3rd Brigade leaves for NTC

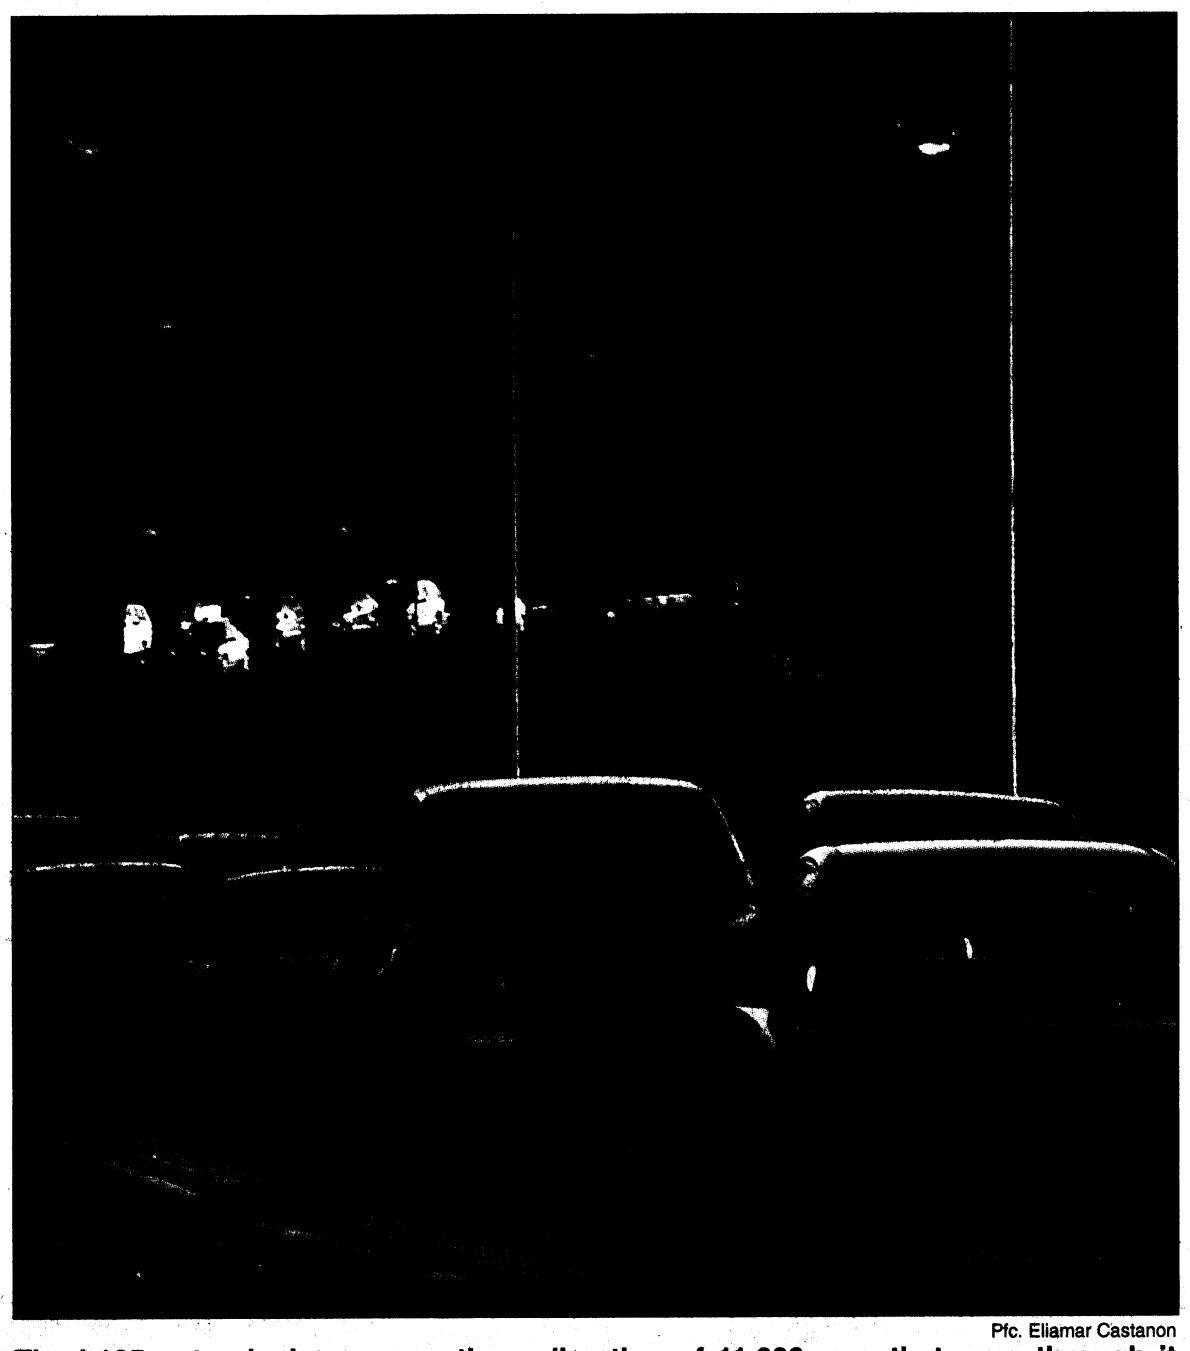
Rotation to prepare unit for deployments

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Soldiers from 3rd Brigade returned from two weeks of holiday leave and began another deployment. They're heading out to face what the brigade commander, Col. Steven Salazar, called "probably the best armed force in the world."

The brigade will participate in a training rotation against other U.S. Soldiers from the Opposing Force at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif.

Although the training and maintenance efforts involved in preparing for a monthlong deployment to yet another desert are not most popular with Soldiers, Salazar said he was proud of the Soldiers and their families.



"The last six months (since the brigade returned from Operation Iraqi Freedom) have been difficult and it's been incredibly hard work," Salazar said. "But it's exactly why Time Magazine named (the Soldiers) 'Person of the Year.'"

Salazar said the unit redeployed with a shift in mission to reconstitution, a period of rest and refit used as far back as World War II. Once a unit reached a culmination point in combat, it was pulled off to rest and refit and prepare for the next mission.

With the addition of the NTC requirement, the brigade had a small dose of rest and a large dose of refit as the Soldiers had to perform maintenance on some 2,400 vehicles that sat idle for the nearly 13 months

Construction causes delays

The I-185 gate closing causes the redirection of 11,000 cars that pass through it daily. "When we developed the traffic plan, we focused first on getting people on post, then on keeping traffic flow throughout the post," said Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, provost marshal. "What we did not anticipate was the tremendous volume of traffic leaving the Main Post area between 4:30 and 6 p.m." MPs directed traffic at the intersection rather than relying on the traffic light, which has helped, Finnegan said. Speed bumps were removed from the outbound lanes at the Custer and Lumpkin roads' access control points to ease traffic flow. Plans are in the works to open Marne Road at Hwy. 27 Northbound from 4 to 6 p.m. to help move traffic leaving Kelley Hill. Everyone leaving post during peak departure times needs to review all the ways available to leave the installation, Finnegan said.

Deputy to get star

Fort Benning's deputy commander, Col. Stephen Layfield, will be promoted to brigadier general at a 3 p.m. ceremony today on York Field.

"The fact I am fortunate enough to be selected as a general officer is a privilege and an honor," Layfield said. "I take this with the utmost seriousness of commitment to the Army.

"I am committed to this country, this Army, the Soldiers and their families," he said. "With this promotion comes a rededication of my commitment."

"I've learned so much about being an aide and leadership just by watching his leadership style and dealing with problems," said 1st Lt. Kristian Yun-Thayer, Layfield's aide de camp. "In my opinion, you have leaders and examples of leaders, and he exemplifies leadership in every aspect of his life."

Actually, becoming a general officer wasn't something Layfield expected to happen when he started out his life in the Army. Layfield said he didn't even expect to make the Army a career. But being part of something bigger than himself made his future clearer every year.

During his time in the military, Layfield said he's also seen changes for the better in the Soldiers joining the ranks.

"The single greatest change I've seen since the day I came in (the Army) 26 years ago is the quality of Soldiers improving," he said. "The technology is good, but it pales in comparison to the Soldiers and leaders today. We are the best and

Drill sergeants lead way straight to Middle East

NCOs to train new Iraqi army soldiers

Spc. Brian Trapp

Drill sergeants spend their time training America's newest Soldiers to be the force protecting our nation. Now, a whole company of drill sergeants has volunteered to go to Iraq and train a new army to protect the recently freed nation.

B Company, 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment, Basic Combat Training Brigade, is ready to deploy to support the war on terrorism.

"It's bittersweet to get to go," said Staff Sgt. Robert Fortenberry, drill sergeant, B Co. 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt. "Finally, (I get to do my) part, 'cause I've been on the trail pretty much the whole war. The way I see it is the faster we get these guys trained, the quicker everyone comes back."

The company is projected to deploy for six months to a year, tasked with training the new Iraqi army.

"I think it's a good idea to keep us as a company instead of people from here and there," said Sgt. 1st Class Hubert Wright, senior drill sergeant. "When they keep us together, we've already been working together for at least a year, and we're pretty tight-knit because of all the hours we work. Cohesion makes a more successful deployment."

"We graduated a cycle in early November," Fortenberry said. "Then two weeks later, we all got called in to the office and were notified. It was a no-brainer — everyone wanted to go do their part from the beginning."

Keeping the whole company together for the deployment also gives the battalion the

THANK YOU AND GOODBYE

A farewell to friends

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

I turned my back for just a minute, and they're gone.

Some of my favorite people saw the end of 2003 as a good time to bid this world adieu. I reckon that's just the way it happened.

My family and I went home for the holidays and returned to discover that some of our friends had gone on without us. Not that we wanted to go with them, mind you, but it would've been nice to say goodbye. To say thank you.

When the elderly die with their mental faculties sharp as ever, I often think they choose their timing. Time to let go. Time to move on.

Though I really thought Alfonso Biggs, Mr. Biggs to his "youngers" — and everybody was his younger — would stick around a little while longer. He would've been 100 Feb. 14, Valentines Day — entirely appropriate since he was such a sweetheart. There were those planning to fuss over him on his birthday, and Mr. Biggs never liked that sort of thing. I suspect he decided to skip it.

He was the authority on the history of race relations in Columbus. The grandson of slaves, he grew up in the segregated South. He saw it all.

He knew Fort Benning when it was Camp Benning. He served as a driver and a cook for some of our early commanders and three of our presidents, including FDR, who convinced Biggs to accompany him to Hyde Park for a while where he dished up his famous "Country Captain."

And he watched Fort Benning being built. He sat in the stands during Gowdy Field's heyday, when the black Soldiers who built the field were forbidden to play there. He knew which housing areas were relegated for "colored Soldiers."

Mr. Biggs spoke very matter-of-factly about the way things were, and he had an incredibly positive opinion about the state of race relations in the 21st century.

"That was then; this is now. Life is good," he said.

Mr. Biggs was buried Jan. 2, the same day retired Sgt. 1st Class Elwood Gibson was laid to rest in the Fort Benning Cemetery.

I knew Mr. Gibson well, though I probably never spoke more than 10 words to him. I knew he served in three wars and raised a very fine family. Those two facts speak volumes about him. What more did I need to know?

Gibson's twin sons, Alan and André, are Soldiers here at Fort Benning. Alan and his family live two doors down from mine. Our children play together. My youngest girl, Mckenzie, claims Ariel Gibson as her very best friend in the whole wide world.

Ariel's grandfather was not a wealthy man, but he was rich beyond measure. He left a legacy of love that will last for generations.

You see, despite the prejudice Elwood Gibson knew in the early days of his career (He was a "black Soldier." Everything he was and everything he did was defined by the color of his skin.) He rejected racism and raised his children to see the good in all people.

And the Gibson kids raised the Gibson grandkids to be loving and kind and accepting. They'll raise their children to do the same.

That is Elwood Gibson's legacy.

Nellie Nearen passed away Dec. 27. You may not have known her by name, but if you've lived on Fort Benning for any length of time, you've seen her here and there and everywhere. Miss Nellie got around, because she liked to take care of business, and her business was taking care of people.

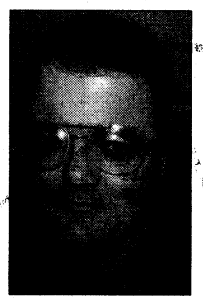
The 80-year-old widow of a retired Soldier, Miss Nellie was born in Vienna, Austria, and survived the German and Russian occupations.

She had no family to speak of, so she adopted a great big one. It consisted mostly of Soldiers and Soldiers' families, but it was never limited.

She took care of nearly 20 families in Alabama, families in need of food and clothes. She took care of them regularly, even when failing health and eyesight made her depend on friends to cart her to and fro.

"She gave and gave and gave. She wouldn't take a thing, and she wouldn't talk about what she did," said one of her friends. "She was a hero of Fort Benning."

I couldn't have said it better.



Nearen listed among her closest friends many Fort Benning commanders. In fact, the names of her pallbearers reads like a list of former Riverside residents: Hendrix, Ernst, Wetzel, White ... . They came from far and wide to pay tribute to the little lady who graced Fort Benning with goodness for more than 35 years.

But I wasn't there. Like Mr. Biggs and Ariel's grandfather, Miss Nellie snuck out while I was away. So here are my "thank yous" and "goodbyes."

Our corner of the world is truly a better place because they were here for a short while.

Courtesy is contagious

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Like a child returning to school after the holidays, I sat behind the wheel of my truck on the verge of tears as I tried to fight its seemingly automatic and surely inevitable commute back to work.

Thoughts of my daughter tucked in bed with a big grin and one more day of vacation wasn't helping either.

It wasn't the thought of work that troubled me as much as the thought of facing the reality that the Interstate 185 gate would be closed for eight months.

It was shortly after passing the St. Mary's exit I got one of those feelings that I should have taken that exit. But it was too late. I was stuck.

I waited patiently in the right lane and resisted the urge to move to the left lane with the other drivers who seemed to have no regard for the fact that that lane was ending and their eventual merge would only add to the mess of traffic.

A normally 20-25 minute ride became 50-60 minutes. The ride home was equally time consuming.

It was interesting Monday walking around Infantry Hall and riding in the elevators, as I overheard bits and pieces of ideas around the Exit 1 mess.

Those residing on post seemed indifferent.

Those with ideas, though, would have traded Grandma's prize-winning fried chicken recipe before divulging their plans.

I now take an alternate route, and if you e-mail me, I might send you my Grandma's prize-winning recipe for fried chicken.

Meanwhile, I have an idea. Let's all start an alternative lifestyle. No not that one. This one just requires drivers to use courtesy and common sense at least until August.

Try alternating turns moving into or out of traffic, such as at the on-ramps and off-ramps of exits 1A and 1B or at yield and stop signs where now there is an unusually high amount of traffic.

I think wearing mittens might be another good idea. Friendly waves are always appreciated and often contagious.

Together, I know we can make it through the spring and summer. Follow me! Uh, ... on second thought, follow somebody else. I'm sure my detour is not a good one.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The combat airborne Soldier deserves the best parachute for mass jumps, but ATPS (Advanced Tactical Parachute System) is not the best parachute.

Not all combat jumps can be dropped at low altitude. If a jumper has total parachute failure at 500 feet, he will hit the ground in a few seconds and will not have adequate time to deploy his reserve parachute.

Free falling (skydiving) from high altitudes (due to problems), I have opened my parachute at 500 feet, or less than three seconds from the ground. Higher altitude jumps expose the paratrooper to more enemy fire, because the lower rate of descent results in a longer hang time.

Without excessive loads, the huge size of the chute's main canopy is more exposed to horizontal wind velocity that appears to carry the jumper — without the ability to reduce speed by steering into the wind — to a much greater landing impact. The extra weight and bulk of the main parachute will also be a problem, adding to the jumpers' load and creating seating problems on the aircraft.

The increased packing time will require more parachute riggers to repack ATPS. This will cost the taxpayer for many years. Para-Flite appears to continue deceiving and pressuring civilian, military, political and media personnel to support ATPS.

This year, Fort Benning raised more than $724,000 for the Combined Federal Campaign.

This is unprecedented in the records of previous campaigns.

Thanks to all of you — our leaders, Soldiers, civilians, family members and alumni.

You showed what a giving, caring community this is.

As we close down the office and return the staff back to their units, I just want to say thanks to all of you for making this campaign the huge success it was.

It's all about teamwork, and there is no better team than you.

Benning's tax center to open doors Jan. 21

Shop to give post headstart on taxes

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Tax Center's grand opening is scheduled for Jan. 21. The center will provide Soldiers and their families with free tax services throughout the tax-filing period.

The staff at the tax center, which is comprised of Soldiers, civilian employees and volunteers, is being trained by representatives of the Internal Revenue Service and state tax representatives.

Each staff member will be required to pass a test before working on anyone's tax forms.

They will be filing federal 1040EZ, 1040A and 1040 returns from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Thursdays.

They will also provide state tax filing services.

Ann Pratcher, Financial Readiness Program manager, said Soldiers should wait for the tax center to open before filing their taxes because it is the best way for them to have their taxes prepared and they will get as much money back as legally possible.

Pratcher said some of the "fly-by-night" agencies that are filing taxes off post are either charging Soldiers exorbitant rates or using illegal tactics to get a higher return.

Carrie Snyder, one of the employees at the tax center, said the only way someone can get a larger tax return than what the Fort Benning Tax Center can get them is to file the forms incorrectly.

Snyder, who volunteered last year, saw firsthand what can happen when people use less-than-reputable organizations to file their taxes.

She said one of the Soldiers who filed his taxes at the Fort Benning Tax Center last year had used another agency in 2002 and felt the repercussions in 2003.

He was supposed to pay about $300 in 2002, but the company that filed his taxes lied on the forms to get him a return of nearly $1,000.

When the Soldier filed his taxes in 2003, he ended up having to pay the money back instead of getting a return, Snyder said.

Such situations are not uncommon with companies that file tax forms for profit.

She has worked with Soldiers who filed their taxes through "instant refund" companies and lost more than they planned.

"Instant refunds are not actually refunds," Pratcher said. "They are loans in anticipation of what they think the return will be.

"If the return is not as much as anticipated, (the customer) is required to pay back the difference."

The tax center is a great way for Soldiers to save money and make sure their taxes are filed correctly, Pratcher said, because the employees are trained and the services are free.

Pratcher also has advice for those who are getting a return this year.

"Decide what to do with the money ahead of time," she said. "If you have debt, it is a good idea to use one-third to pay down debt, put one third into a savings account and spend one-third on something fun."

Pratcher said even though people want to get the largest return possible, getting an exceptionally large return can reveal a flaw.

"People who are getting really big refunds should look at the number of exemptions they are claiming throughout the year," she said. "If they don't claim enough exemptions, they are making an interest-free loan to Uncle Sam."

Pratcher said by claiming more exemptions on a W2 form, a person can put the extra money into a savings account and earn interest on it throughout the year, rather than letting the government have it.

CLOSER LOOK

Soldiers should take the following documents with them to the Tax Center

- Valid active duty, retiree, or dependent ID card.
- Current Social Security card for self and any dependents.
- A voided check if the Soldier wishes to have refund directly deposited.
- Any W2s, 1098s, 1099s (-R, -DIV, -INT, etc.)

Army stop loss affects deployed troops

Soldiers in Iraq to face extensions under restrictions

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — The Army's expansion of the stop loss/stop movement program is expected to affect about 7,000 active-duty Soldiers deployed in support of Operations Enduring Freedom and Iraqi Freedom.

Col. Elton M. Manske, chief of the Army's Enlisted Division, said the expansion, to be announced "within days," will affect only Soldiers already in theater who have upcoming service expiration dates or approved or scheduled retirement dates.

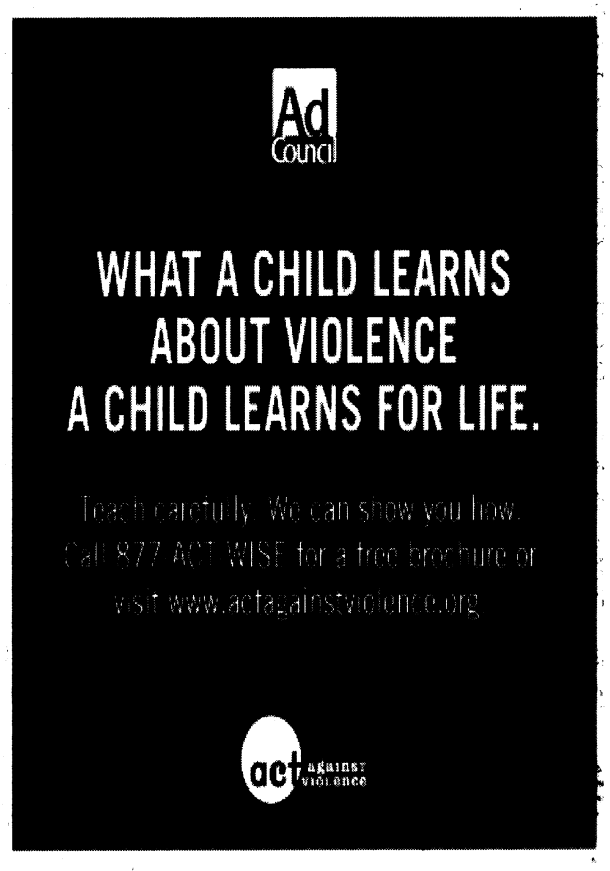
Most deployed Soldiers, he explained, are not affected because they have service obligations that extend beyond their deployments.

The stop-loss restrictions bar voluntary separations and retirements for Soldiers in designated units throughout their deployments and up to 90 days after their unit returns to its home station.

In addition, the stop-movement policy will suspend the normal rotation of Soldiers into and out of affected units.

The expansion essentially levels the field for all Soldiers deployed in the war on terror, Manske said. Units slated for the next rotations to Iraq and Afghanistan already are subject to stop-loss restrictions based on a Nov. 13 Army announcement. In addition, mobilized Reserve and Guard troops are subject to a stop-loss policy that took effect in November 2002.

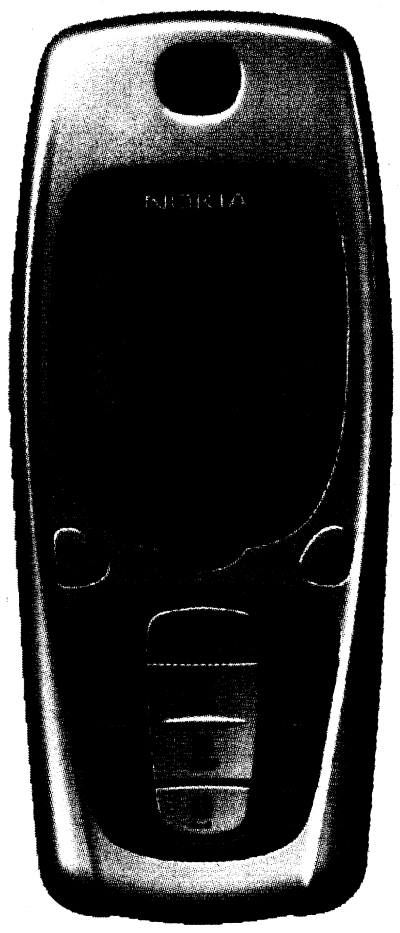
Manske said readiness requirements drove the Army leadership to expand the program to include troops deployed to participate in the first rotation of Operation Iraqi Freedom and the fourth rotation of Operation Enduring Freedom.



"This decision is really being driven by the readiness of units and the absolute intent to keep the units themselves intact down to as low as the squad and crew level," he said, "so we are assured of putting the best fighting force on the battlefield in support of the Soldiers as well as the Army at large."

Manske said the Army leadership recognizes that the decision probably will create hardships and disrupt plans for some of the affected Soldiers.

"The Army and Defense leadership are very sensitive to the impact that this potentially has on individual Soldiers and their families," he said.



"I would emphasize that there is no intent to keep Soldiers any longer than is absolutely necessary to sustain unit readiness beyond their contractual obligations or to keep them from moving on to other assignments," Manske said.

"We intend to take care of our Soldiers."

"If you want it all, we've got it all."

2145th GSU welcomes new commander

Garrison Support Unit farewells Kirk

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
Public Affairs Office NCOIC

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner

Brig. Gen. Larry Knightner, commanding general of the 81st Regional Readiness Group hands the unit colors of the 2145th GSU to Col. Daniel Schultz.

The 2145th Garrison Support Unit welcomed its second commander since its activation in support of Operations Noble Eagle and Iraqi Freedom during a change of command ceremony Dec. 12 at Audie Murphy Gym.

Col. Daniel Schultz succeeds Col. Dale Kirk, who is moving on to an assignment at U.S. Army Forces Command.

He will be missed, said Command Sgt. Maj. Mikal Patterson, 2145th GSU.

"He was a very good commander. The whole unit was very attached to him and will grieve his leaving for some time," Patterson said.

Schultz, a Dundee, Mich., native, is also a transportation officer with a great deal of experience in movement operations.

He said he sees some tweaking in the way his unit does business.

The 2145th has been on active duty for more than a year. The Soldiers know the routine and are doing a great job, said Schultz. However, he said, every commander likes to see improvement. There is always room for improvement and a chance to take it to the next level.

There are always changes expected with a new commander, said Patterson. Because of the work Kirk has done to prepare the unit, Schultz just had to step into command. He has a great bunch of well-trained Soldiers.

"It should be an easy command for him," he said.

While the Soldiers and their mission are important, Schultz recognizes the importance of the customers the unit serves.

"Garrison support is in our unit name. We recognize the importance of being customer-oriented. Our whole mission is to support," he said. "We never want to get the attitude that the units we support are a bother. If it weren't for them, we wouldn't be here. It's important that everyone in the unit retain that customer focus."

Benning to celebrate Martin Luther King Day

Post honors late civil rights leader

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

In 1948, President Harry Truman signed Executive Order 9981, which stated, "There shall be equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed services without regard to race, color, religion or national origin."

However, in 1963, Martin Luther King Jr. and his civil-rights movement followers were still fighting for "unalienable rights of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" for civilians.

Now, in honor of the 75th anniversary of the late civil-rights leader's birth, the Infantry Center and the Equal Opportunity Office say, "Remember, celebrate, act. A day on, not a day off."

The Infantry Center and the EO Office will host a commemoration ceremony at 10 a.m. Thursday in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

"We're doing this to remind people of what Dr. King's vision was and what he was trying to accomplish," said Master Sgt. Kevin Elliot, EO advisor.

King helped break down barriers, tear down walls and educate and enlighten people about civil rights, said Sgt. 1st Class Juan Rodriguez, event chairman and EO advisor.

"We want to do the same," he said.

King was born in Atlanta Jan. 15, 1929, to Martin Luther King Sr., pastor of Ebenezer Baptist Church in Atlanta, and Alberta Williams King, a former school teacher.

He was assassinated April 4, 1968, on the balcony of the Lorraine Hotel in Memphis, Tenn., because of his civil rights efforts.

Scheduled to perform at the commemoration ceremony is the Columbus State University's Gospel Choir and other CSU students, who will dance, sing and recite poetry in memory of King.

On-post performers include Celeste Lee, with the Directorate of Operations and Training, accompanied by Deana Chambliss, with the Family Practice Clinic, in a performance of the song "Stand."

In addition, Staff Sgt. Kenneth Carruthers, B Company, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, and Faith Middle School sixth-grade students of the Advanced Via Individual Determination program are scheduled to perform a rendition of King's 1968 March on Washington speech.

Rev. Tim Reynolds, pastor of the Saint James Missionary Baptist Church in Cottonton, Ala., is scheduled to be the guest speaker.

Reynolds is retired from the Air Force and will speak as a service member, an African American citizen and a religious man, Rodriguez said.

The event is free and open to the tricommunity.

Training Soldiers' Exodus goes off without hitch

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The annual Exodus of Basic Combat and Infantry Training Brigade Soldiers came and went without any major glitches, and that's no small feat considering the two units had almost 4,000 Soldiers traveling home for the holidays.

They went by plane, bus and automobile and, with a few exceptions, left Fort Benning and returned at the same times.

A successful Exodus represents a concerted effort of both military and civilians from cadre of the two brigades to staff at various transportation agencies in Columbus and Fort Benning. This year, the command and control element was ITB.

"We've been working on this hard and heavy since the June-July time frame," said Capt. Ed Gould, ITB personnel officer. The Exodus plan was conducted much like any other military operation, by following a detailed, six-phased plan.

The initial phases in September and October revolved around travel planning, the third phase was the actual "deployment" of the Soldiers, the fourth phase was the holiday leave period, followed by redeployment of the Soldiers Saturday and redeployment Wednesday of Soldiers who celebrated Three Kings.

Working on the premise that knowledge is power, ITB commander, Col. Brian Baldy had an Exodus section added to the brigade's Web site. Soldiers mailed a card with the Web address to their families, said brigade operations officer, Maj. Jay Pitz.

"It was a way to alleviate concerns of parents and answer questions they had about Exodus," Pitz said. "And we got great positive feedback." The Web site contained general information like phone numbers and addresses for all of the ITB units as well as detailed procedures for obtaining medical care while at home and reporting any travel delays. There was also a sample physical training plan.

Laura Schelling, manager of the Omega Travel office at the Main Mall Post Exchange said she and her staff used lessons learned during last year's preparations to make things run more smoothly. The 2003 Exodus was Omega's second.

"We figured out what we needed to tweak," Schelling said. "We streamlined and consolidated and got a lot of positive feedback from the battalion commanders."

The streamlined operation consisted of two main ticketing weekends. Ticketing this way, Schelling said, meant they didn't have to ticket into the wee hours as they had for Exodus 2002.

Processing 600-1,000 tickets a day meant Schelling needed additional help for her regular staff of three. She hired two part-time agents and flew in four agents to help on the big weekends.

Schelling said her meeting in the fall with Capt. Raul Romero, the ITB action officer in charge of scheduling, paid off. She was able to lay out her ticketing plan and Romero was able to help mesh it with unit training schedules.

Soldiers traveling home by bus were taken care of by Tyesha Brown, manager of the Columbus Greyhound Bus terminal.

"It's not complicated," Brown said. "It's just all paperwork and typing. The drill sergeants bring in all the information."

Brown's buses took Soldiers southbound as far as Miami, northbound to Chicago and as far west as Dallas, Dec. 18.

Soldiers flying out left Fort Benning Dec. 19 based on flight departure times, said Capt. Arnold Noyola, BCTB assistant operations officer, who worked with Romero on scheduling.

"It's all synchronized," Noyola said. "And we have people at the airport to supervise the Soldiers and areas set up for them to wait for their flights in." Not only did ITB and BCTB cadre coordinate the airport movements of Fort Benning Soldiers, but they also coordinated movements of Soldiers at Fort Jackson, S.C., and Fort Gordon, Ga., so that all the Soldiers wouldn't arrive at the airport on the same days and times.

Pitz said the 20 Soldiers who did not leave for the holidays were well taken care of.

"We had a number of planned activities for them," he said. "They went to Destin (Fla.), the movies, had Christmas dinner at a bed and breakfast and went to a Riverdragons basketball game."

By today, it was back to training as usual.

Finance guru retires

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

"We are not only losing a man; we're losing an institution," said Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley of Bobby King at King's retirement ceremony Dec. 19.

Freakley referred to King, former director of Resource Management, as an institution because every day King has worked since 1966, he has worked at Fort Benning.

For 37 years, King has been working at Fort Benning as "a good steward of taxpayers' money," Freakley said.

An Alabama native, King started working as a Department of Defense civilian for the finance office on post in September 1966.

Not even a year later, in July 1967, he was drafted into the Army.

"I was willing to go, but then again, I really didn't have a choice. It was a mandatory draft," he said laughing.

As a Soldier, he completed basic training at Fort Benning and was then offered the opportunity to do on-the-job training in the same finance and accounting office he worked for before the draft.

"It was the best deal I'd heard yet," King said.

He served a two-year enlistment, then came back to Fort Benning to work as a civilian for the comptroller's office.

"From the beginning, he's had a reputation of being a frugal man," Freakley joked about King at his retirement ceremony.

King

"That's not fair," King replied. "I like my job, and I just want to make sure Soldiers get what they need when they need it."

Before becoming director of Resource Management, King worked various finance positions, including Mil-Pay, travel and the finance and accounting office.

"I worked my way up the ladder," he said.

"I worked with (King) when he first came to Fort Benning as a DoD civilian, and while he was a Soldier and then as a civilian again," said Peggy Lambert, chief of installation budget and a friend of King's since 1966.

"We grew up together," she said.

Freakley and Lambert both said King has always been dedicated to his job and could come up with a solution to any financial problem that came up.

"He's a workaholic. A few years ago he stayed at work without going home or sleeping for three days," Lambert said. "When we finally convinced him to go home, he fell asleep at a red light!"

"That was a long week," King said, blushing at the mention of himself asleep at the wheel of his car.

The next time a similar situation came up, King took a nap on a table in his office, instead, Lambert said.

"I owe everything to my staff," King said. "They are the ones who listen to my ideas and tell me if they are good or bad and how to improve them. I couldn't have done it without them," he said.

Although King officially retired Jan. 2, he has been back at work since Monday, this time for the office of Installation Management Activity.

"IMA looks after installation needs and provides support," King said.

"I'm coming in as they are trying to create a new accounting system to replace the 20-year-old system (in use) today. I'm hoping to have a part in that project," he said.

Is King ever planning on retiring for good?

Not yet if King's wife, Ann, has a say in it. King's high school sweetheart and wife of 35 years is a housewife. He said he's not sure she is ready to put up with him all day, every day.

Until then, King will be doing what the commanding general said King does best — working miracles with the installation's money.

"I've really enjoyed working here," King said. "I've had great support from the command group and the Soldiers. They have made me look good.

"It's nice to work for an organization that you are proud of, and I am very proud of whom I work for."

Benning cancels cab contract

Interim taxi service available

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning recently terminated its contract with the post's taxi service, the Independent Taxi Company.

The termination was mutually agreed upon between the Morale Welfare and Recreation Fund and the taxi service due to a Department of Labor decision regarding part of the contract, said Charlotte Jackson, chief, business operations division, Directorate of Community Activities.

The change did not come about as a result of customer service complaints, she said.

A new contract with another taxi service has not been established yet.

"Customers may call any taxi company, and they will be charged approved 'City of Columbus' meter rates instead of the flat rate under the previous contract," Jackson said.

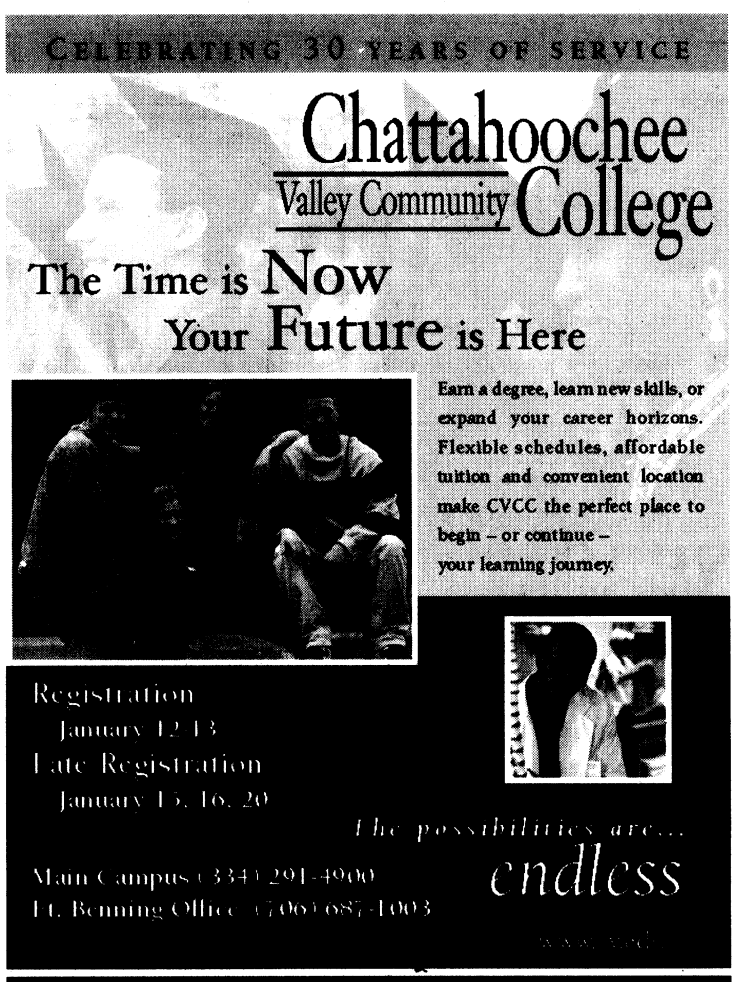
While the interim unofficial taxi service allows Soldiers to maintain the convenience of cab transportation, Jackson warned that there is no "protection factor" to prevent Soldiers from being overcharged other than the Soldiers being aware of meter rates and not allowing themselves to be taken advantage of.

With an MWR Fund contract for taxi services on post, the benefits are:

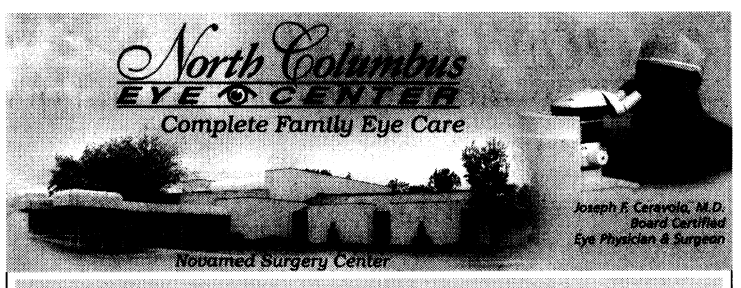
- contractually established flat rates while operating on Fort Benning,
- a Quality Assurance office to ensure that drivers maintain insurance and maintain their vehicles in accordance with established standards,
- capability to assist Soldiers if they are overcharged or if they have other complaints, and
- capability to establish rules on operation of taxis that enhance force protection and security.

"Once a new contract is in place, the most important thing for Soldiers to know is that flat rates for taxis operating on Fort Benning will be re-established," Jackson said.

In the meantime, unofficial taxi services operating on Fort Benning are still subject to rules, according to a memorandum addressing the issue from Col. Rick Riera, garrison commander.



Any taxi may enter Fort Benning with a valid driver's license, valid vehicle tag receipt, valid proof of insurance and a valid City of Columbus permit.



All taxis are subject to the force protection measures in effect.

"For all areas other than Sand Hill, taxis are authorized only to pick up and drop off at the front entrance of company areas and at front doors in housing areas," reads the memorandum. "Taxis are not authorized to cruise company areas.

"For the Sand Hill cantonment areas, taxis are authorized only to drop off fares in front of battalions and are authorized only to pick up for fares at the Sand Hill Post Exchange."

Remember: 15 mph in the housing areas

BRIGADE: Deploys to NTC to complete training rotation

the unit was deployed, as well as weapons and communications equipment.

"We had to condense reconstitution in order to get systems up as quickly as possible to begin training," Salazar said.

He said the NTC training efforts focused on platoon-level training, because "the platoon is the fundamental building block of the Army."

"Ideally, we'd like to be able to train at the platoon level, then company, then battalion," he said. "But you're never as ready as you want to be, and NTC is a training event."

The monthlong rotation consists of a week spent on the ground getting equipment ready, two weeks "in the box" in combat operations training and the fourth week preparing to return to Fort Benning.

Salazar said the live-fire training that caused an increase in noise levels in the area recently was absolutely essential in preparing for NTC.

"That's what we do. That's our business," he said. "Our job is to close with and destroy the enemy and the best way to do that is with live ammunition."

He said the unit trains at a level that will allow it to have a successful NTC rotation and leave Fort Irwin trained at a considerably higher level than before.

The brigade combat team will fight the OPFOR in a high-intensity conflict scenario modeled on a Korean scenario that will now involve civilians on the battlefield.

Salazar dispelled any rumors that the NTC rotation was designed as a precursor for an upcoming scheduled deployment to Iraq.

"Right now, we are not programmed to redeploy to Iraq," he said.

With the rest of the Army's 10 divisions either deployed or in the process of deploying, the 3rd Infantry Division is currently the contingency force for the U.S., he said, and must be prepared to answer the nation's call.

"We'll go to NTC; we'll have a successful rotation and become a better brigade," he said. "But we recognize the potential to be called back in line to return to Iraq."

Benning: Colonel to be promoted to general today and will remain the best."

Layfield credited the people who influenced him throughout his career for his success.

"It's the Soldiers and NCOs throughout my entire career who are truly responsible for this great fortune which has been bestowed upon me," he said. "I can't thank those enough who have influenced my way of thinking from privates, NCOs, officers and other generals.

"There were some defining moments in my life," Layfield said.

At his second company command, the influence of that first sergeant made him dedicate a lifetime and a full career to the Army, he said.

Lt. Col. Harry Lubin, chief of the Infantry Futures Group, was a platoon leader under Layfield's company command of B Company, 4th Battalion, 6th Infantry Regiment at Fort Polk, La.

"He was a great leader even then," Lubin said. "Anyone at the company would have followed him anywhere — a very charismatic leader. It was a dynamic combination between him and the first sergeant.

"We were in the field a lot and the family units were held together by the work his wife did," Lubin said.

"I think the promotion is well deserved, and it's a proud day for B Company 'Bulldogs' everywhere; we're all very proud of him."

Another moment in Layfield's career solidified his decision to commit his life to the Army.

"During my time as a battalion commander, the support of my sergeant major and my wife, Vicky, helped me recognize that what I was doing was the right thing."

Layfield said there are many talented professionals who are equally deserving of becoming general officers.

> "It's dedicated people who make our Army the greatest Army in the world. I'm proud to be part of that organization. I'm doing what I love to do."
> Col. Stephen Layfield
> Deputy commanding general

"It's dedicated people who make our Army the greatest Army in the world," he said. "I'm proud to be part of that organization. I'm doing what I love to do."

Serving at the home of the infantry also affords Layfield opportunities to influence the Army.

"This isn't a job to him," said Spc. John Hedgepeth, Layfield's driver. "He truly cares about getting things done and getting them done right."

"I like the immersion with the Soldier and training at the Home of Infantry," Layfield said. "It's a privilege to serve here; all things infantry emanate from this place.

"It's an awesome responsibility to be in the position as the deputy commanding general, to help guide training and output of this institution. As a general officer, I expect to continue to do the same, to be a part of the training of our force."

"He's at the top of the game," Yun-Thayer said.

Soldiers: To train Iraqis

opportunity to set up a family readiness group to help out the family members during the voluntary deployment.

"Even though we had to go tell our wives that instead of picking up a new cycle in January, we were deploying to Iraq," said Staff Sgt. Lars Harstad, drill sergeant, "they're Army wives and they know, no matter where you go now, every Soldier is deployable. The battalion has been setting up the family readiness group meetings, and they'll be OK while we're gone."

The Soldiers worked on their pre-deployment appointments and getting things ready over the holidays, preparing for a somewhat familiar mission — training soldiers.

"The greatest advantage of sending drill sergeants is we deal with training privates," Fortenberry said. "(Privates) know little to nothing of the military life, so we will be able to train (Iraqis) on a different level than others can.

"I think the language and cultural understanding will be the biggest challenges."

That Soldiers can turn around and change gears for a tactical unit and prepare for a deployment in a short amount of time shows what drill sergeants are capable of, Wright said.

AROUND POST

Commissary/PX Council

The Fort Benning Commissary/Post Exchange Council meeting for the second quarter of fiscal 2004 will be from 9 to 11 a.m. Wednesday in the Benning Room of the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

The first half of the meeting will be designated for the PX Council and the second half for the Commissary Council.

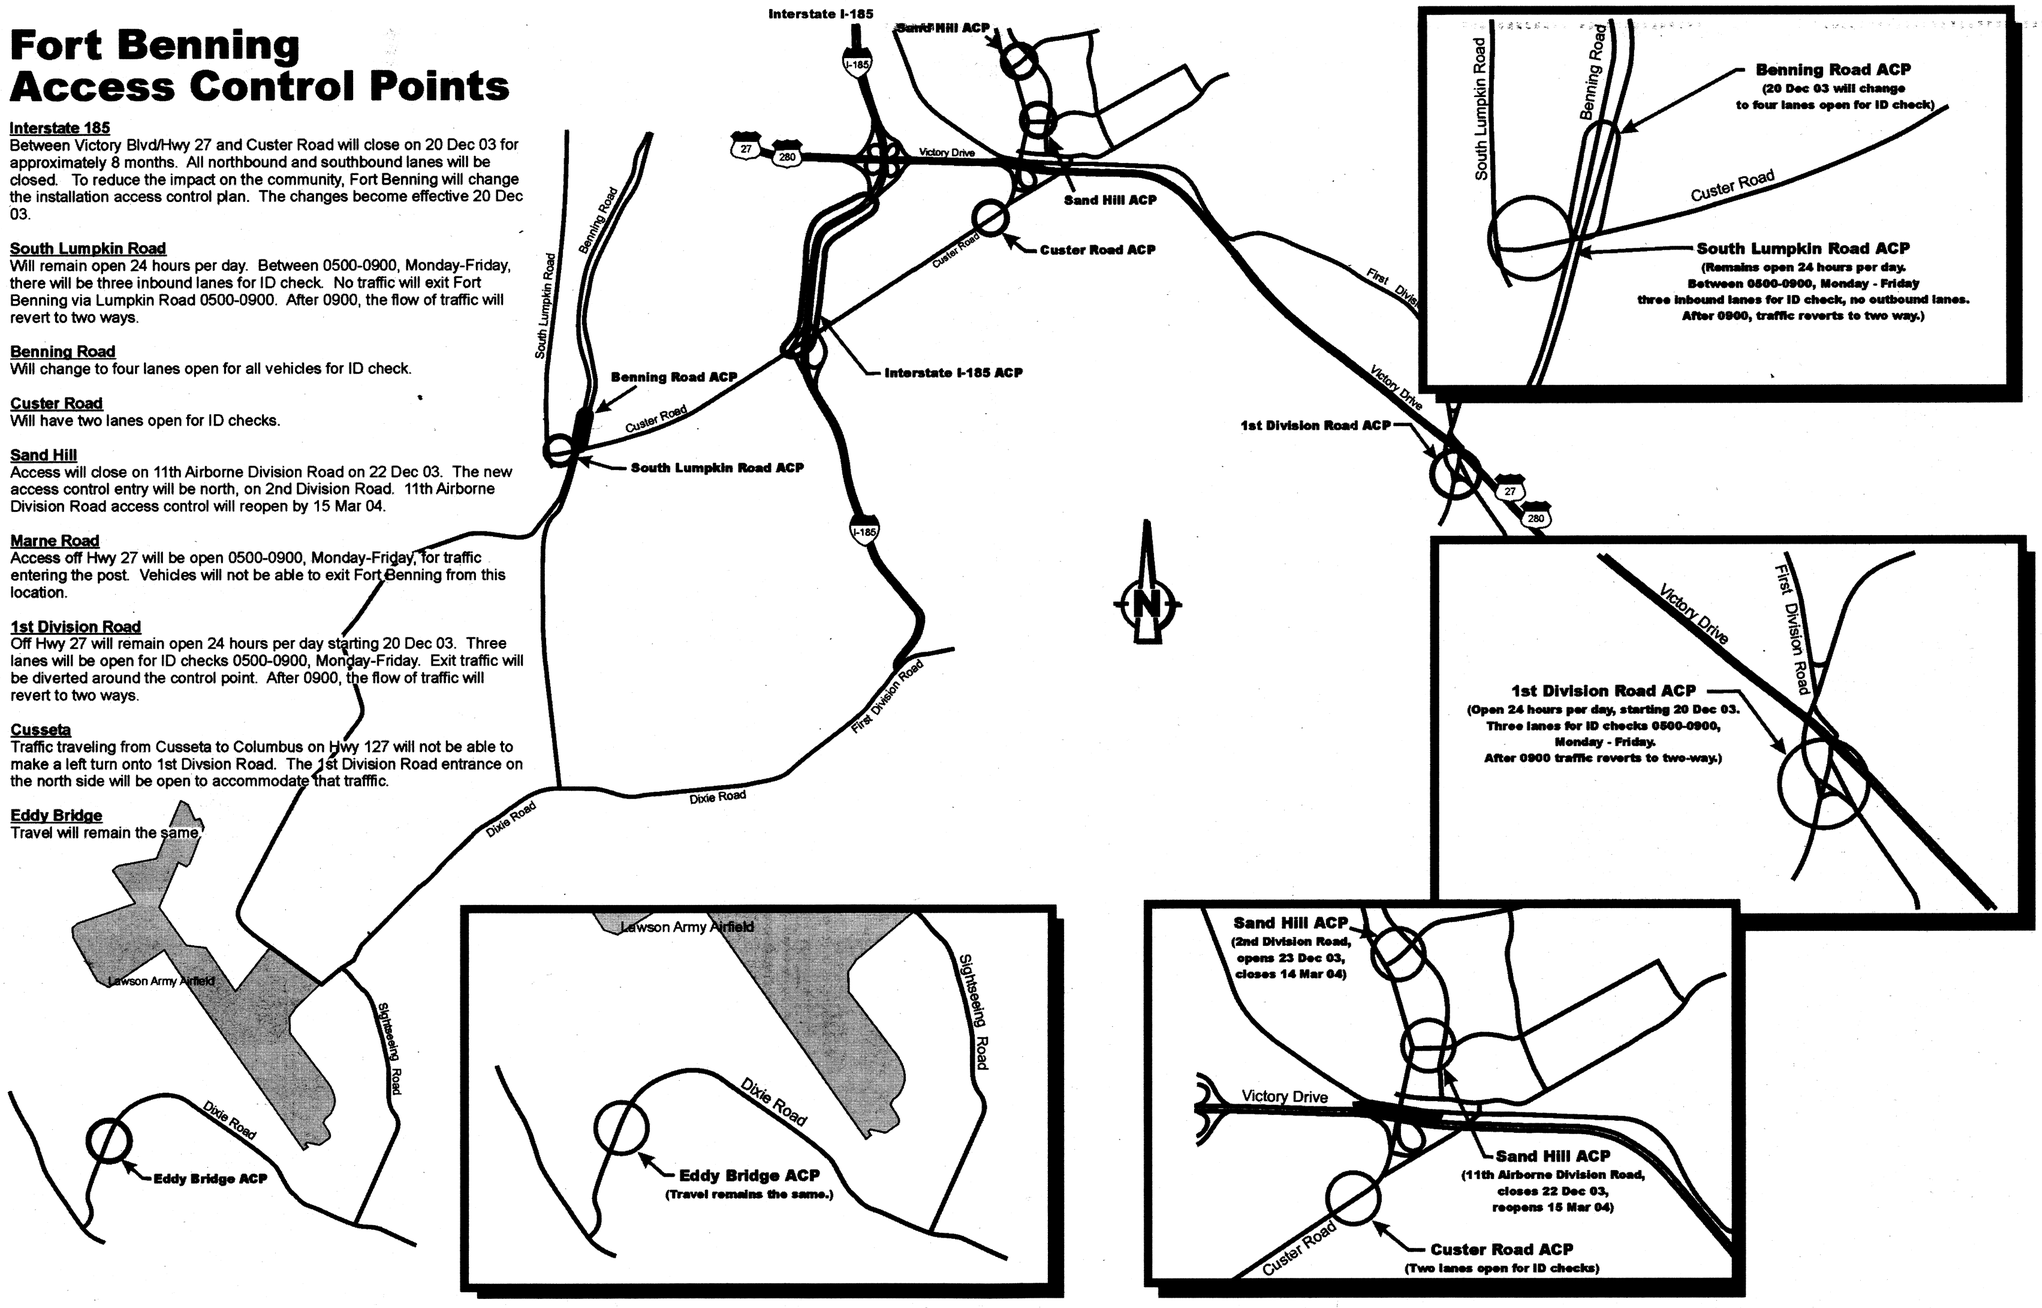
Fort Benning Access Control Points

Interstate 185
Between Victory Blvd/Hwy 27 and Custer Road will close on 20 Dec 03 for approximately 8 months. All northbound and southbound lanes will be closed. To reduce the impact on the community, Fort Benning will change the installation access control plan. The changes become effective 20 Dec 03.

South Lumpkin Road
Will remain open 24 hours per day. Between 0500-0900, Monday-Friday, there will be three inbound lanes for ID check. No traffic will exit Fort Benning via Lumpkin Road 0500-0900. After 0900, the flow of traffic will revert to two ways.

Benning Road
Will change to four lanes open for all vehicles for ID check.

Custer Road
Will have two lanes open for ID checks.



Sand Hill
Access will close on 11th Airborne Division Road on 22 Dec 03. The new access control entry will be north, on 2nd Division Road. 11th Airborne Division Road access control will reopen by 15 Mar 04.

Marne Road
Access off Hwy 27 will be open 0500-0900, Monday-Friday, for traffic entering the post. Vehicles will not be able to exit Fort Benning from this location.

1st Division Road
Off Hwy 27 will remain open 24 hours per day starting 20 Dec 03. Three lanes will be open for ID checks 0500-0900, Monday-Friday. Exit traffic will be diverted around the control point. After 0900, the flow of traffic will revert to two ways.

Cusseta
Traffic traveling from Cusseta to Columbus on Hwy 127 will not be able to make a left turn onto 1st Divsion Road. The 1st Division Road entrance on the north side will be open to accommodate that traffic.

Eddy Bridge
Travel will remain the same.

National Guard Soldiers train on post

Support elements learn infantry tactics

Soldiers with the 1206th and 1209th Quartermaster units from the Alabama National Guard were activated Dec. 7 and have been training on Fort Benning since Dec. 10.

The units, which specialize in water purification, are learning what it's like to be infantrymen during their stay at Fort Benning.

In efforts to prepare them for whatever they may encounter during their deployment in Iraq, the Department of the Army directed Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 305th Regiment (Training Support), to train the guardsmen on infantry tactics.

"We want to make sure they have the tools to get home in one piece," said Capt. Mark P. Olin, infantry team chief for 1st Bn., 305th Regt. (Training Support).

The instructors, along with post cadre, give the guardsmen refresher courses on common task training such as basic rifle marksmanship and first aid. However, the guardsmen are learning something new before they leave.

They will receive stress fire training, reflexive fire training and MOUT training. The guardsmen will also learn how to operate a checkpoint and conduct convoy operations.

Day one of their MOUT training took place at McKenna MOUT site Monday, where they learned the basic procedures for clearing rooms.

The guardsmen spent half of the day in an open field on the range learning posture and technique while going through the motions of clearing rooms that were designated by tape outlines in the grass.

Once all the Soldiers showed they were proficient in all the required tasks, they moved to the mock village and began running missions through the streets, clearing rooms as they traveled.

The object of their mission was to rescue prisoners from the buildings without any casualties.

The trainers watched as they cleared each room to ensure they were doing everything correctly. If the Soldiers made mistakes, they were counted as casualties and the rest of the Soldiers had to finish the mission without their help.

Olin said there is a strong possibility the guardsmen will find themselves in a situation where they need to clear houses to rescue prisoners or to find shelter from an attack, so it is important for them to know what they are doing.

Olin and his team are no strangers to training Reserve and National Guard units.

They trained about 4,000 Soldiers for deployment last year and are using feedback from the Soldiers in Iraq to modify their training program.

Olin said the training program has "changed a lot" since last year.

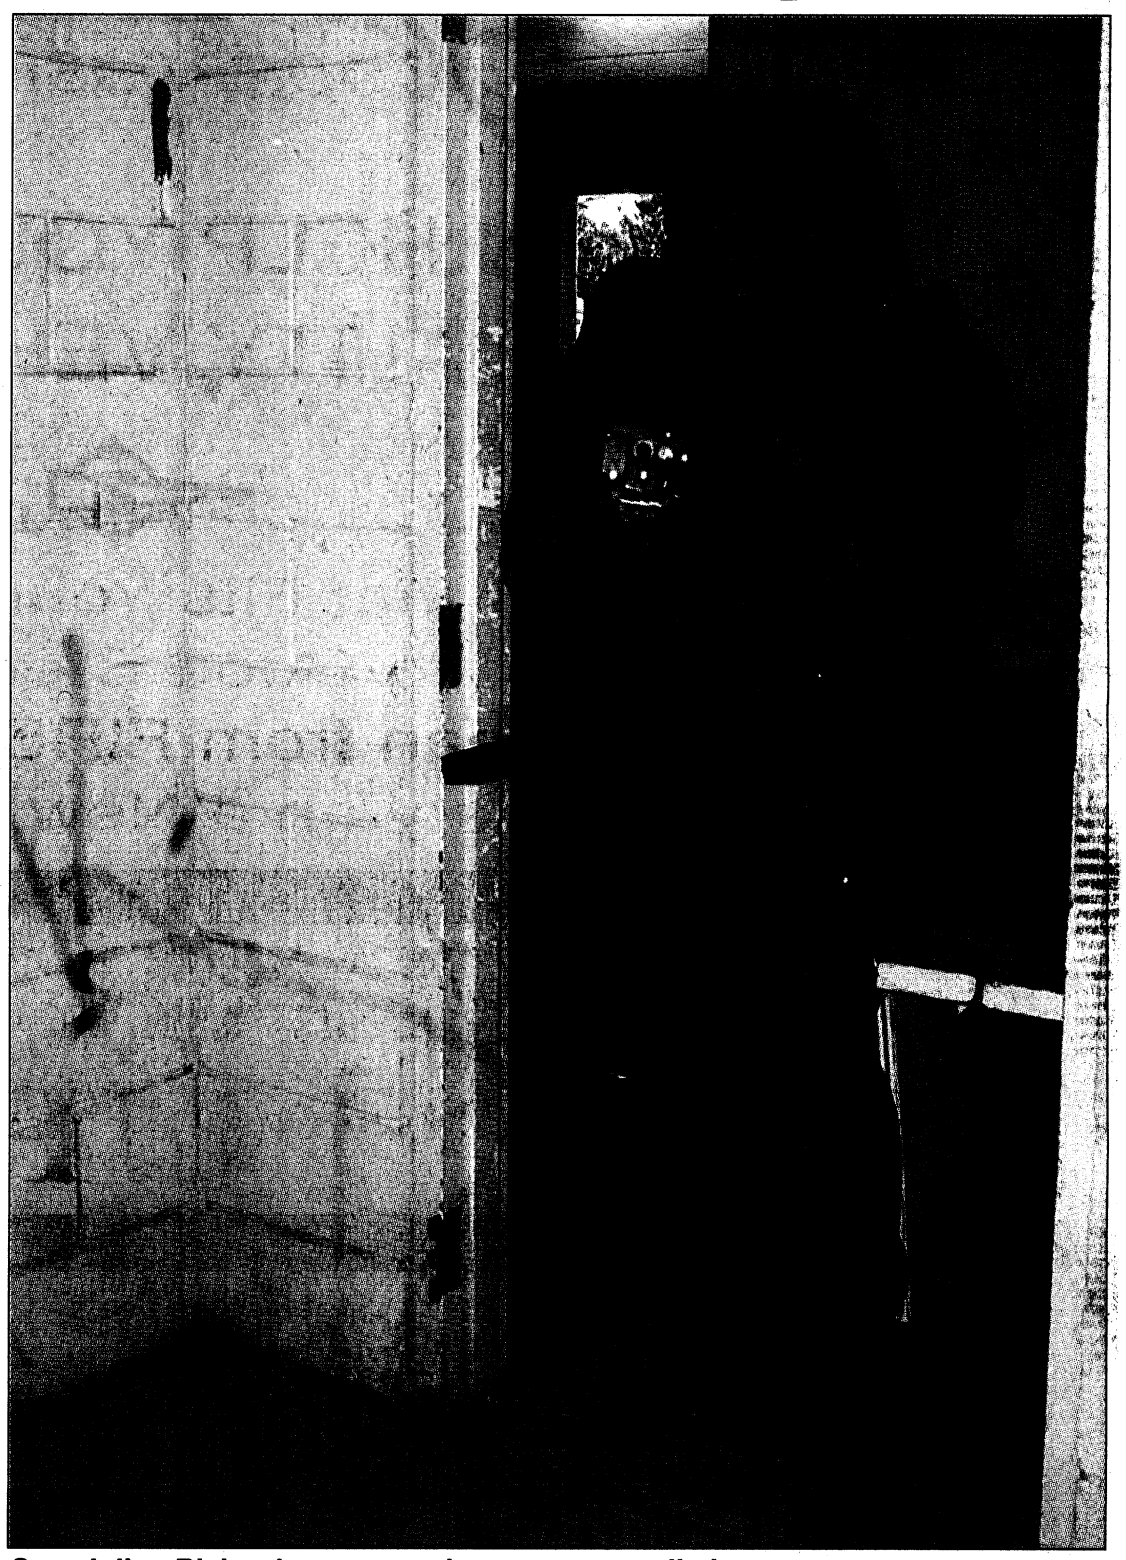
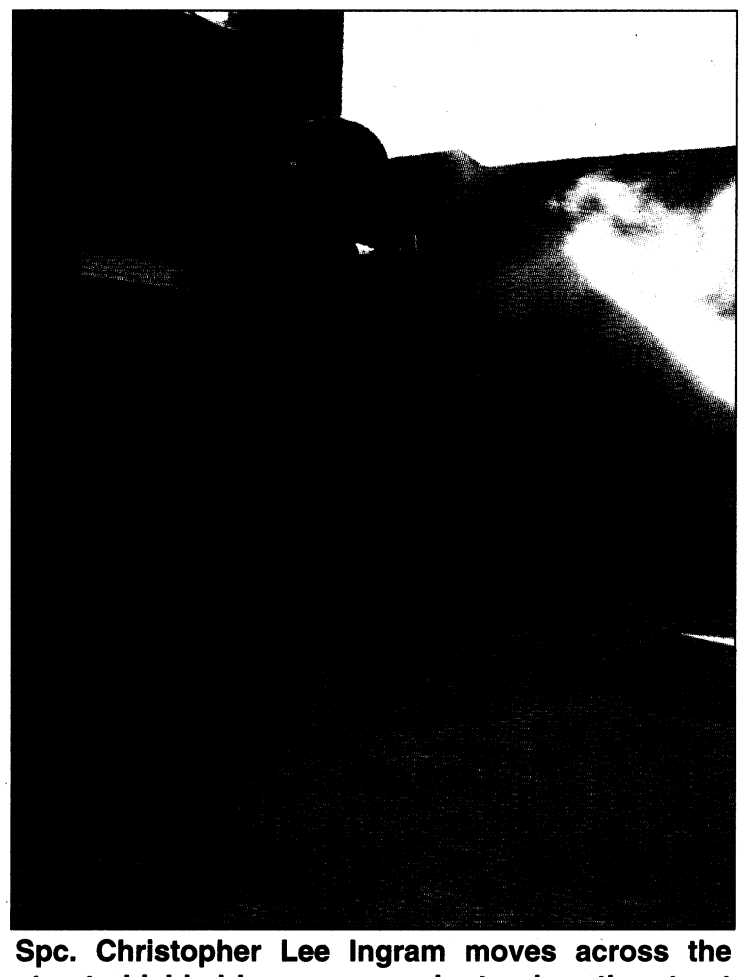
When the program started, training focused on individual tasks.



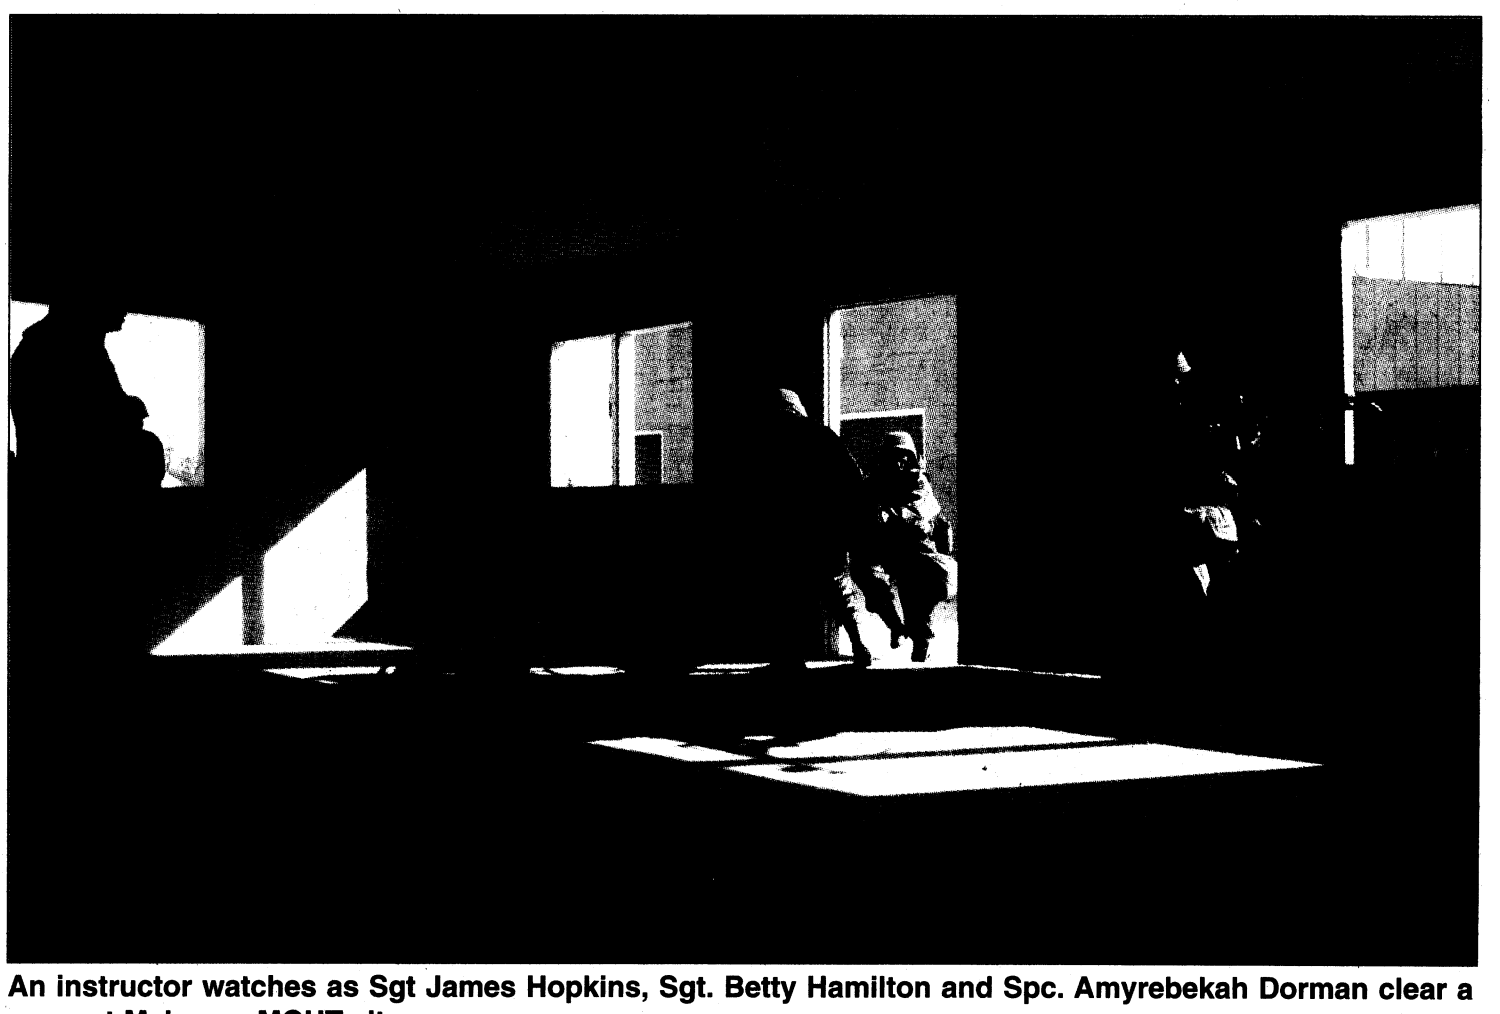
Now, however, instructors have expanded training to teach Soldiers to fire from moving vehicles and move in squad formations.

"These are things a lot of units like this have never done before," Olin said.



Sgt. 1st Class Robert Blalock, one of the Soldiers going through the training, said he was grateful for the opportunity to learn more about combat tactics.

"I don't know what exactly we will be doing over there, but this does give me a greater sense of security," he said.



The guardsmen will put everything together Monday and conduct a convoy movement into McKenna MOUT site and clear buildings in a combat scenario where people dressed in Middle-Eastern garb will be providing resistance while they try to clear the buildings.

AFAP symposium needs volunteers

Annual forum gives voice to 'Army family'

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

What's your problem?

The folks at Fort Benning's Army Family Team Building want to know what's on your mind. Issues with health care, child care or pay? Concerns about housing, youth activities or education? You name it.

AFTB's gearing up for the annual Army Family Action Plan symposium, a round-table meeting designed to resolve "quality of life" concerns at the post level.

Delegates, representing every demographic of the Fort Benning community, including active-duty Soldiers, reservists, guardsmen, retirees, family members and DA civilians, will hash out issues submitted by you.

AFAP is "pretty powerful stuff," said Sarah Hertig, Fort Benning's AFTB coordinator and the one responsible for the third annual symposium, scheduled for Feb. 25-27.

"It's the only forum I know that bridges the gap between retirees and active-duty Soldiers and civilians, enlisted and commissioned," she said. "It works because it encourages dialogue between everyone in the Army family, and takes everyone's concerns seriously."

Although other services sponsor family forums, the Army is the only one that requires all installations to host an annual AFAP.

The program has resulted in 77 changes to legislation, the revisal or establishment of 126 policies and the improvement of 139 services or programs the at Army and Department of Defense level.

AFAP is responsible for the ongoing renovations and improvements of post fitness centers, Hertig said. And the introduction of the Thrift Savings Plan for Soldiers "came straight out of a symposium."

But AFAP's continued success

See AFAP, B-3

CLOSER LOOK

Since Sarah Hertig began spearheading Fort Benning's annual Army Family Action Plan symposium three years ago, a good number of issues have been resolved at a local level, including:

- When a family member complained about excessive restrictions on school fund raising, the policy was changed. The number of fund raisers allowed was increased, and the process for approval was simplified. Restrictions were eliminated during post campaigns, such as CFC.
- During the 2002 AFAP, the lack of family entertainment on post was addressed. As a result, concerts are held at Wetherby Field, MWR sponsored an Oktoberfest, and the Directorate of Community Activities launched a campaign to advertise activities and services available.
- Fort Benning fitness centers are being renovated and equipment updated.
- Playgrounds were upgraded after delegates at the 2002 AFAP deemed the issue serious enough to warrant immediate attention. Worn and dangerous equipment was removed.

New Year's family

Lori Egan

Thomas T. Pritchard Jr. became Fort Benning's first New Year's baby at 3:43 a.m. Jan. 1 at Martin Army community Hospital. He joined his 2-year-old sister, Tomidia, and his parents, Sedia and Staff Sgt. Thomas Pritchard, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment. The Labor and Delivery and Mother and Baby staff presented the newborn with a basket of goodies to celebrate the hospital's first baby of 2004. Martin Army Community Hospital averages 1,100 births a year.

DoD seeks to improve commissary benefits

Officials look at variable pricing

Rudi Williams
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Finding ways to improve commissary benefits tops the Defense Department's list of things to do to enhance quality of life for service members and their families.

But when DoD announced it was studying the "variable pricing" concept being used by private-sector grocery stores and supermarkets, some media coverage painted an unfavorable picture.

"Variable pricing isn't the 'poison pill' for commissary benefits some media articles have indicated," John M. Molino said during an interview at the Pentagon. Molino is the deputy undersecretary of defense for military community and family policy.

"Variable pricing is a technical term used in the grocery industry," he explained. "All it means is not every item is marked up by the same amount to produce a profit. By law, everything currently sold in commissaries is marked up 5 percent above cost.

"So variable pricing isn't that evil animal in the shadows that it has been painted to be," Molino said. "But remember, we're not implementing variable pricing. We are simply studying the concept."

He emphasized that DoD simply is studying the concept to determine whether it will work in the commissary system and benefit customers.

"If the study says it won't work in commissaries, we won't go down that path," the deputy undersecretary said. "But if it has the potential to provide a better benefit, we're going to ask Congress for permission to go there."

But, he said, DoD will go there only if variable pricing doesn't erode the 30 percent savings customers enjoy now.

There are even bigger savings on some items. Defense Commissary Agency buyers often negotiate to get money-saving deals with distributors and food suppliers. Customers reap the benefits when they purchase things that are put on shelves boasting a little sticker that reads "best value item."

"That means they've negotiated a price that's rock bottom, and they challenge you

Santa's Castle fulfills families' fantasies

Program betters holidays for 2,000 kids

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Santa's Castle president Kim Miller has been an Army spouse for less than a year and has no children, but these details don't impact her enthusiasm or commitment where Santa's Castle is concerned.

When Santa's Castle first closed its doors for 2003, the calls were still coming in. So Miller and her volunteers pulled together, reopened Dec. 18 and worked right through Christmas Eve to make dreams come true for everyone who needed help.

"We are here for Fort Benning," Miller said. "We did not turn anyone in need away."

Bolstered by thousands of dollars in donated toys and cash, Santa's Castle made happy holidays for more than 2,000 children.

Miller, who began working with Santa's Castle in August, said it was one of the most rewarding experiences she's ever had.

"There were so many tears of joy," she said.

"And ladies who had been in shopping for their children came back the next day to volunteer."

Miller had many stories of gratitude to recount, but one that really stood out for her involved a Soldier who came shopping while the movers delivered his household goods mid-December.

The Soldier shopped for his four children and returned later that day with another man, Miller said. The man was one of the movers, who promptly handed Miller a donation for Santa's Castle.

"This is not charity," Miller said. "It's just a direct way to help someone."

Miller said Santa's Castle benefitted from donations from units and organizations on post and from businesses off post.

> "There were so many tears of joy. And ladies who had been in shopping for their children came back the next day to volunteer. ... This is not charity. It's a direct way to help someone."
> Kim Miller
> Santa's Castle president

Saturn of Columbus' general sales manager, Chip Reddy, set a Saturn wagon in the showroom as a collection "bin" for donations. Saturn has been involved with Toys for Tots and Santa's Castle for several years.

"We're always looking for places to help in the community," said Reddy, a retired Soldier.

Not only was the wagon filled with toys, Reddy said, it was overflowing.

"There were bikes parked beside it, he said. "It was great this year. We even had to call Santa's Castle back because we still had things come in after they picked everything up."

Santa's Castle is getting a jump on the 2004 holidays with donations from the Red Cross and the 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Association.

And now, Miller said, is the best time to donate money to Santa's Castle.

"Last year, we did well because we really planned in advance," she said. "If we have money now, it gives us the opportunity to shop while things are still on sale or on clearance."

Each child received $40-50 worth of toys last year. By buying items on clearance, Miller said, they can get those same items for $20-30.

"And all of those items are the 'new' toys the kids want, like Bratz dolls and even bicycles," Miller said.

The staff plans to hold an open house at Santa's Castle at the end of the month to celebrate a successful year and to give people the opportunity to see the store and find out about volunteer opportunities.

Volunteer opportunities exist year-round at the shop, and Miller said time is as valuable to the shop as money or toy donations.

"We had some amazing youth volunteers and we want them to be volunteers year-round," Miller said. "But anything you give makes a difference, and if you want to affect Soldiers' lives, you can do it by helping their kids."

Miller said the staff knows what their internal after-action review will say, but "we want to hear from everyone with ideas so we can run with them and double the amount this year."

STICKING TO IT

Take positive steps in New Year

Take measures to improve chance of keeping resolutions

MCG Health System

Every new year, scores of people write down resolutions, confident that this year they will meet their goals. But all too often, come Jan. 30, their lists — along with their resolve — lie cast-off and forgotten.

Success comes with the proper mindset. Dr. Bernard Davidson, a psychologist at MCG Health System, offers the following tips to help keep those New Year's resolutions:

• Set realistic goals. Often, people set themselves up for failure by resolving to accomplish impossible tasks.

"Losing weight is a popular New Year's resolution, but a goal of losing, say, 20 pounds in a month guarantees disappointment," Davidson said. "Instead, outline realistic goals and how to get there."

• Prepare, prepare, prepare. Whoever said that you had to go cold turkey come New Year's Day?

"On January 1, start taking baby steps to reach your goals," Davidson said.

• Expect some setbacks. A step back doesn't mean you'll never go forward again. Many people find themselves in the trap of "all or nothing" thinking and give up. But instead of beating yourself up for "failing," get back on that exercise regimen.

"You'll feel much better for it," Davidson said.

• Find someone to share the experience. Support makes all the difference.

"If you plan to stop smoking, find a buddy who will quit with you and begin planning strategies. A buddy will also serve to keep you on track toward your goals," he said.

• Don't overmonitor your progress.

"Evaluating your progress every day often ends in frustration," Davidson said.

Don't do it. Progress updates every week or every two weeks are better since enough time will have lapsed for even small changes to be evident.

• Resist the urge to compare yourself with others. It's ultimately self-defeating and results in less motivation.

Even cars can get funk

Cold weather affects vehicles, too

Precision Tune Auto Care

Are you and your family ready for the cold and flu season? How about your car?

"The same snowy, freezing, damp weather that brings on the sniffles for people lowers resistance in cars," said Joel Burrows, a.k.a. "The Car Doctor" and vice president of training/R&D at Precision Tune Auto Care.

"Motorists are more likely to face car trouble in winter than any other time of year," Burrows said.

The American Automobile Association reports that of the 21 million emergency road service calls they receive, most are in the late fall and winter. Of those calls, 40 percent involve vehicles that wouldn't start and 34 percent are for major mechanical failures requiring towing.

In light of those statistics, The Car Doctor suggests making sure your car is healthy with a complete physical exam. Just as a cough is the signal for an oncoming cold, rough idling, hard starts, stalling or diminished power are signs of pending car trouble.

"A thorough inspection and analysis by a trusted professional assures that your car is running at maximum efficiency and provides insight to potential problems. Pay special attention to replacing dirty filters for air, fuel and crankcase ventilation when necessary," Burrows said.

In addition to the basics, Burrows identifies critical areas that cause car owners the most headaches during winters.

He advises giving special attention to:

• Oil. Oil changes should be more frequent in winter. As temperatures drop, oil thickens and provides less efficient lubrication. Use lighter oil (5W-30 or 10W-40) or try synthetic oil, which flows better in extremely cold weather, offering more protection at start-up. For specific recommendations for your vehicle, always refer to the manufacturer's service schedule.

• Antifreeze. "Permanent" does not mean forever; most antifreeze requires changing every 24 months. Antifreeze prevents ice from forming in the engine block plus inhibits rust and corrosion. Dirty antifreeze contains sediments that may plug radiator passages and cause overheating.

• Battery. At 32 degrees, a battery may have only 50 percent of its summer output but twice the need for starting power. Check connections to assure a tight fit. Remove corrosion from posts and cable connections. And have your auto care service provider perform a load test on your vehicle's battery.

• Hoses. Hoses should be inspected every year and changed every three. They wear from the inside out, so defects are not always visible. Squeeze to detect loss of elasticity. Look for cracked, bulging, brittle or limp hoses. Check overall condition and tension on the belt. Too tight a belt can ruin an alternator, too loose can result in a dead battery. Look for cracks in serpentine type belts.

• Tires. When the temperature drops, so does the air pressure in tires. Improper inflation causes premature wearing which, in turn, can cause an accident. Check tire pressure when the tires are cold, not after driving. Also check for cuts, abrasions and uneven wear.

• Brakes. Road contamination and moisture can affect your braking ability. This is especially true in winter due to salt and other materials used to battle snow and ice. A thorough brake inspection, particularly of friction materials, like pads and shoes, is just what the doctor ordered.

• Heater/defroster. The heater and defroster provide warmth and comfort as well as good visibility for safe driving. A screeching sound when you turn on the heater or a stiff control lever can mean trouble, so have it checked out.

• Fuel. In cold weather, keep your gas tank full. Pour a bottle of fuel de-icer in the tank once a month to prevent moisture from freezing in the fuel line.

• Windshield. Invest in rubber-clad winter blades that can help prevent ice and snow build-up. Wipers work harder clearing snow, frost, ice and road salt.

• Exhaust system. Have a qualified technician check your exhaust system on a lift for leaks, soft exhaust pipes, small holes in trunk and floorboards, and cracked rubber hangers or broken clamps. Failure to replace faulty components could be deadly.

"Each car, just like each person, is a little different," Burrows said.

"Learn about the needs of your own car. Everyone should begin a car-preparedness inventory for each season by reading the owner's manual."

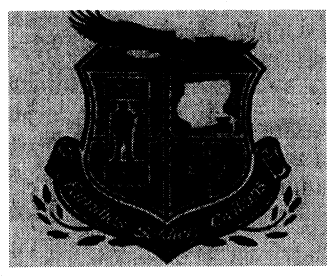
AFAP: Raises Army community's concerns hinges on volunteers, Hertig said — volunteers to submit issues, chair work groups and serve as delegates.

"We need volunteers like you wouldn't believe," Hertig said. "It's grown so much because people see it working."



More than 110 delegates are needed to tackle issues relating to health care, education, pay, housing and the like.

Youth 12 and older are needed for the one-day youth work group, Feb. 26.

Retirees, National Guardsmen and reservists will have their own work groups, whereas other groups will be staffed with Soldiers, civilians and family members.

For more information about AFAP, to volunteer as a delegate or group leader or to submit an issue or idea, call Hertig at 545-5377.

AFAP...Making a Difference One Issue at a Time!

Prices: Stay competitive

to find that item cheaper anywhere else," Molino said.

Once a price is negotiated, the commissary still has to sell the product at 5 percent above cost, he said.

The 5 percent surcharge goes right back into the stores, paying for new construction, renovations, repairs, equipment and information technology systems, such as checkout counters and cash registers.

"Before 2001, we were bleeding some of the surcharge money into commissary operations," Molino said. "We stopped doing that because we want to guarantee that the surcharge, which is service member money, is reinvested in the commissary."

Operating expenses are paid out of about $1.2 billion of taxpayer dollars appropriated by Congress.

Tax dollars pay civilian employees' salaries and for such things as butchers' uniforms and meat-packaging materials.

"We're trying to ensure that every penny of taxpayer dollars is well spent, and that taxpayers get the best value for their tax dollars," Molino said.

Many customers have been questioning why commissaries don't have special sales comparable to local supermarkets, Molino said.

The answer, he said, is that the strict 5 percent surcharge prevents commissary managers from reducing items below that amount.

For example, even though local supermarkets have chicken on sale for 39 cents per pound and the commissary's price is 59 cents per pound, the law prohibits commissary managers from cutting the price to 39 cents to match the supermarket price.

The grocery industry also uses variable pricing to build customer loyalty.

"The motive of those stores is profit," Molino said. "The motive of our stores is to keep it a 30 percent savings to the customer.

"We'd like to make the commissary benefit more attractive to people who otherwise don't shop there — especially our young members and military families on a tight budget," he said.

So, even if the variable pricing concept were implemented, it wouldn't affect the savings service members get in their grocery cart, Molino said.

"You might save more on one item and a little less on another," he said.

Molino said DoD is concerned about people who don't shop in commissaries because it's more difficult to get onto installations because of increased security after the terrorist attacks on Sept. 11, 2001.

"We want to be able to adjust the pricing so that we can attract them to our stores," he said.

Fostering Creativity

Loyd grabs attention

Programs keep schoolchildren motivated to learn

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Like any parent or teacher could tell you, it can be tough to hold a child's attention. But the faculty of Loyd Elementary School isn't daunted.

In the weeks before Christmas vacation, Loyd was busy with festive programs to make education interesting and fun for its children.

Panther Picnic

It looked more like a hipster coffee shop than a school. The soft blankets, plush pillows and lamps provided a cozy atmosphere and a comfy place to relax at reading stations scattered throughout the building for the school's first Panther Picnic.

The program brought students and their parents to come to the school for an evening picnic and family reading night.

"It was very successful and motivating," said kindergarten teacher Tracy Pate, who borrowed the idea from her son's school. "Families came and brought a picnic dinner; some families came and stayed and read for an hour or more."

Pate said the turnout was excellent and the feedback, positive.

"We'll definitely do this again," she said. "It's very important to bring family together and to stress reading."

Pate said the event also helped foster a home and school connection, which enhances the partnership between schools and parents to further children's education.

"What children learn at school is applied in the home, and what they learn at home is applied in school," she said. "It's a big, continuous circle of learning."

Storybook Character Day

In celebration of the annual National Children's Book Week, Loyd teachers and students — even parents — got into character to pay homage to their favorite works of fiction for the school's Storybook Character Day.

A host of Harry Potters and Junie B. Jones' joined Roald Dahl's Matilda, Lily from Lily and Ms. Liberty and the newspaper delivery boy from Paper Boy in a parade around the schoolgrounds, said Mitzi Crow, Loyd's media specialist.

Crow also arranged to have Columbus' Barnes and Noble's education consultant pay a visit as the Cat in the Hat. She and a fellow teacher then morphed into Thing One and Thing Two.

The trio made their grand entrance in the school's primary wing, picking up class after class until the whole school was in line. It took two trips around the school to get everyone, Crow said.

In the days preceding the parade, students had made a mad dash to the library because they knew they would have to identify the characters during the parade, an incentive to visit the school's library.

"They came in like crazy, checking out books and looking at all the characters, so they would know who they were," Crow said.

Once the parade had finished, students gathered for an assembly, where they had a group read-along and singing.

"It's a nutty day, and we always have a good time," Crow said.

Fun and different events are important for the students, because it keeps them interested in learning and gives them variety, she said.

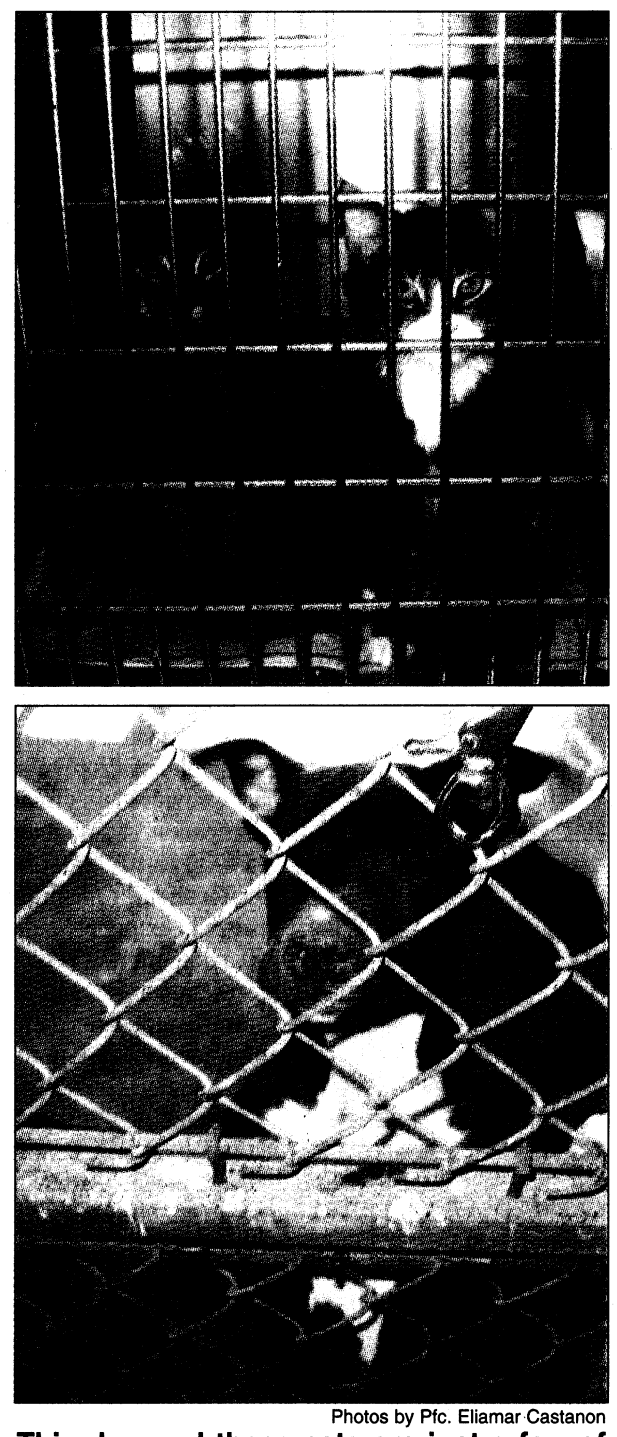
FBI Day

Loyd children also got a kick out of celebrating FBI. No, no — not the government agents: Fathers Being Involved, a program introduced to the school by second-grade teacher Sheila Cousin, who brought the idea from her daughter's school.

Courtesy photo

Loyd students give the Cat in the Hat a warm welcome during the school's Storybook Character Parade.

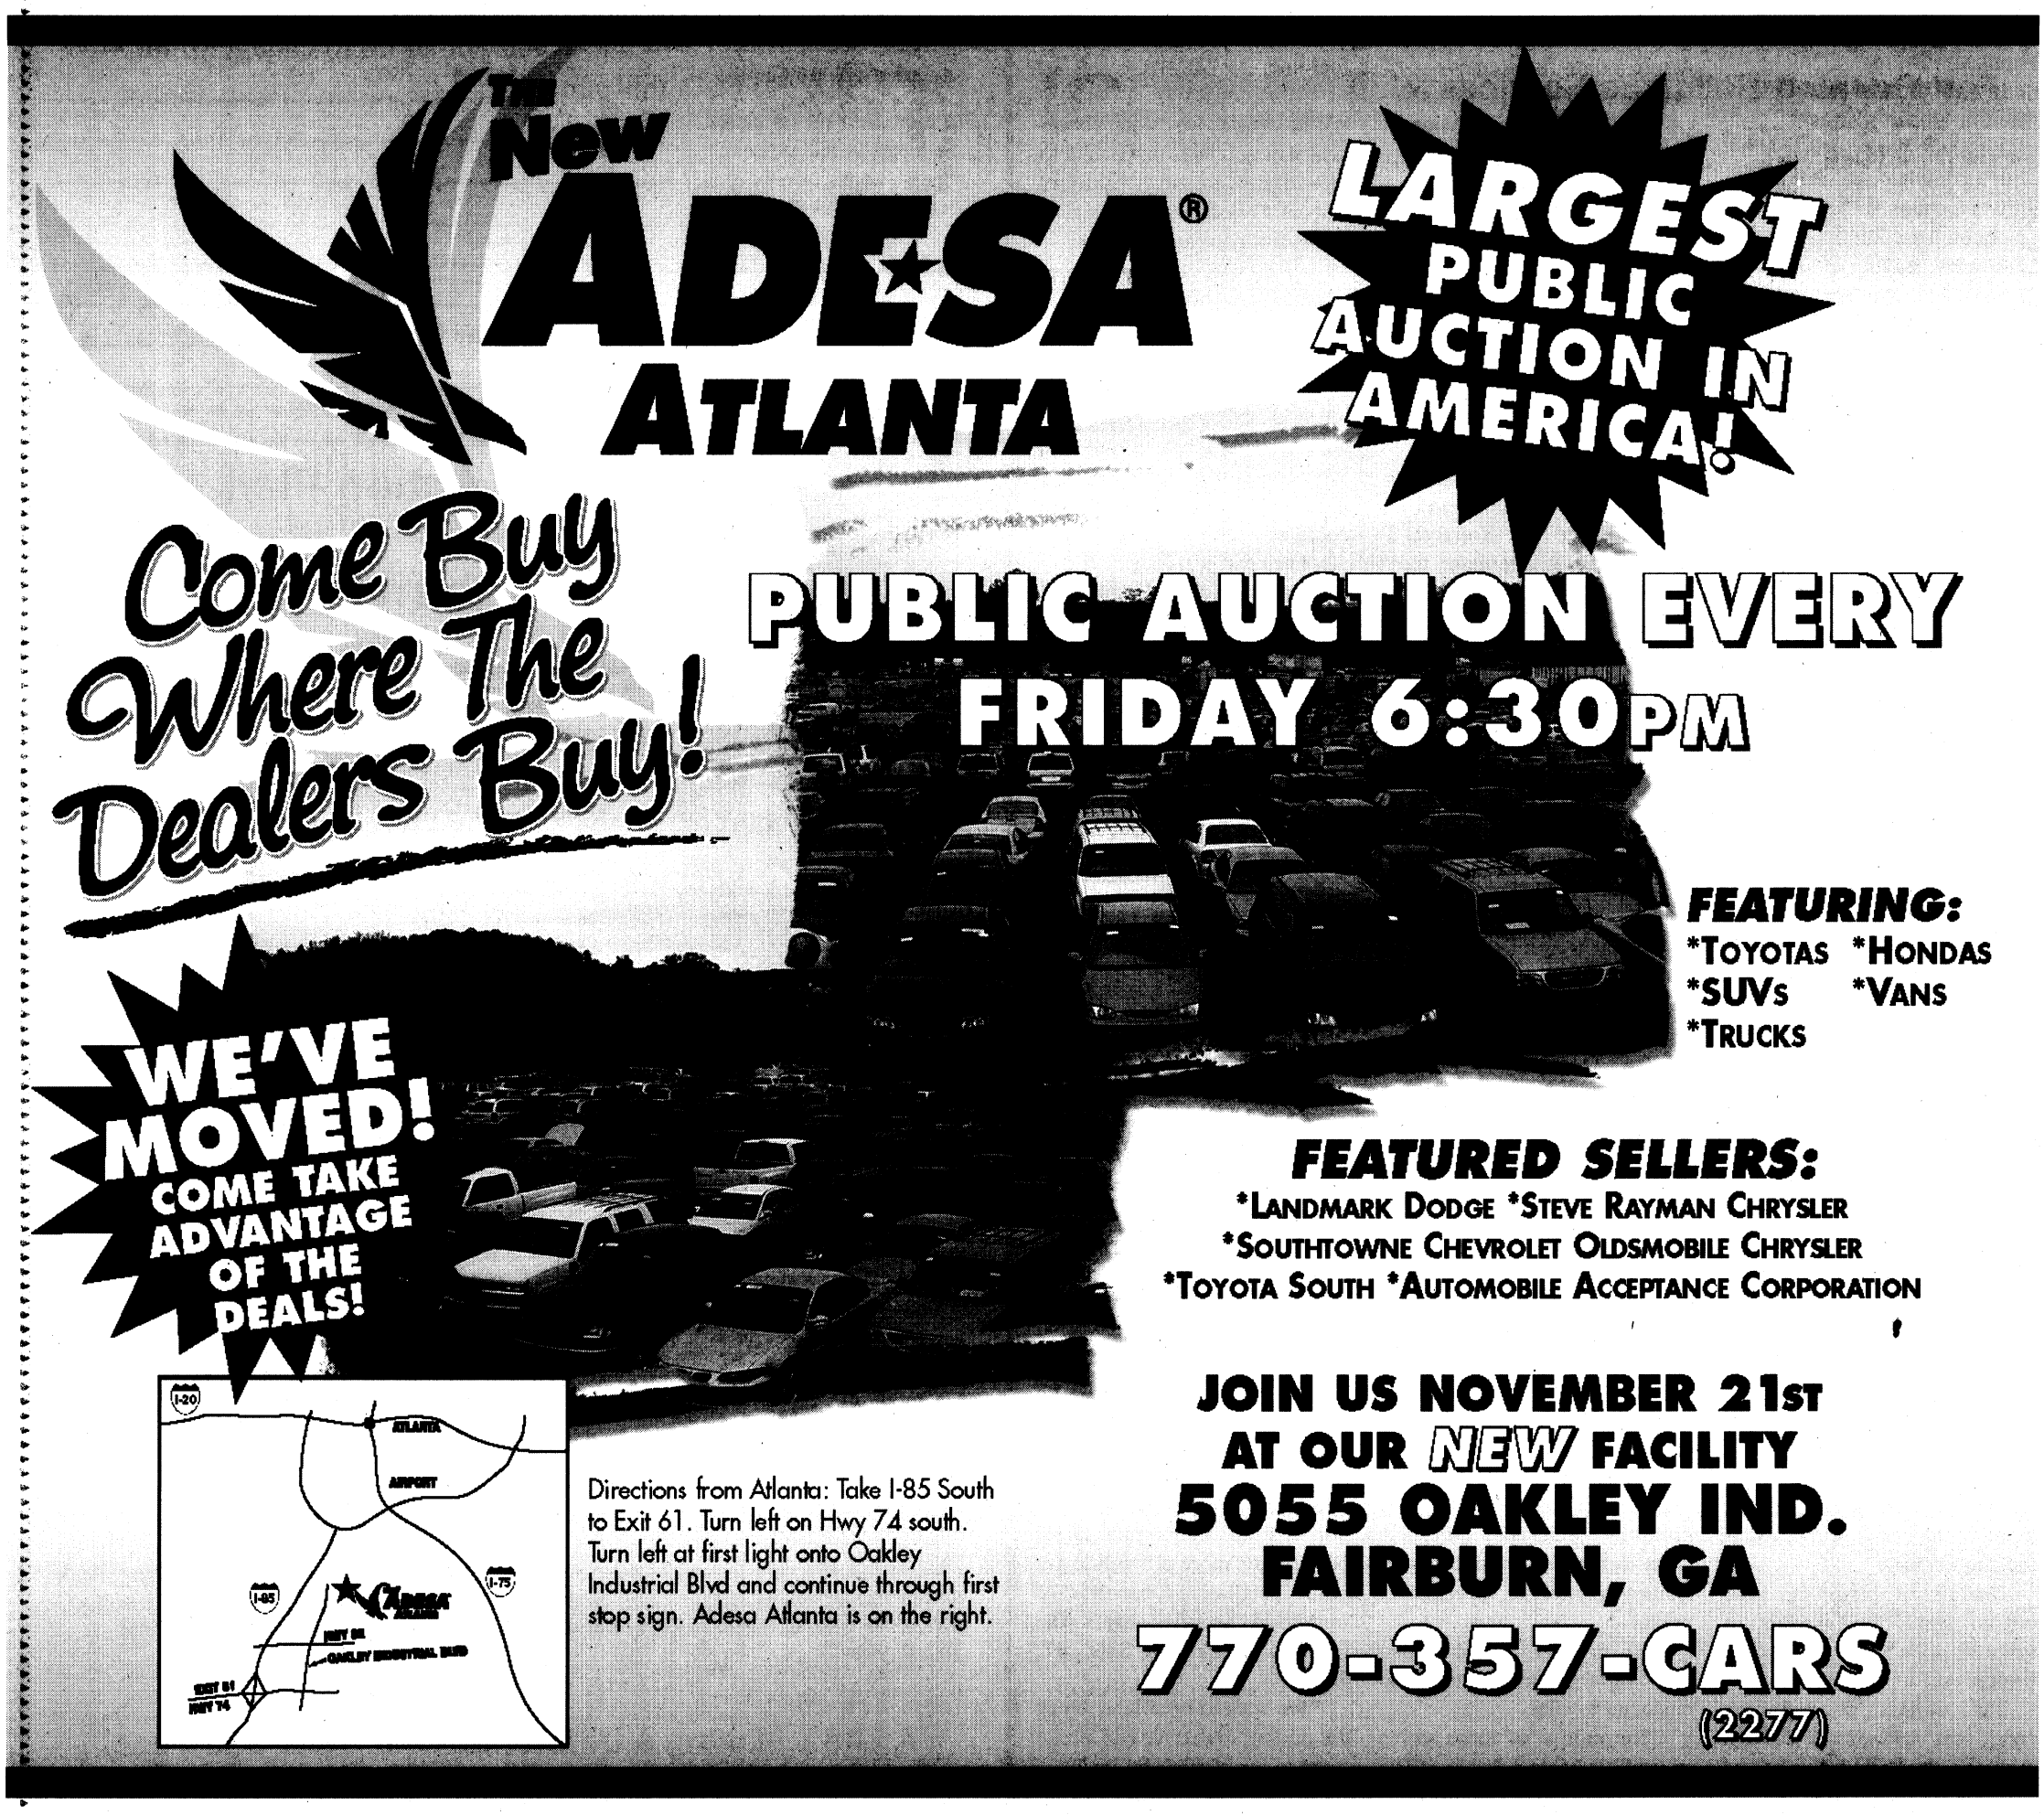
"We've done a lot of research, and studies have shown that students' achievement is greater when the parents are involved," Cousin said. "We thought it would be different to have a special day for fathers to come and spend time at the school."



Most of the children's fathers don't get a lot of time off, Cousin said, so Loyd tries to plan FBI Days for Fridays on holiday weekends.

Fathers join their kids in the classroom and read books to the students, tell stories or participate in daily activities.

"It's just phenomenal, and the kids love it," Cousin said. "They really get into it. These kids are hard workers, but it gets them really motivated about learning when their fathers are there.



"It also gives these fathers who work long, hard hours a chance to get involved with their children's education," she said.

Presents can turn into priceless new year

Begin 2004 with gifts that cost no money

Chaplain (Col.) Joseph O'Keeffe
Garrison Chaplain

How are you going to pay for all those Christmas presents you thought you should or felt you must buy?

Well, if you are like me, since Thanksgiving, you have been receiving two to three credit card applications a week offering, no, begging you to accept their card and charge it all.

They tempt you with no interest for so many months, and the interest rate is oh sooo low, that it is hard to resist accepting their offer.

But remember, there is no free lunch. Sooner or later, one must come up with the cold cash to pay off all those expensive gifts.

As you reflect on the events and experiences of Christmas 2003 and begin dreaming and planning for 2004, let me share some priceless New Year's gifts with you. Each gift is valuable, but you can't buy any of them for a million dollars.

No. 1 — The gift of listening — But you must REALLY listen. No interrupting, no daydreaming, no planning your response. Just undivided listening as a spouse, child or friends share with you their hopes and fears, their goals and dreams.

No. 2 — The gift of appreciation — Be generous with hugs, kisses, pats on the back and handholds. Let these small actions demonstrate the love you have for family and friends.

REFLECTIONS

No. 3 — The gift of laughter — Clip cartoons. Share articles and funny stories. Your gift will say, "I love to laugh with you." And laughter is good for your health.

No. 4 — The gift of a written note — It can be a simple "Thanks for the help" note or a full sonnet. A brief, handwritten note may be remembered for a lifetime and may even change a life.

No. 5 — The gift of a compliment — A simple and sincere, "You look great in red," "You did a super job" or "That was a wonderful meal" can make someone's day.

No. 6 — The gift of a favor — Every day, go out of your way to do something kind, and if you can keep it a secret, even better. Remember you and God will know and both of you will be glad.

No. 7 — The gift of solitude — There are times when we want nothing better than to be left alone. Be sensitive to those times and give the gift of solitude to others.

No. 8 — The gift of a cheerful disposition — The easiest way to feel good is to extend a kind word to someone. It's not that hard to say hello or thank you.

If you give these gifts to others and accept these gifts for yourself, you will have a wonderful 2004.

May we all have a holy, healthy and happy New Year.

CHAPEL NOTES

They also meet the third Monday of each month at 7 p.m. at TIC annex for Bible study. Child care is provided at both meetings.

For more information, call Theresa McCrackine at 687-0894.

Best gifts are those not seen

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

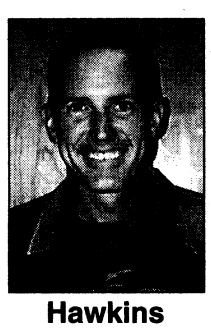
'Tis the week after Christmas and out in the den Daddy is watching pro football again.

The children are throwing and breaking their toys,

And mother is up to her ears in the noise.

The melting snow drips through a hole in the roof;

Wow! One of the reindeer sure had a sharp hoof.



Ribbons and wrappings are spread all around,

And when they're cleared, our lost boy will be found.

Santa long since disappeared in the fog,

The turkey is tasteless and the eggnog won't nog.

The holly and ivy, the tinsel and lights,

Hawkins

No longer bring warm glows on cold, darkened nights.

Children who last week were helpful and sweet,

Have mouths that are sassy and rooms less than neat.

Those people with faces that smiled forth like elves,

Are now once again just their grouchy old selves.

The carols of joy and hope filled the air,

But now they are muffled by hard rock's loud blare.

The cold winds which now make Aunt Josephine freeze,

Were not even noticed on Yule shopping sprees.

Why should such a great day let us down so hard?

Is there something about Christmas that we disregard?

The babe in the manger became a great man.

He grew up to be Savior; that was God's plan.

Remember when you take down that last Christmas bough,

He'll never love you more than he loves you right now.

And if we know that Christ loves us and always is near,

Then Christmas can be every day of the year!

Youth basketball season to begin

With the new year comes a new season of Youth Services basketball, starting Saturday morning.

At a Monday practice, children worked on their skills to prepare for the upcoming season.

"The skill levels on the team vary," said Elliott Caggins, coach for an 8- to 9-year-old team. "Some kids should be playing up an age group, and some are right where they need to be. My job is to take their skill level now and cultivate it for next season."

During the course of the season, Caggins hopes to make a positive experience for the whole team.

"I coach because I like to come out here with my son and support the other kids," he said.

Caggins' son, Zach, is working this season to improve stats.

"I hope to average more points than I did last season and get more assists," Zach said. "My favorite part of the game is winning. It makes me feel good 'cause I did something and accomplished it."

But the whole experience of team sports is not based on whether the game is won or not, said Dorrie Wagner, sports specialist with Youth Services.

"I play basketball because I like that you get to learn teammates' names, and make friends," Zach said. "You can't do things by yourself so you have to have a team to help you."

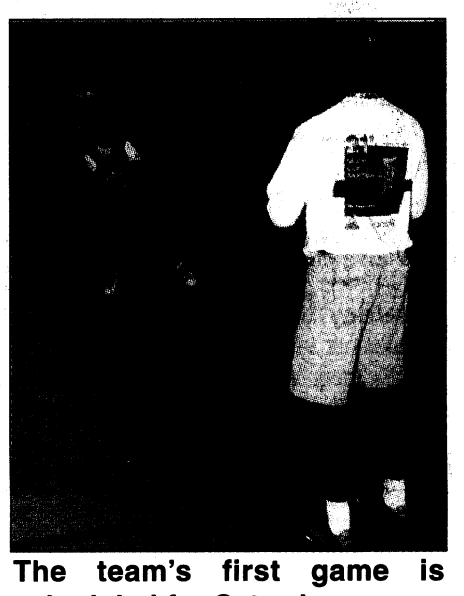
Another important part of the Youth Sports teams are the parents and fans who are encouraged to come out and cheer for their teams at the games.

"I think attendance motivates the kids to show team spirit and sportsmanship," said parent Sonia Robinson. "It shows they're not out there just to win, but it really motivates them and builds self-esteem."

Robinson played several sports herself when she was in school and sees the advantages for her son.

"I want him to get into this so he'll be more active," Robinson said. "He gets to know new people in a different environment.

"He loves playing basketball and looked forward to the season all year."



This year's league has about its annual average of players, which comes out to 16 teams.

There is currently a waiting list for late registers at Building 359.

For more information, call 545-3582.

The team's first game is scheduled for Saturday.

The Columbus Hurricanes offer an opportunity for young people to build character, form social skills and team sportsmanship, said Michele Walton, assistant coach of the senior swimmers for the team.

Swim team cultivates ability, character

Columbus Hurricanes on solid ground

Many swimmers who come to Fort Benning are surprised the post doesn't have its own swim team. They need not despair, though, because they have a local option — the Columbus Hurricanes.

The Hurricanes, who practice at the D.A. Turner YMCA pool in the winter swim season, have a strong Fort Benning connection. The head coach for the senior swimmers is Staff Sgt. Van Walton, of C Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, an instructor at the mechanized infantry school.

Walton's wife, Michele, is the assistant senior coach. She also is the health and safety director for Fort Benning's American Red Cross station.

And nearly one-fifth of the team's roughly 100 swimmers are children of military members.

To join the Hurricanes, young swimmers must be able to swim a length of the pool (25 yards) in both the freestyle and backstroke. Accomplishing that allows them to join the four-week developmental program.

"We have to develop them to come onto the team," said Mike McCardle, head coach for the younger age-group swimmers, a former All-American himself who's been coaching the Hurricanes for almost two decades.

The developmental program readies swimmers in all four strokes, including breaststroke and butterfly, and from there they can sign up for the team.

Faith Middle School eighth-grader Loren Fuentes, 14, has been a swimmer since she was 6. Now a senior swimmer for the Hurricanes, she practices as often as six days a week, her mom, Sue Fuentes, said.

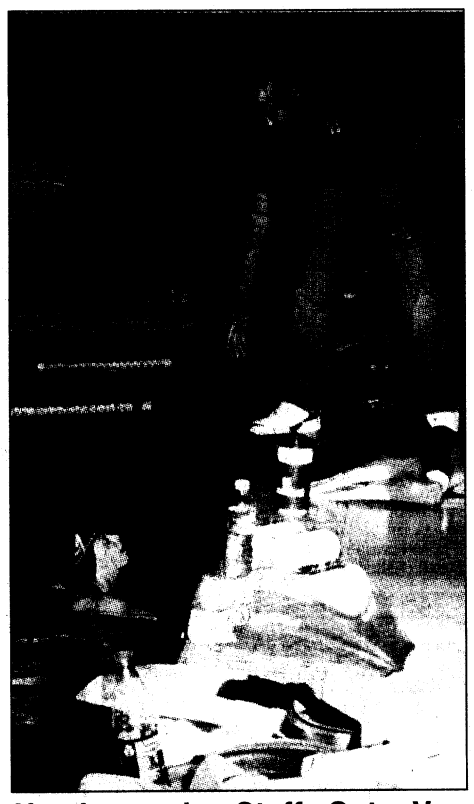
"She loves to swim more than anything," Fuentes said. Loren's been swimming with the team nearly three years, and her mom said "she'll do anything to get to swim practice."

That's music to the coaches' ears.

"I think swimming is a necessity," said Michele, her role as a Red Cross safety trainer coming through now.

Apart from the importance of knowing how to swim, though, all of the coaches emphasize the well-rounded experience swimmers gain from being individual participants and part of a team.

"It builds character," Michele said. "It helps in forming social skills and team sportsmanship, even if they're not a great swimmer."



That approach is part of the team philosophy.

"Competitive swimming should be looked at as a fun and exciting as well as educational experience," the team's Web site reads. "Swimming can be learned and enjoyed by those with very little natural ability as well as those with Olympic potential. The value of swimming goes far beyond anything that is learned in the water."

McCardle and the Waltons all encourage swimmers to develop their potential in and out of the water.

"My main job is to make better kids," McCardle said. He often tells the younger swimmers that it's all about mind, body and soul, and they seem to lap it up.

While winning is always a boost to the swimmers and the team, the trophy chase isn't their sole focus. Personal bests are celebrated, even if the swimmer finished last in a meet.

Head coach, Staff Sgt. Van Walton, of 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, an instructor at the mechanized infantry school, offers his instruction to one of the senior swimmers.

CLOSER LOOK

More about the Columbus Hurricanes:

- They practice at the D.A. Turner YMCA pool in the winter season, through May. It is an eight-lane, heated, 25-yard indoor pool.
- In the summer months, the team practices at Double Churches Community Park pool, which is an eight-lane, 50-meter outdoor facility.
- To learn more about how to be a part of the Columbus Hurricanes swim team, call 561-2547 or coach Mike McCardle at home, (334) 480-9866 (after 6 p.m.).
- The team Web site, www.swimhurricanes.com, also gives information on practice times, categories, team records and more.

All-Army championships set for March

USAMU to host rifle competition

U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the All-Army Small Arms Championships March 14 to 25.

The last All-Army Championships were in 1994.

Soldiers and units will compete with the M-16 rifle or M-4 carbine, M-9 pistol and M-24 or M-14 rifles against counterparts from the regular Army, Reserve, National Guard and Cadet Command.

USAMU has a limited number of weapons available for Soldiers and cadets who do not have assigned weapons.

"The advanced shooting experience gained in these challenging matches will translate into better trained and confident Soldiers, ready to meet the challenges of the global war on terrorism," said USAMU Commander Lt. Col. David J. Liwanag. "These championships are the pinnacle of in-service Army competitive marksmanship training."

Soldiers who excel in the All-Army Championships may be selected to compete on the Army, Army Reserve or National Guard Rifle and Pistol Teams in the Interservice and National Championship competitions.

Winners of designated matches and classifications may be awarded Secretary of the Army Trophy rifles.

Rifle matches will be shot at ranges from 200 to 500 yards. Pistol matches will be fired under combat time standards at seven to 25 yards. All firing will be done with helmet and individual combat gear (minus body armor and mask). Long-range matches will be fired at ranges of 600 to 1,000 yards.

Matches are open to all Soldiers worldwide of any military occupational specialty and U.S. Military Academy and ROTC cadets.

Squad-size teams will be from brigades, divisions, major commands, each individual state and territory and Army Reserve major subordinate commands.

For more information call Michael J. Behnke, USAMU chief of competitions, at 545-7841 or e-mail him at michael.behnke@usarec.army.mil.

For more information, call 545-4388.

Hunting regulations — There have been many changes to the Fort Benning Hunting and Fishing regulations. Changes include:

• People authorized to hunt or fish on Fort Benning have been expanded to include all DoD civilian employees working full-time or the equivalent, regardless of where they work, and all active national guardsmen and reservists who are in a paid drill status, regardless of where they are assigned.

• The numbers of guests that can be sponsored per day has increased from two to three.

• Anyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must prove they successfully completed a hunter safety course in order to hunt on either the Georgia or Alabama sides of the installation.

• Guest permits can be purchased as daily passes, monthly weekend passes, or in periods of time up to 30 consecutive days.

Saturday bike rides — Saturday bike rides are in full gear.

Riders meet at 10 a.m. Saturdays at Briant Wells Field House and can choose from 10-, 15- or 20-mile rides. Additional miles can be added on demand. All you need is a bike, helmet, water and plenty of energy.

For more information, call 545-9987 or 545-4388.

Arena football — Alignment for the 2004 af2 football season, which begins in late March, features a 26-team format consisting of two conferences divided into three divisions.

The American and National conferences each consist of 13 teams within three divisions. The Northeast, South and Mid-South divisions form the American Conference, while the Southwest, Midwest and West divisions complete the National Conference. Each division has four teams except the American Conference South and the National Conference Southwest divisions, with five teams each.

For ticket information, call 653-7789 or log on to columbuswardogs.com.

ALA golf card — The American Lung Association of Georgia's 2004 Golf Privilege Card is on sale. The card covers more than 600 courses in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and South Carolina. The cardholder can play one or more rounds of golf for free or reduced greens fees on every course listed. Through Jan. 10, the Golf Card is available for $20 per card, or four for $60. Visa and MasterCard are accepted.

To purchase a 2004 Golf Privilege Card, call the American Lung Association toll-free at (866) 609-GOLF or visit the Web site at www.golfsouth.org.

TOPSoccer — TOPSoccer, a soccer training and team placement program, provides the opportunity to learn and play soccer to any boy or girl, ages 4 to 19, who has a mental or physical disability.

TOPSoccer needs the following: players, players buddies, coaches, sponsors and team managers.

For more information, call Beth Casrona, president, at 518-1485 or e-mail TOPSoccerPresident @CYSASoccer.com.

Chess tournaments — Players of all ages and skills are invited to the Chattahoochee Valley Scholastic Chess League Third Thursday Chess Tournaments at the Columbus Museum.

Tournament rounds begin at 6, 6:45 and 7:30 p.m. The museum is located at 1251 Wynnton Road. Admission is free.

CONGRATULATIONS ROB GRANAI

Rob Granai served with the Third Ranger Battalion during two combat tours: Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom. As a distinguished soldier, he received a Purple Heart and is respected by all his peers.

A native of Rhode Island, Rob was stationed at Fort Benning for his entire military career. He quickly became accustomed to the Southern life-style and decided to settle in Columbus following his tour of duty. After completing his service with the Army, Rob began searching for a challenging career. "All I needed was someone to take a chance on an energetic, hardworking young man.

"I wanted to get into automobile sales because I had seen some of my friends taken advantage of by some shady car dealers. I wanted to prove you could make a living as a car salesman and still treat people right.

"After hearing about the excellent way some of my other friends were treated at Bill Heard Cadillac and Premium Used Cars, I went to Mark Levy, General Manager, and asked for a job at a dealership I could be proud of every day.

"Now, I can sell a nice vehicle that has been properly checked and serviced before it goes on the lot for sale. The deals will be fair, and I know all my customers will be pleased."

Please contact Rob at Bill Heard Cadillac and Premium Used Cars, located behind Bill Heard Chevrolet. Simply drive straight down and make a right at Bill Heard Cadillac and Rob is located at the Premium Used Car building. Call locally 706-322-8881 or toll-free 1-888-322-8881 and ask for him. In his words, "Just give me a chance to work for you!"

THERE'S NOT ENOUGH ART IN OUR SCHOOLS.

NO WONDER PEOPLE THINK LOUIS ARMSTRONG WAS THE FIRST MAN TO WALK ON THE MOON.

It's a long way from the Apollo Theatre to the Apollo program. And while his playing may have been "as lofty as a moon flight," as Time magazine once suggested, that would be as close as Louis Daniel Armstrong would ever get to taking "one small step for man."

But as the premier jazz musician of the 20th century, giant leaps were a matter of course for Satchmo. No person before or since has ever embodied — and revolutionized — jazz the way Louis Armstrong did.

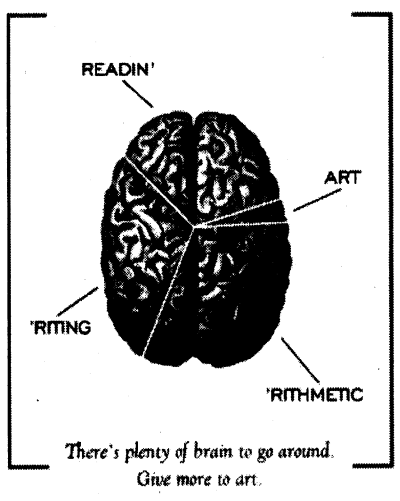
Armstrong left his footprints all over the jazz world. And he usually did it in lace-up oxfords.

Take solos, for instance. It's impossible to imagine jazz without them. But they actually didn't become an established part of the jazz vocabulary until Armstrong helped popularize them. Seventy years later, his solos are still revered for their audacity and virtuosity.

In the 1950s, when his popularity became too big to be contained within our borders, he accepted an invitation from the State Department to act as an American goodwill ambassador around the world. And when he became the last jazz musician to hit #1 on the Billboard pop chart, he beat the Beatles to do it.

Instead of a giant leap, Louis Armstrong delivered one giant free-form crazy jazz groove for mankind.

Not bad for a kid whose first experience with a trumpet was as a guest in a New Orleans correction home for wayward boys. If only today's schools were as enlightened as that reformatory was.



LOUIS THE FIRST.

Ask almost any parent, and they'll say arts education is very important to their child's well-being. Virtually every study shows that moms and dads like the effects the arts have on their children. They like that dance and music and painting and drama teach kids to be more tolerant and open. They like that they allow boys and girls to express themselves creatively. And they appreciate that the arts help promote individuality, bolster self-confidence while also improving overall academic performance.

Which makes it so surprising that the arts have been allowed to virtually disappear from our schools. And our children's lives.

THIS IS WHAT HORNS ARE FOR.

A little art is not enough. If you think the hour or so of art your kids are getting each week isn't nearly their fair share, it's time to make some noise. To find out just how to get involved or for more information on the ways your child can benefit from arts education, please visit us on the web at AmericansForTheArts.org. Just like the great Satchmo, all you need is a little brass.

There's plenty of brain to go around. Give more to art.

ART. ASK FOR MORE.

BCTB to boost training

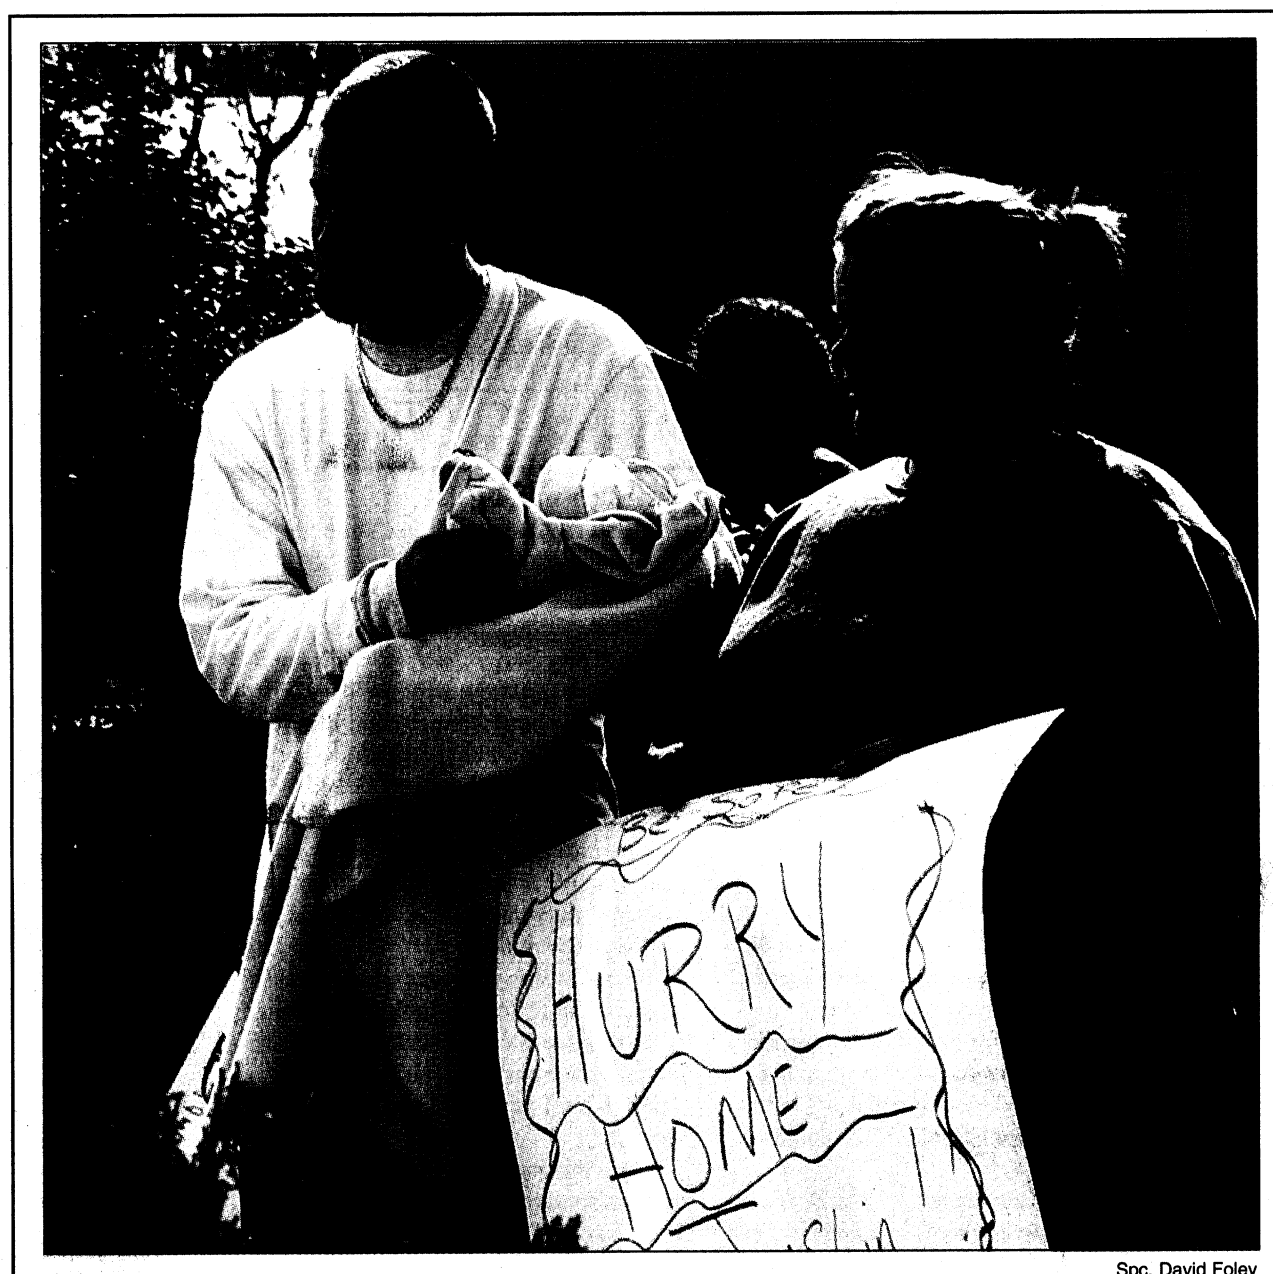
Soldiers to learn more combat skills

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

One of Fort Benning's basic combat training companies is figuratively diving head first into a new program of instruction while other initial entry training companies are gradually enhancing their training.

Basic combat training and one station unit training units Armywide are preparing for one of the biggest changes to Army training in 20 years, as they prepare Soldiers to operate on today's battlefield.

The enhancements to the program of instruction are part of an ongoing effort in Task Force Soldier to create a more lethal and agile fighting force.



The enhanced basic training program keeps all the traditional elements that have been a successful part of basic combat training for generations. The new elements will train Soldiers on tasks required for deployments in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom, said Col. William J. Gallagher, Fort Benning's Basic Combat Training Brigade commander.

> "... all Soldiers from infantrymen to combat support Soldiers must be ready to (close with) the enemy in close combat at any time while in a combat zone."

"In Iraq and Afghanistan, there is no front; there is no rear; it is not a linear battlefield like we have seen in previous wars," Gallagher said. "Therefore, all Soldiers from infantrymen to combat support Soldiers must be ready to (close with) the enemy in close combat at any time while in a combat zone.

"It is this complex and dangerous environment that is providing the lessons learned which are to be incorporated into basic combat

926th Medical Detachment deploys to Iraq

The 926th Medical Detachment boarded a van Tuesday bound for Atlanta, where they caught a plane to Kuwait City for their first deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

The detachment, which falls under the 44th Medical Brigade, but is assigned to the 36th Engineer Group for administrative purposes, will move from Kuwait City into Iraq and perform a variety of duties in support of other deployed Soldiers.

Sgt. 1st Class Cherry Fowlkes, detachment first sergeant, said they definitely have their work cut out for them when they get there.

"We have a lot of jobs and not a lot of people," she said.

The eight man-unit's mission can be divided into five major areas of responsibility:

• Water quality monitoring and analysis — The unit will test potable water and natural water sources and provide feedback on the health impacts of the water quality.

• Food service sanitation and inspection — They will inspect food service facilities operated by the Army, AAFES and contractors to ensure proper food handling, storage, preparation and service.

• Disease control and prevention — They will monitor disease trends within the area of operation and

'TF Soldier' hones in on troops

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

While drilling the Warrior ethos into all Soldiers of both the active and reserve components is one of their top priorities, so is ensuring that all deploying members of the Army team are properly trained and equipped, according to members of a Fort Benning task force.

TF Soldier has been charged by the chief of staff of the Army to analyze Soldier training, equipment and readiness needs and coordinate with other Army organizations to implement programs and policies to meet those needs.

The Warrior ethos statement contained within the new Soldier's Creed is a key aspect of the Soldier focus area, said Brig. Gen. Benjamin C. Freakley, commanding general.

"This is about shifting the mindset of Soldiers from identifying what they do as a Soldier ... toward 'I am a warrior' when people ask what they do for a living," Freakley said.

The Soldier's Creed helps Soldiers understand that all Soldiers are warriors and members of a team, Freakley said. The creed is also about changing the Army culture by encouraging it to examine its beliefs from a warrior's perspective and checking that the Army produces and retains Soldiers of value to the nation.

While Freakley said he had a

Benning to host reserve, guard training

Units combine to prepare for Iraq

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

A Sand Hill battalion that usually houses basic training Soldiers is now housing Army Reserve and National Guard Soldiers preparing for deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Building 3105, former home of 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, will house more than 16 Reserve and National Guard units from the southeastern region, said Lt. Col. Michael A. Sharp, commander, 2nd Bn., 305th Field Artillery Regt., from Camp Shelby, Miss.

While here, the units will receive training for upcoming deployments. The Soldiers will deploy to Iraq by the end of March, Sharp said.

Fort Benning is one of six places responsible for training Soldiers for deployment.

Training support and garrison support units from Nashville, Tenn., and Camp Shelby, have come to help the post with the mobilization and demobilization process.

The 2145th Garrison Support Unit from Nashville, has been at Fort Benning since Jan. 16, 2003, providing command and control of the Soldiers' mobilization and demobilization process, said Command Sgt. Maj. Mikal B. Patterson, command sergeant major of the 2145th GSU.

"We are here to make sure no unit leaves untrained," Patterson said. "We take care of these Soldiers until their boots are on the ground overseas."

The GSU's mission is important because it facilitates the rapid deployment of reserve and guard Soldiers, said Lt. Col. Daniel Schultz, GSU commander.

It's the GSU's responsibility to make sure all Soldiers receive the training, briefings and equipment necessary for their deployment, Patterson said.

Meanwhile, Camp Shelby's 3rd Brigade, 87th Division (Training Support), is the mobilization assistance team responsible for training the mobilized Soldiers.

"We're here to make sure the Soldiers know all the techniques, tactics and procedures they need to know for the battlefield," said Lt. Col. Rusty Cullinane, operations officer, 3rd Bde., 87th Div (TS).

"All the training the Soldiers receive is from lessons learned in the battlefield," he said.

The division has two battalions here in charge of training the Soldiers in specific areas.

REALITY SHOWS

Why do we watch?

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

I've been pondering, and that's not something I do lightly. I've been trying to figure out what it is about reality shows that has the whole nation hooked, and I've decided that we like to watch people make fools of themselves. Back at home in our easy chairs, we can laugh our heads off because … it's not us.

