings, was recently selected to participate in the Young Astronaut Program at Columbus State University's Coca-Cola Space Science Center.

The Young Astronaut Program, which is part of the Young Astronaut Council, is the largest youth aerospace organization in the world. Formed by the White House in 1984, the mission of the program is to help youth experience the fun and adventure of learning.

The Coca-Cola Space Science Center currently has two Young Astronaut Chapters, a pilot chapter for grades five and six and a commander chapter for grades seven and eight. There are 25 students in each chapter and groups meet once a month. Selection for the Coca-Cola Space Science Center YAP chapters is based on answering questions related to space topics and essay writing.

Brittany is excited about being the first student from Wilson to participate in the program.

Courtesy photo

"I can't wait to find out what we'll be doing at our monthly meetings. I think it's great that we'll have connections with real astronauts at NASA."

Brittany is also excited about meeting other fifth-graders around the area.

The Young Astronaut Program is not Brittany's only honor. She is also the first student at Wilson to be awarded a grant from the school's Horace Williams Memorial Scholarship Fund. Named for Fort Benning School Superintendent Dell McMullen's late father, the fund was established to provide awards for academic excellence to deserving students.

Brittany's teachers agree that the hard-working fifth-grader was an excellent choice to be the first recipient.

"Brittany certainly meets the criteria for the scholarship fund," said science teacher Brooke Plemmons. "She always goes the extra mile in all of her work."

Fourth-graders create businesses

Wilson Elementary School

Running a successful business requires a balance between hard work and fun. Just ask the students in Jennifer Brown's fourth-grade social studies classes. For the past several weeks, the students have studied economics and its relationship to the free enterprise system.

After learning basic economic terms and how they connect to our economy, students were given the task of creating an imaginary product and designing an eye-catching advertisement.

In the process, students were introduced to many aspects of business, including what a business is, the different jobs within a business, how to obtain funding to start a business and how to design a cost effective product while maintaining quality.

Brown believes students get excited about learning in this type of environment.

"Teaching the basics of entrepreneurship and economics helps to engage students in activities that reinforce math, science, art and language skills," Brown said. "It is also a great way to encourage cooperation."

Because the project involved hands-on learning, students were able to make connections between what they were learning in school and what happens in the business world. They were able to engage in problem-solving and decision-making skills.

"I think this type of project is important because it exposes students to real-world information through a hands-on experience," Brown said. "Students experienced what it was like to start up a business; they didn't just learn it."

Fourth-grader Sadie Sabatino agrees.

"I liked doing the project because it was fun," Sabatino said. "Coming up with ideas and creating my advertisement was challenging. My mom helped, and she enjoyed it too."

Lauren Gerber enjoyed doing the background work for her project.

"I liked using the computer to help with the research," Gerber said. "I would really like to make and sell my Karaoke Party Machine."

Auditions for adults and children 10 and older for the Human Experience Children's Theatre production of "The Little Mermaid," will be held Dec 2-3 at 6 p.m. at the Human Experience Theatre. For more information, call 323-3689

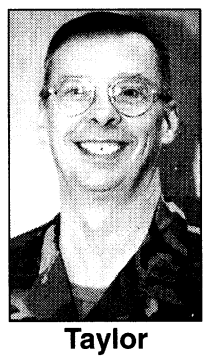
Thanksgiving pivotal — even in bad times

Holiday reminds believers in God of his sacrifice

Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Taylor
USAIC Chaplains Office



Don't we have a lot to be thankful for? This holiday most of us will eat too much, spend time with those we love, relax and just have a good time. It is pretty easy to be thankful for all the good things we're blessed to enjoy, but it is quite different to be thankful in all things.

Those pilgrim families that we think about this time of year were very thankful that November 1621. (Actually it was October, but that doesn't matter here.)

They had food to eat, were at peace with their neighbors and had survived the first difficult year in their new world.

But times were tough. Crops were meager. Disease had taken its toll.

REFLECTIONS

Taylor

Fresh supplies from England had not arrived. Many had died from disease and starvation.

Just a few years before, in 1607, Martin Reinkardht, a pastor in a small town in Germany, was having a tough time finding things to be thankful for.

The Thirty Years War was raging in Europe and his area of the country had suffered greatly.

Famine had swept the land, and in one year, 6,000 people died of a plague. Reinkardht buried his own wife and children.

Yet, in the midst of great personal suffering he wrote these words:

Now thank we all our God,
with heart and hands and voices,
who wondrous things has done,
in whom his world rejoices;
who from our mother's arms
has blessed us on our way with countless gifts of love and still is ours today.
O may this bounteous God through all our life be near us, with ever joyful hearts
and blessed peace to cheer us;
and keep us in his grace,
and guide us when perplexed,
and free us from all ills
in this world and the next.

The Christian faith affirms that in the midst of all sorts of difficulties, we can turn to our God in praise, being thankful in all things.

CHAPEL NOTES

Carols by Candlelight — The fourth annual Carols by Candlelight will at 7 p.m. Dec. 8 at the Infantry Center Chapel.

The program will present music of the holidays. In addition to choral and youth group presentations, Cy Dietrich, music teacher at Dexter Elementary School, will sing, as will Joy Dillow of Columbus.

The program will last about an hour and is free to the public.

Protestant Women of the Chapel — The PWOC meets at 9:30 a.m. Thursdays in Custer Terrace Chapel on Craig Drive.

The program each week includes a time of music and worship, fellowship and study.

Child care is provided.

For more information, call Krista Moore at 323-0128.

Club Beyond — The chapel youth group sponsored by the Protestant chapels meets from 4 to 6 p.m. every Sunday. All teens are invited to the programs, which include group study, recreation and worship.

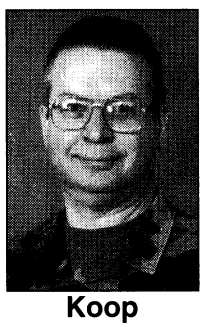
Many special activities are provided on other days. The club meets at the chapel youth center beside Gowdy Baseball Stadium.

For more information, call 545-2359.

Sunday School — Protestant religious education classes for children and adults are at 9 a.m. Sundays at White Elementary School.

Transportation from the housing areas is available and child care is provided.

For more information, call 545-4715.



Matchmaking leaves much to be desired

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

The concept is intriguing. Singles get together to meet and assess each other for three minutes at a time before moving to another potential date.

What are the benefits? Singles can quickly meet others from outside their normal social groups. They aren't restricted to personal ads or online dating services with dated photographs and inflated resumes.

They can quickly screen through those they don't want to know better. If the person makes a good initial impression, they can make further contact and go out for coffee or a date. If they don't generate a "spark," they can move on to the next potential relationship. Unlike a blind date that doesn't "click," they don't have to waste the rest of the evening.

Koop

Structured round-robin introductions aren't for everyone. Some people find it difficult to "sell" themselves in just three minutes. They feel like they are on an assembly line or on display in a meat market.

Looks, jobs and goals are a small part of a relationship. Emotional maturity, caring and kindness, personal values, loyalty and trust, and wisdom are not easily assessed in three minutes.

For me, today's "fast-food" approach to life leaves a lot to be desired. Old-fashioned socials and parties still afford opportunities to meet new people without being on an assembly line. People are free to move on to someone else if the person they've met isn't interesting.

Do you feel that you're on the sidelines watching life pass you by? Free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail raymond.koop@benning.army.mil.

Then Jesus said to his disciples; "Therefore I tell you, do not worry about your life, what you will eat; or about your body, what you will wear. Life is more than food, and the body more than clothes."

Road Dogs sneak past Head Hunters

104th soldiers take victory in overtime

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The 104th Transportation Company Road Dogs clawed their way to a 14-13 victory over the Head Hunters, pushing their record to 11-1 and making them a favorite for the post intramural football playoffs.

Numerous blunders and an abundance of penalties for both teams left the game scoreless at halftime.

"We made a lot of critical mistakes in the first half," said Carlton T. Glenn, Road Dogs' coach. "Our biggest problem was poor execution."

Both teams came out of halftime like gladiators. The energy levels hit the roof, and the players started hitting the ground.

The Head Hunters quarterback threw a javelin to the endzone, giving them a 6-0 lead.

The Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Head Hunters met little resistance as they slipped across the line for the extra point.

Tempers began to swell as the Road Dogs drove their way down field. Officials had to separate two of the players to avoid a scuffle. The game was on after both teams got a brief lecture on football etiquette.

As the clock ran down, the Road Dogs slipped into the endzone and matched the Head Hunters with an easy extra point.

"We just stuck to the fundamentals and ran the ball," Glenn said. "We did what we had to do and took care of business."

With the score tied at 7-7, the game was forced into overtime, with the Road Dogs in possession.

They slipped by the Head Hunters' defense, reaching the goal line on a fourth down. Dorinzo Walters plowed his way through the Head Hunters defense for the extra point in the game winning play.

Once the Head Hunters got their hands on the ball, Donte Brown pushed his way to the endzone on a second down.

With the outcome of the game riding on one last play, both teams squared off in silence.

The Head Hunters tried for a pass to the endzone, and it was easily smacked down by the Road Dogs.

"This was a motivational game," Glenn said. "We were able to capitalize on the plays we wanted to run, and we used everything the Head Hunters defense gave us.

"I was never worried. I know the team will always come through."

"I feel really good about the win," said Fred Hamilton, Road Dogs' quarterback. "No one person is responsible for this. The credit goes to the whole team."

Special Olympians compete at Peach Lanes

Winter Games build character, work motor skills

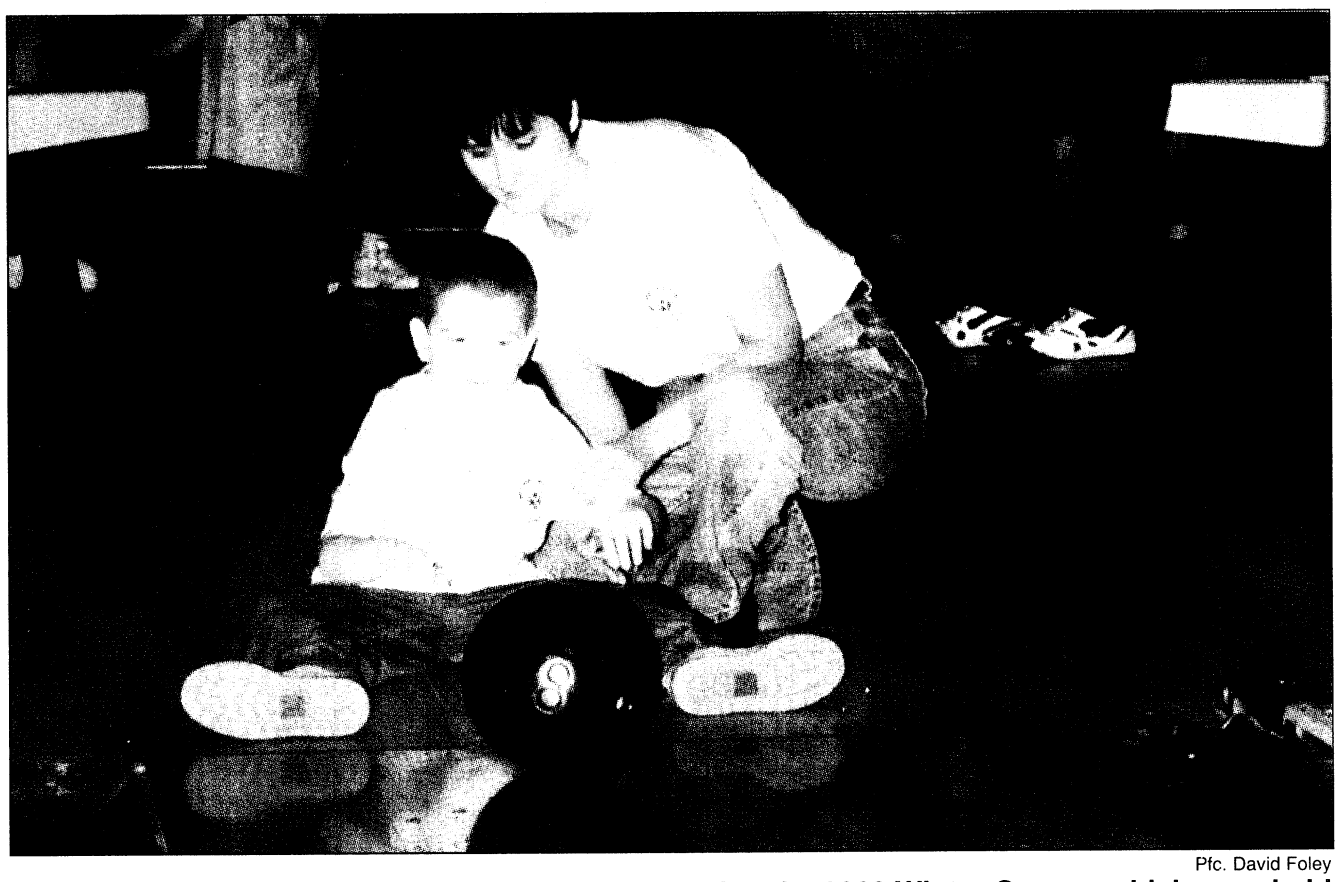
Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Muscogee County Special Olympics 2002 Winter Games were held at Peach Lanes Bowling Alley Friday.

The bowlathon-type competition filled the building with Special Olympians and volunteers from Georgia and Alabama. Most of the volunteers came from Glenwood High School's Partners Club, with more than 100 students who volunteer their time in the community.

Other schools in the area also provided help with the event. Students from Dexter Elementary partnered with athletes from Loyd Elementary.

"I think it's important for the students to have a community service project," said Marge Brasfield, gifted teacher at Dexter Elementary. "We discussed several projects, and the students chose this one. I've been impressed with the progress of their interaction and the things they've been able to do together. All you have to do is watch their faces, and you'll understand."



Many of the athletes and volunteers made new friends during the event.

"It made me feel good to see them being happy," said Hillary Hare, a fifth-grade volunteer from Dexter. "It just feels good to see someone who is so happy. They just burst out in laughter. Every part of this is great."

"The Special Olympics is an excellent opportunity for everyone involved," said Mable Wilson, special education teacher at Loyd. "It builds character, gets the children out in the community, works on their motor skills and makes them a part of what's going on around them."

One athlete who has been involved with the Special Olympics for the last 16 years has pushed his limits and reaped the rewards.

Michael Cureton, a Columbus High School graduate, was on hand to tell his success story with the Special Olympics. Cureton was in ROTC at high school and always wanted to be a soldier. He started going to the Special Olympics track and field competitions because he liked to see the color guard. He later went on to compete in the Special Olympics World Games in 1999 and spent a day in basic combat training. Cureton received a certificate of graduation from 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, and was invited to the Ranger Ball.

Libby Campos, right, helps Joshua Payne bowl during the 2002 Winter Games, which were held at Peach Lanes Bowling Alley Friday.

"The military has really helped me out a lot," Cureton said. "The Army is great."

"Soldier involvement is a good thing, and the athletes really enjoy it," said Staff Sgt. Steve Tinney, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 29th Infantry Regiment, and a volunteer coordinator for Fort Benning. "The military is really a big deal to the athletes, and it gives us a chance to do something for the community.

"We expect to get about 300 volunteers from the Army for the Spring Games, and we encourage all soldiers to volunteer. It can really make a difference in somebody's life," Tinney said.

For more information about volunteering call Staff Sgt. Steve Tinney at 544-6319.

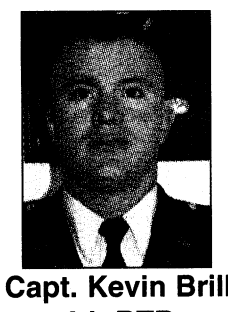
Soldiers travel west, find gold, silver in Colorado

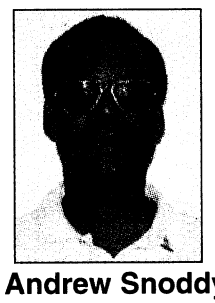
Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs

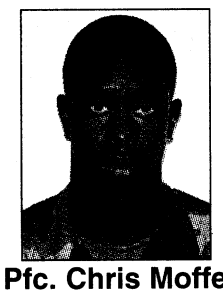
Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit of Fort Benning have scored some major victories recently.

The following results are some of their accomplishments over the past month:

• Olympic Training Center Smallbore Elite Finals, Colorado Springs, Colo., Nov. 14-17 — USAMU international rifle shooter Spc. Mary K. Elsass took the Gold Medal in the Stand Finale, which Maj. Michael E. Anti got the Bronze. Spc. Trevor D. Gathman brought home the Gold Medal in the Stand Final II, with Elsass taking the Bronze. Gathman also got the Silver Medal in the Stand Final III match and the Bronze Medal in the Stand Final I match. Anti received the Silver Medal and Gathman the Bronze in the Prone Final I.







• National Rifle Association 2700 Regional Championship, Phoenix, Ariz., Nov. 15-17 — Service pistol shooter Staff Sgt. Thomas A. Rose won the overall Grand Aggregate; he also won the Center Fire and .45-Caliber Matches and took second place in the .22-Caliber Match.

Sgt. 1st Class Roger C. Jacobson finished in third place in the Grand Aggregate and placed second in the Center Fire Match. Staff Sgt. Gregory S. Wilson won the .22-Caliber Match, in which Sgt. Adam E. Sokolowski was third.

• U.S. Practical Shooting Association Area 2 Championships, Mesa, Ariz., Nov. 7-10 — Action pistol shooter Spc. Maxient J. Michel beat 370 other competitors to win the Area 2 Championship; he was also the winner in the Military Division and Junior Division.

Staff Sgt. Julie A. Goloski took second place in the Women's Division and the Military Division.

how can you keep a kid off drugs?
The truth is, a little of your time can make a lifetime of difference. Because kids with something to do are less likely to do drugs. You can help. For more information on drug prevention programs in your community, call or visit:

THERE'S NOT ENOUGH ART IN OUR SCHOOLS.

NO WONDER PEOPLE THINK

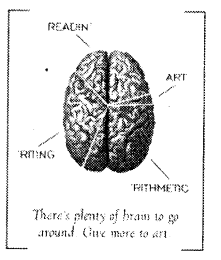
LOUIS ARMSTRONG

WAS THE FIRST MAN TO WALK ON THE MOON.

It's a long way from the Apollo Theatre to the Apollo program. And while his playing may have been "as lofty as a moon flight," as Time magazine once suggested, that would be as close as Louis Daniel Armstrong would ever get to taking "one small step for man."

Instead of a giant leap, Louis Armstrong delivered one giant free-form crazy jazz groove for mankind.

But as the jazz musician of the 20th century, giant leaps were simply a matter of course for Satchmo. For no one has ever embodied the art form the way he did. It was he who helped make virtuoso solos a part of the vocabulary. It was he who was honored with the title "American goodwill ambassador" by the State Department. It was he who was the last jazz musician to hit #1 on the Billboard pop chart.



Armstrong left his footprints on the jazz world, wearing lace-up oxfords.

Not bad for a kid whose first experience with the trumpet was as a guest in a correctional home for wayward boys. If only today's schools were as enlightened and informed as that reformatory was.

Alas, the arts are dismissed as extravagant in today's schools. This, despite all the studies that show parents believe music and dance and art and drama make their children much better students and better people.

If you feel like your kids aren't getting their fair share, make some noise. To find out how, or for more information about the benefits of arts education, please visit us on the web at AmericansForTheArts.org. Just like the great Louis Armstrong, all you need is a little brass.

There's plenty of brain to go around. Give more to art.

ART. ASK FOR MORE.

Soldiers to get pay raise

Act increases pay at least 4.1 percent Jan. 1

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The National Defense Authorization Act for 2003 funds the military portion of the global war on terrorism and the continuing transformation of the U.S. military to face the threats of the 21st century.

President Bush signed the bill into law Monday during a ceremony at the Pentagon. The act actually allows DoD to spend money released under the 2003 National Defense Appropriations Act, which Bush signed Oct. 23.

Under the two bills, service members will receive at least a 4.1 percent pay raise beginning Jan. 1. Many mid-level NCOs and officers will receive a pay jump of between 5.5 percent to 6.5 percent.

The bills call for an increase in the basic allowance for housing to cut out-of-pocket expenses to 7.5 percent. The bill puts elimination of this financial inequity to service members on course for fiscal 2005.

The act also deals with the hot button issue of concurrent receipt. Currently, military retirees who receive Department of Veterans Affairs disability payments have their retired pay reduced dollar-for-dollar by the VA payment.

The act authorizes an enhanced special compensation for military retirees who "incurred a qualifying combat-related disability." The retiree must have received the Purple Heart for the injury or have a service-connected disability of 60 percent or higher incurred as a direct result of combat or training for combat.

Other personnel portions of the act include a National Service Plan. The new program encourages volunteers to enlist in the military and serve 15 months on active duty, followed by either an additional active-duty period or 24 months in

Soldiers to help fight war on terror

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Soldiers from the 598th Maintenance Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, deployed Wednesday in support of Operation Enduring Freedom.

The mission is to provide technical support and perform repairs on electronic and automotive equipment.

"All members are highly motivated and proud to be doing their part to support the fight against terrorism," said Chief Warrant Officer Thomas Esposito, officer in charge.

During the past year, the company has traveled to Fort Polk, La., to train at the Joint Readiness Training Center and to Fort Irwin, Calif., to train at the National Training Center.

"This is an exciting capstone mission for them," said Capt. Melissa Eslinger, company commander. "They will have an excellent opportunity to reap the dividends of all the training they have received."

Many family members and friends were on hand at the farewell.

"I wish I could go with him because we just got married in May," said fellow soldier and wife of Sgt. Justin Barr, Sgt. Ann Marie Johnson. "We have to try to make the best of it. I plan on sending him a lot of care packages."

Post seeks award

ACOE team to visit Fort Benning

The words, "Army Community of Excellence Winner," painted across the Custer Road bridge over I-185 may soon have an even broader meaning.

Fort Benning is a finalist for the Commander in Chief's award.

"The Army Communities of Excellence program is designed to change the thinking from minimal essential to maximum possible when it comes to providing support to soldiers," said Gen. Kevin P. Byrnes, former director of the Army staff for Army Chief of Staff Gen. Erik Shinseki and now the commanding general for the Training and Doctrine Command. "The award measures the performance and productivity in the entire military community."

As part of the competition, Fort Benning spent months preparing a 50-page document analyzing the strong points and the weak points of the installation. By using the Army Performance Improvement Criteria, the installation targeted needed improvements and recorded the changes that had been made from previous years. The results of the self assessment were then forwarded to TRADOC and later to the Department of the Army for

Post can expect ripple from media blast

M-1 A1 live fire part of class for journalists

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

As media movers and shakers converge on Fort Benning Dec. 16-20, officials warn post residents they'll likely feel the fall-out.

A live-fire demonstration on Red Cloud Range is one of many classes television, print and radio journalists will attend during the second of a series of Department of Defense-sponsored media predeployment training.

The demonstration will include an M-1 A1 tank, which is "very loud," said Monica Manganaro, spokesperson for Fort Benning's Public Affairs Office. In fact, residents may be startled by just how loud it is.

"We're used to having live fires at the ranges, but this one may surprise people," Manganaro said.

"We don't want neighbors to be alarmed."

The rehearsal is Dec. 18 and the live fire is Dec. 19. Dixie Road will be closed intermittently 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Dec. 18 and 9 a.m. until noon and 2:30 to 6 p.m. Dec. 19.

Live-fire 120 mm mortar "rehearsal" demonstrations are scheduled for the 12, 13, 16 and 19.

The demonstrations are among several classes that media professionals will attend, including basic battlefield first aid skills, reaction to direct and indirect fire, NBC protection, mine awareness and counter measures, helicopter safety, camouflage and proper battlefield conduct.

The training is designed to teach journalists the basic skills they'll need if they accompany U.S. troops into combat, said Lt. Col. Gary Keck, spokesman for the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense.

"It's not a requirement for journalists to cover the military, but it's certainly a good opportunity for those who need to understand the military way of life," Keck said. "It will help them feel more comfortable in our environment and reduce the risk to them and the unit they're accompanying."

The journalists will come from major radio and TV stations, including CNN, FOX, CBS, NBC and ABC, various wire services and publications such as USA Today and the LA Times.

The first round of media training took place in November at Quantico Marine Corps Combat Development Command in Virginia.

"We put out a request to all the services to conduct training," Keck said.

"Fort Benning was the first Army site to respond. We appreciate it. We believe this kind of training will enhance the protection of journalists and the force. The Department of Defense sees this as a win-win situation."

I'm dreaming of a (trendy shade 'tween brown and green) Christmas

Bridgett Siter

COMMENTARY

It sounded so simple, really, but then nothing ever is. I just thought the Christmas tree would look good in the corner of the dining room this year. Something different, you know?

Of course, the arrangement of black and white family photos would have to come down for the time being. They just didn't make a good backdrop for a tree.

So shortly before dark, I shuffled a few small pieces of furniture and removed the photos, all 10 of them. Down they came, with bits and chunks of plaster, leaving pock marks and gaping wounds in these ancient walls.

No big deal — a little spackle here and there, a little sanding, a little touch up paint, and we're in business.

I grabbed the half-empty can of paint from the basement. "Brass Tack" I think it was called, a trendy shade somewhere between brown and green. I slapped it on in great big brush strokes, because there were a lot of holes, and watched in horror as it dried darker and darker.

Too late it dawned on me, Brass Tack was the color of the living room walls, not the dining room. Back to the basement I went and emerged with "Dried Grass," which is, of course, a trendy shade somewhere between brown and green. And again I slapped in on the walls, this time in GREAT BIG brush strokes to cover the other, darker brush strokes.

And "Whew," I said as I cleaned up my mess, toted the cans back to the basement and returned to survey my handiwork. It was rapidly drying to a shade much lighter than the one before the one before.

There are no more trendy shades of green-brown in the basement, so I figured I'd have to repaint the entire room, and that was way more than I could deal with at 11 p.m. Like Scarlet O'Hara, I'll think about it another day.

I woke the next morning, staggered toward the kitchen by way of the dining room, and cringed at the two giant mottled paint splotches in the corner. Much too big for the tree to cover.

I toyed with the idea of passing it off as intentional. I could call it "Brass Grass." I've seen much worse on HGTV. But, no, I couldn't live with it, even if everybody else could.

So, before my first cup of coffee, I set about mixing paint. Again and again and again, until I achieved what I believe is a fairly good match to the original paint color, whatever that was. Close enough that I only had to paint the two walls, instead of all four. If you don't look too close — and I'm sure you won't — you'll never know the difference.

I'd just finished the trimwork and started painting the walls when my son came bounding down the stairs. Entirely too perky.

"Uh, Mom, what're you doing?"

"What does it look like I'm doing? I'm painting the dining room so I can put up the Christmas tree."

To his credit, he didn't bat an eye, didn't miss a step on his way to the kitchen.

"Wow, you don't do anything halfway, do you Mom?"

There I stood in my paint spattered pajamas, wondering why I ever thought the tree should go someplace different this year, when the phone rang. Of course.

It was my editor, wondering if I could write a commentary about holiday stress.

Hmm, I think I can come up with something. Just let me finish painting the dining room and get the tree up.

Lack of light leaves some longing for sun

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

COMMENTARY

When the powers that be arranged for me to grow up in Hawaii, they knew exactly what they were doing. That close to the equator, the days are almost equally long, and there's always plenty of sunshine to go around. Life was good.

Then I moved.

The Fort Bragg, N.C., unit I was assigned to did PT in the afternoon all year long, and I got a dose of rays daily. But halfway through my tour there, when I hit my mid-twenties, the end of daylight saving each fall kicked off the start of a period of unease that rarely lifted until spring.

At about the same time, coincidentally, the large glass windows in my office were covered with an "energy saving" reflective film to keep the office cooler. Instead of an office that was flooded with sunlight, the room turned gray and it always looked as if it was about to rain cats and dogs.

Looking back, that was the year I was initiated in to the Seasonal Affective Disorder club. Most of its members are women who are first affected by this winter depression in their 20s.

It's estimated that six of every 100 Americans suffer from winter depression, and another 10 to 20 percent suffer from mild cases of SAD. I have lots of company.

Common symptoms of winter SAD include cravings for sweet or starchy foods, drops in energy levels, fatigue and a tendency to oversleep, irritability, difficulty concentrating, an increased sensitivity to social rejection and an avoidance of social situations.

A less common form of SAD affects people in the late spring and summer. Symptoms of summer depression include poor appetite, weight loss and insomnia.

Poor appetite and weight loss? Not me. Sometime in October, I would start craving breads, pastas, potatoes and junk food, packing away calories like a bear prepping for a long winter nap. A waist is a terrible thing to mind, but every year, by Thanksgiving, I was a carbohydrate junkie and beyond caring.

I came to dread the fall, winter and the holidays that come with them, blaming the irritability, low energy levels and desire to cocoon myself at home that came with them to the drop in temperature and poor weather.

Some falls were better than others. Blessed with a warm winter I would almost feel like myself.

During the years that I kept a small flock of exotic birds, I was hardly affected at all. My little flock lived in a room illuminated with full spectrum lights. As I tended the birds every day, I was working under the same kind of lights that are often prescribed for treatment of SAD. No wonder the members of my bird club were such happy campers all year long.

Like Superman and red Kryptonite, I can't predict exactly how, or how much I will be affected from year to year, I just know that the odds are pretty good that I will be.

This year the edginess started earlier than usual. I put warning flags out to my family and friends. SAD is not an excuse for boorish behavior, but forewarned is forearmed.

I managed to keep the carbohydrate cravings in check, but had trouble focusing because I was always tired. A cup of coffee would pick me up, but concentration was still a struggle. When the caffeine kicked in, I would shift into warp speed. And it was exhausting, which compounded the drop in my energy level when the caffeine wore off.

If I could have, I would have only been seen at home, the office or on the Riverwalk, where I've learned that a long bike ride can drag a demon or two down to manageable size.

I gave up trying to gut it out the way I usually do and talked to our family doctor. He confirmed what I have suspected for years and prescribed some medication, which I now take daily.

I prescribed a full spectrum light, which has been clinically proven as a treatment for SAD, but which I haven't installed yet. I make it a point to eat right and exercise regularly, which helps me sleep and keeps "lethargic" out of my dictionary.

And things are looking up. Spring isn't as far off as it looked a month ago.

Get out and get some holiday spirit

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

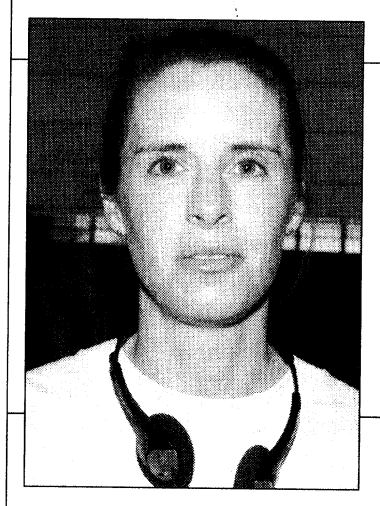
COMMENTARY

If you're like me, you might be having a bit of trouble coming to terms with the fact that the holiday season is officially here.

So, to help things along, I jumped at the chance to go and see the annual tree and menorah lighting ceremony at the Field of Four Chaplains. My boys grumbled and complained all the way up until Santa made his grand entrance on a neon yellow fire truck. My eyes actually got a little misty after the lights went on and the crowd started singing Santa Claus is Coming to Town. But hey, at that moment, it was really beginning to feel a lot like Christmas to me.

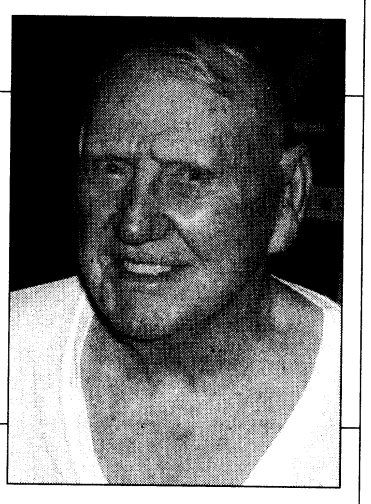
I'm going to continue to ride the wave of holiday spirit by trying to see all of the events around post and in Columbus in the next few weeks. Hopefully, I'll be motivated to drag out the decorations and get to work this weekend.

You can bet that proverbial bottom dollar that I'll be at the Officer Spouses' Club Bazaar bright and early tomorrow morning at 10 a.m. I'm way behind the power curve on my Christmas shopping, and I'll be trying to find some unique gifts to send to my friends. If you're lucky, I won't buy out all of the door prize tickets!



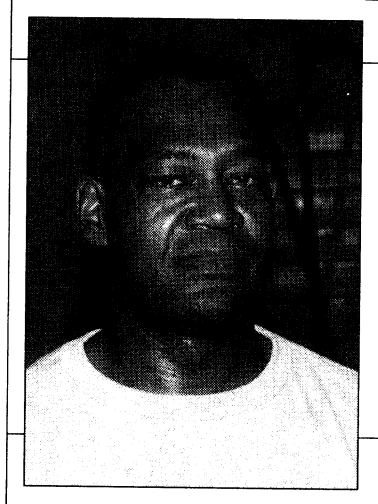
One of the easiest ways to get into the holiday spirit is by listening to some good holiday music. And I mean the well rehearsed, well performed variety-not some country singer on the radio butchering Silent Night.

I'm picking up my free tickets for the Infantry Center Band concert at the RiverCenter at 5:30 p.m. Dec. 8, and I'll drag my grumpy sons along because I know the band will give a most excellent concert that will warm their little hearts.

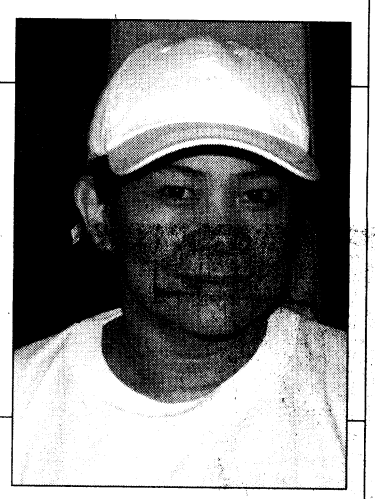


Those of you who can't make it to the concert can wait until the concert comes to you in McGraw Manor Dec. 10, Custer Terrace Dec. 12, Bouton Heights and Davis Hills Dec. 17 and Main Post Dec. 19. All of those concerts will begin at 6 p.m.

VARIOUS VOICES



What do you think about the changes at Briant Wells Field House?



Cheri Meyer, family member — "It's great. There's plenty of new equipment, and you don't have to wait to use it."

Finas Harris, Columbus — "It's very inspiring. It provides more variety for your everyday workout, and since it's been improved, it's given me more desire to workout."

Sgt. 1st Class Wade Capers, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment — "I think they did a fine job. It's sort of upsetting they had to take the basketball court away, but sometimes you have to give up something to get something."

Delia Weber, family member — "I really like it. There's more equipment to use and room to move around in to enjoy your workout."

Orlando Valentin, Columbus — "They've added more variety to working out. They made good use of the space they have. Whatever they took away from this facility, there are other facilities on post that can compensate for it."

Capt. Stacy Picard, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "I think it's great because it allows soldiers an alternative method of doing PT. Also, there are other places on post to play basketball. The overall change affects the majority for the better."

Soldiers raise cash for Santa's Castle

Rangers, candidates donate toys

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

When the soldiers from the 75th Ranger Regiment's 3rd Battalion returned from Afghanistan last December, the deadline for submitting nominations for assistance from Santa's Castle had come and gone, and several dozen families faced a very bleak Christmas.

But castle "elves" came through in the eleventh hour, much like Santa himself. They restocked shelves with toys and opened the castle on Christmas Eve so the rangers could select free gifts for their children.

So impressed was Michelle Votel, wife of the regiment's commander, with the Castle's kindness, she vowed to make certain the rangers returned the favor this year. The regimental headquarters family readiness group made good on that promise Monday, delivering more than $400 and a truckload of toys to the Castle.

"We were so thankful for what they did for us. There was just no question that we'd help out this year," Votel said. "Fort Benning always supports the Ranger Regiment. We wanted to give something back. It's a kind of thank you."

The FRG raised money, and collected more than 100 toys with the help of a local radio station, Sunny 100, which sponsored a toy drive via live broadcast Saturday.

Brenda Donlin, inventory manager for Santa's Castle, said the toys and money will go a long way toward helping Fort Benning families who can't afford Christmas this year.

"These are our crunch days," Donlin said, noting the Dec. 16 deadline for donations. "We hope to provide gifts for between 1,200 and 1,400 kids. Fortunately we've had a couple of surprises recently, like this one."

> "We wanted to do something timely, something that would really make a difference at Christmas."

> Senior Officer Candidate Mark Vanhanehan
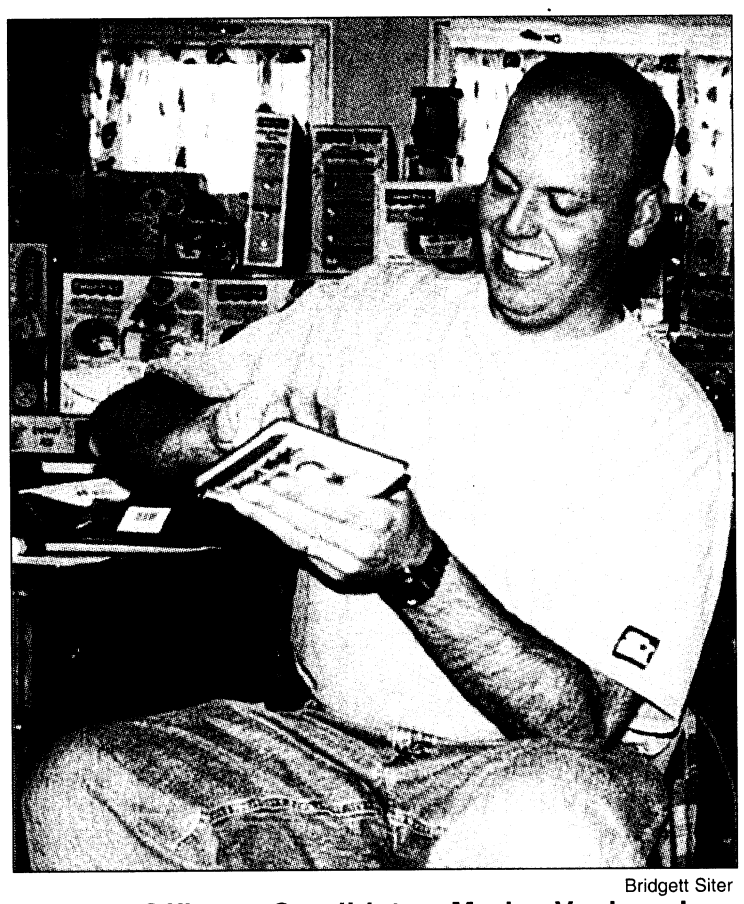
> 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

The other "surprise," Donlin said, was a major contribution, in time and money, from the Officer Candidate School's senior officer candidates.

Senior Officer Candidate Jay Figurski rallied his 133 classmates to the cause. They raised more than $2,000 to purchase toys for the Castle and spent two days stocking shelves and repairing the exterior of the castle.

A handful of senior officer candidates spent Saturday morning shopping for toys, a task Figurski said was "a dream come true."

"Most of us haven't been in a toy store in years. Have you seen the G.I. Joe selection? It's incredible," he said. "We had a lot of fun, but we felt it was really worthwhile, too."



Worthwhile and educational, said Senior Officer Candidate Mark Vanhanehan.

"We had absolutely no concept of how much toys cost," he said. "I don't have kids, but I used to be enlisted, and I knew guys who had difficulties with finances. With the price of toys, I can see how it might be hard for someone to afford (Christmas)."

Figurski said he believes the classes contribution will "make an impact" on Fort Benning where it's most needed.

"We wanted to do something timely, something that would really make a difference at Christmas," he said. "I know class's usually build monuments or fix buildings, but we wanted to do something that would touch lives, especially children's."

Anyone interested in touching the life of a child this Christmas by donating toys, time or money can call Santa's Castle at 545-1938.

Soldiers spend six months in desert

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Nearly 800 soldiers returned to Fort Benning Nov. 26 after a six-month rotation in Kuwait as part of Operation Desert Spring.

The soldiers of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, spent the six months in the desert training for a possible war with Iraq.

"It was an excellent opportunity for the soldiers to hone their skills and a great opportunity for leaders to apply their knowledge," said Lt. Col. John W. Charlton, Task Force 1-15 commander. "The soldiers had to overcome many obstacles, including blowing sand and temperatures that reached 150 degrees.

"The weather was very hard on the troops and the equipment, but they were able to handle it, and that tells me they are able to handle anything.

"If we were to go to war with Iraq, there is no doubt we would win," Charlton said.

During the rotation, the soldiers learned to rely on each other on a whole new level, said Spc. Jessie Jones.

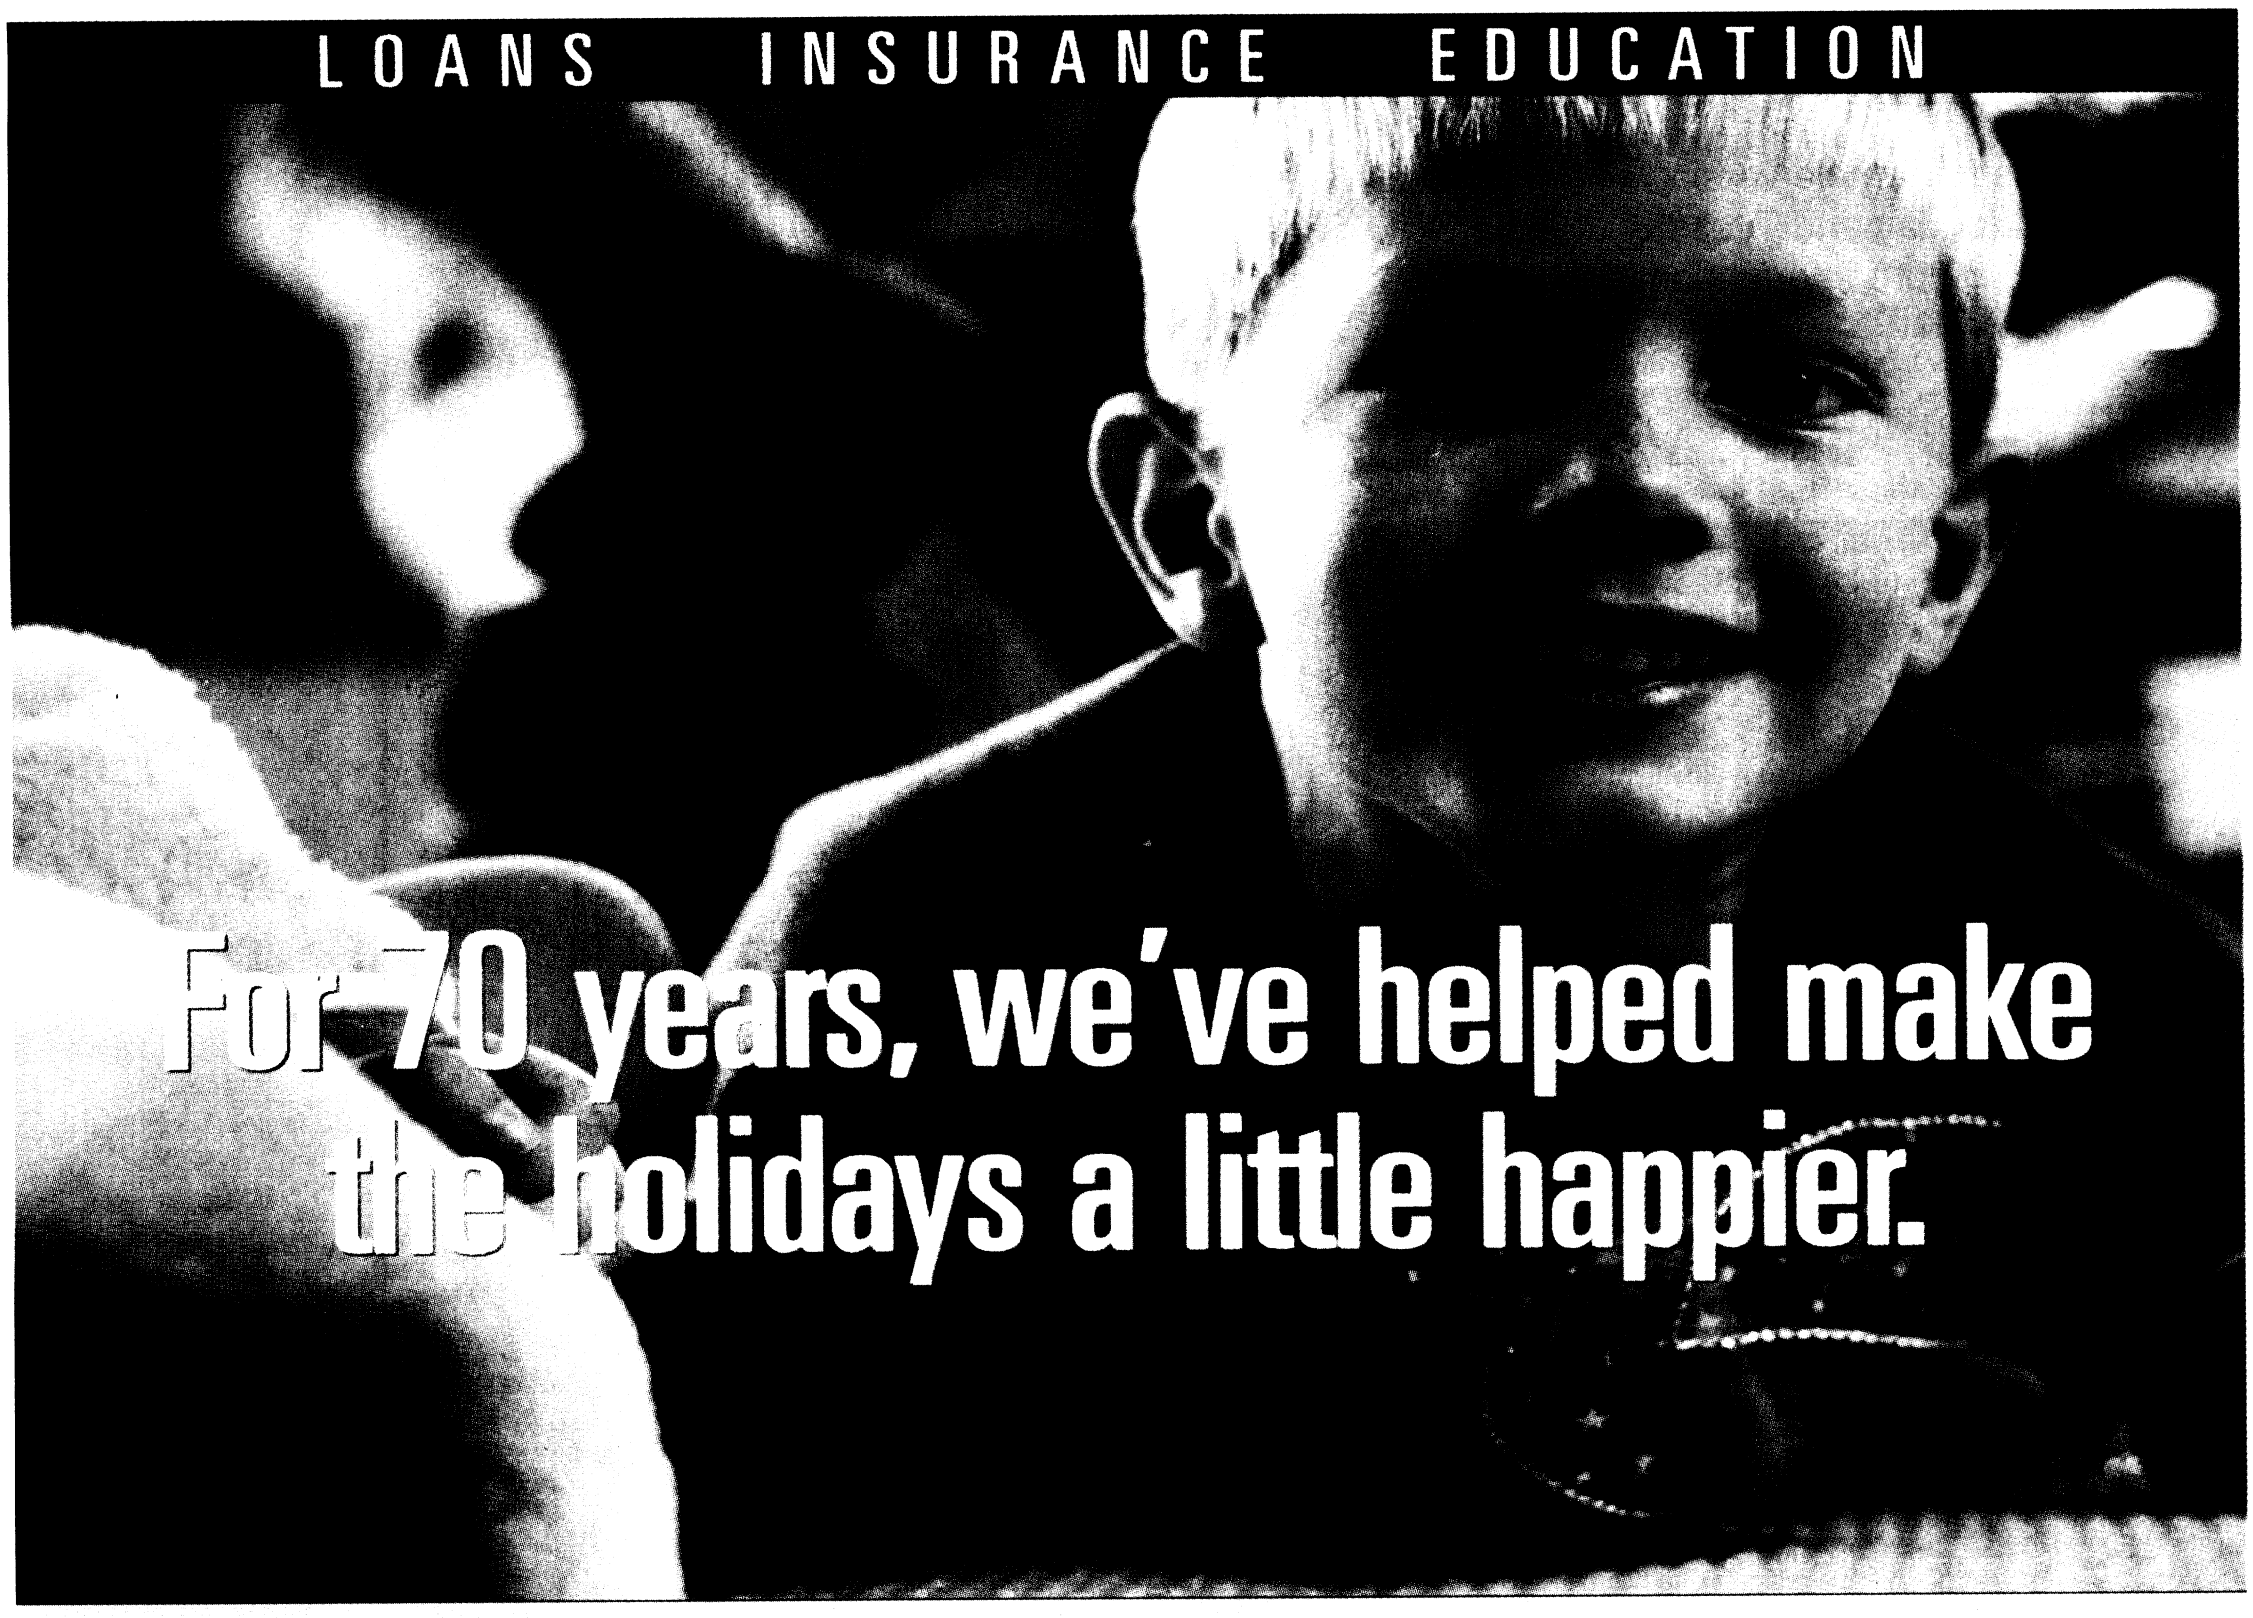
"Any time someone got something from home, we all shared it," he said. "If somebody got cookies or something, they usually made sure everyone got some.

