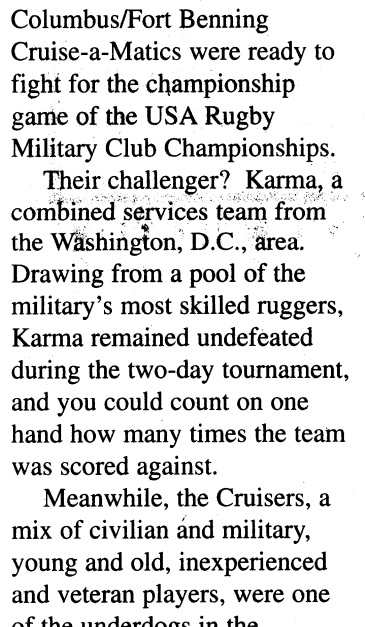
Although the tournament marked the end of the 15-player season for the Cruisers, the team is gearing up to kick off its summer 7-player season at the end of the month and new players are always needed, Krueger said.

The team practices from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays at the "Cruiser Dome," behind Dolly Madison Bakery on Victory Drive.



To get to the pitch from Interstate 185, take Exit 1-A onto Victory Drive.

Go to 22nd Avenue and take a right. Follow this road across the gravel intersection and straight through the gate.

> "The (Cruise-a-Matics) are a mix of experienced and inexperienced players. For a handful of them, this is their first season, and they were out there in the championship finals, playing their hearts out against a team of all seasoned players. The boys really gave it their best shot, and you can't ask for more than that."

Cruisers forward Myers Smith protects the ball and fights to stay on his feet while fending off fullback Rich McCormick from Karma, a combined services team composed mostly of service-select ruggers.

Rob Snow kicks for the conversion after the Cruisers scored.

ABOVE: Cruiser Sean Schaefer took a hit to the head that required four stitches during the second game of the two-day tournament. But after getting the medic's approval, he wrapped it and played in the team's remaining three games.

RIGHT: Cruisers back Lee Shannon plows through an attempted tackle by a Karma rugger during the Cruisers' last game Saturday.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Army 10-Miler pre-qualifier — Fort Benning will hold two pre-qualifier races for the post's Army 10-Miler team. Racers with the top times will earn spots on the team.

Race dates are May 15 and June 19. Races will begin at 7 a.m. in front of the Santiago Fitness Center, and are open to all active-duty military.

Registration will begin at 6 a.m. on race mornings. For more information, call 544-9486.

Hunter's Harvest Cards — All hunters who harvested deer, turkey and feral swine during hunting season need to turn in their harvest cards (Form 200-3) by June 1.

The cards may be returned to the Outdoor Recreation office (Build 1707) or mailed to Outdoor Recreation, P.O. Box 53323, Fort Benning, GA 31905. If you want a receipt, use certified mail with return receipt requested.

Failure to return the harvest card will result in revocation or suspension of hunting privileges for one year.

For more information, call 545-7978 or 544-7319.

Aerobics classes — The Briant Wells Fitness Center Aerobics Program is in full step.

The center offers box aerobics, aeromix, step combo, core crunch, yoga and aqua aerobics. The cost is $25 per month or $3 per class. For more information, call 545-4388.

Lucky Bucket Sweepstakes — Lucky Bucket Sweepstakes 2 is back with more prizes and more chances to win!

One red colored ball will be dropped into Fort Benning Golf Course's range ball machine each week until Monday, May 31. The lucky patron who gets the ball will have the opportunity to win prizes such as a Casio sports watch, Samsonite luggage set, George Forman grill, a Vivitar digital camera and more.

The promotion is open to all authorized MWR patrons with the exception of golf course employees and staff directly involved in the program.

Pick up entry forms at the Follow Me Golf Course Pro Shop or send a request to: Lucky Bucket Sweepstakes 2. 4700 King Street, Alexandria, VA 22302. Visit Fort Benning Golf Course or call 687-1940 and 'Drive to Win!'

Saturday bike rides — Saturday bike rides are in full gear. Riders meet at 10 a.m. at Briant Wells Field House and ride 10, 15, 20 miles or more. All you need is a bike, helmet, water and plenty of energy. For more information, call 545-9987 or 545-4388.

Soldier wins Silver at World Cup

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

ATHENS, Greece — A Soldier with the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit took the victory stand at the International Shooting Sport Federation World Cup April 26.

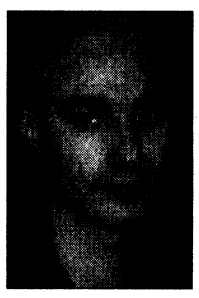
Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas finished second by less than two points to Guy Starik of Israel and brought home the Silver Medal in the Men's 50-Meter Prone Rifle competition.

After shooting 597 points out of 600, Starik shot 104.7 out of 109 and won the Gold Medal with a total score of 701.7 out of 709. Tamas shot 596 and got a 104.1 in the finals for a total of 700.1.

Chrisitan Lusch of Germany took the Bronze Medal, shooting a 596 with 103.8 in the finals for a total of 699.8.

Raised in Columbus, Tamas started shooting in 1978 with the Fort Benning Junior Rifle Team and graduated from Kendrick High School in 1983. He enlisted in the Army in 1986 and was assigned to the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit.

He served with the Army Marksmanship Unit for seven years before being assigned to the 1st Battalion, 506th Infantry Regiment, in Korea in 1992. Tamas returned to the USAMU in 1993.



He is a two-time Olympian. In 1992, he was an alternate, and in 2000, he placed 13th in Prone Rifle at the Olympics in Sydney, Australia. Tamas set the Prone Rifle world record with a perfect 600 points and was the 1998 Prone Rifle World Champion.

Last year, he won the Gold Medal and an Olympic Quota Slot at the Pan-American Games.

Tamas will compete for a slot on the U.S. Prone Rifle Olympic Team at the Olympic Selection Matches at Fort Benning May 25 to 27.

Early-season surprises

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

With the first month of Major League baseball behind us, I've noticed something different. Teams that normally dominate the league are looking horrible so far this year.

The biggest surprise is the Detroit Tigers. Last year, they posted one of the worst records in baseball history with a 43-119 record. They needed to make some big changes during the off-season, and big changes are what they made.

The biggest move they made was picking up catcher Ivan Rodriguez from the Florida Marlins. Rodriguez, long considered one of the top catchers in the league, left the world-champion Marlins for more money. And so far, he's paying dividends for the Tigers.

The Tigers have had their first winning month since May 2001. I give them kudos for their accomplishments and I'm hoping they'll keep it together to win the American League Central Division.

Another big surprise is the Texas Rangers. After trading the best player in the game, Alex Rodriguez, before the season, the Rangers were expected to be one of baseball's worst teams. You would've expected them to be after seeing their opening day line-up.

But the team with no stars is clicking both at the plate and on the mound. Nobody gave the Rangers a chance at the beginning of the season, and look at them now. If they make the playoffs, we'll all know A-Rod was the problem in Texas.

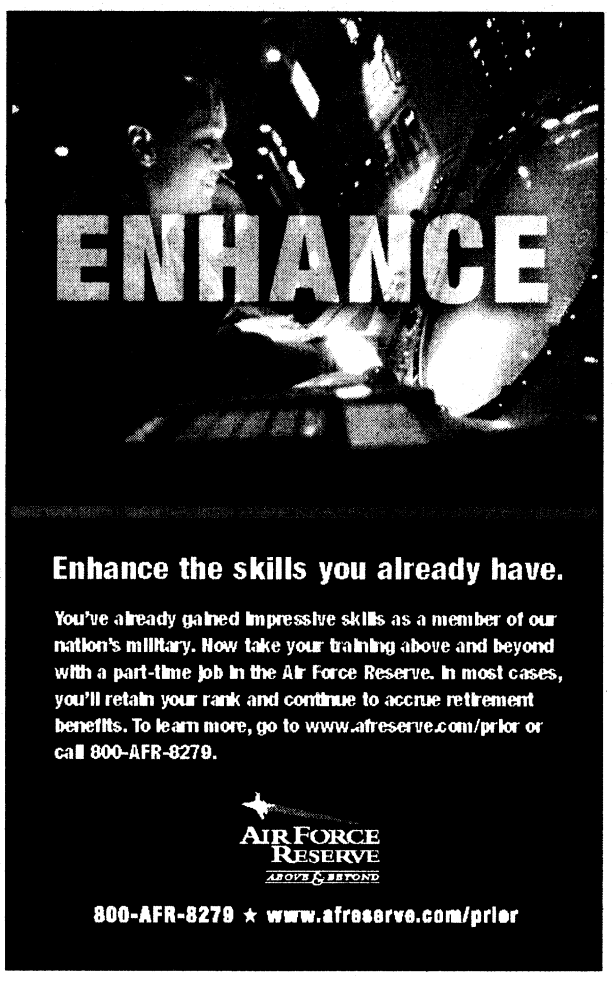
The Boston Red Sox and the New York Yankees are a whole different story. Each team is in its own world. Both spent beaucoup dollars on players. For a while there, it looked like the Red Sox moves beat out the Yankees after they took six of seven games from them. But the Yankees are currently on a big winning streak and the Red Sox are on a big losing streak, so I don't know what to think anymore on this subject.

Everyone said the Atlanta Braves would not win their 13th straight division title. Everyone said they lost too many players and they don't have what it takes anymore.

I disagree. Throughout their string of division titles, the Braves have gotten the job done in some form or fashion. In the 90s, they won it pitching, and in the last few years, they won it hitting.

This year, they have a bit less than what they're used to, but I still look for them to come out on top.

And, of course, there are a few teams that I see a major disappointment in.



The biggest is the San Francisco Giants. True, they do have Barry Bonds, but they have nobody in his supporting cast. Bonds can't do it all, and for the Giants to do anything this year, the players around him are going to have to step up, or they're going to need to make some trades and bring in players who will help.

I would do the same thing other teams are doing to Bonds — intentionally walk him. If nobody's going to pick up the slack and drive him in, why not? It's the smartest thing to do.

I'm also disappointed in the Oakland Athletics. They're supposed to have one of the best starting rotations in all baseball. Frankly, they stink right now. The only bright spot on the team is pitcher Tim Hudson, one of the best pitchers in the American League. If the rest of the A's can follow his example, I see them easily turning their season around. I guess we'll have to wait and see.

I know it's still early in the season, but some of these teams are making big steps. As the season progresses, we'll find out who are contenders and which are pretenders.

XFOR platoon test bed for future

Cutting-edge equipment now being used

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

About two months ago, the 29th Infantry Regiment stood up a new experimental force platoon.

The platoon, known as the XFOR, works in conjunction with the Soldier Battle Lab and is responsible for testing cutting-edge, nonstandard equipment and new tactical formations and practices, said Edward Davis, Soldier Battle Lab vice deputy director.

"The experimental force is designed to execute live, virtual and constructive experiments in support of emerging Army initiatives," said Lt. Col. David Shepherd, 29th Infantry Regiment deputy commander.

Shepherd said the unit's mission is important because it "provides the Army with an enabling force to test and proof emerging initiatives."

Davis said the XFOR is designed to test and evaluate new equipment for actual line units, which, because of the current operational tempo, don't have the time to try out new gear and, when in a deployed status, need equipment that has already been fully evaluated and can be relied upon in a combat situation.

"If there is technology or a capability that needs to be looked at," Davis said, "it can be sent to the (battle lab). We can use the experimental force, run it through its paces and then, if it is ready, we could actually put together the TTPs (tactics, techniques and procedures) and take it to a unit that is going to deploy to an operational theater or is actually in an operational theater, and XFOR will have done the work with it ahead of time.

"More importantly," he said, "if it doesn't work out, we can turn it back to whoever sent it, whether it was a contractor or program manager, and tell them it's not really ready for prime time and explain to them the problems and areas that need work."

The unit is also responsible for experimenting with new ways to organize units and forces, as well as new battle tactics and futuristic technology like robots, he said.

The XFOR uses a combination of high-tech simulations at the battle lab's simulations center and live iterations to evaluate these concepts and technologies and then provides feedback.

Reserve unit to train Army plus-up

Drill sergeants mobilized for infantry training

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

The 1st Brigade, 84th Division (Institutional Training) has been mobilized at Fort Benning to help the Infantry Training Brigade train the additional 2,225 infantry Soldiers coming through infantry basic training this fiscal year and the 6,145 Soldiers expected in fiscal 2005.

This is the largest mobilization of this type of unit since World War II, said Maj. Kevin Rushing, executive officer of 1st Battalion, 329th Regiment, the new infantry one station unit training battalion at ITB.

The plus-up is a part of the "temporary" upsizing of the Army by 30,000 Soldiers during the next few years, the majority of which will be infantry Soldiers, said Col. Brian Baldy, ITB commander. The Army will gain 37 new infantry battalions by the end of fiscal 2007.

"We are under the new Army concept of the expeditionary forces. The requirement is to increase the number of infantry Soldiers to fulfill that mission," Rushing said. "For the Army to expand its expeditionary forces, we need more infantry Soldiers. In its current component, ITB could not produce the amount of Soldiers the Army needs to produce in the next two years."

The 84th received orders mobilizing them to Fort Benning for 365 days May 6. They arrived at Sand Hill three days later.

Building 3105, former home of 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., is now the 1st Bn., 329th Regt., which will receive its first cycle of OSUT infantry Soldiers for training May 20.

The battalion will have five companies. Each company will consist of 12 drill sergeants, a company commander, an executive officer, a first sergeant, and an armorer and supply training NCO.

Currently, there are approximately 90 reserve component drill sergeants,

Prison abuse 'failure in leadership'

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Detainee abuse allegedly committed by U.S. Soldiers at Abu Ghraib prison in Iraq resulted from a lack of leadership, Army Maj. Gen. Antonio M. Taguba told the Senate Armed Services Committee Tuesday.

Early in the Capitol Hill hearing, Taguba was asked his opinion on what went wrong at the Baghdad detention facility.

Taguba, who headed the investigation and prepared the report on alleged detainee abuse at the prison, asserted there was "failure in leadership ... from the brigade commander on down" at Abu Ghraib.

There was a lack of discipline and supervision at the facility, the general observed. Soldiers received "no training whatsoever," he said, on internment or resettlement operations or on the Geneva Convention during their tour of duty at the prison.

The Abu Ghraib scandal erupted April 28 when CBS's 60 Minutes II program aired photographs depicting U.S. military guards humiliating naked Iraqi prisoners.

Seven Soldiers have been brought up on criminal charges related to allegations of abusing Iraqi detainees at Abu Ghraib.

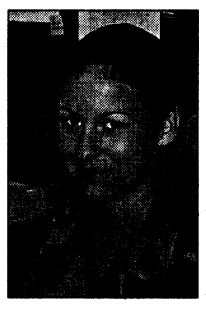
The officer in charge of military police guards at the prison, Army Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, commander of the 800th Military Police Brigade, has received an official admonishment.

Taguba told the committee he found no evidence of a standing policy at the prison for MP guards to first soften up prisoners before questioning by military intelligence.

"I believe that they did it on their own volition," the general said.

"We didn't find any order whatsoever ... written or otherwise, that directed them to do what they did."

Taguba said the alleged perpetrators used their personal cameras to take the photographs.



"The photographing of prisoners, especially with private cameras, is against the rules," Air Force Lt. Gen. Lance L. Smith, U.S. Central Command's deputy commander, said to the committee.

Cambone told committee members that all of the facts regarding alleged detainee abuse aren't in yet.

Other investigations are ongoing, including a probe into military intelligence operations.

What example do you set?

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

I don't get on the soapbox often, but this time, I just can't help myself. Recently, a Soldier called out one of the troops in my section for an on-the-spot correction. OK. No big deal.

But at some point in the reported exchange, my Soldier counter-corrected the individual — who had not yet identified herself — pointing out that she was doing the same thing she had harped on him about.

She took this opportunity to identify herself and to respond, "I'm an NCO. Don't question what I do."

Now I don't know about you, but I'm human. I make mistakes all the time. I forget things at home, oversleep my alarm now and then, procrastinate ... But one thing I can honestly say is that no matter how imperfect I am, I care enough to try and to admit when I fail or when I'm wrong. And never, NEVER, in my life would I think of telling a Soldier that being an NCO puts me above what I expect of them, that I am allowed to bend the rules to my advantage even as I try to enforce them.

Being in a position of authority doesn't give you power; it gives you responsibility. Responsibility for Soldiers and responsibility to Soldiers.

Anyone who's ever been through that four-week rite of passage known as PLDC has heard or read it at least once — all Soldiers deserve good leadership.

Good leadership is about caring about Soldiers, respecting them and influencing them. And everything a leader does influences a Soldier in some way, for better or for worse.

So what happened here?

Thankfully, the Soldier in this scenario was an NCO during his first enlistment in the Army, so he's older and wiser than, say, a new private fresh out of basic training.

But suppose he hadn't been. Suppose he was in his first months in the Army, just starting to get into the swing of things and develop whatever attitude he's going to have about being in the Army.

What message would that NCO have sent him?

That leaders are right simply because of what's on their collars? That they have their own set of rules?

That he can't speak up when something isn't right because he doesn't have enough rank?

It may seem small and insignificant, but every interaction you have with a Soldier — whether you're an officer or an NCO — helps shape that Soldier's perspective, to develop them and to communicate something to them.

What message are you sending?

Discipline: Do what's right

Never in recent memory has it been more important to reflect upon our Army Values, the Soldier's Creed, and our Warrior Ethos.

Our Army is serving our nation with great courage and honor during very dangerous times.

We enjoy great support and the confidence of the American people we serve, and we are respected around the globe.

In view of current events, we must redouble our efforts, hold our heads high, and drive on to accomplish our individual tasks and collective missions. Integrity is non-negotiable.

Everyone has leadership responsibilities when it comes to the legal, moral and ethical.

Discipline is doing what's right when no one is watching. We are proud of you and our Army.

Drive on!

ARMED FORCES DAY

Reflect on duty

As our Soldiers, Sailors, Airmen and Marines sacrifice their lives in the global war on terrorism, it is fitting that on this Armed Forces Day we pause and reflect on their noble service and honor them for their devotion to duty.

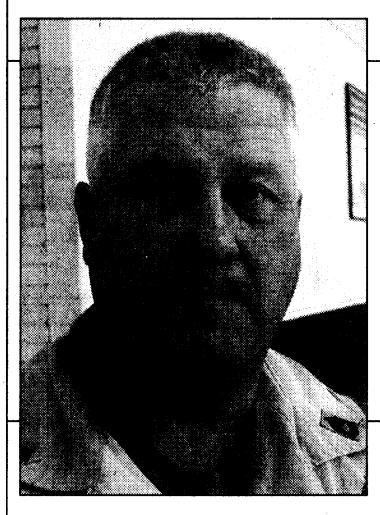
For more than two centuries, our military has defended our precious freedoms, standing between us and tyranny.

Today they continue to carry the battle to the enemy even as they fight to bring democracy to other nations such as Iraq, Afghanistan and the Balkans.

We can thank the Lord that our young men and women have volunteered for this rigorous duty and we recognize the sacrifices of their families who carry on back home, not knowing from day to day the status of their loved ones.

I salute all of you and thank you for your dedication and love for our nation.

Let's all pause this Armed Forces Day and reflect on serving our nation and remember all the ongoing missions being conducted overseas.



God bless our deployed loved ones and their families.

Follow me!

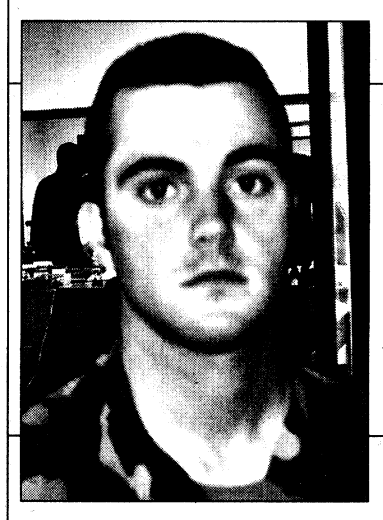
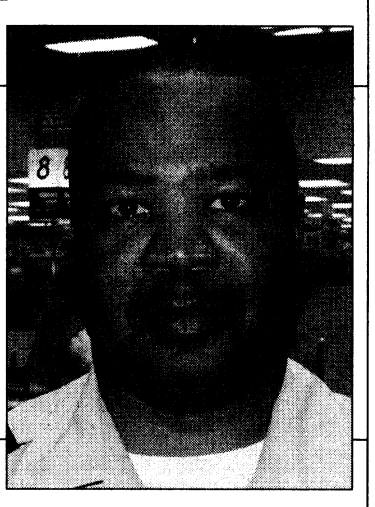
As a Soldier, what are you doing to set the example?

Sgt. 1st Class Jimmie Absher, 277th Maintenance Company — "I show up to work on time and I get my job done quickly and efficiently. If Soldiers see me doing that, they will want to do the same."



Spc. Anthony Albert, 781st Transportation Company — "I use the Army values in my everyday life. For example, if I show respect to those above me and below me, they will do the same."



Maj. Donald Brown, 2145th Garrison Support Unit — "When I was deployed in Iraq, if I didn't have all of my battle gear on, how could I expect my Soldiers to. They're looking to see what I do, because I am their leader."

Sgt. Joseph Denny, 29th Infantry Regiment — "I hope that I am always setting the standard for my Soldiers. If I do that, my Soldiers know what they need to do and they can mimic that."

Staff Sgt. Christopher York, 2nd Battalion, 7th Infantry Regiment — "If there is something wrong with somebody, I show Soldiers how to correct them in a tactful way. I teach them to respect whoever they're talking to."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Soldiers efforts on war against terror supported

I am writing this letter to you because I support you 100 percent in the war against terrorism. I value the freedom that we have in this country. Without you I feel that our democracy and freedom would not exist.

I know that all of you are sacrificing your lives so that the rest of us can have a more peaceful meaning in our lives.

I cannot say I know what you are going through because I am not there. The best I can do is to write my support to you. Hang in there and always be as safe as you can be.

I would enjoy hearing back from as many of you who want to write or e-mail.

On-the-spot corrections necessary

As a former member of the military, I occasionally check in with The Bayonet to see how things are going at my second home.

I read the article about on-the-spot corrections and I totally agree. The American Soldier has been perceived as the "Ugly American" for far too long.

As infantry Soldiers we may consider it acceptable to put on our macho image for our buddies, but we must also remember who we represent. As an American Soldier, we are the ambassadors of each and every American. When we are seen as rude or uncaring, those that are on the receiving end assume that all Americans, Soldiers and civilians, are the same.

I have told my son that profanity is a poor substitute for a poor vocabulary. I'm sure he still uses some four-letter words, but not in my presence and certainly not around his mother, sister, other ladies or small children. He knows that I would not hesitate to perform an on-the-spot correction.

The Green Machine is no different than back in the world. We have the same percentage of rude and uncaring people, but in an effort to increase the level of service to the people that pay our salaries, the good must attempt to overcome the not so good.

On-the-spot corrections is just another tool that we can use to get that job done. Some effects of our service stay with us forever. Hopefully, the majority of those lasting memories will be positive.

Cancer does not stop for nighttime

The American Cancer Society Relay For Life starts at dusk and ends at the next day's morning. The light and darkness of the day and night parallel the physical effects, emotion, and mental state of a cancer patient undergoing treatment.

The relay begins when the sun is setting. This symbolizes the time that the person has been diagnosed as having cancer. The day is getting darker, and this represents the cancer patient's state of mind as they feel that their life is coming to an end.

As the evening goes on, it gets cold and darker — just as the emotions of the cancer patient does: 1 a.m. to 2 a.m. represents the time when the cancer patient starts treatment. They become exhausted, some sick — not wanting to go on, possibly wanting to give up. As a participant, you have been walking and feel much the same way. You are tired, want to sleep, and maybe even want to go home, but you cannot stop or give up.

Around 4 to 5 a.m. symbolizes the coming of the end of treatment for the cancer patient. Once again they are tired, but they know they will make it.

The sun rising represents the end of treatment for the cancer patient. They see the light at the end of the tunnel and know that life will go on. The morning light brings on a new day full of life and excitement for new beginnings for the cancer patient. As a participant, you will feel the brightness of the morning and know that the end of the relay is close at hand.

When you leave the relay, think of the cancer patient leaving their last treatment. Just as you are exhausted and weak, so is that person after treatment.

Thank you for participating in the American Cancer Society Relay For Life. You can make a difference in the life of a cancer patient. Together we will find a cure for cancer.

ITB plans to build infantrymen memorial

Site to honor Soldiers, drill sergeants

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

This is what currently stands in front of Kanell Field at the Infantry Training Brigade. The "Infantry Walk" will be built there in honor of the infantry Soldiers and drill sergeants of the past, present and future. It will include a life-size statue of a drill sergeant made from hammered steel standing between four battalion monuments.

In honor of all infantrymen and those who train them, Sand Hill's Infantry Training Brigade is planning to create the first memorial dedicated to infantrymen and infantry drill sergeants.

"There aren't any monuments or memorials dedicated solely to the infantry Soldier (and) the infantry drill sergeants on Fort Benning," said Capt. Ed Gould, ITB personnel officer.

Col. Brian Baldy, ITB commander, said it's important to honor and recognize the contributions of the infantrymen of yesterday, today and the years to come.

The Infantry Walk will be placed in front of Kanell Field, where ITB Soldiers graduate.

There will be four marble monuments dedicated to each of the regiments in the ITB. These monuments include the regiment's unit crest, lineage and regiment honors.

A life-size statue made from hammered steel will stand between the battalion monuments to recognize the NCOs most responsible for transforming civilians into infantrymen, Gould said. The statue will look exactly like a drill sergeant, including the camouflage BDU pattern.

A local artist, Marvin Gardener, is interested in building the drill sergeant statue, Gould said. Gardener built the eagle statue placed outside of Dexter Elementary School, which is made of steel from one of the World Trade Center towers and sits on a piece of concrete from the Pentagon.

A large concrete slab in the shape of the Follow Me patch will be placed on the ground in front of the drill sergeant statue.

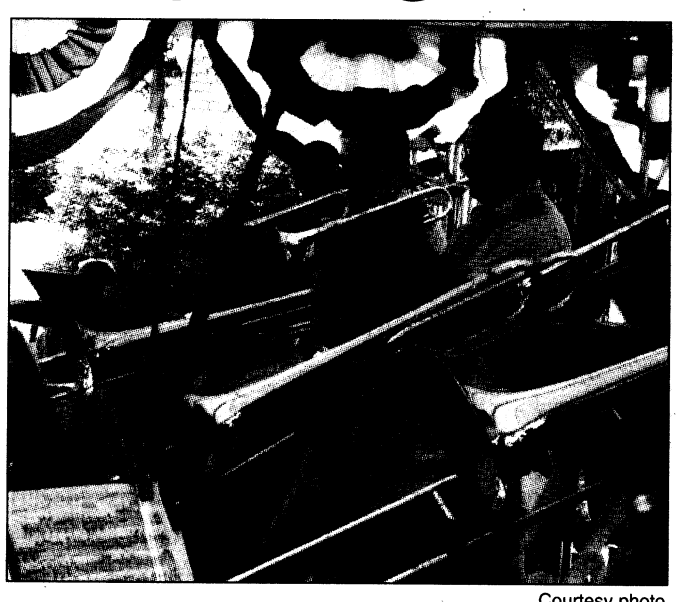
The regimental monuments will be on the sidewalk that borders the entire structure to allow Soldiers, family members and friends of the infantry the opportunity to take photographs of the area.

A Walk of Honor will recognize the honor graduates of each class.

Although the project design is complete and each of the four ITB battalions is garnering responsibility for its monuments, the actual site construction has not begun.

May 7, during the graduation of the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment, and the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Bill Heard III pledged his support to ITB for the building of the Infantry Walk.

"I'm very proud to be associated with Fort Benning Soldiers," Heard said. "They are the finest Soldiers in the world."



"It's a worthwhile endeavor, especially now with the global war on terrorism," Gould said. "Many of our infantry Soldiers will or have already ended up in Iraq, Afghanistan and other dangerous places in the world, leading from the front and taking the fight to the enemy.

"It's something that will be here long after we are gone for future generations to enjoy," he said.

"Infantry Soldiers will come back to Fort Benning at some time or another throughout their careers as drill sergeants or first sergeants," Gould said.

"It will be nice to have something they can visit that represents them."

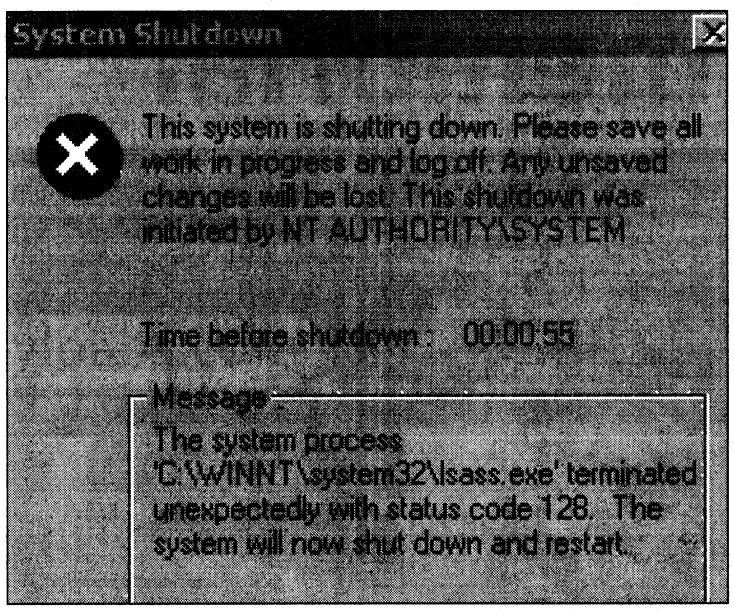
System prevents computer infections

IAVAs ensure virus detection, prevention

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The Fort Benning computer network is made up of more than 5,000 computers — one of the largest networks in the Army. To effectively manage the mass network of computers, the Directorate of Information Management has implemented the use of the Systems Management Server, a Microsoft management tool developed to help administrators perform systems management and troubleshooting tasks, said Jeff Gilbert, DOIM's SMS administrator.

In other words, DOIM can now install programs and run security checks on all post computers from a central location.



Before the SMS, computers had to be updated individually by the user, said Paul Yates, DOIM director.

"DOIM's main function is to ensure security within the network," Yates said.

DOIM's Network Operations Security Center is responsible for tracking and assessing the impact of vulnerabilities that may expose the system to attacks such as worms, viruses or system exploits, Gilbert said.

The Operations Security Office and the post information assurance officers are responsible for making sure all security patches, which fix vulnerabilities, are installed, Gilbert said.

"Long ago, all we had to worry about were viruses being picked up on floppy discs and being passed on from computer to computer," Yates said. Networks, however, have sped up the virus and worm movement and infection of computers.

Courtesy graphic

If you seen this pop-up box on your computer screen, you are infected with the SASSER worm.

In 1998, the Department of the Army started a program called the Information Assurance and Vulnerability Assessment. In 1999, it became a force protection issue.

"There are inherent vulnerabilities in all computers, they can't all be perfect," Yates said. IAVAs ensure all users are notified of vulnerabilities within the system as soon as it's detected, and ensures a patch, or a fix, for the vulnerability is sent out to users.

Patches are often released by the Department of Defense or the Army as IAVAs, said Carol Vasko Norman, information assurance manager.

An example of a recent virus prevented by a patch installation because of an IAVA is the SASSER worm, Yates said.

DOIM received an IAVA with a security patch to be installed to all the computers on the network within two days.

After sending mass e-mails to all computer users on the Fort Benning network to leave their computers on overnight for the installation of the security patch, DOIM managed to meet their deadline.

The SASSER worm prevents anyone from logging onto the Internet by shutting down the computer after a log on attempt.

There is no real way of treating an infected computer except by rebuilding the desktop, Vasko Norman said.

"Before (SMS and IAVAs) we handed people a patch and they had to install it individually," Yates said. "Now we can install a patch within hours to avoid network infections."

DOIM used to have more than 50 computers within the network infected every time a vulnerability wasn't taken care of, Yates said. Now, they have fewer than 12.

SMS does not impair the ability of network users to carry on with their usual work activities, Vasko Norman said. System administrators like Gilbert ensure all patches are installed in all computers through SMS from the network's central location.

The only thing DOIM asks users to do is to leave their computers on overnight when they receive an e-mail requesting them to do so — most of the patches are installed after hours.

"I feel comfortable saying we have one of the strongest networks in the Army," Yates said.

Guardsmen who spot IED just doing job

Spc. Andy Miller
122nd Mobile Public Affairs Detachment

BAGHDAD, Iraq

"BOOM!" The car exploded and there was nothing left but nuts and bolts.

April 12 started out as an average day for Staff Sgt. David Jensen and Sgt. Bruce Hartman of Fox Battery, 202nd Air Defense Artillery, part of the Illinois National Guard, attached to the 1st Cavalry Division. The week had been rough on them. They had been involved in ambushes, attacks and firefights, but today was just another day patrolling the streets of Baghdad.

Then it happened. A broken down car was parked on their patrol route.

"There was something suspicious about it, and we try to check everything that is suspicious," said Maj. Michael Kessel, the Fox Battery commander. "If something doesn't look right, we stop and take a look at it. That is pretty much our (standard operating procedure)."

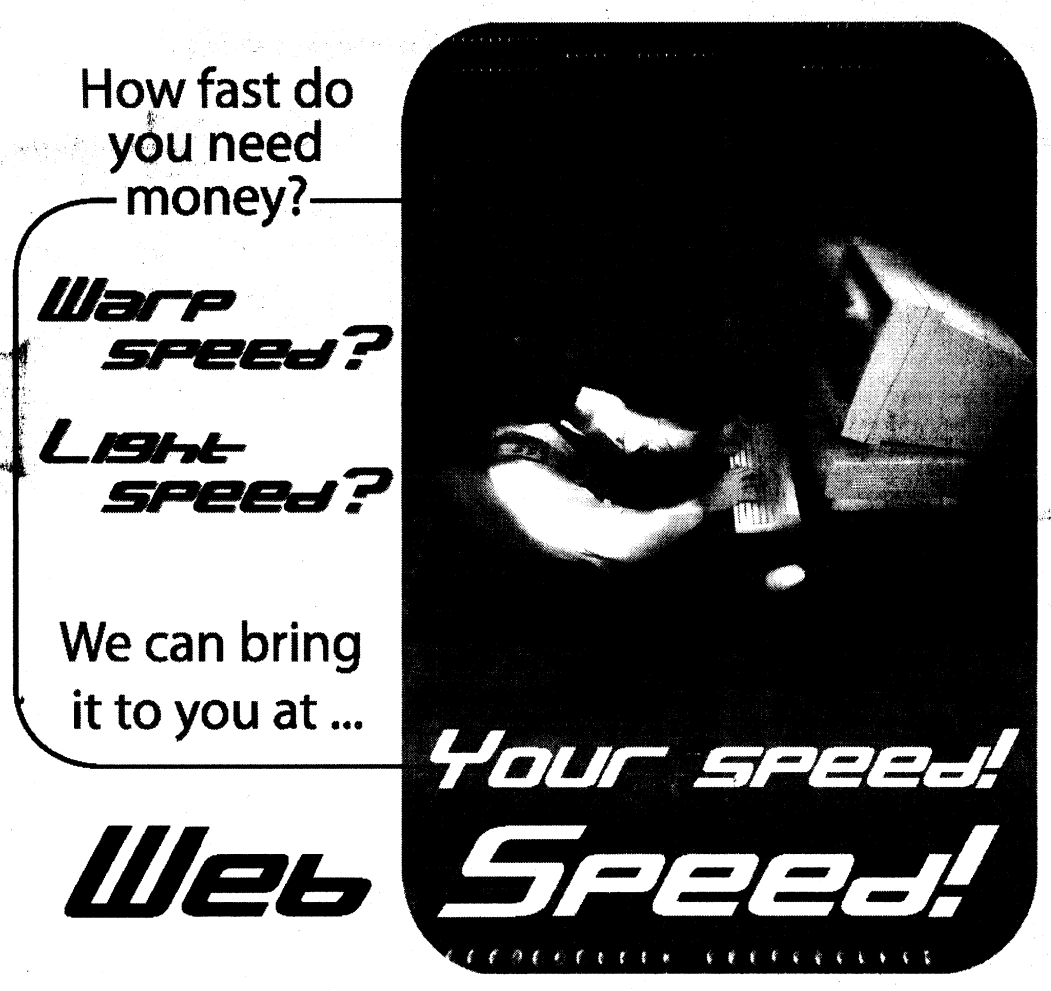
After driving by the dubious-looking vehicle, Jensen decided to turn his patrol convoy around for a better look. His squad put up a security perimeter as Jensen examined the vehicle.

"We were looking at it through the (binoculars)," Jensen said. "We got closer and closer, and we were checking every angle of it. I walked up, saw that there was a cell phone sitting on the dash and a package on the driver side and yelled out, 'get the (heck) out of here', and ran back over."

The patrol called an explosive ordnance disposal crew to the site to take care of the improvised explosive device. When the EOD Soldiers arrived, they noticed Hartman's M-14 sniper rifle and asked him for a favor.

"Hartman was the sniper who took out the detonating device," Kessel said. "The interesting thing is, he's trained as a cook. It took two shots, one to knock out the windows, and then to knock out the detonation device."

With the windows shattered, and the detonation device destroyed, the scene was safe for EOD. They blew the vehicle up in place.



"After the explosion … we drove back and the car was gone," Hartman said. "The body of the car was gone, the frame, the axles, the motor, everything was gone. It was just nuts and bolts."

In an instant, what could have turned into catastrophe on a busy coalition supply route, turned into scrap metal. Jensen and Hartman received Army Commendation Medals from Maj. Gen. Peter Chiarelli, the 1st Cav. Div. commanding general.

According to Jensen and Hartman, they were just doing their jobs. It's one of those things, maybe something you haven't been trained to do, but you step up and do it to the best of your ability, Hartman said.

"At the time we didn't think about a bridge being blown up or anything," Jensen said.

"Just like any IED, it would have done harm to somebody."

Cpl. Rogelio Perez, left, with the LaGrange, Ga., Police Department, talks with Spc. Justin Bingham, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, about the opportunities available for employment in the department Thursday at Infantry Hall during the AUSA Job Fair. Perez, a police investigator and recruiter, is also a retired military policeman. He said Fort Benning is a "gold mine" for employers because of Soldiers' commitment to the military. "That's what we're looking for — commitment." Perez said his department has three to five job openings every few months, and he estimated he talked with nearly 75 people. His was one of nearly 20 law enforcement agencies from Georgia, Alabama, Florida, New York and New Jersey recruiting Soldiers and civilians. More than 100 booths were set up on the first floor of Infantry Hall.

Contractors to guard gates

Residents to see more MPs on duty

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Beginning June 3, Fort Benning residence will see new faces at the gates and an increase in the number of law enforcement officers patrolling post.

Vance Federal Security Services, the company responsible for access control at several military installations, including Fort Gordon, Ga., and Fort Bliss, Texas, will replace the Department of the Army civilian police with more than 140 "armed and well-trained" security guards, said Rick Pollard, the retired first sergeant who'll be responsible for the guards.

The transition will essentially double the number of law enforcement officers on post, Pollard said, making it possible to put more patrols on the street, something post residence have been clamoring for.

And the hand-off, Pollard guaranteed, will be seamless.

"They'll duplicate the service you're already receiving," he said. "The uniform will be different, but the service will be the same."

The contract with Vance requires applicants to undergo a screening process that includes a security clearance and physical fitness test. They must pass a 120-hour "mini police academy," Pollard said, and one week of on-the-job training.

"This is by no means a check-the-block academy," said Pollard, referring to the training the applicants are undergoing now. "We're not turning out 'rent-a-cops.' These are well-trained professionals with truly awesome qualifications. The training is tough – we've had some attrition already, but that's a good thing. We only want the best, and that's what we've got."

> Vance Federal Security Services

With a starting salary of nearly $15 an hour, the security positions have drawn applicants from the Columbus and Phenix City area, where entry-level law enforcement officers are making less. A lot of retired and former Soldiers have also applied.

Retired Maj. Bill Hoye, Fort Benning's chief of police, said the Vance contract was mandated by the DA when the Reserve and National Guard troops who manned the access control points after 9-11 were demobilized.

"There is simply no such thing as an open post anywhere anymore," Hoye said. "That's not going to change, and with this new contract, nothing's going to change as far as the service at the check points goes. But it'll mean a big change for us. We'll be able to put more (officers) in post neighborhoods."

U.S. Army Fitness School volunteers at Columbus school

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Selfless service. Sandwiched between respect and honor in the Army stack of values, it is the hallmark of a patriot and a Soldier.

Whether risking life and limb in dusty towns in Southwest Asia in the name of freedom, or stopping on the side of the road to help a young mother change a tire in the midday sun, selfless service is an Army cornerstone.

The civilian and military employees at Fort Benning's U.S. Army Physical Fitness School have found their own way to live up to that standard. As partners in education with the Woodall Center, the unit organized and ran a field day at the center Tuesday.

The center is a state-funded school serving severely mentally handicapped and socially handicapped children whose behavior is too disruptive for traditional classrooms, said Jane Beech who teaches there.

Field day consisted of five events, including a soccer ball kick, 50-meter foot race, three-legged race, medicine ball throw, standing long jump and tug-of-war.

Sgt. 1st Class Steven Saenz, an instructor-writer at the school, said the volunteers try to promote fitness in whatever they do.

"A lot of these kids, with their disabilities, don't get many chances to do these kind of activities," he said.

After placing first in his class in almost all the events, Sammy Gary, a sixth-grader, spent the morning proclaiming his athletic prowess to a group of friends.

"I like school, but when I grow up, I'm gonna play football for the Raiders," he said.

And this crew of PT experts are more than happy to help him reach his goal.

Steve VanCamp, the fitness school's chief of doctrine, said the reason he volunteers is because of an experience he had as a YMCA director.

He remembers a young man named Ricky who was confined to a wheelchair and could barely operate the controls for it.

A few years later, VanCamp said he ran into Ricky again, this time at a YMCA-sponsored swim meet.

Susie Sironi, a Woodall Center teacher, left, and Steve Van Camp, right, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School chief of doctrine, help Shakima, 10, and Antrell, 8, go the distance during the three-leg race that was part of the field day the APFS put on Tuesday.

"Here was this kid, paralyzed from the waist down, swimming the length of the pool," he said. "Ricky had more courage than I ever did about anything."

The partnership with the Woodall Center goes back more than five years, Van Camp said.

Over the years, he said, the fitness school staff has incorporated a lot of different activities into its PIE program.

On May 7, the staff turned out at the Columbus Special Olympics for the fourth year in a row.

Lt. Col. William Rieger, U.S. Army Physical Fitness School commandant, remembers the smiles of these children when they succeed in these activities.

"These are just those special moments in life," he said. "They are priceless and that's why we come out here to do it — it's the right thing to do."

"Fort Benning has historically always been a big part of the local community," said VanCamp.

"An installation should always have a great rapport with its civilian community. This is one of the ways we build that rapport."

Delray Stephens, a new teacher at Woodall, said he agrees the fitness center staff is doing the right thing for the center.

"I think it's another branch of their service — them extending their hand to support the community," he said. "Volunteers coming out to help with physical activities is so beneficial to these kids."

To find out how you can help the Woodall Center, call Principal LaNora Emziah at 649-0760.

For more information about volunteer opportunities in the area, call Hands on Columbus at 689-3384.

Army leadership condemns all detainee abuse

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The alleged detainee abuse by some 320th Military Police Battalion guards at the Abu Ghraib prison is not as widespread as some believe, according to initial findings of an investigation into that abuse, Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker recently told congressmen.

Schoomaker and acting Secretary of the Army Les Brownlee joined Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Gen. Richard Myers in discussing the alleged detainee abuse with members of the Senate and House Armed Services Committees during separate committee meetings May 7.

Referring to the investigation conducted in February by Maj. Gen. Antonio Taguba, deputy commanding general for Support, Coalition Forces Land Component Command, into the specifics of the alleged detainee abuse at Abu Ghraib — and to see if similar abuse may be occurring elsewhere in Iraq — Schoomaker said the Taguba Report praised three MP battalions in Iraq for doing the detainee job right with similar missions and under similar circumstances as the 320th MP Battalion.

Though not in the operational chain of command of the MPs accused of detainee abuse, Schoomaker said he still took the incidents personally, as he is responsible for providing combatant commanders trained and ready forces.

"There is no question that the potential consequences of this incident are huge, but we must not forget that they are not representative of the Army or that they are the acts of a few," Schoomaker said.

He said the Army is taking the incident very seriously, but the system will work to punish those responsible, and the Army will adapt from what it learns.

Asked if improper training of an Army Reserve unit led to the situation at Abu Ghraib, Schoomaker replied that the Army has only one standard for all units, whether they are Reserve, National Guard or active forces.

Brownlee told the committees that preliminary investigations show the vast majority of Soldiers within Central Command are fully aware of their responsibilities to treat detainees humanely and live up to Army values.

"We will find how and why this happened, and will ensure those responsible for these shameful and illegal acts are held accountable," Brownlee said.

The secretary listed some actions the Army has already taken to ensure similar incidents do not occur:

- Refresher training on the Law of Land Warfare and the responsibilities of the Geneva and Hague Conventions with special emphasis on the handling of prisoners and other detainees has been given to all MP and military intelligence Soldiers who are involved with detainee operations in Iraq and Afghanistan.
- All deploying Army Reserve MI Soldiers are mobilized at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., so that they get the most current instruction on their responsibilities prior to deployment.
- Mobile MP training teams have been sent to all 10 combat training centers to ensure detainee instruction is part of advanced individual training and other courses.
- Lessons learned from are being distributed to the Army's National Training Center, Calif., the Joint Readiness Training Center, La., and the Combat Maneuver Training Center in Germany, to test deploying detainee operations units.

The public is invited to attend.

CID brief

The U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command is seeking information pertaining to the larceny of a 2003 Kawasaki ZX636-B motorcycle from the parking lot adjacent to Building 2939.

The incident occurred between noon April 11 and 5 p.m. April 12.

In an effort to identify and apprehend the perpetrator(s), CID is requesting the assistance of the local community

Anyone who may have information concerning this individual or the whereabouts of the motorcycle should call the CID duty agent at 545-8916 or the military police at 545-5222.

Thrift Savings Plan

Open Season for the Thrift Savings Plan has begun and will run through June 30. During the Open Season, you can start or increase (if you are contributing less than the maximum) your contributions.

The TSP is the federal government's long-term, tax-advantaged 401(k) type savings plan. The TSP consists of five funds where you can put your money.

To find out more about the TSP, visit the TSP Web site, www.tsp.gov, attend a class from 10 a.m. to noon June 11, or call the ACS Financial Readiness Program at 545-5485.

Ranger Memorial stones

The Ranger Memorial Foundation, Inc. is an organization dedicated to honoring the U.S. Army Ranger and their sacrifices to our nation through a granite monument located on post.

The foundation also offers academic scholarships to eligible individuals and help to Ranger families in distress.

Funds for the services are raised through the sale of engraved granite stones on the Ranger walkway, individual and corporate donations and the Combined Federal Campaign. To purchase a stone, donate, or apply for a scholarship, log on to www.rangermemorial.org to download the forms.

The cutoff date for this year's engraving is June 1. Applications received after that date will be engraved in the summer of 2005.

Sergeant Major board

The Department of the Army sergeant major promotion selection board will convene June 4.

All master sergeants or first sergeants with a date of rank June 1, 2002 and earlier with a basic active service date between June 1, 1979 and June 1, 1994 are the zones for consideration.

Call your personnel sergeant or call the Personnel Service Branch at 545-5646, 545-2602 or 545-2611 to schedule an appointment.

Separating Soldiers

The Fort Benning Adjutant General office would like to help Soldiers separating from the military.

Separating Soldiers with an ETS can expect to have orders published between 60 and 90 days prior to their departure on transition leave, or their separation date, whichever is earlier.

Separating Soldiers must see the Army Career and Alumni Program and attend a pre-separation briefing 90 to 120 days.

This is mandatory.

All of the information can be accessed through the Veterans Affairs homepage at www.va.gov.

For more information, call the local Veterans Affairs Office, located in Building 2617 in Soldiers' Plaza at 545-4887. The Transition Center is in Building 2619 or call either 545-5400 or 545-5424 or see your unit personnel NCO.

ID Card office extends hours

Now effective, the Main Post ID Card Section will extend its Wednesday hours of operation to 6 p.m. This is to accommodate customers who find it difficult to obtain ID cards during the normal hours of operation, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Also, the ID Card Section is operational with reduced manning hours during lunch hours, 11 a.m. to 1 p.m.

eArmyU Order of Merit list

A standard Order of Merit List must be used to enroll all eArmyU students. The use of the OML will ensure the same criteria will be used for the selection of all Soldiers enrolling in eArmyU throughout the Army.

The Army Education Center will continue to conduct the eArmyU briefing at 9:30 a.m. each Wednesday in Infantry Hall. Only those Soldiers who are listed on the unit's OML will be eligible to attend the briefing.

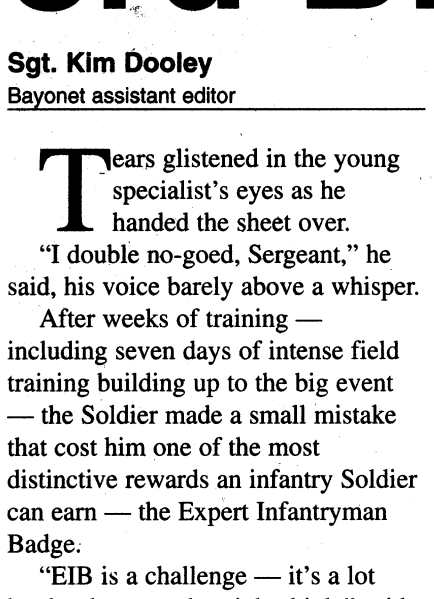
Spc. Stephen Lebel, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, employs an M-18 A1 Claymore mine during 3rd Brigade's Expert Infantryman Badge testing Wednesday morning. Lebel was one of about 375 Soldiers attempting to earn the badge.

3rd Brigade troops try for EIB

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Tears glistened in the young specialist's eyes as he handed the sheet over.

"I double no-goed, Sergeant," he said, his voice barely above a whisper.



After weeks of training — including seven days of intense field training building up to the big event — the Soldier made a small mistake that cost him one of the most distinctive rewards an infantry Soldier can earn — the Expert Infantryman Badge.

"EIB is a challenge — it's a lot harder than people might think," said EIB NCOIC Sgt. 1st Class Mark Boisclair, taking the Soldier's sheet and sending him to join others who shared his fate. "You have to do everything just right — the sequencing, the steps, everything has to be right."

And with 22 stations and more than 50 individual tasks to perform, EIB testing is downright tough, he said.

About 365 3rd Brigade Soldiers and 10 from Fort Stewart, Ga., participated in the yearly testing, which began Wednesday and will wrap up this afternoon.

Before the Soldiers were even eligible for testing, they had to qualify as expert marksman — both in daylight and at night — complete a 12-mile road march, with full "battle rattle" in three hours or less, score a minimum of 70 percent in each event on the PT test, and successfully conduct day and night land navigation.

Spc. Paul Krantz, A Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, throws a grenade during testing Wednesday.

1st Lt. Javier Cortez, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, high crawls while undergoing testing at the movement technique station.

Once they succeeded in their prerequisites and received training at the unit level, the candidates began weeklong, in-depth, on-site training at the test site near Coolidge Range.

There, they ran through the steps of every task they would have to perform properly during testing — everything from basic first aid, to reacting to an NBC attack, to maintaining weapons and employing mines and grenades.

"It comes down to attention to detail — and these Soldiers are already tired and burnt out," Boisclair said, adding that only 25 to 30 percent of the candidates will actually earn their EIB.

But that doesn't mean those who didn't succeed this week have wasted their time, said Maj. Ed House, brigade operations officer.

"EIB is an opportunity to train infantry Soldiers on critical infantry skills and allow them to test their ability to accomplish those tasks," House said. "It's not about earning the badge; it's about the training they receive — training tasks that are critical to (an infantryman's) ability to perform his job and that may save his life.

"This is the best individual training a Soldier will participate in, in any calendar year," he said.

'But for those who successfully complete each task and earn their badges, there is an undeniable pride and respect.

"Having the EIB sets apart those individuals; it sets them above the rest of the infantryman," Boisclair said. "When you've earned this 'mark of a man,' you've proven that you know your job, that you're an expert in your field."

"A Soldier gains immediate respect from other infantrymen (when he has an EIB)," House said.

Pvt. Adam Moline of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Bde., was had his heart set on earning his badge Wednesday morning.

The 19-year-old Yukon, Okla., native has only been in the Army seven months, but he said he was confident as he wrapped up his third station Wednesday morning.

"Getting the EIB shows that you took the time to study the tasks. It proves that you're a professional," he said, adding that most of the Soldiers he's seen with EIBs are NCOs.

Pvt. Adam Moline, Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 3rd Brigade, treats a casualty at the first aid station.

Moline said he felt good about most of the tasks, but wasn't looking forward to what would be the most challenging task for him, range estimation. At that station, the Soldiers had to gauge the distance of several targets in the distance — all within 20 percent accuracy.

Another task Moline dreaded was employing hand grenades. The candidates were given five grenades to complete three tasks — throwing a grenade within a few meters of a target silhouette, throwing a grenade into a bunker from 35 meters away and crawling up to a bunker and tossing the grenade in.

"With the grenade, it's kind of the luck of the draw," he said. "You can be on one day and not make it the next. You never know what the case may be."

Army unveils new modified Chinook helicopter

Kelly Tyler
160th Special Operation Aviation Regiment

RIDLEY PARK, Pa. — Army special operations forces received their first MH-47G Chinook helicopter during a rollout ceremony at aircraft manufacturer Boeing's compound in Ridley Park May 6.

The military's newest rotary-wing airframe, updated and better equipped than its Chinook predecessors, will be flown exclusively by the 160th Special Operations Aviation Regiment (Airborne), headquartered at Fort Campbell, Ky.

To kick off the event, an older MH-47D model flew directly over the thousands of Boeing employees who had gathered to watch the ceremony. Landing nearby, the Chinook discharged its cargo of three special operations Soldiers and a ground mobility vehicle, which rolled across the flight ramp as the door to a hangar opened and the new brand-new MH-47G was rolled out.

Patrick Shanahan, vice president and general manager for Boeing Rotorcraft Systems, handed the first set of symbolic "keys" to the modified aircraft to Chief Warrant Officer Andrew Sentiff and Staff Sgt. Michael Luna, both of the 160th SOAR.

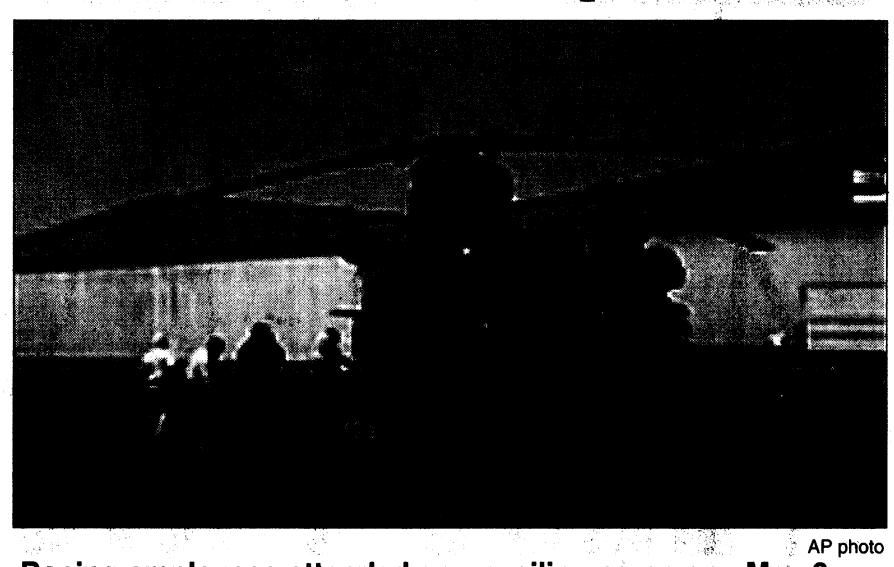
"All of us at Boeing are extremely proud of the Chinook and its record of service with the U.S. Army, Army special operations and our allies around the world for more than four decades," Shanahan said. "The Chinook's unique capabilities show clearly why the Chinook is and will continue to be a central war-fighting asset for your armed forces."

The MH-47 is more than just an airframe, Shanahan said.

"The design and manufacturing of this aircraft (have) been a labor of love and a model of working together," he said. "Teamwork has characterized our program from the start."

Lt. Gen. Philip R. Kensinger Jr., commander of the U.S. Army Special Operations Command at Fort Bragg, N.C., also spoke to the crowd.

"Not only have we all gotten a personal introduction to our 'work horse,' but we have also had the opportunity to shake hands with everyone who helped make this possible," Kensinger said.



"As magnificent as this aircraft is, it is only as good as the people who design it, build it, fly it, and support it," Kensinger said.

Kensinger told the gathered Boeing workers that anyone who contributed to the construction of the aircraft was also contributing to victory in the war on terrorism.

"The equipment (the 160th SOAR flies) is what gets the boots on the ground to fight the Global War on Terrorism," Kensinger said. "It is also the equipment that gets them back safely to their families."

The event also gave the Boeing workers a chance to understand the role of the MH-series aircraft, and it allowed those workers to speak directly to Soldiers who have been affected by the capabilities of the MH-47. Workers and guests checked out both the older "D" model and the newest "G" model following the ceremony.

"This is a great bunch of guys," said John Williams, flight engineer for Boeing. "We want them to be well-protected up there," he said. "I feel better knowing these guys have the best equipment there is."

Boeing employees attended an unveiling ceremony May 6.

The MH-47G has capabilities not found on any other rotor-wing aircraft in the world. Its specialized mission equipment includes:

- Multi-mode radar that permits terrain following and terrain avoidance in all climatic conditions
- A Common Avionics Architecture System-equipped cockpit that enhances joint operability and pilot situational awareness
- Next generation forward-looking infrared, or FLIR
- M-134 Gatling "miniguns" and M-240D machine guns for increased defensive firepower
- Advanced, integrated aircraft survivability equipment
- Oversized main fuel tanks

The Army has approved the purchase of 61 MH-47G airframes. Procurement and distribution will continue through fiscal 2011.

Platoon: Tests emerging techniques and tactics

Davis said he is working to get the unit up to company level to make the unit organization and company-level combat tactics testing realistic and said the 29th Inf. Regt. had to internally reorganize just to field the single platoon.

The platoon currently consists of 44 Soldiers and one officer, but "the concept is for the platoon to eventually grow into a 158 Soldier company," Shepherd said.

Even as a brand new unit, the XFOR platoon has already played a part in two projects.

They recently participated in the Chief of Staff of the Army's Leader to Led study, Davis said.

The unit also fired the prototype XM-8 assault rifle.

"Next," Davis said, "we will be using the experimental force for the Land Warrior Analysis of Alternatives in July in support of the Land Warrior program manager."

He said the Land Warrior analysis will evaluate the performance of the Land Warrior system and test alternatives to the system. It will also provide an evaluation of the cost effectiveness of fielding the system compared to viable alternatives.

Davis said other innovations in the experimental force's future include the testing of a new Air Assault Expeditionary Force. The AAEF evaluation will also assess the effect of networking on Soldier lethality and survivability.

Evaluations like the AAEF and the Land Warrior analysis cost money and Davis said the bills go to several different agencies. Some comes from the Training and Doctrine Command, the Department of the Army, the joint community, various program managers and the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, a Department of Defense technology-scout organization of sorts.

With big projects on the horizon, Davis said he is hoping the platoon can play a vital role in improving the force in the present, while continuing to help develop new technologies and tactics for the future.

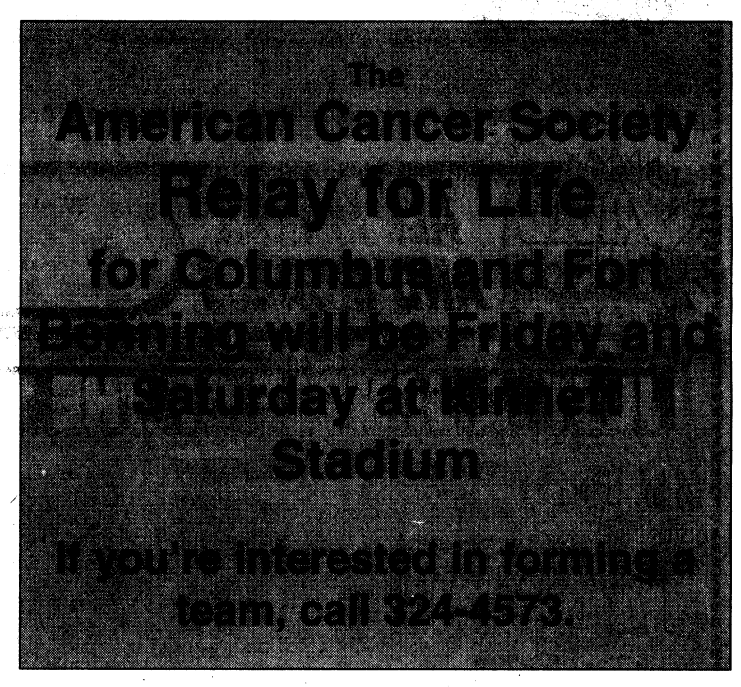
commanders and staff training to prepare for the battalion's first training cycle. Rushing expects to have at least 84 Reserve component drill sergeants on Sand Hill by the end of August.

Two of the four companies that arrived at Fort Benning with the 84th have been tasked out to the 2nd Bn., 58th and the 2nd Bn., 19th Inf. Regiments to create F companies for both of those battalions.

"We are integrating the reserve component drill sergeants and the active duty drill sergeants into companies to have a full integration of reserve and active duty drill sergeants as well as command staff through out the ITB," Rushing said.

Wednesday, the active duty ITB drill sergeants were training the Reserve component drill sergeants at Eagle Tower on Sand Hill.

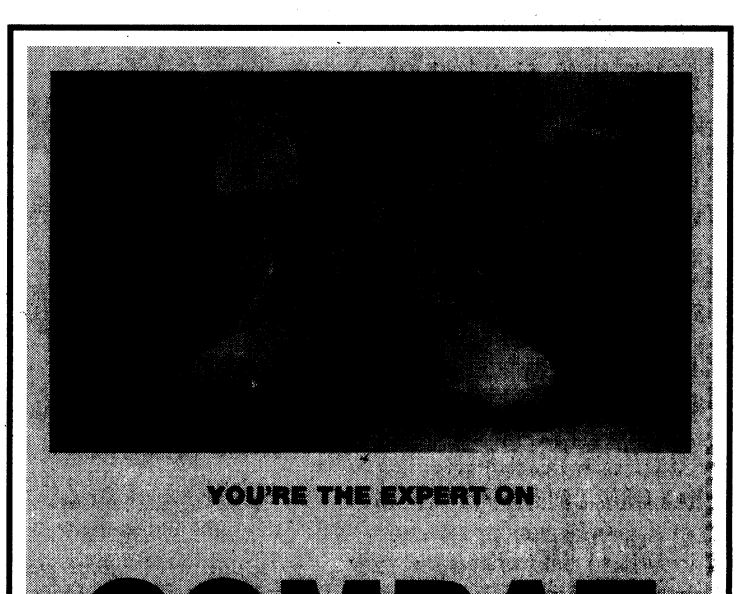
"The training is part of a "check ride" that all new drill sergeants receive once they come to the hill," said Staff Sgt. Robert Dorr, drill sergeant at 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.



The check ride is a two week drill sergeant certification program. During this time the drill sergeants are certified on Fort Benning range procedures, issued certification cards and briefed on the do's and don'ts of the installation, Dorr said.

"Eagle Tower is a confidence building course," said Sgt. 1st Class Donald Kernan, drill sergeant assigned to ITB's Headquarters Support Company. "When a Soldier is done with this course, he has to feel good about himself."

A Reserve drill sergeant for eight years, Sgt. 1st Class William Balinski said he was feeling very confident about being at Fort Benning to accomplish the important mission of training the Army's infantrymen.



"We're all excited to be here," Balinski said. "With the climate overseas right now, we knew we were going to be called on soon. This is our job, the best we can do now is focus on the training."

"This is the only remaining infantry combat Soldier training unit in the reserves, Rushing said. "Our job is to produce the infantry fighting Soldier of tomorrow. Will the conditions be perfect? No. Will it get done? Yes."

Students from B Company, 2nd Battalion (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 11th Infantry Regiment, remain watchful.

"We're trying to teach (the students) that the battlefield is a three-dimensional place. Just because you can't see it, doesn't mean it isn't there. We're trying to remove the assumption that everything is OK. You can't assume anything — you have to know the route is clear; you have to know the objective is secure."

Lieutenants put 16 weeks training to test

The woods of the Ware Range Complex were quiet Tuesday morning — too quiet. In the dim light of sunrise, enemy soldiers remained watchful in their trenches, weary from hours of waiting.

Word had come in the wee hours of the morning that a company of American Soldiers had penetrated their area and pinpointed their position.

They were on their way. Now, the sounds of the forest came alive — every creaking branch, every rustling leaf, every animal in the brush signaled the onslaught of the inevitable assault.

And then, without warning, the wait was over. Artillery rounds shattered the silence, smoke hung around the trenches and bunkers, fire was exchanged at the outposts just meters away from their complex. The enemy soldiers readied themselves, took aim at the brush and trees surrounding their positions.

Within minutes, the sounds of small arms fire had drawn closer. Then, a brief lull. Suddenly, rounds exploded from the tree line. American voices barked orders over the noise of battle, jumped from behind cover alone or in pairs, rushing the bunkers and trenches, weapons raised, triggers squeezed.

In less than 15 minutes, they had taken their objective.

The mission was a success for the men of B Company, 2nd Battalion (Infantry Officer Basic Course), 11th Infantry Regiment — men who road marched farther than 16 miles for more than six hours to reach their objective and hadn't slept for going on 27 hours. But it wouldn't be their last.

The trench and bunker assault was merely the beginning for these IOBC students, who began the culminating exercise of their 16-week training early Monday morning. Once the lieutenants had planned the assault, traveled to the site and successfully secured the objective, they broke down into platoons and conducted a series of individual platoon missions, running into everything from civilians and media on the battlefield to improvised explosive devices. The troopers didn't know their missions ahead of time, or how they would conduct them.

"We've just been told that we'll be performing continuous operations," said a red-eyed 2nd Lt. Cris Ulrich Tuesday morning as he pulled guard on the company's perimeter after the assault.

What would follow the company assault was anyone's guess, said Ulrich, the 3rd Platoon leader's radio telephone operator.

"We'll either move out by foot, conduct an air assault or convoy operations. But we don't know. The missions are just handed out piece by piece."

Ulrich wasn't complaining. He said the element of surprise only enhanced the training, something the cadre intended.

"We want this to be as real as possible for them," said 1st Sgt. Michael Campbell, B Company first sergeant.

Campbell can attest to the importance of realism in training.

"I've been in six separate conflicts," he said, "and they were all different. Pure chaos in its truest form."

That chaos comes when Soldiers don't know what to expect. And in a unit where at least 70 percent of the Soldiers will put their skills to the test in Afghanistan and Iraq in the coming months, learning to react to anything — especially the unexpected — is key.

"This is basically nothing more than reacting to contact," Campbell said. "If you do it right, you're going to get up and see another day. But if you don't …"

Although the company suffered several casualties during its initial assault, many of the lieutenants maintained confidence in the group's ability to accomplish any mission handed to them.

Infantry Officer Basic Course lieutenants evacuate their dead and wounded after conducting a trench and bunker assault at the Ware Range complex Tuesday morning. The assault was one in many missions during the students' culminating exercise. They will graduate at the end of the month.

"When we breached the (enemy's position), our initial plan changed," said 2nd Lt. Mark Hillstrom, platoon leader for 1st Platoon, pinpointing the company's biggest challenge during its assault.

"But it didn't stop us," chimed in 2nd Lt. Matt Johnston, a squad leader in Hillstrom's platoon. "We improvised, adapted and overcame."

"We're all knowledgeable enough to do any mission that comes our way," Ulrich said. "It's just going to be a matter of staying motivated under the added pressure of long nights."

Despite their enthusiasm, the young lieutenants knew more obstacles lay ahead of them.

"We're going to be testing all the individual and collective tasks we've learned in our 16 weeks of training," Hillstrom said. "The sleep deprivation is going to be a challenge. We were all motivated for a big task like the company assault, but it's going to be harder and harder to motivate people to do the small tasks, things like tying down your equipment."

The Soldiers' exhaustion is also going to challenge their decision-making, Hillstrom said.

"We're going to have some tough decisions to make," Johnston said. "And we'll have to make them in less than perfect conditions, especially not having had any sleep."

And that's just as it should be, Campbell said.

"We're trying to teach them that the battlefield is a three-dimensional place — just because you can't see it doesn't mean it's not there," he said, grinning after disclosing the locations of two well-hidden IEDs on the road into the unit's position.

Campbell said the lieutenants would find those IEDs one of three ways — through the reports of civilians on the battlefield, by discovering them on a patrol or by setting them off accidentally.

By late Tuesday afternoon, the group had dismissed the civilian's reports, and a patrol had failed to spot them. It looked like it was going to be a learning experience.

A B Company lieutenant ties to stay awake and alert after the company's trench and bunker assault. The students conducted a 16-mile road march through the night, then went straight into their assault mission without sleep.

"We're trying to remove the assumption that everything is OK," Campbell said.

"You can't assume anything — you have to know the route is clear; you have to know the objective is secure. That's why this week of training is so demanding for these young lieutenants."

Post to hold town-hall meeting

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning will hold its second televised town-hall meeting at 7 p.m. May 24 in Infantry Hall's Classroom 6.

Classroom 6 will hold 200 people, said Chuck Walls, garrison manager, and he hopes to see the seats filled.

"We want this to be well-attended," Walls said. "It's a nonthreatening atmosphere where people can present their issues."

And Walls wants to assure everyone that the garrison wants to hear what those who live, work or do business on Fort Benning have to say.

The garrison commander, Col. Rick Riera, will chair the meeting, and representatives from all post agencies will be on hand to answer questions and address issues.

"It will be a good exchange of questions and answers," Walls said, "and a good chance to get smart on all the changes coming in the next six months."

He said he expects there to be discussion about an upcoming revision of the garrison handbook and about the issuing of the Fort Benning Form 7 by Community Life NCOs to residents who are not complying with post policies.

"The community life NCOs have gotten serious about issuing the Form 7s," Walls said, "and it's in keeping with the commanding general's policy on taking pride and ownership of their areas for individuals and for units."

> "It's a nonthreatening atmosphere where people can present their issues ... It will be a good exchange of questions and answers and a good chance to get smart on all the changes coming in the next six months."
> Chuck Walls
> Garrison manager

Walls said the standard is to answer every question posed during the meeting as quickly as possible, while trying to maintain credibility.

"If I can't do it, I won't tell you I can," he said. "And we may not be able to answer a question right away. We may have to research it and get back to you, but we'll try to (address) every issue."

Evelyn Livermore, president of the post's Mayors Association, said the Mayor's Association has arranged for free child care for residents for the meeting.

The service, she said, will be provided by Fort Benning teen-agers. Parents can drop their children off in Classroom 5.

"I think people don't come to the meetings because they don't have child care," Livermore said. "But now they can bring their children and they'll be taken care of."

Individuals who are unable to attend the meeting may e-mail their issues and questions to townhall@benning.army.mil or phone them in to 545-0928.

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Sick of sitting around in the barracks looking at the walls? Need to get the family out of the house or just take a break? We've got the answer for you. 'Get Outta Here' will appear in The Bayonet each week to highlight recreation and leisure venues right here in the tricommunity. If you would like to suggest a hot spot for the column, call Sgt. Kim Dooley at 545-3367.

Grab the sunscreen, slap on your sandals and head out to Uchee Creek today for an event I'm sure you won't want to miss — Fort Benning's sixth annual Asian-Pacific Luau.

Now, I admit I've never actually been to this little shindig, but if it's anything like the luaus at other installations (to which I have been) and if the word of others is any good, it's sure to be a good time. And if nothing else, it's something different to do with a few hours of your day.

This is no theme party, though. The luau is actually an observance marking Asian Pacific Islander Heritage Month. So you can count on a glimpse of the Asian Pacific Islander culture, including dance, martial arts and some "scrumtralescent"* food.

The main events of the day include performances by the Hula Halau O'Kalei Polynesian Dancers, who will perform authentic, traditional dances and have been known to select partners from the audience. (Did you hear that, single Soldiers? You could be dancing with a beautiful girl in a grass skirt with flowers in her hair.) And don't pass up the martial arts demonstration by Fiama's Martial Arts Academy.

You'll also find free party barge rides on the river (but only if a life jacket won't crimp your style), free face painting, a community drum program (I don't know what this means, but there's only one way to find out ...) and music by Beatin Path (once again, don't know who this is, and if I don't go to the luau, I'll just be left wondering).

For those of you with small children, there will be the usual Kiddie Korner with rides, activities and food.

But of course, what we all really want to know about is the food. On the menu this year: Polynesian pork, teriyaki chicken, fried rice, tropical fruit, and soda or water. And if none of that sounds like it will

Tour teaches history of home, infantry

Despite rain, Riverside residents welcome students

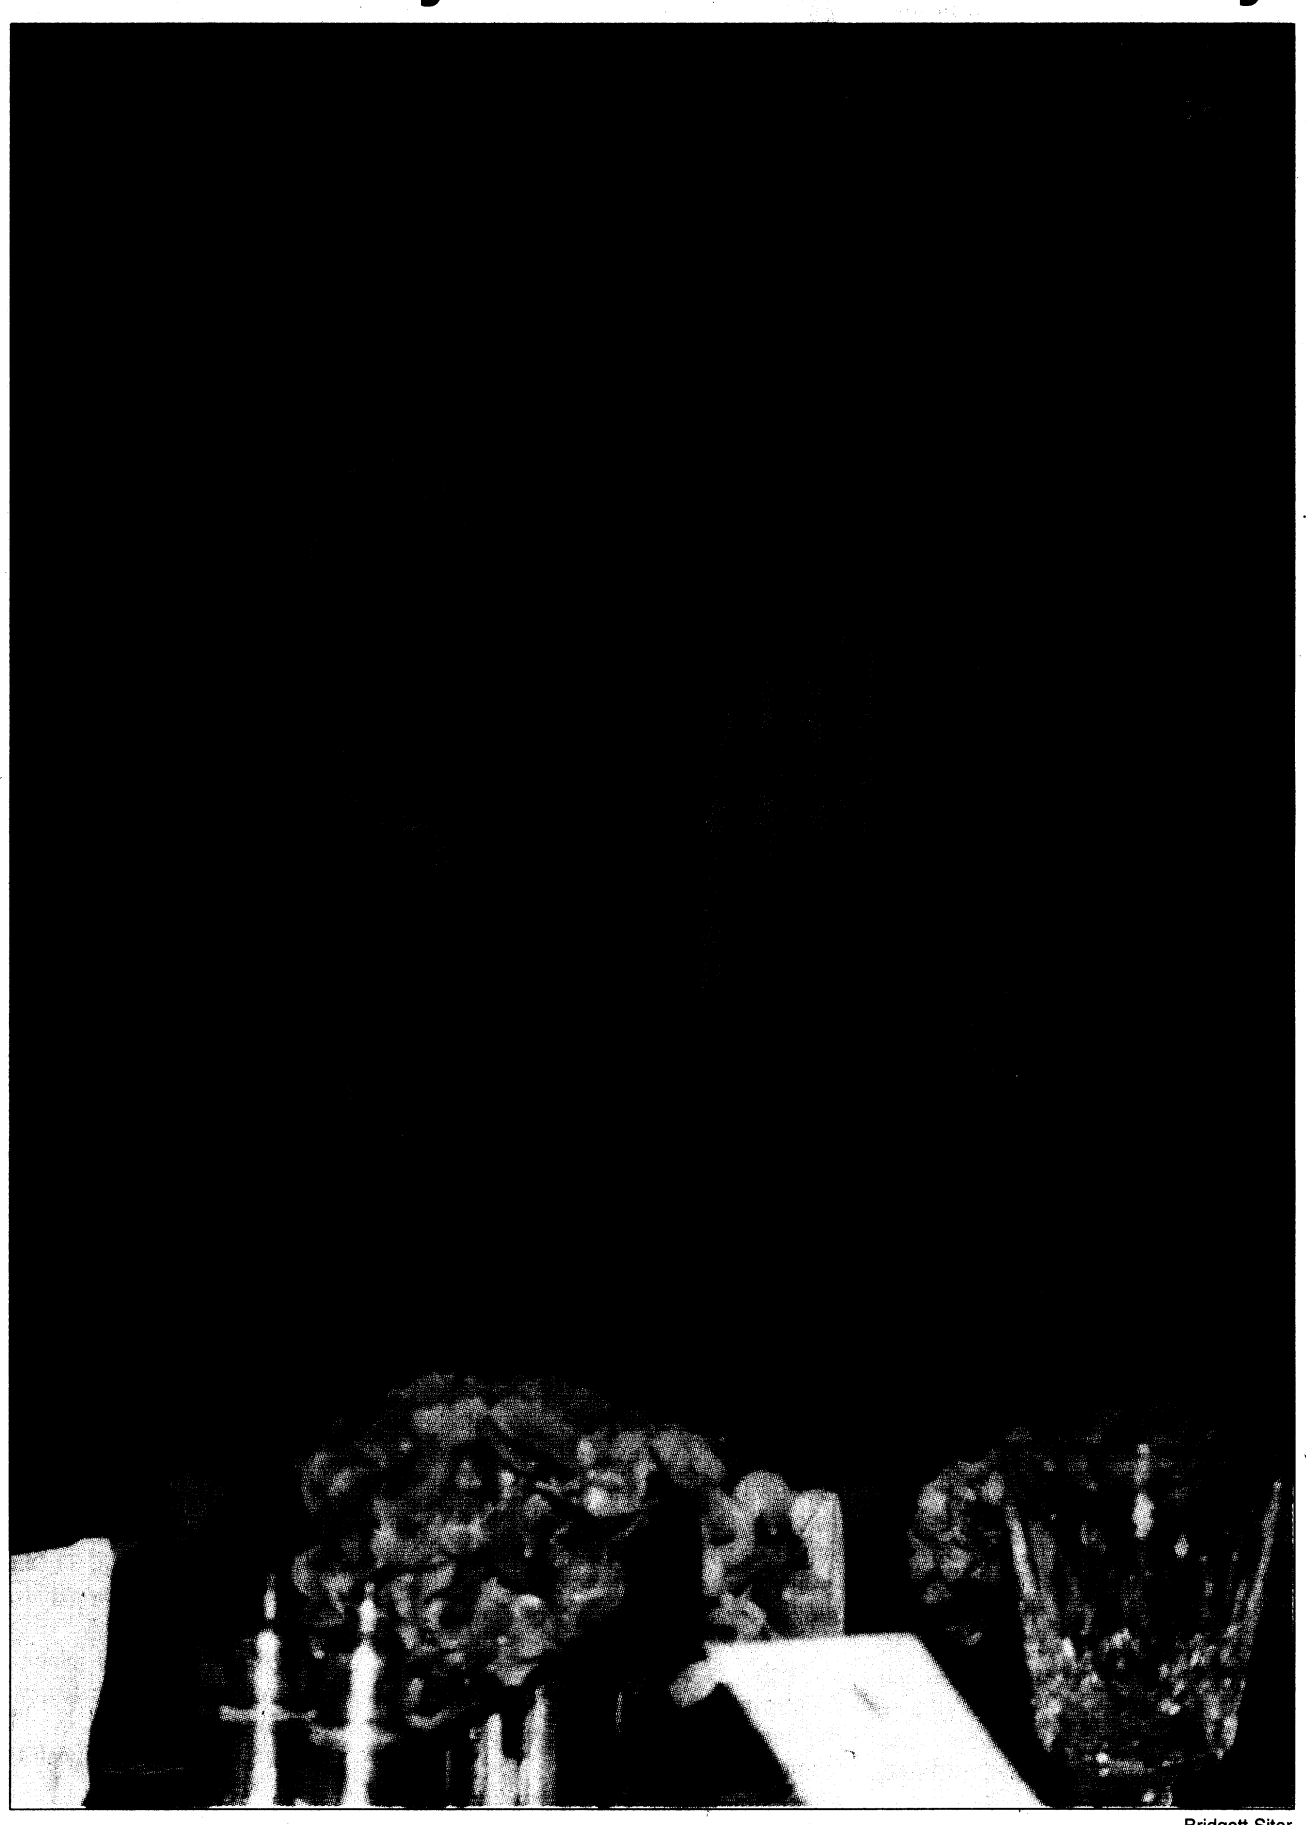
Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff writer

What do you do if 350 children land on your doorstep in the pouring rain and the floor's freshly mopped?

If you're Fort Benning's first lady, you invite them in, mud and all.

Fort Benning fifth-graders, local home-schoolers and students from Columbus' Our Lady of Lourdes and Dawson Elementary toured Riverside, the home of the post commander, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, and his wife, Susan, Wednesday and Thursday.

They learned a bit about the history of the historic residence, its surroundings and the post itself.



"We call it Children at Riverside," said Debra Alexander, instructional support specialist for Fort Benning Schools. "It gives children in the community and children on post who might not get the opportunity to experience the house up close a chance to learn about the house and its environment."

Frank Hanner, director of the National Infantry Museum, explained Riverside's evolution from a summer home for the Bussey family to the Home of the Infantry in 1919, when the Army purchased the property to relocate Camp Benning. He brought artifacts from the museum — weapons and uniforms — to illustrate his lesson.

James Parker, of Fort Benning's Environmental Office, introduced the students to Riverside's earliest residents, the aging native trees that surround the home and several specimens of critters the Bussey family might have encountered when they cleared the land — snakes and birds and such. He also gave each student a pine tree sapling.

Jean Herron, Riverside's historian, led the students on a tour of the home.

"Can you imagine? Three hundred and fifty children in your house! This has just been wonderful," Alexander said. "It's a great way for them to learn about our history."

Mozelle Dunn, a Riverside docent, guides students from Our Lady of Lourdes through the dining room of Riverside Wednesday. Three hundred and fifty students from Columbus and Fort Benning visited the residence to learn about post history.

READING RECOVERY

Program axed locally, safe on Fort Benning

20-year-old program proven successful

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

File this one under Reasons We Can't Afford To Lose Fort Benning Schools.

The Muscogee County School System — which would inherit many of Fort Benning's students should the Department of Defense decide to close post schools — recently announced it will discontinue Reading Recovery, one of the nation's most widely acclaimed literacy programs.

Post residents can rest assured the program isn't in danger of being axed here on post, said Melissa Hayes, who heads the program for Fort Benning Schools, where it was implemented in 1991.

"We actually did lose Reading Recovery here for a short period several years ago," Hayes said. "But they brought it back because it's proven successful. There's nothing else like it."

Kathy Long agrees. The Dexter Elementary School kindergarten teacher was already familiar with the program when her daughter Elizabeth began Reading Recovery two months ago.

"As a teacher, I knew it was a great program, and as a parent, I knew my daughter needed to be there," Long said. "I'm seeing a big difference. She's reading more fluently and her comprehension is so much better."

Reading Recovery is an early intervention program designed to "catch" struggling first-grade readers when the problem is easiest to correct, Hayes said. Students receive 12 to 20 weeks of one-on-one tutoring.

The program has two major goals, Hayes said — to bring readers up to class level and to identify those who need further help. Since the program was implemented in the U.S. in 1984, 80 percent of the students who completed Reading Recovery, and 59 percent of those who started, but didn't complete the program, can read and write within the average range of their classmates. Follow-up studies show they continue to perform well in later years.

Muscogee County Schools relied on funding for the program from an anonymous donor. When they lost those private funds in 2000, local legislators and school administrators convinced state officials to fund it.

But the state provided only half of the estimated $6.2 million needed to keep the program afloat in the district's 33 elementary schools. Budget cuts have made the cost prohibitive for the next school year.

Educational Task Force — The garrison commander would like to recruit volunteers to serve on a new Educational Task Force. The task force's responsibility will be to report to the garrison commander on issues affecting military families and students in surrounding school districts.

The task force will be comprised of parent volunteers who have students in each of the following school districts: Russell County, Harris County, Lee County (Ala.), Phenix City, Fort Benning Dependent School System, Chattahoochee County and Muscogee County.

If you are interested in joining the Educational Task Force, call Dewayne Baldwin at 545-3062 or e-mail dewayne.baldwin@benning.army.mil.

CYS drop box — There is now a drop box by Central Registration, Building 359, for patrons who wish to make Child and Youth Services payments during and after business hours.

Payments must be in the form of check, debit or credit card. Do not leave cash. Payments will be posted the next business day.

Envelopes will be provided; please follow instructions. Payments in cash, check or money order can be made for any CYS program at all program sites except the Youth Center, Building 1056.

For more information, call 545-2079.

New home-school activities — There are new activities for home-school families. They are:

- Computer lab, 1 to 3 p.m. Mondays; fifth grade and younger from 1 to 2 p.m., sixth grade and older, 2 to 3 p.m.
- Swimming activity at Briant Wells, Wednesdays, 1 to 2 p.m. Swimmers must pass swim test to participate.
- Youth Services Gym, Thursdays, 1 to 2 p.m.

All participants must be registered with Child and Youth Services to use these services.

For more information, call the Central Registration Office at 545-2079 or Dewayne Baldwin at 545-3062.

Chapel helps troops on Mother's Day

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
CrossRoads Contemporary Service

Soldiers from across post got the opportunity to say "Happy Mother's Day" in a different way — through a "Video Mother's Day Card" Sunday after the CrossRoads Contemporary Service.

Immediately following the second week of May's four-part series entitled, "For The Ride Of Your Life ... American Choppers: Kelley Hill Style," Soldiers emptied out into the front yard of the chapel surrounded by motorcycles to make one-minute videos wishing Mom well on her special day.

CrossRoads' commitment was to take those videos and get them e-mailed to the mothers of Soldiers "before the sun set."

Someone teased, "Hey, this will do two things: It'll let me tell Mom I love her, and I can prove to her that I actually did go to church!"

In addition to the videos, CrossRoads is planning a big month around the American Choppers theme.

Next week the focus will be, "Blowouts, Breakdowns, and Wipeouts: How to Get Past Anger."

The final week of the series, May 23rd, Soldiers and their families will enjoy a shot at a free motorcycle to be given away, a free barbecue, and even a "biker band" for some revved-up entertainment.

Also, the last week is being billed as a BYOB Sunday (bring your own bike!). There'll be a road rally to Pine Mountain and back for those who want to hit the road together.

CrossRoads is the new chapel service for everyone on post that's looking for a casual, creative, contemporary way to connect with God. It meets on Kelley Hill at 11 a.m..

Faith students vie for top honors in international media competition

Media club plans to raise funds for trip

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

As she waited to board a plane for her return trip to Fort Benning from California last October, Maite Aponte was making plans for her next big trip.

"We're going to Chicago," the Faith Middle School sixth-grader said with conviction.

Aponte is one of eight students, former members of the Stowers News Network, who traveled to Hollywood to attend the Association of Educational Communications and Technology International Media Festival, where they were awarded first place for their seven-minute video on the making of an airborne Soldier.

Six of those students, who were in the fifth-grade at Stowers Elementary School when they produced the film, are now among the 15 members of the Faith Media Club, coached by Lorri Blanchard, Faith's technology teacher.

The club produces WBET — Warrior Bear Educational Television — which airs in the school, and various informational "news minutes" for Fort Benning's Channel 4.

Last week, the club was awarded three first-place finishes in the Georgia Student Media Festival in Atlanta.

That means their entries will be forwarded to international level, and it means the students will likely travel to Chicago, as Aponte predicted, for this year's AECT Festival in October.

"That's been their goal from the start," said Blanchard, who served as the media club coach at Stowers last year.

> "That's been their goal from the start. They set their sights on the top. They always do. That's the kind of students they are."
> Lorri Blanchard
> Faith Middle School technology teacher and "coach" of the school's WBET Media Club

"They set their sights on the top. They always do. That's the kind of students they are."

The club, which is divided into smaller "teams," meets every morning 45 minutes before school starts and frequently on evenings and weekends.

They produce, write, film, edit and narrate their videos. And they're completely responsible for producing a Web site.

The team was awarded first place in the middle school division for the informational video Rangers — No Pain, No Gain, the documentary Make it Hurt Drill Sergeant, Make it Hurt, and the Web site Influential Native American Tribes in Georgia.

Another entry, The Denise Wagoner Story, was awarded second-place, probably because it was graphic, Blanchard speculated. The video showed photos of a drunken driver after a near-fatal accident.

The club members will soon begin raising funds for the trip to Chicago, where they'll attend various workshops on video and Web site production before the awards ceremony.

Program: Cut locally, safe on post

Funding for the program in Fort Benning's six elementary schools comes from the federal budget for Department of Defense.

A lion's share of the funding pays the salary of teachers specially trained in Reading Recovery.

That said, the cost of the program could justifiably be deemed excessive save for the fact Reading Recovery teachers serve as many students each day as a regular classroom teacher, Hayes said. Mornings are spent one-on-one with students, and afternoons are spent in groups.

"Yes, Reading Recovery is expensive," Hayes said. "But it works, and to paraphrase my favorite quote, dollars spent preventatively make much more sense than dollars spent remedially."

Students ready for Battle of the Books

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Five fifth-grade students from White Elementary School are preparing themselves for a big competition, the Battle of the Books, which tests their knowledge of various books they've read throughout the school year.

"I'm excited about the competition," said John Brown. "I want to show the other schools that we can win."

Brown, along with classmates Jonathan Neyland, Andrew Shriver, Donald Smith and Laura Becker, have read almost 30 books throughout the school year to get ready for the competition.

A few of the books were read in class with their teacher, Shelia Brown. But, the students had to read many of them on their own time.

"Sometimes it's hard to focus on the books when you're reading by yourself," Shriver said. "It's real easy to lose track and get caught up in doing something else."

But the students said that they wouldn't let themselves lose sight of their goals.

"We set a goal as a team to study and practice hard so we could win the competition," Neyland said. "We're all committed to it, and I think we have a great shot at winning."

To get ready for the competition, which is Wednesday, the students, along with White Elementary School's media specialist, Owen Ditchfield, met every Monday to study and go over questions that might be asked in the competition.

"The students are committed to learning everything they need to know for the competition," Ditchfield said. "They came in every Monday ready to get to work."

The main focus of the competition is for the students to match the title and the author with a scene from one of the books. For correctly guessing the title and author, they will receive one point each.

"Our team is very strong," Smith said. "A couple of us are really strong with the titles and the others are strong at matching the author to the title. We are a complete team."

Becker said she got ready for the competition by making flashcards with the title on one side and the author on the other.

"Because I did that, I can match every title with an author," she said. "I went over my flashcards many times and I know everything without even looking."

Pfc. Chris Stephens

White Elementary School fifth-graders John Brown, left, Andrew Shriver, Jonathan Neyland, Laura Becker and Donald Smith get ready for the Battle of the Books competition, Wednesday in the school's library. The team said they are ready to compete and win.

Ditchfield said he's excited to see the students get into reading as much as they have.

"In today's society, books have to compete with television and video games," he said. "But, these students made the commitment to excel in this, and I believe they will."

Students win Law Day art contest

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Two fifth-grade students from White Elementary School placed first and second in the Fort Benning Law Day Poster Contest.

The students, Laura Becker, first, and Marinel Rincon, second, completed their art work in Shelia Brown's class.

"I'm glad I won," Becker said. "It's nice to be recognized for something you worked hard on."

The topic of the contest was: "To win equality by law."

Becker's drawing included a dancing law book and constitution, an American flag and an eagle across the top, with a ribbon in its mouth that said, "Under my wings, everyone is equal."

"I thought it would be a great idea to have so many things that represent our nation in the drawing," she said.

Rincon's artwork included a picture of the Earth with the words, "Equality by law," on the inside and people holding hands circling the Earth.

"I had fun drawing it," she said. "I knew I could draw something good, and I did."

The students all started their drawing together, but also had to use some of their free time to finish their drawings.

"Many of the students took their drawings home and worked on them," Brown said. "Those were the students who I knew wanted to win."

Brown said she was excited when she found out that two of her students took the top two places in the competition.

"I had a student take honorable mention a few years ago, but I've never had it this good," Brown said. "I'm proud of Laura and Marinel for their hard work and effort they put into this project. They did a great job."

For their efforts, they each received U.S. savings bonds. Becker received one in the amount of $100, while Rincon received one in the amount of $50.

"I'm going to save my money," Becker said. "Maybe one day I'll pull it out and use it for something useful, but for now I'm going to save it."

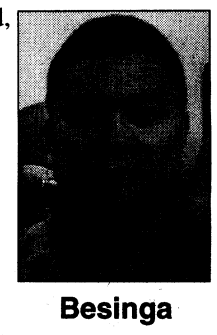
Worship compels us to be more appreciative

Chaplain (Capt.) Dino J. Besinga
Infantry Training Brigade



REFLECTIONS

Salvation history is pointing to a fact that God's plan for all of creation has to do something with the ultimate meaning of every human being, that is, the fulfillment of the deepest aspiration of every human heart. In the words of the great Mahatma Ghandi, "Man's ultimate aim is the realization of God. I live and move and have my being in pursuit of this goal."

The deepest desire of every person is the complete union with God, a union that includes union with all of God's family and harmony with the universe. Such desire embraces God, all human beings and the world and nature as well.

Worship is not a monopoly of a religion or of a culture, but a vessel of person to transcend to the divine, and vice-versa, the divine stooping down to the person. It is that inherent, active longing of man for the transcendence that worship is conceived.

For that reason, man in his very existence cannot but worship. In fact, history has it that before any religion was established, worship and worshipping has been long a practice. For as we say, before any religion was, man was, and God is! "Restless is our heart, O God, until it rests in you!" (St. Augustine).

Besinga

Worship nowadays is very much linked with religion. For man in his quest would want to give concrete expression of his worshipping, finds it necessary to wrap it with religion. Man has to pray and to reach out to God and know his divine plan. So the ways, manners and methods of worship now are cased in religion.

And because of variance of religious traditions, the quest for worship was substituted and has become a quest for salvation. Religion became a competition of which among the "religions" has the fullness of salvation. And further we are driven away from the divine, from each other and the whole of creation. Forgetting that, "You see, God's Grace has been revealed to save the whole of human race," (Titus 2:11).

The Vatican II has this to say on salvation of people of other religious traditions and beliefs, "that God's plan is aimed at salvation of all. The kingdom of God penetrating all of humanity and all of creation."

Therefore, philosophy of worship then is not just a theory, but a force compelling every person to be more appreciative of all the unique beauty and divine value of any and all multi-religious, multicultural religious service in the context of military community worship, enabling us to further understand that, "Millions of stars placed in the skies by one God ... so many a people calling to God by many different a name ... one father loving us all the same ... we are all brothers and sisters ... for we only have one God."

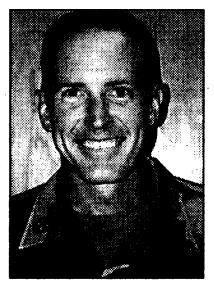
Seek refuge with God this week

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



If we stayed where we were, I was confident we'd all be dead by sunrise ... the storm ambushed us. Since we were climbing the leeward slope of the mountain (the side opposite the direction of the wind), none of us knew what was brewing only miles away on the other side of the ridgeline.

As we ascended, the temperature plummeted, hour by hour.

We started the climb in pleasant 70-degree weather and in T-shirts, only to find ourselves at the summit in snow, with violent wind gusts of 40 to 50 knots and the thermometer on the only jacket I had, a light Gortex windbreaker, reading 34 degrees.

The Soldier to my right was sitting against an evergreen tree, lips blue, slipping into hypothermia.

We were in trouble.

Hawkins

The plan was to conduct intercept operations off the mountain at night, but the plan was out the window.

The only choice to staying and building a shelter against the freakish blizzard was to do something nearly as hazardous — descend the mountain at night.

So, with the sun setting, the snow pelting our faces and backpacks loaded down with 70 pounds of gear, we began the game of mountaineering roulette — one wrong step could lead to a disaster.

Hours later, in complete darkness, we stumbled onto one of the most beautiful sites I have ever seen ... a dilapidated old hunter's shack. We were saved! It was our refuge!

And as we warmed coffee over a portable Optimus stove, I thanked God for coming through in our time of need.

It may not be on a mountain top in the middle of a blizzard, but perhaps there is a storm brewing in your life.

Where do you most need him to provide you "refuge" this week? Can you trust him to do so?

"The Lord is good, a refuge in times of trouble, He cares for those who trust in Him." — Nahum 1:7

Coincidence is when God performs a miracle and remains anonymous!

PGGs defeat Seahorses in overtime

Offensive spurts decide team's fate

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

With two seconds left in the game, 36th Engineer Group Seahorses' guard Alvaro Bethea was at the free throw line for a one-and-one with a chance to win the game, which was tied at 50.

The 203rd Forward Support Battalion PGGs and the Seahorses were battled to advance in the post-season basketball tournament Monday at Audie Murphy Gym.

Bethea missed the free throw, and the PGGs rebounded to send the game to overtime.

With less than two minutes to go in the overtime period, PGG's guard Willie Farris hit a 3-pointer to put them ahead for good.

"Once it left my hand, I knew it was going in," he said.

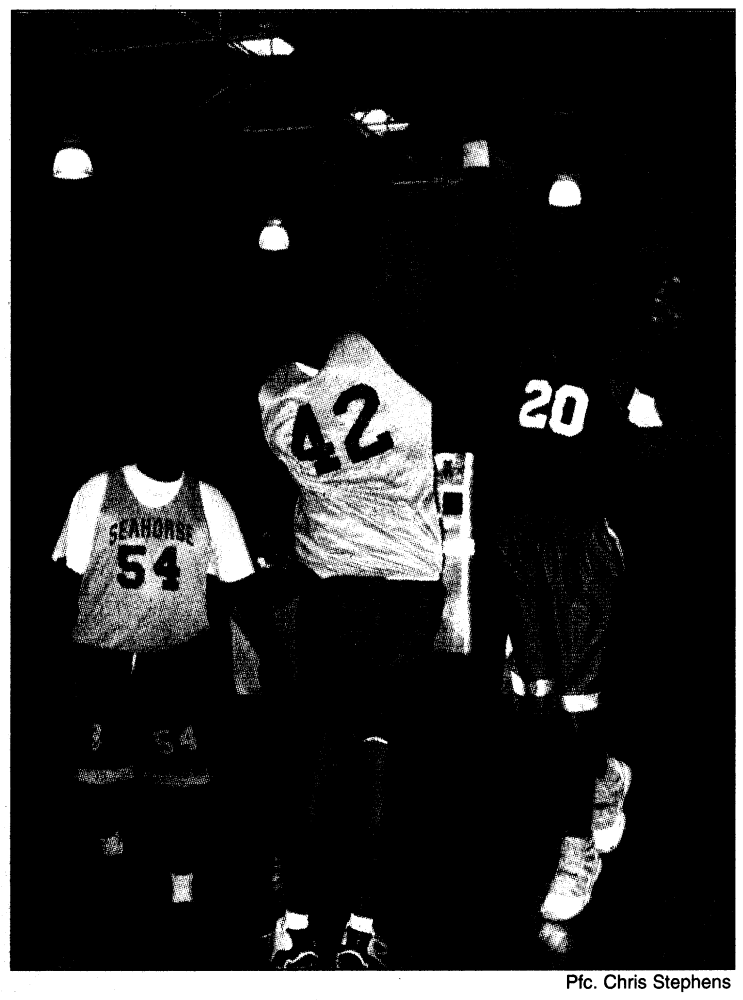
The PGGs built a 10-point lead with 10 minutes to go in the first half and looked like they had control of the game until Seahorse's center Michael Fraise entered the game. Fraise, Bethea and guard Kelvin Hunter brought the Seahorses back.