I'll admit to watching reality shows, but only the good ones, or the ones I have a vested financial interest in. I just can't get into perky, bubbly Trista picking the love of her life, or contestants battling their "fears" to eat some nasty and unsanitary concoction.

You see, I'm $160 richer because of Vecepia in Survivor: Marquesas, the fourth installment in the Survivor series. And if Lil hadn't taken Sandra to the final tribal council a few weeks ago, I'd be up another $160.

I was devastated. I'm not playing odds or anything. I just threw my $10 in the hat with 15 friends and was randomly assigned a Survivor contestant. If your Survivor wins, you win. It's simple — no odds involved and no stress involved (like I had participating in our Pick 12). Rest assured, I've already sent in my money for the next round of Survivor All-Stars.

The only other reality show I watch is the Amazing Race. There's something vaguely military about sending people around the world in 30 or so days and watching them navigate through the streets of cities like Alleppy, India, and Mooloolaba, Australia. There's enough drama involved to keep everyone entertained, especially when a separated couple unites for the race and she spends a lot of time flirting with the rivals.

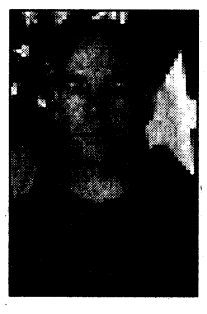
What I like best about Race is there isn't a lot of gross or demeaning stuff. I watched a few teams try to choke their way through a plate of freshly cut up octopi, tentacles sticking to their teeth the whole time. But the difference was, they had a choice. If you can't "cut" the octopi, you at least had an alternative.

I'm the armchair quarterback for these two reality shows. I could never do Survivor, but I like to think my dad and I could kick um ... fanny ... on Amazing Race.

We'd even be the first father-daughter pair.

But of course, there's the down side of all those reality shows. You open the door and potentially let millions of people into your life.

I do that often enough in these commentaries, much to the chagrin of my family. But the reality is, I just don't want my third-grade classmates talking to the press about how I tried to tape emery boards to my fingers to keep from biting my nails.



MLK weekend calls for travel safety

Martin Luther King Jr. Day, celebrated Monday, provides the first long holiday weekend for 2004. With the chance of bad weather at this time of year and increased traffic associated with any long weekend, the potential for traffic accidents is great.

To compensate for this risk, I ask everyone to:

• Drive under the speed limit. Reduce speed during limited visibility or other adverse road conditions.

• Stay alert and sober. Take a rest break at least every two hours on long trips.

• Fasten your seatbelt every time you get into a vehicle. Even the best driver cannot avoid an accident when another driver runs into them.

• Ensure a window is slightly open to combat fatigue and carbon monoxide poisoning. Carbon monoxide is odorless, colorless and deadly.

I encourage all Soldiers and civilian employees to enjoy a safe holiday weekend. Watch your speed — have a great weekend! Follow Me!

Commanding General

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Readers respond to restaurant review

I am a recent transplant from Lancaster, Pa., to Columbus. As you may or may not know, Lancaster County is rich in its German roots and traditions. I, myself, am a fourth generation German-American. Besides being brought up with the many stories, history and language of my German relatives, I also gained a great love of the cuisine. Which is why after a few months of homesickness, I was delighted to discover a restaurant called the Bavarian House. If I couldn't have my family down here then at least I could have something else that was close to my heart — the food that I was brought up on.

From the moment I walked into the Bavarian House, I felt like I was at home. Not only was the service pleasant, but the Bavarian schnitzel and potato salad was just as I remembered my grandmother preparing it. Since that first visit, my fiancé and I have been back several times and have enjoyed it every single time.

Because of the many good experiences my fiancé and I and several others have had dining at the Bavarian House, I felt it necessary to correct the accusations I read in your article concerning the restaurant.

I realize that you, Ms. Egan, were probably brought up on a similar German diet to mine as well and might have been disappointed in the fact that it was not exactly like the one you remember. However, I did not feel it was fair of you to make negatively biased comments saying that the food was made incorrectly because it was not prepared how your husband makes it.

Ms. Egan, since you have been eating German food all your life and seem to consider yourself a connoisseur of it, do you realize that there are five different ways to prepare German potato salad and at least three different ways to prepare Goulasch depending on which area you are from in Germany? I'm assuming the answer is "no" simply because if you did, you would not have made those remarks.

I do not go into a restaurant and complain when, for example, the meatloaf and mashed potatoes isn't the same age-old, tried and tested recipe that my mother served at the dinner table. That could be just me though.

Hopefully, the readers of The Bayonet will have more common sense to try a taste of the Bavarian House than your article presented because it would be a shame to go without one of the best things that has happened to Columbus in a while.

Jessica Chladny
Columbus

In the article "Bavarian House," I found the article to be in very bad taste. Speaking of taste, that varies with each individual. Just because one has the means to express one's opinion, doesn't mean they should.

Of all the restaurants in Columbus, you single out one. If you ran a weekly article about restaurants it might have been different, but to blast one because the food was not prepared the way your husband prepared it is almost an abuse of power.

You talk about German food like you are an expert. I am no expert but I know that even in Germany, every restaurant has its own way of preparing dishes. Different spices, different ingredients, potato salad can be made at least 20 different ways, rouladen may have onion, egg, sausage and pickle in the middle.

It sounds like you were upset because the German restaurant took the building your favorite Italian restaurant was in. Luna Azzura served a fair meal in my opinion but I never bad-mouthed it to anyone.

I feel the one thing a business doesn't need is someone expressing their opinion of "Nicht So Gut" to thousands of readers when it is just their opinion.

Power outages addressed on post

Flint Energies updates infrastructure

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning has suffered power outages recently, but work is being done to prevent them from occurring in the future.

Fort Benning privatized ownership of its electrical system in June 1999. Flint EMC has been upgrading the post's antiquated electrical infrastructure since then.

The updates have reduced the number of outages, and they continue to decrease each year, said Benny Hines, chief of utilities sales and services, Directorate of Engineering Facilities and Logistics.

"Due to budget constraints within the Department of Defense, the Army was unable to properly maintain the electric distribution system or keep the right of way along the system clear for several years," said Ronnie Sanders, Flint Energies vice president of military and community affairs.

"The post was experiencing daily interruptions and outages," he said.

When the Army was doing the maintenance, the budget didn't have the money necessary for repairs and replacement, so the infrastructure was outdated when handed over to Flint, Hines said.

When Flint took over in 1999, the company immediately looked at the system's seven substations and line apparatuses to repair and replace faulty equipment, Sanders said. It was also necessary to better distribute or balance the power load.

"It is normal for electric utilities to see a 1 percent to 3 percent failure rate with utility poles due to age, wear and tear," Sanders said.

"When Flint began upgrading the Fort Benning system, it found a 15 percent failure rate and has since replaced nearly 600 poles and more than 300 wooden cross arms that support the lines and transformers," he said.

Flint has also replaced more than 6,000 feet of underground, lead-shielded cable, an antiquated cable technology that was no longer thought to have existed on post.

"Sometimes with underground cable, you don't know what you have until it begins to fail and it's unearthed for repair," Sanders said.

"Flint has found this type of cable on the base as it has failed, and the company has replaced it with the latest technology. The newer cable is more reliable and safer for the environment," Sanders said.

Flint found an array of electric utility equipment decades old. As a result, there was a lack of standardization, which Flint has worked to improve as well.

This makes the system more economical and efficient.

Flint has replaced and installed lightning arresters to improve lightning protection during storms and improve the system's ability to withstand inclement weather with minimal outages.

> "The problem is you have to go from manhole to manhole to find the problem area. Once we find it, we can usually fix it pretty quickly."
> Benny Hines
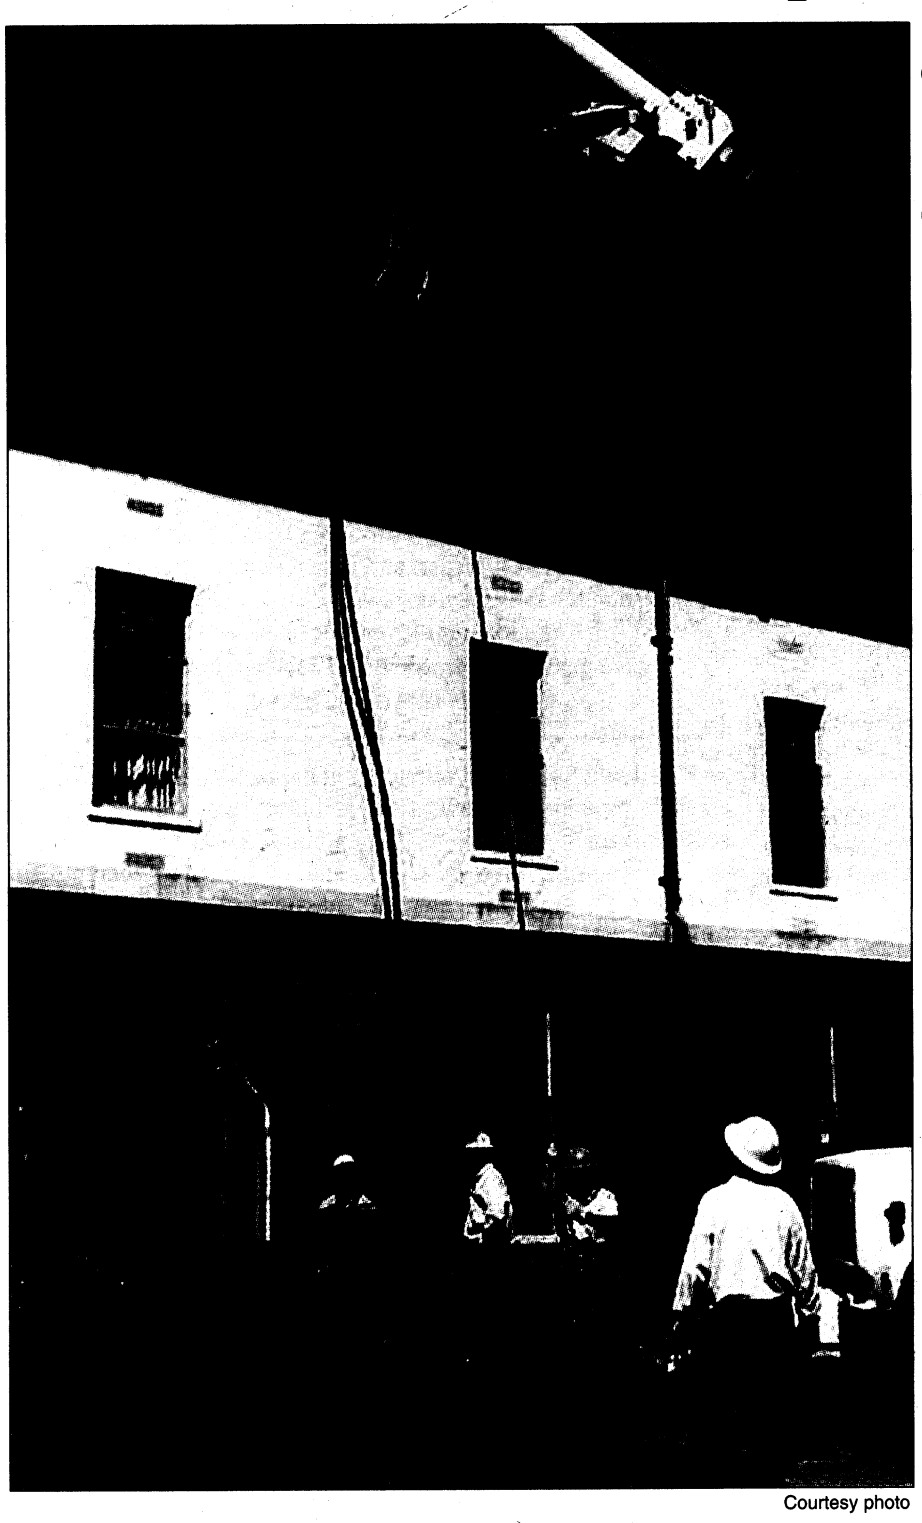
> Chief of utilities sales and services, Directorate of Engineering Facilities and Logistics

One of the most recent outages was because of a failure in an underground wire.



"The problem is you have to go from manhole to manhole to find the problem area," Hines said. "Once we find it, we can usually fix it pretty quickly."

With the upgraded system, some of the usual causes of power outages are animals.

"One of our biggest problems is squirrels," Hines said. "They short out the system when they get in the wires and it burns out the fuses and sometimes even the transformers," he said.

"Squrriels and birds are the most common, but one time a snake crawled up and shorted out a whole subsystem."

Now Fort Benning is working on other problem areas to improve service.

"Street lighting has become a major priority Fort Benning. This is another area where we have seen examples of each type of lighting ever made," Sanders said. "Flint is replacing and repairing lights on a daily basis and re-routing how they are served electrically.

"We have made more than 2,000 repairs. This will improve the brightness of street lighting on post and give a sense of security and safety for personnel and families."

"If you want it all, we've got it all."

Warrior ethos not just for combat

Soldiers' minds set for quick adaptation

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

While the warrior ethos may be central to the new Soldier's Creed, it is not new to the Army.

Field Manual 22-100, Army Leadership, published in August 1999, defines the warrior ethos as the desire to accomplish the mission despite all adversity.

The manual also states, "The warrior ethos applies to all Soldiers and (Department of the Army) civilians, not just with those who close with and destroy the enemy."

The warrior ethos is also discussed in FM 7-0, Training the Force, published in October 2002: "Warrior ethos compels Soldiers to fight through all conditions to victory no matter how much effort is required. It is the Soldier's selfless commitment to the nation, mission, unit and fellow Soldiers. Warrior ethos is grounded in refusal to accept failure."

And according to Brig. Gen. Benjamin C. Freakley, chief of Infantry and Fort Benning commanding general, the warrior ethos is about manning the force with adaptive Soldiers who do not rely on a single set of job skills to get the job done.

"What we are talking about is adaptive Soldiers who are situationally aware of what is going on around them and have a mindset that is ready to quickly adapt to changing situations and environments to accomplish the mission," Freakley said. "It is like a football team where the quarterback reads the defense on the line after the huddle and doesn't like what he sees.

"With a good team, the quarterback can call an audible for a different play at the last minute based upon the defensive situation," he said.

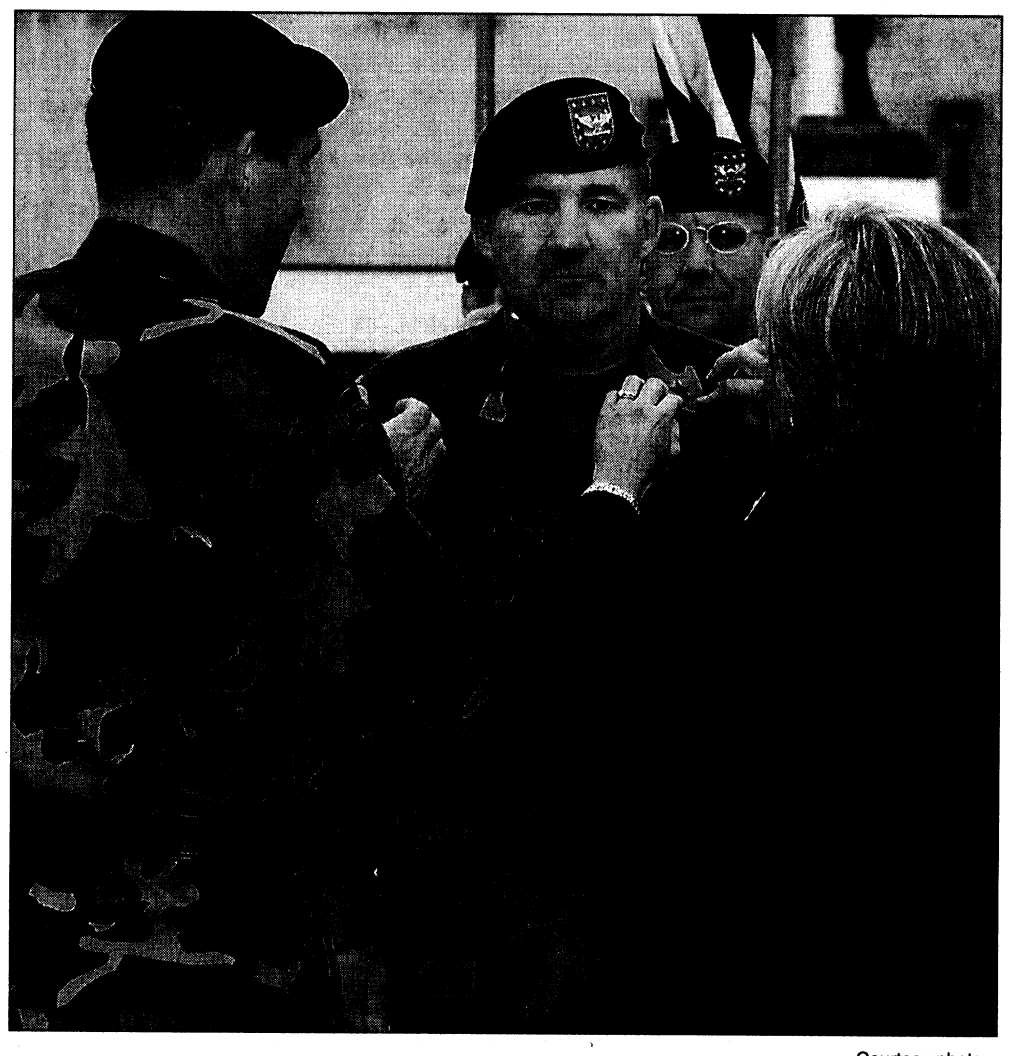
Soldier's Creed

I am an American Soldier. I am a Warrior and a member of a team. I serve the people of the United States and live the Army Values.

I will always place the mission first. I will never accept defeat. I will never quit. I will never leave a fallen comrade.

I am disciplined, physically and mentally tough, trained and proficient in my warrior tasks and drills.

I always maintain my arms, my equipment and myself.



I am an expert and I am a professional.

I stand ready to deploy, engage and destroy the enemies of the United States of America in close combat.

I am a guardian of freedom and the American way of life.

I am an American Soldier.

Generally good day

USAMU shooters to train U.S. Soldiers in Iraq

Pistol team trains Soldiers overseas

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol Team will spend more than a month in Iraq training Soldiers of the 1st Armored Division in combat weapons marksmanship.

Sgts. 1st Class Charles E. Gibbs and Roger C. Jacobson, Staff Sgts. Aaron L. Hampton and Thomas A. Rose and Spc. Sean P. Watson left Georgia Wednesday on their way to Baghdad; and are expected to return to Fort Benning Feb. 23.

Once in Iraq, the shooters will provide an introduction to close quarters battle marksmanship classes at all 11 forward operating bases of the 1st Armored Division. They anticipate training approximately 363 Soldiers during the 33 days of instruction.

The training will include a night fire and 24 hours of hands-on training on the range. Training includes instruction on the M-4, M-16 A2 and M-16 A4 rifles, the M-9 pistol, the 240 B machine gun and the squad automatic weapon.

> "Our goal is to increase the marksmanship ability of the Soldiers we train and provide the trained Soldiers a program to train other Soldiers and continue to improve ... we expect to achieve that goal."
> Staff Sgt. Aaron L. Hampton
> Member of USAMU's Service Pistol Team

"We will train the 1st AD Soldiers on how to employ their assigned weapon — be it rifle, pistol, shotgun, machine gun or a combination of all — in a close quarters combat or urban operation," said Hampton. "Our goal is to increase the marksmanship ability of the Soldiers we train and provide the trained Soldiers a program to train other Soldiers and continue to improve their ability — and we expect to achieve that goal."

The USAMU shooters are highly motivated to support Operation Iraqi Freedom and ready to assist the troops deployed to Iraq, said Gibbs, NCOIC of the USAMU Service Pistol Team.

Hampton echoed Gibbs' comment, saying the shooters were "very excited" to be given this opportunity.

"Although our team has been shooting combat matches for a long time, we have recently been increasing our knowledge to prepare for this type of mission," Hampton said. "The team has attended numerous courses on close quarters battle, room clearing and urban movements with shooting schools and Special Forces courses, so we have really increased our abilities and mission scope.

"The team has been training for a larger role in training warfighters for urban operations and close quarters battle," Hampton said. "Our training focus is on the marksmanship subject of skills for operations other than war.

This is a way to greatly increase Soldiers' lethality and survivability."

Would you give a mile for a hero?

Donated miles give Soldiers a way home

Donna Budjenska
Bayonet staff

When Soldiers travel from Iraq back to the United States on R&R or emergency leave, the military flies them all the way to Germany or to Baltimore-Washington, Dallas/Fort Worth or Hartsfield-Jackson Atlanta international airports. From there, though, Soldiers are on their own.

Those who can't afford a follow-on plane ticket all the way home will have to make other arrangements or just wait it out.

But there is an alternative — you can provide a flight for them.

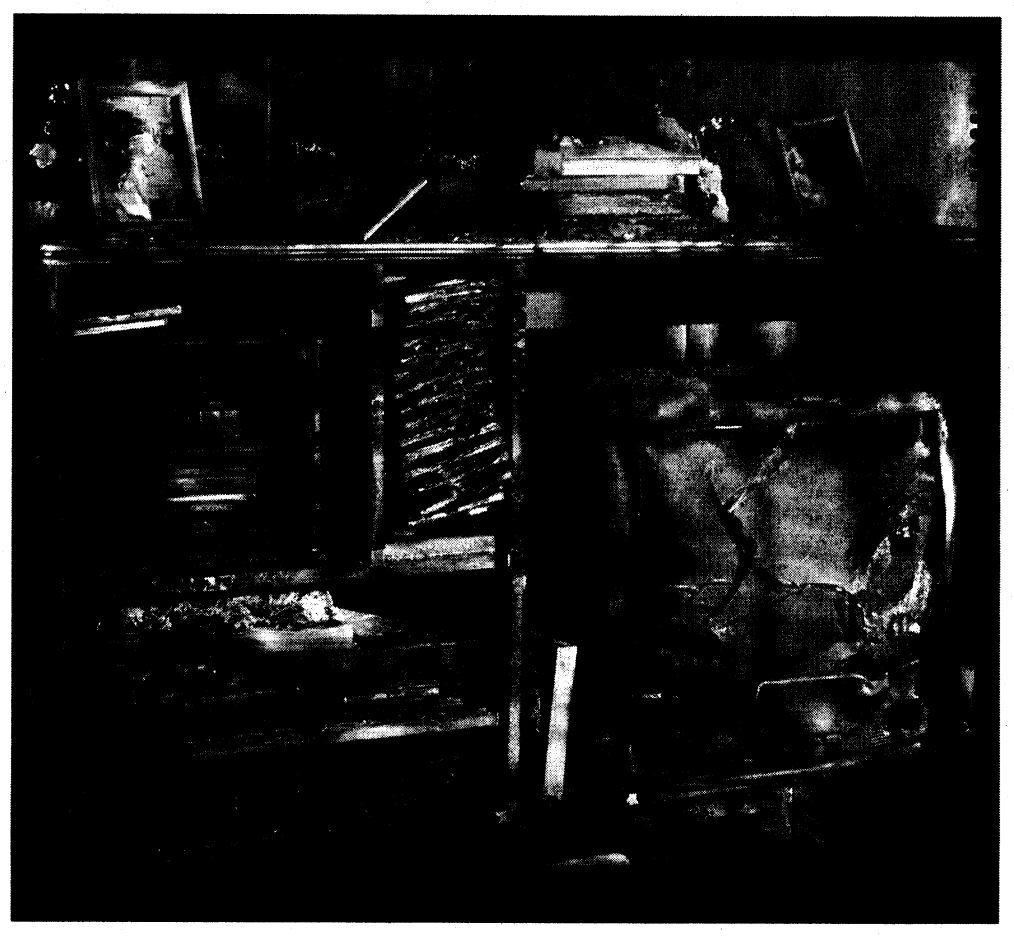
It's a simple concept, really, and it doesn't require spending a dime.

Go to www.heromiles.org and follow the instructions to donate your excess frequent flyer miles.

Participating airlines will then arrange to provide tickets to qualifying Soldiers.

AirTran, Alaska and Horizon Air, American, Continental, Delta, Frontier, Midwest, Northwest, Pan Am and Boston-Maine, Southwest, United and US Airways are part of the Operation Hero Miles program.

So far, donors have contributed nearly 300 million miles to the program. In many cases, individual frequent flyer mile donations are augmented by donations from the airlines themselves.



These contributions have resulted in more than 11,300 free round-trip flights for Soldiers.

In November, Congress provided funding to cover costs associated with getting Soldiers to their final destinations, but the money is not available yet and might not end up being enough to cover everyone who needs it.

Rules and procedures vary by airline, and Soldiers do need to check with their command for ticket eligibility.

For more information, visit www.heromiles.org or contact the individual participating airlines.

SUPER-SIZING SOLDIERS

Troops face big picture of weight gain

Soldiers fall victim to 'fat epidemic'

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Soldiers on the Army's weight control program are required to lose three to eight pounds per month.

Thinking about sneaking just one more doughnut? Maybe foregoing a healthy breakfast for a quick stop by Burger King on the way to work? Think again.

In a day and age when more than half of America's adult population is sporting a potbelly and collecting unwanted fat in other areas of their bodies, Soldiers are no exception.

Recent national data shows that 64.5 percent of adults 20 years and older are overweight, and of those, 30.5 percent are obese, according to Weight Management: State of Science and Opportunities for Military Programs, a study published in 2003 by the Food and Nutritional Board and the Institute of Medicine.

Despite stringent weight standards and considerable mandatory physical activity, Soldiers are still falling victim to what many experts are calling the "fat epidemic."

1st Lt. Paula Wedel, chief dietician of Martin Army Community Hospital's nutrition car clinic, faults skipped meals, high-calorie beverages, such as alcohol, juice and soda, and general inactivity as a few of the culprits in weight gain.

"The abundance of food and lack of importance individuals place on making healthy dining choices, planning for good nutrition and pushing the plate away when they're satisfied, rather than stuffed," also contribute to expanding waistlines, Wedel said.

While some Soldiers may not mind packing on a few extra pounds, the Army does.

Originally used to ensure Soldiers were not underweight, today's Army Weight Control Program has shifted its focus to overweight Soldiers.

The primary objective of the program is to ensure that all personnel can meet the physical demands of their duties under combat conditions and present a trim military appearance at all times, according to Army Regulation 600-9.

Aside from detracting from a professional appearance, excessive body fat also connotates a lack of personal discipline and may indicate a poor state of health, fitness and stamina, the regulation reads.

Soldiers are weighed in conjunction with their physical fitness test every six months. If a Soldier exceeds the weight standard for his or her height, he or she is then subject to a tape test, one of the Army's methods of determining body fat composition.

Soldiers can also be subjected to a tape test if their unit commander or supervisor determines that the individual's appearance suggests excess body fat, AR 600-9 states.

Despite some complaints that the tape system is unfair, Wedel maintains that it is an effective measurement tool.

"Initially, I wondered why the Army doesn't use a more accurate form of evaluation, such as the body fat calipers," Wedel said. "Then I got a pair of calipers. I started going out to units and realized there are some Soldiers who are so large that I can't get the 'pinchers' on my body fat calipers wide enough to pinch their 'rolls.'

"We cannot use the calipers to measure every Soldier, because some Soldiers are too large, but we can get a tape measure as long as we need it to get an evaluation of that Soldier's body fat percentage."

Fit male Soldiers average 15 percent body fat, while fit female Soldiers average 25 percent body fat. However, Army body fat standards allow for 20 percent for the youngest males and 30 percent for the youngest women.

Soldiers who exceed those limits are automatically enrolled in the Weight Control Program, which provides them assistance and supervision in their weight loss, including medical evaluation, nutritional counseling, extra PT sessions and careful monitoring of weight gain or loss. AR 600-9 defines the required weight loss goal as three to eight pounds per month.

Most Soldiers see results and are eventually removed from the program, which aims to get Soldiers about 5 percent below their maximum allowed body fat percentage.

Soldiers who continue to fail to meet weight standards face prolonged hindrance to their careers, as they are not considered promotable and are prevented from attending military schools, and the possibility of separation from the Army.

But it doesn't have to get to that point. Losing weight isn't easy, but it can be done.

"The main point is that it is total caloric intake that matters — not carbohydrates," Wedel said, discouraging people from buying into the latest diet fad.

"Eight years ago, we took all the fat out of foods, and people still gained weight," she said. "Now, we're taking all the carbohydrates out of foods, and people will still continue to gain weight if they don't decrease the overall amount of calories that they take in."

Many weight-loss measures are simply a matter of changing or adopting certain habits. The National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Disorders suggests doing the following:

- Choose healthy foods, such as vegetables, fruits, whole grains, and low-fat meat and dairy products.
- Eat more often and just enough food to satisfy you.
- Try to do at least 30 minutes of moderate-intensity physical activity on most days.

Think you can live with being overweight? Think again.

The BMI determines whether a person is underweight, overweight or within a healthy weight range. Experts generally consider a BMI below 20 to be underweight and a BMI of 20 to 25 to be healthy. A BMI of 25 to 30 is overweight, and a BMI of more than 30 is obese.

Although many people tend to think of weight gain in terms of appearance, looking a little snug in those jeans is the least of the negative side effects that accompany being overweight. Carrying around significant excess body fat puts you at risk for a myriad of serious health conditions, including heart disease, diabetes and even cancer.

Here's some sobering information about weight-related health problems, courtesy of the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Disorders Web site:

- Type 2 diabetes. The most common type of diabetes in the nation, type 2 diabetes is a disease in which blood sugar levels are above normal. High blood sugar is a major cause of early death, heart disease, kidney disease, stroke and blindness.

More than 80 percent of people with type 2 diabetes are overweight. While it is not known exactly why people who are overweight are more likely to suffer from this disease, it may be that being overweight causes cells to change, making them less effective at using sugar from the blood. This then puts stress on the cells that produce insulin and makes them gradually fail.

- Heart disease and stroke. Heart disease means that the heart and circulation are not functioning normally. You may suffer from a heart attack, congestive heart failure, sudden cardiac death, chest pain or abnormal heart rhythm. During a stroke, blood and oxygen do not flow normally to the brain, possibly causing paralysis or death. Heart disease is the leading cause of death in the U.S., and stroke is the third.

People who are overweight are more likely to suffer from high blood pressure, high levels of blood fats and "bad cholesterol" and low levels of "good cholesterol."

- Cancer. Cancer occurs when cells in one part of the body grow abnormally or out of control and possibly spread to other parts of the body. It is the second leading cause of death in the U.S.

Being overweight may increase the risk of developing several types of cancer, including cancers of the colon, esophagus and kidney. Overweight is also linked with uterine and postmenopausal breast cancer in women.

Gaining weight during adult life increases the risk for several of these cancers. Some attribute this to the notion that fat cells make hormones that affect cell growth and lead to cancer.

- Sleep apnea. This condition causes a person to stop breathing for short periods during the night. A person who has sleep apnea may suffer from daytime sleepiness, difficulty concentrating and even heart failure.

The risk for sleep apnea is higher for people who are overweight, because they may have more fat stored around their necks which could make the airway smaller.

A smaller airway can make breathing difficult, loud or stop altogether.

- Osteoarthritis. This is a common joint disorder, in which the joint bone and cartilage wear away. Osteoarthritis most often affects the joints of the knees, hips and lower back.

Extra weight may place extra pressure on joints and cartilage, causing them to wear away. People with more body fat also may have higher blood levels of substances that cause inflammation.

- Gall bladder disease. Gallstones are clusters of solid material that form in the gallbladder. They are made mostly of cholesterol and can sometimes cause abdominal or back pain.

People who are overweight have a higher risk for developing gallbladder disease and gallstones, because they may produce more cholesterol, a risk factor for gallstones. Also, people who are overweight may have an enlarged gallbladder, which may not work properly.

- Fatty liver disease. Fatty liver disease occurs when fat builds up in the liver cells and causes injury and inflammation in the liver. It can sometimes lead to severe liver damage, cirrhosis or even liver failure.

Fatty liver disease is like alcoholic liver damage, but it is not caused by alcohol and can occur in people who drink little or no alcohol.

People who have diabetes or "pre-diabetes" are more likely to have fatty liver disease. And although it is not always a weight-related disease, people who are overweight are more likely to have diabetes than those who are not.

You can reduce your chances of developing any of these health problems by losing as little as 10 to 20 pounds.

CG swears in new IG

Todd takes over as 'eyes and ears'

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Lt. Col. Jim Todd is an infantryman's infantryman. He's led a ranger platoon, an infantry company in Operation Desert Storm, and most recently, commanded a battalion in the Basic Combat Training Brigade.

Todd replaced the crossed rifles, which had been on his uniform since he was commissioned in 1984, with the insignia of the Inspector General.

He was sworn into his new position Dec. 11, by Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley.

Todd

"This is important," Freakley said. "The IG is a tremendously important position — one of trust and responsibility, and we only take the best because of its importance."

Freakley said Todd's job will be to make sure that Fort Benning organizations adhere to Army policy and take care of Soldiers and equipment.

According to the Army IG Web site, the tradition of the IG dates back to the Revolutionary War, when Gen. George Washington decided that an IG was needed for the Army. The IG would become the commander's agent for ensuring tactical competence and efficiency, as well as account for military investments.

Today's IG, Todd said, has three main functions.

The first function is to provide assistance to Soldiers and their families.

"It's really a commander system," Todd said. "When we receive a request, we go to the commander."

The second function is inspections, where IG teams conduct two major special inspections each quarter.

"We are the eyes and ears of the commanding general," Todd said.

Todd said the third, and least popular, is the investigative function. But as investigations generally go hand-in-hand with assistance requests, the two make up 90 percent of the IGs efforts.

"There's confidentiality in IG actions," Todd said. "People come to us because they trust the system."

Todd spent three weeks at Fort Belvoir, Va., last month attending the Inspector General University. He said it didn't make him an expert in the IG system, but it gave him enough to get started.

While the challenges of the IG will be different from those he faced in command, Todd looks forward to working with his highly trained IG team of civilians and senior NCOs.

"I like the idea of helping Soldiers out with their problems," Todd said. "Although I don't get to do it directly, I get to see the victories every day."

Foreign officer blazes trail

First Tajikistani to attend infantry course

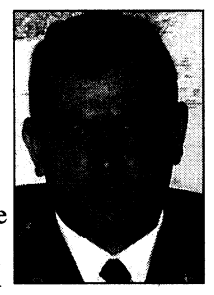
Melissa House
Bayonet staff

If he looks older than his almost 33 years, it's for good reason. Tajikistani Maj. Davrondjon Abduganiyevich Samatov, is a veteran of his young country's five-year civil war.

The first of his countrymen to attend the Infantry Captains Career Course, Samatov's more than 7,000-mile journey to the United States took him through Kazakstan, Amsterdam and Minneapolis to Lackland Air Force Base, Texas, where he spent 10 months learning English.

Samatov is here by invitation as part of the International Military Education Training program. He was selected to attend the ICCC by his minister of defense, Maj. Gen Sherali Khayrulloyuev, a man he greatly respects.

"He lived with the soldiers in the mountains during the war," Samatov said. "He didn't go home. He told us to not do things against the rules (of war) and that we would have good times (in the future)."



Samatov, the seventh of 10 children, joined the army in 1992, a year after Tajikistan gained independence from the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in 1991. He's the only one of the seven brothers in his family to serve in the military, and he witnessed firsthand the changes taking place after the peace agreement was signed in 1997.

"In 1992 and 1995, men sitting across from each other were still enemies," he said, "but after 1997, we could be friends."

He said leaders from other countries looked at his president, Emomali Rahmonov, and said peace was impossible.

But peace happened, and Rahmonov was re-elected in 1999 with 97 percent of the popular vote.

"Our president made very hard work," Samatov said, adding that without the efforts of Rahmonov and Khayrulloyev, he wouldn't have had the opportunity to come to the U.S.

Samatov

Samatov has spent his career in the airborne infantry, leading soldiers at the platoon, company and battalion level. He's looking ahead now, to the possibility of joint operations with the U.S. in Afghanistan as early as later this year. Tajikistan shares its longest border, 747 miles, with Afghanistan.

"For the future, we must make some peacekeeping missions," he said.

"If we don't know English, if we don't know American strategy, it's impossible to work together. We have to start here."

So far, he said, he's enjoying his time here and felt especially welcome by the cadre and civilians of the International Student Training Detachment.

"Thank you for ISTD," Samatov said, "and thank you for Miss Mary — she's our mom."

Miss Mary is Mary Renteria, the ISTD program information officer.

"I never expected I'd meet so many great people," he said.

Those great people, he said make the separation from his family a little bit easier. By the time he graduates in May, he will have been away from Tajikistan for 18 months.

He phones home to a small town north of Dushanbe, the capitol of Tajikistan, every week to talk with his wife and three daughters. And he confessed he's countering a craving for his favorite national meat and rice dish, plov, by eating his American favorite, barbecue.

Besides obvious language differences, Samatov said he had difficulty with a Thanks-giving gift from a woman in San Antonio.

"She gave all of the students two flowers," he said.

In his country, even numbers of flowers, two and four, are only given when someone dies.

"So she gave us all one more flower," he said.

Samatov's first day of class was Tuesday and he was ready to get to work.

"Our purpose is to work together to make peace in the world," he said.

CATD instructors train arctic troops

Capt. Michael Acord
1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment

Soldiers from the Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate completed the Tactical Leader Course for Soldiers from 1st Battalion, 17th Infantry Regiment, 172nd Separate Infantry Brigade (Stryker Brigade Combat Team) at Fort Wainwright, Alaska, in early December.

The 172nd SIB (SBCT) began transforming in June. Part of its transformation prepared the unit for its new equipment training.

With Fort Benning as the spearhead, Training and Doctrine Command conducts several leader-training programs as part of the training and certifying of its leaders before receiving new equipment, said Capt. John Nolden, an instructor from CATD who traveled to Alaska.

"This is a good program," Nolden said. "It is an excellent opportunity for a new unit to increase its base of tactical knowledge prior to beginning a mostly technical new equipment training."

The training is conducted in three installments.

"Stryker University" was completed at Fort Wainwright last summer, including doctrinal discussions of Stryker Brigade organization and capabilities and the transformation process.

The Senior Leader's Course was completed at Fort Benning and Fort Lewis, Wash., in August, giving commanders and staffs for the entire brigade a chance for the unit to begin to gel as a team.

The training includes doctrinal discussions of all units within the Stryker Brigade, the military decision making process and training using the Army Battle Command System at Fort Lewis.

The Tactical Leader's Course introduced Stryker doctrine from the squad leader to the company commander. Although tailored to the needs of the unit, the core concepts include organization, mounted operations, checkpoint and convoy procedures, dealing with the media and using the new systems in combat operations.

The culminating event was a stability operation Janus simulation that included raids, searches, checkpoints, media interviews for squad and platoon leaders, and bilateral training with host nation role players. Throughout the exercise, instructors from Fort Benning used lessons learned in Iraq and Afghanistan to train leaders in adaptive thinking.

The units received two more days of instruction. The first day included leader training from the Center for Army Leadership at Fort Leavenworth, Kan. During this instruction, the units were broken into small groups and given leadership scenarios, where they had to develop a plan to solve problems, then discuss their solutions.

On the last day, units received instruction from the Center for Enhanced Performance at the United States Military Academy on focus, goal setting and increasing the quality of decisions through relaxation.

Fort Benning coordinates local instructors and all TRADOC schools in their programs of instruction with infantry remaining central, ensuring the Stryker doctrine is integrated through the battlefield operation systems.

The remaining battalions are currently forming at Fort Wainwright. In March, CATD will conduct the Tactical Leader's Course II for the remaining units.

Training: Prepares unit for Iraq

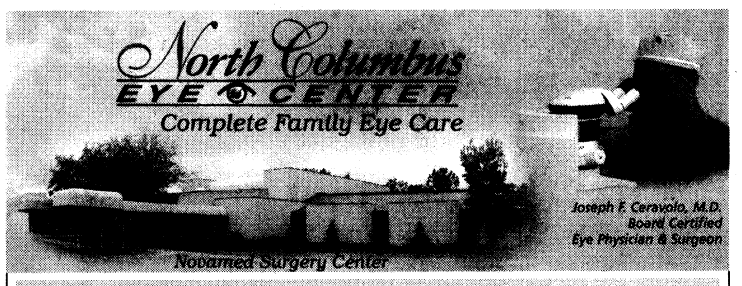
Regt., is in charge of all individual, leader, squad and platoon leader task training.

This portion of the training includes common task training, first aid, rules of engagement, weapons qualification, land navigation and check point operations, said Maj. Art Sharpe, 2nd Bn., 305th Field Artillery Regt., mobilization assistance officer.

1st Bn., 305th Armored Regt., is responsible for the collective training the Soldiers receive before they deploy.

"We do the more difficult and challenging part of the training," said Lt. Col. William M. Wolfarth, commander, of 1st Bn., 305th Armored Regt.



The collective training includes convoy operations, urban operations, crew qualifications, convoy blank fire exercises, convoy live-fire exercises and convoy situational training exercises, said Sgt. 1st Class William Simons, battalion adjutant.

"We have the most qualified trainers when it comes to motorized gunnery," Wolfarth said.

1st Bn., 305th Armored Regt., was the first unit in the Army to devise a theater specific collective training event for motorized gunnery, Simons said.

"We train these forces not to their specific occupations but to survive and win, thereby providing timely, logistical support to active component combat arms forces," Simons said.

The units are all working together to train Soldiers in support of Operation Iraq Freedom. All the units agree that "this mission is not over until all units are mobilized, deployed, re-deployed and return to their home station."

'I'M YOUR MAN'

Locals ruthless, shameless in pursuit of Survivor fame

Dozens turn out for casting call

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

Spc. David Foley

"I came into the world that way," said retired 1st Sgt. Jim Kelly, following his on-camera assertion that he'd bare all for a chance to win a million dollars on the next Survivor series. "I could be the first Native American on the show. I'd like to show them what our heritage left us." Kelly and more than 50 locals turned out for Wednesday's open casting call at Georgia Freight in Columbus, sponsored by WRBL Channel 3. They were each given two minutes to convince producers that they've got what it takes to go all the way on the next Survivor series.

"If I have to run around naked, I can do that." So began Jim Kelly's two-minute shot at fame — or infamy, whichever the case may be.

Kelly, a retired airborne Soldier, and a few dozen other Survivor hopefuls turned out for the WRBL Channel 3 open casting call Wednesday at Georgia Freight on Box Road in Columbus.

"I'm here because I miss the thrill," said Kelly, 47, a 21-year veteran who enjoyed his time with a quick-reaction team. "I was always deployed and it was exciting.

"After that, this would be a vacation," he said of the seven weeks cast members of the next Survivor series will spend filming in a remote location. "Given the chance, I know I could win. I could be the first Native American on the show."

If need be, Kelly said, he'd bare his backside, dine on bugs and rats or even step on a few toes.

"I can manipulate if I need to. I'm your man," Kelly said brazenly.

Twila Kirkland, WRBL's sales manager, applauded the efforts of all who turned out for the casting call, the station's second.

Last fall, WRBL hosted an open audition for The Amazing Race for CBS.

"That went so well, we told them to send us Survivor, and we said it in jest, but they jumped on it," Kirkland said. "This is the first time they've ever done this kind of call for Survivor."

The four-hour casting call drew more than 50 locals who waited patiently for their turn at the microphone.

One by one, they numbered their qualifications and assured an unseen audience they were willing to get dirty and quite capable of being ruthless.

"I'm ready to kick --- and take names later," said a petite blonde.

"Pick me. I'll show you a country boy can survive," said a cowboy clad contestant.

"I've been surviving on my own in a man's world for a very long time," said Marianne Timm, a welder, former MP and the mother of two teen-agers.

"I know I've got what it takes, and I'm just so darn cool."

Jenny Fitch took a more subdued approach. The wife of a Fort Benning Soldier and the mother of a toddler, the slender brunette looked more like Sandra Bullock than Sandra Diaz-Twine, Survivor's former leading lady.

"I know I don't look tough," Fitch said, "but I am. I don't like to roll around in the mud, but I will. It would be hard to be away from my son, but for a million dollars, it would be worth it. That would really help with his college education."

Mike Smith, a 33-year veteran of the Fort Benning Fire Department, figured he'd be a natural survivor. Rudy Boesch, the star of the first Survivor series, was once his boss when the two served with the Navy Seals.

"I like the outdoors, I'm highly competitive, and with my knowledge and skills, I'd be an asset to the show," Smith said.

"Besides, I'm getting ready to retire. It would give me something to do."

The tapes from the casting call will be forwarded to Survivor producers, who will contact anyone they're interested in before March, and finalists will be notified in April.

"I know I don't look tough, but I am ... . It would be hard to be away from my son, but for a million dollars, it would be worth it. That would really help with his college education."

Women to unite on Benning

Conference to be first of its kind for post

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

Borrowing from a long-standing tradition at other military installations, a group of wives is spearheading the first Fort Benning Women's Conference, scheduled for March 12.

The conference will address the unique challenges military wives face and offer constructive advice to "enhance their lives and promote a sense of camaraderie throughout the community," said Kim Akers, who's co-chairing the conference with Carrie Snyder.

"Our goal is to bring the women of Fort Benning together to show appreciation for their sacrifices and provide a forum for them to learn and grow and have fun," she said.

The conference is not designed to usurp any of the post agencies which provide guidance or education to military spouses, Snyder said.

"It is not about the Army," she said. "We have our Army Community Service and Army Family Team Building and family readiness groups that teach us about military life. This is different.

"This is geared toward fun and personal interests, because we know it's hard, with their husbands gone all the time and children to take care of, to find time for themselves," Snyder said.

"Classes will include gardening, design-your-own pottery, self defense, interior decorating ... those kinds of things," she said.

The conference, scheduled to run from 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., will be funded primarily by a $2,000 grant from Fisher House Foundation, a partnership which provides financial support to military families through various programs.

Attendees will pay $12, and child care is available.

There will be 10 classes for attendees to choose from, a guest speaker, lunch and door prizes.

Registration ends Feb. 7. Call Akers at 689-3263 or Snyder at 689-9629.

Military Citizenship Day — The Atlanta District Office of Citizenship and Immigration Services will host Military Citizenship Day Feb. 27.

The ceremony will be at 1 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

Military personnel who have applied for citizenship before Aug. 12003 are encouraged to contact their personnel officers and request that their name be submitted for consideration. Family member who have applied before January 2003 are requested to fax their Notice of Action Form I-797C to (404) 331-6031, also for consideration to: Community Liaison Officer, Bill Castro.

Tricare survey — The Tricare Management Activity has contracted with a survey research firm in Washington, D.C., to conduct a telephone survey (a legitimate and important survey) of Tricare beneficiaries.

The survey will gather information about beneficiary information needs, preferred sources, and information-seeking strategies. Results will be used to develop a new national suite of beneficiary education products and services.

Pilot testing started Tuesday and full survey operations will be conducted between Monday and Feb. 18. The study design calls for 10-minute phone interviews with representatives from five groups:

- active-duty service members
- active duty family members
- retirees and their family members younger than 65
- retirees and their family members 65 and older
- spouses of activated reserve service members.

The goal is 3,400 completed interviews, which might require calling approximately 10,000 beneficiaries.

For more information, call Chuck Watkins, (703) 681-1770 or e-mail customer.research@tma.osd.mil.

Food program — The Department of the Army announces the sponsorship of the U.S. Department of Agriculture funded Child and Adult Care Food Program. The same meals will be available at no separate charge to enrolled participants at the centers listed, and will be provided without regard to race, color, national origin, sex, age or disability.

The centers are: Main Post CDC, Santa Fe CDC, Tot Town CDC, School Age Services, Middle School, Teen and various Family Child Care Homes.

For more information, call Astrid Moore at 545-9264.

Loaner car seats — GEICO has donated eight infant and toddler restraint seats to the Army Community Services for use in their Loaner Program. Military parents can borrow an infant or toddler car seat for 30 days at no cost.

For more information, call ACS at 545-4485.

Commissary changes — The Department of Defense has announced effective immediately, the following members and their dependents will be permitted unlimited access to commissary stores: members of the ready reserve and members of the retired reserve who possess a Uniformed Services identification card; former members eligible for retired pay at age 60 but who have not yet attained the age of 60 and who possess a Department of Defense civilian identification card; and dependents of the members described above who have a Uniformed Services identification card or who have a distinct identification card used as an authorization card for benefits and privileges administered by the Uniformed Services.

For more information about the Defense Commissary Agency, visit www.commissaries.com.

Free English classes — Free English as a second language instruction is being offered for adults from 6 to 9 p.m. Mondays and Wednesdays at E.A. White Elementary School.

The instruction is designed for those that are in need of help with grammar, vocabulary, civic and naturalization issues and conversational fluency.

For more information, call Myrtle L. Chalkley at 545-4562 or 545-7742.

Open Recreation Program — The Open Recreation Program is designed for occasional use of the School Age Services program and includes participation in regularly scheduled SAS activities being offered each day including Boys and Girls clubs and 4-H Club.

Children will be picked up from school and dropped off at their designated program.

Programs last from 2 to 6:30 p.m. There is no fee for the program. For more information, call 545-3605.

YS supports home-schoolers — There are educational programs to support home-school curriculums and instructional support from Child and Youth Services staff Fort Benning home-schoolers.

Child and Youth Services is making sure home-schoolers have access to all of the support services, including "Open Recreation" and "Home-School Computer Lab."

From 9 a.m. until noon Tuesdays, the YS gym will be available for home-school families. From 9 a.m. until noon Thursdays, the computer lab in the School-Age Services building will be open for home-school families exclusively.

For more information, call 545-3062.

AA meetings — Fort Benning's Alcoholics Anonymous meets 7 p.m. every Monday, Thursday and Saturday in the basement of Building 241. The AA meetings support people fighting alcohol addiction.

For more information, call 545-4415 or 545-1138.

EFMP — The Exceptional Family Member Program is a mandatory enrollment program that works with other military and civilian agencies to provide comprehensive and coordinated medical, educational, housing, community support and personnel services to families with special needs.

An exceptional family member is a family member (child or adult) with any physical, emotional, developmental or intellectual disability that requires special medical treatment, therapy, education, training or counseling.

Program enrollment allows assignment managers of Army personnel agencies to consider the documented medical and special-education needs of exceptional family members in the assignment process. When possible, soldiers are assigned to an area where the medical and special education needs of exceptional family members can be met.

For more information regarding the EFMP, call EFMP, Army Community Service, at 545-7517 or 545-5516 or e-mail collinsm@benning.army.mil.

Military families with special needs can now get information and support online 24 hours a day. This database includes information on support groups, camps, vocational services, diagnostic and evaluation service, speech therapy, physical therapy, occupational therapy and many other resources.

Visit the site at www.efmconnections.org.

ACS Lending Closet — The purpose of the Army Community Service Lending Closet is to lend household goods to soldiers and their families who are awaiting receipt of their household goods or preparing to PCS. For more information, call 545-4485.

Curbside pick-up — Martin Army Community Hospital offers curbside pick-up service to discharged patients who require special assistance, such as wheelchairs and walkers.

Patients can obtain a one-time use pass from the discharging ward, which allows a family member or friend to drive to the Central Triage/ER entrance to load the patient.

MS support group focuses on education

'Knowledge is power' for founder, patient

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Debbie Daniel was no stranger to diseases with long, foreign-sounding names when she was told she had multiple sclerosis about three and a half years ago.

The long-time Columbus resident had already been battling fibromyalgia for several years when her doctor delivered the diagnosis.

"I woke up one morning with what I thought was a pinched muscle in my neck, but it didn't get better or go away, even after (physical therapy)," Daniel recalled.

After a series of tests and scans, which revealed three herneated cervical disks, a plaque lesion in her cervical area and five on her brain, it was official. At 38 years old, Daniel had MS and had likely already been suffering from it for about five years.

"It's like if you have an electrical appliance, you have a core, and you have insulation around the main wires," Daniel explained. "MS attacks your own immune system, eating away at the insulation around the nerves and leaving a plaque spot."

Daniel said learning to live with fibromyalgia made coping with MS easier, and called the diagnosis a "blessing in disguise."

"This isn't going to take me out of the world today or tomorrow," she said, acknowleding the possibility that her condition could progressively worsen. "It helps me focus on what's important today; it helps me keep my priorities in check a little bit more."

> "This isn't going to take me out of the world today or tomorrow. It helps me focus on what's important today; it helps me keep my priorities in check a little bit more."
> Debbie Daniel
> MS patient, founder of Fighting MS Together

Daniel said she "didn't know didley" about the disease when she was first diagnosed, but said she hit the Internet as soon as she got home.

"I'm very proactive in that regard — I want to know as much as possible," she said.

In fact, Daniel wants everyone else suffering from MS to know as much as possible, too, which motivated her to found Fighting MS Together, a tricommunity support group.

The group held its first meeting in November and is looking to reach anyone diagnosed with MS, their families and loved ones and anyone interested in learning more about MS.

Although there is already an MS support group in Columbus, Daniel said there was a lot of interest in more information, which is why Fighting MS Together will primarily focus on education.

"The thing about MS is that it affects everyone in a different way," Daniel said. "And on top of that, the medication you take for MS affects everyone differently.

"It can be a lot to deal with, so we want to get the education and emotional support out there. I personally think knowledge is power."

Daniel said the group's first goals are to get the word out and build their membership. She hopes to see events, such as an "MS Walk and Roll" for walking and wheel-chair bound MS patients, in the future.

Fighting MS Together meets from 6 to 8 p.m. the second Tuesday of every month at the John B. Amos Cancer Center Classroom.

For more information, call Daniel at 653-6043.

Ask the judge

Capt. Steven J. Collins
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Please explain all the relevant tax issues Soldiers encounter when they deploy and later return from deployment?

A: The first issue is combat zone compensation benefits. The most well-known benefit of service in a combat zone or qualified hazardous duty area is tax-free compensation.

Any month a Soldier serves in a CZ/QHDA, even for a single day, makes compensation for that entire month eligible for exclusion from gross income. In short, the money earned is tax-free.

For enlisted Soldiers, all compensation received is excludable, this includes any re-enlistment bonuses due if the Soldier actually re-enlists in the CZ/QHDA.

Commissioned officers can exclude up to $5,957.90 per month. Generally, this exclusion is made automatically and will be reflected on both the Soldier's LES and annual W-2.

The second issue is the extension of time to file when Soldiers return from the CZ/QHDA. For non-deployed Soldiers and civilians, extensions may be applied for from the IRS. Extensions to file are granted automatically by filling out and submitting Form 4868 prior to April 15. This extension is good through Aug. 15, but applies only to filing, not paying. So, while you may wait until August to file, if you owe any amount and have not paid it by April 15, penalties and interest will accrue until you file.

If a Soldier needs more time to file, he can also ask for a two-month extension by filling out form 2688. To have the two-month extension, the Soldier will need to have a good reason for doing so.

For deployed Soldiers, the other major benefit of service in a CZ/QHDA is the automatic extension of the deadline to file their income taxes. This extension is for the full period of time spent in the CZ/QHDA, plus six months (180 days) after leaving the CZ/QHDA. Any days served during the normal income tax filing season (Jan. 1 through April 15) are also added.

For example: Pfc. Binots is deployed and enters the CZ on Feb. 1, 2003. He has not filed his 2002 taxes. Binots leaves the CZ on Oct. 1, 2003. Binots must file his taxes for 2002 before June 13, 2004.

No pre-deployment action must be taken to claim the extension, but when filing later, the name of the operation must be placed on the return. Federally, this extension also applies to a joint filing spouse.

State treatments of the extensions vary. Not every state uses the same rules in granting extensions, if any, to Soldiers and their spouses. State rules should be checked on an individual basis.

For example, while Alabama grants a full extension to joint-filing spouses, Georgia allows for an extension to file based upon the Soldier's extension, but does not tax the accrual of penalties or interest on any amount owed by the non-deployed spouse.

For deployed Soldiers, spouses may file a joint return if they have a valid general power of attorney that specifically mentions the power to file tax returns (the PoAs at the legal assistance office do) or a special PoA to file tax returns. This is also true for single Soldiers who give someone a PoA to file their returns. If access to the online MyPay electronic version of the W-2 is unavailable, a general PoA may also be used to pick up a deployed Soldier's W-2 from his or her unit or personnel assistance center.

Located in Building 880 (across from the post movie theater), the Tax Center will be open Jan. 21 through April 15. Normal hours of operation are Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Thursday from 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m.

The Tax Center will also be open on April 3 and 10 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. and until midnight on April 15.

All customers are seen on a first come, first served basis. For more information, call 545-4267.

Scholarship deadlines draw close for students

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

For typical students, applying for Georgia's HOPE scholarship is an easy thing. They just need a B average in the core curriculum subjects taken during high school.

But military students are not typical. On average, they attend at least two high schools before they graduate.

And the good news is that even military students and military spouses can receive some of the millions of dollars in HOPE scholarships.

Since the HOPE program began in 1991, more than 700,000 students have received more than $2 billion, according to the program's Web site.

Those students planning to attend Georgia public universities or colleges receive full tuition, coverage of some HOPE-approved mandatory student fees and a $300 per year book allowance. Students attending private institution receive $3,000 per year and can qualify for an additional $1,045 grant.

Ethel Houman, with the Georgia Student Financial Services, said although she's not sure what the state's leadership will do about the program, she believes that "HOPE should be there. They might take away some of the extras like book allowance, but the scholarship should still be there."

She said the HOPE eligibility requirements for military students are not as complicated as some might think.

"If a student graduates from a Georgia high school, even if they've only been here a few months, they are eligible," Houman said. Those students whose parents are not residents of Georgia need to apply for an out-of-state tuition waiver.

Students whose parents are Georgia residents, but graduate from high schools outside of Georgia, are also eligible for the scholarship to attend college in Georgia. All grade and course requirements are verified by the GSFC system, Houman said.

If a student's parents move out of Georgia, the student can still maintain HOPE eligibility by maintaining a 3.0 GPA, but Houman said the college has the option of taking away the out-of-state waiver.

"I answer military questions (about the HOPE scholarship) all the time," Houman said.

She recommends checking the Web site for information about eligibility and calling the GSFC if an individual doesn't find what they need there.

She said deadlines for high school seniors applying for HOPE scholarships are set by the high schools, generally between February and April.

For more information on the HOPE scholarship program visit www.gsfc.org/hope or call (800) 546-4673.

McBride first-graders lunch, learn with parents

Program aims to keep students interested

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

You wouldn't expect to see snowmen popping up on Fort Benning this week, but they showed up in bounty at McBride Elementary School Tuesday.

McBride first-graders spent the better part of an afternoon creating "sock snowmen" with the aid of their parents as part of the popular Lunch and Learn program, which unites the school, students and parents.

Students learned about listening and following directions, creative expression, sequencing, reading and creative writing during the project.

The creative aspect of the lesson helps spice up education for the students, said Lisa Roush, a first-grade teacher at McBride.

"We want to keep their interest going," she said. "If they're interested and active in the learning process, it's more beneficial to them — they'll get a better grasp of the material.

"I'm pretty sure they'll remember the day they made snowmen," she said, laughing.

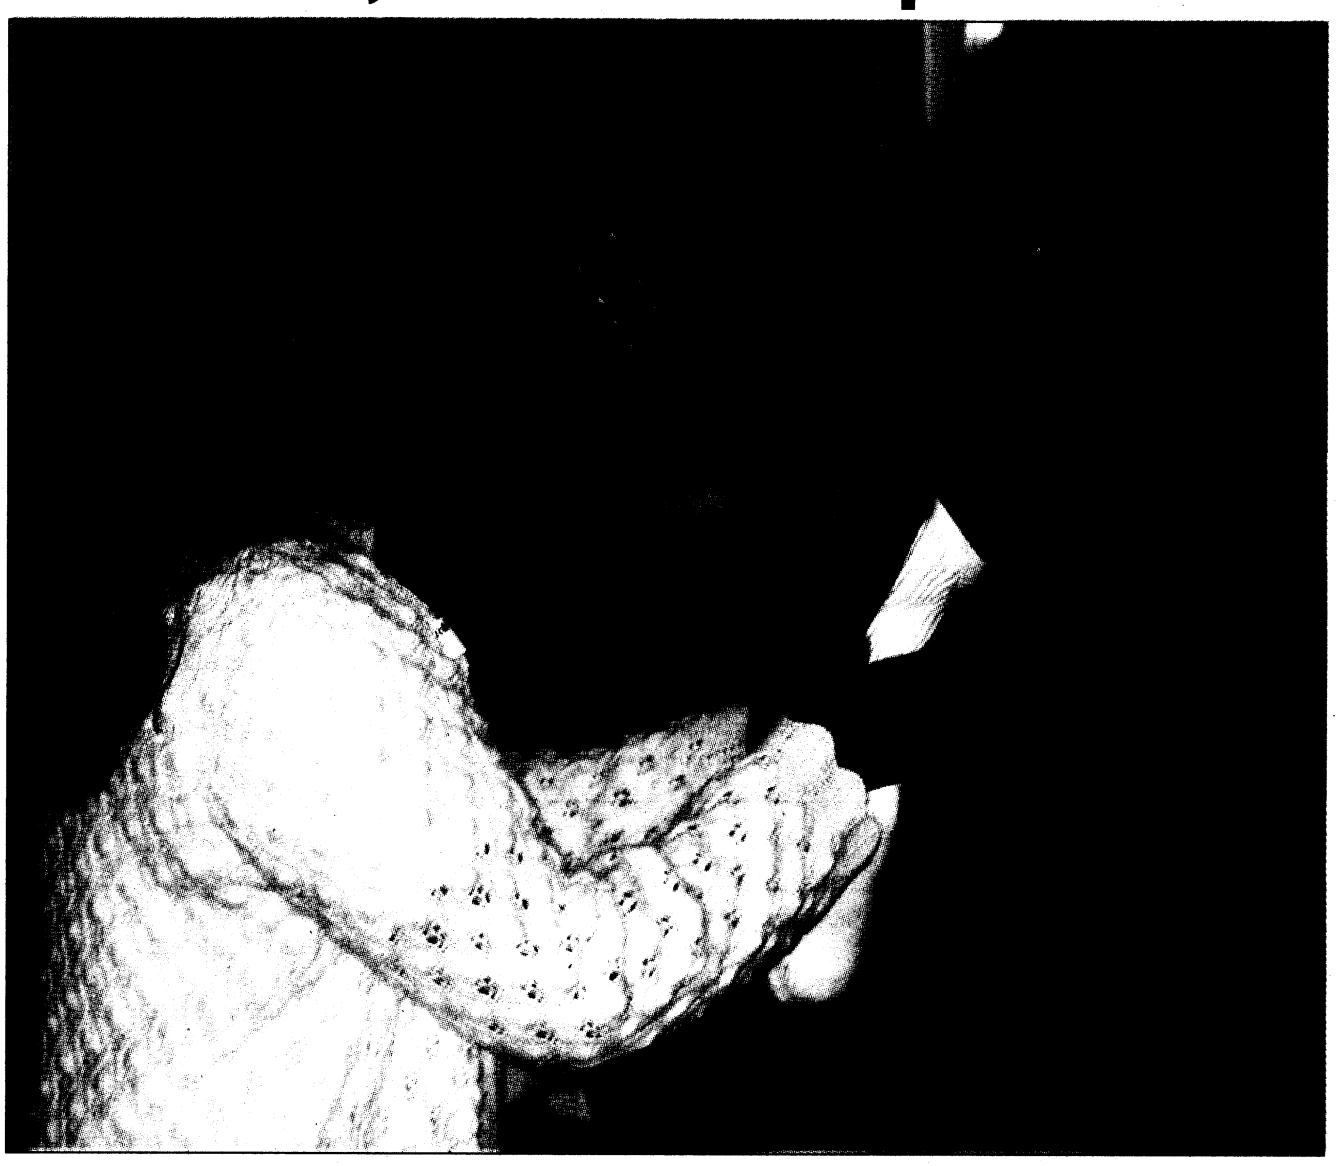
But perhaps more importantly, they were able to share the experience with their parents, Roush said.

"When a parent takes interest in their child's education, it shows the child that school is important, it shows value in what the child is being taught," Roush said. "It's also a great self-esteem boost for the children when their parents come in."

Roush said the turn-out was great, and it was nice to have "adult help."

Esmerelda Leyva took time out of her schedule to join her 7-year-old daughter, Samantha Hernandez. She said it was her third Lunch and Learn.

"It encourages her to learn when I am here," Esmerelda said.

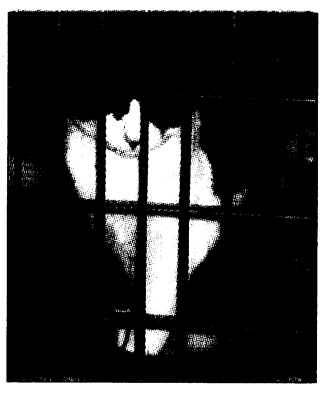


"It gives her pride in what she's doing that I'm here doing her schoolwork with her."

Esmerelda said she tries to make it out to opportunities such as the Lunch and Learn projects as often as possible.

"They didn't have things like this when I was going to school — I wish they would have," she said. "But that didn't stop my mother from being in the classroom, and it really helped encourage me.

"They'll remember this," Leyva said. "They'll remember, 'Oh, she was interested in me learning since I was young.' It shows them that it's important."



Getting to have their parents as schoolmates for a day also gives the children something to look forward to and reinforces parents' support of their children and their education, Esmerelda said.

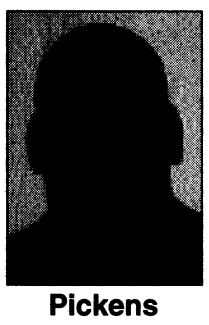
Source of power can help with resolutions

Sincerity, willpower not enough

Chaplain (Capt.) Tommie Pickens
203rd Forward Support Battalion



Each year, people get together to celebrate the ending of things past, and beginning of things to come. During this time, people look back on the things they accomplished during the past year, but mostly on the many things they failed to accomplish. Typically, it is the disappointment of those failures that fuels a very popular annual ritual — the New Year's resolution.

Each year among the celebration and reflection, we make promises to ourselves about how we intend to improve or make a permanent change in some aspect of our lives.

Some people will actually meet the goals they set the previous year. Still others, the vast majority probably, will stop trying within three months into the next year. Why is it that despite the best, most earnest intentions do we fail to reach our goal? I submit to you that it not a matter of our sincerity or willpower, but it is the source of the power from which we draw that will make the difference.

In the Bible, 2 Kings 25:10, there is a story about how the great city of Jerusalem fell to the Chaldees army, who broke down the walls of Jerusalem round about. In life, when we set out to do something in our own power, armed only with human reasoning and secular wisdom, we are almost always doomed to fail.

REFLECTIONS

Pickens

The Bible warns us in Proverbs 25:28 that "He that hath no rule over his own spirit is like a city that is broken down without walls." Indeed, man cannot rule over his spirit without God's help. Without it, we are defenseless against the attacks of the world.

What attacks?

Mark 13:22 recounts that "For false Christs and false prophets shall rise, and shall show signs and wonders, to seduce, if (it were) possible, even the elect. People, even the most devout believers, can be seduced into obedience to something other than Almighty God. Matthew 6:24 states that we cannot serve two masters.

We want to lose weight, so we spend money on books, trainers, silly exercise gadgets and so fourth. If you search the scriptures, you find that Philippians 4:5 says, "Let your moderation be known unto all men," and Proverbs 23:1-2 warns us restrain our appetite, if we know we're big eaters.

We covet raises and promotions and make money the core reasons for laboring on our jobs. Proverbs 23:4 says to not labor only for worldly gain, "cease from thine own wisdom."

With God as the source of our strength and wisdom, we are able to successfully resolve to do make the changes in life we sincerely desire.

Better questions bring results

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

Do you ever feel like the bumper sticker that says, "Just when I figured out all life's answers, they changed all the questions!" Isn't it funny how the quality of most any answer we get is in direct proportion to the quality of the questions that we ask? Whether you are trying to take a bridge in Baghdad or attempting to pry answers out of an adolescent, the objective of either mission is the same — to get the right answers, we've got to ask the right questions.

So in that spirit, and since it's a month full of reflections, resolutions and mental restarts, here are the top five questions you can ask of the person or people in your life that mean the most to you.

Better Question No. 1 — On a scale of 1-5 (1 = being rotten; 5 = being great). Where would you say our relationship is?

Hawkins

Better Question No. 2 — What is the one thing you'd most like me to "be" toward you in the New Year to make it our best year together?

Better Question No. 3 — What is the one thing you'd most like me to "do" for you in the New Year to make it our best year together?

Better Question No. 4 — If you knew I wouldn't get defensive, what is the one thing you'd most want to tell me?

Better Question No. 5 — What do you think the best time we ever had together was and why?

Whether you are a commander of a brigade or a couple about to be engaged, these are five questions that cut ice — they get to the heart of what makes your relationship fly or die. I hope you'll take a risk in the new year and actually carve out some time to ask these strategic questions. As you do, keep these tools in your kit bag:

- The objective is to listen, not verbally counterpunch your mate or child. If you don't agree with what you hear, stun your partner by not even saying a word in defense. Simply respond with, "Hey, thanks for sharing that!"
- The objective is to learn. Think of it as reading your mate or child's owner's manual. They are telling you what it takes for them to have a great relationship with you.

If there's any way that our team of trained counselors at the Chaplain Family Life Center can help you with your New Year's Resolution, give us a call at 545-1760.

Lady Greenwaves take victory, 44-40

Spencer defeats Griffin in close game

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Spencer High School's Lady Greenwaves basketball team squeaked out a close 44-40 victory over the Griffin Bears Tuesday night at Spencer High School.

The game came down to the wire with the Greenwaves only leading by two points in the final minutes of the game.

Spencer fought Griffin's inside game and kept pulling down rebounds. A desperate Griffin defense made repeated fouls against the Greenwaves that ended with Spencer at the free-throw line sinking one, spreading it to a 3-point game.

"All I had to do was be patient and keep my head in the game and not give up," said Octavia Williams, Greenwaves point guard.

Griffin gained possession of the ball but failed to make a basket. Spencer grabbed the rebound, and with the crowd screaming and less than a second on the clock, Spencer's forward, Marissa Cole, got fouled, went to the line and put one in, dashing Griffin's chances of a win.

"We did well," Cole said. "We were in a slump for a while, but we're getting better."

In the start of the game, it didn't look so promising for Spencer with Griffin coming out strong and scoring the first points.

Then, the Greenwaves defense materialized and got more organized under the basket and stopped letting Griffin make easy outside shots.

"Overall, we played a great game. We had a good defense and were more patient on offense," Williams said.

The first period ended with the Lady Greenwaves trailing by three. When they came back in, the scoreboard was reading 6-9.

> "We just tried to stay in the game and stay focused. We aren't always going to be in the lead."

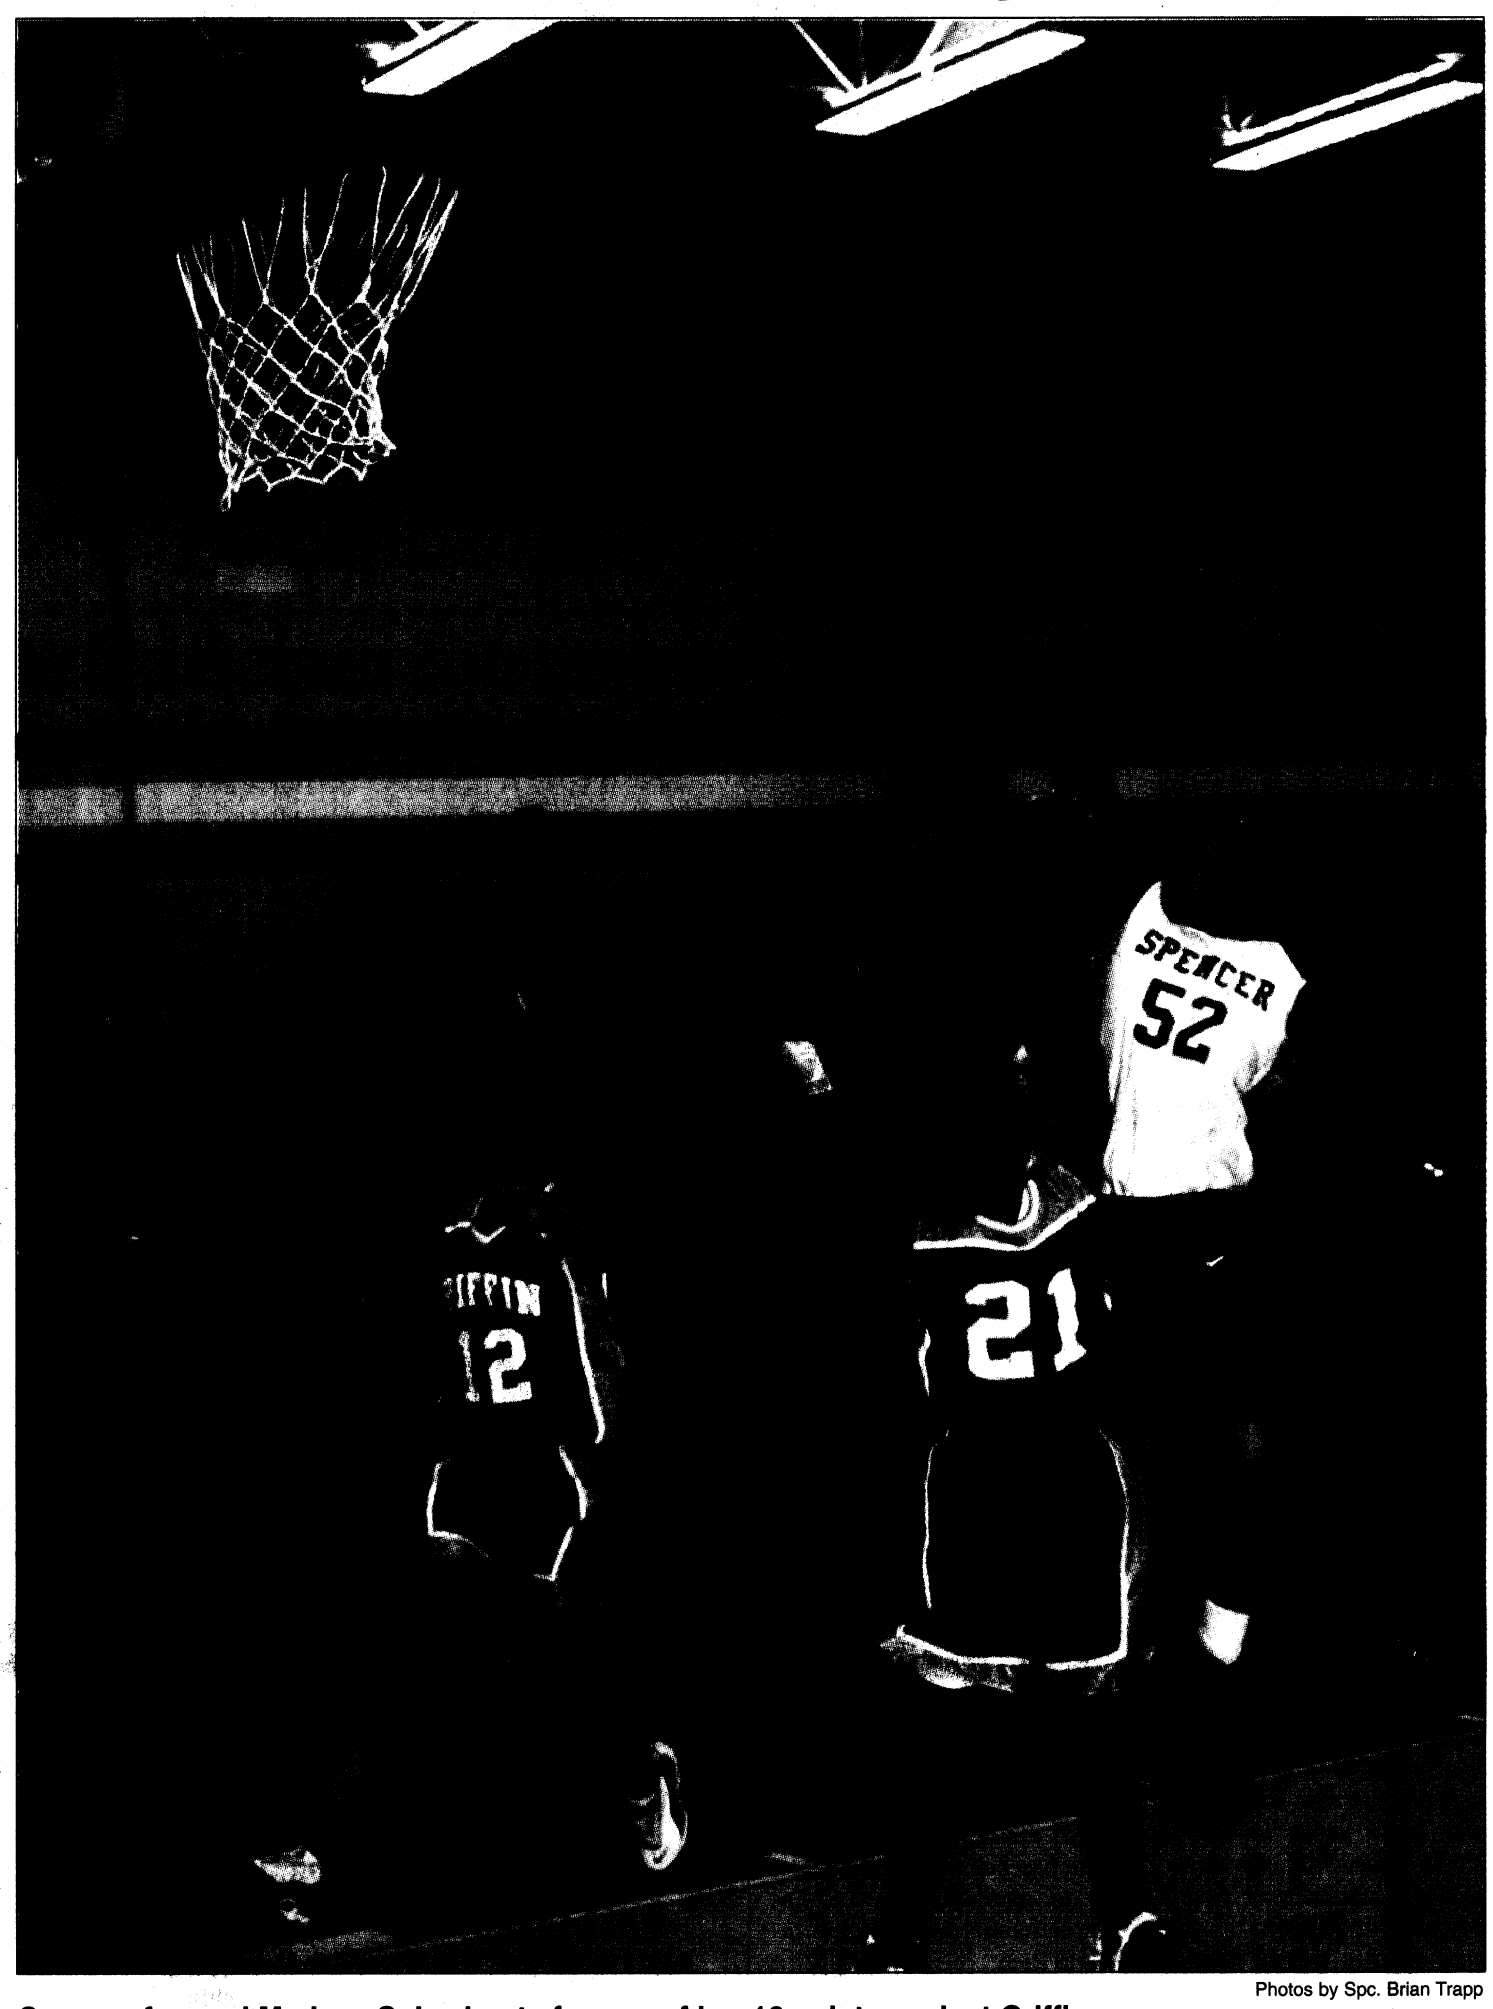
Halfway through the second period, Spencer tied up the score 13-13.

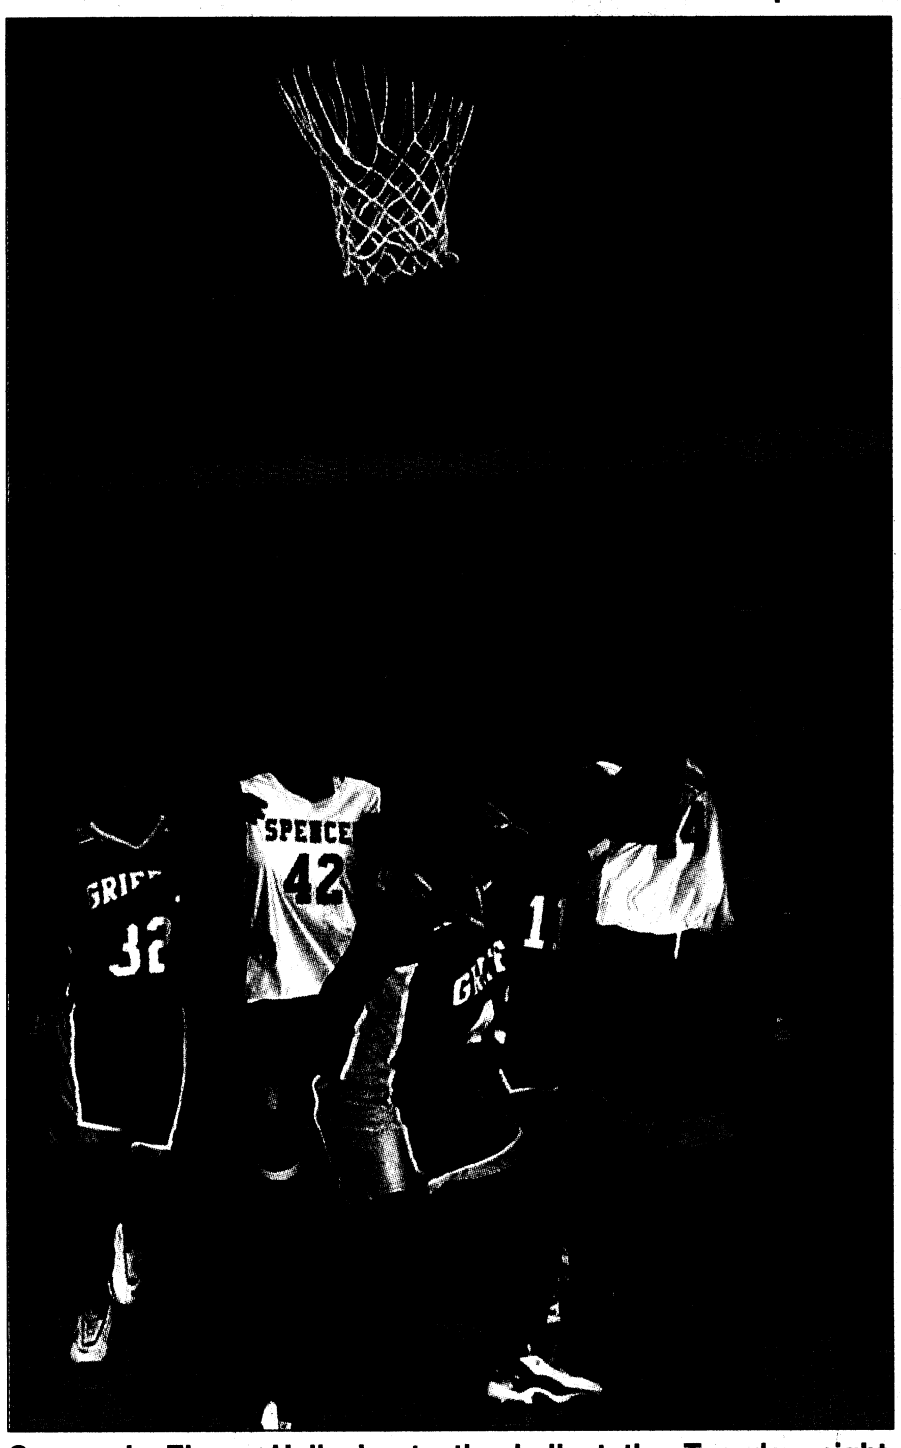
"We just tried to stay in the game and stay focused," Cole said. "We aren't always going to be in the lead."



The rest of the period, Spencer played catch-up, then took the lead and widened the point gap with a last second 3-point shot by Cole that went in with the buzzer. At the end of the first half, the teams walked off the court with Spencer in the lead 21-17.

Spencer came out strong from the locker room, but Griffin quickly took momentum and the lead of the game, 23-24, three minutes into the third period. Griffin couldn't hold on to it, though, when they sent Spencer to the free throw line and the Greenwaves went back in the lead, 25-24.

After Spencer took back the lead, the team regrouped and shut down Griffin's inside game, and a strong Greenwaves defense opened up the chance for few key break-aways, taking it to 31-24.



In the final period, Griffin came out and forced three turnovers and closed the lead, but weren't able to overtake the team.

"The first half of the season was rough and (Griffin) beat us then, but we put it past us and this time, we came in and did what we had to do as a team," Williams said.

Aerobics instructor needed — Briant Wells Field House is looking for certified exercise instructors for a variety of classes. For more information, call 545-4388.

All-Army Small Arms Championships sign-ups — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the All-Army Small Arms Championships in conjunction with the U.S. Army Infantry Center March 14-25. Soldiers and units will compete with the M-16 rifle or M-4 carbine, M-9 pistol and M-24 or M-14 rifles against counterparts from the Army, Reserve, National Guard and Cadet Command. The USAMU has a limited number of weapons available for Soldiers and cadets who do not have assigned weapons.

Winners may be awarded trophy rifles.

Rifle matches will be shot at ranges from 200 to 500 yards. Pistol matches will be fired under combat time standards at seven to 25 yards. All firing will be done with helmet and individual combat gear (minus body armor and mask). Long-range matches will be fired at ranges of 600 to 1,000 yards. Matches are open to all Soldiers, U.S. Military Academy and ROTC cadets. Squad-size teams will be from brigades, divisions, major commands, each state and territory and Army Reserve major subordinate commands. Participants must send a letter of intent to Michael J. Behnke, USAMU chief of competitions, at michael.behnke@usarec.army.mil or fax 545-6252 by Jan. 30. For more information contact Behnke at (706) 545-7841 (the DSN is 835).

Hunting Regulations — There have been changes to the Fort Benning Hunting and Fishing regulations this year:

• Authorization to hunt or fish on Fort Benning now includes all DoD civilian employees working full-time or the equivalent and all active National Guardsmen and reservists on paid drill status.

• The number of guests that can be sponsored per day has increased from two to three.

• Anyone born on or after Jan. 1, 1961, must show evidence of completing a hunter safety course.

• Guest permits can now be purchased as daily passes, monthly weekend passes, or in periods of time up to 30 consecutive days.

Saturday Bike Rides — Saturday bike rides are in full gear. Riders meet at 10 a.m. Saturdays at Briant Wells Field House and can choose from 10-, 15- or 20-mile rides.

Additional miles can be added on demand. All you need is a bike, helmet, water and plenty of energy .

For more information, call 545-9987 or 545-4388.

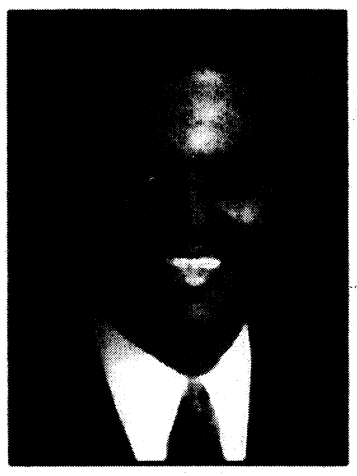
Youth baseball — Coast to Coast athletics is recruiting youth baseball players (ages 11-12) to represent the U.S. in international competition in Puerto Rico.

Outstanding amateurs, selected from as many as 38 states nationwide, will compete against international all-star teams during the 2004 summer school breaks.



The Coast to Coast tour lasts seven days. For more information or to request a program application, call 373-4455 or visit www.CoastToCoast Athletics.com.

Arena Football — Alignment for the 2004 af2 football season begins in late March.

For season ticket information, call 653-7789 or log onto columbuswardogs.com.

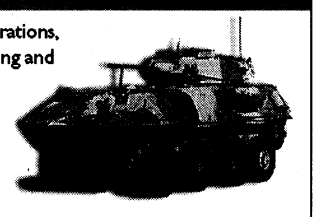
CONGRATULATIONS ROB GRANAI

Rob Granai served with the Third Ranger Battalion during two combat tours: Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom. As a distinguished soldier, he received a Purple Heart and is respected by all his peers.

ROB GRANAI
• PURPLE HEART RECEPIENT •

A native of Rhode Island, Rob was stationed at Fort Benning for his entire military career. He quickly became accustomed to the Southern life-style and decided to settle in Columbus following his tour of duty. After completing his service with the Army, Rob began searching for a challenging career. "All I needed was someone to take a chance on an energetic, hardworking young man.



"I wanted to get into automobile sales because I had seen some of my friends taken advantage of by some shady car dealers. I wanted to prove you could make a living as a car salesman and still treat people right.

"After hearing about the excellent way some of my other friends were treated at Bill Heard Cadillac and Premium Used Cars, I went to Mark Levy, General Manager, and asked for a job at a dealership I could be proud of every day.

"Now, I can sell a nice vehicle that has been properly checked and serviced before it goes on the lot for sale. The deals will be fair, and I know all my customers will be pleased."

Please contact Rob at Bill Heard Cadillac and Premium Used Cars, located behind Bill Heard Chevrolet. Simply drive straight down and make a right at Bill Heard Cadillac and Rob is located at the Premium Used Car building. Call locally 706-322-8881 or toll-free 1-888-322-8881 and ask for him. In his words, "Just give me a chance to work for you!"

Road construction continues

Lane must stay closed to save money, time

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Construction on the I-185 access control point is underway and on schedule.

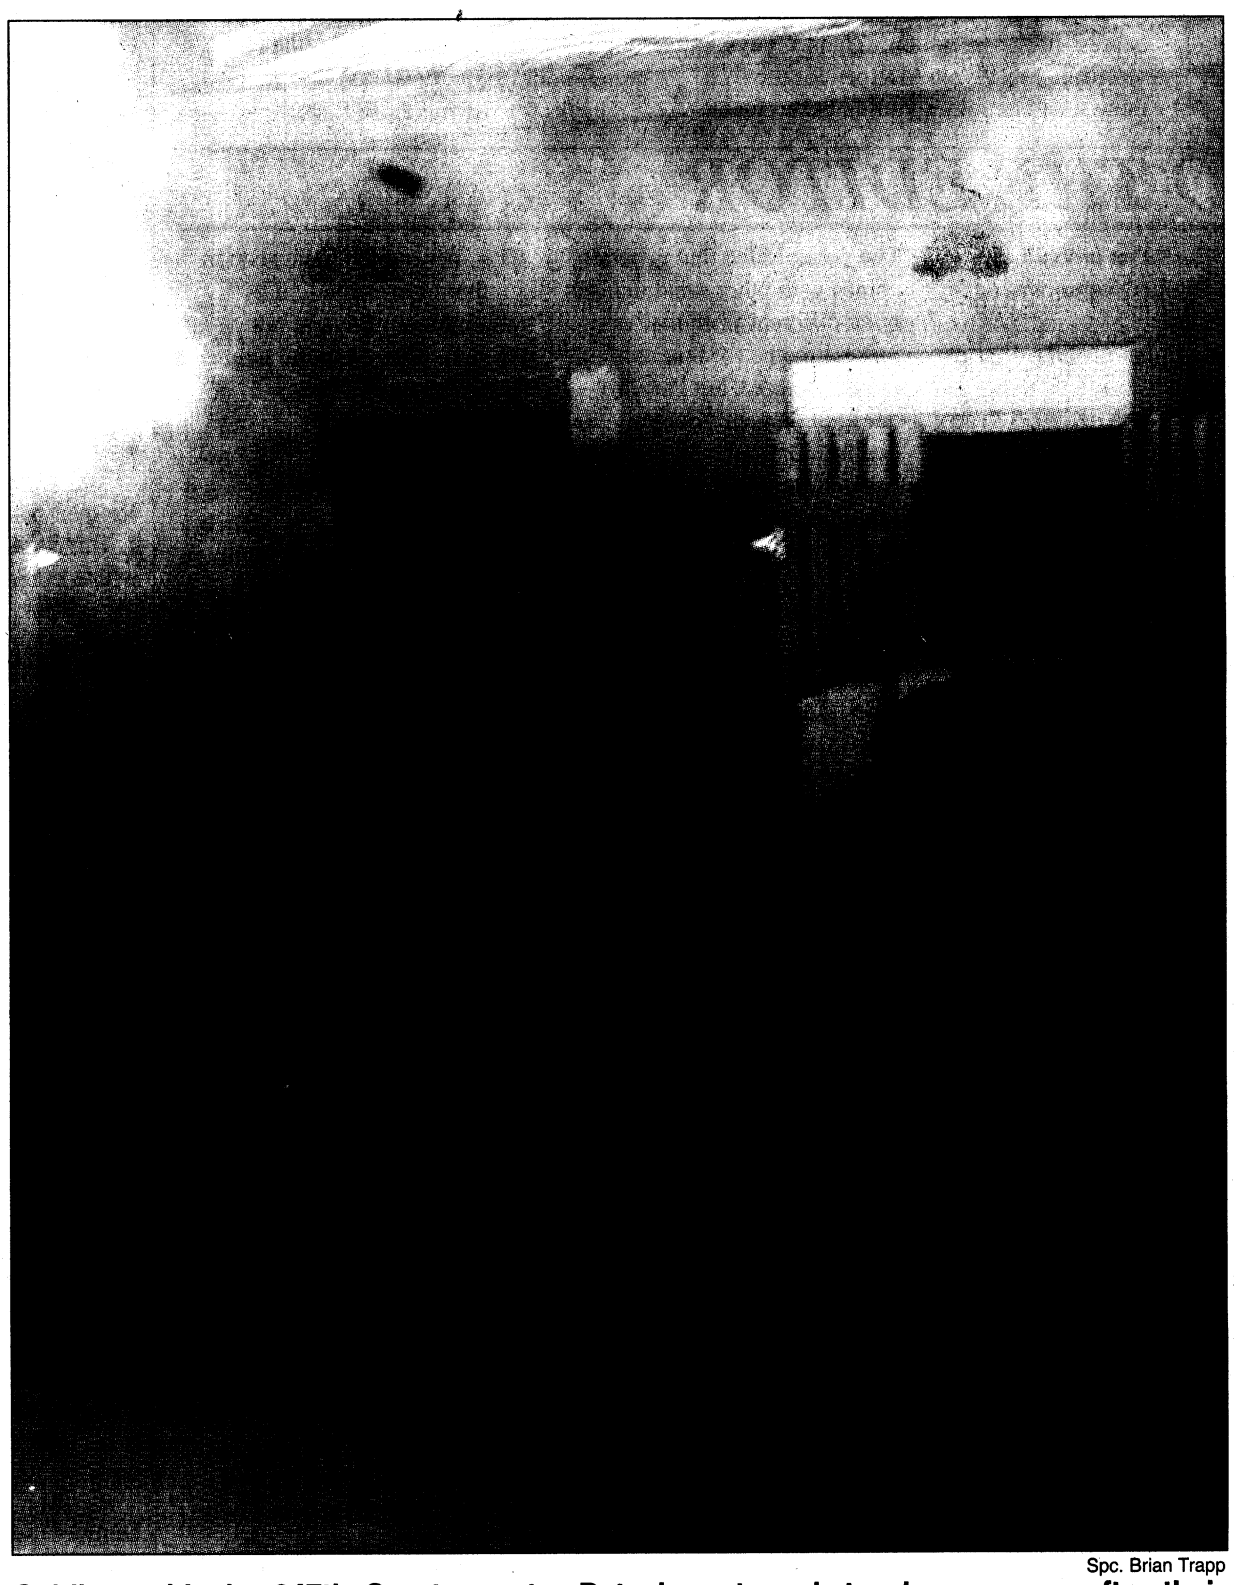
"I'm optimistic it will be done on or before the end of August," said Capt. Mindy Rosito, project engineer, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

All concrete from Custer Road to just south of Victory Drive will be torn up, said Dean Miller, industrial engineer with the Master Planning Branch, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

For those who wonder why an outbound lane on I-185 can't be used, Miller said they can't open an outbound lane for traffic because where the outbound lanes are now is where the new welcome center and a parking lot will be. The roads are being shifted over.

"If they were to leave a lane (on I-185) open, it would extend the build time and the project would cost more money," he said. "Logistically, it would be a nightmare."

The construction workers are using a wrecking truck and smashing the pavement, breaking it up. Then they scoop it up and take it away for disposal, Rosito said. There is also some work being done to expand some of the culverts.



The changing traffic patterns on post will be forgotten as soon as people have the five inbound lanes on I-185 when the project is complete.

"I think the MPs are doing a good job adjusting as they go and addressing the outbound traffic problem," Miller said.

"I hope everybody realizes this will be so much better than it was," Rosito said. "It may be inconvenient now, but will be better in the long run."

Post takes on new look

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

In a series of moves that officially began Jan. 5, the command and staff structure on Fort Benning is taking on a new look.

Soon after taking command of the Infantry Center, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley created a staff action team to assess the organizational structure and recommend changes. The proposed changes affect all of the primary directorates and the five school brigades on post.

"What we did was consolidate the staff from the old Infantry School and Infantry Center organization into one U.S. Army Infantry Center staff," said Lt. Col. Richard Turner, deputy chief of staff.

Turner said the staff mimics a division staff, clarifying lines of control and increasing the overall staff effectiveness.

He said there were three documents the Infantry Center had for staff organization and function — Fort Benning Policy Memorandum 10-10, the organizational flow chart and the officer rating scheme — none of which agreed.

"We had good people doing good things," Turner said, "but nothing was synchronized. We were stove piped."

3rd ID to become 'brigade units of action'

Reorganization to split division into 5 brigades

Sgt. 1st Class Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — "It's like breaking china," said the commanding general who has proposed to make his division larger, diversify his brigades and turn all his Soldiers into riflemen.

Soldiers from the 3rd Infantry Division, Fort Stewart, Ga., seized Baghdad and helped in the stabilization of Fallujah. They know what tactics work against an unconventional enemy and what vulnerabilities make American troops targets.

Their task now is to turn their three brigades into five rapidly deployable "brigade units of action" that are able to plug into any division and independently fight a high-intensity conflict.

"The chief told me that he wants five maneuver brigades ... to respond to all the needs of combatant commanders when a crisis occurs, and he said that he wants it to happen ASAP," said Maj. Gen. William Webster, 3rd Inf. Div. commanding general, referring to instructions given to him by Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker.

See 3rd ID, A-7

CLOSER LOOK

3rd Infantry Division's reorganization into five "brigade units of action," which is to take place as soon as possible, could bring about several changes, including:

- 3rd ID could grow by as many as 2,000 to 3,000 Soldiers.
- Combat troops could decrease by about 10 to 15 percent.
- Each brigade unit of action will have one less company-size element and fewer artillerymen.
- Each brigade unit of action will have more military policemen, better command and control assets to talk to each other over long distances and more troops certified to call in close air support.

THANKS FOR CARING

Thanks for giving

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Sure the Army takes care of its own. But let's face it, everyone needs a little help now and then, even Uncle Sam and his kids. That's us.

Fort Benning had plenty of help last year, and this seems like a good time to say thanks.

Problem is, what if I leave someone out? It would be impossible to list all the individuals and organizations that deserve a hug and a handshake.

That said, I'll give it a go. Should I fail to mention someone you know who makes life a little sweeter for Soldiers and their families, be sure to drop us a letter.

Might as well start with the 3rd Brigade's recent deployment to NTC. AUSA, the Association of the U.S. Army, provided food for the Soldiers and their families during the deployment ceremonies on Kelley Hill. Of course, that's just one of many, many ways AUSA has helped our troops, their families and our schoolchildren here on Fort Benning.

Thanks to the organizations that volunteered during this deployment and the ones that came before — the folks from Omega, the Science Applications International Corporation, the Lockheed Martin Corporation and countless others.

Thanks, too, to all the auto and motorcycle dealerships (Chattahoochee Harley Davidson, Drive 1, Bill Heard, Carl Gregory, etc., etc.) that help out regularly. Thanks for supporting the Parade of Heroes, hosting rallies and collecting toys for Santa's Castle. Many, many thanks.

Thank you to the staff at the Freedom House, for feeding our Soldiers and giving them a place to hang out in an atmosphere Mom would be proud of. Bless you.

Thank you to the local congregations — St. Luke comes to mind — who make it their mission to feed our boys and care for our families.

Thank you to all the businesses who offer discounts and specials just for us — restaurants like Golden Corral, which offers a free meal on Veterans Day and a discount year-round.

And the phone companies that allow Soldiers and family members to call home free during events like the Independence Day celebration.

Thanks to Express Automotive on Benning Boulevard for making repairs affordable and less stressful for the wives of our deployed Soldiers. I've personally been on the receiving end of your kindness, and words aren't sufficient to express my appreciation. Thanks, guys.

Thank you Vivian McRory for the thousands of cookies you've baked for our Soldiers, for feeding and mentoring their wives.

Thank you to the organizations, like Clear Channel and Knology, that supported Operation We Care and Hugs to Kuwait and to the local businesses that supply trophies and plaques to our stellar performers.

Thank you to my friend Puff and the folks of Rolling Thunder who volunteered their time and energy to help families in need during their Soldiers' absences.

Thank you, Paul Voorhees, the Ranger Joe, for years and years of moral and financial support. We love you.

Thank you to all the local ball teams and attractions, like Callaway Gardens (free admission through Feb. 15!), for entertaining our troops and their families and for raising funds for the causes that are near and dear to our hearts, like the Katie Turner Foundation.

Thanks to First Command, CB&T, TIC and all the other financial institutions that contributed dollars to every cause that came down the pike.

Thanks to everyone — the hundreds of people and organizations — who participated in House of Heroes. When you take care of veterans, you send the message that you care for Soldiers and their families everywhere.

And a great big thanks and God bless you to everyone who donated a dime or took the time to pray for our nation or write to our troops.

Thanks for waving those flags.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

On Dec. 31, Thusnelda "Nellie" Nearen was laid to rest at the Fort Benning cemetery next to her beloved husband, Willie. Six generals, all of them former commanders at Fort Benning, carried her casket. Twelve others, among them the mayor and city manager of Columbus, the present commander of Fort Benning, a Medal of Honor recipient and eight colonels, served as honorary pallbearers. The Chief of Army Chaplains, Gen. David Hicks, officiated and Gen. John Hendrix gave the eulogy. Who was this woman for whom generals mourned?

As Gen. Hendrix so eloquently told us, Nellie came to this country as an Austrian immigrant, the bride of a WWII veteran and a survivor of the Nazi and Russian occupations. As a naturalized citizen, Nellie took great pride in being an American and having visited all 50 states. She received hundreds of Christmas cards each year from people in those states who saw in her a life that epitomized all that is best about this nation.

Nellie spent a lifetime in service to the Fort Benning community. She cared for 19 poor and elderly people in rural Alabama, who knew her only as "Georgia." Driving her 1963 Ford Fairlane, Nellie brought gifts of food and clothes to people she called the "true Americans."

With undaunting courage, total dedication and uncompromising values about what was right and good, Nellie left a legacy of what it means to be a patriot.

On her tombstone is inscribed a simple yet powerful epitaph: "Angel of Mercy." In every sense of the words, she was. In all that it could ever mean, Nellie Nearen was an American.

She will be missed.

The author of an article in an earlier issue of The Bayonet expressed very negative opinions about the food served in a local restaurant (The Bavarian House), even about food that was not ordered or eaten by the author. By the author's own admission, she is not an expert in German cuisine. Her opinions were based on her (and her daughter's) experience with food cooked by one man who learned to cook in his mother's restaurant in Germany.

Apparently, the author is unaware that methods used to prepare German meals vary considerably across Germany, and even across contiguous cities and villages within a German state. This fact makes eating (and drinking) your way across Germany an adventure to be remembered fondly.

In terms of the restaurant whose food was so badly represented in the aforementioned review, let us provide a different opinion. Our opinion is based on the following sets of experiences: one of us was born and raised in Bavaria, we both had mothers, aunts and grandmothers who cooked German food and we both have eaten repeatedly in restaurants in almost every state in Germany.

The cold salad served in the Bavarian House is very good and quite similar to that served in restaurants across Germany. The potato salad that generally comes with other salad items is quite different from that we make at home (or that our mothers made), but that fact does not distract from its quality. Of course, a cup of hot goulash soup (one of our favorites) can also be ordered, in addition to or instead of the salad.

The main course, be it one of various types of grilled or breaded schnitzel, rouladen, sauerbraten or whatever, is always of excellent quality and of quite sufficient quantity. Again, these meals often differ in various ways from those prepared by other chefs. That is a good, not a bad, thing. (It's amazing how good but different a simple meal of bratwurst can be from one German village to another.) After the main course, the restaurant is prepared to serve a slice of (real) homemade cake, some like mom used to make and some she would not have tried to make.

Enough said. Our opinions are based on more than our experience with meals prepared by anyone's father or by any relative born in Germany. Our opinions are not based principally on the likes and dislikes of our child, grandchildren or great grandchildren for pickles or mustard, or on their uncanny (and unsubstantiated) ability to differentiate by sight alone between ground paprika peppers and ground chili peppers. (Our oldest great granddaughter loves pickles and thinks the rouladen served at the Bavarian House is super. However, she also likes to eat at Taco Bell — go figure). We know that Germans use the term Haus to refer to the building in which they live, but they also call the great state in southern Germany (Deuschland) Bayern, not Bavaria, something the writer of the previous article may not know.

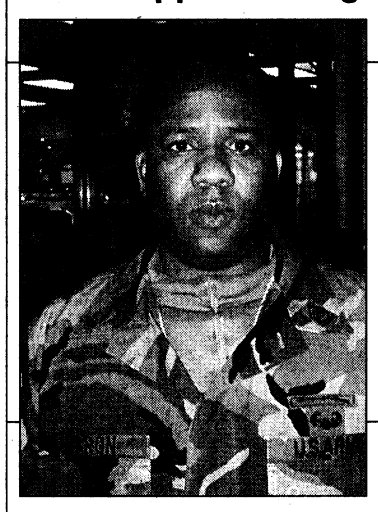
Regarding your Jan. 12 review about the Bavarian House restaurant, I would like you to know I was very appalled after reading this very damaging article following this very first visit to the restaurant. Instead of taking pen to hand, don't you think it would have been better to approach the owners and allowed them to correct those faults noticed by you? And as far as how the meals were prepared for both yourself and Jessica, you should know that not all Germans prepare their meals the same way.



One factor to consider is from which of the several German Lander (states) they come from. I believe that instead of casting negative comments, especially with this being your first visit, you should have approached the owners. Another alternative is for you and Jessica not to return to the restaurant.

With your remark, I believe your motive is to try to put them out of business. After all, this was your first visit. It's not like you had observed these infractions over a period of several visits. I and my family have eaten there on several occasions and think the establishment and food are fine.

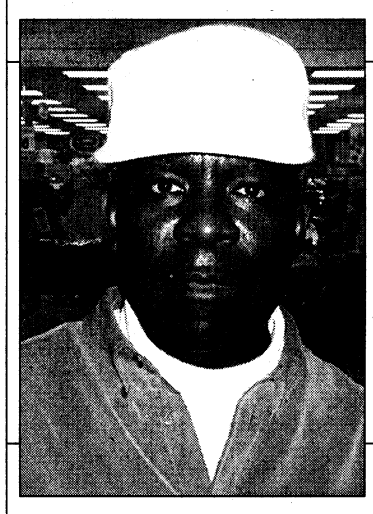
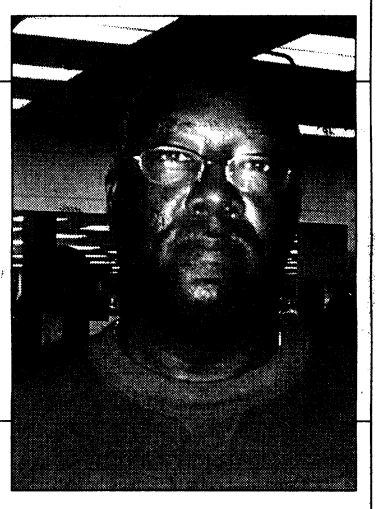
VARIOUS VOICES



Whom do we, as the Fort Benning community, owe a "thank you" to for their support during the past year or so?



Sgt. 1st Class Roberto Aron, Garrison — "The Community Life Program, because they have helped many families while their Soldiers were deployed and they are always here to help."

Staff Sgt. Pablo Coronado, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Country's Barbecue, because they donated so much food to the Soldiers after the Parade of Heroes."

Command Sgt. Maj. Jim Davis, Directorate of Training — "Santa's Castle and the Officers' Spouses' Club, because they do a lot of work behind the scenes for Soldiers and their families."

Retired Master Sgt. Michael J. Harris, Columbus — "The whole community, because of the support they've shown to Soldiers and their families. They have worked together with the Fort Benning community to make life better for the Soldiers."

Merica McCune, family member — "Philadel[illegible] Baptist Church in Smiths Station, because they put on a play about Soldiers and they held fund-raisers to help support the Fort Benning community."

Denise Stephens, family member — "There are so many businesses that have shown their support, it's hard to narrow it down to one. We send a heartfelt 'thank you' to all of them."

Tree pruning under way

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Motorists leaving Fort Benning on Lumpkin Boulevard have seen some of the post's beautification efforts in the past few months.

Although Shaw Infrastructure, Inc. has crews out daily pruning dead limbs and removing dead trees, the job of tackling the huge, old trees in the Main Post historical area was contracted out.

Tree surgeon Joe Arms and his company, A & S Tree Service, are working on the contract now.

A & S spent six months on Austin Loop and estimate it will take two months to finish the work in progress on Miller Loop. James Parker, a forester from the Land Management Branch, said there are a number of trees on Main Post nearing their maximum age. Laurel and water oaks are the problem trees, he said.

"At 50 to 60 years old, these trees start falling apart in urban areas," Parker said. "Most of these trees are 70 to 80, and we're trying to save what we can."

The trees are affected by the utilities, roads, sidewalks, buildings and even a fungus that causes rot. They may look healthy from the outside, Parker said, but are hollow inside. He estimates the pruning will extend the life of the trees by 10-15 years.

Hankins said tree roots, which spread 20-40 feet, can get into basements through cracks in the walls and eventually ruin a house. Trees that grow within 50 feet of houses are the Housing Division's responsibility to maintain.

Melissa House

Mark Tryon, a tree climber with A&S Tree Service, prunes an oak tree Wednesday morning.

Arms said his company's initial contract was for 3,800 hours, but it was modified and will end up around 4,800 hours.

The pruning entails removing what Arms calls "sucker" branches that sprout from the trunk and from main or "leader" limbs.

His best climber, Mark Tryon, took advantage of the cool weather Wednesday morning to prune an oak with a huge honeycomb. Since the bees won't fly in the cold, Tryon said he wouldn't have to worry about getting stung.

As Arms' crew prunes, they make assessments on the health of the tree and mark trees for possible removal.

But before a tree can be removed completely from the historical area, a Form 144-R, Environmental Consideration Form, must be approved.

Once a tree is removed and the stump is ground out, the tree will be replaced. Parker has a list of approved trees, like scarlet or northern red oaks, that can be used. Residents can plant trees, Parker said, but they should make sure the tree is native to Georgia and not something invasive, like the "popcorn tree," a Chinese tallow tree.

Parker said the Land Management Branch and Shaw will work together to develop an annual schedule for tree maintenance.

The schedule will indicate which trees need to be pruned or removed and where trees need to be replanted. A coordinated and staggered maintenance schedule will ensure there are trees of varying ages throughout the Main Post area.

The inventory, which took about a month to complete, cataloged approximately 9,400 trees on Main Post that were within 66 feet of a road, no matter what the diameter. The other trees inventoried were those greater than 8 inches in diameter — the ones Parker said create the most problems.

The contractor recorded the coordinates of each tree using a global positioning system and noted species, health, height, diameter and life expectancy data on each tree.

Parker said one of the largest trees on Main Post is a cherry bark oak, close to 48 inches in diameter, located behind the commanding general's house.

1,600 Soldiers face extensions

12 units with year overseas to stay longer

Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense has approved the extension of selected Army units past their 12-month "boots on the ground" time in the U.S. Central Command area of responsibility.

The extensions are for 12 units, affecting approximately 1,600 Soldiers of about 130,000 currently deployed.

The time extended will vary by unit, between five and 60 days.

The Department of Defense is committed to supporting the combatant commander and his mission while balancing the need to take care of Soldiers, their families and communities.

"We are entering the most challenging period for our Army since World War II," said Gen. Peter J. Schoomaker, Army chief of staff, in a message to the extended Soldiers.

"As we deploy and redeploy nearly one quarter of a million Soldiers over the next four months, we all will be required to make sacrifices to ensure that we safely and successfully accomplish the mission.

"Soldiers' contributions to Operations Enduring Freedom, Iraqi Freedom and other expeditionary operations have been critical to our nation's successes and to keeping the American people safe.

"We are warriors, and that entails a special ethos: I will always place the mission first, I will never accept defeat, I will never quit, and I will never leave a fallen comrade.

"When our nation calls upon us, we have to be motivated by things that come from deep in our souls.

"It is called service for a reason. It is about giving more than you get. It is about duty. It is about sacrificing for the good of the whole.

"We are committed to not having you stay in country one day longer than necessary.

"Our Army has worked hard to reduce the number of units and Soldiers required to make this sacrifice. What you are doing is critical to mission success and we are grateful for your continued commitment to our nation's security and remain dedicated to each and every Soldier.

"You and your families need to know that we have done everything possible in order not to extend you. For the few units being extended, there are no other alternatives.

"Thank you for all that you have done and continue to do for our great nation and may God bless you, your families, the Army and the United States."

Extensions will be handled on a case-by-case basis, so no effective dates have been announced.

Officials also are not publicly identifying units likely to be extended, but said they have unique skills and provide important capabilities to the combatant commander.

They stressed that every effort will be made to keep extensions as short as possible.

"If you want it all, we've got it all."

Benning celebrates MLK's birthday, legacy

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

Fort Benning celebrated the life and legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. on what would have been his 75th birthday Jan. 15.

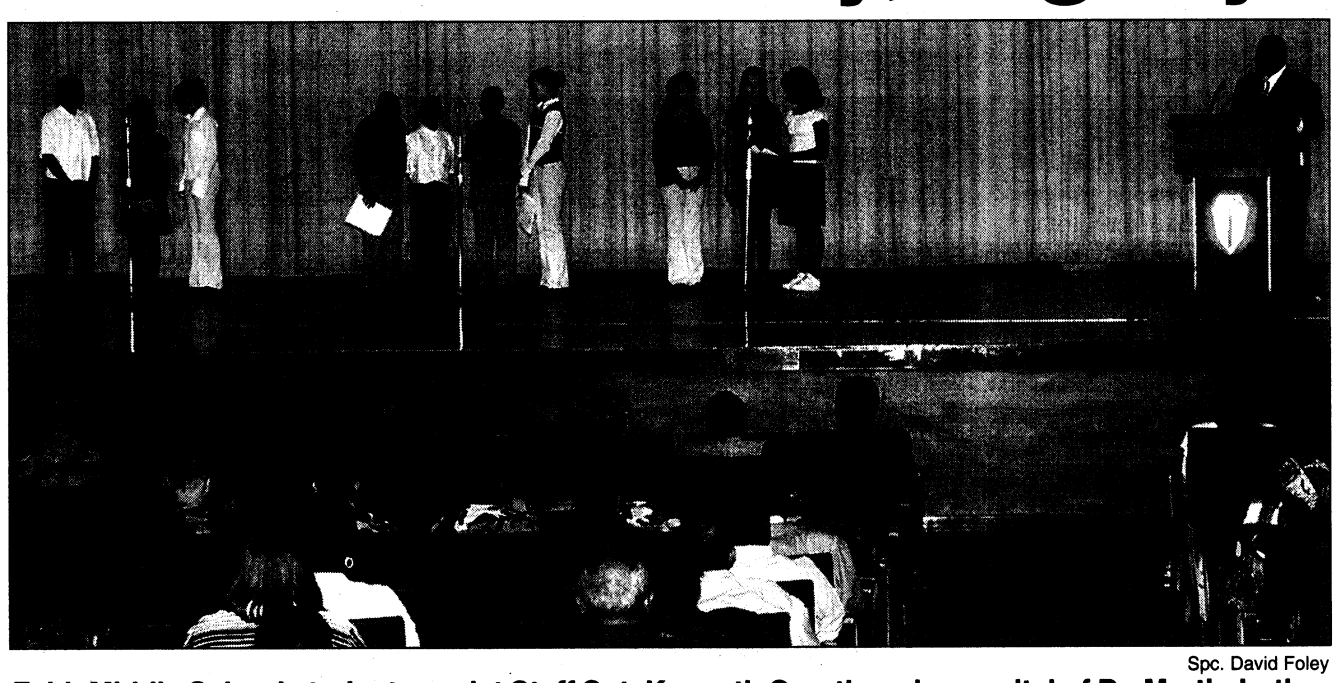
Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin, the Infantry Center's staff chaplain, opened a commemoration service at Marshall Auditorium with an invocation and summed up America's progress in the area of race relations.

"We're not completely where we should be," he said. "But this day points toward a greater future."

More than 300 people attended the 90-minute ceremony themed Remember! Celebrate! Act! A day on, not a day off.

"This theme captures and captivates the hearts and minds of those of us who are survivors of the movement for civil rights," said Rev. Tim Reynolds, the guest speaker and the pastor of St. James Missionary Baptist Church.

Reynolds' speech fluctuated between an impassioned account of the injustices black Americans have faced and a celebratory "counting of successes."



"Many of us remember our great nation embroiled in a struggle with ... racism," he said. "We remember the signs, 'Whites Only.' We remember having to go through the back door ... the second-hand textbooks. We remember four little girls ... in Birmingham, Alabama, being blown apart by hate."

But Reynolds reminded his audience of the contributions of white Americans in the fight for equality.

"We celebrate the move of God upon the hearts of so many people with so many differences," he said.

The struggle for equality has "reaped a bountiful harvest," Reynolds said, and nowhere is it more evident than in the military.

"We have the greatest Army in the world, made up of many races and religions and cultures and ethnicities," he said. "The military is the model for this great nation."

Spc. David Foley

Faith Middle School students assist Staff Sgt. Kenneth Caruthers in a recital of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech from his 1963 March on Washington.

The ceremony, which featured performances by Soldiers, Fort Benning schoolchildren and civilians, marked the beginning of a four-day observance of the MLK holiday, said Brig. Gen. Stephen Layfield, Fort Benning's deputy commanding general.

"This is a big deal," he said. "It's our way of kicking off a great four days of celebration for a great man. I encourage all of you to pause, learn, reflect and respect all the things this holiday stands for."

AROUND POST

1st-termers financial readiness class

The first-termers personal financial readiness training is 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. today in Infantry Hall's Classroom 2A.

All Soldiers in the pay grade of E-4 and below for whom Fort Benning is the first permanent duty station and who in-processed in December are required by the Department of the Army guidance to attend.

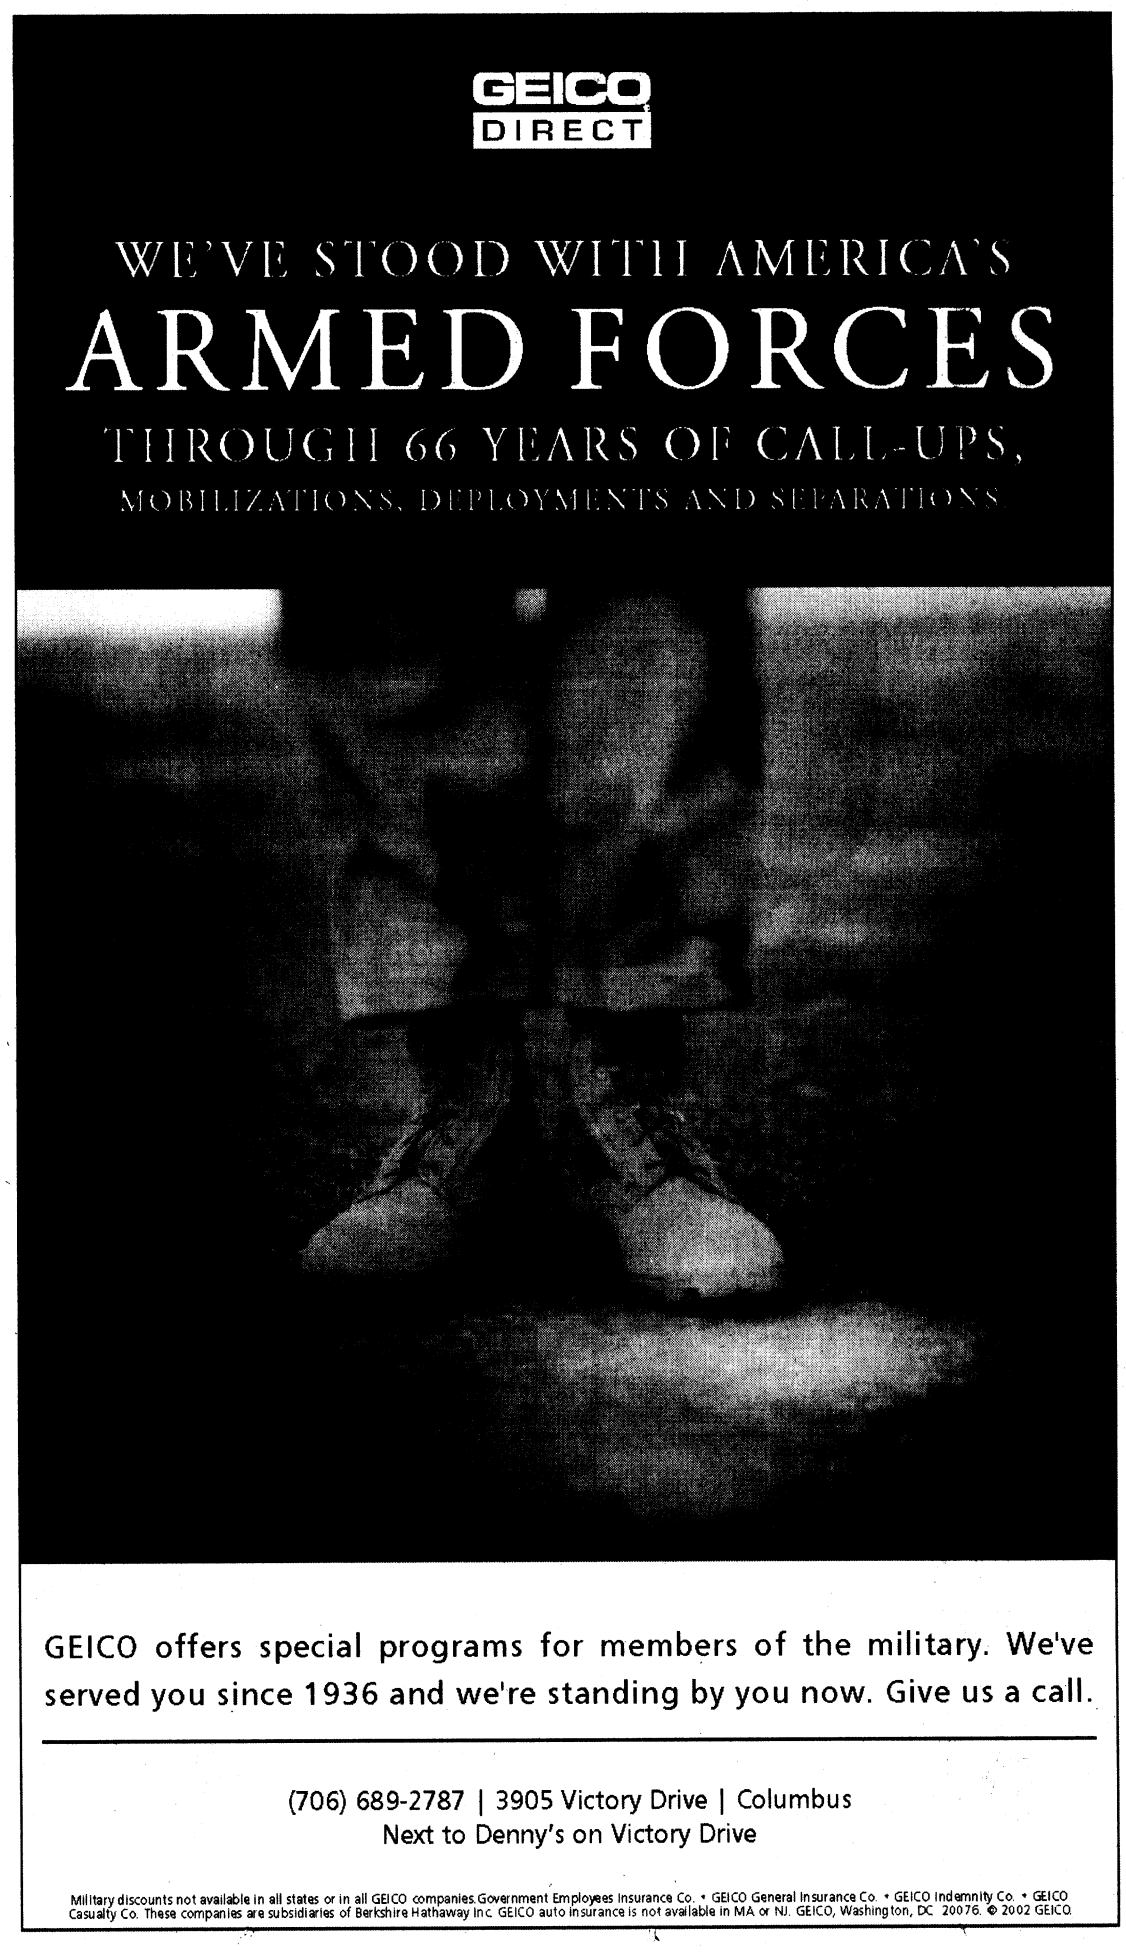
Separating Soldiers

The Fort Benning Adjutant General office would like to help Soldiers separating from the military.



Separating Soldiers with an ETS can expect to have orders published between 60 and 90 days prior to their departure on transition leave, or their separation date, whichever is earlier. Separating Soldiers must see the Army Career and Alumni Program and attend a pre-separation briefing 90 to 120 days. This is mandatory.

Upon regular ETS or separation, Soldiers may be eligible for the following benefits: dental treatment, unemployment compensation, Montgomery GI Bill, vocational rehabilitation and employment, disability compensation, home loans and health benefits.

There are specific time limits and restrictions on the benefits. All of the information can be accessed through the Veterans Affairs homepage at www.va.gov.

For more information, call the local Veterans Affairs office, located in Building 2617 in Soldiers' Plaza, at 545-4887. The Transition Center is located in Building 2619 and can be reached at 545-5400 or 545-5424, or see your unit personnel NCO.

WHINSEC conducts first jump

Exercise shows joint readiness

Eighteen paratroopers from the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation dotted the skies over Fryar Drop Zone Jan. 13.

This operation marked the first time Soldiers from WHINSEC jumped together as one unit and served as a successful example of unit readiness.

Employing the use of a single C-130 aircraft with multiple passes at an altitude of about 1,200 feet above ground level, the jump not only helped to maintain jump and jumpmaster proficiency but also offered a glimpse into the development of a future Airborne Infantry Operations Course to be taught by the Special Operations Division of the institute, said Sgt. 1st Class James Bobadilla, SOD instructor and primary operations jumpmaster.

"With this jump, we not only demonstrated that WHINSEC is ready as a unit, but we are also proficient enough to instruct others when it comes to the tactical aspects of an airborne operation," Bobadilla said.

The course is expected to incorporate the practical application of airborne tactics, a subject not previously explored in other courses at WHINSEC, he said.

However, a finalizing date has yet to be determined for the proposed course.

Staff Sgt. Jorge Avalos, departure airfield control officer, attributed the success of the day's jump to such things as the weather and coordination.

"It wasn't too hot or too cold, it didn't rain and the winds were down. It was perfect weather. I just wish I'd been able to jump myself," said Avalos, whose mission during the exercise had him working as a liaison between the Air Force and the jumpmaster.

Jump safety officers Capt. Orlando Cosme and Capt. Chris Murray also deemed the jump successful.

"Things went extremely well as far as safety is concerned. We had no reported injuries. No gear issues. Everything was run exactly by the book — as any airborne operation should," Cosme said.

Murray said he was also satisfied with the level of professionalism displayed by those involved in the operation but felt that some aspects, such as the frequency of exercises, could be improved.

Making future jumps open to foreign guest instructors is also in the works pending joint approval, said Murray.

"A (jump) wing exchange would really add to unit cohesion and foster the true joint operability of the unit," he added.

Future WHINSEC jumps and other high-risk quarterly exercises are planned for the coming months, but those are also pending approval and scheduling.

Staff: Reorganizes to help post run more efficiently

Under the new organization, most of the staff works for the chief of staff, who is responsible for directing, synchronizing and coordinating staff actions for the commanding general and deputy commanding general.

Turner said one of the most useful changes, already in the works, was the creation of the Infantry Futures Group, led by Col. Thomas Vail.

"As the Army was developing future tactics and doctrine, Fort Benning wasn't. We were going about it ad hoc, and no one wanted to hear what we had to say," Turner said.

The IFG, he said, was a big step that is already working well by allowing Vail and his staff to focus on the future and allow the deputy commander, Brig. Gen. Stephen Layfield, to orient on Freakley's main effort — training. Vail also serves as the command group's official representative, easing the commander's travel schedule.