"We don't realize what we have until it is gone," Jones said. "Something as simple as looking at green grass and trees is often taken for granted, but I think we all see things in another way now."

The soldiers had plenty to be thankful for, arriving home just before the holidays.

"It is great getting to see my family, and I can't wait to get some real food," said Spc. William Rich. "I really had a good time over there.

"I was able to train my soldiers and learn new equipment.



"I learned a lot of new battle drills and worked with tankers.

"I am glad I got this training," Rich said. "I know we are ready for whatever happens now. Any obstacle we came up against, we overcame it."

Safety and force protection were paramount, Charlton said.

"I am glad we went the whole six months with no major injuries," he said. "That shows well-disciplined performance.

"I am proud of all the great work these soldiers did. They trained hard and performed superbly."

Post prepares for annual Exodus

Soldiers heading home for holidays

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

A number of units and agencies across post are making final preparations for a large troop movement.

This is no deployment, but rather the precisely orchestrated operation of sending Fort Benning soldiers home for the holidays.

"It represents a lot of efforts on the part of the (training brigade) units," said Basic Combat Training Brigade Commander Lt. Col. Tom Cole. After several rounds of briefings for cadre and soldiers, the Exodus plan is ready for implementation.

The plan is carefully synchronized to lessen traffic congestion.

The first small wave begins Dec. 17 following a BCTB graduation ceremony. Cole said that graduates will be allowed to leave that afternoon. The next wave occurs Dec. 18, when families within driving distance can take their trainees home.

In the early morning hours of Dec. 19, the first set of approximately 22 buses will depart for Greyhound bus terminals in Columbus and Atlanta and Hartsfield International Airport in Atlanta, and then returns to Fort Benning for another load.

> "People at the airport always want to talk to the soldiers and thank them."
> Lt. Col. Tom Cole
> Basic Combat Training Brigade commander

The Fort Benning troop movement is coordinated with other training posts in the area. The cadre from 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, will run the Atlanta operation, Cole said. The drill sergeants supervise the trainees at the airport.

"We have them there to put out fires and assist the soldiers," Cole said.

"Inevitably, someone loses a ticket or an identification card."

Cole said the cadre also make sure the trainees, traveling in the Class B uniform, conduct themselves properly.

"People at the airport always want to talk to the soldiers and thank them," he said.

Soldiers at the airports will also be able to get coffee and donuts at the USO facility and at the soldier reception center in the Delta "B" concourse.

Cole said the soldiers are highly encouraged to leave for the holidays.

Those staying behind are consolidated into one barracks, participate in regular physical training, and are not allowed to leave post unescorted.

Dick Nurnberg, from the Fort Benning-Columbus chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army, said his organization is working with Fort Benning's Directorate of Community Activities to plan some events for trainees remaining here for the holidays.

Called "Operation Holiday," the AUSA-DCA partnership hopes to sponsor a pizza party and movie night as well as obtain tickets for Columbus Cottonmouths and Riverdragons sporting events.

Soldiers who leave for the holidays are not forgotten, Cole said. Drill sergeants call each of the trainees at home while they are on leave to check up on them and also remind them that it is their duty to return to finish training.

"Our biggest concerns are drug use, physical fitness and AWOL," Cole said.

The trainees leave with the understanding that they will have a urinalysis when they return, and that positive testing for an illegal substance will mean an immediate discharge from the Army.

The holiday Exodus ends with the return of the majority of the soldiers on Jan. 2, when cadre will conduct the entire operation in reverse.

Some soldiers will not return until Jan. 7 following the Festival of the Three Kings.

Soldiers 'PT scores' can fall after holidays

Training break affects fitness status

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

"All winning teams are goal oriented. Teams like these win consistently because everyone connected with them concentrates on specific objectives. They go about their business with blinders on; nothing will distract them from achieving their aims."

— Lou Holtz
Former Notre Dame head football coach

Throughout the Army, soldiers are required to take physical training tests at least twice a year. Sand Hill basic trainees are required to pass at least four to graduate.

Soldiers typically set a goal for a PT score and work hard to meet it.

However, there lies a problem for some soldiers ... Exodus — the time soldiers go home for two weeks during the holidays and get out of the daily routine of training and PT.

"For the most part, soldiers come back to the training environment and do horrible on their PT tests or with PT in general," said 1st Sgt. T.A. Graves, A Company 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

"We know when the soldiers are released for Exodus, most of them won't do PT at home," Graves said. "The soldiers get back into the extra curricular activities that they were doing at home before they joined the Army, that is smoking, drinking and not taking care of their body, and it really hurts them.

"Most of the PT scores go down because of this. There are a few who maintain the standard and a slim few that do much better after Exodus," Graves said.

"They come back stronger and more fit because they trained before they came in the Army.

"Those people are generally athletes from high school who know the importance of not losing what they've gained, and they don't let anything distract them from their goal."

The U.S. Army Physical Fitness School suggests a few exercises for soldiers home for the holidays.

"They can be in their home and work on pushups, situps and running," said Staff Sgt. Steven Saenz, instructor at the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School.

• To improve pushups, Saenz suggests soldiers use the 15 to 30 seconds during commercials to "get down and push."

"It's a good workout and you hardly break a sweat doing it," Saenz said. "Plus, you don't miss your show, and both sides win."

• To improve on situps, soldiers can do leg raises, knee tucks or sit up and tighten abs.

"It's easy, and you can lay down while doing the exercises too," Saenz said.

• To improve the run, soldiers can jog in place or chase the dog around the house.

• Stretching is the key.

"It will keep your muscles loose and will help avoid injuries after coming back from Exodus," Saenz said.

For many soldiers, there's a lot of motivation to maintain PT standards while on Exodus.

"I'm motivated because I know I have to pass an end-of-cycle test after I get back to graduate," said Pvt. Matthew Charland, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment. "I want to be on that field graduation day and see how proud my family is of me."

As for working out during the break, Charland plans to do a lot of pushups, situps and running.

"Just because I go on Exodus, doesn't mean I stop doing PT. I have a responsibility to the Army to stay healthy and stay fit to fight," Charland said.

Army combats 'silent killer'

Suicide ranks second after accidents

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

After accidental deaths, suicide is the second largest killer of American military personnel, according to a Department of Defense press release.

Suicide was the cause of death for six Fort Benning soldiers this year alone, said Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop, chief of Family Life Ministries.

The post has a number of courses to help soldiers recognize signs of at risk people and refer them for help.

"Even though we're dealing with a higher stress environment, the military has a lower suicide rate than civilians," Koop said. "That shows our programs are working."

Fort Benning has trained more than 260 soldiers with the Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training program and plans to train the Infantry Training Brigade's drill sergeants in January.

The ASIST class trains soldiers to take immediate life-saving actions when they come into contact with someone who is potentially suicidal, giving them the confidence to help an individual until a mental health care professional can take over, said Lt. Col. Jerry Swanner, Army suicide prevention program manager at the Pentagon.

The Gatekeeper Program is for people in leadership positions like platoon leaders or first sergeants to help them understand the signs and symptoms of depression or suicidal tendencies, Koop said.

The Army is developing a "virtual person" computer simulation that allows people to practice the skills they have learned in suicide prevention training. The program's progress was discussed at the Department of Defense's first Suicide Prevention Forum in November as part of Suicide Prevention week.

"If someone is talking about suicide, tell someone," Koop said. "The worst thing you can do is keep it a secret. You may be the very last person to have a chance to help."

The forum named 2003 the Year for Suicide Prevention, said Dr. David Tornberg, deputy assistant secretary of defense for clinical and program policy.

"This is a devastating and silent killer both in the military and civilian populations, and one which we must strive to conquer through enhanced scientific understanding and intervention," Tornberg said.

Javelin program focuses on improving system

Soldiers give feedback on system

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

Future development for the Javelin system was the reason a group of instructors from the Javelin course visited Lockheed Martin's Missile and Fire Control Operations plant in Troy, Ala., Nov. 26.

The group, which included the Training and Doctrine Systems Manager for Close Combat Missile Systems, learned how the Javelin is assembled and talked with engineers about possible upgrades for the missile system.

"The reason for bringing the Javelin instructors is because they're our subject matter experts," said Col. Mike Beasock, TSM-CCMS. "This small group of instructors is our front line for this weapon."

They understand the weapon's capabilities and are a key component for the progress of the system, he said. Their feedback on this matter is invaluable.

"Our purpose is to have an exchange of ideas," said Steve Hesler, Lockheed Martin's manager of corporate business development in Columbus.

"We would like to hear feedback on how we can make the system better," said Dan Rice, engineer.

Adding more lethality, improving the range, installing locks on targets and getting the missile to hit the target more quickly are just a few ideas the engineers are looking to improve upon, he said.

The Javelin, a man-portable, "fire and forget" antitank weapon, is an outstanding system, Beasock said. Its fire and forget capabilities are truly unmatched.

"It's things like that that give our Army overwhelming capabilities over our adversaries," he said.

Learning how the Javelin is made increases the instructors' knowledge base and gives them more credibility, said Staff Sgt. Marvin Wideman, Javelin NCOIC.

"Our instructors came back with a better view of how the components work together to deliver that lethal blow to the enemy," Wideman said.

The trip gave the instructors the opportunity to speak with the factory workers who make the Javelin and increases the expertise of the entire Javelin program, he said.

"Being able to speak with the workers of Lockheed Martin gives us an appreciation for their hard work and patriotism," Wideman said.

"This is a side of America that we rarely see," Beasock said. "These are great Americans performing a service for the country."

The visit puts a face with the people who are using it, Rice said.

Seeing soldiers lets the workers know their job is important.

"When we deliver a missile, we're confident it's going to work," Rice said.

The most important part of this visit is for the soldiers to learn what makes the Javelin successful and, with their feedback, how the company can make the missile better, Wideman said.

Program helps schools, soldiers

State program pays soldiers to teach

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

When Sgt. 1st Class Michael Nunez began thinking about life after the military, he wondered if it was possible to find another profession that would bring him as much satisfaction and enjoyment as the Army.

"I wanted to continue to do something meaningful with my life," said Nunez, a Fort Benning dental specialist with more than 20 years of active service under his belt. "I wanted to continue to make a difference."

When Nunez heard of the Georgia Troops to Teachers program, a military initiative to help soldiers transition into the teaching profession, he believed he had the opportunity he was looking for.

Through the program, soldiers can receive up to $5,000 to pay for the cost of teacher certification, attend classes on the weekends and be ready for a teaching internship within a semester.

"This program is designed for the soldier who is planning on leaving the Army in less than a year," said Charles Cumiskey, director of the Intern Teaching Program at Columbus State University.

"Georgia classrooms can benefit from the wealth of knowledge of someone who has served our country. The state wants to make the transition to teacher as seamless as possible for them. "

The transition calls for soldiers to attend classes twice a week, and then study another three courses over the Internet during the course of a semester. When the seven-week semester is over, candidates are qualified to begin a teaching internship at one of Georgia's schools.

"Interns will be assigned to a classroom of their own immediately after finishing that first semester," Cumiskey said. "But they aren't left on their own. Our department watches over them by sending mentors out to their classroom regularly."

The internship lasts two years, ending when the student completes their teacher certification requirements.

The idea is to find individuals who have what it takes to be great teachers and give them the tools to bring their expertise to a classroom, while at the same time completing the requirements needed for a teaching certificate, Cumiskey said.

"Military professionals tend to transition extremely well into teaching positions because many of them have already been instructors," Cumiskey said. "They know how to deal with a classroom."

For Nunez, a former instructor at the Army Medical Department School in San Antonio, Texas, the Georgia Troops to Teachers Program is going to allow him to continue doing something he loves.

"I feel very comfortable teaching in front of a classroom," said Nunez, who hopes to be assigned to one of Georgia's middle schools after finishing his semester of classes. "I hope to make an impact on our youth. I think classrooms need more male teachers and I'm excited to eventually be one of them."

Now soldiers don't have to wait until they leave the military to begin the transition. They can begin taking classes before their time is up through Columbus State University and they don't have to shell out any of their own cash if they go through the Troops to Teachers Program.

Applicants must have an undergraduate degree from an accredited university, a 2.5 grade point average, and must pass the PRAXIS 1, a national standardized education test, which is offered weekly at CSU and Fort Benning's education center.

Columbus State University had considered holding classes for the teaching program on Fort Benning beginning in January, but the time crunch kept many applicants from getting the needed paperwork and tests out of the way. CSU will instead hold classes for soldiers beginning in June.

"Soldiers who are interested in beginning the program this summer need to get with our department as soon as possible," Cumiskey said. "We don't want any delays when next semester rolls around."

People sending troops greetings

Web sites offer chance to say thanks

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs

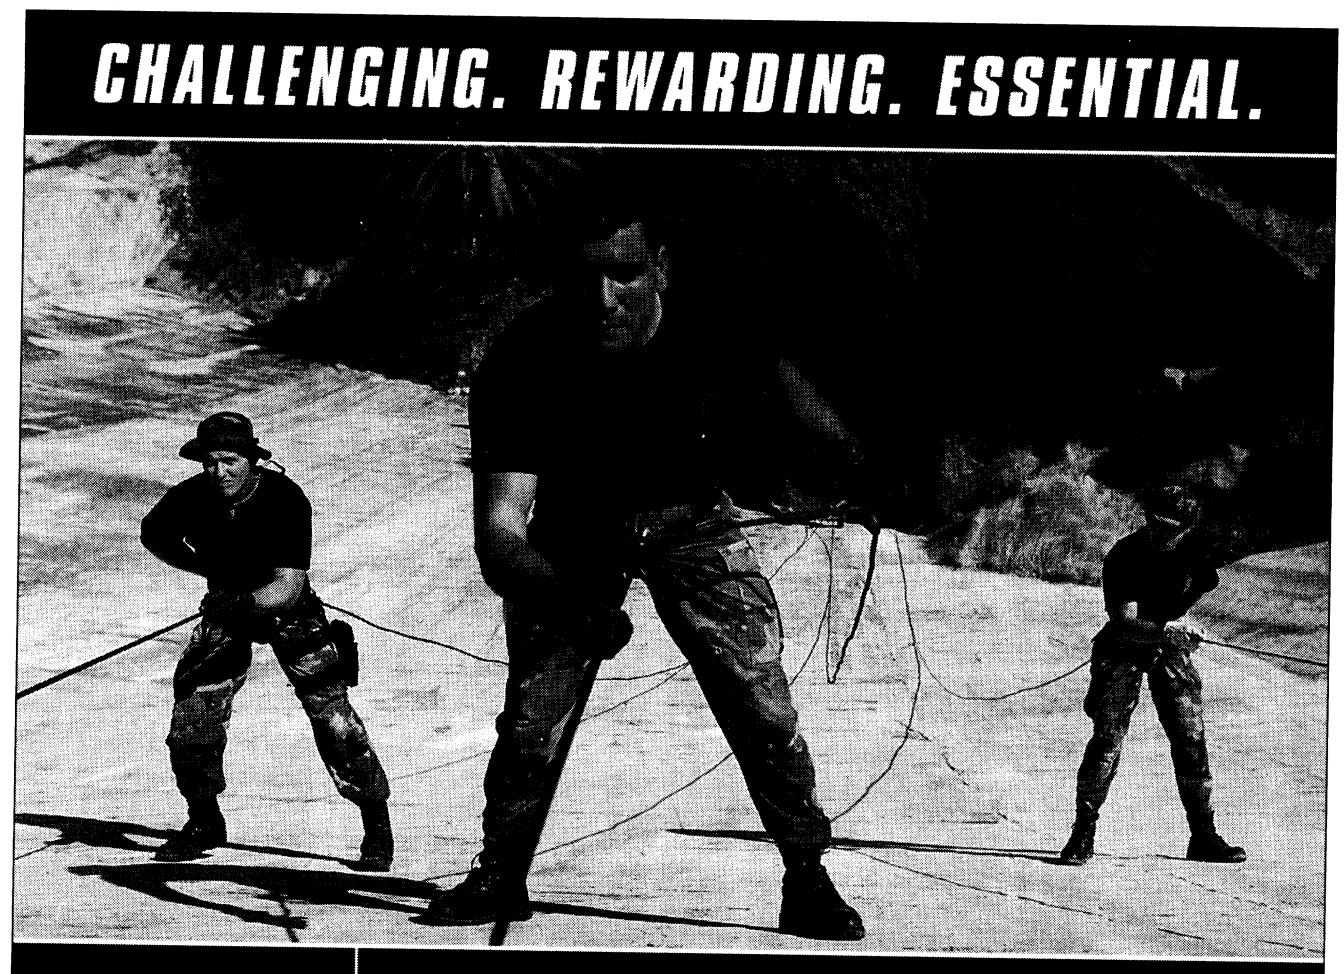
WASHINGTON — With the click of a mouse, heartfelt messages have been sent to thousands of deployed troops this holiday season.



"Your bravery and sacrifices are deeply appreciated by this American family, and our flag and the flags of hundreds of other families in our community are flying proudly in your honor," wrote Steve and Ellie Earnhart from Vandalia, Ohio.

The Earnharts posted that message using http://anyservicemember.navy.mil, which is the online version of the holiday letter-campaign dubbed "Operation Dear Abby."

When the "Dear Abby" and "Any Servicemember" mail programs were suspended last year because of the anthrax mail attacks, Web sites sprung up to give an alternative to people who want to show support to troops during the holiday season, officials said.

The Web site http://www.anyservicemember.org/ is another place where greetings can be read. Even though "Any Servicemember" mail was suspended, family members and friends can still send loved ones letters and packages overseas by using name, rank and APO address

The Christmas mailing deadline is Dec. 4 for parcel airlift mail and Dec. 11 for first-class and priority mail, letters and cards.

MOUT battlefield future of Army

Training sites help soldiers fight terrorism

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Americans believe that the next conflict will take place on urban terrain, which is the most challenging environment to fight, officials said.

However, doctrine and training over the last decade have increased soldiers' level of preparedness, officials at the Army's Infantry School said at a Pentagon press briefing Nov. 25.

In 1993, 18 Rangers from 3rd Battalion, 75th Regiment, were killed in Mogadishu, Somalia, during what they described as a fight against an entire town. Now with an evolving doctrine and training at sites like the fictional Shugart-Gordon, at the Joint Readiness Training Center, Fort Polk La., named after two soldiers killed in Mogadishu trying to rescue a down pilot, soldiers can practice for the unexpected, said Col. Paul Melody, the director of the Infantry School Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

In the past, troops fighting in urban terrain had little knowledge of who they were going to fight and what the nature of the terrain was going to be, Melody said.

"That's different now, we make a point to know the terrain almost as good as the people that live there. We know what is valuable to defend and what to attack."

Field Manual 34-06.11 Combined Arms Operations in Urban Terrain was approved in March 2001 and can be found at http://www.adtdl.army.mil/cgi-bin/atdl.dll/fm/3-06.11/toc.htm. Just the name change from its predecessor, FM 90-10-1 Infantry's Guide to Military Operations in Urban Terrain, is significant, Melody said.

"If we don't fight in a combined or joint way with our sister services and coalition forces, the level of success decreases," Melody said. "Other significant changes include the depth the manual goes into.

> "If we don't fight in a combined or joint way with our sister services and coalition forces, the level of success decreases."
> Col. Paul Melody
> Director of Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate

"The first chapter of both manuals is the same. But the current manual analyzes and assesses eight different city patterns and seven different categories of terrain to help us gain insights on the best way to approach the mission to a degree that hadn't existed in the past."

The tasks, conditions and standards in the current manual elaborate on scenarios like how to move a tank or armored vehicle in a town; how to engage a certain part of a building, and when and where to shoot, Melody said. That way units can train and practice before the rubber meets the road, he added.

There are four principles that guide FM 34-06.11 — assess, shape, dominate and transition. Before troops go into an operation, the situation has been assessed, Melody said.

To a novelist looking at an urban area, he can be misled into thinking that it is all the same, he said.

For someone who sees the terrain for fighting, he realizes that there are a lot of areas that can lead to destruction and attack, he said.

Shape means setting conditions prior to the offensive and defensive meeting, which includes putting civil affairs, information and psychological operations into play, Melody said.

Taking away the enemy's options and collapsing their ability to resist or attack is to dominate, and when the focus of the operation changes, soldiers can transition from offense or defense to stability and support, he said.

A doctrine that leads to realistic training for a modern fight gives troops an advantage, but it doesn't give them an over-manageable confidence. MOUT training is designed to produce well-trained soldiers, but it's also a very humbling experience, said Maj. Perry Beissel, the MOUT Team officer-in-charge.

"We don't want units thinking that seizing control of Shugart-Gordon was easy. We want them to know that as much as they think they know about urban warfare, dilemmas such as sleep deprivation, lack of time to prepare can be life threatening," Beissel said.

To increase the level of realism on urban terrain, JRTC places civilians on the mock battlefield.

"It's too easy to land on foreign ground and just level a town," Beissel said. "We don't tell soldiers that under no conditions are civilians not to be harmed.

"We know that in the course of a battle there will be unavoidable casualties. We needed to use civilians as a way of introducing another level of sophistication and thought processes for leaders and soldiers to think about."

About 4,500 soldiers a month go against JRTC's opposing forces to seize Shugart-Gordon. Part of their mission after taking control of the town is to transition control of the town back to the host nation government.

Training in mock towns is also conducted at Hohenfels, Germany.

"Our training and doctrine is unprecedented," Melody said. "However, our young soldiers fighting in Afghanistan have proven that they are aware of the risks over there and they are confident — not cocky."

Post: To compete for ACOE award evaluation.

"Fort Benning is such a complex post because we have so many missions," said Pat Porter, senior management analyst for the Quality Management Division. "The criteria we use to assess ourselves involves the entire community. It's how we take care of our customers, soldiers and families."

Fort Benning is evaluated in seven areas:

- Leadership,
- Strategic Planning,
- Customer Focus,
- Information and Analysis,
- Human Resource Focus,
- Process Management,
- Business Results.

Fort Benning has been a TRADOC finalist for nine years and has taken home the Commander in Chief award four times. However, Fort Benning was overlooked as a winner in 2001 and 2002, making this year all the more important, Porter said.

"We are proud of our post, and we set the example for other installations with our quality of life," Porter said. "Winning the award shows the commander in chief that we are successful in constantly striving to improve our environment."

As part of the finalist competition, a team of Department of Army ACOE evaluators will visit Fort Benning Feb. 2-7 to interview employees and soldiers. The visits are an important aspect of the competition and give the ACOE evaluators an up close and personal view of what Fort Benning has to offer its soldiers and employees.

"The team will be clarifying and verifying the information they have received in the self assessment," said Janie Pearson, Management analyst for Quality Management Division.

If Fort Benning is designated as the ACOE winner, the post could receive a $3 million award for quality of life funding, such as updating gyms and library equipment, among other things, Porter said.

"It really is an honor to be nominated for this award," Porter said. "It is one of the highest honors an installation can receive for continuous improvement."

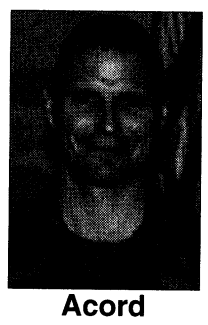
Post names Instructors of Year

Officers, NCO teach soldiers to succeed

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

"If you have knowledge, let others light their candles with it."



— Winston Churchill
Former British Prime Minister

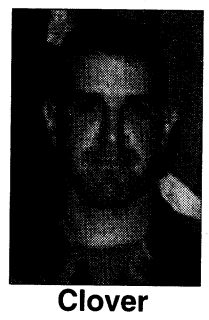
Three soldiers were named Fort Benning Instructors of the Year Tuesday at a ceremony at Infantry Hall.

The Officer Instructor of the Year is Capt. Michael D. Acord, Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate.

Acord is an instructor for the Infantry Captain's Career Course.

"This award is a reflection of the type of officer and instructor he is," said Maj. Bill Carty, team chief for ICCC. "He deserved the award, and it couldn't have happened to a better soldier."

Acord



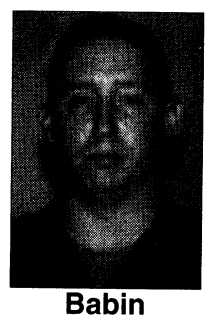
Acord, who said he tries to instill the importance of planning to his soldiers, has served in a variety of assignments, to include Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Drum, N.Y.; and Fort Benning.

"He is unwilling to accept less than his best and it really shows in the classroom," Carty said. "He goes above and beyond the standard as an instructor."

The Senior Enlisted Instructor of the Year is Sgt. 1st Class Robert Clover, A Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

Clover is an instructor in the Benning phase of Ranger School.

"Clover is a great example of a ranger," said Capt. Enrique Torres, commander, A Company, 4th RTB. "He emphasizes training beyond the standard."



Clover

Clover has been stationed at Fort Campbell, Ky.; Erlangen Barracks, Germany; and was deployed to Saudi Arabia and Kuwait during Operation Desert Storm.

"Working with the professional noncommissioned officers, officers, and students at the 4th RTB has allowed me to hone my skills and become a better NCO," Clover said. "I will, in turn, give back to my soldiers this knowledge as I continue with my career."

The Junior Enlisted Instructor of the Year is Staff Sgt. Patrick Babin Jr.

Babin, who is one of five finalists for the Training and Doctrine Command's NCO of the Year, instructs Sand Hill soldiers in Basic Rifle Marksmanship period two and Advanced Infantry Marksmanship Strategy and Standards.

Babin

"Staff Sergeant. Babin takes pride in his work," said Capt. Jason Kostal, commander of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "His dedication and willingness to go the extra step really pays dividends for the basic trainees."

Babin has been stationed at Lee Barracks, Germany; and Fort Campbell, Ky.

"These soldiers demonstrated principles and techniques of military instruction, subject matter expertise and outstanding communication with their students," said Elaine Livingston, chief, Staff Education and Training Division. "Fort Benning has always been known for outstanding instructors, not only on the post level, but also TRADOC level, too."

CASA volunteers ready to help children

Post residents complete training

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Three Fort Benning residents joined the ranks of volunteers across the country working to help children placed in the foster care system.

Autumn Cyler, Susan Peters, and Ronald Vinson graduated Nov. 15 from the Court Appointed Special Advocate training program in a ceremony at the Columbus Public Safety Building.

The three, along with 10 others completed 40 hours of training that covered family relationships, drugs and dependency, socio-economic and cultural issues.

"The training was aimed at getting us to see things from different views," said Susan Peters, whose background is not in social work, but education.

The students attended eight hours of classes on Saturdays and four hours of classes one night each week. Peters said the training represented a big time commitment for all. Students had to read material ahead of time so they were prepared for the classroom instruction. In addition, students visited courtrooms so they would be familiar with the proceedings.

Reginald Pugh, president of the Urban League of Greater Columbus, praised the volunteers for being willing to volunteer their time to families having problems.

"There is a lot going on with our country's families and young people," he said.

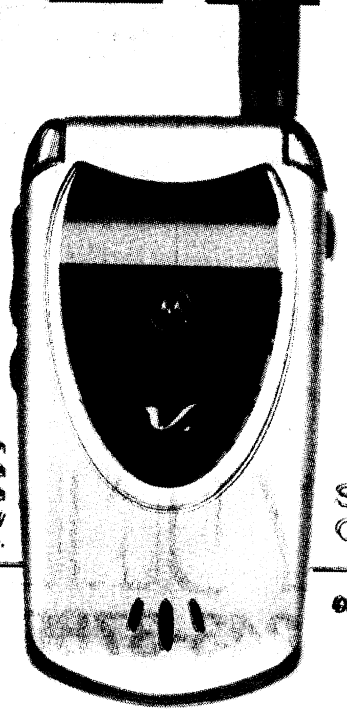
The basic role of the CASA volunteer is to work hand-in-hand with the children, families, social workers, judges and attorneys, everyone involved.

"We provide an extra set of eyes and ears for the children," Peters said. During their training, volunteers learned that the average load is about 40 cases, making it difficult for social workers to personally do all of the research for each case. The volunteers provide a critical service.

"The volunteers are looked at as truly unbiased, because we're not paid for what we do," Peters said.

CASA program director Ken Washington said that only one-third of children in the Columbus area are currently represented by CASA volunteers. The Georgia state goal is to have 100 percent of children represented by 2005, Washington said.

Following the official swearing-in ceremony, guardian ad litem Robert Wilson offered words of encouragement for the graduates.



"It is frustrating when you try to connect, but fail," Wilson said. "Keep trying, don't give up. Eventually, you will connect."

CASA volunteer coordinator Barbara Shehane said they are currently matching new volunteers with experienced volunteers before they start working on their first case.

"We're trying to match volunteers with cases and put (all 13 volunteers) to work," Shehane said.

RTB recognizes distinguished service

Seven rangers continue mentorship

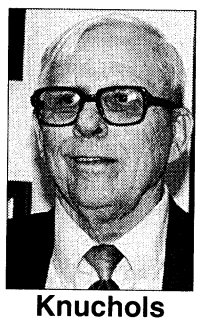
Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Barring any unforeseen disasters or undiagnosed ailments, retired Command Sgt. Maj. Don Purdy figures he'll be around a while. But when he leaves this world for the next, he's hoping God has a job waiting for him.

"I sincerely hope in heaven, he has a battalion of rangers — one or two at least, so I can be the sergeant major of one," said Purdy. "Being a ranger is a gift from God, and I miss it. I miss it terribly."

Purdy and six of his fellow retired rangers were honored during the 2002 Distinguished Member of the Ranger Training Brigade ceremony Tuesday at the Ranger Hall of Fame.

"Very human threads," the brigade's commander, Col. William Kidd, called them — "threads that bind us to our past."



"They embody all that we think is good and right in a ranger," Kidd said. "They define our role. They remind us from whence we came, the hazards of our chosen profession and the standards by which all rangers must live by."

The seven former ranger instructors and commanders were selected because they continue to serve as role models for today's rangers, Kidd said.

"The ranger community is really a closed circle," he said. "Nothing new ever happens in Ranger School, nothing (our predecessors) haven't experienced before.

"So we've found it best to go back to our history for guidance, for lessons learned the hard way the first time. They've beared the burden and paid the price."

Retired 1st Sgt. Bill Knuchols agreed with Kidd. The more things change in the ranger community, the more they stay the same.

Knuchols

"You know, people talk about 'the old soldiers,' like they were different. We're all the same," he said, gesturing toward the younger soldiers.

"There's a special bond, and coming here brings back a lot of wonderful history. Being a ranger instructor is the best job in the Army."

The seven inductees were:

• Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Thomas Cruise, a 30-year veteran, served as an advisor to Vietnam rangers during his two tours there.

Cruise began his career as a ranger instructor at the 6th Ranger Training Battalion in Florida in 1967. He returned to serve as the battalion's command sergeant major until his retirement in 1991.

Purdy

• Retired 1st Sgt. Bill Knuchols received commendations from three presidents for superior performance as a hand-to-hand combat instructor with the Ranger Training Department.

Knuchols was responsible for developing much of the doctrine and training for what is now the Movement to Contact and Search and Attack.

• Retired Lt. Col. Brian Pentecost served with the rangers in various capacities. He served as the deputy commander of the Ranger Training Brigade, commander of the 5th Ranger Training Battalion in Dahlonega, Ga., and commander of the 1st Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment.

• Purdy enlisted in the U.S. Army in 1968 after three years in the Canadian Army.

Cruise

Purdy participated in more than 35 missions with the rangers in Vietnam. He served with Delta Force before being named command sergeant major of the 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

• Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Sam Spears served as the command sergeant major for 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment, 3rd Battalion, 504th parachute Infantry Regiment, the 11th Infantry Regiment and the 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

• Retired 1st Sergeant Earl Singletary was an advisor to three battalions of Vietnamese rangers. He served as ranger instructor at various times during his 28-year career.

Singletary retired as the chief deputy of the Forsyth County Sheriff's Office last year.

• Retired Col. Tom Terrell helped create the Best Ranger Competition and helped develop the desert phase of Ranger School. He was the first to simultaneously command both the mountain and desert phases of Ranger School.

AROUND POST

Foreign Language Proficiency Pay

FLPP is monthly monetary special pay paid to officers, warrant officers, and enlisted personnel who qualify for and maintain the required proficiency in a designated foreign language. Until April 1, 2000, only professional linguists, (language dependent MOSs, or duty positions requiring language capability) were eligible for FLPP. FLPP II (for soldiers with proficiency in critical languages but not in linguist positions) was created to fill critical needs in all testable languages. Presently, the Army has met its needs in many languages. These languages will no longer be eligible for FLPP I payments. Soldiers who tested prior to April 9, 2002 will continue to be paid for the full 12 months of their eligibility. HQ DA message DTG R091641 April 2002, lists those languages that are critical under FLPP II. To qualify for FLPP, language specific Defense Language Proficiency Test (DLPT) must be taken and passed annually. The DLPT is administered at the Military Testing Section, Bldg. 2612, Soldiers' Plaza.

To schedule testing, call 545-3708 or 545-2911.

CATD Luncheon

Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate December lunchtime presentation will be on Thursday in Infantry Hall's Classroom 10 from 11:30 a.m. to 12:30 a.m. Retired Lt. Col. Joseph R. Finch will be the speaker. The author of a Vietnam War memoir entitled Angel's Wing: A Year in the Skies of Vietnam, Finch will talk on his experiences as a helicopter pilot in that conflict. Commissioned in 1967, he switched to aviation and went onto have a distinguished flying career during which he earned the Silver Star, the Distinguished Flying Cross, the Air Medal (28 times), and the Meritorious Service Medal (four times).

Finch will also sign his book at the Infantry Hall Bookstore.

Act: Rewards service members with more benefits

the Selected Reserve. If time remains on service commitments, it may be spent on active duty, in the reserves or serving in organizations such as the Peace Corps or Americorps.

Those who qualify may receive one of the following incentives: $5,000 payable after completing the initial 15 months of active duty; repayment of student loans up to $18,000; an education allowance at the Montgomery GI Bill monthly rate for one year; or an educational allowance of one-half the Montgomery GI Bill rate for three years.

The act continues special pays and bonuses for active duty and reserve personnel and expands special pays for high-demand military specialties. The bonus for prior-service soldiers will also increase.

The act makes medical improvements a high priority. The legislation calls on the Defense Department and the Department of Veterans Affairs to share assets, especially in regards to pharmacy benefits.

Congress continues to improve the Tricare program. The legislation expands Tricare Prime Remote to cover family members who remain in remote locations when they cannot accompany sponsors. An example of this is a family members who stays in a remote location while a spouse is assigned to Korea on an unaccompanied tour.

Congress also expressed concern over the stability of the Tricare provider networks. Many providers complain that claim processing takes too long. Under the legislation, the requirements for Tricare and Medicare will be the same.

The budget supports an active-duty end strength of 1,389,700 with the Army set at 480,000, the Navy at 375,700, the Marines up slightly to 175,000 and the Air Force pegged at 359,000. The overall strength of the reserve components is unchanged from fiscal 2002 at 864,558.

The legislation expands the size of the service academies from 4,000 to 4,400 students beginning in the 2003-2004 school years.

In the authorization act, the legislators say they "believe that active-duty end strength needs to be increased in the long term."

The act authorizes $7.3 billion for counterterrorism programs.

Much of this is channeled into biological warfare defense and chemical and biological detection, protection and decontamination.

The programs also cover the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction program. The Senate and House approved $417 million for this counterproliferation activity.

The act directs DoD to set up National Guard civil support teams in all states and territories.

The teams provide medical and technical advice in the event of a terrorist attack involving weapons of mass destruction.

In readiness accounts, the act fully funds President Bush's request of $78.4 billion. This covers such items as flying hours, tank miles and depot maintenance.

The Army's Comanche helicopter program will receive $910 million for engineering and manufacturing development.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld canceled the Army's Crusader artillery system.

The act authorizes DoD to shift funding from that program to other indirect fire programs. A total of $673 million will be split among six promising technologies.

Also included is authorization to create the new positions of undersecretary of defense for intelligence and assistant secretary of defense for homeland security.

It also exempts the military from portions of the Migratory Bird Treaty Act. Provisions allow service members to train more realistically at their stations while expanding buffer zones around training areas.

look CLOSER look look look look look look

The National Defense Authorization Act calls for:

- Service members will receive at least a 4.1 percent pay raise beginning Jan. 1.
- Mid-level NCOs and officers will receive a pay jump between 5.5 percent and 6.5 percent.
- High-demand military specialties pay will expand.
- The budget supports an active-duty end strength of 1,389,700 with the Army set at 480,000, the Navy at 375,700, the Marines up slightly to 175,000 and the Air Force pegged at 359,000. The overall strength of the reserve components is unchanged from fiscal 2002 at 864,558.
- The legislation expands the size of the service academies from 4,000 to 4,400 students beginning in the 2003-2004 school years.
- The act authorizes $7.3 billion for counterterrorism programs.
- The Army's Comanche helicopter program will receive $910 million for engineering and manufacturing development.

Finally, the 2003 budget buys the Army's last Abrams tanks and Bradley fighting vehicles. The request funds $376.3 million for 103 tanks and $397 million for 138 Bradleys. In a sign of things to come, the budget authorizes $788 million for the Stryker Armored Vehicle and $759 million for research on the Army's Future Combat System.

Sand Hill drill sergeants may not be able to offer actual combat to new infantrymen, but they are able to give them a daily dose of what they'll find on any battlefield — stress.

Cadre from D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, used the stress of a timed-squad competition to help motivate and train its infantrymen Nov. 22.

"When you put someone on the clock, his stress level escalates," said Staff Sgt. Danny Dicaire, 3rd Platoon drill sergeant, of the 14-squad competition. "As with all their training, we try to give them a small taste of what combat will be like so they'll have the confidence to perform when their moment of truth does come."

The order of events was: a push up and sit up event, a written exam, the assembly and disassembly of a M-16, an obstacle course, splint a fracture, a half-mile litter carry, mouth-to-mouth resuscitation, and load and unload and correct a malfunction of an M-16. Drill sergeants timed each event and assigned a point value from 1 to 14.

Pvt. Kane Tangiegak, a 20-year-old National Guardsman from Chevak, Alaska, led the winning squad.

"I didn't even feel like I was leading," Tangiegak said. "Everyone knew what it took to win, so we put our heads together and did what all good teams do — become one."

No place was that concept more important than when the soldiers broke into two teams and carried litters, that sergeants weighed down with 200 pounds, for what seemed to be an eternity, he said.

"It was pretty tough," Tangiegak said. "Like everyone else, we were struggling."

Given the clock stopped after the second team crossed the finish line, the squad had a plan. When one of their teams fell back, they replaced the weaker men in the trailing team with stronger men from the leading team. The result of the men's teamwork? The fastest squad time.

"It was a lot of fun," Tangiegak said. "We knew we had a strong squad going into the competition, and we communicated well. That was the main thing — working together."

Members of his squad agreed.

"I fell in with a good group of guys," said Pvt. Robert Walker, a 26-year-old active-duty soldier from High Point, N.C. "I don't think I brought anything unique to the squad. We had a cohesive group, and we placed the talent we had in the right place on each event."

The litter carry was a highlight of the day for him, too.

"It took all of our strength and all of our willpower to complete," Walker said.

"I had a ball," he said. "My favorite part was the PT test. I surprised myself. The 250 I earned was my personal best — up from 160 when I got here — and it was the competition that drove me. All for the squad."

The big dividends soldiers receive may come during war, he said.

"Everything we learned today we can apply to real-world combat situations," Walker said. "For instance, we may have to break contact with the enemy and negotiate obstacles to stay alive. Another would be the rescue breathing — obviously very applicable in combat if we come upon a fallen comrade in arms."

Dicaire said he was glad the soldiers realized the mission's intent — to reiterate the common skill tasks so that they will become second nature to them once they reach their unit and, more importantly, combat.

"They might find themselves in Afghanistan or Iraq, and it's not going to be a problem for them to execute the mission their leaders give them," Dicaire said.

"If they ever need to help carry one of their buddies out on a litter, they'll have the confidence to get the patient from one point to the next in a relatively quick manner," he said. "On the battlefield, you can end up moving some distance. Today's training reminded them of that.

"Correcting a malfunction is another crucial task. They may find themselves in the middle of a fire fight, and they'll need to (correct a malfunction) in a matter of seconds — the very reason why the time element played such an important role today."

The competition was a success, he said.

"It was an excellent way to evaluate whether or not they are working as a team, and at this point (finishing week 11), they are. It reminded them the importance of teamwork — a squad is only as strong as its weakest link. If one soldier messes up, he'll hurt the team. If everyone is on the same page and performing to standard, the team will excel."

Pvt. Justin Grosinsky swings on the monkey-bar obstacle.

The latter rendered a sweet victory for Tangiegak's squad, he said. The squad received a day pass to Main Post Nov. 24 and earned a guidon streamer — which the cadre presented in front of the entire company — for winning the competition.

What did Tangiegak do to relieve the pent up stress caused by weeks of drill sergeants' screaming? He went to watch The Ring — the scariest movie to come out in a long time, he said.

"It made me jump a lot," Tangiegak said. "The drill sergeants didn't seem so bad after that."

36th Engineer Group soldiers battle at NBC Stakes

'Skill to Build' soldiers win group's event

1st Lt. Mamie Murphy
36th Engineer Group

The Rugged Seahorses from the 36th Engineer Group set out to test their Nuclear, Biological and Chemical readiness and physical fitness levels Nov. 22. The all-day, groupwide event incorporated physical training and basic NBC skills into four events, and the soldiers seemed to enjoy it.

"It was fun, challenging and motivating," said Pfc. Nathaniel Stepp, 63rd Engineer Company. "I really liked it a lot."

Thirty squads with 8-10 members per squad participated. The rest of the group was present to cheer on their coworkers.

Taking first, second and fourth place in the event were squads representing the 63rd Engineer Company. Squad leader Sgt. Michael Smith led the first place team, which included: Sgt. Corey Durham; Spc. Shareasa Buckley; Spc. Jason Hamilton; Spc. Patrick Roublow; Spc. Theresa Smith; Pfc. Matthew Graffanino; Stepp; Pvt. Kennie Ervin; and, 2nd Lt. Oswaldo Maxwell.

The first event of the day was a 2.3-mile NBC run. At the sound of the air horn, teams donned their protective masks and took off running. The "all-clear" sign to remove the protective mask was given 1.5 miles into the race. The squad members had to reassemble at the all-clear area, then remove and properly stow their masks before continuing on with the final leg of the race. Time didn't stop until all members of the squad crossed the finish line, and penalties were assessed to teams who did not finish together.

The winning squad, also the overall winners, clocked in a time of 23:08.

"Running in the mask is very tough. You really have to focus on your breathing," Buckley said. "It was hard, but it felt really good to win the first event."

The second event, Humvee push, was also won by a squad from the 63rd Engineer Co., led by Staff Sgt. Al Britton.

The event required the squad to load 75 sandbags into the back of a Humvee, push it 50 yards, don protective masks, unload 25 sandbags, push another 50 yards, turn around, push 50 yards, remove protective masks, re-load 25 sandbags and push the vehicle 50 yards to the finish line.

Britton's team came in at 6:39.

"This was definitely the hardest event," Stepp said. "It just took so much endurance with the gas mask on."

The third event of the day was the most technically demanding. Squads were required to deploy the M-22 chemical system alarm, while in full Mission Oriented Protective Posture gear.

The relay required all members of the squad to correctly use M-9 paper and the M-42 alarm. An additional graded task during the event was drinking from a canteen while in the protective mask.

"It was really hard to do," Buckley said. "I had a hard time getting the little straw from the mask in the canteen and making it stick."

"Ripping the tape for the M-9 paper was tough," Maxwell said. "It kept sticking to the gloves."

This event was won by a squad from the 598th Maintenance Company, led by Sgt. Michael Barton, the only event not won by a squad representing the 63rd. They came in at 7:07.

"This was a tough event," Stepp said. "It's hard to do delicate tasks with the chemical gloves on. They really restrict your movements."

The fourth and final event of the day was the NBC litter relay. Teams not only had to quickly don all of their own protective gear, but the protective gear for an unconscious casualty as well. The overall winners from the 63rd also won this event.

"Putting a mask on someone else isn't really all that difficult," Stepp said. "It's already adjusted to fit and ready to go, but it is tough to get it to seal. You don't know when they're breathing in and out."

The winning squad said they owed their win to the amount of practice put in prior to the event.

"We placed in every single event," Maxwell said. "The reason we were so successful was because we really practiced hard on all the events. We practiced getting in and out of the MOPP suit, getting a casualty in and out of the MOPP gear, and we worked a lot with the chemical alarm. Our NBC NCO, Sgt. Scott Mays, made sure we were really squared away and knew what we were doing. This isn't even his MOS, but he stepped right up when the job became his. He's shown a lot of initiative and has really done a great job. We owe winning this competition to him."

"We ran in our gas masks everyday for a week prior," Stepp said. "We also did circuit training in our masks and practiced all the tasks for the event. The practice was what really did it for us. We were just so much faster than everyone else."

BSI bails on maintenance contract

Leaves post scrambling on service orders

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

Last week's notice that BSI would cease maintenance operations effective Sunday came as a surprise to everyone.

BSI provided general maintenance support for roughly half of the 4,000 sets of family quarters and did repairs on all appliances on post.

The company, which had been working on Fort Benning for the last seven years was apparently having financial difficulties and did not have the money to continue operations. The previous three-year contract officially ended in September, but the company agreed to an extension through Jan. 25. BSI's parent company is located in Moriches, N.Y.

Once the Directorate of Contracting received the faxed notification, they had a quick meeting with their lawyer, said Ken Hankins, Family Housing chief.

"My guys stepped up to the plate and said they could do it," Hankins said. The maintenance team from the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics will pick up the slack caused by BSI backing out of their contract.

> "We'll have to issue some houses that are less than perfect with a promise that the new contractor will fix the deficiencies in January."

Hankins said Housing will try to pick up some part-time workers to ease the increased workload and work overtime and weekends. The workers will not be able to make routine repairs to screens and the like, instead focusing their efforts on the real emergencies involving heat, stoves and refrigerators.

"We'll have to issue some houses that are less than perfect with a promise that the new contractor will fix the deficiencies in January," Hankins said. Painting orders for vacant quarters will not be affected.

Funny First Friday

Club gets ready for stand-up routines

Comedians to tell jokes at NCO Club

Did you hear the one about the two comedians who go into a bar? Well, not a bar actually, a club —the NCO Club, I mean. Now, stop me if you've heard it.

Fort Benning's Main NCO Club will present Funny First Friday tonight at 9 p.m. Comedians Alex Ortiz and "Big" Sean Larkin will perform the stand up routines that have garnered them praise — and laughs — from Black Entertainment Television audiences who tune in to watch both performers regularly on Showtime At The Apollo.