The PGGs became careless with the ball, and the Seahorses tied the score at 27 by the end of the half.

At the beginning of the second half, the Seahorses imposed their will on the PGGs, creating turnovers and working the ball around on offense, to race out to a 39-29 lead.

"At the half, our coach told us that it was a whole new ballgame and we had to step it up," Wiggins said. "We were both even to start the half, so we knew we had a great chance to come back."

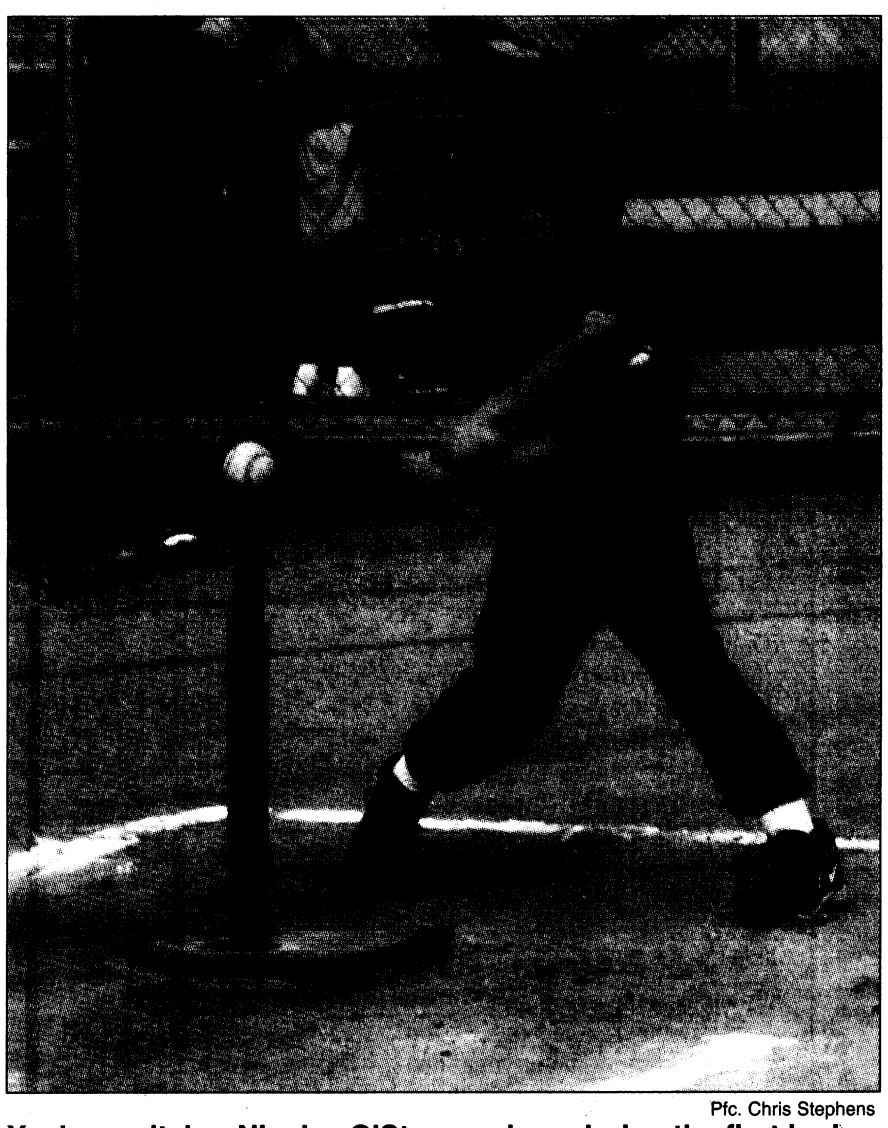
But, the lead didn't last long. The PGGs began to settle into their game and found their open shots.



"You learn what your team is made of when you have to climb out of a deep hole," Farris said. "We just battled our way back and gave it our all on every play."

After back and forth action for most of the half, the PGGs tied the score at 50 after some pin-point passing and easy layups, with 40 seconds to go.

Neither team scored on their last possessions, but Bethea had a chance to win the game with free throws after drawing a foul under the basket. He missed, and the game went to a three-minute overtime.



"It just goes to show you that you should never quit," Farris said. "You never know what's going to happen. This team never gave up, and that's why we came out on top."

Editor's note: The finals of the post-season tournament were held Thursday evening after The Bayonet went to press. Pick up next week's paper to find out who won this year's post championship.

Pfc. Chris Stephens

PGGs' guard Travis Threats, right, shoots the ball over the outstretched arms of Seahorses' forward Carleton Glenn during the second half of the post-season basketball tournament Monday at Audie Murphy Gym. The PGGs won the game in overtime 57-53 with great defense in the overtime period. With the win, the PGGs advanced to the semifinals.

T-ball focuses on fun, skill-development

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Though the players don't know the final score, t-ball offers young children an opportunity to learn the game of baseball.

The 5- and 6-year-old Ninjas and Yankees met Tuesday at the Youth Services Baseball Complex and put the skills they've learned to the test.

"At this level, the score doesn't matter," said Lisa Judy, Yankees coach. "We want to teach them the fundamentals of baseball."

In T-Ball, the 3-6-9 rule applies. Teams can keep batting until they get either three outs or six runs or nine players have batted.

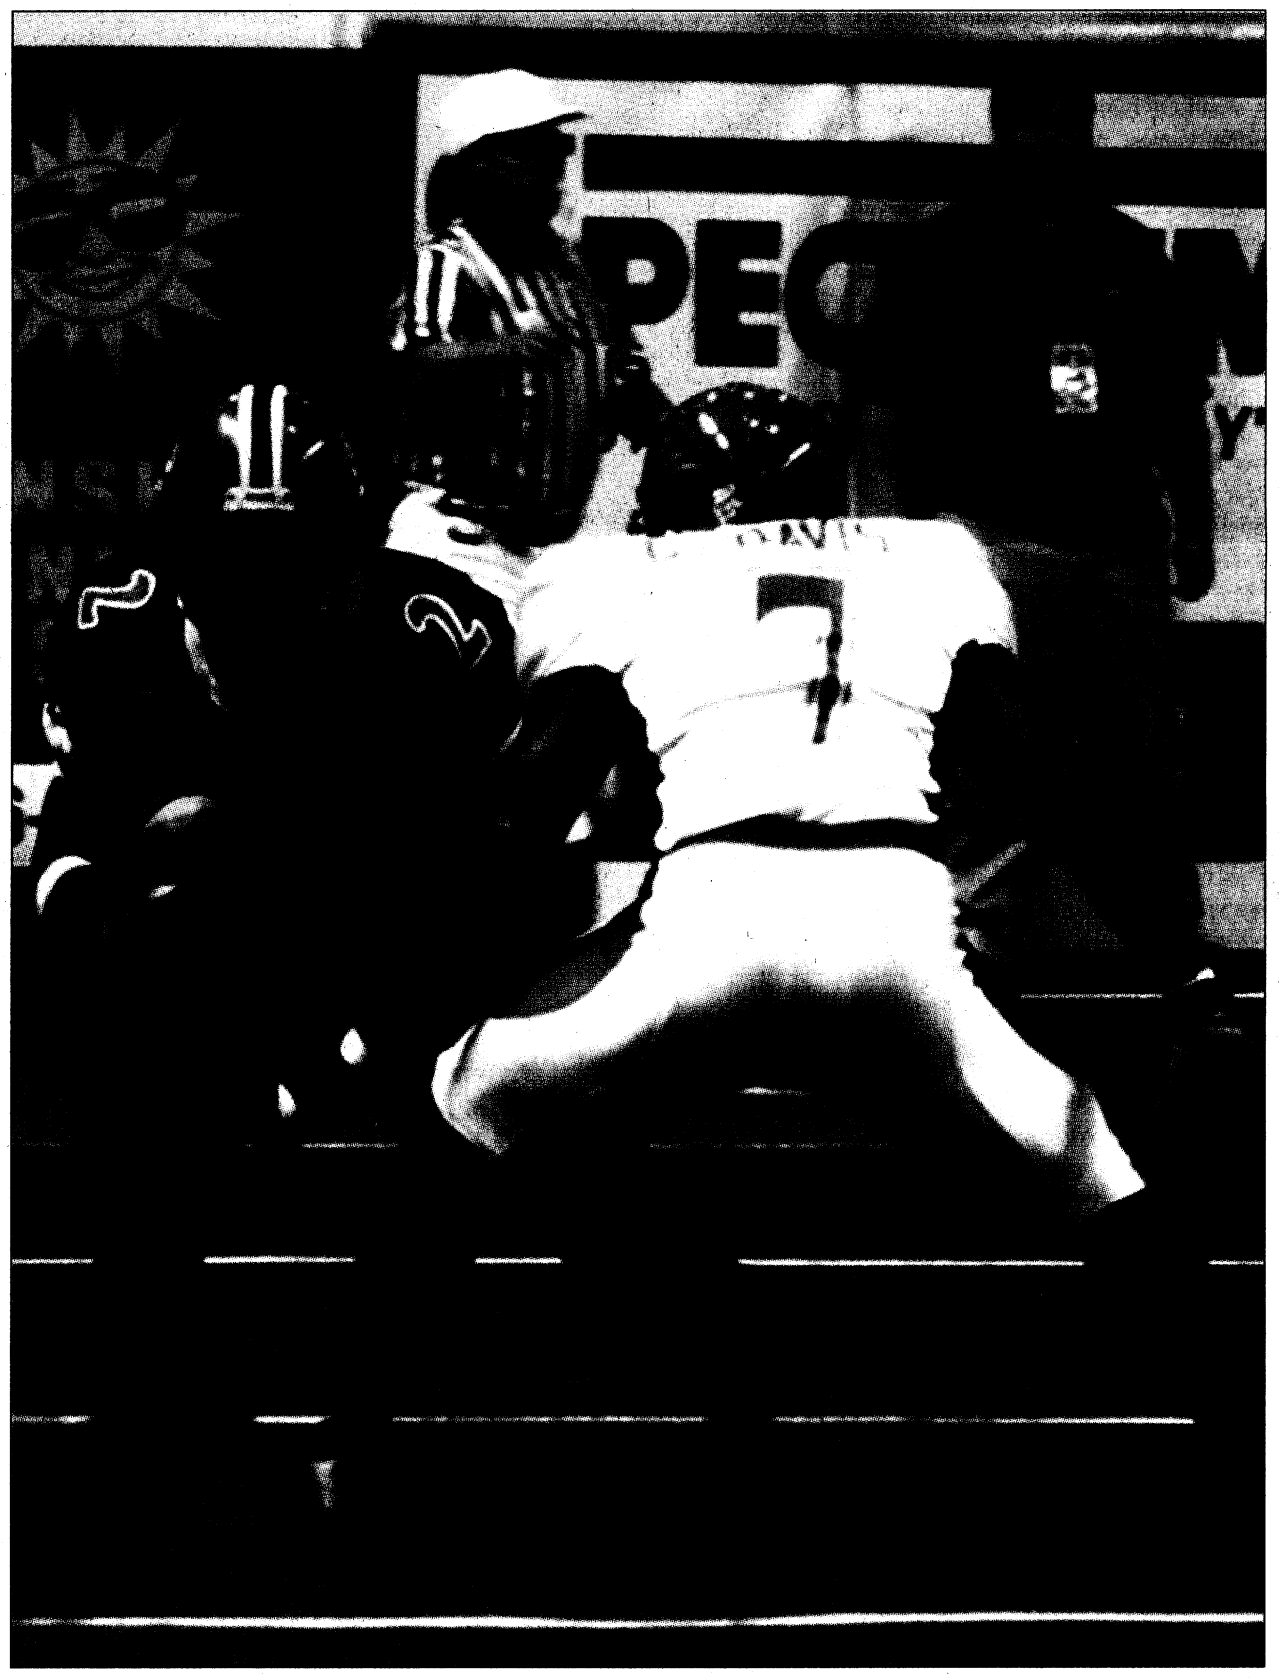
"It's a way to get the game going faster and keep the players' confidence up," said Kelli Acord, Ninjas' coach. "No child wants to be losing, and if it seems to them they are getting out of the inning quickly, they are happy."

Both coaches point out that building the childrens' self-esteem is vital at this age.

"All children want to know they're doing a good job," Acord said. "So, everytime they bat or make a play in the field, we tell them they did a great job. That keeps them wanting to play the game."

Both teams hit the ball well off the tee.

"I like hitting," said Ninjas' infielder Perry Foster. "Swinging the bat is fun and then running the bases after that is fun too."



The Ninjas began the game with only eight players, but they still hit and scored. Players who scored runs for the Ninjas included infielder Matthew Smith, pitcher Tommy Lindsay, Foster, third baseman Jacob Sullivan and infielder Greyson Saynes.

The Yankees didn't let the Ninjas have all of the fun. Pitcher Nicolas O'Steen, infielder Quentin Jackson, outfielder Jacob Bradley and outfielder Brittany Davis scored runs.

"Our team did good," said outfielder Thomas Suarez. "We had fun and we hit the ball."

The teams congratulated each other on a game well played.

"It's important to teach them sportsmanship at this level," Judy said. "We teach the players to not have bad attitudes and to cheer everyone on. By doing that, they will enjoy the game more, and hopefully, they'll continue to play the game."

Wardogs' wide receiver Anthony Dixon attempts to get past a Florida Firecats defender during a kickoff return in the first half Saturday. The Wardogs kept the score close in the first half, but the Firecats ran away with the game in the second half, winning, 62-33.

Wardogs court Fort Benning fans

Pfc. Chris Stephens

Fort Benning was once a training ground for military war dogs and their handlers. What better way for Columbus' arena football team to honor them than by naming the team after the canine heroes?

The Columbus Wardogs are entering their fourth year in Arena Football 2 and are poised to show the rest of the league they are a team to be reckoned with.

"(We) can compete with anyone out there," said Kyle Rowley, Wardogs' quarterback. "We have the talent to win. Now all we have to do is prove it on the field."

Arena football is played on a 50-yard field, with eight-man teams, and there is no place to run and hide.

Bordering the sidelines are foam rubber pads that cover the boards you see in hockey. But, don't let the word "foam" fool you. The boards are all but soft.

"(They) are very unforgiving," said Adrian Cockfield, wide receiver and defensive back. "After you get smashed into them a few times, it starts to hurt. They are an offensive player's nightmare. You try to stay away from them as much as possible, but sometimes you have no choice."

Arena football is a lot quicker than the outdoor version with more offensive scoring and less reaction time.

"As a quarterback, I don't have as much time to react in arena football than I would if I were playing in the Special Olympics creates winners in kids, volunteers

Competition drives special needs athletes

Special needs athletes gathered May 7 to participate in the Special Olympics Summer Games at Kinnett Stadium.

Several hundred spectators crowded into shaded portions of the stadium to watch the day's events.

Competitors as young as 5 years old took on 87-degree heat in events like the 50-meter dash, softball throw, wheelchair-assisted race and long jump.

Competition in many of the events was close.

Tennis ball throw winner Jaleel Dix, 8, a student at Dawson Elementary School, beat the second-place effort with a throw of 86 feet — only a foot farther than the runner-up.

"He did good, but I did better," Dix said.

For most of the children, participating isn't about winning, said Linda Gunn, a teacher at Dawson.

"This is a wonderful event," she said. "These kids are so happy to just be a part of this — the ribbons are just icing on the cake."

Top performers were awarded ribbons for first through fifth place in each age group, in each event.

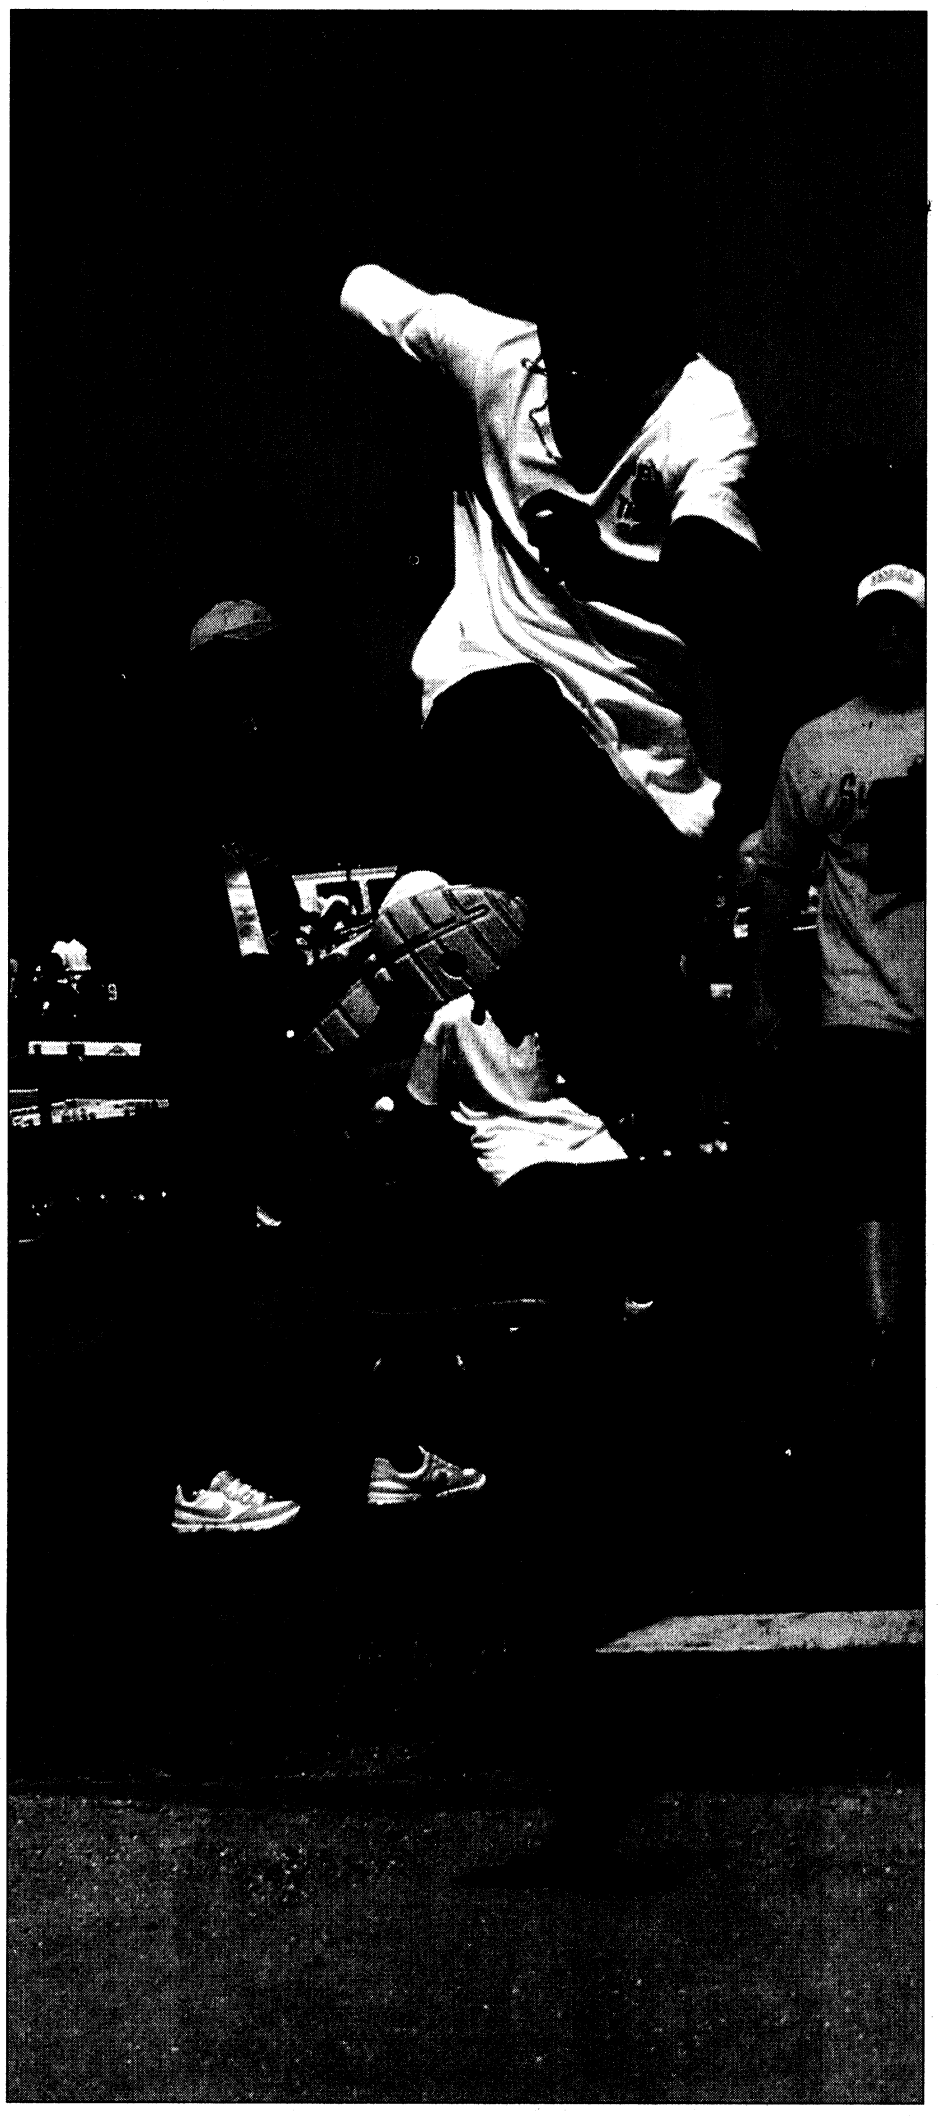
A small Olympic Village was in place, offering games, moonwalks, ice cream and snow cones.

Dozens of volunteers from local middle and high schools, Fort Benning, Columbus State University and the local community assisted at the event.

U.S. Army Physical Fitness School Commandant Lt. Col. William Rieger said his entire staff showed up to help.

The group manned the tennis ball throw event and helped out as needed, Rieger said.

Even though the event fell on a weekday, Rieger said he and his staff felt it was important to be there.



"Every day, there are a million things that need to be done — things at the office, things in life — these things in life and work may seem important, but to these children, it's a special day," he said. "And if we can't take the time to share that with them, maybe we are missing what is really important."

The fitness school chief of doctrine, Steve Van Camp, said volunteering at the event was a win-win situation.

"I think it's a really good thing when there is positive interaction between Fort Benning and the community," he said. "But it's really more important to the children for me. If we can do anything to make even one day for these kids better, it's worth it."

Special Olympics provides more than 1 million special needs children with athletic training and competition opportunities worldwide in more than 150 countries.

NFL, because the field is tighter," Rowley said. "I have to make quicker decisions, and I have to be smart about them as well. The littlest mistake can be intercepted and taken for six the other way."

The Wardogs are currently looking to introduce more fans in Columbus to the arena game.

"I believe when you see the arena game for the first time, you get hooked," said Steve Gates, Wardogs vice-president. "This game is fast-paced and action-packed, and no matter if we win or lose, everyone goes home happy, knowing they've seen an exciting game."

But, the game isn't the only thing going on. During timeouts and breaks, fans have the opportunity to compete in various competitions and win prizes.

"We like to keep the fans involved during the game," Gates said. "There is no down time at the game — there's always something going on."

During the games, fans are also treated to performances by the Wardolls, the Wardogs dance team.

For their game against Bossier City, La., on May 29, the Wardogs are offering free tickets to all active-duty military and their families as part of Military Appreciation Night.

"We're going to pack this place with fans and rock the house," Gates said. "We want to show the Soldiers and their families how much we appreciate what they do for this country."

Tickets for all other games are $38 (front row), $28 (field level), $18 (lower sideline), $14 (upper sideline) and $10 (end zone).

The Wardogs also offer birthday parties for young fans and a hot tub rental during the game.

For more information on the Wardogs or to order tickets, call 653-7789.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Army 10-Miler pre-qualifier — Fort Benning will hold two pre-qualifier races for the post's Army 10-Miler team. Racers with the top times will earn spots on the team. Race dates are Saturday and June 19. Races will begin at 7 a.m. in front of the Santiago Fitness Center. Registration will begin at 6 a.m. on race mornings. Call 544-9486.

Hunter's Harvest Cards — Hunters must turn in their Fort Benning Harvest Cards (FB Form 200-3) no later than June 1. Harvest cards are used to obtain deer, turkey and feral swine harvest information. Harvest cards may be returned to the Outdoor Recreation Office (building 1707, Gillespie St.) or mailed to Outdoor Recreation, P.O. Box 53323, Fort Benning, GA 31905. Failure to return the card will result in suspension of post hunting privileges for one year. For more information, call 545-7978.

Aerobics classes — The Briant Wells Fitness Center offers box aerobics, aeromix, step combo, core crunch, yoga and aqua aerobics. The cost is $25 per month or $3 per class. For more information, call 545-4388.

Lucky Bucket Sweepstakes — Lucky Bucket Sweepstakes 2 is back with more chances to win!

One red ball will be dropped into Fort Benning Golf Course's range ball machine each week until Monday, May 31. The lucky patron who gets the ball will have the opportunity to win prizes such as a Casio sports watch, Samsonite luggage set, George Forman grill and more.

The promotion is open to all authorized MWR patrons except golf course employees and staff directly involved in the program.

Pick up entry forms at the Follow Me Golf Course Pro Shop or send a request to: Lucky Bucket Sweepstakes 2, 4700 King Street, Alexandria, VA 22302. Visit Fort Benning Golf Course or call 687-1940 and 'Drive to Win!'

Saturday bike rides — Saturday bike rides are in full gear. Riders meet at 10 a.m. at Briant Wells Field House and ride 10, 15, 20 miles or more. All you need is a bike, helmet, water and plenty of energy. Call 545-9987 or 545-4388.

off post

Military Appreciation Night — The Columbus Wardogs will have a Military Appreciation Night May 29 at the Columbus Civic Center. All active-duty Soldiers and their families will get into the game free by picking up tickets at the Civic Center Box Office. Tickets will be given out on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

LOCAL AUTOMOTIVE DEALER HOLDS GIANT INVENTORY REDUCTION SALE!

USED VEHICLES WILL BE SOLD AS LOW AS $99

DRIVE 1 OF COLUMBUS WILL HOLD AN INVENTORY REDUCTION SALE THIS SATURDAY, MAY 15TH 2004 ONLY!

COLUMBUS, GA

Drive 1 of Columbus has announced plans for their huge inventory reduction sale this Saturday, May 15.

Todd Kinney, GM of Drive 1 of Columbus says, "We must make room for new vehicles that are arriving and with a recent surplus of great trade-ins, we have no room for the inventory coming in. "

Management at Drive 1 of Columbus will reduce all SUVs, trucks, and cars at this one time event. At 9 a.m. Saturday, May 15 all vehicles will be opened so that buyers may inspect the vehicle of their choice. The retail price will be posted on the windshield of each vehicle. When the sale begins at 11 a.m., whoever is sitting in the vehicle will have the chance to purchase that vehicle at the reduced price. The prices will be reduced one time to the rock bottom price, including vehicles for only $99. During this event, every used vehicle will be sold for thousands below its retail price!

Over 100 vehicles will be made available for these reductions with some vehicles starting as low as $99. "It is anticipated that over 1 million dollars in inventory will be disposed of during this event", says Todd Kinney. "This is not a sale that you will want to miss."

Drive 1 of Columbus will have special military lenders on site, credit unions, and even USAA financing will be made available to qualified buyers. "Even if you have no credit and you're an E-1, we still have great financing for this event", assures Phillip Holt, Finance Manager. "Even derogatory credit will be overlooked for this sale. All that will be needed is your military ID and your LES.

Trade-ins will be accepted for full cash value even if it has a payoff. All customers attending are encouraged to bring your payment book or title and registration to speed the process.

Todd reminds all customers to act quickly if they want to take advantage of this special promotion. "I can't say enough that this is a 1 day sales event only. Once they are gone, it will be back to business as usual. It will be first come, first served; so it is most imperative that you arrive early to have the best chance of getting the best selection. This sale is a fantastic opportunity for our military to get an awesome deal on a car, truck or SUV."

Drive 1 of Columbus has been a strong supporter of the Ft. Benning United States Army and Ft. Benning has been a great supporter of Drive 1. This is our way of saying thank you for the support that you have given us.

All vehicles will be displayed at Drive 1 of Columbus, 4411 Victory Drive in Columbus, Georgia just outside the gates to Ft. Benning. If you have any questions or if you would like to get pre-qualified, please call (706) 569-5619.

Stay alert, officials warn

Web postings call for terrorist attacks in States

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

In response to recent Internet-based terrorist threats against military and law enforcement personnel, Fort Benning and local residents are urged to increase situational awareness at least through November.

Al Harvey, director of Intelligence and Security, said the Web threats are a step up from most of the threats detected since Sept. 11, 2001.

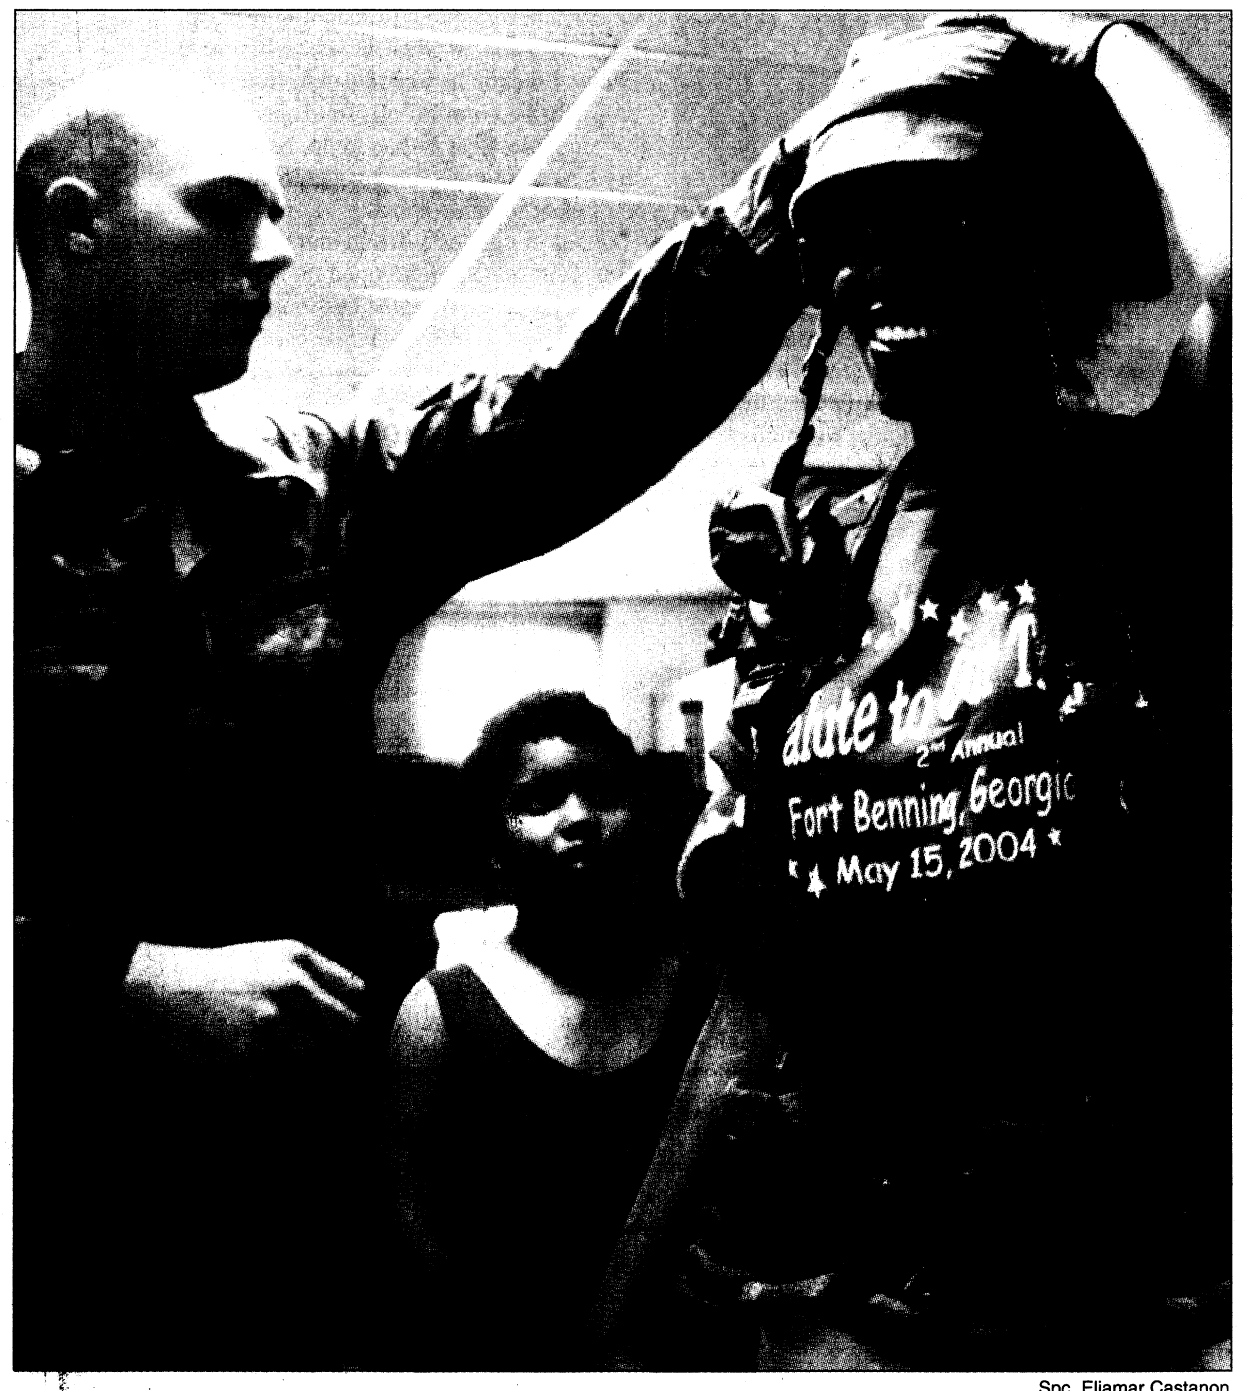
"We are seeing heightened rhetoric," he said. "The messages are more blatant."

Harvey said he believes the elevated threats are an effort to capitalize on growing concern about U.S. policy in Iraq and the upcoming November presidential elections.

In Madrid, on March 11, terrorists with ties to al Qaeda used 10 bombs to destroy four passenger trains, killing 190 people and wounding more than 1,500.

The attack came three days before general elections and spawned nationwide dissent over Spain's participation in Operation Iraqi Freedom. This led to the replacement of the ruling conservative party prime minister, Jose Maria Aznar, by the antiwar Socialist Party delegate, Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero. Spain has since withdrawn its troops from Iraq.

"It worked in Spain, and in my opinion, I think (terrorists) are trying the same thing here," Harvey said.



"These guys aren't dummies. They believe they can influence an election, a society, a policy and, ultimately, the results in Iraq," he said.

There is no known imminent danger, though, he said.

"This isn't a warning — that's too strong of a word," Harvey said. "This is an indicator of possible planning activity and people just

The colors of the American flag were everywhere on Sand Hill Saturday, as Miss Georgia contestants dressed in red, white and blue visited Sand Hill Soldiers as part of the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation's Sand Hill Concert Series.

The visit began when the 32 contestants walked into the dining facility of the 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment while E Company was having lunch, to say "thank you" and "good job."

"It's a pleasant surprise to have so many beautiful women here," said Pvt. Scott MacLachlan, who ate lunch with Addie Hampton, Miss Teen Georgia.

This is the second annual Salute to Troops the Miss Georgia contestants have participated in, said Brian Smith, DMWR marketing director.

Last year, about 12 contestants visited Fort Benning; this year there were more than 30 young

Troops to leave Korea for Iraq

Jim Garamone
Army News Service

About 3,600 Soldiers of the 2nd Brigade, 2nd Infantry Division, will deploy to Iraq this summer from the Republic of Korea, Defense Department officials said Monday.

The deployment will reduce U.S. troop strength in Korea by about 10 percent.

This reduction decision can be made with impunity, a senior DoD official said, because of the beefed-up capabilities the United States has on the Korean peninsula.

More capable air assets, a Patriot-3 brigade, rotating Stryker battalions, and far better command, control, computers, communications and intelligence facilities more than make up for the drop of U.S. troops in South Korea to 34,000, the official said.

"Ongoing global posture review is strengthening our position in Asia and Korea," said Richard Lawless, deputy defense undersecretary for Asia-Pacific policy.

"This strengthened global and regional posture, including our efforts under way in Korea to realign U.S. forces and enhance our capabilities, allows us to employ our forces worldwide in a more flexible manner."

Lawless said that if needed, the United States can quickly augment air and naval presence in the Asia-Pacific region.

Officials said Korean and Japanese leaders were informed of and agreed with the U.S. decision send the 2nd Brigade, 2ID to Iraq.

They said it is part of the overall look at U.S. global posture.

The troops will spend one year in Iraq. Since military tours of Korea are typically one-year unaccompanied tours, some

Arizona couple thanks Soldiers for service

An Arizona couple is using the profits from their delivery company to deliver a message of encouragement and appreciation to Soldiers around the country.

Ed and Tonie Negrin spend more than a quarter of the year visiting military installations and hospitals with their small fleet of Chevys, called America's trucks, emblazoned with patriotic themes like "We Are a Nation at War" and "Have You Forgotten?"

They dropped by Kelley Hill's Gibson Dining Facility Tuesday to give away Bibles, CDs, teddy bears, books and other tokens of appreciation to the Soldiers who "put honor and duty above their own personal desires."

The Negrin's "Operation Enduring Freedom" truck was parked outside the dining facility during breakfast hours, and Soldiers filed past, admiring the 3rd Infantry Division patch near the driver's side window and the message "Pray for Our Troops" printed across the door.

"Thank you," they said again and Conscience is a 'value'able voice

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Did you not hear the voice? I know that admitting we hear voices can sometimes land us in places we don't want to be, but we really need to listen to this one.

It's our conscience calling. Yes, ours. We have one. We've had one all our lives, telling us what's right and what's wrong.

According to my church, it's our parents responsibility to form and nurture our conscience.

And by the time we're 7, we should be able to tell right from wrong on our own — to evaluate our options and make the right decision when push comes to shove.

But the news these days are filled with all sorts of people who must be ignoring those little voices in their heads. And the worst part of it is they're Soldiers, and they're making the rest look bad.

I don't want that kind of negative attention for Soldiers, or for the Army.

Like the adage goes, one bad apple spoils the whole bushel.

So why has ignoring those voices become such an epidemic? I wish I knew, because it's making it harder and harder to program my children to listen to the voices.

The post commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, wants us to hear the voices, too.

He's asking leaders to get to know their Soldiers, to talk to them and to reinforce the Army values with them.

With the recent events in Abu Ghraib prison, respect needs to get a big R and lots of focus.

And the way I've always heard it, not only is respect a two-way street, but we first have to respect ourselves. And the argument that "no one told me it was wrong" really isn't valid.

Respect for others has to start with each of us. It's manifested in the clothes we wear and the language we use when talking to others, or when we think no one is around.

No one should have to endure degrading language. Words hurt, and abusive language is just that — it's abuse.

My husband and I were out walking last week. Two teenage boys with skateboards turned the corner and dropped the "f bomb."

We were a good 200 feet away, but heard it loud and clear. As it turned out, they didn't live on our street and we didn't know them.

But if I ever meet them, they've already made their first impression, and it certainly wasn't a good one.

She's a real hero on the home front

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Should military officials ever choose Nike to market their "product," they'll find the perfect spokesperson in Donna Bergman. She's a "just do it" kind of gal.

Donna's the wife of Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Bergman, the Infantry School sergeant major. But her experience and insights go beyond that of an Army wife. She's also the mother of a Soldier, a Marine, an Airman and a government employee "who'd have to kill you if he told you what he does." And yes, there's one Bergman boy still at home.

Recently Donna shared with me some of the misadventures of the Bergman family during an Army career that spans nearly three decades.

Her stories have all the makings of a TV sitcom, or better yet, a survival series!

Take for instance Donna's arrival in Germany in 1988. She moved into a new home (on the fourth floor, laundry in the basement) with five boys (all under the age of 12) no car ("It's on it's way ma'am.") and no husband (field duty).

Donna recounted her attempts to collect the family van shortly after their arrival. She called upon the downstairs neighbors to help with the children ("... dropped two on the third floor, one on the second floor and two on the first.") and begged a ride to the pick-up point for incoming freight.

The van had a flat and an empty tank. Of course.

She changed the tire and pulled into a gas station just as the manager was closing up. Sorry, he said, come back tomorrow.

Donna's ingenious. She "borrowed" the nozzle from the driver in front of her, who hadn't finished pumping, filled her own tank, and gave the customer the money. Pretty slick, I'd say.

"You just do what you've gotta do," she replied. "No use in complaining or worrying about it. You just do it."

I like that about Donna. In many ways, she's old Army. She's made of tough stuff on the inside, but it's packaged in a warm and friendly wrapping and topped with a big, shiny smile.

Donna, who met Michael on a blind date, always knew she wanted a large family. She taught her brood to cook and clean and give bear hugs. ("We're a hugging family," she said.)

She worked outside the home, volunteered here and there, and carted the boys from ball games to Scouts. She nursed them through the usual — the broken bones and the broken hearts — and the unusual — Jeremy lost sight in one eye in a freak accident when he was just a little fellow. I reckon he took his cues from his mom, brushed himself off, so to speak, and learned to do what he had to do, because Jeremy's the one with the government job I don't want to know about.

Donna's sent her husband and her son off to combat. She's watched the boys, one by one, move far from the nest, marry and start families of their own. She hasn't had them all together since 1998. She admits to twinges of depression as Donovan, her youngest, gets closer to the age of independence.

"Sometimes it's just too quiet around here," she said. "I don't know what I'll do ..."

I don't know what she'll do, either, but I'm fairly sure what she won't do.

She won't wallow in self-pity, because that's simply not her way. She'll continue to support Michael, as he heads off to become the sergeant major at West Point.

She'll continue to pray for her boys and look forward to vacations with the grandkids.

She'll do what she has to do. Because Donna isn't just married to a Soldier. She's an Army wife.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Hospital service improves

On Feb. 6 of this year, I gave birth to my fifth child at Martin Army Community Hospital. I just wanted to take a moment and commend the Labor and Delivery Room staff, as well as the Mother/Baby staff, for the excellent care I received while I was a patient at the hospital. The quality of care that I received has really changed for the better, compared to the care I had received in 1996 when I gave birth to my third child at MACH.

I can tell you after the first experience in 1996, I was extremely nervous about giving birth at MACH again. On Feb. 6, that morning and through the evening, everyone who was on duty was extremely kind and very professional.

I have given birth at civilian hospitals and from past experience, the care I received on Feb. 6 was far better than any care I have ever received at civilian hospitals.

I would also like to personally thank Dr. Pellini for being so kind and staying late to deliver Jacob. He did not have to stay and deliver but he did. My husband and I truly appreciate all the kindness that was shown to our family. If anyone out there is nervous and has listened to all the rumors about giving birth in a military hospital, please take if from someone who has given birth at five different hospitals, two civilian, that MACH Labor and Delivery and the Mother/Baby staff are a very capable and highly professional staff. Again, thank you for excellent care!

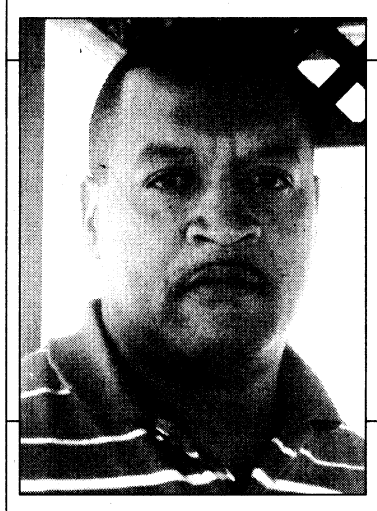
Fort Benning

I was on post April 30 getting registered for Tricare Prime (while my husband is serving in Iraq). I had several outstanding employees assist me in accomplishing this goal.

First, I had the pleasure of meeting Thomas Clark and Teresa Romero in the Outpatient Records Department. Romero worked diligently to get what information I needed to start my patient record. When I didn't have all that was required, she sent me to Jennifer Taylor in Correspondence. Jennifer took the time that was needed to complete my records information (calling my doctor and requesting that my records be faxed into the office so that I might be seen that same day). I then returned to Romero, with the information that Jennifer had to kindly helped me obtain, and Romero continued to complete my record, make my ID cards and hand deliver them to Family Practice.



While in the Immunization Clinic, I meet Waveen Mack. In addition to taking care of my immediate needs (shots required for travel outside the U.S.) she assisted me in getting an appointment with Family Practice (for additional medication).

I was extremely impressed with the kind, generous, personable attitudes of those employees I met. Each one did their job in a timely, helpful, friendly manner (on a Friday at 2 p.m., when closing time was near).

Peak PCS season hits household moves

Housing tips help Soldiers with moves

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

More than 50 percent of the Army moves every summer, making May through September the peak permanent change of station season in the Army.

Fort Benning alone averages about 10,000 PCS moves every year, many of them during this season.

Soldiers who move during a summer may encounter delays in shipping their household goods due to the availability of commercial carriers, said Ron Johnson, Fort Benning's transportation officer for the Directorate of Logistics.

"It's important that Soldiers don't wait until the last minute to come and see transportation," he said.

"This year already looks busier than last year," said Elizabeth Hervey, transportation manager. "Last year, the 3rd Brigade was deployed so not many Soldiers were leaving Fort Benning; now they are back. My biggest fear is not being able to arrange the pick-up dates Soldiers need because of the availability of carriers."

It is important that Soldiers schedule a Move Entitlements and Application Briefing as soon as they receive their PCS orders and at least 30 days ahead of the date they need their belongings to be picked up, Johnson said.

At the briefing, Soldiers learn about the moving process, including weight limits.

Weight limits depend on rank, time in grade and marital status.

If the weight of the Soldier's load exceeds its limit, the Soldier will have to pay for the excess weight.

Of course, it's not always easy. Sometimes, Soldiers don't receive their orders until the last minute — something the transportation office staff understands.

2nd Lt. Josef Morris graduated from Officer Candidate School in late April and was told he would be PCSing with his wife, Tandi, and their new baby, Madeleine, to Fort Hood, Texas.

Two weeks later, after he had already arranged pick-up dates with transportation, his orders were changed to Fort Bragg, N.C.

Josef was happy with how quickly the people in the Transportation Office found a carrier and a packing company to move his family's belongings for a last-minute move.

"We try the best we can to find carriers that will do last minutes moves," Hervey said. "But during the summer, it's nearly impossible to do."

If by any chance Soldiers need to leave post before their belongings are picked up, they may leave them in a storage unit and authorize someone they trust to hand the items over to the movers, Hervey said.

"We only ask the Soldiers to do three things to make their move easier," she said. "The house must be clean and pest-free, the family or Soldier must be present when the movers start packing the belongings and they must make sure to have a good inventory of the belongings."

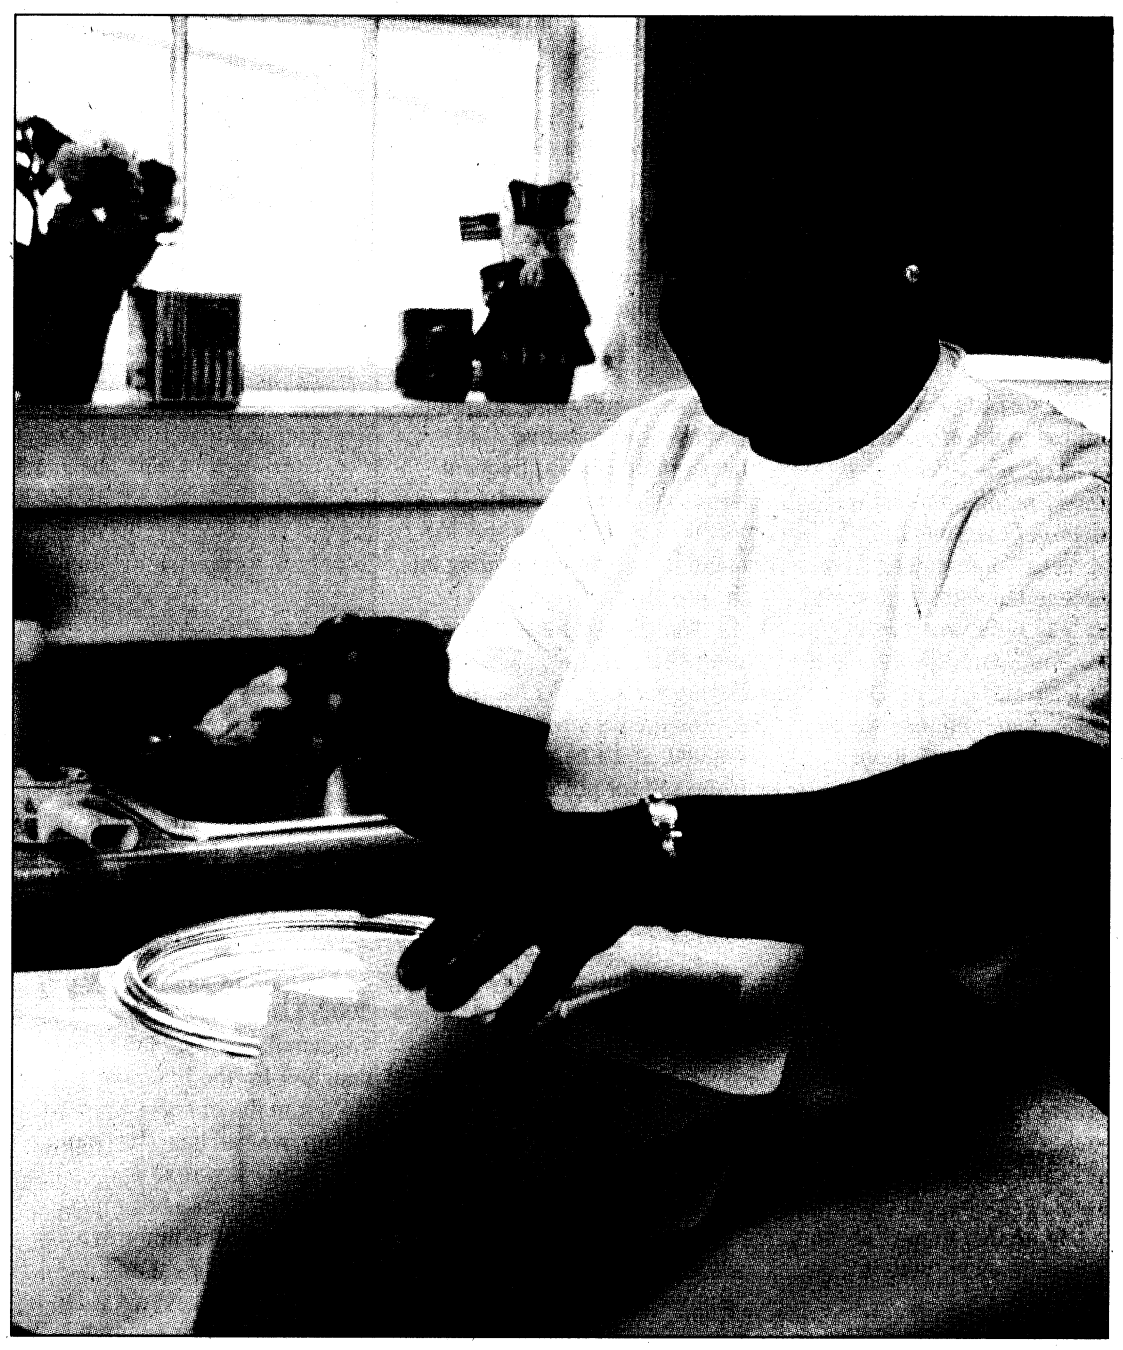
"Not having a good inventory is one of the major pitfalls with PCS moves," Johnson said. "If something is missing from the Soldier's shipment when it arrives at its destination and it is not on the inventory list, they will not be reimbursed for that item."

Tandi recommends to "cut the fat by starting early."

She had to get rid of some of the items she had acquired during 12 years of military life.

"Soldiers should make sure they put away important traveling information, such as passports, plane tickets or anything else they may need to carry with them during their move," Hervey said.

Soldiers are charged a fee if they need to get into their belongings after they have been packed and loaded, she said.



"They will pack your cat and dog if you don't keep them out of their way," Tandi said, referring to the "quick and efficient" performance of the packers who were packing her house Tuesday.

If Soldiers prefer to move their belongings on their own, they may do so through a self-procured move, better known as a "ditty" move.

"This system is much more flexible because you are not depending on the commercial carriers," Johnson said.

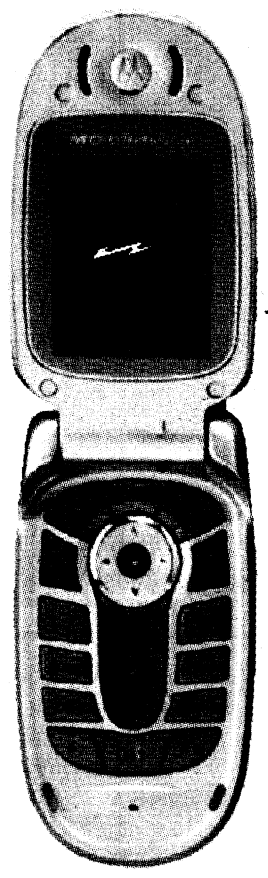
To do a ditty move, Soldiers have to attend a briefing, fill out the paperwork at the Transportation Office, rent a truck, pack up their belongings and move, Hervey said.

In 12 years of military service, this is the first time the Morris' have moved with a baby.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Tracy Fields, an employee of James Moving & Storage, packs kitchenware Tuesday afternoon. In three hours the packers had managed to pack nearly half of Josef and Tandi Morris' belongings.

They opted to do a partial ditty move and have the Transportation Office take the rest of their belongings.



"We are only taking what we know we're going to need right away," Tandi said. "It's best to leave (the rest) to the professionals."

With self-procured moves, Soldiers are reimbursed for their traveling expenses once they get to their final destination.

New daughter means blessings for Benning family

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Cautiously working her way down the stairs one step at a time, Maria Grace Evans flashed a huge grin and greeted her visitor enthusiastically.

"I'm Mawia Gwace," she announced proudly, peering over the rail.

Nicknamed "Boo" for her likeness to the Monsters Inc. character, the 2-year-old is already living up to her real name — Grace means "blessing," her mother, Lisa, explained, and that's just what she is to the Evans family.

A few years ago, Lisa and her husband, Lt. Col. Dan Evans, were told they wouldn't be able to have any more children. It was devastating news for the couple, who wanted a brother or sister for their daughter, 5-year-old Emily.

It wasn't long before they began discussing the possibility of adoption. After praying about it, Lisa was completely for it, but her husband was hesitant. Dan was scared he wouldn't be able to love a child not of his own flesh as he would his biological child.

"He needed to pray about it, to come to terms with it," she said.

He began having dreams, she said, and not much later, he decided, "Let's go for it."

The Evans began writing to friends and families, seeking someone who might have experience with adoption. They researched the different types of adoption — domestic versus international, infant versus older child, private agency versus public.

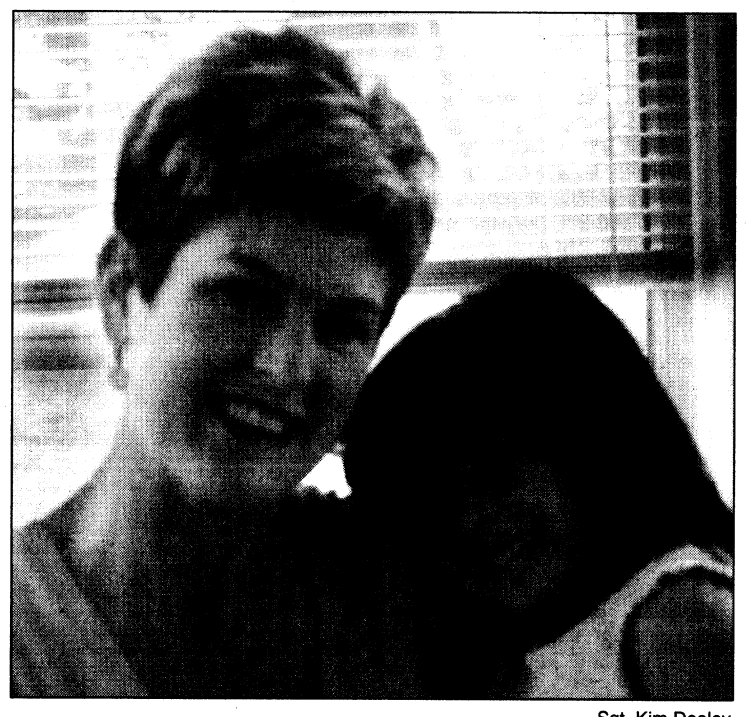
Lisa and Dan decided to search for as young a child as possible and to look outside of the U.S. to avoid the rash of biological paternity suits emerging at that time — men who came forward to claim children they had only discovered they'd fathered after the children had already been put up for adoption.

After settling on a private adoption agency based in New Mexico that owned an orphanage in Guatemala, the Evans began the long adoption process — exhaustive background checks, frequent home visits from social workers, identifying a specific child for adoption and filing all the necessary paperwork.

"We said we wanted the first available child, but we were hoping for a boy," Lisa said.

The couple's wish was granted, and a baby boy was identified for placement with the Evans. The orphanage sent them monthly pictures of their little boy as the adoption process dragged on.

"We named him Nicholas — it makes it more personal doing little things like that," Lisa said.



Then the phone rang. The news wasn't good for the Evans family: Nicholas' biological father had come forward to take custody of him.

"It was very hard; we were just devastated," Lisa said. "But we tried to be happy that this father and his son would be together. And we tried to explain that to Emily, that it was actually a good thing."

As her mother's voice grew sad, Boo chose this moment to flop herself playfully across her mother's lap, giggling and smiling up at her with mischief in her eyes.

"But now we have her, and we're so thankful," Lisa said, smiling.

Maria Grace was born Sept. 6, 2001. Two weeks later, the Evans got word she would become their daughter and began receiving monthly pictures and updates about her doctor's visits.

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Lisa Evans and her husband, Dan, adopted Maria Grace, now 2, from Guatemala.

Six months later, on April 1, 2002, Lisa and Dan traveled to Guatemala and met their daughter for the first time.

"From the moment I picked her up, we had her. She would just smile. It was so wonderful," Lisa said.

The television in the sun room of the Evans' Fort Benning home played a video tape capturing that meeting. Boo watched intently, pointing and exclaiming, "That's me! There's Daddy!"

The Evans brought Maria Grace home after less than a week in Guatemala.

"When we drove up with her, (Emily) — who had stayed behind — didn't want to see the baby," Lisa said. "But we gave her a lot of hugs and reassurance and eventually she decided to see her. She connected with her right away. That was her baby sister."

And despite the normal sibling rivalry and slight jealousy common when younger siblings come along, Emily loves her little sister.

"How do you like being a big sister," Lisa prompts in a family video clip from Boo's first birthday party in 2002.

"It's the most fun I ever had in my whole life," Emily declares.

Of course, even though the Evans are now living happily ever after, the road has not been without its bumps, and there could some day be more to follow, Lisa acknowledged.

"There were a few times when one or the other of us was ready to throw in the towel — you need support," she admitted. "You have to go through so many background checks and home studies, and the waiting period is a long time."

The Evans' adoption process lasted 14 months from start to finish. According to the National Adoption Information Clearinghouse, it can take up to two years.

On top of the long wait and sometimes unpredictable upsets, such as losing Nicholas, there are other concerns.

Adoptions can be expensive — the Evans spent around $30,000 when it was all said and done.

And with international adoptions, families sometimes run the risk of adopting or essentially buying a "black market" baby — a child who has been sold, not adopted. Fortunately, Lisa said, Guatemala has a very thorough adoption system, which mandates DNA testing for both the children and their biological mothers.

Even now that the adoption is complete, there are some challenges the family must contend with.

Although the Evans honor Maria Grace's birth mother by keeping her picture, they don't have contact with her. In fact, they don't know much about her — or her family history.

"It sometimes concerns me that we know little about her mother and nothing about the father, as far as medical history," Lisa said. "If anything life-threatening ever ... well, there are just things we don't know."

But these concerns don't weigh too heavily on Lisa and Dan. The couple prefers to keep a positive frame of mind and be as open as possible about the adoption.

Every night, as Lisa put Maria Grace to bed, she tells her a story about a child with a life similar to her own. And every April 1, the Evans clan celebrates "family day," when they watch the video of their first meeting and the first time they brought her home.

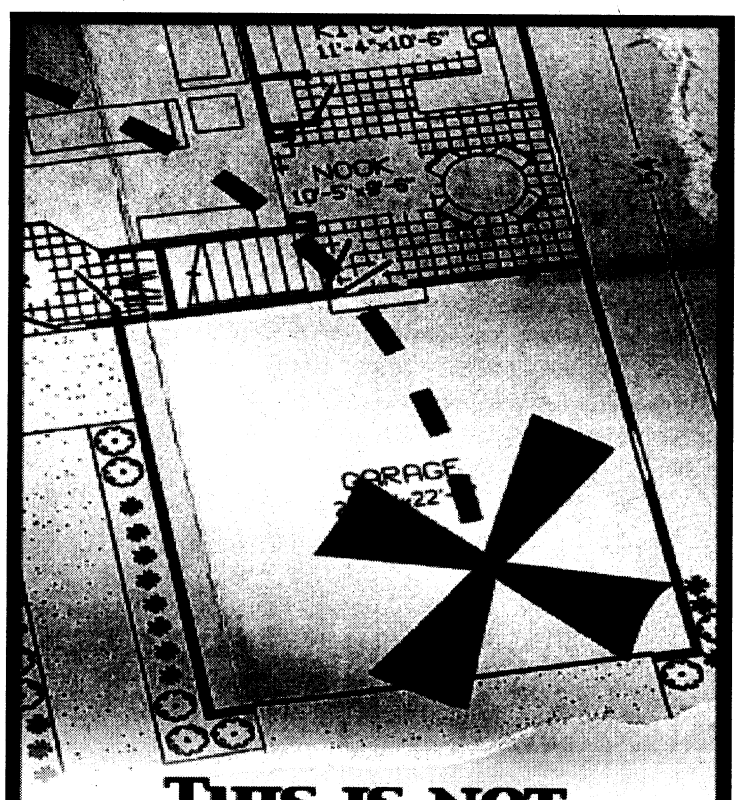
Meanwhile, Dan is learning Spanish and hopes to help Maria Grace learn to speak it, as well. The family also plans to take a trip to Guatemala every three to four years.

And when Maria Grace starts asking those tough questions — questions about her birth mother — the Evans will be ready.

"We have no contact with the birth mother, but if (Maria Grace) ever wanted to look for her, the whole family would jump on the plane to go with her," Lisa said.

All in all, Lisa maintained the experience was well worth the ups and downs. In fact, the mother of two is already trying to talk her husband into adopting another child, this time a boy.

There are agencies available to help prospective adoptive parents like the Evans in Columbus, said Loraine Douglas, Region 8 adoption coordinator for the Office of Adoptions.



The Office of Adoptions is a state program, which places "special needs" children. Special needs children are not necessarily mentally, physically or socially impaired, Douglas stressed. Many children are considered special needs simply because of their age.

The Office of Adoptions deals with children placed in foster care and attempts to find them adoptive families if they can't be reunited with their birth parents.

For more information, call Douglas at 649-7462.

There are also two private agencies in Columbus — New Beginnings Adoption Agency and Bethany Christian Services.

For more information about adoption, research the National Adoption Information Clearinghouse Web site.

German graduates into U.S. Army

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Growing up in Germany, Gaber Kiflemariam always wanted his mother to take him to the American kaserne on her days off. She thought he wanted to eat at Burger King, but he really wanted to see the American Soldiers.

Today, the 20-year-old private is graduating with D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment — as an infantry Soldier in the U.S. Army.

Kiflemariam was born in Esslingen, Germany, to Eritrean parents who fled the civil war in Ethiopia. His mother worked as a finance specialist for 7th Corps Finance in Stuttgart, and his father managed the Self-Service Supply Store at Patch Barracks.

In July 2000, Kiflemariam and his parents moved to the U.S. after his mother qualified for an immigration program that grants long-time military employees permission to live in the States.

He grew up around Soldiers, always aspiring to be part of their country and to become one of them.

"I liked their brotherhood, the way they backed each other up," he said. "I wanted to be a part of that."

He heard stories from his family friends and personal role models, Col. Nancy Ray, acting deputy assistant of the Army for the elimination of chemical weapons, and her husband, retired Lt. Col. Woody Ray.

"When he used to tell me stories about airborne Soldiers in the Army, I always wanted to be part of them," Kiflemariam said.

"This is a boy who got off an airplane three and a half years ago not speaking a word of English," Woody said. "Now he's an American Soldier and the first person in his family who will become a U.S. citizen."

"I've always wanted to be one of the best. I want to go out and see some action; I want to be a Ranger," Kiflemariam said.

After he graduated from West Potomac High School in Alexandria, Va., Kiflemariam joined the Army.

"He used to make me buy him anything that had an American flag on it," said Azezet Berhe, Kiflemariam's mother. "So when he told me he signed up, I wasn't surprised. We're all very proud of him."

During his one station unit training, Kiflemariam enjoyed the firing ranges and urban operations training the most, and he attributed his success to his drill sergeants.

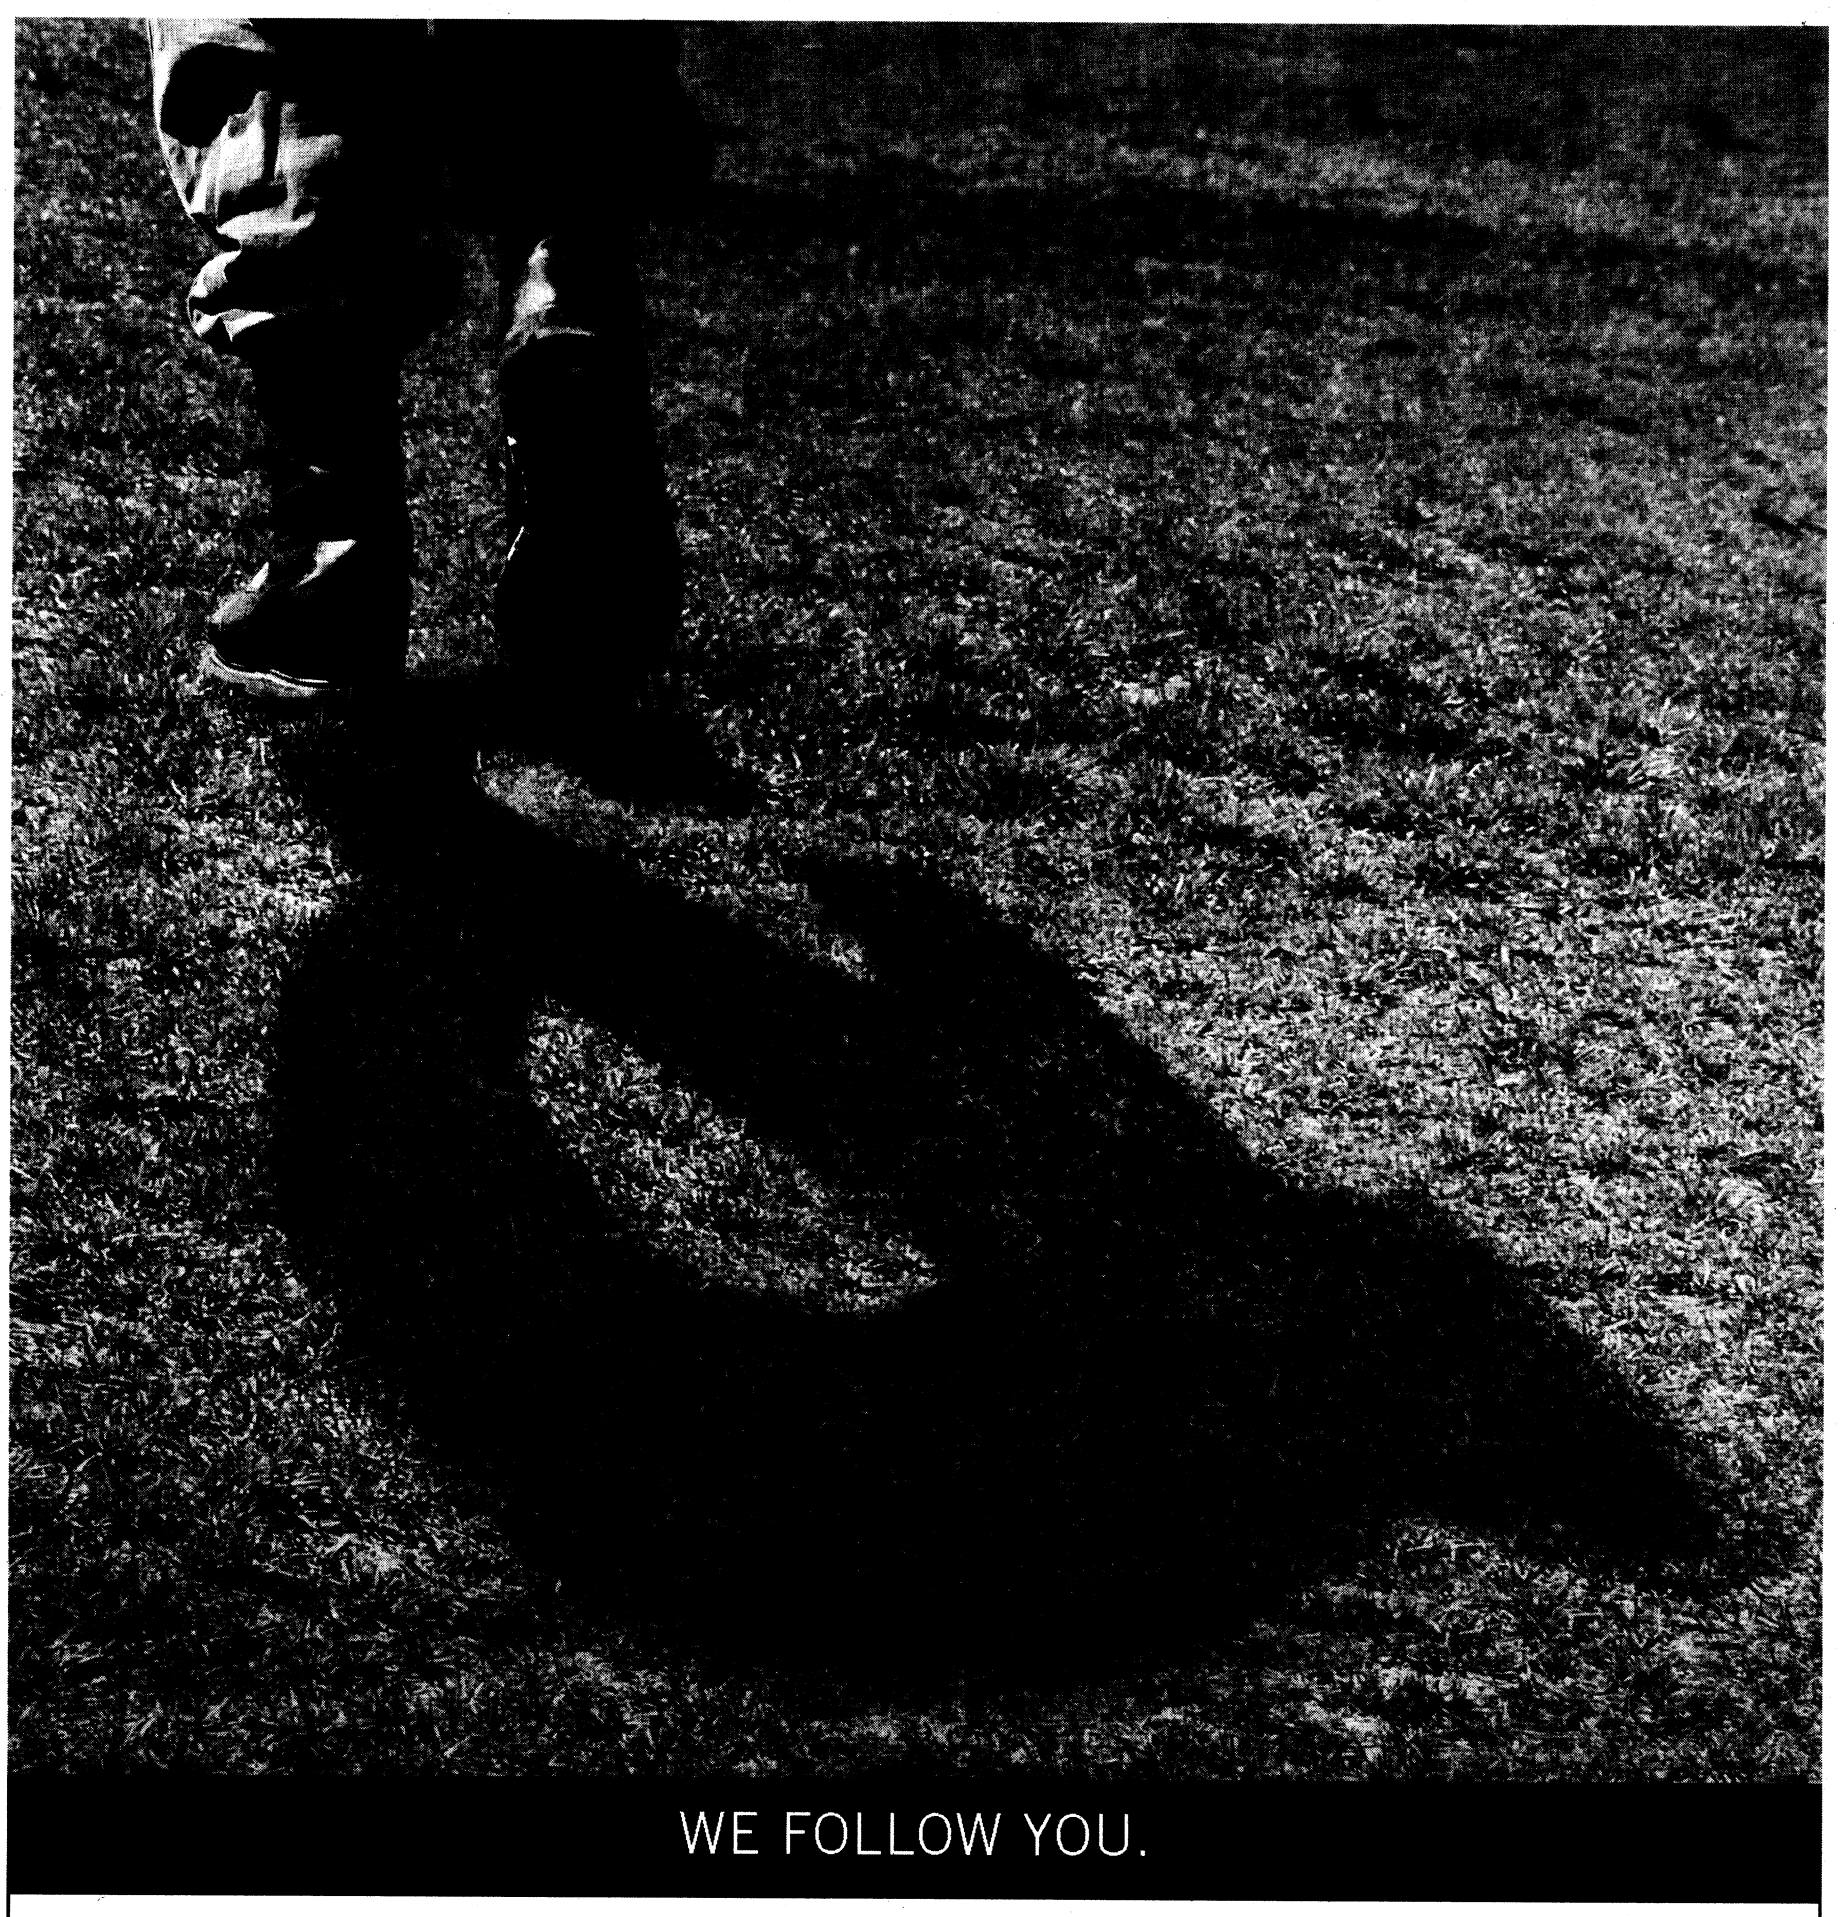
"They didn't just have us execute obstacle courses, they made sure we understood what we were doing, because they know we will eventually have to do it to save our lives," Kiflemariam said.

Pvt. Russell Kemery, said he was glad to have Kiflemariam as a battle buddy.

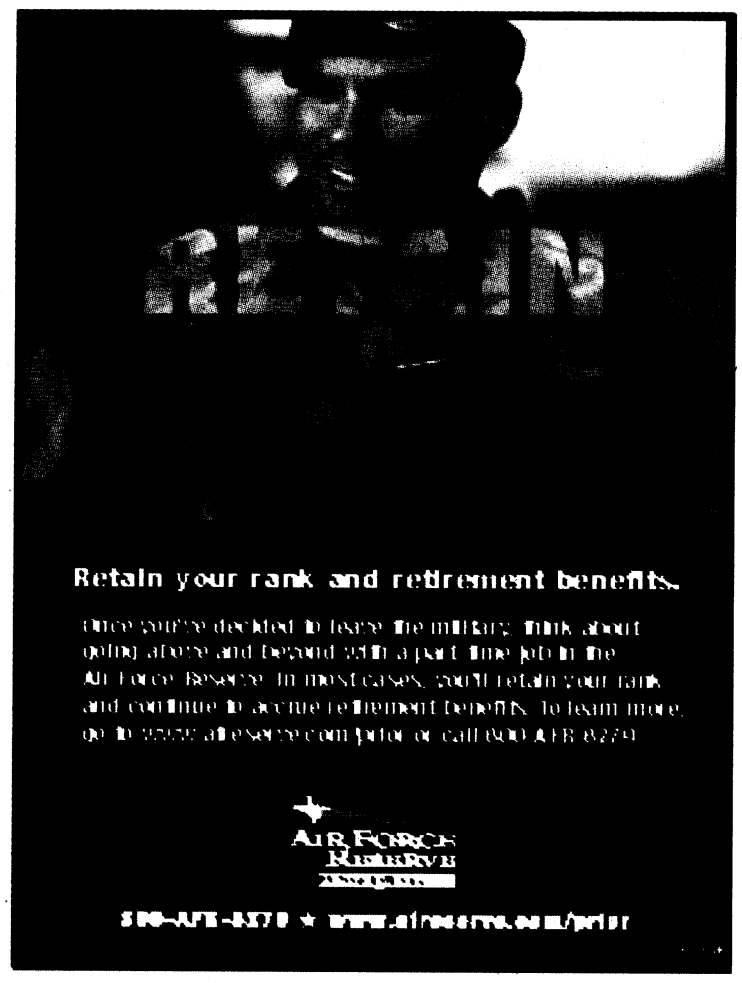
"He's a good Soldier and a good-hearted person. He's going to do well as a Ranger," Kemery said.

"I will not fail. I worked too hard to get this far and fail," Kiflemariam said.

"He was a little slow when he got here, but that's the way it is with all new Soldiers," said Sgt. 1st Class John K. Cervanka, one of his drill sergeants. "He really surprised me. I didn't think he was going to do as well as he did at first, but he's worked really hard."



After graduation, Kiflemariam will attend Airborne School and then the Ranger Indoctrination Program.



For today, he's joined by his mother and Nancy at his graduation ceremony and all he wants to do is go eat at BK.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Pvt. Gaber Kiflemariam, D Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, right, and Pvt. Russell Kemery, his battle buddy, cleaned their weapons for the last time Tuesday. They graduate today as infantry Soldiers.

Cabs fare well under new contract

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

After six months without, Fort Benning has a new taxi contract.

The new contract went into effect May 1, replacing an interim system that had been in place since the old contract was terminated in November. During the interim period, passengers paid by the mile.

Charlotte Jackson, director of the Business Operations Division in the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, said there are differences with the new contract.

"The first is that DMWR contracted with the taxi owners and operators and not directly with the companies," Jackson said.

This means there are currently 51 contracts instead of just one, said Carol Nance, chief of Nonappropriated Fund Contracting.

And, she said, drivers are coming in weekly to pick up copies of the contract.

The second change involved provisions for force protection. Only taxi owners and operators under contract with MWR may operate on the installation. They'll be given a decal that must be renewed each month.

Jackson said the Directorate of Public Safety was involved in developing the new contract.

Drivers on post must maintain their cars to specified standards and must have insurance. They'll also have to have a background check and will be subjected to random vehicle inspections and drug screenings.

"We want to ensure the Soldiers have a safe vehicle (to ride in) and are protected," Jackson said. The feedback she has been getting from drivers has been positive.

Taxi owner and operator Ron Parker has been driving around Fort Benning off and on for seven years and isn't at all put off by the contract's terms.

"The inspections and drug testing are going to cut out a lot of bad drivers," Parker said. "This is much better. It's making more cab drivers happier than ever before."

Almost all of the drivers' business comes between Wednesday and Sunday because of graduations, and Parker said the drivers are valuable to people visiting Fort Benning.

"We're a good source on information," he said. "We know what's going on, where the good restaurants are. We have all the entertainment information for Columbus and Fort Benning."

MWR customer comments cards will be available in each cab, Nance said, so passengers can provide feedback. If a driver has two unfavorable comment cards within a 30-day period, the contract can be terminated.

Parker said he is pleased with the support he's received from the NAF contracting office.

"They've been great," he said.

"Everything takes time and it will take a while to get the bugs worked out. But within two months, any problems will be worked out."

Luau celebrates heritage

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

To celebrate Asian Pacific Islander Heritage Month, the Fort Benning Equal Opportunity Office, the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, and Better Opportunity for Single Soldiers hosted the sixth annual Asian Pacific Luau May 14.

The luau drew more than 2,000 Soldiers and civilians, featuring a variety of live performances.

Demonstrations included Fiama's Martial Arts, a community drum circle, an authentic Polynesian dance show and dance and a performance by the Panablaze Steel Drum Band.

The dance demonstration was highlighted by the return of the Hula Halau O'Kalei Polynesian demonstration, including a fire and knife dance. Also featured, were dances from New Zealand, Hawaii, Tahiti and other cultures.

"It's very important to have an authentic Polynesian show at the luau," said Brian Smith, marketing director for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation. "By watching the show, people can watch some of their customs and learn a lot about them."

Children also participated during the community drum circle demonstration, tapping on a drum alongside drummers on stage.

"Participation from children is key in an event like this," Smith said. "By getting them involved, then they have more fun."

There was also a youth activities area, where children could jump on a moonwalk, slide down a big, bouncy slide, climb the rock wall or get dizzy on a scrambler.

"The slide was the best," said Jonathan Bruss, 6. "It was cool to go down really fast."

The luau offered culinary delights, as well, featuring an authentic Polynesian menu.

"Everyone seems to enjoy the food when they are out here," Smith said. "Having the Polynesian meal makes this event that much better. What better way to learn about their culture than to eat their native food."

"This is a great way for the family to get together," said Nelson Simpson, a father who brought out his two children. "Instead of sitting around the house with everyone in a different room, we can come out here and enjoy time together as a family."

Smith said the main goal of the luau was to educate the community about the Asian Pacific Islander culture, to show what they've done for our country and to create a positive family experience.

"If people walked away with those three things, this luau was a success," he said.

Flight ends Starlifter's 40 years of service

Airborne students make last C-141 jump

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Students in B Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, had the honor of jumping onto Fryar Drop Zone during the C-141 Starlifter's last flight May 13.

105 Soldiers shuffled out the door before Pvt. Jason S. Stuart closed out the fleet's final mission and went down in history as the "Keeper of the Wings" for the C-141.

Traditionally, the youngest member of the company is entrusted with the honor, and at only 18, Stuart fit the bill.

"It's pretty cool," he said. "They made such a big deal about it at first. I guess I didn't really understand it, but I retired an airplane."

Stuart is a forward observer who has only been in the military for five months and 20 days. He remains at Airborne School as a holdover, waiting for a slot at the Ranger Indoctrination Program. He spends his days as an opposing force in 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment's training exercises.

The fleet Stuart retired outdates him by more than two decades and has logged 10 million flying hours.

President John F. Kennedy's first official act after his inauguration was to order the development of an all-jet transport to extend the reach of the nation's military forces. The C-141 was Lockheed's (now Lockheed-Martin) answer.

The first version of the long-range troop and cargo carrier was deployed May 1964, and during the Vietnam War, earned the nickname "Hanoi Taxi" during its missions to repatriate more than 500 American prisoners of war from North Vietnam.

The C-141 was the first jet transport Army paratroopers jumped from and the first plane to land in the Antarctic.

The second and last version, the C-141B, deployed in December 1979 and had a payload capacity of 94,508 pounds.

Over the years, the fleet of C-141s has performed global military and humanitarian service missions, according to Air Force information.

The fleet delivered flood relief to Minnesota in 1979, to the Azores in 1980 and Louisiana in 1983, in addition to numerous assistance efforts worldwide.

A C-141 set a record in 1981, flying nonstop from New Jersey to Saudi Arabia carrying 67,000 pounds of cargo and refueling three times in flight.

During Desert Storm, C-141s flew more than 37,000 departures with an on-time record above 90 percent.

After 40 years of service as the Air Force's workhorse, the 168-foot-long aircraft is officially retired, gradually replaced by the more versatile and cost-effective C-130 Hercules and C-17 Globemaster III carriers, said Air Force Senior Master Sgt. P. Allen Pennington, an Air Force public affairs representative.

"The (C-141s) are more than 40 years old," Pennington said. "They are very well-maintained, but they are very expensive to maintain."

Pennington said Air Force combat cameramen manned the doors for the last flight and recorded the historic mission.

The photographs and film will be turned over to the 4th Air Force and the Joint Combat Camera Center to be archived and used in this year's Commanders Conference, Pennington said.

Thanks: Soldiers

again, as they accepted gifts from the Negrins.

"No, gentlemen, thank you," Tonie said. "Thank you for what you do for us."

Ed and Tonie, a retired journalist with a national news service, were saving for a European vacation to celebrate their 10th wedding anniversary before 9-11. Shortly after, while driving along an Arizona highway, they spotted a man waving a huge flag from an overpass. His simple action sparked something within the couple, and they devised a plan to use their vacation savings to tour the country in a truck decorated with American flags.

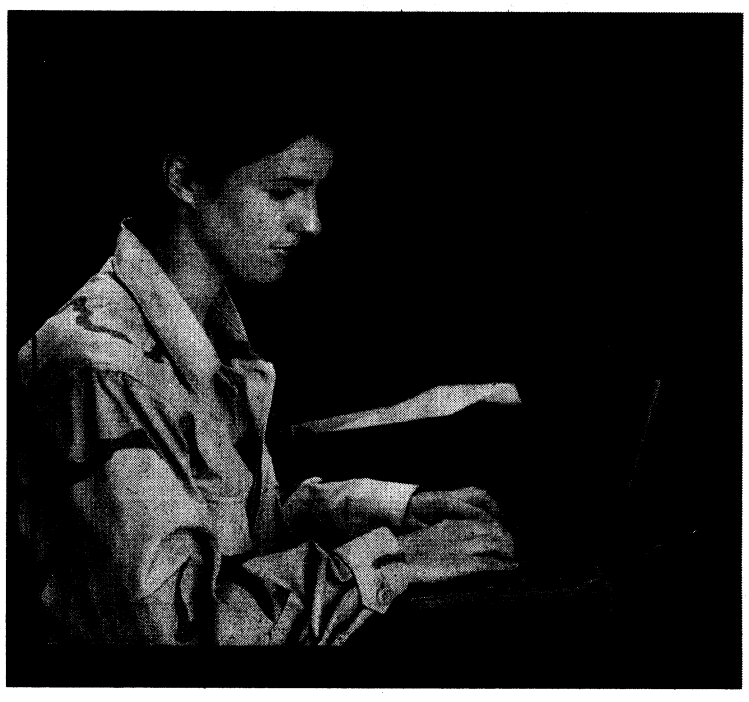
"We started out just to encourage the average American citizen, to remind people what a great country we live in," Tonie said.

A chance encounter with a group of Soldiers preparing to deploy to Afghanistan altered their course. Since that day, they've spent more than 20 percent of their annual income on their mission, one designed to assure servicemen and women "that the true heart of America — the hard-working, country-loving people — believe in the cause you fight for," Tonie said.

"We've been all over this country, and every day we meet people who feel the same," she said, admitting that she left her job with the liberal media frustrated that "the agenda of the few makes all the headlines."

"Ours is not a political message," Tonie said. "But we want to say to these (Soldiers) and their families — nevermind what you hear in the media. The people that make this country work truly support our military."

The Negrins came to Fort Benning from Walter Reed Army Medical Center in Washington, D.C., where they visited injured servicemen, including a 21-year-old Marine who lost his arms in Iraq.



"He had an incredible attitude," Ed said. "It was just amazing. It's like that every time you meet someone there, and it makes you wonder where these kids are coming from. They've done more in 15 minutes than I've done in my entire life."

The couple, who refuse to accept donations, said they're blessed to be able to travel and share their gifts with Soldiers.

"Not everybody can do this, but everybody can do something," Tonie said. "We're out here because we owe them a debt. This is how we've chosen to pay that bill — though we'll never be able to pay it all.

"But I wish everybody, whether you agree with (the war) politically or not, would acknowledge that these people make it possible for the rest of us to live free and voice our opinions."

A security guard candidate rinses his eyes after completing the pepper-spray training portion of the "mini police academy" last week. More than 170 applicants are in the final stage of their four-week training and certification to become guards at Fort Benning gates.

Fort Benning units support efforts to train new guards on post

It's a "one-team" effort any way you look at it.

When candidates for the new security guard positions at the post's checkpoints went through training here, they were welcomed as part of this Army of One.

"The way we see it, they're here to help us. We're more than happy to help them," said Staff Sgt. Janet Sokolowski, the operations range NCO for the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, one of several units that offered facilities and support to Vance Federal Security Services, the company contracted to man the post's access points.

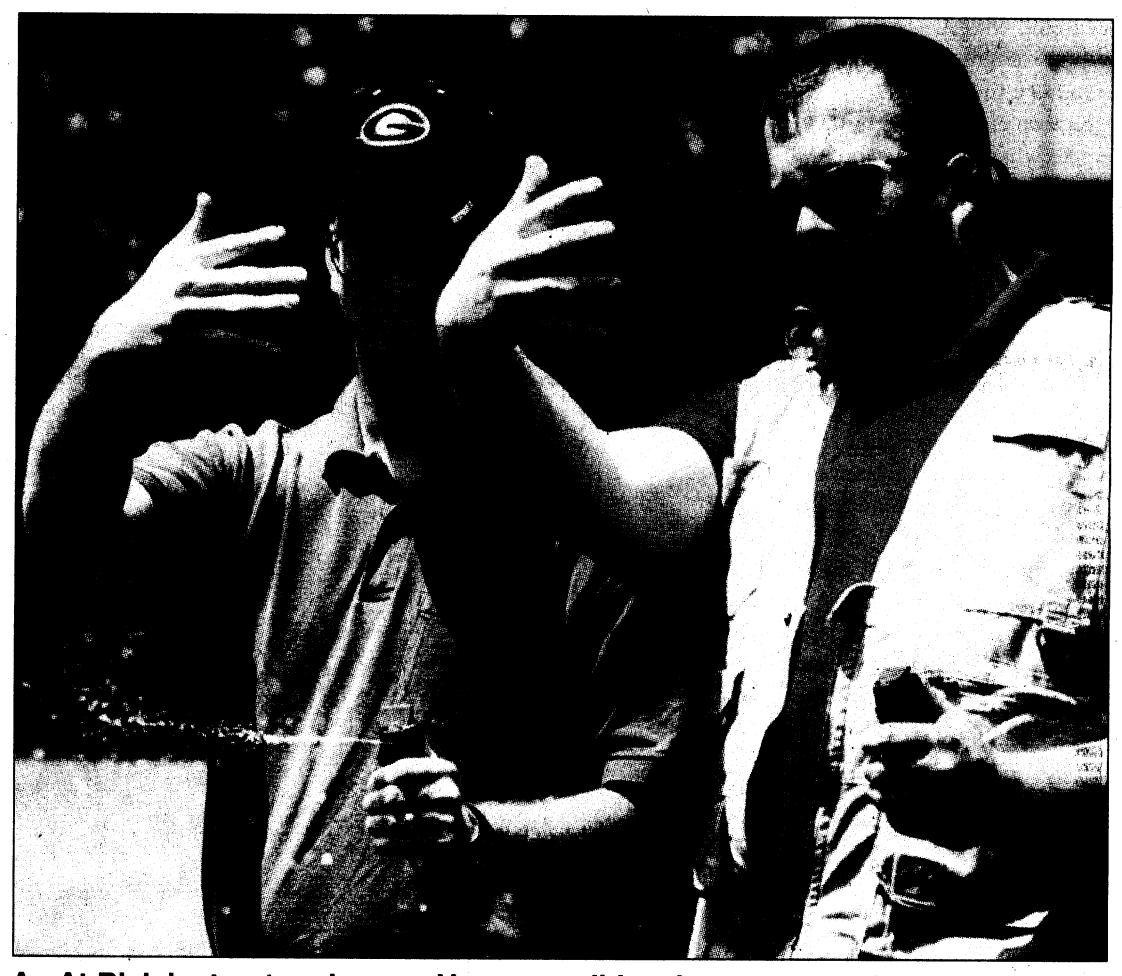
AMU welcomed Vance to Parks Range last week for training in the military police firearms qualifications course.

"You know, a lot of the (marksmanship) unit's Soldiers live here on Fort Benning," Sokolowski said. "So, essentially, these (guards) will be protecting our families. What they're doing is important, so we're happy to do our part."

More than 170 candidates are in the final stage of classroom and on-the-job training, preparing to assume responsibility for access control June 3. Their presence will free the Department of the Army civilian police who've been manning the gates to patrol post neighborhoods.

"It's the whole one-team concept," said Rick Pollard, chief of Vance guards and a retired MP first sergeant.

"They'll be integrated into the post's force protection, and as such, the folks around here have gone way above and beyond to help us in every way."



More than 500 applicants were meticulously screened for the positions, Pollard said. Now they're finishing the four-week "mini police academy," which includes training in weapons, self-defense, CPR and first aid, physical training, and search and seizure.

"The idea here is not just to train individuals for performance on the job," said Anthony Flythe, an instructor with At Risk, the company contracted by Vance to teach the techniques and concepts of self-defense.

"It's about building teams," he said. "We may not have the same beliefs or political views, but we're on the same team, and we all know that. That's cohesion, and that's what we want to build here."

women and more interaction with the Soldiers.

Hampton said she is a great supporter of the military and wanted to thank Soldiers personally for what they do for the country and its freedom.

"I have so much more respect for their discipline," she said after finding out it was the first time the Soldiers were allowed to talk while eating. "I could not do any of it myself."

The contestants then headed to the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment.

They were greeted by Soldiers reciting the Soldier's Creed, which inspired a loud round of applause and cheers from the contestants.

Air Force Lt. Melanie Gosset, Miss Historic North Georgia, was excited to be in a military environment with new Soldiers "who may be asking themselves why they signed up for this," she said.

"It's nice to be able to tell them that's it's going to be over soon and that it isn't always this bad," she said.

"This is a great morale booster," said Sgt. 1st Class Todd Winhoven, a drill sergeant with the battalion. "The Soldiers are really enjoying themselves."

During the visit, the contestants called cadence while marching alongside a formation, looked at the M-16 rifle, tried on military gear, took photos with Soldiers and asked them questions about life in the Army.

Samantha Daniels, Miss Columbus, said calling cadence was her favorite part of the day.

"Being in that position, you realize how much respect these Soldiers have for rank and authority. They are going to do whatever I say," she said.

She was also amazed at the discipline all the Soldiers had.

"They have to give up so much in order to be here," she said. "They do it to serve our country — that amazes me."

The morale among the Soldiers was high as the contestants went around and talked to all of them.

"We spent hours cleaning this place and it's an honor to show these ladies where we live," said Pvt. Benjamin Smith, a B Co. Soldier.

Maj. Anthony Berry, 1st Bn., 38th Inf. Regt., executive officer, said these types of visits let the Soldiers know people care about them and what they are doing.

To end the visit, the contestants invited the Sand Hill Soldiers to the public concert at Wetherby Field where they sang, danced and performed group entertainment.

2ID: To deploy brigade this summer

Soldiers will spend up to two years separated from their families. Officials said the majority will spend between 12 and 18 months away. No decision has been made on whether the brigade will return to Korea following its tour in Iraq.

A senior military official said the troops are combat ready, and this will allow the stress to be "balanced" throughout the force. He said DoD is looking at changing the tour length of Marine forces assigned to Iraq. Currently, Marines spend seven months in Iraq and seven months home.

Troops of the 2nd Brigade, 2ID, stationed near the demilitarized zone in Korea, will begin deploying to Iraq in mid-summer, a senior DoD official said.

The 3rd Brigade of the 2nd Inf. Div., has been in northern Iraq since early this year.

The brigade became part of Task Force Olympia early this year and took over operational control of northern Iraqi provinces Feb. 5 from the 101st Airborne Division (Air Assault)in Mosul.

This summer's deployment of the 2nd Brigade will place two of 2nd Infantry Division's three brigades in Iraq. The 1st Brigade of the 2ID will remain in Korea.

need to be more aware."

One of the Web postings submitted by Al-Masakin specifically targets military personnel.

"Al-Masakin would like to take this opportunity to remind the American Muslim Mujahedin and our allies in the revolutionary and anti-Imperialist left that (Reserve Officer Training Corps) buildings, armed service recruiting centers, individual military personnel and police officers are 'military targets,'" it reads. "These institutions must be violently and covertly attacked. In fact, there are thousands of unarmed military targets walking around all over the United States. Outraged American citizens and American Muslims should have little difficulty making violent contact with recruits, cadets, Marines, etc."

Despite the overt threat to military personnel, Harvey said he is confident in Fort Benning's security situation.

"We have a real good security posture here," he said. "We have great (military police officers), a great force protection officer and an outstanding intelligence structure."

Bob Robertson, the installation anti-terrorism force protection officer, agrees.

"I am comfortable given the current threat level at Fort Benning," he said. "There is a great team in place between the Emergency Operations Center, Installation Operations Center, military police and intelligence elements here at Fort Benning."

Both the Directorate of Intelligence and Security and the 902nd Military Intelligence Group conduct a variety of force protection and anti-terrorism classes. For more information, call 545-1711.