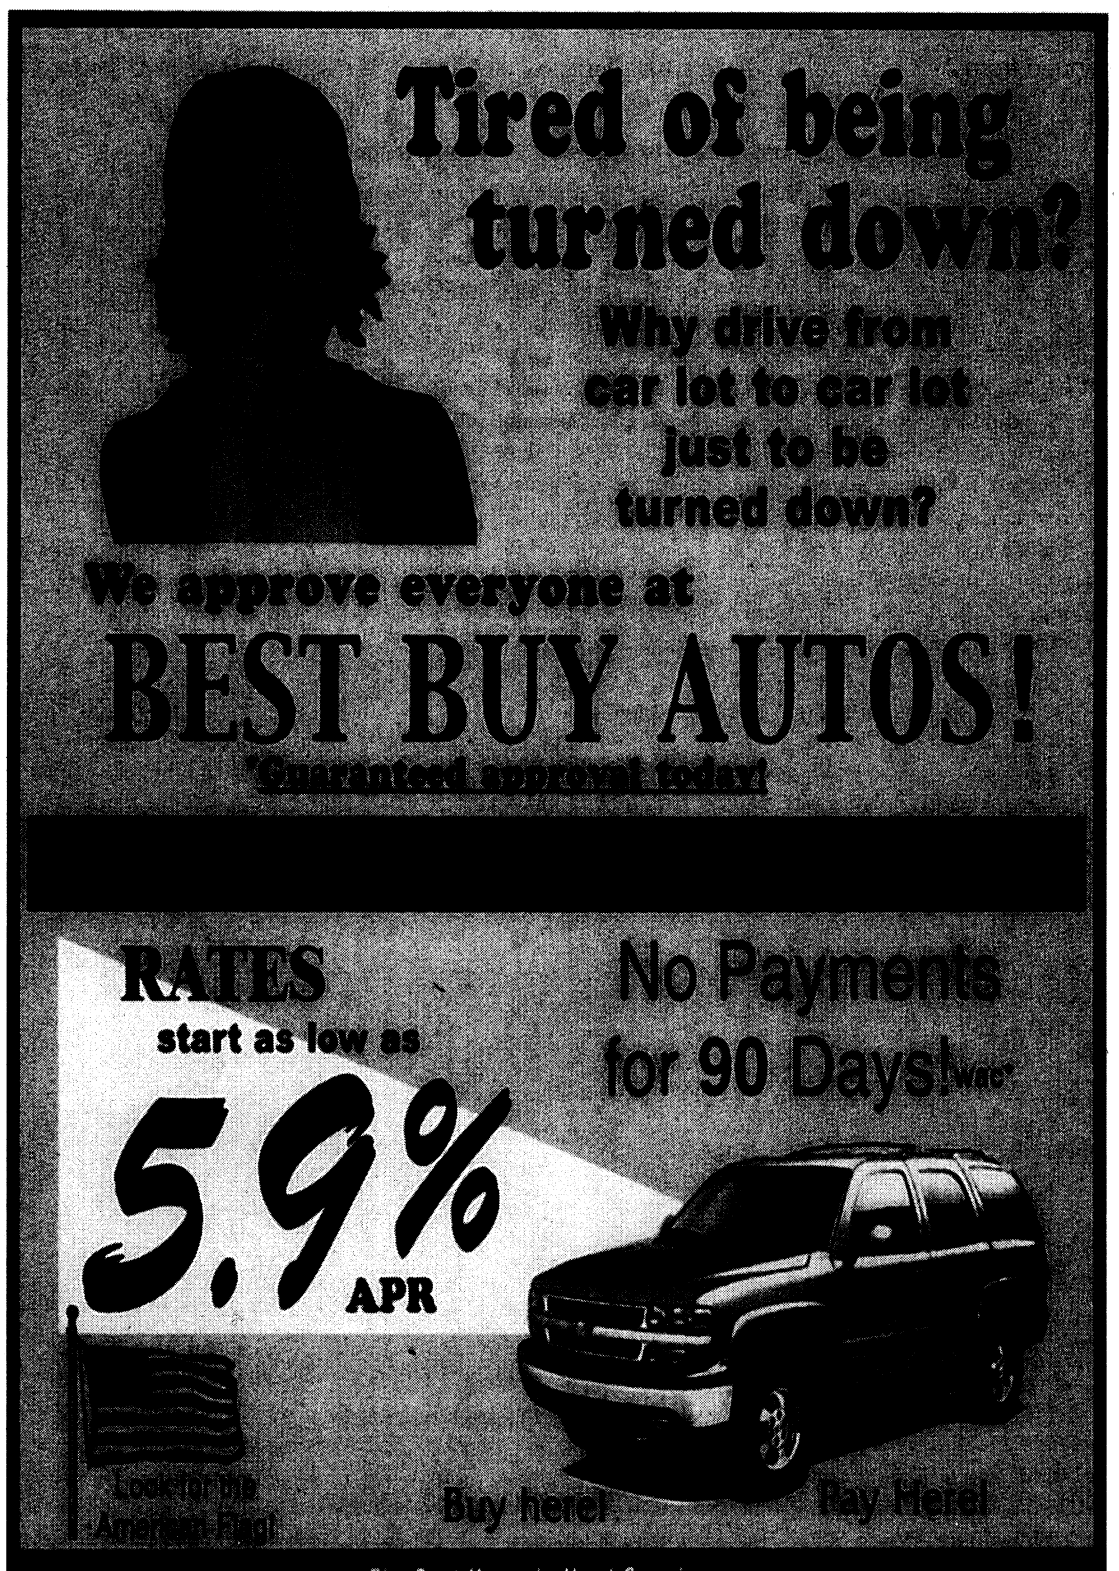
Turner said it was interesting that the reorganization idea was not new. He spent time combing through continuity files left by his predecessors and found at least five years' worth of staff reorganization documents.

The effort also parallels the staff reorganization now going on within Training and Doctrine Command, so the changes are nested with theirs.

The staff action group began working in early September and spent an estimated 400 man hours on the project. They established a new standard "battle rhythm" for meetings ranging from a weekly staff call, a monthly command and staff and a series of IFG-related meetings.

Turner said the reorganization will not be completely transparent because things will get easier and more efficient, and everyone involved will see a much better flow of information down to the lowest level.

In addition to staff organization changes are changes to the structures of three of the five school brigades on post. The 30th Adjutant General Battalion moves from the 29th Infantry Regiment to the Basic Combat Training Brigade, which also gets the Drill Sergeant School from the 11th Inf. Regt.



The 11th Inf. Regt. also loses the NCO Academy, which becomes a separate unit under control of the chief of staff. The biggest improvement, Turner said, is moving the Infantry Center staff from A Company and Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., to a newly created HHC, USAIC. The move allows Lt. Col. Alan Neyland, 1st Bn., 11th Regt. commander, to focus on the new Basic Officer Leaders Course.

Another key move Turner said is sure to pay dividends in a matter of time is moving the post's aviation detachment to the 29th Inf. Regt., where it will now have the direct oversight of a brigade commander.

"The 29th is the best in TRADOC in maintenance," Turner said, "and will be able to help the detachment with maintenance issues."

The aviation detachment move should be completed by mid-February. Although the reorganization is still in the initial phases, Turner expects to have any "bugs" worked out by the end of February. "There are indicators that it's already working," he said.

Army, Navy join forces to heal

Reservists lend a hand at post's Winder Clinic

During the week, there are seven troop medical clinics open to care for the hundreds of Army personnel going through basic training and other training programs offered at Fort Benning.

However, on the weekends, from 7:30 a.m. to noon, there is only one place they can go — Winder Clinic.

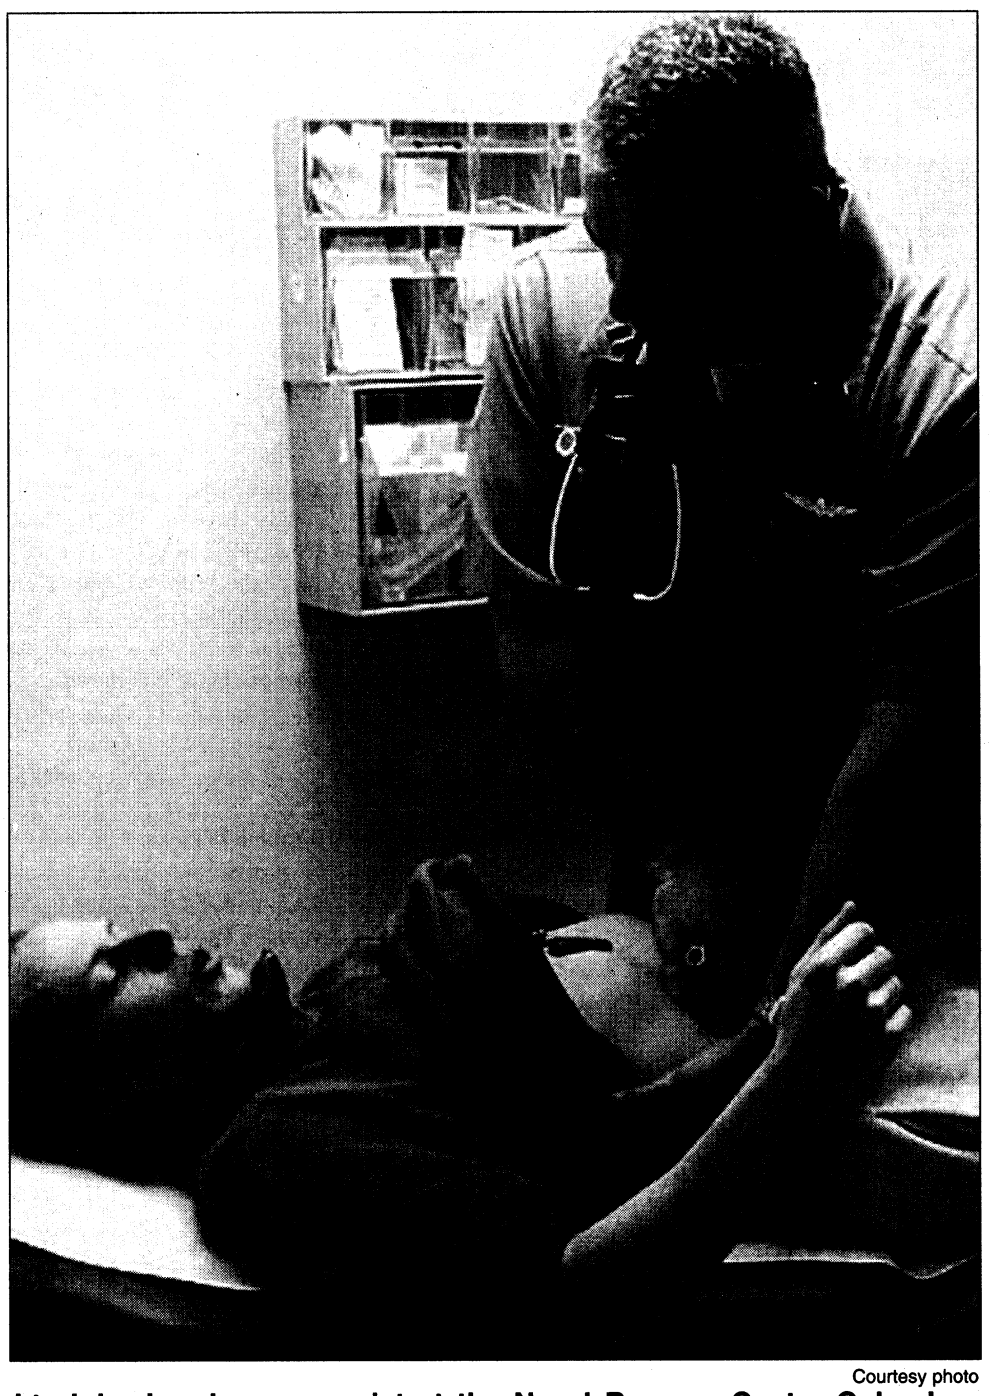
And one weekend a month, naval reservists assigned to Naval Reserve Center-Columbus are there to help out.

"Patient counts range from 100-300 on Saturday mornings and from 50-150 on Sunday mornings," said Capt. James R. Hagler, a doctor assigned to Naval Hospital Jacksonville Detachment B at NRC Columbus.

"Winder Clinic has everything an emergency room would have with the exception of a lab," he said.

Normally, during a drill weekend, there are two or three Navy hospital corpsmen, one nurse practitioner, one physician's assistant and a doctor assisting Army active-duty medical personnel. Civilian doctors and nurses assist in caring for the patients as well.

Winder Clinic has an orthopedic wing and a sick wing.



While lending a hand, naval reservists have the opportunity for hands-on training with a variety of illnesses ranging from blisters to heart problems.

Also, given the extreme physical regimen Army enlistees must go through, medical personnel see a multitude of foot, ankle, shin and knee injuries.

Navy hospital corpsmen conduct triage and physicals, compile patient histories and administer treatment.

"I really love coming out here," said Hospital Corpsman Petty Officer 1st Class Alfred King.

"I get to do a lot more than I would at the reserve center, and it's really good hands-on training."

Both King and Hospital Corpsman Petty Officer 1st Class Keith Metcalfe know how it is from both sides, considering both were previously enlisted in the Army as medics.

Army personnel also come over during the afternoons of drill weekends to conduct training in Army triage protocol.

Upon the completion of a designated number of training hours, Navy medical personnel will have gone through the same training and certification as an Army medic.

Part of Schoomaker's instruction was to see if the reorganization could take place using existing resources within the division. However, the proposal on the table now would cause the division to grow by about 2,000 to 3,000 troops, said Webster. The brigade numbers would stay the same, but combat troops would decrease by about 10 to 15 percent, he added.

Each brigade unit of action will have one less company-size element and fewer artillerymen, Webster said. However, it will have more military policemen, better command and control assets to talk to each other over long distances and more troops certified to call in close air support, he added.

The transformation of the mechanized division will require more than requesting more troops and equipment; the Soldiers are in for some tumultuous times because they are going to have to work past ways the Army used to do business to create a new organization.

"Soldiers don't mind breaking things," Webster said, "but in the beginning it will be difficult because there will be some frustration and confusion. It's not something that they can't do, but it will be a big challenge.

"They will need to get their equipment combat ready again. Junior leaders will have to learn a number of new tasks and then retrain a lot of new Soldiers. There will be engineers, medics, artillerymen and a host of other Soldiers who will be assigned to a brigade commander who is not accustomed to taking care of Soldiers with their job specialties."

Change is already taking place, and one of the first lessons learned from Iraq that is being implemented into the reorganization is making sure that every Soldier is comfortable being a Soldier first, Webster said. Soldiers must be confident and competent with their own weapons and be able to pick up their buddies' weapons, he added.

There is a program in place now where Soldiers will be shooting a lot more ammunition and using a lot more simulators than before, Webster said.

"All Soldiers, from the journalists and the mechanics to the brigade commander, will have the same level of confidence along with being able to live and defend themselves in the field from the front to the rear," he said.

"The enemy forces are learning from us," Webster said, "and they know that not all of our vehicles are armed and that not all of our Humvees are armored, and they're looking for vulnerabilities to strike with explosive devises and rocket-propelled grenades.

He said Soldiers should exude a fearless confidence that would make the enemy think twice before attacking a convoy or command post.

Webster is working with the Army staff to acquire more machine guns and grenade launchers to put on vehicles, so on the battlefield there will be more crew-served weapons to attack or defend.

While in Baghdad the division had to secure high-value assets and set up numerous checkpoints to prevent terrorist attacks. Security missions alone started to absorb Soldiers and equipment all over the city. Webster's goal is to train more Soldiers to fight so that combat troops don't have to be used to secure a service support unit.

Besides changes to training tasks, other challenges at the division level will be overcoming the chaos that will occur when every unit identification code is affected. UICs are alphanumerical codes that help supplies flow to units. It's a system that allows personnel actions to occur, training readiness to be recorded and money to be budgeted.

"We are going to perform a very complex process of moving property from one UIC to another," Webster said. "I predict that some parts we order for one company will show up in another company. We're just going to have to make sure that things don't go awry."

In order to make sure that this massive restructuring project meets the Army chief's guidelines, a division staff was created. Lt. Col. Eric Wesley is the chief of Reorganization, G7, and he served as the executive officer for the division's 2nd Brigade Combat Team during the push into Baghdad.

"We have a near-term mission," Wesley said, "which is to plan and then develop a course of action to increase our deployable entities and ensure that the division doesn't have to deploy every time a brigade-size element does.

"In the meantime, we must remain combat ready. We don't have the luxury of conducting tests, standing down a unit for an extended period of time and experimenting."

This is not a 3rd Inf. Div. initiative, Wesley said. This is an Army initiative, and Training and Doctrine Command has the long-term mission, he said.

TRADOC was given the responsibility of focusing on Modularity, which is one of Schoomaker's 16 focus areas, Webster said.

Modularity would give smaller units a degree of flexibility and more power. The 3rd Inf. Div.'s role is more immediate but will keep TRADOC informed to help them with their long-term, Armywide reorganization plans, he said.

Previously, whenever there was a change to be made in the Army, it would be handed to TRADOC to do an analysis and within a few years come up with and execute a plan, Wesley said. Now both organizations have parallel guidance.

> "Soldiers don't mind breaking things, but in the beginning it will be difficult because there will be some frustration and confusion. It's not something they can't do, but it will be a big challenge."

> commanding general

The direction Webster has from Schoomaker is to reorganize, train, tweak some more and go back and train some more until it's time to deploy again.

The first newly formed brigade unit of action will be trained at the National Training Center, Fort Irwin, Calif., in March.

The first three brigades will be fairly easy to reorganize, but standing up the last two will take some time because more people and equipment are needed to make them whole, Webster added.

The 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault), Fort Campbell, Ky., commanded by Maj. Gen. David Petraeus, has the mission of reorganizing next.

The division has officially begun to redeploy its more than 18,000 troops after serving in Operation Iraqi Freedom.

First stop: Draw yard

Troops take first step toward training

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — The first stop for Soldiers from 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, and supporting forces after hitting the ground is the draw yard, where they pick up the vehicles that will be used to train at the National Training Center.

Jan. 11, Soldiers trekked from the dust bowl to the draw yard to find their units' vehicles.

"The process begins early in the morning with a briefing on how to complete the draw yard process," said Sgt. Kingsley Lee, NBC NCO for B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment.

The yard is arranged in rows according to the number of vehicles each unit needs. Once Soldiers find the vehicles they will use during the rotation, they perform a series of preventive maintenance checks and services.

"It is important to make sure maintenance is done correctly, timely and to standard," said Sgt. 1st Class Jose Feliciano, scout platoon sergeant for Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. "I've got to make sure I've got good equipment, so there is no chance of any equipment breaking down out there.

"It makes my life easier knowing I won't have to find parts for disabled vehicles," he said.

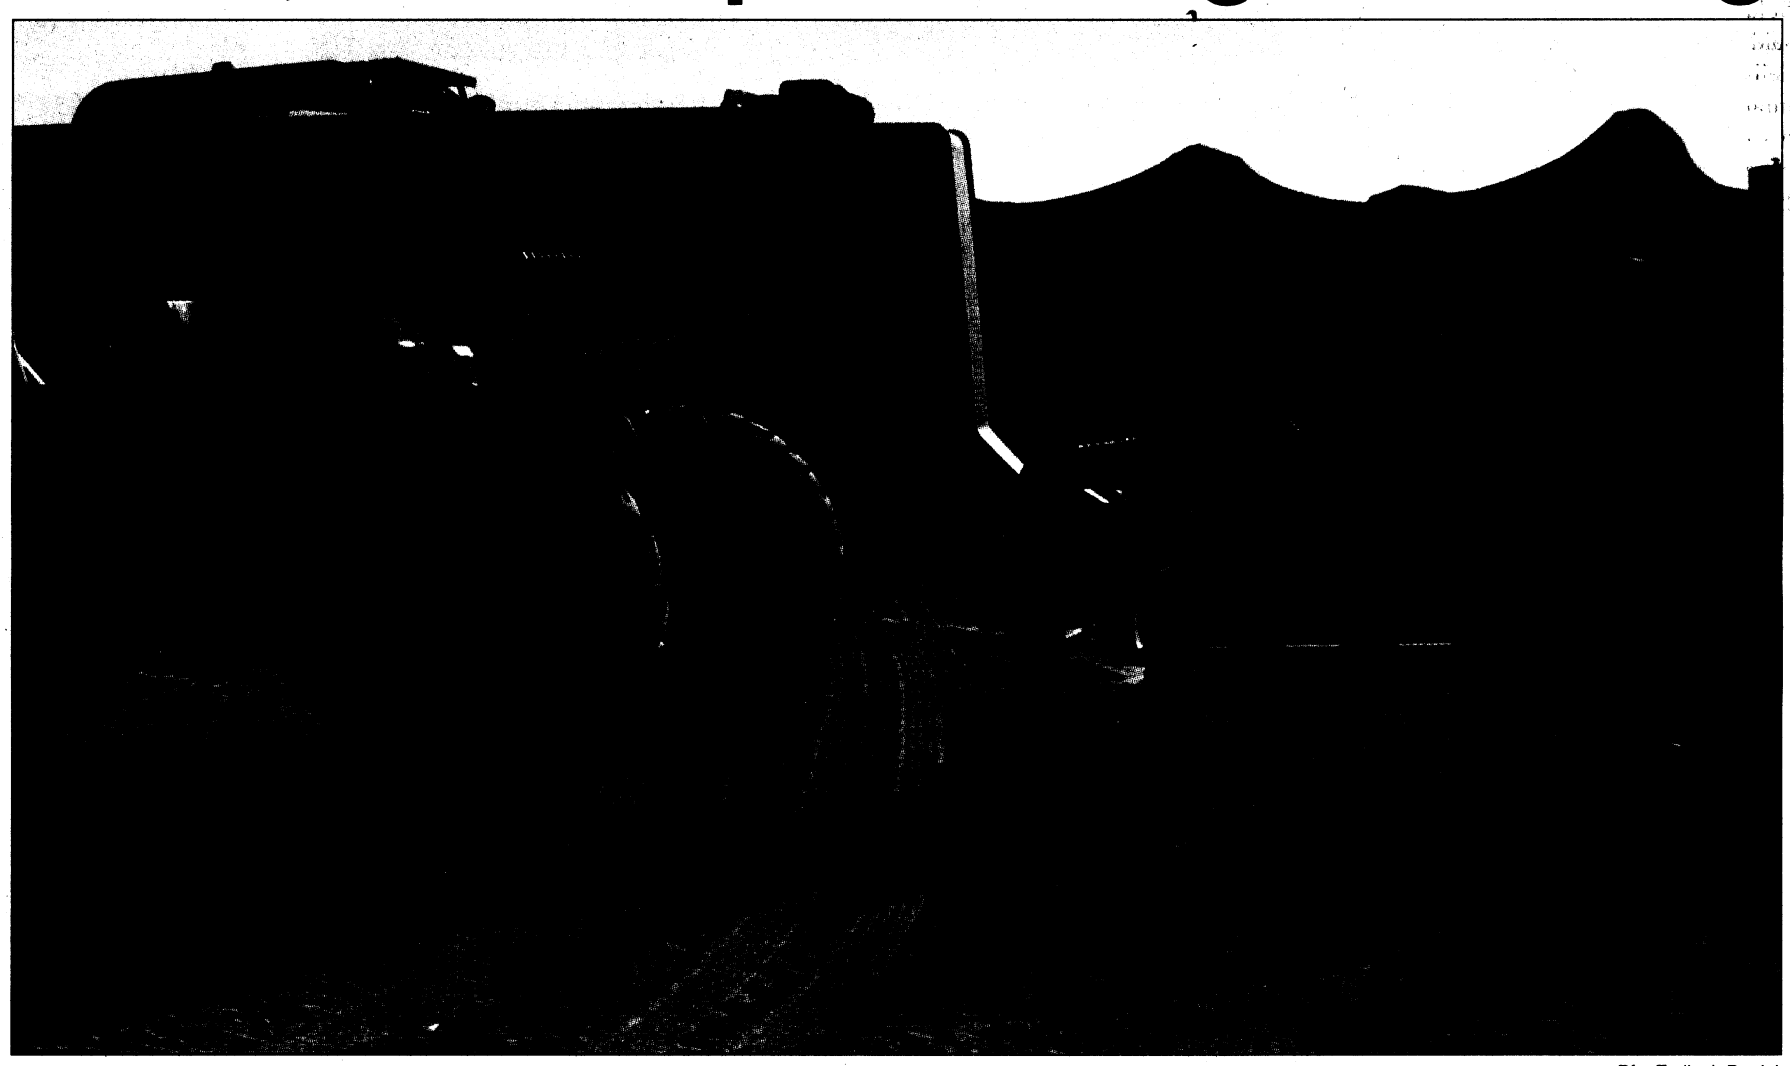
A civilian mechanic from Vinnell Corporation takes another look at the vehicle and approves it for a test drive. A second check is conducted en route to the quality assurance and quality control station, where another check is performed.

"If a vehicle needs to be fixed, we hand it over to the civilian mechanics ... and once fixed, it comes back through for a final QA — QC before it is cleared for operations," said Sgt. 1st Class Lawrence McGhee, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt.

If vehicles are problem-free, they're taken to the motor pool.

"We will then get out in the box, get the job done and go home," said Pfc. Susan Gonzalez, the commander's driver for A Co., 203rd Forward Support Bn.

"The training here ... helps Soldiers feel more comfortable with the vehicles and equipment," Lee said. "Without it, there would be a lot of miscommunication during wartime."



"Seventy-five percent of my Soldiers are new to NTC," Feliciano said. "I'm using the knowledge I gained being here during five other rotations to train them on the importance of correctly inspecting equipment and vehicles.

"The main concern is the accomplishment of all missions and to get everyone home safe."

Soldiers from 559th Quartermaster Battalion and civilians ready a forklift to load supplies at the NTC draw yard.

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — Few of the Soldiers who trek out to the National Training Center realize how much goes on behind the scenes to keep them healthy and happy.

The Division Materiel Management Center keeps the Soldiers at NTC covered when it comes to supplies of every kind. "Materiel" refers to materials specifically used for an army.

There are nine classes of materiel, said Sgt. Maj. Keith C. Dawson, DMMC sergeant major — sustenance, general supplies, fuel, barrier materials, ammunition, "CLASS VI," end items (such as forklifts and other types of machinery), medical and repair parts.

The DMMC tracks and distributes the items essential to NTC operations, Dawson said. Last week, classes I, III and IX were kept particularly busy.

Sgt. Benette Harris, the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Division Support Command Class I NCOIC, opens accounts for the brigade and issues rations to the dining facilities.

"With (the Soldiers) being out in the box, they can't just eat anywhere, and there are too many of them for the dining facility to support," she said. "So each unit has its own DFAC, and they get what we push out to them."

Petroleum specialist Staff Sgt. Iris Rahmings is responsible for issuing JP-8 fuel, a mixture of aviation and diesel fuel.

"Our job is to fuel the force," she said. "Without fuel, vehicles won't run."

Fuel isn't the only item necessary to keep vehicles moving. Sgt. 1st Class David Pickett, who works with 203rd Corps Support Battalion Support Operations, explained how the SPO's systems manage materiel.

"We upload data into the Unit Level Logistics System computer system, which helps us to track equipment and order parts," Pickett said.

Highest priority needs are filled first, Dawson said.

Once priorities are assigned and uploaded into the system, that information is sent to the DMMC, via "electrons flying through the air," where the requests are tracked and filled.

Even though the DMMC's work is not highly visible to the Soldiers involved, they would definitely notice if it wasn't being done.

"If our operation fails, (Soldiers) can't accomplish their mission," said Staff Sgt. Michael Wilson, Class IX NCOIC.

Armor Soldiers settle in California desert

Regiment beds down at NTC

Spc. Jonathan M. Stack
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — Different brigades and regiments come to sharpen their warfighting skills at the National Training Center throughout the year.

B Company, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, arrived at NTC Jan. 10.

They arrived late at night and slept on the ground, said Staff Sgt. Greggory L. Hilliard, tank crew member. The next morning, they set up their shelter-halves to provide cover at night.

The Soldiers of B Co, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., among other soldiers of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division (Mechanized), are staying in the dust bowl.

There, Soldiers stay for about a week to draw their vehicles, multiple integrated laser engagement systems and anything else they need to enter the main training area, commonly known as "the box," for a two-week exercise fighting the opposing force.

"While in the dust bowl, we have been conducting area beautification," said Spc. Craig E. Hilliard, B Co., 2nd Bn., 69 Armor Regt.

"We are waiting for our vehicles to arrive by rail. Once they arrive, we will conduct maintenance on them and make sure our MILES gear is working."

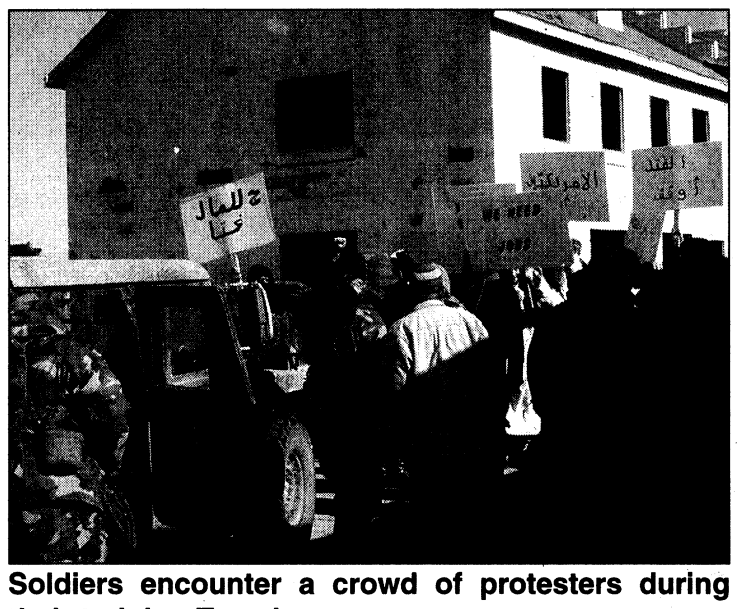
3rd Bde. recently returned from Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"I'm enjoying the fine facilities here — they are better than in Kuwait and Iraq," Craig said.

"There is no wait to go to the PX. The showers and bathrooms are close so you don't have to walk a mile to get to them."

"While in Iraq, we slept on our tanks, and when we are in the box we will do the same," Greggory said.

"I'd rather do that than sleep on the ground. If it gets cold, we can start up the tanks and use them for heat. I'd also rather be here than over in Iraq. We aren't being shot at every day."



Spc. Jonathan M. Stack

Spc. Craig E. Hilliard, B Co., 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., tank crew member, puts two shelter halves together to form a tent. The tent will be his home until the unit finishes in the draw yard and goes into the box at the National Training Center.

Quartermasters take on convoy ops

Training gives realistic encounters

Spc. Brian Trapp

Soldiers encounter a crowd of protesters during their training Tuesday.

Soldiers driving in a convoy encounter a crowd of angry protesters. Once the crowd's shouts are quelled, the Soldiers are attacked from a nearby building.

What are the Soldiers' next steps? A visiting unit is helping train up reserve and National Guard units on this very scenario before their deployment.

The 1st Battalion, 305th Armor Regiment, 87th Division (Training Support), helped a number of reserve and National Guard units complete part of their mobilization training with a convoy operations exercise at McKenna MOUT Site Tuesday.

For the past several days, the 347th Quartermaster Detachment, Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, has prepared for its upcoming deployment and experienced some new training.

"It was good training — something we as quartermaster Soldiers don't normally do," said Capt. Harold Turks, aerial delivery officer. "Doing infantry tasks is different, but it's something we have to do considering the situation in Iraq."

In the scenario, the Soldiers in the convoy encounter both people and an improvised explosive device along the way. They also encountered a crowd of protesters, foreign media and insurgent enemy forces.

The Soldiers had to enter and clear rooms, control the crowd and evacuate the injured.

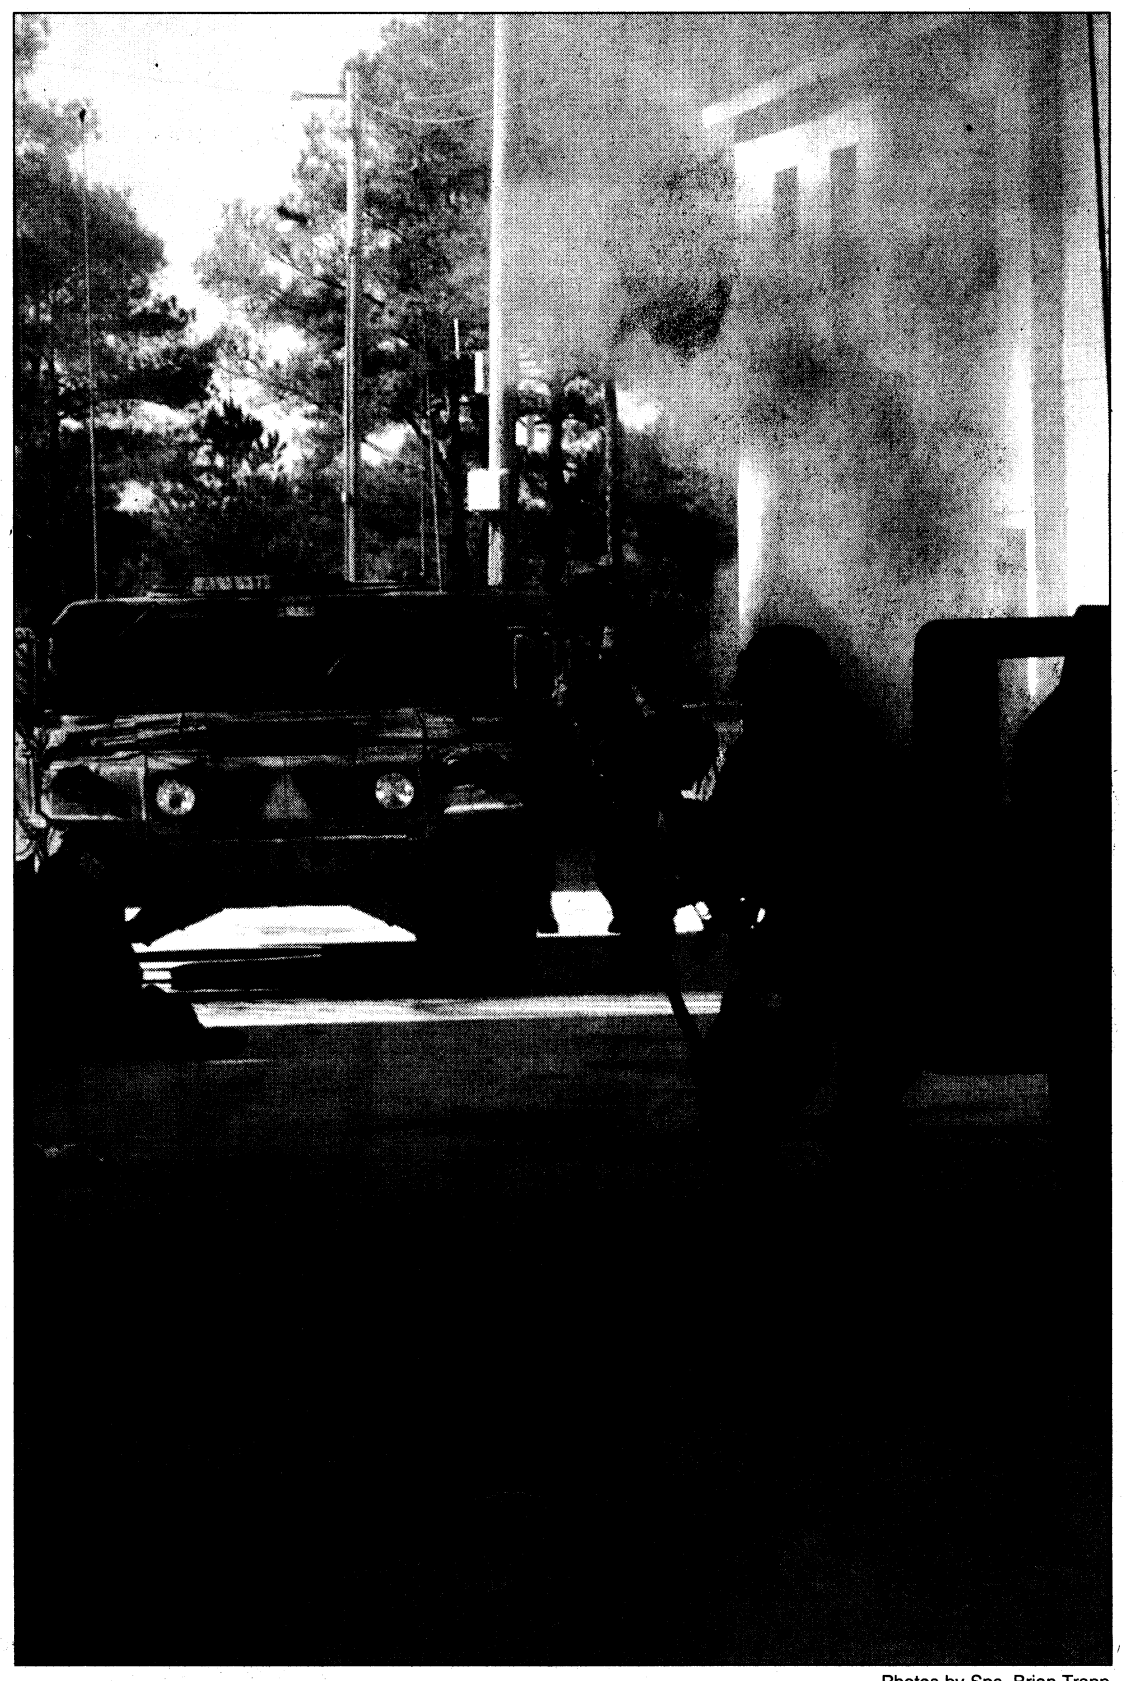
The exercise was prompted by convoys being ambushed in Iraq and changes in the Army in general with the concept of warrior ethos, said Command Sgt. Maj. David Grubb, command sergeant major, 1st Bn., 305th Armor Regt. (Training Support).

"The scenario comes from a lot of things — doctrine, accounts of what happened to units coming back from Iraq and a little imagination — (we) combined all of that into this," said Capt. Mark Olin, infantry team chief, 1st Bn., 305th Armor Regt. (Training Support).

"There's little bits and pieces of real life from the past two years combined into it," he said. "There's an American fighting for the (opposing force) Army; there are civilians and media on the battlefield."

"This training gives you a real-world sense of what's going on without the bullets flying, so you get an idea of what's going on when you get in country," Turks said.

Normally the quartermasters perform a supply and support mission. They set up in an occupied area to feed, clothe and resupply Soldiers so they can be sent back to the front, Turks said.



"For our first time doing this thing, we did well," Turks said. "This isn't part of our mission or part of our tactical exercise.

"This is the first we've done convoy training and movement to contact with clearing rooms," he said.

"This is like their graduation for convoy maneuver training," Grubb said. "This is all new. The (majority) of these Soldiers have (never) done this before."

The training also provided a general preparation for Soldiers with "non-specific" military occupational specialty training for entering operations overseas, Grubb said.

"Physically, this training isn't extremely challenging, but mentally it's very difficult. There are a lot of variables in a free tactical environment," Olin said. "Honestly, the most beneficial aspect is the free play they have here. We've had them in lock-step with drill up until now. They can apply what they've learned."

High school transition time

Whoever heard of options? When it comes to high schools, Muscogee County offers an abundance of choices for upcoming freshmen. There are eight — count them! — eight public high schools. Take your pick.

Ah, but there's a catch. There's always a catch.

Fort Benning students are zoned to attend Spencer High School on Victory Drive. If they want to attend another public school, they must be accepted into the school's magnet program.

The magnet school concept, now in its 12th year locally, is designed to allow students to pursue a specialized field of study along with the state's required curriculum. If Johnny thinks he'd like to pursue a military career like his father, he might opt to apply to Spencer's Justice and Military Professional Academy. Oh, he'll still carry a load of English, math and science, just like you and I did. But along with the "core curriculum," he'll take classes that will give him a head start should he follow through with his plans. That's the basic idea behind magnet schools.

Another catch: Fort Benning students attending Columbus schools other than Spencer must be willing to navigate the bus system or work out their own travel arrangements. All students, no matter which magnet they attend, will be picked up at the same bus stop each morning.

Their bus will cart them to a site in Columbus, where they'll board another bus bound for their school. It's much like any metro system, but less complicated. They'll get the knack of it faster than you can spell m-a-g-n-e-t.

Here's a brief description of the choices your eighth-grader should be considering right about now:

Carver High School Integrated Math, Science and Technology Magnet: Living to learn, learning to live.

VA to pay insurance dividends

Georgia WWII veterans to get money

Department of Veterans Service

During 2004, the U.S. States Department of Veterans Affairs will pay some $10.7 million in dividends to about 29,500 Georgia veterans still holding an active VA life insurance policy.

"These dividends are made possible because veterans are living longer than originally predicted and the insurance trust funds are earning higher yields from investment in long-term United States Government Securities," said Georgia Commissioner of Veterans Affairs, Pete Wheeler.

Wheeler reminded policyholders that dividends will be automatically credited on the 2004 anniversary date of their policies.

Policyholders may choose to receive a dividend check or select one of nine alternate payment options.

But Wheeler cautioned veterans, "Only policies that have been kept in force will receive an annual dividend distribution." He also reminded policyholders that an individual's dividend amount will vary according to age, type of insurance and duration of the policy.

Government life insurance policies were issued to veterans of World Wars I and II and the Korean War who served between 1917 and 1956. Government insurance programs that do not pay dividends cover veterans of subsequent eras.

The largest group of Georgia veterans receiving payments will be some 24,600 veterans of World War II with National Service Life Insurance policies. They will receive an average payment of $360. Total payments are expected to reach more than $8.8 million.

Dividends totaling about $36,000 will be paid to 210 Georgians holding U.S. Government Life Insurance policies that were issued between 1919 and 1940.

Some 3,800 Georgia veterans who maintained their Veterans Special Life Insurance policies will share approximately $1.6 million in dividends.

About $250,000 will be paid to some 890 Georgia veterans holding Veterans Reopened Insurance policies.

Nationwide, VA will distribute about $517 in dividends to some 1.45 million active policyholders.

Although VA also administers a special life insurance program for disabled veterans and a program offering mortgage life insurance coverage, neither pays dividends. Dividends are also not paid for active-duty service members and reservists holding a Servicemen's Group Life Insurance.

Rumors occasionally surface that Congress has approved special dividends or refunds for holders of SGLI.

"This hoax has plagued VA for the past 40 years," Wheeler said. "Congress has proposed no legislation to change the dividend payments. VA's legitimate insurance dividends are paid annually automatically — no application is required."

Veterans who have questions about their policy can call the VA Insurance Center toll-free at (800) 669-8477 or e-mail their question to VAinsurance@vba.va.gov.

Military citizenship day — The Atlanta District Office of Citizenship and Immigration Services (CIS) is planning a Military Citizenship Day for Feb. 27. The ceremony will be held in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall at 1 p.m.

Military personnel that have applied for citizenship prior to Aug. 1, 2003 are encouraged to contact their personnel officers and request that their name be submitted for consideration.

Military dependents that have applied prior to January 2003 are requested to fax their Notice of Action Form I-797C to 404-331-6031, also for consideration to: Community Liaison Officer, Bill Castro.

Tricare survey — The Tricare Management Activity has contracted with a survey research firm in the Washington, D.C. area, to conduct a telephone survey (a legitimate and important survey) of TRICARE beneficiaries on behalf of the Communications and Customer Service Directorate.

The survey will gather information about beneficiary information needs, preferred sources, and information-seeking strategies. Results will be used to develop a new national suite of beneficiary education products and services.

Pilot testing started Tuesday and full survey operations to be conducted between Monday and Feb. 18. The study design calls for 10-minute phone interviews with representatives from five groups:

- active duty,
- active duty family members,
- retirees and their family members under age 65,
- retirees and their family members 65 and over, and
- spouses of activated Reserve Component members.

The goal is 3,400 completed interviews, which might require calling approximately 10,000 beneficiaries.

Bugs blitzkrieg Benning

Look familiar? Asian lady beetles have invaded post.

Bugs, bugs, bugs! They're everywhere: Crawling on the windows, crawling on the walls, and hanging out on the side of the building. Contrary to popular belief, these pesky critters are not ladybugs and they are quite useful to agriculture, despite their annoyances.

Lately, there have been numerous calls to the Pest Management Section concerning ladybugs and the control of them.

Remember that the multicolored Asian lady beetles are really only a pest by their presence. They do not feed on or damage anything in the home. They do not carry diseases or sting, nor can they breed indoors. However, when large numbers of them take up residence in a home, they will crawl all over the walls, windows, light fixtures and any other surface.

There are several versions of the common name of this insect.

It has been called the multicolored Asian ladybird beetle, multicolored Asian lady beetle and even the Halloween beetle. The scientific name of this insect is Harmonia axyridis.

These little bugs, called Asian lady beetles, came to the United States as a biological control agent to deal with soft bodied insects on trees and plants. However, they spread rapidly to other portions of the country. Both adult and immature multicolored Asian ladybugs kill significant numbers of plant and tree pests, especially aphids (soft-bodied insects that are often found in large numbers sucking the sap from stems or leaves of plants).

But how do we tell the difference between a ladybug and an Asian lady beetle?

Adult Asian lady beetles are oval, convex, about quarter-inch long, and pale yellow-orange to dark orange-red. The Asian lady beetle can be identified with a marking similar to the letter "M" on the midsection of the insect, or a beetle with between 0 and 19 spots. The regular-to-irregular shaped "M" marking will usually be comprised of several small black spots fused together. Ladybugs are not usually identified with this distinctive marking.

During the fall and early winter when the weather is cooler, the multicolored Asian lady beetles start congregating on the south side of buildings in large numbers and enter buildings for protection against the weather. The beetles do this because in their homeland they inhabit tall cliffs over winter in order to remain alive. There are no tall cliffs on Fort Benning, so the next best thing is a building. An important behavioral characteristic of Asian lady beetles is that they often seek hibernation sites in and around buildings, whereas native lady beetle species typically spend winter in sheltered sites outdoors.

Eventually they work their way into the building through small cracks or crevices or natural breaks in the windowpanes, door jambs or foundations as the temperatures decrease. Once inside the building, they hibernate until the first warm days of late winter or early spring, when they seem to come to life again and begin crawling about.

If the temperatures where the beetles are hibernating get near 50 degrees F, some beetles will wake up and begin crawling around. When they become active in the late winter, they often find themselves inside the home rather than outside. At this time they are merely looking for a way to escape to the out-of-doors.

This reawakening may take place over several weeks, depending on temperatures and the size of the population. As soon as the weather warms in the spring, the multicolored Asian lady beetles begin emerging from their winter quarters. They will continue to do this until they have all departed for the season. After they leave, they will look for food and mate, and the females will begin laying eggs on foliage. A short time later both males and females die.

Because the lady beetle is a tree-dwelling insect, homes and buildings near forested areas are especially prone to infestation.

When multicolored Asian lady beetles are agitated they give off a yellowish fluid that has a faint, foul odor. This is a defensive reaction to ward off predators but it does not affect humans. It is called "reflex bleeding." The liquid is exuded from its legs and it can stain. The beetles also release a pheromone that attracts more beetles to the same area. Although it may bite, it does not injure humans nor can it breed or reproduce indoors.

Even though there are measures that can be taken to eliminate the beetles as they appear inside, the long-term solution to eliminating a beetle "problem" is prevention. Once lady bugs have become established in the home, there aren't a lot of treatment options. There are not a lot of recommended chemical measures at this point.

Beetles can be prevented from entering buildings by caulking or sealing cracks and crevices. Beetles already inside can be physically removed by sweeping them or vacuuming. Be sure to empty the vacuum bags afterward. Do not kill the beetles. Just release them outdoors underneath a shrub or tree away from the area.

Insecticides are not recommended for use indoors. Through chemical usage, beetles wandering around at the time of treatment may be killed, but there are no practical, cost-effective methods of getting to areas where the hibernating beetles have massed.

Outdoors, preventative measures include monitoring the south side of buildings for swarming beetles.

These are areas where they will collect prior to moving into hibernation sites. If it is practical, caulk obvious cracks and spaces where the beetles can gain access, check attic vent screens and repair if necessary, caulk wherever a pipe, conduit, telephone or cable TV wire goes through the siding, and ensure that the weather seal on basement windows is tight.

For more information, call the Environmental Management Division at 545-3224.

Districts support military students

Two counties agree to help with transition

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

In a series of school board meetings, representatives of local school districts are signing a memorandum of agreement designed to build a network of support to help ease the transition of military families.

The memorandum is the result of the Secondary Education Transition Study conducted by the Military Child Education Coalition in 1999. Fort Benning and Muscogee County Public schools were among the initial participants in the study and were original signatories of the memorandum.

On Dec. 11, the Harris County School Board agreed to sign, then Russell County, Ala., on Jan. 14, expanding the network further. Phenix City considered the agreement Jan. 20, said Fort Benning Schools Liaison Officer, DeWayne Baldwin, who proposed the agreement to neighboring districts.

"Whenever a school system takes the initiative to place the needs of military children at the forefront of their educational agendas," Baldwin said, "we need to give them credit."

He said there are approximately 8,000 military children in schools at Fort Benning and in the six neighboring counties. Muscogee County has about 3,300; Russell and Phenix City counties, about 300 each; Lee County, about 200; Harris County, about 60; and Chattahoochee County, at least two.

The numbers, Baldwin said, are based on impact aid forms and will vary from year to year.

Baldwin's goal is to have all the districts sign the agreement.

"If we can get 100 percent, it's great. I love the idea of supporting military kids."

Once districts sign, it's up to Baldwin to work with the district to create a local action plan, in which the district identifies which of the SETS "Best and Promising Practices" need to be implemented.

While many of the practices are geared primarily for secondary schools, many are valid for the elementary grades also.

- Schools signing agree to:
- improve the timely transfer of records,
- develop systems to ease student transition during the first two weeks of school,
- foster success to extra-curricular programs,
- communicate variations in school calendars and schedules,
- create and implement professional development systems,
- continue strong child-centered partnerships between the installation and the supporting schools and
- Provide information concerning graduation requirements.

Each district will have a unique local action plan, because not all will need to put the same programs into place. Baldwin will begin work with Harris County in March to develop its plan.

Baldwin said he is working especially close with Chattahoochee County, which Tuesday evening agreed to sign the memo, because of its new high school.

"I'd like to have the programs in place even before the school opens so they won't have to worry about the transition issue," he said.

"If we can tell parents that the district is attuned to the needs of military children, they'll be more willing to live there."

Baldwin said he has received a great deal of support from the local districts, in large part because there are a lot of retired Soldiers and military spouses in the classrooms and on the school boards.

Benning Backstage plans new production for May

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Benning's Backstage, Fort Benning's own dinner theater group, is preparing for auditions for its third production, California Suite by Neil Simon.

The play is a comedy based on a hotel room and deals with situations that four different sets of characters get themselves into while visiting California.

Benning's Backstage is looking for six women from 20 to 50 years old, and five men from 20 to 60 years old to play a variety of parts for this production.

"We'll take seasoned actors, amateur actors and even someone who has never been in a play before," said Peggy Cornwell, producer and director. "There's no acting experience required. People are trainable."

The auditions will be cold readings from the script, no monologue needed.

"The auditions will be very easy, and I'll make it as comfortable as possible," Cornwell said. "It will be easy and non-stressful; people should just come and have fun."

The auditions will be 7 p.m. March 22 and 23 at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center. Show dates will be May 21, 22, 28 and 29.

Backstage crew and dinnertime performers are still needed. For the dinnertime performers the group is looking for musicians, singers or even a magician.

For information, call Cornwell at 689-4342.

EVERYBODY'S ALL-AMERICAN

National Pie Day celebrates favorites

Donna Budjenska
Bayonet staff

Today is National Pie Day, as proclaimed by the American Pie Council. That's right: there is an American Pie Council.

But that's not the issue; pie is. And today is the day to celebrate it, in all its wondrous variety. Bake a pie, share a pie and definitely, most importantly, eat a piece of pie. Why?

Why not?

Isn't there something wonderful about a day dedicated to nothing more ambitious than enjoying a time-honored American dessert? It's low-key, no pressure and nothing but gratifying.

There aren't even any greeting cards associated with National Pie Day.

Just pie.

The American Pie Council's Web site (www.piecouncil.org) details ideas for how to observe National Pie Day and even gives a brief history of pies. It's worth mentioning at this point that, if you're anticipating National Pie Day, you'll really get worked up over the Great American Pie Festival, scheduled this year for April 15-18 in Celebration, Fla.

If you want to observe National Pie Day by baking a pie but want to try something other than a family favorite, numerous online sites offer recipes (www.pierecipe.com, www.fatfree.com/recipes/pies and www.pastrywiz.com are a few). If your ambitions don't run that way, the grocery store's frozen food section has some classics of its own.

And don't overlook the tricommunity's offerings, as local cafes and restaurants serve up at least a few varieties of pie.

Ah, pie. It's everybody's all-American.

Stowers Elementary School invited families to celebrate of Family P.E. Night Jan. 15. The annual event, organized by Stowers' P.E. teacher, Becky Archilla, included a variety of physical activities for students, their parents and siblings to choose from. Stations included tumbling, cupstacking and jump rope. Achilla said the event was intended to get the families involved and to teach the children to stay active and lead a healthy lifestyle.

Oprah influences school club

Book clubs encourage reading

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Kathy Amaker facilitates a reading club meeting Wednesday morning.

Who would have thought Oprah Winfrey would be responsible for Stowers Elementary School's fifth-graders getting excited about the written word? Probably not many.

But an idea borrowed from Winfrey's television show has prompted her students to read more avidly, said Stowers fifth-grade teacher Andrea Chambers.

Chambers said she adopted the show's roundtable book club format, because she thought it would get the children more interested in reading.

"At first I didn't think it would really catch on," she confessed, "but they love it. And they're reading a lot of books they never would have picked up in the library before."

Chambers said the children are given six weeks total to read their books.

"They are able to read on their own," she said. "They choose the time and place."

They meet with their reading clubs at the three- and six-week marks.

Parents serve as facilitators at these meetings. Chambers said she has about 10 volunteers.

"We get together and discuss the books — were there confusing parts, what did they like best about it, what would they change," explained Miranda McQuown, a parent facilitator.

"The children really seem to enjoy it," she said.

McQuown said the program is also beneficial to the students' parents.

"Parents play a very important role in any school system," she said. "Their participation gets the children more interested and gives them bonding time."

McQuown said her daughter, Raven Franklin, has always been a "reader," but being involved in the reading club has brought them closer together.

"Often, our lives get so busy — especially as a military wife — and it gives us time for just the two of us," she said. "Getting to read together is her favorite thing about the reading club."

Times of difficulty can be turned around

'Chapel Mom' provides touch of home

Chaplain (Maj.) Ken Yates
11th Infantry Regiment

Every Sunday, the 11th Infantry Regiment Chapel is full of students attending the Regiment's various schools. As a chaplain, I would like to think they are there to hear me preach. I know better. They are mostly there because of Marianne.

Marianne, or Chapel Mom, as she is affectionately known, has attended the chapel for years. Every Sunday, she and other ladies in the congregation serve refreshments to the attendees after the service.

Once I asked her how this tradition started. She told me that about six years ago, her husband, a retired command sergeant major, died. Many friends of the family brought desserts to the home and offered her comfort during her time of loss. The next day, Marianne wondered what she was going to do with all the food. It occurred to her that the students going through schools might enjoy the cakes and other desserts. So she brought them to chapel.

When she saw the students' response, she decided to do the same thing the next Sunday, starting the tradition that's still going today.

Every Saturday, Marianne and other women in the congregation bake cakes, make pudding and buy drinks and other goodies for the students who attend the chapel. The majority of people attending the chapel are away from home. Marianne and the other ladies provide a much-needed touch of home while the men and women are separated from loved ones.

Yates

It is not surprising that the students ask Marianne on a regular basis to attend their graduations.

On many occasions, she has pinned the Airborne wings on a new graduate because, as the Soldier said, "I won't have any family there, and I would like you to do it. You have been my family here."

When I think of what Marianne has meant to so many of the young Soldiers who have passed through the 11th Inf. Regt., I am reminded of a Bible verse in which the Apostle Paul tells the Christians in Corinth that through Christ, God can cause the things that cause us pain, the difficulties in our lives, for good. If we allow him to, God can work in these "weaknesses" and demonstrate his strength through them. He can give us the strength to minister to others.

That is exactly what Chapel Mom did.

When her husband died, she took a time of difficulty and weakness and turned it into something good. Surely, we see the work of God in her. He has given her the strength to do what she does.

Thanks for the example, Chapel Mom.

Through challenge, we grow

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

"That which does not kill me makes me stronger." It was a sign that hung above the door to our Special Forces team room ... and it was the quote that I was sharing with my seventh-grade son after a particularly difficult basketball practice last evening.

We all have challenges and problems, don't we? In fact, the question isn't if we'll have challenges in this day — this adventure we call life — it is merely a question of when we'll have challenges, isn't it?

It's often been said that the only people who don't have troubles are gathered in little neighborhoods — we call them cemeteries. If you're breathing, you have difficulties. It's the way of life. And believe it or not, most of your problems can actually be healthy for you. Let me explain ...

Hawkins

Maybe you have seen the Great Barrier Reef, stretching some 1,800 miles from New Guinea to Australia. Tour guides regularly take visitors to view the reef. On one tour, the guide was asked an interesting question.

"I notice that the lagoon side of the reef looks pale and lifeless, while the ocean side is vibrant and colorful," a traveler observed. "Why is this?"

The guide gave an interesting answer: "The coral around the lagoon side is in still water with no challenge for its survival. It dies early. The coral on the ocean side is constantly being tested by wind, waves, storms — surges of power. It has to fight for survival every day of its life. As it is challenged and tested, it changes and adapts. It grows healthy. It grows strong. And it reproduces."

Then he added this telling note: "That's the way it is with every living organism."

That is how it is with people. Challenged and tested, we come alive. Like coral pounded by the sea, we grow. Physical demands can cause us to grow stronger. Mental and emotional stress can produce tough-mindedness and resiliency. Spiritual testing can produce strength of character and faithfulness.

So you have problems. No problem — just tell yourself, "There I grow again."

If there's any way that our team of trained counselors at the Chaplain Family Life Center can help you, or if you desire to grow amidst your challenges, give us a call at 545-1760. We look forward to serving you more in 2004!

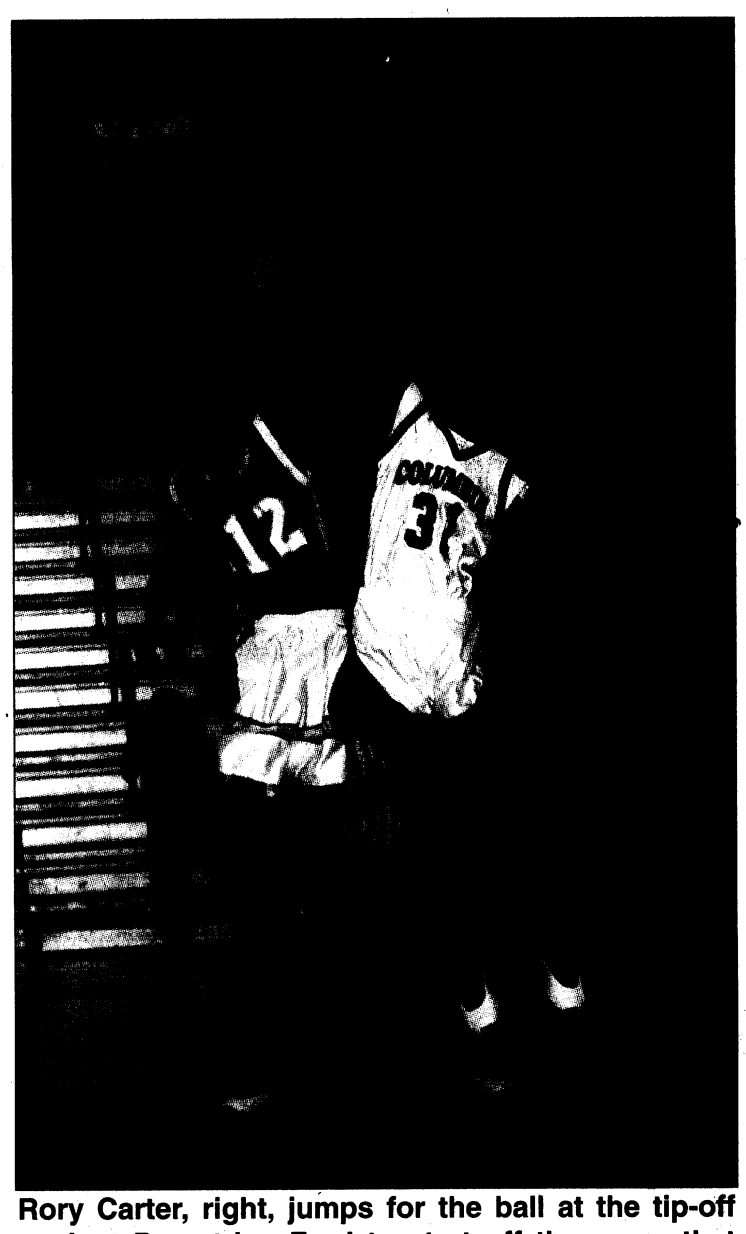
The Columbus Blue Devils boys varsity basketball team defeated the Russell County Warriors, 65-45, Saturday night at Columbus High School.

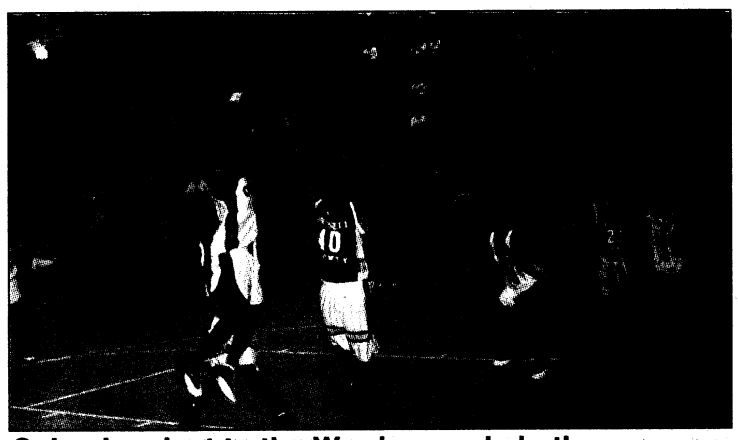
It didn't look good from the beginning for Russell County, who beat Columbus during their first meeting earlier in the season.

Columbus came into the game playing strong and pulling down rebounds. A strong defense opened up the court for the Blue Devils' offense.



"I thought we got a lot of things out of our press," said Larry Ferrell, Blue Devils coach. "We got some turnovers and created some opportunities, and it brought up the tempo of the game."

In the first period, Russell County lost possession of the ball a number of times because of traveling and double dribbling. The Blue Devils had a comfortable 18-4 lead at the end of the first period.



In the second period, the Blue Devils continued to widen the gap in the score when Russell County wasn't able to match Columbus' run on the board. At the end of the first half, Russell County tried to rally for a comeback, but the teams still walked off the court with Columbus in the lead, 37-21.

When the teams returned for the third period, Russell County became a different team, moving the ball better with stronger passing on the outside even though they had difficulty getting their inside game going.

When the game started to swing away from Columbus, the Blue Devils pulled together to shut down the Warriors' offense and started forcing turnovers, taking the momentum back. Columbus' deep bench continued to wear on Russell County through the end of the third period with Columbus in the lead, 49-30.

Rory Carter, right, jumps for the ball at the tip-off against Demetrius Ford to start off the game that improved Columbus' record to 7-10.

Columbus lost to the Warriors early in the season.

"They beat us the first time we played them, but we've made a lot of progress. The guys have been working really hard and it's paying off for us," Ferrell said.

During the final eight minutes of the game, the Blue Devils seemed to catch their second wind and started to stomp the Warriors, dominating the whole court with the score at 62-34 with 4:12 left in the game that ended at 65-45.

"Anytime we scored 65 points, we did well," Ferrell said. "Our defense created a lot for us. We played a tough game last night, and tonight we played all four quarters really hard; that makes a big difference."

LAS VEGAS — The two youngest Soldiers in the tournament stole the individual spotlight in the 2004 Armed Forces Bowling Championships contested Jan. 6-8 at Castaways Hotel, Casino & Bowling Center.

Spc. Casey Collins, 25, of Camp Carroll, Korea, and 1st Lt. Michele Barksdale, 26, of Fort Jackson, S.C., won the men's and women's Armed Forces singles championships.

For the first time ever, the Armed Forces Championships were contested in conjunction with the 2004 USA Bowling National Amateur Championships, which determine the 16 members of Team USA. Although the pairing in three daily flights eliminated the intensity of head-to-head competition between service members, the military bowlers expressed delight in competing alongside the best amateur bowlers in America.

Collins won the Armed Forces men's singles title with an eight-game total of 1,693 and best game of 256. He finished 79th overall in the USA Bowling National Amateur Championship men's field of 141 bowlers. The top 32 made the cut to contend for spots on Team USA.

"There's no doubt in my mind that I can make Team USA, too," said Collins, grandson of a retired Army colonel whose family has owned bowling centers around Fort Bragg, N.C., for more than 50 years. "I will be back."

Barksdale prevailed in Armed Forces women's singles with an eight-game total of 1,612 and best game of 246. She finished 86th among 101 women in the three-day USA Bowling National Amateur Championships.

Daughter of retired Army Capt. William Barksdale, who barnstormed through many bowling alleys between battle stints in Vietnam and jumping from planes in Thailand, Michele has been hanging around the lanes with dad since she was 3.

From age 14 until 24, however, she quit bowling and dedicated her athletic abilities to basketball. After a successful career at Pemberton Township High in New Jersey, she made the Army women's post basketball team at Yongsan, Korea.

While lifting weights, Barksdale sustained three herniated disks in her lower back that prevented her from running and jumping. So she returned to her first athletic love and finished second in the 8th Army Bowling Tournament in Korea. Before long, she had earned a spot on the veteran-laden All-Army women's bowling team.

"I remember when Casey and I first came in [to All-Army bowling camp] and we were the youngest," Barksdale recalls. "They were saying things like: 'We have bowling shoes older than y'all.' So it really feels good to beat them all.

"We may be the youngest, but we're the winners."

Navy ET1 Bessie Lowery (1,607) was second among Armed Forces women in singles, followed by Air Force Chief Master Sgt. Bobbi Boutwell (1,555) and Army Chief Warrant Officer Joyce Dawson (1,530) of Schofield Barracks, Hawaii.

Cottonmouths boost post morale

Hockey team shows military appreciation

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The Columbus Cottonmouths are picking up the pace and proving they have what it takes. Their most recent victories include Augusta, Florence and Greenville, where they locked in their position for the playoffs.

As morale rises for the Cottonmouths, they raise the morale of Fort Benning Soldiers. The team is giving all military personnel a $3 discount on any seat in the stadium.

"Fort Benning is a very important part of the community, and we would like to show our appreciation," said Scott Middlebrooks, Cottonmouths director of sales and marketing.

For the past three years, the Cottonmouths have invited various Fort Benning units to games and given them special treatment.

Guest units are invited to come to the Civic Center an hour before the general public is allowed in to enjoy all the concession stands before anyone else, Middlebrooks said.

The team also arranges transportation to and from games for basic training units.

"Every time basic training Soldiers are in the stands, they get a lot of attention from the rest of the fans," Middlebrooks said. "They get at least three standing ovations from the fans; it is really good for their morale."

The atmosphere at the games where there are Soldiers present is louder and more upbeat, said Jerome Bechard, assistant coach.

"They come to the games and participate in the chanting and make the game more exciting," he said. "They are a team supporting a team."

That's what it's all about — teamwork, Bechard said.

"If one player doesn't work with the rest of the team, we don't score. If one Soldier doesn't work with his buddies, the mission fails," he said.

"Of course a Soldier's mission is more dangerous, [but] we have [similar] goals," Bechard said.

In promoting morale and teamwork, military discounts are available throughout the entire season.

> "Fort Benning is a very important part of the community, and we would like to show our appreciation."

Upcoming events for the Cottonmouths include the Cottonmouths' Puck Night, March 12 — the first 1,500 fans to arrive will receive a free puck.

Also, Military Jersey Night is March 27, where jerseys will be auctioned off to fans, who may go down to the ice and take the jersey they purchased off the player's back. The money made at the auction will be donated to different charitable organizations, Middlebrooks said.

The Cottonmouths will play tonight and Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at the Columbus Civic Center.

For more information on game times and events, call 571-0086 or visit the team Web site at www.cottonmouths.com.

Rigdon Park seeks Little Leaguers

Baseball season arrives

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"Take me out to the ballgame ..." Or put your child in the ballgame.

That's right. It's that time of year again — National Little League registration is in full swing and looking for a few good batters.

Teresa Locey, NLL president for Rigdon Park, said now is the perfect time to sign up your little ones for America's favorite pastime. Opportunities include T-ball, coach-pitch, minor league and major league baseball.

Registration will run through Feb. 28, when Little Leaguers will hit the field to begin practices, opening the season with the first game March 20. Locey said players will get to play in at least 18 to 20 games throughout the season, maybe even more depending on how their teams do in upcoming tournaments.

"This is a great way to develop the children's social skills and sportsmanship," Locey said, adding that the league's coaches provide great mentorship.

Just ask Linwood Johnson. The 50-something vice president for Rigdon Park said he still remembers his first Little League coach.

"The coaches help mold and shape the kids and help them understand what they can do," said Johnson, who will watch as his grandchildren partake in the Little League legacy, which has been in place since 1951.

All coaches are required to be certified and undergo a background check and first-aid training, Locey said. Volunteers are also required to submit a background check.

The game itself is beneficial to players, Johnson said.

"My grandson was competitive to begin with, but playing in Little League has helped him to understand about sportsmanship and discipline," he said. "It gives him something to do and somewhere to go."

Keeping players occupied and providing them something purposeful to do with their time can be especially important to children in the Fort Benning community, Johnson said.

"It would give them a real release and help a lot to give them something to do besides think about where their fathers and mothers are deployed," he said. "They can come out and let go and just have some fun."

Registration is $50 per child and covers charter fees, insurance and District 8 dues, Locey said.

Parents can register their players at Rigdon Park 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays and noon to 4 p.m. Sundays through Feb. 28.

For more information, call Locey at 685-9895.

CLOSER LOOK

National Little League season is right around the corner. Here are a few things to keep in mind:

- Parents can register their players at Rigdon Park 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturdays and noon to 4 p.m. Sundays through Feb. 28.
- Registration is $50 per child and covers charter fees, insurance and District 8 dues.
- All coaches are required to be certified and undergo a background check and first-aid training. All volunteers must have a background check.
- Registration ends Feb. 28, at which point practices begin. The season's opening game will be March 20.

What is a hero?

A girl who finds the courage to try something new. A boy who discovers the strength to reach further than he ever has. These kids, and thousands like them, have the hope of a better future and the power to make it happen. By taking part in afterschool programs, kids explore, learn, grow, and most importantly, find the hero inside themselves. Let us know you want afterschool programs in your area. Call 1-800-USA-LEARN.

Post Tax Center open

Soldiers' taxes filed for free electronically

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Tax Center has been processing tax forms for Soldiers and their families since its grand opening Jan. 21 and will continue to provide free tax services until the end of tax season.

Capt. Steven J. Collins, Tax Center OIC, said now is the time for people to get into the center because it isn't very busy.

Collins said many people are still waiting on W2 forms, so business will continue to increase as more and more people receive their forms.

With 22 Soldiers, 10 volunteers and two civilian employees, all certified as H&R Block tax preparers, the center has enough people to get everyone in and out fairly quickly even after more people begin using the center, Collins said.

They will be filing federal 1040EZ, 1040A and 1040 returns from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Thursdays.

They will also provide state tax filing services and have the forms for all 50 states.

To accommodate the Soldiers and family members who are unable to visit during normal operating hours, it will be open from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. March 13 and 27 and April 3 and 10.

Everyone who is eligible should take advantage of the Tax Center, said Ann Pratcher, Financial Readiness Program manager. It's a great way to save money and make sure taxes are filed correctly, because the employees are trained professionals and their services are free.

Pratcher said Soldiers who use fly-by-night agencies are taking a risk.

For a good cause Vets need funds for D.C. trip

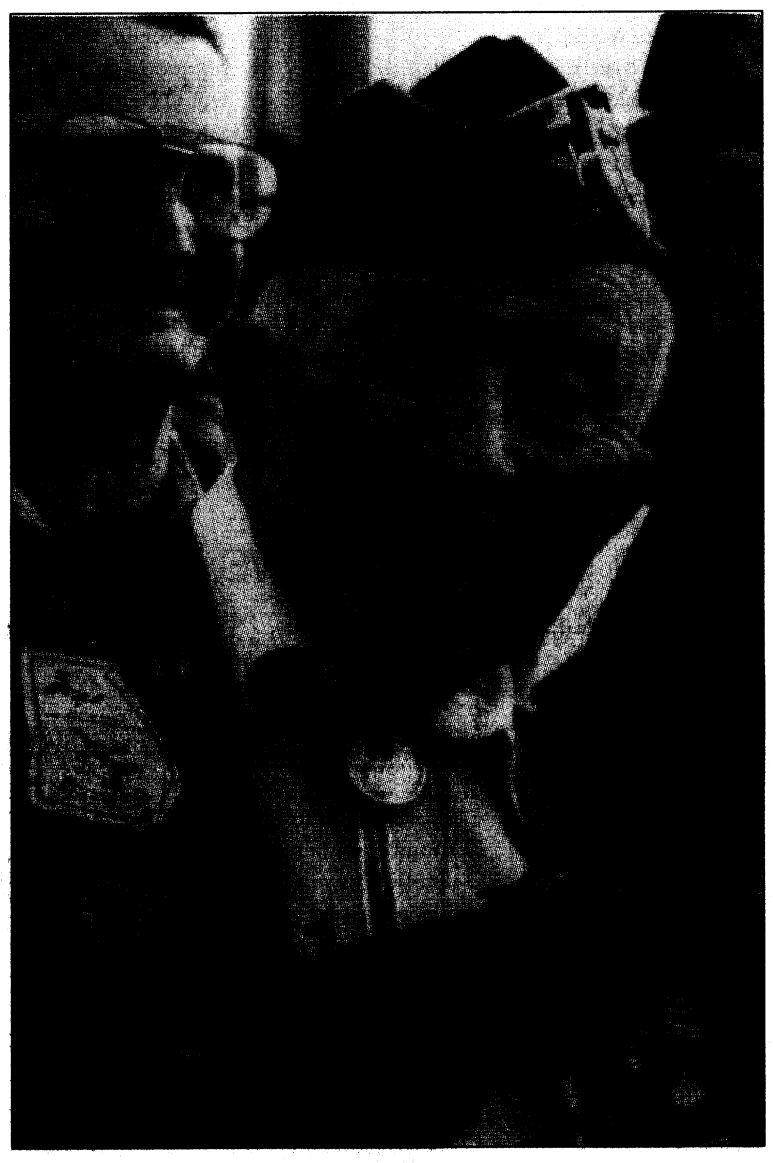
World War II vets waited 'far too long'

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It's sure to be worth the wait.

The way Jim Rhodes figures, the unveiling of the World War II Veterans' Memorial in Washington, D.C., will be worth the 50-some years he's waited to see it.

Still, it comes too late for too many.



Like Grady Bates, the larger-than-life cavalry veteran who was "everybody's hero," said Rhodes. Bates was among the 80 local veterans who traveled to D.C. three years ago for the groundbreaking ceremony. He died last fall.

Retired Lt. Col. Rex Ellis went along for the trip, too. He carried with him a replica of the B-17 he flew, the one that was shot down over Berlin when Ellis was taken prisoner during World War II. Ellis died last January.

Bates and Ellis were among the more than 1,000 World War II veterans dying daily. Veterans, like Rhodes, who've waited and waited for "far too long" for this day.

"It's kind of sad for me in a way," said Rhodes, a retired master sergeant, who served with the 31st Infantry Division in World War II. "Sixteen million men and women were kindly thrown to the side. We were the last to be recognized, and so many aren't around to see it."

Rhodes and 44 other local World War II veterans, veterans' wives and widows of veterans are planning to attend the May 29 unveiling ceremony, provided fund-raising efforts pay off.

File photo

Retired Lt. Col. Rex Ellis is pictured here before leaving for the World War II Veterans' Memorial groundbreaking ceremony in Washington, D.C., in November 2000. Ellis, who died last January, was among the "thousands and thousands who waited, who won't be able to be there," said Jim Rhodes, the local vet spearheading plans for a return trip in May when the memorial will be unveiled.

Payday lender to appear in court

Benning customers could be victims

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

If she's said it once, she's said it a thousand times — payday lenders are a bad deal for Soldiers, their families or anybody else for that matter.

"These places have been the bane of my existence since 1990," said Ann Pratcher, manager of Fort Benning's Financial Readiness Program.

Now Pratcher and a host of people who have learned the hard way about payday lender operations will have their day in court.

John Gill, the owner of several local payday lending shops — including Georgia Catalog Sales, Advance Til Payday, Advance Long Distance and Phone Mart Communications — has been "shut down" and ordered by the Office of the Industrial Loan Commissioner to appear in court for operating an unlicensed loan company and failing to follow proper procedures, Pratcher said.

The owner's shops have been "operating as a loan company without operating as a loan company," Pratcher said.

Instead of offering outright loans to customers, these businesses offer customers cash in exchange for holding the check and signing a contractual obligation to use their

NCOA to undergo significant changes

PLDC, BNCOC focus on critical combat training

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's NCO Academy will launch a pilot program for PLDC and phase one of BNCOC in support of Task Force Soldier.

The pilots, which are scheduled to begin in June and August, will focus on combat critical training instead of the current peacetime leadership training, said Command Sgt. Maj. Charles Raper, NCO Academy commandant.

"The idea is to make sure all Soldiers are better prepared to survive an attack in combat regardless of their military occupational specialty," he said.

Soldiers who are promoted to sergeants attend PLDC to learn the leadership skills necessary to take responsibility for junior Soldiers.

The PLDC pilot includes more field and academic training hours and fewer administration hours, said 1st Sgt. Patrick Hoffman, PLDC branch chief.

Not all Soldiers have the same opportunities to go to the field as infantrymen do, Hoffman said. The idea is to provide the necessary field training for Soldiers who wouldn't regularly train in the field at their units.

The field training Soldiers should expect includes day and night land navigation, MOUT, call for fire, level-one combatives and weapons maintenance and qualification.

Phase one of BNCOC provides common core training for sergeants who are being promoted to staff sergeant and teaches them the basic responsibilities of squad and platoon leaders.

CLOSER LOOK

Fort Benning's NCO Academy will launch a pilot program for PLDC and phase one of BNCOC, which will include:

- More field and academic training hours
- Fewer administration hours
- The introduction of night land navigation, MOUT training, call for fire, level-one combatives and weapons maintenance and qualification
- Removal of equal opportunity briefing, Army homosexual policy, suicide prevention, MILES and environmental awareness classes from curriculum

The second phase of BNCOC is military occupation specialty specific. Fort Benning will train only infantrymen.

The BNCOC pilot course will also have fewer classroom hours and more field training, said 1st Sgt. Larry Primeaux, BNCOC branch chief.

The idea is to provide potential platoon and squad leaders with the tools to lead their Soldiers if they are caught in battle, Primeaux said.

Soldiers attending the BNCOC pilot course should expect to see a lot of the same field training, including situational training

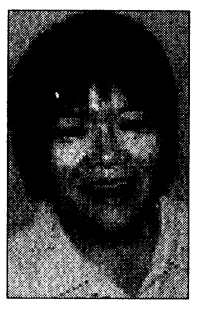
WARRIOR ETHOS

Army values at work

Elsie Jackson
USAIC Public Affairs Office

The banner touting "The Last Samurai" blanketed the theater wall, but it wasn't its size that held my attention.



I was focused on the seven elaborate Japanese kanji symbols on prominent display. Each represented a virtue revered by Samurai followers of Bushido, the "Way of the Warrior."

Duty and Loyalty. Complete Sincerity. Compassion. Honesty and Justice, Polite Courtesy. Heroic Courage. And at the center — Honor.

Sound familiar? I thought so too.

Later, I pulled out a copy of the seven Army values, and it wasn't hard to make correlations. Loyalty and Duty. Respect, equating to polite courtesy and compassion. Honor. Integrity — honesty and justice. Personal courage.

Which left only "selfless service." And then it occurred to me that the word "samurai" itself means service, to the death if need be, which is as selfless as it gets.

Can an ancient code of conduct have any relevance today? Is it coincidence that at their cores, "Warrior Ethos" and bushido are so similar?

All, that is, except for seppuku, when a samurai would commit ritual suicide before being dishonored. A good soldier wouldn't do that. Or would he?

Master Sgt. Gary Gordon and Sgt. 1st Class Randall Shughart requested authorization four times to go to the aid of a downed pilot in Mogadishu. There was little doubt then, and none now, that it was a suicide mission. They went anyway. It was more than their duty. That block was checked when they requested permission to go in, and it was repeatedly denied.

They went, I think, out of respect for themselves and a fellow warrior in need. And not for badges and awards, but with "complete sincerity." With compassion. With courage, heroic courage. With honor.

Warrior Ethos. The Way of the Warrior. Both provide seven time-tested tenets that would be guidelines for any mere mortal, and are the lifeblood of a warrior. Is there a need for them today?

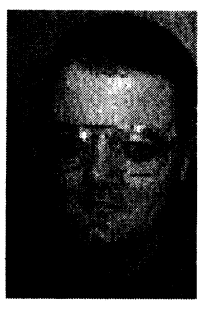
Let me remind you that it is the warrior who frees us to be a kinder and gentler people. And that it is the children who we are raising to be kinder and gentler that the Army transforms into warriors by teaching them Warrior Ethos.

Peaceniks in the 60s proclaimed that war was not healthy for children and other living things. I have been spared the experience, but I have seen glimpses of the grim reality in pictures, video clips and in the faces of Soldiers I come in contact with.

I am reminded of a quote by Thomas Jefferson, who wrote, "The tree of liberty must be refreshed from time to time with the blood of patriots and tyrants" and grieve for those we have lost.

And I am grateful that there are still those who willingly turn their backs on a kinder and gentler lifestyle to take up the Way of the Warrior.

Soldiers need to embrace ethos



Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Look up ethos in the dictionary and you will find the "o" is pronounced as in toss not toes.

That is really not surprising though, because when we talk about Warrior Ethos we are talking about something the general public doesn't understand and probably can't understand, but it should be clear to all Soldiers.

But imagine if they did. What would a trip to a fast food restaurant be like?

Employees would open the door and greet you in a friendly manner as you walk in. The place would always smell and look fresh and clean.

There would never be trash overflowing or sticky tables. If you spilled some food or drink, there would be someone there to clean it up and assist you in replacing spilled items and helping you to your seat. Orders would be cheerfully taken. You'd always feel welcome and never feel like a burden because selfless service and professionalism would be part of their ethos.

Drive-through orders would always be right. All the items ordered would be in your bag, as well as any necessary utensils and condiments, which would always be offered in generous amounts. The items would be prepared to order also. If on the rare occasion there was a mistake and you didn't find it until you got home, a restaurant employee would drive to your house immediately with the corrected or missing item. Because refusing to accept failure would be part of their ethos.

So whether you pronounce it like the "o" in toes or toss, I don't think it matters. Living warrior ethos is what should matter to you, your fellow Soldiers and the citizens who depend on us to maintain freedom.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

I am Spc. Jerry Poland of the 988th Military Police Company which is presently in Iraq in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom. This letter is about my wife Elizabeth Poland, who is at Fort Benning during my deployment.

She is a great inspiration in my life for what she is doing back there. She has stayed strong and has taken care of our two children, Kimberly and Brent, while holding a job, paying the bills and just taking care of everything in the household.

She is the greatest wife a husband could ask for, and I love her with all of my heart. She is a very hard worker, and I want to let her know how much I appreciate her for what she does everyday. She has made me the happiest man alive in our four years of marriage and will for many years to come.

I just look forward to the next day because that is one day closer to seeing her and holding her in my arms again. Being married in the military is a hard life, and she has stayed by my side every time I had to leave.

She is truly one in a million, and I love her more than anything in the world.

Liz, I love you with all of my heart.

Stay strong, it won't be much longer until I can hold you in my arms again. I love you honey, and thank you for being "you."

How to get your news in The Bayonet

Editor's note: Many people call us with questions about how to get their information in the paper or with erroneous information about deadlines, so we have compiled the following for your information.

Our mission

The Bayonet is here to serve you — our audience. Our mission is to provide timely, accurate and truthful information that supports Army goals and directives.

We get a lot of feedback from readers, and we appreciate your letters, story ideas and comments. We appreciate the positive comments, and we do our best to address the negative ones.

As Fort Benning's authorized newspaper, we are dedicated to giving you the most complete coverage possible. In order to do this, we rely on members of our audience to keep us informed about their units' or directorates' activities.

Requesting coverage of news events

The staff of The Bayonet enjoys covering newsworthy events on post that are timely and pertinent to our readers. Some events we cover include battalion-level changes of command, changes in post policies or procedures and other postwide events.

We don't have enough personnel to cover everything on post, so we focus on the events that affect most of the post.

Also due to our limited number of personnel, we prefer that coverage requests be submitted at least two weeks in advance.

Some events we do not send a reporter to cover are parties, dinners, dining events, dances, balls, teas, coffees, club and organization meetings and elections, award presentations, changes of command below the brigade level, check presentations and group photos.

The frequency of such events on post and small number of photojournalists on The Bayonet staff prohibits us from covering these sorts of events.

If you need a photographer to record events for official purposes, call the Training and Audiovisual Support Center's photo lab at 545-4417.

Deadlines

Film, photos, stories, letters to the editor and other news items intended for The Bayonet must arrive in our office no later than noon Friday prior to the next week's publication.

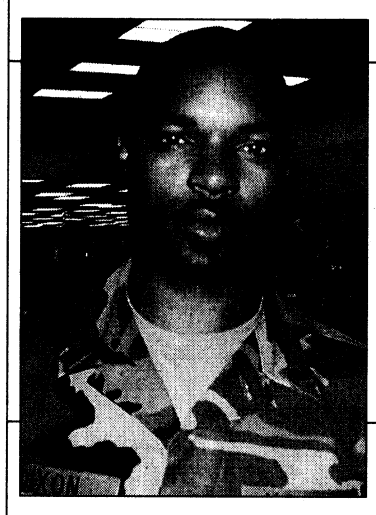
Copy must be typed and doubled-spaced, except for letters to the editor which may be handwritten. Everything else must be typed.

Use civilian dates, times, the name of the building as well as the building number. You may include the street or road if desired. Also, be sure to include the first and last names of all individuals mentioned in the story, and spell out all acronyms on first reference.

If you submit an announcement for post briefs or community briefs, check it when it appears in The Bayonet. Then, if you must resubmit it at a later date, submit it as it ran in the paper.

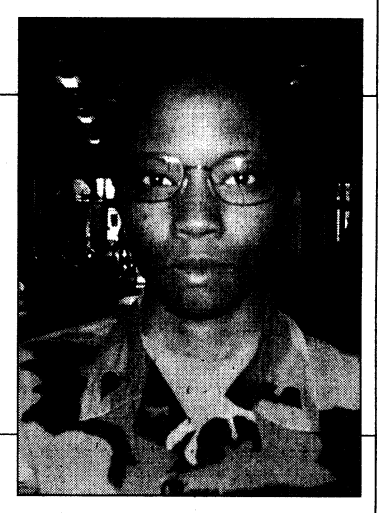
You may fax briefs or announcements only. However, we need the original typewritten copy of stories (anything longer than one page).

Story ideas, submission



If you believe you have a good story idea and want to write the story yourself, call us to see if we're interested. If you don't want to write the story, call us and we'll arrange a time for you to talk with a reporter.

We reserve the right to edit all stories for publication, and we cannot guarantee if or when submitted stories will appear in the paper.



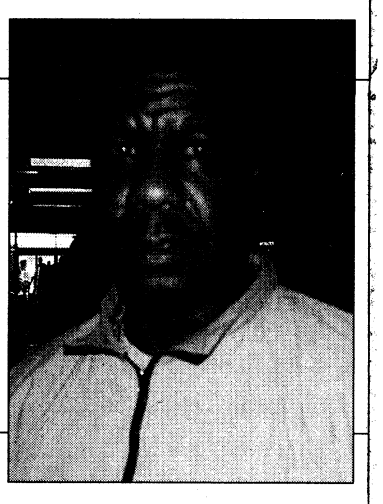
Stories submitted after the deadline will be published in the next week's paper.

VARIOUS VOICES

How do you thinks Warrior Ethos will benefit Soldiers?

Sgt. Jake Dixon, 13th Combat Support Battalion — "If you have all Soldiers well-trained regardless of their MOS, the accidents and deaths in combat will decrease."

Spc. Pamela Ramsey, CONUS Replacement Center — "I agree with the fact that all Soldiers should be combat ready. But also the proper and correct training should be ensured."



Lori Ferreira, family member — "Being that my husband is a combat veteran and a drill sergeant, I think that all Soldiers should be trained on the same skill level throughout the Army regardless of their MOS to be combat ready."

Sgt. 1st Class Alanzo James, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment — "The Warrior Ethos to me is, we're refocusing the Soldier concept dosen't matter what your MOS is (all soldiers) still have to be prepared to shoot their weapon."

Mark Bogart, family member — "It allows Soldiers to have a clear head before they go into battle."

Staff Sgt. Craig Williams, 2145th Garrison Support Unit — "Warrior Ethos will benefit Soldiers greatly. They will be trained to be aware of their sorroundings and will encourage teamwork. One team, one fight."

Ranger School to pilot new program

Select support Soldiers to attend course

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The Infantry Center will pilot a test program in which a few support Soldiers slotted for assignment to combat arms battalions (infantry and armor) will be allowed to attend Ranger School.

Although there is no official timeline for the program yet, the first students — two Soldiers from the transportation corps — are expected to attend as early as this summer, said Col. William Kidd, Ranger Training Brigade commander.

Kidd emphasized that this program is just a test — not a change in policy.

"No decision has been made here," he said. "This pilot program is very limited. ... We are not expanding Ranger School to open the doors to all support Soldiers. But we need to examine what resources will be needed if the Army wants to increase the authorized attendees to the course."

Kidd said Ranger School eligibility is determined by DA guidance, the last of which was a 1997 directive from the chief of staff of the Army, which restricted attendance to Soldiers assigned to units whose primary mission is to engage in close combat, direct fire battle. In general, that meant combat arms Soldiers.

However, the directive also allowed admittance to support Soldiers assigned to ranger-coded positions in the 75th Ranger Regiment and RTB, "so to say we have no experience training support Soldiers is not all together true," Kidd said.

The program came about in light of the implementation of the Warrior Ethos strategy and the recognition that combat arms Soldiers are not the only Soldiers assigned to close combat units, Kidd said.

"Ranger School is another way the Army can inculcate the Warrior Ethos into our Soldiers," he said. "In the contemporary operating environment, many Soldiers on the battlefield need the training students receive at Ranger School."

Although non-infantry students may have a "steeper learning curve" in the course, Kidd said he doesn't think these students will necessarily be at a disadvantage.

"Any student who comes should be physically fit, able to swim and proficient in land navigation and (Skill Level 1) common tasks and common infantry tasks," he said.

"Regardless of MOS, we have a 45 to 55 percent attrition (rate) in this course," he said. "Ranger School is tough — everyone has a hard time."

If the pilot program's students train to proficiency in the core requirements for Ranger School, they should be on a somewhat level playing field with the combat arms students, Kidd said.

Students should be familiar with infantry tactics, techniques and procedures before they get to Ranger School, said Staff Sgt. Michael Dean, Ranger Instructor with B Company, 4th Ranger Training Battalion.

"(Support Soldiers) will have more things to get used to — some added stress," he said. "But ranger training is good for everybody. It's about operating in harsh conditions."

Kidd doesn't expect RTB's RIs to feel much of an impact. RTB trains about 3,000 students a year — a relatively small course, Kidd said. In order to continue "training the load," there will be very few slots for pilot program students.

> "No decision has been made here. This pilot program is very limited. ... We are not expanding Ranger School to open the doors to all support Soldiers. But we need to examine what resources will be needed if the Army wants to increase the authorized attendees to this course."

"All the RIs see is a guy with a shaved head with no rank and no insignia — they don't know who (the students) are," he said, adding that the program will be so small that it shouldn't significantly add to the burden the RIs' already bear.

Whatever challenges arise, the end result will ultimately be the same, whether the student is combat arms or support, Kidd said.

"The important thing is not just what Ranger School brings to the Soldier, but that the Soldier goes back to his unit and makes the unit better," he said.

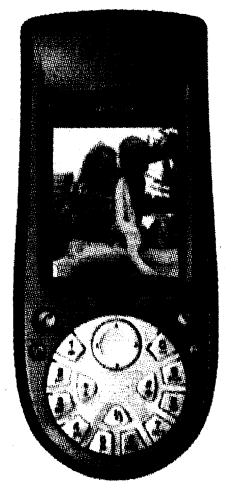
An Infantry Center pilot program will allow a few support Soldiers headed for combat arms battalions to go through Ranger School alongside combat arms students.



The next Ranger School graduation will be Feb. 13. Prior to the graduation, there will be a Rangers In Action demonstration beginning at 11 a.m. For more information, call 544-6417.

System prevents lost Soldiers in field

DSTAR monitors troops

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

A second lieutenant died while on a land navigation course on Fort Benning several years ago. His instructors weren't able to find him in time to save his life, but now there is a new system on post to prevent that from happening again.

The Deployable System for Training and Readiness trailer, tracks individual Soldiers in the field as they work their way through land navigation courses on post.

The system tracks the Soldiers, who wear a GPS unit attached to a MILES 2000 vest that weighs about 8 pounds and sends a signal back to a computer to track their movement.

The tracking prevents Soldiers from getting lost for long periods of time while search parties comb the woods for them by giving the instructor specific grid coordinates for each Soldier.

If a Soldier goes outside the specified boundaries, the unit triggers an alert, and an instructor in the trailer can communicate with the range NCOIC. That instructor can relay the location of any Soldier on the site for those who are lost or appear to be injured.

The DSTAR had a number of test runs and then tracked nearly 200 students simultaneously during its first class-sized run Jan. 14.

"Right now, we only have two locations covered, but (theoretically) we could go anywhere," said Ernesto Sanchez Jr., regional DSTAR manager for Fort Benning, Cubic Defense Systems Inc.

"It worked when I was out there," said Master Sgt. Jeffrey Bailey, land navigation master trainer, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment. "For the night course, traditionally we have a cut-off time. Normally we have one or two Soldiers who are late. It usually takes a couple hours to police them up. The night we used DSTAR, we identified three students still on the course, got their grid coordinates and had them back in 15 minutes.

> "The night we used DSTAR, we identified three students still on the course, got their grid coordinates and had them back in 15 minutes."

> Land navigation master trainer,
> 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

"One had apparently twisted an ankle, and we saw that he was immobile for 15 minutes, so we went out there and picked him up," Bailey said.

Now, if a Soldier goes into a gully, the satellite might lose them. An alert will come up, and that Soldier is watched until the satellite picks him back up. If it doesn't, the cadre can track from where the Soldier might be and find him after a certain amount of time.

Sanchez said the DSTAR tower is slated to be extended from 39 feet to 100 feet, which is expected to improve the tracking range.

There are plans to install a panic button on the students' MILES 2000 vest, so the students can set off an alert on the system if they are injured.

"The tests went very well," Sanchez said. "We just have to tweak it down a bit. This is a new system, and with all new systems, you need a little time to iron everything out.

Bailey said he had never seen a system like that before. "In the past, we had to send out search teams," he said. "Now we're tracking 160 Soldiers at a time. For what we got it for, it should prevent things like the fatality or the PLDC student who was lost for a day."

BCTB tests increased field time, warrior skills

Pilot classes focus on warrior skills

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

To stay on target with the changing Army and instill Warrior Ethos into all Soldiers, the Basic Combat Training Brigade is piloting two classes that focus more on warrior skills.

The two classes are "Immersion" and "Alternate" Programs Of Instruction. The courses have the base instruction from the original POI plus more time in the field, MOUT operations and training with more weapons, said Capt. Robert Olszewski, commander, A Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment, BCTB, Immersion POI

The new POIs will increase the time in the field from three days to 10 days for the Alternate and to 23 days for the Immersion.

They will also have classes on more heavy weapons and increase the time spent on the M-249 squad automatic weapon.

"These are weapons Soldiers weren't seeing before," Olszewski said. "(The Soldiers) will be familiar with a lot more weapon systems than other classes, and they'll get blocks of instruction that other classes haven't before. I think they'll be better prepared when they get to their units, because they'll have a wider knowledge base."

The current POI trains 19 of the 40 warrior skills and four of the nine warrior drills. The Alternate POI trains 39 of the 40 skills and eight out of the nine drills. The Immersion POI trains all of the skills and drills.

"Instead of talking about guard duty in the class room and memorizing general orders, we're adding some more hands-on training," said 1st Sgt. James Conner, first sergeant, B Co., 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt., Alternate POI.

"The quality of Soldiers stays the same," said Capt. Christopher Colster, B Co., 2nd Bn., 47th Inf. Regt, Alternate POI. "We graduate only the top quality Soldiers; however, their Soldier skills will be a little bit more battle focused now.

"The current POI was set up to run eight weeks," Colster said. "Now we're expanding the training, but still in the same amount of time, so it's a challenge."

To handle the increase in training, the companies are increasing the number of drill sergeants from 12 to 16. The additional drill sergeants lower the drill sergeant to student ratio and prevent "drill sergeant burn out," Olszewski said.

"Right now, I can only speculate attrition rates," Olszewski said. "(We'll) see if injury or attrition rates go up; that's one of the reasons we're running the pilot."

The Immersion POI calls for a 20-day field problem for the last phase of training, where the Soldiers will continue to receive instruction, but in a field environment.

The cadre for both pilot classes trained on their new blocks of instruction for weeks before training began.

The pilot class for the Immersion POI started training Thursday and the class for the Alternate POI picks up Feb. 12.

"Eventually, this has to go across the board," Colster said. "The whole way of thinking in the rear echelon has to change, and we're happy to influence the changing Army."

D Co., 4th Ranger Training Bn., deployed to Iraq to train Soldiers who scout behind enemy lines.

Rangers train LRS leaders in Iraq

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It may very well be Fort Benning's best kept secret, hidden in plain sight.

The 4th Ranger Training Battalion's Reconnaissance and Surveillance Leaders Course, manned by D Company, trains the Soldiers who scout deep behind enemy lines in long range surveillance units.

It's called RSLC — pronounced R-slick — the Ranger Brigade's graduate school of sorts, a go-farther, run-faster, work-harder course for Soldiers who want to do just that.

"There's no patch and no identifier," said Capt. Kevin Cahill, D Co. operations officer. "You have to want to go. The only reward is higher training and more knowledge."

But knowledge is power, said Capt. Carlos Ramos, the 4th RTB's assistant operations officer.

And the power of RSLC is recognized by commanders around the world — in Korea, where the RTB sends D Co. annually to train U.S. and Korean soldiers, and most recently, Iraq, where RSLC cadre became the first Fort Benning Infantry Center unit to deploy.

That's a pretty fair coup for Soldiers who admit to feeling like step-children in the ranger family.

"We've been called the JV squad," said Cahill, referring to the 4th RTB's role as a training unit on an installation where the "go to war" rangers of the 75th Ranger Regiment regularly get the chance to deploy to combat zones.

"Some of these guys have been here since 9-11," Cahill said. "They've watched everybody else come and go. They get students who come through Ranger School who have combat stories. I think we were all glad to get to go finally."

With 90 percent of the Army's LRS units in Iraq conducting the type of missions usually reserved for Special Forces — training Iraqi border guards and the like — LRS Soldiers were in danger of losing their edge. Maj. Gen. David Petraeus, commander of the 101st Airborne Division, "determined that the LRS and scout elements needed to be brought up to speed ... to maintain the skills they need to conduct the highly dangerous and difficult tasks expected of them," Cahill said.

At Petraeus' behest, D Co. deployed to Iraq in late November to teach a monthlong course at a Kurdish compound along the northeastern border. They got there by way of Mozul, where they were greeted by a barrage of enemy mortar fire that took the life of a Soldier from the 101st.

"It was an eye opener," said Sgt. Raul Davila, the company's supply NCO. "The whole experience was an eye opener, even though we were there for such a short time. You kinda wished you could stay, but you were really glad to leave."

The cadre had the occasional opportunity to mingle with the "very pro-American" Kurds in a nearby town, one that's "very Western, very secular," Cahill said.

And they mixed with the Kurdish forces who allowed them to handle their equipment, mostly weapons and vehicles. For the RSLC cadre, the time was well-spent, since it's their job to teach Soldiers to identify more than 140 foreign vehicles.

But mostly the cadre trained Soldiers, 43 in all, from units throughout Iraq — a class size about one-third larger than the average class here.

Other than the land navigation portion, which was amended to suit the location, the RSLC cadre conducted business as usual, seven days a week.

They taught long-range communications, doctrine, survival, intelligence, operations techniques and missions planning, fast rope, insertion and extraction and airborne exercises.

And they conducted a live-fire exercise in enemy territory.

"It was a very physically and mentally demanding course. It always is," Ramos said. "But it was rewarding just to be there, to get the chance to be a part of this whole thing."

Cahill said the RSLC course, a grandchild of the Vietnam-era Recondo Course, turned out leaders who'll return to their units as experts in the areas of reconnaissance and surveillance.

"They'll be more effective and more lethal," he said. "And they'll use their equipment and their Soldiers more effectively, more lethally.

"The fact that their units were willing to give these leaders up for the duration of the (course) is a testament to the importance of the skills we teach."

Master sergeant board

The Department of the Army selection board will meet Tuesday to consider Soldiers for promotion to master sergeant. It will not review for elimination under the Qualitative Management Program.

Zones of consideration include all sergeants first class with a date of rank Oct. 3, 2001, and earlier with a basic active service date between Feb. 3, 1981, and Feb. 3, 1986. Soldiers who meet the eligibility criteria should have a current photo on file. To schedule an appointment, call 545-1381.

For more information, call 545-5646 or 545-3666.

OCS board

Soldiers applying to Officer Candidate School need to turn in their packets for the local board, which is Feb. 16-20, by Wednesday. The Department of the Army board is May 10-14.

For more information, call 545-7218 or 545-8861.

AER celebrates 62 years

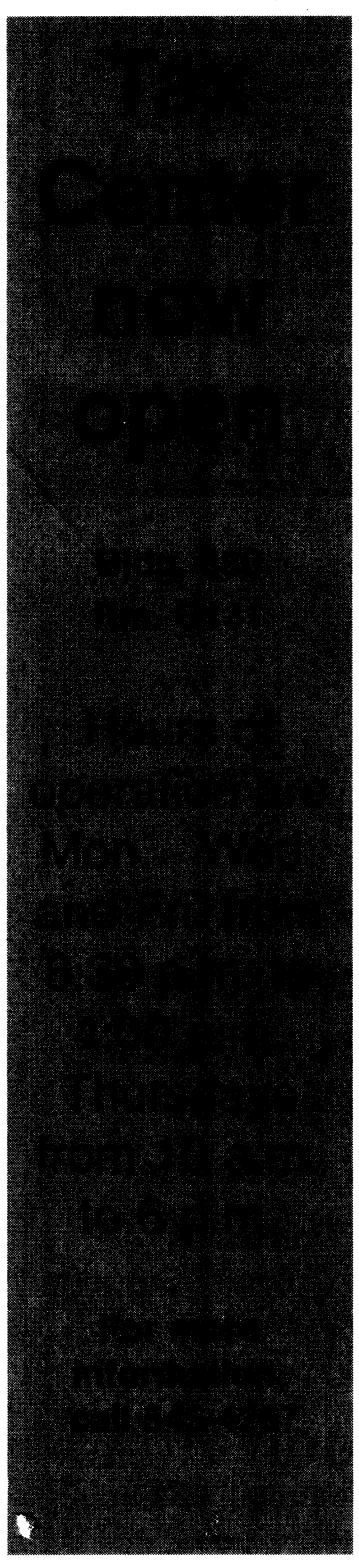
On Thursday, Army Emergency Relief will celebrate 62 years of "Helping the Army Care for its Own."

AER is a private nonprofit organization, incorporated in 1942, by the Secretary of War and the Army chief of staff. The AER missions are: to provide emergency financial assistance and provide scholarships to children of active-duty Soldiers, Soldiers who died on active duty and retirees.

Visit the installation's AER in Building 2624, Soldiers' Plaza, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday for a piece of birthday cake in celebration of "AER: Helping the Army Take Care of its Own."

Ranger School graduation

The next Ranger Training Brigade graduation is Feb. 13.



Prior to graduation is Rangers in Action, a demonstration of the skills Soldiers learn during training. Rangers in Action starts at 11 a.m.

For more information, call 544-6417.

Black History Month luncheon

The Black History Month luncheon is 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Feb. 24 at the Officers' Club.

Tickets are $7.50. For more information, call 545-6665.

Post to implement new environmental program

EMS to aid environmental compliance

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

By 2009, Fort Benning will have systems and programs in place to ensure environmental compliance, prevent pollution and sustain natural resources while fulfilling its mission of preparing the world's best infantry Soldier.

Garrison Commander Col. Rick Riera recently signed the installation's Environmental Management System environmental policy letter, one of the first steps toward fulfilling a new requirement for improving environmental performance.

A cross-functional team composed of representatives from various agencies on the installation meets biweekly to develop Fort Benning's program, said Tom Tuten, the EMS program manager from the Environmental Management Division of the Directorate of Facilities, Engineering and Logistics.

Since November 2003, the EMS team has been conducting a self-assessment to identify areas with environmental impact. The assessment, which must be finished by March, is about 95 percent complete, Tuten said. And the implementation plan due in September has already been drafted for review.

"We're looking for ways we can leave the environment better than it was before we got here," he said.

The EMS program must cover the installation "fence to fence" by 2009.

The activities will then be ranked, and the top areas will become Fort Benning's focus, said Gina Cooper, EMS coordinator.

"From there, we can see where we need to create new programs or continue ones already in place," Cooper said.

She said the self-assessment captured programs in place in the Resource Management Office, where they use rechargeable batteries in equipment and recycle paper for double-sided copies.

Tuten and Cooper said programs like controlled burning, recycling and energy and water conservation will all be scrutinized. Programs like those in place in RMO and at the ammunition supply point for recycling brass are not formally part of EMS but will be under the EMS "umbrella."

"EMS is not just environmental but a program of the installation," Tuten said. "Everyone has a part."

The EMS program is modeled after an international standard adopted in 1996. Since then, Cooper said, more than 36,000 national organizations have met the standard. Each military installation will have its own program and can use the Army's implementation plan and commander's guidance as references.

Tuten said the EMS coordinators had several training sessions with individuals from the Georgia Institute of Technology to help them in the initial stages.

"We're trying to align EMS with the installation mission and strategic plan," Cooper said. They want EMS programs to assist the mission.

Once the target areas are identified, agencies on post will have to look at who is affected and determine how to educate them to meet the goals, whether reducing energy consumption or increasing recycling efforts.

Once the program is implemented, it requires annual reviews to ensure it is complying with the international standard.

Tuten said construction projects on post will have a huge impact on the environment, but there are already programs in place that will mitigate that impact.

Under the Residential Community Initiative, new housing built on post in 2006 and beyond will have to meet a "green standard" for energy efficiency. Cooper said the new physical fitness center, which will be built in 2005, will be the first building on post with a green rating.

CLOSER LOOK

The Environmental Management System's new program is outlined in the acronym HOOAH :

- H — Help implement programs that ensure environmental compliance
- O — Observe practices that prevent pollution
- O — Obey policies that sustain natural
- A — And cultural resources
- H — Hold up ideas that promote continual improvement in environmental performance

Retirees to see pay increase

Concurrent receipt of retired, disability pay restored

DFAS

ARLINGTON, Va. — On Monday, an estimated 150,000 military retirees will see an increase in their pay. The National Defense Authorization Act, enacted in November 2003, significantly modified a long-standing law preventing retirees from receiving full retired pay if they also received disability pay from the Department of Veterans Affairs.

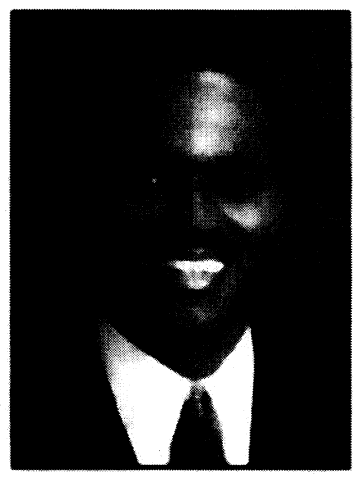
The new law allows concurrent receipt of military retired pay and VA disability pay for retirees with more than 20 years of service and disability ratings of 50 percent or greater. This restored pay will be phased in over a 10-year period that began Jan. 1.

Retirees do not need to take any action to receive the additional pay. The Defense Finance and Accounting Service has already identified eligible retirees and begun making adjustments to their retired pay.

The first payments are due the first business day of February for the law change that was effective Jan. 1. The additional funds will be paid Monday based on entitlements for Jan. 1-31.

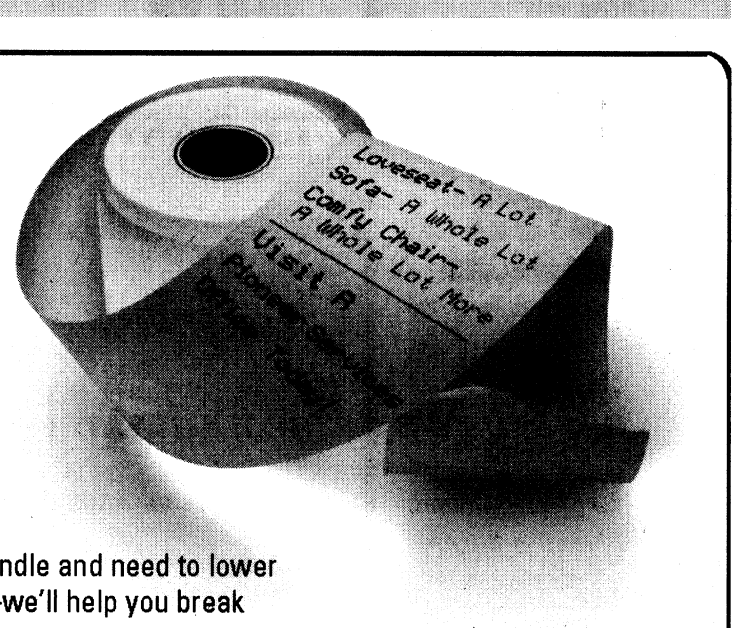
The restored pay is paid on the same schedule as current military retired pay. Recurring payments will be made on the first business day of each month based on entitlement for the prior month.

For the majority of military retirees, the additional money is taxable income and subject to federal tax withholding.



Military retirees eligible for additional funds who will not be paid on Monday are those who receive retired pay based on a disability percentage instead of years of service. Further guidance from the Department of Defense will help determine how the law will be applied in these cases. Once guidance is received, payments will be made retroactive to Jan. 1. An estimated 2,800 military retirees fall into this category.

For more details regarding who is eligible for the restored pay and how payments will be made, visit www.dfas.mil and see the topics under "Retired and Annuitant Pay," or visit the myPay Web site at https://mypay.dfas.mil.



The United States Military Academy's Founders Day Celebration will be held at 6 p.m. March 6 at the Fort Benning Officers' Club. The guest speaker is Brig. Gen. Leo Brooks, Commandant of Cadets For more information, call 544-8826 or 544-9222.

Benning shows appreciation for reservist drill sergeants

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

The Infantry Training Brigade presented awards to 36 reservists Jan. 23 to show its appreciation for the professionalism and competence they demonstrated during their mobilization to Fort Benning.

More than 1,000 Soldiers have taken their places in the Army because of the efforts of the reservists who left their civilian lives behind and came to Fort Benning to augment the post's training mission.

The Soldiers from 84th Division, U.S. Army Reserve, 2nd Battalion, 330th Regiment, from Livonia, Mich., fulfilled their call to duty when Fort Benning was facing a shortage of drill sergeants.

As Soldiers throughout the Army were deployed in support of the global war on terror, many were unable to attend the Drill Sergeant School, which created a need for trained drill sergeants that wasn't being met through traditional replacement methods, said Col. Brian R. Baldy, ITB commander.

That's where the reservists came into play.

"We asked them to step forward," Baldy said. "And step forward they did — without a single reduction in output."

> "It gave me a greater sense of self-worth being able to do my part and contribute to everything going on in our world."
> Sgt. 1st Class Ken Randles
> 84th Division, U.S. Army Reserve

Many of the Soldiers with the 84th Division are activated each year to assist the active-duty cadre during the "summer surge" when high school students go through basic training in their summer break.

However, this time they filled out two complete companies in the ITB and supplemented several others.

"It was a pleasure to know they had that experience coming in," Baldy said.

Sgt. 1st Class Ken Randles, who has assisted Fort Benning's training mission for nine years, said this mobilization came with a bit of culture shock.

Randles is one of the few Soldiers with the unit who teamed up with the cadre of existing ITB companies.

"I didn't know how we would be perceived or how we would blend with the active-duty Soldiers," Randles said. "But we were able to work well together, and it turned out to make all of us better Soldiers."

Randles said seeing the finished product on graduation day is one of the greatest parts of being a drill sergeant, but his best experiences during the mobilization went hand-in-hand with the toughest parts of the job.

He said being able to confront and overcome the day-to-day challenges was the best part of the mobilization.

"Getting things up and running was the hardest challenge, but it was also the most fulfilling to look back on," Randles said.

As fulfilling as the day-to-day challenges have been for Randles, there was one thing that seemed to put a twinkle in his eye as recalled his trip down the drill sergeant trail.

"It gave me a greater sense of self-worth being able to do my part and contribute to everything going on in our world," Randles said. "Just knowing I was part of a greater thing."

The Soldiers of the 84th Div. received 19 Army Commendation Medals, seven Army Achievement Medals and seven brigade-level certificates of achievement.

Web site helps disabled retirees

Army News Service

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — A new Web site designed to assist disabled military retirees in applying for Combat-Related Special Compensation went online the week of Jan. 12.

The U.S. Army CSRC Web site, www.crsc.army.mil, provides information a disabled military retiree needs to apply for this special compensation, said officials from the Human Resources Command.

The site provides program guidelines used to determine eligibility for combat-related disability benefits and application procedures for the program.

The Web site also provides:

- Guidance on how and where to file an appeal for retirees who previously submitted applications that have been determined ineligible or have been declined.
- A detailed listing of specific information and documentation that is frequently overlooked by applicants in their initial applications, as well as procedural and timing considerations.
- Phone and e-mail points of contact in the event customers have difficulty navigating the site or need specific information about the CRSC program.

As a provision of the 2003 National Defense Authorization Act, CRSC allows eligible disabled military retirees to collect payments for both their military service and their service-related disability.

According to the legislation, a veteran with "combat-related" disabilities is any 20-year military retiree with at least a 60 percent combined disability rating, with injuries as a "direct result of armed conflict" or as a result of "hazardous" military service, while serving in "conditions simulating war" or were incurred "through an instrumentality of war."

Automatic qualifiers include any military retiree with at least 20 years of service who is rated as at least 10 percent disabled by injuries related to the award of a Purple Heart, officials said. Payments are retroactive to June 1 for those whose disability occurred before that date.

Those who apply and are approved will begin receiving payments about 60 days after approval.

CRSC eligibility expanded Jan. 1 to include disabled military retirees with 10 to 100 percent VA disability rating and Reservists and National Guard retirees eligible at age 60 who are receiving retired pay.

WHINSEC celebrates third anniversary

Commandant lauds school's successes

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

"¡Libertad, paz y fraternidad! (Freedom, peace and brotherhood)," was more than just a unit motto, but also a phrase to celebrate as members of the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation raised wine glasses and toasted to the institute's third anniversary on Jan. 21.

Speaking to a packed auditorium, WHINSEC commandant Col. Richard Downie reflected upon the accomplishments, current events and future goals for the institute.

His first point was the recent inclusion of more foreign students to the institute, such as those from Canada and other Caribbean countries.

"One of our great accomplishments has been to expand the emphasis of this being a hemispheric institute," Downie said. "This should have come as a 'no-brainer' to us initially, because our name is the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation. Yet up until recently, our focus had been geared more toward Latin America.

"I'm glad to report that this year, we have our first class taught in English (the NCO Professional Development Class) and the participation of our Canadian fellows and those from Trinidad and Tobago, and Antigua," Downie said.

Along with academics, Downie said the institute had at last received undergraduate and graduate-level accreditation this past year from the American Council on Education for all of its courses, like the Command and General Staff Officer (Legacy) Course.

As for WHINSEC's future curriculum, Downie said the institute is in collaboration with regional leaders across the Americas in advancing current courses and tailoring future courses in peacekeeping.

He also spoke about the restorations made to Building 35, Ridgway Hall, such as the structural repair and electronic overhaul of Pratt Hall Auditorium, remarking that "a building with such a strong and rich history should never be left to lose its stature."

The building dates back to the mid-1930s and once housed the U.S. Army Infantry School.

After his speech, Downie named five people — former Phenix City Mayor Peggy Martin, Louly Diaz-Verson Jones, retired Col. Ralph Puckett, Maj. Gen. Paul Eaton and his wife, P.J, — as WHINSEC ambassadors of goodwill.

This celebration also marked Downie's final year as commandant. He retires from the military in March to become director of the Center for Hemispheric Defense Studies at the National Defense University in Washington, D.C.

As Downie addressed members of WHINSEC during a toast, he expressed satisfaction with the direction of the institute.

"The Board of Visitors said it best in their reports to the secretary of Defense and Congress, when they said that WHINSEC is an excellent institution that is continuing to meet the full intent laid out in its directive — to provide security cooperation in the western hemisphere," Downie said.

Chaplains plan prayer breakfast

POW, wife to share faith stories

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning chaplains will celebrate the 52nd annual National Prayer Breakfast at 7:30 a.m. Feb. 19 at the Officers' Club.

The breakfast evolved from a long-standing tradition of congressional breakfast Bible studies and now serves as a time to bring men and women of all faiths together.

This year's guest speaker is retired Col. Benjamin Purcell, who was taken prisoner in Vietnam in 1968 and spent more than five years in captivity.

Chaplain (Maj.) Jose Resto, Basic Combat Training Brigade, said both Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley and Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin recommended inviting Purcell.

"It's about nurturing the Soldier's soul," Resto said, "and Colonel Purcell has a remarkable story of courage to share."

Purcell and his wife, Anne, co-authored a book, Love & Duty, in which they share their story and the role their faith played in helping them endure.

"We see (POWs) in the movies," Resto said, "but to actually meet someone who has been through it is inspiring."

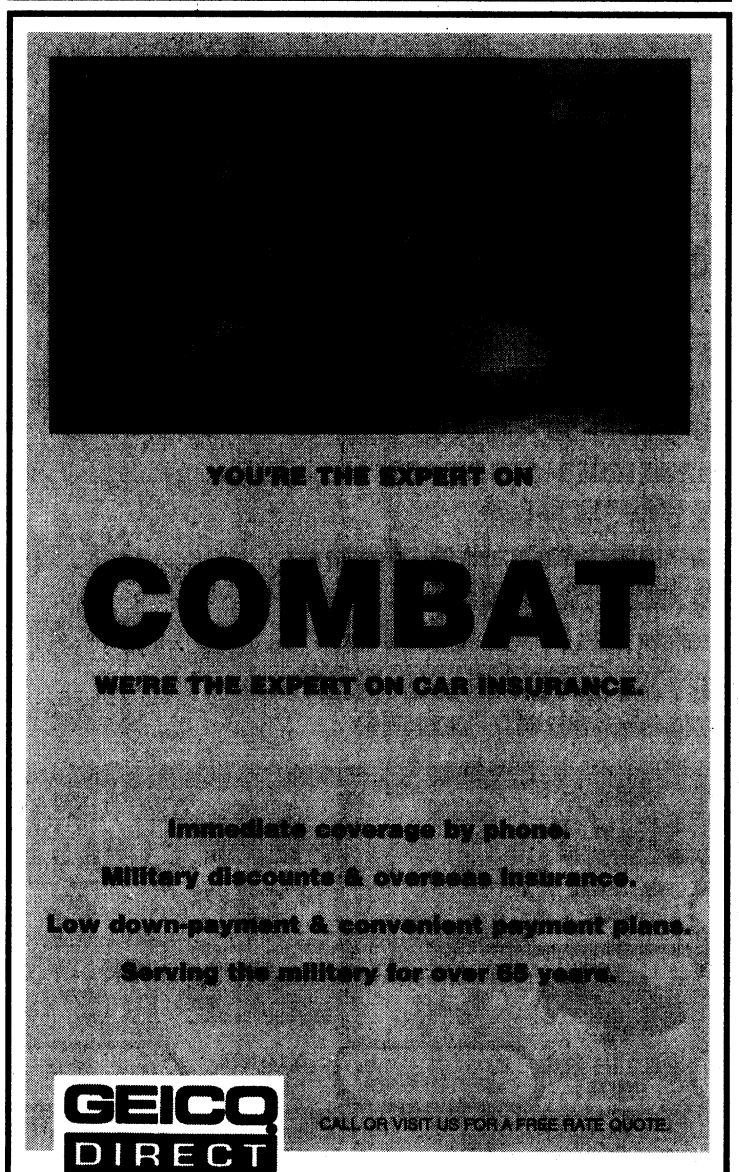
The Infantry Quintet and Sightseeing Road Gospel Choir will perform for about 400 people at the breakfast.

Tickets are available from unit command sergeants major and are $4 for Soldiers in pay grades E-1 through E-4 and $6.25 for E-5 and above.

Resto said Anne Purcell will speak at the Protestant Women of the Chapel's regular Thursday morning meeting at 9:30 a.m.

Natalie Rauch, who heard Anne speak several years ago at Fort Hood, Texas, is looking forward to hearing her speak.

Rauch's father is one of the Soldiers missing in action from the Vietnam War, and she said events like these are very emotional. Through the years, her family has been in touch with people who wore Prisoner of War/Missing in Action bracelets with her father's name.



A few years ago, Rauch was able to tell a woman who wore Purcell's bracelet that he had returned home. She put the two in touch.

"Anne has a message for everybody, for all military wives," Rauch said. "I know it's going to be a very meaningful event."

Rauch said the PWOC event is open to everyone and child care is provided.

3rd Brigade continues to train hard at NTC

317th keeps on track for NTC success

Pfc. Emily J. Danial
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — The 317th Engineer Battalion is working hard to keep 3rd Brigade rolling during its time at the National Training Center.

Here's a look at what they're up to out in the desert.

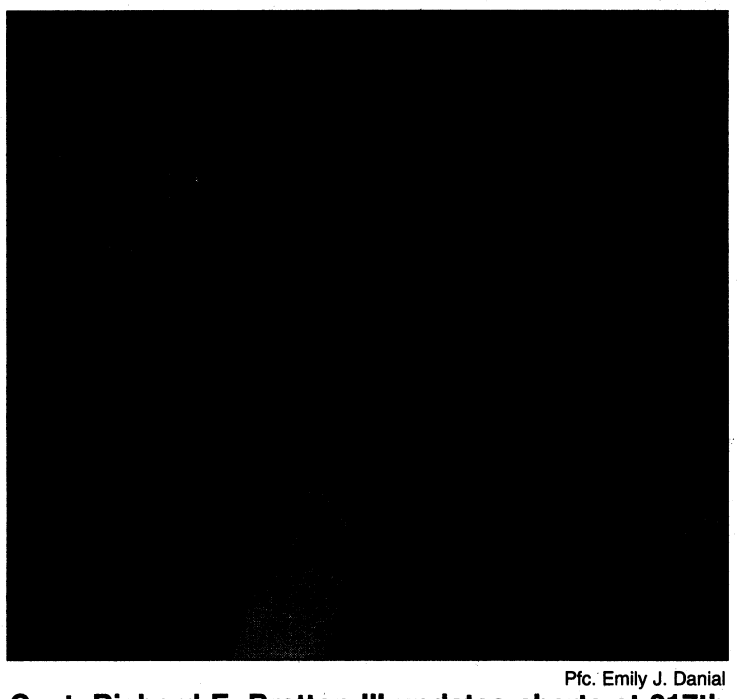
Maintenance section

On any desert road at the National Training Center — and there are quite a few — wheeled vehicles of all shapes, sizes and capabilities are a common sight.

But those vehicles don't take care of themselves — that's what the 317th Engineer Battalion's maintenance section is for.

"We provide technical assistance to the battalion by locating hard-to-find vehicle parts, preparing reports, and managing scheduled and unscheduled maintenance," said Chief Warrant Officer David Bryant, battalion maintenance technician at the Unit Maintenance Control Point.

T D7G bulldozers, M-113 armored personnel carriers, M-9 armored combat excavators and armored vehicle launch bridges are among the maintenance team's primary concerns, and its tasks are not always easy.



"Since the 'dozers, ACEs and AVLBs are specifically engineers' vehicles, it can be difficult to replace parts when they break," he said.

Bryant and the rest of the maintenance section have been kept on their toes since they arrived, said Capt. Richard E. Bratton, battalion maintenance officer.

Bratton said other than a period of five to seven days near the end of 2003, this is the first time all of the unit's equipment has been in use since they returned from Iraq in the summer of 2003. Before that, it spent a year just "sitting" while the battalion was deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"Maintenance is hard to stay on top of when the vehicles haven't been used in a while, because you don't get to find bugs until you get out and exercise them," Bratton said.

Time and distance are also a challenge, he said, because the 317th's equipment is spread out all over the entire brigade.

Pfc. Emily J. Danial

Capt. Richard E. Bratton III updates charts at 317th Engineer Bn.'s unit maintenance control point.

Still, Bratton said the challenge is being met.

"We're fully equipped to handle any mission we get handed," he said.

Bryant said the maintenance shop's goal is to be at least 90 percent readiness.

"Hopefully we can take lessons we've learned here and in Iraq to refine our field maintenance operations and have more combat power," he said.

Administration-Logistics Operations Center

The A-LOC consists of personnel and logistics, whose behind-the-scenes functions have helped keep the battalion moving through its two-week field problem.

"In the field, our main job is to track personnel," said Staff Sgt. Anthony JeRome Glenn, 317th's battalion S-1. "Communication is a challenge because of the distance between the line companies and myself, but we've been able to rely on other elements to get that information to us."

Glenn said his shop just underwent a changeover, and part of his focus at the moment is getting his newer Soldiers integrated into the team.

With a wartime deployment to Iraq with the 317th and three previous NTC rotations under his belt, Glenn said the exact rules of his shop's operation are closely attended to to accomplish the mission.

That mission, Glenn said, is watching out for Soldiers.

"My job is to take care of Soldiers and their personal issues so they can go out there and do their jobs," he said.

Sgt. 1st Class Lisa Hightower, the NCOIC of the battalion's S-4 shop, said her job is to assist line companies and supply.

"They can't function in their mission if they don't have supplies to accomplish that mission," she said.

In her experience, Hightower said, her shop's biggest obstacle has also been in the area of communication.

"The hardest part is getting line companies to report what they need," she said.

However, Hightower said there haven't been any problems yet during this rotation.

"So far, so good," she said. "We have a good working relationship out here, and the train-up we had before this (in November) helped a lot."

The A-LOC's operations section's job is to gather data to help support the battalion's line companies and thus the battalion as a whole, said Staff Sgt. Larry J. Dozier, Headquarters and Headquarters Company's operations sergeant.

"We have 139 Soldiers out here for this field exercise — maintenance, medical and Volcano (combat) personnel," he said. "My essence out here is to track personnel and vehicle movement.

"We track the battle, and send that (report) up to higher headquarters," Dozier said. "Anytime at NTC, the hardest part is reception, staging and onward integration."

Dozier said this is his ninth rotation, and "if anything comes up, I've seen it all, and I know how to deal with it."

He said his operations team is "very professional and competent," and expects the unit's two weeks in the box to be "smooth sailing."

"With the knowledge we have … it'll be an easy field problem," Dozier said.

Daily meeting keeps things going

Sgt. Raymond Piper
3rd Infantry Division Public Affairs

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — Food, fuel and repair parts are just some of the many items a unit needs to remain mission capable at the National Training Center.

Daily Logistic Resupply Point meetings for the leaders and logisticians of 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, helps keep supplies flowing smoothly to the units.

"It's better to meet face-to-face to determine what the units need rather than trying to discuss it over the radio," said Capt. Curtis Burns, battalion logistics officer, 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt.

The meeting helps the units to determine what supplies they need, ranging from food and fuel to barrier material and repair parts.

"I can look at the first sergeant and ask 'What do you need to be successful,' and he can tell me right then," Burns said.

Burns said he needs to know what the units have so it's easier for him to get them the supplies they need.

Another benefit to the meeting is that it gives leaders and logisticians a chance to pass out information.

"The meeting gives focus and makes it easier to distribute information," Burns said. "This way information has to be put out once."

ITB Soldiers live combat lifestyle

Troops use warrior skills, warrior ethos

Spc. David Foley

Sleeping in the rain at near freezing temperatures, waking up to find pea-size hail scattered throughout the camp, falling under chemical attack and destroying enemy positions with grenades and mortars are just a few of the things the Soldiers of D Company, 2nd Battalion, 54th Infantry Regiment, have been doing since Sunday.