The show will be emceed by Daran Howard, a veteran comedian and actor, and a friend of Maj. Terrance Manns, of Fort Benning's Directorate of Combat Developments.

Howard and Manns met several years ago through a mutual friend, and Howard called Manns last year after Sept. 11 to ask what he could do for U.S. military troops. Manns suggested Howard take his show overseas to Korea and Germany.

After a yearlong tour in both countries, Howard turned his attention to soldiers stateside.

Symbols shine on post

Children flip switches to kick off celebrations

Melissa House

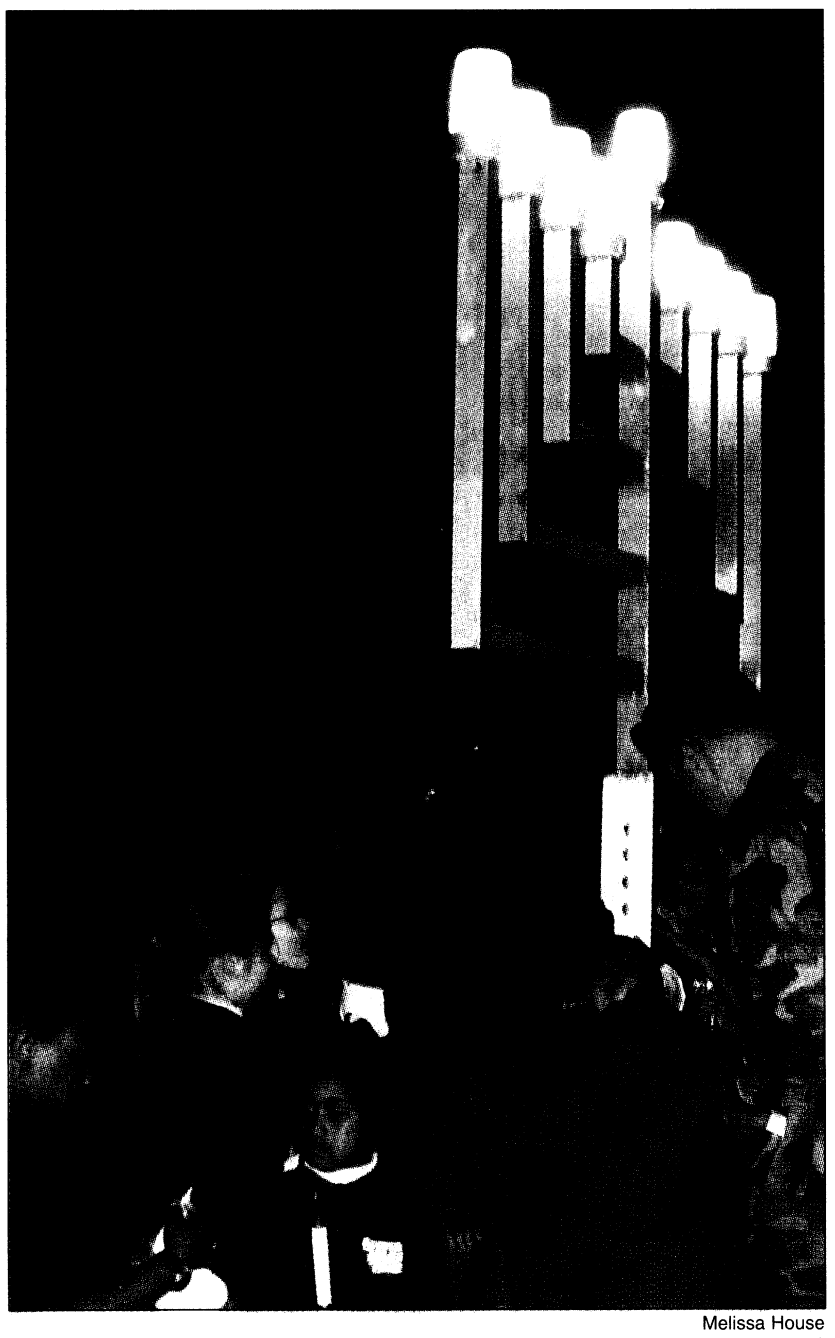
Mother Nature finally came through for the Fort Benning chaplains. After one year of bitter cold and another ceremony marred by rain, Tuesday's mild temperatures made for a pleasant start for holiday events.

Chaplain (Col.) Mike Hartsell welcomed the crowd gathered on the Field of Four Chaplains alongside The Infantry Center chapel for the annual tree and menorah lighting ceremony.

Hartsell recalled a long list of holiday movies watched again and again by many in the audience. In each of the movies, someone had a problem, and then built a relationship with another person that helped them resolve the problem.



"Don't let stress steal your joy," he said. "Now is the time to focus on memories and holiday traditions. Focus on giving, faith and reaching out to others."

Post Commander Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton encouraged the families to go back to the fundamentals of what is important to humanity.

"This is our season," Eaton said. "Focus on goodness and on what makes our country wonderful."

Following Eaton's remarks, the families were treated to a concert by the Stowers Elementary School choir, directed by chorus teacher Lorri Blanchard. Along with an assortment of traditional holiday songs was Just One Candle, featuring solos by several Stowers students.

Fort Benning residents Marie and Johnny Knowles, and son Johnny Jr., attended the tree lighting ceremony for the first time.

"We came because our daughter was singing in the choir," said Marie. "We really enjoyed the performance."

Johnny Jr., 4, wasn't outwardly excited about listening to sister Jennifer sing.

"He was really interested in the Nativity scene," his father said. "He kept asking me questions about it."

Col. Joe Torres, garrison commander, gave the crowd a brief history of the significance of each of the three symbols at the edge of the field. The tradition of the Christmas tree, started in Germany, was believed to have been introduced by

Scholarships available for families

Soldiers, spouses, children eligible for college money

Angela Sachitano
Special to the Bayonet©

Several college scholarships are ready and available for military personnel and their family members, regardless of rank, ethnicity or military background.

At least four separate scholarship organizations are targeting Army families, looking for candidates to take home anywhere from $500 to $1,500 in college money.

"The scholarships are relatively simple to enroll for," said Gary Hensley, director of the Fort Benning commissary and organizer of the Scholarship for Military Children Program funded by the commissary. "We're making the applications available through the schools, on the Internet and they can pick up information at the commissary. Anyone who is interested in college should go for it."

Applications for the commissary scholarship have been available since November but Hensley said only a handful of people have applied.

"The more people apply, the more money we can hand out," Hensley said. "We hope to have enough applicants to choose at least three students from Fort Benning. Right now we barely have three applications."

With all of the college-bound family members out there, there is no need for scholarship money to go to waste, said Army Emergency Relief director Al Dean. AER is administering the Maj. Gen. James Ursano Scholarship Fund. Active-duty soldiers and Army retirees with college-bound children or stepchildren are eligible, Dean said.

"The AER scholarship is for applicants based on financial need and academic achievements," Dean said. "This is our way of paying back our armed forces."

The AER scholarship ranges from $600 to

Chaplain operates tree farm

Success means children's smiling faces, chaplain says

Angela Sachitano

Picking the right Christmas tree to shine bright in the living room all season long can be complicated. Just ask Chaplain (Lt. Col.) Dan Payne, Basic Combat Training Brigade chaplain.

When he's not busy ministering to soldiers, Payne is on his land, planting more than 3,200 Christmas trees at his home in LaGrange, Ga.

"We've put a lot of hard work into our tree farm," Payne said. "This year the trees are large enough for families to take them home. We can't wait to see the kids faces when they come to pick them out."

Payne and his wife began planting Leyland Cypress trees on 17 acres of their land, located about an hour north of Columbus, four years ago.

"I come from a long line of farmers and so does my wife," he said. "Trees are a great way to use the land because they produce oxygen and clean the air."

They don't use fancy equipment; in fact they plant and shear the trees by hand.

"I plant twice a year, usually during my leave time," Payne said. "My wife does a lot of work as well. When I was in Kuwait for a year, she took care of the farm herself. We are both outdoors people and love our land, so it doesn't seem like a job to us."

And the trees don't exactly grow overnight. An average Leyland Cypress grows only a few feet a year. This is the first year the Paynes are able to sell the trees because it's taken this long to get them to the right height, about eight feet.

Families tend to flock toward the Leyland Cypress, said Linnea Wieland, president of the Georgia Christmas Tree Association. The trees rarely shed needles and tend to stay fresh longer than most other trees.

"The Leyland Cypress is a beautiful dark green with featherlike branches," Wieland said. "It's always a favorite for families."

The Paynes officially opened their farm the day after Thanksgiving. They've invited local schools and churches to the farm to teach kids about the art of growing a Christmas tree.

"We look at this as a ministry of sorts," Payne said. "Success for us is seeing the smiles on the kids faces."

Leyland Cypress trees sell for $3.50 a foot. For directions to the Payne's farm, call (706) 882-6892.

Post offers finance classes

Six-part course teaches families to save money

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

This is the third part of a five part series that explores what soldiers learn at the financial readiness course.

The first two parts of the financial readiness course explored ways to find money to invest and the importance of diversity in investment strategies.

The third class focused on ways to invest money that will provide fixed-income supplements.

Fixed-income investing is a good way for people who have already retired and would like to increase their income by collecting dividends on a regular basis, said Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program.

Fixed income investments add diversification to a portfolio, and have a lower volatility than stocks. They provide predictability of investment returns. Some even offer tax advantages.

There are several choices to make when choosing a fixed-income investment, and shopping around is very important, Pratcher said. Investors should consider the length of time they can invest the money before it is needed, the stability of the investment and the total return.

Certificates of Deposit and U.S. Treasury Securities are the most secure because the government insures them. CDs are federally insured up to $100,000 while U.S. Treasury Securities are backed by the full faith and credit of the U.S. government.

Other fixed-income investments can provide a larger payoff, but they require more risk. Money market mutual funds are more conservative than a lot of other investments, Pratcher said. However, they are not insured like the CDs or the U.S. Treasury Securities.

Fixed-income investments can also be purchased in the form of bonds. There are several types of bonds, all of which have unique advantages, disadvantages and levels of risk.

As with most investments, the risk and the return balance each other out, meaning the higher the risk, the greater the potential for return.

"When deciding which investments to pursue, the most important things to consider are whether or not you are comfortable with the risk involved, and does the investment match your goals," Pratcher said.

The third class in the series explored investing in mutual funds and the importance of doing research before investing.

A mutual fund is a portfolio of stocks, bonds or other securities that are collectively owned by many investors and managed by a professional investment company.

Mutual funds make money in two ways: current income, which pays dividends or interest earned on the portfolio investments and capital gains, which involve selling the securities after they have gone up in value. Therefore, mutual funds can be tailored to fit the needs of the investor, Pratcher said.

"There are many advantages to investing in mutual funds," Pratcher said. "They earn competitive returns, they have full-time professional management, and they reduce risk through diversity. They can be bought for small amounts of money. However, there is no guaranteed rate of return, and record keeping for tax purposes can be difficult.

One of the factors to consider when purchasing a mutual fund is the cost of expenses. Since they are managed by professional organizations, there are charges for investing.

There are four types of funds based on sales charges; no-load, low-load, load and back-end-loaded funds

The load represents the percentage of sales commission. A no-load fund has no sales commission. A low-load fund has a sales charge between one and three percent. A loaded fund has a sales charge between four and eight percent, and a back-end-loaded fund has a declining sales charge that can start at about six percent if the investors sell their shares within the first year and slides down to one percent for the last year of a potential load.

"As with any major investment, research is very important," Pratcher said.

There are many ways to research specific funds. Some of the more popular ways to research funds are through newspapers and magazines. Research can also be conducted by contacting mutual fund-trade associations and professional advisors.

"No matter what your goals may be, it is vital that you shop around and compare apples to apples before investing in any type of fund, and be sure to get the right one for you," Pratcher said.

The students seemed to enjoy the class.

"I thought the classes were very informative. I feel more comfortable about where I will invest my money, and I'm sure I'll have a better retirement as a result," said Marie Brooks, battalion commander's assistant for 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

BSI: Surprises post by shutting down

"Be patient with us," he said. "We promise to fix things as soon as we can."

Contract officer Bob Koger is working on a new multi-million dollar contract for the services previously performed by BSI.

"We should have the solicitation out on the street within the next 10 days," Koger said. "We'll evaluate the applicants and award the contract."

Koger said that BSI originally had the option to extend their current contract past the Jan. 25 date.

BSI maintenance superintendent Don Dearing was no less surprised by his company's announcement.

"This was a total surprise," Dearing said. "Needless to say, none of us are really happy about this."

Dearing has been at Fort Benning since June 1996 when the company brought him from another location. He received the same faxed notification letter sent to Fort Benning officials.

The BSI walkout dealt a tough blow to the post housing maintenance effort. Dearing said his company had a great deal of knowledge about things like locations of water and power lines that would have eased the transition when Shaw takes over DFEL maintenance activities on Jan. 25.

Dearing said he hopes the BSI employees might have the opportunity to work with the new contract company.

"All of our employees felt they had done as good as they could do," Dearing said. "We have no regrets."

Dearing and project manager Nancy Sears were asked to stay on for a few weeks to try to get things straightened out.

"We basically have what amounts to a small construction company here," Dearing said. "It all has to be put in order and disposed of."

BSI equipment consisted of a fleet of 26 vehicles as well as all the tools and materials needed for housing maintenance.

Dearing and Sears will spend the next several weeks updating maintenance records and getting them into the computer.

"We hope that we can give the Fort Benning staff the information that they need."

Family housing residents are reminded to call DFEL at 545-2135 for all service orders.

Club: Brings comedians to post

"So I figured, why not start right here at Fort Benning," Manns said. "These guys are caliber comedians. They're at the top of their game. You'll recognize them from TV. So this is a fantastic opportunity for Fort Benning."

Manns said the first in a series of Funny First Fridays took place Nov. 1, and Howard and his band of traveling comics drew more than 200 soldiers to the Main NCO Club.

"Surprised everyone," he said. "I knew it could be successful. I just wasn't expecting such a great turnout for the first one."

With that in mind, club officials are planning to seat 500 guests tonight. The doors open at 8 p.m., show starts at 9 p.m.

Tickets are on sale at the club, Fort Benning's Follow Me Golf Course and Alfie's African Treasures, 2901 University Ave., in Columbus.

$1,700 a year and is awarded on an annual basis for up to four years.

"I don't think parents are aware of the kind of money that is out there for our military kids," Hensley said. I've seen available money go unused in past years because of a lack of knowledge by military families. This year we don't want that to happen."

Since the beginning of the school year AAFES has also been putting the word out about its "You Made the Grade" scholarship fund.

The program provides $50 coupon books to middle school children with a B+ grade average each quarter. Children can fill out a form in the back of the book and be eligible for up to $10,000 in scholarship money.

"AAFES picks three military children a quarter for the scholarship," said Donald O'Reilly, AAFES general manager. "It's a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity for families."

Another scholarship available is offered by the Ranger Memorial Foundation. Fifteen scholarships of $500 each will be awarded to rangers or ranger family members with a 3.0 average or higher.

"All of the scholarships are ready and waiting for people to take advantage of," Dean said. "There will be a lot of happy Fort Benning families this year if people get the ball rolling and apply."

Deadlines for some scholarships are as early as February 2003. Information and eligibility criteria are:

Scholarship for Military Children Program: visit commissary or log to www.commissaries.com

MG James Ursano Scholarship Fund: visit AER office, Soldier's Plaza or go to www.aerhq.com.

AAFES scholarship: talk with administrators at Faith Middle School or speak with AAFES administration office.

Ranger Memorial Foundation Scholarship: www.rangermemorial.org.

The Retired Officers Association American Patriot Scholarship, in its second year, was prompted by the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks. Eligible applicants can apply and receive more information online at www.troa.org/education. Beginning Jan. 1, the site changes to www.moaa.org/education.

Students may also look into other local opportunities available, like chapters of the Association of the U.S. Army, the Officers' Spouses Club and the Enlisted Wives Club.

Season: Lights Fort Benning tradition

Hessian soldiers who fought alongside the colonists in the Revolutionary War. The menorah, from old Jewish tradition, represented the hope that all people could enjoy religious freedom, and the Nativity, represented the story of Jesus.

Torres wished everyone a season of happiness, hope, generosity and good will as he, Hartsell and Eaton headed into the crowd to gather children. One by one, the tree, menorah and Nativity were lit.

Torres led the crowd in a rousing chorus of "Santa Claus is coming to town" as Santa made his first appearance of the season riding on a fire engine.

Wills ensure property goes where deceased wants it to go

Anthony R. Tempesta
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Who needs a will? Some people say everyone does, while others say that you only need a will if you are married. There is no one answer, however, that fits all people in all circumstances, and each person's situation must be considered in determining what is necessary in his or her case.

In consideration of this issue, it is important to examine some of the myths and realities regarding wills.

To begin with, a will is a legal document that disposes of your property upon your death. This is the primary purpose of a will, to determine who will get your car, VCR, CD and DVD collection, and so on. Collectively, the property you own at the time of your death is referred to as your "estate." A secondary purpose of a will is to express your desires regarding the guardianship of any minor children you may leave behind.

Statistically, most people die "intestate," which means they pass away without a will. Because of this, all states have "intestacy laws," which are laws that set out who receives a person's property if he or she dies without a will.

Many people incorrectly believe they do not need a will because state law automatically gives everything to their spouse, and if not all to their spouse, then all to their children.

Let's look at an example of an intestacy law. Under Georgia law, if a Georgia resident dies without a will, his entire estate does not automatically go to his spouse. Georgia law first looks to see if there are any surviving children.

If there are surviving children, the children may receive up to one-half of the estate, which means that the spouse might only receive one-half.

A 50-50 split between the spouse and the children might be considered fair to some, but considered unfair to others.

Suppose a single Georgia resident with no children passed away without a will. Who would receive her estate? Under Georgia's intestacy laws, her parents would receive her estate in equal shares. Is it possible for the person's estate to be divided equally between one parent who reared her, and another parent who left the family before the person was even born? Under intestacy laws, yes.

Would it matter that the absent parent failed to pay child support, never wrote and never called? Under intestacy laws, no. This is one of the disadvantages of relying on state intestacy laws.

Anyone who disagrees with the intestate order of succession in his or her state needs a will. Otherwise, his or her estate will be distributed in an unsatisfactory manner.

As stated earlier, wills do more than distribute property. They can also be used to indicate a preference for guardianship of a minor child. Because children are not property, and because the judge is required to act according to "the best interests of the child," a will cannot automatically appoint a guardian. The will is an extremely strong indicator as to the parent's preference however, and it is only overridden in unusual circumstances.

The commonly-heard statement that "single soldiers don't need a will" is incorrect in two instances.

First, if a single soldier has a minor child, a will is needed to express a preference regarding guardianship.

Second, if a single soldier does not want her estate to pass by her state's intestacy laws, and wants her estate to be given all to her mother and none to her father for example, then she needs a will.

In conclusion, everyone should consider his or her own circumstances in deciding whether or not to have a will. More often than not, having a will is better than not having one, because ensures your property is distributed the way you want it to go, and if you have a minor child it indicates whom you want to serve as guardian.

Cost is not a factor, since wills prepared by the Legal Assistance Division are free to eligible clients.

In fact, military will preparation saves money, as wills drafted by private civilian attorneys cost $100 on average. Wills prepared by Army attorneys are valid in all fifty states.

For more information, call the Fort Benning Legal Assistance Division at 545-3281.

Students write about home

Faith Middle School

Seventh-graders from Faith Middle School participated in a project about what home means to them, and wrote their ideas down.

Home to me is a lot of things. My home is special to me because all of my things are there.

I always know where to find a certain pair of shoes, or where the DVDs are supposed to go.

If someone were to blindfold me, I could find anything in the house. It's also where my pets are, and I love my pets.

My home also gives me privacy, and it's a place where I can just go and relax.

A lot of the time, I won't go somewhere after school because I just want to go home.

I can be really mad or sad, and once I'm home, I'm fine.

My home means a lot to me, and I feel sorry for anyone who doesn't have one.

Emily Toon

To me, home means a place you can come home to and relax, and share quality time with your family.

It means a place where you rest and get ready for school in the morning, and get together for dinner every night.

Home is a place where you go when you're in trouble, or want to get away from the world around you. It is a place where you celebrate your good times, and hide from all of your bad times.

Katelyn Schrader

Home. Just saying the word makes me feel whole and grateful. When I go home and open the door to my room, I feel that it's a place to call my own.

Even when my brother comes in and messes it up on occasion I try not to get angry because there are some people who don't have a well-built house.

I can remember one time when my mom and I went shopping and we saw a middle-aged man sitting on the sidewalk with dirty clothes on.

When we were in the car and about to leave, my mom drove the car over to the man and told me to give him $5.

I handed him the money, and I can still remember the words he said to me, "God Bless you, young lady."

Those words were words of gratitude.

Sometimes when I go home and have to wash the dishes or clean the kitchen, I think of the man on the sidewalk and feel glad that I have a place to clean-up and call my own.

Holiday decoration must conform to post regulations

Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics

With the approach of the holidays, many wish to decorate their residence in celebration of the season. Doing so requires prudence in the interest of safety, facility upkeep and energy conservation. Holiday decorations will conform to the following:

Family Housing

No decorations, lighted or unlighted, are allowed on roofs because installing them can be dangerous. Decorations may be affixed to walls, the underside of eaves and displayed elsewhere in adjoining yards. When attaching decorations, use the smallest possible fasteners.

Do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Barracks

Exterior lighting is not permitted in the barracks. Inside, do not overload electrical circuits. Do not leave tree lights and candles unattended while burning.

Offices

Nonelectric decorations will be used in office and operational facilities throughout the installation.

Energy conservation is important. Be judicious in family housing and barrack areas when using electrical decorations. Do not turn outside electrical decorations on until dusk and turn them off prior to midnight. Moderation in the use of electrical decorations will allow everyone to enjoy the holiday season.

Holiday Safety Tips

Here are some safety tips that will hopefully make this a safer holiday period:

• Do not overload the electrical circuits. Maximum capacity of a 15 amp circuit is 1,800 watts and a 20 amp circuit is 2,400 watts. Check the breaker or fuse controlling the circuit to determine the amperage. Be sure to include house lamps, appliances and other electrical equipment on the circuit.

• Before decorating, check light for frayed wires, damaged sockets or cracked insulation.

• Hot bulbs can ignite dry branches. Avoid fire by keeping natural trees well watered and keeping extension cords and light sets away from the water. Light the tree when at home and awake to enjoy it. Always unplug the Christmas tree when not at home.

• For outdoor lighting, use a ground fault circuit interrupter on each circuit. If current leaks through frayed or damaged wires, the interrupter shuts it off.

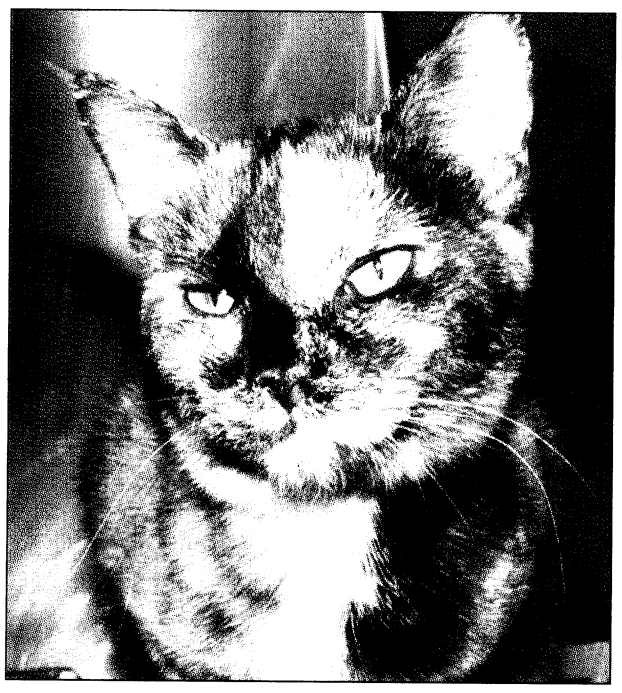
• Don't use more than one extension cord per outlet, and never hide cords under carpets or rugs.

• Buy a tree that is fresh. If the needles are already falling off, the tree is too dry and it should not be purchased. Leave the tree outside until time to decorate. Keep a live tree watered. Trees commonly use up to, a gallon of water every day.

• Never use candles to decorate a Christmas tree.

• Keep Christmas trees away from fireplaces, heating registers and space heaters.

• Keep a working smoke detector in the room above the Christmas tree. Consider purchasing a "tree-detector."



• Remember holly, mistletoe and poinsettias are all poisonous plants to people and pets.

• Be careful of ornaments and decorations that include ribbons or garlands that can easily become snagged on a passing child. This alone could cause a full-sized tree to fall on a child.

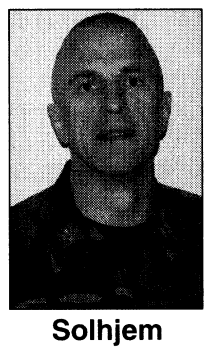
Unsung heroes connect with troops

Effective leaders inspire, believe in others

Chaplain (Maj.) Tom Sohljem
75th Ranger Regiment

If someone were to ask you, "who had the greatest impact on your life," how would you answer? In his book, Tested By Time, James Garlow writes:

"The most effective leaders are those who lead from the front lines, where the action is, in the trenches wherever the soldiers are. It is about connecting with your people.



"Connectivity is about authenticity. If you touch their hearts, they will follow you anywhere!

"If you touch only their minds, you have their respect, but if you touch their hearts, you have their lives!"

As I look back, those who have had the greatest impact were those who were able to connect with me. The list includes my wife, family, an NCO, a chaplain when I was a young specialist years ago in Germany, a select group of commanders, officers, NCOs and peers.

How did they connect? They led from the front. They demonstrated their concern in leadership by: 1) assuming risk, 2) believing in me, 3) expecting the best from me and 4) providing encouragement that moved me from what I was to what I was intended to be and do.

REFLECTIONS

Solhjem

They were not looking to advance their own self-interests. They set those aside to connect with me. In essence, their leadership was authentic, inspiring and motivating.

The privilege of serving in the 75th Ranger Regiment a second time has renewed my resolve and commitment as a chaplain and soldier. Every day I am surrounded by unsung heroes who connect with their soldiers and lead from the front. I see their families sacrificing in support of the war on terrorism, dealing with the problems that separation can bring and operating at 50 percent strength in the parental leadership team.

I see them give and then give some more without complaining or whining. Since this is happening across the installation, the Army and all branches of service, it is not unique, but it is inspiring to be a part of. It makes me want to commit my heart afresh everyday to serving such a congregation.

I must confess that Jesus has not only touched my mind, but my heart and my life. I will follow him because he leads from the front of daily life in the trenches, wherever soldiers or their families are.

Christ leads from the front. How about you? Are you connecting with those around you? Would they follow you anywhere? Are you willing to accept the risk of leadership, to pick up those who falter, to inspire the hearts of those you lead at home or at duty?

During this advent season, it is important to remember Christ came and lived with us on earth.

Jesus connected with us by taking on flesh and blood. He touched our hearts through his birth, life, death and resurrection.

Christ was his troops. What his follower's lack, he supplies. He leads from the front!

God works even on lousy mornings

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

What a night. My wife couldn't sleep. She had worried about our daughter not arriving home from work when expected. Not able to fall asleep, she decided to do some word processing.

The mouse didn't cooperate. The cursor skipped around like a bouncing ball and rarely landed on the icon or button she wanted to push. She grunted and groaned and muttered aloud her frustrations while I tried to sleep.

Awake, I got up and cleaned the inside of the mouse, hoping that would take care of it. It didn't. Throughout the night I was periodically awakened. The printer ran low on ink, and she couldn't finish her project.

Koop

When I was informed about the printer, I admit I didn't respond with empathy. I was tired and terse. I left the house a lot earlier than usual, with the situation still smoldering.

I went out for breakfast to cool down and reflect. I decided to purchase a new mouse and get plenty of ink cartridges for the printer.

I wanted to resolve the problems and to surprise her by how quickly I took care of her concerns.

When I arrived home, I was the one who was surprised. She had cleaned the track ball of the mouse with rubbing alcohol. Now it was working fine. I replaced the ink cartridge, but we still were cool and distant with each other when I left for work.

At lunch I went home and apologized for being curt with her. We made up.

This afternoon is already better as a result. Doing good does work (Titus 3:1-2).

Turkey Bowl champs give up gobbler

Soldiers, families get together for games, food

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The annual 317th Engineer Battalion Turkey Bowl was Nov. 17 on Essebagger Field.

"This event brings the soldiers and their families together for the holiday season," said Command Sgt. Maj. Nelson Slaughter, battalion command sergeant major. "It also gives a chance for soldiers to display the spirit of competition. At the end of the day, someone takes home the trophy and gets bragging rights for the year."

The 317th Turkey Bowl is a tradition with more than 10 years of history. Soldiers and family members gather for a grill-out and watch the game each year.

"It's fun to come out here," said Carmen Capeles, family member. "We can enjoy time with family, and it's a nice opportunity to see the soldiers doing something different than work. If we have the chance, we'll be coming back for this next year."

The soldiers battled on the gridiron to build espirit de corps, said Chaplain (Capt.) David Trogdon.

"This is a chance for the battalion and family members to all come together like a big family. That's the spirit of the Turkey Bowl," Trogdon said. "The games are a great morale builder and some good spirited competition."

The B Company Bulldogs took the Turkey Bowl, turkey head on a plaque, from last year's champs, A Co. Knights, in a 16-0 victory.

The Bulldogs scored early in the game by pushing the Knights back into their end zone like a playground bully for a safety.

Then the Bulldogs pulled down an interception that started a drive that ended in a touchdown by Clint York, Bulldogs' quarterback, with a rush down field.

"Everyone played a big role. If it wasn't for everyone on the line, we couldn't have taken the championship," York said. "Our defense played really well, and their interceptions helped us get the win."

Shortly after, the Bulldogs added the games final points.

The second half was a battle of defenses, but both teams were hindered by penalties and turnovers and couldn't make it to the end zone, brining an end to the tournament.

Officers battle senior NCOs in football

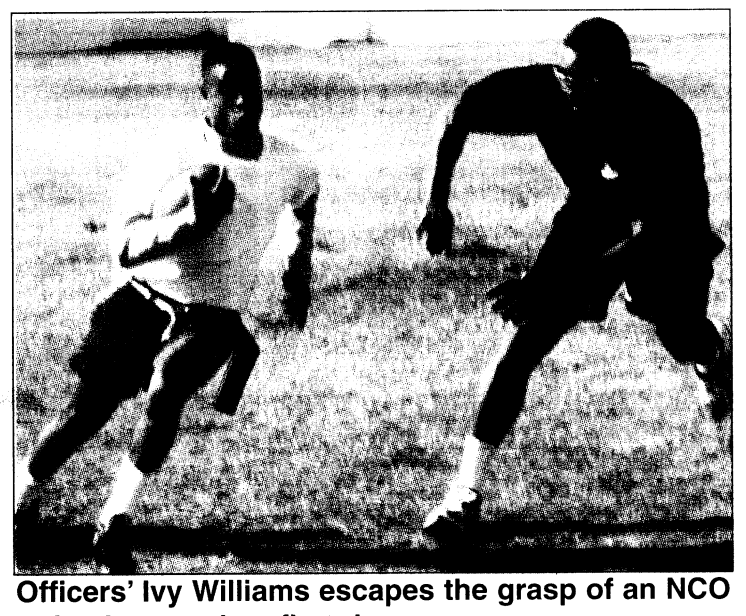
Officers from 11th Infantry Regiment crushed the regiment's senior NCOs, 14-0, during the fourth annual Turkey Bowl at Doughboy Stadium Nov. 27.

The NCOs established their running game early, yet penalties and the Officers' stifling defense forced the NCOs into long third-down situations.

"We kept the defense simple," said Officers' player coach Eric Hare.



But it was the Officers' offense that was simplified.

"We were about a 75 percent passing team and a 25 percent running team," said Officers' quarterback Jason Caldwell. "Once our running back went down, we became a 100 percent passing team."

And going to the air wasn't a place either team wanted to be in the first half. The teams combined for more than six first-half turnovers, all of which were interceptions.

In fact, the two teams looked like they were playing catch with one another for the first 15 minutes.

Then, when the NCOs finally found themselves in a scoring position, Jason Wingeart intercepted a pass on the goal line, and he returned it to the Officers' 15.

Officers' Ivy Williams escapes the grasp of an NCO defender to gain a first down.

From that point, the momentum shifted to the Officers, and their offense began moving the ball down the field.

"Our offense was built on fundamentals and misdirection," Hare said.

Overcoming a fourth and 10 to keep their drive alive, the Officers maneuvered their way to the NCOs' 20.

It was then the NCOs gave the Officers a push toward their own end zone.

A roughing-the-passer call gave the Officers a first-and-goal opportunity, which they used to their advantage.

Caldwell tossed a pass to Larry Balcher for the game's first points, and the Officers led, 8-0, at the half.

In the second half, Caldwell hooked up with Wingeart for a 64-yard touchdown reception, and the Officers began to celebrate their victory.

"It was a hard fought game for both teams," Caldwell said. "I was really happy with the sportsmanship.

There was a lot of camaraderie between the soldiers, said NCO's Jim Pickering. The Turkey Bowl is a great team building experience.

"Even though we're facing each other across the line of scrimmage, we're working together to build cohesion and espirt de corps within the unit," Pickering said.

In addition, the game gives soldiers a time to relax from rigorous training, he said. Families and soldiers get to enjoy a day of entertainment and competition.

With the win, the Officers tied the overall series at two piece.

More people use Briant Wells since renovation

New equipment increases workout usage

Spc. Douglas DeMaio
Bayonet staff

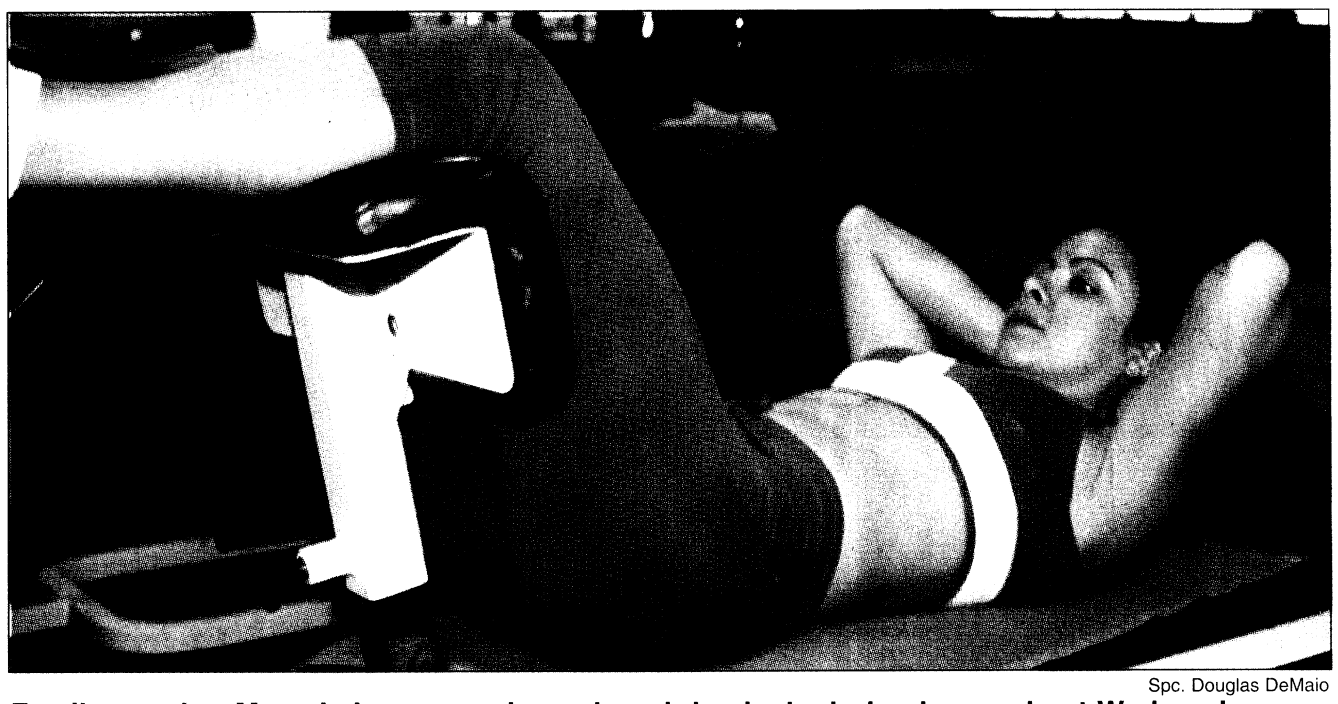
The renovation of Briant Wells Field House is well underway, and with the addition of new equipment in the world-class fitness center, the number of customers is increasing.

"Usage of the facility has increased by 500 to 1,000 percent," said Lt. Col. Bill Rieger, fitness school commander.

People are enjoying more opportunities to get a total-fitness workout, said Andrew Snoddy, post sports director. The equipment is providing a variety of exercises for those interested in long-term commitments to maintaining a healthy lifestyle.

Based on customer feedback, people seem pleased with the outcome of the facility and are excited about working out, Snoddy said.

It's important to meet the needs of the customer base, Rieger said. Having an equal balance of cardiovascular and strength training equipment provides customers with more options to achieve their fitness goals.



"The top five sport and fitness activities are aerobic equipment exercise, strength training, walking, cycling and swimming," Rieger said.

Although the facility had equipment for those activities, it didn't have enough equipment or capacity to fulfill the need of the installation's large population, Snoddy said.

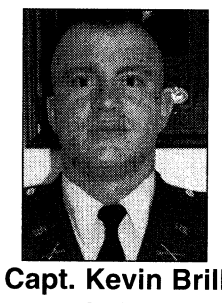
In response to that demand, the U.S. Army Physical Fitness School, Directorate of Community Activities and Martin Army Community Hospital, which formed a wellness team to address the post's fitness needs, decided renovating the facility was necessary to accomplish the team's goals, he said.

By maximizing the available space in the gym, the team accomplished many goals, Rieger said.

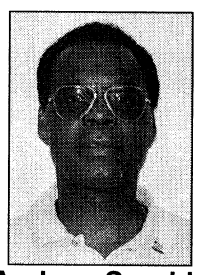
For instance, "the layout of the facility was intentional," Snoddy said. "It gave the fitness center space it needs to reduce waiting time for equipment and raises the level of capacity we have to accommodate our customers."

Spc. Douglas DeMaio

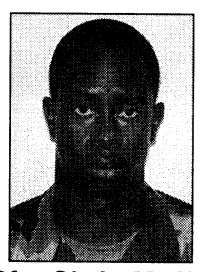
Family member Marcela Lopez works on her abdominals during her workout Wednesday.



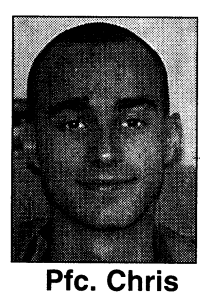
With the purchasing of additional cardiovascular equipment and new strength equipment, the team is focused on meeting the Army chief of staff's well-being initiative, Rieger said.



Remodeling the facility and adding world-class equipment has given the Fort Benning Community the resources it needs to maintain and promote a healthy, active lifestyle, he said.



"The fitness school is teaching our staff about the proper uses of the equipment, so they are fully capable of meeting the needs of our customers," Snoddy said.



With the addition of an aerobics room and personal fitness programs designed to meet the needs of customers still to come, Fort Benning is helping people live strong, healthy lives, Rieger said.

Geisinger — GENERAL PSYCHIATRIST
Geisinger Medical Center

Geisinger is seeking a BC/BE general adult psychiatrist as a colleague in a medically oriented practice. Join an expanding 7-member tertiary care group practice in the Danville/ Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, area. Our main facility, Geisinger Medical Center, is a 437-bed teaching hospital with 75 specialties. This very diverse practice contains a good deal of variety. It encompasses inpatient psychiatry with 50 beds, consultation/liaison psychiatry, a busy outpatient practice, adult and adolescent partial programs, and community outreach. We offer unique opportunities for teaching within our multi-disciplinary mental health team. This is a very flexible position, as our new partner will have the opportunity to incorporate creativity and ideas into the group practice, blending the needs of the group with the talents/interests of the applicant.

Central Pennsylvania offers a scenic, secure lifestyle near the Pocono Mountains. There are many colleges and universities that lend a blend of culture and numerous activities to the area. We are just off I-80 and only 2-to-3 hours from New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, D.C. Geisinger offers a competitive salary and excellent benefits, including generous vacation, 3 weeks CME with a CME stipend, and full medical malpractice coverage. AAE-M/F/D/V- 0207.mn

Car Buyers Finally Have Wish Come True

Rivertown Ford brings original "Price Slicer" and $99 car prices to Columbus thru Saturday Only

Columbus, GA- What would make a car dealer sell perfectly good used cars for as low as $99? Even sell new Fords at thousands off normal manufacturer's suggested retail prices? Rivertown Ford's General Sales Manager Brad Williams gives a simple answer: "Desperation."

"We're really, really pinched for space," Williams explained further. "New car sales are the best they've ever been. Plus, the last couple of years have seen a huge increase in leases. Now, those leases are expiring and they're coming back by the dozen. We have literally run out of room for all the used cars."

This desperation has prompted Williams to fly in a team of professionals to assist his managers to prepare for this weekend sales event. This weekend only, the "Price Slicer" team will be at Rivertown Ford evaluating the prices on a record number of pre-owned vehicles to be drastically sliced to move them out...right before the customer's eyes.

This is the "Price Slicer" sales event that has been written about in newspapers across the country. While other local dealers have hosted lesser knock-offs of the "Price Slicer" concept, Williams is the first to bring the "real deal" to Columbus.

"These guys are serious," Williams says. "We've instructed the Price Slicer Team to determine the best prices to move the most vehicles in just one day."

Obviously, the dealership being overloaded with inventory means a great selection for consumers. "No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here. Mini-vans, and sport utilities if you need room for a big family. Used Nissans, Fords, Mitsubishis, Hondas, Toyotas, Nissans, Mazdas, Chevys, Dodges, you name it... there's a great selection of everything from 87's through 2002! Plus tons of full size work trucks, 4x4s, even extended cab models."

The "Price Slicer" and his team travel the United States disposing of excess dealer inventory via dramatic price cuts.

Here's how it works: The "Slicer" and his team have been in town figuring bottom-line pricing since Thursday. Sale prices are placed on the windshield of every vehicle before the sale day.

"No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here"

Customers can come get a "sneak peak" preview Friday, November 30th from 3-9pm Saturday, the fun begins. Pre-registration begins at 9AM and Williams recommends customers arrive early for the best selection. In fact, the public can register even faster by visiting www.priceslicersale.com. After a brief registration, customers simply choose the vehicle they want. Then the "Price Slicer" begins slicing the price on the windshield thousands of dollars. And, it is true, new and used cars that normally sell from $5000 to $20,000 will be marked down thousands below MSRP, with some perfectly good used cars to be sold for as low as $99. Even brand new 2002 model Ford are included.

All the cars that will be offered during this event will be on display for customer inspection. You can also pre-register for the sale by going to www.priceslicersale.com.

"If credit problems have been in your past, that's no problem," Williams said. "During the 'Price Slicer' sale you can get financing for the car you want with no hassle. Just bring in a valid drivers license, a payroll stub, and a bill from your utilities." Bank representatives will be on hand to assist all credit customers needs.

For further details:
Call the "Price Slicer Hotline" at 706-653-7420 or visit the website at:

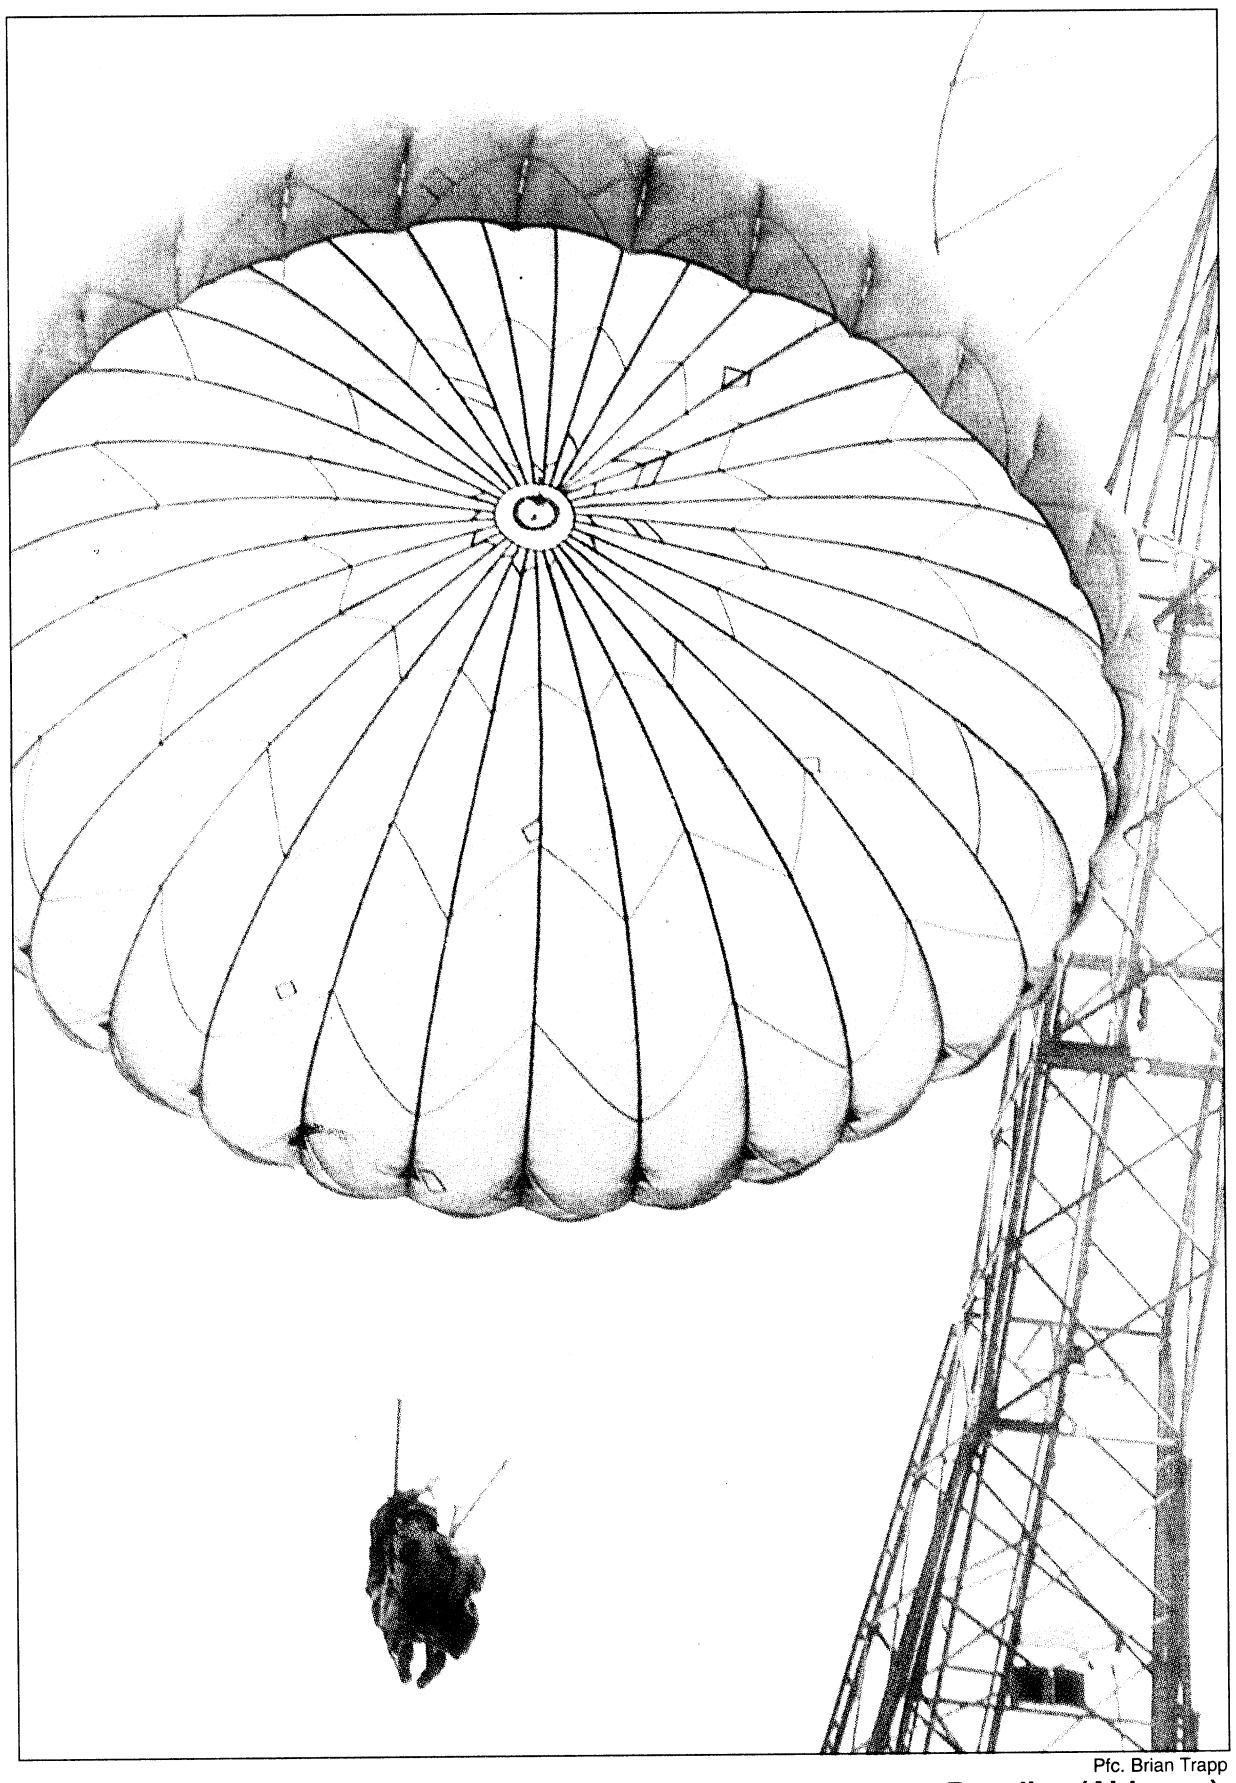
Reg requires readiness

Family care plan important part of duties

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Anytime talk of deployments begins, readiness becomes an issue. With more single and dual military parents in the Army, it seems readiness can't be discussed without mentioning family care plans.