CLOSER LOOK

There are several ways to help avert a terrorist attack, according to the Directorate of Intelligence and Security:

- Be more aware of your surroundings and seek help if suspicious behavior is observed.
- Suicide bombers are a popular means to achieve terrorist goals. Be on the lookout for suspicious persons who may be sweating profusely, wearing bulky, concealing clothing inappropriate for the weather and may be conspicuously isolated. A suicide bomber may have wires visible underneath clothing or in sleeves, or may be clutching a detonation device .
- Trust your instincts and common sense when weighing a questionable occurrence. Report it to authorities.
- Be aware of unattended boxes and packages and do not use a cell phone in the vicinity of a questionable object — it could detonate an explosive device.
- Report anything out of place or suspicious to authorities and clear the area as soon as possible.

Vacation Bible School set for June 14-18

Kids invited to explore 'Lava Lava Island'

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

It's time to get the kids ready for a trip to Lava Lava Island.

That's the theme for this year's Vacation Bible School sponsored by the Fort Benning chaplains.

It's scheduled for 9 a.m. to noon June 14 to 18 at White Elementary School.

Tom Taylor, director of religious education for Fort Benning's Protestant chapels, said last year's VBS had more than 200 children enrolled and he's planning for the same amount this year.

VBS is a combined Catholic and Protestant effort, Taylor said.

The Lava Lava Island program is nondenominational, specially designed by a company called Group.

"We've used their VBS programs for several years," Taylor said.

"They put on an excellent program for children."

He said the program helps children understand about the love of Jesus and gives them a chance to interact with other children.

VBS director Lolita Allen has been working with the children for a while and said they tend to enjoy everything about the VBS program.

"They especially like the music," Allen said, "because it gets them up and moving."

The games and crafts all will have something to do with the Lava Lava theme.

Allen said the children are not divided into groups based on age or grade, but into mixed groups where the older children are able to help the younger ones who may need assistance.

By mixing ages within groups, Allen said it gives the children a chance to build relationships with one another.

"The older kids like to be in charge of something," she said.

Allen said each day ends with a story with a "cliffhanger ending" that leaves the children trying to figure out the answer and has them ready to come back the next day.

VBS registration is open for children in pre-K through sixth grade at no charge.

Parents can register in room 122 of Meloy Hall, Building 6.

"And we always need workers and helpers," Taylor said.

"We can use anyone who wants to volunteer."

The VBS program requires about 30 volunteers.

Hailey Green, perched atop her father's shoulders, leads the Survivor's during the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life May 14 at Kinnett Stadium in Columbus. The 4-year-old cancer survivor was the honorary chairperson of this year's event.

Relay raises funds for cancer research, treatment

Annual event raises $291,000

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Standing on the field of Kinnett Stadium May 14, Denise Dowdy was overwhelmed.

All around her, members of the tricommunity — every age, ethnicity, social and financial background — joined to take a stand against cancer. Well, a walk, that is.

The annual Columbus/Fort Benning American Cancer Society's Relay for Life attracted 141 teams this year, a new record for the overnight event, which raises money for cancer research and programs.

The ACS' signature event, Relay for Life, is an opportunity for communities to grieve for those lost to cancer and celebrate those who have survived.

Columbus has participated in the international event the past 11 years, but this year, something was different.

"There was just a different spirit in the air — more intense," said Dowdy, an ACS community income manager. "People were more excited at 2 o'clock in the morning; more people stayed throughout the night. The teams just really embraced the event."

As of Tuesday, those teams had raised about $291,000 — considerably more than the $238,000 raised last year.

Many of the teams went "above and beyond," raising more than $5,000, Dowdy said, adding that Waddell Elementary School took the cake with $11,000.

But the numbers aren't all that made the event a success. It's the participants, rallying around the track, uniting in a common goal, she said.

"Relay for Life is different than any other fund-raising event, because it crosses all borders," she said. "Like cancer itself, this event doesn't discriminate. It's an opportunity to be a community without boundaries."

Teams came from all walks of life, she said — from Fort Benning, local schools, businesses and hospitals.

"They all came out for one night, and for one night, we were all the same," she said.

Another distinctive quality of the relay is that it focuses on survivorship. Each year, a survivor lap kicks off the event. 517 cancer survivors walked the first lap May 14, cheered and applauded by teams on the sidelines.

"It's almost impossible to say what I felt as a staff member," Dowdy said. "Everybody was so positive and had such a great outlook."

Among those teams that impressed Dowdy was Friends of the Infantry, a team of wives from the Infantry Training Brigade.

Friends of the Infantry was named the most spirited team, received second-place for best campsite and was one of the "elite teams" that raised more than $5,000.

"This was their first year here, and they blew it out of the water," Dowdy said.

The team raised its money through the Internet, said Andrea Nelson, who headed the team, e-mailing friends and families as far away as Germany and Sarajevo and asking for donations, gathering about $7,000.

Nelson said the relay was a personal experience for many of the 26 women on the team.

One of ITB's family members lost her mother, two sisters and an aunt to cancer. And children within the unit have fallen victim to cancer, including a 4-month-old baby and a 13-year-old, said Donna Smith, another member of the Friends of the Infantry. In fact, the team's top fund-raiser's father died of cancer just two months ago.

But the event was still a positive experience for the women, Nelson said.

"It's just tremendous to see all the people out here — so many organizations," she marveled.

Nelson was particularly impressed by the survivor lap.

"You see people out here who you didn't even know have cancer," she said. "To see these survivors, from tiny,

Red Cross summer youth program to begin

Teens can volunteer around post

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It's that time of year again — when the schoolhouse doors swing open and the kids are free at last, free at last, thank God almighty they're free at last.

Of course, that's only until the summer blues set in.

When the excitement of three months of sleeping in, vegging on the couch and consuming entirely too much television has passed, and suddenly your teenager is left with one very unpleasant realization — "I'm bored."

Never fear. Fort Benning's American Red Cross Summer Youth Volunteer Program can lay those summer doldrums to rest before they even begin.

And if nothing else, this program will keep your children busy, enrich their lives and provide them long-term benefits.

Darla Gibbs, the Red Cross volunteer who coordinates the program, said the summer volunteer program is a wonderful opportunity for military and Department of Defense civilian children ages 13 to 18.

"This program gives them the opportunity to give back to the community," she said. "But it also allows them to try different areas to see what they would possibly like to do with their lives."

The program places children in volunteer position across post, including in the hospital, libraries, Fort Benning Golf Course, National Infantry Museum, Officers' Spouses' Club Thrift Shop and in the main office of the Red Cross, she said.

"They get to go to an actual work setting and see what it's like," Gibbs said.

Teenagers enrolled in the program can volunteer between 8 a.m. and noon from June 7 to July 16, but it's up to them how many hours they spend any given week, she said.

The program can be a quick fix for many volunteers, who are required by area high schools to volunteer a minimum of 20 hours in the community to be eligible for graduation.

But more than that, Gibbs said, it's an opportunity to improve yourself.

"Volunteering can have long-term results," she said. "It's good for a college application or a resume — people like to see that."

The summer program, which already has more than 65 volunteers signed up, is a great benefit, but only for those who meet the Thursday deadline, Gibbs said.

"We have to have all applications in by Thursday. We have to have time to get all the placements done, and positions at the hospital have medical requirements," she said.

For more information about the program, call the Red Cross at 545-5194.

I'm a big fan of visual entertainment that doesn't require any effort or interaction on my part. Anywhere you can park yourself in a comfortable seat, stuff your face and watch someone else do all the work is fine by me.

So I was a more than willing dinner theater-goer when Benning's Backstage came out with its second production last September, Dearly Departed.

Admittedly, I wasn't expecting much. I've been to installation theater productions before, and they aren't always exactly what I would call impressive.

Fortunately for me and the $19 I forked over for the show, Benning's Backstage is awesome.

The food is pretty good — typical three-course military fine dining. The ambience is decent — white linen table cloths, fancy napkins, candle light and wine — all set in the Kelley Hill Recreation Center.

And then there's the show. I went to see some country bumpkin parody, and I have to tell you, I was laughing the entire time. As was the rest of the audience.

The cast was incredible. From the main characters to the bit parts, the line delivery, facial expressions, chemistry among the characters and comedic timing were just perfect. It was one of the best live productions I've ever seen.

Whatever it's lacking in atmosphere, Benning's Backstage more than compensates for on the stage.

So I'm pretty stoked to go back this weekend for the debut of California Suite. If you're like me, you've never heard of this "classic comedy," but then again, I'd never heard of the last show, and it was hilarious.

This one is what I'd consider an adult-themed play, though.

It's a four-scene play which follows the lives of four groups of people who occupy Suite 203 in a California hotel.

Scene 1: A divorced mother, Hanah, follows her daughter to California after she runs away to be with her father. Enter the ex-husband, Billy, who's not giving up his daughter that easily.

Scene 2: Marvin journeys to California for his nephew's bar mitzvah, where his brother so thoughtfully surprises him with Bunny, a prostitute. Looks like everyone wants to surprise Marvin, though, because his wife, Millie, shows up

No tan is a good tan

Dr. Jack Lesher
MCG Health system

A bronzed body is a healthy body, right? Wrong. Too much sun can lead to skin cancer and premature aging. Here are six myths about sun exposure:

Myth No. 1: It is OK to tan if you wear sunscreen.

Reality: No tan is healthy or safe. Use a sunscreen that blocks both UVA and UVB rays with an SPF of at least 15 (30 or higher if you have a history of skin cancer). Apply an hour before going out. Reapply every two hours (more often if you are swimming).

Myth No. 2: You only need to wear sunscreen if you are outside for several hours.

Reality: It's best to wear sunscreen every day. You should routinely use it if you will be exposed to the sun for more than 10 to 15 minutes. Driving, sitting in front of a window and walking outside all expose you to the sun.

Myth No. 3: You need sun to produce Vitamin D.

Reality: You only need 5 to 15 minutes of sun exposure two to three times a week on your face and hands to produce a sufficient supply of Vitamin D. Milk and other Vitamin D-rich foods and multivitamins are excellent sources of Vitamin D.

Myth No. 4: Don't worry about sun exposure in the wintertime or on cloudy days.

Reality: The sun may not feel hot during the winter or on cloudy days, but the UVA and UVB rays are still still being absorbed by your skin.

Myth No. 5: Tanning beds are safer than the sun.

Reality: Beds use ultraviolet light, similar to the UVA and UVB rays emitted by the sun. In fact, the effects of UV exposure are intensified in a tanning bed. An hour in a tanning bed is equivalent to several hours in the sun.

Myth No. 6: Exposure to sun helps skin look healthy.

Reality: Too much sun actually ages you prematurely. Compare skin on your face and hands with skin on a part of your body that is not regularly exposed to the sun and see the difference.

Cancer: Walking for good tiny to old to couples who are both survivors ... it's amazing."

It's the participants who make the event, Dowdy said.

"More than anything I want to thank the teams for being involved, for having such a wonderful outlook and attitude, and for bringing in the money," she said.

If you missed this year's event, never fear — there's always next year, and "it's never too late or too early to get started," Dowdy said.

unexpected the next morning.

Scene 3: Then comes Diana, a British actress in California as an Oscar nominee, and her husband, Sidney. Slightly nervous about that Oscar nomination thing, Diana gets sloppy drunk, throws up, makes a fool of herself at the big event and doesn't take anything home but a hangover. Then she finds out her husband is gay.

Scene 4: Two couples, longtime friends, vacation together and make the mistake of sharing close quarters. Oddly enough, things don't quite work out as planned.

And that, my friends, is the tragic storyline that you can prepare to ... laugh at.

Shows are tonight, Saturday, May 28 and 29. Doors open at 6:30 p.m., dinner is served at 7 and the show begins at 8. Tickets, including dinner and the show, are $19 for adults and $12 for children 12 and younger. Pick yours up at Omega World Travel at the Main Mall Post Exchange or at the Officers' Club.

Wilson students learn 'out of this world' lesson

Kids send small tokens to outer space

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Wilson Elementary School students enjoyed an out of this world experience recently when the school observed its very first Space Day.

Already an annual event at many schools around the country, the Wilson faculty had never heard of it until a parent relayed the idea, said Melanie Keating, the school's educational technologist. That got the ball rolling.

What caught the idea-bearing parent's attention was a program that allows children to send a little piece of themselves into outer space — their signatures.

"Not every school gets to do this — you have to (apply) and be chosen," Keating said, nodding to a poster signed by every student in the school. "We send that back to (them), they take a picture of it and the negative goes into space on the next space shuttle mission."

Wilson's kids' names are scheduled to go to space in spring 2005, she said. They'll join more than 3 million other children's names.

Once the negative reaches its destination, the shuttle crew take a picture with it, then later, sign the picture and send it back to the children with a certificate.

Despite the long wait, Keating said just the concept was exciting for the children and helped create a fun atmosphere for learning.

"The children just got so fired up about it," she said.

The students spent an entire week building up to the big event, learning about space through school broadcasts and Internet research. They also took time to recognize the crew of the Columbia, which exploded Feb. 1, 2003.

On the big day, kindergartners and first-graders journeyed to the "Star Lab," an inflatable canvas dome, completely dark inside, with a projector in the middle that puts stars up in the "sky."

Meanwhile, the older children hung out with scientists from Columbus' Coca Cola Space Center and checked out the sun with a solar telescope.

The hands-on opportunties got the children involved, fueling their enthusiasm, something Keating was glad to see.

"This grabbed the children more than anything else we've don't this year," she said.

"I'm probably dating myself, but I remember when we first walked on the moon," she said. "When I was a kid, space exploration was such a hot topic. These days, we take it for granted. So it's good to see the children still get excited."

Leadership Academy students host leadership conference

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Some of Fort Benning's youngest leaders will take the helm today, guiding students from schools around post toward the path to excellence.

Nine students chosen to participate in Wilson Elementary School's Leadership Academy will host the school's first Leadership Conference this afternoon.

The conference — also the academy's culminating event — will give the students the opportunity to put into practice all that they've learned throughout the year, said Capt. Alfonzo Ford, the academy's instructor and a Soldier from the school's Partner in Education, the Basic Combat Training Brigade.

"It's part of what I call the 'three Es,'" Ford said. "Exposure, experience and execution."

Throughout the school year, the students have focused on the academy's foundation — leadership characteristics, he said.

> "There's no lesson like peer leadership. The kids see what their peers are doing and it encourages them ..."
> Capt. Alfonzo Ford
> Leadership Academy instructor

Today, the students will relate those same lessons to their peers, 11 student representatives from Loyd, McBride, Stowers and White elementary schools.

They'll give a Powerpoint presentation overviewing the characteristics of a good leader, then lead discussion groups and a team-building exercise, said Margaret Koger, Wilson's talented and gifted teacher.

And who better for the job? The students were hand-picked for the academy at the beginning of the year.

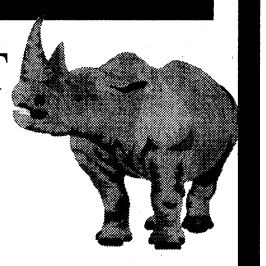
"We wanted to pinpoint those children with good leadership skills," Koger said. "We wanted to build on their strengths."

And building these children will only serve to build others, Ford said.

"There's no lesson like peer leadership," he said. "The kids see what their peers are doing, and it encourages them to look at those aspects in their own lives."

The conference might even inspire other schools on post to follow suit and develop their own academies, he said.

In the meantime, Wilson's students are ready to impart their newly gained wisdom.



"They're just these balls of young leadership energy," Ford said.

REFLECTIONS

When I was a child, my parents read to me the stories of C.S. Lewis. His children's books are legendary; filled with wonder and truth. The seven books about the Chronicles of Narnia fed my imagination. I wanted to live in the mysterious land of Narnia, to have adventures alongside the heroes and heroines of the stories: to truly know the Great Lion Aslan.

As I grew to an adult I discovered the underlying themes, amid allegories (this is a spiritual parallel to the stories). One book that comes to mind is Voyage of the Dawn Treader and specifically the chapter recounting the adventures on Dragon Island. The gang is on a voyage (now I am not giving away the whole story because I want you to read the books yourself) and one of their number is rebellious. He wanders away on his own, when he was told to remain on the ship, and discovers a dragon's lair filled with treasure. He does not want to share his hoard. Oh, no, it is all for him! He falls asleep on the golden treasure dreaming thoughts of greed, selfishness and envy. This attitude will cost him his friends and imagined happiness he thinks this will provide him.

He dreams of how his friends will bow down before his greatness. When he awakens he finds he has become the dragon. He is fearsome. He can fly. He is in pain. He cannot continue the voyage because the ship can no longer support him. He will be left behind, alone with his treasure. His heart is changing as he begins to see the futility of life motivated by greed and glory. Distraught and contrite he stands alone by his cave when Aslan comes and tells him, "If you want to be free, you must shed your dragon skin."

Forbes-Mariani

He tries and tries but only the outer layers shed off one after another, yet he is no closer to becoming completely free. Aslan says, "No, son of Adam, I must help you." Out come the long, sharp and fearsome claws of Aslan and deep they cut into the dragon flesh, ripping open the hide, releasing the boy.

The boy emerges with his skin raw and stinging and needing healing. Aslan has him wash in water to be healed. The healing touches his skin, soul and spirit.

So often we hear we need to change, act differently, be different. We try and try on our own and to a measure we are successful. We leave behind the shells of who we once were lying all around.

Yet, we can not break fully free from the dragon flesh which surrounds us. We want fulfillment, complete healing and freedom but we cannot do it on our own. We need God to intervene and set us free. Each time I read this story I see sin as the dragon flesh trapping the life inside and the compelling need for God's abiding grace to cut through to the freedom needed.

Romans chapter 8 verses 5-8 tells of the mind set on the flesh and its desires as death and the mind set on the spirit and his desires as life.

We all live in the world but where is your mind focused, where is your heart?

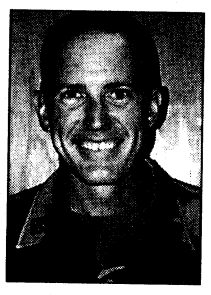
CHAPEL NOTE

Vacation Bible School — It's now time to sign up your children for Vacation Bible School, June 14-18, at White Elementary School.

Sign up is at the Religious Education Office, located in Room 122 of Meloy Hall.

The classes are for children in pre-school thorough sixth grade.

If you would like to help with this program, or for more information, call 545-4715.



What's your purpose? What's your point? Are you a screwdriver or a scissor blade?

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Just today I was trying to open the back of a computer. The trouble was, I didn't have a screwdriver — I had the edge of a scissor blade. Ever tried to open the back of a computer with the edge of a scissor blade, or am I the only moron with that genius idea?

Well, much as you might have guessed, I didn't do very well trying to get the computer open. The scissor blade just wasn't made with that purpose in mind. Things always seem to get frustrating when we try and use something other than for its intended purpose, don't they?

Are you frustrated a lot in your life? Perhaps you've not discovered your purpose. Perhaps you're trying to be a scissor blade instead of a screwdriver. Things work best when we align ourselves with what we've been uniquely designed to do, i.e., when we discover our purpose.

Hawkins

It's said that the two most important days in your life are the day you were born and the day you discover why you were born. Do you know why you were born?

What burns deep within you — what do you most want to accomplish during your days on earth? What is your passion? What is in your heart and life that is larger than yourself? If you could accomplish any one thing before you die, what would that be? In short, what is your dream?

There's a difference between a dream and a scheme. Dreams come from God, schemes come from man. Dreams benefit others, scheme focus on you. Dreamers build the world, schemes erode it.

How exciting that the God who made you has placed a dream in your heart perfectly tailored for you and you alone!

What do you do best? What captures your interest the most?

Need help discovering exactly what your purpose in life is? Feel free to join me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. on Sundays, or give us a call at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Post basketball championship goes down to final shot, 36-33

Game ends on missed chance to tie score

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Bulldogs and the Raging Bulls battled it out for the post basketball championship May 13 at Audie Murphy Gym.

With the score 34-33 and nine seconds left on the clock, Raging Bulls guard Willie Hutchinson stepped to the free-throw line for two shots.

After making both of his shots, the B Battery, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment Raging Bulls got back on defense for what would be a last-second shot by the opponents.

But the shot was not to be — the U.S. Army Medical Department Activity Bulldogs missed the three-point attempt as the clock ran out on the game and their season.

The game began with scrappy defense on both sides, but neither team established a large lead.

"In a game where both defenses were tough, any lead you can get is important," said Raging Bulls' guard Samuel Chance. "That's the kind of game where it is going to come down to the last shot to decide who the winner is."

Even with the score 17-10 in favor of the Raging Bulls at halftime, both teams were happy with their efforts, especially on the defensive side of the ball.

"Defense wins ballgames," Chance said. "If you take care of things on the defensive side of the ball, then the offense will comé to you. But, you can't slack off on defense or you'll find yourself way behind."

During halftime, both teams schemed new strategies to put the game in their favor.

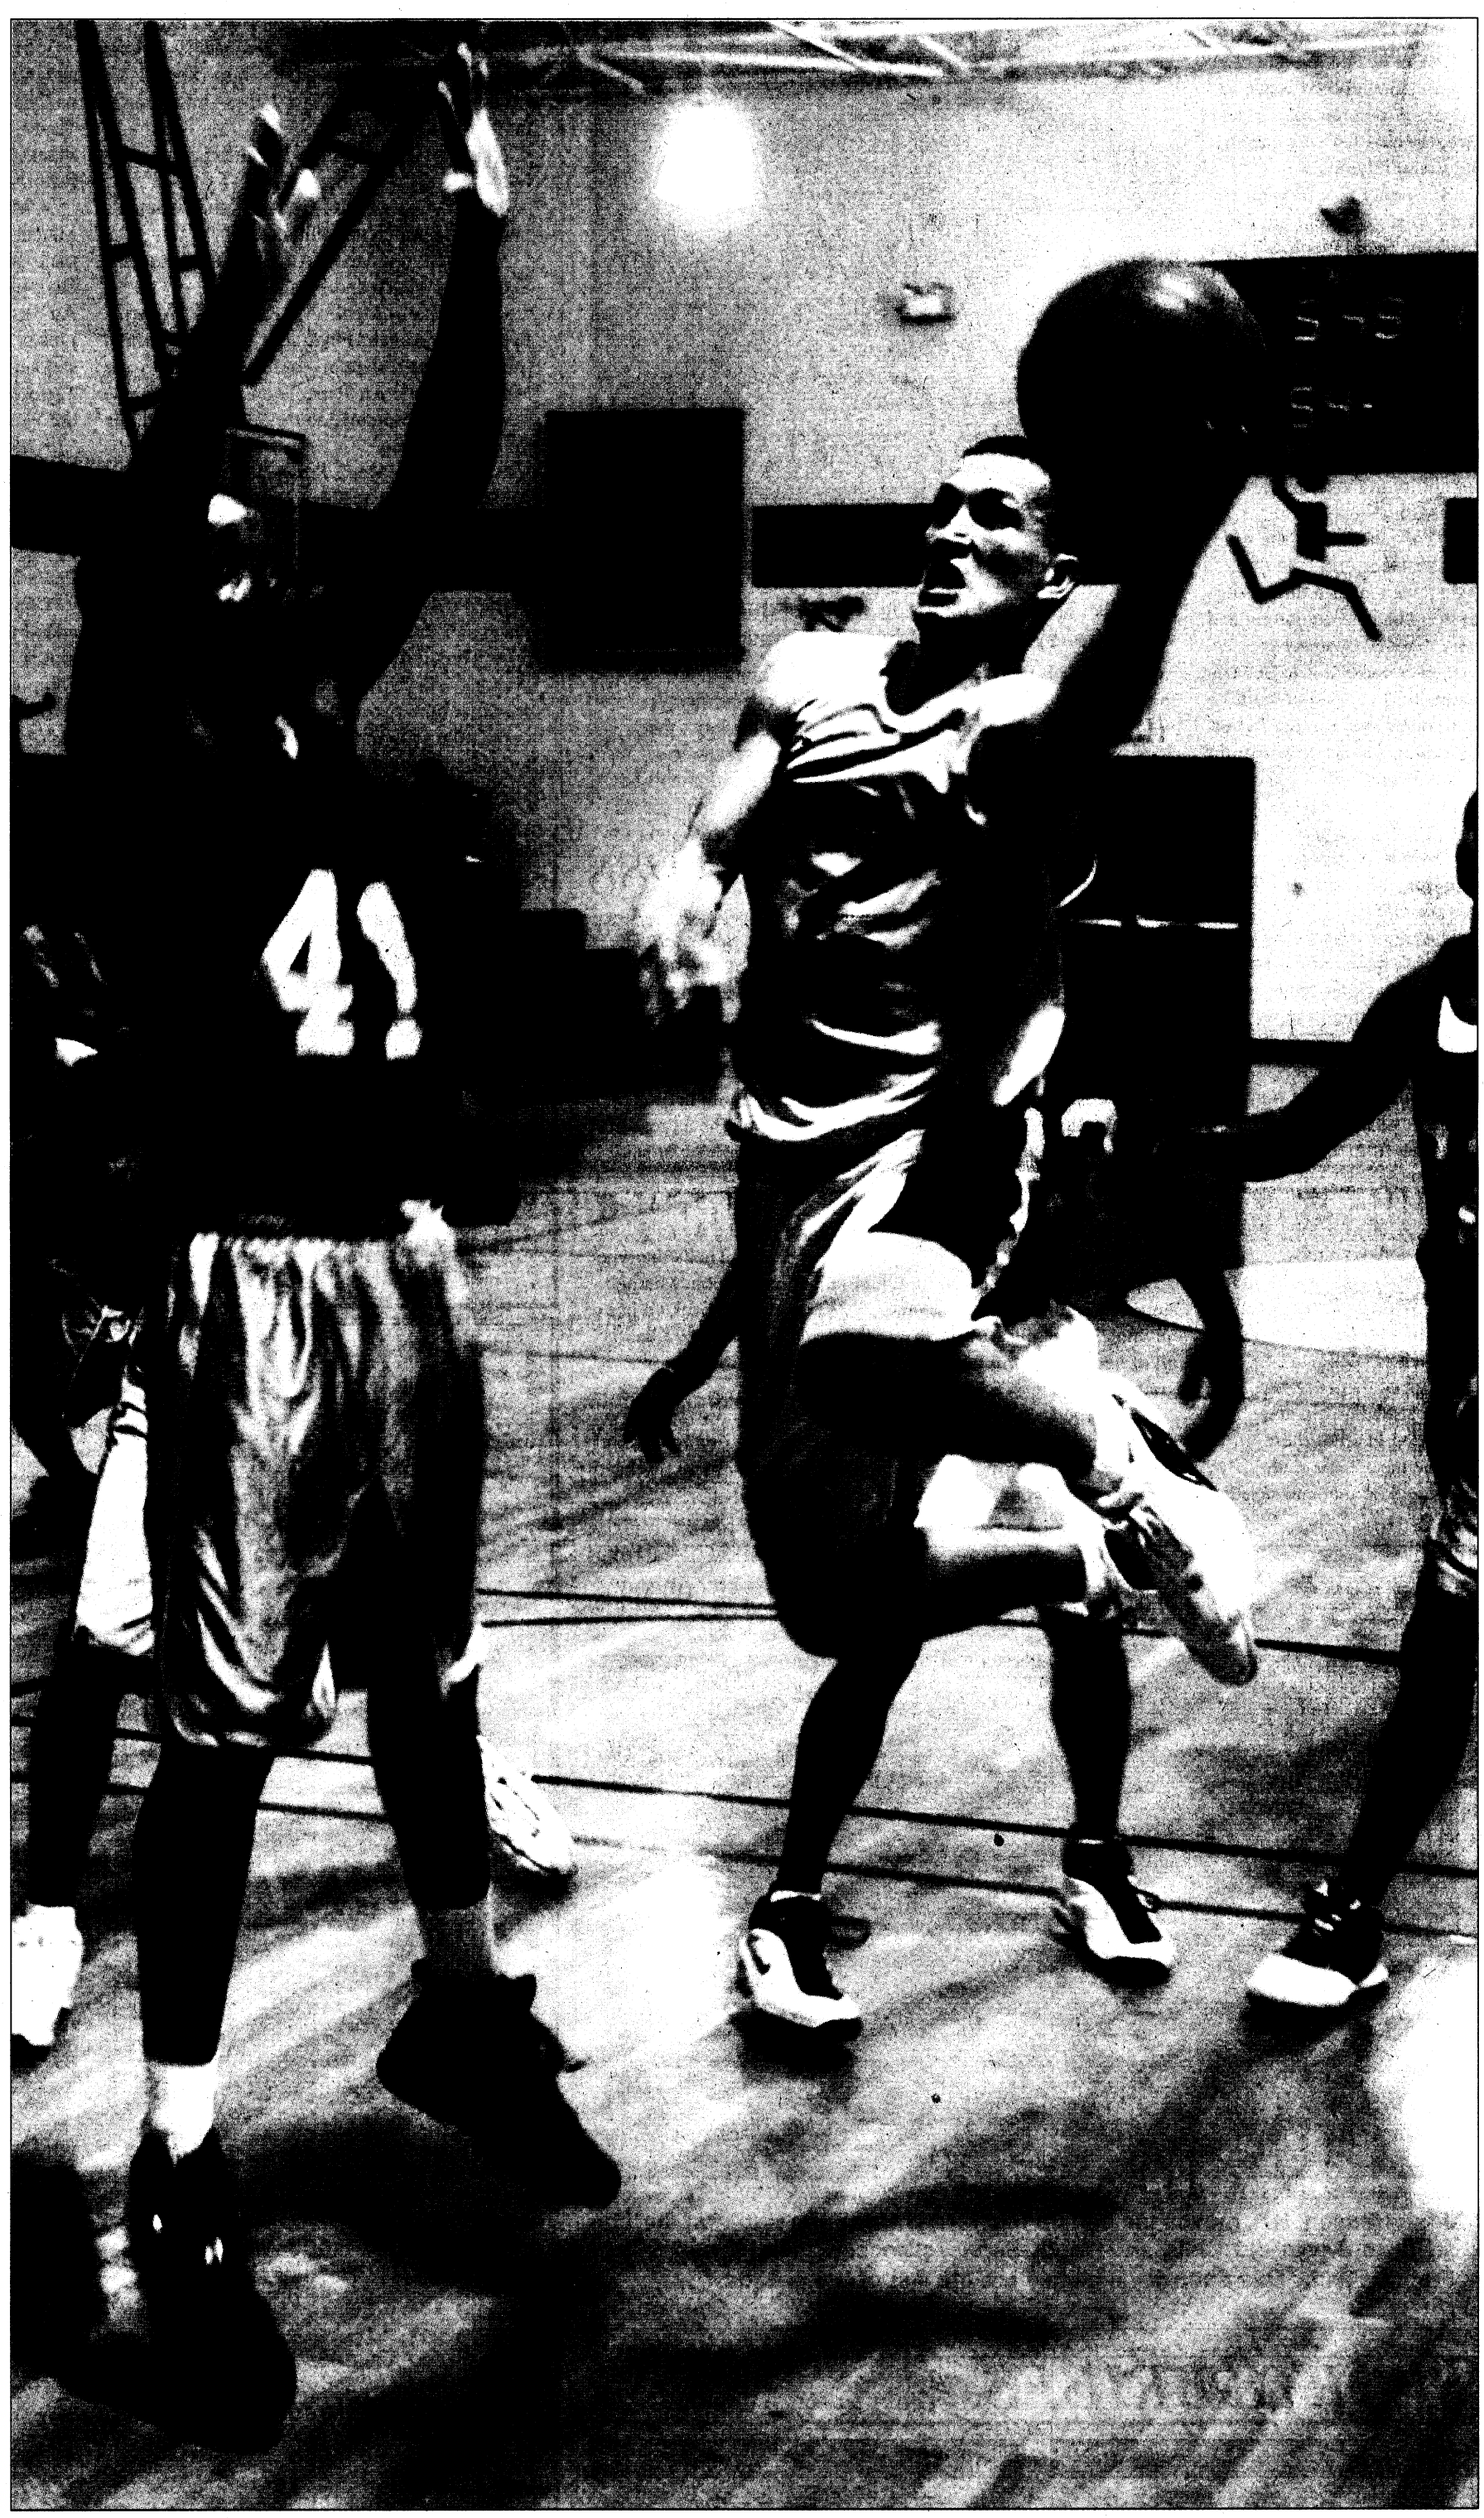
Before reaching the championship game, the Bulldogs played in a semi-final game in which guard Greg Corbitt scored 27 points, including six three-pointers. The Raging Bulls noticed that and adjusted their defense before the game to keep him from taking any open shots.

"During the first half, they were covering me with two people," Corbitt said. "So at halftime, we adjusted our offense to find the open man, so they could take the open shot. We had to work the ball around so we could give our team a chance to win."

The Raging Bulls stretched their lead to 11 at the second half, but left an opening for the Bulldogs to crawl their way back into the game.

"Sometimes all you need is a few mistakes by the other team to get your team going," Corbitt said. "We gave ourselves a chance to win the game, because we never gave up. We continued to fight hard on every possession."

After the Bulldogs got within five points, the Raging Bulls were fouled every possession and sent to the free-throw line to earn their points.



After missing three consecutive free throws the Raging Bulls hunkered down on defense to prevent the Bulldogs from closing the gap.

But persistence by Bulldogs' forward Tyree Swindel under the basket brought them within one point with nine seconds left.

After Hutchinson made his free throws, the Bulldogs got the ball across the half-court line and called a time-out to set up one last play, but ended with a miss.

"This team didn't give up," Corbitt said. "They continued to fight throughout the game and never gave in to them."

"It's an awesome feeling, knowing you're the post champions," Chance said. "It proves that all of the hard work and dedication we put into the season was worth it. To be called the best is what it's all about."

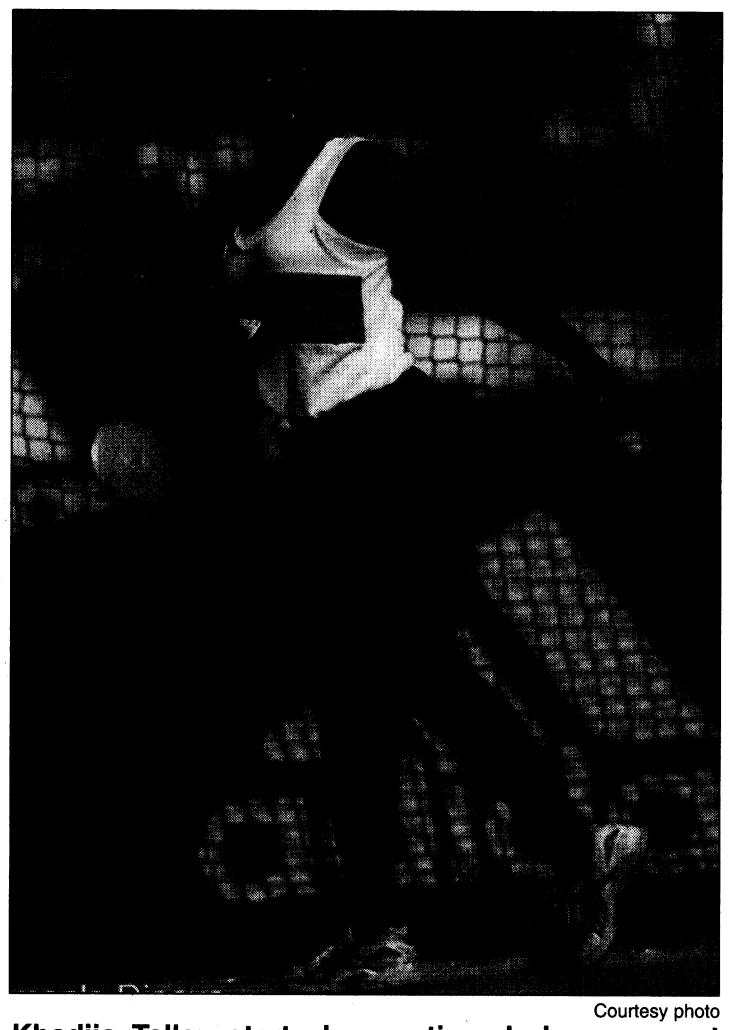
After the game, both teams were congratulated by post commander, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley on their efforts in the game and throughout the season.

"This game was a good battle for both teams," Freakley said. "Both played hard and gave it their all."

The top four teams in the tournament were:

1st place — B Battery, 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regt.



2nd place — U.S. Army Medical Department Activity

3rd place — 203rd Forward Support Battalion

4th place — Headquarters and Headquarters Battery, 1st Bn., 10th Field Artillery Regt.

Khadija Talley starts her motion during a recent meet. Talley competed for Columbus High School.

Khadija Talley has the opportunity to do what few track athletes at her age have the chance to do — earn a chance for a return trip to the Junior Olympics in track and field.

Talley, who is ranked sixth nationally in shot put and eighth nationally in discus, is preparing to compete in other meets to earn her way back to the Junior Olympics.

"It's pretty nice to know that I'm at the level I am for the second year in a row," said the Columbus High School senior. "I'm always striving to improve myself in all areas of my throws."

Talley's father, Command Sgt. Maj. Rickey Talley, 13th Corps Support Battalion, said Khadija's biggest strength is her ability to make on-the-spot corrections.

"That's the reason she's been so successful," he said. "After she makes a throw, she knows what she did wrong and can immediately make the necessary corrections. She has an eye for that kind of stuff."

In order to get to the Junior Olympics, she has to win at the East Regional.

"I can see myself reaching that goal," Khadija said. "I hate to lose. I'm motivated to give it my all every time I step into the circle."

If Khadija reaches the Junior Olympics, she'll be competing against the best high school athletes in the country.

"This will be a great opportunity for me to watch their throws and improve my technique from what I see them doing," she said. "The Junior Olympics will be a stepping stone for me going into the college ranks."

Talley's coach at Columbus Randy Whitt said that Khadija has been a model for the rest of her teammates.

"A lot of them see her getting a scholarship and competing in all of these national meets," he said. "They look at that and say, 'hey I can do it to, if I put in the same amount of work.

"And that's what Khadija does. She motivates everyone else to put in the hard work, so they themselves can become better."

But she doesn't take all of the credit for how well she's performed.

"Most of the credit goes to my parents for all of the support they have given me throughout the years," Khadija said. "They've always been there to watch all of my meets and have been behind me in everything I've done.

"The one thing I've known my whole career is that they'll be at the meet," she said. "I've never looked around worrying if they were there."

But before she takes the steps to get to the Junior Olympics, Khadija will finish all of her final exams and graduate from high school.

"I'm proud of everything she's accomplished," Rickey said. "She's not only committed to her athletics, but she's also committed to her schoolwork. She always ensures that the latter takes precedence over the two."

This fall, Khadija will be throwing the shot put, discus, hammer and 20 lb. weight for the University of Miami (Fla.) Hurricanes.

Miami throws coach Renetta Seiler said when she saw her throw at the Junior Olympics last year in Miami, she noticed how explosive and quick she was, among other things.

"After watching her throw, I knew she would be a great fit for our program," Seiler said. "I was not only impressed with her athletic ability, but also her demeanor and the way she carries herself. That's the type of athlete we want at Miami."

When looking back on her track and field career, Khadija said she wants to know one thing.

"I want to know that I gave it my all every time I went out there. I don't want to say I could've done better."

Shooters prepare for final selection matches

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

The U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit will host the final Olympic Selection Matches that will determine the entire 2004 U.S. Olympic Shooting Team. The matches, which will take place at Phillips and Pool Ranges.

Three USAMU Soldiers made the 2004 U.S. Olympic Team: Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson, made both the Men's Trap and Men's Double Trap Teams and Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery and Sgt. 1st Class James Graves made the Men's Skeet Team.

I found buried treasure in my attic.

More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you some Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. You were looking for old records when you found an unexpected treasure . . . those old Series E Savings Bonds. And even though your old bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value. So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US BOND, or write to Savings Bonds, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. Old Savings Bonds. They're a treasure worth digging for.

Secretary of the Army Les Brownlee talks with Soldiers during his three-day visit to Fort Benning. During Brownlee's visit he was inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Army secretary visits post

Official seeks Soldiers' opinions on hot topics

"But what do you think?"

That was the question the secretary of the Army, Les Brownlee, asked Fort Benning Soldiers last week.

Brownlee toured the post with Fort Benning's commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, May 21 and Saturday and met with commanders from every major unit, including the 3rd Infantry Division's 3rd Brigade, the Infantry Training Brigade, the Ranger Training Brigade and the Basic Combat Training Brigade. They discussed everything from retention and rapid fielding to the birth of BOLC, the Basic Officer Leader's Course.

But it was "the man on the street," the war veterans and trainees, who provided the feedback Brownlee coveted most.

Friday, he rode along with troops from Kelley Hill's 203rd Support Battalion during a field training exercise on Hastings Range, a simulated convoy ambush. He asked the Soldiers about their experiences in Iraq and their level of confidence in their equipment.

"The American people support what you're doing, because you're the only thing that stands between them and terrorism," he told them. "You've got to continue to train hard to fight hard."

Saturday morning, he dined with Sand Hill Soldiers.

"I'm trying to learn better what you're doing here," he said. He asked about their reasons for joining the Army, their expectations and their preparedness for combat, specifically their marksmanship capabilities.

The measure of successful marksmanship "is now being seen on the battlefield, where more and more, we're hearing about incidents where Soldiers are hitting snipers or suicide bombers. You read it every day in the newspapers," he said. "That is so important, because first and foremost, no matter what your specialty, you are a warrior, and you

Secretary inducted into Ranger Hall of Fame

When Secretary of the Army Les Brownlee was inducted into the Ranger Hall of Fame last summer, he couldn't attend the ceremony because he was visiting troops in Iraq.

Ranger Training Brigade officials surprised Brownlee during his visit to Fort Benning last week, presenting him with a medallion and citation honoring his service to the country.

In what might be called an abbreviated Hall of Fame induction ceremony, attended by Fort Benning's commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, and members of the brigade, Brownlee was lauded for 22 years of Army service, which included two tours in Vietnam. He retired as a colonel in 1984 as the military executive to the undersecretary of the Army.

His awards include the Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster, the Bronze Star with two Oak Leaf Clusters and the Purple Heart.

"I can only accept this award with the greatest of humility, because there are so many who've given so much more," Brownlee said during the May 21 ceremony.

He recalled feeling inadequate and frustrated when his attempts to attend Ranger School were circumvented by circumstance — like the war — beyond his control. Finally, in 1965, three years after receiving his commission through the University of Wyoming ROTC program, Brownlee attended and was named honor graduate of his class. Then he was shipped off to Vietnam.

"What I went through here — what I learned — prepared me for what I went through over there," he said. "Never doubt what you do here is vitally important to our mission."

McKenna in high demand as deployment nears

Site unmatched in training capabilities

Fort Benning's premier MOUT site is hopping these days as more and more units are looking to hone their skills in urban warfare.

The McKenna MOUT (military operations in urban terrain) site hosted six Fort Benning units last week, a contingent of Canadian soldiers, customs agents from the Department of Homeland Defense and a visit from the Secretary of the Army.

"That's not unusual these days," said Maj. Roy Manauis, McKenna's officer in charge. "It's in high demand right now because our instrumentation and capabilities are unmatched anywhere else."

McKenna MOUT site features an urban village, built by Army engineers more than 20 years ago. It belongs to Fort Benning's Soldier Battlelab and is primarily used for live, virtual and constructive experimentation on Soldier systems, weapons and equipment.

The site boasts fiber optics, simulations and the ability to track movement in and around the village in three dimensions. It's this feature that makes the site ideal for training Soldiers.

"The bottom line is commanders can use what they see for after-action reviews," Manauis said. "They can see Soldiers move through buildings, in and out of rooms ... they can see what happened, who fired, who got shot."

Units typically establish a number of scenarios, or "lanes," and rotate squads through, evaluating their performance on tasks such as checkpoint security, questioning prisoners and villagers, ferreting out insurgents and encountering civilians on the battlefield, to name a few.

These days, there's a lot of emphasis on IEDs — improvised explosive devices, like car bombs or booby-trapped coffee cans — the types of explosives being used by Iraqi insurgents.

Three Kelley Hill units swarmed the site at once May 19, including the 317th Engineer Battalion, which will be reconfigured June 1, its Soldiers going to 2nd Battalion, 69th

MEMORIAL DAY

Grandpa always got his way

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

My husband's grandfather was a veteran of World War II. He was 17 when he joined the Navy, and except for an old photograph of him as a boxer ("Canvas-back Batey," they called him) I know absolutely nothing about his time in service. Only once did he broach the subject with my husband.

"Those are bad memories," Grandpa said. "I just don't like to dwell on them."

We never pushed the subject.

But if there's one thing Grandpa liked to talk about, it was Tom, my husband, Grandpa's first grandson. After raising two daughters, Grandpa was thrilled to have a boy, and he kept Tommy close by his side.

After Tom and I married and he joined the Army, Grandpa couldn't have been prouder. He lived vicariously through Tom. He ran up crazy phone bills, till Grandma put her foot down. Then the phone calls were restricted to the nights Grandma played bingo at church, and she quit fussing. Grandpa always got his way.

He was especially proud of Tom's career as a Soldier. He bragged to the small circle of friends he met each day down by the lake, mostly retirees like himself. They liked to while away the hot Florida evenings talking about the good ol' days. Except for Grandpa. He just talked about Tom.

It always troubled me that Grandpa was so proud of his grandson's service, yet dismissive of his own.

So when Grandpa began to talk about his death and the kind of service he'd like — virtually none — I balked. What, no military funeral? No flag?

"Grandpa," I said, "you served, you fought, you have to have a military funeral."

To which he replied, "Nope."

And that was the end of that. No use arguing, Grandpa always got his way.

His health took a turn for the worse in the spring of 2001, and Grandpa died, with Tom by his side, three years ago today.

True to his wishes, Grandma planned a quiet memorial service with just the family. Aunt Linda couldn't get a flight out of New York till the weekend, so the service was scheduled for Monday, which happened to be Memorial Day. Appropriate, I thought, though Grandpa would've scoffed.

Monday morning, the family drove to Grandpa's favorite spot at the lake, where much to our chagrin, we found a Memorial Day Service in progress. I could practically hear Grandpa snickering as we devised a hasty Plan B — the other side of the lake.

There, with the strains of God Bless America wafting across the water, we shared our memories of Grandpa. His oldest daughter sang the chorus of his favorite hymn, just the way he planned it. And then, as my father-in-law opened his Bible to read the scripture Grandpa had chosen, the sweetest thing happened.

From across the lake, loud and lonesome, came the sound of a solitary bugle playing Taps, followed by three volleys.

And that's the only time — ever — I can recall that Grandpa didn't get his way.

On horse sense, humor and losing a friend

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Statistically, more than 1,000 World War II veterans die daily. And on May 19, my friend Lenis Ingram died.

But Mr. Ingram, 81, wasn't just a Soldier in World War II; he also served in Korea and did two tours in Vietnam.

Although he was born in Texas, the retired sergeant first class called Columbus home since 1956.

Right after he and his wife, Johanna, bought their home in the Oakland Park area of Columbus, the Army sent the family to Hawaii. But Columbus and Fort Benning were still home.

After he retired with 30 years of service, he worked at the Fort Benning Golf Course for 10 years.

But golf wasn't how I came to know Mr. Ingram. It was horses. He loved horses and shared his love and respect for the animals with any who shared his interest, including a 10-year-old who had the horse bug really badly.

For three years, while her father was a drill sergeant, Mikki Johansen walked from her home in Bouton Heights to the Hunt Club on Marne Road. There, Mr. Ingram would let the little girl ride his horse.

Twenty-five years later, when Johansen became a member at the Hunt Club, Mr. Ingram was still a club member and still initiating novices into the world of horses.

My daughter, Jessica, is as horsey as Johansen was 25 years ago, and I was lucky to get the stall next to the Ingram's horses for my daughter's horse, Misty.

I peppered Mr. and Mrs. Ingram with horse questions about feeding, health issues, grooming and riding. Mr. Ingram's response was "Well, this is the way I ..."

He always let me know that other people had different ideas about how to care for horses. He learned by watching others, and what worked for him didn't necessarily mean it was the only way to care for the animals.

I liked that about him ... he taught me to care about horses without being pedantic about it.

He taught me how to currycomb a horse, that a crowbar is required barn equipment, and posthole diggers aren't for sissies.

But I'll remember Mr. Ingram most for his sly sense of humor.

One rainy morning, after what seemed like 40 days of rain, I was slopping around in Misty's stall cleaning out the manure. Mr. Ingram, wearing rain gear and irrigation boots, was doing the same. He looked over at me and said, "Isn't this a beautiful day?

I looked over at him, rain dripping into my eyes as he finished his sentence: "For a duck."

Mr. Ingram knew a lot about horses, people, the history of the Hunt Club and Fort Benning.

He will be missed.

STAY SAFE

Follow me safely

On Monday, we will remember those who have given their lives for this great nation.

The weekend also marks the beginning of summer outdoor activities. Although many of these pastimes are fun, everyone should be prepared to overcome the inherent hazards of outdoor activities.

Commanders and directors should remind Soldiers and employees concerning the following off-duty activities:

- Swim only where a lifeguard is on duty. Always wear a personal flotation device while boating.
- Wear proper protective gear while biking or skating.
- Limit activity during high heat and humidity periods. Drink adequate water.
- Always drive sober and alert with your seat belt buckled.
- Avoid snakes.
- Use insect repellent when appropriate.
- Attend the Motorcycle Safety Course (545-5043) before you buy a motorcycle.
- Develop plans of action for storms, floods, lightning, etc. Watch for dead tree limbs.

Protect yourself and your family this summer. Let's have a great and safe Memorial Day. Follow me, safely!

Commanding General

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Is safety gear really needed to skate?

I was elated when I first heard that the youth center's unusable outdoor pool was to be converted into a skate park. If you haven't seen it, be sure to have a look. The whole colorful setup was put together faster than getting down a double kickflip — and equally impressive. My two boys, 11 and 14, both into skateboarding, are fairly beginner-ish but fun to watch.

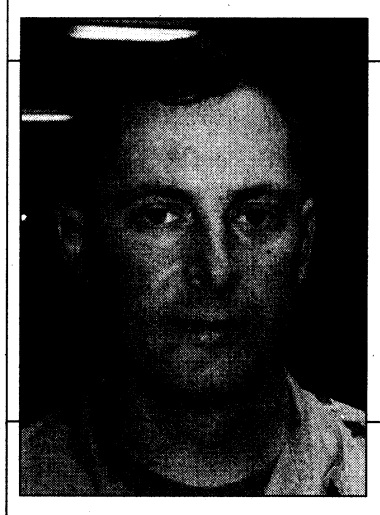
Still, I can't help but wonder why the skate park looks so empty during the times allotted for the older age group.

Should we in any way be surprised that so many of our older skaters would rather take to the streets than dress like pad monsters at the youth center? Their age-related perspective of things already makes pad wearing an unattractive idea. Add just an ounce of skating skill to the mix and it makes pads virtually unfeasible, like water wings on a tall 12-year-old in the shallow end of a swimming pool being closely monitored. Helmets, I understand. Helmets and pads on the younger group (ages 6-10), I wholeheartedly agree with.

The solution for the older kids is not so clear. We don't want to see young people bloodying themselves more than necessary, yet what a shame if they never showed up at the park in the first place. The truth is, most skate parks only require helmets and "strongly suggest" the use of pads.

The Refuge Skate Park of Columbus requires helmets only, as does Bentwood in Warner Robins. The SPoT (Skate Park of Tampa) in Florida even goes so far as to require nothing of its skateboarders beyond a signed waiver.

I do not wish to come across as an extremist by any means. I understand the reasons for pad and helmet safety policies and the enforcement thereof, but my opinion is that the Fort Benning Skate Park needs a more balanced approach regarding pads for the older kids.



As a parent, I am slowly realizing that it's better to take a step back once in a while — and let my 6-foot tall "boy" have fun doing his own thing — than to suggest he have his fun my way.

There's no denying what a great park we have and how it shows the community cares. But are the kids feeling it? Remember, it's their park. They petitioned for it. They should be allowed to enjoy it.

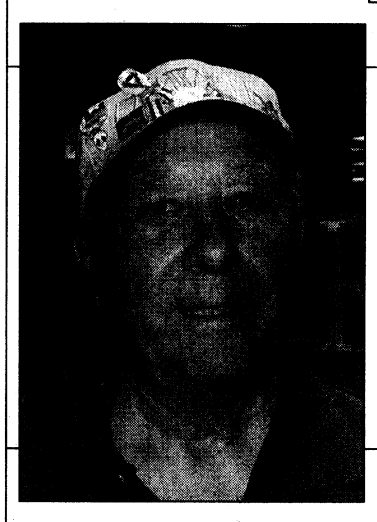
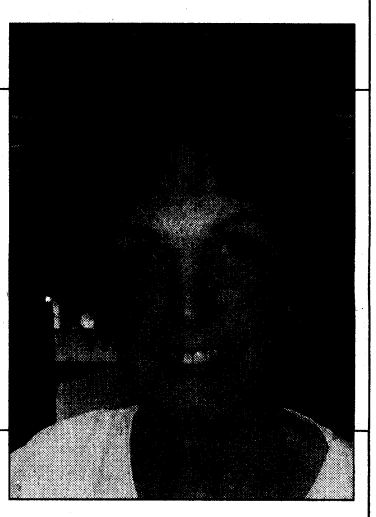
VARIOUS VOICES

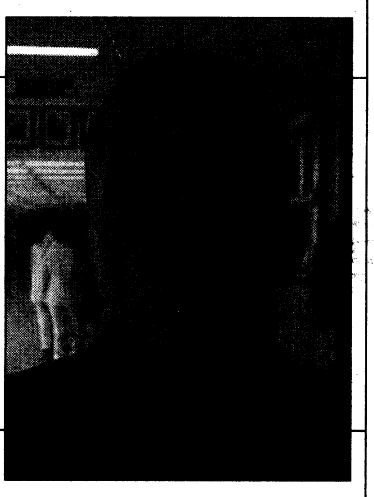


Does Memorial Day have a new significance to you in light of the war?



Sgt. Robert Brown, 214th Military Police Company, Alexander City, Ala. — "Most definitely. Today's military families are seeing firsthand the same sacrifices our parents and grandparents had to make during a time of war."

Sgt. Vincent Austin, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "Yes, because I've been over there and I know what those troops are going through. It's a day we can honor and remember the sacrifices of all the troops."



Charles Noble, family member — "With the World War II monument about to go up in D.C., it brings back memories of what life was like back then. During that time, the American people showed their appreciation to the Soldiers, and I think that the same should be done for today's Soldiers."

Betty McQuagge, family member — "Absolutely ... my grandson is currently serving in Iraq, and it's during a time of war that we really remember the sacrifices our servicemen and women have made."

Julieen Mitchum, family member — "Yes, it really makes you think what our Soldiers are doing over there. The war gives Memorial Day a new meaning."

Pfc. Joshua Abston, HHC USAIC — "Yes, because we have so many Soldiers serving overseas and it's nice to take time to remember what they do."

Georgia governor visits Benning

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

"America is getting its money's worth at Fort Benning," said Georgia Governor Sonny Perdue after spending Monday afternoon visiting Soldiers at Fort Benning.

Perdue visited Soldiers in their fifth week of training at the Basic Combat Training Brigade, as well as 3rd Brigade and 36th Engineer Group Soldiers.

Perdue watched Soldiers practice basic rifle marksmanship at Malone 16 and lunched with 3rd Brigade Soldiers.

He also caught up on issues near and dear to Soldiers' hearts.

"I had the opportunity to visit Georgia native Soldiers and saw their engagement in significant policy issues regarding quality of life for the military in Georgia," Perdue said.

Some of the issues Soldiers discussed with Perdue included the the preservation of the HOPE Scholarship, retirement issues and the Georgia non-resident procedures for automobile registration.

Fort Benning was just one of Georgia's military installations Perdue visited Monday. He also went to Fort Gordon, the Marine Corps Logistics Base and the Navy Supply Corps School.

His goal was to see what the current needs of the state's installations are and what can be done to improve them.

"We want to be the partners that we need to be from the state's perspective to enhance the military mission of our installations," he said. "The Department of Defense recognizes that Georgia is a patriotic state, and we're going to do more than our share to make their assets in Georgia worth more than they are in the other states.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Gov. Sonny Purdue steps in to say hello to the 36th Engineer Group troops during his visit to Fort Benning Monday after lunching with 3rd Brigade Soldiers.

"I've seen a broad scope of the military vision here and the quality of military leaders and public policy," Perdue said. "The decision makers in Washington are so proud of this facility, as are we, because this really is on the front lines of defending freedom and expanding freedom across the world."

Perdue said he was fascinated by the leadership and values displayed by post Soldiers.

"Seeing today's young men and women in today's society and then seeing them molded into a fighting force of a team that has the capability to be the best fighting force in the world's history is absolutely phenomenal. The metamorphosis that takes place here is just like doing leadership by IV," he said.

During a press conference before Perdue's departure from Lawson Army Air Field, local media questioned Perdue about Base Realignment and Closure.

He said BRAC is inevitable, and the state is looking at the possibility of closing some of its installations, but Perdue reassured reporters that the state is working hard to show the value of every installation in Georgia.

> "America is getting its money's worth at Fort Benning."
> Sonny Perdue
> Georgia governor

Perdue said he will also be talking to military and political leaders in Washington about giving Fort Benning a modular brigade unit.

He said Fort Benning has done well for decades in training the world's infantrymen, and the new Infantry Museum is going to be a great celebration for what those Soldiers have done for the freedom of the world.

"The mission here is obviously being carried out in an exemplary fashion," Perdue said. "I look forward to telling the story of Fort Benning from the halls of the capitol in Atlanta to the halls and walls of the United States capitol in Washington and the Oval Office."

Officials plan Memorial Day observances

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Pool parties and barbecues aside, this weekend offers plenty of activities to observe Memorial Day, both locally and nationally.

Andersonville, the largest Civil War prisoner of war camp in the South, will kick off Memorial Day ceremonies at 1:30 p.m. Sunday in the National Cemetery with a patriotic music concert by the Infantry Center Band and a ceremony at 2 p.m.

The featured speaker will be Congressman Jim Marshall, who is currently serving Georgia's 3rd Congressional District in the U.S. Congress. Honored guests include Gov. Sonny Perdue and his wife, Mary.

This year's program will honor the 140th anniversary of the Andersonville prison, which held more than 45,000 prisoners of war during its 14-month operation.

Andersonville is located 21 miles northeast of Plains on Highway 49. For more information, call (229) 924-2558 or visit andersonvillega.freeservers.com.

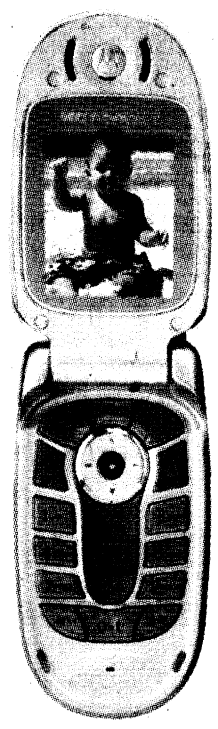
The Fort Mitchell National Cemetery Memorial Committee will host its annual Memorial Day service at 2 p.m. Sunday. The ceremony, supported by the Central Alabama Veterans Health Care System, local Boy and Girl Scouts, the U.S. Army Infantry Center and School, The Chattahoochee Valley Veterans Council and other veterans organizations, will be held at the the flagpole at the Department of Veterans Affairs Fort Mitchell National Cemetery in Fort Mitchell, Ala.

The public is invited to attend the service. For more information, call (334) 855-4731.

Fort Benning will honor veterans at 9 a.m. Monday at the Main Post Cemetery. Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, will be the keynote speaker.

Port Columbus Civil War Naval Museum will salute the military with modern day demonstrations and displays from local National Guard and Reserve units this weekend.

All active-duty military and their families will be admitted free for the entire weekend. The museum is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. For more information, call 327-9798.



Nationally, President George W. Bush will dedicate the World War II Memorial in Washington, D.C., at 2 p.m. Saturday.

The dedication will air live on the History Channel and C-SPAN.

The annual Memorial Day Concert on the Mall in Washington, D.C., will feature Tom Hanks and be simulcast at 8 p.m. Sunday on PBS stations.

Finally, the White House Commission on Remembrance wants all Americans to pause at 3 p.m. Monday to remember all those who fought and died for the U.S.

War journalist speaks to troops

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Joe Galloway is like a lot of Vietnam vets. He wears the look of experience, knowing. He remembers those jungles vividly — and the men who died there.

There's just one difference — he wasn't a Soldier. Well, not on paper, anyway.

Galloway was a front lines journalist looking for action, for a scoop. He found both when he hitched a helicopter ride into Landing Zone X-Ray in the Ia Drang Valley in November 1965. He landed in the middle of the first major battle of the Vietnam War, a place where no one — not even a wet-behind-the-ears war correspondent from Refugio, Texas — could hide from the harsh realities of combat. "Embedded" with Fort Benning's 1st Battalion, 7th Cavalry, commanded by then Lt. Col. Hal Moore, Galloway found himself every bit as much at war as the men he'd come to write about.

But his mission remained the same — to tell the Soldier's story. He did that and still does.

And in 40 years of covering the Army at war from the front lines and from the home front, Galloway has learned a thing or two about war, things he plans to share with those who will need them most — the Soldiers headed for the battlefield.

Monday, those Soldiers were the lieutenants of the Infantry Officer Basic Course. Galloway spoke to them as part of the Combat Leader Speakers Program, covering everything from the importance of being good leaders to positive examples to follow.

Galloway's stance on the war these men will join is no secret — he writes about it in his weekly column for Knight Ridder Newspapers, where he is the senior military correspondent. We need more troops, more media and a better grip on the information war, he said.

"We did not send in enough troops in the beginning," he said before his speech. "We did not have enough troops on the ground when we toppled Saddam Hussein. We didn't have enough security to prevent the looting and the burning and the revenge killings and these sort of things. And I think it could be fairly argued that we don't have enough now ...

"We had planned that by now there would only be 100,000 Soldiers (in Iraq) ... but these things have not come to pass, because the enemy gets a vote ..."

A vote that has led Army officials to a few unexpected measures — deploying a brigade from Korea, pulling Soldiers who thought they were "home free" back from the Individual Ready Reserve, and planning to shut down the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., and ship its renowned opposing force, the 11th Armored Cavalry Regiment, off to war.

"For the individual Soldier, it's war time," Galloway said. "You've got to know, if you stay, you're going to go do this time and time again until this thing is sorted out, especially if you're an infantryman.

"Every single one of the 10 (active) Army divisions has people deployed right now or on their way," he said.

Steve Northup
Joe Galloway in Da Nang, Vietnam, in the summer of 1965.

And while the Soldiers are living up to all that is asked of them and "we are winning this war militarily," Galloway said he is distressed by how the war is being conducted "on the civilian side."

"We have an insurgency, and we can't win by military action alone," he said. "You have to have a grip on the political reasons why these people are coming after your Soldiers and why they're fighting and why they're rebelling. You've got to attack the root causes of that ..."

Part of that, he said, is getting in the fight — the information fight, that is.

"We have lost the information war, because we haven't yet begun to fight it," he said. "I would argue that within 30 days of taking Baghdad, we should have stood up a satellite broadcast TV station that would compete with Al Jazerah for the viewing public in Iraq.

"I have flown over Iraq in a helicopter, and I have seen even mud huts with satellite TV dishes, and they're all tuned in to Al Jazerah," he said.

The military's only effort to reach the people of Iraq through information channels is a "dreadful" broadcast television station, he said. The broadcasts? An Army officer reading a press release with a translator standing next to him.

Meanwhile, the media frenzy over the Abu Ghraib scandal continues to thwart the American and Iraqi publics.

"This has confirmed the worst anti-American sentiments in the Arab world," Galloway said. "It's confirmed for them what they believe, that we talk a good game, but we're as brutal as anybody else. And I don't believe that's true. But that's part of the information warfare, and this is a terrible setback."

It's also a setback in the United States. But Galloway is confident that the Soldiers on the ground will not feel the sting.

"The thing that is different and the thing that is good in all of this is that there has been steady support for the Soldiers throughout this whole thing," he said. "Even though people may tell you they disagree with the policy, that things are going bad in Iraq and bad decisions have been made, they don't blame the Soldier.

"What was done after Vietnam was appalling. And I think, honestly, the American public is still ashamed of that, as they should be, because certainly my brothers have never forgotten it. But everyone seems determined to support the Soldier to the maximum."

AER beats goal

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Readers Digest listed the Army Emergency Relief as one of the best charities around today in its November 2003 issue. AER is a private, nonprofit organization incorporated to provide emergency financial assistance to Soldiers.

Since its inception in 1942, AER has helped more than 2.9 million members of the Army family with more than $882 million.

The 2004 AER campaign ended on Fort Benning May 14, raising a total of $291,950 and surpassing the post's first and second campaign goals by almost $92,000.

This year, the AER campaign kicked off April 1 with an initial goal of $175,000.

But with the constant deployment and redeployment of units, Fort Benning decided to up the AER goal halfway through the two-month campaign to $200,000.

"The campaign is very important. This is the means we have to get the funds we need to assist Soldiers," said Al Deane, installation AER officer. "We ask individuals to contribute within their means. To come up with the goal, we take the population of Fort Benning and multiply it by 12. That's just $1 for 12 months."

AER headquarters eliminates the National Guard and Reserve contributions from the final figure of $291,950. Once that process is complete, AER will produce a solid figure, he said.

Only active and retired Army Soldiers are allowed to donate money to AER through the allotment system.

"Because of the uncertainty in their active-duty tenure, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers are only allowed to donate money through check, cash or money orders," Deane said.

The money Fort Benning and other installations contribute to AER is funneled into a central bank, and from there, all contributions are consolidated and made available worldwide.

"Campaigning is not a competition between installations. All the money goes into one central location. As installations require assistance, we draw money from the AER pocket," Deane said.

Ninety-five percent of the money Soldiers receive from AER is given to them through interest-free loans, which are paid back to AER through allotments over the course of a year.

In special cases, money may be given to Soldiers through grants they are not required to pay back.

As of April 30, Fort Benning has already given $170,156.48 in AER loans and grants.

By the end of 2004, Benning will put to use close to the amount raised for this year's campaign, Deane said.

"This year, the main campaign contributions were for the Soldiers from the Soldiers," he said.

SOLDIERS BEWARE

POVs remain number-one killer of troops

Alcohol is leading cause of fatal car accidents

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

As the Fort Benning community gears up for a much-anticipated four-day weekend, there are a few things to keep in mind — chiefly, safety.

Privately owned vehicle accidents are the number one killer of Soldiers, followed by water accidents, said Regis Beighley, post safety manager.

But Soldiers aren't the only ones falling victim to roadway hazards. Motor vehicle crashes are the leading cause of death for Americans ages 2 to 33, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

And 41 percent of all fatal accidents involve the use of alcohol.

"A lot of people go out (drinking), but don't think about how they're going to get home at the end of the night," Beighley said. "And if you fail to plan, you plan to fail."

Anyone who plans to drink should also plan for a safe way home.

"The easiest thing is to bring along a designated driver," Beighley said. "When you go out with your friends, take turns being the designated driver; it's not very difficult."

And if that doesn't work out, he said, most commanders have a back-up plan in place to keep their Soldiers off the road after they've been drinking.

Some units encourage Soldiers to call their NCOs when they need a ride, others offer to help pay taxi fees and still others allow Soldiers to call the CQ for a lift.

Although alcohol is the leading factor in vehicle accident fatalities, other factors — falling asleep at the wheel, speeding, aggressive driving and inattention — create dangerous situations, as well.

Recently, a Fort Benning Soldier coming back to post after the holidays fell asleep and drove off the road, flipping his car. The Soldier was killed.

"When you go home (for holidays), there may have been some late nights and partying," Beighley said. "But you should make sure you are well rested before you get on the road."

Drivers should stop every two hours on a long road trip, he said, even if it's only to walk around a few times and "shake the cobwebs from your brain."

"The buddy system works for road trips, too," he added, encouraging drivers to bring along a friend to share the driving and break up the monotony.

And just because it's summer doesn't mean that weather conditions aren't a hazard, Beighley warned.

"In the summer, we get what some people call 'white ice,'" he said.

White ice is actually the mix of water and oil that slicks the surface of the road when it rains in the summer.

"When it first starts to rain is when you need to be the most careful," Beighley said. "Slow down, but don't brake. If you don't slow down, you could lose control (of the car)."

Beighley also advised using headlights. In fact, he said, state law requires your headlights be turned on any time you use your windshield wipers.

No matter what conditions you are driving in, always wear your seat belt.

The Army requires Soldiers to wear seat belts at all times in a motor vehicle no matter where they are, but many states, including Georgia and Alabama, require all vehicle occupants to wear seat belts — Soldier or not.

And contrary to popular belief, you can be pulled over strictly for failing to wear a seat belt.

According to the NHTSA, both Georgia and Alabama seat belt laws are subject to primary enforcement — in other words, a law enforcement officer is allowed to stop a vehicle and issue a citation when he or she observes an unbelted driver or passenger.

Meanwhile, motorcyclists face even higher risks than vehicle occupants.

"The fatality rates for motorcycle accidents are seven times higher than that of four-wheeled vehicles," Beighley said.

"It doesn't matter who's at fault," he said. "The motorcyclist is the one who pays the price, because he doesn't have much protection."

Still, what little protection motorcyclists do have can mean the difference between life and death.

In 2002, 3,244 motorcyclists died and about 65,000 were injured in highway crashes in the U.S., according to an NHTSA fact sheet. Head injury is the leading cause of death in those accidents.

"An unhelmeted motorcyclist is 40 percent more likely to suffer a fatal head injury and 15 percent more likely to suffer a nonfatal injury than a helmeted motorcyclist when involved in a crash," the fact sheet states.

Georgia and Alabama laws require motorcyclists and their passengers to wear helmets whenever they're on the road, as do Army regulations for Soldiers and civilians riding on military installations.

No matter what you're driving, it's important to stay alert, Beighley said.

"The thing about accidents is that you just can't foresee what's going to happen," he said. "Five or six different things all happen at once ... and you're completely at the mercy of fate.

"One serious mistake now, when you're young, can ruin your life, end your live or leave you paralyzed for life."

CLOSER LOOK

Privately owned vehicle accidents are the number one killer of Soldiers. To avoid a traffic accident, heed the following driving safety tips from www.nbc4.tv/news:

■ Slow down. Motorists should drive slowly, particularly through puddles. Hitting several inches of water at high speeds can cause a driver to lose control of the car. Fast driving through puddles may also push or splash water into the engine and cause it to stall. Driving at slower speeds helps drivers be prepared for sudden stops due to disabled cars, debris and other hazards associated with wet-weather driving.

■ Keep your distance. A car needs two to three times more stopping distance on wet pavement, so allow extra following distance between cars. If the car skids and control is lost, do not slam on the brakes. Instead, apply the brakes with a steady, light but firm pressure. Remember to steer in the direction the car is sliding. When traction is regained, steering control will return. For cars equipped with anti-lock brakes, drivers should apply heavy, steady pressure, but not pump the brakes.

■ Use the center lanes. When driving during heavy rain, use center lanes of the road (without straddling the yellow line). Avoid outside lanes where water collects curbside.

■ Avoid distractions. Motorists are advised to minimize eating, drinking, cellular phone use, stereo tuning or applying makeup while driving, particularly in the rain. If it's necessary to engage in these activities, pull over and stop in a safe place.

■ Stay informed. Tune into radio and television weather reports to know where flood warning areas or traffic congestion might be located. If possible, avoid these areas.

■ Car maintenance during wet weather. Motorists should check their brakes periodically, use headlights and a windshield defroster, check their tires regularly and ensure that windshield wiper blades are in good working condition.

■ Driving in the rain. Be sure to use headlights and turn signals, keep a space cushion between vehicles, reduce your speed and be patient.

Kelley Hill battalion changes hands

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Lt. Col. Gary Brito, right, salutes the outgoing commander during the 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt., change of command.

Veterans of 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment, filled the stands at Essenbagger Field May 20 as Lt. Col. John Charlton relinquished command to Lt. Col. Gary Brito.

Charlton expressed his great thanks to the "Can Do" Soldiers.

"They are my credentials," Charlton said. "Their achievements, incredible."

Charlton and his Soldiers led the fight at An Nasiriah — one of eight major engagements of Operation Iraqi Freedom. The 32 Soldiers who were wounded, Charlton said, were a testament to the intense fighting and the sacrifices the Soldiers endured.

"The Soldiers did amazing things," Charlton said. "They literally made history and added another chapter in the long history of the regiment."

The regiment's history dates back to its initial organization in 1798 and participation in the War of 1812, and the Mexican, Civil, Indian and Spanish-American Wars. The more than 35 campaign streamers on the battalion colors show its continued service in World War II through OIF. The battalion is also known for its 26 years spent in China in the early 1900s.

Col. Steven Salazar, 3rd Brigade commander, said the change of command ceremony represented a special day in an already rich history.

"We're recognizing the accomplishments of the Soldiers under the 'Can Do' colors," he said. "There's a new 1-15 standing before you, reorganized and ready, and the key to success was the performance of the command team, who had "quite a ride during the past two years."

That ride, Salazar said, took Charlton and the battalion from Operation Desert Spring in Kuwait to OIF.

"From the berm to Baghdad and back, from reconstitution to reorganization, they've demonstrated their motto. There is no doubt this battalion Can Do."

Charlton said the Soldiers would continue to meet the challenges and said he would continue to work with them in his next assignment as the assistant chief of staff for operations of the 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Stewart, Ga..

"I'm truly honored to stand in their presence," Charlton said. "I leave with a heavy heart, but consoled by the fact that the Brito's are taking over."

Before releasing the battalion from the field, Brito said he and his wife, Michelle, look forward to being part of the Can Do team.

Brito's previous assignment was as the chief of the Office of Infantry Proponency and served with the 4th Inf. Division during OIF.

As part of the ceremony, the unit activated two companies, D and F; and reflagged C Company as A Company; B Company, 2nd Bn., 69th Armor Regt., as C Company; and C Company, 317th Engineer Bn., as E Company.

The reflaggings and activations are part of 3rd Brigade's reorganization into a unit of action.

Scout troop cases colors, deactivates again

Soldiers to be reassigned to Kelley Hill units

The 3rd Brigade and D Troop, 10th U.S. Cavalry Regt., command teams case the troop's colors after deactivating the unit Tuesday.

D Troop, 10th U.S. Cavalry Regiment, Soldiers stood in formation for the last time Tuesday.

The unit was deactivated as part of the reorganization of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division into a unit of action.

Originally activated in 1866 at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., the 10th was one of six regiments of black troops sent to protect settlers and aid in expansion westward.

They earned their name as "Buffalo Soldiers" after defeating the Comanche in 1784.

D Troop, under command of then Lt. John J. Pershing, was sent to Cuba and fought with Teddy Roosevelt's "Rough Riders." Pershing earned the Silver Star during the campaign and D Troop's call sign, "Blackjack," honors its famous former commander.

3rd Brigade Commander Col. Steven Salazar said the deactivation represented a special day in the history of the unit.

At the beginning of the ceremony, Salazar, and 3rd Brigade Command Sgt. Maj. Mark Baker joined D Troop's commander, Capt. Steven Fairless, and its first sergeant, 1st Sgt. Michael Thompson, to furl the guidon.

"Change is what we're all about," Salazar said. "The Army changes and adapts to meet the needs of the nation."

Through its history, D Troop has been deactivated and reactivated several times, most recently in June 2000, when it was assigned to 3rd Brigade.

"The troop has fought to secure prosperity and peace," Salazar said, helping the nation grow and develop.

Salazar said with the end of the Cold War, the Army has had to adapt to face a new enemy, an enemy without borders, an enemy that "fights asymmetrically."

"That enemy is driving us to adapt and change again," he said.

In the past, Salazar said, brigade reconnaissance teams, like D Troop, were used to go out and gain intelligence for commanders before the fight. Now, he said things have shifted and units have to go out and fight in order to get the intelligence.

"We lose great colors," Salazar said, "but we will have the ability to fight at the lowest level. We're not losing talent or combat experience."

The D Troop Soldiers will be reassigned and will join the ranks of other units within the brigade.

Salazar praised the Soldiers, telling them the loss of the troop colors was not what was important — they would be remembered by their integrity, commitment to service and dedication to excellence.

As part of the reorganization, Salazar said 4th Squadron, 73rd Cavalry would activate.

"That's an entire squadron to do the job of one troop," he said.

Fairless described the deactivation as bittersweet.

"We're here to acknowledge (the troop's) accomplishments over the past five years," Fairless said.

D Troop had several deployments and participated in several combined training center rotations during that time.

"And in 21 days of combat operations, led by Capt. Robert Schultz, D Troop earned its place in history," Fairless said, "always accomplished its mission and brought everyone home."

Fairless thanked Thompson and the Soldiers for their hard work and told them it was tough to say goodbye.

But both Salazar and Fairless expressed a firm belief that the Army has not seen the last of D Troop.

"While the brigade loses the troop, the task force scout platoons gain great Soldiers," Fairless said.

"You will always remain a Buffalo Soldier, ready and forward."

Fort Benning's Memorial Day Ceremony

Fort Benning will honor our country's veterans at 9 a.m. Monday at the Main Post Cemetery. Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin C. Freakley, will be the keynote speaker. For more information, call the 545-2236.

Soldiers train on urban terrain

Four months ago, Pvt. Jerry Toups, E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, was sitting on his couch at home in Lafayette, La., watching Soldiers fighting insurgents in the urban terrain environment in Iraq and Afghanistan on television.

At the time, he didn't realize how important urban training was to the American Soldier, but now that he's one of them, he's learning just what he'll do should he ever be in that situation.

"Training in an urban environment situation is important," he said. "That's where most of the battles are being fought in today's modern battles. You have to be prepared for whatever you might encounter around the next corner."

Toups, along with the other Soldiers from his company, trained at the Malone MOUT site May 21 to prepare themselves for possible future situations.

The training entailed learning how to move from building to building safely as a unit, how to search enemy prisoners or war while adhering to the Geneva Convention, and how to enter and clear a room.

"This training is very important for all Soldiers," said Staff Sgt. Dennis Barry, drill sergeant.

"Many of these Soldiers will deploy to the Middle East region with units in the near future, and they need to know how to handle all of these situations. Because all will be presented to them at one time or another," he said.

As part of the training, teams encountered an enemy soldier and were required to search him and his equipment.

Soldiers must be careful when searching POWs to make sure the prisoners' weapon are out of reach, said Pfc. Alvin Rivera, E Co., 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt.

"Also, you need to make sure you adhere to the rules and regulations of searching them so you don't get in trouble," he said.

The drill sergeants stressed the proper techniques and procedures for searching an enemy POW.

"The Geneva Convention is very important for these Soldiers to learn," Barry said.

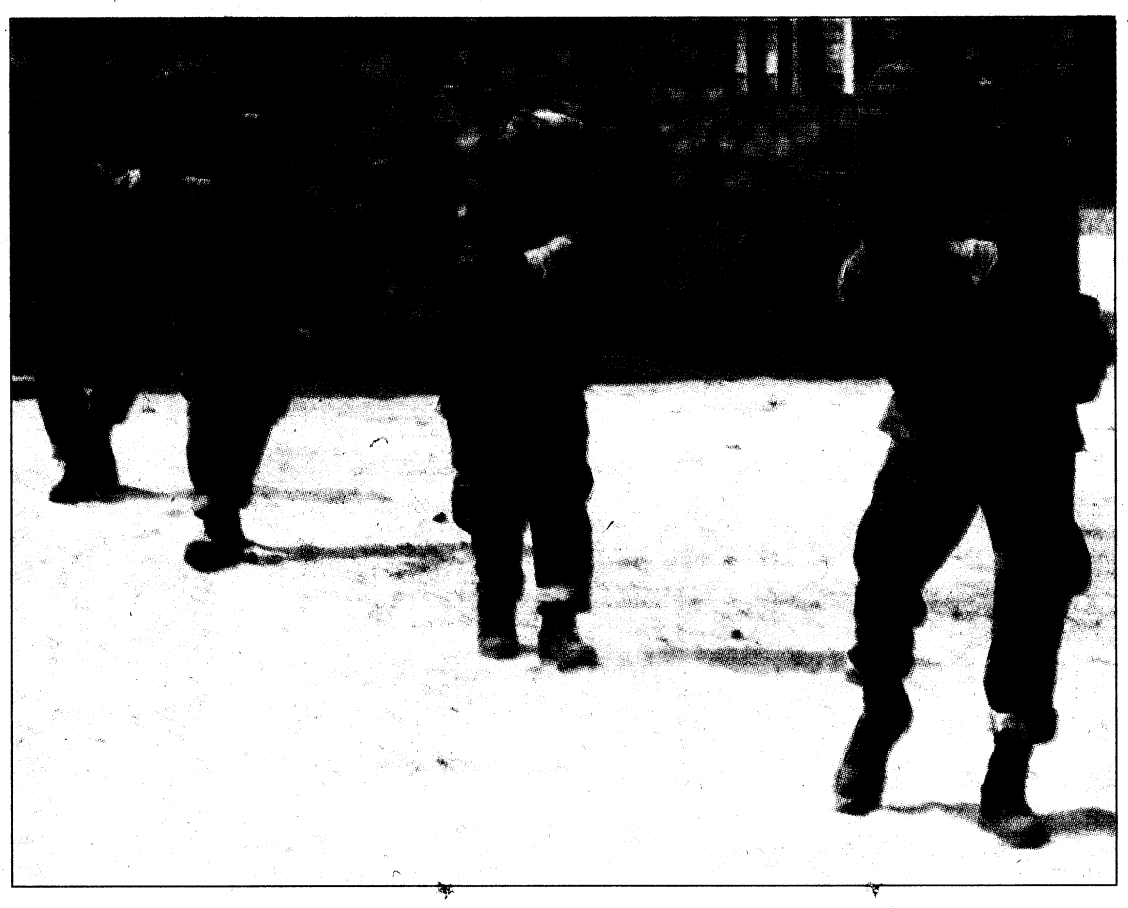
"They need to know what they can and can't do under the Geneva Convention, so they can take care of the job quickly and efficiently without breaking any laws."

Throughout the day, squad after squad entered buildings to hone their room-clearing skills. First, squads did walk-throughs; then went through at combat speed.

The drill sergeants required the Soldiers to communicate with the rest of their team.

"Communication and working as a team is very important in this training," Barry said. "The better you communicate and work with each other, the better off your squad will be and the better your chances are for survival."

Many of the Soldiers also started to realize how real the world situation is when they started the MOUT training.



"Many of us took things for granted and didn't realize how real everything out there is," Toups said. "When you have that rifle in your hands and you're performing all of the tasks, then reality hits you. It brings everything full circle."

Pvt. Mike Reyes, top, searches Pvt. Jerry Toups. Part of the team's training included searching an enemy prisoner of war. With Heat Category 5 conditions, the Soldiers were allowed to unblouse their boots and roll up their sleeves.

Pfc. Ryan Murray enters the front door during his team's assault on a two-story building.

A team of Soldiers moves in the open during their assault at the Malone MOUT site May 21. Soldiers were required to perform an assault on a two-story building to standard to learn what situations they would be facing should they deploy to the Middle East.

SALUTES OUR MILITARY THIS MEMORIAL DAY

The Power Wrap - Body Wrap

Following the long awaited launch of the Anti-Aging Wrap, just months ago Victoria surprised us again with another breakthrough formulation of The Body Wrap.

Further investigative work at Suddenly Slender's Research Group has yielded a new formula that not only rejuvenates the body in the same fashion as the Anti-Aging Wrap, it also obtains better inch-loss through the torso, smoothes the skin in a silky satin finish, AND leaves behind a dynamic reservoir of ENERGY!

In fact, this powerful energy is so noticeable that our test subjects practically named the nine solution for us...they call it The Power Wrap!

Here's what a couple of them had to say:

"Wonderful! I felt full of PEP the entire day!"
- Sue B.

"I felt the energy surge, but my SKIN'S the best part, it's velvety!"
- Vicky L.

Secretary: Visits post, praises troops

have to be able to handle your weapon."

Brownlee, a retired Army colonel who coined the phrase "the next greatest generation," who is reputedly a Soldier's Soldier, dedicated to ensuring the safety and lethality of every man and woman on the battlefield. He's heavily critical of initiatives that might lower the standard for the infantryman.

"It's no secret I'm not a fan of BOLC," he said, noting that the course, which will likely begin next year, includes lieutenants from every occupational specialty.

"My concern is we've set a standard for everyone," Brownlee said. "If everyone can pass it, it's simply not going to be tough enough for the infantry Soldier who wants to be a hard-driven leader. An infantryman should never be satisfied with the standard."

But he was equally profuse with praise for the Army's "leader trainers."

"What you do here is special. If I tried to tell you just how important it is, I couldn't," he told the men of the Ranger Training Brigade during a Friday afternoon celebration of his induction into the Ranger Hall of Fame.

Bridgett Siter

Using a sand table, Lt. Col. Chuck Salvo explains the 203rd Forward Support Battalion's training exercise to Acting Secretary of the Army Les Brownlee and Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley.

Brownlee, who attended Ranger School in 1965 before two tours in Vietnam, became an official member of the Hall of Fame last summer but could not attend the annual ceremony because he was visiting Soldiers in Iraq.

"Let me tell you this: Nothing I could've done could have prepared me better for (Vietnam)," he said. "No insurance policy could've given me a greater guarantee of success. What you do here is critically important."

Brownlee also observed a Ranger mobile training team instructing National Guard troops on urban warfare at McKenna MOUT (military operations in urban terrain) site.

The secretary is an avid proponent of modularity, based on the "plug-in" premise that Army units should be more mobile and adaptable and ready to serve where they're needed.

Training to standard, he said, is the key to success in the war on terrorism.

Freakley agreed, noting that Fort Benning's two greatest priorities at this time are to train to standard and support modularity.

"Everything else is secondary," he said. "Here at Fort Benning, training is our centerpiece and ... we believe we produce a leader and Soldier who is confident and competent.

"That piece we do fairly well," he said. "But the piece about flexibility and adaptability — that's what we're working on. That's where we're headed with (modularity)."

Brownlee, who's known to conduct frequent "ground-level conversations" with enlisted Soldiers and company-grade officers, listened intently as Freakley and unit commanders briefed him on the various training initiatives being conducted around post — training frequently "passed along" by mobile trainers who carry their skills to other units here and abroad.

But in the end, it was always the "man on the street" who had the last word, as again and again, Brownlee stopped a Soldier in training to ask, "But what do you think?"

MOUT: Training in high demand

Armor Regiment, and 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment.

That means the Soldiers, who are slated to return to Iraq later this year, will likely find themselves in more urban operations.

And there's no better place to sharpen their urban warfare skills than the McKenna village, said Sgt. Chris Matthews, who role-played a village shopkeeper during the training.

"This is the best MOUT site I've seen," said Matthews, who has trained at urban warfare sites in Kuwait, Fort Hood, Texas, and Fort Leonard Wood, Mo.

Though McKenna is designed to look more like a European village than a Middle Eastern, "it'll get the job done," said Matthews who has twice deployed to Kuwait and once to Iraq.

> "I believe this is some of the most important training we can do."
> Sgt. Chris Matthews
> 317th Engineer Battalion

"An Iraqi village would have narrower streets and taller buildings, so this isn't an exact match," Matthews said. "But tactics and techniques are the same for clearing buildings. This has enough of a feel of it to give these guys an idea of what they'll get over there.

"I believe this is some of the most important training we can do," he said.

Benning holds town-hall meeting

Post residents bring variety of issues to table

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning residents presented their issues to post officials Monday at a televised town-hall meeting.

Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley began the meeting by inducting the three new volunteer mayors for East Main Post, Upatoi Terrace and Custer Terrace.

Freakley then gave the audience a quick recap of the Secretary of the Army's visit to post last week.

"The secretary said his visit reminded him how lucky the Army is to have Fort Benning and he recognized the efforts of all stationed here," Freakley said. "Fort Benning is making a personal contribution to the war on terrorism."

Freakley encouraged everyone to take advantage of the summer programs, facilities and Morale, Welfare and Recreation activities the post has to offer.

He said the post has developed several process action teams working on the quality of life for residents, especially family housing, the hospital and the emergency room.

Before turning the program over to the garrison commander, Col. Rick Riera, Freakley reminded residents that living on post "is a privilege, not a right" and that all should make the neighborhoods a source of pride.

> "Fort Benning is only as good as we are ... It should be a place where we can raise our kids without any threat of danger, and your input only makes us better."
> Brig. Gen. Benjamin C. Freakley

He touched on hot issues — loud music and profanity — saying Soldiers and family members should "live out the Army value of respect."

Col. Don Bradshaw, the Martin Army Community Hospital commander, acknowledged the three main problem areas at the hospital — the ER, school and camp physicals and Tricare.

Bradshaw identified an increased workload and a decrease in ER staff as contributing factors. The short-term solution, Bradshaw said, is to have a health-care provider available in the ER to see non-emergency patients in the afternoons when the ER volume is the greatest.

Patients can also use the urgent-care clinic downtown, he said, as well as make afterhours appointments and Saturday appointments.

Bradshaw asked parents to plan ahead for physicals and reassured everyone that the Aug. 1 change in the Tricare contract would not affect patient benefits, only Tricare business practices.

Provost Marshal Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan addressed residents' concerns about speed bumps and MP presence in the neighborhoods.

Finnegan said that the 154 Vance Federal Security Services personnel will take over access control on June 3, putting more patrols in the neighborhoods for the summer. MPs will patrol on bikes, golf carts and

Illegal dumping takes toll

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

It's that time of year again — moving time. As families prepare to leave Fort Benning, they may find themselves with a sofa past its prime or a barbecue that's seen better days.

So what to do with these items? In an increasing problem on post, many household items, along with items from units, are being dumped illegally.

"It's the easy wrong thing versus the easy right thing," said Command Sgt. Maj. John Schwamberger, CONUS Replacement Center command sergeant major. "We all need to be good citizens and make Fort Benning the best-looking post."

Schwamberger was recently biking on post when he noticed an area behind the CRC that was filled with unwanted fences, posts and wood skids.

"I couldn't believe it," he said. "We just policed up that area during spring clean-up a few weeks back."

Dorinda Morpeth, Solid Waste Program manager, Directorate of Public Works, said illegal dumping causes a lot of problems.

"Fort Benning gets cited by the state for the dumping. Also, to clean up the trash, Soldiers or units are assigned the detail — which is not always feasible. People think, 'What harm can it do?' Refrigerators, contain freon, which is a hazardous material that can be released into the ozone. Other appliances contain hazardous materials. The metal on these appliances can also be recycled."

Morpeth recommended people think before they dump.

"Ninety-nine percent of it's reusable or good for somebody else. If it's in good condition, give it to a charity, or bring it to the Thrift Shop."

All large items, including appliances, safes, wall lockers, furniture, washers and dryers and all metal items can and should be brought, by any unit or individual, to the Materials Recycling Facility, located on Cusseta Road. All the funds from the recycling stay at Fort Benning and benefit the Morale, Welfare and Recreation program.

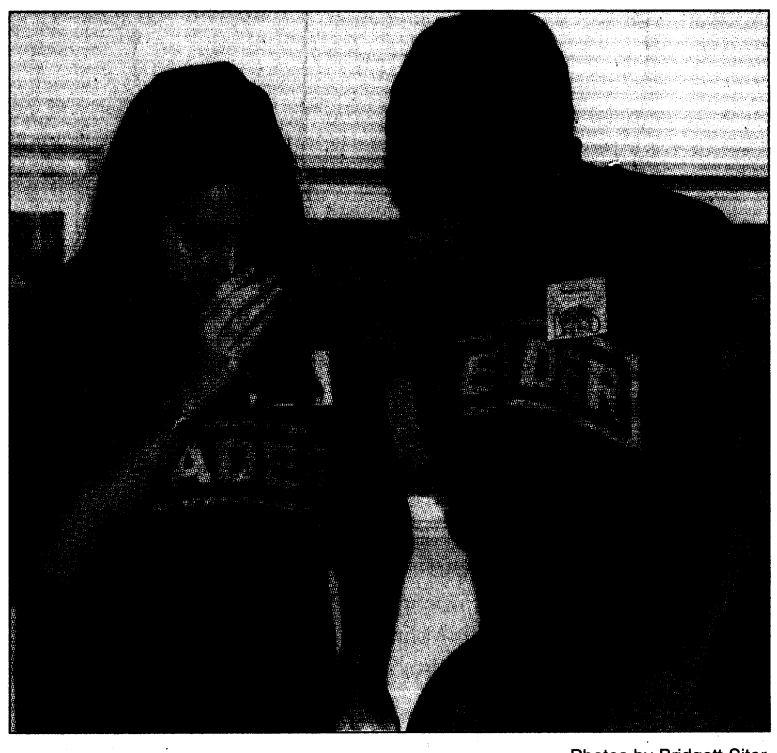
Battle of the Books

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

White Elementary students took a stand early in the Battle of the Books.

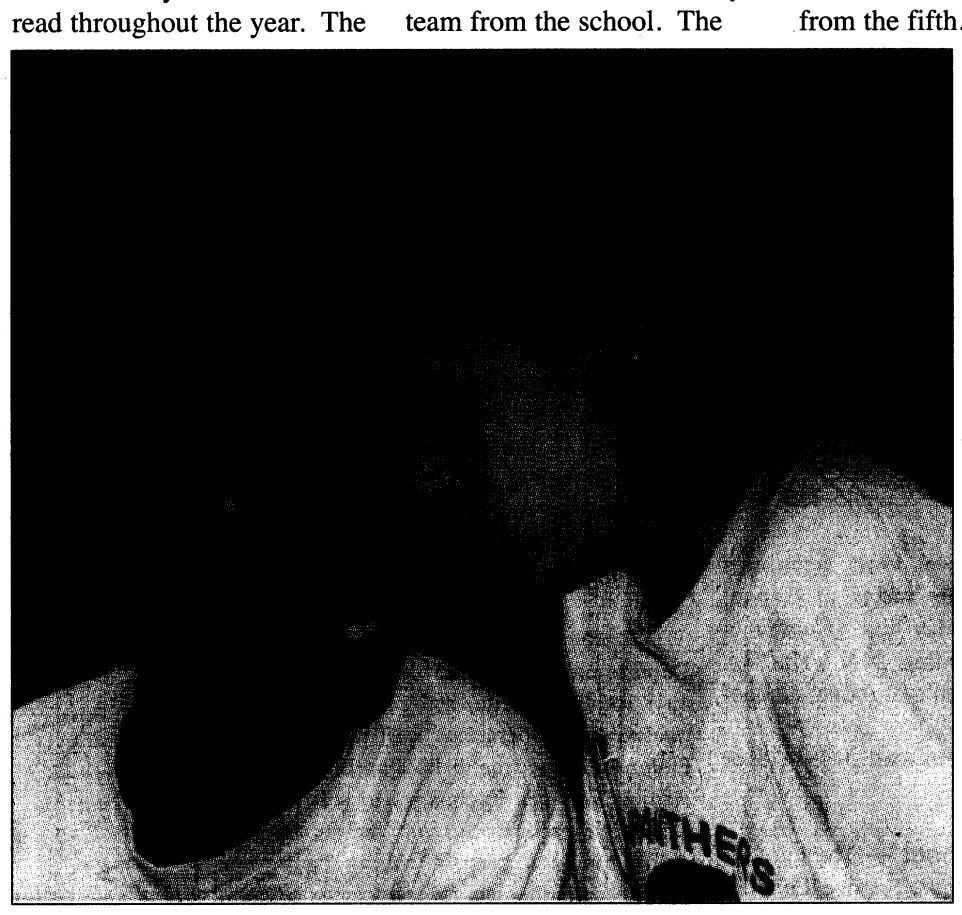
Literally.



The five students on White's team stood throughout the competition May 19, surrounded by teams from four other schools, whose members chose to remain seated.

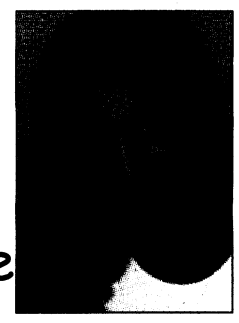
"That's the way we practiced, so we decided not to change it," Laura Becker, who led White's team to solid win with 293 points.

The Battle of the Books is a brain bowl of sorts, pitting nine teams from five Fort Benning elementary schools.



Susan Freakley, the wife of Fort Benning's commanding general, served as mediator, quizzing the teams about the 30 books they were tasked to read throughout the year. The teams were awarded points for correct answers.

White's team was the only team from the school. The other Fort Benning schools fielded two teams apiece, one from the fourth grade and one from the fifth.



Photos by Bridgett Siter

Laura Becker and Donald Smith, White Elementary School fifth-graders, try to recall the names and authors of the 30 books they read in preparation for the Battle of the Books.

Andre Baptiste looks to Brooklynn DiMaggio for answers May 19 during Fort Benning Schools' second annual Battle of the Books. Baptiste and DiMaggio were members of the Loyd Elementary School fifth-grade team.

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Sick of sitting around in that barracks room looking at the walls? Need to get the family out of the house or just take a break? We've got the answer for you. 'Get Outta Here' will appear in The Bayonet each week to highlight recreation and leisure venues right here in the tricommunity. If you would like to suggest a hot spot for the column, call Sgt. Kim Dooley at 545-3367.

I don't know about you, but I like water sports. Granted, I've never swum without the aid of those little floatie things on my arms (unless you count a fierce doggy paddle). And the last time I actually went "out on the water," I was all of 8 and it was a canoe (word to the wise — don't lean!).

But I make a great shoreline supporter!

And this weekend, we all have the chance to cheer on a few world-class aquatic athletes, attempting feats we probably wouldn't even dream of.

Callaway Gardens is holding the Master's Water Ski Championship this weekend, where you can man the beach of Robin Lake and bear witness to some impressive water-ski tricks, all while working on your tan (or if you're like me, your burn).

Now I know what you're thinking — watching people water ski? Honestly, how many tricks can there be? Boring.

But you don't know what you're missing. This weekend's event isn't for local amateurs. This is for "the world's greatest water skiers," locked in ruthless competition for more than $160,000 in prize money and the title of best male and female water skier.

So to get the cash and all that prestige, you know they've got to pull out all the stops.

If you're just looking for something to do, head out to Callaway any day this weekend — junior elimination rounds are today, and the junior finals are Saturday, followed by masters elimination rounds. Events start around

Dexter student takes second place in essay contest

"When I open a funny book, one of the characters just pulls me in and says, 'Come on, Jasmine.'"

— Jasmine Sterling

Writing about her reading experience to the Armed Services YMCA earned Jasmine Sterling a $100 savings bond recently. The Dexter Elementary School third-grader won second place in the recent Armed Service YMCA essay contest.

Every year, the YMCA hosts a competition in which children of service members compete in various types of activities. This year's essay competition's topic was "Why I Love to Read."

This competition is only one of the many activities Dexter students from Kris Holcombe's third-grade class have participated in.

Sterling

After another of Holcombe's students, Courtney Moore, won a competition for Letters to the Front, she had her students participate in several other writing contests to encourage them to enjoy writing.

"At the beginning of third grade, the kids don't really like to write any more than a sentence," Holcombe said. "Now they're writing essays where they put their thoughts on paper."

"I knew I was going to win, but I was still surprised," Sterling said about her award. "Usually, I don't know what to write. I only like to write about myself and not about other people or animals."

This time, writing about herself won her the second place title and surprised everyone.

Holcombe admits she was surprised, as were Sterling's parents.

"We were caught off guard," said Capt. Raymond Sterling, Jasmine's father.