The Soldiers are putting together everything they learned throughout their infantry training during a six-day field training exercise.

The purpose of the training is to get the Soldiers familiar with operating in a combat environment and to ensure they are proficient with critical tasks that are important to infantrymen, said Capt. Frank Adkinson, D Co. commander.

During the FTX, Soldiers are tested on 17 critical tasks, such as first aid and NBC skills, and 12 familiarization tasks, such as grenade and AT-4 skills, all the while keeping a secure perimeter and staying in a combat state of mind.

"We want to make sure each Soldier knows the basic skills necessary to be a benefit rather than a burden when they get to whatever unit they are assigned to," Adkinson said. "They should be able to hit the ground running."

Adkinson said the weather played a major role in the Soldiers' training experience.

Pvt. Thomas Alfano observes a troop placement to develop a SALUTE report.

As one Soldier put it, "It was miserable."

During the first four nights, if the temperature was above freezing, it was raining.

Adkinson said the weather was a good part of the soldierization process, because it teaches them to use the skills that are necessary to survive in that type of environment.

"But of course you need to balance that with safety," Adkinson said.

On Monday, Mother Nature tipped the scales with a severe storm, and training had to be called off for the night.

Other nights, the Soldiers found ways to cope with the cold, wet weather.

Some handled it well.

"I just keep my wet weather gear and polypro handy," said Pvt. Kyle Hartman.

Others struggled a bit.

Pvt. Marc Savioli said he has tried just about everything he can think of to stay warm, even trying to get dressed inside his sleeping bag.

Adkinson said one of the most important things the Soldiers need to do is take their training seriously, and one of the ways he is ensuring that is through correspondence.

"I had my Soldiers write to Soldiers in Iraq, and they replied," Adkinson said. "It shows them they have to live by the Soldier's Creed, because Soldiers just like them, who just graduated basic, are living the Soldier's Creed in Iraq right now."

Pvt. Kevin Hufford decontaminates his hands after a chemical attack.

Pvt. Nathan German loads a 60 mm short-range mortar round into the tube.

services over a specified period of time.

Pratcher used as an example an actual "phone card scam" case she has witnessed.

"A Soldier goes in to get cash by signing up for a 'phone card club.' With that, he gets a cash rebate of $200. But he wrote a check for $260, and his contract requires him to buy two 100-minute phone cards for $45 every pay period, which turns out to be $90 a month. The (vendor) then holds the check — unless he doesn't buy the phone cards. Then, it's used as a 'termination fee.'"

The owner, along with other local payday lending companies, was charging customers as much as $30 for every $100 they borrowed until their next payday — a period of only 14 days to a month — effectively making their interest rate 360 to 780 percent. Pratcher said. And the people who can least afford it are the ones getting hit the hardest.

"The thing people don't think about is if you're $100 short this payday and you go in for this, you're going start $130 behind next payday," she said.

"But people find themselves in a cash-flow crisis, and they panic and this is where they go. They look at the television ads for these places, and it makes it look so wonderful."

Although the "locking down" of this particular owner is a small victory for Pratcher, she said Soldiers and their families still need to be wary of other payday lending companies still operating.

"All of these places work the same way," she said.

The hearing, which will be held at 10 a.m. Feb. 11 at the Government Center in Columbus, is open to the public, including those who have been victimized by these businesses.

If you have questions about the closings, call U.S. Bankruptcy Trustee Morton Levine at (404) 231-4567.

For more information about the closures, hearings or other related questions, call Pratcher at 545-5485.

the other day, and I can't imagine how reputable a place like that can be," Pratcher said.

Collins said some Soldiers go off post to file, thinking they will get their returns faster. However, the Fort Benning Tax Center offers e-file, which helps the service member to get his or her return via direct deposit within 10 to 14 days.

"The only way to get a faster refund would be to get an anticipation loan," Collins said.

Anticipation loans are based on what the tax filer thinks the customer will get back. They usually have an outrageous interest rate, Collins said.

Pratcher said people should have a plan for the money they get as a tax return.

"Decide what to do with it ahead of time," she said. "If you have debt, it is a good idea to use one-third to pay it down, put one-third into saving and spend one-third on something fun."

Pratcher said people want to get the largest return possible, but getting an exceptionally large return can reveal a flaw.

"People who get really big refunds should look at the number of exemptions they claim throughout the year," she said. "If they don't claim enough, they're making an interest-free loan to Uncle Sam."

By claiming more exemptions, a person can put extra money into a savings account and earn interest.

exercises, weapons training, combatives, land navigation, and call for and adjust fire.

Although there has been new training added to each course, the lengths of the courses will not increase, said Sgt. 1st Class Dale Robertson, NCO Academy chief of training.

To avoid increasing the length of the courses, personnel and administrative training taught at unit level will be taken out. Classes removed from both courses include equal opportunity briefings, Army homosexual policy, suicide prevention, MILES and environmental awareness.

The NCO Academy restructured the courses to provide Soldiers with more combat-focused training instead of leader-focused training. Units should make sure that their Soldiers are physically ready to endure the training, Olive said.

The pilot programs will be run at least three times to ensure all potential problems are solved before they are fielded, and they're expected to be seen Armywide in 2006, Robertson said.

Vets: Raising funds

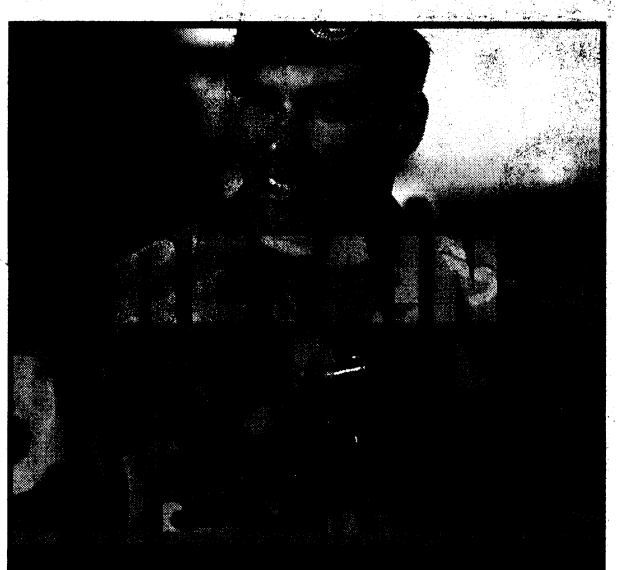
U.S. Army is more than $6,000 shy of the $9,000 it's trying to raise to send the veterans to D.C.

"I would've thought this was something that everyone would want to make happen," said Chuck Hunsaker, president of the local AUSA chapter. "We've just got to find a way to do this. We owe this generation so much."

Organizations such as AFLAC and local donors — mostly older veterans themselves — have contributed just over $2,000, Hunsaker said. The money will pay for a chartered bus, lodging in D.C. and a nurse to accompany them roundtrip. The veterans are responsible for their own meals.



"We're not talking about a lot of money when you consider the debt we owe them," Hunsaker said. "You know, they're called the 'greatest generation,' and for good reason."

Despite the lack of funds, Rhodes is confident he'll make the trip to D.C. "one way or another."

"We've waited way too long for this, every one of us," he said. "If we're alive, we'll be there."

To find out more about the veterans' trip to D.C., or to donate funds, contact Hunsaker at 327-7228.

Preserving Memories

Resolved: To straighten out the mess I've made of my life. To make sense of my past. To think outside the box.

I'll start with the box under my bed, the shoebox filled with snapshots and ticket stubs and love notes and programs from every dance recital since 1998.

So you want to get your life in order, or at least the memories thereof. You're ready to cast your lot with the masses who call themselves scrappers. Those for whom "scrapbook" and its derivatives are verbs, as in, "Scrapbook? I've been scrapping for years. I love to scrapbook. Doesn't everybody?"

Apparently not. There are still a few lost souls out there with photo-filled boxes shoved in closets and under beds. Or worse yet, contraband photo albums — sticky, magnetic, diseased photo albums, circa 1976.

With the increased accessibility and affordability of archival-quality products once reserved for professionals, the hobby of scrapbooking hasn't seen this kind of popularity since the Victorian era, when women preserved garden clippings between the pages of "pressed books," carefully documenting the names and dates and characteristics of each specimen.

You may still happen upon the occasional pressed flower in a modern scrapbook, but you're more likely to find page after page of photographs, embellishments and something scrapbook aficionados call "journaling."

Journaling is the practice of storytelling, and aside from those archival-quality accouterments, it may be the one factor that sets scrapbooks far apart from photo albums.

It took less than 20 minutes to turn two photos and a newspaper clipping into this scrapbook page, using the supplies shown. Be sure to make copies of one-of-a-kind photos. Newspaper clippings should be copied onto archival-quality paper, as newsprint deteriorates very quickly and will damage the photos and paper it comes into contact with.

Scrapbook 101

Let's start with the basics.

The novice scrapper has to make a few decisions. This can be the tricky part. Scrapbooks come in all sizes and forms and themes. You'll likely want to start with a book that's 8 1/2 inches by 11 inches or 12 inches by 12 inches, the standard by far, though smaller novelty books are available, usually reserved for special occasion albums. Base your decision on where you will store your scrapbooks, for no one has just one.

The larger "lap books," 12 inches by 12 inches, should be stored flat and stacked carefully, never standing on end. They're great table books, because each page "spread" accommodates many photos. In fact, this size album makes it fairly easy to mount upwards of 14 photos on a spread, which in turn, makes it possible to document, say, an entire vacation or birthday party on one spread.

The 8 1/2-inch-by-11-inch scrapbook can usually be shelved like a regular book. It's considerably easier to handle than the larger book, but a spread accommodates fewer pictures. It may take four pages to document the same number of photos as a 12-inch-by-12-inch book spread.

You may choose or vary the size of your books according to their purpose. Will you scrapbook chronologically, documenting your family's history since the beginning of your marriage? Or will you create theme books, such as a wedding book, baby books, vacation, school and birthday books?

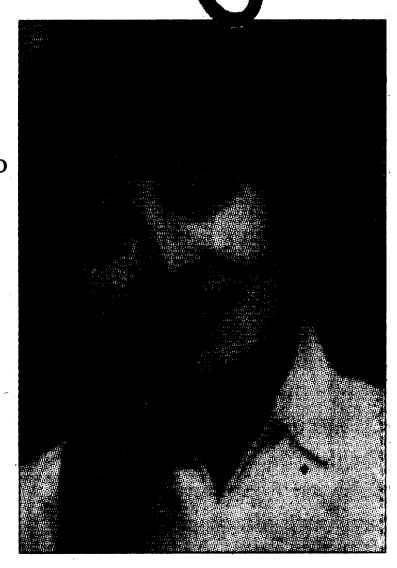
The daunting sort

Whatever you decide, you must begin what may well be scrapbooking's most daunting challenge — sorting through piles and piles of photographs. Most experts agree on the best way to do this: Set aside a good deal of time and gather all — yes all — your photos in one area. Sort them into piles or boxes according to your scrapbook plan (i.e. chronological or theme). It may be easiest to break this challenge down into bite-size chunks, say three stacks to start with — one before the children, one for the diaper years and another for the school years. Then take each pile and break it down further, until you have a series of boxes or stacks lined up chronologically.

Here's a good time to address those dreaded magnetic photo albums. If you've had them for any length of time, you can see the damage they've done to your precious memories.

Carefully peel back the page if possible without tearing your photos. Peel off the photos, again, if possible. If doing so will only cause further damage, pack up the entire album and cart it down to an office supply store, where a professional will scan each page on archival-quality paper for a small fee. Then trim around each photo.

When mounted or framed you won't be able to tell the difference in the "real" photo versus the copy, but the archival-quality copy will surely outlast the original. (When copying black and white photos, ask the professional to put the copier on a "color" setting. This will capture the sepia tones that are inherent in aged photos.)



Now, using shoeboxes and index cards, catalogue your photos chronologically and label each stack by name, activity, event or year, such as, "Dating Doyle, 1987-1992," "Dumping Doyle, Valentine's Day 1993," "Marrying Marvin, March 1993." You get the idea.

Now, if you have years and years of photos to scrap, you'll likely be adding pictures to your newly created archive as you get them developed. Discipline is key. As you work from the front of your box(es), working backward, be vigilant about adding those new photos to the back. Otherwise, you'll come to the end of your box with a delightful scrapbook and another nasty pile of unsorted photographs.

Bulk up

That said, it's time to shop. What, you giggle gleefully, you didn't know scrapbooking involved shopping?

See SCRAPBOOKS,

Over time, black and white photos take on a charming sepia tone, which is lost if the photo is copied in black and white. Be sure to have old photos copied on a color setting to capture the varied colors and shades.

Magnetic photo albums, like the one below, wreak havoc on photographs. The photo at right was damaged from years of exposure to acidic paper. Some paper manufacturers guarantee their acid- and lignin-free products will protect photos from this kind of damage for at least 100 years.

Scrapbooks are all about preserving memories — emphasis on "preserving." The acid and lignin found in the cells of plants used to make paper and glue deteriorates over time and damages the photographs they come into contact with. Acid- and lignin-free products are the cornerstone of modern scrapbooks.

Decorative scissors, paper trimmers and printed papers are among the various "extras" you can purchase to add pizzazz to your scrapbook pages. But with just the very basic supplies — scissors, glue, white or black paper and a handful of your favorite photos — you can create a one-of-a-kind memory masterpiece.

Q: I am considering having my taxes prepared by a professional preparer off-post. However, I do not know a lot about tax law and I want to ensure that my taxes are prepared correctly. What are some of the things I need to be aware of before I choose a paid preparer?

A: There are several issues to consider before you choose a paid preparer. Some commercial preparers are only concerned with producing large refunds for their clients, which at times can be unethical and illegal. You need to be aware of the most common issues that occur with off-post preparers.

The first issue is cost. A commercial preparer will charge a taxpayer around $100 for a 1040; $85 for a 1040A; and $65 for a 1040EZ. The commercial preparer will also charge fees for additional forms and schedules. A simple 1040, including separate schedules for itemizing deductions, computing interest and dividends, and determining rental income, could be as much as $205. If a service member, retiree or dependent comes to the Fort Benning Tax Center, their taxes will be prepared FREE of charge.

The second issue deals with form W-2. Some commercial preparers in the past have incorrectly suggested that service members use their December Leave and Earnings Statement (LES) instead of a W-2 to file their tax return. The Internal Revenue Service requires all taxpayers use a form W-2 in order to file taxes. In addition, a W-2 is much more accurate than the December LES and can possibly be more beneficial to the taxpayer. If a commercial tax preparer tells you they can file your tax return and receive your refund without your W-2, they are wrong. Remember, a taxpayer is ultimately responsible for the filing of his tax return, and if a false return is filed, an audit by the IRS is likely.

The third issue is a refund anticipation loan, or RAL. Before going to a commercial preparer, every taxpayer should have a working knowledge of the RAL, which has become popular in the past few years. The attraction is that you can have the refund from your tax return immediately, rather than waiting for the return to be processed by the IRS. Like any loan, the RAL must be repaid when you receive your actual refund and the interest rate is usually outrageous. If a taxpayer agrees to accept a RAL, they will end up paying three separate fees:

- The preparation fee.
- The electronic filing fee and
- The refund anticipation loan fee along with interest.

The fourth issue deals with filing statuses. Taxpayers should be advised that commercial tax preparers have been known to file the wrong status in years past, which can lead to huge tax consequences. According to the IRS, there are five filing statuses:

- Single
- Married filing joint
- Married filing separate
- Head of Household and
- Qualifying widow.

If you are married, you can file married filing joint on your 2003 tax return as long as you were married on or before Dec. 31, 2003.

Married couples can also file married filing separate. Just remember that you will not receive as many credits if you choose to file separately.

If a taxpayer desires to file single, he can do so as long as he was not married at the end of 2003.

Single taxpayers can also file head of household as long as the taxpayer paid more than half of the household costs and maintained a home for more than six months for a child, dependent relative, parent or foster child.

Taxpayers can file as qualified widows as long as they:

- are single
- have a dependent
- pay over half of the household expenses. You can only file as a qualified widow for two years after the death of a spouse.

If you visit a commercial preparer in Georgia and you think fraudulent taxes are being prepared, you can report the preparer by calling the Georgia Department of Revenue at (877) 602-8477. The Alabama Tax Fraud Hotline number is (800) 535-9410. Your identity will remain confidential, and your complaint and/or allegations will be thoroughly evaluated and, where appropriate, investigated in a timely manner.

Examples of tax fraud that should be reported include:

- Failure to file timely tax returns,
- Failure to pay or correctly report taxes,
- Claiming false dependents,
- Fraudulent employer withholding tax statement (W-2),
- Fraudulent returns and return preparation schemes,
- Erroneous claims for real property and tax abatement programs,
- Sale of Social Security numbers for dependents,
- Tax evasion activity,
- Unlicensed businesses,
- Unreported income and
- Inappropriate actions by Office of Tax Revenue employees.

Other information about tax fraud can be found at www.irs.gov.

If you would like to consult with someone regarding your taxes, the Fort Benning Tax Center is open now through April 15. Call the center at 545-4267.

Faith student's artistic talent earns recognition

Wins 'best in show' title for peace poster

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The Columbus Lions Club honored a Faith Middle School eighth-grader with the top prize in its International Peace Poster Contest Jan. 20.

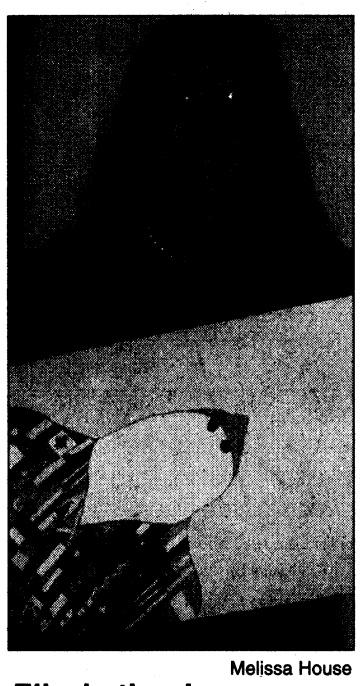
Elizabeth Lower, daughter of Sgt. 1st Class James and Angel Lower, took home a $100 savings bond, beating 84 of her classmates and advancing to the district competition.

Contest coordinator Alice Stagg said the Lions Club had enough money in their budget four years ago to allow them to sponsor a contest at Fort Benning in addition to Muscogee County. The contest is open to 11-, 12- and 13-year-olds, but only Faith eighth-graders participate.

This year, the students depicted their version for world peace in "Create a Brighter Tomorrow."

Lower said there was no specific inspiration for her entry, it was "just something that popped in my head." The poster, done in colored pencil and marker, has four main elements.

"I chose the dove because it is a symbol of peace," Lower said. She drew 54 international flags, to symbolize countries coming together, on the back of the dove. The sun with a peace symbol behind the dove, she said, represents the guiding light.



She said she's not an artist, but likes to draw — "doodle actually" — and would encourage next year's eighth-graders to enter the contest.

Stagg said the contest is a way for the Lions Club to involve youth in service to mankind and gives social studies teachers the opportunity to set up lesson plans involving the contest.

"The students can think about what peace means and think about how they interpret peace," Stagg said.

Lower's teacher, Patti Jones, said the Lions Club contest is a nice program for the students. Jones sponsors another program with the Exchange Club called Milestones of Freedom, also for eighth-graders.

Lower's poster earned her an honorable mention at the district level.

Elizabeth Lower, an eighth-grader at Faith Middle School, displays the poster that earned a first place in the International Peace Poster contest.

FDA issues warning

Don't give infants dietary supplement, says commissioner

Food and Drug Administration

The Food and Drug Administration is warning consumers that a product, Better Than Formula Ultra Infant Immune Booster 117, sold over the Internet as a dietary supplement should not be fed to infants.

NSP Research Nutrition of Mt. Clemens, Mich., sells the product as a dietary supplement.

Even though NSP Research Nutrition labeled their product as "a dietary supplement," as a result of its labeling claims, FDA is concerned that the product may be an infant formula.

The term "Better than Formula," in the product name describes this product as a substitute for, or alternative to, other infant formulas.

In addition, the "mixing instructions and directions" printed on the label state that "As with adults, infants should have small feedings every 2 to 3 hours throughout the day and should never be overfed."

This statement appears to represent the product for use as a meal and not as a dietary supplement. There are a myriad of other promotional claims that appear to describe this product as an infant formula.

Under the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, the term "infant formula" means a food which purports to be or is represented for special dietary use solely as a food for infants by reason of its simulation of human milk or its suitability as a complete or partial substitute for human milk.

Any infant formula marketed must be registered with the FDA at least 90 days before marketing.

The manufacturer has not submitted a notification required under Section 412 of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act for use of this product as an infant formula.

If this product is used as an infant formula, there are no assurances that have been provided to the agency by the manufacturer that this product as represented for use:

- would support growth of infants.
- contains nutrients essential for infants that are required by law in infant formulas.
- is manufactured under good manufacturing practices.

In addition, the label lists a number of ingredients that have not been evaluated for safe use in infant formula.

"Since the product has not been reviewed as an infant formula, its nutritional value and safety as an infant formula are unknown," said FDA Commissioner Dr. Mark B. McClellan.

"We urge parents who have purchased this product to immediately stop feeding it to their infants," he said.

To date, FDA is not aware of any illnesses or injuries associated with this product. FDA advises that consumers contact their health-care provider if they have any concerns about possible health problems or illness of their infant.

Scrapbooks: Needn't consume a lot of time, money

Oh why, oh why did I wait so long?" you say.

Don't get excited. You probably won't find what you're looking for at the mall. Head, instead, to your nearest hobby store, the craft section of Wal-Mart or Kmart, or one of a number of scrapbook stores listed in the yellow pages.

You could, of course, call a "scrapbook consultant," trained and employed by Creative Memories or the like, to teach you to scrap. They like to conduct scrapbook classes in your home.

All good and viable options, but this savvy shopper recommends you start at an office supply store. There you'll find, in bulk and therefore much cheaper, all the basic supplies you'll need to start scrapping.

You see, when scrapbook fever began to sweep the nation more than 10 years ago, big name paper, pen and glue manufacturers took note. They created archival-safe products, products free of the acid and lignin that destroys photographs over time, and sell them in bulk to office supply stores, which in turn, sell them at a cost you'll find most agreeable.

Stock up on the basics: white and black paper, page protectors, glue sticks and pens or markers. Just make sure the package says it's scrapbook or photo friendly.

With scissors, paper, pen and glue handy, you're ready to get started. But if you're like most scrappers, you'll not be satisfied till you have on hand various optional-but-really-nice-to-have supplies. Some you'll find at the office supply store, but you'll probably want to venture out to specialty stores or the craft aisle of your favorite department store.

There you'll find assorted colored and printed papers, stamps and stickers, die-cuts and templates, scissors that create a decorative edge, gel pens, chalking kits, borders and much, much more.

And you'll find more scrapbook tools than you can shake a stick at — tools with names like personal trimmers, custom cutters, corner rounders, decorative punches, pre-cut photo mounts, photo tape and, of course, customized-personalized-retractable-expandable-handy-dandy organizers for all of the above. Whew.

Now's not the time to give up. Take a deep breath and dive in. Select a pack of assorted colored paper and a few embellishments. Pick up a scrapbook magazine, such as Simple Scrapbooks, for tons of great tips and inspirational examples from former scrapbook novices just like you.

Crop it!

Head back home to the dining room table, spread out your supplies, along with your photo-archive shoebox, and you're all set to begin what's sure to be one of the most satisfying creative endeavors of your life.

> "The most common complaint among scrapbookers is, I hate journaling. I never know what to write. True, it can be difficult to switch gears, to put down the scissors and glue and start writing. But it'll come easier with practice. Imagine you're writing for your great grandchildren. That way you'll be sure to record details you'd take for granted a contemporary audience would know, such as full names, relationships and dates."

Choose a handful of photos from the first section of your archive, photos that "go together" for some reason. Arrange the photos artfully on the page. Not enough room? Try creating a spread, working with two pages side by side. Use an assortment of vertical and horizontal pictures.

Too much "background noise" in a photo? Crop it! That's scrapbook lingo for "trim it." This part can be scary to a beginner. What if you crop too much? What a shame to ruin the only picture you have of Great Aunt Gert trampling Cousin Connie for the bouquet. Veteran scrapbookers have doubles made when they get film developed for just this reason. But there's another solution. Scan a copy of the photo (repeat after me: acid- and lignin-free paper) and trim the copy using a straight edge or a cropping tool. With time and practice, you'll gain the confidence to crop photos in all sorts of shapes, using templates.

Mat the photos with colored paper (or white if you're working on a black page). using whatever adhesive you chose — be it glue stick, photo tape or glue dots, and then glue them to the page. Add embellishments wherever you like, but leave plenty of room for journaling.

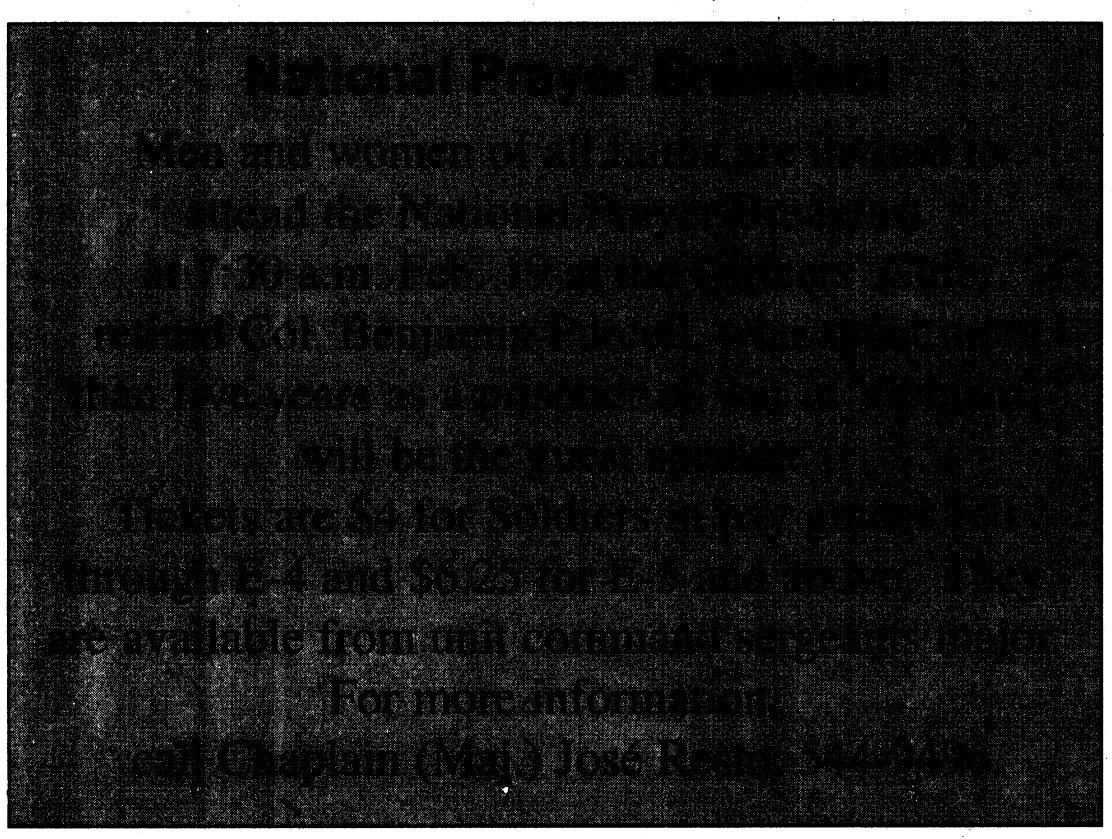
Get write to it

Remember journaling?

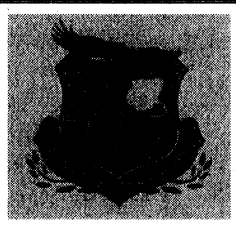
Never mind what they say about a picture being worth a thousand words. Hogwash. Pictures don't tell the whole story, such as how Aunt Gert fractured her tailbone and ended up in the emergency room, where she met the love of her life, Dr. Frank Stein. Freehand, if you're so inclined and blessed with a legible handwriting, or on the computer, tell the story in your own words: How did you feel? ("I laughed so hard I spilled champagne on poor Marvin's powder blue tuxedo.") What was the outcome? ("Connie swore she'd never forgive Aunt Gert, but she did. When Aunt Gert married Dr. Stein, Connie caught the bouquet.")

The most common complaint among scrapbookers is, "I hate journaling. I never know what to write."

True, it can be difficult to switch gears, to put down the scissors and glue and start writing. But it'll come easier with practice. Imagine you're writing for your great grandchildren. That way you'll be sure to record details you'd take for granted a contemporary audience would know, such as full names, relationships and dates (Great Aunt Gertrude Hoffenmeyer, Daddy's mother's oldest sister, born April 1, 1943, etc.)



There you have it, your first completed scrapbook page. Be sure to protect your page by slipping it into a page protector, and slip that into your scrapbook. Your first scrapbook.



You're one of them now.

CLOSER LOOK

Scrappers speak a language all their own. Here's a quick course in scrapbook lingo:

- Acid and lignin: Found inside the cells of plants used to make paper, acid and lignin will deteriorate over time and destroy the photos they touch.
- Archival-quality: Acid- and lignin-free products that will retain their color and shape for many, many years.
- Journaling: The practice of storytelling in print. Scrapbookers add details and anecdotes to "complete the story."
- Page protectors: Much like the report covers you used in school, page protectors should be acid- and lignin-free.
- Embellishments: Anything, other than photos, that adds decoration to the scrapbook page, including stickers, chalking, matting, borders, die-cuts, letters, clippings, stamps, etc.
- Crop: To trim a photo or paper.
- Adhesive: Any product used to attach photos and embellishments, including glue, gluesticks, photo tape and glue "dots."

TAKE A RIDE ON THE FREEDOM TRAIN

History comes alive at White

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It's not often you find a host of leaders from American history gathered on Fort Benning to share their stories. But for one day in February, they'll turn out in full force at White Elementary School.

Historic African-American figures from the Rev. John Jasper to Mahalia Jackson to Martin Luther King Jr. will be there — jumping on the "freedom train."

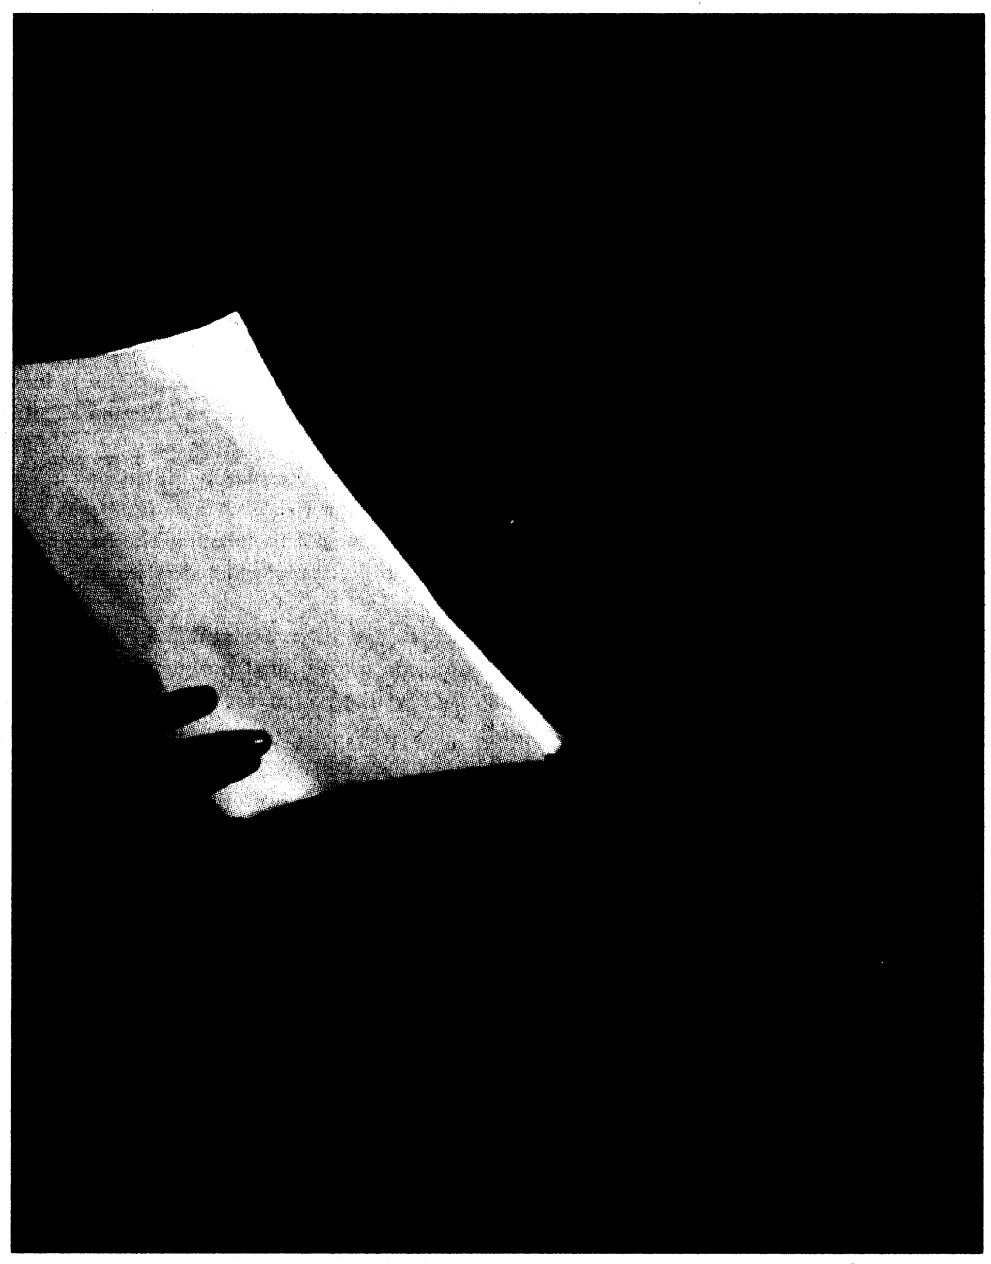
The special guests, actually White Elementary School students in costume, will be part of the school's Black History Month theater production, said fourth-grade teacher, Richard Thomas, who is helping direct the play.

"The neat thing about this is that it doesn't matter what the nationality or background of the students is — they're all participating," Thomas said.

The play, which uses a train as its background, introduces various "passengers" — black leaders from the pre-Civil War era to the present — and their contributions to American history.

Angel Richardson, who will play Mahalia Jackson, said her character was a famous "church singer."

"The play will help others learn about these people," the fourth-grader said. "Then they can tell other people what they learned."



Lauren Spry, the third-grade version of the Rev. Primus King, said her character "went to the courthouse and got threats, tricks and insults while trying to free blacks to vote."

A veteran performer in church and school plays, Spry said she chose to be in the play because it helps her learn and she likes to act.

But that doesn't mean it won't be hard work.

The students, who range from second- to fifth-graders, will spend an hour and a half every Tuesday learning their lines and running through rehearsals, among other challenges.

"The hardest part is just trying to find a costume and having to memorize my part," Spry said.

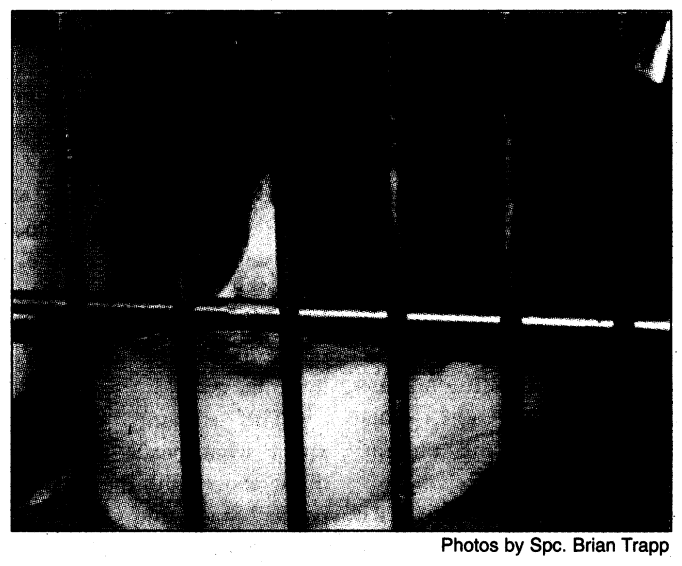
Sgt. Kim Dooley

Jeisa Roe, a White Elementary School fourth-grader, practices her lines as a narrator in the school's upcoming production.

But the end product will be worth the time.

"The students need to understand things from the past," Thomas said. "We need to take those things and learn from them so we don't make the same mistakes. This play covers the full spectrum of experiences."

Although the play will call attention to the African-American experience, Thomas said that someday, this portion of history will not be separate from American history, but rather will be an integral part.



In the meantime, he said the children are doing a good job getting ready for the play.

"They're eager, and they want to do well," he said. "We're all looking forward to it."

The play will be 9 a.m. Feb. 25 in the school's multipurpose room.

Gather leftovers so nothing is wasted

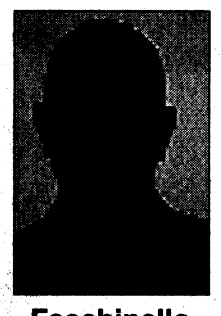
Jesus teaches to not waste what he gives

Chaplain (Capt.) Sean Facchinello
1st Battalion, 507th PIR

Does your family like to eat leftovers? Some really enjoy them while others avoid leftovers like the plague.

By the thousands, a crowd came to hear Jesus speak. Imagine hearing Jesus speak a message of encouragement and hope for the present and the future.

As his followers listened throughout the day, they became hungry.



"Where can we buy bread to feed all these people?" Jesus asked Philip (John 6:5). In other words, since there is no DFAC to feed this many, what are we going to do?

Suddenly a boy donated his lunch consisting of two fish and five barley bread loaves. Counting 5,000 men, we know there had to be women and children as well, making a total of 10,000 people.

On the grassy slopes, Jesus offered a blessing over the boy's lunch and began to multiply the meal that satisfied everyone's hunger.

REFLECTIONS

We have been in the field with Soldiers eating MREs, but a single MRE is not designed to feed thousands.

Facchinello

Here, Jesus miraculously provided a meal that satisfied everyone's hunger from the boy's meal.

Leftover food filled 12 baskets after the meal. Jesus could ignore the leftovers that were providing food for the birds.

He teaches us a lesson that we should not waste what he gives. Gather the leftovers "so that nothing is wasted."

Given from heaven, faith in Jesus is bread that satisfies the believer's life forever.

"No one who comes to me will ever be hungry again," Jesus said in John 6:35.

Perhaps you sense a need in your life which is not satisfied. Give Jesus, the bread of life an opportunity to satisfy your hunger.

He can save to the uttermost, and from my experience, he has never disappointed with his leftovers.

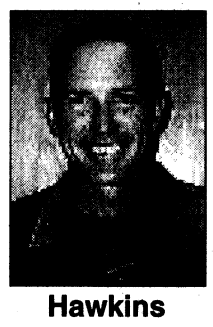
Join ranks of financial freedom



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

Did you see the difference in your January LES at mid-month? Now it may not be enough to get your own television spot on MTV's Cribs, but hey, it's a start!

January seems to be the month of resolutions for a lot of us: "I'll work-out more, put on more muscle, take off more fat, I'll be nice to my mother-in-law, I'll not curse so much at my squad," and yes, "I'll get my finances in shape."

If your January credit card bill looks like the gross national product of a small, Central American county, don't feel alone — you're probably asking the same three key question that lots of folks are this time of year:

- Will I ever have enough?
- Will it continue to be enough?
- How much is enough?

Hawkins

The good news is, there is hope! The first step, and frequently most challenging in any journey, is to commit to success.

If you'll find a program (I recommend Ron Blue's workbook, Master Your Money, or Army Community Service's Financial Workshop, call 545-5516) and simply commit to work it weekly, you too can join the ranks of those released from financial bondage to financial freedom.

As you do that, you may want to keep in mind three things:

- Don't strive for perfection! Financial freedom is a process, not a project. Focus on progress, not on perfection.
- Don't focus on the past! A verse in the Old Testament reminds us, "Don't remember the former things — or consider the old habits you had." If you'll let him, God wants to change your checkbook ... and he may start by changing your heart.

3• Don't try to "fix" your financial situation overnight! If it took you a while to get behind the 8-ball, it may take you a while to get out. Faithful, consistent progress is what you're after, not the fantasy of a quick-fix.

Blue said, "From a financial standpoint, you can have enough. If you plan using (proven) techniques and principles, you will have enough."

He goes on to say that, "if our security comes from just money, though, we'll never have enough."

If there's any way that our team of trained counselors at the Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza, Dixie Road, can help you with your family, friends or finances, give us a call at 545-1760 — we look forward to serving you more in 2004!

The National Prayer Breakfast will be held at the Officers' Club Feb. 19 at 7:30 a.m. Guest speaker is retired Col. Benjamin Purcell, a former POW in Vietnam. Call 544-9496.

Spencer High School's boy's basketball team defeated the Columbus Blue Devils, 66-43, Tuesday night at Spencer High School.

This victory put Spencer's Greenwaves record to 18-4. The team is ranked 10th in the state, and they showed it.

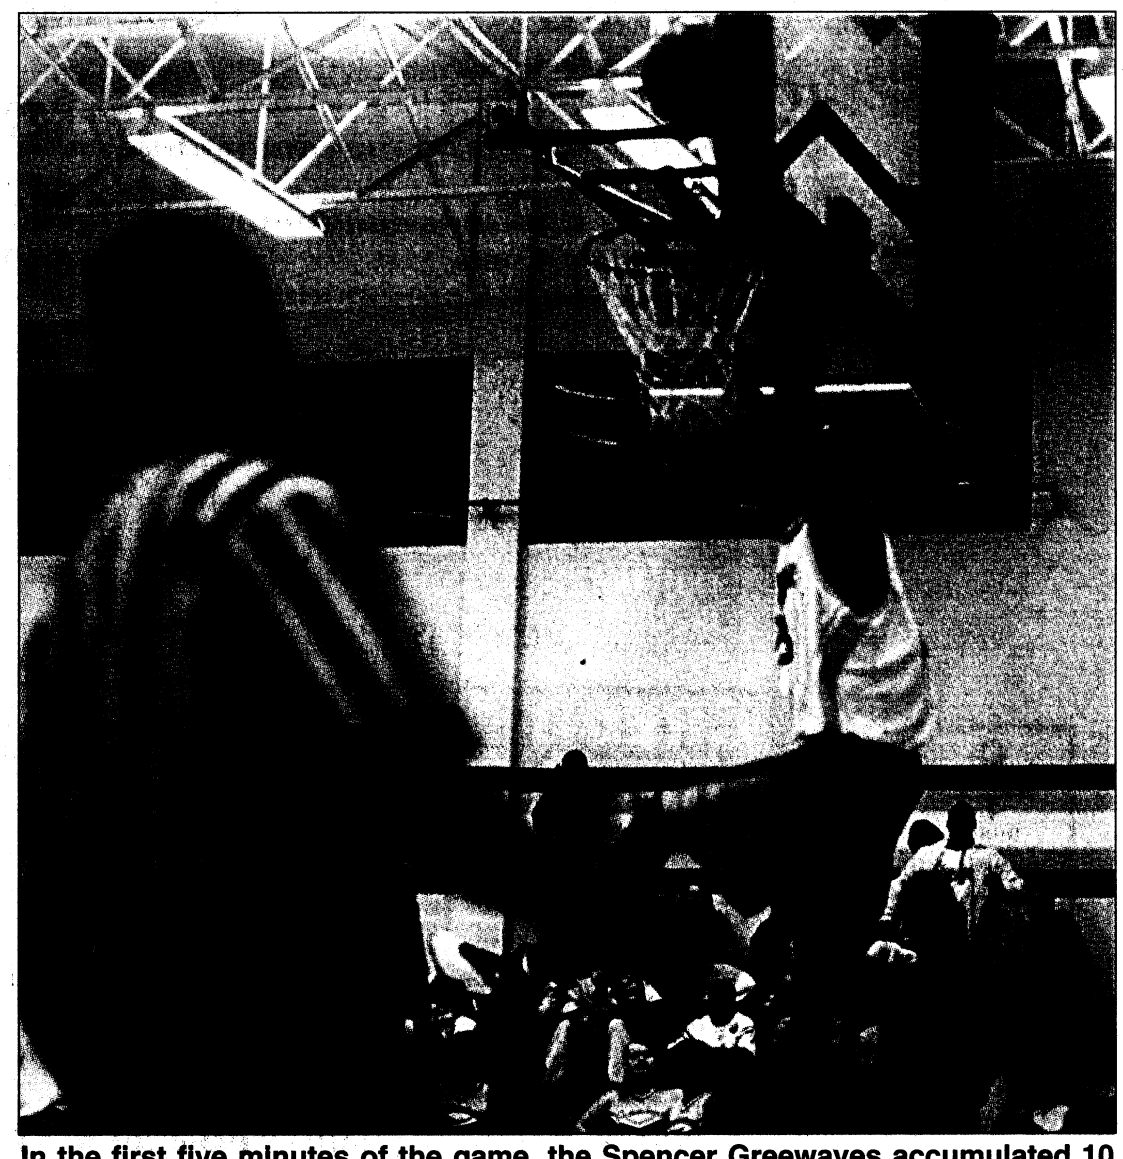
"This had been a great year for the boys," said George Williams, Spencer coach. "They worked hard all summer, and I'm proud of them. Hopefully, we'll keep on going and make a good run for state."

In the first period, the Greenwaves racked up 15 unanswered points, and Columbus put only two points on the board with less than a minute in the period with foul shots.

The Blue Devils shots were repeatedly stuffed by a smothering Spencer defense, which was complemented by their offense. They ended the first period at 17-2.

Columbus recovered from the first period and came out playing better and were able to get off a couple shots and make some rebounds, but was still no match for Spencer.

Columbus' defensive press slowed down the Greenwaves and forced some mistakes, and Spencer's man-to-man defense became less effective as Columbus moved more aggressively toward the basket. At the end of the half, Columbus was starting to wear down Spencer and close the point gap.



"We started off with a lot of intensity; then (Columbus) started to stall and got some easy shots in," Williams said. "That's when I was switching them from man-to-man to zone coverage to change it up and give them a rest."

After halftime, both teams returned to the court refreshed. Spencer started playing a little sloppier when Columbus started shutting down some of their shots with a much more physical game under the basket. The score ebbed and flowed but Spencer stayed in the lead and finished the third period at 47-33.

In the final eight minutes of the game, Spencer started to wear down Columbus. The Greenwaves tightened up their game and were leading by nearly 30 points for a moment.

"We had a couple tough games last weekend against two good teams," Williams said. "We were playing a little flat today, but we came out and did what we had to do."

Faith athletes show meaning of being 'team player'

Basketball players lead the way

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

On any athletic team, skill and technique are paramount. But as many coaches will tell you, good leadership is just as, if not more, important.

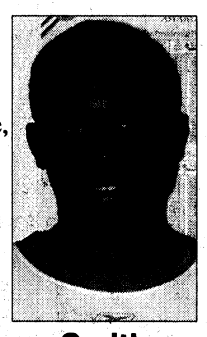
Faith Middle School basketball coach Ronnie Bell considers himself blessed in that department.

"All the kids out here have leadership qualities," said Bell, who is coaching both the boys' and girls' teams this year.

That said, some are better able to harness those qualities than others and use them to benefit the team — players like Taylor Ellis and Robert Smith, both eighth-graders.

Ellis, who began playing basketball when she was 8 years old, is now one of four captains on the girls' team.

"She stands out as far as leadership," Bell said. "She does what needs to be done for the team."



To Ellis, that means doing her best in practice and giving all that she can on the court.

"You practice how you play," she said.

The 14-year-old began getting into the sport when she moved to Fort Benning from Fort Campbell, Ky., five years ago.

She said she hopes to use her basketball skills to earn a scholarship either to North Carolina or Tennessee.

Ultimately, she plans to follow in the footsteps of Lisa Lesley, a Women's National Basketball Association great.

Smith

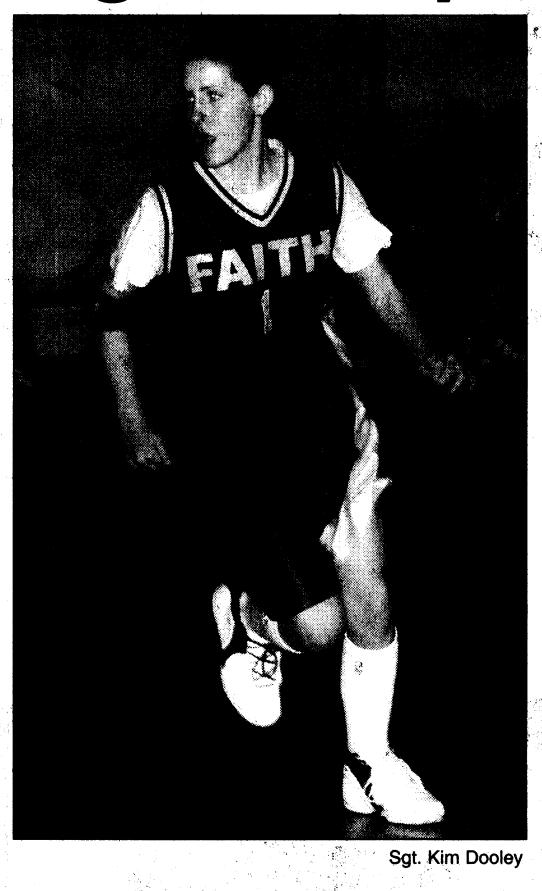
Meanwhile, fellow athlete Smith stands out on the boys' team, where he rations his talent carefully.

Smith, who has played basketball since first grade and got serious about it in sixth grade, doesn't see why it should be unusual that he regularly gives up shots to allow fellow players to score and bask in the glory.

"I like to share the ball," he said, shrugging. "I only score when they need me to."

"Robert is really a team player," Bell said. "He does whatever I ask of him on and off the court. If I ask him to sit out a game, he does. If I ask him to keep the books, he does."

Smith shares Ellis' dreams of putting his athletic skills to good use to earn a scholarship to college and said he would most like to play for the Orlando Magic if he made it professionally.



His parents are his inspiration.

"My dad is the one who taught me how to play, and my mom makes sure I'm focused," he said.

Both he and Ellis have a lot going for them already, Bell said.

"It's very important to develop leadership (at this age)," he said. "When you get in the higher grades of school, when you go to the outside world. ... I don't think any kids should want to be followers.

"These (kids) are my team players, my leaders."

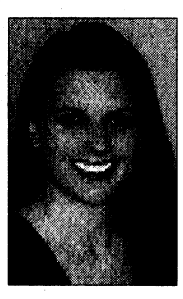
Pats, Cats square off in Houston



Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

It's that time of year again. No, I'm not talking about tax season. I'm talking about the mother of all football games — the Super Bowl. Super Bowl XXXVIII to be exact. For those of you who have been living in a spiderhole, this year's match-up is the New England Patriots against the Carolina Panthers.

I have to start by saying that, yes, I am biased. I am a lifelong Patriots fan. I was glued to the television for Super Bowl XXXVI when the Pats won with an Adam Vinatieri field goal. So, of course I'm cheering for the Pats, although they're only favored by 6 1/2 to 7 1/2 points.

That makes Carolina the "underdogs." Everyone loves to see the underdogs win. The New York Jets stunned everyone in Super Bowl III, defeating the Baltimore Colts, 16-7. The Pats did it in Super Bowl XXXVI, underdogs by 14 points to the St. Louis Rams. And they did it with help from Tom Brady, quarterback for the Patriots.

Brady went from the 199th draft pick in 2000 to starter after Drew Bledsoe got injured. Brady had no interceptions in his first 162 pass attempts, an NFL record. He won 11 of 14 regular season starts. As a starter, he went 34-12 — the best winning percentage of any active quarterback. So although the numbers speak for themselves, Brady still came in third in MVP voting, after fellow AFC quarterbacks Peyton Manning and Steve McNair, both of whom got shut down by Brady and the Patriots.

I do have to give the Panthers some credit, though. From a 1-15 record in 2001 to a Super Bowl slot this year is quite an accomplishment. In their ninth season, they finished 14-5. But Jake Delhomme is no Tom Brady.

I've heard it said this is going to be a boring game because both teams are defensive teams. I think it will be a low-scoring game, sure, but not boring. Cornerbacks Ty Law of the Patriots and Ricky Manning of the Panthers picked off three interceptions in their AFC and NFC Championship games. Delhomme has to prove that he deserves to be in the Super Bowl — Brady has already proved he can go to the Super Bowl and win, and also be the MVP.

To the Carolina fans, I know the Patriots just won a Super Bowl two years ago, but you gotta give us Red Sox fans something to cling to. We were this close to making it to the World Series. When Aaron Boone hit the homer to dash our dreams, I bawled like a big old baby. I don't know if my husband can take another night of my crying because my team didn't produce. Like us Red Sox fans say every fall, "There's always next year." Give Delhomme some more experience and maybe one day he can be a Tom Brady.

Enjoy the game and, of course, the commercials. The Super Bowl wouldn't be the Super Bowl unless I see at least one commercial with a dancing orangutan or football-playing horses.

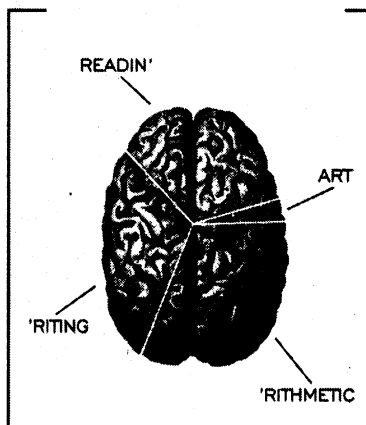
THERE'S NOT ENOUGH ART IN OUR SCHOOLS.

NO WONDER PEOPLE THINK

CARAVAGGIO

IS A GUY ON THE SOPRANOS.

It's quite hard to believe. Here's a 16th-century Baroque master whose bold naturalistic painting style first created a sensation, then a movement. A guy whose life was filled with the turbulence and excess of a dozen Mario Puzo novels. A guy who, while troubled, ultimately found redemption — and immortality — in his art. But does the kid next door even know who Caravaggio is?



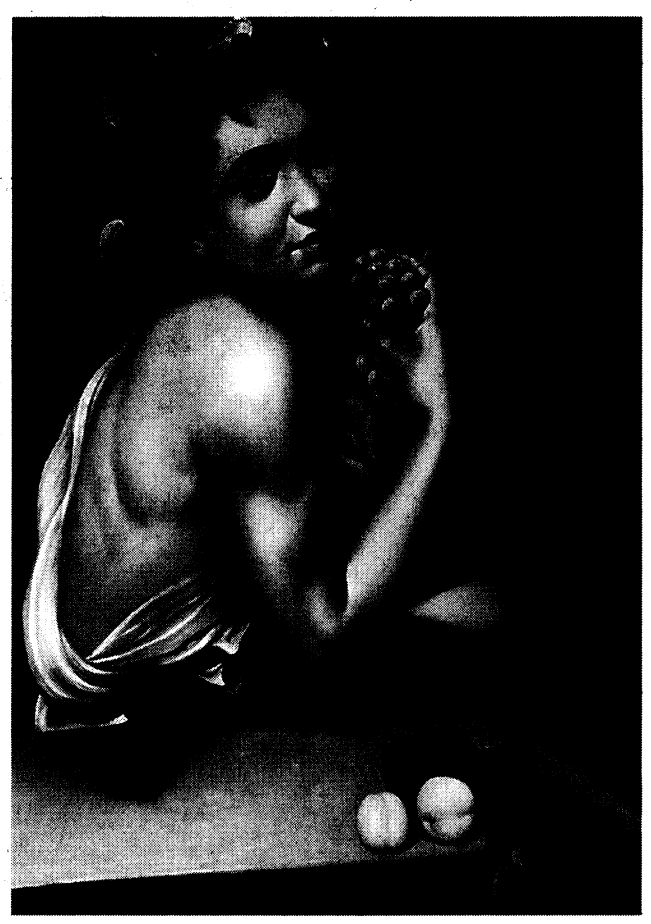
If you're looking for Caravaggio, you're very, very cold.

Fuhgedaboutit.

This loss is incalculable. Especially when you consider how much children can learn from the conflicted life of someone like Michelangelo Caravaggio.

He grew up in less than ideal circumstances. Much of his family perished in the plague, and he spent much of his youth on the notoriously treacherous streets of Rome. As a young man, he labored beneath others much less talented than he and had difficulty making a living. He faced adversity at every turn.

Make sure to give art a piece of your mind.



And when his legendary temper threatened to get the best of him, he created his most vital masterpieces. The angry contrast between light and darkness that he felt deep in his soul now hangs in stark evidence in countless museums around the world.

Caravaggio's body of work is not only a great example of the Baroque period, but also a case study in the importance of art as an outlet. One we're fast removing from our kids' lives.

AN IMPORTANT LESSON.

Study after study shows that an overwhelming majority of parents believe the arts are integral to their children's education. They like that dance and music teach kids to be more tolerant and open. That painting and drama allow children to express themselves creatively. And that the arts help to promote individuality, while bolstering self-confidence and improving overall academic performance.

If only they knew that their kids spend less time in arts classes than they do watching commercials.

A self-portrait of Caravaggio as Bacchus. Let's be honest; he wouldn't last 10 minutes on The Sopranos.

LET'S CUT TO THE CHASE.

If the arts are indeed a vital part of your child's education and well-being (and they are), then you should demand your child's fair share. To find out what you can do to help, or for more information about the benefits of arts education, please visit us at AmericansForTheArts.org. Because, as Michelangelo Caravaggio would no doubt tell you, a life without art is torture.

ART. ASK FOR MORE.

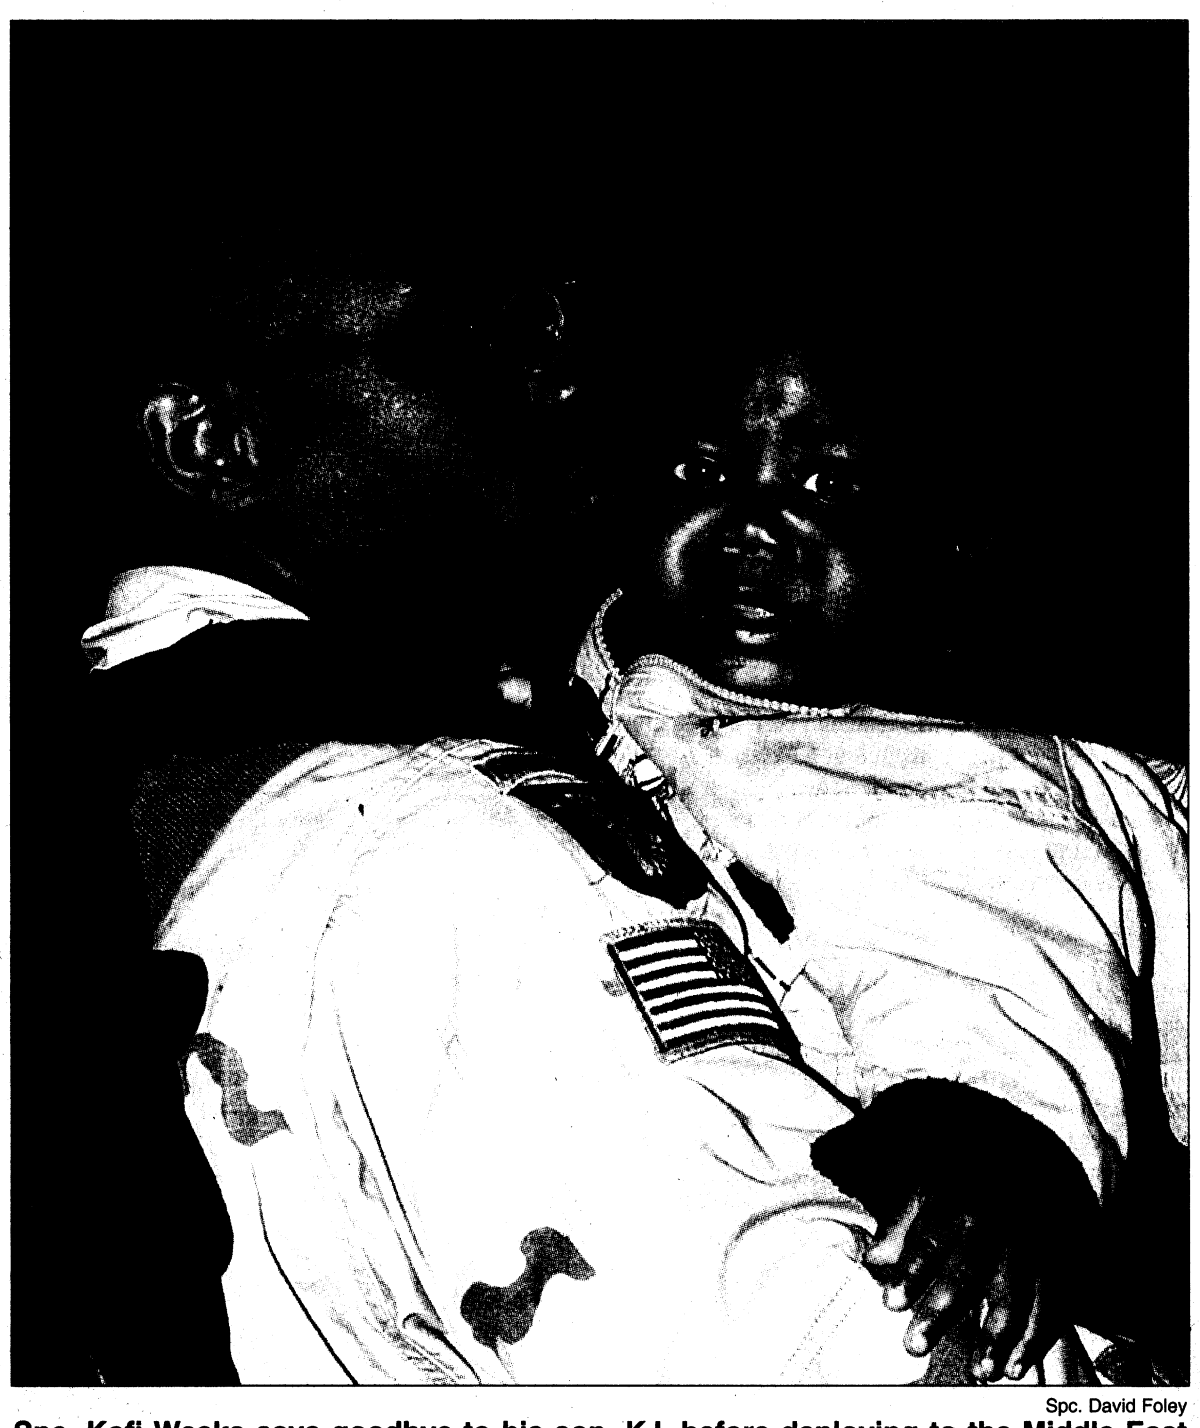
CG talks about Army future

Adaptive, modular force needed to win

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The Army is changing and changing drastically — get ready. That was Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley's message as he addressed more than a thousand Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians in Marshall Auditorium at Infantry Hall Tuesday afternoon.

Freakley's State of the Army address came in the wake of a meeting with the vice chief of staff of the Army last week in Washington, D.C.



"When you read history, it's clear that the force that adapts first — because each side is going to the fight with a certain doctrine, organization, leaders and notion about how they'll fight — but the first force that adapts quickly to the environment wins the war," Freakley said.

As a nation that has been at war since 2001, as an Army with hundreds of thousands of Soldiers deployed around the world, the Army must adapt to face the continued threat against American forces, Freakley said. That means reshaping the Army.

Increasing armed force capabilities.

Although the Army is already about 11,000 Soldiers above its allowed strength of 480,000, Congress has allowed the Army to "plus up" to 510,000 Soldiers in

Fifty-five Fort Benning Soldiers left a room full of teary-eyed family members and boarded a plane to Kuwait at Lawson Army Airfield Jan. 29.

The 233rd Heavy Equipment Transport Company will transport heavy tactical equipment to and from combat units in Iraq.

For most of the Soldiers, this deployment will be quite familiar.

About 40 of the Soldiers redeployed from Iraq in July, which gives the company somewhat of an advantage with this deployment, said 1st Lt. Dennis Graves, 233rd HET Co. commander.

"We are familiar with the terrain and the routes," Graves said. "We are not going into unknown territory this time."

Even though the last deployment is still fresh in most of the Soldiers' minds, they spent several months preparing for this one.

The Soldiers brushed up on their skills with Hammer Focus training and situational training exercises, Soldier readiness preparations, and medical threat and awareness briefings.

They also had several family readiness group meetings to prepare Soldiers and their families for the separation.

Staff Sgt. Larry Efrin, company first sergeant, said there is no doubt his Soldiers will do an excellent job.

"They did an outstanding job last time," he said. "And once

Army boosts strength by 30K

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Although the Army has been given the green light to temporarily increase its size by up to 30,000 troops, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker said he opposes a permanent end-strength increase.

The Army is already about 11,000 Soldiers above its congressional limit of 482,400 active-duty troops, Schoomaker told the House Armed Services Committee Jan. 28, explaining that the Army has used emergency authority to meet its commitments in Iraq, Afghanistan, the Balkans and elsewhere.

Speaking at a congressional hearing on the rotation of troops to Iraq, Schoomaker said he has permission from Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld "to grow the Army by 30,000 people." He said this will give the service the personnel needed to handle the stress on-going operations are placing on it.

But Schoomaker told representatives he opposes a permanent increase in troops, and instead believes transformation and restructuring will increase lethality and efficiency in the long run.

He said an unfunded end-strength increase "puts readiness at risk, it puts training at risk, it puts modernization at risk, it puts transformation at risk — and that's why I'm resisting it."

Many in Congress believe the Army is stressed with worldwide operations. One proposal calls for adding two more combat divisions. Another calls for a 40,000-man increase in the Army, while other, more general proposals just call for end-strength increases.

Schoomaker agrees the Army is stressed, but believes it is a

Audie Murphy Gym was jumping with Soldiers and basketball and hip-hop stars in an event organized by the National Developmental Basketball League to boost troop morale Jan. 30.

The Columbus Riverdragons and the Charleston Lowgators played a nationally broadcasted game from Fort Benning to boost morale — especially for the National Guard and reserve units training on Sand Hill for deployments scheduled for late March.

The halftime show featured Nappy Roots, a well-known hip-hop group who performed with help from the Riverdragons' cheerleaders dancing with Soldiers from the crowd.

Spc. Larry Pelham, an engineer with the 926th Engineer Battalion, forgot about his hard day of training and got up to dance during the Nappy Roots performance.

"I love Nappy Roots," he said. "I think it's great that they came out here to show us their support before we deploy."

Prophet, a member of Nappy Roots, said it makes the group feel good that the Soldiers want to hear their music.

"It's good to know that people who put their lives on the line are really motivated by our music, and we want them to know that we're here for them," he said.

COST OF FREEDOM

Soldiers pay in blood

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

What is the cost of freedom and when is it going on sale? History tells us the cost of freedom is high and often paid for with a currency whose value does not fluctuate — blood.

Where does this blood come from? It comes from the men and women of this country who have stood among their fellow service members, raised their hands and said, "I do."

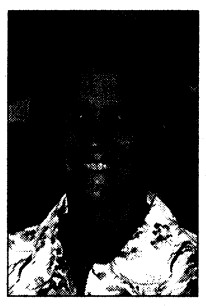
So it bothers me when the media starts putting price tags on the military men and women of this country.

Recently, a Los Angeles Times article, quoting Pentagon officials, stated a Soldier in today's Army of One costs the government on average $99,000 a year in pay and benefits.

It goes on to cite the average pay for Soldiers is $43,000. The benefits, of course, being housing or housing allowances, separate rations, clothing allowances, etc., make up the remaining $56,000.

Looking at this, the "average" American might think, "Whoa!"

However, if they were to look at my recent W-2, they would see my pay is, uh ... below average at $42,361.20. Before you curse me, I think below average isn't so bad, but it did take me almost 20 years and several promotions to get here.



I know there are a lot of Soldiers reading this who hope to be average some day and lots of others who remember being average.

So what is a fair price? I would say this: battle dress uniform: $46.95; black beret: $10.10; black jungle boots $68.55; Soldier to wear uniform and swear to defend this country against all enemies, foreign and domestic: Priceless.

You might be able to buy almost anything with a Master Card, but for freedom, you need a Soldier. Because our enemies don't take a hint, and they don't take American Express.

Brush 'em, floss 'em, keep 'em

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's National Children's Dental Health Month, so it's obviously time to figure out just what it is all about.

And with my high-speed DSL Internet access, surfing the net for information is even more fun than before.

What did I find? I'm glad you asked.

Children's Dental Health Month began as a one-day event in Cleveland on Feb. 3, 1941, and was first celebrated nationally in 1949. By 1955, it had expanded to encompass an entire week, and by 1981, had swallowed an entire month.

I personally never had a cavity until I got to college, which my mom attributed to the fact that there was fluoride in the water by the late '60s.

But as a mother, I'm touched by tooth decay, and I'm glad there are programs in the schools to have hygienists and dentists come to check kids' teeth out.

My biggest trauma has been sitting in the waiting room and listening to the drill and the wails as the dentist removed the tooth decay and put four crowns in my middle son's mouth.

He wasn't even 4 years old, but had a combination of defective enamel and vicious mouth bacteria. Thanks to a good pediatric dentist, he has no memory of the event, and willingly returns to the dentist twice a year for cleanings.

We're holding out hope that the permanent teeth will come in strong and healthy.

OK. So you don't have kids. Get yourself to the dentist. If you have dental phobias, find a dentist who deals with folks just like you.

Don't forget your pets either. February is also National Pet Dental Health month, because someone figured out that oral disease is the number one health problem diagnosed in dogs and cats.

I left www.petdental.com and surfed on. I found www.healthyteeth.org, which had a lot of good information for parents and kids about cavities, prevention, and braces.

And I learned a few things in the process. We've all heard that sugar is bad for your teeth, but do we really know why? It's not the sugar that causes the cavities, it's the bacteria in your mouth.

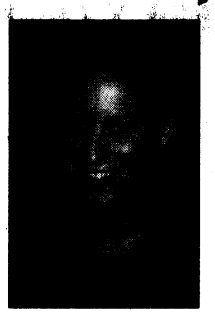
When the bacteria forms together to become plaque, it uses the sugar for energy and turns the sugar into a glue that helps the plaque stick to your teeth. Yuck.

So get out your toothbrush.

Don't worry about brushing wrong, because there's really no one set method. You can go up and down, side to side, or even in circles, just as long as you cover all the surfaces of your teeth.

Effective brushing can take anywhere from two to three minutes.

Do not forget to floss. If you don't floss, you're missing up to 35 percent of the tooth's surface.



And what about those crooked teeth? Like the ones in my fifth-grader's mouth we're about to sink a bunch of money into fixing ... Fix them.

Crooked teeth are harder to clean because they have unnatural spaces and are more likely to have cavities, according to the Web site.

Or as the dentist from my junior high days told my parents, "If you ever want to marry her off, she'll need braces."

Be a sport: Give blood, play rugby

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

A year ago, if you'd asked me if I wanted to play rugby, I would have laughed out loud. The term conjures up images of big, sweaty men knocking the bejeezus out of each other with no protection but a mouth guard.

Besides, my last "athletic experience" — if you could call it that — was JV soccer in my junior year of high school. A sad endeavor which landed me on bed rest for a week with serious muscle strains in all four quadrants of my legs.

So I rather surprised myself last summer when I took an Infantry Hall cohort up on an invitation to come out and practice with the local rugby team, the Columbus/Fort Benning Cruise-a-Matics.

In my years in the Army, I've gotten to be a pretty quick runner ("for a girl"), and I love a good challenge — not to mention I was bored out of my mind. So I threw caution to the wind and ventured out to the pitch.

A collective four months of practice, four games, eight stitches and countless cuts and bruises later, I'm hooked.

Now, I'm not exactly what you'd call a "key player" on the team. But the real ruggers — the big, sweaty men knocking the bejeezus out of each other with no protection but a mouth guard — humor me, coach me and encourage me nonetheless.

Because of them, I'm stronger, faster and definitely tougher.

Unfortunately, we've entered into the competitive season where the girls can't play with the boys (something in the rule book about not having women or children on the field during league games, the ones that count). So I'll be left on the sidelines, waiting for a "B-sides" game — you know, where the second-string players get to romp around on the field for a "special game."

I'll admit I'm not much of a loss, but that's one less body to put on the field, and in a game where you need 15 players plus subs, every body counts.

Now it's no easy thing to share the field with 29 guys at least twice your size, half of whom are destined to knock you flat on your back at some point in the game. But the way I see it, if I can do it, anyone can.

Which is why I'm wondering where all the hard core, tough guys are on this post?

Here's a chance to hit (no punching, for you violent types) someone as hard as you can, and it's all legal and in good fun — they'll even share a beer with you after the game.

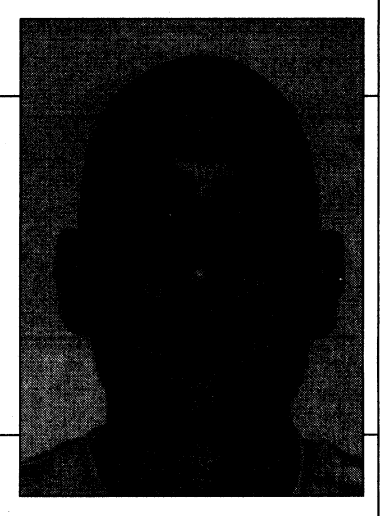
There's travel, parties and that good, old-fashioned manly bonding that can only take place through excessive sweating and grunting.

The team is half civilian, half military — even 3rd Brigade and 36th Engineer Group Soldiers and rangers make it out between deployments. So that's no excuse.

Not in shape? No problem — you will be. Never played before? No problem — no experience necessary. Got a busy schedule? No problem — practices are Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7 to 9 p.m., and games are always on Saturdays. Plus, rugby is a year-round sport. Scared of getting hurt? Toughen up — if a 125-pound girl can get out there, so can you. Besides, it's only a few bumps and bruises ... maybe the occasional concussion (relax, it's a joke ... kind of).

So stop shuffling your feet, grab your cleats, a mouth guard and what's the other thing — oh, yeah, some guts, and get out on the field. If you've seen the flyers posted around Columbus, you should know, "all you need is a hard head and a pair of cleats."

You can find detailed directions to the pitch, game schedules and player contacts on the team's Web site at www.columbus-benningrugby.com. For game pictures and more details, see C-1.



As one rugger's bumper sticker reads, "Give blood, play rugby."

First black paratrooper pins grandson

Airborne School welcome sight for old Soldier

"Back in the '40s, there were two armies, a colored one and a white one."

—Retired Col. Joseph Murchison, president of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association, Inc.

The first black paratrooper in the Army, retired 1st Sgt. Walter Morris earned his wings 60 years ago this month. He pinned those very wings on his grandson at an Airborne graduation Jan. 30 on Fryar Drop Zone.

"When he pinned on my wings, he said he was proud of me and this was one of the best days of his life," said 1st Lt. Michael Fowles, executive officer, A Company, 2nd Battalion, 60th Infantry Regiment, Fort Jackson, S.C.

"Then he said he'd kill me if I lost his wings. I said I would protect them with my life," Fowles said.

Those small, silver wings represent the first steps to integrating the Army and eventually America.

"The Army was totally segregated, and we were the first colored outfit to be integrated into a combat division," said retired Col. Joseph Murchison, president of the 555th Parachute Infantry Association, Inc.

"I think we led the way to integration. Without the 555th and Morris' efforts, we would not have the diverse military and civilian society we do now," Murchison said.

When Morris was stationed at Fort Benning, he was the first sergeant for a company of black Soldiers, tasked with clean-up details and guard duty for the jump school. Morale in the unit was low.

One day, Morris gathered the Soldiers, and when the white Soldiers left the field in the afternoon, he took his Soldiers out on the calisthenics field for training. He did this daily, and the Soldiers started getting in better shape and holding their heads higher.

"We were doing push ups, drills and jumping out of the mock airplane, doing what the white Soldiers were doing," Morris said.

One evening, the commanding general drove by as these black Soldiers were on the calisthenics field. The next day, Morris was called to the general's office.

"When I walked into the office, I was scared to death" Morris said. "As a first sergeant, getting a call to the CG's office, I wondered what I did.

"He asked me why all these black Soldiers were out on the field in the afternoon," Morris said.

"I said, 'Well, (when) we go on the field and do the same training as the white Soldiers and we pretended to be paratroopers, it raised the morale,'" he said.

"The CG was impressed and told me about orders for a test company for black paratroopers, the 555th Paratrooper Company," Morris said. "He asked me if I wanted to be the first sergeant."

Morris jumped at the chance, and a few weeks later, he graduated as one of the first 17 black paratroopers. As the company first sergeant, he was the first to sign in on the company rolls.

"The Army opened the doors, and we had blacks coming in by the hundreds to be paratroopers," Morris said. "We had so many, our company had to become a battalion."

Sixty years later, the parachutes and airplanes have changed, but the experience remains the same, frightening.

The first week, ground week, Fowles called his grandfather to tell him about his experiences.

"He said he did the 34-foot tower and was scared," Morris said. "I said, 'We were all scared'."

"He was very excited when I did my first jump," Fowles said. "It was great. I got to be the first one out of the bird.

"A lot of people say they don't remember their first jump, but I did," Fowles said. "I went out and got into the tight body position. I counted to four, but the chute opened at three — and that was a confident feeling — then I floated down for a minute and had a great landing."

If it's true most don't remember their first jump, it didn't hold for Morris either.

"I remember every second of my first jump, and they were (all) scary," Morris said.

Before Fowles' final jump, Morris, Murchison and retired Command Sgt. Maj. Sid Brown, all 555th members, visited the hangar to see the Soldiers. When the visitors were introduced to the company, they received a standing ovation in an otherwise silent building.

"Seeing him in the hangar was the most wonderful feeling I've had in my life," Morris said.

When Morris met Fowles, in his uniform and parachute, "I thought just yesterday he was in diapers now he's in jump boots."

Fowles always knew what his grandfather did, but he didn't always understand the scope of it.

"I didn't join the Army until I was 22, and he was the only other person in the family who was military," Fowles said. "I didn't completely understand what it meant to be a paratrooper. I was just proud that he was the first black paratrooper. Now I have a greater understanding.

Retired 1st Sgt. Walter Morris poses next to his grandson, 1st Lt. Michael Fowles, at the Airborne School graduation.

"I always looked up to him," he said. "Not only for what he did in the military, but for what he did as a man for his family and the community. He sacrifices a lot of time for other people," he said.

Fowles said he feels "a great debt to him," and had to go "and follow the leadership he gave years ago."

"If you want it all, we've got it all."

NCOA trains Soldier backlog from OIF, OEF

More than 600 NCOs need BNCOC, ANCOC

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning NCO Academy is preparing to train the Soldiers returning from deployments in support of Operations Iraqi and Enduring Freedom.

Many Soldiers in units Armywide have not attended the NCOA because they were deployed, said Command Sgt. Maj. Charles Raper, NCOA commandant at Fort Benning.

Fort Benning is now faced with a backlog of more than 600 infantrymen who need to go through phases one and two of BNCOC or ANCOC, said Sgt. 1st Class Dale Robertson, NCOA chief of training. The only problem is that there is a window of approximately six months to train these Soldiers before the end of the fiscal year.

In order to train the large amount of Soldiers in such a short amount of time, the second phases of BNCOC and ANCOC have been reduced, said Jason Olive, chief of course management.

"The courses are shorter, but we will still produce effective Soldiers," Robertson said.

BNCOC for infantrymen is usually a two-phase, eight-week course. The first phase includes common core training for all Soldiers promoted to staff sergeant.

During this phase, they receive basic leadership instruction for platoon and squad leaders. The second phase is military occupational specialty specific.

In training the surge, NCOA is reducing the second phase of BNCOC. They are doing this by cutting out most of the administrative and personnel issues that Soldiers usually train for at their units.

Also, backlog Soldiers going to BNCOC during the reduced courses should not expect to attend any simulation training or close-combat tactical training, said 1st Sgt. Larry Primeaux, BNCOC branch chief.

"We're going to emphasize combatives, urban operations and maintenance," he said.

Infantry ANCOC is also a two-phase course, but it is usually 10 weeks long. It has to reduce much more instruction time than BNCOC.

The first phase of ANCOC, also common core-oriented, will be left alone.

The second phase will be reduced by moving effective writing into the first phase, and taking out platoon tactical operations, as well as the administrative and personnel related issues, said 1st Sgt. Grady Martin, ANCOC branch chief.

Although ANCOC will be taking portions of the training out, they will also add platoon sustainment casualty collection, a tactical exercise without troops and various simulation courses.

"The focus will be on combat-critical training," Martin said.

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon

ANCOC Class 01-04 holds formation outside Infantry Hall. By the time this class graduates, the pilot course is slated to start.

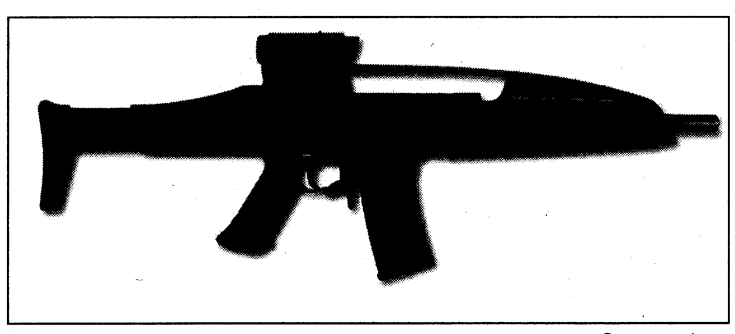
With the reductions, both courses are each three weeks long, allowing the NCOA to train the backlog Soldiers in four classes, meeting their six-month course completion requirements, Olive said.

Proposed M-16, M-4 replacement under review

XM8 weapon family to be assessed

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Soldier Battlelab, formerly known as Dismounted Battle Space Battlelab, will assess the weapons family proposed to replace the M-16 and M-4 weapons systems this month to see if the weapons will move forward in development.



Soldiers, Marines and airmen will evaluate the XM8 weapons system performance. The Soldier Battlelab will look at the weapons' performance and subjective user data.

The weapons are currently in preproduction, and the assessment will look for areas that may not function properly and still need to be addressed, said Jerry Barricks, project officer with Soldier Battlelab.

"(The evaluation will) not only gather technical data, but also subjective data on the ease of use and if it's easy to maintain or train on," he said.

The XM8 family has a 9-inch compact, 12.5-inch carbine and a 20-inch sharpshooter and automatic rifle.

The 12.5-inch carbine is 6.4 pounds with an objective of 5.7 pounds and is 33 inches with its adjustable stock extended. The M-16 A2 is 39.63 inches long and 8.79 pounds with a 30-round magazine.

This is an example of the 12.5-inch assault version. There are also a compact 9-inch and sharpshooter 20-inch versions.

Internally, the XM8 uses a rotary locking bolt system that functions and fieldstrips like those used in the M-16 rifle and M-4 carbine, according to the XM8 manufacturer's — Heckler & Koch — Web site. The bolt is powered by a unique gas operating system with a user-removable gas piston and pusher rod to operate the mechanism. Unlike the current M-4 and M-16 direct gas system with gas tube, the XM8 gas system does not introduce propellant gases and carbon back into the weapon's receiver during firing.

"(The Soldier's input) is a good way to look at (a variety) of things and go back to refine our requirement document instead of sitting here thinking about it," said Edwin Davis, deputy director of the Soldier Battlelab.

"A lot of weapons are impressive on the range," Davis said, but the weapons' true performance isn't known until it's put in the hands of Soldiers, who "move it around, get a feel for it, get it in the mud."

The weapons will be evaluated with known distance, field fire, NBC, night fire and rapid magazine change with some Soldiers also doing MOUT, close quarter battle and a woodland obstacle course.

During the review, the XM8s will be compared to the M-16 A2, M-16 A4 and M-4 weapons systems.

Although there's no great outcry from Soldiers in the field to replace their current weapon, there's a push to get gear into the field faster. The data will be used to help refine the requirements document for the new weapons systems or even decide if there's a need.

The Infantry School's assessment on the weapons systems should be out by mid-May, Davis said.

"A weapon is a fundamental skill for every Soldier," Davis said. "The quicker we can train them up on the task, the better we will be."

MMA selects USAMU gunsmith as Soldier of year

Custom pistol gunsmith recognized

Paula J. Randall Pagán
U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit

Staff Sgt. Joe D. Harless, a pistol gunsmith with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, was named Military Marksmanship Association Soldier of the Year for 2003.

The MMA president, retired Col. Arch Arnold, made the announcement at the MMA annual membership meeting Jan. 23. Arnold presented the Soldier of the Year Award to Harless — a trophy pistol donated by the Smith and Wesson Corporation.

A native of Tahlequah, Okla., Harless graduated from Tahlequah High School in 1982. He studied to be an automotive technician at Oklahoma State Technical College in Olkmulgee in 1984, and in 1994 graduated from Trinidad State Junior College of Trinidad, Colo., where he majored in gunsmithing.

Harless joined the Army in January 1986 and completed Basic and Infantry Training at Fort Benning. He graduated from Air Assault School in 1987 and served with the 3rd U.S. Infantry, Old Guard, at Fort Myer, Va., before joining the Army Marksmanship Unit Custom Firearms Shop in October 1995.

Harless specialized in service pistol gunsmithing and contributed to the Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol Team winning the 2000 Service Pistol Center Fire Championship, the 1998 and 1999 National and Interservice Service Pistol Championships and Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol shooters winning the 1998 and 1999 Forces Command Trophies.

He trained himself on action pistols and now contributes to the success of the USAMU Action Shooting Team.

Harless custom builds the pistols that are used by the Action Shooting Team at International Practical Shooting Confederation World Championships, U.S. Practical Shooting Association and National Rifle Association National Championships and the World Speed Shooting Championships.

Harless travels with the Action Shooting Team to all its competitions to fix any malfunctions with the pistols. He also acts as a coach and gives guidance and advice during the match, said USAMU action shooter Sgt. Maxient J. Michel Jr.

Michel said Harless put together a new pistol for him — a STI .38 Super — that is slightly lighter and allows him to shoot faster and more accurately. Michel received the Bronze Medal at the National Championships in September with this pistol, triumphing over 260 competitors.

"Staff Sergeant Harless has been an inspiration to me and the rest of the team," Michel said. "We know that without his great knowledge of gunsmithing our team would not be complete. He's one of the best gunsmiths I've ever had." Ironically, Harless beat out Michel for this year's Soldier of the Year title. Besides Harless and Michel, other nominees were international rifle shooter Staff Sgt. Jason A. Parker, international pistol shooter Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski; running target shooter Staff Sgt. Armando R. Ayala, shotgun shooter Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery, service rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Lance S. Hopper and service pistol shooter Staff Sgt. Thomas A. Rose.

Staff Sgt. Joe Harless accepts Soldier of the year trophy pistol.

"I was very surprised to have been chosen as the Soldier of the Year over these shooters," Harless said. "The competition was tough because all the Soldiers who were nominated were very deserving and accomplished shooters. I am very honored by this award."

"Sergeant Harless has become one of the top pistolsmiths in the country," said Sgt. 1st Class Bradley R. Throlson, Harless' supervisor. "He not only works on the pistols, but he will be competing in three-gun, which is rifle, pistol and shotgun, shooting competitions this year."

Harless and his wife, Dawn, live in Columbus and have two children, Jesse and Jaime.

ITB gets visit from NBA hall-of-famers, Nappy Roots

Celebrities take time to talk to troops

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Sand Hill had some out of the ordinary visitors recently when four NBA Hall-of-Famers and the musical group Nappy Roots stopped by to talk to the troops of C Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Jan. 29th at Eagle Tower.

"The visit pumped (the Soldiers) up a little bit," said 1st Sgt. Brian Washington, C Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

"They saw that celebrities appreciate the job we do. They're hearing it from us, but it helps to hear it from people they consider stars — ones that the younger generation can relate to, like Nappy Roots. (The visit) showed that people care what it is that the military does for the people of the United States."

The Soldiers started training just a few short weeks ago, and this was the company's first visit from people outside Sand Hill, said Capt. Kevin Salge, company commander.

"It was kind of out of the ordinary," said Pvt. Delarrius Hunter, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. "We've been away from family and away from listening to music, and (Nappy Roots) comes down. They took the time to see us and let us know that we're doing something positive."

The NBA Hall-of-Famers talked to the Soldiers for a few minutes and thanked them for what they were doing. Then Nappy Roots talked about their time performing for Soldiers overseas and performed a portion of one of their singles for the Soldiers.

Spc. Brian Trapp

Visiting NBA Hall-of-Famers and Nappy Roots pose with C Company, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

The visit gave a glance at what the Soldiers have to look forward to later in their careers, Salge said. Even though they're halfway around the world, celebrities will visit them. It gives them opportunities that people don't have in the civilian world.

"They've been away from their families and went to Iraq, but they still came to visit us even though we're not even technically Soldiers yet," said Pfc. Lee Jones, 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt. "I didn't expect anything like this at all when I came here."

"They know the training these Soldiers go through is tough, and that these Soldiers will be protecting America's front," Washington said.

EYES OF THE COMMANDER

Unmanned Aerial Vehicle and C4ISR systems from AAI Corporation are the eyes of the Commander, performing reconnaissance missions that enable warfighters to see first and understand first and act first to decisively defeat the enemy.

Over the past three years, AAI C4ISR systems supported U.S. Army units including the 101st Airborne and 10th Mountain.

From air vehicles to ground control stations, Shadow UAV systems shorten the distance between sensor and shooter providing accurate, sustained, over the horizon surveillance, visual high value target acquisition, and battle damage assessment.

Nicaraguan receives WHINSEC award

Spc. Maggie Ruiz

WHINSEC Commandant Col. Richard Downie, left, presents Dr. José Adán Guerra Pastora with the Simón Bolívar Democracy and Human Rights Award at Pratt Hall Jan 26.

Minister of Defense honored for human rights

Spc. Maggie E. Ruiz
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation honored Dr. José Adán Guerra Pastora, Nicaraguan minister of defense, with the Simón Bolívar Democracy and Human Rights Award at Pratt Hall Jan. 26.

WHINSEC Commandant Col. Richard Downie and Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Daniel Fisk, a member of WHINSEC's Board of Visitors, presented the award to Guerra, who is the third recipient of the annual award.

Both Fisk and Downie commended Guerra for his work and contributions to hemispheric freedom and human rights.

"This is really an honor to acknowledge one of the most distinguished civil servants of Nicaragua," Fisk said. "He has helped lay the foundation for a more prosperous future for Nicaragua."

Guerra thanked WHINSEC and the U.S. government for "its support and partnership."

"I also thank God, my family, and especially my wife for supporting me," he said. "I promise to continue to give my best."

Guerra accepted the award on behalf of his fellow Nicaraguan people, who he believes are the ones who merit the award.

"This award truly belongs to the people of Nicaragua for their struggles and their efforts for a better tomorrow," Guerra said. "I dedicate this award especially in the memory of all the brave Nicaraguans who have given their lives for the sake of their country's freedom."

After the award presentation, Guerra spoke on the relationship between democracy and human rights and the restoration of his country. He also shared his experiences in promoting these principles.

"It is clear that we cannot ignore human rights," Guerra said. "Democracy is the principal factor that fosters the growth of our country."

A lawyer and public servant, Guerra became the Minister of Defense in May 2001.

He is president of the National Demining Commission, a member of the Office of National Security and an executive member of the National Commission for Disaster Prevention and National Council of the War on Drugs.

Simón Bolívar is known as one of South America's greatest generals and is often referred to as "El Liberador" (The Liberator) and the "George Washington of South America."

His victories over the Spaniards won independence for Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, Peru and Venezuela.

NBDL: Brings national league game to post for first time included TNT's Kenny Smith, and NBA Hall of Famers Artis Gilmore, Spencer Haywood, Charlie Scott and Dan Roundfield.

Barry McMullin, president of the Riverdragons, said this event was a follow-up to the NBA's USO tour last year when another group of NBA players and Nappy Roots went to Iraq and Kuwait to boost troop morale.

"The players know that this is what the NBDL is all about," McMullin said.

"We don't only develop players to take to the NBA; we make them better citizens by getting them involved with the community and the fans" he said. "Fort Benning is an important part of the Columbus community."

This was the first time a national league game was played at a military installation, said Kent Partridge, NBDL public relations.

More than 800 Soldiers turned up for the event and coordinators were forced to turn away more than 200, said Philip Evans, NBDL president.

"The NBDL is fortunate to be close to several military installations, Fort Benning being one of the largest.

"We decided to come and show our support," Evans said.

"We're a nation at war and sometimes people lose the appreciation for those on the front lines," he said. "We feel it's important to remind the Soldiers that they are appreciated."

The 2.5-hour game kept everyone on the their feet as Columbus and Charleston played a close-scoring game that ended with Charleston taking the lead with 81-78.

"It was a tough game but it was great to look up into the stands and see all those Soldiers rooting for us," said Erron Maxey, forward for the Riverdragons.

"Soldiers put their lives on the line to protect our freedom and we're just trying to play hard to give them something nice to show them our respect," he said.

Partridge said the NBDL changed the color of their basketballs to red, white and blue once the war against terrorism began, as a way to pay their respects to the Soldiers.

"We know that some of the National Guard and reserve units that were in the stands are deploying pretty soon, and we wanted to give them a break before they get out there," Maxey said. "Hopefully they'll come back home safely."

Benning agents fight espionage

Terrorist threat still alive on nation's homefront

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Spies, terrorists, top secret information, espionage — sounds like a Tom Clancy novel. But for the Soldiers of Fort Benning's resident office, it's just another day on the job.

The tiny section, part of the 902nd Military Intelligence Group in Fort Meade, Md., is home to a small number of special agents whose mission is to "neutralize" foreign intelligence services — known as FIS — and international terrorism activities directed against the Army in the western two-thirds of Georgia and the southern half of Alabama.

But what would the FIS want with anyone around here? Plenty, said Special Agent Dean Moen, resident office OIC.

FIS agents are usually after three thing — information about our military forces, secrets, and especially technologies, Moen said, all of which can be found right here on Fort Benning.

Traditional espionage includes three phases: Spotting, assessing and recruitment.

During the spotting phase, the FIS narrows down who would have access to the information he needs. Assessing allows the FIS to contact the individual and build a friendship, giving him a chance to evaluate the person's strengths and weaknesses, "what potential motivation the person would have to give up the information he needs." Nine times out of 10, that motivation turns out to be greed, pure and simple, Moen said.

Once the FIS has found a weakness, he moves into the recruitment phase, in which he confronts the person and tries to get him or her to provide the information. This phase could take days, months, even years.

"Especially after September 11th, FIS really targets military — they want to know what we're capable of, our deployment capabilities," Moen said.

And people take the bait.

"We spend billions of dollars on research and development, and it's so much easier for other countries to come in and take what we've created for a small amount of money," he said, adding that even our allies have targeted us and tried to steal information.

"People give up potentially billions of dollars worth of research and technology for a small price."

But espionage doesn't always involve top secret information, Moen said.

"The key with espionage is giving information away with the intent to harm the U.S.," he said. "People have gone to (Fort) Leavenworth for giving unclassified and unsensitive information to other countries."

That's where Moen and his counterintelligence crew step in. These Soldiers are seasoned at evaluating espionage indicators, conducting investigations so discreetly that most individuals never even know they've been investigated, and intervening when it's the "real deal."

But the special agents can't work alone. There are only so many of them, and they can't be everywhere at once. They need the members of the community to be on their toes and willing to report anything suspicious.

There are several "espionage indicators" — behaviors and signs that espionage criminals have shown in the past. Everything from constantly trying to be the last one out of the office at the end of the day, possessing several bank accounts, lavish displays of sudden wealth and homesteading (seeking to stay in the same assignment for several years) can reveal a potential spy.

"Even I fall under some of the indicators," Moen said, admitting that some indicators are actually widespread. "But if you look at the whole picture, if you look at the person, and you have that gut feeling that something is wrong, come to us and report it."

> "The key with espionage is giving information away with the intent to harm the U.S. People have gone to (Fort) Leavenworth for giving unclassified and unsensitive information to other countries."
> Special Agent Dean Moen
> Fort Benning Resident Office OIC

If you suspect anything, or if you are approached by a potential FIS, your first stop should be the resident office, Moen said. Don't tell anyone else before you go to the resident office, and don't try to launch your own investigation.

"The more people who know about the incident, the less chance we have of conducting an investigation," said Special Agent Marc Zeider, operations officer.

Zeider said discretion also helps protect the individual from defamation or scrutiny in the event that they are not actually involved in espionage.

Moen said the section handles several cases over the course of the year, but the majority of them turn out to be "not what we thought they were." But that doesn't mean post residents should get complacent.

"There is a huge FIS presence in America, very active, and it's even bigger overseas," Moen said. "This is a serious threat."

To report suspicious activity, go to Building 108, Room 105 or call 545-2828. If you call after hours, a phone message will direct you to the duty special agent — someone is on call 24 hours a day.

CG: Describes changing force, tentative measures light of the Army's continuously growing area of responsibility.

What many may not realize, Freakley said, is that of the 30,000 Soldiers added to the Army's roster, a substantial number will be infantrymen.

With the 480,000-Soldier limit, the Army's readiness is decreased by the large number of Soldiers in the TTHS account — transients, trainees, holdovers and students — taking as many as 30,000 Soldiers out of the fight. With the plus-up, the Army can maintain 480,000 Soldiers ready to fight and win, despite those in the TTHS account.

Increasing force capabilities will also call for the demilitarization of Soldier slots, Freakley said.

"Already, 5,000 military slots have been turned over to civilian pay grades, and those Soldiers will move back into our formations where we had shortages," he said.

Between this year and next, 5,000 more military slots will be turned over to civilians.

Building a modular force.

In the past, when there was a conflict, the Army fought in division-size engagements, Freakley said. This essentially wastes valuable Army resources.

He used the chief of staff of the Army's analogy of the Army as a stack of $100 bills to explain: Each division is a $100 bill. The Army only needs a $20 bill, but all it has is $100 bills, so it spends that $100 bill, puts the four extra $20s in its pocket and keeps using the $100s.

The tentative solution? A modular force with more brigades, Freakley said. But not just brigades — brigade units of action.

The brigade units of action will be self-contained and organized to include the equipment and personnel they need to perform the full spectrum of operations.

The Army's current "one-to-one" model calls for taking a brigade out, and putting another one right back in, Freakley said. But with more brigades moving, units' rotational tempos are decreased while keeping them trained and ready to fight.

Increasing stabilization.

Decreased deployments may allow for more training, but that training can be worthless without stability, Freakley said.

By keeping Soldiers and leaders in their units longer, they gain experience.

That experience in turn contributes to the stability and capabilities of those units, he said.

As it stands now, units are working through their individual and collective tasks, building their units to a capable level through training at the Army's various training centers, only to come home and lose Soldiers to PCS and ETS, Freakley said.

This forces units to start from scratch each time.

Increased stabilization would keep these units together for longer periods of time, allowing them to build past a capable level and maintain their readiness.

Stabilization would also benefit families, providing more stability for children in school, spouses who work and homeowners building equity, Freakley said.

Working as a joint force.

Experiences in Afghanistan and Iraq have shown the world what America's armed forces are capable of when they work as a team, Freakley said. And that is how they will fight from now on.

"We will not go to the fight by ourselves — the joint team will go," he said. "We as an Army will be interdependent, completely reliant on the other forces to get us there and to help us in the fight.

"We've got to continue to enhance and move along the capability to use the strength of each service as a fist and strike it in defense against our adversaries."

Remain ready for future operations.

The world is an unstable place in which terrorism, the drug trade and weapons of mass destruction persist around the world, Freakley said.

But America is engaged in a war of ideas, facing an adversary who hates the American way of life and any tenet of democracy or freedom. It is a war in which the armed forces' enemies and destinations will remain unpredictable, Freakley said.

To counter this, the Army must be adaptable and flexible, he said.

The Army has to be a force that understands uncertainty and the unknown environment it goes into. It must be ready to go, ready to fight as a team, ready to be an expeditionary force.

"We are a nation and an Army at war that will be surprised from time to time when we have periods of peace," Freakley said. "We are at war, we will remain at war ... until we win — and we will win — the global war on terrorism."

Plus-up: Allows 30K troops

temporary spike and that any plus-up can be done with current resources.

He said a permanent end-strength increase without adequate funding would drive the service back into the late-Vietnam-era Army.

"In the early '70s, we had an Army with a lot of people that was hollow," Schoomaker said. "It couldn't train, couldn't move, couldn't fly, couldn't do the kind of things the Army was required to do."

Schoomaker, who came out of retirement to take the chief of staff job, said it costs about $1.2 billion a year for every 10,000 people added to the Army. Congress often gives the military an unfunded order — meaning that the service must take the money from other areas to fund the requirement.

Schoomaker said Army planners believe the service can get 10,000 spaces from military to civilian conversions. He said he believes stabilizing the force — giving Soldiers longer tours — will increase retention. And he said he believes there are significant efficiencies as the service examines the global footprint and restructures overseas overhead and headquarters.

He said transforming the Army will result in manpower savings that can be plowed into the combat force.

"What we are doing is to transform the Army simultaneous with meeting the security commitment of the nation," Schoomaker said.

Schoomaker also disagreed that the service is facing a recruiting and retention crisis. He said that in 2003, the Army made all its retention goals except for one: Army Reserve mid-careerist missed by 6 percent. He explained that away by saying stop loss prevented mid-career NCOs and officers — the primary pool for the Army Reserve — from leaving the active force.

"Indications this year are that we're on track to make 100 percent of goal across all components," he told the representatives.

But, he said, the Army must make "significant moves" to change the way it does business.

"We're making very serious moves to modularize the Army, standardize the Army, developing an Army that's more lethal, more agile, more capable of meeting the current and future operating environment task," Schoomaker said.

Schoomaker said if the Army is allowed to pursue the course now charted, the country will get "a better Army more capable of doing what it needs to do, within our current level of resourcing."

Schoomaker detailed some restructuring elements for the representatives. He said there are currently 10 active-duty divisions. The service will retain the 10 division headquarters as battle command headquarters but move some enabling resources — such as air defense, signal and intelligence — to the brigade level. The Army would increase the number of brigades under those divisions.

"Tentatively, we think we can go from three brigades under a division to four," he said. That alone would take the service from 30 brigades under the division structure to 40.

The service has already decided to go forward with five Stryker brigades in the active structure. The service also has two airborne brigades and an armored cavalry regiment.

"That moves us from 33 active brigades under 10 division headquarters to a force of 48 active brigades — more lethal, more capable, more agile, more modular — that will allow us to be much more strategically agile than we are today," he said.

The chief also wants to standardize the divisions.

"Today we have six heavy divisions in the active force — all of them are different," he said. "Today we have two light divisions in the active force — each different. Then we have the 82nd Airborne Division and the 101st and, of course, they are different. This we need to fix."

On the reserve side, the Army has eight division headquarters, which the service plans to retain.

"But we want to go from 15 enhanced brigades today to 22," he said. He wants to increase these reserve brigades' levels of readiness and equip them with the very best equipment available. This would increase those brigades' capability to become part of a broader rotation base to meet the future strategy, he said.

Overall, there are more than 100,000 structural changes to be made to the Army.

"We're going to convert 36 field artillery battalions to 149 MP units, increase the number of transportation units, medical, aviation restructuring," he said.

"This is the biggest internal restructuring we've done in 50 years, but it must be done to make us relevant and to allow us to meet the real threat to the United States."

you've already done it, you will be able to react a lot better."

Spc. Bruce Conley said the previous deployment was a good experience, and he is more prepared for this one; however, he has a few other things to worry about now.

Conley is leaving his wife behind, and she is expected to give birth in July, meaning he will come home to a new family.

"I'm just trying to concentrate on everything I have to do over there and stay focused," Conley said, "but I also have to remember I have a family that needs me.

"I'm playing two roles now," he said. "A Soldier and a family man.

"I knew what came with the job when I signed up, and I'm happy to have the support of my family," Conley said.

"Now I'm just trying to get the job done," he said.

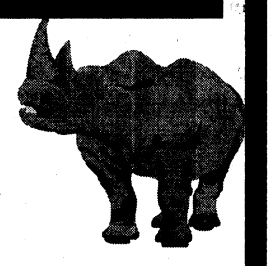
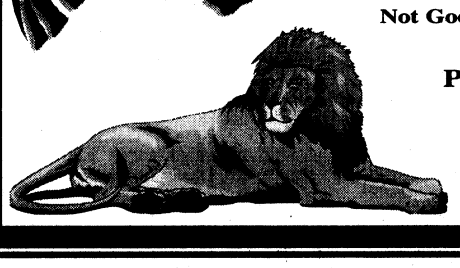
Soldiers from the 233 HET boards an airplane at Lawson Army Airfield as they deploy to Iraq.

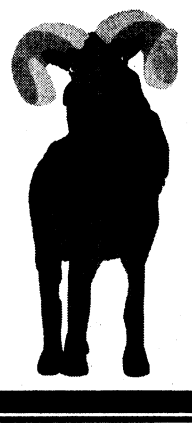
Bouthsingkham graduated from AIT in November and went directly to the 233rd as a motor transport operator specialist — "truck driver" as she put it.

"I'm a little scared but also anxious because I don't know what to expect," she said. "I've been told a lot, but I've got to experience it for myself."



Even though she was fighting back the butterflies in her stomach, Bouthsingkham seemed confident in her unit's abilities and wanted to convey a message to her family.





"I'm in good hands; there's nothing to worry about, and I'll be home soon," she said.

Obstacles teach Soldiers teamwork

Teamwork was the word of the day when the Soldiers of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, confronted the first physically demanding mission of their military careers — the Sand Hill Obstacle Course.

"The mission was to complete the course, and everyone did," said Pvt. Scott Balough, as he caught his breath and dusted himself off after running through the course Tuesday afternoon.

After a safety brief and demonstration, the drill sergeants timed each of the four platoons as they made their way through the obstacle course.

The obstacle course is designed to challenge the Soldiers physically while incorporating movement techniques an infantryman needs to know, said Capt. Jeremy Fisk, A Co. commander.

With only six days of training, most of the Soldiers don't have much in common and haven't had a chance to work together. Fisk said that's why the obstacle course is so important.

"Initially, we want to build teamwork and cohesiveness in the platoons by having the Soldiers work together to finish the task," Fisk said.

Many of the Soldiers said the obstacle course was just the medicine they needed.

"It's great to get out here and get muddy," said Pvt. Brian Manders. "That's what being infantry is all about."

Balough said he saw the importance of teamwork in the contrast of running the course as a civilian and a Soldier.

He ran the course several years ago as an ROTC cadet at Hardaway High School. That was before the obstacles were painted red white and blue, he said.

Balough said it takes a lot more effort to work together with the Soldiers than it did with his high school buddies because none of the Soldiers really knew each other.

"In high school, you already have a bond with your teammates," he said. "But here, you have people from all over. You don't know who they are or how they are going to act.

"This is where we come together," Balough said.

"It was breathtaking to see 55 men who don't really know each other working as a team to accomplish the mission," Balough said.

Staff Sgt. Sidi London, a 3rd Platoon drill sergeant, said he couldn't be prouder of his troops, who finished the course with a two-minute lead on the other three platoons, even though they could use some work.

"For the condition they are in, I am very impressed," London said. "They worked as a team to get each other through the course and accomplished the mission."

One of the reasons the Soldiers performed so well may have something to do with America's present situation.

"It says something about them that they volunteered while the Army is engaged in combat operations, and they should be commended for that," Fisk said. "We continue to get high quality troops while our country is at war," he said.

Soldiers of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, set up the tactical operations center in the early morning hours of Jan. 20. The TOC is equipped with the technology to know exactly where the unit's elements are at any given time.

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — The 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, rolled out of the Dust Bowl Jan. 16 and entered the vast desert terrain of the National Training Center to face the opposing force.

"The mission is to defend, and we have the arsenal to get the job done," said Command Sgt. Maj. Jessie L. Andrews, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt. command sergeant major.

"Our defense includes M-1 Abrams tanks, humvees, along with the addition of infantry fighting vehicles," Andrews said.

"Because we are task force organized, we gave up a tank company to 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, and in return, we got a company equipped with Bradley Fighting Vehicles."

To track battles, the battalion uses a sophisticated tactical operations center.

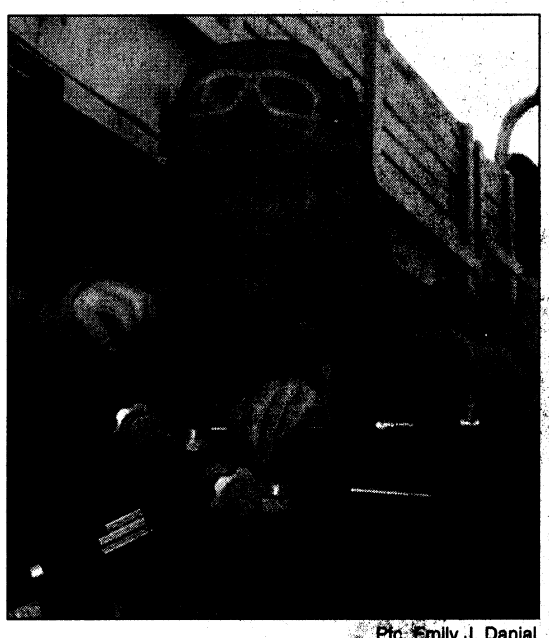
"The TOC is equipped with the technology to know exactly where all of our elements are at any given time, and through intelligence sources, we keep track of where the enemy is as well," Andrews said.

With the help of observer controllers, who conduct after action reviews, the battalion can determine what happened during the fight, why it happened, and how they can improve or sustain.

"The OCs are here to make sure we follow military doctrine and inform us of what works well and what doesn't, according to information that leaders have compiled over the years of training and war," Andrews said. "This feedback will prepare us for future operations."

"The goal is to get better every day and much better by the end of the rotation," said Sgt. Maj. Gregory A. Proft, senior NCO trainer at NTC.

"What you do here in this training arena is what you will do in a real-world mission," said Lt. Col. Jeffrey R. Sanderson, the 2nd Bn. commander.



"To prepare for the rotation, we had our companies go out and perform jousting techniques," Andrews said.

"This involved tank platoons advancing toward each other until positive identification was made, and the quickest and most accurate element won," he said..

"Due to the fact our Soldiers did just come back from combat operations, they still have a keen sense of situational awareness," Andrews said.

Spc. Jenny Corvin, 317th Engineer Battalion senior medic, checks a traction splint to ensure it is ready to use.

When Spc. Jenny Corvin doesn't have to do her job, chances are it's been a good day for the 317th Engineer Battalion. Corvin, the battalion's senior medic, is a trauma specialist who treats battlefield injuries.

"When I do my job for real, that means someone got hurt — a vehicle rolled over or someone wasn't paying attention and really got injured," she said. Since the unit deployed to the National Training Center, Corvin hasn't had much to do.

"The only thing I've seen out here, aside from training, is a broken toe, cuts, scrapes, bumped heads. That's about it so far," she said.

During the battalion's first two weeks in NTC's maneuver training area, "the box," Corvin's job included treating simulated injuries.

"We set up with the Ambulant Exchange Point so we see a lot of … people (killed in action) or injured," she said. "They get brought back to us. We help the injured if we can ... and ship them back farther. My job is to decide ... who stays back or goes back to work."

Corvin said she's happy with the way things have gone with the battalion's time in training.

"Everybody's got their heads on straight," Corvin said. "I haven't had to do anything, so it means we're doing pretty good."

When she's not bandaging wounds on the front lines, Corvin finds ways to make her time in the field productive.

"I just walk around and make sure the Soldiers are OK, like if they're out on the line with concertina wire on the perimeter," she said. "I make sure they're changing their socks and taking care of the little cuts and scrapes."

Corvin said she values the opportunities she has to get to know her fellow Soldiers.

"You get so close to them, you know, people in your unit," she said. "Back in the rear, you go to work, you come home, that's it. You don't really socialize, but when you're out here … you have no choice as to whether you really get to know them They help you out, you help them out; it kind of works both ways."

Fort Benning troops fight first battle at NTC

Sgt. Raymond Piper
3rd Infantry Division PAO

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — In their first battle in the National Training Area's training area, known as "the box," B Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, Soldiers fought hard through the night and into the morning to defend Bicycle Gap.

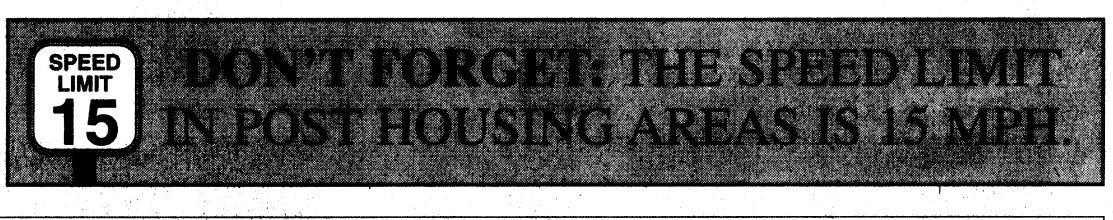
"Our job was to build up our defensive positions and position dismounted troops and Bradleys," said Staff Sgt. Jamie Carter, Headquarters Platoon sergeant, B Co.

Around 11:45 p.m., enemy vehicles approached the company's defensive line. The first vehicles to breach 3rd Platoon's sector were two BMPs followed by a T-80 tank. The opposing force uses visually modified American vehicles to simulate enemy vehicles.

"We tried to take them out at 300 meters but had an equipment malfunction," said Sgt. Michael Cugino, B Co.'s 3rd Platoon, A team leader. "Once we restarted, the T-80 was right on top of us. It was a race to see who would fire first."

Cugino and his team did fire first and went on to destroy two more BMPs.

"The OPFOR is excellent out here. This is my fifth rotation, and you always come back with something new," Carter said. "It's definitely a good learning experience."



Intelligence indicated that if the lead element of the OPFOR was destroyed, they would move toward 3rd Brigade's main defensive line. B Co. met the objective, taking out the lead element, but the OPFOR kept coming. Outnumbered three to one, the company was eventually overrun.

"For our guys, it shows what a real deliberate defense is like," Cugino said. "There were no 12-hour battles in Iraq, so it gets these guys to see how a real enemy operates."

That fight, Carter said, "gives first-hand experience that a battle can start at night and go on until the wee hours of the morning."

Although this was the first NTC rotation, many of the newer B Company Soldiers had been to Iraq for Operation Iraqi Freedom.

"My team did great. A lot of them haven't done this before," Cugino said. "Other than the war, this is the first one-month training exercise they have been on."

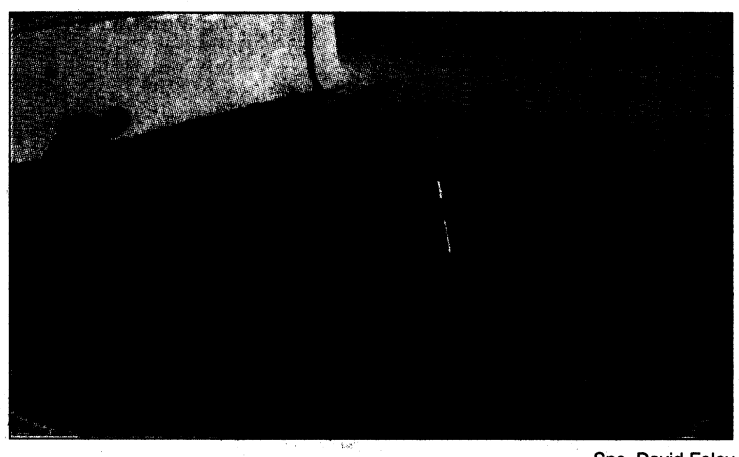
Post skatepark construction underway

Skaters to find home on Benning

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning skateboarders and in-line skators who are enrolled in Child and Youth Services will have something to spin their wheels over in the coming months as a result of several youth town-hall meetings.

One of the most prominent requests in each of the CYS town-hall meetings was for a skatepark.



After hearing the requests, Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation officials started meeting with post officials to make the skatepark a reality.

Now the project is underway. The pool behind the CYS center has been drained, concrete is being poured and ramps are being installed.

Cliff Hughes, Recreational Program manager, said the pool location was chosen for several reasons.

It was in a state of disrepair, usage was down and it was in a location that could easily be converted into a skatepark monitored by CYS employees.

DMWR officials say they are happy with the progress being made.

Spc. David Foley

Construction workers with Wynn Builders fill in the deep end of the YS pool to accommodate the skatepark.

"It's showing that we are trying to give kids something to do with adult supervision ... but also it shows that we are listening to the children, and we are here for them," said Linda Lane, director of Youth Services.

Lane said giving the children what they want is important, but safety is the number one issue.

DMWR is still hashing out the details of safety guidelines, but they have already determined that all skaters will be required to wear protective gear, such as helmets and knee pads, and a staff member will supervise the park during hours of operation.

Hughes said safety was also a major concern when picking out the building materials.

Hughes went to several other skateparks, including one in Columbus and one at Fort Stewart, to see what supplies were used and how they were holding up before ordering anything.

"We didn't want to buy anything that wouldn't function correctly, but at the same time, we want something that will be accepted by the skating community," Hughes said.

Some of the skateparks Hughes looked at were constructed of plywood, and they had splinters and nails sticking out of them.

"Some of them just looked dangerous," he said.

However, while conducting research, he discovered a company called Skatewave that builds ramps out of a synthetic

Dance partners needed

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Elderly men and women seek dance partners of any skill level for company, good time at retirement community Valentine's Day event.

When's the last time you enjoyed a night of good, old-fashioned dancing? For the residents of the Covenant Woods Retirement Community, it's been a while.

But these men and women are looking forward to a chance to break out their dancing shoes and boogie down at a special Valentine's Day dance at the home Feb. 13.

Just one problem — they don't have enough dance partners to go around. The community is mostly women, said Covenant's activities director, Tracy Fox, women who would love the chance to dance the night away with a spiffy, young Soldier.

"We'd love to have any Soldiers — singles or couples — come out to dance with the women and men," Fox said, adding that there's no need to worry about having two left feet. "They won't be out doing the electric slide or anything, but it would be nice for the Soldiers to come out and slow dance or maybe even twirl them around a little bit."

A good chunk of the community's residents enjoy some tie to the military, whether through their own service or through a spouse's, Fox said, so they hold a special place in their hearts for Soldiers and their families.

Despite the dreary reputation given retirement communities, Fox said Covenant is a happening place where the residents are "lively" and enjoy wine and cheese Fridays, Superbowl parties, regular shopping trips and the like.

A TASTE OF HOME

Brownies support Soldiers in Iraq

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It wasn't that long ago that about 4,000 of Fort Benning's Soldiers were halfway around the world, baking in the hot, desert sun, fighting sandstorms, missing their loved ones and anxiously waiting for the day they boarded a homebound plane. Their only comfort — a touch of home from the States every now and then.

Now that they're home, thousands of Soldiers from other posts have gone to take their place and help continue what they started, and the little girls of Fort Benning's Girl Scout Brownie troop have made it their mission to provide those small comforts to these deployed Soldiers.

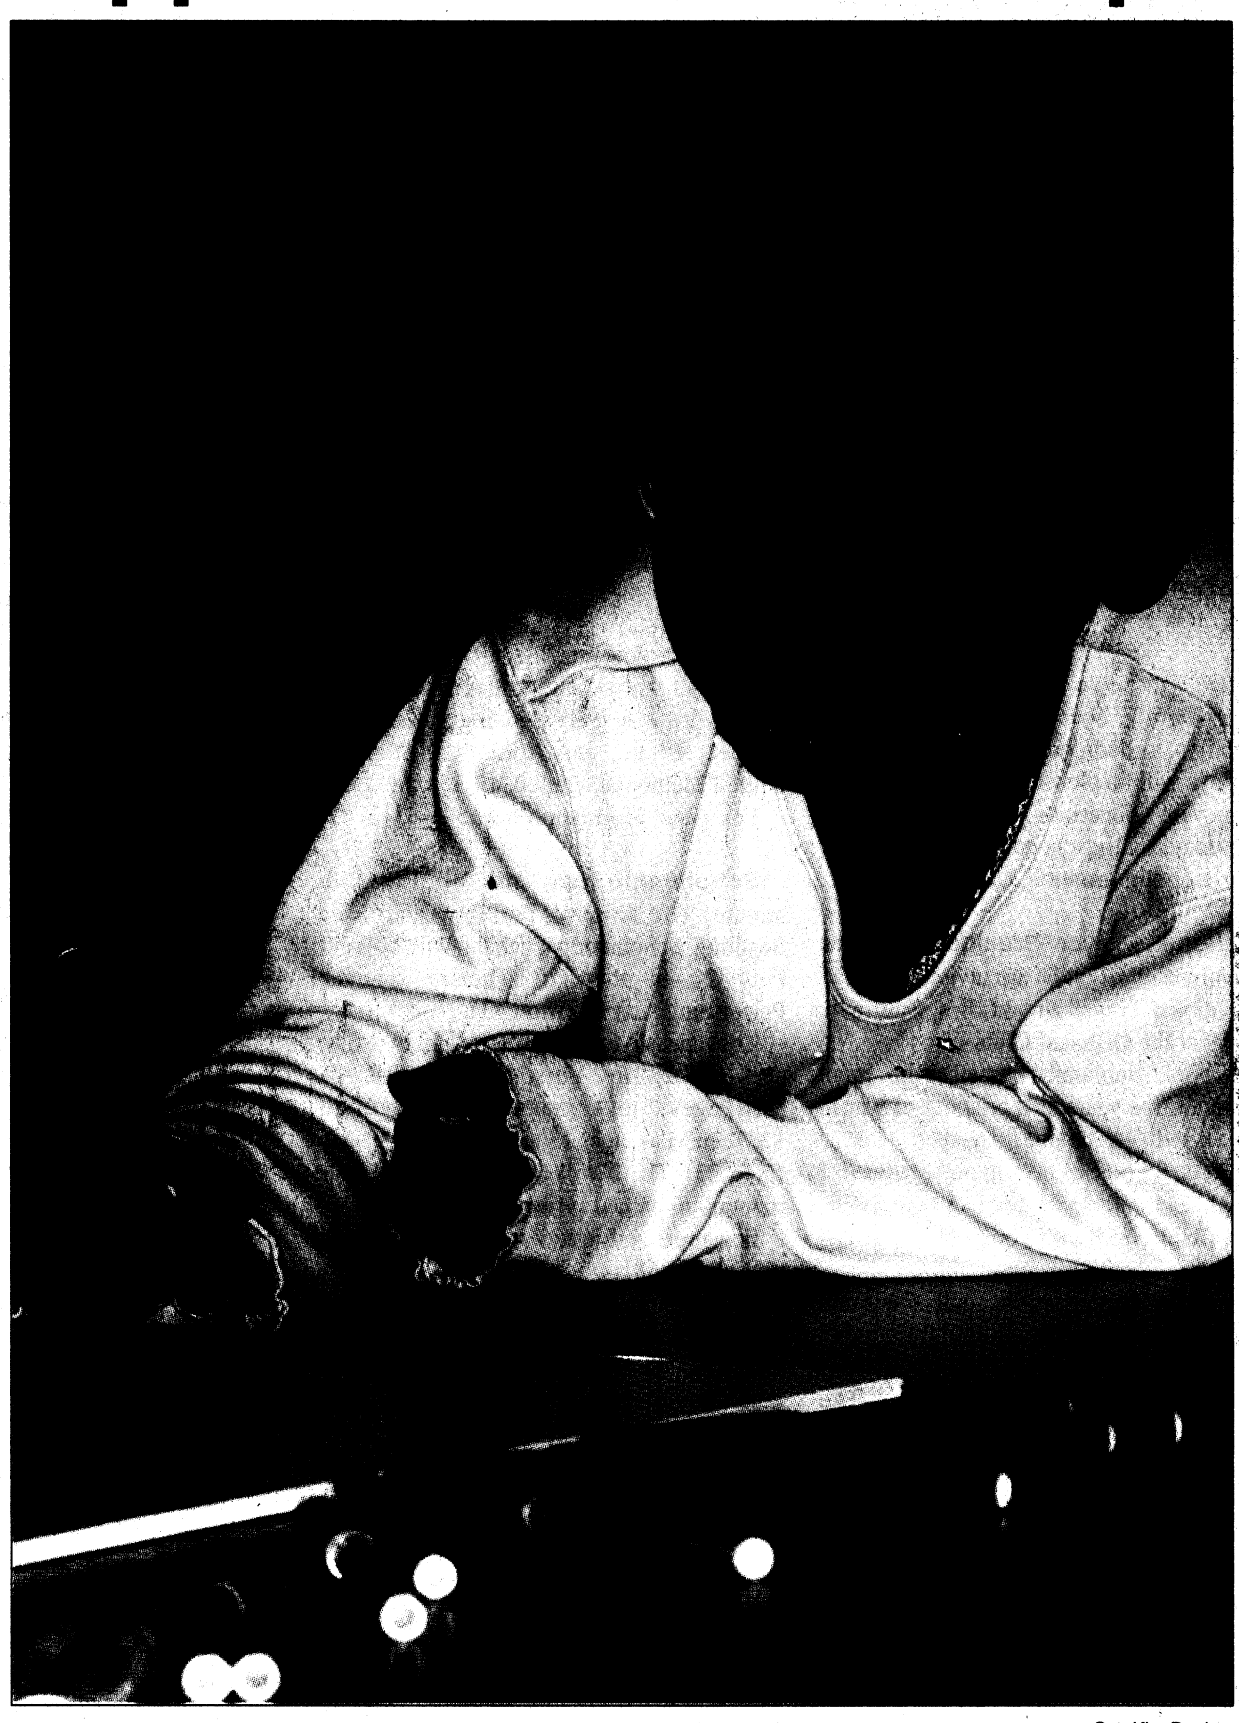
The girls kicked off Operation Cookies Care this afternoon, setting up shop at the Main Post Exchange. There, members of the tricommunity can "adopt" a box of Girl Scout cookies to send to Soldiers in Iraq, said Jennifer Workman, troop leader.

"We're asking for donations to buy cookies and send as many boxes as possible to Iraq," she said.

The Brownies, many of whom have just recently welcomed their mothers and fathers home from Operation Iraqi Freedom, wanted to send cookies to the Soldiers for their community service project, Workman said.

"But if we only sent a few boxes, they would only get to a few Soldiers," she said. "I figured if we're going to do this, why not make it as large as possible?"

Of course, her troop agreed. And while they do something good for the Soldiers overseas, the project will provide them something valuable, too.



"This helps them understand that just because those Soldiers aren't on television every day like they were last summer, they're still over there — things are still happening there," Workman said.

"We need to show the Soldiers that they're still loved, that they're still in our hearts and minds," she said.

Although many of the Brownies don't fully understand what the Soldiers are doing there, they still want to do their part.

"It's important for children to love their

Big-name hip hop group headlines at post school

Bridgett Siter

Members of the hip hop group Nappy Roots mingled with the students at Faith Middle School during the Read to Achieve pep rally Jan. 29.

Ready to Achieve program brings NBA to Faith

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

Nappy Roots? Sounds like a personal problem, like split ends or brittle nails.

But no, ask the students at Faith Middle School — Nappy Roots is a good thing. With a couple of hit songs and a video featuring U.S. Soldiers in Iraq, the six-man group from Kentucky is fast becoming one of the most recognizable names in hip hop.

"You never heard of them? They're great, man, everybody's heard of them. Their music is inspirational," said Jarrick Stockton, a Faith Middle School sixth-grader. "My sister's not here today. She's gonna be so mad she missed this."

This was the group's visit to the middle school Jan. 29, part of the Read to Achieve initiative, sponsored by the National Basketball Developmental League and the NBA, which partners athletes and entertainers in visits to schools around the country to promote literacy.

The story of how they came to visit Faith last week is a bit muddy. Apparently, the manager of the Columbus Riverdragons was so impressed when Faith's PTO purchased game tickets for the entire student body, he arranged the visit, which included the filming of Read to Achieve public service announcements that will be aired nationwide.

Faith's more than 600 students appeared duly impressed when NBA legends Artis Gilmore, Spencer Haywood, Charlie Scott and Dan Roundfield took the stage, each encouraging the students to make education their number one priority.

Scott, who played with the Boston Celtics, said it was reading, not basketball, that showed him the way out of Harlem, where he was the valedictorian of his senior class.

"I had an eighth-grade teacher who made us read 60 books a year to pass," Scott said. "I give her all the credit for instilling in me an understanding of the importance of reading and learning. She opened my eyes.

"Reading became a great part of my

The trip is open to all Soldiers and DoD civilians. In addition to Tuskegee University, the George Washington Carver Museum, Booker T. Washington's home, the Multi-Cultural Center and the Tuskegee Airmen's Moton Airfield will be visited.

If interested, see your unit's EO advisor. Registration cut-off date is Feb. 23.

For more information, contact your EOA or the post Equal Opportunity Office at 545-6665.

Free trees — Ten free American redbud trees will be given to each person who joins The National Arbor Day Foundation during February.

Redbuds have clusters of rosy pink flowers in the spring and dark green summer leaves turning to yellow in the fall.

The trees will be shipped postpaid at the right time for planting between March 1 and May 31 with enclosed planting instructions. The six- to 12-inch trees are guaranteed to grow or they will be replaced free of charge.

To become a member of the Foundation and receive the free trees, send a $10 contribution to Ten Free Redbud Trees, National Arbor Day Foundation, 100 Arbor Avenue, Nebraska City, NE 68410 by Feb. 29.

dads and moms who left to go to Iraq," said Emily Workman, a third-grader in the troop. "We're donating cookies to Iraq so they'll know they're from their children or another Girl Scout."