Single and dual-military parents, as well as other soldiers in certain situations, are required by Army Regulation 600-20, Army Command Policy, to have a workable plan to provide care for their children and other family members not able to care for themselves in the event of a deployment, TDY, unaccompanied tour or any other duties that may keep the soldier away from home for an extended period of time. This policy applies to all soldiers whether they are in a deployable or non-deployable unit.



Commanders are responsible for notifying soldiers who are required to have a family care plan and for the upkeep of the program within the unit. They will counsel soldiers who need a family care plan with DA Form 5304-R Family Care plan counseling checklist. The list outlines exactly what is required of the soldier and the time frame the soldier has to meet all of the requirements.

The platoon sergeants in Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor keep the first sergeant informed of any changes in status of their soldiers. Once a soldier is identified as needing one, he is counseled within 30 days, said Capt. Jason A. Miseli, HHC commander.

Soldiers who are required to have a family care plan are responsible for maintaining it. Those who can't or refuse to comply with the checklist requirements to maintain a workable family care plan are not available for worldwide assignment or deployment within the needs of

Qatar, U.S. sign military agreement

Resolution to strengthen cooperation

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

DOHA, Qatar — Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld signed an implementation agreement on behalf of the United States with Qatari Foreign Minister Hamad bin Jasim al Thani Wednesday.

The secretary arrived from Djibouti and immediately went to sign the agreement at Wajba Palace, the foreign minister's official residence.

The agreement will allow the United States and Qatar to strengthen the long-term strategic cooperation "and to engage in some upgrades here in the country that will work to our mutual benefit," the secretary said.

"The relationship between both countries is growing and is being built on a good base of understanding by both sides," said Al Thani.

The agreement will improve readiness capabilities and permit a variety of upgrades to facilities in the Persian Gulf nation.

Some projects are quality-of-life upgrades, the secretary said, while others will provide state-of-the-art military capabilities for forces in the country.

The secretary and foreign minister faced some tough questions from the local press.

One reporter accused the secretary of ignoring the United Nations and the United States of being hell-bent for war.

"How could you even ask that question when it was the Iraqi regime that ignored 16 resolutions of the United

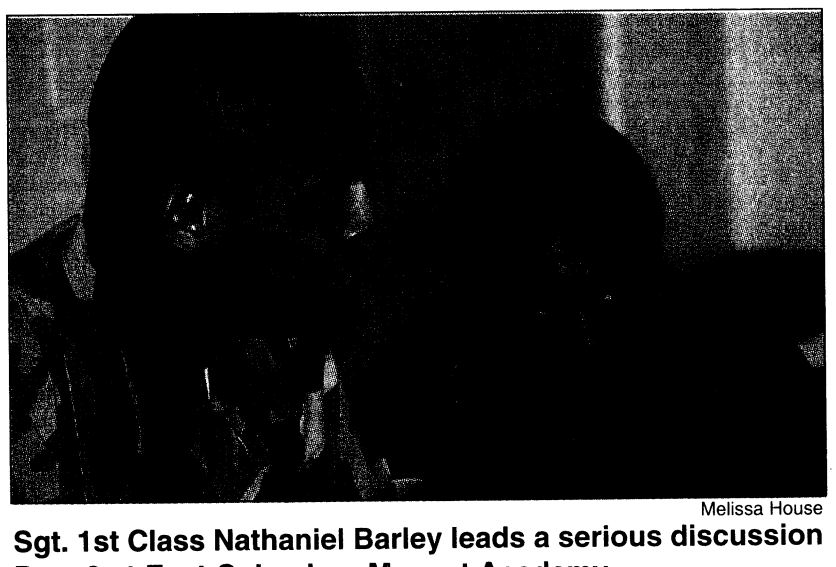
Robert Frost said good fences make good neighbors, but in the case of one Columbus middle school, good soldiers make good neighbors for some tough kids.



Sgt. 1st Class Nathaniel Barley recently bought a home near the East Columbus Magnet Academy and found himself at the forefront of a new Partners in Education opportunity.

Seventh-grade basketball coach Mike Forte recognized that Barley, a drill sergeant in B Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, would have a unique perspective to offer the students, many with behavioral problems.

Barley, along with seven other drill sergeants and cadre from B Co. went to East Columbus Magnet Academy Dec. 6 to talk with a group of 60 students chosen by Forte.

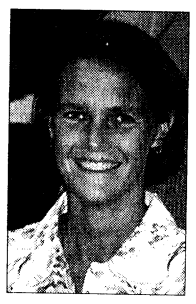
COMMENTARY

I just added a new word to the list of those banned in the House household. "Deployment" now ranks right up there with shut-up, stupid and a long list of others. It's also one of those things that we don't even want to think about, let alone mention.



But by not talking about deployment, we're obviously not preparing for it either, and the unprepared family probably isn't going to have an easy go of it.

I'm no doctor, lawyer, teacher, and certainly no psychiatrist. But I've learned plenty about the impact of deployments on families in the last six months and in the last three days.

Deployments aren't easy on anyone; not the soldier, not the spouse, and certainly not the children.

There's a long laundry list of things that need to be taken care of before a soldier deploys. Shots, wills, powers of attorney— all mundane but very important. Spouses need to know details about family finances, insurance and even car maintenance.

Cars and I don't get along too well, so I'm the one most likely to get snowed by the unscrupulous auto mechanic. You see, the airbag light in my van is on right now, and I'm avoiding the trip to the dealership to find out what that means. But before I go in, I'm going to ask my husband (who's about as mechanically inclined as I am) a few questions. I need to make sure I know the last time the oil was changed, and how new the tires and brakes are.

Someone will take a look at me and know I'm an easy target and a sucker for the "to be on the safe side, you need new brakes" bit.

Communication, I've decided, is really the key. Communication between spouses and sharing critical information will help ease the transition from dual-parent to single-parent family.

That same communication is also going to be even more important for children, because I think deployments are hundreds of times worse for kids than they are for the soldiers or spouses.

Kids just don't have the same communication skills that adults have. They can't always find the right words to let you know how unhappy they are. Johnny will start having behavioral problems at school, Timmy will start wetting the bed and Susie will stop laughing and start sucking her thumb.

Deploying parents can act now. Start talking with your kids. Have some honest, serious talks with your kids. Let them know how you feel and what you are thinking.

This is the perfect opportunity to pass up on that 99-cent heart attack lunch and go have lunch in the school cafeteria. Enjoy a few minutes stuffed into a chair made for someone only 3 feet tall, because when you're deployed, that memory will be priceless to your child.

Stop in at school and talk with the teachers. Let them know about an upcoming deployment and talk with them about any concerns you may have. Your school-age kids spend about seven hours a day there, and you'd be surprised how much influence the teachers have.

Now is the time to make new memories. Step out of your comfort zone. Read to your kids. Read those mushy, feel-good stories that make you cry. Surprise your kids with tape recordings. Stop being shy about photos.

Grin and bear it, because a month into the deployment, your son (the oldest one who is too cool to show his emotions) will pull out that photo and put it on his dresser so he can remember what dad looks like.

That picture and that memory will be what keeps him going until you get back.

Drive cautiously, no one else does

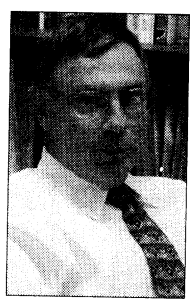
COMMENTARY

Lessons I learned in drivers' education are with me still — although I don't always heed them — just ask my wife. But that's just because I get caught up in the culture of "if there's a way to look like a fool while driving, try it."



I'm not saying when I took drivers' education, but for those of you who must know, it was the same year the Edsel came out. But the lessons I learned still pertain (well, except using a hitching post I assume).

We were told signaling one's intention was very important. If the car's turn signals didn't work, we were given the three positions for a hand signal. You didn't signal your intention, you didn't pass the drivers' test.

And oh, by the way, we were told to look before pulling out into traffic or changing lanes. We were taught that the person on the interstate had the right of way, not the person on the on ramp.

We were told those red octagons spelled STOP. A stop in those days was when your wheels stopped turning and the car wasn't moving.

The meaning of the three colors for traffic lights was drummed into our heads. Green meant go (after looking both ways). Amber meant caution (if you were almost in the intersection and the light turned amber, it was OK to proceed, but if you hadn't reached the intersection, you stopped).

And red really did mean stop, not accelerate.

The correct way to pass was taught. We were told that once you passed another vehicle, you didn't cut in on him and slow down. You kept accelerating to avoid cutting him off. And you didn't pull out in front of traffic and then dotter along at 35 mph for a quarter of a mile where you turned off the highway.

We were told that we were to leave one car length behind the car in front of us for each 10 mph. We were also told that the right hand lane was for slower traffic and the outside lane for faster traffic.

And we did obey the speed limits, none of the "they won't ticket me if I stay below 10 mph over the speed limit."

High beams we were told were to be dimmed 300 feet from oncoming traffic and 100 feet from cars you were approaching. Since it was impossible to guesstimate those distances, even for someone from Los Angeles, we automatically dimmed when we saw a car coming or when our headlights neared a car we were behind.

Cars were not restaurants on wheels. We didn't have cup holders, so drinking and eating was done in restaurants or rest stops. And of course cell phones hadn't been invented so we didn't have to worry about those people losing their concentration and ramming you from the rear or side.

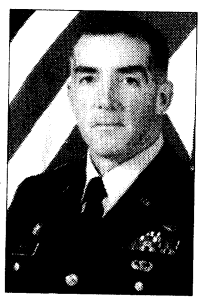
Driving was much safer in those days (yeah, there were fewer cars and trucks on the road).

But the main reason was because we obeyed traffic laws. We obeyed them because they were drummed into our heads, but also because the cops enforced them. Every time I would roll through a stop sign, I looked around to see if a policeman was hiding around the corner. Now I treat stop signs like yield signs, because no one seems to care.

I also speed. Safely of course. But I sure didn't on the California freeways where the California Highway Patrolmen were lurking. They cut you no slack.

Nowadays I'll stop for red lights, but I'll check my rearview mirror first to make sure there's no car within a 100 feet of my backside. If there is, I'll run the light, I don't need a bashed in rear and whiplash.

I do use my turn signals religiously, don't cut other drivers off and leave plenty of space between me and the car in front— yeah, it allows for other cars to cut in on you, but I'm not going to tailgate. Ain't safe.



When everyone was obeying the laws, the roads were a lot safer, and road rage had yet to be invented.

I know those days are long gone, so as we head out for the holidays, keep this final tip from my drivers' ed instructor in mind — drive defensively. Always expect the worst from drivers around you. You won't be disappointed.

AFTB celebrates anniversary

One of the Army's most successful volunteer programs, Army Family Team Building will be celebrating its eighth birthday Monday. AFTB is an educational program designed, written, and instructed by volunteer family members for family members. AFTB teaches family members the Army's culture and the life skills needed for independence and self-sufficiency.

Readiness requires more than "fit and sharp-shooting soldiers." In today's Army, families are an integral part of the team. Our Army leadership knows soldiers work better if their families are secure. When families understand the Army and know how to handle deployments, soldiers are able to more effectively accomplish the mission. As Army operations increase, the daily challenges facing Army families have become more complex.

Army Family Team Building volunteers focus on the needs of everyone to make a positive influence on individual lives. This is accomplished through education and mentoring. Classes are accessible to everyone. AFTB conducts training either in its office, its classroom at Soldiers' Plaza Building 2626 or at off-site locations. AFTB classes are free and child care is provided at Tot Town with prior arrangements.

I hope each of you will join me in recognizing and giving thanks to all those who have contributed ideas, time, energy and concern to this program. This truly is a premier volunteer program.

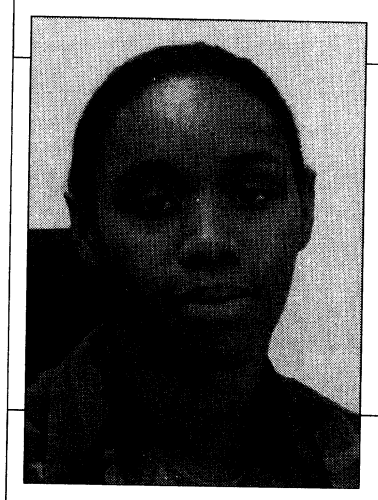
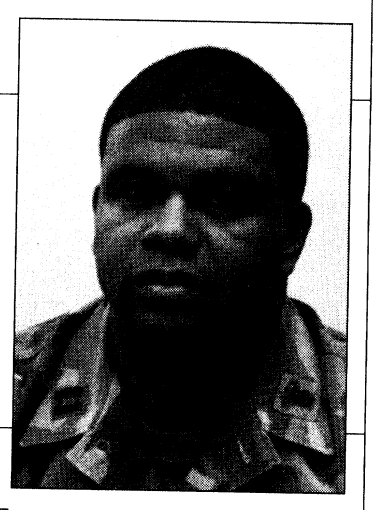
CORRECTION

The Bayonet had a few mistakes in last week's paper:



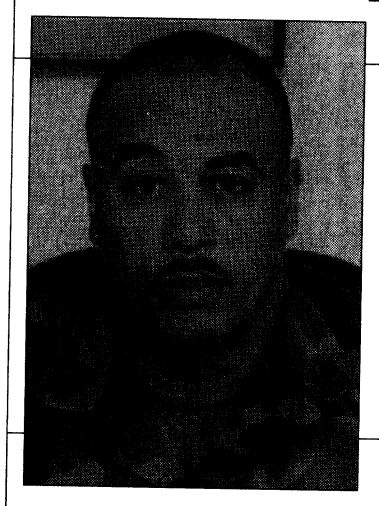
• Col. Tom Cole, Basic Combat Training Brigade commander, was identified as a lieutenant colonel.

• Retired Col. Brian Pentecost was recognized as a distinguished member of the Ranger Training Brigade. He retired as a colonel, not a lieutenant colonel as listed in the paper.

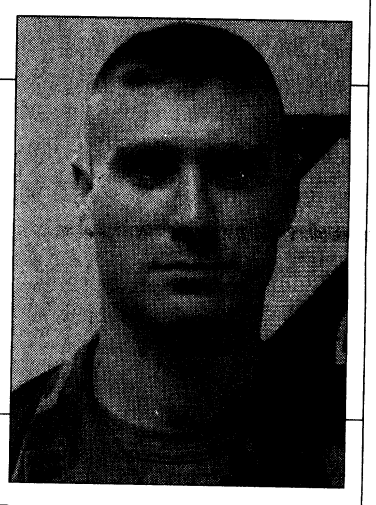


• In one of the advertisements for the Benning Bazaar, the start time was incorrect. The Benning Bazaar started at 10 a.m. and ended at 4 p.m. The Bayonet apologizes for any inconveniences these errors may have caused.

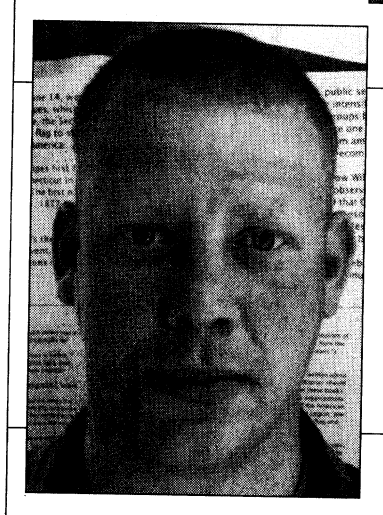
VARIOUS VOICES



What should families be doing to prepare for possible deployment?



Sgt. Jonie Weekley, 203rd Forward Support Battalion — "Families need to make sure there are complete Family Care Plans. They also need to have phone numbers of the spouses in the unit, so they can pass information easily."



Capt. William Davis, 608th Ordnance Company — "Soldiers need to identify the needs before their spouse leaves. The spouse needs to be on the checking account and have power of attorney."

1st Sgt. Calvin Thompson, 13th Corps Support Battalion — "Families need to spend quality time together in preparation for deployments. Family is the most important thing in the Army."

Capt. Darren Rapaport, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment — "I tell my soldiers to spend less time talking and a lot more time listening to their families and their needs before they deploy."

Sgt. John Matthews, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "Families need to make sure the finances are straight, cars are serviced and SGLI is correct."

Staff Sgt. Keith Greeley, 317th Engineer Company — "Soldiers need to ensure their spouses know when the bills need to be paid and what each part of the LES means."

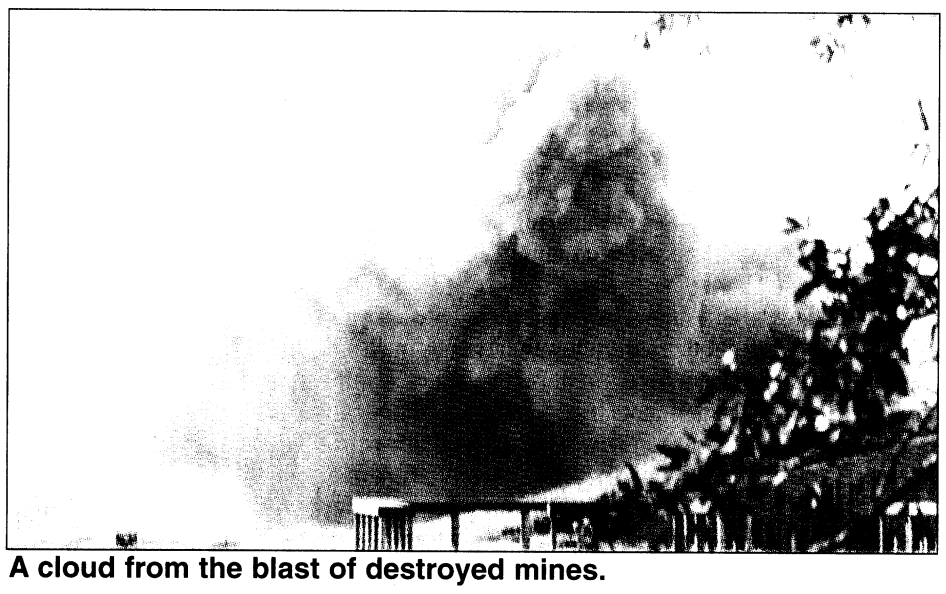
317th Engineers train with C4



Soldiers train on wall-breaching techniques

Staff Sgt. Lonnie Roberts, squad leader, sets the charge to destroy a mine at Terry Demolition range Dec. 6

A cloud from the blast of destroyed mines.

A wall's remains show the power of the explosive.

The Army is shifting its training focus from grand-scale open-area wars to urban battles. The 317th Engineer Battalion kept in step with a wall-breaching exercise Dec. 6 at Terry Demolition Range where the engineers started and ended their day with a "bang."

"I never thought we would take urban movements to this level," said Sgt. 1st Class Antonios Gray, platoon sergeant.

"We will have to move building to building, in future battles. It's not just open-area wars anymore."

The demolition charges are able to blow a hole in a reinforced wall large enough for a fully loaded sapper or ranger to run through, said Sgt. 1st Class Charles Manchester, platoon sergeant.

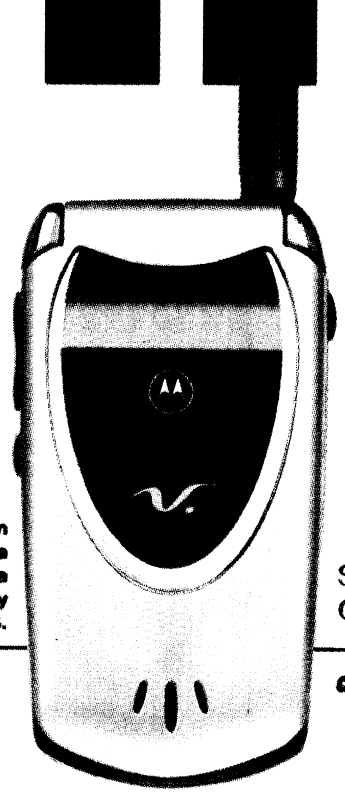
If a building was sealed off, they could use this method to enter through one of the sidewalls to infiltrate the enemy.

"There's definitely a need for this type of training," Gray said. "Soldiers already had to do similar things in Afghanistan. They had to blow through the caves. We're going to have to go through cities to meet our final objective. It won't be out in the middle of the desert."

C4 is the mainstay for demolition, said 1st Lt. James Inman, B Company executive officer. Soldiers use it in Afghanistan and elsewhere around the world.

The soldiers laid out their C4 on Styrofoam to prepare the demolitions to place on the wall with double-sided tape, before sending an earthshaking blast through a foot of concrete and rebar, blowing out a sizeable hole, leaving only the rebar to destroy.

"This is what I joined the Army to do," said Spc. Noah Stafford. "I've never done this before, I think it went pretty well, and it's good training. We made one of the largest holes out of all the walls."



Before the soldiers began the wall breaching, they started their day off with mine training. They disarmed and armed live mines in the field and then destroyed the mines with C4.

"Mines are second nature to us," said Sgt. Julius Howard.

"We do regular training with them, but you still need to be careful. The people that get too relaxed with them are the ones who get hurt."

Cinnabon rolls into Infantry Hall

Cinnamon rolls adding spice to cafeteria

Pfc. Chris Stephens

The Infantry Hall cafeteria welcomed a new business Monday.

Cinnabon, home of "world famous cinnamon rolls," will sell various kinds of rolls and Seattle's Best coffee.

"We brought Cinnabon here to bring the Infantry Hall cafeteria up to standard," said Donald O'Reilly, general manger of the Fort Benning Exchange.

"Our goal was to give the consumers a name brand choice and to increase the variety of choices in food."

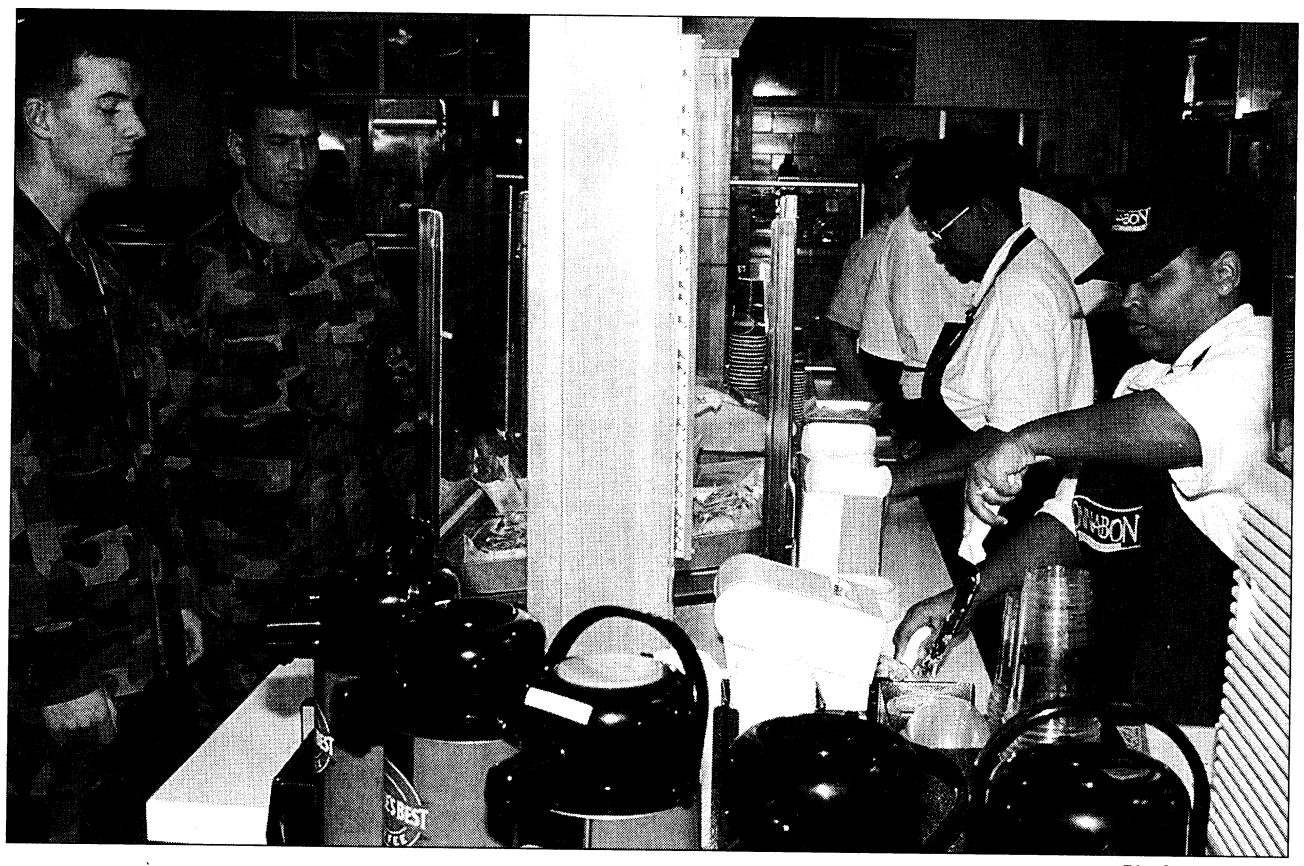
Cinnabon is the first of a two-phase plan to increase consumers' options, O'Reilly said.

The second phase will include the addition of a Charlie's Steakery, Robin Hood and Anthony's Pizza, all expected to open by the summer of 2003.

"I expect the Cinnabon to have great success," O'Reilly said. "The variety that is offered will be a big morale booster."

Cinnabons will also be at shoppettes around post.

"We're putting them at the shoppettes first because they only have a 24-hour shelf life," O'Reilly said.



"If they have as much success as we are thinking they will, we will then put them in the Main Mall Post Exchange," he said.

Cinnabon offers many types of cinnamon rolls at various prices, including the classic cinnamon, pecan and caramel.

They also serve seasonal specialties like the Applebon and S'morebon.

Prices for the buns include $2.29 for a large bun and $8.49 for a six-pack.

"I think it's great that Cinnabon has come here," said 2nd Lt. Philip Weismiller, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, as he sampled a cinnamon roll Tuesday. "They offer more choices and they have great cinnamon rolls."

Soldiers Radio hits airwaves via Internet

Live radio music, news everyday

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

The Army recently flipped the switch on a new form of communication geared toward soldiers and family members.

Since the end of October, Soldiers Radio has broadcast from its sound rooms in Alexandria, Va., bringing music and Army news over the World Wide Web.

"The great thing about being online," said Staff Sgt. Matt Howard, programming NCO, "is that anyone with a modem can pick us up."

Fort Benning soldiers and family members can listen to the station seven days a week, 24 hours a day through the U.S. Army homepage at www.soldiersradio.com.

Howard, and radio operations manager Carolyn Pitt, are running the show, literally. Still in its infancy, the station plays 45 minutes of music every hour with 15 minutes of news.

"Right now, we're basically a jukebox with (news) spots," Howard said. "But we are expanding our programming."

Current programming includes live coverage of Pentagon press briefings on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 12:30 p.m. ET and the official Army newscast, "Army Newswatch."

Since the station is a nonprofit organization, it is licensed to play country, rock and other contemporary music without paying fees. "Sounds of Sunday" is inspirational music broadcast at 9 a.m. ET. Sundays.

The station covered a live, town hall style meeting with Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld, radio coverage of the Army-Navy football game, and the live U.S. Army Field Band concert Monday.

The station broadcasts community calendars for the entire Army, pulling information from post newspapers on the Web, Howard said. They also provide the music that people hear when they watch the command information channels at all of the major posts across the country.

In January, the station will debut the Louis L'Amour Theater, a nostalgic "golden days of radio" drama. The theater was made possible by Bantam Books and the L'Amour family. January programming will also include the first in a series of live, monthly interviews with the Sergeant Major of the Army.

One of the Soldiers Radio test projects is a holiday answering machine through www.anyservicemember.com where people can request dedications for deployed soldiers. Howard said that the station hopes to make the dedications a regular programming feature next year.

"I was in Bosnia and the German Army station there does dedications every night," he said. Both Howard and Pitt came to a meeting with similar ideas for adding the dedications to the Soldiers Radio line-up.

The station receives a number of original submissions from individuals, mostly of patriotic songs, Howard said, some of which have gotten airtime.

Soldiers Radio debuted in October with little fanfare or advertising, but had more than 300 hits in the first week, Howard said. They received email from individuals across the country.

"It's amazing how many civilians have surfed onto us," he said.

Users must have Quicktime software to listen to the Web cast. The software is available free for private use at www.apple.com/quicktime/download.

ACS supports needy families

Post program provides free turkeys

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Each year, the Army Community Service Support Fund Holiday Turkey Program provides turkeys to needy families on Fort Benning for Thanksgiving and Christmas.

This year, more than 1,100 turkeys were purchased for distribution to post soldiers and their families.

"It's a chance to provide for those soldiers and families that are less fortunate," said Al Deane, Army Emergency Relief officer.

"Some soldiers are single-parents, divorced or separated, and we provide them help during the holiday season."

"In our unit, there are a lot of single-soldiers with children," said Sgt. Drexel Parnell, 718th Engineer Company. "Many of them are not as fortunate as some of us to get their children a lot of gifts for Christmas.

"However, with this program, we can provide the family with a turkey for Christmas and let them know how much we care about them and their family," Parnell said.

"During Thanksgiving, we delivered a turkey to a single-mom with four children, and she wept because the family wasn't going to be able to eat Thanksgiving dinner," Parnell said.

"It's the things like that that makes our unit do this every year. Just seeing the joy on the people's faces is a real blessing."

"It's all about the spirit of giving," said Sgt. 1st Class Yvette French, Infantry Training Brigade.

The program is supported by many units, including: the U.S. Army Infantry Center, the Chaplain's Fund, Boy Scouts of America, Girl Scouts of America, the Enlisted Wives' Club, the Officer's Spouses' Club and Department of Defense Schools.

"Without the support of these organizations and the various units around post, this program would not be possible," Deane said.

The ACS Support Fund is continually looking for donations or contributions to support the ACS emergency food locker.

The Food Locker is open from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday and is located at Building 2629 Soldiers' Plaza.

For more information on the holiday drive or the Food Locker, call ACS at 545-6969.

Joint War College gives officers fighting edge

Land course part of three-phase class

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The U.S. and its allies have teamed up to fight the war against terrorism, and their officers are hard at work to defeat their enemies.

Nearly 180 officers from 40 countries are stationed at Fort Benning as part of a two-week United Kingdom course called Exercise Georgian Cormorant.

The exercise is part of a year-long class with 330 students taught by the United Kingdom Joint Command Staff College.

The class teaches brigade-level operations in a divisional context to officers from all branches of service.

"This course is a major stepping stone in any officer's career," said British Lt. Col. Jonny Cray, who authored the exercise.

"We teach them formation tactics and assess them for potential here."

Each year, in the middle of the course, the joint classes are divided into three sections: land, sea and air.

The land division comes to Fort Benning to train in unfamiliar terrain away from the distractions of home.

> "This course has helped me to see America through the world's eyes."
> Maj. Keith Dunkle
> U.S. Army Special Forces

"By reducing the distractions, we're able to get much more training done each day," Cray said.

The officers who come to Fort Benning for the land course are divided into groups of 10, which are then divided into sub-groups of five, representing key appointments in a brigade headquarters.

They are then given a problem, either offensive or defensive, and approximately 24 hours to devise a battle plan and give their instructor a back brief on that plan.

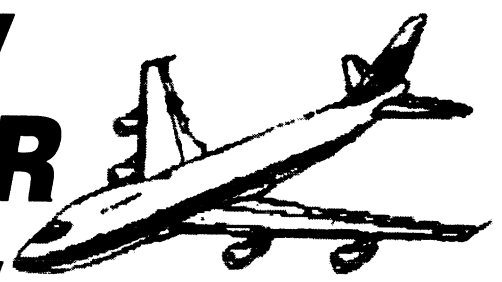
The wars of the future will involve many countries working together, and classes like this will enhance their interoperability, Cray said..

"The course is an excellent opportunity for us to strengthen the United Kingdom's alliance with the United States," he said.

"Strengthening ties between countries is a good thing, and this class gets us more used to working with each other."

American officers in the course are learning more than strategy plans. They are learning about foreign relations first hand.

"This course has helped me to see America through the world's eyes," said Maj. Keith Dunkle, U.S. Army Special Forces.



"It will help me to determine what U.S. actions to take and how the world may possibly perceive them.

"ACSC is more about the art of war rather than the science of war, which is very different from America's prospective," Dunkle said.

After completion of the land portion of the course, the soldiers will return to the United Kingdom and work on the third part of the course.

The third segment includes joint and combined operational level studies, global and regional studies, and another trip to the Unites States for one week to visit major military and political decision making bodies.

DMVS to dispose of insurance cards

New system gives police instant report

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

People who have their personal vehicles registered in Georgia will no longer need to carry insurance cards as proof of insurance after Feb. 1.

The Department of Motor Vehicle Safety will implement a new data system to verify mandatory insurance coverage on privately owned vehicles in an effort to reduce the number of uninsured vehicles on Georgia's highways.

The new database is called the Georgia Electronic Insurance Compliance System, and it gives police officers the ability to run a license plate and get instant feedback about the vehicle's insurance record. Fort Benning's military police will be able to access the database from their vehicles through the National Criminal Information Center, said Staff Sgt. Theodore Taylor, traffic NCOIC.

"The new system sounds great, and I'm looking forward to seeing it in our cars," he said.

> "The new system sounds great I'm looking forward to seeing it in our cars."
> Staff Sgt. Theodore Taylor
> Traffic NCOIC

When police officers pull cars over, they will type in the license plates as part of routine procedure. The system will be able to tell if the vehicle is insured, and the driver will be charged with driving without insurance if their vehicle comes up negative.

Everyone is encouraged to check the vehicle identification number that is printed on their registration card to see if it matches the number on their insurance card, according to a handout from the DMVS. If the numbers are off by even one digit, the police will charge the driver with driving without insurance.

The new system will also assist soldiers who are deployed, said Janna Price, insurance reinstatement specialist with the DMVS. Under the old system, soldiers who put their cars in storage and dropped the insurance coverage while deployed would have a suspended license when they returned home.

With the new system, soldiers would only have their license plates suspended, and they can easily be reinstated, saving the soldier from fines and possible jail time that can result from driving on a suspended license.

"I think the new system is a pretty good deal," said Pvt. Scott Bedard, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment. "If you are deployed you should be able to store your car without worrying about losing your license, and if this system will save us the heartache and money involved with that, then spending $20 for new tags is nothing compared to what it could be."

For more information about the new system, call the local licensing office.

Incompatible systems pose security problem

Database to improve discrepancies

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Sorting through and integrating different computer information systems from the 22 agencies slated to comprise the new Department of Homeland Security presents "a challenge," the White House's chief Homeland Security information official said.

Agencies selected to merge into the DHS will bring a variety of disparate, separate databases with them, Lee Holcomb, director for information structure in the White House Office of Homeland Security, told a homeland security conference audience here.

Prior to the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks on America, a number of federal agencies had developed technologies and systems to integrate within an agency setting, but in many cases did not address information sharing across multiple agencies, Holcomb said.

Such advanced capability, he said, is a mandatory asset for the new DHS, which is slated to start up in March 2003.

Many existing databases operated by DHS-designated agencies, and systems run by other organizations expected to work closely with the Homeland Security Department are currently "not mutually accessible," Holcomb said.

Additionally, he said that much of the communications equipment now used by civic emergency first responders, such as police and fire and rescue workers, is either outdated or incompatible with federal gear.

"In many cases, police officers are operating 1970s analog radios," Holcomb said.

Such discrepancies will be solved, he said, by testing and selecting a model emergency-response setup, complete with modern, interoperable-communications equipment.

Under a key initiative called Project Safecom, Holcomb said, firefighters, police officers and emergency medical technicians gain the ability to communicate seamlessly and quickly to help preserve life and property during a disaster.

"It is very critical that we are giving them the tools they need to protect communities to the maximum extent possible," he said.

Maritime, land security big part of TSA mission, officials say

Security includes ports, roads

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Although airport security efforts get the headlines, securing the nation's ports, waterways, coastline and land assets is just as important a part of the Transportation Security Administration's mission, a senior TSA official said today.

"While aviation security has captured most of the media and most of the interest, maritime and land is a significant portion of the (U.S.) transportation security system," said Steven E. Froehlich of TSA's Office of Maritime and Land Security. "In fact, it represents five-sixths of the transportation sector."

Besides being responsible for protecting the nation's ports, waterways and coastline, Froehlich said his office "also handles highways — which includes trucks and buses — rail, mass transit and pipelines."

He said his office organized into sections for passenger security, cargo security, infrastructure security and response preparedness.

He then ticked off some statistics to illustrate the scope of his office's areas of responsibility, noting the United States has:

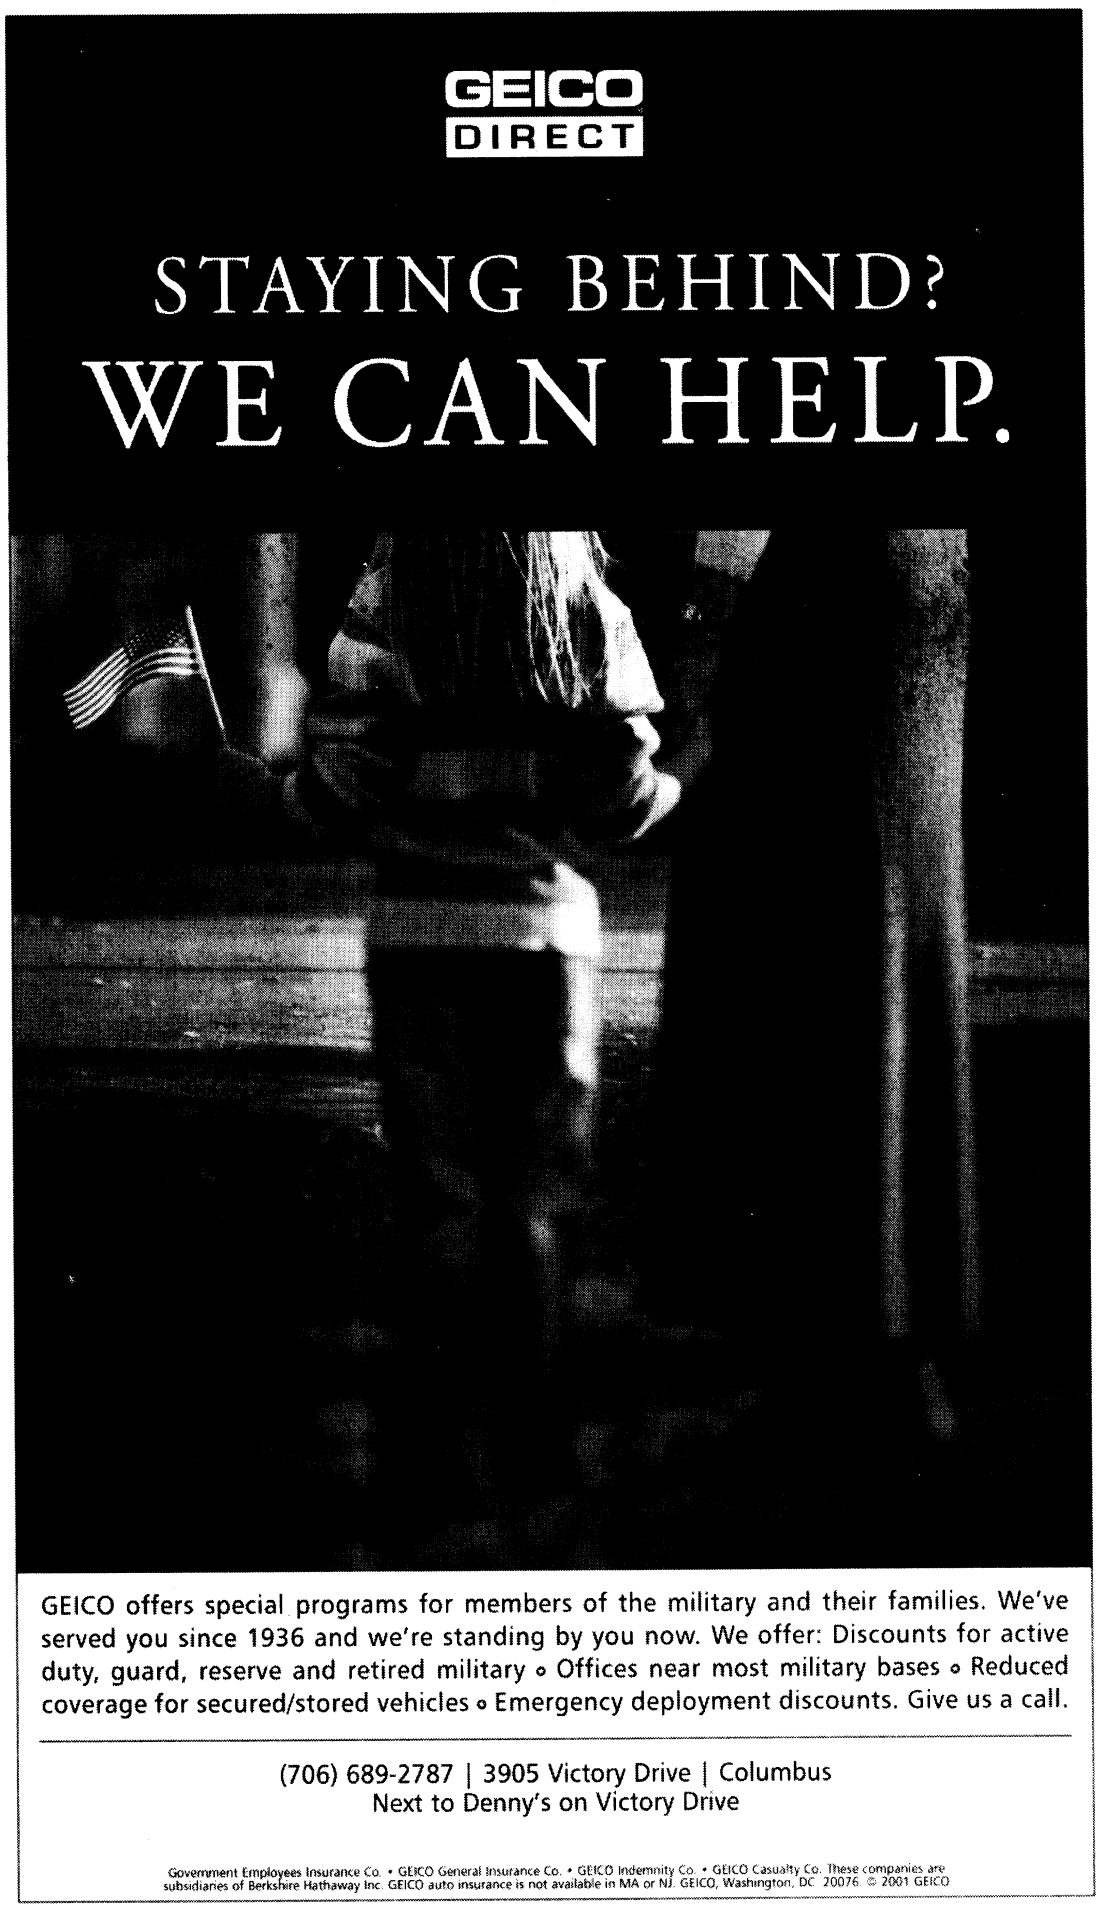
• 11.2 million trucks and 2.2 million railcars enter the country each year.

• 120,000 miles of major railroads.

• 2.2 million miles of pipelines, which carry combustible materials like crude oil, gasoline and natural gas.

• Public transit systems that account for 9 billion commuter trips each year.

• 25,000 miles of navigable, commercial waters.



• 7,500 foreign-flagged ships that make 51,000 ports of call each year at the nation's 361 ports.

"So, when you think TSA, you don't think just aviation, you don't think just maritime. You've got to think of all of the other (transportation) modes as well," he said.

A challenge for the new Homeland Security Department and TSA will be to "not make one aspect of a mode of transportation security more secure and leave the others more vulnerable," he said.

Applying a risk management approach and realistic threat assessments will help TSA perform its mission, Froehlich said. TSA efforts provide protection while producing a negligible effect on commerce.

Deadline nears in long-term care open season

Plan pays high costs associated with nursing care

Sgt. 1st Class Doug Sample
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — For military and civilian personnel who don't have an extra $20,000 to spend on long-term health care and who can't count on their families to take care of them, now may be the time to sign up for the Federal Long-Term Care Insurance Program.

Dec. 31 is the program open-season enrollment deadline. Premiums are determined by coverage options and age, but they remain level after coverage starts. Open season offers the advantages of fewer health-related questions and premiums based on the applicant's coverage and age as of July 1, 2002. After open season, the health questionnaire is longer and premiums are based on applicants' coverage and their ages when they buy it.

The Federal Long-Term Care Insurance Program is administered by John Hancock and MetLife, two of the nation's leading insurers. It's the only long-term care insurance program authorized by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management.

According to an April 2002 MetLife Market Survey of Nursing Home and Home Care Costs, the national average annual cost of home health care is well over $20,000. That cost is expected to climb to $68,000 by 2030. The national average annual nursing home cost is $52,000 for a semi-private room and is expected to climb to $190,600 by 2030.

Studies show that about 60 percent of those who reach age 65 will need long-term care at some time in their lives. However, many people don't realize that the need for long-term care can strike at any time. According to OPM statistics, 40 percent of people receiving long-term care services are working-age adults, between the ages of 18 and 64.

The FTLC insurance program benefits those who can no longer perform daily living activities such as eating, bathing or getting dressed. It also covers persons affected by severe "cognitive impairments," such as dementia and Alzheimer's disease.

In addition, the program provides money to pay for care in various settings, including at home, assisted living facilities, adult day care centers and hospice facilities. More than 80 percent of all people receiving long-term care assistance are not in nursing homes.

OPM Director Kay Coles James, speaking on behalf of the FLTC program on the OPM Web site, calls the insurance a gift to her family.

"I told my children that when I signed up for the OPM-sponsored Federal Long Term Care Insurance Program, I was going to make the insurance certificate one of their presents because it benefits them as much as it benefits my husband and me," she stated. "Through this one act of personal responsibility, I am reducing a potential future burden on them and their families."

Applications can be done online at www.ltcfeds.com or downloaded for mailing. The Web site also allows federal employees to calculate insurance premiums and to find answers to frequently asked questions.

To talk with a long-term care adviser, call 1-800-582-3337, (TTY: 1-800-843-3557), 8 a.m. to midnight, Eastern time, seven days a week.

Nations over a period of many, many years," he said.

"Second, how could you even ask that question given the fact that it was the United States that went to the United Nations and received a unanimous vote in the Security Council."

He said the premise of the question is "obviously misplaced."

Rumsfeld faced a number of questions on Iraq and the declaration Iraq submitted to the United Nations on its weapons of mass destruction programs.

He said the declaration is more than 20,000 pages long.

The secretary said no one will know if Iraq has complied with this aspect of the terms of U.N. Security Council Resolution 1441 until experts get a chance to translate, study and analyze the results.

Mentors: Help magnet school's children

kids with all sorts of things," Forte said. "We'll jump on it anytime we can get people to talk with our kids."

Forte told the soldiers that some of the students they would meet were not motivated, and sometimes disruptive and disrespectful in class. Many were not taking full advantage of the opportunities the magnet school, one of two magnet middle schools in Columbus, had to offer.

"They feel as if they have to act a certain way to get attention," he said. "They don't realize they will have to earn their keep someday."

Both Forte and Principal Carol Hutcheson felt that meeting brought a real-world perspective to the students from soldiers who deal with young people every day.

The students balked at the doorway to the cafeteria as they caught the first glimpse of the BDU-clad soldiers wearing campaign hats.

"Come on in," said former B Co. first sergeant, Master Sgt. Tidus McGriff. "This isn't about recruiting. We're going to give you some views on life and what you are about to get into as you get older. We're going to talk about values and ethics. You guys are our future."

Barley, McGriff and the rest of the cadre broke the students into smaller groups.

Sgt. Latrice Stuckie took the female students and had them involved in a heated discussion about having boyfriends in middle school. The topic soon evolved into teen pregnancy and the impact on a young mother's ability to finish school while caring for a child. Stuckie, a single parent, talked frankly with the girls about not letting romantic relationships interfere with the learning opportunities offered by the magnet program.

Drill sergeant Staff Sgt. Tyrone Miller had his group's undivided attention as he talked to the students about his experiences growing up in California, where he was enrolled in a similar magnet school program.