"Usually, my oldest daughter gets recognitions," he said. " I didn't even know Jasmine had entered the contest."

He said Jasmine is a very helpful kid who's always received straight As in school.

This year's topic really got Jasmine writing. In her essay Jasmine wrote about an incident in second grade when she and her friend, Abigail, were having trouble learning their spelling words, so they made up funny stories with the words in them to help them remember them.

"She's a very wide open girl with a lot of energy," Holcombe said.

Jasmine wasn't the only Dexter student in the winner's circle this time around. Amber Britt, also in Holcombe's class, was an Honorable Mention. For her essay, Britt received a $100 saving bond.

"Jasmine didn't have confidence in her writing," Holcombe said. "But we teach them that 'can't never could,' and they know to keep trying."

"I like it when my teacher is happy about what I write," Jasmine said.

"With all the kids coming and going, it's good to do things like this for them," Holcombe said.

BETTER BUSINESS BUREAU

Better Business Bureau

The Better Business Bureau of East Alabama, West and Southwest Georgia is receiving a high level of calls from victims of foreign sweepstakes and lottery scams.

Individuals from the region have been conned out of thousands of dollars.

The Bureau is warning against transferring any monies to recover winnings.

The victims are receiving phone calls from persons claiming to be U.S. customs agents requesting funds for taxes and other related fees. The victims are being told to immediately pay by credit card or to transfer funds via Western Union to locations in Canada or Puerto Rico.

The calls are very convincing and appeal to an individual's desire to be a winner.

Additionally, the caller is insisting that the victims keep all information confidential in order to protect the guards who will be delivering the winning check.

Citizens are encouraged to call the BBB for information and to report any information regarding these calls.

Under no circumstances should citizens respond to these calls by sending money. If they do, they have wasted their money as these funds are almost always not recovered!

BBB Reliability Reports are now online at www.columbus-ga.bbb.org.

Get car tuneup before leaving for vacation

Avoid road problems with preparation

Precision Tune Auto Care

There is nothing worse than taking off for a driving vacation and two hours out on the road you encounter road problems.

According to the Car Care Council, tow truck operators in resort areas or along interstate highways see all too many travelers forced to return home ahead of schedule because of car trouble.

The situation usually means more than just a repair bill. It can involve towing charges, lodging and possibly a rental car. Add that to the cost of extra phone calls, meals and general inconvenience and the ordeal becomes expensive.

So, if spiraling gas prices have not discouraged you from hitting the road this Memorial Day weekend, take heed before you take off.

The Car Doctor at Precision Tune Auto Care has 10 tips for saving money on gas and for ensuring a trouble-free trip.

No. 1 — Inspect your tires closely. At highway speeds, a blow out with the vehicle fully loaded with family could spell disaster. Check for balding, bumps, nails and proper inflation. Don't forget your spare tire. Is it inflated? Do you have a jack and all tools needed for changing a tire? Check tires when cool. Tire pressure will change after extended highway speeds.

No. 2 — Have brakes and brake fluid inspected. If fluid is low, do not just top it off. There's a reason it is low. Check brake pads and shoes for wear.

No. 3 — Check all brake lights, turn signals and head lamps — including high beams — to ensure they are working properly and focused.

No. 4 — Have the cooling system examined by a trained professional for the following: leaks, sound hoses, coolant level and mixture ratio, radiator cap, cooling fan and coolant pH level.

No. 5 — Make sure your technician checks your air-conditioning system for proper freon level and condition of belts. To help conserve gasoline, use your air conditioner on the road rather than keeping windows down. Open windows create wind drag, straining the engine.

No. 6 — Change engine oil and filters if you haven't done that in the last three months or 3,000 miles.

No. 7 — Check the condition of the windshield wiper blades and have them changed if they do not provide adequate visibility, and top off the windshield wiper solution (do not use plain water).

No. 8 — Use cruise control to maintain a steady speed and save gas.

No. 9 — Use only the fuel octane recommended for your car. Higher octane gas, which produces less energy, not only costs more, it also yields lower miles per gallon.

No. 10 — Every time you stop for gas, check oil level and inspect tires and clean the windshield. Do not check coolant level when engine is hot, except to visually inspect the overflow bottle. If you are just making a quick pit stop, do not cut the engine; let the car idle for a few minutes.

Meeting: Addresses resident issues

ATVs.

He said speed bump locations would continue to be looked at. Under the initial plan, only two-thirds were installed with the expectation that some would need to be moved and others added.

Finnegan's PAT is involved in the rewrite of the garrison regulation, which covers noise, nuisance pets, parking, curfews, unattended children and misconduct.

"We're working to develop something that is clear, understandable and enforcable and develop a comprehensive adjudication process," he said.

Master Sgt. Edmond Hackett, a Community Life NCO, addressed parking on grass, trampoline and pool policies, an issue submitted to the panel via e-mail.

Hackett said the current policies prohibiting parking on grass except for loading and unloading, and requiring manufactured safety nets for trampolines and permanent fencing around swimming pools are in effect and being enforced. Residents who receive written violation notices have 30 days to comply with the policies.

Riera told the audience he would publish a "due out" list letting them know the status of issues, Freakley closed the meeting saying he appreciated those who attended and sent in their concerns.

"Fort Benning is only as good as we are citizens," Freakley said. "It should be a place where we can raise our kids without any threat of danger, and your input only makes us better."

GOH: Water skiers vie for top honor

8 a.m. both days, and you probably want to get there early on to grab a good spot on the beach.

If you're in it for the grand finale, head up Sunday. The championship finals begin at about 11:30 a.m.

Now I'm not offering any guarantees here — it may turn out that water skiing really isn't your spectator sport of choice.

But even if you decide 20 minutes into it that you'd rather be folding your laundry, you're not completely stuck.

Callaway is full of other things to do and see. Check out the Birds of Prey exhibit, the Butterfly Center, the Azalea Bowl or any number of nature trails.

Wander around and make a mental note to come back with wheels to explore the bike trails or a camera to capture the great photo ops.

Either way, there's bound to be a good crowd, lots of entertainment and something semi-interesting for even the most skeptical event-goers.

To get to Callaway, hop on Interstate 185 (going north, of course), drive for about 30 minutes and look for the brown signs that will take you the rest of the way.

The water ski championship isn't free, so if you want advance tickets, call (888) 806-2783.

Get Ready to Register for School Year 2004-2005

Registration for new students will take place from 8:00 a.m. – 3:30 p.m. June 7-11, 2004. Please go to your assigned school to register. Verification for returning students will take place during the month of May; look for information from your school for dates for verification. It will be necessary for parents to register at each school if they have children in more than one of the Fort Benning Schools. The following documents are required for registration or verification:

Returning Students

- Parents of all returning students must provide military ID and proof of housing.
- Sixth grade students must show proof of varicella (chicken pox) vaccine or *proof of immunity.

Returning Students Transferring to another Fort Benning School

- From McBride to White – Students attending McBride School and promoted from third to fourth grade will need to verify registration at McBride up to the end of the school year. Beginning June 7, verification will be at White.
- From Fifth to Faith – Students promoted from fifth grade to Faith Middle School's sixth grade will need to verify registration at their neighborhood school. Beginning June 7, verification will take place at Faith Middle School, 1375 Ingersoll.

Transfer Students (New to Fort Benning)

Parents should bring previous school records if available, verification of housing, military ID, and child's social security card. Prekindergarten, kindergarten, and first grade require a legal birth certificate. A Georgia Certificate of Immunization is also required. These certificates are available through Martin Army Community Hospital. Immunization information will be available at registration.

Students Entering School for the First Time

(Preschool, Prekindergarten, or Kindergarten)

- Parents must provide a legal birth certificate, verification of housing, military ID, and child's social security card. Georgia Certificates of Immunization and Eye, Ear, and Dental Examinations are also required. These certificates are available through Martin Army Hospital. Immunization information will be available at registration.

*Proof of immunity includes a physician or health care provider's statement or medical record.

Verification of housing does not need to be an official statement from housing, it may be a copy of a recent bill with printed name and address.

Dexter students take on bridge building

Sgt. Kim Dooley

Sydney Walters, a Dexter fourth-grader, puts the finishing touches on Broadway Bridge's project.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It was a tough mission with a tight schedule: Design and build a bridge to hold the maximum weight load possible in less than six weeks.

But Dexter Elementary School students weren't backing down from the challenge. The children, fourth- and fifth-grade students, formed "companies," complete with an accountant, architect, carpenter and even a transportation officer.

"Each person in the company had a job to do, and they had to do their job or the company wouldn't do well," said Marjorie Brasfield, the teacher overseeing the project. "To me, that's real life."

But that's not the only reality check the project offered.

The students were provided a grand total of $1,550,000 to complete the project, as well as a cost list for everything they would need — land, lumber, welding materials, planning supplies, audit services, checks and balance sheets.

Using Microsoft Excel, each company's accountant was responsible for approving and keeping track of every dollar spent.

"We had to keep the books on the computer," said Jimmy Risberg, a fourth-grader and the accountant for Broadway Bridges. "Every time we spent money, we had to put in the check number, date, who we paid it to and the amount."

And although the children may have thought they'd "struck it rich" in the beginning, Brasfield said, they learned just how quickly expenses can add up.

With land priced at $500,000, nearly a third of their budget was gone before they even began. Add to that lumber (toothpicks) priced at $10,000 per stick and welding materials (carpenter's glue) at about $850 per day.

Transportation officers were responsible for delivering the checks to the Lumber Store — a booth manned by parent volunteers — and transporting the needed materials back to their companies.

Meanwhile, the architects were responsible for designing a bridge wide enough for a "car" to drive through, tall enough for a "boat" to pass under and sturdy enough to bear the weight of a pail filled with sand.

Once the plans were laid out, the company carpenters got to work building.

"We had to figure out what designs would support weight better," said Desireé Sterling, a fifth-grade carpenter for Briasheé Bridges. "We tried to find the design that would be the strongest, with a lot of support in the middle and (crossing planks) to help support more weight."

Sterling, who participated in the bridge-building exercise last year as a fourth-grader, said she's confident her company's bridge will hold up under pressure.

And with a little help from Soldiers of the 36th Engineer Group, Sterling and her fellow students will find out how their work stacks up during the school's annual Bridge Off today, Brasfield said.

"A pail of sand is hung from a (supporter) on the bridge, and we just keep adding sand until the bridge breaks," she said. "Once it breaks, we weigh the sand to see whose bridge held the most weight."

But that's not all the students are judged on, she said.

They also receive or lose points for how original their designs are, how closely they stick to their plans, how well their bridges are put together, how well they work together as a company and how well they adhere to safety and clean-up guidelines.

"This exercise teaches them to plan, budget and organize," Brasfield said. "But the main benefit is that they're learning to work together cooperatively.

"And they're so proud," she said. "This is something they've accomplished on their own."

Dexter breaks ground on track

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Dexter Elementary School broke ground on its new, quarter-mile track Thursday morning.

Construction for the project, which has been in the works for nearly 10 years, will begin after school lets out Wednesday and will continue through the summer, said Kelli Acord, the school's parent/teacher organization president.

The school's families have raised more than $8,000 this year for the project, she said.

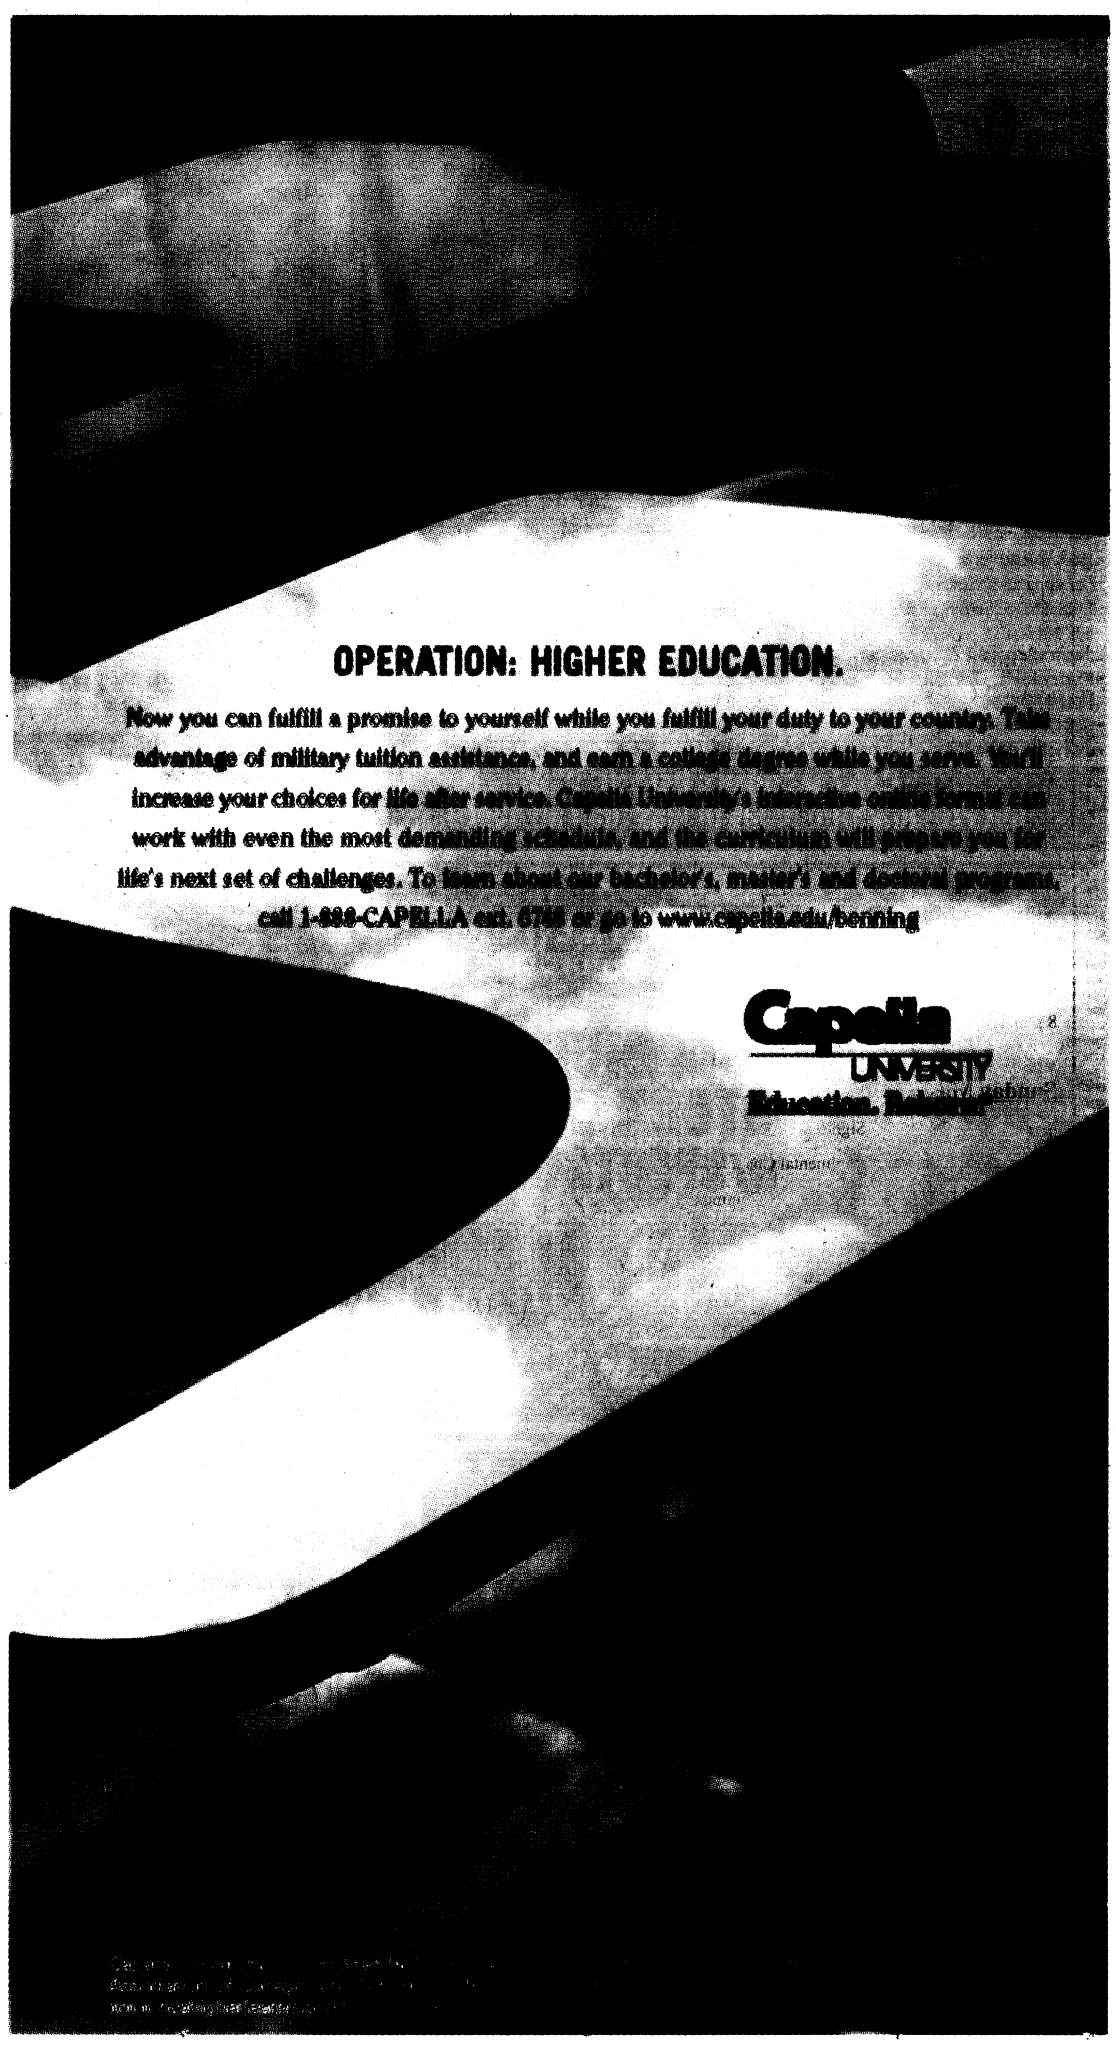
"What's special about this track is that it will wrap around the playground," Acord said. "This is great for mothers with small children, because they can use the track while their children (play)."

The track will be used by Dexter students for their morning runs with their Partners in Education, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery Regiment, and Presidential Fitness Day activities, as well as for the school's before-school fitness club, the Feeling Good Mileage Club.

But the school doesn't plan to keep the track to itself.

"This track will be for anyone's use," Acord said. "The community can come use it after school hours or on the weekends."

She said the school anticipates about 500 families in the local area will be able to take advantage of the track, which is scheduled to be completed by August.



"It's very exciting to think that when we come back to school in August, we will have a real track right around this playground for our walking and jogging program," said Dexter principal Vicki Rogers during the groundbreaking ceremony.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Dexter Elementary School students Tirece Chesire, left, and Maggie LaCamera help break the ground for the school's new track with Fort Benning's commanding general, Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, and Dexter's parent/teacher organization president Kelli Acord.

REFLECTIONS

What is your "guilty pleasure" food? Is it candy or ice cream? Is it popcorn or chips? Do you indulge in it every day?

I have to admit that I am hooked on Starbucks coffee and chocolate in pretty much any form (although I'm partial to Hershey's Kisses and M&Ms).

I indulge in these almost every day, and they are two "foods" that I never get tired of. As much as I enjoy these, however, I could never imagine what it would be like if I had nothing but coffee and chocolate to live on every day; could you with your favorite "food"?

Now consider the Israelites in the Sinai wilderness. The Lord miraculously gave them food called manna every day and after a year they were sick of it. They said, "We have lost our appetite; we never see anything but this manna!" (Numbers 11:6)

Although at first we might sympathize with the Israelites, reflect on the fact that their complaint was directed at God. Remember that it was a miracle every day that they had any food at all.

Every morning they had fresh manna all around them. It was a gift from God, yet they complained.

When we really think about it, are we any different? Do we ever get tired of what God gives us day after day? Do we get sick of the same job? The same home? The same income? The same circumstances?

While it's OK to dream and to work hard for a "better" life, do we sometimes actually get to the point where we even resent our circumstances and what we have? We need to be reminded daily that not only does God supply all that we need (Philippians 4:19), but true happiness, contentment and success can only come from focusing fully on Jesus.

As Paul stated in Philippians 4:12-13, "I know what it is to be in need, and I know what it is to have plenty. I have learned the secret of being content in any and every situation, whether well fed or hungry, whether living in plenty or in want. I can do everything through Him who gives me strength."

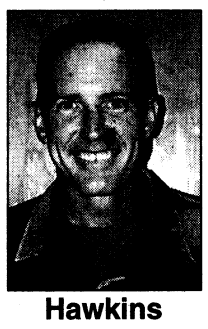
Find your true calling, fight burnout

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center



In some ways, it was a typical breakfast meeting. The waitress was pleasant, the eggs were average and the restaurant was full of busy people. We shared a cup of black, coffee-like liquid — the first few times he took a sip, he managed to spill quite a bit of it. His trembling hand was just one of the symptoms of his burnout. That's why we were meeting. He wanted to know if I could help him.

I picked up a fork and explained that as long as I used it for eating, the fork would last indefinitely. However, if I began to use it to drive nails or dig trenches, it would soon break. The key was to use it for what it was designed to do.

The look in his eyes told me he got it, but I still went on to say that people are like the fork. When they do what they are not designed to do, they eventually break.

Sure enough, I had him take his career assessment and it showed that he was designed to work on projects where there was definitely a goal.

He derived immense satisfaction from reaching goals. He also needed to work by himself about half the time. He was a scientist and enjoyed lab time, doing calculations and interpreting test results.

Hawkins

What his job required on a day-to-day basis was another story. His primary task was to supervise a dozen people and maintain operations. No goals. No projects. No time alone. Consequently, his job was sucking the life out of him.

Much credit for his recovery goes to his boss, who was a smart enough leader to change the job content to fit the design of a valuable employee.

So how do you know if you, a loved one or someone who reports to you is suffering from burnout? Here are some early warning signs:

• Chronic fatigue — exhaustion, tiredness, a sense of being physically run down

• Anger at those making demands

• Self-criticism for putting up with the demands

• Cynicism, negativity and irritability

• A sense of being besieged

• Exploding easily at seemingly inconsequential things

• Frequent headaches and gastrointestinal disturbances

• Weight loss or gain

• Sleeplessness and depression

• Shortness of breath

• Suspiciousness

• Feelings of helplessness

• Increased degree of risk taking

Fight burnout. Do what you were designed to do.

If you know someone who fits this description, have him or her take a career assessment and get on azimuth with the way God "wired them to work."

Need help discovering how to "take this job and love it?"

Then join me at Kelley Hill's CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays.

Or give us a call at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760.

Bill Heard clobbers Window Works, 38-11

Hitting, base running key to big victory for prior league champs

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

The Bill Heard intramural softball team upped its record to 9-0 after manhandling Columbus Window Works 38-11 Monday at the South Commons softball fields in Columbus.

The team got off to a slow start, not being able to generate runs in the early innings, but their bats came alive in the middle innings to give them a big win.

"We're used to getting off to a slow start," said pitcher Chris Egan. "It's been that way the whole season. For some reason, we don't hit the ball as well at the beginning of the game as we do at the end."

The Bill Heard team, which is comprised of mostly Fort Benning Soldiers, jumped out to a 3-0 lead after the top of third inning, but fell behind after Window Works strung together five hits to go up 4-3.

"We knew our bats would come alive," Egan said. "We just had to be patient and wait on our pitches. As long as we did that, we knew we would pour it on."

In the top of the fourth inning, the Bill Heard team started pounding Window Works with well-placed hits and smart base-running.

A few of the well-placed hits found their way over the fence.

"That's all it takes — stringing a few hits together, to have a big inning," said left fielder Derrick Tolliver. "Once you have the momentum on your side, then it's pretty tough for the other team to stop it."

Bill Heard stretched their lead to 11-4, with more hits, but they still wanted more. They continued to pile on the runs and didn't give Window Works a chance to breathe.

In the sixth inning, the team hit their seventh and eighth home runs to max out the long ball. (In the City Softball League, teams can hit a maximum of eight home runs. Every home run hit after that is counted as an out.)

"A lot of people say we are a stacked team," Tolliver said.

"But, if we were a stacked team, we wouldn't be allowing other teams to score 11 runs, and we wouldn't stop scoring at 38 runs. Plus, we would max out our home runs by the third inning every game, and we haven't done that," he said.

"We are in the same division as the other top teams in Columbus. We just happen to play as a team and that's the reason we win games."

Tolliver credits the teams success to the fact that most of them are in the military, or have been in the military and know what it takes to be a team player.

"This is just like any other thing you do in life," he said. "The more you work together, the better off the team is going to be."

New hunting, fishing law gives new opportunities

License not required for Soldiers on leave

Pfc. Chris Stephens
Bayonet staff

Alabama Govenor Bob Riley recently signed a bill that allows active-duty military Alabama residents on leave, to hunt or fish without a hunting or fishing license.

The new law also allows non-resident Soldiers stationed in Alabama to purchase hunting and fishing licenses at the same price as Alabama residents.

"No other state respects, supports and appreciates the sacrifices made by our military more than Alabama," Riley said in a press release. "This new law is another way for us to thank our men and women in the military for their brave service."

Before, service members who weren't residents of Alabama paid full price for licenses, which range from $30 to $250 for hunting and $10 to $89 for fishing.

Alabama residents pay $7.50 to $58.50 for hunting and $5 to $23.50 for fishing.

"Whether they hunt or not, Soldiers like this kind of support because it reassures them that their hard work and service to the nation is appreciated," said Col. Mike Beasock, chief, Training and Doctrine Command, Systems Manager Close Combat Missile Systems, and avid hunter.

Currently, Fort Benning has a cooperative agreement with Georgia and Alabama that provides an exception for active-duty personnel assigned to Fort Benning who have either a Georgia or Alabama hunting license to hunt on either the Georgia or Alabama side of the installation.

Beasock said the new law will make a big difference for hunters he knows.

"(I know an) Alabama resident living on Fort Benning," Beasock said, "and over the past four years, he had to buy either a Georgia or Alabama hunting license to hunt on Fort Benning."

Under the new law, Beasock's friend will get his Alabama hunting license at no cost and he'll be able to hunt on both sides of the installation.

Kim Nicks, public information officer for the Alabama Department of Conservation, said this law will make hunting and fishing easier and more accessible for Soldiers in Alabama.

"We want them to enjoy the outdoors," she said. "Hopefully, this will encourage more people to hunt and fish, which will in turn, help the state."

Nicks also said she hopes other states will take a look at what Alabama is doing and do something similar.

"This is a great way we can show our appreciation to the military," she said. "They sacrifice so much for this country, and this is the least the state of Alabama can do for them."

The law will go into effect Aug. 1. Licenses can be purchased online at www.outdoor alabama.com.

Anyone interested in buying a license must prove they are on active duty.

For more information on the new law, call the Alabama Department of Conservation Branch at (334) 242-3157.

Soldier qualifies for Olympics

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public affairs Office

At the conclusion of Sunday's matches, the first group of shooters were named to the 2004 Olympic Rifle Team at Fort Benning's Pool Range. Staff Sgt. Jason Parker (Omaha, Neb.) won a spot on his second Olympic Team.

After coming in fifth after the first day of competition in men's air, Parker knew he just needed to calm down and shoot the scores he knew he could shoot.

Parker, the world record holder in this event, settled into his own and soared past the competition for a first-place score of 1989.0 and the chance to go after that medal that had eluded him four years ago at the 2000 Olympics, where he placed only fractions of a point off of making the medal stand.

"That has been my motivation for the last four years," Parker said. "That kind of disappointment just doesn't go away.

"I mean someday, I'm sure I will look back and realize fifth place was a pretty good finish for my first Olympics, but not today, and not while I am still training for Athens. I really don't want to go home empty handed again."

Joining Parker in the fight for an Olympic medal will be his U.S. teammate Matt Emmons. Emmons was able to clinch an Olympic berth in this first men's event by remaining consistent through all three days of competition and finishing with a score of 1,985.0.

USAMU Soldiers win shooting matches

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public affairs Office

Soldiers of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have scored some major victories recently. Here are some of their results:

• Southern Nationals, Cummings, Ga., May 13 to 23 — USAMU service rifle shooter Staff Sgt. Norman L. Anderson won the overall championship followed by Sgt. 1st Class Lance S. Hopper in second place. Anderson won the Palma Category in the Long-Range Championships. Staff Sgt. Kyle A. Ward won the Service Division of the Long-Range Championships, followed by Sgt. 1st Class Grant L. Singley in third.

• Bray's Island Sporting Clays Competition, Bray's Island, S.C., May 22 — Shotgun shooter Master Sgt. Rodney G. Pinkston won the match.

• Big Ed's Memorial Match, Oak Ridge, Tenn., April 28 to May 3 — Service rifle shooter Staff Sgt. Kyle A. Ward won the Director's Match, followed by Staff Sgt. Tobie L. Tomlinson in second place and Staff Sgt. Timothy R. Manges in third.

Staff Sgt. Norman L. Anderson won the Individual Match, in which Sgt. 1st Class Lance S. Hopper took second place and Sgt. 1st Class Grant L. Singley third.

• International Shooting Sport Federation World Cup, Athens, Greece, April 25 and 26 — International rifle shooter Sgt. 1st Class Thomas A. Tamas won the Silver Medal in the Prone Rifle competition.

• Asheville 4800 Metric Prone, Asheville, N.C., April 24 and 25 — International rifle shooter Spc. Shane M. Barnhart won the match, followed by Spc. Trevor D. Gathman in second place; they both set nine new National Records in the Service-Rifle and Open Categories.

• Zone 4 Trap Championships, Cincinnati, Ohio, April 16 to 18 — Hadden won the Zone 4 Trap Championship.

507th paratroopers to relive D-Day jump into Normandy

Post CG, CSM to accompany troops to France

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

In the predawn hours of June 6, 1944, the paratroopers of the 82nd Airborne Division's 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment prepared to jump into Normandy and into history.

Now, in honor of the 60th anniversary of D-Day, paratroopers of 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry will again fill the skies over Normandy.

More than 165 cadre from the 507th, accompanied by Fort Benning commanding general Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley and Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso, left Lawson Army Air Field Thursday night bound for Cherbourg, France. Soldiers from the Ranger Training Brigade and the 75th Ranger Regiment went to support the jump.

They'll stay in Cherbourg one night before jumping onto the same drop zones that U.S. and allied Soldiers dropped onto 60 years ago and participate in ceremonies before returning to Fort Benning on Monday.

"It's a whirl," said 507th Command Sgt. Maj. Donovan Watts, "but we live for adrenaline."

> "It's all about history. We're tying the unit of today into the unit 60 years ago."
> Command Sgt. Maj. Donovan Watts
> 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry command sergeant major

He said they've been planning the trip for the past year.

The Soldiers making the trip are a cross section of the battalion, Watts said.

The trip fits right in with the 507th command team's goals, not only to graduate airborne students, but also enhance the cadre, he said. And one way to enhance the cadre is to have some sort of event with a historical tie-in.

"It's all about history," Watts said. "We're tying the unit of today into the unit 60 years ago."

He said Soldiers join the Army to travel and see different things.

"A lot of these Soldiers have never left the continent. This will be a big event for a lot of them," he said. "It will be a different atmosphere for them."

Army enacts stop loss

Army News Service

On Tuesday, the assistant secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs approved an Army decision to implement the active Army stop loss/stop movement policy.

This policy affects all units designated to deploy outside the U.S. to participate in Operation Iraqi Freedom and Operation Enduring Freedom operational missions in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Continuing personnel losses caused by routine rotational policies have the potential to adversely impact training, cohesion and stability in future OIF and OEF deploying units.

To ensure the Army's formations remain cohesive elements throughout their deployments, it is necessary to stop personnel losses from the deploying units until after they return to their permanent duty stations.

Preliminary analysis of gains and losses indicates that, without the stop loss, an Army division will require the reassignment of more than 4,000 Soldiers from other units to achieve a complete reset of the division and ensure a deployable strength of 100 percent.

Based on this information, the Army asked for and had approved the authority to change the active-duty and

Army policy to address sexual assault

Sgt. 1st Class Marcia Triggs
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — All offenses of sexual assault in the Army must be reported to the Criminal Investigation Command, and commanders can no longer resolve the complaints on their own, officials announced.

A task force spent 90 days conducting a detailed review of the Army's current policies and programs on sexual assault.

One of the findings was that, while all commanders had taken action against assailants accused of sexual assault, not all were going through the proper investigation channels, said Darlene Sullivan, the facilitator for the task force.

> "Commanders must create a command climate where victims feel comfortable reporting acts of sexual assault. Rape is one of the most unreported crimes nationwide."
> Darlene Sullivan
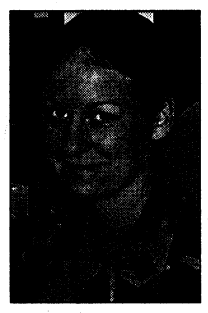
> Army sexual assault policy review task force facilitator

The task force was assembled from various Army organizations and began looking into how the Army addresses matters of sexual assault in February. Acting Secretary of the Army Les Brownlee authorized the task force.

The task force recommendations were approved by Brownlee, and were briefed to the House Armed Services Committee Thursday by Reginald J. Brown, the assistant secretary of the Army for Manpower and Reserve Affairs



There were nine shortfalls the task force noted in its 80-page report. One major finding pointed out there was no standard way of handling sexual assault cases, making it hard to collect data and keep track of what services had been

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE STORY

Just tell it like it really is

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

I'm on a mission. Call it Chicken Soup for the Soldier's Soul. Call it a Cup of Comfort for the Army family. Call it a reality check for an American public bombarded with negative messages about our troops.

In case you haven't noticed (and I'm not sure how you couldn't), Soldiers are not exactly winning the best name on the local or national prime time news networks these days.

From the Abu Ghraib prison scandal to the murders involving 3rd Brigade Soldiers, I see the good names of so many smeared by the actions of so few.

And I don't know about you, but I'm sick of it.

For every disturbing story of misconduct in our ranks splashing the headlines, I know there are at least a dozen stories of heroism and good deeds that are not being told.

Stories that paint the true picture of our Army's Soldiers: Decent, hard-working Americans, making daily sacrifices to serve their country.

(And in my mind, no matter what his or her motivation for joining the Army, every Soldier ends up making some sort of sacrifice.)

It's become obvious to me in the past six months or so that Soldiers' good works just don't seem worth telling to people who are more concerned with ratings and sales than telling an objective truth.

So it's up to us — that's right, you and me and anyone else with firsthand knowledge of what our troops are doing right.

Whether it's here at home or overseas, we here at The Bayonet want to know what little victories our Soldiers are accomplishing across the globe, and we want you to tell us.

Help fight the barrage of negative news and spread, instead, the inspiring stories of Soldiers making a difference in the lives of those around them.

Send a letter to the editor of The Bayonet detailing a Soldier's good works that have touched your life to fbbayonet@mindspring.com, fax it to 682-0095 or drop it off in Room 606, Infantry Hall.

I'll say goodbye tomorrow

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Friends come and friends go, such is the life of the military. Que sera sera. I'm usually quite adept at suffering separations. My modus operandi: I simply avoid goodbyes.

"You're leaving tomorrow? Let's say goodbye tomorrow, OK?" Everybody knows tomorrow never comes.

I've been at Fort Benning for five years, and I've said goodbye to many, many friends without ever really saying goodbye. Call me a wimp.

This time is different. Shannon is leaving.

Shannon and her family arrived at Fort Benning just about the same time we did. She's been my constant, my point of reference ever since.

Others came and went, but Shannon was always there — here.

And now her brood is headed for Kansas, with orders from Uncle Sam. Why else would anybody go to Kansas? (Not that I have anything against Kansas, mind you. All I really know about it I learned from The Wizard of Oz.) If Kansas has any redeeming qualities, Shannon will find them every one. That's the way she is.

From the get-go, Shannon and I were buddies. We went everywhere together. I'm a dreamer and Shannon's a schemer. I'd no sooner say, "I wonder if there are any blueberry patches ..." and she'd have the van packed with children — hers, mine and a spare — blueberry buckets, wet wipes, bottled water, bug spray, fix-a-flat, MREs, medical waivers, quinine, emergency flares and a compass. Shannon, single-handedly and spontaneously, makes a Boy Scout troop look ill prepared.

It's true The Bayonet owes Shannon a good deal of credit, though you never saw a by-line with her name. But so many of the Out&Abouts started out as a twinkle in Shannon's eye. She was always ready for an adventure.

Until that fateful, hateful day she got a job. A real job. A job other than the Siter and Secules family activity director. Nothing has been the same since. Now our adventures are restricted to rare weekends and holidays, and soon they'll be restricted to the occasional vacation visit, sporadic and frenzied, as such visits tend to be. So maybe Shannon's gainful employment served as a gentle transition between what was and what is to be.

Yeah, friends come and friends go, but friends like Shannon are few and far between. I'll miss her like crazy. I'll say goodbye tomorrow.

Stop loss — the loss of our troops, that is Americans understand that in an Army at war, there will be unavoidable losses. What they, and we, are unwilling to accept are losses from accidents, those deaths and injuries that are avoidable.

During our first year of operations in Iraq, 422 American Soldiers died; of these, more than 26 percent were non-combat accidents.

In the past 23 years, more than 7,500 Soldiers died in accidents, compared to fewer than 600 in combat. Last year's total accidental death rate was the highest in 10 years. More than 55 percent of these deaths involved private automobiles and motorcycles. Nearly all of them were preventable had the victims taken proper precautions or operated those vehicles in a safe manner.

The Department of the Army is implementing a new Safety Campaign to reduce this loss. The goal is to reduce preventable accidents by at least 50 percent by the end of fiscal 2005.

Our Soldiers are too valuable to the Army and their families to take any chances with their safety.

Each life saved, each serious injury avoided and each piece of equipment undamaged may be the deciding factor in a battle in the global war on terrorism.

To communicate the importance of this goal, the Army has produced the Our Army at War: Be Safe video.

This video is being shown on our Fort Benning Command channel and is being distributed to each MSC. Every Soldier must see this video before July 1. MSCs will report completion to Safety, 545-7900 or e-mail regis.beighley@benning.army.mil.

We must do all we can as leaders to ensure the safety of our Soldiers.

Embrace warrior ethos

Brownlee

Schoomaker

Never in recent memory have our Army values, The Soldier's Creed and our warrior ethos been more important for us to reflect upon than today. Our Army is serving our nation with great courage and honor during very dangerous times.

We enjoy great support and the confidence of the American people, whom we serve, and we are respected around the globe.

In view of current events, we must redouble our efforts, hold our heads high and drive on to accomplish our individual tasks and collective missions. Integrity is non-negotiable. Everyone has leadership responsibilities when it comes to the legal, moral and ethical. Discipline is doing what's right when no one is watching.

We are proud of you and our Army. Drive on!

LETTER

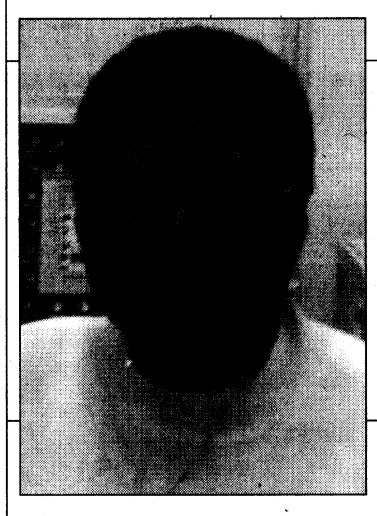
On-the-spot corrections require discipline

Correct me if I'm wrong, but nowhere in the revisions of Army Regulation 670-1 does it say that headbands or headphones are authorized for wear in the PT uniform. And nowhere in the reg does it say that Soldiers are authorized to run around with their shirts untucked in PT uniform.

And yet, lo and behold, what do I see when I walk into Briant Wells Fitness Center the other morning, but all of the above.

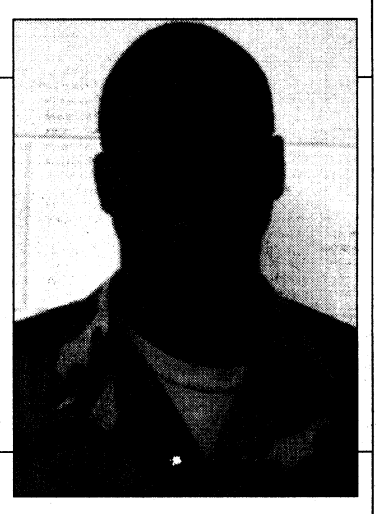
And even more aggravating — I actually waited to see if someone else in the gym would correct the guilty parties (presumably, there were other NCOs and officers in the gym), and no one said a word.

I may be a crusty, old infantryman, but I believe in standards — adhering to them and enforcing them.



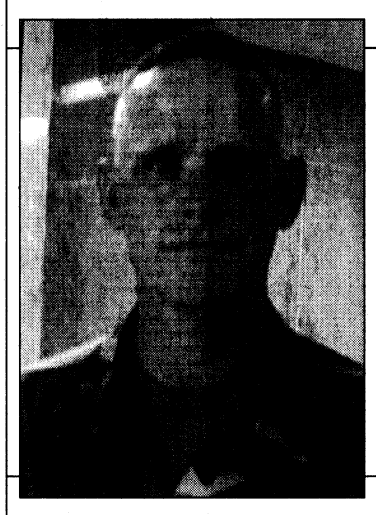
Remember, when you fail to make an on-the-spot correction, you have just set a new standard.

Let's all have the discipline to do the right thing and the intestinal fortitude to fix what's wrong.



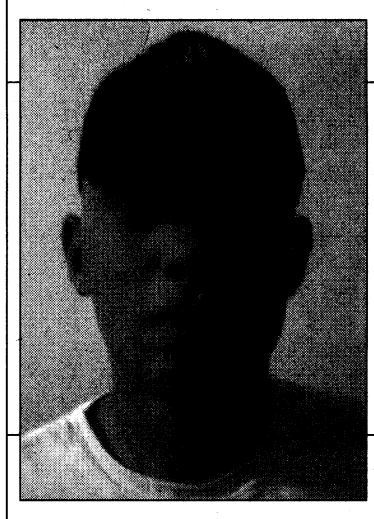
— Sgt. 1st Class Mike Ramirez
Fort Benning

VARIOUS VOICES

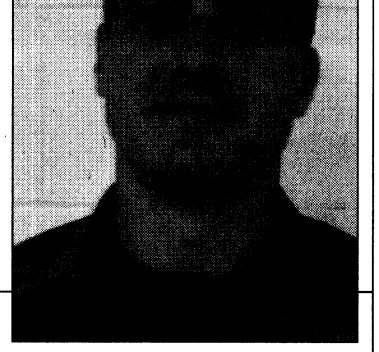


What good deeds have you seen Soldiers doing or been a part of?

Cora Wright, Secretary General Staff administration clerk — "A man fell in the parking lot and a group of Rangers jogging by in a formation came over to help. They gave him CPR and revived him."



Spc. Bromekus Roberts, 1st Battalion, 10th Field Artillery — "I'm currently in the Primary Leadership Development Course and there are a few foreign Soldiers in my class. We are all pitching to help them out with drill and ceremony and to understand different words."



1st Sgt. Larry Primeaux, Henry Caro NCO Academy — "At Burger King a few weeks ago, there was a private on crutches struggling with his tray. There were about 15 other people in there, but a sergeant sitting with his family was the only one who got up to help the Soldier. I went over there and thanked him. That was high speed."

Sgt. Maj. Joshua Simmons, U.S. Army Infantry Center — "There is an overwhelming participation in volunteering with youth groups and summer services which I am a part of that Soldiers participate in all the time. They don't receive anything for it, so you know it's from the heart."

Spc. Nate Keaton, 1st Bn., 15th Inf. Regt. — "I've seen a Kelley Hill Soldier taking time to help young kids learn to box at a recreation center in Columbus."

2nd Lt. Daniel Taylor, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "As part of a class project, we built an outdoor recreation area for an abused children's center."

Post honors fallen Soldiers

More than 300 people stood their ground in a downpour May 31 to pay tribute to the nation's veterans.

The holiday, originally called Decoration Day, was first observed in 1868 for the purpose of decorating the graves of the Confederate dead.

Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley said this year's observance was especially poignant as the community remembered Fort Benning Soldiers and a Columbus native killed overseas — those who were "carrying on the legacy."

"This is a personal Memorial Day for all of us," Freakley said. "Time to remember our fallen heroes and to resolve ourselves that America will continue to fight to preserve freedom and honor those before us."

A paratrooper boards a plane June 6, 1944, bound for the D-Day invasion at Normandy. Soldiers from the 507th will commemorate that historic day by jumping into Normandy this weekend.

507th: Marks D-Day anniversary

The 507th was activated in 1942 at Camp Toccoa, Ga., about 175 miles north of Fort Benning and arrived in Europe in December, 1943.

The 1944 jump did not go well. The paratroopers were dropped over a 20-mile area. Some landed in the Merderet River and drowned, entangled in their heavy equipment and wet parachutes.

The 507th fought on through the Battle of the Bulge and parachuted again for the forced crossing of the Rhine River.

During the successful Operation Varsity, Pfc. George J. Peters, G Company, 507th PIR, earned the Medal of Honor.

Peters and 10 others dropped within yards of an enemy machine gun position and were pinned down.

Armed only with his rifle and a few grenades, Peters charged the enemy position, drawing attention to himself and allowing his fellow Soldiers time to get out of their parachutes and get their equipment.

The fatally wounded Peters silenced the machine gun position with his grenades.

change the active-duty and Reserve Component unit stop loss programs for OIF and OEF units.

Prior to Operation Noble Eagle, OIF and OEF, the Army last used stop loss during Operation Desert Shield/Desert Storm in 1990 when President George H. Bush delegated stop loss authority to the Secretary of Defense.

By executive order, the secretary of Defense can delegate stop loss authority to the individual services.

Soldiers should contact their servicing personnel activity for more details or questions about how this policy will affect their units.

Soldiers should also be sure to check the latest military personnel messages regularly on the Personnel Command Web site at http://perscomnd04.army.mil/ milpermsgs.nsf.

Vets recall prepping for Normandy

Renita Foster
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Sixty years ago Tuesday, more than 250,000 troops in England anxiously awaited one of the most commemorated events in world history.

They waited in marshalling areas called "sausages," for their long, narrow shape. Units were sealed in, vehicles were parked close to hedges and every item connected to the invasion was camouflaged with wire netting.

Long road marches and combat maneuvers were replaced by marathon card games and baseball games. Libraries were available for reading and theaters were set up for showing movies with free popcorn. And months of speculation about an invasion was finally over.

"We had a pool going as to when and where we were headed," said Pete Rubino, a 29th Infantry Division veteran who is traveling to Normandy for the 60th Operation Overlord anniversary.

Joe Lennert, a 9th Air Force veteran, was placed in a coastal town completely encircled by barbed wire. He had no idea he was about to be a part of the greatest Allied invasion in history.

"It wasn't until I was four or five miles from the beach and saw flak from the German guns I realized this was it!" he said.

Loaded up and locked aboard cramped vessels, the endless ordeal of waiting began. Monotony was relieved by stretching out anywhere possible for naps, reading or writing letters as well as joining the never-ending poker and dice games. One imaginative group lowered the Landing Craft, Tank (LCT) assault ramp to the water's edge, affording the Soldiers a diving platform. Other conscientious GIs washed and strung their laundry between Sherman tanks.

The long waiting also meant plenty of time for just thinking. While waterproofing his weapon, Max Brudner, of the 186th Field Artillery, suffered the mounting anticipation of battle. His group of men were particularly close since they'd served together prior to the war.

"We lived closer than brothers in a lifetime," he said. "We trained, ate, slept and went to the latrine with each other. The only thing different this time would be the live ammunition coming our way."

Sal Mule, then a platoon sergeant with the 1st Inf. Div., indulged himself in a bottle of cognac he'd acquired.

"She and I were good friends," said Mule, who to this day refuses to say where he got the liquor.

Despite the overwhelming weight of all the gear he was required to carry, Nick Merlo made sure there was a special place for his good luck rosary.

"I never left that anywhere," declared Merlo, also a veteran of the 29th Inf. Div. So devout was Merlo, he opted to spend his time in the chapel instead of joining the card games. "That's where me and my rosary felt our best."

Late in the evening of June 4, Joe Lynch, an 82nd Airborne Division Glider trooper, was in the middle of a craps game when the announcement was made that it was time to go. The excessive weight of the duffel bag and musette bag made walking and climbing aboard the glider difficult. After Lynch found his seat he found he didn't want to think about anything.

"We didn't talk. We just waited," he said.

Autumn Spadaro

Pete Rubino stormed Omaha Beach on June 6, 1944. Rubino is going to Normandy for the 60th Operation Overlord anniversary.

Soldiers all over southern England were poised for Operation Overlord to commence when an outside factor nearly caused the undoing of intense months and years of detailed planning and training. Horrendous weather with reduced visibility and excessive winds forced a 24-hour postponement.

While some Soldiers welcomed another chance to study the sand table outlining the drop zones, others felt frustrated sweating out another day for the combat jump.

"I think there were as many different thoughts as there were paratroopers, but the common feeling was to get on with it," said O.B.Hill, 82nd Airborne Division.

Lynch doesn't remember exactly how long he was on board the glider, but he distinctly recalled an officer suddenly showing up, blowing a whistle and announcing, "Everything's off."

"We felt let down," said Lynch. "We were all psyched up to go, sitting in the gliders with our grand M-1s between our knees ready for action."

Mule's reaction to Operation Overlord's delay was one of nonchalance since he'd already been in the North Africa and Sicily invasions.

The cancellation of the invasion was something Rubino never knew. And he adamantly says he's thankful he didn't.

Anticipation began mounting once again on June 5. Mule handled it by reminding himself there was nothing he could do. His two previous invasions had been hard and this was just one more.

"You just keep wondering if this one is going to be your last," he said.

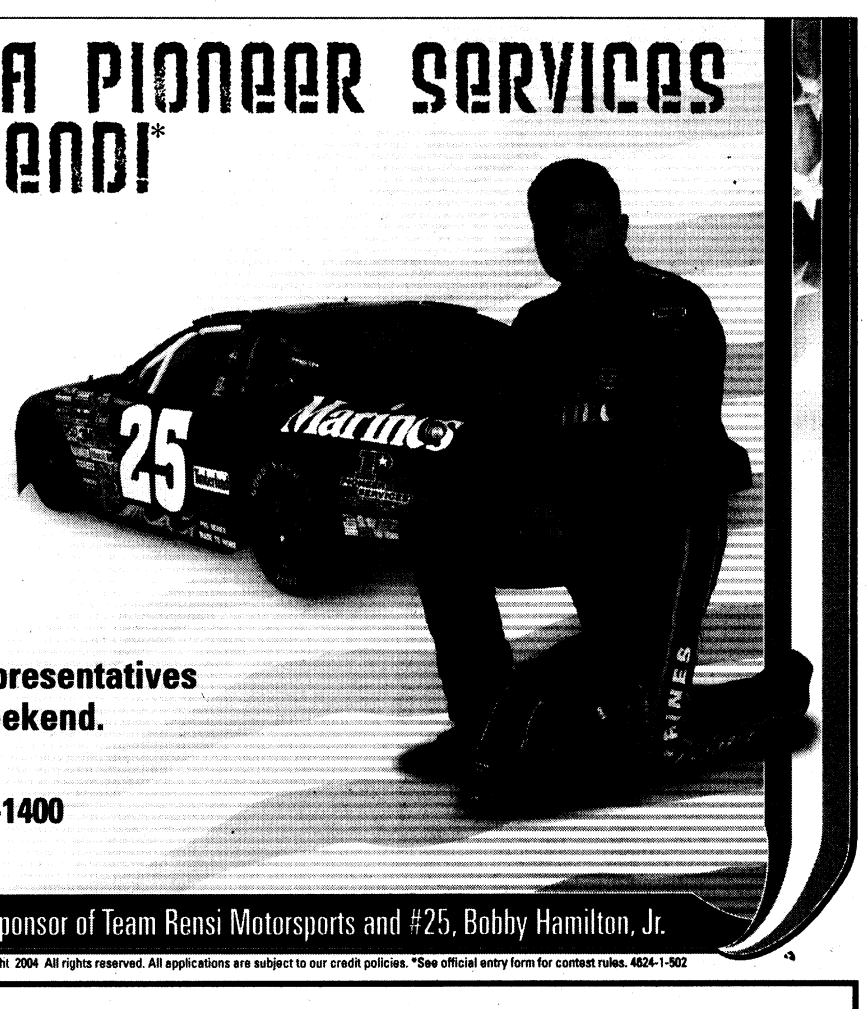
When the order came again, Lynch wondered if there would be another delay. But after boarding the glider in the late night hours of June 5 and feeling the aircraft ascend, he knew there wouldn't be.

When his LST began heading for Normandy, Merlo felt his fears intensify.

"I wasn't any John Wayne. And anyone who says he wasn't afraid is crazy," he said. "The only worry I've known that compares to leaving for the invasion is when I got married."

Lennert also prayed as his unit came closer to the beach. He told God he didn't mind giving his life for country, but if possible could the Lord please spare him and let him go home.

Brudner kept repeating the same prayer as his vessel headed for Omaha Beach — he didn't want to be an unknown Soldier or lose a limb.



"I just wanted to get home in one piece," he said.

Water-free urinals tested in Meloy Hall

More hygienic, less expensive reason for trial

Gina Cooper
Directorate of Public Works

Two water-free urinals were installed in the men's restroom on the third floor of Meloy Hall as part of a pilot project to incorporate sustainable products at the installation. In addition to the fact that water-free urinals reduce the overall consumption of water, they offer other benefits, as well.

Water-free urinals are considered more hygienic and cost effective, said Tom Tuten, sustainability management system program manager with the Directorate of Public Works.

Water-free urinals are more hygienic because they are touch-free, so the opportunity to spread bacteria is reduced, Tuten said.

And without water, bacteria doesn't proliferate as it does with traditional urinals.

The urinals "save us money, but more importantly, help us save water," said Russell Goodwin, who uses the water-free urinals.

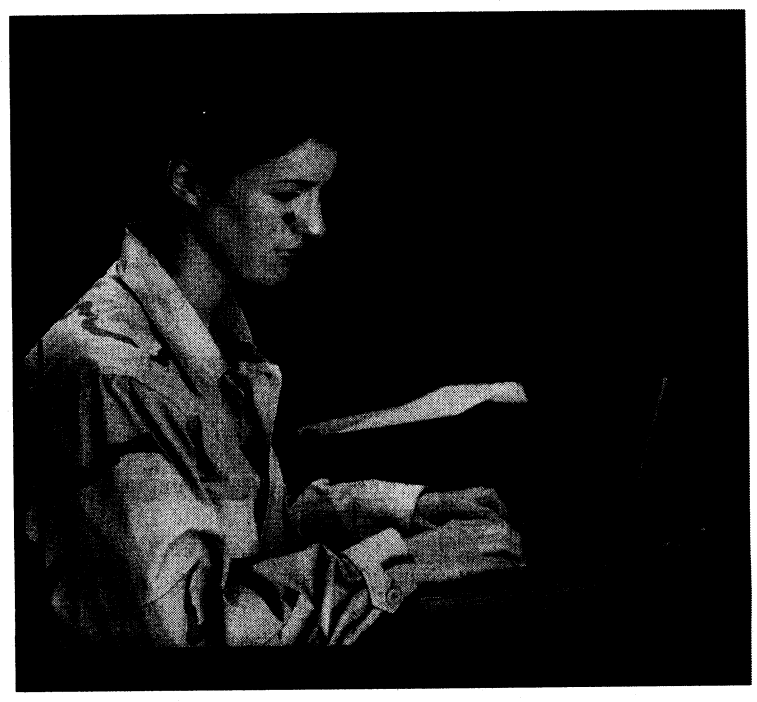
The water-free urinals provide cost savings in three areas: purchase price, operating costs and maintenance, Tuten said.

The urinals are less expensive because there is no flushing mechanism, no water and sewer charges, and costs associated with stuck or broken valves are eliminated. Another cost, the energy costs associated with transporting water to and from the urinals, is also eliminated.

"These urinals will help Fort Benning optimize its water consumption and maintenance schedules," said Ramiro Montes De Oca, an engineer with DPW. "At the user level, they will help bridge the physical and psychological gap between the existing, historically inefficient fixtures and new, more efficient technologies."

The environmental benefits of water-free urinals are important because Fort Benning's environmental policy commits to continual improvement of the installation's environmental performance, Tuten said.

Each water-free urinal is expected to save 40,000 gallons of fresh water per year, reducing water treatment requirements and the quantity of sewage being sent to treatment facilities.



Each water-free urinal is expected to save 40,000 gallons of fresh water per year, reducing water treatment requirements and the quantity of sewage being sent to treatment facilities.

The water-free urinal reduces energy consumption for the installation since no energy is used to treat the water that would have been used by traditional urinals.

Based on the effectiveness of the project, another unit will be installed, Tuten said, but a different brand will be used to compare performance.

Based on feedback from users, the installation will determine whether to expand the products into new construction projects.

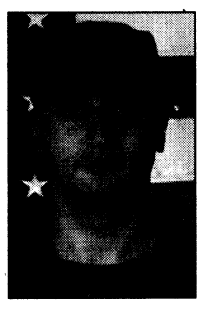
Arabic-Muslim troop sets out to prove love for country

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Some Soldiers join the Army for the college money, some Soldiers do it for the education, some do it to travel, and then there are those who do it just to be an American Soldier.

Pfc. Shady Hamad, E Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, joined the Army to send a message to all Americans, a message from Arabic people around the world who have been affected by the ongoing war against terrorism.



"Not every Arabic person is a terrorist," Hamad said. "I wish people would understand that we aren't all bad, we're good people, we're freedom loving people. Unfortunately a small portion of our people are misrepresenting us."

Hamad was born Oct. 30, 1978, in Alexandria, Egypt. His father is a surgeon, and his mother has a doctorate in International Economic Law and teaches at the American University in Cairo, Egypt.

He was raised in a well-educated Arabic-Muslim family and has always lived by three principles taught by his father — give respect to earn respect, give and forget and always see the best in others.

As a young man, he had the opportunity to travel, visiting more than 219 countries and learning to speak seven languages, including Arabic, French, English, Russian, Hebrew, Persian and Farsi.

He graduated high school from the Saint Marks School in Alexandria, Egypt, earned a bachelor's of science in business administration at the American University in Cairo, a bachelor's of science in computer science from the Arab Academy of Science and Technology and an associate's degree in computer networking from Quincy College in Boston.

Hamad

He arrived in the U.S. June 27, 1997, after applying for a green card in Egypt, where out of 40,000 applications, only 100 are chosen each year.

"The second I put my feet on this land I had rights," he said. "I told myself this is where I want to be the rest of my life."

He met his wife, Kali, in 1998 and married her in 2000. At 26, Hamad now owns two businesses, a limousine company and a scuba diving center in Boston, Mass.

He once made 10 times the paycheck he currently draws from the Army but does not regret his change of lifestyle.

"I joined the Army to serve the country whose way of living I believe in and to prove to the whole world that not every Arabic Muslim is a terrorist," he said.

"(Osama Bin Laden) didn't just hurt the American people after attacking the U.S. — he hurt every Arabic-Muslim person living in a foreign country," he said.

Hamad remembers the days after 9-11, when people would pull up to him at red lights and shout insults at him because he's Arabic. Both his businesses suffered — he went from 3,000 customers to about 700.

"An old lady at the supermarket saw me shopping and dropped her grocery basket and began yelling that I was (Osama Bin Laden)," Hamad said with a sad expression on his face. "All I could do was pick up her groceries and tell her I was sorry for what my people did to the people in her country."

Hamad's decision to join the Army came on Jan. 5.

"I was watching the news and saw how these Soldiers were being killed by close-minded people," he said. "They were trying to help a country and were being killed instead of thanked.

"I told my wife and she said I was taking it too personally. She thought I was being overly sensitive," Hamad said. "But I knew then, and I know now, that I can make a difference. I want everybody to know that all Arabs aren't bad people and that I'm willing to give my life for this country."

Kali is an American and already has two brothers in the Army.

"This was his decision, and I fully support him. It's a job somebody has to do," she said. "He feels very strongly about the cause and I'm very proud of him."

Hamad said he chose to be an infantryman that's where he can do the most good.

"I want to be on the battlefield where I can maybe help save lives (with) my knowledge," he said. "Every time I hear of Soldiers dying overseas, I can't help but feel I can make a difference. I speak the language, I know the culture, I would do more good as an infantryman than as anything else."

He told the recruiter in Boston that he wanted to be part of defending the safety of this country.

"If there is no country, there's no family, if there's no safety, there is no stability in the family. I want my family to be safe," he said.

Hamad said he knows the sorrow of many American families and friends who have lost a loved one or have had a loved one injured during the Iraqi war. His friend, Spc. Mike Cushina, his pen pal since his youth, was shot three times in the chest by an Iraqi informer.

"(The informant) was supposed to be helping them and he was the one who shot him," Hamad said.

Cushina was recently released from the hospital and is in stable condition.

"I feel bad for the young troops who have lost their lives and have died like heroes," Hamad said. "I would like to tell their families that they will always be in my heart. They went to another country to try to help it — they did not deserve to die."

Hamad tries to honor fallen Soldiers and their families by trying his best at being a Soldier.

"He took charge when it was needed, sometimes too much. He's a good Soldier and always gave 100 percent in everything that he did," said Staff Sgt. Francis Rodrigo, Hamad's drill sergeant. "There are few Soldiers who will give up a nice life to join the Army."

"During the final (field training exercise), he kept trying to help other Soldiers out when he was the one who was injured," Rodrigo said.

Hamad has severe stress fractures in his shins.

"He's a great Soldier; he has a big heart and is not a quitter," said Pvt. Jack Tinae, Hamad's battle buddy. "I would be in a foxhole with him any day."

Tinae said Hamad struggled the most during training when he was teased by other Soldiers for being Arabic.

"I was taught to never hate. For Muslims, Islam means to believe in peace or to be peaceful," Hamad said. "When other Soldiers told me things, all I could say was that when it came down to the battlefield, I would still watch their backs."

Hamad will graduate June 11 and will report to Korea, where he will be part of the 2nd Infantry Division that will deploy to Iraq.

"I'm not frightened. I can't wait to go out there and fight those people who have given my people a bad name," Hamad said.

"The way I see it, my life is a cheap price to pay for this nation's freedom. I'm an American Soldier, now and forever," he said.

NCO steals $11,810 from fellow 36th Engineers

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

A former NCO assigned to the 36th Engineer Group was found guilty of two counts of larceny during a court martial May 27.

Sgt. Timothy Smith, of the 104th Transportation Company, 13th Corps Support Battalion, stole $11,810 from two other NCOs in his unit while they were deployed.

Both victims provided Smith with special powers of attorney and access to their bank accounts and funds to attend to their personal matters in their absence.

His primary victim — a Soldier Smith had known for three years — entrusted him with a special power of attorney and asked him to pay his bills for him while he was deployed in support of Operation Iraqi Freedom last February. Smith had full access to his friend's bank accounts and checks. And he used them.

By the time his friend returned from war in July 2003, Smith had made two withdrawals and written 17 checks — a grand total of $9,660. Of that, not one dime went to pay his victim's bills.

Smith paid him back in part — coming up with $5,900 by September, $900 of which he stole from another deployed Soldier.

His second victim sent him a special power of attorney and a check, asking him to hire an attorney for him to handle some personal business while he was deployed.

Did you know?

There are two types of powers of attorney, general and special. A general power of attorney grants the empowered individual complete access to accounts and gives them the ability to spend the money as if it were theirs. A special power of attorney provides specific guidelines for access to accounts and funds.

The check was sent on the premise that Smith would look into the cost of legal services for the deployed Soldier and get back to him with a cost estimate. If it was too expensive, the Soldier stipulated, Smith would return the power of attorney and the check.

When the victim found out how much an attorney would cost, he told Smith not to hire him and to return the power of attorney and the check. Instead, Smith kept the check and cashed it, using it to help pay back his first victim.

By early October, Smith had again abused access to his first victim's accounts, cashing two more checks totalling $1,200.

On May 28, Smith was sentenced to confinement for 13 months, reduced to the grade of E-1, forfeit $795 pay per month for 13 months, pay a fine to the U.S. government of $8,850, serve an additional 11 months of confinement if the fine is not paid and be discharged from the Army with a bad conduct discharge.

"(Smith) literally robbed Peter to pay Paul," said Capt. Brian Chapuran, the trial counsel in Smith's general court martial, which concluded May 27.

Both of his victims filed Article 139 claims under the Uniform Code of Military Justice. The first victim has been repaid; the second's claim is being processed.

In the meantime, other Soldiers — especially those facing deployment in the coming months — can learn from this situation, Chapuran said.

Although this is an isolated incident — "This isn't a widespread occurrence," he said — Soldiers should be cautious when it comes to powers of attorney.

"Soldiers should make sure they really need a power of attorney," Chapuran said. "There are times when they deploy that they don't really need one."

And when in doubt, ask an attorney, he said.

If it's absolutely necessary, Soldiers should ensure they obtain the right type of power of attorney.

General powers of attorney grant the empowered individual complete access to accounts and give them the ability to spend the money as if it were theirs, whereas special powers of attorney provide specific guidelines for the empowered individual to access accounts and funds.

And while a general may be easier, Chapuran warned, a special power of attorney provides protection.

"This case really illustrates the benefit of a special power of attorney instead of a general," he said. "We may have had a tougher time (prosecuting Smith) if they had given him a general power of attorney. A special is limited — (Smith) was only supposed to use it to pay bills. So we were able to charge him with larceny."

But whatever type of power of attorney Soldiers opt for, they should always make sure they know and trust the individual they leave in charge of their assets.

Even then, "that's not a guarantee all the time," he said, pointing out Smith's lengthy relationship with his victims prior to the offense.

Assault: Policy to address sexual violence in Army rendered to victims.

There were 24 recommendations made to improve the system. One was to develop a sexual assault policy for inclusion in Army Regulation 600-20, Army Command Policy. The chief of personnel, Army G-1 is responsible for the overall sexual assault policy.

The policy will define sexual assault as alleged offenses of rape, forcible sodomy, assault with intent to commit rape or sodomy, indecent assault or an attempt to commit any of these offenses, Sullivan said. The definition is the same one given by the Department of Defense in its recent report "Care for Victims of Sexual Assault."

The roles and responsibilities of commanders from major command to the unit level will be addressed in the new policy and become a part of AR 600-20, said Lt. Col. John McPhaul of Army G-1.

"Commanders must create a command climate where victims feel comfortable reporting acts of sexual assault," Sullivan said. "Rape is one of the most unreported crimes nationwide."

Company commanders will no longer have the authority to sign the disciplinary paperwork for Soldiers accused of a sexual offense, when the cases don't go to court. The battalion commander's signature will be required, Sullivan said.

Commanders alone cannot round out a successful program to prevent sexual assault, according to the task force. Commanders alone cannot be the judge, juror and prosecutor.

In AR 600-20, one of the responsibilities commanders will have is to assign a unit victim advocate to support victims of sexual assault. The unit victim advocate will work to provide emotional support to victims while assisting them in the step-by-step processes involved, McPhaul said.

Other agencies whose roles will be outlined in the chapter will include CID, the provost marshal, the surgeon general, staff judge advocate and assistant chief of staff for Installation Management (Community and Family Support Center), McPhaul said.

"We are developing a mechanism that gets all the agencies in concert with each other by establishing a policy that deals with sexual assault not only in garrison but in a deployed setting as well," McPhaul said.

Training requirements will also be addressed in the regulation, McPhaul said. Within the next 60 to 90 days, new chapters will be added to the regulation and staffed with the field.

When looking for ways to improve the Army's policy, the task force sought advice from outside agencies, including Department of Veteran Affairs; National Organization of Victim Assistance; Rape, Abuse, and Incest National Network; The Miles Foundation, Navy, Coast Guard; and the University of Arizona and Purdue University in Indiana.

Both universities were given grants from the Department of Justice for their prevention programs, Sullivan said. The Soldiers who report the assaults and their assailants are in the same age category as the university students, she added.

Nearly 84 percent of alleged perpetrators were junior Soldiers, and 95 percent of the victims were in the rank of staff sergeant and below, according to the task force report.

CLOSER LOOK

A review of the Army's policies on sexual assault found:

- There was no standard way of handling sexual assault cases, making it hard to collect data and keep track of what services had been rendered to the victims.
- Nearly 84 percent of alleged perpetrators were junior Soldiers, and 95 percent of victims were staff sergeants or below.

The champion shooters of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit Service Rifle and Service Pistol teams are available to teach shooting techniques to soldiers on the M-4, M-16 and M-9 weapon systems.

To schedule rifle training, call Staff Sgt. Kyle Ward at 545-3250 or 545-5614.

To schedule pistol training, call Sgt. 1st Class Charles Gibbs at 545-7022 or 545-3893.

eArmyU Order of Merit list

A standard Order of Merit List must be used to enroll all eArmyU students. The use of the OML will ensure the same criteria will be used for the selection of all Soldiers enrolling in eArmyU throughout the Army.

The Army Education Center will continue to conduct the eArmyU briefing at 9:30 a.m. each Wednesday in Infantry Hall.

Only those Soldiers who are listed on the unit's OML will be eligible to attend the briefing.

The Soldier must contact the commander or first sergeant to be ranked and listed on the Unit Order of Merit List in order to attend the eArmyU briefing.

For more information, call 545-1774 or 545-4015.

Ranger Memorial stones

The Ranger Memorial Foundation, Inc. is an organization dedicated to honoring the U.S. Army Ranger and their sacrifices to our nation through a granite monument located on post.

The foundation also offers academic scholarships to eligible individuals and help to Ranger families in distress.

Funds for the services are raised through the sale of engraved granite stones on the Ranger walkway, individual and corporate donations and the Combined Federal Campaign. To purchase a stone, donate, or apply for a scholarship, log on to www.rangermemorial.org to download the forms.

Applications received now will be engraved in the summer of 2005.

eArmyU extension

All eArmyU soldier-students were granted an automatic six-month extension to meet the two year, 12-semester hour program milestones based on the current military readiness and mobilization requirements effective April 28.

If at the end of the six-month extension, soldiers need additional time as a result of their deployment or support requirements, they may request an additional six month extension from the Education Services Officer at the Army Education Center.

Soldiers with inactive fiber link should call the Army Education Center at 545-5725 for guidance.

A standard Order of Merit List must be used to enroll all eArmyU students. The use of the OML will ensure the same criteria will be used for the selection of all Soldiers enrolling in eArmyU throughout the Army.

The Army Education Center will continue to conduct the eArmyU briefing at 9:30 a.m. each Wednesday in Infantry Hall.

The Soldier must contact the commander or first sergeant to be ranked and listed on the Unit Order of Merit List in order to attend the eArmyU briefing.

Overseas voting process to improve for Soldiers

Jim Garamone
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON — Absentee ballots from service members overseas will move faster and with greater control for the 2004 elections, DoD and U.S. Postal Service officials said Wednesday.

Charles S. Abell, principal deputy undersecretary of defense for personnel and readiness, and Paul Vogel, the Postal Service's vice president for network operations management, discussed the changes made in the absentee balloting process for 2004.

"We've had a year of getting ready for the upcoming federal election, focusing on how we can help military personnel, their families and civilians overseas to exercise their right to vote," Abell said during a Pentagon interview.

"As we have looked at every sort of situation, problem and impediment and tried to resolve them, we have come to another resolution to help us move ballots and ballot request materials from the hand of the overseas Soldier, Sailor, Airman, Marine or family member to their county boards of elections."

Vogel said USPS has been working with the Military Postal Service Agency to improve the process.

Vogel said the DoD/USPS team has put together a process that will expedite the overseas absentee balloting mail flow and give greater accountability.

The Postal Service has no special program in place for service members voting absentee in the United States.

"The Postal Service does a great job within the United States," Abell said.

"Our problem has always been more with the overseas voters."

Essentially, the Postal Service will ask local postmasters to contact the officials in counties that are responsible for mailing ballots and to whom completed ballots are returned.

"Traditionally, 30 to 45 days in advance of the elections, the blank ballots will be mailed out from those counties," Vogel said.

The Postal Service is asking the county officials to hold out the military ballots.

Local postmasters will take those ballots and sort them for three different destinations: San Francisco for service members based around the Pacific Rim, New York for Europe, and the Middle East and Miami for Central and South America.

The balloting materials will go to those destinations via the Postal Service's Express Mail service, Vogel said.

Once at these military mail "gateways," Postal Service managers will log in the Express Mail pieces and sort them to the different military ZIP codes.

"All the balloting materiel will be sorted first," Vogel said.

They will go into specially marked mail trays to be handed over to the airlines.

Airline personnel will recognize the trays having voting materials and those trays will again receive priority.

In theater, military postal officials will ensure balloting materials are again given priority as it travels to the service member.

Once service members vote, the reverse process is the same — balloting materials receive priority and ballots are placed in specially marked trays.

One change, however, is that when ballots are received at the APO or FPO, mail clerks will put postal cancellation marks on the envelopes.

This gives an accurate measure of the date and time a ballot is received.

At the postal gateways, ballots will go back into the normal mail flow in the United States that allows for a three-day delivery, Vogel said.

But on Oct. 30, Postal officials will again segregate balloting materials and use express mail to send ballots back to county officials.

Election Day is Nov. 2, but these special-handling procedures will continue through Nov. 8, Vogel said.

However, he pointed out, some ballots received after Election Day may not be counted, because different jurisdictions have different voting requirements.

To be on the safe side, DoD and the Postal Service recommend service members and their families follow Federal Voting Assistance Program guidelines.

FVAP is designating the week of Sept. 6 as Get Out the Vote Week.

By then, "if service members haven't already requested their ballots, that's the week to do it," Abell said.

They are also designating the week beginning Oct. 11 as Overseas Voting Week.

"If you vote that week, your ballot should arrive back at your home ... before Election Day, which will qualify your ballot to be counted in every state, county and precinct," Abell said.

'Battle Boars' greet new commander

Spc. David Foley

Lt. Col. Wesley Gillman, hands the guidon of the 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, to Col. Steven Salazar, 3rd Brigade commander, during a change of command ceremony Wednesday at Essenbagger Field. The incoming commander of the 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt., is Lt. Col. Roger L. Cloutier.

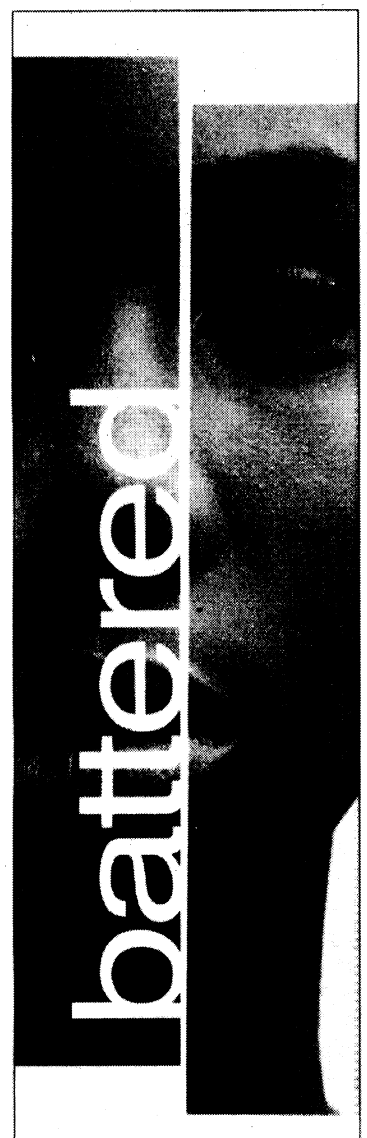
Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

Lt. Col. Wesley G. Gillman, commander of 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, bid a fond farewell to Kelley Hill Wednesday during a ceremony on Essenbagger Field as he handed over the reins to Lt. Col. Roger L. Cloutier.

"No words can express how I feel," Gillman said during the ceremony. "It would be an understatement to say it's been an honor to command these Soldiers in peacetime and in war."

Col. Steven Salazar, 3rd Brigade commander, said it was difficult saying goodbye to Gillman, a great leader who has done great things for the Soldiers in his command.

"(Gillman) has written an impressive chapter in this brigade's history and has done a magnificent job," Salazar said. "(He) and these Soldiers lived up to their motto... 'Our Country, Not Ourselves.'"



Even with the loss of a commander such as Gillman, Salazar said he knows the "Battle Boar" Soldiers will continue their success under Cloutier's command.

"Cloutier comes qualified," Salazar said. "He has proven his ability to train and deploy Soldiers ... I have great confidence in his abilities."

Cloutier, whose last assignment was as the Central Command desk officer and the secretary of the General Staff J7 U.S. Forces Command, Norfolk, Va., comes to Fort Benning with his wife, two sons and a daughter. Cloutier is a graduate of the Infantry Officer Basic and Advanced Courses; Air Assault, Airborne and Ranger Schools; Command and General Staff Officer Course; and the Joint and Combined War Fighter School Joint Forces Staff College.

His awards and decorations include the Defense Meritorious Service Medal, Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters and the Army Commendation Medal with four oak leaf clusters.

Fort Benning will celebrate the Army's 229th birthday from 3 to 4 p.m. June 14 in Marshall Auditorium Infantry Hall.

A helicopter lands for Soldiers to practice picking up cargo during the air assault course at Camp Atterbury, Ind.

ONE ARMY

Benning team trains air assault

Spc. Joe McFarren
Camp Atterbury

CAMP ATTERBURY, Ind. — Camp Atterbury became a mobilization station for the 1st Army to train National Guard and Reserve Soldiers in February 2003, preparing thousands of Soldiers for deployments and redeployments.

But in the midst of all the training, a different kind of training has captured the attention of many of the Soldiers here — air assault.

A mobile training team from the Army National Guard Warrior Training Center at Fort Benning, taught an air assault course May 12-22.

While air assault classes are typically taught at Fort Campbell, Ky., the WTC cadre will provide quality, accredited training for Guard and Reserve Soldiers at various sites three times this year. This is the same cadre that annually conduct eight pre-Ranger courses at Fort Benning.

"The most significant reason we were brought here (Atterbury) was for the basic cost effectiveness," said Sgt. 1st Class Greg Slater, the first sergeant for the WTC. "It's far more expensive to send 120 Soldiers to Fort Benning than to bring 16 of us up here."

The 10-day school is broken down intro three phases, each about three days long, Slater said.

Phase I consists primarily of combat assault, helicopter orientation, medical evacuation procedures, and pathfinder operations.

Pathfinder skills include preparing and clearing a helicopter landing zone and the 17 appropriate hand and arm signals to direct a helicopter landing.

During the second phase, the Soldiers learn proper sling loading procedures for helicopter pick-up.

The Soldiers are taught six types of sling loads and how to properly inspect them, said Master Sgt. Tom Siter, the senior infantry proponent for the ARNG at Fort Benning.

The third stage is rappelling techniques. From the first day of the phase, the Soldiers' time is spent on the rappel tower going up and down, learning belay and lock-in techniques, and how to rappel, Siter said.

They must also learn the proper way to tie a "hip rappel seat," the harness they are tied into, and be able to tie the harness in 90 seconds, he said.

"Each phase culminates with some sort of involvement with aircraft," Siter said.

"In Phase I, it is an orientation flight. Phase II is actual sling loading of the helicopter. And during the third phase, the Soldiers rappel out of the helicopter."

The Soldiers typically put in 12 to 13-hour days. Once they are released from training, they have study halls at night to prepare them for the tests.

"This course was incredibly challenging, both physically and mentally," said Staff Sgt. Norman A. Black, a student in the course.

"(The course) really provided a good simulation of the physical and mental balance we will have to maintain on the battlefield."

All the cadre for the school are Guardsmen serving on active duty at the WTC.

But the fact that it was Guardsmen training Guardsmen on a National Guard post was not a factor in the training, said Maj. Kevin Extine, assistant training officer for the Indiana National Guard.

"They have performed so professionally and so well I don't see the cadre as Guardsmen, I see them as Soldiers," Extine said. "But at the same time, with them being AGR, it fosters a good relationship to say that the Guard is capable of putting together a school of this caliber.

"We are an Army of One," he said. "The Guard has to be able to perform the same missions as active duty, so there is a need for us to use this school and there is a need for the Guard to get the opportunity to go to the school.

"It was great training for Soldiers that are going to need those skills on the battlefield."

THE WHOLE WORLD IS WATCHING

Soldiers learn importance of law of land warfare

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"The entire world is looking at we do."

That's the message Staff Sgt. Michael Jones, a drill sergeant with A Company, 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, gives to his Soldiers as they prepare to join America's fighting force.

And in light of the Abu Ghraib prison scandal, teaching American Soldiers the dos and don'ts of combat is more important than ever.

Jones and his fellow drill sergeants don't waste any time, either. Soldiers receive a one-hour introductory block of instruction on the principles and intent of the Geneva and Hague Conventions their first week in training.

"We teach the conventions to (help Soldiers) understand the principles of the law of land warfare," said Maj. Jay Pitz, brigade operations officer for the Infantry Training Brigade.

"We cover things like prohibiting unnecessary destruction of property, humane treatment of prisoners of war ... and the obligation to report violations of the law of war," he said.

But just what are the Geneva Conventions?

"The Geneva Conventions are part of international law — the law of war, also known as international humanitarian law," said Maj. Tony Raimondo, chief of the Human Rights and International Law Division at the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation.

There are four conventions, he said, and each addresses a separate group of people on the battlefield: Sick and wouded on land, sick and wounded at sea, prisoners of war and civilian noncombatants.

The rules outlined in the Geneva Convention are key, Raimondo said, because "even in an armed conflict, there are rules to follow. Not everything is allowed."

"You have to play within certain rules, rules created to minimize destruction," he said.

And the key to ensuring Soldiers follow these rules is training, he said.

"It's clear what happened at Abu Ghraib was a violation of international law and our domestic law," Raimondo said. "And in the investigation and testimonies (of witnesses in the case), a lack of training has consistently been identified as a factor in these occurrences ... Soldiers have to understand what the limitations are with the use of force," he said.

Something the drill sergeants on Sand Hill emphasize to their Soldiers during their first of week of training and re-enforce throughout the cycle, Jones said.

"I try to explain to them that just because other countries don't live by the same conventions, we're not going to change the way we (treat POWs)," he said.

Jones said abiding by the conventions also benefits American Soldiers, pointing to the Gulf War as an illustration.

"In the Gulf War, in my mind, the reason we had so many (enemy soldiers) give up was because they knew they would get fed and treated better (by American Soldiers) than in their own army," he said.

CLOSER LOOK

In the aftermath of the Abu Ghraib prison scandal, an emphasis has been placed on more efficient training for Soldiers on the laws of war, specifically the Geneva Conventions. The principles of the Geneva Conventions, accepted Aug. 12, 1949, are founded on the respect of basic human rights and dignity. The conventions provide several specifications including:

- Individuals who do not take part in hostilities, as well as individuals who cannot fight due to illness, injury, captivity or other reasons, are entitled to be respected and protected against the consequences of conflicting sides' military operations without an unfavorable distinction.
- Additional protocol extends to the battlefield, concerning individuals who are involved in a military conflict. This protocol obliges warring sides and combatants not to attack civilians or destroy civilian objects. It also obliges warring sides to guarantee that they will conduct military operations in compliance with generally accepted humanitarian law.

Finally!

That's the message veterans and widows of veterans wore on their lapels and hats Saturday at the ceremonial dedication of the World War II Memorial in Washington, D.C. Among them were 40 local residents, mostly veterans and their wives, each, it might be said, representing 10,000 of the 400,000 American Soldiers killed between 1941 and 1945.

With World War II veterans dying at a rate of more than 1,050 each day, the event comes "too late for too many," said Jim Rhodes, the local veteran who spearheaded the drive to raise funds for the bus trip, sponsored by AUSA and CB&T and others.

"It's about time," he said. "It's wonderful, it's beautiful, it's magnificent. But it should've been done 50 years ago."

The prevailing mood was one of celebration Saturday as more than 140,000 people converged on the axis of the National Mall, where the granite and bronze memorial is located between the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial. Military bands, swing dancers and singers of World War II-era songs entertained the crowd before the dedication started at 2 p.m. Some veterans took to the aisles to shake the dust off their jitterbugs, while others waited patiently in wheelchairs, tapping their knees to the beat or waving tiny flags when the

"Thank you to America's finest from Columbus, Georgia."

Dorothy Budacki, of Newport, R.I., who served with the WAVES in 1944, chats with a Soldier Saturday following the dedication ceremony.

George Ward, a World War II veteran from Columbus, attended the dedication ceremony with nearly 40 local residents. Their trip was sponsored by AUSA and CB&T.

On my honor

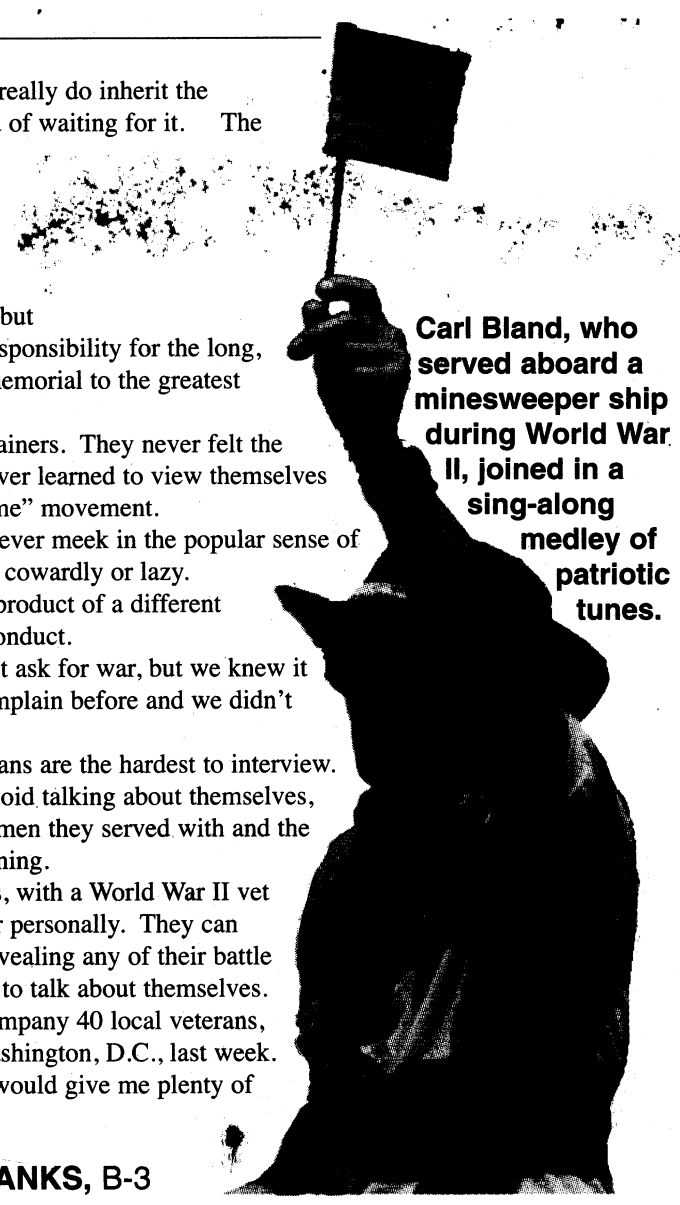
It's true, you know, the meek really do inherit the earth. But they may get tired of waiting for it. The veterans of World War II, the men and women who loved them and the moms and dads who prayed for them finally have a place of honor in the National Mall.

It surely was a long time coming, but it was their own fault, really. The responsibility for the long, long delay in the construction of a memorial to the greatest generation lies squarely in their lap.

The problem? They're not complainers. They never felt the need to demand their dues. They never learned to view themselves as victims. They never joined the "me" movement.

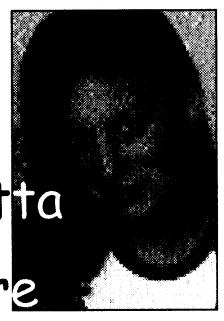
Oh, these men and women were never meek in the popular sense of the word — meek as in wimpy, soft, cowardly or lazy. Heavens no. They were simply the product of a different time and a different code of moral conduct.



As one widow told me, "We didn't ask for war, but we knew it was our duty to fight. We didn't complain before and we didn't complain after."

I've often said World War II veterans are the hardest to interview. With few exceptions, they tend to avoid talking about themselves, preferring to share stories about the men they served with and the women who kept the home fires burning.

I can talk for hours, literally hours, with a World War II vet and learn very little about him or her personally. They can relive the details of battle without revealing any of their battle scars. It's simply not in their nature to talk about themselves.



So I jumped at the chance to accompany 40 local veterans, wives and widows of veterans to Washington, D.C., last week. Surely 14 hours on a bus, one way, would give me plenty of

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Get out your hiking boots, folks; Saturday is National Hiking Day. No, I'm not making up a national holiday.

National Hiking Day is real and a great excuse to get off your keister, get outside and enjoy a cheap, healthy and aesthetically pleasing outing.

I know, I know — it's been rainy all week. By now, seasonal depression has probably eaten away your will to venture out of the house.

But as a native Pacific Northwesterner, I can tell you that, even if it calls for webbed feet or galoshes, a wet-weather adventure can be just as pleasurable as any sunny day in the park.

And lucky for you, rain or shine, there are plenty of places in the nearby area to take to the trail.

Check out Pine Mountain, which features nearly 40 miles of trails in the F.D. Roosevelt State Park roped off just for hikers.

Maintained year-round, trails are "user-friendly," marked with distance indicators and color-coded markers, outlined in a variety of distances and difficulty levels.

If you're looking for something short but sweet, check out the nature trails at Callaway Gardens.

Most trails in the gardens range from a half mile to a mile and a half and may be more family-friendly.

Callaway trails will take you through the Azalea Bowl, by the lake or through wildflowers.

Providence Canyon lies in wait in the opposite direction, but offers just as many spectacular views.

If you just can't tear yourself away from the tricommunity, don't fret.

The Riverwalk isn't exactly what I'd call a hike, but hey, it's close enough.

It's a 10-mile trek that stretches from Fort Benning to Columbus and offers a great view along the Chattahoochee River.

Whatever you do this weekend, get out in the open air and take advantage of the outdoors before the sweltering summer heat kicks in.

Post juvenile offenders face day in court

Benning's JMAA keeps petty crimes 'in house'

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It's not a program for kids who don't want to straighten out. Instead, the Juvenile Misconduct Administrative Action program is for "good kids who made a mistake," said Sharon Cox-Bevley a counselor at Fort Benning's Social Work Services and the longest-standing member of the board that oversees the program.

Kids like "Jane," who came to Fort Benning to live with her sister and her brother-in-law, a Soldier, after shifting from home to home among her extended family. The transition wasn't exactly a smooth one, and the girl ended up hitting her sister during an argument. But rather than charge her with assault and send her "downtown," Cox-Bevley said, JMAA allowed Fort Benning representatives to give her a second chance of sorts.

"This was a girl who came from very difficult family circumstances, and she had a bad attitude," Cox-Bevley recalled her first impression of the girl. "She thought she was all grown up and didn't see her sister as a parent (figure)."

But that mentality didn't stand up long in JMAA, a program that addresses juvenile delinquency on Fort Benning among military children 18 and younger.

JMAA gave Jane a new outlook, Cox-Bevley said, and the next time she saw her, "it was 'yes, ma'am, no, ma'am.'"

JMAA is a step-by-step process that "helps kids see the error of their ways and makes them not want to do it again," she said.

Once charged, offenders and their parents pay a visit to Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Fortson, garrison command sergeant major, for a briefing about the possible repercussions for their misconduct.

Then the board convenes — a panel that includes Fortson, Cox-Bevley, a Community Life NCO, the MP investigator in charge of the case, the post's school liaison officer and Fortson's special assistant, Spc. Eric Nettle.

During the hearings, which take place every two weeks, offenders and their parents watch video evidence of the delinquents' crimes when available, view a tape of a jail visit and the board members vote on an appropriate punishment, Nettle said. The standard punishment is 48 hours of community service, which is reduced or upgraded, depending on the severity of the crime.

Once they fulfill their community service sentences, they go on a prison tour — along with their parents — and get a glimpse of the path they could be headed for. The children also attend Cox-Bevley's quarterly Youth Awareness Seminar.

Handling juveniles "in house" keeps the youth offenders from going downtown into civilian courts, Nettle said.

"It's better to deal with it here, because we're not going to slam the book on them," he said, adding that JMAA can also serve as a wake-up call for parents. "It shows parents where they need to work at (with their children)."

Regardless of their home situation, many kids are just testing the limits, and don't necessarily deserve a lasting conviction, Cox-Bevley said.

"If they go downtown to the civilian juvenile court, they'll have a permanent juvenile record," she said. "Most of these kids are just trying their luck."

The board sees around 60 cases a year, the majority of which are petty theft, Cox-Bevley said, and the kids don't really comprehend how serious the consequences of their actions can be. And most often, she said, all it takes is one trip through JMAA to set them straight.

"I've seen very few kids come through a second time," said Cox-Bevley, who's been on the board since the late '90s. "I can count them on one hand."

Veterans: Celebrate memorial

number was patriotic.

After a "tail-tiring" 14-hour bus ride, Zereda Holland was content to wait in her chair near the stage where President Bush, Senator Bob Dole and actor Tom Hanks would soon address the crowd.

The 81-year-old Columbus resident served in the WAVES, Women Accepted for Volunteer Emergency Services, during the war. As a seaman first class, she was "simply a peon," filing paperwork and distributing mail at the Navy's Bureau of Personnel in Arlington, Va.

"We were right across the street from the (Arlington National) cemetery, so we used to go watch the funerals during our lunch break," said Holland, a Talladega, Ala., native who lived in WAVES Quarters K with other women like herself, single and over the age of 21, as the Navy required. Quarters K is now a parking lot, she said.

"Those are good memories. I liked it. I would've stayed (in), but back then, they only took women for the duration, you know."

Holland eventually returned to Alabama and married a Soldier whose career brought them to Columbus. This is home now, she said, but the trip to D.C. … well, it felt a lot like going home, too.

"We waited so long for this. I used to get aggravated, with all the Vietnam this and that. They got a wall, and we got nothing," she said. "Now I think it's better. The (memorial) is just beautiful. The ceremony was nice."

By and large, the ceremony was not a profoundly emotional experience, but it was satisfying, said Melba Miller, the widow of retired Sgt. 1st Class Robert Miller, who died little more than a decade ago, when plans for the memorial were still in their infancy.

"It's closure," said Miller, who "served" 22 years as an Army wife. "He was in World War II, twice in Guam and twice in Korea. I was always saying good-bye and never knowing when he'd be back. It never got easier. It's the hardest thing in the world to be an Army wife."

When Robert Miller died, it "was like he was just going away again — he'd be back some day," she said. "Coming here, it gave me closure. I can say he's gone and he's not coming back, but he won't be forgotten, ever, because this memorial is here."

The last time Lynn Knox saw Washington, D.C., the cherry trees were blooming. But he gave them little more than a passing glance as his troop train headed South, carrying him home from the war to the baby girl he'd never met.

It was that daughter, now 62, who encouraged Knox to make the return trip to D.C., a trip several of the veterans said their families discouraged.

"I'm just tickled to death to be here. I'm one of the lucky ones," said Knox, who crisscrossed Europe with the 852nd Aviation Engineers between 1942 and 1945. "Those were tough times. But in a lot of ways, those were wonderful times, the way we were. It was a different generation. Everybody was pulling together, and everybody wanted to go."

Apparently, that same spirit lives on in the hearts of the aging veterans, their wives and widows, who turned out by the tens of thousands — more than twice the number anticipated — to brave the heat, the long lines and security checks.

Two of the Columbus travelers were injured during the trip. One fell and required stitches but returned with the tour. The other was left with relatives in a D.C. hospital after suffering cuts and a concussion during a fall.

"I'm just glad we could make it," Rhodes said. "I had faith the Lord would get us here for (the ceremony). Now we're witnesses for our brothers and sisters who couldn't be here. That's our true legacy."

Thanks: For the memories

opportunity to get to know them. And I did.

They shared their stories, and we laughed and cried together. They shared their memories of a lifetime and treated me as a friend, rather than a reporter. It's not the memorial or the memorial dedication I'll remember so much as the time we shared.

Still, it didn't come easy.

"I'm telling you this for selfish reasons. I want somebody else to know," said one 79-year-old gentleman, as he whispered to me of a time more than 60 years ago, when, as a 17-year-old entrenched in a bloody battle, he looked to heaven as if it were home, and said, "I'm going to die today, Momma."

I'm so glad they have their memorial, and to the critics who feared its location between Lincoln and Washington might somehow mar the Mall's vista, I say the opposite is true. Aesthetically, the World War II Memorial completes the Mall. It belongs there as surely as the title of The Greatest Generation belongs to our World War II veterans.

And to my new old friends I say Thank You. You waited a lifetime for this day. I'll remember it for a lifetime.

Shortly before press time, I received word that one of my new friends died Wednesday. John Sanders, who served with the Marines in the Guadalcanal, was a local celebrity, of sorts. He was known as "the flag man," and he made it a point to attend homecomings and such with his flag-bedecked car. John was a colorful character with a quick wit. I'll remember him for his jokes and the gentle teasing.

Look for more about John in next week's paper.

Commissaries announce new savings program

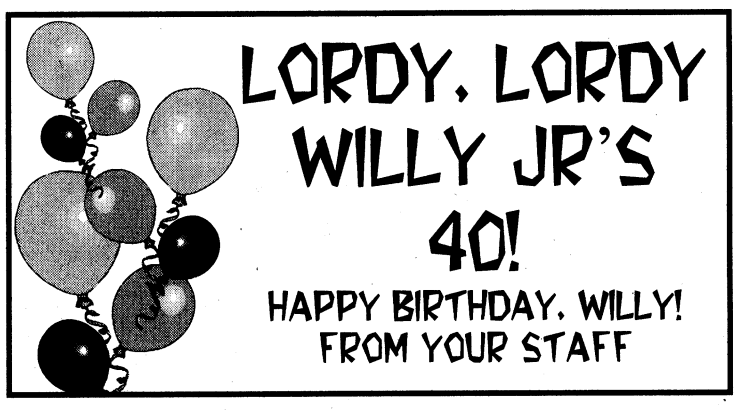
Bonnie Powell
Defense Commissary Agency

FORT LEE, Va. – Commissaries worldwide have launched a Savings You've Earned program to make sure customers know about the savings they've earned — the savings they deserve.

Ever stand in front of sale signs in the commissary and wonder, "Just what the heck is really on sale and how good of a deal is it anyway?" Wonder no more.

"Just look for the new signs of savings," said Defense Commissary Agency Director Maj. Gen. Michael P. Wiedemer. "We want all shoppers to be aware of their commissary savings of 30 percent or more, and we want them to know we recognize their service to this great country. Savings You've Earned shelf signs will make it easier for customers to see what's on sale — and what's the best deal."

Three new "signs of savings" are red, white and blue starbursts framing product prices.



"Every Day Savings" indicates better-than-average savings, or everyday low prices, and "Value Savings" indicate the lowest prices when compared to like items at the commissary or at commercial grocery stores.