"It makes people happy to have some sweets, and they'll know people still care about them," said third-grader Mariah Jones.

The Brownies will be manning their cookies sales booth at the Main Mall Post Exchange from 4 to 8 p.m. today and Monday through Feb. 13. The booth will also be open from 9 am. to 7 p.m. Saturday and 9 a.m. to noon Sunday.

For more information, or to adopt a box of Girl Scout cookies for a troop overseas, call Workman at 689-9194 or e-mail her at operationcookies care@yahoo.com.

Dance: Partners needed for elderly

"This is a really fun, warm environment," Fox said, and one where a Soldier would be much appreciated.

"The families (of many of the residents) may not get to go visit them that often, and all they want is someone to visit," said Spc. Matthew Gobble, president of Fort Benning's Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers, who has participated in events at retirement communities before.

"It's a good way of paying back the elder community for paving the way for our generation," he said.

The dance will be at 6:30 p.m. Feb. 13 at the Covenant Woods Retirement Community at 5424 Woodruff Farm Road. Fox said anyone is welcome to come out and encouraged Soldiers to come in uniform.

For more information, call Fox at 561-1401.

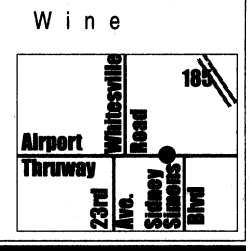
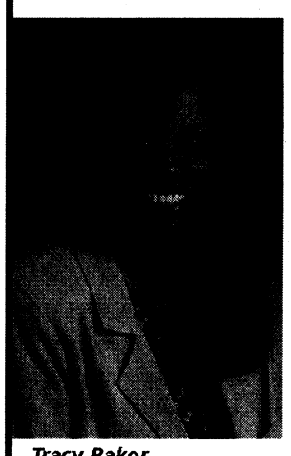
Skatepark: Construction underway material which holds up much better than wood.

Hughes said the ramps that Skatewave makes don't have any sharp edges or other hazards in the design that could be dangerous, which makes them perfect for the CYS project. DMWR officials measured the pool at CYS and sent the dimensions to Skatewave to have plans drawn up.



Skatewave used input from the local skaters and designed a series of ramps, benches and boxes that would fit into the pool and surrounding area. They are also sending a team to Fort Benning to assemble the ramps and obstacles to ensure the park meets operational and safety standards.

Construction is expected to be complete near the end of March, and a grand opening ceremony is planned for April, Lane said.



Once the skatepark is completed, DMWR will begin planning on a BMX bicycle track, which was also requested.

As part of National Children's Dental Health Month activities, Capt.Mark Vagnetti, resident at Love Dental Clinic, conducts a dental screening on Charles Frederich, an eighth-grader at Faith Middle School, Wednesday. DENTAC provided dental screenings to students at all post schools.

life. It gave me opportunities to go places and see things I could never see in Harlem."

Scott challenged the Faith students to take advantage of the time they spend in school.

"It takes the same kind of discipline to succeed in school as it does to succeed in sports," he said. "You're going to be here till three o'clock every day, anyway. You might as well give it all you've got."

Haywood, a former Laker, spent 14 years with the NBA and, at 18, was the youngest player ever to win the gold in the 1968 Olympics. The two-time author recalled spending hours and hours with a tutor after school trying to learn to read and write.

"I worked hard, and I won that battle," said Haywood, who recently visited U.S. troops in Kuwait.

"As Americans, we're going to win the battle for education. Our future is in great hands, because you are it," he told the students.

Faith students responded enthusiastically to the athletes' message, but it was Nappy Roots that got them on their feet with a sing-along version of their hit Po Folks.

"We're here to stress to these young people how important it is to read," said band member Scales, who majored in sociology at Western Kentucky University, where he met his band mates in 1996.

"You gotta work hard in school and in life," Scales told his audience. "We signed a record deal in 1998, but you just heard of us in 2002. We sacrificed a lot of time and made no music and no money.

"Don't think you're gonna be a star overnight," he said. "Get a good education. Go to college."

Nappy Roots and the former NBA stars made a day of it at Fort Benning. The group performed during the Riverdragons game at the Audie Murphie Gym Thursday evening.

Children's Dental Health Month brings smiles

U.S. Army Dental Activity and the American Dental Association

National Children's Dental Health Month began as a one-day event in Cleveland Feb. 3, 1941. During that year, Feb. 3-7 was designated as Children's Dental Health Week in Akron, Ohio.

The American Dental Association held the first national observance on Feb. 8, 1949. The single-day observance became a weeklong event in 1955. And in 1981, the program was extended to a monthlong celebration known today as National Children's Dental Health Month.

NCDHM messages reach millions of people in communities across the country and at numerous armed service bases. Local observances often include poster, coloring and essay contests, health fairs, free dental screenings, museum exhibits and classroom presentations.

The theme for this year's campaign is "A Healthy Smile is Always in Style!" The American Dental Association produces a program planning kit for its state and local dental societies, dental alliances and armed forces dental clinics to assist them in local health campaign efforts.

The ADA distributes press kits and public service announcements for television and radio to educate the public and enhance promotional efforts. Additional information appears on the ADA's Web site, www.ada.org.

Attitudes and habits established at an early age are critical in maintaining good oral health throughout life. By participating in the annual celebration of National Children's Dental Health Month, the dental team, parents, teachers and others can help keep children's smiles beautiful now and for years to come.

In observance of NCDHM, the ADA urges parents to be aware of what to do in dental emergencies.

Would you know what to do if your child broke a tooth or had a tooth knocked out while playing outdoors? What if you had a bad toothache in the middle of the night and couldn't get to the dentist until the next day? Thousands of dental emergencies — from injuries to a painful, abscessed tooth — take place every day. Knowing what to do can lessen the pain and save a tooth that might otherwise be lost.

Your dentist's office number and an emergency number where the dentist can be reached after hours should be handy, along with other emergency numbers, such as your family doctor and fire and police departments. Some families post these numbers on the refrigerator or inside a kitchen cabinet door near the phone. Always call the dentist immediately for instructions on how to handle a dental emergency.

Toothache — Rinse the mouth with warm water to clean it out. Gently use dental floss or an interdental cleaner to remove any food or other debris that may be caught between the teeth.

Never put aspirin or any other painkiller against the gums near the aching tooth. This could burn gum tissue. If the toothache persists, try to see the dentist. Don't rely on painkillers. They may temporarily relieve the pain but the condition, whether it is an infection, cracked tooth or other problem, should be evaluated by your dentist.

Knocked-out (avulsed) tooth — Try to find the tooth! This may not be as easy as you think if the injury took place on a playground, basketball court or while skateboarding so try to stay calm. Hold the tooth by the crown and rinse the root in water if the tooth is dirty. Don't scrub it or remove any attached tissue fragments. If it's possible, gently insert and hold the tooth in the socket while you head to the dentist. If that's not possible, put the tooth in a cup of milk and bring it to the dentist. Time is critical for successful reimplantation.

Broken tooth — Rinse your mouth with warm water to clean the area. Use cold compresses on the outside of the cheek to help reduce the swelling.

Tongue or lip bites or wounds — Clean the area gently with a clean cloth and apply cold compresses to reduce any swelling.

If the bleeding can't be controlled, go to a hospital emergency room or clinic. You may be able to reduce bleeding from the tongue by pulling it forward and using gauze to put pressure on the wound.

Objects caught between teeth — Try to gently remove the object with dental floss. Never use a sharp instrument to remove any object that is stuck between your teeth. If you can't dislodge the object with floss, contact your dentist.

Possible broken jaw — Apply cold compresses to control swelling. Get to the hospital emergency room immediately.

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Wilson fifth-grader Joshua LeMaster gets to know his new mentor, Sgt. 1st Class Lee Obie.

'AN HOUR WELL-INVESTED'

BCTB Soldiers mentor kids

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Role models are everywhere — sports heroes, MTV idols, movie stars. But the way Chaplain (Maj.) José Resto sees it, they aren't all good role models.

Resto and 11 fellow Soldiers from the Basic Combat Training Brigade have made it their mission to provide a dozen students at Wilson Elementary School with a positive influence.

In the wake of National Mentoring Month in January, the Soldiers, part of the Partners in Education Mentor Program, met the students, parents and teachers they will work hand-in-hand with during the next few months Tuesday morning.

The mentor program, which began at Wilson last semester, targets students who struggle academically or socially, said Wilson third-grade teacher Gerri Beer said. Time spent with their mentors should improve the students' self-esteem and enrich their lives.

But as life goes in a military community, some of the students and mentors moved recently. Tuesday morning's meeting gave new participants in the program a chance to sit down together and get acquainted.

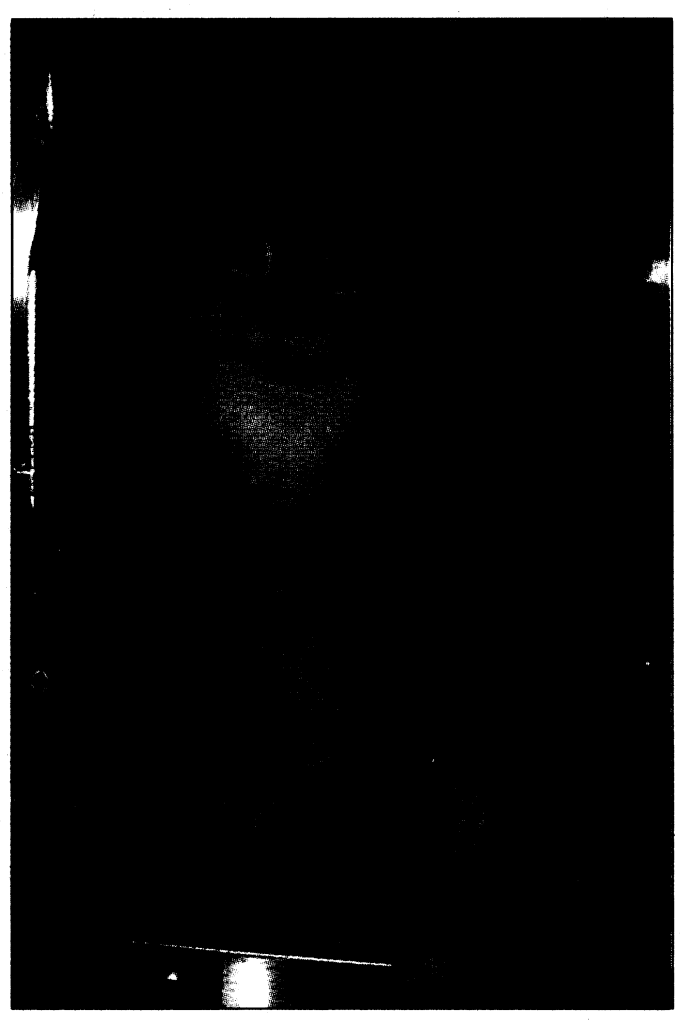
Each mentor will spend an hour each week with his or her student, tutoring, playing basketball or just visiting.

"Children want adults to take the time to be a part of their lives," Beer said. "For someone to take the time to come and just sit and talk with them can have a tremendous impact on their lives."

And that's exactly what Resto plans to do. As the BCTB's chaplain, he's used to working with teen-agers, but he's hoping to have the same impact with his student, a third-grader.

"I'm still a believer that if you can just reach one and help one, that one can save others," he said. "You never know how deep your influence can be on a person."

Resto plans to make each weekly session "different and dynamic" to keep his student from growing bored and losing focus. Throughout the semester, his sessions can include in-class visits, lunch visits, one-on-one tutoring sessions, technology projects or other activities agreed on by the student, parents and teacher.



Of course, Resto doesn't expect to do all the work.

"I'm looking forward to teaching the student, but he will teach me, too," he said. "Kids today are smart — they know little things that help us understand the world better."

With such a rewarding program, it's hard to imagine anything but positive results.

"This is one of the most worthy programs we have at Wilson," Beer said. "These could be the people to make a difference in these children's lives forever. It's an hour well-invested."

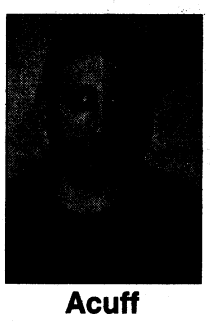
Real love means 'love beyond desire'

Chaplain (Maj.) David W. Acuff
11th Infantry Regiment

This is the use of memory:
For liberation — not less love but expanding of love beyond desire, and so liberation from the future as well as the past.
T.S. Eliot, Four Quartets



In the spring of 1975 we strolled hand in hand through green gardens where new daffodils reflected golden sunlight back to their maker. There in Sewanee, on Monteagle Mountain, the most beautiful place in the world, I was in love for the first time.

I was a junior, and she was a sophomore, and time stopped. It caught us there, hand in hand, eye to eye, and in but one instant, showed us what life ought to be. The brokenness had been healed. The empty places were filled. We were complete. A lifetime burned in that moment. Time had stopped, and we knew that moment would last forever. But soon the clock began to tick again.

Valentine's Day is celebrated next week. For some — for those in that moment where love stops time — the celebration is fitting. Others are more cynical, agreeing with Bob Dylan that "love is just a four-letter word." And still others, perhaps the largest group, will rush into the PX at the last moment, Valentine's Day an addition to an already lengthy list of taskings.

On Valentine's Day, it is perhaps appropriate to ask just what this thing called love is.

REFLECTIONS

Acuff

One thing is certain: fiery love does not last. Indeed it cannot, being built as it is on a fantasy, the fantasy of the beloved as The Perfect One. Soon enough, reality bites. Flaws appear. For many, that is the time to be moving on. New loves are found and new passions ignite ... for a while.

The Christian view of love is tightly bound to the notion of sacrifice. Such a notion is not entirely romantic. It may involve doing something for your spouse or kids when you are tired and would rather chill, something as mundane as doing the dishes or running an errand.

Needless to say, such is not the stuff of blockbuster romances, but it is the beginning of what T.S. Eliot tells us is the "love beyond desire."

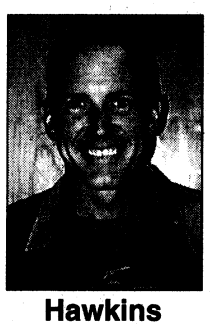
They also meet the third Monday of each month at 7 p.m. for Bible study. Child care is provided at both meetings.

For more information, call Theresa McCrackine at 687-0894.

Your heart is where treasure is



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

Last week I mentioned that this time of year can feel a bit like being pinched in a financial vise-grip. Are your credit card monthly minimum payments higher than your GT score? Has Master Card inducted you into its Hall of Fame? If so, there's still hope! But to get something different, remember, you've got to do something different.

• Realize that God owns it all!

If you are a believer, then stepping stone number one has an immediate implication: I'm not the owner of my "stuff". I'm simply a steward, or caretaker of the stuff God gives me. God has the rights. I simply have responsibilities.

It's a lot like my 17 year old. She drives a car. In one sense you could say she "has" it. However, I'm the owner. She understands that I gave it to her, and if I choose to, I could take it back for any reason. You see, as the owner, I have the rights. As the caretaker, she has the responsibilities.

Hawkins

• In the laboratory of life, we're in a growth experiment!

Did you know that spiritually God uses money for three purposes? Money and material possessions can be used as a tool, a test or a testimony. He can get our attention with it and use it as a tool to develop us, can't he? He can also use it as a test of what is most important to us ... as the Bible says, "where your treasure is, well, that's where your heart is, too!"

And lastly, he can use it to show what a difference having peace of mind and financial freedom can make as a witness (a testimony) to those around you. "Wow, look at those folks — what's different about the way they manage their money and handle their 'stuff'"?

• The amount isn't important!

It's not what you have, it's what you do with what you have that is important. Do you know why some people win the lottery and then blow it and why others with seemingly little live quite comfortably? Because it's not what you make that makes the difference — it's what you keep that makes the difference.

• Faith requires action.

Lots of us know what to do — we just don't do it, right? Financial freedom is like any other commitment. It requires that we not just talk-the-talk, but walk-the-walk!

If there's any way that our team of trained counselors at the Chaplain Family Life Center can help you, pick up the phone and give us a call at 545-1760.

The National Prayer Breakfast will be held at the Officers' Club Feb. 19 at 7:30 a.m. Guest speaker is retired Col. Benjamin Purcell, a former POW in Vietnam. Call 544-9496.

Columbus-Fort Benning Cruise-a-Matics rugger A.J. Cortes pulls away from a tackle attempt during the team's game against Atlanta's High Country Saturday.

Calling all ruggers

New players encouraged to take the field

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The Columbus-Fort Benning Rugby Football Club — better known as the Cruise-a-Matics — is looking for new players.

Soldier, civilian, male, female, experienced or brand-spanking new — it doesn't matter. Anyone with heart and the desire to learn is welcome on the field, said Geoff Wollin, club secretary.

Rugby is not a sport for the faint of heart. A fast-paced, hard-hitting game, rugby is known for its rough edges.

"Fitness is key in this game," Wollin said. "Your average NFL play is four to six seconds; your average rugby play is four and a half minutes."

A rugby match features almost continuous play in halves of 40 minutes and may end in a tie.

Players are either running or sprinting for the majority of the game, Wollin said.

"It's an aggressive sport — not one for the weak of mind or body," he said.

On top of that, when you're not running, you're on either the giving or receiving end of a tackle or joining with players to fight for possession of the ball.

In the widely played amateur Rugby Union, of which the Cruisers are a part, 15 players take the field with little more padding than a mouth guard and the occasional "scrum cap."

Any protective gear made with hard plastic is illegal on the field, Wollin said.

So why risk the cuts and bruises? For many ruggers, it's just too hard to resist.

"I love the warrior mentality," Wollin said. "When I take the field, it's war. There is no glory on your back, on the sidelines, nor in second place.

"But it's a good outlet, a good way to channel aggression in a positive way."

Besides that, there is a bond among rugby players. The team becomes a group of friends, people to socialize with, Wollin said.

With too many rules to number, it may take beginners a while to catch on to the gist of the game, but with a balanced mix of seasoned veterans and rookies, that's no problem, Wollin said. In fact, now's the perfect time for new players to venture out.

"We have a lot of new players right now," he said. "The season's opening practices have been focusing mainly on fundamentals.

"We're in a crawl stage," he said.

All you need to join the fun is "a hard head and pair of cleats," Wollin said. And an above average tolerance for pain.

The team practices from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays at the "Cruiser Dome," behind Dolly Madison Bakery on Victory Drive.

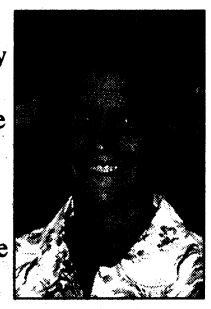
To get to the pitch from Interstate 185, take Exit 1-A onto Victory Drive. Drive until you come to 22nd Avenue and take a right (you should be at a stoplight and see Dolly Madison Bakery on your right side). Follow this road across the dirt road and straight through the gate.

Cruise-a-Matics forward Jeremy Bond reaches for the ball in a line-out during the team's game against High Country in Atlanta Saturday.

Cruiser Brian Duff passes off the ball to a teammate as he is tackled by a High Country rugger during the game in Atlanta Saturday.

Super Bowled

Melissa House
Bayonet staff



We thought one of my coworkers might be impossible to live with no matter what the outcome of the Super Bowl, so I got elected to write the dreaded sports commentary.

And what do I know about football? Nothing. I chose Kansas City to win the AFC Championship and Philadelphia to win the NFC, so I had no dogs in this particular fight.

As a matter of fact, I haven't cared about a Super Bowl since 1985 when my beloved Bears won.

Why the Bears? Well, I always tell people that my "formative years" were spent deep in Bear territory. In the middle of sixth grade, my dad was transferred from Fort Ord, Calif., to Fort Sheridan, Ill., then the home of the Army's Recruiting Command.

And though I was really only interested in swimming and soccer, I became a die-hard Bears, Bulls, Blackhawks and Cubs fan. Through many moves, I've kept my loyalty to my teams. I've stuck my neck out and gone with the Bears in my football picks. I've weathered the ridicule.

So this year, I wasn't even going to watch the game. Sure, I'd have the television on in the background, but I wasn't going to stake out a spot on the couch.

But then my neighbor invited us over. Her kids have been Patriots fans since birth, because their father is from Massachusetts. Her boys wanted to watch the game, and with dad at NTC, she wanted to get out of having to watch it with them.

Enter the House cavalry. My boys, who didn't even have a clue who the teams were, tromped in and parked themselves on the couch with their Nintendo Game Boys.

And there they all sat, watching the game, tracking each other's progress on the Mega Man game.

They caught all of the commercials, running in occasionally to comment on their favorites, like the gassy horse and ensuing fireball.

Then, most thankfully, they weren't at all interested in the halftime show.

I wasn't either. I walked into the kitchen to clip box tops for education, and saw Janet and Justin only moments before the debacle.

And now, I can't escape hearing about it.

Never mind that it was a nailbiter of a game. Never mind that the two teams ended up being so evenly matched that it looked as if they were headed for the first Super Bowl overtime in history.

I feel sorry for all the children who actually watched the halftime show. I feel sorry for the parents of those children, who may have had to field questions about what they saw.

But more than anything, I feel sorry for the Panthers and the Patriots. They played their best and gave us an exciting game, only to be eclipsed by music stars trying a new gimmick to promote their music.

Cool kids wear mouth guards, keep smiles looking sharp

Protect your teeth while playing sports

U.S. Army Dental Activity

Thousands of teens get hurt each year on the playing field, the basketball court, or while skateboarding, biking or during other activities.

Blows to the face in nearly every sport can injure your teeth, lips, cheeks and tongue.

A properly fitted mouth guard is an important piece of athletic gear that can protect your teeth and smile for many years.

You may have seen them used in contact sports, such as football, boxing, ice hockey, rugby, wrestling, lacrosse and women's field hockey.

You don't have to be on the football field, however, to benefit from the use of a mouth guard.

New findings in sports dentistry show that even in non-contact sports, such as gymnastics, mouth guards help protect teeth.

Many experts now recommend that a mouth guard be worn for any recreational activity that poses a risk of injury to the mouth.

Three types of mouth guards that can prevent damage to your smile are:

•Ready-made, or stock;

•Mouth-formed 'boil-and-bite'; and

•Custom-made mouth guard made by a dentist.

All three mouth guards provide protection, but vary in comfort and cost.

The most effective mouth guard should have several features.

It should be resilient, tear-resistant and comfortable.

It should fit properly, be durable and easy to clean, and not restrict your speech or breathing.

Generally, a mouth guard covers only the upper teeth but in some cases the dentist instead will make one for the lower teeth.

Your dentist can suggest the right mouth guard for you.

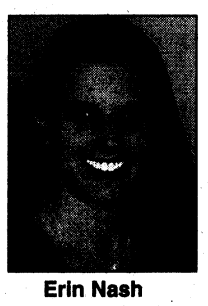
If you have a mouth guard, take good care it.

Before and after each use, rinse it with cold water or with an antiseptic mouth rinse.

You can clean it with toothpaste and a toothbrush, too. When it's not being used, place your mouth guard in a firm, perforated container.

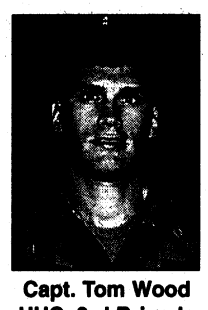
This permits air circulation and helps prevent damage.

Avoid high temperatures, such as hot water, hot surfaces or direct sunlight, which can distort the mouth guard.



Check it for tears, holes and to see whether it has become loose. A mouth guard that's torn or in bad shape can irritate your mouth and lessen the amount of protection it provides.

Have regular dental checkups and bring your mouth guard along so the dentist can make sure it's still in good condition.



Don't take your teeth for granted. Be cool. Wear a mouthguard. Protect your smile.

Soccer tournament — There will be a soccer tournament from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Feb. 21 at Doughboy Stadium. The tournament will feature teams from Lander University, Georgia Southern University, Emory University and the College of Charleston.

For more information, call 545-3582.

Aerobics instructor needed — Briant Wells Field House is looking for certified exercise instructors for a wide variety of classes.

For more information, call 545-4388.

All-Army Small Arms Championships sign-ups — The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the All-Army Small Arms Championships in conjunction with the U.S. Army Infantry Center March 14 to 25.

The last All-Army Championships were in 1994. Soldiers and units will compete with the M-16 rifle or M-4 carbine, M-9 pistol and M-24 or M-14 rifles against counterparts from the regular Army, Reserve, National Guard and Cadet Command.

The USAMU has a limited number of weapons available for Soldiers and cadets who do not have assigned weapons.

Soldiers who excel in the All-Army Championships may be selected to compete on the Army, Army Reserve or National Guard Rifle and Pistol Teams in the Interservice and National Championship competitions.

Winners of designated matches and classifications may be awarded Secretary of the Army Trophy rifles. Rifle matches will be shot at ranges from 200 to 500 yards. Pistol matches will be fired under combat time standards at seven to 25 yards. All firing will be done with helmet and individual combat gear (minus body armor and mask).

Long-range matches will be fired at ranges of 600 to 1,000 yards. Matches are open to all Soldiers and U.S. Military Academy and ROTC Cadets.

Squad-size teams will be from brigades, divisions, major commands, each individual state and territory and Army Reserve major subordinate commands. Participants are required to send a letter of intent to Michael J. Behnke, USAMU chief of competitions, at michael.behnke@usarec.army.mil or fax (706) 545-6252 by Jan. 30. For more information contact Behnke at (706) 545-7841 (the DSN is 835). (Formed in 1956 by President Dwight D. Eisenhower to raise the standards of marksmanship throughout the U.S. Army, the Army Marksmanship Unit is assigned to the Accessions Support Brigade, U.S. Army Accessions Command, of Fort Monroe, Va.

The Marksmanship Unit trains its Soldiers to win competitions and enhances combat readiness through train-the-trainer clinics, research and development.

For more information on the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, contact the Public Affairs Office at (706) 545-5436, paula.pagan@usarec.army.mil or http://www.usarec.army.mil/hq/amu/.)

Saturday Bike Rides — Saturday bike rides are in full gear.

Riders meet at 10 a.m. Saturdays at Briant Wells Field House and can choose from 10- 15- or 20-mile rides.

Additional miles can be added on demand. All you need is a bike, helmet, water and plenty of energy.

For more information, call 545-9987 or 545-4388.

off post

Softball signups — Post-level softball players are wanted to play in the downtown softball league.

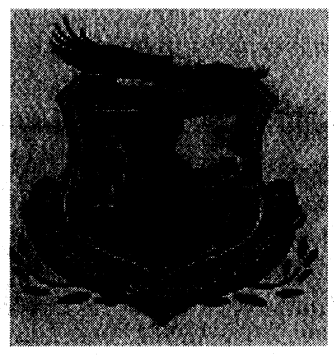
For more information, call Jimmy Armstrong at 566-2015 or Lamar Wagner at 563-6142.

Women's softball — The top 24 women's fastpitch softball teams will return to Columbus Feb. 27-29 to battle it out in the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Leadoff Classic at the South Commons Softball Complex.

The ceremony will be held at 11 a.m. Feb. 27 at Stadium Field at South Commons.

Games are scheduled to start at noon Feb. 27 with the last game scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Games begin at 10 a.m. Feb. 28 with the last game at 6:30 p.m. The games start at 9 a.m. Feb. 29 and the championship will be decided at the 1 p.m. game.

Ticket prices are $20 for an adult tournament pass, $12 for 12 and under tournament pass, $8 for adult day ticket, $5 for 12 and under daily ticket and $4 each for youth groups with 10 or more.



For more information, call the Columbus Sports Council at 660-1996.

Youth baseball — Coast to Coast athletics is recruiting youth baseball players (ages 11-12) to represent the U.S. in international competition in Puerto Rico.

Outstanding amateurs, selected from as many as 38 states nationwide, will compete against international all-star teams during the 2004 summer school breaks.

The Coast to Coast tour lasts seven days and is jam-packed with action, intensive training and cultural excursions.

Stabilization betters units

Enhances readiness, family well-being

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

While the primary goal of stabilizing Soldiers is to increase readiness for national security requirements, it also supports well-being for Soldiers and their family members, officials say.

Force Stabilization is one of the 16 focus areas Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker identified last fall that the Army will work to remain ready and relevant.

"We think by stabilizing the Army, where we don't move the Army every two to three years on an individual basis, but we keep people in place, develop cohesive, stable units, where spouses can work, where kids can go to school, where people can invest in homes and develop equity, stabilizes forces," Schoomaker told the House Armed Services Committee Jan. 28. "It's better for the fighting forces. It's better for the families. And, it will increase our retention."

> "(Stabilization is) better for the fighting forces. It's better for the families. And it will increase our retention."

To stabilize Soldiers and their families in the near term, the Army plans to implement two strategies — Home-basing and Unit Focused Stability, said Col. Paul Thornton who has been working the issue for 17 months as a member of the Unit Manning Task Force and chief of its successor, Task Force Stabilization.

Under Home-basing, all initial entry Soldiers — enlisted and officers — assigned to selected installations will remain on their initial duty-assignment installation

14th Field Hospital to change

Post unit to convert to improve support

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Today's Army has to be ready to move anywhere in the world at a moment's notice.

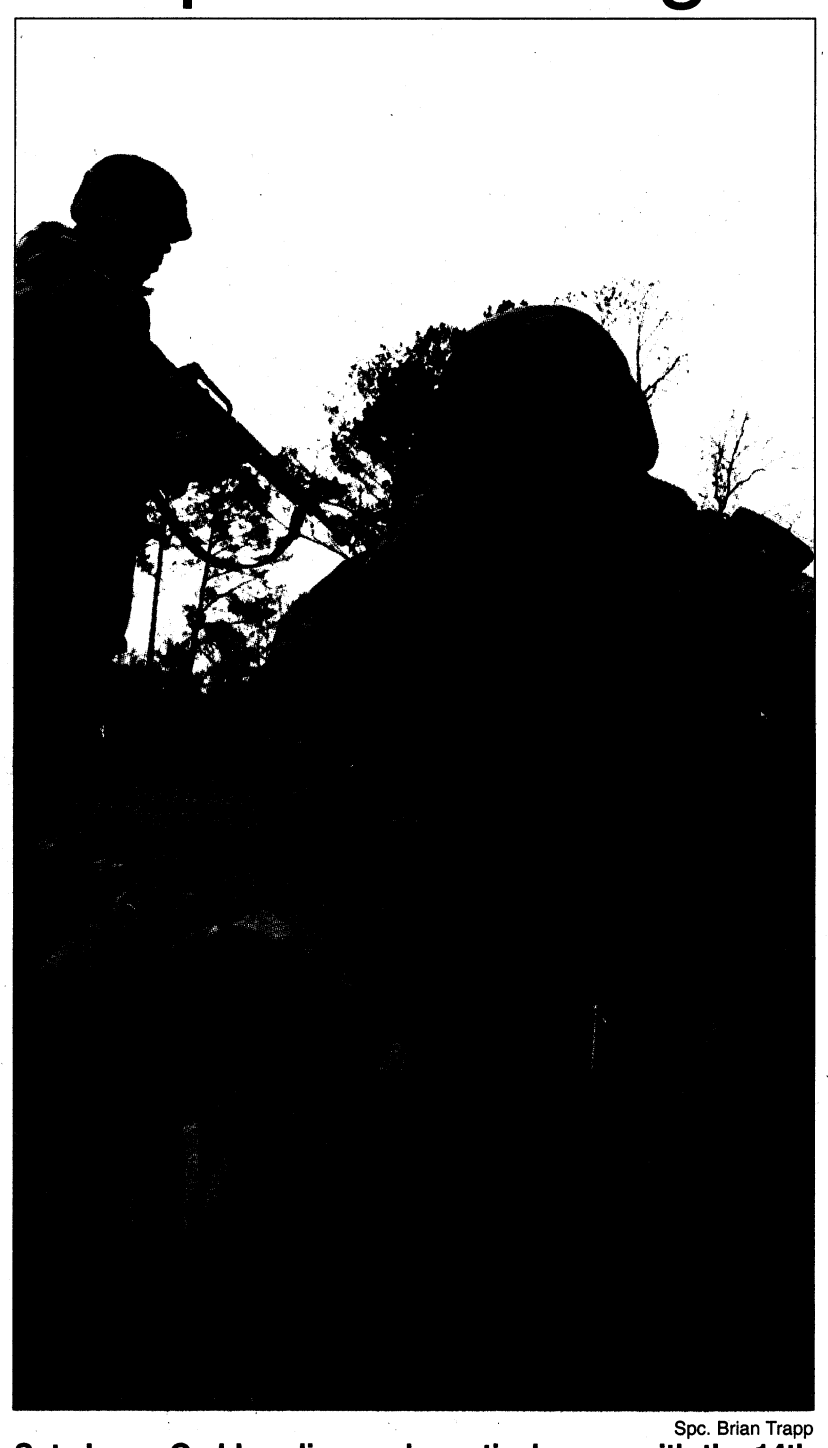
Toward that end, the 36th Engineer Group's 14th Field Hospital, like field hospitals Army-wide, is becoming a combat support hospital.

"The field hospital is a dinosaur," said 14th Field Hospital acting command sergeant major, 1st Sgt. Anthony Cook. "It is always in the back during battle, where units don't have easy access. Now, with this change, it's in the middle, where the front line units will have better access to it for their sick and injured Soldiers."

The field hospital is large and takes more than 12 C-5s (aircraft) to move it. The combat support hospital will require three to six C-5s and will better support to the warfighter, with its ability to handle up to 248 casualties.

"When the unit deploys, we won't have to take the whole facility with us," said Lt. Col. Glenn Iacovetta, 14th Field Hospital commander.

The new unit, which will begin receiving medical equipment April 1 and will be fully operational by October, will be broken down into a Headquarters and Headquarters Detachment, A and B companies and the 756th Minimal Care Detachment, which is comprised of various health-care specialists from military hospitals around the U.S.



The total strength of Soldiers in HHD, A Co., and B Co. will be around 240 personnel. The 756th Minimal Care Detachment will have nearly 200 personnel.

The change will make it possible for the hospital to perform more surgical operations.

"All the changes that are being made are for the better," Iacovetta said. "The quality of care will be better focused on the Soldiers."

The hospital, Iacovetta said, will not be a rehabilitation facility. If a Soldier can't recover within theater evacuation policy, he or she will be

Drunken driving victim to visit post

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It had been a bad day for Denise Wagoner. A bad year, for that matter. She walked out on her abusive boyfriend of three years for the third time the night before and now sat across the bar from him, watching as he cheated on her for more than an hour while she wore his engagement ring.

When she'd had enough, she drove to her mother's house to talk to her little brother — a close friend and confidant — but he was nowhere to be found. She ended up at another bar, where the bartender — a prior acquaintance who made it clear his intention was for her to stay the night with him — took her keys and made sure her glass stayed full.

Fed up with his continuous come-ons, Wagoner called a few family members for a ride, but no one came. So she took matters into her own hands and climbed behind the wheel of her car. Her blood alcohol content was 0.19. Fifteen minutes later, she came to a curve in the road. She didn't see the caution sign until she drove over it; it was the last thing she would ever see.

Wagoner's car rolled five times, throwing her 75 feet on the final roll. Her injuries were equivalent to a six-story fall — skull fractures, crunched vertebrae, crushed ribs, brain

Army fields weapon 'with teeth'

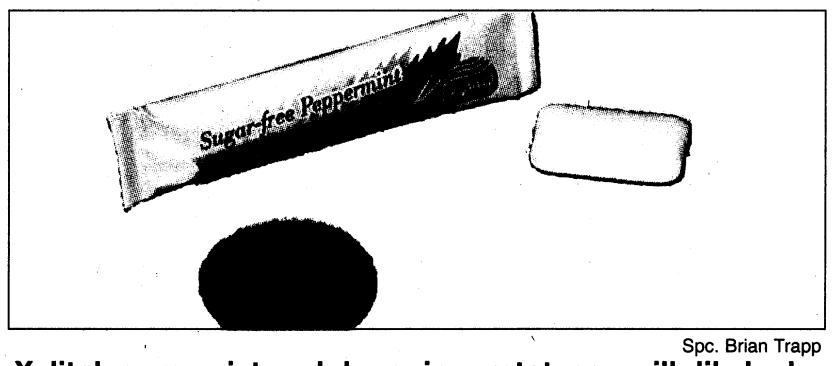
Xylitol replaces gum in MRE sundry pack

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

The Army will soon field a new weapon in the war on terror — the terror generally associated with a trip to the dentist.

A gum containing the sweetener xylitol, which is proven to prevent cavities, will replace the gum now being packed into Soldiers' MREs, though no one's saying just when the change will occur.

At the recommendation of the consultant to the surgeon general on nutrition, a joint services committee approved the use of xylitol gum Feb. 5, after extensive testing revealed a markedly higher number of dental cavities in Soldiers deployed overseas than those who remain in the states.



Col. Robert Lutka, commander of Fort Benning's U.S. Army Dental Activity, calls the news a victory for the infantry Soldier. As the chairman of a joint services committee devoted to the advancement of xylitol, Lutka has been singing the praises of the sugar substitute for years.

"Now, I think, we're all believers," he said last week.

Xylitol, which is considered a food additive, not a drug, is a naturally occurring sugar alcohol that kills the bacteria that cause cavities. Though it was endorsed by the National Institute of Health two years ago, military dentists have been prescribing it for more than 10 years.

Research shows that chewing gum with xylitol three times a day for 30 days increases cavity protection for as long as six months, even without regular brushing, Lutka said, and that has great Xylitol gum, pictured here in prototype, will likely be packaged in the MRE sundry pack as two quarter-size tablets in a plastic wrap.

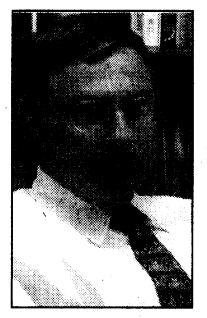
Iron Mike or the Infantryman?

Rich McDowell
USAIC Public Affairs Office

When you return to work from your long weekend something on post will be different. There will be no Infantryman perched on the pedestal in front of Infantry Hall.

This will be the second time he's taken a leave of absence since being dedicated in 1959. The last time was in 1989 when he went to Florida and returned with a nice new patina from the Florida sun. This time it's off to Colorado for a ski vacation and another rework.

But this is not about the Follow Me statue's face lift. It's about Iron Mike.



Whenever I hear the sobriquet "Iron Mike," I think of the airborne statue at Fort Bragg, not the Infantryman statue at Fort Benning.

Interestingly, there are several Iron Mike statues in the U.S. The Conservation Corps has two in California, there's an Iron Mike statue in Ashland, Ore., the Marine Base at Parris Island is home to an Iron Mike, and of course there's Iron Mike at Fort Bragg, N.C.

One thing they all have in common is that no one seems to know how they came to be called "Iron Mike." After all, this was long before Iron Mike Tyson rose and fell from glory.

When the Fort Bragg statue was dedicated, it was christened "The Airborne Statue."

The impetus for the statue was a May 1960 letter from out going 18th Airborne Corps Commander Lt. Gen. R.F. Sink, to the incoming corps commander Lt. Gen. T.J.H. Trapnell.

Sink writes: "Dear Trap: Possibly you know a few days ago that Fort Benning unveiled a statue to the 'Doughboy.' I didn't know they were doing this, and I think this thing was kept a secret from almost everybody. But previous to this I had dreamed up the idea of a statue to the parachute soldier.

"It took those people down there 11 months to build this thing. Their statue is of heroic proportion and is similar to the one that I hope you will be good enough to build here. We have a couple of sculptors here and I am sending them down to Fort Benning to observe the method they used in construction of their statue … ."

Having said all that, if anyone's statue deserves to be called Iron Mike, it probably is ours.

You see, we once had a commanding general named John Wilson O'Daniel. His nickname was "Iron Mike." The ebullient, 5-foot, 6-inch Soldier earned the nickname from his tough appearance and parade-ground voice.

As a colonel in the early days of World War II, O'Daniel commanded the 168th Regimental Combat Team of the 34th Infantry Division in the assault landing on Algiers.

Promptly promoted to brigadier general, he directed the amphibious training for the 5th Army's landings in Sicily and was assigned to the 3rd Infantry Division.

After taking part in the Sicily and Anzio landings, he succeeded Maj. Gen. Lucian K. Truscott as the division's commanding general.

He commanded the division through the rest of the war from the Anzio breakout, through Rome, the amphibious landings at St. Tropez, hit the Siegfried Line, crossed the Rhine and in fierce house to house fighting, cleared Nuremberg.

He was with the division around Salzburg and Berchtesgaden when the war ended.

He commanded the Infantry School from July 1945 to July 1948, led the 1st Corps in the Korean War and finished his Army career as chief of the U.S. Military advisory effort in Vietnam from 1954 to 1955

So although there is no connection between O'Daniel and the Follow Me statue, not to mention few here even heard of O'Daniel, at least Fort Benning had a real live Iron Mike at one time.

Still, I'll continue to cringe when I hear our statue referred to as "Iron Mike." For me, it will always be the Infantryman's statue or the Follow Me Statue and Iron Mike will be the statue whose theme was The Devil in Baggy Pants, and stands proudly near the Corps headquarters at Randolph Street and Armstead Avenue at Fort Bragg.

Take time to choose 'the man'

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Every vote counts!

I'm sure everybody has seen the flyers and posters and received the postcards in the mail urging the addressee to register to vote because "every vote counts!"

Since I turned 18, I've looked at the voting registration forms addressed to me and thrown them away. Why bother? It's just one vote, it won't make a difference — right?

They're all excuses that I've used and I'm sure many of you have too.

Well now I've seen the light. This time around, I'm going to make a difference. I'm going to make my vote count. You know why?

Every decision made by the president affects me — not only as a resident but also because I am a Soldier.

I'll admit that I was clueless about the whole voting situation. I grew up in a home where my parents believed they were going to lose no matter who won, so why bother.

For the record, I come from a family of Mexican immigrants who have now seen the light and are registered voters.

To make things easy for those of you who say you don't know how to vote, I have done the leg work for you. All you have to do now is read and execute.

Every unit has a voting assistance officer. If you need to register to vote, they will help you, step-by-step. If your schedule does not allow you to meet with your voting assistance officer, do what I did and take care of everything online.

To see a list of the primary candidates and find out what they stand for, check out www.aarp.org/legislative/elections/.

Once you figured out who you want to vote for, register to vote at www.yourvotematters.org or www.fvap.gov.

You don't need to know who you want to vote for to register, just remember to fill out and mail the registration form. This way, when you decide who "the man" should be, you can vote for them.

It's important, take the time to do it.

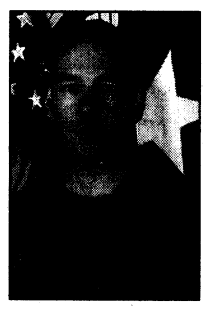
Life may be unfair but death isn't. A fatal accident is an "equal-opportunity" killer. It doesn't care whether you're behind the wheel of a Humvee or a Honda; it will take you wherever it can.

I know. I have seen death many times during my 33 years in and around the military. Back in 1974, I waved goodbye on a Friday afternoon to a couple of friends as they left to go canoeing in Washington state. Within 24 hours they were both dead — victims of alcohol and the "I-am-bulletproof" syndrome that led both of them to shun life jackets.

The year before, I saw a pretty young woman dying on the road next to her car. There was nothing I could do to help her. There's an old saying that goes, "Die young and leave a handsome corpse." But believe me, there is nothing attractive in watching someone die.

Early in 2002 I interviewed the widow of an Air Force sergeant who'd gotten on the road drunk and hit a concrete barrier at 79 mph. Unbelted, he'd gone into the windshield and was declared brain dead the following day. He had a lot of bravado in his attitude about life. As I interviewed his widow, I sat helplessly as she broke down in tears. They'd gotten married and bought a house barely two months before he died. When he ignored years of warnings against drinking and driving, he never thought about what it would do to the person who loved him most.

The problem with accidental death is that there's no 20-20 hindsight for those involved. There's no going back and doing things differently because of lessons learned. There is only one destination — and death gives no paroles.



That's why declaring war on accidents is important, even as we fight this War on Terrorism. It hurts just as much to bury a loved one who died in an accident as one who died on the battlefield. Maybe, in reality, it hurts more. Death in combat is at least for a purpose. Death from an accident does little except provide a sad example.

Boston, Baltimore, Baghdad — it doesn't matter where you are, you're on the front lines of this war. Your best piece of protective "armor" is risk management. Taking the time to identify risks, assessing their severity, developing a plan to protect yourself, and then following that plan can make you a victor in this war. Ignoring the risks and hoping in luck to get you through can quickly make you a victim.

Victor or victim — it's your choice.

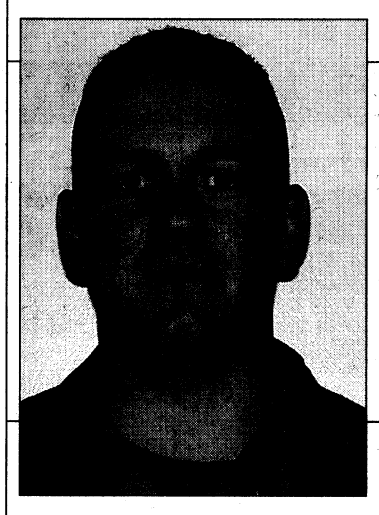
Be safe!

Fort Benning personnel will have an extended weekend to celebrate President's Day. Long weekends increase the potential for serious injury or death in traffic accidents. However, my goal for that weekend is for Fort Benning to be accident free. To accomplish this, we need a strong, united effort.

The key to this prevention effort is the involvement of first line leaders. They know who the high risk personnel are and will schedule safety briefings when and where they will be the most effective. Leaders will emphasize the following:



- Consider commercial transportation in lieu of driving.
- Check the weather forecast for the area you'll be traveling in.
- Take frequent breaks (every two hours).
- Drive defensively, sober and alert.
- Wear your seat belt.

Accident-free holiday periods are possible, but only if we work together to achieve that goal. Commanders should follow up to ensure this information reaches our young Soldiers. Discuss the hazards at the lowest level. Everyone have a safe holiday — Follow me!

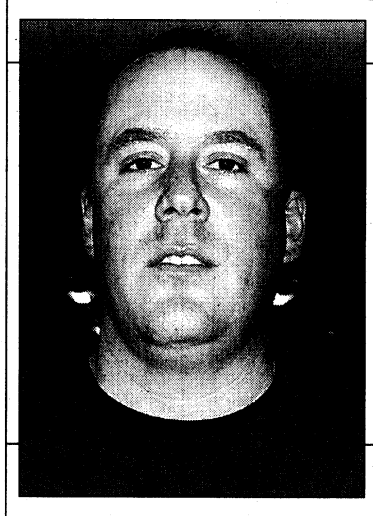
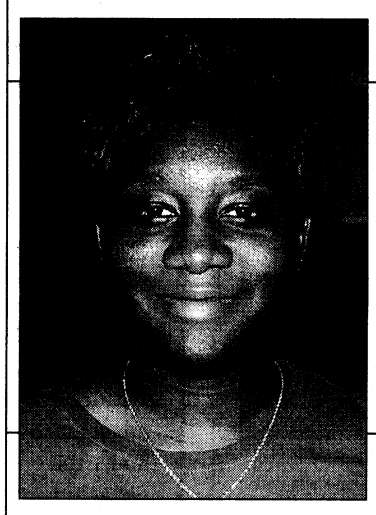
VARIOUS VOICES

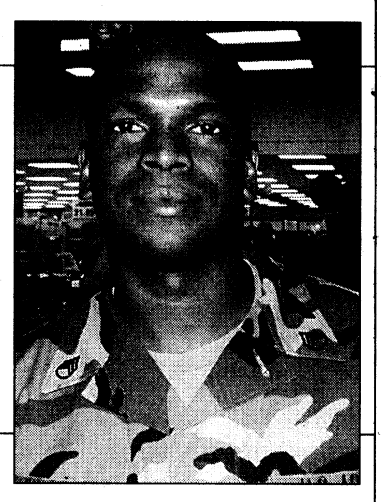


Why do you think it's important to vote?

Pvt. Richard Hinson, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry — "Your vote is your voice. If you don't voice your opinion, you shouldn't complain about the government, because you didn't put forth the effort to go out and vote. Voting is your chance to say what you feel."



Spc. Misty McClendon, 3rd Brigade — "So your opinion can be voiced about the leaders that we have. Our leaders determine whether we're home or away from our family."



Sgt. Chad Walker, U.S. Army Medical Department Activity — It's important to vote, so we can elect the correct officials into office, so they may express our points of view.

Spc. Krystal Stenowski, 203th Forward Support Battalion — "That's our leader. They decide what to do in our country to better it as well as other countries."

Petty Officer 2nd Class, Tashondia Alexander, Naval Station, Mayport, Fla. — "If there are candidates that are doing what you want to see done, you should give them your vote so they have a chance to act. One vote just might make a difference."

Staff Sgt. Jimie Innocent, 518th Tactical Installation and Networking, Fort Gordon, Ga. — "Voting elects a person with the beliefs and ideals that you may have. As a service member, I want a president with a military background who understands what it means to go to war.

Road work

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon

Construction on Interstate 185 continues on schedule. Right now contractors are building a retainer wall and extending the box culvert that will allow water from the creek to continue to flow through the culvert, said Capt. Mindy Rosito, corps of engineers. Once this work is complete, the road construction will begin and be completed by late August.

Post to host prayer breakfast

Vietnam War POW, wife to share story

Spc. Brian Trapp

Fort Benning's annual National Prayer Breakfast will feature retired Col. Benjamin Purcell, a former prisoner of war, as its guest speaker Thursday.

"(The prayer breakfast) brings the community together — civilians, all the Soldiers come together for one day and celebrate by having this breakfast to pray for our nation," said Chap. (Maj.) José Resto, Basic Combat Training Brigade chaplain and prayer breakfast project officer.

"The post invites a guest speaker who brings an inspiring message for us to go forward as a nation and to remember we are a nation under God," he said. "We stop that day to remember we are blessed."

Captured after a helicopter crash during the Vietnam War, Purcell spent 58 months in solitary confinement during his 1,874 days of captivity. He was released March 27, 1973, along with 32 other American prisoners of war.

Purcell and his wife, Anne, will address the breakfast's "Love and Duty" theme.

The couple co-authored Love and Duty, a book that shares their story and the role faith played in helping them endure Purcell's captivity.

"As a guest speaker, I believe he will bring (a message) — stick together as one Army — and bring some past testimony," Resto said. "He served his country for many years, as a colonel and as a POW in Vietnam."

Resto said the community event will give Soldiers of all ranks the opportunity to look at themselves, their fellow Soldiers and America and appreciate the sacrifices that have been made in the nation's history.

The annual prayer breakfast also provides a platform for people of all denominations to celebrate the diversity of religious heritages and the moral and spiritual values on which our nation was founded, Resto said.

The program will include performances by the Infantry Quintet and the Sightseeing Road Chapel's Gospel Choir.

Fort Benning's annual National Prayer Breakfast will be at 7:30 a.m. Thursday in the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Tickets are $4 for privates through specialists, and $6.25 for sergeants and above and all civilians. Tickets are available through the Chaplain's Office.

For more information, call 544-9496.

Scam targets government bank cards

Fraud not limited to personal cards

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Credit card scammers have set their sights on governmental travel and charge card holders.

Two e-mail scams have targeted U.S. Bank and Bank of America cardholders recently.

In what U.S. Bank calls "phishing" schemes, a group creates an imitation of an existing, legitimate Web page, then tricks users into providing personal information. In this case, U.S. Bank cardholders received one or more of 13 fraudulent e-mails.

On Jan. 20, post contracting officials were notified that some U.S. Bank's corporate cardholders received an email suggesting their account had been suspended.

Angela Holloway, agency purchase card coordinator for the Army Contracting Agency, alerted billing officials. U.S. Bank immediately warned their cardholders.

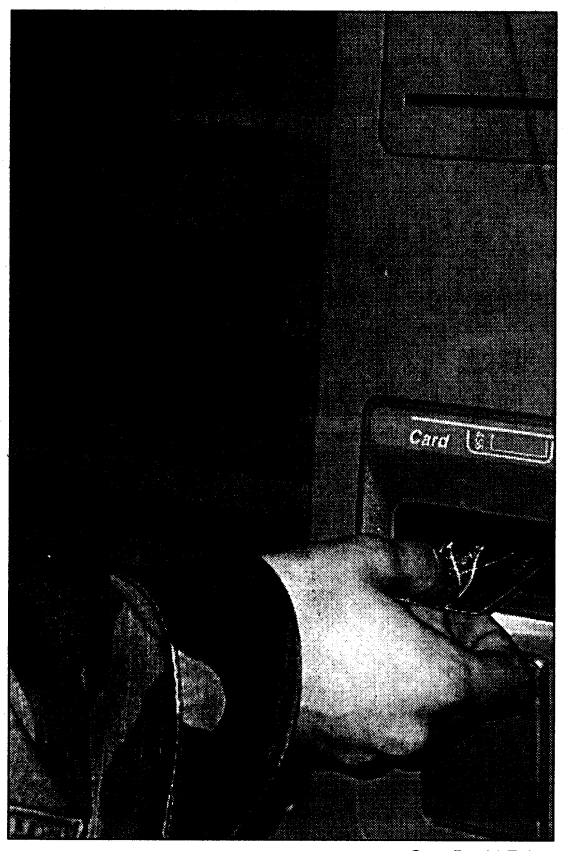
"People get so creative these days," Holloway said of the scammers. "But it's important our cardholders know that U.S. Bank will never contact them in that way."

There are about 400 cardholders at Fort Benning who could have been scammed, Holloway said.

A second notification came Feb. 2 from Bank of America concerning a fraudulent e-mail to VISA travel cardholders asking them to reactivate their accounts due to a security update. The BOA also warned of another scam, where callers identify themselves as bank employees working with the charge card program.

Rebecca Mendez, with Bank of America's private investment group, said this is the first time government cards have been targeted. Both BOA and USB are working with law enforcement officials to resolve the incidents.

A local attorney, who asked to remain anonymous, said it's important for consumers to take steps to prevent credit card fraud and identity theft.



"It's just too hard to catch these criminals and hard to get any sort of settlement," he said.

According to the Consumer Action Web site, credit card fraud costs businesses billions of dollars each year, but is one of the most preventable forms of robbery.

The following tips can protect your government card:

> "It's just too hard to catch these criminals and hard to get any sort of settlement."
> Anonymous
> local attorney

- Write down the toll free numbers for reporting your cards lost or stolen
- Always sign your card in ink when you receive it
- Make sure your mailbox is secure
- Tear up all receipts and pre approved offers before throwing them away
- Only use secure Web sites. Look for a lock or key symbol in your browser window
- Never give your credit card number or other personal information to telemarketers.

A number of new credit card scams on government credit cards have popped up over the past few weeks. Credit card fraud costs businesses billions of dollars each year. It is also one of the most preventable forms of robbery.

VA Home Loan could help vets; often overlooked

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Before the lottery came along, there was a different American dream — to own a home.

For many Americans, buying a house may seem like one of those things that takes too much work, costs too much and requires too much credit.

However, active-duty service members and veterans have a leg-up on the competition when it comes to home buying.

By using Veterans Administration home loans, a Soldier can buy a house for as much as $333,000 without a penny down — even if his credit has a few blemishes.

Steven Giles, senior loan officer with Veteran Home Loans, Eaglewood, Colo., said many service members and veterans are talked out of using their VA loan benefits because their realtor doesn't understand how it works.

Other veterans think they don't qualify for a VA loan because they have been out of the service for more than 10 years or they have used one before.

That's a terrible mistake, Giles said, because they are actually quite easy to get and are a "phenomenal benefit" that doesn't cost the government a dime.

There is no expiration date on when veterans can use the loan, and in fact, they can use it as many times as they want.

"I wish more Vietnam veterans who have been knocked down in life would use this to get back on their feet," Giles said.

Service members and veterans who have really bad credit or have filed for bankruptcy will need to explain why, and it may take a little time for them to get a VA loan, but even then it's not impossible, he said.

> "I wish more Vietnam veterans who have been knocked down in life would use this to get back on their feet."
> Steven Giles
> Senior loan officer,
> Veteran Home Loans, Eaglewood, Colo.

VA loans are backed by the government, which makes credit less of an issue, Giles said, but if a person's credit is really bad, they can get it into shape in about two years.

"If you draw a line in the sand and start paying things on time from that point for the next two years, that can make up for the risk," Giles said.

Patti Herron, Financial Readiness Program financial counselor, said VA loans are a good benefit for service members and veterans, but any time someone makes a large investment, they need to do their homework.

First, she said, the person needs to develop a spending plan to figure out what they can afford.

Then, they will need to get a copy of their credit report to make sure there are no mistakes on it and to be sure they aren't a victim of identity theft.

After that, the person will need to get pre-approved so they know what their price range is. Once that is complete, Heron said, they can start looking for a house.

It's a good idea to look at the house several times, at different times during the day and night, before making a decision. A neighborhood that is quiet and peaceful during the day may not be so at night, Herron said.

"Also," she said, "you want to get your own inspector and appraiser to look at it."

After everything has been done, that's when you make a deal, Herron said. Remember, everything is negotiable. Many times the buyer can get the seller to pay all the closing costs or come down on the price considerably, Giles said.

It's a good idea to check public records for the house's value, because the seller may pay closing costs but include them in the price of the house. By knowing the value, the buyer may have more bargaining leverage.

For more information on home buying, call Herron at 545-5485, and for more information about VA home loans, call Giles at (303) 717-4628.

Post hosts trip to Tuskegee University

Free visit provides history, culture

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office will host the fourth annual Cultural Awareness Trip to Tuskegee University from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Feb. 26.

The trip will include visits to the George Washington Carver Museum, Booker T. Washington's home, the Multi-Cultural Center and the Tuskegee Airmen's Monton Airfield.

"This is going to be a great trip for all those involved," said Sgt. 1st Class Yvette Trejo, 29th Infantry Regiment Equal Opportunity advisor. "Each site has a lot of history and a lot to offer those who attend."

Tuskegee University is the only active university in the United States that is a national historic site, said Tyrone Brandyburg, chief, resources and education for the National Park Service at Tuskegee University.

"To this day, it continues the traditions and values that were set forth when it opened," he said.

The George Washington Carver Museum exhibits artifacts, including equipment Carver used during his career. There are also exhibits of his paintings, embroidery and needlework.

"George Washington Carver was an artist by heart and a doctor by trade," Brandyburg said.

The home of Booker T. Washington, called "The Oaks," chronicles the life of man who founded Tuskegee University.

The Tuskegee University Chapel is unique in that it doesn't have right angles. The chapel, which was rebuilt in 1967 after a fire, is studied by architect students throughout the U.S.

"We want people to experience two things when they come to Tuskegee," Brandyburg said. "We want them to experience the Tuskegee story, and we want them to see how Tuskegee had a hand in the Civil Rights Movement that ultimately helped changed the face of this country."

Tuskegee University was home of the Tuskegee Airmen flight training program, which also helped change today's military.

The trip is open to all Soldiers and federal employees at no cost, but lunch will cost $4.50 at the university's cafeteria. Registration cut-off date is Feb. 23. Seats are on a first-come, first-serve basis, with a maximum of 147 seats available.

Buses will leave Building 2509 located off of Indianhead Road at 8 a.m.

For more information, call your unit Equal Opportunity advisor or the post Equal Opportunity Office at 545-6665.

Benning to observe Black History Month

Luncheon to highlight education

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

February is set aside to honor our heritage with Black History Month. To commemorate this time the U.S. Army Infantry Center Equal Opportunity Office is hosting a Black History Month luncheon.

The theme for this year is "African-Americans and Education: The 50th Anniversary of Brown v. Board of Education." The guest speaker is Dr. Debora Grant, pastor with St. John African Methodist Episcopal Church.

This year celebrates the Supreme Court ruling From May 1954 with the desegregation of public schools was not "separate but equal."

"I'm going to focus on the power of powerless people," Grant said. "Without God we are powerless, taken from a biblical perspective we are powerful with the power within us. It's important we understand we have limitations but we are finite beings.

"We have always been seen as a people without. Many years during times of slavery, fighting to vote, fighting for our rights and freedom and against oppression. But even in the midst of all of that they still had strength and power. I believe as blacks we have to recognize the power we still possess."

"When you talk about everything we contributed, it's not just black history, it's history history. Don't confine it to black, but it's the sum total, it's our history," Grant said. "Blacks have made a significant contribution in life and to the history of America. I'm honored (to come to Benning) and share with others that are continually shaping history."

"There's a lot of people in the community that don't know anything about Brown v. Board of Education and they can come out and get educated about it," said Sgt. 1st Class Yvette Trejo, EEO.

The EEO office will have a display setup tailored around education.

Trejo said the Brown v. Board of Education ruling means a lot to her. "I wouldn't be where I am today without it. I couldn't have attended the colleges I did, and the school my children attended."

Even with the advances society has made over the years Grant said there is still a ways to go.

"(Racism) is not as blatant as it used to be and we've become more subtle in racism, Grant said. "I remember I was in a mall getting out of my car, and a bunch of teens pulled up and started yelling racial slurs. Now it's become subtler.

"We still have a ways to go to celebrate our differences," Grant said. "We have to come to a point where we value and celebrate the differences between us. It's good to see more blacks in positions of leadership it's still a long way to go because we're still making firsts in 2004 first African American to do this or that we still have a long ways to go."

The luncheon is 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., Feb. 24 at the Officers' Club . Tickets are $7.50. For tickets call the unit's EO advisor. For more information, call 545-6665 or 545-3198.

BOSS seeks new leaders

Spc. Andrea Dillon
Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers

In 1990, the Better Opportunities for Single Soldiers program was started to deal with the issues and living conditions of single Soldiers, including single parents and unaccompanied Soldiers.

BOSS focuses on three pillars — recreation and leisure, quality of life and community service.

At the 2003 worldwide BOSS conference, Fort Benning's BOSS program received top honors as the best large installation program in the Army. It placed second for best event in the large installation category for its participation with the Muscular Dystrophy Association Camp.

BOSS is a way for Soldiers to voice concerns about quality of life issues and to get involved in their communities, said Master Sgt. Damon Carver, BOSS NCOIC.

The BOSS program is seeking motivated Soldiers to fill key positions: secretary and historian; treasurer; recreation and leisure coordinator; well-being coordinator and community service coordinator.

The secretary and historian attends all meetings, types meeting minutes and helps update the representative matrix.

The treasurer maintains accurate records of all the money spent and earned by the BOSS program and is a key advisor on fund-raising committees.

The recreation leisure coordinator helps coordinate and plan recreation and leisure activities like trips to Disney World and white-water rafting.

The well-being coordinator researches complaints, then reports the findings to the BOSS president, provides documentation, photos and files reports.

The community service coordinator researches volunteer opportunities and presents them to the executive committee. The community service coordinator also keeps track of BOSS volunteer's community service hours.

Soldiers interested in joining the BOSS executive committee can stop by the BOSS office, Building 2819, (AG Replacement,) to pick up an application.

"By doing this, Soldiers who have a long road to recovery won't be subject to the dangers on the battlefield and will be able to be treated by more specialists with better equipment," Iacovetta said.

The change will not increase the number of deployments for the unit, he said.

"That's the first thing everyone worries about when a change is made — whether or not we will deploy more. Our deployments will operate the same as usual."

USAMU instructors train troops in Iraq

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The firing range was located on the grounds of Baghdad International Airport. Surrounded by steep berms on three sides, the sharp crack of gunfire echoed through the palm trees. The weapons being used varied from M-9 pistols to M-4 carbines to M-249 squad automatic weapons.

What did all these arms have in common? The Soldiers wielding them were being trained in shooting techniques by Soldiers of Fort Benning's U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

The USAMU instructors are in Iraq to teach and demonstrate the potential every Soldier has as a rifleman. The main focus of the training is educating Soldiers on how to shoot and move with their Army issued weapons.

"This is advanced close-quarters marksmanship," said Sgt. 1st Class Charles Gibbs, the NCOIC of the USAMU Service Pistol Team. "We don't teach tactics; we teach marksmanship technique."

The USAMU instruction is set up as a "train the trainer" exercise. The shooters then take these new practices back to their units and teach them to others at smaller ranges. The instructors have to conduct training this way because there simply aren't enough instructors to teach all the units that need them.

"What we're doing here is strictly offense. How to move, shoot effectively and keep moving," said Staff Sgt. Aaron Hampton, USAMU service pistol instructor and shooter.

Shooting while moving, whether on foot or in a vehicle, is stressed in this training. Hampton said that, unlike marksmanship qualification ranges where there is one firing point, this training introduces the concept that both the target and the shooter may be moving.

"It's total training — shooting, accuracy, movement left and right, up and down — things that you might encounter while out on the streets," Hampton said.

For many of the students, this is the most time they've spent shooting on a single day.

"This is very fast paced; it keeps Soldiers interested," said Staff Sgt. Gary Harris, a military policeman with 501st Military Police Company.

"You shoot a lot of rounds and that's always good when you get to shoot."

Harris admitted he was having fun, but said he was also learning a valuable combat skill.

"You never know when a threat is going to pop up two meters from you, and you're going to have to engage; it's very effective training," he said.

Although the USAMU instruction highlighted stealth and quickness, the students had to be precise.

"In this type of environment, it's really good to be able to shoot fast and accurately," Harris said.

"But it doesn't do any good if you shoot 10 rounds in two seconds if you're not hitting anything.

"The students have ample amounts of ammo to send downrange to practice their shots. You come out here and shoot a thousand rounds in a few hours," Harris said with a wide grin. "It's very fun."

3rd Brigade wraps up tough training, returns home

Soldiers act out battle scenarios

Spc. Robert Adams
3rd ID Public Affairs Office

Soldiers with 3rd Brigade conducted four weeks of training exercises and missions at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., Jan. 10 through Saturday.

Soldiers got the chance to work together and become familiar with their equipment. Also with the help of observer controllers, the unit was able to conduct this training safely and received productive feedback.

After arriving at NTC, Soldiers first had to set up shelter-halves at the 'Dust Bowl.'

During the first week of training, Soldiers inspected and drew vehicles, which they used to train during the exercise training.

"The goal is to get better every day and much better by the end of the rotation," said Sgt. Maj. Gregory A. Proft, senior NCO trainer at NTC.

Soldiers also zeroed their weapons with the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System, which simulates whether you have been shot and what injuries have occurred.

During the second week, Soldiers executed training missions based on pre-set scenarios against opposing forces. OCs monitored these battles for safety and provided feedback. After each battle, OCs would perform after-action reviews with commanders and senior NCOs to figure out what worked well and what needed improvement.

"What you do here in this training arena is what you will do in a real-world mission," said Lt. Col. Jeffrey R. Sanderson, commander of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment.

Soldiers switched to live ammunition halfway through the third week. Soldiers trained with a variety of weapon systems, firing at stationary and moving targets.

During the live fire, 3rd Brigade Soldiers were given various battle scenarios that they may encounter in a high intensity conflict, said Sgt. 1st Class William B. Halbrook, scout trainer for 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.

"The individual shooter goes through all the firing procedures they would go through in a battle, which is training they wouldn't normally get at a home station range scenario," Halbrook said.

Soldiers finished up by returning to the Dust Bowl and cleaned their equipment in preparation for heading back to Fort Benning.

This included getting their home station vehicles ready to transport back to Benning by rail, said Sgt. Sederick S. Hill, B Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment.

"We know a unit is good when they come here, but we want to do as much as possible to help them become better before they leave," Halbrook said.

Soldiers returned to post between Feb. 4 and Thursday.

'Hire the Heroes' aims to help troops

Pfc. Ellamar Castanon

To help decrease the shortage of qualified auto repair technicians, a leading automotive industry group is joining forces with the U.S. military to match qualified military veterans with available jobs.

"The Hire the Heroes initiative will give thousands of automobile dealers the opportunity to network with military outplacement personnel and to develop strategic relationships to ease the transition for veterans into satisfying service technician careers," said James Willingham, chairman of Automotive Retailing Today.

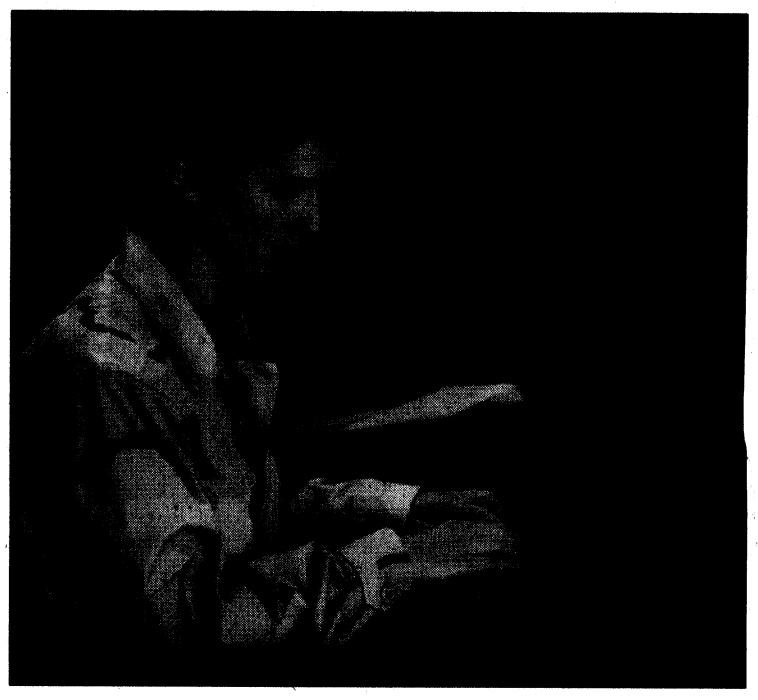
Willingham said the recent pool of veterans includes technologically savvy, motivated workers whose skills may be easily adaptable to auto repair positions and other auto dealership careers.

ART statistics show the auto industry will need 35,000 people annually for new high-paying auto technician jobs and tens of thousands more for sales, finance and other jobs in auto dealerships in this decade alone.

"The qualities demonstrated by military personnel are the same qualities every dealer looks for in its employees," said Denise Patton-Pace, ART public relations.

"This is a good career path for veterans that offers good money, retirement and health benefits," she said.

"Our veterans are known for their accomplishments as warriors, but these Soldiers are also some of the most highly trained technicians in their field," said Chief Warrant Officer Kurt Schultz, with the Army Ordnance and Mechanical Maintenance School at Aberdeen Proving Ground, Md. "The Army uses ASE certifications in our professional development models for mechanics."



The Army awards Soldiers promotion points for ASE or other civilian certifications as well, Schultz said.

Many of the dealers offer to train potential job seekers with the necessary ASE certifications, said Willingham.

Veterans may take ASE certification courses through the Veterans Educational Assistance Program or with their Montgomery GI Bill, Willingham said.

For more information on Hire the Heroes Soldiers may visit the ART Web site www.autoretailing.org/military or the NADA Web site www.nada.org.

Stabilization: Enhances readiness for units, families

following training for six to seven years. This allows families time to grow community roots and have a known support structure in place in case the Soldiers deploy, Thornton said. It also allows predictability in where they will be for a longer period than the current system permits.

Currently, the average assignment tour length for enlisted initial entry Soldiers is about 31 months, said Brig. Gen. Sean Byrne, director of Military Personnel Policy, G-1.

Home-basing does not apply to midterm or career Soldiers, Thornton said, but should eventually lead to return assignments to the Home-base.

Nor does the initiative stop Home-based Soldiers being levied for a short-term assignments at other locations. Soldiers need to know there is a chance they'll have to do other things during their initial extended tour — short tours in Korea, Bosnia, Kosovo — but with Home-basing, they will return to their initial-assignment installations, Byrne said.

The six-to-seven-year career mark for ending Home-basing was established because that is the point where the Army's manning needs outside of tactical units significantly increases, Thornton said.

"It's the point where that officer has made captain, completed a company command, and the Army may need that officer as a Pentagon staff officer, an instructor at the schoolhouse, or to complete advanced schooling," Thornton said. "The enlisted Soldier will have likely made sergeant by that time and is ready for assignment as a recruiter, drill sergeant or instructor."

Leader development training, such as basic and advanced noncommissioned officer course, and the captain's career course should not be impacted by Home-basing, as Soldiers will be sent to that training on temporary duty and then return to the installation.

Home-basing is set to start at selected Forces Command installations with divisional brigade combat teams sometime in the fourth quarter of the current fiscal year. It will eventually include most FORSCOM bases in the United States and may include some combined FORSCOM Training and Doctrine Command posts, Byrne said.

Under the second initiative, Unit Focused Stability, all members of a unit arrive at the same time and are stabilized in that unit for three years.

"Optimally, if you want to build unit cohesion, you keep members of a team together through training, deployment and employment," Thornton said. "This is about building more capable warfighting units that require less train-up time when alerted for deployment."

The Army understands that losses occur to any unit due to medical, administrative, hardship or judicial issues, Thornton said, so there is a plan for an annual package of replacements who would remain with the unit through the remainder of the 36 month unit lifecycle. Individual replacements will be filled as required and requested by the unit. The majority of these scheduled replacements joining the unit will be initial entry Soldiers.

"Let's say you need to replace a company commander due to a loss," Thornton said. "His replacement will come from within — somebody who has been with the unit at the start of the unit lifecycle, somebody like the company executive officer or one of the battalion staff officers. Then you take a senior platoon leader and backfill the position left vacant. The initial entry replacement comes in and then fills the empty platoon leader position. It works the same way on the enlisted side."

Recruiters are armed with a variable enlistment incentive to encourage recruits to sign for duty with a Unit Focused Stabilization unit. Recruits who sign up for the bonus must serve on active duty the amount of time it takes to complete basic and advanced individual training plus three years in the unit rather than the standard three, four or six year enlistment.

Opportunities for leader development training, such as basic and advanced noncommissioned officer course, and the captain's career course will continue under Unit Focused Stability, only the timing of attendance may be affected.

The 172nd Infantry Brigade (Separate), based at Fort Wainwright, Alaska, is the first Army unit to use Unit Focused Stability when it started the process to become the Army's third Stryker Brigade Combat Team last summer.

Unit Focused Stability will take longer to implement across the Army than Home-basing because of operational requirements and the need for coordination with multiple Army organizations for each unit transitioning to the new manning system, Thornton said. Eventually, the Army plans to transition one brigade combat team a month.

Both Force Stabilization initiatives should not impact anybody's chances for promotion, Byrne said, as promotions are not based on unit requirements.

"We are increasing the readiness of the Army through stability and unit cohesion, while providing more predictability to Soldiers and their families," Byrne said. "We have always said that we enlist Soldiers and re-enlist families."

Force stabilization to impact Soldiers' enlistment lengths

Sgt. 1st Class Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Basic and AIT will be added to the number of years a recruit enlists under a new Force Stabilization initiative.

There are 19 jobs, mainly combat-arm specialties, which fall under the Variable Enlistment Length program. Under VEL, Soldiers enlist for three- to five-year options. After arriving at their unit, they are stabilized for at least three years.

Since implemented in December, VEL has attracted more than 2,000 Soldiers.

A smaller number have enlisted under the congressionally mandated 15-month pilot program, "National Call to Service." Since it was approved Oct. 1, about 125 Soldiers have enlisted in the Army under the program. Similar to VEL, the program doesn't include training as part of the time-in-service contract and only a limited number of specialties fall under it.

National Call to Service was adopted by each of the other services. The 15-month pilot program coincides with VEL, said Lt. Col. Harry Garner, chief of Enlisted Accessions Division. They both keep initial-term Soldiers stabilized, but the National Call to Service is not part of the Army's stabilization plans.

The mission of Force Stabilization is to provide ready, deployable, combat forces, and to do so, units must be manned, said Col. Michael Harris, the deputy director of Directorate of Military Personnel Policy. However, VEL isn't just about manning units, it's also about stabilizing Soldiers, he said. Soldiers under VEL would stay at their first unit for at least three years.

The Soldiers who fall under the selected job specialties will be assigned to the 2nd Cavalry Regiment, Fort Polk, La., which is scheduled to begin converting to a Stryker Brigade Combat Team in October. The regiment is a combat unit, which is why Human Resources Command selected specialties such as infantry, cannon crewmember and cavalry scout, Garner said. Some of the non-combat-arms jobs that fall under VEL are human resources, administration, and supply.

VEL will be used to man all of the maneuver brigade combat teams, including a brigade in the the 25th Infantry Division in Hawaii, Harris said. It will transform into a Stryker unit by 2005.

"Under Force Stabilization, we will synchronize assignment cycles with units' operational cycles," he said.

Most units' operational cycles are on a 36-month schedule, Harris said.

Before VEL, many Soldiers enlisted for only 36 months, but their initial-entry training took from three months to a year. So when they arrived at their unit, they were not there for a full 36 months.

"But if you synchronize the schedules, and all the Soldiers come in together, train, deploy, fight, win and return together, you will get a more deployable and ready force," Harris said.

Soldiers could also get more familiar with their weapons, he said. "If you're assigned an M-16 at an installation, and you're there for three years, and you take that same M-16 to the range ... you're going to be more proficient with your weapon.

"In contrast, if you go to 2.3 installations over a three-year period ... and touch three different weapons, you'll probably be less proficient with your weapon."

Force Stabilization is one of Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker's 16 focus areas.

"How the Army mans its force was an immediate area that the chief of staff wanted us to look at," Harris said. "We've developed two programs under Force Stabilization. One is 'Home-basing' and the other is 'Unit Focused Stability,' previously known as 'unit manning.'"

Home-basing would require initial-term officers and enlisted Soldiers to stay at their first duty station up to six or seven years, he said. VEL supports Stabilization because initial-entry Soldiers report at the same time and spend at least three years at that unit.

While some Force Stabilization initiatives will likely begin this summer, the specific units and installations to be affected will not be announced until next month after a review of the current VEL is done by the Army, officials said.

Crash: To shares tough lesson with Benning community damage, and a broken arm. Every facial bone was broken. Medical personnel said she wouldn't survive.

She did. Wagoner came out of her coma blind, disfigured and brain damaged. But the former model doesn't ask for sympathy. She knows full well it's fortunate she was the only victim.

"The first thing I asked ... was if I had killed anyone," Wagoner said. "If I had, I was planning to kill myself. It was bad enough what happened to me, but if I'd hurt someone else ..."

Despite the initial emotional trauma — anger, resentment, hurt and frustration — Wagoner turned her experience into something positive. She has spent the past eight years telling her story to anyone who will listen. Whether through her 1998 video, Just Call Me Crash ... The Denise Wagoner Story, television interviews or public speaking, Wagoner has reached millions of people.

And on Feb. 18, on the eve of the ninth anniversary of her accident, she will share her story with Fort Benning.

"I learned one (heck) of a lesson the hard way, but that lesson has helped others," said Wagoner, who received three DUI citations before her accident. "My message is a very powerful one. Most people will think of my face ripped off and put down their keys (if they've been drinking)."

"No matter how many times you show people the statistics, it just doesn't have the impact of speaking with an individual with firsthand experience with the horrifying results (of drinking and driving) and the years of recovery," said Debrah Manning, an education prevention coordinator at Fort Benning's Army and Substance Abuse Program.

Although Manning hasn't met Wagoner, she knows the program will be powerful and moving.

"The goal is to have as many people as possible attend," Manning said. "They just might remember her story and call someone (instead of driving drunk)."

Xylitol: Spares troops' teeth

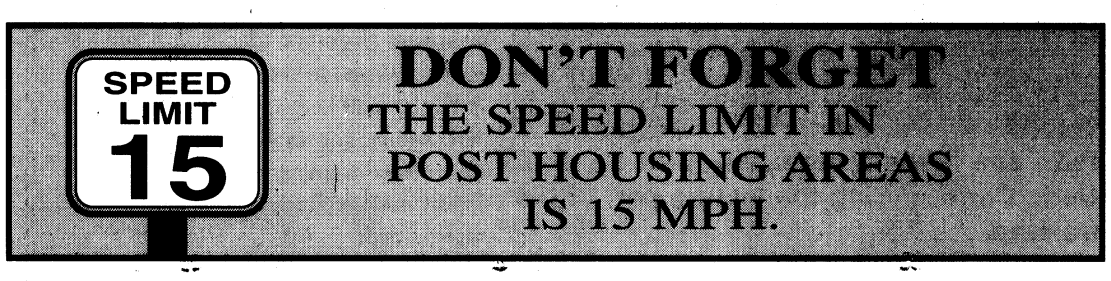
implications for the Soldier in the field.

"Our Soldiers have known about the benefits of (xylitol) for years, but access has posed a problem," said Lutka, who successfully campaigned to put xylitol products on the shelves of the Fort Benning Commissary, which now carries toothpastes, gums and mints with xylitol in them.

Xylitol gum is even available in AAFES shoppettes overseas, Lutka said. But it's necessary to get the gum into the MRE packs to increase its use and thereby reduce the instances of cavities and the cost of treatment.

"And that's what it's really all about — the Soldiers, particularly the infantry Soldiers who probably need this the most," he said.

Canada and European countries have been using xylitol in candies, gum, food, beverages, nasal sprays and cosmetics for years. Not only is it marketed as a dental aid, it's also been proven to reduce inner ear infections by 40 percent, help heal skin infections, treat cystic fibrosis and greatly reduce sinus infections. Xylitol also increases the body's absorption of calcium.



With so much going for it and no known side effects, why isn't xylitol as popular as other sweeteners, like sorbitol or saccharine?

Lutka said xylitol was one of the most expensive sugar alternatives when it was introduced in the U.S. in 1976. That, coupled with an already inundated market, resulted in little demand for the product in a nation that was virtually unaware of its many uses abroad.

But the Navy took note of early research and began prescribing xylitol to sailors nearly 20 years ago. By the early 90s, xylitol gum, toothpastes and mints were standard treatment in the services' efforts to curb cavities and gum disease.

Now, with plans to make xylitol an established ingredient in the MRE sundry pack, Lutka expects to see an even greater demand for the product back home.

"Once they see for themselves that it works and works well, people will want it," he said.

As the front runners of the transformation of America's fighting force, nothing is business as usual for the Soldiers of A Company, 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment.

The Soldiers are part of a test for a new program of instruction for the Basic Combat Training Brigade that focuses on instilling a warrior ethos in all Soldiers, whether they are combat arms or not.

The new POI is designed to teach Soldiers with non-combat specialties how to react if they end up in a combat situation, said Sgt. 1st Class Carvin Butler, 3rd Platoon's senior drill sergeant.

"They learn the Army's seven core values in everything they do, but with the new POI we are trying to get them to understand the Warrior Ethos spirit," he said.

As the immersion company for the new POI, the Soldiers are being trained on 40 tasks that are not part of the normal BCTB POI, such as mounted land navigation, and clearing and evacuating buildings.

One of the ways the drill sergeants are working the extra tasks into their training schedule is to keep the Soldiers in the field for some of the training exercises that would normally be split into two days with an overnight trip to the barracks.

An example of this is the first-aid training the Soldiers received at McBride's Bridge Range earlier this week.

The Soldiers arrived at the range early Monday morning, where range cadre gave them instruction on ways to evaluate a casualty, restore breathing, control bleeding, splint fractures and perform a variety of improvised personnel carries.

Once the Soldiers completed the classes, they set up a perimeter and bivouacked for the night.

Tuesday morning the Soldiers sprang back to action, and performed the tasks they learned the day before.

Range cadre set up lanes with casualties suffering from different afflictions for the Soldiers to evaluate and treat.

The Soldiers used their knowledge of modified carries to move each other from one casualty to another, then they assessed the casualties and performed the necessary first-aid treatment on each one while range cadre and drill sergeants evaluated their technique.

After completing the lanes, the Soldiers shifted gears and focused on modified personnel carries.

They teamed up and carried team members around a track that was riddled with hills and ruts using basic military litters and improvised litters made out of their personal supplies and things they found in the environment.

Pvt. Scott Henne, who enlisted as an ammo specialist, said he thinks it's great to be a member of the immersion company because he will be better prepared in a combat situation.

Henne said he is taking the first aid training very seriously, because, "you never know what's going to happen."

"Even though we aren't infantry, we'll probably be (in the war) and if your buddy is on the ground bleeding, you don't want to leave him there," he said. "I am very excited about it."

Henne said he thinks sleeping in the field is making better Soldiers out of him and his comrades.

"It's all the better being out here," he said. "Because you are not always going to be able to sleep in a nice warm bed. You've got to get used to the elements."

Butler said he is confident in the new POI, and he knows that when the Soldiers are finished training they will be able to deploy and perform their specialties in any environment.

Guns, guitars mold well-rounded Soldier

Sniper on tap at Columbus coffee shop

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

His mother wanted him to play the piano. He went out and bought a guitar.

At the age of 4, Capt. Jason Kostal, now the commander of the Sniper School, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, bought a guitar — the first of a collection that now numbers 20.

Born in Louisville, Ky., but raised in Milwaukee, Kostal, 28, started out playing classical music, but as the years went on, he discovered rock, blues and jazz.

After listening to guitar great Michael Hedges perform, Kostal enrolled into the American Fingerstyle Program at the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music, where he played pupil to guitar legends like Hedges, Leo Kottke, James Taylor and Livingston Taylor.

By the time Kostal was a junior in high school, he had taken enough music classes to have an associate's degree in music.

He graduated with a scholarship to the Berklee College of Music in Boston, but instead he joined the Army.

"I was raised in a very patriotic family, and I wanted to do something good for the world," he said.

At his military entrance processing station, he was selected to attend the U.S. military Academy at West Point, N.Y. After graduation he moved on to his first assignment, Fort Hood, Tx.

He attended the FBI's Sniper Program in 1997, and was ranger qualified in February, 1999.

Now Kostal is the commander of what he calls the "best Sniper School in the world."

He said he believes the Army helps mold Soldiers into well-rounded people and part of that molding process requires Soldiers to do things outside of the Army.

"The Army is my job, and it takes priority over my music, but I play every night when I get home from work," he said. "(It's) my first love, and each day I find that I learn more about myself and the world around me as a result of the constant harmony in my life."

Kostal has opened for famous performers like the Violent Femmes, Green Day, John Mayer and Shawn Mullins. Friends and co-workers say he's a very talented singer and song writer.

"His style of singing is similar to James Taylor; he tells stories through his songs," said Capt. Kevin Gallitin, the regiment's personnel officer, who has been to most of Kostal's performances.

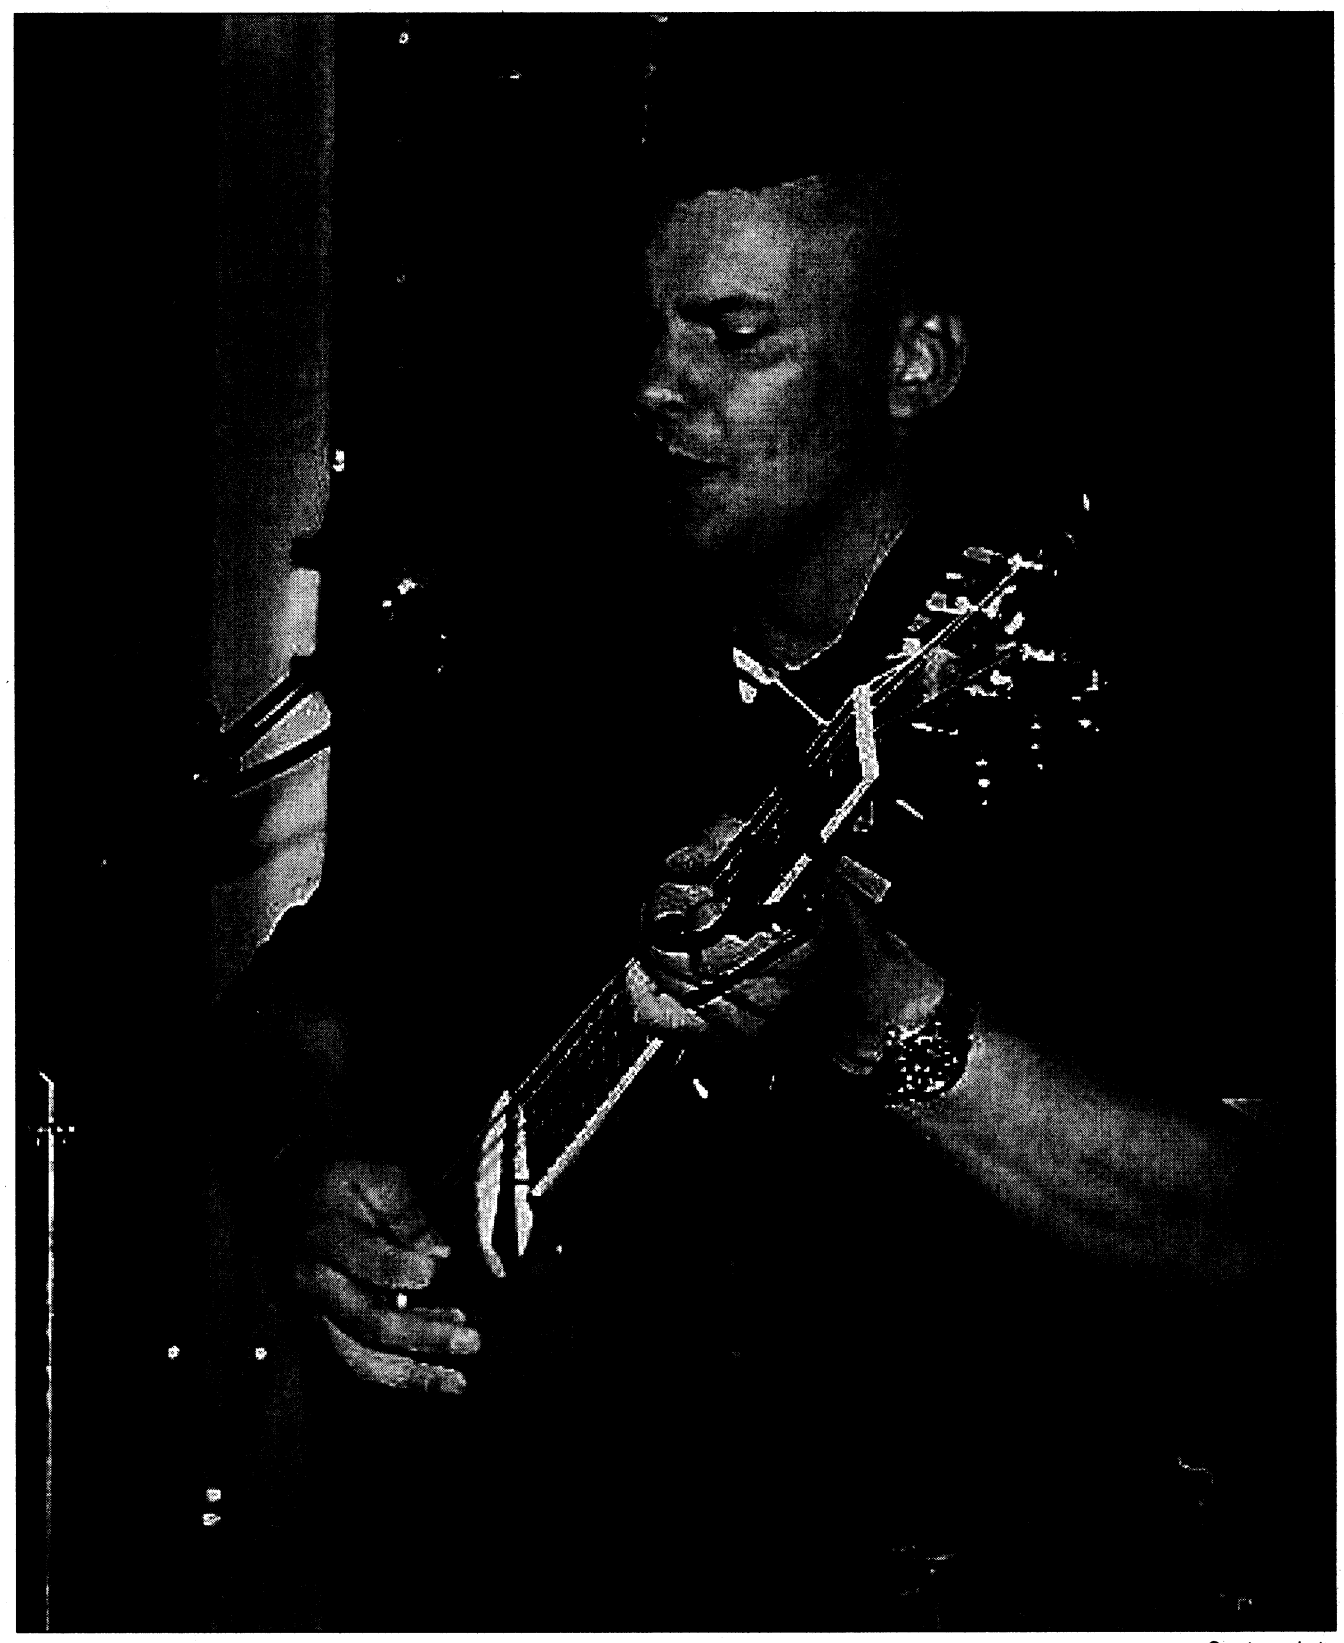
A modest man, Kostal said he is not looking to become a world-famous performer.

"It's a hobby, and as long as I continue to enjoy it, I'm going to do it," he said.

Kostal produced his first album in his home studio in 1999 and was later picked up by Summit Records, with whom he produced two more albums.

His latest album, A Fresh Coat of Paint, produced by Columbia Records, will be in stores nationwide May 1.

His performance tours include Columbus, Atlanta and other cities in Georgia, as well as Tennessee, Florida and New York.



"The best part about performing is hearing people talk about me after shows," Kostal said laughing.

One of his best experiences happened as he waited for a cab in New York City after performing at a concert hall the previous night, he said.

"A man standing behind me was humming one of my songs," he said. "I wanted to turn around and tell him 'Hey — that's my song,' but I just sat there and enjoyed it."

Kostal's next performance is March 12 at the Fountain City Coffee Shop in downtown Columbus.

Infantry Band seeks answer to mystery

World War II Steinway found in Infantry Hall

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

It's grand, baby, and on today's market, it would cost 62 grand. A 7-foot Steinway concert piano, covered in dust and — of all things — egg shells, was recently discovered in Infantry Hall, though "discovered" might be a stretch, since the piano has been hidden in plain sight for as long as anyone can recall.

1st Sgt. Wendy Thomson, of the Infantry Band, received a call from someone in Infantry Hall. It seems the floor of Marshall Auditorium needs resurfacing, and in order to do that, "all that mess backstage" has to be moved. Including a piano no one wants to claim.

"Then she said it was a Steinway," Thomson said. "I'm not a pianist, but I know a little about them, and I know Steinway is top of the line."

Thomson called the Steinway Company in New York. Their records show that the piano was manufactured, mostly by hand, in 1944, and was delivered to Fort Benning's Special Services in February the following year.

"And that's all we know," Thomson said.

Andy Williamson, a Steinway technician from Atlanta, visited Marshall Auditorium Tuesday to look at the piano, which would've sold for $2,800 new. Now, he said, the same piano would cost more than $62,000.

"You've really got something here," Williamson said, after clearing the dust and combing over the piano. "I'm very optimistic. Structurally, it's intact. It's complete. It's a Steinway."

Still, he said, years of neglect and various minor alterations, like the replacement of the original ivory keys with plastic, have left the piano a little worse for wear. And its deep mahogany color is not original. The World War II era piano would've been finished in an ebony veneer over a solid wood base. Newspaper shreds pulled from beneath the piano's soundboard, probably put there to "catch drips" during the most recent refinish, were dated July 1994.

Bridgett Siter

Andy Williamson checks out a 1944 Steinway baby grand in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium Tuesday.

Williamson is working up an estimate to bring the Steinway up to date, a challenge he said is not overly difficult.

"We're gathering information at this point," said Thomson, who'd like to see the piano find a home somewhere on post where it'll be used and well-loved. "We don't know how much it's going to cost or where it would go. And there's a paperwork process for the (Infantry) Band to take responsibility for it."

In the meantime, while Williamson works the numbers, Thomson would like to know more about the piano.

"It came to post back when live music was the main form of entertainment. Before TV," she said with a shrug. "I wish we knew. Maybe it was used in one of the theaters. One thing's for sure, it wasn't always here. This building wasn't even built in 1945."

Retired Col. Bob Nett called Fort Benning home for much of his infantry career. He believes the piano's first home was probably the Main Post Theater, which was located in the spot that's now called the "Lemon Lot," the used car lot next to Burger King. Or perhaps, he said, the piano was used in the Infantry Chapel or the original Infantry School, now the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

"Those are the most likely places," Nett said. "I really can't be sure. But I do know that Special Services were the folks, in those days, who took care of all social activities, like the USO shows. So probably it was in the theater."

The Bayonet would like to hear from anyone who has information about the piano and its history. Call 545-9135.

As for the egg shells found inside? That's no mystery, Thomson said.

"Must've been a real bad show at one time," she said.

SAINT WHO?
Elves say Christmas is year-round work

Have year-round need for donations

"I know it's early, but we're running on momentum from last year."

Kim Miller
Santa's Castle president

While some are thinking of St. Valentine, a group on Fort Benning wants everyone to think of St. Nicholas. St. Nick. Santa. The jolly old elf himself. The same Santa with a castle on post where parents can get help with holiday gifts for their children when money is tight.

The Santa's Castle "think tank" met Feb. 9 to brainstorm ideas to lay the framework for the 2004 season.

"I know it's early," said Santa's Castle president Kim Miller, "but we're running with the momentum of last year."

Miller said Santa's Castle made the holidays bright for more than 2,200 children last year, nearly 1,000 more than the previous year. She and her volunteers think they need to be prepared to help as many as 3,000 this year.

"We want to reach everyone before Dec. 24," she said.

And earlier is best. Once the applications come in, volunteers have the information they need to shop for gifts. Not only does the Castle accept donations of new toys, but it also tries to shop clearance sales to purchase toys at the best possible prices.

Treasurer Stephanie Dickmann said Santa's Castle spent slightly more than $10,000 on toys, many at a 50 or 75 percent discount.

"We had easily $15,000 of merchandise that was either donated to us or we purchased," Dickmann said.

In order to be ready for this year, the group is working to fill a few board positions and build their volunteer base. Santa's Castle needs a recording secretary, corresponding secretary, youth volunteer coordinator and fund-raising chairman.

Miller said Santa's Castle is a great place for high school students to fulfill their schools' volunteer requirement.

Even volunteers who can only give one or two hours each month would be a great asset, she said, adding that the most volunteers are needed in October, November and December when units submit applications and the staff schedules all of the shopping appointments.

The consensus of the group was that they needed to find ways to get their message out. To that end, Miller said a Santa's Castle representative will be available to talk about the program at Family Readiness Group meetings.

O' Club membership drive ends with give-away

Lucky winner gets keys to new pick-up

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Super Bowl Sunday was a good day for one lucky member of the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Plass, an associate club member since 1995, won a 2003 Chevrolet S-10 pick-up truck as part of the club's membership drive. The drive was sponsored by Bill Heard Chevrolet, Bank One and the Fort Benning Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation.

Plass' name was chosen from the 142 new or "converted" members — those who converted their memberships to a Bank One card, said Charlotte Jackson, chief of the support services and lodging division in the Directorate of Community Activities. Bank One handles all accounts receivable for all Army clubs.

"It's the best thing that's happened to me."

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Frank Plass winner of truck

Plass said Col. Mark Ritter, commander of the 11th Infantry Regiment called him at his home during the Super Bowl's halftime.

"He told me I was now the proud owner of a 2003 Chevy S-10 and I told him he must be kidding," Plass said.

Ritter assured Plass he was serious and he could get the keys and the truck at the Officers' Club the next day.

"It was really a surprise, especially to win a vehicle," Plass said. "It's the best thing that's happened to me."

Although pleased with his windfall, Plass isn't keeping the truck.

"I just bought a new GMC Sierra truck and I don't need two to haul wood," Plass said. He joked that he had no plans to try his luck at the lottery either.

Plass, who is well-known to the Fort Benning community as the honorary command sergeant major of the 29th Infantry Regiment, was originally nominated for membership in 1994 by a former Fort Benning general.

"Command Sergeant Major Plass is known for his untiring and generous support of Soldiers, families and the Fort Benning community," said Betty Bell, the Club's membership clerk. Officers' club membership, which currently numbers nearly 1,650, is not strictly limited to officers.

In addition to permanent party and student officers, membership is open to Department of the Army civilians, retired DA civilians, and federal, state and local government employees.

Associate members, like Plass, have been nominated by a member or recommended by the commanding general.

Military Citizenship Day — The Atlanta District Office of Citizenship and Immigration Services will host Military Citizenship Day Feb. 27.

The ceremony will be at 1 p.m. in Marshall Auditorium, Infantry Hall.

Military personnel who have applied for citizenship before Aug. 1, 2003 are encouraged to contact their personnel officers and request that their name be submitted for consideration. Family member who have applied before January 2003 are requested to fax their Notice of Action Form I-797C to (404) 331-6031, also for consideration to Community Liaison Officer, Bill Castro.

Tricare survey — The Tricare Management Activity has contracted with a survey research firm in Washington, D.C., to conduct a telephone survey (a legitimate and important survey) of Tricare beneficiaries.

The survey will gather information about beneficiary information needs, preferred sources, and information-seeking strategies. Results will be used to develop a new national suite of beneficiary education products and services.

Pilot testing started Tuesday and full survey operations will be conducted between Monday and Feb. 18. The study design calls for 10-minute phone interviews with representatives from five groups:

• active-duty service members

• active duty family members

• retirees and their family members younger than 65

• retirees and their family members 65 and older

• spouses of activated reserve service members.

The goal is 3,400 completed interviews, which might require calling approximately 10,000 beneficiaries.

Food choices influence dental health

American Dental Association

Dentists have long recognized the link between good oral health and sound nutrition.

For years, the American Dental Association has recommended that children and adults limit eating and drinking between meals and, when they snack, give preference to nutritious foods identified by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's dietary guidelines.

Think about the human body as a complex machine that needs daily attention if it is to run well. Without exercise and a balanced diet, it doesn't get the fuel it needs to perform efficiently or effectively. And it may be less able to ward off disease or infection. The foods we choose as fuel generally affect our overall health, including our teeth and gums. Health and nutrition experts recommend following the USDA's Food Guide Pyramid.

Eating patterns and food choices among children and teens are important factors that affect how quickly youngsters may develop tooth decay. The reason is a sticky film of bacteria, called plaque that constantly forms on the teeth and gums.

When the bacteria come in contact with sugar or starch in the mouth, acid is produced, which attacks the teeth for 20 minutes or more. This can eventually result in tooth decay.

The USDA's Dietary Guidelines encourage consumers to limit intake of beverages and foods high in added sugars that may crowd out other healthy foods from their daily diet. The agency identifies soft drinks as a major source of added sugar.

Americans drank more than 53 gallons of soft drinks — per person — in 2000. This amount surpassed all other beverages including milk, beer, coffee and water.

One of every four beverages consumed in America today is a soft drink and it is clear that soft drinks have displaced other nutritious beverages and foods from the diet.

Did you know that some nondiet soft drinks contain as many as 11 teaspoons of sugar per serving?

Although there are few studies reported in scientific literature that specifically evaluate the role of soft drinks in the development of tooth decay, increased sugar in the diet increases the risk of decay. There is a positive association between sugar-containing soft drink consumption, especially heavy consumption, and risk for tooth decay, according to published studies.

Most soft drinks contain phosphoric acid and citric acid. Prolonged exposure to acids can do permanent damage to teeth by producing a condition called "erosion," or the loss of hard tissues from the tooth surface.

This acidity can wear tooth enamel and result in erosion or the loss of hard tissues from the tooth surface. It is widely accepted that acid in food and beverages plays a major role in the development of enamel erosion.

Diet soft drinks rely on nonnutritive sweeteners instead of sugar. They are also acidic and may increase the risk of enamel erosion, although the science on the role of soft drinks and tooth erosion is preliminary.

Beating plaque:

- Limit eating and drinking between meals and, when snacking, give preference to nutritious foods.
- Be mindful of the effects of frequent consumption of sugary beverages and non-nutritious snack foods.
- Brush twice a day, floss or use another interdental cleaner once a day.
- Schedule regular dental check-ups.

For more information, visit the American Dental Association's Web site, www.ada.org and the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Web site at www.usda.gov/cnpp.

ASK THE JUDGE

Capt. Steven J. Collins
Office of the Staff Judge Advocate

Q: Can you please explain some of the common tax credits and deductions I may be able to take advantage of this year?

A: Credits and deductions can be very beneficial to the taxpayer. First let's go over credits and the meaning of tax credits.

There are two types of tax credits, refundable and non-refundable.

A refundable tax credit can be greater than the tax owed. In essence, taxpayers not only have their tax liability reduced to zero, but also receive a refund of the excess credit.

A non-refundable credit can only reduce tax liabilities to zero. A taxpayer should also note that when you claim a credit, you are getting a dollar for dollar reduction of your total tax liability. For example, if your taxable income is $200 and your credits total $150, you only owe tax on $50.

Let's go over some of the more common tax credits:

The Child Tax Credit:

The Child Tax Credit is a refundable credit. Every taxpayer who has a qualifying child is entitled to a $1,000 credit for each child. In order to have a qualifying child the child must be under the age of 17, a citizen of the U.S., the taxpayer's child, sibling, stepchild, or foster child and the taxpayer must be allowed to claim the personal exemption with respect to that child. Remember if you received a check from the IRS last May, that was an advance of the child tax credit and it must be accounted for on your 2003 return.

The Child and Dependent Care Credit:

This is a non-refundable credit. The Child and Dependent Care Credit is structured to help with child and dependent day care expenses as long as the taxpayer or spouse are gainfully employed. To be eligible for the credit, a taxpayer must maintain a household for any dependents under the age of 13.

The credit may also be claimed for any person who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for themselves. The maximum day care credit a taxpayer may claim is $3,000 for one qualifying child or dependent or $6,000 if two or more are involved.

Earned Income Credit:

The earned income credit is a refundable credit. It provides tax relief to lower income taxpayers who are gainfully employed. Taxpayers without qualifying children must:

- have earned income
- be between the ages of 25-65
- not be claimed as a dependent on another return
- live in the U.S. for more than six months
- have earned income and adjusted gross income under $11,230 ($12,230 for married filing joint) and
- use any filing status except married filing separately.

For taxpayers with qualifying children they must

- have a qualifying child live in the home for more than six months of the year
- have earned income under $29,666 for one qualifying child ($33,692 for two or more children) and
- File a joint return if married. Married filing joint taxpayers must have earned income under $30,666 for one child and $34,692 for two or more children. If the taxpayer is married a married filing joint return status must be used.

Many Soldiers who were deployed last year will qualify for the earned income credit this year because the income earned while in the combat zone is tax-free which ultimately lowers their total taxable income thus qualifying them for the Earned Income Credit.

Education Credits:

Education credits are non-refundable credits. There are two types of educational credits available to taxpayers, but note only one can be claimed on the tax return for the same person.

The first is the Hope Scholarship Credit, which is a credit for the first two years of a student's college education. This credit can be worth up to $1,500 and is a per student credit.

The second credit is the Lifetime Learning Credit, which is available for any level of higher education. The credit allowed is 20 percent of the first $10,000 spent on tuition paid by the taxpayer and is a per return credit. Please note that if a taxpayer attends eArmyU or has any qualified tuition expenses paid by the military, these credits are not available.

In addition to the many credits a taxpayer may claim, we also have "above the line" deductions, which can lower a taxpayer's gross income. Remember, deductions are not a dollar for dollar reduction in total tax liability, so they are not worth as much as a credit.

Common 'above the line' deductions:

- Student Loan Interest Deduction: A taxpayer may be able to deduct up to $2,500 for interest paid on a qualified student loan. This is reported to the taxpayer on a 1098-E. The deduction is phased out for taxpayers with incomes ranging from $100,000 to $130,000 for joint filers and $50,000 to $65,000 for all other filers.
- Tuition and Fees Deduction: In addition to the Hope and Lifetime Learning Credit, the tuition and fees deduction is simply another alternative to assist students with their qualified educational expenses. A student can deduct up to $3,000 by using this above the line deduction.

Taxpayers need to be aware that they can choose only the Hope credit, Lifetime Learning Credit, or the Tuition and Fees Deduction when filing their tax return for the same student.

- Other common "above the line" deductions include the Educator Expenses Deduction, IRA Deduction, Archer Medical Savings Account Deduction, Moving Expenses Deduction, of Self Employment Tax Deduction, Self Employed Health Insurance Deduction, Penalty on Early Withdrawal of Savings Deduction, Alimony Paid Deduction and the Hybrid Car Deduction.

Itemized Deductions:

Before a taxpayer files his taxes, he needs to determine if it is more beneficial to take the standard deduction or to itemize his deductions. In order for the taxpayer to itemize his deductions, the total itemized deductions need to be more than the standard deduction.

The standard deduction rates for this tax year are: Single and Married Filing Separate $4,750; Married Filing Joint and Qualifying Widow $9,500; Head of Household $7,000.

For example, if you are married filing joint, the total amount of itemized deductions needs to exceed $9,500 in order to itemize.

Examples of itemized deductions:

- Unreimbursed medical and dental expenses must be more than 7.5 percent of the taxpayer's Adjusted Gross Income.
- Taxes Paid: (include state, local, and real property taxes)
- Mortgage Interest
- Points paid on a home
- Charitable Contributions
- Casualty and Theft Losses
- Employee Business Expenses (It should be noted that BDU purchases and dry cleaning expenses are NOT deductible.)
- Miscellaneous Deductions (Employee business expenses and miscellaneous deductions must be more than 2 percent of the taxpayers Adjusted Gross Income.)

Other information about tax law can be found at http://www.irs.gov. If you would like to consult with someone regarding your taxes, come by the Fort Benning Installation Tax Center. The Tax Center is open now through April 15.

Normal hours of operation are 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday, and 10:30 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

The Tax Center will also be open four Saturdays during the filing season. (The tentative Saturday dates are March 13 and 27 and April 3 and 10.) The hours of operation will be 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

All customers are seen on a first come, first serve basis.

There is parking available in the front (off Ingersoll Avenue) and the back (off Lumpkin Road) of Building 880.

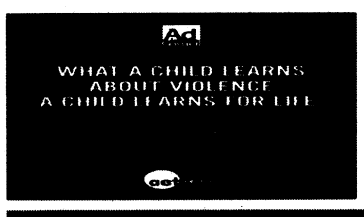
Availability of the Draft Environmental Impact Statement for the Digital Multi-Purpose Range Complex at Fort Benning, GA

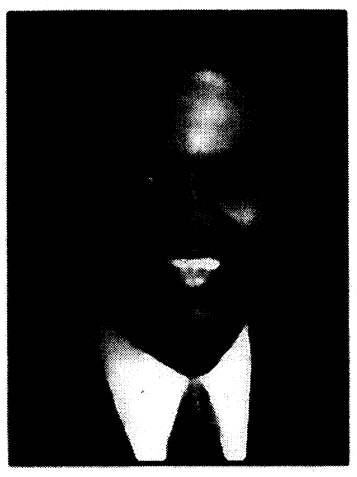
The Digital Multi-Purpose Range Complex (DMPRC) would provide gunnery training facilities for the Bradley Fighting Vehicle (BFV) and the Abrams M1A1 Tank System (Tank), providing the capability for both active and reserve components to train to required standards under realistic conditions.



Fort Benning proposes to construct, operate, and maintain a DMPRC. The DMPRC would provide a state-of-the-art range facility to meet the Army's training needs for soldiers to conduct gunnery courses in a realistic training environment by expanding the Installation's training capacity. The current ranges on Fort Benning do not meet modern gunnery standards and are inadequate to support full gunnery training and qualifications, requiring training to modified standards. The project would include construction of the firing and target area, installation of fiber optics, construction of support facilities, upgrading and construction of associated roadways, installation of utilities to support the site, construction of a helipad, construction of other related equipment and facilities, and operation and maintenance of the DMPRC.

DATES: Comments: To be considered in preparation for the Final Environmental Impact Statement (EIS), comments must be received not later 45 days after publication of this notice by the EPA in the federal register by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Meetings: March 2, 2004, 6 p.m., at the Elizabeth Bradley Turner Center, Columbus State University, 4225 University Avenue, Columbus, GA, and March 4, 2004, 6 p.m., at the Marion Middle School Gymnasium, 100 East Burkhalter Avenue, Buena Vista, GA.



ADDRESSES: Please direct written comments or requests for copies of the Draft EIS (DEIS) to Richard McDowell, Public Affairs Officer, U.S. Army Infantry Center, ATTN: ATZB-PO, Fort Benning, GA, 31905-5122 or e-mail to mcdowellr@benning.army.mil.

Dexter kids combine language, art, mentoring

Project includes variety of lessons

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

John Winningham and his fellow Dexter Elementary School preK students are still a few years shy of the reading comprehension level required for Black Stallion.

But that's no reason to miss out on a great American classic.

Dexter fourth-graders spent Wednesday morning sharing the novel with their "preK buddies" using hand-crafted story wheels.

Teacher Susie Reynolds tasked her students to read the book and select what they considered the eight most significant events in the book. Then, they summarized those points in a eight-piece pie chart and used their creative genius to add illustrations and other graphic enhancements.

Students were encouraged to use a variety of artistic means. Free-hand drawings, computer graphics, stickers, even old text books lying around the house found their way into the story wheels.

Fourth-grader Ashley Bostick said reading the book and picking out the highlights wasn't that big of a challenge, but putting it all together was a project in itself.

"The complicated part was figuring out how to put it all in order," Bostick explained, showing her elaborately illustrated story wheel.

"I spent a weekend on it, thinking about what I read and trying to put the images in mind on paper," she said.

But the time and effort was well worth the results.

"The artwork on these is just really incredible," Reynolds said. "The students are very proud of these, and these are going to be such keepsakes."

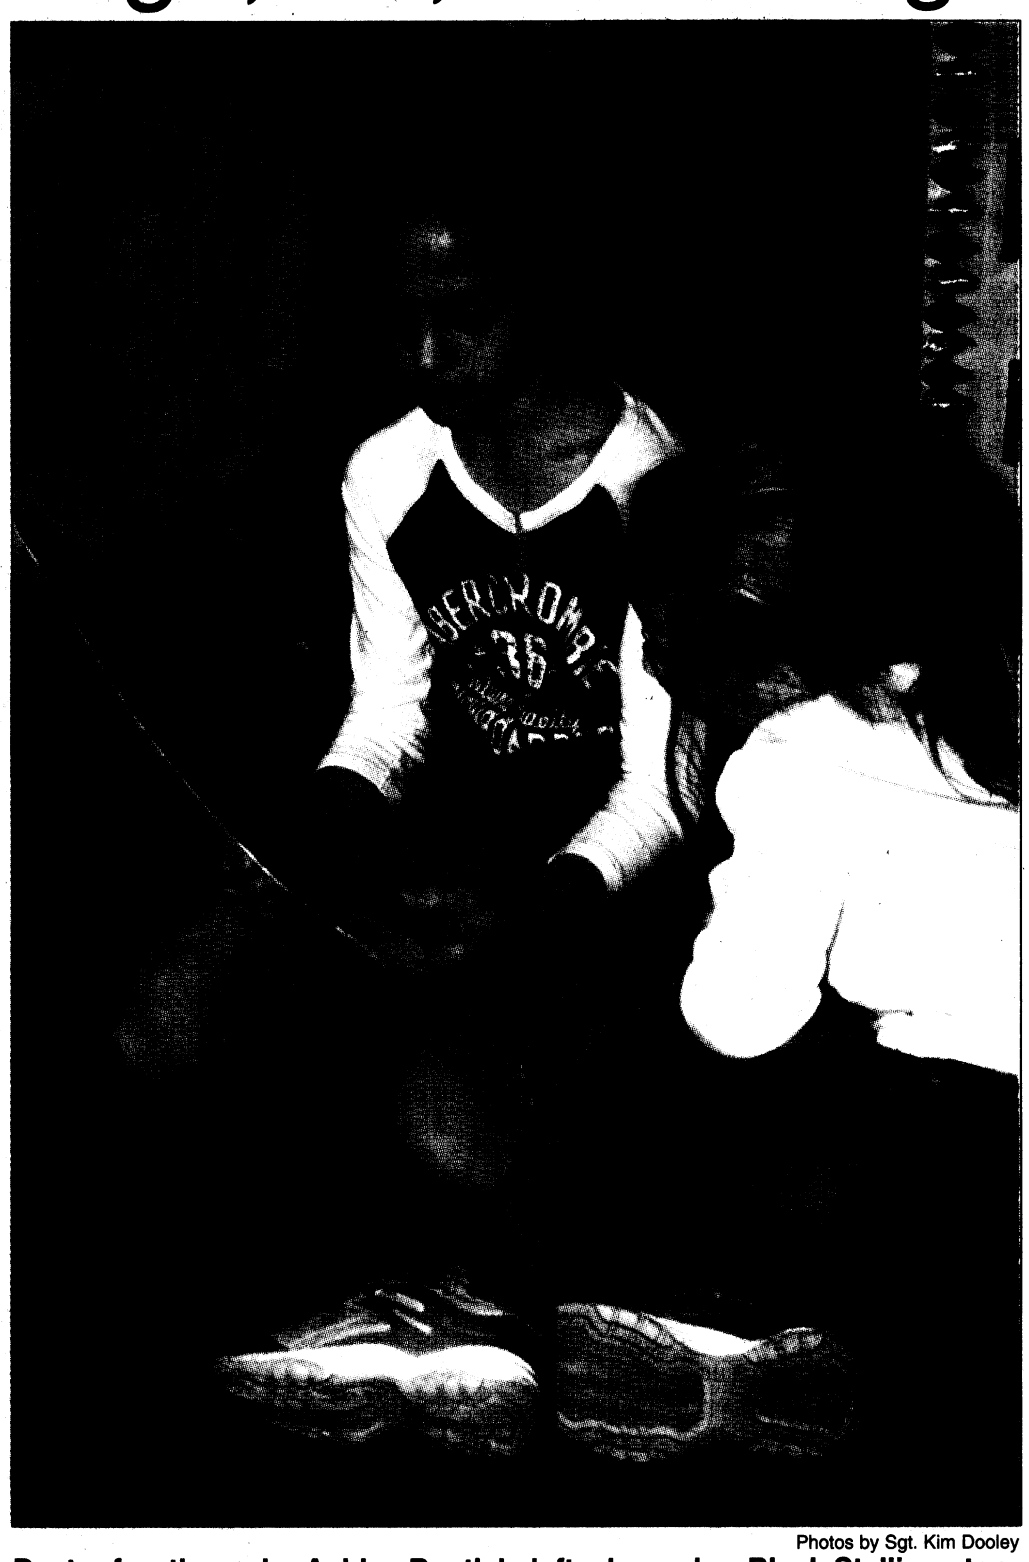
In fact, Reynolds got the idea for the project from a similar school assignment her own daughter brought home about six years ago — a project she kept and used as an example for her students this year.

By making the assignment a "home activity" — one the students' parents were able to help them with — it became even more of a precious memory, Reynolds said.

The story wheels also provided the students the opportunity to mentor the preK children, who they meet with every Thursday morning and afternoon to share education and fun. The classes watch movies, play games, work on the preK students' lessons and work on arts and crafts projects, said fourth-grader Jimmy Risberg, who shared his story wheel with Winningham.

"Every class has a buddy class in a different grade," Risberg said. "We help them with their learning, so they can understand what they're learning. It's fun to visit with the preK (students)."

Fellow fourth-grader Patrick Brito said he enjoyed drawing the pictures and sharing the wheel with his preK buddy, Cody Brummett.



He said their fellowship with their junior classmates is important.

"When they start studying certain things, we can make sure they actually get it," Brito said. "We help them learn how to read and write and how to cut and glue."

The students will have another opportunity to share their knowledge with fellow classmates Friday. All of Dexter's classes will rotate through Reynold's class for story wheel presentations.

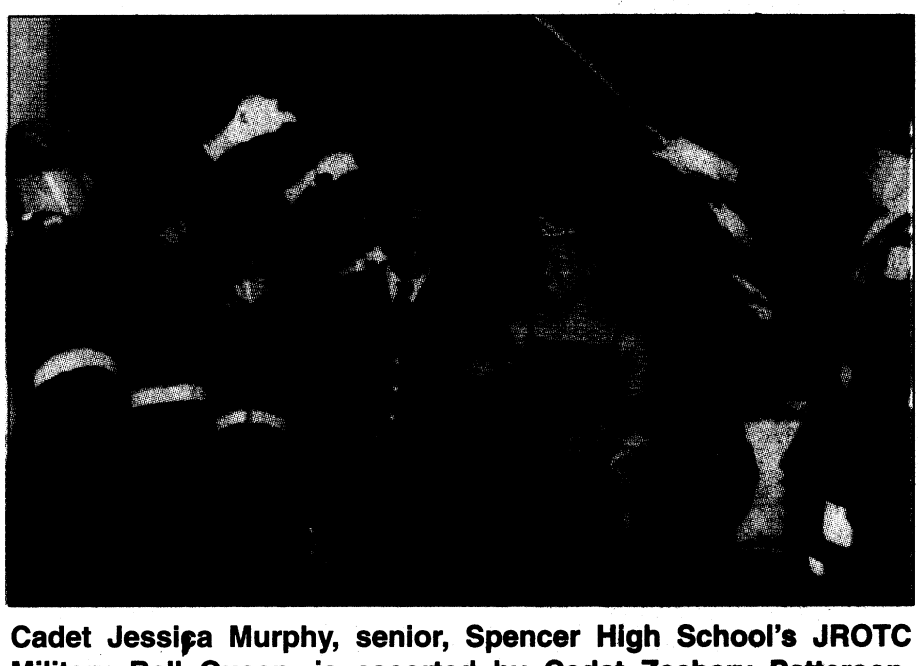
Cadets shine at annual ball

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

More than 1,200 Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps cadets and their dates turned out for the annual Military Ball at the Columbus Convention & Trade Center Feb. 7.



Eight JROTC programs from Muscogee County high schools, Central of Talbotton, Central of Phenix City, Russell County and Randolph–Clay high schools participated in the event, which is designed to train cadets in a social setting.

Eleven queens representing their high school JROTC programs were crowned.

REFLECTIONS

Within the workplace there are people from many different walks of life, with many different views and opinions.

We live in an ever-changing society of different nationalities and cultural beliefs. Every nationality functions with its own code. We all look at life through our own eyes.

Many problems in the workplace can be avoided if we recognize that we are all not the same and we need each other to accomplish the mission at hand.

Paul wrote in I Corinthians 12:12, "For as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body: so also is Christ."

Paul is explaining that although the parts of the body have their own unique functions, they work as a team to keep the body going.

Within the workplace we are all different with our own views and opinions, but we must come together as one body to accomplish the mission.

We must realize God has made us in his image, and we are all equal in his sight. Differences come out when we begin to put labels on each other.

Every person has a past full of both happiness and pain. As adults, we spend a lifetime trying to overcome the past.

Too often, people look at life only through their own eyes and experiences. Problems arise in the workplace when we are not willing to see or try to understand the other person's point of view.

Someone told me a long time ago, "Never judge a person unless you have walked in his or her shoes." Many misunderstandings could be worked out if we would take the time to listen and understand the other person.

Lack of respect is another reason for unrest in the workplace. As adults, we must be willing to respect everyone we come into contact with.

Often people are judged by their skin color and not given a chance to prove themselves. People judge others without getting to know the inner person that makes them who they are.

We should never judge a book by its cover. Open it and read it's content. We just might discover that this person is just like us with similar likes and dislikes.

Paul said in Romans 12:18, "If it be possible, as much as lieth in you, live peaceably with all men." This can happen only if we loosen the chains of racism, sexism and all those deep-rooted principles that have divided our nation for years.

Peace in the workplace can exist. The only person stopping it is you. Let your prejudices go and be free!

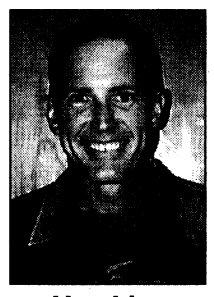
Whoa! Choose your valentine wisely



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

Do you know what the difference is, in military terms, between "strategic" and "tactical"?

Well, it's about as simple as this: tactical decisions determine the outcome of a battle, but strategic decisions determine the outcome of the entire war.

So what's that got to do with the month of February and that little guy in the diaper with the love missiles, Cupid? Well just like you can "win the battle, but lose the war" as a country, so too, you can either win big or lose big in the game of love.

How do you make sure that you're a strategic success — how do you choose a valentine that will last a lifetime? Just as in a critical military operation, it's all about proper planning through strategic questions and wise decisions.

Hawkins

With that in mind, here are Hawkins' six questions for choosing the right valentine!

Q. Is the person I'm considering marrying a happy person?

Q. Am I a better person, or am I worse for having this person in my life?

Q. Does he or she encourage me to be closer to or further away from my family and its values?

Q. Am I most often praised or criticized by my valentine in private or in public?

Q. How do those who love me most feel about him or her (parents, family, friends who know me well)?

Q. Am I closer to or further away from God and my values, and my convictions since I started seeing this person?

Want to know a little valentine secret? Happy, good, secure, positive people build happy, good, secure, positive relationships. If you are headed to the altar thinking, "Oh yeah, I'll alter him or her ...," you're making a strategic error that could cost you the whole enchilada! To a great extent, "what you see is what you get."

Just like we say in a military operation, "hope is not a method." The reality is that there is no more important decision that will affect your happiness this side of heaven than whom you marry. So choose your valentine very carefully and enjoy the success that comes with making a great strategic decision!

Want coaching on being or finding the right valentine? Come see us at The Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606 Soldier's Plaza, or pick up the phone and give us a call at 545-1760. We look forward to serving you!

Former Benning student in driver's seat

Columbus senior headed to Tuskegee

Bridgett Siter
Staff writer

Columbus High School senior Anthony Driver, the son of retired Col. Christopher and Carolyn Driver, is large and in charge. The 17-year-old, 6-foot-1-inch, 325-pound offensive lineman took control of his weight and his life last summer and wrote his ticket to Tuskegee University.

Driver, a 4-year varsity Blue Devils football player, dropped 40 pounds "by eating right and hitting the gym" before the start of the 2003 season.

In doing so, he increased his speed and caught the eye of recruiters from Tuskegee, Morehouse, Jacksonville State, Georgia Southern and Fort Valley.

Driver signed with the Tigers last week, a decision he said was easy after a January visit to Tuskegee, his mother's alma mater.

"They have a very good engineering program, it's close to home, and they have coaches you can get along with," he said. "Cool coaches."