"I was smart enough to get selected for the magnet program," Miller said, "but dumb enough to get kicked out." Miller told his group that his school resume included three junior high and five high schools. He urged the students to start thinking about what their resume will say, especially if they plan to go to college.

"You have to try to take advantage of the school," he said, adding that the magnet programs offer great educational experiences for all students, no matter what their background.

Students talked about some of the problems they saw in class: kids joking around, being disrespectful to the teachers, not doing homework or class work.

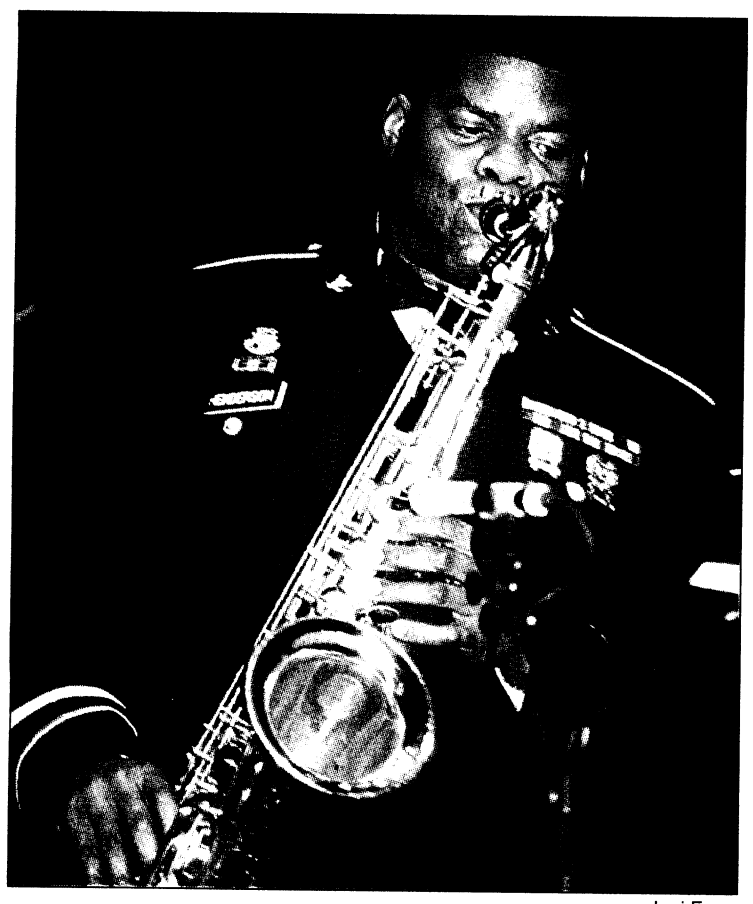
"The teachers already have it," Miller said, referring to an education. "They're trying to make sure you get it, and joking around in class doesn't help anyone."

The discussion took a serious turn when Miller asked the group about gangs in school. The group was left speechless when Miller told them that there was no peer pressure for him when it came to gangs. He was introduced to gangs at home.

"My dad was a 'Blood,' my brother was a 'Crip.'" he said. "Most of the males in my family were gang members."

Miller said he hung around the gangs as a child and volunteered to go through initiation when he was 12. He later saw his best friend get shot in the head by a member of a rival gang. He took off his BDU top and showed the students his gang tattoos.

"I'm not proud of these," he said. "Every time I get a physical, someone takes notes.



"When I joined the Army, I still had the gang mentality."

Around the room, the discussions slowly came to a close. The students, who had been so reluctant to step into the cafeteria, left much more slowly. Miller's group was the last to leave.

Barley left his group with one last thought.

"The road to success is wide open," he said. "All you have to do is get on it."

"Service is a responsibility you don't take lightly."

Service. A word we understand. We learn about it from our members, people like us who know what it means to serve in the military. USAA was founded over 80 years ago by military personnel for military personnel. We serve our members with an array of products and services that stretches from insurance to banking to investments. We even have a unique package of services designed to ease you through a PCS or deployment. And our member service is consistently rated the highest by a wide range of sources – including our members themselves, whether they're enlisted or officers, on active duty or in the National Guard or Reserves. At USAA, service isn't just a word. It's a way of life. Just ask around.

OPSEC affects everyone

Awareness key to operations security, protecting post

Debbie Kearns
Directorate of Intelligence and Security

With Sept. 11 and with the talk of possible war, it is imperative that we know and practice operations security. What is OPSEC? OPSEC is the process of denying adversaries information about friendly capabilities and intentions by identifying, controlling, and protecting indicators associated with planning and conducting military operations and other activities.

We were given a wake-up call Sept. 11, reminding us that the United States does have enemies and that each and every citizen or ally is a potential target.

It is estimated that 90 percent of all information gathered by terrorists is provided by the target. Therefore, knowing and practicing the five steps of OPSEC can dramatically reduce the likelihood that you or your loved ones will become targets.

IDENTIFY CRITICAL INFORMATION — Determine what information is vital to an adversary in order for their attack to be successful. For example, fuel delivery schedules, vehicle/personnel movements, or deployment/destination data. Also, determine how long the information must be protected.

THREAT ANALYSIS — Identify the adversary. Determine their goals, their strategies, what information they already have, and the level of their collecting capability.

VULNERABILITY ANALYSIS — Scrutinize every step of a planned exercise or operation to determine any OPSEC indicators that could reveal critical information or cause a disadvantage to the friendly forces. Then, compare those indicators with the adversary's intelligence collection capabilities identified in threat analysis.

lookCLOSERlook look

Practice OPSEC to reduce the chance of loved ones being targeted:

- Do not reveal critical information in a letter or e-mail home, it may be intercepted.
- Be aware of what is thrown away, social security numbers and TDY locations may not be classified but could verify rumors of deployment.
- Know and practice continuous OPSEC and teach family members the principles and importance of it.

ASSESSMENT OF RISKS — Once the risks are determined, the unit must determine what OPSEC measures to use. There are three measures that may be used:

- Prevent them from detecting an indicator;
- Provide an alternative analysis of an indicator;
- Attack the adversary's collection system.

APPLICATION OF MEASURES — Apply the measures determined to be most advantageous to this and all future operations.

THINK before you speak. THINK before you send that letter to mom. THINK before you email a friend. THINK before throwing that memorandum in the trash. Are you giving the adversary the last piece of the information puzzle necessary for an attack?

When you speak of military operations, equipment or personnel, you may be speaking to someone who has no "need to know." Someone who has ill intentions could overhear you. Conversations over open telephone lines are also subject to interception.

When you write that letter home, consider who might read it. Will mom tell the garden club or the neighborhood grocer?

E-mailing friends is a great way to keep in touch, but not if your correspondence is being intercepted by a talented hacker. Some very sophisticated computer systems have been found sitting in some of the most unsophisticated or underdeveloped countries in the world.

Digging through the trash has been ruled legal by the Supreme Court. Names, social security numbers, and TDY locations may not be classified. But that information is sensitive and could verify rumors of deployment, individual association with the military, etc.

SOME ITEMS OF INTEREST:

Unit deployments; present or future unit operations; unit course of action; unit or equipment capabilities; unit mission and strength; lessons learned; personnel information; unit maintenance and repair status; location of staging areas; location of weapons depots; unit state of training location of fuel sites; unit security posture or level; key leader and asset location or status

Never think you are invulnerable, or have no useable information. The enemy is skilled at piecing together seemingly unimportant or unclassified information to form a larger picture. Your actions, words or appearance may provide critical information to a potential enemy seeking intelligence. Become an active member in your security and remember OPSEC and the above reminders.

The incidents of Sept. 11, Oklahoma City and the USS Cole show that it doesn't matter what you do for a living or what your connection may be to the U.S. government. Because of our beliefs or because someone is upset with our government, you could become a victim. Be aware of your surroundings. Wearing unit T-shirts out on the town or placing unit crests on a vehicle are just two things that draw attention to your status.

As time passes, the memories of Sept. 11 may fade. However, the enemies who perpetrated or aided the perpetration of these atrocities are still bent on causing our death or downfall. Their hatred has not faded. You must not become complacent.

BOTTOM LINE: Know and practice continuous OPSEC. Teach your family the principles of OPSEC. It is the responsibility of every soldier and citizen and the only way we can succeed in foiling any adversary's plans for wreaking havoc with our lives.

Happy Birthday AFTB!

Dear Army Family Team Building volunteers, students, and supporters,

At this milestone, we would like to take this opportunity to thank the Fort Benning community for their constant support and dedication to the Army Family Team Building Program. Our program was founded in 1994 and since then, we have seen tremendous growth in volunteerism, student attendance, family readiness, and command support.

Our volunteers make AFTB a true family member program. We are a success because of the unique enthusiasm, expertise, and experience each one of our volunteers bring. It is on this special occasion that we stop and say a special thank you to our AFTB volunteers throughout the Fort Benning community. Without you, our AFTB program would not be the success story it is today.

Dec. 16 has been declared "Army Family Team Building Day." As part of our community outreach program, please join us as we commemorate this day with a cookie and information table at the Fort Benning Commissary from 10:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Cold snap reminder to train safely in winter

Jim Caldwell
TRADOC News Service

FORT MONROE, Va. — The cold spell that hit several southern states Dec. 4-5 raised the Training and Doctrine Command Surgeon's concern for welfare of soldiers in training.

"I don't think our training base has seen weather like this for some time," said Dr. (Col.) Bernard DeKoning, TRADOC Surgeon. "We're looking at an unseasonably cold winter following an unseasonably hot summer."

Cold injuries can hospitalize soldiers, but the good news is that they're rarely fatal. The exception is hypothermia, when the core body temperature drops below 95 degrees Fahrenheit, or 35 degrees Celsius.

Another life threatening condition during winter is carbon monoxide poisoning, caused by faulty heaters in "heat tents" or confined spaces.

"We still have the potential for serious injury from carbon monoxide poisoning if the right kind of stove isn't used," said Dave Prentice, TRADOC Safety Office. "The stove used in the heat tent or other indoor areas must be an Army-approved, vented stove.

"Unless you're dealing with hypothermia or carbon monoxide poisoning, when you drag someone out of the water, cold injuries rarely result in fatalities," DeKoning said.

A heat tent is one of the precautions taken when soldiers are training outdoors. One approach is to allow soldiers to warm in a "heat tent." Ironically, some winter injuries occur in the heat tents.

In his view, winter weather offers significant advantages over hot summer temperatures. But soldiers still must maintain their fluid and food consumption, along with approved winter clothing.

"In winter, you can put on enough clothes to keep you warm," Prentice said. "In summer you have the heat risk factor, now matter how few clothes you wear."

Safety approaches in cold weather do not necessarily mean that cold is the reverse of heat, DeKoning said. However, some approaches are opposite of how they are done in the summer.

In winter, the more active soldiers are, the longer they can operate outdoors without suffering injuries.

In summer heat, trainees can only perform heavy tasks for a prescribed amount of time so they're not affected by high heat.

"Soldiers performing sedentary training or duty in cold weather are at risk of becoming a cold casualty, even during times where the temperature is above freezing and it may be deceptively warm," DeKoning said.

"Soldiers on guard duty who stand for long periods, or people who check IDs at the gates are at most risk," he said.

Training unit commanders and cadre must apply risk management to selecting the best training approach to protect trainees from winter elements, the doctor said. To help them, DeKoning and the Army Medical Command have added Cold Casualty Risk Management Guidelines on a Web site at http://chppm-www.apgea.army.mil/coldinjury.

"Soldiers in TRADOC have an advantage over troops in the field," Prentice said. "For example, during operations in Afghanistan, soldiers had to operate in a winter environment without heat tents and operations cannot be stopped to allow soldiers to warm up.

"In TRADOC, though, there is no excuse for unnecessarily exposing soldiers to weather-related injuries."

Plan: Makes soldiers more prepared, productive

the Army. These soldiers are not meeting their duty obligation, which affects mission readiness. They could face consequences, including negative counseling, a bar to re-enlistment and involuntary discharge from the Army, said Capt. Joshua S. Shuey, administrative and civil law attorney, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate. Soldiers who attempt to deceive the Army about their need to maintain a family care plan or clearly make no evident effort to comply with AR 600-20 may also face punishment under the Uniform Code of Military Justice.

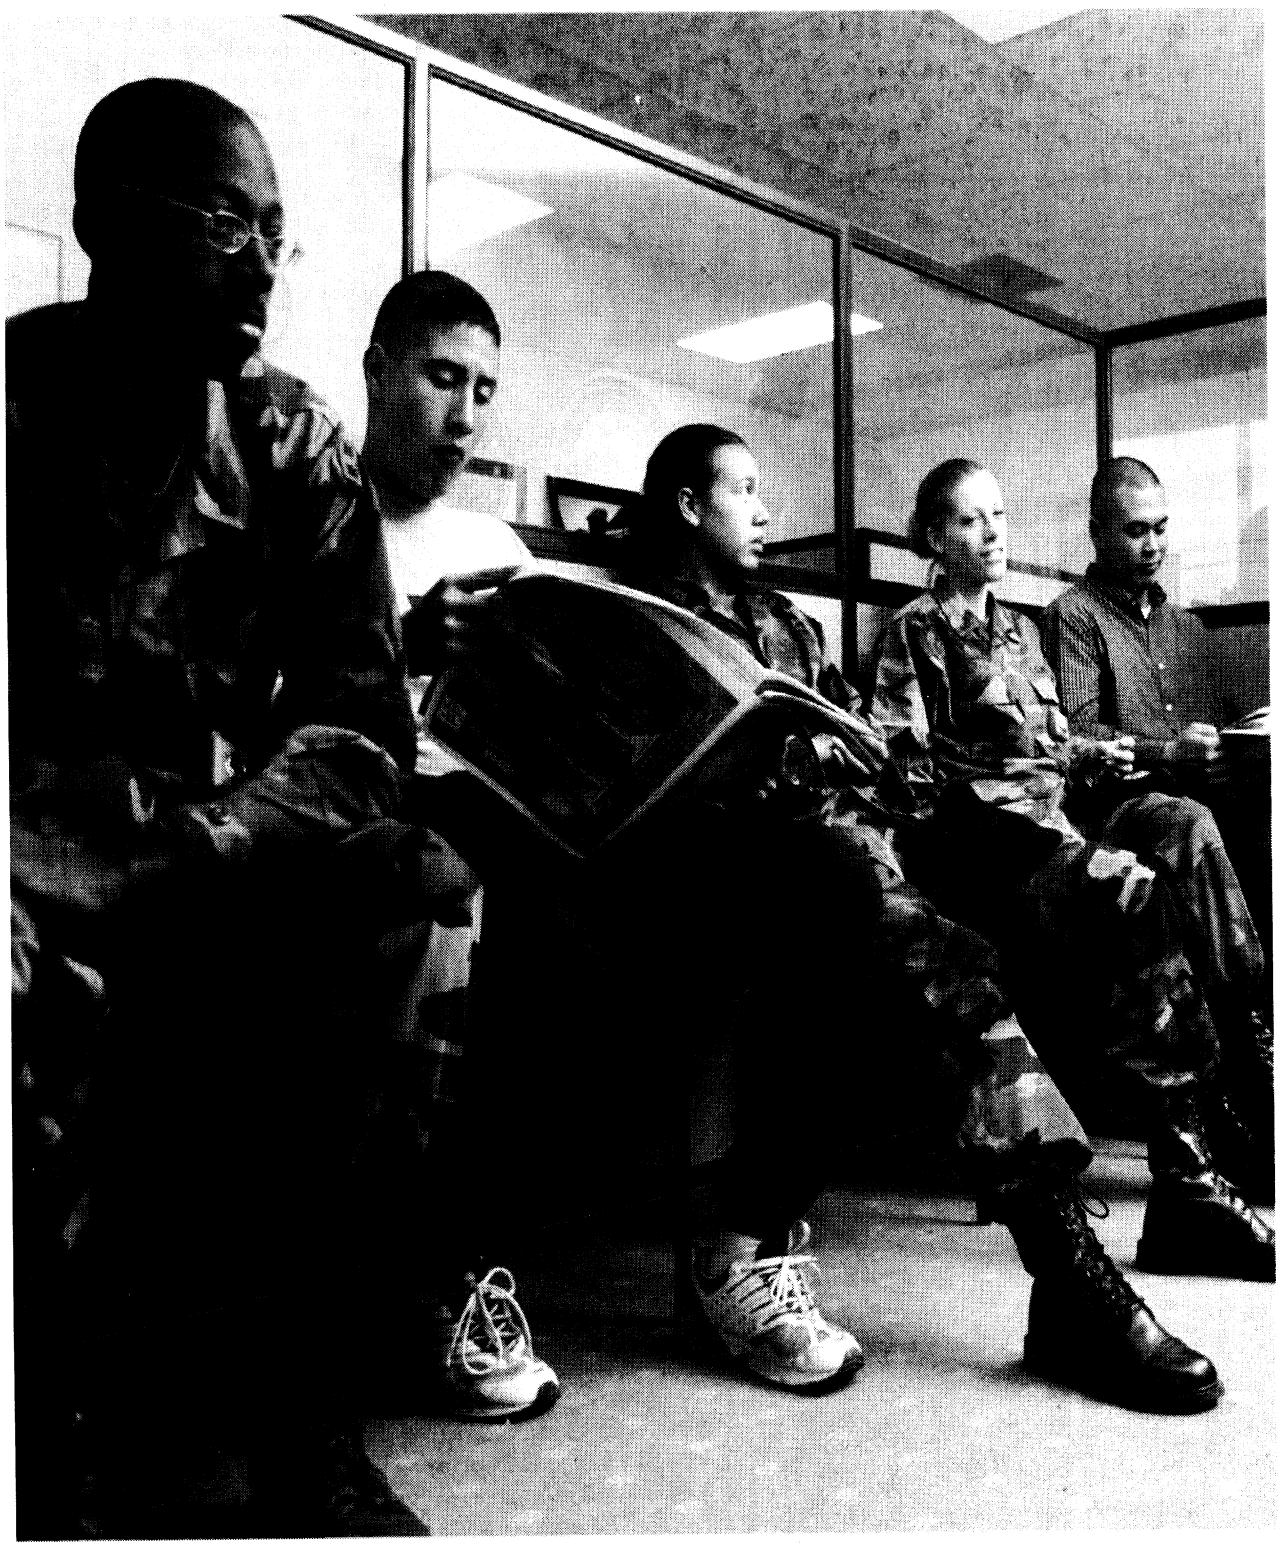
Although a discharge for simply failing to keep a workable family care plan may seem like an easy way to break a commitment to the Army, at least three chapters of AR 635-200 outline the type and characterization of discharge a soldier may receive for family care plan failure. The type of discharge a soldier receives is determined by the brigade-level commander in his chain of command and could have an effect on future veterans benefits, if any, the soldier is entitled to, as well his future employment opportunities.

Soldiers whose family care plans fall through, or who are unable to put together a workable family care plan after making an obvious effort by providing the commander with evidence, could face involuntary separation under Chapter 5-8, Shuey said. Soldiers in this category usually provide sworn statements from immediate family members who state the reasons why they are not able to or refuse to care for the children or dependents. Sometimes there are extenuating circumstances, such as a spouse who is unfit to care for the children. In the case of a bitter divorce, a soldier could understandably be reluctant to give temporary custody to his spouse, who could seek primary custody while the soldier is away. Soldiers separated under these conditions are usually entitled to all Army transition benefits, including separation pay if eligible, as well as all veterans' benefits.

A soldier in Miseli's unit was left suddenly by his wife and had nobody to care for the kids. He was very up front with the command and made a full-faith effort to put together a plan, but was unable to do so, Miseli said. He was discharged under Chapter 5-8.

Separation under Chapter 6 is voluntary and usually an option for soldiers who suddenly find themselves in a situation requiring a family care plan, such as the death or disability of the spouse. In this case, the soldier finds that caring for his children interferes with his ability to perform his duties and requests a discharge so that he may be able to better care for family members outside of the Army. Separation pay is not available. However, Army transition and veterans benefits are.

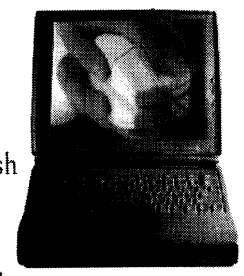
While it doesn't happen often, soldiers who appear to be using their situation to shirk their duties or trying to get over on the system, especially soldiers with enough time in service to receive separation pay, could be separated under Chapter 13. These soldiers should be scrutinized by the commander and not rewarded with separation pay for shirking their obligations.



Soldiers who aren't eligible for separation pay, but are at the beginning of their second enlistment and decide to change their minds about staying in should also be scrutinized by commanders and considered for a Chapter 13 discharge. A Chapter 13 could result in a 'general' characterization discharge, and there is no separation pay. There are transition benefits, however, but veterans benefits could be limited if the discharge is characterized as general.

Miseli recalled only one soldier in his time as commander who had to be discharged with a Chapter 13. The soldier, without notifying his chain of command, sought custody of his child as the unit was preparing for a deployment. He gained custody of the child but didn't tell anyone until after the unit was deployed. He was sent back to put together a family care plan, but he made no effort to do so, Miseli said.

"For the most part, soldiers are proactive in getting a working plan together," Miseli said. "Most soldiers in this unit have a working plan done before they receive their 30-day counseling and take a vested interest in keeping it straight, which shows their professionalism," Miseli said.



"We've all committed to something when we joined the Army. When we enlist, or re-enlist we incurred an obligation to serve honorably for that period of time for which, contractually, we are bound. Some of us are indefinite; others are committed for two, three or four years. We have a duty to comply with AR 600-20 and deploy with our unit should the call arise. We have a duty to keep our personal affairs in order, to include the care of our dependents, in such a way that it does not interfere with the duty we've incurred. This means finding care for your kids if you are one of those people who are required to have a family care plan. Anything less than a full, good faith effort to do so is shirking."

Instead of going to a loan office and waiting in line, just go online.

DON'T WAIT IN ANOTHER LINE – the military has enough of them. And don't deal with loan clerks who don't care about you.

Instead, go to www.militaryloans.com – and click. You'll see how fast, simple and easy it is to get the money you need – wherever you are, any time day or night, in complete privacy. Best of all, you're in control.

Loans are available from $500 to $10,000 – and usually you can have the cash within 24 hours. The money can even be directly deposited into your bank account, no matter where you're stationed worldwide.

Our founders have been lending money exclusively to military personnel for more 50 years. And because of our commitment and experience, we often lend when others won't. We've lent money to hundreds of thousands of service members – we love to say yes to you.

And it's a very convenient "yes," thanks to the Internet. Virtually no paperwork, definitely no waiting in line and no hassles. Just cash, for you – for your important needs.

HHC practices field craft during training

1st Lt. Mamie Murphy
36th Engineer Group

When Capt. Patrick Hogeboom took command of 36th Engineer Groups' Headquarters and Headquarters Company Nov. 26, his remarks concluded with: "Pack your bags and make sure you're ready, because next week we're going to the field!"

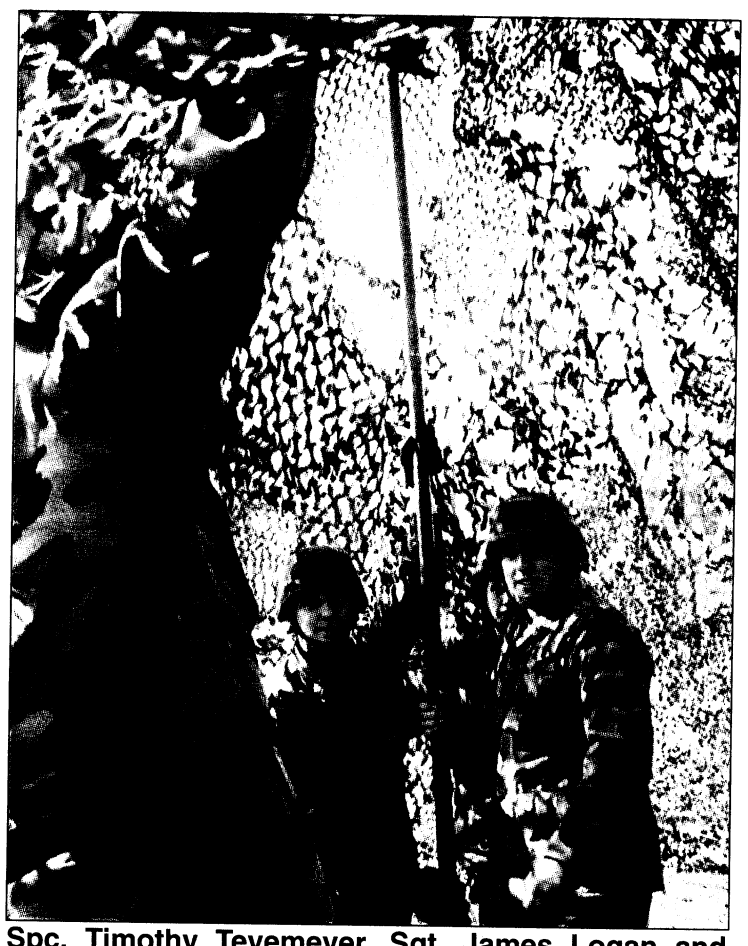
He made good on that promise when HHC took to the field Dec. 3-6.

"As new commander, I was looking forward to seeing how all the sections worked together," Hogeboom said. "I was really pleased with seeing how hard the soldiers worked out there."

Going to the field is always a learning experience, but for those new to the group, the first time to the field with a new unit is a very quick way to learn how the unit operates.

The purpose of the four-day, three-night exercise was to support a staff exercise being executed by the 36th Engineer Group staff.

The staff operated as a "white cell" element, a higher headquarters to HHC. They passed down taskings and required the support of all elements of HHC.



Communications were especially crucial while out in the field, Hogeboom said. The communications section established lines for field phones and maintained other communications through the use of SINCGARS radios. The "white cell" tested their network many times by calling down missions and other taskings.

Other sections were kept equally busy while in the field. The maintenance section was required to get several vehicles back up and running after breakdowns.

"Maintenance really kept us rolling out there," Hogeboom said. "There were even working on vehicles through the night to get us back to where we needed to be."

The Design Management section was also kept very busy in the field. It ran 24-hour operations.

"We were tasked with five different designs," said Capt. Neil Nunberg, Design Management designer. "For being there only four days, that is a lot of design work. All of our designs are very labor intensive. They require drawings of all details of the project that is to be done as well as a bill of materials so that the supply section can order everything that they need to get the project going."

Spc. Timothy Teyemeyer, Sgt. James Logan and Sgt. Samuel Dirks help Sgt. 1st Class Kevin Graves set up camo netting in the field.

While in the field, soldiers were able to focus solely on their jobs and learn a great deal.

"My learning curve was tremendous, especially learning the computer-aided design software," Capt. Drew Sherrill, designer. "The training was scenario-driven and provided us great training in real-world situations."

Hogeboom said he was pleased with the way the company worked while in the field and knew how much effort the soldiers put forth.

"They worked without complaining, even though it was cold," he said. "I know they were tired and hungry, but they did a great job. Everyone stayed busy and everyone learned."

Officer Candidate School

A first-person perspective

Intermediate Officer Candidate Mark R. Johnstone
3rd Battalion (OCS), 11th Infantry Regiment

It started almost five weeks ago — my return to the Army training environment. I didn't know what to expect even though I had already completed basic training, advanced individual training and the primary leadership development course.

This was going to be something completely different. This is the Officer Candidate School, a 14-week program designed to turn candidates into commissioned officers.

"The basic phase is conducted in a climate of strict discipline as the candidates are shown the OCS standards by the cadre and then expected to meet them. Candidates are trained under extremely demanding mental and physical conditions," according to the OCS Standard Operating Procedure.

The OCS motto is "Standards, No Compromise." And they aren't kidding.

The high standards, both physical and mental, begin on day one.

Self-discipline

Self-discipline is required at the school. And the need for it becomes obvious within the first two days.

From day one, students are responsible for the day-to-day running of the business of their company. We have a training schedule set by the OCS, but the candidates are responsible for executing the mission. Of course, the cadre are there to make sure it's done correctly.

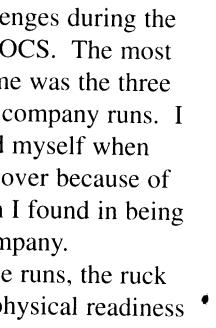
Another area where discipline is required is the dining facility.

For reasons of efficiency, there is a prescribed manner for everything candidates do in the dining facility, from the way they enter, to the way they get food from the salad bar. And when it's done right, more than 100 candidates can be in and out of the DFAC in less than 30 minutes with a full stomach.

It took some getting used to, but it has made me a much more efficient eater.

In the first week, we spent a lot of time learning the standards for conduct in the OCS environment. All of it helped me learn to pay attention to the little details. As we learned about the standards, the entire company began to bond as a team through physical and mental challenges.

The physical and mental teamwork



Personal triumphs start with physical challenges, and my first triumph was the OCS confidence course. That's where I began to learn more about my physical abilities and the individuals in my squad.

Obstacles like the "skyscraper" helped me learn to trust my team. The skyscraper is a series of platforms stacked vertically that requires you to pull yourself from one platform to the next with the help of your teammates. You have to trust your teammates to help you move up and down the platforms or else you will fall from the five-story obstacle.

Two days after the confidence course, we challenged ourselves and our squads on the combat obstacle course on Sand Hill.

After completing the 12-obstacle course, I looked back feeling exhausted but proud of my accomplishment. I didn't think I had the strength to do it again, but that's just what we did.

Surprisingly, we finished it faster the second time.

Johnstone

While proud of my own accomplishments, I was most impressed with the determination of my teammates.

Perhaps the best team-building course was our assault on the Downey Mile. The Downey Mile is designed to challenge your physical abilities with obstacles and rough terrain as you carry a five-gallon water jug through the course.

During the course, I learned what it meant to sacrifice my body to help the team accomplish a mission. I also saw what my teammates were willing to sacrifice, and it helped to build my respect for them.

There were many other physical challenges during the first phase of OCS. The most daunting for me was the three and four mile company runs. I even surprised myself when the runs were over because of the motivation I found in being part of the company.

Between the runs, the ruck marches, the physical readiness training exercises, and the required attention to detail, the physical and mental challenges of the Basic Officer Candidate phase have helped me believe in my abilities.

That is what set me up for success in the biggest challenge of the course — Land Navigation.

Land navigation

The most important skill I've been able to fine tune over the last month is my ability to land navigate with only a 1:50,000 scale map and a compass.

The training I received built my confidence and helped me pass — the first time — day and night tests on a course that was much more difficult than any I had trained on before.

Even better was learning how to find points by just moving in a known direction for a known distance. I had never done this before, and when I walked right up to my point over 1,000 meters away, my confidence level went through the roof.

The other exciting part of the land nav training was learning helpful techniques from my classmates and the land nav cadre. I think it's a testament to their professionalism that our company of 108 candidates passed our land navigation testing within three days.

Land navigation was about more than just finding the points. It increased my skills and confidence while training with groups.

Then too, being alone gave me a chance to prove to myself that I could do it.

There is no way to compare the feeling of moving from one point to another in the dead of night through thick brush and ending up exactly where I planned.

Conclusion of BOC

The Basic Officer Candidate phase ends when each candidate has met the requirements, the final two being a test of knowledge and a company inspection. Preparing for both was an interesting experience.

Learning the ideas behind what it means to be a leader in today's army has given me a stronger foundation for wanting to be a better officer.

And working together to pass our inspection showed me that even under stressful conditions, our team has learned to work well together.

USAMU shooters train Green Berets

Soldiers learn advanced skills to help fight war

Paula J. Randall Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Paula J. Randall Pagan

Spc. Aaron Revout, U.S. Army Marksmanship unit, instructs Capt. Heath Harrower, 5th Special Forces Group, on M-16 skills.

Although their competitive shooting season is over, the champion shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle Team have been busy passing along shooting techniques to other U.S. Army soldiers, including some who will be on the cutting edge of the war against terrorism.

The Service Rifle Team, headed by Staff Sgt. Jared N. van Aalst, conducted an advanced rifle marksmanship clinic for seven members of the 5th Special Forces Group (Airborne) of Fort Campbell, Ky., at Easley and Pool Ranges Dec. 3-6.

"We do advanced rifle marksmanship train the trainer for all units, but now we're doing tactical training for special operations units or any type of sniper section," van Aalst said. "It went very well. The idea we're trying to push is that our type of competitive shooting training ties in with tactical training. The biggest thing for soldiers is understanding the limitations of their weapons and alternate shooting positions."

"We did this training so our detachment could improve long-range marksmanship capability, said Capt. Heath Harrower of the 5th SFG. "We're getting different training ideas that we can use and we're sharing ideas on training and equipment. We're also getting techniques that we can employ for our sniper teams."

Harrower said the USAMU Service Rifle shooters emphasize basic rifle marksmanship skills.

"But it's more than a refresher course," he said. "It builds on the fundamentals."

Both on the ranges and in the classroom, the Special Forces soldiers learned from the Service Rifle Team how to read and correct for the wind, range estimation and reading the mirage.

"The two most important things to work on are trigger squeeze and sight alignment; it's what we've been emphasizing," Harrower said. "We learned variations and different techniques for trigger squeeze employed by a sniper team when engaging target.

"We also used the Noptel (a computerized marksmanship training system), which was a very effective tool to track sight alignment before, during and after the shot."

Besides shooting on the USAMU ranges, the soldiers also toured the USAMU Custom Firearms Shop where they spoke with USAMU gunsmiths, machinists, reloaders and ammunition technicians who build and modify USAMU weapons and ammunition.

"I was very impressed with the gun shop. There is a lot of knowledge here that a unit could use and a lot of answers to be found here on weapons, ballistics and bullets," Harrower said. "This training has enhanced our long-range shooting capability, and it was very worthwhile. We would do it again and recommend it for other members of our unit."

Crooked kid caught in caper

Teen loots, damages Thrift Shop

Special to the Bayonet©

A 15-year-old Fort Benning resident will likely be charged with theft and criminal trespass under the Georgia State Criminal Code after police apprehended him during a break-in at the Officers' Spouses' Club Thrift Shop Dec. 3.

The youth, whose name will not be released, may be prosecuted as an adult after the presiding judge "looks at the whole picture," said Investigator Wade Sterling, Team Chief with Fort Benning's Criminal Investigation Detachment.

"The whole picture" includes two prior break-ins in which the youth inflicted several hundred dollars worth of damage and stole as much in video games, jewelry and cash.

Lori Lane, the Thrift Shop manager, said shop volunteers discovered the first break-in Nov. 21. The suspect broke a window and entered through a back room. He returned Dec. 1, this time breaking a glass door and cutting a padlock.

The following night, military police investigators were waiting when the youth broke in shortly before midnight.

FACING THE HOLIDAYS

Tips for enjoying them

Choice Behavioral Health

The holidays are billed as a time for family, celebration, warmth and love. However, many people experience them as times of high stress and deep disappointment or depression.

Military families face special challenges since they are often away from family or have a family member on deployment.

The tips listed below are meant to help people maintain a perspective on these days that will make the hectic pace of this season work for them rather than against them.

Get Real

• Christmas is full of high expectations about how it "should" be. Let go of the "should be's" and work on some "can be's."

• If you are stationed too far away to be with family, or if your spouse is deployed through the holidays, focus on positive ways to be in touch for the holidays. Focus on the strength of what is there, not the hurt of what is missing.

• Set some realistic goals for your preparation. You don't have to cook every favorite food or use every decoration you own. If others expect certain things for the holidays, invite them to help in the preparation.

• Establish a realistic budget and save for your Christmas purchases. Resist the temptation to run up credit card bills you will not be able to pay

Night of Lights

Photos Pfc. Brian Trapp

This is a view from the Phenix City Amphitheater Dec. 5 during the third annual tricommunity Night of Lights celebration.

Chuck Leonard, news anchor with WTVM, and Tandi Cain-Morris, Directorate of Community Activities, emcee the event.

The third annual tricommunity Night of Lights celebration included music by the Infantry Band's Brass Quintet, Bells of Praise from Morningside Baptist Church, the Lakewood Elementary School Choir, Sherwood Singers of Sherwood Elementary and the Faith Middle School Entertainers.

Before the lights were turned on and both sides of the Chattahochee Riverwalk was lighted, the mayors from Phenix City and Columbus and the post commander spoke.

Commanding General Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton told the audience it is important to remember the soldiers deployed overseas and their families during the holiday season.

Nutcracker soldier lives sugar plum dream

Engineer to perform in ballet

Peanut butter and jelly. Shoes and socks. Soldiers and ballet. Granted, not the most likely combination. However, 2nd Lt. Ivy Miller proves that the relationship can be as sweet as sugar and spice.

Miller is an engineer working in the Design Management office for the 36th Engineer Group, as a construction inspection officer. She's also performing in next weekend's production of "The Nutcracker" by the Columbus Ballet.

The native Georgian, who joined the Army in April 2001, didn't begin studying ballet until she was 17, but she didn't let her late start interfere with the pursuit of her newfound passion.

"Seventeen is ancient in the dance world," Miller said. "Most dancers start when they are three or four, but I was determined to learn."

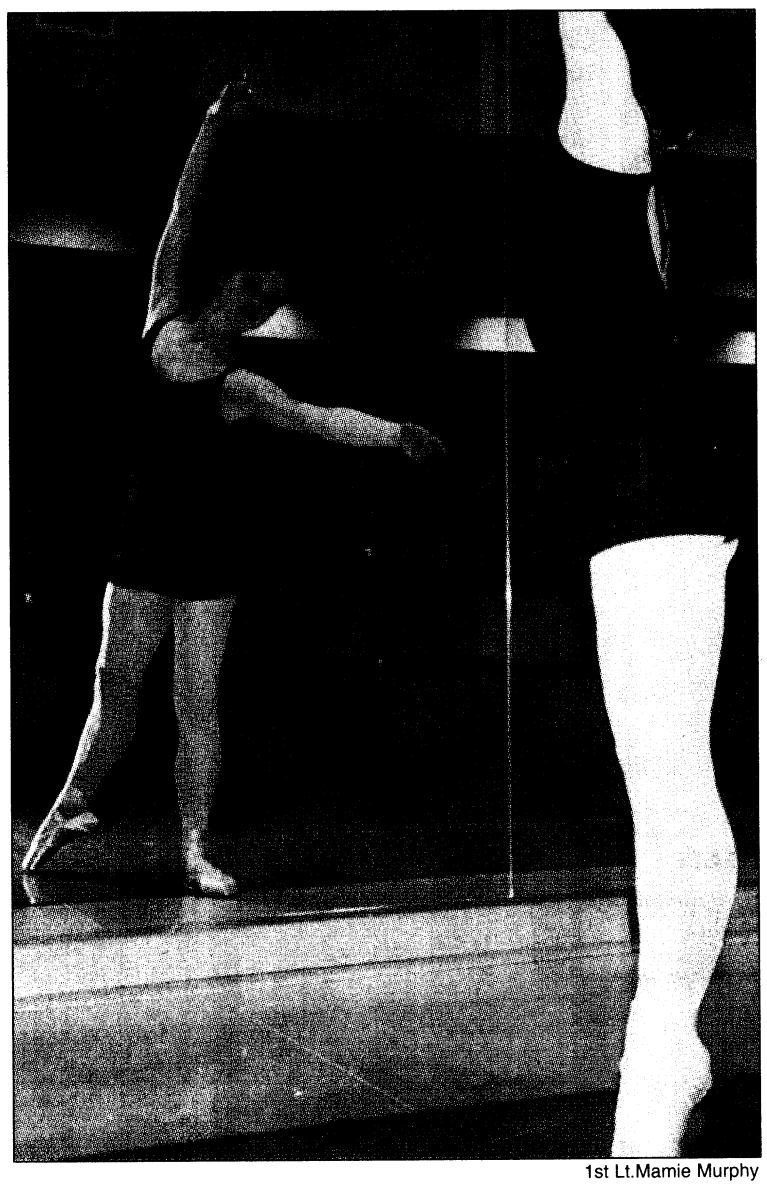
Miller and her younger sister pursued dance together; first at the East Athens Educational Dance Center, then the Athens School of Ballet and finally at Brenau University, where they were both fine arts majors.

"My sister and I actually got interested in ballet through books," Miller said. "We saw pictures and thought that it would be a neat thing to try to do. After we tried to copy the dancers in the pictures for a little while, we went to the East Athens Educational Dance Center to attend classes."

Within their first week of class, the sisters were moved to the top level of instruction offered at the center.

After a year at East Athens, they moved on to the Athens School of Ballet, where the sisters paid their own way, earning money by cleaning the building and studios.

After graduating from Brenau in May 2000, Miller went to Pennsylvania to practice her art full-time.



"I knew I wanted to go be a dancer for a year, so after graduation, I bought a one-way ticket to Pennsylvania," she said.

Miller danced full-time with the Central Pennsylvania Youth Ballet while working full-time as a day cook. Afternoons, evenings and weekends were spent practicing.

Now, as a soldier, she still manages to squeeze about 10 hours of dancing into her weekly schedule.

"When I'm dancing, it's a time I don't think about work.

A construction inspection manager with the 36th Engineer Group's Design Management office, Miller was a full-time dancer before joining the Army last year. She's now a member of the Columbus Ballet Company, which will perform The Nutcracker at the Bill Heard Theatre at the RiverCenter at 8 p.m. Dec. 20 and at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. Dec 21.

Class offers tax tips

Post solders learn to invest money tax free, deferred

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

This is the fourth part of a five-part series that explores what soldiers learn at the financial readiness course.

Uncle Sam keeps his people free, but he wants what's his when it comes to their income — taxes.

The fourth part of the series discussed ways to set up tax-deferred investments with small dollar amounts.

"Many tax-deferred and tax-exempt investments can cost $25,000 or more just to get started, but it is possible to get the same benefits with investments as small as 25 dollars," said Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program.

It is important to know whether a particular investment is tax-exempt or tax-deferred. A tax exempt investment earns tax-free interest and takes the form of a municipal bond or municipal bond mutual fund. A tax-deferred investment, such as an IRA or the Thrift Savings Plan, is not taxed until the money is withdrawn.

An investment with tax benefits will grow more quickly than one without tax benefits that has the same interest rate, because no money is being taken off the top, and interest will build on itself over time.

"There are several investment plans with tax benefits," Pratcher said. "However, it is important to choose the one that fits your goals."

There are employer sponsored plans, like 401(k)s, 403(b)s and section 457 plans, which are usually matched to some degree by the employer. There are also plans that self-employed people can buy such as Keogh plans, simplified employee pensions, and simple IRAs, which enable people to invest in their future without having to work for the major companies that offer plans like the 401(k)s.

Small businesses may also use the self-employed plans to give their employees an opportunity to invest in their future, and by matching their employees investment, their contributions will be tax deductible.

"Before purchasing any of these plans, it is important to research them," Pratcher said.

Some plans have maximum yearly contributions which may hinder ones ability to reach their financial goals. Others may penalize the investor for not withdrawing a minimum dollar amount each year after they reach a certain age.

One way to roll over money from a plan that has reached its maturity is to purchase annuities.

Annuities are a way to set up a fixed income with a large sum of money that will continue to draw interest.

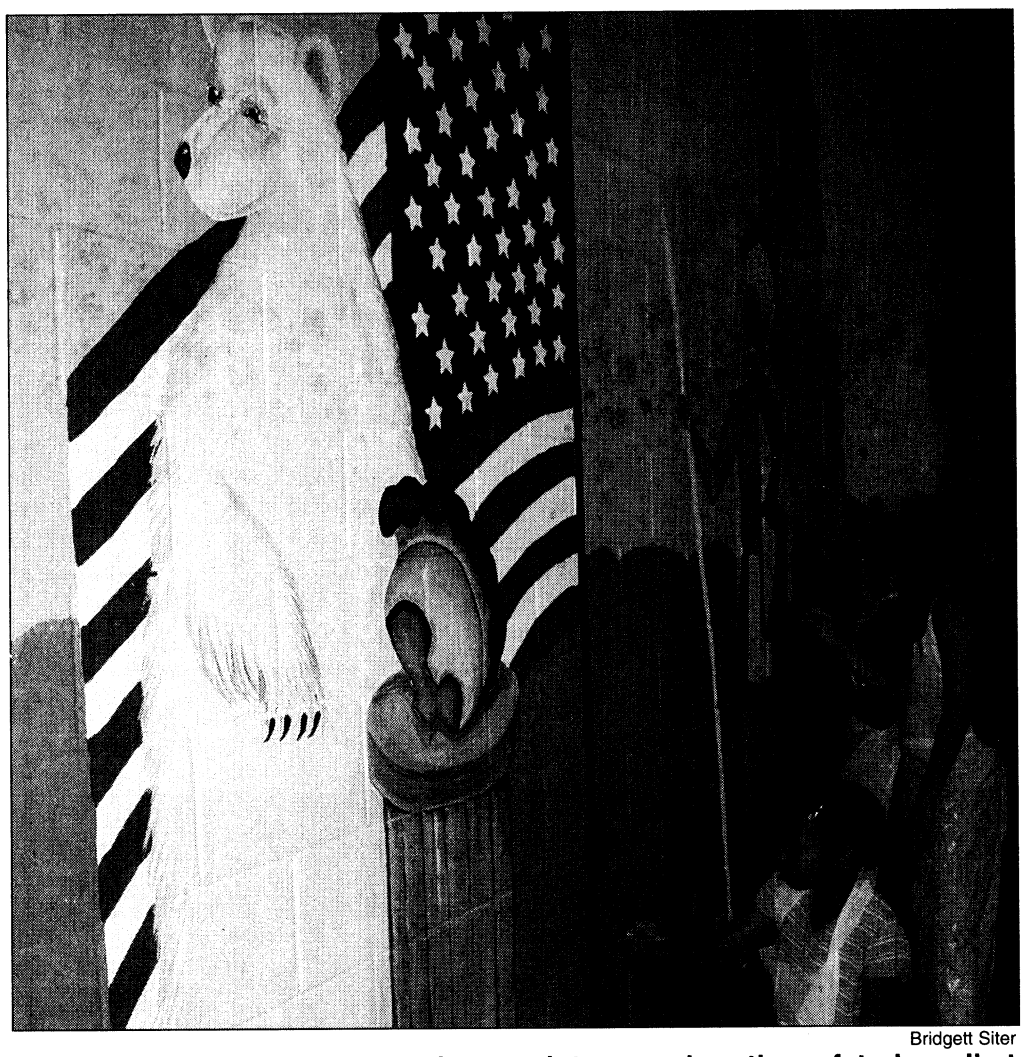
"When looking for an annuity, you should find one with a low expense ratio in order to maximize your investment," Pratcher said.

"One way to increase an investment is to kick it up a notch every time you get a raise, a promotion or when you pay off a bill, such as a house or a car," she said. "Just raising the investment by one percent can make a substantial difference over time."

Another way to invest on a shoestring budget is by purchasing a mutual fund portfolio.

A mutual fund portfolio will provide instant diversity with a low cost.

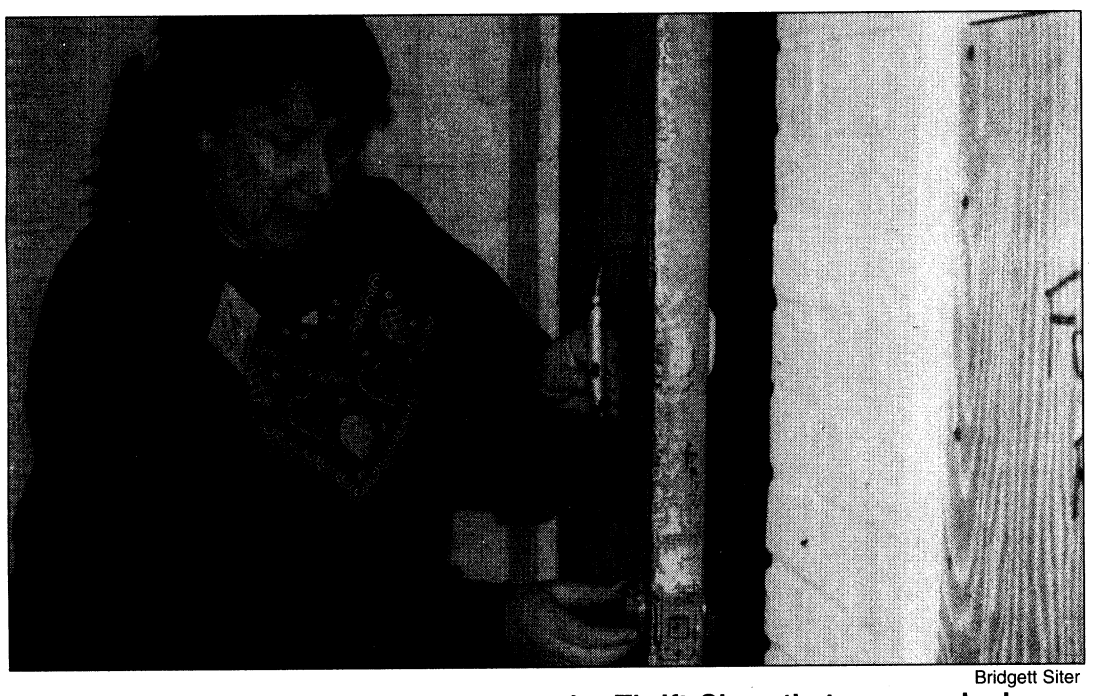
For an initial $1,000 or as little as $25 per month, a person can purchase a mutual fund which can disperse their investment into money market funds, bonds and stocks.



By choosing an investment that doesn't require a large sum of money to get started, people can start from scratch and still reach their financial goals.