"If you see a product with 'Extra Savings' on it —grab it," said DeCA Deputy Director Patrick B. Nixon. "Those are the best prices you'll see anywhere, anytime on name brand items. They're so great they are only available for a limited time and while quantities last."

The first new commissary sign program in nearly three years, Savings You've Earned features an awareness campaign including banners, posters and employee buttons as well as "shelf talkers" — Savings You've Earned images —posted in all 274 commissaries worldwide. Commercial circulars, magazines and coupon fliers distributed in commissaries and through installation newspapers have also joined in to contribute public service ads announcing the program.

"We are confident the new program will be well received by shoppers," said DeCA's Chief Operating Officer Scott Simpson.

"It delivers the message to all our active duty, Guard and Reserve, and retiree families that commissary savings of 30 percent or more is not only 'savings you deserve,' but Savings You've Earned."

Benning teachers 'there from beginning'

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

"It's not everyone who has a doorknob hanging on their wall," Jane O'Hern said proudly, and she doesn't mind the distinction.

"Hanging it up" after 45 years at Loyd Elementary School, her fellow teachers and administrators figured she deserved something special to take with her. So they made a plaque with the doorknob and key to Room 101, the classroom where she's taught first grade since 1959.

Meanwhile, across post, Dexter Elementary School's gifted education teacher, Marjorie Brasfield, received a unique retirement gift of a different sort last week — a call from a former student.

She remembered the boy from her fourth-grade class years ago, and now he was calling to tell her he had just graduated from Yale University with a full scholarship to Georgetown University — partly thanks to Brasfield's long-time mantra: "I can."

Brasfield

It was one of the most rewarding moments of Brasfield's 34 years at Dexter.

In a place where people come and go, O'Hern and Brasfield have remained steadfast constants in their respective realms, but both women agree, "It's time to move on."

Of course, that doesn't necessarily mean O'Hern is ready to go. Dabbing tears from her eyes Wednesday afternoon — the last day of school on Fort Benning — she shook her head and said, "It's very bittersweet."

She'll do her best to enjoy her retirement — "I have several friends who've already told me they're going to be my travel agents, that they're going to keep me so busy I won't miss it" — but she's already been instructed to come back and volunteer, she said laughing.

And you'll probably catch her doing just that. It won't be easy to stay away.

"I'm just going to miss this family — the Loyd family — and the children," she said.

Especially the children.

"The most rewarding thing is to see and measure their progress from August to June," O'Hern said. "They're like sponges — they just want to know everything about everything, and most of them, you only have to tell once."

That's something Brasfield has taken pleasure in over the years, too.

"I loved watching the children grow," said Brasfield, who's taught second through sixth grade and gifted education. "That look when they discover that they know it ... just the joy of learning."

And Brasfield's never been one to limit her teaching to the course curriculum. Scattered throughout the room are various signs and clippings with important life lessons: "Nobody can make you feel inferior without your permission." Eleanor Roosevelt

O'Hern

"It's a myth that other people can make you angry." Dr. George Panos.

"These are hard lessons to learn," Brasfield said, "but so important for them to understand."

Packing decades of "junk" into boxes throughout the week, both women said it's hard to believe "the time has come."

"I really expected to be here forever," O'Hern said. "It just went by so quick. For children, the years go by at such a slow pace. But for adults ... it just sneaks up on you."

Not that it's ever really over. The children these women have educated and inspired throughout the years will keep their teachings alive.

O'Hern can be sure of that — "I have students who come back to visit — it's gratifying that they remember you and want to come back and see you. And they remember the oddest things."

For instance, the clawfoot bathtub O'Hern moved into her classroom and converted into a bookworm's safe haven, complete with comfy pillows.

In Brasfield's classroom, it was the "eye cans" — aluminum cans turned into pencil holders, decorated with picture cut-outs of eyes and the words "I can."

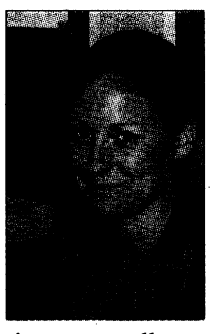
Whatever their methods, both O'Hern and Brasfield have left their marks in their respective schools.

"I just appreciate the fact that I was able to touch a few lives," O'Hern said.

All I ever needed to know, I learned in elementary school

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Roaming the halls of the post's elementary schools this year brought back a few fond memories. The smell when I walked in the door — glue and construction paper and crayons. And the people ... how do you put it into words? They just seem so happy, so in love with what they're doing.



It's just the way I remember it ... back when I was a Clarkmoore Cougar in Fort Lewis, Wash.

I never could have guessed how much my days there would impact me, how much those teachers would inspire me in the future — so much so that one day, I plan to become an early education teacher.

But all these years later, I still remember their names and faces and valuable lessons — well gifts, really — I still carry with me today.

Mrs. Bice, my second-grade teacher, wasn't the friendliest woman. My mother has a horror story or two to tell about her. But that's OK. Her husband more than made up for her nasty attitude.

Mr. Bice was blind — and proud to share it. He and his seeing-eye dog were frequent visitors in our classroom, where he taught us all about reading Braille and using a walking stick to "see" and learning to use your other senses to explore the world.

Mr. Bice wasn't one to wallow in self-pity. Instead, he rejoiced in his "different ability" and the chance to open young minds.

The next school year, I was lucky enough to land in Mrs. Smith's third-grade class, where I learned to love everything about, well, learning.

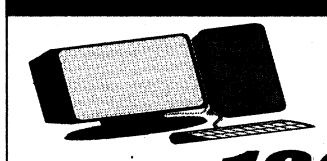
Mrs. Smith had a passion for what she did. She loved children, and she loved inspiring them not just to learn, but to enjoy learning.

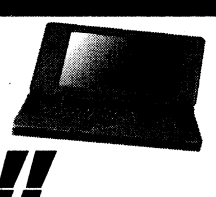
A Dexter teacher told me the other day that one of the most rewarding things about being a teacher is just "that look" children get when something finally clicks and they begin to understand whatever it is they're trying to learn.

Looking back, I recognize "that look," because Mrs. Smith wore it right along with me every time it all fell into place in my struggling little mind.

And fourth grade ... that was where I found a great passion for the two things that still light me up today — reading and writing.

Mr. Endicott was what some of you might call a tree-hugger. He wore shaggy hair and a full beard, and he always sported a T-shirt with an environmentally conscious message and jeans with paint spatters. He taught us about the three sacred Rs – reduce, reuse, recycle – and took us on "nature walks."





And then he introduced us to the likes of Roald Dahl. I was already an avid reader by that time, but Mr. Endicott's love of literature sparked a flame in me.

We were halfway through James and the Giant Peach when Dahl died, and I swear I'll never forget it. Mr. Endicott sat down in the middle of our reading circle and actually cried as he shared the sad news. To lose such a wonderful author — an author who drew so many children to reading with enchanting, wickedly imaginative stories — was a tragedy to him.

That's how much he loved literature. And let me tell you, it was contagious — not one of us left his classroom without the "reading bug."

So thank you. Thank you to Mr. Bice and Mrs. Smith and Mr. Endicott — three teachers who changed my life before it ever really began.

Passion, time necessity in marriage

Chaplain (Capt.) Raymond E. Folsom
1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment

Passion is a wonderful word. With passion, there is a sense of excitement, dedication, romance and a zeal for life. It is a word that you can apply to just about anything.

You can have passion for a person, justice, shopping, an idea, for your job, a hobby or life itself.

When you are passionate about someone or something, you are excited.

Passion is the sugar in your tea and or the gas in your car. Passion in your marriage is as important as air, water and food to live. Passion is what keeps your marriage alive and exciting.

To keep passion in your marriage, your spouse must be the center of attention — you know, the way he or she was when you first met. I find developing a special dating life helps keep things hot.

REFLECTIONS

There are several key elements for developing a passionate dating life.

First, listen — pay attention to your spouse's dreams, likes or dislikes in detail. Write them down, so you do not forget.

If there are any questions, do not be afraid to ask.

Secondly, learn — talk to other people and learn from their experiences.

The wise person can learn from others. Know what works and what does not work.

Third, be creative.

Take time to create your own dates. Work through the date from the beginning to the end. You could also take ideas of others and adapt them to your own style or situation.

There is nothing wrong with adapting events of others and making them yours. Some people are good at inviting ideas and others at adapting.

Several months ago, I took my wife to Cancun, Mexico. I arranged for flowers in the room with an "I love you" card. I also made arrangements for dance classes.

The best part was it was a surprise. She did not have a clue until we got to the airport. I planned it for months, and we had a great time.

We needed that time together because of the demands of the Army for our time.

I am sure you are in the same situation. Take time with your spouse.

Passion in a marriage is necessary and it has great pay offs.

Four wise tips can make love LAST

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

June is the month when we have to put a revolving door on the entrance to the chapel — it's the month of brides, grooms and weddings.

Now every wedding has it's own story. I could tell you about the one I did in Panama for a Soldier when we waited two hours and 15 minutes for his beloved bride to show up (the 100-degree heat wasn't the only thing that had him sweating!) Or I could tell you about the Marine who did a magnificent face-plant into the front pew while still at the position of attention (or like first sergeant says at pass and review, "The secret is to keep your knees bent a little.") Or I could tell you about the outdoor wedding I did on a ranch in Washington state. The ceremony was interrupted by a dog ... well, I'm not sure I could tell you about that one.

At any rate, the bride, the groom and a host of others typically make tons of preparation for the big day. That's great. However, let me toss out the novel idea that it's probably at least as important to prepare for the marriage as it is for the wedding.

Hawkins

How do you do that in those first days together? Well, here's some advice from a 20-year-veteran named Pieter VanWaarde from Columbia, Mo. He likens building a marriage to designing the house of your dreams. It's all about the preparation and the foundation. The more work done early on, the better the home. You need to lay four cornerstones to build a marriage relationship that will LAST.

Loving communication — Loving communication is contingent on a couple understanding that what seems natural and easy before marriage will require consistent effort after the wedding day. Couples must go into marriage with a plan for staying connected.

Daily talk times, weekly date nights and improving listening skills should be established as practices early in the relationship.

Agreeing spiritually — Everything that's important in life is connected to spiritual values and morals. It's irrational for husbands and wives to expect to build a deeply satisfying, enduring marriage without drinking from the same spiritual fountain.

Staying responsible financially — So many young couples are drawn recklessly into the materialistic trap of our culture. Newly married couples assume that their lifestyle at ages 25 to 30 should mirror what their parents enjoyed at the ages of 45 to 50.

Taking sex seriously — Sex is designed to be a tremendous blessing within the context of marriage. Outside that context, it can be destructive.

Sex is good. It was God's idea. Sexual satisfaction in marriage is often dependent on this truth. If you or your spouse feel it's a dirty or inappropriate act, there will be little enjoyment.

Patrons pumped about workout

Maj. Alberto Rivera, a student in the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation's Command and General Staff Officer Course, works out daily at Briant Wells Fitness Center.

Fitness center improves quality of life

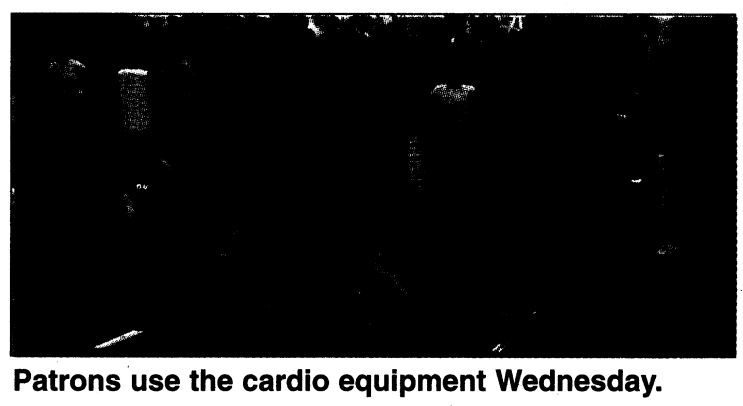
Sgt. 1st Class Luis Rodriguez works out a Briant Wells Fitness Center Wednesday morning. Rodriguez, formerly with the 498th Air Ambulance Company and now stationed in Korea, is at Fort Benning visiting his wife and three daughters. When stationed here, Rodriguez mostly used the Audie Murphy Gym to work out, but he likes the improvements made to Briant Wells Fitness Center.

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

With Phase II of a three phase renovation plan complete, both the employees and patrons of the Briant Wells Fitness Center are enjoying the improvements.

"On busy days, we have seen more than a thousand patrons using the facility," said Joanne Neyland, the fitness center's manager.

Before the renovations, a good day was when about 200 people came in, she said.



Maria Azcui, a recreation assistant at Briant Wells, said the patrons really seem to enjoy the atmosphere, which creates a better workout.

Maj. Alberto Riveria, a student in the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation Command and General Staff Officer Course, agreed and said he has spent a lot of time at the fitness center.

Riveria said he does his morning PT there, comes over at lunch to finish his upper body work out and dedicates the evenings to a cardio workout.

And on Tuesday and Thursday nights, Riveria said he tries to swim for 30 minutes.

"When you are in class, it's one of the few times a Soldier has the time to get in shape," Riveria said.

Patrons use the cardio equipment Wednesday.

This fitness center shows how the Army cares for the Soldiers' quality of life, Riveria said.

Aida Echevarria has been on post for a month and spends five days a week at the fitness center.

"It's close to home and I can walk over," she said. Echevarria alternates her cardio workout by using the treadmill one day and the elliptical machine the other. Her workout concludes with an hour on the weights.

Phase I of the renovations involved the new equipment, Neyland said, Phase II was finishing the aerobics area, replacing the sauna and improving the locker rooms. Phase III of the renovations include replacing the windows, putting in ceiling fans and painting the ceiling.

Khristi Miller, who's lived on Fort Benning for three years, uses the fitness center five to six days a week.

"The aerobics are good, the machines great," said the former YMCA employee.

Azcui said the spinning class is awesome, the instructor plays great music, very diverse — pop, merengue and salsa, and uses bands for resistance; it's a great cardio workout.

A former 498th Air Ambulance Soldier who is here mid-tour from Korea said he likes the changes to Briant Wells.

"I don't play basketball, so I don't miss the court," Sgt. 1st Class Luis Rodriguez said. "This is a great place to work out."

Briant Wells Fitness Center is open 5:30 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Friday; 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday; and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on holidays.

Nemechek races with flag patch for Memorial Day

NASCAR pays tribute to Soldiers

Spc. Lorie Jewell
Army News Service

CONCORD, N.C. — Flying around a racetrack at speeds pushing 200 miles per hour, NASCAR driver Joe Nemechek paid tribute to fallen Soldiers and those still serving.

On the dash of Nemechek's Army-sponsored 01 Chevrolet was an American flag patch, placed there by Sgt. 1st Class Mark Mounce of the U.S. Army's Accessions Command minutes before the start of NASCAR's Coca-Cola 600 race at the Lowe's Motor Speedway Sunday. Nemechek finished the race in 14th place, while Jimmy Johnson took first.

Nemechek said it was "cool" to drive with the patch, especially for the Memorial Day race. Riding shotgun was a G.I. Joe action figure dressed in desert camouflage, strapped into the passenger seat.

"Anytime we can do something to honor Soldiers, I definitely want to be a part of it," Nemechek said.

In a pre-race ceremony on the main stage of the track, Special Forces Soldier Capt. Doug Legan handed the patch he wore while serving in Iraq to Mounce, who quick-marched across the infield to the racecar. After saluting Accessions Commander Lt. Gen. Dennis Cavin, who stood at attention at the rear of the car, Mounce reached in through the passenger window and fastened the Velcro-backed patch to the dash.

"It's just fitting that Joe carry this around the track for Memorial Day," Cavin said.

The hood of the black-and-gold Army racecar now features the Time Magazine cover naming the American Soldier as its Person of the Year. Just before the race started, Cavin gave the hood a quick polish while Nemechek's mother who captured the moment with her camera.

Spc. Lorie Jewell

The Army-sponsored 01 Chevrolet driven by Joe Nemechek in the NASCAR Coca-Cola 600 race.

NASCAR and Coca-Cola celebrated the race's tie to Memorial Day by featuring the military, the Army especially, in activities leading up to the moment the drivers peeled out of the pit area to start the 600-mile race.

The 82nd Airborne Chorus sang, the Golden Knights Skydive Team jumped into the infield, and Soldiers with the 3rd Special Forces Group from Fort Bragg, N.C., fast roped to the track from Blackhawk helicopters and set up a perimeter for the arrival of a Blackhawk carrying country music singer John Michael Montgomery.

Montgomery, dressed in desert camouflage, performed his hit song Letters From Home with Soldiers behind him.

Maj. Gen. Charles Swannack Jr., former commander of the 82nd Airborne Division, greeted the crowd of 100,000-plus as grand marshal of the race, drawing thunderous applause as he paid tribute to those "who have made the ultimate sacrifice for you and I" to enjoy the freedoms of a democratic society.

Swannack deferred the honor of starting the race to a group of Soldiers from the 1st Armored Cavalry Division currently serving in Iraq. A video of the Soldiers issuing the traditional command, "Gentlemen, start your engines," was broadcast on giant screens.

Soldiers involved in race activities were impressed and grateful with the lengths organizers went to in recognizing Memorial Day and the military.

"It's pretty surreal," said Staff Sgt. David Hughes, a member of the Stryker crew. "We've gotten a lot of thank-yous from everyone. It's nice to know people believe in what we're doing."

Staff Sgt. Matthew Brandt, of the 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment Rifle Team, first experienced the patriotism of a NASCAR crowd last year after returning from Afghanistan. The patriotism hasn't diminished one bit, he said.

"For Soldiers who love NASCAR, this is an awesome experience," Brandt said. "You just can't beat it. Everyone keeps saying they appreciate what we do, but we want them to know we appreci- everything they do for

Golf tournament — The community is invited to participate in the Kenneth Walker Memorial Golf Tournament, a regional event intended to promote unity and raise scholarship funds for children whose mothers or fathers have passed away.

The tournament will be held Sept. 2 at the Bull Creek Golf Course, 7333 Lynch Road in Midland, Ga., just off Highway 80 (the North Bypass).

For more information, call Jim O'Donnell at 644-2066 or 569-5057.

Par for a Purpose — The golf tournament Par for a Purpose, benefiting the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women, will be June 17 at the Woodland Hills Golf Course.

Tee times are 8:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. Cost is $50 per golfer and $200 for a four-person best ball scramble.

Lunch will be provided, along with prizes for first-, second- and third-place teams. There will also be door prizes and mulligans for $5.

For more information, call 225-4101.

Children's fishing — The Georgia Agricultural Exposition Authority invites groups of children (minimum of 10 per group) to fish at the Georgia National Fairgrounds and Agricenter during June, National Fishing Month. One of the Agricenter's lakes, which has been stocked with catfish, will be available at no charge on a reservation-only basis.

Fishing is limited to any three-hour period between 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday. To schedule a trip, call (478) 987-3247.

Chess tournaments — Players of all ages and skills are invited to the Chattahoochee Valley Scholastic Chess League Third Thursday Chess Tournaments at the Columbus Museum.

The tournament rounds begin at 6, 6:45 and 7:30 p.m. The museum is located at 1251 Wynnton Road. Admission is free. For more information, call 649-0713.

Benning to celebrate 229th Army birthday

Youngest, oldest Soldier to cut birthday cake

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

Monday marks the 229th birthday of the U.S. Army.

Fort Benning will celebrate from 3 to 4 p.m. Monday in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall.

The youngest and oldest Soldiers present will cut the birthday cake, and the Infantry Band will perform. Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin C. Freakley will be the guest speaker.

The celebration is open to all, and the uniform is BDUs.

The U.S. Army was founded June 14, 1775, when the Continental Congress authorized enlistment of rifleman to serve the United Colonies for one year. They were known as the infantry.

Congress adopted "the American continental army" after reaching a consensus in The Committee of the Whole. The journal entries for that day are scarce because of a desire for secrecy, but the record indicates that Congress undertook to raise 10 companies of riflemen, approved an enlistment form for them, and appointed a committee to draft rules and regulations for the government of the Army.

The first companies were out of New England and New York.

Congress extended military participation by allocating six companies to Pennsylvania, two to Maryland and two to Virginia.

Each company had a captain, three lieutenants, four sergeants, four corporals, a drummer or horn player and 68 privates.

The enlistment period was one year.

National Day of Mourning

President George W. Bush signed an executive order closing federal offices today in remembrance of President Ronald Reagan, who died Saturday at the age of 93 in his Los Angeles home.

There will be a remembrance ceremony honoring Reagan at 10:30 a.m. today in Infantry Hall's Marshall Auditorium.

Chaplain (Col.) Joel W. Cocklin, Fort Benning's chief of chaplains, will conduct the ceremony with Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, giving the remarks.

Paratroopers return from D-Day jump

Tech. Sgt. Wayne Clark

Air Force Master Sgt. Gary Patterson, an Airborne School instructor with 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, checks the "Iron Mike" drop zone in Normandy during the re-enactment of the D-Day parachute drop Saturday. This year marks D-Day's 60th anniversary.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

"It will come fast and furious and before you know it, we'll be back … " Lt. Col. Aidis Zunde told the paratroopers awaiting their departure to France at Lawson Army Airfield.

Zunde, battalion commander of 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, along with 160 Soldiers from his battalion and paratroopers from the Ranger Training Brigade and 11th Infantry Regiment, traveled to Normandy last week, where they participated in the 60th anniversary of the D-Day invasion.

"Almost 60 years ago, on the night of June 5, 1944, the 507th Parachute Infantry Regiment boarded 117 C-47 aircraft. In the early hours of June 6, scattered by clouds and buffeted by flak, they jumped out over Normandy," he said. "During that day and the ones that immediately followed, the paratroopers of the 507th became the stuff of instant legend. You know the story … most of you have seen the movie … Now for the first time in 60 years, the 507th is going back!"

This time around, more than 160 paratroopers from the 507th boarded two C-17 aircraft and flew to Normandy to honor the veterans who "60 years ago set the standards for what a paratrooper must be," Zunde said. "Our mission for the next three days is to honor the heroic accomplishments of the 507th paratroopers during the Normandy Invasion. We shall not fail."

Among the paratroopers of the 507th were Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, post commanding general, and Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso, post command sergeant

Post expects money for large projects

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Millions of dollars are expected to be authorized to accomplish several projects around Fort Benning.

The money will go toward four projects: barracks replacement on Kelley Hill and Main Post; building a hazardous cargo loading apron at Lawson Army Airfield; construction of a physical fitness center with a natatorium, as well as a headquarters building with a classroom building to support the Army Physical Fitness School; and building a consolidated health clinic on Fort Benning.

The barracks replacement is expected to cost about $50 million.

Kelley Hill will receive a barracks complex, complete with a 296-Soldier barracks, two battalion headquarters buildings with classrooms, five company operations facilities and a brigade headquarters building for 3rd Brigade.

"This project is required to

GOOD CENTS

Best things in life are ... cheap

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

There are many mysteries in life that perplex me, but few so much as the age-old question, "Where did all my money go?"

About a month ago, I decided to get to the bottom of it. The results? Let's just say I'll be expecting Christmas cards from the Chinese delivery man, Marlboro and the Uptown Tap.

So, I've undertaken a new mantra: Cheap is good. So I got smart and got on a budget, which leaves me a whopping $125 a paycheck to go out and play — a challenge for me, a confessed paycheck-to-paycheck kind of girl.

Now, I know that sounds like a lot, but it isn't. These days, the challenge is to make $125 a lot of money. And after some extensive research, it's confirmed: You can be money-minded and still have a life. Here are a few things to do "on the cheap."

• Movies. I don't have cable, so I'm usually the last to know if a must-see movie is coming out. That makes it easy to wait for them to make it to Columbus' dollar theater, the Peachtree 8, the theater right by the Peachtree Mall. It's only $1 during the week and $3 on the weekends. And if you're bringing company, go for the combo deal — $10 for two tickets, two medium drinks and a large popcorn. You really can't beat that. Another option — there are a few local places (i.e. Columbus University, The Coca Cola Space Center) that show "classic" movies for free or next to nothing. Check out The Bayonet and the Ledger-Enquirer on Fridays for a preview of what's going on each weekend.

• Eating out. If you're like me, you're entirely too lazy to cook every day of the week. If you must, going out to dinner on a budget just takes a little willingness to share. Go early, before dinner prices, and share an entrée. If your appetite's too big for that penny-saver, keep your eye out for coupons. A lot of local restaurants offer good deals — one dinner full-price, one dinner free or half-off.

And don't be shy about busting one of those bad boys out. It's worth being a cheapskate when you get your check.

• Coffee and dessert. Forego the expensive restaurant outing with a candlelit dinner at home. Then, head out for coffee and dessert. And keep in mind the coffee shops around town. Fountain City on Broadway almost always has a musical act to check out — an added entertainment bonus if you're just looking to get out of the house.

• Trade in the bar scene. I know — I can't believe I said that. But if you think about it, it's not so bad. Bars can be too crowded (or dead), too loud and too expensive. On top of which, you have to worry about how you're going to get home, whether everyone in your party is going to behave, etc. Why not drink at home — have a barbecue or get together for cards? And at the risk of sounding like my mother (dear God!), rock the board games. You'd be surprised — I've actually had a great time with my friends, playing guys vs. girls Cranium and the like.

• Get cultured. Cutting back on those 12-ounce curls can also be an opportunity to "explore new things." There are actually all kinds of poetry readings, writing workshops, book clubs, inexpensive concerts from local musicians, and so on. Barnes & Noble has a list of upcoming activities. And once again, always check The Bayonet and the L-E for weekend updates.

• Other stuff. Other fun things that fall in line with my new mantra — try getting outside once in a while. Go for walks or picnics, take a day trip to the beach (and bring all your own food, drinks, entertainment, etc.), go camping, go hiking, take up a sport, etc. Get in shape — take to the gym on the weekends. I know guys who can spend two to three hours a day there. And don't waste your money on some fancy gym off post. Briant Wells Fitness Center has all kinds of equipment, a variety of aerobics classes and a swimming pool.

Check out the library. I'm not sure about the ones in Columbus, but Sayers has a decent movie selection, and you get to keep them for a month. So you save the cost of the rental and the extended viewing fees.

Don't you want to be my neighbor?

Erin A. Nash
Bayonet staff

I moved on post eight years ago. For eight straight years, I have lived in the same two-bedroom house. People ask, "Why don't you move to a bigger house?" Well, after eight years, this is my house. It's the longest time both my husband and I have ever lived in a house. I also know that if I moved, I'd still have the luck of the draw when it comes to my neighbors.

I'm not shy about saying that I would love to live next door to me and my family. It sounds cocky, but it's true.

We have been accused of being meticulous about our grass. If it even starts to look unkempt, one of us is mowing. We fertilize regularly. We don't put our sprinklers on for hours at a time or after it rains. I see the outside of our house as a reflection of ourselves. We're not neat freaks, but how it looks reflects on us.

I love to sleep with my windows open for those four weeks we call Fall and Spring. However, I have been relegated to keeping my windows open only on weekends, because I have been woken up at o'dark thirty by cars with their radios blasting and bass pumping, obviously unaware that not everyone is up and going to PT.

Countless times, I have been outside playing with my son, and knew a car was coming because I could hear the bass. Not only that, but the vulgarity in the music is appalling. I really don't want my 5-year-old exposed to music that talks about female dogs and garden tools, if you catch my drift.

I love my dogs. Even though they're getting older, they occasionally still get frisky and will bark at a passing leaf during the middle of the night. Even my husband, who sleeps like a stone, can hear them. One of us will get up and make them go back in the house. We also police up the poop on a regular basis.

I try to be polite and courteous to my neighbors, especially if they are new to the military.

Some have used my niceness to their advantage.

A former neighbor had a new baby and asked to borrow my camcorder for a few days. I, being a big softie, agreed. Two weeks later they still had not returned it. My husband was fuming and told me he was going over there and was going to use some not-so-choice words and get the camcorder back. Trying to diffuse the situation, I went over myself. The neighbor's explanation was, "Oh, we've tried bringing it back but you were never home." I had to laugh. I'm always home. The guy had the gall to ask to use our lawnmower a few months later. Hmm, I'll give you one guess what we said.

So, we have adopted a family rule that we don't lend anything. It may sound harsh, but we've had too many problems in the past. If you have a great neighbor who will lend you something, I recommend not borrowing anything you can't pay for if something should happen to it.

I have realized that being a neighbor is a labor in respect. The old adage "Treat others as you want to be treated" is fitting when talking about being a neighbor.

Saying goodbye to the flag man

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I'm not good with names. I've always been this way. My new friends, the men and women I traveled to D.C. with last week — they like to blame it on their age. Fair enough, they've earned that right.

It should've come as no surprise when one of them called me the other day to check on a name listed in the obituary column.

"Was that one of ours?" he asked.

Something about the simple, straightforward question pierced my heart. Having shared with them their moment of glory at the dedication of the World War II Memorial, I am part of "ours." And I'm humbled by it.

Last week, just two days after returning from D.C., we lost one of "ours," John Sanders.

At 82, John was a robust, former Marine with a shock of jet-black hair, a wicked wit and a heart the size of Guadalcanal, which was, by the way, where he took a bullet to the chest in 1944. John kept us entertained throughout the 14-hour bus ride to and from Washington. He was all smiles.

But when it came to his memories and his pride in his country, John was very serious. He wore his patriotism like a banner. He wore his uniform, his buttons and badges. He carried a flag and flew several from his car. He attended Fort Benning homecomings and reunions and memorials and whatever.

He never missed an opportunity to show his true colors — red, white and blue. And if you were there, anywhere he was, you couldn't have missed him. And you wouldn't forget him, though you might never have known him by name. Most of us, present company included — given my predisposition for name "dropping" — knew John as "the flag man."

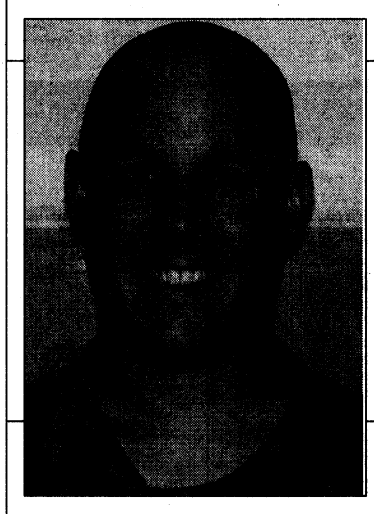
Collis Turner, who knew John a lot longer than I did, tells me John prayed he'd live long enough to see the memorial. God honored his prayer. There's a measure of comfort in that.

I imagine John, now, standing in front of St. Peter, hat in hand.

"John Sanders," he says, confidently.

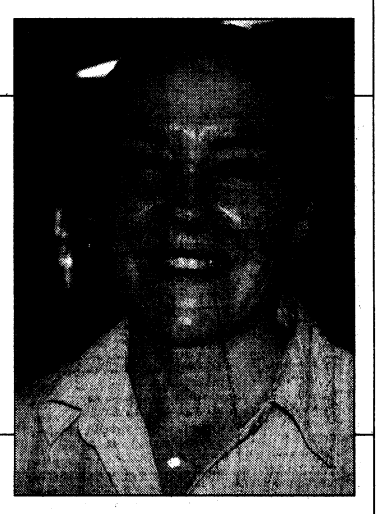
"Hmmmm, not here," St. Peter replies.

"Sanders. S-a-n-d-e-r-s," John says expectantly.



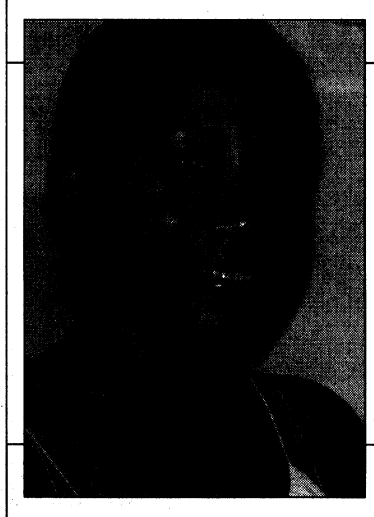
"Sorry," St. Pete says with a shake of his head.

"Look again, it's gotta be there," John says, twisting his cap. "John Sanders, from Columbus, Georgia. Old Marine. You know, the flag man."

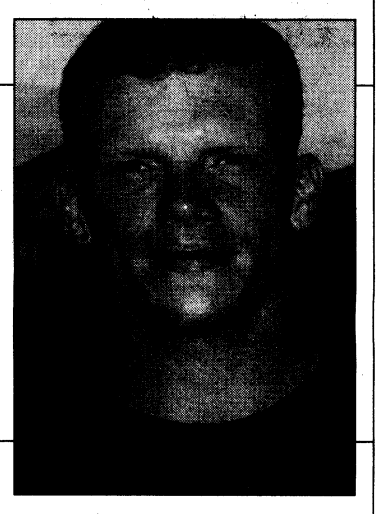


"Oh, the flag man! Why didn't you say that in the first place?" Pete says. "C'mon in."

VARIOUS VOICES



What do you do for fun when you're on a tight budget?



Pfc. Josh Reed, 2nd Battalion, 11th Infantry Regiment — "Outdoor activities. I like bike riding, but there's always football, basketball or volleyball. There's courts everywhere, so Soldiers can just go hang out."

Lee Green, Fort Lee, Va. — "I take my kids to parks that are free. Williamsburg, Virginia, is very nice. The kids spend hours climbing this huge tree in one of the squares, and I just sit and read."

Spc. Nellie Fuifui, U.S. Army Garrison. — "Cook out. Just set up the grill, invite a few friends and have everybody bring something so you don't spend a lot of money. Everybody likes cook-outs."

Staff Sgt. Mat Devault, 1st Battalion(Airborne), 507th Infantry — "I'm in Airborne School, but as a private on Kelley Hill, I used to hang out at the Rec Center. They have pool tables, a reading and study room, volleyball courts and grills."

Michelle Rowan, family member — "We walk our dog or take him to the park. It's free and it's exercise."

Cadet Robert Langford, ROTC — "On post, there is the movie theater, the amusement center and the Afterhours Club. It's close, it's cheap and it's for the Soldiers."

Fort Benning paratroopers arrive home from France Tuesday afternoon. The Soldiers participated in a re-enactment of D-Day Sunday.

507th: Paratroopers return from jump into Normandy

Tech. Sgt. Wayne Clark

Soldiers from 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, re-enacted the D-Day parachute drop near Amfeiville, France, Saturday. This year marks the 60th anniversary of the Normandy invasion during World War II.

major.

"Young (Soldiers) like these, 60 years ago volunteered for a new infantry," Kelso said. "Their daring and courage led the way in the liberation of Western Europe. So to think that 60 years later the same regiment is returning to Europe, and I'm fortunate to be able to go with them, it's an honor. It's an outstanding event and we look forward to it."

The paratroopers departed in two C-17 aircraft from the 437th Air Wing, out of Charleston, S.C. from LAAF Thursday night and arrived in France Friday afternoon.

Saturday, the paratroopers of the 507th jumped out of C-130s and C-17s over the Iron Mike drop zone, — the original D-Day invasion drop zone — in the company of more than 500 other paratroopers from the 82nd Airborne Division, the 75th Ranger Regiment, the 4th, 5th and 6th Ranger Training Battalions, the 101st Airborne Division, the 173rd Airborne Brigade and an Air Force Element, Zunde said.

Freakley and Kelso were the first two paratroopers to jump out of the aircraft.

"Getting to participate was a once in a lifetime experience, it's hard to explain how emotional and significant it was to get to don parachutes with the members of the 507th and seeing 650 paratroopers in 16 aircraft marshaled to honor the D-Day paratroopers," Freakley said.

Once the 507th paratroopers landed, they unfurled their colors and guidon and marched three kilometers to where the veterans were waiting.

"When we landed, the French people were waiting for us and they all congratulated us, took our pictures and shook our hands. It was amazing," said Spc. John Monk, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Infantry.

"Before we left we were anxious and excited to be part of such a memorable event," Monk said.

"Now that we're back, it's all just amazing," he said.

"My favorite part was getting to go to Omaha Beach," said Spc. Rafael Castañeda, E Company.

"We all brought back bottles full of sand," Monk said. "It was a once in a lifetime opportunity."

Paratroopers participated in several commemorative ceremonies and visited with veteran paratroopers as well as French veterans who were part of the French Resistance.

Also, this jump had special significance for several B Company, 1st Bn. (Airborne), 507th Infantry, paratroopers.

Capt. Travis McCracking earned his master parachutist wings and Staff Sgt. Daniel Hubb earned his senior parachutist wings. Both had their wings pinned on by WWII veterans.

Staff Sgt. Steven Maloy, B Company, re-enlisted after he jumped.

The paratroopers arrived at LAAF Monday and Tuesday evenings.

Mission accomplished.

RCI moves forward

Housing survey due, data to help determine changes

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Fort Benning housing area residents are reminded that the Official Army Housing survey mailed back in April, along with a pre-addressed, postage paid return envelope, should be returned by mail by June 25.

Residents who misplaced their survey, or those who recently arrived, can call 545-0667 to get a survey. Resident input will become extremely important during Fort Benning's selection of a partner to revitalize, demolish and construct new housing as part of the Residential Communities Initiative, said Ron Smith, RCI program manager.

The data gathered from this survey is being compiled by a private company, and the garrison commander will receive an out-brief by the Military Housing and Lodging Institute, the organization responsible for the survey. This data will help the RCI Office determine issues residents deem as important or needing change. The data will become part of the basis for negotiations with the partner and will also be used to set standards of performance that can be easily measured, Smith said.

The draft environmental assessment of all post housing is complete. All aspects of housing were looked at, a random sampling of the interiors and all exteriors were surveyed as well as the land, Smith said. All environmental concerns, such as endangered species, wetlands management, waste management, unexploded ordnance and cultural aspects were identified. The survey was required in order to provide an assessment to the prospective partner of what exists within the housing communities and to ensure appropriate mitigation occurs.

The solicitation and selection process is well underway and should be completed by September 2004. A source selection evaluation board is evaluating information packets about the company's organization structure, financial capability, expected financial return, past experience, past and future use of small businesses and most importantly, their concept for revitalizing our housing communities, Smith said.

It's important to note this will not be a typical contract process where the lowest bidder is usually chosen, he said. The RCI selection process has been designed to select a qualified world class partner. The initial qualification and selection process ends this July.

Those companies meeting the minimum qualifications will then submit specific concept proposals for the revitalization of the housing communities by Aug. 15. These proposals will be evaluated and final selection made in September 2004.

Negotiations between Fort Benning officials and the selected partner will begin in December and conclude in May 2005, resulting in the business operations plan outlining every detail of the project.

As a result of this initiative, housing residents can look forward to larger and updated housing, Smith said. The Army has developed construction standards that all projects must adhere to. Newly constructed three bedroom quarters will have a minimum of 1,630 gross square feet, four bedroom quarters 1,940, and five bedroom quarters 2,300 GSF. Each unit will also have a 150-square-foot patio. Parking will improve with two off-street parking spaces per unit, plus additional parking for guests. Units will have fully developed landscapes and the major housing communities will have a community center, including meeting rooms and a swimming pool.

It is important to remember that RCI projects are not contracts but a partnership between Fort Benning and a private company for the sole purpose of revitalizing existing housing, demolition of units not meeting today's Army standards and construction of new units all financed by Soldiers' Basic Allowance for Housing, Smith said.

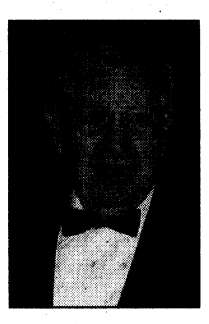
Citizen Soldier receives AUSA award

Woodruff honored for service

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

The Chattahoochee Valley-Fort Benning Chapter of the Association of the U.S. Army held its last major event of the year, the Livingston Citizen/Soldier Awards Dinner June 4 at the Ironworks.

The award honors an individual who has made significant contributions to the tricommunity area. The award was created in 1984 by Cliff O. Livingston Sr., a charter member of the Columbus Civilian-Military Council, to honor an individual or corporate member who had given generously of time and effort.



Last year, the chapter expanded the criteria to honor an individual with both military and civilian service — a true citizen Soldier.

"Columbus is blessed with many citizen Soldiers," said Chuck Hunsaker, AUSA chapter president. "And one of them jumped out."

The chapter selected J. Barnett Woodruff, a Columbus native and Navy veteran as this year's winner.

Woodruff was commissioned in the Navy in 1944 and served on a mine sweeper in the South Pacific during World War II. He was later recalled to duty as a result of the conflict in Korea, serving in the Atlantic and Mediterranean.

His civilian service includes serving on the boards of directors for several Columbus banks, St. Francis Hospital and the St. Francis Hospital Foundation. Woodruff is also active in Girls, Inc. and the Boys and Girls Club.

Woodruff joked with the audience, which included around 100 Fort Benning Soldiers, that he had served for two years in the horse-drawn field artillery until the Navy made him a better offer.

"I'm very concerned about the world situation and the people over there," Woodruff said after accepting his award.

He said he had a great-nephew who carried a Georgia flag to the Middle East, another member of a family that is "military-inclined."

"It's time to let the new ones take over for the old ones," he said. "Be safe, successful and stay the course."

The phrase, "stay the course" Woodruff said, is a Navy saying used when they turn over leadership at night.

"I'm very much honored to receive this award and you all have my support, he said.

The event's guest speaker, national AUSA president retired Gen. Gordon Sullivan, praised Woodruff for his efforts in uniform and in the community.

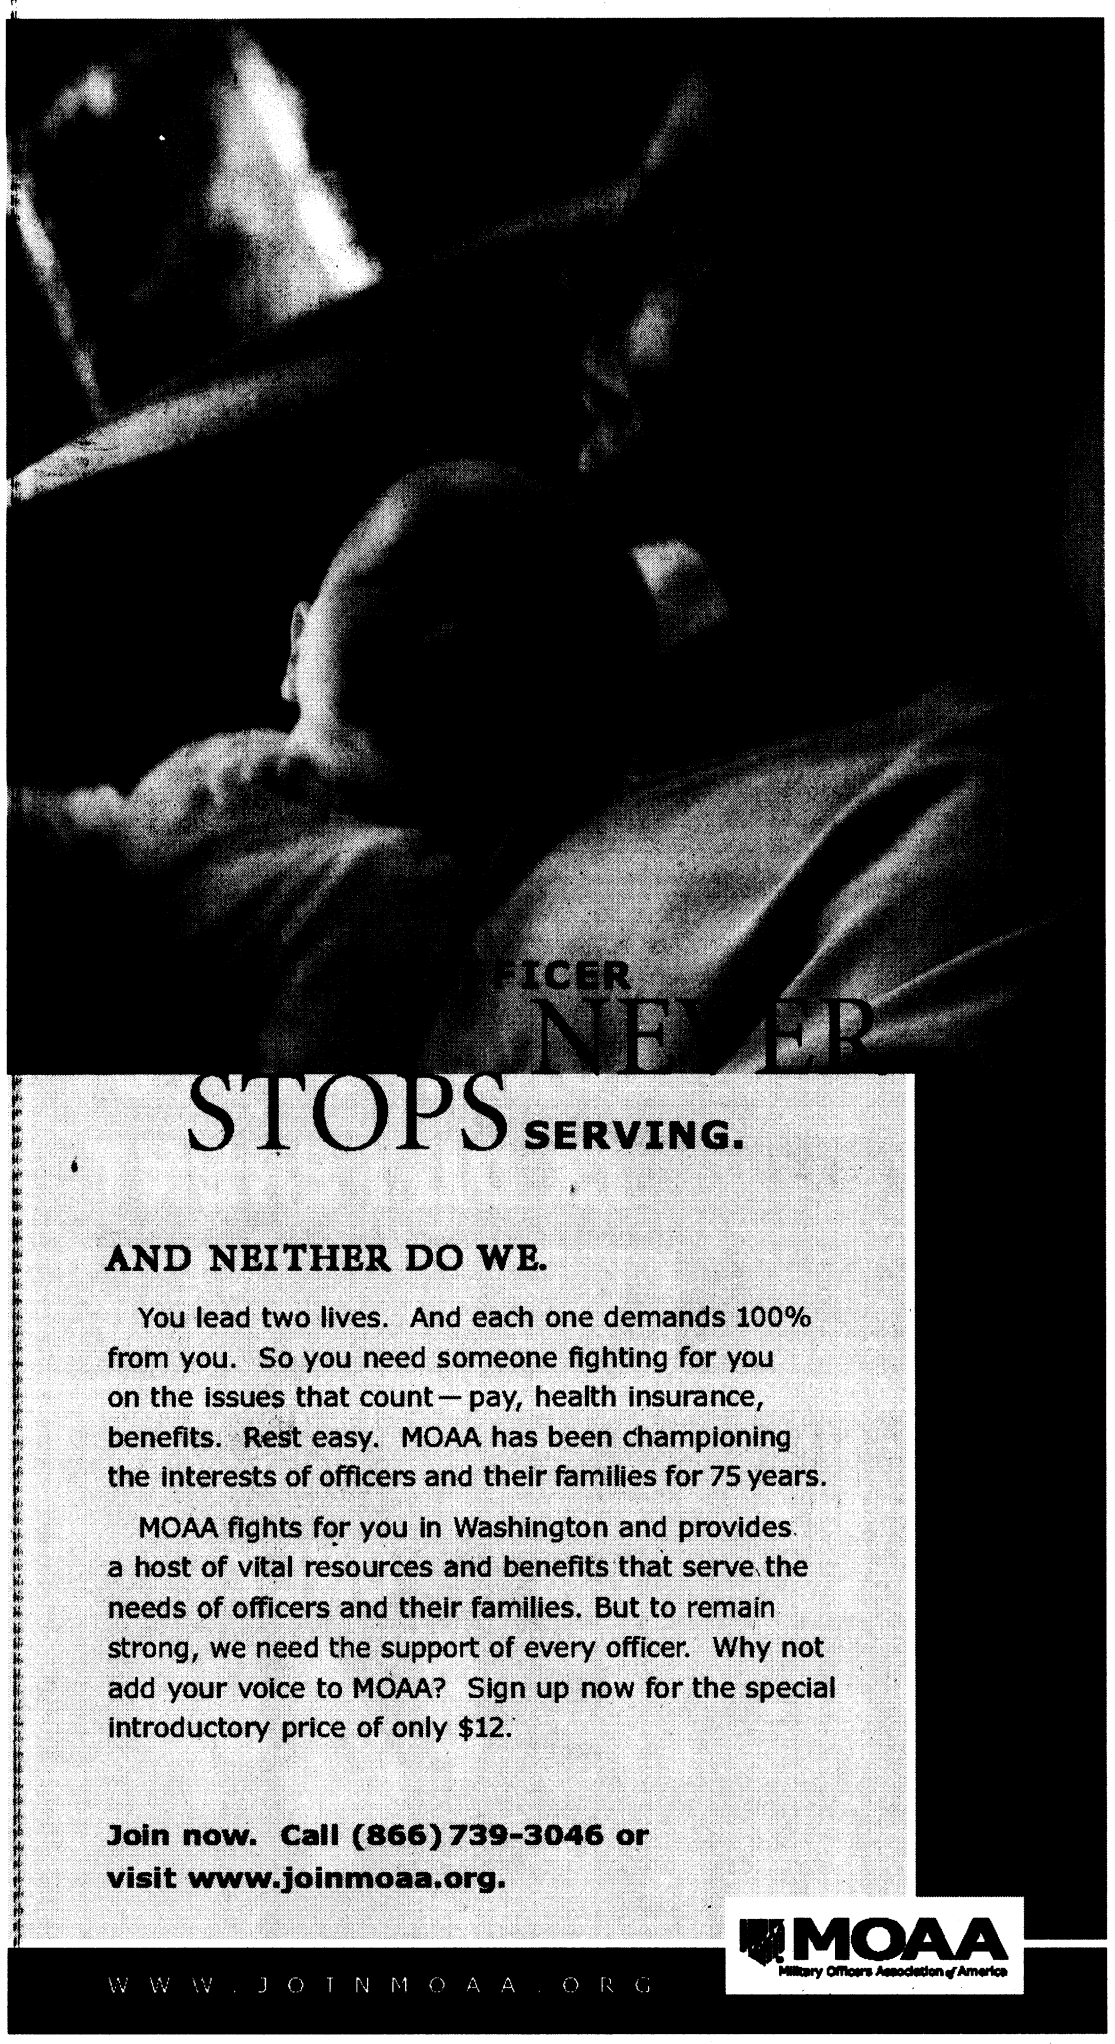
"We're proud of you," Sullivan said. "You lived your life as a productive, loyal citizen. You answered the call. Did your duty — not once, but twice."

Sullivan said AUSA is an important support structure everyone needs and a great way to bring the military and the community together.

"The Columbus community has embraced Soldiers since the early part of the last century," he said. "supported Soldiers and families … like those here, who have gone off to fight. I can't thank you enough for what you have done for Soldiers and the United States Army."

He said the Army is transforming in order to maintain initiative over the enemy and one place the Army has maintained is training at Fort Benning. Anyone who wants to know anything about the infantry and about leadership, he said, should come to Fort Benning.

Sullivan said he draws his personal inspiration from walking battlefields and strength from what American Soldiers have done on battlefields throughout history.



"It's not the equipment," he said, "it's you, people like you, like Mr. Woodruff, who carries the burden of community leadership. Citizen Soldiers."

In 1992, a Soldier asked Sullivan, then the chief of staff of the Army, what he was going to do to maintain the essence of the Army.

He said you can think of what the essence of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps is when you go monuments at Normandy, Antietam and the new World War II monument in Washington, D.C., but the essence is the Soldier.

"I don't have a clue what equipment they used," Sullivan said. "What makes the difference is the Soldier — the tough, trained, competent, courageous Soldier … the living embodiment of essence and strength.

"Mr. Woodruff, you have demonstrated that you know the idea."

New ITB battalion starts training

Answering call for 8,370 new infantrymen

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Sand Hill's new one station unit training battalion, 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Training Regiment, picked up a second load of Soldiers June 4. Drill sergeants from A Company picked up 210 Soldiers from 30th AG Replacement with the sole mission of turning every single one of them into an infantry Soldier in 14 weeks.

"We've had 28 days to get ready," said Capt. William Similo, A Company commander. "We've trained, we've painted, we've cleaned and we've scrubbed to get everything up to standard. This is the standard and we're going to keep it."

The A Company drill sergeants took the Soldiers to their new home, Building 3105, former home of the 1st Battalion, 38th Infantry Regiment.

After the "first day of basic training" chaos, which included the drill sergeants hollering, "Get off my bus," the Soldiers were sent to chow, split up into four platoons, and introduced to their platoon drill sergeants.

Pvt. Timothy Seay Jr., an Arizona native, took a minute to catch his breath before saying he joined the Army to earn college money, but believes fighting for this country is "pretty cool" and it's very important to be a part of it.

"But right now my arms are tired," he said.

Pvt. Michael Manago, a California native, said regardless of how hard the first day was, he can't wait to wear the Army uniform with the blue cord.

Most of the A Co. cadre are part of the 1st Brigade, 84th Division (Institutional Training), that received mobilization orders to Fort Benning to help the Infantry Training Brigade train the additional 2,225 Soldiers needed for this fiscal year and the 6,145 extra Soldiers in 2005.

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Staff Sgt. Jim Garcia, 1st Platoon, A Company, 329th Infantry Regiment, "encourages" one of the 210 initial entry Soldiers who started training June 4.

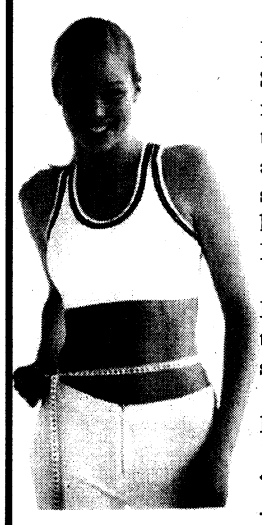
"We are under the new Army concept of the expeditionary forces; the requirement is to increase the number of infantry Soldiers to fulfill that mission," said Maj. Kevin Rushing, executive officer of 1st Bn., 329th Inf. Regt. "For the Army to expand its expeditionary forces, we need more infantry Soldiers. In its current component, ITB couldn't produce the amount of Soldiers the Army needs in the next two years."

The 84th received orders mobilizing them to Fort Benning for 365 days — they arrived on Sand Hill May 9.

The new battalion is composed of six companies with 12 drill sergeants, a company commander and executive officer, a first sergeant, and an armor and supply training NCO, for each company. Currently, A Company has eight drill sergeants from the reserve component, who were activated.

"I believe this is a unique experience pool," Similo said. "Many of my NCOs own their own businesses or are in supervisory positions involving millions of dollars of inventory and equipment. They can impress upon the trainees that the work ethics and discipline obtained from serving honorably in the military does have an impact in the hiring process of a large number of corporations."

May 28, B Company picked up 220 Soldiers, making it the first company from the new battalion to begin training.



C, D, E and F Companies will pick up Soldiers for training between July 23 and Nov. 19.

During the next 14 weeks, the Soldiers of A Co. will undergo the strenuous training required of all infantry Soldiers.

They are scheduled to graduate Sept. 9.

The Power Wrap - Body Wrap

Following the long awaited launch of the Anti-Aging Wrap, just months ago Victoria surprised us again with another breakthrough formulation of The Body Wrap.

Further investigative work at Suddenly Slender's Research Group has yielded a new formula that not only rejuvenates the body in the same fashion as the Anti-Aging Wrap, it also obtains better inch-loss through the torso, smoothes the skin in a silky satin finish, AND leaves behind a dynamic reservoir of ENERGY!

In fact, this powerful energy is so noticeable that our test subjects practically named the nine solution for us...they call it The Power Wrap!

Here's what a couple of them had to say:

"Wonderful! I felt full of PEP the entire day!" - Sue B.

"I felt the energy surge, but my SKIN'S the best part, it's velvety!" - Vicky L.

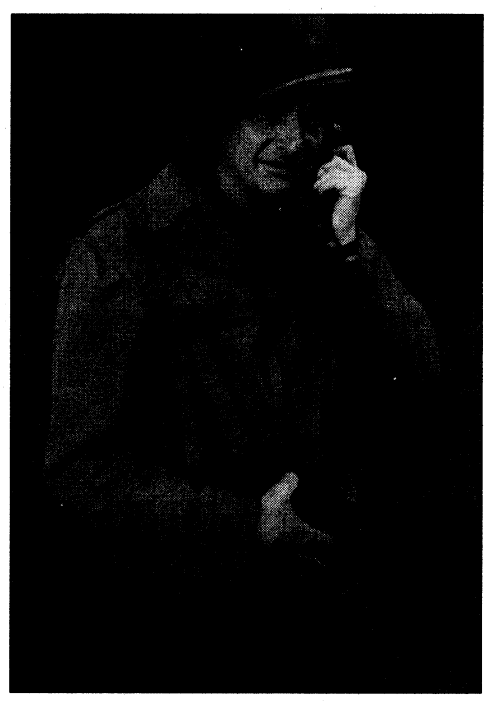
Historic unit reactivated

Rag-tag unit boasts colorful history, 'Hollywood' exploits

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff



The history of the 329th Infantry Regiment reads like Hollywood fiction, with its inception at a place called Atterbury, its first commander — Col. Buckshot Crabill — and its greatest legend, Lt. Sam Magill, who facilitated the mass surrender of 20,000 German troops on the banks of the Loire River Sept. 17, 1944.

Not bad for a unit dubbed the "rag-tag circus" for the motley mix of vehicles its Soldiers commandeered from French villagers — fire trucks, school buses and a cement mixer — to transport troops into Germany. One correspondent said the 329th "presented the most un-military appearance of any outfit since the Mexican War."

The unit's history is colorful and well-documented, if you know where to look. But looking for information about a Reserve unit activated, deactivated and reactivated more times than you can count is a lot like hunting for a silver fox. It's out there, but it's elusive.

As the 329th begins a new chapter with its activation and assignment to Sand Hill, where its primary function will be one station unit training, Lt. Col. Michael Chyterbok believes it's important for the regiment's newest Soldiers to know something of its history.

"It's important that these Soldiers understand the lineage, the sacrifice the Soldiers of this unit made during World War II," said Chyterbok, 1st Battalion commander. "It's a motivator. They can reflect and be proud of where they came from."

Maj. John Mauldin was the 329th's regimental surgeon during World War II.

Last week, the regiment conducted a "fill," the process whereby a new unit is filled with trainees. The week before, on Memorial Day, Chyterbok conducted a "fill" of his own. He traveled to a rest home in Atlanta to interview a veteran who helped fill in the blanks of the unit's history.

Retired Brig. Gen. John Mauldin was the regimental surgeon during World War II. He took more than 400 photographs between the time the unit landed in England eight days after D-Day until Germany was liberated in 1946. Chyterbok happened upon those photographs on Mauldin's Web page and arranged a visit with the 92-year-old retired Air National Guardsmen.

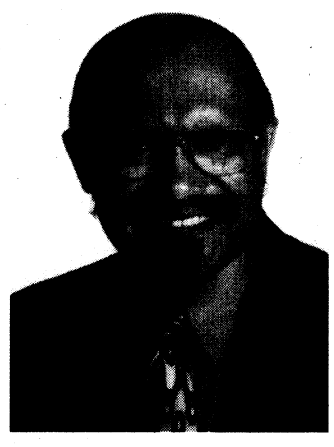
"It was a very emotional experience for him," Chyterbok said. "You've got to realize, his unit was deactivated in 1946, and he had no idea that it actually continued to exist as a Reserve unit all these years. That made an impact on him."

And Mauldin's "souvenirs" will have an impact on the unit's morale, Chyterbok said. Mauldin donated photos, newspapers and letters he wrote home to his wife during the war. Copies of the photographs will be enlarged and hung in the battalion's dining facility and headquarters area.

And stories about the unit's exploits will be passed along to the trainees and cadre.

Take, for instance, the 329th's record-setting march from Normandy to Germany at a pace of 15 to 17 miles per day.

"We don't know exactly how many days it took them, but it remains a military record," Chyterbok said. "It's that kind of detail that inspires Soldiers."



And the unit — the "rag-tag circus" — was reviewed by Gen. George Patton shortly after the war.

"That's the finest body of Soldiers I have ever seen in the field," he said.

After the war, Crabill wrote of the 329th, "(It) illustrated one fact: You can take young men from the United States who have had no previous military training, give them a year of tough training and, with proper equipment and strong leadership, they are equal to the best soldiers any other country can put on the field."

Chyterbok said he's confident the "new" 329th will live up to Crabill's assessment.

Mauldin is currently recovering from surgery and was unavailable for comment at press time, but Chyterbok hopes he'll be able to attend the unit's first graduation in September.

Projects: To better Benning

provide living and working conditions for Soldiers that meet the current standards," said Ken Holloway, the post's master planner, Master Planning Division, Directorate of Public Works.

"The existing gang latrine barracks on Kelley Hill are old and are severely deteriorated," he said. "The existing operations facilities are too small and located in the barracks; and the administrative facilities have inefficient layouts and are too small and dispersed."

Meanwhile, two barracks with a 160-Soldier total capacity will be built on Dixie Road. These barracks will house Soldiers of the 29th Infantry Regiment.

"This project is not the barracks (already) being built along Dixie," said Dean Miller, a project manager with the Master Planning Division, adding that those barracks are being constructed with fiscal 2003 appropriations.

The construction of a hazardous cargo loading apron at Lawson Army Airfield comes with an estimated $3.850 million price tag and is the least expensive of the four projects.

The apron will include a concrete surface hot loading area, a taxiway leading to Taxiway K, a box culvert drainage ditch crossing and a concrete tank trail route from the ammunition holding area to the aircraft hot loading parking area.

The loading pad will allow for simultaneous loading of two aircraft with ammunition, "hot loaded" track vehicles and other hazardous cargo, Holloway said.

"This project is required to provide a hazardous cargo loading area," he said. "Ammunition and explosive safety standards specify required separation distances between aircraft loading operations involving hazardous materials and the ammo holding area, inhabited buildings or other airfield operations."

Federal Aviation Administration regulations also specify minimum safety distances and clear zones for runways, taxiways and holding areas, he added.

Fort Benning currently loads aircraft with hazardous cargo at the 33 Holding Area, Holloway said. But a runway was extended to 10,000 feet, stretching into the restricted limits of the original apron.

"This project will provide an aircraft parking apron for loading hazardous cargo, such as ammunition," Miller said. "This facility will have all the required clearances — both ammunition safety distances and airfield clearance zones. We can operate without any restriction on airfield activities."

A new physical fitness center and a headquarters and classroom building for the APFS are expected to cost $18.5 million.

The project will serve several purposes, Holloway said.

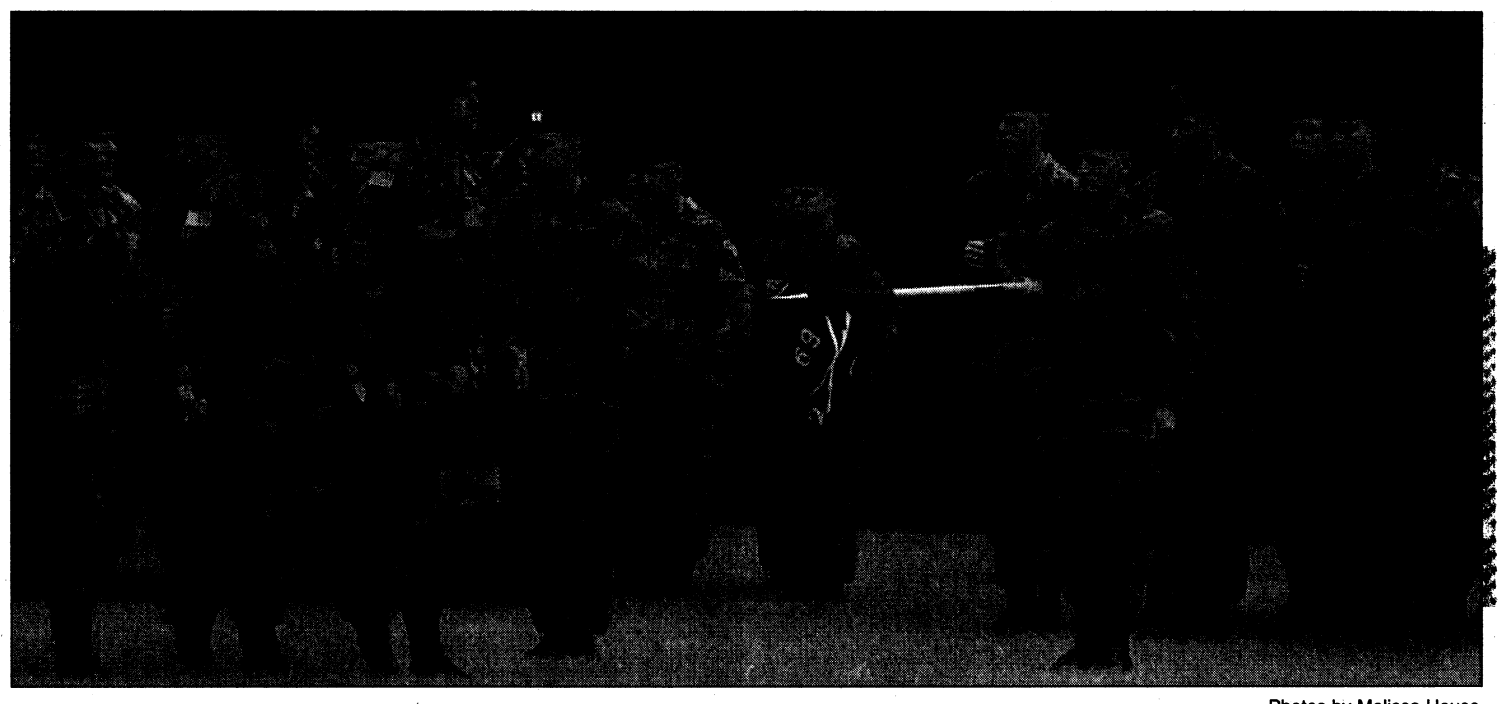
The fitness center will provide Soldiers a place to meet their physical fitness needs — athletic training, physical conditioning and competitive sports — and will support the off-duty recreational needs of Soldiers and their families, he said.

Meanwhile, the headquarters building will support the mission of the APFS.

"Currently, an inadequate pre-Korean War vintage field house and four brigade gymnasiums, along with a converted 200-man classroom within a general instruction building, are the only permanent facilities designed, constructed or converted for physical fitness on Fort Benning," Holloway said.

The fitness center will include a swimming pool, three basketball courts, exercise rooms, a climbing wall, racquetball courts, cardio and weight rooms, a spin room and access to a walking track, Miller said.

If the project is not completed, Holloway said, the existing facilities will continue to be overtaxed and require significant maintenance.



Also in the works is a consolidated health clinic, which will join three outlying clinics, costing $6.6 million.

The clinic will provide primary care, aviation medicine, physical therapy, a pharmacy, radiology, pathology and support services. The three buildings currently housing these clinics will be returned to the installation for other use.

"Current medical services are provided to Soldiers at two separate 1950s-era troop medical centers and one 1970s-era aviation medicine clinic," Holloway said.

"This project releases these three antiquated facilities from the medical inventory and consolidates their functions into one new location," he said, "providing health care treatment to Fort Benning Soldiers and their (families) in a cost-effective, efficient manner."

The clinics used right now are overcrowded and cramped, impeding medical treatment and draining both human and scare financial resources, he said.

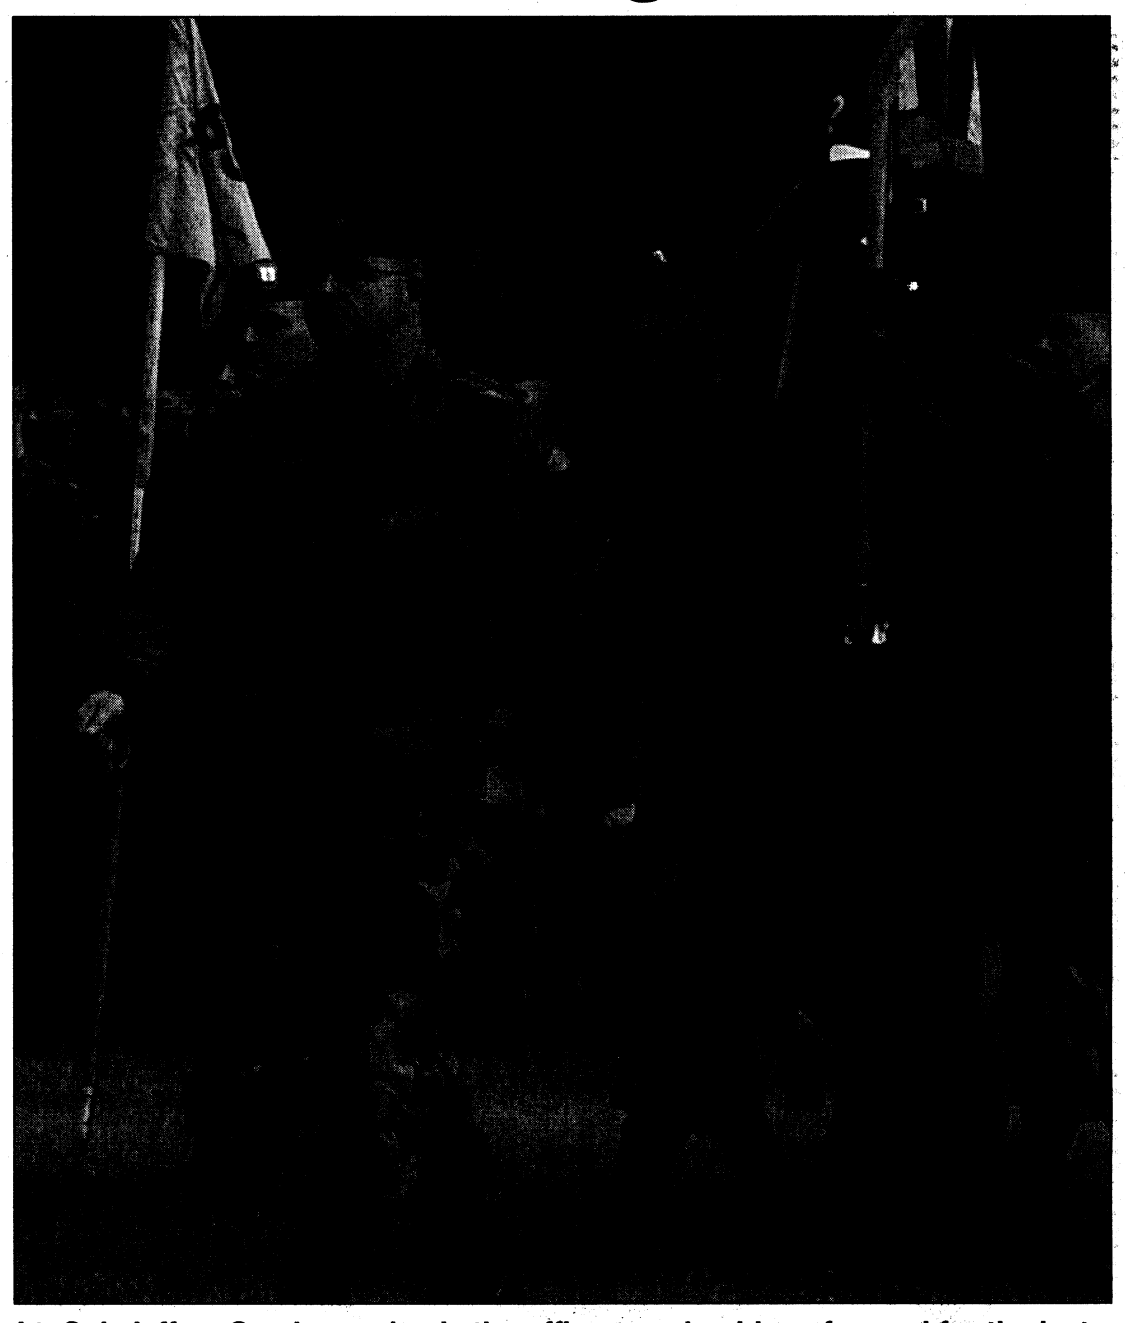
The men of 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment, lined up to shake hands with Lt. Col. Jeffrey Sanderson June 3.

Sanderson, who led the battalion through five major battles in Iraq, relinquished command to Lt. Col. Robert Roggeman in a ceremony at Essenbagger Field.

The reviewing officer, Col. Steven Salazar, commander of 3rd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division, praised Sanderson as a "Soldier's Soldier, a commander's commander and a team player."



"J.R. sees the big picture and creates opportunities," Salazar said. "He has trained the most highly trained, disciplined and lethal battalion in the Army."

He said the change of command was not about Sanderson, but his Soldiers, whose accomplishments, dedication, and skill left no doubt about their commitment to their duty and to their unit.

"These Soldiers never accepted defeat, never quit, and never left a fallen comrade," Salazar said. "You can move on proud of all you've done."

Sanderson said his command was the most professionally rewarding experience of his life, and thanked those before him who taught him the value of calm and positive leadership. That type of leadership, he said, will rule.

"Remember my mantra from the Band of Brothers," he said. "Train lieutenants and trust NCOs. And never forget to toast our heritage."

Lt. Col. Jeffrey Sanderson leads the officers and guidons forward for the last time during the change of command ceremony June 3.

Sanderson said his real assignment was as the tank commander for H66, with a major additional duty as the battalion commander.

He thanked his tank crew for their hard work and professionalism.

"You men are the reason I serve," Sanderson said. "You led the Marne Division. We share many memories, and I will never forget your courage.

"While many units claim greatness, you showed it with your raw courage. You set an oppressed people free."

Sanderson charged Roggeman to continue the battalion's great legacy, saying the professional, polite and prepared-to-kill Soldiers "will be your credentials as they were mine."

"The Panther Soldiers will always be my heroes," he said.

Roggeman said he was "fired up" to be serving again in the Marne Division. His previous assignments were as an observer/controller at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., and with the 4th Bn., 64th Armor Regt., 2nd Brigade, 3rd Infantry Division.

Army: Celebrates 229th birthday

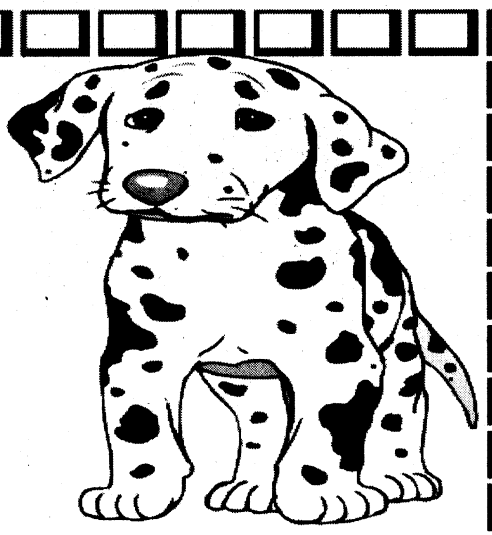
The pay was $20 a month for captains, $13.33 for lieutenants, $8 dollars for sergeants, $7.33 for corporals and drummers or trumpeters, and $6.66 for privates. Each Soldier was to find his own arms and clothes.

One day after the birth of the Army, Congress unanimously chose George Washington as the commander of continental forces.

Washington had been active in the military planning committees of Congress. He was given the rank of general and commander in chief.



One day later, June 16, Congress authorized a variety of other senior officers for the new Army.

Positions for five major staff officers were established: an adjutant general, a commissary of musters, a paymaster general, a commissary general and a quartermaster general.

These officers were expected to assist Washington with the administration of the "grand Army."

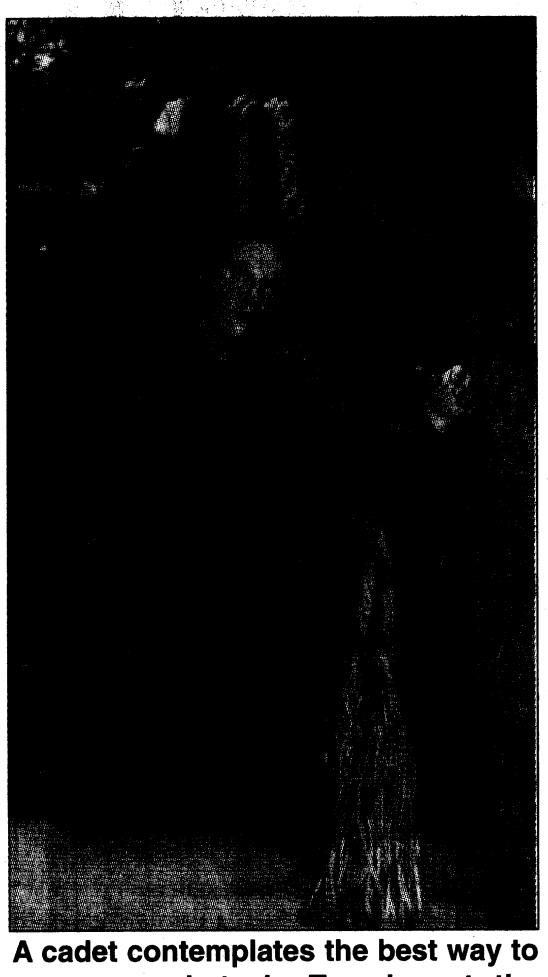
Alex Deal, 16, a third-year cadet at Kendrick High School, eyes the finish line at the Sand Hill obstacle course Tuesday. This is the third year Deal has attended the camp, which teaches leadership skills. "It's humbling," he said of the five-day challenge.

JROTC

Cadets learn to fail, follow to succeed, lead during camp

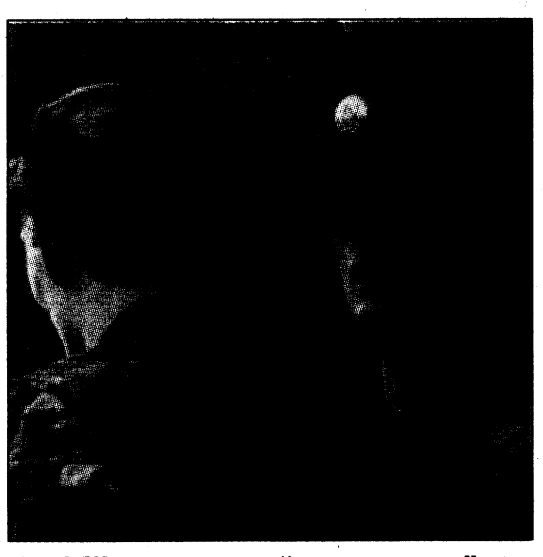
Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

You've got to know failure before you succeed. You've got to learn to follow before you can lead.



That's the premise behind the annual JROTC summer camp, a physically and mentally challenging, weeklong course designed to hone leadership skills and increase confidence.

Nearly 160 cadets from Muscogee County and the surrounding area converged on Fort Benning this week, the second year the camp has been held on post with support from post units.



"For some of these kids, this is the highlight of their year. They come back every year," said Lt. Col. Steve Kuehl, the deputy camp commander. "For some of them, it will change their life."

That's because the cadets are forced to challenge themselves, to stretch their expectations, to flex their mettle and their muscle, Kuehl said.

JROTC — Junior Reserve Officer Training Corps — has evolved. Once primarily a drill and ceremony course, the high-school level JROTC now emphasizes academics, fitness and leadership. It's no longer "an easy pass course," Kuehl said. And there's nothing easy about the summer camp, either.

A cadet contemplates the best way to cross an obstacle Tuesday at the Sand Hill Confidence Course.

A drill sergeant "encourages" an unmotivated cadet during a particularly difficult phase of camp.

The cadets spent Monday at the Combined Arms Training Center familiarizing themselves with battlefield convoy operations in Bradley simulators.

Tuesday they hit the ground running at the Sand Hill Confidence Course, where they navigated some of the most fearsome obstacles known to basic trainees — the "weaver," the log roll and the wall climb.

Wednesday, they took a swimming test and spent the afternoon at Malvesti Field, the Ranger Training Brigade's obstacle course.

Thursday's agenda featured the 34-foot airborne towers and the Leader's Reaction Course, a climb-it, cross-it, pass-it, watch-out-for-the-water, teamwork challenge that requires more mental acuity than brawn.

Today, they're being treated to a cookout at Uchee Creek, where awards will be given to the most accomplished senior and junior cadets.

The awards are nice, said Alex Deal, 16, a third-year cadet from Kendrick, "but it's not what it's all about."

"If I do my job and do it well, the awards will come," he said. "But that's not what keeps you coming back."

Deal's grandfather is a Marine medic. His great grandfather served in the Army during the Korean War. Deal sees himself as an Army sniper in a couple of years. For now, he'll be happy to make battalion sergeant major at Kendrick.

"I don't know, I just like everything about the military," he said. "I see how much my grandfathers accomplished, and it motivates me."

JROTC is big on motivation, Deal said. A good leader learns to motivate, and it takes skill to motivate cadets with different temperaments and personalities.

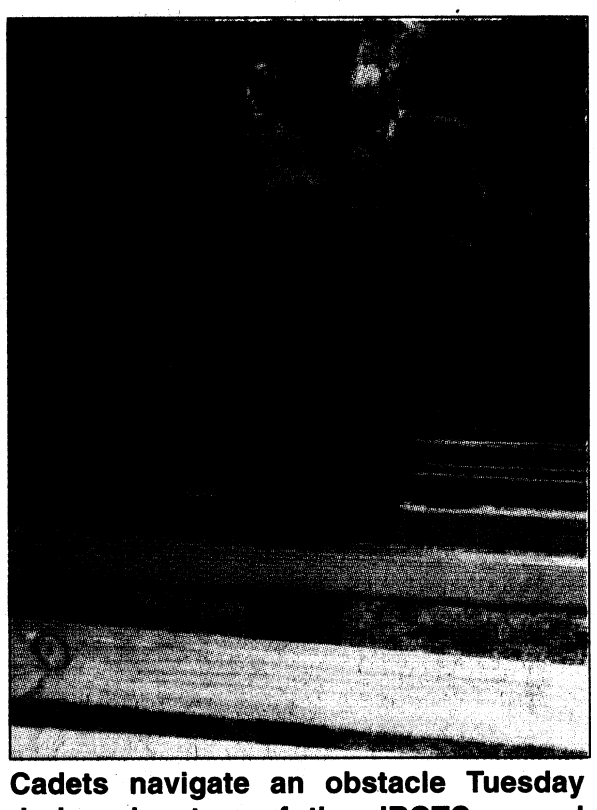
"You watch 'em out here," he said Tuesday at the Confidence Course. "You see some of them don't get it. They don't understand why it's important to do it all and do it right. They need motivation."

Though the cadets worked in pairs, similar to the Army's buddy system, Deal noted that other cadets, mostly those with a year or two of JROTC under their belt, went back onto the course when they were finished to encourage other cadets.

Kris Farrar, 17, holds his company guidon during formation. Farrar was one of 160 cadets from Muscogee County and the surrounding area who attended the weeklong JROTC camp.

"After a few hours out here, it's no longer a school loyalty thing. It doesn't matter where you go, we're all in this together," he said.

Summer camp breaks cadets down and builds them back up — even the most experienced, Deal said.



"It's humbling. We've both been squad members since we got here," he said, gesturing toward his friend, Kris Farrar, a fourth-year cadet from Columbus High School. "Here we are senior cadets and we have to take orders from them."

"It's a reality check," Farrar said with a nod. "JROTC doesn't only teach you how to lead, it teaches you how to follow. You can't lead till you've learned to follow. You gotta deal with it."

Kuehl said the corps relies heavily on the enthusiasm of the cadets who attend summer camp to motivate the county's other 1,000 cadets.

"They can't all be here. We realize that," he said.

"But we want to see the leadership skills carry over into the school year."

A Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, Soldiers pull their buddy over a wall at an obstacle at the Leaders Reaction Course on Main Post Tuesday afternoon. The 17-lane obstacle course tested the Soldiers' abilities to work as a team. The infantry Soldiers took on the course as part of their first phase of training.

The Soldiers of A Company, 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, were thinking hard Tuesday as they tried to successfully complete the obstacles of the Leaders Reaction Course on Main Post.

"Today's mission was to come out and execute the Leaders Reaction Course to teach these young Soldiers team development toward accomplishing a certain task ..." said Capt. Joel Benefiel, A Co. commander.

The Soldiers were given ammunition boxes, ropes, pipes and wooden planks to help tackle each obstacle, which required them to get their squad from one side of a mine field to the other without losing or injuring any Soldiers.

The LRC is not the first obstacle course the Soldiers of A Co. have taken on.

"We've been to the confidence course and the Eagle Tower obstacle courses on Sand Hill," said Pvt. John Ingle, a 3rd Platoon Soldier.

"They want us to learn to work cohesively; they want us to work as one."

The 17-lane obstacle course had the Soldiers climbing walls, jumping on ropes, walking on wooden planks and working together to get to safety.

The Soldiers waiting their turn to tackle the obstacles were actively involved in common task training, which included a review of first-aid, U.S. weapons, nuclear, biological and chemical warfare, map reading and camouflage, Benefiel said.

"It's concurrent training, which is additional training on areas that the Soldiers have covered throughout the cycle. The purpose of this training is to keep them current on their training so they do not forget it in between their phase testing," said Staff Sgt. Donovan Malcolm, 3rd Platoon drill sergeant.

As Pvt. Jimmy Torries, a 2nd Platoon Soldier, struggled to position his buddy for a fireman's carry during a first-aid exercise, he recognized the importance of the company's overall training.

"This type of training ensures that we know what we have to do if we're in a combat situation and we have to save our buddy's life," he said.

Another Soldier, Pvt. DeAndré Henderson, 1st Platoon, said this type of training helps all Soldiers know how to take charge if they are caught in a situation where their leaders are taken out.

"If we all know how to lead, any one of us will be able to get our platoon or squad to safety," Henderson said.

"We're not only building individual Soldiers, we're building future leaders," Benefiel said.

The A Co. Soldiers have been in training for three weeks and moved on to phase two of their training Thursday.

The company is scheduled to graduate Aug. 27.

WHINSEC graduates largest CGSOG class

Spc. Adrian A. Lugo and Spc. Maggie E. Ruiz
WHINSEC Public Affairs Office

The Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation marked the completion of its third and largest Command and General Staff Officer Course with a morning graduation ceremony in Marshall Auditorium in Infantry Hall June 4.

The yearlong course trains officers and civilian officials of all services for duty as field-grade commanders and as principal staff officers at brigade and division level in their armed forces.

This year's class totaled 75 officers from Argentina, Bolivia, Canada, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Mexico, Peru, the United States, and Venezuela.

Guest speaker and presenter for the event was Maj. Gen. Keith M. Huber, deputy commanding general of the 1st U.S. Army, at Fort Gillem near Atlanta.

Speaking in both Spanish and English to the graduates, Huber commended the exchange of cultures and ideas, which he said he felt is essential to ensure cooperation and security throughout the hemisphere.

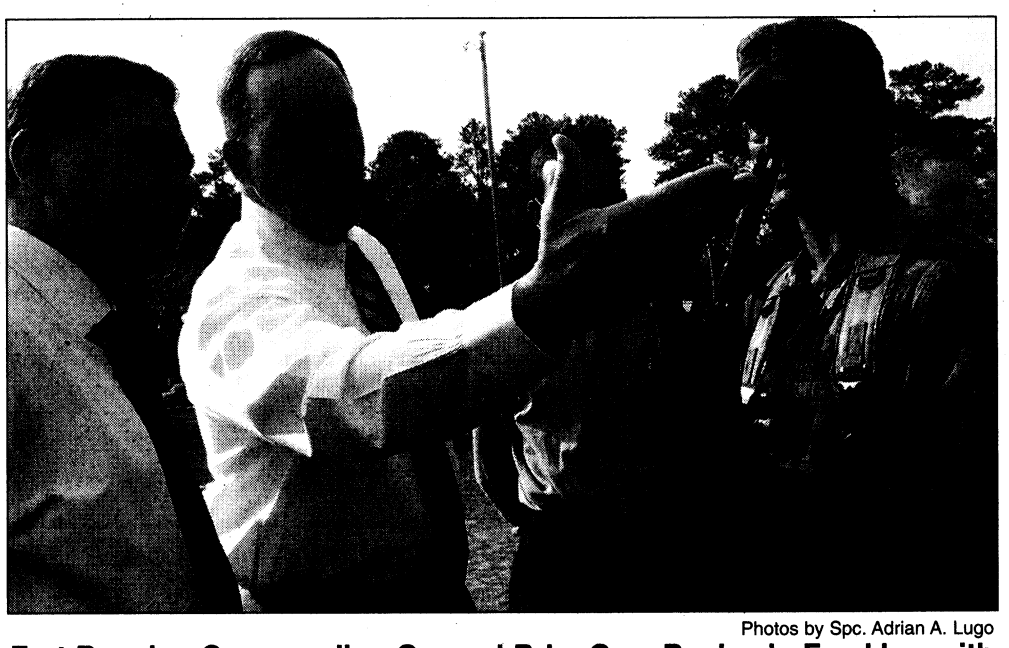
"Soon you will all return to your respective countries and duties. You need to take the opportunity, take the responsibility, to protect the innocent and defend your country and defend the lives and liberty of current and future generations," Huber said.

His key message to this year's class was, as leaders, to spread the knowledge they acquired at the Institute.

"You are all now members of a team of excellence and success as part of this course," Huber said. "Your responsibility is to form and build other teams of success of your profession for the future. You should all have success in accomplishing this and I know in my heart you can do this."

Huber also talked about the importance trust can play in leadership.

"It is written that the first casualty of war is innocence," he said. " I propose to you that if there is another casualty, it is trust. Once you lose trust in your fellow members it is something you will never regain, and you should fight 'til your last breath to maintain that trust."



He ended his speech with the words "¡Vaya con dios! (God speed!)" after congratulating the class on their accomplishment.

During the ceremony, 12 of the class members received master's degrees earned during their time at the CGSOC.

Nine students earned a master of science in management from Troy University; one, a master of education in sports management from Troy State University; one, a master of arts in human resources development from Webster University; and one a master of science in administration from Central Michigan University.

Although not a member of the graduating class, Peruvian Navy Commander Luis Garcia, a guest instructor at the institute, also received a master of science in management from Troy State.

Staff talks internationally

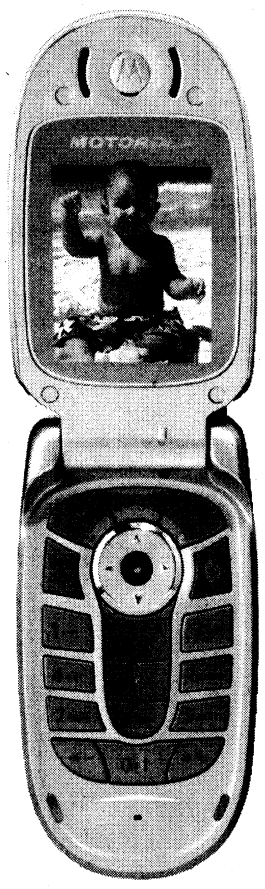
Fort Benning Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley, with help from Staff Sgt. Mathew Reigle of 4th Ranger Training Battalion, explain a Ranger's weapon system to Brazilian Maj. Gen. Marco Aurélio on June 8 at Malvesti Field. The visiting general is chief of Special Operations for Brazil, and headed a delegation of officials wishing to learn more about U.S. training and institutions — specifically special forces training and peacekeeping operations in Haiti.

Brazilian Maj. Gen. Marco Aurélio and WHINSEC Commandant Col. Gilberto Pérez unveil a painting of "The Great Peacemaker: Duque do Caxias (Luis Alves de Lima e Silva)" at the Institute on June 7. WHINSEC named a conference room in Ridgway Hall in honor of the Brazilian founding father.

Fort Benning's staff talk week provided leaders of the United States and Brazilian armies an opportunity to exchange knowledge at an exceptional level.

A delegation of senior U.S. and Brazilian military leaders arrived at Fort Benning Monday. They met in several sessions to discuss issues and present briefings on aspects of each country's armed forces.



Staff talks are conducted by national delegations representing their armies on a number of issues of interest. Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley and Fort Benning held the staff talk week on behalf of the chief of Staff of the U.S. Army and the Training and Doctrine Command.

Delegates were briefed on issues like the training of Brazil's special forces, U.S. Special Forces and Rangers, the Brazilian army's peacekeeping operations and its role in urban operations and homeland security; and the U.S. experience in the Haiti peacekeeping operation.

During the week, the delegations also had the opportunity to visit Atlanta and observed Ranger hand-to-hand combat and obstacle course training.

The staff talks concluded Thursday with bilateral presentations and a closing dinner at the River Club in Columbus.

Environmental assessment team to visit Fort Benning

Robert Mlakar
SERO EPAS

An assessment team will be on post June 22 through July 2 to identify and prescribe fixes to environmental issues .

The team, comprised of 17 area experts selected by Department of the Army, are to identify environmental issues and prescribe meaningful fixes.

The identified fixes may be additional resources or corrections to daily business practices, to further heighten the installation's overall level of compliance, said Jackie Lynd, an environmental specialist and the post Environmental Performance Assessment System program manager.

This visit will have a three-pronged intent:

• To identify areas in need of assistance and provide suggested corrections with estimated costs, if applicable;

• To identify the positive efforts and programs Fort Benning's Environmental Office is performing over and above federal, state, local, Department of Defense, or Department of Army laws and regulations; and

• To identify other initiatives in areas that may not exceed environmental regulations or laws but are extremely well managed and worthy of recognition through the Southeast Region Office to HQDA to share with others (Issues of Special Recognition).

The process that aids in accomplishing this effort is the external portion of the EPAS.

The EPAS serves as the garrison commander's "early warning device" of potential risks, with associated fixes and costs, as well as identifying positive initiatives already in place, Lynd said.

The EPAS has been in effect for 11 years and doesn't create a "gig sheet," issue fines or penalties, carry a gun, or point fingers, but rather provides suggested building blocks for the installation to consider, to further elevate the overall environmental compliance posture.

Lynd said it is important to be open and candid with the individual team members if the team visits your activity. Inaccurate or partial information may cause allocation of inadequate resources or prevent a true fix, leaving Fort Benning open for potential enforcement actions.

The team has extensive compliance experience and may be able to offer corrective suggestions on how to improve upon a current practice or provide instructional on-the-spot solutions.

For more information about the EPAS or environmental issues call Lynd at 545-1296.

CRIME SCENE

Vandals strike at Stowers ... twice

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

The sign on the door reads "Treat people as if they were what they ought to be and you help them become what they're capable of being."

The window above it is smashed to smithereens.

At last count, 21 windows had been busted out at Stowers Elementary School, the result of two attacks by neighborhood teens.

Alarms were ripped from their sockets, ceilings were damaged, vending machines smashed, doors spray-painted, and equipment and money belonging to the school and staff were stolen — all in all, authorities are making an early conservative estimate of nearly $6,000 worth of damage and theft.

"In a sense, we're kind of fortunate, I guess," said Dr. Tom Dignan, Stowers principal. "They obviously spent a lot of time in here. It could've been so much worse. That's the way we're trying to look at it."

Stowers sits smack-dab in the middle of the Bouton Heights and Davis Hill housing areas, but it's fairly secluded, encircled by woods, with one access road.

Authorities say at least two juveniles broke into the school sometime after the last custodian left at 11 p.m. June 2, which was the last day of school for Fort Benning students. A staff member discovered the damage the following morning, and teachers were turned away from the building so authorities could investigate.

Then it happened again, this time in broad daylight.

A military policeman on patrol spotted a youth fleeing the school Sunday evening around 6 p.m. Another youth was apprehended shortly thereafter.

Sgt. 1st Class Clarence Rambo, MP investigation supervisor, said officials believe the subjects were in the building at least once before the break-ins.

Neither of the subjects have prior criminal records, Rambo said. They were released to their parents, and the case is still under investigation.

The subjects may be tried in Muscogee County or here on post, through the garrison's Juvenile Misconduct Administrative Action Program.

Don't let pool chemicals get 'out of whack'

Sgt. Kim Dooley

The hot Georgia weather has set in, and with it comes a staple of summer — swimming. Pool owners need to be aware of several factors when maintaining their pools.

Barbara Rivera, a nurse at Pediatric After Hours in Columbus, is seeing patients who have chemical reactions because the pH in the pool was too low.

"Children have come in with second-degree burns in places that get rubbed a lot while swimming.

"Around the time they come to us, there is no skin on the areas that were rubbed, either with their clothes, swimming floats or by a parent just holding them.

"Not only does it happen to children, it will happen to anyone swimming in water where the chemicals are out of whack."

The two most important chemical levels to measure in swimming pools are chlorine and pH, according to the Center for Disease Control. They disinfect germs that can make swimmers sick.

The pH is important because the germ-killing power of chlorine varies with pH level.

As pH goes up, chlorine's effectiveness goes down. A swimmer has a pH between 7.2 and 7.8, so if pool water

Benning neighborhood kids pitch in to save 7-year-old dog-mauling victim's life

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

A full-grown, female Rottweiler attacked a 7-year-old girl in the Custer Terrace housing area May 28.

Kayla Sifre and her friends headed for the wood line within earshot of their Kessler Drive homes around 7 p.m. Within minutes, Kayla was attacked by the dog, leaving her with 60 holes and scratches on her body, a deep gash in her right thigh and a broken left arm.

Kayla was in the middle of a hill, several yards from her friends, Alexis Adkins and Reno Kincy, when Alexis heard the dog growl.

"Reno said a bad word and he ran," Kayla said. "Lexi said 'dog' and then she fell down the hill. I just stood there."

Kalya said the dog started to chase Reno as he ran. When Reno stopped, the dog stopped and turned around toward her. She picked up a stick, threw it and told the dog to "fetch."

Instead, the dog bit her first in the leg, leaving a tear that went all the way to the muscle and required eight stitches to close.

"The next thing I knew, I was yelling 'help'," she said. "I had my arms up over my face and the dog pushed me down and was biting my back and he bit my butt."

The dog bit Kayla's arms as she protected her face, breaking one of the bones in her left forearm.

Neighbors Lance Lejeune and Brandon Kincy, both 7, were at the top of the hill and saw the dog attacking her. Lance ran for help. Brandon threw his slice of watermelon to try to distract the dog. When it didn't move, he grabbed a big stick and started to hit the dog.

The beating, Kayla's mom, Spc. Wendy Singleton said, broke the dog's concentration long enough for Kayla to crawl out of the wood line.

"They saved my life," Kayla said.

The dog turned to Brandon, who continued to hit it as Lance's mother, Jennifer arrived with Wendy right behind. Jennifer grabbed Kayla and the dog started to go toward Wendy, then

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Sick of sitting around in that barracks room looking at the walls? Need to get the family out of the house or just take a break? We've got the answer for you. 'Get Outta Here' appears in The Bayonet each week to highlight recreation and leisure venues right here in the tricommunity. If you would like to suggest a hot spot for the column, call Sgt. Kim Dooley at 545-3367.

If you read the opinion page this week, you already know I'm on a budget. And lucky for me, I have the perfect place to while away hours at a time and not even notice — for free.

Barnes & Noble has always been one of my favorite stores, although it is a big chain store. In a way, that's part of the appeal. I've been going to one Barnes & Noble or another since I was old enough to drive.

Back home in Portland, Ore., in high school, I was a frequent visitor, trudging with my backpack and books to do homework. Then, in California, where I spent three years at the National Training Center, it was a place to get away from the God-awful heat and pretend I wasn't really in the Mojave Desert.

Even if you're not a Barnes & Noble regular, there's a little something in it for everyone. The store has books and magazines on just about any subject you can think of, big, comfy chairs and a Starbucks.

Just last weekend, my boyfriend and I stopped in for our little ritual — he drooled over snowboarding magazines, and I brought my trusty pen and paper and rifled through home decorating rags.

Before we knew it, we'd been there four hours. Count 'em, four.

Granted, my attention span is a little longer than his. But even after he'd had all the extreme winter sports literature he could handle, he moseyed on over to the humor section and came back to the table with an arm full of joke books.

He spent the next hour or so trading jokes and one-liners with a friend he'd bumped into.

It was perfect.

We were both completely entertained, content and definitely not ready to go home by the time we realized it was getting dark outside.

As you can tell, we had plenty of time on our hands that

Full Spectrum Warrior — The Full Spectrum Warrior event planned for today has been rescheduled for Thursday from 3 to 6 p.m. at the Main Mall Post Exchange. Compete via the Internet against warriors in California. There will be prizes and free barbecue.

For more information, call 687-0384.

Camp Courage — Camp Courage, School Age Services' summer camp, will begin Monday, with registration in progress. Spaces are reserved only if they are paid for in advance.

For more information, call 513-2079 or 513-3605.

Benning Buddies — Child and Youth Services will begin a "Benning Buddies" program at Tot Town CDC Monday.

The program will run from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m., including lunch, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.

It will include beginning gymnastics, beginning sports and fitness, and music and movement within the regular developmental program. Children from 2 years old to preK are eligible.

Fees will be based on family income, and may range from $82 to $170 per month. Fourteen slots will be filled on a first-come, first-serve basis. A $50 nonrefundable placement fee will be required.

For more information, call the CYS registration office at 545-2079.

MACH News — Beginning July 1, Martin Army Community Hospital will remove Allegra, an antihistamine, from the formulary, and it will no longer be available. Claritin, however, will remain on the formulary as a prescription, non-sedating antihistamine.

If you need an antihistamine, ask your physician to provide you with a new prescription for Claritin 10mg.

As with other non-formulary medications, if your provider feels it necessary for you to continue taking Allegra, you may obtain it through a network retail pharmacy or through the Tricare mail-order system with a small co-pay.