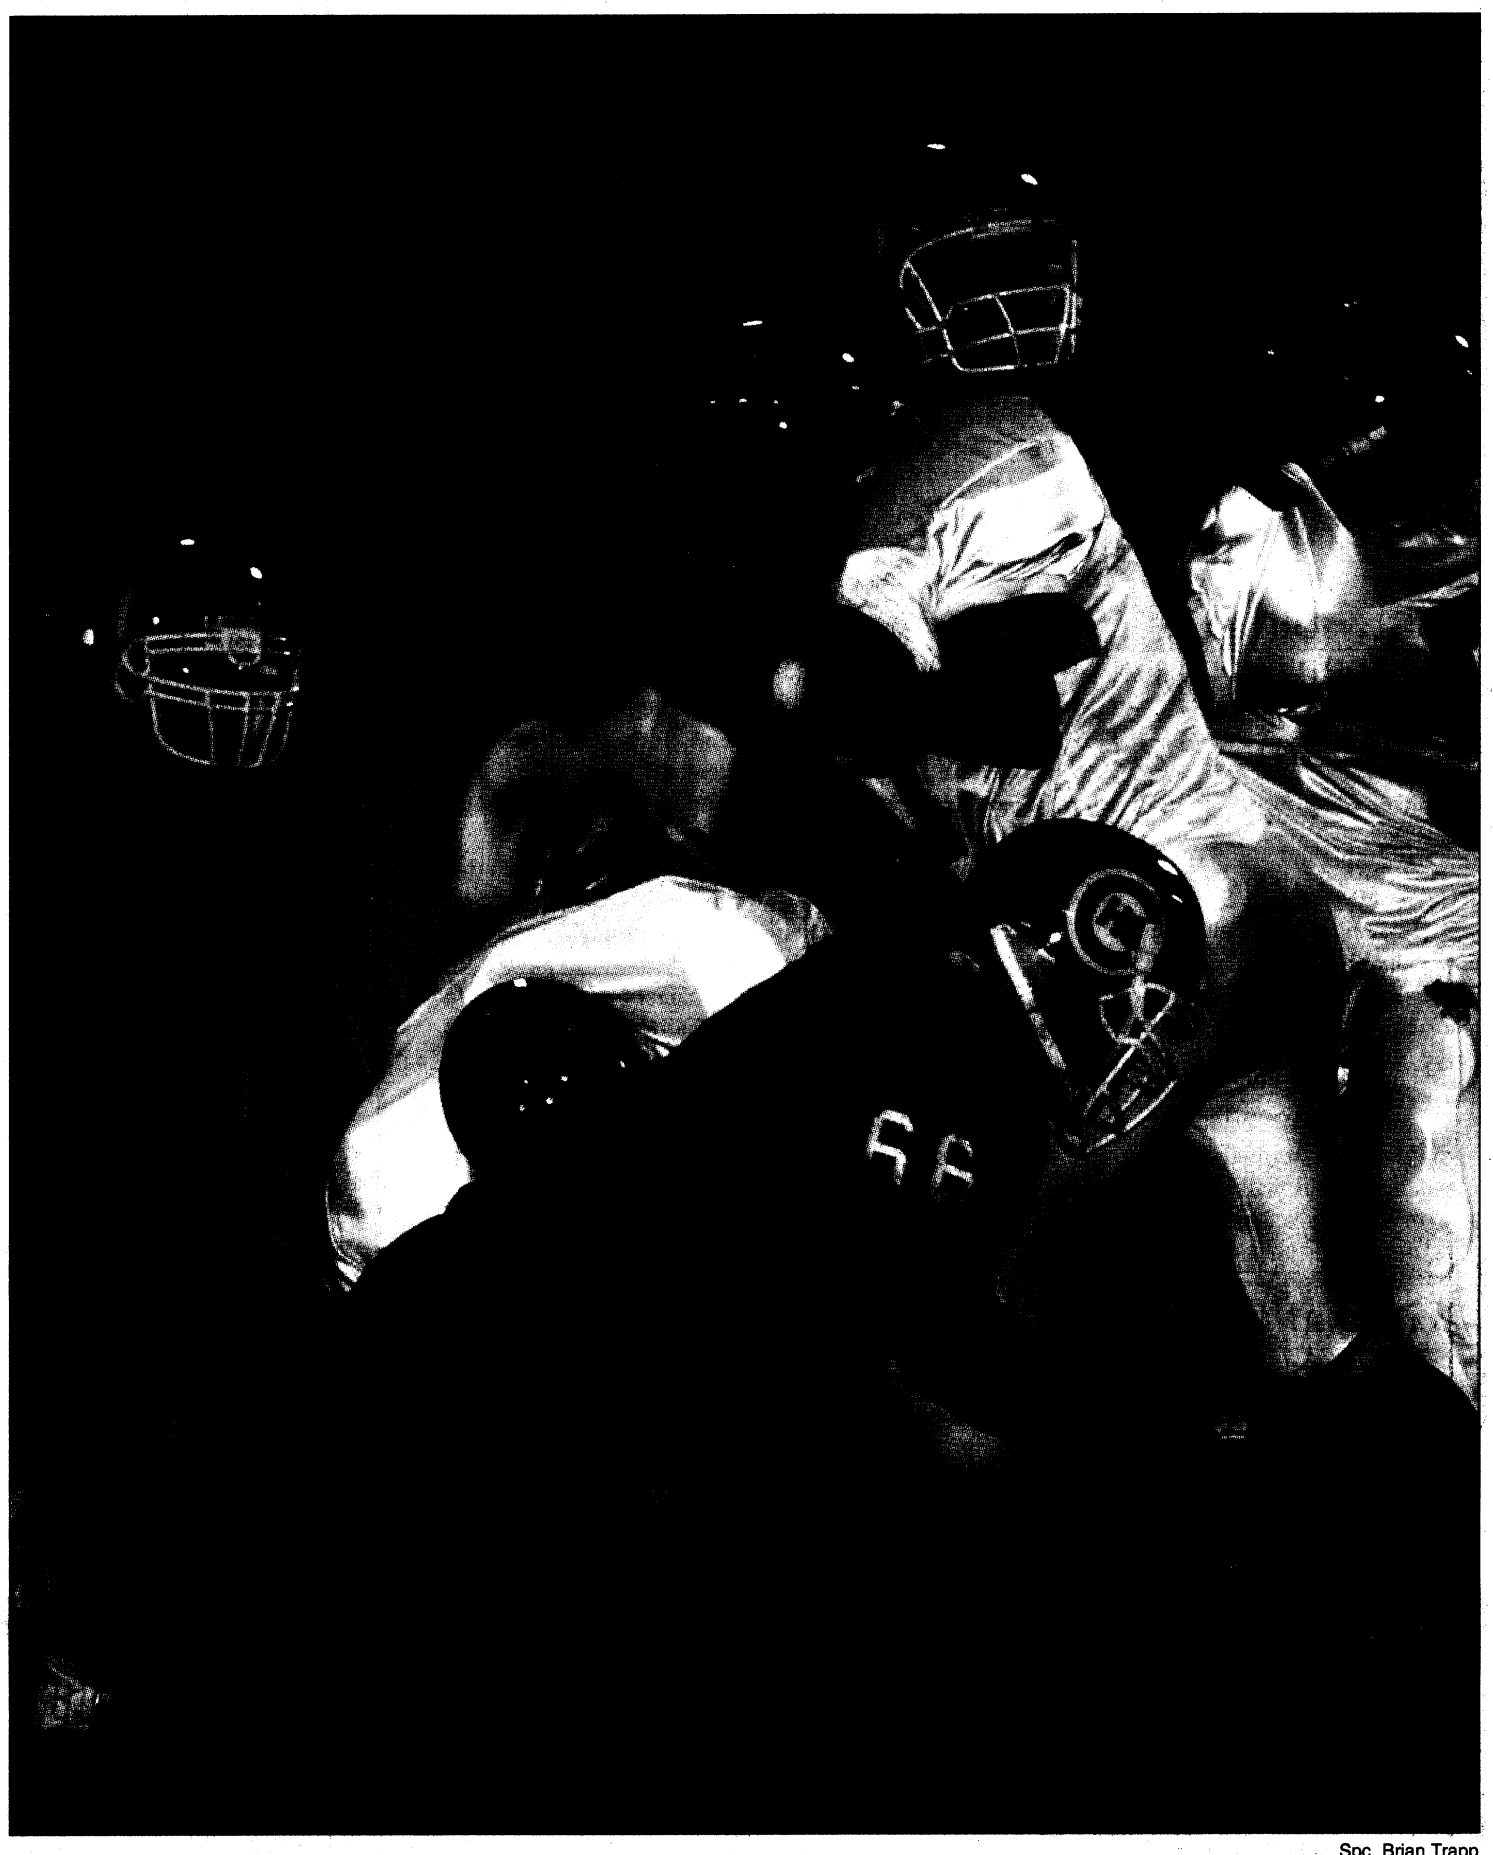
Though Carolyn urged her son to choose Tuskegee early on, she changed her tactics last fall.

Driver

"She just told me to make the best decision for me," Driver said. "She left it all up to me."

Driver, with a 3.0 grade point average, made the All-Bi-City football team last year, played in the Georgia Athletic Coaches Association's North-South game and was listed among the Columbus Ledger-Enquirer's Dandy Dozen.

Columbus offensive line coach Jim Wamble credits Driver with much of the success of the Blue Devils' offense.



"Our offense improved a lot, and Anthony was really instrumental in that," Wamble said. "He's a good player and a good student and an all-around good kid. But he's a leader, too, a team leader. And he did it the right way, I think. He led by example, and he worked hard."

Though Driver calls football his greatest passion, he's a standout on the Blue Devils track team, placing ninth in the state last year in discus.

Anthony Driver also competes in track and field discus events.

Kayaks available soon at Outdoor Rec

Sea kayaks will be available for rent for open water use, not white-water.

Post buys watercraft for family fun

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Outdoor Recreation Center purchased two two-person and two single-person sea kayaks for use by Soldiers and their families. They'll be available in the spring.

"We've always had canoes and johnboats available for rent," said Cliff Hughes, recreation program director. "Now, we've got something new and exciting, and something I believe all of the Soldiers and their families will enjoy. It brings something new to the table."

Rental prices, which will include all equipment, have not been decided, but will be lower than the average retail cost for rental, Hughes said.

All profits will go to the MWR fund.

The sea kayaks, which cost nearly $1,500 each, are designed for open water, not white water, and will be available for use on the Chattahoochee River and the various lakes around west Georgia and east Alabama.

"These kayaks are awesome," Hughes said. "They are really easy to paddle and don't tip over as easily as the canoe."

The rec center will get life vests and a training video on kayaks, so people understand the hazards and know how to safely operate a kayak.

According to boatwashington.org, more than 80 percent of all kayaking accidents between 2000 and 2002 involved people who had never taken a kayak safety course.

"Safety can't be taken for granted," Hughes said.

"It's a very serious issue, and we want to make sure that everyone knows that."

The kayaks aren't the only things available for rent at the rec center. Canopies, canoes, johnboats, barbecue grills, sports packages and vehicle storage are also available for rent at the center, building 1707.

The center is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Friday and 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. Saturdays.

For a complete list of rental prices or for more information on items for rent, call the outdoor recreation center at 545-7978.

College coaches to hold soccer clinic

Four-team tournament afterwards

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation will sponsor a soccer clinic for players and coaches from 8:30 to 10 a.m., Feb. 21 at Doughboy Stadium.

The clinic, which will be held prior to a four-team tournament, will be led by coaches and players from the College of Charleston in Charleston, S.C.

"We wanted to get out here and help the youth players learn how to play the game," said Ralph Lundy, Charleston's head soccer coach. "We want to teach them what it takes to be successful on the soccer field."

"What it takes," Lundy said, are basic skills, such as dribbling, passing and receiving.

"We want to teach them to have a good attitude when they go out onto the soccer field," Lundy said. "That and teamwork are the two most important things someone needs to know."

> "We wanted to get out here and help the youth players learn how to play the game. We want to teach them what it takes to be successful on the soccer field."
> Ralph Lundy
> College of Charleston's head soccer coach

Lundy, a former Marine officer, said that doing clinics on military installations means a lot to him.

"The military was good to me," Lundy said. "But once I got out, I knew I wanted to coach. So, for me to help out military children is a real honor."

Linda Laine, the youth sports and fitness director, said she jumped at the opportunity of having a clinic before the tournament.

"This will be a great opportunity for the children to learn about the game from a very experienced coach," Laine said. "He's going to teach them the skills he teaches at his weeklong academy, and it won't cost the participants anything."

The participants will also get one-on-one instruction from Lundy's players.

"I always teach my players about the importance of giving back to the community," Lundy said. "It's a lesson they need to know, not just while they're in college, but also when they get out. It's always great to teach skills you know to those who don't."

After the clinic, the College of Charleston will join Georgia Southern University, Lander University and Emory University in an all-day tournament.

"We're looking forward to the tournament," Lundy said, "especially since it's on a military installation. Some of my players have never been on a military installation, and this will be a great opportunity to see one."

The tournament will start after the clinic at 10 a.m. at Doughboy Stadium and is free to the public. For more information, call 545-3582.

Army women's softball team preps for local tourney

West Point cadets to play U.S. team

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Army Women's Softball team received an invitation to the National Fastpitch Coaches' Association Leadoff Classic to kick off the 2004 softball season.

The tournament, which begins Feb. 27, will be at the South Commons softball fields in Columbus and will feature some of the top teams in the nation.

"We were very proud of our invitation to the tournament," said Army head coach Jim Flowers. "It shows that the association took notice of the efforts our team has put out the last couple of years and wanted to reward us with a spot in this year's tournament."

West Point's team will open the tournament against fifth-ranked Washington Huskies, and will also play the 10th-ranked Texas Longhorns and the 19th-ranked Florida State Seminoles in pool play.

"I'm very excited to be playing in this tournament and honored to play against some of the best teams in the nation," said junior first baseman Lisa Huntington. "Playing in the tournament will provide our team with the confidence in ourselves that we can play and compete with some of the top teams in the nation. This confidence will carry us through our season, and hopefully, we will face some of these teams again in the the NCAA tournament."

Teams included in this year's field are the third-ranked California Bears, the fourth-ranked Oklahoma Sooners, the seventh-ranked Georgia Bulldogs, the eighth-ranked Nebraska Cornhuskers and last years classic champions, the University of Massachusetts Minutemen.

"This tournament will put the Army softball team above and beyond the competition on the East Coast," said junior second baseman Lindsay March. "No other team that we play in our league will have the experience against teams of this high caliber, so I know we'll be far ahead of the other teams in the Patriot League."

Since the team received their invitation to the tournament, the players have focused on what it will take to win a tournament of this magnitude.

"It will take confidence and teamwork for us to come out on top," said senior pitcher Ashlie Christian. "We can easily compete with any of the teams in the tournament. It's just a matter of us believing that we can do it and not getting down on ourselves if we make a mistake."

In addition to playing some of the top college teams, the Army women's softball team also has a game against the U.S. National team at 6:30 p.m. Feb. 28 on the Stadium Field at South Commons.

"Every athlete dreams of playing in the Olympics, and I am no different," Christian said. "I would have to say that playing against the Olympic team is the next best thing to actually playing on the team. It's a real honor to be able to play them, and we plan on giving them a tough game."

The opening ceremony for the competition begins at 11 a.m. Feb. 27. The games are scheduled to start at noon. Adult tournament passes are $20, $12 for a tournament pass for children 12 and younger, $8 for an adult day ticket, $5 for a day ticket for children 12 and younger and $4 for each ticket for youth groups of 10 or more.

For more information on the tournament, call the Columbus Sports Council at 660-1996.

Do You Know Your Purpose?

You are invited to our Purpose Driven Life
Campaign beginning Sunday, February 22 at Wynnton United Methodist Church!

Do you ever ask "What on earth am I here for?" You are not here by accident! You were created by God for five purposes and until you understand them, life will not make sense.

Beginning February 22nd, Wynnton Methodist will be participating in a 40 Days of Purpose Campaign. This spiritual growth Campaign is designed to answer life's most important questions.

Find out your purpose!
You are invited to join us! Everyone is welcome.

What is a hero?

A girl who finds the courage to try something new. A boy who discovers the strength to reach further than he ever has. These kids, and thousands like them, have the hope of a better future and the power to make it happen. By taking part in afterschool programs, kids explore, learn, grow, and most importantly, find the hero inside themselves. Soldiers wear flag on uniforms

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

U.S. flag patches will be worn on the right shoulder of every Soldier's uniform once funding is provided.

Patch shows Soldiers in fight together

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The battle dress uniform is about to get a new look.

A new uniform policy message approved by the chief of staff of the Army expands the wear of the reverse-side, full-color U.S. flag on the right shoulder of all utility uniforms.

The message, dated Saturday, states that Soldiers' commitment to fight and win is best exemplified by permanently wearing the U.S. flag, regardless of deployment status.

Soldiers will have until Oct.1, 2005, to have the insignia sewn on all utility uniforms, including BDUs, desert camouflage uniforms, maternity BDUs, field jackets, aircrew BDUs and combat vehicle crewman uniforms.

Some Soldiers in Infantry Hall are already sporting the new full-color patch, which is sewn an inch below the right shoulder seam or 1/8 of an inch below a combat patch.

Drill sergeants get lesson in new PT

Standardized PT implemented for IET Soldiers

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The Army Physical Fitness School hosted a four-day course to train Fort Benning's drill sergeants on the Training and Doctrine Command Standard Physical Training Program for initial entry Soldiers at Doughboy Stadium this week.

The training, which provided instruction to roughly 94 NCOs, is part of the school's ongoing mission to teach Accession Command's drill sergeants how to conduct PT for Soldiers in training, said Lt. Col. William Rieger, APFS commandant.

About five years ago, the APFS was tasked to evaluate PT in the training base and develop a systematic approach to initial entry training PT to strengthen Soldiers physically while controlling injuries, incorporating the most up-to-date knowledge and expertise in physical fitness and exercise physiology.

"Our hypothesis was that if we trained Soldiers in a more prescriptive, standardized manner during PT and we created that PT program as providing a foundation for all the other things that you do in basic training during the day, then the Soldier going through basic training would be stronger physically and not get hurt during ... things like the bayonet assault course or the obstacle course," Rieger said.

At the time, the IET Soldiers' PT was geared toward their success on the Army Physical Fitness Test rather than the physical stress of their Soldier tasks, Rieger said.

The standardized PT reduces the emphasis on APFT preparation and focuses instead on building Soldiers' fitness to reduce injuries and improve

Drunken driver tells story, consequences

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It's no secret — America has a serious problem with drunken driving, and Soldiers are no exception.

Last weekend alone, Fort Benning military policemen cited six Soldiers for driving under the influence — two of them underage. But those were just the drivers who were caught. How many more got away with it?

A few guilty parties may think twice before trying to pull it off again if they were in Marshall Auditorium Wednesday afternoon for Just Call Me Crash ... The Denise Wagoner Story.

Wagoner, a former model from Wisconsin, traveled to Fort Benning to share her experiences as a drunk driving accident victim with more than a thousand Soldiers and civilians.

The program included her video, which shows graphic images of her injuries — injuries so gruesome, the emergency room nurse who tended to Wagoner quit after that night.

The accident put Wagoner in a coma with a 3-percent chance of living. When she awoke, she was brain-damaged, blind and horribly disfigured.

After 15 surgeries, including seven on her face, and more than $4 million in medical expenses, Wagoner considers herself a "medical miracle."

"I broke every bone in my upper body but had no internal injuries — that's impossible," she said. "I broke every bone in my face but didn't even chip a tooth — that's impossible."

Denise Wagoner, a reformed drunken driver spent a week in a coma after crashing this car driving with a BAC 0.19.

Despite her positive outlook, Wagoner is haunted daily by the fate of the driver — a life sentence to live in pain and darkness. She was the driver.

Nine years ago Thursday, Wagoner climbed behind the wheel of her car with a blood alcohol content of 0.19. Within 15 minutes, her car left the road and rolled five times, throwing her 75 feet from the

Maybe it does take a village to raise a child.

The other day, at the Relay for Life kick-off ceremony, Bubba Green talked about his family's fight with cancer. His daughter, 4-year-old Hailey Green, is the honorary chairperson of this year's relay.

Hailey was diagnosed with cancer a year ago — a Wilms tumor, the fourth most common cancer in children. Her left kidney was removed last March, followed by a series of chemotherapy and radiation. Now her future looks bright.

Hailey's dad thanked God for preserving her life, and he credited the many people who enveloped his family with love and support during their battle with cancer.

To call cancer an individual problem is naive. To call it a national problem is impersonal.

Cancer is a community problem — a village problem, if you will. It affects families and friends and coworkers and neighbors. And so on and so on.

That's why the folks at the American Cancer Society sponsor the annual Relay for Life in communities around the country. Call it a neighborhood watch, of sorts.

The relay is the American Cancer Society's biggest fund raiser. Last year alone, Columbus raked in $236,550 for cancer research and treatment. At first glance, that sounds pretty impressive. But wait. The way I figure, per capita, that figures to about $1.27 for the entire population of Muscogee County.

Or put it this way: If 4-year-old Hailey Green came knocking on your door for help, you gave her the loose change from your couch.

I think we can do better, and I do mean we, starting with me.

The local cancer society has set its goal to raise $300,000 this year. To do that, they will need at least 150 teams to participate in the event, May 14-15.

I'll go on record to say my team will raise its share, at least $1,650. Will yours?

What's that? No team?

Come on over and join mine, or contact the local American Cancer Society at 324-4573 to find out how you can start a team of your own.

Together, we can help put an end to cancer.

Photo mislabeled

The photo on page A-6 of last week's paper is not a photo of a P-47 aircraft as the caption says. It's an early version of the P-51 aircraft. It's definitely not a P-47, since the P-47 had a radial engine and not the inline engine shown in the photo.

Hugs to Kuwait Web site receives support

We've had a wonderful experience with "Hugs to Kuwait — Adopt A Soldier."

This organization was founded by Pam Bates in January 2003 to show support for her husband and members of his unit. Word spread, and soon Hugs was supporting many units in Operation Iraqi Freedom and other theaters around the world. Mrs. Bates' leadership has spread to the members and it's evident in the camaraderie shown by all those involved. Not only has this Web site supported our military heroes and their families, but it has supported each other.

We became members in March 2003, and it has made a major impact in our lives. My sister Monica is disabled and before joining Hugs, she felt out of touch. Since adopting a Soldier and getting involved with Hugs, Monica's health has improved.

The primary focus of Hugs is to let our military know we support them and their families. Because of this Web site, thousands of Soldiers get mail or a care package, and as we all know, morale is key to success for these men and women. The support members give each other and our heroes has made an impact that rivals anything we've ever been involved with. Writing our adopted Soldiers and going through the ups and downs with them and their families has proven to be a Godsend.

Support comes in many forms and Mrs. Bates and her organization have given Americans the forum to stand together, united, to do our part to fight terrorism on the home front. We help each other by loving, supporting and praying for our troops. Our lives have changed, and we're privileged to be a part of Hugs to Kuwait. It's an honor we shall cherish always.

Heidi and Monica Narr
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Our two eldest sons and son-in-law serve in the U.S. military — Logan in the Army, Derek in the Air Force and Adrian, my son-in-law, in the Seabees Construction Battalion. Logan served two tours in Kuwait — the last tour led his unit into Iraq at the beginning of the war. Adrian's unit built a bridge across the Tigris River during the war. Derek is about to deploy to Iraq. I want you to know how this mother copes.

Last March, my family and I spent many sleepless nights — as did others who had family members deployed. I spent hours glued to the television, hoping to catch a glimpse of Logan or Adrian. One morning, I saw an interview with Pamela Bates, the founder of Hugs To Kuwait — Adopt A Soldier.

I was deeply touched as Pam told the reporter that she and her husband were concerned for Soldiers who didn't have family members to send letters of support. My heart broke, as I know my son, Logan, had said the same thing.

I logged on to Hugs to Kuwait in March 2003 and joined a wonderful support group. This site has not only been informative, but it has protected the integrity of our Soldiers and their families. I'm so thankful for the folks at Hugs for their support, their insights and prayer when I needed it. (Boy, did I need prayer!)

The Soldiers and families who benefitted will forever be grateful. We have had members who have lost loved ones, members who still have family deployed, and a few of us who have family that have returned and are coping — one day at a time. I'm thankful for folks like Pamela Bates who so graciously gives of herself to promote the well-being of our American Soldiers and their families! I think this woman deserves a big HOOAH! and more!

Kathleen V. Sibert

The Hugs-To-Kuwait — Adopt A Soldier Web site has brought together cyber patriots from all over the world. Through it, I have come to know so many wonderful people. Being a New Yorker, it is important for me to show support for our military, especially those who are deployed. Our wonderful troops have volunteered to ... eliminate the possibility that such devastation could ever again visit my city or any other.

When the events of 9-11 occurred, I felt so alone. Since joining Hugs, I have met Soldiers, their families, friends and other citizens who react as though those airliners crashed right into their own backyards. Through the good folks I've met, I have come to fully understand exactly how "united" these United States really are.

The site has done such wonderful things in connecting the citizens with the Soldiers and their families. It allows me to be there for Soldiers. I've spent time in the chat room comforting the moms of fallen heroes. The first night of the march into Baghdad, I had the privilege of "virtually" holding the hand of a young wife who was terrified for the safety of her husband. We stayed in the chat room until 3 a.m. I knew it was more than idle chatter and the role I played was appreciated. I feel I cannot do enough for those who defend what Americans cherish most — our freedoms. We must be active in the War on Terrorism, because patriotism is not a spectator sport. May God bless these UNITED States of America. HOOAH!!!

I joined Hugs To Kuwait in March 2003, right before our Soldiers rolled into Iraq. We adopted a Soldier who was not receiving much support from home. My husband and I felt privileged to send letters, care packages and e-mails. These young men and women are so brave ... and HTK made it possible for us to show our appreciation.

I've listened to military spouses and friends worry and grieve for their loved ones. It is wonderful they have a place to talk, vent and laugh.

Pamela Bates has (made) sure no one feels left alone and unappreciated. HTK is a wonderful community, where people of all ages (children included) come together to support our troops and one another.

I believe Pam is an angel sent from God. Her only intention is to bring people together to support our military.

Debby Llewelyn

My only daughter, the oldest of six children, is an Air Force cop preparing for deployment.

When she signed up, I saw an article in Parade magazine about a woman who began a site to support our troops. For the year I've been a member, I've felt truly blessed by what I read and hear daily. It is a wonderful way to show support for one another.

Daily, the media attempts to bombard us with negativity. Daily, someone mentions their "opinion" of what our troops are doing. Not everyone agrees with what they do, but we must care enough to support them. They serve our country, and they go where they are told. I cannot think of anyone more deserving of our support.

To those who would be negative and hurtful to Pamela Bates, I say, please stop. This woman has done a service to this country and deserves respect and appreciation. Her husband (who is a hero to us all) is back on our soil and she STILL works hard at what she began last year.

To all of those who support our troops, I say "thank you" from the bottom of my heart. I ask that we all continue to lift up in prayer those who've lost loved ones and to be constantly mindful of the sacrifices Soldiers and their families make.

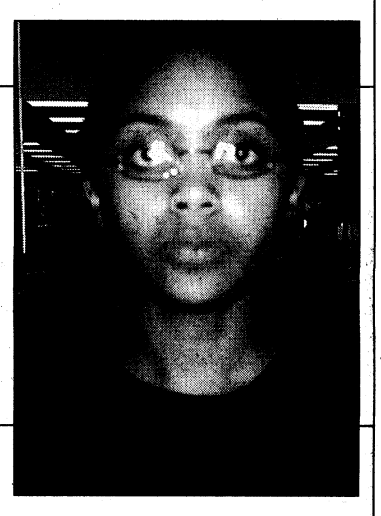
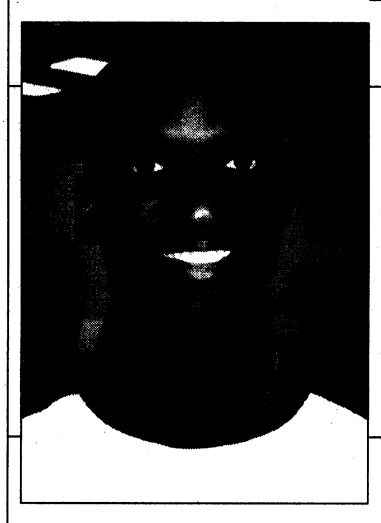
It was reported in the Jan. 30 edition of the Bayonet that members of the staff at the Fort Benning Tax Center are certified H&R Block tax preparers. They are, in fact, trained and certified by the IRS.

VARIOUS VOICES

Why is it important to support our troops while they are overseas?



Retired Staff Sgt. Bobby Saffold, Smith Station, Ala. — "It's important to support our troops, because they're overseas protecting us so we don't have to be fighting those people here."



Jaime C. Jackson, family member — "To show them that we're still thinking about them and that we do care."

Staff Sgt. Al Herrera, 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "For Morale. Those guys need as much morale as possible. They need to know we are behind them 110 percent."

Shatanna J. Cassidy, family member — "If Soldiers know they have family and friends standing behind them it will help them perform better and return home safely."

Staff Sgt. Adrian L. Gadsen, 1st Battalion, 118th Infantry Regiment, S.C. National Guard — "They are supporting us. That's my final answer."

Margarita Reyes, family member — "While my husband was overseas, I gave him my support and told him to keep his faith. It's important to help them keep their faith in God so they all stay strong come home safely."

MPs make a difference in post schools

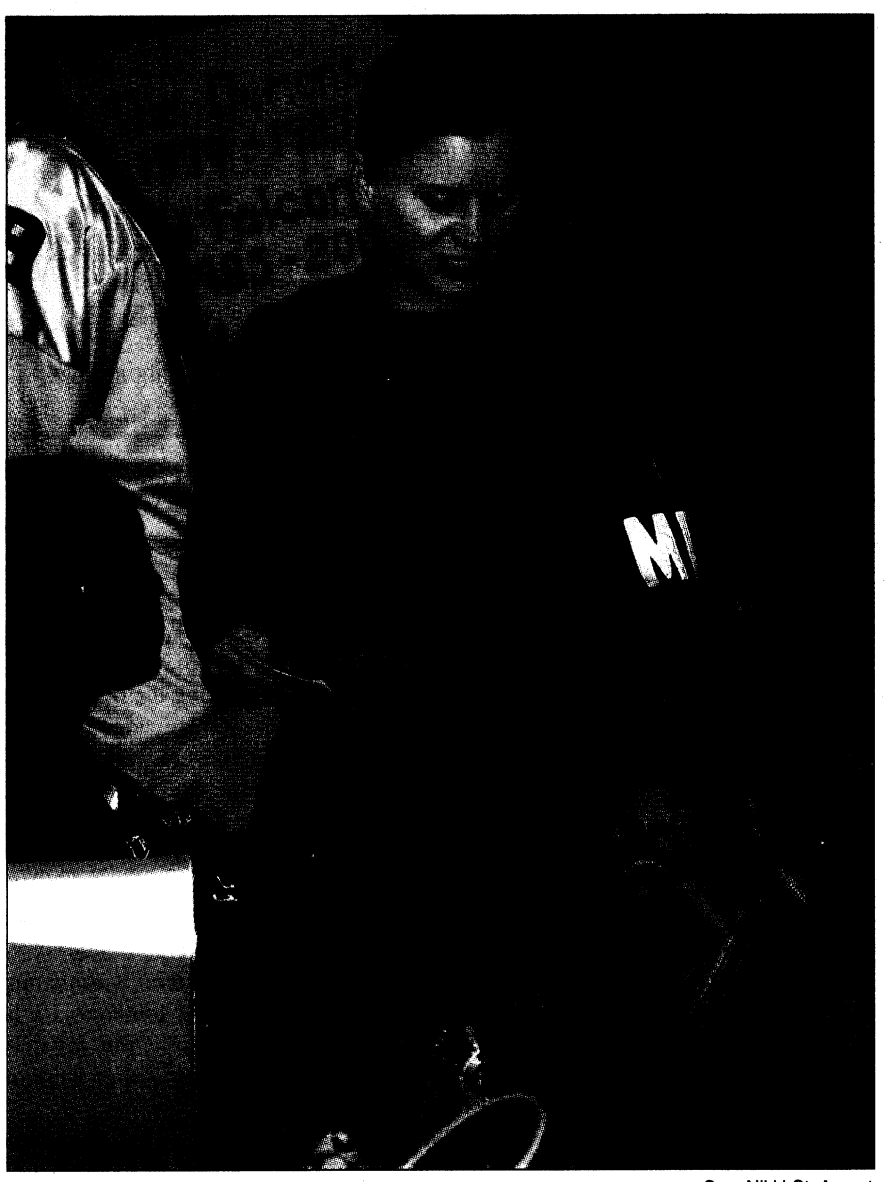
Proactive program helps deter problems

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Some military police officers spend their days standing in the cold checking vehicle after vehicle at any one of Fort Benning's access points. Some prowl the streets of the post performing security checks, traffic stops and responding to calls for assistance.

But a lucky few of Fort Benning's finest get to pass their days actively protecting and nurturing the roughly 2,800 students of the post's seven Department of Defense schools.

The MPs — better known as school resource officers — serve multiple purposes both for the schools they support and the military community as a whole.



The provost marshal "believes strongly that the schools here on post are very important," said Dr. Gregg Mowen, Faith Middle School's principal.

Mowen said the officers are involved in everything from the Drug Abuse Resistance Education program to a student community service program.

Once a month, officers escort students selected by their teachers to the provost marshal's office and give them an all-access tour of the facility.

The students then try their hands at some community service by either helping clean the facility or helping maintain the police cruisers.

The officers also help students get to and from schools, occasionally take part in home visits for students who are having personal problems and serve as part of the security net that keeps post schools safe, Mowen said.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Spc. Jessica Mitchell stops and speaks to students during lunch time at Faith Middle School. She was trying to locate students selected to participate in a field trip she supervises.

Spc. Jessica Mitchell, the school resource officer assigned to Faith Middle School, said she was excited when she learned of the mission to support Fort Benning schools.

"I love kids, so it was right up my alley," Mitchell said.

Mitchell has been working at the school since October 2003 and said that she feels her time at the school has made a difference.

Mitchell said one of the ways her duties have made an impact is by familiarizing the students with the presence of law enforcement officials.

By wearing different uniforms and levels of equipment on different days, Mitchell said, the students get used to all the different gear associated with police.

The more comfortable the kids feel, the more they will trust law enforcement officials and respect them, she said.

"A lot of the kids come to me to talk about things they really don't want to talk about to anyone else," said Mitchell.

> "They are not there as guards, but they do guard the students just by their presence. The better the children understand that police are approachable, the better we become a part of the community and are able to act quickly to correct problems we find out about."
> Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan
> Provost marshal

Mitchell enjoys rubbing elbows with the kids, but she knows when to draw the line between pal and supervisory figure. The kids can tell the difference, as well.

When Mitchell is performing the serious portions of her job, like enforcing safety guidelines, dealing with truancy issues and talking about the dangers of drug abuse, she said her charges call her "Specialist Mitchell."

But when it's time to bond with those she is entrusted to protect, the serious face comes off, and the kids call her "Officer Friendly".

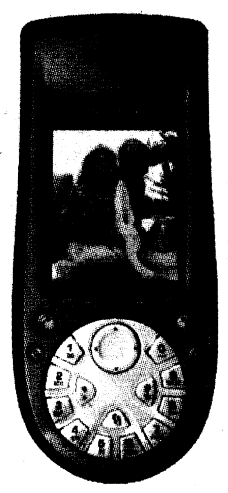
That is just the kind of officer-student interaction that the provost marshal, Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan, was hoping for when the program was launched this school year.

"They are not there as guards, but they do guard the students just by their presence. The better the children understand that police are approachable, the better we become a part of the community and are able to act quickly to correct problems we find out about," Finnegan said.

The recognition of MPs as not only law enforcement agents, but also valuable members of the community who can often avert problems before they occur, is a critical goal of the program, Finnegan said.

"An immediate benefit has been the interaction between the police officers and the students. Last year, when MPs went into a school, it caused some anxiety, because the students were not used to seeing police in the schools. This year, we are just part of the environment, so when we have needed to send a patrol to the school, it does not seem out of the ordinary for the students," Finnegan said.

"Our goal is to be part of the school system, not a security guard or law enforcer in the school," he said. "This effort has caused the students to understand that the police are approachable to discuss issues and problems the students are confronted with. It has also significantly reduced the juvenile misconduct not just in the schools, but also in our community."



The program's first-year success will be further bolstered with training in the near future, which will give the officers even more tools with which to make a difference.

"This year, the Georgia State Police are providing DARE instructor training, and the Federal Law Enforcement Academy is providing gang awareness and combating gang violence training," said Finnegan.

"This is the first year. We are learning along with the schools how to best be a part of the program," Finnegan said. "Hopefully, every year we are able to improve on the program."

"If you want it all, we've got it all."

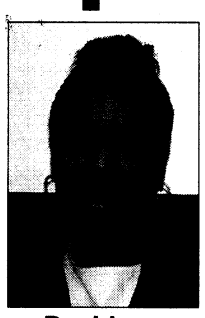
AAFES employees deploy with troops

Workers 'live like Soldiers' with Soldiers

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor



When she signed up two years ago, Trisha Davidson never dreamed she would wake up in the desert halfway around the world, living out of a tent, working 16-hour days, separated from her family and friends.

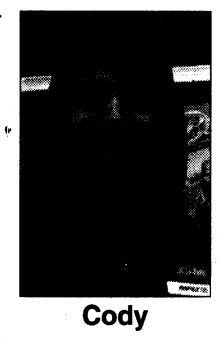
That isn't exactly the job description most people associate with an AAFES employee.

But Davidson, an office clerk at Fort Benning's Main Mall Post Exchange, deployed to Kuwait in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom right along with the Soldiers — and she loved every minute of her six-month tenure there.

"I enjoyed every moment from the preparation to the time I left there — I have no complaints," said Davidson, who volunteered for the deployment. "I made the most of it, I helped out and I had a ball."

Davidson left for Camp Spearhead, Kuwait, in May 2003. After a weeklong pit stop in Germany, she arrived with four duffle bags jam-packed with uniforms, boots, protective equipment, NBC protective gear — the works.

Davidson



The make-shift PX she would be working at had just been set up among the tents and CONEXs of the desert camp. Her first mission was to "whip it into shape."

Once the store was Soldier-friendly, she spent her days trekking back and forth between the store and its CONEX to maintain it and conduct inventories, training the locals to work the cash registers and escorting them to and from work, supervising the souvenir and greeting card aisles and performing accounting duties after the store had closed.

"The job is never done," she said, laughing.

Despite the infamous desert heat and long hours on the job, Davidson's experience was a "beautiful" one, she said.

"I got to see another culture, and I met so many beautiful people," she said. "I saw beautiful places ... in downtown Kuwait City. I walked along the shores of the Gulf. I learned so much and was able to grow with other people."

Cody

Some of those people were Soldiers, who "brightened our spirits and lifted us up every day," Davidson said.

"They were very appreciative," she said. "We were a family."

Davidson also grew close with her Camp Spearhead church family and constantly invited military personnel to attend its weekly services. Some came, and a few were even baptized in that church and asked her to be there with them.

So what was the hardest part for her?

"Getting used to being back," said Davidson, who is now back to work at the Main Mall PX.

"I fell in love with it over there. I would go back to Kuwait; I would go anywhere," she said. "It's just an adventure to me. Getting to know other people, other cultures and sceneries — it's always been part of my life. It's what makes me tick."

But Davidson's main mission was to help out the OIF cause, a mission that other AAFES employees share.

JoAnn Cody, a sales associate in the Power Zone of the Main Mall PX, volunteered, too. She said goodbye to two teen-age sons and a college-bound daughter and headed to Kuwait in June 2003.

After a week on the ground, though, she decided it was "too hot" there and headed to Mosul, Iraq, on a tip that it was cooler there. Sure, it was more dangerous, but it was a small price to pay.

"There were times when we heard the missiles go off, and we'd have to get on our flak vests and go down into the bunkers," she recalled, adding that the missile activity picked up significantly after October. "But it didn't really bother me. I was never nervous or anything like that."

Instead, Cody was busy working 12- to 14-hour days supervising the electronics section of Mosul's makeshift PX, running the cash registers, helping Soldiers and training Iraqi employees to take over her job when she left. And when she wasn't at work, she was "living just like the Soldiers."

"We were out there in tents, eating MREs and in DFACs, using outhouses and washing our clothes by hand," she said.

> "It's just an adventure to me. Getting to know other people, other cultures and sceneries — it's always been part of my life. It's what makes me tick."
> Trisha Davidson
> Office clerk with the Main Mall Post Exchange

Despite the somewhat harsh conditions, Cody said her experience was a good one.

"It was great to see how well we got along with the locals, how well we worked with them," she said, explaining the only challenge was the language barrier. "They were friendly, nice people who really appreciated their jobs."

It was also a chance to help the Soldiers.

"I went there to help provide service to the Soldiers," Cody said. "If there's something I can do for someone, I'll help them. And it was my duty to help them — they were in need."

After six months in Iraq, Cody arrived back home on the morning of Christmas Eve.

Davidson and Cody are just two of 16 AAFES employees from Fort Benning who volunteered to deploy for six months to a year in support of OIF and Operation Enduring Freedom, said Glenn Schubert, the post's AAFES general manager.

"That's our motto — 'We go where you go,'" Schubert said. "We get there pretty much right after Soldiers hit the ground, wherever they deploy.

"We go in right behind them to give them a touch of home," he said.

AAFES' mission is to provide Soldiers the comfort items they might take for granted in their homeland but miss terribly on a deployment, Schubert said.

Something as small as having the kind of deodorant or razor you're use to, or being able to snag a soda or potato chips can make all the difference.

"It gives them something to feel a little more normal," he said.

Army One Source new 24-hour information hub

Program offers answers for Soldiers

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The Army is offering a free way for people to get answers to their questions, 24 hours a day, from a qualified staff.

The Army One Source is a telephonic information and referral service that answers questions from parenting and finances to preparing for deployment and mental health.

"We have many family members at remote sites who don't have easy access to military installations," said Cheryl Goliday, mobilization deployment outreach coordinator with Army Community Service. "(With AOS), they can make a connection by picking up the phone. Army One Source is not taking anything away from ACS, but it's a supplement.

AOS is not an automated system, Goliday said. There is a human answering questions — consultants trained to a master's degree level in social work, education, finance or psychology.

"If one of the consultants didn't have an immediate answer, they have researchers there to find out the information, and it's at no cost," Goliday said.

"I toured the facility and saw the operation in action," Goliday said. "They had 70 consultants working per shift ready to answer calls. It was pretty impressive."

Goliday has tried calling AOS a number of times and each time met "no wait."

For those who don't like using the telephone, they can use the Web site and send questions through e-mail.

"There is no phone tree, no menu. The phones are answered by people," said Carla Cary, Family Advocacy Program specialist at the U.S. Army Community and Family Support Center.

From the U.S., callers can dial (800) 464-8107, and from outside the U.S., dial the appropriate access code to reach a U.S. number and then (800) 464-8107. Hearing impaired callers should use (800) 364-9188, and Spanish speakers can dial (888) 732-9020.

The Web site is www.army onesource.com, to enter the site employ the user ID: army, password: onesource.

The Army One Source team will be coming to Fort Benning, March 23 through 25 to provide information about the services offered.

For more information, call 545-2449.

New vehicles help protect troops from IEDs in Iraq

Weapons fight threat from explosive devices

Cpl. Joe Niesen
Army News Service

FOB RIDGWAY, Iraq — The U.S. Army has a few new weapons to use in its war against the threat of improvised explosive devices on Iraq's roadways.

The Husky, Meerkat, Buffalo and RG-31 armored car are now being used by Soldiers from the 82nd Airborne Division's Task Force Pathfinder. The unit comprises Soldiers from a number of active Army, Reserve and National Guard units attached to the 82nd.

The Soldiers, many of whom had never seen the equipment prior to the training they received in theater, have quickly grown fond of the vehicles which were designed both in the United States and South Africa.

"All of our training has been off-the-cuff," said Capt. Michael Biankowski, commander, A Company, 27th Engineers and Task Force Pathfinder.

The Soldiers of Pathfinder had to learn everything about the vehicles in theater. The mechanics had to learn how to repair them, the operators how to drive them and commanders how to use them. For operators, the driving is the easy part; it's learning to operate and interpret the data collected by the sensors while driving that is the challenge.

"Probably the hardest part is the multitasking involved. You have to drive, listen and watch both the screen and the road around you as you drive," said Cpl. Robert Scott, a vehicle operator on the Husky detection vehicle.

The vehicles, primarily designed to detect buried mines, have been searching the roadways for IEDs and other threats to Soldiers on convoys and patrols. So far, the equipment has proven effective for a number of reasons, chiefly the detection abilities of the Husky and Meerkat vehicles.

"We've found at least six IEDs in the short time that we have had the vehicles," said 1st Lt. David Moore, a platoon leader with A Co., 27th Engineers, assigned to the Task Force.

Another reason the Soldiers in Task Force Pathfinder have taken to the vehicles is the fact that each is heavily armored and designed to resist blasts from both mines and IEDs.

"These vehicles are designed to take a blast," said Pfc. Lester Rhodes, a combat engineer and operator of the RG-31 armored car. "The safety given by these vehicles allows us to focus more energy on finding the rounds. Plus, (the RG-31) is comfortable, like riding in an armored Cadillac."

The Task Force, since acquiring the equipment, has attempted to support the entire division's area of responsibility. The vehicles will be handed over to replacing units and remain in theater as long as the threat of IEDs exists.

However, many of the Soldiers assigned to Pathfinder said they are hopeful that the equipment will be standard issue for engineering units.

"At first, I thought that it was just another Army toy," said Scott. "After taking them out on missions and finding IEDs, they definitely do the job. They are the best pieces of equipment out there."

Cpl. Joe Niesen

Pfc. Lester Rhodes, an Rg-31 armored car operator with Taskforce 'Pathfinder,' compares the vehicle to an 'Armored Cadillac.' The Rg-31 serves as a security and medical vehicle.

A few of the vehicles have already been sent to the combat engineer school at Fort Leonardwood, Mo., where Soldiers are now being trained, according to Biankowski.

The team will continue to provide support to units in the area and prepare to train its replacements. The awkward-looking vehicles will visit various bases and attempt to ensure that at least the routes they cover will be free of IEDs, and Soldiers can feel a little safer as they continue to traverse and patrol Iraq's dangerous roads.

"Every round we find is one less that could injure or kill a Soldier," said Sgt. 1st Class Martin Humphreys, a Pathfinder platoon sergeant. "So I'm glad we have this equipment."

New health benefits for reservists

Temporary program covers some families

Martin Army Community Hospital

The Department of Defense announced that it will implement the 2004 Temporary Reserve Health Benefit Program for certain eligible reserve component sponsors and their family members.

The Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act and the National Defense Authorization Act for fiscal 2004 authorized new health benefits, some permanent and some temporary.

The program includes three temporary Tricare benefit provisions — some were effective as of Nov. 6, 2003, and all expire Dec. 31, 2004.

Total expenditures for these new provisions may not exceed the $400 million limit established by Congress for fiscal 2004. Tricare Management Activity will implement the new provisions in phases starting in the spring.

"These new temporary provisions were designed by Congress to improve readiness and enhance access to care for reserve service members and their families," said Dr. William Winkenwerder Jr., assistant secretary of Defense for Health Affairs. "We are implementing these new provisions as soon as possible."

One provision temporarily authorizes Tricare medical and dental coverage for reserve component sponsors activated for more than 30 days and their family members. Eligibility begins either on the day the sponsor receives delayed effective date active-duty orders or 90 days prior to the date the active-duty period begins, whichever is later.

A second provision temporarily extends eligibility for Tricare benefits to 180 days under the Transitional Assistance Management Program for reserve component sponsors who separate from active-duty status during the period Nov. 6, 2003 through Dec. 31, 2004, and their eligible family members.

The third provision temporarily extends Tricare medical benefits to reserve component sponsors and family members who are either unemployed or employed but not eligible for employer-provided health coverage. These temporary provisions end Dec. 31.

"We encourage Reserve component sponsors and family members to save health care receipts, claims and explanation of benefits for dates of service from Nov. 6, 2003, through Dec. 31, 2004," Winkenwerder said. This is necessary in the event the sponsor is determined to be eligible and the care qualifies for retroactive Tricare reimbursement once the program begins, he said.

The three permanent health benefit provisions of the NDAA include benefit counselors for the reserve component in each Tricare region, authorization for medical and dental screening and care for members alerted for mobilization and Tricare eligibility for reserve officers pending orders to active duty following commissioning.

Additional information for reserve component families who have questions regarding the Tricare benefit, or need assistance processing Tricare claims, is available on the Tricare Web site at http://www.tricare.osd.mil/ and the Reserve Affairs Web site at http://www.defenselink.mil/ra.

Each Tricare region will soon have a designated beneficiary counseling and assistance coordinator available to assist members and families with understanding and using their enhanced Tricare benefits.

car and changing her life forever.

"I gave up the rest of my life, my freedom, when I picked the keys up off that bar," Wagoner told the audience of her decision to drive that night. "It was a big price to pay.

"It probably would have been easier if I had passed away," Wagoner said quietly. "But there has to be a reason I'm alive."

Wagoner believes that reason is so that she can save other people from her fate.

"I have to make people aware of the consequences," she said. "No one ever thought this would happen to me, including me.

"I've gone on with my life and tried to deal with it by trying to help others not to make the choices I did."

Wagoner has spent the past eight years telling anyone who will listen her story.

Whether through her 1998 video, Just Call Me Crash ... The Denise Wagoner Story, television interviews or public speaking, Wagoner has reached millions of people across the country.

And although she considers her blindness one of the greatest aspects of her "ample punishment," she also considers it a bittersweet blessing.

"If I wasn't blind, I could never get up here in front of people (the way I look now)," she said.

"But I have to believe there's a reason. There's a reason God saved my teeth and took my eyes so that I could do this.

"Hopefully, someone else out there will hear my story and won't make the same choices that I did."

Northern Iraq graduates 11 new platoon leaders

Sgt. Jeremy Heckler
Army News Service

MOSUL, Iraq — The next step in building a stronger Iraqi army began as the first officers graduated from the Northern Iraq Regional Training Center Platoon Leader's Basic Course in Al Qayyarah Feb. 9.

The ceremony marked the completion of two weeks of training designed to provide the Iraqi military with strong leaders. Eleven officers of various ranks received their graduation diploma as dignitaries looked on.

"This is the first graduating class of officers and now these future leaders have a chance to show their soldiers the knowledge they have learned," said Col. Mohammed Ahmed Abdullah, NIRTC commandant.

Soldiers from 5th Battalion, 20th Infantry Regiment, 3rd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division (Stryker Brigade Combat Team), under the operational control of Task Force Olympia, provided advisors and other assistance to help ensure the training mission was successful.

"We are very glad to be partners with you to make this training a success," said Brig. Gen. Carter F. Ham, commander, Task Force Olympia.

The NIRTC opened in mid-January and was the inspiration of Maj. Gen. David H. Petraeus, commander, 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault). The new training center instructs non-commissioned officers, lieutenants, and new recruits in areas such as leadership, job proficiency, and professionalism. Twenty-two NCOs from the Hamam Al Alil Iraqi Civil Defense Corps company made up the first graduating class of NIRTC on Jan. 31.

APFS: Trains drill sergeants on PT for IET Soldiers performance in the physical aspects of their training, he said.

Once developed, the standardized PT was studied and approved by the U.S. Army Center for Health Promotion and Preventive Medicine independent of the APFS, Rieger said.

"We've made sure we're doing the right thing," he said. "This is a modified PT program that is very well thought-out and researched.

"It's a great conditioning program that toughens the body not only in the right places, but with the proper progression so that (Soldiers) don't get hurt and are better prepared to do their jobs," he said.

The program has been in place in many initial training units for as long as two years, including Fort Benning's Infantry Training Brigade, Rieger said. However, TRADOC has directed the standardized PT be implemented at all IET locations by April 1.

To that end, Rieger and APFS instructors have been on the road, teaching drill sergeants at the Army's five training centers and at other specified locations. All in all, the instructors spend 38 weeks a year traveling and teaching, a pace he anticipates will keep up for the next few years.

The drill sergeants' training includes step-by-step instruction in how to correctly perform each exercise and how to conduct PT sessions for initial entry Soldiers.

Sgt. Kim Dooley

About 94 drill sergeants participated in an Army Physical Fitness School standardized PT program course this week. The PT, which is used at initial entry training locations, shifts focus from preparation for the PT test to preparation for performing Soldier tasks.

"We also spend a lot of time educating the drill sergeants on how to assess the individual Soldiers' fitness level — seeing where their weak points may be," Rieger said. "By teaching the drill sergeants that, they can (potentially) recognize when an injury is going to happen, and then this program is also somewhat preventative in nature.

"Drill sergeants are key to the success of this program," he said.

Staff Sgt. Nathan Haynes, a drill sergeant with D Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, said his unit has already been using the standardized PT to train their Soldiers for quite some time.

"It's more combat-related," said Haynes, who has been training Soldiers for six months. "It definitely gives the privates more mobility and coordination."

The only thing the standardized PT program doesn't do is help the Soldiers with the PT test, Haynes said, but that's not a problem.

The drill sergeants still make sure the Soldiers are trained and ready for the APFT.

"We have them doing push-ups and sit-ups every chance we have so they'll be ready," he said.

While the program is approved doctrine only for initial entry training units, Rieger said the benefits of the program extend to Soldiers in any unit.

"We'll train at Fort Benning whenever we're asked to," he said.

Rieger said Soldiers interested in improving their physical fitness and performance are also welcome to join the APFS' PT sessions from 2 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday at Building 468 Ingersoll Avenue.

Flag: Appears on uniforms

Officers will be required to purchase and have the patch sewn on at their own expense.

Enlisted Soldiers are free to wait until the patch is available at government expense through their unit supply system.

"The commanding general's guidance is that there is no pressure for enlisted Soldiers to conform until funding comes," said Col. Bob Brown, Directorate of Operations and Training. "And right now, there is no funding support from Department of the Army."

Brown said funds should be available to purchase the insignia in October — the beginning of the next fiscal year.

In an Army News Service interview, Sgt. Maj. Walter Morales, the uniform policy chief from the Army Personnel Office, said the Army needs approximately 30 million flags, and deploying personnel will have priority for getting them.

> "The commanding general's guidance is that there is no pressure for enlisted Soldiers to conform until funding comes."
> Col. Bob Brown
> Directorate of Training

According to the message, the new policy only comes into effect according to when a commander can procure the insignia and implement it based on the operational tempo.

"I was at the Pentagon," Brown said, "and their duty uniform is now the BDU. No more Class As.

"We are a nation at war, and sometimes at peace," he said.

"That's what the (Chief of Staff of the Army) message is."

And that's what the DA message said — that as a nation at war and as an expeditionary Army, Soldiers' commitment to fight and win in the nation's war is best exemplified by permanently wearing the U.S. flag insignia on uniforms.

More than 200 students in Infantry Officer Basic Course Class 01-04 participated in a SASO — support and stability operation — drill Feb. 10 at Fort Benning's McKenna MOUT Site, a mock village designed for training in urban warfare.
The students role-played angry villagers and the occupying forces were tasked with maintaining control.
Here, a Soldier checks for weapons on 2nd Lt. John Wells, an IOBC student playing an insurgent. The exercise was the culmination of weeks of training in what the first sergeant, Sgt. 1st Class Joe Hughes, called "real world stuff — the kinds of situations they'll find themselves in in Iraq."

Students face contempt of McKenna villagers

An angry villager, played by 2nd Lt. Randall Taylor, confronts 2nd Lt. John Salazar, a moderator trying to keep peace between U.S. occupying forces and McKenna villagers. Some of the villagers were loyal to the cult leader ousted by the Soldiers and others were simply impatient with the presence of foreign forces, a situation much like U.S. Soldiers are facing in Iraq.

U.S. forces took control of McKenna Village in the early morning hours Feb. 10 and spent several hours trying to control disgruntled villagers. Here, 2nd Lt. Aaron Leveritt peers from a window overlooking the woods surrounding the village.

SASO exercise challenges peacekeepers

Nowhere, it could be argued, is the phrase "familiarity breeds contempt" more evident than Iraq, where the citizens who once hailed Americans as heroes are growing more and more impatient with their presence.

When 200 students — many guardsmen — in Infantry Officers Basic Course Class 01-04 graduate next week, more than half of them are expected to deploy soon after to conduct peacekeeping missions in Iraq, where they'll see firsthand how quickly tension can escalate into violence.

"They'll be doing what we call support and stability operations — SASO. It's what's going on in the world today," said Sgt. 1st Class Joe Hughes, the first sergeant of A Company, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Hughes and the A Company cadre put their students to the test Feb. 10 to see if they're prepared to handle the highly volatile environment they'll encounter in Iraq, where more U.S. Soldiers have been killed since President Bush declared an end to combat operations than during the war.

"It's not always going to be easy to tell who the enemy is. They don't advertise," Hughes said. "These (Soldiers) will have to know what to look for, how to take precautions to keep a situation from getting out of hand, and how to react if it does."

That was the scenario Feb. 10 at the McKenna Military Operations in Urban Terrain (MOUT) Site, designed to simulate the kind of war-torn city Soldiers might encounter in modern urban warfare.

The IOBC students attacked the village in the early morning hours, wrestling it from the clutches of an enemy the 1st platoon trainer called "a kind of Branch Dividian cult on steroids — a really nasty bunch."

"We didn't want to zero in on any one cult or enemy they're familiar with," said Capt. Andrew Cyckowski, who scripted the scenario. "They don't need to have any preconceived ideas about what the enemy looks like or acts like. That's the point."

In fact, the line between enemy and grateful citizen became blurred when cadre and students, role-playing irate storekeepers and rebel sympathizers, challenged the authority of U.S. troops. Students were forced to "put out fires" all over town, Cyckowski said, while keeping an eye on the outskirts of the village, where the rebels lurked.

At one point, a mob of villagers shouted obscenities and shoved the Soldiers, and a car bomb was detonated at a checkpoint.

The cadre, in what Hughes called "the coach-mentor mode," met with the students periodically "to regroup and see just what's working and what's not."

IOBC, a 16-week course, includes instruction on urban tactics, marksmanship, land navigation, troop-leading tactics, weapons, offensive and defensive operations, individual readiness and demolitions. The McKenna exercise was "a culmination of all we've taught them," Hughes said.

"Now it's 'let's see what you know' time. Let's see how long it takes for them to get it under control, so they can ultimately turn it back over to the villagers," he said.

> "It's not always going to be easy to tell who the enemy is. They don't advertise. These (Soldiers) will have to know what to look for, know how to take precautions to keep a situation from getting out of hand, and how to react if it does."

2nd Lt. Eivind Forseth was an enlisted Soldier in 1995, when he served with the 1st Brigade Combat Team in Bosnia. He realized, perhaps more than most of his classmates, the importance of the McKenna exercise.

"I've been there, done that. I'd say not even 10 percent of this class has been deployed," Forseth said. "I know how scary these situations can be."

Hughes deemed the exercise a success, though the students didn't always react as he would have hoped.

"That's why we have these things," he said. "To see just how much they don't know. Better to find out here than out there where it's real.

"They did pretty good, but most importantly, they learned from their mistakes."

14th FH combines with infantry for FTX

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The 14th Field Hospital made a first in recent history when it worked together with B Company, 1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, during its field training exercise so both units would benefit.

The field hospital trained on their warrior skills and the infantry unit trained on their medical skills.

"It was a great opportunity to certify ourselves in warrior tasks to train NCOs and instructors," said 1st Sgt. Jeffery Curry, B Co., 1st Bn., 29th Infantry Regt. first sergeant.

"First Sergeant Sanchez, First Sergeant Curry and I got together and decided it was time to do something," said Sgt. 1st Class Josephine Williams, 14th Field Hospital training and supply sergeant.

The field hospital Soldiers set up tents, made a perimeter fence and posted a guard. They received classes from 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. instructors on giving SALUTE reports, calling for fire, filling out range cards, hand-to-hand combatives, individual tactical movements and an introduction to the Bradley.

Learning about the Bradley Fighting Vehicle can help the Soldiers, because some of them haven't seen the inside of a Bradley, Williams said. If at some point they need to go into a Bradley to get a patient, they will be more familiar with it.

"The Soldiers know their medical tasks but (some of them) don't know basic Soldier (skills)," Williams said. "They need it, because if they're dead, they're no good. So they have to learn basic Soldier skills."

"(The tactical training) is important. Although doing a hospital job, we're also securing the area and brushing up on our Soldier skills, which we also need to be proficient in," said Sgt. Janna Gaddy, a licensed practical nurse with 14th FH. This was the first time for a lot of training on warrior tasks for her. The training she experienced made her more prepared for the future, she said.

"Now that I'm an LPN, I thought I would go to a fixed facility and be indoors," Gaddy said. "Now I'm doing more as an LPN in a (combat support hospital) than I was as a medic before. When I went to LPN, I thought I would get away from the field. But I enjoy it, getting out here and doing this stuff. I'm a nurse and I get to do hand-to-hand combat so I'll be a (better) nurse."

While the members of the 14th FH were benefiting from their tactical training, B Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt. was in turn receiving medical training.

"We only have certain times to get combat life saver qualified," said Staff Sgt. Francisco Diaz, B Co., 1st Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., platoon sergeant. "(The 14th FH) will provide the company with that training to help us out. It works out pretty good because we only have certain number of slots on the medic side of the house."

SECTION B

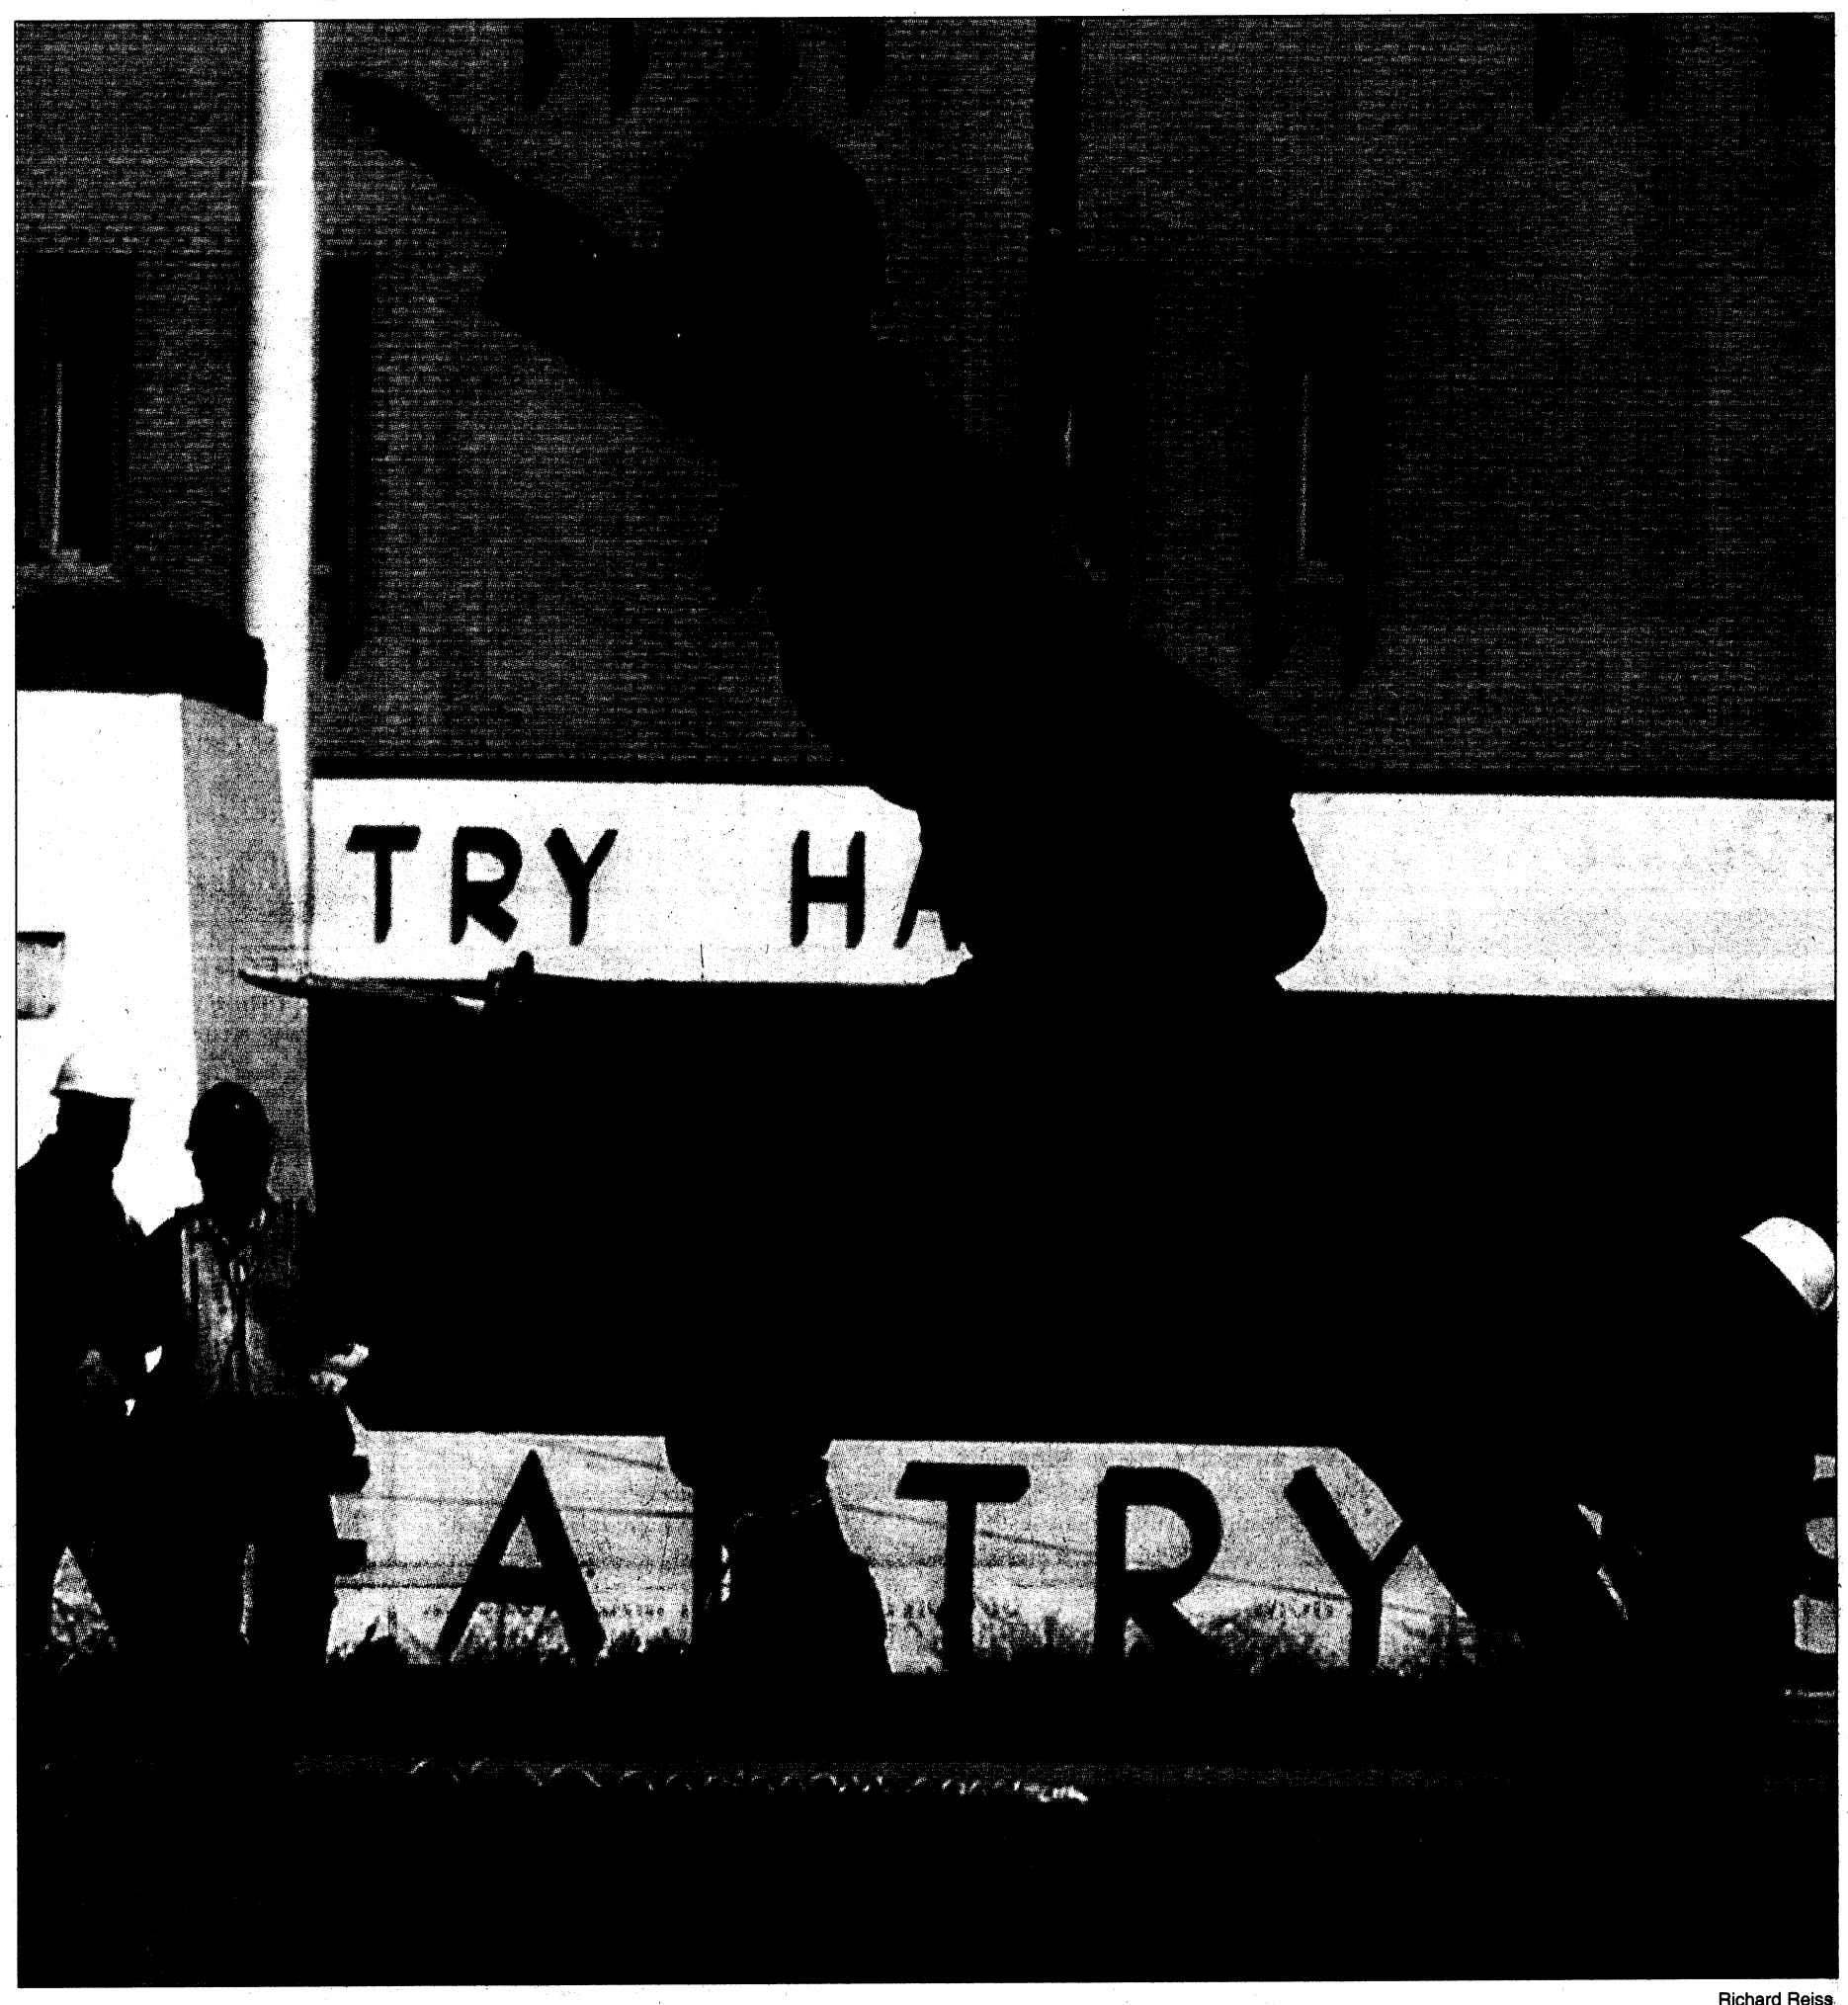
The Infantryman leaves home alone

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

OK, OK, call him Mike, I don't care. Call him Tom or Dick or Harry. Call him Sue — I've heard that's effective. Just don't call him late for battle.

Some people insist on calling that fellow perched — most of the time — in front of Infantry Hall Iron Mike, and persistent efforts to set them straight have proved futile. I'm OK with that.

The big man, dubbed "the Infantryman," is away for some long over-due cleaning and corrective surgery at a spa in Colorado. There he'll be used to cast a bronze clone, which will replace the original in front of Infantry Hall. Vintage Mike will likely be housed in the new National Infantry Museum when it's built.



So with Mike away for R&R, seems like as good a time as any to educate his fans about his history.

The Follow Me Statue is the official name given to the one and a half ton, 22-foot structure in its entirety, but when it was dedicated May 3, 1960, it was simply called the Infantryman, for the 12-foot figure on top.

At the behest of Maj. Gen. Paul Freeman Jr., the commanding general of the Infantry Center from 1958-60, the Infantryman was designed by two enlisted Soldiers, whose sole job back in 1959 was to create a larger-than-life tribute to the combat infantryman. Spcs. 4th Class Karl Von Krog and Manfred Bass designed, sculpted, molded and cast the figure, using an officer candidate, Eugene Wyles, as their model, dressed in a World War II- and Korean War-era uniform, in what was called "the typical pose of the infantry squad leader."

Von Krog and Bass used steel for the frame, a polyester resin compound for the base, and —

The Infantryman is hoisted from his perch in front of Infantry Hall Feb. 13. The 12-foot tall figure of a World War II era- infantry Soldier will spend nearly six months in Loveland, Colo., where it'll be restored and cast into a bronze clone. The bronze statue will replace the original, which was created by two enlisted Soldiers in 1960. The statue pictured here, often referred to as 'Iron Mike,' will likely find a home at the new National Infantry Museum when it is constructed.

License renewal program saves time

Georgia DMV

You can renew your driver's license from the comfort of your home. The Department of Motor Vehicle Safety mails applications to those who wish to renew their Georgia license or identification card by mail, Internet or telephone. The license looks exactly like one issued from a Customer Service Center. DMVS uses the last photo taken plus fingerprints and signature on file.

The fees have not increased — $15 for a regular renewal and $8 if the applicant is an organ donor. There is no additional charge for the automated options.

For those without Internet access, the license can be renewed by phone using a major credit card. Also, public librarys provide Internet access.

The renewal application provides an identification number that is required to renew your license or ID on the Internet or telephone. All applicants are instructed to destroy their old license immediately upon receipt of the replacement.

Qualified drivers receive the application about 60 days before their birthdays. Applicants must have no infractions on their driving record and have a photo, fingerprint and signature on file.

To renew by mail, simply fill out the application, enclose a check or money order and mail it. Or access the DMVS Web site: www.dmvs.ga.gov, and use information provided on the application to renew online using a major credit card. A toll-free telephone number is provided.

Each transaction takes about four minutes. There can be no changes made via the automated renewal program.

A critical factor in the success of this program is the ability to mail the application to the customer's correct address. State law dictates that drivers provide a change of address at a CSC within 60 days of moving. The postal service cannot forward the undeliverable applications.

Benning offers home-school families resources, activities

Post aims to provide more services

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning school liaison officer DeWayne Baldwin is the first to admit it — there hasn't been much in the way of organized resources for post home-schoolers in the past.

Sure, services and resources have been available upon request, but despite a few minor efforts, the bulk of the home-school community has never been properly introduced to the agencies that could best help them.

It's time to change that, Baldwin said.

To that end, he will host an orientation for home-school families March 4 to give them a guided tour of facilities and resources they can take advantage of right here on Fort Benning.

Child and Youth Services will offer up its gym and physical education instruction, and plans are underway with Briant Wells Field House to reserve pool time for home-school families and possibly offer swimming lessons or water aerobics.

Meanwhile, although School Age Services already sets aside special hours for home-schoolers to take advantage of its computer lab, Baldwin said computer instruction will be available.

"Most home-school families have computers at their homes that they use, but this would give them the opportunity to do things they might not be able to in the home — like taking a computer apart and seeing the inside of it, then putting it back together and making it work again," he said.

Baldwin has other ideas, too — things like coordinated field trips and college visits.

But before he makes further plans, he wants to hear from the home-school parents, and the orientation will provide the perfect opportunity.

"Our programs (for home-schoolers) can grow if we know what their needs are," he said.

"We've let the ball slip with the (home-school community) before, but we don't want them to feel like no one is willing to reach out to them, like no one has their interests in mind."

The orientation will be from to 10 to 11:30 a.m. March 4 in Building 359. Baldwin does request that anyone planning to attend call him to RSVP at 545-6811.

CLOSER

Here's a look at what Fort Benning already offers home-school families:

- Child and Youth Services has special hours for home-school families to use their gym and will soon offer organized educational activities for interested families.
- School Age Services reserves special hours in its computer lab for home-school children. An computer technician will be available to provide some computer instruction and activities like dismantling and reconstructing a computer.
- Plans are underway with Briant Wells Field House to reserve hours in the pool for home-school families and possibly provide swim instruction or water aerobics.
- An orientation for home-school parents will be held from 10 to 11:30 a.m. March 4 in Building 359. The orientation will introduce parents to available services and seek their input for more programs.

Scouts, Soldiers' sons, earn eagle wings

Four teens awarded Eagle Scout badges

Donna Budjenska
Bayonet correspondent

Fort Benning is home to many achievers, from those who ace airborne training to those who rock on as rangers.

But Soldiers aren't the only ones who've earned prestigious titles and awards.

Four Boy Scouts with ties to Fort Benning have done what it takes to earn their Eagle Scout badge, an achievement only 4 percent of all Boy Scouts attain. That's no small feat.

Chris Anest, Matthew Charlton, Kelts Green and Chris Herold, all sons of service members, have been involved in scouting for years and have assumed leadership roles in Troop 24.

"I'm very proud of these four boys," said Carl "Bud" Paepcke, scoutmaster for Troop 24. "It takes a lot of work."

Keep in mind that working to obtain the Eagle Scout rank was not a full-time occupation for these young men. They attend high school, participate in sports, involve themselves in community and religious activities and stay busy just being teen-agers.

But to become Eagle Scouts, each of them had to complete the tasks and meet the requirements set forth for attaining the rank.

They had to earn 21 merit badges, take an active role in the troop, attend meetings and campouts and complete a project.

All of these tasks had to be finished before they turned 18.

The project is the most involved aspect of the Eagle trail, said Paepcke. He had to approve all the ideas the boys proposed to undertake, and then the boys had to present their detailed plans to a review board made up of adult Scout leaders.

Each Scout spearheads his own project, organizing and overseeing it. Younger troop members who have their own community service requirements to fulfill assist them. Any equipment or supplies needed are provided by the organization benefiting from the Scouts' labor.

The Scouts were recognized during a Court of Honor ceremony Feb. 15 at Columbus' First Presbyterian Church, which sponsors Troop 24.

Christopher Anest

Anest is a 16-year-old junior in Hardaway High School's International Baccalaureate program. For his Eagle Scout project, he built an extension to Edgewood Baptist Church's youth group room.

It took about 120 hours for Anest and the other volunteers to complete the construction, working under the guidance of the church's construction foreman.

Striving to attain Eagle Scout is "a big sign that you support the values of scouting," said his mother, Deanna Anest.

Anest twice outlined different projects, but as he was planning each they fell through for one reason or another. Now that he's finished, she said, he has gained confidence that he can plan an extensive project and lead people so the project is successfully completed.

Anest's father, Lt. Col. Peri Anest, is in 1st Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

Matthew Charlton

Charlton is a 17-year-old Columbus High School junior. His Eagle Scout project involved renovating the Fort Benning Hunt Club's farrier stand and quarantine area.

It took 230 hours' worth of work. Following completion, Charlton had to go back to the review board to give a presentation documenting his project (a requirement all Eagle Scouts must fulfill).

"He feels a great sense of accomplishment," said his mother, Heidi Charlton.

She explained that the Hunt Club project was actually his third board-approved plan: His first two project ideas were overcome by the burning of the Main Post Catholic chapel (which negated his idea of painting and repair work there) and the Iraqi War, which required the 36th Engineer Group to deploy (thus robbing Charlton of his allies in his plans to build an outdoor volleyball court at Club Beyond).

His father is Lt. Col. John Charlton of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry.

Kelts Green

Green is a 17-year-old senior at Columbus High School.

He renovated four classrooms at Temple Israel as his Eagle Scout project.

After working with the rabbi to assess the project scope, Green had to figure out how much he'd need in the way of supplies to paint, replace ceiling tiles and perform other repair work.

Then he had to present that list to the temple board, which chose to support and fund the project.

One twist in Green's experience is that he actually completed his project in the summer of 2002.

What kept him from earning his Eagle Scout rank at that time was that he still had to get merit badges, a task delayed by school and other obligations.

Still, the rewards of having worked hard to complete the project aren't lost on Green, even though he had to wait to pin on the Eagle Scout badge.

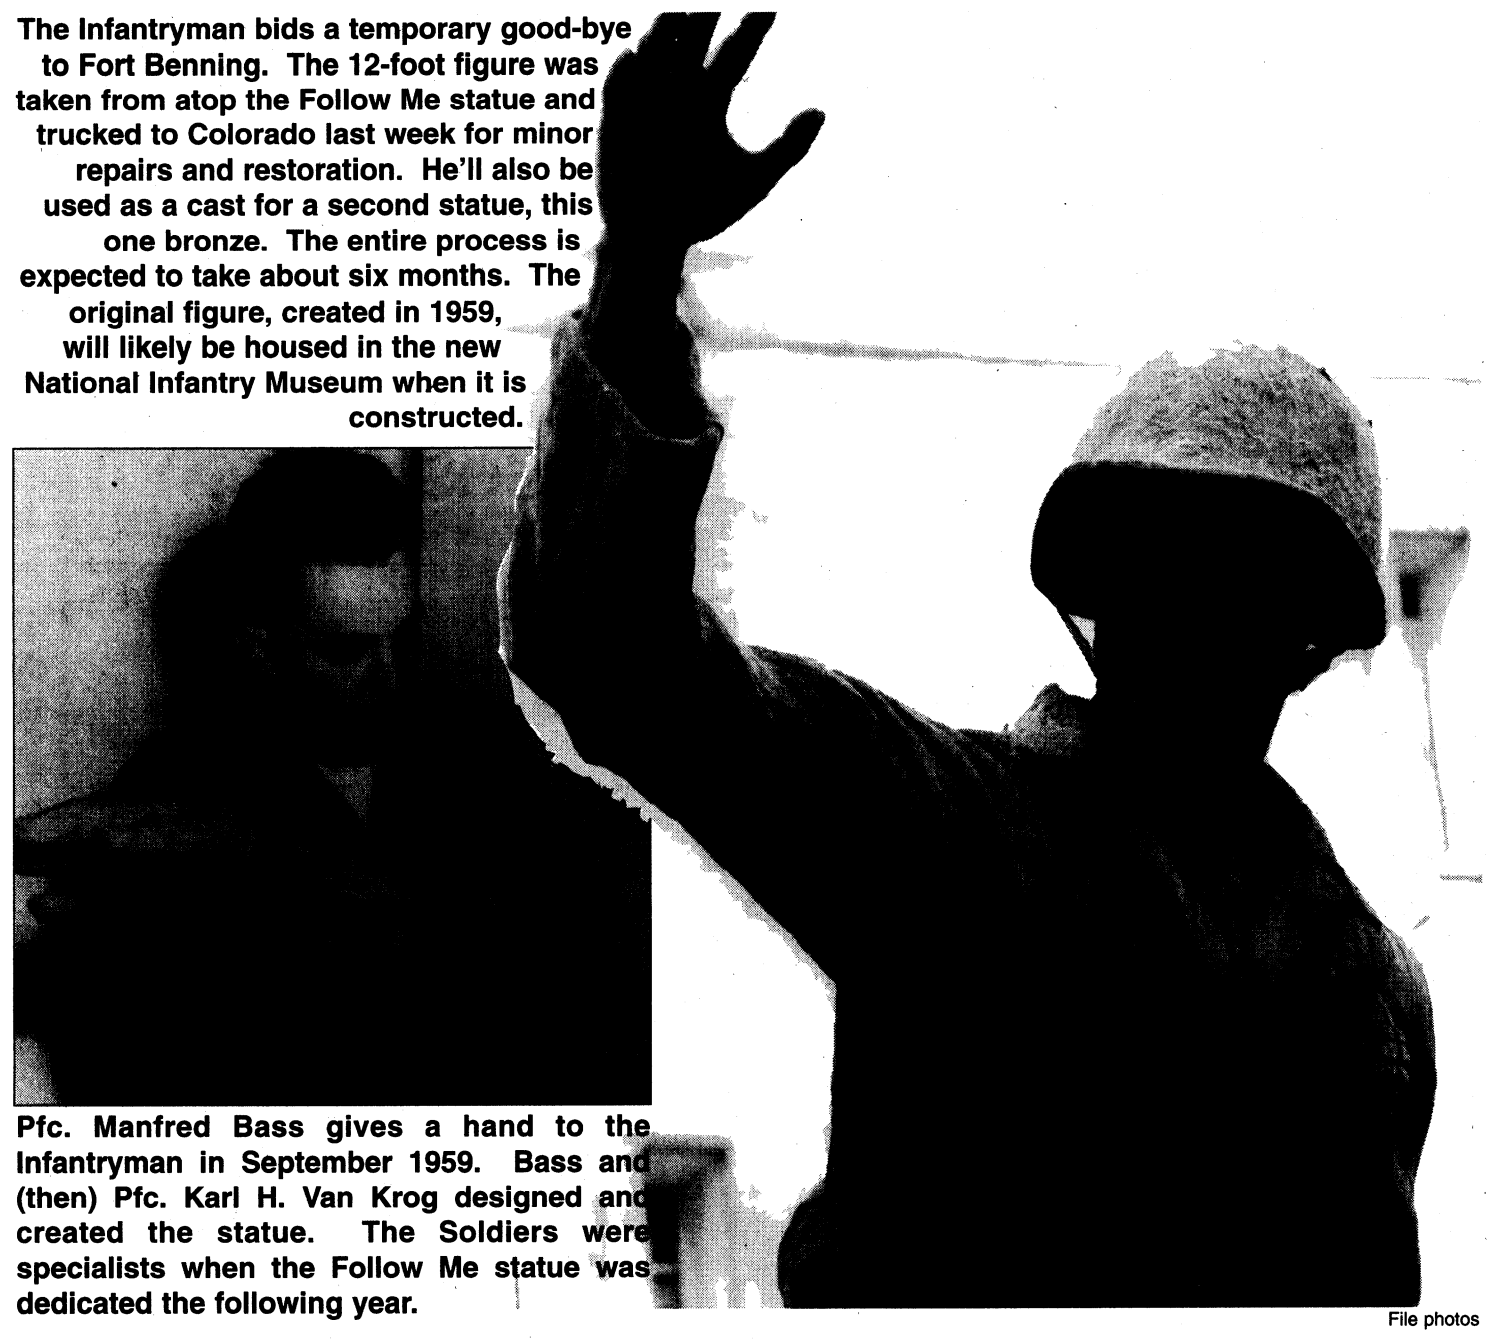
"Every Sunday he sees the results of his work," said his father, Col. Lawrence Green with DENTAC.

Green's mother is Gitta Meyer-Green.

Christopher Herold

Herold is an 18-year-old Columbus High School senior.

To complete his Eagle Scout requirements, he built furnishings for the Catholic parish at Fort Benning: a small altar and storage cabinet for the Sightseeing Road Chapel and a rolling altar for use during the Spanish mass at the Main Post Chapel.



He had help with the technical aspects of the project from Ann Shaw, Faith Middle School's shop teacher.

Part of Herold's motivation to undertake the project was seeing others in the troop attain the Eagle ranking, according to his father, Col. E.J. Herold, assigned to the Air War College in Montgomery, Ala.

"It convinced him it was possible and indeed desirable," he said.

In addition to completing his Eagle Scout project and attending high school, Herold plays varsity basketball, teaches French to middle schoolers at Faith, volunteers at Donovan Research Library and participates in Beta Club and the National Honor Society.

His mother is Catherine Herold.

The Infantryman bids a temporary good-bye to Fort Benning. The 12-foot figure was taken from atop the Follow Me statue and trucked to Colorado last week for minor repairs and restoration. He'll also be used as a cast for a second statue, this one bronze. The entire process is expected to take about six months. The original figure, created in 1959, will likely be housed in the new National Infantry Museum when it is constructed.

Pfc. Manfred Bass gives a hand to the Infantryman in September 1959. Bass and (then) Pfc. Karl H. Van Krog designed and created the statue. The Soldiers were specialists when the Follow Me statue was dedicated the following year.

get this — a bronze-impregnated epoxy for the outer surface which looks similar to bronze. It cost just over $2,000 to complete.

Six hundred people were present when the statue was unveiled on Eubanks Field, where it stood for four years, until Infantry Hall was completed in 1964. Except for a brief respite in 1988, when it was first carted off for a good cleaning, the Infantryman has kept watch over the comings and goings in Infantry Hall ever since.

Somewhere along the line, no one can say just when, someone called the Infantryman Iron Mike and it stuck. Now you and I know Iron Mike resides at Fort Bragg, N.C., poor fellow, at the intersection of Randolph Street and Armstead Avenue.

It's interesting that Bragg's statue was originally named the Airborne Statue, and has since been dubbed Mike, like ours, which begs the question, who is this fellow Mike? Any answers I've heard are pure speculation.

So there you have it, the story of the Follow Me Statue and the Infantryman, who is undergoing some much needed refinement. He'll be back this summer, probably in July, fit to fight and ready to lead the way.

CLOSER LOOK

26-year-old Officer Candidate Eugene Wyles modeled for the artists who created the Follow Me statue in 1959.

Now 71, retired Maj. Wyles, a resident of Olla, La., and a veteran of the Korean and Vietnam wars, recently recalled the experience that made his the face of the U.S. Army infantryman.

"I took a lot of guff for that from the senior (officer) candidates," said Wyles, who called Fort Benning his 'Army home.'

"I wasn't supposed to shave, and they had me roll around in the dirt to make it look like I was in combat," he said. "Of course, I caught hell when those senior candidates saw me."

Although Wyles is proud of the statue, he doesn't own a replica, and he hasn't seen the real thing "in more years than I recall."

"It's always been a bigger thing to my family than to me," he said. "They get excited about it more than I do, but it sure would be something to see it again."

Wyles even recorded a song titled Follow Me in 1967.

"It was really just a dig at the people who were protesting the (Vietnam) war," he said.

"It really wasn't that good. It was just me talkin' to them, because they were sayin' there wasn't a reason for it, and I'd been there and seen it for myself."

The song, released by Columbia Records, made it to number 30 on the billboard charts.

Columbia predicted a hit, but the Army pulled the plug on Wyles' involvement, forcing him to release it under the name Gene Wyles, with no publicity.

"The Grand Old Opry wanted me to go on stage in my uniform, but the Army said no." he said.

"They told me I'd have to give up my career, and I couldn't do that. I only had two years till retirement."

Still, Follow Me led to a string of patriotic songs, including Wyles' most recent, Soldiers' Heaven, and the soon-to-be-released Unknown Soldier. Proceeds from that one will go to the children of Soldiers killed in Iraq, he said.

"Cause that's where my heart is, with them, though they don't know it," Wyles said.

Every time I see them over there on TV, I just want to be with them so bad. I'm with them in my heart."

Drunken driver shares story at Faith

Message packs punch with students

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The expressions on the faces in the audience were horrified. Some looked away; others had to leave the room, so upsetting were the images on the screen.

But they were images with impact, and many of the Faith Middle School students who saw them will remember them for a long time to come. Those images may even save their lives one day.

The movie was Just Call Me Crash ... The Denise Wagoner Story, and Wagoner, the guest of honor, traveled to Fort Benning from Wisconsin to share her story.

Her visit was part of the school's celebration of Red Ribbon Week, an annual anti-substance abuse campaign.

Wagoner, who was brain damaged, blinded and disfigured in a drunken driving accident nine years ago, details her accident and the resulting injuries in the video. She surprises viewers at the end of the video when she reveals herself as the drunken driver.

The 37-year-old then took the podium before the school assembly, shared her story and opened the floor for the students' questions.

"Can you cry?" one child asked.

Wagoner, who lost both eyes during the accident, was quiet.

"Yes," she said finally.

It was a powerful moment, one of many that carry Wagoner's powerful message.

"Miss Wagoner's program has a profound impact, because of her intellect, her appearance and her story — it's so real to the students," said Debra Alexander, instructional support specialist for Fort Benning schools.

"Substance abuse is so rampant today. It's marketed as the thing to do to be cool," Alexander said. "We want to let the students know the reality of substance abuse — whether it be illegal drugs or alcohol."

Wagoner's sincerity and "to-the point" openness about her close encounter with death only add to her story, Alexander said.

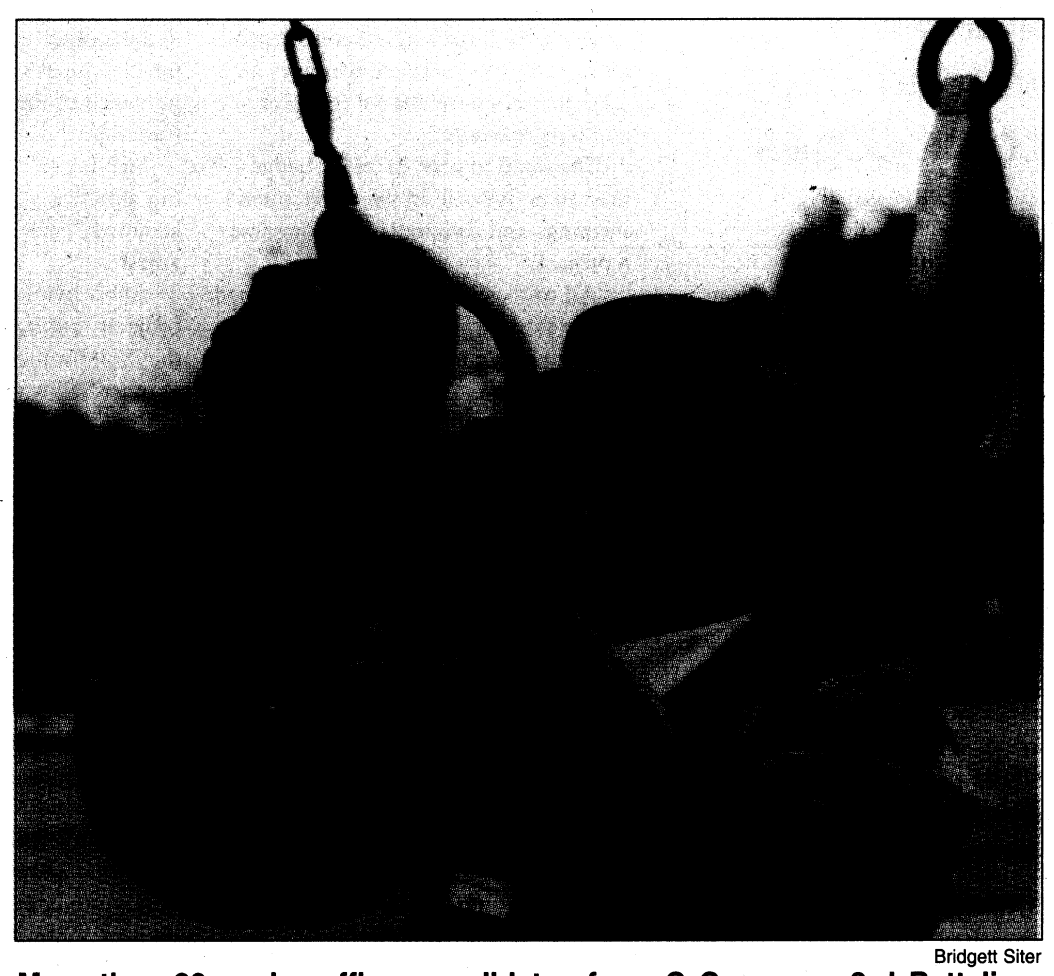
"(Some of these children) are getting ready to go out into the real world," she said, referring to the school's eighth-graders who will soon venture to off-post high schools. "They need to be prepared and educated to make the best choices for their lives.

"It takes more than just saying no to fight substance abuse ... We're hoping this program will make a lasting impression on the students' hearts and minds."

And it did just that for many students, including sixth-grader Zackary Arabinko, who left the assembly after seeing images of Wagoner's face after her accident.

"It was really gross. I had to leave for the last part, because the pictures were just too much," he said.

But it was a necessary evil.



"It makes me think that drinking and driving is really bad and that people should think before they drink," Arabinko said.

Even though Arabinko's only 12 now, he said he will probably still remember those images when he is old enough to climb behind the wheel. They'll remind him not to drink and drive, not to ride along with people who want to drink and drive and not to let them drive.

"This teaches us to listen to what can happen to us if we ride with someone who is drunk or if we're driving drunk," he said.

> "Substance abuse is so rampant today ... We want the children to know the reality of substance abuse ... whether it be illegal drugs or alcohol ... It takes more than just saying no to fight substance abuse. We're hoping this program will make a lasting impression on the students hearts and minds."

Stress is no obstacle

Bridgett Siter

More than 30 senior officer candidates from C Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment, spruced up the obstacle course at Faith Middle School Feb. 11. Each OCS class adopts a service project, said Senior Officer Candidate Susan Bosco. The 3rd Battalion's 2nd Platoon chose to work at Faith because middle schoolers, like officer candidates, "deal with a lot of stress," said Bosco, a former middle school teacher. "And what they shouldn't have to deal with is graffiti and rust on their playground equipment," she said. "It's just a little thing, but we want to send the message that we care." Senior Officer Candidate Ngoye Dayo, pictured here, and his classmates, who graduated Thursday, spent several hours scrubbing and repairing and painting the equipment.

Lent recalls Jesus' suffering for man

Chaplain (Maj.) Jimmy Ward
1st Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment

Lent. What do you think of? My first thought was not of something that involved my Christian walk. I did not grow up in a home or a church that observed the Lenten season and really did not become familiar with it until I came into the military.

Even after I joined the Army, I found Lent observed differently at the various posts on which I served.

The practice of Lent began in the fourth century of the church and spans the 40 weekdays from Ash Wednesday to Holy Thursday of Easter week. It is marked by a time of prayer and preparation to celebrate Easter.

This season of the year is equal to Advent in importance to the church. Traditionally, it is observed by prayer, fasting and the giving of palms.

Some church members observe it by giving up meat, alcohol, sweets or other types of food. It is a time for humanity to humbly recall the suffering of Jesus for the remission of sin and the need for personal salvation.

That's some history, and now I would challenge you to think with me about some "mystory." My computer let me know that mystory is not a proper word. But it is a proper thought!

REFLECTIONS

I think most of us spend quite a bit of time working and re-working mystory. Now stay with me. Mystory is not yourstory but they intersect at "Hisstory"!

Let me say it this way, my life story is not the same as yours, yet we do have something eternal in common. Jesus. His life, suffering, death and resurrection affect each of us. The Bible says he is the author and finisher of our faith.

What does that have to do with Lent? It means that there is something bigger than my story and your story.

I joked with my wife the other night about suffering through a bowl of ice cream with no chocolate on it. I got to wondering how often I truly lift minor irritations to the realm of suffering. What I need is a little perspective. Lent offers that. Jesus truly suffered for you and me.

He suffered beating, taunting and the humiliation of a criminal's death on a Roman cross for your sin and mine. He suffered separation from the heavenly father to pay the cost of my sin.

Lent calls me not to suffer as he did but rather to remember that he did suffer for me and calls me to holiness. Not a holiness of my own making, but the holiness of a right walk with him. I give up something because he gave up everything for me.

My declaration of unworthiness and sinfulness causes me to humbly ask his forgiveness. I think I will seek to give up those things in me that would hurt, condemn or judge your story before I take my story to him.

Walk with me through Lent and meet me at Easter, at his story.

Speak the same language of love

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

What woman wouldn't have purred over a brand new 3.5 horsepower, air-invected, power tunnel, dual-bag, ergo-gripped vaccum cleaner for Valentine's Day? What about him? Can you believe the $15 Hallmark Extravaganza Card with Elizabeth Barrett Browning's "How do I love thee, let me count the ways" embossed in gold leaf and lace, complete with matching lovebird poem keychain, got only a single glance and grunt before being used to pick the meat from his teeth after dinner? What's the problem here? Well, the problem may have to do with the fact that in most relationships, we "no-speak-the-same-language!"

I love things with cords. Power tools are cool. Horsepower rocks. It took some time, though, for me to discover the amazing truth that my wife does not love things with cords ... especially on days that belong to Hallmark. And conversely, early on in our relationship, her idea of surprising me with a special evening had something to do with "bonding" by shopping for curtains (Sheer or textured? Pleated or patterned? What the ... ?) Go ahead, just put a gun to my head — curtain shopping is not my idea of a good time!

Hawkins

Fortunately, after 21 years of valentines, we've gotten a little bit of our act together. And part of the dance we've got down now is better knowing how to "speak-the-same-language." Rookies in relationships often make the mistake of giving what they want, not giving what their mate wants — we just don't understand our mate's "language of love." Though there are many languages of love, here are six of the more common ones. Which language does your lover speak?

- The language of time — just being together; hanging out
- The language of encouragement — specific, positive affirmation
- The language of activity — doing something together that's fun and fulfilling
- The language of gifts — thoughtfulness in the form of small romantic purchases
- The language of affection — (not sex, guys!) gentle, caring touch that doesn't demand anything
- The language of sex — (not affection, ladies!) spontaneous, passionate, unbridled physical playfulness

Again, the key is not to give what you want, but what they need! Ask your mate what his or her languages of love is, and then see if you can speak his or her language in some way, large or small, at least once a day this week.

Want some more information on how to speak your mate's language of love or how to help them speak yours? Give us a call at 545-1760.

With a season record of 27 wins, 21 losses and four ties, the Columbus Cottonmouths are on a mission to prove they belong with the best teams in the East Coast Hockey League.

The Cottonmouths, who play at the Columbus Civic Center, known as the "Snake Pit," are now on the hunt for a playoff berth.

"We have a very young hockey club," said Brian Curran, Cottonmouths head coach. "But after starting off badly, the guys started to believe in themselves and came together as a team."

Curran said that his team really responds to the fans' enthusiasm at the games.

"These players love the fans, and when they step onto the ice, they always give everything they have," Curran said. "They want to give the fans their best effort possible."

Besides watching an action-packed hockey game, fans are treated to activities in and around the game.

"The activities we do in between the periods are a lot of fun for the fans," said Scott Middlebrooks, director of sales and marketing. "Someone is always going to leave the Snake Pit with a Cottonmouths prize."

Activities that fans can participate in are "Chuck-a-puck," in which fans chuck foam hockey pucks towards center ice for a chance to win a prize.

The Cottonmouths also offer two fans a chance to ride the Zamboni during each intermission.

"Everybody wants to ride it," Middlebrooks said. "It's something that the people who do never forget."

Middlebrooks said the Cottonmouths do their best to present a great product both on and off the ice.

"This is family entertainment at an affordable price," he said. "Tickets to the game are a great price, especially for military families."

Tickets range from $7 for upper level tickets to $13 for ice level tickets, with valid military identification card.

March 27 will be Military Appreciation Night at the Snake Pit. The Cottonmouths will wear military jerseys, which will be auctioned off after the game against the South Carolina Stingrays.

"We do all of this to show our appreciation to our military and their families," Middlebrooks said.

AFLAC will provide 2,000 tickets to Soldiers and family members for that game only.

For more information, call 571-0086.

Red Cross offers swimming lessons

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The American Red Cross will offer preschool, Level 1, 2 and 3 swimming classes through the end of May at the Briant Wells Indoor Pool.

The classes, which will be held in the evenings, will teach children the basic skills of swimming and staying safe while in the water.

"Swimming is a necessity in life," said Michele Walton, American Red Cross health and safety director. "Everyone should know how to swim not only for their safety, but for the safety of others."

The first classes, which are Level 1 and 3 courses, will be held March 2, 4, 9, 11, 16, 18, 23 and 25. The Level 1 course will be from 6 to 7 p.m., and the Level 3 course will be from 7 to 8 p.m.

The infant and preschool swimming class, which runs from 6 to 7 p.m., will start on March 30 and will be held on April 1, 6, 8, 13, 15, 20 and 22.

The Level 2 course will also be held on these days, but will be from 7 to 8 p.m.

Level 1 and 2 courses will again be offered on April 27, 29, May 4, 6, 11, 13, 18 and 20. The Level 1 course will be from 6 to 7 p.m. and the Level 2 course will be from 7 to 8 p.m.

The Infant and Preschool Aquatics Program is designed to get young children adjusted to the water.

"In the preschool course, we try to get the children comfortable in the water," said Julie Tipton, swimming instructor. "We want them to learn to not be scared of the water."

Infants in the preschool class enjoyed their first class session Wednesday.

"My son, Michael, enjoyed getting in the water and splashing around," said Heather Hallows. "He's responded very well to this class, and he looks like he's having a good time."

The Level 1,2 and 3 courses will teach the children the basics of swimming.

"There are certain things that are required to be taught on each day at each level," Tipton said. "But, no matter what is being learned on any given day, respect for the water is always taught."

Cost of the class is $30 for the 10 sessions for each student, and each class is limited to 10 students.

Heather Hallows works with her 8-month old son, Michael, during Infants/Preschool Aquatics Program Wednesday at the Briant Wells Indoor Pool.

"I'm very glad that the courses are being offered here," said Georganna Rapaport. "It's a way that my son, Brennan, can get an early experience in the water."

The American Red Cross is looking for swimming instructors to help with these classes or to teach other classes.

"We need more instructors," Walton said. "We want to be able to offer more classes in the future, and we need more instructors to do that."

For more information on the classes or to volunteer to be an instructor, call the Red Cross at 545-5194.

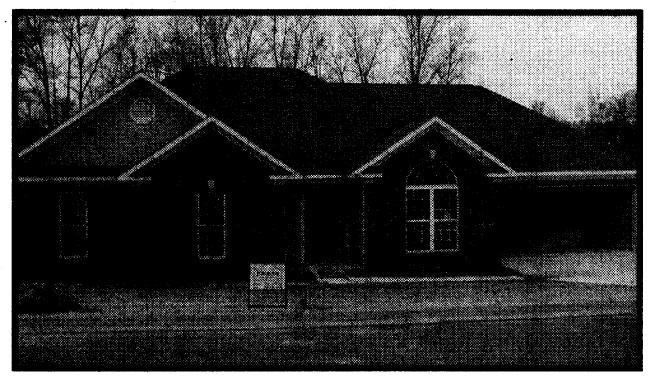
Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.



So check it out, and put your money back to work.

Orthopaedic Surgeon

Desert Regional Medical Center located in Palm Springs, CA, seeks an Orthopaedic surgeon.

The Coachella Valley area is one of the fastest growing areas in the state/US with population projections doubling by 2015. Current service area encompasses 850 sq miles and approximately 500,000 people. We are located two hrs from LA and San Diego.

This is a single specialty practice opportunity with several other Orthopaedics in the valley. DRMC may provide a collections guarantee for the first year of practice, relocation assistance, marketing, and malpractice reimbursement for one year. Limited managed care.

Excellent quality of life. Temperatures range from 40's to 70's for nine months of the year and from 90's to 115 during the summer months. Excellent school systems; university under construction. A wide variety of outdoor and sports activities, such as golf, tennis, biking and hiking is readily available throughout the year. Cultural activities, museums, juried art shows, and live theater also abound. We're surrounded by Santa Rosa Mountains up to 12,000 in elevation.

Please fax CV to (760) 323-6580

Suicide is not the answer

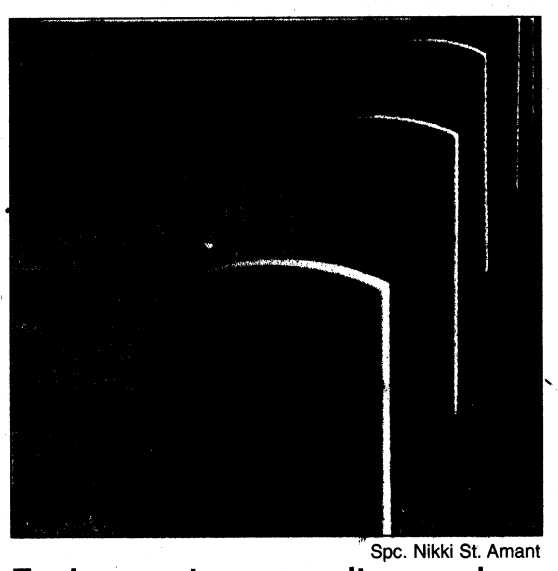
Fort Benning not immune to community problem

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Within the past 30 days, Fort Benning has lost two of its family — not to war or accidents or illnesses, but to suspected suicide.

Since Jan. 1, 2001, nine Fort Benning Soldiers have committed suicide, said Yvonne Wilbanks, post suicide prevention manager. Two of those suicides are still under investigation.

Two family members and one civilian have committed suicide on post since Jan. 1, 2001, according to post Criminal Investigation Division statistics.



And it's not just here. According to Department of the Army statistics, on average, anywhere from 10 to 15 or more Soldiers per 100,000 kill themselves each year.

These numbers may seem relatively low compared to other causes of death, but there are countless other casualties of suicide — friends, family and co-workers left behind to deal with grief, uncertainty and possible guilt.

"Suicide is devastating. The impact has a ripple effect on all who know the individual," Wilbanks said.

The choice to commit suicide usually arises from depression, which can be brought about by many factors, Wilbanks said. Marital problems, domestic abuse, a perceived lack of resources, financial distress, a crisis or legal problems can

The Army's Golden Knights are scheduled to "drop in" during Columbus' Thunder in the Valley Air Show in March.

Columbus air show to fly high

Thunder in the Valley tickets discounted for Soldiers, families

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

For one weekend and one weekend only, Columbus' annual Thunder in the Valley Air Show will fill the great wide open with the thrills and chills of the aviation world.

The show, which will be March 20 and 21 at the Columbus Metropolitan Airport, will feature stunning aero-acrobatics, up-close-and-personal static displays, demonstrations and even the chance to take to the skies in a helicopter or fixed-wing aircraft. To top it off, the Golden Knights are expected to "drop in" during the show.

The aero-acrobatics are guaranteed to be "an unbelievable display of flying," said Chuck Hunsaker, Association of the U.S. Army coordinator for the event.

Meanwhile, the static displays will offer visitors the chance to explore everything from the Army's Stryker and Bradley Fighting Vehicle to a few of NASCAR's finest — including the Army car — to the only flying B-29 in the world, Hunsaker said. For those unfamiliar with this World War II-era aircraft, the B-29 is almost 100 feet long with a wingspan of 141 feet — that's half a football field.

The event's demonstrations will include the thrill-inspiring, jump-in arrival of the Army's Golden Knights, the Aeroshell team of the T-6 Texan aircraft and a Rangers in Action spot.

All the while, children can find more fun at a carnival, complete with rides and a moon bouncer.

If you've been in years past, don't skip this year's event, thinking you've seen it all, Hunsaker warned. There's something new and different every year.

"This is one of the largest outdoor, non-alcoholic events for families in the Columbus area," said Greg Allmendinger, head chairman of the event.

Infantry Traveling Team visits Stewart

3rd ID gets glimpse of future technology

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Infantry Traveling Team visited Fort Stewart, Ga., Feb. 18, to help kick off the 3rd Infantry Division's Infantry Conference and brief the division on the U.S. Army Infantry School's initiatives.

Fort Benning Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley and other post officials talked to members of the 3rd ID about new training methods and equipment being tested.

As the traveling team talked about the school's initiatives, they asked for Soldiers' firsthand accounts of what worked or didn't work while the unit was deployed and what needed to be changed.

"This is basically an open discussion so we can learn about new developments in the Army and give some insight from what we learned in Iraq," said Capt. Jeff LaPlante, assistant division training officer, 3rd ID.

As operations continue in support of Operation Enduring Freedom and Operation Iraqi Freedom, more than 500 Soldiers have lost their lives and more than 3,500 have been wounded. The main goal of the conference is to find ways to reduce those numbers in the future, Freakley said. One way the Army is trying to reduce casualties is through the Warrior Ethos initiative.

Warrior Ethos, a product of Task Force Soldier, is the concept of preparing every Soldier to close with and destroy the enemy when necessary — even if it means doing it with his or her bare hands.

As Freakley put it, Soldiers shouldn't be saying, "I hope my convoy doesn't get attacked." They should be saying, "God help whoever gets in my way."

Warrior Ethos is beginning to spread throughout the Army as many of the schools on Fort Benning and

THE IMPACT LIVES ON

Suicide isn't painless

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The more I think about it, the more I realize there isn't much I can't write about. That's a scary thought.

My family moved to Red River Army Depot near Texarkana before my junior year of high school. Luckily, my new classmates — many of whom had been together since kindergarten — made us "depot" kids feel like we had lived there all our lives. Nothing much ever happened in New Boston. Friday nights were devoted to football, and Saturday nights were spent cruising from the gas station to the Pizza Hut and back again. We'd pile into Chaz's car — an old, electric blue hearse. Life was good, and things were simple, until Chaz's older brother committed suicide. Nothing was ever the same.

I only met Mike a few times, but everyone else in our circle grew up with him, and his death was devastating.

We rallied around Chaz the best we could, but what do a bunch of 15- and 16-year-olds know about coping with suicide?

Chaz didn't get the kind of help he needed, and within a year he was in trouble, breaking into houses and stealing. I'm not a psychologist, but I'm willing to bet there was a connection.

Maybe that was his way of crying out for attention from parents so wrapped up in their grief they forgot about the son who was still alive.

That was almost 20 years ago. I've lost touch with Chaz. I can only hope that he's doing all right.

I can't help but think of the old M*A*S*H theme song that talks about suicide being painless. It's not. All the hurt and pain Mike was carrying was transferred to his parents, to Chaz and to all of us.

These days, with access to the Internet, you can read all sorts of statistics about suicide. Five times more males than females commit suicide, regardless of age. Suicides hit an all-time high in 1933 when 30 in 100,000 men killed themselves. The 2001 rate of about 10.7 in 100,000 represented the 11th leading cause of death in the U.S. That's 30,622, more than the number who died of AIDS.

I read a commentary in a Seattle paper that led with the statement, "Suicide isn't newsworthy." I beg to differ.

Suicide is on the rise in the Army and in our schools, and it's not something anyone wants to talk about. Our kids are being bullied, our Soldiers are being shot at every day in Iraq. They need our help.

We need to educate ourselves on the warning signs. We need to start talking about suicide. One conversation may make a difference in someone's life.

Depression, financial troubles, and psychological disorders — they're all treatable, even curable. Death isn't.

Those of us who knew you die 1,000 deaths because of you. We carry the guilt and pain of your death for the rest of our lives.

If you think the rest of us are better off without you … you're wrong.

The other side of suicide

Suicide hits close to home for me. Almost every side of the story I've heard comes from the family or friends of the person who committed suicide or attempted it. It's not very often you hear the story from someone who tried it and failed.

Here's my story.

All my life, I was picked on. People picked on me for various reasons, whether it was because I was skinny or I picked my nose or because my father was a police officer. People looked for reasons. Sometimes they didn't look for a reason; they just did it.

I remember the day I started toward the edge. I was in seventh grade, and I walked into math class and was immediately thrown to the floor. While two kids held me down, students kicked me in the ribs and stomped on my chest and stomach.

Then, a girl took her boot and scraped it across my face, cutting it open and leaving a scar that I carry with me today.

That didn't push me over the edge, though.

What pushed me over the edge was in the middle of my eighth-grade year on a Thursday, when a bully flung me into a locker and beat me up during school just because. I just happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time.

That night, I decided that I would end it all the next day. I didn't think I had any reason to live. I didn't think anyone liked me. I didn't think my parents wanted to listen to my problems.

I thought they would tell me to get over it and not worry about what other people think about me.

I didn't think anybody in the world cared about me.

When I left school on Friday, I didn't bring any of my books home, because I didn't want to have to put my parents through the trouble of returning them.

Once I got home, I decided to wait until my parents left for dinner, so I could be alone. My sister was spending the night with a friend.

While my parents were getting ready, I grabbed my father's duty gun. I took it to my room and hid it under my pillow and fell asleep until my parents left. I didn't want my parents, especially my mom, to hear the gun go off. I couldn't put them through that much pain.

I thought I had set my alarm clock to wake me up around 7 p.m. when I knew they would be out to dinner.

Apparently, my alarm clock wasn't set, or I just slept right through, because I woke up the next morning, and the gun was gone. My parents and my sister were home.

After that night, the gun was moved from where I got it, and I never saw it again.

I thought to myself, how could I screw this up? It was too easy. I had the gun. Why did I wait for my parents to leave? Why didn't I do it right there? I'm such a screwup. What's next for me?

To this day, I remember every detail of the events that led up to me seriously considering suicide. Today, I'm glad I didn't hear the alarm clock go off. I now realize the pain it would've caused my family and how much it would have torn them into pieces.

I've learned that suicide is not the way out. There is help available, and you have to take those steps.

I never told anyone I was being picked on. I held it all inside until, finally, I wanted to end it all.

I know that now, no matter what, I can always talk to someone about my problems and not have to resort to suicide.

I wonder what would the world be like today if I had been successful at suicide? What if I had heard the alarm clock and woken up? Would the people I've come across in my life have had the same impact on somebody else that they had on me, and would someone I've had an impact on had someone else to make that same impact?

I don't care to know the answers to those questions, I'm here today and living life to the fullest.

Come on, gang, it's a turf war

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Sorry I missed you Monday night. There were two of us present at Monday's meeting with Muscogee County School officials, two from Fort Benning anyway.

The rest were local citizens concerned with the perceived unfairness of a proposed rezoning plan — one that would have a great impact on Fort Benning students.

Muscogee County School board officials laid out a blueprint of changes they believe will alleviate the problem of overcrowding at Northside High School, the county's newest magnet. Problem is, the changes will only create more problems — bigger problems — in two schools, Spencer and Jordan.

You see, Spencer and Jordan have a history of discipline problems, because, some say, and I tend to agree, they're populated with students from low income areas. Before you get bent out of shape about that — "Poor kids aren't bad kids!" you say. — hear me out. Statistics will bear me out.

It is a socio-economic issue. Studies prove children who live in poverty, those typically found in public housing where single-parent homes are the norm, are more prone to seek out or fall prey to gangs.

Now the accepted terminology these days is "gang-like behavior" or "gang-related activity," but I'm not one to mince words. We're talking gangs here. They're real.

And for years, they caused major problems, especially at Jordan and Spencer. Two years ago, when Northside opened its doors, the district rezoned, and in doing so, they removed two public housing developments from Jordan's attendance zone. They effectively separated rivaling factions (gangs!) and drastically reduced the number of discipline problems at the school. Numbers don't lie.

Since then, Jordan's made a better name for itself, primarily through its vocational magnet academy, which has caught the eye of local industry leaders who recognize the need for skilled labor leaders.

The proposed rezoning would put three public housing units into Jordan and two more into Spencer. No public housing would be added to the county's other six high schools.

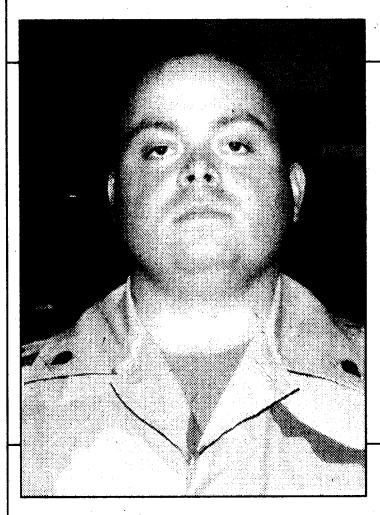
Folks, poor kids deserve an education every bit as much as the privileged. To add kids from rivaling neighborhoods will serve no good purpose. As one man put it to the school board, "You're going to create a war zone."

There are feasible alternatives to the board's proposal. Several were suggested Monday night at Carver High School. More will be brought up next Monday, March 2, when the board will entertain the concerns of local citizens once again, this time at Shaw High School at 6 p.m.

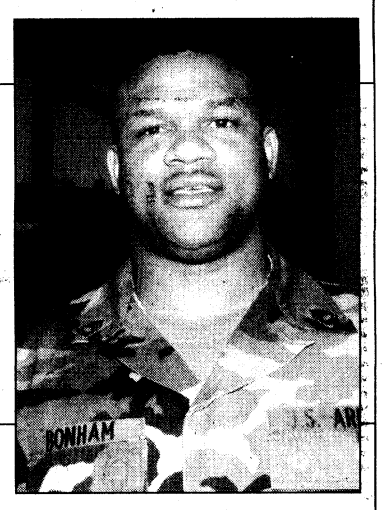
This is your chance to make sure Fort Benning's high school, Spencer, where 80 percent of our high schoolers attend, will not be the victim of a bad idea and a silent majority.

I sure hope to see you there.

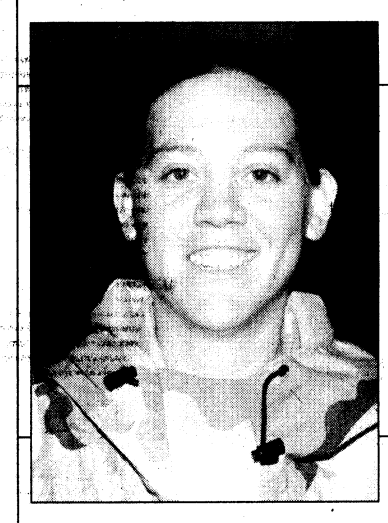
VARIOUS VOICES



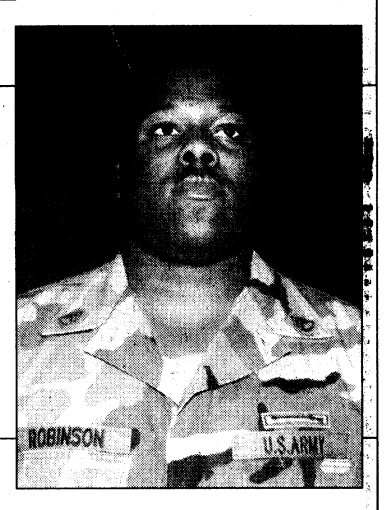
What can you do to prevent suicide; how would you help someone contemplating it?



Audra Brock, family member — "Just be a listening ear and try to find out what the problem is. That's the best way I know how. Most people don't want to commit suicide if they are talking to you."



Sgt. Daniela Oelze, 2145th Garrison Support Unit — "I would try to talk them into either talking to a chaplain, or if I feel that they would talk to me, I would try to help them by either just listening or by giving them advice."



Spc. Michael Phillips, 926th Engineer Battalion — "I would most likely try to talk to the person and find out what has him or her so upset. If that wasn't enough, I would immediately seek someone else like a platoon sergeant or chaplain and make sure the individual was not left alone."

Sgt. 1st Class Matthew Bonham, U.S. Army Infantry Center — "First thing — immediate intervention to make sure they don't harm themselves. Second — I'd help them find a reason to live."

Airman 1st Class Amanda Pardini, 366th Security Force Squadron — "To prevent suicide, I would always try to find a better reason for living."

Staff Sgt. Christopher Robinson, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I would sit down with that person and try to get in their head and listen to what is going on. Sometimes people have things bottled up and just need to let it out."

Benning celebrates Black History Month

Tricommunity unites to honor heritage

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Members of the tricommunity packed the Fort Benning Officers' Club Tuesday for the annual Black History Month luncheon.

Master Sgt. Kevin Elliot, equal opportunity advisor, said the unit representatives sold more than 400 tickets for the event, centered on the theme: "African-Americans and Education — the 50th Anniversary of Brown v. Board of Education."

The program featured performances by students at every level from elementary school to college.

The Stowers Elementary School dancers followed vocal performances by Spencer High student, Chandra Alfred, and Miss Columbus, Samantha Daniels.

Dressed in black, with colorful patterned scarves, the 22 boys and girls performed an interpretive dance to "Don't Cry," by gospel singer Kirk Franklin. The group, led by fifth-grade teacher Patti Harling-Gray, gave up recess and after-school time to audition and practice. In choosing the music, Harling-Gray said the students listened to different songs and talked about them.

"We wanted to choose a piece where we could relay a Gospel message to the audience," Harling-Gray said. She said the students were worried about performing outside of the school, but she knew they would be fine.

"They worked hard and were dedicated," she said. The dancers spent six weeks creating and rehearsing their dance.

Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, commanding general, thanked the students for their powerful performance and introduced the guest speaker, the Rev. Debora Grant, pastor of St. John A.M.E. Church in Columbus.

Grant, who received her undergraduate degree from Clark Atlanta University in Atlanta, also holds a masters of Divinity and a doctorate of Ministry.

The youngest of nine children, Grant and three of her sisters followed in their father's footsteps in answering a call to the ministry.

"I know that you'll be inspired by our guest speaker," Freakley said, "while we remember when America came together as one to educate our youth. Reverend Grant is known for her special ability to reach out to all people and known for her great love for children and youth."

Grant began her remarks by saying it was an honor to be among the Soldiers at Fort Benning, whom she said are "living on the edge of life, for our lives."

The basis of her speech was drawn from the New Testament, about believers who were called out of darkness and into light.

Fifty years ago, Grant said, our nation was playing with darkness by denying black boys and girls the right to an education.

"What if someone had put a ceiling on your possibilities?" Grant asked the audience. "Where would we be?"

She said everyone is called to stand for what is right and sometimes, to do so requires critical change. Brown v. Board of Education represented taking a stand that brought about critical change.

"Finding common ground is a continuous process," she said. "And it can't be done only in the month of February. We must pursue authentic community all of the time, tap into the power of diversity and answer the call to peace and justice."

Grant left the audience with three main points:

"Don't underestimate your own capabilities.

> "What if someone had put a ceiling on your possibilities?" Where would we be?"
>
> Rev. Debra Grant
> Pastor of St. John A.M.E.Church in Columbus

"Don't underestimate the potential of others.

"And never underestimate the possibilities of God."

Grant tapped her head and said "brain power — all of us together means all things are possible."

Survey gives residents voice for improvements

DA to send questionnaire in April

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

With a housing repair and renovation backlog of more than $100 million and housing units that average 44 years of age, Fort Benning officials are looking to the Residential Communities Initiative to improve post living conditions.

RCI privatizes housing and partners with an experienced developer through a 50-year ground lease, said Ron Smith, RCI program manager.

The Army has awarded 18 RCI partnerships and another 10 are slated for award within the next two years, including Fort Benning.

The Fort Benning partnership is expected to be awarded this fall. The developer would then be responsible for the maintenance, construction, demolition and operations of housing. In return, it would receive the Soldiers' Basic Housing Allowance.

There are two important actions approaching in the process — an environmental assessment of quarters and an official Army housing survey, Smith said.

For the Environmental Baseline Study, a contractor will inspect post quarters, both interior and exterior for things like asbestos, radon and lead paint.

This will identify to the developer any existing or potential environmental issues.

The contractor needs to survey at least 10 percent of quarters, about 400 units.

The inspector will evaluate as many unoccupied homes as possible, but may have to access some of the occupied ones, Smith said. An RCI representative will contact residents to make an appointment at the residents' convenience.

The appointment shouldn't be longer than 30 minutes and there will be no samples taken.

The primary focus will be storage areas, heating, venting and air conditioning systems, under skins, attics and basements. Some photos will be taken to document the condition of the quarters.

The inspectors aren't looking for how the residents keep house, Smith said, but are looking at the environmental condition of the house before transitioning operations to the RCI partner.

The other event, the official housing survey, is a questionnaire of about 60 questions asking residents about the size and condition of their quarters and their level of satisfaction for the services offered to them.

The survey will be used by the RCI partner to understand residents' desires.

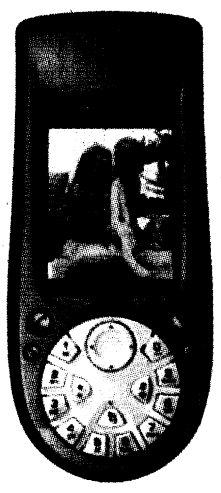
"It is extremely important that residents take time to fill out the survey and return it using the pre-addressed postage paid envelope," Smith said.

Residents can expect the survey in their mailboxes in early April. The deadline for return is June 25.

"We'll be able to use (the survey results) as a benchmark to measure our progress and see where we improved," he said.

"It will also help us get a better understanding of the needs of the customer and identify how the current contractors are doing."

Fort Benning officials are planning to attend an industry forum March 12 in Kentucky to present the project to interested developers.



"We're going to talk to them about Fort Benning's mission," Smith said, "so that they better understand the culture of Fort Benning."

The forum is followed up with a site visit and briefing for the developers in late March, "so they can see firsthand, the condition and square footage of all housing units."

A solicitation requesting developer qualifications goes out April 1 and work is projected to begin in late spring 2006.

"If you want it all, we've got it all."

OCS grad pushes ahead for mom

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

"The person who has nothing for which he is willing to fight, nothing which is more important than his own personal safety, is a miserable creature and has no chance of being free unless made or kept so by the exertions of better men than himself."

John Stuart Mill

One of the graduates of Officer Candidate School Class 501-05 has no intention of going down in the books as that person.

2nd Lt. Anthony W. Perez graduated the Officer Candidate School Feb. 12, and said he is eager to go back to his National Guard unit, the 50th Main Support Battalion, Teaneck, N.J., and work on his application for active-duty status.

But while his classmates were sworn in before their families at the Ranger Memorial, the Airborne School Graduation Field and outside Infantry Hall, Anthony stood alone facing a television screen, which carried the image of his older brother, Capt. Johnny Perez, 2,888 miles away in Fort Wainwright, Alaska.

Johnny swore Anthony into the Army's Officer Corps via video teleconference.

The brothers had only enough time for the ceremony and a short exchange of congratulations and brotherly goodbyes before Anthony had to leave to make the long trek back to Newark, N.J., where home and his father waited.

Anthony is a first-generation American and is eager to serve his nation. Born the second of three sons to Chilean parents who immigrated here in the early '70s, he said he feels he owes a debt not only to the United States, but also to his parents who worked hard to ensure him a good upbringing.

Anthony said he appreciates the sacrifices his parents made for his and his brothers' well-being and believes in passing on the lessons of selflessness, courage and determination his parents taught him.

"My parents came to this country and had practically nothing. My father had just enough money to get here and didn't have money to even live on," Anthony said.

"He found work and was able to save enough money to bring my mother here. They came to this country and all they ever wanted to do was raise their kids. They made a big sacrifice for all three of us.

"My mother's passed away now. I always felt like I should do something for other people. And if I can somehow be a role model for somebody else, then I'd like to pass on everything I have learned from (my parents). I feel it's my duty to give the little bit I have and pass it on to somebody else," he said.

The brothers' mother was killed in a automobile accident in Hawaii in August of 2001 on her way to visit Johnny after he was promoted to captain.

Johnny said he knows their mother would be happy to see Anthony commissioned and following in his brother's footsteps.

"I know she would be very proud of (Anthony) and all his accomplishments. And even though she is not here physically anymore, I know that she is always watching over her three sons," said Johnny.

Anthony has always put a lot of heart into everything he does, Johnny said — as an honor roll student in school, as a mentor to their youngest brother, Michael, after their mother passed away and as a Soldier who always leads by example.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Anthony Perez, is sworn into the officer corps by his brother via VTC.

Michael was encouraged and guided by Anthony and eventually also joined the National Guard and serves with Anthony in the same unit, Johnny said.

One of the strongest qualities Anthony possesses is his decisiveness, which will make him a great leader, Johnny said.

"(Anthony) has no problems making decisions. He is able to assess a situation and make a decision without hesitating. In today's Army, you have to be able to make decisions on the fly. Any hesitation in our line of business could affect the battle," said Johnny.

Even though Anthony already has a significant amount of military service and was primed for a commission, OCS had many important lessons to take advantage of.

The most important of those was learning, as a leader, an officer always has to take care of his Soldiers, said Anthony.

The chance to take care of Soldiers during a time of war is one Anthony said he is looking forward to.