"This is exactly what these young people in the military need to learn about," said Barbara Jordan, a librarian at Sayers Library. "These investment strategies can make them rich by the time they are ready to retire.

"I wish I had taken this class at an early age because it is so easy to reach your financial goals over time."



For more information on Financial Readiness classes, call the Army Community service center at 545-7517.

Evolution mural

A team of eighth-grade art students paint a mural on the cafeteria wall at Faith Middle School. Gloria Loar, Faith's art teacher, designed the mural, which depicts the evolution of faith's mascot. When the school opened in 1974 in its original location, Building 880, the mascot was a demon. It was changed to a falcon in 1985 when the school's current facility was built. And again this year, the mascot was changed to a warrior bear in honor of Lt. Col. Don C. Faith, for whom the school is named.

CID: Catches kid in crime merchandise, mostly consigned items, was recovered when the suspect led agents to locations where he had stashed it, including his bedroom and shrubbery outside his home, which is located within walking distance of the shop.

"We haven't got the merchandise here in the store, of course. It's part of the investigation," Lane said. "You know 25 percent of those sales would go back to the community through scholarships and Scouting and such. He not only robbed the Thrift Shop, he robbed the Fort Benning community."

The OSC Thrift Shop is a valuable community resource, Lane said.

Last year alone, the store put nearly $20,000 back into the community.

Fort Benning's garrison authorities and shop officials are looking at ways to prevent this kind of problem from reoccurring, Lane said. The shop is housed in a very old building with many entrances, old windows and insufficient lighting.

"I don't know how we can make certain it doesn't happen, but I know we'll do everything we can to slow it down," Lane said.

Sterling said the youth's parents may be held liable for damages and may have their on-post housing privileges removed.

Soldier: Dances in ballet

I don't think about anything else. I can focus on just dancing.

"It's the one place that I'm really free from the rest of the world," she said. "When I don't dance, I feel like there's a hole in my life."

Even before college, Miller knew she'd one day join the Army.

Like dancers, the life of a soldier must be structured and disciplined, a concept that appealed to Miller. But it was the benefits that cinched the deal.

"Dancing couldn't provide me with the benefits the Army could, like health care and a pension when I retire," she said.

"But I really like the discipline, knowing when and where I'm supposed to be."

Transitioning from the life of a full-time ballet dancer to basic training wasn't as difficult as Miller anticipated.

"I really enjoyed basic training;" she said. "I was expecting people to be a lot meaner and just heartless, but that wasn't the case.

"My drill sergeants in basic were outstanding. They were so professional. It was challenging, but it was not the living hell I always expected it to be."

Though her family was supportive, Miller said most of her friends and co-workers were skeptical when they realized she intended to follow through with her plans for a military career.

"I had so many people tell me that I couldn't make it. They didn't think I had what it takes," she said. "But I did it, I made it."

Following basic training, Miller reported to Fort Benning for Officer Candidate School and was commissioned a second lieutenant in the engineer branch.

She attended the Engineer Officer Basic Course at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., before returning to Fort Benning.

After settling in with the 36th Engineer Group, Miller said she went looking for an outlet for her "other passion," and found it in the Columbus Ballet Company.

"She found us, and I was very impressed with her training," said Maria Hirsch, director of the company's production of The Nutcracker.

"You don't really put a soldier and ballet together, but she's got such dedication, she's very graceful and she's had a lot of good training," Hirsch said. "She's a wonderful asset."

Beth Griffin, executive director of The Nutcracker, echoed Hirsch's statement.

"Ivy is great. She's a wonderful addition to the company," Griffin said, "It's not every day a talent like that will just drop in on you. She's got the ability and is willing to devote the time. She has a very even temperament and works well with the group.

"Everyone knows she's well-trained, but she doesn't intimidate anyone with her skill," Griffin said.

The Columbus Ballet Company will be performing The Nutcracker at the Bill Heard Theatre at the RiverCenter at 8 p.m. Dec. 20 and at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. Dec 21.

Tickets are $12-$18.

Tips: Help families maintain perspective during holidays

off in a reasonable time.

• All families have ongoing problems that sometimes create tension. The tension is sometimes heightened during the holidays and boils over to ruin an otherwise happy atmosphere.

This is especially true when heavy alcohol use is a factor. Realize that now is not the time to fix long-standing family problems. Do what you can to let go of your own feelings and encourage others to focus on positive things as well.

The holidays heighten feelings of loss because of a death of a family member or a divorce. It is important to acknowledge these feelings. Admit the feelings of hurt or loss to one another. This may also be a time to do something new for the holiday, such as celebrate at another family member's house, or create a new tradition to observe the holiday.

Get Help

• Resist the feeling that you must be responsible for everything. Your holidays are meant for the whole family. Divide up responsibilities according to the ability of each family member. If they don't do their part, then let go of something else. Don't allow others to take you or the special things they like about the holidays for granted.

• If child care is a problem, see about arranging with another friend to baby-sit for you for a morning or afternoon to allow you time for shopping, doing things around the house, or simply relaxing by yourself. Return the favor.

• Stay in touch with a good friend during this time. Talk about what you are doing and other things on your mind. Talk is an excellent way to relieve stress.

Get Creative

• Sometimes it's not possible to celebrate the holidays the way you'd like because the climate is different, or certain foods are not available where you are stationed. It's important to be creative with your celebration. Take advantage of the opportunities or unique characteristics of the place you live.

• Start an interesting collection of Christmas tree ornaments by creating ornaments that represent the place you are living. Stories about each place may be told at future tree trimmings.

• Let the kids be part of the preparation. Depending on their age, they might help by putting stamps on the card envelopes, or holding their finger on a bow while you wrap a gift. Let them create some gift wrap. Paper, glue, crayons and glitter offer interesting possibilities.

• Make a video or audio tape for the family member on deployment. Let the deployed family member know how much you care and that they are still a part of things, even from a distance.

• Invite someone who might otherwise be alone for Christmas dinner. Alternatively, you might prepare some cookies or other holiday foods and deliver them as a family to someone who lives alone on your street.

• Think of alternatives to store-bought gifts, such as homemade items or a cherished article you already own that you know someone else would appreciate.

For more information about living with stress, call the Health and Wellness Center or the Choice Behavioral Health Partnership Prevention and Wellness Department at (800) 700-8646.

Rubrics enhance quality of student work

Dexter Elementary School

Dexter third-graders recently completed their very first research projects.

The subject of the projects was Native Americans. Each child was assigned a specific tribe to research, create a written report and plan an oral presentation for classmates.

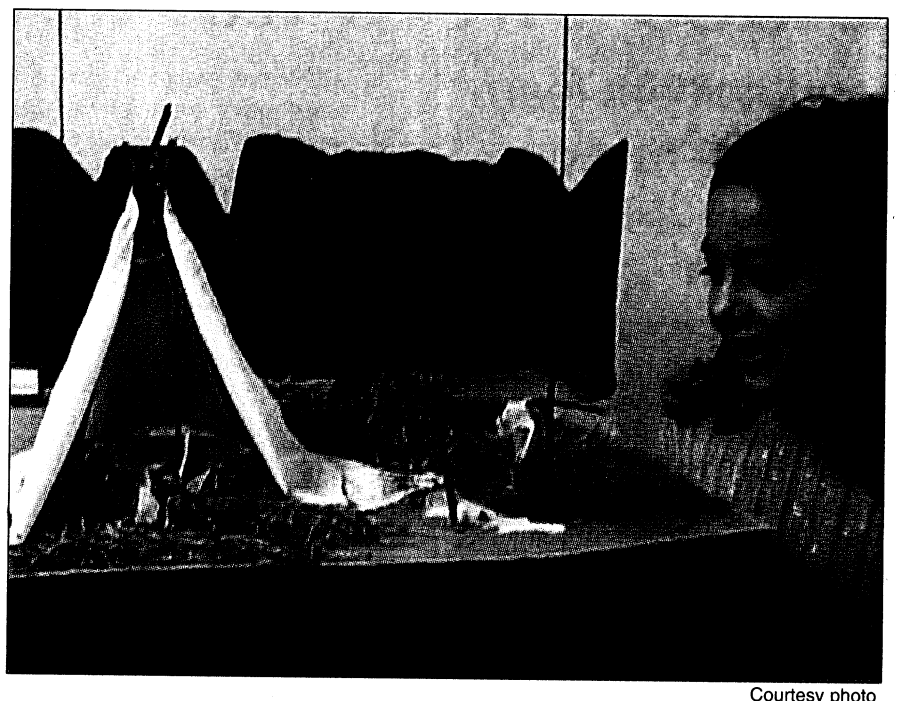
Model dwellings, complete with homes, people, Native American crafts and natural resources were included as visual elements in the presentations. The dwelling models were completed at home.

Students met high expectations for the projects in all aspects, which was accomplished through the use of a rubric, an outline of expectations. Scores ranged from one to four, with one being a papoose, and chief being a four.

"Using a rubric allows students to know exactly what is expected of them at the end of a project," Terri Bond said. "The trick is to give them the rubric before any work is begun. When you tell students what their expectation will be prior to beginning the work, then they will know what their goal to strive for is.

"We also showed students sample projects from the past, high quality ones, as well as those that were not the best," Holcombe said. "This gave students a good idea of what they would be striving for."

Students liked the idea of being able to set their own goal for quality.



"I knew if I used the rubric, I could correct the mistakes I made," Lacy Prudhomme said. "It said that if I wanted to score a Chief, I could not have more than one spelling error in my whole report. The rubric also said that if I wanted to be a Chief, all my facts had to be true instead of something I made up."

"I wanted to be a Chief on my report so I had at least three classmates edit my work," Raven Battle said. "That is what the rubric said I had to do. They helped me find spelling and grammar problems that I did not see. Then I fixed it after someone edited it. I got a Chief on that part of my work."

"The rubric helped me make sure the writing and coloring on my report was done neatly," Gavin Garner said. "I knew that to be a Chief, I had to take my time to color and write as neatly as possible. I had to make sure that three other people could read my writing before I could say it was done."

Using a rubric has its advantages for teachers and students alike.

It explains expectations in concrete terms for students so they can make a choice about the quality of their own work. It allows teachers to hold students accountable for their work because the responsibility is put on them. The result is high quality by student choice.

Students help homeless

Dexter Elementary School

E-Club members breathed a sigh of relief when the director of a local homeless shelter told them that the turnips they donated would be enough to serve all the residents at the center as part of their Thanksgiving meal.

"I was so relieved," said member Isabella DiNatale, "because I really wanted Thanksgiving to be very special for the people there."

The Dexter e-Club harvested the turnips from their fall garden and delivered them to a local homeless shelter Nov. 26.

The children planted the row of turnips the first week in September in support of the Plant-A-Row for the Hungry Program.

This is the third year that youngsters from the kindergarten and first-grade e-Club have participated in the national program.

Each season the e-club members plant vegetables and when they are ready for harvest, they donate them to a local homeless shelter.

This fall, e-Club members planted turnips, broccoli, bonnie sweet onions and purple cabbage.

They use much of their play time for watering and weeding the gardens.

"When harvest time comes around," said club sponsor Earnestine Ezekiel, "these children are not the least bit shy about asking moms and dads to come out and help gather the vegetables, even if it means bringing little brother and sister in the baby buggy."

A group of e-Club members, along with their parents and sponsor, delivered the turnips to the homeless center. The group director and many of the residents greeted them as they arrived with their many bundles of fresh turnips.

The director thanked the children for their contributions toward the Thanksgiving meal.

"What you have done is very thoughtful and generous," he said.

"It is good act for the center and for the community."

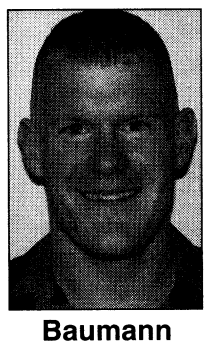
Believers to thank God for his ultimate gift

Holiday season celebrates living God's life

Chaplain (Capt.) Bradford Baumann
3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment

During this Christmas season, have you stopped and considered the price paid to bring Jesus into the world? In many ways, we have not truly considered the price tag attached to this great gift. With most great gifts comes an equally great cost.



In Luke 2:1-20, we read the narrative that tells the story of Jesus coming into this world. In order to understand any narrative, you must know the main characters to follow the story.

In this particular passage of scripture, the main characters are Mary, Joseph and Jesus. What price did they pay for this gift?

Mary, the mother of Jesus, paid a tremendous price. As scripture tells us, she was chosen by God to bring his son into this world. What appears to be a joyous event came at a great cost.

Mary was still a young woman. Although she was engaged, she was not yet married when told that she was with child. According to Jewish law, an unmarried woman who was found to be with child was not a desired state. It was an offense punishable by death.

REFLECTIONS

Baumann

Joseph, the father of Jesus, also paid a tremendous price. He was faced with a very difficult situation. It was his rights by law to either publicly press charges or quietly break his engagement with Mary.

Joseph knew the child Mary carried was not his. Most certainly, Joseph received outside pressure to make a decision in what he would do.

Joseph's distress was so great God had to send help. Matthew 1:20 tells us that that an angel of the Lord was sent to tell Joseph that Jesus has been conceived by the Holy Spirit and he was to take Mary as his wife.

Jesus, the Son of God, paid the greatest price of all. Why would an all-knowing, all-present and all-powerful God isolate himself into the flesh of a human being and choose to enter this world in the manner he did? He did it because he is humble, approachable and loving.

Jesus' humility was part of the cost. Although he could have, he did not show up as a powerful king. In meek contrast, God's visit to earth took place in an animal shelter with no attendants present and nowhere to lay the newborn king, but in a feed trough.

Jesus' approachability was part of the cost. Jesus bridged the gap that had formerly existed by clothing himself in our flesh. He ate our food, felt our pain, and understood our sufferings. Why? So we could approach him and know that we do not serve a God who is so far distanced from us that he cannot understand us.

Jesus' love was the greatest part of the cost. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only son, that whoever believes in him should not perish but have eternal life." (John 3:16). God chose to humbly enter this world so that you could approach him because he loves you.

Remember this season as you celebrate the many blessings we enjoy here in this great country to thank God for the greatest gift of all.

Deployments test trust in spouses, faith

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center

During deployments our faith, trust and confidence are put to the test. Whether we are single adults, married or children, our trust is tried when a loved one is away. If we are not vigilant, fear, doubt and worry may erode away our confidence in one another and in God.

When the soldier parent is away, children have their trust tested. They learn an important lesson. They learn that their remaining parent is able to provide, nurture and care for them.

When spouses are separated, due to field exercises, temporary duty, military education, or deployments, the trust of both husband and wife is tested. They may wonder if their spouse will survive while they are away and will remain faithful to them. Their commitment to each other sustains them, while they are apart from each other.

Koop

When a single or married soldier is deployed, the soldier's trust in his or her training, equipment and leadership is tested. Soldiers must rely upon these military essentials, and their survival depends upon them.

Likewise, our trust in God is tested during deployments. God sustains our spirits during deployments. We learn to rely upon God. We depend upon him to always love us (Romans 8:38-39), to never leave us (Deuteronomy 31:6), and to never forget us (Isaiah 49:15-16).

Don't allow your strength of spirit crumble under the treacherous attacks of worry, doubt and fear. Don't let your peace and contentment be plundered by these conniving marauders.

Does your spirit need strengthening? Free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail raymond.koop @benning.army.mil.

Post championship ends in 18-14 thriller

Executioners' Thomas Wright attempts to elude a defender during the post championship game Friday at Engineer Field. The Executioners defeated the Ammo Dawgs, 18-14.

Benning teams don't disappoint game hype

Pfc. Chris Stephens

With two minutes left in the game, the Executioners quarterback, Thomas Wright, threw a short screen pass to running back Marlon Jenkins for a 20-yard touchdown score to give the Executioners the post flag football championship.

The C Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, Executioners, defeated the 608th Ordnance Company, Ammo Dawgs, 18-14, Dec. 6 on Engineer Field in a game of streaks.

"We knew we had to win," said Terrence Garrett, Executioners' wide receiver. "We had the weapons and the will to win the whole thing."

The Ammo Dawgs sustained a long opening drive but was unable to put any points on the board, due to a unrelenting Executioners' defense, which didn't allow any big plays.

"The first drive killed us," said Jeremy Kanter, Ammo Dawgs' quarterback. "We had a great drive going, and we should have scored, but their defense stopped us."

After taking over on offense, it only took the Executioners two plays to get on the board, as Thomas Wright, Executioners' quarterback, threw a 50-yard touchdown strike to Garrett.

"I thought to myself, 'first catch the ball, then worry about taking it to the house,'" Garrett said. "Once I caught the ball, I knew I was going to take it past the goal line for the touchdown."

The Executioners scored on their next drive with another touchdown pass from Wright to Garrett of more than 50 yards to make the score 12-0.

"The second one was too easy," Garrett said. "I had no defenders on me, and it made for an easy catch and touchdown."

The celebration was short-lived. The Ammo Dawgs drove down field and scored on a short pass from Kanter to Charles Cherry. The play was set up by a 40-yard bomb from Kanter to Ralphell Hines.

The Ammo Dawgs added the two-point conversion right before halftime to make the score 12-8.

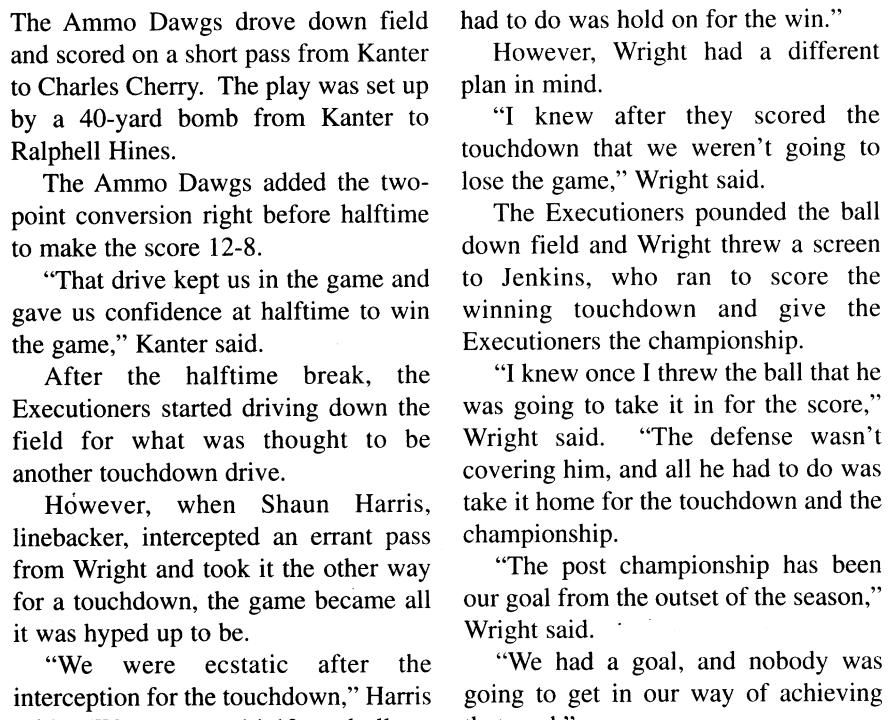
"That drive kept us in the game and gave us confidence at halftime to win the game," Kanter said.

After the halftime break, the Executioners started driving down the field for what was thought to be another touchdown drive.

However, when Shaun Harris, linebacker, intercepted an errant pass from Wright and took it the other way for a touchdown, the game became all it was hyped up to be.

"We were ecstatic after the interception for the touchdown," Harris said. "We were up 14-12, and all we had to do was hold on for the win."

However, Wright had a different plan in mind.

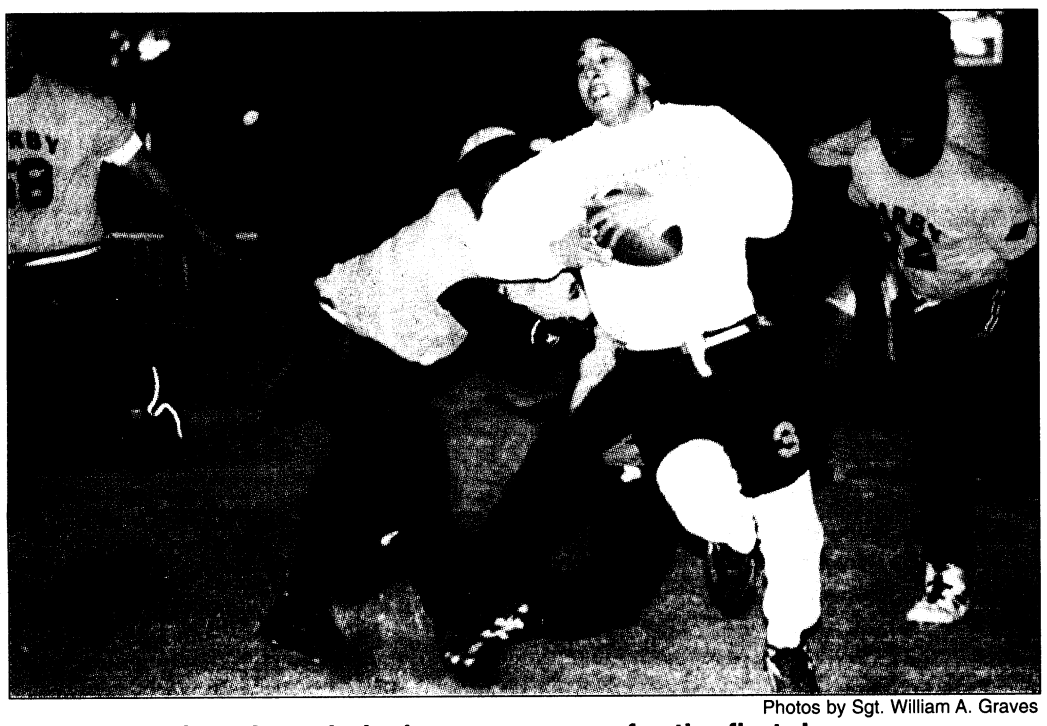


"I knew after they scored the touchdown that we weren't going to lose the game," Wright said.

The Executioners pounded the ball down field and Wright threw a screen to Jenkins, who ran to score the winning touchdown and give the Executioners the championship.

"I knew once I threw the ball that he was going to take it in for the score," Wright said. "The defense wasn't covering him, and all he had to do was take it home for the touchdown and the championship.

"The post championship has been our goal from the outset of the season," Wright said.



"We had a goal, and nobody was going to get in our way of achieving that goal."

Rangers defeat Gators in playoff

The Darby Rangers kicked off the intramural football playoffs Dec. 5 with a 14-8 victory over the Gators at Engineer Field.

Ranger Kamerio Riggins of 4th Ranger Training Battalion started the scoring with a touchdown on a 10-yard reverse, and quarterback Bobby Lane hit Bill Breen for the conversion.

Later, the Rangers helped the Gators of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, get on the board when a snap sailed over Lane's head and through the back of the endzone for a safety.

Rangers' QB Bobby Lane lunges for more yards.

Ranger Shawn Miller countered with a 20-yard touchdown grab, and after Kevin Martin's conversion, the score was 14-2.

The second half was better to the Gators as their quarterback, Quincy Patton, hit Vern McClendon with a 30-yard strike to cut the lead to 14-8, but the conversion failed.

On the Gators' last drive, Patton threw a 40-yard spiral to Keith LaFavor that would have resulted in a possible Gators' win, but Miller tipped the ball away to help his team go to the next round.

However, the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity team ended the Rangers' run when they defeated them, 14-6, Dec. 5.

Baseball season ends

Children get early start on basics

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The last Youth Services baseball game of the season ended with a win for the Gators. They defeated the Fort Benning Braves, 12-7, in 7- to 8-year-old action.

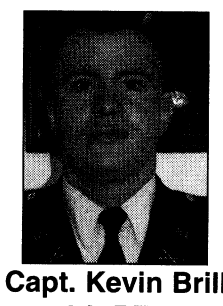
The Gators started strong and sustained the pace throughout the game, putting 4 runs on the scoreboard to the Braves' 2.

"The kids skills improved significantly over the course of the season," said Victor D'Addio, Gators' coach. "We were teaching them fundamentals, like throwing and catching, and placed more of an emphasis on fun than winning."

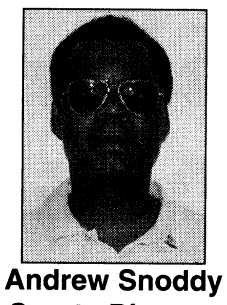
During the second inning, the Gators put another 4 points on the board to the Braves' 1. Gators' pitcher Colin Ryan, 8, made a double play by catching a line drive, then he tagged out the runner at first base.

The Gators put up 4 more runs the next inning. The Braves answered the Gators streak and picked up the tempo, but they were held to only 4 runs.

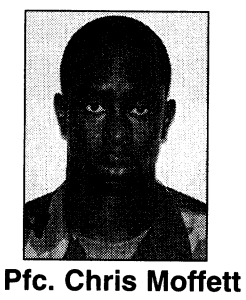
"Some of the kids on the team never picked up a bat competitively before this season," said Jerry Dequasie, Fort Benning Braves' coach. "During the last three games, the kids who never played baseball before they joined the team had their first hits of the year. It's been great to see the kids come through, and they had a good time, too."



The Gators ended with a 4-3 season. The Fort Benning Braves ended with a 1-6 season.



"I'm very happy it ended with a winning season. We had a lot of fun, and they came out with a few wins," D'Addio said.



The team celebrated their victory and the end of the season with a bowling party.

Geisinger

GENERAL PSYCHIATRIST
Geisinger Medical Center

Geisinger is seeking a BC/BE general adult psychiatrist as a colleague in a medically oriented practice. Join an expanding 7-member tertiary care group practice in the Danville/ Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, area. Our main facility, Geisinger Medical Center, is a 437-bed teaching hospital with 75 specialties. This very diverse practice contains a good deal of variety. It encompasses inpatient psychiatry with 50 beds, consultation/liaison psychiatry, a busy outpatient practice, adult and adolescent partial programs, and community outreach. We offer unique opportunities for teaching within our multi-disciplinary mental health team. This is a very flexible position, as our new partner will have the opportunity to incorporate creativity and ideas into the group practice, blending the needs of the group with the talents/interests of the applicant.

Central Pennsylvania offers a scenic, secure lifestyle near the Pocono Mountains. There are many colleges and universities that lend a blend of culture and numerous activities to the area. We are just off I-80 and only 2-to-3 hours from New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, D.C. Geisinger offers a competitive salary and excellent benefits, including generous vacation, 3 weeks CME with a CME stipend, and full medical malpractice coverage. AAE-M/F/D/V- 0207.mn

Car Buyers Finally Have Wish Come True

Rivertown Ford brings original "Price Slicer" and $99 car prices to Columbus thru Saturday Only

Columbus, GA- What would make a car dealer sell perfectly good used cars for as low as $99? Even sell new Fords at thousands off normal manufacturer's suggested retail prices? Rivertown Ford's General Sales Manager Brad Williams gives a simple answer: "Desperation."

"We're really, really pinched for space," Williams explained further. "New car sales are the best they've ever been. Plus, the last couple of years have seen a huge increase in leases. Now, those leases are expiring and they're coming back by the dozen. We have literally run out of room for all the used cars."

This desperation has prompted Williams to fly in a team of professionals to assist his managers to prepare for this weekend sales event. This weekend only, the "Price Slicer" team will be at Rivertown Ford evaluating the prices on a record number of pre-owned vehicles to be drastically sliced to move them out...right before the customer's eyes.

This is the "Price Slicer" sales event that has been written about in newspapers across the country. While other local dealers have hosted lesser knock-offs of the "Price Slicer" concept, Williams is the first to bring the "real deal" to Columbus.

"These guys are serious," Williams says. "We've instructed the Price Slicer Team to determine the best prices to move the most vehicles in just one day."

Obviously, the dealership being overloaded with inventory means a great selection for consumers. "No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here. Mini-vans, and sport utilities if you need room for a big family. Used Nissans, Fords, Mitsubishis, Hondas, Toyotas, Nissans, Mazdas, Chevys, Dodges, you name it... there's a great selection of everything from 87's through 2002! Plus tons of full size work trucks, 4x4s, even extended cab models."

The "Price Slicer" and his team travel the United States disposing of excess dealer inventory via dramatic price cuts.

Here's how it works: The "Slicer" and his team have been in town figuring bottom-line pricing since Thursday. Sale prices are placed on the windshield of every vehicle before the sale day.

"No matter what kind of used vehicle you're looking for, it's here"

Customers can come get a "sneak peak" preview Friday, November 30th from 3-9pm Saturday, the fun begins. Pre-registration begins at 9AM and Williams recommends customers arrive early for the best selection. In fact, the public can register even faster by visiting www.priceslicersale.com. After a brief registration, customers simply choose the vehicle they want. Then the "Price Slicer" begins slicing the price on the windshield thousands of dollars. And, it is true, new and used cars that normally sell from $5000 to $20,000 will be marked down thousands below MSRP, with some perfectly good used cars to be sold for as low as $99. Even brand new 2002 model Ford are included.

All the cars that will be offered during this event will be on display for customer inspection. You can also pre-register for the sale by going to www.priceslicersale.com.

"If credit problems have been in your past, that's no problem," Williams said. "During the 'Price Slicer' sale you can get financing for the car you want with no hassle. Just bring in a valid drivers license, a payroll stub, and a bill from your utilities." Bank representatives will be on hand to assist all credit customers needs.

HUGHSTON
SPORTS MEDICINE HOSPITAL

Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital is a 100-bed facility located on the Hughston Sports Medicine Center campus in Columbus, Georgia. Opened in 1984, we are known as one of the nation's first hospitals designed specifically to treat patients suffering from sports or activity-related injuries and disorders. The Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital along with the Hughston Clinic, P.C., the Hughston Sports Medicine Foundation, and Rehabilitation Services of Columbus, work together as The Hughston Sports Medicine Center to provide a comprehensive continuum of orthopaedic services.

Fully accredited by the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO), Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital is supported by a medical staff known for its expertise in musculoskeletal disorders. Our major services include: Sports medicine, general orthopaedics, joint replacement, back program, short-term rehabilitation, and stroke rehabilitation.

Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital is committed to patient satisfaction. Our staff believes, and has incorporated into our mission statement that each person is unique and of intrinsic worth; that all who enter our doors will be treated with compassion and kindness; that business will be conducted with absolute honesty, integrity and fairness; and that members of the health care team will be treated with loyalty, dignity and respect. As a HCA - The Healthcare Company facility, we rank in the top 5% of all HCA hospitals in overall patient satisfaction. Today, patients from across the United States and around the world, visit Hughston Sports Medicine Hospital for diagnoses they can count on and treatments they can trust.

System addresses soldiers' needs

Soldiers treated like system to be more lethal, mobile

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Soldiers can expect a quicker introduction to the equipment they need with the help of Soldier as a System.

"The close working relationship between the development and acquisition communities, established though SaaS, will provide the right soldiers with the right equipment," said David J. Libersat, project manager, SaaS.

"SaaS uses operational user input and an assessment process to find soldiers' needs, current, interim and future."

Soldier as a System is a management process and integration concept that identifies soldiers' equipment needs.

"We have soldiers buying commercial off-the-shelf-items like Camelbaks and smaller GPS systems that work better than issued gear," said Maj. Tyrone Manns, division chief of Individual Equipment, Directorate of Combat Development.

SaaS plans to integrate mission-specific equipment with commercially available equipment, Libersat said.

The SaaS effort conducted the first Integrated Concept Team meeting Dec. 11-12 to develop a dialogue with soldiers.

All Training and Doctrine Command schools and centers and members of the soldier community were invited to attend the conference. The ICT provided soldiers from several Forces Command and TRADOC units the opportunity to tell the SaaS ICT what the soldiers need, Libersat said.

"The ICT identified immediate soldier requirements, and we have identified areas of work and helped determine future soldier capabilities and requirements," Libersat said.

The ICT plans to meet quarterly to stay up to date on soldier needs, Libersat said. Then, SaaS will address their needs.

"We have to look at our soldiers like any other system," Manns said.

"If the soldier requires it, that's what they should get. This is going to make our soldiers more lethal, mobile and survivable."

Crash course in combat

Reporters learn survival skills, prepare for war

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Those who typically report the news made the news this week.

Nearly 60 journalists from around the world participated in a course — the second in a series — designed to enhance their effectiveness and safety in combat. It's the first time the Department of Defense has offered such training to journalists preparing to enter a potential war zone.

Fort Benning's 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, played host to the group, which included a number of war correspondents and photographers from CBS, CNN, The New York Times, Newsweek, Washington Post, and Al Jazeera.

Soldiers from various units and directorates led a crash course in combat survival, including the proper ways to enter and exit a helicopter, first aid, land navigation, reacting to direct and indirect fire, mine awareness and protection against nuclear, biological and chemical warfare.

"I've been in a couple of situations where this kind of training might've helped — Kosovo, Belgrade, Saudi ..." said Kerry Sanders, an NBC correspondent from Miami. "Through all that, I never had any formal training. I'm pleased with this. It's a good opportunity, especially the NBC (chamber). The threat of chemical warfare seems more real this time around, and I do feel a little more prepared."

Sanders and his classmates were also taught the finer points of military culture, with lessons in rank and insignia recognition and field hygiene.

"It's mainly to help them and whatever unit they might be imbedded with," said Sgt. 1st Class Patrick Clements, a drill sergeant with 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, who was among 18 cadre from around post selected to serve as escorts throughout the week.

Pfc. Dave Foley

Neil King with The Wallstreet Journal comes out of the gas chamber at Britton Range Wednesday.

"They're asking smart questions. Some of them have already been in a combat situation, so they obviously understand more than the average civilian," said Clements, who divided the journalists into two platoons with three squads, each with a team leader. "The idea is to give them as much of a taste of Army life as we can pack into a week."

Toward that end, the journalists rose before dawn, did P.T., road-marched five miles, learned to low crawl and high crawl, "experienced" MREs and learned to apply camouflage.

"I'm seeing that personal time doesn't exist in a combat situation. You have to be a team player. It's a very different mindset, and one

Hill gets help for holidays

Operation provides 'joy and celebration'

Pfc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

As many soldiers return to their families over the holidays, some do not have that luxury.

About 70 soldiers from 30th AG Battalion, Infantry Training Brigade and Basic Combat Training Brigade will stay on Sand Hill during the holidays.

But they won't spend the whole holiday season in the barracks thanks to Operation Holiday. Morale, Welfare and Recreation has gathered an estimated $15,500 in donated food, movies, phone cards and sporting tickets from the surrounding community, said Brian Smith, chief of Marketing, Directorate of Community Activities.

The most important aspect of Operation Holiday is to provide the same type of joy and celebration as those who go home to their loved ones, he said.

"I didn't expect it," said Pvt. Zach Harris, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment.

"I knew they would keep us somewhere, but I didn't know there would be things for us to do. It's good to have the community show support for soldiers who aren't going home for the holidays."

"I think it says an awful lot to the soldiers," Smith said. "When they come into the Army and don't know what to expect, this shows them a strong sign the Army cares about them and their quality of life."

AUSA and the Atlanta USO gave the most, contributing tickets to sporting events and movies.

'We're outta here': Mass Exodus marks holidays

Soldiers leave Fort Benning for home

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

From the outside, things at Sand Hill looked extremely quiet last week.

But around post, various agencies were hard at work making sure the annual soldier Exodus went without a hitch.

"It's a little crazy," said Laura Schelling, manager of the Omega Travel office at the Main Mall Post Exchange. "But it's a typical Exodus."

Schelling estimates she and the four other travel agents prepared itineraries and made bus travel arrangements for 4,000 soldiers.

Soldiers filled out itinerary sheets ahead of time and later went to the temporary Omega office set up in the Sand Hill Recreation Center to verify their flight information and pay for their tickets.

Schelling said Omega will have representatives at the Atlanta airport to answer questions and help with travel issues.

"This is the first time Omega has made the Exodus travel arrangements," Schelling said. "It has gone pretty well, although we're busy this week taking care of last minute issues like changes in destinations or flights."

The C & H bus company will have between 75 and 100 bus loads of soldiers.

Mike Miller, manager of the Sand Hill Post Exchange, had a slightly different view of the Exodus preparations.

"This has been a strange year," Miller said.

He said soldiers shopping at Sand Hill Saturday bought huge amounts of necessity items — items not normally purchased before Exodus, when souvenir and novelty items and luggage are generally top sellers.

Miller was on hand at the Main Mall Post Exchange on Sunday night for "Troop Night." Soldiers were able to shop after regular store hours, but many, Miller said, made a beeline for food.

"There were a lot of soldiers shopping," he said, "but there didn't seem to be a whole lot of buying."

"Who knows," he said. "We never know what's going to happen in here the last few days, and once Exodus starts, it's a ghost town here."

COMMENTARY

I'm getting old. A little voice told me so. It started a couple of years ago, as little more than a whisper of discontent. There I was, in the middle of the mall, elbowing my way through a ferocious crowd of shoppers engaged in commercial warfare.

I must have paused just a moment too long. Maybe I stopped to tie my shoe or down a cup of coffee before heading back to the fray. I don't remember the details, only the otherworldly voice, sounding remarkably like my own, as it whispered in my ear, "This isn't fun anymore. Just look around you. See the frowns, the look of angst on their faces as they run from store to store, spending more and more money on more and more junk. It's decadent. It's futile. It's meaningless."

That's when I tuned it out. I was wearing really big earrings, and I figured I was picking up signals from someone's cell phone, because my conscience would never use words like "angst" and "decadent." Besides, I was way too young to start waxing nostalgic for "the simpler times" and "the true meaning of Christmas."

Whew, that was a close call.

Ahh, but last year it returned, that voice of reason. A little louder this time. It fairly shouted, "Stop this insanity," as I circled the mall for the fourth time looking for a parking space. I'd already hit Walmart, Kmart and Target in pursuit of just the perfect gift for my darling niece who has everything. No, no, I mean it. She has everything.

"So what would she like this year?" I asked my sister.

"Gosh, I really don't know. She has everything," she replied.

So there.

The Voice reminded me of this conversation as I anted up the plastic to pay for some bauble for the babe. I don't remember what it was. I doubt she does either.

"Are you really going to put that on your charge card?" The Voice asked. "You'll be paying for it long after it's been relegated to the bottom of the toy box."

"Well, what do you suggest I do? I'm outta money, and it's Christmas, and I've got six more people on my list. Got any bright ideas?"

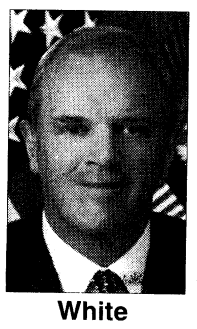
The sweet little old lady behind me, who obviously didn't hear The Voice, asked me if I needed to sit down a while. I paid — with plastic — and beat it out of there. The Nagging Voice followed, but I stifled it with a running monologue about the joys of gift giving.

"I know the true meaning of Christmas," I said. "It's all about God's great gift to us. And we celebrate the season by exchanging gifts, the way it's been done for centuries. It's about love, right? And since there are so many people we love, we put them all on our shopping list. It gets a little expensive, so what? It's how we show love. With presents. And if we can't find the perfect present, we give money. I give Cousin Joe, whom I haven't spoken to since last Christmas, a bottle of cologne that set me back a mere $20, and he gives me a mall gift certificate for $20. It all comes out even. See how nicely that works?"

I'm stubborn, but I'm no fool. When The Nagging Voice spoke to me this year, I listened. It was starting to make sense, after all. Between my husband's family and my own, our clan now numbers more than 50. Half-a-hundred brothers, sisters, grandparents, nephews, nieces and in-laws to shop for. I figured we'd have to mortgage the farm, and we don't own a farm, so it's simply out of the question.

Time to scale back, to simplify. Time to bake cookies and make candy. Time to quit buying for the sake of buying.

So my husband and I put our foot, er feet, down. And just as I feared, we stepped on a few toes. We explained, as best we could, why we're forgoing the annual gift exchange this year. This branch of the family tree dropped out of the Great Christmas Race.

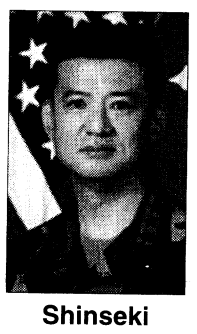


Some took it better than others. Some looked completely confused. Some got indignant. And a few aren't speaking to us, though I won't say which side of the family, only that it isn't mine. Let's just say I'm on the outs with some of the ins.

That's OK. I'm confident they'll come around to our way of thinking very soon. That Nagging Voice has disappeared, replaced by one pleasant little melody after another. I'm tapping my toe to a new Christmas beat, and I'm enjoying it. Call me an old fogey. I'm OK with that. I'm having a simply marvelous Christmas.

Soldiers represent legacy of hope

During the holidays, families gather to share in the celebrations of the season. Our Army family is unique — among us, we share a special bond, a common understanding of the inherent sacrifices and hardships of being an Army family. So we are additionally blessed to be able to celebrate our special heritage — the legacy of hope that our soldiers represent to the nation.



On a bitter-cold Christmas night in 1776, Gen. George Washington and his Continental Army crossed the Delaware River to execute a bold plan against the British forces. Driving sleet and snow made the freezing temperatures all the more unbearable. Despite those harsh conditions, the soldiers did not complain — some of them had no shoes; some wrapped rags around their feet to help keep them warm; still others remained barefoot.

White

As one of Washington's staff officers recorded, the soldiers were "ready to suffer any hardship and die rather than give up their liberty." In the most difficult conditions, against the greatest odds, the soldiers performed magnificently, and their victory in the Battle of Trenton the day after Christmas renewed the hopes of freedom in the American Revolution.

And undiminished still today is that same spirit of determination, perseverance, selfless service and courage that moved the soldiers of the Continental Army on Christmas night in 1776. We share in the enduring legacy of those who first fought and died to win our freedom — we stand on the shoulders of the brave men and women who have preceded us.

Shinseki

We know that we do not soldier alone. With each of our soldiers on point in more than 120 countries around the globe is the spirit of a tremendous family — a family whose courage, sacrifice, and steadfastness are inspiring to us all. And all of our efforts, all of our successes, all of our magnificent moments as an Army will continue to be delivered by our people — soldiers, civilians, veterans, retirees, and all of their families. We are grateful for their commitment, their loyalty, and their devotion.

We could not be more proud of all of you and of the magnificent work you do each and every day to preserve the gifts of hope and of freedom that we cherish. May you have a safe, fulfilling, and joyful holiday season and a prosperous New Year. God bless each of you and your families, God bless the Army, and God bless this great nation.

— Thomas E. White
Secretary of the Army
— Gen. Eric K. Shinseki
Army chief of staff

TRADOC CG sends seasons greetings

I wish you all the happiest of holidays. This holiday season is a time to spend with friends and family, and to reflect on the blessings we receive as American citizens

This has been a tremendous year for the Army and the nation.

The contributions we made to the war on terrorism following the tragic events of Sept. 11 have produced great results.

Byrnes

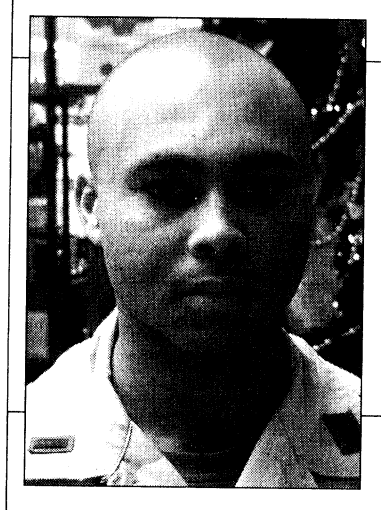
Our soldiers are doing a super job in Afghanistan and other locations around the world.

Your contributions helped create these soldiers, so you can take pride in their successes, too.

Enjoy the holidays with families and friends, but please be safe on the highways and in your homes.

We want you to return to us in 2003, renewed and refreshed after a holiday of reflection and joy.

We hope you have a warm, fulfilling holiday season and a great new year.



— Gen. Kevin Byrnes
TRADOC commander

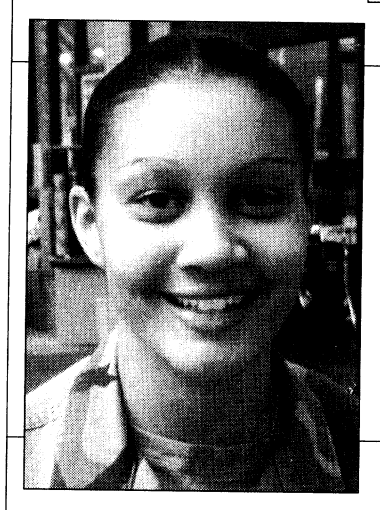
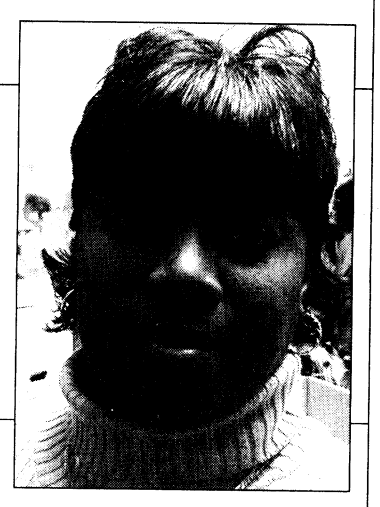
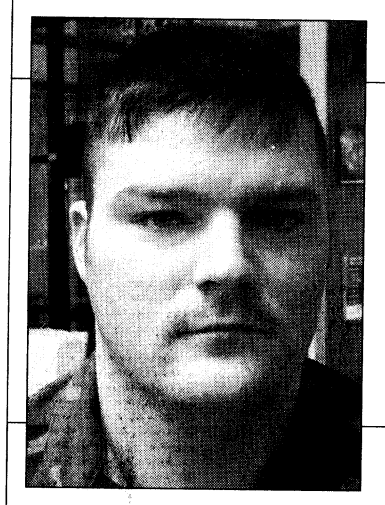
VARIOUS VOICES



How has the economy and current events affected your holiday spending?



1st Lt. Jason Waters, 317th Engineer Battalion — "I just got back from Kuwait so I haven't been affected yet. When I do shopping, my wife and I are going to budget our money so buying gifts won't impact our finances."



Retired Sgt. 1st Class Lester Cooper, Columbus — I can't get as many gifts this year. I now shop for the best sales and the best prices."

Spc. Danielle Clark, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — "It hasn't affected me. I still will spend as much money this holiday season that I spent in years past."

Francis Wilson, family member — "I can't spend as much as I did last year, because the number of sales retail stores have are down and the money is not there."

Sgt. Thomas Hollen, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I have to budget now and be more cautious of what I spend my money on."

Tandy Cain-Morris, Directorate of Community Activities — "It really hasn't changed much because my grandmother taught me to shop throughout the year to avoid the holiday cash crunch."

Competition draws sharpshooters

Snipers gain experience, information

Spc. James Cook, stationed at Fort Lewis, Wash., fires down range during competition Monday.

Back in October, there was much speculation about where the D.C.-area snipers honed their skills. Cadre at Fort Benning's U.S. Army Sniper School fielded hundreds of phone calls, mostly from the media, questioning the likelihood the perpetrators were trained by the military.

The school's commander never doubted his reply.

"We were confident he — or as it turned out, they — weren't our guys," said Capt. Jason Kostal. "Army snipers are professionals. They've been through screenings — psychological evaluations by a panel of doctors — and they don't have a history of administrative action. They're highly intelligent. We knew those guys weren't Army snipers."

No doubt, the "art of sniping" will continue to make headlines as the Army increases its sniper slots to facilitate the effectiveness of new medium brigades. By 2005, the school, which currently trains less than 300 students each year, is expected to qualify more than 800 annually.

With that in mind, Kostal and his crew of 17 instructors are hoping this week's international sniper competition will shed some light on the true nature of the professional sniper.

"Movies and TV do a number on us," Kostal said. "There are a lot of misconceptions about what a sniper does."

Such as?

"People tend to think snipers are primarily shooters," said Staff Sgt. Dominic Barnello, who took the lead in planning the event after last year's maiden competition. The number of teams doubled this year. "The truth is a sniper team mainly does reconnaissance and surveillance. Shooting is only 10 to 15 percent of what they do."

Snipers are the "eyes and ears" of a commander, Barnello said. Most Army battalions have three teams, each consisting of a shooter and a spotter. In combat, each team generally works 24 to 72-hour shifts before rotating with another.

They "track the battlefield," sometimes patrolling, often remaining stationary, perhaps in a building or on a hillside, observing the enemy at length to determine his strength, mobility and capability — information the commander will use to plan combat strategy.

"The sniper is one of the most viable options out there for gathering military intelligence," Kostal said. "Few things supercede their capabilities. They're often a commander's greatest asset."

The snipers of allied armies often work together to assure a sharing of intelligence, Barnello said. Allied forces from the U.S., Great Britain and Canada are serving in Afghanistan together. Their sniper teams rotate and share information that may ultimately benefit all allied forces.

Toward that end, snipers participate in dozens of competitions annually, like the five-day event that brought 50 competitors — 25 teams and coaches from the U.S., Canada and Great Britain — to Fort Benning this week.

"We call it cross-pollination of information," Barnello said. "We stand to learn a lot from each other. The competition itself is secondary to the benefits of working with sniper teams they'll work with if they go to war. In fact, the guys who come in last place stand to learn a lot more than the winner, because they'll learn from the better team. Ultimately, that's what it's about."

Kostal said the competition gives snipers from different services and countries an opportunity to learn "trade secrets" from their allies.

"They all do the same job, but they all do it differently," he said. "The competition is just an awesome way to learn new techniques and see what kind of equipment other teams are using. And the winner takes home bragging rights."