For more information, call the pharmacy at 544-4666.

Camp Follow Me — Child and Youth Services and Army Community Service Exceptional Family Member Program will offer Camp Follow Me, a special needs summer camp, for grades kindergarten through eighth, July 26-30.

Camp will be from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Activities offered will be bowling, arts and crafts, movies, sports activities and more. Snacks will be provided.

Registration will be June 21-25.

Also, both CYS and the ACS EFMP are recruiting volunteers for this program who have an interest in becoming camp assistants and buddies to program participants.

To register, call Central Registration at 545-2079.

If you have are interested or need more information about the camp, call the ACS EFMP manager at 545-7517 or 545-5521.

To make an appointment for these classes, call 544-CARE.

Family housing medical conditions — Family Housing Maintenance Shaw Infrastructure requests that all family housing occupants who have medical conditions provide a doctor's letters for medical exception to the Family Housing Maintenance Shop at Building 228 on Kilgore Street.

The purpose for the medical exception letter is to allow for a higher priority on service orders pertaining to air conditioning, heating and other maintenance requests.

This only affects occupants of Iron Triangle, White Elephants, Miller Loop, Austin Loop, McDonald Manor, Indianhead Terrace, Upatoi Terrace and Custer Terrace.

For more information, call Bill Napier at 545-4326.

OSC Super Sign-Up — The Officers' Spouses' Club will host its Activities and Membership Sign-Up Night Aug. 19.

This community event is held annually as a resource for the Fort Benning community. Organizations and vendors from on and off post will set up booths to offer information about upcoming events, needs, products and services.

The OSC is currently taking applications for organizations and vendors interested in participating in the event.

Booth space is offered on a first-come, first-serve basis.

To receive a vendor application, call Georganna Rapaport at 687-9396 or grap4vt@hotmail.com or Sheryl Nix at 685-8566 or thnixes@pkfamily.com by June 30.

Educational Task Force — The garrison commander would like to recruit volunteers to serve on a new Educational Task Force.

The task force's responsibility will be to report to the garrison commander on issues affecting military families and students in surrounding school districts.

The task force will be comprised of parent volunteers who have students in each of the following school districts: Russell County, Harris County, Lee County (Ala.), Phenix City, Fort Benning Dependent School System, Chattahoochee County and Muscogee County.

If you are interested in joining the Educational Task Force, call Dewayne Baldwin at 545-3062 or e-mail dewayne.baldwin@benning.army.mil.

Establishing credit: A Catch 22

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Credit — it's a nasty word in most circles. But what many people may not understand is that it's a necessary evil.

Many people think of maxed out credit cards and sinking in debt when they think about credit. But that's not the only form. In fact, credit isn't always a bad thing.

Establishing credit for the first time can be a Catch 22 situation, according to a press release from the Georgia Society of CPAs. You need to establish a credit history, but it's hard to obtain credit without a credit history.

"You need credit to get credit," said Patricia Herron, a financial counselor at Fort Benning's Financial Readiness Program.

"Many people won't give you credit if you don't already have it," she said. "And a lot of Soldiers end up going downtown to payday lenders, not because they have bad credit, but because they have no credit."

There are several credit-wise ways to build up a history that might come in handy in the future. The GSCPAs suggests the following:

• Open a bank account. Opening a savings or checking account is the first step to establishing a financial history, according to the GSCPAs. Follow the bank's rules and be sure you don't overdraw your account. While bank accounts don't create a credit file, their very existence demonstrates that you have money and shows you can handle it responsibly.

• Put your apartment and utilities in your name. This allows you to establish a regular payment history under your own name and social security number. Recurring bills, such as rent, utilities and car insurance, paid in a timely manner, can indicate that you are a good credit risk. Keep copies of the bills and your cancelled checks. You might also ask your landlord, utility company or insurance agent to write letters on your behalf, stating that you have consistently paid your bills on time.

• Apply for a charge card. Consider applying for a department store or oil company credit card. These cards usually carry low credit lines and are typically easier to obtain. The interest rate may be high, but if you pay the entire balance each month, the rate won't matter. Before opening one, ask if the lender reports repayment information to a recognized credit-reporting agency. Not all do. You don't want your efforts to establish a credit rating to be wasted.

• Consider a secure credit card. Another way to establish credit is through a secured credit card. With this method, you deposit a specific amount into a special account, and you receive a card with a credit limit that equals your deposit. For example, if you have $1,000, your credit limit will be $1,000. So you're borrowing against your own money and paying interest to do so. Although this is not a good deal financially, it's a viable way to establish credit.

You can also use your savings account as a sort of "secure" credit source, Herron said.

"Say you have a couple hundred dollars in your account," she explained. "You go into the bank and you borrow $200 and use your savings account as collateral.

"So the amount of the loan is frozen in your account, but it's still collecting interest. So, you don't spend the money you borrowed — you put it back in the account — and you start paying back the loan."

Herron also suggested using lay away for large purchases and putting the purchases on your credit report.

"Any (situation in which) you make regular payments can help your credit," she said.

No matter what route you choose to establish your credit, the key is to be careful and ensure your efforts don't hurt you.

Make sure you don't get carried away and overextend yourself, Herron said, and always try to pay off your full amount on charge cards every month.

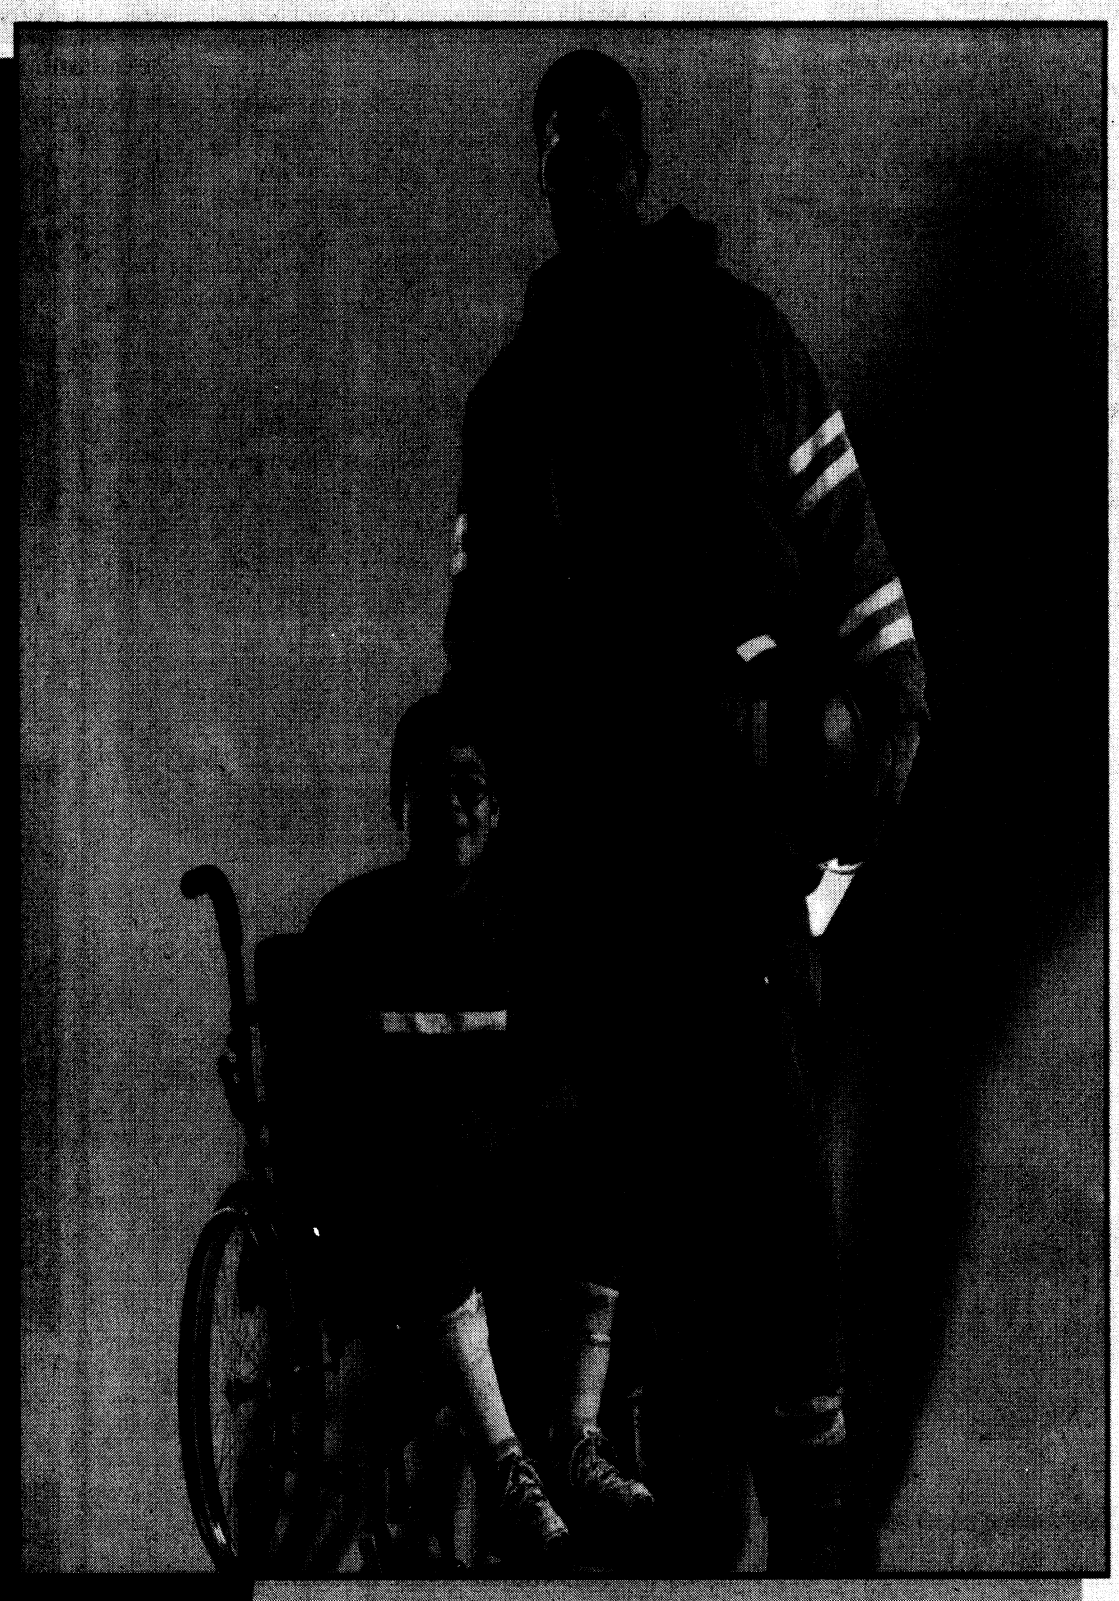
She also emphasized the importance of protecting yourself from identity theft by checking your credit report once a year once you establish credit means.

"Sixty percent of people who discovered they were victims (in the past few years) found out when they checked their credit reports; otherwise, they would have never known," Herron said.

Fort Benning Independence Day Celebration

Celebrate America's day of independence and the return of the Follow Me Statue at 5 p.m. on July 1 at York Field.

There will be food, fun for the kids, music by JAG STAR and the Infantry Band, an air assault demo by the Rangers, a jump by the Silver Wings Parachute Team and a fireworks display sure to top last year's.



So come on out, bring a blanket and enjoy the fun, but no pets, please!

Admission and parking are free and the event is open to Fort Benning and the Columbus community.

In the event of inclement weather, the celebration will move to July 2.

Attack: Leaves girl with 60 puncture wounds, broken arm turned and went back into its yard.

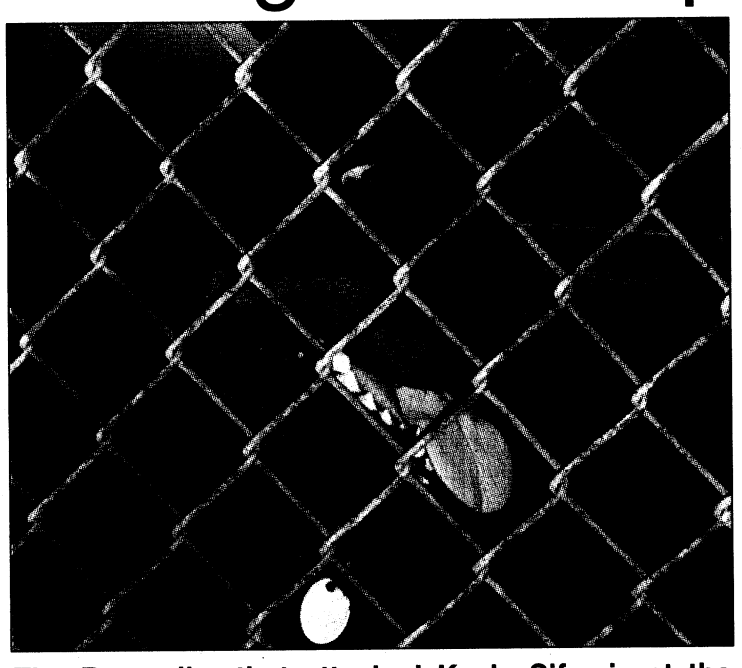
Kayla went by ambulance to Martin Army Community Hospital, where she was treated and released.



The dog's owner was in California at the time of the attack. The Rottweiler and its female littermate were in a makeshift enclosure behind the owner's house and were being cared for by a neighbor.

By the time Staff Sgt. Dan Akens got outside, he said the dog had gotten back into the enclosure — blocked at one entrance by a doghouse and a table at the other. Military police took both dogs, which are being held at the Veterinary Treatment Facility.

Singleton is waiting to find out what will be done with the dog who attacked her daughter.

"I'm a dog lover," Wendy said. "I'm not one to say 'kill the animal' over a bite. But this was classified as a mauling because of the repeated bites."

She has Kayla's bloody sock and shoe, and can put a finger through the one bite hole in Kayla's shirt. All of Kayla's injuries, thankfully, she said, were below her neck.

The Rottweiler that attacked Kayla Sifre is at the Veterinary Clinic, awaiting the return of its owner.

Wendy said Kayla is upset that she can't do the normal summer activities.

"But she's a very strong kid," she said. "She's doing well and is very mature about what happened."

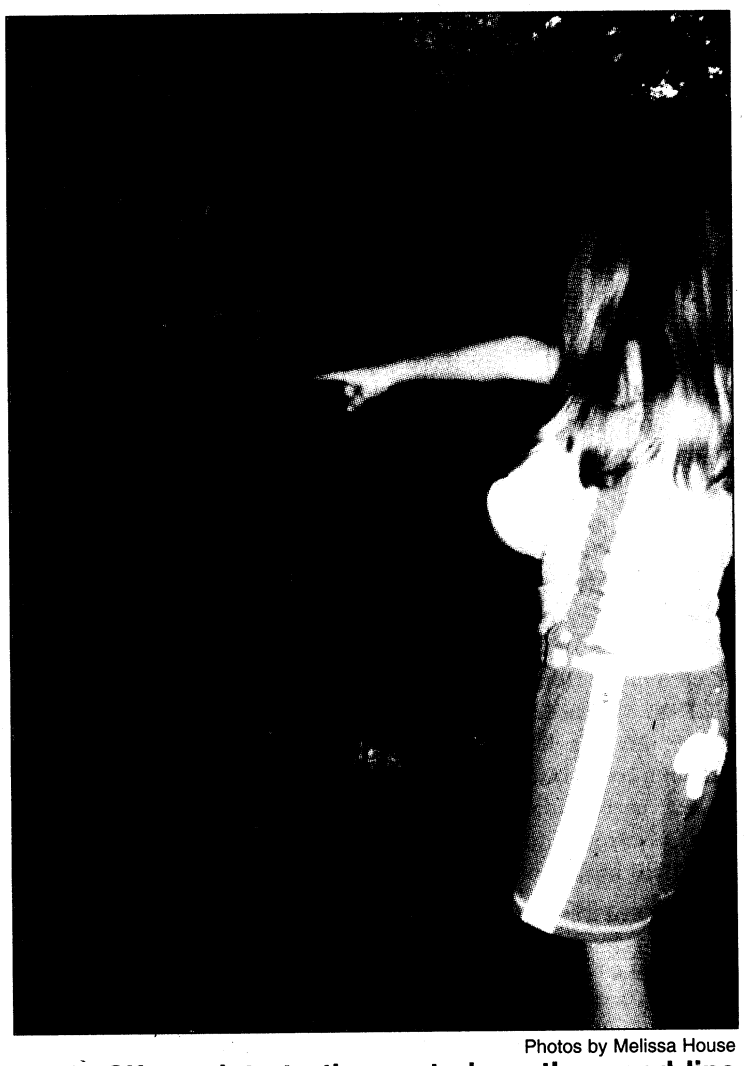
Although she is healing quickly, Wendy said Kayla remembers every detail and will have to live with that trauma and the visible scars for the rest of her life.

Ironically, the week before the dog attack was National Dog Bite Prevention Week.

More than 4.7 million people each year are bitten by dogs, according the Center for Disease Control Web site. The CDC also tracks data on dog attack fatalities.

Between 1979 and 1997, Rottweiler attacks had the second highest number of fatalities, behind pit bulls.

Because half of the 800,000 Americans seeking treatment for bites are children, the National Center for Injury Prevention and Control recommends parents teach children basic safety around dogs. Downloadable resources are available at the American Veterinary Medical Association Web site, www.avma.org.



Severe injuries occur almost exclusively in children 10 and younger and 61 percent happen in a familiar place.

A dog may do these things before it attacks:

Stiffen
Lean forward
Growl
Stare
Hair stands up

If you notice a dog exhibiting these signs:

Stay calm
Back away slowly
Avoid eye contact
Curl into a ball and protect your head and face if the dog knocks you down isn't kept in this range, swimmers can start to feel an irritation on their eyes and skin.
DO NOT RUN.

Keeping the pH in this range will balance the chlorine's germ-killing and minimize skin and eye irritation.

Simple kits bought at a department or a local pool store can measure both chlorine and pH levels.

More extensive test kits are also sold.

General tips for good water quality include:

• Checking pH and chlorine levels daily. These tests should be done before the first swim of the day.

In hot weather, check the pH and chlorine levels twice a day.

• Brush and vacuum the pool on a regular basis.

• Regularly check the pump and other pool equipment and repair or replace parts as necessary.

Also, the CDC Division of Parasitic Diseases recommends not swimming if ill with diarrhea, taking frequent bathroom breaks, not swallowing pool water and practicing good hygiene.

GOH: Book a spot at B & N day — it was a Sunday after all. But whether you're in it for the "long haul," or just looking to kill 30 minutes until your movie starts down the way, it's a great place to wander around and see what interests you.

There's only one other book store like this in Columbus that I know of, and that's Books-A-Million. I prefer Barnes & Noble (it's a nostalgia thing), but Books-a-Million is good in my book (ha... ha... get it?). It's generally less populated than Barnes & Noble, and offers all the same amenities, including their own version of Starbucks, Joe Muggs.

Both places have convenient plug-ins for your laptops, too. So, it's a good place to get some work done — if you're not easily distracted, that is.

So next time you're holed up working on that term paper, bored out of your mind sitting in the barracks, or just out on the town looking for something to do, stop in and take a look around at either of these places. Especially if you have an interest in mind. Everything from sports to music to language to crafts to food to … well, whatever else there is, you're bound to find it.

Random thoughts on God's grace

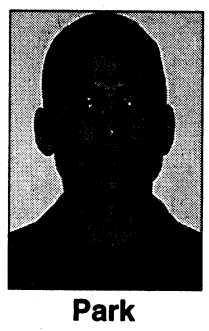
Like Abraham, we must trust God for provision

Chaplain (Capt.) Se W. Park
2nd Battalion,19th Infantry Regiment

It is said that history repeats itself, but God intervenes through it all.

God provided the Promised Land for his chosen people.

He gave his son for our salvation.



He is even now looking for individuals willing to be used for his purpose.

Joseph heard God's voice through two dreams and made it his mission to be a witness for God, no matter what the consequences.

According to my count, Abraham heard God's voice 10 times and received amazing grace.

One of God's messages to Abraham was a command to offer his son, Isaac, as a sacrifice (Genesis 22:1).

REFLECTIONS

Park

His faith was sorely tested, but he acted in confidence that God's will would ultimately produce wonderful results.

He was willing to obey, though his submission would bring great personal pain.

Abraham prepared himself and his son until the very moment of sacrifice, and God, seeing his willingness, provided a substitute sacrifice.

True faith means being faithful to God in all things.

We hear God's voice through the Scripture, and we are to obey it no matter what will happen to us, because we know God will provide something good in all circumstances. (Romans 8:28)

The Scriptures read "...when the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on the earth?" (Luke 18:8)

We have tendencies to compromise ourselves with things like sex, alcohol and money. Why? "Because it is the end." (II Timothy 3:1-4)

The Bible tells us that in the end of time, men will love themselves, money and pleasure more than God.

That means we are losing the fundamental mission, "to enjoy God himself."

But God wants to provide something good for us and for this country still.

Make teenagers mind, don't lose yours

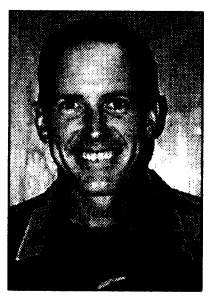
Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Chaplain Family Life Center

Drawing on the latest scientific studies of adolescents, Laurence Steinburg, a professor of psychology at Temple University, offers this advice for the parents of teens:

• What you do matters.

Many parents mistakenly believe that by the time children have become teenagers, there's nothing more a parent can do.

But studies clearly show that good parenting continues to help teenagers develop in healthy ways, stay out of trouble and do well in school.



• You can't be too loving.

Don't hold back when it comes to pouring on the praise and showing physical affection.

There is no evidence that adolescents are harmed by having parents who are unabashedly loving — as long as you don't embarrass them in front of their friends.

• Stay involved.

Many who were active in their child's life during the early years withdraw when their child becomes a teenager. This is a mistake.

Hawkins

It's just as important for you to be involved now — maybe even more.

Participate in school programs. Get to know your child's friends. Spend time together.

• Adapt your parenting.

Many parenting strategies that work with one age group stop working at the next stage of development.

As children get older, for example, their ability to reason improves dramatically, and they will challenge you if what you are asking doesn't make sense.

• Set limits.

The most important thing children need from their parents is love, but a close second is structure.

Even teenagers need rules and limits. Be firm but fair. Relax your rules bit by bit as your child demonstrates more maturity.

If he or she can't handle the freedom, tighten the reins and try again in a few months.

• Foster independence.

Many parents erroneously equate their teenagers' drive for independence with rebelliousness, disobedience or disrespect.

It's healthy for adolescents to push for autonomy. Give children the psychological space they need to learn to be self-reliant and resist the temptation to micromanage.

• Explain your decisions.

Good parents have expectations, but in order for your teenager to live up to them, your rules and decisions have to be clear and appropriate.

As your child becomes more adept at reasoning, it's no longer good enough to say, "Because I said so."

Steinberg's most recent book is The 10 Basic Principles of Good Parenting.

WHAT'S THE CATCH? Pool stocked with catfish, nearly 300 hooked

Photos by Lori Egan

Denise O'Steen helps Katelyn Sanders, 8, land a fish during Saturday's fishing rodeo at Russ Pool. There will be another fishing rodeo 9 to 11 a.m. June 19 at the duck pond on Sand Hill for children ages 1 to 15 with parental supervision. Bring your pole and bait. Prizes will be awarded for first through third place for the following age groups: 1 to 3, 4 to 6, 7 to 10 and 11 to 15.

Lori Egan
Bayonet editor

Cries of "I've got another one!" and "Ooh! It's a big one!" floated across Russ Pool during the annual fishing rodeo Saturday.

Jediah Conachan, 6, reminded his parents that he won his age category last year for the most fish caught and was fishing with the pole he received as the prize.

"I know how to fish now," Conachan said, dismissing beginner's luck for his success in last year's rodeo.

During last year's rodeo, 500 fish were caught. This year, Russ Pool was stocked with 1,500 channel catfish. And children were catching fish with almost every cast.

Andrew Kessler, 8, and his brother Ian, 6, kept their dad busy removing hooks and putting fish on the stringer.

Andrew said they caught 16 fish big enough to keep but released a lot of the smaller fish.

Addison Nash, 5, developed a blister by reeling in 12 fish in 40 minutes.

After Sage Miska, 8, caught one fish, she was ready to go home and show her catch to her mother. Miska caught her first fish at Lake Hickory, N.C., during the Easter holiday and Saturday's catfish brought her record to four, she said, as her father improvised a way to get the fish home.

The Miskas didn't bring a stringer or a bucket to put fish in, so the plastic bag the children received when they signed in became the carrier for the catfish.

However, the Trueloves came prepared. The family of seven and one neighbor were fishing with chicken liver, and Shiann, 8, had a stringer of fish to prove her fishing prowess. To keep the fish from disappearing and fish stories to a minimum, Shiann's stringer was hooked to her tennis shoe.

"We fished every weekend when we were home," said Staff Sgt. Tim Truelove from Bowling Green, Mo. "The kids grew up on the river."

"Fishing is a great way to spend family time," said Kris Truelove, while her daughter Izzy, 2, caught her first fish.

"We catch fish every time we come to Russ Pond," said Landon Truelove, 11.

The fishing rodeo was sponsored by the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation's Youth Sports and Fitness, the Fort Benning B.A.S.S. Club and the Conservation Branch of the Directorate of Public Works, formerly known as the Directorate of Facilities Engineering and Logistics.

The catfish were donated by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, and Michael Fuller, a fish and wildlife technician with DPW, built a feeder ring and monitored the fishes' well-being until Saturday's rodeo.

Fuller said some of the larger catfish might be between 4 and 5 pounds with most weighing around 3 pounds. But prizes were awarded for the most fish caught not the largest.

More than 70 children and their parents lined the banks of the pool for the rodeo and nearly 300 fish were caught.

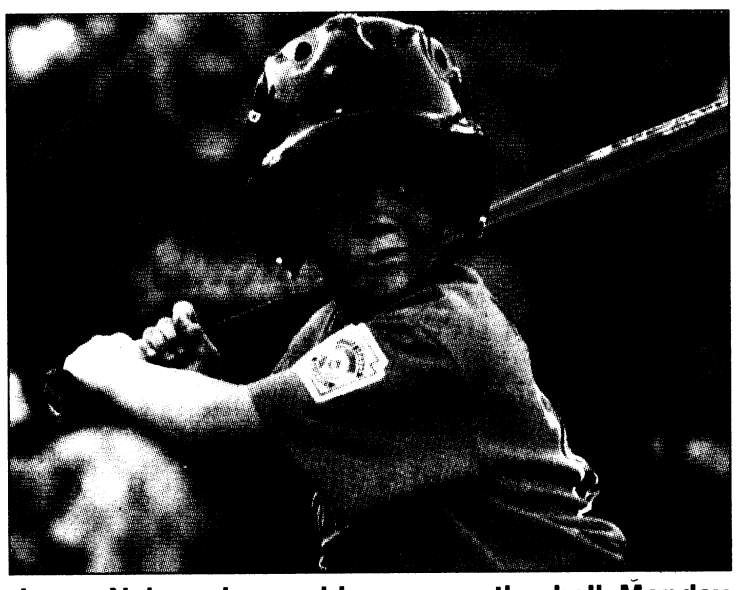
The winners of the most fish caught were:

5- to 6-year-olds — Addison Nash, 18; Ian Kessler, 11; and Nicholas O'Steen, 9.

7- to 8-year-olds — Andrew Kessler, 16; Jonathan Harling-Gray, 14; Ashley Cecil, 12 and Hanna Roenfanzi, 12.

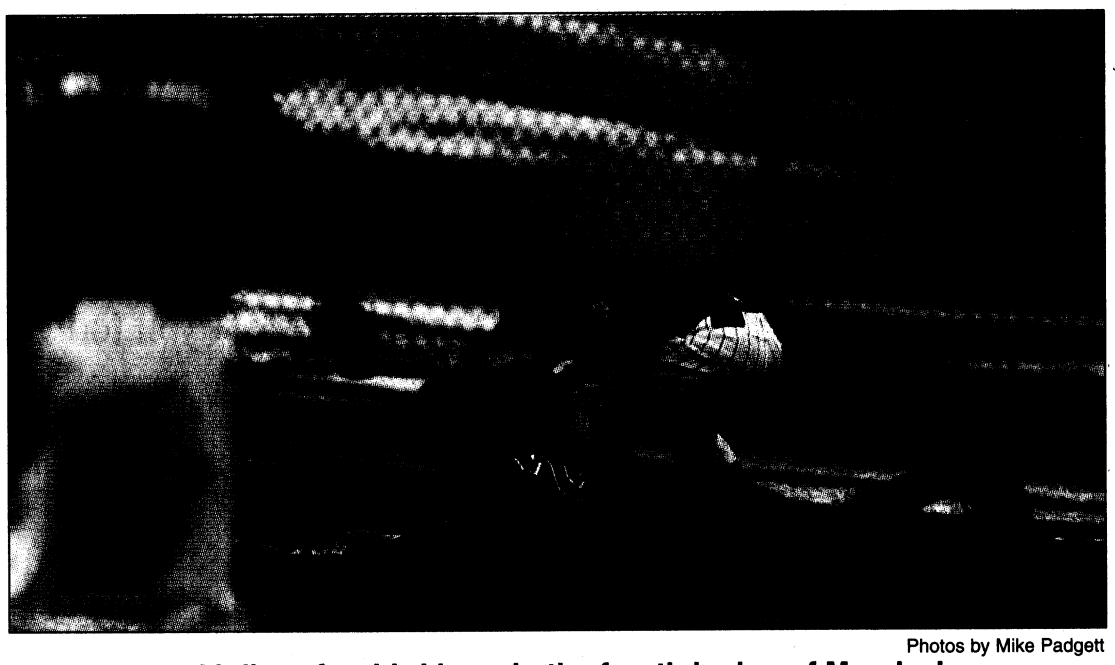
9- to 10-year-olds — Andrew Locke, 23; Christina Aponte, 12; Kyra Rice, 10.

11- to 12-year-olds — Maite Aponte, 12; Bethany Hart, 7; Tevin Hill, 4.



13- to 15-year-olds — Sarah Welty, 14; Tyler Welty, 14; and Raishaun Bennett, 3.

There will be another fishing rodeo June 19 at the duck pond on Sand Hill. For more information, call 544-7516.



National Little League plays close to Benning

Giants lose to Sharks in city tourney

Ryan Borowski dives for third base in the fourth inning of Monday's game.

Parents looking for choices for youth baseball have an option that's close to post — the National Little League.

The league usually has seven or eight teams in T-ball, coach pitch and kid pitch, and around 100 players, said Willie Epps, NLL president.

"We teach the fundamentals of baseball," he said. "We have more games, and we also travel to play against other teams in the area.

Epps, who was a sergeant in the Marines, said a number of the league's coaches and assistant coaches have some connection with the military, and the league has a number of Fort Benning players.

Retired 1st Sgt. Linwood Johnson, coach of the 9- and 10-year-old Giants has been involved in the league for the last six years, when he signed up his grandson, Alan Harris II, and became a coach. Through the years, he's served as a coach, board member and as the league's vice president.

Johnson said the league has been around for about 50 years, even before its home field was called Rigdon Park. The complex was rebuilt 15 years ago and has three baseball fields and one for softball.

Monday night, three Fort Benning youths on Linwood Johnson's Giants team, went to bat against the Chattahoochee County Sharks in the City Tournament, and all three will be members of the NLL All-Star team that will begin playing later this month.

Nate Morrison, 10, got started in baseball six years ago and hopes to play someday for the Cleveland Indians. He started the game at second base, but was called in to pitch the last four innings in the Giants' extra inning loss to the Sharks.

"This is only my first year pitching," Nate said, "and my favorite position is pitcher."

This is also Nate's first season playing with the NLL at Rigdon Park, which he said he likes because of the 20-game season.

Nate said he felt the most pressure when he was called in to pitch at the city tournament, but was able to keep his head in the game and actually stole home to put a run on the board for his team.

Teammate Ryan Borowski is a shortstop at heart, but played at second and third base during the season. It was also his first season at Rigdon Park and he plans to play there again, hoping they win the city tournament next year.

"I like it because it's competitive," Ryan said. "We have more games so we have more playing time and it's fun."

He said the city tournament put more pressure on the team not to make mistakes. Despite the pressure he felt, he batted in one run to put the Giants ahead in the third inning, attributing his success, in part, to the fact that he's the only left-handed batter on his team.

Ryan said the Giants had lost to the Sharks in one regular season match up, 8-6, and were hoping to win the game.

Johnson said despite the loss, the team played well.

"My hat's off to them, Johnson said. "We started working toward the city tournament at the beginning of the season."

The Giants' overall record was 15-2.

Johnson said although Fort Benning is in his league's recruiting area, the military kids only began trickling in within the last three years.

This year, he said, about 25 percent of the players are from post.

"I enjoy all the kids," Johnson said. "And the military children are disciplined. Ryan Borowski is probably the best I've ever coached. It's his attitude and his willingness to learn."

He said what helps is that the military dads come out when they can.

"They help out a lot," he said. "They work around their schedules, help the kids and help the league."

Although the season is now officially over, Johnson will start working with the players from his team selected for the all-star team.

Fort Benning players, Jesse Nelson and Ryan, along with Alan and teammates Brandon Bynam and Donald Crayton, start practice Monday with the all-stars.

For more information about the NLL at Rigdon Park, call Johnson at 464-5001.

The tournament will be held Sept. 2 at the Bull Creek Golf Course, 7333 Lynch Road in Midland, Ga., just off Highway 80 (the North Bypass).

For more information, call Jim O'Donnell at 644-2066 or 569-5057.

Par for a Purpose — The golf tournament Par for a Purpose, benefiting the Columbus Alliance for Battered Women, will be June 17 at the Woodland Hills Golf Course. Tee times are 8:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. Cost is $50 per golfer and $200 for a four-person best ball scramble.

Lunch will be provided, along with prizes for first-, second- and third-place teams. There will also be door prizes and mulligans for $5. For more information, call 225-4101.

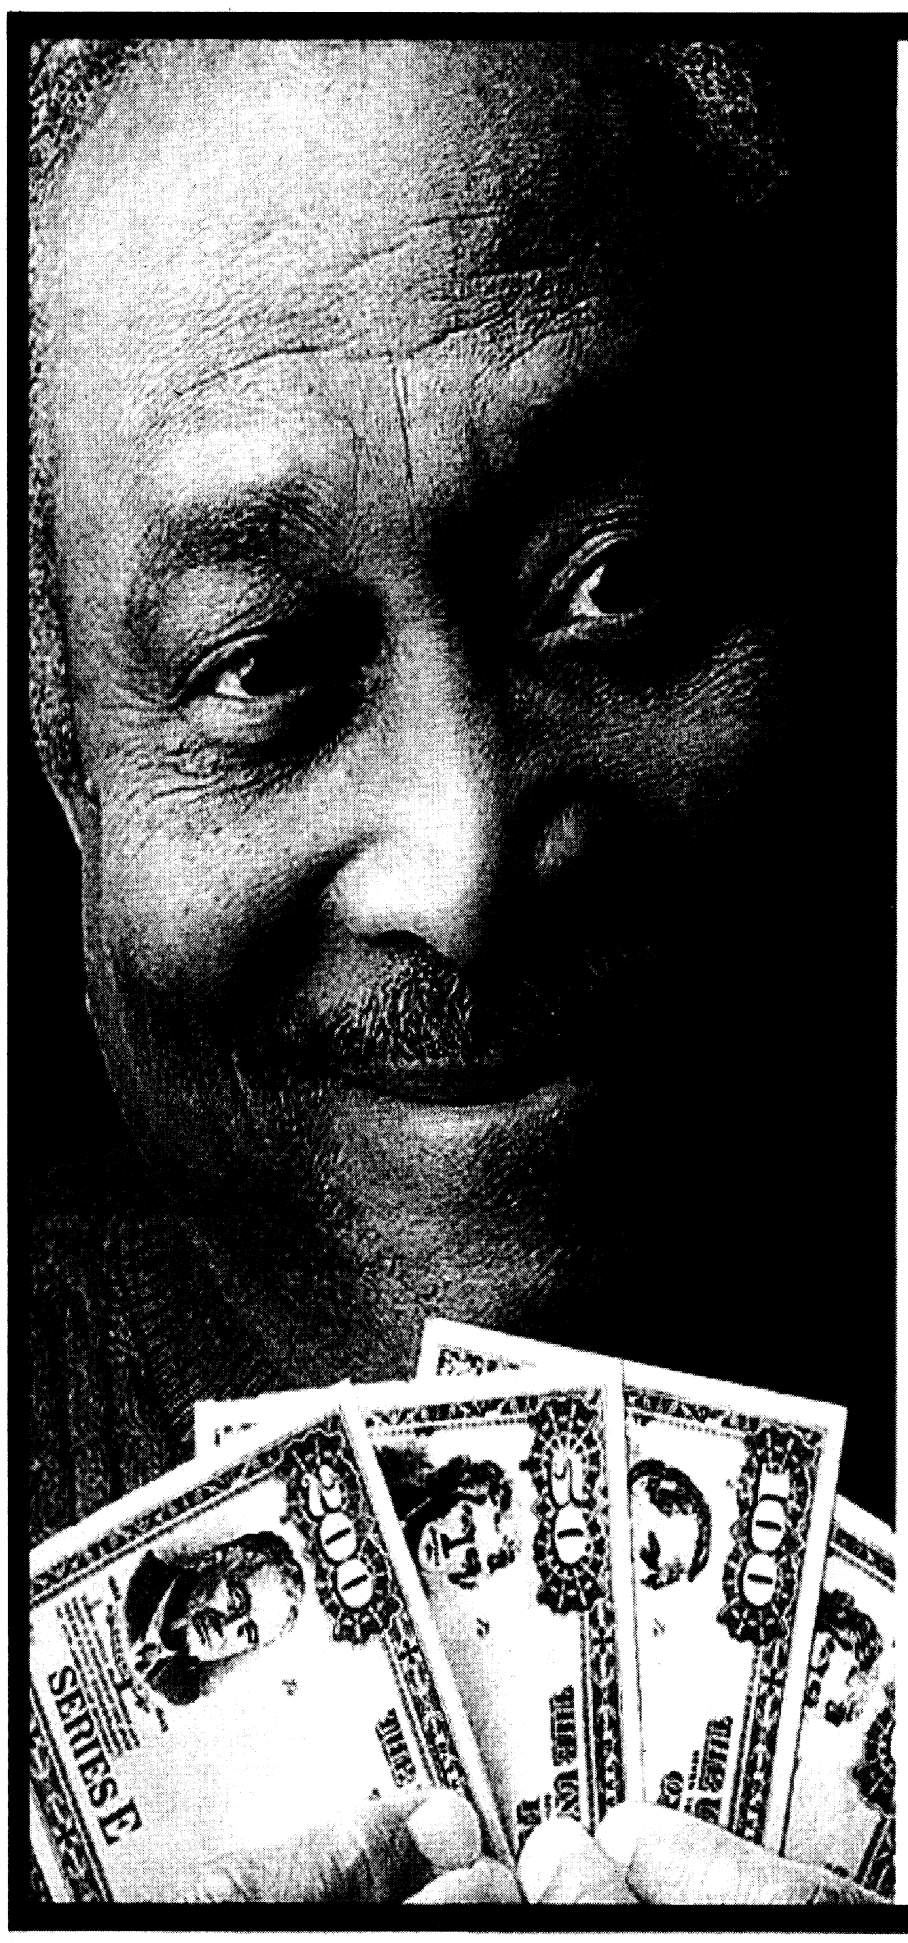
Children's fishing — The Georgia Agricultural Exposition Authority invites groups of children (minimum of 10 per group) to fish at the Georgia National Fairgrounds and Agricenter during June, National Fishing Month. One of the Agricenter's lakes, which has been stocked with catfish, will be available at no charge on a reservation-only basis.

Fishing is limited to any three-hour period between 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Saturday. To schedule a trip, call (478) 987-3247.

Chess tournaments — Players of all ages and skills are invited to the Chattahoochee Valley Scholastic Chess League Third Thursday Chess Tournaments at the Columbus Museum.

The tournament rounds begin at 6, 6:45 and 7:30 p.m. The museum is located at 1251 Wynnton Road. Admission is free. For more information, call 649-0713.

Fort Benning Independence Day Celebration



Celebrate America's day of independence and the return of the Follow Me Statue at 5 p.m. on July 1, at York Field.

There will be food, fun for the kids, music by JAG STAR and the Infantry Band, an air assault demo by the Rangers, a jump by the Silver Wings Parachute Team and a fireworks display sure to top last year's.

So come on out, bring a blanket and enjoy the fun, but no pets please!

Admission and parking are free and the event is open to Fort Benning and the Columbus community.

In the event of inclement weather, the celebration will move to July 2.

I found buried treasure in my attic.

More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you some Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. You were looking for old records when you found an unexpected treasure . . . those old Series E Savings Bonds. And even though your old bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value. So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US BOND, or write to Savings Bonds, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. Old Savings Bonds. They're a treasure worth digging for.

Seems like you're always the last person in the office to find out about a great way to save money. Well, this time you're the first. You've just discovered Series I Bonds from the U.S. Treasury. They're guaranteed to earn a rate of return over and above inflation for 30 years, so you can't lose. What's more, you can get this protection for as little as $50. For more information, check out www.savingsbonds.gov. And be the first in your office to get in on a good thing.

Kindergarten - 8th Grades
Uchee Creek Campground
(New Facilities Building)
Ft. Benning, GA
(706)545-4053

Camp will be divided into three separate age groups. K-2nd, 3rd – 5th and 6th – 8th. Everyone (K-8th grades) will arrive at Uchee Creek Camp (New Facilities Building) by 9:00am each day to sign in. The older children (3rd – 5th and 6th – 8th) will depart at separate intervals to Richardson's Farm for their daily activities and K – 2nd will remain at Uchee Creek for their activities. Everyone will return to Uchee Creek for parent pickup by 5:00pm each day.

Cost is $50

2nd child - $40
3rd child - Free

(Example: 1 child $50, 2 children $90, and 3+ children $90.)
Cost includes a t-shirt, lunch, swimming pass and afternoon snack.
Registration can be made to Mr. Tom Taylor, 6600 Meloy Drive, Building #6, Suite 122, Ft. Benning, GA, (706) 545-4715 or online at cascadehills.com.

Many qualified leaders will be provided to assist with the safety of these children each and every day. Depending upon the age group of the child, daily team building activities consist of:

swimming, art, boating, basketball, moonwalk, fishing, paddleboats, waterslides, archery, rollercoaster rides, chapel, music, Bible quizzing, and MUCH MORE!

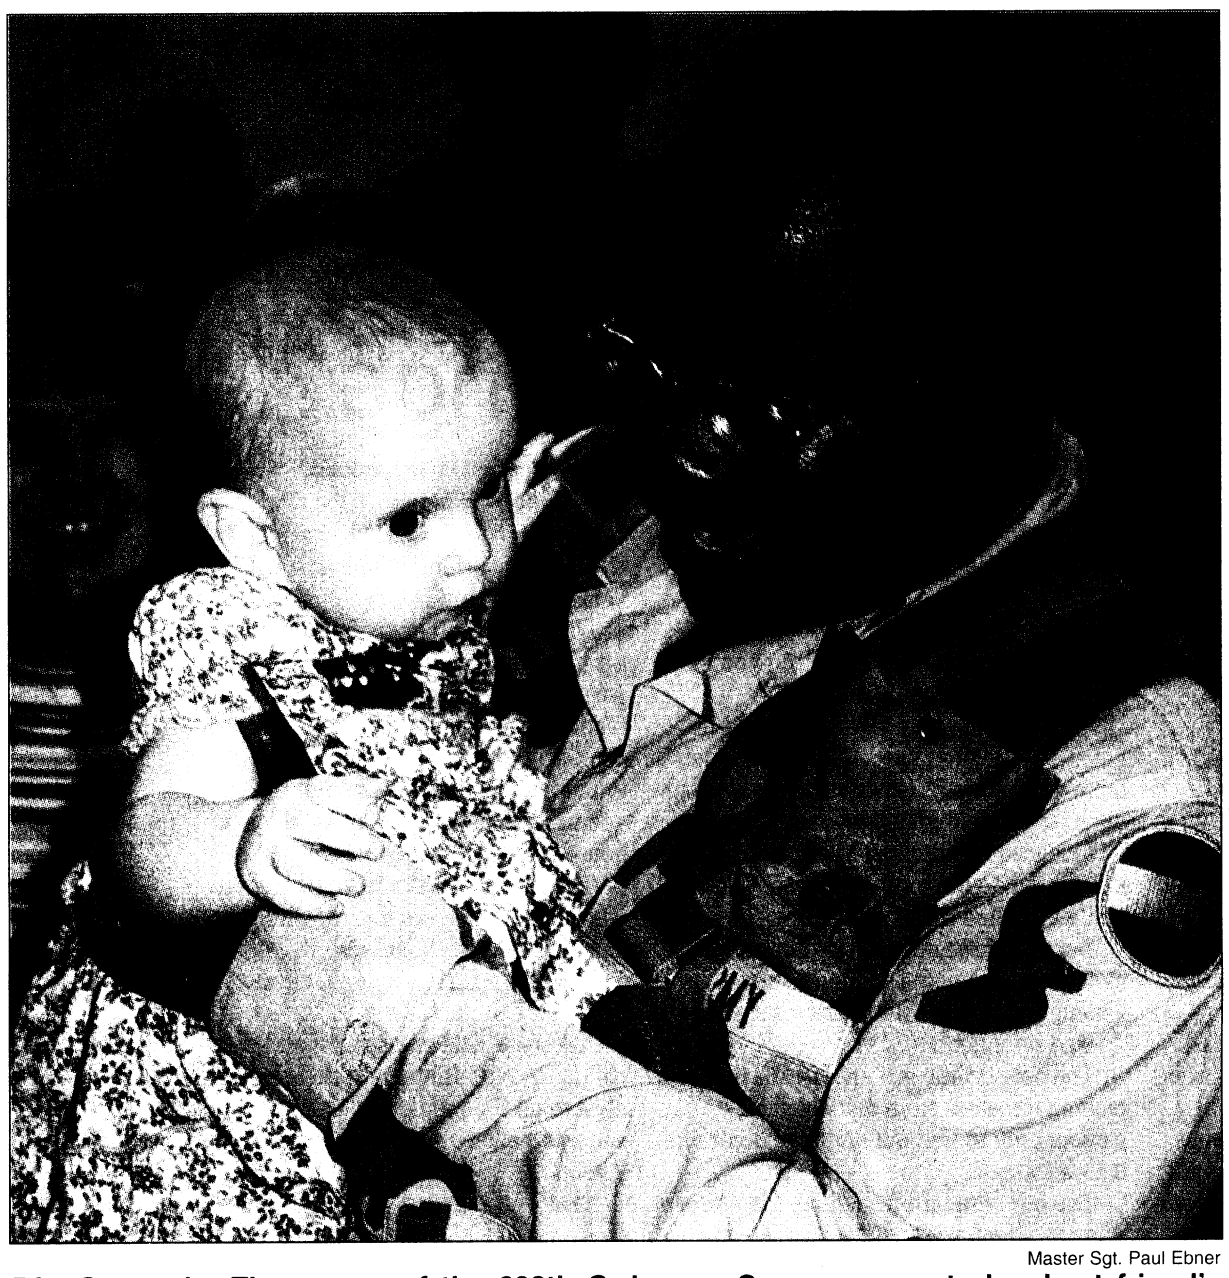
Post unit tests robot system

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

The advanced robotics controller system is a multi-purpose system .

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

The 29th Infantry Regiment's new experimental force platoon put a new advanced robotics controller system through the paces this week at the McKenna MOUT site.



Rapid Equipping Force personnel, along with Soldier Battle Lab representatives and a team from Exponent, a defense contractor specializing in failure and success analysis, oversaw the testing, which ends today.

The system, which is also being analyzed in select units on the ground in Afghanistan, is designed to increase situational awareness and lethality, said SBL project manager Capt. Joshua Stiltner.

The $10,000 ARC system is a multipurpose system that allows the remote control of several different types of unmanned robotics elements and exponentially expands the communication capabilities from firing teams to higher echelons, Stiltner said.

The Sensoria radio, which is powered by the same battery as the widely used SINCGARS, has a 400- to 600-meter, line-

Pfc. Samantha Thompson, of the 608th Ordnance Company, meets her best friend's daughter, Ally Wilson, upon returning from deployment this weekend.

36th Engineer units return

Master Sgt. Paul J. Ebner
USAIC Public Affairs Office

Soldiers from the 608th Ordnance Company and the 233rd Heavy Equipment Transport Detachment suffered no injuries during their deployment to Iraq, although there were plenty of tears, when family members attacked them at Audie Murphy Gym Saturday.

Col. Jim Brooks, commander of the 36th Engineer Group, ordered the attack after a brief ceremony welcoming the troops home from tours supporting Operation Iraqi Freedom.

Both units returned with no casualties or serious injuries, Brooks said.

The Soldiers will undergo 10 days of reunion and integration with their families, with assistance provided by Army Community Services and other post agencies, and will then take two to four weeks of block leave. When they return from leave, they will recover their equipment.

For Spc. Teresa Conley of the 63rd Engineer Company, the homecoming is none too soon. Conley's husband, Staff Sgt.

Construction on the new Interstate 185 access control point continues as Fort Benning authorities work to harden the post's defense against terrorism in accordance with the the Army Antiterrorism and Force Protection Program.

The installation antiterrorism force protection officer, Bob Robertson, said that while no location is ever absolutely safe from the danger of a terrorist attack, the security at Fort Benning is sound and is being developed and transformed into an even stronger safety net.

"Given the current threat level at Fort Benning, I am comfortable," he said. "Prior to 9/11 we were an open post. We have come a long way, and great strides have been made to make the installation closed."

The prime focus is to stop vehicular-borne explosive devices, Robertson said.

"We have more than $8 million invested in upgrading and fortifying the access control points and a $5 million fencing project that should be completed by August," he said.

Robertson said the $8 million allotted for access control points will pay for surveillance equipment, slalom-type concrete barriers to make a speeding vehicle incapable of breaking through the gate areas

Benning Soldiers fight fires, save lives

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

The calls come in at one, two in the morning — car accidents, medical emergencies, fires. They leave their beds, their families, and rush to Jefferson Avenue or Highway 280, wherever it is this time. They see terrible things, struggle to sleep for nights afterward.

And they do it for free.

Ladonia, a small, residential town of 15,000 just outside of Phenix City, is home to Fire Station 200. It's a place neighboring school kids love to visit and families stop by on their way through town, just to see the trucks.

The station also serves as the first responder to any emergency for the 6,500 residences and businesses in the 28 square miles it's responsible for. And it's a sanctuary for its professionals — men and women who volunteer as firefighters in whatever spare time they can muster between work and home life.

DADDY'S GIRL

Hopeless, but loving it

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

My earliest memories of my father revolve around my favorite part of him, his feet.

Gnarly as they are, he frequently tried to convince me they "smelled like roses" while yanking them out of his combat boots and nudging them dangerously close to my freckled, little nose.

When I was 3, they were my saving grace after I split my head open in a freak accident. Lying across my mom's lap in the front seat of our VW Bug, soaking a rag with blood, my sister screaming bloody murder in the back seat, I glanced down at my dad's foot pressed down on the gas pedal as he sped to the hospital. In his hurry to get out of the house, he was barefoot in sneakers.

"Daddy's not wearing any socks!" I announced gleefully and burst into laughter.

I still remember that image.

Later, those feet became a drawing board for my sister and me, who gave each toe a happy face, colored in his toenails, and left cute, little messages and flowers with pens and the occasional permanent marker.

Poor old Dad spent many a morning shielding his feet from the view of the other Soldiers getting ready for work in gym locker rooms around the world.

But Daddy's always been a good sport. Whether we were attacking his feet, rubbing his bald spot "for good luck" or teasing him mercilessly about his broken down old jeep, he took it like a man — and returned the favor in good form.

Which is why, at 22, I am still a hopeless Daddy's girl. I still get that childlike excitement when he comes to visit and parade him around at work and rugby practice like he's my show-and-tell. I still call him at least once a week to catch him up on everything in my life. I still talk through all life's little troubles with him when I'm not sure what to do.

And Dad, in turn, is a regular Cosmo advice column. He's nursed me through more break-ups than any of my girlfriends. And he's coached me on everything from diet and exercise to boys to valuable vocational tips.

Not that he's one to give unsolicited advice — well, at least not without prefacing it with, "I hate to give you advice, but ..." Nope, Dad's an advocate of learning from experience, making your own mistakes.

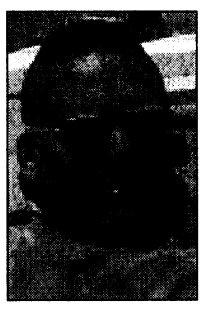
He remembers what it was like to be my age. He remembers that there are lots of silly slip-ups on the road to adulthood, and he remembers how much he valued acceptance while finding his own path. And thank God for that.

There are very few people in life who can offer you complete, unconditional acceptance and love. Now that I'm out here on my own, I realize just how much that means.

Dad has become more of a destination than a person these days, now that I'm stationed here and he's retired out in Washington state. He's a place where I can go with my problems and fears, a place I can share my triumphs and joys, a place where someone genuinely cares. Dad is my sanctuary.

Ridiculously sappy as this is, it's true. And I pray that it's true for others out there, too. Because I can't imagine my life without my father.

And every day — every time I hear someone complain about their rotten old man or talk about never knowing their father — I appreciate him even more.



And Sunday is the perfect time to tell him. Not that I don't already tell him now and again, but Sunday is his special day — Father's Day.

So don't let your father go unappreciated. Think of all the wonderful moments your father has inspired in your life — even if it's only one or two — and be thankful for those.

And if you can, call him and tell him about it.

Are your children free range?

Sgt. 1st Class Brian Arabinko
U.S. Army Infantry Center

Ahhh ... it's that time of year again, school's out. It's time for the raising of Free Range Children.

Does this mean children who are fed wholesome, organic, pesticide- and additive-free food? Children who are taken places by their parents, instead of sitting around the house? No, not really.

This is the time for kids to run around, unsupervised, regardless of age.

This is the time for me to go outside, to water the flowers that my wife so painstakingly planted, and find the cutest little girl picking flowers.

"Hey sweetie! Whatcha doing?" I ask.

"I'm picking flowers for my mom," she answers.

Isn't that sweet? And it's a courageous adventure, this flower picking. No coward of the jungle is she. She just doesn't go for the blooms on the periphery. She wades right in deep, trampling the lesser blooms, to get to the good ones. You have to admire her.

A few days later, a young boy, maybe 8 or 9, comes knocking on the back door.

"Mister, do you have any band-aids?"

He had scraped his knee. Not a bad wound but a good scrape. He definitely needed to have the dirt and gravel washed out.

I cleaned and dressed his wound. Good trooper, he — not a flinch or a squeak while I cleaned the wound.

But this is the question — where was his mother and why would her child go to a complete stranger for medical help?

And on it goes.

The not-so-little girl and her playmate picking tomatoes from my vegetable garden, only to find out that they don't like the green ones.

The boy trotting off with my kids' super soakers, which were on the back porch. He didn't think anyone wanted them — "they were just laying around."

The kid walking down the alley with a metal mop handle in hand, dragging it down the side of my wife's truck. (Thank God it wasn't my Harley.)

Or the children my wife caught breaking the garage window out with a board. It was already broken, and they had no malicious intent. They were far too small for that. My wife takes the children back to their parents only to be told, "What are you upset about? It's not like it's your house. Just call in a work order."

Then there's the kicker: The mother who stands in her front yard yelling for her daughter to come home. By the way, her child is 2, a block away and walking down the middle of the road.

Are these Free Range Children bad children? No. But maybe their parents need to take a good, long look in the mirror and ask themselves if they are good parents.

That's all for now. I have to go find my boys. I never know where those critters are ... .

This place is dripping with signage

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

I'm having a bad signage attack. That's right; signage, not sinus. Here at The Bayonet, we literary types like to poke fun at prolific useage — make that use — of pompous words.

Let's call it "pompage."

Take, for instance, the flagrant abuse of the word utilize.

Why would anyone use a word like utilize when they could, and should, utilize a word like use?

Simplistic instead of simple?

Lackadaisical instead of lazy?

Once is a crime — more than once is crimage and the offender should be pummeled with a stack of thesauruses. The carnage should be put on public display as signage to others.

Then there's my personal favorite, the phrase "to include." Nine letters, folks. The word "including" has the same amount, and it's stood the test of time, thank you very much.

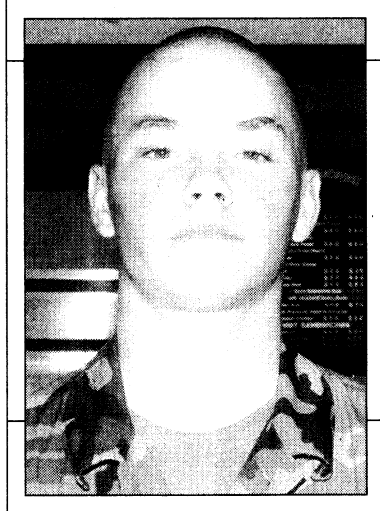
Proper English shouldn't be tortured with trendy revisions of our most venerable verbage. Uckage!

My co-worker, Melissa, has her pet peeve, too. She reviles the intentional use of misspelled words, to include Krispy Kreme, Late Nite, Kool-Aid and the like.

"It's such a load of krap," she says.

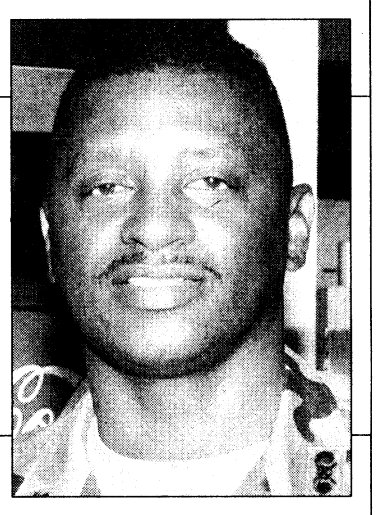
Oh, and let's not forget the increasage in the usage of pretentious plurals, like "moneys" and "peoples," and the rampant rise in redundancies, like "each individual person," "assistant vice principal," or (this one recently on national TV) "Again, let me reiterate."

Then there's the use of the word "won" in reference to a military award, as in, "He lost his arm and won the Purple Heart." It therefore follows, that anyone who didn't lose his arm must have lost the Purple Heart, huh. Wars are won, peoples, military medals are not.



And yes, I have a personal problem with the unnecessary use of the word "personal," as in "personal opinion" or "personal courage." Are there any other kinds?

Well, there you have it, The Bayonet's short list of literary pet peeves. Hey, it's just our public opinion, but try to keep it simplistic.



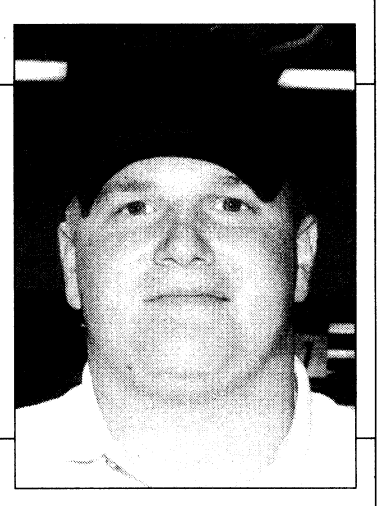
And at the risk of being redundant, please don't make me repeat myself.

VARIOUS VOICES

What would you do if you saw an unsupervised child or one doing something potentially dangerous?

Pvt. Justin Rhodes, 2nd Battalion, 58th Infantry Regiment — "If I saw a kid playing outside without supervision, I'd stop and talk to him, ask him where he lives and go talk to his parents. These days, it's crazy — people try to steal kids."

Lt. Col. Jerzell Black, U.S. Army Cadet Command Headquarters— "If I saw a kid riding down the street with no helmet, first, I'd tell him to get out of the street, and then it is important to think about safety. You need to tell him he needs a helmet."



Mary Green, family member — "If I saw kids roller skating in the street, I would tell them to get out of the street, because they could be hit by a car."

Kathy Bielski, family member— "If I saw a child playing with a stray dog, I would call the MPs and obviously call my kids in the house."

Spc. Pamela Evans, 2025th Transportation Company — "If I saw younger children playing in a pool unsupervised, I would stop and ring the doorbell and ask who is supposed to be watching them, because that is very dangerous."

Spc. Mark Keller, 988th Military Police Company — "If I saw kids out and about after curfew, I would probably yell at them. If I was on the job, I'd pull them aside, make them tell me where they live and then take them home and inform their parents."

Army unveils new combat uniform

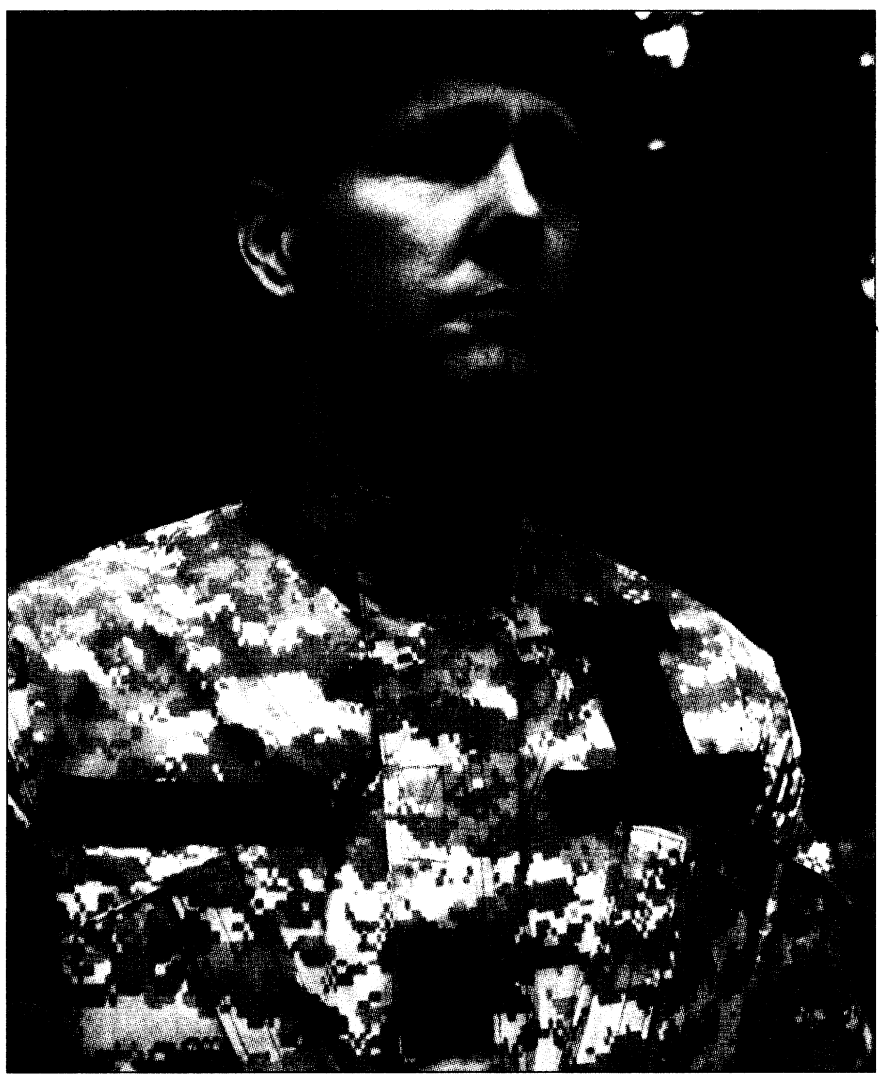
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — The Army officially unveiled its new combat uniform, designed with major input by NCOs and Soldiers and tested by Stryker Brigade Soldiers in Iraq since October 2003.

Three different versions of the Army combat uniform, or ACU, have been developed, and more than 10,000 uniforms have been produced and battle-tested in the sands of Iraq and at Army training centers. Even more are on production lines to be issued by April 2005 to Soldiers in deploying units.

Current fielding plans call for fielding to the total Army by December 2007, said officials from the Program Executive Office, known as PEO Soldier.

"This isn't about a cosmetic redesign of the uniform," said Col. John Norwood, the project manager for PEO Clothing and Individual Equipment. "It's a functionality change of the uniform that will improve the ability of Soldiers to execute their combat mission."



There were 18 changes made to the uniform, including removing the color black and adapting the digital print from the Marine Corps uniform to meet the needs of the Army, said Sgt. 1st Class Jeff Myhre, the Clothing and Individual Equipment NCOIC.

The Army's Natick Laboratory in Natick, Mass., took the original digital pattern to the next level by developing a pattern for worldwide theaters to encompass both the BDU and DCU requirements.

Black is no longer useful on the uniform because it is not a color found in woodland areas, Myhre said. The current colors on the ACU are green and sandy brown.

The pattern is not a 100 percent solution in every environment, he said, but a good solution across the board.

Every change was made for a reason. The bottom pockets on the jacket were removed and placed on the shoulder sleeves, so Soldiers can have access to them while they're wearing body armor. The pockets were also tilted forward so that they are easily accessible. Buttons were replaced with zippers that open from the top and bottom to provide comfort while wearing armor.

Sgt. 1st Class Marcia Triggs

Sgt. 1st Class Jeff Myhre, the Program Executive Office Clothing and Individual equipment NCOIC, in the new ACU.

The ACU will consist of a jacket, trousers, moisture-wicking T-shirt and brown combat boots. It will replace both versions of the BDU and the desert camouflage uniform. The black beret will be the normal headgear for the ACU, but there is a matching patrol cap to be worn at the commander's discretion.

Patches and tabs will be affixed to the uniform with Velcro to give the wearer more flexibility and to save the Soldier money, Myhre said. Soldiers can take the name tapes and patches off their uniforms before laundering, which will add to the lifecycle of the patches. Also, the cost to get the patches sewn on will be eliminated, he said.

At $88 per uniform, about $30 more than the BDU, Soldiers will eventually reap gains in money and time by not having to take uniforms to the cleaners or shine boots.

The Army's new uniform, was developed with the concerns of Soldiers in mind and was a revolutionary step for the Army, officials said.

"We have not made a major change to our uniforms since the BDUs were introduced in the early 1980s," said Sgt. Maj. of the Army Kenneth Preston, one of the ACU's biggest supporters.

Back then, the BDU was the revolutionary uniform engineered to reduce detection in varying light levels and environments. It became the new standard in the Army's wardrobe, replacing the Army's all-purpose "green sateen" or olive-drab fatigues and the Army's camouflage-patterned green poplin jungle uniform, which was developed in 1968 for the Vietnam War.

It was the same feeling in the early 80s, Myhre said of the reaction of today's Soldiers to the ACUs.

And just like then, it'll take a little while for people to get comfortable with it, he said.

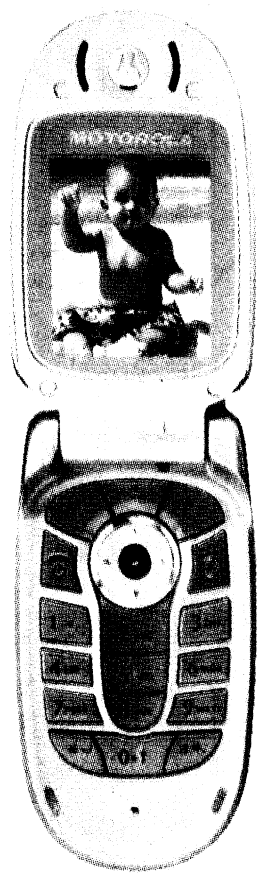
But "the Army was due for a change," Norwood said.

The ACU, Norwood's fourth uniform since joining the Army, "accommodates the needs of Soldiers in modern combat and integrates with the Interceptor body armor," a high-tech system of protective inserts that provides more protection than traditional flak jackets and is lighter in weight.

The ACU has "ergonomic improvements," said Brig. Gen. James Moran, the program executive officer for PEO Soldier.

Its modifications were intended to fulfill the needs of Soldiers in combat, he said. It analyzes what Soldiers need in combat and "increases fightability."

"This new uniform performs well in multiple environments," Preston said. "Its new pockets and color designs are a result of feedback from Soldiers in combat. Every modification made on the uniform was designed with a specific purpose and not just for the sake of change.



"It's only fitting that the next generation of Army uniforms be designed to meet actual wartime requirements," he said.

CLOSER LOOK

In addition to overall pattern and color changes, the ACU changes include:

- Mandarin collar that can be worn up or down
- Rank insignia affixed above right chest pocket
- Velcro for wearing patches and tabs
- Zipped front closure
- Elbow pouch for internal elbow pad inserts
- Knee pouch for internal knee pad inserts
- Elastic leg cuff
- Tilted chest pockets with Velcro closure
- Three-slot pen pocket on bottom sleeve
- Velcro sleeve cuff closure
- Shoulder pockets with Velcro
- Integrated blouse bellows for increased upper body mobility
- Bellowed calf storage pocket on left and right leg
- Moisture-wicking brown T-shirt

Benning celebrates Army's 229th birthday

Post honors Army, infantry, country's flag

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Marshall Auditorium was filled Monday afternoon as Fort Benning celebrated the Army's 229th birthday.

"This is a one-in-three day," said Commanding General Brig. Gen. Benjamin Freakley. "We're celebrating Flag Day, the Army's birthday and the infantry birthday."

He reminded the audience that the Army was created before the nation, with the authorization of 10 companies of infantry from Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia that composed the new Continental Army.

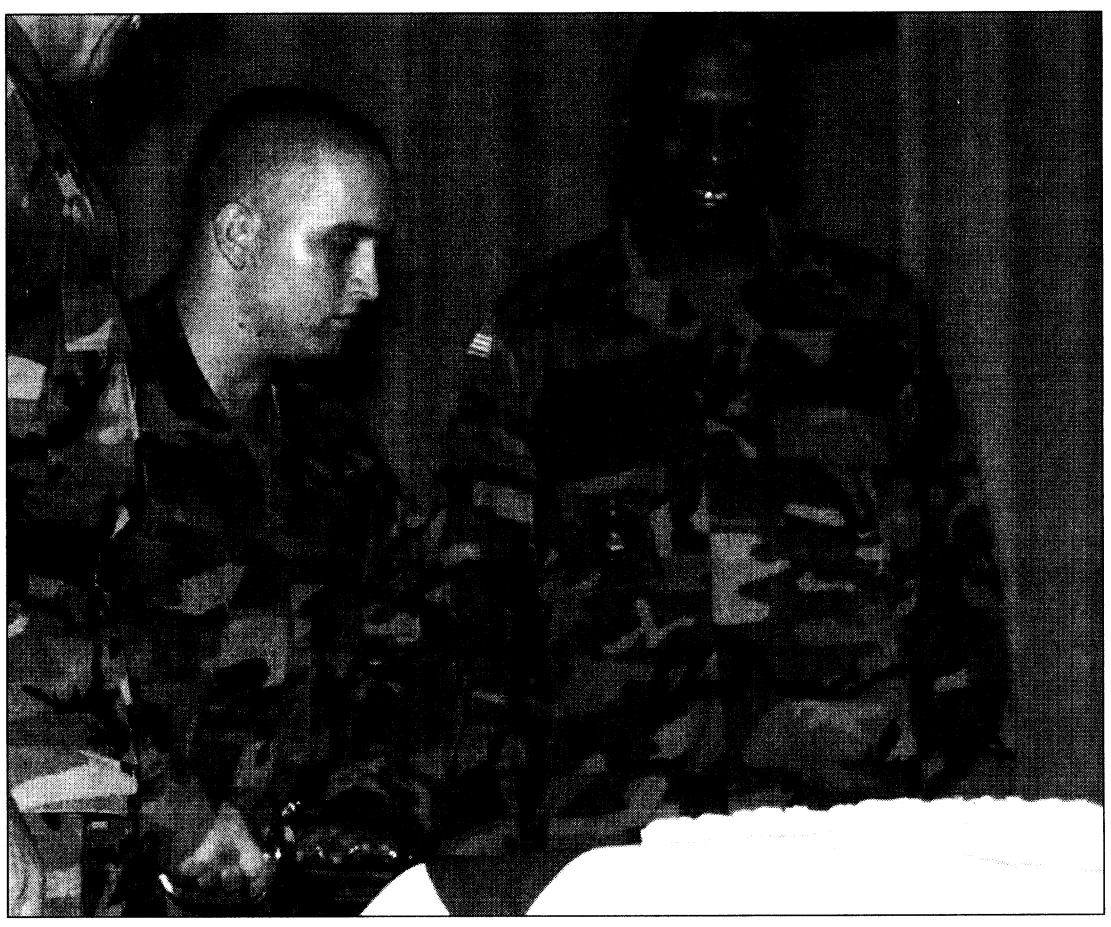
"The infantry has stood by and served the nation proudly," Freakley said.

Americans pause to honor the flag, he said, but the military honors the flag every day, raising it at dawn and lowering it at dusk.

He said Flag Day brings to mind famous pictures like the Marines raising the flag atop Mt. Suribachi.

"They raised the flag and there was a whole new hope that they would win, that they would prevail that day," he said. "All because valiant men got to the top of a volcano with the red, white and blue."

The stirring, patriotic feeling that picture evoked should not be taken for granted, he said and asked the audience to honor the flag always as a representation of the best of America.



Celebrating the Army's 229th birthday, Freakley said, recognizes an Army which has never risen up to threaten the government or the citizens.

"The Army has been loyal to the country," Freakley said. "Its Soldiers have fulfilled their moral obligations by doing what they were asked, no matter where."

And the Army, he said, has always done its duty, espousing its values of respect and selfless service.

"The Army stands up for what's right and shows respect for mankind, for the fellow citizens of the world," he said. "And selfless service is personified in the World War II veterans who won't tell about their service unless you pry it out of them."

He said there are names of many great Soldiers in the Army's 229-year history that roll easily off lips — men like Audie Murphy and Alvin York, and more recent heroes like Sgt. 1st Class Randy Shugart and Master Sgt. Gary Gordon, killed in Somalia trying to rescue a downed helicopter pilot.

Melissa House

Pvt. Chris Kennedy, 17, left, cuts the Army's birthday cake during the ceremony Monday as Sgt. 1st Class Henry Sanders, 58, looks on. Kennedy and Sanders are the post's youngest and oldest Soldiers.

"But for every Medal of Honor recipient," he said, "there are hundreds of thousands who left the service with a simple piece of paper — an honorable discharge — and we should be proud of each and every one of them."

Following Freakley's remarks, was a streamer ceremony, during which Command Sgt. Maj. Donald Fortson, garrison command sergeant major, placed the 175 campaign streamers on the Army flag.

The streamers, some hung individually and others hung in groups of 10 or more, represent the campaigns throughout the Army's history where American Soldiers fought and died. The Army's first campaign streamer is from the Battle of Lexington in 1775.

And as no birthday celebration is complete without cake, Fort Benning's oldest and youngest Soldiers cut the cake to end the ceremony.

The oldest Soldier was 58-year-old Sgt. 1st Class Henry Sanders, an operations NCO from 1st Battalion, 329th Infantry Regiment, who heard someone "surfed the net at Fort Benning to find him."

The youngest Soldier, Pvt. Chris Kennedy, of B Company, 2nd Bn., 54th Inf. Regt., turned 17 in March. He knew he was the youngest Soldier in his battalion because the cadre made him the "keeper of the crossed rifles."

And just to show that the Army's spirit of selfless service was alive and well, even in the youngest of infantry Soldiers, Kennedy said he wouldn't be having any of the birthday cake.

"It wouldn't be right, because my company can't have cake," Kennedy said. "They're out there training."

Fort Benning is set to celebrate Independence Day with style from 4 p.m. through the end of the fireworks July 1 at York Field.

Those who may have already marked their calendars for the event should note the change to the previously published start time.

There will be something for everyone at the celebration, from food to music to military demonstrations and displays.

A section of the middle of York Field will be roped off as the landing zone for the Ranger Training Brigade's FRIES and SPIES demonstration at 7 p.m., which involves Rangers conducting an air assault insertion and extraction. Fort Benning's Silver Wings parachute team will perform a spot jump at 7:15 p.m.

Jamie Enos, marketing assisant for the Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation, said there will be a number of differences from last year's celebration.

"There will be around 50 rides and activities," Enos said, "about double what was here last year."

In fact, she said, there isn't enough space on York Field to hold everything, so the site is expanding toward TIC credit union.

Another difference this year, Enos said, is the fireworks will be launched from the top of Infantry Hall instead of from across the street on Stewart Field.

The Infantry Center Band will play patriotic music during the fireworks show.

Throughout the day, the band, along with Jag Star, a pop group from Tennessee who played for coalition troops in Afghanistan last year, will entertain the crowd.

The day will also feature a military aircraft flyover, the unveiling of the refurbished "Follow Me" statue at 8:50 p.m. and a number of static military displays.

Enos said the DMWR staff expects 10,000 to 15,000 to attend the celebration.

The July 1st celebration is the first opportunity to buy tickets for the Miller Light Army Concert Tour — the Honky Tonk Tailgate Party. Tickets are $15 in advance, $20 at the gate on July 31 and $10 for each person in a group of 25 or more.

For more information, call 545-3328.

Schedule of events:

- 4 p.m. Field open to all guests. Special entertainment by Jag Star.
- 6:15 p.m. Korean Martial arts demonstration.

ITB battalion changes command, passes colors

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

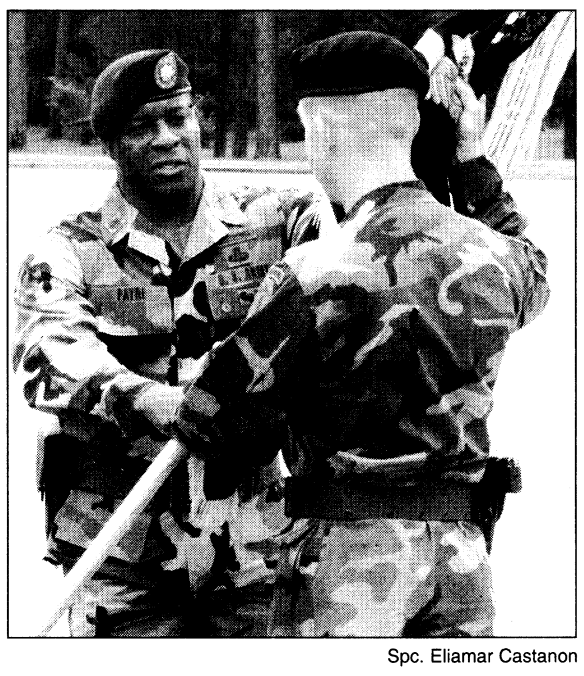
Lt. Col. William O. Payne, commander of 1st Battalion, 50th Infantry Regiment, bid a fond farewell to Sand Hill Wednesday during a ceremony on Kanell Field as he handed over the reins to Lt. Col. Francis B. Burns.

Col. Brian Baldy, Infantry Training Brigade commander, spoke to the Soldiers of 1st Bn., 50th Inf. Regt., formed up to welcome their new commander, about Payne's dedication to ITB.

"You should know that it was (Payne's) commitment, vision and just plain hard work that led your battalion to training readiness and discipline," Baldy said. "It does not get any better than this."

Baldy also said it was hard to say farewell to Payne, who has been a great leader and has done great things for the Soldiers in his command.

Payne choked up as he bid farewell to his Soldiers and comrades after the exchange of the battalion colors.



"It doesn't seem that long ago that I was on the parade field receiving those colors," Payne said. "I guess time flies when you're having fun, but I look forward to the challenges that are ahead of me."

Payne said that he feels a great sense of relief to be leaving the Soldiers and families of his battalion in the capable hands of a great commander.

Burns told the Soldiers of the battalion their reputation of character, confidence and competence proceeds them and he looks forward to serving with them.

Burns' last assignment was as the executive officer for the Directorate of Combat Development, U.S. Army Infantry School. He and his wife, Darlene, have three boys, Conor, Cormac and Cavan.

Burns is a graduate of the Infantry Officer Basic and Advance Courses, the Combined Arms Staff Services School, the Army's Command and General Staff Officer's College, the Total Army Instructor Training Course, the Air Assault Course, Airborne and Ranger Schools and the Bradley Leader's Courses.

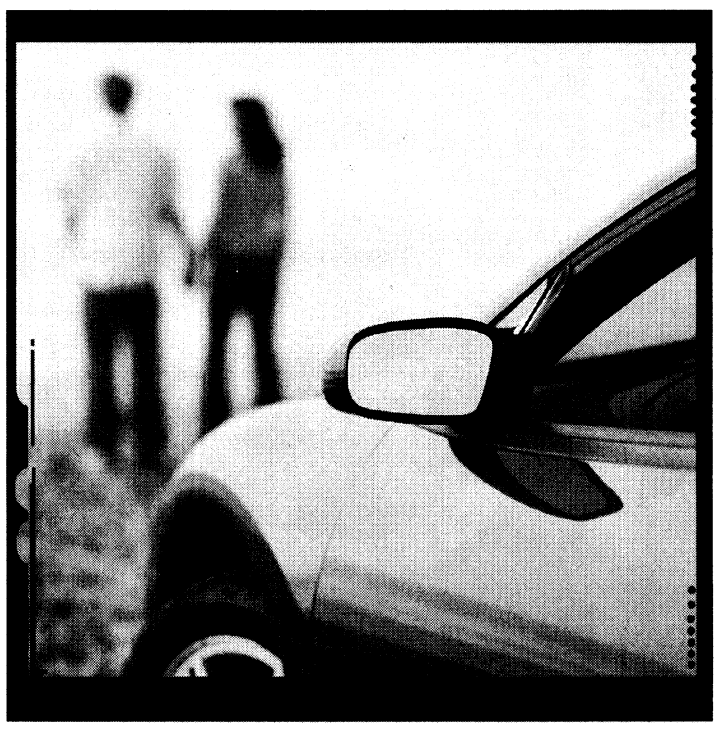
Outgoing commander, Lt. Col. William O. Payne, left, passes the guidon to Col. Brian Baldy, Infantry Training Brigade commander, during the unit's change of command Wednesday on Kanell Field. The incoming commander is Lt. Col. Francis Burns.

SOUTH CAROLINA TO ALLOW USE OF THE FEDERAL WRITE-IN ABSENTEE BALLOT AND FAXING OF BALLOTS FOR U.S. SENATE REPUBLICAN RUNOFF ELECTION ON JUNE 22, 2004

The Elections Commission in South Carolina has authorized the use of the Federal Write-In Absentee Ballot (FWAB), SF-186, by all members of the uniformed services, their family members and overseas citizens for these primary runoffs. The faxing of completed ballots for this election has also been approved. These actions were taken due to the compressed period of time between primary and runoff elections that would have prevented voters from returning their ballots by the return deadline.



County election officials are also mailing state write-in absentee ballots to those affected voters with instructions for checking the South Carolina Web site for final candidate names. The state ballot may also be faxed in for the primary runoff. Uniformed Service members and overseas voters from South Carolina should vote using the FWAB or the state write-in ballot and the names listed below as soon as possible. Ballots must be received by 7:00 p.m. on Election Day. Use the fax cover sheet provided in Appendix C on page 333 of the 2004-2005 Voting Assistance Guide (available in PDF format online at www.fvap.gov), which includes a waiver of secrecy for the faxed ballot. The voted ballots should be faxed to 703-693-5527, 1-800-368-8683, or DSN(military) 223-5527. Please mail the original ballot to your county election official after faxing.

The candidates are:
Republican Party Senatorial Primary:
David Beasley and Jim DeMint

For information about the candidates, visit the Web site of the South Carolina Election Commission at http://www.state.sc.us/scsec.

Questions regarding the above may also be referred to the Director, FVAP, Department of Defense, Washington Headquarters Services, 1155 Defense Pentagon, Washington DC 20301-1155. The FVAP can be reached via e-mail at vote@fvap.ncr.gov.

Volunteers: Save lives in Ladonia

"It's like a second life," said Sgt. Paul Walrath, a dog handler and one of three Fort Benning Soldiers who volunteer at the station. "When we're not at Fort Benning, we're doing this."

"This" includes intensive training — everything from qualifying to drive every truck in the station to extraction techniques to putting out car and house fires. It means responding to around 600 calls a year, putting out structure and forest fires, prying people from mangled cars with the "jaws of life," cleaning up bodies after particularly bad car accidents and treating medical patients, sometimes serious, sometimes not.

"There are mornings when I've gone straight home from a fire to get changed and then gone to PT smelling like smoke from the fire," said Sgt. 1st Class Mark Boisclair,

The firefighters' suits protect them from fires that range from 1,200 to 1,500 degrees.

operations NCOIC for Headquarters, 3rd Brigade.

Other times, they've responded to calls in BDUs.

Not that they're complaining.

"We're here mainly because we love it," said 1st Sgt. Dave Hennessey, former first sergeant for C Company, 317th Engineer Battalion. "You can't get up at one, two in the morning to do this unless you love it. Because we're definitely not getting paid."

"It gets in your veins," Walrath agreed.

Of course, it's also somewhat personal for the station's 12 or so active volunteers. Some of them are older — Ladonia's veteran citizens, so to speak. They know the people they go to help, their friends and neighbors.

Walrath and Boisclair may not have lived in the town for more than a few years, but they both have experience with the devastation a fire can cause.

When Boisclair was a drill sergeant at Fort Benning in 1996, the house behind his caught fire.

"Only four or five firefighters showed up," he said, shaking his head. "After seeing that, I decided to get involved."

Walrath can do one better. When he was stationed at For Hood, Texas, his house burned down.

"I know what it's like," he said. "So I wanted to help people going through it."

Hennessey, on the other hand, just can't help himself.

"Mainly, I just love it," he said. "You get that sense that you're actually doing something to help people. And you don't often get the chance to do what you love to do."

Not to mention the "cool lights" he gets to put on his truck.

Of course, loving the job doesn't make it easy. It's an all-volunteer staff, said the fire chief, David Martin, and it's a small one at that. Responding to calls, the firefighters are usually the first ones on the scene and rarely know what they'll find when they arrive.

Hennessey recalled a "brush fire" he responded to. It was him and one other volunteer — and the brush fire was actually a forest fire, substantially bigger than a two-man job.

Then there was the 1 a.m. structure fire he responded to, once again finding only one other responder on the scene.

"It was over on Jefferson Avenue, a street we could barely get the fire truck down," he said. "The whole front of the house was on fire."

Fortunately, support finally arrived — two more volunteers, who entered the house from the rear and were able to contain the fire.

Then there was the call none of them will ever forget.

It was Thanksgiving Day, last year. When the call came in, most of them were finishing up their holiday feasts with their families; Walrath was working on seconds.

Martin heard the crash from his house.

Minutes later, they arrived on the scene of the car accident. A drunken driver had lost control of his car on a particularly bad road and crashed into a car carrying a mother and her two children. None of them were wearing seat belts. Her 14-year-old daughter died on the scene.

"I still get a cold chill every time I drive past that spot," Walrath sad. "It was a mess."

Fortunately, not every call ends tragically. Many calls are minor, Boisclair said, situations in which the victim just needs the psychological comfort of emergency medical support.

And about 70 percent of the calls are medical, Martin said, explaining that many members of the community are elderly.

And of course, there are the "fun" calls, the ones that make for good storytelling.

Walrath responded to a house fire in Crawford, Ala. — supporting another fire station — and remembers risking his neck to save a woman's antique organ while the house was still on fire.

"The roof fell on me three different times that day," he said, laughing.

Then there's the elderly woman who frequently calls to have her blood pressure checked.

"She's in pretty poor health, so every now and then, she'll call up and ask us to send someone over to check her blood pressure," Walrath explained. "But she'll (feed) you. She makes the best German pastries."

Whatever the call, the volunteers' commitment is unwavering, Martin said.

"I don't know what I'd do without these guys," he said, nodding to the Benning firefighters.

Something he knows he'll eventually find out. Hennessey left Sunday for Puerto Rico, where he'll instruct ROTC. Boisclair is set to retire soon — that is, if he isn't stop-lossed. And Walrath is only eight years into a military career; there are still plenty of moves ahead of him.

Photos by Sgt. Kim Dooley

1st Sgt. Dave Hennessey, a volunteer firefighter in Ladonia, Ala., practices extrication techniques.

Not that that will put a damper on their relationship.

"Working here ... it's like a brotherhood," Boisclair said. "There's a camaraderie, a bond."

Sitting around the table, exchanging stories about particularly memorable calls, it's hard to miss. It's like listening to veterans trade war stories. They've been there, done that and seen it all — together.

Of course, there's always room for one more at the McDonald's they frequent to take a break now and then.

The station is always looking for more help, Martin said. The only requirements are that volunteers live within a two-mile radius of the station — although, he's willing to flexible, Martin said — and that "you have the love in your veins."

Prospective volunteers should also be prepared for training, and lots of it. After all, trudging 70 pounds of gear into fires burning at 1,200 to 1,500 degrees is no feat for the faint-hearted. Rookies, maybe, but only those serious about the job.

For more information, call the station at (334) 297-3342 or Boisclair at 566-2945. Call at night or on the weekends.

Robots: Perform well during tests by Benning platoon of-sight range, Stiltner said. But it is set up like a wireless network, where transmissions are carried along from user to user, making the actual range hypothetically endless.

The system also includes an individual Soldier PDA with global positioning capabilities, Stiltner said.

Once Soldiers are logged on to the system, their positions are available in real time to all the other authorized users on the network.

"This gives you a far more accurate view of the battlefield and establishes pinpoint minimum safe distance for accurate indirect fire," said Stiltner.

REF assistant program manager Maj. Kevin Nash said one of the strongest qualities of the system is its simplicity.

"It's a real user-friendly system," said Nash. "With one day of classroom training and one day of hands-on field training, a unit can be sufficiently trained on the communications system.

"This is a developmental project, and it's up to the unit commander to decide when his unit is proficient, but it is very simple."

Robotics control comes into play when a joystick adapter is added to a Soldier's system, giving him control of any one of many different models of robots and vehicles depending on the mission requirements, Nash said.

The robotics control adds at least a day to classroom training and a few more to the hands-on training experience, but Nash said, overall, the training is still relatively quick.

The model tested at the MOUT site is the $42,000 PackBot. Without modifications, the PackBot weighs about 40 pounds and is propelled by heavy-duty tracks and rotating, tracked arms that assist in propulsion and negotiation of obstacles.

In combat, the PackBot would be equipped with a pump-action shotgun system able to recycle itself and fire remotely, Stiltner said.

Streaming video from a front-mounted camera is transmitted to the controller's PDA, which is plug-and-play connected to a joystick adapter, giving the controller a first-person view of whatever the robot sees.

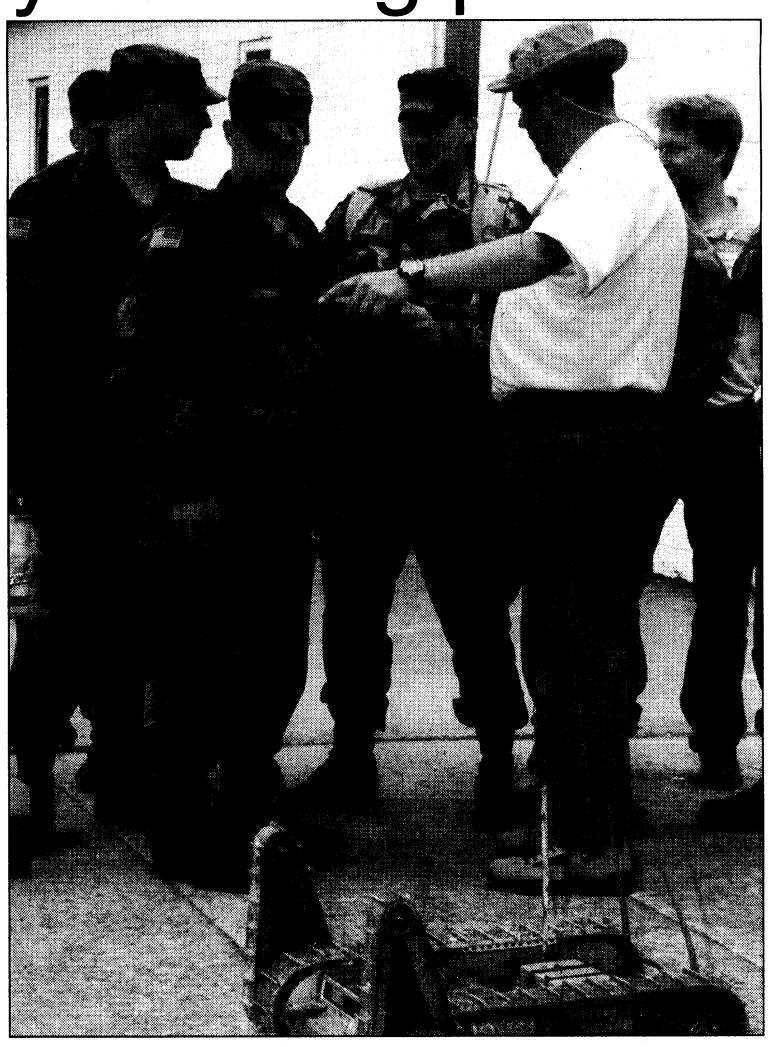
The PDA screen, when in controller mode, displays battery power level, heading, and both pitch and yaw readings to assist in navigation of difficult terrain.

The PackBot also comes equipped with a nuclear, biologic and chemical sensor package capable of detecting a wide range of NBC contaminants.

An infrared camera lens enables the robot to operate in low-light conditions, as well, Stiltner said.

In classroom instruction Tuesday morning, REF personnel taught the simple assembly of the robot, battery recharging procedures, navigation, firing procedures and fielded questions from the ExFor Soldiers that mostly covered possible modifications to the system.

During hands-on training, most of the Soldiers were relatively comfortable with the navigation of the PackBot through urban terrain that included the ascent and descent of stairs with obstacles in place, navigating around corners and furniture and flipping the robot over.



Cyle Fina, an Exponent military advisor, explained several possible uses for the PackBot to the ExFor Soldiers, including the transport of up to 30 pounds of munitions or medical supplies to personnel trapped under fire, surveillance capabilities and tunnel-rat missions reminiscent of the Vietnam War-era, which are still executed in cave searches in Afghanistan.

"You have to think of the PackBot as a combat multiplier," Fina said.

ExFor platoon member Pfc. Andrew Hasbrouck said the REF personnel were right about the simplicity of the system.

"We are the video-game generation," Hasbrouck said. "It's just like a video game. If you can maneuver through Halo, you can do this."

Nash said REF expects to have ARC systems on the ground in Afghanistan with the 25th Infantry Division by mid-July.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Experimental Force platoon members practice with the PackBot Tuesday morning at McKenna MOUT.

608th: Completes mission overseas, returns home

Maurice Conley of the 233rd HET Det., is back in time for the birth of their first child, a girl, due at the end of June.

"It's great he is going to be here for the baby's birth," she said. Teresa is already planning activities, including shopping trips and sharing ultrasound photos with her husband.

"I was worried from day one that I wasn't going to be able to make it back in time," Maurice said. "What a great Father's Day present."

Maurice is looking forward to some time off and some quiet time with his family.

Quiet time wasn't on the mind of one in the crowd. Mark Bruce Jr. was waiting with his mother, Arlanda, for Staff Sgt. Mark Bruce of the 608th Ordnance Co.

"I'm happy about him coming home," said Mark Jr., who is looking forward to swimming in the family's backyard pool with his dad.

"I'm elated that they're back," said Arlanda. "It's been a long deployment. I'm glad they are all back safe and sound; thank God."

"It feels wonderful!" Mark Sr. said about being back at Fort Benning.

Although soaking in the family pool wasn't at the top of his list, it probably placed a close second to his first of a nice, long soak in the tub.

The crowd of attackers also included friends.

Heather Wilson, who was waiting for her best friend, Pfc. Samantha Thompson, of the 608th Ordnance Co., had someone special to introduce to Thompson — her daughter, Ally. Before the unit received orders to deploy, Thompson agreed to be Wilson's coach when it came time to give birth to Ally.

> 608th Ordinance Company

The deployment changed those plans.

Wilson and another friend, Chrissy Ambos, were all Thompson had waiting for her.

It seems Thompson's son, Marquis, was still in Massachusetts with grandparents completing his school year, while Thompson's husband, Sgt. Jesse Thompson, was deployed to Iraq.

"We're all she's got," chimed Wilson and Ambos, who had a party waiting for their returning friend.

"It's great to be back! I love it!" said Thompson. And of the new friend whose birth she missed, she said, "She's precious, of course! And I plan to spoil her!"

The 233rd HET Detachment's primary mission was moving heavy vehicles, such as tanks and Bradley's, from ports in Kuwait to the troops in Iraq who needed them.

The 608th Ordnance Company's primary mission was to move and distribute coalition ammunition, as well as to consolidate enemy ammunition from throughout Iraq and destroy it.

USAMU shooter helps save man's life in D.C.

Former firefighter puts skills to use in Dulles airport

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Spc. Mark Weeks wasn't expecting to be a hero that day. He was just getting ready to board a plane at Dulles International Airport near Washington, D.C.

A shooter instructor with Fort Benning's U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit, Weeks was on his way to the World Cup Championships in Brazil as part of the U.S. Shooting Team on May 26. His mind was on the championship, getting through customs, the trip in general.

Then, he heard a commotion.

A man farther back in the line behind him collapsed to the ground. In a crowded airport, with people gathered around the fallen man, it was hard to tell, but he seemed to be seizing, having a heart attack.

Two women close to the man had already started administering CPR, so Weeks' first instinct was to call 911 — just in case no one else had. Emergency personnel were on their way.

A firefighter for about two years before he joined the Army, Weeks is EMT-qualified, so he decided to see if he could be of any help. What he saw told him the man needed more than CPR.

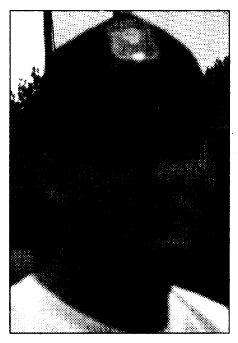
"The first thing I thought of was to get a defibrillator," Weeks recalled, adding that, in recent years, it had become common procedure to place several of the devices throughout airports.

One of Weeks' fellow shooters on the team, retired Air Force Lt. Col. Scott Schroeder, remembers clearly Weeks' efforts to track down a defibrillator, also known as an AED.

"He immediately went to the gate agents and requested the location of the nearest defibrillator, but the gate agents had no idea," Schroeder said.

It was at that point, Weeks said, that he remembered seeing one somewhere in the airport earlier on. He couldn't remember exactly where, but he knew he'd be able to find one. He wasted no time.

"He made a dash for the terminal to locate one," Schroeder said. "Meanwhile, we informed the gate agent to get a flight attendant and defibrillator from the plane — the flight attendants are supposed to be trained to use (them)."



While Schroeder and others on the scene argued with the gate agents, Weeks had sprinted 10 gates down. No luck. He sprinted five or six more gates. Jackpot.

With the AED and a mouth-to-mouth piece in hand, he rushed back to the scene where the women — one of them a nursing student — were still performing mouth-to-mouth and chest compressions.

The student hooked up the defibrillator cord to the paddles. The AED had an analyze mode, Weeks explained, in which the machine reads for a heart rhythm and determines whether or not the patient is "shockable." Only if the patient needs it will the machine allow its operator to shock them.