"I haven't been called up for anything, and hopefully, now that I am an officer, and if I can go on active duty, I will have a better chance of getting called up (to deploy). I'm ready to go (to war)," said Anthony.

Anthony has already given his country 10 years and seven months of faithful service, and with his graduation and commission, he continued a family tradition of service to a nation that opened its arms to his parents' quest for freedom and opportunity.

So what does the young officer have to say to the troops already on the front lines around the globe?

"There are quality officers coming out of OCS, and (the Soldiers) have that to look forward to — good leaders to follow," he said.

Comanche program cut, funds diverted for aviation

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

The Army plans to cancel further research, development and planned purchases of the RAH-66 Comanche stealth helicopter.

Acting Secretary of the Army Les Brownlee and Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker told the Pentagon press corps Monday the Army's Comanche termination recommendation to Congress is about getting the most bang for the buck for Army aviation.

"We have examined closely our resourcing plans for aviation and concluded that some of the capabilities those funds would provide are no longer consistent with the changed operating environment," Brownlee said.

From a purely business standpoint, it makes more sense to upgrade the current Army aircraft fleet to meet the demands of the contemporary operating environment with the $14 billion slated for the Comanche program versus getting the 121 Comanche helicopters designed for a different environment and enemy than the ones the Army faces today, Schoomaker said.

That $14 billion represents about 40 percent of the planned Army aviation budget through fiscal 2011.

The decision to cancel the Comanche program stems from an early directive to look at Army aviation to determine how it should transform to best meet challenges on the battlefield. The six-month study recently concluded.

Standardizing what comprises an aviation brigade was one of the study's recommendations.

There are seven different types of aviation brigades in the Army today. That standardization includes the Army Reserve and National Guard. The reserve component has dozens of 1970s helicopters that were phased out of the active Army more than a decade ago.

Given how reserve-component units have been tasked to support Operations Enduring Freedom and Iraqi Freedom in the past two years, there should be "plug-and-play" with their active-Army counterparts — but they are mostly not due in large part to equipment differences, said Lt. Gen. H Steven Blum, chief of the National Guard Bureau.

The 3rd Infantry Division's aviation brigade, recently back from Iraq, will be the first brigade to reset under the standardization plan. The future Army aviation brigades will have two battalions of 24 Apache attack helicopters each; a battalion of 30 Black Hawk helicopters; a utility battalion with eight light utility, 12 Chinook heavy utility, 12 Black Hawk helicopters, a number of unmanned aerial vehicles and a maintenance battalion.

The Army plans to divert part of the Comanche funds to buy more Black Hawk and Apache helicopters for the Army Reserve and National Guard.

The Army plans to buy about 800 more aircraft and upgrade another 400 beyond what current funding allows with diverted Comanche funds.

Looking at its purpose-cut precision lines and its bold stance you get the feeling the designers had something in mind when they created this year's Galant. The 4-bulb halogen projector-style headlights, the 17" alloy wheels, the clear-and-chrome oval inset tail lamps, the aggressive center grille pillar and the integrated spoiler seem to lend evidence to this theory. So did Mitsubishi have anything in mind when they developed this distinctive sedan? Yes. You!

Infantry Systems Seminar builds bridges

Meeting with user, developer makes progress

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

The U.S. Army Infantry Center recently held its first Infantry System Seminar with Program Executive Officer for Simulations, Training and Instrumentation and a number of other organizations to open up lines of communication with the developers.

The seminar focused on training aids, devices, simulations and simulators for the USAIC.

"Basically (the ISS) enhances the communication between us and the developers," said Lt. Col. Harry Lubin, chief, Infantry Futures Group. "It wasn't a one-time deal; this is a moving target. As technology and training change, so do requirements, and we need to talk to one another."

The Infantry Center generates requirements to make sure the training aid systems will meet the training needs of infantry Soldiers, said Jeff Arneson, strategic planner Infantry Futures Group.

"I think (the seminar) was a success," he said. "The overwhelming response was very positive."

"It's important for the Infantry Center to drive requirements — not the requirements to drive the Infantry Center," Lubin said. "They walked away with a better understanding of (Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley's) philosophy and what today's infantry needs."

> "It's important for the Infantry Center to drive requirements — not the requirements to drive the Infantry Center."
> Lt. Col. Harry Lubin
> Chief, Infantry Futures Group

The seminar gave the developers a chance to talk directly to the operator, the commanding general, Arneson said. This will ensure their products will meet the needs of the infantry Soldier when the equipment goes to the field.

At the seminar, attendees discussed operational requirement documents that direct the new devices and make sure the developers are on target, he said.

They discussed projects already underway, some are similar to the virtual simulator for Soldier Combined Arms Tactical Trainer. They spoke about the needs for it to include the dismounted Soldier on the battlefield and not just the infantry squad.

"There are aviation trainers for helicopter pilots that replicate what they do, but we don't have anything that replicates what a dismounted Soldier does," Arneson said.

Training aids and simulators like the helicopter simulator will save the Army money by saving live ammunition and training time for the dismounted Soldier.

There are plans to conduct quarterly seminars with different organizations.

AROUND POST

Ranger School graduation

The next Ranger Training Brigade graduation is today.

Before graduation is Rangers in Action, a demonstration of the skills Soldiers learn during training. Rangers in Action starts at 11 a.m. For more information, call 544-6417.

Antiterrorism course starts Monday

A unit antiterrorism advisor course is required by regulation and being offered by a Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., mobile training team Monday through March 5 in Infantry Hall. Major subordinate commands have received notification of the course and seats have been allocated.

For more information, call 545-4484.

U.S. Military Academy Founders Day Celebration

Graduates and friends of the U.S. Military Academy are invited to attend a Founders Day celebration at 6 p.m. March 6 in the Fort Benning Officers' Club.

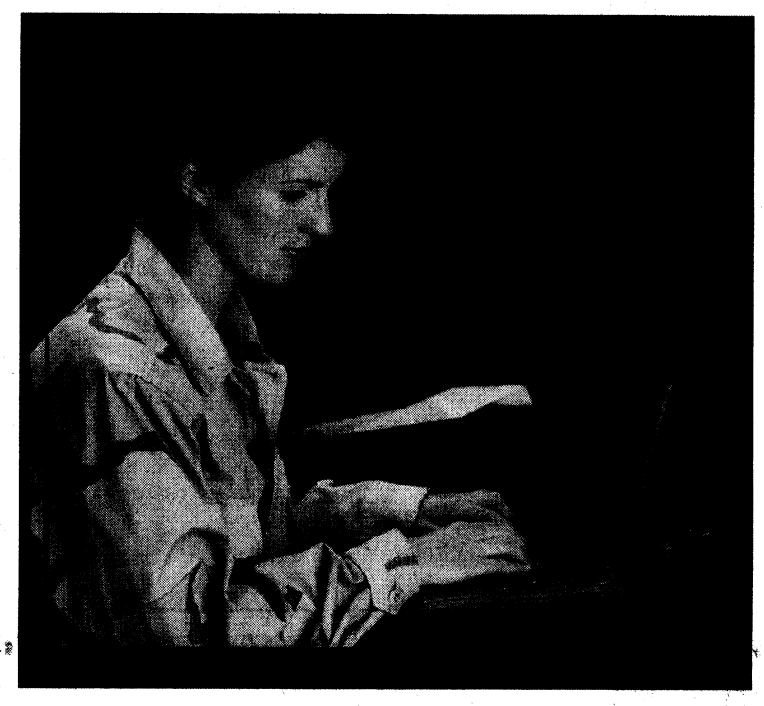
Guest Speaker is Brig. Gen. Leo A. Brooks, commandant of cadets. For more information, call Capt. Ali Palmer at 544-8826 or 544-9222.

Separating Soldiers

The post Adjutant General office would like to help Soldiers separating from the military.

Separating Soldiers with an ETS can expect to have orders published between 60 and 90 days prior to their departure on transition leave, or their separation date, whichever is earlier. Separating Soldiers must see the Army Career and Alumni Program and attend a pre-separation briefing 90 to 120 days. This is mandatory.

Upon regular ETS or separation, Soldiers may be eligible for the following benefits: dental treatment, unemployment compensation, Montgomery GI Bill, health benefits and other benefits.



There are specific time limits and restrictions on the benefits. All of the information can be accessed through the Veterans Affairs homepage at www.va.gov.

For more information, call the local Veterans Affairs Office, located in Bldg. 2617 in Soldiers' Plaza at 545-4887. The Transition Center is in Building 2619 and can be reached at 545-5400 or 545-5424 or see your unit personnel NCO.

BCTB, Wilson partnership takes first in state

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

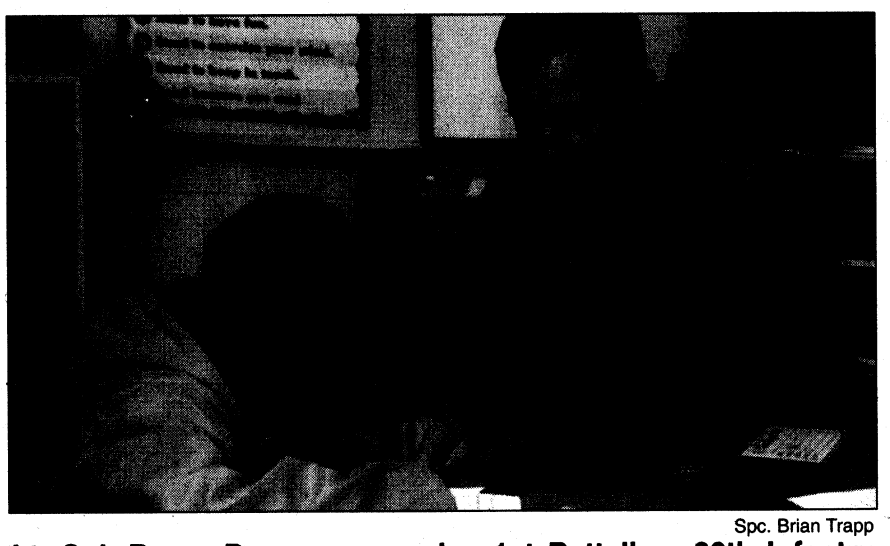
The Fort Benning school system received recognition from the state when the Georgia Association of Partners In Education named Wilson Elementary School with the Basic Combat Training Brigade 2003 Partnership of the Year Award winners.

Wilson Elementary School with BCTB tied for first place with an elementary school from Gainesville, Ga.

They were recognized for their work together through the 2002-2003 school year.

The award proves the commitment the Soldiers have to the children said Margaret Koger, Wilson's PIE coordinator.

The application for the award highlighted areas like the mentoring program and the leadership academy, in which Soldiers talk with fourth- and fifth-graders about leadership.



The Soldiers helped the Wilson build a small replica of the Army's leadership development course, Koger said.

"We're really pleased that others in the state see the strong partnership we have with (BCTB) and the benefits for the children," Koger said.

"(The ceremony) was a really positive atmosphere to see how our small organization made a big impact on the school," said Lt. Col. Kelvin Scott, BCTB deputy commander and PIE executive agent.

"Seeing the large corporations that had so many resources showed it takes more than dollars. Compared to others, it shows how big our hearts are," Scott said.

"Since the partnership began, there's been an improvement with the children," Koger said. "We've been tracking their improvement with reading scores, standardized testing and comparing discipline referrals from before the kids entered the mentoring program. We can see an improvement in all of those areas."

Spc. Brian Trapp

Lt. Col. Bryan Dyer, commander, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, mentors Dewayne Evans, 9, during grammar class. Dyer has mentored Evans since September.

Not only do the children benefit from the partnership, but the Soldiers do, as well.

"I was here last school year and the additional things we are doing are a lot greater. The participation, energy and involvement are all a lot greater this year," Scott said. "From what I learned talking to Soldiers, it is a very positive experience and a morale boost to the Soldiers."

The Soldiers' involvement in the school impacted about 550 students and staff last school year. During that time, about 80 volunteers from BCTB spent more than 520 hours working with students and various school programs.

"The kids love it," Koger said. "Each class has a Soldier who they identify as theirs.

"The activities with the Soldiers aren't always academic — sometimes they'll just eat lunch with them or bring a snack."

West Point Founder's Day includes distinguished grad

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's nothing more than a birthday party, but at the same time, it's so much more.

At 6 p.m. March 6, friends and alumni of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., will gather to celebrate the 202nd anniversary of their alma mater. The guest speaker is Brig. Gen. Leo A. Brooks, commandant of the Corps of Cadets

Each year, friends and graduates get together near March 16, the date on which Congress approved legislation establishing the academy, which is the longest continuously occupied military post.

Although the academy was created through the vision of President Thomas Jefferson, the celebration, called Founder's Day, pays tribute to its 33rd graduate, Sylvanus Thayer.

Thayer, class of 1808, is known as the "father of the military academy" because of the sweeping educational reforms he made during his tenure as superintendent from 1817-1833.

Founder's Day is celebrated across the globe, and in some cases, in informal get-togethers in the middle of deployments to countries like Bosnia and Iraq. No matter where the ceremony, guests will be treated to remarks from both the oldest and youngest graduates present, in addition to the guest speaker.

West Point recruiting posters with pictures of famous graduates like Grant, Lee, Pershing and Eisenhower are accompanied by text that reads, "Much of the history we teach was made by the people we taught."

And this year, retired Col. Ralph Puckett, class of 1949, joins the list of West Point's more recent distinguished graduates.

Puckett was nominated for the Distinguished Graduate award by the president of his class as a "graduate whose character, distinguished service and stature draw wholesome comparison to the qualities that West Point strives for, in keeping with its motto: 'Duty, Honor, Country.'" Puckett will receive his award at West Point in April or May

Both graduates and non-graduates, officers and NCOs alike contributed to the recommendation packet.

"They've made a silk purse out of a sow's ear," Puckett said.

But how many "sow's ears" served their country in both Korea and Vietnam, earning five Purple Hearts, two Silver Stars, two Distinguished Service Crosses and 10 Air Medals, among others?

"Colonel Puckett's award is well-deserved," said Col. Craig Nixon, commander of the 75th Ranger Regiment. "He's one of the finest men I know."

Nixon said Puckett has been impacting the regiment and the Army as a whole for more than 50 years. Puckett has been the honorary colonel of the Ranger Regiment since 1993.

"For the regiment, he embodies what we all should strive for," Nixon said. "Quiet professionalism, a true gentleman. He's the ultimate mentor to the senior leadership and young Soldiers alike."

Nixon said it would be hard to capture, in writing, everything Puckett does either for his church, the community, or the military because he touches so many things.

"I have a hard time keeping up with him," he said.

Puckett said he carries two memories from his time at West Point.

The first, he said, was his first day at the academy, a day no graduate can forget. He had to learn four responses — yes, sir; no, sir; no excuse, sir and sir, may I ask a question?

"That 'no excuse, sir,'" he said, "meant I had no excuse to fail you and I'd have to come up with some way to accomplish the mission."

The second memory was of the total environment of West Point — from the gray walls to the history.

"The war in Japan was not over in 1944 when I entered West Point," he said.

All of his tactical advisors were World War II veterans with distinguished records who became role models for an 18-year-old from Tifton, Ga., who had spent time at Georgia Technical Institute.

"I thought, 'Here is what West Point graduates have done,'" Puckett said. "I must never do anything to bring discredit to the institution."

Puckett feels West Point is still a valid commissioning source because of the standards it sets.

"But because we set the standards doesn't mean that we're better," he said. "Colonel Nixon — he's an Auburn graduate — and he's as good as anyone I ever saw. But I know, if I had stayed at Georgia Tech, I would never have had the feeling I do about the Army and standards."

With Founder's Day right around the corner, Puckett said he is looking forward to interacting with the younger graduates. Talking with the junior officers is often an enlightening experience for Puckett.

"We're not 'old grads,'" he said, "rather, more experienced. But sometimes we become jaded and get set in our ways."

These little piggies are going to market

Feral pigs fair game for post hunters

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning officials are reacting positively to the post's prolific pig population. They're positively peeved.

The pesky porkers began causing problems more than two years ago, when they wandered onto Main Post and wreaked havoc in Indianhead Terrace and around about the Airborne Towers and the Ranger Memorial.

More than 60 were exterminated during a short period, and though the problem hasn't been repeated on Main Post, the pigs are still causing damage and creating a potentially hazardous situation on Lawson Army Airfield.

The swine are feral, a term used to describe any animal that was once considered domestic but has since become wild. More than 2 million of them roam free over much of the Southern half of the country, a legacy, some believe, of the 16th century Spaniards.

More recently, post environmental officials say, the pigs wandered away from farms or were illegally released onto or near Fort Benning. They travel in groups, or "squeals," and cover great distances when foraging, so no one can say for sure just where the problem originated. And since they thrive in the post's dense forests, including restricted areas thought to contain undetonated ordnance, their population is exploding, if you will.

"I've been hunting here all my life, and I've never seen numbers like this," said Pete Swiderek, chief of the Environmental Management Division's Conservation Branch, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics. "There's been a marked increase in the past 10 years or so."

The swine, often called wild hogs or boars, are considered an "invasive species," Swiderek said.

They carry diseases, such as pseudorabies and brucellosis, which can be contracted by humans or domestic animals, and they have a negative impact on the ecosystem, uprooting trees and endangered plant species Environmental Management is trying to propagate.

And yes, said a Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation official, they can be aggressive. With average weights exceeding 150 pounds and lengths up to six feet, the mature swine can be a menace.

"People think because they can't see well and their hearing's not so good, they're not dangerous," said Cliff Hughes, recreational program manager. "But they have an incredible sense of smell. They can pose a real threat."

A 400-pound feral swine charged Hughes two years ago, when he was tasked to vanquish the pigs from Main Post.

"He looked like a bear coming at me. It took three shots to bring him down," said Hughes, who donated the meat to Hunters for the Hungry, an organization that uses hunters' surplus to feed the homeless.

Pigs have been an on-going but sporadic problem for the 4th Ranger Training Battalion, said Command Sgt. Maj. James Faulkenberry. Their rooting has left grassy areas "looking like someone ran through them with a plow."

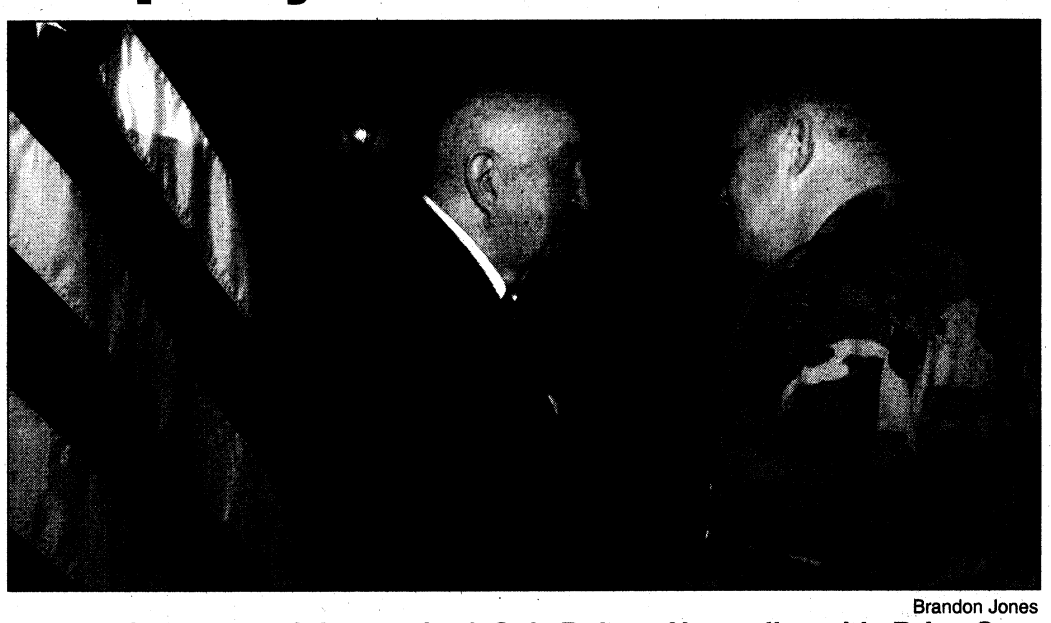
The problem is not merely cosmetic, he said. It's causing erosion.

"We'd like to see them thinned out at the very least," Faulkenberry said.

Officials hoped to do just that when they declared "open season" year round for bow hunters more than two years ago, a policy adopted by several Southern states plagued with the same problem. Pig season for hunters with firearms was extended from August to March.

Hunting pig has become popular on Fort Benning, Hughes said, but it hasn't made a dent in the pig problem. Though more than 1,200 were harvested by hunters last year, the swine population continues to swell, because a sow less than a year old can deliver a litter of 16 twice a year.

Environmental Management has teamed with Auburn University for a four-year "ecology and management study" to determine the effectiveness of trying to control the swine population. Together, they'll look closely at the swines' effects on endangered plant and animal populations and Soldier training, said Mark Thornton, a threatened and endangered species biologist with the Environmental Management Division.



In the next few weeks, Auburn officials will outfit up to 100 sows with a device that will let them track their movement and feeding habits. The end goal, Thornton said, is to determine the best way to control the swine population and limit its impact on sensitive terrain.

The study will not impact hunting, he said. Hunters who kill a tagged pig will be asked to return the tag to conservation officials. More information will be released in next year's hunting regulation.

In the meantime, hunters are encouraged to take precautions when hunting and handling feral swine, Thornton said. Always wear gloves when handling the animal, and make sure the meat is cooked thoroughly.

For more information on Fort Benning's hunting and fishing regulations, log on to www.benning.army.mil/emd/wildlife.html.

Air Show: To fly through Columbus in March

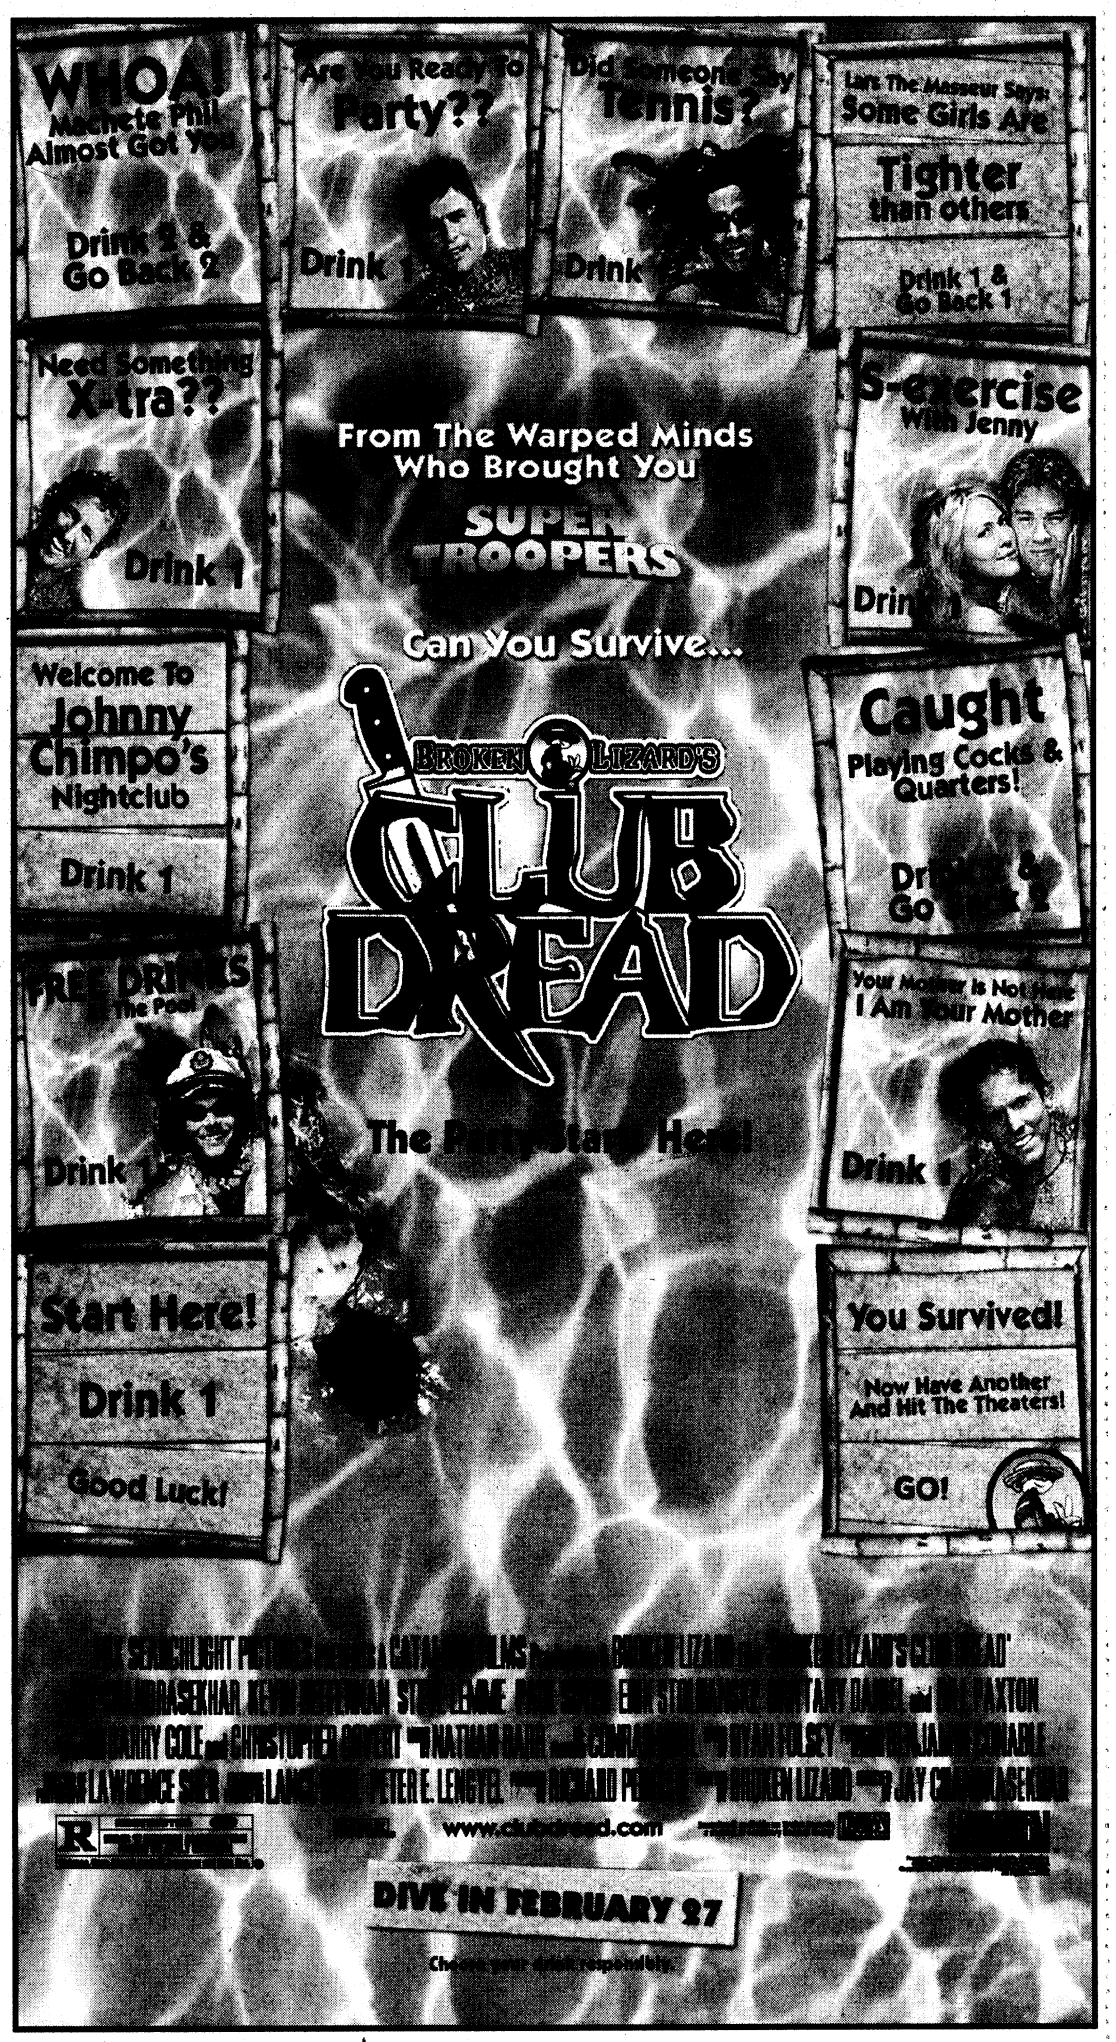
The show will also provide the general public a chance to catch up on what's going on in the Army these days, Hunsaker said.



"With the Stryker and the Bradley and the rangers out there, this will kind of let the general public see (the Army's) capabilities," he said.

Soldier or civilian, child or adult, there's bound to be something of interest for everyone at this year's Thunder in the Valley Air Show. All for a bargain price.

Tickets at the gate will be $10 a piece, Hunsaker said. However, starting March 1, Soldiers and their families can purchase discount tickets ahead of time for just $5.50. The tickets will be available at Omega Travel in the Main Mall Post Exchange.

All proceeds will go to the Chattahoochee Council of Boy Scouts of America, which serves about 11,000 youths in the area, Allmendinger said.

For more information, call the Boy Scout office at 327-2634 or visit the event Web site at www.thunderinthevalleyairsho

Staff Sgt. Chris Binion, a drill sergeant with B Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, coaches Spc. Timothy Siwiec on close-combat optics at Easley Range Monday. B Co. drill sergeants attended the Service Rifle Team's train-the-trainer course that improved B Co.'s basic rifle marksmanship scores.

USAMU shares skills to train trainers

Service Rifle Team brings force

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

B Company Soldiers use the marksmanship skills taught by drill sergeants during close-combat optics training at Easley Range.

The Service Rifle Team provides a "train-the-trainer" course for officers, NCOs and unit marksmanship trainers on the M-4 and M-16 weapon systems.

In this marksmanship course, the Service Rifle instructors build on basic rifle marksmanship skills and what is required to deliver a well-aimed shot, said Sgt. 1st Class Lance Hopper, shooter and instructor with the Service Rifle Team.

Emphasis is also placed on areas such as firing positions, ballistics and marksmanship sustained programs, Hopper said.

"Train the trainer is designed to break down marksmanship into simpler terms so it's easier to understand and then (teach) the same techniques to other Soldiers," Hopper said.

The team recently taught a class to 11 drill sergeants from B Company, 2nd Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment.

The drill sergeants went through the three-day class in December and implemented the techniques they learned in the BRM portion of their current cycle.

"The company achieved a first-time-go rate of 96 percent with 100 percent by the end of the day," said 1st Sgt. Thomas Pendleton, of B Co. "The end result showed 18 Soldiers shooting expert and 69 Soldiers shooting sharpshooter."

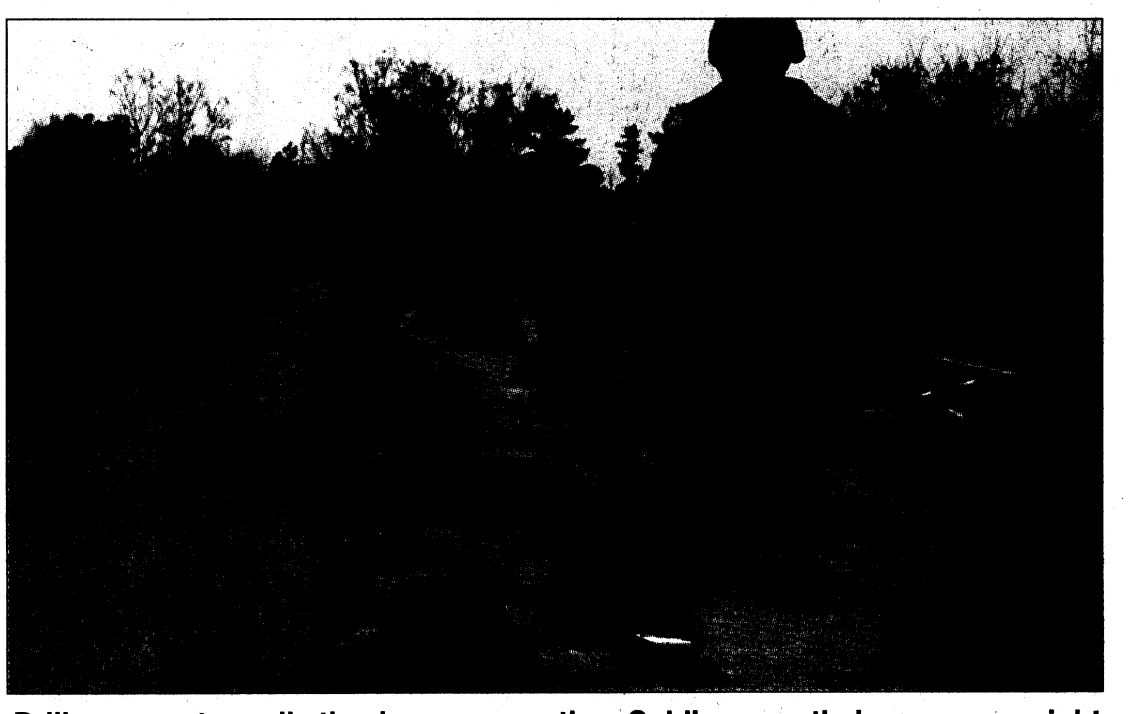
Those numbers are excellent compared to the normal 75 to 80 percent first-time-go rate with an average of 25 sharpshooters and less than five experts, Pendleton said.

The Service Rifle Team is instrumental in developing good shooters, and their contributions played a role in B Co.'s recent success, Pendleton said.

During the course, trainers place emphasis on the two marksmanship techniques that almost always ensure a good shot — sight alignment and trigger control.

As long as Soldiers learn to focus on those two techniques, they will always get their shot, Hopper said.

"Soldiers who come to the course have usually been in the Army for many years and believe they know all there is to know about marksmanship," he said. "By the end of the class, everybody leaves knowing they learned one thing or another about marksmanship that they never knew before."



"I've been in the Army a long time, and I thought I knew everything about marksmanship and could learn nothing else," said Staff Sgt. Chris Binion, a B Co. drill sergeant. "I came out of the Service Rifle Team's train the trainer course knowing a lot more about marksmanship, how to properly train other Soldiers and be a better shooter."

Binion said the instructors were very professional and knowledgeable and added that more first-line trainers should take the course.

Hopper said the Service Rifle Team is happy to train as many units and Soldiers as his team can handle.

"It's important for us to continue to train the Army's first-line trainers since they are the first to train the force, and whichever way they train Soldiers is the way Soldiers will perform while they are in the Army," Hopper said.

For more information on the Service Rifle Team or to enroll in the train the trainer course, call 545-3250 or 545-4081.

Drill sergeants walk the lanes correcting Soldiers on their weapons sight alignment, an important part to getting a good shot.

Flight company moves to 29th Infantry Regiment

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fort Benning's recent restructuring of units has been a major effort to reorganize, and the post's former flight detachment is a perfect example of why these changes were necessary.

Now Flight Company, 2nd Battalion, 29th Infantry Regiment, the unit once fell smack-dab in the middle of a big mess.

The detachment worked directly for the Directorate of Operations and Training, fulfilled their administrative needs through Headquarters and Headquarters Company, Garrison, and addressed Uniform Code of Military Justice issues through 1st Bn., 11th Inf. Regt., said Lt. Col. Greg Kane, commander, 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt..

The unit switched over to 2nd Bn., 29th Inf. Regt., last week.

With 34 Soldiers in the company now, and authorization for seven more, the unit is the post's only lift aviation asset, Kane said. Its Soldiers assist the Ranger Training Brigade in its airborne operations, air assault and medevac training, and provides support to the Pathfinder School and logistical support to the post command for VIP movement.

All in all, the unit sees one to two mission each day, Kane said.

"(There are) several benefits from the reorganization," said Lt. Col. David T. Shepherd, deputy commander of the 29th Inf. Regt.

"The former detachment commander now has Title X authority. Administrative and logistical support are provided by one organization (versus) three separate major subordinate command or post agencies. (There is) greater assistance with maintenance oversight," he said.

Title X authority is important, Kane said, because without it, there is no UCMJ authority, no ability to approve or disapprove Soldiers' leave and no authority to approve or disapprove promotions.

Settling in at their new home, the Flight Co.'s Soldiers' transition will be a positive one.

"Soldiers from the Pioneer Battalion welcomed the new flight company — their mission is right in line with what we do," Kane said. "By their inclusion, I can now state with pride that this battalion supports every training battalion on this post."

Suicide: Impacts family, loved ones left behind for life

become overwhelming and lead to thoughts of suicide, she said.

Alcohol and drug abuse or professional problems can also induce or worsen a bout of depression. The Army and the Fort Benning command have an extensive network of resources to stop tragedies like this from happening, Wilbanks said.

Fort Benning has a comprehensive program that begins when Soldiers arrive for in-processing. Soldiers are given a suicide prevention card that lists the warning signs of suicide and telephone numbers for the agencies that are available to help. Once assigned to a unit, Soldiers have access to chaplains who are responsible for counseling them individually as needed and providing suicide prevention classes.

The post also has more than 400 personnel, known as gatekeepers, who are trained by psychiatric professionals to recognize and refer high-risk Soldiers to agencies for help, Wilbanks said. Gatekeepers are unit prevention leaders who undergo 40 hours of training through the Army Substance Abuse Prevention program's Unit Prevention Leader Course and are the liaisons between the units and the network of resources available through ASAP.

Fifty percent of all drill sergeants, all religious support team members and at least one representative from every unit must undergo Applied Suicide Intervention Skills Training. ASIST is recognized at all levels of Army leadership as the recommended training for leaders, Wilbanks said.

Anyone who needs help or is considering taking his or her own life, or anyone who knows someone who is exhibiting warning signs can get help from a variety of sources:

- Community Mental Health Services and Psychiatry Department at Martin Army Community Hospital at 545-3590 or 544-2273.
- Military police at 545-5222.
- Emergency help can be obtained by calling MACH's emergency room afterhours line at 544-1502 or the on-call chaplain at 545-2218.
- The Army One Source line can offer assistance at any time at (800) 464-8107.

So with all these resources in place to help those in need, why do some Soldiers and civilians in this community still choose to end their lives?

Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, post command sergeant major, said responsibility for the suicides ultimately falls on the shoulders of the individuals. Still, Kelso said, the community needs to know the red flags of a possibly suicidal person and act when a person is identified as a suicide risk.

"All leaders, all Soldiers, all comrades and individuals need to be more familiar with signs of possible suicide," Kelso said. "We need to be aware of situations that may be going on in a person's life that could send him down that road ...

"Leaders need to be more aware of what is going on in the lives of their Soldiers, especially at the lowest leadership levels," he said. "But I don't place fault on any leader, because in my opinion, committing suicide is (a personal choice)."

Kelso said he doesn't feel the two recent suspected suicides are related to operational tempo, but individual situations instead.

Some personal situations may seem overwhelming, but Kelso urged those feeling hopeless to consider the permanent consequences of suicide.

"When anyone commits suicide," he said, "their problems might be over, but the problems for those left behind are just beginning — whether it's the friends, the squad, the platoon or the family, most importantly. Their troubles have just begun.

"I encourage everyone who has these feelings to seek help," Kelso said.

other installations embrace new methods of training.

Other topics of concern were new weaponry and equipment, such as the MX-8, a rifle that is still going through evaluation and testing, and technology that will allow Soldiers to "see" through walls.

Whether equipment, training or weaponry, Fort Benning is where "all things Soldier" will happen, Freakley said.

Many of the Marne Soldiers applauded the advancements in technology, but were looking for more basic approaches to readiness.

They asked about getting more bullets and simunitions (bullets similar to paint balls) for training and said they need to train Soldiers to shoot under more stressful conditions, because as one Soldier put it, "We can't just drop in a foxhole and shoot."

They also voiced a need for nonlethal munitions and items to help control crowds, as when the Iraqi people began to loot their own country.

Freakley said many concerns are already being addressed, and Soldiers will begin to see changes in the near future.

Basic Combat Training Brigade Soldiers will spend the last three weeks of training in the field learning to perform 40 key tasks under stress.

The Combined Arms and Tactics Directorate has also made changes to its mission.

"We are creating as many tactical dilemmas as possible (for training) based on feedback from others like you," the director, Col. Edmund Woolfolk, said.

Lt. Col. Harry J. Lubin, Infantry Futures Group chief, said the trip provided a list of concerns and possible changes they will continue to review, and more importantly, it opened lines of communication between Fort Benning and the 3rd ID.

Although there has been good communication in the past, the personal feedback went very well, Lubin said.

"I feel like we have a better idea of what they need, and we can better advocate for them when we are dealing with TRADOC," he said.

BIKE WEEK BUST

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Sam Spears loves Daytona Bike Week. In fact, he loves anything remotely associated with motorcycles.

Spears racked up more than 40,000 miles on his bike each year, taking annual cross-country vacations and weekend trips to the mountains.

And in the 30 years since his first ride, since he purchased his first bike, a Honda Dream, Spears has owned more than he cares to count. At one point, there were six parked in his garage, including an exotic little Italian model called an Aprilia.

Like thousands of Soldiers and former Soldiers, Spears made the trek to Florida for Bike Week year after year after year.

Last year, he missed it.

This year he'll miss it.

But the retired command sergeant major from Fort Benning is certain he'll make it back one day — on a new set of wheels.

Spears is confined to a wheelchair these days, the victim of a motorcycle accident more than a year ago that left him paralyzed below the waist. His perspective and his sense of humor weren't damaged a bit.

"If I hadn't been wearing a good helmet and body armor, I might've really been hurt," he said. "It could've been worse."

It was a warm day in December 2002 when Spears, the Future Force liaison to the Infantry School, decided to ride his Aprilia to work from his Smiths Station, Ala., home.

Having been involved in minor motorcycle accidents before, he knew — probably better than most — the importance of good protective gear. He donned the gloves, the top-of-the-line helmet, over-the-ankle boots and something called body armor — a leather jacket and pants with reinforced padding.

And he headed down Alabama's Highway 280 at 35 mph. By all accounts, Spears was doing everything right.

"I've played it over and over in my head. There's nothing I could've done differently," he said. "You can ride as defensively as you can and be totally alert, but you can't predict what the other guy's going to do."

In this case, the "other guy" was a woman in a bit of a hurry behind the wheel of a pickup truck. She darted out of a parking lot and straight into Spears' path. The impact threw him more than 70 feet, breaking his back, leg and hip and collapsing his lung.

Doctors warned his wife he'd probably not survive.

But Spears never doubted it. The 26-year veteran, who spent 15 years with the rangers and more than 22 on jump status, said dealing with his injuries is not the toughest thing he's ever done.

"No, this is frustrating, but learning to live in this chair is not the hardest. Being with the rangers was harder," he said. "Living the life of a ranger every day, trying never to let people down — that was hardest."

It's doubtful Spears will ever walk again. But he's certain he'll ride, be it a motor trike or a cycle with a side car.

"I'll go to Bike Week again," he said. "Not this year, but I'll be there."

In the meantime, Spears shares his message with anybody on two wheels who's willing to listen. But he never preaches.

"Anybody who rides knows what to do, what they're supposed to wear," he said. "They don't need me to tell them. But they need to know that there are no guarantees. You can do everything right, but there are some things out of your control.

"Motorcycling is a great sport, but it's an unforgiving sport. What would be a fender-bender in an automobile can be catastrophic on a bike," he said. "In the blink of an eye, everything can change."

> the victim of a careless driver

Still, Spears said, it's worth reminding cyclists to spare no expense when it comes to safety gear.

"Buy yourself a $50 helmet if your head is worth $50. Otherwise, spend the money, buy the best you can afford," he said. "And let me tell you, a set of leather with armor is a hell of a lot cheaper than a skin graft."

More than half a million bikers are expected to turn out for next week's annual Bike Week, the world's largest motorcycle event. Sgt. Maj. Jan Stegman will be there. So will a dozen of his friends, mostly Soldiers.

Though no one can say just how many Soldiers actually attend every year, Stegman believes the number is probably in the thousands.

"The same type of people who are drawn to the Army are drawn to bikes," the 11th Infantry Regiment's operations sergeant major said. "It's a community thing, a lifestyle. There's a kind of camaraderie you don't find anywhere else. If you need help, you can count on a Soldier and you can count on a biker."

Like Spears, Stegman has been riding more than 30 years. There's no substitute for experience, he said, but experience can be a biker's worst enemy when it leads to complacency.

"Never think it can't happen to you," said Stegman, who wrecked his bike last June under what he called "the perfect circumstances."

"It was a gorgeous day — a biker's dream," he said. "It was broad daylight, perfect weather, no one had been drinking, and I wasn't even going 40 miles an hour."

But a slight dip in the road and a slick patch of asphalt sent Stegman's bike skidding into the woodline. His passenger, now his wife, was thrown, her foot and wrist fractured.

"I like to think I was always careful and observant and safe," Stegman said. "But maybe the message is you can never be too careful.

"Riding a motorcycle is exhilarating, but if you let yourself get caught up in that carefree feeling, you'll let your guard down," he said. "That's the worst thing you can do."

Despite their accidents, both Stegman and Spears remain staunch enthusiasts. Biking is a wholesome activity, Stegman said, and Spears believes it can actually sharpen mental acuity.

"But that won't do you a bit of good if someone else drives poorly," he said. "More than 90 percent of motorcycle accidents are not the fault of the guy riding. What does that tell you? I guess the bottom line is expect the unexpected. But never doubt that it can happen to you."

CLOSER LOOK

Fort Benning cyclists must:

- Wear a DOT-approved helmet
- Wear proper eye protection
- Wear long trousers, full-fingered gloves, a long shirt or jacket, leather boots or over-the-ankle shoes
- Have headlights on at all times
- Have two rearview mirrors
- Wear a reflective vest

Retired Command Sgt. Major Sam Spears is pictured above with his Aprilia one month before the accident that left him unable to walk. Spears recently sold the bike, which sustained $5,000 worth of damage in the wreck that "did an obscene amount of damage" to him. "I see these people all the time riding down 185," he said. "They're wearing a tank shirt and flip flops and a cheap $50 helmet. It's crazy. Bikes are expensive. If you're going to fork over that kind of money, you better be willing to buy the very best gear you can afford. It's worth every penny."

Post speeders to have bumpy ride

Speed bumps to line roads in housing areas

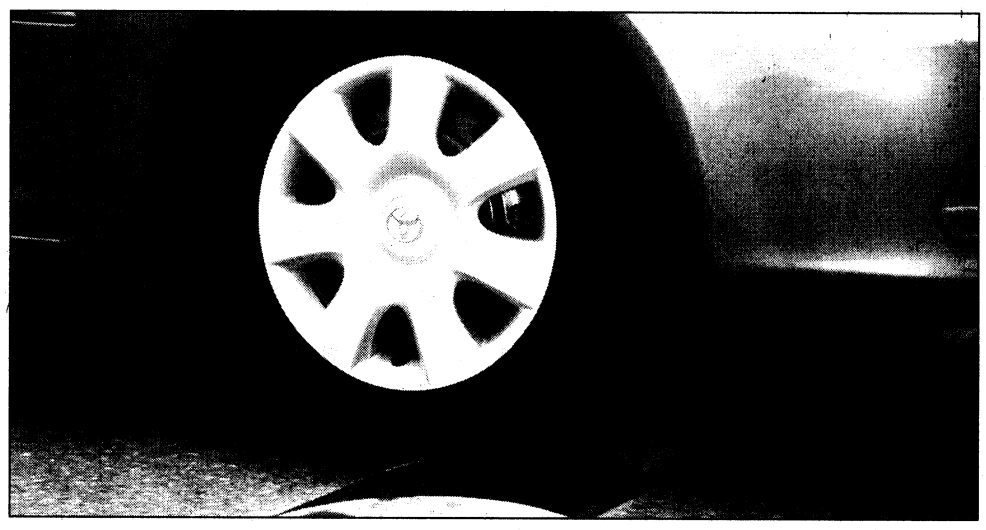
Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning residents can expect a bumpy ride in the near future as they drive through their neighborhoods.

The Fort Benning Military Police Activity has 600 roadway safety enhancement devices, better known as speed bumps, and is planning to place them throughout post housing areas.

Residents of McGraw Manor will see the devices on their roads by March 19, and another neighborhood will be completed every two weeks afterward. All housing areas should be complete by May 28.

The MPA chose to start in that neighborhood because the residents there voiced the most need for them during recent town-hall meetings, said Capt. Ken Stommel, deputy provost marshal.



Post residents have been complaining about people speeding through the neighborhoods, said Staff Sgt. Daniel Morthland, traffic NCOIC. The MPs can't be everywhere at once, so the speed bumps will be placed in key locations throughout the neighborhoods to force drivers to slow down.

The MPA is working with the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics, Community Life NCOs and Shaw Infrastructure Inc. to determine where the devices will be the most effective, Stommel said.

Once the devices are in place, the MPA will get feedback from Community Life NCOs to determine if they need to be moved around for maximum effect.

Stommel said the devices aren't being installed to hassle anyone — they are trying to make the roadways safer for the community.

This is just one of the ways the Fort Benning team is trying to improve the quality of life for Soldiers and their families, said Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Fortson, garrison command sergeant major.

Speed bumps like this one will be placed in post housing areas.

Faith Middle School shuffles administration

Faith position leads principal to paradise

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Dr. Gregg Mowen is off to paradise. The Faith Middle School principal will leave for his new post as the assistant superintendent of the Puerto Rico/Cuba School District March 12, just one month after interviewing for the job.

It was a difficult decision, and one he had to make quickly, said Mowen, who took the reins at Faith in 2001.

"Those students who were sixth-graders when I came will be graduating this year. I really would've liked to be here for that," Mowen said. "It's hard to leave. I've truly enjoyed it here."

Mowen and his family will live at Fort Buchanan in San Juan, Puerto Rico, an area he called "pure paradise."

The district is part of the Department of Defense Education Activity.

Mowen's position has not been filled, said Dr. Del McMullen, superintendent of Fort Benning Schools.

"This all evolved so quickly, we don't want to rush into a decision," she said. "We're committed to Faith's strong educational program, so we certainly don't want to be in a hurry to make a decision. We have to do what's right for our students."

McMullen said she expects to make a decision about "the direction we'll go with this" in about 10 days.

Faith lost one of its assistant principals during the winter break in December. Dr. Kimberly Martinez accepted a position with Troy State University.

Martinez was replaced by Jimmy Chochran, a physical education teacher, three weeks ago. He'll only fill the position temporarily, McMullen said.

Faith's enrollment stands at roughly 650 students — that's 100 less than the 750 the school must have to employ three principals full-time.

"I'm delighted to have someone of (Cochran's) caliber and commitment fill that position," McMullen said.

Chaplain Family Life Center undergoes facelift

Agency offers counseling, guidance

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center recently underwent changes, including new furnishings, as part of the its efforts to create a more family oriented atmosphere.

"The old center didn't reflect how much we value Soldiers," said Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins, Family Life chaplain. "It didn't send the message we wanted to our Soldiers, so we knew that it was time for a change."

And changes they made.

The whole center is now completely furnished and is more technologically advanced than ever.

"With the changes, the center feels more inviting and family friendly," Hawkins said. "It's a better overall appearance for us to present to our Soldiers."

Most of the changes were made in one day "blitzkrieg" at the center by a group of 30 volunteers from support teams across Fort Benning.

"This was a joint effort by everyone," Hawkins said. "We completed most of the work in one day with the help of all of the volunteers."

> "We have so many counseling services for people searching for hope and help. We will do whatever it takes to help the Soldiers on Fort Benning get through their problems."
>
> Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffery Hawkins
> Family life chaplain

Chaplain (Col.) Joel Cocklin, U.S. Army Infantry Center staff chaplain, said the changes will bring more of a professional atmosphere to people who come to the center for help.

"Soldiers and family members can come to a counseling center that is professional in appearance, yet is warm and friendly," he said. "It also helps model for families some of the possibilities they may have in improving their environment at home."

The Chaplain Family Life Ministries Center is a place where Soldiers and family members can go and can be assured of the strictest confidentiality of what's discussed with the counselors.

"In the 10 years this center has been here, there has never been a breach of confidentiality," Hawkins said. "The chaplains here take it very seriously, and we want everyone to know that they can come here to talk about deep, tough issues with no worries of us going to tell their chain of command."

The center provides four types of counseling, including individual, couple, family and group. Counseling covers pre-marital, marital, divorce recovery, blended family, communication, conflict resolution, parenting, anger, stress management and spiritual issues. Deployment and redeployment support groups are also available.

"We want the whole community to know that we are here to help with any sort of issues that they have," Hawkins said.

"We have so many counseling services for people searching for hope and help," he said, "We will do whatever it takes to help the soldiers on Fort Benning get through their problems."

More Red Cross volunteers on post 'always needed'

March set aside to create awareness

Pfc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

For 121 years, the mission of the American Red Cross has been to prevent, respond to and prepare for emergencies that affect Soldiers and their families.

More than half a million military families received direct assistance from the Red Cross in 2003, helping them stay connected with their loved ones, despite difficult circumstances, according to President George W. Bush's 2003 Red Cross Month Proclamation.

"Helping Soldiers stay in touch during difficult circumstances is the main mission of the Red Cross," said Lorie Pierre, Fort Benning station manager.

Fort Benning's Red Cross station has 146 volunteers who logged more than 11,424 hours since July 2003, Pierre said.

"An astonishing number, but new volunteers are always needed," she said.

March is a month set aside by the Red Cross to build awareness in the community of the services and volunteer opportunities it has to offer, Pierre said.

To promote Red Cross Month, the Fort Benning Red Cross Station will have a free open house from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. March 9 at the Red Cross station in Soldiers' Plaza in building 2626.

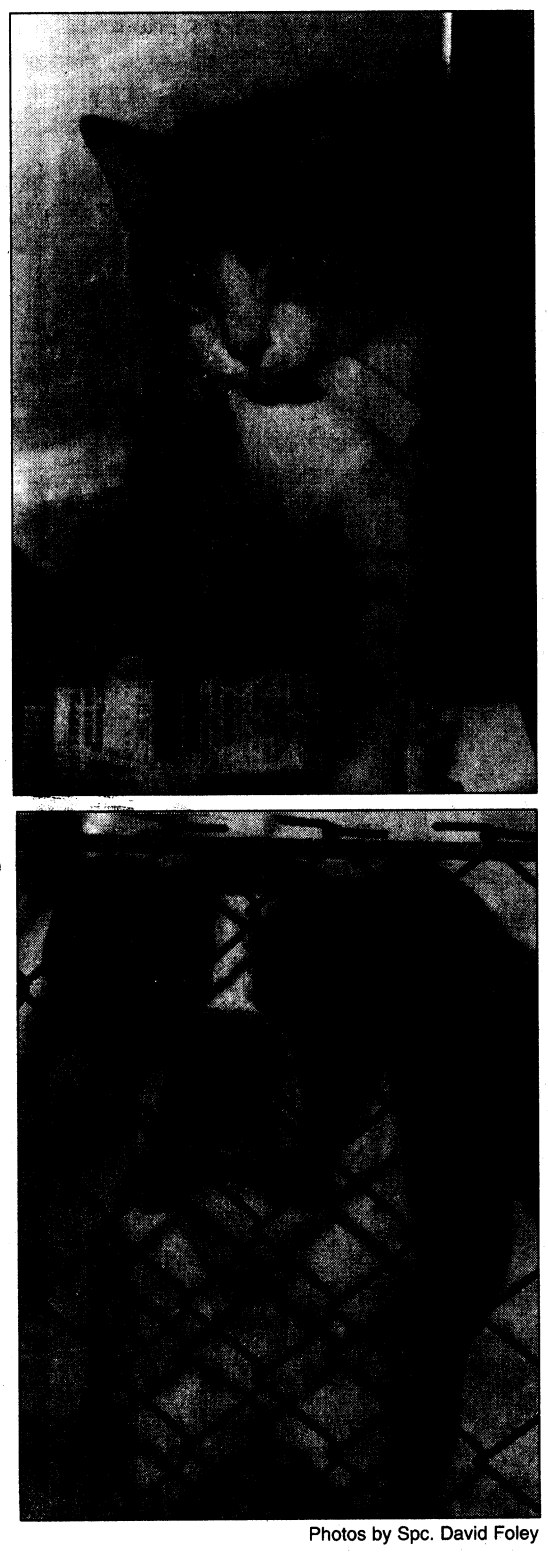
During the open house, volunteers will provide information on the different services provided and volunteer opportunities.

The Red Cross is a volunteer-based organizations funded by donations only and receives no government funding, Pierre said.

"(That) is why volunteers are so important to us," she said. "There are various ways in which people may volunteer and we do everything we can to find a position that suits their talents and time commitments."

Pierre said volunteering is a great opportunity to earn recognized resume-enhancing experience, free training, leadership, advancing opportunities, network and meet new people and gain a sense of accomplishment.

"Most of our volunteers are military dependents or retirees," Pierre said. "We provide free child care to our volunteers while they are volunteering."



There are many different places on post where people may volunteer — Martin Army Community Hospital, the Veterinary Clinic, post libraries and the main office, Pierre said.

Red Cross instructors teach a variety of classes throughout the year — community first aid and safety, community CPR, babysitter training, lifeguard training, pet first aid, youth swimming, lifeguard training, water safety and instructor courses.

Also, trained caseworkers deliver Red Cross messages to notify Soldiers or family members of serious illness, births or deaths 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

For more information about the Red Cross, its services and how to volunteer, call 545-5794. For Fort Benning emergency services, call (877) 272-7337.

GETTING A HEADSTART ON A DREAM

Teacher cadets learn, teach at Loyd

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Spencer High School junior Vince Harris, right, helps Loyd Elementary School first-grader Ashley Tuitt on a reading test Monday. Harris is one of nine Spencer teacher cadets who work at Loyd each week.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Katiti Casseus has always known she wants to work with children in some form or fashion when she gets out into the "real world."

Whether it's through teaching or social work, the Spencer High School junior is bound and determined to make a difference in the lives of children.

But Casseus and eight of her like-minded classmates don't have to wait until they reach adulthood to accomplish that goal. In fact, they began last week right here on Fort Benning.

Nine "teacher cadets" are getting a head start at Loyd Elementary School, where they spend an hour a day, four days a week helping out the school's teachers and working with the students.

The cadets, a mix of Spencer junior and seniors, are part of a program in its fourth year at Loyd, said Loyd's principal, Angie McPherson. The high-schoolers are involved at every grade level in all classes, including regular classes, special education classes and reading program-oriented classes.

"This program gives the cadets a hands-on approach to learning what goes on in the classroom to see if this is something they may want to pursue," McPherson said.

Not to mention the help the cadets give the teachers, assisting with individual and small-group instruction, putting lessons together, and anything else that needs to be done in the classroom.

"It's just a win-win situation," she said.

Jackie Belt, the program's supervisor at Spencer, couldn't agree more.

"This is such a wonderful experience for the kids," said Belt, who has supervised the program for the past five years. "These are exceptional students who have a real sensitivity to other people's needs."

The cadets may be cut out for the job, but it still presents a challenge, Belt said.

"They have to be more mature in this setting," she said. "They're having to assume responsibility for things like being on time, being professional, being respectful."

That's something the cadets take seriously, McPherson said, which is fortunate, because their presence will have a real impact with the school's children.

"These cadets are going to have a greater influence than most of (the faculty), because the children look up to them as role models," she said. "They're teen-agers, and the kids think they're cool. They have a major influence."

That's fine by junior Vince Harris, who has been reading to first-graders and helping them take tests on the computer for the school's Reading Counts program.

"I think the program is good because it helps little kids learn better, and us working with the kids lets the teachers help students who need it," Harris said.

Harris became involved in the program, which sends Spencer students to elementary and middle schools, through Introduction to Teaching. It will give him exposure to teaching, which he plans to pursue in college. But it will also give him a chance to do good.

"It's a good way to give back to the community," he said.

Casseus, who has also been helping students with the Reading Counts tests, said the program has helped confirm her desire to work with children. But even if it hadn't, it would be a good program.

"Some people think they want to be teachers, but they should really find out before they go to college," she said.

That doesn't look to be a problem, though. In the 15 years the program has been in place in the Muscogee School District, Spencer has had the largest percentage of cadets go on to become teachers, Belt said.

"That's what this program is all about," she said. "Replenishing the supply of teachers."

Construction underway at Benning elementary schools

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The excitement is building at two Fort Benning elementary schools as the walls for new classrooms go up.

The new construction, which adds four new classrooms at both Wilson and Dexter, follows similar construction finished at Loyd in 2002 and Stowers in 2003. Funding for the project came as a result of a pupil-teacher ratio survey conducted several years ago, said Fort Benning Schools facilities manager Donna Ford.

The survey identified the need for more teachers, hence more classrooms, to reduce the pupil-teacher ratio at the schools to the target 18:1.

Dexter, originally built in 1968 and Wilson in 1965, have both undergone fairly extensive renovations within the last several years, so the work crews are not a novelty.

Although it took several years for the approval and military construction funding to filter down to the schools, Ford said it's good to get the additional space.

Groundbreaking for the projects was in October 2003, and both Ford and Fort Benning Corps of Engineers quality assurance officer Regina Jackson expect the additions to be completed by August and the start of the next school year

The construction adds nearly 3,900 square feet to each school with a price tag of $1.5 million.

Ford said the classrooms, each measuring more than 750 square feet, will not have restrooms like classrooms in the original sections of the buildings.

The construction contract went to Don Jones Construction, a local company, which also built the additions at Loyd and Stowers, using blueprints drawn by a Texas architectural firm.

Melissa House

Workers get ready to tackle the roof at Dexter Thursday morning. The addition blends with the original building, left.

Jackson said the construction was going well.

"That's what makes it so easy," she said. "We have a contractor who has done this before."

Although the blueprints are the same, Jackson said there are some modifications from school to school and every effort is made to blend the new structure with the original building so it isn't immediately recognizable as an addition. Principals can make changes to interior colors and designate the new room numbers before signs are put up.

Dexter principal Vicki Rogers said the new addition was really taking shape and was right on schedule.

"They've matched the bricks quite well," Rogers said, "and the style of the roof line and other architectural details blend well with the existing building. We are very excited about this new addition."

Gibson brings his Passion to big screen

Chaplain (Capt.) Daniel Bucur
2nd Battalion, 19th Armored Regiment

REFLECTIONS

Whether you're a believer or not, you cannot possibly miss the hottest item this month has to offer to both the theological academic and the believer who knows that Jesus Christ is the savior. If, until now, you acted like Hollywood is a thorn in your side, or you simply digested everything that came your way from the well of cinematic excellence, prepare to be shocked.

Mel Gibson, a renegade by definition, is at the center of attention again. No, we are not talking about another Mad Max or Lethal Weapon V. We're talking about something much more personal, much more uncomfortable and much more challenging. We are talking about Mel's Passion. Well, it is not exactly his passion, but Christ's. Are you as shocked as I am?

Not too long ago, Robert Duvall, in his well-researched movie The Apostle, reminded us that we all have fallen short of the glory of God. This time, another Hollywood "prima donna" chooses to go deeper into the Christian faith. More exactly, Mel chooses to expose a slice of the Holy Gospel.

Bucur

It is a slice of the Holy Gospel that most of us, comfortably enough, refuse to deal with seriously. I am talking about the passion of Christ. The passion of Christ? What an intriguing topic! In many dialogues, Christ is a divisive subject. His passion is even more so.

However, I would like to focus a little more on the term "passion" and explore its possibilities. How do you deal with the term "passion?" When do you use the term "passion?" What does "passion" mean to you? I checked the Webster Dictionary and here is what I found. Passion means intense or violent emotion, a violent emotional outburst or the martyrdom of an early Christian ... and then, finally: the suffering and death of Jesus Christ. Hmm! Interesting!

Are you confused yet? Allow me to confuse you even more. In Latin, the word "passion" is much more complex. It could refer to passionate sexual love, good appetite, to become inflamed with, to influence or upset.

Now, forget about all this academic stuff. Here is what I make out of it: The passion of Christ means the emptying of oneself for the sake of another. It is as simple as that. When is the last time you decreased so that he may increase in your life? When is the last time you passionately gave out of love? When is the last time you surrendered your will for the sake of another? When you do these things, in my opinion, you experience the passion of Christ.

Thank you, Mel, for bringing passion back into my life through the passion of Christ.

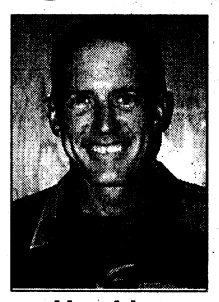
Three words change relationships



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Somebody knocked me off my feet last week with a report of how three little words revolutionized their relationship.

They were words she had heard before. The words were not complicated. The words were easy to remember. The words produced an immediate change in the emotional temperature of her house. The words made her spouse smile. The words made her son smile. The words made both the husband and the son do things that she'd been wanting done for longer than she could remember.

A woman or a man can use the words. A child or an adult can use the words. The words work in the home, at work or in the unit. They work in the office. They work in school. The words work in Scouts and at church.

OK. Before I start sounding too much like a Dr. Seuss book, what are the words?

Hawkins

The words are simply ... "Would you please ..."

Take a minute right now, and whether you're a commander of a battalion or a squad leader of two toddlers, think about how many times in a day you could use this powerful tool for cooperation.

Psychologists have intricate theories and postulates as to why this phrase works; however, you, like me, may not necessarily want to know "how the watch works; you just want to know what time it is!" The bottom line is: try it — it works!

Try it with your mate. Instead of "I need you to do what you said you'd do and get that garbage out, now," try, "Would you please take the garbage out by dinner time for me?"

Try it with your child. Instead of, "Stop yelling, I can't take it anymore," try, "Would you please be quiet for mommy right now."

Try it with your commander. Instead of "Hey bonehead, where'd you get your commission ... Wal-Mart," try, "Would you be so kind as to relax the training schedule and deployment cycle so as to afford me maximum opportunity for meaningful family interaction and personal relaxation?" Well, maybe not — but two out of three ain't bad! I think you get the point.

Joking aside, I'll be anxious to see how your masterful injection of a calm, courteous "would you please" resets the emotional thermostat for those around you. Let me know how you do.

If you'd like some more coaching on how to build a love to last a lifetime, then come see us at The Chaplain Family Life Center, Building 2606, Soldiers' Plaza or pick up the phone and give us a call at 545-1760 — we look forward to serving you!

Soccer kicks onto Benning

College players teach basics to post youth

More than 130 youths turned out for a kickin' good time at a soccer clinic in Doughboy Stadium Saturday.

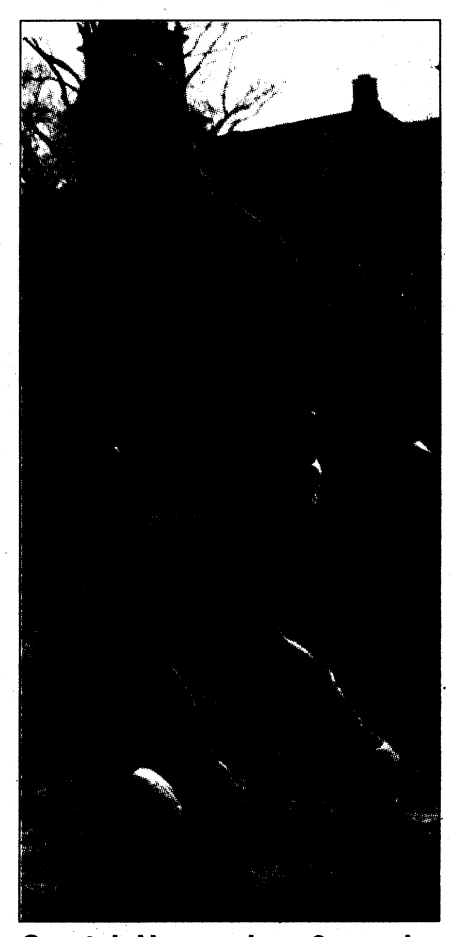
The clinic was sponsored by the College of Charleston's men's soccer team who took the children through soccer drills and gave them one-on-one instruction.

"I think it was very important for the children to interact with the college players," said Linda Laine, Youth Services director. "Most of them look at the college players and are in awe of them, because one day they want to be in the same position they are."

The men's soccer teams from the College of Charleston and Lander University, both in South Carolina, divided the children into small groups and gave them more instruction on their techniques, although joking around wasn't out of the questions.

"I had fun learning from the players," said Jocelyn Carter, 12. "They made what we were learning more enjoyable."

The children worked on techniques like step-ups, dribbling, full-turns with the inside foot and pulling back the ball. They played games to reinforce the skills they learned.



"The games were a lot of fun," said Jeronne Carter, 5. "I especially liked the game where we got to take other people's soccer balls from them."

Not only did the clinic work on individual skills, it also helped them develop teamwork skills.

"Teamwork was really stressed here," said Shawn Greenspan, 12. "We learned how to trust our teammates and depend on them. What we learned is really going to help us when we start soccer season."

The players supported Youth Services' goal by showing the children how a college team works together.

"Teamwork is very important," Laine said. "The children learned that it takes a team to be successful and not an individual."

Crystal Hernandez, 9, works on dribbling during the clinic.

"I had a blast helping them," said Corbin Waller, College of Charleston's goalie. "Personally, soccer has given me a lot, and giving back to the community means so much to me."

Troy Lesesne, another College of Charleston player, said that he remembered when he was in the children's shoes and dreaming about playing "in the big time."

"I started to play soccer at their age and fell in love with the sport," Lesesne said.

"Doing the clinic brings back memories of when I was their age and starting to learn the game. I really enjoyed doing the clinic," he said.

After the clinic, everyone was treated to a full day of fast-paced soccer action between Lander University, the College of Charleston, Georgia Southern University and Emory University.

"I'm glad college players came out," said Katherine Kelly, 12. "They really helped us with our game, and it is going to show during the season."

College teams compete in soccer exhibition

Teams rally for post-winter tournament

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Four Southern Conference men's college soccer teams came together Saturday at Doughboy Stadium to kick the ice of their cleats and warm up after a long winter break.

The College of Charleston Division I, Emory University, Division III, Georgia Southern University, Division I, and Lander University, Division II, all fielded teams for the off-season tournament.

The tournament was played round-robin style — each team played each other team in succession.

Because it was only a one-day tournament, the games were 42 minutes long with no halftime break, as opposed to the standard NCAA soccer game with two 45-minute halves.

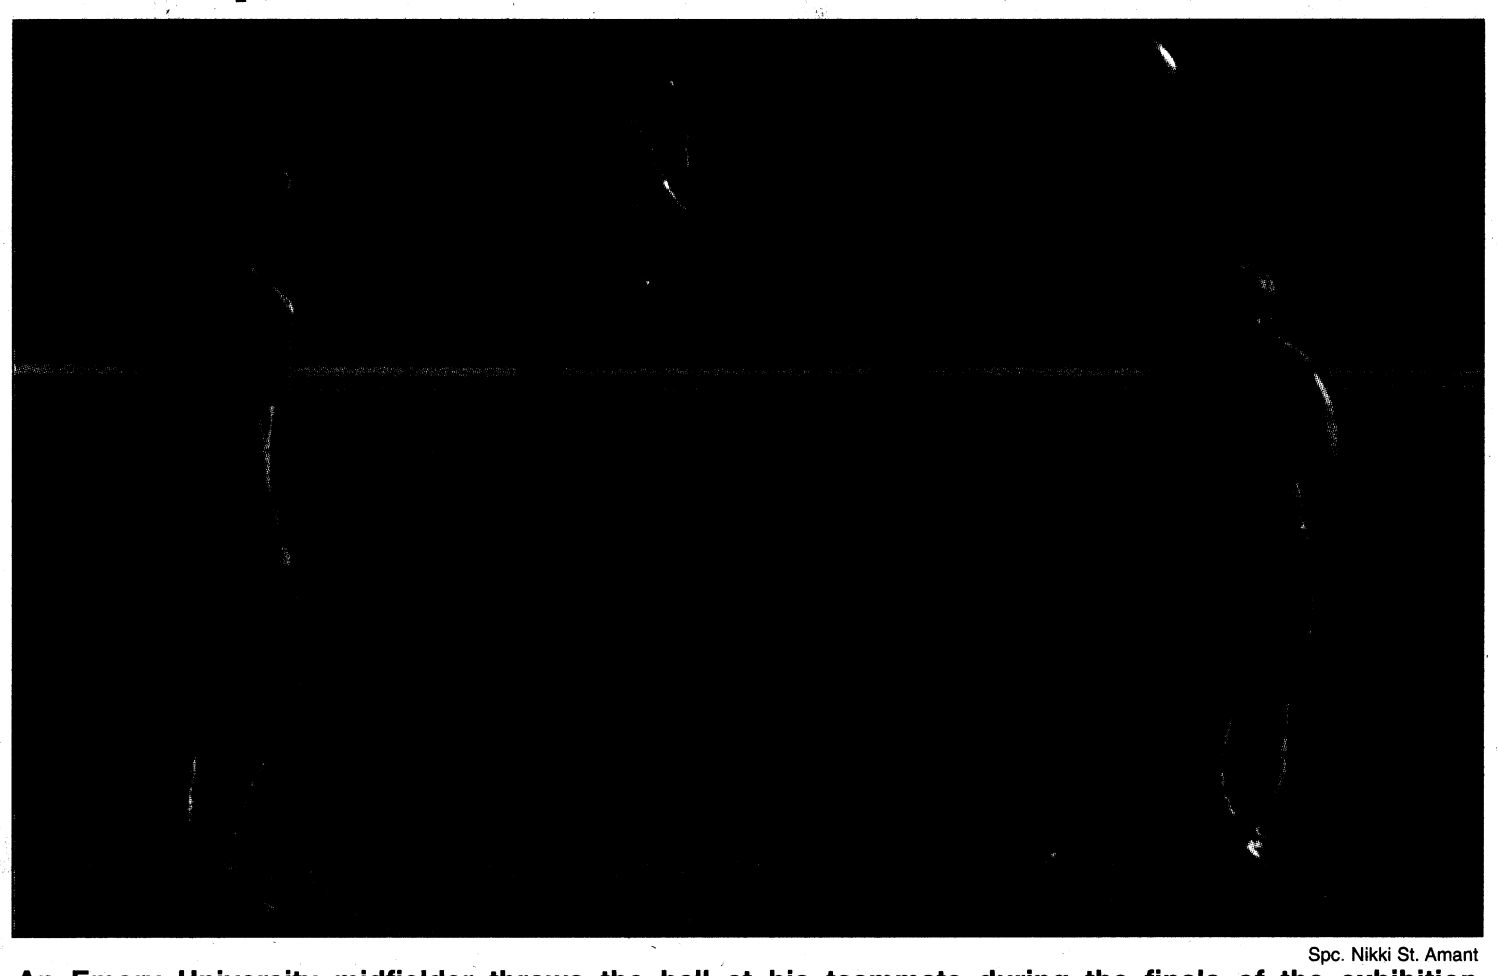
The tournament was informal and intended to be a training experience, said tournament organizer Ben Freakley Jr., an assistant coach at the College of Charleston.

Freakley said off-season tournaments like this one are important to keep coaches and players on their toes and maintain fitness levels.

All teams agreed to field only nine players at a time, which is two short of a regulation team and forces the players to cover much larger portions of the field.

The tournament gave coaches a good chance to evaluate players who don't get much playing time during the regular season, Freakley said.

Georgia Southern University head coach Kevin Chambers said his team accomplished what they came to do.



"Our goals for this tournament were to come out after four months off and get back on the field as a team and get some solid practice in against quality teams, and that's just what we did," Chambers said.

For a team like the Georgia Southern Eagles, who are a young team fielding mostly freshmen and sophomores, events like Saturday's tournament are vital to their development as a cohesive unit, Chambers said.

Chambers said it has been challenging for his players to compete against teams with older, more experienced players.

"We are playing a lot of young guys and trying to find a little bit of a groove," Chambers said.

But he said the tournament was a good experience overall and gave the team an opportunity to try out new things without the pressures of conference games, which count on their record.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

An Emory University midfielder throws the ball at his teammate during the finals of the exhibition tournament held at Doughboy Stadium Saturday afternoon.

"I think the tournament was a great tournament. It was a great opportunity for our team to come out and really learn a lot and play together as a team," Chambers said.

Even though the tournament was informal, with the games half the regulation length and no official scoring was recorded, the teams played competitively and coaches pushed hard for performance.

By the end of the day players were visibly tired and tempers flared seconds before the end of the final game when a Georgia Southern player drew a yellow card for a flagrant foul against an Emory player.

For coaches Freakley and Chambers, it was a reunion of sorts.

Freakley played collegiate soccer under Chambers at Georgia Southern and after graduating, joined the staff as an assistant coach before moving on to the College of Charleston last season.

"It's an exciting feeling to coach against a team you used to play for. It's a really neat relationship between Kevin Chambers and I," Freakley said.

Although no official standings were reported, Emory was undefeated for the day.

The college soccer season opens in August with preliminary games and runs through December.

Challenger Baseball looks for local players

League gives athletic environment

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It wouldn't be spring without baseball. And for the 15th year, the Challenger Little League of Columbus, a baseball program for children with special needs, is looking for more players.

The Challenger division is a program for the mentally and physically disabled ages 5 to 21, who are enrolled in school. The fundamental goal is to give each child a chance to play, regardless of limitations, and allow the children to enjoy the full benefits of Little League participation in an athletic environment structured to their abilities.

Challenger League volunteer Roger Stanford said the league is open to anyone, regardless of where they live.

"We have no boundaries," he said. "Anyone who wants to play can play."

Stanford, a claims examiner with the Office of the Staff Judge Advocate, has been involved with the league since it began in 1989, as either coach or assistant coach. His son, Ryan, now 24, stopped playing eight years ago.

"It's just my way of giving something back," he said. "(Ryan) really enjoyed it and everyone excels."

Parents and children will also see Marsha Collins, Fort Benning's Exceptional Family Member Program manager, at the ball park.

Collins has a personal interest in the league, because her son played as well.

Collins doesn't coach, but lends a hand on the planning committee and as a buddy, assisting players on the field at practices and during games.

"There are children with varying disabilities," she said. "Some are autistic, have severe asthma, Down syndrome or spina bifida, and need a buddy to run the bases for them."

The league plays on a regulation Little League field. Players wear standard uniforms, complete with a Little League patch, which they keep at the end of the season.

Modified rules — there are no strikes, no outs, no score kept, and every player gets to bat each inning — don't detract from the experience a bit.

"The kids are just like everyone else," Stanford said. "They're on a team. They're playing ball."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class Joe Hiner has also spent time coaching in the league. His daughter, Marielis, and son, Joseph, both play.

"It's a great experience," Hiner said. "The coaches love it. The kids love it. The buddies love it."

He said the sports experience is key in giving the children a sense of independence and self-confidence.

"The only winning is counted by how much fun the kids are having," he said.

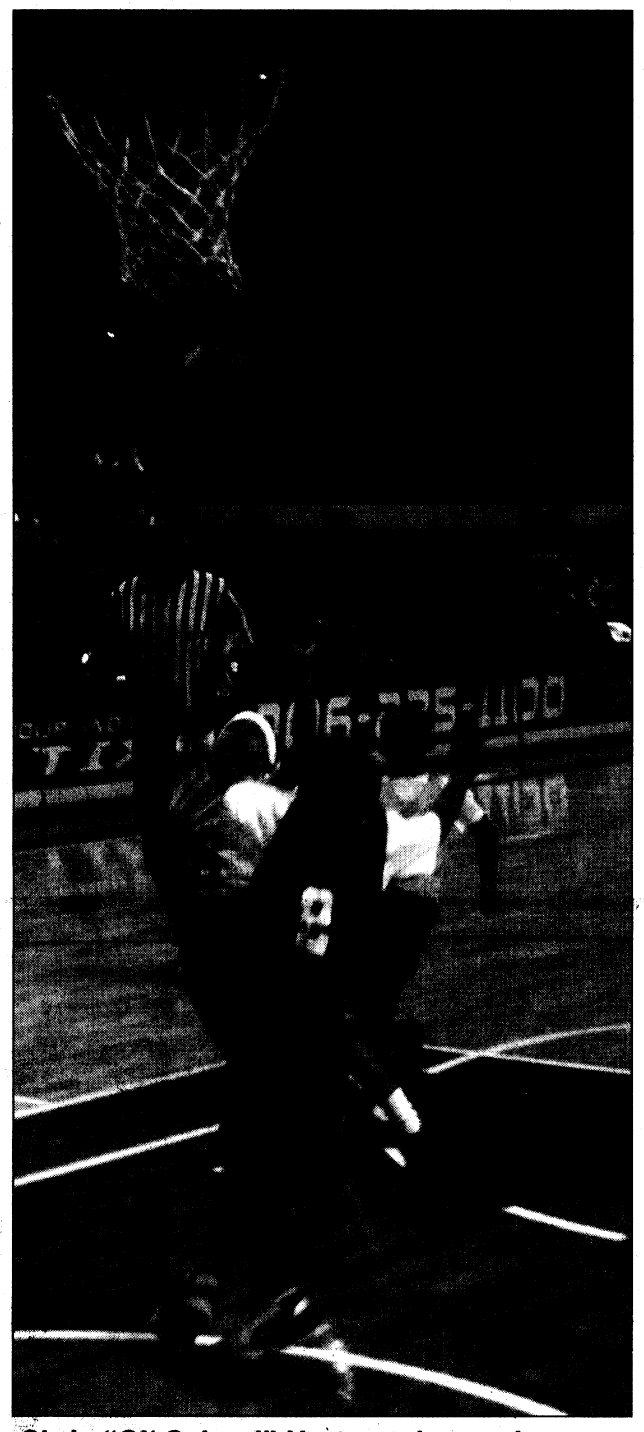
But the players aren't the only ones who benefit from the Challenger program.

Stanford said it's a great thing for parents as well.

The parents have an opportunity to network with each other and talk about different programs available for the children.

The league also benefits from a great deal of community support from the parents, siblings, and high school and college students. That's key, Stanford said, because teams generally need five coaches, and half of the players need buddies.

During the past few years, the league has had around 60 players on four teams.



Opening games are held at Columbus State University and players, their families and volunteers enjoy a free meal provided by Country's.

Registration for the league is 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday and March 6 at Woodruff Gymnasium on the CSU campus.

Season-opener games will take place at CSU's Cougar Field March 27.

The 7- to 8-year-old Youth Services Spurs had the chance of a lifetime to play a game at the Columbus Civic Center.

With the best record in the YS league at the All-Star break, the Spurs split into two teams and played a full-court game during halftime of the game between the Columbus Riverdragons and the Fayetteville Patriots Feb. 16.

Participants in the game on the yellow team were: Marcus Anderson, Brandon Nash, Shiann Yokem and Chris Horton. Participants on the black team were: Marcus Griffin, Jazaria Brown, Jordan Jennings, Anthony O'Banner Jr. and Trey Sterling.

The yellow team won the game, 6-2. But in the end, the players didn't care who won the game.

"These guys enjoyed playing on the Riverdragons floor," said Anthony O'Banner, Spurs head coach. "They were happy they had the opportunity to represent their league by playing a game in front of the Columbus community."

Post gym to offer variety of aerobics classes

Briant Wells to start classes Monday

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Cardio junkies on Fort Benning will see a dream come true Monday when the Briant Wells Fitness Center kicks off an array of aerobics classes.

The gym has undergone several changes in the last few months, and the latest achievement is completion of the aerobics room.

"I'm thrilled to get this going," said Joanne Neyland, Briant Wells manager. "It's been a long time coming."

The gym will offer box aerobics, aeromix, step combo, core crunch, yoga and aqua aerobics classes.

There are also plans to add a spinning class when the exercise bikes are delivered.

Neyland said more people will use the gym when classes start because of the group atmosphere they'll create.

Fort Benning hasn't offered aerobics classes in several years, except for a short-lived attempt at the Officers' Club, which Neyland said makes it a big deal.

Many of the fitness center's patrons are just as excited about the classes.

Dawn Colster used to attend the classes at the Officers' Club, but said they weren't very reliable because the instructors often wouldn't show up, and the hours weren't very flexible.

Neyland said that won't be a problem with the new program, because she has six instructors who will give a variety of classes throughout the week. She is also looking for more instructors to add more variety to the program.

"We are always looking for variety," she said. "Something new and different."

Eugenia Ortiz said she can't wait for the classes to start specifically for that reason.

"It's getting boring just working on the machines. I need something different," she said. "And it's always good to have someone pushing you and to have others working out with you.

"If I fall behind, I'm like, 'Hey, I need to hurry up.'"

Neyland said the trend in aerobics right now is core crunch, a type of program that focuses on conditioning the torso of the body rather than the arms and legs.

Another one of the "hot" classes they will offer is the box aerobics, she said.

Box aerobics is a Tae-bo-style kickboxing class that lets people take out their aggression on an imaginary opponent, she said.

Regardless of the workout a person is looking for, the fitness center should be able to accommodate, Neyland said.

The aqua aerobics classes are good for people who are recovering from injuries that would hinder their ability to join the other classes, she said.

"But don't let it fool you," she said. "Water can be tricky, because it keeps you cool and you don't realize how hard you are working."

Neyland said there aren't any classes specifically designed for beginners. However, most of the classes [illegible] basic enough that most can keep up.

They can also modify the workout to suit their needs, she said. For instance, in the step class, a beginner can use a smaller step while more advanced students can use the risers.

Neyland said the renovations have brought the gym up to date, and it is now outfitted with the "latest and greatest" equipment, which makes it comparable to any of the local private fitness centers.

"We are no longer a second-class citizen," she said. "We are now a first-class fitness center."

For more information, call Briant Wells at 545-4388.

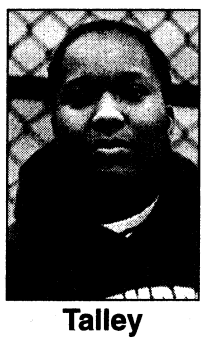
Post teen wins scholarship for athletics

Local shotputter ranks third in the nation



Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Once in a while, a person comes along who has such a high level of skill and determination, it affects everyone around them.

Khadija Talley is one of those people.

As a young girl, Talley always loved sports and had a plan for the future. But it must have been hard for her to imagine herself where she is today.

Now a student at Columbus High School, Talley has surrounded herself with sports and balanced her athletic endeavors with academics, pushing the envelope in both arenas.

Talley

Talley, who is a member of the National Honor Society, was recently awarded a full scholarship to the University of Miami for her achievements in track and field, and earned a spot in the Beta Club for maintaining a 3.9 grade point average throughout her high school career.

Talley started playing sports in kindergarten and said her true passion is on the basketball court where she is first-team all-region.

However, it was a coach at her junior high school who paved the way for her scholarship.

Donna Roberts, track and field coach at McArthur Junior High School in Oklahoma, saw Talley's potential to be great and persuaded her to take up shotput.

Talley said she had no interest in the shotput at the time, but Roberts wouldn't take no for an answer.

Six years later, Talley holds the title of third in the nation for shotput and discus in the U.S. Track and Field Junior Nationals, and is All-American in track and field.

Not one to brag about herself, Talley said it felt really good to place third in both events because she didn't realize that she ranked as high as she did on a national level.

Talley said she couldn't have done so well without the support of her parents and her coaches.

Randy Whitt, her track coach at CHS said coaching her was easy because she was so dedicated and professional, however her raw talent forced him to be a better coach.

Whitt focused primarily on long-distance running before Talley came along, but when she joined the team, he had to learn more about the discus and shotput to help her hone her skills.

He said Talley has shown dramatic improvements since she arrived at CHS, but most of her talent is still untapped.

"She is still very, very raw," he said, "but that just shows how much talent she has."

Talley's father, Command Sgt. Maj. Rickey Talley, 13th Corps Support Battalion, said he is not at all surprised by her accomplishments because, "she has been an outstanding athlete for some time."

She was always a very adventurous child who enjoyed trying everything from art to music to sports, and when she makes up her mind, nothing will stop her, he said.

"She is not the typical teen-ager," he said. "She is the type of child every parent has hoped and prayed for. I don't know what we did to deserve this."

Talley said she got involved in sports because it was something to do and it kept her busy, but now, balancing school work with all the sports in her life doesn't leave time for much else.

"If I'm not playing sports, I'm either studying or watching movies with my dad," she said. "Sometimes I just go in the locker room and study before practice."

Talley said academics are very important to her because she has wanted to be a pediatrician since she was in the eighth grade and doesn't want to lose sight of that goal — a goal her father said she will have no problem achieving if she continues to apply herself.

Sigma Phi Psi Sorority for United States Armed Forces Women

Sigma Phi Psi was founded in February 2000. Sigma Phi Psi is a military, educational, service, and social sorority that places great emphasis on the complete woman. The members are spiritually, mentally, and physically fit. Women have an important role in being "Keepers of the Free World." Sigma Phi Psi Sorority fosters a sisterhood of encouragement and support for growth as individuals and as a single entity. The Sigma Phi Psi Sorority platform is promoting friendship, educational and scholastic achievement, philanthropy, community service, social awareness, and athletics.

In the state of independence, power and performance come at PX prices.

Welcome to the state of independence, where driving is a thrilling, turbocharged adventure. And Saab dealers make it even more exciting for the military with a generous discount off MSRP. Now, members of the U.S. Armed Forces not only get a great deal on a sporty, new 2004 Saab, but can take immediate delivery from Bill Heard Saab in Columbus, Georgia. With over 30 new Saab units to choose from, Bill Heard Saab is proud to present this world-class vehicle to Fort Benning. Get behind the wheel of your very own Saab and you'll see the price tag is just one of the many reasons to smile.

What is a hero?

A girl who finds the courage to try something new. A boy who discovers the strength to reach further than he ever has. These kids, and thousands like them, have the hope of a better future and the power to make it happen. By taking part in afterschool programs, kids explore, learn, grow, and most importantly, find the hero inside themselves. Let us know you want afterschool programs in your area. Call 1-800-USA-LEARN.

AER campaign kicks off on post

Benning aims to raise at least $175,000

Spc. Brian Trapp

Since 2001, Fort Benning has used about $2.5 million in Army Emergency Relief funds. Yet it has only contributed about $600,000.

The 2004 AER campaign kicked off Monday at Infantry Hall with a goal of $175,000. Benning surpassed last year's goal of $170,000 by about $69,000.

"The campaign is very important. This is the means we have to get the funds we need to assist Soldiers," said Al Deane, installation AER officer. "We ask individuals to contribute within their means. To come up with the goal, we take the population of Fort Benning and multiply it by 12. That's just $1 for 12 months."

"We're only asking for $12. For the price of going to a movie with your spouse on post, you already went over the $12 we're asking for," Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley said during the kick-off.

"In the course of the year for Army installations, there are two things that are tremendously important — (AER) is one and the Combined Federal Campaign is the other," Freakley said. "With the global war on terrorism, we're finding more and more families who need help … there is a need out there."

The campaign accounts for "well over 90 percent" of AER's annual funds, and this year is slated to run until the end of April.

690th returns to Benning

Family and friends traveled from near and far for the much-anticipated return of the 690th Medical Company Feb. 27 at the Audie Murphy Fitness Center.

The 690th returned to Benning after a nearly yearlong deployment supporting Operation Iraqi Freedom.

The company provided ground ambulance support, covering the northern, eastern, southern and central sectors of Iraq, evacuating about 600 Soldiers to medical facilities.

The return didn't go as smoothly as the unit had hoped, with travel delays pushing the ceremony back 12 hours.

But the waiting crowd was just happy their Soldiers were coming home.

"We got here by the hand of God," said Nancy Thoemke, mother of Sgt. Michael Good. "We got a call from him before he left — we were waiting by the phone for a week."

The Thoemkes waited for the phone call for days, never leaving their phone unattended. When they finally got the call, they made their way from Naples, Fla.

"He was coming home so we drove up and checked into a motel, and we got lost trying to get here," she said. "Then we happened to stop by a UPS store, and the gentleman in there was a captain from somewhere on Benning, and he drew us a map and gave us phone numbers to get in touch with people here."

"I don't know how good it feels to be back yet," said Good, a squad

Post lists fiscal '05 projects

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning proposed four major projects for the Military Construction Appropriations Bill, still in legislation. The proposed projects cost a combined $78.95 million.

The projects on the table are a barracks complex for 3rd Brigade and the 29th Infantry Regiment; a consolidated health clinic that will replace the troop medical clinics; a new, larger physical fitness center with a pool; and a hazardous cargo loading apron on Lawson Army Air Field, which will allow for quicker and more efficient loading for hot cargo and ammunition.

Fort Benning's construction projects are prioritized, after which they go to TRADOC, where they are reprioritized with other projects. The list is then sent to the Department of the Army to compete with other projects across the Army. DA ranks which projects are most needed and moves those forward for congressional approval.

"This means, until the president signs off on the budget, we don't know which projects will be funded and which won't," said Dean Miller, industrial engineer with the master planning branch of the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

The $50 million barracks project funds three barracks complexes on Kelley Hill and two new barracks complexes on Dixie Road for the 29th Infantry Regiment.

"The existing structures are substandard. They have all

Immigrant Soldiers become U.S. citizens

Troops, family member take citizenship oath

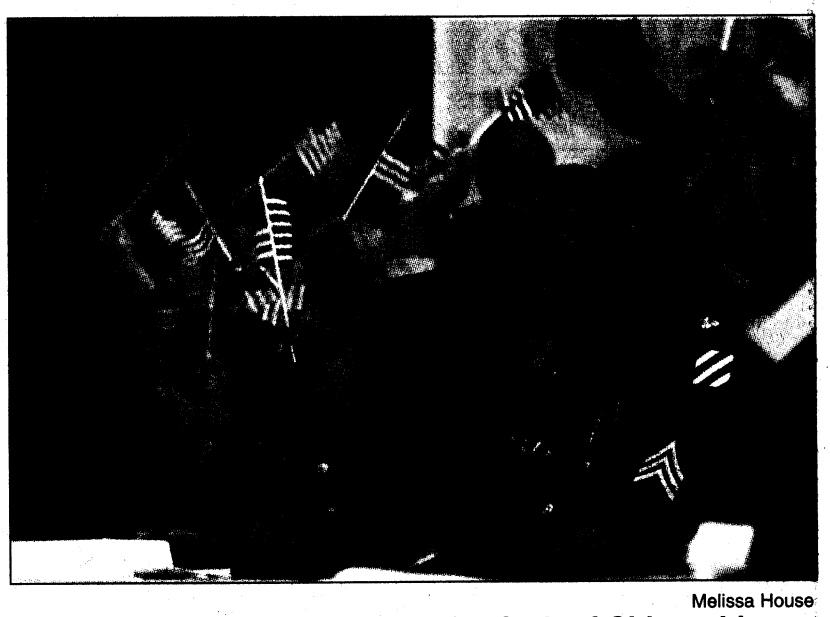
Friday was a flag-waving day for 97 of the U.S.'s newest citizens.



Eduardo Aguirre, the director of Citizen and Immigration Services in the Department of Homeland Security, administered the Oath of Allegiance to 96 service members and one family member.

Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley said the Soldiers standing before him represented all the men and women who take on the responsibility to defend the nation against all enemies.

"We thank you for your solid commitment to the U.S. by your service and also by becoming citizens," Freakley said. "You know what it means to come from nations where freedom, justice and liberty are not understood. We appreciate what you have done and what you will do."

Aguirre, who emigrated to the U.S. from Cuba as an unaccompanied minor, told the audience, "It's a great day to be an American, and an even better day to become one," before recognizing the

FOUNDER'S DAY

A birthday celebration

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

I've reached a point where I'm going to stop apologizing for going to college.

You see, I'm a "West Pointer." But it doesn't stop there. Not only am I a grad, but I'm the daughter of a grad, wife of a grad, sister of a grad, and sister-in-law of a grad. The only non-grad in my family is my poor mother, who is holding up quite well, thank you.

So, to say that my blood runs black and gray and gold is a bit of an understatement. But there are some days when it would certainly be easier to have blood that ran, say, Alabama crimson or Syracuse orange.

I've caught a lot of flack about my alma mater through the years. For some reason, once someone finds out you went to West Point, you're regaled with stories of all the bad officers they've encountered who went there.

I can't figure out why no one seems to remember that the other horrible guy they worked for was a Notre Dame grad or a University of Minnesota grad, but they do remember the ones who were West Point grads. Somehow, all incompetence and abrasive personalities transfer to the 60,331 of us who have graduated from West Point since 1802.

But I can see why some of those people might stick in your mind. After all, a lot of people don't understand what West Point is all about, and it's easy to discount or condemn what you don't fully understand.

I read an article after National Signing Day about a high school football star who signed on with Army.

In his interview, he said he had a major in mind and hoped he would earn his degree and be able to use it to get a good job.

I was speechless for a moment. He hoped to earn a degree? Well, if he doesn't, he just wasted the estimated $250,000 that we, the taxpayers, have shelled out for his education.

And as far as getting a good job after he graduates, he really need not worry. He'll have a job. Or did someone forget to tell him that the M in USMA is because it's the military academy.

I hope he's able to figure it out before he gets to West Point this summer and spends his first six weeks in Cadet Basic Training, learning how to march, salute, fire an M-16 and low crawl through the mud.

And when he graduates and heads off to Iraq or Bosnia or Haiti, I hope he knows that his job is to serve his country, and not to take that responsibility lightly.

I'm gearing up for Founder's Day tomorrow. I'm flying my "Go Army, Beat Navy" flag outside my house. I've dragged out my ring. I'll force my husband into his blues for a night out with old grads and young grads alike.

You know we West Pointers are asking for trouble when we have a party every year, wherever we are, to celebrate the birthday of our alma mater. No one else does it.

But since West Point was founded solely to provide trained officers for the Army, it seems appropriate.

I'll be there tomorrow, sad that I'm no longer on active duty, but proud to be a grad.

Proud to be number 47,031 on the same list as retired Col. Ralph Puckett, and proud to have served my country.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

I am writing in regard to the policy/procedure Fort Benning has in place for job vacancies.

I am a military spouse with 10 years experience in civil service and have been unable to get back into the system due to the policy/procedure that all vacancies posted at Fort Benning are for "in-service" employees.

My understanding is that all military spouses are to have what is called "spouse preference." However, how can a military spouse resume his or her career when the system only allows in-service personnel to apply for jobs?

Clearly, this appears to be a discriminatory practice against all military spouses.

I have applied for several positions in the three years we have been stationed at Fort Benning, only to be rejected with the explanation of, "You were not considered for this position, because you were not among the group of applicants who were eligible to apply."

So my concern and question is, how is it possible to get my career back on track when the civilian personnel office at Fort Benning appears to be discriminating against military spouses? Who do we need to talk to in order to make the necessary changes regarding this discriminatory practice?

— Maritza Madera
Fort Benning

Public Law 99-145, Section 806, implemented measures to increase employment opportunities for spouses of members of the Armed Forces. The intent is to lessen the career interruptions of spouses who relocate with their military sponsors.

Military spouse preference provides priority in the employment selection process for military spouses who are relocating to accompany their military sponsor on a permanent change of station move to an active-duty assignment.

The MSP:

• applies to spouses of active-duty military members of the U.S. Armed Forces, including the U.S. Coast Guard and full-time National Guard, who desire priority consideration for positions at Department of Defense activities in the U.S. and its territories and possessions;

• applies only within the commuting area of the permanent duty station of the sponsor;

• applies only if the spouse entered into the marriage with the military sponsor prior to the reporting date to the new duty assignment.

• does not apply when the sponsor is separating or retiring.

Spouse preference applies when management wants to fill a position from a competitive list of applicants. A spouse preference eligible who is ranked among the "best qualified" on a competitive list must be selected for the position. If more than one spouse is determined to be best qualified among the candidates, any one of them may be chosen.

Preference applies to DoD appropriated fund positions at grades GS-15 and below (and equivalent wage grade positions) in the competitive or excepted service and also applies to positions in nonappropriated fund instrumentalities at grades UA-8 and below (or equivalent grade levels).

If management chooses to select from a list of noncompetitive candidates or select an individual from one of the alternative recruitment sources, spouse preference does not apply.

The alternative recruitment sources are: appointment of a 30 percent disabled veteran; VRA appointment; transfer at the same or lower grade, reassignment or change to lower grade; placement to correct an Equal Employment Office deficiency; placement of a handicapped individual; or placement of an employee returning from an overseas tour or duty.

Military spouses who are immediately appointable to a position in the competitive service exercise their preference through registration in Program S of the DoD Priority Placement Program.

To meet the appointability requirement, the spouse must be in one of the following categories: a current federal career/career-conditional employee; serving under a VRA or Schedule A handicapped appointment; have reinstatement eligibility; have eligibility under Executive Order 12721; or have competitive service eligibility based on employment under other merit systems. Registrants may be referred for positions being filled through noncompetitive sources. In such cases, they are considered in the same manner as other Priority 3 registrants.

Spouses may register at grades no higher than that previously held on a permanent basis. If the spouse's only federal service was overseas under time-limited appointment, he or she may register for the highest grade held if the spouse has appointment eligibility under E. O. 12721. Spouses who are not current federal employees who have E.O. 12721 and reinstatement eligibility may register under either option, whichever is more beneficial. Spouses who have no prior federal employment exercise preference at the grade for which certified on an employment register.

Spouses may register for the lowest grade for which qualified and available.

Referral through Program S of the PPP is the only means by which eligible, immediately appointable spouses will receive preference for appropriated fund competitive service positions. Personnel offices must maintain manual systems for spouses who are applying through delegated examining authorities, OPM certificates, or applying for nonappropriated fund positions.

Spouses should ensure that they have the following documents with them to register for preference:

• application or resumé

• copy of an SF-50 (or DA 3434 for NAF positions) documenting current or previous appointment(s)

• copy of last performance appraisal if currently working for the federal government

• Executive Order 12721 paperwork showing eligibility (if returning from the overseas area)

• DD 214, Member 4 copy

• SF 15, if claiming 10 point preference and letter from the Veterans Administration dated within the last year showing the percentage of disability

• Transcripts (may be necessary if education is relevant to qualifications for the position. Original transcripts are required if applying for health care provider positions)

• Licenses/certifications (if applicable)

• PCS orders documenting sponsor's assignment.

Soldiers, civilians visit Tuskegee

Various sites teach about U.S. history

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Photos from www.mps.gov/tuin

The museum houses the scientific equipment George Washington Carver used during his experiments at Tuskegee.

More than 110 Fort Benning Soldiers and civilians attended the fifth annual cultural awareness trip to Tuskegee University Feb. 26.

The trip took the group to the Tuskegee University campus to see the George Washington Carver Museum, Booker T. Washington house, Tuskegee Chapel and other sites. Other stops included the Tuskegee Human and Civil Rights Multicultural Center and Moton Airfield, home of the Tuskegee Airmen.

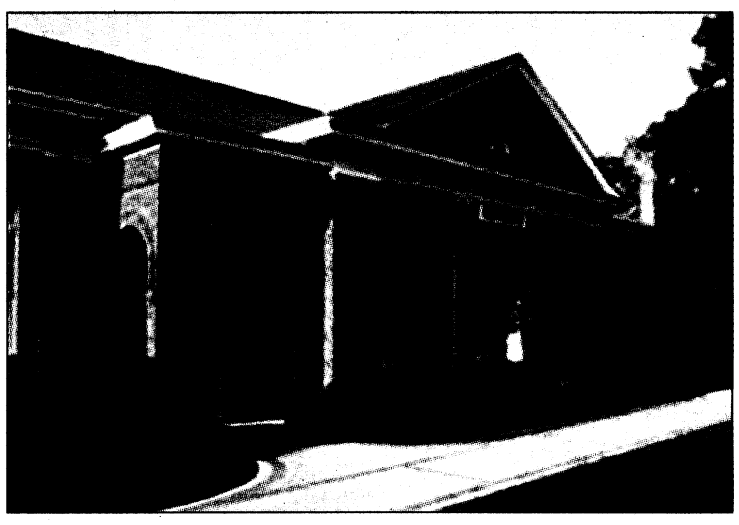
"The trip was a success," said Sgt. 1st Class Yvette Trejo, 29th Infantry Regiment Equal Opportunity advisor and trip organizer. "Everyone who went understood that it wasn't just African-American history we were learning about; it was American history."

The group started the tour with a visit to the George Washington Carver Museum, where they learned about Carver's life. They also learned how Carver extracted elements from peanuts to help create more than 300 products.

"It's amazing to see what Carver did during his lifetime," said Evelyn Jenkins, Defense Military Pay Office civilian. "I had heard about what he did in his lifetime. I never had the chance to see it. This was my chance to actually see all of his works."

After eating lunch in the university's cafeteria, the group went to the Multicultural Center, which presently houses exhibits on the Tuskegee Syphilis Study.

For 40 years, the U.S. Public Health Service used African-American men from the Tuskegee area as unwitting human guinea pigs in a medical experiment to document the effect of untreated syphilis.



More than 600 men were involved in the study and many died prematurely or suffered because readily available treatment was knowingly withheld from them. The men were not told the truth about their medical conditions and were in the experiment without their informed consent.

"The Multicultural Center is a place I really wanted to see," Jenkins said. "My father grew up in nearby Elmo County, Alabama, and always traveled to Tuskegee. I didn't know if he had participated in the study, but after reading all of the names of those involved, I found out he wasn't," she said. "It answered a lot of my questions."

After visiting the center, the group went to the Tuskegee Airmen's Moton Airfield where they learned of the hardships black pilots went through to become Army Air Corps aviators. They also got the chance to hear one Tuskegee Airman's wife, Mildred Carter, speak about her experiences as both the wife of an Air Corps aviator and as a pilot herself.

"It was great to have (Carter) speak to us about her experiences," said Spc. Romonica Wade, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Infantry Center. "It really meant a lot to hear from her."

For more information about the Tuskegee sites, call (334) 727-3200.

Columbus air show features historic aircraft

Thunder in Valley brings excitement to tricommunity

Spc. Brian Trapp
Bayonet staff

Columbus' upcoming annual Thunder In the Valley Air Show on March 20 and 21 will have more than just aerial acrobatics and amazing flight demonstrations. It will also give the community a glimpse of aviation history.

The show will feature a number of historic aircraft, including a B-29 — the same type of airplane as the Enola Gay, which dropped the atomic bomb.

People can actually tour the interior of this massive plane, known as the "superfortress," for a small fee.

"(The B-29) is a part of our history," said Greg Allmendinger, chairman of the event. "(This type of plane) dropped the atomic bomb. A chance to see it is a rare occurrence in this area. We never have the opportunity to see it up close except for at an air show."

There will be a variety of other planes there, both American and foreign, including a C-54, the type used in the Berlin airlift, P-51 Mustang, P-47 Thunderbolt and also the Russian Yakovlev or YAK-9, a WWII fighter plane and the modern YAK-55.

The YAK-55 is actually scheduled to do some flying.

"They're some unusual planes. You don't see a lot of them, and their shapes just aren't typical," Allmendinger said.

The aerial demonstrations are left to the newer and more acrobatic planes while the historic planes are seen as static displays because of their age. But at the air show, people will have an opportunity to watch history in operation and even have a chance to ride.

A B-52 "stratofortress" is scheduled to do a fly over, something that even Allmendinger hasn't seen.

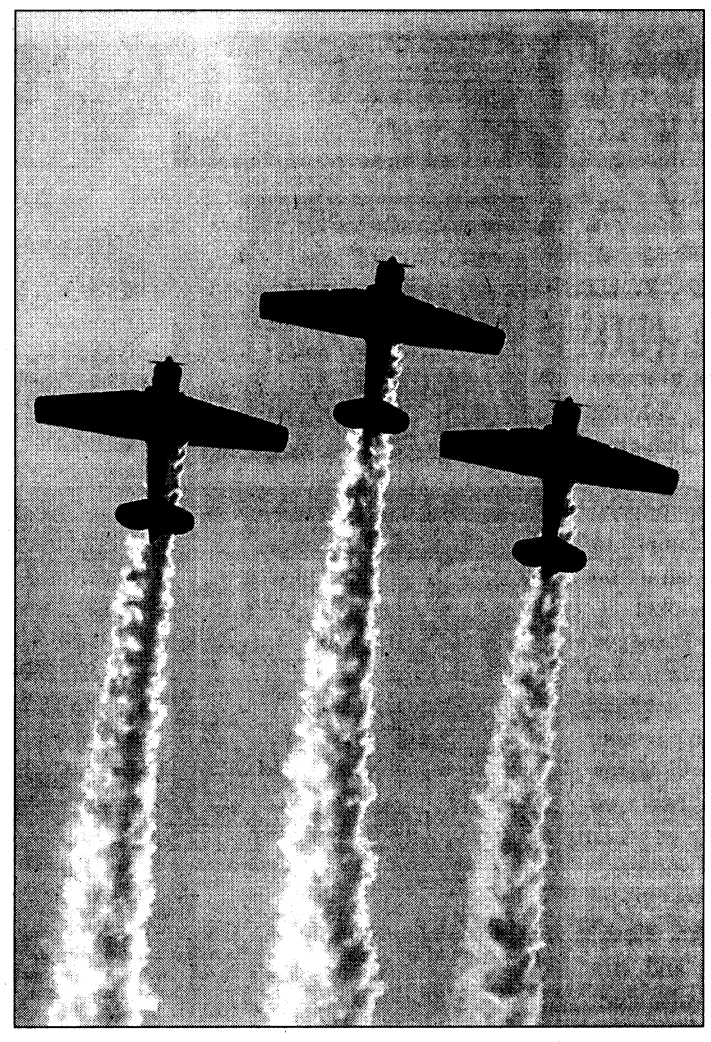
At the air show, people will also have the chance to ride in the UH-1H "Huey" helicopter for about $40.

"Riding in a Huey is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity," he said. "During the Vietnam War, they were used to transport troops and supplies. If you had relatives in the Vietnam War, you could get a feel for what they felt riding in an open aircraft."

The event will feature a combination of old and new aircraft and other displays of military vehicles and airpower.

"If you have the time, you need to go out and see the technology of today compared to the aircraft before the jet engine," said Frank Hanner, Infantry Museum curator.

"I recommend everyone go out there and immerse themselves in the history," he said.



The Thunder In the Valley Air Show is one of Columbus' largest alcohol-free events, and all of the proceeds go to support the Chattahoochee Council of Boy Scouts of America which 11,000 youth in the surrounding community benefit from.

"I think this is one of the best shows we've put together," Allmendinger said.

Tickets at the gate are $10. Soldiers and their families can currently purchase discount tickets ahead of time for just $5.50.

The tickets will be available at Omega Travel in the Main Mall Post Exchange.

For more information, call the Boy Scout office at 327-2634 or visit the event Web site at www.thunderinthevalleyairshow.com.

Soldiers can hitch free rides on military flights

Space A seats provide no-cost travel

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The Army has made it easy for Soldiers to take leave by allowing them to hitch free rides on military flights anywhere in the U.S. or overseas.

The Space Available Program, which allows Soldiers to fly to and from military installations for free, was designed for Soldiers who are on leave and would like a free ride to an airfield at or near their destination, said Rick St. Clair, air traffic controller specialist at Lawson Army Air Field.

"Fort Benning does not have the type of traffic flow that allows Soldiers to frequently fly in and out of post," St. Clair said.

He recommends Soldiers look for Space A flights at military installations that have a larger traffic flow, like Air Force bases.

"Space A flights are for people who have time to wait around for seats available — dependents, retirees or Soldiers on long leave," St. Clair said. "If the passenger can't afford to be late to a destination, they are better off purchasing a ticket on-line."

Family members were once only allowed to fly on Space A flights if their sponsor was flying with them, and only in the U.S. But as of April 1, 2003, the assistant deputy under secretary of defense approved a one-year test which allowed military dependents to fly on Space A flights within the U.S. without their sponsor. The end date of the test program was extended indefinitely Feb. 26, meaning dependents looking to hitch a free ride without their sponsor may still do so.

Soldiers trying to obtain a seat on a Space A flight must be on leave or pass status while waiting for a seat and throughout the time they are flying, St. Clair said.

"Space availability flights depend on where you're going, where you're flying from, and what locations are close to you," St. Clair said.

Space A seats are posted five business days before the flight at the base operations office at the air field. Registration for the flights begins at 8 a.m. the day the flights are posted and the manifest for the flight closes at noon the day before the flight departs.

"Once the passenger arrives at their destination, they have to register for a departing flight to ensure they get a seat for a flight back home," St. Clair said.

Passengers are allowed to carry two bags that weigh no more than 70 pounds and can't pay for excess baggage. No pets are allowed on Space A flights and passengers should bring their own food for flights within the U.S. Food is provided for overseas flights.

Although the flights are free, passengers should be prepared to pay for food and lodging while they wait for a flight.

To find out if an air field in your area offers Space A flights, call your local installation air field base operations office.

For a list of air fields, visit the Space A Web site www.spacea.com. Click on the AMC Pamphlet 24-203 to review all information necessary to sign up for Space A flights and view a list of air fields and their flight schedules.

Also, militaryliving.com provides a list of installations where Space A flights are provided, as well as lodging and car rental arrangements.

Benning ranger named TRADOC instructor of year

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

A 5th Ranger Training Battalion instructor was selected as the company-grade Instructor of the Year by Training and Doctrine Command Feb. 17.

Capt. Timothy L. Gittins was chosen as the Fort Benning Instructor of the Year for 2003 prior to being nominated for the TRADOC title.

Once nominated to the TRADOC competition, instructors must submit a packet including narrative information and a 15- to 20-minute video of the instructor teaching a class, said Renee E. Estaphanos, program manager for the Instructor of the Year Program at TRADOC.

Estaphanos said the packets are reviewed by a preliminary panel. Five finalists in each of the rank categories are selected.

The finalists' packets are then reviewed by a director's panel comprised of Ph.D.s and colonels, she said. Winners are selected based on competence, comprehensiveness, variety, enthusiasm, grammatical and syntactical proficiency, among other criteria.

Winners are presented a TRADOC plaque and a TRADOC commander's letter for their records in addition to any incentive program initiated at the installation level.

Estaphanos personally viewed Gittins' video and said his performance showed he is an exceptional, innovative and remarkable instructor.

"Hopefully," she said, "this leader will continue to train the minds of the best Army in the world."

All this praise and glory hasn't gone to Gittins head, though.

"The Infantry School has some of the best trained, most professional instructors in the Army and they should all take some credit for this," he said.

As an RTB instructor, Gittins helps mold future rangers, who often take the training he and other RTB instructors provide straight onto the battlefield after graduation.

"It is a stark reality that most of the Soldiers we train in the Ranger Training Brigade will be going into combat in the near future," Gittins said. "That fact serves as a reminder that (instructors) have to give them the best training we can provide in order for them to be successful.

"Being assigned to the Ranger Training Brigade and training Soldiers to live up to the standards of the coveted Ranger tab is one of the most profound experiences of my life," he said. "This is what the Infantry is about — closing with and defeating the enemy."

The TRADOC Instructor of the Year Program was created in 1989, Estaphanos said, with the goal of recognizing the accomplishments of TRADOC instructors who contribute directly to the mission of training Soldiers to fight and win.

Post leader hangs up his boots

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Col. Walter Holton always told people who asked — "I'm stayin' for 30 or until I get fired."

Well, it hasn't quite been 30, and he's definitely not being fired, but Holton has decided "it's time to move on."

After 29 years and 23 days in the Army, the former TRADOC System Manager-Soldier hung up his boots after a retirement ceremony in front of Infantry Hall Feb. 27.

Holton, 50, always knew he would become a Soldier — it was a dream rooted in family honor and a little Hollywood pizzazz.

His father served in the 1940s, "a significantly different Army." His older brother served in the Vietnam War and his younger brother enlisted shortly before he did and retired as a sergeant first class.

Meanwhile, television series like Combat and Rat Patrol and movies like Green Beret made him long to "start barking orders" throughout his years at Florida A&M University, where he enrolled in ROTC and anxiously awaited his commission as an infantry lieutenant.

When it finally came in 1975, Holton was ready. He headed off to Fort Benning with his wife, Deborah, in tow.

He found himself in an "uncertain career in a post-Vietnam Army," facing "rampant drug use and blatant racism." Despite its grim problems, the Army was also entering into a period of resurrection at this point, Holton said, improving leadership and enforcing strict principles.

Those leaders and principles had a lasting impact on Holton over the years.

"God knows that I am not the sharpest knife in the drawer," he said. "But because of his wisdom, he graced me and my journey with mentors to sharpen and guide me to journey's end."

Holton

As he was shaped and guided by the hands of such great leaders as Gen. John Hendrix, Lt. Gen. John LeMoyne and Gen. Barry McCaffrey, Holton trotted the globe, picking up missions in every corner of the world — Grenada, Honduras, Korea, the Sinai, Iraq, Croatia, Macedonia — the list goes on.

And he loved it.

"I enjoyed being a Soldier — going to the field, the deployments," Holton said.

One of the most "prominent moments" of Holton's career came when he was selected to deploy the first combat team, Task Force Able Sentry, to the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia under the operational command of the United Nations.

Another claim to fame was Holton's role in TSM-Soldier, where Holton "believed and set the tone ... in a strong work ethic, focused on Soldiers, training and readiness," said Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley.

It was Holton, Freakley said, who energized the program — a program that saved lives on the battefields of Afghanistan and Iraq.

"When no one was too interested because it's a small program and not a big Army program, (Holton) was an advocate, saying, 'You know, Soldiers going into combat oughta have this equipment called interceptor body armor,'" Freakley recalled. "And today's Soldiers are surviving attacks in Iraq and Afghanistan because of (Holton's) persistence to get Soldiers the right kit to wear in harm's way and survive the outcome of the fight."

But it was simple for Holton, whose philosophy has remained the same over the years — "Mission first, but Soldiers always."

"I've always had a very strong love for Soldiers," he said. "They got me where I am today, and I give them all the recognition."

Well, maybe not all the recognition. As much as he has loved his years in the Army, it came at a price — one he couldn't have afforded without his wife.

Holton said if it hadn't been for her loving support and ability to put up with his "long hours, frequent traveling and bad attitude," he wouldn't have lasted a day on his own. While he led on the battlefield, Deborah led on the homefront, raising the couple's three children.

Deborah has been a trooper just like her husband, Freakley said.

"She certainly made her mark on Fort Benning, where she coordinated more than 2,000 volunteers for this post for the last several years," Freakley said. "Anything done by a volunteer, Deb Holton was in the middle of it, leading, guiding, loving, mentoring, coaching along the way."

Despite the bittersweet sentiments that come along with his retirement, Holton said it's time. It's time to go back to school and do fun things — painting, photography, fishing. It's time to be with his family for good.

"I'll probably work, but I have no intention of making work a priority," Holton said. "I'm going to enjoy my life, my wife and my grandbaby."

WHINSEC hosts academic seminar

Spc. Adrian Lugo
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation hosted its third annual academic seminar, "Military, Media and Non-Governmental Organizations Conference," at Ridgway Hall Feb. 20.

The conference focused on "military operations other than war," addressing disaster assistance and peacekeeping issues that require the interaction of military, police and civilian organizations in a multi-national context.

Two panels discussed issues relating to their organizations with an audience of primarily U.S. and foreign students of WHINSEC's Command and General Staff Officer Course.

The seminar was aimed at preparing students to meet the new challenges facing the military in the 21st century, said Donald Harrington, WHINSEC dean of Academics and International Affairs.

Spc. Adrian Lugo

Col. Richard Downie, WHINSEC commandant, welcomed the panelists and remarked on the institute's goal.

"WHINSEC is dedicated to educating the future military, police and civilian defense leaders of our hemisphere to respond to new challenges," Downie said. "This conference is one component within a rigorous program of training in democracy, human rights and operational skills that provides our students with the ability to succeed in a changing environment."

Presenters included Jarrod Hoffman, Catholic Relief Services; Col. David McWilliams, U.S. Southern Command; Carol Rosenberg, Miami Herald; retired Lt. Gen. Ed Soyster; Kay Reed, Albany Herald (Ga.); and Robert Buckman, University of Louisiana at Lafayette, La., Journalism Department.

Hoffman, McWilliams and Rosenberg formed the first panel of the day, addressing the role of the military, media and NGOs in disaster assistance.

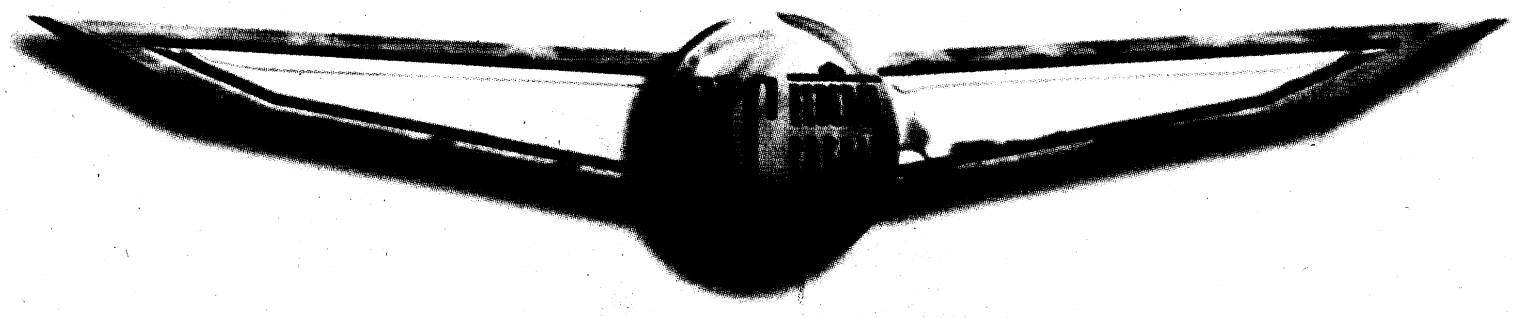
After lunch, Soyster, Reed and Buckman discussed peacekeeping operations and how the military, NGOs and media interact.

Each panelist made a 20-minute presentation, then fielded audience questions and comments, which ranged from, "How does the media maintain journalistic objectivity in an embedded scenario?" to comments on how the military can best facilitate NGOs and the media in times of crisis.

Harrington said he felt the question and answer session underlined the need for frankness and honesty between media and military, no matter what the outcome of a particular story.

"While the military might take short-term pain under these (unfavorable) circumstances, it would maintain the precious asset of credibility," he said.

Panelist Robert Buckman seemed to share a similar outlook.



"The questions and comments we've heard as a panel have been very thought provoking ... I hope with more discussions like these, open and honest bonds are created between (military, media and non-governmental) groups," Buckman said.

Shaw, Tri-Star tests block scheduling

Contractors try to reduce work order wait time

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Talk about your "HoneyDo" list. The folks at Tri-Star and Shaw, the companies contracted to maintain Fort Benning's 4,000 family housing units, respond to nearly 50,000 calls each year. That comes to about 12 calls per house, or one call each month for every single home on Fort Benning.

Add to that their other responsibilities, like tree trimming and road maintenance, and it's no small wonder Shaw and Tri-Star officials are steadily looking for ways to make their companies run more smoothly and efficiently.

Toward that end, they're trying to educate their customers on the ins and outs of work order procedures and the best way to win at the waiting game.

"Our concern and the contractors' concern is quality and efficient service. That's the bottom line," said Ron Shehane, the chief of business management for Fort Benning's Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics. "Saving the customer time saves the companies' money. Everybody wins."

Tri-Star, which maintains the homes in Davis Hill, Bouton Heights, McGraw Manor and Perkins Place, and Shaw, which maintains the remainder of Main Post, Indianhead Terrace, Custer Terrace and Upatoi, prioritize work orders into three categories: emergencies — those that pose a safety hazard; priority — those that cause the family inconvenience, such as a clogged toilet, but do not pose a threat to the residents or structure; and non-priority, such as cosmetic problems or small nuisances.

Tri-Star, which operates 12 hours a day, six days a week, and Shaw, which operates Monday through Friday, are required to respond to emergency work orders within two hours, day or night. Priority work orders are given up to 15 days, though the average wait time for both companies is less than five working days. Non-priority work orders can take as long as 30 days.

In an attempt to minimize wait times, the companies have instituted an efficiency study — a trial run, if you will — to see just how much time they save by scheduling "block appointments." The secret to success lies in four little words, said Doug Ledford, the DFEL contract representative for Shaw.

Melissa House

Otis Larry removes old plaster to start a bathroom renovation.

"'I'd like an appointment.' That's all they have to say. That's the key," Ledford said.

Problem is, Fort Benning residents aren't aware of the new appointment policy, something they've been clamoring for four years, long before Tri-Star or Shaw came into the picture last year.

"If you just call with a problem, you'll be given a work order number, and someone will show up at your door within the time allotted," Ledford said. "But with this plan, if you call, state your problem and ask for an appointment, the Shaw housing shop will call you back to set up an appointment and tell you what day the (worker) will be there and whether it's morning or afternoon."

Residents who call Tri-Star at 689-5400, or Shaw at 545-2135, and request an appointment, should give alternative telephone numbers whenever possible, be it a cell phone or office phone. The resident must be home the morning or afternoon of the appointment or have someone 18 or older remain at the home until the workers leave.

If the resident does not answer the door, the contractor will leave a notice to reschedule.

If Shaw customers have not received a response to their work order call within the time allotted, they should call the company's Quality Control Satisfaction Line at 545-6231. They must leave a message and include the work order number.

If they still haven't heard a response after three working days, they should call Ken Hankins, the chief of Family Housing, at 545-3803.

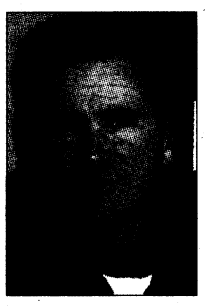
Tri-Star also maintains its own quality control. Customers who have not heard from a repairman within the time allotted should dial the same number they first called, 689-5400, and reference their work order number. If, after three working days, they still have heard no response, they should contact the Family Housing Office at 545-6191.

"Traditionally, we've wasted a lot of our time and the customers' showing up at their door, and they're not there, and we have to return again," Shehane said. "We hope this (study) will prove efficient and save everybody a little time and aggravation."

Officers' Club welcomes new manager

Club gets new blood, fresh ideas

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor



There's a new face at Fort Benning's Officers' Club — one you might want to get to know. He's the man behind the action, the one who makes sure you get the bang for your buck, the one creating new programs, ensuring quality products and services and looking to see your face in the crowd.

Of course, Mark Smith, the O' Club's new manager, is just getting started. But with only two and a half months on the job, he's already got the ball rolling.

"We're here to do our job and provide patrons with a top-notch product," said the Florida State University graduate, whose resumé includes hospitality service at Auburn University and Callaway Gardens.

That means focusing on three main areas, Smith said: Employee morale, club membership and what the membership's looking for.

Great service comes from happy employees, and to that end, Smith has instituted quarterly luncheons to recognize employees' birthdays and jobs well done.

Smith

Meanwhile, although membership in the club is "good" right now, "you can always do better," Smith said.

"The O' Club council has really been pushing membership, promoting it and setting it up for success," Smith said. "We want the club to do well."

And what better way to do that than to offer the members new, exciting programs, including those they ask to see.

Smith has hosted "brainstorming meetings" with members and spouses to come up with new activities — everything from sockhops to bingo nights to cooking classes and wine dinners are on the list of things in the works.

"The sky's the limit here," Smith said. "We want to try new things and bring the fun back."

> "The sky's the limit here. We want to try new things and bring the fun back."
> Mark Smith
> Officers' Club manager

Another new way to do business includes unit's "sponsoring" the club's frequent brunches, which are open to everyone — not just O' Club members..

"The sponsor helps us advertise. They get the word out and get the majority of their people to go to the brunch," Smith said.

Sponsorship is intended to get new people out to the club, providing Soldiers who might otherwise not know about the club a little exposure.

Despite the bright horizon, Smith said there are always a few "bumps in the road."

Some challenges the club faces are competing with downtown organizations and adjusting the club's prices without losing its members.

"We have to increase the price to offset the cost of doing business these days," Smith said.

It's a necessary evil, he said, but it doesn't prevent the club from offering better prices than off-post establishments.

In fact, the club has added a bonafied chef and a food and beverage manager to its staff to ensure "higher standards to go along with higher prices," he said.

"We just want our membership to be happy (with the club)," he said.