The teams — six from Canada, including last year's winners, two from Great Britain, two from the Marines, three from the Florida National Guard and the rest active-duty Army — competed in 16 events, each worth 100 points and each designed to test the team's mastery of skills the cadre deemed necessary for a proficient sniper.

The events included firing at various angles from a 60-foot tower, alternating firing positions, stalking, rapid fire under stress, and shooting unknown distances.

High winds hindered much of the early competition, a fact cadre likened to "realistic, unforeseen glitches on the battlefield."

"Some of their scores are down because of the winds, but that's not a bad thing," Kostal said. "Winds might be something they're up against in a real-world situation, so better to find their weaknesses here than out there."

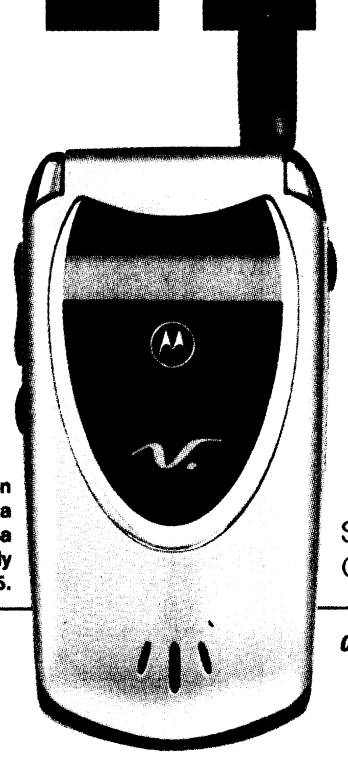
It wasn't the wind that bothered Sgt. Andrew Spillane, coach of the team from Great Britain that recently placed first in New Zealand's sniper competition. Spillane's team couldn't get their ammo through customs.

"The Americans kindly provided for us," said Spillane, who confessed to being frustrated by the fact his team was doing poorly.

"The wind? That's not a problem. They fired in West Wales in 26 mile per hour winds," he said. "These boys have 30 years of sniping between them. They're very good. But they're shooting with ammo they're unfamiliar with, and they're not doing well."

Still, it's not so much the competition as the opportunity "to touch base with the Canadians and Americans" that attracted Spillane's team to Fort Benning.

"We'll change a couple of ideas because of what we've seen here," he said. "(The Canadians and Americans) have been on operational deployments we haven't, so we're getting new information, new ideas from them."



Staff Sgt. Justin Shaffer was an instructor during last year's competition. This year he traveled from Alaska to participate with his teammate, Sgt. Mike Hensley.

"I love these competitions. I go to as many as I can," said Shaffer, who is assigned to the 1st Battalion, 501st Parachute Infantry Regiment. "There's a lot of emphasis on sniping right now, more so in Canada than here. Their school is nine and half weeks long. Ours is five. Their teams have been together for years, and they'll be hard to beat, but we stand to learn a lot from them."

The competition, which is funded by the Army Sniper Association, will end today, and winners will be announced tonight during a closing ceremony in Columbus.

Army extends deadline for 'Third Wave' exemptions

Jan. 15 deadline for job decisions

Gary Sheftick
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The deadline has been extended to Jan. 15 for Army functional chiefs to submit final requests arguing what positions should be exempt from the "Third Wave" of privatization.

Initially 213,637 positions — 154,910 held by civilian employees and 58,727 held by soldiers — were designated as "non-core" to the Army and eligible for public-private competition. That's well over half of the Army's 247,400 civilian jobs. But officials said the final numbers could be much different.

"Everybody wants an exemption," said Dr. John Anderson, the Army official responsible for initially reviewing exemption requests.

Anderson has already received requests for thousands of positions to be exempted from the next wave of A-76 competitions and privatization actions.

Many of the requests, though, had to be returned to functional chiefs for additional information. So the Nov. 29 deadline for exemption requests was extended until mid-January. And the target date for Assistant Secretary of the Army (Manpower and Reserve Affairs) Reginald Brown to finish reviewing the recommendations has been moved forward. Feb. 20 is now the date for an expected announcement on Third Wave exemption decisions.

The first wave of outsourcing began in 1979 following the signing of Office of Management and Budget Circular A-76. It is often associated with OMB Director David Stockman, Anderson said.

The second wave began peaking in 1998 and is often associated with "reinventing government." It involved the Defense Reform Initiative Directive known as DRID-20 and the Federal Activities Inventory Reform or FAIR Act.

The "Third Wave" was initiated by the "President's Management Agenda" signed by President Bush last year. Army Secretary Thomas White said the Third Wave will be "bigger and faster" than previous ones and may include "alternatives to A-76."

"Bigger chunks of competition could result in economies of scale," Anderson said.

Anderson said that A-76 competitions would no longer be limited to installations and could cover an entire function Armywide. For the first time, functions other than base operations will be competed. Some functions — such as research and development and architectural engineering — are exempt from A-76 by statute and could be privatized without competition.

Anderson said there are three over-arching reasons for the Third Wave.

The primary objective, he said, is to make sure the Army is using its manpower as efficiently as possible, "before asking for additional resources."

The second objective is to free up military manpower for core functions and the global War on Terrorism. Anderson said this is necessary because the Army is operating within fixed constraints — an end-strength of 480,000 active-duty soldiers — in a wartime environment where there may be increasing demands for military capabilities.

Third, Anderson said it is necessary for the Army to be a good steward of the taxpayers' dollars and to support the President's Management Agenda that calls for competitive sourcing.

Anderson said that soldiers performing functions determined to be non-core to the Army will be moved to positions where they can perform core competencies.

"No (military) end strength is going to be cut by this," Anderson said.

In fact, he said the Third Wave should help beef up the Army's combat and combat support capabilities.

"We will leverage our current end strength by converting non-core military to civilian employees or contract, where appropriate," Anderson said.

When soldiers are moved out of non-core positions, it will cost an estimated $55,000 per soldier to replace them with contractors, Anderson said. And then some of the soldiers may need to be retrained in other specialties. This will be paid for through savings generated from public-private competition.

Not all of the non-core functions will be contracted out though, Anderson said. Some will simply be divested or eliminated. Some could be transferred to another executive agency. Some could be worked by civilian employees. Remaining non-core functions — performed both by soldiers and civilians — will be included in A-76 competitions.

None of these actions will begin, however, until exemption decisions are made and Implementation Plans are approved by the Secretary of the Army. Anderson said the exemption recommendations will be coordinated with G1, G3, and other Department of the Army staff principals through a formal process.

First a validation process will check the functional data base and administrative corrections will be made, Anderson said. Then Army functional chiefs who head up career fields will have an opportunity to "vet issues from a policy standpoint."

Major commands provide input to Army functional chiefs at the Pentagon, Anderson said. Then the chiefs submit requests as to which functions under their purview should be exempted.

"Just because a function is not inherently governmental doesn't mean it should be contracted," Anderson said. He said there's a difference between what jobs could and should be contracted.

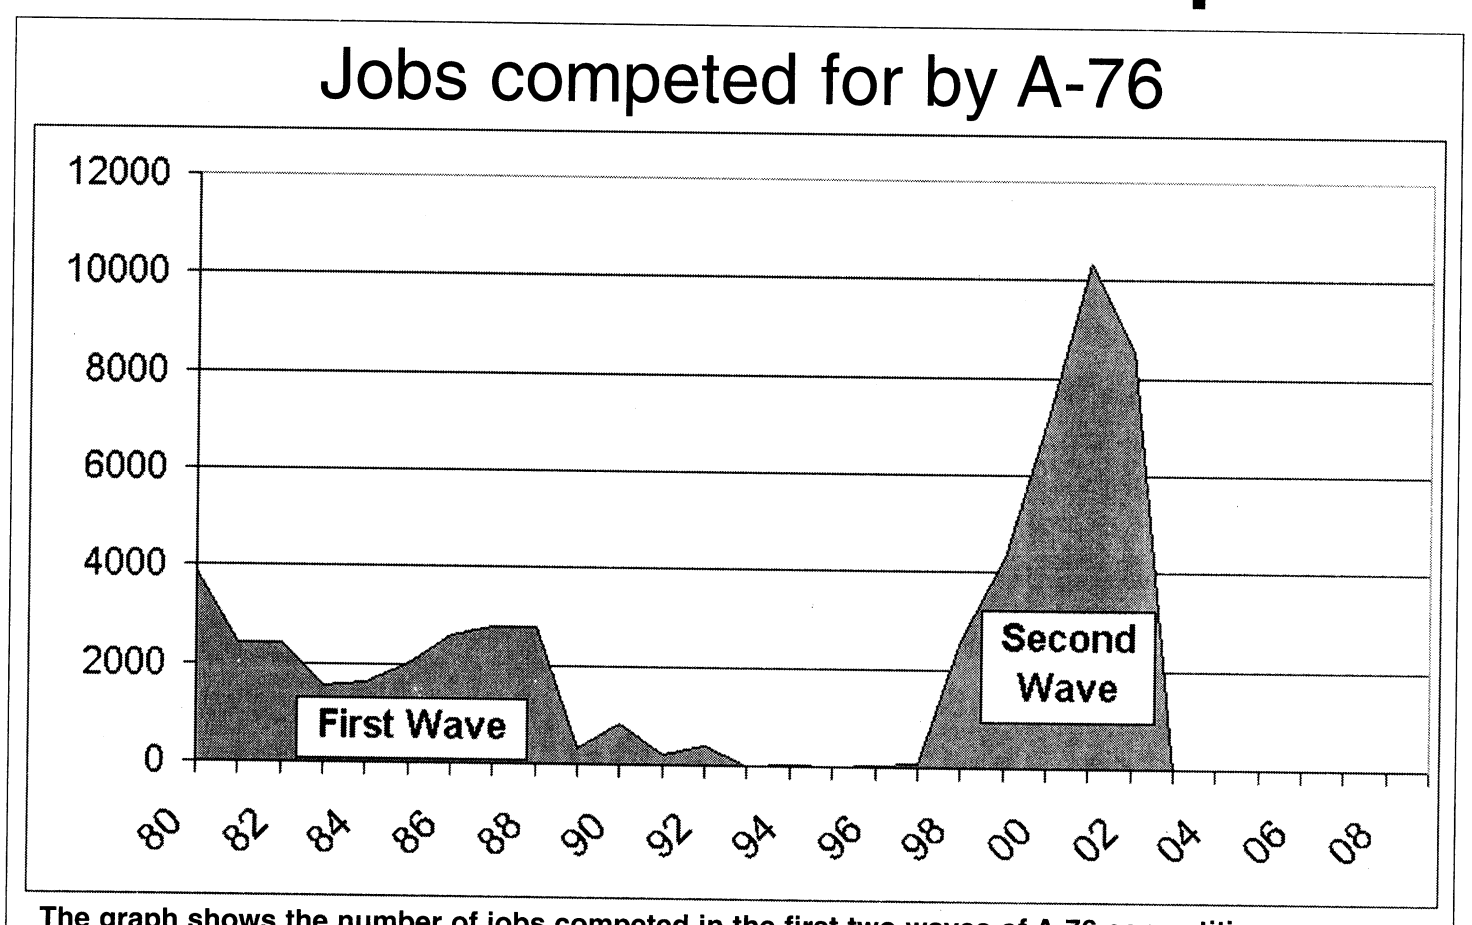
Anderson, in coordination with Army staff principals, formulates exemption recommendations for the assistant secretary of the Army (Manpower and Reserve Affairs). If functional chiefs don't agree with a recommendation, Anderson said there's "likely to be a negotiation process" involving "discussion and collaboration."

If parties still don't agree, Anderson said alternate recommendations will be sent to Brown, who will make a decision.

The new OMB Circular A-76 — now in draft form for public comment — assumes that all functions are subject to competition unless exempted in writing, with rationale, by an assistant secretary.

Even after Brown announces exemptions, parts of the decisions will be subject to public challenge under the FAIR Act, Anderson said. And the decisions will be subject to review by the secretary of the Army, the secretary of Defense, the Office of Management and Budget, and Congress.

Then the Army's "Non-Core Competencies Working Group" will decide how non-core functions will be competed. Right now the group is just beginning to develop implementation plan templates, said its deputy chairman, Jim Wakefield.



Wakefield wants to calm Army civilian employees and soldiers who fear their jobs might soon be contracted out or eliminated.

First, he said A-76 competitions will be held over the next seven years — not overnight. DoD and the military services are now in the process of determining whether DoD's budget should project the competitions to be completed by fiscal 2008 or 2009.

Second, if military positions are contracted out, Wakefield said, soldiers will simply be moved to another location or trained in another specialty. Third, Army employees will have a chance to compete for their jobs by developing "most efficient organizations."

He said only 408 employees have been involuntarily separated to date during the Army's "Second Wave" of A-76 competitions. That wave began in November 1996 with 20,000 positions covered by A-76 studies completed so far and another 13,000 being looked at in ongoing competitions.

Even if entire functions are contracted out, "you always need some type of core capability," Wakefield said, at least a "smart buyer" capability, so that someone can monitor the contractors.

The graph shows the number of jobs competed in the first two waves of A-76 competitions. Numbers in the left column depict the total positions competed and the bottom numbers represent the years.

Army budget funds pay increase

Congress helps support Army transformation

Staff Sgt. Marcia Triggs and Courtney Brooks
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — This year's Defense Appropriations Bill and Authorization Act funds a fourth Stryker Brigade, 650 Comanche helicopters and pay increases for soldiers.

The Army also requested to close the pay gap between soldiers and the private sector, officials said. Congress responded with a pay increase of at least 4.1 percent with targeted increases of up to 6.5 percent for mid- and senior-level noncommissioned officers and a 5.5 percent increase for majors with between eight and 14 years of service.

The Army also asked Congress to eliminate out-of-pocket housing expenses for soldiers and their families. The last legislative session saw progress there as well by reducing the average amount of expenses paid by service members from 11.3 percent to 7.5 percent, with the intent of eliminating the out-of-pocket expenses by fiscal 2005.

Army Chief of Staff Gen. Eric K. Shinseki has repeatedly said the Army needs six Stryker Brigade Combat Teams. Congress responded by authorizing $788 million to purchase 332 Stryker vehicles, enough for a fourth brigade, with an additional $150.9 million for further research and development.

The first two Stryker Brigade Combat Teams are at Fort Lewis, Wash. The third is in Alaska and the fourth one will be at Fort Polk, La., Army officials said.

The Army's transformation from the Legacy Force to the Objective Force was also supported with $1.9 billion for science and technology programs.

The Army's budget has increased, but so has its requirements, officials said. Manning for Active-Guard-Reserve soldiers was increased 2.2 percent over fiscal 2002, but the request for 100 percent remains, officials said.

The Army's request to procure 819 Comanches to improve the ability of Army aviation reconnaissance and attack formations to operate on the battlefield was partially granted. Congress authorized $910 million for development, but Department of Defense only supported the procurement of 650 Comanches.

President George W. Bush signed the Defense Appropriations Bill, which is nearly $335 billion, and the Military Construction Appropriations Bill, which adds $10.5 billion for building and upgrading military installations and family housing at the White House on Oct. 23.

Hospital seeks vaccines to halt desert diarrhea

Vaccines to help kill bacteria

Karen Fleming Michael
Army News Service

FORT DETRICK, Md. — The runs. The trots. The quick step. Montezuma's revenge. Whatever it's called, diarrhea can debilitate deployed soldiers.

In fact, during Operations Desert Shield and Storm, 57 percent of troops had at least one bout with diarrhea; 20 percent reported they were temporarily incapacitated by it, according to the 1998 Army Science and Technology Master Plan.

To combat the ailment, researchers in the Walter Reed Army Institute of Research's Department of Enteric Infections are developing new vaccines to help deployed warfighters fight bacteria that cause diarrhea.

Less-than-sanitary living conditions and foreign diets, teamed with few opportunities to wash after using the bathroom, let diarrhea-causing bacteria with names like Shigella flexneri, Shigella sonnei, Shigella dysenteriae and Escherichia coli flourish in the field, quickly disabling thousands and upending readiness.

So far, the institute has four vaccines in the works to combat diarrhea.

"Ideally, the goal would be to have one vaccine that will protect against multiple pathogens that can easily be given to deploying soldiers," said Maj. David Katz, a senior clinical investigator at WRAIR. "So soldiers can take it before they deploy to an area, and they'll be protected."

Since 1992, a vaccine to combat Shigella flexneri, called SC602, has undergone clinical trials in the United States and Bangladesh.

"The wonderful thing about the shigella vaccines is ... the bacteria (used in them) are alive but weakened to diminish the amount of symptoms," Katz said.

> "The wonderful thing about the shigella vaccines is ... the bacteria (used in them) are alive but weakened to diminish the amount of symptoms."
> Maj. David Katz
> Senior clinical investigator at WRAIR

"The body thinks it's infected and gives an immune response, but you don't get infected like a natural infection because the bacteria don't spread from cell to cell."

Receiving the oral vaccine before deploying is key, Katz said.

"Most of the soldiers will get hit right when they arrive in a new area," Katz said, "either because they're eating on the economy or they're in a new area and their system has not been primed."

Another reason to give the vaccine ahead of time is because of potential side effects, said Dr. Thomas Hale, chief of the Department of Enteric Infections at WRAIR.

"The vaccine can cause some short-term fevers and mild diarrhea in 20 percent of the people who receive it," Hale said, "so soldiers need to take it well before they get on a plane."

A vaccine for Shigella sonnei, which often attacks travelers and stateside daycare centers, is a possible stand-alone product, Hale said.

"This one vaccine could make a significant difference in the health of soldiers deployed to the Middle East (where 90 percent of outbreaks occur) and the developing world," Hale said.

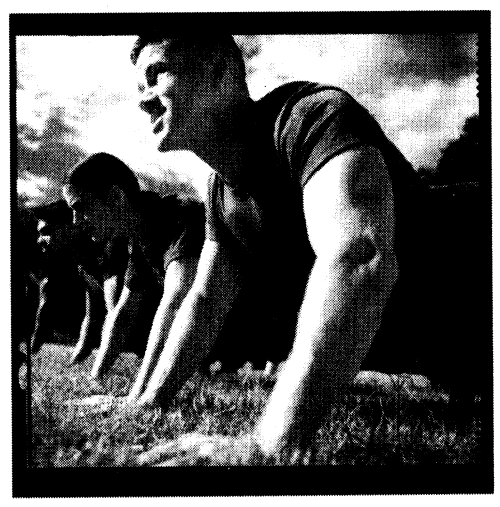
Drs. Malabi Venkatesan and Antoinette Hartman from WRAIR developed the oral vaccine, called WRSS1, that is currently in clinical trials in conjunction with the University of Maryland Medical School and the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

The Department of Enteric Infections at WRAIR has teamed up with the Israel Defense Force for a vaccine trial evaluating WRSS1 this winter.

"Israel has cities that are very westernized, but almost everyone has a compulsory military obligation, so they go from cities to field posts and the incidence of diarrheal disease is significant," Katz said.

To combat the deadly form of diarrhea, dysentery — also called bloody diarrhea — WRAIR researchers are working with the Bloomberg School of Public Health at Johns Hopkins University to test the oral Walter Reed Shigella-Dysentery-1 vaccine, WRSD1.

The other diarrhea-causing bacteria WRAIR and the Navy Medical Research Unit researchers are trying to disable is E. coli.



Whereas shigella bacteria invades a cell's wall and moves from cell to cell to spread the disease, E. coli prefers to stick to the intestine's lining, homestead and crank out toxins that cause diarrhea.

To outsmart the unwanted tenant, researchers are trying to make antibodies that will prevent squatters from colonizing because they can't stick to the intestine. The vaccine's been tested in a time-release capsule form as well as a transdermal patch.

"It should be easy for the soldier to use: Just pop the patch on and that's it," Katz said.

Though having one vaccine to combat all major forms of infectious diarrhea is a ways off, he said.

"Service is a responsibility you don't take lightly."

Fort Benning's DRMO helps Santa deliver

Riggers provide parachutes

"It's a really big deal for Fort Benning to participate in such a huge humanitarian relief effort. We're putting smiles on a lot of little happy faces."

Dan Gibbs
Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office reutilization specialist

Fort Benning's DRMO is helping make "a lot of little happy faces" this Christmas.

The Defense Reutilization and Marketing Office, the agency responsible for recycling and redistributing military equipment, furniture and clothing, acquired nearly 200 parachutes slated for disposal and donated them to Operation Christmas Drop, an Air Force program that provides care packages to 56 Micronesian islands around Guam.

"It's a really big deal for Fort Benning to participate in such a huge humanitarian relief effort," said Dan Gibbs, DRMO reutilization specialist. "We're putting smiles on a lot of little happy faces."

Fifty years ago, an Air Force weather plane crew dropped a small package to islanders on Kappingimarangi, one of many impoverished islands within a 700 mile radius of Guam where planes cannot land.

Since then, Operation Christmas Drop has taken on a life of its own, with shipments growing larger and larger each year.

The annual "training exercise," a "fly mission" for Anderson Air Force Base C-130 crew members, generates year-round interest, including golf tournaments, a 5K run and various events designed to increase funding to provide food, clothing, sporting goods, fishing equipment and Christmas gifts for the island children.

The aircraft typically fly low near the shore and drop 500-pound boxes, as a crewmember in a Santa costume waves to the crowds that gather below.

The Army's Defense Reutilization and Marketing Services has been participating in Operation Christmas Drop for 12 years, but this is the first year the Fort Benning office has been privileged to help, said Fran Allor, service manager. When DRMS solicited help locating T-10 parachutes, the kind typically used by airborne soldiers, Allor said DRMO staff decided to "push it," for the sake of the children.

The problem, said Gibbs, who retired from the Air Force, was that parachutes are usually relinquished to DRMO with their lines cut when they are deemed no longer operational, a necessary precaution against the accidental reuse of a worn parachute. To be of any use to Operation Christmas Drop, the parachutes' lines had to be intact.

Gibbs contacted Fort Benning's 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment Rigger Shop and arranged with Chief Warrant Officer Allen Douglas to donate modified parachutes. Douglas provided 80 parachutes in August, enough to keep Operation Christmas Drop aloft this year, then continued to collect enough to assist in the coming years.

Sounds simple enough, but the months-long process of procuring and shipping the parachutes was a logistical challenge, involving mountains of paperwork and research, a fact Gibbs dismissed as inconsequential.

"That's our business, to find places that can reuse materials. We're here to help," he said.

Pastor tells engineers to get ready for war, to listen to spirit of God

'Praying times' draw soldiers to breakfast

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Bishop Ann Hardman speaks at the breakfast.

A "soldier of the lord" visited Fort Benning Dec. 12 on a mission she said came directly from her commander in chief.

"God sent me here today to tell you that he has not left you and he will not leave you. He has a place of protection for you even in the midst of battle," said Bishop Ann Hardman in a predawn message to soldiers from the 36th Engineer Group.

Hardman was the guest speaker at a prayer breakfast sponsored by the Group's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program. The North Carolina native, who pastors two churches, one in her home state and Faith Tabernacle Full Gospel Outreach in Phenix City, titled her message Activating the Soldier Within.

"You're getting ready to go to war," Hardman told the standing-room only crowd. "You've got to be ready to fight. You've got to be activated.

"You've got to listen to your commander if you want to fight to your full potential. So, too, you must listen to the spirit of God, who has your best interest at heart, and he will give you peace in the midst of the fight."

More than 60 soldiers attended the breakfast, the first of its kind for the group, said Chaplain (Maj.) Tim Bedsole.

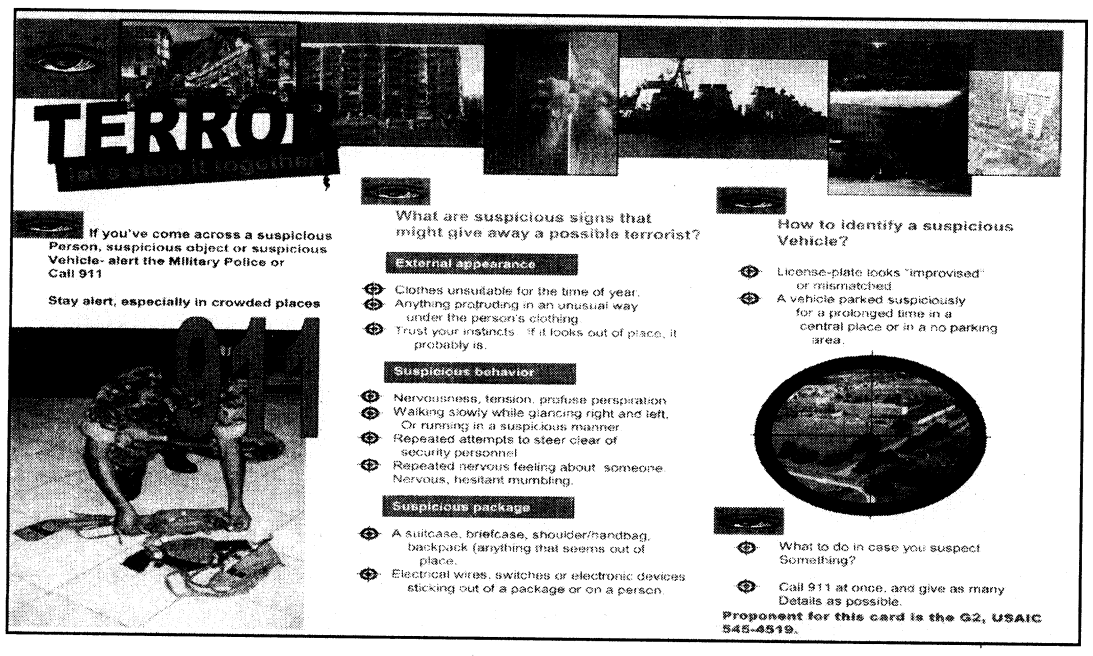
"It's a grass-roots idea. That's what I like about it. It was the soldiers' idea, and they planned it, they wanted it," said Bedsole, explaining the unexpected turnout.

Kenny Williams, a former career soldier, offered another explanation.

"These are praying times," said Williams, a local resident who attended the event to hear his pastor speak.

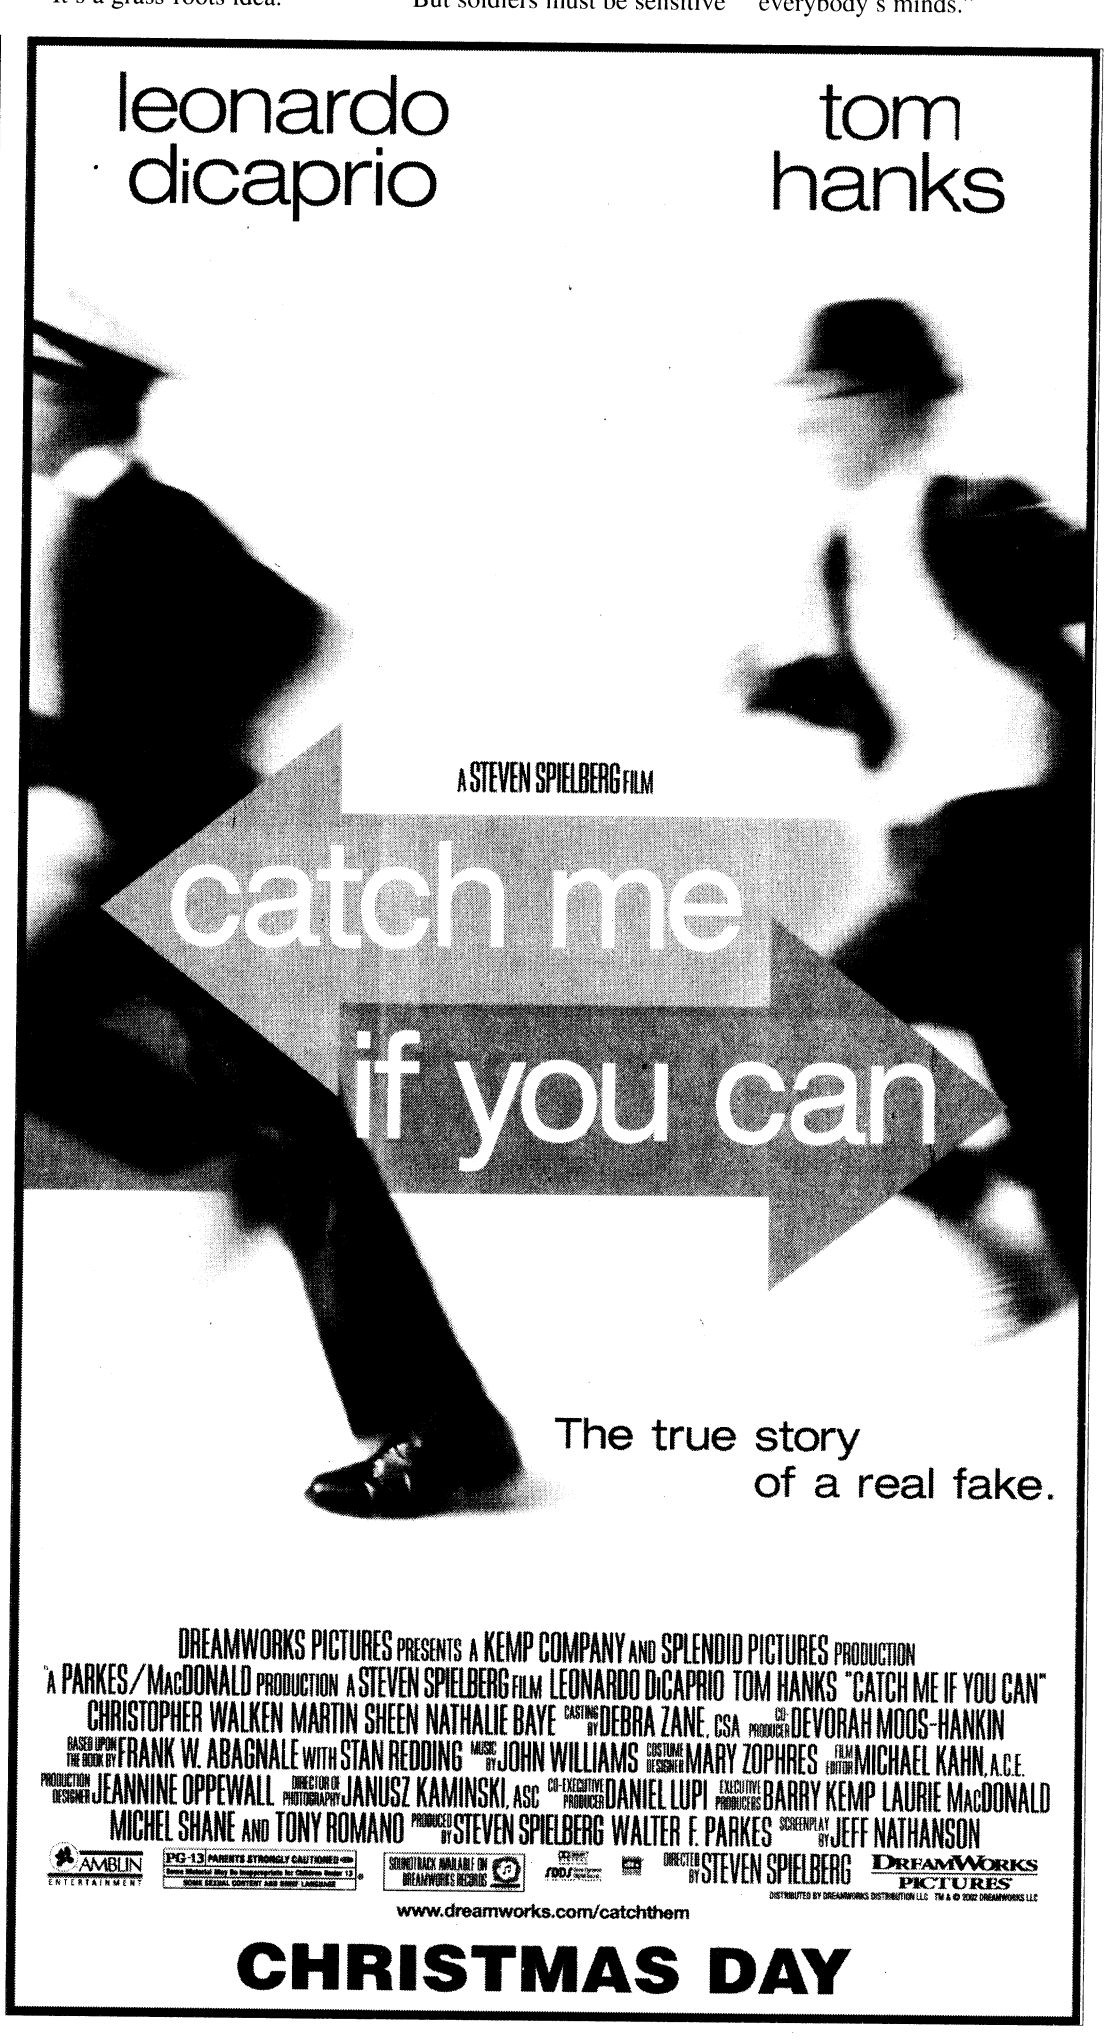
"When I was in the Army, I was active in the BOSS program, and I know how important these kind of things can be to single soldiers," he said. "There's so much going on in the world right now. People are looking for answers. They're ready to pray."

Indeed, Hardman told her audience they "might not care while you're here preparing for war, but when you step over there, you're going to want to know there's a supreme being."



The good news, she said, is "God's already been where you're going. He's made provision for your safety."

But soldiers must be sensitive to God's spirit if they want to maintain a "right relationship" with God, Hardman said.



"You know when you get a preapproved credit card in the mail? It says 'Call to activate,'" she said to a chorus of 'hooahs.' "That's the way it is with God. You've got to call on him. You've got to talk to him and listen. Call on God and get activated, and he says he'll never forsake you. He says he'll fight the battle for you."

Master Sgt. Janice Goldsmith, president of the group's BOSS program, said the prayer breakfast was "the talk of the barracks all weekend."

"I think her message hit the spot. It couldn't have come at a better time. I had soldiers coming up to me and saying, 'Master sergeant, it seemed like she was talking directly to me,'" Goldsmith said. "I think they needed to hear that, and they were ready to hear it, because leaving's on everybody's minds."

Reporters: Visit Fort Benning to investigate survivability on battlefield

I don't think anyone who hasn't had exposure to the military can ever really appreciate," said Rosiland Jordan, an NBC correspondent in Washington, D.C.

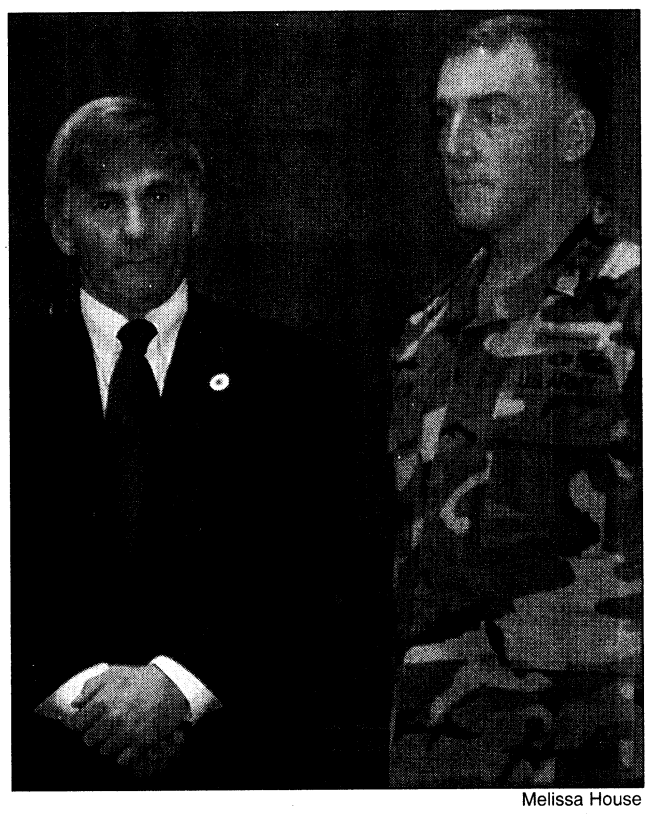
"Am I really going to be prepared in a week's time? No, I don't think I'll ever be up to a soldier's standard, but I feel as if I'm getting more of a handle on what I need to know."

Jordan said she believes the training is a direct result of lessons learned during the Gulf War, when the relationship between the military and the media was often strained.

"What we do is very important," she said. "This is a volunteer Army. People need to understand what it is we're asking our (soldiers) to do. If I can report it as I see it, it can have a positive affect on policy. Ultimately I just want to tell the story, and I feel a little better prepared to do it."

Bridgett Siter

Journalists disembark a helicopter during training designed to keep them safe.



Many of the participants, though easily recognized television personalities, weren't willing to be interviewed or filmed. Being filmed on a military installation could ultimately jeopardize their safety, they said.

"I guess the theory is, yeah, I'm high profile and I don't want to be associated with military operations," said an ABC reporter. "That's a little bit of an exotic notion, I think, but whatever ... I just do my job, do what I'm told, and I suppose you can't be too cautious."

More than 400 journalists have volunteered to participate in the training, which will likely include four phases from all branches of the military.

Marine Corps Base Quantico conducted training three weeks ago, and the Air Force will follow in January.

Thanks!

BCTB soldiers experience gas chamber

Sand Hill men learn threat of new war

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

Staff Sgt. Terry Pittman, drill sergeant with 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, checks the seal of one his soldiers.

Pvt. Edgardo Delgado found out why soldiers usually don't forget the first time they're in the gas chamber Dec. 10 at Britton Range.

"It felt like I was being strangled by a 400-pound gorilla," said the 22-year-old Buffalo, N.Y., native.

The unpleasant experience was a timely reminder of the possibility of what could happen in Iraq or any other hot spot, said Staff Sgt. Chay Blount, drill sergeant with D Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment.

"The (nuclear, biological and chemical) threat is always there, and this better prepares them for all combat environments, including the possibility of terrorist attacks," Blount said.

The chamber was a segment of NBC training that prepared soldiers for war. Some of the other classes taught them the proper reaction to nuclear blasts, the various effects of NBC exposure, how to use M-8 and M-9 paper, and how to decontaminate themselves and their equipment.

The chamber was the obvious training highlight, Blount said. It had been all talk for the soldiers who were only in their second week of training.

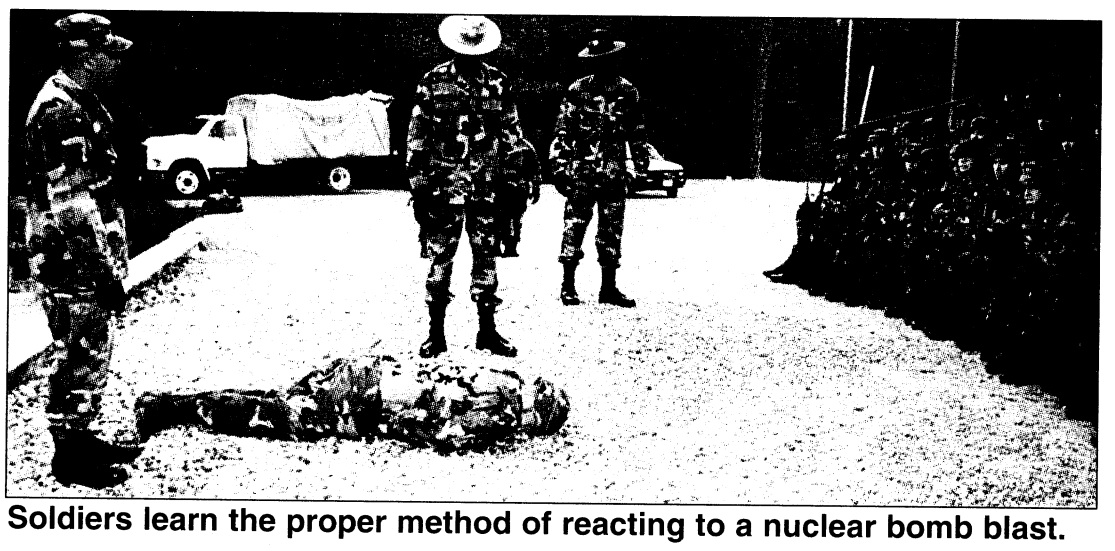
"They've been hearing rumors about the chamber, and now they're going through it to see how it really is," he said. "Sometimes, privates don't know how to use the mask properly, and this is a good test of their skills."

Skilled or not, the soldiers now know some of the symptoms — running nose, watery eyes, coughing and choking, itchy skin and slurred speech — and will be able to react better to a chemical situation, which will pay dividends for their units' missions and battlefield survivabilities, he said.

Some soldiers, like Delgado, found the CS gas more challenging than others.

In fact, it was fun for Pvt. Jon Hicks, a 24-year-old from Scranton, Pa.

"It wasn't bad," Hicks said. "The drill sergeants prepared us. They told me what to expect, and I did exactly what I was told."



He was glad the company performed the mission prior to the soldiers' holiday Exodus, he said. He'll be able to tell his wife, Stephanie, what it was like.

"She'll be happy to know the training I've received has set me in the right direction to defend myself and my country," the practical nurse said. "The way things look right now, we could call upon this training soon after we graduate (Advanced Individual Training)."

Delgado said he and his fellow soldiers will be ready for war.

"Today's training taught us we can trust our masks during battle," the health-care specialist said.

It also cured what ailed him. He had spent two days in the infirmary with bronchitis and had to beg the drill sergeants to let him get gassed. The intensity of the CS forced all the remaining sickness out of him, Delgado said.

Soldiers learn the proper method of reacting to a nuclear bomb blast.

During Exodus, Delgado said he'd reassure his family the training was working, too.

"But the gas chamber is an experience they probably would not want to try — because of the 400-pound gorilla," he said.

OCS trains with squad stakes

Tasks test candidates' mettle

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The officer candidates of C Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment got a taste of life in the field while conducting squad stakes training Monday.

"This training not only makes us better officers, it makes us better soldiers," said Intermediate Officer Candidate Josh Collins. "These are combat survival techniques that we can use in the field."

The candidates marched in tactical squad formations from their barracks to one of three testing points using grid coordinates and a map of the post.

They were timed during their movements to and from each of the testing points, and the squad with the fastest time received the highest score for the urban orienteering portion of the exercise.

At the first testing point, the candidates performed first aid for open head wounds and bleeding extremities. They also transported casualties using several carry methods and made a medical request transmission.

"They give us a lot of tasks at one time so we will be able to handle multitask situations," said Officer Candidate Christian Marks.

Upon completing the first tasks, the candidates navigated their way across post where cadre tested their knowledge of nuclear, biological and chemical weapons and ways to react when exposed to those elements.

Officer Candidate Erasmo Sandoval pulls on a pair of protective overshoes during NBC testing.

"This is skill-level-one training, and it is applicable to all military occupational specialties," said Capt. Greg Rogers, TAC officer. "All of this training is pertinent to war time, especially when dealing with Afghanistan and Iraq. They have the capabilities to use NBC weapons against us, so the threat is always there."

At the final testing site, the cadre gave the soldiers scenarios where a person was choking or unconscious, and they had to perform CPR on a dummy in order to pass the test.

"Basically we are reinforcing the candidates lifesaving skills," said Sgt 1st Class James Cook, TAC NCO. "The candidates had to prepare and teach the classes on all these topics last week, and now cadre are testing them on those tasks. It will definitely make them more proficient in the areas that we covered today."

As future officers, the candidates are taking more from squad stakes training than the knowledge of common tasks, said Officer Candidate Joseph Mickley.

"This sort of training ensures that we know and perform the same standard that we will hold our soldiers to," he said.

Close counts in hand grenade training

Grenades 'a perk to the job,' soldier says

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

A soldier lies on the ground waiting for a signal to throw his grenade.

When he gets the signal, he uses the twist, pull-pin method, then takes a peek and counts one-one thousand, two one-thousand and throws to his target and takes cover.

Soldiers of C Company, 3rd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, practiced the exercise Monday.

"The soldiers did an outstanding job," said Staff Sgt. Marvin Tookes, drill sergeant. "They all did what was required of them to graduate basic training, which is to throw two live grenades."

The drill sergeants stressed the importance of safety while on the grenade range.

"We stressed to them that their lives were in their hands," Tookes said. "One wrong move with the grenade, then we would be picking the soldier up in many different pieces."

Besides throwing the live grenades, the soldiers also went through a grenade assault course where they had the chance to earn another marksmanship badge to wear on their Class "A" and "B" uniforms.

All of the stations of the course require the soldiers to keep a low profile while throwing a dummy grenade at a targeted position, like a truck or an enemy bunker.

The soldiers also had to identify grenades as smoke, signal, concealment, riot control or fragmentation grenades.

If the soldiers completed all seven stations correctly, they earned an expert grenade badge. One miss,earned first class grenade badge, two misses earned the second-class grenade badge.

"The grenade badge is nice to have, but that's not why I joined the Army," said Pfc. Henry Melgarejo. "I joined the Army to defend my country and take out the enemy. Using grenades is one of the perks of the job."

"Everyone in our company committed to joining the Army around the time of the terrorist attacks," Farrell said. "We know what we're getting ourselves into, and we are looking forward to the day we have the opportunity to go overseas and defend our country."

Pfc. Chris Stephens

New program kicks off in Jan.

Operation CAT will offer group mentoring

Melissa House
Special to the Bayonet©

January marks the beginning of a new program for teens at Faith Middle School.

Called Operation CAT (Children and Adults Together), the program will provide group mentoring for the 16 seventh-graders on the waiting list for one-on-one mentoring.

Seven Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus volunteers meet with students once a week at Faith for one-on-one activities. Amber Mull, BBBS case worker and head of the school based programs, said although the program is only in its second year, there is potential for the mentoring to carry over from year to year.

"We're starting small," Mull said, "But we're trying to expand our programs and move into other schools."

The programs are geared toward students in kindergarten through eighth-grade.

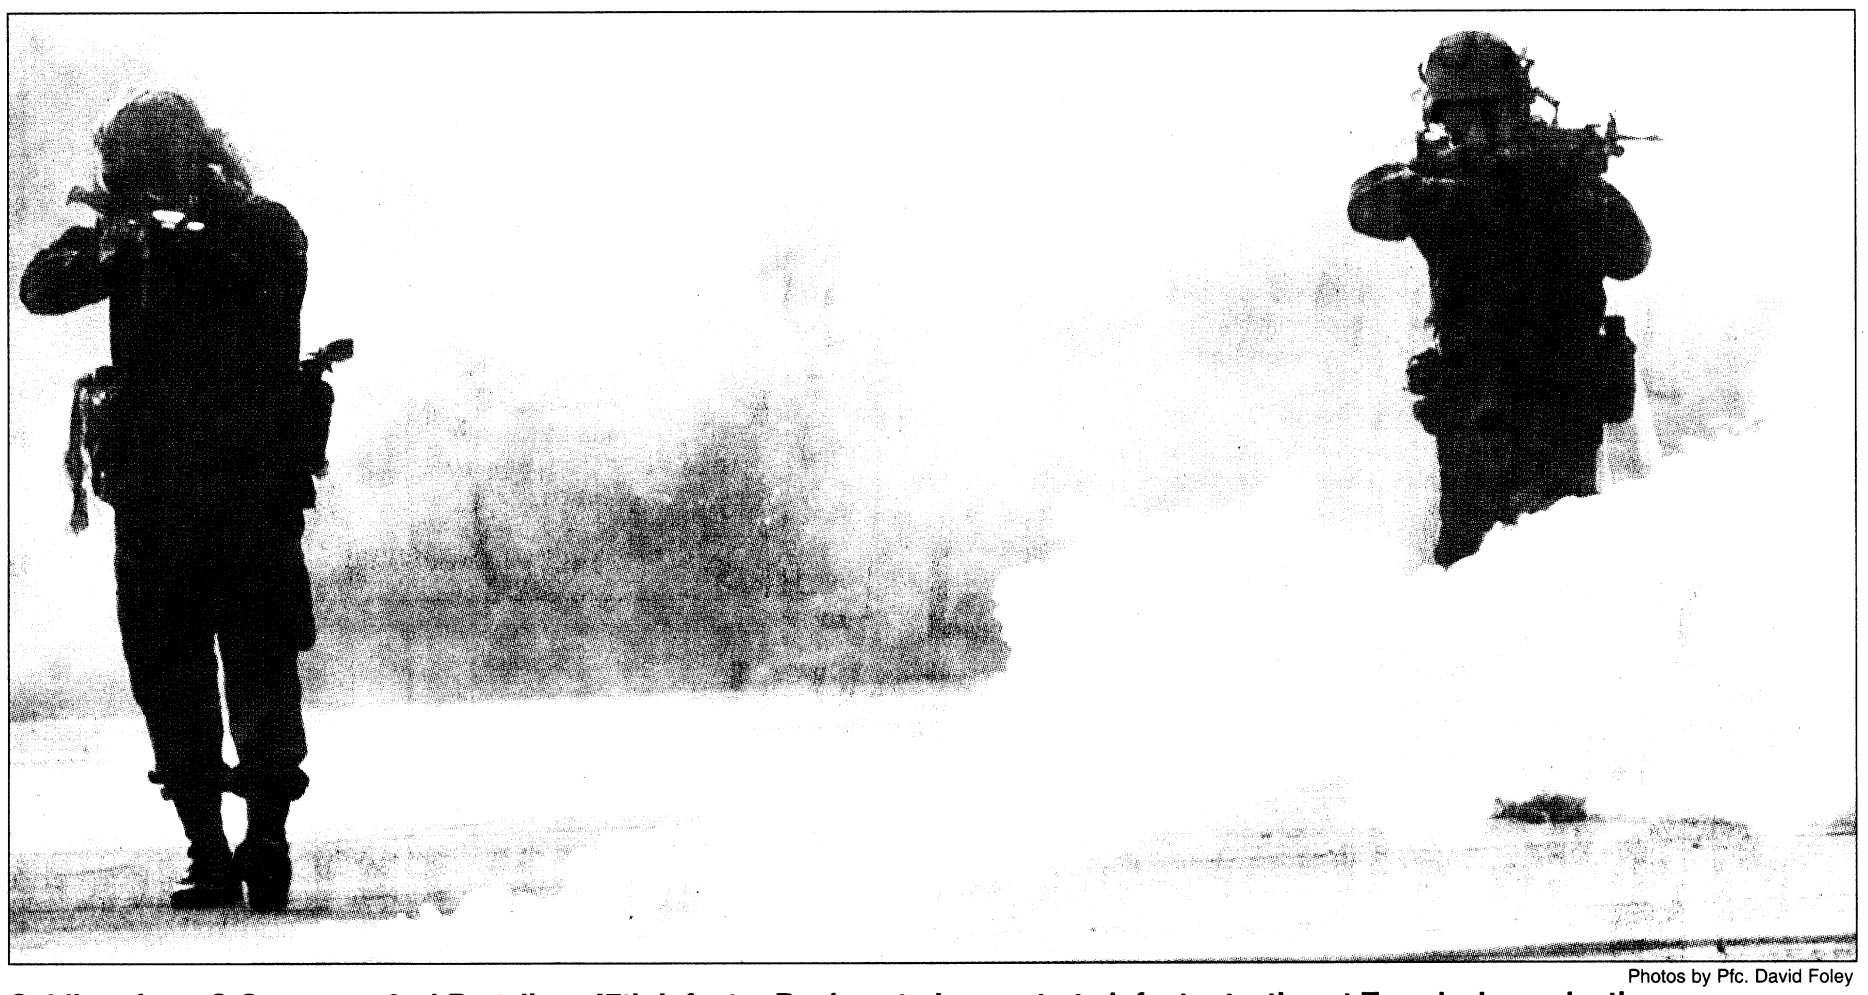
Operation CAT is the newest program offered by the Big Brothers Big Sisters of Columbus, and will require six to 10 adult mentors to meet with the seventh-graders twice a month in a group setting. The groups will meet from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. on the first and third Fridays each month, beginning Jan. 16 and continuing through the remainder of the school year.