This process takes a matter of seconds, but seconds count in an emergency, Weeks said. Just as he was about to administer a shock, a police officer came upon the scene.

"He didn't know what was going on, so he tried to clear us away," Weeks said, adding that the interruption cost the man more time when they had to repeat the analyze mode.

Weeks

Finally, Weeks was able to shock the man. Just about this time, Schroeder said, a flight attendant finally showed up with the AED from the aircraft.

"Since Weeks already had control of the situation, the flight attendant stayed back and let him continue ..." he said.

After the shock, Weeks said, he checked the man for a pulse. It was weak in his wrist, but a little better in his neck.

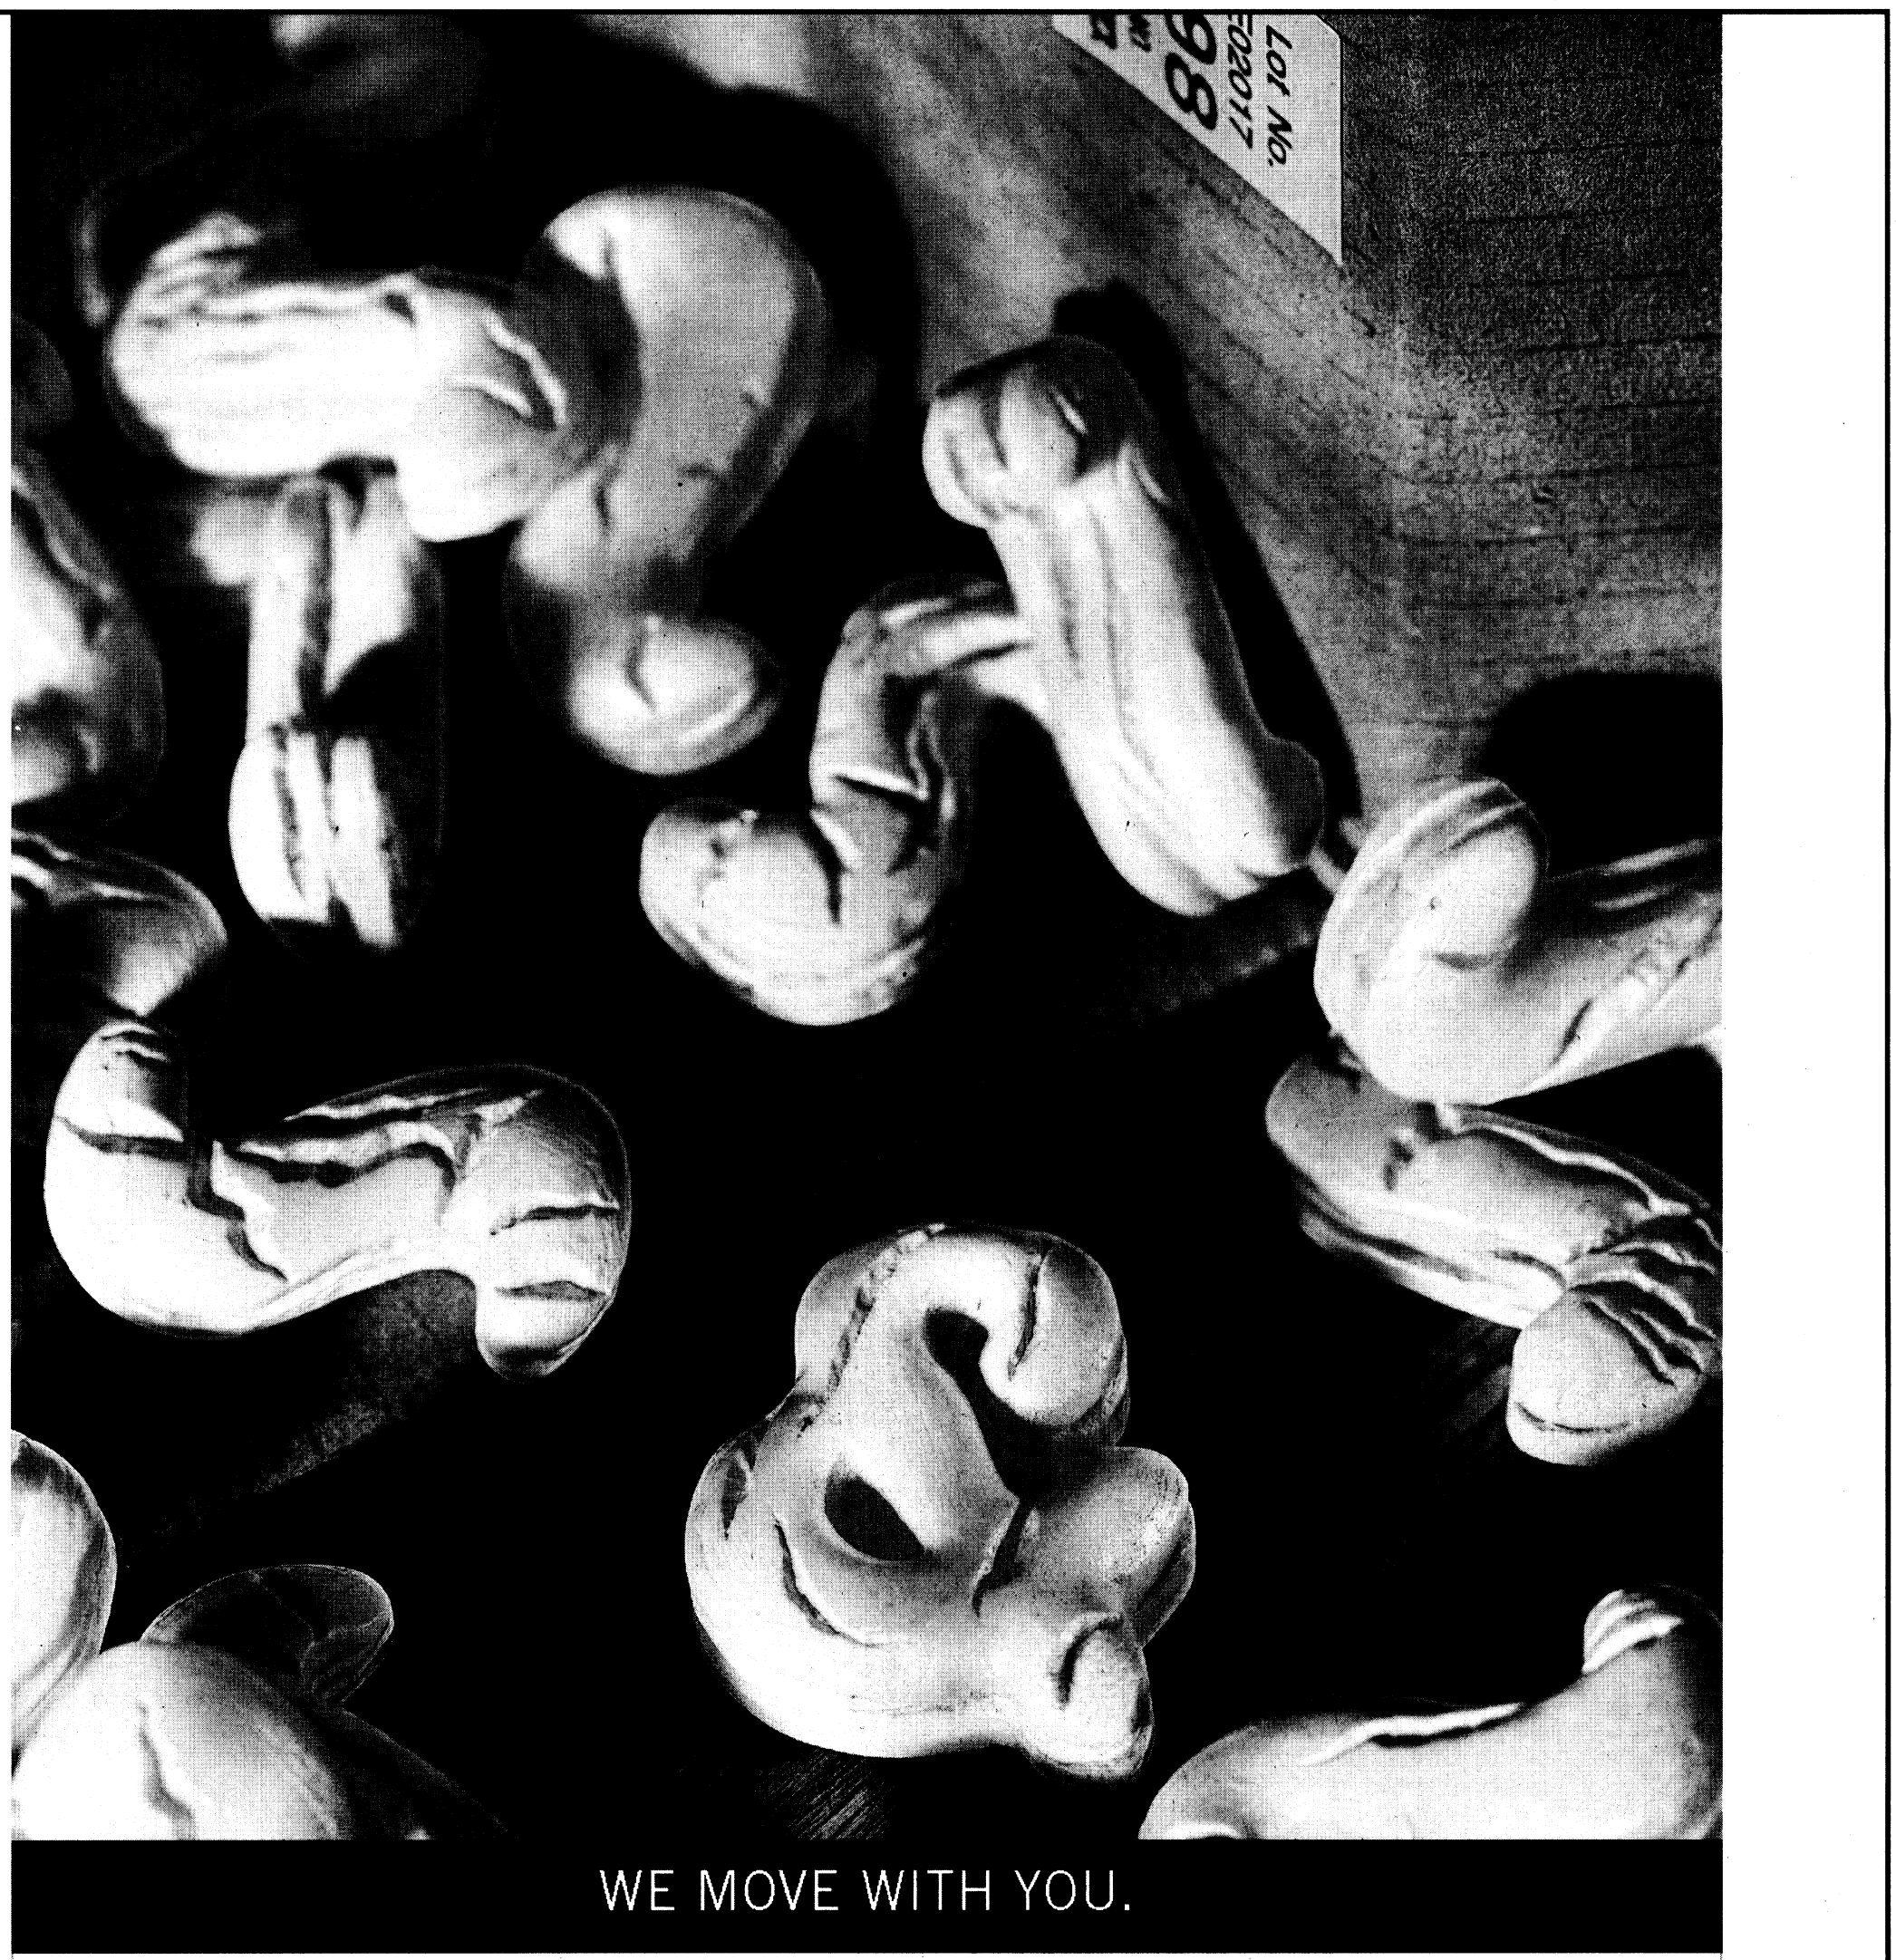
Although the nursing student continued mouth-to-mouth, Weeks used the AED to analyze him again a couple more times and found the man didn't need another shock.

About this time, the paramedics arrived and took control of the situation.

"It was really only a matter of minutes," Weeks said, still disbelieving.

But it was a matter of minutes that could mean the difference between life and death, between brain damage and being OK.

Weeks doesn't think he's a hero though.



"It was reaction more than anything," he said. "Really, the best contribution I made was just to stay calm. If you stay calm, you can think with a level head.

"I knew if I didn't do something he was going to die," he continued. "Well, actually, he was dead. But he would've stayed that way."

As it turns out, Weeks said, the man didn't die. When he left to board the plane, the man was actually somewhat conscious and talking to the paramedics.

"The quick thinking of (Weeks), the nursing student and the woman who performed CPR saved that man's life," Schroeder said. "All three of them met the challenge and went well above the call of duty and are heroes."

And the icing on the cake — Weeks went on to help the U.S. International Skeet Team in winning the Team Silver Medal in Brazil.

Airborne 101: Leap of faith

The Soldiers of D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry, were falling out of the skies over Mann Field Tuesday as part of Airborne School's ground week.

During the first phase of airborne training or ground week, Soldiers are taught the fundamentals of military parachuting, how to exit an aircraft and how to land safely, said Staff Sgt. David Rowan, D Co. operations NCO.

The company picked up 487 Soldiers for training June 11. Tuesday, 74 Soldiers had already been dropped because of the PT test.

"(Soldiers) must be in good health and meet physical fitness requirements, since more that 90 percent of the training is strenuous and involves bodily contact with the ground," Rowan said.

Before Soldiers are allowed to train, they must pass a physical fitness test to ensure they can endure the three weeks of training. The Soldiers must pass the test at the 17- to 21-year-old standard with a flexed arm hang event.

"They're required to do one pull-up and hold themselves up for 10 seconds," Rowan said. "The flexed arm hang is supposed to demonstrate the Soldier's (ability) to manipulate (an open) canopy."

Once the Soldiers take the PT test, they move on to the first portion of airborne training — ground week, which is the phase D Co. is currently in. Tuesday, they learned the proper form for exiting an aircraft by jumping out of a 34-foot tower.

"We ensure they exit with a good and tight body position," Rowan said. "They have to get at least four consecutive satisfactory exits or they may get dropped from the class."

Pvt. Ashley Cairns said she's afraid of heights but still had fun when she jumped out of the 34-foot tower.

"The hardest part is running everywhere in boots," she said. "Sometimes I want to quit, but I'm going to make my dad proud."

"Paratroopers historically run everywhere," said Staff Sgt. Samuel Baugh, D Co. instructor. "As soon as we land, we have to run for cover, so the Soldiers do the same here. It's 60 years of tradition; we don't make these things up."

Pfc. William Wilhite said he has no desire to quit and seeing people "fall out" motivates him to continue.

"It's one thing for Soldiers to fail or get hurt and have to be dropped," Baugh said. "But if you quit, you'll be a quitter the rest of your life."

Most airborne classes start with an average of 420 Soldiers and graduate more than 300. Most drops are related to lower body injuries, such as stress fractures and sprained ankles, Baugh said, but heat casualties are common, too.

"There isn't enough time to acclimate the Soldiers to the weather, but we're constantly ensuring that they hydrate," he said.

During ground week, Soldiers also learn to land on their "five points of contact" — the balls of the feet, the calf of the leg, thighs, the buttocks and the "pull-up" muscle.

"A paratrooper descends at a rate of 18 to 22 feet per second and may carry more than 100 pounds of combat equipment," Rowan said. "To minimize the risk of injury, we teach them to land on the fleshy parts of the body."

Next week, the Soldiers will move onto tower week, when they'll receive additional training in the fundamentals of parachuting, maneuvering the parachute canopy and mass exit techniques. They'll learn to move inside an aircraft and exit an aircraft with other paratroopers in tow.

To learn these techniques, Soldiers use the suspended harness, which is designed to give them a feeling of maneuvering a canopy, Rowan said. Soldiers also learn what to do if their parachute malfunctions.

The third week is the testing week. Soldiers do five jumps before they graduate. The first jump has 15 jumpers exiting the aircraft one at a time. The second jump has 10 jumpers exiting the aircraft from two doors with combat equipment. The third, fourth and fifth jumps have 15 jumpers exiting the aircraft with one second intervals at the same time.

The Soldiers graduate training July 1.

Pvt. Rafael Castro, D Company, 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Regiment, exits the 34-foot tower on Fort Benning's Mann Field Tuesday, the third day of training during ground week. Ground week is the first phase of airborne training, when Soldiers learn the fundamentals of parachuting, how to exit an aircraft and land properly. More than 400 D Company Soldiers are currently undergoing airborne training. D Company Soldiers who successfully complete three weeks of jump school, including five jumps, will graduate July 1.

Off-limits roads protect runners, marchers

Ranger struck while marching on wrong road

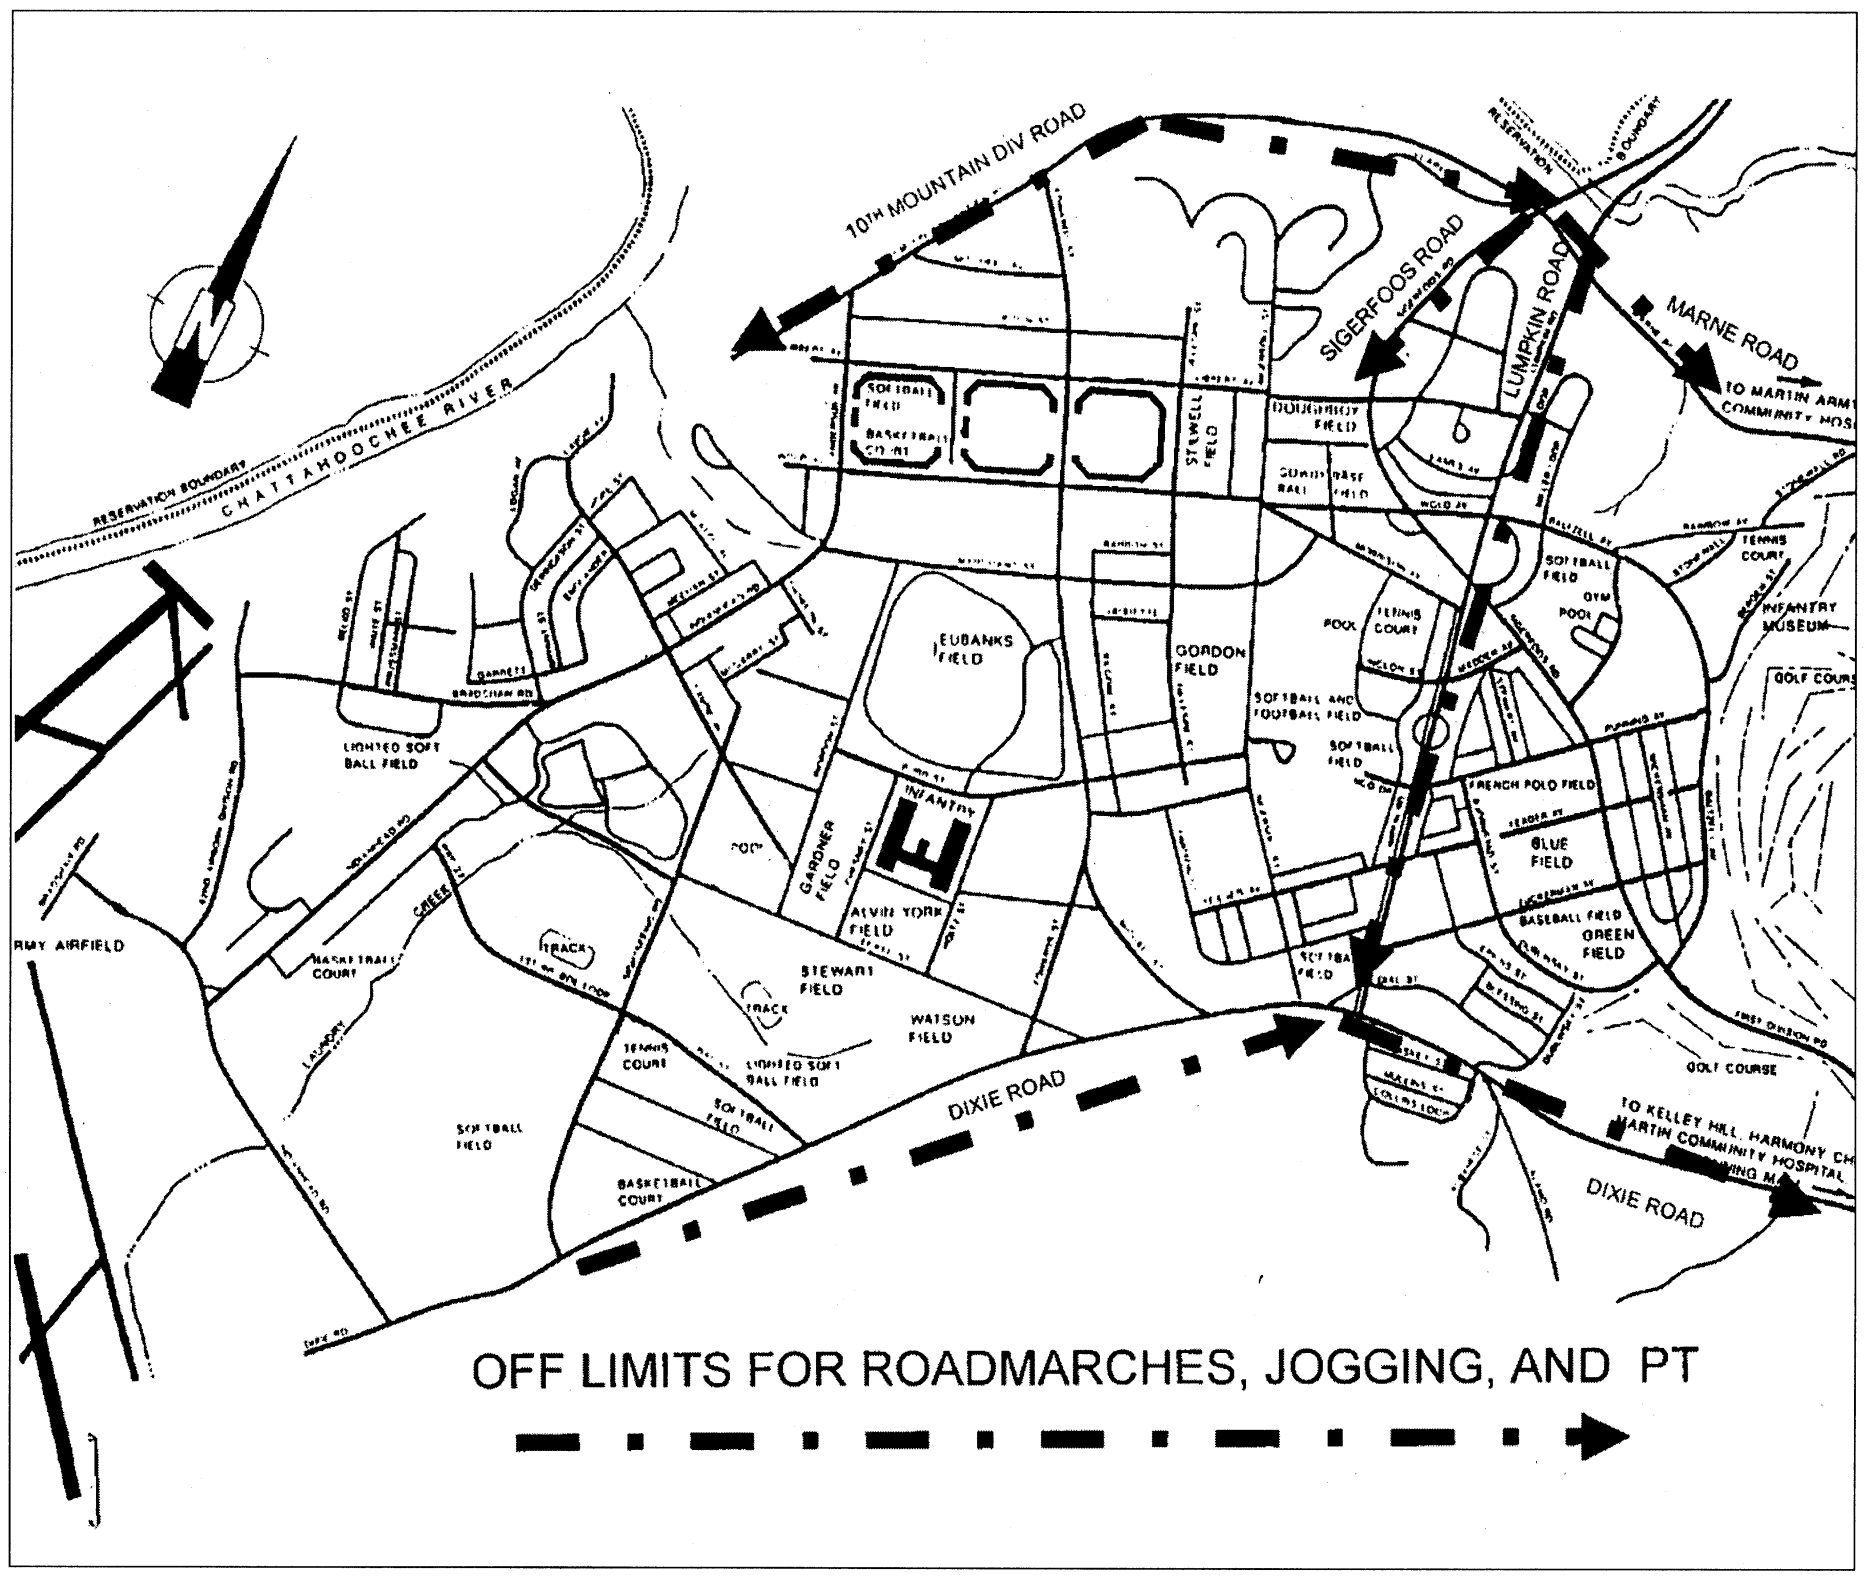
Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

A Ranger from 3rd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, was injured recently while road marching with his squad.

Spc. Jeffrey Edinger was struck by a vehicle around 5:50 a.m. May 27, throwing him 30 to 40 feet in the air. Edinger suffered a subdural hematoma (bleeding from the skull), a lacerated kidney a broken left fibula and other cuts and bruises, according to the incident report.

The incident occurred on Sightseeing Road — a road not authorized for road marching. Although each member of the squad wore the required reflective belt and the lead and trail Rangers carried flashlights, these measures were not enough to make the route safe for road marching, especially in the dark.

Several roads on Fort Benning have been designated as off-limits to walkers, runners and road marchers for just this reason.



In January 2003, Col. Charles Cornwell, Fort Benning chief of staff, published a safety alert, detailing the safety precautions Soldiers must take to protect themselves.

The alert was published in response to "several close calls between vehicles and runners reported on Dixie Road and on Sightseeing Road."

Other safety measures commanders and their Soldiers are required to take to prevent injuries — like Edinger's — or even fatalities include:

• Select routes with light vehicle traffic for PT runs.

• Do not block more than one traffic lane with troop formations or units, including the leader running to the left of the formation.

• Straggler control is key. Stragglers should be placed into their own formation and required to use the same safety gear.

• Road guards with reflective vests should be posted 50 meters to the front and to the rear of formations. During hours of limited visibility — darkness, fog or heavy rain — road guards should also carry a flashlights. Anyone running to the left of the formation should also wear a reflective vest.

Of course, safety isn't just the runner or road marcher's responsibility, Cornwell pointed out in his alert. Soldiers and civilians sharing the roads with these formations should also be on their toes and aware of safety.

Drivers are not to exceed 15 mph. from 6 to 7:30 a.m., and they must drive 10 miles per hour when meeting or passing a troop formation.

Individual joggers and walkers are required to stay on the sidewalks or road shoulders on the side facing oncoming traffic at all times. They must wear reflective waist belts or vests and high visibility clothing.

Also, Cornwell wrote, pedestrians are prohibited from wearing headphones when they're out on the roads.

Jim Ozley, a Fort Benning safety specialist, said the following roads are off-limits for running and road marching:

• 10th Mountain Division Road

• Dixie Road, except the portion from Sightseeing Road (Sandy Patch) to Lawson Army Airfield

• Sightseeing Road from Dixie Road to Sunshine Road

• Sunshine Road

• Lumpkin Road from Dixie Road to Custer Road

• Custer Road from Benning Boulevard to Eisenhower Exchange

• Lawson Army Airfield in its entirety, to include runways.

Measures: Improve safety and new guard shacks.

It will also pay for the construction of a new welcome center at the I-185 gate.

The new access control point will have several lanes and trucks will be funneled through a separate lane and searched appropriately without congesting regular post traffic.

"We are lucky Congress gave us that $8 million," said provost marshal Lt. Col. Sean Finnegan. "We will be able to significantly increase our security posture, improve work conditions for those who man the checkpoints and improve traffic flow."

In the near future, Finnegan said individuals coming onto the installation who don't have an installation decal will have to visit one of two locations and register with post authorities for a visitor's pass.

"Having a register of everyone who comes on and off the installation is a valuable tool," he said. "It is going to significantly change how we are able to manage the security at the access control points."

Finnegan said he now has more than 300 people dedicated to force protection.

"If the threat level increases, we can rapidly react and get these people where they are needed," he said. "Antiterrorism and law enforcement are equal priorities for us. We look at it as an intermixed mission."

Robertson said the installation is pushing ahead in the mission to meet Army requirements for unit antiterrorism advisors.

Of the 51 required slots, he said, 36 have been filled.

"The UATAs are a good force for me," Robertson said. "I can call them in a heartbeat and put threat notices out to them, and they communicate the requirements through the chain of command."

Robertson said the post is working on a $623,000 mass notification attack warning system, as well.

Currently, there are six speaker systems in place, which are interfaced. Robertson said the $623,000 would cover the installation of an additional 23 systems, which would allow post officials to broadcast messages and warnings to either specific areas of post or the entire installation.

Robertson also said that in the event of an attack, the post is well-equipped to handle the situation.

"If we ever do have an incident in which people are threatened or attacked," he said, "we have a great fire department and EMT service, the 789th Explosive Ordnance Detachment, and highly trained military police and law enforcement personnel."

Martin Army Community Hospital is ready to go in the event of a serious incident as well, Robertson said.

"MACH has equipment for mobile casualty points and decontamination procedures, and we have a standing agreement with civilian hospitals in the area in the event of a mass casualty situation," he said.

New construction has to meet Department of Defense regulations on antiterrorism safety measures as well, Robertson said. Some of those measures are fire protection, shatterproof glass and warning systems.

"We are leading from the front in the Army, using modern technology, innovation and construction centered on the Army Antiterrorism and Force Protection Program," Robertson said.

The Army Corps of Engineers project manager for the I-185 access control point construction site said the gate is scheduled to reopen Aug. 23.

For more information about antiterrorism measures on post, call Robertson at 545-5135.

CLOSER LOOK

Fort Benning's new and improved Interstate 185 access control point is expected to be completed near the end of August. It will include:

- A state-of-the-art Welcome Center
- A vehicle, visitor registration point
- An inspection lane dedicated to trucks
- Slalom-type barriers to discourage ramming

Soldiers to get side body armor soon

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Deployed troops will soon get side protection for their Interceptor Body Armor, thanks to the efforts of Program Executive Office Soldier.

The IBA Deltoid Extension was one of dozens of pieces of equipment PEO Soldier officials showed off to the Pentagon press corps during a media briefing June 14.

In the two years since the organization stood up, it has fielded or is in the process of researching more than 350 pieces of equipment — from boots to parachutes to new rifles — to save Soldier lives, improve their quality of life and increase their effectiveness on the battlefield, said Brig. Gen. James Moran, PEO Soldier executive officer.

"Outfitting Soldiers is just as important as (acquiring) a major piece of equipment," Moran said.

At about 16 pounds, IBA is lighter than the 25-pound Vietnam-era flack jacket it replaced and it offers better protection, Moran said. The Deltoid Extension will add about another 5 pounds and protects the sides of the rib cage and shoulders. However, the extension comes with a price for the Soldier.

Moran explained that it can limit movement and block air from circulating under the body armor — decreasing the Soldier's ability to cool off.

"Everything we do is a balance," Moran said. "We want all Soldiers to come back without any injuries. At the same time, we want them to be combat effective. Nothing can be made to be indestructible."

> "We have a clever enemy, an adaptable enemy, so we must be clever and adaptable."
> Brig. Gen. James Moran
> PEO Soldier executive officer

Despite the weight of IBA, Moran has no doubt the new body armor has saved lives. The Army has purchased about 300,000 full sets of IBA.

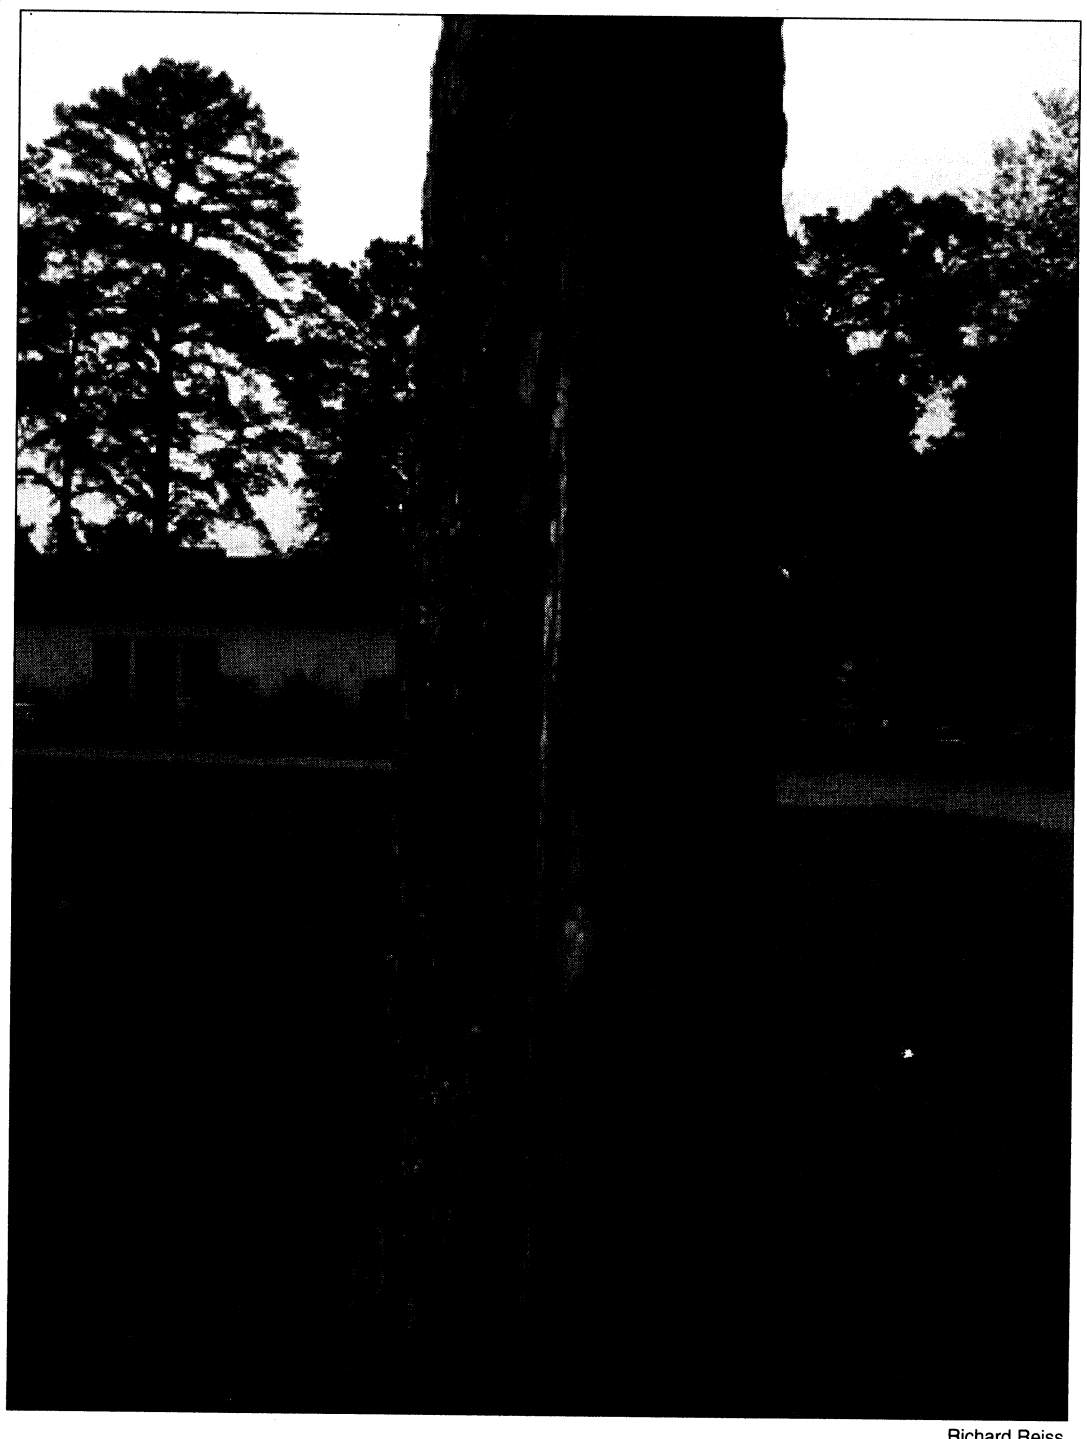
The current budget funds 50,000 Deltoid Extension sets this fiscal year, all of which will be shipped to troops by the end of September, said Col. John Norwood, program manager for PEO Soldier Equipment. The Army plans to request funding in next year's budget to equip 132,000 Soldiers in the Central Command area of operations.

"We have a clever enemy, an adaptable enemy, so we must be clever and adaptable," Moran said.

Another piece of equipment PEO Soldier showed off is the Micro Climate Cooling System now in use by Army aviation flight crews. The system is a liquid-filled vest connected by a flexible tube to a 12-pound box that circulates the coolant. A quick disconnect allows users to move around the aircraft as necessary and a rheostat allows users to control the coolant temperature.

PEO Soldier tests have demonstrated that crews can increase flight times from 1.5 hours in a hot environment to about five hours, Moran said.

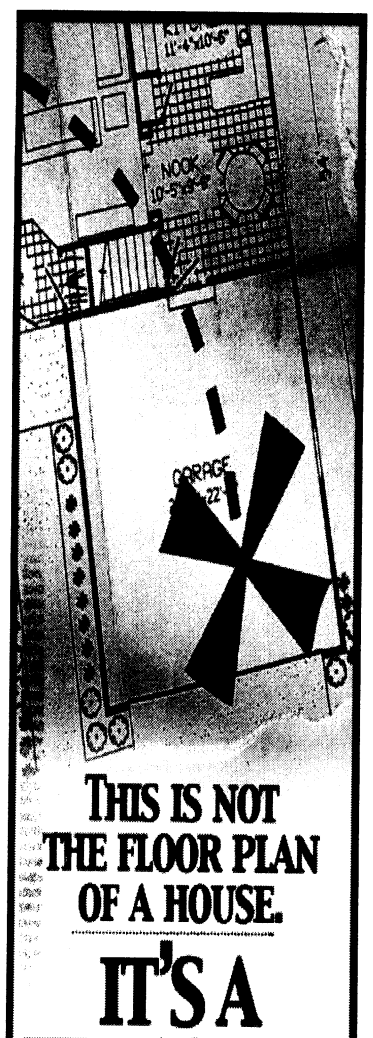
The third piece of equipment PEO Soldier demonstrated was the XM-8 rifle. While the XM-8 faces four more tests before the decision is made whether to buy it, Moran said the Special Forces Soldiers who have tried it said they want it now.



There are three variants of the XM-8: a light version with a collapsible stock and a 9.5-inch barrel, a standard version with a 12-inch barrel and a designated marksman version with a 20-inch barrel. While a longer barrel means greater weight, it also means better accuracy over greater ranges and a higher rate of fire.

In addition to being lighter than the M-16 and M-4 rifles, the XM-8 is easier to maintain with significantly fewer problems with stoppages. The first XM-8 tested fired 15,000 rounds without cleaning or lubrication with no misfire, said Col. Michael Smith, program manager for PEO Soldier Weapons.

The last new type of rifle the Army has bought was the M-16 in the 1960s, Moran said.



If the XM-8 passes its remaining tests and the decision is made to buy it, the Army will likely purchase about 8,000 next fiscal year to equip two units of action, Moran said.

Lightning strikes

Richard Reiss

This Main Post tree shows the damage caused by lighting. Saturday through June 26 is Lightning Safety Awareness week. Each year in the United States, about 400 children and adults are struck by lightning at sporting events, on the beach, mountain climbing, mowing the lawn or during other outdoor activities, according to the National Weather Service Web site. The U.S. lightning season is summer, but lightning can strike year-round. The Fourth of July is historically one of the most deadly times of the year for lightning. Commissary gives scholarships

Students to receive $1,500 awards today

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Two chaplains' daughters are counting their blessings today as they each receive a $1,500 Defense Commissary Agency scholarship.

Stephanie Koop and Lauren Hawkins were selected from the 37 Fort Benning applicants in this, the fourth year of the scholarship program.

"Thirty-seven is the least number of applications we've ever had," said commissary manager Gary Hensley. "We made a lot of effort getting the applications out, and I thought we'd have 70 to 75 and get four or five winners. But we'll have a little party for our two winners."

Koop

The DeCA awards are part of the Scholarships for Military Children Program, which was created to recognize the contributions of military families to the readiness of the fighting force and to celebrate the role of commissaries in the military community.

Each of the 259 military commissaries worldwide is guaranteed to have at least one winner. Additional awards depend on the number of applicants at each commissary and the funding contributed by manufacturers and suppliers whose products are sold at military commissaries. Sponsors like E-Z Foil, Kellogg, Kraft, Hershey, and Procter and Gamble provided the $741,000 awarded to 494 students this year, according to the Scholarships for Military Children Web site.

Koop is a 2003 graduate of Calvary Christian School and just completed her first year at Bethel College in Bethel, Ind. She's studying to become a history teacher and plans to teach at the middle or high school level.

Since Bethel is a private, Christian school, Koop said her mother is always on the look-out for scholarships she can apply for.

Koop was active in the student government and National Honor Society at Cavalry Christian and competed on the volleyball team.

Hawkins

Her school required 40 hours of volunteer service each year, which she fulfilled through her work with Teen Advisors (a peer counseling group), the Valley Rescue Mission and House of Heroes. For her efforts, Koop received a Fort Benning Youth Volunteer of Excellence Award.

She said she visited five or six schools before settling on Bethel, 14 hours from home. She admitted she didn't fall in love with the school when her father suggested they make a stop there on the way home from her grandmother's house, but visited a second time and knew it was for her.

"It was the friendliest school," Koop said. "I felt the most comfortable there."

At Bethel, Koop leads Bible studies and participates in outreach groups. Although she's participating in the same activities she did in high school, there's one major difference at Bethel.

"It was a very cold winter," she said. "I had to buy some warm jackets."

And now, she said, she's "very blessed" with the DeCA scholarship.

Schoolmate Lauren Hawkins graduated from Cavalry Christian last month and had just returned from orientation at Olivet Nazarene

Get Outta Here

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Sick of sitting around in that barracks room looking at the walls? Need to get the family out of the house or just take a break? We've got the answer for you. 'Get Outta Here' appears in The Bayonet each week to highlight recreation and leisure venues right here in the tricommunity. If you would like to suggest a hot spot for the column, call Sgt. Kim Dooley at 545-3367.

There's a month for everything these days. Which is why I wasn't exactly surprised to learn June is National Flying Month.

And what better way to celebrate than taking to the skies as, well, a pilot.

That's right — you can fly a plane. On your first lesson. Right here in Columbus.

Be a Pilot is a national, nonprofit learn-to-fly program that offers a "discovery flight" at CSG Aviation, located at the Columbus Metro Airport.

Hard to believe you can skip the classroom portion and get airborne your first day on the runway, but the discovery flight is designed to give you a taste of what's to come.

It's a 25- to 30-minute trip into the air with a Federal Aviation Administration-licensed instructor.

You won't be in control for the take-off or the landing, but once you're in the air, it's all you.

One of the girls in my office did this last November, and she got to fly over downtown Columbus, Phenix City, Lake Bottom, the Columbus dam and Columbus' huge, little known quarry.

She loved it, and I have to admit, it's tempting even for me — a complete acrophobe.

The discovery flight is only $49 with a certificate you can download and print out at www.beapilot.com.

And it's not exactly flying lessons, per se, so the normal prerequisites for flying lessons — like a medical exam — aren't required.

Of course, if you already know flying is the thing for you, CSG Aviation offers extensive pilot training, too.

In fact, according to Ashley Dennard, your point of contact for flight training, service members can now use their Montgomery G.I. Bill to help

Joy to the World

Kids learn about God

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

If you ask Kay Cocklin one of her favorite childhood memories, a smile will sweep her face, and she'll tell you with tears in her eyes that some of her warmest memories were made in Vacation Bible School.

The enthusiastic believer said she has participated in VBS for at least 35 years.

"It was my favorite time of the summer as a child," she remembered. "I just loved it, and I was so disappointed when I reached the age when I couldn't go anymore."

Of course, Cocklin wasn't about to let a silly, little thing like age keep her away. Instead, she returned the following year to help bring the same joy she'd experienced to younger children.

These days, Cocklin is one of the "helpers" at Fort Benning's annual VBS. The program — a nondenominational religious education program for both Protestant and Catholic children — kicked off Monday morning at White Elementary School. It ends today.

The children started every morning in the school's cafeteria, where they sang songs that tied into this year's VBS theme, Lava Lava Luau.

There, they also received a "simple scripture" each day, Cocklin said, something small and easy to remember, which served as the center for that day's activities.

"They're very simple messages of God's love for us and our love for him," she explained.

Then, it was on to the activities and fun. The VBS students rotated between four "stations" each day.

Hot Bible Topics included stories and skits, designed to give the children a better grasp on each day's message and to show them how to apply them in real life.

Crafts was a relaxing, fun period for the students. Tuesday, they made "spinners," toys with a scripture verse hidden inside. The spinners make "music" — a high-pitched hum — when the children spin them on a string.

Chadder Island Adventure Theater, meanwhile, offered a different scripture-related video each day.

And of course, what summer youth program is complete without getting outside and doing a little "romping around," playing such games as Jungle Gym?

All in all, the children had a full schedule, and one packed with fun and valuable lessons about God

VBS: Celebrates God's messages

and the Bible, Cocklin said.

"Some of these children are around this all the time, but for a percentage of them ... this is the only time they hear any words from the Bible," she said. "It's the only time they associate with it."

And those words carry a very important message, said fellow helper Darlene Llano.

"(VBS) teaches children how to learn God's word and how to take it out and share it with their friends," Llano said. "And if these children are saved, they can save their friends ..."

Jediah Conachan may not understand quite what that means at 7 years old, but in his third year at VBS, he knows he's doing something special each summer. And he said he'll be back to do it again next year.

"People should learn about God," he said firmly. "It's fun."

And that's just what Cocklin had hoped for — that the children would have fun. Something she's witnessed with joy throughout the week.

"I was walking home (from VBS) behind a family with three little boys, and one of them was singing a pumped up version of Joy to the World — the song we sang that morning. He turned to his mother and asked, 'Do we get to go back again tomorrow?' and his mother told him, 'You get to go back every day this week.' And he jumped into the air and said, 'Yippee!'" Cocklin recalled, laughing. "He was just so excited that he got to come back to Vacation Bible School tomorrow. It was wonderful."

University in Bourbonnais, Ill., where she plans to pursue a double major in marketing and corporate communications.

When she visited Olivet last fall, she said she was impressed with the school's marketing of itself and enjoyed her time there.

Her parents, Hawkins said, wanted her to attend the school of her choice. But because of Olivet's private-school tuition, she "searched high and low for any scholarships available" so her parents wouldn't have to foot the whole bill.

"I was praying for some good scholarships," Hawkins said, "and this was an answered prayer."

Hawkins was Calvary's student government president last year and was also very involved in choir both at school and at church.

"I tried to get my hands on anything music," she said, "but I didn't want to study music theory. It was more of a hobby for me. I wasn't passionate about it as a career."

Hawkins dedicated her volunteer hours for school to organizing projects like Operation Christmas Child, a shoebox ministry for underprivileged children in the U.S. and around the world. She also volunteered with the Columbus Hospice and Habitat for Humanity.

"I love working with kids," Hawkins said, "and although my career choice is not based on kids, I do want to keep working with the community and with children."

She took a mission trip to the Cayman Islands, working with children in foster care and continues to work with a group of girls through a church program.

Right now, she's planning a sleep-over for the 15 girls she's worked with.

"I want the young girls to know that they are somebody," Hawkins said.

And she said she'll continue working with abused and neglected children, "representing the voices that can't be heard."

Youth volunteers make difference, get head start through Red Cross program

Post agencies, kids reap program rewards

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

Fatima Conwell is all set to graduate from high school next year. She knows exactly what university she wants to attend and exactly what she wants to study. But why wait for college?

The 17-year-old Spencer student is getting a head start on college and her future by volunteering with the American Red Cross Summer Youth Volunteer Program.

One of 42 youth volunteers placed across the installation, Conwell joined 23 of her peers at Martin Army Community Hospital, where she has been learning the ropes of the Intensive Care Unit.

In her second year in the program, Conwell plans to apply what she's learned during the past two summers to help her at Columbus State University, where she'll study nursing.

Of course, without a nursing license, there's only so much Conwell can do at the hospital. But with her experience and drive, she was able to get a waiver to get a little more "hands-on" interaction with patients — when a certified nurse is present.

For four hours every weekday morning, she enters patient acuities into the computer, preps wheelchairs and EKG machines for use, helps bathe and transport patients around the hospital and serves them food.

"It's all very complex," she said, "but I like it, and I'm learning a lot."

Which is exactly the point of the program, if you ask Gene Gibbs, the program's overseer.

"The benefit of volunteering is immeasurable for the kids," he said. "They learn work ethics. They learn how to work with their peers and seniors in a professional environment. It just gives them direction and helps them define goals they want to work toward."

For Conwell, that goal is to follow in the footsteps of her father, a staff sergeant with the 498th Medical Company, which is currently deployed to Tikrit, Iraq.

She plans to join the Army, too, and enjoy the opportunity to travel like her father has — after she gets her four-year degree, that is.

Fellow volunteer Shauna Matlock may not have joining the Army in mind, but she's definitely interested in the nursing field.

And lending a hand at MACH, cleaning rooms and restocking supplies, is a good way to get a feel for the hospital environment.

The 13-year-old Faith Middle School student admits she enrolled in the program because"my mom thought it would be a good opportunity," but she said it's turned out to be a good experience.

"It's good to know I'm helping somebody here," she said, "that I can really make a difference this summer."

And that she is, Gibbs agreed. All the volunteers are.

"The (agencies) they volunteer for love to have them. They truly help," he said.

"They take care of tasks that people just don't have time to get to. They're really an asset."

Besides the hospital, volunteers are working at the Infantry Museum, the Fort Benning Golf Course, Sayers and Donovan libraries, Briant Wells Fitness Center, Army Community Service, Army Substance Abuse Program, the Thrift Shop, the Veterinary Clinic and the ARC's main office.

They work in their respective areas from 8 a.m. to noon every week day. They began June 7 and will finish July 16.

And by the time they're done, Gibbs said, their value is impossible to deny.

"(Agencies) that at first didn't think they had anything for the kids to do end up finding out that they can't live without them," he said.

> "The benefit of volunteering is immeasurable for the kids. They learn work ethics. They learn how to work with their peers and seniors in a professional environment. It just gives them direction and helps them define goals they want to work toward."

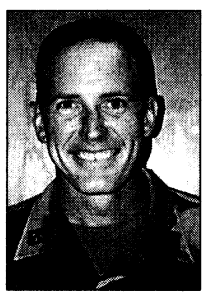
Weathering strikes

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

Lori and I love Fort Benning, but we had a great time at Fort Lewis, Wash., too.



Here, I enjoy Lake Oliver every chance I get. There, I enjoyed the Cascade Mountains every chance I got.

The trees on the slopes of the Cascades are truly awesome — they've stood the test of time for literally hundreds of years. As Gary Thomas reminds us in his article When Lightning Strikes, the reason those monolithic trees survive so long is quite simple: "The Washington forests are so wet that lightning strikes cause relatively few fires. Lightning strikes still come, but they're not as devastating, so trees have had a much longer time to take root and grow."

He goes on to say that that's a good picture of a marriage that is drenched in a strong commitment to God and a strong commitment to each other. Here's something worth remembering: Even the best of marriages will still be struck by lightning — sexual temptation, communication problems, frustrations, unrealized expectations, etc.

But if the marriage is saturated with vibrant, authentic faith, the conditions won't be ripe for a devastating fire to follow the lightning strike.

Thomas continues, "If I'm married only for happiness, and my happiness wanes for whatever reason, one little spark will burn the entire forest of my relationship. But if my aim is too faithfully and consistently model Christ's ministry of longsuffering, humility and forgiveness, my relationship will be fireproof."

Hawkins

In a world where relational fires are burning all over the place, I'm incredibly encouraged that faith in God through a transforming relationship with Christ can make relationships fireproof.

How do I know? Two reasons:

• It's what's protected, kept and prospered my marriage through years of separation during Special Forces days (with all of the associated trials and temptations), and

• It's what I see work around me week in and week out at the Family Life Center and our chapels. Something special happens when we "let go and let God."

The question may not at all be, "How much of God do you have?" Instead, if you're interested in fireproofing your marriage, I'd encourage you to ask yourself, "How much of you does God have?

Want to increase your odds of growing a love that will last?

Want to keep relationship drenched so that the sparks that fly from all around don't stand a chance of igniting something that can burn you both down? Then I recommend Thomas' book Sacred Marriage, along with a marriage tune-up at the Chaplain Family Life Center.

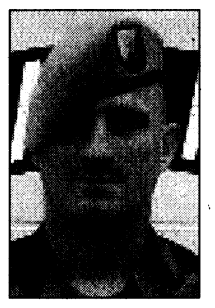
We're here to provide you with "help for your journey." It's completely confidential and it's free. Give us a call at 545-1760, or come see me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel, Sundays at 11 a.m. on Kelley Hill.

Faith gives life purpose

Chaplain (Maj.) R. Paul Lasley
Ranger Training Brigade

REFLECTIONS

Ernest Hemingway wrote a famous novel entitled The Sun Also Rises. It is a novel that laments the hard emptiness of life, pained with a void of purpose and lacking unifying principles which govern and structure the whole of our individual lives.



Hemingway began his novel with a quote from the book of Ecclesiastes, "What profit has a man from all his labor in which he toils under the sun? One generation passes away; and another generation comes; but the earth abides forever. The sun also rises, and the sun goes down, and hastens to the place where it arose ..."

Hemingway, I think, would say that life is utterly meaningless — we must each "invent" our own meaning and purpose (in life) or else go mad. Of course, Hemingway practiced what he preached and late in life committed suicide, apparently unsatisfied with his literary success and wealth.

The book of Ecclesiastes says almost the same thing — with one huge exception: Life is utterly meaningless, and work and labor alone will never give you meaning and purpose of any lasting significance or worth.

Ecclesiastes, though, teaches that only God, and a "faith-based life" will give us what each of our lives need most — meaning and value. How is this relevant to those of us at Fort Benning — the Infantry Center for the U.S. Army?

The Army is an organization where passion, commitment and extreme dedication to the unit and its mission is the normal mode of living, and is the entry-level attitude for service in this great calling to military service. We are an organization that affirms dedication to mission and victory.

Lasley

That's not all bad and in fact is mostly good. This dedication to mission and victory is in many ways an affirmation of the exceptional high quality of people that service in this impeccably great post, as both leaders and followers.

I do not take issue with a commitment to excellence and the warrior ethos. But professional success, "Soldier success" is no more than fool's gold if that is all we have in life.

Have you ever taken inventory of your own life's passions and drives? What would need to be said by you, about yourself — when you are 90 years old — for you to honestly tell the world that your life was a good life and that you "did your life" right?

I would ask you to consider that your rank, your professional affirmation, or the awards on your uniform, or any other symbols of valor you may have nobly earned — those likely would not comprise much weight in gauging life's worth and success.

Valor in combat and military service is the pinnacle of what we admire and are indicators of a morally sound life — those exclusively in and of themselves do not give us ultimate significance and worth.

Most of us intuitively recognize that in order for life to be worthwhile, something more than and other than our work and our soldiering must decisively shape and govern our lives.

Christians believe this something is God. That is, Christian faith is founded on the hope and trust that we are at peace with God, have purpose and direction in life through simple faith in Jesus Christ..

The primary benefit of that variety of faith is not heaven, instead of hell when we die.

The primary benefit of that type of faith is that our lives (in the here and now, at Fort Benning) have meaning and purpose, even in the midst of busyness, an op tempo that at times has been bad, and the frustrations of geographical separation from our families, and the stress of life and death in combat.

Life can be bad, even when you do not have faith in Christ. But life is bad in a hopeless and unbearable way — apart from God. I am not inviting you to a life that merely "bad" instead of "really sucking" without faith.

The point is that a life that you will be glad you lived, should you have the blessing of a long life, will most certainly be a life that is based on your faith in Christ, and animated by that one simple devotion.

My brothers and sisters, don't waste your life settling for second best offered by the fool's gold of life divorced from faith.

Choose wisely, by following God with simple faith in Christ.

Ecclesiastes 12:4, "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is man's all." In other words, respect God by listening to and following Christ.

Faith gives life purpose, direction and meaning. Labor and work alone do not.

If only Hemingway had read the whole story in Ecclesiastes and heeded its advice.

Dragons rain fire on Eagles

Spc. Nikki St. Amant

E Company, 1st Battalion, 15th Infantry Regiment Dragons centerfielder Robie Stricklin rounds third base for the umpteenth time during a 22-0 washout of the 203rd Forward Support Battalion Eagles July 10.

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Dragons set blazing fire to low-flying Eagles in an almost overkill 22-0 win in one of the first few games of the post intramural softball season July 10.

E Company, 1st Battalion 15th Infantry Regiment Dragons outfielder Lee Zuber batted in the first run when he nailed a shot down the third base line to push centerfielder Robie Stricklin across the plate in the top of the first.

On defense, the B Company, 203rd Forward Support Battalion Eagles looked shaky at best, and with only one hit in the bottom of the first, the recently formed team closed out the inning with no runs to the Dragons' four.

The Dragons continued their furious offensive pace in the second inning with a whirlwind of hits and runs. Fueled by strong batting and shoddy fielding on the left side by the Eagles, the Dragons pulled ahead to a 10-0 lead by the top of the second.

The Eagles once again struggled offensively in the bottom of the second inning, racking up only one hit before being shut down.

The top of the third inning proved no surprise, with the Dragons once again consistently finding the soft Eagles fielding on the left an easy target for hard grounders and mid-range outfield shots.

The Eagles failed again to stop the offensive onslaught sent by the Dragons before finally closing out the top of the inning having given up six more runs. Dragons batters went almost two rotations through the lineup before retiring back to the field.

The bottom of the third was predictable and uneventful again — a quick, three-up-three-down education in what not to do at the plate for the Eagles crew.

The Dragons showed no mercy in the top of the fourth and pounded in six more runs as they solidified their dominance over the flailing Eagles. With no runs by the grounded and plucked Eagles in the bottom of the inning, the game was officially ended at the close of the fourth with a definitive 22-0 rout by the Dragons.

> "They were hitting and we weren't. They were catching the ball and we were making mistakes. We learn from our mistakes and we'll get better. We have nine games to go."
> Guermillo Carrillo
> Eagles coach

"For no practice and it only being our second game, I'd say we did alright," said Dragons leftfielder Keith Montgomery of the double-digit win.

"Our bats were on," Stricklin said. "It was a combination of us being on and them being off."

"We're coming back," said defeated Eagles shortstop Chris Monhollen. "Watch for us at the end of the season."

Eagles coach Guillermo Carillo pegged lack of practice as a major factor in the team's defeat and said the development of the team as the season progresses will depend on mission requirements.

"(Losing) happens," said Carillo. "You lose or win, and either way, you have to keep your head up. They were hitting and we weren't. They were catching the ball and we were making mistakes."

"We learn from our mistakes, and we'll get better," he said. "We have nine games to go."

You can catch post intramural softball at Knappenberger Field at various times after duty hours. For more information, contact Carol Gearhart at 544-4511 or 545-1747.

8 Fort Benning Soldiers to compete in Olympics

Paula J. Randall Pagán
USAMU Public Affairs Office

When the 2004 Olympic Games in Athens, Greece, kicks off Aug. 11, eight Soldiers from Fort Benning will represent the United States.

Seven shooters and a gunsmith of the U.S. Army Marksmanship Unit have been selected to the 2004 U.S. Olympic Team.

Sgt. 1st Class Charles P. Gartland, 39, a USAMU gunsmith, was chosen by USA Shooting to be the official gunsmith for the 2004 Olympic Games. USA Shooting is the national governing body for Olympic shooting sports in the United States.

The following seven USAMU shooters will compete in 10 Olympic shooting events:

- Maj. Michael E. Anti, Men's Prone Rifle and Three Position Rifle;
- Sgt. 1st Class Bret E. Erickson, Men's Trap and Double Trap;
- Sgt. 1st Class Shawn C. Dulohery, Men's Skeet;
- Sgt. 1st Class James "Todd" Graves, Men's Skeet;
- Sgt. 1st Class Jason A. Parker, Men's Air Rifle;
- Sgt. 1st Class Daryl L. Szarenski, Men's Air Pistol and Free Pistol; and ,
- Spc. Hattie J. Johnson, Women's Air Rifle.

Erickson

For Anti, 39, this will be his third Olympics. The infantry officer is attached to the USAMU through the World Class Athlete Program. He finished 9th in 2000 in the Three-Position Rifle competition and 18th in 1992 in the Prone Rifle event.

Erickson, 43, will be shooting at his third Olympics as well. He came in 20th in 1996 and in 16th in 1992 in the Trap competitions. This time, the mortarman will be competing in both the Trap and Double Trap competitions.

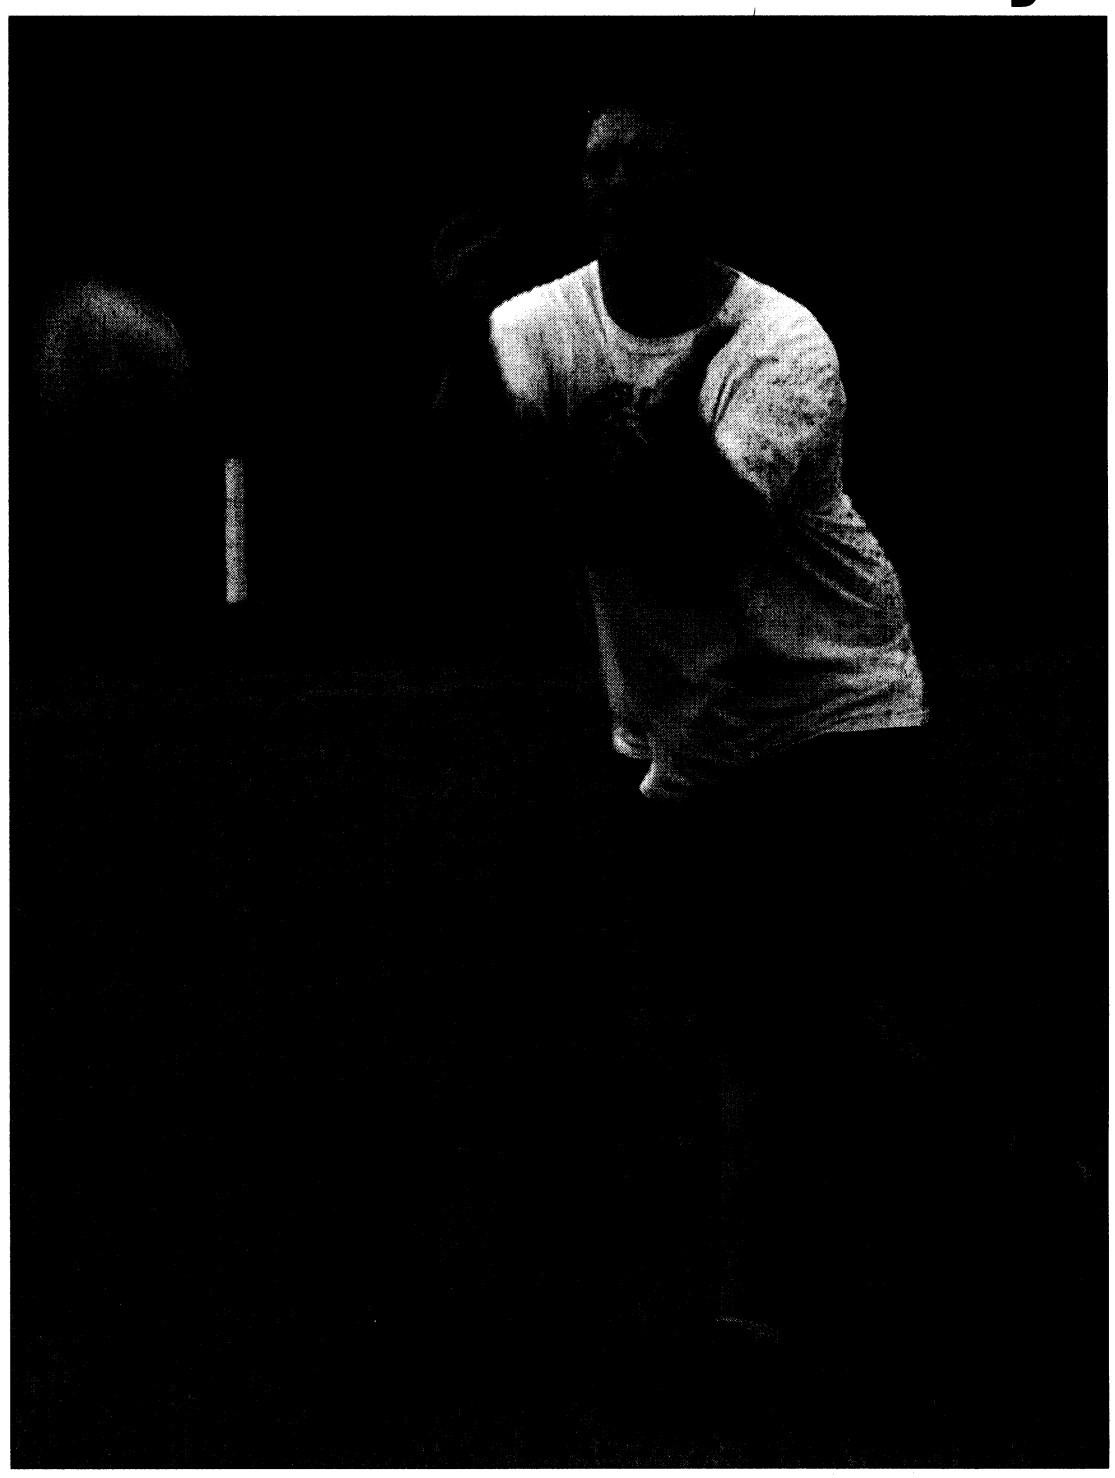
Parker, 29, will be competing for the second time in the Olympics in Men's Air Rifle. The infantryman finished in fourth place in the 2000 Olympics, missing a medal by seven-tenths of a point.

The third time shooting in the Olympics in 2000 resulted in a Bronze Medal in Skeet for Graves, 41. He finished 15th in Skeet in the 1996 Olympics, In the 1992 Olympics, the infantryman took 11th place in Skeet and 29th place in Trap.

For Szarenski, 36, this will be his second trip to the Olympics but his first time competing in Air Pistol. He will compete in Free Pistol. The infantryman finished in 25th in Free Pistol in 2000.

A medic, Johnson, 22, a first time Olympian, will compete in Women's Air Rifle in Athens.

Dulohery, 39, will compete in Skeet in the 2004 Games. This will be the first Olympics for the infantry Soldier who won the 2001 Skeet World Championship in Cairo, Egypt.



Columbus rugby team to host tourney

Cruisers gear up for Saturday

Joe Kolojay, a Cruisers forward, passes off the ball during drills at Tuesday night's practice. The team is gearing up for its home tournament Saturday.

Watching as the Cruise-a-Matics got into practice Tuesday evening, one thing was clear — they're ready to get down and dirty.

The military and civilian-mixed rugby team, also known as the Columbus/Fort Benning Rugby Football Club, is hosting its only home sevens tournament at 9 a.m. Saturday at the Cruiser Dome off Victory Drive.

A year-round sport, rugby is divided into three seasons. During the summer season, ruggers play sevens, a game in which seven players man the field for each team and play the game in seven-minute halves.

But don't let the quick clock fool you. Sevens is played at a much faster pace — basically at a sprint — than its cousin game, fifteens, which is played in 45-minutes halves with 15 players on the pitch per team.

"Sevens is the opposite of fifteens," said Dean Dobson, Cruisers team captain and coach. "From the amount of time spent on the field to the strategy and technique to the rules, it's just a totally different game, a different style of rugby."

The drastic difference has made a bit of a challenge for the Cruisers, who have many new, inexperienced players on their team, Dobson said. Even those players who were able to catch games and build on their technique during the previous fifteens season will be challenged to transfer those skills to the sevens field.

Another obstacle the team has had to overcome to prepare for Saturday's tournament is that the Cruisers are technically a social club, with a roster subject to frequent change.

"With so many of our players in the military, all the deployments and people moving, it's hard to keep the team together," Dobson said, adding that in just the past few months, the team has lost some of its veteran players.

Most of the other teams that will compete in this weekend's tournament are mostly civilian and don't face that problem, he said.

But that won't stop the Cruisers from doing their best to own their home pitch Saturday. Despite the inexperience of the "rookie" ruggers, the team has several strengths that give Dobson confidence.

In fact, he said, in some respects, the Cruisers have an advantage. For example, the team's fitness.

"A lot of our players are military," he explained. "So what they lack in experience they make up for with aggressiveness, fitness and endurance."

Add to that the team motto: "Hit hard."

"We are definitely the hardest hitting team (in the league)," Dobson said. "We may not win all of our games, but we always inflict some punishment on the field."

The plan for the tournament, he said, is to use that hitting power to intimidate other teams, then use the team's fitness to outlast some of the less-lasting players.

Regardless of strategy, just bringing the game to Columbus adds a little oomph to a lineup of ruggers already anxious to put the Cruise-a-Matics on the map as a team to be reckoned with.

"No one wants to lose a home game in front of their home crowd," Dobson said. "And we're on our way to competing at a higher level. I see us moving up, definitely."

And it's not too late to join the team on its way up in the world, said Cruisers club president Roy MacDonald.

Potential or experienced rugby players are encouraged to come out to the tournament Saturday to get a feel for the game and the team, and maybe even get some game time, he said.

Playing in the tournament costs $10, but includes the after party, which will be held at the Uptown Tap. Players should be at the pitch by 8 a.m., MacDonald said, and the games are set to kick off between 9 and 9:30 a.m.

People interested in learning to play who can't make it to the tournament can join the team during its practices from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays at the Cruiser Dome.

To get to the pitch from Interstate 185, take Exit 1-A onto Victory Drive. Take a right on 22nd Avenue (you should be at a stoplight and see Dolly Madison Bakery on your right side). Follow this road across the gravel road and straight through the gate.

Weight loss woes

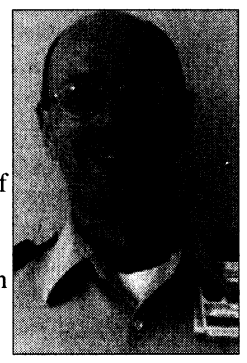
Catalogs and more catalogs. If your mail looks like mine, you are getting catalogs with all the new bathing suits in them. What do catalogs and bathing suits, you ask, have anything to do with injury prevention? A lot more than you might think.



Did you stick to that new exercise or diet program at the beginning of the year? Chances are better than average that you stopped after a few short days or weeks, and now you are looking at last year's bathing suit and wondering how you will fit into it.

Why did you stop exercising this year? Did you start out too fast, try to exercise too long, or too many days in a row? These are all keys in preventing injury. How, then, do you set yourself up for success and prevent injury?

First, honestly evaluate your fitness level and past exercise habits. If you haven't been exercising regularly, start slow. Now that doesn't mean a couple days a week or walking like you are shopping at the mall.

What I am suggesting is that starting with the advised minimums — three days per week, 30 minutes each day. The intensity of the exercise should be such that you aren't gasping to get a word out, or so easy that you can easily carry on a conversation. Somewhere in between is just right.

Let's assume you just finished your second week of walking and you are feeling pretty good. When you advance your program, change only one variable (days per week, length of time, or how fast) at a time. If starting with the bare minimums, you can increase from three to four days per week after a couple weeks, and then again in a couple more weeks. The other variables (how fast and length of time) should be increased no more than 5 to 10 percent at one time.

Why so slow when starting and advancing your program? One, I want you to stay with the program. If you start too long, fast, or often, you will quit. Guaranteed. Two, if you advance too fast, you will have more aches and pains than you would care to talk about.

For those of you who are experienced exercisers, the same general principles apply. No huge or sudden changes. Don't increase anything by more than 5 to 10 percent, and don't completely drop one program and jump into another one overnight or over a weekend. Most of you will also have more aches and pains and slow your progress.

Lastly, just because your favorite athlete publishes his or her exercise program, don't think you can do it exactly like them. You don't have the time or the training base to tolerate their program.

Remember: be realistic about you current capabilities. Don't advance more than 5 to 10 percent at one time, and don't make drastic changes to your program overnight. Follow these tips and you will decrease your injury risk and stay with the program longer. That's a win-win situation.

If you have questions about this article, or any injuries, please contact me via email at physical.therapy@se.amedd.army.mil. Now, get out there, and exercise.

CYS to hold summer sports events

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning's Child and Youth Services is holding a variety of camps, clinics and tournaments in several sports during the summer.

Saturday is the annual Father's Day weekend basketball tournament. The event has been held on post for the past nine years, said Dorrie Wagner, sports specialist with the Sports and Fitness Branch.

Father and son teams interested in competing do not have to preregister. They just need to arrive at the CYS gym 15 minutes prior to their age group start time, Wagner said.

The 8 to 10 group plays at noon, the 11 to 13 at 2 p.m., and the 14 to 16 plays at 4 p.m. Wagner said the teams play 10-minute games that are "self-referred." Teams ahead after the end of play advance to the next round, and at the end of the tournament, the first- and second- place teams win prizes.

"The tournament usually has between 12 and 16 teams across all age groups," Wagner said, "and the 8 to 10 group has the most teams."

Also on deck is the first CYS Baseball Camp set for 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. June 21 and 22. Registration for the camp continues through today at the CYS office in Building 359, the FUN Center on Ingersoll Avenue.

The baseball camp will be run by volunteer coaches and players from Harris County, Wagner said, who approached the CYS staff about starting the camp. Volunteers will work the children on baseball fundamentals.

There are 100 spaces available for the baseball camp, and as of June 14, only 22 children were registered.

"The baseball camp is something we definitely hope to continue," Wagner said.

For youth interested in golf, CYS is offering two events — a Golf Camp for youths 13 and older. The four-day camp is scheduled for 9 a.m. to noon June 21-24 at the Follow Me Golf Course and is followed by a golf tournament on June 25. Preregistration is required and the cost is $70.

Golfers ages 8 to 17 can tee off at the annual post golf clinic scheduled for July 19-21. Times for the clinic are not yet set, but Wagner said younger golfers will play in the morning and older golfers in the afternoon. Cost for the clinic is $20.

Kids wanting to hone their soccer skills can sign up for the fifth annual Soccer Camp, held in conjunction with the Columbus Youth Soccer Organization from 9 a.m. to noon July 12-16 at the post soccer fields. Children will be grouped by age, Wagner said, and the registration fee is $65 per camper.

For more information about upcoming CYS sports events, call 545-1853.

SPORTS BRIEFS

on post

Kids' fishing rodeo — There will be a fishing rodeo Saturday at the Duck Pond on Sand Hill. For more information, call 544-7516.

Army 10-Miler pre-qualifier — Fort Benning will hold a pre-qualifier race for the post's Army 10-Miler team. Racers with the top times will earn spots on the team.

The race begins at 7 a.m. Saturday in front of the Santiago Fitness Center. It's open to all active-duty military. Registration will begin at 6 a.m. For more information, call 544-9486.

Youth summer golf clinic — CYS Youth Sports and Fitness will have registration for the Youth Summer Golf Clinic from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. July 5-16 at the CYS central registration office, Building 359.

The clinic is open to family members, ages 8-17, of active duty, retired military and DoD civilians.

The clinic will be July 19-21 at the Fort Benning Golf Course. Participants must have a CYS membership card. Cost for the clinic is $20 per child.

For more information, call 545-3582.

off post

Titan Games — The Titan Games, the road to Athens for America's elite boxers, fencers, shot-putters, wrestlers, weightlifters, judo and taekwondo, will be in Atlanta Saturday and Sunday.

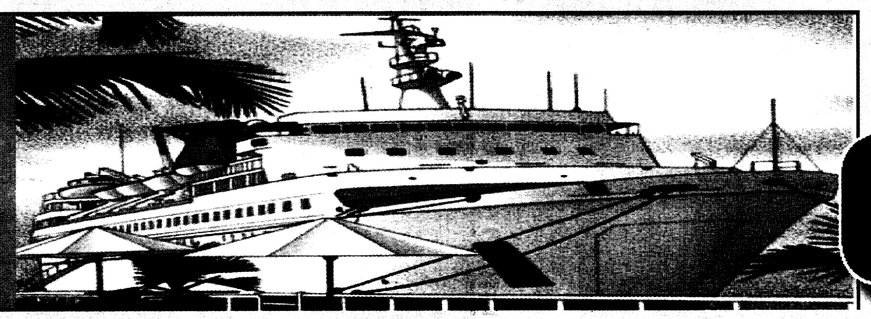
With a valid military ID, personnel can purchase a ticket with a $5 discount at the Philips Arena box office.

Tickets must be purchased in person. Ticket prices include $25 (lower level), $20 (mezzanine) and $12 (upper level).

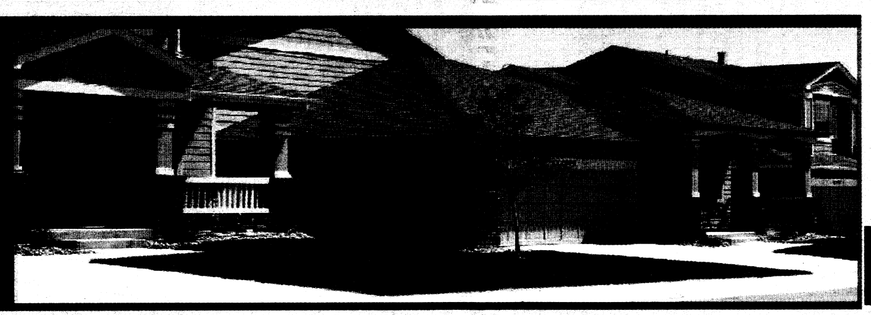
For event schedule and information, log onto www.titangames2004.com.

Special Olympics volunteers — The 2004 Special Olympics Masters Bowling Tournament will be July 17-18 at the AMF Peach Lanes in Columbus. Volunteers are needed. Volunteers need to be at least 16 years old. Shifts are 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. and noon to 6 p.m. July 17 and 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. July 18. For more information, call Myra Tinney at 464-4950.

Military Appreciation Night — The Columbus Catfish baseball team will host the first of two Military Appreciation Nights Saturday at 7 p.m.



The Army Band will perform during the opening ceremony. All Soldiers and family members are invited to enjoy the game free of charge. Reservations are available for families and groups of Soldiers. Call 571-8266.



Football fields closed — All of Columbus' football fields are closed for maintenance through Aug. 15. These fields include Lakebottom and Rigdon Park.

For more information, call Philip Naylor, Parks Manager, at 653-4189 or 653-4190.

THERE'S NOT ENOUGH ART IN OUR SCHOOLS.

NO WONDER PEOPLE THINK

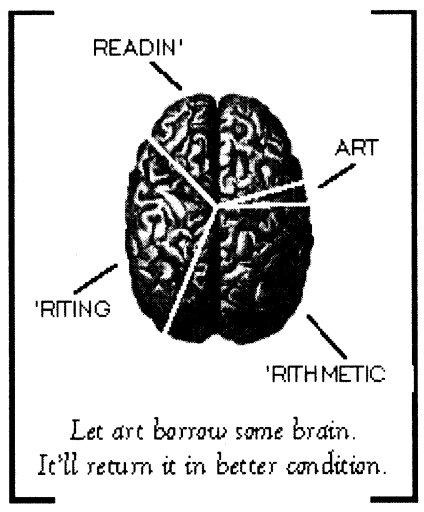
MARTHA GRAHAM

IS A SNACK CRACKER.

Hardly a fitting legacy for the woman who, despite getting a late start at the positively elderly age of 17, became the mother of American interpretive dance.

A misconception. Not to mention an overlooked marketing opportunity.

With verve and nearly single-handedly, Martha Graham brought her dance style into the 20th century. She did nothing less than create an entirely new genre of dance, while shattering the expectations of audiences and critics alike with her percussive, angular movement style. She was one of the first dancers to collaborate with contemporary composers instead of using the 18th- and 19th-century compositions her predecessors favored. Her dances have been called "motion pictures for the sophisticated"; her theories on movement and kinesthetics are still vital today; and there is scarcely a dancer alive who doesn't owe a huge debt to her sharp creative mind and fierce perfectionism.



Ms. Graham told stories using movement. Here, she tells us how sad it is that kids aren't getting enough art.

And to think she could have made it her entire life without experiencing the arts. Just like so many kids today.

Each day, more and more of the arts are being completely drained from our children's schools. Yet studies show parents believe dance and music and art and drama make their kids better students and better people. So what can you do to reverse this trend?

Speak up now. Demand your child's fair share of the arts. To find out how to help, or for more information about the benefits of arts education, please visit us at AmericansForTheArts.org. Otherwise, even a legacy as rich as Martha Graham's can crumble to nothing.

Let art borrow some brain. It'll return it in better condition.

ART. ASK FOR MORE.

Post plans patriotic party

MPs make parking, driving suggestions

Melissa House

The Directorate of Morale, Welfare and Recreation is finalizing preparations for this year's 4th of July celebration July 1.

York Field will open at 4 p.m. to an expected crowd of 10,000. Residents of the tricommunity are invited to attend.

Among the scheduled events are two demonstrations from post units.

The Ranger Training Brigade will demonstrate FRIES and SPIES, which stand for fast rope and special purpose insertion/extraction systems.

Rangers will fast rope onto York Field at 7 p.m.

They'll leave using the SPIES extraction technique, said RTB operations officer Maj. Michael McNally. The Rangers will clip their harnesses to ropes attached to the helicopter and be lifted off the field.

At 7:45 p.m., four members of the Silver Wings will conduct a free fall parachute demonstration. The four will jump from a UH-60 Blackhawk from 8,000 feet.

Staff Sgt. Timothy Santellanes, the team leader, said the Silver Wings will unveil their new 10-by-20 foot American flag, which will be attached to the top of Santellanes' parachute.

In order to handle the large numbers of cars, the military police have designated four main parking lots and have identified recommended routes for leaving the York Field area after the event.

Residents of Indianhead Terrace should use the main parking area west of Infantry Hall and should use Burr and Riordan Streets when leaving.

East Main Post residents are encouraged to park at the ranges adjacent to Dixie Road and exit

Iraqis ready for June transfer

Gerry Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

WASHINGTON – Iraqis will assume management of all national government ministries before the June 30 transfer of sovereignty, Dan Senor, the Coalition Provisional Authority's chief spokesman, said today.

"Nearly 60 percent of the Iraqi government is already transitioned to sovereignty," Senor told reporters at a Baghdad news conference. And, he said, Iraqi officials are slated to assume control of the remaining ministries by the end of the week.

With nine days remaining before the transfer of power, Iraqis now run 15 of the 26 national government ministries, Senor said.

Iraqi-managed ministries, he said, currently include: foreign affairs, health, education, public works and municipalities, oil, science and technology, agriculture, displacement and migration, culture, water resources, industry and minerals, planning and development, youth and sport, environment and transportation.

After June 30, Senor said, coalition consultants working with the ministries would

CG releases new firearms policy

Changes to help reduce infractions

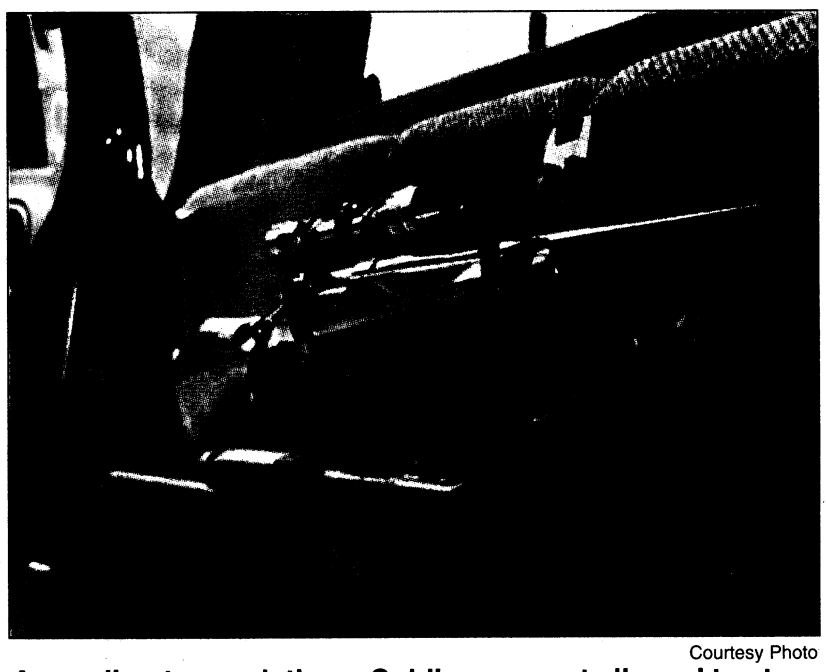
Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

"A good Soldier has nothing to hide and registers his firearm."

So said Brig. Gen Benjamin Freakley, Fort Benning's commanding general, about the recent rash of Soldiers being charged with firearms offenses.

The problem is, some Soldiers are not registering their firearms, and there have been a number of firearms violations on and off post dating back to last fall, said Maj. Josh Shuey, Office of the Staff Judge Advocate.

With the exception of a few incidents, Shuey said, Soldiers aren't using the firearms for any other criminal activity, but a Soldier is cited for some sort of firearms violation nearly every weekend.



Most of the violations are a result of Soldiers carrying unregistered firearms or storing loaded weapons under the seats in their cars, or a combination of violations, Shuey said.

Freakley noticed an increase in the number of incidents involving Soldiers and firearms on post and developed a new policy to help put a stop to the problem.

Freakley distributed a policy letter June 15 defining the appropriate action to be taken for firearms offenses.

According to the letter,

SINK OR SWIM

Don't risk close calls

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

It started out innocently enough. I was 3. A chubby toddler, stuffed into a bathing suit, romping around on the beach at my mom's company party.

So far that day, my sister and I had "fished" for toys — i.e. cast our lines over a big, painted background, on the other side of which grown-ups waited to slyly load up our lines with tub toys.

We had feasted on watermelon and barbecue and gathered a collection of broken sea shells that put the other children to shame.

Suddenly, a stroke of genius — there, right in front of us, was an enormous body of water for wading and splashing and playing with our new toy boats. And yet, up to this point, we had so foolishly confined ourselves to the relative safety of the beach.

As I mentioned before, it was a company party, so we figured there was plenty of adult supervision. No need to bother anyone by tugging at their sleeve and motioning to the water to let them know we were going in.

So, arm in arm, Jenn and I headed for the water. It was cold at first, as Washington beaches tend to be, but we let our legs adjust to the temperature and built up all our courage to go out a little, teensy bit farther, and then a little, teensy bit more and then just a little bit more.

Laughing, giggling, splashing, happy as can be.

And then it happened. My foot hit a sink hole. For those of you who aren't familiar with that word, a sink hole is a spot in the sand that has no support underneath. So when you step on it, it caves beneath your foot and you sink.

Now if you're an adult, a sink hole probably isn't that big of a deal. But to a 3-year-old, a sink hole is big trouble.

I went under the water, and for all the flailing and kicking and crying, I couldn't shake free of it.

My sister, bless her heart, was only interested in one thing — jumping into the oncoming waves. Far be it from her to pay attention to where her midget sidekick had disappeared to. And Mom, well, she thought we were with the other kids on the beach.

Meanwhile, in all my wee-one wisdom, my first instinct was to open my mouth and cry, at which point I swallowed a good bit of water and started to drown.

Obviously, this story ends happily for me — after all, I'm sitting her writing about it some 19 years later.

A passerby noticed a little hand thrashing around in the water, brought me to shore and pumped the water out of my lungs. My mother realized the little girl laid out, coughing up sea water was hers and vowed never to let me on the beach without a leash again.

And I have been forever traumatized and am, to this day, too scared to venture too far into the ocean — or into deep water at all.

All's well that ends well, right? Except that it could have ended differently. And for a lot of families, it has.

Water safety is no joke, folks. We hear it all the time — so often we've stopped listening.

Yeah, yeah, I know, you say — don't drink and boat, don't drink and swim, don't swim where there isn't a lifeguard, lifejackets when you're on a boat, we've heard it all before.

But it's important. What happened to me on that beach can happen to anyone anywhere.

Don't mix alcohol with any water activities.

Know your limits. I know I can't swim. So I don't bother getting myself into a rough spot paddling out too far or riding around in a boat without a life jacket. And I certainly wouldn't take my children anywhere a lifeguard wasn't around to help them should something go wrong.

And most importantly, watch your children. My mother is the overprotective mother to beat all, but she took her eyes off of us for one minute, and we were gone, off on our own adventure.

I would even go so far as to recommend that if you're going to be anywhere near the water, make your children wear some kind of Coast Guard-approved flotation device. It may seem like cruel torture to them, but it could save their lives.

Explosives make me warm and fuzzy

Spc. David Foley
Bayonet staff

As long as I can remember, I have always loved watching the fireworks on the Fourth of July. There is just something about the sights and sounds that command my attention.

I can only remember one year that I missed a fireworks display during an Independence Day celebration, but I have never been able to watch an official military display.

I usually load up the car and venture home for the four-day weekend and catch the show at the stadium in my hometown, or just watch my wife's crazy uncles fire off a bunch of over-the-counter explosives in their neighborhood. (Something that inspired the neighbors to try to outdo each other in a sort of suburban fireworks war.)

This year, I still plan to visit the crazy uncles on the Fourth, but what I'm really looking forward to is the celebration here on July 1.

By having the Fort Benning celebration on July 1, Soldiers like me will be able to see the festivities and still make it home for some quality time with the extended family. (Because we all know nothing brings a family together more than watching controlled explosives.)

For one thing, I can't wait to see the Follow Me Statue with its fresh coat of bronze, but I'm really in it for the big booms.

I've been told that more than $15,000 worth of professional-grade fireworks will be launched into the air above York Field.

The Silver Wings will jump in, and the Rangers will perform an aerial demonstration.

Not to mention a concert by the Infantry Center Band and state flag pageantry.

With all this entertainment, it looks like crazy Uncle Jimmy and the local stadium back home will just be a small reminder of what I saw at Fort Benning.

And as everyone who's been to one of Fort Benning's celebrations in the past is so eager to tell me, it is something you don't want to miss.

Well, I missed the celebration last year, and I'm not doing it again.

I'll be sitting on York Field beside my wife at 4 p.m. sharp with my head in the clouds, my eyes on the sky, listening to the sounds of a live band and enjoying the festivities.

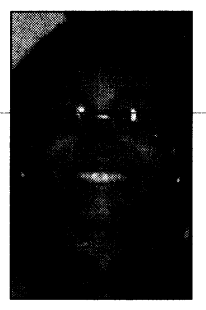
CORRECTION

Last week's edition of The Bayonet incorrectly reported that Sgt. 1st Class James Parker placed fourth in the 2000 Olympics. He placed fifth.

The phone number for the Columbus Catfish was also incorrect. The number is 571-8866.

The Bayonet apologizes for the errors and regrets any inconvenience.

Southerner misses home



Tonya Johnson
Army Research Lab PAO

Boy, time really does fly. It's been two and a half years since I left Fort Benning, my first stop after college. I served as a Department of the Army Public Affairs intern.

I moved seven hours away from my small hometown in North Carolina to Columbus, and it was an experience I'll never forget.

It was a humbling and rewarding experience to interact with Soldiers and see where they're trained at Airborne School, Ranger School, basic training and Officer Candidate School. Fort Benning is the training ground for thousands of Soldiers each year, and I applaud the dedicated civilians, officers and Soldiers who play valuable roles in making this happen.

Now I'm at the Army Research Laboratory in Adelphi, Md. The Washington, D.C., metro area is home to many military bases, but none can compare to Fort Benning.

I miss the South. I miss the friendly people, the laid back atmosphere, the cheaper cost of living.

I could go on and on.

I want to remind you not to take living in the South for granted.

Traffic is a mess in the D.C. area. Accidents are common here, and traffic sometimes moves an inch an hour. When traffic's not at a standstill, people drive crazy. Just try a daily commute on the Capitol Beltway for a week — no, make that a day.

Besides less traffic, I miss the laid-back atmosphere of the South. Here, the first question people ask is, "What kind of job do you do?" instead of "How do you do?"

Of course, they usually don't speak at all, which took some time to get used to. I'm used to smiling faces and strangers saying hello on the streets in the South.

Oh, and be thankful for the lower cost of living down there. I'm paying almost double the price for a one-bedroom apartment in Maryland than I did in Columbus. Never mind the cost of insurance, gas and groceries!

And about that Southern food — it's the best in my book. There's nothing like Southern cooking, especially barbecue.

By the way, I miss Four Winds Restaurant. I'd love to have a Ranger Burger right now.

Enjoy the South, and thanks Fort Benning, for the fond memories. Eat a Ranger Burger for me.

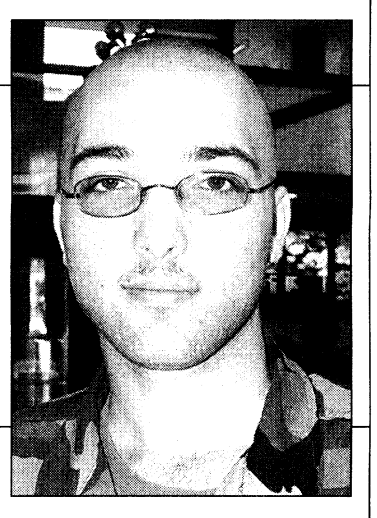
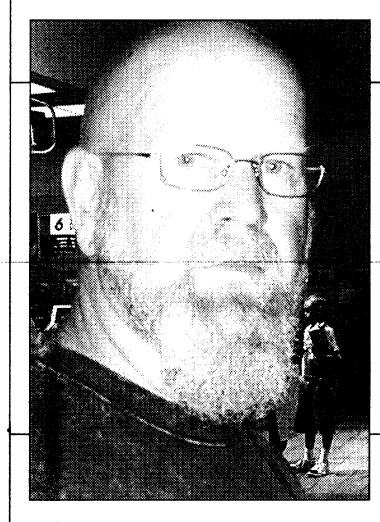
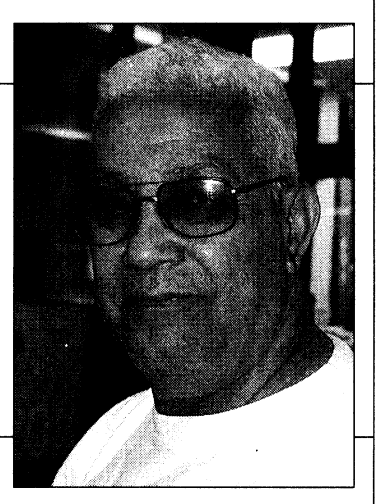
Does Independence Day mean more to you now that we're fighting the global war on terrorism?



Sgt. Casey Conner, 2nd Battalion, 69th Armor Regiment — "No, because it is still Independence Day, and it still means our forefathers died for our freedom."



Sgt. 1st Class Cynthia Hightower, 1207th U.S. Army Hospital — "Yes, because in the past we took our freedom for granted, but after 9-11 we know how vulnerable we are."



1st Lt. Sharon Kircher, 63rd Engineer Company — "No. My family and I have always celebrated it, and the meaning is still the same."

Pvt. Drew Larose, 36th Engineer Group — "Yes, because now we are realizing more of what happened back then. The fireworks aren't just a display anymore — they actually mean something."

Retired Navy Chief John Ross — "No. From my perspective, the flag hasn't changed. Nothing has changed."

Retired Sgt. 1st Class, Carlos Rivera, Columbus — "Yes, because we're in danger nowadays. There are a bunch of people trying to kill us."

FULL SPECTRUM WARRIOR

Video game copies infantry squad movements

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Fort Benning Soldiers and family members rallied at the Main Mall Post Exchange June 17 to try out a new squad-based, military-themed video game with online users in California.

The game, Full Spectrum Warrior, is a civilian spin-off of Army training software designed by California-based company Pandemic Studios and the University of Southern California's Institute for Creative Technologies.

"The game was pretty realistic," said Pvt. James Stevens, who graduated basic training with the 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment that morning. "The players move in two four-man firing teams — just like the MOUT training I received. All the tactics are the same."

"This would be great for training reinforcement," said Pvt. Tommy Ingram, 1st Bn., 30th Inf. Regt. "This game covers literally everything I have learned about soldiering so far."

THQ creative manager Greg Donovan said realism and accuracy were the most important goals in the development of the original training software, and THQ sacrificed none of that integrity in the production of the public version.

"The prime differences are the Army didn't care about any kind of an opening movie, cinematics, plot, heads-up displays and that kind of thing," Donovan said. "So we took liberties in that regard with the civilian game, but as far as the actual strategies used to get through the missions and take out opposing forces, the game is exactly the same."

The original Army game came in two versions, according to USC's ICT Web site — a Full Spectrum Command version geared at training light infantry commanders in urban environments, and Full Spectrum Warrior, which models the command and control of a light infantry squad.

> "The game was pretty realistic. The players move in two four-man firing teams — just like the MOUT training I received."
> Pvt. James Stevens
> 2nd Battalion, 47th Infantry Regiment

Donovan said the institute worked closely with the Army's Training and Doctrine Command and the Infantry School to accurately replicate infantry battle drills and small unit tactics.

"You have to make the right choices tactically and strategically to accomplish the mission," he said. "Who better to give guidance on infantry tactics than the Infantry School?"

Because of the advanced artificial intelligence used in the game, the complex commands used and the varying tactics, Donovan said each user has to complete a forced training mission he described as "robust in its thoroughness."

"It takes about an hour to an hour and a half to complete," he said. "I think it's enough to bring any user up to speed."

The tutorial brings users up to speed on controller functions and the fundamentals of squad movement, including tactical formations, like the wedge, moving to and from cover, issuing a point of fire, bounding maneuvers and flanking.