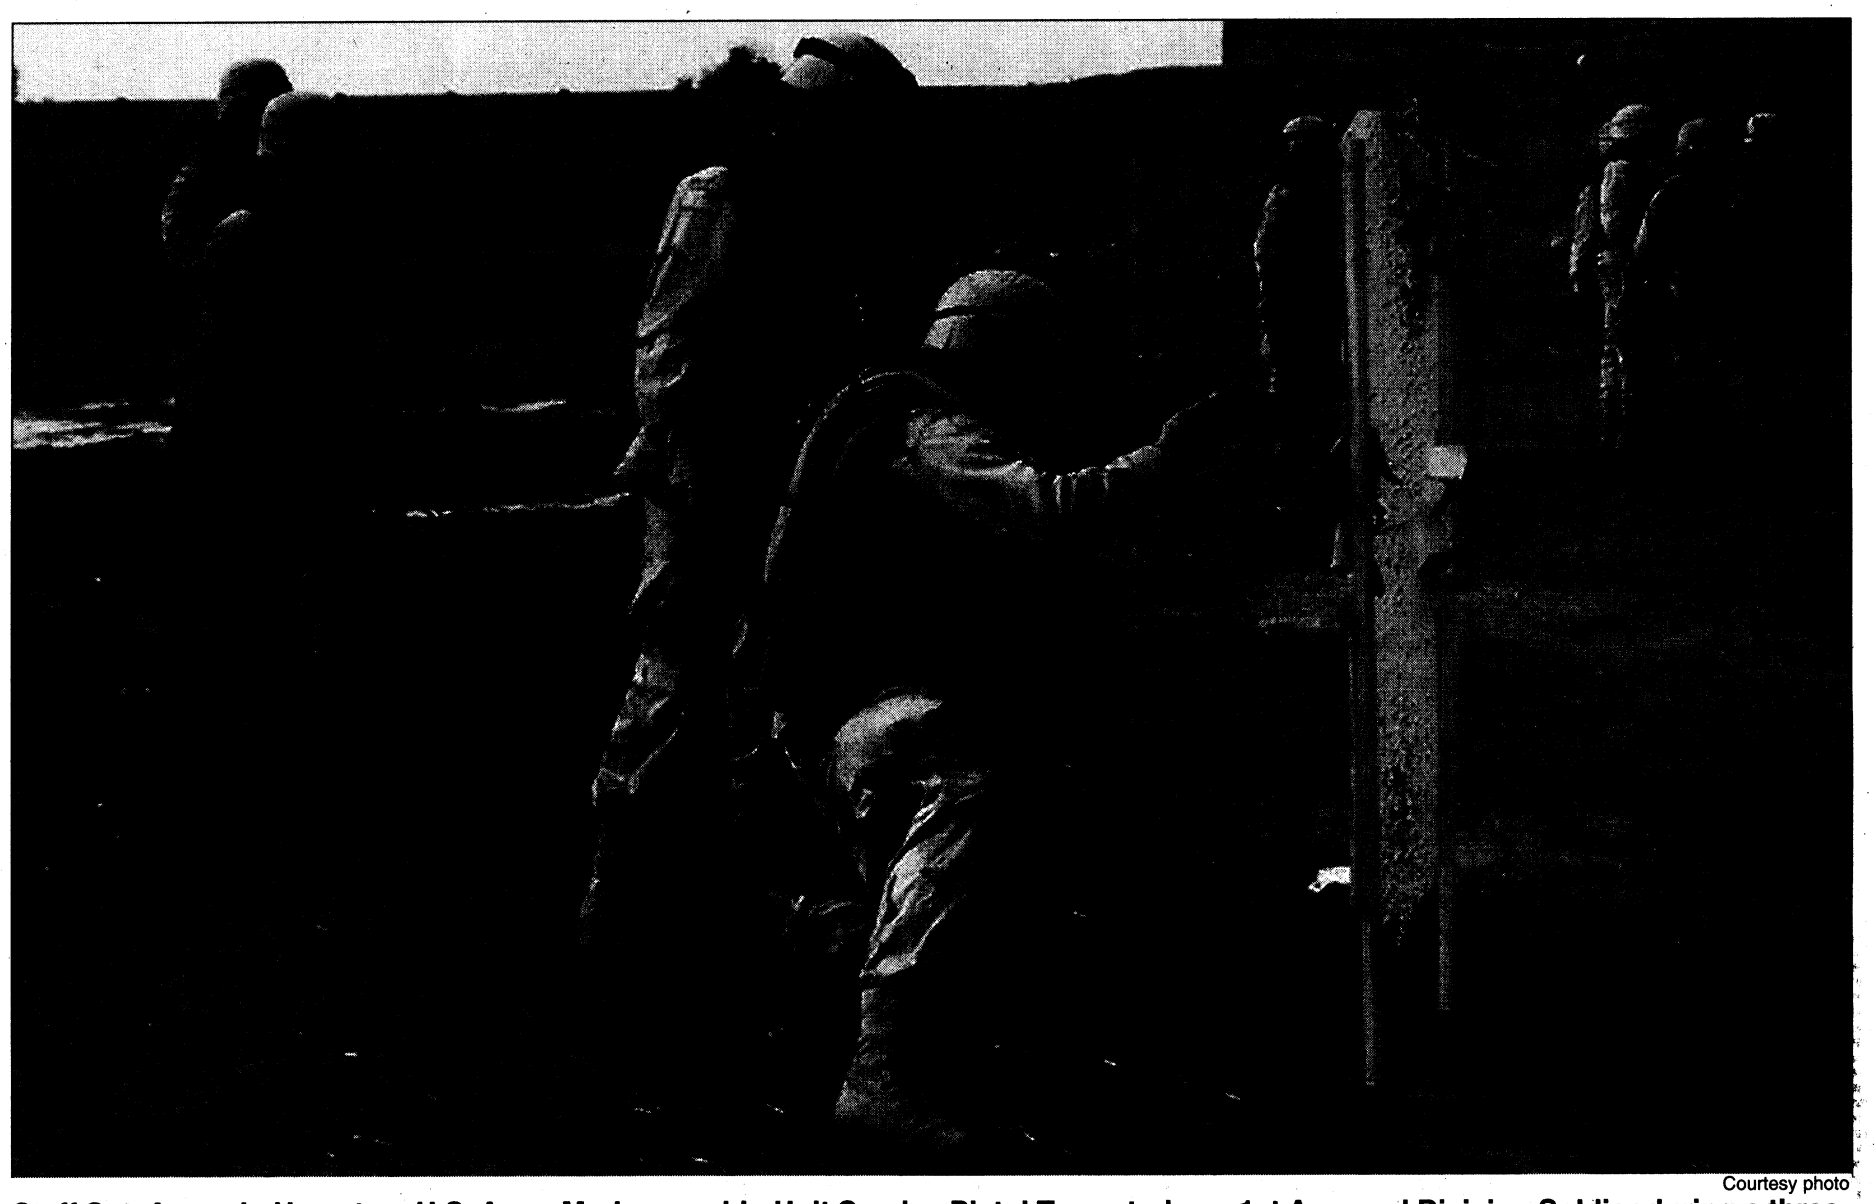
USAMU shooters return from Iraq

USAMU shooters train Soldiers in Iraq

Paula J. Pagan
USAMU Public Affairs

Shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Pistol Team spent more than a month in Iraq training more 250 Soldiers of the 1st Armored Division in combat weapons marksmanship.



The shooters provided an introduction to close quarters marksmanship at six of the division's forward operating bases throughout Iraq.

USAMU Sgts. 1st Class Charles E. Gibbs and Roger C. Jacobson, Staff Sgts. Aaron L. Hampton and Thomas A. Rose and Spc. Sean P. Watson left Georgia Jan. 14 on their way to Baghdad and returned to Fort Benning Feb. 20.

The nine three-day train-the-trainer marksmanship classes consisted of two 10-hour days and one 14-hour day of training, including a night fire. The training consisted of five hours of classroom instruction, followed by 24 hours of hands-on training on the range. Training included instruction on the M-4 Carbine, M-16A2 and M-16A4 rifles, the M-9 pistol, the M-240B machine gun and the M-249 squad automatic weapon.

"The training went amazingly well," Hampton said. "We have been overwhelmed by the response to the instruction. We were surprised at how receptive the Soldiers were to the training. High performance shooting in urban environments is outside the box; we expected some resistance.

"The Soldiers commented positively on all aspects of the training," Hampton said. "They felt the most beneficial aspect of the training was the night fire and the vehicle live fire. All Soldiers were excited about the shooting while moving and commented that the ballistics test greatly increased their understanding of the capabilities of their weapon system."

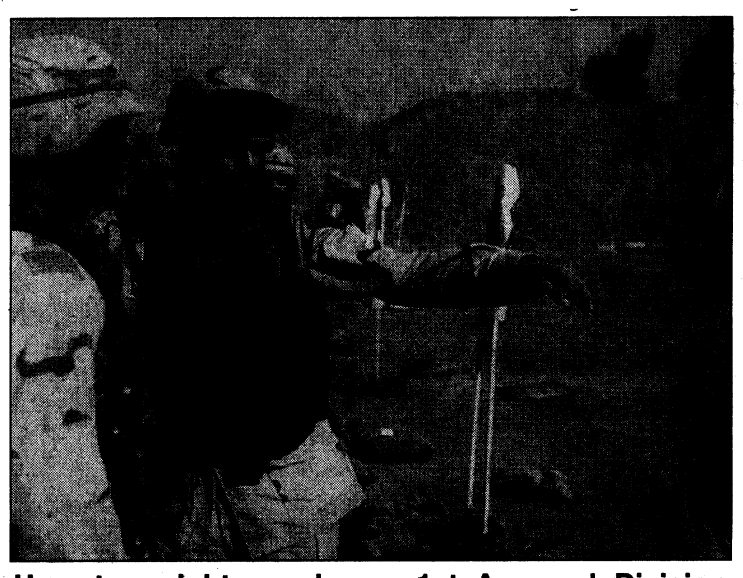
Hampton added that the USAMU marksmen also experienced some hostile action while in Iraq.



"We encountered three roadside improvised explosive devices, two mortar attacks and two rocket attacks," Hampton said.

"The closest was a 127 mm rocket that exploded 37 meters from our tent," he said.

The Service Pistol shooters commented that the 1st Armored Div. troops were not the only Soldiers who learned something from the training.

"We increased our ability to train effectively," Hampton said. "We learned a lot about the current situations and threats. This has helped us update our course and training program. This was great training for both us and the 1st Armored Division Soldiers. It would be great if we get a chance to go back to train the 1st Cavalry Division once they get settled."

Combatives give Soldiers confidence

3rd Brigade troops hone warrior skills

Spc. David Foley

Seventy-eight Soldiers from the 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, attended the U.S. Army Combatives School last week to help prepare the unit for future operations.

The brigade, which recently returned from operations in Iraq has seen a need for hand-to-hand combatives training that will help them deal with working in urban environments, so they sent two Soldiers from each company to the school.

The nature of missions being conducted in Iraq right now requires Soldiers to have close contact with the civilian populace, where a lack of combatives skills can be a major concern, said Maj. Jon Segars, 3rd Brigade training and operations officer.

The modern Army combatives program was developed using lessons learned from past programs as well as feedback from the operational force.

Soldiers are taught to dominate opponents by seizing the initiative in a fight rather than reacting to enemy attacks as most civilian self defense courses teach.

Sgt. 1st Class Jeremy Brown, a Combatives School instructor, said the school is using feedback from Soldiers who were deployed to Iraq, Afghanistan and the Balkans through after action interviews to further develop the curriculum. For example, the Soldiers felt they weren't prepared to deal with large numbers of detainees.

In response to the feedback, the school developed a generic training module that teaches Soldiers about escalation of force guidelines similar to those used by police officers, and ways to be proactive in detaining and controlling possible threats.

"The same Soldiers who raced across the desert and captured Baghdad almost immediately switched to stability and support operations" Larsen said. "Our training plan must teach soldiers to handle both types of operational environments."

The Combatives School program is considerably better than other military programs which are now defunct, because it teaches Soldiers to assess the situation and act on it rather than wait for the aggressor to attack, forcing the Soldier to react, Brown said.

The course teaches Soldiers to fight, but it also has an indirect effect on the Soldiers, he said.

It also instills aggressiveness and confidence in the Soldier and embodies what warrior ethos represents, he said.

Sgt. 1st Class Matt Larsen, the school's NCOIC, said combatives is one of the warrior tasks mentioned in the Soldier's Creed and is one of the primary tools for the warrior ethos initiative.

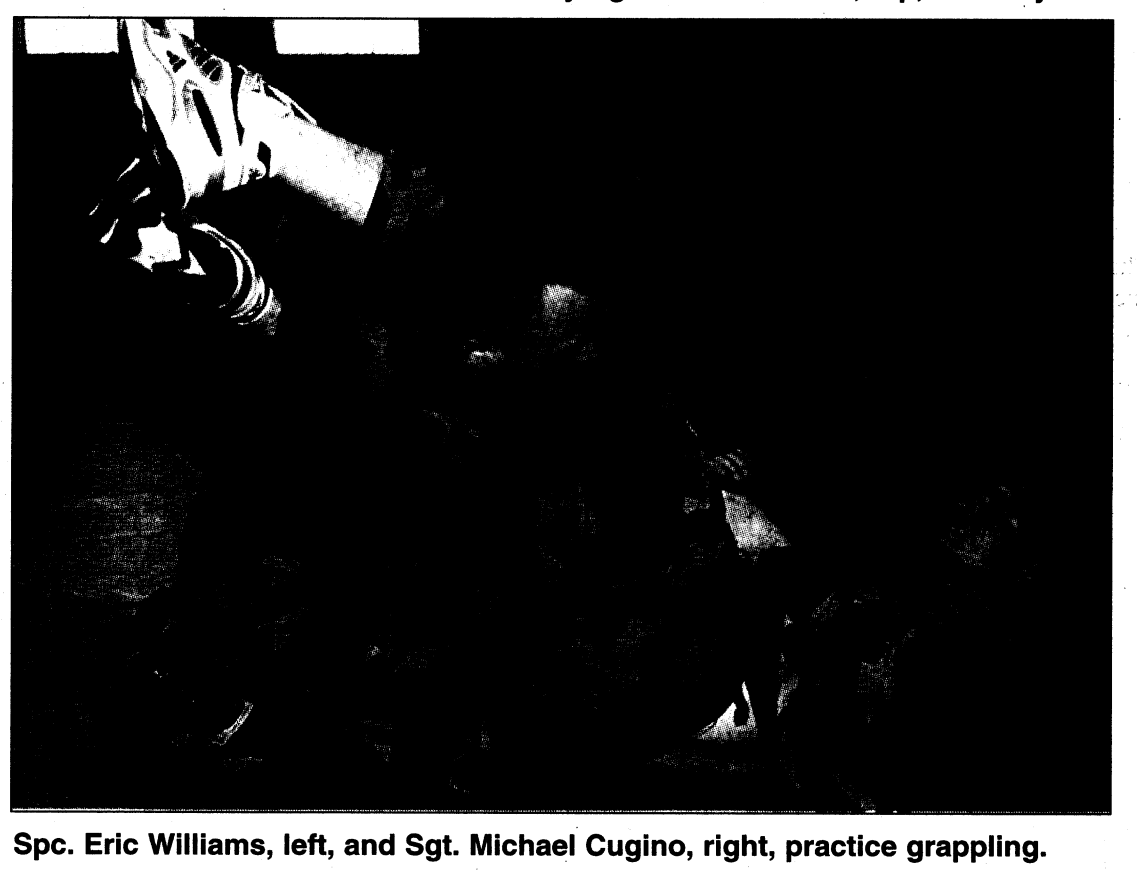
Brown said combatives training gives Soldiers a lot more than just the ability to fight — it helps them to remain calm under stressful situations, enabling them to develop a course of action which could save lives on the battlefield.

"When a Soldier in the class is caught in a choke hold, his first reflex might be to panic, which would lead to his defeat," Brown said. "But if the Soldier remains calm and develops a course of action, he will most likely escape the hold."

Brown said that ability to remain calm directly relates to the battlefield.

If a squad is pinned down by enemy fire and the Soldiers begin to panic, the squad will most likely be defeated, but if they are able to stay calm and develop a plan, they have a much better chance, he said.

The Soldiers who are attending the class are scheduled to return for level-two qualification in the near future, which will enable them to teach the core combatives tasks to the rest of the brigade.



Segars said the whole brigade should have a basic understanding of U.S. Army combatives within the next 12 months, increasing their readiness and capabilities for future operations.

AER: Kicks off Fort Benning's fund raising campaign

"The campaign is only two months long, so it's a bit of a sprint," Freakley said. "But it's over four pay periods. You can get out there. Let's go make that goal."

Another goal for the installation is 100 percent notification.

"We want 100 percent notification," Freakley said. "We want to ensure every single member who can contribute has the opportunity to. We want 100 percent — even if that means calling a Soldier on TDY, we need to do it."

"We don't look to specific Soldiers to give a high dollar amount," Deane said. "If you have a Soldier who gives more, we will accept that, too, but even the smallest donations count. They all add up. Each year we conduct the campaign, we achieve the goal.

"I believe this installation will come through and meet and exceed its goal and do better than we did last year," Deane said.

> "We want ensure every single member who can contribute has the opportunity to. We want 100 percent — even if that means calling a Soldier on TDY..."
> Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley
> Commanding general

AER is a private, nonprofit organization incorporated in 1942 to provide emergency financial assistance to Soldiers.

The money Fort Benning contributes is funneled into a central bank, and from there, all contributions are consolidated and made available worldwide.

"One of our Army values is selfless service, and this is an opportunity to (demonstrate that)," Freakley said. "You get a lot more out of life from giving rather than receiving. It's like at Christmas — you feel better giving your kids something than when you get your presents."

For more information about AER, see your unit AER representative or call 545-2536 or 545-7517.

kinds of problems," said Glen Hall, industrial engineer with the master planning branch of DFEL. "Over the years, the Army changed space requirements, and the old ones don't meet the standard.

"(New barracks will) improve the quality of life for Soldiers, so hopefully we can retain and recruit more and happier Soldiers," he said.

The Kelley Hill barracks will include two battalion headquarters, classroom buildings and a brigade headquarters building.

"This should finish up the barracks and headquarters need on Kelley Hill," Hall said.

Construction for a hazardous cargo loading pad and associated taxiway at Lawson Army Air Field for simultaneous loading of two aircraft with ammunition, "hot loaded" track vehicles and other hazardous cargo will cost, $3.85 million. After the air strip's extension, the original loading area isn't useable while the air strip is in use due to restrictions on distances from taxiing aircraft.

"Because of archeological and environment constraints with the air strip extension, we sort of painted ourselves into a corner," Miller said. "The new apron will be very big. We'll have the space to load two C-5s at once and have a direct tank trail to the loading pad from ammo storage."

Until the new apron is completed, the air field has a waiver, but the project needs to be built to certify LAAF as an aerial port of embarkation and departation, said John Campbell, air field manager. "Now when I have a unit that moves out with hot cargo, I would have to shut down the air field."

The fitness center, priced at $18.5 million, will be outfitted with a pool, a number of basketball courts and seating for 1,600, with a headquarters and classroom for the Army Physical Fitness School.

Currently, an inadequate pre-Korean War vintage field house and four brigade gymnasiums, along with a converted 200-man classroom, are providing the services. Existing facilities are small and dispersed, and there's not enough space available to support the physical training activities.

The construction for the consolidated health clinic, projected to cost $6.6 million, will solve some of the issues with the current medical services provided to Soldiers at two separate 1950s era troop medical centers and one 1970s era aviation medicine clinic on the Fort Benning installation, according to the project proposal.

"The health clinic will provide care and services they don't currently have," Hall said. "The other buildings will be returned to post and used for other things."

This project releases these three antiquated facilities from the medical inventory and consolidates their functions into one new location, providing improved health care treatment to Fort Benning Soldiers and their dependents in a cost-effective, efficient manner appropriate to modern medical practice.

Immigrant: U.S. Soldiers become U.S. citizens

Soldiers for their service.

He told the audience about Staff Sgt. Jorge Nunez, an immigrant from Honduras who earned a Bronze Star for his service in Iraq with 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment. Nunez was raised by his grandmother, who died while he was deployed.

Aguirre spoke to Nunez in Spanish saying, "Your sacrifice in service to this great nation is a tribute to the memory of your grandmother."

He told the 72 Soldiers, 19 airmen, four sailors and two Marines, representing 38 nations across the globe, that the country is behind them and completely supports them.

"You are carrying out a just and noble cause, for freedom will triumph over terror," he said.

Following the oath, Aguirre presented each the service members with their naturalization certificates, and Rosemary Melville, Atlanta District Director of the USCIS, handed each a small American flag.

Some of the new citizens went through with little fanfare. Others, like Spc. Serafina Lily Bermudez, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 36th Engineer Group, had a crowd from her unit in attendance to cheer her on.

To the cry of "Seahorse," the unit motto, Bermudez accepted her certificate and flag, as her "fan club" clapped.

Bermudez, a former Mexican national, received hugs and roses from her siblings, who traveled to Fort Benning for the ceremony.

"This is a big event," said Rose Bermudez Luczak. "She's the baby of the family. We're very proud of her."

Her brother, Pedro Bermudez, traveled from Dallas.

"This is wonderful," he said, "for the Soldiers who are willing to give their lives to get their citizenship."

On July 3, 2002, President George W. Bush signed an Executive Order giving legal permanent residents actively serving the U.S. military immediate eligibility to apply for naturalization.

According to the USCIS fact sheet, more than 13,000 military personnel have requested expedited citizenship, and the CIS processes more than 40 applications each day.

Lawanda Earley, a human resources assistant in the Personnel Actions Branch, said she sees about 30 Soldiers each month who have naturalization questions.

"Once a day, someone comes in," Earley said.

She then gives them all the paperwork, including personal forms, and forms that go to the Soldiers' commanders and personnel offices.

The good news, Earley said, is that the process is about twice as fast as it was last year.

"It's now about 6 months to a year," she said.

Whether the process took 6 months or a year, the smiles were all the same Feb. 27 as Soldiers like Spc. Purnel Jeanpierre, with 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regt., and formerly from Haiti, received bear hugs from relatives and friends alike.

"It's a great day," Jeanpierre said.

leader. "I just have one more formation, and it will be all over."

Soldiers' children were waiting in the crowd, too.

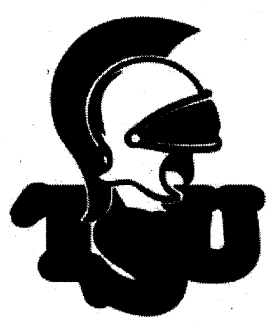
"I'm happy my mom is coming back, because I missed her and I was waiting too long," said Maliki Smalls, 5. "I'm going to stay with her. I came from Columbia, South Carolina, to see my mommy. We're gonna have a party with her."

"It's harder for a mother to leave her children," said Peggy Smalls, Maliki's grandmother. "She missed both birthdays, Christmas and Thanksgiving. It's been really difficult, and sometimes there was no communication.

"Her youngest was only 6 months old when she left, so they have to learn each other all over again."

When the crowd was finally able to see their Soldiers, Staff Sgt. Leticia Smalls just held her children.

"It's great to be back," she said. "I'm going to go home and see my son's first basketball game."



"All my Soldiers came back. That's my definition of success," said Capt. Kevin Hamilton, company commander.

"It's really hard to explain, what it's like to be back," he said. "It's a great thing, something all commanders try to do. It gives a great sense of pride and accomplishment."

Now, the Soldiers are taking their time to get back to their old lives while they catch up with their families and return to old routines.

"Words couldn't describe how excited we are," Thoemke said. "We didn't even get to see him off because it happened so quick."

Post officials address AFAP issues

Symposium tackles quality of life concerns

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley asked delegates to "scrape away the bureaucracy and tell us the real deal" at last week's Army Family Action Plan Symposium. They did just that, passionately.

Among the many changes delegates clamored for were better customer service, improved health care and quarters maintenance and a more concise, clear discipline plan at Faith Middle School.

"You have set the azimuth here for the year ahead," said Col. Rick Riera, Fort Benning's garrison commander, after representatives from eight delegations out-briefed commanders and representatives from every post directorate Feb. 27 after two days of deliberation. "You've told us what's important to you, what we need to do to improve the quality of life here at home and across the Army. You have given us a focus and a mission."

The symposium brought together volunteers, more than 100, from every demographic — Soldiers, active, Guard and Reserve, civilians, family members, retirees and teens — for two days of roundtable discussion, and often debate, about the issues and concerns of the Fort Benning community.

Delegates brought issue forms submitted by post residents and employees during the two months prior to the symposium.

The results of the annual Fort Benning AFAP will be forwarded to the 20th annual Armywide AFAP in Washington D.C. in November, said Sarah Hertig, Army Family Team Building coordinator. Until that time, post officials will "work" local issues.

Freakley set the tone early on in the final day of the symposium, plainly stating what he expected from the proceedings and participants.

"It's been my experience that there are two kinds of people at an (after action review)," he said. "There is the excuse-based group ... and the responsibility-based group. We're going to be a responsibility-based group.

"When these issues come up, somebody's going to say, 'Hey, that's my responsibility,' or the commanding general — that's me — will tell you whose responsibility it is."

To everyone's delight, Freakley drove home his point after Ali Palmer, the spokesman for the Consumer Services delegation, named the group's number one issue, the need for continuity in banking as Soldiers travel from post to post.

"Now ask whose mission it is," Freakley said to Palmer, who looked momentarily confused. Rehearsals for the out-brief included no such instructions.

"Say, 'Sir, whose mission is that?" Freakley repeated.

"Sir, whose mission is that?" Palmer asked, grinning.

The room was silent for a split second before Riera spoke.

"Sir, that's my responsibility," he said, and the crowd cheered.

The rest of the out-brief followed suit, with one spokesman after another listing their delegation's top three issues and commanders responding in kind.

At one point, after the need for additional funding and allowances was broached for the third time, Freakley urged delegates to find solutions within the existing budget.

"I am not for it at all," he said, when the Family Services spokesman recommended the Montgomery GI Bill be passed to a dependent upon a Soldier's death.

"The Army budget is $100 billion dollars," Freakley said. "Sixty percent of that is pay and allowances. We cannot continue to heap onto that or we will not have a trained and ready Army."

"We have to find ways to work smarter with what we've got," he said.

Riera reiterated the message later, when poor customer service and efficiency was blamed on the need for more staffing.

"Additional resources are not the solution," he said. "They're simply not available. We live in hard times, but the community will be better served with better service than with more services."

Housing, Relocation and Employment delegates asked for immediate attention to the maintenance of quarters, insisting that the construction of new homes under the Residential Community Initiative, slated to start in 2006 and take up to 10 years, should not be used an excuse for neglecting the current condition of quarters.

"We think 10 years is too long to wait," said Karen Moody, who spoke for the delegation. "We think Soldiers deserve a nice place to live now. They deserve the keys to a clean, bug-free place."

Freakley acknowledged the need and assured the group, "We are not going to sit and wait on a promise. I'm heated about this. There are people out there paying money to get their house cleaned when they leave, and then the next person comes in and says it's not being done."

Besides prioritizing issues, delegates were asked to name the three most important services on post and list strengths and weaknesses in the areas of mobilization, deployment and family readiness.

The hospital, commissary and housing were named the three most important services. Family readiness groups were listed repeatedly as both a strength and a weakness, depending on each group's perspective, and the Family Services delegation listed the need for FRG leader certification among their top three issues.

Improved communications, i.e. e-mail, teleconferences and phone calls, were repeatedly listed as a strength, though "snail mail" made the weak list. Deployment "clubs" and counseling services in post schools got two thumbs up, while the lack of support in off-post schools was noted as a weakness.

The spokesman for the Reserve and Guard delegation — a first for the Fort Benning AFAP — listed an increase in the support for Reservists and Guardsman from civilian employers as a great strength. Lack of support and information for the families of activated Guardsmen and Reservists continues to be a problem.

The teen delegation, which met for one day only, asked for a coffee shop and paintball court and the revision of Faith's 20-point discipline plan.

"We think 20 points is way too much," said Matt Charlton, the group's spokesman. "We think reducing it to five would motivate teachers to enforce it, too."

"When the students are asking for more discipline, you know it's a serious matter," said Riera. "We'll move out on that quickly and work with the school system to come up with something that works for everyone."

As for the coffee shop, Riera heartily agreed it would be an asset to Fort Benning.

"I'm a latte man myself," he joked.

And the paintball court?

"No problem — we'll put it at Riverside," said Freakley, referring to his residence on Main Post.

Freakley ended the symposium with a call to arms.

"It's easier to critique than it is to create. Now it's time to get creative," he said.

"We've got to be mature and take responsibility. We've got plenty of work ahead. Let's get going."

CLOSER LOOK

Of the 542 AFAP issues submitted to the Department of the Army in the last 20 years, 82 have resulted in legislative changes, 130 in policy changes, and 140 in programs or service improvements. On Fort Benning, the renovation of the Briant Wells Fitness Center and implementation of uniform school hours were a result of last year's AFAP. The top three issues in the eight work groups at last week's AFAP Symposium were:

- Teen Support:
  1. Faith Middle School's 20-step discipline plan is too complicated to be practically enforced. Delegates recommended reducing it to five steps.
  2. Teens want a place to play paintball and a supply shop nearby.
  3. The teens want a coffee house with a bookstore.
- Consumer Services:
  1. Delegates would like the Army to contract with a reputable national bank to establish continuity for Soldiers as they move from post to post.
  2. On-post libraries need to update their materials and automate services.
  3. The process whereby baggers are hired at the Fort Benning Commissary. Delegates would like to see a waiting list established and made public.
- Family Services:
  1. Exempt military families from school zoning restrictions.
  2. Family readiness group leaders should be certified within 60 days of assuming role.
  3. The Montgomery GI Bill should be transferred to a dependent upon the death of a Soldier.
- Housing, Relocation and Employment:
  1. Adjust the Basic Housing Allowance incrementally based on family size.
  2. Improve the condition of quarters at the time they're signed over.
  3. Improve customer service at the Housing Office.
- Force Support:
  1. Implement a policy allowing Soldiers to sell more accrued leave time.
  2. Control traffic congestion at the PX and Commissary.
  3. Post caution lights at Riverwalk crosswalks.
- Medical and Dental:
  1. Increase medical funding.
  2. Establish an acute-care clinic for after hours.
  3. Expand Tricare Prime to include chiropractic care.
- Reserve and National Guard:
  1. Increase awareness and education for installation staff.
  2. Designate a personnel and finance expert within the active command and unify active-duty, reserve and guard personnel and finance information.
  3. Require all installation AFAPs to include a Reserve and Guard delegation.
- Retirees:
  1. Provide equal compensation to dentists for retirees and active duty.
  2. Provide written information at pharmacy to tell retirees how to get medication when it is unavailable at the pharmacy.
  3. Increase provider compensation.

Benning schools celebrate 'Seussentennial'

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"You're never too old, too wacky, too wild, to pick up a book and read to a child."
Theodor Seuss Geisel, a.k.a Dr. Seuss

And certainly not on that greatest of days — that of the Seussentenial.

It's a worldwide celebration, and one that is not overlooked in the schools of Fort Benning. From the elementary schools to Faith Middle School, the spirit of Seuss was alive and well Tuesday.

Known as Dr. Seuss Day to the students who celebrate it, the Seussentenial marked the great author's 100th birthday and called attention to Read Across America, a program created by the National Education Association to motivate children to read.

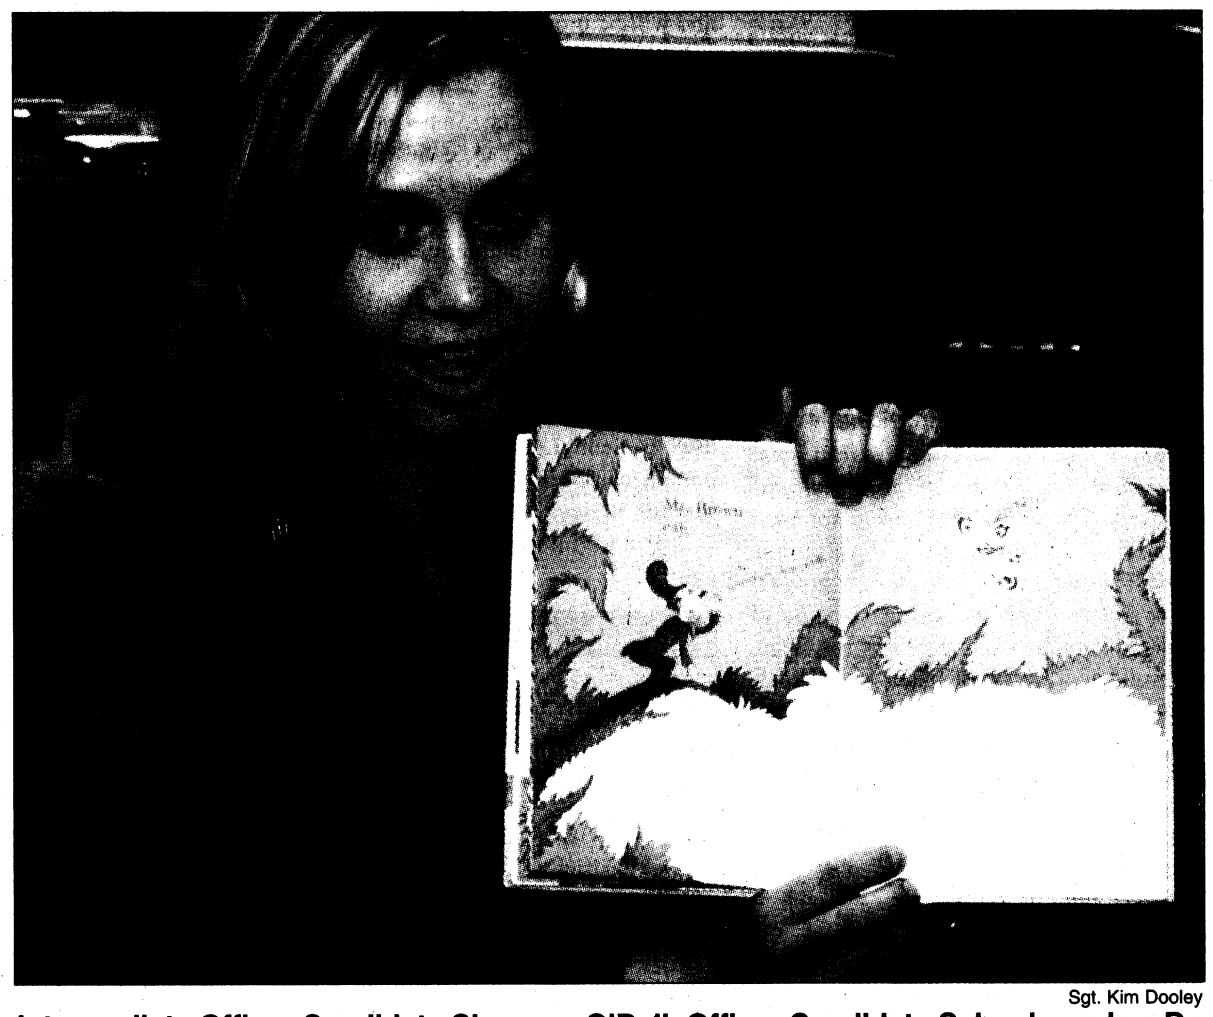
The initiative is aimed to bring home the importance of reading by making it fun, and what better way to do that than by celebrating "the creator of ... a madcap menagerie of the best-loved children's characters of all time, who stands alone as the preeminent figure of children's literature?" asks the Web site, www.seussville.com.

Looking around post schools Tuesday, it was hard to argue. From Cat-in-the-Hat headgear to Thing 1 and Thing 2 look-alikes roaming the hallways, Seuss was in the air.

As was laughter. Seuss' rollicking rhymes, nonsense words and crazy characters had students in fits at Benning's elementary schools at the hands of a variety of special guests.

McBride Elementary School welcomed Columbus' mayor, Bob Poydasheff, to share stories with them.

Meanwhile, White Elementary School played host to several Soldiers from their Partner in Education, Officer Candidate School.



Each class at White was treated to the Seuss story-telling stylings of a different candidate — 16 in all, said Capt. James Morgan, commander of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment.

"This ties into the overall reading program for the whole year," Morgan said. "And trust me, the candidates love leaving the training environment to come do things like this."

Intermediate Officer Candidate Shannon O'Dell wasn't one to argue.

"This is a wonderful way to promote reading," said O'Dell, who shared Mr.Brown Can Moo, How About You? with a first-grade class.

"It helps with their education and gets them excited about reading," she said.

Self-Help welcomes Spring

Flowers, shrubs available for residents

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

It's time for post residents to dust off their lawn mowers and gardening spades in preparation of the coming months.

For many, yard work is a dreaded chore; for others it's a time to get outside, get a little dirty and feel good about their homes.

Fort Benning officials want to help everyone enjoy caring for their yards, and starting the week before Easter, the Self Help Center will provide post residents with flowers and shrubs to help beautify the housing areas.

The Self Help Center has already ordered 24,000 flowers and will issue one flat containing 16 flowers. The flowers will be an assortment of vinca, begonias and impatiens.

While providing post residents with flowers is something Fort Benning has done for the past 20 years, shrubs are a new item.

The shrubs will be encore azaleas, a breed that blooms several times throughout the year, and each resident will receive about eight plants, said Ken Hankins, housing chief.

"We are doing this to motivate everybody for spring cleanup," Hankins said.

The center will stop distributing winter rye grass seed and start issuing Pennington green special mix grass seed in April. Pennington green special mix is a mixture of grass seed designed to grow in Fort Benning's summer climate and shouldn't be planted until after the last frost, said Dean Miles, self help lead at the Self Help Center.

Fertilizer and lime are also available at the center and should be spread over the lawn between now and April.

The flowers will be given out at the rear of the building, and as with everything else at the center, people will need to show their military ID card and their Self Help Card before they receive them.

It is also a good idea for people to stop inside the center while they are there to pick up any household items they need, Miles said.

Two of the more important things they will need to pick up are air filters for their heating and cooling system, and carbon monoxide detectors, he said.

Post residents are required to replace the air filters once a month, and they will be issued a two-month supply.

In addition to air filters and carbon monoxide detectors, the Self Help Center stocks a variety of household items that can save Soldiers from having to call in a work order, he said.

The center stocks light fixtures, cabinet hinges and knobs, replacement toilet and sink parts, safety treads for stairs, painting supplies and much more.

The Center also stocks lawn care equipment that Soldiers and their families can borrow.

Some of the loaner equipment includes lawnmowers, leaf blowers, weed eaters, lawn edgers, shovels, post hole diggers, broadcast spreaders and hedge trimmers.

"One thing to remember with the loaners is that they need to be returned in 48 hours," Miles said. "After that, they fall into delinquent status."

If a loaner item is kept for more than 30 days, a statement of charges is placed against the Soldier and the cost of the item will be taken out of the Soldier's check.

Miles said the best way to avoid problems with delinquency is to clean and return the item immediately after using it.

"People will put things in their shed, planning to return it the next day, and just forget about it," he said.

Collecting money for loaner items is not something the people at the Self Help Center enjoy doing, he said. They want to help the Soldiers have a better life.

"We are here to serve the Soldiers and help them keep their quarters updated," Miles said.

"Our main priority is customer satisfaction, because without the Soldiers, we wouldn't have a job."

Benning Backstage to hold play auditions

Eleven actors needed for production

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Benning Backstage is looking for five men and six women to perform in its upcoming production, Neil Simon's California Suite.

Auditions are open to the public and will be held at 7 p.m. March 22 and 23 at the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

California Suite is a "classic" Neil Simon comedy about four groups of people who stay in a hotel in California for various reasons. Each couple's story is totally different and separate from the others.

Peggy Cornwell, director and producer, said the males should be between the ages of 20 to 50 and the females should be between 20 and 60, and all should have some level of comedic timing.

"They don't have to be professional actors," she said. "As director and producer, I'll be happy to mold them into the part."

There is no reason for the applicants to develop a monologue, because auditions will be a "cold" reading from the script. However, Cornwell said, it would be a good idea for the applicants to get a copy of the script and review it before they audition.

Scripts for the play are available in most public libraries.

Cornwell said this production will have a relatively light rehearsal schedule, because the play doesn't have an ensemble cast and each scene can be rehearsed on different days.

In the beginning, the actors will only need to rehearse about once or twice a week, but as production time gets closer, rehearsals will increase to three or four nights a week.

Because the rehearsal schedule will be light, the actors will need to do a lot of the work on their own, Cornwell said.

"Rehearsal is no place to practice," she said. "You need to practice on your own time."

Jennifer Trip, who performed in both of Benning Backstage's previous productions, said it is a lot of hard work, but it pays off in the end.

The theater is a great place to make friends and escape the reality of day-to-day life, she said.

As a single mother, Trip said "it is good to get away from everything after a hard day at work, and become someone else for a while." She said acting is something everyone should try, and having prior experience is not all that important.

"In the last two shows, we had people with no experience," she said. "But everyone is nice, and they will help you out."

The production is scheduled for May 21, 22, 28 and 29 and tickets will cost $19 for adults and $12 for children under 12.

For more information about tickets, call 682-1120.

GPS game provides outdoor fun for everyone

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

If you own a Global Positioning System, or are looking for an excuse to buy one, there's a sport out there just for you. It's called geocaching, and it's an adventure game just for GPS users.

The name is a combination of the words "geography" and "cache," a hiding place. In geocaching, individuals or organizations set up caches all over the world and share the locations on the Internet. Columbus and Fort Benning are home to around 15 caches, both physical and virtual.

To start out, individuals log onto the geocaching Web site, www.geocaching.com, and enter their zip code to get a list of caches near them. Then, it's time to track down the cache using a GPS. Each cache has a difficulty rating, which tells about the terrain en route to the cache as well as how difficult the cache is to find. At physical caches, geocachers make an entry in a log book. Usually, there are items inside the cache, and etiquette says if the finder takes an item, they should leave one in its place, and return the cache to its hiding place.

The last step is to log in again on the Web site and include details in the entry to verify what was found in the cache. For virtual caches, there is no physical box to find. The finder must enter a fact about the site that can only be learned from physically visiting the site.

Columbus resident and Marine Corps veteran Tim Steele has been geocaching here for the past six months. He's found 35 caches and is the owner of several caches, which he maintains on a regular basis.

Steele, whose background is in photography, said after a while, he could only take so many pictures.

"Having a GPS is like that," he said. "You've got this great tool that you don't use. (Geocaching) is a reason to use it."

Steel finds caches with his sons and said it's a great activity for kids because it's like a treasure hunt. Many of the caches contain items like inexpensive toys and games.

"It's a great reason to go outside," he said. "You'll go all sorts of places you'd have no reason to go."

Photos by Melissa House

Tim Steele checks out new items in his geocache on the Riverwalk Wednesday.

He said he went geocaching one day to find a point on the Riverwalk and had no luck, but saw the Port Columbus museum instead, since he was parked in the museum's lot.

Steele receives e-mails letting him know of new caches in the area, and tries to be the first one to find them. So far, he said he "keeps missing by one."

But geocacher Pfc. Aaron Foist and his wife found two new caches the first time they went out.

Although there's no award or prestige for being the first at a cache, Foist said it was fun to be the first to make an entry in the log book.

Right now, Foist said, he's hot on the trail of a cash cache, located somewhere between here and Atlanta, which has a fairly high difficulty rating. He said once you get to the point, you follow additional clues to a point with money, placed by the owner of the land the cache is on. It's not a lot of money – but enough to cover the cost of travel to and from the cache. And Foist is in it for the challenge.

"It's more than just finding a point," he said. "It's addictive if you're an outdoorsy kind of person. It gets you out of the house."

Foist said geocaching also has potential for military training.

"It would make a good (physical training) event if you do a timed set of caches," he said, and it would make for good competition.

Local geocacher Matt King owns the virtual cache at the National Infantry Museum, where cachers must answer a question about an item outside the museum in order to get credit for finding the cache.

He said he created the cache to get people to the museum, get them to walk around the outside and hopefully entice them to see what's inside.

"We must never, ever forget how our armed forces have fought so hard to ensure our freedom," King said.

Sgt. 1st Class Paul Kilgore logged in the museum cache on Jan. 3. He's assigned to the 6th Ranger Training Battalion at Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., and started geocaching while stationed in Alaska. He learned about the sport from an Air Force newspaper while on leave.

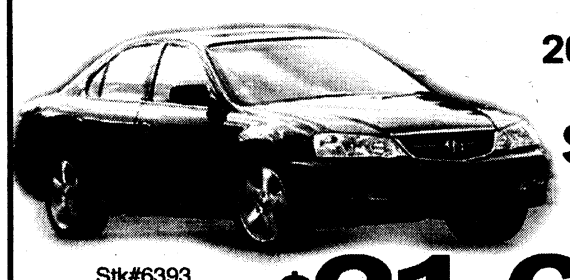
"When we got back home, we looked up the geocaching Web site and tried a few and got hooked," Kilgore said.

He and his family cached all across the country on their way to Florida, logging points in eight states and Canada along the way.

He and his brother own a cache located in Silverton, Ore. Kilgore, like Steele, has also started several "travel bugs."

Travel bugs are items, often beanie babies, with a traceable number, that may be trying to reach a final destination. Steele has one trying to get to Ireland, one heading for Australia, and one stuck in California trying to get to Texas.

Kilgore said two of his travel bugs that belonged to his children were lost in a travel bug hotel in California. He's planning to start new bugs in their place.



"Caching is a great, fun sport for the entire family to get outdoors and enjoy," he said.

Columbus' mayor visits McBride

City official joins in Seussentennial celebration

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Mayor Bob Poydasheff is a big fan of The Foot Book by Dr. Seuss, because "sometimes I put my foot in my mouth."

At least, that's what he told a group of McBride Elementary School's first-graders, to which they heartily responded, "Ewww!"

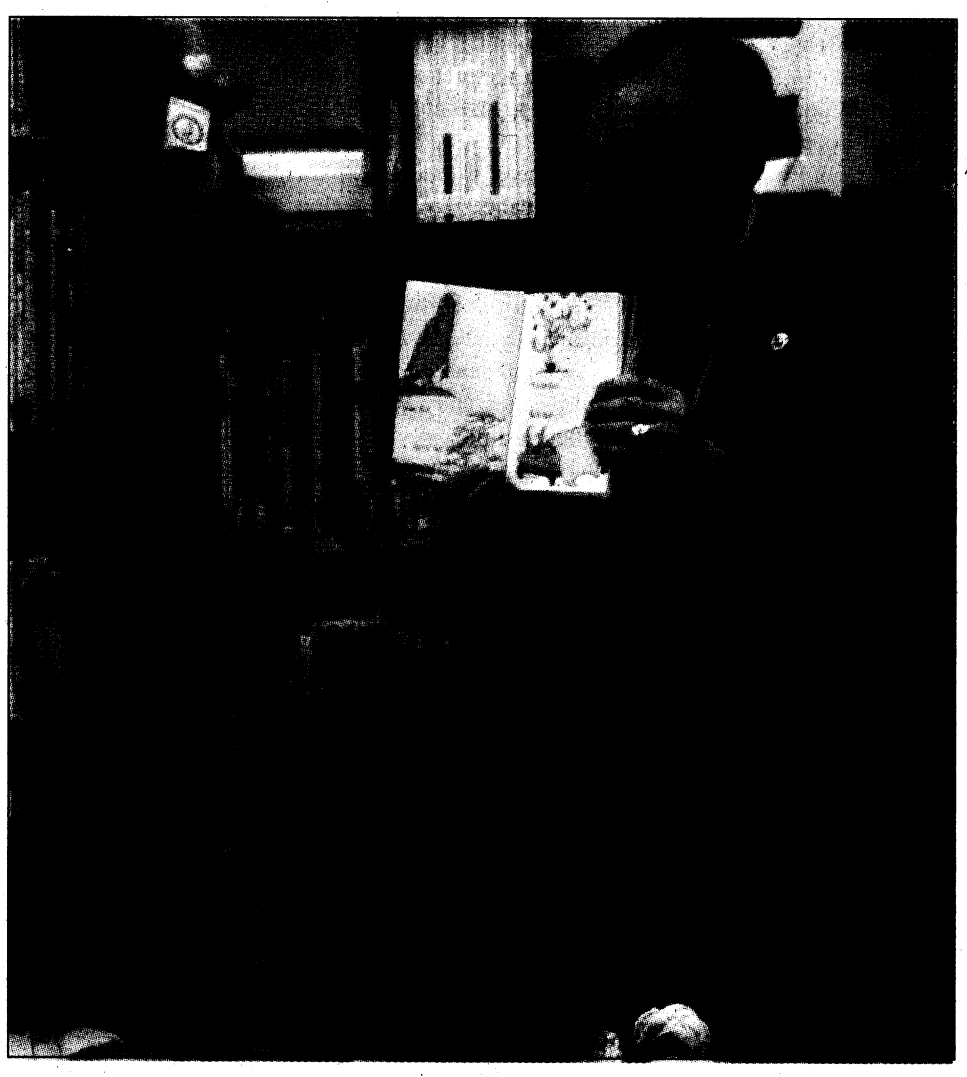
The mayor's comedic antics and animation went a long way with the students Tuesday morning, when he shared a variety of Seuss stories with them to celebrate Seuss' 100th birthday.

The school tries to get a different leader to come every year to read to the children, said McBride principal Del Hicks, and this year, they settled on Poydasheff, who has another special connection to the school. His daughter, Katherine Ross, is a second-grade teacher at McBride.

"Now, does Mayor Poydasheff look like anybody you know?" Ross asked the students before she introduced him to each class, elliciting excitement when she finally revealed him as her father.

But as all good things must, Poydasheff's visit came to an end, and the children returned to their classrooms, where they continued their celebration of Dr. Seuss Day.

Activities at the school included everything from reading favorite Seuss classics and Seuss-based creative writing to memorizing a special Seuss-style poem, which the children recited for Poydasheff.



Lisa Roush, a first-grade teacher, went a step farther with her students, and made it a true Dr. Seuss Day. Everything the class did from beginning to end somehow involved Dr. Seuss, she said.

Roush even invented half of a "Yill-iga-yak," a creature the children had to finish drawing. The project also required them to describe the character, explaining what he ate, where he lived and the like.

"Their imagination is the limit (with projects like this)," Roush said. "Some of them gave him duck feet or wings ... it's just a chance to incorporate their creativity."

This is important, she said, because it makes learning more fun for the children, and anything you can do to heighten their interest is key.

"You'll find that when you get them excited and interested about something, the learning follows right behind it," she said.

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Columbus' Mayor Bob Poydasheff shares a Dr. Seuss book with students at McBride Elementary School Tuesday. The mayor spent the morning reading to kids at the school.

McBride students reached a Reading Counts milestone Tuesday. The children have read 14,170 books this school year.

CYS to offer preK classes to post children next school year

Child and Youth Services

Child and Youth Services will operate two preK classrooms during the next school year. One class will be held at the Santa Fe Child Development Center, and one class will be located at the Tot Town Child Development Center. The maximum number of children in each class is 20. Children will be selected through a lottery.

Here's some information about the preK classes:

• Pre-registration dates: 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. March 15,to 19 at Building 359.

• Eligibility: Children must be 4 by Sept. 1 and must live in Georgia.

• Program hours: 8:45 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. Monday through Friday. Classes begin in August.

• Cost: There is no cost for the preK program; however, parents who need care for their child before or after the preK program must pay for that service.

• How to register: A form for Georgia preK must be completed and returned to CYS, Building 359, during the pre-registration days. At the end of the pre-registration, a disinterested party will pull 40 names. These 40 families will be contacted to come to the CYS Central Registration Office to complete registration paperwork. Remaining names will be placed on a waiting list. Pre-registration forms may be picked up at any CYS facility on post or at the CYS Central Registration Office, any time prior to pre-registration.

• Documents needed to register: If selected, parents must complete registration by providing the child's birth certificate, current shot record, LES (if applying for before and after school care in addition to Georgia preK) and an emergency contact name and number to the Central Registration Office. Families must also provide a Georgia 3231 Immunization Form and a Georgia 3100 Ear/Eye/Dental Certification Form and a CYS Health Assessment Form within 30 days of registration.

For more information, call CYS at 545-3064.

CLOSER LOOK

There are only 40 slots. So, to determine who will be in the preK classes:

- Pre-registration forms may be picked up at any CYS facility on post or at Building 359
- Parents must return the forms to CYS between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. March 15 to 19.
- A disinterested party will then pull 40 names from a lottery.
- Remaining names will be placed on a waiting list.

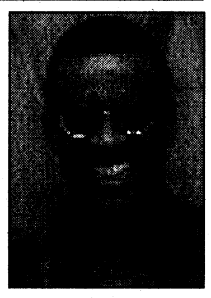
Hope, faith and love constitute 'aliveness'

Chaplain (Maj.) Kenneth F. Revell
30th Adjutant General Battalion (Reception)

Hope is the power to look up
Faith is the courage to get up.
Love is the power to stay up.

These elements constitute the essence of life. But the road to life and meaningful relationships is often fraught with intense difficulties. Life involves a fight.



Our doubts cling to us like shadows, and our frustrations eat on us like debilitating cancers. Yet, in spite of all this, we can still crawl out of our disasters and setbacks.

This is done only when we nurture the hope that's in us, practice the faith that keeps us, and honor the love that holds us.

These are the real questions we have to ask if we are going to stay alive: Are we more committed to our successes or our failures? Are we more committed to our potentials or deficiencies? Are we more committed to the parts of us that are broken or the parts that are whole?

As human beings whose lives are bombarded with a constant flow of problems, we must make a vigorous effort not to draw conclusions from crisis. Let me leave you with the following words of encouragement:

REFLECTIONS

Revell

• Don't throw a curtain across tomorrow. Miracles and breakthroughs are still available for the despairing soul. The capacity to believe in tomorrow keeps us alive today.

• Don't resign yourself to despair. Learn to live out of your will, not just your emotions. Feelings may be real, but they are not always right.

• Seek perspective and broaden your horizons. Realize that you are not the only person in the world in pain.

• Gradually risk positive relationships again. I know of nothing that wards off crippling depression better than the listening ears and the healing words of a trusted friend.

• Place your faith in a higher power. For me, that higher power is Jesus Christ. And in my faith walk, I have discovered that Christianity is not the subtraction of problems from life; it's the addition of power to meet those problems.

• Make goodness happen for somebody else. Those who bring sunshine into the lives of others cannot keep sunshine from coming into their own.

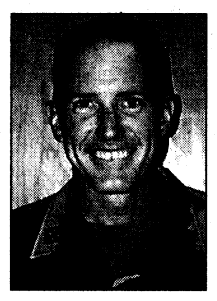
• Seek help from a professional counselor, chaplain or pastor. The suppression of problems is the real weakness in our human condition.

The person who arms himself or herself with faith, hope and love need not be intimidated by the heartbreaks in life.

CHAPEL NOTE

Catholic Women of the Chapel — Catholic Women of the Chapel meet the first Friday of each month at Sightseeing Road Chapel at 10 a.m. for business, religious study, rosary and Mass. They also meet the third Monday of each month at 7 p.m. for Bible study. Child care is provided at both meetings. For more information, call 687-0894.

Parenting challenges even the best



Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Have you noticed? Parenting seems to be more challenging than it's ever been, doesn't it?

I love being in the military. For one thing, you're never without a set of instructions! Wanna drive a humvee? You get a set of instructions, a TM. Wanna jump out of an airplane? You get a set of instructions, an FM.

But when it comes to the far more complicated task of raising a child, guess what? There is no TM, FM, or SOP, no single set of instructions to tell you how to be a great parent.

When 35,000 parents were recently asked what was the greatest frustration in raising their children, the answer surprised the experts. They didn't focus on the shortcomings of their children. Instead, they expressed their own inadequacies. "I just can't cope," was the most common reply.

Hawkins

I know I've certainly felt that way at times.

However, the good news is, through a healthy dose of divine wisdom from the creator, parents don't have to succumb to a "crisis of confidence."

You can thrive, not just survive, as a parent.

How do you do that? Here are three suggestions to give you a shot of parental adrenaline in executing your mission as Mom or Dad:

1) Be careful which playbook you're using. If I wanted to win the Super Bowl, I wouldn't run plays drawn on the back of a napkin. If we are interested in being solid parents, we need to get our info from solid sources.

The Bible, the Book of Proverbs specifically, is a wonderful place to start. Hey, 3,000-plus years of time-tested wisdom isn't too bad of a track record!

Looking to add a more contemporary tool to your bag? Try www.Family.org — that's Focus on the Family's website.

2) Rules are a child's best friend. So many times we assume children think there is nothing worse than rules. Wrong. In fact, children will often tell care-givers how they prefer to live in a place with rules that reflect care and consistency.

3) Rules without relationship lead to rebellion. Rules are only half the equation. Relationship is the rich soil out of which rules grow. Without relationship, rules don't seem care-full, they seem care-less.

The West Point women's softball team competed against some of the best college softball teams in the nation in the National Fastpitch Coaches Association Leadoff Classic over the weekend at South Commons.

Although the Black Knights didn't pull out a win in the tournament, they gained experience.

"This team showed a lot of guts and courage during the tournament," said head coach Jim Flowers. "There were many times that we could've given up, but we didn't. The team continued to give it their all."

The tournament started slowly for the Black Knights, who lost their first two games to Washington 8-0 and Florida State 10-0.

"We made a few mistakes in those games, and Washington and Florida State capitalized on them," Flowers said. "That's what great teams do — they capitalize on your mistakes and take advantage of them. I hope our team learned from them, so that we will be able to do the same in the future against our opponents."

Saturday, the team played the University of Texas in a close game that wasn't decided until the final pitch.

They scored their first run of the tournament in the top of the second inning after sophomore outfielder Abbie Gottschall singled in junior first baseman Lisa Huntington, who, earlier, hit a double and stole third.

"It was nice to know that I helped give our team a jump start," Huntington said. "It really helped our team's confidence."

In the top of the third inning, the Black Knights again scored runs after junior second baseman Lindsay March and junior shortstop Lauren Gobar scored off sophomore catcher Jamie Gjurgevich's two-run double.

But, after two errors in the bottom of the third, Texas' junior outfielder Sarah Wieszcak hit a two-run triple, then scored after another Texas hit.

Texas ended the third inning, scoring a total of four runs to give them a 4-3 lead.

In the bottom of the seventh, with Texas up 6-3, the Black Knights had runners on first and second base with two outs, with the tying run at the plate, but weren't able to capitalize, losing the game 6-3.

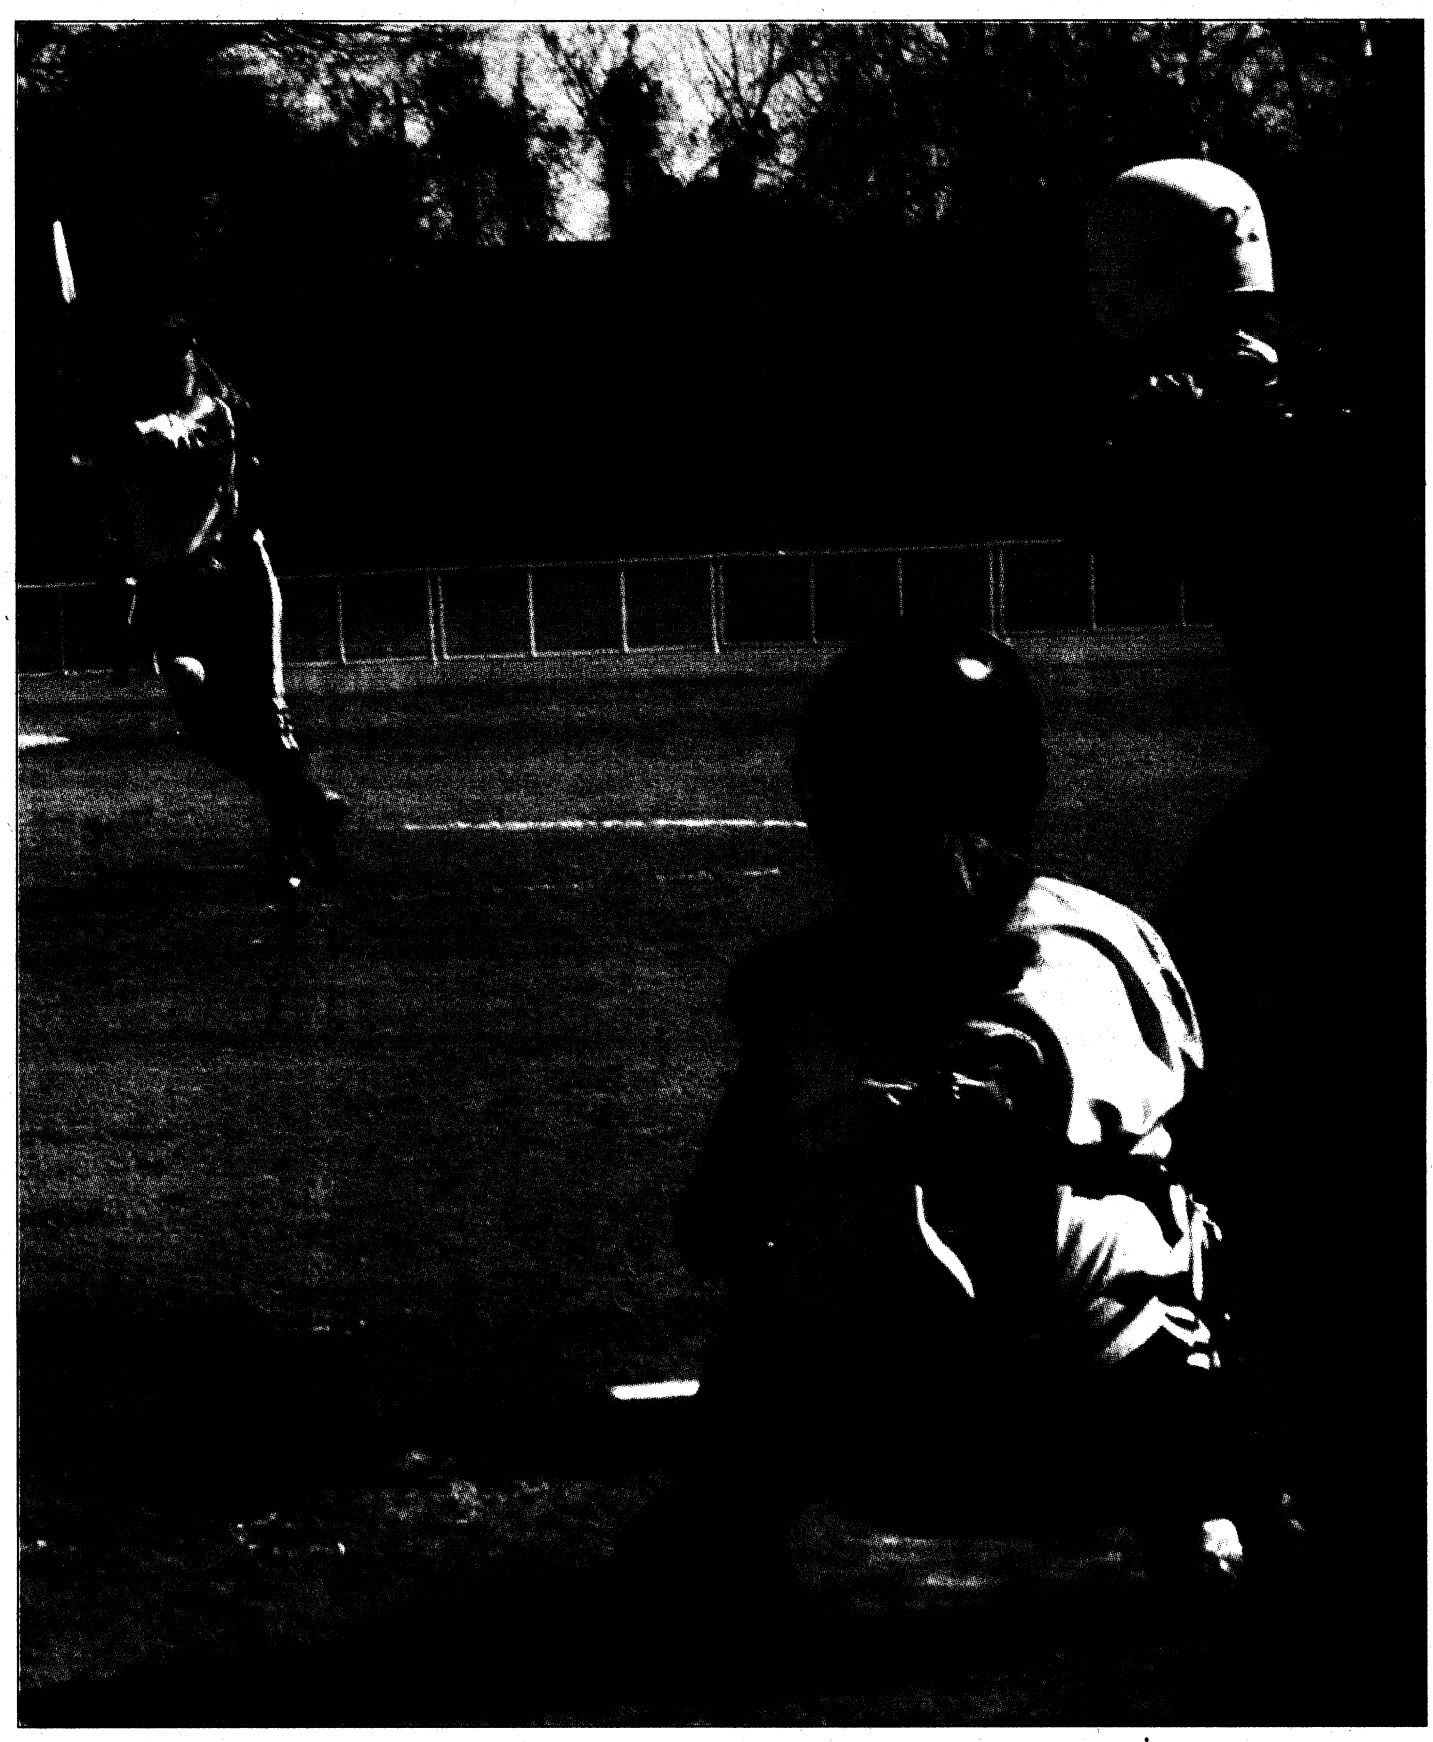
"It feels good knowing that we competed well against a high-caliber team like Texas," Huntington said. "We gave it our best and we kept ourselves in the game. We were in the game until the very end."

For the Army team; the highlight of the tournament was the opportunity to play the U.S. National Women's Softball Team, Huntington said.

"Playing the U.S. National Team is something every girl dreams of growing up," Huntington said. "It's an experience that I will always remember."

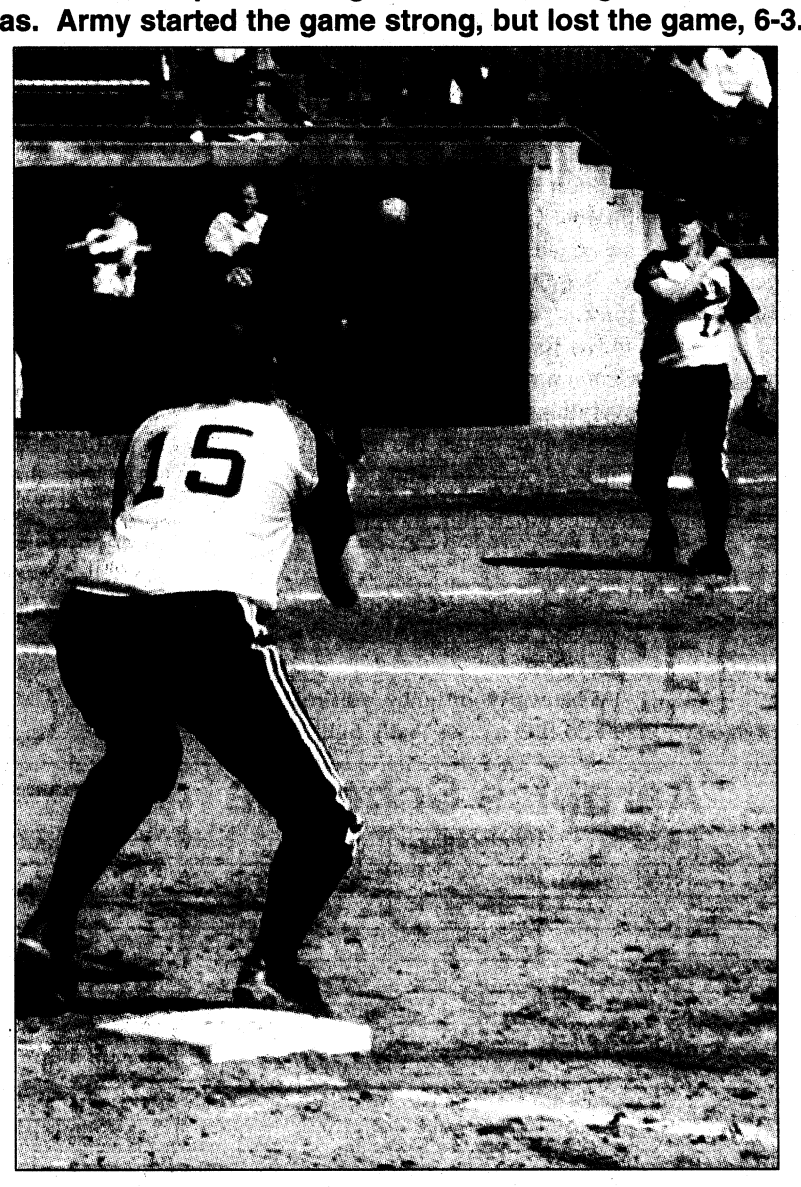
Although the Black Knights knew they had a tough opponent in the U.S. team, they fought for every pitch during the game and never gave up no matter what the score was.

The high point of the game was when Gjurgevich hit a homerun off Team U.S.A pitcher Lori Harrigan in the top of the fourth inning.



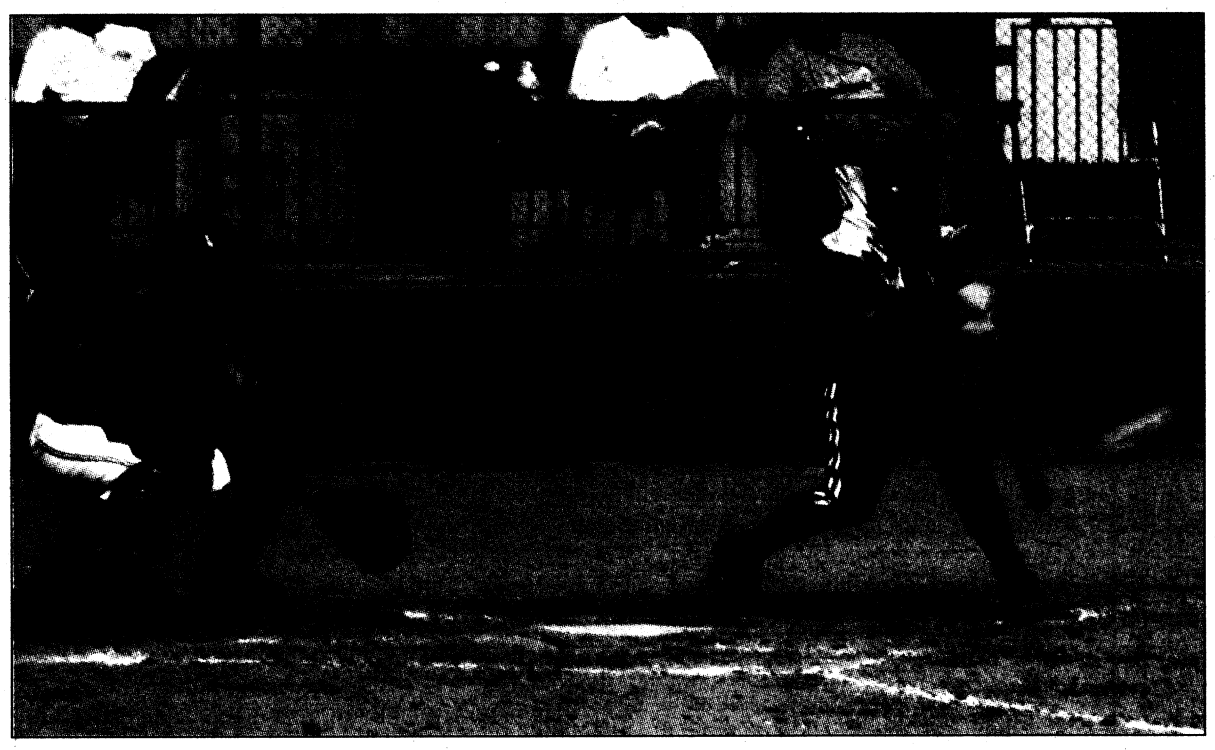
"I never imagined that I would hit a homerun off Team U.S.A.," Gjurgevich said. "I've watched them since I was little, and to hit a homerun off of them is a dream-come-true. I'm still in shock. I really don't know what else to say about it."

The homerun was also the only run that was scored against Team U.S.A. in the exhibition games they played.



"To be the only team that scored against the U.S. Team is something special," Flowers said. "It wasn't just the run I was proud of however, we had two other good, clean hits and had three more baserunners," he said. "To me, that shows me that my team gave it their all throughout the game. I'm proud of them."

The Black Knights head into future games with the confidence they gained playing on the same field as the top teams in the nation.



"They've played on the same field with the top teams in the nation," Flowers said. "They want to experience the same thing at the end of the season in the NCAA regionals, and I believe they can do it."

Senior pitcher Ashlie Christian delivers a pitch during the fourth inning of the Black Knights game against the University of Texas. Army started the game strong, but lost the game, 6-3.

Sophomore third baseman, Darcy Wilson, right, throws the ball to junior first baseman Lisa Huntington to record the out in the bottom of the first inning.

Freshman designated player Veronica Lauzon swings on the first pitch during the second inning of a game against the University of Texas.

Riverdragons gain lost momentum

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Columbus Riverdragons came into the 2003-2004 season with a totally revamped roster — only three players returned from last season.

The Riverdragons, part of the National Basketball Developmental League, have won four of their last six games and are looking to move up in the standings during the second half of the season.

"We got off to a slow start at the beginning of the season," said Jeff Malone, Riverdragons head coach. "We've constantly gained and lost people throughout the season, and it wasn't until about 10 games ago (that we got) our current roster.

"With that going on, it's hard to build team chemistry," he said. "Team chemistry is the most important thing when you step onto the court."

The Riverdragons began the season with high expectations after selecting Terrance Morris as their first pick in the NBDL draft. Morris, who played last season for the Houston Rockets in the NBA, also won an NCAA National Basketball Championship in 2001 with the University of Maryland.

"When I step out on the floor, I try to bring the confidence of knowing you can achieve anything that you set your mind to," Morris said. "Winning a championship at Maryland helped me with that, because we were the only ones who believed at the beginning of the season that we could win it all."

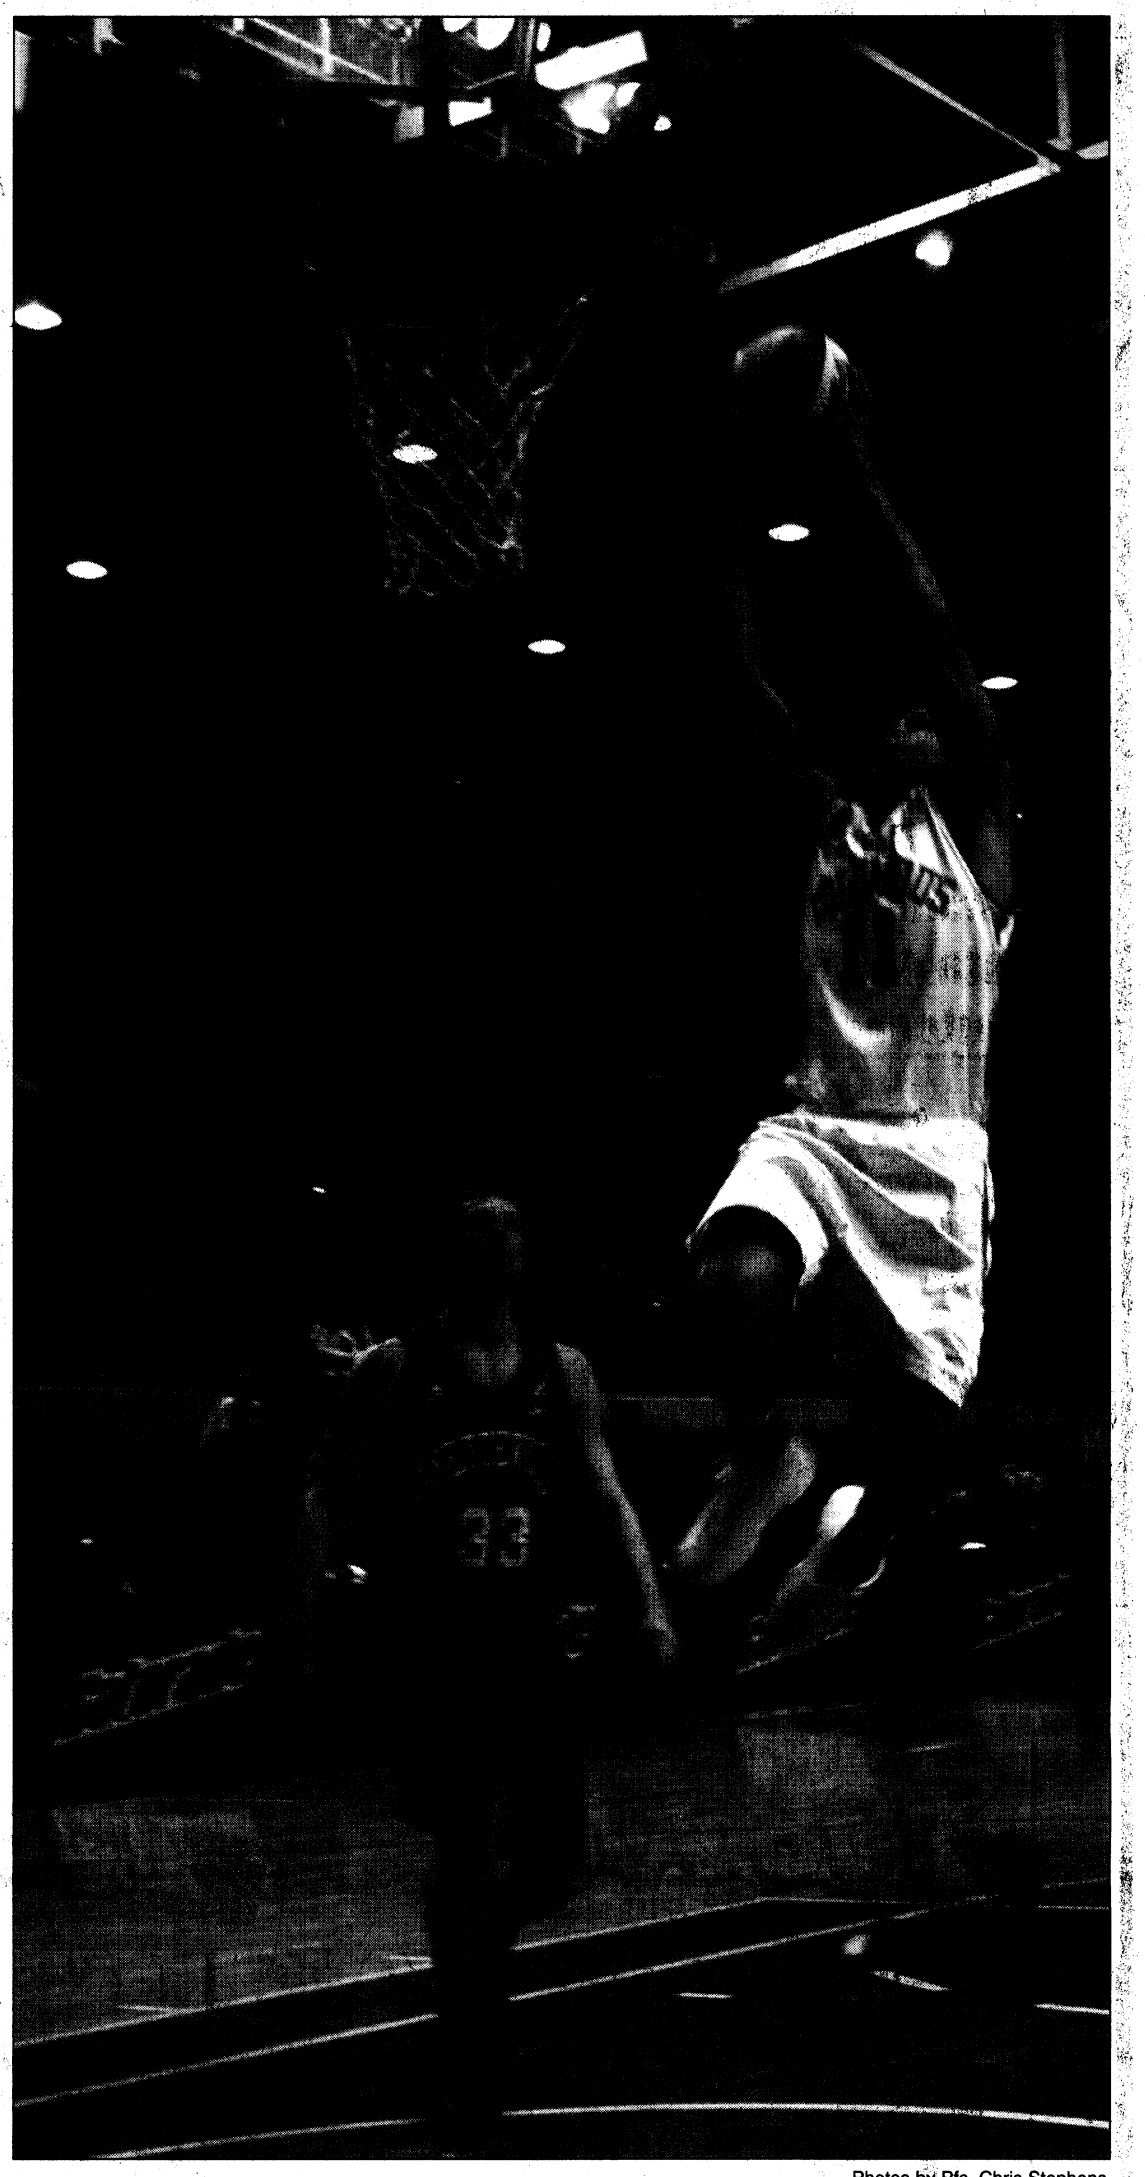
Morris said at the beginning of this season, the team couldn't get their chemistry down.

"However, as the season has gone on, we've grown together as a team and we're playing a lot better," he said. "We're clicking on all cylinders right now."

All the team needs now is support at their games. They hope to fill the stands for home games at the Columbus Civic Center.

"It means a lot to the players to see a lot of people out to watch the games," Malone said. "These players feed off the fans' enthusiasm. The fans are the sixth man for this team."

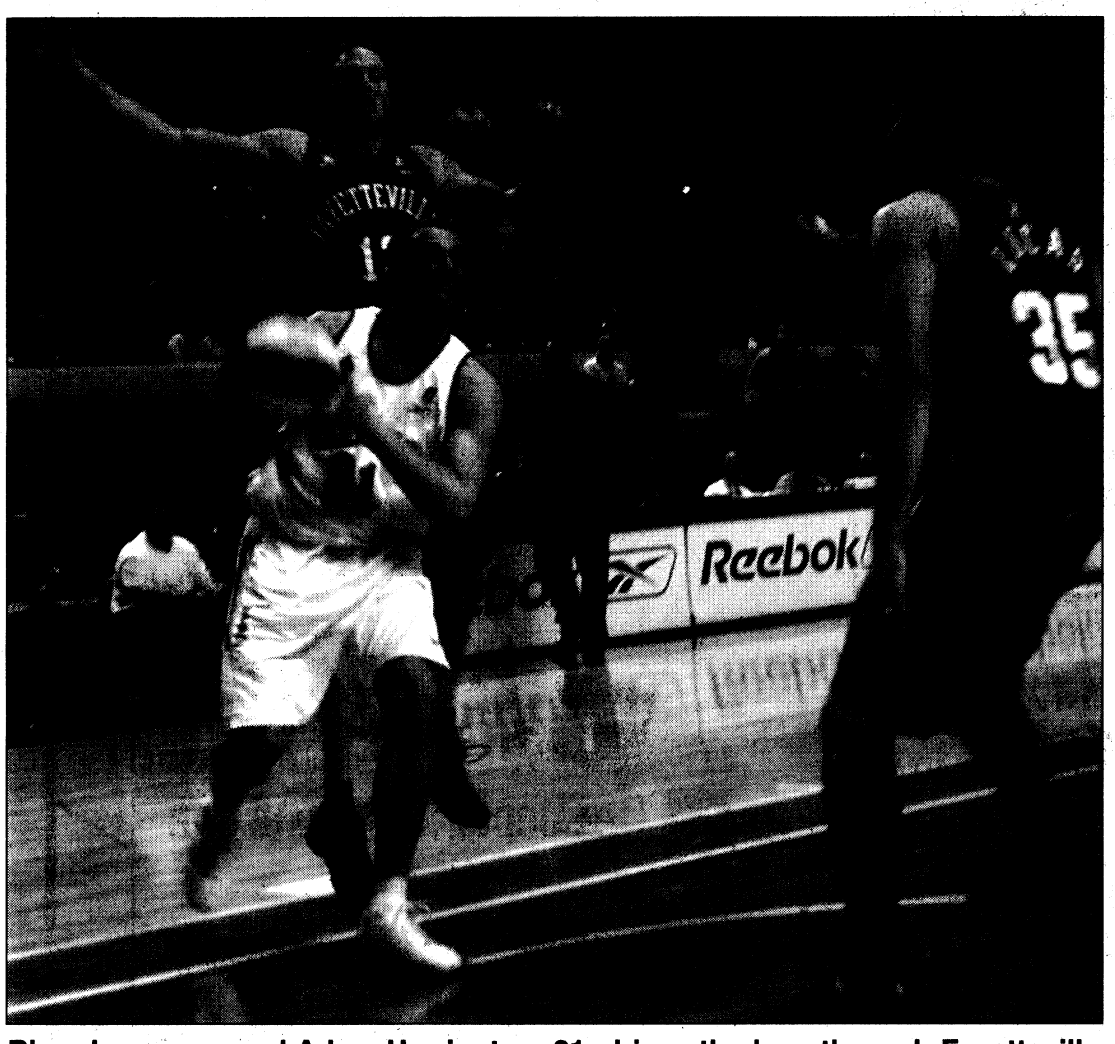
The Riverdragons offer many activities and promotions throughout the game, including a free-throw contest and the "dress and dash."



"The dress and dash is a fun way for the fans to put on an NBDL uniform," said Tim Becwar, Riverdragons public relations manager. "A lot people dream of doing that."

Tickets for the games range from $10 for upper level tickets to $25 for courtside seats. Children 12 and younger get in for $5.

"This is great family entertainment at an affordable price," Becwar said. "Everyone will have a good time when they come watch a game. It's a high-energy atmosphere where you never know what will happen next.



"The NBDL is one step below the NBA," Becwar said. "When you come to a game, there's always that chance that one of the players you are watching on the court is one shot or one rebound away from getting called up to the NBA. It doesn't get any better than that."

For more information on the Riverdragons, or to order tickets, call 225-1112.

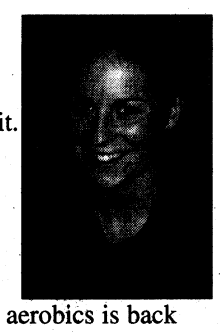
Bow down to the aerobics queens ... and kings



Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Let me just say that I have been waiting for this for more than a year. A year of nearly bursting into tears after catching brief teasers of aerobics shows on T.V., resorting to watching hours-long infomercials for The Firm and Winsor Pilates (which I actually bought).

You see, there was a time when I was somewhat of an "aerobics queen." Tae Bo, pilates, jazzercise, spinning ... if it was an aerobics fad, I was there.

But when I came to Fort Benning at the beginning of last year, I was met with a dire situation — there were no aerobics classes.

So I, along with my fellow aerobics queens and kings, was forced to wait.

Fourteen looong months.

But it's finally happened — aerobics is back on Benning. And in full force.

The Bryant Wells Fitness Center aerobics schedule has everything from step classes to boxaerobics (think Tae Bo) to yoga, aeromix and funk step (I'm curious about that one). And those are just the classes I'm taking.

There's more — core crunch, aqua and something called interval.

Whatever your fancy, you're sure to find a class that's right for you. And all for the bargain price of $3 a class or $25 a month for all the classes you can fit in your schedule. And believe me, with four to five classes a day, you'll be able to make it to at least one.

I know I'll be taking advantage of it. Judging from my first week of classes, so will a lot of other people on this post.

And not just women, either. Every class I went to had a number of men in the mix.

Whether you're looking to lose weight, stay in shape or just get out of the house, I heartily recommend hitting the next aerobics class.

A little advice, though — get there early. The classes are conducted on a first-come, first-served basis. And trust me, you don't want to miss out.

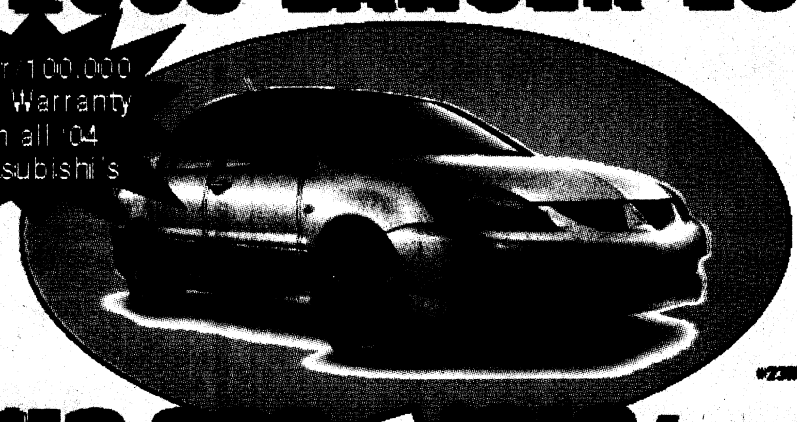
'04 MITSUBISHI LANCER RALLIART



The Lancer Ralliart doesn't look like it came off an assembly line, it looks like it just rolled out of a gym. Flexing its 2.4L MIVEC engine and sporting a set of 16" alloy wheels equipped with 4-wheel disc brakes, this is not a car for those who prefer their privacy. Its sport-tuned exhaust presents a fitting way to announce your arrival to the neighborhood, while the clear taillight lenses and rear spoiler ensure everyone's utmost attention. Open up the doors to the public, and show off its sport bucket seats, sport-touch steering wheel and leather-wrapped short-throw gearshift. And for those who don't want to sacrifice style for space, we offer our Sportback in a Ralliart version. It combines all the Ralliart performance perks with the extra cargo space and in-floor storage of the Sportback. And yes, in case you were wondering, owning one does make you the big dog on the block.

Single troops move to housing

Change will increase occupancy rate

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning Housing Office began moving single Soldiers into post residential neighborhoods this week, a change that's bound to pay dividends when the Army's top brass decides just how many new homes will be constructed under the Residential Community Initiative.

More than 100 Soldiers, private through staff sergeant, from the 29th Infantry Regiment will began moving today into Indianhead Terrace from their barracks in Building 73, one of the Main Post quartels slated for renovation. The 11th Infantry Regiment, the 988th Military Police Company and various elements from other units will follow suit in the next few weeks, said Ken Hankins, chief of Housing Division, Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

"It just makes sense. If you go downtown, you'll find single Soldiers living next door to families," he said, adding that Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., adopted a similar policy recently with positive results so far.

The Fort Benning Command Exhibition Parachute Team, known as the Silver Wings, will jump on April 15, its first since it was disbanded nearly four years ago.

The skies above Fort Benning and Columbus will soon be spotted with silver and black parachutes bearing the Follow Me patch.

Disbanded July 18, 2000, because of budget constraints, the Fort Benning Command Exhibition Parachute Team is scheduled to be reborn — airborne, in fact.

The team, known as the Silver Wings, will hold its first demonstration at the Airborne Awards Festival April 15.

The post command sergeant major, Command Sgt. Maj. Mike Kelso, said Fort Benning is reactivating the team because it is important to have the ability to reach the public.

"The purpose, in my book," Kelso said, "is to get the message of the Infantry Center out to the public to enhance the prestige of both Fort Benning and the infantry."

The team currently has seven members with hopes of having an average operating strength of 10 to 12 qualified parachutists once the

Marne Soldiers prep to deploy

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It's been a busy month on Kelley Hill, and it doesn't look like things will be slowing down any time soon. In the few weeks since 3rd Brigade returned from its rotation at the National Training Center, the unit assumed the mission as the Division Ready Brigade, received a warning order for deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom and began reorganizing into a brigade unit of action.

As the DRB, the six battalions of the 3rd Brigade Combat Team must be ready to deploy anywhere in the world within 72 hours, said Lt. Col. Daniel Kessler, the brigade's deputy commanding officer.

Right now, though, the unit has not been alerted to deploy. Despite some rumors circulating that some of the brigade's units have been alerted to deploy to Haiti, Kessler said the "brigade has no orders potentially sending anyone to Haiti."

In fact, 3rd Brigade assumed the role as America's "strategic deployment force" when the Marine unit originally designated as the DRB, deployed to Haiti, Kessler said.

What the unit does know is that it is next in line for deployment to Operation Iraqi Freedom 3, which could last up to one year. The division expects this deployment to begin on or after Thanksgiving, Kessler said.

However, that timeline could be affected by a change in the

About 150 Soldiers from the 498th Air Ambulance Detachment left for Iraq March 4, less than nine months after returning from a deployment in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom in June.

This time, the deployment is projected to last up to a year.

The unit will work out of Tikrit — their mission, to provide medevac support for the sick and the wounded, prisoners of war, and "anything else asked of us," said 1st Sgt. Alfonzo Dixon, detachment first sergeant.

"We're there to do whatever we're called upon to do to serve our country," Dixon said.

For some Soldiers, that means more than performing their duties in a foreign and hostile environment.

Spc. Samuel Bowlin, a crew chief with the unit, said he isn't daunted by the mission at hand — after all, he's done it before. The hardest part of the deployment for him will be parting with his wife of less than three months, Yasmin.

The couple was married in December after Samuel returned

WARRIOR ETHOS

Soldiers first, foremost

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

One of the funniest things I have ever witnessed happened years ago, when I was a private going through the Air Defense School at Fort Bliss, Texas, to become a Patriot Missile crew member.

It was December 1997 or January 1998 and tensions on post were wired like Claymore mines, ready to blow at any second. The Army was mobilizing troops for rapid deployment to Kuwait with the escalation of the situation in Iraq, and Air Defense was short — really short.

As I stood there listening while the names of Soldiers tasked to go to the Middle East were called off, I stared down my squad and was riveted by the stony faces of boys, most too young to drink, struggling hard to be men and seem brave.

Those 83 Bradley Linebacker crewmen had drawn the infamous card. You know, the one that reads, "Do not pass go, do not collect $200, don't even report to a unit. Upon graduation, catch a C-130 straight to combat."

It was pre-dawn and this formation was cold, dark and extremely unpleasant as the grim reality of a war on foreign shores settled in. A million thoughts raced through my mind as I imagined what they must have felt like.

Then an explosion tore through the air and rained fire on the drill pad.

One minute we were a company of green, young Soldiers, standing safe and sound on American soil under the sheltered care of drill sergeants, and in an instant all hell broke loose and we were transported into a war zone.

I have never seen 250 Soldiers, four drill sergeants and a commander hit the ground and start low crawling so fast in my entire time in the military. It looked like someone had hit the lights and a small army of roaches was scattering for cover.

A few minutes of ordered chaos ensued before a drill sergeant gave the all-clear, and there wasn't a person there not laughing when we realized the "mortar barrage" was an enormous transformer that had blown about 20 yards away on a power line behind us.

In my life, I have seen a lot of things that at the time seemed comical and inconsequential but later took on a new meaning for me. Maybe it's because I am older and somewhat wiser, or maybe it's just because this world we live in has moved on and everything has taken on a serious connotation.

I'm not the most "hooah, hooah" Soldier in this Army. Sure, I'd love to go be an airborne ranger and do something I feel warrants the check I get twice a month from Uncle Sam, but they don't let 5-foot-1-inch females do that sort of thing. So now I sit in front of a computer all day and write about all the cool things the "real" Soldiers get to do, and that's not such a bad thing. But when I read stories about my comrades in non-combat-MOSs drawing fire and dying in the sands of Iraq and Afghanistan, my mind wanders back to that day at Fort Bliss.

We didn't have weapons, cover or a battle plan, but we reacted.

Within 15 seconds, an entire company had dropped to the deck and low-crawled to form a perfect perimeter. A buddy team had disembarked to go secure communication with higher command. Squad leaders were relaying information to the drill sergeants. We were as ready as we possibly could have been for whatever may have come next.

Maybe if it had been a different day, things would have gone differently.

If a man hadn't used his truck as a battering ram to get through the front gate and led the MPs on a high-speed pursuit all the way to within a block of post headquarters the previous day, maybe we would have all turned around and looked at each other like idiots when the "mortar" went off. Or maybe if 83 of our battle buddies hadn't just been told they were being sent to war, we would have taken off running like chickens with our heads cut off.

But that day was the day. And that day, everything we had learned in basic training, all the sweat we spilled, all the mind-numbing hours of repetitious practice paid off.

Thinking of that moment serves as a powerful reminder to me that the battlefield has changed. We are at war around the world with enemies who don't play by the rules. The battles aren't necessarily ones we get on a C-130 with two duffel bags and an M-16 and fly halfway around the globe to.

The battle has come to us. Here on the streets of America. Our enemies don't care that most of us desk jobbers only pick up an M-16 once a year and haven't stepped foot on an obstacle course since basic training. They can strike at anytime, anyplace. Whether it's standing in formation outside a schoolhouse at Fort Bliss, sitting in a tent doing admin work over in Iraq or sitting in an office on the sixth floor of Infantry Hall writing commentaries about things beyond our pay grade.

No one thought in a million years there would ever be a direct attack on the Pentagon, the bureaucratic capital of the world — 125 desk jobs opened up in that "safe haven" on Sept. 11, 2001.

We are Soldiers first. Military occupational specialty is secondary. Remember that the next time you moan and groan because you actually have to throw on a Kevlar and go attempt to qualify at the range, or when you get to spend a Thursday afternoon (probably somewhere around October) doing all that fun CTT training. Would you be ready if the battle came to you?

Soldier's Creed

I am an American Soldier.
I am a Warrior and a member of a team. I serve the people of the United States and live the Army Values.
I will always place the mission first. I will never accept defeat. I will never quit. I will never leave a fallen comrade.
I am disciplined, physically and mentally tough, trained and proficient in my warrior tasks and drills.
I will always maintain my arms, my equipment and myself.
I am an expert and I am a professional.
I stand ready to deploy, engage and destroy the enemies of the United States of America in close combat.
I am a guardian of freedom and the American way of life.
I am an American Soldier.

VARIOUS VOICES

What's your opinion of The Passion of the Christ?

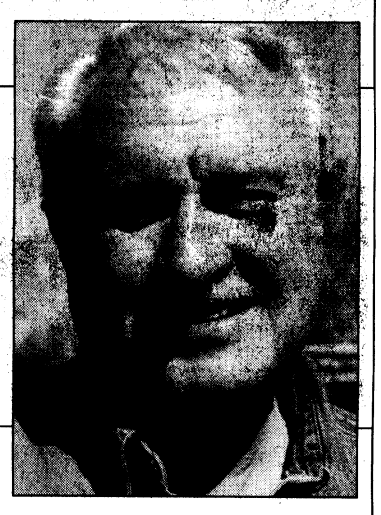
There will be a discussion of the movie at 4 p.m. Sunday at the TIC annex.



Staff Sgt. Leo Cayabyab, NCOA — "I thought it was good. I mean, I'm Catholic, so I pretty much know the story, but there were some parts that surprised me. It was very detailed."

Jeanna Larsen, family member — "It was tough. As the mother of a little boy, it made me think of it from Mary's point of view. I just felt it showed her loss and the great sacrifice she made."

Renee Doyle, family member — "I liked it. I'd see it again. It was a very powerful portrayal of what Christ went through on my behalf, and it made me realize what an incredible sacrifice it was."

Retired Master Sgt. Jack Studdard — "We haven't seen it yet, but we will. My wife is very religious, and it's important to her that people see just how terrible it was. From what people are saying, Mel Gibson succeeded in doing that."

2nd Lt. Steve Carmichael, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "It was a good movie, powerful and moving. They humanized him a lot. It was nice seeing it on the screen instead of reading it."

Jennifer Sparks, AAFES employee — "I'm a Christian, but it really made me think. It helped me understand more of what he went through so we could be here. I think everybody should see it, believers and nonbelievers."

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

HOPE too important for Georgia youth

Georgia, the peach state with HOPE, is trying to leave Muscogee County's youth without hope.

Out of all the programs in the state of Georgia they could have cut, they felt that cutting our school programs was the most efficient. Yet they, Georgia's governor and general assembly, complain about how Georgia has the lowest graduation rate, the lowest SAT scores and how Georgia's youth can barely pass what they call a "simple" graduation test. "Hard times call for hard decisions" is what they said about the elimination of programs. However, I have a different opinion.

I am an 18-year-old Carver High School student. A proud senior, who passed the graduation test on the first try and who has taken the SAT, I am looking forward to what my coming years have to offer. But for some of my peers, their future is much more bleak. If you cut the schools' funding for afterschool activities, such as afterschool tutoring, SAT prep programs and preparatory programs for the Georgia High School Graduation Test, you won't be hurting anyone but yourselves.

Who will be upholding key positions in the years to come? Who will be the ones leading Georgia into the future? We will, and when I say "we," I mean the thousands of teenagers and children in schools today. Those kids who work their hardest to maintain that B average so they can go to school with a HOPE grant. That student who stays after school with their teachers and has to walk home. Or what about that one student who is trying their hardest to pass their high school graduation test but misses with a 499 out of a possible 500? You're not only cheating them out of a bright future, but you're cheating yourselves as well.

Now I plea to my fellow youth. You see what they are trying to take from you, and you can fight back. You can register to vote and let your voice be heard.

Don't waste away a privilege so many fought and died for. I am only one voice out of a large and determined choir. So please join in and let's be heard.

GO ON, GIRL!

Post's women's conference a success

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Felix Davila holds a pad up for Cheri Meyer to kick during Empowering Yourself through Self-Defense. Davila instructed the class for the women's conference Wednesday.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Talk about tough choices. Self-defense, a beauty escape, scrapbooking, house decorating, hair care and aromatherapy ... the list goes on.

And with only enough time to take three classes, the about 200 women who attended the post's first-ever Women's Conference Wednesday faced a daunting decision: What am I willing to forego?

Thanks to the hard work of the event's 13-member committee during the past six or seven months, though, that was the most taxing part of their day.

The rest of the five-hour conference was spent learning new crafts, meeting new friends and just enjoying doing what they wanted to do.

The conference offered 11 classes to choose from, all of them hand-picked by the participants themselves, said Kim Akers, who headed up the event's committee.

Akers said the conference was actually the brainchild of P.J. Eaton, the former commanding general's wife, early last year.

"We had this $2,000 grant available, and Mrs. Eaton wanted to see a women's conference," Akers said.

But Eaton didn't want just any conference — no breast cancer lectures or tax-filing classes ... just a "day of fun," Akers said.

Akers volunteered to take on the project. As a new Army wife, she knew firsthand how hard the transition can be, and she knew other wives were feeling it, too, she said.

"I knew of wives who never left their homes, who didn't know where anything was or even who to talk to," Akers said. "They seemed very unhappy."

And Akers noticed that what activities Fort Benning's Army spouses were participating in were generally officers' wives.

"We needed to reach out and strengthen the community of wives," Akers said. "And I especially wanted to reach out to the enlisted wives."

So Akers hit the street, literally.

"I just went on a door-knocking campaign, mainly in enlisted housing," she said.

It was that campaign that garnered the support team — the committee who helped coordinate and organize the event — and the feedback she needed to get the ball rolling.

Akers and her committee handed out surveys, asking the wives what they wanted to see at the conference, winding up with more than 50 suggested classes.

Of course, not all of them were feasible, but the committee arranged for the most-recommended classes:

• Empowering Yourself through Self Defense taught its students how to protect themselves and their loved ones.

• A Beauty Escape brushed them up on the importance of skin art and "demystified" the art of make-up.

• Antiques 101 offered a step-by-step to shopping for antiques.

• Making Memories Last covered the basics of scrapbooking.

• Easy Entertaining with Food gave its students some insight into home entertaining and averting the need for catering simply and on a budget.

• People, Places and Things to Do gave the Chamber of Commerce a platform to share with Benning wives the variety of leisure and recreation activities in the local area.

• Let Your Creativity Bloom was a 101 in taking care of plants and using them as home decorations.

• It's a Cake Walk introduced the women to cake-decorating.

• Pottery Painting Made Simple gave the women a chance to create their own masterpieces and even have it fired at a local pottery shop.

> "I knew of wives who never left their homes, who didn't know where anything was or even who to talk to. They seemed very unhappy ... We needed to strengthen the community of wives."
> Kim Akers
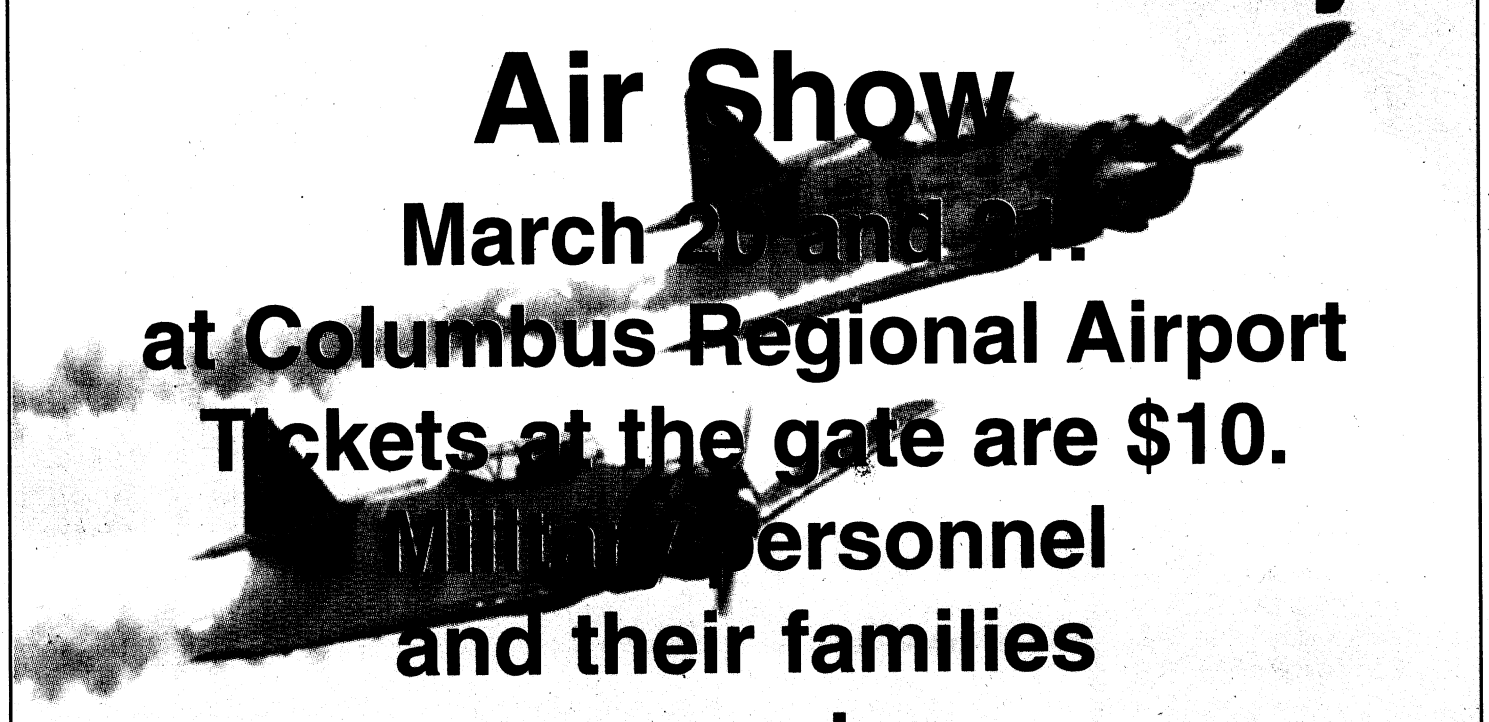
> committee head

• The Beauty of Military Housing gave its students ideas for making the best of drab military quarters.

• Harmonious Journey with Avant-garde, one of the most popular classes, relaxed its students with aromatherapy and then "got a little hairy" with fun, funky hairstyles.

Come Wednesday the event's participants seemed more than happy with the chance to attend the conference.

"I decided it would be good to come out and spend some time on myself," said Diane Fausti, who ended up narrowing it down to self-defense, scrapbooking and the beauty escape. "I think my creative self kind of got pushed to the side over the years, so I'm just trying to find out if it's still in there."



The conference offered Fausti the perfect opportunity to do just that, and a few other things to.

"This is a great way to meet people and make friends and just see what's offered," she said.

If you missed it this year, don't kick yourself too hard. Akers said the committee is committed to offering another conference next year.

"That's definitely our goal," she said.

Cheap degrees can cost Soldiers money

Diploma mills take Soldiers' money

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Emphasis has always been placed on having a good education. For many Soldiers, being able to get an education is one of the reasons why they are in the Army.

Soldiers count on the degrees they work hard for to get a head start on their career in the military or once they separate from the military.

There are, however, some Soldiers who can't make the grades. Some Soldiers who just don't have what it takes to earn their degrees. What do they sometimes do if they need a degree for a promotion or for a better job?

They buy one.

Education centers in the Army have been presented with degrees and transcripts showing Soldiers taking semester hours at colleges that are not accredited.

"Some Soldiers try and find an easy way to get their degrees without having to do the work," said Paul LaPointe, the education service officer at the Education Center.

"One Soldier came in with transcripts showing a bachelor's of science degree with a major concentration in Business administration from Trinity College and University," LaPointe said. "He paid $800 and admitted he did not take one class with.the college, although he reported 124 semester hours."

TCU is one of the recent "diploma mills," selling degrees to Soldiers with the claim that they have a national accreditation, LaPointe said.

All accredited institutions must be publicized on the American Council of Education, LaPointe said. Only transcripts from institutions published in the ACE are accepted by education centers in the Army.

Situations like these are why the Army Continued Education System was developed, he said.

Diploma mills keep a low profile and use the Internet to advertise. Those who want to find them search for them, and people who purchase degrees from them should be aware of the possible illegitimacy of the institution.

Diploma mills aren't necessarily illegal. Some of these institutions barely meet the legal requirements of their states, LaPointe said.

"As an education center, we recruit institutions from around post to come on post and offer their services to Soldiers. Soldiers are required to go to their education centers to receive information about schools and tuition assistance," LaPointe said.

Civilians who buy degrees could lose their jobs. Soldiers who try to present these degrees for promotions lose their opportunity to be promoted, not to mention the money they wasted.

To avoid these situations, Soldiers are now required to visit the Education Center before they apply to any institutions to design an education plan and obtain tuition assistance.

DA Dorm 2171 authorizes the Army Education Center to pay for tuition and fees.

The Education Center now has new guidelines for Soldiers looking to enroll into college and receive tuition assistance:

- Soldiers must see an Education Center counselor prior to enrolling with any institution.
- You must have a DA Form 2171 prior to enrolling if you wish to receive tuition assistance.
- Mandatory counseling from the Education Center before enrollment.
- No TA will be provided after the formal Add/Drop period.
- If you enroll at a school prior to receiving DA Form 2171, the education center is under no obligation to provide TA.
- Soldiers must notify the Education center of all withdrawals or changes in courses.

Failure to comply will result in loss of TA.

For more information on tuition assistance, call the Education Center at 545-2911.

Soldiers advised on campaigning restrictions

Soldiers may campaign as individuals only

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

As elections loom on the horizon, Soldiers may be interested in participating in their favorite candidate's campaign. However, there are limits to how much a Soldier can participate.

It's important for Soldiers to vote for the person who's going to run their country because that person is going to be representing them," said Lawanda Earley, human resources assistant.

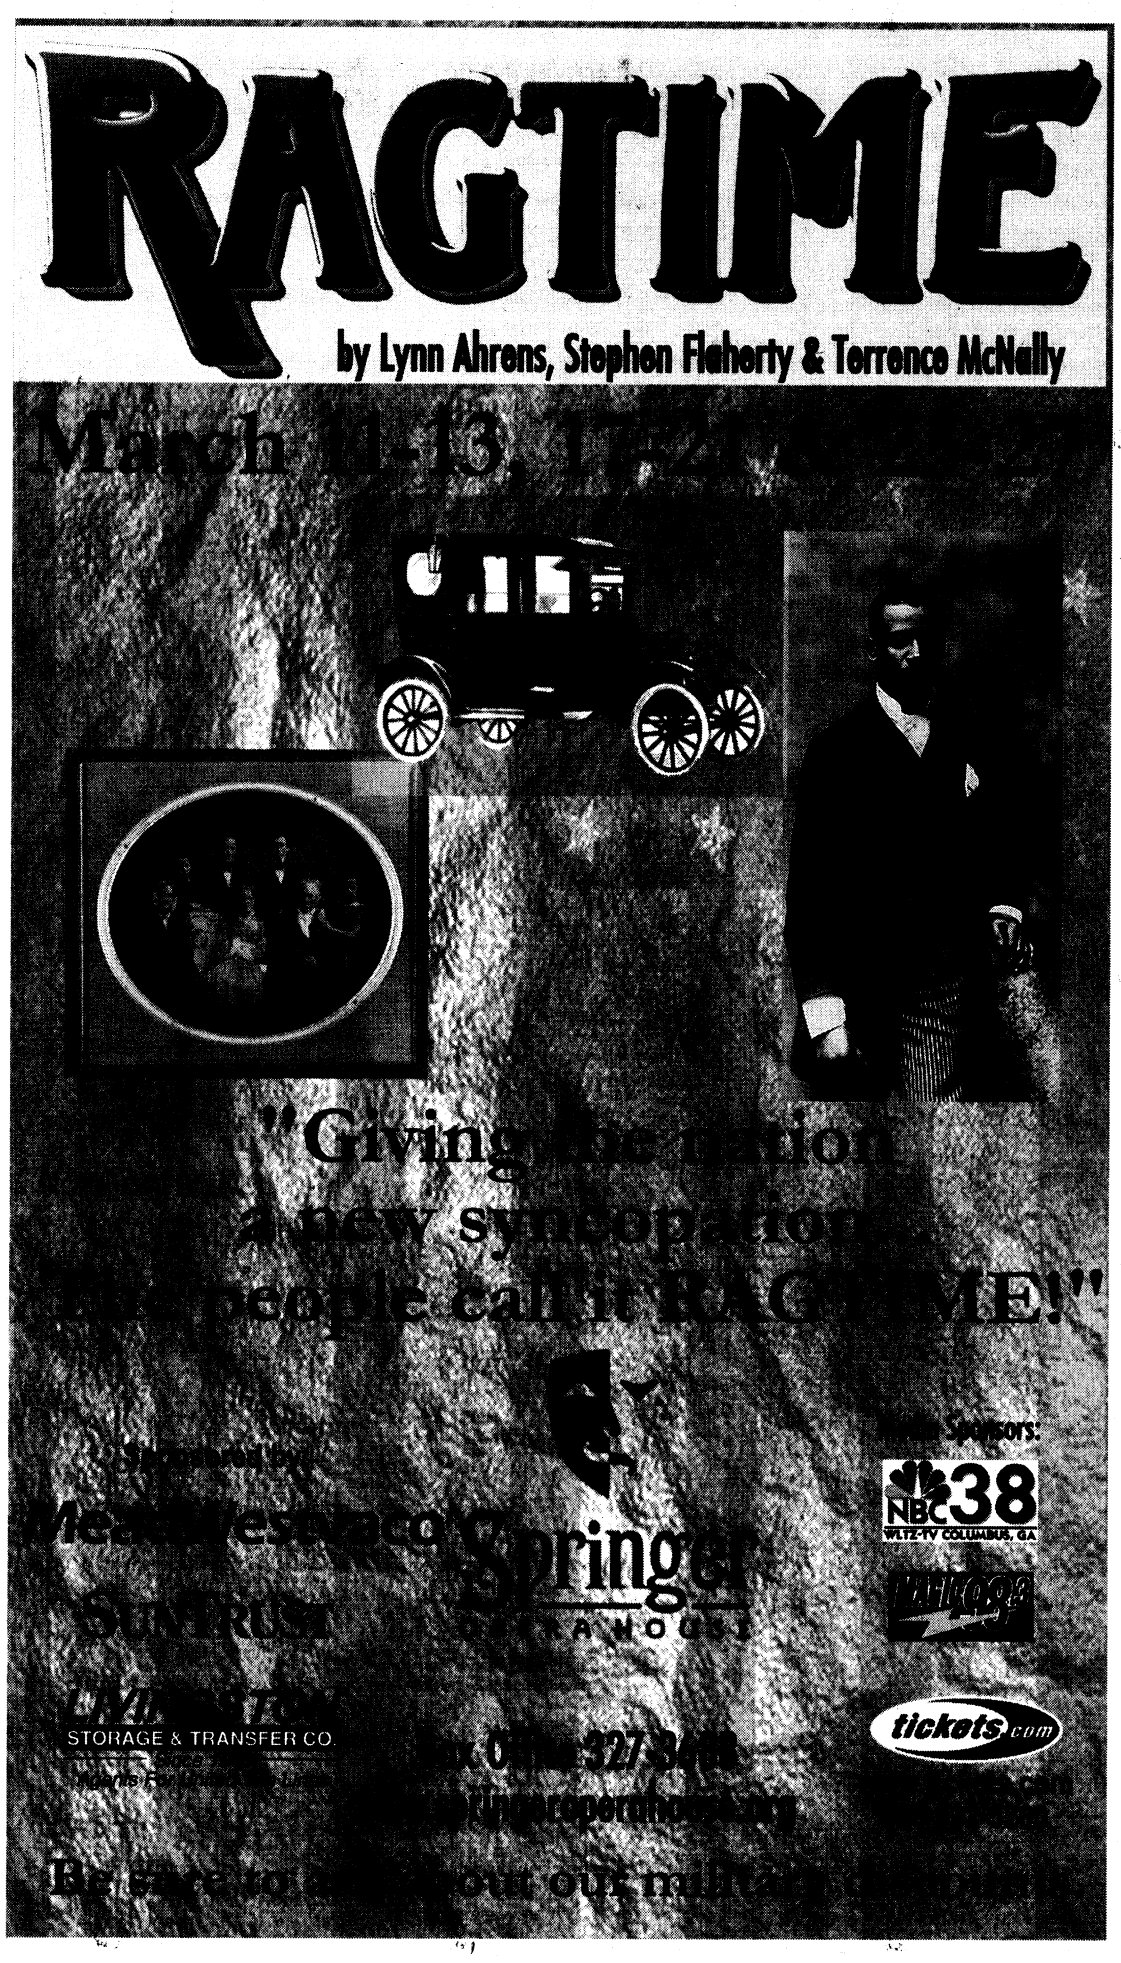
Although every Soldier has the right to vote and express his opinion, there are restrictions to what Soldiers may or may not do when participating in political campaigns — anything they do must be as an individual and not as a representative of the Armed Forces, Earley said.

The Department of Defense Directive 1344.10, sets the rules and guidelines for members of the Armed Forces on Active Duty to adhere to.

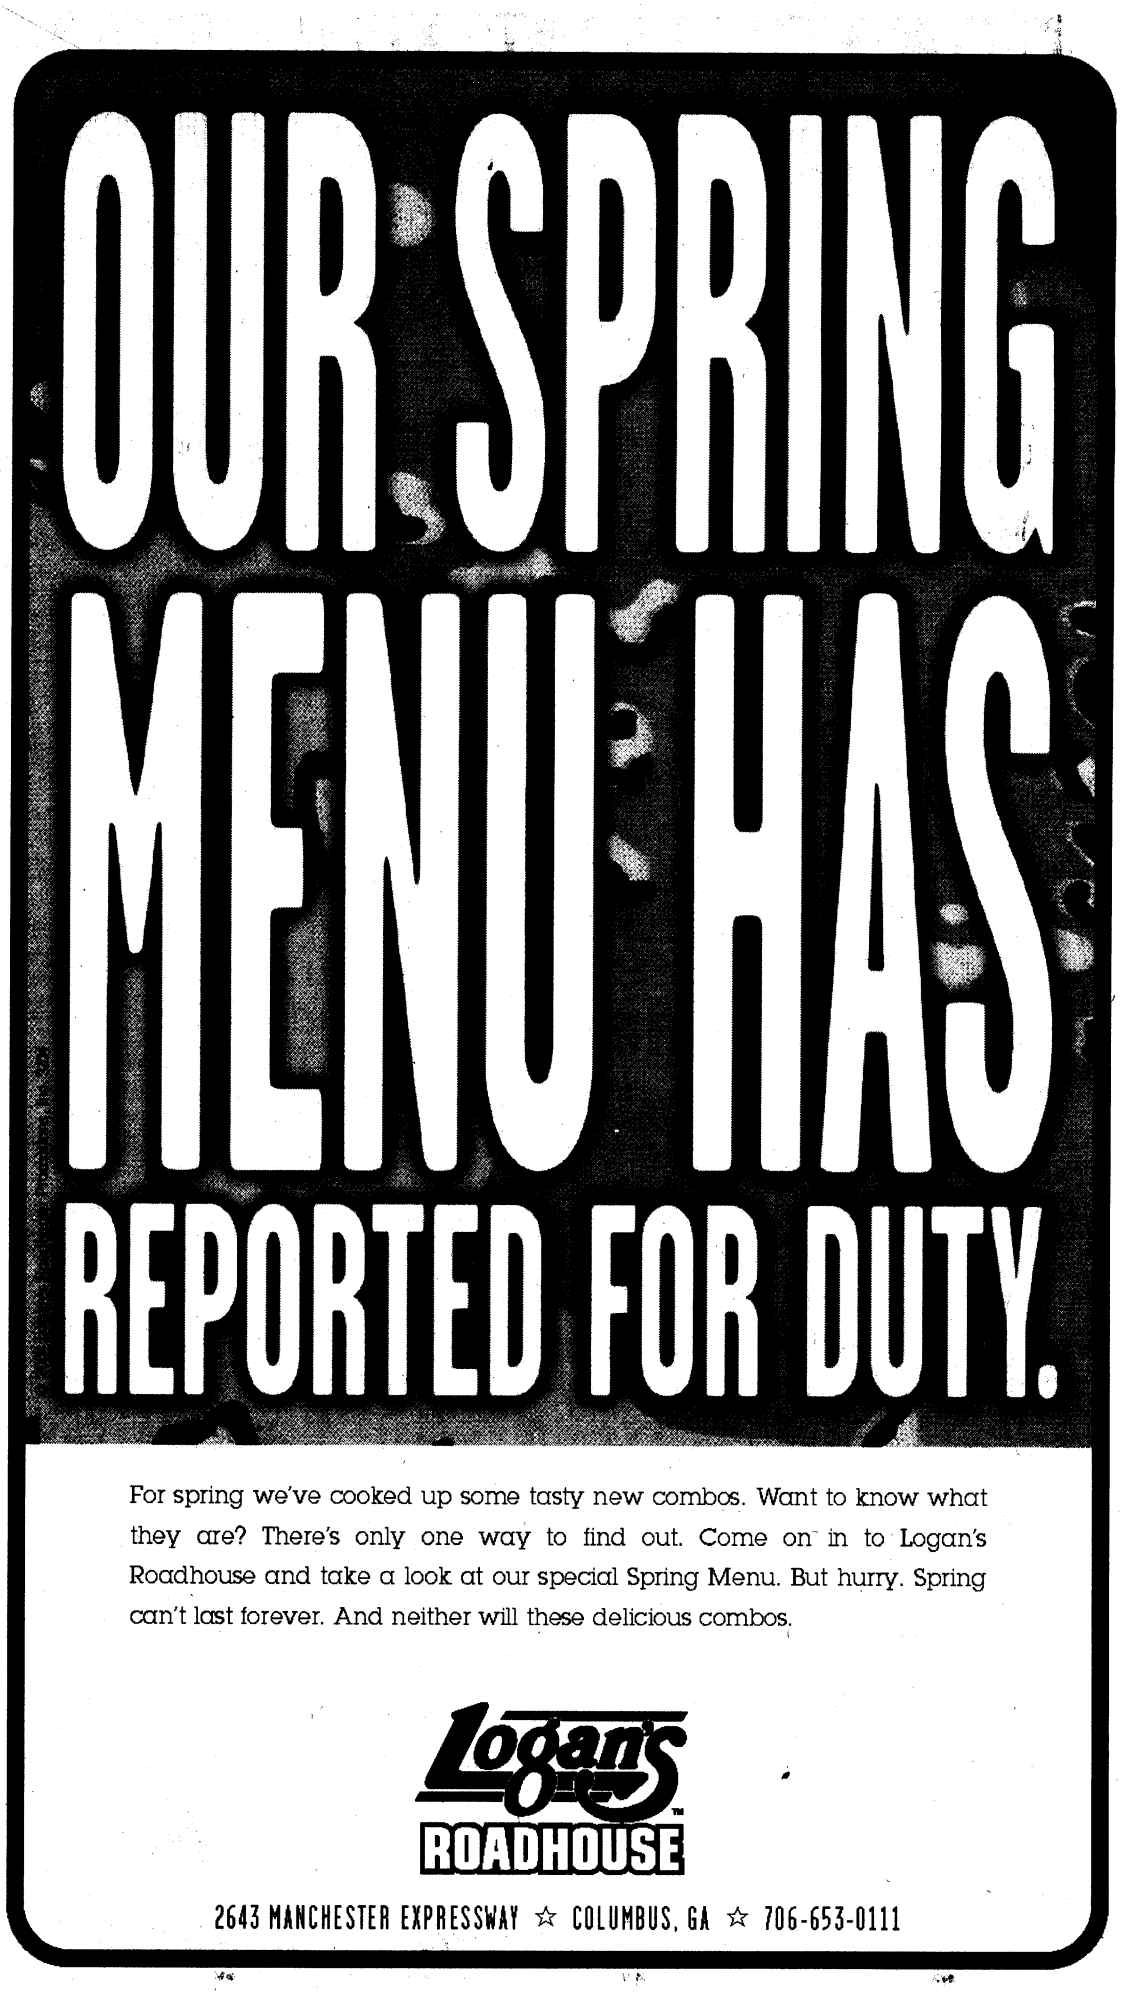
Soldiers that violate what Directive 1344.10 states may be prosecuted with Article 92 under the Unit Code of Military Justice, said Capt. Josh Shuey, Chief of Criminal Law.

Members of the Armed Forces on active duty MAY:

- Register, vote and express his or her personal opinion on political candidates and issues, but not as a representative of the Armed Forces.
- Promote and encourage other military members to vote, as long as they don't constitute an attempt to influence or interfere with the outcome of an election.
- Join a political club and attend its meetings when not in uniform.
- Serve as an election official if such service is not as a representative of a partisan political party, does not interfere with military duties and is performed while not in uniform.
- Sign a petition for specific legislative action or a petition to place a candidate's name on an official election ballot, if the signing does not obligate the member to engage in partisan political activity and is done as a private citizen and not as a representative of the Armed Forces.
- Write a letter to the editor of a newspaper expressing the member's personal views on public issues or political candidates, if such action is not part of an organized letter-writing campaign or concerted solicitation of votes for or against a political party or partisan cause or candidate.
- Make monetary contributions to a political organization, party, or committee favoring a particular candidate or slate of candidates.
- Display a political bumper sticker on the member's private vehicle.



Members of the Armed Forces on active duty MAY NOT:



- Participate in any media or group discussions as a partisan advocate.
- Conduct a political opinion survey.
- March or ride in a partisan political parade.
- Display a large political sign, banner, or poster on a private vehicle (bumper stickers are allowed).
- Participate in any partisan effort to provide voters with transportation to the polls.
- Attend partisan political events as an official representative of the Armed Forces or while in uniform.
- Use official authority or influence to interfere with an election, affect the course or outcome of an election, solicit votes for a particular candidate or issue, require or solicit political contributions from others.
- Be a candidate for civil office in Federal, State or local government, or engage in public or organized soliciting of others to become partisan candidates for nomination or election to civil office.
- Participate in partisan political management or campaigns, or make public speeches.
- Solicit or receive campaign contributions form another member of the Armed Forces, a civilian officer or employee of the U.S. for promoting a political objective or cause.
- Speak before a partisan political gathering of any kind for promoting a partisan political party or candidate.
- Perform clerical or other duties for a partisan political committee during a campaign or on an election day.
- Solicit or otherwise engage in fund raising activities in Federal offices or facilities, including military reservations, for a partisan political cause or candidate.
- Sell tickets for, or otherwise actively promote, political dinners and similar fund raising events.
- Allow or cause to be published partisan political articles signed or written by the member that solicit votes for or against a partisan political party or candidate.
- Serve in any official capacity or sponsor a partisan political club.

This list is only meant as a guide.

GLOBAL WAR ON TERROR

Rumsfeld says full funding needed

Significant budget requested for war on terrorism

Donna Miles
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld warned that progress toward democracy in Iraq should not be interpreted as a sign that the terrorist threat is under control and that the military can now endure budget cuts March 9.

Rumsfeld told reporters at a Pentagon briefing that despite this week's signing of an interim constitution in Iraq, the terrorist threat in that country and elsewhere continues, and America must ensure its military is capable of responding to that threat.

"The violence in Iraq last week is another reminder that even as the Iraqis take hold of their country, the war on terrorism continues," Rumsfeld said. "Dangerous adversaries remain in Iraq and elsewhere in the world, whose objective is to kill innocent men, women and children."

Rumsfeld said this ongoing threat reinforces the need for the U. S. to maintain the highest level of defense capabilities. "We are and remain at war, so it is important that we as a country continue to invest in the defense capabilities that are needed to prevail in that effort," he said.

The Defense secretary acknowledged that these investments — $421 billion President George W. Bush has requested for the Defense Department in fiscal 2005 — "are significant" but said "they pale compared to the cost in lives and treasure of another attack like the one on Sept. 11." Rumsfeld lauded the Iraqi Governing Council's March 8 signing of an interim constitution that will guide the nation until a permanent constitution is established.

"The leaders of Iraq's governing council have not only enacted a landmark law," he said, "they have shown the world that Iraqis are on the path and have a willingness to do the difficult work of democracies."

Rumsfeld warned that this progress should not be interpreted as a time to water down America's defense.

"This is the time to press forward with transformation of our nation's defenses," he said. "The men and women in uniform who are risking their lives in Iraq, in Afghanistan and elsewhere in the war on terror need our support, and they need the tools to prevail in this war and to prevail and prepare for the next."

Three is the magic number. After 33 years in the Army and three wars, Col. Bob Nett's perspective changed.

The former OCS commander thought "infantry was it" when he pinned on his gold bar in 1942. Time and travel changed his mind.