Studies have shown that group mentoring has positive effects on academic performance and social behavior, Mull said. The groups will receive an "operations order" for a structured group activity, much like a military squad-sized mission. During the session, the adult will lead the students through the activity, which may or may not be academically oriented.

"This type of mentoring really facilitates adult-youth relationships," Mull said.

Fred McCraw, sixth-grade counselor at Faith has only good things to say about the program

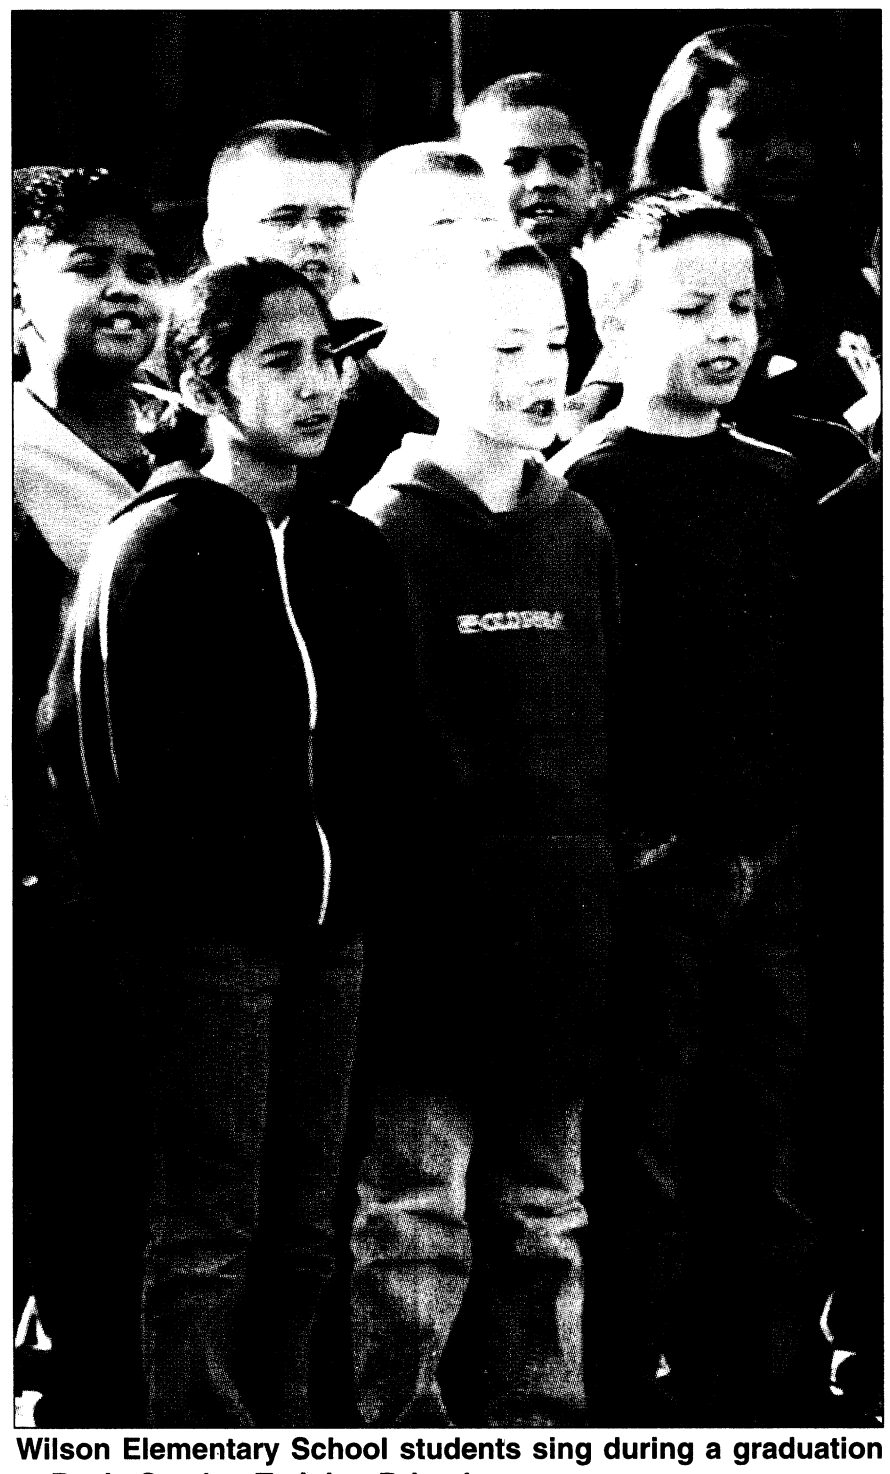
"We can see the benefits for the students in the mentoring program," McCraw said. "We have fewer disciplinary referrals, attendance is up, and the mentors are good tutors as well."



The seven current volunteers in the one-on-one program are a mixture of Fort Benning soldiers and adult family members.

"Unfortunately, we'll have an even greater need for mentors once the troops start deploying," McCraw said. "We'll lose some of our mentors and we'll have more students who need to be mentored after a parent deploys.

"The students primarily want academic help," he said. "But they also just want someone they can talk to and feel comfortable with."



The application process includes a written application, interview and a background check to ensure the quality of volunteers working with the youth.

For more information on becoming a BBBS volunteer, call Mull at 327-3760.

Wilson Elementary visits BCTB, watches graduation

The students of Wilson Elementary School and the soldiers of C Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, offered each other a helping hand Tuesday.

The fourth- and fifth-grade students volunteered to sing during the soldiers graduation ceremony to show their appreciation for the soldiers who volunteered their time to the Partners in Education program.

"The program is an excellent opportunity for the school and the Basic Combat Training Brigade to work together," said Margaret Koger, teacher of gifted education at Wilson Elementary.

In exchange for their gift of song, the students took a tour of D Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment's "starship" barracks.

The graduation ceremony, started off with simulated gunfire, grenades and mortar shells.

As the simulators rattled the children's eardrums a Bradley fighting vehicle clawed its way over a mound of dirt and cut its way through a wall of multicolored smoke.

The children seemed to enjoy the display.

"It was great when the Bradley came up over the hill and all the explosions were going off," said fifth-grader Ryan Orr, a student at Wilson Elementary.

"The program works very well because it gives the students an adult role model and teaches them the importance of helping out the community," Koger said.

The students and the soldiers take turns visiting each other monthly.

When the soldiers visit the schools, they read them a book or tutor them on their classwork.

When the students visit the soldiers, they usually take bags of goodies, such as homemade cookies or candy.

"The soldiers seem to enjoy the treats, and the students love being able to visit the soldiers and see them training," Koger said.

"All of these children have at least one family member in the military, but a lot of them don't know what their parents really do for a living, so this gives them the opportunity to see it firsthand."

"When we were asked to support Wilson Elementary in the program, we readily agreed," said Command Sgt. Maj. Karl Morgan, command sergeant major of 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment. "This is a good program because these are military kids, and a lot of their families are deployed right now, so it's good that we can provide a positive influence while they are away."

HOLIDAYS AND CHILDREN

Tips help families enjoy season

University of Georgia Cooperative Extension Service

Commercials ... layaway ... traffic in the toy store aisles. How can a parent face up to the buying frenzy to decide which toys are best and safe for their children?

A good starting place is to consider toys as tools for learning. Toys provide opportunities for play, and play is children's work. Play provides the basis for developing the child physically, socially, emotionally and intellectually. So choose toys for how they help a child grow.

A balance of toys is recommended in these categories:

Toys for active play include bicycles, tricycles, jump ropes and balls which help develop strong muscles, self-confidence and precision skills.

Toys for manipulation, such as puzzles, counting cubes and blocks are good for sorting, ordering, matching, grouping, counting and developing eye and hand coordination and small muscles. They also help children learn concepts of height, weight, shape and color.

Toys for construction include blocks, building sets and woodworking tools. They help children learn size, measurement, coordination and motor skills.

Toys for dramatic play, such as dolls, stuffed animals, dress-up clothes, play houses, trucks and kitchen utensils let children try out new behavior based on their imagination and real-life experiences. They learn how to improve relationships with others and expand social skills such as sharing, taking turns, coping with frustration and releasing emotions.

Toys for senses and experimentation help children explore the environment, sharpen their senses and understand math and science. They include items such as musical instruments, flashlights, binoculars, gardening tools and natural materials, like clay and sand.

Toys for art, such as paints, paper, crayons, poster, clay, chalkboards, goop and glarp-type materials foster creativity and build skills that lead to reading, writing and seeing reality in life.

Traditions help make holidays memorable

University of Georgia College of Agricultural and Environmental Services

Traditions are important in just about everybody's holiday celebrations.

They don't have to be anything fancy or complex — just something you do year after year to make your holidays special.

Traditions serve many purposes. They help us understand the passing of time.

Little children remember November comes before December because we celebrate Thanksgiving before Christmas.

Participating in tradition gives children a sense of importance because they want to belong — just like everyone else.

But, some parents fail to see this. They show their love by planning the "perfect holiday" for their children.

The children enjoy the holiday more when they have a part in the preparations.

When children wrap presents, bake cookies, decorate the tree and do chores around the house they understand the holiday better and feel good about themselves because they helped.

Traditions should be meaningful to everyone. There are no rules on how to establish traditions. Just try something.

If everyone likes it, try it again next year. Before you know it, you've started a tradition that adds to the holiday spirit of your family.

For more information on families, call the Georgia Extension Service in Columbus at 653-4200.

Soldiers learn investment tips

Class helps soldiers plan for retirement

Pfc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

This is the last of a five-part series that explores what soldiers learn at the financial readiness course.

Throughout the finance course, soldiers and government employees learned ways to find money to invest, different types of investment vehicles and the importance of shopping around and building a diverse portfolio.

The final class in the series focused on ways to put a plan into motion while reducing the risks of investing.

Before committing to any investment, there are certain questions investors need to ask.

"The first step in the investment process should be identifying a specific goal," said Ann Pratcher, manager of the Financial Readiness Program. "Once you have set your goals and built a financial base, you need to research the investment vehicles that will take you to that goal."

Choosing an investment vehicle can be a complicated task. There are stocks, bonds, funds, CDs and several other vehicles from which to choose, all of which have unique levels of risk and return.

Usually the level of risk will mirror the return potential, meaning low risk, low return and vice versa. This is why it is important to shop around for the highest possible return with the lowest level of risk.

There are many ways to research investments, such as magazines, newspapers, Web sites, books and other investors. When conducting research, it is important to be sure that the information is complete, accurate, objective and unbiased, Pratcher said.

"Sometimes an advertisement will be made to look like a news article, but they don't always have your best interest in mind,"she said.

One way to lower the risk of investing is to start or join an investment club.

Investment clubs let investors pool their money, making it easier to get into more expensive investment plans. They also provide everyone the opportunity to learn from the others in the club because all investments are based on a group decision. One of the negative aspects of investment clubs is that each person must accept the decision of the group even if they disagree.

"If clubs aren't the thing for you and you want more control of your investment, the internet may be right for you," Pratcher said. "The internet provides quick and easy access to all sorts of investment vehicles, but it can also be dangerous.

"I've seen a lot of soldiers lose a lot of money by trading stocks on the internet," she said. "Unless you really know what you are doing, you should seek professional assistance before investing over the internet."

Hiring a financial team is one way to lower the risk of investing.

"A financial team will be able to check out the strategies that you have chosen and determine the risk factors," Pratcher said. "They will also help you get started and assist you with any major-life changes that may occur."

As with anything else in the investment world, it is important to research a few investment teams before choosing one, Pratcher said.

"Financial planners do not need any credentials in order to start a business," Pratcher said. "Therefore, it is imperative that you examine their history before putting your faith in one. You should contact the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission to see if they are registered. If they are registered, get a list of their credentials and look into their history.

"Once you decide on an investment vehicle and the best way to get started, the only thing left to do is take action," Pratcher said. "The sooner you begin to invest the more potential you have for making money."

All the students who attended the class seemed to benefit from the experience.

"The class was wonderful," said Karen Jenkins. "It was packed with information, well organized, and it was presented by objective instructors.

"The class offered quality information without a sales pitch. I now have the ability to look at an investment vehicle and understand how that vehicle will help me reach a certain financial goal."

For more information about the financial readiness course, call Ann Pratcher at 545-5485.

ASK THE JUDGE

Capt. Claudine M. Andola
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: I am planning to fly home for the Christmas holidays, and I want to update my will before I travel. A friend told me I should also have a "living will," and I was wondering what it is and if it is something I should get.

A: An advanced medical directive is just what it sounds like: it is a set of directions you give to medical professionals stating what treatment or care you want to receive, or do not want to receive, in advance of actually requiring such care or treatment.

The state of Georgia recognizes two forms of advanced medical directives: living wills and durable healthcare powers of attorney. Although some people mistakenly believe that you must have one or the other, you can have both a Living Will and a Durable Healthcare Power of Attorney. Whether you need one or the other, or both, depends upon your current health, your family's medical history, and your personal preferences.

A living will is a document requesting the withholding or withdrawal of medical treatment in the event that you are unable to make or communicate such decisions.

For a living will to be considered, you must have a terminal condition, be in a coma with no reasonable expectation of regaining consciousness, or be in a persistent vegetative state with no reasonable expectation of regaining significant cognitive function.

The purpose of the living will is to avoid life-sustaining procedures, thereby permitting the individual to die.

Such life-sustaining procedures to be withheld and withdrawn may include, surgery, antibiotics, cardiac and pulmonary resuscitation, and respiratory support.

The living will can also expressly authorize the withholding of artificially provided food, water, and other nourishment, and it can authorize donation of organs for transplants or medical research.

So, if you are diagnosed with a terminal condition, are in a coma or a persistent vegetative state, and have no reasonable expectation of regaining consciousness or cognitive function, a living will may serve your needs. But you could have other needs that a living will is not designed to address.

For example, you might require private nurses or hospice care if you wish to die at home.

There may be some medical treatment available to you from which you are likely to suffer serious side effects.

Who will decide to hire such hospice care or to authorize the application of such medical treatment if you are unable? Your health care proxy.

A durable healthcare power of attorney affords you the opportunity to appoint an agent now, while you are healthy, who will be authorized to make decisions about your health care and medical treatment in the event that you are unable.

In addition to being obligated to follow your desires as set out in your living will, your health care proxy is also authorized to make decisions about your health care treatment, have access to your medical records, and to hire nurses or hospice care to assist you.

The health care proxy has a very powerful position, because he or she takes action regarding your medical treatment with the same authority as you would, if you were able. Any and all costs incurred as a result of such decisions are therefore your responsibility.

Finally, where do you need to have a living will? For, example, if you are stationed at Fort Benning, and your home is in New York, will a Living Will executed in Georgia control if you are injured and hospitalized in New York?

Each state has its own statutes applicable to advanced medical directives. A foreign living will, that is, one executed outside the state in which the patient is hospitalized, only applies to the extent that it fits within the laws of the state in which the patient is hospitalized.

Following our example, if you execute a Georgia living will, and during your travels home to New York you are injured and hospitalized in New York, the New York physicians will make decisions about your healthcare based upon your medical condition and the laws of New York.

If the New York physicians are made aware of your Georgia living will, they can only carry out your wishes to the extent that New York law does not conflict with Georgia law.

So, while it may been best in this example for the patient to have a New York living will, a Georgia living will is certainly better than no living will at all. A cautious person may choose to have more than one living will if he or she spends a considerable amount of time in more than one state.

Raise a pint to the holidays

Bridgett Siter
Special to the Bayonet©

Concerts and pageants and shopping and parties and shopping and more shopping — what do they want from me, blood?

Apparently so.

The Fort Benning chapter of The American Red Cross is asking me — and you! — to squeeze one more activity into our jam-packed holiday schedule. To give just one more teensy-weensy, itty-bitty gift — the gift of life.

The Red Cross and Fort Benning's Directorate of Public Safety is sponsoring a blood drive today, from 8:30 a.m. till 1 p.m. at the Provost Marshal's headquarters on the corner of Wold and Edwards. You know it as the MP station.

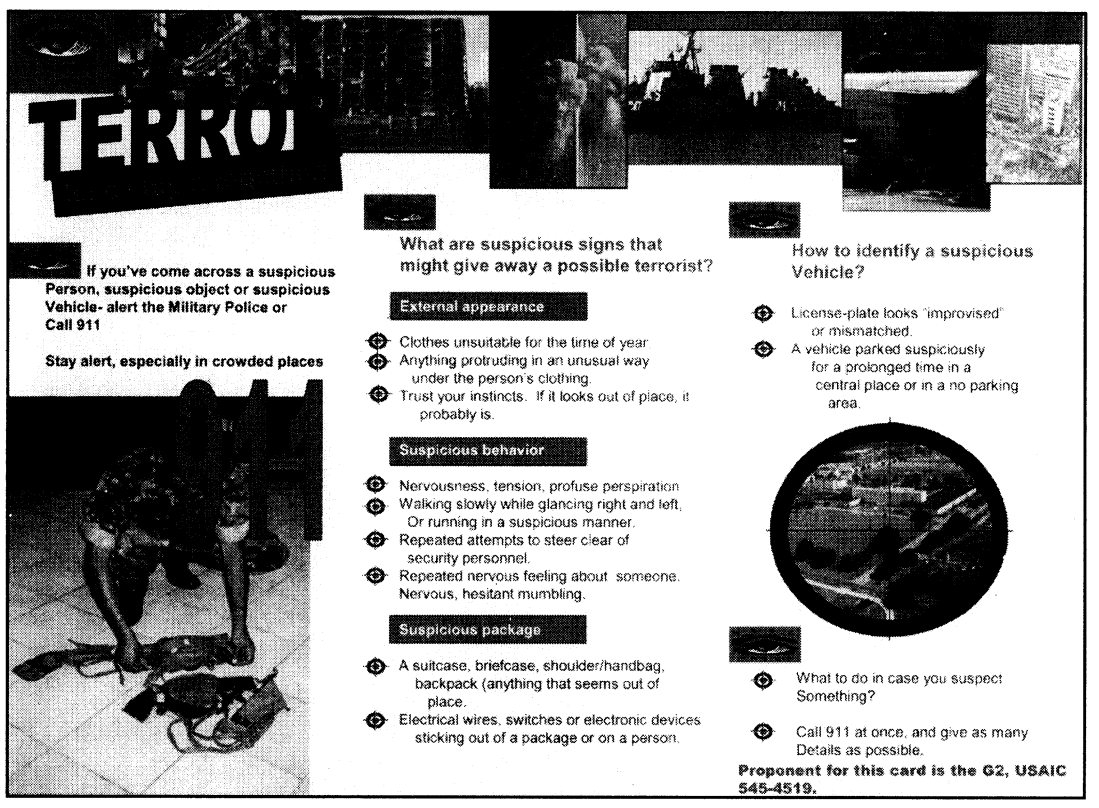
The holiday season in Georgia is typically a time of critical blood shortage.

It goes without saying that it's also the time of greatest need. Thanks-giving through New Years is the deadliest time to travel America's highways. And let's face it, a lot of our soldiers and families will be traveling those roads. Perhaps you and your family will be among them.

Just for one moment, imagine the worst. What if it's you that needs blood? What if it's one of your loved ones? What if there's not enough to go around?

Today's blood drive can go a long way toward alleviating the problem, and its success hinges on just one person. You.

Imagine, just a little of your time and a little of your blood will make someone's Christmas, someone who might not otherwise live to see New Years.



The folks from DPS — the fire department, military police and emergency medical services — are making it a friendly competition to see which department can raise the most blood. Cast your ballot — and your blood — for your favorite heroes.

You'll walk away feeling like a million dollars, and they'll give you a T-shirt to boot. It doesn't get any better than that.

So meet me at the MP station this morning or drop in on your lunch hour and give the gift of life.

It doesn't cost a dime and it won't hurt a bit.

OK, maybe just a little bit.

Loyd Author's Night breathes literacy

Loyd Elementary School

Staff Sgt. Roy Trevino helps his daughter, Bianca, during Author's Night at Loyd.

Loyd School's faculty and staff deeply believe in literacy. In fact, they eat, sleep and breathe literacy. They believe the spoken and written word contains the magic, grandeur and power of the universe, and they are eager to share their love affair with literacy, not only with their students, but with the military families of their students.

In addition, they believe everyone has a story to tell. When they decided to couple their love of literacy to their love of story, the idea of Authors' Night was born.

The Loyd faculty and staff invited their students and families to Loyd's first Authors' Night to celebrate literacy in an unusual way recently to join together to co-author compositions based on literature.

Before getting down to the serious business of composing, more than 250 people enjoyed a picnic supper the Loyd faculty provided and prepared.

After the meal, students took their families to their classrooms for a short lesson on the writing process. Prewriting in most classrooms involved talking about writing in general and reading a selection from a children's book.

Students and their families then responded by writing their own works, which were published in a variety of ways — some bound into books, others "published" by sharing aloud.

As families wrote together, the sounds of laughter and thoughtful reflection floated through Loyd's hallways. As people wrote, they shared what they had done with others.

In a fifth grade room, a mother wrote poignantly of a place that was important to her and shared her work with an audience spellbound by her words. A father's story was equally moving, as were they all.

Everyone agreed that what began as a celebration of literacy and language will probably become one of Loyd's finest annual traditions.

Turkey Trot

Becky Archilla

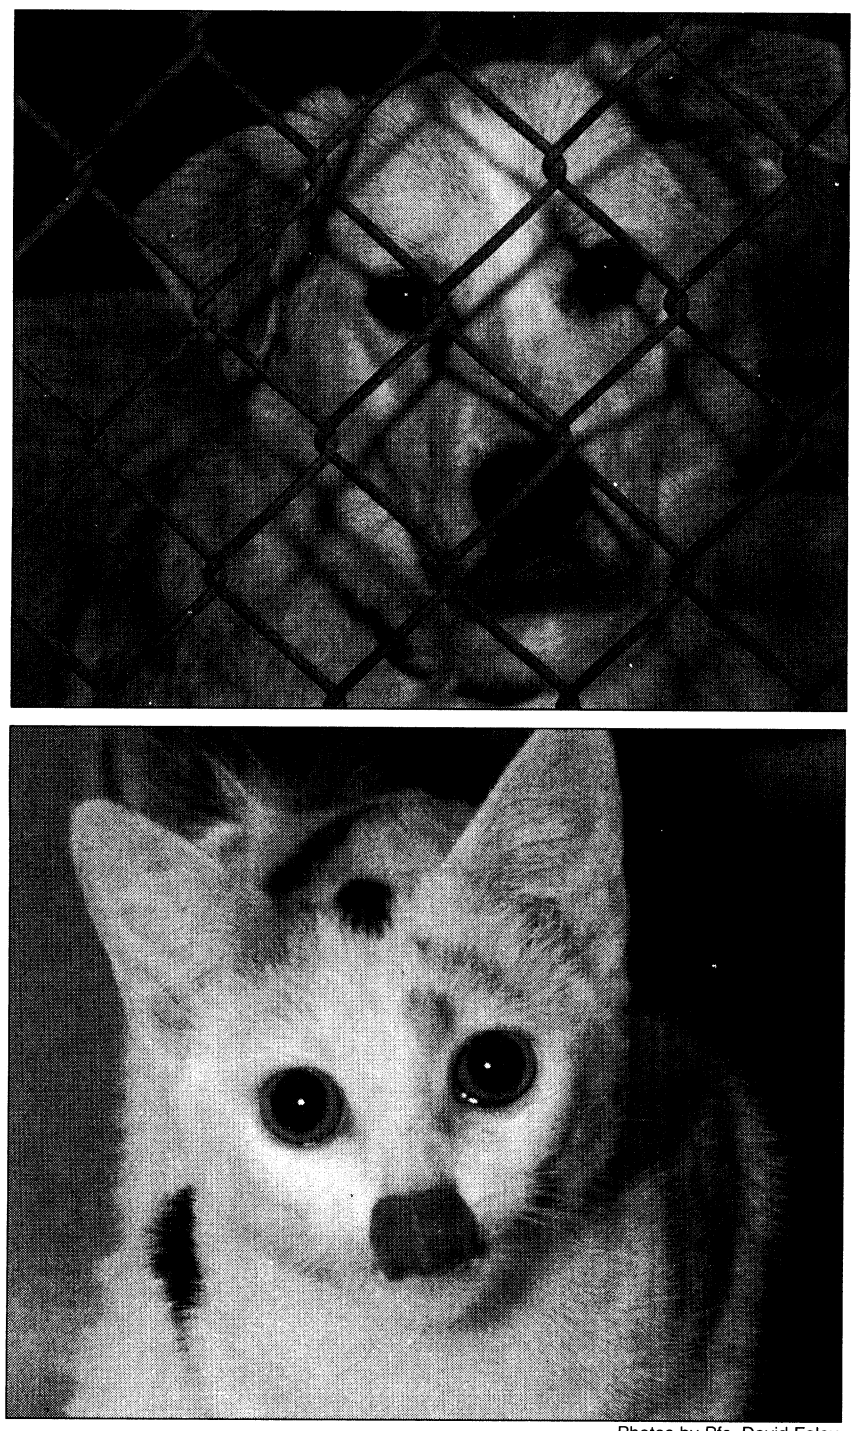
As part of their physical education class, Loyd students trotted one mile with children in their grade level, as part of the Turkey Trot. Many parents and teachers attended the event to help the students run the mile.

Loyd conducts food drive

Loyd Elementary School

The Loyd Ambassadors at Loyd Elementary School conducted a food drive from Dec. 4 through Wednesday as a community service project. The food, donated to the Fort Benning Food Locker, will benefit the military families on Fort Benning. The Loyd Ambassadors, selected by their teachers from grades three through five are the leaders at the school.

They perform tasks around the school such as, raising and lowering the flag, setting up for school wide functions, serving refreshments after ceremonies, acting as hosts and hostesses for new students, greeting dignitaries who visit the school, aiding the PE teacher in setting up for classes, and picking up trash around the school as well as on Santa Fe Road.



Community service projects are good ways to teach students responsibility and caring for others.

'Kneeling attitude' key to serving Lord

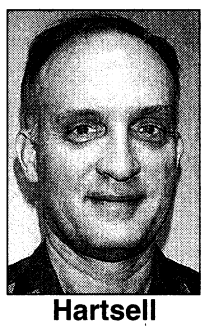
Seeking spiritual milk benefits church, believers

Chaplain (Col.) Richard Hartsell
USAIC Chaplains Office

The Christian community celebrates Advent as the coming of the Savior Jesus Christ.

Though at the original advent, the anticipation was expectant, prayerful and exciting in many ways, the Christ Child was born into a very dangerous world.

Herod had a price on the head of this child Jesus and wanted to kill him.



There will always be a tension between good and evil. There will always be those who will want to be "god" rather than submit to Almighty God.

Many will want power, greed and avarice to trump love, humility and sacrifice.

The message of Christ was the antithesis of this. His message essentially was one of humility, meekness and service. That is why he prayed regularly.

The Magi that visited the baby Jesus "bowed down" to worship him (Matt 2:11). They were kneeling before the one that only meek people would see.

REFLECTIONS

Hartsell

In a small cathedral outside Bethlehem is the supposed birthplace of Jesus.

Behind a high altar in the church is a cave, a little cavern lit by lamps.

You can enter the main edifice and admire the ancient church. You an also enter the quiet cave where a star embedded in the floor recognizes the birth of the king.

However, to get in, one must stoop. The door is so low one can't go in standing up.

I believe the same is true of the Christ and our relationship to him. One can't go in standing up. One can see the world standing tall, but to witness the savior, one has to get on one's knees.

In the first gospel sermon ever preached, the apostle Peter directed us to "repent" or to humble ourselves, turn from our sins and be truly sorry for our wrongdoings.

This isn't an easy thing to do. It takes a meek heart, gentle spirit and a "kneeling attitude." The Bible doesn't command us to kneel every time we pray. There are instances, however, when Christ and others knelt to humble themselves before God, the Father (Matthew 7:14; Luke 22:41; Acts 7:60; 9:40; 21:5; Ephesians 3:14.)

Think about it. It is a bit difficult to be arrogant when one is on one's knees!

Whether we pray on our knees or not, the message here is that we honor the coming of Christ by carrying an attitude of "kneeling" each day we serve our Lord.

That service should be characterized by humility, service, sacrifice and repentance.

Christ came to serve, not to be served (Matt 2:28). God's peace be yours this holiday season.

CHAPEL NOTES

Holiday Service Schedule:

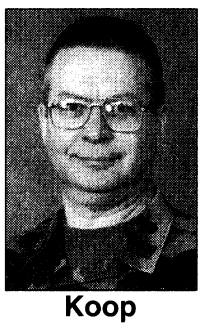
People can avoid 'holiday blues'

Chaplain (Maj.) Raymond Koop
Family Life Ministries Center



For many Americans, the holiday season is a difficult time with mixed feelings of festivity and frenzy.

Steve Arterburn gives 10 helpful ways to beat the holiday blues:

1. Connect with people. Don't isolate yourself or wait to be invited. Make plans to be with others this season.

2. Set realistic goals. Organize your time, make lists and set priorities. Don't dwell on the things that don't matter.

3. Make a budget and keep it. Going into debt will drive away any joy the season may bring. Be creative. Give of your time and abilities.

Koop

4. Reconnect with old friends. Write a letter. Make a phone call. If you can, visit.

5. Stay spiritually connected. God's love, light and message are the reasons for the season. "Don't be afraid," (Luke 2:10).

6. Get plenty of rest. Too much eating, drinking and partying will foil a good night's rest. Arterburn said, "The more worn out you get, the more susceptible you are to depression and discouragement."

7. Get out of your rut. Don't be enslaved to past traditions. Try new things.

8. Don't overindulge. Excess leads to guilt and remorse. Use moderation.

9. Focus on your blessings. Don't wallow in self pity or dwell on the negatives.

10. Invest in others. Help someone this season. Volunteer. Your burden will become lighter when you invest in those around you.

Are you feeling down or blue? Free counseling is available. Call the Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center at 545-1760 or e-mail raymond.koop@benning.army.mil.

"Let us then approach the throne of grace with confidence, so that we may receive mercy and find grace to help us in our time of need."

Road Dogs squeak by Bulls in tournament

Last second two-point play not enough

Sgt. William A. Graves
Bayonet assistant editor

The Bulls gave the Road Dogs an early Christmas present in the first round of the Holiday Basketball Tournament Monday at Keifurt Gym.

Down 51-48 with 13 seconds remaining, the Bulls, from B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, brought the ball up the court with hopes of sending the game into overtime. However, they took an easy layup with a few seconds left instead of a three pointer, and the clock expired — Road Dogs 51, Bulls 50.

"We changed to man-to-man defense at the end to make the three-pointer harder to convert," said TJ Smith, 104th Transportation Company and Road Dog's big man. "That opened up a cheap, layup basket for them they couldn't refuse."

That trap propelled the Road Dogs to the next round of the tournament.

"We played on raw talent tonight rather than with fundamentals," said Road Dog's coach Carlton Glenn. "Once we mix the talent with the fundamentals, we'll be an unstoppable force."

The talent produced a balanced first half that ended in a 28-28 tie. Road Dogs' Justin Smith and Justin Short scored 6 points and Fred Savage added 7 to counter the Bulls' Xavier Fleming's 11 and Eric Starworth's 10.

The second half was as nip and tuck as the first. Savage and Smith scored another 6 and Justin Hamilton added the same amount for the Road Dogs. Bulls' Phillippe Blanding got into the action with 12 points, and Starworth contributed 6 and Fleming, 5.

"Coming off football season, it's good to get the win," Smith said. "It's one we had to fight for."

The Road Dogs were one game away from the championship in football, and they hope to take it to the next level in basketball when the regular season starts in January.

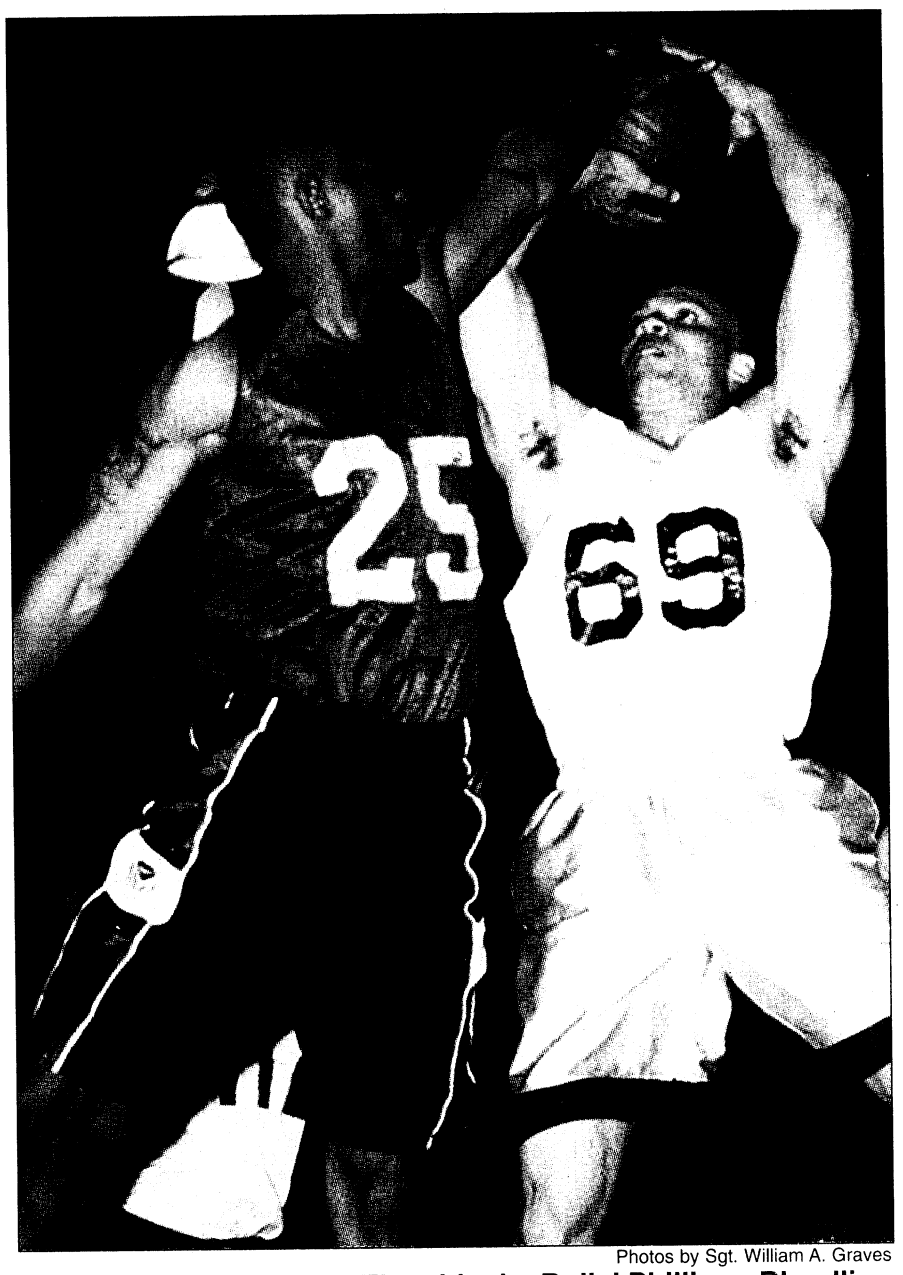
"Coming off the street and playing like this without any practice is a good sign that when the season comes around, we'll do fine," Smith said. "We'll have to work on our wind and be in shape to play a solid 40 minutes without having to substitute every three or four minutes."

The key to the victory was shooting and controlling the ball well, he said.

"We're not a run-and-gun team, but we can run the floor with anyone if we need to," Smith said. "As long as we control the tempo, there's nothing we can't achieve."

Given the high operation tempo caused by the ever-present possibility of deployment, the team is sure to have a good time on the court, win or lose, Glenn said.

"It's a great morale booster for not only our team, but for teams all across post who compete," Glenn said. "It's an excellent way to relieve stress and come prepared for work the next day."



Three Road Dogs fight Bulls' Eric Starworth for a board.

Another dividend of intramural basketball is how it reinforces the one-team, one-fight Army mentality, the Bulls' Fleming said.

"I had fun playing with the guys from the 104th," Fleming said. "It's always interesting to meet guys from around post who love the game as much as we do. It builds Fort Benning cohesion and reinforces the Army of One concept."

Sledgehammers crush Ammo Dawgs, 57-41

Defense, rebounds key to downfall

The Ammo Dawgs came into the Holiday Basketball Tournament looking for redemption from their loss in the intramural flag football championship game. However, the Sledgehammers had different ideas for them.

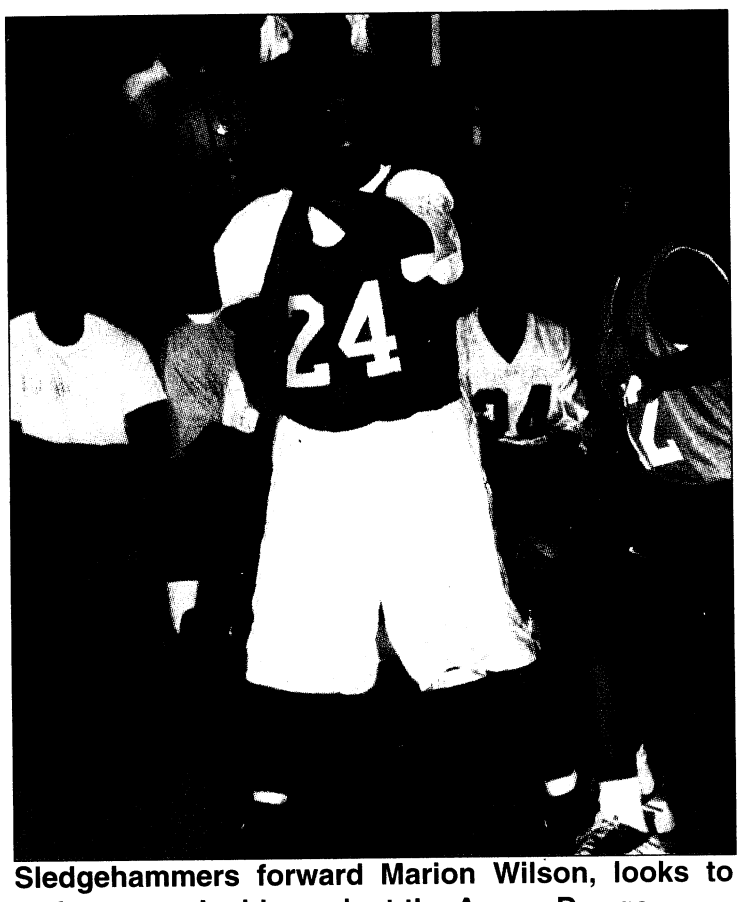
The Kelley Hill Dining Facility's Sledgehammers smashed the 608th Ordnance Company Ammo Dawgs, 57-41, with aggressive interior play in first-round action Monday at Audie Murphy Gym.

"Our offense was great," said Anthony Stewart, Sledge - hammers' forward. "We made our shots and got much needed offensive rebounds."

The Ammo Dawgs could not get their game together the whole night. Throughout the game, they missed shots from point-blank range.

"They killed us on the glass because we didn't box out," said Marcus Green, Ammo Dawgs' guard. "It's bad when they get three or four rebounds on the offensive side of the glass."

The Sledgehammers opened the first half with a "run and gun offense," trying to wear out their opponents.



"We felt if we could get out there and run the floor, we would come out with a victory," said Blakley Jones, Sledgehammers' forward. "Sometimes, though, we go faster than we can go, and that is what helped them stay in the game. If we slow down our game a little, we'll blow every team out of the gym."

The Sledgehammers took a 24-13 lead into halftime and tried to figure out a way to slam the door on the Ammo Dawgs chances at winning the game.

"Our game plan was to keep boxing out and deny them on all entry passes," Stewart said. "We wanted them to take the outside shots because we knew they might make three out of every 10 3-pointers. Their 3-point percentage was not that great, but then again, neither was their lay-up percentage."

However, the Ammo Dawgs came out in the second half to put up a fight, starting the half with an 8-2 run led by forward Randy Ballard, who led the team with 9 points.

"The run got us back into the game," Green said. "But we got too fancy with some of our passes trying to show we had skills when, instead, we should've made the easy pass to get the bucket."

Sledgehammers forward Marion Wilson, looks to make a pass inside against the Ammo Dawgs.

The Sledgehammers put the finishing choke on the Ammo Dawgs with about 10 minutes left in the game and never had a lead of less than 12 points.

"We missed the easy ones all night," Green said. "If you can't make the easy shots, then how can you expect to win ballgames? There is no excuse for missing a lay-up."

Stewart led the Sledgehammers in scoring with 17 points, 12 of which came in the second half, and Jones added 15 points.

"We have to play the same game we played against the Ammo Dawgs to be successful once league plays come around," Stewart said. "We'll be a better team then, than we are now."

AMU marksmen chosen as shooters of year

USA Shooting honors soldiers for performance

Paula J. Randall Pagan
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Three infantry soldiers with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have been selected by USA Shooting as shooters of the year in their respective disciplines. USA Shooting is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

Sgt. 1st Class James T. Graves won the Shotgun Shooter of the Year title, Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski was selected as International Pistol shooter for 2002 and Staff Sgt. Jason A. Parker was named International Rifle Shooter of the Year.

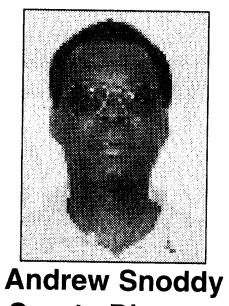
Graves, who won the Bronze Medal in Skeet at the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia, had an outstanding year in 2002. He won the Gold Medal in Skeet at the prestigious World Cup Final in Lonato, Italy, where he won the title of "Champion of Champions." Graves also brought home individual and team Gold Medals in Skeet from the World Cup in Santo Domingo, Dominican Republic, where he won an Olympic Quota Slot for the United States at the 2004 Olympics in Athens, Greece.

He also received a Silver Medal in Skeet at the Sydney, Australia, World Cup. The resident of Cusseta, Ga., also received the Gold Medal in Skeet in the World Championship Team Trials and a team Silver Medal in Skeet at the World Championships in Lahti, Finland.

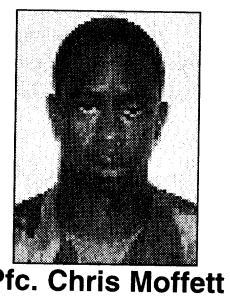
Graves also got three Gold Medals in Skeet at the Pan-American Games Team Trials.

Szarenski, a 2000 Olympic Free Pistol shooter, was also a member of the U.S. World Championship Team for Free, Air, Center Fire and Standard Pistol.

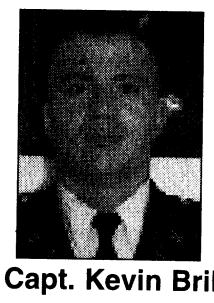
At the World Championships, he won an Olympic Quota Slot for the United States in Air Pistol.



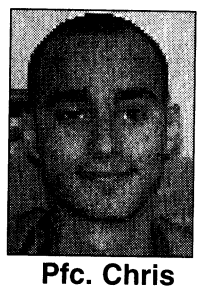
The Seale, Ala., resident won a Gold Medal in Air Pistol and two Silver Medals in Center Fire Pistol and Standard Pistol during the World Championship Team Trials. Szarenski also won the 2002 Free Pistol National Championship and got the Bronze Medal in Air Pistol and Center Fire Pistol at the National Championships.



He took the Gold Medal in Free Pistol and the Silver Medal in Air Pistol at the Pan-American Games Team Trials.



A 2000 Olympic Air Rifle shooter, Parker became a world champion in 2002 when he won the Gold Medal in Air Rifle at the World Championships in Lahti, Finland. At the Atlanta, Ga., World Cup, Parker not only received the Gold Medal, he also won an Olympic Quota Slot for the United States in Air Rifle.



The Columbus resident won Gold Medals in Air Rifle and 300-Meter Standard Rifle, and a Bronze Medal in Free Rifle at the World Championship Team Trials and a Gold Medal in Air Rifle at the Pan-American Games Team Trials. Parker won the Air Rifle and 300-Meter Standard Rifle National Championships and brought home three Gold Medals, two Silver Medals and broke a world record in Air Rifle in matches across Europe.

Aerobics classes — The Officers' Club Fitness Center is offering fitness classes that include step aerobics, toning, abdominal exercises and circuit training.

Enrollment is open to active duty, family members, retired military and Department of Defense civilians. Classes are 5 to 6:15 p.m. Monday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday and 9 to 10 a.m. Saturday.

Classes are $25 a month for members and $30 nonmembers. For more information, call 687-0871.

Self-defense classes — Youth Services Tae Kwon Do classes have begun. The classes will be in the Youth Services Gym, Building 1055 and will be open to youth family members ages 6 to 18, of active-duty, retired military and DoD civilians.

All students must be registered with the Child and Youth Services Central Registration Office, located on Custer Road in Building 11304, prior to signing up for classes at YS Building 1056. For information on class days and times, call Youth Services at 545-3070.

Competitive shooting — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit is looking for shooters.

The unit is putting out its annual call for soldiers who are interested in competing in pistol competitions during the summer of 2003.

For more information, call 545-7022 or 545-3893 or e-mail: Charles.Gibbs@usarec.army.mil.

Archery club — The Fort Benning Archers are now accepting memberships to the archery club located on Aldridge Road. The yearly memberships allow archers full use of the facilities including a key to the indoor range. Membership costs are $15 for military, $35 for civilians and $45 for families. For information, call A.S. Morgan at 327-8375.

Bass Club — The Bass Club of Fort Benning is accepting applications for new members. It is open to active-duty military and family members 16 and older.

It is also open to retired military and Department of Defense civilians and family members 16 and older.

The club meets the second and fourth Tuesday of the month at Faith Middle School.

For more information, call 685-4975.

Geisinger

GENERAL PSYCHIATRIST
Geisinger Medical Center

Geisinger is seeking a BC/BE general adult psychiatrist as a colleague in a medically oriented practice. Join an expanding 7-member tertiary care group practice in the Danville/ Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania, area. Our main facility, Geisinger Medical Center, is a 437-bed teaching hospital with 75 specialties. This very diverse practice contains a good deal of variety. It encompasses inpatient psychiatry with 50 beds, consultation/liaison psychiatry, a busy outpatient practice, adult and adolescent partial programs, and community outreach. We offer unique opportunities for teaching within our multi-disciplinary mental health team. This is a very flexible position, as our new partner will have the opportunity to incorporate creativity and ideas into the group practice, blending the needs of the group with the talents/interests of the applicant.

Central Pennsylvania offers a scenic, secure lifestyle near the Pocono Mountains. There are many colleges and universities that lend a blend of culture and numerous activities to the area. We are just off I-80 and only 2-to-3 hours from New York City, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, D.C. Geisinger offers a competitive salary and excellent benefits, including generous vacation, 3 weeks CME with a CME stipend, and full medical malpractice coverage. AAE-M/F/D/V- 0207.mn