Photos by Spc. Nikki St. Amant

Pvt. Tommy Ingram, 1st Battalion, 30th Infantry Regiment, tries the Full Spectrum Warrior video game while using a headset to coordinate strategy with an online user in California June 17.

Donovan said he doesn't think the level of realism and the complexity of the game will be daunting to the average, non-infantryman gamer.

Sgt. 1st Class Dennis Gould, C Company, 203rd Forward Support Bn., said the game was almost too realistic in some aspects.

"The speed of the game was slow sometimes, like going around corners, for instance," he said. "But that is part of the realism. When a man goes down in the game, his battle buddy picks him up using a fireman carry and his movement is hindered by the extra weight."

Full Spectrum Warrior is available for XBox now and can be purchased at the PX. A personal computer version will be available in the fall.

A Soldier tries the video game's mandatory tutorial portion, which can take more than an hour to complete.

Program offers extra cash to cover costly college credits

MGIB can 'top up' Soldiers' tuition costs not paid with TA

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

If you ask Soldiers why they signed up for the Army, many will list college money, among other things, as one of their top motivators.

College tuition is pretty steep these days. According to the Smart Student Guide to Financial Aid, the average cost of tuition for one year in a public college or university in 2002 and 2003 was $12,841, $19,188 for out-of-state students.

Meanwhile, students shelled out an average $27,677 to attend private colleges and universities.

Active-duty Soldiers have the benefit of tuition assistance, which covers tuition up to $250 per semester credit hour or $166 per quarter credit hour, according to Military.com. They're authorized up to $4,500 per fiscal year.

But what happens when TA doesn't quite cover the cost of your academic goals? What do you do then?

One option, said Mike Hodge, acting education service officer for Fort Benning, is the Montgomery G.I. Bill.

The MGIB is an educational assistance program enacted by Congress to attract "high quality" men and women to the military, Hodge said.

It provides education and training opportunities to eligible people. To be eligible, you must have entered active duty for the first time after June 30, 1985 and not have declined the MGIB in writing.

The benefit can be used for a variety of training, Hodge said, including undergraduate or graduate degrees, a certificate or diploma from a business, technical or vocational school, correspondence courses, flight training — provided you have a private pilot certificate and meet the medical requirements for the desired certificate before beginning training — and testing for a license or certification.

The MGIB can be used alone or with TA, he said, through a program called Tuition Top-Up.

Say you're already taking a course that exceeds the $250 cap per semester hour you're authorized through TA. You can dip into your MGIB to cover the remaining cost.

"The program allows (Veterans Affairs) to pay Montgomery G.I. Bill participants' tuition and fees not covered by tuition assistance," according to Military.com.

"The amount of the benefit can be equal to the difference between the total cost of a college course and the amount of TA that is paid by the military for the course."

"You must have a continuous year on active duty before you are eligible to use your MGIB to supplement your TA," Hodge said.

Students can receive up to 36 months of Top-Up payments.

But is it a good idea to take advantage of MGIB while you're still in the Army?

It depends, Hodge said.

"Soldiers who plan to pursue full-time studies after separation may want to save the MGIB until then," he said. "Depending on the Soldier's educational goals, he or she may want to save the MGIB until after separation, especially since Soldiers are paid tuition and fees while on active duty."

There are pros and cons, according to Military.com.

Top-Up covers the remaining balance after TA, requires only a relatively simple process and pays the money directly to the school.

But it is charged against your 36 months of MGIB benefits, which may come back to haunt you down the road.

And with a little extra effort, students may be able to find the money to take care of expenses not covered by TA through Federal Student Aid, grants and other scholarships, the Web site said.

Either way, Hodge said, Soldiers are encouraged to speak with an education counselor before making a decision about using their MGIB benefits while on active duty.

Guest speaker lights fire in leadership

Retired general talks to troops

Melissa House
Bayonet staff

Marshall Auditorium was filled Tuesday afternoon with Soldiers waiting to hear retired Gen. Charles Krulak, the guest speaker for the Combat Leader Speaker Program.

Fort Benning Chief of Staff Col. Charles Cornwell introduced Krulak, the former 31st commandant of the Marine Corps, now the chief executive officer of MBMA Bank.

"He is much more than a recitation of his resume," Cornwell said. "He's the type of leader who made America great and the type we need more of."

Krulak's audience was students of the Infantry Basic and Career Captains' Courses and the Officer Candidate School. He greeted them, calling them the leaders, warriors and thinkers of the present and the future, and told them the nation appreciates them, even though few understand the great responsibility they have.

Krulak said his service itself did not make him a leader, but gave him a number of experiences and lessons about leadership he could relay to the students. He presented three vignettes to illustrate different aspects of leadership that he said would tie leadership in combat, during peacetime and in society.

In 1966, Krulak said, he was a young, "bullet-proof lieutenant, 6 feet 6, looking like Russell Crowe," who had been lucky enough to take command of a Marine rifle company.

He related the events leading up to the invasion of Vietnam by the 324B, a unit he called a "great war-fighting outfit." After the invasion, 11 battalions, including his, pushed north on a simple mission.

They landed in the middle of a dried-out rice paddy and started to move to the high ground to begin patrolling for enemy. They had only gone a few steps, he said, before a machine gun opened up on them.

"And I was only 5 feet 5, not like Russell Crowe, more like Yoda," Krulak said. "And I was scared."

During the intense fire, his radio operator grabbed his sleeve and had him look at an 18-year-old lance corporal who put his weapon on his hip, and ran straight toward the machine gun, firing as fast as he could.

He successfully diverted the enemy's attention away from his unit, letting them to take cover.

"But he didn't look back. He didn't know they were safe," Krulak said. "And he got hit."

The Marine got up again, shouldered his weapon and walked down the .50 cal gun's line of fire. After three minutes, Krulak got to the silenced gun, found nine enemy dead and his Marine lying on the gun.

Six months later, Krulak went to Washington, D.C., where that man's widow was awarded her husband's Distinguished Service Cross, holding a baby boy.

The irony, Krulak said, was the African-American Marine couldn't even buy a hamburger in his hometown.

"But he had something inside," he said. "When the chips were down, something inside of him made him get up, not once, but twice. He knew what his responsibility was and he did it. He had something very special. He was selfless."

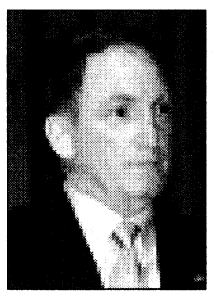
The lance corporal's actions made Krulak think of a Latin phrase on a building at the U.S. Naval Academy — "nolo civis sed patria," — not for self, for country. One thing important in combat, he said, is to be selfless.

Krulak's second vignette was from 1969. He was married, had one son and was, in his words, "pushing recruits in San Diego" when he received a letter with a set of orders to return to Vietnam a second time.

After his wife dropped him off at the hangar, Krulak said he struck up a conversation with a young Marine who lived only a few blocks from his house. Pfc. Cameron, he said, was an only child who had never been anywhere and was petrified.

"He said he was a radio operator," Krulak said, "and I told him not to worry. He'd be in the rear with the gear."

Krulak saw Cameron several times on the trip to Da Nang.



Krulak was met by his unit first sergeant, who introduced him to every Marine in the company. On day four, he said, the unit got the BNGs.

"They were the brand new guys," he said. "And there was Pfc. Cameron. If looks could kill! The only words out of his mouth were 'Sir, so this is in the rear with the gear?'"

Krulak decided that God had meant for the two men to have a relationship, so he made Cameron his RTO.

"This relationship was bonded by fire, bonded by stress for the next nine months," he said. "And at the end of those nine months, we were given a simple mission."

On that simple mission, a bullet whizzed by Krulak, he said, "and right into that precious kid."

Krulak

He dropped to his knees, applied a bandage to the huge wound and cradled Cameron in his arms until something hit him hard on the side of the head.

"The first sergeant had beaned me," he said, "and asked me what the hell I was doing."

The rifle company had continued to fight its way up the ridgeline and Krulak, the commander, was out of the fight.

The first sergeant took over with Cameron, and Krulak went up the hill. When they met again at the command post, the first sergeant apologized. With tears running down his cheeks, Krulak said the first sergeant told him that Cameron didn't make it.

The first sergeant, a huge man and a veteran of Korea, was only six months from retirement, Krulak said.

"He put it all on the line by assaulting and battering his company commander," Krulak said. "But he saw that his commander had lost it, and he had to get my attention. He had the moral courage to take action when he saw something was wrong."

Krulak told the students their commanders will be looking for leaders who are truthful. Although physical courage in combat is important, he said, commanders are looking for a different brand of courage — moral courage.

His third vignette centered on a friend, Capt. Tom Drowdy, who took a squad leader into a deadly village to find a missing Marine and incurred the wrath of his battalion commander.

> "Leaders are in the inspiration business. They inspire ordinary people to do extraordinary things. That's what your nation is asking you to do."
> Retired Gen. Charles Krulak
> Commandant of U.S. Marine Corps

The commander went "ballistic," Krulak said, and told Drowdy he would be relieved if he did something like that again. Drowdy promised he would not, then turned to walk away.

"He took a few steps, then turned," Krulak said, "and said he would do it again if he had to. The battalion commander relieved him."

Drowdy started to walk to his executive officer to turn over the company when the assistant division commander arrived by helicopter. He had listened to the fight on the radio and told Drowdy he was proud of him and his Marines.

"And he told the colonel that with commanders like Drowdy, he probably had the best battalion in the division," Krulak said.

Drowdy kept his job and went on to become the assistant division commander of the 1st Marine Division in Operation Desert Storm.

"What you need to know," Krulak said, "is the Marine Corps was his life. He did three tours in Vietnam, two Silver Stars and four Purple Hearts. He bled scarlet and gold, but he was willing to give it all up in three steps."

Krulak said Drowdy got back the only thing he owned in those three steps — his integrity.

"Integrity. Only you can give it away," he said. "No one can wrestle it away from you."

Krulak said he's often asked what the most important leadership trait is and told the audience to be men and women of character to be successful.

"You're the best the Army has to offer," he said. "You're smart, talented, but it's nothing more than a gift. Character is a choice, and that's a big difference. You choose and build it by making hard decisions."

Krulak told them if they make enough of the tough decisions that made their palms clammy and their stomachs churn, they'll be able to find the inner strength to be successful and victorious when the time comes. And those the audience had seen who were victorious, but not men of character, Krulak said were not true leaders.

"Their victories are never sweet and will never stand the test of time," Krulak said, "and will never serve to inspire anybody.

Leaders are in the inspiration business. They inspire ordinary people to do extraordinary things. That's what your nation is asking you to do."

German Liaison NCO goes out with bang

Makes D-Day jump before heading to Texas

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

The 60th anniversary of the D-Day jump into Normandy was a great day for many veterans and paratroopers. It was a day of remembering the past and for some it was a once in a life time opportunity to be part of history.

For Sgt. Maj. Manfred Jerabek, German Liaison NCO, it was the single best experience in his 25 years in the military.

"I was the first German paratrooper to ever participate in a D-Day commemoration jump," Jerabek said with pride. "It was the best time I've had in my entire military career."

Although many young men are drafted into the German army, Jerabek volunteered at the age of 18 to serve his country as a German paratrooper.

Jerabek still remembers his father's pride and his mother's sadness when he left for the Army.

"I'm the youngest of four. When the youngest leaves, it's a tragedy for the mother," Jerabek said. "But I went home to see her on weekends."

He's proud to say he's a paratrooper and will correct anyone who asks why he wanted to be an infantry soldier.

"I'm not infantry; I'm airborne," Jerabek said matter-of-factly.

"In my army, all the airborne battalions do special (missions), because they are specially trained. They have special equipment, and they have a special feeling of honor and loyalty. That's exactly what I was looking for and I found it.

Jerabek

"I've been in airborne battalions my entire 25 years, and at Fort Benning for the past four years," Jerabek said. "It's all about the airborne experiences.

"(The Normandy jump) was the highlight of my military career, the highlight of my time at Fort Benning and the last jump of my airborne career," he said.

Jerabek will leave Fort Benning next week for a non-jump status assignment at the Sergeants Major Academy in Fort Bliss, Texas. After he completes his assignment at Bliss, Jerabek will return to Germany and a new assignment.

He will not be assigned to an airborne unit because of his age.

"After 47, German paratroopers are no longer assigned to airborne battalions," Jerabek said.

The thought of not jumping again does not upset Jerabek. He said everything is done at a certain age and he isn't that young anymore. Jerabek turned 43 Wednesday and he says it's important to begin thinking about his long-term health and his family.

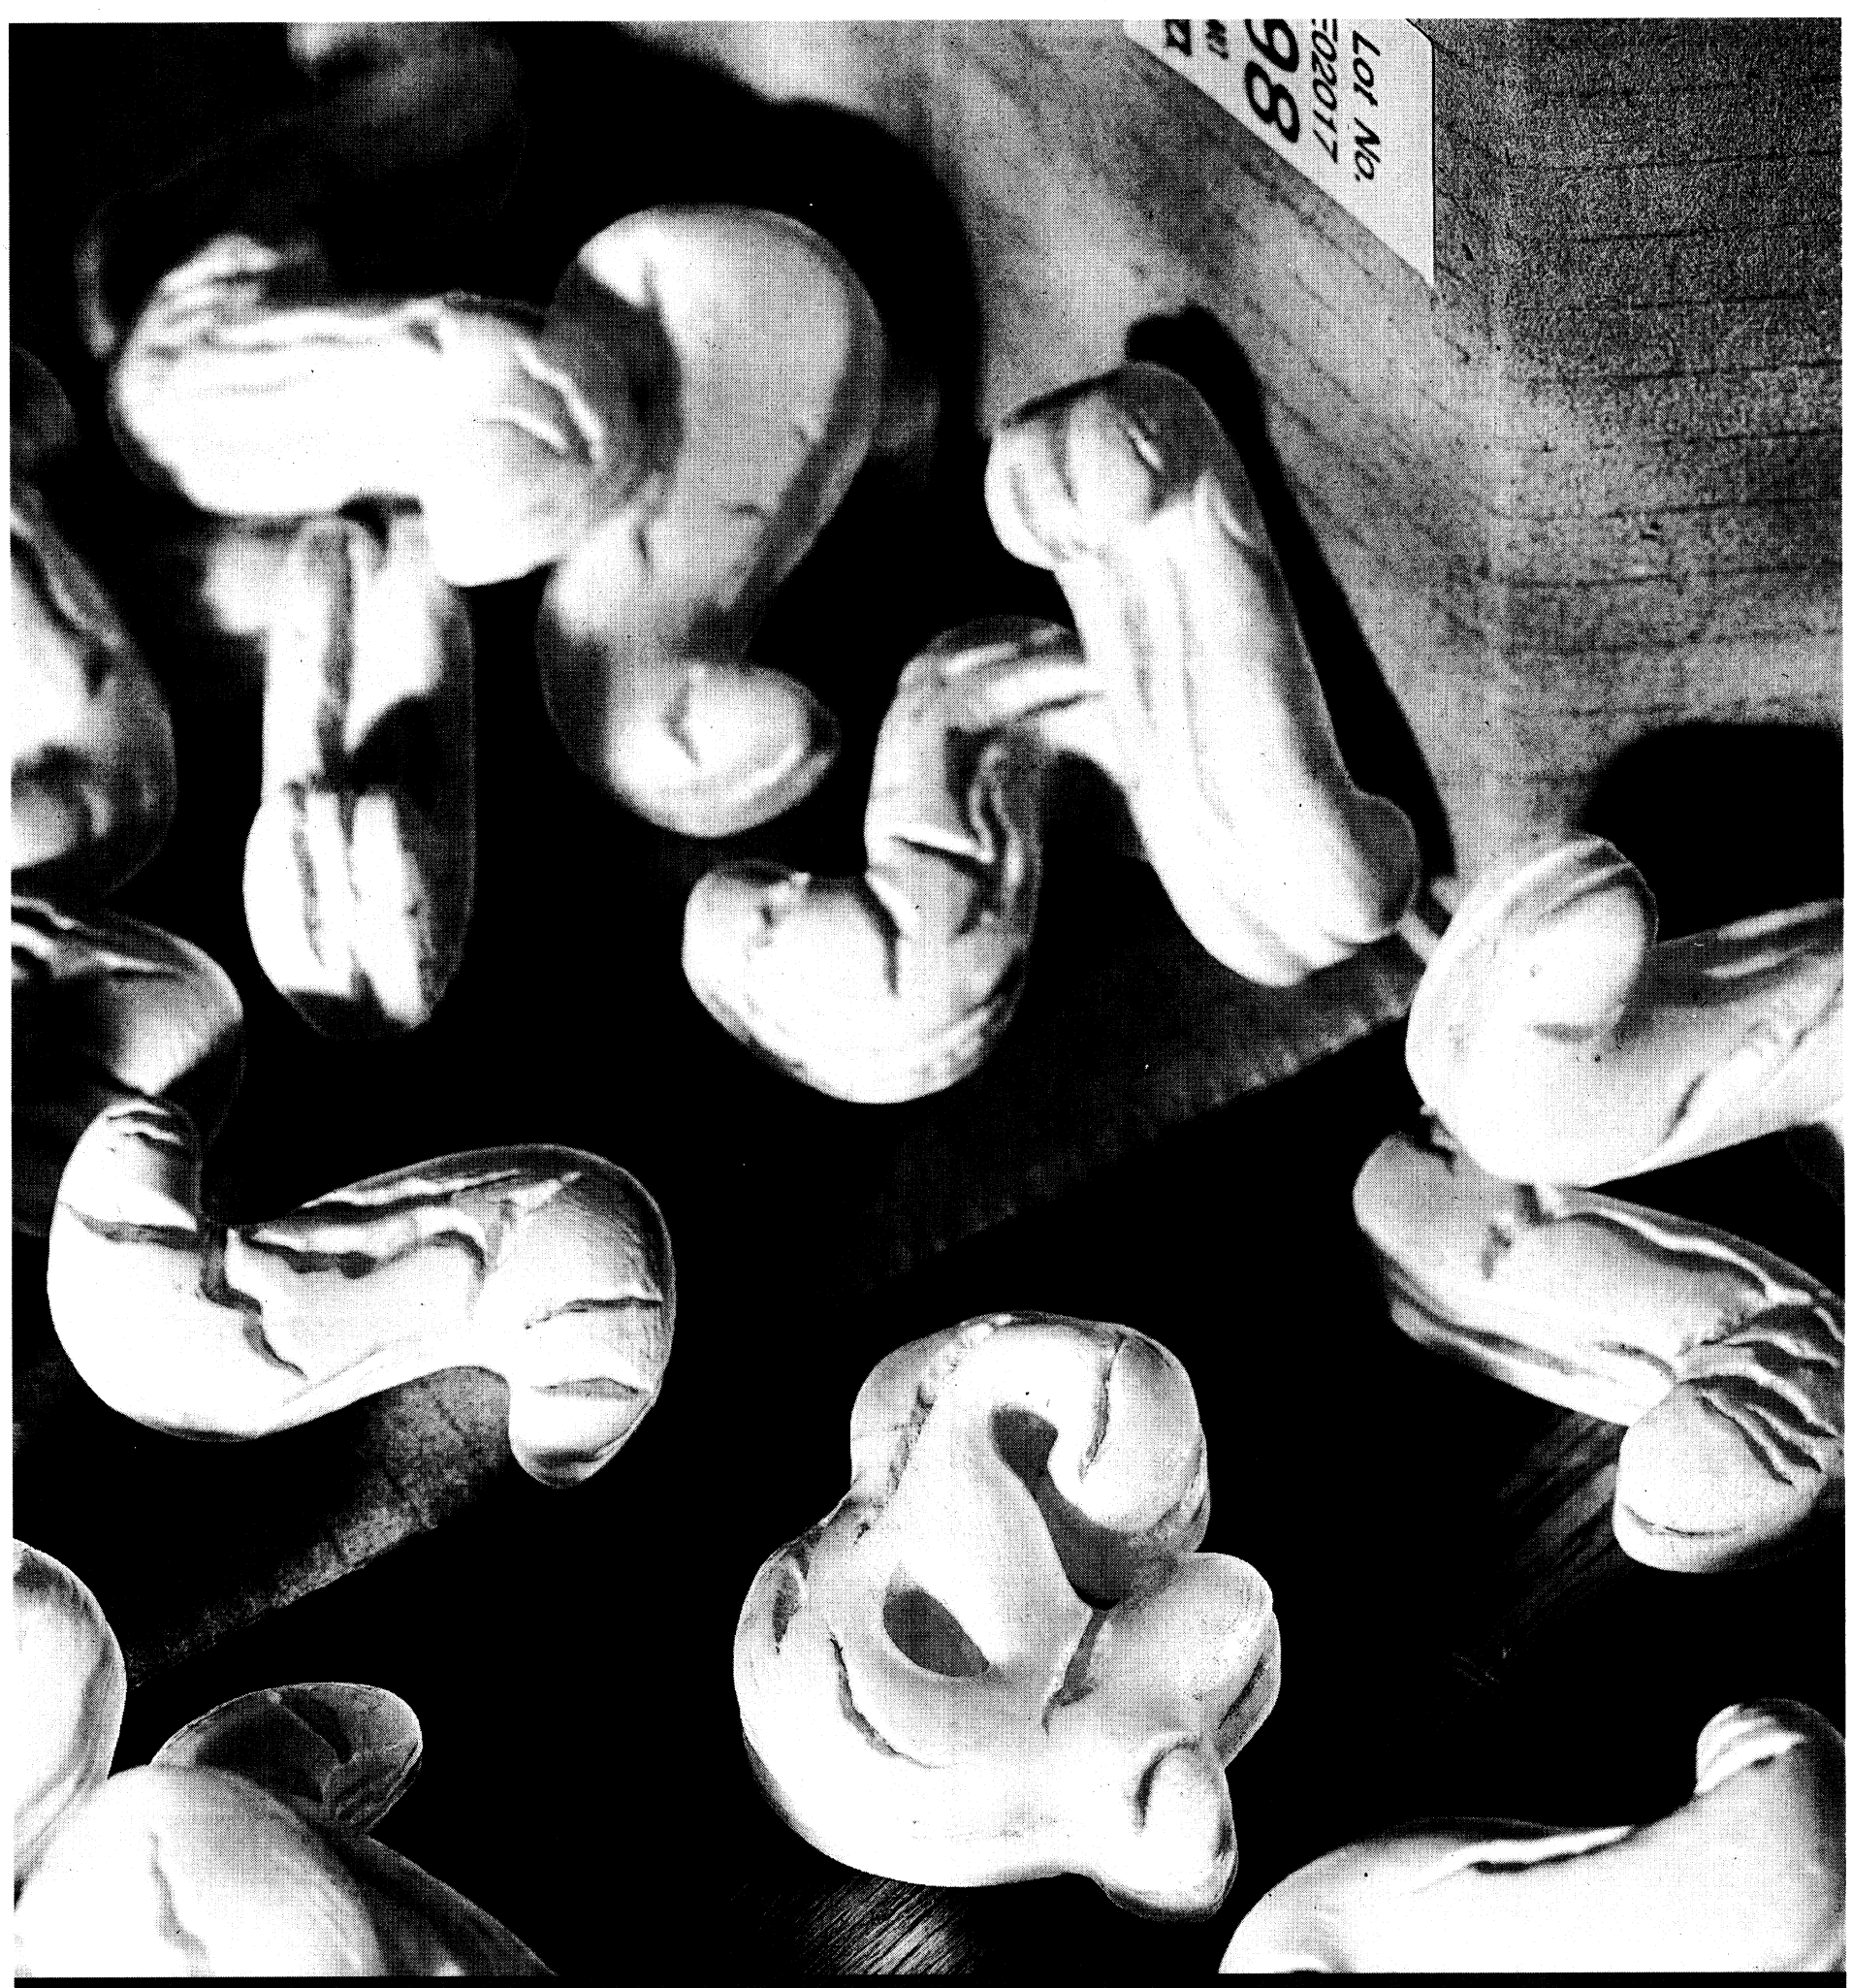
Jerabek and his wife, Krimhilde, have been married for 10 years.

"We met dancing on the Fourth of July," Jerabek said with a smile. "She's my best comrade, friend, advisor, counselor and my best critic," he said.

Jerabek's current assignment is the first assignment he's been able to spend time with Krimhilde.

"In Germany, I could only go home on the weekends. Here, I spend every day with her. Now we're going to Fort Bliss for another four years.

"That's eight years with my wife — what a great gift," he said.



Jerabek will be replaced by Sgt. Maj. Peter O'Grady, with whom he served about 10 years ago.

O'Grady was only a sergeant then and Jerabek was a platoon leader.

"He was an idol to me. He was more than a platoon leader; he was a teacher, a mentor," O'Grady said. "He's the reason I wanted to come to Fort Benning. I knew he'd give me the best handover anyone could give.

"There are two types of leaders in our army — the modern thinkers and the modern thinkers with traditional values," O'Grady said. "He's one of the second. That's what makes him so respected."

Reunions offer veterans valuable therapy

Bridgett Siter
Bayonet staff

Veterans reunite almost weekly here during the summer months. They come by the dozens or the hundreds to hug old friends and heal the hurts they tried to bury 30 years ago, some longer.

Veterans' reunions, especially Vietnam veterans, are among the most costly (we're not talking money here) and valuable events to take place on post, but by definition, they're exclusive to a degree. Family and friends and the occasional reporter are welcome to attend, and they're welcome to share in the laughs, help themselves to a plate of barbecue and maybe ask a question or two. But there are some places you just can't go, unless you were there.

Take for instance, the reunion last weekend at Uchee Creek. Fifty-some Vietnam veterans were there. Some wore hats with the yellow shield of the 1st Cavalry Division. Some had "C Co. 1-5" on their shirts, others had "Charlie Co., 1st Cav." When asked to clarify, there was a moment of speculation, a few snickers, and then, from the back of the room, "Ask Dan over there. I bet he can tell you."

Turns out, he could. According to retired Maj. Dan Terry, the Columbus resident responsible for this year's event, the reunion was the fourth annual meeting of the veterans who served between 1965 and 1970 in C Company, 1st Battalion, 5th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Cavalry Division — quite a mouthful, even by military standards. But the veterans don't seem overly concerned with the correct unit identification. It matters little what you call them (they've been called worse), as long as you don't call them heroes. They're really uncomfortable with that.

There were lots of heroes, but they're "sitting over there," they say as they point across the room. Then they tell their stories about the men who saved their lives. They're one-sided stories, because the heroes never own up to them.

Steve Branham was a favorite among his buddies. They called him "Sherman," like the tank, back in 1970, and it's easy to see why. Now 55, Branham is a barrel of a man who "tells it like he sees it." The problem is, he sees things differently than his friends.

They say, "He was the best warrior I ever knew."

He says, "We just did what we had to do to survive."

They say, "He was like Audie Murphy."

He says, "B--- s---."

Kirk Randleman recalled the bloody battle that earned Branham the Distinguished Service Cross but cost him his assistant machine gunner. Though reluctant to share the details, Randleman credited Branham with single-handedly saving the platoon.

"He was calm under pressure and he knew what he was doing. He was a born leader," Randleman said. "We trusted him. He had as much to do with running the company as anyone else."

That's not the way Branham remembers it.

> "I come here to get answers. I wanted to know if I'd been a good NCO over there. I know I tried my damnedest, but I needed to know how they felt."
> Les Tarkington
> Vietnam veteran

"We got into a real bad situation. It's not like we had a choice. We had to keep our heads on straight if we wanted to keep them on at all," he said.

The qualities that made Branham successful in the jungle didn't set well with society, Randleman said. Such was the case for many vets.

"He was a natural leader over there and it made him a hero to us, but back here it was a problem," he said, noting that C Co. had contact with the enemy 270 days in one year's time and lost at least two Soldiers per week for a four-month period. "And then it was over. You were in combat one day, home the next. There was no time to decompress. You were supposed to move on. Some of us couldn't do it. Some of us did it for a while."

Unlike today, when Soldiers are sent overseas in units, C Co. was populated with a constant trickle of replacements, Randleman explained. Soldiers arrived in ones and twos and left by themselves, some never knowing if their buddies made it back alive.

Many, if this group is any indication, turned to alcohol and drugs. A staggering number married, then divorced. They quit hunting and got rid of their guns. Some questioned God, others gave their lives to him.

"You know, I get veterans asking me all the time why they made it back when their buddies didn't," said Tim Workman, who led the group in prayer before dinner. "Think about it, man, if that wasn't hell over there, I don't want to see the real thing. God spared us for a reason. He's got a purpose for us."

As these veterans near retirement age, many are searching for that purpose.

Ed Cobbler figures he chose a career in law because all he ever wanted to do was join the Army. Vietnam "poisoned" him, he said, but law enforcement gave him another chance to serve. Now he speaks to veterans groups about his experience and the need to heal.

Randleman plays bluegrass music and uses his talent as a forum for talk. A veterans' advocate who once contemplated suicide, he now promotes his brand of healing.

"It's going to come out one way or the other," the Hickory, N.C., resident said. "You need to talk about it."

Fernando Escalante, "Fred" to his friends, is leery about retirement. He's finally dealing with the memories of Vietnam he tried to erase. The reunions have given some measure of closure, he said, but it "comes in stages," and with retirement approaching fast, Escalante is apprehensive about having too much time on his hands.

"Maybe I'll visit these guys," he said, gesturing around the room. "We lost 13 guys from my high school. I think maybe I should find a way to honor them, like at our reunion. I just feel like I should do something."

For many of the veterans, healing comes in fits and spurts. At 35, Staff Sgt. Les Tarkington was a seasoned vet when he joined C Co. in Vietnam. He served two tours and retired from the Army in 1974. Then, he said, he buried himself in the bottle for 10 years. It cost him his first marriage and nearly destroyed his second. Now he attends therapy for PTSD twice a week, takes medication to calm his rage, and stays in touch with his old buddies. And he attends reunions, like last weekend's three-day affair.

"Every time I come, I learn something new, something about myself," Tarkington said. "I come here to get answers. I wanted to know if I'd been a good NCO over there. I know I tried my damnedest, but I needed to know how they felt."

The reunions cannot assuage the guilt Tarkington feels for making it out alive, but they make it a little easier to deal with. And like so many said, they help "fill in the holes."

Monday evening, as the men from Tarkington's platoon sat talking, someone mentioned "anniversary anxiety," and several men nodded.

"November 21, 1966," Dave Combs said.

That was the date C Co.'s 3rd Platoon was ambushed on its march out of Cambodia. Twenty-six died. One survived, severely wounded.

Tarkington was on R&R in Hawaii when the ambush took place. Had he been there, he believes, things would've turned out differently. As an experienced NCO, he would've "handled the situation differently." Tarkington cried as he recounted the event.

Cobbler sighed deeply and said: "I was in the hospital with malaria. I was supposed to be on a plane back to my company. Something happened, and the plane was delayed an hour. One hour."

The irony of their survival and the guilt they've shared unknowingly for nearly 40 years was apparently therapeutic. Tarkington dried his tears.

"See what I mean? That's another hole filled," Combs said. "The hardest thing I ever did in my life was come to one of these, but it was the best thing, too. Different personalities deal with it differently, but I think talking about it helps everybody. Not that it's easy, but it gets easier."

That's the "value" of reunions, Escalante said.

"We want closure, and this is the only way to get it. We chip away at the anxiety until we get to a place where we can laugh again," he said. "There was a time I never thought I'd get to this point. I can see we've changed, but we're all OK. You can't put a price on that."

Activities at the annual JROTC summer leadership camp included rappelling at the 4th Ranger Training Battalion's tower. The camp ended with a picnic at Flat Rock Park in Columbus.

Story and photos by Bridgett Siter

No loafers allowed: Atlanta's inner city cadets accept camp challenge

A cadet participates in the water confidence course during the first day of camp for the Atlanta-area schools' JROTC.

At 5 feet, 2 inches and 105 pounds, with laughing brown eyes and an engaging grin, 16-year-old Norris Williamson does not strike an imposing figure. But he's a giant among his peers, more than 400 students in the junior class at Benjamin Mays High School in Atlanta.

Lt. Col. Grandvial Quick singled Williamson out last week during the annual JROTC summer leadership camp for Atlanta's inner city schools. Quick, the protocol officer for the camp, said the third-year cadet is a fine example of what the corps can do for teenagers.

"He's a leader," said Quick, as Williamson volunteered for a second go at the Ranger rappel tower. "These kids come here and do things they never thought they could do, and they leave wanting to do it again. It gives them confidence, and it takes confidence to be a good leader."

JROTC has long been recognized in Muscogee County and the surrounding areas as a worthy program, given the proximity to Fort Benning and strong local ties to the military. But inner city kids like Williamson and his classmates stand to gain a lot more from the corps, said Lt. Col. Nicholas Burke, a senior JROTC instructor.

They might not be able to articulate — or even recognize — the need for structure and discipline in their lives, Burke said, but JROTC "fills that void."

"Most of them come from a different environment than you see around here, and (JROTC) gives them a place to fit in," he said. "No one's wearing $300 loafers in JROTC. It's an even playing field. Anybody who wants to succeed can succeed. Every kid can't be a football player, but every kid can be in JROTC."

Lt. Col. Tom Torbert, the deputy director of Army instruction for Atlanta Schools, said the cadets typically experience "a degree of culture shock" when they enter the program — "We don't put up with nonsense." And though the corps models West Point's policy of student leadership, the cadets ultimately look to the cadre for guidance.

"If they're doing PT, we're doing PT. They're watching us," Torbert said. "They want someone who's really going to walk the walk."

The results speak for themselves, Burke said.

"The difference between these cadets and other students? They're focused," he said. "They graduate."

As for the weeklong camp, which emphasizes leadership and teamwork, Burke said nothing the corps does during the school year can compare to the week at Fort Benning.

"You've gotta realize, most of these cadets have no ties to the military whatsoever. This is their first time on a military installation and their first time doing a lot of these events," he said. "Fort Benning is the neatest place in the world. You can't get this kind of training anywhere else."

Williamson agreed. He came away from the experience believing "I can do great things."

"The obstacle courses totally blew me out," he said. "I was hyped. It's like, wow, I completed this basic training course many grown men can't complete. It was exhilarating. It motivates you to want to do more."

Williamson ranks in the top 10 percent of his class academically. He's the vice president of his church youth group and second in command on the school's drill team. He owes much of his success to JROTC, he said.

"It changed me from this shy kid who didn't say much to this whole different person," he said.

"Now I'm boisterous. My favorite thing to do is call cadence. People say, 'Boy, you've got a big mouth to be so small.'"

"Most of them come from a different environment than you see around here, and (JROTC) gives them a place to fit in. No one's wearing $300 loafers in JROTC. It's an even playing field. Anybody who wants to succeed can succeed. Every kid can't be a football player, but every kid can be in JROTC."

Firearms: Policy offenses subject to post-level review

subordinate commanders are no longer able to initially dispose of incidents involving firearms, which means company or battalion commanders will not be able to decide the punishment a Soldier receives when charged with a firearms violation, unless Freakley permits them to.

In cases involving firearms, commanders will forward the preliminary inquiry or report of investigation, statements and any other relevant information through the chain of command and the Criminal Law Division, OSJA, to Freakley.

Each packet will contain chain of command recommendations as to appropriate disposition, and Freakley will review the recommendations and offenses to determine the best course of action.

"By bringing the authority to my level, we can look at each case based upon the merits of the issue and consider each Soldier and each case independently," Freakley said.

"However, we can act upon the case with many options from verbal reprimand and counseling to a court-martial," he added.

According to the policy, violations include, but are not limited to, possession of an unregistered firearm, unlawful possession or transportation of a firearm on Fort Benning, carrying a concealed firearm, and any other UCMJ offenses involving a firearm.

"We are taking these steps to enforce our regulations and to impress upon Soldiers the serious repercussions from failing to follow the regulation," Freakley said.

Shuey said the new policy doesn't provide OSJA more power to prosecute offenders, but by having each case reviewed at post level, there may be an increase in visibility that will help convince Soldiers to do the right thing.

For more information on Soldiers' responsibilities involving firearms, see Garrison Regulation 210-5 Chapter 9.

Questions about the policy should be directed to unit trial counsels in the OSJA.

Iraqis: Sovereignty on way provide only technical assistance as determined and requested by the Iraqi government.

About 1.3 million Iraqis currently work for the national government, Senor said.

"By the end of this week, all of them will be reporting to Iraqi supervisors and Iraqi ministers," he said, "several days before the June 30 handover."

All of Iraq's governments, at the provincial level, are up and running now, Senor said.

About 90 percent of Iraq's municipality-level governments have operating, functional councils capable of carrying out business.

"And so, the gradual sovereignty process that we've pursued is not just limited exclusively to the national government," Senor said.

"It is also thriving at the provincial and municipal levels."

The Power Wrap - Body Wrap

Following the long awaited launch of the Anti-Aging Wrap, just months ago Victoria surprised us again with another breakthrough formulation of The Body Wrap.

Further investigative work at Suddenly Slender's Research Group has yielded a new formula that not only rejuvenates the body in the same fashion as the Anti-Aging Wrap, it also obtains better inch-loss through the torso, smoothes the skin in a silky satin finish, AND leaves behind a dynamic reservoir of ENERGY!

In fact, this powerful energy is so noticeable that our test subjects practically named the nine solution for us...they call it The Power Wrap!

Here's what a couple of them had to say:

"Wonderful! I felt full of PEP the entire day!"
- Sue B.

"I felt the energy surge, but my SKIN'S the best part, it's velvety!"

Pentagon fields 100K Army Campaign Plan CDs

Provides transformation information

Joe Burlas
Army News Service

WASHINGTON — Army senior leaders have the same concerns of Soldiers about multiple and long unit deployments, but they're letting Soldiers know that changes to lessen those concerns are on the way.

The Army sent out 100,000 compact disks with multimedia briefings known as the Army Campaign Plan to inform active-duty, Reserve and National Guard Soldiers, and their families, that the Army is significantly changing while it is at war.

"We are an Army at war, supporting a nation at war — this is not business as usual," said Sgt. Maj. of the Army Kenneth Preston. "If you look at it in the long-term, that isn't going to change. The good news is that we're going to grow our deployable combat forces by 30 percent."

But that growth of modularizing the Army — going from 33 combat brigade teams to 48 brigade-sized units of action — is going to take some time, said Army Chief of Staff Gen. Peter Schoomaker in one of the three video presentations on the Army Campaign CD.

The three videos target separate audiences — Schoomaker addresses the active Army; Lt. Gen. James Helmly, chief of the Army Reserve, talks to Reserve troops; and Lt. Gen. H. Steven Blum, chief of the National Guard, and Maj. Gen. Schultz, director of the Army National Guard, address Guard Soldiers.

In addition to the videos, the campaign includes slide presentations for each of the audiences and an additional brief for family members. Preston said that a single briefing wouldn't work as the active force, Army Reserve and Army National Guard all had separate issues that impact them.

The briefings are for officer and enlisted leaders down to company-level so that they can chain teach.

"There is big interest out there about what does transformation mean," Preston said. "I tell Soldiers that is about predictability and stability for you and your family."

In addition to modularity, the active Army video and briefing discuss force stabilization. The initiative is about Soldiers being based at one installation for most of their careers, rather than moving from fort to fort every two to three years. It also includes assigning Soldiers as a unit at the same time for a three-year period.

There are several advantages to force stabilization, Preston said: Unit readiness is increased as Soldiers have the stability of working with the same team members and same leaders, rather than constantly losing people due to a Cold War era individual replacement system; though Soldiers will likely deploy several times in a career, spouses know the community and can keep on working in a career instead of having to starting all over again in a new job with the constant moves the older system required.

"There are some concerns about getting stagnant or not getting the right positions needed for promotion by staying at the same installation," Preston said.

"We recognize those concerns and are working to ensure that those concerns do not turn into issues."

Preston said he had spent seven years in one unit at one point during his 29-year career with no ill effects. He said that he has many friends who have spent their entire career with the 18TH Airborne Corps and advanced through the ranks at the same rates with their contemporaries who constantly moved from installation to installation every two to three years.

The biggest issue for the Army National Guard is modularizing into mirror combat formations with the active force while continuing to fulfill each unit's state militia mission, according to the Army Campaign Plan briefing.

For the Army Reserve, the issue is becoming more expeditionary while reducing the number of units in order to man the remainder at 100 percent with Soldiers fully qualified to deploy.

"As the Army grows, we can make some other changes to do something about deployments — maybe cut them to nine months or maybe back to six," Preston said.

The briefings and video presentations can be viewed online at www.army.mil/thewayahead/acp.html.

Change of command heralds name, mission change

Col. Jeffrey Haun accepts the guidon from Brig. Gen. George Weightman, 44th Medical Command commander, during the 14th Field Hospital change of command Monday. Lt. Col. Glenn Iacovetta was the outgoing commander. The 14th Field Hospital was redesignated as a combat support hospital and will gain approximately 150 Soldiers.

Lt. Col. Glenn Iacovetta, commander of 14th Field Hospital, bid farewell to his Soldiers during a ceremony on York Field Monday as he handed the reins to Col. Jeffrey Haun.

Brig. Gen. George Weightman, 44th Medical Command commander, spoke to the Soldiers of the 14th Field Hospital as they farewelled Iacovetta and welcomed their new commander and a new unit name.

From here on, the 14th Field Hospital will be the 14th Combat Support Hospital. In the past year, the 14th Field Hospital has changed from a custodial unit to a full-on combat support hospital, with an increase in personnel and a repackaging of equipment.

The transition of the unit also changes the commander's rank from a lieutenant colonel to a colonel, signifying the increase in missions and responsibility for readiness the unit now has, Weightman said.

"(Haun) will lead where (Iacovetta) has left off in determining what's the right list of equipment and what support it now needs," Weightman said. "It's a very dynamic organization, and we're very blessed to have Fort Benning here giving them the support that they need.

"Under the command of Iacovetta, the unit has performed magnificently in every task you've attempted," he said. "You've managed to get through these tremendous challenges and changes without missing a beat. (Iacovetta) has provided the leadership so that you can serve Fort Benning well, as he worked with both the Engineer Group and Martin Army Community Hospital.

"My hat's off to you for the leadership you've shown this organization," Weightman said.

"(Haun) brings with him a wealth of experience and is combat-tested. I'm confident he will take the 14th CSH to the next level as he shoulders his new responsibilities and missions," he said.

"Today marks another step toward the full transition to the combat support hospital," Iacovetta said.

"I'm proud to say I have served with these Soldiers. They have done so much during the past two years to improve the readiness of the hospital, from individual and collective training to ensuring the equipment transition was completed to standard, all the while making sure the hospital (was) ready for deployment at any time," he said.

Iacovetta assured Haun that the Soldiers of the 14th CSH stand ready to meet any challenges he may have and that he has the best of the best.

Iacovetta will be assigned to the Chief Medical Evacuation Proponency Branch in Fort Rucker, Ala.

Haun pointed out to the guests that the 14th CSH has come a long way, increasing its staff to 138 Soldiers, which is two times what it had six months ago.

"In six months, there will be another 120 to 150 Soldiers as a part of this organization as we continue to transition to the CSH and prepare to execute our mission in returning Soldiers to their families or back to the battlefield," Haun said.

"We will continue to be a great partner to this great installation. Soldiers, we have a job ahead of us, we have a great team to kick this thing off and get these Soldiers moving to the next level, and I appreciate that opportunity," he said.

Haun's last assignment was the commander of the 61st Area Support Medical Battalion, which served in both Fort Hood, Texas, and Iraq. He and his wife, Mary Ann, have three children.

> "(Haun) brings with him a wealth of experience and is combat-tested. I'm confident he will take the 14th CSH to the next level as he shoulders his new responsibilities and missions."

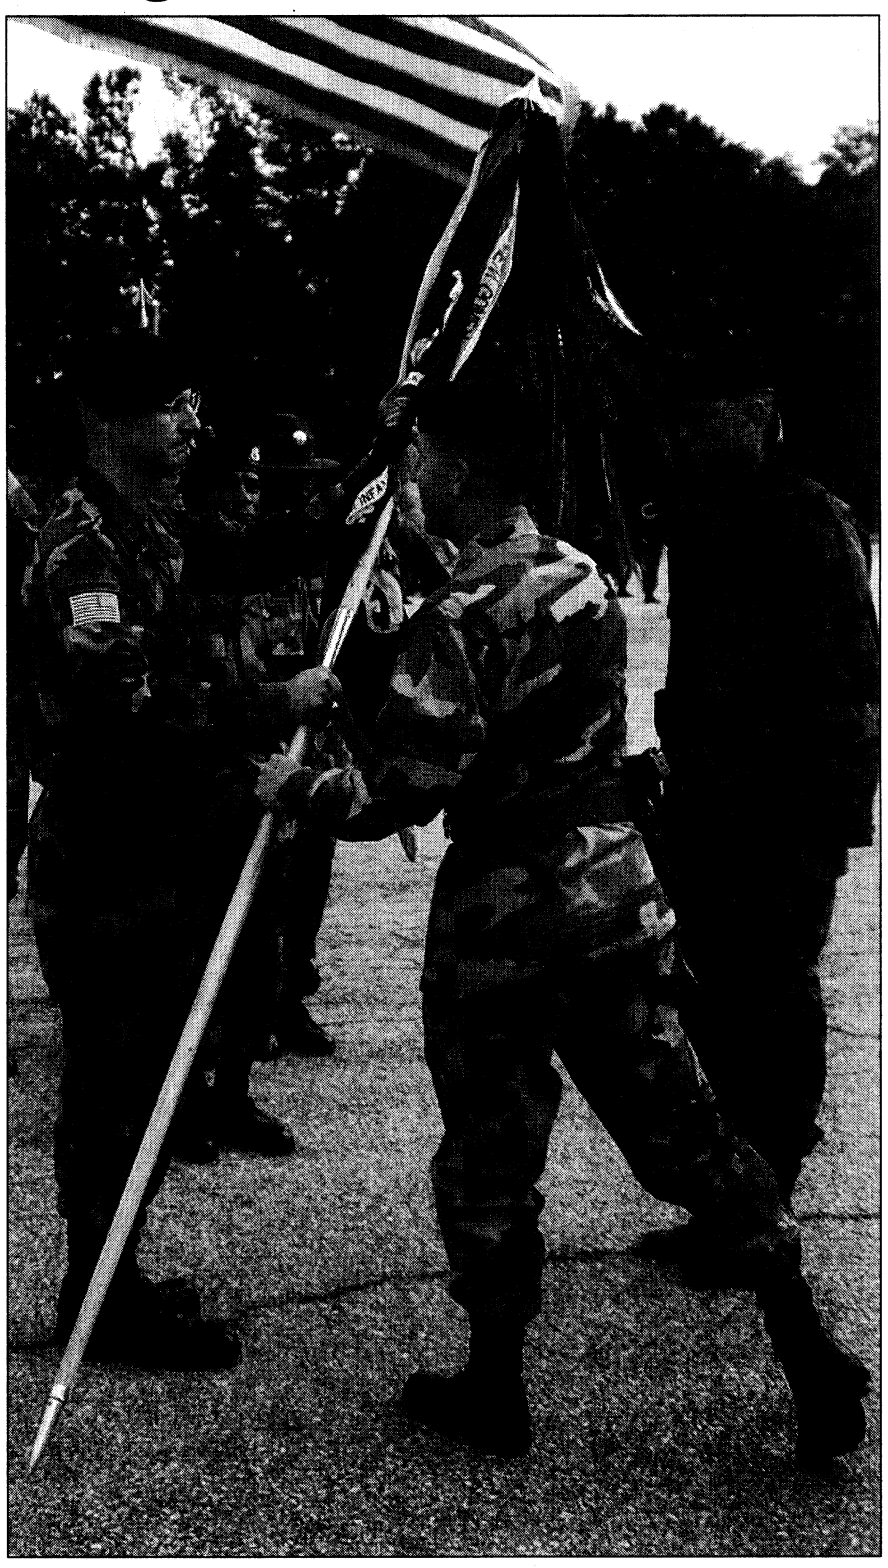
Mission 'rock steady' as unit changes command



Nelson hands reins to Brittain

The Infantry Center Band passes in review at the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment change of command.

Following a time-honored Army tradition, Lt. Col. Bradley Nelson handed the colors of the 1st Battalion, 19th Infantry Regiment, to Lt. Col. Thomas Brittain in a ceremony Tuesday at Sand Hill's Kanell Field.

"Today, we will start a new chapter in the battalion's history," said Infantry Training Brigade commander Col. Brian Baldy, "and pay tribute to the two commanders."

Baldy began his remarks by thanking Nelson's wife, Andrea, for all the work she had done for the battalion and the ITB.

"Your commitment, hard work and loyalty to this organization are appreciated, and you will be missed," he said.

Baldy welcomed Brittain's children, Jessica, Lauren and Thomas Jr., telling them they should be very proud of their father. He recognized the newest of the Army's infantrymen on the field, from those in their fourth week of training to those graduating today, who were participating in their first change of command.

Baldy asked the audience to observe a moment of silence in memory of Pvt. Van Ryan Marcum, a C Company Soldier who was electrocuted during a freak accident on Monday.

"He was in pursuit of a personal dream of becoming a Ranger, and we pray for him and his family," Baldy said.

Baldy said the change of command represented an opportunity to gather publicly to honor the outgoing commander and recognize his efforts in making his unit and the Army better.

The mission of the 1st Bn., 19th Inf. Regt., is to "graduate well-disciplined, physically fit, mentally tough, technically and tactically proficient infantrymen who are instilled with a willing desire to defend our great nation against all enemies, foreign or domestic."

The unit, established in 1861, draws its motto, shield and crest from the steadfastness shown in defending the left flank of the Union Army at the Battle of Chickamauga in 1863.

"Lieutenant Colonel Nelson has sent thousands of skilled and confident Soldiers into the Army," Baldy said. "He has impacted everything — training readiness, discipline, maintenance and quality of life. His vision, perseverance and hard work ensured this outcome."

Baldy said Brittain, who served as the brigade's deputy commander, was no stranger to the unit, having been "in the thick of every fight and project conceivable" and will excel in command.

An emotional Nelson said the past two years had been tremendous for his family.

"I am filled with pride and thankful for the privilege of serving with the 'Rock Steady' team," Nelson said.

He thanked the senior leadership at Fort Benning for setting the tone of professionalism on post, and his command sergeant major, John Mosby.

"We've shared many great days," Nelson said, "and I'm proud of him and thankful to have him as a personal friend."

Nelson thanked his junior officers for showing the "right concern for Soldiers," and first sergeants for setting the tone in their units.

He told the audience the Army is in great shape because of his leaders, especially the "phenomenal drill sergeants who do some incredible things with the youth of America."

Nelson's next assignment is with the U.S. Forces in Alaska.

Brittain promised the formation and the audience he would not let the Soldiers or cadre down.

"The best job in the Army is to train Soldiers to answer the nation's call," he said.

1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry Absolute Airborne outfielder Rene Martinez takes a monstrous swing at the ball during post intramural softball action Tuesday night. This swing landed Martinez a double and set him up for a successful steal at third base. That steal left Martinez with an injured ankle and a hospital trip. Martinez's two hits and three RBIs helped Absolute Airborne beat the 36th Engineer Group Seahorses 16-4, raising Airborne's record to 3-1.

It was smooth sailing for the 1st Battalion (Airborne), 507th Infantry's Absolute Airborne team as they overwhelmed the 36th Engineer Group Seahorses in a 16-4 win in post intramural softball action Tuesday night.

Strong bats led the way for Absolute Airborne in the top of the first inning. With one runner on-base, Absolute Airborne infielder Raphael Cast nailed an in-the-park homerun, snagging an RBI and taking the score to 2-0.

With the score 3-0, the Seahorses took the field in the bottom of the inning and failed to score with three quick outs broken up by a double.

In the top of the second, Absolute Airborne racked up three doubles, including one by Cast, which earned him two more RBIs. Absolute Airborne used a combination of aggressive hitting and effective base stealing to advance runners, which brought the score to 10-0 by the time the Seahorses shut the high-flying paratroopers down.

The Seahorses countered the Airborne onslaught with two runs in the bottom of the second, putting them on the board and eight runs down.

In the top of the third, it looked like the Seahorses were on a comeback. The struggling engineers, with their backs to the wall, held the opposing Absolute Airborne at a standstill, allowing no runs and only one hit.

But, alas, it was the last stand of the foundering Seahorses, who failed to counterattack in the bottom of the inning. After nailing a triple and a double, the team failed to capitalize and bring the runners home, closing out the inning with an easy pop-up third out.

Absolute Airborne regrouped and continued the airborne assault on the Seahorse defense in the top of the fourth, racking up three more runs off of great hitting, but lost outfielder Rene Martinez after he injured his right ankle in a sliding steal at third base.

With the score 13-2, another near rebound by the Seahorses in the bottom of the fourth netted the Seahorses two runs to take the score to 13-4.

But the short-lived streak stopped there with a controversial call by the umpires on the third out — a close tag at first.

Going into the top of the fifth, Absolute Airborne was absolutely confident in its nine-run lead, but added insult to injury by knocking another three batters around the corners to take the score to 16-4.

The Seahorses succumbed in the bottom of the inning, scoring no runs.

The Seahorses have a 1-2 season with this loss to Absolute Airborne.

"The season was going all right until today," Seahorses coach Paul Shire said.

"A lot of these guys just got back from deployment — this is the first time five of them have even played with us. They're good players; we just just have to pull together as a team. We'll be OK.

"For us, the game just couldn't have gone any better," Absolute Airborne coach Joe Trull said. "The other team played great; we just had excellent hitting."

Cruisers finish 2-2 in Columbus rugby tournament

Local ruggers host sevens tourney

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

They may not have walked away with first place, but Columbus' and Fort Benning's only rugby team, the Cruise-a-Matics, came off the pitch with some lessons learned and some star performances Saturday afternoon.

The team, which hosted its annual sevens tournament at the Cruiser Dome this weekend, placed third, losing out to teams from Atlanta and Mobile, Ala.

The Cruisers headed out to a great start during their first game, dominating the field for much of the game and beating Macon's team, 19 to 7.

Despite being pumped up from its first win, the team wasn't able to pull it off against Atlanta's Old White. They lost the game by "a lot to a little," scoring only once against the opposing team's five or six tries, said Roy MacDonald, president of the Columbus/Fort Benning Rugby Football Club.

The team fared much better in its third match — a close call at 24 to 19 — but still couldn't quite close on the win.

By the fourth game, the Cruisers were ready to reclaim the field, beating out Montgomery's team with a hard-earned 20 to 0.

All in all, the tournament was a success, MacDonald said.

"They played well," he said. "And our younger guys gained experience, which will only help us in future tournaments."

One of the problems the team faced Saturday, he said, was the players were "still playing fifteens, committing too many players to tackles and failing to spread the field."

With eight fewer players in sevens, each rugger's position on the field is key to preventing the opposition from breaking through to score. During some plays, as many as three Cruise-a-Matics players were "getting sucked in" to tackle just one player from the opposing team, leaving two men unguarded and creating large gaps in the Cruisers' defense.

This mistake cost the Cruisers several tries during their game against Old White, and in future

Competitors from the Russ Pool fishing rodeo met for a rematch Saturday at Sand Hill's children's fishing pond for its second annual fishing derby.

More than 60 children signed up for the event, sponsored by the Infantry Training Brigade, and caught a total of 293 catfish.

Some of the winners from the Russ Pool fishing rodeo two weeks ago were at the children's pond — and if they didn't hold on to their titles, they at least placed in their age categories for the number of fish they caught.

Tyler Welty won first place for the 11- to 15-year-old category at Russ Pool and at the children's pond.

"This makes you the best fisher in your age category," Tyler's father told him as they walked away from the pond.

Tyler's sister, Sarah, won the second-place award for the 11- to 15-year-olds at Sand Hill and at Russ Pool.

The Truelove family walked away smiling after their 2-year-old daughter, Izzy, won first place for the 1- to 3-year-olds. Izzy caught a catfish three-fourths her size with a Tigger fishing pole.

"I just caught a snapping turtle," said Shailee Barnes, who was fishing with her dad, Sgt. 1st Class Jeff Barnes, and her sister, Mackenzee.

Mackenzee used chicken livers to win second place in the 4- to 6-year-old category.

"I don't really like to eat fish, but I like to fish for my dad and my sister," Mackenzee said.

Sage Miska, 8, was using wiggle worms as bait and her dad's fishing pole to fish. She went home with 10 fish as opposed to the one fish she caught at the Russ Pool fishing rodeo.

"Last time, she was so excited to catch one she just wanted to go home and show her mom," said Sgt. 1st Class Gene Miska, Sage's dad.

But this time, Sage stuck around and was excited to say she was taking all her fish home.

"We're going to go home and eat them," she said.

The Sand Hill children's pond is now open for children up to 15 to fish for free with parental supervision.

It will close in November to stock with more fish for next year's fishing season, said Capt. Carl Hyde, event coordinator.

Hyde makes sure the fish are fed three times a week and that the pond is stocked twice a year. The catfish were donated by the Dawson Hatcheries. Michael Fuller, a fish and wildlife technician with the Directorate of Public Works, built a feeder ring and monitors the fish.

"Events like these provide Soldiers and government civilians with an opportunity to enjoy free family recreation. It's a day of nothing but win-win situations," Fuller said.

The winners of the fishing derby were:

1- to 3-year-olds — Izzy Truelove, 12; Elizabeth Pitz, 8; William Lind, 7.

4- to 6-year-olds — Tavious Hill, 9; Mackenzee Barnes, 3; Addison Nash, 3 and Hunter Straton, 3.

7- to 10-year-olds — Christina Aponte, 20; Katie Hader 11 Taylor Pitz, 11.

11- to 15-year-olds — Tyler Welty, 20; Sarah Welty, 18; Tevin Hill, 17.

Juliana Angel shows off her catch of the day — a huge catfish.

Golf tournament — The community is invited to participate in the Kenneth Walker Memorial Golf Tournament, a regional event intended to promote unity and raise scholarship funds for children whose mothers or fathers have passed away.

The tournament will be held Sept. 2 at the Bull Creek Golf Course, 7333 Lynch Road in Midland, Ga., just off Highway 80 (the North Bypass).

For more information or to become part of the Fort Benning Powerlifting Team, contact Broadwater at 544-2660.

Cruisers: Hold their own in tourney tournaments, "more experienced teams will definitely take advantage of that," MacDonald said.

But the mistakes will only serve to strengthen the team, he said, showing the team what it needs to work on before upcoming tournaments in Birmingham, Ala., Panama City, Fla., and Chattanooga, Tenn.

Despite a few blunders here and there, the Cruisers were bolstered by an experienced back row, MacDonald said. Veteran ruggers Sean Schaeffer, Josh Guell, Brian Carr and Joe Sandoval carried the team through several tough moments, and Schaeffer and Guell scored the majority of the team's tries throughout the tournament.

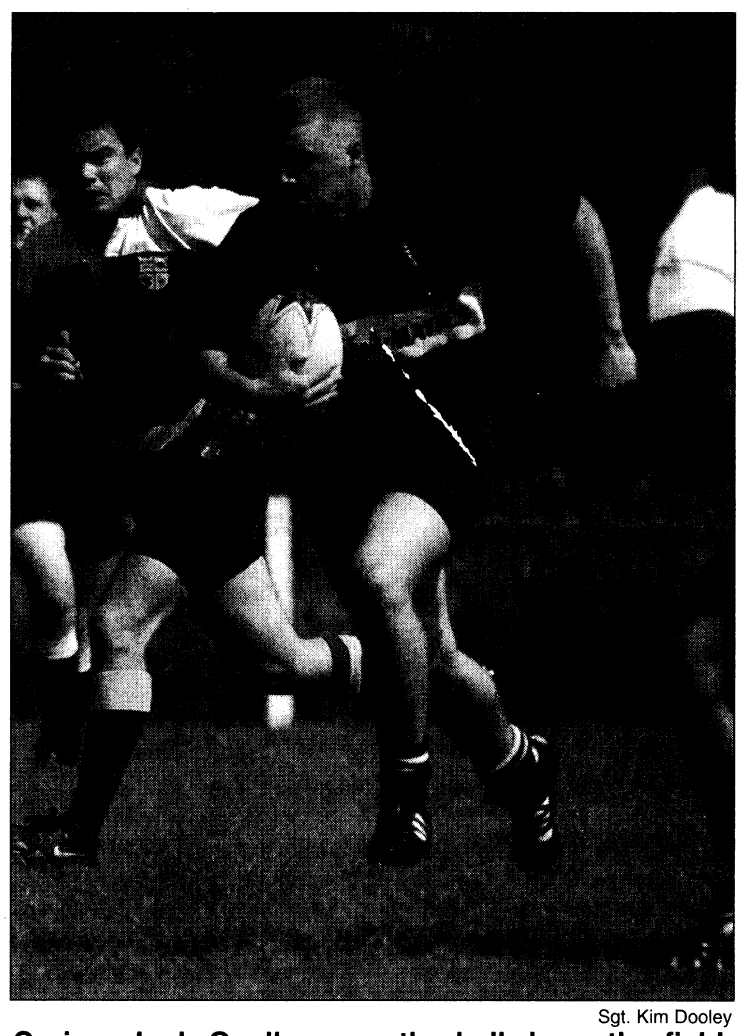
Overall, the team performed well, MacDonald said.

Something Cruiser Joe Kolojay echoed whole-heartedly.

"We may not have won, but we played well together and learned a lot," said Kolojay.

For Kolojay, Saturday's tournament was somewhat bittersweet. It was his last with the Cruise-a-Matics. He headed home to Illinois Tuesday.

"It was an awesome way to go out," he said. "I had a lot of fun with these guys."

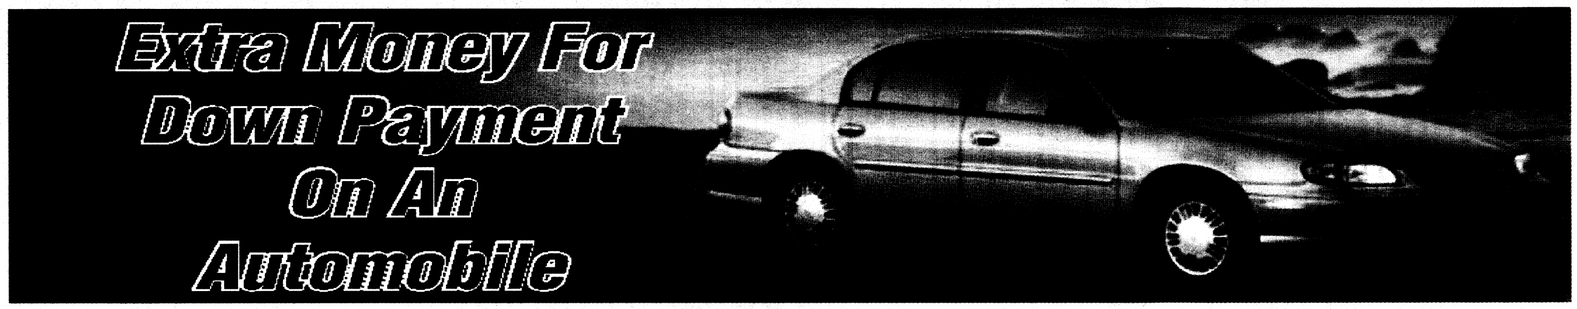


And that's what it's all about, MacDonald said.

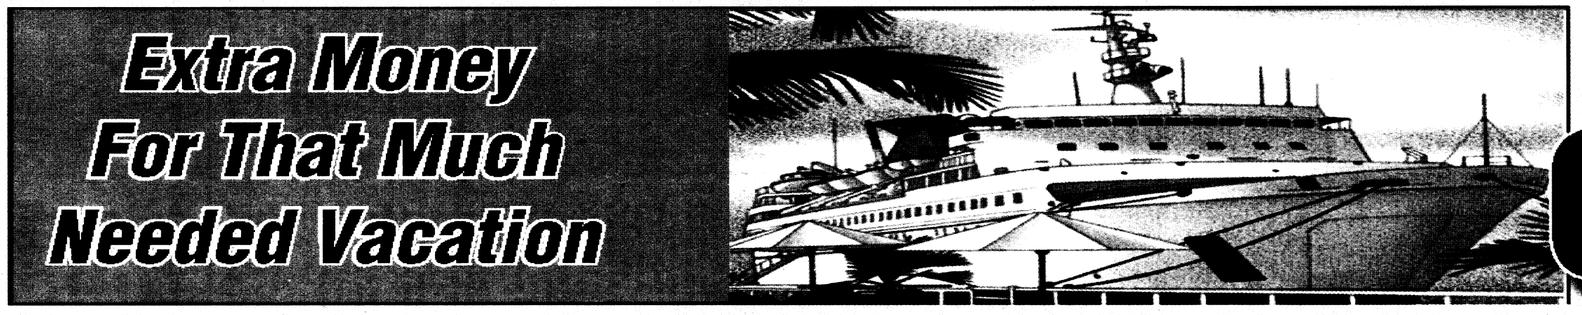
With Kolojay and several other players lost, there's always room on the pitch for more ruggers, MacDonald said.

This is actually the idea to come out and get acquainted with some of the basics, he said, explaining that fifteens season will kick of in August.

The team practices from 7 to 9 p.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays at the "Cruiser Dome," behind Dolly Madison Bakery on Victory Drive.



To get to the pitch from Interstate 185, take Exit 1-A onto Victory Drive. Drive until you come to 22nd Avenue and take a right (you should be at a stoplight and see Dolly Madison Bakery on your right side). Follow this road across the dirt road and straight through the gate.



Sgt. Kim Dooley

Cruiser Josh Guell moves the ball down the field. Guell was one of the team's top scorers Saturday.

Have your older U.S. Savings Bonds stopped earning interest?

Many Savings Bonds issued prior to 1970 have reached final maturity and are no longer earning interest. By visiting www.savingsbonds.gov, you can check out the Savings Bond Calculator—a FREE program that tells you the current value of your bonds, when they increase in value, and when they stop earning interest.

So check it out, and put your money back to work.

I found buried treasure in my attic.

More than 40 years ago, Grandma gave you some Series E Savings Bonds. So you put them in a safe place and forgot about them—until now. You were looking for old records when you found an unexpected treasure... those old Series E Savings Bonds. And even though your old bonds are no longer earning interest, they could still be worth more than 5 times their face value. So why not redeem those old bonds at your local financial institution? To find out more, call 1-800-4US BOND, or write to Savings Bonds, Parkersburg, WV 26106-1328. Old Savings Bonds. They're a treasure worth digging for.

How "WE HAVE NOTHING TO EAT"

became "DAD, CAN I BORROW THE CONVERTIBLE?"

Millions of Americans can trace their roots back to an ancestor who came to the new world with a hunger. Metaphorically speaking, it was a desire for freedom. But more often than not, this noble goal was directly tied to a powerful physical need for a good, hot meal.

They came from countries around the globe, yet their stories were remarkably similar. They had left behind hard times, oppression and just about everyone they knew and loved to seek out a better life in the land of opportunity. And while it wasn't necessarily easy, they found that with a little hard work, perseverance and good old-fashioned gumption, they could achieve a quality of life far beyond what they had known before. They were free to live their own lives and prosper by their own hands. In fact, perhaps the greatest testament to the power of freedom is that, simply by working hard and educating their children, the world's tired, poor and hungry have become the nation with the highest standard of living on earth. To learn more, visit remberfreedom.org.

FREEDOM. APPRECIATE IT. CHERISH IT. PROTECT IT.

Independence Day fun.

How NOT to blow yourself up, get arrested, crack your skull open, put an eye out or set your dog on fire

Spc. Nikki St. Amant
Bayonet staff

Yep. It's that time of year again. Old Glory marks 228 years of independence July 4 and most of Fort Benning will have a nice, long four-day weekend to celebrate.

The landscape of any celebration can be spotted with dangers like exploding grills, driving fatigue, alcohol-induced stupors, fireworks mishaps and a wide range of other accidents.

One way to avoid having this year's Independence Day festivities take an ugly turn is to always put safety first.

It may seem ridiculous to conduct a risk assessment on your precious time off, but it doesn't take much, just a little common sense and some practical planning to avoid trouble, said post command sergeant major Command Sergeant Major Mike Kelso.

If you are of legal drinking age and plan to indulge yourself this Fourth of July weekend, keep in mind the rules of engagement for alcohol use and plan ahead.

The Army has a zero-tolerance policy for drinking and driving that could cost you your career — if you are lucky enough to live.

On top of prosecution under the Uniform Code of Military Justice and letter of reprimand from the commanding general, you could face up to an $800 fine, according to the recorder's court.

Capt. Kevin Pelley, the military police operations officer in charge, said drinking and driving is a serious offense and isn't taken lightly.

"Our mission is safety, not to ruin Soldiers' fun..." he said. "Have a plan before you even start drinking. Give your keys up before the alcohol sets in, get a dependable designated driver, have phone numbers for your chain of command and staff duty and check with your unit and find out if they have a fund for paying for cab rides if you find you shouldn't be driving."

Alcohol-related accidents accounted for 17,448 deaths in 2001, according to the National Highway and Traffic Safety Administration.

Don't let yourself, your passengers or the innocent family you plow into become statistics. Call a cab, call your unit or just sit tight and sober up.

"Sitting in your car while intoxicated, with or without the keys in the ignition, still constitutes a DUI," Pelley said.

Mixing fatigue and driving can be just as dangerous as drinking and driving, said Regis Beighley, the post safety manager.

"Even if you are using stimulants containing caffeine and you are sleep-deprived, you are still likely to have 'micro-sleeps,'" he said. "These are brief naps lasting only four or five seconds. At 55 m.p.h., you travel more than 100 yards — that's plenty of time to kill you."

He said no matter how well you think you can drive without enough sleep, the dangers are real.

"A drowsy driver doesn't process information as fast or as accurately as an alert driver and is unable to react quickly enough to avoid most collisions," Beighley said. "Drowsiness also narrows a driver's field of vision, so that objects or people at the side of the road cannot be seen until it is too late."

If you do decide to brave the holiday traffic and are in the car, buckle up. Seatbelt use increases the chance of survival in an accident by 50 percent, according to the NHTSA, and it saves you the trouble of getting a $15 ticket.

Roadway accidents aren't the only way to cut your holiday weekend short.

Grill accidents account for more than 60 deaths and hundreds of injuries each year, according to the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission. Almost all those accidents are attributed to user error.

Gas grill accidents can be avoided by following simple rules like properly maintaining gas grill hoses and tanks, protecting tubing from grease drippings, storing tanks in an upright, cool location and following manufacturer's instructions for use, according to the USCPS's Web site. Take 15 minutes and do a quick check of your gear to ensure that when you hit that ignition button you aren't lighting up everything within a 20-foot radius.

Charcoal grills are generally safer than gas versions, but can be just as deadly if used improperly, the site explains.

Burning charcoal emits carbon monoxide, a colorless, odorless gas responsible for more than 20 grilling deaths a year. To avoid carbon monoxide poisoning, never use any grill inside a building, tent, vehicle or other structure where air circulation is compromised.

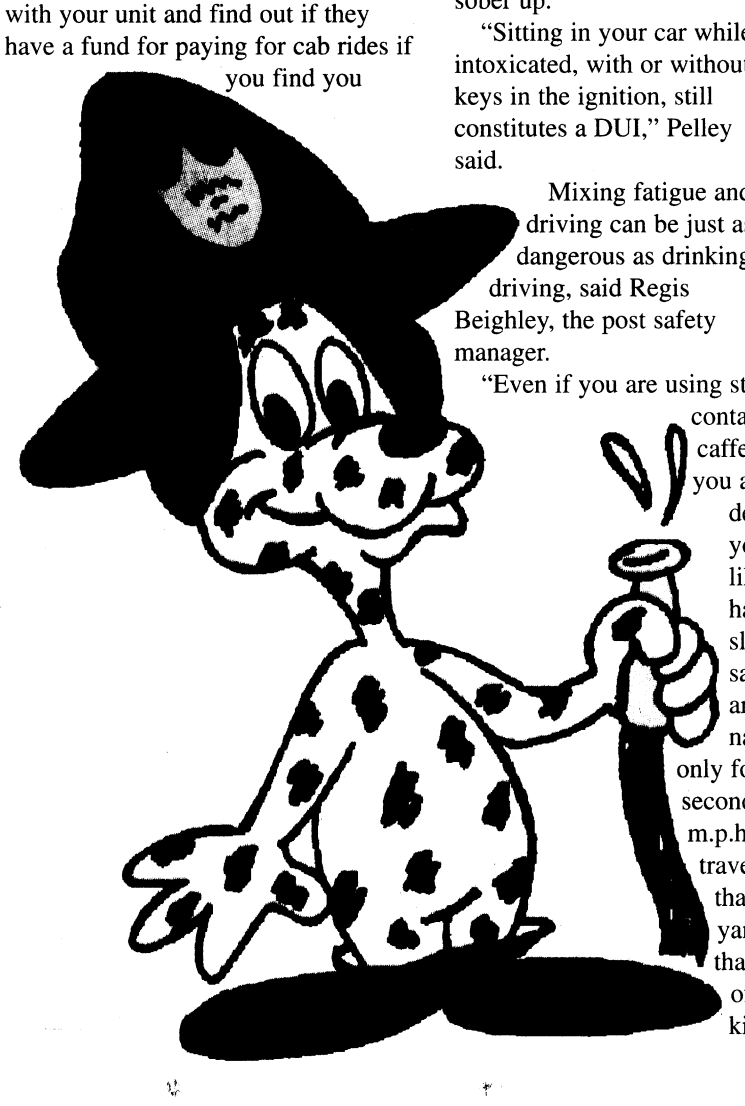
Using flammable liquids to accelerate the lighting of stubborn charcoal is another sure way to cause a flare-up and raise the risk of an emergency room visit for second- and third-degree burns

Never use gasoline, acetone or any other highly flammable substance, other than lighter fluid, which is specifically marketed for that use.

Fireworks are yet another way to take a few layers of skin off, lose a finger or put an eye out, so if you live in Alabama or are traveling to a state where fireworks are permitted, follow common sense rules for use.

The National Council on Fireworks Safety says fireworks should never be lit while being held and should never be used to destroy bottles, cans or any other possible shrapnel-producing container.

A container of water or a hose should always be readily available to put out contact fires caused by fireworks, the council says.



Roman candles and similar types of fireworks should never be fired at people, animals, cars, homes, brush or anything that can be damaged by contact with a 700-degree projectile.

A reminder: fireworks are not, under any circumstances, authorized for personal use in Georgia. Fireworks for personal use on Fort Benning are prohibited by U.S. Army Infantry Center Policy 210-5, Chapter 3-14.

Use of fireworks in these areas constitutes a crime, and you can be ticketed and fined more than $75, according to a Columbus Recorder's Court official.

The kids will probably be out, scampering around in full force for the holiday, too, so remember to make sure the little ones are supervised outside, in the pool and at large gatherings.

This Independence Day weekend can be a great time to reconnect with family and friends in the spirit of freedom and patriotism, but use your head, make sure that you put safety first and avoid a holiday disaster that could leave you blind, dead, an amputee or unemployed.

Sgt. Kim Dooley
Bayonet assistant editor

As a transplanted Yankee, just about the only thing I knew about the South when I came to Fort Benning was that legend of "Southern hospitality." So imagine my surprise when, as part of initial counseling, my NCOIC cautioned me (with a straight face), "Oh, and make sure you get your shots updated before you go to Alabama."

But in true, liberal Northerner fashion, I shook off the warning and proceeded to Seale, Ala., for the Possum Trot Auction.

Convinced by my conniving coworkers (who, by the way, drag every Soldier new to the office to this office, kicking and screaming or not), I tagged along to this truly unique auction in a tiny little place just off Highway 431.

It was an interesting experience, to say the least, and one I haven't yet repeated. But I'll tell you, it's something we should all do at least once while we're in this neck of the woods.

My experience kicked off in the parking lot, where a little boy perched on a bench, swinging his feet — precious in cut-off overalls and bare feet — greeted me, "You shore are perty."

Then to my Soldier (this was an office outing), "Is thatcher girlfriend?"

Still chuckling, I wandered into the Possum Trot Cafe, which is right next door to the auction house. The first thing I saw when I walked in was a stuffed possum, hanging upside down on the wall. This interesting wall ornament confirmed my belief that possums (and armadillos) are born dead on the side of the road (something I picked up in Fort Sill, Okla.).

But once you get over the shock of the roadkill decor, it's a quaint, little place. A place you can picture the locals sittin' around, gossiping and passing the time.

The auction itself is a hoot. You crowd into the room with a mix of outsiders like yourself and, of course, the locals, including two Possum Trot staples — a world-renowned folk artist, and our elderly friend, Arnold, who's always fond of the lady visitors (wink wink).

After perusing the merchandise before the show and tallying up your highest bids in your head, you squeeze into a church pew with your bid card and wait for your treasure to come up for dibs.

My favorite part of the auction was actually the auctioneer. I've always been quite fascinated with how fast these guys can talk, but the Possum Trot auctioneer has a unique style. He's a bit of an improviser.

He sure talks fast, but most of what I heard was either a foreign language, or as a I suspect is more likely, a prolonged hum.

It sounded something like, "Hummenah, hummenah, hummenah, 50 cents. Do I hear a dollar? Hummenah, hummenah, hummenah. Sold for 50 cents."

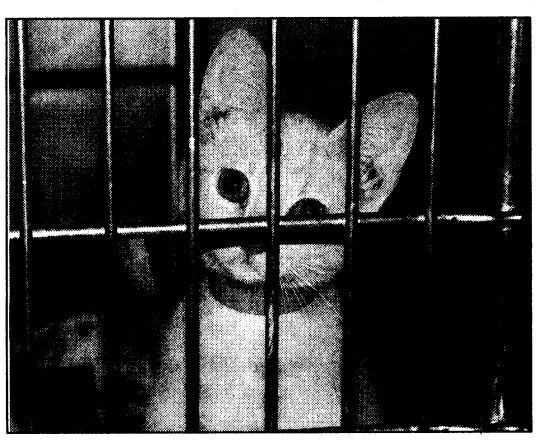
But whatever he was saying, it gave the evening that true auction feel.

The items up for grabs range from collectibles to furniture. So, it's actually a good stop for someone interested in what some people call "picking."

I know the women in my office always end up leaving with a priceless treasure. For instance, the rather scary coconut "head" that now sits atop boss' bookshelf, complete with a pirate patch and frightening fangs. Really, there are no words for this thing.

Since I know you'll want to see all this for yourself, let me offer you a few tips for survival:

• Bring bug spray. Douse yourself before you even set foot near the door. The gnats and mosquitoes are out in full force, and there's nothing like a light to attract them.



• Bring money. You'll be surprised at the nagging urge to buy something, anything, just to remember your experience by.

• Don't bring a camera. The auctioneer is absolutely anti-papparazzi.

If you're still scared to venture out alone, call Lori. Lori Egan, that is. My editor in chief, and a true Possum Trot fanatic, always enjoys sharing this experience with newcomers.

So, check it out. I would advise a group trip just to see it once and relive it forever. If nothin' else, it's a fun outing. I know it was for me.

To get to the Possum Trot, take Highway 431 toward Seale. Take left into Seale and it will be on your right.

The 2004 Fort Benning Water Quality Report has been printed and mailed to water consumers on the installation.

Additional copies of the report are available at the Environmental Management Office in Meloy Hall, Room 310, from Joe Wilkins or Patrick Chauvey. Distribution of the report is required by the Safe Drinking Water Act by July 1 of each year. The value of the report is that it explains the quality of the water produced at Fort Benning and the water source. The report is brief, to the point, and written in non-technical terms. It outlines the water treatment processes, lists the contaminants detected by laboratory analysis, origins of those contaminants and their health effects. Importantly, the report lists telephone numbers, Web addresses, and mailing addresses of Georgia and federal water regulators, and the American Water Works Association for those who have further inquiries about their water quality.

NCOs POLICE FORT BENNING

Patrols on lookout for standard violations

Courtesy patrol will cite inconsiderate

Spc. Eliamar Castanon
Bayonet staff

Mind your manners.

Fort Benning NCOs will be on the look-out for Soldiers, in or out of uniform, civilians, family members or retirees who violate Fort Benning's standards of conduct, said Command Sgt. Maj. Michael Kelso, post command sergeant major.

"It's been brought to our attention that we have many violations of the Fort Benning standards," Kelso said. "Bottom line is, if we're not prepared to follow the standards, then we will put NCOs out there to help remind us of what the standards are."

Kelso is referring to those people who use profanity in public, dress inappropriately, blast their music in their cars or speed on post.

"By no means do I want to imply that we have a major issue of this on Fort Benning, but sometimes, young Soldiers forget the standards," Kelso said.

The courtesy patrols, as they'll be called, will consist of two teams of NCOs patrolling two specific areas — the Main Mall Post Exchange area, including the bowling alley, Commissary and the Class Six, and the Main Post mini mall, the bowling alley, the Class Six, the Afterhours Club and the gas station, Kelso said.

Each patrol will have two NCOs, ranking from sergeant to sergeant first class, with at least a staff sergeant on each team at all times. The NCOs will wear a brassard similar to the Military Police brassards, except it will read Courtesy Patrol.

The CPs will carry a standard DD Form 1408 booklet, commonly known as the MP traffic ticket, and will use it to record violators.

Tickets issued will be turned over to Kelso, and he will then inform the Soldiers' command sergeants major about the violations.

The units will then take necessary action to deal with the Soldiers, Kelso said.

Woe to the Soldier who gets written up more than once.

That Soldier, depending on the seriousness of the offense and the number of times it was committed, may end up in Kelso's office.

"These courtesy patrols are acting on behalf of the commanding general. They are official, and it would behoove people to pay attention and be courteous to the courtesy patrol if they're approached," Kelso said.

Those civilians or retirees who believe they cannot be touched by the courtesy patrol are wrong — their post privileges may be revoked.

Kelso said civilians and family members also need to be corrected if they are not following the standards. If residents do not follow the guidance of the patrol NCOs, they will be moved off post.

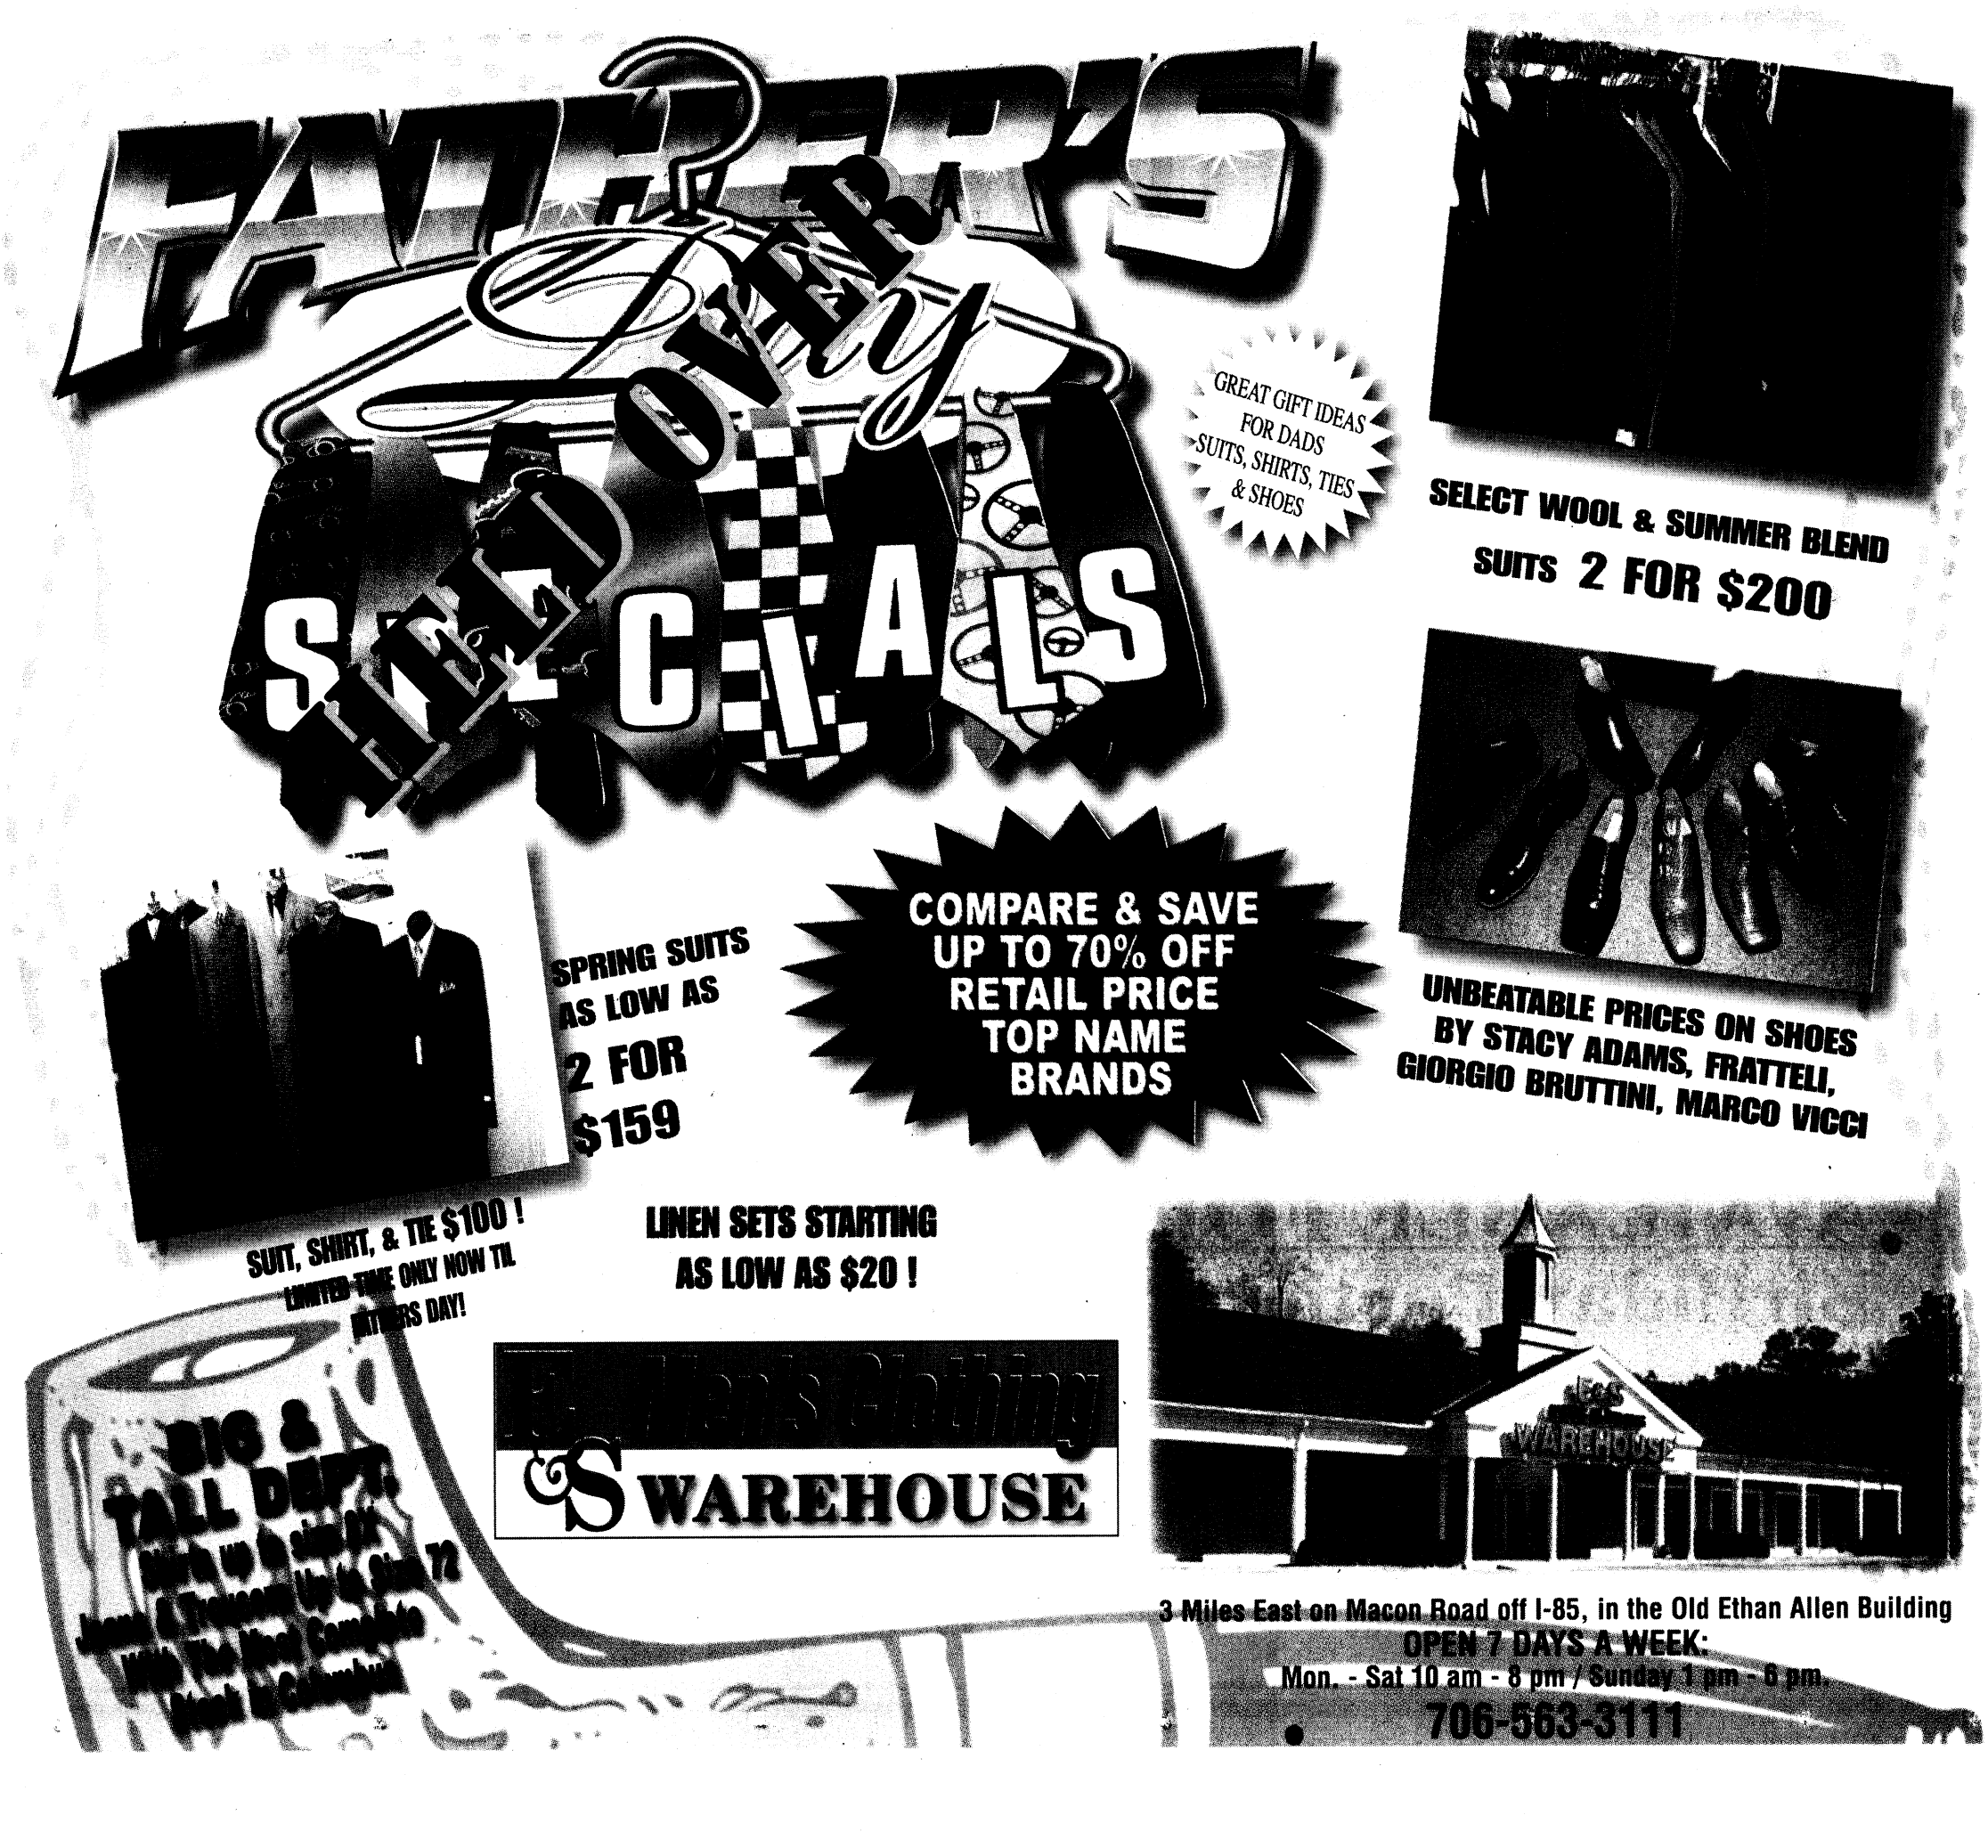
"Living on post is a privilege, not a right," Kelso said. "This is the greatest post in the Army for all who live and work here, whether it's in uniform or out of uniform, and we expect all to follow the standards of good conduct, which can be found in the standards booklet on the Benning Web site."

Spc. Eliamar Castanon

Beginning July 7, courtesy patrols will be on the lookout for "standards violators" in and around the Main Mall Post Exchange and Commissary, the Main Post mini mall, the After Hours Club and the gas station.

Courtesy patrol duty is scheduled to begin by July 7.

Units whose NCOs will participate include the Basic Combat Training Brigade, the Infantry Training Brigade, the Ranger Training Brigade, the 11th Infantry Regiment, the 29th Infantry Regiment, the NCO Academy, the Western Hemisphere Institute for Security Cooperation and the Headquarters and Headquarters Company, U.S. Army Garrison, said Sgt. Maj. Jim Davis, command sergeant major of the Directorate of Operations and Training.



"Since NCOs are the keepers of the standards, they are going to be out ensuring that these issues are addressed," Kelso said.

NCOs will be briefed by post staff duty prior to duty. Rosters have not yet been made, but NCOs will be notified by their chains of command.

The policy will be in effect as long as it's necessary, Kelso said.

"If our patrols tell us they're not very active, maybe we won't need them anymore," he said.

"Until then, if it takes someone having to get written up, so be it. We're not out to be (uptight); we just want a decency on Fort Benning, as established in the U.S. code of conduct," Kelso said.

Dads' role important

Chaplain (Maj.) Jeffrey Hawkins
Family Life Ministries Center

Have you seen the movie Cheaper By The Dozen? There's a great scene toward the end of the flick that beautifully illustrates what I think most dads truly want.

After Steve Martin makes the tough call to give up his football coaching job, which he's dreamed of for years, and in which he's "highly successful," he finds himself alone on the 50-yard line wondering, "Did I do the right thing?"

It's at that very point the camera pans over to an empty sideline to find all 12 of his kids, plus his wife, holding up huge placards that read, "We love the coach!"

In essence, he sacrificed becoming a championship football coach to become, instead, a championship dad. He chose to fail at something good so that he could succeed as something even better — and more important!

Don't you think that deep down, most dads want to be "Championship Dads?" Don't you think that virtually every dad wants to be his child's hero? Don't you think that the vast majority of dads want to win at the most important relational game they'll ever play? I do! And from what I've seen and read, it seems to me there are four critical roles a dad should play if he wants to be a championship dad:

Hawkins

• Doctor — A championship dad is on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week, to meet the emotional hurts and needs of his children. When your child experiences an "emotional hit-and-run" at school, is there a listening and sympathetic ear at home? When they are cut to the bone by some words or actions in the neighborhood, to whom do they run? Is there a doctor in the house?

• Coach — A championship dad is there to build his child up in a world that will try and tear his child down. What do your children most associate with your moments of interaction — building them up or tearing down?

• Teacher — A championship dad transfers timeless truths that will last a lifetime. Your child will only be taught by one of two people — you or "them." Who is "them?" "Them" is the most powerful multimedia culture in the history of the world. Will it be MTV's, Jerry Springer's, Cartoon Network's or Carmike Cinema's values that get passed down to your grandkids ... or will it be your values? Your role is powerful and pervasive. Use it!

• Minister — A championship dad leads his child to a vibrant, authentic faith in Christ. As we used to say in Special Forces, "Speed of the leader, speed of the team."

"Follow me!" Jesus Christ said it long before the infantry ever got a hold of the slogan!

Want more coaching on how to become a championship dad? Then give me a call at the Chaplain Family Life Center at 545-1760 or come see me at CrossRoads Contemporary Chapel at 11 a.m. Sundays on Kelley Hill!

I look forward to meeting you ...

Thanks for independence

Chaplain (Capt.) Charles D. Wood
Ranger Training Brigade

Independence? Well, that depends ... It's time for fireworks, flags and picnics. It's the time of the year when American patriots celebrate our independence. We will joyously commemorate our freedoms, especially in light of recent events as we fight for freedom from the tyranny of terrorism.

But let's consider our independence with a little more thought than what it takes to flip that next hamburger on the grill. Take a minute and think about your freedom.

A friend of mine and I were discussing Independence Day, and we both concluded one thing — independence isn't so independent.

Consider this: In order to live in the freedom we enjoy today, we must first submit our wills to a set of established laws.

In order to be free from tyrannical domination, we must depend on an elected government.

In order to experience true liberty, we must abide by the principles set forth in our Constitution.

In all our independence, there seems to be quite a bit of dependence on our American values.

REFLECTIONS

We are also very dependent on public servants to secure our liberties. As our country entered into a new and dangerous era, we found ourselves dependent on our police, fire departments, FBI and many others for homeland security.

We are dependent upon the men and women in our military in far away places, keeping the enemies of freedom at bay. Many of these "servants of society" have paid for our freedom with their very lives. We depend on them.

We see that our independence is contingent on so many others. We depend on the farmer to bring his crops to the market, the manufacturer to construct the necessities of life, the electric company to maintain the flow of vital energy.

How much of our independence would continue if these did not faithfully perform their duties?

We are dependent on our family and friends for encouragement and support. They offer us the camaraderie and companionship that sets us free from the bonds of loneliness and isolation.

Our kids are dependent on us in their youth and we are dependent on them in our waning years. We are dependent on our fellow man for our very existence.

But in all our dependence on humanity, we are supremely dependent on the almighty. When our nation came under attack, didn't we cry out to God in a declaration of holy dependence, asking for his protection and guidance?

When we are confronted with the familiar shackles and bonds of life like sickness and heartbreak, don't we seek him for liberation?

Our independence is very closely connected to our dependence on our heavenly father. And so it should be, because he is the author of true independence. As the Scriptures say:

"You will know the truth and the truth will set you free." (John 8:32)

During our celebrations of independence, let us remember to be thankful for the many who enable us to experience such liberties and freedom.

Pat a Soldier on the back and offer that firm handshake of gratitude for their toil in preserving the peace.

Give a friendly wave of thanks to a policeman or fireman. Express your appreciation to your family and friends in a tangible way, letting them know how important they are to you.

And above all, let us take a moment to bow before God to give thanksgiving for his wonderful benevolence that gives us the true independence we enjoy in our country today.

"A wise child makes a glad father, but a foolish child is a mother's grief."
— Proverbs 10:1
